Ferraro letting voters 'take a look'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro and her husband paid about 40 percent of their income in taxes during the last five years, but because of an accountant's error in 1978 they are sending the Internal Revenue Service a check for an additional $53,459, according to financial records released today.

Copies of the income-tax returns filed jointly and separately by the couple since 1978 listed Ms. Ferraro as having gross income over those years of $332,474 and paying $130,922 in federal and city and state taxes in New York. This amounted to 39.38 percent of her gross income.

The tax returns showed that Zaccaro, a New York real-estate operator, had gross income during the period of $532,969 and paid $220,344 in total taxes, or 41.27 percent of his gross income.

Francis O'Brien, a spokesman for the Mondale-Ferraro campaign, said that an accountant's error in 1978 is causing the couple to send the IRS a check for $53,459 — representing an underpayment in the 1978 taxes of $29,709 and interest since then of $23,750. O'Brien said the error involved the undervaluation of a real-estate transaction.

"We are hoping the American public will be satisfied," Ms. Ferraro said Sunday, a day before she was to file the required financial disclosure forms with the Federal Election Commission.

A problem in copying documents caused a delay in the release of the documents, according to a spokeswoman for the Ferraro campaign. The material was originally scheduled to be released at a 10 a.m. EDT news briefing, but that was moved back to 1 p.m. EDT.

The issue of Zaccaro's tax returns has surrounded her Democratic campaign since she announced Aug. 12 that, despite her earlier pledge to make them public, her husband was refusing to release his tax returns.

On Saturday, however, she issued a statement saying that the New York City real estate owner and manager had changed his mind.

"One of the reasons why John decided to disclose was that people were jumping to the most outrageous conclusions on a lot of things, and it was getting worse rather than better," Ms. Ferraro said.

"He made the decision himself," she said. "He said, 'Gerry, I'm not going to hurt you and I'm going to release them.'"

Asked whether the documents would show whether the Ferraro-Zaccaro household had paid "its fair share of taxes," she replied: "They sure will."

Even as she spoke, new questions arose over the couple's last joint return in 1978.

Newsweek this week quoted unidentified aides to Democratic presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale as saying the couple underpaid their 1978 taxes and could owe from $60,000 to $250,000, including penalty and interest.

The magazine quoted sources as saying the underpayment resulted from a former family accountant's miscalculating the profits realized by Ms. Ferraro from the sale of her half-interest in a commercial property in Manhattan.

GOP convenes with call for 'four more'

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

DALLAS — Republicans today convened their 33rd national convention, with leaders telling confident delegates, "We're going to campaign on the strongest economy in three decades and seven presidents." President Reagan was on the campaign trail, trading jibes with Walter F. Mondale.

After a round of convention-eve partying in this sun-baked city, delegates gathered today to hear party chairman Frank Fahrenkopf Jr. call the convention to order with the ritual blast at the opposition.

He described last month's Democratic Convention as "an orgy of pressure groups" and called Mondale "just a man who can't say no." Vice president George Bush had kicked off the convention week activities Sunday with a call for "four more years."

Meanwhile, police today arrested a 30-year-old man who was allegedly carrying a note threatening the life of President Reagan.

Police said Mike Hitlaw, whom they described as a transient, was arrested on allegations of criminal trespass at 1:35 a.m. at Ratcliffe's Continental Seafoods near the downtown area.

Investigators said the restaurant manager called police after a man crossed a guardrail that led to the roof of the restaurant. Police Sgt. Michael Edmonds said the man "had a note in his pocket saying he wanted to shoot the president."

Hitlaw was taken to the Lew Sterrett Justice Center, where he was being held without bond.

Authorities said the Secret Service had been notified. Secret Service officials in Dallas and Washington refused to comment on the arrest.

The incident is the sixth convention-related arrest since Saturday, authorities said.

Fahrenkopf spoke just hours after government figures released in Washington showed the nation's Gross National Product grew at an annual rate of 7.6 percent in the last quarter, an indication that economic expansion for 1984 might be the strongest since the late 1940s.

Inflation, the economic achilles heel of the Carter administration, continued low at 3.2 percent.

Former vice president Mondale served with Jimmy Carter.

"We're not going to bring them back," he said of the previous Democratic administration. "We're talking about the arguably least effective presidency in history. We're not going to put those people back in the White House."

For many delegates the big topic wasn't politics or economics but the searing heat as the temperature set a record 108 degrees on Sunday and forecasters said that could be the norm for the convention week.

Party leaders promised to keep the sessions short and interesting. But it was unlikely anything close to the full complement of 2,235 delegates would be in their bright red seats for the morning session of welcoming speeches and housekeeping business.

The GOP convention program gets rolling tonight with the keynote speech by U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega and addresses by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and by Margaret Heckler, secretary of health and human services.

Midland man among protesters

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

DALLAS — The cool of the downtown Golden Arches, identified by a sign as "Texas Oval Office," provided a stark contrast to the searing heat outside.

Mike Gray of Midland had spent Sunday morning in the heat, attending a protest march and helping plant 50,000 small white crosses on a berm in back of Dallas Convention Center. Now, he sat in the cool of those arches eating an ice cream sundae.

He came to Dallas to protest the Administration's handling of Central America. He first would like to see the Administration begin allowing refugees from El Salvador into the United States and then to quit giving military aid to that country.

Gray, who works as a landscaper, is a Quaker and it is through that denomination — The Society of Friends — that he decided to take an active role in protesting government actions. In Dallas, the protest was organized by the Committee in Solidarity with People of Central America. It's an interdenominational movement, he said.

A protest march was held at 8 a.m. Sunday, followed by a news conference and the planting of the homemade crosses.

By noon, the protesters had scattered to find street corners or groups of people where they could lobby for their cause.

Gray is part of what he calls the Sanctuary Project, initiated by the Quakers, in which churches or other organizations offer sanctuary to Salvadoran refugees. Although the United States refuses to accept these people, Gray said Canada will. And it has been sanctuary groups in south Texas and south Arizona which have been taking in these people, beginning their journey on an "underground railroad" system that ends in Canada.

"The government is calling them economic refugees," said Gray, wearing a pale green T-shirt that proclaimed "Peace is Possible" with a white peace ribbon pinned to it. "They refuse to accept the fact they're coming from a war-torn country. We offer other political refugees asylum."

Instead, the U.S. is deporting Salvadoran refugees back to their home country. Gray contended that 30 to 40 percent of these people are not making it back to their homes from the airplane.

He pointed to Senate Bill 4447 which had been introduced by Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona which would allow these refugees asylum in the U.S. for three years and permit them to work during that time.

Gray did not know what would become of the refugees if their country has not become settled during the three-year period.

He argued against the Administration's contention that communists are at the root of El Salvador's trouble. "It's what you define as a communist. We have to quit being afraid of these people."

And as to the Sandinistas, Gray said President Reagan has no evidence of arms flowing from Nicaragua to El Salvador.

"Reagan blames everything on the Soviets. He believes he can fight a limited nuclear war and he might use Central America as an excuse to start one."

A group of Sikhs from India walked past the Texas Oval Office. Meanwhile, the fast-food restaurant began filling with red-bereted Guardian Angels.

"I have nothing against Republicans," said Gray. "Just their policy toward Central America. Whether it's a Republican war or a Democratic war, I'm against war. Whoever gets elected, I'd like to see him change the policy on what we're doing. You need to put people ahead of profits."

Reagan blasts Mondale's 'knee-jerk' style

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — President Reagan, stepping up his attack on Democrat Walter F. Mondale on the unsure battlegrounds of the Midwest, today branded the Democrats' call for a tax increase a "typical knee-jerk reaction."

"And believe me, when their knee jerks, you get kicked," Reagan said in remarks prepared for a rally in Cincinnati's redeveloping downtown.

Reagan used Ohio Sen. John Glenn, whom Mondale defeated for the Democratic presidential nomination, to attack the standard-bearer as "the candidate with the Left Stuff," a takeoff on Tom Wolfe's book and movie about Glenn and his fellow Mercury astronauts as the heroes with the Right Stuff.

Glenn, Reagan said, "told the truth. He said the policies of the current Democratic nominee would

Reagan campaigns as Reagan campaign stop

Associated Press

REAGAN, Texas — The folks in Reagan (population 200) are inviting President Ronald Reagan to make a campaign stop in their town.

Gerald Peyton, owner of Reagan's business district — a grocery store with gas pumps on Texas 6 — has hung a sign outside saying, "Reagan would welcome President Reagan."

He's printed up one T-shirt that says, "Reagan, Tx. is for Reagan," and he hopes to stir up some interest in a presidential visit.

"This should be the president's first stop after the Republican National Convention in Dallas," Peyton said.

Reagan is about 140 miles south of Dallas and 50 miles north of Bryan-College Station.

"We've got a nice community center," Peyton said. "I'll cook up some barbecue, and we'll do it up right."

Pauline Tusa, a Reagan resident and one of Peyton's customers, said she would help get up a petition, asking the president to stop by.

cause a huge increase in spending and taxing. And he said those policies revealed a fundamental lack of support for an adequate national defense."

Calling Glenn "an authentic American hero" who got a "bad rap," Reagan said:

"Well, I think the senator with the Right Stuff was right when he criticized the candidate with the Left Stuff... It's too bad the leaders of his party have stopped listening."

Reagan charged the Democrats not only will raise taxes, which Mondale has said he would do, but "will provide the kind of leadership that will make sure we all put on our hair shirts and feel properly despairing again, the kind of leadership that will stop growth and start talking about the age of limits again. Well, the only thing that's limited is their optimism and imagination."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Showers are forecast by the National Weather Service for parts of New Mexico, Colorado, Louisiana, Arkansas and Mississippi and from Kansas to Wisconsin and Michigan.

Temperatures in high 90s should continue in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Temperatures like Sunday's 97-degree high will be experienced by Midlanders through Tuesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Conditions tonight will be fair with a low in the 70s and winds from the south at five to 10 mph. The predicted high for Tuesday will be in the upper 90s with five to 10 mph southeasterly winds.

Sunday's 97-degree high was only 6 degrees cooler than the 103 record set in 1977. The 67-degree low recorded this morning was nine degrees above the record set in 1940.

STATE

A weak, stationary front brought scattered showers and thunderstorms, some heavy, to East and Central Texas today, while a high-pressure ridge hovering over the Lone Star State kept skies elsewhere mostly fair, with the prospect of hot temperatures.

The National Weather Service reported rainfall from Texarkana to Paris and Waco to Temple. The stationary front stretched from Abilene into the Permian Basin near Midland.

NATION

Scattered thundershowers erupted over parts of Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah and California today while a sizzling heat wave baked parts of Texas, including Dallas, site of the Republican National Convention this week.

Severe storms swept through areas of the Outer Banks of Cape Hatteras, N.C., on Sunday, bringing high winds, waterspouts and lightning that was blamed for at least one house fire at Salvo on Hatteras Island.

The cause of a second fire in a rental cottage in Avon has not been determined. No one was injured in either fire, and damage was described as minor.

Oil-stained shrimp spotting coast

Associated Press

GALVESTON — Oil-soaked nets, shrimp spotted with crude and football-sized tarballs are among the hauls of Galveston area shrimpers these days.

Local shrimpers are scratching their heads in bewilderment at reports from environmental experts that there has been no impact on marine life from the July 30 oil spill from the British tanker Alvenus.

This is normally the best time of the shrimp season for small fishing boats, which drop their nets almost hugging the island's seawall. Even one mile away from shore, shrimp are hard to find at this time of the season. By September, the shrimp move into deeper waters.

Frank Auston, a 41-year-old shrimper, brought in part of his day's catch to show The Galveston

News. There were large shrimp, covered with oil.

Almost 3 million gallons of oil drifted down from the Alvenus, which was about 11 miles off the Louisiana coast when it inexplicably ruptured on July 30. Much of the Conoco-owned Venezuelan crude washed onto Galveston County beaches.

With oil still landing every day, an unknown amount apparently is on the bottom of the Gulf.

Divers, hired by the cleanup's general contractor, have attempted to find the borders of oil, as well as how much there is and whether it is moving.

The Coast Guard has reported that the remaining oil is not lying on the bottom, but "cruising" just above it. More dives are scheduled before officials determine how to remove it from the water.

"This is going to ruin our entire year," Auston said. "It's so thick on that bottom."

He estimated that the oil-soaked shrimp he brings up daily are worth between $300 and $700. On Saturday, with his boat trawling about three blocks off in the Gulf, an estimated 200 pounds of his catch ended up worthless.

The experts, however, are reporting a clean environment to the Texas Coastal and Marine Council.

"I personally do not think that the oil had an impact on the shrimp which would worry consumers," National Marine Fisheries Service director Ed Klima told the panel Friday. "Basically, the oil remained on the surface and it did not sink down."

"We really looked at the area fairly well from the beach to about 10 fathoms (12 miles), from Galveston to Sabine Pass and we found no problem," Klima told TCMC members.

The TCMC is a 16-member advisory body to the Texas Legislature, composed of senators, representatives and citizens. The panel helps develop guidelines for the management of coastal resources.

Klima said the fisheries service chartered a boat several days after the spill and took samples of marine life, but no contamination from oil was found.

Auston said the oil is so thick, he leaves his nets on the bottom for only 20 minutes, rather than the normal 90 minutes, otherwise "you can't pull them up, they'll be so heavy" with oil.

Football-sized tarballs have been caught in his nets since the spill occurred, he said.

After completing his haul and docking his boat, Auston said he soaks his nets in gasoline to remove the oil and uses the fuel to wash down his boat.

In contrast to his campaign stop in Missouri on Sunday, where Reagan sought to reassure farmers left behind by the economic recovery that he hadn't forgotten them, the emphasis today was on growth and the success of his economic program.

Calling Cincinnati "a modern boom town," Reagan pointed to the new skyscrapers and construction around Fountain Square as evidence of his administration's success in putting the nation's economy back on its feet.

"Let me tell you more about the healthy spiral," Reagan said. "It is based on the simple proposition that growth is good. And it starts with a foundation of faith: faith in the spirit of free people under God; and faith that the government will continue policies that will reward effort. And let me tell you, we will."

Reagan plans to fly to Dallas on Wednesday for his renomination. Reagan campaign director Edward J. Rollins said in a recent interview that Ohio, Illinois and Missouri are "very definitely up for grabs."

Although Reagan carried Missouri handily in 1980, the state has more than twice as many Democrats in Congress as Republicans, and Rollins said it had the "least consistent voting pattern of any state."

Like other heavily agricultural states, Missouri's economy has lagged behind the general recovery, and Reagan went there to assure voters he hadn't forgotten about the Farm Belt.

Reagan listened Sunday to farmers and state officials complain about high interest rates, government red tape, banks in agricultural communities running into financial trouble and the strong U.S. dollar, which they said had hurt farm exports by making U.S. goods too expensive to compete in world markets. Mondale hammered the same themes in his visits to Kansas City and Des Moines.

Reagan, speaking to about 3,500 fairgoers at the Missouri State Fair in Sedalia, called it "a fact of life right now in this heartland" that the economic recovery so evident in other parts of the country "has not

Netta Dickey, of the Presidential Scheduling Office at the White House, said the visit sounds like a good idea, but the town needs to submit a formal request in writing. Dickey is a native of Austin who moved to Washington after Reagan's win in 1980.

Reagan didn't fare too well in Reagan four years ago, and a presidential visit could help his chances here in November, townsfolk say.

In 1980, according to the Falls County clerk's office, the Reagan precinct gave Jimmy Carter 168 votes to Ronald Reagan's 120 votes.

Jack Smith, chairman of the Falls County Republican Party, said Reagan is a heavily Democratic area in a mostly Democratic county.

"Of the 6,000 voters in a general election in Falls County, about 30 percent will vote Republican," he said.

In this year's Republican primary, 107 voted in the GOP's only box in the county, the most ever, Smith said.

"Forty years ago this town was all Democrats," said Postmaster Bill Richardson, a Reagan native. "But Jimmy Carter did a lot to change folks' minds."

Since 1975, when Ronald Reagan challenged Gerald Ford for the Republican nomination, Richardson has been getting mail from a Brooklyn, N.Y., teacher.

The teacher thought his students would learn a little about politics and geography if they received a letter from Reagan, Texas. So Richardson is expecting a letter from William Sunners' class in September.

"There are only two Reagan post offices in the country," Richardson said, "this one and another in West Tennessee."

"I get a lot of requests for postmarked letters from the president's fans and from postmark collectors," Richardson pulled out a stack of requests from his desk at the post office.

The post office window overlooks two cotton gin trailer sheds, the only reminder of the industry that once supported the town.

There's not much left of Reagan, the town that began as a way station for railroad workers.

The first settlement was at Hog Island, Richardson said, adding that "the people who now live in Hog Island call it Rosedale."

But that place was too close to Marlin, the county seat, for a section house, so the railroad moved its interests to Reagan.

"This was a booming place," Richardson said. "There were two cotton gins, a blacksmith shop, a hardware store, two drug stores, a big mercantile store and a bank."

Midlanders turn out for Bush barbecue

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

DALLAS — "This convention would have some difficulty coming off without Midland," muttered Win Brown Sunday night at the Texas Friends of Vice-President and Mrs. George Bush Barbecue.

The affair at Dallas' Apparel Mart, attended by about 300 Texans and friends, came at the end of a long day of parties for delegates to the Republican National Convention.

Delegates or not, more than 25 percent of the "friends" sponsoring the barbecue were from Midland. A press aide to Bush remarked that each "friend" gave at least $1,000. Of 47 contributors, 17 were from Midland.

The list included Mr. and Mrs. Martin Allday, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Durham, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Holt, Mr. and Mrs. W.D. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Knox, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Leede, J. Hugh Liedtke, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Pevehouse, Mr. and Mrs. John Redfern, Mr. and Mrs.

Deane Stoltz, Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Wagner Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Dub Yarbrough.

Even the food was imported — from Odessa. It was cooked and served by the Odessa Chuck Waggon Gang.

A Republican official told the Win Browns there were 73 parties going on Sunday. The Browns hit four; some of the other Midland delegates had attended only one or two.

Dressed casually in a brown suit and white short-sleeved shirt — sans tie — Bush talked for a few minutes about the grassroots efforts in the campaign. Then he shed the coat and worked his way through the crowd. In addition to Republicans, other celebrities included some Olympic winners — a woman swimmer who won two gold medals and a man who won a silver in the pentathlon.

Bobby Holt and his wife Joanie sat at the Bush table. David and Roxie Godfrey, and Tom, Nadine and daughter Christie Craddick, and Lou and Win Brown sat at another table. As Brown looked over the hall and kept spotting more Midlanders, he said, "It looks like half of Midland is here."

Patricia Bario, a spokeswoman for Ms. Ferraro, told The Associated Press that an error was made on the 1978 return, but Ms. Bario said the underpayment involved only "$50,000, $60,000."

In May 1978, Ms. Ferraro acquired half-interest in the building for a $25,000 cash investment. Her partner was Manny Lerman, a New York City business associate of Zaccaro's.

Later that year, the Federal Election Commission questioned loans made by Zaccaro and the couple's three children to Ms. Ferraro's first congressional campaign. The FEC in 1979 fined Zaccaro and the campaign $750 for $109,000 in improper campaign loans.

To help raise the money needed to replace the loans, Ms. Ferraro in October 1978 sold her half-interest to Lerman. Anthony Essaye, a lawyer helping prepare Ms. Ferraro's disbursements, said she received $100,000 from Lerman, which Essaye described as a fair price.

Newsweek revealed, however, that early in 1979 Zaccaro bought back the half-interest from Lerman for the same price.

"These elaborate transactions could be interpreted as a device to allow Zaccaro to channel money to his wife's campaign in spite of federal spending limits," Newsweek speculated.

Treasurer to keynote convention session

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS — Even Walter F. Mondale would agree that Katherine Davalos Ortega, the keynoter tonight at the Republican National Convention, is right on the money.

That's where the government will print her name 5.8 billion times this year alone.

Mrs. Ortega, 50, an accountant and former bank president, is the $66,400-a-year treasurer of the United States. In addition to lending her no-nonsense, easily read signature to new currency, she runs the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the U.S. Mint, and drums up sales of U.S. Savings Bonds and Olympic gold coins.

The post has been held by women ever since Harry S. Truman appointed Georgia Neese Clark in 1949. Mrs. Ortega is the 10th woman treasurer. She is divorced, but uses her maiden name and prefers to be known as Mrs. Ortega. She added Davalos — her mother's maiden name — to her signature to honor her mother.

Clearly one consideration that led to her selection as keynoter was her name again — a desire by the Reagan Administration to challenge the claim that it has lagged in appointing women and Hispanics to high office.

As a symbol of bootstrap success, Mrs. Ortega succeeds. She is the first member of her family to complete college.

Her father was a blacksmith, a carpenter, and a U.S. marshal at age 16. He was poor, but refused government help during the Depression. He sent his children into the streets, selling perfume and vegetables door to door.

He preached to them, his daughter recalls, "that we could be anything we wanted to, that we were just as capable as anyone else and we could not use the fact that we were Hispanics as an excuse for not succeeding."

