Unauthorized crewman in charge, Exxon says

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — The captain was in his cabin and a crewman without proper certification was in command when an Exxon tanker ran aground, causing the nation's biggest oil spill, the company said.

■ Analysts expect tanker spill will drive up oil prices. — 6C

"It's Exxon's policy that in the waters that the ship was located in, the captain should have been on the bridge," Exxon Shipping Co. spokesman Brian Dunphy said Sunday. "There's a problem there in that he was not there."

Dunphy said he didn't know why Capt. Joseph Hazelwood wasn't in command when the Exxon Valdez slammed into a reef early Friday, sending an estimated 10.1 million gallons of crude oil into Prince William Sound. He said the captain was consulting an attorney.

Alaska's governor on Sunday declared the wildlife-rich sound a disaster area and said he would seek federal funds to help with the spill, which the Coast Guard estimates has affected about 100 square miles. Oil has washed up on two islands, and sightings were reported of dozens of crude-coated birds.

These tankers are still pumping oil after the Exxon Valdez ran aground Friday. The cause of the tanker's mishap was blamed on an ice floe from the Columbia glacier, similar to the one in the foreground. Exxon said that at the time of the accident the captain was in his cabin and a crewman without the proper certification was in command.

Begin criticizes U.S., PLO talks

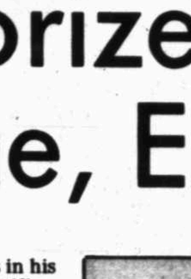

Begin, Carter praise peace treaty

JERUSALEM (AP) — Former Prime Minister Menachem Begin broke his silence on political affairs Sunday by using the 10th anniversary of the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty to criticize the United States for opening talks with the PLO.

Begin and the other surviving architect of th historic treaty, former President Jimmy Carter, praised the pact but expressed regret that it did not lead to a comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Islamic fundamentalists opposed to the pact assassinated Egyptian President Anwar Sadat four years after he signed it.

There were no official ceremonies marking the occasion, reflecting the chilly relations between the two former Middle East adversaries, mainly over the lack of a solution to the Palestinian problem.

Begin

Israeli students did, however, sponsor a "peace party" at a convention center in Jerusalem to mark the occasion of the signing of Israel's only peace treaty with an Arab state.

No official ceremonies were held in Egypt either, and only one government- controlled newspaper mentioned the anniversary.

Columnist Anis Mansour wrote in the al-Ahram newspaper that although Arab countries accused Egypt of treason when the treaty was signed, they now agree on the need for negotiations to peacefully end the conflict.

Israel's army radio broadcast interviews with U.S., Israeli and Egyptian politicians and even played Egyptian music and Hebrew peace songs that led the pop charts a decade ago.

The 75-year-old Begin took issue with Washington's latest peace move, the U.S. dialogue with the Palestinian Liberation Organization in Tunisia that broke a 13-year American boycott of Yasser Arafat's organization.

"This is in my opinion a negative, harmful phenomenon," he said in his characteristically hoarse voice. "The Americans, our friends, are in essence asked to reconsider this matter."

Begin said he opposed formation of a Palestinian state in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip as "a danger to Israel and the entire Middle East."

He complained that Palestinians persisted in clashing with Israeli soldiers in the occupied lands and sending guerrillas to raid northern Israel.

"If this isn't terror, it is difficult to know what terror is," he said, referring to Arafat's renunciation of terror and recognition of Israel's right to exist that led to the Americans opening up a dialogue with PLO.

The uprising in the occupied lands is now in its 16th month and more than 400 Palestinians have been killed in the revolt, most by army gunfire at stone-throwing youths. Eighteen Israelis also have been killed.

Referring to the treaty with Egypt, Begin said: "I have the feeling we achieved something very important, peace."

Dallas judge arrested on charges of striking Austin police officer

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dallas County criminal court judge will make an appearance before an Austin judge after he was arrested on charges of striking an Austin policeman and resisting arrest over the weekend.

Criminal Court No. 9 Judge George B. Shepherd Jr., 45, of Dallas, was jailed on misdemeanor charges Saturday and released later on personal recognizance bonds, said municipal court clerk Beverly Piper.

When police were summoned to a disturbance at A&B Television, Shepherd met officers, flashed them a badge and asked them to arrest some of the electronics store employees for consumer fraud, according to police reports.

Patrolman Bill Thompson said he told Shepherd he would need to contact the state attorney general's office before such arrests could be made. But officers said Shepherd began screaming at Thompson and returned to his car.

The store manager told Thompson that Shepherd had assaulted him before the officer arrived and had refused to leave the store, the arrest affidavit said.

As Shepherd began to drive away, Thompson stopped the car and asked Shepherd again to produce the badge so Thompson cold determine if the man was impersonating a public official, authorities said.

Yeltsin garners 89 percent of vote in Moscow, according to Tass

MOSCOW (AP) — Voters gave Boris N. Yeltsin a resounding victory in his campaign against top-level privilege and the economic failures that have emptied Soviet store shelves, according to preliminary election results released today.

The official Tass news agency said preliminary returns from Sunday's elections showed Yeltsin received 89 percent of the vote in his race to represent the city he once ran as Moscow Communist Party chief.

Yeltsin

The 58-year-old Yeltsin, a popular reformer, had become the most visible symbol of opposition to the party establishment. His race against Yevgeny Brakov, the director of the ZIL limousine factory, typified the more democratic politics that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has brought to the Soviet Union.

On Sunday, Soviet voters had a choice of candidates for the first time in seven decades as people across this vast country of 11 time zones voted to elect 1,500 deputies to the new 2,250-seat Congress of People's Deputies. The rest are being chosen separately by members of officially-sanctioned organizations.

Tass did not release preliminary vote totals, but said "Boris Yeltsin-...was named a People's Deputy of the U.S.S.R. from Moscow's city national territorial district No. 1."

"In the competition against ZIL automobile plant General Director Yevgeny Brakov, Yeltsin gained 89 percent of the votes," the agency said.

"It's hard to say what my spirit is more full of, joy or concern about what I realistically can do to help Muscovites," Yeltsin told a gathering of several hundred workers at the State Construction Committee, where he is first deputy chairman. The workers applauded warmly.

Yeltsin has pledged to quit his job in the Construction Committee and be a full-time legislator. He will be Moscow's sole representative in the new congress, which will meet once a year to choose the country's president and elect about 400 of its own members to a new full-time legislature, the Supreme Soviet.

Yeltsin was fired as Moscow party boss in November 1987 after criticizing the party's style of leadership and warning that a Stalin-like cult of personality could form around Gorbachev. He lost his position as a candidate member of the ruling Politburo and was transferred to the State Construction Committee.

He campaigned against the special supplies of food and consumer goods, cars and drivers and other services that top Moscow government and party officials receive, and criticized what he said were economic reform efforts that did not go far enough.

Four years into Gorbachev's effort to reform the Soviet economy, store shelves are more bare than they were before the reforms started.

Navy pilot scratched up in area hailstorm

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A U.S. Navy pilot was slightly injured Sunday when his aircraft flew through a violent hailstorm which battered the plane minutes before landing at Midland International Airport.

Lt. David Price, 28, of Corpus Christi, was treated for facial cuts at the Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room and released Sunday evening, MMH spokeswoman Sue Ristom said today.

Price was pilot of a two-seater T-34 "Minnow" Navy trainer which was flying 35 miles southeast of Midland, in the Reagan County area, when it encountered the hailstorm about 6:10 p.m., according to Marcy Blauvelt, supervisor of Administrative Services at the airport.

"The plane sustained hail damage from golf-ball size hail to the front of the canopy and the leading edge of both wings," Ms. Blauvelt said.

Price and another officer, who are permanently stationed at the Air Training Wing of the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station, were "doing maneuvers" when severe weather developed, she noted. The other officer's name was not available.

"They were flying between two thunderstorm cells," Ms. Blauvelt said. "I assume they made the judgment they had plenty of room between them."

After the plane was damaged, Price radioed the control tower at Midland he was coming in for a landing. Fire Department crash crews were alerted, but the plane touched down without incident a few minutes later.

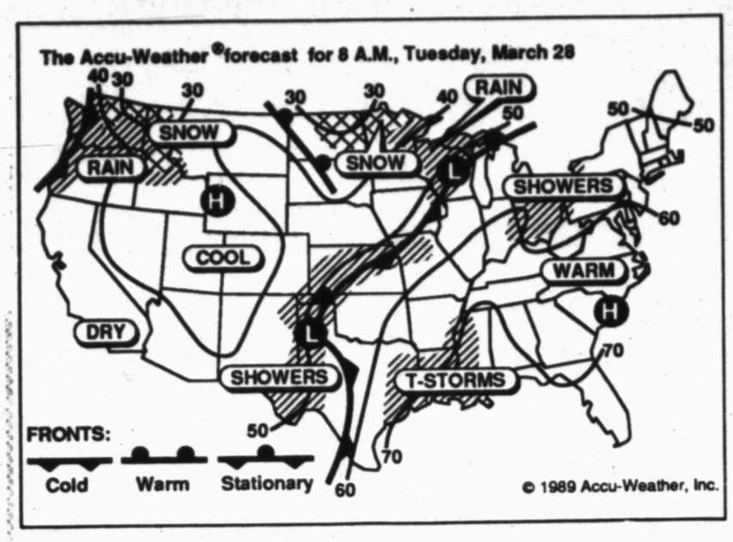

The pilots were training in the Midland area instead of Corpus Christi because of the airspace and good weather over recent weeks, Ms. Blauvelt said.

"They have been up here two or three weeks at a time for the last six months," she said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cloudy skies and a 50 percent chance of rain exists in the area tonight, with the possibility of severe thunderstorm activity in the late evening, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 40s and winds will be southerly 10-20 mph.

Tuesday will be cloudy and cooler with the chance of rain decreasing to 40 percent and the high reaching only into the middle 70s. Northwest winds will blow from 10-20 mph.

Sunday's high of 85 was five degrees cooler than the record high of 90 set for that date in 1956. The overnight low of 55 was 41 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 14 set for this date in 1931.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms raked the southeast corner of the Texas Panhandle early today, but nothing like the tornadic winds that hit several towns in the San Antonio area on Sunday.

Isolated showers and thunderstorms also were reported over Northeast Texas this morning.

Considerable low level cloudiness prevailed today over the eastern two-thirds of the state due to the continued flow of moisture from the Gulf of Mexico. Patches of drizzle and fog were over South and North Texas. Mid and high level clouds covered parts of the High Plains and far West Texas.

A tornado destroyed a barn about 10 a.m. Sunday near Falls City, about 30 miles southeast of San Antonio, and heavy winds blew the roof off a lumber yard in Nixon, about 25 miles farther to the north.

"The whole thing blew up and scattered everywhere," Gladys Bronder, whose husband, Felix, owns the barn, told the San Antonio Express-News.

There was no livestock in the barn, she said. The rear window was blown out of her nephew's pickup that was parked near the barn, she said.

Forecasters with the National Weather Service in San Antonio confirmed that a twister had touched down in the area Sunday morning. Golfball-size hail and winds of more than 55 mph were reported in western Gonzales County around 11 a.m., NWS officials said.

Other damage was reported in Lytle, 15 miles southwest of San Antonio, where winds downed trees and utility poles around 9:30 a.m. , One car was damaged, and Lytle residents were left without power for a brief period, officials said.

NATION

Much of the South got showers and thunderstorms today and rain also fell in the Pacific Northwest, while parts of Kansas were so windy that residents were warned of blowing dust.

Today's forecast: showers and thunderstorms scattered from southern and eastern Arizona across the southern Plains, the Mississippi Valley and the upper Great Lakes; possible severe thunderstorms from south central Texas and the western Gulf Coast and across Oklahoma to southern Kansas; and fair to partly sunny skies across much of the remainder of the nation, with gusty winds across the northern high Plains and the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Officer shot with own gun; Drivers' licenses left behind

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A patrolman was shot twice with his own revolver after stopping a car early today, but police believe they know who the suspects are because they apparently left their driver's licenses with the wounded officer, authorities said.

Williams, who has been on the San Antonio force two years, was dispatched to the city's northeast area about 3 a.m. today after police received a call about a suspicious vehicle parked behind a closed restaurant, Buske said.

The 1967 beige Mercury car pulled onto the access road of Northeast Loop 410 as Williams arrived, Buske said.

Two men got out of the car and met Williams between their vehicle and the patrol car, he said.

An unidentified security guard, who witnessed the shooting, said the two men jumped Williams and took his revolver and shot him twice, Buske said.

"It is undetermined whether the officer's weapon was fired more than two times," Buske said. "Apparently they took the weapon away from him because we haven't been able to locate his weapon."

As the officer fell, the two men fled in their vehicle, but investigators said two driver's licenses believed belonging to the men were found with Williams.

Based on information on the driver's licenses found with the San Antonio officer today, police were dispatched to several locations throughout the city in an attempt to find the men.

Also Sunday, officials said the government authorized use of chemicals and fire to combat the massive slick.

Exxon Shipping President Frank Iarossi said officials planned to use a C-130 aircraft today to spray chemicals to disperse patches of oil in a 5-square-mile area of the sound. The company also planned to burn "fingers" of the slick by igniting them with a laser.

"The volume of oil released in the water is, for all intents and purposes, beyond control by mechanical means alone," Iarossi said.

At the time of the disaster Friday, third mate Gregory Cousins was in command and his actions violated federal regulations, said company spokeswoman Sharon Curran-Wescott.

"He didn't have a proper pilot's license for that. He wasn't authorized by the company, nor was it legal," she said.

Neither Hazelwood nor Cousins could be located in Valdez by The Associated Press for comment.

The National Transportation Safety Board took over the investigation Sunday, one day after issuing subpoenas for Hazelwood, Cousins and helmsman Robert Kagan, the third member of the bridge crew. Results of routine drug and alcohol tests administered to the three weren't immediately available, officials said.

Hazelwood was relieved of his command, but to give him rest, not as a disciplinary measure, officials said.

The 987-foot tanker Exxon Valdez, carrying 1.2 million barrels of North Slope crude oil, ran onto a reef 25 miles from port early Friday after swinging out of a traffic lane to avoid ice. Valdez is at the southern end of the 800-mile Alaska oil pipeline.

Estimates put the spill at 240,000 barrels of oil, or about 10.1 million gallons, making it the biggest U.S. spill on record. The only larger oil-related accident in U.S. waters involved 10.7 million gallons of oil when two ships collided in Galveston Bay in 1979, but that oil burned as well as spilled.

Gov. Steve Cowper declared the sound a disaster area, freeing state resources for cleanup and paving the way for a federal disaster declaration.

"This oil spill may well be the greatest disaster to hit Alaska since the Good Friday earthquake 25 years ago," Cowper said.

A wildlife specialist toured the sound and observed 75 ducks and two otters coated with oil, said U.S. Department of Interior spokeswoman Pamela Bergmann.

A station was set up to clean birds, and a mammal-cleaning station also was planned.

Fishermen fearing lost income have sought compensation from the shipping company, Exxon officials said.

"We're not ready to absorb any loss," said Riki Ott, spokeswoman for United Fishermen of Alaska. "We expect full compensation."

More than four miles of floating boom has been placed in an effort to contain the oil, the Coast Guard said. Skimming boats worked to remove the oil.

The transfer to a second ship of oil remaining aboard the Valdez resumed during the weekend, and the Coast Guard said it could take seven days to unload the damaged vessel.

Iarossi said 36,000 gallons of chemicals that were to be used to break up the oil were in Anchorage and 19,000 were to be flown from Texas. Fishermen and other users of the resource-rich sound have expressed concerns about additional damage that could be done by chemicals.

Environmentalists, the governor and other state officials have accused Exxon and Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. of responding too slowly to the spill. Alyeska operates the oil-loading terminal at Valdez.

Yeltsin's campaign drew thousands of enthusiastic supporters who held marches and demonstrations in the weeks just prior to the election.

Asked if he had received congratulations from Gorbachev, Yeltsin said, "that's unlikely, but I would be very happy and thank him from the bottom of my heart."

He reiterated that he does not see himself as a political opponent of the Soviet leader. "I didn't consider myself, don't consider myself and don't want to be an alternative candidate to Gorbachev," he told reporters.

In 74 percent of Sunday's races, voters had a choice between two or more candidates, the Central Election Commission said. However, 82 percent of the candidates were Communist Party members, the weekly Moscow News reported, guaranteeing the Communists will dominate the new assembly.

Still, this was the first time since the Soviet Union's earliest days that the people were afforded a choice.

The Central Election Commission said about 190 million of the Soviet Union's 285 million people were eligible to vote. Tass said more than 80 percent of Moscow's 6.7 million eligible voters took part in the election.

The Kremlin faced strong challenges from independent candidates in republics like Lithuania where nationalist sentiments are strong.

In the Baltic republic, the grassroots Sajudis or Lithuanian Restructuring Movement said unofficial returns showed its candidates finished strongly against those endorsed by the Communist Party.

Sajudis officials claimed their 39 candidates in Lithuania's 42 electoral districts either finished first or forced runoff elections in districts where no candidate gained a majority.

Gorbachev, who came to power in 1985, is assured of a seat in the new congress, and the elections are unlikely to produce any major upheaval in the power structure.

The Soviet president, who with his wife Raisa voted at Moscow's Institute of Chemical Physics, told reporters Sunday the occasionally boisterous campaign caused by the contested elections was just what the Kremlin leadership wanted.

"The electoral law that we passed has justified our hopes," Gorbachev said. "It has advanced the political thought and social activity of the people, and this is what we wanted to achieve."

Elections in the Soviet Union were until Sunday carefully choreographed rituals in which practically all eligible voters were said to turn out and those running got 99.9 percent of the vote. Some Soviets expressed satisfaction at finally having a choice, but there were also objections.

"I think the quality of our leaders will improve because now we have a real democracy," said Dr. Valentina Agababova as she sat on a windowsill at voting precinct No. 5 in Moscow's Sverdlovsk district, crossing out names of candidates she opposed.

But in Moscow's Gagarin district, where 12 candidates were running, "some old people have gotten upset about having so many choices," said elections secretary Natalya Safonkina.

The last elections in which most Russians had a choice occurred weeks after the November 1917 revolution that swept Lenin and the Bolsheviks to power. The Communists had since allowed just one approved candidate to run for each seat.

Begin, who shared the Nobel Peace Prize with Sadat, reportedly became depressed over the death of his wife Aliza and Israel's losses in the Lebanon war. He resigned suddenly in 1983 and has lived in seclusion ever since.

Carter was one of a half-dozen international figures connected with the 1979 treaty interviewed on Israel radio on the anniversary.

Carter, 64, applauded the peace agreement's survival through persistent Middle East violence, noting especially that it was not upset by Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

"Both sides have courageously complied with the terms of the peace treaty," said Carter, who negotiated the accords at Camp David in Maryland between Begin and Sadat in September 1978.

The following March 26, the three men signed the Israeli-Egypt peace treaty on the White House lawn.

But Carter said he regretted that the peace pact did not spur other accords with Palestinians and Israel's Arab neighbors.

"My expectations and hopes and dreams were that building upon the principles established in the Camp David accords, that we would see a fairly rapid series of bilateral talks or negotiations between Israel and her neighbors, including the Palestinians," Carter said in an interview broadcast on Israel's army radio.

The Camp David accords offered a wide-ranging framework for settling the Arab-Israei conflict, calling on Israel, Jordan and Egypt to help negotiate a resolution of the Palestinian problem.

They called for a five-year period of autonomy for Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip as an interim solution before a final settlement was negotiated.

"That principle has not changed. I think it is still a good prescription for the future," said Carter.

Palestinians rejected the plan at the time because it failed to guarantee them an independent state or a negotiating role for the PLO, still key issues in the dispute today.

Shepherd then struck Thompson in the chest, pulled the officer's motorcycle helmet off his head and tried to place the officer in a choke hold, the report said.

Two other officers were needed to restrain Shepherd, the report said.

Shepherd told reporters later that he had suffered a bloody nose in the incident when "I had been bashed in the nose by a fist."

Shepherd did not answer at his home when telephoned Sunday by The Associated Press. However, he told Dallas newspapers his attorney had advised him not to comment on the arrest.

Shepherd's lawyer Tom Autry said Saturday night he had not discussed the incident with his client, "who was feeling rather badly."

Shepherd was charged with Class A offenses, the highest level of misdemeanor charges. Austin police department policy dictates that the level of offense charged against an individual accused of assaulting an officer depends upon the severity of the injury, said Lt. Juan Gonzalez.

Poaching way of life for some Costilla County residents

SAN LUIS, Colo. (AP) — Living off the land has been a way of life for generations in Costilla County, the most impoverished in Colorado — where jobs are scarce and low-paying and the San Luis Valley teems with game.

"We used to own these mountains, all the way from Fort Garland to New Mexico. The people had the freedom to go and hunt for a living and fish and get wood. It's been here for 150 years or more," said Jerry Sanchez of Chama.

That came to an abrupt end March 6, when 275 heavily armed federal and state wildlife officers, supported by planes and helicopters, swarmed through the valley before dawn in a raid capping a 2½-year poaching investigation.

"I woke up and thought it was an invasion, maybe of aliens, or Russians," recalled Sanchez. "Then I found out it was our government."

U.S. Attorney Mike Norton, who coordinated the raid, said the tactics were to protect agents. "We will not tolerate the theft of the public's wildlife resources. We will use every available legal means to stop this activity."

Agents swept through such small towns as San Luis, Chama and Fort Garland in Colorado, and Costilla, Questa, Amalia and Mora in New Mexico. By the time they were done, 110 people had been accused of 850 violations, including the killings of elk, deer, bear, eagles and other protected species.

The raid also has sparked charges of entrapment, excessive force and racial bias that are being investigated by state and federal officials.

San Luis, population 900, is the oldest established town in Colorado. Its residents trace their origins back centuries to Spanish land grants in northern New Mexico and southern Colorado. Costilla County has a population of 3,700, 36 percent of them living below the poverty level. Unemployment is 24 percent, and the average income is $7,600, compared with $13,800 for the state

Federal officials say the poaching was out of hand and they had to stop it.

Agent George Morrison, using the name John Morgan, rented a building in Fort Garland from a known poacher and set up a taxidermy shop. He mingled with residents and let them know he was willing to pay for elk and deer hides and carcasses, antlers from freshly killed animals, eagles and bears.

Last year, he moved to Costilla, N.M., just south of San Luis, where he continued to buy wildlife items. The move also required Colorado poachers to cross the state line with their illegal game — a federal offense. He handed out fliers offering up to $40 for buck deer capes and $2.50 for bear claws. Those arrested said he paid up to $300 for an eagle, $200 for elk and $50 for deer.

After 2½ years in which officials say at least 500 elk, 2,000 deer and 95 eagles were illegally killed, the federal agents moved in.

State Rep. Lewis Entz, whose district includes San Luis, has gotten 50 calls supporting the arrests and only one in protest.

But most Costilla County residents feel the government went too far.

"I could have taken six men out there and done the whole thing without traumatizing every woman and child in the county," said Sheriff Pete Espinoza, who wasn't told anything — for his own safety, according to Norton — until the raids were under way.

"We're not condoning poaching," said Sanchez. "It's against the law and people should be penalized. It's the way they handled the situation, the tactics they used, the guerrilla tactics. We're not bad people here."

The operation was "completely out of proportion," said county Coroner Charles Mondragon, an eighth-generation resident of the valley. The county was "terrorized because of the actions of a handful of poachers," he said.

Older citizens on isolated farms were terrified by armed men "crawling across their fields with military-type uniforms on," said San Luis town trustee Augustin Jaramillo.

Many of those arrested are claiming entrapment, saying they would not have violated the game laws if the government hadn't created a market. Some said they were openly encouraged by "Morgan" to kill wild game and eagles.

Genius computer hacker now living on San Diego streets

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Federal agents said William Troy Landreth could once crack into the computer networks used by the Department of Defense and NASA. But now, awash in waves of emotional depression, he lives in the streets.

The 24-year old computer whiz with a genius IQ, who as a teen-ager was the target of a highly publicized FBI crackdown on computer hackers, now spends his days on park benches and his nights in shelters and concrete doorways.

Known at the height of his fame by his code name "The Hacker," Landreth has all but dropped out of society, saying mood-altering drugs and antidepressants couldn't ward off the depression that has dogged him.

But Landreth said in an interview with the Los Angeles Times that he remains confident in his ability to control computers, and could make lots of money using his talents. But he said he must live by his own rules.

