Early morning collision

No serious injuries were reported in this fiery, three-truck collision on the north service road of U.S. Highway 80 two miles west of Midland Regional Airport about 7:30 a.m. today. Pictured here are a mobile home puller, background, and an 18-wheeler, both of which were destroyed in the crash. Not visible is a second 18-wheeler that sustained fire damage to the rear tires of its trailer. The Department of Public Safety was still investigating the accident late this morning and no further details were available at press time.

Reagan beginning last campaign trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is embarking on his final midterm campaign journey, trying to protect Republican Senate candidates in five Western states he has already visited this year.

Winding up a week dominated by the political campaign, even during his two working days in the White House, the president was visiting the friendly turfs in Wyoming, Montana and Nevada today, and Utah and New Mexico on Friday, where the GOP is counting on the president's popularity to seal close races.

By Friday evening, when he returns to the White House, Reagan will have made campaign appearances in 13 states — nearly all of them in areas where Republican candidates were leading or in close contests and few of them in urban, financially-ailing neighborhoods.

Today's stops had the trappings of a final campaign blitz, as the president's staff arranged rallies at an airport in Casper, Wyo.; in Great Falls, Mont., and in Las Vegas, Nev.

The Senate races in those states and in Utah and New Mexico are crucial to the Republicans' hopes of maintaining their 54 seats in the Senate. Republican strategists, supremely confident a few weeks ago, are conceding that Democratic challengers have pulled uncomfortably close to GOP senators seeking re-election in several states.

One Republican official said the president's travels today "follow the formula" set out when Reagan's aides began plotting his role in the congressional campaigns last year.

This source, who requested anonynimity, said two questions had to be answered affirmatively before Reagan would make a trip: "Can Reagan make a difference in the state? Is the race close?"

"If we had to be in trouble in several states, we're in trouble in the right states — where the president can help," he said. "He can buttress and fortify these races and give everybody two or three points at the end."

He said that in the Rocky Mountain tour, Reagan was visiting states where "his popularity remains the highest."

In addition, he said that in such states "a president of the United States has a lot more wallop. A president can't move a state the size of New York or Michigan," but in the states he is visiting today his tour is "front-page news for three days in a row."

In Wyoming, Republican Sen. Malcolm Wallop is being challenged by Rodger McDaniel. Larry Williams is challenging Democratic Sen. John Melcher in Montana. And Chic Hecht is trying to unseat Sen. Howard Cannon, a four-term Nevada Democrat.

A White House official, who asked that he not be identitifed, said that the polls in Wyoming "have continued to fluctuate" in a close race.

He said that the lead in Montana "has been shifting back and forth," and that in Nevada, "the outcome will be in doubt until election day."

McDaniel, who has been campaigning full-time since May and nearly full-time for 13 months against Wallop, made little headway until a few weeks ago when he was boosted by a debate with the senator and a series of hard-hitting campaign advertisements. Republican polls reportedly show him gaining.

While Wallop said Tuesday a private poll gave him a 20-point lead, a Republican campaign official said a survey taken by Republican pollster Richard Wirthlin showed Wallop with a lead of no more than eight to 11 points in what was described as a close race with a great deal of volatility.

In Montana, where no Republican has been elected to the Senate in 36 years, conservatives have waged a fierce attack on Melcher, who said he is in his "roughest campaign."

Dallas-area plane crash kills four

CARROLLTON (AP) — Two houses and an elementary school were slightly damaged when two small planes collided over this north Dallas suburb and crashed, killing four people.

"It's pretty gruesome," said Bob Grimsby, a witness to Wednesday's fiery crash of the twin-engine aircraft. "There's blood everywhere."

Scott Fleischauer said he was driving down the street when he saw "a ball of fire coming out of the sky," then saw airplane parts falling onto yards and porches.

Four bodies were recovered, including one found in the middle of a street. No one on the ground was injured, although the wreckage of one plane landed 10 feet from the front porch of a house. The pilot was found amid the debris, officials said.

Two houses and the Dale B. Davis Elementary School were slightly damaged by falling debris. Portions of a plane landed on the roof of the school, where children were attending class. One plane fell three blocks from a shopping center.

"We were lucky enough no one on the ground was hurt," Carrollton Fire Department spokesman Jeff Jones said.

Debris and parts of bodies were scattered over two miles. Forty police officers carried plastic bags as they searched the area.

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman George Burlage said in Fort Worth that a twin-engine Navajo on a business trip out of Louisiana collided with a twin-engine Cessna Skymaster that had taken off from the nearby Addison Airport about 11:20 a.m.

Job openings considered strategy to aid Clements

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's decision to open up several hundred new jobs at San Antonio and Corpus Christi military installations was made in part to boost Gov. William Clements and other Texas Republicans in next Tuesday's elections, say congressional military observers.

Texas is thought to be one of the key states in the White House's game plan for the 1982 elections. And the administration's apparent pre-election gift of 780 new jobs in the two heavily Democratic cities must be considered a plus for Republican Clements, who is facing a strong challenge from Democratic Attorney General Mark White.

"The administration is certainly pushing Clements and focusing on Texas," said one military source. "You have to think that they made the announcement with the election in mind."

The sources note that the Pentagon also recently announced new job openings at a Pennsylvania army depot and is expected to make a similiar announcement in California. These two states are also considered crucial in Republican election strategies.

Pentagon spokesmen, denying that the job decisions were politically motivated, say the additional manpower is needed to handle an increased workload at the bases.

San Antonio's Kelly Air Force Base recently announced that it had 280 blue collar job openings, prompting 10,000 people to show up to fill out applications.

The nature of the announcement made military observers skeptical.

"Normally, they'll have a backlog of applicants (for new positions) and they'll fill them quietly," says Kelsey Meek, a military affairs aide for Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-San Antonio. "It's rare for them to make such an announcement...but the South Texas economy is in real trouble and the Republicans have to do something."

From Our Washington Bureau

The 280 apprentice jobs being offered at Kelly involve maintenance on B-52 and C-5 airplaces. There are 15 job categories, ranging from aircraft engine repairs to welding.

The Corpus Christi Army Depot announced last week that it had 500 new openings for skilled jobs such as aircraft worker mechanics, secretaries and other clerical workers.

The workload at Corpus Christi has increased because the Army Depots established a self-imposed hiring freeze last June, said Rosemarie Scaggs, public information officer at the Army Depot Command Center in Pennsylvania.

The freeze was discontinued Oct. 1. Of the approximately 500 jobs available at Corpus Christi, 62 are positions that have been left vacant since the freeze.

Some may not 'stay the course'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's 1982 campaign theme urging voters to "stay the course" with his economic program appears to have backfired against many of the very Republican candidates it is designed to help, according to both Republican and Democratic political strategists.

Most Senate and House candidates are ignoring the president's plea to wait out the bad economic times while the combination of budget and tax cuts has time to work.

"It all comes down to a very simple formula," said Greg Schneiders, director of the Senate Democratic Policy Commitee. "The Democrats had everything to gain by making the economy a national issue, the Republicans had everything to lose."

"Most of the Democrats are benefitting from a national movement against Reaganomics," he said.

He said voters are getting a confused signal from Republicans emphasizing local issues and saying little about Reagan while the president sounds his own battle cry which implies that GOP candidates are with him.

One House Republican official who has closely monitored races around the country said Reagan's campaign theme is only rarely heard among Republicans, even those who routinely voted for the president's cuts in federal social programs.

Other Republican officials, also asking not to be quoted by name, say dissatisfaction with Reagan's economic policies are turning into votes for Democrats.

"Reagan's the problem," one official said simply.

Some exceptions are in Utah, California and Virginia where some Senate and House candidates are identifying with Reagan's presidency and his policies.

Eight Midland candidates unopposed

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth of an eight-part series examining the candidates and issues in Tuesday's election. Today's story deals with the unopposed candidates.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Eight of the 14 Midland candidates seeking election or re-election in Tuesday's general election are unopposed and are guaranteed paychecks and benefits for the next four years.

Unopposed Democrats asking for re-election are:

—Judge Vann Culp of the 238th State Judicial District Court. Culp has been presiding judge of the court since its creation in 1977. He is a former president of the Midland County Bar Association.

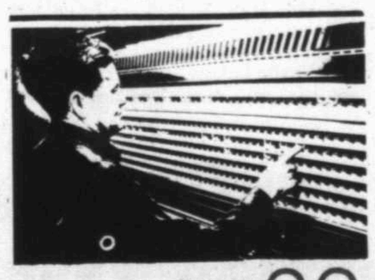

—County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose. DuBose has presided over the court since its inception in 1978. He is a former Midland County attorney.

—County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry. She has been county clerk since 1951.

—County Treasurer Dee Thompson. She has been in office since 1959.

Three incumbents — all Democrats — are being challenged by Republicans for their jobs. County Commissioner Charlie Welch, who has been in office since 1969, is being threatened by real estate broker C. Wallace "Wally" Craig. Peace Justice Robert H. "Bob" Pine is being challenged by Bob Coonce, a businessman and heavy-equipment operator. And District Clerk Madge Wallis is opposed by Vivian Wood, a former deputy under Ms. Wallis and now an assistant purchasing agent for a major oil company.

Republican candidates unopposed in the election are:

election 82

—Judge Barbara G. Culver, presiding judge of the 318th State District Court. Judge Culver succeeded Judge Joseph Mims, who was Midland's family-court judge from 1965 until his retirement in 1978. Before her appointment to the district judgeship, she was county judge from 1963 until 1978.

—County Commissioner Win Brown, an independent landman and president of the North Texas State University Board of Regents. He has been commissioner of Precinct 4, which takes in northwest Midland and northwest Midland County, since 1971.

—Judge William B. "Bill" Ahders, Midland County judge and the county's chief administrative officer since 1978. Prior to the judgeship, he was Midland's Municipal Court Judge for 10 years and was a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation for 26 years.

—County Attorney Scott Henderson, who was appointed to the job in late 1981 after Robert Rendall resigned from the post to go into the private practice of law.

Order limiting inmates rescinded by commission

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Midland County commissioners' "good faith" in proposing a new 225-inmate jail to relieve the jail's occasional overcrowded conditions and to prepare for future inmate growth apparently prompted the Texas Commission on Jail Standards in Austin Wednesday to rescind its Sept. 1 order limiting the jail population to 85.

"Fine, that's fine with me," Sheriff Dallas Smith said after the commission had rescinded its order, which apparently was improperly decreed in the first place.

Last August, the Jail Commission held a brief meeting, rather than a hearing, on the Midland County Jail, which, according to prescribed standards, was operating illegally by having more — 90 to 100 to a peak of about 120 — inmates than it could maintain under prescribed jail standards.

The commission ordered inmate load restricted to 85 and said any surplus prisoners would have to be boarded out at neighboring jails. But that order was meted out apparently without evidence that the county commissioners

Spanish voters expected to favor liberals at polls

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Two bombs exploded today outside banks in Bilbao, capital of the restive Basque region, as Spaniards voted in a general election that was expected to give the country its first leftist government in nearly half a century.

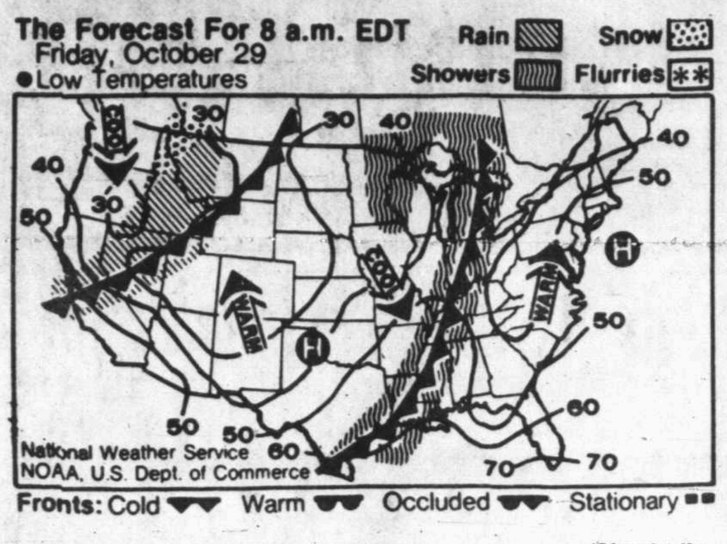

No group immediately claimed responsibility for the explosions, one of which injured two policemen. ETA, the radical Basque separatist organization, had vowed to disrupt the voting and had set off other bombs in the northern country during the three-week campaign.

One of the police officers was in serious condition, while the other suffered only minor injuries, a police spokesman said.

IRA accused of attempt to 'wreck' Irish country

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Ulster Secretary James Prior today accused the Irish Republican Army of trying to "wreck Northern Ireland" but vowed to press ahead with attempts to bring feuding Catholics and Protestants together.

Reacting to the murder of three policemen blown up by a bomb, Britain's Cabinet minister in charge of Northern Ireland said, "We must not allow the really terrible events of the last few days and weeks deter us from what we know is right."

The policemen were killed 30 miles south of Belfast on Wednesday, bringing to 12 the number of killings in the past month of campaigning and voting for a 78-seat provincial assembly. Also on Wednesday, two men mutilated a Roman Catholic man, sawing off his right hand with a hacksaw.

Police pressed their hunt for the two men and for the IRA terrorists who exploded the bomb.

Prior, speaking to reporters in Belfast, said the mostly Catholic IRA, and its Marxist offshoot the Irish National Liberation Army, were not only trying to disrupt the assembly, which is to have advisory powers.

"I think they are going all out to try to wreck Northern Ireland," he said.

Meanwhile, a Catholic priest who helped end last year's IRA hunger strike at the Maze prison outside Belfast, the Rev. Denis Faul, 50, of Dungannon, County Tyrone, said today that clergymen may have to sacrifice their own lives to bring peace to the province.

"Victory would be when a Catholic priest would risk or indeed give his life to save a Protestant man from being murdered by paramilitaries masquerading in the name of the Catholic population, or vice versa," he said.

Police and British troops returned today to the spot where two constables and a sergeant of the mostly Protestant Royal Ulster Constabulary were killed in the bomb ambush.

The outlawed IRA, which is trying to end British rule of Northern Ireland, claimed responsibility in a telephone call to the British Broadcasting Corp.

The explosion gouged a crater 60 feet wide and 40 feet deep in the lonely road where the policemen had been lured by a caller reporting an armed robbery near Lurgan, 30 miles south of Belfast.

Police estimated that 1,000 pounds of explosives were buried under the road and detonated by remote control. The blast was heard five miles away.

Two suspects were seen fleeing in a stolen car, later found abandoned, police said.

A Boeing 747 sits unused on one of Ben Gurion airport's three runways Wednesday after striking El Al workers closed the Israeli airport for 12 hours. The workers, using their families to help them, struck because of a threat to liquidate the government-owned airline.

Strike closes Israeli airport 12 hours

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Ben-Gurion International Airport reopened today after El Al workers removed planes they had parked on the runways to protest a threat to liquidate the government-owned airline.

Airport officials said a TWA flight from the United States landed at 1 p.m. (6 a.m. CDT) and an Arkia flight departed for Naples at the same time. Arkia is a domestic Israeli airline.

The officials said although the airport was operating that delays in flights were expected during the day. The Israeli national airline, El Al, has been shut down since September because of work disputes.

Hundreds of El Al workers, their spouses and children walked off the runways earlier today after shutting it down for 12 hours to protest a government threat to liquidate the national airline.

The workers and their families began their angry protest around noon Wednesday, forming a human chain on the runways to block flights to and from Israel's main aerial gateway.

Pilots for the strike-grounded airline reinforced the human blockade by rolling two Boeing 747 jumbo jets and a smaller Boeing 707 onto the runways. The workers deflated the planes' tires and inflated the emergency evacuation chutes to hold the aircraft in place.

Earlier, police used water cannon and batons in an attempt to break up the demonstration, but backed off because of the presence of the families.

"The workers are using children to protect themselves," a police officer said.

A breakthrough came after hours of negotiations when the protesters accepted assurances from the Histadrut Labor Federation that it would represent their interests fully in continuing negotiations with the government, El Al's principal shareholder, on the future of the airline. El Al has lost about $200 million in the past four years.

The workers, members of eight El Al unions, had earlier demanded direct representation in the talks.

Deputy Prime Minister David Levy said in a state television interview that Prime Minister Menachem Begin feared a violent showdown at the airport if workers do not accept a new labor agreement trimming 1,000 people from the 5,000-member staff and sharply curbing the unions' right to strike.

The workers took control of the runways after rumors swept their ranks that the airline would be liquidated or sold whether the new labor agreement is accepted or not.

An El Al official, who declined to be identified, said the workers had a massive feeling of insecurity as the government threatened "lives built up in 20 years of work."

El Al's management shut down the airline on Sept. 16 after stewards struck in a pay dispute, the latest in a series of wildcat job actions that have idled the national carrier 69 times in the past decade.

Order rescinded by jail commission were acting in good faith to alleviate the overcrowded condition by proposing a new facility.

"They were in no position to censor, condemn or disparage" Midland County without realizing what the Commissioners' Court was planning to use as a corrective measure, said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis. "They were out of order," he said, "and nobody is going to hamstring this county on anything; we're on top of it."

Commissioner Charlie Welch held a similar view: "Midland County has one of the finest jails in Texas. I'm certainly pleased that the Jail Commission has corrected the error they made in haste."

Arguing the county's case in Austin on Wednesday were County Attorney Scott Henderson and his assistant, Mark Dettman. Davis described both as excellent and knowledgeable counsels for the county.

The Commissioners' Court is proposing to call an $8.6 million general obligation bond issue on Jan. 15 to see if the citizenry is willing to build a new jail and courthouse addition on the courthouse square.

The sheriff's interim solution — a stockade — eventually was nixed earlier this year by the Commissioners' Court after the jail population dropped below 100 and after they decided to consider building a jail and courthouse addition for use well into the 21st century.

"You don't build for (just) 10 years," Davis said. "You build for the future, for posterity, for future generations."

Davis said he was "very optimistic" about the county's building program.

"Our bonded indebtedness is less than $800,000," Davis said. "That's dirt cheap. Midland County owes nothing for practical purposes." The county's last bond issue was in 1972, when the electorate approved a $1.95 million issue to finance the renovation and expansion of the 1929-30-vintage courthouse.

Davis said he recently talked to the New Orleans-based underwriters Howard, Weil, Labouisse, Friedrichs Inc. concerning Midland County's financial strength.

"Midland County is the Cadillac of all counties and municipalities when it comes to obligation bonds," he said the underwriters told him.

Though the Midland County Jail has about 100 bunks, the Jail Commission's Sept. 1 order concerned inadequate segregation of classified prisoners, a bunk for each prisoner held for more than 72 hours and the lack of sight and sound separation between male and female prisoners.

In appealing the order, Henderson and Dettman said it was improper due to the lowering jail population, which has been averaging between 75 and 80 prisoners, Henderson told the commission.

Earlier this year, when the Midland building boom was peaking, the jail population at times reached well in excess of 100 but has since tapered off.

However, the sheriff noted that the population runs in cycles and hits lows and peaks depending on the seasons of the year and day of the week; the prisoner count rises on weekends and sometimes hits into the 90s.

"It goes up; it comes down, and it's going up all the time," Smith said. Each succeeding "down" cycle generally is higher than the previous one, he said.

were assigned to maintain order throughout the nation duriag the balloting. Election officials said voters turned out in large numbers in sunny, warm weather.

The estimated 26.6 million voters were faced with 8,150 candidates for 350 seats in the lower house of the Cortes, the Spanish parliament, and for 208 seats in the Senate. Under the Spanish constitution, the leader of the party that gets the most votes will become premier.

King Juan Carlos, who thwarted an attempted military overthrow in 1978 and was the target of an alleged election-day coup plot uncovered earlier this month, met Wednesday in his palace with the country's main political leaders.

Observers said the meeting was called to show the monarch's support for democratic government and in an effort to deter far-right officers who might be planning a rebellion to block the expected victory of Felipe Gonzalez and his Socialist Workers Party.

Gonzalez, a 40-year-old lawyer whose campaign promised no sweeping changes, said the meeting implied "that we all favor peaceful coexistence in spite of our legitimate ideological differences and that we all respect the crown and the constitution."

Manuel Fraga Iribarne, leader of the rightist Popular Alliance, told reporters he would go along with the election results "no matter who wins." Earlier in the campaign, he said a Socialist victory would be akin to "the second Moslem invasion of Spain."

Other candidates who participated in the meeting were Communist Party leader Santiago Carrillo, centrists Landelino Lavilla of the Union of the Democratic Center and Adolfo Suarez of the Social and Democratic Center, Javier Arzallus of the Basque Nationalist Party and Miguel Roca Junyent of the Catalan Convergence Union.

On Tuesday, police said 25 "ultra-rightists" — including a police corporal and an army sergeant — were arrested in Madrid, Barcelona and Valladolid for being "threats to state security."

Earlier this month, three army colonels were charged with plotting to take over Madrid and seize power on election day.

Many rightist officers in the Spanish armed forces were staunch supporters of the dictatorship of Gen. Francisco Franco, who died in 1975.

The final pre-election opinion polls, published last week, indicated that the Socialists would win between 193 and 217 seats in the lower house of the Cortes.

'Window war' before court

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — After touring two plush penthouse apartments, a circuit judge is deciding whether a picture window violates the privacy of a neighbor — four floors down.

Lawyers say the decision, expected later this week, could set a legal precedent for Florida condominium owners.

Hugh Culverhouse, owner of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, says the six-foot window, part of a neighbor's $200,000 renovation, was installed after he bought his 19th-floor apartment.

He says in his suit that it violates his security and privacy of his patio.

Architect Lee Scarfone, who designed the building where both men live, knocked out a chunk of wall about two years ago and put in the window to get a panoramic view from the 23rd-floor bedroom of his two-story penthouse.

The case went to court last year and was decided in favor of Culverhouse. Scarfone's attorney won a rehearing, however, arguing successfully that the National Football League club owner's suit neglected to name Scarfone's wife, Patricia, as a defendant.

Scarfone's lawyers claim the decision could have far-reaching effects for Florida condo owners, because the condominium association approved Scarfone's remodeling project.

If the judge rules those alterations invalid, then it could mean renovations in other buildings would have to be ripped out if there are objections, said attorney Karl Stevens.

Culverhouse wants the window out and the wall restored.

In court Monday, he told Hillsborough Circuit Judge Calvin A. Pope that the window was "ugly looking" and a threat to his security.

"All of the walls were solid and that gave us a great deal of comfort," Culverhouse testified. "It's a glazed window. I can't see what's behind the window. Someone could be standing there and I wouldn't know. It's a pretty ugly looking window in my opinion."

Scarfone disagreed, saying it affords him a spectacular view of winding Bayshore Boulevard, Hillsborough Bay, and even St. Petersburg — 25 miles away — on a clear day.

White to request 'Candy Man's' stay of execution be vacated

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Texas Attorney General Mark White said an aide would travel to Washington today to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to vacate the stay of execution granted Ronald Clark O'Bryan by a federal appeals court.

O'Bryan, known to fellow Death Row inmates as the "Candy Man," was condemned for killing his son with a Halloween sweet laced with cyanide in 1974.

The former Deer Park optician had been scheduled Sunday — Halloween — to become the first convict in the United States to be executed by lethal injection.

White, campaigning in South Texas as the Democratic gubernatorial candidate, said he sent Assistant Attorney General Leslie Benitez to ask Justice Byron White to lift the stay and permit the execution to proceed.

"Nobody likes to see an execution occur," White said. "Our job is to see that the law is upheld, and that's what we're doing."

White's spokeswoman, Mary Hardesty, said attorneys had not yet seen the opinion accompanying the stay of execution and could not say what the attorney general's arguments would be.

White will be seeking to overturn a 2-1 decision issued by a three-judge panel from the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The panel also ordered expedited hearings on the issues raised in the appeal — including the way some jurors were excluded from the 1975 trial in Houston.

Richard Windhorst, clerk of the appeals court, said the case will be heard in the week of Jan. 24, but no specific date was set.

In the opinion, the majority concluded that a "substantial question" was raised by O'Bryan's claims that his trial was not fair because three people who expressed reservations about the death penalty were excluded from the jury.

The justices said the stay was granted to allow adequate time to review O'Bryan's claims.

"A significant segment of the American population harbors serious reservations about the death penalty, and...the exclusion from jury service of persons who have such reservations would result in a jury unconstitutionally composed because it is not representative of the community," the appeals court ruled.

Texas Civil Liberties Union executive director John Duncan criticized White for opposing the stay.

"We find it reprehensible and deplorable that White has chosen to again attempt to execute an inmate before the November election," Duncan said, adding that White went to the U.S. Supreme Court on Aug. 17 opposing a stay of execution for another Texas death row inmate.

The appeals court also agreed to declare O'Bryan a pauper.

O'Bryan's lawyer had brought the case to the New Orleans court on Monday — just five days before the scheduled execution by lethal injection.

The execution would have been the first in Texas since 1964.

When the Halloween execution was ordered, State District Judge Michael T. McSpadden told O'Bryan he picked the date because O'Bryan "ruined Halloween for everyone."

O'Bryan was convicted of giving poisoned candy to his 8-year-old son Timothy, who had returned home with his father and sister, Elizabeth, now 13, after trick-or-treating Oct. 31, 1974.

Evidence presented at the 1975 trial showed that O'Bryan permitted his son to eat one piece of candy before bed and that the boy selected a Pixy Stix, a powdered confection in a plastic tube.

Timothy complained it tasted bitter and drank some Kool-Aid to wash it down. Within moments the boy became ill, O'Bryan told police. The father said he held his son as he went limp and died within an hour.

Medical tests showed Timonty died of cyanide poisoning.

Later, detectives learned O'Bryan had taken out life insurance policies on his children — $20,000 worth on each — without the knowledge of his wife. There were also other policies taken out a few months earlier.

Detectives also learned O'Bryan was short of money. His car was about to be repossessed and he was behind on several other loans. His wife, who later divorced O'Bryan, told investigators her husband had held and lost 21 jobs in five years.

At the trial, friends and co-workers testified O'Bryan showed unusual interest in cyanide and how much was needed to kill. A chemical supply house salesman identified O'Bryan as a man who had inquired about buying cyanide.

Relatives, including his wife, said O'Bryan discussed before the boy was buried how the insurance money would be spent.

O'Bryan's attorneys contend the state was able to present only circumstantial evidence and never proved O'Bryan actually bought cyanide.

The jury deliberated less than an hour before returning a guilty verdict June 3, 1975.

The conviction was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which refused to review the case.

U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling denied the request for a stay of execution Oct. 20, saying O'Bryan's arguments had no merit.

In the appeal, lawyers characterized O'Bryan as a dreamer with a peaceful nature and said jurors who recommended the death penalty did not give enough consideration to his peaceful nature.

"There is no evidence that Mr. O'Bryan had a prior criminal record or that he ever comitted an act of violence in the past," the petition said.

The petition said that O'Bryan had the best interest of his family at heart.

The appeals court judges that one member of the panel — who was not named — thought that the mitigating evidence should be considered on appeal.

Harrelson love affairs introduced as evidence

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Convicted hit man Charles V. Harrelson engaged in two extramarital love affairs after he allegedly assassinated U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. for a $250,000 fee, according to evidence introduced into his murder trial.

Harrelson wrote about the second affair in a diary shortly before his arrest and added, "I've never killed a person who was undeserving of it," government testimony said.

The government Wednesday read to the jury portions of an alleged "will" that he wrote in a "Monthly Minder" on Aug. 30, 1980.

Harrelson was arrested on Sept. 1, 1980, two years to the day after he was paroled from prison in 1978, after serving a 15-year sentence for the 1968 contract killing of Texas grain dealer Sam Degelia Jr.

Arresting officers said they found him babbling and wandering alongside Interstate 10 near Van Horn in remote West Texas, holding a gun to his head after he shot out the tires of his automobile.

"I'M SORRY — not for me but for the pain I've caused others, both those who've loved me and who've loved the people I've killed — but I've never killed a person who was undeserving of it," said the "will."

FBI handwriting expert Gary Kanaskie read passages from the diary Wednesday while Harrelson, 44, and his co-defendant wife, Jo Ann Starr Harrelson, 41, listened without exhibiting emotion.

Mrs. Harrelson, who married Harrelson on Jan 6, 1979, earlier heard her own daughter, Teresa Starr Jasper, 25, testify that Mrs. Jasper had an affair with Harrelson from December 1979 until February 1980.

"I wish to be cremated with absolutely no religious services. My ashes should be spread over the John H. Wood Jr. Courthouse in San Antonio," said Harrelson, who testified at a pretrial hearing that he feared he was going to be killed shortly before his arrest at Van Horn.

Instead, Harrelson is on trial for conspiracy and murder in the courthouse renamed after Wood, 63, who was gunned down outside his San Antonio townhome on May 29, 1979.

THE GOVERNMENT charges that Harrelson shot Wood in exchange for money from narcotics trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra. Chagra, who was scheduled for trial before Wood at the time of his death, will be tried for murder in a separate trial.

Mrs. Harrelson is on trial for obstruction of justice and Chagra's wife, Elizabeth, 28, is being tried for conspiracy to murder and obstruction of justice.

Other diary excerpts, introduced into the court but not read to the jury, referred to Harrelson's love for El Paso businesswoman Virginia Farah, who employed Harrelson as a bodyguard in the summer of 1980 while he was a fugitive.

Harrelson was driving a Corvette automobile registered to Mrs. Farah's late son when he was arrested.

He surrendered to authorities after Mrs. Farah arrived from El Paso to talk to him during a stand-off of several hours along the interstate highway.

THE "WILL" left a gold chain to Mrs. Farah, saying that Harrelson was introduced to her as "excellent bodyguard" by Joe Robinson in June 1980.

"As sometimes happens, we fell in love. She is blameless for any of my actions. I love her so much. I would that it could have been different," Harrelson wrote. "I took the Corvette without Mrs. Farah's permission. She didn't believe me about the agents in the trees.

"Funny, even after Watergate and all the other crap — people just refuse to accept the truth. This is the most corrupt government in history," Harrelson wrote.

Also Wednesday, FBI fingerprint expert Russell G. Davey identified fingerprints of Mrs. Harrelson and her daughter which are intergral parts of the government's case.

Davey said four fingerprints on an Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms form used for buying a deer rifle in Dallas 12 days before Wood was killed were those of Mrs. Harrelson. She was convicted in Dallas last year and sentenced to three years for using a fictitious name to purchase the weapon, allegedly used by her husband to shoot Wood in the back.

MRS. JASPER, testifying under immunity from prosecution, earlier said she used the phony names Terri Tower and Julie Myers while staying at two hotels on a June 22-24, 1979 trip to Las Vegas to pick up a briefcase full of cash, allegedly from Mrs. Chagra.

However, Davey admitted under cross-examination that fingerprints found on two cars owned by Wood "never have been identified."

Under questioning by defense attorney Tom Sharpe Jr., the fingerprint expert said that Harrelson's prints were not among the fingerprints and palm prints found on the two cars.

Prosecutor John Emerson implied through his questioning of Davey that Harrelson could have been wearing gloves to avoid leaving prints.

Eight women indicted for buying votes

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — An attorney representing eight women accused of buying votes in a hotly contested Duval County election called the federal indictments "a Republican conspiracy against the Mexican-Americans."

The women, including the director of the Duval County Welfare Department and the wife of an unsuccessful candidate for county judge, were freed on $25,000 bonds Wednesday by U.S. Magistrate Eduardo de Ases of Corpus Christi.

Defense attorney Baldemar F. Gutierrez of Alice said the charges were political and called the bonds excessive.

De Ases said he was following the recommendation of Assistant U.S. Attorney Jack Wolfe when he set the bonds.

Named in a five-count indictment returned Tuesday were Amelia Garcia, 42, Duval County welfare director; Santo Sauceda Garza, 57, a housewife; Teresa Aleman Briones, 36, a secretary in the Duval County rural housing office; and Virginia Barrera, 37, a housewife.

The women were charged with conspiring to pay and offering to buy votes for incumbent County Judge Gilberto Uresti.

Four supporters of Uresti's challenger, Freer druggist Frank Garcia, were named in a 10-count indictment.

Charged with conspiring to pay and offering to pay for votes were Garcia's wife, Alva Teresa Garcia, 49; Diana Bazan Everet, 38, and Josie Guerra Lictenberger, no age available, employees of the San Diego school district; and Bertha Guerra, 55, a worker in the Duval County clerk's office.

Investigators said the alleged incidents took place during absentee voting in April.

Aristocrats don't seem too upset at book's theme

PARIS (AP) — France is a country where, according to a bestselling book, uncounted millions of freeloaders enjoy privileges on the backs of their less fortunate compatriots.

The book, "Always More" by journalist Francois de Closets, lays the blame on what he says is an archaic social system whose reform has defied every government since the French revolution in 1789.

The 329-page analysis rose to the top of France's non-fiction bestseller list at the end of July and has stirred up a hornets' nest of indignation among the beneficiaries of the system. But no one has so far challenged the facts and figures in his book.

THE FEDERATION of Notaries (notaries public), which speaks for one of the groups assailed in the book, accused De Closets of a "gross distortion" of what notaries do, maintaining they perform a valuable service to the community.

A union representing national Savings Bank employees, another group classified in the book as privileged, charged that the book was an "unfair attack on achievements of Saving Bank employees which are a result of a long struggle."

De Closets claims the system thrives on secrecy, hypocrisy and collusion among the privileged classes.

He charges that the system divides France — more than any other non-Communist industrialized nation — into over-privileged and under-privileged classes whose conflicts and contradictions obstruct every effort to bring French society into line with the 20th Century.

De Closets claims that only the Soviet Union and other Communist states, with their "nomenclatura" class of technocrats, have anything like the "coherent and perverse system of inequality that permeates French society."

The privileged classes are not only those who hold more than their share of wealth and power, he asserts, but whole sectors of the population who are shielded against all the risks and hardships of a free economy and remain untouched by the current recession.

AS EXAMPLES OF such specially privileged groups, De Closets cites France's 400,000 bank employees, 110,000 electricity workers, 300,000 post office employees, 700,000 teachers, 250,000 railroad workers and employees of the Paris subway system, the Metro, and millions of civil servants, local government employees and workers in other nationalized industries.

Altogether, more than half of all French workers enjoy what De Closets calls "non-monetary factors" — special privileges that go far beyond the social security provisions which by law are applicable to all wage earners:

—The legal retirement age for men is 65, but millions in fact retire at 55, some at 50.

—Every worker is entitled to a month's paid vacation a year, but special deals give 10 or 11 weeks to privileged groups. The customer or the taxpayer foots the bill.

—The Socialist government reduced the maximum work week to 39 hours, but the privileged rarely work more than 35 hours.

—Some bank clerks get 17 months' salary a year. In the huge national Savings Bank system, outside recruitment is banned above the age of 30, giving employees security of tenure, automatic promotion and a "guaranteed minimum career" regardless of merit.