President Reagan used the occasion of Hispanic Heritage Week at the White House last September to announce her appointment. Previously, she came to Washington, at the recommendation of another Hispanic woman, to serve on an obscure agency, the Copyright Royalty Tribunal.

But figure a ropolitan showed major in New York Denver and period, The in an article name — to her signature to honor her mother.

Clearly one consideration that led to her selection as keynoter was her name again — a desire by the Reagan Administration to challenge the claim that it has lagged in appointing women and Hispanics to high office.

As a symbol of bootstrap success, Mrs. Ortega succeeds. She is the first member of her family to complete college.

Her father was a blacksmith, a carpenter, and a U.S. marshal at age 16. He was poor, but refused government help during the Depression. He sent his children into the streets, selling perfume and vegetables door to door.

He preached to them, his daughter recalls, "that we could be anything we wanted to, that we were just as capable as anyone else and we could not use the fact that we were Hispanics as an excuse for not succeeding."

President Reagan used the occasion of Hispanic Heritage Week at the White House last September to announce her appointment. Previously, she came to Washington, at the recommendation of another Hispanic woman, to serve on an obscure agency, the Copyright Royalty Tribunal.

Interest groups unhappy with proposed state draft of pesticide regulations

AUSTIN (AP) — Environmentalists say a proposed set of state regulations to protect farm workers from pesticides have required too much time to draft, and chemical industry supporters complain their suggestions were ignored.

"Why did we waste our time?" asked John Fisher of the Texas Agricultural Chemicals Association.

Fisher contends Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower has lost his willingness to work with the industry while drawing up a working draft of the proposed standards.

"The commissioner had come and said, 'We're going to be fair,' but it just hasn't worked out that way. And that's not sour grapes," said Fisher.

Agriculture Department officials said they are drawing up the standards in order to protect workers who face exposure to pesticides.

Fisher said members of his industry group are concerned because chemical company suggestions have been ignored in a draft of the proposed regulations circulated earlier this month.

In a series of six hearings held across the state earlier this year, a number of different groups, including chemical industry representatives, farm worker groups and environmentalists testified.

Requirements to post warning notices on fields that have been sprayed and establishing guidelines on when workers can re-enter fields that have been sprayed are at issue. The proposed regulations also cover protective clothing for farm workers, prior notice to area residents before spraying begins and procedures to follow in case of poisoning.

Ron White, the Texas Agriculture Department's assistant commissioner for regulatory affairs, told The Dallas Morning News the draft was a "discussion draft" and not meant as a copy of the final regulations.

White said the draft was instead meant "to get people talking."

"We will consider everybody's input, but the problem we ran into was getting people to consider the options," White said. "The discussion draft is just that — a discussion draft. It is not the final proposal."

He said that some of chemical industry's suggestions may not be in the final regulations because some of them do not address the problems faced by farm workers.

"They (the chemical lobby) certainly have not shown any real interest in accepting that there's a problem out there," White said.

New black mayor stirs up Hempstead

HEMPSTEAD (AP) — Some residents of this East Texas community say traditional politics have gone by the wayside in the four months since Leroy Singleton was elected as the first black mayor, amid allegations the new official is a "trouble-maker."

Singleton's followers, inspired by the presidential candidacy of the Rev. Jesse Jackson, registered 580 blacks to vote and produced the largest voter turnout in the town's 128-year history. Singleton, by a 558-504 vote, ousted a 75-year-old grocer and liquor store owner seeking his second term.

Singleton, in sharp contrast to his predecessor, urges a slate of "new ideas" he says will make government more efficient and open.

The 42-year-old funeral director with a master's degree in education has demanded business practices he says the "city should have been doing all along."

Local businessmen say he antagonized them by advocating chain stores for the town, located 50 miles northwest of Houston and the seat of Waller County. He also angered the city council by making public the salaries of the city's 27 workers.

The new mayor said public funds are used to maintain the town's white cemetery, but not its two black graveyards. The mayor also says blacks have been shortchanged on city services such as streets, curbs and sewers.

The city council, meeting with Singleton for the first time, voted 4-1 to strip him of his authority to hire and fire city employees. He's been denied a key to City Hall and some are talking about a recall move.

"Leroy's got a lot of good ideas, but he doesn't know how to get them over," A.S. Wier, 76, Waller County's election administrator, told the Dallas Times Herald. "In a small town like this, he's going to have to take it slow."

Singleton's election represents a swift change for Hempstead's black residents.

"He's a great inspiration to everybody," said Lee Henderson, a professor at nearby, mostly black Prairie View A&M University, where Singleton earned his degree. "Hempstead is ready for a change, and the mayor it going to bring it right to them."

But some white residents are unhappy with Singleton. City Councilman Bobby Lee Repka, 40, said that the mayor is "stirring up the black-and-white issue — and if he keeps stirring up stuff there may be a recall election."

L.J. Lecamu, 69, who operates a garage in Hempstead, said the mayor "wants to make a bunch of changes we never had before."

"I didn't vote in the last election, but I will in the next one," Lecamu said.

Councilman and Mayor Pro Tem Tommy L. Warren, who operates a local real estate and insurance company, called Singleton "a trouble-maker" who doesn't understand that Hempstead's unpaid mayor is supposed to be "more or less a figurehead" who only votes in case of a tie.

Warren said the transfer of the mayor's power to hire and fire city employees merely ratifies changes that were intended but overlooked in 1980 when Hempstead switched from a mayor-commission to a mayor-council form of government.

Council members said the fast action on the hiring and firing power was taken because Singleton intended to dismiss Willie Mae Burch, Hempstead's city secretary, treasurer and tax collector.

Mrs. Burch has refused to give Singleton a key to City Hall, a move the council has informally supported.

Councilman James Woodley said "only bonded personnel" should be given a key because City Hall's vault contains confidential files and documents.

Mrs. Burch declined to discuss her differences with the mayor.

"She is trying to work with me, but it's hard for her to make the adjustment because she's never worked that closely with a black," Singleton said.

Warren labeled as "very unfair" Singleton's allegations that blacks are being shortchanged in city services.

"We're not responsible for the last 20 years," but now the city is working "to give these people what they deserve," he said.

During the past several years, the council has spent more than $1 million for capital improvements — more than 90 percent of which has gone to black and low-income areas, Warren said.

A political showdown is shaping for 1985. Three of the council members are up for re-election and Singleton says he will be fielding a slate challenging them.

One of those likely to be challenged is the mayor's cousin, Herbert L. Johnson, a 51-year-old school administrator and one of two black council members.

Israeli veteran killed in vacant lot

FORT WORTH (AP) — A 22-year-old Israeli veteran survived the horrors of the Beirut war zone only to be shot to death in a vacant lot when two men tried to break into his car.

Iddo Sarnat's brother described him as a gentle man, a pacifist who opposed the war but served a three-year stint in Lebanon as an artillery soldier out of a sense of duty.

"He passed three years in the army and survived everything OK, only to be killed in such a way — it's so silly," his brother, Dan Sarnat, told The Dallas Morning News in a telephone interview from Jerusalem.

Sarnat and a friend, Ramy Ronen, had driven 700 miles non-stop from Albuquerque, N.M. Police said they pulled into a vacant lot in North Fort Worth early Saturday and slept for several hours.

Major crime decreases in Houston, Dallas

HOUSTON (AP) — The number of major crimes decreased in Houston and Dallas and many other major cities, but an analyst says crime may jump again near the end of the decade because of another baby boom.

Major crimes such as murder, rape, robbery and burglary fell 5.7 percent in Houston and 2.1 percent in Dallas in the first half of 1984 compared to the first six months of 1983, police figures show.

In Austin, crime remained stable, rising only 1 percent during the same period.

Austin police crime analyst Joe Hidalgo said some experts theorize crime is down because the crime-prone age group of 16 to 25 has grown smaller in recent years.

"They expect more crime in the late 1990s, when the new baby boom group becomes of crime-prone age," Hidalgo said.

The state capital reported 14,488 major crimes during the first six months of 1983, and 14,537 this year.

"We've been on a downward or stable trend the past three years or so," Hidalgo said.

Houston reported a total of 73,345 major crimes for the first half of 1984, compared to 77,779 the first six months of last year. Violent crimes dropped 8.8 percent with figures for rape, robbery, homicide and aggravated assault combined, said police spokesman Raul Correa.

Correa said "you can only speculate" why major crimes in the city have dropped, but said increased police visibility on the streets could have figured in the decrease.

In Dallas there were 52,589 major crimes reported for the first half of 1983, 51,482 for the first six months this year.

Police spokeswoman Jody Thomas said increased community crime watch programs may have contributed to the 2.1 percent crime drop during the first half of 1984.

But figures released by other metropolitan police departments showed major crimes also decreased in New York, Los Angeles, Dallas, Denver and Atlanta during the same period, The Houston Post reported in an article published Sunday.

Inmates will be reclassified

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Inmates at the Texas Department of Corrections' Coffield Unit — regarded by prison officials as the state's most violent facility — were to be reclassified today in a program to identify dangerous inmates and house them in high-security facilities, a TDC spokesman said.

Inmates at three TDC Units — Ellis I, Eastham and Ferguson — have already been reclassified and the more violent ones are segregated from the less violent, said TDC spokesman Jay Byrd.

State prison director Raymond Procunier has said the new system will help reduce the "unusually high" number of assaults and killings in TDC units.

Procunier discussed the classification plan Thursday, when a convict who was fatally stabbed at the Ellis II unit became the 10th inmate to die this year in a Texas prison. Nine inmates were killed in Texas prisons in 1983 and a record 12 in 1981.

Procunier said the former classification plan grouped inmates according to age and length of sentence, while the new plan emphasizes "size and onerousness."

Richie Havens says Woodstock spirit never left

CALDWELL, N.J. (AP) — Richie Havens, who joined Joan Baez and Donovan for a concert on the 15th anniversary of the Woodstock festival, says the spirit generated at the Bethel, N.Y., dairy farm "never left."

"We're back again!" said Havens, now a grandfather. "A revival is not the right word. A celebration is a better word, a confirmation even better," said Donovan, who coaxed the crowd into singing along to such 1960s tunes as "Happiness Runs" and "Mellow Yellow."

The 11-hour concert Saturday drew nearly 5,000 people to a sloping lawn at Caldwell College. Comparisons with the Woodstock festival, which drew 400,000 people, were inevitable.

But Ms. Baez, 43, said, "I'm tired of the 60s. I don't want to talk about Woodstock. I feel a part of my life is to try to dig people out of the 60s and direct them into the 80s. Because I think the 80s are hard to confront."

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Author William O'Rourke soon will be occupying James Thurber's old haunts as Ohio State University's first James Thurber Writer-in-Residence.

Besides living in Thurber's former home, O'Rourke will teach at the university's journalism school, where the late humorist studied to be a news reporter, and work as staff writing coach at The Columbus Dispatch, where Thurber was a reporter in the 1920s.

O'Rourke moves Sept. 23 into the third floor of the house where Thurber lived during his college days, and where many of the ghosts prominent in Thurber's short stories lived. O'Rourke, who has written two novels and the book "The Harrisburg 7 and the New Catholic Left," will be in residence through December.

DALLAS (AP) — "Some mixup" led to the arrest of the Beach Boys' Brian Wilson and two other men on criminal trespass charges at the Republican National Convention site, a lawyer said.

Wilson and the two men, who listed themselves as employees of the Beach Boys, were arrested Sunday because they were found at a restricted site without proper credentials, police said.

Wilson, 42, of Los Angeles, was in custody for more than 3 1/2 hours before posting $200 bond, said Bob Knowles, Dallas County detention commander.

"There's been some mixup," said Henry Ackels, a local attorney who helped Wilson post bond. "As I understand, they were touring the convention center."

Police Sgt. Jody Thomas said the three said they were guests of a credentialed person "who neglected to escort them back out. We haven't proven that, or disproven it, and I don't know the name of the credentialed person."

The Beach Boys, the California group known for their 1960s surfing songs, performed Saturday night for Republicans and journalists in town for the convention.

NEW YORK (AP) — Soap opera star Grace Garland led the cheering as firefighters, newspaper executives and a squad of skimpily clad go-go dancers vied in the third annual Great Bed Race, held to raise funds to fight muscular dystrophy.

"They didn't ask me to push a bed, but I can cheer real loud," said Miss Garland, who plays Vera on ABC-TV's "All My Children."

The event, in which racers wheeled four-poster beds down a closed avenue Sunday, was expected to raise $75,000, said Muscular Dystrophy Association spokeswoman Peggy Kurtz. Each six-person team had to raise at least $1,000 to enter, she said.

The winning squad was from Paris District High School in Ontario, Canada.

HUNGERFORD, England (AP) — Lord Fermoy, a businessman and former steeplechase jockey who was uncle to Princess Diana, shot and killed himself Sunday at his home, police said. He was 45.

Fermoy, born Edmund James Burke Roche, became the 5th Baron Fermoy in 1955, succeeding his father, a former Conservative member of Parliament. His mother, Ruth, Lady Fermoy, has been lady-in-waiting to Queen Mother Elizabeth for about 30 years.

Fermoy's sister, Frances, now Frances Shand-Kydd, is Diana's mother. She and the princess' father, the 8th Earl Spencer, are divorced.

Elizabeth Taylor visits Burton's family in Wales

PONTRHYDYFEN, Wales (AP) — About 300 people sang a welcome to actress Elizabeth Taylor in the Welsh birthplace of her ex-husband, Richard Burton, when she arrived for a reunion with the late actor's sisters and brothers.

The crowd that greeted the 52-year-old actress Sunday night in this tiny Welsh hamlet burst into a rendition of a favorite local tune, "We'll Keep a Welcome in the Hillsides, We'll Keep a Welcome in the Vales."

"I feel as if I'm home," said Miss Taylor, her eyes filling with tears, as she stepped inside the three-bedroom row house of Hilda Owen, 62, a sister of Burton. The actress spent the night there after a reunion with Burton's seven surviving brothers and sisters.

Miss Taylor, who was twice married to Burton, wore a pink two-piece suit, a scarf and a large diamond ring which Burton had given her.

She arrived three hours late after a flight from Scotland, where she stayed last week with longtime friends, Michael and Elizabeth Smith.

Miss Taylor was met at the airport in Swansea, Wales, by one of Burton's brothers, Graham Jenkins, 56, who drove her the 15 miles to Pontrhydyfen in a dark blue Rolls-Royce.

Miss Taylor, who was last in Wales nine years ago on her second honeymoon with Burton, stayed away from a memorial service here on Aug. 11 to avoid upsetting his fourth wife and widow, Sally Hay Burton.

Last weekend, she flew to Switzerland and visited Burton's grave. Burton, one of Britain's great Shakespearean stage actors and a veteran of more than 40 movies, died of a brain hemorrhage Aug. 5 in Céligny, Switzerland, at the age of 58.

During their married life, Burton and Miss Taylor frequently visited this village, where he was born in 1925 as Richard Walter Jenkins, the 12th of 13 children of a coal miner and a barmaid.

After her return Sunday, surrounded by a crowd of inquisitive neighbors, fans and photographers, Miss Taylor smiled, waved and blew kisses before sitting down for a meal of roast beef with the family.

Three of Burton's sisters, Mrs. Owen, Cassie Thomas, 62, and Cissie James, 80, and the four Jenkins brothers, Graham, David, 71, Will, 74, and Verdun, 68, were there.

"Elizabeth was always a welcome visitor when she came here with Richard," said David, a retired police officer.

Vermont flips over 900-pound pancake

HIGHGATE, Vt. (AP) — What's beaten in a cement mixer and flipped with a helicopter? A 900-pound pancake, of course.

It was billed as breakfast for 20,000, a concoction of 500 pounds of mix and 100 gallons of milk cooked up to promote Franklin County as the maple center of the world.

The event Saturday was the main attraction at the county's Field Days fair.

"It's kind of a bizarre idea, but it's good to have something different," said Don McFeeters, organizer of the fair. About 2,000 people witnessed the making of the pancake.

Jim Hilton, head of the recreation department in the northwest Vermont town of St. Albans, masterminded the mammoth meal he said would set a world record. Hilton has also laid claim to the world's largest snowman and the biggest ice cream sundae.

His latest shot at the record books was fed to anyone with an appetite, about 200 people.

The ingredients were folded together in a steamed-clean cement mixer and poured into a 2,400-pound pan atop a one-ton charcoal fire. When the cake had risen half an inch, the lid was bolted shut and a crane and helicopter teamed up for the flip.

The crane lifted the pan in a special harness while the helicopter hovered above, holding a cable attached to a pin that kept the pan from pivoting.

When the pin was pulled, the pan began to wobble, eventually turning over so the top of the pan became the bottom.

Miss Coppertone loses her suit

MIAMI (AP) — Little Miss Coppertone may have blushed with embarrassment but you can blame mechanical failure and not the sun for her untimely over exposure.

Miss Coppertone, advertising symbol of the suntan lotion of that name, is famous for her continuing struggle with a little black dog which has been trying unsuccessfully to pull off her swimming suit — that is, until recently.

Since 1960, the modest Miss and her dog have welcomed drivers to Miami who enter by Interstate 95.

Last weekend, however, the black dog surprised itself by pulling the suit off of her hand, leaving the pigtailed little girl's behind exposed to motorists from Saturday night until Monday morning.

Then again on Wednesday, the bathing suit fell off of the dog's mouth and slipped off, swinging down and once again frustrating Miss Coppertone's attempt to keep her rear covered.

"He let go, lost his grip," said Norman Retic, 23, the sign repairman who came to the rescue after both unprecedented pants-droppings.

The dog, jaws firmly clenched around the bathing suit, slipped off its track as a result of vibration from wind and rain Saturday night, Retic said. Wednesday, some screws came loose, separating the bathing suit from the puppy's mouth and letting it drop, he said.

Retic said he hopes Miss Coppertone will keep her bathing suit on from now on.

"I'm getting tired of going up there," he said.

"If I were to tell you that I was instrumental in winning a major championship," said the Two of Spades, "you probably would laugh me right out of the pack. And if I were to insist that I did it not by winning a trick, but by giving declarer a trick that he would not otherwise have won, you would probably think that I was losing my senses. But bear with me."

"On the hand in question, I was held by one of the world's great players. The bidding went as shown. Our opponents were not shy in the auction, and certainly the diamond slam that they reached was not the world's best. However, if you study the diagram you will see that, left to his own devices, declarer will almost surely make his contract. He will be forced to take the heart and the diamond finesses, and a ruffing finesse for the nine of clubs. Since both royal ladies and the nine are well placed, declarer's only loser will be the ace of hearts."

"My expert did not know all this. He threw me into the fray at trick one, and the audience gasped when they saw that he had given the declarer an extra trick in spades. Declarer took advantage of this to discard two hearts from dummy, but that was to have strange repercussions later in the play."

"The king-ace of diamonds fetched the queen, and the last trump was drawn. Declarer cashed the ace-king of clubs and, after my owner dropped the Q-10, ran the eight successfully. He now set up dummy's last club with a ruff."

"But now, when declarer led a heart and my master played low smoothly, declarer was faced with a choice of plays. He thought long and hard before rising with the king, and our side took two heart tricks to defeat the contract."

"Not surprisingly, our teammates were not as optimistic. They played three no trump and scored the game without any difficulty. This hand was enough to win the title."

To the dogs

English writer Samuel Butler is quoted for having said, "The greatest pleasure of a dog is that you may make a fool of yourself with him, and not only will he not scold you, but he will make a fool of himself, too."

In so writing, Butler hit on of man's most enjoyable diversions — pets! And now more and more evidence is mounting to indicate that those who enjoy their pets enjoy their lives a lot more than those who do not. In fact, more than a few doctors recommend pets for their patients for a variety of beneficial reasons — from relieving stress to affording companionship.

So it comes as no surprise, really, that Psychology Today recently carried an article extolling the virtues of pets. That article noted among other things that a survey of 13,000 individuals, 88 percent of them pet owners, revealed that pets rank third in importance in their lives — right behind immediate members of their own families and other relatives.

Furthermore, the article noted that pet owners are more satisfied with their lives and have more self-esteem than non-owners. They also consider their pets more important than friends or jobs.

Said Dr. Michael McCulloch of the University of Oregon Health Sciences Center: "Pet owners value the consistency and non-judgmental nature of their relationship with a pet. Sometimes just the fact that the pet is there when his owner needs him is enough."

Most of us do cherish our pets. We share times of sadness with them and times of joy. They are a very real part of our lives and afford us a degree of refreshing relief from the hectic nature of this, no pun intended, dog-eat-dog world. They ask little of us, except our love and attention, and they give so much in return.

So the next time someone tells you the world is going to the dogs or the cats or the parakeets or goldfish, don't be depressed. We may be the better for it!

Another View:

Reagan's revolution

President Reagan claims to have imposed a revolution on American public policy. How much of that revolution is substance, in your view, and how much only an illusion?

With an election coming, that's a question of some importance. There are areas, such as environmental protection, in which this administration has made hardly any real changes despite an inordinate amount of prose to the contrary.

