Salvadorans send warning to advisers

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The most radical leftist guerrilla band in this war-torn nation has vowed that all U.S. military advisers working with the Salvadoran government will "return to the United States in coffins."

The warning Wednesday came from the Popular Liberation Forces, which took responsibility last week for the murder of Lt. Cmdr. Albert Schaufelberger, 33, of San Diego, Calif., deputy commander of American military advisers in El Salvador.

Schaufelberger, in charge of security for the military group, became the first U.S. adviser killed in El Salvador when he was gunned down May 25 while waiting in his car for a woman friend at Central American University.

"All the military advisers sent here will return to the United States in coffins," the rebel group said in leaflets sent to local radio stations.

They said Schaufelberger's murder was a warning against "the bellicose Reagan administration so that it does not continue its aggression against our people."

The leaflets said the U.S. advisers, now numbering 51, "have invaded our soil and massacred our compatriots every day." They said the guerrillas "will be implacable with them, until it achieves their total withdrawal from our beloved homeland."

The FPL, as it is known by its initials in Spanish, is the largest and most radical of the five rebel groups fighting for the past 43 months to overthrow the U.S.-backed conservative government.

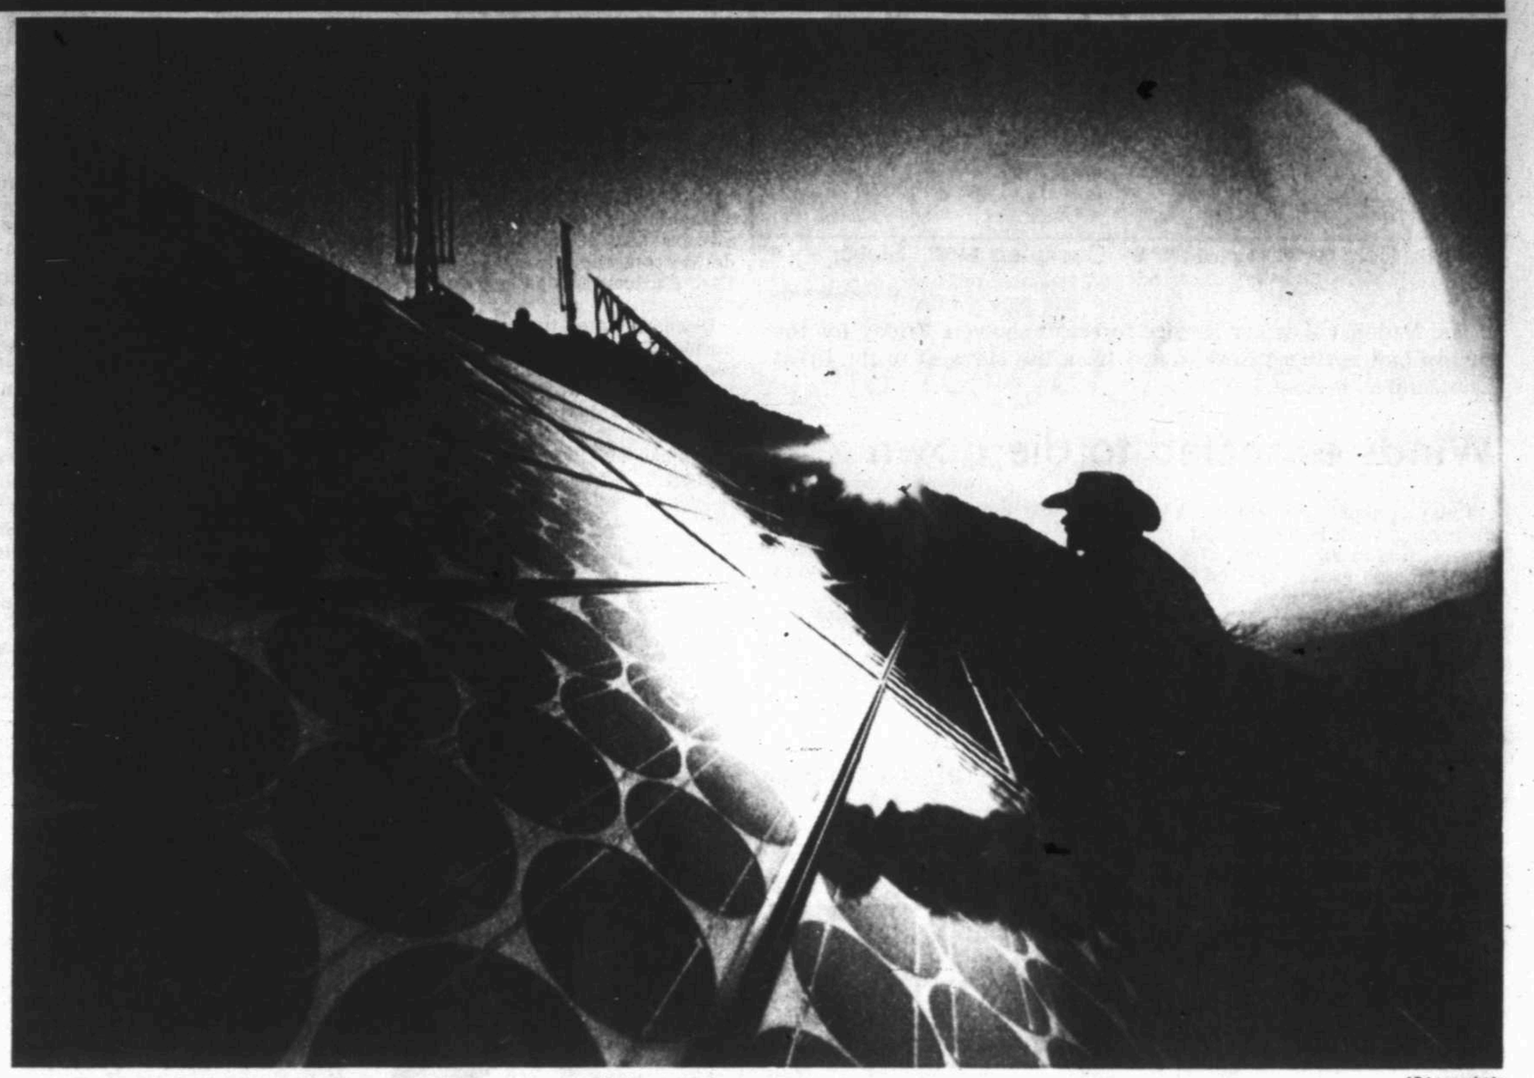

With only minor language changes, the communique resembled the one the group issued last week when it claimed responsibility for Schaufelberger's murder. The FPL warned then that President Reagan's policies will bring a "harvest" of dead American soldiers.

Attached to the FPL leaflet were photocopies of personal documents the gunmen apparently took from Schaufelberger — his California driver's license, his Navy ID card and an identification card issued by the Salvadoran Foreign Ministry.

The FPL communique urged Americans to oppose the Reagan administration's El Salvador policy, saying it "will only bring mourning and pain to hundreds of North American homes, as was the case with Schaufelberger."

Reagan has said the murder of Schaufelberger will not deter the United States from continuing aid to El Salvador.

Red Cross officials appeal for aid

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

"Disaster doesn't seem to know a time line," said Alexandra Morris. "It can happen any time, any place."

Still, there is a deadline.

Between today and July 15, Midlanders are being asked to give $5,364 to help victims of local and national disasters.

According to local Red Cross officials, more than 1 million persons have been assisted during this disastrous year, thus depleting all funds for the national chapter.

During a press conference this morning, the executive director of the Midland County's chapter of American Red Cross said the national disaster relief budget is exhausted.

"All of the money has been expended as well as the special funds set aside for catastrophic years, of which this is one," Elvis Curb said.

During the past 10 months, disasters have struck in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands and Guam.

Some $2,645,000 from the national fund went to local chapters who couldn't fund them alone, said Ms. Morris, chairman of the Midland County chapter. Included in that figure was $25,000 for disasters at Monahans and Seminole.

While $33,587,400 was budgeted and donated nationally for the fiscal year, the total expended and projected disaster committments for the year are $37,910,000.

Based on a five-year actual average, expenses for the months of May and June could be as high as $4,322,600 because of tornado, flood and hurricane seasons, Curb said.

"People have counted on Red Cross to be there," he said. "We have and now we're asking for the help of the people."

With a national goal of raising $12 million, each local chapter has been asked to raise a certain percentage of the funds. Louisiana and Mississippi chapters were asked to raise more because they are affected by disasters more than other states.

"I have every bit of faith we'll meet the goal — not only in Midland County but nationally," Curb said. "I have every confidence we will achieve the goal because for the last 100 years, the people have given to the Red Cross."

About 70 percent of the budget, funds and contributions are used for obtaining food, clothing, bedding, emergency medication and occupational supplies, Curb said. Another 10 percent is designated for mass care, such as the Red Cross shelters. Twenty percent is used for administrative costs.

Curb said the local funds are holding out. Contributions through the United Way provide 90 percent of the budget, of which only a portion is designated for the national headquarters. That portion has been expended.

The campaign drive is not related to donations made to United Way, Ms. Morris and Curb pointed out.

"We need above and beyond the money donated by the United Way last year," Curb said.

"It could mean the difference of a complete disaster for someone and some relief for them," Ms. Morris said.

Local contributions can be made the the Midland County chapter of the American Red Cross at P.O. Box 1706, Midland, Texas 79702.

A year with more than the usual number of disasters has depleted funds for the American Red Cross, Alexandra Morris, chairman of the Midland County chapter, says. With her during a press conference this morning is Elvis Curb, executive director of the local chapter.

Sneakers decorate Brooklyn power lines

NEW YORK (AP) — All over Brooklyn, ratty old sneakers dangle from telephone wires and lightposts, traffic signals and power lines.

To the locals, it's just another sign of spring.

Like their fathers, and probably their grandfathers, Brooklyn schoolchildren are celebrating their imminent freedom from the classroom with a ritual as ancient as sneakers themselves — not unlike the tossing of hats by West Point cadets.

Instead of falling to earth, the old running shoes are suspended from power lines and traffic signal supports. Expertly aimed, the laces will wrap around and the pair of shoes will hang the wires like trophies to be bragged about.

"It's fun. I enjoy it. It's something to show off," says one veteran hurler, 12-year-old Sultan Althaibani who so far has celebrated the impending end of 7th grade by tossing about six pairs of sneakers.

The custom isn't limited to Brooklyn; hanging sneakers have been sighted in the Bronx.

Is this just a harmless lark, or another incarnation of urban ugliness — a kind of 3-D graffiti that would cost the city millions to clean up if it ever attempted to?

The New York Times ran an editorial recently calling attention to what it called "Brooklyn Moss," saying that it "is unsightly and, like unscrubbed graffiti, symbolizes neglect."

The Times chastised the city's traffic bureau for not ridding traffic signals of sneakers, and the city's schools for not lecturing kids on the improper uses of worn running shoes.

Nonsense, replies Victor Ross, a spokesman for the New York City Bureau of Traffic Operations, whose job it is to maintain traffic lights at the city's 10,000 intersections crisscrossing 6,400 miles of streets.

"If we had to rescue sneakers hanging from traffic lights, it would increase our maintenance costs by 25 percent," he said recently. "Generally, we think it wouldn't be right to ask taxpayers to come up with that much money."

Ross, a Brooklynite himself, says that when he attended P.S. 219 in East Flatbush in 1932, he wrapped his sneakers around a telephone wire, "and I certainly didn't invent the practice."

And among older Brooklynites, it's hard to find much ire over skybound sneakers. Said Joe Cardillo, a storeowner within eyeshot of several favored sneaker hangouts: "I figure it's better than throwing spears."

Housing Authority approves housing plan

Langtree Village to house handicapped, elderly

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

In an effort to gain federal funding to build housing for senior citizens and handicapped people, Midland's Housing Authority Wednesday approved its part in an intricate, four-way plan.

The plan — which would entail land acquisition, formation of a corporation and an application to the Department of Housing and Urban Development — also involves the Midland Housing Finance Corporation (MHFC), Christmas in April and a yet-to-be-created corporation called Langtree Village, Inc.

The board also revised income limits for a housing project and heard a report on the housing rehabilitation program.

During the Housing Authority board of commissioners' monthly meeting, Assistant City Attorney Paul Williams explained that HUD is accepting applications until June 23 for 40-year, 9.25 percent interest loans to finance construction of housing for senior citizens and handicapped persons.

Susan Howell, Midland's community development coordinator, said the city is interested in obtaining a HUD loan because it needs additional housing for both senior citizens and the handicapped.

According to Ms. Howell, the 100-unit Hillcrest Manor facility — where Wednesday's meeting was held — is full and has a waiting list of at least 200. "There is a need and the city feels the need," she said.

Williams said HUD regulations demand that an applicant have control of land for the housing project and have a non-profit, sponsoring corporation and a borrowing corporation formed exclusively to secure the loan and complete construction.

Christmas in April has agreed to act as the sponsoring organization. Williams said he's drawing up paperwork for incorporation of Langtree Village, Inc., the proposed borrower.

According to Williams, the MHFC has agreed to appropriate funds for acquiring land for the project. Williams said no site has been selected, although land along Pecos Street is being considered. He said the land, about four acres, could cost as much as $600,000.

If the application is completed, accepted and the housing built, the agreement calls for the Housing Authority to manage the complex.

Williams said the application likely will be for 85 housing units, the maximum allowed one applicant by HUD. Joe Nuessle, city attorney, said HUD plans to limit its loans to a total of 171 units.

In other action, the board revised the annual, "not-to-exceed" income limits on persons applying for residences at Hillcrest Manor. Fred Kester, Housing Authority secretary, said the revisions were recommended by HUD and would broaden the eligibility requirements.

For one person, the income limit was increased from $10,550 to $11,700, for two people the limit was raised from $12,100 to $13,400 and for a three-person family the limit was increased from $13,600 to $15,050.

The board also heard a progress report from Horace Berry, Housing Authority rehabilitation inspector, on the 1982-1983 Community Development Block Grant housing rehabilitation program.

Berry said 33 houses are under repair at a total cost of $184,612.63, or $5,594.32 per house. He said the $250,000 allotted for the program should permit repairs on another 12 houses.

Jet makes emergency landing in Midland

From Staff and Wire Reports

A Federal Aviation Administration official says that low oil pressure prompted the pilot of an American Airlines Boeing 727 carrying 116 people to make an emergency landing at Midland Regional Airport.

The FAA spokesman in Fort Worth said that the plane, Flight 350 from El Paso to Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, landed in Midland Wednesday night after losing oil pressure in one of its three engines.

"He had his Number One engine out. It wasn't much of an emergency," said Rex Hudson, FAA controller in charge of the Midland Airport tower. "He was going up to Dallas at about 30,000 feet and he just swung down here as a precaution."

He said the plane landed without incident and was serviced by mechanics for 90 minutes before resuming its route. Officials said the plane landed safely at the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport Wednesday night.

Hudson said the plane's crew reported the engine problem at about 7 p.m. when it was 40 miles west of Midland. He said the plane landed at about 7:25 p.m.

American spokesman Art Jackson said 116 people were on board the flight.

"The engine had a loss of oil pressure and they shut it down, and when you do that, you land at the nearest airport, which happened to be Midland," said Jackson. "It is not an uncommon occurrence, but I don't mean that it is an everyday thing either."

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers Friday for the central and northern Rockies and from the Midwest to the Great Lakes and Minnesota.

Winds expected to die down

Today's possibly dust-cloudy skies should clear tonight and Friday with decreasing winds in the forecast.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the 15-25 mph winds expected today should die down to southerly at 10-15 mph tonight and southwesterly at 10-20 mph Friday.

Temperatures will remain mild tonight with a low dipping into the middle 60s. Friday should bring the high near 90.

Wednesday's high of 80 degrees was 21 degrees cooler than the record high of 101, set for that date in 1958. The overnight low of 66 was 18 degrees warmer than the low of 48, set for that date in 1970.

Utah volunteers come to the rescue

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Thousands of volunteer workers have been the salvation of flood-ravaged Utah, filling sandbags, donating equipment and running through neighborhoods to shout warnings of flash floods, authorities say.

"Other people around the country can't believe we can get out 40,000 volunteers to help," Gov. Scott Matheson said Wednesday. "The sense of community and self-sufficiency is part of the Utah heritage, and in this case the volunteer effort has been unprecedented."

"You ask for 10 or 20 people, and they bring you 30, 40 or 50. I can't believe it," said Rick Olsen, volunteer coordinator for Salt Lake County. "They seem to be happy to do it. They have been the mainstay of the whole system."

"It's hard, backbreaking stuff," said Michelle Lang, 17, of Sandy, after five hours of sandbagging with a group of friends. "But we're coming back at midnight because we're having fun."

The flooding, caused by warm weather melting a record snowpack, has forced hundreds of residents from their homes throughout northern Utah and caused damage estimated in the millions.

Olsen estimated that in Salt Lake County alone during the past four days, as many as 15,000 citizens have responded to officials' pleas for help in fighting mud and water spilling from the Wasatch Mountains.

By Tuesday, county officials estimated volunteers had laid nearly a million sandbags along rampaging creeks, city curbs, around homes and businesses and down streets turned into makeshift rivers.

Olsen said volunteers also went through endangered neighborhoods on foot and by car to announce flash flood warnings.

In dozens of smaller cities and towns elsewhere in the state, officials marveled at the hundreds of people who gave up their Memorial Day weekend to lug sand in 90-degree heat.

The weather turned cooler this week, but the water turned vicious as mudslides and flash floods pummeled the towns of Farmington and Bountiful.

The party atmosphere of the earlier sandbagging efforts was gone, but the volunteer crews remained, slogging through cold, knee-deep muck to shore up levees or help neighbors clean up homes.

At churches and public buildings, helpers formed assembly lines to pack sandwiches, or assisted flood victims in finding clothing and shelter for the night.

Red Cross officials said more than 90 volunteers joined a dozen staff members to set up six disaster shelters. By Wednesday, said spokesman Don Cobb, the agency had prepared and served 41,000 meals to victims and volunteers.

Volunteers are showing up around the clock at Salt Lake City and county garages, where the sandbagging effort has centered, said Ezra Borman, a foreman at the city's public works garage.

Borman said the volunteers come and go as they please, some putting in 16-hour shifts filling and stacking 50-pound bags of sand.

"It's hard on your back," said Bob Flores, who spent his day off Wednesday loading sandbags onto trucks at Borman's garage. "I'll probably stay around a couple of hours and then go back and see if my house is flooded."

Others, Olsen said, have cooked meals and delivered them to areas where volunteers are working.

Citizens helped line Salt Lake City streets that have been converted into canals to channel floodwaters through the city.

Others were called out late Tuesday to help evacuate hundreds of Bountiful residents fleeing a wall of water that roared out of Stone Creek Canyon several miles to the east.

Mother suspect in son's murder

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — A teacher remembers Scott Allen Freymuth as a bright-eyed 6-year-old who "always did over and above what was expected," supported by a concerned, perhaps overprotective mother who took an active interest in his schooling.

But the mother was charged with her only child's murder Wednesday, after Scott's body was found the previous night in a weed-filled lot near the family home. He had been shot, bound with bootlaces and wrapped in a plastic trash bag, police said.

Scott Freymuth

Pat Freymuth

"It all just seems so strange," said Sister Dannel Wedemeyer who teaches first grade at the Immaculate Conception School in Dardenne, Mo. "His mother was a room mother. She brought treats for the children on Halloween, Valentine's Day and Christmas."

Patricia C. Freymuth, 33, originally told authorities that her son had been abducted from nearby U.S. 40, where one of his boots, missing a lace, was found. But the other boot, also missing its lace, later was found in the house.

After a two-hour search by about 60 officers and volunteers, the body was discovered in a lot bordering a wheat field behind the family barn — bound at the wrists and ankles.

"We don't know what brought it on," said Maj. Thomas Bishop of the St. Charles County Sheriff's Department. Mrs. Freymuth "has made statements, but I wouldn't want to call it a confession," he said.

Pending autopsy results, Bishop said the cause of death was believed to be three gunshot wounds, two in the chest and one in the arm.

Police said they became suspicious after they found trash bags of the same brand and color as the one in which the boy's body was stuffed, and blood stains were discovered on a carpet and some clothing.

Scott's first-grade teacher recalled him as a "quiet, shy kid" who never was a discipline problem.

"Most of his tests have no mistakes," Sister Wedemeyer said, leafing through the boy's file. "He was an honor student. He always did over and above what was expected."

She said his parents attended parent-teacher conferences and showed concern and interest for their son.

"Pat came along with us recently when the children went to a park where they got to see and pet baby farm animals," said Sister Wedemeyer. "She or her husband always drove him to and from school every day. If anything they may have been overprotective."

Mrs. Freymuth, clad in a gray jail jumpsuit, showed no signs of emotion and stared at the courtroom floor during her arraignment Wednesday on capital murder charges. She whispered a barely audible "yes" when asked by the judge if she understood the nature of the charge against her.

No plea was entered and St. Charles County Associate Circuit Judge Lucy Rauch delayed the proceeding until a public defender could be appointed. Mrs. Freymuth remained in custody without bond.

Ronald Freymuth, the boy's father, is not a suspect, Bishop said.

The boy's grandmother, Ruth Freymuth, who lives on property next to her son and daughter-in-law, said there had been no indication of trouble when the family joined her for dinner Monday night.

She said described Scott as a "perfectly normal little boy," and said he seemed happy and fine.

"At least Scott is in heaven now," said Sister Wedemeyer. "He's finished with his problems. The rest of us have to live with ours."

Terrorist claims police tortured him

Fugitive's mother pleads his case

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Fugitive Puerto Rican terrorist William Morales claims Mexican police tortured him with beatings and 110-volt shocks, forcing him to sign incriminating papers after he was arrested in a shootout.

"I was unable to eat or sleep for several days because of the blows I received and the electrical shocks," he told reporters Wednesday in a prison interview.

But Morales and his attorneys said he is better off in Mexico than in the United States, which wants to extradite the 33-year-old convicted bomber who escaped from the prison ward of a New York hospital in 1979.

"They said I would get more of the same if I didn't cooperate with the U.S. people," Morales said. "I was forced to sign papers under physical threats and threats of extradition. I don't remember what I signed."

Felipe Flores, spokesman for the Mexican attorney general's office denied Morales' allegations, saying, "This person has been treated with great care. He has been treated well."

Morales told reporters police tied his wrists behind his back, blindfolded and stripped him, drenched his body with water and administered 110-volt electric shocks to his genitals.

Lucy Morales

He said the officers tortured him after he was arrested in Puebla, 75 miles south of Mexico City, last Thursday following a shootout with police that left two of his companions and an officer dead. He said police also beat him before he was transferred to Northern Prison in the capital on Tuesday.

Morales claimed a New York City policeman he recognized and an FBI agent were at one police interrogation. When he insisted that they leave, he was beaten in an adjacent hallway, he said.

The captive is considered an expert bomb-maker of the Armed Forces of National Liberation, or FALN, which seeks independence for Puerto Rico.

He was convicted on weapons and explosives charges in 1979 after an explosion at a bomb factory in Queens, N.Y., that disfigured his face and blew off most of both hands. He escaped from New York's Bellevue Hospital prison ward a month after he was sentenced to a 99-year term.

During the interview, Morales was separated from reporters by prison bars. He wore green-tinted glasses and his own shirt and pants. His right ear appeared bruised.

His attorney Michael Deutsch, of the People's Law office in Chicago, was present during the interview. Deutsch told reporters he understood the papers Morales signed included an agreement to be extradited, a statement holding him responsible for the death of the policeman last week and a statement asserting he had not been tortured.

Morales said he came to Mexico "several years ago."

At a news conference Wednesday in New York, Morales' mother Lucy appealed to Mexican authorities to grant her son political asylum, saying she feared he would be killed by the CIA.

"My son is a good boy, a good son, a good husband, a good father, a good student," Lucy Morales said. "How can a person who has no hands, no eye and no weapon be charged with murder?"

The U.S. request for extradition could be delayed if Mexico indicts Morales on new charges. He is being held on a 60-day detention order issued Tuesday in response to a U.S. Embassy request. The countries' extradition treaty allows detention while the extradition request is prepared.

Jose Rojo Coronado, Morales' Mexican lawyer, said he will try to keep Morales in Mexico, where prison sentences are less severe.

"If I am returned, I will not stop fighting for the freedom of my people," said Morales, who claims he would be a prisoner of war.

Mexican authorities have claimed they have evidence Morales planned to bomb a conference of Mexican and U.S. legislators scheduled to be held in Puebla this month. The conference was postponed.

Salvadoran rebels threaten advisers

On Wednesday, U.S. Ambassador Deane R. Hinton signed over $23 million in U.S. economic aid money to El Salvador's Agriculture Development Bank. It did not include any military aid and was part of the $204 million in U.S. economic aid money earmarked for El Salvador this year.

"The murder of Schaufelberger was done by the extreme left-wing of the FPL. These are the same people who have been murdering soldiers after they surrender," Hinton told reporters after the ceremony where he signed over the aid money to the Salvadoran government.

Hinton was referring to a State Department statement Tuesday saying that guerrillas last week executed 42 government soldiers who surrendered after a battle in northeastern El Salvador.

The State Department said rebels cut off the ears of many soldiers or severed their arms. It called the killings in San Vicente province an "atrocity" and said a similar mass killing occurred recently in Cinquera, a northern town.

Reporters who visited the scenes of the alleged slaughters were unable to confirm the State Department report.

Jet forced to land

"It was nothing out of the ordinary," Ed Stevens said while checking flight logs this morning.

According to Stevens, standard rescue equipment and personnel "were standing by."

The FAA spokesman in Fort Worth, who declined to be identified, said that loss of oil pressure was given as the reason for the Midland landing.

"There was no emergency declared or anything of that type," the spokesman said.

U.S. arms-talks position may be changed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will meet with his national security advisers next week before making changes in the U.S. position for talks with the Soviet Union to curb nuclear-tipped strategic missiles, officials say.

Reagan received recommendations on possible revisions Wednesday from Ambassador Edward Rowny, the chief negotiator at the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks in Geneva.

Rowny, looking ahead to the resumption of talks next Wednesday, said, "The president instructed me to examine all Soviet proposals seriously and to be flexible in our responses wherever this would be consistent with our overall objectives."

On the outlook for an agreement, Rowny said, "I have hope." He did not disclose the recommendations he made to Reagan.

Lobbying for congressional support for the MX missile, Reagan had promised to revise the U.S. position to conform with recommendations of a presidential commission on strategic weapons, headed by former national security adviser Brent Scowcroft.

The panel recommended that arms agreements be structured to move the United States and Soviet Union toward small, single-warhead missiles that would be less threatening than the multi-warhead weapons now in the superpowers' arsenals.

In particular, the commission said arms restrictions should not be based on the number of missiles, because that encourages both sides to build multi-warhead weapons. Instead, it said an agreement should limit each side to an equal number of warheads of roughly equivalent yield.

"The president's main objective in talking with me today was to get my views on what changes he should make to my instructions," Rowny said.

"The president has assured me that he will modify my instructions to the extent necessary to make them fully consistent with the Scowcroft recommendations," Rowny added.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan had not made his decision, and added, "We will not have anything to say on them until he does make them."

Currently, the U.S. proposal calls for the superpowers to reduce missile warheads by about one-third to 5,000 each, and cut the number of land and submarine-based missiles to 850.

The Scowcroft panel said the 850-missile ceiling "should be reassessed since it is not compatible with a desirable evolution toward small, single-warhead ICBMs."

Rowny said the administration was continuing "to give serious study" to ways that a so-called "build-down" plan could be applied to arms reductions.

As envisioned by congressional sponsors, the build-down plan calls for the dismantling of two missile warheads from existing stockpiles for each new warhead deployed. While Reagan has said the build-down concept could be useful, administration officials argue it could not be applied on a strict two-for-one basis and would have to be used flexibly.

Hance tests the waters for Senate race

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep. Kent Hance, D., Lubbock, back from surveying Texas cities to see how successful a campaign against U.S. Republican Senator John Tower's re-election would be, finds Tower "more vulnerable" than he was in 1978.

Hance has not yet made up his mind whether to leave the House of Representatives and his position on the Ways and Means committee. That is definitely of importance to Texas oil, exports, cotton cooperatives and to the nation for Social Security and tax legislation.

Sounding much like a candidate, Hance asked hundreds for their advice as to whether he should make the race. He toured Dallas and Houston and will go back to those cities and his home, Lubbock, this next weekend to do more pulse taking. He was given encouragement in some areas and advice in others, depending on individual views, he said.

"I think the prospects are very positive. I believe any Democrat would stand a chance," he said, although acknowledging that Tower holds important positions as chairman of the Senate Armed Servies committee and the Housing sub-commitee.

Hance was frank in telling the results of his informal poll taking. One half of those he talked with told him he would have a difficult time getting the nomination of the Democratic party and half think he could not get the nomination.

"Independents seem to think I would have more difficulty than Bob Krueger of New Braunfels, former Gov. Dolph Briscoe of Uvalde and State Sen. Lloyd Doggett, Austin.

"But there is one thing I did learn of importance to all four of us possible Democratic candidates — and that is that Tower most probably would be pushed into a run-off.

"Therefore any candidate for this race should be well prepared with money and it would have to be sufficient to carry on a campaign to next November. I do not want to enter unless I am assured of that kind of money.

"Tower most assuredly will have $8 million to use. He now has $2.5 million from both last year and this year's contributions." The congressman thinks it would take more that $3½ million to carry on a race to November.

Hance said "my name recognition might be a factor at first but that does not worry me as we could overcome that easily with sufficient advertising."

While believing that the race looks possible and interesting, Hance said he still has not made up his mind.

"I usually run with a gut feeling that I am going to win," he said. "I had that when I beat a man for the state senate who had been there 16 years and I had the same when I was not expected to beat George Bush, Jr., for Congress but I did. I do not remember how far along it was in the race that I got that feeling. I may yet."

Congressman prime target for terrorist

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — "How does it feel not to be shot?" Celia Hare Martin, well known, long time administrative assistant to several congressmen representing the Rio Grande Valley, asked her present boss, Rep. Kika de la Garza, D., Mission.