BUT THOSE WHO do manual labor in the banks, such as the cleaning staff, are employed by subcontractors and have neither job security nor other privileges. If they threaten to strike, they are fired.

Immigrants, racial minorities and women supply the bulk of the unorganized and underprivileges part of the labor force.

In the Paris Metro, the cleaners have to pay their own fares to the stations where they work — and until recently were banned from using washrooms reserved to regular Metro staff. Regular Metro workers travel free anywhere in the Paris region.

France's 170,000 truck drivers have no special privileges because — unlike the teamsters in the United States — they do not form a powerful pressure group. De Closets says 86 percent of French trucking firms employ fewer than 10 workers, making strike action ineffective on a national level.

Electricity workers pay for their electricity at 25 percent of the standard rate. The state-run electricity board offers family allowances plus special bonuses for births, marriages and productivity boosts. It maintains vacation hotels, retirement homes and sports grounds. The customer pays, says De Closets.

AT THE TOP of the social scale are the special interest groups that, De Closets maintains, have a stranglehold on the French economy. Notaries public have had a monopoly of real estate registration since the Middle Ages.

Kissinger often brunt of his own jokes

By R.H. GROWALD
Copley News Service

Henry A. Kissinger then was secretary of state and fresh from his first meeting with California Gov. Jerry Brown. The reporters traveling with him asked for his impressions of the governor.

Kissinger, on stage aboard the almost 20-year-old Air Force 707 that was his magic carpet, growled his German-accented words in the tone he uses for entertaining.

"Gov. Brown was very interesting," said Kissinger. "He knew all the right questions. But none of the answers, of course."

Kissinger is not always geopolitik. He probably is one of the most humorous persons in public life.

Kissinger is better-known for his Mideast shuttling, his missions to China and Russia, his negotiations with Hanoi, the makings of his Nobel Prize for peace. But the humor is prized, too.

LIKE THE TIME, during the month-long Mideast shuttle nine years ago, when his favorite Secret Service bodyguard, Walter Bothy, forgot the safety on a submachine gun and the weapon fired aboard the plane. Bothy was unhurt out did the natural thing and fainted to the floor.

Kissinger rushed up and, when Bothy roused, leaned over and said: "Walter, why didn't you tell me you wanted off the (Secret Service) detail?"

Then the secretary turned to reporters aboard the plane and said:

"I am the only man in the world who would have a bodyguard who, when he decides to shoot himself with a submachine gun at a distance of 6 inches, misses."

When Kissinger, with then-President Gerald R. Ford, met the president of France on Martinique, went swimming in a pool with the two presidents, he dog-paddled. At one end of the pool, Dick Keiser, then chief of the White House Secret Service detail, stood talking with Richard Allen, chief of the Secret Service detail guarding Kissinger.

ALLEN SAID, "Look, Kissinger's dog-paddling. It is undignified for a U.S. secretary of state to dog-paddle."

Keiser replied, "Well, Kissinger dog-paddles with great determination. He seems to get where he wants. Look, now he is dog-paddling underwater."

No, said the man from state, "he is not dog-paddling underwater, that is impossible. Obviously Kissinger is drowning."

Just then the head of the man they were guarding against terrorists popped above the surface and he said to the two Secret Service officials: "I asked Walter (Bothy) what you would do if they tried to kidnap me. Walter said, "Don't worry, Mr. Secretary. We won't let them take you alive."

With that, Kissinger's head disappeared underwater.

When Kissinger departed government in 1977, Congress refused to give him any more protection. He hired Bothy as his private bodyguard in a security net that costs Kissinger about $250,000 a year. Which is one reason he is said to be the highest-priced speaker on the global lecture tour.

Surfacing in Manila, Kissinger was asked by Mrs. Ferdinand Marcos, wife of the Filipino president, why he himself did not run for the White House. The German-born Kissinger said, "There is a constitutional barrier (being foreign-born) against my becoming president."

HE SMILED AND added: "There is no barrier against my becoming tyrant."

Back in Washington, the Kalb brothers, Marvin and Bernard, both television reporters, had written a book about the man they covered. A caviar reception was held at a hotel for publication of the book named "Kissinger" and the man appeared and the publisher rushed up gushing his thanks and asked how Kissinger liked "Kissinger."

"I have not read the book," Kissinger said. "But I like the title."

The Kissinger wit can also be beyond humor. Asked why, during an Eastern European trip he made with his teen-age son David, he had not brought the boy along on a stop at the site of the World War II Nazi death camp of Auschwitz, Kissinger, who is Jewish, said: "Enough of my relatives have been to Auschwitz."

Kissinger, a divorced man who remarried while serving in Richard M. Nixon's White House, was standing one day in 1975 with President Ford and noticing the stream of attractive young ladies being escorted by David Hume Kennerly, Ford's White House photographer and friend. Kissinger sighed.

"Mr. President," he told Ford, "I was a bachelor in the wrong administration."

Kissinger has his own code of conduct. He once took noticeable offense at a dispatch filed by a reporter who had flown with Kissinger on many a shuttle.

"YOU," KISSINGER told him, "are not a reporter. You are a fiction writer. I nominate you for the Pulitzer Prize for fiction."

"Couldn't you make it the prize for poetry?" asked the reporter.

"No," said Kissinger. "Suffer."

Later, it turned out the reporter's dispatch was correct. Kissinger's way of saying so was to send a photo of himself to the reporter that Christmas. The picture was signed by Kissinger with the message: "To my favorite poet."

Q When will First National begin offering this new investment?

A. Within thirty to sixty days, you'll be able to open a new money market account at First National, and take advantage of high interest rates, liquidity, and investment security of FDIC Insurance.

Q How will Midland benefit from First National's money market accounts?

A. Funds deposited in First National are used locally - not sent to financial centers in other parts of the country. Your locally deposited funds finance the credit needs of our community and region.

Although the calendar says October, it already seems like mid-winter for these skiers on Killington Mountain in Vermont. When the resort officially opened earlier this month, it sported nearly two inches of the real stuff along with its man-made snow.

Central American scene improving

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — The troubled states of Central America have turned the corner in their struggle for political stability, U.S. officials say.

Citing what they call positive trends, U.S. diplomats say the efforts of leftist guerrillas to overthrow Central American governments have peaked and that the greatest danger now is economic failure.

Major changes have taken place in the region in the last 12 months, some the result of U.S. diplomacy, aid funds and military assistance, and others resulting from internal political developments. The United States has forged an alliance with democratically elected governments to isolate the Cuban-backed Sandinista regime in Nicaragua and meanwhile — most experts agree — has improved its image internationally.

Ambassadors and diplomats in Central America and Washington cite the following changes, all of them, from the viewpoint of U.S. officials, for the good:

—In El Salvador, a heavy turnout of voters last March replaced a military-civilian junta with a civilian government. Although a violent guerrilla war has not abated, U.S. experts believe the rebels cannot overthrow the government and tentative signs of interest in a negotiated settlement are apparent.

—In Honduras, voters last November also replaced a military ruler with a civilian president, whose government has taken a hard line against Salvadoran guerrillas operating in Honduran territory, denying them sanctuary along the border with El Salvador.

—In Guatemala, the military dictatorship of Gen. Romeo Lucas Garcia, judged one of the harshest and most corrupt in Latin America, was replaced in a coup last March by reform-minded Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, whose policies have curtailed political killings in the capital and widened government control of the battlefields in a conflict marked by charges of massacres on both sides.

—In Costa Rica, the new president, Luis Alberto Monge, elected in February, has emerged as the leader of a movement to unite the region's democratically elected governments against what he sees as a Marxist-led threat to their stability.

El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica have developed close ties to the United States — which is providing them with funds, arms and U.S. trainers for their security forces — and are cooperating in opposing insurgencies.

Meanwhile, Nicaragua, which the United States considers an exporter of leftist revolution, increasingly isolated and almost broke, is now haunted by fears of what it believes will be a U.S.-backed invasion.

One result of the year's developments is an improved U.S. image abroad. Said Edward Gonzalez, professor of political science at the University of California, Los Angeles, and a consultant on Latin American affairs with the Rand Corp.:

"A year ago, the United States was involved in El Salvador with what appeared to be a very oppressive regime; since then we have had the events of the March 28 election. And Nicaragua, which seems to be moving toward the Cuban model, has lost support abroad as the social democrats of South America and Europe, which backed it, have become disillusioned."

Let's Stick To The Facts!

THE OTHER CANDIDATE FOR DISTRICT CLERK HAS PUBLISHED MISINFORMATION ABOUT MADGE WALLIS'S OPERATION OF OUR DISTRICT CLERK'S OFFICE. IN ADDITION, HER CLAIM TO HAVE SERVED AS EXECUTIVE SECRETARY OF THE SEVENTH JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATIVE DISTRICT IS INCORRECT: IT HAS NEVER HAD A DESIGNATED SECRETARY.

The true facts-taken from the official personnel records of Midland County, and the statistics complied for the Texas Judicial Conference-are these:

"Turnover"

Every employer in Midland-public or private-has experienced turnover in employees. County pay scales are much lower than the oil industry, and the turnover in all county offices has been high. BUT THERE IS NO COUNTY OFFICE INCLUDING THE SMALLEST WHICH ONLY EMPLOYS 3 DEPUTIES WHERE THE TURNOVER HAS BEEN"ONLY 3" IN THE PAST 3½ YEARS. THAT CLAIM IS NOT TRUE, NOR IS IT TRUE THAT THE TURNOVER IN THE DISTRICT CLERK'S OFFICE HAS BEEN 34 IN THAT PERIOD. Here are the true facts, and the reasons why:

Retired as county employee	3
Part-time temporary students	2
Transferred to another county office because of need or higher pay	5
Family reasons-needed at home	2
Worked only one day	1
Resigned for better-paying job in local industries	4
Terminated as unsuitable	4
Moved from Midland	2
TOTAL	23

These have been unusual years for our city, but the "turnover" in the Distreict Clerk's office has been FAR LESS than in most county offices and for reasons impossible to anticipate!

Increase In Volume of Work

The statement has been made by the other candidate that the Judicial Council reported only 30% increase in caseload of the courts since 1974, when Madge Wallis was first elected. Those figures actually show that 2,056 cases were filed in 1975; 3,246 in 1981-OR AN INCREASE OF 60%. But that's only part of the picture: with changes in laws, the addition of two new District Courts and more duties assigned to the District Clerk, the overall work-load of the District Clerk's office has increased by THREE HUNDRED PERCENT in those years!

Employee Efficiency

Madge Wallis and her duputies have managed to take care of the tremendous increase in workload with the addition of only 4 deputies-from 8 to 12-by working harder and being cross-trained to perform all functions...saving the taxpayers tens of thousands of dollars each year. Efficiency shows in results, and Midland County has the best District Clerk's office in West Texas.

Accounting Procedures

Every county office follows and uses the same accounting procedures, which are established by the County Auditor for the most accurate and efficient accounting of monies received and disbursed. Anyone who is District Clerk must follow those procedures.

NOW, YOU DO KNOW!

THE ULTIMATE TEST IS WHAT THOSE WHO HAVE THE MOST CONTACT WITH THE DISTRICT CLERK'S OFFICE THINK ABOUT HOW MADGE WALLIS TAKES CARE OF THEIR-AND YOUR-BUSINESS. AND THE OVERWHELMING MAJORITY ENDORSE MADGE WALLIS FOR RE-ELECTION BECAUSE THEY KNOW THE EFFICIENT, COURTEOUS, CAPABLE PUBLIC SERVANT SHE IS. THE CONTINUED SERVICE OF MADGE WALLIS AS OUR DISTRICT CLERK IS MORE IMPORTANT TO ALL OF US THAN PARTISAN POLITICS OR POLITICAL PARTIES...OR FALSE STATEMENTS ABOUT HER EXCELLENT RECORD, WHICH PROVES HER GREAT ABILITY AND DEDICATION.

Let's Keep The Best! Re-Elect
MADGE WALLIS

Democrats not out of the running yet

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A surge of support last week for Democratic challengers from New Jersey to California has raised the possibility for the first time that Democrats might recapture control of the Senate in next Tuesday's election.

Democratic National Chairman Charles T. Manatt Tuesday said the likelihood of a five-seat shift was "remote," and a White House official called the possibility "academic."

But campaign specialists in both parties said the Democratic challengers went into the final week of the campaign within striking range — 8 points or less — in five states, and another four or five seats were not much further out of reach.

By contrast, only three Democratic-held seats appeared to be in any comparable degree of jeopardy, and trends last week in two of the three races favored the Democrats.

Republicans now hold a 54-45 majority, with retiring Independent Sen. Harry F. Byrd of Virginia adding a 46th vote to the Democratic caucus. With Vice President George Bush available to cast a tie-breaking vote for the Republicans, Democrats would need a net gain of five seats to regain the majority they lost for the first time in 26 years in 1980.

That seemed a practical impossibility, because only 13 Republican seats are up for election this year and most of the incumbents appeared upset-proof.

But a pattern of erosion, apparently linked to economic worries, hit Republican incumbents in Connecticut, Missouri, New Jersey and New Mexico and spilled over to the California race for the seat of retiring Republican Sen. S.I. Hayakawa, moving all those contests into the potential turnover category.

Larger, but for the Democrats not insuperable, margins were reported in Delaware, Rhode Island, Vermont, Minnesota, Wyoming and Utah, all held by GOP senators seeking re-election.

The same trend boosted most of the 19 Democratic incumbents facing the voters next Tuesday. Only two are now viewed as shaky — Howard W. Cannon of Nevada and John Melcher of Montana. The third vulnerable "Democratic seat" is that of Byrd's in Virginia, where Democratic Lt. Gov. Dick Davis was reported edging slightly ahead of Republican Rep. Paul Trible.

A Republican campaign official conceded that "our candidates took a lot of fire last week," but said that reports early this week indicated the races had stabilized over the weekend or even turned around.

They cited Sen. Dave Durenberger of Minnesota and Malcolm Wallop of Wyoming as examples of incumbents who had regained the momentum in their races, after challengers Mark Dayton and Rodger McDaniel had drawn close.

But, from all reports, Sens. Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, John C. Danforth of Missouri and Harrison H. Schmitt of New Mexico remain vulnerable. So do San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, who is vying with Gov. Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr. for the open California seat, and Rep. Millicent Fenwick, opposed by millionaire businessman Frank R. Lautenberg, for the open New Jersey seat.

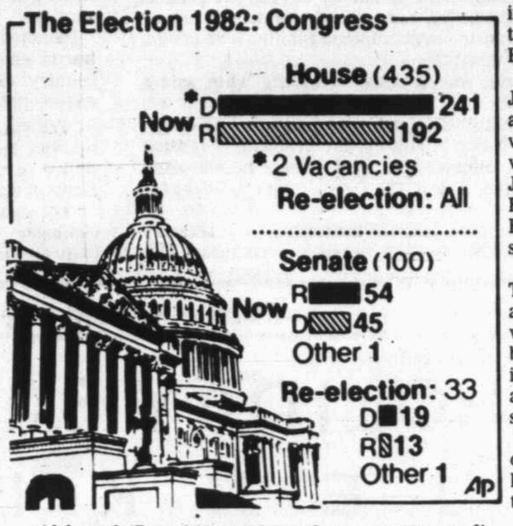

Weicker, whose opponent is Democratic Rep. Toby Moffett, and Wilson have been in close fights all the way, but Fenwick's chances apparently withered under a massive, self-financed Lautenberg TV blitz. Danforth and Schmitt are outspending their challengers, state Sen. Harriett Woods and state attorney general Jeff Bingaman, but still saw their leads evaporate.

Schmitt's drop was so precipitous that Democratic pollster Peter D. Hart Tuesday pronounced his chances "gone," although Republicans insisted that his new TV ads are building his lead.

Hart, at a breakfast with reporters, also noted the irony that most of the Republicans who appear freshly vulnerable are from the moderate-liberal wing of the GOP, not from the ranks of President Reagan's hard-core supporters.

In addition to Weicker, Danforth, Durenberger, Fenwick and Wilson, others who fit that category and whose re-election cannot be consider assured at this point are Sens. John H. Chafee of Rhode Island, opposed by former state attorney general Julius C. Michaelson, and Robert T. Stafford of Vermont, challenged by former Vermont secretary of state James A. Guest.

One reason those moderate Republicans are in trouble, Hart said, is that the Republican message has been "schizophrenic." The national GOP advertising effort and Reagan's own campaigning have been keyed to the message, "stay the course," he said, while these candidates have been "hiding from the big issue" and trying to win re-election on their own reputations and records.

Although Republicans have been pretty confident of retaining their hold over the Senate after next Tuesday's election, recent added support for Democrats in several states indicates that control isn't totally in Republican hands yet.

Calling all denture wearers... School needs teeth for repair

ELEANOR, W.Va. (AP) — The Putnam County Vocational Technical Center is trying to put the bite on denture wearers.

Raymond L. Ortega, dental laboratory technician instructor at the school, is asking residents of the area to donate their unwanted dentures for study and repair by students.

"The ones we use are just so old," Ortega said. "We've repaired them and re-repaired them."

Ortega said about 20 sets of chompers are needed for the six students enrolled in his program, the only one of its kind in West Virginia. The teeth don't even need to be in particularly good shape, Ortega said.

"We'll take any and look over them," he said. "If they're real bad, we'll throw them out. But we need some to repair."

Reagan's partisanship could end up hurting party

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — What price partisanship?

That question is being asked in the final days of the 1982 campaign as Ronald Reagan identifies himself more and more as the leader of the Republican Party and less and less as the president of all the people.

By engendering bitter polarization between the parties during the campaign, Reagan runs the risk of facing intensified polarization and, therefore, rejection of his legislative initiatives in the next Congress.

Pollster Peter Hart's survey work for the Democrats hardly qualifies him as an unbiased observer of the political scene. Yet, there is some validity to his assertion that Reagan's "biggest mistake" of the campaign occurred "when he gave up the presidency to become titular head of the Republican Party."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill has accused Reagan of being the "most partisan" of the seven presidents he has dealt with. Democratic National Chairman Charles Manatt has charged that Reagan has become "president of the Republicans" rather than president of the United States.

Even individuals in his own party question the wisdom of Reagan, who has enjoyed strong bi-partisan support in the nation, narrowing his appeal through his campaign rhetoric. While it is not unusual for presidents to indulge in increased partisanship during election campaigns, Reagan has in the past two months become, as Hart suggests, "terribly, terribly partisan" and somewhat negated the appeal he had among non-Republicans.

The Reagan political message in the campaign has been that the acute economic problems of the nation are the result of actions taken in the past by Democrats in Congress and the White House — that he and the Republicans are blameless for 10 percent unemployment, a nationwide rash of bankruptcies, slow growth and continuing recession.

The president's last press conference was opened with a lengthy political statement. When, last week, he signed a jobs bill initiated by the Democrats, he banned all Democrats from the ceremony. He persuaded NBC and CBS to grant him national television time to make his supposed non-partisan "Stay the Course" economic speech, which turned out to be highly partisan.

An Analysis

In Hart's view, Reagan is going to find it difficult getting Democrats "back aboard" to work with him in Congress after the election. The president's problems will be compounded if, as Hart anticipates, the Democrats make a net gain of 25 seats in the House and two in the Senate.

Ironically, however, the big losers in a campaign whose stiff partisanship is dictated from the White House could be a half dozen or more moderate Republicans running for the Senate. Those Republicans, many of whom have only reluctantly supported Reagan's economic program in Congress, are heavily dependent upon winning the votes of Democrats and independents if they are to be elected.

In Hart's view, such mainstream Republicans as Sens. David Durenberger in Minnesota, John Chafee in Rhode Island, Robert Stafford in Vermont, Lowell Weicker in Connecticut and John Danforth in Missouri and senatorial nominee Millicent Fenwick in New Jersey are in trouble as election day nears. They may become the "true victims of Reaganomics," according to Hart.

Most of those candidates have sought to keep Reagan at a distance as they battle aggressive challengers.

School busing quadruples in 40 years

While the percent of pupils bused quadrupled over 40 years, the actual number increased even more dramatically—from 3.8 million in 1937-38 to 21.5 million in 1979-80. The cost also rose—from $20.07 per pupil per year in 1937-38 to $178.55 for 1979-80.

Technological education worries Cranston

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Warning that U.S. schools already are producing "a generation of illiterates" in science and technology, Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston says proposed funding cuts in education threaten "national survival."

The California Democrat, who is Senate minority whip, said a "scientific gap" now exists with the Soviet Union and that it will worsen if the Reagan administration reduces educational funding.

"We have no national policy to address the problem," Cranston said Wednesday night in Albuquerque, N.M., where he was campaigning on behalf of Toney Anaya, the Democratic candidate for governor.

"In fact, we have abandoned federal leadership in practically every relevant area, from basic research to teaching resources," he said. "We need programs, training and equipment. Facing these issues is not just a matter of national pride, it is a matter of national survival."

He noted that Soviet schools are "turning out five times the number of engineers annually," 300,000 compared to 60,000 for this country. Japan, a major trade competitor, produced 24,000 more engineers last year than the United States.

"Critical, sophisticated new growth industries — computers, robotics and biotechnology to name a few — demand workers skilled in technology and a populace conversant with the rudiments of science," he said.

"Yet we are graduating a generation of illiterates in science and technology," Cranston said. "The implications for national productivity are staggering."

Line between married, unmarried lifestyles grows fainter in Sweden

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — More men and women live together outside marriage in Sweden than anywhere else in the world.

A government study that recently determined this came hardly as a jolt to Swedes, who for the past two decades have considered the practice perfectly normal.

In fact, it is highly abnormal nowawdays for Swedish men and women to marry without having lived together beforehand. Experts estimate that 99 percent of a current group of newlyweds shared quarters before marriage, in contrast to only 1 percent in the 1950s.

The government's report on the study said about 20 percent of all couples living together, 55 percent of them in the 18-24 age bracket, are not married.

The Swedes have even invented a word for cohabiting men and women — "sambo," from the Swedish words for "living together." "Sambo" has been in general usage since the 1960s.

Among the trend-setters is Liberal Party leader Ola Ullsten, former foreign minister whose "sambo," Charlotte von Redlich, sometimes accompanied him on official trips.

Swedish press reports said their hosts on trips to Egypt and Zimbabwe, in Africa, embarrassingly groped for the proper dinner-seating arrangements and hotel accommodations.

Social scientists have been busy trying to explain the tendency away from marriage vows.

Some say the main reasons are the introduction of birth control pills and mid-1970s laws granting abortion upon request. Others insist the phenomenon evolved because this Protestant though secularized nation of 8.3 million has no deep-rooted Christian ethic stigmatizing cohabitation as "living in sin."

Other important factors include the growing equality for women in society, the labor market during the economic boom of the 1960s and the general youth rebellion that swept Europe and North America in that decade.

Legislators have been unable to keep pace with the social developments and as a result unmarried couples are not quite on an equal legal footing with married ones.

Until a recent Swedish Supreme Court ruling, legal protection has been particularly poor for unmarried housewives without incomes of their own. They had no right, as by marriage, to joint property in case of separation or death.

Three years ago, Ingrid Eriksson, now 40, and her cohabiting partner decided to split up after 17 years together and three children. She had reared the children and taken care of the household, but as the sole wage-earner he owned the house. Ms. Eriksson had to move out and go on welfare until she found a job as a cleaning woman.

The Supreme Court agreed with two lower courts that Ms. Eriksson should get half the couple's home and property.

"An interesting and surprising side effect was that the test case also helped improve the situation for divorcing, married housewives," said lawyer Lloyd Kaiding, Ms. Eriksson's attorney.

He explained that a married woman previously had no right to joint property if a contract giving the husband exclusive control of his belongings had been established before marriage. Two such cases have gone in the women's favor since Ms. Eriksson's court victory.

Last December, a government-appointed family law committee proposed matrimonial reform to replace Sweden's marriage code that dates back to 1920.

The proposal, to be submitted late next year to the Riksdag, Sweden's parliament, virtually would eliminate legal differences between unmarried and married couples. Kaiding, a member of the law committee, said the principal change would be to put into law the court decision in the Eriksson case.

Critics of the reform, like Anders Agell, law professor at Uppsala University just north of Stockholm, contend such extensive laws favoring cohabitators is not an admirable goal.

"Such legislation could boost the cohabitation tendency even further and encourage couples not to marry," said Agell, author of several books on the legal status of cohabiting couples.

Fear of deadly tricks causes trick-or-treating to be cancelled

By The Associated Press

Dozens of cities around the nation, fearing deadly tricks in their children's treats, are canceling Halloween doorbelling because of a spreading wave of sabotaged products showing up on store shelves.

Reports of sabotage were widespread Wednesday, almost one month after the deaths of seven people in the Chicago area who took cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol. The tainted products ranged from candy corn to punch and soda.

On Wednesday, the communities of Ascension Parish and Hammond, La., Vineland, N.J., Providence, R.I., and Mogadore, Ohio, became the latest among at least 40 cities to ban traditional trick-or-treating.

Carey Frederic, president of the Ascension Parish's governing body, said the ban was "just for this year in order to prevent anyone from getting hurt or any kid getting any sort of contaminated object."

"With the way the kooks are running around this year, something needed to be done to keep the situation from getting out of hand," he said.

"I FEEL like the Grinch — you know, the one who stole Christmas," said councilman Paul Sharp after Hammond's decision to impose the trick-or-treat ban.

But Sharp said least a dozen parents had called him to say they were frightened after the Chicago deaths and by the rash of "copycat" poisonings nationwide since.

In areas where door-to-door visits are still being allowed, Dr. James Mowry, director of the Indiana Poison Center, urged parents to be sure candy is wrapped and properly sealed. He said children should not accept fruit or homemade treats except from people they know well.

"It's easy to detect a pin or needle or razor blade in an apple, but if it has been contaminated by a drug, there's no way to tell," said Mowry.

Indianapolis Mayor William Hudnut asked children to collect money for the needy instead of treats. A Des Moines, Iowa, police group urged that officers in uniform escort trick-or-treaters.

Byerly Hospital in Hartsville, S.C., took out a newspaper ad Wednesday inviting trick-or-treaters to bring in bags of candy for X-rays to detect any metal objects.

HOUSTON AND Reno, Nev., hospitals also offered the service.

A mother in Stillwater, Okla., Kristi Clapp, urged giving toys instead of candy.

"One bag of toys will go a long way toward keeping goblins happy," Mrs. Clapp said. "Besides, there's no waste. If nobody knocks on your door for Halloween, you can just save the toys for next year."

Lawmakers in Trenton, N.J., have passed a bill requiring a mandatory jail term for anyone who hands out contaminated Halloween candy. Gov. Thomas Kean was to sign the bill today.

More incidents surfaced around the country of "copycat" product tampering, apparently mimicking but unrelated to the Tylenol deaths.

Florida authorities reported "isolated incidents" of tainted products in Fort Pierce, Juno Beach, Avon Park, Pensacola and Highlands County. Three people were admitted to hospitals for observation, but no one was seriously injured.

"IT'S A copycat crime and the world is full of kooks," said Juno Beach Police Chief Robert DiSavino, who said some kind of petroleum compound was injected into a carton of Tropicana brand orange juice purchased by one of his officers, burning the policeman's throat and stomach.

Authorities in Pensacola, meanwhile, said a woman found a sewing needle in a candy bar. In Avon Park, a woman suffered minor mouth burns from a 10-ounce bottle of punch spiked with ketone, an acetone substance, police said.

Fort Pierce police said a pregnant woman took liquid antacid that contained an alcohol solution.

In Sandtown, Del., federal officials were examining a bottle of soda that smelled of ammonia. A convenience store clerk who drank from the bottle complained of mouth burns.

In Atmore, Ala., a 69-year-old woman was released from a hospital after being treated for caustic throat and mouth burns she got after she ate a candy bar. Police were investigating.

Suffolk County, N.Y., police advised people who bought candy corn at a toy store to inspect their packages carefully, after a woman found pins in several candy pieces bought at the store Sunday.

IN COLORADO, 34-year-old William Sinkovic, who was poisoned by Extra-Strength Excedrin laced with mercuric chloride, was "feeling better" Wednesday after surgery and blood transfusions, said Aurora Community Hospital nursing supervisor Nettie Fendrick.

Authorities reported no progress in the search for whoever spiked the capsules.

The surgeon who removed a lump of mercuric chloride from Sinkovic's stomach Tuesday said the patient came "extremely close" to dying. Dr. John DeLauro and other doctors also twice replaced the entire volume of blood from Sinkovic, and he remained on dialysis.

Tom Wilson, 28, of Lorain, Ohio, was told Wednesday that two of seven Excedrin capsules he turned over to the Lorain County Crime Lab were contaminated with a caustic substance similar to a toilet-bowl cleaner. Although Wilson said both he and his wife became mildly sick after taking the medication, neither had sought treatment.

Wilson said it would be best for all capsules to be removed from stores until tamper-resistant packaging is introduced.

"There's a lot of sickos out there. They're getting their courage up because they see other people are getting away with it," he said.

Consumers may be able to purchase telephones

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers served by Bell System phone companies will be offered a chance to buy the telephones in their homes, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. says.

AT&T officials confirmed Wednesday that all its Bell companies will be asked to develop sales plans to be submitted to state regulators before next March.

Bell companies in three states — California, New York and Oregon — recently began selling the leased equipment. AT&T is now telling all Bell companies to follow suit.

"We are already offering consumers in three states the opportunity to purchase telephone sets installed in their homes and we will be extending this same program to other states around country," said AT&T spokesman Pic Wagner.

State utility commissions must approve the sale of existing equipment, and purchase prices will vary from state to state.

But officials predict states will likely approve the sale of telephones because the move will alleviate some of the regulatory problems expected to arise following the scheduled 1984 break-up of AT&T.

AT&T agreed to give up its 22 wholly owned Bell companies as a result of an antitrust settlement with the Justice Department.

Explaining AT&T's decision on selling telephones, Wagner said, "The sales programs will have to be developed by each Bell company and state regulators."

He noted, "The consumers have been saying for quite some time they wanted the option to buy and state regulators have indicated they were interested in the Bell companies offering that option."

In a separate announcement, AT&T disclosed in New York Wednesday that it had reached an agreement with Sears, Roebuck & Co. to have that retailer begin selling its telephone equipment. That program applies only to new telephones.

According to Wagner, there were roughly 182 million telephones in the United States at the end of 1981. The Bell System served about 140 million of those phones.

Most consumers lease their Bell phones, paying a monthly charge to their telephone company.

Consumers have had the option since the mid-1970's of purchasing new telephones from a variety of manufacturers. But relatively few have done so, perhaps, regulators suggest, because they do not realize the cost of leasing a telephone or they prefer the convenience of knowing Bell will fix a broken phone.

Wagner declined Wednesday to provide details of the nationwide sales plan, saying that information would probably be released later today.

But sources, who asked to remain unidentified, said the sales programs will feature guaranteed prices for telephone probably for about two years, as well as an option to buy on an installment plan.

Purchase prices will vary from state to state because of different accounting and depreciation policies, but will probably end up in the same general range. Rotary dial phones, for example, are being sold for $19 in California, $25 in Oregon and $35 in New York. Push-button telephones are going for between $34 to $50.

Those consumers who elect to purchase the phones they now lease will see a reduction in their monthly service charge.

The sources said consumers who choose not to purchase their telephones will probably be offered a two-year leasing guarantee.

Under the government's antitrust settlement, the Bell companies will be required to get out of the equipment leasing business when AT&T is broken up in 1984. A new AT&T subsidiary will be created to assume ownership of leased equipment in the hands of consumers.

While consumers will still be able to lease their phones from the new subsidiary, the leasing costs may rise substantially, the sources said.

AT&T's decision to launch a sales program nationwide comes after years of debate on the issue before the Federal Communications Commission as well as state commissions throughout the country.

Sitting-duck society

Cyanide in Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules in the Chicago area. Mercuric chloride in Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules in Colorado where rat poison also was found in an Anacin capsule. Acid in eyedrops in Texas. Society is being threatened by poisonings from all directions, it seems.

Finding an appropriate and adequate response to these incidents will test society's ingenuity. Locating and arresting suspects is only the first difficult task because evidence of tampering likely will be circumstantial. Meting out punishment to those convicted of the poisonings will test the court system.

It's obvious that many of the incidents around the country are the work of "copycats" who drew their inspiration from the original Tylenol poisonings in Chicago. That doesn't lessen the severity of the crimes.

The perpetrators prey on their victims who take the medications hoping to find relief and, instead, find death or injury. The obvious intent of the perpetrators in contaminating the products is to kill or to injure. They apparently find a sadistic form of satisfaction in their inhuman activities.

Society must fight back, to protect itself and to punish those responsible for the poisonings and the fear the incidents have created. Already a number of pharmaceutical firms are preparing to change the packaging of their products to make contamination more difficult. That undoubtedly will increase the cost of the products, but the additional expense will be slight when measured against the peace of mind it will afford.

While the circumstances surrounding these poisonings unavoidably restrict the speed of the investigations, both the police efforts and subsequent court hearings after suspects are arrested should be given priority status.

Individuals charged with these crimes should take priority in the court system and be tried before other criminals already scheduled for trial. Judges should view warily legal delaying tactics and unwarranted appeals procedures. The message should come through loudly and clearly: American society will not condone this type of sadistic behavior.

It may be that modern-day life makes society a sitting duck for this type of crime, but Americans do not have to roll over and play dead for sick criminals.

Suit that's not funny

At first glance it may have seemed amusing that the people of Eniwetok are complaining that they have been robbed of their initiative because the United States has given them surplus food handouts for 33 years. But it's no joke.

The lost-initiative complaint is included in a $500 million legal suit against the American government. Residents of the tiny Marshall Islands atoll in the Pacific are asking those monumental damages on the grounds they have been the victims of neglect and broken promises by Uncle Sam.

The period in question runs from World War II, when the Eniwetokese were evacuated by the United States Navy, and when they returned home two years ago. That is when they said their independent way of life was injured by the free food from Uncle Sam. Sounds ridiculous, but that is what the suit says. Two points should be made about this episode.

— First, some of those suing were not even around when the evacuation took place, or for years thereafter. When the Eniwetokese were shipped to Ujelang atoll, there were 142 of them. Now there are 706, so it cannot be said all of them suffered for all that period.

— Second, if a people can get damages for robbery of their initiative, what kind of a precedent will it set? Could not some welfare recipient in the United States sue because his initiative has been wrecked by food stamps or other forms of government aid?

If this seems bizarre, so does the lost-initiative phase of the Eniwetok legal action.

Another View:

Notes on the Depression

Some people are saying that economic conditions in the United States today are like those during the Great Depression of the 1930s. For some individuals that may be true. But as a valid generalization, the notion needs a closer look.

In 1932, there were 14 million people unemployed in a population of about 124 million. If conditions today were like those of 1932, there would be 25 million unemployed in the nation today.