But in the definition of social equity, and the distribution of income among rich and poor, the impact of this administration has been enormous.

The Urban Institute has published, in time for the fall campaign, "The Reagan Revolution," a study that carefully describes the changes in American domestic policy since 1980.

Perhaps you have gained the impression that the Reagan legislation has benefited the affluent and hurt the poor. That impression is correct, and the Urban Institute's authors show it in persuasive detail.

For a generation, from World War II until a few years ago, there was astonishingly little variation in the distribution of income in this country. Since 1980, that has no longer been true.

The Urban Institute makes the valuable point that some of this increase in inequality would have happened even under policies similar to the Carter administration's.

For example, families headed by women tend to be at the low end of the income ladder, and families with two employed adults at the upper end. Since both kinds of families have become more common, that demographic change alone affects income distribution.

But Reagan has done three things that accelerated the trend. He has used an unusually severe recession, with high unemployment, to bring down the inflation rate. He has cut taxes. And he has cut some of the social-spending programs.

The unemployment has affected mostly families with average incomes or less. The spending cuts were mainly in programs that helped the poor. And the tax cuts went disproportionately to the wealthy. The pattern is beyond argument.

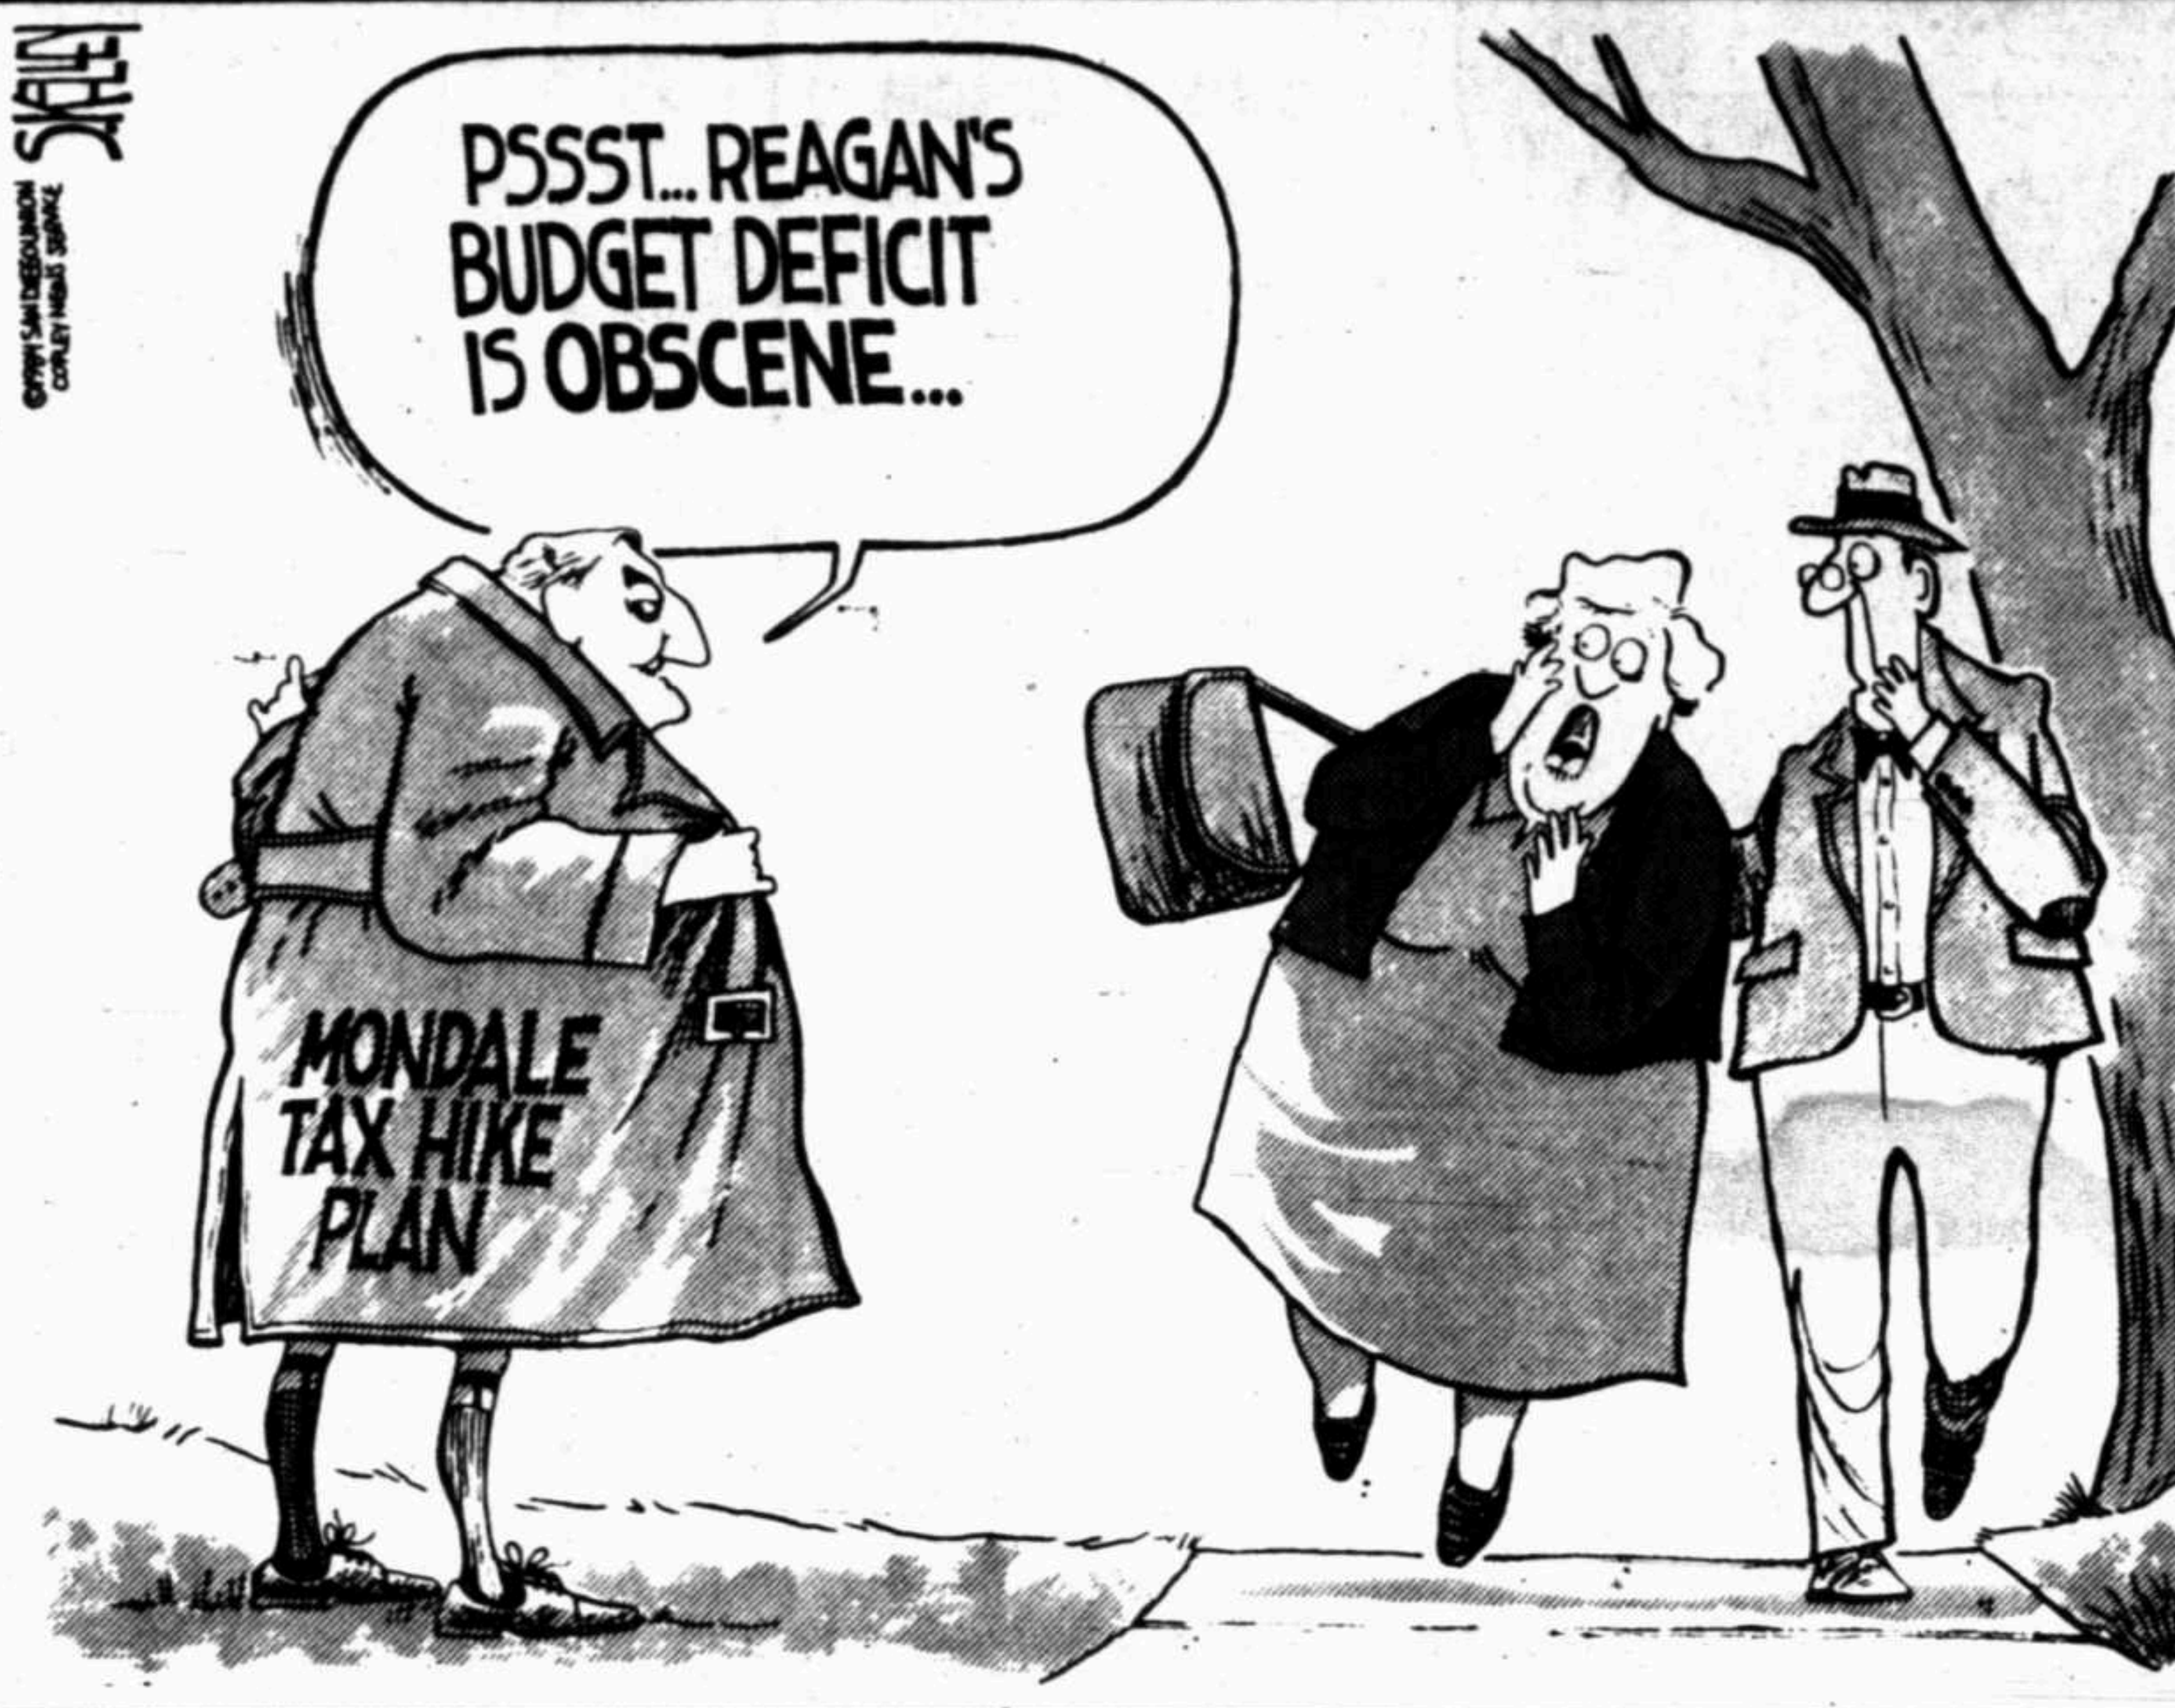

The hard-working, wage-earning middle-middle class — statistically, the middle fifth of all American families, ranked by income — has drawn no visible benefit from Reagan economic policy.

Average family income in that middle fifth, after inflation and after taxes, has risen less than 1 percent since 1980. Its share of income is smaller because the top fifth's share is quite a lot larger. As for the bottom fifth, it is poorer — not only relatively but absolutely.

Reagan originally argued that his program would strengthen the growth of the whole economy, and a stronger economy would then benefit the poor along with everyone else.

After 3½ years there is no evidence whatever that Reagan's ideas or his legislation have improved the economy's performance. But their cost in economic equity is real and demonstrable.

JACK ANDERSON

GOP thrust to stress economy

WASHINGTON — Walter Mondale's introduction of tax increases as a major issue in the campaign threw a monkey wrench into the Republicans' well-planned election strategy.

Jack Anderson

From White House sources and internal GOP working papers, I've been able to get a picture of President Reagan's election strategy. If they can just contain the damage already caused by Mondale's tax-increase gamble — which obviously caught them by surprise — here's what Reagan's political professionals have charted for the campaign:

— Economic issues are the voters' chief concern, according to a confidential White House briefing report. "Our political success depends on what happens to the federal budget deficit, interest rates and unemployment," the report warned, noting that voters are more concerned about unemployment than inflation.

— Social issues rate No. 2 in the public's mind, the GOP strategy paper asserts. Crime is the big concern here, followed by education, Social Security and race relations.

— International relations — war and peace — is the third most important category of voter worries, the Republican strategists believe.

— The campaign planners have regrettably acknowledged that voters in general seem to be less concerned about the quality of leadership and the state of the nation's morality — precisely the areas where the president is regarded as strongest.

Given their certainty that economic issues are what voters care about most — and history is generally on their side in this — how do Reagan's advisers plan to capitalize on the present healthy state of the economy?

Essentially, they intend to replay their successful 1980 campaign.

According to a planning document reviewed by my associate Dale Van Atta, the president will continue to harp on the need to reduce total government spending, eliminate "undue and cumbersome regulations that smother initiative" and bring pressure "on all federal agencies to reduce waste and fraud."

To Democratic suggestions that Reagan has had four years to do this, the Republicans will be happy to respond that four years wasn't enough to clean up the mess they inherited from the Democrats.

In the GOP's economic blue skies there is only one small cloud — no bigger than a man's hand. But that hand belongs to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker, and the dark cloud of rising interest rates could turn into a campaign thunderstorm for the Republicans.

The president's advisers are worried about what they refer to as the new "interest-rate constituency" — Americans at all economic levels who pay close attention to interest rates before buying a house or other major credit items. If they get too nervous to buy because of high interest rates, the economic recovery will shudder to a halt — and Reagan will lose his best campaign issue.

White House insiders blame Volcker's money policies for the recent rise in interest rates, and privately concede that Reagan's reapointment of Volcker was a mistake. All they can do now, though, is cross their fingers and hope Volcker doesn't bring on a recession before Election Day.

Barring such a disaster, the Republicans are confident they can ride the economic issues to another four years in the White House.

POWER GRAB: Political realities being what they are, Congress has voted down the heretical suggestion that large buyers of electric power from the Hoover Dam should pay rates closer to those that less favored utility customers have to pay.

This clearly political decision means that utilities throughout the Southwest will still be buying their power from the government-owned dam at the same Depression-era rates they were charged 50 years ago.

An illustration of the bargains available is the request for more curtailment power by the Platte River Power Authority of Ft. Collins, Colo. Platte's general manager asked the Department of Energy for $8.5 million worth of electric power — which it would then sell to its customers for almost $40 million.

The department's acerbic rejection of this "power grab" said in part:

"Although Platte River is a non-profit entity and does not classify that markup on Federal power as profit, you must admit $30 million is quite a nice cost saver."

"Additionally, it gives a non-regulated utility like Platte River a great amount of flexibility in its operation and ability to pay its managers lucrative salaries and build facilities like cooling ponds and power plant administration buildings several times larger than actually needed for small power plants."

GIMME A BREAK: Senseless vandalism, usually considered a phenomenon of big-city blight, has reached the rugged back country of Alaska.

Near the awe-inspiring Mendenhall Glacier, the National Park Service put up Skaters Cabin, in which hikers could find protection from the arctic winds whistling across the glacier. But vandals keep breaking the little cabin's windows, seriously diminishing the structure's usefulness as a barrier to the biting cold.

A Park Service memo notes that the rangers have "tried a variety of products, including material designed for use in prison facilities." None of them proved a match for the vandals.

So the service has come up with a bizarre solution: Hikers are issued portable replacement windows that they can install themselves.

CHARLEY REESE

'Bad mix' promoting freeze

The nuclear hysteresis like to make a big thing about the anniversary of the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki that took place on Aug. 6 and 9, 1945, respectively. It is typical of their fantasies.

No one naturally discounts either the horror or the danger of nuclear war, but the facts about the bombings in Japan don't really support the panic stories spread by those who wish to parlay people's fear of nuclear weapons into a disastrous unilateral disarmament posture.

The two atomic bombs killed about 150,000 people and injured another 64,000. Old-fashioned methods had already, by that time, taken nearly 50 million lives in World War II. More people were killed in Tokyo by incendiary bombing than were killed in Hiroshima and Nagasaki combined. Both Hiroshima and Nagasaki were functioning again within days of their atomic bombings. The cities were not, contrary to popular myth, obliterated. Today, they are both thriving metropolises.

The atomic bombings were novelties but on the scale of horrors that make up World War II they were minor players. Their significance was that they forced a fanatic fascist government to surrender and thus saved an estimated one million lives.

Two points: the horror to be avoided is war regardless of how it is fought and atomic weapons can certainly be given credit for having prevented a third world war up to this point.

The disarmament pushers, even those who are well-intentioned and not all of them are, are simply wrong-headed. The threat to peace is not the collection of inanimate objects but the living human beings in the Kremlin with their lust for power and their spiteful ideology.

You cannot achieve disarmament until the power elite that rules the Soviet Union changes its warlike attitude and, of course, if that ever happened, you wouldn't need disarmament.

Furthermore, nuclear disarmament is totally impractical. Just apply common sense. One hundred large warheads could cripple either the Soviet Union or the United States and both sides have over 6,000. Not even the most ardent disarmament proponent has even suggested that more than a freeze or a minor adjustment is even remotely possible.

Assuming even perfect sincerity on the part of the Kremlin, a nuclear freeze would not make the world one whit less dangerous than it is. Coming back to reality, however, a nuclear freeze which would prevent the United States from correcting our self-imposed deficiencies in our strategic deterrent would make the world one heck of a lot more dangerous.

The old men in the Kremlin are killers who rule by force and they respect only force. They'd incinerate you and your children in a second if they thought they could get away with it. You'd better remember that the criminal government in Moscow has — according to Russian, not American, estimates — murdered some 40 million or more of its own people.

Do you think the Soviet government is more concerned about your safety and welfare than it is about the safety and welfare of its own people? Do you think a frog will ever sing the lead in a Metropolitan Opera production?

Folks, we have to live with the danger of nuclear weapons just like other generations have had to live with their dangers. If you get vaporized by a 50 megaton bomb you won't be any worse off than you would be if a Shawnee warrior split your head open with a tomahawk. The 50 million who died in World War II prior to Hiroshima were just as dead as the 150,000 who were killed by the atomic bombs.

Even if there is no nuclear war, every single human being alive on this planet is going to die. As for whether the human species will survive in the long run, that is uncertain anyway. Any number of natural phenomena could render our planet uninhabitable. The nuclear hysteresis forget, I think, that life is temporary — at least, as we know it on earth.

The best way to live with danger is to learn all you can about it. I'm surprised by the general ignorance of nuclear matters and outraged by the deliberate deception being practiced by some of those who are determined to undermine our national defense.

Don't forget the idea of a nuclear freeze originated in the Kremlin. The "peace offensive" was planned in Sophia, Bulgaria. What you see in the American peace movement is a combination of a few traitors, a lot of innocents and a number of unscrupulous politicians. It's a bad mix.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Aug. 20, the 233rd day of 1984. There are 133 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 20, 1968, the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact nations began invading Czechoslovakia to crush Alexander Dubcek's liberal regime.

