Democrats battle budget

By Alan Fram
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Liberal House Democrats rebelled Wednesday against the $500-billion deficit-reduction package as President Bush and congressional leaders pushed hard for the plan on the eve of its first vote.

Leading House Democrats and Republicans expressed confidence that both sides would round up a majority of votes by Thursday, when the full House plans to vote on an outline of the package of tax boosts and spending cuts.

"That is my intuition, that when the vote comes there will be a majority of both parties," said House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

But Bush, Foley and House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., worked furiously behind the scenes, meeting privately with rank-and-file members and dispatching top lieutenants to do the same. Democratic leadership aides, speaking privately, offered conflicting assessments of how worried they might be about the prospects.

Democrats and Republicans figured on Wednesday night they were each 40 votes short of what they need and that a considerable number of lawmakers remained uncommitted.

A number of liberal Democrats said they would oppose the proposal, complaining about its reliance on $60 billion in Medicare cuts over five years and about the $11 billion in tax breaks it contains for small businesses.

"To cut $60 billion from Medicare means a lot of low-income elderly are going to be faced with difficult out-of-pocket expenses," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif. "These people didn't create the deficit."

After a day of White House lobbying Republicans, spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the needed votes still were not in hand, and declined to say how many votes the White House could muster.

Bush kept close tabs on the results of lobbying efforts, checking in with Fitzwater at the end of the day for a reading of what the Congress members were telling reporters. Fitzwater told him that "most say they are considering it, they're listening and they're sympathetic to the argument."

Twenty-seven more Republicans met with Bush at the White House, the third straight day on which GOP lawmakers were summoned by the president for his sales pitch. One White House official called the operation the Bush adminis-

Funds spared

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Wednesday to spare 49 drug-fighting task forces in Texas, including the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, and dozens more across the nation.

Members approved, in a 236-189 vote, a change to the crime bill that keeps federal money for anti-drug task forces administered by states.

If the full crime bill passes today, the amendment by Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, will keep the Texas task forces operating with an expected $27 million next year.

TAYLOR, Texas (AP) — Neighbors accepted it when John Hughes, 28, installed the tail of an airplane on the roof of his house. They laughed when he decorated his pickup truck to resemble a shark. Now, the resident free spirit, dedicated bachelor and budding entrepreneur, is peddling red, white and blue contraceptives in a black cardboard replica of the Air Force's B-2 bomber stamped with bold white letters: "Stealth Condoms."

Northrop Corp., which manufactures the B-2, is not amused.

First love

Bacall

PORT HURON, Mich. (AP) — Tony Award-winning actress Lauren Bacall says the theater is still her first love, but Broadway just isn't the same anymore and she'd rather work in smaller venues outside New York.

The former wife of actor Jason Robards complained during a talk at Town Hall here Monday that Broadway's emphasis on reviving old hits in recent years has limited opportunities for actors.

"I'm tired of revivals. I would rather be on stage in Chicago or in a good repertory theater in Seattle than be doing some of the things available on Broadway," she said.

Miss Bacall, who won Tonys for "Applause" and "Woman of the Year," credited her late husband Humphrey Bogart for her success. He starred opposite her in her first movie, "To Have and Have Not," in 1944.

"Bogie was the best teacher I had," she said.

Saddam visits occupied Kuwait

■ As foreign leaders seek a peaceful solution to the Persian Gulf crisis, Iraq's Saddam Hussein makes his first known visit to oil-rich Kuwait, overthrown by his troops on Aug. 2.

By Lisa Genasci
Associated Press Writer

Saddam Hussein on Wednesday made his first known visit to Kuwait since Iraq captured its oil-rich neighbor Aug. 2. Another neighbor, Iran, said it would keep out of any military confrontation between Iraq and U.S.-led multinational forces in the region.

Elsewhere in the Middle East, visiting French President Francois Mitterrand, Japanese Prime Minister Toshiku Kaifu and Soviet envoy Yevgeny Primakov all sought a peaceful solution to the Persian Gulf crisis.