Anyone lacks understanding who does not see that things are bad for the unemployed breadwinner whose compensation payments have run out. But painful as they are, the tragedies, taken as a whole, are not on a scale with the crisis of 1932.

That famous series of emergency relief programs known as the New Deal was set in motion by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, his "Brain Trust" of liberal advisers and a mainly friendly, Democrat-controlled Congress in 1933.

Yet in 1937, FDR was saying that one-third of the nation was ill-clothed, ill-housed and ill-fed. Unemployment stayed above 15 percent. The New Deal's deficit spending and emergency relief programs were supplying large doses of first aid to the country. But they were unable to cure its ills.

The Depression lasted throughout the 1930s, resisting all of the New Dealers' hopeful and costly panaceas. Robert Goldston in "The Great Depression" wrote: "The New Deal reached stalemate in 1938 and was drowned by the war."

World War II, which began for the United States with the attack in Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941, also sank the Great Depression which had started, although scarcely anyone knew it at the time, with the Stock Market crash of Tuesday, Oct. 29, 1929, 12 years earlier.

No doubt one reason for comparing the current recession with the Great Depression is a desire to resume the crisis management of the New Deal, one form or another of which has ruled the federal government's economic policies since 1934.

In fact, deficit spending on ever expanding social programs continues even today to be a dominant policy of the federal government under the Reagan administration. President Ronald Reagan's much-maligned "cuts" are only reductions in the rate of total growth.

There is reason to believe that social spending can continue at a high level and that deficits can be reduced and the budget balanced at the same time if the nation is restored to economic health and increased productivity handles the burden.

But it is highly unlikely that the nation will be restored to economic health by an updated version of the New Deal, whatever it is called. The New Deal did not end the Depression. Unemployment was at 14.6 percent in 1940. Only when large-scale defense production began as the wars in Europe and Asia grew hotter in 1941 did the percentage fall to 9.9 percent.

Only after the United States was plunged into war and war production went into full gear with major plants working three shifts did unemployment fall to 4.7 percent in 1942.

President Reagan's program for recovery calls for stabilizing the economy and putting people back to work without another World War. That should be worth staying the course.

Social Security: Both good and bad news

WASHINGTON — Everyone agrees that the Social Security System is in trouble, and that sooner or later Congress must make the hard decisions on how best to keep it afloat. With its customary political timidity, Congress decided on "later" — meaning after next week's elections.

Jack Anderson

Lame duck sessions have a way of infusing courage and decisiveness into our congressional Hamlets. So if the subject of Social Security comes up, maybe the debate will be less fogged in political and emotional rhetoric than it was when re-election was the chief concern.

Congress will have plenty of ammunition for its debates on the touchy subject. The long-awaited recommendations of the National Commission on Social Security Reform might be in hand when the lame duck session convenes.

There will also be another nonpartisan study available to the lawmakers, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office. My associate Vicki Warren has seen a draft of the CBO report, and it contains both good and bad news.

The good news is that, despite the often hysterical prophesies of Henny Pennys in and out of Congress, the Social Security sky is not in imminent danger of falling. The bad news is that the system does need fixing, and no matter what curative action Congress and the administration decide on, a lot of people are going to be unhappy.

Here are the most important findings in the CBO draft report:

— CBO estimates that the Social Security Trust Fund will need $15 billion in additional revenue for fiscal 1984, which begins next Oct. 1. It will need an additional $3 billion in 1985. These are the sums necessary to keep the trust fund's reserves equal to 12 percent of its outlays, which is the minimum that will ensure timely payment of benefits.

— Temporarily, the pension fund can borrow money from the medical and disability funds, which are currently in the black. This stopgap measure will start next month, but cannot be continued beyond Jan. 1 without congressional approval. CBO reckons that the pension fund deficits will decline when the 1985 and 1986 payroll tax increases take effect, and disappear entirely when the 1990 increase begins.

— Rising health care costs will put the Medicare/hospital trust fund in the red at about the time the pension fund is breaking even. The medical fund "faces a substantial and growing deficit, beginning in the relatively near future," CBO warns. And the pension and disability funds will still be "vulnerable to poor economic performance" — that is, a recession — in the 1990s.

— One option would be to transfer the entire Medicare program to the Treasury for financing out of general revenues. This would allow the payroll deductions that now go into the hospital fund to be pumped into the pension and disability funds, keeping them in the black without either reducing benefits or further increasing payroll taxes.

But this would add to overall federal budget deficits as health care costs continue to rise.

— Aside from dumping its long-term loser, Medicare, in the Treasury's lap, Social Security's options for now are to raise the payroll taxes, cut benefits, or force every working American to join the system.

Congress will have to decide whether to trim the old folks' benefits — probably by cutting back on cost-of-living increases — or increase the younger generations' payroll taxes. The CBO report noted that the burden of reduced cost-of-living increases would fall most heavily on the oldest Social Security recipients, whose benefits were calculated on lower, pre-inflation earnings.

The CBO report suggests a combination of the two options, "minimizing the impact as much as possible for particular groups." One relatively painless possibility would be to make a portion of Social Security pensions taxable above a certain income level. This would spare the lowest-income beneficiaries.

WATCH ON WASTE — The Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission recently bought a fancy mini-computer to keep track of its caseload. It already had a computer, but officials described it as a clunker.

The new one is more of a Cadillac. It can schedule hearings, generate forms automatically, even analyze how staff attorneys spend their time. It cost $557,160, not counting $73,700 in rental fees while properly air-conditioned space was being prepared for its installation.

The rub is that there has been a dramatic decrease in occupational safety enforcement (and thus appeals to the commission) under the Reagan administration. There were 7,515 new cases in 1980, and only 988 this year. The current caseload could easily be handled by the old computer — or even by hand.

WARNING IGNORED?: On Thursday, Sept. 16 — only hours before the Israeli army allowed Christian Phalangists into the Palestinian refugee camps in West Beirut — a group of Arab ambassadors warned Assistant Secretary of State Nicholas Veliotis that a massacre of civilians was possible. The ambassadors were acting at the request of the Palestine Liberation Organization, which was depending on U.S. assurances that the refugees would be protected.

A State Department spokesman acknowledged that the meeting took place, but said, "We were monitoring the situation closely, and the first indication that something was wrong came on Friday morning."

Evidently, the situation was not being monitored closely enough.

GEORGE F. WILL

Stigler should win Nobel Prize for Wit

WASHINGTON — There should be a Nobel Prize for Wit. Physicists, chemists, economists we can, in a pinch, do without. Peace we generally do do without. Wit is indispensable. Were there a prize for wit, George Stigler of the University of Chicago would have won it years ago. Instead, he has had to settle for the prize in economics.

George F. Will

Saul Bellow, a Chicagoan, has a character in a novel say: "There's the big advantage of backwardness. By the time the latest ideas reach Chicago, they're worn thin and easy to see through." But in economics, ideas radiate from Chicago, from the likes of Frank Knight, Milton Friedman (Nobel Prize, 1976) and Stigler. The Nobel Prize for Economics was established in 1969. Eight of the eleven Americans who have won it have either studied or taught at the University of Chicago.

Describing the difference between himself and Friedman, Stigler says: "Milton's out to save the world and I'm out to understand it." Stigler has changed the world by seeding it with writings and students. No one has contributed more than he has, through his analysis of regulatory costs, to clarifying the logic and price of public choices.

Joseph Schumpeter, who was an economist of Stiglerian drollness, said that the remarkable fact about Japan's 1924 earthquake is that it was not blamed on capitalism. Stigler masterfully de-moralizes arguments about American capitalism, about what markets can do and what can be done — and at what cost — to markets.

And then there are his scalpel-like satires of certain kinds of academic arguments, particularly in the social sciences. His fictitious Prof. Sidney Siegel discovers the "law of sympathy." The law is that "sympathy is always at a maximum":

"Siegel produced suitable objects of sympathy under laboratory conditions and then measured the amount of sympathy they elicited. The objects of sympathy were a set of students who were subjected to torture ranging from a hotfoot to what the experimentalist describes as 'scenes difficult to view with composure even before the next of kin arrived.' As the measure of sympathy, each observer was asked to draw a coin from one of three buckets. These buckets contained pennies, nickles, and $20 gold pieces, and the observer was asked to withdraw a coin proportional to the sympathy he felt for the student in the iron cage. Siegel found that sympathy is always at a maximum: Whether the observer was laughing callously or sobbing in utter misery, he or she always withdrew a $20 gold piece, which under the conditions of the experiment he or she was entitled to keep."

In 1962, a real-life professor argued that automobile model changes are wasteful — that if consumers had been content with 1949 automobiles, they would have been saving more than $700 per car by 1961 (lower advertising costs, lower retooling costs, etc.). Stigler suggested applying the same analysis to the professors' industry: publishing.

"Why must we have 'The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich' when 'The Rise and Fall of the Dutch Republic' is a better book?...What, precisely, are the respects in which Tennessee Williams surpasses Shakespeare?"

Economics, he notes, can not answer such questions about values. But economists can demonstrate that if readers had been content with the books published prior to 1900, huge savings would have accrued: no more authors' royalties, lower advertising costs, no costly setting of new type.

Stigler applied the same principle to newspapers. There is nothing new under the sun, so why not just print lots of papers from 1900, once and for all? These newspapers would have the standard smattering of news about crime, the Boers, the Irish question. These newspapers would be cheaper, and "there would be a substantial reduction in efforts by people to get into the news."

"There would," he concedes, "be some delay in the dissemination of new knowledge....(but) keep two facts in mind: Most new knowledge is false; and the news got around in Athens."

The science of economics connects ends and means. Ends cost nothing to imagine; means usually are costly. So economics is called "the dismal science," which makes Stigler cross: "I resent the phrase, for only young children should get angry at a corpus of knowledge that prevents hopeless but costly endeavors." Stigler's teacher, Frank Knight, said: "Anything that is inevitable is ideal." Knight's axiom is paradoxical, wise, witty, adult — like Knight's honored students.

LETTERS

Required prayer is just as bad

To The Editor:

I wholeheartedly agree with one statement in Ms. Crisman's letter concerning school prayer: "This can't happen in America. Can't it? Such a decision opens the door for laws that could be enforced."

Ms. Crisman is worried that court decisions could possibly, "Cause one to be expelled or even arrested for praying in public." I worry about just the opposite! What's the possibility that one could be expelled from school, or arrested for not praying? If we left it up to the moral majority, that situation could very possibly happen!

Contrary to what many people think, there is no law whatsoever that denies anyone the right to pray when and where they want to. Nothing can stop a student from silently praying during his or her free time or even during class periods. But wouldn't such time be better spent studying than in praying for good grades?

What is not allowed in schools is organized religion. Any authorized time set aside for prayer meetings, Bible study or prayer recitation is organized religion and therefore specifically prohibited in the Constitution under separation of church and state.

When I was in the 5th grade, we were forced by our teacher to participate in daily Bible readings. We had to read aloud passages from the Christian Bible. Jews, Moslems, Buddhists or atheists were never taken into account. We all had to read from the same book. The same could easily happen again today. Which god would organized prayers be directed toward? Maybe to settle that question each religious sect would be allowed to separate into individual groups for their prayer meetings. But the problem with that would be that the minority religions could easily be discriminated against.

Schools are places for the study of facts and scientific reasoning — not a place for the vocalization of superstitious beliefs!

Helpful civilians

To The Editor:

As a member of the first arriving fire department crew at the Polo Park Apartments, I'd like to mention a few things publicly.

First, everyone applauds heroes. The civilians who evacuated residents acted responsibly and should be justly credited. We had civilian heroes at the Warwick Apartments too. These efforts are sincerely appreciated by first arriving crews.

Second, at Polo Park Apartments we had a severe fire condition. Your photographs of civilian efforts in a recent paper reflect some of my own frustration that night. My first job is to save lives, second, to save property.

I told the civilian with the garden hose to get back several times. So did my partner. How long does it take to put 640,000 gallons of water on a fire of that magnitude with a bucket or a garden hose? Sorry guys. Please stay out of our way.

Third, to the group of men that moved that last car, I apologize for the verbal abuse I used to get your attention. Your lives were clearly in danger and I was just doing my job.

I enlist the help of civilians regularly in medical emergencies and fires. I hope the public will recognize that the police and fire department does not want injured or dead heroes. I'll take a burned car over a burned body anyday.

Dedicated work

To The Editor:

Midland, Texas, should be proud of "Hospice of Midland, Inc." During the sickness of our loved one, Ina Bassham, the Hospice people were here any time we needed them day or night and even called to check on her besides coming by. They were here, doing their duty until the end.

My two daughters and I take this means to thank them for their dedicated work.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 28, the 301st day of 1982. There are 64 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 28, 1962, Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev announced he had ordered the withdrawal of Soviet missiles from Cuba.

On this date:

In 1492, Christopher Columbus discovered Cuba on his first voyage to the New World.

In 1886, the Statue of Liberty was dedicated in New York Harbor.

In 1971, the Senate rejected a proposed measure that would block President Nixon from using money for Indochina except for the purpose of withdrawing American troops.

Investigators seek women in effort to clear up Mulcahy's last days

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal and state investigators are trying to find two unidentified women as they attempt to trace the movements of former CIA analyst Kevin Mulcahy in the final days before his death.

The 40-year-old Mulcahy, whose charges triggered the federal prosecution of ex-CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson for aiding Libyan terrorists, was suffering from bronchitis, bronchial pneumonia and advanced emphysema, according to an autopsy Wednesday. Mulcahy was found dead Tuesday morning outside a rural Virginia motel cabin 90 miles west of Washington.

But Fairfax County, Va., Medical Examiner James C. Beyer postponed assigning a cause of death pending the outcome of toxicology tests, including some for poisons, requested by federal officials.

Assistant U.S. Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella Jr., who is prosecuting Wilson here, said the tests were requested because "we thought we might as well dot every i and cross every t."

The FBI said Wednesday it had opened an investigation of whether Mulcahy was killed in an attempt to obstruct justice since he was a potential government witness against Wilson.

Shenandoah County Commonwealth's Attorney William H. Logan Jr. said investigators were trying to determine Mulcahy's movements the night of his death and locate two women who visited him at the remote rural motel at the end of last week. Logan said, "We're trying to fill in all the gaps."

FBI spokesman Roger Young said bureau agents also were interviewing witnesses in an effort to learn the identity of the women and trace Mulcahy's movements in his last days.

"We're looking at everything pertinent to whether he was killed and, if so, whether it was related to his previous testimony to Congress and his impending testimony at the trial," Young said. "So far, we have nothing to point to that."

Logan said investigators theorized that Mulcahy took shelter somewhere after the last known sighting of him Monday evening, because his clothing and papers in his pockets were dry despite a rainstorm that lasted until nearly midnight Monday.

Logan said he had no solid leads to the identify of two women, believed to be in their 50s, who were seen arriving in a tan sedan for a 20-minute visit with Mulcahy several days after he checked into the motel on Oct. 20.

Mulcahy's father, Donald, could not identify the two women but added, "He spent a lot of time in that area and had friends up there."

Logan was also still trying to determine why Mulcahy apparently fired a shotgun inside the cabin Sunday morning.

Beyer said he found no visible wounds. He said he had not yet ruled out foul play but had no reason to suspect it.

Although Beyer withheld autopsy details, Mulcahy's brother, Brian, said a "relatively low" blood alcohol count of 0.11 percent also was found. Virginia's motor vehicle laws set the level of intoxication at 0.10 percent.

Meanwhile, reports about Mulcahy's last few days produced new questions.

Logan, Shenandoah County deputy sheriff Gary Dalton and David Stalker, owner of the Mountain View Motel Court, laid out the following chronology:

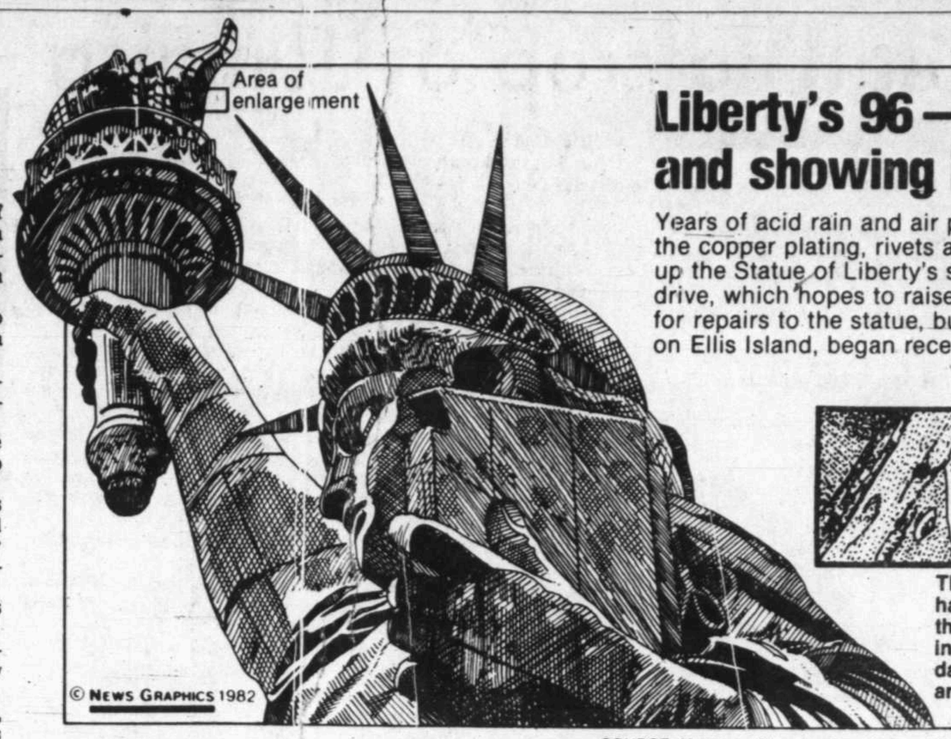

Mulcahy checked into a one-room cabin on Oct. 20, paying $200 for one month's rent. About two days later, the women visited him.

Sunday morning, Mulcahy apparently fired a shotgun blast which damaged the cabin's front door and two windows.

Monday, Stalker noticed broken glass and demanded Mulcahy either hand over the shotgun or check out. Mulcahy agreed to check out and left a forwarding address for a rent refund. Mulcahy said he recently had been diagnosed as having cancer and wanted to get a second opinion in Charlottesville, Va.

At about 3 p.m. Monday, Stalker helped Mulcahy carry his heavier possessions to his pickup truck, after which Mulcahy returned to his cabin to rest.

At 5:30 p.m. Monday, Mulcahy left the cabin and turned over the keys to Stalker, who locked the cabin and left for home.

Liberty's 96 — and showing her age

Years of acid rain and air pollution have scarred the copper plating, rivets and iron bolts that make up the Statue of Liberty's skin. A fund-raising drive, which hopes to raise $230 million by 1986 for repairs to the statue, buildings and grounds on Ellis Island, began recently.

The statue is covered with hand-hewn copper sheets three-thirty-seconds of an inch thick. Areas of worse damage are the torch and arm.

Americans, Soviets open talks on grain sale

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators opened talks today in which U.S. Embassy officials said the American delegation was expected to offer to sell up to 23 million metric tons of corn and wheat to Moscow over the next year.

The talks are a follow-up to President Reagan's offer of increased grain sales to the Soviets — a move he said was to restore the U.S. reputation "as reliable suppliers."

Reagan, in a radio address earlier this month to farm belt states, also offered to guarantee the Soviets there would be no embargo on grain exports for at least six months on deliveries contracted for during November for delivery by May 31, 1983.

"They will probably be discussing amounts, prices and terms of sale, all the things you need to agree upon to close a deal," said U.S. Embassy spokesman Michael Bennett of the talks here.

Under existing trade agreements, the Soviet Union could purchase between a minimum of 6 million and a maximum of 8 million metric tons of U.S. grain a year without special U.S. permission. Reagan's offer was for an additional 15 million metric tons.

In 1979, President Carter ordered an embargo on U.S. grain exports to the Soviets in retaliation for their military intervention in Afghanistan. Reagan lifted the embargo.

Would-be hijacker finds the landing a little rough

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A would-be hijacker carrying a knife was shoved out the door of a TWA jumbo jet by a sheriff's deputy trainee Wednesday and was slightly injured in a 20-foot plunge to the concrete.

Trainee Dennis Robinson, due to graduate in December from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's academy, pushed the man out the door after the man forced his way onto St. Louis-bound Flight 72, said TWA director of public relations Dave Venz.

"I was in the right position," Robinson, 24, said after landing in St. Louis. "I had him where I wanted him. I just stood up and shoved him."

William Hoffman, 25, of Los Angeles was in stable condition at the jail ward of County-USC Hospital, where he was booked for investigation of attempted hijacking, said sheriff's Deputy Merlin Poppleton.

The would-be hijacker pushed his way past ticket gate agents and raced onto the L-1011 Lockheed Tristar where 97 passengers were seated, officials said. Among the passengers was Robinson, who was headed to Alton, Ill., to attend a funeral.

The man brandished a knife about three inches long and began banging on the cockpit door, which flight attendant Joy Williams had quickly closed and locked when she saw the man, Venz said.

"He was indicating he did not want to go to St. Louis," Venz said.

Pilot C. R. Baker summoned Robinson over the intercom to come forward. He knew the deputy was aboard because anyone carrying a weapon is required to identify himself to the pilot and Robinson had done so when he entered the aircraft, Venz said.

Robinson later said that he had pretended to be a concerned passenger trying to find out what was going on when he first confronted the man.

"He came pretty close, and I said, 'Sir, do you think you could open the door, I'm really hot.' He looked at me pretty funny, but he complied. I just grabbed for the knife and pushed him out the door," Robinson said.

"The next thing he knew he was sprawled on the ramp," Venz said.

'Ganja' leading crop of Jamaica

DUNCANS, Jamaica (AP) — Heaped at the end of an airstrip between the Jamaican coastal resorts of Montego Bay and Ocho Rios, a rusted DC-3, a stripped Piper Cub and an engineless Cessna lay in a field of red peppers.

"They were just too loaded down with dope," says Samuel Bazin, 24, a tour guide in the Montego Bay area. He says the field, adjacent to the blue-green waters of the Caribbean, is a well-known landing strip for planes picking up marijuana.

"Ganja," as the Jamaicans call it, is the island's number one crop.

Grown in the Jamaican interior by reclusive natives called Maroons, marijuana is being harvested now, and federal drug agents say most will be shipped or flown 700 miles north to hidden off-loading sites in southern Florida.

Those planes that don't make it — such as the three at Duncans — are often grounded through negligence and greed, locals say.

The marijuana is hastily transferred from the planes, which are looted of valuable airplane parts, before the well-to-do traffickers abandon the planes.

"It's just written off as a loss," says FBI special agent Jim Freeman in Miami. "It's the cost of doing business."

Freeman recently visited Kingston's police chief to plot a U.S.-Jamaican attack on the large-scale drug trade, which originates primarily in Colombia and Jamaica.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga says marijuana is still the island's chief source of revenue.

Officials estimate island ganja growers reap an estimated $1.1 billion annually — more than Jamaica's foreign debt — on about 2,000 acres of cultivated land.

In 1980, 97 suspected pot planes suffered crashed or were seized at island landings spots. That figure declined to 46 in 1981, Jamaican statistics indicate.

By September of this year, there have been 13 crashes or seizures — 10 in August, officials say.

But Jamaican authorities deny marijuana traffickers are active on this island this year.

"There's not much ganja around. California, that's where it is now, with their sensimilla," says Jamaican consul Sidney Abrahams in Miami. Sensimilla — seedless marijuana mostly grown in Northern California — is "better (quality) weed than that grown in Jamaica," he says.

But Freeman cautions: "Things aren't as quiet as some want us to believe."

At the Montego Bay airport, locals openly approach tourists outside the terminal with offers to sell "spliffs" — a cigar-sized marijuana cigarette. For $20, they offer ganja "guaranteed to make you fly."

Unemployment on the island is 35 percent. Prices for its top export commodities — bauxite, sugar and bananas — have fallen as much as 25 percent from 1980 levels.

The day before Seaga took office, the reserves in Jamaica's central bank reached zero, island officials said.

Seaga has said that without the island's marijuana underground business, his island nation would be bankrupt.

Marijuana "has almost been the lifeline, economically, in providing dollars and foreign exchange which the bank of Jamaica could not provide," the prime minister said in 1980.

U.S. agents suggest one way to cut that lifeline would be to spray the potent herbicide paraquat on Jamaican fields suspected of growing marijuana.

Drug Enforcement Administration chief Francis Mullen already has pleaded with Colombia to spray their primary marijuana-growing areas.

But Jamaicans disdain the idea, saying paraquat would probably kill more than marijuana.

U.N. motion seems to slow pace of Bahai executions

By The Associated Press

A U.N. resolution adopted six months ago appears to have slowed the pace of executions of members of the Bahai religious minority in revolutionary Iran, international Bahai leaders say.

"But we haven't seen an improvement in the overall treatment of Bahais," said Gerald Knight, one of those who has lobbied for U.N. action to stop what the Bahais describe as the bloody persecution of their fellow believers by Iran's Moslem leadership.

Last March 11, the U.N. Human Rights Commission adopted a resolution calling on the U.N. Secretariat to monitor what a subcommission report called the "perilous situation facing the Bahais in Iran."

Since then, 19 Iranian Bahais have been reported executed or murdered, Knight said. But in the months preceding the resolution several times as many Bahais had been reported killed.

"The very existence of such a resolution is useful because the Iranian government knows it is being watched," Knight, of the Bahais' U.N. liaison office in New York, said in an interview.

He said 116 Iranian Bahais, many of them national or local leaders, have been executed or otherwise slain since Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Islamic revolutionaries took power in Iran 3½ years ago, and 14 others have disappeared. About 200 are reported imprisoned.

In many of the executions, revolutionary courts accused the victims of spying for Israel — a charge the Bahais dismiss as preposterous.

The Iranian government has barred Bahais from government service, and has seized Bahai communal property and private property. It has closed down Bahai holy places and cemeteries, and has sought to intimidate Bahai adults and schoolchildren into recanting their faith, the Bahai International Community says.

Iranian Moslems regard Bahaism as heretical. It was founded in Iran a century ago by people who rejected the primacy of Islam, accepting instead the validity of many religious traditions, including Christian, Jewish and Moslem. Bahais believe in world unity, universal education and the equality of men and women, beliefs that can conflict with traditional Moslem attitudes.

The faith has spread throughout the world. Iran has an estimated 300,000 Bahais, although at least 10,000 are believed to have fled since 1979.

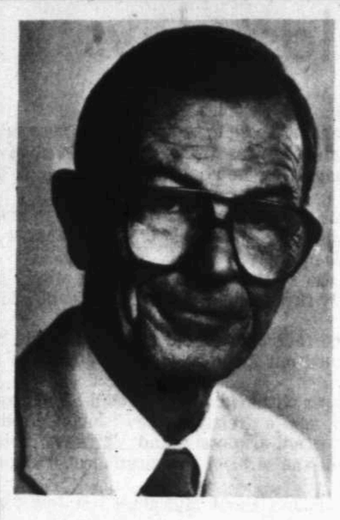

Amnesty International, echoing other human rights groups, says the imprisonment and execution of Iranian Bahais "appear...to indicate a deliberate government policy of religious persecution." But the Iranian revolutionaries deny it.

"If some Bahais have been executed, well then, many Moslems, Christians and Jews have been executed, too. That doesn't mean we're prosecuting Moslems for being Moslem, Christians for being Christian," said Mohammad Khonsari, a political adviser at the Iranian U.N. Mission, responsible for human rights matters.

At least 5,000 Iranians have been put to death since the revolution, many of them anti-government leftists.

Details of reports of alleged government oppression in Iran have been difficult to verify because Western reporters have little access to Iran.

Last December, eight of the nine members of the Bahais' national leadership in Iran — the National Spiritual Assembly — were executed in Tehran for alleged "espionage on behalf of foreign powers."

Midland High returning to P.E. Shotwell Stadium

New offense clicked last time Bulldogs traveled to Abilene

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

P.E. Shotwell Stadium was the scene of a Midland High offensive turnaround three weeks ago and Friday night it will be the sight of the Bulldogs' final road game of 1982.

The sign of offensive life for the Bulldogs came against Abilene Cooper when they gave the ball to Raymond Chambers 39 times for 188 of the team's 203 total rushing yards out of their newly installed I formation. Add another 52 yards through the air and it became one of Midland High's best offensive performances of the season. A 9-6 victory was the end result.

Now the Bulldogs are going back to the stadium to face Abilene High and head coach Pat Culpepper feels the victory against Cooper has helped build his team's confidence in playing in Shotwell's unfriendly confines.

"We played a poor game there last year (a 21-0 defeat) and, as far as I can tell, everybody on the staff and team wants to redeem themselves," he said. "Beating Cooper may have snapped the jinx we seem to have there and has helped build up our confidence in winning in Shotwell."

Confident or not, the Bulldogs are going into a stadium to face a foe that is as hungry for victory as they are. Abilene High is 3-5 overall and 1-4 in District 4-5A play. MHS is also 3-5 for the year, but the Bulldogs hold a 2-3 league record and would like to finish above .500 in the 4-5A. One more loss and they can scratch that goal.

THOUGH HIS team has suffered defeat in five of its outings this year, Culpepper has faith that they can play well for the remaining two games on the schedule and that the offense "as a group still has the potential to move the ball, we just haven't been able to punch it across the goal line. I don't know if it's psychological or not, but I think if we get a couple of early touchdowns we'll catch fire."

A couple of early touchdowns would do wonders for the Midland High defensive unit as well. All season long it has carried the offense and both Culpepper and Abilene High's Louie Spinks see it as a key to Friday's game.

"We've had a bullet proof defense this year in a lot of ways," said Culpepper "We've relied on it and it's been inspirational.

"Abilene High has a good running-back, No. 22, Ron Lewis (second in the 4-5A rushing statistics with 749 yards on 169 carriers for a 4.4 average and five touchdowns). He is a good one, maybe the best back in the district. I believe he is major college material. The front eight is going to have to play all the way down the line, from end to end."

"We've lost four straight games," said Spinks, "and the kids are down. We had some high expectations at the start of the year — state playoffs — and they are gone. We would like to play our last two games tough and Midland High won't be easy, especially the Midland High defense.

"We're two 3-5 teams playing each other this week and it should be a good football game," continued Spinks. "I hope we can match with them. They have quickness and they have speed (both sides of the ball) and that's what concerns me."

On the offensive stat sheets there is little difference between Midland High and Abilene High. Both teams have collected only 77 first downs for the year and the Eagles have only rushed for 146 yards more than the Bulldogs. AHS holds a bigger edge in passing, 579-351.

Defensively, however, it's a different story. The Bulldogs have given up 31 fewer first downs and lead the total stats 1,683 to 2,261. Both teams appear to be strong against the rush with MHS holding the edge 1,224 to 1,444. The big difference is in the passing defense. The "Junk Yard Dawgs," using only three backs, have given up only 459 yards to AHS' 817.

The Midland High defensive unit that has kept the Bulldogs in games all year long gathers around coaches Tim Smith (kneeling) and Bob Howell for instructions during a recent football game at Memorial Stadium. On the season, the "Junk Yard Dawgs" have compiled the third best overall stats on the defensive charts and are looking to improve their standing in Friday night's game against Abilene High, featuring the No. 2 rusher in District 4-5A, Ron Lewis.

Area playoff berths still up for grabs

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

It's that time of year when football coaches across the state are pulling out the calculators to try and figure out how their team can make the playoffs.

This year there are at least twice as many coaches scratching their heads and biting their nails because of the new UIL playoff ruling to include the top two teams from each district instead of the previous one.

Here is a rundown of how some of the West Texas District races shape up going into the ninth week of the high school football season.

District 2-AAAA

Despite having only a one-game lead with three games still to be played, the Lakeview Chiefs look like a shoe-in. The reason for optimism in San Angelo is because of an easy schedule.

Two of the Chiefs' three games are against the worst teams in the district, Lamesa and Snyder, which have identicle 1-6 records. This week Lakeview plays host to Sweetwater, a team on a two-game losing streak.

Monahans and Andrews, 3-1, are in a dog fight for the second playoff spot.

In the next two weeks Monahans will take on Pecos (2-2) and Fort Stockton (1-3), while Andrews faces an easier schedule against Snyder and Lamesa.

If they should get through the preliminaries, the deciding game for these two rivals will come down to the final game of the season when they square off in Andrews.

Sweetwater (2-2) and Pecos are long shots at best and need a lot of help.

The Mustangs will probably go by the way side this week when they travel to San Angelo to take on Lakeview. Pecos has a tough schedule that includes Monahans, Sweetwater and Fort Stockton.

District 6-AAA

Coaches are getting headaches trying to figure out this one. With two games left, three teams Ozona, Ballinger and Crane, are tied for the district lead with 2-1 records.

Ozona has the inside track on a playoff invitaion as they have Coahoma and Sonora left to play. For the sake of brevity, let's assume they will win both.

Assumptions made, this week will decide the second playoff team as Ballinger invades Crane.

If Ballinger wins the key matchup and gets past Coahoma the following week, they would be district champions by virtue of their 28-13 victory over Ozona.

If Crane wins, Ozona will be district champs as they beat the Golden Cranes 17-8. However, Crane would go as the second team if they beat Coahoma in the final week of play.

If the previously made assumption about Ozona is wrong...???

District 8-AA

Let us count the ways...

It would appear that Stanton (3-0), holding a one-game lead with two weeks left, would make it. But wait! The Buffaloes still have to play Wall (2-1) and McCamey (2-1), two of the three teams tied for second place.

There are just too many posibilities to list, so here are the second place teams' schedules.

Wall plays Stanton at home then Reagan County on the road.

McCamey hosts Eldorado followed by a trip to Stanton.

Reagan County has Miles at Big Lake and Wall for an away game to close out the season.

With a little luck this district race might be easier to figure out next week. But don't count on it. If Wall, McCamey and Reagan County win there will be a four-way tie for first place, with the top four teams facing each other in the final week of the season.

District 6-A

The Wink Wildcats and Iraan Braves are 4-0 but they haven't played each other. The rest of the district is waiting to see which team will be ripe for the picking after their Friday night encounter in Wink.

Fort Davis (2-1-1) is the vulture nearest the front runners but the Indians are 2-4-1 overall and still must face Grandfalls, Iraan and Rankin.

Rankin and Grandfalls are long shots at best, with 2-2 records. Grandfalls could win the rest of its games, with Fort Davis, Buena Vista and Balmorhea left to play. But the Cowboys would still need help from other teams as they don't face any of the contenders.

Rankin is pulling for Iraan this week because the Red Devils could force their way into a playoff spot with a victory over Wink the following week.

Rankin also has Sanderson and Fort Davis to play.

District 7-A

Mathmatically there are several posibilities but reality dictates that Eden (5-0) will be one of the district representatives.

And although Greenwood shares a 4-1 mark with Sterling City and Garden City the Rangers are destined to wait for next year with the likes of Eden and Garden City still left to play.