On this date: In 1918, Britain opened its offensive on the Western front during World War I.

In 1940, British Prime Minister Winston S. Churchill paid tribute to the Royal Air Force with a speech in which he said, "Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

In 1953, France forced the Sultan of Morocco, Sidi Mohammed ben Youssef, into exile.

In 1955, hundreds of people were killed in anti-French rioting in Morocco and Algeria.

In 1964, President Lyndon B.

Johnson signed an anti-poverty measure totaling nearly $1 billion.

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford nominated former New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller to be his vice president.

Five years ago: The Iranian government of Ayatollah Khomeini closed down 22 opposition newspapers.

One year ago: The Commerce Department announced that the U.S. was lifting its export controls on the sale of certain pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union.

Today's birthdays: Maine Sen. George Mitchell is 51. Actress Elizabeth Ashley is 45. Actor Sam Melville is 44. Musician Isaac Hayes is 42.

Thought for today: "The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy."

Hawks lose 'Star Wars' fight

DALLAS — A threatened telephone call from Ronald Reagan was needed to convince Republican hard-liners to water down platform language endorsing the president's own "Star Wars" (anti-satellite) program.

In an intense behind-the-scenes struggle, administration spokesmen tried to talk members of the platform's national security subcommittee out of promising to actually "build" the system. Sen. John Warner of Virginia backed the administration position but could not pick up a single supporter on the subcommittee.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The subcommittee chairman, Rep. Marjorie Holt of Maryland, who was telephoned twice by Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger, refused to budge. But after word was passed by presidential operatives that Reagan himself was about to intervene, Holt agreed in the full Platform Committee to a Pentagon suggestion that "achieve" be substituted for "build" — much to the anguish of the hard-liners.

REPUBLICAN JEANE?

Conservatives seeking more time on the convention podium Monday night for United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick were spreading the word among delegates that she might conceivably use the occasion to formally declare herself a Republican.

In seeking delegates to sign up for a floor fight on changing the convention agenda to give Kirkpatrick more time, Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia encountered some complaints that the ambassador is still a registered Democrat. He responded that she might be more inclined to feel the spirit of the GOP and declare herself a Republican if given a half-hour to expound on her philosophy rather than the 10 minutes allotted by the convention managers.

Kirkpatrick, who was a disciple of the late Hubert H. Humphrey, as recently as 1976 was a loyal Democrat actively participating in that party's national convention. While that is a reason given by Gingrich and other congressional Young Turks for including Kirkpatrick in an expanded Republican Party, the White House justified it as a reason for keeping her out as keynote speaker.

NO THANKS, DON

An offer by an overworked Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan to fly from Washington to Dallas Thursday to fight the platform plank accusing the Federal Reserve Board of "destabilizing" the economy was hastily rejected by the Reagan campaign team here.

The president's men handling the platform were worried that the secretary, a rookie in convention politics, would only antagonize delegates.

Drew Lewis, White House liaison to the Platform Committee, specifically advised that animosity against Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker was running so high that there was no use in fighting the "Fed-bashing" language.

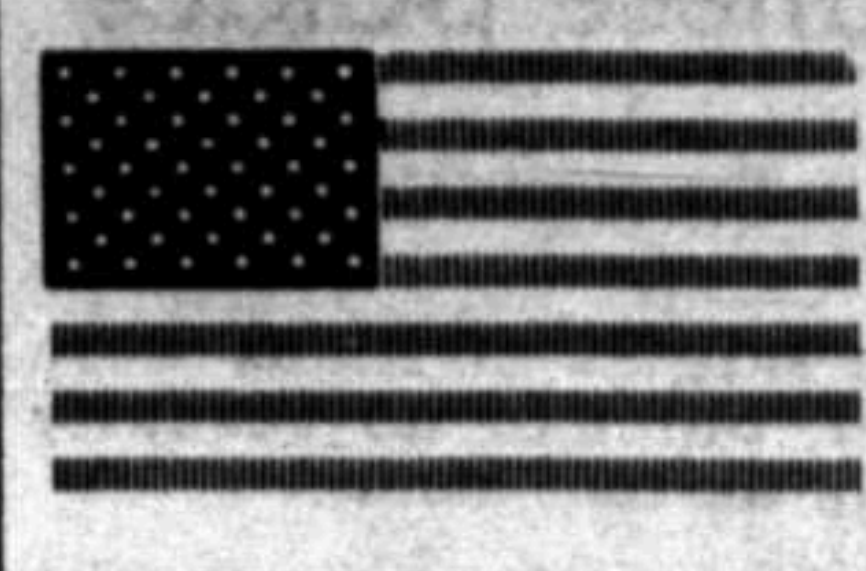

Rep. Trent Lott, the platform chairman, privately informed Lewis that he personally would oppose any attempt to remove the Fed plank and hinted that something worse might be the result. That was interpreted by Reagan campaign operatives as a threat to retaliate with a tougher plank calling for Volcker's resignation.

THE PRESIDENT'S MAN

Congressional members of the Platform Committee were infuriated when the White House attempted to kill a tax break for farmers pushed by Sen. Roger Jepsen, who faces an uphill fight for reelection in Iowa.

The signal to kill Jepsen's proposal to let farmers deduct some health costs was given by Stanton Anderson, nominally a delegate from the overwhelmingly Democratic District of Columbia but actually one of the team of Washington lawyers and lobbyists managing the convention for the president. Jepsen's congressional colleagues, grumbling that a Washington super-lawyer doesn't know anything about farmers, adopted the senator's proposal.

Mondale hopes Ferraro's financial disclosures will help ticket regain offensive

NORTH OAKS, Minn. (AP) — Walter F. Mondale hopes that Rep. Geraldine Ferraro's financial disclosures today, after a "regrettable" loss of time and impetus, will enable the Democratic ticket to regain the offensive against President Reagan.

While proclaiming pride in his running mate for the scheduled release of comprehensive tax and income information about herself and her husband, Mondale was known to believe she made significant mistakes in handling an issue which has plagued their uphill campaign for days on end.

Specifically, Mondale thinks Ms. Ferraro erred in announcing eight days ago that her husband, real estate executive John A. Zaccaro, had refused to contribute his tax returns to today's disclosure package. Zaccaro subsequently reversed his decision, but not before his wife's critics raised their eyebrows even higher.

"Some of the things being talked about will be corrected once the disclosure is complete," Mondale said Sunday in Kansas City, Mo. "It is regrettable that we had to take a week to get it all together."

Sources in both the Mondale and Ferraro campaign organizations said the three-term House member from Queens, New York, failed to notify either Mondale or her own senior staff that she planned to reveal her husband's refusal to release the tax returns.

Thus, there was no opportunity for Mondale campaign strategists to anticipate what the political damage might be, and perhaps privately persuade Zaccaro to change his mind — as he did later, but only under the glare of a week of intense controversy.

As a result, Republicans gathering for their convention in Dallas were handed an easy target even before Reagan arrived to accept his own nomination for a second term.

During a two-day swing through Iowa, Missouri and Colorado, Mondale promised that Ms. Ferraro's financial disclosure "would be the most complete, comprehensive, detailed and candid in American political history." But the matter of Zaccaro's tax returns, he said, was a question for the couple to decide.

Mondale was clearly relieved by the announcement Saturday that Zaccaro had changed his mind.

"As you know, I'm a full-disclosure man," Mondale said.

In Des Moines, Iowa, on Sunday, Mondale said that his confidence in Ms. Ferraro as his running mate was unshaken. But it was known he had privately expressed belief that she handled the issue badly.

Mondale drew a large, enthusiastic crowd in bright sunshine at the Iowa State Fair and delivered an address on WHO, the same radio station in Des Moines where Reagan began his career as a sportscaster.

Mondale said Reagan is insensitive to the needs of family farms and rural America.

"The threat to rural America is not just a problem, but a crisis of real proportion," Mondale said.

"Family farming is in bigger trouble than any time I've seen since the great depression."

At one point, a member of the audience shouted: "What about the Carter-Mondale grain embargo?"

a reference to the shutoff of American grain sales to the Soviet Union after the invasion of Afghanistan.

Georgia town remains quiet under second night of curfew

WAYNESBORO, Ga. (AP) — Officers patrolled quiet, rain-slicked streets today under the second overnight curfew imposed to quell 24 hours of unrest triggered by the death of a black man in police custody.

Black leaders and the man's wife, meanwhile, appealed for peace, and authorities said a preliminary autopsy showed the man died of heat exhaustion after an unsuccessful run to evade capture in muggy heat.

"Leave it alone and let us handle it legally," said Carrie Gardner, whose husband, Larry, died at a hospital on Friday.

The east Georgia town was quiet Sunday night, following the arrests of 30 people for curfew violations Saturday and early Sunday. Three of them were charged with carrying concealed weapons, police said.

"There's nothing going on," Nicky Murray, a spokeswoman for the Burke County sheriff's office, said early today.

At least 36 State Patrol officers joined Waynesboro police and Burke County sheriff's deputies on their rounds Sunday night, said Sheriff Greg T. Coursey.

At church services on Sunday, black leaders and ministers urged restraint, and Coursey said he met with officials to discuss ways to avoid further strife. He said plans were under way for a "rumor hotline."

Coursey attributed the disorders to three or four "agitators."

The unrest began after a television station reported Friday night that a man might have been beaten to death at the jail. The station, WRDW-TV in Augusta, later reported that beating had been ruled out as a cause of death.

The initial report triggered five fires believed to be arson, minor looting and broken windows and several random gunshots. Two officers received minor injuries when they were hit by rocks, Coursey said. Evidence of firebombing and a Molotov cocktail were found at two of the fires.

Preliminary autopsy reports showed that Gardner, 32, died of heat exhaustion, said coroner Craig Kennedy. Police said Gardner ran in 90-degree heat to avoid capture.

Poll: Almost half of citizens keep guns at home

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly half the Americans in a Media General-Associated Press survey said they have guns at home, and 1 in 10 said they regularly carry a weapon to protect themselves from crime.

Meanwhile, older people, blacks and those from lower income and education groups are more likely to be afraid of crime than younger people, whites and those from higher income and education categories, according to the poll.

The survey said that 86 percent of the 1,243 respondents in the nationwide telephone survey said they are not afraid to go out after dark in their own neighborhoods, compared with 14 percent who said they are afraid.

But 35 percent said they are afraid to go out after dark in their downtown areas, compared with 63 percent who are not afraid and 2 percent who are not sure.

Forty-four percent said they keep a gun at home to protect themselves from crime, compared with 55 percent who do not and 1 percent who said they were not sure. Thirteen percent said they have installed burglar alarms and 10 percent said they carry a gun or some other weapon.

People over age 55 are twice as likely as people under age 55 to be afraid to go out after dark in their own neighborhoods. Similarly, people with no more than a high school education are more afraid than people who have attended college.

Thirteen percent of the whites said they are afraid, compared with 22 percent of the blacks, and 18 per-

Eighty-six percent of the 1,243 respondents said they are not afraid to go out after dark in their neighborhoods.

Forty-four percent said they keep a gun at home to protect themselves.

Ten percent said they carry a gun or some other weapon.

afraid to go out at night than people in suburban or rural areas.

More than one-fourth of the respondents — 28 percent — said either they or someone in their families had something stolen of significant value during the past five years.

In response to separate questions, 16 percent said their homes had been broken into and 6 percent said they had been mugged or physically assaulted.

About one in three said there has been increased police protection in their communities. Similarly, one-third said there has been increased lighting of alleys and streets for safety purposes, and 4 in 10 said their communities have neighborhood watch programs.

Respondents were also given a list of a half dozen common suggestions for reducing crime and asked whether they approve or disapprove. Fifty-four percent, for example, said they oppose making the sale of handguns illegal, while 37 percent said it should be illegal to buy handguns.

However, 85 percent said registration of handguns should be required, compared with 12 percent who opposed registration.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,243 adults across the country June 7-19. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variations in the sample.

Lawyer earns living putting on the dog

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern Californians who hunger for justice sometimes go to the dogs.

Patrons of the Law Dogs hot dog stand can go to the back of the eatery on Wednesday nights and get free legal advice with their chili and onions from lawyer-owner Kim Pearman.

"It's a way of getting people into the legal system. I tell them where to go and what to do," said Pearman, a real estate lawyer who owns six of the stands, but holds forth only in his first restaurant, in the Van Nuys district of Los Angeles.

Pearman, 45, insists dishing out free legal advice isn't a gimmick. He feels it will help the image of his profession.

"It all started out as a community service," he said. "A lot of people don't want to put out $150 to have a couple of questions answered."

Among them have been students who want to get out of paying back government loans, inventors who have new ideas to protect and business people who want to know how to file a bankruptcy claim.

And they include the unlikely. "A doctor's wife, who could obviously afford a lawyer, once came in because she didn't trust her husband's attorney," Pearman said.

One Wednesday night, a visitor to Law Dogs found Pearman's offer too good to be true so she brought along some cash.

"Three dollars — one for each question," Pearman recalled.

But Pearman, a 20-year member of the bar, admitted some problems can't be handled from the back of a hot dog stand.

"I often have to tell them that I can't do something in this setting," said Pearman, who has been queried by people with manslaughter and prostitution charges against them.

"I say, 'You should really get a lawyer.' I tell them how to get someone who specializes, especially when their problems are in such areas as copyright law or trademarks," Pearman said.

"I've had some interesting conversations with people. The questions are a good barometer of society," he added, noting the decline of bankruptcy and mortgage questions as the economy improved.

But can a lawyer wearing an apron, seated in the back of a hot dog stand, be taken seriously?

"Nobody mentions that," said Pearman. But he added, "I wouldn't think that someone looking for a lawyer would look behind a hot dog stand."

Despite pushing red hots to 10,000 customers a week, Pearman insists he's a lawyer first.

Minesweeping efforts continue

By DALIA BALIGH
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — The Western effort to identify the source of the explosions damaging ships in the Red Sea continued today while two Soviet minesweepers headed south in the waterway, apparently toward pro-Soviet South Yemen.

At least 18 ships have been damaged by mines in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Suez, the northwestern branch of the sea, since July 9, and American, British and French mine hunting units have responded to Egypt's request to help search for the explosives.

U.S. Navy officers on board the USS Shreveport, the base of four American minesweeping helicopters searching the Gulf of Suez, said Sunday the oceanographic ship Harkness had made 12 "contacts" with mine-like objects, but most were found to be trash or coral when checked by frogmen.

They said some of the objects simply "drifted away." The Harkness is leased to the U.S. Navy.