But new terror threats emerged. Palestinian guerrilla leader Abul Abbas warned he would attack U.S. aircraft if Iraqi planes were hit with weapons as part of the U.N. air embargo against Iraq.

In Washington, Bush administration officials told Congress Iraq is likely to remain a long-term threat, and sales of billions of dollars in U.S. weaponry to Saudi Arabia are crucial to a new regional coalition to balance that menace.

Iraq, facing an international force on its border with Saudi Arabia after invading Kuwait, suddenly made peace with Iran last month after eight years of war and two years of deadlocked peace talks.

Saddam wooed Iran to side with him. Tehran joined world demands that Iraq withdraw from Kuwait, but also urged the expulsion of foreign forces from the region.

On Wednesday, Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said on Tehran TV that Iran wants a peaceful settlement and "force should be the last possible resort for solving this crisis, but Iran will not participate in this in any way."

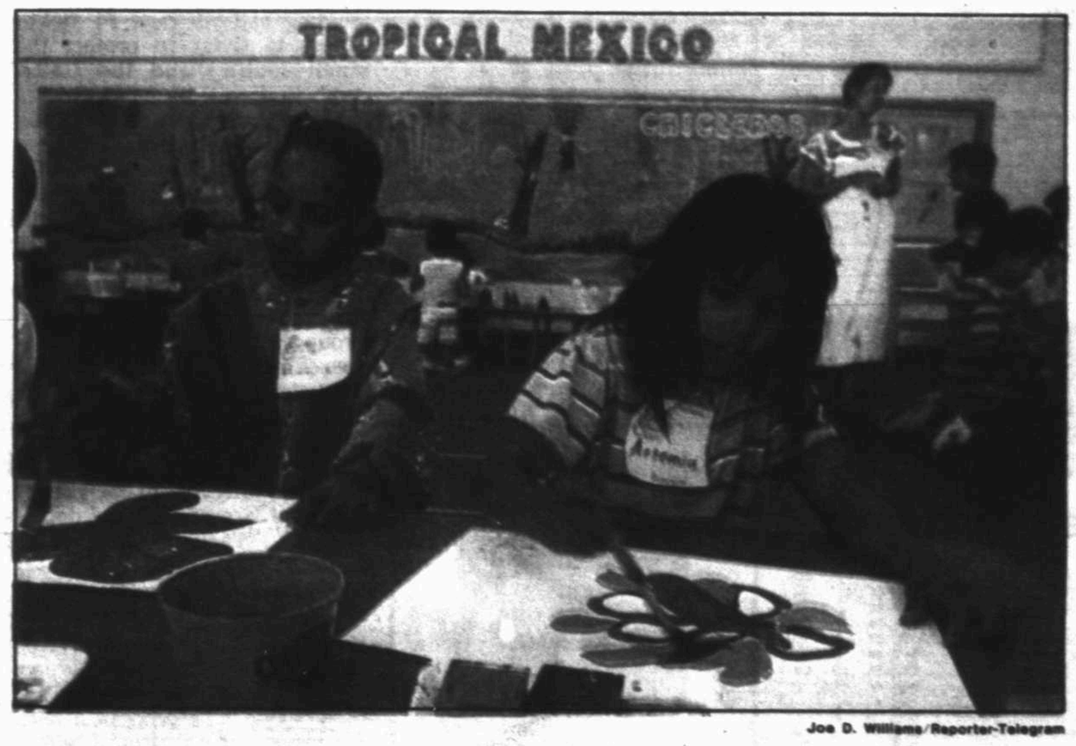

His remarks, monitored in Cyprus, indicated Iran was distancing itself from Iraq, following suggestions it could circumvent a U.S.-led embargo and send Iraq food and medicine. Reports from Washington said Iraq also asked Tehran to help export its embargoed oil.

The London-based Amnesty International meanwhile issued a report saying Iraqi occupation troops tortured and executed scores of people in Kuwait, some for refusing to display pictures of Saddam.

Refugees have said stores and shops were pillaged, and that Iraq was out to dismantle Kuwaiti institutions. They reported summary executions of resistance fighters.