Mr. De la Garza, well known for his Hispanic wit, replied "Well, it sure feels better."

Kika would have been chairman and as such the presiding officer at the U.S.-Mexican Inter-parliamentary Union had it been held as scheduled in Puebla, Mexico, last weekend, but it was cancelled.

William Morales, Puerto Rican terrorist and member of the FALN, which wants Puerto Rico to have its political independence, is reported here to have told Mexican police after his capture by them last Thursday that he planned to kill both U.S. and Mexican congressmen. Those of Hispanic descent would have been his first targets. De la Garza would have been a prime victim, it is believed.

After the meeting was cancelled, it was too late for De la Garza to pick up appointments during the holiday in the Valley which De la Garza had refused, thinking he would be in Mexico.

One of those that he now looks forward to attending is the dedication of the new free port of entry in McAllen. It was moved from May 31 to July 6 so that De la Garza might be the speaker. This will be the largest free trade zone in the nation, he pointed out proudly.

Meanwhile, De la Garza and Rep. Abraham Kazen, D., Laredo, who was also scheduled to attend, were watching developments closely in the Morales case. De la Garza learned from the U.S. Mexican embassy in Mexico City that Morales will waive extradition, which the U.S. has requested through the Federal bureau of Investigation. It was not known why he elected to waive extradition, but it was speculated that he finds U.S. jails more comfortable. The U.S. embassy reported that Morales had gone on television in Mexico Tuesday to say that he had been tortured in jail by Mexican police.

Morales is wanted in this country on both state and federal charges of illegally possessing explosives.

Congressmen discuss cattle quarantine

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The quarantine of Texas cattle by the Reagan administration was discussed at length by nine members of the Texas delegation at their regular weekly luncheon Wednesday.

Several expressed surprise that the Reagan administration would impose the quarantine at the time when a court suit involving the continuation of the brucellosis program was pending in the courts in Texas.

Rep. Kent Hance, D., Lubbock, who comes from a part of the state that is Brucellosis-free, was one of the first to offer aid to the Texas cattle industry to seek any delay possible or reversal of the Department of Agriculture's decision. Hance said he realized there are two wholly different views among cattlemen on this subject. But he thought "the court suit on appeal makes a difference."

The fact that a federal court injunction to stay the quarantine was refused in Texas Wednesday was announced at the luncheon.

Hance did say that he thinks if the Department had not announced its quarantine, that one or more of the states now taking Texas breeder stock might have issued a state quarantine against Texas cattle.

Hance thinks that Gov. Mark White will call a special session of the legislature to deal with the matter.

But most of the Texas congressmen, all Democrats, expressed surprise that "Reagan would do that to us." Some said they had not been made aware of the problem by the U.S. Department until April.

Session might be short

FORT WORTH (AP) — House Speaker Gib Lewis says a predicted special session of the Texas Legislature might only last four to six days, and the subject of a tax increase to fund higher teacher salaries may never come up during that time.

Lewis said during a press conference here Wednesday that White probably will avoid asking lawmakers to raise taxes to increase teacher pay, one of the four likely topics for a special session in mid-July.

"I don't think he (White) will bring up teachers' pay raises because he wants to deal real quickly with three or four issues and be gone with it," Lewis said.

He said that he had spoken with White on Wednesday morning. Lewis praised the performance of lawmakers in the legislative session.

He said the call of the session would likely also include a last-ditch effort to save the Texas Employment Commission, brucellosis control and adoption of a statewide water plan.

Lewis said lawmakers might not delve into the teacher pay, instead considering allocation of additional minimum state aid to school districts.

White said earlier that he would try to work closely with Lewis on session topics. He said he was still uncertain whether he would call a special session, though aides earlier indicated he would likely order one for mid-July.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, PUSH president, talks to reporters during a news conference on Capitol Hill Wednesday. Jackson said that he would join one of the nation's largest Hispanic groups in an attempt to block Senate confirmation of President Reagan's three new appointees to the Civil Right Commission.

Jackson leads coalition against Reagan appointees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson is leading a Hispanic-black coalition in a bid to block President Reagan's appointment of three new U.S. Civil Rights Commission members.

Jackson, president of the Chicago-based Operation PUSH, and Arnold Torres, executive director of the League of United Latin American Citizens, said Wednesday that they would lobby Senate members in an attempt to prevent the nominations from being brought to a vote.

Both men said any votes on the commission nominees might be used as a litmus test for Senate members seeking re-election next year.

"We are certainly going to determine our friends and allies based on their response to our needs," Jackson told reporters.

Jackson is considering whether to seek the Democratic nomination for president. His group has begun a voter registration and education campaign to prepare some of the 3 million unregistered blacks in the South to go to the polls in 1984.

Meanwhile, Jack Greenberg, executive director of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, said Reagan's firing of the commissioners might not stand up to a legal challenge because there was no valid reason for dismissing them.

"If members of the commission would like us to represent them, we would do so," Greenberg said in a telephone interview from New York. "They are aware of our position."

Mary Frances Berry, one of the current commission members who would be replaced, has said she is considering legal action. She could not be reached for comment at her commission office.

Torres said the president's plan to fire them makes him suspicious of Reagan's overtures to Hispanic voters.

"It angers us even more as Hispanics because the president has gone to San Antonio and to Miami and has eaten our tacos and our black beans. At the same time he has connived to deny us a voice on the commission," he said.

"The president is full of ceremonial ventures into our community, but is free of any serious effort to improve our economic lot in our community," he added.

LULAC is focusing on senators with large Hispanic populations in their states, according to Torres. He said Sens. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and John Tower, R-Texas, already had written letters to the president protesting his plans for the commission.

The commission is an advisory body to the president and Congress which monitors civil rights issues and makes periodic reports on whether progress has been made.

Jackson called the firings a signal of Reagan's intention to seek a second term.

"The reason I think this is a political signal is that without having enforcement powers, it (the commission) does not threaten his (Reagan's) budget or anything else," Jackson said.

The commission nominees are Morris Abram, a former president of Brandeis University, Robert Destro, a law professor at Catholic University, and John H. Bunzel of Stanford University's Hoover Institute. All are considered more conservative than the individuals they would replace.

Reagan to seek consent to send doctors abroad

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is preparing to ask Congress' permission to send 20 to 25 U.S. military physicians to El Salvador, administration and congressional sources confirmed Wednesday night.

He is also expected to replace the U.S. ambassadors to Guatemala and Costa Rica soon, administration officials said.

Administration officials said that the U.S. military physicians are to treat patients as well as train and consult Salvadoran military doctors.

A State Department official said that the new medical unit is "not designed to subvert any self-imposed limit on the numbers of advisers and trainers" in El Salvador. The administration has maintained a self-imposed ceiling of 55 such U.S. military advisers.

A congressional source said Wednesda night that the administration has begun notifying members of Congress of its plan to send the medical team to El Salvador.

Earlier Wednesday, Reagan insisted that no change is planned in administration policy in Central America.

"Contrary to some reports you may have seen in recent days, we are not changing the policy I outlined to the Congress. Nor is there change in the urgent need for bipartisan support for that policy," he said.

Reagan was referring to widespread speculation that a new, tougher military effort and stronger White House control over Central American policy are likely in the wake of the appointment of former Florida Senator Richard J. Stone as special envoy to the area and removal of Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders and Ambassador to El Salvador Deane R. Hinton.

At Stone's swearing-in Wednesday, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said that Stone's job is "to put forward a strong shield" against "the Soviet, Cuban, Nicaraguan axis" so that warring factions in the area can move toward negotiations, economic progress and development of democratic institutions.

A White House official said it is "coincidental" that the administration is replacing the ambassadors to Costa Rica and Guatemala as Enders and Hinton are leaving their posts. The official said that the two ambassadors, Francis J. McNeil in Costa Rica and Frederic L. Chapin in Guatemala, are due for rotation.

Shultz, in a ceremony before most of the Latin American diplomatic corps and State Department officialdom, praised Stone as "a person of great skill, energy and capacity, humor and drive," and indicated that Stone will need those qualities to deal with "one of the most important and difficult problems" around.

Reagan echoed that theme later, calling for "a new solidarity" in the hemisphere based on economic growth.

"We are not against anyone in Central America; we are for the people there," he told an audience of business executives.

New orders enhance optimism

The rising stream of new orders to American factories surged still higher in April, providing more evidence that the economic recovery is gaining momentum.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that orders for manufactured goods rose 2.1 percent in April — the fifth increase in the past six months.

The department also said inventories held by factories rose 0.1 percent, a sign that manufacturers are expecting orders to continue rising in the months ahead. The inventory increase was the first since February 1982.

"If business firms are now easing their inventory reductions and are going to resume building of stocks, that means that they are going to continue to step up production — and employment," said Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department.

David Cross, an economist at the private economic research firm of Chase Econometrics, said the increase in new orders, following a 3.1 percent rise in March, "reinforces the recovery psychology among businesses" and "implies there will be some increase in production."

"We will have a recovery certainly well into next year," Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige predicted in an appearance at the National Press Club.

The Commerce Department also reported that construction spending rose 0.4 percent in April for the first monthly gain since January.

The reports appeared to have little effect on financial markets, which had been rocked Tuesday by a new wave of worry that interest rates may begin rising.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which lost almost 30 points in the previous three trading sessions, rose 2.23 points to 1,202.21. Interest rates fell slightly and bond prices rose slightly.

The dollar, buoyed again by expectations among investors of higher U.S. interest rates, rose on international currency exchanges to record peaks for the third straight session in relation to the French franc and the Italian lira.

In other economic news Wednesday:

General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. announced they are offering new, 8.8 percent financing programs to buyers of certain small cars and trucks.

US Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, center, talks with US Ambassador to NATO William Tapley Bennett, right, and US Chief of Staff General J. Vessey prior to the afternoon session of the Alliance's defense ministers meeting at NATO headquarters Wednesday. They were assessing the Soviet military strength and discussing a military strategy for Europe.

Begin says no war; Reinforcements pull back

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, trying to allay fears of war, says his country is not plotting to attack Syria, and Israeli reinforcements have started pulling back from the cease-fire line in Lebanon.

"It doesn't even occur to us to attack Syrian forces," Begin said in a speech to the Israeli Parliament Wednesday in Jerusalem, after Syria repeatedly charged Israel was preparing to make war.

Begin also conferred with U.S. special envoy Philip C. Habib, who was heading back to Washington today after briefing Israeli leaders on Syria's refusal to accept the Israeli-Lebanese troop-withdrawal pact signed last month. Details of the discussions were not released.

In eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, a growing revolt against Yasser Arafat jeopardized the unity of his Palestine Liberation Organization, which has deployed thousands of guerrillas behind Syrian lines.

A senior Arafat aide announced Wednesday that he and more than 24 other commanders were joining the mutineers, who claim Arafat is not committed to total war with Israel to achieve the PLO's goal of a Palestinian state.

The Syrians conducted military maneuvers near the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights last week, shot missiles at Israeli reconnaisance jets over Lebanon and increased their forces in the Bekaa. But reporters there said Tuesday the Syrians were thinning out their forces.

"We hope that now that their exercise is over, they will not attack us," Begin told the Israeli Parliament.

Israel poured reinforcements into Lebanon last week to respond to the Syrian buildup. But combat units headed back to Israel on Wednesday, clogging the narrow roads in southern Lebanon.

"The army adapts to realities in the field," said one Israeli military source. "If there is tension, then it acts accordingly, and if there is no tension, then it also acts accordingly."

Diplomatic sources in Beirut estimated Israel moved 10,000 men into eastern and central Lebanon last week, increasing its total force there to 35,000 men. The Syrians are believed to have 40,000 troops in Lebanon, backed by 8,000 to 12,000 PLO guerrillas.

Though the threat of war eased, guerrillas persisted in harassing Israeli soldiers, ambushing a convoy with machine guns south of Beirut. The Israelis suffered no casualties and seized one of the attackers, identified by Lebanese radio as a southern Lebanese Moslem.

Syrian President Hafez Assad returned to Damascus on Wednesday after a 24-hour visit to Col. Moammar Khadafy, the Libyan leader, in Tripoli, where Assad renewed his pledge to wreck the Israeli-Lebanese withdrawal accord.

Polls: Tories leading, Labor Party declining

Social Democratic-Liberal alliance has advanced sharply

LONDON (AP) — The centrist Social Democratic-Liberal alliance has advanced sharply in pre-election popularity and is moving to overtake the Labor Party for second place behind the Conservatives, a new poll released today shows.

With one week to go before the June 9 elections, a telephone poll of 504 voters by Audience Selection in The Sun newspaper put support for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's ruling Tories at 44 percent, Labor at 29 percent and the alliance at 25 percent, with other unspecified other groups given 2 percent.

This compares with an Audience Selection poll last week that put the Conservatives at 45 percent, Labor 32 percent, the alliance 21 percent, others 2 percent.

Indications of an alliance advance began Wednesday when a poll by Market and Opinion Research International in the Daily Star put its support at 21 percent against 15 percent in a similar poll a week before. Wednesday's poll put the Conservatives at 44 percent and Labor 32 percent, compared with a Tory showing of 51 percent and a Labor showing of 33 precent the week before.

Roy Jenkins, leader of the Social Democratic Party, said Wednesday that the indicated upswing in the alliance's fortunes showed it was taking over from Labor as the serious challenger to the government. Liberal Party leader David Steel said the poll figures indicated a dramatic slump in support for Labor.

The 20-month-old centrist alliance switched tactics last weekend from mainly attacking Labor to promoting itself as the only hope of stopping a Conservative landslide. It argues that Labor has now been shown to be so left-wing it cannot win and voters should not choose Tory through fear of Labor.

But Conservative Party Chairman Cecil Parkinson said Wednesday he did not believe the alliance would succeed in taking over from Labor as the main opposition group.

Conservative leaders say complacency on the part of traditional Tory voters and votes for the alliance could put in a left-wing Labor administration.

European effort wanted

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says the Soviets will talk more seriously about nuclear arms control if Western alliance defense leaders support more U.S. missiles in Europe.

Weinberger and representatives of 13 other NATO nations were expected to finish a two-day strategy session today with a declaration reaffirming their decision to begin deploying U.S. missiles in Europe this year.

With the prospect of escalating anti-nuclear demonstrations as the deployment dates approach, Weinberger sought the pledge as a signal of NATO solidarity in regard to the Soviet Union.

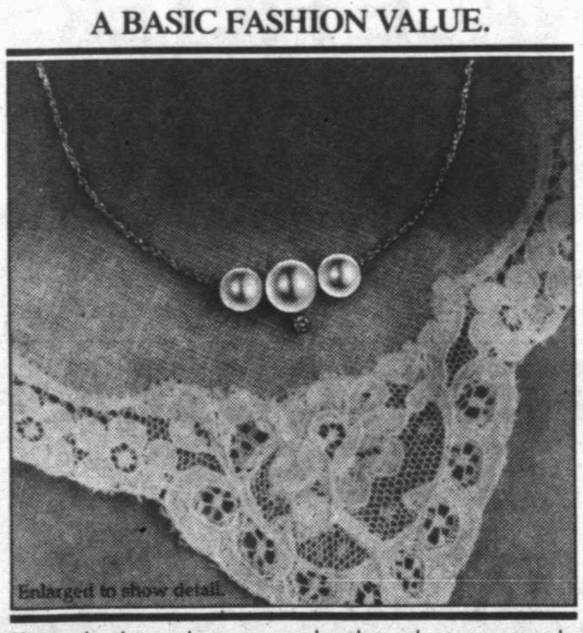

Weinberger told the ministers at a private session Wednesday the Soviets will bargain more seriously in arms control talks at Geneva.

Getting the facts

A federal judge was right to temporarily halt a U.S. Department of Agriculture-mandated quarantine of the Texas cattle industry. Allowing the quarantine under such peculiar circumstances would risk irreparable damage to an industry already suffering.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin halted the quarantine Tuesday to give himself more time to delve into the reason for the quarantine order. That's a good stance because, frankly, the government's case appears shaky.

The USDA says the quarantine was ordered in effect because the session of Legislature that just ended failed to take action on a bill that would have put new brucellosis controls on the state's cattle industry. But an attorney for cattlemen's organizations in the state contends Texas has a valid brucellosis program.

"Texas has a brucellosis program now that meets the federal standards," said the attorney, Charles Herring of Austin. "The program has been in effect for four years and nothing has happened to call for an emergency quarantine."

The case for calling the quarantine becomes even more clouded when it's noted that in 1979 the government argued the quarantine was needed principally because Texas rancher R.J. Nunnally of Uvalde received a permanent injunction that keeps the Texas Animal Health Commission from inspecting his herd for the dread cattle disease. Nunnally had argued the brucellosis program was unconstitutional.

It also has been noted that Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas all have higher rates of brucellosis than does Texas but remain unquarantined.

A number of questions need to be answered:

— Is there, in fact, a brucellosis problem in Texas that would justify a quarantine?

— Does Texas meet the brucellosis guidelines of the federal government as attorney Herring contended?

— Is Nunnally's injunction valid?

— Or is the federal government merely using the Texas brucellosis complaint to wage war against a rancher who was able to circumvent its authority. If so, that's hardly justification for a statewide punitive quarantine that would damage an already economically depressed industry.

Those and other questions need to be answered — in court — prior to the onset on any quarantine. Brucellosis is a disease that can destroy a cattle herd in short time and if it is a danger in Texas, the state's cattlemen will be the first to agree to a quarantine. But it's not right for the federal government to seek the quarantine if it's not needed.

Judge Nowlin is wise to put the interests of the state's cattle industry first.

Another View:

MX package wins

The successive votes in the House and Senate to release MX funds constitute a major political success for President Reagan. He had invested immense prestige in the outcome, and another failure would have been devastating. Three things made the difference. He lobbied hard. He changed his own approach (setting up an outside commission) and his own substantive position. And he drew on a spreading feeling that the country had excessively politicized a critical aspect of defense. It was fitting that he should come to appreciate the virtues of consensus in this field, since no one had done more than he in the late 1970s to block it.

In an op-ed article in The Washington Post this week, Mr. Reagan gave arms reductions pride of place over his two other MX goals — modernizing forces and maintaining deterrence. Certainly in terms of his requirements in Congress, the emphasis was well chosen. The swing votes for MX were supplied by legislators who accepted with the Scowcroft commission that the military case for the MX was not very good. They would not have been inclined to vote for the missile merely to bail the president out of a political fix. They could accept it, however, as an incentive to the Soviet Union 1) to negotiate at Geneva and 2) to move toward less vulnerable and less threatening small, single-warhead missiles in the future.

What Congress approved, then, was not simply a missile. It approved the Scowcroft package including the MX and Midgetman and a new address to the START talks on limiting intercontinental arms. In this light, the ball is now back in the president's court. He must make good on his promises, made in his letters soliciting congressional support for the MX, to review his position at START.

Some confusion arises from the fact that Mr. Reagan's pledges on Midgetman and on "build-down" — dismantling old missiles as new ones are deployed — produce different arms-reduction numbers. This will have to be straightened out. The more serious immediate difficulty, however, arises from Pentagon statements that the Scowcroft package requires "nothing new" from the United States at START.

Congress is focused on strategic issues now. The swing legislators are of a mind to expect that all sides adhere to the Scowcroft bargain. On June 8 the START talks are to resume in Geneva. It would be appropriate, and consistent with his earlier practice, for Mr. Reagan to announce by then not the details, of course, but surely the broad outlines of his new negotiating instructions. As early as June 9 another set of MX money votes is due to come up in Congress.

— The Washington Post

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday June 2, the 153rd day of 1983. There are 212 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 2, 1979, Pope John Paul II arrived in his native Poland, the first Roman Catholic pontiff to visit a Communist country.

On this date:

In 1851, Maine became the first state to enact a law prohibiting the manufacture or sale of alcoholic beverages.

In 1886, President Grover Cleveland married his ward, Frances Folsom, in a White House ceremony.

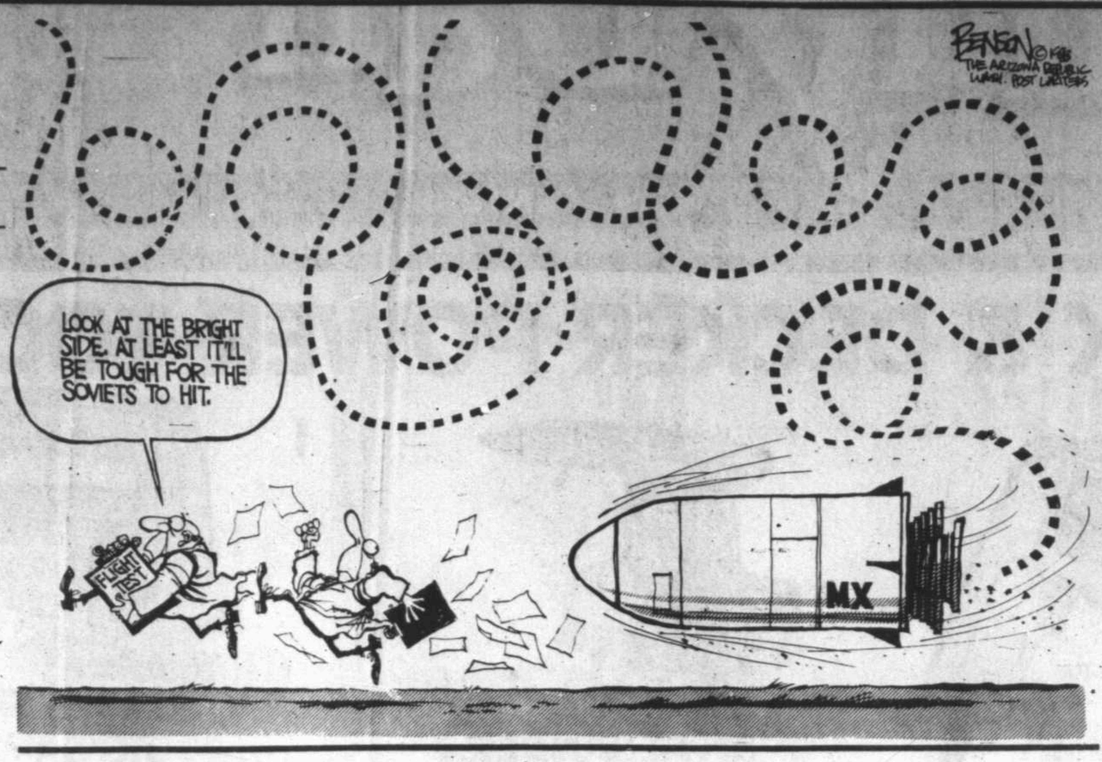

In 1924, Congress granted citizenship to all American Indians.

In 1953, Britain's Queen Elizabeth II was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

Ten years ago: An American military adviser was killed outside his home in the Iranian capital of Tehran.

Five years ago: Five people — one of them American — were killed in the explosion of a terrorist bomb on a bus in Jerusalem.

One year ago: President Reagan arrived in Paris for the start of a nine-day European trip.

ART BUCHWALD

Bob Jones' statement ludicrous

Journalism is becoming a very dangerous profession. In libel suits, lawyers for the plaintiffs are now demanding that newspapermen not only turn over all their notebooks to courts, but are also demanding that a reporter and his editors testify as to what was going on in their minds when they were producing the story. Many judges have decided to let the lawyers pry into the heads of journalists and editors to try to prove there was malice in their thinking.

Art Buchwald

There are reporters who object to this line of questioning as a threat to the First Amendment. But I'm not one of them. I'd like to confess today how I arrive at a column and what goes through my mind when I'm doing it.

The other day I read that the Supreme Court had ruled 8 to 1 against Bob Jones University in a tax case. Bob Jones U. apparently was practicing racial discrimination, and the court said the IRS was correct in deciding that the fundamentalist school was not entitled to a U.S. tax exemption.

Then I read that Bob Jones III, the president of the university, commented after the ruling, "This is the same court who has decided to murder innocent babies, and takes prayers — the word of God — out of our public schools. I have pity for the heathens who sit on the Supreme Court, pity for their damned souls and their blighted minds ... We're in a bad fix in America when eight evil old men and one vain and foolish woman can speak a verdict on American liberties."

Well, this sounded like a good story. The first thing that went through my mind is that President Jones had been unfair to at least one justice. William Rehnquist was the only one on the court who had voted to give the school its exemption despite its racial policies, so he shouldn't have been included as one of the "eight evil old men" with "damned souls and blighted minds."

Besides not being evil, he isn't that old.

The next thing that went through my head was that I know most of the Supreme Court justices, including the chief, and while I've questioned some of their decisions, I haven't noticed any one of them possessing a "damned soul" or a "blighted mind." But who am I to judge? Maybe it takes a fundamentalist preacher to be able to see evil in someone's soul, especially when he loses a big case to the Supremes.

What made the decision an interesting subject for a column was that the Reagan Justice Department, instead of defending the IRS, decided to come out on the side of Bob Jones University.

I looked back in my old notebooks, which I keep in case a judge wants to subpoena them, and discovered that the president said he didn't have the authority to take away a tax exemption from a school that practiced racial discrimination.

He ordered the attorney general not to go into the Supreme Court and defend the president's own Internal Revenue Service. With no one to speak for the government, the court appointed an outside lawyer, the distinguished former secretary of transportation, William Coleman, to argue the case for the IRS.

So what you finally wound up with was the U.S. Justice Department and Bob Jones University vs. the IRS and the people of the United States.

After reading my notes, the next thing that went through my head was how lucky we were that the Supreme Court voted the way they did, or we would never know how Bob Jones III felt about those sinners who didn't see things the way he did, particularly when it came to money matters. I frankly was on the fence about the case, but after Jones proved to be such a bad loser, I am now glad as a citizen, my taxes aren't going to hell.

President Jones, as a man of God, can look for heathens wherever he wants to. But I don't want him to do it with my money. I might even ask the Lord to forgive him for what he said about the "eight evil old men" on the court. But when he calls Justice Sandra O'Connor "a vain and foolish woman," I have to take umbrage. It was an uncalled for sexist remark about a very fine lady, and is unworthy of a man who is now head of the leading "nontax-exempt" institution of higher learning in the land.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Kissinger's closet has skeletons

WASHINGTON — The indefatigable investigative reporter Seymour Hersh has been rummaging in Henry Kissinger's closet for four years and has rattled loose some fascinating skeletons.

Jack Anderson

Hersh's findings can soon be read in a new book, "The Price of Power." From an advance copy, here are some devastating examples of Kissinger at work:

NUCLEAR TAMPERING: Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger tampered with the safety catch on the nuclear trigger, Hersh alleges. Their action was cynical; they did it in secret; and they lied about it to the American people.

They began in March 1969, by dropping tons of bombs on neutral Cambodia, without the advice and consent of Congress. They were determined to conceal the bombings from Congress, the press and the public. "Kissinger's overwhelming concern was secrecy," Hersh writes.

Perhaps worse, Kissinger "insisted that the missions had to be conducted without the knowledge of the Strategic Air Command's normal command and control system... (and) wanted the Cambodian bombing arranged so that crew members aboard the B-52s would not know they were bombing Cambodia," Hersh reveals.

So an Air Force colonel, Ray B. Sitton, worked out a complex system of last-minute target changes controlled by radar personnel on the ground. Although it was impossible to fool the B-52 crews, they were debriefed after each mission as if they had dropped the bombs on South Vietnam.

Concludes Hersh: "Nixon and Kissinger were casually tampering with the command and control system of America's nuclear deterrent" — the Strategic Air Command's B-52s — "a system necessarily under constant high-level analysis to prevent accidents or unauthorized nuclear bombings." In effect, they were writing a primer for any loony general who might contrive a "Dr. Strangelove" scenario.

* * *

MIRV MISTAKE: In mid-1969, the Soviets ran a series of missile tests in the Pacific. The Pentagon concluded, wrongly, that the Russians had tested a MIRV — that is, a "multiple, independently targeted reentry vehicle" — in other words, a missile whose several warheads could be steered to separate targets.

What they had actually tested, it turned out, was merely a MRV — a missile capable only of scattering its multiple warheads like a shotgun blast in the same general area. But it suited Kissinger and Nixon to portray the Soviets as bogeymen and their MRV as the more menacing MIRV.

The CIA refused, however, to alter its assessment of the MRV. This integrity was treated by Kissinger and Nixon as "disloyalty."

Even after the truth became indisputable about the Soviets' phantom MIRV, Kissinger and Nixon went ahead as if the Russians in fact had such a sophisticated weapon, and insisted on making this fantasy a matter of U.S. policy.

* * *

KISSINGER'S KISSINGER: Henry Kissinger's dealing with Alexander Haig, a young, ambitious colonel wise in the ways of Washington, began as a master-servant relationship. Hersh quotes a Kissinger aide at the National Security Council as describing it this way:

"Haig moved in on Henry and he moved in from the very beginning. First of all, he was Henry's butler and his chauffeur. Henry never knew the kinds of perks that could be arranged — private planes for trips to New York for dinner, limousines — and he loved it... When Henry had to wear a white tie and tails for his first White House dinner, it was Haig who went to Henry's house and helped him dress."

But Haig went too far, Hersh reports: "Eventually he would accomplish the one thing Kissinger found intolerable — a separate relationship with Richard Nixon — and the two men would become bitter enemies. And eventually Kissinger would come to realize that Alexander Haig was not Kissinger's Kissinger, as the newspapers would later characterize him, but Haig's Haig."

* * *

INSIDE CHINA: Kissinger's greatest achievement, it seems, was also his greatest gamble. He set up Nixon's historic mission to China, according to Hersh, "without a commitment that Mao Tse-tung would receive him."

Hersh reports that "Mao had suffered a series of strokes and had been living — in part out of fear for his life — outside of Peking." But the gamble paid off.

"In the original draft of his memoirs, Nixon had much more to say about the meeting with Mao, telling how Kissinger had embarrassed everyone by suddenly and gratuitously making a scathing reference to Golda Meir, Israel's Prime Minister," Hersh reveals.