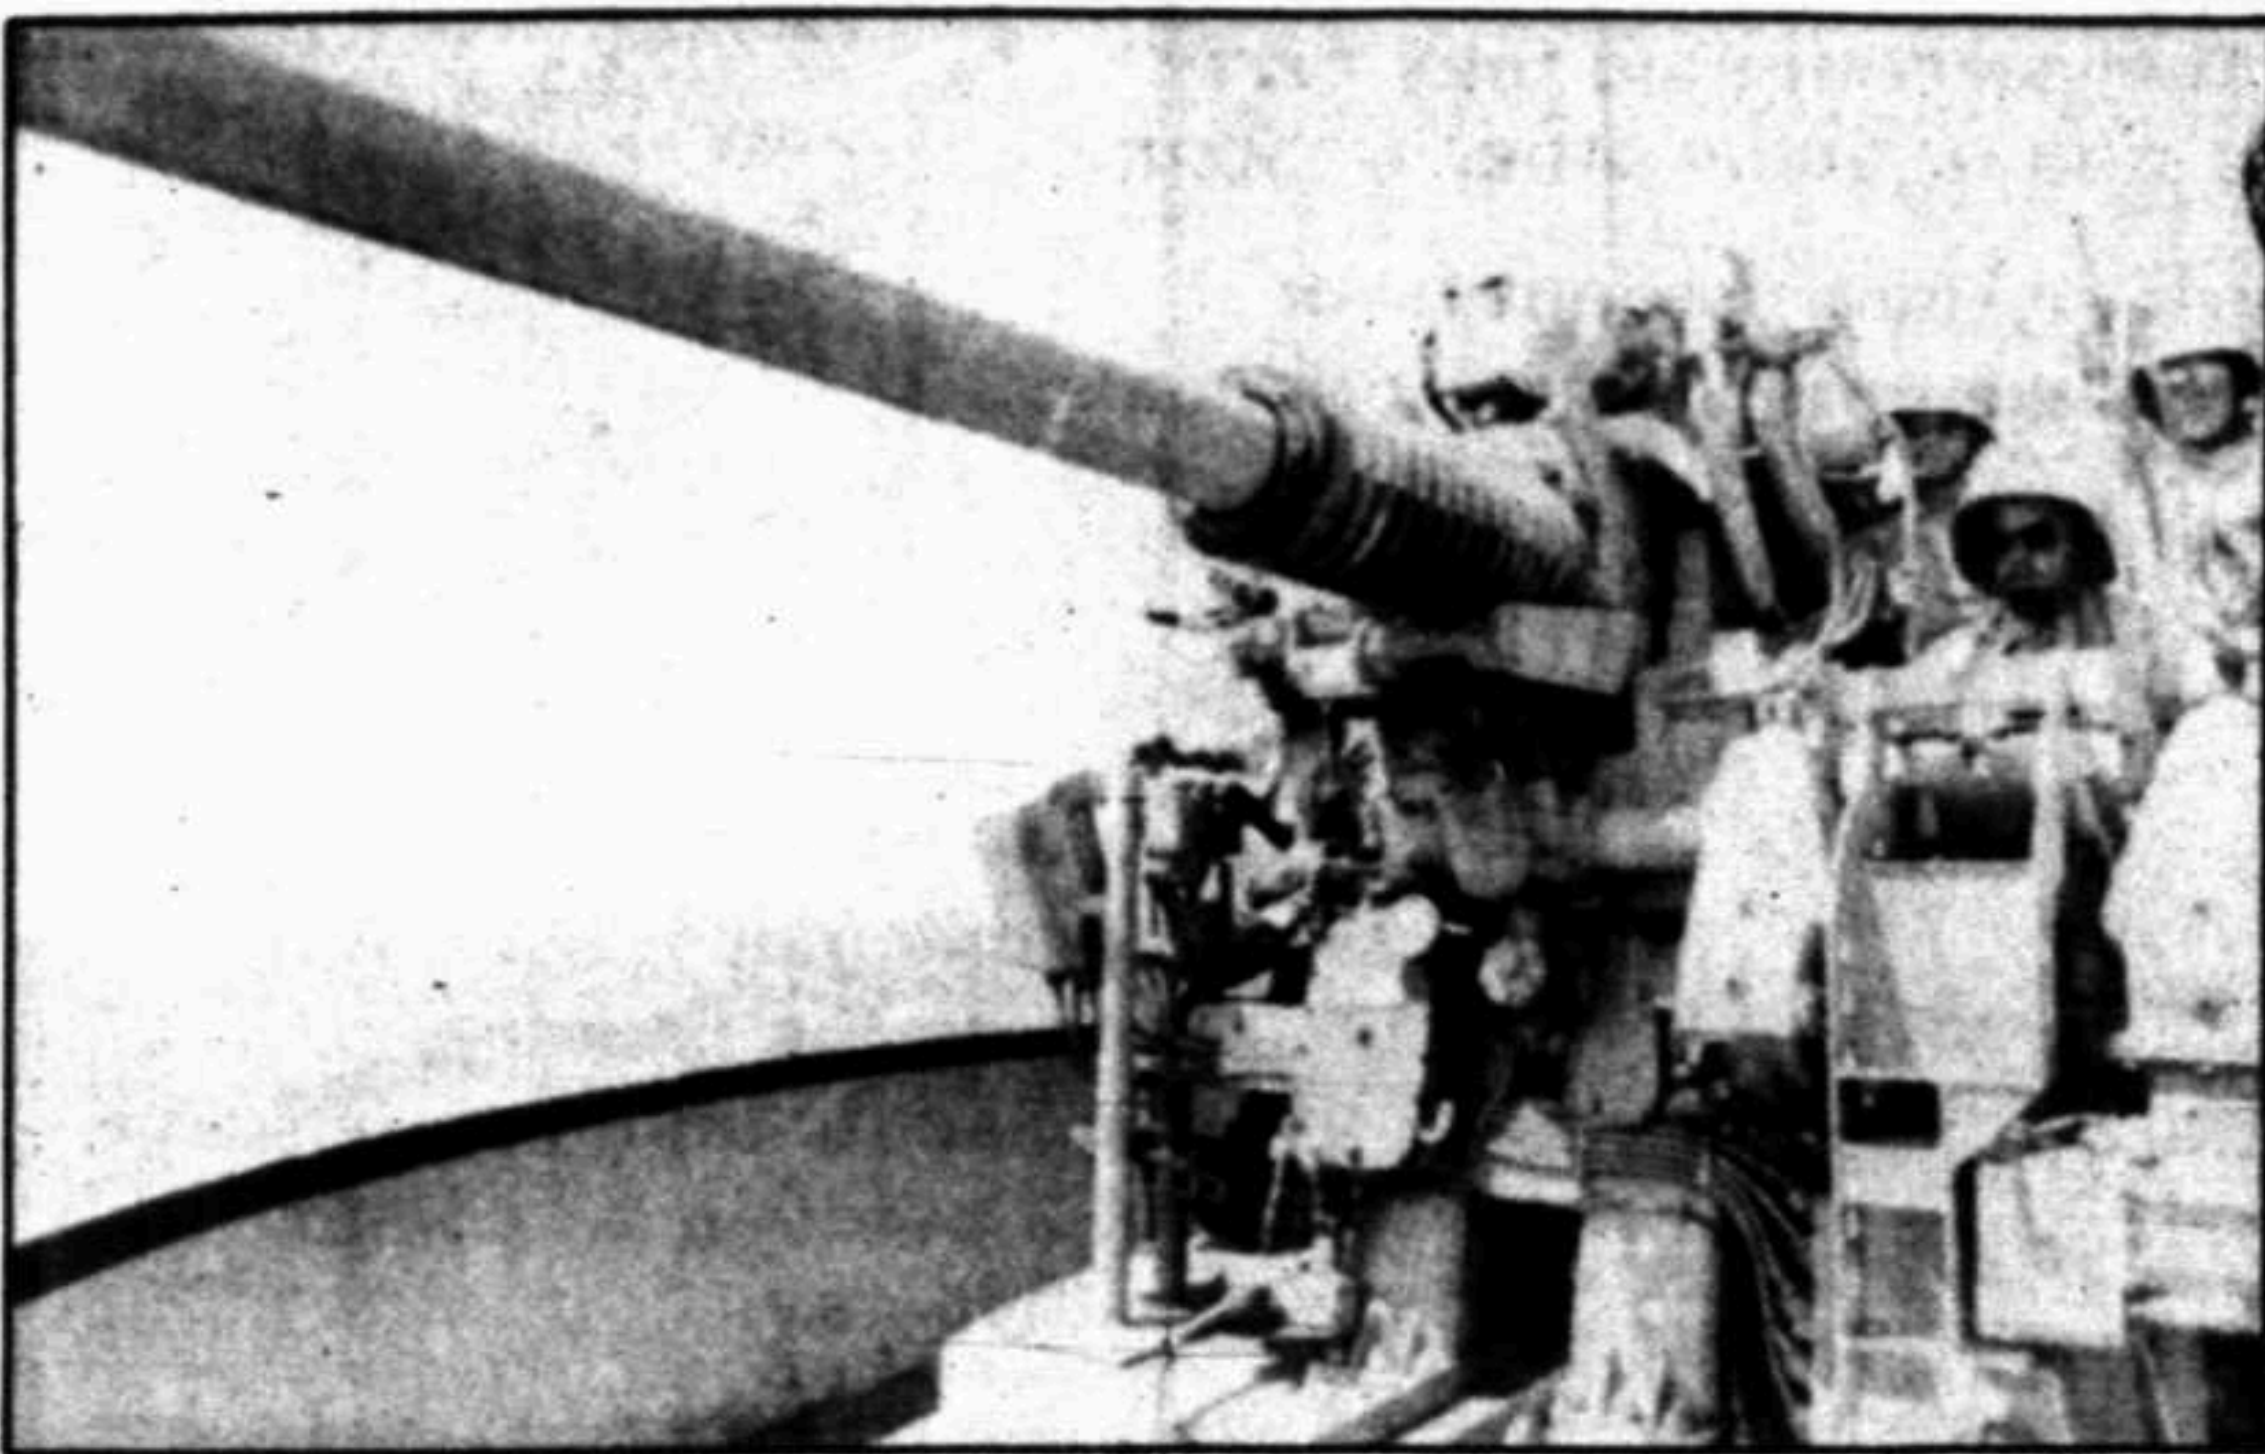

U.S. Navy Commodore Alvin S. Newman, who commands the 650 crewmen and U.S. ships and helicopters, said it may be impossible to lay the blame for the mining, even if a mine was found and identified.

"Every maritime nation has mines in its arsenal," he said. "If we find one, we will know that we are up against. That is the Egyptian goal."

The American helicopters were out dragging a torpedo-like sonar device by cable through the choppy blue sea and into a stiff breeze. The helicopters pull the device in runs of 15 to 20 miles, but only search an area of about one square mile on each run.

After examining two of the damaged ships, U.S. experts believe the mines are resting on the sea bottom. That type of mine may be triggered by the sound, pressure or magnetic field of a ship passing overhead.

The U.S. force is concentrating its efforts in shallower waters of the main shipping routes. Mines laying on the bottom would be ineffective in deeper water.

"If we don't find anything, we will have to ask the Egyptians how far they want us to go," said Capt. Donald Dill, head of the anti-mine team.

Newman said a third U.S. ship, the LaSalle, arrived off the Saudi Arabian port of Jidda on Sunday, and would be used as a base for three U.S. helicopters searching for mines around the Saudi port.

Egypt has said it believes Libya or Iran placed the mines, but both countries have denied the allegation. A pro-Iranian terrorist organization calling itself Islamic Holy War has claimed responsibility.

Ezzat Hasaballah, port officer at Port Said, the northern end of the Suez Canal, said by telephone that two Soviet naval vessels, identified as the 280-ton minesweeper 413 and the 500-ton minesweeper 912, went through the canal and into the Red Sea on Saturday.

Hasaballah said the Soviet Embassy had reported the ships were going to the Indian Ocean.

Shipping sources in the city of Suez, at the southern end of the canal, said they had received reports that the Soviet minesweepers were headed for pro-Soviet South Yemen.

Marxist-ruled South Yemen is located on the strategic Bab al Mandab Straits, which form the southern entrance to the Red Sea. More than half the explosions have occurred off the coast of pro-Western North Yemen, which is on the northern border of South Yemen.

Asked about the reports of Soviet ships, a Pentagon spokesman in Washington, Cmdr. Richard Schram, said: "We have heard reports ... but we have no information to confirm or deny these reports."

Shellfire damages Lebanese palace

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Amin Gemayel's government palace was damaged by shellfire overnight as army troops and Druse militiamen clashed in the worst breach of Lebanon's civil war ceasefire in six weeks, police said today.

The 42-year-old president and his family were not in the two-story hill-top palace, and none of his staff or guards was injured in the seven-hour duels, waged with artillery, multiple rocket launchers and tank cannons in the mountains overlooking Beirut.

Police said 12 civilians were wounded but had no casualty reports for the combatants.

Gemayel was at his summer villa in the mountain resort town of Bikfaya northeast of Beirut when the palace in suburban Baabda east of Beirut was hit. Police said the palace "sustained considerable material damage," but refused to give details.

WORLD in brief

Duties raised for statue

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Relatives of Benigno Aquino said today money will be raised to pay $3,970 in duties demanded by airport customs officials for release of a life-size bronze statue of the assassinated opposition leader.

"It should not be taxed, because it is a gift to the Filipino people," protested Aquino's sister, Tessy Oreta. The statue arrived in Manila on Sunday and was to be unveiled in conjunction with nationwide marches and rallies planned on Tuesday, the first anniversary of Aquino's unsolved assassination.

Aquino's brother, Agapito, said money would be raised to pay the duty needed to release the statue, but "under protest." A stone statue of Aquino has been prepared in case the bronze model, sculpted in Rome by Filipino artist Tomas Concepcion and sent via New York, is kept by the government.

Soviet relations an issue

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's Novosti news agency said today that U.S.-Soviet relations will be a key issue in the U.S. presidential election and declared that "confrontation with the Soviet Union means playing with fire."

The Novosti commentary said the Republicans' draft election platform had insured that the "Soviet factor" will feature prominently in the campaign.

"American voters will have to estimate the Reagan administration's approach with the Soviet Union and problems of war and peace," the agency said on the opening day of the Republican national convention in Dallas.

Six die in Indian protests

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Police clashed with demonstrators who derailed trains and burned government offices in protests against the dismissal of an opposition governor. At least six people were reported killed and 88 wounded during conflicts in three states.

A state police spokesman in Andhra Pradesh said officers' gunfire killed at least six people and wounded 38 during protests in two towns there Sunday. The United News of India said 50 people were injured in Bombay, capital of neighboring Maharashtra state in western India.

At least 25 people have died in protests since Thursday, when Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government dismissed the opposition-led state government of Andhra Pradesh, which had been led by Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao. About 275 protesters and 40 police have been injured.

Irish youths hit patrols

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Protestant and Roman Catholic youths attacked police patrols with gasoline bombs and rocks in separate outbreaks of rioting early today, police reported.

The street disturbances in Belfast and in Strabane, County Tyrone, were the latest in a week of violence in this sectarian-divided British province.

A spokesman for the Royal Ulster Constabulary said "dozens" of youths hurled gasoline bombs at police dismantling makeshift street barriers thrown up by protesters in Belfast's Protestant Shankill Road district. Police retaliated by firing a one plastic bullet, said the spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARD

Lee Trevino ends win-drought with splash

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — It had been three years since he had won, and despite 26 tour victories in 17 years, Lee Trevino, the cocky, "Merry Mex" wondered if he would ever win again.

Those doubts were erased Sunday when Trevino beat back the challenge of Lanny Wadkins and Gary Player to capture the 68th PGA Golf Championship by four strokes with a gutty 69.

His 273 total, 15-under-par over the 7,145-yard, par 72 Shoal Creek Course was a PGA record as was his four consecutive sub-70 rounds, the first golfer ever to accomplish that feat.

Watkins finished with a 72 and Player a 71 to tie for the second spot at 277.

"IT FEELS great. When you're young, you always say it's inevitable. You'll win sooner or later. But when you're old, you don't know if you'll ever win again," said the 44-year-old Trevino.

"The last time I had won was in May of 1981 (Tournament of Champions), but I was always saying I can win — only it didn't happen."

Well, it happened, and Trevino is $125,000 richer for gaining the title, his 6th major, to go along with his other PGA title in 1974 and two U.S. Opens and a pair of British Opens.

The victory pushed his earnings for the season to $265,407 and to $3,019,592 for his career, third best behind Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson, but it didn't come easy despite the four-stroke margin.

Trevino held only a one-shot lead over Wadkins on the par 3, 16th hole and was looking at a 15-foot putt for par. Wadkins had about a 12-footer for birdie.

"That was the turning point," said Trevino. "I had hit an awful shot, hit it fat and into the bunker and he's got a 12-footer for birdie. I need the 15 footer for par."

"I make mine and he missed and I've still got my one-shot lead," he said.

Watkins then bogeyed the 17th and 18th while Trevino added a birdie on the final hole for the victory.

Player, who earned $62,500 along with Wadkins for their runnerup finish, parred the final four holes to catch Watkins.

FOR WADKINS, it was a disappointment, but he conceded that "Lee played awfully well. He made the putts he had to on the back nine, and I didn't. That was it," said Wadkins.

"Number 16 was the key to the tournament. I felt like we kept putting the heat on each other back and forth and it was a lot of fun," he said.

"At the Tournament Players tournament last year, it was similar, and I beat him. But he got me here," said Wadkins.

The victory also qualified Trevino for the World Series of Golf tournament later this week in Akron, Ohio.

CALVIN Peete fired a 68 in the final round which was delayed one hour by a thunderstorm, and finished fourth at 278. British Open champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain was alone at 279 after a 70.

Larry Mize, Scott Simpson, Gary Hallberg and defending champion

Hal Sutton were tied for sixth at 280. Mize had a 73, Simpson and Hallberg 70s and Sutton a 69.

At 281 were left-hander Russ Cochran, Victory Regalado and Japan's Tommy Nakajima. Cochran had a 67, Regalado a 70 and Nakajima a 74.

Nicklaus, who designed the treacherous, hilly course with a deep punishing rough, had a 69 for a 287.

WATSON, who has won five British Opens, two Masters and the 1982 U.S. Open, but has never won this event, had a 71 for 291.

As it turned out, it was Trevino's week. The Hall of Famer shot earlier rounds of 69, 68 and 67 and shared or led from the second round on. He also had only two bogeys and one double bogey in four rounds.

"I had a good feeling that it's my time to win," he said earlier. "I just think it's time for Lee Trevino to win another major."

And he did, erasing the lingering doubt that he could win again.

Birds flash glimpse of past

Texas, Tanana tease Royals

Associated Press

The Baltimore Orioles are literally hundreds of miles out of first place.

The struggling Birds looked more like the defending champions Sunday than they have for most of this season. Rick Dempsey drove in three runs with a pair of homers and Gary Roenicke added a three-run blast, highlighting a 16-hit attack, as Baltimore took a 10-4 victory over California to sweep their weekend series with the Angels.

Mike Flanagan, 10-11, ended his personal five-game losing streak while pinning a fifth straight loss on the Angels.

The Orioles have fallen far short of expectations this season, but in a sense the only thing keeping them out of first place is their East Coast location. Their 65-58 record is identical to that of the "high-flying" Minnesota Twins, the leaders in the American League West.

California's loss dropped the second-place Angels below .500, making Minnesota the only Western club with its head above water.

The Orioles had scored two or fewer runs in 10 of Flanagan's last 20 starts and six of his last 10.

"I felt a little strange," said Flanagan. "I had gone about a month or so with not too many runs to work with. I felt more pressure with a 5-1 lead it had been so long since I'd been in that position."

Dempsey has had the look of a champion against the Angels this year. "I guess they (the pitchers) got behind and accidentally hit my bat," said the catcher, who has three homers in his last three games and four of his six this season against California. He was 0-for-17 before a single and a homer Friday night.

"When I went up in the eighth," Dempsey added, "the guys on the bench told me to try and get in the books with the big guys by hitting three homers. I tried."

Dempsey started a five-run rally in the third with his first homer. Mike Young and John Shelby followed with singles, and after Cal Ripken fanned, Eddie Murray, Wayne Gross and Joe Nolan added successive run-scoring singles to finish Bruce Kison, 3-2.

Bobby Grich drove in one run with a third-inning double and two with an eighth-inning homer. Another former Oriole, Doug DeCinces, drove in the Angels' other run with a groundout in the sixth.

Dempsey hit his sixth homer of the season in the sixth. Roenicke clouted his ninth in the seventh and walked with the bases loaded in the eighth for his fourth RBI of the game.

Rangers 6, Royals 4

George Wright hit a two-run homer and Ned Yost and Gary Ward added two RBIs apiece for Texas. Frank Tanana, 13-11, gained the victory despite yielding consecutive homers to Darryl Motley, Frank White and Steve Balboni in the seventh.

Balboni picked up his second homer of the evening with one out in the ninth.

Indians 8-2, Brewers 6-1

Former Midland Cub Mel Hall cracked a two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning to win the first game, then scored the winning run on Pat Tabler's triple in the ninth inning of the nightcap. The Indians extended their winning streak to six games and padded their bulge over the Brewers to 2½ games in the battle to stay out of last place.

Cardinals 6, Braves 5

David Green's line drive to center field in the fourth inning turned into an inside-the-park homer when it skipped past Dale Murphy and rolled to the wall.

The homer capped a three-run fourth inning and gave St. Louis a 4-0 lead. Ricky Horton, 8-2, got the victory and Bruce Sutter earned his 33rd save.

Phillies 6, Dodgers 3

Ozzie Virgil's two-run single highlighted a four-run rally in the seventh inning that overcame a 3-2 deficit. The outburst, which was helped by a run-producing wild pitch and an error by host Los Angeles, came against three pitchers.

Shane Rawley, 6-3, pitched his first NL complete game in 10 starts, allowing seven hits.

Red Sox 5, Twins 4

The Red Sox ended a string of three consecutive losses to the Twins as Bill Buckner and Ed Jurak drove in runs with eighth-inning singles. The Twins, who rallied from a 3-0 deficit, had taken a 4-3 lead in the top of the inning.

Reliever Steve Crawford, 5-0, pitched to one batter to earn the victory.

Blue Jays 7, White Sox 4

Pinch hitter Dave Collins' two-run triple keyed a four-run ninth inning off Juan Agosto, 2-1, and Ron Reed. The two relievers inherited a 4-3 lead from starter Tom Seaver.

Greg Walker doubled and tripled for Chicago, scoring both times. Vance Law hit an RBI triple and Rudy Law added a pinch homer.

Yankees 9, A's 6

Ken Griffey's three-run homer and Dave Winfield's two-run single powered a five-run New York eighth inning. Winfield smashed four hits, including his 14th home run. Butch Wynegar also homered for the Yankees.

Carney Lansford singled twice to extend his hitting streak to 22 games, longest in the American League this year.

Rose needs new sparks for Dead Machine

Associated Press

Pete Rose, for the time being, has brought a renewed sense of pride to the Cincinnati Reds, a crackling bat to the lineup and fans back to Riverfront Stadium.

And while the Queen City is still buzzing about the return of its hometown hero, the 43-year-old player-manager still has some king-sized problems with the Big Dead Machine.

The Chicago Cubs, getting three-run homers from Ron Cey and Thad Bosley, thumped the Reds 9-6 Sunday. The Cubs' victory followed their 13-11 triumph Saturday, which came after the Reds beat Chicago 6-4 in Rose's managerial debut Friday night.

Astros 4, Pirates 3

Houston won its ninth straight Joe Niekro, 12-9, helped the Astros match their longest winning streak

National League

since 1981.

Expos 3, Padres 0

In San Diego, rookie Joe Hesketh was the pitching star and veterans Andre Dawson and Tim Lincecum were the hitting stars as Montreal won its fifth straight game.

Hesketh, making just his second major-league start, won his first career decision by scattering five hits over 7 1/3 innings. Jeff Reardon allowed one hit the rest of the way for his 18th save.

Giants 7-2, Mets 6-4

Bruce Berenyi's pitching and hitting helped New York to gain a split in San Francisco.

Berenyi, 9-12, allowed seven hits over eight innings before leaving the game with a pulled hamstring.

Injury to Ag quarterback may have been blessing

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill wouldn't wish an injury on anyone, especially on a key player like quarterback Kevin Murray.

But now that a freak spring training knee injury is behind him, Sherrill thinks it might have helped the talented sophomore.

"He's done so much work this off-season that he looks like a line-backer," Sherrill said. "I'm not saying it's good he got hurt, but it's helped him to mature and to realize what it means to take care of business in the weight room."

Murray, who took over the starting job last season as a freshman, underwent arthroscopic knee surgery after he was injured in a spring game against the alumni.

Sherrill is depending on Murray to help the Aggies overcome last year's 5-5-1 season and he already recognizes improvement.

"I think we'll be 20 percent better offensively right off the bat," Sherrill said. "Kevin's really worked hard, sometimes as many as three times a day."

Sherrill also liked what he saw of his running back corps in spring drills.

"We've got to do as good a job this fall as we did in the spring of running the football," Sherrill said. "We know we'll be able to throw and catch."

The catchers will include flanker Jeff Nelson, split end Jimmy Teal and tight ends Rich Siler and Mark Lewis.

Siler will miss early fall workouts because of a foot injury.

The Aggies will be able to choose among five runners — Anthony Toney, Rod Bernstine and Keith Woodside at tailback and Roger Vick and Ira Valentine at fullback.

A scrambled offensive line will be headed by transfer Doug Williams, a 6-7, 300 pounder, who went head to head with prize defensive end Ray Childress in spring drills.

"Doug Williams made Ray Childress a better player, and Childress made Williams better," Sherrill said of the spring wars between the two. "They got after each other. They got so aggressive a couple of times we had to break them up."

The Aggies also are hoping to continue their defensive improvement. A&M's defense yielded 306 yards per game last season, knocking almost 100 yards per game off their 1982 yield.

Childress should lead the defenders and finally get overdue recognition, Sherrill said.

"People are not going to physically defeat Ray Childress," the coach said. "He's just that kind of player. He'll be fighting for the Lombardi Award (as nation's outstanding lineman)."

Childress led the Aggies in tackles last season with 117. Against fellow Southwest Conference foe Arkansas, he had 17 tackles and four sacks.

A veteran secondary is another strong point for the Aggies, anchored by returning starting safeties Domingo Bryant and Wayne Asberry.

The Aggies open their season Sept. 1 against Texas-El Paso and then take a two-week break before hosting Iowa State.

Michigan faces tough chore

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan Coach Bo Schembechler heads into one of the Wolverines' toughest schedules in years with a rebuilt offensive line and a green quarterback.

But, is he worried? Not at all, to hear him talk.

"We play some nice teams," Schembechler said recently. "I think it's going to be a fun season."

Fun? He calls playing Miami, Washington, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio State fun.

"I wouldn't concede to any of those people," Schembechler said. "We always go in thinking we're going to win and this year will be no different."

The Wolverines finished No. 8 in the final 1983 Associated Press poll after losing a 9-7 heartbreaker to Auburn on the last play of the Sugar Bowl game. Gone from that team, however, are All-American offensive tackle Stefan Humphries, center Tom Dixon and veteran quarterback Steve Smith.

Schembechler has shuffled bodies and feels comfortable with his rebuilt offensive line. Michigan always has plenty of tackles and tailbacks, after all.