"I could set up a data base system for a company and walk away with a few thousand dollars for five or six hours work, and they'd never regret it," he said. "The five or six thousand for five or six hours of work would interest me, but I haven't fallen for it.

"I didn't inherit a great deal of money that's been accumulating for several eons, so I wouldn't know how to look at money," he said.

Landreth gained notoriety in 1983 when the FBI cracked down on him and other hackers.

With an IQ measured at 186, well into the genius category, Landreth was accused of breaking into the Virginia-based GTE Telemail electronic mail network to take a look at computer correspondence from the Defense Department and National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Landreth eventually pleaded guilty to one count of wire fraud, was fined $87 for using computer time he didn't pay for and was placed on three years' probation.

During his legal problems, Landreth appeared to be in control of his life, giving lectures to business executives, doing freelance computer work and promoting a book about his experiences, "Out of the Inner Circle," which has sold about 68,000 copies.

But in September 1986, Landreth disappeared, leaving behind a rambling, eight-page essay touching on such subjects as man's evolution and immortality, communism and capitalism, nuclear war and greed, and suicide.

"I was bored in school, bored traveling around the country, bored getting raided by the FBI, bored in prison, bored writing books, bored being bored," read the last page.

Flood of Soviet emigrants overwhelm U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — For years, the United States has urged, threatened and cajoled the Kremlin to allow free emigration from the Soviet Union. But now that thousands of Soviets are being let out, many are finding the doors to the United States closed.

Some 19,000 Soviets are waiting to be interviewed at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow for permission to enter the United States as refugees; another 7,000 are waiting in temporary quarters near Rome, according to State Department figures.

The steadily growing backlog appears to result from several factors: poor planning by the administration, severe budget restraints and a change in the Justice Department's refugee policy.

"Now that the Soviet Union has chosen to let these people go, we must not fail them," said Rep. Howard Berman, D-Calif., who has sponsored one of several proposed funding bills to ease the emergency.

Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis., cosponsor of another emergency funding proposal, warned that "Gorbachev's policies could change overnight. We have to take advantage of this moment."

Soviet applicants have been told their processing could take as long as two years and have been advised not to quit jobs or tell landlords they plan to leave for fear of finding themselves without work or housing.

Last fall the United States asked Soviet authorities to withhold exit permits until some of the backlog can be cleared, Jewish community officials say.

At the current rate of Soviet applications — about 4,000 a month — the United States will run out of allocated refugee slots by April or May. In January, the State Department shifted 7,000 unused slots meant for Vietnamese refugees to accommodate the Soviet overflow. Revised estimates project some 40,000 Soviet applicants this year, about 20,000 more than was budgeted for by the administration.

The crisis has been compounded by a change in Justice Department policy, which no longer grants automatic refugee status to every person seeking to leave the Soviet Union.

In the past, all Soviet Jews, who account for the majority of Soviet emigres, were presumed to have a "well founded fear of persecution" and therefore were considered refugees.

Jews were subjected to government-backed anti-Semitism, prevented from studying Hebrew or practicing their religion and denied permission to leave. In 1984, the low point of Jewish emigration, only 896 Jews were let out.

A directive issued last summer by former Attorney General Edwin Meese ordered the Immigration and Naturalization Service to determine refugee status for Soviets on a case-by-case basis rather than as a group, in keeping with the way U.S. laws are applied for other refugee applicants.

This has resulted in denials for as many as 70 percent of Moscow applicants for refugee status, according to a just-released report by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress.

The report found a 50 percent reversal rate on appeal by those denied, evidence of "uneven standards and inconsistencies among INS officers."

The report faulted INS inspectors for, in many cases, not speaking Russian and not knowing about life in the Soviet Union. In some cases, INS processors were brought to Moscow from duty along the U.S.-Mexican border and applied the same standards to Soviet applicants as to Mexicans, the report said.

Those denied refugee status are being offered parolee status, which does not provide government funding nor does it allow the recipients to eventually apply for citizenship.

"This sends a message to the Soviet government that the United States no longer views Jews and other minorities as persecuted people," said David Harris, Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee which lobbies for Soviet Jewish immigration. "It's a strange political statement as a time when the administration has decided to keep up its pressure on Gorbachev to comply with international human rights standards," he said.

The administration, caught in a squeeze, is scrambling to respond.

The White House is preparing an emergency request to Congress for $100 million to help process and resettle the flood of emigrants.

The Justice Department has prepared legislation that would allow as many as 30,000 people to enter the United States annually if the president declares it in the best foreign policy interests of the United States. Unlike refugees, though, these people would not be given government funding.

The State Department is conducting an internal review of the problem in preparation for consultations with Congress on increasing the number of refugees allowed into the country.

Meanwhile, more INS officers are being sent to Moscow to help hasten the processing, said John Moore, director of the Bureau for Refugee Programs at the State Department.

Moore told a congressional hearing that the State Department could not have foreseen the surge of Soviet applicants when it budgeted last year for this fiscal year. But members of Congress and Jewish community groups are accusing the administration of deliberately misleading them.

"The administration's refugee program is phony," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., head of the House subcommittee on foreign operations. "This was not unpredictable in light of last year's growing emigration trends," he told Moore.

Obey accused the administration of presenting deliberately low predictions in order to stay within the limits of the budget, knowing it could obtain emergency funding later on to respond to the humanitarian crisis.

Jewish groups contend the low figures are part of an administration attempt to shift the funding for refugee programs increasingly to private groups.

Currently, the American Jewish community provides about $2 to $3 for every government dollar spent on refugee admissions and resettlement and it has launched a $75 million fund-raising campaign to provide for the flood of emigres.

14 million refugees speak in one voice

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whether they're from Cambodia, El Salvador, Vietnam, Ethiopia or Iraq, they all seem to speak the same language: the language of the refugee.

The voice and the picture of the world's 14 million political refugees — of whom it has been calculated that only three of every 100 ever return to their homeland — is brought home in a newly published photo book.

The book, "Forced Out," represents an unusual collaboration by four publishing houses and a foundation in an attempt to inspire a global movement on behalf of the human rights of refugees, often unwanted guests in unwelcoming camps. It consists largely of accounts by refugees of the sometimes bewildering, frightening or hopeless twists their lives took once they were forced from their homelands.

To a world inured to political disaster, the voices sound familiar.

A Salvadoran, describing how the National Guard conscripts boys from a sleeping village: "No one could run that night, maybe because the boys were still half asleep. 'They are only going for a year,' the members of the patrol would say to make us feel better, 'and they'll be more civilized when we send them back. In the barracks they learn to read and mind their manners,' they went on, without looking at anyone, addressing the stones that were us. The year was up but they never came back. No one comes back."

An Ethiopian, resettled in Somalia: "Arriving in the area of settlement we were scared to death. You feel lost...Never had we seen such thick forest, inhabited only by wild animals, snakes and big, biting flies. Homeland was a beautiful place, full of grazing cattle. My dreams are still bound to my homeland."

An Afghan looking for a new home: "We were deported from the United States to Korea on March 29. They next day Korean Airlines took us to Taiwan and then to Hong Kong. Hong Kong refused us and sent us back to Korea. The Koreans then sent us to Sri Lanka and told the Sri Lankan authorities that we should be sent on to Afghanistan. The Sri Lankan government refused to accept us...so Korean Airlines took us to Saudi Arabia."

A Salvadoran: "If we speak out, they kill us. If we're suspected of speaking out, they disappear us. And if we keep our mouths shut, they think we're hiding something. So they kill us for that too."

NRA loads up for gun control battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Rifle Association, traditional heart, soul and bankroll of the nation's gun lobby, is digging in for a test of its vaunted political power amid rising pressure to curb sales of assault weapons.

"When less than half the convicted felons ever spend a day in jail, why should we be taking firearms away from law-abiding people?" declares James Jay Baker, federal affairs director for the 118-year old NRA.

Demands for restrictions on military-style, semiautomatic firearms are escalating, however, in the aftermath of the Stockton, Calif., schoolyard tragedy Jan. 17 in which a deranged gunman with an assault rifle left five youngsters dead and 30 other persons injured.

So intense is the clamor that, as often as the NRA has crushed or blunted gun control bills in the past, many doubt that it can prevail this time with its strategy of blaming the murder wave sweeping cocaine-ridden communities not on firearms but "our crumbling criminal justice system."

Even Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., who urged Democrats to softpedal the gun issue after the 1988 election, says public opinion is ripe for action on semiautomatics. "I think the NRA is stubbing its toe here," he says. "The appearance of being unwilling to deal with assault rifles has hurt them."

From its modern headquarters on Rhode Island Avenue in downtown Washington, a few blocks from the White House, the NRA deploys lobbyists to Capitol Hill and statehouses across the nation, provides generous campaign contributions to its political friends and generates tons of literature to fill the mailboxes of America's gun enthusiasts.

With annual revenues of $70 million and a staff of 365 employees, including 65 in its lobbying department, the NRA is well equipped to fight its political battles. It also has powerful friends. President Bush is a member. And its roots go deep in the fabric of American life.

Founded in 1871 by National Guard officers, the NRA has long counted many military men and policemen among its members. It holds firearms courses for police, private security firms and private citizens.

It is recognized by the U.S. Olympic Committee as the national governing body of shooting sports in the United States and maintains a junior program for youngsters. It also provides self-defense courses for women and maintains a 1,100-piece gun museum within its headquarters as well as a special, "Muzzleloaders" division within its membership for history buffs.

Last year, the NRA got the House to shelve a proposed seven-day waiting period for would-be gun buyers. Failure of the bill named for former presidential spokesman James Brady, brain damaged in the 1981 attempt on President Reagan, spurred Brady's wife to urge readers in full-page magazine ads to help "break the NRA's death grip on Congress."

The real secret of the NRA's power has long been its ability to mobilize hundreds of thousands of gun owners across the nation to write and telephone lawmakers. "Please open immediately. Legislative alert," trumpets a mailing that went to Virginia gun owners in February.

It warns of an impending bill in Richmond in which "the anti-gunners...have launched an all-out attack on semiautomatic firearms in line with their goal of banning all firearms."

Texas political consultant George Christian says the Dukakis stand in favor of toughened gun control "wasn't the No.1 issue" in his state "but as part of a package of issues that subjected him to attack from the other side, it played a very important role."

Bunny hop

A group of Easter paraders break into a spontaneous bunny hop outside St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York on Sunday. They were some of the thousands of people who turned out to promenade along Fifth Avenue in their Easter finery.

Eggs hunted; Homeless remembered

Associated Press

Children hunted for eggs and Americans paraded under mostly sunny skies to celebrate Easter, while services around the nation echoed with more somber calls to remember the homeless and U.S. hostages in the Middle East.

San Francisco's Glide Memorial United Methodist Church served a home-cooked breakfast to about 100 homeless people and poor children dressed up in frilly Easter dresses and stylish blue jeans donated by the church. Afterward, they hunted for Easter eggs.

"It's all for the kids," said the Rev. Cecil Williams.

Near Albany, N.Y., the Rev. Bede Ferrara, a Roman Catholic priest who describes himself as a traveling Franciscan preacher, set up a shrine in his home in Clifton Park for the U.S. hostages in the Middle East.

"We have photos of each American hostage on display and the number of days they've been in captivity. We have an empty basket which symbolizes that their baskets are empty this Easter," he said.

A more light-hearted atmosphere swept along New York City's Fifth Avenue, where thousands enjoyed sunny 60-degree weather and promenaded in the annual Easter parade. Jacqueline Kerstens attracted a crowd with a 6-pound, 4-foot-tall bonnet that was a basket of silk flowers — lilies, apple blossoms and forsythia.

In the nation's capital, President and Mrs. Bush attended a christening at St. Alban's Chapel for their latest grandchild, Ashley Bush, who was born Feb. 7 to the Bushes' son Neil and his wife, Sharon.

In Dallas, crowds at the Biblical Arts Center walked through a life-size reproduction of Paul's Gate at Damascus and Christ's tomb.

"Easter is about the resurrection of Christ and the fact that he died for all of us who believe in him. It's not about the bunny and the painted eggs," said Ronnie Roese, the non-denominational center's director.

Nonetheless, more than 20,000 people flocked to a farm in Homer, Ga., to hunt for about 140,000 dyed hens' eggs and candy eggs in what was said to be the world's largest Easter egg hunt.

Frantic search ends in successful transplant

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man underwent a successful kidney transplant after he was plucked by helicopter from a remote campsite and taken to a hospital for the organ that matched his rare blood type, officials said.

Charles Ridgeway, 47, was listed in critical but stable condition late Sunday, according to officials at Western Medical Center in Santa Ana.

"Everything went just great. His kidney is already showing early signs of function," Dr. Garo Tertzakian said after he performed the two-hour surgery earlier in the day.

Ridgeway was camping with his wife and daughter in Imperial County near the Mexican border when doctors found a kidney donor whose blood type was B-positive, shared by only about 15 percent of the population.

Time was of the essence because organ must be transplanted within a certain time. The organ was located Saturday night and the nine-hour search began.

"Charles Ridgeway decided that he was going to go to the end of the Earth," said Los Angeles-based KNX AM radio pilot Bob Tur, who found Ridgeway after flying through a rainstorm and serendipitously picking up Ridgeway's son, Matt, who also was looking for his father.

The older Ridgeway, an accounting manager at Rockwell International in Anaheim, carried an electronic pager linking him to the hospital but his camping trip took him out of its range.

Tur, who volunteered after he heard of Ridgeway's plight, lifted off at 1 a.m. Sunday from Santa Monica Airport with his friend Jim King as co-pilot. They picked up two Orange County Search and Rescue team members along the way.

"We were told if we don't find them by 4 a.m., forget it," Tur said. He said doctors explained the kidney would not be fresh enough to transplant if Ridgeway could not be found and dialysis preparation started by 5 a.m., and Tur figured the trip to the hospital would take about an hour.

Survey shows American Jews unhappy with politics in Israel

NEW YORK (AP) — Political manuevering in Israel over "who is a Jew" has left a painful legacy among American Jews, who in a survey more often perceived unfairness to Conservative and Reform Jews than to West Bank Arabs.

The American Jewish Committee study revealed support for Israel was as strong as ever, but it also showed that widespread discontent was sown when attempts were made to amend Israel's Law of Return to deny non-Orthodox converts an automatic right to Israeli citizenship.

The study also provided new evidence of a growing activism among American Jews toward their spiritual homeland, according to some observers.

A majority, 54 percent, of the survey said they had spoken critically of attempts to change the law.

A third said they would be less likely to make political or charitable contributions to Israel if the law is changed to exclude converts from Reform and Conservative Judaism, branches to which more than 80 percent of American Jews affiliated to a synagogue belong.

"I think the effect is kind of a contingent, or sleeper, effect," said Queens College Professor Steven M. Cohen, who conducted the survey for the committee's Institute on American Jewish-Israeli Relations. "This precedent will allow American Jews to forcefully and pointedly disagree" on other issues involving Israel.

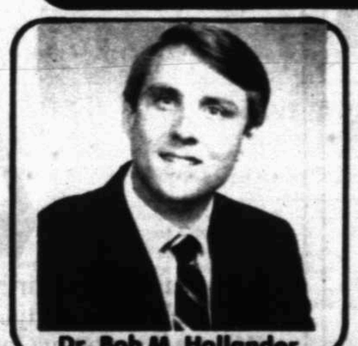

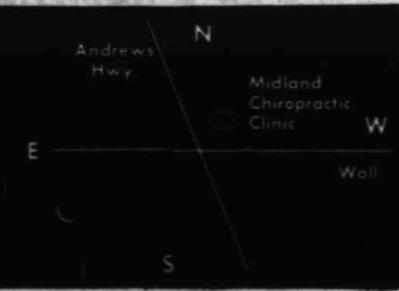

The attempt to define Jewishness provided an "emotional vent" to American Jews already concerned about Israel's response to the Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and Gaza, according to Gunther Lawrence, a media consultant to the Rabbinical Assembly and other Jewish groups.

"I think that this is a family squabble that is erupting above the surface," Lawrence said. "American Jews and Diaspora Jews are no longer content with being checkbook Jews only."

Spaniards don't want to remember end of civil war

By SUSAN LINNEE

SAN LORENZO DE ESCORIAL, Spain (AP) — The sweeping esplanade and the giant granite cross thrusting up from the surrounding mountains dwarf the schoolgirls and conscripts on an outing at the Valley of the Fallen.

The visitors giggle, shout and strut. They appear oblivious to the presence in the crypt behind them of the bones of 40,000 people who died fighting on both sides in the Spanish Civil War, which ended 50 years ago on April 1, 1939.

Neither the monument — built by Republican prisoners-of-war defeated by the forces of Gen. Francisco Franco — nor the memory of the three-year war itself seem to weigh very heaviliy on the spirit of a modern Spain.

The government of Socialist Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez has planned no public observance for April 1, the day a half-century ago that ushered in a 36-year Franco dictatorship that outlawed the Socialist and all other political parties.

Socialists, Communists, liberals, anarchists, Masons and free-thinkers all suffered in the harsh repression that followed Franco's victory, which marked the end of his July 1936 uprising against the forces of the Second Spanish Republic.

Many who fought on the side of the Republic perished from hunger and ill treatment while hacking away at the granite mountains to build the Valley of the Fallen, 30 miles northwest of Madrid.

"The Socialists try to distinguish themselves from the Francoists by not keeping alive the memory of the Civil War," British historian Paul Preston explained. "There's nothing good to remember. It wasn't really the end, it was the beginning of very difficult times for many, many people."

A member of the Friends of Former Spanish Refugees said the government had agreed to help with their project to have as many indigent, elderly exiles as possible return to visit Spain this year — as long as no mention was made of the end of the Civil War that drove them away in the first place.

Jordi Corral Morales, a 21-year-old corporal in the army's elite Brunete armored division, knows that Franco lies buried beneath a plain, marble slab in the basilica, but he says he could care less about the man whose crusade for a righteous, rightist Spain was falling apart by the time the young conscript was born.

The Valley of the Fallen — which Franco designed as his final resting place — has been administered since 1982 by the National Patrimony in hopes, according to some, that it will gradually lose its fascist connotations and slip into the vast collection of old castles and monuments that dot the Spanish landscape.

Historian Javier Tusell and Culture Minister Jorge Semprun are both concerned about Spaniards' reluctance to confront their past and their lack of historical memory.

On the eve of the 50th anniversary and 14 years after Franco's death, "it is striking that our country, which has gone through a peaceful transition from dictatorship to democracy, has not, however, developed a shared historic conscience," Tusell wrote recently in a Madrid newspaper.

"It's not a banal issue," he continued, "because the image that a group projects of itself on the past indicates its willingness to live in harmony in the present and the future."

Pedro Alvarez remembers the day 50 years ago when he and a group of other 12-year-olds joined the crowds in downtown Madrid that hurried to put out the appropriate flags as the remaining Republican troops fled and Franco's victorious Nationalist forces approached the Spanish capital.

"We rushed into a barracks the 'Reds' had abandoned and stuffed our pockets with potatoes and carrots," he recalled. "Hunger was everywhere in Madrid during the war, and we were happy it was over."

"The war didn't really end in 1939, the hardships and conditions of war continued well into the late 1940s," said sociologist Amando de Miguel. "People didn't marry very much, a great sense of depression set in, there was a terrible shortage of food, and then, the guerrilla warfare against Franco went on into the 1950s."

Semprun, who wrote the screenplay for Alain Renais' 1964 film, "La guerre est finie" ("The War is Over") as a Spanish exile in France, warned attendants at a recent academic conference that Spain will be in trouble without a historical memory.

To fill the gap, many of the country's leading newspapers plan special supplements dealing with the end of the war and its relevance today.

And a surprising success of the current literary season has been a novel entitled "Luna de Lobos" ("Wolves' Moon"), by 31-year-old poet Julio Llanzamares, the sparse tale of three men in the anti-Franco guerrilla movement who try to get to France through the mountains of northern Spain.

The late Spanish historian Claudio Sanchez Albornoz, who exhorted his countrymen not to forget the Civil War, wrote that during the 1931-39 Second Republic, Spaniards tried to carry out religious, political and economic revolutions that their European neighbors had taken centuries to realize.

French historian Pierre Vilar says it will be possible to date the real end of the Spanish Civil War to the time when the three revolutions have been carried out.

Six years of fighting have made Sudanese dependent on relief

MUGLAD, Sudan (AP) — Starvation and disease, abduction and slavery are some of the atrocities that six years of civil war have inflicted on millions of people of southern Sudan.

Consider Akwa Karfath Kawal, a woman of African descent who fled hunger in her hometown of Aweil and ended up in a squalid refugee area just outside Muglad in western Sudan.

Armed Arabs abducted her five sons en route, she says, forcing them into slavery as cattle herders.

Another woman, Miriyal Mayowin, lost two toddlers to starvation and one to the Arabs during the trek out of the south.

"There is nothing in Aweil but destruction and we were hungry, so we left," she said. "We ate shrubs as we walked...but there was no water.

"So many died."

More than 12,000 refugees in this maze of huts made of sticks and plastic sheets tell similar tales.

Dressed in rags, these Dinka tribesmen and their brethren in other camps have been changed by the war from cultivators and cattle breeders to paupers dependent on relief.

The Dinka, largest of Sudan's 115 tribes, form the backbone of the rebel army. They are Christians and animists.

Rebels began fighting in 1983 for more autonomy from the government, which is dominated by the Moslem Arab majority in the north.

On Sunday, a new broad-based Cabinet met for the first time in Khartoum and endorsed a peace plan to end the war.

And in April, the world will try to assuage the suffering of Sudan's people with an ambitious emergency relief program coordinated by the United Nations.

Relief workers for both Western donor governments and private organizations say the $132 million program will save the lives of some of the hundreds of thousands of southern Sudanese who face starvation.

But they say the outside world has neglected the war and its ruin for so long that a logistical nightmare will further complicate the already precarious security situation. They doubt the logjams can be sufficiently overcome to prevent another disaster like last summer, when at least 250,000 people died after monsoon rains isolated them without food.

Everyone agrees the need is real and urgent, even the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army. Though the rebels have refused a call by the United Nations for a one-month truce to let the food pass, they have pledged not to attack supply convoys in certain protected corridors.

The plan is to stockpile 100,000 tons of food, medicine and other supplies in places accessible to 2.25 million southerners in both government and rebel-held areas. The supplies are to be in place before the rainy season starts in May and paralyzes transportation.

"It's an enormous quantity and a short period of time," said one relief worker. "Above all, this is Sudan."

Relief and government officials agreed to the plan for bringing in supplies by train, plane, Nile River barge and truck convoy. The government also promised to undo complicated bureaucratic procedures for the relief organizations.

For their part, Western relief workers offer endless stories about bureaucratic inefficiency, generally on condition they not be identified.

A British-based organization says it had to wait a year before four jeeps were cleared through Sudanese customs.

A Dutch diplomat says he tried to transfer $4 million in aid to the emergency operation. He was handed forms to fill out and told that the transfer would probably take weeks.

Much of the food must be transported to government-held southern areas on Nile barges or trains. However, the barges and trains have made no more than one trip in the past year because of security problems and nervous railway workers.

The government says of Sudan's 22 million people, 4 million are southerners. It says half have been displaced by the war to camps in Ethiopia or northern Sudan, and half still need relief in the south.

Tower issue spurred constitutional crisis

One particularly sad aspect of the confirmation battle that developed over John Tower, whose nomination as secretary of defense was rejected early in March by the Senate, was that it sharpened a continuing attempt by Congress to control the presidency.

There is a genuine constitutional crisis in Washington nowadays over the separation of congressional and presidential powers.

Because the Republicans have controlled the White House for two-thirds of the past 36 years, Democratic congresses have increasingly tried to assume greater authority not only among various departments and agencies of the executive branch but the presidency itself.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., and Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., broke party ranks in the Tower debate to declare they would vote for Tower's confirmation. Heflin's language was particularly ironic. He said:

That simple sentence speaks volumes.

Congress has long been trying to micromanage the Pentagon through 24 committees and 40 subcommittees that oversee the defense budget. Local pork-barrel spending projects are approved by trading off votes among congressmen at the expense of national security and attempts to balance the federal budget.

Congress reaches into many federal departments and agencies in the same way, forcing policy on the executive branch.

By constantly placing more controls over foreign policy efforts in general and the Central Intelligence Agency in particular, Congress has tried to supercede the president in foreign affairs. For example, there are so many Boland amendments affecting U.S. policy — military and intelligence — toward Nicaragua that Congress effectively tied former President Reagan's hands.