The Iraqi News Agency gave a different portrait. It said Saddam toured the streets of Kuwait, which "appeared flour-

Bright work

Paper howler monkeys, tissue vines draped over cleverly constructed Mayan temples, a papier-mache volcano, colorful paintings of vendors and glittery exotic birds have transformed Carver Cultural Center into the tropical locales of ancient Mexico and bustling modern day Mexican market places.

Teachers provided the handiwork and artistic decor that set the stage for studying Mexican culture during Hispanic Heritage Month (Sept. 15-Oct. 15).

"We have breaks between programs when the teachers tear down artwork from the previous program to set up for the new program," said Patricia Maurer, principal of the cultural center.

All third-grade pupils in Midland's school district attended the program, which was divided into four classrooms with settings conducive to the discussion of Mexico City, the ancient Maya, cultural activities and Mexico's tropical environments.

Ms. Maurer said Midland's Hispanic community became involved with the project when teacher's aide Ema Hernandez requested information on Cantinflas, Mexico's renowned comic.

"There wasn't much information in the library," Ms. Hernandez said. "So, Hispanic radio stations requested for people in the area to call in with information. A lot of people called in."

Ms. Hernandez said marionettes in Mexico are modeled after Cantinflas, noting the marionette displayed in a Carver classroom.

Patricia Carden, a third-grader, said her favorite part of the program on Mexico involved learning about Mexican dances and the ballet folklorico. She also said she had never heard of Cantinflas until he was discussed during the program.

"We try to reflect all major racial groups in our programs," Ms. Maurer said, noting that the center was designed to provide an innovative approach to integration.

"Eight integrative activities are required to be offered each year," Ms. Maurer said. "Carver Cultural Center provides three of those programs each year."

MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) — Tragedy revisited Monaco's royal family Wednesday when Stefano Casiraghi, husband of Princess Caroline, died in a speedboat accident while defending his world title.

Caroline, a widow at 33, donned black mourning clothes and rushed home from Paris, where she was visiting. Eight years and three weeks earlier, her mother, Princess Grace, died after a car crash.

Witnesses said Casiraghi, 30, and co-pilot Patrice Innocenti drove their catamaran, the Pinot di Pinot, straight into a wave at about 93 mph during a morning heat of the World

Electronics manufacturer will move firm to Midland

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Jacobs Electronics Co. of Los Angeles will move its operations to Midland sometime before the end of the year, adding 50 jobs to the Midland economy, Dr. Christopher Jacobs, president of the company said Wednesday.

Jacobs said about five to 15 people would be making the move from Los Angeles and about 40 employees would be needed in Midland.

He estimated that the local payroll will be $1.5 million per year, and said the company will be seeking to hire a number of employees including: computer programmers, telemarketing managers, electrical engineers, a commercial artist, file clerks, machine operators, general factory workers and office managers and secretaries.

Job resumes may be mailed to: Jacobs Electronics Inc., 3327 Verdugo Road, Los Angeles, CA 90065.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce and Forward Midland were responsible for putting together the proposals and package that brought the company to Midland.

Jacobs has purchased a large manufacturing site near downtown Midland but would not reveal the location until sale details are finalized.

With $3 million in annual sales, the company is the fifth largest manufacturer of automobile ignition systems in the world, and markets it product direct to consumers and automotive stores. "We advertise in nearly all the car magazines and recreational vehicle magazines," said Jacobs.

BUDGET: Leaders of both camps say they can get votes

tration's biggest lobbying effort yet.

"I was leaning against before. Now I'm firmly undecided," said Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., after emerging from a meeting.

Reps. Susan Molinari and Sherwood L. Boehlert, both R-N.Y., said they were more inclined to vote with the president after the meeting, but they wanted an unpopular 2 cents per gallon home heating oil tax dropped.

"It was not any arm twisting. He based all his arguments on facts," Molinari said.

Bush cancelled a weekend trip to his Maine summer home to stay on top of the budget issue.

"There comes a time when you have to simply make tough decisions, give a little, to get what is best for the country," Bush told reporters in a message clearly designed for congressional consumption.

He urged members of Congress to vote for the package and then "blame the president" when they talk to voters.