Even at quarterback, where Jim Harbaugh is the heir apparent, the coach feels comfortable, despite the fact that Harbaugh, a 6-foot-3, 202-pound junior, threw only five passes all last year, completing two for 26 yards.

Harbaugh comes from a football family. His father, Jack, was defensive coordinator at Stanford and Chris became a prep whiz around Palo Alto before dad moved on to become head coach at Western Michigan University.

"Harbaugh is tough and competitive," Schembechler said.

The fact remains, however, that Schembechler and his staff may well have to do their best job ever of coaching.

The offensive line will be reshuffled, moving guard Art Balourdos (6-3, 250) from guard to center. Veteran Clay Miller (6-4, 258) will play strong tackle and Hammerstein's brother, Mark, (6-4, 262) will start at quick tackle.

The receiving corps is solid with veterans Vince Bean, Sim Nelson, Eric Kattus, Triando Markray and Gilvani Johnson all returning.

SEC secondary to No. 1 in land

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — The Auburn Tigers, loaded with line talent and led by Bo Jackson, a gifted sprinter who may be college football's premier running back, used to talk about winning the Southeastern Conference crown.

That was before Pat Dye arrived.

Dye, 44, took over a battered program at Auburn in 1981 and, within the space of three seasons, returned the Tigers to powerhouse prominence. To Dye, SEC titles are fine, but the goal is a national championship, last won by the Tigers in 1957.

To reach that goal in 1984, Auburn will have to quickly settle some old scores.

Auburn ended the 1983 season 11-1 and No. 3 in the nation, losing only to Texas and then throttled by Miami's surge to the top of the final polls. The first two teams on the Tigers' 1984 schedule: Miami and Texas.

THE PRESENCE of Jackson, a junior already on many pro teams' wish list, gives the Tigers a shot against anyone.

Jackson is a muscular 225-pounder who can drag linemen with him up the middle. He is also one of the nation's fastest sprinters, with a personal best of 10.3 seconds in the 100 meters and the ability to fly past cornerbacks. And he is acrobatic — as a prep athlete he cleared 6-foot-8 in the high jump — able to tight-walk sidelines and leap over crowds for short yardage.

Auburn's wishbone offense may well become the Wish Bo this time around.

"If we get beat, we're going to get beat with Bo carrying the ball," said Dye.

Jackson is joined by talented running mates — sophomore fullback Tommie Agee blitzed Maryland for 219 yards on 24 carries last year, and sophomore left halfback Brent Pullwood, a darting 196-pounder, is rated almost equal to Jackson as a breakaway threat.

But Auburn has a question mark at quarterback.

Pat Washington, a strong-armed passer with speed afoot, was given the early nod to replace the departed Randy Campbell. But Washington suffered a shoulder injury in preseason work, putting him in the doubtful category for the Aug. 27 Kickoff Classic game against Miami.

MIKE MANN was elevated to the No. 1 quarterback spot when Washington went out. Dye said the Tigers may be into the early part of the season before someone claims the signal-calling job for keeps.

He also said that Auburn's success this season will depend on how well the Tigers' new faces — redshirt freshmen and newcomers from the prep ranks — perform on the field.

"I'm not sure they'll be ready to play against Miami and Texas, but we're going to play them anyway," said Dye.

The Auburn defense is led by veteran stars including Gregg Carr at linebacker, David King at cornerback, Ben Thomas at tackle and Gerald Robinson at end, all seniors but Robinson, who is a junior.

Gone from last year's squad are defensive line stars Doug Smith, Donnie Humphrey and Dowe Aughtman. But the 275-pound Thomas has many big and able bodies around him, including a crew of highly-touted prep stars, all tall and strong. Among the top freshmen contenders for playing time are Nate Hill, Tracy Rucker and Ron Stallworth, all in the 6-foot-5, 245-pound range.

Last year Auburn played perhaps the toughest schedule in the nation. This year it is only slightly easier — counting the Miami opener, the Tigers play eight teams that went to bowls last season, including the likes of Texas, Florida, Georgia and Alabama.

If Auburn doesn't make it all the way through to the No. 1 spot in the nation, it's expected at least to make it to a prestige bowl, possibly as the SEC champion. But then, that's not what Dye is thinking about.

Beaumont squares series with Midland

BEAUMONT—Beaumont defeated Midland, 3-0, to square the Texas League series going into tonight's game.

Beaumont hitting stars Pat Casey and Ed Vosberg had RBI doubles in the seventh inning, while Jeff Ronk hit an RBI double in the fifth.

Vosberg, 12-11, went the distance for the Golden Gators, scattering eight hits and striking out six. Jeff Jones went 2-4 for Midland, both singles. Doug Potestio, 5-9, was the loser.

A solo homer by Garrett Nago highlighted a two-run fifth inning as the El Paso Diablos edged San Antonio 9-4. Former major league Doug Jones tallied a complete game, increasing his record to 5-7.

In other league play Sunday, Jackson whipped Shreveport 3-0 and Arkansas squeaked by Tulsa 6-5 in 10 innings.

El Paso had a two-run first inning in which Dale Sveum grabbed a two-run double. A five-run fourth inning featured five singles, two walks and a wild pitch.

Dan Cataline batted the lead-off homer for San Antonio in the third inning. Todd Gauntlett walked, and scored later on a wild pitch. Cecil Epply had a single in the third on a stolen base. He later scored on a single by Gary Newsom.

Gilberto Reyes had a lead-off double in the top of the seventh, and later scored on a sacrifice fly by Gauntlett. Brian Piper, 6-5, was the loser.

First baseman Bill Max hit a two-run homer to lead the Mets to a 3-0 Captains shutout. Bull Fultz, 10-4, went the distance and pitched a six-hit shutout, striking out five and walking one.

Nancy Lopez beats off challenge

Martina keeps streak alive

From Wire Reports

TENNIS—Martina Navratilova outlasted her doubles partner, Pam Shriver, 6-4, 4-6, 7-5 for her 48th consecutive singles match in winning the United States Bank Classic. The triumph earned Navratilova $27,500 and moved her to within eight matches of Chris Evert Lloyd's modern record of 56 consecutive singles victories, set in 1974. Navratilova won her 13th of her last 140 matches.

John McEnroe won his 50th match in 60 attempts this year by demolishing Vitas Gerulaitis 6-0, 6-3 in the Canadian Open at Toronto. McEnroe, who only lost this year to Ivan Lendl in the French Open finals, had reached the finals here only once before—in 1979, when he lost to Bjorn Borg. "It was getting to be a mental thing," said McEnroe, the second seed here. "I didn't know if I ever was going win this tournament, so it's good I've got that off my back."

Ken Rosewall defeated Roy Emerson 6-3, 6-2 for the Foster Lager senior's title at Napa, Calif. Thomas Smid took 64 minutes to beat Mel Purcell 6-3, 6-2 in the 1984 Head Classic at Stowe, Vt. In doubles, Guillermo Vilas and Andres Gomez edged past Ilie Nastase and Jose Higueras 7-6, 7-4.

GOLF—Nancy Lopez lost six shots to JoAnne Carner in the first eight holes Sunday, then rallied to win the Chevrolet World Championship of Women's Golf and $65,000—the biggest paycheck in the sport. Lopez led the Carner on the eighth hole. She regained it with a birdie on No. 12 and finished with a 1-over-par 73 for a tournament record total of 281 and a stroke victory. The previous 72-hole mark for this five-year-old event was 282, set by Beth Daniel in 1980 and Carner last year. Patty Sheehan, this year's leading money winner, shot a 71 for third place with 284. She collected $23,000 and now has won $241,622 this year.

BASEBALL—The St. Louis Cardinals sent infielder Chris Speier to the Minnesota Twins for cash and a player to be named later. Speier, 34, was acquired by St. Louis in July in a trade with Montreal for infielder Mike Ramsey. Speier is batting .171 this season. Cardinal shortstop Ozzie Smith, on the 21-day disabled list with a broken wrist, will be activated today.

Warren Cromartie hit his 29th homer to retain the Japanese Central League lead as the Yomiuri Giants bombarded the Taiyo Whales 16-7 at Yokohama Stadium Sunday. Tommy Cruz drove in the winning run to lift the Nippon Ham Fighters to a 4-3 victory over Hankyu. Greg "Boomer" Wells hit his 28th and the Pacific League. Chris Nyman blasted a three-run homer, his 25th, to give the Nankai Hawks a 5-0 win over the Kintetsu Buffaloes.

Britain's Sam Torrance shot a 69—270 to hold off Australia's Wayne Grady to win the Benson and Hedges International by one stroke at Fulford, Eng.

TRACK—America's world record holder Edwin Moses suffered a dizzy spell and left the track shortly before his 400-meter hurdles race at Hanover, W. Germany, a meet plagued by dropouts and no-shows. Evelyn Ashford also backed out of competition in the women's 100 meters sprint because of a pulled muscle.

SWIMMING—Marilyn Korsekwa, a 27-year-old psychiatrist from Hamilton, became the first Canadian and only the second person to swim Lake Ontario north to south from Toronto to Port Huron, Ont. She battled high waves and powerful currents for much of the 31.7 mile swim.

HORSE RACING—Valiant Sweetheart, an 11-1 shot, led from start to finish to win the $25,000 Pollyanna Stakes by 2 1/4 lengths Sunday at Arlington Park.

AUTO RACING—Danny Sullivan said his victory in the Pocono 500 Indy-car race should prove that he's more than a road-racing specialist. Sullivan took the lead just six laps from the end, zooming from third place to first in less than one trip around the 2.5-mile Pocono tri-oval.

FOOTBALL—Little-used quarterback Tim Cowan fired a 40-yard touchdown pass to Merv Fernandez as the British Columbia Lions beat Hamilton to a 19-11 victory over the Hamilton Tiger-Cats, 19-11, in the CFL. Cowan, of the University of Washington, got his first start this season because Roy Dewalt was still feeling the effects of a head injury suffered last weekend.

Three's no crowd to Saints' Bum

HOUSTON (AP)—The old saying is that two's company and three's a crowd, but New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips is not complaining.

"I've never had three quarterbacks that equal before. I might use them all if I knew it wouldn't disrupt the team," Phillips said after the Saints' triple threat of Ken Stabler, Richard Todd and Dave Wilson took turns feasting on the young Houston Oilers defense.

The Saints' had little difficulty Saturday night en route to a 31-19 National Football League preseason victory, but the equality of play from his signal callers didn't make Phillips' job of picking a starter any easier.

"I've got another week and I want them to work like hell for that week. It would be hard to point out one guy. It wouldn't be fair to the others. One might have had better opportunities," Phillips said.

Todd said, "This is a good situation when a team has confidence in all three quarterbacks. I'm not going to get into who might start. I think I played well but so have the other two. Who knows, we may all play."

Cristina De Lorean: After the trial

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — "One day when John was finally home after the arrest, he was trying to call our cat: 'Here, Snow. C'mon, Snow.' I said, 'Honey, we're just going to have to change that cat's name.'"

Cristina Ferrare De Lorean — world-class model, actress, mother and now author — tossed back her head and laughed, something she did often during the interview.

Despite her famous husband's trial, Cristina has not lost her sense of humor.

"I've always joked my way out of every serious situation I've ever faced," said Cristina, dressed in a white chiffon dress and looking fresh and rested.

"WHENEVER I get backed into a corner, I find that humor is a great release. I can remember going into Terminal Island (federal prison) to see John after the arrest and making him laugh," she said, her blue eyes shining as she spoke.

"For me, life has been like growing up and marrying Prince Charming. I lived in a storybook fantasy until the happily-ever-after fell off the page," said Cristina of her ups and downs in a 12-year marriage to automaker John Z. DeLorean. "I was in the courtroom one day and I looked around and said, 'Man, they never told me what for worse meant when we were getting married.'"

Cristina is out promoting her new book: "Style, How to Have It in Every Part of Your Life."

Cristina is the first to acknowledge the unseemly appearance of running around pushing a catalog of tips on home decorating, makeup, exercise, diet and other frothy what-not in the midst of her husband's legal struggle.

But she insists the book deal was consummated before DeLorean was arrested in October 1982, by the FBI in Los Angeles.

"My whole world just fell around me and I tried to get out of the book deal," said Cristina of the days following her husband's arrest. "I told them (Simon & Schuster, the publishers) that the last thing I wanted to do was to sit and tell people how to make up their eyes when I'm trying to get my husband out of jail."

BUT THE publishers offered to delay her deadline until things calmed down for her.

"I can't help it if the book came out the same time as the trial," she insisted. "It is a coincidence. We thought the trial would be over by now. It works as a negative: First, people think you did it to cash in; second, everywhere I go (to promote) the book, the main topic is always John and the trial. Nobody wants to talk about my book, but I understand.

"I lived in a storybook fantasy until the happily-ever-after fell off the page," said John DeLorean's wife.

"This project was good for me.

You need something to take your mind off things because everything is so serious in court," she said.

The book may also provide some needed income, she said. "I haven't done any modeling in the almost two years since this happened.

Everybody suddenly backed off and my modeling jobs just dried up."

A model for 20 years, Cristina began her career at age 14.

"I appeared in all the kid magazines, Seventeen, Teen, — I was the Phisohex face in all the pimple ads; the acne poster child," said the daughter of a butcher and a waitress from Cleveland.

Soon it was on to Hollywood. She graduated from high school while a contract player at 20th Century-Fox, and had a major role during the mid-'60s in "The Impossible Years," starring as David Niven's daughter. She played a hippie in the Cliff Robertson film "J.W. Coop." She played models in a string of movies, and did guest spots on such TV shows as "Vegas," "Matt Houston," "Fantasy Island" and "Love Boat."

IN 1972, she was introduced to John DeLorean by a mutual friend — the lawyer who was handling their respective divorces — and they were married after a six-month courtship.

"There is a 25-year age difference — John will be 60 in January. But I never viewed him as the older man, as someone to look up to," she said. "He's almost 60, but he's always been a physical fitness buff and he's in incredible shape, even with all the stress and strain."

Cristina becomes quite serious when asked if she or her husband have themselves used cocaine.

"You can ask any of our friends from the past 12 years — and the FBI has, they've asked photographers I've worked with, trying to find out if I've done any (coke) — and it's: 'What, are you kidding? Cristina?' People start laughing."

"I saw cocaine once in my life. A decorator brought it into my home and I asked him to leave. I don't approve of it. I've got kids to worry about (the couple has a 6-year-old daughter and 13-year-old son). I have never, ever, in my life snorted cocaine."

BUT CRISTINA is not timid (you can tell that from her powerful handshake) and she says when a reporter writes something she finds distasteful, she doesn't hesitate to let him know about it.

A case in point: Last year photographers for the New York Daily News outside her apartment snapped pictures of designer Albert Capraro leaving after talking over Mrs. DeLorean's going-to-court wardrobe. A spread in the newspaper, followed by a story in Women's Wear Daily, angered her.

Vice-presidential husband: What role would he fill?

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — John Zaccaro is an ex-Marine, a real estate developer, a New York Rangers hockey fan — a regular kind of guy, as wealthy businessmen go. But he's married to Rep. Geraldine Ferraro. And come Inauguration Day, he could become the first man in history to be the husband of a vice president of the United States.

Nobody knows exactly what a vice president's husband would do. "It's utterly unexplored territory," said Lewis Gould, history professor at the University of Texas, who is writing a book on President Lyndon Johnson's widow, Lady Bird. "Cereemonially, who would he sit next to? How would he rank?"

But Zaccaro's situation also raises questions about the role of the political spouse who dutifully gives parties and cuts ribbons. "We expect the First Lady and other spouses to do the job for free and whether they like it or not," said Judith Martin, author of the Miss Manners newspaper column. "People may finally see how utterly silly this really is."

WITH MORE two-income couples, the devoted political spouse is something of an endangered species anyway. "The changes in the family structure are finally getting up to that level," said Michael Giles, chairman of the political science department at Emory University. "You're going to be seeing more couples like the Doles — he's a senator and she's secretary of transportation."

Zaccaro has indicated that if his wife is elected he'll continue his Manhattan real estate business and commute to Washington on weekends. "She does her thing and I do mine," he has said. "Same old stuff."

Not exactly. There are already Secret Service men in their house. He's been deluged by reporters and his business has been scrutinized in the press.

Even for the husband of a congresswoman, being in the national spotlight is a quantum jump," said Gould. "This is a different order of magnitude than no private citizen is prepared for."

In the past, the role of vice presidential wives has been primarily social, although some have used the position to promote causes. When Fritz Mondale was vice president, his wife, Joan, became an advocate of American art. Barbara Bush fosters literacy.

ON THE whole, however, the Second Lady has kept a low profile. "Most vice presidents are forgettable, and you know even less about their wives," said Paul Boller, history professor at Texas Christian University and author of "Presidential Campaigns." "Can anyone quote Barbara Bush on anything?"

But in this case, past administrations provide no guide. If the Democrats pull off an upset and Ms. Ferraro becomes the first woman vice president, the klieg lights will be turned on her, anointing her and her husband with special star status.

She will likely be in more demand than other vice presidents, and her husband, like it or not, is bound to get involved. "The political operatives at the White House," explained Gould, "would say, 'We have these groups who need attention, can you help us out?' Since everyone would want the administration to succeed, it'd be hard to say no."

In the past, Zaccaro, who didn't want his wife to work when they were first married, has pitched in with fund-raising for her congressional campaigns, accompanied her to events in her district, and appeared with her at the Democratic national convention.

"The publicity and celebrity status will test him for a while," said Gould. "If Zaccaro can attract a crowd, he'll be asked to do more. I think they'll be defining his role for the better part of the first year."

THE PROTOCOL aspects wouldn't be difficult, said Mrs. Martin (a.k.a. Miss Manners). For seating arrangements, she explained, the spouse is customarily given the rank of the officeholder. In receiving lines, it's rank over gender, so Ms. Ferraro would precede her husband. "This would be refreshing for all those people tired of seeing the wives trail after their husbands," she said.

The pioneer in this sort of thing has been Denis Thatcher, husband of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. A retired businessman, he gives his wife behind-the-scenes support but is made fun of in the British press. "He's done his bit," said Mrs. Martin. "There's been a lot of kidding, but he's handled it gracefully. Maybe people will learn to stop giggling."

As for ceremonial duties, Mrs. Martin said, "It's high time people were hired to do that." She pointed to other countries where a president takes care of the ceremonial side and a chancellor or prime minister runs the government. In Britain, the royal family is on call for hospital visits, library openings and other social functions.

"I've always felt it was unfair to the women, who have handled it so well," said Mrs. Martin. "Poor Mrs. Ford (Betty, wife of former President Gerald Ford) now tells us that she was an alcoholic during the time she was performing ceremonial functions. One can only imagine what she went through."

WHILE ZACCARO is now the husband in the limelight, a couple of other American men have had to give some serious thought to being the husband of a vice president. For a while, Mondale seemed interested in naming San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein his running mate and sent several aides to California for long discussions with her and her husband, Richard Blum. "We knew at that point that there weren't many players left in the game," said Blum, an investment banker.

He said he told the Mondale people he had "no interest in redecorating any official residence, serving tea or cutting ribbons." He said that if he was ever involved in federal government his interest would be economic development in Third World countries.

But the role of the vice president's husband, he said, depends on the man. "It's just a question of what John Zaccaro wants to do and what he and his wife want to do together."

Colorado Rep. Patricia Schroeder also mentioned for the No. 2 spot — an idea her husband, Jim, not only supported but promoted. He wrote Mondale a memo encouraging him to select a woman and suggesting that the woman should be his wife. "He apparently read the first half of the memo and not the second," said Schroeder with a laugh.

HE THINKS the husband of the vice president could probably keep his job and "get away with doing his own thing." Schroeder, a lawyer, moved to Washington in 1972 when his wife was elected to Congress.

He said he doubted that the public was really interested in the husband of the vice president. "If a group is all set to see Geraldine Ferraro but John Zaccaro walks in instead, they might boo him out of the place," said Schroeder. "There might be some husband who gives up his job, moves into the mansion to help his wife and finds himself playing a lot of golf. We have no experience with this."

But the picture changes, said Schroeder, if you talk about a president's husband. "He'd probably have to give up his work since the spouse of the president is traditionally such an integral part of the White House," he said.

Another touchy point is how influential the husband of a president or vice president might become. "I don't think people feel the spouse should be advising," said Schroeder. "Rightly or wrongly, President Carter suffered when people thought Rosalynn was calling some of the shots."

DEAR ABBY

TV presents disturbing pictures

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 76-year-old grandfather who watches TV with my teen-aged grandchildren. No TV commercial offends me as much as those close-ups of love scenes with long, drawn-out, open-mouthed kisses where the lovers gnaw and chew at each other. — DISGUSTED IN ISLAND POND, VT.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Read on for a letter from a pair of Vermont teenagers. They approve of the TV commercials, but raise another objection:

DEAR ABBY: We just read your column about the family who was watching a good, clean movie on television when a commercial came on for panty liners, embarrassing the teen-age boy and girl. Right after that, a commercial for a douche came on, and the mother became so disgusted she turned off the set.