Congress is engaged in other encroachments on presidential authority — from the War Powers Resolution to the creation of special prosecutors when the president will not bend to its will.

This isn't intended to imply that congressional scrutiny of presidential appointments is not appropriate or that there were not other issues involved in the Tower confirmation debate. Obviously, there were plenty of other concerns. But it must be noted that Congress is crippling the ability of any president to lead at home or abroad. Yet, the membership seems unable to solve the many critical problems that are its clear responsibility.

Much more would be accomplished if Congress minded the responsibilities assigned to it without attempting to usurp power it was not intended to possess.

Another View:

Honor in Washington

When people think about ethical squalor in Washington they are thinking more and more about Congress. The upcoming investigative report on House Speaker Jim Wright's questionable activities provides the main excitement of the moment, but there is much else of deeper importance that needs attention.

We refer to the massive freebies that are drawn regularly by many members of Congress. By partaking of these, members may gain what amounts to second salaries, render themselves almost invulnerable to defeat by political challengers, and have good times on free vacations. The most glaring ethical conflict is embodied in the habit of accepting an "honorarium" of thousands of dollars merely for showing up at some meeting of a lobbying group.

A torrent of public anger forced Congress to abandon its tricky attempt to hike congressional salaries 51 percent without even voting on the matter. Now the members, sensing the public mood, also should ban those honoraria, whose receipt is patently dishonorable, since obviously they are handed out to influence lawmaking.

Just recently, the presidential Commission on Federal Ethics Law Reform called emphatically for such action – for a blanket prohibition of honoraria and also for limits on outside earned income, in "all three" branches of government. It also proposes a new independent ethics officer for Congress.

Meantime, the old ways continue. The Senate voted the other day to increase vastly the quantity of free mail a senator can send out – an important advantage in getting re-elected. California Sen. Pete Wilson, to his credit, challenged this further bloating of the free mailing privilege, and was voted down 50-47. But that's getting close, and maybe Congress will get the message one of these days that the public is fed up with its self-serving ways, and its acceptance of handouts.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, March 27, the 86th day of 1989. There are 279 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 27, 1977, 582 people were killed in aviation's worst disaster when a KLM Boeing 747, attempting to take off, crashed into a Pan Am 747 on a runway on the Canary Island of Tenerife.

On this date:

In 1625, Charles I, king of England, Scotland and Ireland, ascended the throne upon the death of James I.

In 1794, President George Washington and Congress authorized creation of the U.S. Navy.

In 1836, the first Mormon temple was dedicated, in Kirtland, Ohio.

In 1884, the first long-distance telephone call was made, between Boston and New York.

In 1917, the Seattle Metropolitans became the first U.S. team to win the Stanley Cup, defeating the Montreal Canadiens.

In 1968, Nikita Khrushchev became Soviet premier in addition to First Secretary of the Communist Party.

In 1964, Alaska was rocked by a powerful earthquake that killed 114 people.

In 1968, Soviet cosmonaut Yuri Gagarin, the first man to orbit the Earth, died in a plane crash.

In 1978, thousands of miners returned to work for the first time in 112 days, ending a nationwide soft coal strike.

In 1983, a crowd shouting "Go home!" forced Chicago mayoral candidate Harold Washington to cut short a campaign appearance with former Vice President Walter F. Mondale in the city's North Side.

Ten years ago: Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries raised the base price of their crude oil by 9 percent as the cartel ended a two-day meeting in Geneva. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled, 8-1, that police cannot stop motorists at random to check licenses and registrations unless there is reason to believe a law has been broken.

Thought for today: "We crucify ourselves between two thieves: regret for yesterday and fear of tomorrow." — Fulton Oursler, American journalist and author (1893-1952).

Union chief's entourage lives it up

WASHINGTON — If a man can be judged by the company he keeps, then the imprisoned "godfather" of Mexico's powerful oil workers union has much explaining to do.

Jack Anderson

Joaquin Hernandez Galicia, known as "La Quina," has been the undisputed leader of the 200,000-member union since 1962 and has had plenty of time to collect a colorful entourage along the way. Picture the likes of Jimmy Hoffa or Jackie Presser on "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" and you have an idea of life in the Mexican fast lane.

La Quina was arrested in January in a raid on his home in Ciudad Madero. He was charged with arms smuggling and with the murder of a federal agent who died in a gun battle during the raid. We have reported recently on our three-year investigation of La Quina, who is suspected of enriching himself by skimming union profits, charging hefty union dues and intimidating his enemies. Those who were smart enough to link up with La Quina have lived well, too.

One man who escaped arrest during the January raid was La Quina's right hand man, Salvador Barragan Camacho, known as "Chava." He was at the dentist when La Quina's home was stormed by Mexican federal agents. He was able to hide out until he suffered a heart attack. He has been in police custody in the hospital while charges are pending.

Chava has been La Quina's chief lieutenant, and a friend since childhood. He owns several luxury homes. According to knowledgeable sources, his car phone bill has gone as high as $2,000 a month.

The swag-bellied Chava has a fondness for gambling. A popular Mexican actress who once accompanied him to Lake Tahoe told us he dropped $800,000 on a roulette wheel in half an hour. One former close associate claims he saw Chava lose $1 million at Nevada baccarat tables in one night.

Another La Quina associate was charged with tax evasion in the January sweep of the union — Sergio Bolanos. He owns a conglomerate of seven companies, including a shipping firm formed to handle union cargo.

Bolanos owns a fleet of helicopters and airplanes with maintenance costs alone of $16,000 a month. Sotheby's auction house buys wine for him. His wife flaunts jewelry. He once paid $3 million for an estate in Mexico City. He owns property in Vail, Colo., and among the guests to drop by for his housewarming was Gerald Ford. His home of choice in recent years is a chateau on the outskirts of Paris.

Bolanos is a man who does not forget an insult. When two of his sons were expelled from a private school, he bought the school and reinstated them. He also expanded the school, and when parents of two students complained, Bolanos had the students expelled.

A third colorful friend of La Quina is Hector Garcia Hernandez, known as "El Trampas," or "the trickster." He rose from a job as La Quina's chauffeur to become, by his own admission, a bagman for La Quina. He was imprisoned on charges of stealing from the union.

El Trampas was the most crudely ostentatious of La Qunia's aides. He would pay young boys 50,000 pesos to watch his car — a job with a going rate of one peso. One young starlet recalls a date with him when he was called away on business. El Trampas apologized and wrote her a check for one million pesos (about $20,000.)

Before he was put in prison in 1983, El Trampas owned a newspaper that he picked up as payment for a debt on a union contract. He immediately renamed the paper "El Trampas," spent 200 million pesos on new offices and hired reporters for exorbitant salaries. All the while, the editor-in-chief, El Trampas, could neither read nor write.

TOWER'S FOOTSTOOL — The Pentagon has at least one piece of equipment that will be relegated to the closet now that John Tower has lost out as secretary of defense. Our sources say Pentagon staffers built a wooden platform for the diminutive Tower to stand on while addressing the troops. The platform is collapsible and can be carried around like an ordinary briefcase. It will be kept for the use of short guests.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The pollsters won't like it, but George Bush is not inclined to test the public pulse every time he makes a decision. Ronald Reagan lived by the poll, but Bush has conducted only once since his election. We were uncomfortable when Reagan tried to conduct a mini-election before making policy shifts. On the surface is sounds equitable, but in reality it showed a lack of confidence and long-term direction in the White House. Bush has been accused of lacking confidence, but at least he doesn't feel the need for frequent popularity polls to give him a pat on the back.

CHARLEY REESE

Big business creates own version of bogeymen

A common way of deceiving people is to ask the wrong questions. To frame the question is to frame the discussion.

Charley Reese

I'll give you examples because I have come to the conclusion that much effort is expended to deceive the public while those doing the deceiving pursue their own goals.

In all the seemingly endless discussion of the U.S. trade deficit, the questions are always framed as variations of two: how can the U.S. sell more overseas and why do Americans buy so many imports? By framing the questions this way, it is implied that there are two villains: foreign governments which supposedly keep American products out and American consumers who for some reason prefer foreign products over domestic products.

This takes the heat off the real culprit — U.S. big business and the U.S. government, which in my judgment, is controlled by big business.

America has a trade deficit in part because over the years American manufacturers have moved their manufacturing plants overseas to take advantage of cheap foreign labor. Much of what they manufacture in foreign plants is exported to the U.S.

They hired intellectual whores to convince people that for some mysterious reason the age of manufacturing has passed and we have now moved into some allegedly higher economic situation known as the service economy.

That's a lie. Manufacturing continues strongly — it's just being done more and more overseas where labor costs are cheap. If you just pause and think about it, you can see what bunk this service economy is. Has the human need for products diminished? Of course not. Manufacturing is as important as ever — it's just that American financiers prefer to pay Asian or Latin wages than American wages.

And since they don't wish the American people to realize that it is they who are putting Americans out of work and shifting them into lower paying jobs, they create bogeymen of foreigners unfairly keeping our products out of their countries.

I have used this example before but once when I went into a supermarket to buy a hair curler for my daughter, I found four choices on the shelves. All four bore American brand names. All four were manufactured in Hong Kong. It wasn't my preference for foreign products that caused my little contribution to the trade deficit — it was the greed of American manufacturers who had abandoned American workers, American safety and environmental standards, for the sweatshops of Hong Kong.

What, pray tell, do those spreading this hokum about bad foreigners expect, for example, the people of Mexico to buy? More than half are either unemployed or underemployed, nearly 30 percent don't have enough money to adequately feed their families.

Foreign trade, furthermore, accounts for only a small percentage of the gross national product. Most of our economy is domestic. Those American companies making hair curlers in Hong Kong are exporting their products to America and they should be making those products in America.

I would like to see the American people start a drive to force Congress to levy a sweatshop tariff on products made in foreign countries by American-owned companies and exported to the United States.

It is in our interest to do so. It is in our interest to create a disincentive for American financiers to employ foreign sweatshop labor at the expense of American workers.

Union members ought also to clean house at the AFL-CIO headquarters where the limousine leaders seem to routinely fall in line with big business by distracting their members with campaigns against apartheid or some foreign dictator when the real problems they should be confronting are right here in the good old U.S. of A.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

First warning on Second Coming is 'scar-eee'

I'm not certain how to react to the recent pronouncement by a group of biblical scholars meeting in California that there's not going to be a Second Coming of Jesus after all.

Lewis Grizzard

According to the report I read, the scholars said Jesus never predicted the world was going to come to an end nor that he would return for the long-awaited, much-feared Judgment Day.

The group of 125 scholars meeting in Sonoma, Calif., further said they think the Second Coming was fabricated by Gospel writers four decades after the Crucifixion.

Having sprung from Baptist/Methodist roots, I have never doubted the Second Coming and have spent a great part of my life worrying about it.

It was my grandmother who first warned me of the event. She gave the following scenario:

First, the angel Gabriel is going to blow his trumpet and then the sky is going to open and down will come Jesus.

Then, we're all going to line up and go before him, and he'll take a look at how we lived and then decide which ones of us are going back to heaven with him and which ones of us are going to make the dreaded trip south instead.

If that's not enough to frighten you into keeping careful watch on your allegiance to the Big Ten Commandments, get this:

Also, according to my grandmother, all the graves are going to open up and the dead will come out to be judged, too. Scar-eee.

On top of that, she also mentioned things like the moon turning to blood, seas boiling over and scorpions the size of Shetland ponies roaming the earth.

I lived with my grandmother until I was 10. Her house was near the Baptist church graveyard and the Masonic lodge.

The Boy Scouts were helping the men of the community cook several pigs the night before the annual 4th of July barbecue over at the Masonic lodge.

Sometime around midnight, one of the Boy Scouts decided to blow a few notes on his bugle.

The noise awakened me and I was convinced there was a Second Coming. I ran into my grandmother's bedroom and screamed, "It's Gabriel!"

My grandmother tried to convince me it wasn't, but I refused to go back into my own bedroom, just in case — what with the graves opening and the scorpions and all.

And another thing, if there is, in fact, to be no Second Coming, an editor friend of mine has wasted a lot of time getting prepared for it.

I won't mention his name because he's an executive with a major newspaper chain now, but there was a time, when we were both younger, that he saw the Second Coming as a news event that could not be handled properly without advance contemplation.

So, he designed a front page that would announce the event. There was to be a large photo of Jesus' descent. He figured somebody would get one, and the wire services would send it along to him.

I realize the scholars in California are learned individuals who know much more about the Bible than I do.

Still, I'm going to try to keep my coveting to a minimum and continue not to make any graven images and keep one ear open for Gabe, just in case they're wrong — what with the graves opening and the scorpions and all.

Computer games to explain Yellowstone fires to visitors

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Computer games, three-dimensional maps and nature trails are being developed to help visitors understand how last year's forest fires were actually useful.

Space-age techniques went into the production of some of the interpretive projects, which were considered nine months ago when fires began consuming what would eventually consume nearly half of the 2.2 million-acre park.

"Around the first of July we began to realize that we were not only confronted with an incredible history-making event in terms of fire suppression, but with a virtually unprecedented educational opportunity as well," said George Robinson, Yellowstone's chief naturalist.

Forestry officials say the fires prompt rebirth in the wilderness, clearing away the old, dead and overgrown while making way for new vegetation and new wildlife habitats.

Robinson worked with the National Park Service's Harpers Ferry, W.Va., creative design center to develop exhibits and signs that will be located along Yellowstone's roads.

The projects were conceived "as ways of helping people...to better understand what happened in the summer of 1988," he said.

Among them is an exhibit at Grant Village, which was surrounded on three sides by flames from the Snake Complex of fires and on the fourth by Yellowstone Lake.

"It will be about a $250,000 exhibit on fire and fire ecology," he said, adding it could be installed by June. He said it will include a video of the 1988 fire season.

Also planned at the visitor center is a computer-enhanced map of Yellowstone that is being developed with the help of NASA technicians. The map will give an eagle's eye view of the park.

The map may be seen through a touch-sensitive screen on a video monitor, Robinson said. "Simply touch and fly north to south on a simulated overflight and actually see with computer-generated graphics what the area might have looked like on a given day during the summer of 1988," he said.

The development of a computer game will enable people to change various factors to affect the fires.

"What if we had rain, in adequate quantities, in June, July and August?" Robinson asked, explaining the concept. "What if we had not had the high winds, unprecedented winds? What if, what if and what if. So that a computer user could in effect change history, but also duplicate the actual events of the summer."

Some of the more traditional projects include nature trails that would wind through burned, and unburned, sections of Yellowstone; three one-way roads to lead motorists through burned and unburned areas; a movie on the fires; and a large pamphlet that would show a burned lodgepole pine forest with the animal life expected to be seen in the area after the fires.

The pamphlet will not be specific to Yellowstone, but also will show the effects of fire on the Alaskan tundra, the Florida Everglades, and the sequoia forests in California.

"There will be included, as a matter-of-fact, computer images of fires that were burning throughout the world during the same time," he said. "A multimillion-acre fire in China that was not even known about until very late in the year because the Chinese and Russians didn't make a big event out of it...

"There were fires burning in the Amazon basin and in Africa that were started by man that dwarfed in magnitude the fires that burned in Yellowstone."

Robinson said he hopes the project in its entirety will be instructive "to the role of fire as an element in our lives and the lives of the forest."

A male chick named "Kentucky" emerged from its shell less than a week after the egg and 31 others concluded the five-day flight aboard the space shuttle Discovery. More "space chicks" are expected to hatch this week.

More 'space chicks' to hatch this week

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — An experiment scientists hope will shed light on the cause of motion sickness in zero gravity and the loss of bone mass in astronauts continues this week as more "space chicks" hatch.

The first of a group of baby chicks to hatch from eggs that took a five-day space ride aboard the space shuttle Discovery pecked through his shell Friday night at Kentucky Fried Chicken headquarters here.

The first space chick hatched less than a week after the eggs took their ride. Seven more space chicks and eight from a control group that remained on the ground also hatched Friday and Saturday. Another eight eggs that traveled in space and eight more control eggs are to hatch this Saturday.

Vellinger said the experiment was designed to measure the effects of a weightless environment on embryo development.

Vellinger, 23, designed an incubator that was launched aboard Discovery on March 13. It carried 32 chicken eggs. A similar incubator with a control group of 32 eggs was kept on the ground during the period that Discovery was in space.

EPA defends search for substitute chemicals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency says the hunt to find substitutes for ozone-depleting chemicals will go much quicker without strict government regulation of the chemical industry.

EPA spokesman Chris Rice said the agency's policy is voluntary cooperation — instead of strong government control — because EPA has received "excellent cooperation" from the industry.

Rice was reacting to a recent General Accounting Office report that concluded the EPA's policy is failing to ensure the safe testing of chemicals that will take the place of chlorofluorocarbons, or CFC's.

By not starting the lengthy regulation process now, EPA will find itself unable to quickly restrict use of many substitutes shown to endanger human health and the environment, the GAO said.

The GAO, Congress' investigative agency, said EPA should use its powers to demand unpublished test results and quickly slap controls on substitutes believed to endanger the environment or humans.

The United States and the 12-nation European Community have pledged to ban chlorofluorocarbons by 1999 — surpassing the goals of the 1987 Montreal Protocol which requires they be halved by the end of the century.

CFC's, and related chemicals called halons, are stable and non-toxic when released into the atmosphere, but 10 to 100 years later, when they rise 15-20 miles to the stratosphere, their chemical bonds are broken apart.

Scientists say their chlorine atoms destroy ozone, allowing more of the sun's ultraviolet rays to reach Earth, causing more skin cancer and eye cataracts, and suppressing human immune systems.

The recent General Accounting Office report called the decision to rely on voluntary cooperation a course that would allow eventual production of CFC alternatives "by anyone, in any amount, and for any use, without prior notification...or an EPA safety review."

But the EPA's Rice countered, "We feel using that cooperative relationship is going to obtain the information we need on a much quicker track.

"We have very great concern over toxicity testing" Rice said, adding that EPA has "not ruled out" using its full authority to regulate the industry "if we're not getting the cooperation we need."

"It's a question of how you do it as quickly as possible while everyone is clamoring for new compounds as quickly as possible," said Kevin Fay, of the Alliance For Responsible CFC Policy, representing CFC producers and users.

"The concern is you've got some policy makers in Congress saying we've got to go faster, and you have regulatory structures that would slow it down," he said, comparing the dilemma to sitting at an intersection with both red and green lights.

The Toxic Substances Control Act allows EPA not only to demand industry's test results, but to order advance notice from any company planning to convert chemicals designed for other use into CFC substitutes.

"Given the importance of the safety issue, we believe that EPA's approach to assessing the safety of CFC ... chemical substitutes should include the use of (the) two TSCA authorities," the GAO said in a report requested by the chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, John D. Dingell, D-Mich.

docility — (noun) Dairy cows in general might be categorized by their quality of "docility." "Docility" is based on the root word "docile," meaning "teachable" and can be traced to the similar Latin word meaning "to teach." "Docile" also means obedient, lacking in independence, gentle, tractable and submissive. Cows generally lack independence. If you can get one to follow you down a path, the rest of herd will usually follow.

Four students die in small plane crash

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A single-engine plane crashed into a forested mountainside in turbulent weather, killing four foreign students aboard, authorities said.

The plane, a four-seat Socata TB-10, was en route from Bedford, Mass., to Albany, N.Y., when it crashed Saturday night into the eastern slope of the Berkshire Mountains' Taconic Range, authorities said.

Dr. Jeffrey Ross, a Berkshire County medical examiner, said the three men and a woman were studying in the Boston area and were from Latin America, Indonesia and Africa.

"Because of those backgrounds, it's taking us some time to get word to their families," said Ross, who said he could not release details of the victims' identities until relatives were notified.

Although the weather at the time was described as a light drizzle, the pilot radioed that he was encountering heavy turbulence shortly before the plane disappeared from radar screens at about 10:30 p.m.

The Federal Aviation Administration was investigating the incident.

Boy falls into icy water

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — A 7-year-old boy who fell through ice and was submerged in 40-degree water for nearly 20 minutes was in critical condition, and authorities said his prognosis was good.

Dwayne Peterson of Millcreek Township was in the intensive care unit at Saint Vincent Health Center Sunday night.

The boy was fishing on Presque Isle Bay with his father Saturday morning when he fell into the bay and through the ice. Witnesses said another young boy tried to pull him out but stopped when he nearly fell in.

The boy's father also tried, but could not find the youngster.

Dwayne was eventually pulled from the bay by John Wronek of the Erie County Sheriff's Department Search and Rescue SCUBA Team, who said the water was about 18 feet deep and very dark.

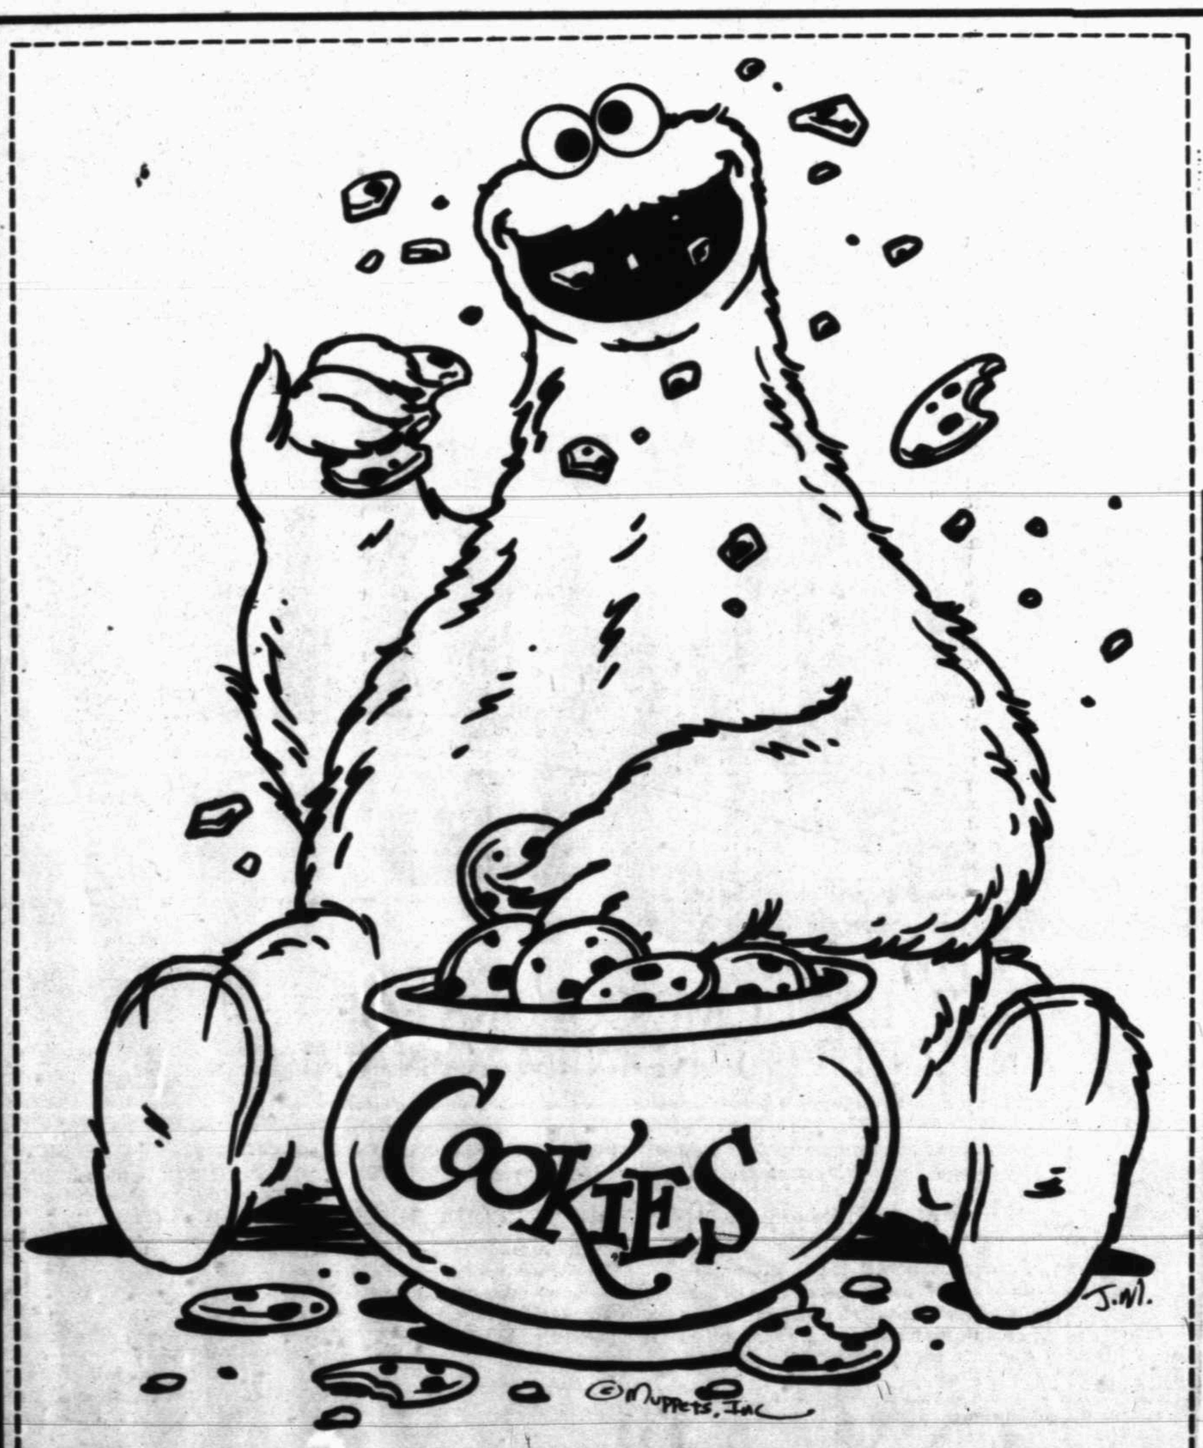

Wife issues public appeal

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The wife of a Navy captain who mistakenly shot down an Iranian airliner with 290 people on board began appearing on television today in spots aimed at finding whoever planted a bomb that destroyed her van.