Meanwhile, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said at a congressional hearing that he supports the deficit-reduction package. Greenspan's views are important since supporters of the plan are looking to the Federal Reserve to lower interest rates to offset any negative economic effects.

The package would raise taxes on gasoline, home heating oil, alcohol, tobacco, expensive cars and other luxury items, and on the incomes of the wealthy.

It would cut defense spending by close to $200 billion over the next five years while reducing spending on benefit programs by $105 billion.

The heating oil provision was being fought by members of Congress from Northeastern states, some of whom said that keeping it in could hurt support for the overall proposal.

On Capitol Hill, liberal Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich., said he was lobbied by a "rather pessimistic" sounding Foley.

"He was really laboring hard for my vote," said Kildee, who is leaning against the plan.

On the Republican side, No. 3 House GOP leader Jerry Lewis, R-Calif., predicted "a substantial victory" for the plan. A Republican aide said 50 of the House's 176 Republicans were now committed to vote for the package.

But opposition continued from conservatives unhappy with the plan's $134 billion in new taxes and with spending cuts they consider insufficient. Rep. Newt Gingrich, the chamber's No. 2 Republican leader and a leading opponent, who Tuesday said Bush's lobbying would ensure the package's success, said Wednesday he was no longer sure.

Bush, in a televised address Tuesday night, asked Americans to tell their congressional representatives they supported the plan.

But Gingrich, R-Ga., said, "I've had members walk up to me and say they've gotten so many phone calls from their districts against the package that they don't know if they can stay with it."

Senate leaders have been more confident about the proposal's prospects there.

Whatever the outcome in this week's preliminary votes, lawmakers from both sides said they would not vote for the deficit-reduction package itself — a vote expected in two weeks — unless changes were made. At a morning meeting of House Democrats, leaders begged the rank-and-file members to vote yes on Thursday and to see about alterations after that.

Among the skeptics is House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who said the measure's Medicare cuts were too deep and its tax breaks for companies too generous.

IRAQ: New ally Iran has 'hands-off' policy

ishing after its return to the mother homeland."

The news agency said Saddam met with Iraqi troops and presided over two meetings of military commanders. Iraq has annexed the emirate, declaring it Bahdad's 19th province.

Kuwait city "glittered with pride" at Saddam's visit, said the agency, monitored in Cyprus.

Mitterrand flew to the Persian Gulf for a two-day visit during which he planned to meet regional leaders and inspect French troops.

After he left Paris, the Defense Ministry announced France was sending eight Mirage F1 fighter planes to Qatar to protect that small country and the United Arab Emirates, its neighbor.

His first stop was the Emirates' capital of Abu Dhabi.

He reached there hours after nine French nationals held hostage by Iraq flew out of Baghdad on an Iraqi plane and arrived in Amman, Jordan, bound for Paris.

They were accompanied by the chairman of the private French group that arranged their release. Iraq is believed to still hold about 300 other French nationals hostage, as well as thousands of other Westerners.

France now has 13,000 men plus a dozen warships in the gulf region, the largest overseas deployment of French troops since the Algerian war.

Primakov, a Mideast expert and close adviser to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, met King Hussein and other senior Jordanian officials on Wednesday in Amman. He said he brought a letter for Hussein that concerns "efforts to find a settlement for the gulf crisis and other Mideast problems."

The monarch has tried to play the role of mediator in the gulf crisis.

The Soviet delegation was due to fly to Baghdad Thursday for talks with Iraqi officials. Late Wednesday, however, Iraqi Deputy Premier Taha Yassin Ramadan arrived in Amman. It was not known if this would change Primakov's plans.

In New York, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze said the delegation would like to meet Saddam and that it also hoped to arrange "normal conditions" for withdrawal of the 5,000 Soviet citizens remaining in Iraq.

Before Kuwazit was invaded, the Kremlin was Baghdad's main weapons supplier and France was its next largest supplier. Moscow, however, joined the United States in demanding Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait, which Baghdad invaded in a dispute over land, oil and money.

Japan's Kaifu also arrived in the Jordanian capital Wednesday for talks with Hussein on aid to Jordan and on peaceful efforts to solve the crisis.