Besides being a big-time small town rivalry, this week's contest between the Sterling City Eagles and the Garden City Bearcats should decide the other representative.

Yount, Carlton runaway leaders on All-Star team

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Shortstop Robin Yount of the Milwaukee Brewers and left-handed pitcher Steve Carlton of the Philadelphia Phillies were runaway leaders at their positions on The Associated Press major league baseball All-Star team, announced today.

Yount, a leading candidate for American League Most Valuable Player award, and Carlton, who won his fourth Cy Young award on Tuesday, each received 38 of a possible 40 votes in the countrywide poll of sports writers and broadcasters.

Hal McRae of the Kansas City Royals and Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves were the other landslide winners. McRae received 36 votes for the designated hitter position, and Murphy led outfielders with 34 votes.

Those casting ballots were asked to vote for one player from either league at each position, including three outfielders, a left-handed and right-handed starter and a relief pitcher.

THE 12 positions were evenly split between the American and National leagues. The Milwaukee Brewers placed three players on the team, the Phillies had two, and Atlanta, Kansas City, Toronto, Los Angeles, the New York Yankees, Montreal and St. Louis had one apiece.

The rest of the team was comprised of Cecil Cooper, first base, Milwaukee; Damaso Garcia, second base, Toronto; Mike Schmidt, third base, Philadelphia; Pedro Guerrero, outfield, Los Angeles; Dave Winfield, outfield, New York Yankees; Gary Carter, catcher, Montreal; Pete Vuckovich, right-handed pitcher, Milwaukee, and Bruce Sutter, relief pitcher, St. Louis.

Yount, 27 years old, batted .331 during the season — one point behind league leader Willie Wilson of Kansas City — and led the AL with 210 hits. He drove in 114 runs and hit 29 home runs during the best season of his nine-year major league career. Two other players — Garry Templeton of San Djego and Ozzie Smith of St. Louis — received one vote each for shortstop.

Carlton, 37, won an unprecedented fourth Cy Young this season after an 0-4 start, the worst of his career. He was the only pitcher in either league to win 20 games (23-11), and he also led the NL in strikeouts (286), complete games (19), shutouts (6) and innings pitched (292-3). His earned run average of 3.10 was eighth in the league. Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers received the other two votes for left-handed pitcher.

McRAE, LIKE Yount, experienced his best season in 1982. He hit .308 and led both leagues with 133 RBI, playing in all but three games this season for the Royals. At 36, McRae led the league with 46 doubles, and was fifth in hits with 189. He also hit 27 homers. Reggie Jackson, who played right field most of the season, received two votes for DH.

Murphy hit 36 home runs this year, one shy of league leader Dave Kingman of the New York Mets, and he proved himself a versatile offensive threat by stealing 23 bases. He batted .281 and tied Al Oliver of Montreal for the league lead in RBI with 109.

Guerrero hit .304 with 100 RBI and 32 home runs for the Dodgers, while Winfield batted .280, drove in 106 runs and homered 37 times for New York. Guerrero had 20 votes, and Winfield received 15. Wilson of the Royals finished fourth in balloting for outfielders with 13 votes, followed by Jackson with 11 and Rickey Henderson of Oakland with 10.

Cooper was second in the American League with 121 RBI and 205 hits, while batting .313. He also had 32 homers and committed just five errors all season, receiving 17 votes. Oliver was second in balloting for first base with 14 votes in the team's closest race.

Garcia, a surprise even to the Blue Jays, hit .310 and stole 54 bases while committing just 15 errors at second base. He garnered 12 votes at second base to six for Manny Trillo of Philadelphia.

DESPITE MISSING 14 games with a rib cage injury early in the season, Schmidt finished first in the NL in on-base percentage (.403) and walks (107). He drove in 87 runs, homered 35 times and batted .280. His 21 votes far outdistanced third baseman Doug DeCinces of California, who got eight.

Carter recovered from a slow first half to finish with some impressive figures and 27 votes as the All-Star catcher. The Expos catcher batted .293 for the season, knocked in 97 runs and hit 29 homers. Lance Parrish of Detroit was second in voting with nine votes.

Vuckovich finished the season with an 18-6 record for the best winning percentage in the league (.750), a 3.34 ERA and 105 strikeouts to win the right-handed pitcher's spot with 17 votes. Steve Rogers of Montreal was second with 11 votes.

Sutter was a runaway for baseball's best relief pitcher, receiving 20 votes to eight for Dan Quisenberry of the Kansas City Royals. Sutter had 36 saves, a 9-8 record and an ERA of 2.90.

"The players have shown more solidarity than they did in 1974 ... also we have a mediator in place. What it boils down to is that neither side has anything to gain by the players remaining on strike. Lillis may be managing Astros fulltime during 1983 season

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros interim Manager Bob Lillis may be the favorite to get the fulltime job in 1983 now that San Francisco Giants second baseman Joe Morgan, a former Astro, has withdrawn himself from consideration for the job.

Astros board chairman John McMullen says there are still four candidates for the job but a management source has told the Houston Post Morgan and Lillis are the only real candidates.

The management source said, "It's Lillis now. The chances are 99 1/2 to a half that it will be Lillis. Four candidates? I don't think so. It's pretty much always been Lillis and Morgan.

"I don't know how much John (McMullen) offered Morgan to manage, but it couldn't be as much as Joe could make playing."

McMullen said he had another meeting scheduled later this week in New York with Morgan, who reportedly could be considered for the Astros managing job in 1983.

"There are lots of possibilities, but we've got to get it done soon," McMullen said Tuesday before returning to New York. "But I've got some more talking to do. I wouldn't think we'd have anything (to announce) until the next couple of weeks."

Lillis, who led the Astros to a 28-23 record after Bill Virdon was fired Aug. 10, said he talked with McMullen Tuesday.

"Things look pretty good for me," Lillis said. "We met for less han an hour yesterday (Monday). He said he would think about it and call me. I've been wrong before, but I'm encouraged."

Lillis signed a two-year coaching contract following Virdon's dismissal, although coaches normally have one-year contracts.

"When he replaced Bill, his concern was that he wanted to continue with the organization," McMullen said. "To alleviate that concern, we extended his coaching contract for two years (through 1984). Regardless of whether he's or manager next year, he'll stay with us."

Seibu needs one to win Japan Series

TOKYO (AP) — Steve Ontiveros, formerly of the Chicago Cubs, drove in two runs with a pair of doubles Thursday to lead the Seibu Lions to a 3-1 triumph over the Chunichi Dragons, putting the Lions within one victory of capturing the Japan Series.

The Lions lead the best-of-seven series 3-2 with the sixth game set for Saturday at Chunichi's home stadium in Nagoya.

Boutette's hat trick lifts Penguins past Capitals, 7-5

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The Pittsburgh Penguins have been struggling to find the winning touch. Don't blame Pat Boutette for their predicament.

The Penguins, who nearly pulled off a startling upset of the Stanley Cup champion New York Islanders in last spring's first round of the playoffs, began this National Hockey League season with six losses in their first eight games, including 9-0 and 8-4 embarrassments. But Boutette has managed to avoid the doldrums through which the rest of the Penguins have been skating.

Wednesday night, the right wing known best for his hard work in the corners and along the boards and his willingness to mix it up, scored three goals as Pittsburgh downed Washington 7-5. It was his second hat trick of the season and gave Boutette 12 goals in 10 games, including seven in the last three contests. His one-season high in a seven-year career is 28 and he never had a hat trick prior to this season.

"Maybe I'm shooting a little more than I did last year," said Boutette, who got a goal in each period, with the first two on power plays and the final one into an empty net with 52 seconds left to play. "I think maybe I'm playing with a little more confidence because I worked more on my shooting.

"I'll just keep playing the game my way and if the goals keep coming the way they have, that's fantastic. Whatever it is I'm doing, I want to keep on doing it.

"I don't consider myself a goal-scorer. I'm more of a mucker. This year, the puck's been bouncing my way a little more and I've had some opportunities to score."

Elsewhere, it was Toronto 4, Boston 1; Detroit 5, St. Louis 4; the New York Rangers 7, Calgary 4; Winnipeg 7, Los Angeles 4, and Edmonton 4, Chicago 4.

Penguins defenseman Greg Hotham had four assists and Rick MacLeish had three — all on power plays — as Pittsburgh took advantage of Washington penalties to score four times. The Capitals, who got two goals and two assists from Mike Gartner, also scored four times on power plays.

Maple Leafs 4, Bruins 1

Boston lost for the third straight time since forward Normand Leveille suffered a cerebral hemorrhage — he is still in poor condition in a Vancouver hospital — as rookie Peter Ihnacak, a native of Czechoslovakia, scored two goals. Ihnacak connected on a 20-foot wrist shot to open the scoring, then beat Bruins goalie Mike Moffat early in the second period when he deflected in a slapshot by Fred Boimistruck.

Mike Palmateer — who is 2-1-1 since rejoining the Maple Leafs (he was with them from 1976-80) — played spectacularly, stopping 37 shots.

"Palmateer cost us at least one point," claimed Bruins Coach Gerry Cheevers. "I thought our team played well enough to win tonight."

Leafs Coach Mike Nykoluk agreed that Palmateer was the difference.

"Mike made a lot of key saves," he said. "When he gets hot he just seems to get everybody going. He was like an acrobat out there tonight. He's unorthodox and he makes things happen."

Cheevers said Leveille's condition did not effect his club's performance.

"Whenever I passed the players in the hotel lobby before the game, they would ask about Normand," said Cheevers. "The thought of him was around but it wasn't on our minds during the game.

"He was our best player when he got hurt but we can't use his absence as a crutch."

Red Wings 5, Blues 4

Walt McKechnie, playing his 900th NHL game, had a goal and two assists to pace the Red Wings, who knocked St. Louis' regular goalie, Mike Liut, out of the game late in the first period. Liut suffered a broken blood vessel on his nose when hit by a hard shot from John Barrett. Perry Turnbull's two third-period goals had boosted St. Louis ahead 4-3 before Reed Larson tied it and Paul Woods put an 18-footer past substitute goalie Glen Hanlon off a feed by McKechnie to win it.

Rangers 7, Flames 4

The Rangers stormed Calgary goalie Don Edwards with 40 shots, including 23 in the first period. Don Maloney had two goals, Anders Hedberg scored his 100th NHL goal and Mike Rogers had a goal and two assists for New York. Paul Reinhart scored once and set up three tallies for the Flames, who are 0-5-2 on the road.

"We got off to an awful start and couldn't shut them down," said Edwards, who held the Rangers out of double figures with his spectacular work. "We just came out and weren't ready for them."

Jets 7, Kings 3

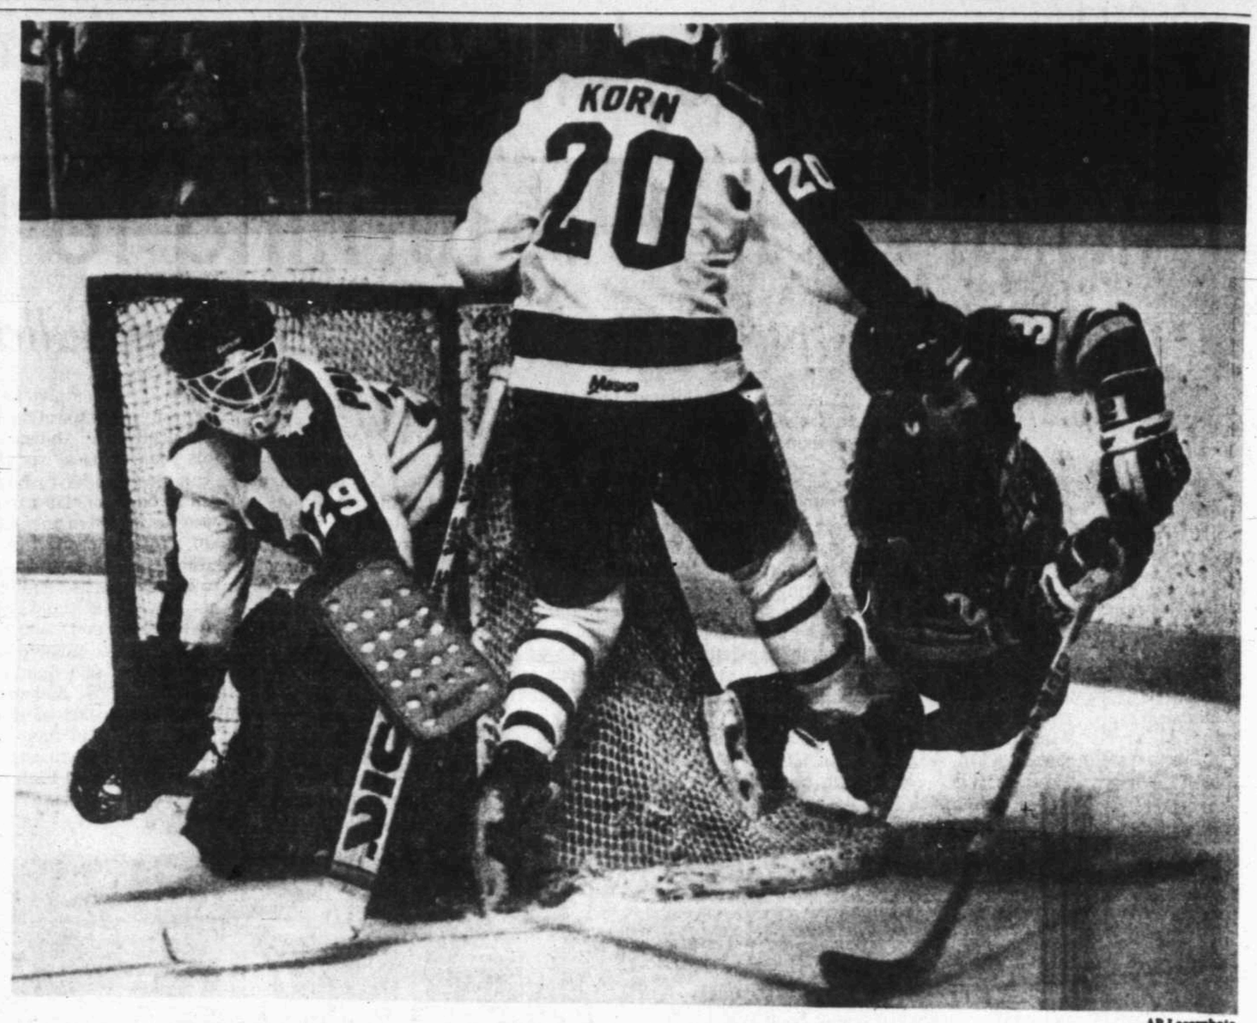

Doug Smail and Paul MacLean notched a pair of goals each as Winnipeg stretched its unbeaten streak to five games and assumed the top spot in the Smythe Division by a point over Los Angeles.

Kings Coach Don Perry used both Gary Laskoski and Mario Lessard in goal to no avail, while Doug Soetaert was sharp in the Winnipeg net.

"Soetaert played well and I don't think our goaltending was outstanding from either one of them," said Perry.

Oilers 4, Black Hawks 4

Glenn Anderson and Jari Kurri scored less than two minutes apart in the third period to lift the Oilers to the tie. Anderson had two goals for Edmonton and Wayne Gretzky notched two assists. Denis Savard scored twice and set up a goal for Chicago, while Doug Wilson contributed three assists.

Lakers' Abdul-Jabbar may retire within two years

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Los Angeles Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar says he may retire within two years, a timetable that could make him the highest scorer in the history of the National Basketball Association.

"I haven't set any deadline ... I would say within two years at the outside," Abdul-Jabbar told the Daily Hampshire Gazette of Northampton on Tuesday night after the Hall of Fame exhibition game.

The 7-foot-2-inch Abdul-Jabbar scored 20 points in 30 minutes to lead the defending NBA champion Lakers to a 105-102 victory over the New Jersey Nets.

There's no flashy prefix for Braxton, WBC light-heavy champ will do

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

There is no flashy prefix like Sugar or Marvelous or Boom Boom attached to Dwight Braxton's name. That's just not his style. He is a boxer devoted to basics and the bottom line for him is not charisma. It's winning.

So save the nicknames for other fighters. Braxton's satisfied just being called the World Boxing Council's light heavyweight champion. That's fancy enough for him, thank you.

Braxton defends his title against Eddie Davis Nov. 20 at Atlantic City as part of an NBC primetime tripleheader. Also on the program are a 12-round World Boxing Association junior middleweight elimination bout between Tony Ayala Jr. and Carlos Herrera, with the winner getting a title shot at Davey Moore. Undefeated Bobby Czyz meets Mustafa Hamsho in a 10-round middleweight bout.

Davis looms as just another opponent for Braxton, a keep-busy fight while the champ marks time waiting for a title unification bout, probably next March, against World Boxing Association champ Michael Spinks. But Braxton doesn't buy that routine.

"Anybody who tells me not to worry about Davis is my enemy," said Braxton. "I'm my own best friend and I know this is a bridge I've got to cross. I'm concentrating on Davis."

Braxton says he hasn't seen Davis fight, but he's familiar with the family. Johnny Davis, Eddie's younger brother, tagged Braxton with his only professional loss, a six-round decision early in his career. The champion has an 18-1-1 record with 11 knockouts.

"I know this," Braxton said of Davis, who is 23-2-1 and ranked No.3 by the WBC. "He's got two legs and two arms. He can fight two ways. He can either come to me or run away from me. Either way, I'm going to catch him."

Once he's done with Davis, Braxton will turn his attention to Spinks. "He's on my mind now," the champion admitted. "But it's the back of my mind, not the front."

Because he won an Olympic gold medal and because his brother was heavyweight champion, Spinks has stolen much of the light heavyweight division thunder from Braxton. He is certainly more familiar to boxing fans, a fact that has not gone unnoticed by Braxton.

"Psychologically, it doesn't bother me," Braxton said. "It helps me remain hungry. I'm after the fans and I have something to prove."

Then Braxton decided to do his own small psych job.

"Spinks is ignorant — ignorant that I'm the best fighter in the division. He's cocky and that's good. Let him stay that way. It will be easier for me that way."

Braxton brings a lunch-pail philosophy with him to the ring.

"I've got a job to do, just like you," he said. "When it comes time to do your job, you don't take off and run home, do you? Well, I'm the same way. I'm not laid back about this business. I go out and do what I have to do."

At 5-foot-7½, Braxton is one of the shortest champions in light heavyweight history. He's like a buzzsaw in the ring, pressing opponents, grinding away at them, keeping up the pressure. That's the approach he used to win the WBC crown from Matthew Saad Muhammad Dec. 19, 1981 and then defend the title against Jerry Martin last March and Saad Muhammad in August. Now he can't wait to try the technique on Spinks.

"Once I beat him, what can he say? There will be no excuses then. It will be a great fight. I will be up for it — 1,001 percent. There will be plenty of action. I'll be at my best. I'll peak for that fight.

"Mike and I sparred together. We are concerned about each other as human beings. But in the ring, that's different."

In the ring is where Braxton works. And he's devoted to his job.

Gianulias sets record with D-FW victory

DALLAS (AP) — Nikki Gianulias of Vallejo, Calif. captured the Dallas-Fort Worth Classic to become the leading single-season money winner in the history of the Ladies Pro Bowlers Tour.

Gianulias, 22, defeated Judy Soutar of Kansas City, Mo., 210 to 181 Wednesday night and claimed a record fourth title for the 1982 season and the seventh championship in her three-year professional career.

She entered the finals as the number-one qualifier after bowling games of 288, 255 and 239 in the final round of match play earlier Wednesday.

Her $5,000 prize boosted her 1982 earnings to $43,375, surpassing the LPBT record of $41,270, set in 1981 by Donna Adamek of Duarte, Calif.

Soutar, a 38-year-old bowling hall of fame member, advanced to the championship match by eliminating number-six qualifier Shirley Hintz of Merritt Island, Fla., 222 to 169; number three Sue Schellhardt of Nashville, Tenn. 223 to 194; and number two Karen Ellingsworth of Des Plaines, 203 to 190.

Hintz defeated number five qualifier Aleta Rzepecki of Detroit, Mich. in the opening match, 216 to 199.

Martin in no hurry to find a new job

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Billy Martin apparently doesn't want to manage the Cleveland Indians or any other team looking for someone to turn around a faultering franchise — at least not for now, his agent says.

Though fired last week as manager of the Oakland A's, reports say Martin has a $250,000 annual salary through 1985 and the A's agreed to provide him with a home through 1990.

It was the fifth American League team managed by Martin.

His agent, Eddie Sapir, said Tuesday that Martin simply was in no big hurry to snap up the managing job at Cleveland, where Dave Garcia's contract expired at the end of the 1982 season. The Cleveland Plain Dealer said during the weekend that the Indians had offered Martin a three-year contract at $1 million per year.

"Well, Billy's just not interested in making a decision at this time about any job," said Sapir, "and the Cleveland people felt they needed somebody to make a decision at 7 o'clock this morning, and I told Gabe Paul, their president, that we were flattered, you know, that they were looking for Billy's services but we were not in a position to make a decision this morning and, as a result of that, I've heard that Mike Ferraro, one of the Yankees coaches, was hired."

FERRARO'S HIRING could not be confirmed but Cleveland owner Gabe Paul, who is in Tampa, Fla., said chances were "remote" that Martin would be hired.

"I don't think we'll sign him," said Paul.

Does Martin have something more interesting cooking elsewhere, Sapir was asked.

"No, it just means that we're not ready to make a decision right now because Billy does not have to go back into baseball to receive his salary," Sapir replied.

"He's on a contract with the Oakland A's, so we have to honor that contract for the next three years, plus, they have an obligation to keep him in a home for eight more years. So, we don't have to make a decision right away, we're being well paid just to go fishing and hunting."

SAPIR TUESDAY accused the Oakland A's of reneging on contract terms, and said the disagreement may have led to Martin's firing.

The agent said Martin ran into a cash problem in 1981 when the Internal Revenue Service determined that he owed $100,000 in back taxes. Sapir said the A's agreed later that season to give Martin a loan negotiated against the sixth year of his contract. He said the A's had made a "verbal agreement" to extend Martin's $250,000 a year, five-year contract to 10 years.

Sapir said A's President Roy Eisenhardt told him through another club official that "there is no sixth year. Read the contract. Tell Billy all he's got are the four corners of the contract.'

"I didn't want to take something so cold back to Billy," Sapir told the San Francisco Chronicle on Tuesday. "I pleaded with (vice president) Sandy Alderson to have Roy speak with Billy personally. But Roy wouldn't do it. Considering that, and the fact that the team had just gotten its tail whipped (by Milwaukee), Billy deserved to be madder than hell. And he was."

That was in August. Martin flew into a rage and virtually destroyed his office in the A's clubhouse. Relations between Martin and Eisenhardt deteriorated and several people close to the club believe the incident triggered last week's firing.

Eisenhardt kept his silence on the reasons for the firing but confirmed Martin's tax problems.

"It is true that Billy has a tax problem," Eisenhardt told the Chronicle on Tuesday. "(Sapir's claims) are untrue with respect to every other material fact. I can't get to anything beyond that. Maybe I'm leaving myself vulnerable by trying to stay out of this but I'm not going to be the one that talks negatively about things in public. I'm not going to play these games."

SAPIR WAS asked if other offers have been made.

"No, not necessarily," said Sapir, a New Orleans municipal court judge who also has a private law practice.

"Some people are interested in presenting offers to us, but again, whether or not we're going to accept any of those, we don't really know, and it's like I told you, Cleveland wanted us to make a decision this morning and we're just not ready to make a decision, so if they did hire Mike Ferraro, then it's obvious that that job is gone, Billy cannot be the manager of Cleveland."

He also was asked about the manager's job with the New York Yankees, where owner George Steinbrenner has hired and fired Martin twice.

"Well, what Billy would do is Billy would be interested in looking at whatever proposal they like to put on the table. But so far they don't have one," Sapir said.

Peete ruled ineligible for Vardon Trophy

Kite leading way for coveted award with 70.21 average

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Cal Peete has been ruled ineligible for the coveted Vardon Trophy even if he does manage to compile the lowest stroke average on the PGA Tour this season.

Going into the season-ending, $400,000 Walt Disney World Classic, Peete ranked second in stroke average with 70.32. Tom Kite, who is not competing here, leads for the second consecutive year with 70.21. To overtake Kite, Peete would have to compile a score of 270 — 18 under par — or better this week.

Even if he should achieve that formidable task, he will not be eligible for the Vardon Trophy, one of the most prestigious awards in the game.

To be eligible for the Vardon Trophy, a player must be a member of the PGA and must have played at least 80 rounds. Peete acquired PGA membership late this year. He has played 94 rounds, but less than 80 as a PGA member. PGA President Joe Black ruled Wednesday that Peete, a four-time winner this season, was not eligible since he had not played the minimum number of rounds as PGA member. (A PGA spokesman earlier said Peete was eligible for the Vardon, but Black overturned that decision.)

It is not the first time, however, that the man with the low stroke average failed to win the Vardon Trophy.

Jack Nicklaus, for example, has led the Tour in stroke average a half-dozen times. But he has never won the Vardon, because he failed to play the required number of rounds.

Black's decision means that all three of the major seasonal races have been decided: Kite as Vardon Trophy winner, Tom Watson as Player of the Year and Craig Stadler as leading money-winner. None is playing here this week, but none can be overtaken.

On another level, however, things were very much up in the air going into today's start of the final official event of the year.

That involves the struggle for positions in the top 125 money-winners, the cut-off spot for a place on the all-exempt Tour which will go into effect next season. If a player finishes 125th or better, his playing rights for 1983 are secured. If he finishes lower, he must either (1) return to the PGA Tour School and attempt to regain his playing rights or (2) drop off the Tour.

George Cadle currently holds the No. 125 spot with $28,050. He is being pressed by Ed Dougherty with $27,948, John Fought with $27,488 and Gary McCord with $27,380.

NLRB finds validity in NFLPA complaint

By MIKE EMBRY
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — National Football League Players Association chief Ed Garvey has maintained all along that the club owners' negotiators have engaged in unfair bargaining practices in the lengthy labor dispute that has shut down pro football.

Now those allegations will be heard beginning Nov. 15 by a National Labor Relations Board adminstrative law judge in New York. The NLRB, finding validity in the union's charge, Wednesday filed a complaint of unfair bargaining practices against the Management Council.

The action came several hours after both sides in the 38-day strike had agreed to resume negotiations. They will meet next Saturday at a mid-Manhattan hotel.

Daniel Silverman, the director of NLRB Region 2 in New York, handed down the complaint charging the NFLMC and owners with failing to negotiate with the union in good faith.

The complaint also alleged that the strike "was caused and has been prolonged by the unfair labor practices" by NFL owners and their negotiators. The striking players could be entitled to back pay if the judge upholds the charge.

It also found, among other things, that the Management Council had failed to provide the union with financial data necessary to the bargaining process and with circumventing the union on matters dealing with the players.

"Now that the NLRB decision has been made," said Garvey said, "there is additional pressure on the owners to re-examine their position. Once they come to grips with the law and bargain on wages, we have passed the big hurdle in reaching a settlement."

But Jim Miller, a management council spokesman, responded to the complaint by saying: "We feel confident that once it proceeds through the proper channels, we will be vindicated. In 1974 (at the start of the previous collective bargaining) there were 30 complaints filed by the NLRB and when we reached our agreement in 1977 none of the 30 had been resolved and all were set a side as a condition of the agreement."

There was nothing in the NLRB order alleging that NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle was personally involved in unfair labor practices.

Earlier, mediator Sam Kagel, the 73-year-old San Francisco lawyer who last Saturday recessed the bargaining in the Baltimore suburb of Cockeysville after 12 days of limited progress, issued a terse statement from his office saying: "I am authorized by Ed Garvey and Jack Donlan (the owners' chief negotiator) to announce that negotiations will resume on Saturday ... Beyond that statement, I have no comment of any kind."

Kagel, in his efforts to get the bargainers together again, initiated the phone calls to Garvey in Washington, D.C. and Donlan in New York starting minutes after 6 a.m. PDT. After Kagel had elicited an agreement faid from union headquarters. "We just keep moving forward. We aren't making any progress being away from the table. We hope to make some at the table ... We may (offer changes). We are looking at everything to see if there is any different approach that makes sense. By this time, the positions are pretty clear. Both sides are going to have to compromise.

"Compromise is the nature of negotiation," Garvey added.

He indicated both sides might alter their stances once negotiations resume.

"They have been meeting since we left Hunt Valley and we have had reports of some change," Garvey said of the owners' negotiators and their executive committee.

Donlan, though, didn't support Garvey's contention. "We're not speculating on any proposals that we might or might not give them," Donlan said. "As for any change, we have not changed our position that the wage scale tied to the central fund is the main impediment to a settlement."

In Seattle, Kay McMurray, the head of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the man who recommended to both sides on Oct.12 that Kagel be chosen as the mediator, said the government will keep out of the strike despite "an amazing lot of public pressure" for intervention.

"There simply is no compelling national interest that would dictate a government action similar to ordering the railroad employees back to work," McMurray said. "Yet, the public cannot understand why we aren't simply locking the parties up in a room and ordering them to settle the matter. There are members of Congress who have suggested hearings to determine why we 'haven't done something' about the strike."

Sources at ABC, CBS and NBC confirmed that the three major television networks plan to withhold on Nov.1, next Monday, the combined $76 million due the league under the five-year, $2.1-billion contract signed last March. Six weekends of games have already been affected by the strike.

Val Pinchbeck, the league's director of broadcasting, said the NFL "expects no further payments from the networks while we're not playing and we've already informed them of that fact." He also said he was surprised anyone would expect the networks to be asked to pay for untelevised games.

Garvey has maintained that 1982's full 16-game season will be played, the schedule pushed back into February with some games shifted to warmer climes.

But one network source said the likelihood of that was remote, at best, because it would cost millions of dollars to change previously committed sports programming.

NBC is to televise college basketball and two major golf tournaments (the Hawaiian and the Andy Williams), and CBS also has college basketball plus golf (the Bing Crosby and the Doral), the Daytona 500 auto race and the National Basketball Association all-star game. And ABC, although not involved in Sunday afternoon NFL telecasts, will be involved (along with the other networks) in four prime-time "sweep weeks," when the ratings are determined.

Network sources also said there was a possibility the networks could seek rebates for money already paid to the NFL for games wiped out by the strike, which began Sept. 21.

MHS, Lee sophs change schedule

The Midland Lee sophomores will face the Midland High sophomores at 4 p.m. Tuesday instead of 5 p.m. as orginally planned. The game will be held at Memorial Stadium.

Italian soccer avoids strike

SOCCER — A threatened strike by Italian soccer players has been averted, clearing the way for Sunday's eigth round of the major league and saving national soccer pools, a weekly business of more than 20 billion lire (14 million dollars). The unprecedented play stoppage had been threatened by the players association following a dispute about payment of bonuses at the expiration of the players' contracts. A six-hour negotiating session between representatives of the players and soccer officials produced a settlement late Tuesday...

FOOTBALL — Junior tailback Chucky Davis, Wisconsin's leading rusher this season, was declared academically ineligible Tuesday for at least a week.

"Apparently he didn't do what he was supposed to do the last couple weeks," Coach Dave McClain said Tuesday. "He had been warned in the past. We have a class-attendance policy." The UW Athletic Board's eight-member eligibility committee made the ruling earlier in the day. Davis, 21, will not be available for action until reinstatement by the committee.The decision will be reviewed Nov. 2...

Three Detroit police officers have been placed on departmental probation for six months for helping a prankster dressed as the San Diego Chicken try to crash last January's Super Bowl in Pontiac, Mich.

Officers Terry Novak, Earl Smith and Patrick Mullins, wearing phony security guard badges, escorted Barry Bremen, a West Bloomfield Township insurance executive, past security guards and state troopers and almost reached the playing field when Pontiac police officers challenged his costume. Bremen once crashed a football game dressed as a Dallas Cowboys cheerleader...

Contract talks between NFL players and owners go on, but Buffalo Bills quarterback Joe Ferguson thinks the 1982 season is over. "I'm thinking about next year," the 10th-year veteran told the Buffalo News. "No matter what management says or what the union says, the season is over." Ferguson said he blames both sides for the strike."I'm angry at the Management Council because it has not negotiated in good faith, the union because it has asked for ridiculous things, and myself for allowing someone to lead me down the primrose path," he said...

BASKETBALL — Forward Mark Olberding says he is ready to play when the Chicago Bulls open their NBA season Friday. Olberding, a 6-foot-9 power forward obtained in a trade from San Antonio, reported to the Bulls' practice on Tuesday. "I'm a little overweight at 240 pounds now," he said, "but three days of workouts and I'll be down to 235 or 230." The Bullw trimmed their roster to the 12-man limit by cutting James Wilkes, a three-year forward from UCLA, and free-agent forward Mark Davis...

George McGinnis, a dominating ABA forward at the age of 21, fell victim to the Indiana youth movement and was placed on waivers by the Pacers Wednesday. The 32-year-old McGinnis, a former high school and college star in Indiana, joined the Pacers in 1971 and helped the team win two championships in the now defunct ABA. The 6-foot-8, 235-pounder was an All-ABA pick twice and was selected the most valuable player in the 1973 playoffs...

Sherrill disappointed with Aggie practices

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M head football coach Jackie Sherrill said he was disappointed with the way his team practiced Wednesday in preparing for this weekend's televised game with unbeaten Southern Methodist.

"We had a very poor practice," Sherrill said. "When you're getting ready to play a team as good as SMU, you'd better be practicing with a little more emotion than we had" Wednesday.

"You never know. Sometimes you practice real well all week, then play poorly on Saturday," he said. "And you might not practice well during the week, but then play a good game."

Longhorns troubled by absence of players

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Longhorns are having trouble adjusting to the absence of three key, injured players, but practices this week have been "spirited" despite two straight losses, Coach Fred Akers said Wednesday.

"The thing that bothers us the most right now is having to shuffle so many people around because of injuries," Akers said. "We're not having much continuity, and that's critical for a young football team."

Linebacker Jeff Leiding underwent knee surgery Sunday for an injury he suffered in Saturday's30-17 loss to Southern Methodist. Offensive lineman Adam Screiber is out with a broken hand. Defensive back Richard Peavy tried to return to practice, but was unable to work out because of a sprained ankle.

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

Shades of the aborted "mercy" deer kill in the Everglades. Now it's a plan to kill surprlus deer on land owned by the Smithsonian Institution National Zoo.

As soon as zoo officials announced their intent to allow hunters with shotguns and bows-and-arrows to kill deer on a 3,300 acre reserve, up jumped the anti-hunters. "It's an abomination," said John Grandy of the Humane Society of the U.S., in criticizing the plan to thin the 650-head herd.

"It's a cruel method," said Lewis Regenstine of Fund for Animals in reference to the use of bows and arrows.