"Mao, though he did not comment, was obviously nonplussed, and the President quickly moved in to 'save the moment.' Nixon deleted the section from the published version of his memoirs, but the incident, and Nixon's anger at what he considered Kissinger's boorish behavior, were widely known among his immediate staff."

GEORGE F. WILL

Judicial roulette and social policy

WASHINGTON — Persons who consider rigorousness inherently rude think Sen. Paul Tsongas (D-Mass.) was received rudely when he went before a Senate subcommittee to testify, as principal sponsor, for the resurrected Equal Rights Amendment, which says: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of sex." Chairman Orin Hatch (R-Utah) simply asked Tsongas what the amendment means. This question caused Tsongas to show that he does not know and does not deeply care.

George F. Will

Hatch's point, which Tsongas unwillingly confirmed, is that ERA bestows a right without identifying it. Most debates about constitutional amendments (limiting abortion, permitting school prayer, abolishing the Electoral College, establishing a six-year presidential term) concern whether the amendment would be beneficial. Debate about ERA concerns what ERA means.

Tsongas began with the ritual announcement that it is "unseemly" for males to say what is good for women. Then he showed that although he says ERA would be good for women, he does not claim to know what it would do.

Hatch began by asking what standard of review ERA would establish for legislation involving sex classifications. Would the standard be as strict as standards applying to such "suspect classifications" as those involving race, religion or national origin? Virtually any law with such classifications is nullified. Instead of answering, Tsongas imprudently asked for specific problems.

So Hatch asked whether under ERA the practice of giving some hiring preference in public jobs to veterans would be unconstitutional because most veterans are men. Tsongas answered: "We have what's called the Supreme Court, which is in a position to resolve those particular matters."

Hatch asked whether those ERA advocates are correct who say ERA would prohibit limits on federal funding for abortions. Tsongas said courts would answer that. Hatch asked whether, as many ERA advocates say, ERA would make it unconstitutional for single-sex colleges to receive federal aid, or federal assistance for students, or tax-exempt status. Tsongas said he had a "personal view" but that "these issues are going to be decided in the courts."

Hatch asked if ERA would require denial to tax exemption for, say, Catholic churches (because there are no women priests) and Orthodox synagogues (where the sexes are segregated). (The National Organization for Women demands that seminaries recruit men and women equally and tax exemptions be denied "any church actively opposed to abortion or ordaining women.") Tsongas conceded that "the issue of the ERA and the issue of freedom of religion are in some conflict," and he said courts would decide.

Hatch asked if, as some scholars say, ERA would prohibit sex-based distinctions in insurance, regardless of life expectancies and accident rates. Would, as some ERA supporters say, ERA require equal leave time for men and women during a pregnancy? Would, as many ERA supporters say, ERA ban discrimination in housing on the basis of marital status (because females head many single-parent families)? Would, as some scholars say, ERA prohibit segregation of sexes for sex-education classes? Would ERA end the right of Congress to enact male-only draft registration? Would ERA require women to be assigned to combat units on the same basis as men? Would WAC units be unconstitutional? Would, as some scholars think, the standard of review implied by ERA — a standard like that used on race classifications — overturn laws forbidding homosexual marriages, just as anti-miscegenation laws have been overturned? Would, as the U.S. Civil Rights Commission implies, ERA conflict with seniority systems because women often have less seniority than men?

Repeatedly, Tsongas said he had certain "feelings" about what "adjustments" might be required, but that courts would decide. Losing his temper, Tsongas denounced Hatch for not giving him the questions in advance. Hatch noted that Tsongas was demanding a privilege not extended to persons who are not senators, and that Tsongas has been promoting ERA for a decade, so he has had time to think about these questions. Tsongas angrily vowed to submit written opinions. But why bother? He is content to have courts make policy.

Tsongas said all constitutional amendments generate litigation. Yes, said Hatch, but other amendments are not intended to generate litigation; ERA is designed to pass hundreds of anticipatable controversies to the unaccountable branch of government. Tsongas said Hatch favors an amendment concerning abortion that would generate litigation. Hatch replied that it probably would. But it aims simply to restore to states the power they once had (before the 1973 Supreme Court rulings) to regulate abortions. So his amendment is the reverse of ERA; his amendment aims to restore policy-making to representative insitutions.

Tsongas's testimony exemplified the complacent abdication of responsibility by legislators. It also shows how persons preening themselves on their love of "equality" play judicial roulette with sensitive social policies.

Political missteps keep Ohio's governor off balance

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post New Service

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Five months after Democratic Gov. Richard F. Celeste took the helm of this depressed industrial state, the Republicans gleefully released a poll showing that his once-formidable popularity has plunged to a record low.

It is not difficult to figure out why. Faced with a billion-dollar budget deficit, Celeste pushed a 90 percent income tax surcharge through the state legislature in three weeks, and he is still feeling the backlash. Fellow Democrats recently shot down his latest initiative, a proposed tax on business services.

A Rhodes scholar and former Peace Corps director, Celeste shows signs of being an innovative leader, but a series of political missteps, from increasing his staff to accepting consulting fees from his campaign committee, has kept him off balance.

"Dick Celeste is like a farmer walking through his pasture past a lot of cow piles, and he hasn't missed one yet," said Paul Gillmor, the Republican Senate leader.

Celeste's near-landslide victory last fall led a Democratic sweep of most of the Midwestern gubernatorial races as several veteran Republicans — James A. Rhodes in Ohio, William Milliken in Michigan and Albert Quie in Minnesota — did not run for re-election. Now, however, their Democratic successors are finding it painful to take the steps needed to balance their sagging budgets.

Michigan Gov. James J. Blanchard, who has raised the state income tax by 38 percent and cut $225 million in state spending, is facing a small but growing recall movement led by conservative groups.

"There is a backlash, and we're experiencing it right now," a spokesman for Blanchard said. "We could have laid off every worker in the state and the budget still wouldn't have been balanced, but a lot of people are very upset."

Wisconsin Gov. Anthony Earl has cut spending 10 percent, adopted a 5-cent cigarette tax increase and canceled $500 million in scheduled property tax credits. Now he is proposing another $500 million in budget cuts, much in aid to local governments.

And in Minnesota, which raised taxes several times last year, Gov. Rudy Perpich has proposed retaining a 10 percent income tax surcharge and a higher sales tax, may cut spending further and also plans to cut back on property tax relief.

But the statehouse blues seem most pronounced here in Ohio's capital, where Celeste's top aides begin by trying to convince voters that his doubling of a temporary income tax surcharge, amounting to a 27 percent real increase, did not violate a campaign pledge.

"People are angry at Dick Celeste for raising taxes," said Ohio budget director Cristina Sale. "I get on a radio talk show and nine of 10 questions are on taxes. Some people think he promised not to raise taxes. He didn't, he just simply avoided the issue."

Republicans in the statehouse have refused to provide a single vote for Celeste's tax hikes, preferring instead to rail against the governor's proposed spending increases for education, welfare and economic development. They also have refused to offer any budget alternatives or to say how they would cut spending.

"There are no Republicans to be held accountable in Columbus today," said Celeste.

GOP boss in House — temporarily

'Oldtimers' coup almost unnoticed

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — The political coup went almost unnoticed, but the House of Representatives the other day passed into Republican hands. For about 15 minutes.

It was oldtimers day and Democratic Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts turned the gavel over to ex-member Les Arends, 88, an Illinois Republican.

O'Neill said he was making the move in the spirit of bipartisanship.

"He always had his eye on the speaker's chair," O'Neill said of Arends, "but he was never able to get anything else on it."

Arends served in the House from 1935 to 1974.

The ex-lawmakers belong to a group called the Association of Former Members, created 13 years ago — and now boasting a roster of 600 erstwhile House and Senate members.

"They join the group to keep alive the memories — and to get Blue Cross," O'Neill joked.

The speaker greeted the 71 oldtimers present in the chamber, calling out many by name, and then telling them what it meant to him to live in a democracy.

"You know, you go into the foreign countries of the world where the minority sits on one side and the majority sits on the other side and they never speak to each other because of their differerences in philosphy.

"But in this country, you know, after 5 p.m. or even during the course of the day, a Democrat's closest friend may be a Republican and the Republican's wife's closest friend closest friend will be a Democratic wife.

"That is the way it is under a democratic nation," O'Neill said.

During a recent House Banking subcommittee hearing on credit card fraud, Rep. Thomas Ridge, R-Pa., questioned a former member of a fraudulent credit card ring — identified only as "Mr. Witness" — on the penalty for working against the organization.

"Death," replied the witness, who was wearing a hooded cloak and whose voice was electronically disguised.

The witness went on to elaborate: "If you were head (of such an organization) and someone broke away from you and stole, say, like a million dollars worth of merchandise from you, would you kill him?"

There was a long silence.

"My time has expired," said Ridge.

For some recording artists, these have been hard times.

For instance, Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said sales of his bluegrass music album, "Mountain Fiddler," had trailed off to the point where he'd taken in a paltry $163 last year.

One reporter suggested that Byrd get a new agent.

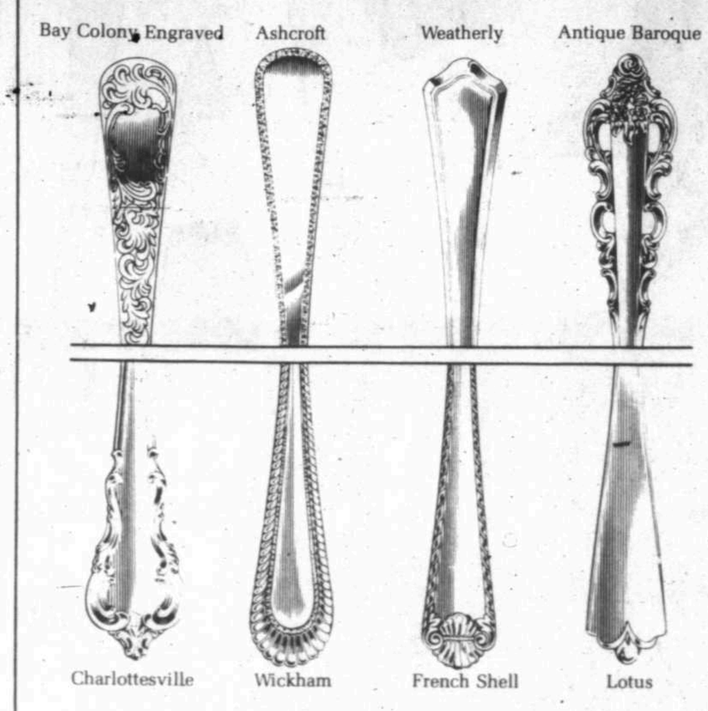

Agent? asked Byrd. "I don't have an agent."

Actually, the album did quite well before demand began dropping off, selling a total of 20,000 copies since it was pressed in 1979, according to Byrd aide Mike Willard.

Byrd "has not played the violin much over the past several years, but lately he's begun to pick it up again," Willard said.

But then, Senate Majority leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., fared even worse financially on his hobby than Byrd did.

Baker reported earning $14,500 in royalties from his photography — but said it cost him $14,715 in film, equipment and other expenses, for a net loss of $215.

'Fib-off' held

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — George Daughtery says "you know a liar when you see one," and as one of three judges in a two-day whopper contest, he got to see plenty.

Richard Cobb of Huntington, who spun a preposterous tale of revenge against an overbearing father-in-law, took home the title of "West Virginia's Biggest Liar" in the fib-off on the Capitol lawn.

Cobb told recently how he plotted to get the last word with his critical relative by putting a dead mule in his bathtub.

He was one of about 30 contestants who sought the prestigious title at the Vandalia Festival Gathering, an annual celebration of West Virginia heritage.

"Liars are born and not made, and Richard is a born liar — at least on the stage," said Daughtery. "You know a liar when you see one. The stance he took when he told it made him look like a good liar. He had a twinkle in his eye when he told it."

The judges said they decided the winners according to technique, story development, originality and effectiveness. But the contest was not open to just anyone — politicians were excluded, although Daughtery said that could change next year.

"I think next year we'll allow politicians, preachers and maybe even lawyers, even though it will be terribly unfair to the general public," he said.

Second place was won by Alan Klein, a Highland elementary school teacher. He told of a rabbit hunt one winter in which he teamed with a mountain lion to beat off attacking wolves.

"When it was done, I looked at the mountain lion and the mountain lion looked at me, and we decided that whatever our differences were, well, they was over," Klein said.

Lubbock Christian remains unbeaten

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — David Martinez hit a grand slam home run and three of his teammates also got round-trippers as top-ranked Lewis-Clark State overpowered 10th-ranked Union University 22-6 to advance in the NAIA World Series.

Lewis-Clark, 67-5, will play Lubbock Christian, 53-26, today in a game between two teams unbeaten in the playoff.

Third-ranked Lubbock Christian, with the help of home runs by Dan O'Connor, Mike Rivera and Steve Coleman, defeated Coastal Carolina of South Carolina 14-9 in a four-hour game that didn't end until early this morning.

Lubbock Christian pitcher Kirk Dudley held Coastal Carolina scoreless through the first four innings, while his teammates built a 5-0 lead. But Coastal Carolina scored seven in the fifth on a walk, three singles, two home runs and three errors by the LCC shortstop.

LCC scored five runs in the top of the sixth on four walks, two singles and a triple.

Coastal Carolina scored one in the seventh, both teams scored a run in the eighth, and Lubbock Christian added three in the top of the ninth.

In other action Wednesday, Kansas Newman College climbed to a 12-10 win over the College of St. Francis. And Mark Deymaz went two for five, including one homer, as Liberty College edged Southern Arkansas 4-3.

In the fourth inning, the Lewis-Clark Warriors scored six runs on four singles, a double and two home runs off Bulldogs starting pitcher Ronnie Giddens to overcome a 2-1 Union lead.

Lewis-Clark's Tom Edens went the distance despite giving up 12 hits and all six Union runs, walking four and striking out three.

Kansas Newman's Bret Reynolds became the 10th man in the 27-year history of the tournament to slug two homers in a single game. His second was a three-run shot in the eighth inning that provided the game winning runs batted in for the Jets. His homers drove in five runs.

Pinch hitter John Querio smashed a two-out grand slam homerun to start the St. Francis comeback after Kansas Newman's 6-0 lead in the fourth inning.

The Jets took an 11-6 margin on two singles, two home runs and an error that produced five runs after the Saints scored runs in the fifth and sixth innings, tying the score at 6-6.

Kansas Newman scored a single run in the top of the ninth and then staved off a last ditch rally by the Saints, who tallied four runs on two walks, a single and a double before Jets relief pitcher Mike Koester retired the last three batters on nine pitches.

Liberty Baptist took an early lead when Todd Nelson singled and Deymaz hit in his third run early in the third inning.

The Southern Muleriders could not score off Liberty Baptist Pitcher Kevin Napier until Kelly Smith and Greg Johnson teamed up on doubles to right field in the sixth inning. Both teams had at least one base runner in every inning except the first.

Both teams scored a run each in the eighth and ninth innings, but Southern Arkansas could come no closer than Joe Horbacz' lead-off homer to right center field, cutting the Flames' lead to the final 4-3.

McEnroe ousted from French Open

AP Laserphoto

John McEnroe returns a backhand in his loss to Mats Wilander.

PARIS (AP) — Defending champion Mats Wilander of Sweden won 23 points in a row as he bounced John McEnroe out of the French Open Tennis Championships 1-6, 6-2, 6-4, 6-0 and ended America's bid for the men's singles title in this clay court event.

After a brilliant first set in which he played a serve-and-volley game on the slow clay of Roland Garros stadium, McEnroe folded. And, in the end, he was was completely humiliated as the left-hander won only seven of the last 47 points.

With McEnroe's defeat, once again the U.S. bid for this prestigious clay court title ended in disaster. An American has not won the French men's title since Tony Trabert did it 28 years ago.

McEnroe had been seeded to meet Jimmy Connors in the final, but Connors was eliminated on Tuesday by Christophe Roger-Vasselin of France, who is ranked 130th in the world on the Atari-ATP computer.

At the start of the match McEnroe threatened to wipe Wilander off the court. The Swede played his usual cautious game from his baseline, and McEnroe played a series of drop shots that left him flat-footed at the back of the court.

"It surprised me," Wilander said. "Other players have tried to drop shot me, but I had never seen John play shots like that and I didn't know he could do it.

"John showed in the first set, and again in the early part of the third, that he is a very good clay-court player.

Lloyd, the 28-year-old tournament favorite after the elimination of top-seeded Martina Navratilova, next plays No. 3 Andrea Jaeger for a place in the women's final.

Chasing her fifth French Open title, Lloyd defeated Czechoslovakia's Hana Mandlikova 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 in a quarterfinal match and gained revenge for the 1981 loss she suffered againt Mandlikova in the French Open final.

Jaeger, who celebrates her 18th birthday Saturday, won her quarterfinal match 6-2, 6-2 against Gretchen Rush, a 19-year Pittsburgh native who was the only amateur in the tournament.

Longhorns open World Series against James Madison

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Oklahoma State Coach Gary Ward says gaining a trip to Omaha for the annual College World Series is what counts in collegiate baseball and having been there certainly helps in getting back.

Ward's Cowboys are making a third straight trip to Omaha for the 37th annual NCAA college baseball championship. A look at the field indicates the experience of having been here certainly does help in getting back.

Maine and Texas also have won three straight trips, Stanford is making its second straight, Michigan its third in four years and Arizona State its sixth in eight years.

Alabama is playing in its second series, having qualified in 1950, the first year the tournament moved to Omaha. Only James Madison is making a first trip to Omaha.

"There's a lot of pressure on teams that never have been there," said Ward. "Going into regional tournaments, it's not so much the personnel of a team. The edge goes to the team that anticipates winning. I think players go into those types of programs with that type of goal. They expect to earn a trip to Omaha. I think players bring that confidence to a Texas or Arizona State."

Texas is adding to its NCAA record by making its 22nd trip to the series. Arizona State has been to Omaha 12 times in 19 years and has won five titles, second only to 11 for Southern Cal.

The tournament gets under way Friday with Texas, 61-14, facing James Madison, 37-11, at 5:10 p.m. CDT, followed by Oklahoma State, 47-14, against Stanford, 40-15-1. On Saturday, Michigan, 48-7, meets Maine, 29-14, at 5:10 p.m. and Alabama, 43-9, faces Arizona State, 42-22, at 8:10 p.m.

Texas (61-14)

Coach Cliff Gustafson's Longhorns are ranked No. 1 by Collegiate Baseball magazine and are adding to their NCAA records with a 29th playoff appearance and a 22nd trip to the series. Pitching and defense have been the Texas strengths with Calvin Schiraldi, 12-2; Roger Clemens, 13-5, Mike Capel, 12-1, and Kirk Killingsworth, 11-3, heading the mound staff.

Top hitters are Jose Tolentino (.361), who was born in Mexico City and recently became an American citizen, and catcher Jeff Hearron (.333).

James Madison (37-11)

Sixth-seeded in the East Regional, James Madison took four straight wins to earn a trip to Omaha. Not big on power hitters, the Viginia club is defense-minded, led by shortstop Jim Knicely, the East Regional co-MVP. Tom Estepp is the top hitter with a .333 average, followed by catcher Steve Cullers, .331, center fielder Jeff Kidd, .329 and Knicely .302).

Justin Gannon, 6-1, Dennis Knight, 7-3, and Jack Munley, 8-1, are the top pitchers with Munely leading the team with a 2.38 earned run average and Gannon and Knight with over 50 strike outs each.

Oklahoma State (47-14)

Oklahoma State's Assistant Sports Information Director Tim Allen has dubbed the Cowboy power hitters as "Jacka Smacka Rho." It tells the story of Cowboy freshman Pete Incaviglia (21 homers), Scott Wade (19 homers), Glenn Edwards (15) and Robbie Wine (13), who have blasted third-ranked OSU to its third straight series. Coach Gary Ward said it has been the pitching of Dennis Livingston (14-2, 2.91 ERA), Eric Schmidt (7-0, 3.02 ERA) and Gary Kanwisher (9-3, 4.23 ERA) that has provided the winning edge.

Stanford (40-15-1)

Another power club with 79 team homers, Standford is making its second straight trip to Omaha. Outfielder Mike Dotterer, .289 average, and pitcher Steve Cottrell, 9-2, are converts from Stanford's football team. Coach Mark Marquess' second-ranked Cardinals batted .302 as a team. Mike Aldrete, .383, and Eric Hardgrave, .363, top fiveplayers hitting over .315.

Michigan (48-7)

Ranked fifth in the nation, Michigan set a school record with 48 wins and comes to Omaha for the third time in Coach Bud Middaugh's four years. Junior catcher Rich Bair is the top hitter at .383 and third baseman Chris Sabo is at .370 to lift the Wolverines to a .334 team average. Rich Stoll, 10-2, provides the pitching leadership, collecting three wins and a save in the Big Ten Conference and Mideast Regional tournaments.

Maine (29-14)

The last team to join the 1983 series field, Maine was slowed by wet or cold weather but took three straight to win an unprecedented third consecutive Northeast Regional title. Coach John Winkin's club is rated seventh coming to Omaha. Junior pitcher Stu Lacognata is a tournament-tested pitcher for the Black Bears, who won two games a year ago to finish third. Left fielder Brad Colton and freshman third baseman Bill Reynolds have been providing the offensive spark.

Arizona State (42-22)

Champions in 1981, Coach Jim Brock's fourth-ranked Sun Devils make their eighth trip to Omaha under Brock and 12th in 19 years as a school. Arizona State trails only Southern Cal in national titles (11 for USC to five for ASU). Top pitcher Kendall Carter, 11-2, was a freshman when the Sun Devils were in Omaha to win the 1981 title. Carter was 19-1 as a freshman. Oddibe McDowell tops six .300-plus hitters with a .365 average.

Alabama (43-9)

Coach Barry Shollenberger's club has been swinging away at a .340 clip, headed by .523 hitter David Magadan and Ted McClendon, .376. The Tide, with a 13-game winning streak, bumped off defending national champion Miami and host Florida State to take the South Regional. Top pitchers are Rick Browne, 10-1, Dean Hayes, 11-2, and relief ace Troy Brauchle setting a school record with 10 saves.

Cub's club Devils 20-9

Mike Anicich drove in six runs with two homers and a single and also got a double in his six appearances at the plate as the Midland Cubs blasted El Paso 20-9 Wednesday night.

Midland also got a solo home run from Tom Lombarski, his fifth, en route to its win over El Paso. The Diablos got a two-run homer from Carlos Ponce and a solo home run from Earnest Riles.

The Cubs also got 23 hits and scored in every inning but the second and the ninth. Midland got five runs in the first, three in the third, two in the fourth, three in the fifth and sixth, one in the seventh and three in the eighth.

Darrell Banks, 7-3, was the winner for Midland.

CUB PRINTS—The Cubs added pitcher Jim Wright and outfielder Carlos Lezcano to the roster. Wright, the American Association pitcher of the year in 1977, will be a starting pitcher. Wright was with the Cubs at Mesa, Ariz., during spring training and is recovering from arm troubles. Wright was obtained from the Kansas City organization in an off-season trade involving lefthander Mike King, who was at Midland last season...To make room for the additions, relief pitcher Tim Millner was released and outfielder Jim Walsh was sent to Salinas of the Class A California League...The Cubs and Diablos will make up the rained out second game of the season, April 8, with a doubleheader tonight, starting at 5:15 p.m. MST...

Fitch in charge of Rockets launch into Sampson Era

HOUSTON (AP) — During what Bill Fitch calls "The Larry Bird Era," the Boston Celtics sold out 119 consecutive games, won three divisional titles and won one world championship.

Fitch started "The Ralph Sampson Era" Wednesday when he signed a multi-year contract with the Houston Rockets to direct their resurrection from last season's 14-68 record, worst in the National Basketball Association.

"Somewhere along the line this ring will come off and I'll put one on that says Houston on it" the former Boston coach said, holding up the title ring the Celtics received after beating the Rockets in the 1979-80 title series.

The Cleveland Cavaliers were Fitch's first NBA reclamation project. The Cavaliers won only 15 games in 1970, Fitch's first season, but won the division title in 1975-76.

Fitch hopes it doesn't take that long to reach the championship with the Rockets, but he's not promising instant titles.

Bill Fitch

The Rockets have earned the No. 1 selection in the June 28 NBA draft and will pick Virginia All-American Ralph Sampson.

"I really look forward to coaching a player of Ralph Sampson's ability but he's got a lot to live up to," Fitch said. "I'm sure he'll be interested to learn what players are going to be around him."

Fitch said having Sampson on the team would not insure a championship.

"If one man could win a championship, you had the right man here two years ago," Fitch said, referring to Moses Malone, traded prior to last season to Philadelphia. "Championship teams have the (Kareem) Jabbars but they also have two or three others to go with them."

Terms of the contract were not announced although the Rockets' was believed to be similar to the four-year, $200,000 per year offer made last week to Tom Heinsohn.

Soft touch Dempsey was fighter to the end

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Jack Dempsey never met a stranger.

He was the "peoples' champion" — peoples' champion when he came out of Manassa, Colo. as a raw-boned, 187-pound ring tiger to dominate heavyweight boxing in the 1920s and the peoples' choice when he died peacefully Tuesday at age 87, one of the few remaining relics of sports' Golden Age.

He liked people — plain, ordinary people. People idolized him. To most of them, young and old, he was always the one and only "Champ."

He never lost the common touch.

As heavyweight champion, Dempsey made the Hollywood scene. He married a glamorous movie queen, Estelle Taylor. Movie, political and other celebrities fawned over him. He swung with the swingers in the days of prohibition and the Charleston. But he was never happy.

He never found true contentment until he cut his movieland ties, beat a "war slacker" rap, and settled down after World War II with his own restaurant at 49th and Broadway, which became a "must" attraction for tourists.

It wasn't a fancy place like the Stork Club or 21. You got a good steak and had a beer. You could look at a mural by artist James Montgomery Flagg or view a huge mural on one wall showing that battle under a broiling Toledo sun in July 1919, when Dempsey battered the massive Jess Willard into submission for the title.

But the main attraction was Dempsey himself. He parked himself at a corner table which could be seen from the street, shook hands and signed postcard-sized color photographs all day and much of the night.

He delighted in mingling with visitors and old friends. He never made himself scarce.

Some of the heart seemed to go out of the old champ when the restaurant was torn down in the mid-1970s for commercial purposes. Still the event may have improved his financial status.

Dempsey was universally known as a "soft touch." Whether it be friend or fraud, he never turned his back on someone needing a temporary loan with no thought about repayment.

The most graphic illustration of the old champion's softheartedness occurred at the Kentucky Derby during the period before the outbreak of World War II.

Dempsey was serving in the Coast Guard. There was another prominent sports figure in the scene in a a starched-white naval officer's uniform.

A man approached the naval officer, identified himself, and said, "Hello, Sir, remember me? I was in your outfit at San Diego.'"

The naval officer straightened himself and coldly replied, "I never saw you before in my life," and then wheeled to return to his friends.

Later in the day, Dempsey was mingling in the crowd when he was accosted by an individual in a tattered suit and rundown shoes.

"Hi, Champ," he said. "Maybe you remember me. I worked with your guys at the fight in Philly."

"Sure," said Dempsey, obviously not recognizing the man. "How are things going?"

"A little down on my luck," the man replied.

"Here," said Dempsey, removing a roll of bills from his pocket. "Take this for old time's sake. I owe you."

The guy mumbled, took the bill — was it a century note? — and fled.

While healthy, Dempsey continued to make public appearances with his third wife, Deanna, to whom he had been married 25 years, and stepdaughter Barbara, co-author of his autobiography, "Dempsey."

He would go to senior citizen's outings in Central Park, sports luncheons and other occasions.

One of his last public appearances was at a New York reception honoring prominent athletes featured in a commercial. Accompanied by Deanna and Barbara, he found himself immediately the center of attention.

Hardly a head turned when Muhammad Ali, with his large entourage, burst on the scene. It was natural that photographers should urge Ali to pay respect to the former boxing great.

After amenities, Ali, subdued by awe, said:

"You're the champ — you're the greatest."

"I always thought you said you were the greatest," Dempsey said, enjoying the little tete-a-tete.

"Aw, just kididing. That stuff is just show," Ali said. "You're still the greatest."