Kaifu met Wednesday night with Crown Prince Hassan, who briefed him on the economic losses Jordan has sustained because of its adherence to the U.N. embargo on Iraq, Jordan's largest trading partner.

Kaifu said earlier in the day, the second day of his weeklong Middle East visit, that Japan would make "more and stronger efforts" to find a peaceful way out of the Persian Gulf crisis.

He is to meet in Amman on Thursday with Iraq's vice president, Taha Yassin Ramadan. Shigeo Takanaka, deputy spokesman for Japan's Foreign Office, said the Iraqis requested the meeting.

He said Kaifu "plans to impose on Mr. Ramadan the importance of solving the crisis in the gulf in accordance with U.N. Security Council resolutions."

The resolutions demand withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait, restoration of its ousted government and freedom for the thousands of Western hostages in both countries. They also impose air and sea embargoes on Iraq.

On Wednesday, Abul Abbas, who masterminded the 1985 hijacking of the Italian liner Achille Lauro, called the air embargo "the operation of air piracy by one state against another to serve its narrow-minded interests."

Offshore Championships being held near Monaco.

The 42-foot boat flipped over, ejecting Innocenti. Witnesses said Casiraghi remained strapped to his seat and bore the full impact of the vessel slamming into the water. The two-engine, five-ton boat then sank, witnesses said.

Gianfranco Rossi, head of the race organizing committee, told a news conference Casiraghi was killed instantly. He said other competitors, as well as divers and a doctor, rushed to the stricken boat and found Casiraghi trapped in the cockpit, already dead.

Casiraghi was a sophisticated international financier when, at 23, he married Caroline on Dec. 29, 1983.

At his death, he was chairman of Cogefar France, the French subsidiary of an Italian construction group owned by Fiat. He also held a 52 percent interest in Engeco, which owns about 3,000 apartments in Monaco and is building a $160 million apartment complex.

And he was the father of three children — two sons and a daughter.

Casiraghi and Innocenti had been favored to win the three-stage race, featuring sleek boats capable of speeds up to 125 mph.

The accident came 30 minutes after the second stage opened Wednesday. Organizers canceled the day's events but said they would resume Thursday or Friday.

Casiraghi had a passion for offshore racing. A competitor since 1984, he had won 12 of 80 races, including last year's world championship held off Atlantic City, N.J.

Weather conditions off Saint-Jean-Cap-Ferrat, between Monaco and Nice, were described as normal.

"He surely didn't have time to look out and, at that speed, stuck under the boat, must have been killed by the blow," said another racer, Michel Karsten.

Emergency crews quickly pulled both men out of the water. Innocenti was rushed to Princess Grace Hospital and Casiraghi reportedly was taken to the adjoining morgue.

FIRM: Operation will add 50 jobs to economy

He said the company has grown 50 percent per year for the past three years and he expects the company will reach $5 million in sales next year.

"Our operation will be good for Midland in that we will bring dollars from all over the U.S. to pay for salaries here," said Jacobs, who has a Ph.D in electrical engineering and holds 23 worldwide patents in electronics.

He noted that he had looked at 31 communities before settling on Midland. Las Vegas, San Antonio and Midland were the final three.

He said the main reasons he chose Midland were the low cost of doing business here, the community attitude about the work ethic, and the company's perception about the attitude of local government.

"We have a close, almost family relationship, with our employees and need a mind-set that appreciates the work ethics. I think we found that mind-set in Midland."

Jacobs noted that a number of other factors including climate, quality of life and low crime rate attracted him to Midland.

As president of the Specialty Manufacturers Association, Jacobs said he would work to try and bring other manufacturing concerns to Midland. A delegation from the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Forward Midland and the City of Midland will travel to Las Vegas later this month to the association's annual convention to meet with other manufacturers there in hopes of enticing them to relocate to Midland.

Jacobs said there was considerable disenchantment with the business climate in California and that many businesses there were looking to relocate.

Jacobs expects to begin moving into the Midland facility by Thanksgiving and be in full operation by May 1991.