Well, we are two teen-agers, 13 and 15, and we want to tell you how we feel about these commercials. We are sure most kids know about these products, and if they don't, they should. They are a part of nature and normal living, which is OK.

What we don't think is OK are those soap operas showing a married woman going to spend the weekend with somebody else's husband.

That is not right, and it shouldn't be shown on TV like it's a normal and natural thing to do. We don't think it sets a good example for us teen-agers. — TWO TEENS IN CORINTH, VT.

DEAR ABBY: I have been reading with interest the controversy regarding how "dirty" money is reputed to be. I am now retired, but I worked in a bank for almost 50 years, during which time I personally handled at least a million dollars a week. Never did I, or any bank employee I knew, contract a disease because of contaminated money.

Over the years I learned that the three favorite places for carrying hidden currency were in shoes, socks and ladies' underwear. (One lady came in to deposit $400, $300 of which she had stashed in her bra in case she got mugged. She didn't get mugged, but the $300 in her bra had dropped out on her way to the bank.)

I could usually tell if a person kept his cash with the linens and mothballs in a coffee can or hidden in the basement. And due to the slight changes in the design of the bills, I could also tell how long it had been kept in the favorite hiding place. — OHIO BANKER

DEAR ABBY: Do I ever sympathize with the lady in Texas whose husband always has to have a beer while he's driving!

I have had the same situation for years. We have two small children, and I am worried sick every time he takes them in the car. My husband has to have either hot coffee or a cold beer on the dash of his car or between his knees while he's driving. Plus, he smokes constantly. We've had many unpleasant outings because I've asked him not to drink, smoke and drive at the same time. He drives too fast and takes a lot of foolish chances.

I have known for a long time that he drinks too much, but he says beer is harmless. (Two or three six-packs a day?)

When he smokes, sometimes the end of his cigarette falls off and burns his clothes or the car seat. I get so nervous when he tries to drive, drink and smoke at the same time because safe driving requires total attention.

Please help me. — FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Beer is not "harmless," especially the amount your husband consumes. Although you cannot control your husband's behavior, you can go to Al-Anon and learn how to deal with his drinking. I urge you to do it. The kids should not be in the car while Daddy is drinking and driving, and neither should you.

DEAR ABBY: My older sister had an argument with our parents because she didn't want them to look at her high school annual. She told them she wasn't ashamed of what her friends had written, but it was private. Our parents said that as long as they were paying for the annual, they had a right to look at it. My sister solved the problem by giving our parents the price of the annual.

I have a little money saved from birthday and Christmas gifts, and I intend to do the same thing when it comes to buying an annual. — A 12-YEAR-OLD BOY WITH FORESIGHT

Pediatrician: Pop should be parent, too

Hearst News Service

Fathers who act on the principle that Pop is a parent, too, will wind up with smarter, friendlier, happier children, according to one of America's leading pediatricians.

Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, a top authority on bringing up baby, says in his regular column in Redbook's September issue that fathers have a special role in child-raising.

Fathers are more than substitute mothers — they "contribute very special things to a child's emotional and intellectual development," writes Brazelton.

The pediatrician, an associate professor of pediatrics at Harvard University and chief of the Child Development Unit at Boston's Children's Hospital Medical Center, says, "Every child needs a mother and a father — and every father can make a difference."

He stresses the unique contributions that fathers make to their children:

"For a baby, having an active, involved father is not the same as simply having more mothering."

He cites a 1975 study of first time parents by Dr. Ross Parke and Douglas Swan that highlighted the differences in the ways mothers and fathers handle children.

"The mothers tended to be gentle and low-keyed with their babies. Fathers, on the other hand, were more playful," he reports, "tickling and poking their babies more than the mothers did."

Studies at Harvard also found that fathers play more games with their babies and poke and tickle them more than mothers do.

"The bottom line, though, is that fathers give children more than just fun," Brazelton says.

"Where there is an active father, the child grows up to be more successful at school, to have a better sense of humor and to get along better with other kids. He believes more in himself and is better motivated to learn."

"By the time he is six or seven, the child's IQ will be higher. All because he was involved with a mother and a father."

Children react differently to mothers and fathers from as young as six weeks old, he says.

"These different responses exist even in children of a single parent," he says. "A father in my practice, slightly embarrassed, told me that when his daughter wants to play she calls him 'Daddy' but when she needs something she calls him 'Mommy.'"

Women should encourage their husbands to become more active parents, he says, teaching them what they need to know.

The pediatrician also offers suggestions for how a busy father can remain active with his children when they grow beyond infancy.

"I recommend busy fathers save a part of themselves for an encounter with their kids at the end of every day. If a father is willing to do his own relaxing later on, the hours before and after dinner can be for reading with the kids, playing with them or just hanging around.

August marks the beginning and end of the two seasons in which Permian Basin gardeners get their chance to exercise those green thumbs.

It's harvest time for spring crops, such as tomatoes, which need the longer growing time and warmer climate of this season.

Because they are highly perishable, "They either need to be used immediately, refrigerated or canned," said Midland County Agent Earnest Kiker.

Vine-ripe produce is the tastiest, but also more likely to become infested with insects. Holes in the vegetable or marks from a bug feeding are warning signs that insects got there first, he said.

The redness of a ripe tomato signals picking time, but Kiker said other vegetables' ripeness is not as easily recognizable.

"Cucumbers probably are one of the most mis-picked vegetables," said the county agent. Rather than waiting until the produce has grown to a greater size and begun to yellow, Kiker suggested a smaller, dark green cucumber is sweeter and less tough on the palate.

What could have been a fine vegetable can be ruined by improper harvest techniques. "You need to be careful or you'll hurt some of your vines," said Kiker, explaining the best technique was to push, rather than pull the produce from the plant.

Surplus needs to be dispatched quickly. Canning, freezing and harvest information is available at the county extension office for those wanting to pack away stores for leaner months.

The gardener's second season begins in August, though some of the hardier varieties can be planted into mid-September.

Kiker discounted the need to elevate local gardens, but cautioned that planting on a flat surface would mean better yields. He explained that bed planting causes a high salt concentration due to the high saline content of water from local spigots.

Two waterings per week are sufficient with the cooler temperatures, said Kiker, because plants need the oxygen that can more easily permeate dry soil.

Efficient watering is done next to the plant until the ground has been wetted 8-12 inches beneath the surface. A 3/8-inch steel rod can be used to measure the depth and also comes in handy for checking the progress of lawn and tree sprinkling.

Planning is paramount to the success of a fall garden.

Water supply and yield desired are two factors the gardener must take into account in determining how much real estate to set aside for planting.

"Gardening is hard work," cautioned Kiker. "Gardens are fun to plant, but work continues throughout the season."

While the fall season does have time and temperature limitations, "Fall is a good time to plant," said Kiker.

Insects are less of a problem in the fall and the cooler temperatures make the plant-tending less strenuous. The different group of vegetables that will thrive in the fall "can withstand the climate," he said.

People not intending to plant this fall can get a head start on the next spring season by planting winter rye. While protecting the soil from erosion and other threats from the elements, the rye can be mulched to build up the soil when winter ends.

A monthly newsletter published by the extension office details chores that should be undertaken to keep gardens green.

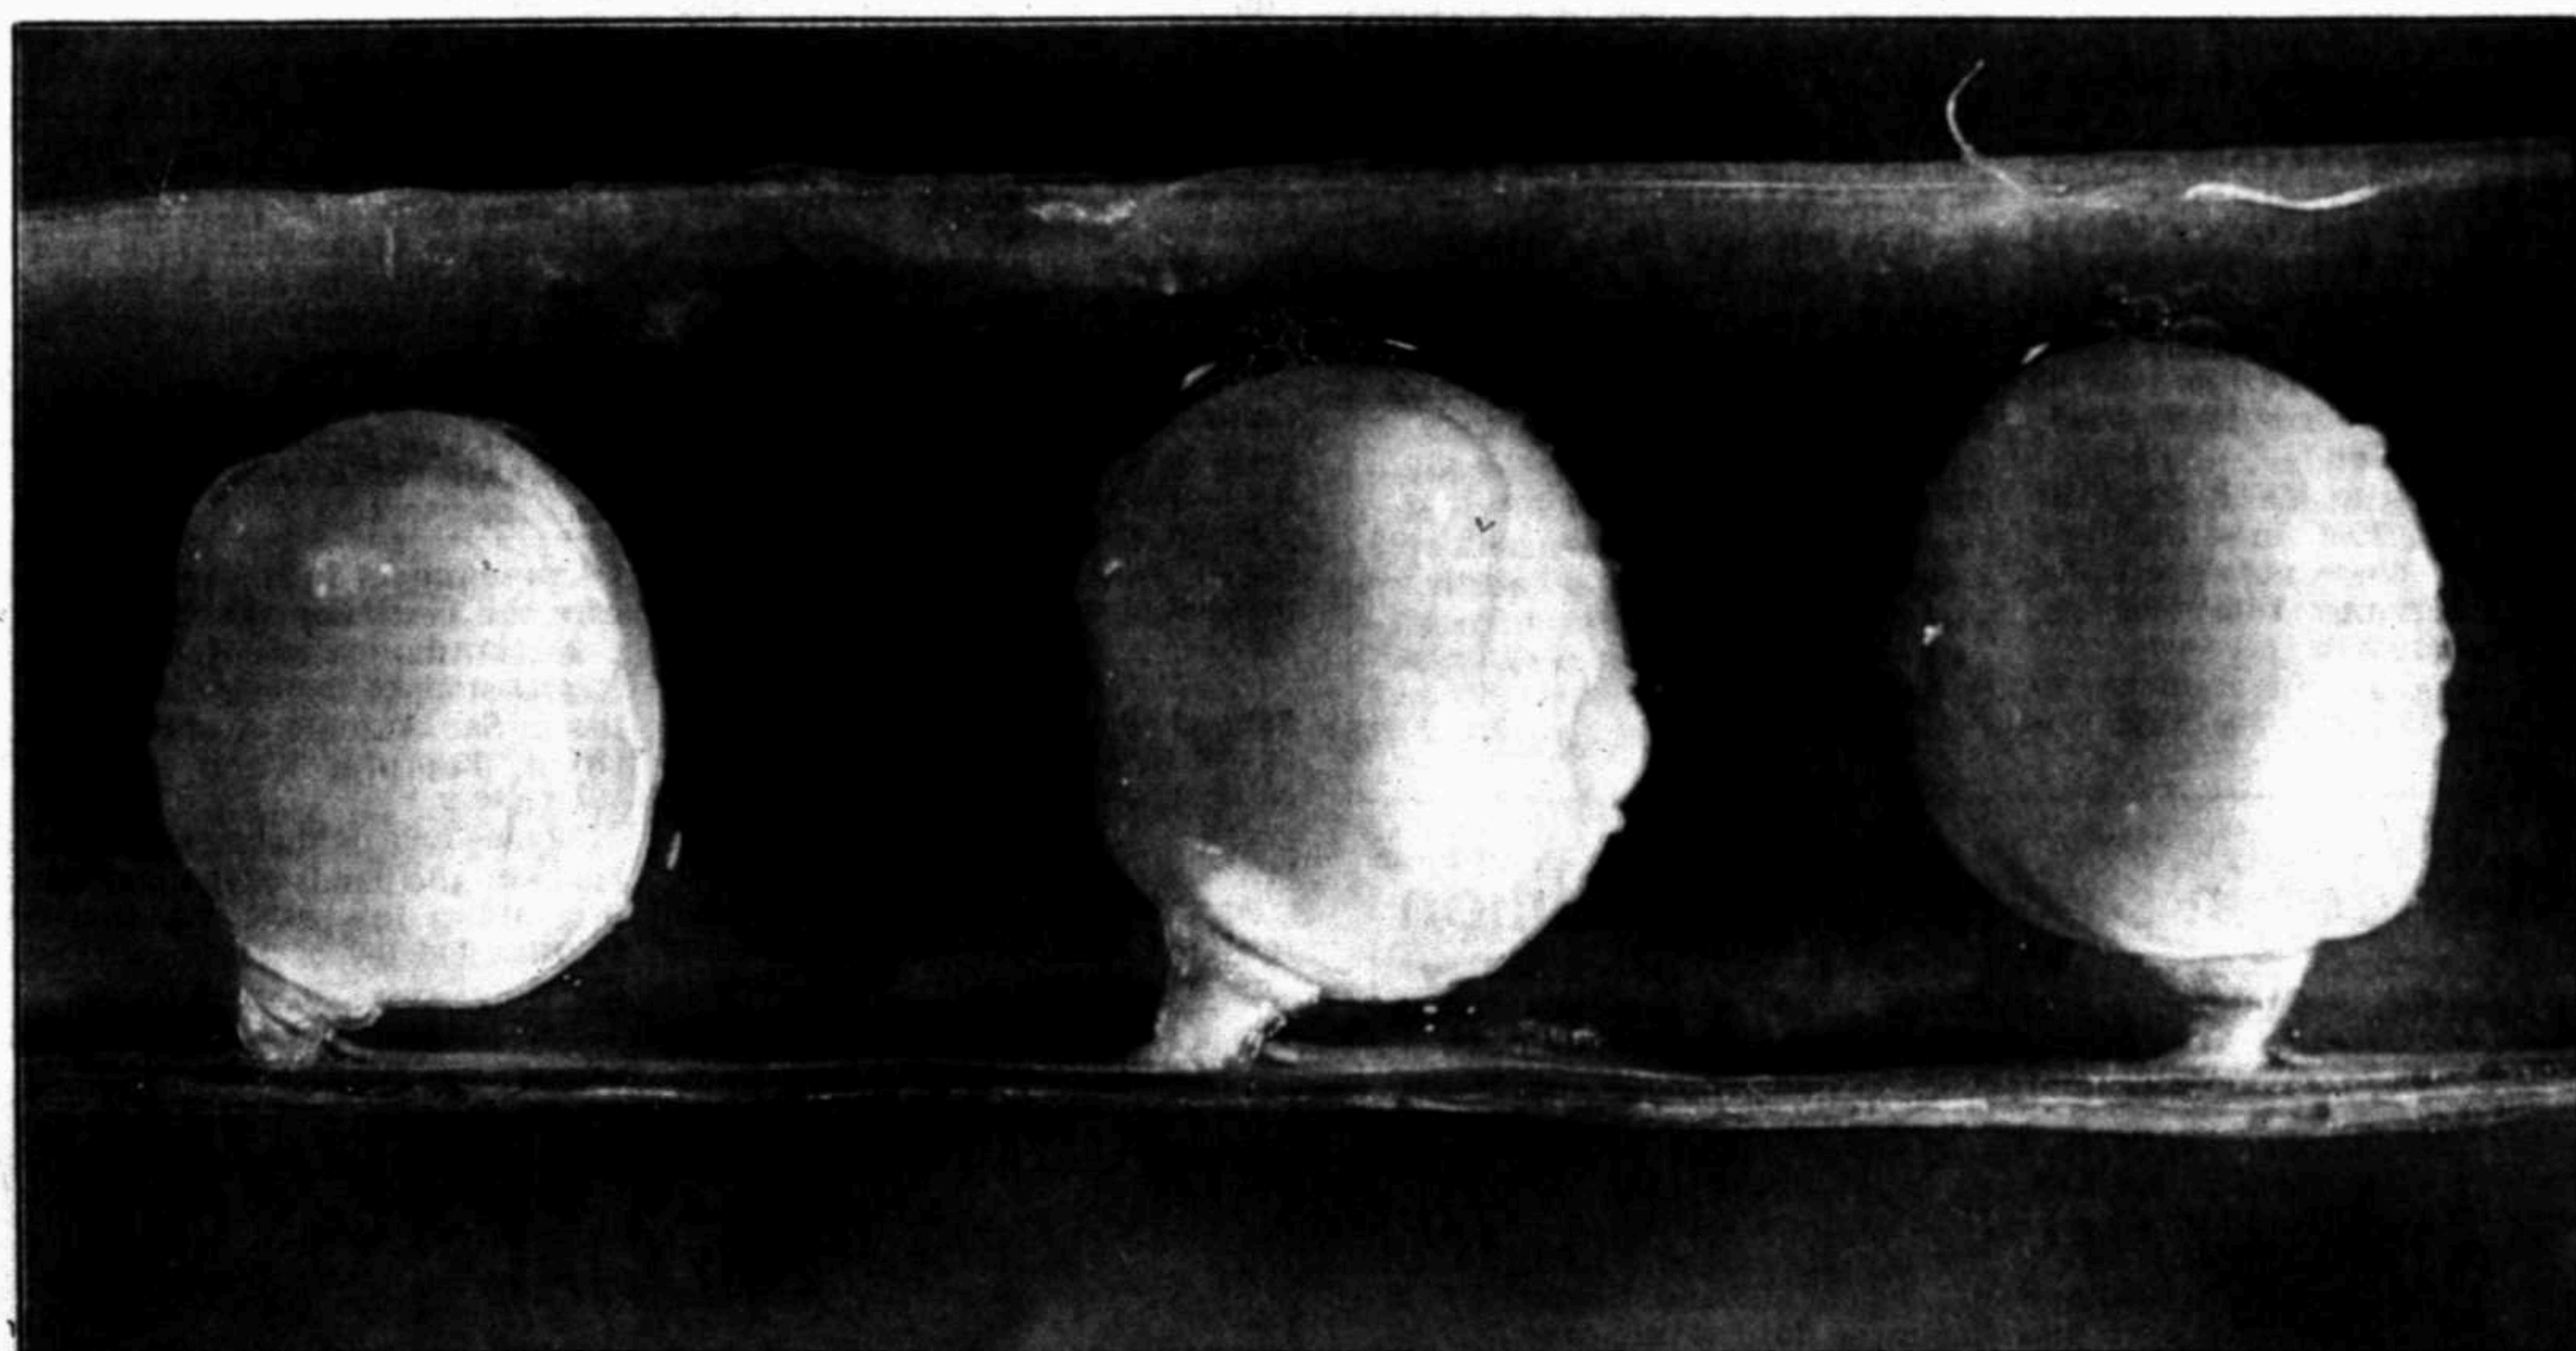

Garden varieties that can still be planted this fall include:

- Collard and Kale by Sept. 1.
- Garlic by Oct. 1.
- Mustard by Sept. 1.
- Onions by Sept. 20.
- Parsley by Sept. 15.
- English peas by Sept. 1.
- Radishes through Nov. 1.
- Spinach by Oct. 15.
- Turnips by Oct. 15.

Protesters not deterred by low attendance

DALLAS (AP) — The Republican National Convention has sparked rallies by veterans, Central Americans and gay activists, among others, and organizers say they are not discouraged that most events drew only hundreds of protesters when thousands were predicted.

Some people may have been deterred by the heat Sunday, others by the expense of traveling to Dallas, said Elena Hanggi, president of the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or ACORN.

Others couldn't arrange vacation time for convention week, and some may have stayed away because of what she called Spartan conditions at Tent City, the campsite the protesters set up.

"A lack of enthusiasm was the last thing on the list" of why people didn't come, Mrs. Hanggi said. "We're not trying to sway public policy with vast numbers. We're trying to influence government policy by registering voters."

Tent City organizers had predicted 5,000 people would live there, but Dallas Park Police said Sunday only about 1,000 had braved 100-plus degree temperatures to move into the tents.

The heat became "oppressive" Sunday, ACORN spokesman Les Ledbetter said, prompting the group to consider moving to a city park today in violation of local ordinances.

"What we have down there is not habitable and we are thinking about going to one of the parks that has trees and shade," he said.

At least 12 people were treated Sunday for heat-related ailments, officials said. None were seriously ill.

Five convention-related arrests have been made so far, authorities said, including Beach Boys' singer Brian Wilson, who was charged with criminal trespass for allegedly being in a secured convention area without proper credentials.

During one rally Sunday, a caravan of 23 Central American refugees and nine American supporters ended a 500-mile journey across Texas on a sloping hill across from the convention site to plant 55,000 tiny crosses symbolizing their countries' civil war victims.

About 300 supporters turned out as protesters also voiced opposition to U.S. foreign policy in Central America and called for at least temporary residential status for illegal aliens from El Salvador.

During another rally, a veterans leader said President Reagan is more concerned than his predecessors about U.S. servicemen listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

"Ronald Reagan is the best shot that these men have ever had," Robert Cressman of the National Forget-Me-Nots told a candlelight vigil Sunday.

Fine tuning

Walt Connel tunes a piano inside the Dallas Convention Center during final preparations for the Republican National Convention, which begins today.

Angelo Reagan-backer from long way back

DALLAS (AP) — Ernest Angelo was a Ronald Reagan loyalist dating back to the late 1960s, so it seemed logical to party officials that the longtime Republican workhorse be tapped as chairman of the Reagan-Bush campaign in Texas four years ago.

Angelo, a Midland petroleum engineer, had backed Reagan during the California governor's short-lived presidential campaign in 1980 and again as leader of Reagan's Texas campaign effort in 1976.

But in 1980, William P. Clements Jr., the Republican governor of Texas, had other ideas about who should rally the Reagan forces.