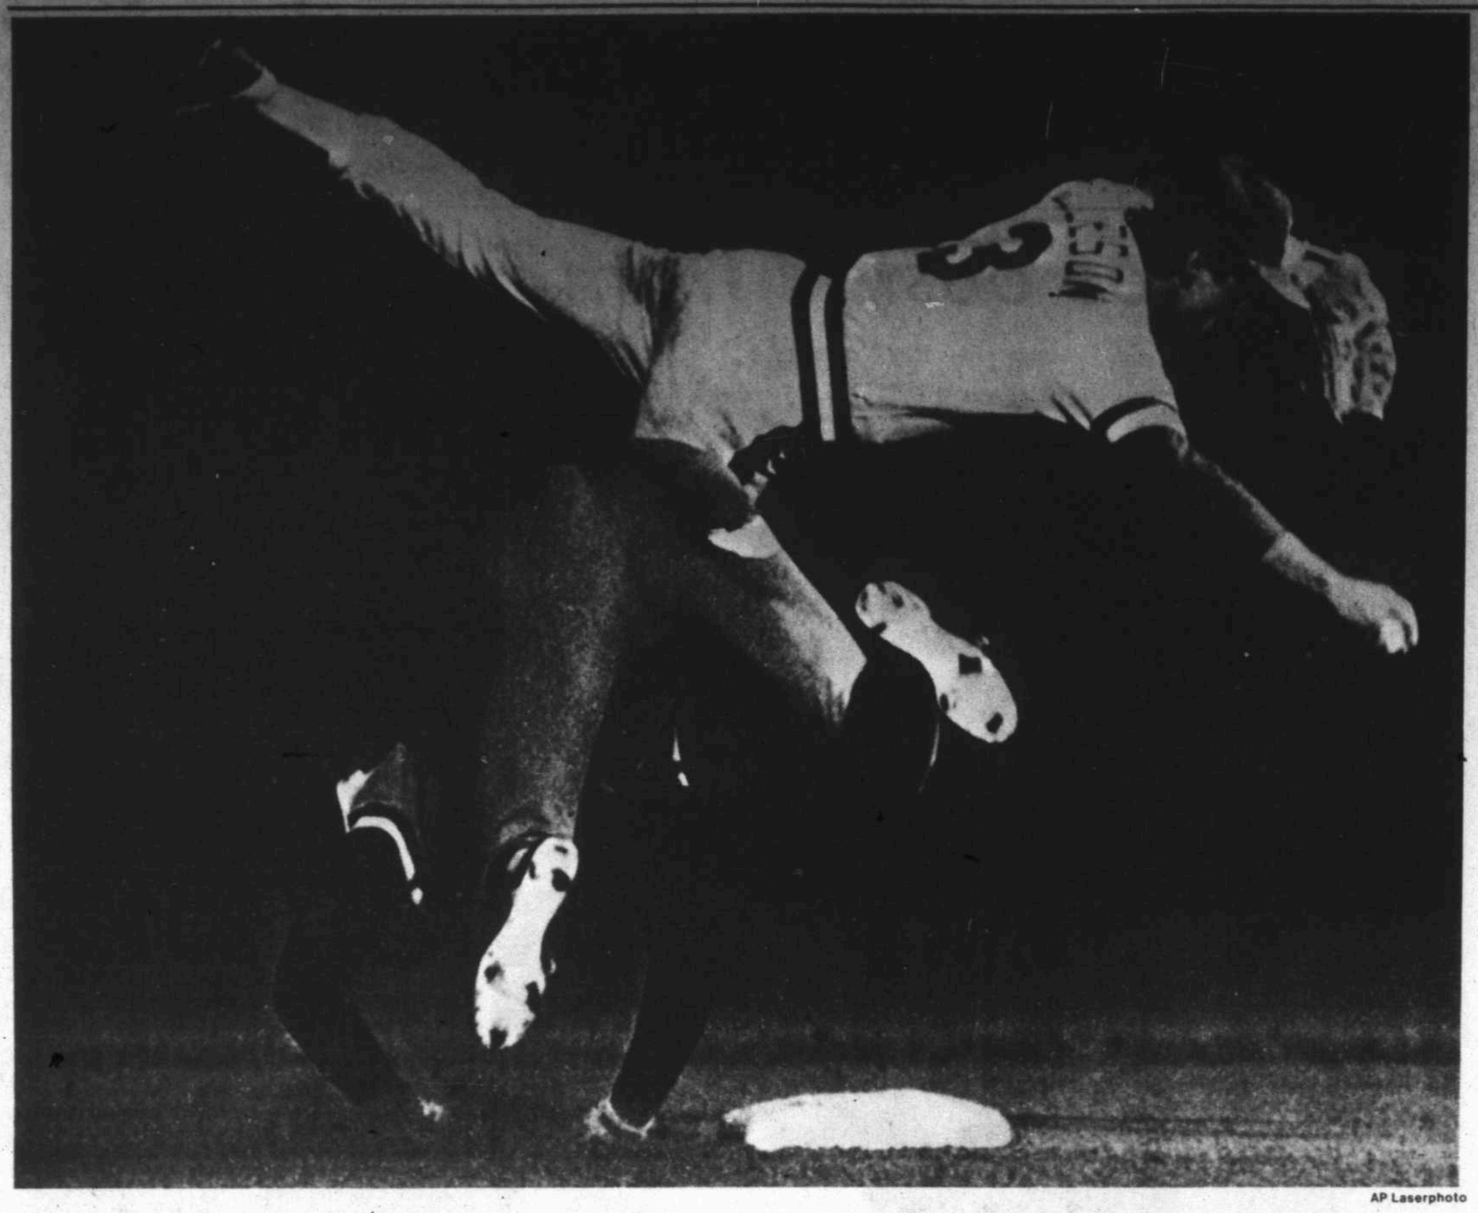

Dempsey appeared pleased.

Four years ago he suffered a mild stroke. Two years after he had a heart attack which required the insertion of a pacemaker. His family became very protective and only his closest friends saw him after that.

Then Tuesday afternoon he suffered a pain in his chest. Wife Deanna became very concerned.

"Don't worry, honey." Dempsey said. "I'm too mean to die."

A fighter to the end.

Indians down Fabens, move to quarterfinals

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Two home runs by shortstop Tim Cherry and a third by first baseman Andy Pitts powered the District 8 Alvarado Indians past the District 5 Fabens Wildcats, 13-7 Wednesday in Class 3A state baseball playoff action at Midland Lee Diamond.

The original playoff schedule called for three games to be played in Midland this week, but Mother Nature didn't cooperate. A doubleheader scheduled for Tuesday was cancelled making Wednesday's game the deciding game for advancement to the quarterfinals.

THE INDIANS took advantage of weak Fabens pitching throughout the game by collecting 14 hits, seven of which went for extra bases, and six walks.

Following a double by Phil Harris and single by Darren Abshire, Pitts put the Indians on the scoreboard in the first inning with his towering home run over the center field fence for a 3-0 lead.

Fabens picked up a run in the bottom of the frame when Pete Salgado's double to left scored Pete Mendoza. Mendoza and Salgado both scored in the second on Mike Chavez' double to tie the game at 3-3.

Alvarado picked up a run in the third inning and then started to break the game open in the fourth when Cherry hit his first of two homers over the left field fence, a two-run shot for a 6-3 lead. Harris followed with a single and Abshire's RBI double chased Fabens pitcher Lore Pacheco off the mound. Freshman reliver Manny Madrid gave up a fourth run before the inning was over to give the Indians an 8-3 advantage.

With the help of three Alvarado errors, the Wildcats managed to score four runs in the bottom of the fourth on two hits to cut the lead to 8-7. It was as close as they would come.

FABENS PITCHER Danny Shipman found his range and faced only 11 batters in the final three innings. The Indians added three runs to their lead in the sixth when catcher Chris Chamberlain stroked a bases loaded double to the center field fence for three runs and two more came home in the seventh on Cherry's second homer of the game.

All four of Fabens' fourth inning runs were unearned.

Fabens coach Bill Camilli, obviously unhappy with the way things turned out, gave credit to Alvarado. "They'll represent this Region well," he said. "They've got a good club and deserved to win."

Alvarado, with a 20-5 season record, will be in Waco on Friday for a second one-game playoff instead of the normal three. The quarterfinal team the Indians will face will be Marble Falls.

Sox beat Sox; Rangers rout Royals

By The Associated Press

Chicago White Sox rookie Ron Kittle spent the last two years raking minor league pitching for 90 home runs. This year, he's continuing his assault on American League hurlers.

Kittle took over the AL home run lead with his 12th of the year Wednesday night, a two-run blast in the sixth inning, as the White Sox went on to beat the Boston Red Sox 8-3.

"It's amazing the way the man hits a ball," said White Sox starter LaMarr Hoyt, 5-6, who was aided by Kittle's towering shot into the left field screen.

Kittle, meanwhile, takes his success in stride.

"I'm a big fella and I'm going to hit my share of homers in this league," said the 6-foot-4 slugger.

Kittle's homer — which put him one ahead of Kansas City's George Brett and California's Doug DeCinces — gave Chicago a 4-1 lead and came off John Tudor, 3-3. He now has hit in six straight games, during which time he has belted four homers and knocked in seven runs.

American League Roundup

Rangers 7, Royals 4

Billy Sample homered and singled to key a 13-hit attack and Rick Honeycutt coasted through the first seven innings.

Sample and Larry Parrish singled in runs in Texas' three-run third and Bucky Dent and George Wright singled in tow more in the sixth.

Indians 5, Mariners 2

Toby Harrah's first homer of the season broke a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning and Miguel Dilone belted a two-run triple later in the inning to lift Cleveland.

Tigers 3, Blue Jays 1

Dave Rozema, 2-0, yielded just three hits in eight innings and Aurelio Lopez pitched a perfect ninth for his seventh save.

Yankees 3, Angels 0

Ron Guidry fired a five-hitter for his third shutout of the season while seldom-used Bobby Murcer homered for his first run batted in of the season. It was New York's sixth straight victory.

A's 7, Brewers 5

Oakland banged out a-team-record seven doubles and Rickey Henderson singled in the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning as the A's broke a six-game losing streak. Dwayne Murphy had two of Oakland's doubles.

Orioles 6, Twins 3

Gary Roenicke, who went 4-for-4, including a homer and drove in four runs and Eddie Murray, who doubled twice and singled, were Baltimore's hitting stars. Scott McGregor, 6-3, got the win and Tippy Martinez picked up his sixth save.

Longhorns hold No. 1 rating

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Texas retained its No. 1 ranking in the final poll of Collegiate Baseball newspaper.

Texas, 61-14 for the season, has won 14 of its last 16 games. Stanford, No. 2, is 40-15-1 and has won 7 in a row. No. 3 Oklahoma State is 47-14 and has won 22 of its last 23 games.

Rounding out the top 10 are, in order, Arizona State, Michigan, Alabama, Maine, John Madison, Oral Roberts and Miami, Fla. Oral Roberts and Miama have been eliminated from the tournament.

Welch beats Carlton in one-hitter

NL Roundup

By The Associated Press

The way Steve Carlton was pitching, Los Angeles right-hander Bob Welch knew he had to pitch better.

"He's a super pitcher," Welch said of the Philadelphia veteran after winning a taut 1-0 duel with Carlton Wednesday night. "To beat him when he is pitching well is a fantastic feeling."

Carlton had struck out seven batters and was within one of tying the all-time major league strikeout record when Phillies Manager Pat Corrales lifted him for a pinch-hitter after seven innings.

"I was trying to win the ballgame," Corrales said. "If he's going to break the record, he's going to do it legitimately. I know he was throwing great, but we had to get somebody on base."

As it was, the Phillies didn't — and Welch finished with a one-hitter.

Carlton boosted his career strikeout total to 3,520, one back of Houston's Nolan Ryan, who is currently on the disabled list with an injury. Ryan broke Walter Johnson's all-time strikeout record of 3,508 earlier in the season.

Carlton, 6-5, allowed only three hits to the Dodgers before leaving. Welch, meanwhile struck out eight and gave up only a fourth-inning single to Von Hayes. The Dodger pitcher said he learned a lot just watching the 38-year-old Carlton pitch.

"Watching Steve helped me," Welch said. "He takes his time, he has complete control out there."

Pedro Guerrero singled home Steve Sax from third base in the fourth inning with the only run that Welch, 4-4, needed.

Umpire Jerry Crawford gets in position to make a call as Cincinnati third baseman Johnny Bench puts the tag on Mike Ramsey of the Cardinals. Ramsey was out on the play.

Cubs 3, Astros 2

Keith Moreland hit a home run and a run-scoring single and Chuck Rainey scattered four hits in 8 1-3 innings to lead Chicago over Houston.

Rainey, 5-4, won for the fourth time in his last five decisions with relief help from Lee Smith, who gained his sixth save. Bob Knepper, 1-8, took his sixth loss in a row despite allowing just four hits in seven innings.

"It looked like we were going to pull it out or at least tie it," said Houston Manager Bob Lillis. "We just fell a little short. That Smith, he's got a pretty good arm. He was tough on us."

Braves 6, Pirates 3

Terry Harper hit a three-run homer as Atlanta scored four times in the third inning and went on to defeat Pittsburgh behind Pascual Perez.

Perez, 6-1, allowed only four hits in 7 1-3 innings before needing relief help. Terry Forster and Gene Garber finished up, the latter posting his fourth save. Perez, traded to Atlanta last June, was pitching against his former Pirate teammates for the first time.

Loser John Candelaria, 3-6, pitching in Pittsburgh for the first time since criticizing Pirates' fans two weeks ago, was booed loudly when he came to bat in the third.

"I tried to give 100 percent against them because they never gave me a real chance to pitch in the big leagues," Perez said of the Pirates. "I'm happy to come to Atlanta. I say, 'Thank you', to the Pittsburgh Pirates because they signed me for pro baseball."

Expos 8, Padres 6

Tim Wallach continued his season-long assault on San Diego pitching with a three-run homer and a run-scoring single as Montreal ended a four-game losing streak by defeating the Padres.

Wallach's seventh homer capped a four-run fifth inning as the Expos squandered a 3-0 first-inning lead, then came from behind as they mounted a 15-hit attack.

The Montreal third baseman is batting .478 against the Padres this year with three homers and seven RBI. Bryn Smith, 1-2, the fourth Montreal hurler, worked the final five innings for the victory.

Cardinals 8, Reds 3

John Martin scattered five hits in 8 2-3 innings and knocked in three runs, leading St. Louis over Cincinnati.Martin, 3-1, making only his third start of the year and second mound appearance in 19 days, fanned three and walked none before leaving with two out in the ninth.

But it was his hitting as well as his pitching that helped make the difference, as the pitcher singled home a run in a five-run fifth and then doubled home two more in the eighth.

"He's got a good, live fastball," said Cardinal pitching coach Hub Kittle of Martin. "If he gets it in on the right-handers, he's tough. He took the bull by the horns and did what Whitey (Herzog, the Cardinal manager) wanted him to do. That's what it's all about."

Giants 4, Mets 2

Left-hander Atlee Hammaker allowed just five hits and two unearned runs over 7 2-3 innings to lead San Francisco over New York.

Hammaker, 6-2, left in the eighth after a two-out error by second baseman Brad Wellman set up an RBI single by George Foster. Jim Barr pitched the final 1 1-3 innings for his first save.

The Mets' Tom Seaver, 3-5, allowed only five hits in seven innings, but one of those hits was Jack Clark's eighth homer, a two-run blast in the third inning.

"When we make errors, I just have to take it upon myself to pitch a little better, get it done myself," said Hammaker, who lowered his NL-leading earned run average to 1.20.

Giants Manager Frank Robinson: "Atlee had good stuff, he's had it all year. We almost get to expect him to go out and do certain things, and he hasn't disappointed us yet."

'Dr. J' heals all that has ailed him

By MIKE LITTWIN

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Julius Erving, who has always taken his life into his own larger-than-life hands, made his own happy ending Tuesday night at the Forum here.

He did not look on idly while somebody else made his dream come true. He did not play a supporting role. Dr. J stood in the spotlight, where he has stood for all to see his entire professional career.

The ending could not have been more perfect if he had planned it.

And maybe he did.

"It was his game," said teammate Bobby Jones of Erving. "He said he was taking over."

With the 76ers trailing, 106-104, Dr. J scored his team's next seven points, putting the score at 111-108 with 24 seconds to play. While the Lakers misfired on a sad series of three-point attempts, the 76ers picked up a couple of garbage baskets to put the final score at 115-108.

The victory gave the 76ers a four-game sweep of the Lakers and an NBA championship. But it was not just any championship. It was the first for the 76ers of the modern era, of the Dr. J era.

Three times in the previous six seasons, they had been turned back. Erving had been turned back. No more.

"It was Doc's game, Doc's game," shouted Moses Malone, who was the most valuable player in the final series.

You do not argue with Moses Malone. It was Doc's game and his first NBA title. All debts, real and imagined, are paid in full.

"While I was scoring those seven points," Erving said, "I lost my concentration for a while ... thinking about what was going on."

Oh, he knew what was going on. And after the game, he decided it was worth the wait.

"It's better this way," Erving said. "We've been knocking on the door so long. Spiritually, we wouldn't be the way we are if we had won in '76, '80, '82. This makes it sweeter.

"Now people won't be asking us why we can't win. They'll want to know if we can repeat."

In the madhouse that was the 76ers' locker room, where for the first time this series Malone was getting pushed around, Erving was strangely calm. He wanted to make the point that he had nothing to prove, that he has always been a winner.

He put together a winning game Tuesday — 21 points (15 in the second half), 6 assists, 5 rebounds, 1 giant steal. But winning time, as Magic Johnson could tell you, is in the final minutes of a game.

Malone wears you down in those final minutes. Andrew Toney shoots you up in those final minutes.

Dr. J, as of old, can destroy you.

It began with a Kareem Abdul-Jabbar pass intended for Michael Cooper. Erving got a hand on it and raced Cooper first for the ball and then for the basket. He won both. The dunk was nothing special by Dr. J standards — but it tied the game at 106-106, the first tie since the second period.

With the Lakers ahead, 107-106, Abdul-Jabbar missed a hook shot. Malone got the rebound, fed the ball to Cheeks, who found Erving breaking for the basket. Erving got the score and was fouled. He hit the free throw to give the 76ers a two-point lead, their first lead since the first period.

A trend was developing. Again, the ball was placed in Erving's hands. Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham had an idea Erving was saving his best for last.

With the lead again at one point, 109-108, Erving had the ball at the top of the key and was looking for a play under the basket. None developed, so he took aim over Magic Johnson and hit what must be the biggest jump shot of his life.

"I wasn't looking for that shot," Erving said. "It just found me."

For all of Erving's many skills, 18-foot jump shots are usually a mystery for him. But this was, as Moses said, Erving's game.

The Lakers trooped in to the winning locker room to congratulate him. "You deserved it, man," Magic Johnson said.

His teammates had sprayed most of the available champagne (a California vintage) by the time Erving got off television and into the locker room. Instead, they showered him with love, and an occasional kiss.

"What man alive isn't happy for the Doctor?" Cunningham said.

But for Erving, at 33, this is only the end of a chapter. He will be back.

"The story isn't over," Erving said while holding up the championship trophy. "I'd like to play a couple of more years at a high level. This is a young team. We might win some more of these."

Steinbrenner indigestion leads to diet

NEW YORK (AP) — Owner George Steinbrenner, upset with the junky way his New York Yankees were playing until a few days ago, has ordered an end to junk food in the clubhouse.

In a memo, he ordered trainer Gene Monahan to "assist (clubhouse man) Nick Priore in setting up a balanced and proper selection of food to be available to our players in the locker room, eliminating those foods which could adversely affect the performance of our team. Such things as doughnuts, pastries and candy are out.

"You may consult a nutritionist, if necessary. The cost is not a consideration; the quality and type of food is. This will hold forth on the road, also."

If the Yankees can't outplay the opposition, they may as well outdiet them. Gone, says Monahan, are such calorie pushers as "pastries, soft candy, sugary things." In their stead are "fruits, natural unsweetened juices and nectar, some unprocessed cheeses, some light salads for those who want roughage.

"For day games, we'll just go with a little fruit and sherbet. For night games, the guys eat their big meal in late afternoon, anyway."

"It was George's idea, but something I've advocated for some time," Monahan said.

Caverns hosts summer youth work camp

Carlsbad Caverns National Park will host a youth volunteer work camp at Rattlesnake Springs this summer. During the period Aug. 3-24, 15 high school age young people who are members of Camp Fire, Inc. (formerly Camp Fire Girls) will be camping at the Springs and working on conservation projects in the park.

The young people will pay for their own transportation. Camp Fire Inc. will provide for an adult supervisor. The local chapter of CFI will assist NPS in hosting the group and providing tents. Work projects in the park will include cave restoration, backcountry trail maintenance and picnic ground improvement...

THE HARDHEAD catfish is a small fish capable of inflicting large amounts of misery upon the unwary. When water temperatures rise in the spring, hardheads move into Texas' shallow bays where they make a general nuisance of themselves.

Their sharp spines contain a venom which is highly irritating to humans, and puncture wounds often require attention of a physician, says Texas Parks and Wildlife biologist Hal Osborn.

"Fishermen who catch hardheads should be careful when unhooking these fish," Osburn warns. "Don't attempt to sling the fish off or try to step on it. Carefully grasp the fish firmly behind the head and remove the hook with pliers."

Once the hooks are removed, the hardheads should be cleaned for the table or returned to the water...

Old stickbaits have place in tacklebox

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — Every fisherman has gone through the tacklebox, trying to decide whether to toss out those old stickbaits and buy a batch of new crankbaits.

The answer, if the lures are in good condition, is "No." Stickbaits, propeller lures, poppers and crankbaits all have their place in the plug section of a tackle box. Each is effective under certain conditions.

There are basically two types of plugs — top water lures and diving lures. Topwater lures are the poppers and chuggers, propeller types, minnow-types and stickbaits.

Poppers and chuggers are floating plugs with concave mouths. They are particularly good as night baits near shore. Use a jerky retreive so they gurgle and splash.

Minnow-type baits have small plastic lips which cause them to wobble and run a few inches under the surface. The minnow is a good lure to work around trees, logjams and heavy cover. Use a slow, jerky, darting action.

Propeller-type lures come in a wide variety of sizes and colors with propellers at the front, rear or both ends. These are good lures to use in late spring or early summer, especially around heavy surface vegetation. Cast them into holes and retrieve slowly.

The stickbait is a piece of wood or plastic, usually painted to look like a minnow, with no lip or mouth to give it action. It is one of the toughest lures to master because the angler must give it all its action by twitching his rod and reeling it in with short jerks. The stickbait is very effective in open water.

Diving lures have large plastic or metal bills. Many models float. Not only is the bill larger than that on a minnow-type lure, but the eye to which the line is attached is on the bill, not the body of the lure. Some newer, deeper-running crankbaits have a small metal ball in the bill.

Generally speaking, start with smaller crankbaits, 1½-2 inches, in the spring and, as summer and fall arrive, use larger models, up to 4 inches. In early spring, use smaller crankbaits across points and parallel to banks. As spring progresses, fish them in brush or timber. When the lure strikes an obstacle, stop your retreive and let it float up a second or two. This will free the lure from the obstruction and often triggers a strike.

Deeper divers, often referred to as alphabet plugs, are designed to get down as far as 25 feet, They are most effective when bumping off the bottom. Cast the lure out, reel it in quickly to make it dive to the bottom, then reel it in just fast enough that you feel it bumping on the bottom.

Choice of line is important when using diving plugs. The lighter the line, the deeper the plug will run. You can force these plugs to run still deeper, to get to fish suspended off a drop-off for example, by retreiving them with your rod tip several feet under water.

Advance reservations best bet for those overnight sites

State Park officials remind those planning a summer outing to a state park that overnight facilities are fast being filled up, and advanced reservations may be necessary to assure accommodations.

Reservations may be obtained for campsites, screened shelters, cabins and group facilities by calling the park you intend to visit, advises Bob Hauser, park operations chief for the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.l

"Persons interested in staying in cabins especially need to make reservations."

Parks offering cabins are Lake Brownwood, Possum Kingdom, Bastrop, Caddo lake, Daingerfield and Garner. Reservations for facilities may be made up to 90 days in advance. No reservations are accepted for picnic sites.

Hauser also noted that the Texas State Railroad excursion train which runs between Rusk and Palestine now has a toll-free number for reservations (1 800 442 8951). To obtain a free parks brochure listing all parks, available facilities, addresses and phone numbers, write the TPWD, 4200 Smith School Road, Austin.

Look for those fishing tags

The onset of warm weather is the signal for offshore king mackerel fishermen that exciting action is ahead. The migrant kings are beginning to show up all along the coast, says the TPWD.

Anglers going after the silvery fighters are reminded by state officials to be alert for tagged kings. Return of the tags bring a $10 reward to the angler, but more importantly the information gained from tag recoveries will help biologists learn more about the growth and movements of the popular game fish.

Tagged fish are easily identified by a plastic streamer protuding from the abdomen. The tag must be cut from the from the body cavity.

The $10 rewards will be paid by the National Marine Fisheries Service. Tags should be taken or sent ot the NMFS, 3500 Delwood Beach Road, Panama City, Fla., 32407, or any Parks and Wildlife dept. office.

Tagging was done by NMFS off Grande Isle, La., in January in an effort to assess the effects of a commercial king mackerel fishery which developed off the Louisiana coast last year.

Hilton remains competitive

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

THE MIDLAND HILTON

If the oil boom of '81 had an epicenter, Midland's H-shaped Hilton hotel might have been it. Overlooking downtown and South Midland from its Wall Avenue home, the Hilton is to this day the only major hotel within the Central Business District. It occupies space where the grand Scharbauer Hotel once stood.

This gives Hilton (owned by Prudential Insurance and managed by Gateway Hotels) an enviable advantage: it is within a short walk of most major office buildings here. Not surprisingly, the Hilton depends directly on the oil business for its survival, said Michael J. Hobbs, its manager since early 1982.

The vast majority of guests at the Hilton are oilmen. And in that first quarter of 1982, so many oilmen traveled to Midland that the Hilton did its best business in six years of operation. About five to 10 rooms every night were also taken — at that time — by newcomers to the city who had difficulty finding a place to live.

At the same time, many Hilton employees themselves had no place to live — some sleeping in their cars in the Hilton garage during early '82.

Unknown to its guests, the Hilton was then appointing many people to middle management positions to bolster weak management structure inherited by Hobbs' administration.

Hobbs said new competition is springing up that the Hilton must consider. Much of the competition is from restaurants and bars opened recently — but Hobbs sees a few of these as unsound ventures (financially) and even fewer of them he considers real threats to Hilton patronage at its Charolais Room and Discovery Lounge.

"Our location, the size of our hotel (278 rooms with many suites), and the quality of Hilton accomodations keeps us competitive — even in recessionary times," Hobbs said.

"New motels, motor inns (adding 350 rooms in Midland since 1982), and almost 500 renovated rooms coming on the market last year haven't meant direct competition for us," Hobbs said, "but caused the Hilton to upgrade and develop its strong points."

The Hilton remains the only hotel in the area. It is the only large lodging facility downtown. Plans for a Ramada Hotel on West Wall and a Hilton in Odessa don't seem threatening to this hotel's long-term growth.

But Hobbs does admit that the early-'83 business slowdown hit the Hilton. He said occupancy started to increase during May, but "With the economy in decline, and additional rooms on the market, our 68.5 percent occupancy (from '82's peak) has been reduced by about ten points," to the under-60 percent range, he said.

But hotels in Houston and Dallas are experiencing slumps (due to overbuilding) slowing occupancy to 40 percent, 25 percent, or even lower.

To keep its preeminence, the Hilton continuously invests. Adding 119 rooms for a south wing in 1979, the Hilton saw Midland as a ripe market — They had to be big to take a good share.

Most recently (and unnoticeably) the kitchen was rebuilt top to bottom. Many back-of-the-hotel areas were improved so that services to customers could be more efficient.

Next, Hobbs said, the hotel wants to improve its public areas — lobby, banquet rooms, restaurant space — to become more appealing as a convention center, and as a place to eat. Conventions at the Hilton can seat up to 500 people for dinner and hundreds more for a theater-seated presentation.

"It's a damn good hotel," Hobbs said. "I'm extremely pleased to be here.

"The most difficult part of my job has been improving management. We have a young crew, but they now have diverse talents because we give them experience in many different parts of the operation," he said.

The modest increase in business that the hotel has experienced since May is expected to continue through 1984. Hobbs thinks 1985 will hit another "cycle" in the hotel business — or at least in the oil business — and he hopes then to have another blockbuster year.

"We are aiming at the 28 to 45-year-old group" at the Hilton, said Hobbs. Our greatest competition right now is in the restaurant and lounge sector (even though room rentals are the hotel's mainstay). Many of the oil deals cut in this town are cut here in our lounge, still."

Hobbs cites People's and Harrigans (both just opened), Bennigan's, Leo's, The Last Tycoon, and other restaurant/bars as comptition. The franchises like Bennigan's will offer uniform quality and mass appeal, plus loss-leader kinds of specials — with lots of two-for-one drinks given away.

One reason many rock stars (including members of Chicago, AC/DC, Loverboy, Foreigner, etc.) and other visiting dignitaries like James Watt and James Michener stay in the Hilton is not just quality — it is the added plus of excellent safety and security.

The security is tight at the Hilton, Hobbs said, and that keeps visitors protected from unwanted hotel-room hangers-on.

A bit less glamorous is the "life safety" class 25 employees and managers at the hotel are now taking. In April, this class began teaching Hilton personnel how to handle fire, tornado, or emergency evacuation.

Jeff Wickham, assistant director for safety and security, has much fire department and emergency medical experience. He will teach employees how to save lives.

Graduate Center adapts

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The Permian Basin Graduate Center is celebrating its 15th anniversary this summer by doing what it has done all along — adapt to the changing needs of its students.

A survey of local professionals and groups such as the Society of Professional Engineers, Permian Basin Landmen and others, showed that the center will have to concentrate on advanced courses to a greater degree, to meet the changing needs of Midland and Odessa oil companies, said David Robbins, chairman of the board of the non-profit educational institution.

The center has always been like a chameleon, changing its color, course content and style through the years as it followed the ups and downs of the oil industry in West Texas.

"We've made a transition back into more advanced courses for people with three or four years experience," Robbins said. During the boom times of 1980-81, the center offered more introductory courses for the flood of newcomers to Midland.

Founded in 1968, the center offers day and night courses covering the gamut of petroleum technology, management, accounting and personal growth subjects.

Its latest change is to install a remote computer terminal hooked up with mainframe computers at Control Data Corporation in Dallas.

When the oil boom boomed, the PBGC responded as never before to the demands of oil companies. Young college graduates, armed with lots of theoretical but little practical knowledge, flocked to Midland.

They knew geologic or engineering principals, but the big question remained: Could they find oil or gas?

Enter the graduate center. Many corporations, banks and law offices sent their new people to the center for a "crash course" in the ways of the Permian Basin.

"There was a scramble for prospects and the pool of local talent dried up. The graduate center became a tool," said Robbins.

According to Jack Elam, founder and past chairman of the board, "Quite frankly, during the boom, if the graduate center had not existed, it would have had to be created. The secretaries, clerks, technicians, the whole infrastructure of the oil and gas industry, was not here," in enough quantity to back up the flood of geologists and engineers which came to Midland.

The PBGC started in 1968. Patricia Beck, president who administers the center, remembers her first day on the job.

She opened the door to an empty office in the Gulf Building that had been donated.

"It was just an empty room and one cardboard box of files," she said. "I was the first employee — registrar, chief cook and bottle washer."

In those days, classes would meet wherever they could find a place: in back rooms, board rooms, even a hangar at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

The graduate center is the brainchild of Elam, who recognized that professionals in Midland, the oil finders he calls them, need to keep abreast of the latest techniques in their fields.