Authorities believe the bomb, which exploded while Sharon Rogers was driving the van on March 10, might have been the work of terrorists.

"We don't know who did it. We just must realize that someone is out there who committed a very cowardly act," said Mrs. Rogers, whose husband, USS Vincennes Capt. Will C. Rogers III, on July 3 gave the order to fire on the jetliner when it was misidentified by ship radar operators as an attacking Iranian warplane. Iran vowed revenge.

"Together as a community we have to find out who it is so that (a car-bombing) doesn't happen to anybody else," Mrs. Rogers said in a videotaped interview for Crime Stoppers.

Pope John Paul II gives his Easter blessing to Rome and to the world — Urbi er Orbi — from the central balcony of St. Peter's Basilica at the end of Mass Sunday.

Pope decries existence of religious oppression

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II decried religious oppression in his Easter message and Christian leaders worldwide groped for meaning in this world where, as one put it, "the worst often does happen."

In Czechoslovakia on Sunday, Christians called for the pope to visit their communist nation. In some parts of the Soviet Union, people heard Masses for the first time in years.

Elsewhere Sunday, shells and rockets pounded Beirut as Lebanese Christians commemorated Easter. In Afghanistan, about 30 members of the dwindling Western community gathered for services.

About 180,000 faithful crowded the Vatican's St. Peter's Square for the pope's message commemorating the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

In his 20-minute speech in Italian, the pope lamented religious persecution, exploitation of women, degeneration of family life, sectarian strife and lack of concern for the environment.

Earlier Sunday, the pope, squinting in the warm spring sun, held a Mass on the steps of St. Peter's Basilica.

Calling Easter the new Passover, a reference to the Old Testament account of the miraculous rescue of the Jews in Egypt, the pope said: "God passes where there do not exist conditions worthy of a truly human life, through lack of housing, promiscuity, vagrancy, where selfishness withers the fruitfulness of marriage and the family breaks up."

He also decried violence against children and the "shameful commerce of vice...(where) women are still the main victim."

The pope devoted much of his message, broadcast to 50 countries, to places "where consciences are oppressed, where Christ's faithful cannot openly invoke him or suffer persecution because of their love of him."

He said Easter proclaims a needed truth "to today's world, which in so many ways seems to be rushing headlong towards self-destruction and death."

In Jerusalem, Patriarch Michel Sabah issued an Easter plea for peace and blamed politicians for the violence in the Holy Land.

"We find the reality of the Holy Land, a reality of death and suffering," Sabah, the first Palestinian to serve as Roman Catholic patriarch of the city, told pilgrims at Easter Mass in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.

"We find those who tell us each day: We are hungry, we are humiliated, we are prisoners, we have no schooling," he said. "We find those who have died and those who have yet to die while the politicians take their time finding answers."

Sabah alluded to the searing conflict between Israel and the Palestinians during a Mass intoned in Latin, French and Arabic on the site where Christians believe Jesus was resurrected.

Sabah, named bishop in January 1987, never directly mentioned the 15-month-old Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

But his mention of the "two peoples in this Holy Land" and his repeated references to death clearly evoked the revolt in which more than 400 Palestinians and 18 Israelis have been killed.

In the Soviet Baltic republics of Lithuania and Latvia, many Christians celebrated the Easter Mass for the first time in years. Last year, Moscow handed back confiscated cathedrals to many communities after decades in government hands.

In Czechoslovakia, about 400 people gathered beneath the balcony of 89-year-old Roman Catholic Cardinal Frantisek Tomasek's Baroque residence shouting, "Long Live Our Father!" and "We Want the Holy Father!" in a call for the Polish-born pontiff to visit Prague.

Czechoslovakia is the only Soviet bloc country where Communist authorities have for decades blocked the appointment of religious leaders.

In Britain, Archbishop Robert Runcie, head of the Church of England and the world's leading Anglican, told a congregation at Canterbury Cathedral: "We live in a world in which the worst looks as if it is going to happen and the worst often does happen, and yet out of the anguish and waste, love and trust come in new forms."

Police surround prison under seige

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Police and soldiers surrounded a prison farm today where about 250 inmates held guards and Easter visitors hostage, officials said. Six people were reported killed and about 20 wounded in the takeover.

Officials said inmates took over the prison farm on Sunday after wresting rifles from prison guards, officials said.

At least 300 police officers and 400 soldiers armed with rifles and submachines guns surrounded the prison, reports said.

Three of the dead in Sunday's uprising at the Pavon prison farm — the country's largest penal institution — were inmates and three were guards, according to a local judge who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

The judge said he did not know how many people were hurt, but an eyewitness interviewed on a local radio station said about 20 people were wounded in a gunbattle between guards and inmates.

It was not clear how many hostages the revolting inmates held — one report said about 400 — or how much of the 2.5 square mile facility they controlled.

Miguel Campos, director general of prisons, told reporters today that he was reviewing demands of about 250 armed inmates who had grabbed rifles from guards around noon Sunday at the prison about 12 miles from Guatemala City.

He declined further comment.

Members of the police carry the corpse of one of six people reported killed in Sunday's mutiny at the Pavon penal farm east of Guatemala City. Several people were wounded and hundreds are being kept hostage by rebel prisoners.

Negotiators said the talks ended just before midnight and were to resume later today.

Negotiators told reporters that about 1,000 people remained inside the institution including guards, inmates who had not joined in the rioting, and families with children who were visiting on Easter Sunday.

Television station Notisiete said about 400 people were being held hostage. But one negotiator, reporter Ricardo Gatica Trejo of the Guatemala City newspaper El Grafico, said the number of hostages was not clear.

The prison farm has room for 1,350 prisoners, but it was unclear how many were inside when the uprising began.

Trejo said inmate demands included amnesties or reduced sentences, a change in prison officials, and better food and treatment.

Another negotiator, Fire Department Cmdr. Alejandro Giammattei Falla, said the inmates also demanded to talk with federal human rights director Gonzalo Mendez de la Riva, who was out of town and not scheduled to return until later today.

Television newscasts showed the prison farm surrounded by police and soldiers sent from the capital. An air force helicopter hovered overhead.

Notisiete said additional army units were on standby.

Information about the uprising was sketchy because many officials were out of town Sunday, the last day of the week-long Holy Week holiday.

The National Broadcasters Information Patrol Service, a private radio station, broadcast an interview with a man identified as Marcos Antonio Morales. He said he and his wife, Maria, were waiting outside to visit a relative when the revolt broke out.

Morales told the radio station his wife was among about 20 people wounded in a gunfight between inmates and guards.

He said he initially took his wounded wife into a nearby prison chapel, where many other visitors sought refuge and treatment for the injured.

He said his wife was taken to a police hospital and he did not know the extent of her injuries.

Witnesses said firefighters and Red Cross workers were seen entering the prison with five stretchers.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Pakistani leader expecting 2nd child

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, the first woman to lead a modern Moslem nation, is expecting her second child in October, family sources said Sunday.

Ms. Bhutto's first child, a boy named Bilawal, was born last Sept. 21. A month later, Ms. Bhutto propelled her left-of-center Pakistan People's Party to a victory in the country's first free elections in more than a decade.

The prime minister's marriage in December 1987 to Asif Zardari, a prominent landowner from Pakistan's western province of Baluchistan, was reported to have been arranged in line with strict Moslem tradition.

Ms. Bhutto, 35, was pregnant with her first child last year when Pakistan's military leader, Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, announced elections.

Zia, who died in a plane crash in August, overthrew Ms. Bhutto's father, Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, in a bloodless coup in 1977. Bhutto was convicted of conspiracy to murder a political rival and executed in 1979.

Soldier crushed to death

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A U.S. soldier was killed today when he was crushed between two armored personnel carriers while an Army unit was loading equipment onto a train, according to a press statement.

The U.S. Army's 2nd Infantry Division said the soldier was killed and a second soldier suffered a heart attack in the accident at Wonju east of Seoul. U.S. forces were leaving the area after taking part in "Team Spirit" exercises with South Korean forces.

The name of the dead soldier was being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Elephant tramples tourist

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A West German tourist was trampled to death by an elephant that she tried to play with during a hike in northern Thailand, a police officer said today.

The officer, who asked not to be named, said Helga Torbirt, 49, was killed in the accident Friday in Chiang Dao, a town about 20 miles north of the major northern city of Chiang Mai near the Burmese border.

He said she and her husband, Andrew, and other tourists had just completed a journey by raft and were taking a break in Wang Pasak village.

Tourists in the group said they were sitting by a stream when Mrs. Torbirt approached an elephant that was bathing there. The animal panicked, rushed toward the woman, grabbed her with its trunk and threw her to the ground and trampled her, the officer said.

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After contributing millions of dollars from his personal fortune to the project, George Soros, a Budapest-born money manager, is looking for wealthy Americans to contribute to a foundation that he established in the Soviet Union.

The foundation, the Cultural Initiative, is intended to bolster Mikhail S. Gorbachev's attempts to establish a more open society by encouraging innovations in education, arts, and sciences.

It has its headquarters in Moscow and will open regional offices later. It has granted $1.5 million for 25 projects that include the writing of a new Russian encyclopedia, the manufacture of wheelchairs, and a program to help consumers test food for harmful substances. Applications are being sought for new grants.

Soros, a financier, is the president of Soros Management Fund Inc., and the founder and head of the Quantum Fund; both are money market funds. In the past five years, he set up foundations in Hungary and China, and is starting one in Poland.

"I'm an independent," Soros said in a recent interview. "I have certain values and beliefs, and I can afford to put money behind it. I consider what I do an indulgence, and it has been a lot of fun."

The Soros foundation in Hungary provides $3 million a year to support hospitals, cultural activities, and travel programs for scholars and artists. In China, a club was opened last year in Beijing to serve as a meeting place for writers, artists, and scholars, with others planned outside the capital.

The foundation in Moscow is in a 17th century palace that is being renovated to provide office space, meeting rooms, a concert hall, and a library equipped to give Soviet researchers access to computer data in the United States, including information from the Library of Congress.

Soros said he is looking for contributions to expand the Soviet foundation's operations and make it less dependent on one contributor. He has donated $3 million, and said he would match up to $2.5 million in outside contributions, which he hopes to attract from American philanthropists.

Soros invited Soviet intellectuals to serve as foundation board members and set policy. His own role is as financial supporter and adviser. The Soviet Cultural Fund supplied the building. Contributions to the foundation come partly from the Soviet Peace Foundation, which receives donations from workers and organizations.

"If Gorbachev were to succeed in transforming Soviet society into an open society, there would be no need to think of the Soviet Union as our arch enemy and the Soviet Union could become an ally of the West in much the same way as Japan or Germany, an economic rival but an ally and friend," he said.

Easter fighting forces residents underground

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Christian army gunners hammered each other's positions in and around Beirut today after random bombardment of the capital forced residents to spend the Easter holiday underground.

Police said three civilians were killed and 13 wounded in the hostilities overnight and during the morning. The casualties raised the toll to 97 dead and 339 wounded since the latest round of fighting in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war broke out March 8.

The rocket and artillery barrages in the capital tapered off at daybreak. But heavy duels resounded in the mountains overlooking Beirut, police said.

It was the fourth consecutive night that barrages on both Christian east Beirut and Moslem west Beirut have confined civilians to basements and bomb shelters.

The Syrians and their allies have also ordered a blockade of east Beirut and nearby Christian communities, home of about 1 million people.

Syrian forces and allied Druse gunners pounded east Beirut with rocket barrages of up to 60 rounds per minute during the night. The bombardment set fires at a fuel tank at the Beirut port and the city's main power plant, police said. The Christian army units retaliated with barrages from 155mm howitzers.

Until the damaged plant is repaired, authorities will be able to provide electricity for just four hours a day.

The fighting pits army Commander Gen. Michel Aoun's predominantly Christian units against an alliance of Syrian troops and militiamen of Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party.

Aoun contends the Syrians, who intervened 13 years ago as peacekeepers, have turned into an occupation force by taking sides with Moslems and Druse. He heads a Christian military Cabinet in Lebanon's divided government. Syrians back the rival Moslem government.

The Christian leader has declared a "war of liberation" to drive out the 40,000 Syrian troops. He has vowed to fight on even at the risk of destroying Beirut.

Police Lt. Hank Norton of the Police Identification Section analyzes and classifies a fingerprint lifted from a piece of stolen equipment. The print will then be compared to one on file.

LOOKING FOR CLUES

The work seemingly never changes for Midland police detectives, from the living with ominously mysterious homicide cases to the drudgery of solving mundane burglaries and thefts.

But recently their surroundings have changed remarkably.

Housed for three decades in a corner of the cramped Public Safety Building on Texas Avenue, the 30 investigators and support staff moved to the third floor of the Loraine Center the first week of March.

Lt. Hank Norton said the new downtown quarters at 601 N. Loraine St. are more conducive to detective work.

"The work areas here are a lot quieter," said Norton, who is in charge of Intelligence, Identification and Narcotics for the department. "In contrast to the open bay area (at the old building), when interviewing people, we aren't interrupted by the other detectives' phone conversations or their interviews."

Victims and witnesses also are more comfortable at the new locale, Norton said.

"You get more personal contact with people, and they are not as reluctant to talk," he said.

During a recent tour of the building, Deputy Chief Billy Ray said the uncluttered work environment has increased the productivity of the detectives.

"The atmosphere is a lot quieter here, and we have two men to an office," Ray said. "Everything about this building makes a person feel better about what they are doing, and it makes us want to produce."

Despite the comfortable surroundings, the detectives can't get used to them.

"We will probably be moved out," the deputy chief said. "There will be some remodeling, and we are expecting an architect to come in and tailor make a wing for us."

In a deal valued at $1.2 million, the City Council on Jan. 24 gave attorneys approval to close the sale on the property, widely known as the Xerox Building. The approval ended three months of planning and negotiations.

The three-story building — located just a few blocks north of City Hall — will eventually house the entire department, along with the Emergency Operations Center. By placing the communications center in the basement, the city will add as much as 8,400 sq. ft. of working office space to the 52,000 sq. ft.-building.

Along with the $1.2 million purchase price of the building, voters in a recent bond issue also gave approval to spend up to $2.5 million for a state-of-the-art digital trunking communications system, $1.15 million for additional electronic equipment, including a computer-aided dispatch system for the fire department, and $350,000 for the purchase of mobile data terminals.

By EARNEST L. PERRY

LIBERTY, Texas (AP) — The governor's mansion based on the original blueprints is not in Austin, but in the small Southeast Texas community of Liberty.

The Price Daniel House, built by and named after the late Texas governor, is a replica of the mansion in Austin. The only exception is that the two wings on the sides of the Price Daniel House were left off the original governor's mansion.

"The Legislature decided not to build the wings in 1856 to save money," said Robert Schaadt, archivist at the Sam Houston Regional Library in Liberty. "The state saved $6,400 by not building the wings."

Legislators allocated $14,500 to build the mansion in Austin, Schaadt said. The lowest bid came in at $20,900, which precipitated removing the wings from the original blueprint, he said.

Price Daniel and his wife, Jean, decided in 1983 to build a home that resembled the mansion's original blueprint, Schaadt said. Daniel, who died last August, never moved into the 12-room home, he said.

The mansion in Austin has nine rooms.

The Daniel family lived in the residence off and on, but never moved in permanently because the move was too tiring, Schaadt said. Researchers and scholars visiting the library also stay there while working at the library, he said.

The Price Daniel House is decorated with furniture, paintings and memorabilia from the Daniels, and from Texas legend and statesman Sam Houston, the great grant-grandfather of Jean Daniel. Houston's bed is kept in one of the upstairs bedrooms in the mansion.

One of the oldest furniture pieces in the home is a small breakfront table dating back to 1820. Most of the antique pieces were purchased by the Daniels specifically for the mansion.

"It was always a dream of Price Daniel to build a house based on the original governor's mansion," Schaadt said. "They did not want it exactly like the mansion in Austin, but they did want to keep it in the same style."

Jean Daniel and workers from the library are moving furniture and other artifacts into the mansion, which is an addition to the library. The mansion eventually will be turned into a museum depicting the many years of public service by the Daniels, Schaadt said.

The Daniel family currently pays all the utility and maintenance bills of the mansion, Schaadt said. They also will pay them when the mansion becomes part of the Price and Jean Daniel Foundation, he said.

The mansion also houses artifacts from each office Daniel held, from governor to state attorney general to U.S. Senator. There are numerous pictures of the Daniels with national political figures, including Presidents Kennedy and Johnson.

The Daniels spent $500,000 to build the house and much more to furnish the interior, Schaadt said. The mansion currently is used for non-profit functions and parties, he said.

The mansion also is open for group tours by appointment.

Poll finds lawmakers satisfied with most aspects of legislature

DALLAS (AP) — Texas lawmakers are satisfied with the way things are but find Gov. Clements tough to work with, according to a survey by the University of Texas at Dallas.

Legislators are not for such proposed reforms as yearlong sessions, a ban on politicial action committee contributions and public financing of campaigns, the survey revealed.

But they welcome suggestions of higher salaries and longer terms in office.

The mail-in survey of members of the Texas House and Senate was conducted between Feb. 1 and March 20 by Greg Thielemann, a social sciences professor at UT Dallas.

About half the 150 members of the House and 31 members of the Senate responded to the seven-page questionnaire, Thielemann said. The results indicate the lawmakers pretty much like things just the way they are.

"To outsiders, the Legislature takes on the appearance of a zoo," Thielemann told The Dallas Morning News. "But these people don't mind the place being the way it is."

Many of the legislators said they find Gov. Bill Clements difficult to get along with.

In the House, 38 percent of his own party said Clements is difficult, while 65 percent of the responding House Democrats said he is hard to get along with.

More than three-fourths of the Republicans in the House said Clements treats them fairly, and Democrats were split.

The results indicated the lawmakers favor teacher pay raises, new prisons, expanded Medicaid coverage for AIDS victims and increased funding for education, for the poor, for the retarded and for drug and alcohol rehabilitation programs.

Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, said he is not surprised lawmakers are generally satisfied with the institution of the Legislature.

"In five months, we pass a $40 billion budget, we will scrutinize 5,000 pieces of legislation, 600 to 700 bills will be passed into law," he said. "We'll go through 100 conference committees between the House and Senate, and in the midst of all that, we will run the state of Texas for another two years.

Tragedy spurs promise of railroad crossing signal

WALLER, Texas (AP) — Mayor Danny Marburger says his Waller County community of 1,400 may not be getting a crucial $100,000 railroad warning signal had it not been for an auto-train collision that claimed the lives of two teen-agers.

"For the past several years, we've asked for a signal at that crossing," said Marburger, who has been mayor for nearly 17 years.

"We'd just get a letter back saying it wasn't top priority. Then it would fizzle out. It's sad that had to happen before somebody could put pressure on the higher-ups."

By July 1, federal, state and railroad authorities have promised the warning signal at the major intersection where the teens were killed Jan. 31.

The city of Waller must pay 5 percent, or about $5,000, matched by 5 percent from the state, while federal funds will finance the remaining 90 percent.

Waller High School students Sheila Henley, 16, and Shana Deniston, 15, died when a Southern Pacific train struck the car Miss Henley was driving. Another student, Allen Dismuke, 17, was critically injured and spent several weeks in the hospital. He underwent several surgeries and continues to receive therapy.

The Texas Department of Public Safety report said the car apparently tried to beat the train, but the local consensus is that the teens never saw it coming.

Attorney hopes Adams ruling to help his case

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals' ruling that overturned Randall Dale Adams murder conviction may help a woman convicted of a 1980 robbery and murder, her attorney says.

Kerry FitzGerald, who represents Joyce Ann Brown, says he plans to file a motion within the next month citing the Adams ruling because some information about a prosecution witness's criminal record did not come out during Mrs. Brown's trial.

Mrs. Brown is serving a life sentence for her part in the robbery of Fine Furs By Rubin in Dallas and slaying of the salon's owner, Rubin Danziger.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that Martha Jean Bruce, who testified that Mrs. Brown confessed her role in the incident, had served 10 days in jail on a misdemeanor charge of making a false statement to a police officer. That conviction was not revealed to jurors during the trial.

The prosecutor in the case, Norman Kinne, said Sunday he was not aware at the time of the trial of the false statement conviction against Mrs. Bruce. He said it wasn't on a list of Mrs. Bruce's prior convictions, which included theft, burglary and attempted murder.

In the Adams case, legal manuevers prevented the criminal record of the prosecution's chief witness, David Harris, from being heard by jurors. In the movie "The Thin Blue Line" and during a December hearing, Harris virtually confessed to the killing.

Many stare into the distance; the faces of others wince as their mounts climb invisible mountains, their hind legs stationary on the ground.

Meanwhile, the outnumbered barbarians scream in silence, their off-white teeth buried in a sea of golden beard as they raise their battle axes in rage.

"I've got close to 10,000," Torres says about his warrior miniatures. "I really don't know how I got started."

But involved in detailing miniature war figures he is. He's been interested in the subject for 20 years, ever since his days as a Texas City firefighter. He is now an operator for Union Carbide.

"I had a lot of free time when I worked for the fire department," Torres said. "It gave me an opportunity to work on the miniatures and develop my technique...you really have to enjoy it."

From the Egyptian foot soldier to two different views of how future warriors will do battle, Torres has become skilled in using the dry brush to expose the deep lines on a battle-weary face — even if the entire figure is less than an inch tall.

Half his collection will be on display at the Moore Memorial Public Library in Texas City through March. In two display areas, more than 5,500 figures — many mounted on tiles — show the Battle of Waterloo in 1815 and the medieval Battle of Crecy in 1346.

One recently completed figure shows a medieval commander, shielded by an iron plate, thwarting off a hail of arrows. The knight's horse has been hit and a stream of crimson dances across the animal's gray body.

About 100 books on war history and detailing miniatures line either side of the glass cabinet that carries the figures. "I love to read," he said. "If I have the time I can read one of these books from cover to cover in a day."

Through the years, Torres says he has learned to rely on books to give him intricate detail about the uniform colors of the different ages. "The Napoleonic Era is my favorite," he says. "It's the most colorful."

He's working on medieval characters now. "The medieval miniatures at the library are the latest set I've worked on," he says. " The miniatures are really detailed...It's a brand new brand that just came in from England."

Torres says he doesn't have all the periods covered just yet. He lacks representation from the Civil War and has the Mexican regulars from the Texas war for independence, but not the Texans. "I haven't gotten into the Civil War," he says. "First off, there are basically two colors; different shades of blues and then all gray."

An accomplished artist in pencil, Torres' progression in the art of miniature detailing is evident in the older figures he has prepared. "I've always liked to draw. I guess detailing these miniatures is an extension of that."