"We've gone about this in a very responsible manner," said Robert Hoage, a spokesman for the zoo. Grandy and Regenstein said they would ask Smithsonian officials to stop the hunt. They did, but Smithsonian officials didn't.

"We didn't feel there has been anything introduced to require use to call off the hunt," said David Challinor, assistant secretary at the Smithsonian. "We're in a no-win situation."

"All animals are God's creatures," Challinor said. "We just use different ways of controlling them. Virginia game officials feel this method is an equitable way of reducing the herd."

"We are primarily concerned with reducing the number of animals that starve in the winter and preventing the herd from getting so large that it endangers animals (from the zoo) we are trying to breed," he added.

THE HUNT is scheduled to take place next month about 60 miles west of Richmond. Zoo officials say the white-tailed deer have been multiplying too fast and are destroying much of the underbrush, as well as the alfalfa crop, used to feed animals in the zoo.

The zoo is used to accustom animals to zoo life and as an area for zoo animals to recover from illnesses.

Grandy contends the logic is reversed. He says the deer should have been driven out of the fenced area where "at least they would have a chance."

Zoo officials said they tried that last year, but it didn't work. The hunt did, reducing the herd 35 per cent.

Grandy said if the Smithsonian Secretary Dillion Ripley refuses to change the hunt policy, his organization will bring pressure to bear from Congress or the courts.

It seems to be the protectionists policy to ignore the plight of the animals and resort to the courts to attempt to stop hunting, no matter what the reason. So-called protectionists usually gain the advantage by picking their issues and courts carefully, then attacking.

Leonard fully recovered from operation on retina

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard's eye surgeon says the welterweight boxing champion has fully recovered from last spring's operation to repair a detached retina in his left eye, according to a published report.

The Washington Post today quoted Baltimore eye surgeon Ronald G. Michels, an ophthalmologist at Johns Hopkins Hospital, as saying Leonard had fully regained vision in his eye.

"He is in a position now to decide whether he wants to continue his career," Michels said.

Louisiana gets jump on Feds, enacts enterprise zones bill

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Louisiana has stolen the march on the federal government in enacting the first-ever "Enterprise Zone" program of business tax incentives aimed at stimulating the economies of distressed and high unemployment areas of cities and rural communities.

The state's governor, David C. Treen, Wednesday signed agreements with four private companies which plan to locate in the state's newly designated enterprise zones. The firms will save as much as 90 percent in state and local taxes they would otherwise pay over a 10-year period.

It is anticipated that these agreements will lead to creation of as many as 600 new manufacturing and 330 construction jobs with a $13 million annual payroll.

The four include companies manufacturing high technology electronic components, waferized wood blocks for the timber industry, process chemicals for the paper industry and a television station.

Louisiana's sweeping enterprise zone program covers both urban and rural areas and is more than a limited experiment similar to the one now being tested in Connecticut.

The enterprise zone concept is part of the Reagan administration's program aimed at reducing high unemployment and revitalizing rundown sections of cities. The Reagan proposal calls for creation of 75 such zones, 25 zones a year over a three-year period, in states and cities which take the lead in offering businesses tax breaks.

By enacting the plan, Louisiana also will become eligible for federal tax breaks and relaxed rules and regulations once the federal enterprise zone program is approved by Congress.

A Reagan plan to give tax breaks to businesses that locate in blighted areas was approved during the waning days of Congress by the Senate Finance Committee as part of an unrelated tax bill.

But the gesture was viewed as nothing more than an election-eve favor to the president. Reagan has since said he views approval of the concept as one of five top items he wants the "lame duck" session of Congress to act on when it returns here next month after next week's elections.

Senate sources say they doubt the Senate will find time to consider the measure during the session and House Democratic leaders oppose doing so.

Louisiana's enterprise zone concept offers businesses which qualify a five-year exemption from income and corporate taxes and from the sales and use taxes for the purchase of materials used in construction of buildings for business enterprise, machinery and equipment.

Under the proposal approved by the Senate Finance Committee, the selection of enterprise zones would be based on an area's unemployment, poverty level and population loss.

Reagan described the concept as being "based on utilizing the market to solve urban problems, relying primarily on private sector institutions."

Critics have argued that the program will not succeed because enterprise zones would merely lure businesses away from other parts of a city. And special tax treatment, they say, would give an unfairly competitive edge to certain businesses.

STRATEGIC MINERALS

The vulnerability of the U.S. to disruptions in the supply of imported materials considered essential to industrial production has been of concern to policymakers since the end of World War II. Cobalt, a metal used in aerospace and defense industries and not presently produced here, is a prime example of such a strategic mineral. The bulk of the world's supply of cobalt originates in Zaire and Zambia in central Africa. Thus, aside from cobalt stockpiles and the recycling of used materials, the U.S. is completely dependent on imports.

Although significant distruptions in the supply of cobalt are a possibility throughout this decade, says a Congressional Budget Office study, the existence of the strategic stockpile ensures that their consequences would be limited to the increased financial costs faced by cobalt users and that no major loss to the national economy would be likely.

U.S. consumption of cobalt in 1980 totaled about 17 million pounds, divided among alloys for jet engines and stationary gas turbines, permanent magnets for electrical equipment, machinery, and nonmetalic applications.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

A 15-member special advisoy committee organized by SBA has recommended ways to lower interest rates for small business borrowers and to facilitate small business access to loan funds. The group wants a new loan guarantee program, elimination of maximum interest rates on SBA-guaranteed loans and greater willingness of the private sector to help small business.

U.S. fruit company drops operations

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Standard Fruit Co., pioneer in the banana industry here, shut down its Nicaraguan operations and the government will run them instead, Agriculture Minister Jaime Wheelock said.

Wheelok told reporters Tuesday that the leftist government will take charge of the banana plantations "because we cannot leave 3,500 workers up in the air."

Award winners examples of what is right

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Two companies which received awards for business excellence from the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin Tuesday in Midland exemplify what is right with most businesses locally: good customer service and good products.

But those two items were not the only criteria the judges had in mind, according to Linda Truitt, BBB president, in explaining the meaning behind the awards ceremony, which will become an annual event.

Kelly-Moore Paint Company, Midland, and Webb Camper Center, Odessa, were recognized at the BBB Better Book Banquet after being selected by three judges from the business academic community in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

Dr. J. Edwin Becht, dean of the college of management at UTPB, and one of the judges, made the presentation.

"The judges were primarily interested in the nomination letters themselves that showed that a particular business was exceptional," Truitt said. The judges were not looking merely for general comments about a company providing good services and products, but for details of actual incidents which demonstrated these qualities, she said.

Purpose of the exceptional business award was to offset consumer complaints, "because we (the BBB) know in working with these businesses that they try to do what's right by their customers," Truitt said. "We wanted to start a tradition of recognizing outstanding businesses," instead of always focusing on the negative.

The BBB was especially gratified at the "overwhelming response" from the public concerning nominations for the award, she said. Advertisements placed in area newspapers in late September generated 150 nominations, with 50 separate businesses being named.

"We were extremely pleased. People apparently wanted us to know about good companies that were doing what they wanted them to. We feel that everyone nominated was a winner, because the fact that someone took the time to write us a letter," shows the quality of the business.

The awards came as a surprise to both Candel Quintana, Kelly-Moore's local manager, and Lee Webb, owner of the Odessa recreation vehicle center.

The two companies differ from each other in several respects and reflect the diversity of Permian Basin businesses.

Kelly-Moore, located at Midland's Dellwood Mall since 1978, is part of a national chain of more than 100 such outlets doing business from coast to coast. Manager Quintana is a relative newcomer to the Permian Basin, having been transferred to Midland from the San Angelo store in November 1981.

He holds an associate degree in business from South Plains Junior College in Levelland.

He was quick to give credit to his 19 employees for making the store worthy of the award.

"I was very much surprised (to receive the award). I would probably say customer service and satisfaction are the most important things. We try to let our employees be aware that we're here not only to sell, but to please people. If there's a problem, we try to make it good."

Webb's Odessa business is homeowned and operated, older and totally a family affair. His wife, son, daughter, brother and a nephew work with Webb, along with about 10 other employees. Each of the family members are active in Odessa community affairs.

Webb grew up in Odessa and strongly feels the family owes the city something in return. His daughter helped start a rape crisis shelter, for example, and his son works with the Meals on Wheels program.

"We enjoy our business — our clientele is easy to deal with. People who buy recreational vehicles are usually more relaxed," Webb said.

Webb said he is in business for two reasons: to make money, and to enjoy the work. "If I don't make money, I can't stay in business, and if I can't enjoy it, I won't stay in business," he said.

Thursday Yates' 'birthday'

Like 'Ole Man River, the Yates Field just keeps flowing along — fulfilling more than its promise and fueling not only the steady production of its majority interest owner, Marathon Oil Company, but fueling the dreams of wildcatters everywhere.

On Oct. 28, 1926 — 56 years ago today — the discovery well of that most prolific field, the I. G. Yates A No. 1, reached a total depth of 1,004 feet after being spudded Oct. 5. It flowed at the rate of 450 barrels of oil per day, producing from the top of the Big Lake lime formation in Pecos County.

It was deepened in April 1927 and August 1928. On New Year's Day, 1929, the well tested at 3,036 barrels of oil per hour. In 1957, the well was deepened again, to 1,283.

The Yates A No. 1 is still flowing at about 100 BOD, with a low gas/oil ratio; no water is being produced. The well has never been shut in.

This one well led to many others, and eventually to the Yates Field, which in 1981 produced nearly 47 million barrels of oil.

Today there are more than 850 wells in the field, which was unitized in July 1976. At that time, Marathon essentially became the operator for the whole field, and still is today. About 200 companies or individuals own working interests in the field, with Marathon the majority owner at a bit more than 49 percent.

There are those who say that when United States Steel was eyeing Marathon during its successful take-over bid last fall, the oil reserves of the Yates Field were one attractive consideration.

Since the field was unitized six years ago, produced gas has been returned to the reservoir and secondary waterflooding activities have been initiated in the western portion of the field.

The field was "conceived" in December 1923, when rancher Ira G. Yates and his wife, Ann, signed a lease with Transcontinental Oil Company covering 8,000 acres.

Two years later, the company made a 50-50 deal with Mid-Kansas Oil and Gas Company, a forerunner of Marathon: if the latter drilled a well on the lease, the former would sign over a half-interest. Eventually, Mid-Kansas bought Transcontinental's half, and became the proud owner of a huge producing field.

By 1929, the Yates Field was estimated to be capable of flowing five million barrels of oil a day, almost twice the actual production of the entire United States at the time.

State production down

DALLAS — The Texas industrial production index, a figure used to monitor trends in the state's manufacturing, mining and utility industries, declined by an 18.6 percent annual rate, seasonally adjusted, in August, says the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas in its latest report.

The bank's research department keeps monthly statistics on productivity and capacity for industries in Texas.

The industrial production index drop represents an 8.7 percent decline from the same period a year ago. The mining industry, with declining results since the beginning of the year, experienced a 14.0 percent decline in August. The manufacturing segment, including both durable and non-durable goods, reflected a total decease of 21.2 percent.

Poor results in the mining industry were due to several factors. Activity in the oil and gas drilling segment declined by 36.7 percent as the Texas rig count continued to decrease; metals, stone and earth mineral production declined by 15.6 percent, and crude petroleum production fell 7.8 percent.

Durable goods manufacturing activity fell by 35.2 percent. Although there was a 108.3 percent increase in the primary metal industry, this did not offset declining results for the industry as a whole, the Dallas Fed bank said.

Non-durable goods also shared the responsibility for declining results, with a 7.1 percent reduction. Texas textile mill production fell by 102.8 percent alone.

Reflecting the drop in factory output, the August manufacturing capacity utilization index dropped to 91.9 percent of the 1972 base year, versus 93.8 percent in July and 103.0 percent in August, 1981.

Court fines operators

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Three Odessa oil and gas operators are among nine operators fined by a Travis County district court for failing to plug properly oil and gas wells, the Railroad Commission announced Wednesday.

The RRC reported Cortez Corp. was fined $80,000 while Tom E. Ricks was fined $10,000 and Ralph Woods Inc. $14,000.

The RRC said that "in all the cases, Railroad Commission investigatiors found the operators had abandoned the wells without properly plugging them, posing a potential pollution danger."

The RRC said lawsuits were brough by the Attorney Geenral's Office against the operators, who were directed to plug the wells within specified periods or face contempt proceedings.

The RRC reported that this year it has referrred over 160 well plugging cases to the attorney general, compared to 37 in 1981.

Other companies listed by the RRC, and fines assessed, were Balcones Oil Co. Inc., Austin, $8,500; J.D. Production Co., Laredo, $20,000; Cerco Petroleum Inc., Abilene, $10,000; Gilbert J. Moore Jr., Longview, $16,000; T.D. Humphreys Jr., Dallas, $20,000; and Gee and Stone, Wichita Falls, $30,000.

Adobe reports discovery

Adobe Oil & Gas Corp. has announced a gas discovery in the Camerina formation in its State Lease 7712 No. 3 in Vermilion Parish, Louisiana. The well also established a major deep confirmation pay in the Miogyp Sands formation.

The Camerina formation tested 9,200,000 cubic feet of gas and 678 barrels condensate per day on 20/64th inch choke opening through perforations from 15,205 to 15,210 feet with 4,910 psi flowing tubing pressure. The nearest Camerina production is some 2 1/2 miles northwest. The Miogyp Sands was found from 17,761 to 18,300 feet and electric log indicates 100 feet of net pay in that formation with possible reserves of 100 billion cubic feet of gas.

The Camerina perforations will be squeezed and final completion in this well bore made in the Miogyp Sands. An adjacent well will be drilled for completion in the Camerina.

The discovery well is drilled on a 6,000 acre block. Adobe owns 23.55 percent working interest in State Lease 7712 P3 well. Other parties and their working interests are, Traverse Oil Co. 27 percent; Jones-O'Brien, 34 percent; Newmont Oil Company, 6.0 percent; Rebel Oil Company, 3 percent; and various individuals with a total of 6.45 percent.

Calix completes in chalk

Calix Corp., Midland, has recently completed the Industrial Park No. 1 well, potentialed at 639 barrels of oil per day, 500,000 cubic feet of gas per day through a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 530 pounds through perforations from 6,930 feet to 6,962 feet out of the Austin Chalk formation. The well is located in the rapidly developing Peach Creek Austin Chalk-Buda Field, Gonzales County, Texas.

Calix Corporation operates out of Midland, with a district office in San Antonio and a field office in Gonzales.

The Industrial Park No. 1 is the eleventh completion for Calix Corporation in Gonzales County this year, of a well-producing from both the Buda and Austin Chalk formations.

Tipperary shares gas well

Tipperary Corporation reported Wednesday a participation in a 112,500,000 cubic feet per day gas discovery in Loving County, Texas. The No. 1 Linebery had a calculated open flow potential of 112,500,000 cubic feet of gas per day through perforations from 15,419 to 15,458 feet in the upper Atoka formation. The well tested 2,300,000 cfgd through a 3/64" choke, 3,800,000 cfgd through a 6/64 choke, 6,200,000 cfgd through a 9/64 choke, and 8,800,000 cfgd through a 11/64 choke. Shut-in tubing pressure is 10,387 psia.

Tipperary owns a 5.25 percent interest in the well and the surrounding 11,861 acres. In addition, Tipperary et al are drilling a 20,000 feet offset to test the Fusselman formation.

Average hourly wage growth at slowest rate in 15 years

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a dramatic slowdown in inflation, the average hourly earnings of workers in private business are failing to keep pace because wages are growing at the smallest rate in 15 years, government figures show.

A Bureau of Labor Statistics report shows that average hourly earnings in the private workforce rose only 4.9 percent over the past year. During the same period, September 1981 to September 1982, the Consumer Price Index rose 5 percent.

Thus, the deceleration of wages has been a bit sharper than the deceleration of prices — even though inflation is running at its slowest pace in six years.

According to the bureau, a worker's total hourly earnings on average rose from $7.40 in September 1981 to $7.76 last month.

The lowest previous year-to-year gain in average hourly wages of workers was 4.6 percent from September 1966 to September 1967.

In a report on workers covered by recently negotiated union contracts, the government said wages rose an average 5.3 de¾cent in the first nine months of this year. It was the smallest rise since 1973 but still enough to keep these workers just ahead of inflation.

The figures show that the recession and high unemployment are having a significant impact in holding down wage increases, which greatly influence the inflation rate.

So far in 1982, inflation is running at an annual rate of 4.8 percent. That matched the level for all of 1976 and raised the possibility that inflation for all of 1982 would be the lowest in a decade.

A bureau survey of some 2.7 million workers covered by collective bargaining agreements negotiated in the first three quarters of this year showed wage adjustments averaging just 3.8 percent in the first year of the accords. It was the lowest level since the government began compiling contract bargaining data in 1968, the analysts said.

Analyst Harriet Weinstein noted that major concession-bargaining involving unionized auto manufacturing and trucking industry workers accounted for most of the 3.8 percent average first-year wage gains stemming from contracts bargained in the first nine months of this year.

Barry Bosworth, an economist with the Brookings Institution, a liberal-oriented think-tank based here, agreed that these major concession-bargaining developments "dominated the (wage) series."

But he cautioned against general statements about workers' chances of keeping abreast of price inflation. Bosworth emphasized that the government's figures represent an average of hourly earnings. Thus, the figures could be exaggerated by healthy wage gains registered by some workers, which masked losses suffered by others.

"The wage deceleration, in nominal terms, is a good thing," said Bosworth, who headed the Council on Wage and Price Stability during the Carter administration.

But he added that both prices and wages must decline in tandem. "If you bring them down together," he said, "a worker won't be any better off or any worse off."

The bureau's unionized and overall wage surveys cover non-supervisory wage and salary earners in the private, nonfarm sector of the economy. Approximately 80 percent of all jobs on private payrolls are involved. The survey is based on union contracts covering at least 1,000 workers.

In a broader survey, released Wednesday, of wages paid to 8.5 million workers covered by collective bargaining agreements now in force, the figures showed that some 1.6 million of these workers went without pay raises.

For the some 2.7 million workers getting average first-year wage gains of 3.8 percent, the wage adjustments will average 3.5 percent over the life of the newly negotiated contracts, the bureau said. That compares with 8.3 percent first-year gains and 6.4 percent average contract-life gains won when the same workers previously negotiated a labor contract with management.

Bentsen top recipient of funds from oil, gas industry PACs

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — With nearly three weeks to go before the Nov. 2 elections, 196 political action committees representing the oil and gas industry had donated $6.8 million to congressional candidates, and the biggest recipient of those funds was U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, according to a study released Tuesday by a labor-backed group.

The study by the Citizens Labor-Energy Coalition, made up of AFL-CIO unions and community organizations, said a review of reports filed with the Federal Elections Commission showed that by Oct. 13, contributions by committees linked with the energy industry had topped the $6 million the industry spent in 1980.

Oct. 13 was the last date covered by pre-election financial reports, but 108 reports due on that day had not been received Monday, according to the coalition's report. It noted that the totals presumably would increase substantially when final figures on contributions are listed with the FEC after the election.

The coalition's survey said Republican candidates had received roughly three times as much in oil and gas contributions as had Democrats, but it listed no total number of candidates benefiting from the gifts. It named only the top beneficiaries among House and Senate candidates.

Twelve Senate candidates, all of them Republicans except Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, received a total of $60,000 or more each from 196 oil and gas committees, the report said.

Bentsen headed the list with $143,408 in contributions. The runners-up were Sens. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., with $126,775, and Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, with $123,796.

No. 6 on the list was San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson, the GOP candidate in California, who received $93,341.

The coalition found that 17 House candidates, 15 Republicans and two Democrats, had received gifts totaling $25,000 or more from oil and gas committees.

Heading the House list, however, was a Texas Democrat, Rep. Phil Gramm, who was reported to have received $83,650 by Sept. 30. Rep. Jim Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, was listed as receiving $42,400, and Rep. Robert Michel, R-Ill., the House minority leader, was reported to have received $46,002.

On the list were five California Republicans, Reps. John Rousselot, with $53,825, and Don H. Clausen, with $30,900, and three nominees, Milton Marks, $47,675; Bill Kennedy, $33,775, and Dennis McQuaid, $27,475.

The Energy Coalition said the political action committees covered by its report were those backed by executives and investors in oil and gas companies, as well as the companies themselves. Without citing comparative figures, it said the oil and gas committees had "contributed more than any other single corporate sector" to congressional campaigns.

Israeli policemen's wives tired of husbands' low pay, long hours

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli policemen are forbidden by law to demonstrate or form labor unions, so their wives are spearheading a battle for higher pay and better working conditions for their husbands.

"The last paycheck we got was the straw that broke the camel's back," Rivka Saban, 31-year-old wife of a detective and a mother of four, was quoted by the newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth as saying recently.

Mrs. Saban is one of hundreds of policemen's wives who have banded together for demonstrations and lobbying in political corridors. Her husband Mordechai, a detective for 14 years, received a pay package of 11,000 shekels ($365) for September — on a par with construction workers and the lowest monthly pay scale in the public service.

Israel radio says 12 Tel Aviv policemen have resigned over poor pay and working conditions and more resignations are expected. One policeman, who resigned recently after 10 years on the force, told the radio his 14,000-shekel ($465) wage was not enough to buy food and he had to take one of his children out of kindergarten.

While the wives demonstrate, the policemen are leveling their complaints in anonymous interviews with the press. They gripe at 100-hour work weeks without overtime pay, poor equipment including outdated weapons and communications systems, unsafe police cars and a monthly clothes allowance for plainclothesmen of 8 shekels (27 cents).

Israel's 20,000-member police force has a reputation for honesty, but one policeman was quoted in the newspaper Maariv as saying it was becoming difficult to resist taking payoffs.

"A few months ago, I went to a hotel after getting a call that a tourist was found dead in a room," the policeman was quoted. "He had $40,000 in his pocket. The cop with me said, 'What do you think?' For a moment I really thought we should take it but then I came to my senses."

Another cop told the radio that police were working at 25 percent of their potential because they lacked incentive.

Yaffa Oscar, wife of a detective who earns the shekel equivalent of about $350 a month, said $150 went toward the mortgage, $75 to the kindergarten for her two children and $35 for utilities.

That left $90 for the husband to care for his wife and children, to buy food and dress the children.

Incumbents battling for same House seat

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

ATTLEBORO, Mass. — Two formidable members of the House of Representatives who were forced by redistricting to run against each other in the newly redrawn congressional district here have been beating each other up this fall in a thumping, high stakes, big money, heavy media political battle over — what?

Define the key issue of this race and you've probably declared the winner.

To freshman Democratic Rep. Barney Frank, witty, wisecracking and remorselessly liberal, the fight is all about the devastating impact of Reaganomics, pure and simple.

In the district's biggest city and foremost battleground, the depressed garment town of Fall River, Frank is counting on a heavy anti-Reagan vote from an ethnic, blue collar and 13.4 percent unemployed constituency.

To his Republican opponent, Rep. Margaret M. Heckler, a feisty eight-term veteran and the most senior woman in Congress, the real issue in this campaign is her exemplary constituent service contrasted to Frank's "harebrained" record as a state legislator. He took positions then, she informs the voters, that were soft on prostitution, pornography and crime, disrespectful of the flag and tax-happy.

The Heckler media assault began 10 days ago, and Frank, who considers it an outrageous smear, thinks it will fail.

"When unemployment is over 10 percent, you're insulting the voters by harping on the way I wanted to zone Commonwealth Avenue," he says, a reference to his controversial proposal in the mid-1970s to create a "Combat Zone" in Boston's tenderloin district. It was intended to halt the spread of prostitution and adult book shops onto Commonwealth Avenue and into the other residential neighborhoods he represented.

But Heckler, who watched her once-substantial lead in the polls turn into a small deficit by early fall under Frank's blistering attack on Reaganomics, believes Frank has a glass political jaw.

"His statehouse record is a political consultant's dream," says Elliot Curson, the media specialist who put together Heckler's TV ads. "It might get Frank elected in Back Bay or San Francisco, but nowhere else I can think of."

"The whole strategy is to take the heat off Margaret," says Heckler press secretary Joshua Reznek. "It's designed to keep Frank from marrying her to Reagan."

But marry he does. At a debate here earlier this week, Frank, the beefy, disheveled son of a New Jersey truck stop operator, took every opportunity to remind voters that Heckler went down the line for President Reagan in 1981 and only started putting some distance between herself and the president in 1982, when she knew she would be facing Frank.

"I haven't had such a good influence on someone since my kid brother got too old to listen," quips Frank, who takes credit for influencing Heckler's votes this year on the balanced-budget amendment, the MX missile and the 1982 budget.

Heckler fires back that she is "not a Reagan clone...I've served under five presidents, unbossed and unbought."

She ticks off her service to the district and reminds the audience that Frank, in one of those gibes that have sometimes been costly to him, once referred to constituent service as "slopping the hogs."

"Just what is the slop?" Heckler asked, her Irish magnificently up, "and who are the hogs?"

The arithmetic of the newly created district cuts both ways. Heckler represented 70 percent of the people in the district before redistricting, Frank only 26 percent. But there are nearly three times as many Democrats as Republicans.

When the new lines were drawn, Frank complained bitterly that he was victimized by fellow Democrats who were settling old scores, but since the first of the year he has been a tireless campaigner.

He is a colorful candidate and a fund-raiser with few equals. His war chest will exceed $1 million, making this one of the rare races this year where the Democrat will be better financed than the Republican.

Still, the issue here isn't money — both have plenty. The issue will be Reaganomics — or "slopping the hogs."

Bell gets rate hike

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Southwestern Bell's 1980 rate hike request, which went to the courts, has finally ended with a 10 percent increase in intrastate long distance rates.

Public Utility Commission spokesman Rick Hainline said Wednesday the increase would give Bell the $16 million in additional revenues the courts said was justified.

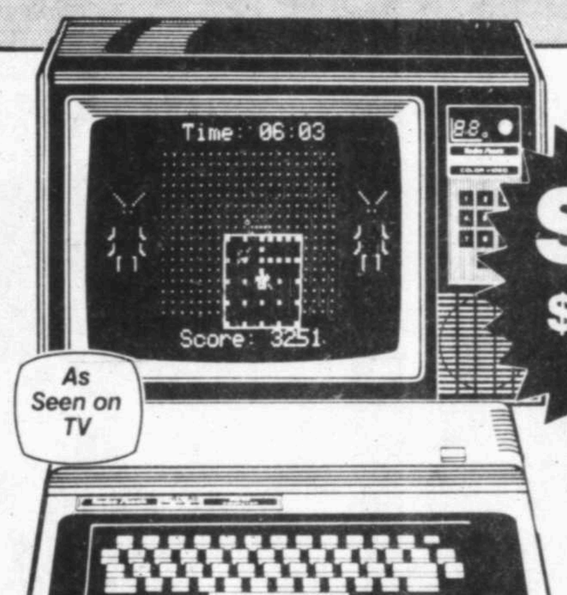

The 10 percent increase on intrastate calls, which covers only calls made from non-coin telephones, was effective Monday when the commissioners approved the agreed plan.

Hooray for Hollywood when it's costume time

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

For years I was your basic witch — on Halloween, I mean.

Sheets of black cloth offered numerous possibilities. A mask, a cone hat and an optional broom established credibility. Or at least all the credibility necessary among childhood friends celebrating Halloween as fellow witches or wearing white sheets as your basic ghosts.

However, when confronted with getting a costume together for an adult Halloween party a few years ago, I became Magenta, the French maid from the "Rocky Horror Picture Show."

Hollywood Halloween fever had hit.

What would today's hauntings be without Hollywood? These basic witches and ghosts will be in the minority tonight as hundreds of E.T.s, Yodas, Pac Men and various aliens prowl the streets. Meanwhile, adult celebrators turn up at parties as Marilyn Monroes, Joan Crawfords, Humphrey Bogarts and all versions of Dracula and King Kong.

HOLLYWOOD'S INFLUENCE on Halloween in recent years was underscored Wednesday night by the prestigious American Film Institute, which presented a "Hollywood Halloween: Movie Make-Up for Kids" program at the John F. Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

A brochure on the program floated across my desk. "Make the Hollywood creature of your dreams come alive!" it beckoned. "By using Hollywood monster makeup techniques, you can become a werewolf, Dracula or Frankenstein's bride!"

Steven Spielberg, the director and co-producer of this summer's box-office smash, "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial," made note of Hollywood's influence on Halloween costuming in his movie by showing a suburban spook parade of little space creatures out for tricks or treats. Ironically, many are in costumes derived from the "Star Wars" movies, now old hat in costume circles as a yellowish plastic E.T. with large blue eyes, available for about $6, is the hottest kiddie costume on the market.

But the E.T. get-up only goes to children's size 14, so adults hoping to emulate the alien may have to do some extra-terrestrial costume scrounging. Parts of old robot costumes will not do. A glamorous Hollywood Halloween may be a simpler alternative.

Buffalo Breath, a shop in Pacific Beach specializing in costumes for Halloween and other parties, has racks of frills and wigs that allow for a masquerade weekend as Marilyn Monroe, for instance, for a rental sum of $50. Buffalo co-owner John Fitzsimmons says Marilyn has been among the most popular costume requests this year, along with Jean Harlow, Joan Crawford and other stars suggesting the '40s look.

ALSO POPULAR ARE Mae West, Groucho Marx, Charlie Chaplin, Humphrey Bogart and the usual Dracula-inspired looks, says Fitzsimmons, who believes that beyond E.T. this year, sci-fi looks may be a vanishing species.

"Darth Vader has definitely peaked," he observes, adding that the Errol Flynn cavalier look could be the next "in" outfit.

"Adults get a lot of repressions out in these costumes," he says. "The parties are a lot of fun and people take lots of care in putting them together. They like to emulate all these modern symbols."

David Barreras, owner of Dave's Display World, says his business indicates that the most popular Halloween looks this year include Monroe, Harlow, West, Dolly Parton, Pac Man, Bela Lugosi's "Dracula" and characters derived from gangster roles modeled after Bogart.

Still, he observes, many requests come in for people wanting to be Scarlett O'Hara. The most popular mask sold is that of Richard Nixon. Barreras laughs: "It makes an easy costume. All you add is a suit and a victory sign."

ALAS, I THINK I'll just be a witch. Meanwhile, here are some not-so-obvious movie characters it could be fun to turn into and possibilities for the costumes:

Klaatu, the alien from "The Day the Earth Stood Still" — A fairly standard space suit of pliable plastic will serve, but don't by any means go around with the usual trick-or-treat line; instead use the one Klaatu utters as he emerges from a flying saucer on the mall in Washington, D.C.: "We have come to visit you in peace, and with good will."

Benji — Given the predicamemt of becoming a four-legged beast, it is best to enlist the aid of a friend, so that one may go as the fore and the other as the aft. Cover persons amply with shaggy shawls and, to add glamour, equip the head of the canine with a pair of special sunglasses for dogs, the kind advertised in this year's Neiman-Marcus Christmas catalogue.

Sigmund Freud of "Freud" — Wear great-grandfather's standard black suit and, for identity, carry a couch.

The Giant Claw of "The Giant Claw" — This will require much time and construction; in fact, begin saving wire, coat hangers, old milk cartons, etc., for building next Halloween.

Lawrence of Arabia — Several sheets from designer linen collections will be necessary. Choose any design in keeping with your taste, but avoid ones with little flowers.

James Bond — Every man to himself.

Flipper — Start with a wet suit...

Lead specter in "The Ghost in the Invisible Bikini" — It's up to you, but let me suggest a surrounding heavy cloud of dry ice.

Pot business getting rough in California

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Large-scale marijuana growers in Northern California have had more than Mother Nature to contend with during this year's harvest. Law enforcement agencies have been raiding the pot plantations.

The reason for the crackdown: violence, linked both directly and indirectly to the marijuana industry.

Armed state and county agents seized almost 8,000 pounds of plants and 1,053 pounds of dried ready-for-market marijuana in the past two weeks, said Jerry Smith, who heads the state bureau of Narcotics Enforcement here. The high-quality marijuana, which retails at up to $250 an ounce, is worth at least $1.5 million on the wholesale market, according to officials. Eight people were arrested in the raids, but only five were booked.

"Before, marijuana was always considered a local problem and second to harder narcotics," Humboldt County District Attorney Bernard DePaoli said. "But because of the increase in violence, state and federal drug enforcement officials are starting to realize what a serious problem it is."

Violent crime in Northern California has grown rapidly in the last three to five years, officials say. There have been 16 homicides in Humboldt County so far this year, compared to an average of two or three a year in the mid-'70s, said DePaoli, even though the area's population has remained stable. Five of this year's deaths were directly linked to marijuana, involving either growers or poachers who were actually killed in marijuana fields.

What's changed in the past few years is the type of people who grow the marijuana and their reasons for doing it. Gone are the days when the majority of growers were laid-back, aging hippies left over from Haight-Ashbury days in San Francisco, who only grew enough pot for themselves and a few friends.

Now, large-scale commercial growers use sophisticated horticulture technology to produce an average of $250,000 worth of high-grade pot a year per grower. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency now estimates that marijuana is a $1.5 billion-a-year industry in California and the state's No. 1 crop.

The demand for domestic marijuana was created in the late '70s when the United States government convinced Latin American officials to spray the pesticide paraquat on their countries' marijuana fields. Local growers began using Yankee ingenuity to perfect Sinsemilla, a seedless high-grade marijuana that produces an almost stupefying high.

Northern California, with its heavily-forested terrain and relaxed atmosphere, became the ideal place to quietly grow the illegal weed. But then the economy got tight. "And that's when a lot of people — some who don't even smoke the stuff — started growing marijuana just to survive economically," DePaoli said.

One grower who was killed this month while protecting her marijuana field was a former member of the Humboldt County grand jury, DePaoli said. Another grower arrested was a 63-year-old doctor who said he hated marijuana, but did it to to add $200,000 tax-free to his income.

Two retired state Department of Forestry workers were also growing marijuana, DePaoli said, keeping meticulous notes concerning the progress of their crop.

Growers, fearful of law enforcement officials and poachers, often guard their crops, shotgun in hand, 24 hours a day during the harvest season, which lasts from mid-August to October. Many construct elaborate booby traps using guerrilla warfare tactics they learned while fighting in Vietnam, DePaoli said. One popular tactic is to drive large nails into small sheets of plywood, then camouflage them in the marijuana patches.

"It would definitely ruin your day if you ran through one of those," DePaoli said.

DePaoli expects that two or three bodies will be found in marijuana fields after the harvest season. "It happens every year," he said.

Officials in California seized 91,000 pounds of marijuana throughout the state last year, said state Department of Justice spokeswoman Gina McGuiness, who admitted that the figures were unreliable. She said that the state had "absolutely no idea in the world" what percentage of the state's marijuana crop the seizures represented.

Cotton export predictions bleak

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the ailing world economy showing few signs of a fast recovery, the outlook for U.S. cotton exports continues relatively weak.