"They say what you learn at the university is obsolete within three to five years," Elam said, thus giving rise to a special need the PBGC tries to fill.

The center's greatest strength, and key to survival, is its flexibility, Elam said. Through the years the PBGC has changed directions several times to adapt to Midland's economy and existing conditions in the oil patch.

There is no permanent teaching staff. This gives the center freedom to bring in nationally known experts in technical fields. They teach the new wave in petroleum technology, geology, well control or whatever — subjects which won't appear in college curricula for another several years, Robbins added.

At various times, the center has offered credit courses through affiliations with Sul Ross State University and the University of Texas-Arlington. About half the courses offered in the early years dealt with education and educational administration for teachers.

The graduate center's latest affiliation is a cooperative venture with Control Data Corporation and is meant to offer students hands-on, high technology opportunities.

In April the center installed a computer console, digitizer, imprinter amd plotter with direct access to Control Data's Dallas' mainframe operations.

While the center has taught computer applications in recent years, it now enables students to gain practical experience with synthetic seismograms, contour maps, economic evaluations of driling funds or prospects, and so on.

The center was started by volunteers and oil company donations. It is still supported solely by fees and donations; no tax dollars are involved. In 1981, the mortgage was retired.

Enrollment is off the peak of 1981, when 122 courses were offered and 3,668 were registered, but according to Beck, "We have our house in order."

Brown Bag Lectures

To celebrate its 15th anniversary and thank Midland for its support, the Permian Basin Graduate Center is offering a series of informative, free lunchtime lectures from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. each Wednesday beginning June 8.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce is co-sponsor for the series, to be held in the graduate center's auditorium at 105 West Illinois.

Bring your lunch — coffee is on the house.

June 8 — "Soil, Water and Growing Conditions: West Texas Landscaping that works," Charlie Green, Midland County Extension Agent.

June 15 — "Doubling your Potential," Marion Kimberly, counselor.

June 22 — "Getting your Ideas Across," John Buster, management consultant.

June 29 — "How to Develop and Maintain a Positive Attitude," Dr. Vernon Stokes, Region 18 Education Service Center.

July 6 — "Inside Theatre Midland," Dorothy Fox, Theatre Midland.

July 12 (Tuesday) — "Jupiter, Saturn and the Summer Sky," John Hicks, Blakemore Planetarium.

July 20 — "History and Heritage of Midland," Smith Ray, Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder.

July 27 — "Birds of Midland County," Frances Williams.

Aug. 3 — "Collecting and Investing in Art," Jerry Porter, Museum of the Southwest.

Aug. 10 — "Up a Family Tree: A Satirical Book Review," Mary Lou Cassidy, Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin & Browder.

Aug. 17 — "No One loves a Stockbroker," Glenn Little, Little and Company.

Aug. 24 — "Staying Fit on the Job," Roland Wong, YMCA.

In addition to the Brown bag Series, the Graduate Center has an evening schedule featuring three distinguished keynote speakers. Each program begins at 7 p.m.

June 13 — "Understanding the Dollar Crisis," Percy Greaves, author, lecturer and consultant.

July 26 — "The U.S. Energy Situation: Today and the Future," Dr. John J. McKetta, the Joe C. Walter Chair, U.T. Austin.

Aug. 11 — Al Shapero, professor of free enterprise, Ohio State University, topic to be announced.

Do deficits cause inflation or don't they?

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan are in the same cabinet, but not on the same wave length where federal deficits are concerned.

Baldrige predicted Wednesday that the economic recovery will be a vigorous one but he said the big fear is that it may be cut short late next year if huge budget deficits cause interest rates to rise.

"The whole key to next year is what happens to interest rates. And I agree with those who think that the size of the budget deficit has a definite effect, particlarly on long-term interest rates," Baldrige told the National Press Club.

Among those who argue the opposite: Regan, whose defense of President Reagan's big-deficit budget has recently taken on a new argument — that there is no link, after all, between huge deficits and interest rates and that while the deficits definitely must be reduced there is no recovery-threatening urgency to the task.

Reagan has made the "de-linking" argument to reassure business leaders who want Reagan to cut more from government spending, GOP congressional skeptics who have proposed new taxes as a deficit reduction tool and, last weekend, finance ministers from the industrialized nations at the Williamsburg Economic Summit who don't care whether taxes are raised or spending is cut — just so long as deficits are reduced.

Regan's technical economic arguments have backed up optimistic predictions by Reagan that his economic game plan was working well and, most importantly, that the country could grow its way out of the troubling budget deficits with a vigorous recovery.

Baldrige agreed with only part of that scenario. The economy is growing vigorously now and "next year we ought to be off to a good start. By that time capital investment should be occurring which is the last link of the recovery. We should not see higher inflaton."

But, in a revealing glimpse of the divisions within the Reagan administration about how to handle the immediate congressional budget impasse, Baldrige pointedly said that deficits do matter — and that if they are not brought down before the collision of business and government financing requirements, interest rates will rise.

In his deficits-do-matter statements, Baldrige echoed the arguments of the allied heads of state at Williamsburg and of U.S. business executives.

Baldrige said he expects interest rates to decline slightly from today's rates by the end of the year and to stay down for part of 1984, largely because business is paying off its accumulated high-interest, short-term debt with its new cash flow rather than competing with the government to borrow funds for new investment.

In the immediate months ahead, that will have a depressive impact on interest rates, Baldrige said.

After the recovery is in full swing, however, and business starts to borrow big money for new plant investments, the much-feared credit collision with the deficit-financing government will occur and force interest rates higher.

It is therefore urgent to get deficits down — swiftly, so that collision is not expected to occur and so that business does not hold back on investment plans, Baldrige said.

Without naming Regan, Baldrige said he agreed with those who said deficits do drive up interest rates: "I think 9 out of 10 businessmen feel that way, 9 of 10 financial people feel that way and 9 of 10 congressmen feel that way."

"The problem is to get specific action by Congress to actually get the deficit down for future years. That's the caveat — and it's such a big caveat we have to put it in because that's the key to interest rates and interest rates are key to the length and duration of the recession."

China's parliament lets businessmen in

From Wire Reports

PEKING — The Communist leadership has moved to bolster China's fledgling private sector by giving symbolic political power to a handful of capitalist entrepreneurs.

Two self-employed businessmen have been named as the first representatives of private business to sit in the nation's nominal parliament when it convenes next week, the official New China News Agency reported. Several other "new capitalists" have been selected for provincial and county legislative bodies, the National Women's Congress and Communist Youth League.

Although their influence will scarcely count in a nation tightly ruled by the Communist Party, the political knighting of people scorned a few years ago as "evil speculators" is seen as a significant official gesture to encourage growth of the capitalist sphere.

Diplomats said the move further endorses the unorthodox market socialism of leader Deng Xiaoping as he wards off persistent opposition from leftists who regard private enterprise as "retrogression."

Deng and the scientific socialists who run China began promoting private business in 1978 as a way to absorb growing numbers of jobless youth and to expand consumer services in Chinese cities wracked by shortages.

Nearly 3.2 million merchants, craftsmen and restaurateurs have set up their own small enterprises, bypassing the huge state sector that employs three of every four Chinese workers in everything from department stores to defense industries. China's state-run, urban labor force numbers 105 million.

Here's Johnny's bank failing: Carson named in case

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — The Commercial Bank of California reopened under new ownership yesterday, but the controversy between its former directors continued to escalate, with new allegations against entertainer Johnny Carson, and his personal attorney, Henry Bushkin.

In an amendment to an earlier lawsuit against Bushkin, lawyers for Arnold Kopelson and Michael Miller, who bought out most of Bushkin and Carson's ownership in the bank in 1982, named Carson as a defendant.

The suit also reiterated earlier allegations that Bushkin had violated the Racketeer Influence and Corrupt Organization Act by using the bank "to further the interests of organized criminal activities" and arranging loans with "known underworld figures."

Carson was not linked to any of the racketeering charges, but Kopelson and Miller alleged that he failed to live up to various commitments to the bank.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad advance today as interest rates fell.

More than two stocks rose in price for every one that fell in the midday tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks was up 3.82 points at 1,206.03 in the first two hours. The blue-chip average had gained 2.23 points in a mixed market Wednesday after a 29.03-point slide in the three previous sessions.

Interest rates fell in credit-market trading, extending declines from late Wednesday. Yields on three-month Treasury bills, which stood at a two-month high of 8.67 percent Wednesday morning, had dropped to 8.47 percent today.

Interest rates rose earlier in the week amid heightened fears that the Federal Reserve Board would adopt a more restrictive policy in an attempt to curb the growth of the money supply and prevent a resurgence of inflation.

The NYSE's composite index rose .43 to 94.56. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.26 at 460.55.

Big Board volume rose to 43.36 million shares a third of the way through the session from 37.55 million in the same period Wednesday.

Low-priced stocks headed the active list at noon on the NYSE.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Funds' charges aren't hidden

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Several of my friends have invested in money market mutual funds. They insist there was no charge when they invested. I say there was a "hidden charge," somewhere. Nothing is for free. Who is right?

Doyle

A. Both you and your friends are right. There was no charge at the time they invested, but there are ongoing charges.

Almost all money market mutual funds are "no-load" funds, meaning there is no commission charge when an investor buys shares. Every dime put into a no-load fund goes to buy full and fractional shares.

However, all mutual funds — load and no-load — have operating expenses. Those annual expenses, which fit the definition of "charges," aren't hidden. They are spelled out in each fund's prospectus. Under the rules, an investor must receive a copy of the prospectus before buying any shares.

The biggest operating expense usually is the fee the fund pays to its investment adviser — typically 0.5 percent of the fund's assets. For example, if XYZ Mutual Fund has average net assets of $100 million over a year's time, it pays its investment adviser $500,000 annually. it's from the advisory fee, also called a "management fee," that the people who run the fund make money.

Other operating expenses vary from one fund to another. Most mutual funds keep their annual expenses below 1 percent of assets. All these expenses are deducted from the fund's assets and are listed in reports to shareholders.

* * *

Q. I would like to invest in Pioneer II, Inc. How can I buy shares of that fund, without paying a load?

A. Unless you locate someone who already owns Pioneer II shares and is willing to sell them to you in a private deal, you can't.

Pioneer II is a load mutual fund. When you buy its shares, you must pay a commission of 8.5 percent on purchases up to $10,000. The commission load is scaled down on larger investments.

That's the story with all load funds. The Investment Company Act of 1940 dictates that every buyer of a load fund's shares must pay the commission described in the fund's prospectus. All mutual funds are prohibited from charging loads to some investors and no load to others.

No-load mutual funds are different. There is never a commission on the purchase of no-load fund shares, unless you buy them through a broker who lays on a charge.

In the normal course of events, however, you buy no-load fund shares directly from the fund and pay no load. You can't do that with a load fund.

Q. I am interested in investing in tax-free municipal bonds. To avoid the charges brokers and banks make for such purchases, would it be a good idea to buy shares of a no-load mutual fund holding municipal bonds?

A. Sure. You'll pay no commission when you invest. And, after deducting its operating expenses, the fund will pass on to you, as tax-free dividends, your shares of the tax-free interest it collects on the municipal bonds it holds.

* * *

Q. I have been investing in the Wellington Fund for years. How does this rank as an investment?

A. Wellington is classified as a "balanced" mutual fund, because it invests in both common stocks and fixed-income securities, such as bonds and preferred stocks. That makes it a rather conservative investment.

Measured by "total return" — assuming reinvestment of dividends and capital gains distributions — Wellington's perfomance has been mediocre. Of the close to 600 mutual funds ranked by Lipper Analytical Services, Wellington came in 267 over the past five years, 308 last year and 217 in the first four months of 1983.

Traveler's checks not investments

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar's daily flirtation with new heights on world foreign exchanges is providing bargains for Americans traveling outside the United States.

For banks, foreign exchange dealers and travel agencies, such an exodus means increased sales of traveler's checks. To the person seeking the safety and convenience of buying a traveler's check, the timing of the purchase can either swell or shrink a bankroll.

Two years ago, a spring rally by the dollar and a surge in travel abroad touched off a speculative rush to buy traveler's checks denominated in foreign currencies in an attempt to stretch vacation budgets.

Predictions were widespread in the spring of 1981 that interest rates in the United States would decline during the summer, taking the dollar to lower levels.

As a result, some analysts advised traveler's planning a trip abroard in the late summer or early fall to buy foreign-denominated traveler's checks in the spring. The reasoning was that if the dollar declined far enough, traveler's checks denominated in currencies such as British pounds, Japanese yen or West German marks would be worth much more than any earnings lost by tying up funds for several months in checks that pay no interest.

But interest rates rose during the summer of 1981 and the dollar climbed 14 percent between May and August, cutting into travel funds of speculators rather than adding to vacation bankrolls.

This spring, bankers and foreign exchange dealers report only the usual seasonal growth in sales of foreign-denominated traveler's checks.

Answer to today's Crossword Puzzle

Saudi Arabia faces deficits, austerity

By the Los Angels Times-Washington Post News Service

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — After a decade of a gigantic building boom fueled by spectacular oil wealth, Saudi Arabia is entering an era of multibillion-dollar deficits and relative austerity whose full implications for the government and society are still far from clear.

Saudi officials say the kingdom, which spent $362 billion on projects between 1975 and 1982 alone, has built virtually everything it wanted, or needed, and that a respite from the head-on rush into modernity — from the camel to the computer age in 10 years — is welcome.

"We are going through a new era of our society," said Abdul Rahman Zamil, deputy minister of commerce, in an interview. "It is an era that will be extremely positive to the Saudis. An era that will be defined by clarity of objectives, clarity of priorities and an extreme cut in the fat that we have been living with within our own projects and decisions."

No one can doubt that the Saudis had gotten used to a lot of "fat", what with oil production peaking at slightly more than 10 million barrels a day in early 1981, total revenues at $112 billion that year and foreign reserves somewhere between $150 billion and $170 billion in a country of probably only 5 million nationals. By comparison, the highest possible revenue predicted for this fiscal year, which ends next April, is no more than $59 billion.

The sudden drop in wealth and spending could prove a jolting experience even to this well-cushioned society that has become all too accustomed to easy money, huge profits and little effort.

"It's a very rich man who is suddenly less rich and it's very painful," remarked one western resident with good access to the royal family. "They feel poor."

Among the most serious potential political effects for the ruling House of Saud, according to some western analysts here, is a possible breach in its strong alliance with the new merchant and entrepreneurial class that has grown enormously in size and wealth over the past decade, thanks to huge government outlays.

ALREADY, the government has moved to protect this class by instituting a kind of "protectionism" against foreign competition, assuring Saudi bankers and businessmen a big share of the shrinking market. A recent royal decree stated that foreign contractors must give at least 30 percent of subcontracts to Saudi companies, while the all-powerful government monetary agency, SAMA, has tightened restrictions on loans by Bahrain's offshore foreign banks to assure Saudi banks priority locally.

The big question is whether this emerging Saudi business class is ready to stand on its own feet, without huge government infusions. The Saudi economy, once totally dominated by the oil industry, has changed radically over the past decade with the vast expansion of the private and non-oil sectors. Last year, the latter accounted for $60 billion of business, or almost 40 percent of the gross domestic product, according to the Saudi-American Bank.

Zamil admitted, however, that the private sector still depended on government infusions and that there was a risk that "some will be hurt" in the new era "of a real business professional society." He insisted the benefits far outweighed the risks.

"Every businessmen now has entered into his mind the psychology that it is not easy to make a buck. You have to fight for it. You have to struggle and you have to be competitive. You can feel it everywhere," he said.

SAUDI OFFICIALS have reacted angrily to gloom-and-doom reports about the economy from abroad and sought to assure local and foreign investors that all is still going well, despite accumulating evidence to the contrary. In early April, the influential finance and national economy minister, Mohamed Abalkail, denied any big projects were being canceled and said the kingdom was still forecasting an 8 percent annual growth rate "for many years to come."

The government is continuing to pump money into the less favored provinces and basic social services to prevent public discontent, but it has budgeted nearly a 20 percent cut in the $3.2 billion spent last year on subsidies to keep key food items, gasoline and electricity at absurdly low prices.

There is also a $2 billion cutback in funds for starting new projects from last year's $5 billion level, already a big drop from previous years. An economic slowdown thus seems inevitable.

Opinions still vary widely as to how serious a jolt the Saudi economy is headed for. The $235 billion, five-year development plan, which still has two years to run, has, in the words of one western economist, seen "the bottom fall out of it."

But the plan was never more than a loose collection of "wish projects" by the various ministries. "They probably had already overbuilt anyway," remarked the economist.

MOST ECONOMISTS and bankers interviewed here seem to view the Saudi economy as essentially going through a period of "readjustment" to a far lower level of spending and through a transition from a total emphasis on construction to one focused instead on maintenance and services.

The first visible adverse effects of this "readjustment" have included layoffs of mostly foreign workers at such poles of activity as the Jubail and Yanbu industrial centers as well as at the giant Arabian-American Oil Co. (Aramco), the stretching out of multiyear projects, open bidding on contracts to reduce prices and once-lucrative commissions to agents, and long delays in payment of bills, a practice that is driving some companies to the edge of bankruptcy.

The delays, which Saudi officials describe as "technical" rather than "fiscal policy," are averaging 90 to 120 days, but in some cases have gone on now for six months. Analysts of the Saudi budget believe this is one way the government achieved a 22 percent cutback in the budget last year.

Some western economists say the government has gone into a holding pattern on spending and payments until it becomes clearer what the new plateau of its oil revenues will be later this year.

Finance Minister Abalkhail said in a recent local interview that the government will wait at least until August before taking any major fiscal decisions such as whether to dip into foreign reserves or cut back even further on this year's already sharply reduced $75. 6 billion budget. But outsiders believe it will probobly not be until after the annual pilgrimage, or hajj, to Mecca in September that the really hard decisions will be taken and "blood will be spilled," as one economist put it.

EVERYTHING SEEMS TO hang on the big unknown of Saudi oil production and this, in turn, depends on the state of the world economy. Guessing Saudi oil exports, and thus the size of Saudi income and deficits, has become the biggest game in town.

It makes a big difference not only to the Saudi government but also to foreign banks holding billion of dollars in the kingdom's assets and foreign contractors with projects underway here.

So far this year, Saudi production has varied from below 3 million barrels a day to slightly more than 4 million — still far below the 5.5 million barrels that analysts here surmise was used as a basis for the 1983-84 budget.

If the kingdom only averages 4.5 million barrels a day this fiscal year ending next April, which seems now a distinct possibility, then its oil exports would bring in only about $38 billion. Saudi Arabia now consumes 800,000 barrels daily of its own production, which would leave only 3.7 million for exports.

Saudi oil income would thus be only about half of the last calendar year's estimated earnings of $77 billion and slightly more than one third of those in 1981, the peak year. But the kingdom also expects to earn more than $13 billion on its overseas investments this year, plus another $7.7 billion from gas sales and other items.

WHATEVER ITS exact oil earnings, the kingdom seems headed for a huge deficit for the first time in its contemporary history. The government itself has predicted a $10 billion deficit, breaking with a 20-year tradition of carefully balanced budget plans despite several unexpected small deficits.

This is as shocking to Saudis and foreign bankers and businessmen as a $100 billion deficit in the U.S. budget used to be to Americans. But the Saudi forecast is, according to all outside Saudi budget analysts, extremely optimistic.

Vahan Zanoyan, director of the Washington-based Wharton Middle East Econometric Service, has predicted a deficit in both the Saudi budget and current accounts of around $21 billion and Chase Mahattan's Middle East specialist, Sharif Ghalib, only a slightly smaller one. Other estimates go as high as $26 billion if oil production remains only at 4 million barrels a day.

While Saudi Arabia has no foreign debt and could easily arrange loans to fill the gap, it seems certain first to tap its huge foreign reserve holdings. In fact, some bankers and economists here believe it has already dipped into them for $5 billion to $6 billion to meet the last fiscal year's actual expenditures of $70 billion.

Outside analysts seem to concur in the view that Saudi Arabia can tap its reserves to cover budget deficits over the next two years without causing a major problem to its overall financial strength. But if its oil production continues at a low level for a longer period, they say, the kingdom could face a far more radical cutback in spending and the Saudi style of living than just the simple "readjustment" apparently now in the works.

Customers resent big bank's tactics

Hearst Feature Service

When it comes to banking, New York's Citibank likes to play the game hard — sometimes too hard, critics say.

Deep customer resentment appeared recently when the bank expanded a test forcing patrons with less than $5,000 in their accounts to use automatic teller machines for routine transactions.

When national attention recently focused on the experiment, the bank canceled it, saying it had made a mistake.

"It created an awful lot of misunderstanding," said Arthur Bassin, the bank's director of marketing and business development. "We are now going to make tellers available to anyone who wants to use one."

The test showed once again that Citibank likes to be at the leading edge of change in the industry, often with significant implications for bank patrons across the country.

The negotiable certificate of deposit, first introduced by Citibank in 1961, is now an industry hallmark. Citibank was widely questioned for its bold move into automated teller machines in the late 1970s, but now banks are scrambling to install the devices.

Citibank was the first to form a bank holding company that could embrace varying functions. It has done more than most banks to pierce interstate banking barriers, and last year moved into the California market through purchase of Fidelity Savings, a savings and loan association.

Across the land, bankers agree that the industry must change the way it operates because of the lifting of federal interest-rate ceilings on bank accounts and instruments and the gradual breakdown of other federal barriers, allowing banks to engage in a wide range of financial services.

"We study McDonald's — how they get the product out," said William Turner, executive vice president of Chemical Bank of New York. "We want to know how Disney World treats customers. We're in the retail business."

As changes take hold, bankers will devise varying marketing strategies, many of them built around automatic teller machines, which are inexpensive to operate. Functioning around the clock, they can handle 10 times as many transactions as a teller and don't take vacations or coffee breaks.

A Bank of America official recently pointed out that a cash withdrawal from an automatic teller machine costs the institution about 25 cents, and cashing a check through a teller costs 50 cents.

Although not actually forcing customers to use automatic teller machines, the new rules could, in effect, be just as harsh. Many institutions may "price" services in an effort to encourage automatic teller machine usage, while others may offer special incentives — free traveler's checks, for instance.

At Citibank, officials think automatic teller machines should handle most of the routine business while branch personnel are freed to help the institution grow into a financial supermarket. That's how the no-teller experiment developed, along with other tests still being conducted.

Two of them offer varying degrees of swift-teller lines and personalized service. One requires a $25,000 balance in a combination of accounts and the other a $5,000 balance.

The programs have been attacked by many customers as elitist, since they generally provide an advantage to those with relatively high balances.

Citibank said the no-teller experiment was started on Long Island in 1981 but didn't begin to come under fire until it reached two Manhattan branches in March. "Manhattan is the toughest market in the world," Weeks said.

Noting Citibank's heavy reliance on automatic teller machines, the officer of a rival New York City bank observed week that Citibank has tended to "get ahead" of itself on occasion through programs that turn sour.

"The consumer is too sophisticated," said Chemical Bank's Turner. "You can't force him to do something he doesn't want to do."

Monsanto chemical formula still safe

HOUSTON (AP) — A Monsanto Inc. engineer who tried to sell the firm's secret chemical process for fattening livestock to a French company has been given a five-year probationary sentence.

Nestor Ovidio Torra, a Cuban refugee who earlier had pleaded guilty to mail fraud and wire fraud, was given the sentence and a stern lecture Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Norman Black.

Black said Torra ruined "a wonderful opportunity to work for a big, powerful company," and that he gave Torra probation "solely to avoid punishing your family."

According to testimony, Torra, 47, contacted officials of the French firm Rhone-Poulenc in New Jersey in January and offered to sell Monsanto's chemical process for fattening cattle and chickens for $250,000.

Rhone-Poulenc immediately contacted the FBI, which arranged for the "sale" to take place in Oklahoma City on Jan. 8. Torra was arrested by an FBI agent posing as a company official.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Torrey said Torra, in pursuing the illegal sale, chose "to betray his company, community and his adopted country."

Torrey said Monsanto spent at least $20 million developing the secret livestock-fattening process. The firm is building a $74 million facility in the Houston area to market the new process.

Torra's attorney, Candelario Elizondo, said Torra's action was a result of "panicking" when he believed he would be laid off his job as a project engineer for Monsanto.

Dallas firm will build over the freeway

DALLAS (AP) — Southland Corp. will start construction early next year on twin 50-story skyscrapers that will be connected by a glass-vaulted pedestrian bridge over North Central Expressway north of downtown Dallas, officials announced Tuesday.

Plans for the 130-acre "new city" were announced three years after the owners of the 7-Eleven convenience store chain began secretly acquiring land in the area.

The development will contain four 9-story buildings in addition to the two towers and will go up on a 21-acre complex between Haskell and Lemmon avenues on both sides of North Central.

Southland officials also announced plans to redevelop Haskell and Blackburn into a six-lane boulevard running through the company's property between Turtle Creek and Lemmon Avenue.

Southland will reserve acreage for future construcion of residential and commercial buildings, said John Thompson, Southland chairman.

"We are taking great care to plan really a dramatic north gateway to Downtown Dallas," Thompson said. "Altogether the initial phase of this development witll be 3.5 million square feet."

Southland will occupy most of the first 50-story skyscraper to be built at the southeast corner of North Central and Haskell, Thompson said. The other tower will be leased to other businesses, he added.

He said the first skyscraper is scheduled for completion in late 1986 or early 1987.

No similar real estate development projects are contemplated elsewhere, Southland's chairman said.

"We do not plan to do this type of work in another city. We are doing this in Dallas because it is our home," Thompson said.

Permits granted for 26 homes

The city of Midland issued 59 building permits last week for construction or renovations valued at $2,496,670. Included in the total were 26 new single family residences ranging in price from $24,780 to $150,000.

Valuations for May so far have reached $6,739,252. Total for the year is $73.1 million to date.

New commercial permits were issued to Abbott Building Co. for a 4,000 square foot office machine outlet at 1816 N. Midland Drive for Faulkner's Office Supply. Valuation is $104,000. South Texas Construction will pave a parking lot at 201 W. Missouri for $185,000. Herman Harris will build an office and dress shop at 208 S. Lee valued at $4,000.

Commercial alteration permit activity continues strong. Permits were issued to HBF Construction for $100,000 worth for fire damage repair to Woodhill office building at 3000 N. Garfield; HBF, add carport and storage at dentist's office, 1809 W. Texas, $25,000; Casbeer & Associates, finish interior lease space at Liberty Square, 3525 Andrews Highway, $3,000; Boler Pump, gasoline outlet for Mac's Quick Stop, 2411 Rankin Highway, $20,000; Rod Stephenson, repair ticket office for American Airlines, $31,000; Gene Looper, interior lease space, 4305 N. Garfield, $20,000; Pace Construction, 308 N. Weatherford, repair wind damage to warehouse, $1,500; Contemporary Contractors, add to convenience store, 3301 W. Illinois, $85,000.

Dollar gets mixed results in markets

LONDON (AP) — The dollar turned in a mixed performance in early trading today after the previous day's strong showing. The value of gold bullion also was mixed.

The U.S. currency hit new all-time highs against the French franc and Italian lira and edged up on the British pound and Dutch guilder. But it eased in relation to other major currencies.

One London dealer described trading as hesitant, with most big investors remaining on the sidelines ahead of Friday's announcement of U.S. money growth figures. "I don't see the dollar changing much before Monday," he said.

A surge in the basic money supply could heighten expectations of higher interest rates, making dollar-denominated investments more attractive.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's begins, the dollar eased marginally against the Japanese yen after rising for six straight sessions. The dollar finished at 239.25 yen, compared with 239.45 Wednesday.

Later in Europe, the dollar rose to 7.6695 French francs, up from 7.6595 Wednesday. It was the sixth straight session that the dollar has hit a record against the beleaguered French currency.

The dollar also improved against the British pound, with sterling changing hands at $1.5885, down from $1.5928 Wednesday.

Book reveals Wayne's final years

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In a new book about John Wayne's final years, his secretary-lover Pat Stacy writes about how the late actor considered suicide when the cancer that ravaged his body forced him into another round of painful hospital treatment.

"Pat, I want you to go home and bring back my Smith and Wesson 38," the star said. "I want to blow my brains out."

When she refused to bring him the gun, she writes, he exploded: "Don't you understand? I want to kill myself, get it over with. You'll all be better off. I'll be better off."

Four years later, the incident still makes Ms. Stacy shudder.

"I learned that Duke asked Pat (his son) to do the same thing, but of course Pat wouldn't," she said. "After he went home from the hospital, I didn't worry that he would use the gun. Not with Marisa (his youngest daughter) in the house. She was the one person he worried what would happen to after he died."

Later, she discovered that when Wayne was entering his final surgery at UCLA Medical Center, he told the surgeon: "Well, here I am. We have to try. Pat and my kids have talked me out of shooting myself."

"Duke: A Love Story," by Pat Stacy with Beverly Linet, is an intimate view of the star's final six years, when he delighted in his role as the last American hero. No one else could have written such a closeup view, because Miss Stacy was Wayne's secretary, confidante and lover.

Pat Stacy

Miss Stacy, a bright, petite, attractive Louisiana woman, was recommended by a mutual friend to replace Wayne's longtime secretary, Mary St. John, who had decided to retire. Their relationship was businesslike until June 1973, when Wayne was making "McQ" in Seattle and living on board his boat, the Wild Goose. His wife, Pilar, had visited the location, then left, and the marriage appeared in trouble.

Miss Stacy writes about coming back to the boat after a festive dinner with the Wayne entourage. She was about to head for her cabin "when Duke took me gently by the arm and escorted me topside to his stateroom. It seemed the most natural thing in the world to go with him."

They were virtually inseparable until his death on June 11, 1979. Ms. Stacy was left $30,000 in the Wayne will, and she has no complaints: "After all, Duke practically furnished my house. He loved to pick out furniture; I think he was a frustrated interior decorator."

Miss Stacy, 42 on June 6, admitted she was at loose ends after Wayne's death. She decided to move from Newport Beach, which had so many memories of him, and she found a place in Marina del Rey. For a time, she worked as executive secretary to Donald Bren, Claire Trevor's stepson and now owner of the Irvine Co. Two years ago, she married estate planner Richard Donahugh.