MEXICO: Carver Center offers setting for cultural exchange

The program on Mexico allows pupils to participate in hands-on activities in a visually stimulating environment. The third-graders watched black-and-white videos of Cantinflas, constructed chicle or gum trees from paper towel tubes and climbed up the steps of a Mayan temple.

Several of the children attending the day-long program said it convinced them that they should visit Mexico.

"Our programs literally circumvent the world," Ms. Maurer said, noting that the curriculum isn't always designed around a country.

"Our next program, for example, will be 'Folktales Around the World.' Sometimes the curriculum will focus on rivers of the world or geography. We just try to provide a global experience while emphasizing that boys and girls all over the world are more alike than they are different."

Ms. Maurer said the program allows pupils to meet with their peers from other neighborhoods within their cluster group.

Midland Independent School District has 22 elementary schools in the district that are divided into clusters containing three or four schools each. The clusters cut across socio-economic, racial and neighborhood lines to create new learning communities and satisfy desegregation requirements.

But while the clusters represent a configuration, Ms. Maurer said the cultural center offers students a chance to socialize.

"Children are mixed with students from other groups so that they can make new friends," Ms. Maurer said. "Then when they begin being bused in the fourth grade, they will already know some students from their cluster."

The principal said the opportunities to socialize "breaks down the walls."

"Students see that anyone can have a good idea in the classroom," she said. "It doesn't matter who they are or where they come from — and they also learn about children in the rest of the world."

Or as one youngster so succinctly put it, while dumping an armload of artwork into a decorated grocery bag, "you get to make new friends and make a whole bunch of neat stuff to take home."

German-Americans applaud unification

Associated Press

German-Americans applauded their homeland's unification Wednesday but warned it will take long and hard work to improve the economy of the former East Germany. Veterans who had to fight a unified Germany said it was time to forgive — but not forget.

An ABC News poll found that 80 percent of 1,002 Americans in a random telephone survey support unification and 79 percent see no threat. Among Americans older than 65, those of fighting age in World War II, eight in 10 approved of a united Germany.

People who faced the Nazi Holocaust had a different view. Joel Rubin, who fled the Nazis when he was 12, was the only one of 97 people in his extended family to escape the Nazis during World War II.

"I don't trust them. I cannot trust the Germans," he said in Miami Beach, Fla.

Others were cheerier.

"I wish I could be there to help celebrate. I'm happy for Germany and for all the people," said Lena Bremer, 61, of Freistatt, Mo., who left East Germany when she was 20.

The East Germans envy the higher standard of living the West Germans have enjoyed for years, Bremer said.

"I think there will be some jealousy involved," she said. "They (East Germans) think that they were cheated for so many years."

Patricia Feltes, a Southwest Missouri State University assistant professor of management, said Germans she has talked to favored reunification but know there will be a price to pay for it.

■ Related story/8A

"There's a view by West Germans that East Germans are second-class citizens," Feltes said.

"It's wonderful but it will take a long time to accomplish and maybe only the next generation will realize the benefits from this change," said Maria Grewe of Gering, Neb. She grew up outside Munich, Germany.

"It's very rewarding," said Donald Tillman, president of the German Society of Maryland, whose father and uncles came from Dusseldorf. "We kind of won the Cold War without shots being fired."

Men who fought in World War II in Europe have a different viewpoint.

"They have a right to live," said John Loughlin, 69, who spent more than a year and nine months in a German prisoner-of-war camp, where he got regular beatings.

"Why hold a grudge?" Loughlin, who lives at the Rhode Island Veterans Home at Bristol, R.I., said Tuesday. "You've got to forgive."

"Forgive but don't forget," said Daniel Sullivan, 80, who served in England and Germany in World War II. "You might be walking away and get hit on the back of the head."

Germany's wounds must be healed, said Rhode Islander Beatrice O'Donnell, 81, who was a nurse with the rank of captain at a military hospital in England during World War II.

"The less division we have, the better off we are," she said. "It caused a lot of animosity with that (Berlin) wall up. The hard feelings were magnified by it many times."

House OKs expanded immigration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, defying a presidential veto threat, approved Wednesday a dramatic expansion of immigration into this country with a stress on bringing in more skilled workers and unifying families.