The latest signal came Monday in a report by five West German economic institutes that said unemployment continues to rise and that industrial capacity is underused throughout the world. And there is no sign of the expected revival in the U.S. economy until next year, it said.

According to Agriculture Department economists, the pessimistic forecasts about global recovery spell bad news for U.S. cotton exports. With foreign textile mills operating at reduced capacity, demand for cotton is poor.

Domestic cotton use by mills in the marketing year which began Aug. 1 is expected to rise from 1981-82 but still will be below the level of two years ago.

The 1982 U.S. cotton crop currently is estimated at 11.4 million bales, down sharply from last year's bumper harvest of 15.6 million bales. But with the economic slump and reduced demand, prices have been down.

In its latest analysis of the world cotton situation, the department's Foreign Agricultural Service said that the 1982-83 outlook continues to be poor for U.S. exports and prices.

"Downward revisions in world trade levels suggest the poorest trade prospects in more than five years," the report said. "Despite forecasts that world consumption will be 1.5 million bales above the 1981-82 level, virtually all of the increase occurs in countries that are also major producers."

World cotton output for 1982-83 — which includes this year's U.S. harvest — is estimated at 66.9 million bales, down 4.2 million bales from 1981-82. Excluding the U.S. harvest of 11.4 million bales, the foreign cotton output this season is expected to yield a record 55.5 million bales.

"Heavy carryover stocks and attractive prices encouraged U.S. cotton exporters to begin the 1982-83 season at a brisk pace," the report said. "August exports totaled 360,000 bales, sharply above a year ago. South Korea and Japan were the leading destinations."

Exports in September also continued above year-earlier levels, the report said.

Bureau readying for agriculture census

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau is ready to mail report forms to the nation's farmers and ranchers at the end of this year to gather information for the 1982 census of agriculture.

"Because of the declining farm income situation, along with high interest rates, the data from the agriculture census will be important to the nation's policymakers, farm supply and marketing firms, as well as farmers themselves," the agency said.

Farmers, as in the past, are required by law to fill out the forms and return them to the Census Bureau by Feb. 15, 1983.

The government estimates that there are about 2.4 million farms in the United States. An estimated 5.8 million people — only about 2.6 percent of the total population — live on them.

According to a Census Bureau report, this will be the 22nd nationwide census of agriculture. From 1840 to 1920, it was taken every 10 years. Beginning in the mid-1920s, however, the agriculture census has been every five years.

The last five-year agricultural census was for 1978. That was only four years ago, but officials said the schedule was speeded up one year to put the agricultural census in step with other economic surveys conducted by the government.

"It is the only source of uniform comprehensive data on agricultural production, inventories, sales, expenditures and other characteristics provided on a consistent county-by-county basis," the report said.

A year ago the Reagan administration, in an economy move, proposed to save $50 million by skipping the 1982 farm census and conducting it every 10 years instead of five. The plan, however, was abandoned after heavy opposition in Congress and among farm groups.

The 1982 survey will include questions about the interest expenses of farmers to help planners "to more fully analyze farm credit needs," the report said.

About 80 percent of the producers will get a four-page report form requesting information about basic agriculture items. The remaining 20 percent will receive a five-page form containing the basic items plus additional inquiries.

"These basic items include land in farms; form of ownership; land use; production and sales of crops; inventory, quantity sold, and value of sales for livestock and poultry; and operator and farm management characteristics," the department said.

Officials said the 20 percent survey will be aimed at collecting information on the estimated county totals for value of land and buildings, selected production expenses, farm equipment inventories, hired farm labor, fertilizer and pesticide use, interest expense, energy expenditures and fuel storage capacity.

"All information on individual farm operations is confidential by law and published only in statistical totals," the report said.

The bureau expects to begin publishing the new farm census information in the fall of 1983.

State use of anti-fireant pesticide banned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acting on a suit filed by five environmental organizations, a federal judge temporarily has banned Texas and two other states from using the pesticide Ferriamicide to kill fire ants.

U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene issued a 10-day restraining order Tuesday, saying Texas, Mississippi, and Arkansas cannot use the product because the key ingredient is suspected of causing cancer.

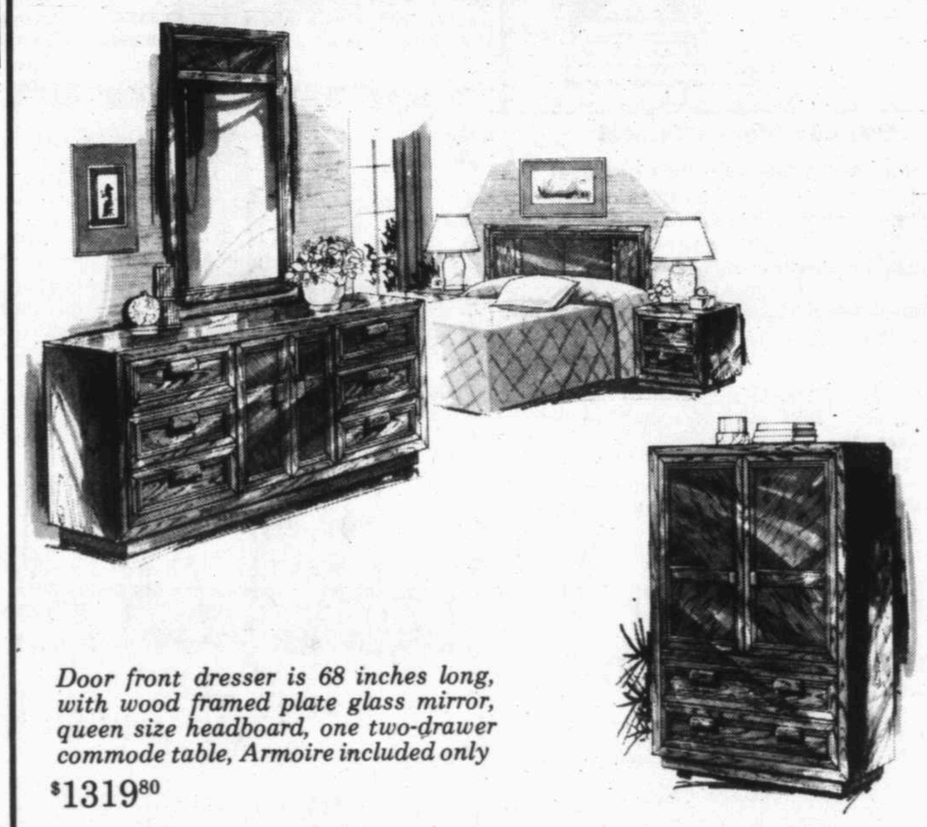

The three states were granted special exemptions by the Environmental Protection Agency to use the pesticide, which has been banned elsewhere.

Five environmental organizations filed suit, contending the pesticide is merely a new formulation of another product, Mirex, banned by the EPA in 1978. Mirex is still used in Ferriamicide but it is diluted and combined with other ingredients.

Greene noted that EPA found Mirex to be a "significant health hazard" that is suspected of causing cancer. Further, Greene said, the EPA was wrong in granting the three states special exemptions because the spread of fire ants is not a new problem.

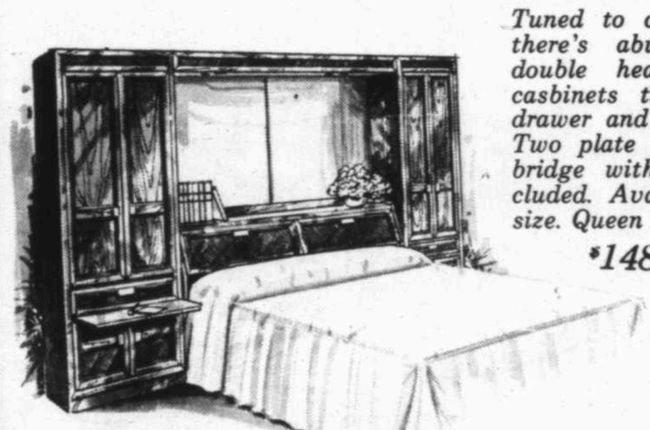

"It's impossible for this court to conclude something that has gone on for years and years is an emergency," Greene said. "That just doesn't make any sense."

Professor: Attitude about reading more important

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

"Reading is not saying the words, it's not interpreting print into oral language. It's interpreting it into meaning."
— Dr. Dorris M. Lee

Dr. Dorris M. Lee isn't worried that Johnny can't read.

Johnny can read, she said, and the test scores that show a decrease in reading ability and that have caused the negative opinion about today's students are not the issue. What is of importance to Dr. Lee is the child's attitude about reading.

"Basically, the only concern is the scores on reading tests," Dr. Lee, professor emeritus of language arts and reading at Portland State University, said, "and I don't think that's important. What is more important is how often he sits down and reads."

Dr. Lee, in Midland since Monday for Friday's and Saturday's reading conference sponsored by the newly formed Midland Chapter of The International Reading Association, said that if a child enjoys reading he will read more frequently and, consequently, improve reading skills.

PARENTS PLAY one of the largest roles in a child's attitude about reading, according to Dr. Lee, who will discuss ways to improve children's attitudes at the reading conference.

Entitled "Reading in the '80s — A Joint Venture, the Responsibility of Parents, Community School and Children," the conference will be held from 8:45 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. Friday at Carver Cultural Center, and Saturday at Midland College. Designed for parents, citizens and teachers, several reading specialists from the Midland Independent School District and from across the nation will discuss ways to increase the enjoyment of reading and reading skills.

Anna Heatherly, professor of reading at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock and national lecturer and consultant to school districts, professional organizations and the Department of Education, will focus on how parents can help their children improve reading. Dr. Bill Martin Jr., education consultant for Holt, Rinehart and Winston, New York, N.Y., and senior author of "Sounds of Language" series, will address participants on improving skills and motivation in children to read.

According to Dr. Lee, if a child sees his parents involved in reading, he probably will enjoy reading. "One of the best ways for parents to get their children to read is to have the child see them interested and involved in reading. If you don't see your parents sit down with a book, you won't think it's an important thing to do," she explained.

PARENTS ALSO should become involved in the books their children are reading. "Share reading; make it a fun thing to do," she advised. "You can make a game out of it by you reading a paragraph, then the child reading a paragraph, or a sentence depending on the situation and the age of the student."

She cautioned that parents should avoid the alternative of making the child sit down and read to them only to see how they read. The same attitude is associated with making the child read aloud in front of family friends. "That's a show-off kind of a thing and it puts the child on the spot."

Reading should be done for the enjoyment of it, she added, explaining that parental discussions should revolve around the context of the book, not how the child pronounces words.

"If a child is always thinking about what the sounds are, he's not going to get the meaning of what he is reading," she said. "If they don't get the meaning, if they don't understand what the author is saying, then they're not reading.

"Some people think that if a child gets a book and makes all the sounds at the right places, he is reading. I've seen it happen where a child can stand up and make all the correct expressions and not know what he read."

Dr. Lee said she thinks reading silently and then discussing what was read is more beneficial. Parents should read the books while their children are at school so that they will be able to discuss the book "just as two adults might discuss a book they've been reading, not to quiz them on it.

"Ask him an interpretive question to determine the depth of what he is reading," she suggested. "The superficial is asking what does it say; the depth is asking what does it mean. Reading is not saying the words, it's

Staff needed for Wage and Hour office

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

The Wage and Hour Division of the U.S. Department of Labor is looking for a couple of good people to staff the agency's Midland office, which has been closed for the past two or three months.

Only those with two to three years' experience in the complex, highly technical field of U.S. labor laws need apply, however.

With the local office closed — due to the retirement of one "compliance officer" and the voluntary transfer of the other officer to the IRS — persons who have complaints or questions about their employment are now obliged to contact the agency's Albuquerque, N.M., office, according to Regional Director Mike Ward.

Ward, who noted the Midland office handled an estimated 100 to 150 employee inquiries a year, said the closing was not the result of politics or Reagan administration budget cuts and that he has not received any complaints from the public about the closing.

"When we did have someone there, they were out of the office a lot," he added. "Phone calls were recorded and later returned.

"We've noticed some drop in the number of complaints about employers, but there's not been a significant decrease."

Basically, the Wage and Hour board handles disagreements and questions involving the federal minimum wage law ($3.35 an hour, compared to the state's $1.40 an hour — with the higher wage taking precedence in disputes), the farm labor contractor registration law, child labor laws and overtime pay provisions of the fair labor law.

Although no one staffs the office on a daily basis, Ward said investigators would be dispatched to Midland from other offices when a backlog of 10 or more complaints builds up.

"The job is quite technical," he said. "You just can't go out and hire someone off the streets. It takes about two-and-a-half years to train someone. We need someone to transfer from within the department."

Ward said he has advertised the openings — internally — nationwide but has had no takers yet.

For the time being, complaints should be directed to the Albuquerque office at 1-505-766-2477, or the Texas Employment Commission.

Ed Miller, manager of the Midland TEC, said his office is not an enforcement agency but does serve as a clearing house and refers complaints to the proper state or federal labor office.

"If we (got the person the job), we will write up the complaint ourselves and send it to the appropriate agency," Miller said.

On the question of unemployment in Midland, Miller said the September rate stood at 4.7 percent, ranking a likely second behind Austin's statewide low of 4.1 percent. Odessa's September figure was 7.2 percent. Overall for the year, Midland's rate ranges between four and five percent.

Of those looking for work or signing up for compensation, Miller said: "By and large, they're local people. We're not seeing the influx of out-of-staters we had during the boom."

Michigan, Louisiana one-way designation extended

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

On Monday, Midlanders will find themselves going one way — or another — a little longer than before when Michigan and Louisiana traffic is directed out to Andrews Highway.

Currently, one-way designations for those two streets end at North A Street.

Explaining the reasoning behind implementing a one-way street plan in the Tall City during a news conference Wednesday afternoon at City Hall was Van Cook, traffic engineer.

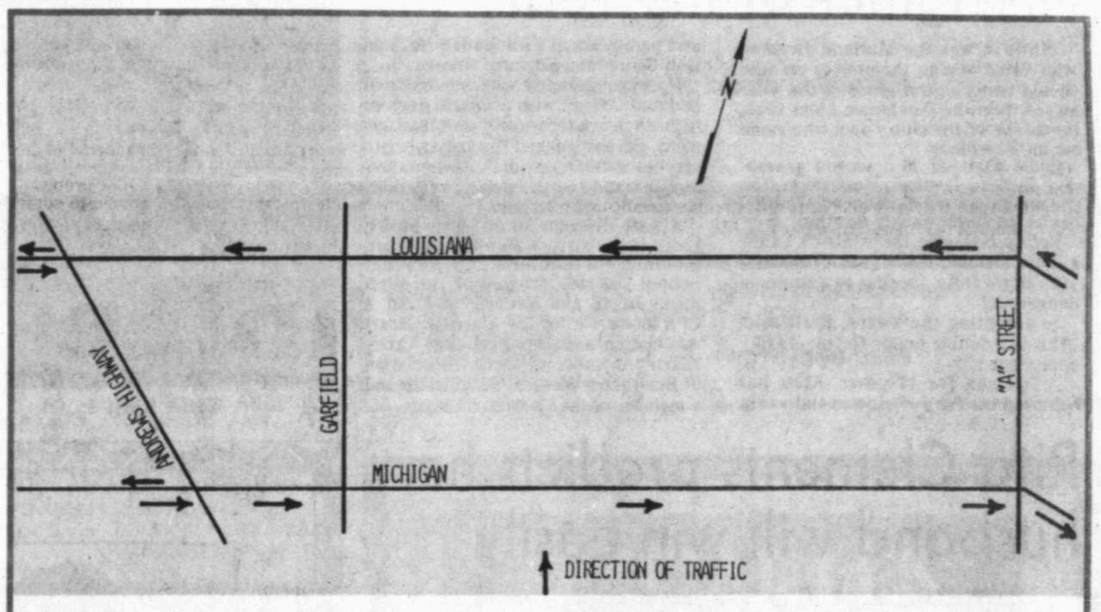

This will mark completion of the third phase of Midland's street plan, with a possible fourth pairing of Big Spring and Marienfeld being studied, he said.

Implementation of Louisiana and Michigan "will include a signal at Michigan and Garfield and removal of the stop sign on Michigan at N street," he said. "The posted 30 mph speed limit on both Louisiana and Michigan will remain in effect as well as the 20 mph school zone designation which serves Sam Houston Elementary on Louisiana."

The work of installing necessary signs should be completed on Sunday with the change to be effective Monday morning. Cook said the State Highway Department had completed its changes on Andrews Highway where it intersects with Louisiana and Michigan. Those include taking out the left-turn lane from Andrews onto Louisiana and the accompanying signal, thus giving more green time to traffic going on Andrews Highway.

Cook noted that ending the one-way traffic flow at Andrews Highway is a better idea than stopping it at A Street. "It will eliminate some congestion at A street. Andrews Highway is a much better terminal point."

Questioned about how people will get to Luby's cafeteria if they can't go east on Louisiana, Cook replied, "People will adapt to alternate routes. I'm sure people will find an alternate route to Luby's."

The one-way designations for Michigan and Louisiana avenues will be extended to Andrews Highway effective Monday. The two streets have been one-way to A Street.

A week to 10 days will be allowed for motorists to discover the extension of one-way streets and adapt to them, he said.

"There's an initial shock or trauma to the motorist, but they learn quickly when they see traffic coming straight at them that they're going the wrong way," Cook added.

"This is a continuation of a very positive thing," he said, noting that Midland is a large enough city to need one-way streets. "It was a wise decision to do it in steps, rather than all at once."

Cost of converting to one-way streets ran in excess of $30,000, he added.

In an effort to explain why the one-way system was instituted, Cook recalled a 1981 traffic report conducted by Jack Hatchell, PAWA project engineer. Traffic counts on Illinois showed vehicles had increased 50.1 percent from 1977 to 1981. Other major streets are carrying 25 percent more vehicles, Hatchell had said.

Three options are available, Hatchell reported. Those were constructing new streets, widening existing streets or making pairs of streets one-way.

"Street widening and new construction are prohibited in Midland by limited available rights of way. Cost is also prohibitive. Preserving the character of neighborhoods near the central business district would have also been jeopardized and many traffic safety considerations would not have been as well served," according to a city news release.

Hatchell also had pointed out that one-way streets reduce turning problems. Two-way streets mean 16 conflict points. Conflicts at Garfield and Louisiana, for example, will be reduced from 16 to seven when the conversion to one-way is made, according to the city release.

One-way streets also improve signal timing. With Louisiana, said Cook, two phases will be removed from the light at Andrews Highway.

"Given the increasing traffic volume problem and the alternatives to improved traffic movement, one-way implementation is an equitable solution," Cook said.

No longer deterrent for crime, Angelo says

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Ernest Angelo Jr.

Too many people have discovered that "crime does pay" and residents in the 25th State Senatorial District are wanting the state to put a crimp into the manner in which the criminals are deriving their income, said Republican Ernest Angelo Jr. during a talk Wednesday at Midland Center.

Angelo, a petroleum engineer from Midland, was featured at the Downtown Lions Club luncheon for a non-political talk during which he talked of changes necessary to break the state's increasing crime rate, reduce state spending and bring in a strong voice in Austin.

He has been campaigning for the seat being vacated by Midlander W.E. "Pete" Snelson since last spring. Opposing him is Democrat Bill Sims of San Angelo.

The district, he said, includes 38 counties and stretches from the western tip of El Paso almost to San Antonio and down to Del Rio.

"It covers 80,000 square miles and is bigger than 15 states," Angelo said of the district's size.

"I've run into a lot of comments and concerns about issues," said Angelo, a four-time mayor of the Tall City. "And the overriding worry is about crime and criminal activity. People have learned that crime does pay. There is no longer a deterrent for crime." Explaining, he said that juries and judges have not been "tough enough" on criminals.

"If they get caught, they won't get severe punishment. We need to change it so punishment will be swift, sure and severe."

Connected with this is the driving while intoxicated problem that has been tippling upward in recent years.

"The attitude of people has been swinging back to intolerance. But the problem we've run into is people who think of those arrested for drunk driving and they think it could be them. We need to change the laws so Texas will have some of the strongest enforcement on drunk driving."

The problem does not lie with law enforcement officers, said Angelo, but rather with the public.

He suggested raising the drinking age from 19 up to 21 although he admitted it would be controversial. The argument against raising the drinking age is that 18 year olds can vote and fight in a war. But he feels statistics from states where the drinking age is 21 would support the change.

Turning to the state budget, Angelo said state spending jumped from 1968 to 1978 at a rate faster than the other five largest states in the union. "This doesn't mean we had a sorry state government," he said, but it did indicate the problem of too much spending needed to be addressed. A state government out of control can mean higher property taxes and a state income tax, he added.

The 25th State Senatorial District doesn't automatically make higher-ups in state government sit up and take note as does Dallas or Houston representatives. But Angelo said he intended to change that and make the district become an important voice.

Clements says White speaks with 'forked tongue'

Staff Writer

ODESSA — Texas Governor Bill Clements verbally attacked his Democratic opponent Mark White and displayed the preeminence that political stumping takes over the responsibilities of the governor's office in a luncheon speech and press conference at Parson's Warehouse here Wednesday.

Repeatedly calling White an "incompetent lawyer," the Republican candidate for re-election to the gubernatorial position said Texas voters need to "retire this guy once and for all and send him to private practice for a change."

White, said Clements, has continually made absurd statements and "speaks with a forked tongue...It's unbecoming of our attorney general and we need to get rid of this guy, believe me."

The office of governor, Clements noted, calls for strong leadership, good management and a stewardship of what's right for Texas. "We cannot afford to have as governor of our state an incompetent lawyer," he said.

Gov. Bill Clements

Clements, during the ensuing press conference, implied that he has knowledge that one of his 42,000 contributors will take court action against now-attorney general White in connection with a controversial bank loan issue.

"I will predict that he will be taken to court," he said. "...These loans do not exist...The bank has absolutely refuted (that any loans were made)...They are bogus, phony loans, and that's the end of that."

Although Clements earlier had proposed a guest-worker program to help alleviate the illegal alien problem plaguing the state, the rigors of the campaign have put aside any attempts at furthering such. "It's going no where right now," he said. "I don't have any time to do anything — I'm in the middle of a campaign."

During the press conference a reporter quizzed him on nuclear energy use in Texas' future and the problem of how to dump the waste. Clements, however, again sought to bring questioning around to subjects on which one-on-one attacks of White could be made. "I don't think that's an issue in this race," he commented.

The reporter, however, reminded Clements that during his luncheon speech he noted the importance of planning for Texas' future, and the governor finally did make a few generalities about the topic. He stressed, however, that "I'm not going to be governor then (in 1990 when nuclear energy might become a major part of Texas' energy supplies) so it's not going to be my problem."

Clements told the crowd of several hundred persons that during his term he had made strides in such fields as education, law enforcement and the drug problem. "We passed five out of five bills that are the toughest on drugs in the United States," he said. "We can't get too tough on these drugs. I want to put these people where they belong, and that's in jail."

The governor, turning his attention to the lifeblood of the Permian Basin, said that he has had conversations with President Reagan that have convinced him the president will advocate a deregulation of gas in early January. "(This) will stimulate the economy," he noted.

Clements, who has said he would not seek re-election if he again gains the office, said he is optimistic concerning Tuesday's election.

"I predict to you that I'll win it by not less than 52 percent," he said.

Mauro confident he will win election

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Gaining Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong's endorsement a week before the general election and still hoping for that of his former opponent, Garry Mauro held a somewhat non-serious news conference Wednesday afternoon at the Region 18 Education Service Center.

Ebullient in the final days before Tuesday's general election and confident that he has won the state land commissioner's race, Mauro rattled off from his prepared release that he appreciated Armstrong's endorsement. Afterward, he said he still had not received backing from W.E. "Pete" Snelson of Midland, who fought Mauro and lost the Democratic nomination in a runoff.

"I never give up hope for his endorsement," he said of Snelson. "I need his support and help."

Opposing Mauro is Republican Woody Glasscock, whose campaign has been "centered in Hondo," jested Mauro of the man's hometown and lack of public appearances.

And he predicted taking the race with 53 to 56 percent of the vote.

In the news release, Mauro praised the work Armstrong did in his 12 years as land commissioner.

He took one of the most discredited and inefficient offices in state government and turned it into the most productive one in Texas. Revenues have increased from $60 million the year he took office to nearly $1 billion today."

Garry Mauro

Although drilling and leasing of state lands has declined in the past year, meaning a decrease in state funds, Mauro said the land commissioner's office will have to "come up with a development plan, an incentive, to see deep resources in state lands developed. We need to resolve some entanglements on hard minerals."

Mauro talked briefly about the Veterans' Land Program and the need to not only keep it intact but to expand the loans to include money for homes.

Noting that he had formed a development firm several years ago that is involved in housing and oil wells, Mauro said no one from the firm or his family would have any connection to the state land commissioner's office. But he would not give up his private business interests, he added.

The press conference then began taking a turn from the sublime to the ridiculous.

After explaining the exclusion of family, Mauro added, "I told my mother she could no longer drill oil wells."

Looking back four years when he managed the U.S. senate campaign of Bob Krueger who lost by about 10,000 votes, Mauro said it figured out to be two votes per precinct.

But that won't happen to him, Mauro said, as he began outlining his plan to give him a definite 10,000 votes.

"I bought a couple of beehives and joined the Texas Beekeepers Association. There's 12,000 members and I've been hitting them hard" with his campaign literature. Although every beekeeper might not vote for him, Mauro — with a straight face — said he could still pull in that extra 10,000 votes.

"They've got spouses, and girlfriends and boyfriends...," he listed before a reporter injected, "And honeys."

Reading attitude important, says professor not interpreting print into oral language," she pointed out. "It's interpreting it into meaning."

AN AVID READER of average speed, Dr. Lee said she hopes children are learning to read in a different manner than she was taught.

"Almost everyone in my generation was taught to verbalize and that slows you down horribly," she said, adding that children get enough phonics in school and additional teaching of phonics by parents is unnecessary. Being able to know what a word is by sight, without having to say it, is acceptable, she said, "just like you see a situation and you know what is going on or you see a person and you don't have to name them to know who they are."

She pointed out that a study done in Chicago in the 1940s indicated that students who had done no oral reading through the third grade understood reading as well as those taught to read orally.

She explained that understanding context is very important in that if a child misreads one part of a sentence, he knows it because the rest won't make sense.

"If you were just reading for words, you would miss that," she said. "A child is less apt to misinterpret if he is reading for meaning."

And although the Johnny-can't-read-syndrome has many people advocating a return to the back-to-basic teaching of the 3 R's, Dr. Lee said she doesn't think what is being pushed are the basics.

"All of this emphasis that for several years has been put on back to basics — I don't think they are the basics," she said. "The primary basics are the child's ability to think and to take on responsibility for his actions. Those are the real basics. Then the others will fall in place."

Klatt voted as Lions Club's Firefighter of the Year

While it was the Midland firemen who voted among themselves on who should receive Firefighter of the Year award from the Downtown Lions Club, it was one of the club's own who came out as the winner.

Eddie Klatt, at 36 a second generation Midland fireman, was chosen for the annual award announced Wednesday at the club's weekly meeting.

Before releasing the winner's name, a Lions member noted that a fireman's job ranges from "boring to extremely dangerous."

In accepting the award, Klatt said, "This is a double honor for me. I truly appreciate it."

A fireman for 11 years, Klatt has achieved the rank of captain and works as a paramedic at Fire Station No. 3 on Golf Course and Edwards streets.

He was graduated with honors from Midland College with associate degrees in fire science technology and management. He has worked toward associate degrees in business administration and art. He is state certified as a firefighter, paramedic and instructor.

A past director of the Downtown Lions Club, Klatt is an advisory board member for Midland Independent School District, trustee of the Firemen's Relief and Retirement Fund, a CPR instructor for the American Heart Association and American Red Cross, charter member of Texas Association of Emergency Medical Technicians and a member of the Church of Christ.

Rita Clements predicts her husband will win easily

By The Associated Press

Rita Clements, the wife of Gov. Bill Clements, predicts her husband easily will overcome Democratic challenger Mark White — with the help of Hispanic voters.

Speaking in Abilene Wednesday, Mrs. Clements said the incumbent governor appears to have the edge among the state's Mexican-Americans — a voting block considered crucial by both sides.

"I think one of the surprising things that will come out of this election is the strong support that Bill Clements has in the Mexican-American community of this state," Mrs. Clements said.

Clements has earned the suport through his appointments, his emphasis on improving relations with Mexico and efforts to address the problem of illegal aliens, Mrs. Clements said.

Mrs. Clements said new polls showed the governor eight to 11 percentage points ahead of White.

Meanwhile, White said in a news release that the almost $12 million in contributions and loans reported by Clements "still won't buy him another term in office."

White said his latest campaign report Tuesday showed he has raised $6.4 million.

"Bill Clements has said all along that he'll spend whatever it takes."

Clements campaign headquarters said 85 percent, or $9.9 million, of his contributions came from 52,177 individuals with the remaining $1.9 million loaned to the campaign committee by a Dallas bank and personally guaranteed by Clements.

"Adjusted for inflation, the 1982 campaign has spent less in real dollars than was spent in 1978," the campaign headquarters said.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen campaigned for re-election Wednesday in Amarillo, while his Republican opponent, U.S. Rep. Jim Collins, stumped in Beaumont.

Bentsen pushed his bill that would require the federal government to lodge a formal complaint with an international commission when foreign countries subsidize their nation's product — such as steel — and then "dump" the material in the United States at prices below market level.

The incumbent also said the bill could protect the petrochemical industry along the Texas coast from overseas refiners, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Meanwhile, Collins charged that Bentsen aided the passage of a $227 billion windfall profits tax on oil in 1979.

"I'm down here in oil country to tell you Lloyd Bentsen has been with Teddy Kennedy on all the key issues," Collins said. "We used to have some Democrats representing Texas who were effective — Lyndon Baines Johnson and Sam Rayburn. When we were counting on them, we didn't get any bad oil legislation."

Bentsen's spokesman, Jack DeVore, told the Times Herald that Bentsen voted against the tax, except in conference committee, where lawmakers were choosing between a Senate version and a House version of the windfall profits tax bill.

Woman reports attempted rape

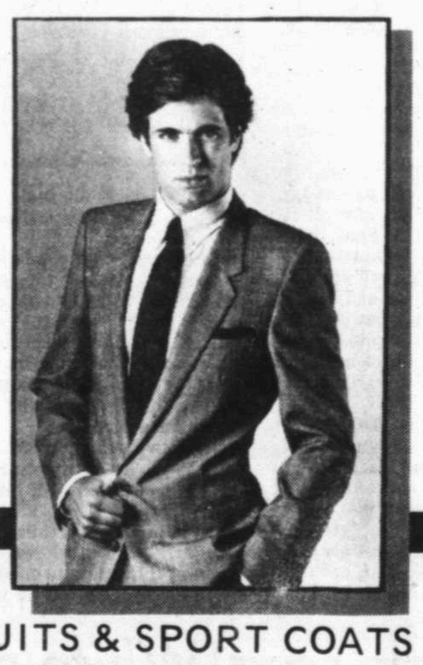

A woman jogging on the west side Wednesday night told police she was the victim of an attempted rape by a man whose face was covered with a Halloween mask.

The 27-year-old woman said she was jogging on the east side of Anson Jones Elementary School, 4919 Shadylane Drive, about 8:45 p.m. when she saw a man standing in an alley by the school.

She at first thought he was another jogger when he began running toward her, but he then pushed her to the ground and tried to drag her into the alley.

Her screams apparently frightened him off and he ran north on Thornbridge Drive. The woman went to a nearby house and police were called. A search of the area failed to turn up any suspects.

The man was described as white, about 5 feet, 7 inches tall and weighing 180 pounds. In addition to the mask, he was wearing a black T-shirt.

Hopelessness often cause of suicides

Dear Dr. Solomon: I came into my office one Monday morning to learn that a colleague of mine had committed suicide. I knew he had had some family problems lately, but no one ever thought he was thinking of taking his life. In fact, I know a few other people whom I consider to be much more depressed than this colleague of mine was. Do you have any idea what will cause one person to do something as drastic as committing suicide, while another person who is even more depressed just keeps going on? — Dave, Topeka, Kan.

Dear Dave: Dr. Norman Epstein, director of research at the Center for Cognitive Therapy at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, says that a feeling of hopelessness is a more important indication of the possibility of suicide than is a feeling of depression. The individual who is driven to suicide not only feels that things are bad, but that they cannot get any better and, in fact, may even get worse. In the face of the demands he feels the world is placing upon him — demands which the person believes cannot be met — suicide becomes a way out.

What these people often do not realize is that their perception of the world's demands is somewhat distorted, and that help is available from community social service agencies, clergymen, physicians and others.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I can understand why doctors may not want to give steroids to children, but what about adults? I have a 26-year-old grandson who has asthma and I know of other people with asthma who have been helped with steroids. If something works, why not use it? — Mrs. B.R., New York

Dear Mrs. R.: As with any form of treatment, the benefits must be weighed against the risks. Many asthmatic patients do receive steroids, but loss of bone mass and spontaneous bone fractures are among the possible consequences.

The results of a study by Dr. Allen D. Adinoff of the National Jewish Hospital in Denver revealed a number of fractures in 14 adult asthmatic patients who were receiving steroids. On the other hand, there were no fractures in a group of asthmatic patients who were not steroid-dependent.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know that a person who takes water pills often has to take potassium as well. In fact, I'm doing so right now. What I'd like to know is whether anything serious can happen if the person does not take the potassium. — Martha, Sacramento, Calif.

Dear Martha: Sudden death is a pretty serious condition, and it can occur in some individuals with hypokalemia (an abnormally low potassium content of the blood). However, not all water pills require potassium supplementation. For example, Spirolactone does not. Check with your doctor to see if the water pill you're taking requires potassium supplementation.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to thank you for the clear, factual information you provide your readers. As I'm sure you are well aware, a great deal of misinformation about impotence reaches the public. All too many physicians still regard impotence as an insignificant problem and one that is largely psychological. — Dorothy Oliver Pirovano, Public Communications Inc., Chicago, Ill.

Researchers say brain sites control appetite

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Government scientists have discovered a group of sites in the brain that apparently help control appetite and even may dictate whether we become fat or thin.

The discovery is a strong new piece of evidence indicating that, in some persons at least, fatness or thinness is controlled not just by how much or how little they eat, but by chemicals in the brain beyond their control.

The identification of these "appetite receptors," areas that apparently help mediate the action of important appetite-affecting chemicals in the brain, is reported in next week's issue of the journal Science.

The areas have been found mainly in the hypothalamus and brain stem, though they are also scattered in smaller numbers throughout the brain. The brain stem is the uppermost part of the spinal cord and lowermost part of the brain.

The hypothalamus is a control area atop the brain stem.

The research was done in laboratory mice by Dr. Steven Paul and Bridget Hulilhan-Giblin of the National Institute of Mental Health and Dr. Phil Skolnick of the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes, Digestive and Kidney Diseases. All work was done on the campus of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

They showed, first of all, that the effectiveness of amphetamines and related appetite-suppressing drugs is controlled by how effectively they "bind" to these brain sites.