As he displays two similar Napoleonic Era French infantrymen, "you can see how the paint is just splashed on here," he said. The newer figure seems lifelike.

Many of the lead and plastic miniatures must be mail ordered — some from California, others from Germany, and still others from as far away as Australia. To complicate matters, Torres says for every one soldier he buys, he must find its historic enemy to complete the set.

He has completed some Ottoman Turks. Now he must work on the Landsknechts, a group of German, Swiss and Hungarian mercenaries, circa 1525, who fought the Ottoman Turks during the siege of Constantinople.

Norman figures also are being detailed, Torres said, to complete a set of the Battle of Hastings of 1066.

Damon Torres, Abel's 13-year-old son, picked up the hobby about three years ago. A La Marque junior High School student, Damon has put together a modest collection of miniatures himself. "He has a techinique of his own," Abel says,"but he is starting to develop that technique...Instead of using just plain colors, he's starting to blend them so that it looks a lot better on the finished product."

Abel can set up a World War II skirmish between American and German forces, or German and Russian troops, a scaled-down Norman invasion, or a portion of the Battle of Lexington.

Some of his Samurai figures can be staged, he said, and even the Zulu War can come to miniature life in his den.

"I read about all these guys before I do it," Torres says. "I've always been interested in history, particulary military history.

"I guess I just have the bug."

Louise Mandrell tickles big ivories

Louise Mandrell, sister of country music star Barbara Mandrell, plays a "walking piano" like the one in the movie "Big." She is now playing the $15,000 instrument in her act.

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — As country music performer Louise Mandrell left her dressing room to entertain recently, backup singer Pedro Tomas greeted her with the show business phrase "break a leg."

"I probably will," she quipped.

The reason she fears for her lower extremities is that she has just added some fancy footwork to her Las Vegas-style act. Inspired by the recent movie "Big," she has purchased a "walking piano" like the one actor Tom Hanks played in the hit film.

The instrument is a flat, long series of adjoining keys that sit on the ground. They are played by stepping on them.

Mandrell, 34, whose sisters, Barbara and Iriene, also are country music performers, is now using the unusual piano in her act.

"It's a novelty," she said in an interview before playing the instrument on The Nashville Network on cable TV. "It's a toy that will be interesting to people. It's fun; we've been giggling half the day away when we practice."

The electronic piano, which costs $15,000, weighs 600 pounds and is 14 feet long. It has 40 keys (24 white and 16 black) which require 30 pounds of pressure to make a sound. It came in two sections, and her road crew put it together and made some technical adjustments to amplify the sound to make it better for settings such as showrooms.

She will place a mirror behind her so the audience will be able to watch the intricate foot work.

"It's a toy," she said. "An expensive toy."

Three other members of her act will join her on the keys. They hop on and off and quickly move to different spots along the keys. The performance looks something like a Chinese fire drill where all four have hot feet.

She didn't have to hire a choreographer to take advantage of her costly new prop.

"It's not really dancing," she said. "It's playing an instrument with your feet."

In the movie, Hanks is a boy who suddenly physically becomes a man but responds at the level of a child. He and his boss, a toy company executive, hop on the piano at the toy store and play a "Chopsticks" duet.

"I loved it," Mandrell said about the film. "Movies usually bomb when I love them, but not this one. I love kids. Tom Hanks was believable as a child. I'm a big fan of his."

R.C. Bannon, her husband who is a country songwriter, suggested they buy one and put it in her act. They called a New York City toy store, ordered one and it arrived crated up in Nashville accompanied by a piece of paper with a telephone number to call with questions.

She began rehearsing on the piano in February. She knows of no other performer who has incorporated the instrument into his or her act.

"It's not like the piano where you just sit and do your piece," she said. "Believe me, it's a lot of work.

"I play the (regular) piano, so it's not like a whole new experience. And I dance, so the experience helped."

Mandrell, known to many TV viewers for her shampoo commercials, said she won't be too worried about hitting a wrong key. "The fans like me because I'm not perfect," she said.

The first two songs she learned on her new instrument are "Down Yonder" and "The William Tell Overture."

"'Down Yonder' is a standard country song," she said. "The country music fans know 'The William Tell Overture' but it reaches the non-country fans too. It's challenging."

ENTERTAINMENT

Success of 'Rain Man' rests on production

By DAVID EHRENSTEIN
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — From the day it opened, the film "Rain Man" has plainly touched a national nerve.

The popular film, starring Dustin Hoffmann as an idiot-savant and Tom Cruise as his guardian-brother, is up for eight Oscars. And the movie has spawned considerable human interest in real-life mental impairment.

Yet for all the ink, precious little attention has been paid to the production itself. A large part of the commercial success of this simple tale has to do with the strikingly complex way it's been put together.

"Rain Man" is a film with a "look" par excellence. One sleek, handsome, visually sophisticated shot follows another, tersely linking together to form an effective whole. Even if its story fails to move you, this film's production professionalism can't fail to impress.

And it's for this reason that Oscar's attention to cinematographer John Seale, editor Stu Linder, composer Hans Zimmer and production designer Ida Random is every bit as important as the honors showered on star Dustin Hoffman and director Barry Levinson. Both are likely Oscar winners next month.

"I think it's all (production designer) Ida Random's fault, really," quips cinematographer Seale. "We felt the story of the two boys getting together and traveling across the United States was powerful enough in itself. We planned to let the performers simply pour the emotion out onto the screen. But with Ida's and (set decorator) Linda DeScenna's work on motels and Laundromats and such, it also became a matter of getting the right colors.

"When I got together with Barry (Levinson) we realized early on we were really looking for 'lost' America — the way things looked a long time ago," said Random, whose previous credits include "The Big Chill" and "Body Double."

"Once it was decided that we would get the characters off the main highway, we thought things would look more interesting. But it's very difficult these days because everywhere looks the same. ... it's all Denny's and Jack in the Box."

Yet Seale was able to find the "look" he wanted — on an out-of-the-way road in Indiana, and a little motel sitting on it.

"Dustin loved our work because he told us that the first people who were involved with the movie came back with ugly highway pictures and said, 'It's not there, there's no more lost America.' But Linda and I found it."

For composer Hans Zimmer, "The basic idea Barry and I had about the music was that it was something Raymond (Hoffman's character) hears in his head. You wouldn't even have to call it music, it was a sound — a kind of amplified drone.

"We started to come up with this idea that maybe it should be a bit multinational, because Raymond, for all he knows, might as well be on Mars or in China or Japan. He has no perception of what America is. We had koto drums, and Balinese gongs, you name it. Percussion was very important because of the way Raymond counts all the time. The music was like a clock ticking in his head.

"I watched Dustin Hoffman on the screen and reacted to him or against him. I started going a little autistic toward the end of it myself."

"The movie just sort of stood on its own two feet," says producer Mark Johnson, who now recalls its troubled birth with amusement. "This wasn't a 'concept' picture, or a picture tied to a particular actor, you know. Originally it was set up without any actors at all. Then Marty Brest and Dustin started talking about doing a movie together, and things got started."

"It was written around 1986," associate producer Gail Mutrux recalls. "Back then there was some talk about Bill Murray being on the picture because Tom's part was originally written as that of an older brother. When Tom came on it became a younger brother. You see, the commitment of the actors and the studios was always in place. It was the directors and writers that changed."

Texas town helps legal French aliens fight against deportation

"Orr was crazy and could be grounded. All he had to do was ask; and as soon as he did, he would no longer be crazy and would have to fly more missions. Orr would be crazy to fly more missions and sane if he didn't, but if he was sane he had to fly them. If he flew them he was crazy and didn't have to; but if he didn't want to he was sane and had to."

— From Joseph Heller's novel, "Catch-22"

By MIKE COCRAN

SNYDER (AP) — French-born Jack Pointeau did it right, which was wrong.

He entered this country legally, so he must leave. Had he entered the country illegally, he could stay. Now it is too late to become an illegal alien and stay. So he really is an illegal alien and must go.

Catch-22?

Well, don't laugh. Jack's not. Nor are his wife and four children. Or their friends. Or the townspeople.

Everyone's furious, in fact.

"This is a Catch-22 bureaucratic boondoggle," says Donny Brown, editor of the Snyder Daily News and author of several stories on the Pointeau dilemma.

The French Fiasco, as some call it, is every bit as crazy as it sounds. As The New York Times so succinctly put it:

"If he had come to the country illegally, immigration officials agree, he would be eligible for amnesty. But since he entered legally, he has to leave."

Catch-22?

After selling their small, three-star hotel in Paris, the vacationing Pointeaus entered the United States in late 1981 with tourist visas. They liked what they found. In 1982, they applied for and received an investor's visa and bought a motel in the San Franciso area.

When his night clerk was slain, Pointeau sold the motel and moved his family to this quiet, dusty little West Texas oil town of 12,000. The Pointeaus purchased a 50 percent interest in a Travelodge. Francoise Pointeau and the couple's four kids went off to become honor students. Pointeau joined the Rotary Club and vigorously set about becoming a model citizen.

Now, by governmental decree, Pointeau and his family must sell or surrender their motel, pack up their possessions and leave.

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service told Pointeau, 52, that his Texas investments are not substantial enough and that he, his wife Francoise and the children will be deported in late April.

Pointeau said he appealed to the Lubbock immigration office for help but was told, "Jack, there is nothing we can do for you because you are legal."

He was dumbfounded.

"I can get no help because I'm legal?" exclaimed Pointeau, a native of Chateaugiron in the west of France.

Early on, a friend took him to Stamford to solicit the help of U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm. The Texas Democrat introduced legislation designed to rescue the Pointeau family, but got only a polite rebuff and a concession that immigration laws need changing.

Referring to the recent pardon of illegal aliens, Stenholm aide Marc Lubin said:

"What's ironic about this is that if he had not been here legally, if he had not renewed his visa each time, he would have been granted amnesty."

Attorneys say the Pointeau affair may not be all that uncommon in the wake of a recent get-tough edict by immigration officials. But the Snyder saga is still a bit mind boggling and by no means over.

Last September, a petition protesting the INS action picked up 1,837 quick signatures. And earlier this month, a Snyder citizens group pledged $3,000 to retain an attorney and pay filing fees for a lawsuit in U.S. District Court to delay the deportation order.

"Now I know what is the spirit of Texas," Pointeau said in his pleasantly disjointed English, which he speaks with a lilting French accent.

Neither he nor his family spoke much English when they left Paris for their U.S. vacation more than seven years ago. But that would soon change.

"We enjoyed California so very much that...we decided to stay," Pointeau said.

But when the first motel venture turned sour, Pointeau headed for Snyder, which was still fat and sassy and riding the crest of a prolonged oil boom. He bought his half interest in the motel for $212,000 in downpayment and loans.

His timing could not have been worse.

Overnight, it seemed, the oil boom went bust, and the economic consequences were brutal, particularly in small oil centers such as Snyder.

But Pointeau dutifully renewed his investor's visa each year and kept his motel afloat with hard work and innovative and modestly successful outside business ventures.

Even more remarkable were the academic endeavors of Mrs. Pointeau and the four children, who now range in age from 13 to 21.

Despite the language handicaps, Mrs. Pointeau graduated magna cum laude from Western Texas College in Snyder and Angelo State University at San Angelo. She is on the verge of obtaining a master's degree in French literature after graduate studies at Texas Tech in Lubbock and the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque.

"She will not be able to graduate if we have to leave," Pointeau observed.

Three of the four children graduated with honors from Snyder High School and the youngest is headed that way.

Isabelle, 21, a physical therapist, graduated from Angelo State in December and Christine, 20, is a senior fine arts major at ASU. Francois, 17, graduated from Snyder High at age 16 and is now a freshman at Western Texas.

Virginia, 13, who could neither read nor write a word of English in 1983, is now an eighth-grader studying advanced algebra and English and playing a pretty good clarinet.

The children speak fluent French and English and the two oldest daughters can spar with you in Spanish.

STATE

HOUSTON (AP) — The city's largest shelter for the homeless violates the city's housing code by providing shelter for hundreds of men each night without occupancy permits, and its sanitary conditions are so poor its food dealer's permit could be suspended or revoked, officials said.

Zoe Laurence, a spokeswoman for Star of Hope, said a general oversight was the reason its two downtown shelters did not have the permits.

"We're sitting here faced with an enormous need to do something about the men's shelter," Ms. Laurence told the Houston Chronicle. "It's going to involve millions of dollars. We have to go back to these same corporations, same foundations and individuals, all the heavy hitters in Houston (who have donated money in previous fund-raising drives for the Star of Hope) and say, 'You know what? You have helped us and helped us. But, we need you to help us out, again.'"

Glenn Duhon, chief of the food inspection bureau for the Houston Department of Health and Human Services, said a recent inspection of the kitchen at the La Branch shelter showed 21 violations of the city's 28 food sanitation regulations.

Violations considered critical included: mice infestation, the leaking and pooling of water in wash and walk-in cooler areas, no soap or paper towels at the kitchen lavatory and toxic materials such as powdered cleanser and a can of enamel in food areas.

The Star of Hope's Preston shelter does not provide food services.

"Yes we're guilty. Yes we're going to fix it," said Hank Suenkel, business manager for Star of Hope. "Our intention is not to provide food to clients that is bad, or to provide services that are bad. You have to understand that these serving lines, we use homeless volunteers to work on the serving lines and usually one paid staff cook supervisor."

The city health department shut down the La Branch kitchen temporarily last year because of health code violations, Suenkel said.

Star of Hope, a non-profit organization that operates the shelters, applied to the city for occupancy permits, which include specifications for the number of people allowed inside, after recent inspections.

One official said the number of beds in the 38,000 square-foot, three-story building which makes up the Preston facility might have to be reduced. The building, which began to provide shelter for men about 15 months ago, has more than 400 beds. The La Branch shelter — which fire department records indicate was last inspected in 1979 — has about 100 beds for men.

The average number of men staying in the shelters per night in 1988 totaled 380. Earlier this year during a cold spell there were more than 600 men in the shelters.

Boy identifies parolee as his mother's killer

HOUSTON (AP) — A parolee remained jailed after he was charged with capital murder in the slaying of a Houston woman who was stabbed despite her 12-year-old son's pleading with the killer.

The youngster, Ndombe Woods, 12, identified Darrell Wayne Davidson as the man who killed his mother, Joanna Newton Woods, police said. Davidson, 29, is on parole for a 1981 robbery and is currently being held without bail.

For Ndombe, his spring break from the Seminary Christian School in Fort Worth was horrifying.

Police said Ndombe saw part of the attack early Wednesday at the family's southwest Houston home, and even offered the assailant $4 to leave his mother alone.

The seventh grader's father, Chester Woods, who divorced his wife and moved to Fort Worth five years ago, said the funeral Saturday for Ms. Woods, 39, was difficult for his son.

"I expect he'll need some counseling to cope, but, with the support he has from his family, he'll make the adjustment," Woods said.

Antarctic action could change Gulf coastline

GALVESTON (AP) — Buoyed by evidence, a geologist envisions the day Galveston Island will be a fraction of its current size and the Gulf of Mexico coastline will be 5 or 10 miles farther inland.

As in the past, the changes in the Texas coastline will be caused by events in the Antarctic, Rice University geologist Dr. John Anderson said.

"We've had these very rapid rises in sea level long before there was a greenhouse effect," Anderson told The Dallas Morning News.

Anderson said he has evidence that a similar event occurred along the upper Texas coast about 6,000 years ago. Seismic work and core sampling of the sea bottom from a university-owned ship show that the coast at Galveston moved as much as 20 miles inland within 1,000 years, and it could have happened within as little as 200 years, Anderson said.

"We can tell it happens pretty fast because there's nothing in the way of a coastal barrier between Sabine Bank and the present shoreline," Anderson said. Sabine Bank is about 20 miles offshore under 30 feet of water.

The traditional view has been that sea level climbed slowly, that Galveston Bay filled inch by inch over thousands of years. The water was provided by the slow retreat, or melting, of the world's ice sheets — in the Arctic, where the bulk of ice that could affect sea level is now gone, and the Antarctic, where considerable ice remains.

Anderson has gathered evidence in the Antarctic and along the Texas coast that he said supports the idea that a rise of 250 to 300 feet in sea level after the end of the last ice age 18,000 years ago was not a long, even process.

Underwater sandbanks off the Texas coast — ancient barrier islands that were submerged virtually intact rather than eroded — indicate sea level at times has risen rapidly, not slowly, Anderson said.

Other scientists have found similar evidence of rapid rise in sea level elsewhere, he said.

"There's enough unstable Antarctic ice now to raise sea level...30 feet," Anderson said.

A rise of just 10 feet would submerge most of Galveston Island and would move the Gulf Coast inland as far as Texas City and Port Arthur, according to U.S. Geological Survey maps. A rise of 30 feet would cause Galveston to disappear and the coast to move even farther inland.

Mean sea level on tidal gauges along the Texas coast has risen one foot in the past 100 years, but 90 percent of that change is due to subsidence, Anderson said.

Final Four set ... it's on to Seattle

Illini downs Syracuse

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

MINNEAPOLIS — The Illinois players who limped and strutted around the locker room, slapping palms, exchanging hugs, seemed oblivious to their bumps and bruises as they celebrated a hard-earned trip to Seattle.

The Illini, turning in their most tenacious performance in a rugged tournament road, defeated Syracuse, 89-86, Sunday afternoon and earned the school's first Final Four appearance since 1952.

The victory also assured the Big Ten of two Final Four representatives for the first time since 1980. Illinois will play rejuvenated Michigan next Saturday in one semifinal game.

Sunday afternoon's victory may also have cast out the gremlins that have short-circuited Illinois' post-season aspirations since 1986.

In that year, they were knocked out of the tournament by Georgia Tech in the second round, then came an embarassing upset loss to Austin Peay in 1987, then the second-round loss to Villinova last season.

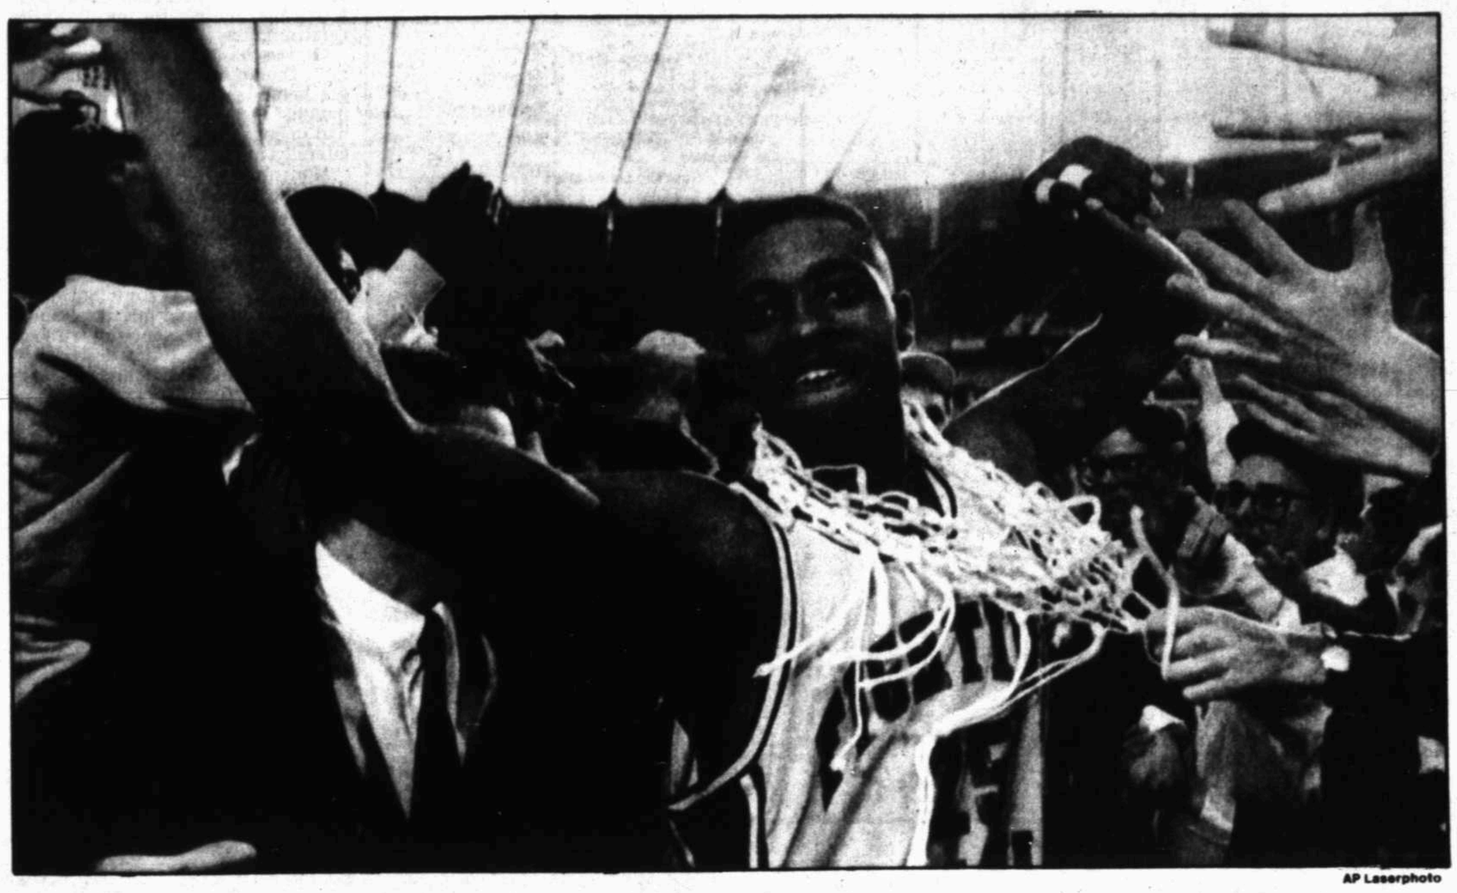

And for an agonizing stretch Sunday, when Illionis missed four straight foul shots in the last minute of play, the ghouls appeared to be knocking again.

This time, however, Nick Anderson, Kenny Battle and Kendall Gill refused to let them in.

"Not this time," said Gill who scored 18 points and came up with the rebound of Marcus Liberty's missed foul shot with 22 seconds left and Illinois nursing an 87-86 lead.

"We've been through this before and we know what it takes to win," Gill said. "This was the toughest game yet. We had to dig deep, deep down to get this one. One guy had a bruised knee, one guy had a bad ankle, I had a busted lip. But you have to be tough, you have to fight, and we're fighters."

Devils slip by Hoyas

By MALCOLM MORAN
New York Times News Service

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — A 14-point lead was nearly all gone and and experienced Duke team was making uncharacteristic mistakes at the worst time.

But a frantic Georgetown comeback did not quite bring the Hoyas all the way back.

With Alonzo Mourning, Georgetown's shot-blocking freshman center, reduced to a spectator, Duke's Blue Devils managed to protect the lead in an 85-77 victory Sunday that gave them the East Regional championship at Byrne Meadowlands Arena.

The Blue Devils (28-7) advanced to the semifinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament for the third time in four seasons. Duke will meet Seton Hall in a semifinal game Saturday at the Kingdome in Seattle.

Christian Laettner, a 6-foot-10-inch freshman center, responded to Mourning's imposing challenge by scoring 24 points on nine of 10 shots and taking nine rebounds.

Danny Ferry, the senior who was voted the outstanding player of the regional tournament, scored 21 points with seven rebounds.

A&M President almost resigned

Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Texas A&M president William Mobley, irate at what he felt was interference by regents chairman David Eller into an investigation of football coach Jackie Sherrill, was on the verge of resigning, the Bryan-College Station Eagle said in a copyrighted story.

Only efforts by regent William McKenzie of Dallas and A&M chancellor Perry Adkisson kept Mobley from stepping down last November, sources close to Mobley told the Eagle.

Less than two weeks later, however, several regents discussed firing Mobley because of his insistence in dealing with the Sherrill matter, the newspaper reported in its Sunday editions.

The sources close to the administration and to the regents requested anonymity for fear of reprisals, the newspaper said.

Sherrill resigned on Dec. 12 amid continuing controversy stemming from a Nov. 18 story in The Dallas Morning News quoting former A&M running back George Smith as saying Sherrill sent cash to him several times after Smith threatened to reveal repeated NCAA infractions during his tenure with the team in the early 1980s.

The Eagle reported that tensions grew between Mobley and Eller after the president concluded in December that Sherrill either had to resign or be fired.