"I had turned down a number of offers to write a book about Duke," she said. "Then one day in July of 1981, a friend of my husband's, Ed O'Rourke, called Pat Knopf of Atheneum and put me on the phone."

She insisted she didn't want to write a book, but finally agreed.

And what has been the Wayne family's reaction to "Duke: A Love Story"?

"When I received the first three copies, I sent one to Pilar and one to Michael (Wayne's son and manager)," she said. "That was a month ago, and I've had no response."

Works by Midlander featured at arts fair

Works by Midland watercolorist Margaret Marcum were selected to be a part of the 1983 Texas State Arts and Crafts Fair held at Schreiner College in Kerrville. The fair, which features works by 240 Texas artists and craftsmen, closes Saturday and Sunday.

Ms. Marcum has been studying art for 10 years, attending workshops, with William Earle, Bud Biggs, Ronald Thomason, Ramon Froman, Rob Erdle, Nita Engle and Betty Lynch. In addition to her one-woman show at Theatre Midland, her works have been exhibited locally at May Fair and KAO Christmas Sale.

Her awards include honorable mentions at the Midland Arts Association's Fall Show in 1978 and the 1983 Hill Country Art Foundation Spring jurored show.

During this official state arts and crafts fair, many exhibitors present demonstrations or lecture on their special skills. All are present to provide special insight and answer questions.

Winners of the 1983 Young Artist Competition exhibit in the fair's pavilion area. This year's winners are Frank Marcias of San Antonio, the scholarship winner, who will exhibit his pottery, and exhibit winners Masha Rukhina of Kerrville, working in stained glass, and Darrell Davis of Arlington, working in bronze sculpture.

Margaret Marcum

Special demonstration areas are set up for more complete showings in woodworking, glassblowing, pottery and many other art or craft disciplines. Each demonstration is presented by an expert in the field and questions are encouraged.

Tickets are priced at $5 for adults and $3 for children 6 to 12 years old. Those under 6 are admitted free.

Detective work resurrects novel

By BARRY SHLACHTER

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Beryl Markham hunted boar with a spear as a barefoot girl in Africa, spotted big game for royal safaris by air, trained eight Kenya Derby winners and became the first pilot to fly the Atlantic solo from England to North America.

She also wrote a book.

"West with the Night," whose title comes from that flight, is a literary rarity in that it was one of the few works lauded by the late novelist Ernest Hemingway. It was Hemingway's unbridled praise — "a bloody wonderful book" — that eventually brought about the reprinting of the 1942 autobiography early in May.

The decision by North Point Press, a San Francisco publisher, was welcome news to Mrs. Markham, who at 80 says she has fallen on hard times.

Her 25-year-old Mercedes automobile, which she once drove about 2,000 miles from South Africa to Kenya, finally gave up in mid-May. But it did see her through a coup attempt here last Aug. 1, when Mrs. Markham was wounded slightly in the jaw and the car received seven bullet holes.

Although still active as a trainer, only two racehorses are now in her care instead of the usual stable full.

Married and divorced three times, she is now alone. Her only child, a son, was killed years ago while serving in the British army. Friends arranged for a night watchman at her cottage on the grounds of Nairobi's Ngong Race Course after she was beaten and tied to her bed by burglars in August 1981.

JUST RECENTLY out of the hospital, where she was treated for a back problem and an undiagnosed illness, Mrs. Markham is thinner than even her normally svelte self, and unhappy by the slower pace brought on by advancing years.

She described herself in an interview as a woman never held back. She explained that she was brought up by her father after her mother left them and was allowed to run free as a child.

"I admire my father for the way he raised me," she said. "People go around kissing and fussing over their children. I didn't get anything like that. I had to look after myself, and then I used to go and read by myself and think by myself.

"Funnily enough, it made me."

Her father, a graduate of the British military academy, Sandhurst, left the army to take up farming and horse training in Kenya. He arrived in Africa in 1906 when his daughter was 4.

She ran away from governesses and a Nairobi school — more at home among Nandi tribespeople near the family farm with whom she hunted and learned to see the continent from a perspective different from that of other colonists.

"The games we played were Nandi games because I knew no others and there was no white child, except myself, anywhere near Njoro," she wrote in "West with the Night" of her hometown in the highlands on the western edge of the Great Rift Valley.

"AMONG MY galaxy of scars is one which an ungallant Nandi boy, whom I had bested in a wrestling bout, made with his father's sword."

Other childhood scars were left by a lion, which mauled her leg near the family farm.

This unfettered childhood — vividly and at times harrowingly chronicled in her book — left her with a keen sense of Africa.

Mrs. Markham as a child walked the dogs of Baroness Karen von Blixen, a Danish aristocrat who gained literary fame for writing "Out of Africa" under the pseudonym Isak Dinesen.

"I found her rather boring," Mrs. Markham said in the interview. "She wasn't my cup of tea."

Kenya in the 1920s and 1930s was a haven for titled Europeans. Beryl rubbed shoulders with them as a racehorse trainer, a profession she took up full time at 17 when her father, financially ruined by a drought, left to try his luck in Peru.

The Duke of Windsor, then the Prince of Wales and, later, King Edward VIII of Great Britain until he abdicated in 1936, was taken on a safari by Mrs. Markham, who often scouted elephant from her Leopard Moth airplane.

Hemingway knew her, but only as a pilot, and later expressed astonishment in a letter to his editor, Maxwell Perkins, that she had authored a book.

"DID YOU read Beryl Markham's book, 'West with the Night?'" Hemingway asked. "I knew her fairly well in Africa and never would have suspected that she could put pen to paper except to write in her flyer's log book.

"As it is, she has written so well, and marvelously well, that I was completely ashamed of myself as a writer. I felt that I was simply a carpenter with words...but this girl can write rings around all of us who consider ourselves as writers."

On a 1981 trout fishing trip in Idaho, Hemingway's eldest son, John, asked a friend — and Hemingway admirer — George P. Gutekunst whether he had read his late father's letters. Gutekunst, 64, a Sausalito, Calif., restaurant owner, hadn't. But that night he went through them, discovered the reference to Beryl Markham and was jolted by Hemingway's rare kind words.

"I was so stunned because Hemingway pilloried every other writer from Stendahl to James Jones," said Gutekunst, who had not heard of the Markham book before. Intrigued, he began a search, aided by the Marin County library system's computer, and after two weeks located a copy which he read in one sitting.

"It was absolutely transfixing," Gutekunst said in a telephone interview from California. "On the next day I read it again, just to make sure my enthusiasm and love for it was not misplaced. But I found it even more compelling. I had discovered a literary gem."

Vivid writing captures 'paradise' of Africa

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Here are excerpts from Beryl Markham's autobiography "West with the Night," which chronicles her life from childhood in Africa to her 1936 achievement as the first pilot to fly from England to North America.

On being attacked as a small girl by a rogue lion known in the area as Paddy:

"I stopped and he lifted his head with magnificent ease and stared at me out of yellow eyes....

What I remember most clearly of the moment that followed are three things — a scream that was barely a whisper, a blow that struck me to the ground, and, as I buried my face in my arms and felt Paddy's teeth close on the flesh of my leg, a fantastically bobbing turban, that was Bishon Singh's turban, appeared over the edge of the hill.

I remained conscious, but I closed my eyes and tried not to be. It was not so much the pain as it was the sound.

The sound of Paddy's roar in my ears will only be duplicated, I think, when the doors of hell slip their wobbly hinges, one day, and give voice and authenticity to the whole panorama of Dante's poetic nightmares. It was an immense roar that encompassed the world and dissolved me in it."

On Africa:

"Africa is mystic, it is wild, it is a sweltering inferno, it is a photographer's paradise, a hunter's Valhalla, an escapist's Utopia. It is what you will, and it withstands all interpretations. It is the last vestige of the dead world or the cradle of a shiny new one. To a lot of people, as to myself, it is just 'home.' It is all these things, but one thing — it is never dull."

"Africa is mystic, it is wild, it is a sweltering inferno, it is a photographer's paradise, a hunter's Valhalla, an escapist's Utopia. It is what you will, and it withstands all interpretations."

Beryl Markham
aviator, author

On Africa revisited:

"Africa is never the same to any one who leaves it and returns again. It is not a land of change but a land of moods, and its moods are numberless. It is not fickle, but because it has mothered not only men but races and cradled not only cities but civilizations — and seen them die and new ones born again — Africa can be dispassionate, indifferent, warm or cynical, replete with the weariness of too much wisdom.

Filmmakers find movies in Mexico cost 'peanuts'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Mexican movie industry hopes to net a bonanza of foreign production once word spreads that the cost of filming here has dropped sharply because of the devalued peso.

"Filming in Mexico represents a savings," says Fernando Hestye, head of America Studios. "Let's face it — it's peanuts."

Foreign filmmakers have been coming to Mexico on location for decades.

Rugged Durango in north central Mexico has been a longtime favorite for making westerns.

Director John Huston brought Puerto Vallarta to fame as a resort when he filmed "The Night of the Iguana," starring Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor.

Mexico City recently played the part of Santiago, Chile, in Henri Costa-Gavras' film, "Missing," with Jack Lemmon and Sissy Spacek.

But the fall of the peso from about 27 to the dollar one year ago to the current 150 after three devaluations, makes the economics of filming in Mexico now particularly attractive.

Hector Lopez, a former undersecretary for cinematography in the government, notes that foreign productions tend to come to Mexico in waves that don't always depend on the economic forecast.

Government policies might encourage or discourage shooting a film, he said, or sometimes situations that have nothing to do with Mexico bring in productions.

That was the case during Hollywood's recent strike-plagued year, when some productions fled to Mexico to avoid labor problems.

Lopez ticked off the advantages of filming in Mexico, with the current low price at the top of the list. He also said the quality of technical personnel in Mexico is good and, if anything is lacking, Los Angeles is only a four-hour flight away.

Hestye said last year was a good one for America Studios, the smaller of Mexico's two government-owned studios, and was the first year it finished in the black since the government took over in 1976.

Although Mexican productions made up the bulk of the studio's work, it also housed "Triumph of the Man Called Horse," a sequel to "A Man Called Horse," with Richard Harris.

The studio provided auxiliary services for "Underfire," an adventure film starring Gene Hackman that was made in the southern Mexico state of Chiapas, a handy and safe look-alike for Central America.

Hestye said he hoped to sign a contract for "Mandrake the Magician," to be filmed at America Studios later this year.

Romanian cartoonist draws fine line with censorship

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Social comment can be dicey in communist Eastern Europe, but Mihai Stanescu has mastered the trick by letting his cartoons tell the story. So far, he's ahead of the game.

The soft-spoken cartoonist has garnered money and prizes for his work in the United States, Western Europe and Japan.

One of his latest triumphs was a $5,000 first prize in Tokyo's Yomiuri cartoon contest last year. He also lists credits from magazines such as "Oui," and prizes from contests in Belgium, Yugoslavia, Canada, West Berlin and his native Romania.

But working in his modest studio in downtown Bucharest, the 43-year-old Stanescu courts censorship in this tightly-controlled country with his tongue-in-cheek comments about sex, socialist inefficiency and travel restrictions.

"How do you say correctly, 'emigrant,' or 'immigrant?'" asks a cartoon character filling out an application for a passport. That picture, and several others, never made it into the approved cartoons exhibited recently in two local halls.

Another that failed to pass official muster showed a family sunbathing on the Black Sea coast. "Warm water only from 9 to 12 a.m. and 4 to 7 p.m.," a sign says. It alludes to strict government energy-saving measures imposed on Romanian households.

One that did make public showing depicts a Romanian tourist pointing to Italy's Leaning Tower of Pisa. "Look, Vasile. They've got crooked things over here as well," she tells her husband.

This is rare stuff in a country where open criticism of the authorities can result in arrest or ruin a career. But Stanescu is tolerated, possibly because of his success abroad, possibly because he makes even the hierarchy laugh.

"His exhibition...is a holiday of the free spirit," wrote theater director Dimu Sararu in the weekly magazine, Flacara.

Landon crusades against drugs

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Michael Landon is one of Hollywood's toughest and busiest people, a successful star who acts, directs, produces and crusades against excessive drug use, alcohol abuse and children smoking. He also hates the National Enquirer.

Landon last fall withdrew as the star of "Little House" after eight seasons, although he remained as executive producer until the series was canceled. He returned for one episode early this year because it was about drug addiction. Landon, on Miltowns himself during his "Bonanza" days, shows no mercy for those who take drugs to excess.

"One of my children — a daughter — was very heavily into drugs," Landon said. "If there's one thing that can destroy this country, it's drugs. It's already happening. People are expected to sit back and accept drug use. That's a bunch of crap.

"I never had any guilt feelings about my daughter's habit. I never shoved that crap into her mouth. Everybody is responsible for their own body. She was this close (puts fingers an inch apart) to dying at 18.

"Now she's turned around, married and happy. But she spent two years in treatment and she learned that recovery was her responsibility. Parents are going to have to stop trying to be a buddy to their kids."

Landon warmed to his subject, his eyes darting, his hands never still.

"SOME ARE thankful their children are 'only on grass.' For Christ's sake! Grass promotes alcoholism by making the body tolerate it better. Don't they know we have 8 million child alcoholics? How many schools have 'smoking areas' when it's illegal for kids to smoke?

"I'm aiming my views at everybody who is a parent who loves this country. I will no longer be put into a position of wanting to believe my children's stories. When they're jumpy and leave a room, coming back a different person, it's easy to pretend that nothing is going on."

Landon was able to win his own drug battles. Now, brimming with confidence, Landon has shifted his crusade to include the National Enquirer. That came after he received a letter from a reporter on the Florida-based tabloid.

Speaking to the press in Los Angeles, Landon read the letter, which brought gasps from his audience.

Obligingly, Landon handed the letter to an NBC clerk who had copies made. This is the text of the letter, signed by Dary Matera of the Enquirer.

"DEAR MR. Landon: I assume you received my last letter and chose not to respond. I understand. Feelings run deep.

"Unfortunately, we are at present gearing up to do another job on you involving your return to 'Little House.' The story will be along the lines of how you 'crawled back after your movie failure,' how you are going to let 'Father Murphy' die to save 'Little House,' how it is going to wreck things between you and your girlfriend, junk like that. There are a lot of people out there falling over themselves to rip you for some reason, so finding the sources won't be hard.

"Fortunately, we can avoid all this and change the thrust of the entire story. Instead of 'crawling back' we could write about the sacrifices you've made to keep the show on top. Instead of letting 'Father Murphy' die, we could write about how determined you are to make sure 'Father Murphy' doesn't die. And instead of how this is going to mess up your domestic life, we could write about how the return to 'Little house' has the support of your entire family. All this can be accomplished in a simple interview.

"This letter isn't like before when I wanted to do a story. This story is being worked right now by another team of reporters and is going to be printed with or without your input. And I'm not suppose (sic) to be meddling in another group of reporter's (sic) story. Should you grant an interview, it would kill their story and they would be very mad at me. Regardless, I feel you should have the right to respond to this yourself. And if we kill their story, tough.

"I'm leaving for the Enquirer's home base in Florida Tuesday. Should you be interested, I can return to L.A. in a moment's notice, or simply talk with you over the phone, whatever you prefer."

Landon chose not to repond to the letter. "Can you believe this?" Landon cried, waving the paper over his head.

'Magnum' rescues 'Simon and Simon'

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — "Simon & Simon," left for dead a year ago, is being hailed now by CBS programming boss Harvey Shephard as "the success story of the past season."

Last year, "Simon & Simon" was so certain of cancelation that its two stars, Jameson Parker and Gerald McRaney, lined up jobs in other 1982-83 TV projects. Executive producer Philip DeGuere was equally pessimistic. "I had written the show off," he said. "By March of '82, it was a memory."

Now, DeGuere has a hit. "Simon & Simon" was the seventh highest-rated series in the 1982-83 season. And the network has put another DeGuere project on its fall schedule — "Whiz Kids."

The resurrection of "Simon & Simon" offers a fascinating glimpse into the haphazard world of network TV. Despite all the research and testing, it's often random factors that can make a busted show go boom.

IN THIS CASE, the overnight change in fortunes can be attributed to savvy programming maneuvers, Lady Luck and that popular ladies' man, Tom Selleck.

"Simon & Simon" premiered in the fall of '81 to decidedly mixed reviews and lukewarm public acceptance. One of several new detective shows, its distinctiveness was the chemistry between the straitlaced A.J. (Parker) and his free-wheeling brother, Rick (McRaney).

In some cities, in fact, interest was nil. DeGuere says 16 CBS affiliates didn't carry the series. One week, the San Francisco station pre-empted the show for a special on venereal disease in Boston.

But the biggest indignity was when the San Diego station almost yanked "Simon & Simon" off the air. The series is set in San Diego.

Broadcast at 8 o'clock on Tuesday, "Simon & Simon" limped through that first season, losing to ABC's "Happy Days"-"Laverne & Shirley" combination and NBC's "Father Murphy."

IN APRIL 1982, CBS tossed the sinking "Simon & Simon" a life preserver by moving it to Thursdays following "Magnum, P.I." for a three-week trial. "They were compatible in style," says Shephard, CBS' vice president for programming. "What did we have to lose?"

Selleck's "Magnum" was a major force, but its follow-ups were not maintaining the audience. "Knots Landing," "Nurse" and "Cagney & Lacey" hadn't worked at 9. "Those other programs were on the serious side," says DeGuere. "What CBS hadn't tried was something like us, light adventure."

By the third week, "Simon & Simon" had grabbed a lofty 30 percent of the viewing audience. "I guess the audience didn't want a dose of reality after Selleck," says DeGuere.

CBS' programmers, preparing to announce the 1982-83 fall schedule without "Simon & Simon," were so impressed that they gave the show a 13-week commitment and the permanent sweetheart position behind "Magnum."

"THEY INDICATED to me that the renewal was conditional on certain changes," DeGuere says. "It's their air, so the studio and I had a hat-in-hand attitude. We accepted their suggestions and even a lesser licensing fee. CBS wanted harder-hitting stories with greater jeopardy. They wanted bigger locations, a bigger cast and a richer look."

This past season, the Simons' detective agency was no longer impoverished. The boys usually got paid, and A.J. bought a new car. DeGuere also complied with CBS' other wishes. "In one show, a female psychic had a vision of a murder," he says. "We know that stories about psychics appeal to women, Selleck's major audience. So we opened up with the female in jeopardy."

CBS also helped by scheduling early season crossover episodes in which McRaney and Parker were on "Magnum" and then Selleck visited "Simon & Simon."

ABC to air 'Fall Guy' in Spanish

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Fall Guy" va a tomar sus caidas en dos idiomas.

That is to say, the series will be telecast in Spanish as well as English.

ABC will offer a Spanish-language radio simulcast of two TV programs on a trial basis starting this month. The service, called ABC-UNO, will be tested for three weeks on ABC stations in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Miami and San Antonio.

The two programs to be provided the Spanish simulcast are "The Fall Guy" on Wednesday nights, and "The Puppy's New Adventures," an animated show Saturday mornings.

Spanish-speaking viewers can watch the shows on local ABC stations, and follow the dialogue in their own language on designated ABC radio stations in their cities — WBNX in New York, WOJO in Chicago, KTNQ and KLVE-FM in Los Angeles.

Game show host focuses on eyes

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Game show host Rick Podell says that before each taping of "Razzle Dazzle" he spends 15 minutes in front of a mirror looking into his eyes and holding a conversation with himself.

There's a reason for this behavior. All the contestants, male and female, are nude from the waist up on this cable game show.

"I 'psych' myself before taping each show to look only at the contestants' eyes," he said.

His job is to nonchalantly ignore the semi-nude young women playing the game. He said, "After all, I'm a red-blooded young man."

City council votes to accept bid

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

Midland City Council voted Tuesday to accept the most attractive of three bids and sold $7 million worth of Certificates of Obligation for airport improvements to Republic Bank of Dallas.

In its official statement for the bond issue, the city pledges surplus revenues from airport operations to pay back the bonds, as well as an ad valorem tax levied on taxable property within the city sufficient to pay current interest and create a sinking fund of not less than 2 percent of the principal.

Joe Smith, senior vice president of First Southwest Company of Abilene, the city's financial adviser, said Wednesday the city doesn't anticipate levying the tax because airport revenues should be sufficient to pay back the certificates.

As authorized by the Texas Legislature in 1947, the city has the power to collect a tax — up to five cents per $100 assessed valuation — to finance airport maintenance and operating expenses. The city has yet to levy the tax because airport revenues have been sufficient to meet expenses.

Net airport revenues have ranged from slightly more than $1 million to more than $4 million from fiscal year 1977-1978 to the present. Net revenues for the six months ending March 31 were $1,194,000.

Republic Bank offered an effective interest rate of 8.264408 percent on the bonds, or a total net interest charge of $3,555,072.92 for the 9 year, 11 month term of the certificates. Joint managers of the syndicate are Republic Bank of Dallas and Texas American Bank of Fort Worth.

The city also received bids from Interfirst Bank of Dallas, a syndicate including First National Bank of Midland, which bid a net interest charge of $3,575,440.50, or an effective interest rate of 8.3117 percent. First City National Bank of Houston and Associates was high bidder with an interest rate of 8.404107 percent and a net interest charge of $3,615,166.67.

During a special morning meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, Smith told the council Moody's Investor Services gave the city's bond issue a Aa1 rating and Standard & Poor's offered a AA rating. He said Midland's bond rating is the second highest it could have received and added that only cities such as Dallas and Houston are likely to be granted AAA ratings.

Smith said the effective interest rate represents a deterioration — or an increase of interest rates within the bond market — of between ¼ and 1 percent during during the last month.

"There's no question the market has deteriorated during the last four or five weeks," Smith told the council. The city may have received slightly more attractive bids had its bond issue been ready for issuance about a month prior to Wednesday's sale.

Smith said weekly increases in the nation's money supply may have spooked investors into expecting the Federal Reserve to tighten the money supply and drive up interest rates. Given the present market conditions, however, "the city of Midland, as always, is getting the best market there is.

"If we're ready to go ahead, then we should award the certificates to the Republic Bank of Dallas," Smith said. The council voted 5-0, with Councilman Tom Sloan absent, to accept the bid.

The city expects to receive the $7 million on or about June 30. Principal and semi-annual interest payments are due on May 1 and Nov. 1 of each year.

Proceeds from the bond sale are pledged for the city's portion of a $14 million road, parking and sewer construction project at Midland Regional Airport. The Federal Aviation Administration is expected to fund the remaining project costs.

In other action, the council voted to cancel its contract with Carda Inc., the company which has been handling computer processing of traffic tickets for the city. City Manager James Brown said the task is being transferred to the city's computer system.

The council's next regular meeting is scheduled for June 14.

Dinosaur Dinny

Phillip Parker, 13, of Fort Stockton and an Iraan student, sits astride "Dinny" the dinosaur in the Alley Oop Fantasyland. The park was built around the cartoon strip of the same name, which was created by V.T. Hamlin.

Comic strip caveman born in Iraan

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

IRAAN — To V.T. Hamlin, his creation of comic strip caveman Alley Oop while working in Iraan as a newsman in 1929 was fulfillment of "a little man's worship of a big man."

Thirty-six years later, Marathon Oil Company and the City of Iraan decided to revere the famed cartoonist in like manner with the creation of Alley Oop Fantasyland, where cartoons leaped full-blown into physical forms.

Today, Hamlin's Alley Oop and Land of Moo are extinct, but the 10-acre park and its gargantuan monuments stand as testimony to Hamlin's creative powers.

Situated adjacent to Iraan Park in the southwestern part of the city, Alley Oop Fantasyland contains such attractions as "Dinny" the dinosaur and Alley Oop and his top hat.

Dinny is a 65-foot-long, 40-ton replica of a dinosaur, upon whose neck youngsters and oldsters may climb for photographs or simply to tell others later of having ridden astride a West Texas prehistoric giant.

Alley Oop and his top hat is 20 feet high, 29 feet in length with two slides. An excursion on the lower side will take one scooting down Alley Oop's shoulder, while an ascent to his cigar will allow a person to plummet through the head.

Other attractions for the summer visitor include a "rocketship" observation tower and collection of early-day oilfield equipment.

Within the grounds of Fantasyland lies Iraan Museum, which contains artifacts of prehistoric Indian cultures, fossils of the Cretaceous period and items from the era of the Chihuahua Trail and San Antonio-San Diego stage route, along which the museum is situated.

While Alley Oop stood more than six feet in height and tipped the prehistoric scales at 210 pounds, the "little man" who worshipped strength was but five feet, six inches and 140 pounds.

"Honest," Hamlin once said, "that guy and I are the same person. I can't tell you where I leave off and he begins."

He was born in Perry, Iowa in 1900. The first blossoming of creativity came in an unlikely locale — a hospital, in which he was recuperating from poison gas he breathed in the trenches of France during World War I. On his hospital bed he illustrated letters for his friends. When a newsman on an adjoining cot suggested he try cartooning for a living, the seed for the comic caveman was planted.

After the war, Hamlin returned to high school in Perry, and then took a course in journalism at the University of Missouri. It was enough background to launch him on a career as a reporter with the Des Moines Register Tribune, Des Moines News and Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

But his pilgrimage to Texas for newspaper work didn't turn out to be an easy one. He found himself building bridges, working on paving gangs, cranking a movie projector, driving trucks, even slugging it out in semi-pro boxing matches. In the course of his various professions — which were to include photographing oil and cattle events for Fort Worth and Houston newspapers — he suffered a fractured spine, a broken wrist and three cracked noses.

In 1927 he again turned his efforts to art, creating layouts, maps and posters for oil companies. It was during such work that he met a geologist who was a student of prehistoric life and found Alley Oop roaming the recesses of his own mind.

Hamlin was fascinated. He took up diligent study of science, drifting from geology into paleontology and history.

He drew his first cartoon strip while serving as photographer for the Houston Press, but soon lost interest in it when his wife encouraged him to turn his efforts toward a topic related to his study of the past.

In Iraan, the town named for Ira and Ann Yates, it reached fruition in Alley Oop.

In later years, he was never quite certain how he came up with the name "Alley Oop." All he could suggest was that it "may have been because it is a French term used by tumblers and Oop is really a roughhouse tumbler."

Hamlin began marketing Alley Oop seriously in 1933, and it became such a success that 658 daily newspapers and 223 Sunday newspapers eventually were to carry the strip.

Alley Oop Day festivities scheduled for Saturday

IRAAN — Alley Oop Day Celebration will be Saturday at Alley Oop Fantasyland and other locales throughout Iraan.

Activities will include a "Miss Oola" pageant for high school girls and a "Pebbles" pageant for girls ages 4 to 6. Each event will be held at Iraan High School Auditorium, with a dance to follow.

Fantasyland events will include a barbecue, dunking board, children's games, horse rides, Mexican lunch and country kitchen.

Additionally, a play day will take place at the roping arena, a scramble at the golf course and cake walk at Senior Citizen's Patio.

Midlander files suit against Gibraltar

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midlander Morris O. Crocker, who claims he unjustly lost his $135,000 house in a courthouse forfeiture sale for $8,600, has filed a $2 million law suit in Midland's 238th State District Court against Gibraltar Savings Association of Houston and formerly of Midland.

Crocker is seeking the return of his former house and a clear title to it.

Court and county clerk records indicate that Crocker had defaulted on payments on the house at 2905 Lockheed Ave. in Skyline Heights Addition. A balance of about $12,500 was due on the house which, Crocker says in his petition, has a "reasonable market value" of between $100,000 and $135,000.

The house in 1968 sold for $18,000.

The original deed of trust on the house was executed by Midland Savings Association and was transferred to Gibraltar.

The house was auctioned off in a courthouse sale Nov. 2 to the highest bidder, which, at $8,600, was Gibraltar via substitute trustee Virginia Belval.

Crocker complains:

—That Ms. Belval, "without properly performing the duties imposed upon her," bid $8,600 on the house, on which was owed approximately $12,500 and which was valued to $135,000.

—That Gibraltar committed a breach of fiduciary duty under the deed of trust and that Ms. Belval, on behalf of Gibraltar, failed to pay a reasonable compensation for the house.

MMH paving the way for garage

Expansion will create need for more spaces

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Now that Midland Memorial Hospital has the green light for construction of its $15.1 million bed expansion, hospital officials want to avoid a traffic jam in the parking lot.

With a 77-bed expansion expected to be completed by 1985 and an increase in the hospital's out-patient services, MMH will need additional parking spaces, said MMH President Ray Branson in a news conference Wednesday.

Because of this need, MMH officials are paving the way for a two-level parking garage south of the hospital.

According to Branson, the 240-space garage would "cost under $600,000 if the existing blacktop is used on the east lot (at Illinois Avenue and N Street)."

Parking structure plans were discussed in April by the MMH planning committee, which estimated it would take about five months from initiation of the project to completion.

While Branson noted the hospital has a "considerable number of street parking spaces," he added that out-patient services have increased the need for more spaces.

"Right now we have about two spaces per bed," he said. "But our out-patient services, including the cancer center, emergency room and physical and respiratory departments, have increased the need for more parking.

"What we're considering is a two-level structure," Branson said. "If the project is truly needed, we'll look at all the alternatives for parking. Of course, how it is financed will impact whether it will be paid parking."

Branson said if the 77-bed expansion's construction cost falls under the $15.1 million budget, "we would have a surplus for the parking (project); if not, we could have a separate revenue bond which would be sold locally."

Midland Memorial Hospital officials are planning to build a two-level parking garage to handle increased parking needs when a 77-bed expansion is completed.

During last week's MMH board meeting, the directors opted to speed up plans for the parking problem. Directors approved leveling the Conoco service station south of the hospital on Andrews Highway for additional parking.

"Our plan is to go ahead and raze the Fas Gas building, take the tanks out, fill the holes and surface the area for parking," Branson said.

"We're getting estimates right now, but there's not any specific time frame for completion."

The lot, which is to be vacated by July 4, and the surrounding area south of the hospital will accomodate about 160 spaces, Branson said.