"He (Clements) virtually insisted that he be the leader — no ifs, ands or buts," a party official told the Dallas Times Herald.

Angelo said he chose not to fight in the interests of party unity and accepted the vice chairmanship of the Reagan-Bush campaign in Texas. His penchant for compromise may have cost him in the short run, but his manner earned him the respect of party members and a firm footing in the Republicans' inner circle.

It also eventually helped secure his appointment as chairman of the Arrangements Committee for the 1984 Republican National Convention — a position perfectly matched with Angelo's negotiating skills, hard work, affability and patience, his associates say.

"He's a real cool customer," said Gary Holtsma, the GOP spokesman in charge of media relations at the convention. "He doesn't need the aggravation he puts up with. He could go back to Midland, and he'd be perfectly happy. He's put up with (it)...because he believes in the cause."

The cause is Reagan's re-election. "The sole objective of this convention is to send the GOP ticket off with good backing...give the president's campaign a good launching pad," Angelo said.

But, being a Texan, he also says he hopes it will bring Dallas the kind of national attention he thinks it deserves — that of a robust, prosperous and conservative city.

As the first arrangements chairman who is not the Republican Party chairman, Angelo took on the responsibility of serving as liaison between the party and the city.

Angelo has said that the cooperative effort between the two is "the biggest single factor in the plus that this can be for both the city and the president."

With the convention nearly upon him, Angelo said the cooperation so far has been successful, and "quite frankly, I don't see anything shaping up as a problem."

Bush favorite standard bearer for '88

DALLAS (AP) — Vice President George Bush is the favorite of this year's Republican convention delegates to carry the party's presidential standard in 1988. Rep. Jack Kemp, champion of supply-side economics, is a distant second.

An Associated Press survey of GOP delegates gathered in Dallas to send President Reagan off on his second race for the White House found Bush the first choice of 42 percent for the 1988 presidential nomination. Kemp is favored by 17 percent.

Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas and other party stalwarts who figure in the early speculation about the 1988 race trail far behind both Bush and Kemp among the delegates.

One delegate, Richard Bishop, 55, of Fayetteville, N.C., said wistfully, "Maybe by that time a constitutional amendment will be approved and Reagan can run for a third term." Presidents are barred from serving more than two terms.

The AP surveyed 76 percent of the 2,235 delegates by telephone Aug. 1-10. Among the 1,687 asked whom they would like to see the party nominate in 1988:

Many delegates want nuclear freeze

DALLAS (AP) — Most Republican National Convention delegates support President Reagan's method of dealing with the Soviet Union, but many break ranks with Reagan on the issue of a nuclear freeze, according to a Los Angeles Times poll released Sunday.

The delegates also opposed, 59 percent to 41 percent, an anti-abortion amendment, which Reagan is in favor of.

But apart from those issues, the Times poll found broad support among the delegates for Reagan's domestic and foreign policies.

Three-quarters of the delegates classified themselves as conservatives. Ninety-nine percent said they were favorably impressed with the president; 95 percent were "very" favorably impressed.

The newspaper surveyed 2,125, or 95 percent, of the 2,235 delegates from July 31 through last Friday.

Nine in 10 agreed with the statement that Reagan "has treated the Russians about right."

But by a 62 percent to 38 percent margin, they support the concept of a freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons — an idea that Reagan staunchly opposes.

Bills and seven-term congressman. Kemp has played a key role in the casting of the convention's conservative platform.

— 129, or 8 percent, named Baker, 58, of Huntsville, Tenn., a moderate retiring from the Senate after 18 years. Baker plans to lecture, practice law and, presumably, decide whether to seek the Republican nomination in 1988.

— 35, or 2 percent, chose Sen. Robert J. Dole, 61, of Kansas, who was Gerald Ford's running mate in 1976 when Ford lost the presidency to Jimmy Carter. Dole is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and, like Baker, made an unsuccessful run for the nomination in 1980.

— And 22, or 1 percent, said they favored Elizabeth Hanford Dole, 46, the secretary of transportation and former Federal Trade Commissioner who is married to the Kansas senator.

Some 116 delegates, or 7 percent, named other possible candidates, from North Carolina's arch-conservative Sen. Jesse Helms to favorite sons, like Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana (19 delegates) and Gov. George Deukmejian of California (8 delegates). Several suggested United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick.

Nearly a fourth of the delegates, 391, or 23 percent, said they were uncertain who they want to lead the party's ticket in 1988.

Of course, the delegates to the 1988 convention will be selected through primaries and party caucuses in four years, with no guarantee that current delegates will be chosen again.

Clements: Reagan could be surprise loser in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — Former Republican Gov. Bill Clements says President Reagan could find himself a surprise loser in Texas — just like Clements did.

"I think the election will be very close. Taking that one step further, I do not believe the polls," Clements said in a recent interview.

Texas has 27 electoral votes, the third largest bloc, and is considered a crucial state. No Democrat has won the White House in this century without carrying Texas.

The gruff oilman, who was Texas' first Republican governor in 100 years, will welcome fellow delegates today as the four-day GOP convention opens.

Clements said he has seen polls that give Reagan a 15-point lead in Texas, but he recalled how Democrat Mark White upset him in 1982.

"I can remember another election not too far back where a candidate was 12 points ahead the day before the election," said Clements, referring to his own fate.

The GOP loss of the governors' mansion makes it tougher for Reagan to carry Texas this year.

"But I don't think that's the whole story. That's part of the story."

Clements said "the other parts" include a faltering economy in border areas, debt problems of farmers and ranchers in several parts of the state and what he called "the expanded role of the minority population in Texas."

Woman's purse containing jewelry reported stolen

From Staff Reports

The theft of a purse containing more than $10,000 worth of jewelry was one of several incidents reported to police during the weekend.

Josie Rocha told police she had left her purse sitting on the counter of Winchell's Donut House on Big Spring after paying for merchandise at about noon Sunday. When she realized it was gone and returned to the store 45 minutes later, employees said they hadn't seen it.

According to Ms. Rocha, the purse contained three diamond rings, a diamond necklace and a pair of earrings. Total loss was placed at $10,280.

The burglary of a residence in which $170 in cash was taken was reported to police Sunday by Praxedes Grado of 1906 E. Pecan. According to reports, the money was taken from a wallet in a pair of jeans on the foot of the bed while he and his wife were sleeping. The burglary took place sometime between 4 a.m. and 7 a.m.

In complaints filed Saturday, Simon Santos reported four tires and rims worth a total of $600 were taken from the back of his pickup and a storage room in the garage sometime between 6 p.m. Thursday and 8 a.m. Saturday. And Raymond Farr, 1708 W. Illinois, reported a lawnmower, edger and weed cutter worth a total of $830 were missing from a storage room at his residence. The last time he saw the items was about two weeks ago.

Caravan of refugees ends 500-mile journey in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — A caravan of Central American refugees wound up a 500-mile journey on a sloping hill across from the Republican National Convention site to plant thousands of tiny crosses symbolizing their countries' civil war victims.

About 300 supporters turned out under a hot Sunday morning sun to pay tribute to Salvadorans and Guatemalans who have died during the past four years in those war-torn countries.

The protesters also voiced their opposition to U.S. foreign policy in Central America and called for at least temporary residential status for illegal aliens from El Salvador.

Some of the 55,000 crosses, made out of popsicle sticks, bore brightly painted messages reading "No more death."

"I am a Salvadoran and I came very close to being represented by one of those crosses," said Hernan, a refugee who came to the U.S. three years ago who wouldn't reveal his last name.

As the names of the dead were read out loud, supporters lined up and grabbed handfuls of crosses encased in two black wooden coffins.

Signs reading "No arms to El Salvador. They need a hand," and graphic photographs of decapitated children and bullet-riddled bodies lined the chain-link fence separating the demonstrators from the convention center.

A huge painting of the outspoken Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero, who was slain in San Salvador in 1980 while saying mass, also was hung on the fence.

The service came at the end of a 500-mile pilgrimage for the 23 Salvadoran refugees and nine American supporters.

Traveling in four vans and two cars, the Texas Caravan for Peace in Central America left Houston Aug. 12 and stopped for marches and rallies in San Antonio, Austin, Georgetown, Temple, Waco and Fort Worth.

"Every one of these crosses were made by the hands of the people we met along the way," said Sister Patricia Ridgely, of the Roman Catholic Holy Cross Church in Dallas.

Economy sends out mixed signals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy, heading for what could be its best year in more than three decades, is sending out mixed signals about how much longer the strong growth will last.

A string of government reports last week gave a somewhat roller-coaster view of how well the economy is performing.

The picture could become clearer today when the government releases its revised estimate of economic growth from April through June of this year as mirrored in the gross national product.

The estimate of growth, after adjusting for inflation, was put at 7.5 percent last month by the government.

Depending on what economist is talking, that will be either revised downward as low as 7.2 percent today or pushed as high as 8 percent.

Michael Evans, head of his own Washington forecasting firm, predicted the growth rate will be revised downward, in part because of a report last week showing that business restocking of inventories was lower in June than originally anticipated.

But John Maher, a vice president at Citicorp, predicted the 7.5 percent figure would get revised upward to possibly as high as 8 percent.

Maher's reasoning focuses on another report last week covering output at the nation's factories, mines and utilities. The report showed a sharp upward revision in production during June.

Other economists believe the pluses and minuses of economic activity will cancel each other and the 7.5 percent estimate will remain unchanged.

Economists' disagreement on the past widens even further when it comes to predicting the future. Growth estimates for the current quarter, which ends in September, range from 4 percent to 6.1 percent.

The different descriptions come from a decision to emphasize different things.

Last week, the government reported that retail sales dropped a steep 0.9 percent in July, which followed an earlier report showing unemployment rose to 7.5 percent during the month. Also last week, the government said construction starts on new housing fell 6.6 percent in July and business inventories grew by the smallest amount in 12 months.

Analysts who believe the economy is showing signs of slowing rapidly from its earlier robust pace use these statistics to bolster their view.

But also last week, the government reported that industrial production was up a strong 0.9 percent, pushing utilization at the nation's factories, mines and utilities to its highest level in more than four years. In addition, the personal income of Americans was up a strong 0.8 percent in July while consumers took out a near-record $7.8 billion more in installment credit during June, much of it in auto loans.

Economists who feel there is plenty of zip left in the economy point to these statistics.

"I'm tired of hearing doom and gloom economic forecasts. It's time for boom and zoom," said John Albertine, president of the American Business Conference, and an economist in the optimist camp.

Much of the argument revolves around degrees of strength since few economists argue that this will be anything but a banner year for growth.

In its latest forecast, the Reagan administration predicted the GNP would increase this year by 7.2 percent over 1983 — rather than the earlier administration projection of 5.9 percent.

If this projection comes true, and many think it will, it would make 1984 growth the strongest for any year since 1951.

Europe synthetic fuel projects not deterred

New York Times News Service

BONN — West Germany, the cradle of synthetic fuel technology, is cautiously pressing ahead with its development of coal gasification projects, despite depressed crude oil prices, which have halted synthetic fuel projects worldwide.

Ruhrkohle A.G., Germany's dominant coal producer, is constructing Europe's first commercial-scale coal gasification plant, Rheinische Braunkohlenwerk A.G., a Rhine Valley coal producer, is building a gasification plant near Cologne, and the Klockner Steel Products Co. plans to install a $115 million gasification unit at a power generating station in West Berlin.

American companies are profiting from some of the development. Several German plant-building companies, including Lurgi Gesellschaften and Krupp-Koppers GmbH, own processes used at some dozen plants worldwide for turning coal into gas. But the Ruhrkohle plant, which is being built in Oberhausen, near the heart of the Ruhr Valley coal-mining district, will convert 750 metric tons of lignite into chemical feedstocks daily using a process developed by the Texaco Development Corp.

Steel companies like Klockner and Krupp have been involved in coal processing since 19th century engineers began experimenting with gasifying coking coal for use in iron foundries.

Like the Reagan administration, which in 1981 shifted virtually all financing of synthetic fuel programs to the private sector, the austerity-minded government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl has slashed funding for synthetic fuel projects. They had been emphasized in the wake of the 1974 oil crisis to reduce dependence on imported oil and sharpen Germany's competitive edge on the worldwide market for coal processing equipment.

In 1981, for example, West Germany, the United States and Japan agreed to abandon a cooperative $1.55 billion coal liquefaction project planned for Morgantown, W.Va., because of its rising cost. As coal euphoria subsided, Heinz Riesenhuber, the Minister for Research and Technology, postponed until 1985 a decision on whether to build Germany's first large-scale liquefaction plant, and said the $240 million budgeted for liquefaction activity in 1981-85 would cover mainly engineering studies and development of components.

As in the United States, European advances in coal liquefaction were crimped by depressed crude oil prices, which made oil derivatives, such as gasoline, cheaper than similar fuels extracted from coal.

By contrast, progress in coal gasification has continued. In part, this is because the growing competitiveness of coal-derived synthetic gas products has spurred industry to assume a larger share of the financing burden from Government. A cost analysis by Ruhrkohle for the years 1973-83 showed that while the average price of crude oil rose 6.9 times, and that of natural gas 7.3 times in the period, the cost of lignite increased only 2.5 times, and that of substitute natural gas 1.8 times.

Nevertheless, coal-derived gas products remain more costly, and less heat efficient, than natural gas and its derivatives. And European coal, which often lies at great depths under built-up areas, remains far more costly to extract than strip-mined coal from China, Australia or the United States.

Government funding, both direct and indirect, remains considerable. The Bonn government is expected to contribute half the cost of the Klockner gasification unit in Berlin. Bonn and the state of North Rhine-Westphalia will share part of the cost of Oberhausen, and spend about $5 million annually in coal price subsidies to keep the price of the domestic German coal the plant will use at world price levels.

Outburst of activity predicted for market

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Now that Wall Street's bull market has revived, some analysts are predicting an outburst of activity in new stock issues.

They reason that investors now are likely to be much more receptive to new offerings than they have been for the past several months — and that many companies with hopes of "going public" are ready to tap that appetite.

"Market history is clear — an advancing broad market is invariably followed a month or two later by an even more vigorous move in new issues," declared Robert Natale, editor of Standard & Poor's Corp.'s publication "Emerging and Special Situations."

Few events stir up quite so much excitement in the financial world as the debut of a "hot" new issue. If conditions are right, a company's initial public offering may sell out quickly, and the price of the shares can soar in a matter of hours or minutes as they begin trading in the marketplace.

Conditions have rarely been right this year, however. In June and July, by Standard & Poor's reckoning, there were only 14 initial public stock offerings with a value of at least $5 million and a per-share price of $5 or more.

During the same two months last year, S&P counted 84 new issues of that size.

Through mid-August, the firm's "new issues index" showed a drop of 10 percent since the start of the year. The index measures the performance of major new issues during the first 90 days after their sale to the public.

The new issues market is noted for going to extremes, depending on the prevailing mood of investors. When it's hot, it tends to get very, very hot — and when it's not, activity often slows to a virtual standstill.

In the mid-1970s, for example, during and after a severe bear market, the new-issue market had a very long dry spell. Last year, by contrast, it broke many records.

So companies that want to go public, and their Wall Street advisors, must try to pick their spots astutely to get the warmest possible welcome.

American threatened suit over book about Braniff

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas newspaper has reported that American Airlines paid $150,000 in reprint costs last month so that changes could be made in a newly published book about Braniff International Corp.

The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that American president Robert L. Crandall's legal counsel confronted publisher William Morrow & Co., demanding changes in the text, after Crandall secretly obtained and read galley proofs not meant for public circulation.

"We felt it was full of repetitious accusations about American that had been aired in public many times before," said Richard A. Lempert, American Airlines senior vice president-legal counsel. "We thought it was reprehensible and we threatened a lawsuit."

The newspaper said the book didn't mention the dismissal of U.S. Justice Department anti-trust suit against American in September 1983, but it did include in detail the suit's allegations.

"He (Crandall) wanted me to remove any reference to them (Crandall or American)," said John L. Nance, author of "Splash of Colors, The Self-Destruction of Braniff International."

The Justice Department lawsuit accused Crandall of anti-competitive practices and was based on a 1982 telephone conversation between Crandall and Braniff chairman Howard D. Putnam. According to transcripts of the conversation, Crandall proposed that the two competing airlines raise their fares.

American claimed the suit was groundless and a federal judge threw it out.

Morrow officials negotiated with American's lawyers and agreed on a compromise, but 25,000 copies had been printed, bound and readied for shipment.

"He (Nance) was willing to make all the changes," Nance said. "Morrow wouldn't pay the reprint costs," Lempert said. "We decided we would rather pay the reprinting costs than to file litigation."

"I didn't have any problem with the changes," Nance said. "The whole premise of the book is that Braniff killed Braniff. American didn't kill Braniff."

Morrow officials did not return calls, the News reported.

According to the newspaper, the changes included:

— Adding a paragraph stating that no charges were brought against Crandall or American after inconclusive investigations by a grand jury, the Justice Department and the Civil Aeronautics Board.

— Addition of a footnote directing readers to American's denial of so-called "dirty tricks" against Braniff.

— Deletion of a parenthetical phrase directly linking American to Braniff's demise.

— Deletion of a footnote accusing Crandall of widespread anti-competitive practices.

Texas offshore strikes announced

HOUSTON — American National Petroleum Corp. has announced that the No. 2 State Tract 563-L has tested two Miocene zones. The lower zone tested at an approximate rate of 2000 bopd and 686 Mcfpd on a 26/64 inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 1167 lbs. per square inch, with perforations from 7282-7291.

The upper zone tested at an approximate rate of 221 bopd, 370 Mcfpd on a 10/64 inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 1441 lbs. per square inch, with perforations from 6965-6990.

Log analysis and side wall cores indicate that the two zones tested have gas caps overlying the oil reservoirs. Logs and cores also identified other productive sands in the well, which will not be tested at this time. The petrophysical data indicates that the productive zones total 26 net feet of oil sands and 49 net feet of gas sands.

The discovery announced today is of two new producing zones in State Tract 563-L, where ANPC reported a gas discovery that tested at approximately 5.0 million cfd in May, and the tract adjoins State Tract 562-L.

Dollar mixed; Gold declines

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed, but generally stronger, in early trading today. Gold prices dropped.

Currency dealers said trading was quiet as market participants awaited the release of U.S. second quarter gross national product figures, expected to be unchanged from Washington's earlier estimate of 7.5 percent annual growth.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, the dollar eased to close at 240.60 Japanese yen, compared with Friday's 240.70. The dollar was quoted in later European trading at 241.37 yen.

In London, the dollar edged up against the pound, which cost $1.3193 in early trading, cheaper than Friday's late rate of $1.3220.

Early dollar rates against other key currencies compared with late rates Friday:

—2.8725 West German marks, up from 2.8610.
—2.4010 Swiss francs, up from 2.3940.
—8.8165 French francs, up from 8.7775
—3.2375 Dutch guilders, up from 3.2272.
—1.767.15 Italian lire, up from 1.766.50.
—1.3016 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3038.

Gold opened in London at $350.50 bid an ounce, down from $351.25 bid late Friday and eased in later trading. London's five major bullion houses set the midmorning "fixing" at $349.70.

In Zurich, Europe's biggest bullion market, gold opened at $350.20 bid, compared with $351.50 late Friday, and also slipped below the $350 mark to $349.90 in later trading.

Debit cards popular

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Banking officials say more than 30 percent of the American public is interested in "debit cards," which will allow merchants to draw the amount customers owe them directly from their bank accounts.

Atlantic Richfield Co. already is testing the new concept at some of the convenience stores it owns in Santa Clara and San Diego counties and could expand the system to 2,100 of its outlets in 17 states by mid-1985.

"We are trying to create an atmosphere of convenience for our customers," ARCO spokesman Scott Loll said. Mobil Oil Co. later this month will begin its own year-long test that will link 2,500 high-volume service stations nationwide with machines to accept debit cards, and financial experts think that is just the beginning.

Eighty percent of all Americans over age 21 have bank accounts, according to Dan Buser of the American Bankers Association in Washington, D.C.

The banking industry estimates that between 30 and 40 percent of all bank customers would accept debit cards, he said. Five major California-based banks — Bank of America, Wells Fargo, Crocker, First Interstate and Security Pacific — agreed last year to set up a debit-card network called Interlink, which is expected to begin operation by late 1984 or early 1985.

"A survey we conducted in the early stages of the program indicated more than one-third — 37 percent — of the public was interested in banking with debit cards," said Lisa Nesbitt, Security Pacific's products manager for Interlink.

Million-gallon gas tank hit by lightning

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Officials organized an interstate convoy and trucked in foam to fight a gasoline fire ignited by lightning that melted a 1.9 million-gallon tank and left at least 17 firefighters injured.

Nearly 300 people were evacuated to Andrew Jackson High School, said Officer Pat Doolittle, police department spokesman. The families were allowed to return home about noon Sunday.

The gasoline tank owned by Triangle Refineries Inc. was hit by lightning Saturday afternoon, and before officials pronounced the blaze out Sunday afternoon two other tanks caught fire briefly.