At A&M expense, Smith flew to College Station and appeared at a Saturday night news conference after the Nov. 19 football game between Texas A&M and Texas Christian to recant his earlier claims that Sherrill paid him "hush money."

Simpson returns, captures USF&G

By AUSTIN WILSON

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tim Simpson was giving his golf career one last chance, and it paid off.

Simpson shot a final-round 69 Sunday for a 274 total and his first tournament victory since 1985 in the $750,000 USF&G Classic. His 2-stroke margin over Greg Norman and Hal Sutton was worth $135,000.

Before this season started, Simpson said he wrote to his wife and his parents, telling them he wanted to play his way back into the Masters.

"I told them I was going to play very heavy up until the Masters, because I'm not in the Masters and I wanted to be," he said. "I also said — and I'm not usually much of a predictor — that I would win a tournamnet and be back in.

"I told my wife that if I couldn't win this year, I was coming home," he said.

Simpson said he is emotionally and physically drained by his heavy schedule, so he's skipping this week's event at Houston to rest up for the Masters.

"Maybe about the middle of the week, I'll go to Augusta and play a practice round. It's only three hours from my home," said Simpson.

"That tournament means more to me than almost anything. Since I was old enough not to make noise, my mom and dad started taking me there.

Rose breaks silence

By JOE KAY

PLANT CITY, Fla. (AP) — Pete Rose has broken his silence to deny some of the gambling allegations against him, but he's left untouched the question of whether he bet on baseball.

The Cincinnati Reds manager says he'll respond to the rest of the allegations when his attorneys tell him it's OK.

"I'll have my turn to talk," Rose said Saturday. "When I have my turn to talk, I hope you guys are there. My turn to talk is when my lawyers tell me to talk to the right people, to the people I have to talk to."

Rose talked about some of the gambling allegations during an interview Saturday with reporters from The Associated Press, The Columbus Dispatch, The Cincinnati Enquirer and The Dayton Daily News.

He denied making gestures related to gambling on baseball from the dugout at Riverfront Stadium, as alleged in a Sports Illustrated story last week. He also expressed frustration over the allegations made by anonymous sources in the media, and hinted he would consider action over some of them.

"It sounds to me like a lot of people are writing stories without checking anything out," Rose said. "... We'll sit down when this thing is over and we'll read everything that's been written. If there has to be some things done, there will be some things done. People better know what they're writing, better have substantial proof."

Major League Baseball is investigating what it characterizes as serious allegations against Rose, but has declined to reveal the nature of the

Where's Seton Hall? In New Jersey, of course

Patterson

Notations and quotations from the Sweet 16 ...

■ First, to those who called wondering where Seton Hall is ...

Rand McNally says The Hall is in South Orange, New Jersey, just east of Newark, which is, of course, just across the Hudson from NYC. Or as Brent Musberger likes to call NYC, "(Donald) Trump's Place."

■ And speaking of ol' Brent, he had the most unforgettable quote during the Duke-Virginia game, although he was paraphrasing Billy Packer. Musberger said, "There's a good lookin' woman on the corner of every street in the United States, but a shot-blockin', big man is hard to find."

■ Earlier Sunday, Illinois-Syracuse play-by-play man Verne Lundquist made the gaffe of the day, saying that soon, one of the two teams would be on its way to Seattle's "Kingdoom."

■ Correct me if I'm wrong, but I'm not really sure that there is anyone who actually roots for the Georgetown Hoyas. Before this season, I've never heard so many people in personal conversation express such dislike for a team. Georgetown is disdained even more so than the Yankees. Or even Abilene Cooper.

■ One of the best games of the tournament came in the first round when South Alabama defeated Alabama, 86-84. It was the first time the two schools had ever met. An assistant at South Alabama is Larry Brown, the same man who used to coach Big Spring's Howard College in the 70s. Before his current stint at S.A., Brown took the Texas Class 5A Bryan Vikings to two consecutive state championships in 1982-83.

■ In the Final Four, we have Duke (Atlantic Coast Conference), Illinois and Michigan (Big 10), and Seton Hall (Big East).

Was that a collective sigh of relief I heard when the Big East's other two Sweet 16 teams — Georgetown and Syracuse — were sent home rather early. I sort of suspect any part of the country west of Jersey is a little tired of the Big East's domination.

The early sentimental favorite at this point? Michigan. The Wolverines don't even have a full-time head coach.

You have to believe, though, that Mr. Bo Schembechler would do his university well if he hires Steve Fisher as his new coach after the tourney. Fisher took over at the beginning of the tournament when Bill Frieder abandoned Ann Arbor for Arizona State.

■ And for those of you who are fashion-minded, Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski has to hold the honor of being the heir apparent to Pat Riley. Lou Henson, though, did wear a sharp tie on Sunday. And somebody needs to get Syracuse's Jim Boeheim a couple of new jackets; John Thompson desparately needs to ditch that awful towel, and since when does a Final Four coach sport a beard, ala Seton's P.J. Carlesimo?

■ And talk about your rotten luck ... as Illinois drew to within four of Syracuse with the second half just under way Sunday, my wife sent me out for a new meat thermometer so we could tell when the ham would be cooked. If that wasn't bad enough, I was told it was time to peel potatoes when 22-seconds remained and Duke led Georgetown, 83-77. Rotten timing, or what?

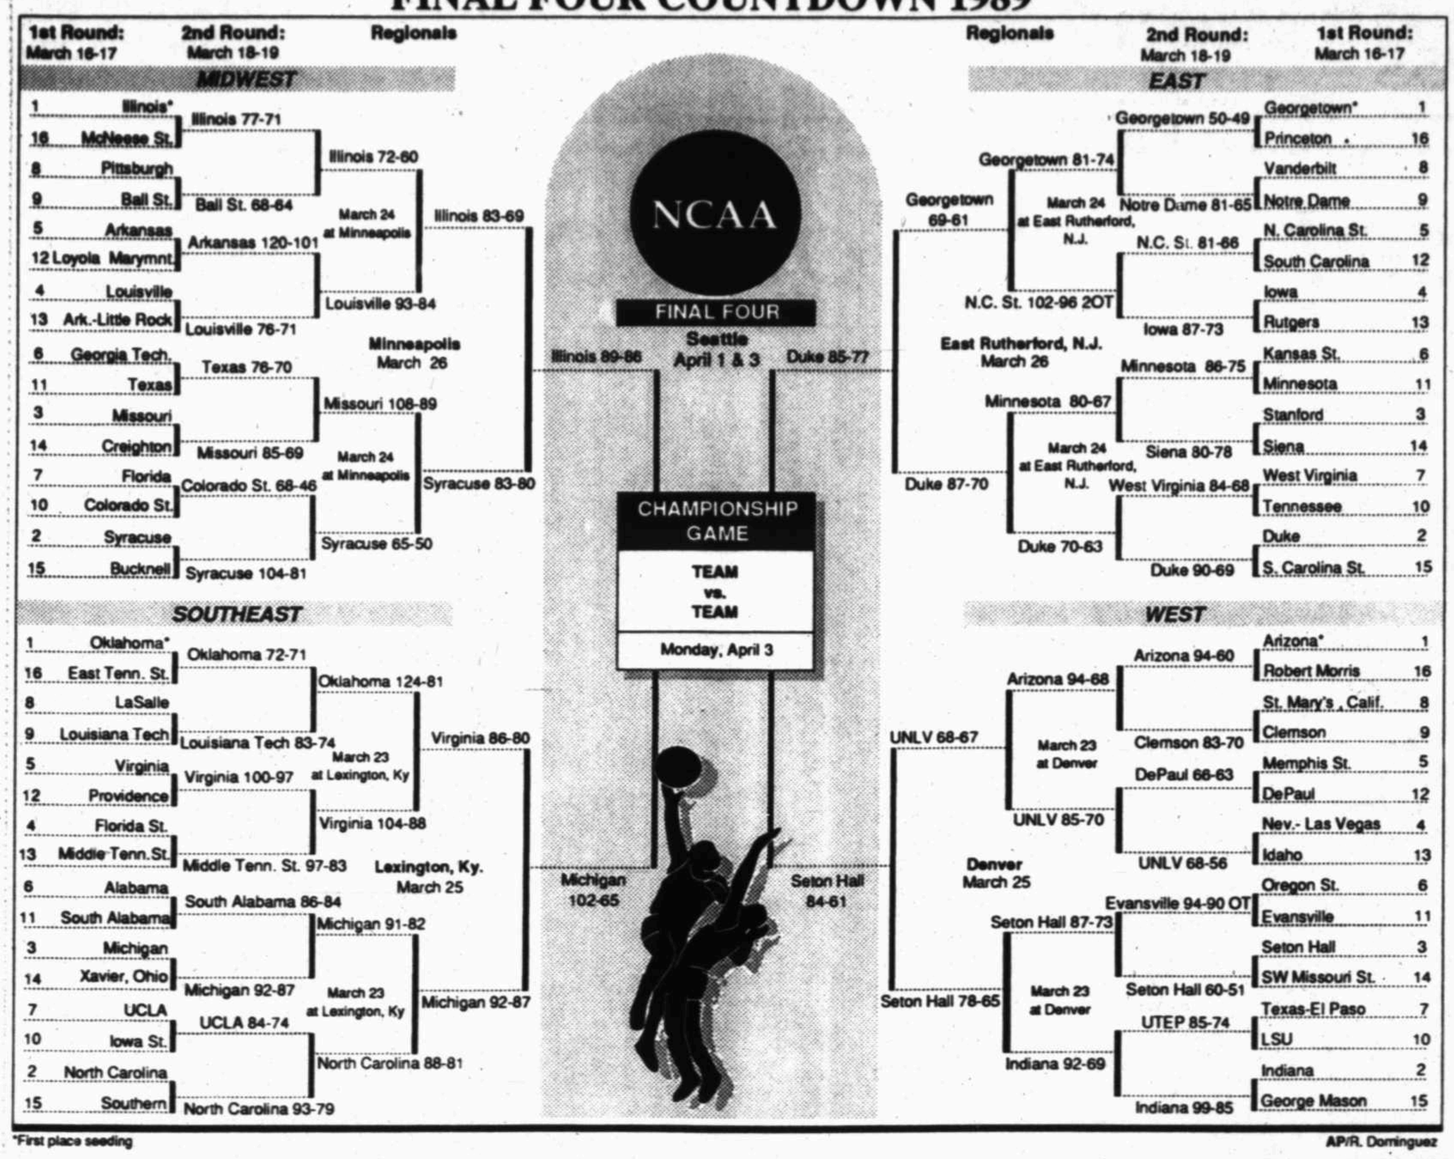

■ Predictions? Illinois has defeated Michigan twice this season, so it's Michigan's turn. And Duke will have no problem with Seton Hall.

Then, Duke will take it all, even though I'd like to see the Wolves in the end.

Ferry also had three assists, but it was his passing ability that created the unexpected circumstances that would keep Mourning, the most publicized high school player in the nation last year, on the bench for all except one minute 20 seconds of the last 5:07.

John Thompson, the coach of the Hoyas, had to rely on the lateral movement of Sam Jefferson, a reliable but less spectacular junior forward and center, for most of the final minutes.

"It was basically because of Ferry," Thompson said. "Because we got behind, we had to get a more mobile big person in the game. We had to get someone who can defend laterally on the outside."

Mourning, who was challenged from the second minute of the game and was poked in the eye at one point, had a harsher opinion of why he was forced to sit.

"I wasn't playing that well at all," he said. "I wasn't contributing. I made a lot of stupid mistakes, and I felt I was a big reason why we lost. That's why I had to sit down."

Mourning had 11 points, five rebounds and four blocks in 26 minutes of play. But he played only 11 minutes in the second half with just one block.

Georgetown (29-5), which endured a second straight loss in a regional final and its third in the 1980's, missed a chance to go to the Final Four for a fourth time in the decade.

The Hoyas, the region's top-seeded team on the strength of a strong Big East tournament, finally met a situation that was too difficult for their resourcefulness.

Faced with a 14-point deficit against a Duke team that was ranked first in the nation during much of the early part of the season, the Hoyas twice reduced their deficit to two points.

Each time, however, the Hoyas were not able to gain possession of the ball with an opportunity to tie the score. The first time the Devils' lead was cut to two, with 3:11 to play, Ferry was fouled by Jefferson and made two shots in the bonus situation.

Then, after Charles Smith, the Georgetown senior guard who led his team with 21 points, made a lunging shot in the lane, the Duke junior Robert Brickey made two more foul shots for a 79-75 lead with 2:29 to go.

That was as close as the Hoyas would come in their effort to have the Georgetown program tie Louisville with four Final Four appearances in the 1980's.

Smith missed a shot in the lane, could not convert the rebound, and fouled the Duke senior John Smith with 2:10 to play.

Smith made two foul shots in a one-and-one situation for an 81-75 lead. Bobby Winston, a Hoya senior swingman, scored off a steal to reduce the lead to four points with 1:19 to play.

But Laettner made one foul shot with 1:09 to go, the Hoya junior guard Mark Tillmon missed a 3-point shot, and Smith made another foul shot with 58 seconds to go to regain a 6-point lead and control of a situation that had appeared desperate.

After scoring at least one point on seven of their first eight possessions, the Blue Devils developed problems against the unlikely obstacle of a Georgetown zone.

Duke took a 7-point lead nearly three minutes into the game and each of its starters had scored. But Georgetown's adjustment forced Duke to make its outside shots, and when the Blue Devils went into a bad stretch, the Hoyas were able to come from behind.

For a stretch of 10 Duke possessions over a period of six and a half minutes, the Blue Devils produced just two foul shots. The Hoyas tied the score at 13-13 when the sophomore center Dikembe Mutombo scored on a dunk after taking a pass from Smith, and Georgetown took the lead when Winston drove for a score.

Celtics defeat Sixers, 105-103

Associated Press

BOSTON — Because of a deeper bench, the Boston Celtics are winning the kinds of games they used to lose and gaining on Philadelphia in the NBA playoff race.

Ed Pinckney, starting for the injured Kevin McHale, made two key defensive plays against Charles Barkley in the last 28 seconds as Boston survived a late 76er rally for a 105-103 victory on Sunday.

"This is a tremendous win. We played very aggressive basketball," Boston coach Jimmy Rodgers said. "When adversity faces a team, everybody must rise to the occasion and our team did exactly that."

Robert Parish led Boston with 30 points and 16 rebounds, while Barkley had 38 points and 15 rebounds.

But Pinckney's tight defense forced Barkley's shot to fall short with Boston ahead 104-103 with 28 seconds to go. Then Pinckney stole Ron Anderson's inbounds pass to Barkley with two seconds left to clinch the win.

"I was guarding Barkley" on the final play, Pinckney said. "We all knew who the ball was going to."

"It was an all or nothing play," Barkley said. "We got nothing."

Pinckney and Joe Kleine, both traded by Sacramento Feb. 23, and Kelvin Upshaw, obtained March 9 from the Continental Basketball Association, give Boston a strong bench.

"Early in the season we were in this situation a number of times and we couldn't hold the fort," Rodgers said. "We're a different team now, a deeper team."

The victory moved Boston, 35-32, 1½ games behind Philadelphia, 37-31, in the battle for the next-to-last playoff spot in the NBA's Eastern Conference and three games ahead of Washington for the final berth. Boston plays at Philadelphia Tuesday night.

The eighth-place team probably will play Cleveland or Detroit in the first playoff round. The seventh team figures to face New York.

Boston is 3-2 against the Knicks and 1-6 against the other two teams. Philadelphia is 2-2 against New York and 2-6 against the other two.

"Since we didn't make the playoffs last year, we just want to make the playoffs first," Philadelphia's Maurice Cheeks said. "Anywhere you go, you're going to have a tough match."

"It doesn't matter who you play in the playoffs as long as you're playing well," Rodgers said.

NBA

Lakers 118, Suns 116

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson's jumper from the foul line as the buzzer sounded gave the Los Angeles Lakers a 118-116 victory over the Phoenix Suns on Sunday night.

Johnson, who led the Lakers with 34 points, also had 10 rebounds and 17 assists for his second straight triple-double and 15th of the season. With 20 seconds, he took the inbounds pass and dribbled near the 3-point circle for 15 seconds before driving on Phoenix guard T.R. Dunn and stopping at the top of the key for his game-winning shot.

The Lakers broke a two-game home losing streak and moved four games ahead of the second-place Suns in the NBA's Pacific Division.

After Kevin Johnson's jumper with 1:59 to play gave the Suns a 112-108 lead, Magic Johnson and Byron Scott converted three-point plays when they were fouled on driving layups, pulling the Lakers into a 114-114 tie with 1:25 to play.

Phoenix's Dan Majerle missed a 3-point shot and the Lakers regained the lead 116-114 on Scott's jumper with 56 seconds left. But Eddie Johnson, who led the Suns with 29 points, made a jumper with 20 seconds left to tie the game for the final time.

The Suns trailed by as many as 13 points early in the third period before they trimmed the Lakers' lead to 87-82 entering the fourth quarter.

"I'm really, really thrilled. For the past two years, I've been struggling with my confidence, wondering if I'd ever win again," he said.

It was only the second professional victory for Simpson in a career that began in 1977. He won the Southern Open in 1985.

The tournament was played over the 7,106-yard, par-72 course at English Turn. It was the inaugural professional event at the course designed by Jack Nicklaus.

Simpson went into the day a stroke behind Norman, who shot 72 on Sunday, while Sutton had a 70. Each earned $66,000 for second place.

After 66 holes, Simpson and Norman were tied at 13 under par.

Simpson took the lead for good with an 8-foot birdie putt on 13 and made it a 2-stroke lead with a birdie putt on 15.

Simpson bogeyed No. 17, but so did Norman.

"I guess fate determined that Greg Norman was not going to win this tournament, and thst's that," Norman said.

Norman had a 35-foot putt for an eagle on No. 15, but that rolled three feet past the hole, and he missed the second putt as well before tapping in for par.

Hillin places 15th in Pontiac 400

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Rusty Wallace has the formula for winning down almost to perfection.

The hard-charging driver somehow survives trouble in the early going, stays with the leaders until late in the race, then uses a final caution period and a fresh set of tires as a launching pad to victory.

He won Sunday's Pontiac 400 at Richmond International Raceway that way — just as he did a race earlier this season at Rockingham, N.C.

In each of those victories, it was Alan Kulwicki who gave up the lead to Wallace and wound up second.

"If it wasn't for that (last) caution flag, Alan would have won the race," Wallace said. "The way his car was set up, his tires were real good after 15 or 20 laps.

"Alan was just unfortunate he had a car that wouldn't run fast in the first 10 or 12 laps and I had a car that did," Wallace added. "That's the way it goes."

Kulwicki survived a blown tire and spin on lap 188 of the 300-mile, 400-lap race, as well as two stop-and-go penalties for running a stop sign at the end of pit road during the ensuing caution period.

He took control of the race on lap 267 and led for the next 104 trips around the three-quarter-mile, D-shaped oval, building a margin of about 10 seconds over Wallace. Then Michael Waltrip scraped the wall in turn four, leaving debris on the track and bringing out a caution flag.

That brought Wallace back to the front, but the tenacious Kulwicki was leading again when the last of 12 caution periods in the race began on lap 380 after Dick Trickle blew an engine and spun in turn two.

Kulwicki managed to get past Earnhardt on lap 387, but Wallace drove his Pontiac Grand Prix across the finish line .41 seconds ahead of Kulwicki's Ford Thunderbird.

"We came back to the point that eventually we were the fastest car," the frustrated Kulwicki said. "It looked like we had the race won, and then we had all those yellows.

"I used to be happy with second, and that was a good run for us, but we had this race won. ... The breaks just didn't go our way."

accusations. Sources have said the investigation includes accusations that Rose bet on baseball games.

If Rose is found to have bet on baseball games, he could be suspended for a year. Proof of betting on Reds games could bring a lifetime ban.

Asked about the allegations he bet on baseball, Rose said, "I'm not saying anything about that. I'll have my chance to talk. Now my best comment is 'no comment' because no comment can help me right now."

Rose, in his first interview about the substance of the allegations, questioned the credibility of sources behind the Sports Illustrated story last week that linked him to gambling.

"They talked with four guys: two of them go to jail, the other says he's a bookie, and the other one's my friend; they didn't say nothing about him," Rose said.

During the interview Saturday at the Reds' offices, Rose also said:

- That it's "ridiculous" to say he made gestures related to making baseball bets from the dugout at Riverfront Stadium, as alleged by an SI source.
- That all the taxes have been paid on a Pik-Six ticket that has been mentioned in news reports as part of baseball's investigation.
- That he doesn't know whether an alleged bookie has any betting slips with his name on them.
- That he has "no idea" of the basis for reports that he has had gambling debts exceeding $500,000.

Sports Illustrated described Ron Peters, a southwest Ohio restaurant owner, as Rose's "principle bookmaker." Asked whether Peters was his principle bookmaker, Rose said, "Not mine."

The Dayton Daily News reported last week that investigators found betting slips that led them to Rose at Peters' restaurant. Asked whether Peters had betting slips naming him, Rose said, "I don't know what anybody's got."

Sports Illustrated also quoted an unidentified source as saying that while in the dugout at Riverfront Stadium, Rose exchanged signals somehow relating to baseball betting with Paul Janszen, a bodybuilder friend now serving a six-month sentence in a Cincinnati halfway house for tax evasion.

"That's ridiculous even to ask me a question like that," Rose said. "It's totally ridiculous."

TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will be spiritually and emotionally enriched by the actions of a friend or family member. The struggle to get your work done will lessen if you develop a better plan. Get organized! You may have to stretch yourself to the limit in September and October, but the prize will be worth the effort. Once you show higher-ups your creative side, you will be liberated from boring chores.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: bandleader Paul Whiteman, actor Ken Howard, beer magnate August Anheuser Busch Jr., football's Joe Fortunato, politician Edmund Muskie.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look forward to brighter days for a business partnership. A fortunate gamble could pay off. Use the utmost discretion with any kind of legal contract or financial transaction. Avoid telegraphing your punches.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You make real progress on the work front but may have some difficulty with a close relationship. Seek experts' help. Return to the basics and get back into shape. Change your eating habits.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You feel re-energized as you plunge into your chores. New rewards will include additional power, prestige and money. A personal relationship benefits from more nurturing. Offer encouragement, not criticism.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An inside tip clues you in to a great financial deal. Check all the details before making a commitment. Your reputation could be on the line. Cut expenses wherever you can.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Start the day in high spirits and good things will come your way. An unexpected check or windfall gives you cause for celebration. Better concentrate on saving instead of spending now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not become completely separated from your environment, but do take a breather to collect yourself. Be firm with the opposition and a struggle will end. Friends are supportive. Return the favor.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your charm wins you a new friend, but it will not solve a communication mixup with an authority figure. Be specific and logical in all your dealings. Do not fret over the impossible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go ahead and be adventurous! You will find exciting new vistas. You are given something valuable in return for a good deed. Promise to improve and loved one will be affectionate again.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow your instincts — they are right on target. Movement and change are good for both business and romance. Stop going around in circles. Get rid of excess emotional baggage and push forward!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A financial situation may not be as sound as you had hoped. Resist an urge to overindulge. Stick to your diet and exercise regimen. Someone who has ignored you in the past is attentive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Confidential information will help you improve a work or domestic situation that has been too confining. Act like a professional at work. Keep your personal affairs strictly private and in the background.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Reduce your workload by enlisting your associates' cooperation. Shopping trips can be fun. Buy something a little daring or trendy and you will attract admiring glances. Romance enjoys highly favorable influences.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠53 ♡8764 ◇AK5 ♣Q762
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—Rarely should you bypass a four-card major in favor of one no trump no matter how weak the suit. A response of one heart promises nothing about suit quality. It simply says that you have four hearts and at least 6 points. Bid one heart.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠83 ♡AK65 ◇72 ♣KJ762
Partner opens the bidding with three spades. What action do you take?
A.—Not vulnerable, partner promises only six tricks for his three-level preempt. Your hand rates to produce a maximum of three tricks for partner—not enough for game. Pass, and hope he makes it.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J83 ♡Q6 ◇AQ762 ♣KJ5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

A.—Your first task is to describe your hand, which is a balanced minimum. The only way to do that is to rebid one no trump. Don't worry about the lack of a sure spade stopper. To rebid two diamonds in this sequence requires a six-card suit.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Void ♡AJ95 ◇AK7652 ♣K103
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Nothing has happened to improve your hand—indeed, it has progressively worsened as the auction evolved. There is no longer any reason to presume you can make a slam, or to think you have a better spot than three no trump. Pass.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠9752 ♡K762 ◇AJ9 ♣105
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—If partner has a maximum no trump opening, you could have a game—either in no trump or a major. The way to investigate is to use the Stayman Convention—bid two clubs. If partner shows a major, raise to the three-level to invite game. If he denies a major with two diamonds, bid two no trump.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠105 ♡K762 ◇A93 ♣9752
Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
A.—There is no safe action. While the hand might play better in hearts if partner has a four-card suit, you can't afford to investigate—you would be stranded high and dry should partner rebid two diamonds or two spades. Pass. You are too weak to invite game, but you should have enough for him to coast home at one no trump.