"But that won't be enough," he said. "We need more. Ultimately, we'll need three spaces per bed."

Midland reverend chosen UMC delegate

The Rev. Charles E. Lutrick, pastor of Midland's First United Methodist Church, was among eight delegates elected Wednesday by members of the Northwest Texas Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church to attend the church's National General Conference in Baltimore, Md., in May 1984.

Four clergy members and four laypersons were elected to represent the Northwest Texas Methodist churches in a series of ballots taken during the conference's three-day session at Lubbock's First United Methodist Church.

In addition to the eight national delegates, the conference's estimated 600 voting delegates chose two of 10 additional delegates whom the conference will send to the regional Jurisdictional Conference in Lubbock in June 1984.

In addition to Lutrick, the clergy-delegates elected to the National General Conference were Charles Whittle, pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Abilene; Ted Dotts, pastor of St. John's United Methodist Church in Lubbock, and Ira Williams, superintendent of the conference's Amarillo District.

The Rev. Charles E. Lutrick

The two clergy delegates named to the Jurisdictional Conference were R.L. Kirk, pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Plainview, and E. Bruce Parks, superintendent of the Conference's Plainview District.

Three additional clergy delegates and five lay delegates still will be chosen before the 300-church conference's annual meeting adjourns tonight.

White won't call special session until lawmakers back his plans

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says there is no use in calling lawmakers back to town for a special session until he has some assurance they will support his plans.

"There's no sense to keep them after class just to be hard-headed about it," White told reporters Wednesday at his regular weekly news conference. "I am certainly not going to call one (a special session) until the Legislature is prepared to take action in some of these areas."

A pay raise for schoolteachers financed by a tax on luxury items — White's pet project — failed during the regular session, and the governor said he needs time to try to build new support for it.

He said when he visited the House and Senate Monday night just before adjournment of the 140-day regular session, "I had many of them who'd suggested we shouldn't do it at this time tell me that they would be willing to do it as soon as we could, and I think more and more people will be coming to that postion."

In the meantime, White denied that a special session was mandatory this summer to address three other major issues left hanging by the Legislature — the possible end of the Texas Employment Commission, a statewide water plan, and a brucellosis control bill.

The TEC required a bill to keep it operating because of the state's "Sunset" law designed to reduce bureaucracy, but the bill was killed by a deadlock between the House and Senate on the last day of the session. According to the law, the TEC must begin closing down Sept. 1 unless the Legislature takes action.

"I don't think that's as harsh a deadline as some people think," White said. "They have a continuation built into that Sunset process," which gives the agency one year to disband.

Other unfinished business of the regular session included a bill that would have brought Texas into compliance with U.S. brucellosis control standards. It failed in the Senate while federal authorities were trying to impose a quarantine on Texas cattle, and a statewide water plan that White supported died in a conference committee late in the session.

Despite that, White, who was asked repeatedly about the possibility of calling lawmakers back into session, insisted, "I don't want to say we're going to have a summer session.

"We're going to wait and see what the court action is on brucellosis. The TEC has a phase-out plan which would foreclose their going out abruptly on the first of September."

Midland man files suit against Gibraltar

—That Crocker "attempted to pay" the balance due on the house on "a number of occasions" and was told by Gibraltar representatives that he "would be allowed to do so." However, Crocker alleges that when he attempted to pay the indebtedness, Gibraltar had moved its offices, left no responsible agent in control and thereafter his property was foreclosed.

Crocker, who is represented by Odessa attorney Bill Alexander, claims that Gibraltar "is attempting to gain an unreasonable advantage by reason of its fraudulent conduct" and that he "stands ready and tenders to the defendant the balance due on the note."

Should he not get clear title to the house, Crocker is asking the court to grant him $122,500, which represents the $135,000 value of the house less the $12,500 indebtedness, and $2 million in punitive damages.

Group wants referendum on gambling

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Horsemen's Association is organizing a petition drive for a nonbinding referendum on horse-race gambling.

The group of horse owners, breeders and trainers plans to begin collecting signatures in July to place the issue on the Democratic primary ballot next May.

"We decided to tell the Legislature that it cannot deny people the right to vote," said Al Poujol, an association board member. "People can monkey with a lot of things but the right to cast a vote is very precious to most Americans."

He said the governor's office has been asked to consider horse-race gambling as a way to finance teacher pay raises if Gov. Mark White calls a special session.

Texas voters may place issues on party ballots by obtaining signatures from 5 percent of the voters who cast ballots in the last primary election. The horsemen's association would need 65,933 signatures, said John Steiner, an attorney with the Texas Secretary of State's office.

Poujol said his group did not choose to place the issue on the Republican Party ballot because they believe Democratic leaders are more supportive of horse racing.

Police investigate office holdup

ODESSA — Police are investigating a holdup at the Shoemaker Realty Co. here Wednesday morning.

Owner Louie Shoemaker told officers a black man came into the office at 410 S. Grant about 11:35 a.m. and inquired about renting a house before pulling a .38-caliber revolver and demanding that Shoemaker turn over his wallet.

Shoemaker was then forced to lie down in a back room while the man escaped with $250 in cash and a $100 check. He was described as about 5 feet, 10 inches tall and weighing 190 pounds. He wore blue jeans and a red baseball cap.

Help needed to solve pipe theft

The sheriff's department is asking for help in solving the theft of $20,000 worth of oilfield pipe.

Sometime in the past four months, according to Capt. Pat Fuller, 223 joints of N-80 and J-50 tubing in 31-foot lengths were taken from a Mobil Oil Co. lease on the Payne Ranch about 12 miles south of Garden City Highway. Some of the tubing is tipped with silver or yellow paint.

Anyone with information on the theft is asked to call the Silent Witness Program at 685-1190. The program provides rewards and anonymity for information leading to the solving of crimes.

Historical group to host guest speaker

The Midland County Historical Commission will meet Saturday at 1 p.m. in the County Courtroom on the second floor of the Midland County Courthouse with Ann Ruff of Llano as guest speaker.

Nancy R. McKinley will chair the meeting and guests are welcome.

Mrs. Ruff, author of "A Guide to Historic Texas Inns and Hotels," is a graduate of the University of Houston and is presently owner and operator of The Badu House, a restaurant, club and country inn in Llano. Mrs. Ruff acquired the building in 1980 and has spent the last three years renovating it to its original 19th century grandeur.

Her book on Texas inns and hotels looks at fact and fancy surrounding more than 45 Texas getaways.

Born in Aberdeen, Miss., Mrs. Ruff has lived in Texas since 1950. After graduating from the University of Houston, she taught English in the Spring Branch School District for 13 years.

Judge dismisses Coquina lawsuit

Coquina Oil Corp.'s $1.25 million suit against Midland oil operator W.R. Davis, Melba Greenlee and Melba Jean Davis Greenlee has been dismissed by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin upon the motion of Coquina.

Coquina had sued the defendants on the basis of alleged overdue payments on the sale of liquid hydrocarbons from Coquina to Basin Inc.

The suit was based on a 1978 agreement between Coquina and Basin, which Davis then controlled.

About three weeks after the suit was filed in early May, Coquina tendered a motion for nonsuit, which the judge granted.

Another skunk found to be rabid

Midland Animal Control officials reported Wednesday that a skunk found in the 1500 block of Washita May 23 brings to 28 the number of rabid skunks discovered in Midland County during 1983.

An Animal Control spokeswoman said the skunk — which sprayed a dog, a horse and worked its way inside a chicken coop — was found in a pasture and shot by Midland County Constable Tom McGinnis. She said the skunk did not inflict any injuries on the animals.

Animal Control officials encourage Midland County residents to vaccinate their pets against rabies.

Judy Kennedy home from her romp through the spas.

Copley News Service

When you get around to calling the spas there are several important questions which should be asked to make sure that the program offered at each spa will fit in with your needs and requirements.

Judy Babcock, co-author of "The Spa Book," suggests the following six questions.

1. Ask yourself, before you even get on the phone, what it is you are looking for in a spa vacation. Do you want to be pampered or put through a tough physical regimen? Do you want all the extras included in your fee or do you want to pay for each extra as you use it?

2. What does this spa consider a week? Some spas call five and one-half days a week, others call six and one-half days a week. So check before you commit yourself and make plane reservations.

3. What is the fee?

4. What does that fee include? All spas include meals and accommodations. Some include the extras like facials, massages, herbal wraps, etc., in their basic fee.

Free classes offered at Lee

Morning summer classes in homemaking will be offered at Lee High School during June. The courses are free to high school students and adults.

"Sewing the New Fashions in Belts," — how to make several new types of belts — will be taught by Jill Counts, June 6 — 8.

"Beauty Make Over," — make-up color keys for different body types — will be taught by Anita Blackford, June 9 & 10.

"Restringing and Updating Necklaces," — how to repair old necklaces and create new ones — will be taught June 9 & 10.

"Food Preservation Workshop," — demonstrations and recipes for jellies, jams and preserves — will be taught by Betty Ambrose June 13. Instructions for drying will be given June 14. Freezing and canning will be taught by Sharon Hillis, June 15.

A "Bath Wrap Workshop" — making wraps from bath towels — will be taught by Nell Davenport June 16 — 21.

All workshops are free except for materials used and students are advised not to buy supplies until after attending the first class. For more information call 694-2551.

Spa revolution

Copley News Service

There was a time — not so long ago — when the word "spa" conjured up images of the idle rich passing two weeks in the lap of luxury.

Or perhaps it brought to mind the movie paragons who rushed off to their favorite spa after finishing work on their latest mass entertainment project.

No more.

Spas have undergone a quiet — but all-encompassing — revolution in the last 10 years. Their numbers have increased and they have blossomed in all parts of the United States. And their clientele has grown to include young singles, men, couples and executives looking for a place to relax.

In other words, spas are nowfor all people.

Granted, there are still spas where only the very rich can afford to go. But, at the other en of the spectrum, there are spas which cost no more than a normal vacation would cost — as little as $350 per week.

According to Judy Babcock and Judy Kennedy, authors of the recently released "The Spa Book: A Guided, Personal Tour of Health Resorts and Beauty Spas for Men and Women," this revolution is intimately tied in with the current emphasis on fitness and health in modern society.

Or as Babcock succinctly put it, "Spas have changed from fat farms to fit farms.

"Spas are going in the direction of giving more exercise, more aerobic and heart-strengthening exercise ... and I think there will always be a need for the relaxation programs found at spas."

And with the fitness craze now a "solid social trend," spas have changed their programs. They now emphasize the health, fitness and de-stressing aspects.

"Many spas are making an effort to respond to the needs of North Americans," says Kennedy. "They are responding to men with separate programs. They are responding to couples with exercise classes specifically for them (instead of the traditional idea of a woman coming alone for a week). And they are including educational programs in health and nutrition."

It's all part of the effort on the part of the spas to educate their clients, to give them something (an exercise program, diet or nutritional guidelines) to take home with them when they leave. And this is another aspect of the quiet revolution of the last 10 years: the emphasis on the educational functions of spas has grown.

"You used to have people do things to you," according to Kennedy. "Now it's all how to take it home. Spas are educating you so you CAN take it home. They provide you with recipes, fitness techniques, tapes, etc."

Another educational aspect of spas is their emphasis on participating in all aspects of their programs. And that means rising to take an early morning walk, participating in a mid-afternoon jog or trying out an herbal wrap.

Kennedy put it in more personal terms. "If I hadn't gone to a spa, I would never have known that I enjoyed getting up at 6 in the morning and walking to the top of the mountain. In my everyday life, all I think about that early is stumbling out to get the paper. By 7:30 I wonder, 'Why don't I do this at home?' And then you realize you can."

All this is well and good. But what about the cost of a spa vacation?

Well, that is another aspect of the so-called spa revolution.

The price for a week at a spa goes from $350 to $2,500. So almost everyone can afford a week at a spa. What a "week" actually is, though, varies from spa to spa so check with the spa before making a final decision. Some spas count five-and-a-half days as a week, others six-and-a-half.

And, of course, with a spa vacation you get what you pay for.

Hearst Feature Service

Moving female health care out of the male gynecologist's office and into the hands of women is the mission of feminist author Barbara Seaman.

"Men see their genitals, but women are taught that they have murky inner spaces," said Seaman, author of "Free and Female: The Doctors' Case Against the Pill" and, most recenty, "Women and the Crisis in Sex Hormones." "I think that one of the central issues of male dominance over women is the mystification of the female reproductive organs," said the woman recognized by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare as responsible for the first patient package insert on the birth-control pill warning women of possible side-effects.

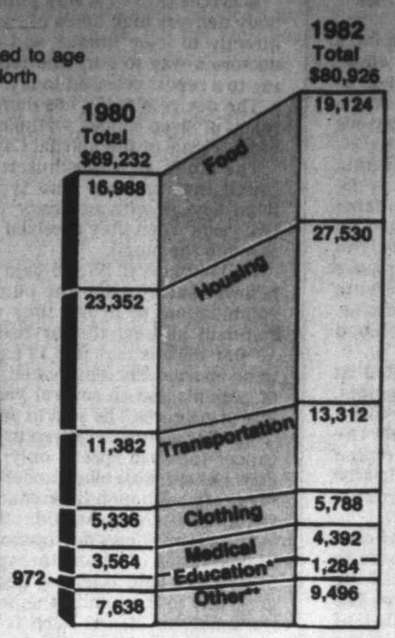

"Once women are better informed about their bodies, they can make wiser decisions about their own health care instead of leaving it all to the doctor. Knowledge is power," said Seaman, founder of the National Women's Health Network.

Fighting drug company efforts to reduce the amount of information on the patient-package inserts that accompany birth control pills is one of her causes.

Investigators say 150,000 U.S. children disappear annually

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — On the morning of May 25, 1979, 6-year-old Etan Patz went off to school — by himself, for the first time — and has never been seen again by family or friends. Wednesday was the fourth anniversary of his still-unexplained disappearance.

To mark the occasion, Etan's parents gathered with parents and relatives of other children who have met a similar fate. The occasion was National Missing Children's Day; the point was to generate greater awareness of a growing national problem.

Although highly diverse in character and background, participants in the program were bound by a common emotional denominator — the anguish of losing a loved child — and the goal of sparing other parents that experience.

"We tend to talk a lot about the children who are gone," said Julie Patz, mother of Etan. "What we must do is try harder to prevent many among the rest from being abducted."

"Parents must be made aware of the fact that their children are highly vulnerable," said Stanley Patz, Etan's father. "That is the hard lesson we have learned. My wife and I are symbols of the fact that this crime can happen to anyone."

Finding better means to prevent child abduction and to locate its victims was the dominant theme of the gathering, which was sponsored by Child Find, a nonprofit agency devoted to the search for missing children throughout the nation.

According to federal investigators and Child Find officials, approximately 150,000 children disappear involuntarily from home every year. The majority are victims of parental abduction in a custody dispute, but about 50,000 simply disappear — with at least 8,000 of their cases remaining unsolved for a year or longer.

Surrounded by stark warning posters drawn by New York City schoolchildren, participants stressed the need for greater vigilance by parents and school authorities. They also spoke of local police departments' insufficient use of computerized FBI files.

The Patzes, who were never informed by school authorities that their son was missing from class, asserted that such information should be telephoned to parents. In addition, they said, school officials and teachers must scrutinize the records of newly enrolled students and should require students' photographs to accompany those records.

Also attending the session were John and Reve Walsh, who recalled the difficulties they encountered in obtaining cooperation from outside authorities while searching for their 6-year-old son, Adam. The Walsh child was abducted in 1981 from a department store in his hometown of Hollywood, Fla. All that was found of him was his severed head.

"Even now, after last year's passage of the Missing Children Act which mandates police entry of data on missing children into the FBI's National Crime Information Center, there remains great indifference to this problem among police around the country," John Walsh said. "We went through a tremendous fight to make this central system accessible, but it is going largely unused by local authorities."

Homey-honeymoon

Two newlyweds made their honeymoon trip — cross-country, in a covered wagon. Joe and Beverly Bowley were married in New Hampshire and left for Los Angeles. The couple averaged 25 miles per day in a 100-year-old covered wagon equipped with a CB radio, stereo system, portable TV and refrigerator. The couple's alarm clock, a rooster, was transported hanging from a cage on the side of the wagon. —CNS

Blue Cross publishes 'costs' of dying

Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE – Can you afford to die of cancer?

Probably, but the potential for financial ruin is there.

Although most terminal cancers cost considerably less, it's possible that the middle-income family not covered by health insurance could face bills as high as $250,000. That would be for a terminal case of acute leukemia, for which a bone-marrow transplant operation failed to halt the disease's deadly course.

The average terminal illness costs less. A 1980 terminal illness study published by the national Blue Cross Association showed expenses for the terminal patient in the last six months of life averaged $16,000. Adjusted for inflation, that tab would be about $21,000 in 1983.

There are no general figures for the "costs" of dying of various kinds of cancers. Each case is different, and the cost may vary according to how early the cancer was diagnosed (generally giving the patient both a lower bill and better odds of survival), what sort of treatment is recommended by the physician and consented to by the patient, and whether the treatment results in speedy recovery or failure.

ONE OF THE MOST expensive cancers is leukemia. Dr. Jack Singer, a Seattle oncologist and co-author of "Cancer Care," estimates the cost of hospital treatment runs about $1,000 a day, so that a bone-marrow transplant operation, which requires a long hospitalization but improves odds of survival to around 60 percent, runs $100,000 to $120,000. The estimate includes direct hospital costs, but also the cost of an apartment rental for patients who are required to remain close to the center for a total of four months before and after treatment. In a terminal case, with subsequent hospitalizations, the bill could run as high as $250,000, he estimates.

Because of the high cost of the transplant operation, Singer says that "we can't treat patients without insurance, Medicare or Medicaid. Or they have to have $70,000 up front to get in (to the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center)."

Cindy Wells, a spokesperson for the center, confirms that "We do ask for a prepayment of $70,000 if they don't have third-party insurance. It's unfortunate, but we have to stay viable. It costs $7.2 million a year to run that transplant unit, and the money has to come from somewhere. Unfortunately, we're caught in the position where it wouldn't take long to go bankrupt."

BECAUSE THE FRED Hutchinson Center is a regional facility for transplant surgeries, Wells says "We don't turn anybody from this area down." Only 20 of the approximately 300 patients treated by the center last year were asked to put up the $70,000 in cash, and Wells says about 90 percent of those were foreign patients. She explains that it's hard for the center to collect on foreign insurance plans.

At University Hospital here, bills of recent cancer patients provided insight into the costs of leukemia and the two most common adult cancers: lung and breast.

A woman who died of aplastic leukemia had bills totalling $160,000 for her two-and-a-half month stay. A man who is being treated for lung cancer has run up a $22,000 bill since last August. A woman who received a radical mastectomy for breast cancer was charged $15,000 for her 14-day stay.

It is hard to guess just how much the leukemia victim may have been billed additionally by her physicians. But the lung cancer patient probably received a $1,627 bill from his surgeon and another $800 bill from the anesthesiologist. Those are typical charges for a lobectomy, the removal of part of a cancerous lung. The mastectomy patient most likely was billed $1,168 by the surgeon, and $570 by the anesthesiologist.

The lung cancer patient probably faces further costs for chemotherapy; the drugs and lab tests alone can run $200 to $300 a session if done on an out-patient basis, so the cost for overnight hospitalization for chemotherapy runs about $1,000. Possibly, he will have radiation therapy, which typically runs $5,000 to $7,000.

SHOULD THE RADIATION damage healthy tissue, as sometimes happens, the lung cancer patient may find himself in Virginia Mason Hospital's hyperbaric chamber. A widow, whose late husband needed the chamber to help repair damage caused by radiation used unsuccessfully to combat his cancer of the esophagus, said the 30-day course of treatment at Virginia Mason had cost about $50,000.

The hyperbaric chamber – the same "decompression" chamber used to treat deep-sea divers who get the bends – uses an atmosphere of pure oxygen under pressure to promote healing of radiation-damaged tissue. Tissue served by oxygen-rich blood heals faster.

Time in the chamber is billed at $180 an hour, because four people, including a nurse or respiratory therapist inside the chamber with the patient, are necesssary to operate and monitor it. Typical treatments last 90 minutes and are given daily for 20 to 30 days.

Virginia Mason, like most other area hospitals, has a financial counselor to help people figure out how to pay the bills or to qualify for state help. The hospital does a certain amount of charity work and writes off bad debts, so that "nobody is pushed to the limit," says spokesperson Nancy Hicks. The hospital wouldn't require a patient to sell his home to pay the bill, she adds. Those who are guided to the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services for help in paying bills also are allowed to keep their houses – but little else.

GIVEN THE NEED for a family to exhaust its resources, it is possible that cancer victims will begin making some tough choices about the expensive procedures that many times do little more than delay death?

Seattle-area oncologists and cancer agencies say they have yet to see a middle-income cancer patient who opts to forgo treatment in order to protect the money saved for Junior's education at Harvard.

Despite the progress and new expensive procedures, the odds that many cancer victims will survive still aren't very good.

The American Cancer Society looks on the bright side, noting that "three out of eight persons who get cancer this year will be alive five years after diagnosis."

Device to prolong cancer survival

BOSTON (AP) — A tiny pump implanted in the body delivers high doses of cancer-fighting drugs directly to liver tumors and someday may give doctors a way to cure the lethal disease, according to a report released today.

The device already has doubled the life expectancy of liver cancer victims, said the report in today's issue of the journal Cancer.

The study at Massachusetts General Hospital found that patients who typically would have lived a year with ordinary treatment survived two years when they received medicine delivered through the pump.

Dr. William C. Wood said cancer specialists believe that by using the pump to deliver better combinations of drugs, they will be able to substantially improve the survival rate.

"Our hope is that this 12 to 24 months is going to be enormously lengthened, at least for a group of patients, out to several years or, God willing, into some cures," he said in an interview.

The 20 patients reviewed in the study had colon cancer that had spread only to their livers. If it does not spread, colon cancer often can be cured surgically, although liver cancer is extremely difficult to treat, doctors said.

The pump allows doctors to give patients much higher doses of chemotherapy drugs than they otherwise could tolerate. Because the medicine goes only to the tumor, the patients suffer few of the usual side effects, such as nausea.

"The excitement is that for the first time now, we have a method that's easy and comfortable for patients. It lets us get very high concentrations of drugs into the liver and yet not make the patients feel sick," Wood said.

The silvery round pump, about the size of a hockey puck, is implanted in the chest under local anesthesia. A tube relays the drugs to the hepatic artery, which carries them directly to the liver.

The device holds about 1½ ounces of drugs, and doctors can refill it with a needle.

The pump, called an Infusaid, was approved by the Food and Drug Administration a year ago for general use. Officials with the company that makes the pump, Metal Bellows Corp. of Sharon, Mass., said about 3,500 have been implanted in patients across the United States, mostly for colon cancer that has spread to the liver.

AP Laserphoto

When this four-inch diameter silver-colored round pump is implanted into the chest of a liver cancer victim, his life expectancy may be doubled. The tiny pump, called an Infusaid, administers powerful chemotherapy drugs directly to the cancerous tumor.

The research team at the Boston hospital has implanted about 100 more since their study was completed. The doctors are experimenting with different drugs to find some that are more effective.

"Now we're going through a series of different trials of some of the drug combinations," Wood said. "Of the first couple we have used, each has been better than the one before it."

Hearing set for representative

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A June 9 hearing has been set for a 30-year-old state representative accused of seeking sex for pay, a misdemeanor.

Gary L. Hannig, a Democrat, was arrested Tuesday night in downtown Springfield after allegedly offering $20 to an undercover policewoman to have sex with him.

Hannig said Wednesday he was innocent of the charges. "I was making conversation with different ladies and the next thing I knew, they accusd me of making an illegal offer," he said. "I deny it and I'm innocent and it's a legal matter.

"I do feel I have a right within the law as a bachelor to seek out female company," he said.

'Chair' ruled constitutional

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — The electric chair is a constitutional form of punishment and can be used for future executions in Alabama, two federal judges have ruled, dismissing claims that its use is cruel and unusual punishment.

U.S. District Judges Sam Pointer Jr. of Birmingham and W.B. Hand of Mobile said in a joint ruling Wednesday that although the chair may not function properly in the future, it is not "unconstitutional punishment."

Pointer said attorneys for death row inmates Wayne Eugene Ritter and Chastine Raines offered no testimony for their argument that John Louis Evans III, executed April 22, suffered pain, although it took three 30-second jolts of electricity to kill him.

Satellite photos come through

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — The first pictures from the National Weather Service's new satellite, GOES 6, were usable but not very good and will be corrected by computer, according to meteorologists.

Pictures from the new infrared-equipped GOES 6 began coming through Wednesday morning at a rate of two an hour, satellite meteorologist Ken Holmes said.

The pictures, even though imperfect, showed a "frontal system near the Gulf of Alaska" which probably will affect the weather in the eastern United States early next week, he said.

GOES 6 replaces the old GOES West satellite, which failed on Nov. 26, 1982, blanking out the nighttime view of storms moving across the Pacific.

Attorney studies new motions

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — The Bristol County district attorney is studying new and undisclosed motions filed by defense attorneys for six men charged with raping a 21-year-old woman in a bar.

Judge Augustus Wagner ordered the motions sealed Wednesday and postponed arguments until June 13. The judge also ordered the attorneys not to reveal matters discussed with him in a half-hour conference Wednesday.

The six were arrested after police were told the woman had been raped on a pool table at Big Dan's Tavern on March 6 for about two hours while several patrons watched and some cheered.

Wagner is expected to set a trial date at the June 13 session.

'Human error weakens airline safety'

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Republic Airlines' Flight 366 made an emergency landing 18 miles short of its destination, the jetliner carrying 86 people had just enough fuel for another 30 seconds of flying time.

Human error that accounted for the near crash, in this case the failure to refuel the DC-9 before takeoff, is a direct or contributing factor in about 60 percent of airline accidents, the National Transportation Safety Board officials said Wednesday.

The Republic jetliner had just five gallons of fuel when an engine failed last Saturday. The crew restarted the engine and landed the plane at an airbase 18 miles short of its destination, Sky Harbor International Airport in Phoenix, officials said.

"We're trying to determine the underlying problem as to why these things happen," said Bob Buckhorn, an NTSB spokesman. Federal accident investigators have begun "to put new emphasis on human performance."

Flight 366's close call is just the latest in a rash of near catastrophes involving airliners that were caused by human error.

—A Boeing 737 carrying 95 people made an unexpected belly landing at the Casper, Wyo., airport March 23 after the pilot and co-pilot of the Frontier Airlines jet forgot to lower the landing wheels.

—A Republic DC-9 stalled four about four minutes above the mountains in southern Utah April 2 because the pilot had failed to turn on a fuel pump.

Rabbi attacked as rivalries flare

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

BROOKLYN, N.Y. — Although Rabbi Pinchus Korf has lived in the United States since 1953, he does not speak English well. But so well known is he as a teacher within Brooklyn's Hasidic Lubavitcher movement that two months ago, he was asked by 18-year-old David Cohen from a rival Hasidic group — the Satmar — to tutor him in religion.

Such things are not done easily. Though all Hasidic Jews may appear to an outsider to be one, differences between the Satmar and the Lubavitcher have flared into violence during the past few years.

"How would you feel if your daughter were raped before your eyes?" a Satmar spokesman asked. "The Jewish community have always protected their religion with their lives and have generations of sacrifices to prove for it."

Korf, however, agreed to teach Cohen — but only, he says, because the youth's parents consented, although reluctantly. "We're not soul-snatching, sneaking, underhanded missionaries," explained Korf's wife, Chaya.

Cohen's parents made one stipulation: Instead of allowing the boy to travel to the Crown Heights section, which is Lubavitcher territory, Korf would travel to the boy, to his father's office in Williamsburg — Satmar territory.

Last Friday afternoon, when Korf arrived at the rundown office of the Katz Picture Frame Corp. under the elevated tracks, he later told police, he was attacked by five or six Satmars, who beat him, threatened to kill him and then cut off his beard — the symbol of his religion.

"Right away they started screaming," Korf said. "They take the handles from the phone, then give a hit to the father in the head and scream we are missionaries to take away their children. In Yiddish, they say, 'We will kill all of you.' They will kill the son if he comes to Crown Heights. They will kill me if I come to Williamsburg.

"Then they take the father and the son out of the room, lock the door and started to cut my beard. I screamed, 'No,' they shouldn't do it.

Asked about the rabbi's complaint, one high-ranking police officer would say only that the police were investigating.

Both Satmar and Lubavitcher rabbis condemned the reported attack but with different emphases. "Are we in Nazi Germany? In Soviet Russia?" said Lubavitcher Rabbi Yehuda Krinsky. "I don't know what the Satmar teach in their schools, but in ours, we teach that our religion is born out of love. If you love someone, you want to share your bounty with them ...."

John Glenn boasts of poll results

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Glenn says the latest polls show his presidential campaign is making "remarkable progress" while aides to Democratic frontrunner Walter Mondale say the figures are "etched in sand at the water's edge."

Citing poll figures showing him gaining on Mondale, Glenn said in letters mailed this week to contributors and 12,000 Democratic Party activists that "the good news is beginning to roll in."

But campaign aides to the former vice-president doubt the significance of polls taken so far.

Officials question testing

MIDLAND, Mich. (AP) — State officials say they welcome Dow Chemical Co.'s plans to spend $3 million on new tests to determine dioxin contamination and cancer incidence in the Midland area, but they are a little skeptical.

Jack Bails, head of the Department of Natural Resources Environmental Enforcement Division, tentatively praised Dow's plans, but implied they were self-serving.

"Anytime a company takes on their own problems ... that would lessen the probability the state will order them" to take action, Bails said.

Dow's program might be designed to fend off possible state lawsuits over alleged dioxin contamination, said Assistant Attorney General Stewart Freeman.

The Midland-based chemical company unveiled the six-part program Wednesday. Much of it would involve outside scientists, auditors and the state and federal government, the company said.

Dow officials said they were confident the program will support their assertions that dioxin is a widespread pollutant which poses no health danger at the trace levels found in the environment.