According to preliminary evidence still being gathered, a genetically fat animal will have more such sites than its thinner, litter-mate brothers and sisters. The more sites, it seems so far, the more appetite.

The scientists have also shown that these receptor sites affect only an amphetamine's appetite-regulating qualities, not its common tendency to make a subject overactive and jittery.

"This is very important," Skolnick said in an interview Friday. "It means a drug company may be able to design a very clean appetite-suppressing drug," one that lowers appetite without the amphetamines' other effects.

Determine food's nutrient density

By SHARON HILLIS
Midland County
Extension Agent
Home Economics

Nutrient density is an important consideration when choosing foods and planning meals. Nutrient density is a food's nutrient content — how much nutrition it provides — as compared to the number of calories it contains.

To determine nutrient density of a food, compare its number of calories for one serving with the amount of nutrients, such as vitamins and minertals. Foods with low nutrient density have many calories and few nutrients. To get enough nutrients from these foods requires large quantities of them — at a high-calorie cost.

On the other hand, foods with high nutrient densities supply significant amounts of several nutrients, and relatively few calories. Low nutrient-density items include high-sugar and high-fat foods, such as soft drinks and chips. High nutrient-density items are watery, fibrous foods such as vegetables, which are low in sugar and fat.

To get the most nutrition at the lowest calorie cost, remember these food facts:

Instant meals made in a cup or bowl may not contribute much protein or Vitamins A and C because they contain only small amounts of meat and vegetables.

Usually plain foods are less expensive, have fewer calories and contain more nutrients than those with rich sauces.

Foods with the highest percentages of U.S. RDA are not always the best selection, because a food with a high percentage of a certain nutrient improves a diet only if the diet is short in that nutrient.

French sponge cake tasty treat

FRENCH SPONGE CAKE

Repeated by request.

2/3 cup sifted all-purpose flour
2 tablespoons sifted cornstarch
¼ teaspoon salt
3 large eggs, separated
Granulated sugar
¼ cup water
½ teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
Confectioners' sugar, if desired

Sift together flour, cornstarch and salt. In large bowl of electric mixer beat egg yolks slightly; gradually beat in ½ cup sugar until very thick and ivory color; add water and vanilla and beat until blended. At low speed, beat in flour mixture, 1 tablespoon at a time, until blended each time. In a clean bowl with a clean beater, beat egg whites and cream of tartar until stiff; sprinle with 1-3rd cup sugar; with a wide rubber spatula fold in; add to egg-yolk mixture; with a spatula, fold in. Turn into an ungreased 8 by 3-inch springform pan. Bake in a preheated 325-degree oven until cake springs back when top is lightly touched — 50 minutes. Invert on a wire rack until cold. With a small spatula and an up-and-down movement loosen edges; remove sides of pan. With your fingers, ease cake from pan. Sprinkle with confectioners' sugar or split, fill and frost as desired.

Scarecrow contest is big event

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times

NUT TREE, Calif. — They came from all over Northern California to create 250 scarecrows on a three-acre pumpkin patch in this small town.

It's the third annual Great Scarecrow Contest on the historic 127-year old Nut Tree Ranch 30 miles southwest of Sacramento.

There are whimsical, frightening, funny, innovative, complicated, simple and sad scarecrows saluting one of man's most primitive art forms.

The scarecrows will be on exhibit here through Halloween.

Early Egyptian and Greek farmers had scarecrows to scare away birds and protect their crops — so did American Indians before the arrival of Columbus.

The Great Scarecrow Contest billed as "The largest collection of scarecrows on earth in any one spot" is sponsored by the town of Nut Tree "to encourage and preserve these traditions of scarecrow making in America."

There are tin-can scarecrows, macrame scarecrows, a scarecrow on a swing, a surf-boarding scarecrow, "E.T." scarecrows, a New Wave scarecrow strumming a guitar.

One scarecrow is shown reading a book entitled "1001 Ways to Scare Crows."

There are Bride 'n' Broom scarecrows in wedding gown and tux with pumpkin heads, corn ears and broomsticks for legs.

Scarecrows have sunflower eyes, zucchini noses, egg plant ears. A cat scarecrow is shown singing a song and holding the music sheet for "Bye Bye Blackbird." An "Unemployed Due To Reaganomics" scarecrow is dressed, of course, in rags.

Winners of the $4,000 in prizes included Cathy Sherman, 22, and Jim Kardach, 23, a university electrical engineering major, who created Baron Von Scarecrowen.

Their scarecrow depicts the Baron in goggles, scarfs and flying jacket piloting a red Fokker triplane and dive bombing four crows playing poker on a bale of hay.

On the plane's fuselage are painted 18 silhouettes of crows — all killed by the Baron.

Many of the scarecrows were created by farm families who fashion the figures for real to scare away the pesty birds from their fields.

Others were done by city dwellers and by youth groups as young as kindergarteners.

From now until Halloween visitors to the Pumpkin Patch to view the scarecrows will be able to whet their appetites with pumpkin pie, pumpkin soup, pumpkin ice cream and scarecrow cookies.

Hope Chest comes through

By ERMA BOMBECK

There aren't too many things this generation has been spared.

But every day the girl babies of this world should fall on their knees and thank the man upstairs that Hope Chests went out with diaries and hair nets.

The Hope Chest flourished in this society for several hundred years. Sometimes it was an elaborate chest, lined with cedar and filled with family linens, silver heirlooms and boxes that held domestic treasures wrapped in tissue all in readiness for Mr. Right.

Mine was a foot locker that was at the end of my bed. I used it to throw all my dirty clothes on and to hurt myself bumping into it all the time. By the time I was 16, my Hope Chest held an ashtray our insurance company sent us for Christmas (I didn't smoke), a root beer mug that I won at a carnival with Daffy Duck on the side, and a lace doily my grandmother made because she felt sorry for me.

Frankly the chest didn't give me too much hope. Anyone who would marry a girl for an ashtray, a root beer mug and a yellow doily couldn't be worth much.

By the time I reached the age of 20, all of my friends had chests with so much hope, they could barely get the lid closed. Blankets, quilts, embroidered pillow cases, sheets edged in lace, bone china, silver trays, satin-covered hangers (Lord, how I coveted satin-covered hangers), bud vases, and bridge scoring cards.

Add to this a couple of bridal showers and any one of them could have opened up their own shopping center.

Just before I was married, I felt compelled to tell Mr. Right where he went wrong. "You have to know I started using my Hope Chest for a dirty clothes hamper five years ago."

He said, "You got a typewriter?"

I said, "Yes."

"Manual or electric?"

"Manual."

"We'll manage," he said.

Last week, I was looking for something in the garage and hurt myself on my old Hope Chest. When I opened it, I found our 33-year-old marriage license, a couple of photo albums of us in the early early years, pictures of the kids when they were babies, and a couple of tennis trophies.

The Hope Chest finally came through.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's only flaw comes out of closet

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am very proud of my youngest. She's wholesome, attractive, popular, and everything a mother could want in a daughter. The problem? Her bedroom and bathroom are a total disaster area. This is no ordinary teenage clutter. Jennie has not picked up a single piece of clothing for over four months, and she has a lot of clothes.

I have forgotten the color of her carpet, and sometimes wonder if the desk is still actually there underneath it all. When I complain, she hits me with this bit of blackmail:

"I don't smoke, I don't drink, I don't take drugs and I am not into sex yet. I'm college bound, so why can't I have this one little fault?"

Abby, her "one little fault" is driving me crazy, and I am not a picky housekeeper. I used to be flattered when she asked to wear my clothes. Now I find them on the floor of her room — when I can find them at all. Am I being unreasonable?

When I see and hear about kids her age who are all messed up, I wonder if I am wrong to ground her, plus no TV until she does something about her room. What about her $10 allowance and the use of my car? Help! The empty-nest syndrome sounds like one terrific idea to me. — JENNIE'S MOM IN TUCSON

DEAR MOM: I would not ground Jennie, nor would I punish her by withholding her allowance or the use of your car. I would, however, refuse to let her wear my clothes. Let her know that you are proud of her good behavior, then close her door and let her live in the clutter she created. When she's off to college, and her room is clean and quiet, write again and tell me how you feel.

DEAR ABBY: Many thanks for suggesting last year that parents buy an assortment of brightly colored pencils instead of the usual candy for trick-or-treaters. Knowing how much children like sweets, I bought some pencils halfheartedly, thinking that most children would prefer candy. I was wrong!

When I gave the kids their choice, all the pencils disappeared quickly, and I was left with the candy. My own children grumbled because there were no leftover pencils.

From now on, I am buying only pencils at Halloween. What a wonderful way to promote dental health and writing, and to save Mom from unnecessary Halloween calories. — ELLEN L. IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR ELLEN: The idea wasn't mine. It came from a reader; I merely passed it on. But thanks for the opportunity to suggest it again.

DEAR ABBY: I have a suggestion for people who loan money to others and never get it back. Send them this poem:

"I think that I shall never see
"The dollar that I loaned to thee;
"A dollar that I could have spent
"On many forms of merriment.
"The one I loaned to you so gladly
"Is now the one I need so badly.
"For whose return I had great hope
"Just like an optimistic dope.
"For dollars loaned to folks like thee
"Are not returned to fools like me." — G.G. IN DALLAS

Multiple sclerosis baffling disease

By KERI GUTEN
Hearst Feature Service

SAN ANTONIO — Wally Hill's motorized wheelchair makes him the Pied Piper every Sunday at church. Children line up and wait impatiently for rides. For each trip, two children perch on a railing behind the backrest and at least one rides "shotgun" on his lap.

It's a joy for Hill, one of 250,000 Americans who have multiple sclerosis, a baffling disease with no known cure and treatment only for a wide range of hide-and-seek symptoms.

Multiple sclerosis was first identified a century ago by French neurologist Jean Martin Charcot; it still puzzles doctors and researchers, who have placed the blame on everything from nutritional deficiencies to allergies, and who unsuccessfully have tried cures ranging from tooth extraction to arsenic to snake venom.

What experts do know about multiple sclerosis is that it is a disease of the brain and spinal cord that attacks victims between the ages of 20 and 40. It is not considered hereditary, but the disease can run in families. It is slightly more common in women than men and in whites than other ethnic groups. There is some geographic predisposition; those who live in the North have a higher risk factor than those who live in the South.

SIMPLY EXPLAINED, multiple sclerosis is a neurological short circuit: Myelin — a white, creamy substance covering nerve fibers — allows the uninterrupted flow of impulses from the brain. In multiple sclerosis, something unknown attacks the myelin, which falls away in patches and is replaced by scar tissue or sclerotic plaques. These periodic scarred areas impede or even block the flow of impulses and neurological symptoms result.

The most common early symptoms are blurred vision, fatigue, lack of coordination, speech difficulty and tingling in the arms and legs. The disease is difficult to diagnose because symptoms have been known to disappear by the time a doctor is contacted. And unlike many degenerative diseases, multiple sclerosis is characterized by long periods of remission. Yet the fear of an explosive, debilitating attack or exacerbation is always present.

Although Hill is confined to a wheelchair because his left arm and leg are nonfunctional, studies show total disablement happens only to an unfortunate minority of multiple sclerosis victims. Nearly three-fourths of those afflicted can still walk after 20 years; about one-third have cases so mild that they are only aware of the illness during occasional relapses.

But Hill can't forget how things were before his multiple sclerosis was diagnosed 19 years ago when he was in the Army.

"The first symptoms I noticed were weakness and numbness in my right hand. They stuck me in the hospital, but couldn't find anything. Then came more weakness, a loss of coordination and no sense of equilibrium. I was in and out of hospitals, but the symptoms would always disappear before they could make a diagnosis.

'For five years, I thought I was going crazy. I would have a series of bizarre symptoms which wouldn't be there when I went to a doctor. You need a sufficient history of these disappearing symptoms plus an acute attack in order to reach a diagnosis."

"I WAS STATIONED in Germany when a neurologist looked at my symptoms and my history of transitory, unexplainable problems and said, 'Son, you have multiple sclerosis.' I was relieved almost to the point of euphoria," Hill recalls. "Finally, someone realized I had something and that I wasn't making these things up in my head."

Hill says the immense feeling of relief is common to most with multiple sclerosis because it rules out the possibility of insanity. Yet when the relief fades, the disease must be dealt with realistically. For most, that translates into a cycle of acceptance.

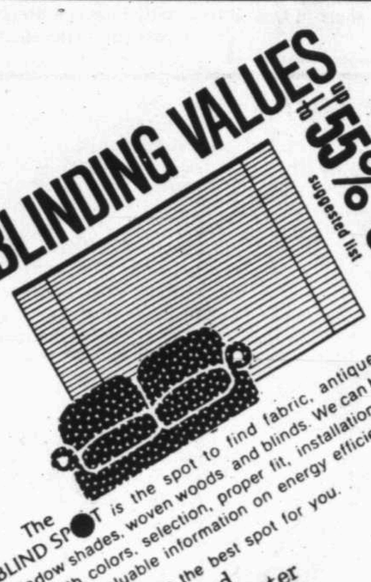

"The relief changes to depression as you see yourself losing the ability to function. You begin to think, 'My life is over. I have a chronic disease and I'll never be anything.' Then gradually you accept it and realize there are still many things you can do. Mental attitude is so important. If you say, 'I can't,' you won't. You have to do the best you can and just keep on going."

But "keeping on going" means that Hill must contend with pain on a regular basis. A Transcutaneous Electrical Nerve Stimulator, a new device which issues mild shocks at key acupuncture points, gives some relief. Pills — at least 30 a day — help stabilize the disease, but every day can still bring surprises.

"One day I woke up and opened my eyes to see the whole world flipping like it might on a bad television screen," he says. "It was scary. And then there are other problems — fatigue and incontinence. I've never had problems with my speech, but many people do slur their words. The slurring, combined with the loss of equilibrium, gives the appearance of being drunk."

March of Dimes holds fourth annual 'Monte Carlo Night'

The Midland Center took on the excitement of a Las Vegas casino recently during the fourth annual March of Dimes Monte Carlo Night.

About 600 people bet their casino chips at the blackjack, craps and roulette tables staffed by volunteer dealers. They then gathered their winnings in chips and added their own cash to bid on trips and gift packages donated by Midland businesses.

Auctioneers Lynn Cowden and Randy Baily recognized bids as they coaxed the crowd into taking home numerous prizes. High bidders left with items including a new 1982 Chevrolet Camaro Z-28, a fur, shopping sprees, a year's supply of Godiva chocolates and nine months of treatment and free delivery by a local obstetrician.

Party co-chairmen Mrs. Reginald T. McCaslin and David T. Clark began planning this year's event in June. Carolyn Berry and Martha Bernatis, gifts committee; and the decorations committee of Skeet Doss, Jon Short and Jim Gleitman have also been working for months in preparation for the event.

"This is our biggest fund raiser of the year," said Clark, "and we hope that by the time it's all over we will have netted $75,000 after expenses. The party's costs have been underwritten by our sponsors."

The funds raised from the Monte Carlo Night will be shared with national headquarters receiving 60 percent and the local chapter keeping 40 percent in the community, according to Angela Latham, executive director of Midland County March of Dimes.

March of Dimes funds have locally been used to provide the $36,000 grant that was recently awarded to Midland Memorial Hospital for the purchase of new updated nursery equipment, said Shelly Mook, co-director of Midland County March of Dimes. The March of Dimes plans to see the hospital through the planned expansion of the obstetric and neonatal departments, she added.

Other local programs include the Midland College School of Nursing, speaking to classes at the Carver Center for pregnant teens, located at Midland High School, and other educational programs. The March of Dimes also supports the Junior League's Perinatal Clinic, Childbirth With Preparation and more, Ms. Latham said.

The Midland County Chapter was recently named Most Outstanding Chapter in the State of Texas at a recent Program Orientation Meeting which was held in Fort Worth. The award is based on volunteer development and involvement, per-capita income and various programs over the past three years.

The March of Dimes actually began in 1938 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt, a victim of what is now known as polio, founded the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis. That organization started going door to door asking for dimes to fund research. In 1955 the Salk and Sabin vaccines were proven effective in the prevention of polio and in 1958 the organizatin redirected its efforts toward the prevention of birth defects and changed its name to the National Foundation of March of Dimes.

Persons interested in placing a donation to the March of Dimes may mail it to P.O. Box 8337, Midland, Texas 79703, or they may call the March of Dimes office at 682-2573.

Having babies: Hospitals offering variety of services

By ELAINE WARREN
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Was having a baby ever so much fun?

About 10 years ago, consumer discontent began driving significant numbers of expectant mothers away from hospitals and into the home-birth movement. In response, hospitals eventually changed their ways. And now they are out to get pregnant you as their patient.

It is routine business today for hospital maternity wards in major metropolitan areas to:

• Offer extensive hospital tours to groups of prospective mothers and fathers.

• Provide an "alternative birth center" that recreates the home environment by turning an otherwise sterile hospital room into a brightly decorated boudoir where the mother remains for labor, delivery and post-natal care — all in a queen-size bed.

• Offer a wide range of educational classes.

• Show movies that detail the special features of the maternity ward.

• Promote the birth process as a big family affair by encouraging the father and other close relatives to take an active role, rather than shoving them off to the side.

• Send the new mom and dad off with a steak-and-champagne dinner, served by candlelight (if local fire ordinances permit).

DOES ALL of this sound surprisingly like commercially oriented, consumer competition?

"You bet it does," says June Levine, assistant director of nursing at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica. "Hospitals are in competition these days for maternity patients. Anyone who tells you differently is wrong."

"A lot of things have changed in 10 years because of pressure from people," agrees Debra Cohen, maternity tour coordinator for Cedars-Sinai Hospital here. "We have a very large maternity load and we definitely like to court people — we'd like them to deliver here."

And just as hospitals unabashedly display what they have to sell, prospective parents are taking advantage of the situation by shopping around. What, exactly, are they hoping to find?

Sheri Goodwin, 29, chose St. John's in which to give birth to her twins, Lindsay and Jennifer. "Whenever you're pregnant nowadays, you hear all these different options and you just pick what fits your lifestyle," said Goodwin in her hospital room, flanked by the twins and surrounded by bouquets. She was wildly enthusiastic about her stay at St. John's: "They give you a lot of attention; you can ask them for anything. If it's reasonable and safe, they'll try to accommodate you."

When Goodwin gave birth to her first child 3 1/2 years ago, she made use of St. John's ABC room, which is tastefully decorated with wicker furniture, bright floral curtains and bedspread, and a stereo system.

"It's just like being in a nice hotel room," said Goodwin. "I didn't want to have that surgical feeling, and I wanted my husband with me. My relatives got to come in and we drank champagne, and my husband slept in the same bed with me. Then I went home the next day. It was so neat."

Because this time Goodwin was giving birth to twins by Caesarian section, hospital rules prohibited her from using the ABC room. "It was best for everyone," she sighed.

WITH THE current modification of hospital regulations, the overwhelming majority of fathers today are electing not only to be present during labor and delivery, but also to participate as the other's breathing coach.

"The patients themselves have brought about the involvement of the father in the delivery process, so why should the subsequent hospitalization be any different?" asks Kay Murphy, director of public affairs for Huntington Memorial Hospital in Pasadena, where parents go into a special dining room for candlelight dinners. "Maternity is a very joyful place for any hospital, and the dinner lets the parents share the celebration with the maternity staff."

"I'm in my second marriage and this is my second baby, so I have a point of comparison," said one father-to-be on a recent comparison-shopping tour of St. John's. "Let me tell you, having a baby didn't used to be this way."

Repossessor hunts 'sitting ducks,' swoops out of darkness on prey

Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — "That's our car! A duck! A real duck!"

Since midnight Art Whaley has driven to Poway and La Costa, itching for a chance to swoop out of the darkness and misty rain and snatch someone else's motor vehicle.

Now, in Clairemont an hour and 40 minutes later, he has found a Ford Pinto parked like a sitting duck on a sleeping residential street. He has been after the Pinto since Aug. 5. Now he is about to get it.

It is all he can do to wait until he is a block away before shouting a jubilant "Yahoo!"

Like his father before him, Art Whaley is in the repossession business.

If you finance the purchase of a vehicle and neglect to make the payments, Art Whaley may be crying "Yahoo" outside your home in the wee hours of some dark and rainy night.

Whaley, 31, finds a street that leads back to Clairemont Mesa Boulevard. It would be embarrassing later to wind up in a cul-de-sac. Then he drives to an all-night convenience store and calls the towing firm he always uses.

He gobbles a couple of little chocolate cakes, skims quickly through a magazine and talks excitedly with the clerk during the 15 minutes or so before the tow truck arrives to pick him up.

On the way back to the Pinto, Whaley and the driver see a police officer ticketing a motorist. They stop, and Whaley tells the officer what they are about to do.

It is vital in Whaley's business to be in touch with police. He never knows when he might be mistaken for a car thief or a burglar. And police will be unhappy if they waste time taking a stolen car report on a vehicle he has snatched.

"I think I'll come by and watch," the cop says. "I've never seen one before. Don't worry, I'll stay out of the way."

The driver switches off his lights as the tow truck turns onto the street where the unsuspecting Pinto dozes. A block away, he lowers his towing gear to ensure a faster hookup.

The truck backs up to the rear of the little Ford. Both men leap from it and attach the vehicles. They jump back in the truck and lurch from the curb.

It has all taken less than half a minute. No one in the neighborhood has stirred.

A block away they pause beside the officer, who has watched the snatch from his car. The cop can only shake his head and say: "You guys are SO-o-o fast!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Kate Jackson, editorial cartoonist Bill Mauldin, singer Melba Moore and football's Ken Reeves celebrate this birthday with you. Your financial plans receive a welcome boost during the months ahead. Travel and communication are major concerns. How well you handle them will determine how much career progress you make. A sarcastic attitude could irritate co-workers at a time when you need their cooperation. Avoid the "cheap shot." Your star shines brightest when you are on your home turf. A family member continues to influence your business choices. Welcome suggestions, but remember that the final decision is yours alone. Romance becomes more intense.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stay calm in the face of adversity and you will triumph in the end. A change of scene may not be practical now. Although adventure calls, you will have to postpone travel.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is essential that you become more economical and practical. The financial picture is brighter now, but a credit crunch could reoccur. Curb an urge to splurge!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work pressures demand your complete attention in the morning. Mate's earning power increases. A candid conversation helps relieve tension between you and co-worker.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can now reach an agreement with a partner or creditor. Physical pleasures are intruding on work hours and could irritate boss. Rethink your priorities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A travel opportunity could lead you to change your weekend plans. Loved ones should be in on the decision you make. A meeting of the minds is possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Fluctuating economic indicators make it difficult for you to reach a business decision. Try to get an extension on an option or agreement. Be more realistic about romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Increased living costs require a revision of the family budget. Ask loved ones for suggestions. Your emotions could get the better of you. Postpone signing legal documents.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be willing to make a concession for the sake of an old friendship. Ask mate to lend a hand. Relatives are demanding of your time. Look for ways to conserve your energy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Face facts before entering discussions about personal problems. Be as tactful as possible. Socializing with new friends brings greater pleasure than seeing the same old faces.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Mate or partner wants to know where you stand. Be honest. Show sensitivity to other people's needs without abandoning your own.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your relationship with a member of the opposite sex grows warmer. If you have been playing games, make a clean breast of things. A good evening for entertaining.

PISCES (Feb. 19—March 20): Find productive new outlets for your talents and energies. Divorce yourself from hangers-on. Use common sense. An extravagant gesture could be too costly.

Opening lead: King of ◇.

Even in a duplicate pair competition, if you have reached a good slam, you should look for the safest line. Why? Since a number of pairs are not going to bid the slam, you are assured of a better than average score by simply bringing home the contract. In addition, some declarers might go down, increasing your reward even further.

North's jump to four hearts on his distributional hand was well reasoned. There was little point to introducing his club suit—all that would accomplish would be to suggest to his partner that he had a better hand in high cards, and that could easily get his side overboard. South's jump to slam has this department's approval—there had to be good play for twelve tricks.

West led the king of diamonds, and declarer was happy with his dummy. One line of play was to ruff four of his spade and diamond losers in dummy. The danger in that line was that it risked an overruff, particularly since declarer lacked communication between his hand and dummy. Oddly enough, declarer did not have enough entries to his hand to make that line feasible.

A far more attractive line of play was a dummy reversal. That was made possible by the fact that, except for the jack, declarer had all the high trumps. So declarer won the ace of diamonds, cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club high. Then he led a low trump!

West won the jack and continued with a diamond. Declarer ruffed in dummy, and ruffed another club with a high trump to set up the suit. Now the ace of trumps and a low trump to dummy's ten enabled declarer to draw the outstanding trumps, ending up on the board. Dummy's good clubs and the ace of spades accounted for the rest of the tricks.

When you first saw this hand, did you realize that declarer's only loser would be a trump trick?

Israel offers private land in West Bank

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — A full-page ad has been appearing in many Israeli newspapers every weekend for the last few months. It advertises a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to buy a new villa with a quarter acre of land and a small pool for the almost unheard of price of $15,000 down and 90 per cent financing.

There are three different models to choose from and although it today takes 40 minutes to get to your dream home in the country, the ad proudly declares that it will take you only 20 minutes to get there "when the new highway is completed."

The only thing that gives pause to some Israelis, who are crowded into congested cities in a country the size of New Jersey and who seldom if ever dream of owning their own land, is the fact that this new wonderland is on the Israeli-occupied West Bank in territory that before 1967 belonged to Jordan.

But that doesn't seem to be bothering many Israelis. When the developers of a similar housing project announced they would show slides at a Jerusalem theatre of 190 planned semi-detached homes in Zeev Givat, a suburb less than 15 miles away, more than 900 families showed up with checkbooks in hand.

THE HAPPY developers immediately decided to build 100 more homes. There is at least one prominent Israeli who is deeply bothered by all this. He is Meron Benvenisti, the former deputy mayor of Jerusalem, who charges these are ingenious but disingenuous moves by the Israeli government of Menachem Begin.

They have made the issue of Jewish settlements on the West Bank basically irrelevent, Benvenisti believes, because they are part of a strategy aimed at moving 100,000 or more Israelis into the territories by 1986 so that any return of the land to Jordan will become a political impossibility.

"No government in Israel, not even a Labor government, will be able to call for evacuation because 50,000 voters are all that is needed to decide an election. It will be an insurmountable political obstacle" to the West Bank ever being returned to Jordan — as President Reagan has proposed, he said.

Today, Benvenisti explained in an interview, there already are about 22,000 Israelis living on 75 existing settlements. While that is only a small percentage of the area's 900,000 Palestinians, "each year from now on there will be at least 12,000 to 15,000 new settlers" coming into the West Bank.

BY 1986, ISRAEL will no longer need to annex Judea and Samaria, the West Bank territories Begin already considers part of the biblical land of Israel because the political process will be irreversible, he contends. "It's no longer government policy," Benvenisti said of the settlement program.

"It's a simple commercial and financial transaction between a developer and an Israeli family." Using a map that he has drawn up after extensive travel on and knowledge of the West Bank population, he points to a 15-mile radius of both Tel Aviv and Jerusalem at "the heart of the West Bank."

It is here that the government has encouraged developers to advertise an escape from "suburban sprawl," a dream home within a half hour's drive of the city on spanking new highways, by a clever rejiggering of the land laws that were in force when Jordan ruled the 2,200 square mile area.

Benvenisti explained that the Begin government discovered an obscure Turkish land code used during the Ottoman Empire that stipulated that all unused or mountainous territory from which a "human voice could not be heard" in the closest village or town reverted to the Emperor.

"SINCE MENACHEM Begin considers Israeli authority to flow directly from the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire, he is now in the process of claiming these areas as state domain," the former Jerusalem official said. The only evidence to contest the Israeli claim is a deed of title, he added.

But since there only are deeds for one-third of the total area, the remainder of the West Bank "is susceptible to be declared as state domain." More than two-thirds of the land was never registered. If a Palestinian farmer who has lived there for 50 years claims it, he must deal with the Israeli courts.

"There is no way he can come up with conclusive evidence so in 90 per cent of the cases, the Arabs lose in the Appeals Courts," Benvenisti went on. "What you have is two blades of the scissor. The first is intended to restrict Arab building. The second to take land for Jewish settlement."

He said the Begin government also is pursuing policies designed to make life as difficult as possible for the 900,000 Palestinians who live in this Delaware-size territory so they will leave. And this ex-Israeli official says Begin is succeeding.

IN 1980 ALONE, almost as many Palestinians left the territory as were born there. "The natural increase was 20,000 but in the same year 17,000 left," he said. More than 100,000 Palestinians have emigrated to Jordan since 1968, he added.

Those who remain behind depend almost entirely on Israel for their livelihood. That is because almost 50 per cent of the Palestinian work force is employed in Israel and because the Israeli Government refuses to create an industrial infrastructure in the West Bank itself.

"It is a source of cheap, unskilled labor for Israel," Benvenisti said, pointing to the fact that Arab construction workers get only about 50 per cent of what a Jewish employee gets in the same job. It also is a vital source of income for Israel, he explained.

That is because Israeli goods sold to the Arabs in the West Bank account for an astonishing 25 per cent of Israel's total exports. "It is the largest market for Israeli goods in the world — larger even than any European country. The political and economic significance of that is obvious."

IF THE WEST Bank were to once again become part of Jordan, as Reagan proposes, Israel could lose an essential market. It even allows Israel to circumvent the Arab boycott of its goods because articles sold in the West Bank find their way throughout the Arab world.

To maintain this dependence, he points out, Israel intentionally has prohibited any money market, banking or credit facilities from being created that could finance indigenous Arab industries. Israel similarly encourages the traditional Arab elites to prevent a breakdown of the social structure.

All of this has forced the West Bank to gradually become part of Israel — thus obviating the need to ever annex the territory, as critics of Menachem Begin have charged is his aim. There even are two codes of justice — one for the Jews who have settled in the West Bank; the other for the Arabs.

THE AREA IS being governed, Benvenisti said, as if it already were "a de facto part of Israel." There no longer is a military commander for the West Bank. He takes his orders from the commander of Israel's Defense Forces(IDF), a little-noticed change that replaced the former West Bank authority.

As for Reagan's call for a settlement freeze, Benvenisti says forget it. The settlements no longer count as much as they once did, although he quickly adds that 79 more settlements are in some stage of development. That would bring to 142 the number of separate Jewish towns and villages on the West Bank.

Argentina's military rulers face obstacles in retreat from power

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Argentina's military rulers, tainted by defeat in the Falkland Islands war with Britain, are encountering serious obstacles in their attempt to make an orderly retreat from government.

President Reynaldo Bignone, an army general who came out retirement to take over July 1 following the Falklands defeat, has promised to give the government back to civilians before March 1984.

He has said he wants the transition paved with accords with civilian sectors on thorny issues. Among these are the questions of the people who have disappeared in security sweeps, the blame for the current economic crisis and the responsibility for the ill-fated invasion of the British colony off the southern coast last April.

Because of the surrender in June to an overwhelming British task force, the continuing deep recession and new allegations of official corruption, military prestige is at such a low ebb civilian leaders feel no compulsion to make promises.

"I RULE OUT THE possibility of any accord with these gray military men who abused everything, who are capable of meeting amiably with a president one night and overthrowing him the next morning," said Radical Party President Carlos Contin in a recent speech.

"Milico" is a derogatory term for a military man.

The military that ousted civilian President Isabel Peron and took power in March 1976 is clearly on the defensive. But its spokesmen are establishing parameters for dissent.

"We will not permit anyone under any pretext to accuse us in the name of the human rights we strove to protect," said the navy commander, Adm. Ruben Franco, when he was sworn in as a member of the governing junta Oct. 1.

But accusations abound.

Local and international human rights organizations charge that 6,000 to 15,000 people "disappeared" during the government's campaign against leftist revolutionaries in 1975-79. Most of the missing were taken away by men who presented themselves as police or armed forces officers.

MORE THAN 100,000 LEGAL writs have been submitted on behalf of the "desaparecidos" — as the missing are called — to no avail. Most are assumed to have been killed.

The government hopes to come to an understanding with politicians to ensure the generals will not be the object of future official vendettas.

Peronist leader Deolindo Bittel said in an interview with The Associated Press the civilian government would not accept restrictions on its perogatives.

"It's very difficult to tell a legislator, 'OK, you're a legislator, but you can't say this or that.' "

Contin said the Radical party does not intend to mount "witch hunts" when the military is back in the barracks. But, he added, "The armed forces must understand that their lack of credibility obliges us to avoid accords with them because that would raise people's suspicions."

A senior Western diplomat who maintains contact with political leaders suggested they have little alternative to reaching at least tacit agreement with the generals on certain subjects.

"If they (the civilian leaders) begin Nuremburg-type trials, the tanks would roll up to Government House and they'd be back on the street," he said.

BIGNONE SAID IN a speech in September he hoped to be Argentina's last military president. But the armed forces' "Process of National Reorganization" begun with the 1976 coup has fallen way short of its main stated objective: the establishment of "a strong, stable and lasting democracy."

The populist Peronists — followers of the late President Juan D. Peron — remain the dominant civilian force despite the six years of military government. They and the Radicals are part of a five-party coalition that warned in a recently distributed document: "An immediate rectification of (economic) policy must be effected, because if not, economic and social deterioration will be accelerated and explosive."

Unemployment is at a 10-year high of 12 percent and there is no unemployment insurance for those who lose their jobs.

The cost of living has risen 15 percent a month for the past three months and Argentina appears to be headed for a repeat of last year's inflation rate of 130 percent. Real wages have fallen nearly 30 percent in the last year.

Frequent school changes can wreak havoc with formerly well-adjusted youngsters

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — It was late August when 10-year-old John and his parents moved to this affluent community, the family's fourth move in five years. For John's academic life, it nearly was one move too many.

Wilton is a short commute from such corporate giants as IBM, General Foods and Continental Can Co. John's father, like many who settle here, was an executive subject to frequent job transfers.

John was placed in the fifth grade at Cider Mill Elementary School and, says principal James Remler, "almost from the start became a loner. He seemed unhappy. He wouldn't participate at recess. He asked to go to the nurse practically every day with headaches and stomach aches. His school work was spotty."

John's problem — frequent school changes — is slowly being recognized by parents, school administrators and guidance counselors as a potentially devastating adjustment crisis for a youngster.

It can turn a good student into a school failure, or a well-behaved child into a class troublemaker.

No statistics exist on how many children change schools each year. But the Census Bureau says nearly 40 million Americans change residences each year. The number of children changing schools likely is in the millions.

But what's certain is that well-off and poor children alike can suffer anxiety, and behavioral and learning problems from switching schools.

Dr. Stephen V. Eliot, a clinical psychologist in Wilton whose firm "Transition, Inc." specializes in the problems families have moving, says switching schools can touch off a variety of difficulties: "a drop in academic performance, withdrawal and depression, rebellious behavior, a desire to run away, drug involvement, sometimes even suicide."