McNichol says she quit working because of emotional breakdown

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Kristy McNichol refused to continue working on the movie "Just the Way You Are" in 1982 and rumors flew that she was a drug addict, an alcoholic or a manic depressive.

She denies the rumors, telling this week's People magazine that it was an emotional breakdown that caused her to leave the set.

McNichol

"I was totally out of control," said McNichol, 26. "I wanted to please everybody all the time...I was making my mom happy. And then I found out later that wasn't making me happy," she said. A friend took her to a psychiatrist who advised her not to go on with the movie, her eighth in six years. She finished the movie a year later.

Once a star on the TV series "Family," McNichol is back in prime time starring in NBC's "Empty Nest."

She said she finally is in control of her life. "Now I feel like I'm this mountain of strength," she said. "Now I think, 'This is the time for me.'"

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Keith Whitley says he doesn't remember when he wanted to be anything but a country singer.

"I grew up listening to my mother's collection of Hank Williams, George Jones and Marty Robbins records," said the Sandyhook, Ky., native.

Whitley was 13 when he met another aspiring Kentucky bluegrass musician, Ricky Skaggs, at a fiddlers' convention in Ezell, Ky. Skaggs joined Whitley's band, the East Kentucky Mountain Boys.

"I laid my country music aside for quite a while...because bluegrass audiences didn't care to hear it. But it just kept haunting me," Whitley said.

Whitley in 1972 formed the New Tradition, later known as the Country Store. In 1978, he teamed with J.D. Crowe and the New South.

Whitley's hit list includes "Don't Close Your Eyes," "Homecoming '63," "Ten Feet Away," and "I'm No Stranger to the Rain."

Atwater

"Mama always told me don't attack unarmed people — especially in a battle of wits," he told the more than 1,000 people at Saturday night's event.

Atwater also poked fun at himself. He said he was glad to be back in Charleston, noting he spent the first five years of his life there.

"I learned from George Bush that the more places you call home, the more votes you get," he said.

Gov. Carroll Campbell said, "I often wondered what Lee would be when he grew up. I'm still wondering."

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Gov. Gaston Caperton says he couldn't read a comic book when he was growing up because he suffered from dyslexia, a disability that jumbles letters and numbers in a person's mind.

"I was smart enough that I was able to fool my way through for a while," Caperton said in an interview. "I remembered when all the other kids in the neighborhood would read the funny books and I couldn't. I just sort of looked at the pictures."

Eventually, his parents caught on and began an extensive catch-up program for him. By the time he reached high school, the problem was under control, he said.

Caperton, 49, is an avid reader who loves history books and fiction. He's also a strong backer of remedial education.

"It's so important to fund those programs in the early years. If we can catch it then, the kids will have a chance later on," he said.

MCorp files for Chapter 11

Bishop

DALLAS (AP) — MCorp will file for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code because of involuntary bankruptcy petitions filed against it last week by three creditors, a company official announced today.

"MCorp deeply regrets that those noteholders ignored our pleas not to take premature and unnecessary action," Gene H. Bishop, MCorp's chairman and chief executive officer, said in a prepared statement.

Bishop said he hoped the action "by a very small number of noteholders" seeking to force MCorp to liquidate its holdings would not disrupt or interfere with ongoing discussions by prospective investors with the FDIC on the terms of a comprehensive recapitalization plan.

Under federal bankruptcy law, the MBanks cannot be made subject to a bankruptcy petition, and MCorp's Chapter 11 filing would supersede the Chapter 7 petition.

Neither the bankruptcy petitions nor the company's planned conversion of them to a voluntary Chapter 11 should affect the business of the bank, Bishop emphasized.

"We want all of the depositors, customers, employees and suppliers of MBanks to know that our 86 offices will remain open for business as usual," Bishop said.

MCorp spokesman George A. McCane said it learned Friday that the involuntary bankruptcy petitions had been filed.

"We had not received with the petitions at the time, and still haven't," McCane said.

Although announcing that the Texas-bassed financial services company will convert the filings to a voluntary Chapter 11, McCane said, "that does not mean that the Chapter 11 filing has occurred or will occur today. We have not indicated the timing. We have just said we will convert the filing."

Since last fall, Bishop said, MCorp representatives met several times with noteholders and urged them not to take action prematurely despite the moratorium on payment of principal and interst on borrowed money while the company proceeded with efforts to recapitalize.

The Wall Street Journal identified the three bondholders who filed the Chapter 7 petitions as S.N. Phelps & Co., a Greenwich, Conn., bond broker that claims to hold $2 million principal amount in MCorp debentures; and Janice M. Eberhardt and Carol R. James, each of whom claims to hold $5,000 in debentures.

I. Walton Bader, an attorney for the holders, told the Journal his clients decided to file for liquidation under Chapter 7 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code for fear that MCorp would be forced to pump its holding company assets into the failing banks, thereby putting the money out of reach of creditors.

The Journal quoted analysts as saying MCorp's move complicates the FDIC's efforts to arrange a sale of MCorp.

The FDIC has the authority to sell or otherwise dispose of insolvent banks once they have been closed by the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency, but a bankruptcy filing would make any plan to sell the company subject to a bankruptcy judge's approval.

Wal-Mart empire still spreading

WAXAHACHIE, Texas (AP) — Maybe it's the immaculate rows of discounted shampoo and paper towels, or the doorside hand-pumping "people greeters" who make visitors feel like they've entered a sprawling mom-and-pop corner store.

If the 97,000-square foot Waxahachie Wal-Mart is any indication of the discount chain's operations in 26 states, it's not hard to see why Wal-Mart Stores Inc. has staked a claim as the country's dominant retailer, pleasing customers and sending nervous ripples into the boardrooms of competitors.

"As for Wal-Mart becoming a household word, we never think about things like that," David Glass, president and chief operating officer, said in a telephone interview from company headquarters in Bentonville, Ark. "What we want is for customers in our territories to think of us fondly."

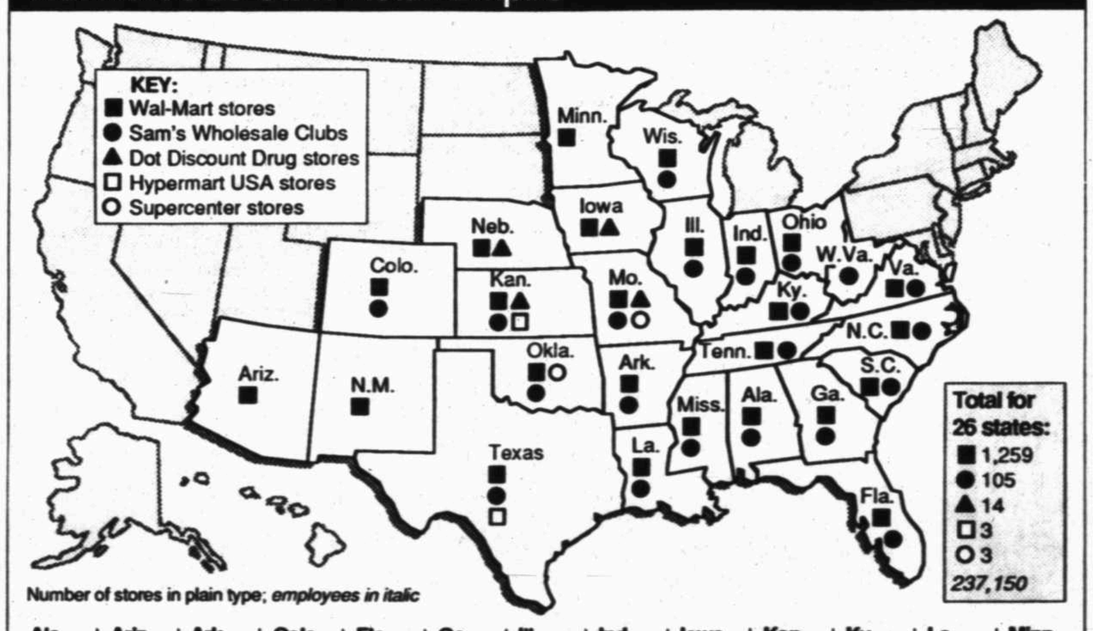

Local shopkeepers as well as giants like Sears, Roebuck and Co. are watching Wal-Marts spurt like weeds and wondering whether some of their business could be choked by a rival that religiously pursues its corporate strategy with the fervor of a rural evangelist.

Wal-Mart took root when Sam Walton and his brother Bud founded the first Wal-Mart Discount City in Rogers, Ark. in 1962.

Under Sam Walton, the company expanded in the 1970s and 1980s, making his family worth billions and vaulting Wal-Mart to the third-biggest U.S. retailer behind No.1 Sears and second-ranked K mart Corp.

Alaskan spill may increase oil prices

HOUSTON (AP) — Oil traders and analysts predict crude oil prices will rise sharply after last week's closing of an Alaskan harbor to contain a massive oil spill that has cut U.S. oil supplies by a quarter.

"We ought to get a real good jump in the market," said Dale Steffes, a Houston energy analyst. "Prices could go up $1 to $2 a barrel temporarily."

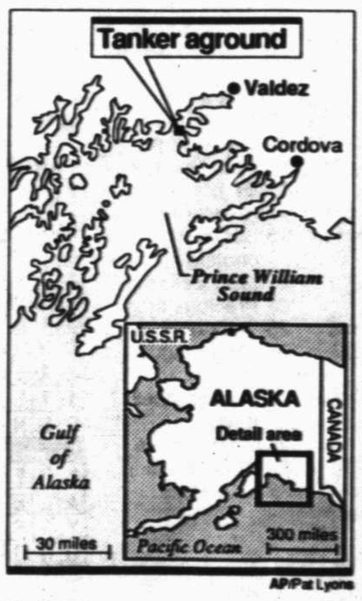

The Valdez, Alaska, harbor was closed Friday after 240,000 barrels of oil spilled from an Exxon Shipping Co. oil tanker that ran aground on a reef south of the port city. It is being called the worst oil spill in U.S. history.

Valdez is the only terminal that handles crude oil produced on the North Slope of Alaska, the source of more than 25 percent of U.S. production.

The volume of Alaskan crude that has been temporarily disrupted is more than 3½ times the amount of North Sea production shut in during recent months because of a series of accidents.

On Thursday, the last day of trading before the Easter weekend, West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude for immediate delivery, slipped a penny to close at $20.04 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Tool orders jump

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Orders for American-made machine tools climbed 22.3 percent in February from the January level, according to a report scheduled to be released Monday by the industry's trade association.

The increase was a result of rising demand domestically and continued strength in the export market, analysts said.

Machine tool makers said that they are now seeing some benefits from a long period in which their customers had been seeking price estimates for new projects and plant modernizations.

Domestic orders for American-made machine tools were up 23.1 percent in February, according to the Association for Manufacturing Technology.

Foreign orders were up 16.5 percent from January's level. Total orders rose to $230.8 million, the association said.

Compared with February of last year, however, machine tool orders were down 5.3 percent. For the first two months of this year, the level of new orders declined 13.8 percent, the monthly report stated.

Machine tools are power-driven devices that cut or shape metal parts used in everything from appliances to vehicles. Economists consider their sales and their level of orders to be important indicators of capital spending patterns by makers of large products like automobiles and aircraft.

The level of new orders has gyrated in the last few months. The decline in January orders, the association said, was partly the result of manufacturers' decisions to defer orders until the Bush administration's economic policies were better known.

Shipments of machine tools in February doubled from the January level. Shipment levels increased 37.2 percent from the level of February of last year.

"Although we would all hope for never-ending order growth, the fact is that machine orders, on a month-to-month basis, are volitile," said Albert W. Moore, president of the association.

Eastern claims illegal strike; hires new pilots

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines embarked today on a two-pronged attempt to get its planes airborne after much of the strikebound carrier's fleet sat idle over the traditionally busy and profitable Easter weekend.

The Miami-based airline was planning to argue in federal court today that its 3,600 pilots have been engaging in an illegal strike and should be ordered back to work.

The airline also planned to start 40 to 50 newly hired replacement pilots on a six-week training course this morning, company spokeswoman Karen Ceremsak said.

Routes from the airline's Miami hub to the Northeast and from Florida to the Caribbean were the most heavily traveled on Easters past, "and of course they're not running them now," Ms. Ceremsak said. The airline has been operating less than 10 percent of its daily pre-strike schedule of 1,040 flights.

Under an order Friday from the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, U.S. District Judge Edward Davis scheduled hearings in Miami to determine whether the 3-week-old walkout by all but about 200 of Eastern's pilots is a sympathy strike, as the pilots claim, or is a separate strike seeking its own aims, as Eastern management contends.

Eastern asked a panel from the appeals court, meeting last week in Tallahassee, to overturn Davis' earlier ruling that let the Air Line Pilots Association honor picket lines set up March 4 by the Machinist union.

ALPA claims the Railway Labor Act gives its members the right to show sympathy for the striking Machinists. The appeals court agreed, but added that "a claim of a sympathy strike cannot be used as a pre-

Higher air fares expected

HOUSTON (AP) — Summer travelers can expect to see higher air fares and more restrictions for their vacations this year as Eastern Airlines remains on the brink of collapse and the country moves into its busiest flying season of the year.

Airline officials insist bargains are still available provided the traveler plans at least two weeks ahead, is agreeable to stops along the way, and will travel at off-peak times. But there could be a significant sting for business travelers who must make last-minute travel arrangements.

"Airlines are getting so sophisticated in their yield management programs that they can go into their computer system and tell a week in

From Staff Reports

Oil prices began the week on a high note, with the contract for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate surging 49 cents to stand at $20.64 at mid-morning on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The contract had entered the long Easter week-end on a high note, gaining 11 cents to close at $20.15 a barrel Thursday.

The Wall Street Journal reports that energy analysts will be watching this week's meeting of the eight-member monitoring committee of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. The Journal said members are expected to keep the meeting brief and avoid any action that would undermine the market's current bullish tones.

In addition, analysts have noted that oil demand apparently is climbing faster than expected, helping fuel the recent $5-a-barrel surge in prices.

Dollar higher against Japanese yen

The dollar closed at 132.30 yen, up 1.03 yen from last Friday's close. The U.S. currency opened at 131.68 yen and moved in a range of 131.67-132.30 yen.

The dollar opened slightly higher than last Friday's close of 131.27 yen, but active buying of the dollar by insurance companies pushed it further, currency dealers said.

They attributed the dollar's bullishness to the market's reduced wariness toward rising interest rates.

"There seem to be no strong incentive to sell the dollar right now," said Masato Sanjo, a dealer at the Tokyo office of Manufacture Hanover Trust. "The bullish dollar appears to have become more like a long-term trend."

The Nikkei Stock Average of 225 selected issues, a 20.14-point loser last Friday, shed another 56.12 points, or 0.18 percent, to close at 31,512.40.

On the stock market, dealers said the anticipation of the introduction of the capital-gain tax starting April 1 led to heavy sale of shares, resulting in a lower Nikkei index.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Continental acts to gain Eastern passengers

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines has moved swiftly to capture some of the business abandoned by strikebound sister carrier Eastern Airlines, but the company disputes union claims that its moves are part of a master plan to grow at Eastern's expense.

Amid its own labor problems — flight attendants on Friday ended a four-day walkout that had little impact on service — Continental has added flights on routes vacated by Eastern, taken over Eastern gates at some airports and waged an aggressive ad campaign to attract more East Coast passengers.

Industry observers say the Houston-based airline has gained passengers and revenue, but no more so than other competitors since Eastern virtually shut down after the March 4 strike by its Machinists union members and subsequent walkouts by pilots and flight attendants.

Bush foreign debt plan faces first test

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration's plan to relieve the staggering Third World debt burden faces its first big test this week when Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady tries to sell the proposal to finance ministers from around the world.

The sales talk will come at the spring meeting of the 151-nation International Monetary Fund and World Bank and at a separate strategy session attended by officials from the seven largest industrial countries.

The Brady plan is being viewed as a watershed for the 7-year debt crisis, which has at various times threatened financial calamity for major U.S. banks and turned Latin America into a political time bomb as struggling democracies in the region tried to cope with growing debt repayments.

IBM warns employees of flying overseas

LONDON (AP) — IBM's decision to advise employees to stay off U.S. airlines because of a hijack warning will be examined very carefully by other companies, the head of Britain's largest business organization said.

International Business Machines Corp. said Friday it had notified employees to avoid traveling on U.S. air carriers from Europe and the Middle East until the end of April because of a U.S. Federal Aviation Administration warning of a possible hijacking in Europe.

FTC going after takeover-artist brothers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission is pushing for the forfeiture of an estimated $75 million in profits made by brothers Steven and Mitchell Rales in their unsuccessful drive to acquire Interco, Inc., last year, according to published reports.

Accounts in The Washington Post and FTC: Watch, a private newsletter, said three of the commission's five members have asked the Justice Department to take the two Washington entrepreneurs to court over their alleged failure to comply with merger notification requirements.

The Post said the three commissioners hope to make an example of the Raleses in a bid to keep secret takeover artists frmom thumbing their noses at the comparatively paltry civil fines which the FTC is empowered to level by itself.

Two agencies to review computer security

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Security Agency and a research arm of the Commerce Department have reached an agreement aimed at strengthening protection of sensitive information handled by thousands of federal government computers.

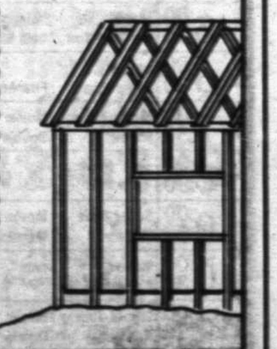

The memorandum of understanding was signed late last week by the NSA's director, Vice Adm. W.O. Studeman, and Raymond G. Kammer, acting director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology.

Eastern said if Davis finds that ALPA members stayed off the job primarily to pursue their own contract objectives, "the court would be expected to order them back to work."

The pilots union also continued to downplay Eastern's efforts to hire replacement pilots, saying there simply aren't enough pilots to fill available airline slots, especially at Eastern and Continential Airlines, which are operated by Frank Lorenzo's Houston-based Texas Air Corp.

"Young pilots know better than to go to work for Frank Lorenzo," said Capt. Jack Saux, a Delta Airlines pilot and chairman of ALPA's education committee. Saux said in a news release that he and other ALPA members have been meeting with pilots from regional airlines and corporations as well as student pilots.

advance how many seats they'll sell for that flight," said Tina Ruffeno, president of the Texas Passenger Travel Association in Houston.

"Then they'll take out all the cheap or discounted seats and force the corporate traveler to pay it or travel on a less-traveled flight they're trying to fill up. And two days before that highly traveled flight leaves, they'll go back into the system and see they haven't sold as many seats as they wanted and discount the fare again," she said.

Before the 1978 Airline Deregulation Act began to phase out government involvement in the airline industry, the cost of an empty seat was passed on to all the other passengers, said David Swierenga, assistant vice president for the Air Transport Association, which represents the country's largest airlines.

Under the "yield management" system now in use, air carriers continually switch prices based on the number of booked passengers. Carriers reserve a few seats for the last-minute flier at a higher price and reward passengers who buy tickets in advance with lower fares. The practice has created super-low discount fares and skyrocketing standard fares.

"It just plain stinks," Dan Smith, spokesman for the International Air Passenger Association in Dallas, told the Houston Post. "The prices assigned to each seat can change on a daily basis."

It's also common for customers to be quoted two different prices within a day.

The losers in this game of supply and demand are corporate and emergency travelers who don't have the luxury of planning their trips weeks in advance or the flexibility to comply with fare restrictions, industry observers say.

"The business traveler is in an 'I gotcha,'" Ms. Ruffeno said. "They're frustrated because they don't have a lot of choice. The airlines know that and take advantage of it by jacking up the price."

"I try to plan in advance to keep the fares low," said Willie Brown of Reston, Va. "Yet sometimes a customer says, 'Be here tomorrow,' and you have got to go. It's cheaper to fly to Hong Kong. I flew there, round trip, for $729."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Federal gift, estate tax rules complicated

By BILL DOYLE

Q. You have explained that a person can make annual gifts of $10,000 — $20,000 when a husband and wife make the gifts — in money, stocks, property or anything else to "each of as many people as your generosity allows" without filing federal gift tax returns.

Well, when I read about someone hitting a state lottery, the story often quotes the lucky winner as saying something such as, "I'll pay off my children's mortgages."

For most mortgages, that's more than $10,000 or $20,000. How can it be done?

Doyle

A. The simple way would be to make gifts over a period of years. If you become a fortunate lottery multimillionaire, you could give $10,000 annually to each of your children and another $10,000 to each son-in-law or daughter-in-law. Your husband or wife could do the same thing. Unless it's a huge mortgage, $40,000 a year would pay it off in reasonably short order.

You could make gifts larger than the $10,000 per recipient "annual exclusions," but you would be required to file federal gift tax returns. However, unless you give away a tremendous amount, you would not have to pay federal gift tax.

The amounts of gifts exceeding the annual exclusions and dutifully reported on gift tax returns reduce the estate you can leave free of federal estate tax. If you die without having made such gifts, $600,000 of your estate escapes that tax. But if you have logged in, say, $100,000 of such gifts, the estate tax bite will start at $500,000.

One last point. A husband can leave to his wife and a wife can leave to her husband unlimited amounts, free of federal estate tax.

The rules on federal gift tax and federal estate tax are intertwined in just about the most complicated arrangement ever devised by our lawgivers at Endsville-on-the-Potomac.

Q. Suppose I win a lottery this year but I do not present my ticket and collect any money until next year. Is income tax considered to be incurred in 1989 or 1990?

A. A spokesman at the Internal Revenue Service's Washington headquarters says that, although there is no specific rule on the oddball subject you mention, lucky you would owe 1989 federal income tax on your lottery prize.

Under the "theory of constructive receipt," that money you dream about winning would belong to you the very day it became available for you to collect. Delaying collection would not postpone your tax obligation.

And I must say that waiting to claim the money would be a dumb thing. Besides running the risk that your winning ticket might be lost or stolen, you would lose the use of the lottery prize — and the interest it could earn — until you collect.

Q. If a person in the process of getting a divorce wins a lottery, would that person be able to keep it secret and wait until after the divorce is final to claim the prize, so as not to include the winnings as earnings during the marriage?

A. That could be done. Most state lotteries give winners periods of time, such as six months or a year, to claim prizes.

As a young reporter covering courts, I witnessed a lot of attempts — some successful, some not — at hiding assets during divorce proceedings. And I also saw some former spouses, who had pleaded poverty, hauled back into court when they showed obvious wealth after divorces were final. Judges I knew took dim views of fibbing about wealth.

Q. We give our sons, their wives and their children gifts of money. Can we deduct these gifts on our income tax return, without them paying tax?

A. Nope. You get no income tax deduction for gifts to individuals. The fortunate recipients pay no income tax on those gifts.

Car sales up slightly in 1988

In 1988, U.S. retail sales of passenger cars rose to 7.53 million, up from 7.08 million in 1987. Imported cars accounted from about 30 percent of all autos sold in the U.S. in 1988.

Growth plan positions American for the 90s

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — It was just six years ago when American Airlines Inc. put together its five-year plan to take the air carrier into the future.

But after American's order last week for 150 Fokker jets, the architect of the plan isn't concerned that things have run a little behind schedule.

"These transactions complete the task of positioning American for the 1990s," Robert L. Crandall, American's chairman, president and chief executive officer, told The Dallas Morning News.

Since the plan took off in 1983, the Fort Worth-based airline has doubled the number of passengers it carries, doubled its fleet, doubled its daily departures, tripled its operating profit and nearly doubled its payroll.

"We believe that growth is not only desirable, but absolutely necessary," said Donald J. Carty, American's senior vice president of finance and planning. "We have a window of opportunity that over the next few years will gradually begin to close.