"(But) we will accept whatever these studies are provide," Dow President Paul Oreffice said at a news conference.

Dioxin — specifically the type known as 2,3,7,8-TCDD — is an unwanted byproduct of herbicide production and is considered one of the most toxic chemicals known. Dow has been blamed by the state and federal government for being the main source of dioxin contamination in Michigan.

The chemical has been found in several Michigan rivers and soils in Midland, Lansing, Detroit and Chicago. It is the pollutant which led the federal government to buy up contaminated property in Times Beach, Mo.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has proposed a $12 million nationwide dioxin study, which would include testing of air, soil and water samples in Michigan.

THE BETTER HALF

"In your price range, the only island you can visit is the self-service one at the gas station."

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, June 3, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Confederacy President Jefferson Davis, singer-dancer Josephine Baker, operatic star Jan Peerce and auto racing's Barney Oldfield were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor Tony Curtis, Philadelphia 76ers' coach Billy Cunningham, poet Allen Ginsberg and the Dead End Kids' Leo Gorcey. A conflict in your personal life will soon come to an end. Your financial fortunes take a turn for the better. The business climate shows marked improvement. A new partnership will bring lasting benefits. Let creditors help you solve a problem resulting from a past venture. A family business gets a fresh lease on life. Romance accelerates.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Trips will bring results and be worth their expense. The children in your life require more attention. Trim your entertainment expenses. Gullibility could be your downfall.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A good day for selling or buying property. You can get your asking price now if you really want to sell a gem or piece of real estate. Know your priorities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): It might be necessary to stand in for a colleague today. Do it cheerfully. A promotion is possible if you do a good job. Your co-workers will be happy about your success.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Try not to do anything that will help a loved one's feelings. Romance deserves a chance to grow. Cut down on those little luxuries that are undermining the budget.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Someone who asks you to act on his behalf may not be leveling with you. Investigate further before saying "yes." The timing is right for putting an old plan into action.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Quarrels may arise at work. Lie low. You have nothing to gain from meeting with someone who obviously does not like you. There are many more fish in the sea.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take advantage of an unusual opportunity to sharpen your skills. Those who gossip should be given a wide berth. You will want to use the element of surprise in a business deal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Show more initiative and you make waves on the job scene. Blow your own horn! A real estate project gets off the ground after many false starts. Casual conversations prove enlightening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be aware of the ulterior motives of an overly friendly newcomer. Romance begins to look up. Those actively seeking employment get good news. Practice small economies if pinched for money.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be prepared to decide between several options today. Late acceptance into college delights a teen-ager. A scholarship is possible. Adopt an easygoing manner when discussing ticklish problems.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can expect some resistance from your colleagues today. Business trips are apt to be futile or highly expensive. You can avoid strife by becoming a better listener.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Good news or a lucky encounter brighten your day. Complete paperwork before taking off for the weekend. Think twice about making an expensive purchase.

-Actress reaches top with show

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Despite a late start and years of rejections, Barbara Bosson says she's finally earned recognition as Fay Furillo, the insecure, whining ex-wife of a cop on NBC's "Hill Street Blues."

"For the first time in my life, I'm really beginning to feel part of it," the tall, wavy-haired brunette said recently, during a rare visit to her southwestern Pennsylvania hometown.

For Ms. Bosson, 43, the real-life wife of "Hill Street Blues" executive producer and co-creator Steve Bochco, her role as the ex-wife of Police Capt. Frank Furillo was a long time coming.

Born the daughter of a milkman in nearby Belle Vernon, Ms. Bosson decided at age 4 to become an actress.

Her family moved to St. Petersburg, Fla., when she was 13. After graduating from high school, she returned to Pennsylvania and enrolled at the Pittsburgh Playhouse, a community theater and acting school. She was asked to leave after a year.

Ms. Bosson moved to New York, hoping to earn enough money to attend Pittsburgh's Carnegie Institute of Technology, now Carnegie-Mellon University. She worked as a secretary, TV production assistant and cocktail waitress while studying drama and auditioning unsuccessfully for various parts.

Ms. Bosson left college after one year to join The Committee, a West Coast group that improvised at satire. She joined the troupe, debuting on network television as part of "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour."

It was during a Committee performance in Los Angeles that she ran into Bochco, a friend and fellow student from Carnegie-Mellon who was writing for Universal Studios.

A year later, in 1969, the two were married. Shortly afterward, their daughter, Melissa, now 13, was born.

The actress' career virtually stopped as she assumed the role of full-time mother and wife.

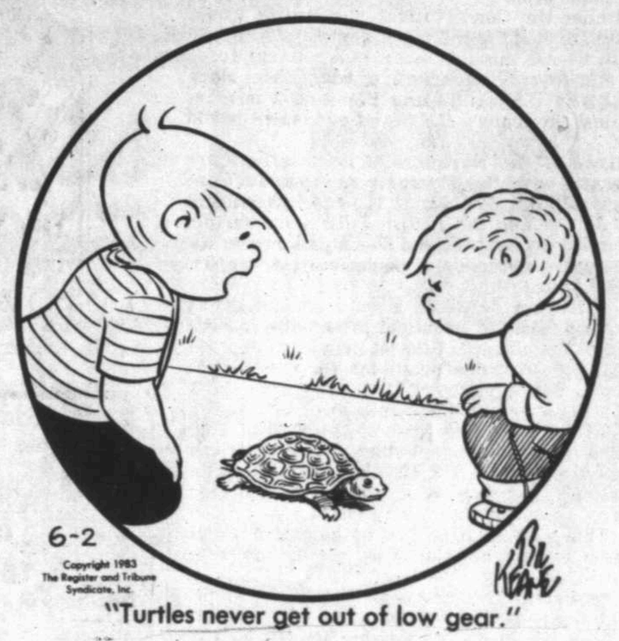

It wasn't until five years ago, after both her children were older, that she "started actively trying to work again as an actress." Pegged as a comedian from her days with The Committee, she failed to land any major dramatic roles and instead began writing TV scripts.

The turnaround came when her husband offered her the role of Fay Furillo in "Hill Street Blues."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♠.

In the play of the hand, there is seldom such a thing as a useless card. Even a choice of twospots can be critical, as this hand from a European team match illustrates.

The auction was a matter of simple arithmetic. Both teams reached the normal three no trump contract in just two bids.

At both tables the opening lead was a low spade, and the defenders reeled in the first four tricks. The declarers had to make a discard on the fourth spade, and their choices proved decisive in the match.

At one table declarer discarded a club from dummy and a diamond from his hand. West exited with a club, won on the table, and the jack of hearts was finessed successfully. When two high diamonds disclosed the break, declarer had only eight tricks. He tried to drop the king of hearts for his fulfilling trick, but when that didn't work, he had to concede down one.

The other declarer proved to be more far-sighted. He sluffed a club from dummy and the two of hearts from his hand. He won the club shift in dummy with the king and finessed the heart. When the king-ace of diamonds revealed the unfortunate break, declarer cashed the ace of clubs to bring about this position:

NORTH

Now declarer led the queen of clubs and sluffed the ten of diamonds from the board, and East had no recourse. If he pitched a diamond, declarer would cross to the queen of diamonds and return to his hand with the ace of hearts to take the last diamond; if he parted with a heart, declarer would fell the king of hearts with the ace and the two red ladies on the table would score the last two tricks.

U.S.nuclear policy poses problem

LONDON (AP) — Here in Britain, where 16 U.S. cruise missiles are due to arrive in December, the course of American nuclear policy and the future of the NATO alliance are being put to the test in an increasingly nasty national election campaign.

Protesters are mobilizing to block the weapons, the vanguard of 572 missiles to be deployed in Europe by 1988 if U.S.-Soviet negotiations do not produce a treaty, and the country's strategic ties to the United States are under severe strain.

Even a clear victory for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her ruling Conservative Party June 9 could bring quiet pressure on President Reagan for further modifications of the U.S. stance in arms control talks with the Soviets.

Unlike America's more vocal partners, such as West Germany, the British have already played a subdued but significant role in persuading Reagan to shelve his "zero-option" proposal and seek an agreement sharply reducing European missiles instead of eliminating them all at once.

For the most part, though, Mrs. Thatcher stands squarely for the eventual deployment of 160 cruise missiles on British soil by 1988 and the purchase of $10 billion worth of U.S. Trident D5 submarine-launched missiles over the next decade.

The alliance of Liberals and Social Democrats, which she might have to depend on to run Britain if the Conservatives do not win a majority, would make major revisions in Britain's defense policy.

And Labor, led by Michael Foot, a champion of unilateral disarmament, would stand current policy on its head.

Under the Conservatives, the British would maintain their four Polaris nuclear submarines with 64 A-3 missiles as an independent force — and resist Soviet efforts to count them along with the U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles against the limits a U.S.-Soviet agreement would set.

Even if the Euromissile negotiations are merged with the Strategic Arms Reductions Talks (START), a re-elected Thatcher government would exclude the British Polaris submarines from the negotiations, but possibly reconsider if a substantial reduction of Soviet nuclear weapons were in the offing.

A Thatcher defeat, or even a narrow victory requiring the Conservatives to seek the cooperation of the alliance of Social Democrats and Liberals, could cause problems for the Reagan administration.

Interviewed in his home outside London, where he is fighting for political survival, John Cartwright, a prominent alliance member of parliament, defended Britain's retention of the Polaris submarines as an independent nuclear force.

"That's all we have ranged against strategic Soviet forces," he said. "They are for last-resort use."

But Cartwright, who is his country's co-representative to the North Atlantic Assembly, said the alliance would like to see the two sets of U.S.-Soviet talks merged and Polaris included in the bargaining.

Most significant for U.S. defense policy, the alliance is against the Trident purchase. "We're not in a war-fighting game," Cartwright said. "Britain needs a city-busting counterblow like Polaris. But we don't need a highly sophisticated system that knocks out hardened deterrents."

Before deciding whether to deploy the cruise missiles, the alliance would like to check the progress of the Geneva negotiations.

The alliance would be able to impose its views on a Conservative government to the extent that the Tories needed the votes of Liberals and Sovial Democrats to rule.

A Labor victory — a long-shot according to the polls — would sharply reverse British nuclear policy and turn the country into possibly the most skeptical U.S. ally instead of the most steadfast one.

Labor's radical platform promises to cancel the Trident deal, halt the deployment of cruise missiles, expel U.S. nuclear bombers and submarines from British bases and put the Polaris force in multilateral disarmament negotiations.

The manifesto also favors the development of "a non-nuclear strategy" by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, an immediate nuclear freeze and, as an ultimate objective, the phasing out of both NATO and the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

Mrs. Thatcher accused Labor of proposing "one-sided disarmament" and the party itself appeared to be divided on how to phase out the Polaris. On Tuesday, Foot staked out a role for Britain in the Geneva talks.

"Nuclear arms negotiations are too important to be left to President Reagan and Mr. (Yuri) Andropov (the Soviet leader)," he said. "Our aim at the talks will be to reduce nuclear arms on all sides. Phasing out our Polaris force will be part of that process."

Spring miserable in Greek capital

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Unseasonably hot weather and daily transportation strikes have made life miserable for the 3.3 million residents of Athens.

On hot, windless days when the pollution cloud over the capital is at its thickest, hundreds of Athenians check into hospital outpatient clinics complaining of nausea and respiratory difficulties.

Brown pollution has replaced the once brilliantly blue skies, and traffic jams stretch for miles around the city on weekends.

Tourists fly in for a quick glance at the temples on the Acropolis and rapidly depart for the Aegean islands and other outlying sites. Athens hotel owners fear occupancy rates this season may drop below 60 percent.

Tourism is Greece's leading source of foreign exchange and brought in the equivalent of some $1.6 billion last year. At least 65 percent of all tourists — and there were 5.4 million last year — pass through Athens, according to travel agents' estimates.

Red and white "To Rent" signs have multiplied on grimy apartment buildings in the city center. Families are moving out to the pine-forested suburbs.

"It's cheaper and more convenient for my husband's job to live in the center, but I can't put up with it," Mary Lechonitis said.

Environment Minister Antony Tritsis says it will take 10 years to clean up the city's air completely. In the meantime, the government plans mass shutdowns this summer at factories around Athens, where more than 60 percent of Greek industry is located and few pollution-control devices function.

After 18 months in office, Premier Andreas Papandreou's Socialist government is taking some of the blame for the city's current woes.

Municipal bus and trolley workers fighting a government wage freeze staged daily strikes at peak commuting hours through April in support of pay increases. The city's 14,000 taxi drivers also took part.

"Since the drachma has devalued in January, our operating costs have shot up, but we haven't been allowed to raise fares," said taxi owner Dimitris Lolis.

Officers oppose Arafat's reign

HOUSH BARADA, Lebanon (AP) — A high-ranking officer of the PLO's main guerrilla group says he and more than two dozen other commanders have joined the mutiny against Yasser Arafat, but he predicts there will be no fighting between the rival factions.

The official, Mousa Awad, on Wednesday made public a manifesto opposing Arafat's 14-year reign as Palestine Liberation Organization leader. Awad, who uses the code name Abu Akram, is member of the Revolutionary Command Council of Arafat's Fatah guerrillas and heads the group's militia in Lebanon.

He read the names of 28 commanders he said had signed the manifesto, and said he was withholding the names of "a number" of others on the list because "they operate behind enemy lines and their names remain a military secret at the time being."

Among other things, the manifesto declared, "The only way to achieve our rights and liberate our lands is through military struggle."

Asked whether he thought the rebellion could turn into an armed struggle between Arafat's supporters and opponents, Abu Akram replied, "No. No. Never."

Meanwhile, the PLO's No. 2 man, Salah Khalaf, was quoted today by the United Arab Emirates newspaper al-Khaleej as criticizing Arafat, but also defending the PLO leader as "a symbol" of the Palestinian revolution.

He said arms would not be used against the Fatah rebels, appealing to them to enter into "a democratic dialogue" before their movement is influenced by "foreign elements."

Abu Akram claimed the rebels had 10,000 supporters, including 4,000 non-military members of Fatah.

"Thousands is an exaggerated figure," said a PLO official loyal to Arafat, "but they do enjoy wide support among guerrillas in the Bekaa Valley."

Reporters were brought from Damascus to Housh Barada, two miles west of ancient Baalbek, to meet with Abu Akram and three other rebel officers commanding guerrillas. They counted 150 guerrillas in the town.

Guerrillas supporting the rebellion was scattered along the narrow, rugged road cutting through mountains, which now is the mutineers' supply route. Some manned anti-aircraft guns while others were behind .50-caliber machine guns.

The mutineers took over the supply route after Arafat ordered food and fuel supplies to them cut off in an attempt to force an end to the mutiny. The rebels then seized six PLO supply warehouses in Damascus on Saturday, and the Syrian government did not interfere.

The mutiny was launched May 7 by Saeed Mousa, who was deputy chief of operations in Fatah's military command. He was joined by other dissidents who Arafat supporters say have the support of the Syrian and Libyan governments.

Arafat, touring Fatah units in eastern and northern Lebanon to try to prevent the spread of the mutiny, claims only about 150 guerrillas have defected.

But the seizure of the supply warehouses, the takeover of the supply road and the defection of Abu Akram, whose militia is separate from the 10,000 to 12,000 PLO guerrillas in Lebanon, indicated the growing strength of the rebel movement.

The anti-Arafat declaration said the mutinous officers reject President Reagan's peace proposal calling for a Palestinian entity associated with Jordan, the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement, the aborted negotiations between Arafat and King Hussein of Jordan to try to agree on terms for a peaceful settlement with Israel, and efforts to end the Arab embargo of Egypt.

The memorandum said the mutineers also will not accept any decision to withdraw Palestinian guerrillas from Lebanon.

It also condemned the Fez peace plan, "particularly its seventh clause," agreed upon last September at an Arab summit conference in Fez, Morocco.

Terrorist gang members arrested

ROME (AP) — Police say they have arrested three suspected members of the leftist Front Line terrorist gang, including a woman who escaped in a spectacular prison break 17 months ago.

Federica Meroni, 28; Maria Pia Sacchi, 24, and Omero Mollica, 37, were picked up in a hideout Saturday in Ladispoli, a seacoast town near Rome, police said Wednesday. Announcement of the arrests was delayed until related anti-terrorist operations were completed.

Miss Meroni and three other women escaped frov a prison in northeastern Italy, in January 1982 when accomplices blew a hole in the prison wall. All now have been recaptured.

Party asks for U.S. policy change

BONN, West Germany (AP) — About 400 members of West Germany's opposition Social Democratic Party have asked the U.S. Congress to try to change the Reagan administration's Central American policy.

A letter from the Social Democrats said U.S. arms deliveries to El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras should be stopped and the Reagan administration should cease what the West Germans said were efforts to overthrow the government of Nicaragua.

The Reagan administration has been "blind to the real causes of the crisis" in Central America, said the letter, which was handed to the U.S. Embassy in Bonn for delivery in Washington.

Among those signing the letter were 55 members of the West German Parliament.

Women encouraged to work

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — King Fahd says Saudi women are being encouraged to join the workforce in an effort to decrease the kingdom's dependence on foreign workers.

The monarch, at a question-and-answer session Wednesday at King Saud University, discussed the issue of whether Saudi women — until recently kept at home behind veils in line with Islam tradition — should be allowed a larger role in jobs related to the country's development plans.

"The government is very much interested in this issue...to give girls a wider scope in the building of their country," Fahd said.

He said women students will be allowed to receive masters degrees in certain subjects, but he ruled out allowing woman working in "unsuitable" fields such as agricultural or construction engineering.

Stolen eagle found, recaptured

BIRKENHEAD, England (AP) — Fishy, an eagle stolen a week ago from the Welsh Mountain Zoo at Colwyn Bay, Wales, was found and recaptured 50 miles away by a gardener walking his dog.

Ellis Jones, 53, backed the West African eagle — which has a reputation for fierceness — toward a ditch Wednesday, and when it fell onto its back he snapped the dog's leash onto a ring around the eagle's foot.

Zoo director Tony Jackson presented Jones with reward of 100 pounds, about $160, and told reporters the bird's abducters must have driven it to Birkenhead, 50 miles from the zoo. After 13 years in the zoo, he said, the eagle could never have made the distance on its own.

Poles go to Sweden for asylum

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A weather-beaten fishing boat brought eight Poles to Sweden in search of asylum, but a young crewman said he wanted to return home, police sources reported.

The boat was sighted off Karlskrona, on the southern coast, by a navy patrol. The Poles asked for fresh water and were escorted into the harbor by a police boat. After they docked, the skipper asked for asylum or transit visas to another country for himself and seven relatives — three men, two women and two children, police said.

Teen beats Elton John at pingpong

Elton John

PEKING (AP) — Rock star Elton John, visiting China with the British soccer team he owns, took time out to play pingpong with some children, and was defeated in a match against a teen-ager.

But his soccer team beat China's national team 3-1 in a game before an estimated 80,000 fans.

Watford Soccer Team finished second in the British Football League's first division Wednesday as part of a three-game China tour.

"This is a beautiful experience," said John, 36, after the pingpong match, which he lost to 13-year-old Li De Qun.

Wednesday's match at the Children's Palace attracted a crowd of curious children, even though much of John's rock 'n roll and disco music is banned in China.

Dan Akroyd

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Dan Aykroyd and actress Donna Dixon wanted to keep their marriage a secret — so they got married on a friend's rooftop a month ago without making the wedding public.

A spokeswoman for Aykroyd, Susan Patricola, said Wednesday that the 30-year-old comic and Ms. Dixon, 25, exchanged vows April 29 in Chilmark, Mass., on Martha's Vineyard.

"They just didn't want anyone to know," Ms. Patricola said. "They were married on a friend's rooftop because that's where they wanted to get married."

It is the first marriage for both.

Donna Dixon

LONDON (AP) — Actor Roger Moore, surrounded by beauties from his sixth James Bond thriller, "Octopussy," refused to say whether there will be a seventh.

'Who knows?," he told reporters at a news conference Wednesday.

But he also said, "Seven is my lucky number and it is my birth number. I always look sympathetically at seven, that is why I have backed the seventh horse in the Derby today — The Guns of Navarone. I put 70 pounds ($112) on it. I expect it'll come in seventh."

The horse finished fifth at the Epsom Derby.

"Octopussy" premieres Monday and Prince Charles and Princess Diana are expected to attend.

Armand Hammer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Industrialist Armand Hammer says he always has believed that art is "a universal language and should be shared with people throughout the world."

That's why he is launching an eight-month tour of his 89-work collection, "Five Centuries of Masterpieces."

The 85-year-old board chairman of Occidental Petroleum Corp. personally will open the tour June 6 in Budapest, Hungary. The works will be shown in Hungary, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia.

The collection includes such American works as Gilbert Stuart's "Portrait of George Washington" and Andrew Wyeth's "Brandywine Valley," and European masterpieces including as Renoir's "'Grape Pickers at Lunch" and Van Gogh's "Hospital at Saint-Remy."

Ross Barnett

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Former Gov. Ross Barnett, who gained a national reputation as a die-hard segregationist, says he might accept an invitation to ride in a parade commemorating slain black civil rights activist Medgar Evers.

Barnett was governor when Evers was gunned down June 12, 1963, in the front yard of the civil rights leader's Jackson home.

Barnett, 85, tentatively has accepted an invitation for Sunday's parade during the annual Medgar Evers Mississippi Homecoming.

The invitation was issued by Charles Evers, former mayor of Fayette and brother of Medgar Evers. He said Barnett was invited because he wants to show how far Mississippi has come since his brother's death.

LONDON (AP) — Solo yachtsman Tom McClean, hoping to recapture the record for crossing the Atlantic in the smallest boat, says his vessel is smaller than he first said it was.

"I let everyone think it was bigger to make sure no one else tried to beat me to it," McClean told reporters at London's Heathrow Airport before boarding a flight Wednesday for Canada.

McClean previously had said his boat, Giltspur, was 8 feet, 11 inches long. But it is actually 7 feet, 10.5 inches, he said Wednesday.

McClean, 41, of Maillaig, Scotland, was the first person to cross the Atlantic west to east in a boat smaller than 10 feet.

That record has since been beaten twice by Americans Billy Dunlop of Mechanic Falls, Maine,and Wayne Dickinson of Satellite Beach, Fla.

McClean said he plans to leave St. John's, Newfoundland, in about a week and hopes to reach Falmouth, England, in 50 days.

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Prince Charles, 79, Count of Flanders, King Baudouin's uncle and Belgium's regent for six years while it debated whether to dethrone King Leopold III after World War II, died Wednesday.

He became regent for his older brother, King Leopold, in 1944, when the retreating Germans took the king with them as a prisoner of war. Charles was the second son of King Albert I, Belgium's hero-king in World War I.

IPSWICH, England (AP) — Caroline Bradley, Britain's top woman equestrian, died Wednesday after collapsing during a showjumping event. She was 37.

Miss Bradley was a leading international competitor and won events in the annual Horse of the Year show at Wembley, as well as top honors each year at the Royal Windsor, Newark and Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, Suffolk, Birmingham, Royal Cornwall and Amberley shows.

Gabor's attitude upsets handicapped patrons

Zsa Zsa Gabor

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A group of handicapped people, some in tears, abruptly left a dinner theater after entertainer Zsa Zsa Gabor refused to keep performing unless they moved from tables near the stage, according to their escort.

"She made me feel so ashamed," said Beverly Stabler, 44, who suffered brain damage when she was hit by a car 30 years ago. "We can't help that we're in wheelchairs. It's just by the grace of God we have them to get around."

The incident occurred during intermission Tuesday night at the City Line Dinner Theater, where Miss Gabor is starring in the play "Forty Carats," re-creating her Broadway role.

Deborah Missanelli, a direct-care supervisor at the Woods School in suburban Langhorne, said a waiter told her that Miss Gabor had instructed him to move six people in wheelchairs from their seats near the stage to the back of the theater.

"These are all patients who were normal until a certain point in their lives when a car accident left them brain-damaged," Ms. Missanelli said. "They knew what was happening. Women were dressed in formals and the guys wore coats and jackets. It made them feel dignified to go out and see a star, although I wouldn't use that word now to describe her."

Numerous calls to the dinner theater Wednesday failed to reach either the actress or her agent, Robert Hussong of Beverly Hills, Calif. An employee who declined to be identified said he did not know how Miss Gabor or the agent could be reached.

Ms. Missanelli said all 16 people in the group were well-behaved during the performance. Some tend to laugh loudly or a little later than non-handicapped people might, she said.

"But no one laughed at an inappropriate moment," she said. "No one complained, except Miss Gabor." She said she looked around the theater for alternate seating for a few minutes, but the group soon decided to leave.

Those attending paid $20.05 each for a buffet supper and Miss Gabor's show.

"I find it hard to understand why she would do something like that," said Charles Volpe, public relations director for the theater. Volpe said the theater has admitted handicapped guests in the past.

"It's difficult to deal with a Hollywood star of her stature," Volpe said. "She's not an ordinary person like you and me who can get kicked around."

Dr. Dan Keating, a psychologist who coordinates the head-trauma program, called the theater Wednesday to protest. In response, he said, the management offered free tickets to another theater to see the musical "Annie."

"Any attempt to make it up to us doesn't do away with the harm that was already done," Keating said. But he said that the opportunity to go out into the community was so important that he accepted the offer.

"I want them to know that we are not going to allow this incident to keep us from demanding the right our clients have to participate in these activities," he said. "Maybe when Zsa Zsa leaves and another show follows, we can go back."

Cartoonist suspended over obscene cartoon

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

BOSTON — Paul Szep, Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist for the Boston Globe, has been suspended without pay for two weeks for putting a Russian language obscenity in one of his cartoons.

The cartoon, published by the Globe in its early morning edition Friday, shows Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov calling President Reagan a name that is offensive in any language.

"I didn't know what it meant," Szep said when reached at home Wednesday. "I assumed it was a mild swear word."

Instead, the word is an obscenity.

Szep's cartoon is captioned: "Reagan asks for upgrading of hot line with Yuri Andropov."

It shows Reagan grinning into a telephone and saying, "Hey Yuri, guess who's getting a new MX missile system to help arms reduction and world peace?" Andropov, at the other end of line, replies with a word that was changed in later editions to read "!!."

Szep, 41, who won Pulitzer Prizes for the Globe in 1974 and 1977, explained that when he drew the cartoon, he was more concerned with what the word looked like than what it meant.

"I wanted to use real Russian," he said. But, he said, he did not know any Russian.

So, Szep said, he told a Globe reporter who speaks Russian about his cartoon idea and asked him what Andropov would be likely to respond to Reagan.

The Globe reporter's response is what Szep wrote in his cartoon.

Szep said he did not ask the reporter what it meant, and figured that because the Globe is not widely read in the Soviet Union, few of the Globe's readers would know anyway.

He forgot about all the Russian emigres in the Boston area and Russian scholars in the dozens of area colleges.

"There were a lot of calls," he said.

When the callers explained the meaning of the word, "it was a shock to me," Szep said. "It was a greater shock to my editor."

That would be Marty Nolan, editorial page editor of the Globe. Nolan was in his office Wednesday but did not return repeated telephone calls.

Nolan's view of the matter is not hard to guess, however. It was he who ordered the suspension, Szep said.

Szep said Nolan asked him for the name of the reporter who had given him the word. "I didn't give the name out," Szep said. "One suspension is enough."

Las Vegas war between cheaters, casinos escalates

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sophisticated surveillance cameras hidden in decorative bubbles or behind smoked glass sweep across plush casinos, picking up details as minute as the number of diamonds in a player's ring.

The unending war between the casino and the chiseler escalates daily, with a small army of surveillance people and elaborate electronic equipment constantly challenging the cheater.

The card sharks of the Wild West era would slip an ace up their sleeves. Today they count cards with the aid of toe-operated calculators concealed in their shoes.

The game is the same — the house vs. the cheater. But now the stakes are in the millions. James Avance, chairman of the Nevada Gaming Control Board, estimates cheaters take $20 million a year from the state's casinos.

Those same casinos spend millions more sorting out customer from cheater — and prosecuting the latter.

"If one man can invent it, another man can figure out how to beat it," Summa Corp. spokesman Fred Lewis says of the never-ending battle to design a cheat-proof slot machine.

With some slots paying jackpots of $1 million or more, the one-armed bandits have become an attractive lure to cheaters and a focal point for surveillance cameras which babysit them around the clock.

"We can tell when a winner began playing one of our progressive slots," says Dave Hull, chief of security at the Las Vegas Hilton. "If someone hits a big jackpot, we can tell when he started, how many coins he's put in. Five people look at a videotape of that jackpot win. We get a computer printout of everything that's gone into that machine. We check every mechanic who's worked on it."

The smart slot cheaters know the attention paid the big winners. They opt to hit quarter machines for less blatant jackpots.

"If they can empty the quarter slots and get repeated payoffs, they can get away with hundreds of dollars a day," says Ralph Wente, a former FBI agent who now heads security for Summa's six casinos.

Some slot cheaters tie a coin to a string, dipping it up and down in the coin slot like a yo-yo. Now there are devices that snip the string.

Some use drills so tiny they can be carried in a woman's purse. The drills quickly chew a tiny hole in the side of the machine, into which a wire is slipped to regulate the spinning reels. When manufacturers countered with hardened steel cases, the cheaters responded with diamond drill bits.

Manufacturers responded with an electrical jolt for the cheater manning the drill or a shrill alarm to alert security guards.

Guards keep a wary eye for clusters of three or four people around a machine — a tell-tale sign that "blockers" are being used to hide the illegal activities of a cheater.

The Gaming Board provides casino security departments with training films detailing cheating operations and how to spot them.

Wente is in charge of 250 security officers at the Summa properties while Hull heads a 109-member force at the sprawling 3,200-room Las Vegas Hilton.

On the second floor of the Hilton, surveillance specialists watch walls of television receivers. They can aim cameras to any corner of the casino, zeroing in on the action to detect the tiniest of spots on cards fanned out across the green felt.

At the card tables, dealers watch players. Floormen watch dealers. Pit bosses watch floormen. And the surveillance crews, in the "eye" above the casino, watch them all.