Many youngsters have no difficulty at all. An occasional move might even be healthy, says Dr. Ronald Raymond Jr., Eliot's partner.

"We have good reason to believe that children who have moved once or twice adjust better to college. But if you move nine or 10 times, that can't be good for anyone," he says.

Reagan stumps with Bible

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Raleigh is a city where President Reagan can turn a passage from the Bible into an applause line.

He did that Tuesday in a political rally for GOP House candidates in North Carolina. He was delivering a speech that was noteworthy because he mentioned a set of issues he rarely brings up these days as he visits friendly turf around the nation in his search for support for the Republican Party.

They are the "social issues," once one of the favorite topics of Ronald Reagan, after-dinner speaker, candidate, and then a president in his rookie year.

Clearly, from the responsive audience, they are a favorite topic in Raleigh. There is no doubt that Reagan still feels strongly about these issues: he supports school prayer; he opposes abortion; he supports a tax credit based on tuition paid to private schools; he opposes busing of school children to achieve racial integration.

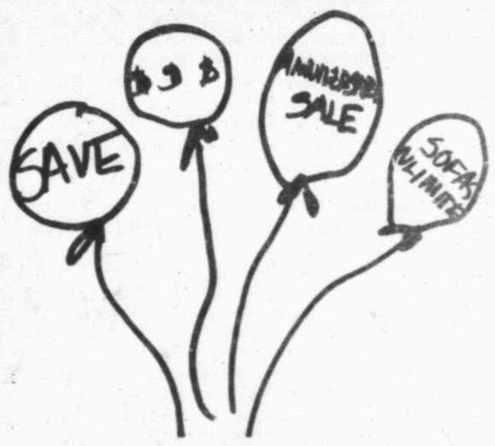

But, with the exception of a speech last summer to the Knights of Columbus in Hartford, Conn.; a five-minute Saturday radio address to the nation on Sept. 18, and one or two other occasions, they have rarely been mentioned in his recent speeches. This has reportedly been on the advice of political aides who feel the issues are too controversial for campaign talk and that a presidential discussion of them these days could cost the Republicans votes.

But the guru of the social issues debate is Sen. Jesse Helms, the conservative North Carolina Republican for whose candidates Reagan was appearing in Raleigh. The president could hardly zip through his stump speech on his efforts to bring the nation's economy out of recession without even a passing whisper on the abortion and school prayer issues.

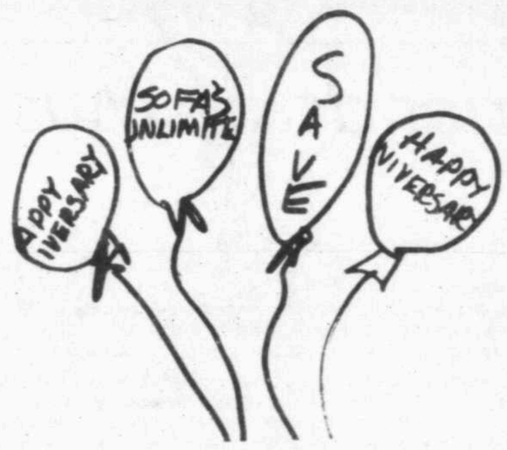

To an enthusiastic audience of several thousand, which applauded heartily when the president said, "There is a passage in the Psalms which says 'weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning,'" Reagan delivered his now standard economic pitch.

He said that he has brought down inflation and interest rates, and that taxes and the growth in government spending are being brought into line. The rising unemployment rate will be tamed next, he said.

"There is no more dangerous risk to America or to the loved ones we leave behind than deliberate, planned inflation," such as that he said was left to the Reagan administration by the Democrats.

Cable, pay TV face future with no limits

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — A decade ago, television sets offered no real use for all of those slots on the dial. A typical market area might offer three network outlets, a Public Broadcasting channel and perhaps an independent station.

Thanks to lawsuits brought by local stations, there was a Federal Communications Commission freeze on importing distant signals into a market.

Now, sets come equipped to receive 127 channels of input, not just VHF and UHF broadcasting but direct ground line and microwave transmissions too, with little black boxes available to increase that capacity indefinitely.

And what started in 1948 as a community antenna system to boost signals for remote areas now has turned, through technical improvements and relaxed restrictions, into a future of limitless options.

The gold rush is on, as producers rush to fill the new vacuum with products designed to capture viewers willing either to consider sponsors' advertising messages or to pay directly for programming.

The trend is toward cultivating specialized audiences, with daily doses, around the clock, of all news, all movies, all sports, all music, all pornography or all religious programming. But the standard format at the moment is subscription service with an assortment of fare.

In the years since 1975, when Home Box Office began serving subscribers, the usual menu for pay-TV has evolved into a mixture of movies, sports, entertainment specials, popular music and theater, roughly in that order of popularity. But, with the subscription TV audiences grumbling about the limited supply of new films and the continued grip by the broadcasting networks on major sporting events, new sources of products are being sought actively.

Enter, upstage center, with springy step and bouyant manner, the theater business.

ITEM: ON NOV. 5, FOR the first time in history, a Broadway show still in its original first run, will be televised live from its Broadway playhouse to a nationwide audience. The show is "Sophisticated Ladies," the television producer is San Diego's Oak Industries.

Item: James M. Nederlander's producing empire, matched only by the Shuberts as a force in professional theater, has joined with RKO to form a production company which already has sold 10 stage shows to the Entertainment Channel, which, with HBO and Showtime, forms the dominant trio in subscription television program networks right now.

"It's a crap shoot in a tent," says Arthur Miller, who, like most American playwrights, suddenly finds himself the subject of a bidding war between potential television producers.

When the potential of this new market began to dawn on the theater profession, euphoria threatened. Here, it seemed, was the answer to future funding for theater, traditionally the fabulous invalid which provided inspiration for the popular arts but bare sustenance for itself.

Reality has been more sobering. After a few fiascos, the tempo has slowed to a glacial pace. Money has become scarce. Most of the interested parties are waiting to learn from others' mistakes.

An example was ABC's problems in taping the American Conservatory Theater (ACT) version of "A Christmas Carol" two years ago, described as "a nightmare" by James B. McKenzie, executive producer of the San Francisco-based ACT.

"EVERYBODY GOT THE BUDGET wrong," says McKenzie. "We needed a unit manager who understood both the television and the theater part of the relationship."

The venture ended up doubling its original $200,000 budget. Both ACT and ABC profess to be proud of the result, but ABC executives say they've learned their lessons and haven't gone over budget since.

"It's a whole new field," says McKenzie. "It reminds me of the early days of broadcast television when NBC formed teams made up of a theater guy and a radio guy to determine what television would be.

"The radio guys won because they understood the commercial side."

ACT, one of the country's richest regional theaters, plans to wait awhile before trying television again. McKenzie says.

Friends of Music begins second year

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Friends of Music is back beginning Sunday.

Now in its second year, the Friends of Music begins its 1982-83 season with a chamber music concert featuring the Pro/Arte Chamber Singers, conducted by Dr. Stanley Engebretson; trombonist Sharon Chase; the Lone Star Brass Quintet with Thomas Fairlie, Dale Sterling, Greg Phillips, Brad Cornell and Robert Simmons; soprano Jane Huddleston; and pianist Karen Follingstad.

"We have a lot of very fine performers in town," Darryl Knapp said of the performers in the concert series. Knapp is the musical coordinator for the Friends of Music and director of music for First Christian Church.

Sunday's performance provides concert goers with an opportunity to hear a diversity of musical entertainment.

Knapp explained that Sunday's performance is not "true chamber music" in the strictest sense of the expression, but rather a presentation which incorporates "a variety of styles and instruments.

"A lot of people won't come to a full length piano recital," Knapp said. "All of a sudden you are eliminating a group of listeners, if the entire concert is one style of music.

"Those who come (Sunday) may not like the 12 minutes of piano or the 10 minutes of singing or the 12 minutes of brass, but with a combination of sounds there's usually something there that appeals to each audience member."

This concert will be held at First Christian Church, 1301 W. Louisiana Ave., at 2:30 p.m. The performance is free with contributions being accepted following the concert. Contributions help defray concert expenses, with the musicians donating their time.

"Friends of Music performers are truly dedicated to music and to communicating through this medium," Knapp said. "Each concert is followed by a reception which provides an opportunity for the audience to meet the performers."

Next up for the season will be an 8 p.m. concert Nov. 13 featuring the Lone Star Brass Quintet.

The third concert is one in which the entire family is not only encouraged to attend, but also to participate.

It will be a community "sing-in" of Handel's "Messiah," accompanied by soloists and an orchestra, held at 2:30 p.m. Dec. 5 at Memorial Christian Church.

Friends of Music is funded in part by First Christian Church. As Knapp said, "The church has always been active in music; It has has always been an umbrella to the arts.

"It has protected, and nurtured beauty through poetry in hymns and scripture, through music with voices and instruments, and through architecture in its buildings. The church has truly maintained the cultural aspects of each community as it has grown through the centuries.

"Many of the compositions of the day have been by church musicians and have been exposed to the community first by performances in the church," Knapp said. Pausing, he added, "We are attempting to continue that tradition."

ABC News stretches borders of TV with 'Last Word'

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Give the devil his due. Roone Arledge is stretching the borders of television.

As president of ABC News, Arledge revamped and redecorated "World News Tonight," created the provocative and dynamic "Nightline," and enlivened the Sunday field with "This Week with David Brinkley."

Now there's a new-fangled ABC show following "Nightline" that practically dares viewers to fall asleep at midnight. "The Last Word," a live program featuring interviews, discussion and viewer questions and opinions, is intimate, involving television.

Where else could two inmates from San Quentin Prison waltz into our homes, by satellite, to discuss the criminal conscience and offer tips on ways to prevent burglary?

Where else could the president of McNeil Consumer Products, Inc., makers of Tylenol, be browbeaten by Joe Q. Public, demanding a guarantee of future drug safety?

As Phil Donahue, one of the contributors to "The Last Word," says, "Phone callers can take you around the world."

They can also be boring, ignorant, and tongue-tied, which will make for human broadcasts, if not always informative ones.

ABC didn't seem to totally trust its audience on Wednesday's first broadcast. At one point, host Greg Jackson apologized for not getting to enough phone calls.

That's because the program was overloaded with three lively, entertaining topics, any one of which could have filled out the hour.

But, instead of a casual, informative show, "The Last Word" tended to be too busy, and too afraid of momentary post-midnight boredom. It moved so quickly to get everything in that some things were lost.

'Day of Dead' opens at museum

The Day of the Dead exhibit opens Friday at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

An annual celebration in Mexico, the Day of the Dead combines Pre-Colombian Indian religious tradition with the rituals of the Catholic church associated with All Saints' Day and All Souls' Day. During the celebration, the dead are honored and the living are endowed with a better understanding of death and a clearer perspective of life.

Through the assistance of Hector Garza, exhibit consultant from Austin, the museum will be filled with marigolds, authentic folk art and a complete altar. The objects exhibited are samples of the items created annually to celebrate this religious holiday.

The show is free and open to the public. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Ssunday.

Liza Minnelli says her mother taught her about acting, but not singing

SUN CITY, Bophuthatswana (AP) — Liza Minnelli says her mother taught her a lot about acting and life. But the lessons didn't include the singing that made Judy Garland a legend around the world.

"She never helped me with singing because I wasn't very interested in it at first," Miss Minnelli says. "She loved the way I danced. She was always telling me to dance."

During those first acting lessons, Miss Minnelli said that her mother was "just wonderful. She used all sorts of different images...It was amazing because she had never been formally trained."

The techniques included "pulling things out of your past and then applying them to the future in a completely different situation, even in a fairy tale," Miss Minnelli said.

Later, when she took formal acting classes, Miss Minnelli said she heard the same things her mother had taught her.

And, she's quick to add, the training may have helped her singing style.

"Acting has a lot to do with singing," she said. "It does with me, and I think it did with Mommy, too. She always believed what she was singing."

Miss Minnelli has declined to sing her mother's hits and only in recent years consented to perform one of Miss Garland's most famous — "The Man that Got Away."

"She feels her mom's hits are her mom's," says a friend traveling with Miss Minnelli during a recent concert tour here.

Miss Minnelli won the Academy Award for best actress for her portrayal of Sally Bowles in the 1972 film, "Cabaret." She recently appeared in the movie, "Arthur" with Dudley Moore.

But her favorite character was Pookie Adams in "The Sterile Cuckoo," for which she received an Academy Award nomination.

"I loved that character," she said. "I always pictured her as the kind of girl that nobody ever listened to, so she didn't talk to people as if they were going to listen."

Right now, Miss Minnelli says her life is just "terrific."

"I don't know — maybe it's because I had some time off," she said. "Last New Year's was the last time that I worked in concert. I really took time off to study and to just look around at all the other things that happen in life beside show business."

Miss Minnelli, married to producer Mark Gero, suffered a miscarriage two years ago. She still wants to have a baby.

"Not in the next 20 minutes, because I'm a little busy," she says. "But yes, I would like to very much. Probably next year or so."

Then Miss Minnelli might settle down a bit, though this tiny ball of energy considers a Broadway show slowing down.

"I think Broadway is kind of the perfect thing to do when you really want to settle down and live in New York," she said. "After I've had a baby, that would be what I would do, because in a way, it's a part-time job."

Outcome of races may be surprising

By LAURA RICHARDSON
Associated Press Writer

Reapportionment last year gave Texas three new congressional districts, and in two of them the outcomes of the races could be surprising — Republicans could lose a seat thought to be a sure thing, but pick up one they weren't expected to win.

Texas Democrats have 19 seats in the House of Representatives and the GOP has five, but Republicans believe that redistricting, retirement, and plain old hard politicking could give them at least two — and maybe even four — more slots in the Nov. 2 election, in which only one race is uncontested.

The Libertarian Party has mounted its most ambitious congressional campaign ever, nominating candidates for 25 of 27 seats; the Citizens Party is running two people; the Conservative Party has one nominee, and one person is running as an independent.

All five seats currently held by Republicans are thought to be safe, and 17 Democrats are expected to win easily. The remaining five contests are up for grabs.

Three congressmen are retiring — Republican Jim Collins of the 3rd District, to run for the U.S. Senate; Democrat Jim Mattox of the 5th District, to be his party's nominee for state attorney general, and Democrat Richard White of El Paso of the 16th District, to return to private life.

IN THE NEW NORTH Texas District 26, which includes Fort Worth suburbs, Arlington and Denton, former Arlington Mayor Tom Vandergriff, 55, a Democrat, faces Republican Jim Bradshaw, 42, of Fort Worth in a race that has drawn national attention because it is widely seen as a referendum on President Reagan's policies.

Bradshaw, a businessman and former Fort Worth mayor pro tem who unsuccessfully challenged U.S. Rep. Jim Wright in 1980, has stressed his support of Reaganomics. His campaign slogan is, "Let's give President Reagan more than a chance; let's give him a hand."

The district is strongly Republican — two-thirds voted for Reagan in 1980, and 60 percent went for Republican Gov. Bill Clements. Republican strategists thought this their best chance to gain strength in the Texas delegation, but Vandergriff has run a strong race, mainly emphasizing local issues.

During Vandergriff's 26 years as mayor from 1951 to 1977, Arlington grew from a small town to the third-largest city in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Vandergriff asks voters to "Send a voice from home to Washington."

IN THE NEW SOUTH Houston District 25, which includes such southeastern suburbs as predominantly blue-collar Pasadena, Democrat Mike Andrews, 38, and Republican Mike Faubion, 34, both Houston lawyers, face similar problems of party rifts left over from a verging-on-vicious May primary.

Andrews' opponent in the runoff characterized him as a far-out leftist, and although Andrews won handily, he lost the blue-collar vote by a three-to-two margin.

In the GOP runoff, Faubion portrayed himself as a home-grown and -educated family man and his opponent, developer J.C. Helms, as an "outsider" — a Harvard product who had never married.

Faubion, a conservative who opposed the Equal Rights Amendment and supports constitutional amendments to ban abortion and allow school prayer, is looking for blue-collar support. But Andrews, who disagrees with Faubion on those questions, might be better-known. He ran a highly visible, if unsuccessful, 1980 campaign in adjacent District 22 against Republican U.S. Rep. Ron Paul, the only candidate unopposed this year.

Republicans see El Paso's District 16 as their best chance to take over a seat long held by Democrats. White has been a member of the Conservative Democratic Forum, better known as the "Boll Weevils," and the district has gone for the GOP candidates in the last three presidential elections.

DEMOCRAT STATE REP. Ron Coleman, 40, faces El Paso Alderman Pat Haggerty, 38, in a contest that has split Democrats and united Republicans. After a bitter primary, Coleman's conservative opponent, El Paso County Judge T. Udell Moore, endorsed Haggerty and was thrown out of the Democratic Party.

Haggerty has had nationally known GOP conservatives like U.S. Rep. Jack Kemp, R-New York, campaigning for him, and he is wooing the Mexican-American vote. But in the majority Hispanic district, Coleman's support is strong from his near-decade of activism in the statehouse, and he also has White's endorsement.

Redistricting has given Democratic incumbent Abraham "Chick" Kazen, 63, of Laredo some trouble in his South Texas District 23, where he has faced Republican opposition only once before in his 16-year House career. The Republican National Committee has targeted Kazen's seat as their best shot to upset an incumbent.

The newly drawn district includes large numbers of Republicans in San Antonio's affluent northern suburbs, and omits South Texas rural areas where Kazen had strong support.

A parade of national GOP leaders — including Vice President George Bush, former President Gerald Ford, and White House Chief of Staff Jim Baker — has come through for Republican challenger Jeff Wentworth, 41, a Bexar County Commissioner.

IN SOUTH TEXAS District 14, which includes Victoria, former U.S. Rep. Joe Wyatt, 40, is trying to make a comeback after retiring from the House in 1981 during a struggle with alcoholism and accusations that he homosexually attacked a man he met in a Washington bar in 1979.

Wyatt, now a Republican, once served on the state Senate staff of his opponent, first-term incumbent Democrat Bill Patman, 55, of Ganado. Wyatt has raised more money than Patman, and has gotten support from the ultra-conservative, Virginia-based National Conservative Political Action Committee.

Patman recently has hammered on Wyatt's personal problems, giving reporters copies of Washington police records that say Wyatt admitted to having sex with the man, but denied that force was involved. Patman, who called Wyatt a "creep" in one interview, emphasizes his own character, telling voters his "conduct will never embarrass you."

Republican Ron Slover, 45, an Amarillo salesman, is challenging four-term incumbent U.S. Rep. Jack Hightower, 56, a "Boll Weevil" Democrat from Vernon. Hightower seems secure in the Panhandle's District 13, emphasizing his independent conservatism, and criticizing Reagan for farm policy and high unemployment.

Slover has no paid campaign staff and only 20 volunteers, but says that Hightower is "the only 'Boll Weevil' on the White House hit list" because of his votes against some Reagan budget proposals.

LUCY PATTERSON, 51, a social worker and the first black woman on the Dallas City Council, switched to the Republican Party this year after a lifetime in Democratic politics. She is after U.S. Rep. Martin Frost, 40, in south Dallas District 24, whom she blames for torpedoing efforts to re-draw the district to make it majority black. Frost has been endorsed by all 34 black precinct chairman in the district.

Democrats with no Republican opposition expect to defeat Libertarians easily. They are: District 1 third-term incumbent Sam Hall Jr., 58, of Marshall; District 2 fifth-term incumbent Charles Wilson, 49, of Lufkin; District 6 second-term "Boll Weevil" incumbent Phil Gramm, 40, of College Station; District 10 ninth-term incumbent J.J. "Jake" Pickle, 68, of Austin; District 11 second-term incumbent Marvin Leath, 51, of Marlin; District 15 ninth-term incumbent E. "Kika" de la Garza, 55, of Mission; District 17 second-term incumbent Charles W. Stenholm, 43, of Stamford, chairman of the Conservative Democratic Forum; and District 20 tenth-term incumbent Henry B. Gonzalez, 66, of San Antonio.

Private school enrollment in deep slump since 1960s

WASHINGTON (AP) — Since the 1960s, enrollment in private schools — especially Catholic schools — in the United States has declined sharply, the Census Bureau reports.

Private school enrollment nationwide peaked at 6,256,000 in 1964, the report said, but by 1979 had declined to 4,231,000. Northeastern and North Central states felt the decline severely, while private school enrollment grew in the South and was nearly static in the West.

The National Catholic Educational Association reports that in a similar period, enrollment in Roman Catholic schools nationwide dwindled by nearly 2.5 million, a drop that counterbalanced any growth in non-Catholic private schools.

'Publicity garbage' changes first female football player's mind

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A 15-year-old girl who qualified for her high school football team says she's tired of the limelight and may turn in her cleats, and blames the coach for the "publicity garbage."

"I just don't know if I'll come back next year," said Judy "J.J." Jackson, a 5-foot-9, 185-pound junior who was a starting offensive and defensive tackle on Juneau High School's winless varsity squad this fall.

"It dezeids on how I feel during the spring and if I feel like training hard. And who's coaching next year," she said Wednesday.

Judy Jackson

Juneau Head Coach R.C. Clifton has had only praise for Miss Jackson and her efforts. But the teen-ager, believed to be the first girl to play on a male athletic team in Milwaukee, said Clifton was too concerned with publicity.

"Everybody knows he wanted the publicity of coaching a girl a lot more than I wanted it for playing," she said. "I needed a coach who would help me out a lot; not all this publicity garbage."

Miss Jackson didn't play Wednesday night against Shorewood High School because she injured her neck in last Friday's game. Juneau lost its last game 52-6, wrapping up an 0-9 season.

Clifton, whose team wound up the season with only 21 healthy players, said he was not aware of Miss Jackson's feelings.

"I thought we became pretty close because I had to set up all the media appointments," the coach said.

Earlier, Clifton had said, "I have great admiration for J.J. It's been a pleasure coaching her because she listens. Line play is very difficult in the first place, let alone for a girl."

He said he hasn't discussed next year with Miss Jackson, but said, "I would love for her to come back next year. She really showed some improvement. If she decides to come out next year, she's on the varsity for sure and she'll probably be a starter."

Miss Jackson, who said she joined the team for a new experience and for fun, said her only satisfaction was surviving the season without a serious injury.

"Maybe I was crazy to stay on the team," she said. "I thought it might get more fun during the year; maybe we'd win a game. I just didn't have fun. I really didn't improve that much."

One thing she did get was attention — and plenty of it.

"Sometimes I wish that I never went out for the team," Miss Jackson said, describing herself as a "basically shy person."

"Then not everybody would know me and ask me how my football was. When I was on (the television show) 'PM Magazine,' my friends started calling me 'superstar.' That was kind of a bummer."

Clifton says he might not return next year, either. "It's no big secret" he might leave to attend law school, he said.

Miss Jackson also said her teammates gave her the cold shoulder — with or without the pads.

"At one point, they were all trying to blame J.J. for any missed assignments because they didn't want her on the team," Clifton said. "But they got over that pretty much."

If they got over it, Miss Jackson said, they never told her.

"The guys talked to the other guys and didn't talk to me," she said. "I probably would've had more fun if some of the guys would have talked to me. That never changed from the beginning of the season."

A member of an opposing team even complained.

"I wasn't hitting her like I would someone else," said Michael Day, a defensive lineman for Marshall High School.

New Jersey union members chanted "Ronald Reagan, he's no good — send him back to Hollywood," as part of their Wednesday rally to protest the president's economic policies. The protesters are members of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council and many are unemployed.

Economics subject of union rally

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Chanting "We want jobs," several hundred union members rallied against the Reagan administration's economic policies Wednesday and conducted a traffic-blocking march to a state unemployment office.

"Ronald Reagan, he's no good — send him back to Hollywood," members of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council shouted at the Statehouse.

Carrying protest signs above their heads, the union members, many of them out-of-work auto workers, paraded about two blocks to the unemployment office.

State police kept an eye on a rally which began about 12:30 p.m. in the Assembly chambers. Extra city police were called in as the union members staged their march.

"We didn't hear a thing about this until 11 o'clock," said Trenton Police Sgt. Robert Orlowski.

The protesters were ordered to clear the streets so that traffic could pass but Orlowksi said there were no arrests during the 30-minute march.

About 350 people participated in the rally, police estimated. Council president Martin Veneri said about half of them are unemployed.

Council vice president Archie Cole urged the union members to "repudiate Reaganomics" by voting for Democrats on election day.

"Reaganomics is poison," he said. "Workers don't want food stamps or welfare or unemployment benefits. They want jobs."

The council called for an increase in state income tax rates for people earning more than $60,000 annually, limits on imported cars and state legislation to halt the exodus of businesses from New Jersey.

The council represents 40 industrial unions with more than 200,000 members. Participants in the rally included staff personnel for the Communication Workers of America, college professors and members of a Newark teachers union.

"This is only the beginning in the fight back against layoffs, against plant closings, against imports and against those who would deprive unemployed workers of their weekly benefits," said a council leaflet distributed at the rally.

Medicinal cocaine use troublesome

BOSTON (AP) — The long-term use of liquid cocaine as an anesthetic can cause "cocaine psychosis," a variety of mental problems usually seen only in recreational abusers of the drug, doctors warn.

The physicians spotted the problem in a young man who used the solution to ease the discomfort of an inflammation in his mouth.

In today's New England Journal of Medicine, they wrote, "We hope more physicians will be aware of this central nervous system side effect of cocaine."

Cocaine is widely used in liquid form as a surface anesthetic. But until now, resulting mental problems "have not been observed in a controlled laboratory setting."

In their report, the doctors told of the case of a man being treated for an inflammation in his mouth. This condition, called oral stomatitis, developed while he was hospitalized for a bone marrow transplant. He was given a surface solution of cocaine every four hours to deaden the discomfort.

After 16 days of treatment, the 22-year-old patient began to feel sick to his stomach. During the next 18 hours, the doctors wrote:

"He reported seeing ants on his clothes, in his food, on nursing personnel and throughout his room; his euphoric mood was punctuated by irritability and pressured speech.

"He saw 'shadows' of his mother and related a hallucination in which he witnessed a cardiac arrest in an adjacent room. He became increasingly garrulous and active, pacing his room, cleaning drawers, upholstering a chair and retaping his intravenous needle."

This was followed by tremors and jerking movements. The doctors diagnosed a cocaine overdose and withdrew the drug.

The patient slept for 10 hours and his reflexes returned to normal. But then he became increasingly suspicious. He said his roommate's parents were staring at him and he accused nurses of watering down his pain medicine.

Songwriter feels nothing wrong with Tylenol incident song

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — When Tony Carnesi, a 34-year-old singer-songwriter living in Alexandria, Va., heard about the Tylenol poisonings, he felt he had to do something.

So he wrote a song.

And then he made 475 tapes of "Madman in Chicago," and sent them out to 475 radio stations all around the country. As of Wednesday, only two stations had played it. But lots of people were talking about it.

"I wouldn't have done it if I thought it was in poor taste," said Carnesi Wednesday of the criticism that has been pouring in. "People have been terrified by what's going on, and it just keeps growing, it seems. We wanted the song to be played. We thought it was a good tune. We just wanted people to hear it. The response we got wasn't anticipated at all. Now I'm just trying to explain to people why I wrote the tune, what was on my mind when I did it."

In San Francisco, after radio station KCBS played it, public reaction was so strong the management barred it from being played there again.

In Manahawkin, N.J., radio station WJRZ said Wednesday the song was played there during a talk show.

"We had to expand into a two-hour program because of the controversy," said WJRZ news director Art Sarnoski, who hosted the call-in show Monday morning. "The calls went probably 80 percent against the song for all types of reasons.

"About 20 percent felt the record and composer didn't condone the Tylenol tragedy, which they didn't," Sarnoski said. He added that the smaller percentage felt that "in a free society it should have a chance to be played."

Carnesi wrote the song two weeks ago in the wake of the Tylenol poisonings and recorded it with his band Rio in Washington's No Evil Recording Studio several days later.

Some stations have used portions of the song as a news item, but most seem to be refusing to play it. The song, which does not mention Tylenol by name, has much of the tension of Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young's "Ohio," written after the Kent State shootings 12 years ago.

Carnesi said Wednesday night that he sent the recording to five Washington-area stations but that "they thought it was in poor taste: At least that was the response from one station. I asked why and they said because it dealt with the Tylenol issue.

"I said I know that but that doesn't necessarily mean it's in poor taste. (The program director) said it was just too hot to do a tune on it right now, which I don't agree with. Songwriters ought to be able to say something about what's going on."

Prince Charles met oil magnate Armand Hammer in Las Vegas, N.M., Wednesday as part of a ceremony dedicating the town's former hot-springs resort and Jesuit seminary as the sixth campus in the World Seminary System.

'What's up Chuck?' springs from New Mexico lips

LAS VEGAS, N.M. (AP) — A high school band blared "LaBamba" and women and children squealed happily as Prince Charles stepped off his jet to a red-carpet greeting and all the pomp this community could muster.

The prince, extending his hand to 300 onlookers at the tiny airport, arrived Wednesday to dedicate a former hot-springs resort and Jesuit seminary as the new campus for a worldwide university set up to encourage international understanding.

He was greeted by tight security, a chill wind and a sign carried by one spectator that said, "What's Up, Chuck?"

The prince, 33, is appearing in his role as president of the International Council of the United World College system, founded by oil magnate Armand Hammer.

The prince's itinerary included dedicating, along with Hammer, the United World College branch today and meeting state officials and celebrities later this week in Albuquerque.

Hammer greeted the prince after he stepped down from the jet as townspeople pressed against ropes for a chance to touch Britain's future monarch.

"He's got warm hands. He's elegant," one woman in a scarf said, laughing after shaking the prince's hand.

"There aren't too many American towns that can say they entertained a prince," said resident Nancy Tully. The community has 14,000 residents.

The school — called the Armand Hammer United World College of the American West — is housed in a resort complex that includes the once-posh Montezuma Castle, which drew notables like Theodore Roosevelt and Ulysses S. Grant late in the last century to its soothing hot springs.

Attending the school now are 110 students from 55 countries, who participate in a selected curriculum that is the equivalent of the last year of hign school and the first year of college.

The campus is the sixth in the United World College system and the first in the United States. The others are in Wales, British Columbia, Singapore, Swaziland and Italy.

The prince's visit to this northeastern New Mexico area has excited the local population, many of whom braved the cold weather for nearly two hours for a glimpse of him.

The entire arrival ceremony lasted less than 30 minutes.

Most celebrities expected to visit with Prince Charles will see him Friday night at a ball in Albuquerque. Among those scheduled to attend are singer Frank Sinatra and actor Cary Grant.

Las Vegas was a sleepy Mexican village before the U.S. Army decided to take advantage of its hot springs and established a military hospital here in 1846.

Montezuma Castle, the fanciest, was built in 1885, a 172-room, stone-and-wood turreted structure in Queen Anne architecture. During its heyday, it included a casino, bowling alley, zoo, stables, a racetrack and bathhouses.

Business gradually went downhill. In the early 1900s, the hotel was sold for use as a Baptist college. In 1937, it changed hands again, becoming a Jesuit seminary.

Lawyer says De Lorean indictment expected Friday

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federal grand jury is considering the drug case of automaker John De Lorean and probably will hand up an indictment Friday, his attorney says.

Attorney Joseph Ball said Wednesday he still was trying to raise the $5 million bail needed to free the silver-haired, 57-year-old automotive maverick from the Terminal Island federal prison cell that he has occupied since his Oct. 19 arrest.

Initially, De Lorean was arraigned on charges of conspiring to possess 220 pounds of cocaine for distribution in what the government says was an effort to raise $60 million to save his faltering De Lorean Motor Co. But his attorneys have said an innocent plea was postponed pending the grand jury indictment.

Ball said a grand jury met Tuesday. Another source close to the case who did not wish to be identified said there would be a major development Friday.

Chief Assistant U.S. Attorney Alex Williams has said any indictments in the case would be handed up by Friday. An indictment would supersede the charges initially lodged against De Lorean.

Charged with De Lorean were William Morgan Hetrick, 50, owner of a Mojave, Calif., aircraft service company; and Stephen Lee Arrington, 24, of San Diego, a Hetrick associate. Hetrick was held in lieu of $20 million bail, Arrington in lieu of $250,000.

To make bail, De Lorean, a former General Motors executive, must post $250,000 in cash and put up unencumbered property to attain the balance of $4.75 million. Ball said negotiations with the U.S. attorney's office, which have delayed the automaker's release on bail, center on the value of De Lorean's Park Avenue townhouse in New York and a 48-acre estate in Escondido, 90 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

"We're dealing with real property and it takes time for title searches and all of that," Ball said, adding he expected De Lorean would be released Friday.

The Escondido estate had been on the market for almost a year at a price of $4 million, but his real estate agent raised the price to $5.25 million after the property became part of bail negotiations.

Meanwhile, the president of a Michigan engineering firm is seeking support for his plan to move production of the De Lorean sports car from Belfast, Northern Ireland, to the United States.

William J. Corbin, president of Geometrics Engineering and Design of Oxford, Mich., said Tuesday he will go to England this week to pursue the project.

De Lorean's company has been in receivership since February and an announcement that the Belfast plant would be closed was made the day De Lorean was arrested.

Uncertainty over the future of De Lorean's company has ended negotiations for an insured service warranty for buyers of its cars.

The warranties would have been issued by the De Lorean Motor Company Inc. in Irvine and assumed in the event of a De Lorean bankruptcy by The Owner Protection Service company, based in Palm Desert.

Paul Brennan, a lawyer for the company, said Wednesday negotiations that had been under way for several weeks ended after De Lorean was arrested and the British government decided to close down his subsidized factory.

Jock Fearer, western area director of the De Lorean Motor Co., said his company had "no comment to make at this time" about the warranty.

Card's more belated than intended

MASON CITY, Iowa (AP) — A birthday greeting for Clara Scarrow was even more belated than the sender had intended. It arrived in Mason City about five years after the recipient had died.

Gloria Rish, Mrs. Scarrow's granddaughter, said the picture postcard which arrived Tuesday was mailed from Richmond, Va., on Aug. 4, 1969, and carried a 6-cent postage stamp.

It was mailed to Mrs. Scarrow's home, which Mrs. Rish and her husband, Jim, now own.

"My first thought was, 'Oh my, someone doesn't know she's dead.' Then I noticed the postmark and realized the card was sent 13 years ago," Mrs. Rish said Wednesday. "The card is in perfect shape."

When you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Let's face it, buying a used car is a traumatic experience for most people.

Unlike a new car purchase, you don't have a factory warranty to fall back on in case there's a problem. That's why we say, when you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Thousands of families have bought used cars at our place. We keep a great selection of models, and we hand-pick every car we offer for sale. In fact, we're as proud of our used cars as we are of our new ones.

Here are some examples:

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8½% for 95% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 13½% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.28%