"We must grow now as fast as we can before that window shuts," he told The Morning News.

The original growth plan was born in the time of deregulation when the established carriers, such as American, were fighting to hold on against the threat of the low-fare, low-cost, competition.

During 1980-1982, when the fare wars raged and air travel was down because of the recession, American managed a $47.4 million profit in 1981 in between losses totaling $95.4 million in 1980 and 1982.

While competitors preached growth by acquisition, Crandall decided American should build from within, which involved American lowering its labor costs.

Currently, American has 142.5 employees for every airplane in its fleet, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported. Assuming the ratio remains constant, American could have as many as 111,435 employees by 1994.

Instead of seeking wage concessions from its workforce, American initiated a two-tier wage scale in which new employees were hired at lower rates than existing employees to lower the unit costs.

Although the pay system caused friction between management and labor, the air carrier was poised to implement the other parts of its plan.

— the key Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries crude from the Middle East — dropped 4 cents to $16.25 a barrel. Britain's widely traded North Sea Brent crude lost 19 cents to close at $19.58 a barrel.

Most Alaskan crude goes to West coast refineries, which will be scambling for supplies, said Sam F. Willson Jr., senior vice president of the Coastal Corp. He expects prices to move higher immediately and to climb sharply if the harbor remains closed past the middle of the week.

"If it is down all next week, it is going to drive prices up quite a bit. There is nothing else available to take the place of Alaskan North Slope crude for those West Coast refineries," Willson told the Houston Chronicle.

Alaskan North Slope production is medium-gravity, sour crude. California crudes also are sour, or high-sulfur, but they are much heavier and would have to be blended with a lighter crude such as West Texas Intermediate before they could be substituted for Alaskan North Slope oil refining.

Willson said adequate volumes of oil are available to replace the disrupted Alaskan production, but delivery could take as much as a month.

"Refiners might be able to get some sour crudes supplies from the Gulf of Mexico area, but it would take up to 10 days to ship it to California," he said. "A little might be available from Singapore, but you are looking at 20 days for delivery. The best substitutes are crudes from Oman and Dubai on the Persian Gulf, and they will take at least 25 to 30 days to arrive."

At 70, Sam Walton remains involved. He has retained the title of chairman although the company's day-to-day operations are handled by Glass, 53.

A visitor to a Wal-Mart immediately senses workers are aiming to foster a friendly image, as though trying to preserve the charm historically associated with the neighborhood shops that many retail chains now threaten.

When customers step inside an official greeter, sometimes in the form of a hand-clasping retiree, ushers them in, offering advice or just a "how-do-you-do."

Regular Wal-Mart stores attempt to provide one-stop shopping for consumers, stocking basic neccesities ranging from shoes and clothes to televisions and outdoor grills.

Three Wal-Mart supercenters and three hypermarts, marketing experiments that are attracting hordes of customers, offer a wider array of merchandise, such as full grocery lines.

Within the Wal-Mart in Waxahachie, a community about 25 miles south of Dallas, everything appears tidy with merchandise in its proper place, typical of Wal-Marts elsewhere.

Workers known as "associates" in the corporate patois, patrol the floor, retrieving hangers, unwanted items and the clutter that bargain-hunters sometimes leave behind.

One of Waxahachie's assistant managers, Millie Wall, says Wal-Mart encourages associates to be helpful. "It might be beyond what other discount stores do but I don't think it's beyond Wal-Mart," she says.

What really draws customers, though, is price.

"You can find the same stuff at Wal-Mart that you can find at other stores but cheaper," says Wal-Mart regular Cheryl Starks while lunching with three of her four children at a McDonald's near the Wal-Mart in the east Texas town of Gilmer. "The clothes we have on came from Wal-Mart, the shoes we have on came from Wal-Mart."

In the Wal-Mart she frequents, a 16 ounce bottle of Suave balsam and protein shampoo was selling for $1.08 while the supermarket a few doors away in the same mall offered the same for $1.69. Four rolls of Charmin toilet tissue went for 96 cents in Wal-Mart vs. $1.45 at the supermarket. Bounty designer kitchen towels were 78 cents in Wal-Mart and $1.07 in the store nearby.

Wal-Mart's flag-waving patriotism also seems to have struck a responsive chord in the small towns and cities in the heartland, where the chain has multiplied. Anecdotal evidence suggests the company has won customers through publicity programs such as its "Buy American" pitch.

If there's one big criticism, it's that local merchants — especially small shops that can't buy in the volume that allows Wal-Mart to keep prices low — get blown away when Wal-Marts move in.

Kenneth E. Stone, an economics professor at Iowa State University, looked into the impact of Wal-Marts after chambers of commerce and business people expressed concern about the consequences of new Wal-Marts in their areas.

Stone's conclusions were mixed. Retail trade will expand, boosting business for some local merchants but causing others to lose sales, he found.

The bottom line, Stone's study shows, is that a strategy should be developed "for existing merchants so that they may better co-exist in a Wal-Mart environment."

Glass concedes Wal-Marts can make big economic waves. He says some businesses may flee from their competitive might, but overall, the chain tends to benefit areas by drawing customers to many stores.

"In the aggregate, I would argue that we have a good impact on a community by making it a trade center, a place where people come to shop," he says.

The past decade is the best evidence of Wal-Mart's phenomenal growth. As of Jan. 31, the company ran 1,259 Wal-Mart stores, 105 Sam's Wholesale Clubs — outlets for shoppers buying in bulk — and about two dozen other retail operations. At the start of 1979, Wal-Mart ran 276 stores.

This year, the company plans to open 155 Wal-Marts and 20 wholesale clubs. The opening of new stores has helped maintain momentum in sales growth, which was 29 percent in 1988 when sales rose to $20.65 billion from $15.96 billion.

Earnings last year totaled $837 million, or $1.48 a share, vs. $628 million or $1.11 a share a year earlier.

Steel prices expected to rise 5 percent

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Steel prices are scheduled to increase next month in response to higher costs for metals used in making steel.

The nation's leading steel makers will raise prices an average of about 5 percent.

The increases will affect a variety of products — from rails used in laying track, which will increase 33 percent, to stainless steel, which will climb about 10 percent.

But the biggest increases will mainly affect the flat-rolled steel products used in appliances and automobiles.

Automobile manufacturers buy steel on negotiated, long-term contracts and will not be directly affected. But companies that make steel products for the auto industry, like those that stamp out hoods and fenders, will be paying higher prices.

Touching, cuddling keeps babies in contact with life

By JANE CLIFFORD
Copley News Service

A 3-month-old girl is hooked to machines that perform functions her body will never be able to do on its own. She protests the whole scene the only way she can. By crying. Loudly.

Her pacifier has gotten away from her, but for the moment the two nurses in the room, part of University of California, San Diego, Medical Center's Infant Special Care Unit, are busy with two other, even more-demanding babies.

A visitor walks over to the crib and reaches down to stroke the baby's face. The little girl locks her bright brown eyes on the face above her and immediately stops crying.

The human touch. There's nothing like it.

Maybe it is a hand on your hand, a back rub, a hug. Or maybe it's a slap, a shove. Whatever it is, touch tells you something.

"Touch is the way a baby knows someone is there," explains pediatrician T. Berry Brazelton, a clinical professor at Harvard University and a renowned expert on infant and child development. "Touch has become a critical form of communication."

THE IMPORTANCE of touch in a baby's life is well documented. Studies have shown that many institutionalized babies — warehoused and waiting for adoption or severely handicapped and destined to grow up in special "homes" — will not thrive, and sometimes even die, no matter how well cared for they are.

The experts, like Brazelton, know why. They say babies must be nurtured, stimulated. In a word, touched. Closeness, eye contact and cuddling, especially from mothers, are considered the most powerful stimulants in a new life.

Most times, things progress just the way they're supposed to. Babies are born healthy and mothers do their mothering.

But for those born too sick or too soon, home is a metal hospital crib and mother is a series of surrogates working eight-hour shifts. A baby's every physical need is met with intensive care, but emotional attachments are often incomplete.

Try as they might, those on staff in UCSD's second-floor sanctuary can't match the devotion and attention of doting parents. There aren't enough nurses, nowhere near enough time.

Martha Logue is quick to admit that. She and the other registered nurses in the special care unit each are responsible for three infants at a time. The situation concerned her.

But she could go to others on the hospital staff, explain the problem and look for a solution.

THE RESULT of those efforts is the "Cuddler Program," a pilot project for its first year and, now, a full-fledged program using volunteers to take some of the load off nurses.

Betty McFerran was one of nine "cuddlers" who signed on in the beginning. She has strong reasons for being involved. She has seven children of her own and she was trained as a nurse.

Now, she's also grandmother of 21, and it was her experience with one of them that got her thinking about a program like the one at UCSD. "I have a grandson who was born with a birth defect." And a daughter who needed her.

CNS Graphic

McFerran spent long hours at the hospital during the two months before her grandson could go home with his parents. That was 1982. She was back often over the next couple of years for the many surgeries needed to correct his medical problems.

"I kept seeing lots of kids in that hospital who had no one to hold them," she recalls.

All the while McFerran talks, she rocks. Today, it's a newborn boy — all 3 pounds of him — cradled in the crook of her arm. With reflex action, she strokes his hair, rubs her forefinger across his cheek. He smiles in his sleep. McFerran smiles back.

She's found this rocking to be a two-way emotional street. She says she gets as much out of it as the babies do.

"Maybe it's because I had so many," she says, cocking her head and drifting back three decades in her thoughts. There were seven McFerran babies in 12 years. "I never had much time to hold my own. I could never just sit for hours and rock them."

ONCE SHE and her husband moved to San Diego and she learned of the program at UCSD, McFerran committed to a weekly two-hour round-trip drive. Every Monday she spends three or four hours doting on babies, rocking, talking to them and just letting them know they're loved. She often spends some of that time talking with new parents, terrified for their babies, and about their ability to care for them.

Logue says the initial concept was of a grandmother-type program "but I don't believe in age or sex discrimination."

So the "cuddlers," 14 of them, range in age from their 20s to their 60s. Three are men. All are carefully chosen.

"We're not looking for people who are trying to fill their maternal needs," says Logue. "Or those with 'empty-nest syndrome.' Or those who don't want to hold fussy babies. Those are the babies who need it."

There are those with lung dysfunction that makes life a real pain. When they're upset, they cry, which makes them gasp for air. Since they can't get enough to begin with, they panic, which makes them cry, which makes them gasp for air... It's a cycle that keeps them unhappy, afraid and in need of being held much of the time.

Other babies, Logue says, develop what is being recognized as "ICU psychosis." Research is beginning to show that infants who may spend up to a year in intensive-care units develop certain behaviors. Having been poked with an untold number of needles during their short lives, they may begin screaming just at the feel of an alcohol swab. Others have had so many tubes down their throats that anything coming to their mouths — including a bottle of warm milk or a pacifier — makes them recoil and cry.

"Babies have the ability to adapt to anything if they know someone cares about them," says Logue, adding that cuddlers who hold and comfort the babies really help everyone through these procedures. Often, there aren't enough volunteers to go around.

"I can tell you there are days when there are fights about who's going to get the 'cuddler' next," Logue says of the competition among the nurses on behalf of the babies.

THE FIGHTS aren't serious. The need is.

"There never used to be babies like this," she explains. "There was no equipment to take care of them. They died."

Now, high-tech medicine greatly improves the odds for babies born with life-threatening problems. But machines don't do much for the quality of the little lives saved. So Logue will keep campaigning for more "cuddlers."

She turns her head in the direction of an infant's cries. It's the dark-haired cherub in the corner crib. She's lost her pacifier again.

This time a nurse is free and carefully lifts her up, so as not to disturb tubes and cords. Together they rock back and forth. The baby nestles her head under the nurse's chin, relaxes and grows quiet once more.

The prognosis is not good for this child. But however brief her life, there are those determined she will have experienced the best of it.

Child-care tax credit won't stretch far

REBECCA McCARTHY
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — A woman here with two children and a part-time job broke into a laugh over President Bush's $1,000 tax credit proposal for working families with young children under the age of 4.

"Figuring full time for two children, that's $170 a week, so that would be six weeks of day care he's helping us out with," said Beth Lewis. "That's almost nothing. It's a joke."

National child-care professionals and child-welfare advocates agreed last week that, though the president's proposal is a good beginning, it doesn't address the problems of improving the quality and availability of the child care.

Bush has advocated allowing families making less than $13,000 annually to take a $1,000 income tax credit for each child age 4 or younger.

UNDER EXISTING law, families with sufficient income to pay federal income tax may claim a $720 tax credit (a method of lowering their federal tax bill by $720) for child-care costs incurred in order for them to keep or accept employment. The Bush proposal would allow families with a tax liability less than $1,000 to receive a refund reflecting the difference between the amount owed and the $1,000 credit.

"The strength of the Bush plan is that it's evenhanded," said Edward Zigler, director of the Bush Center in Child Development and Social Policy at Yale University. "It supports women who decide they want to stay at home, by giving everyone $1,000. It's essentially a children's allowance, something liberals have been asking for for years."

The proposal's weakness, Zigler said, "is it will be of very little use to parents who work outside the home. To say you're going to buy good care for $20 a week is ludicrous."

"It's not a child-care proposal — it's an income-support proposal providing the greatest amount of assistance to low-income families without child-care expenses," said Helen Blank, director of child care with the Children's Defense Fund in Washington, D.C. "It really doesn't expand options for low-income families, because with $1,000 a year, ... Imagine what sort of child care you can get for that."

FOR EXAMPLE, $20 a week would buy 10 hours of in-home day care from a young mother of two in North Atlanta who asked that her name not be used.

"After my second child came, it wasn't worth me working," she said. She quit her $6.80-an-hour secretarial job and began keeping the children of neighborhood friends in her home at $2 an hour, netting a weekly $190 — in cash — and not reporting her earnings as taxable income.

"Day care is worth it if you've got one child, but if you have more than that, it's not affordable, unless you've got a great job," she said. "I think $1,000 isn't very much."

The Bush proposal will affect only families holding typically low- or minimum-wage jobs. After working as a store supervisor for five years, an employee at a suburban day-care center switched jobs, she said, "because I could bring my three children here at a discounted rate. I don't know how other mothers feel, but I have friends who say that day care would take all of their paychecks. So they don't work."

The Bush proposal came on the heels of Senate action on the Act for Better Child Care Services, or ABC legislation, drafted by Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. The bill, approved by the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee with a vote of 11 to 5 on March 15, will next go to the floor for a vote.

THE ABC bill focuses on improving the quality, availability and affordability of the child-care system and setting national standards for the ratio of caregivers to infants. Rather than give tax breaks to individual families, the ABC bill would provide federal dollars to the states, which would then administer the funds as needed.

"Sen. Dodd has said on many occasions that he's not opposed to a tax credit to help lower-income people," said a Senate subcommittee member. "It's just that our bill looks at the child-care system as a whole."

Parents can overprogram children's day activities

Associated Press

Filling a child's day with activity can be too much of a good thing. With the best intentions, parents may be depriving their child of the tools needed to develop self-reliance and self-esteem, according to a psychiatrist at New York University Medical Center.

"A child whose every waking moment is planned does not learn to amuse himself or herself, something that fosters healthy feelings of self-reliance," said Dr.Richard A. Oberfield, clinical associate professor of psychiatry. "Children who live under a constant barrage of entertainments may become bored or panicky when the merry-go-round of activity is not spinning at top speed."

An article in an upcoming issue of the center's Health Letter explains that overprogramming is a relative concept; the specifics depend on the individual child and situation. In general, it refers to a daily structure that permits a child little time to decide independently what to do.

"This is a common problem for school-age children, and it is beginning to be seen in those as young as 2 and 3," Oberfield said. "The phenomenon usually fades by early adolescence, because 11- or 12-year-olds tend to assert themselves. The overprogrammed child may be among the first to want to break out, to be 'free to do nothing,' to hang out with friends, or just to be alone."

One of the dangers Oberfield observed in the excessive offering of gymnastics and music lessons, painting and dance classes, reading and other tutorials, and closely supervised parent-initiated play dates is the introduction of a competitive element that can be stressful to children. "Parents may be indicating that their children's worth depends on activities or accomplishments and that they are not loved for themselves," he asserted.

"Long-term consequences for personality development may occur," he maintained. In the short term, these children display such signs of stress as lack of energy, irritability and an inability to engage in age-appropriate activities.

"We are seeing a lot of jaded children, who feel they must have something new to interest or excite them," Oberfield said. Some children exhibit a short attention span and passivity, as well as a failure to develop creative and imaginative strengths.

The alternative is to let children figure out how to entertain themselves. "It is an important skill to develop," he maintained, and suggested leaving one or two days a week free to allow the child to stay home and play.

Acknowledging that peer pressure may make it difficult for some parents to resist overprogramming, Oberfield advised parents to consider their own values, and their child's real — not imagined or projected — interests. "We must return childhood to children, even if it means resisting the values of a given community or social group. All parents should give careful, independent thought to how their children spend time. Not doing so may have an important impact on their child's development and feelings of self-worth," he concluded.

DEAR ABBY

Parents' message urges teen-age drivers to use, not lose, their heads

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing a "paid notice" that appeared in The Raleigh (N.C.) Times. Perhaps you can use it in your column. My wife and I thought it was very moving and deserved nationwide exposure. We hope you agree. — LORI AND KEVIN SHANNON, RALEIGH

DEAR SHANNONS: I agree, and so did Claude Sitton, my "boss" at The Raleigh Times: Here's the piece:

MESSAGE TO TEEN-AGE DRIVERS FROM THE PARENTS OF A DECEASED TEEN-AGE DRIVER

You have a power that no one else on Earth possesses. Your teachers, the police, the governor, the president — none of them have this power; only you have it. This "power" is the power not to kill yourself while behind the wheel of an automobile. This "power" is the power not to kill others with the car you're driving. This "power" is the power not to be a victim of the slaughter of teen-age drivers on our roadways.

You've all seen the stories in the newspaper. Many of you were friends of the teen-agers killed. Maybe they were speeding, or passed illegally, or ignored a stop sign, or tried to beat a red light. You cried for them, went to their funerals, participated at memorial services held for them at school. And then got into your car and did the same thing because it could never happen to you!

We want to tell you about another group that doesn't have your "power," and that's your parents. When you leave this Earth, your parents remain behind. They are left behind to grieve over your premature death. They are also left behind to grieve for the future that you'll never experience for yourself — your high school graduation, your wedding, your first child. There will never be another vacation where the "whole" family goes on a trip. On Christmas, your parents will decorate a little tree to put next to your cemetery marker. The smiles around the Thanksgiving table will never be as wide. Mother's Day ... Father's Day ... your birthday ... the first warm day of spring — will always cause your parents to think of what might have been.

One year ago today, we buried our teen-age son, Jack. Jack was killed in an automobile accident. The accident was a direct result of ignoring the posted speed limit. Jack was a great kid, and we could not have asked for a better son. However, a few seconds of bad judgment, whether caused by inexperience or a sense of "teen-age immortality," or both, cost Jack his life. There is no pain on this Earth that's worse than losing a child. This tragedy will haunt us for the rest of our lives. And every week more parents must face the dreaded realization that they will never see their child again on this Earth — never to kiss them, never to laugh with them, never to hold them close. Never again.

Last month, three local teen-agers were killed in an accident; the two brothers are buried next to Jack. When we saw these three kids lying side by side in the cemetery on Valentine's Day, we knew we had to try to do something to stop this carnage.

How successful we are will depend on you: that means each of you exercising your unique "power" — and using peer pressure to convince your friends to do likewise. If we succeed, it will mean that all these teen-agers, and our son Jack, haven't died in vain. — BARBARA AND JACK RATZ SR., RALEIGH

DEAR BARBARA AND JACK: My heart goes out to you in your sorrow. The piece you wrote is indeed powerful — and a fitting memorial to your son, Jack Jr.

I hope editors of high school (and college) papers will feel it's worthy of printing. If so, consider this "permission."

I know this piece will be clipped and saved by many. And God willing, some lives will be saved.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Playing hazardous

Copley News Service

Playgrounds can be dangerous.

According to a study by the American Association of Leisure, jungle gyms, swings and chinning bars often have razor-sharp corners and jagged edges, most of the cement footings used to anchor the play equipment stick up too high, and merry-go-rounds often have an opening in the middle that children can fall through.

Adams case spotlights judicial system

DALLAS (AP) — The release of Randall Dale Adams, who once was three days from execution for a crime he long claimed he didn't commit, has put the spotlight on a judicial system that imprisoned "The Thin Blue Line" defendant.

Dallas police, prosecutors and judges "have lost some credibility with the public and the only thing that will restore it is time, if they can demonstrate they will not be as zealous and rabid as they demonstrated this (past) week," said Adams' attorney, Randy Schaffer.

Adams, who spent 12½ years in prison, was freed last week on grounds he received an unfair trial. Dallas County District Attorney John Vance dropped the charges, saying there wasn't enough evidence to retry Adams for the 1976 slaying of Dallas police officer Robert Wood.

Vance soon found himself on the defensive, trying to explain why his department had failed to examine Adams' case before and fought court orders to free Adams.

Defense attorneys and others are questioning how the case was handled from the time prosecutors suppressed evidence at the 1977 trial to an assistant district attorney's contention last week that judges who ruled in Adams' favor should be disqualified because of their liberal beliefs.

"Do we have within the prosecutor's department people who do not really understand or respect the rule of law?" the Dallas Times Herald questioned in an editorial Saturday. "Is that the lesson of the Adams case?...If it is, then no one in the community is separated from the fate of Randall Adams by more than the thinnest of whims."

"I think Mr. Adams would be the first to admit to you that the criminal justice system works," Vance said. "If it didn't, he would be on death row."

Adams was three days from the electric chair in 1980, but the U.S. Supreme Court ruled his jury had been improperly selected. Instead of seeking a retrial, then-District Attorney Henry Wade persuaded Gov. Bill Clements to commute Adams' sentence to life in prison.

"One has to question, if they were convinced Randall Dale Adams was a cop killer, why didn't they go back a second time and get the death penalty?" said Peter Lesser, a Dallas defense attorney.

It was just such questions that prompted film maker Errol Morris to re-examine Adams' case in the 1988 documentary "The Thin Blue Line."

The film showed prosecution witness David Harris recanting his testimony that Adams was the trigger man, as well as other witnesses giving information that conflicted with their testimony. Harris now is on death row for an unrelated murder.

Houston man dies in snowmobile wreck

COOKE CITY, Mont. (AP) — A snowmobiler from Houston, Texas, died after striking a tree in an accident near Yellowstone National Park, authorities said.

Randy Travis Reese, 33, was riding about 3½ miles northeast of Cooke City, a small tourist community at the park's northeast corner, when he lost control of the snowmobile and hit a tree Friday morning, said Park County Coroner Jack Davis.

Park County Sheriff's Deputy Gary Tanascu said Reese had been traveling on a groomed snowmobile trail and drove off into a meadow. When he tried to re-enter the trail, he lost control of the snowmobile.

Client to answer charges

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A Tulsa attorney says reports his client collected $150 million from thousands of investors in 11 states through a pyramid scheme are exaggerated.

"It was $10 million or less," Attorney Larry Gullekson told the Tulsa World in a story published Sunday.

Gullekson also denied published reports that Robert Leslie Johnson is fighting extradition from Las Vegas, Nev. "That's just not true," he said.

Gullekson said Johnson has signed papers agreeing to return to Dallas where he and William Wayne Gray of Grapevine, Texas, are charged with failing to register their "peso exchange program" with the Texas Securities Commission.

Gullekson said he hoped Johnson would be able to appear before a judge today to waive extradition.

Johnson, arrested Tuesday in Las Vegas, is being held without bail in the Clark County Detention Center.

Police seized $870,000 in cash and cashier's checks, including one for $200,000 payable to the Las Vegas Tropicana Hotel, when they arrested Johnson in a $2,500-a-month penthouse.

Firebomb thrown at mural

AUSTIN (AP) — A homemade firebomb was thrown against a mural of the Soviet revolutionary leader Vladimir Lenin, which is painted on the outside of a downtown Austin bar, firefighters said.

The firebomb, made with a bottle containing about a quart of a flammable liquid, did little damage to the mural at the Eastern Bloc bar, firefighters said.

The bar was not open Sunday night, when the incident occurred, authorities said. Fire officials said witnesses saw a man walking near the establishment about 8 p.m., moments before the firebomb was hurled against the side of the building.