"This will make America's economy more competitive while protecting American workers," Rep. Bruce Morrison, D-Conn., the sponsor, said following House approval of the measure, 231-192.

A conference committee will now try to resolve differences between the bill and a Senate-passed version.

Supporters say the bill would reunify families currently kept asunder by immigration law while bringing in skilled workers and sharpening U.S. competitiveness in global markets. The Bush administration and other critics say it would open the gates too wide and create an overflow.

Provisions would reduce long waiting lists of spouses and children hoping to reunite with families in America. It also would lower 25-year-old barriers against would-be immigrants from northern European and other countries once viewed as traditional sources of new Americans.

The Bush administration has been calling for a maximum of 630,000 immigrants a year, the limit in the Senate-passed bill. The House version would raise the yearly influx from 540,000 to 775,000.

The House on Tuesday soundly defeated an effort to impose a hard and fast cap of 630,000 on annual immigration. The Senate ceiling is flexible and could be exceeded in some cases.

Morrison expressed hope that the final product of the conference committee would find favor at the White House despite veto threats. He said lawmakers were "in a position to narrow down the administration's problems."

He said he expected House and Senate conferees to hold their first meetings next week at the latest but added they will be talking informally this week. Congress is heading toward adjournment at mid-month.

The bill would provide immediate families of permanent residents of the United States with the same unrestricted right to enter the country as now given to families of U.S. citizens. It would increase the flow from a current 436,000 to an estimated 520,000.

The measure also would create a "diversity program" under which the government would provide 55,000 visas for people from 34 nations that were adversely affected when the 1965 law did away with the country quota system that governed immigration for decades.

The bill would increase from 54,000 to 188,000 the number of employment-based visas, with an eye to bringing in skilled workers.

Under the measure, which is supported by the AFL-CIO, employers would attest to the Labor Department that bringing in workers from overseas would be the only way to obtain the needed skills. The measure then provides for a 30-day period to challenge that claim.

Under the measure, Ireland and Northern Ireland would be treated as separate entities for visa purposes, doubling their claim.

The measure would provide 15,000 more visas for Hong Kong employees of about 900 American companies doing business in that British crown colony.

Judge discusses Neil Bush case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The judge presiding over the government's conflict-of-interest case against Neil Bush went against professional ethics by talking to reporters about the case, some legal experts say.

But the administrative law judge, Daniel J. Davidson, said his remarks didn't prejudice the case or indicate that he leans "one way or the other."

In two newspaper interviews published just before the start of a public hearing on regulators' charges against the president's son, Davidson called the savings and loan case "a pain," "a political football" and "one of the minor ones" from a legal standpoint.

Stephen Gillers, a law professor at New York University, called Davidson's remarks "ill-advised."

"You don't want the judge to become a player ... the judge is first of all a neutral," he said.

Davidson, who has been an administrative law judge for 22 years, won't make a binding ruling in the case. He will make his recommend to Office of Thrift Supervision Director Timothy Ryan.

Shop owner convicted

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — An all-white jury Wednesday convicted a record store owner of obscenity for selling a sexually explicit album by the black rap group 2 Live Crew that had been banned by a federal judge.

The panel of five women and one man took only 2½ hours to return the verdict against Charles Freeman, 31. The misdemeanor conviction carries a possible one-year jail sentence and $1,000 fine. Broward County Judge Paul Backman set sentencing for Nov. 2.

The Miami-based rap group and its album "As Nasty as They Wanna Be" have been at the center of a First Amendment dispute since June 6, when a Fort Lauderdale federal judge ruled their lyrics obscene. The lyrics have been criticized as promoting violence against women.

Freeman, who is black, was arrested two days after the ruling when he sold the album to undercover police officers at his E-C record store in Fort Lauderdale.

DEA seizes $1 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Drug Enforcement Administration seized more than $1 billion in cash and other assets from drug traffickers in the fiscal year that ended Sunday, agency chief Robert C. Bonner said.

The $1.025 billion seized, according to preliminary figures for fiscal 1990, was far higher than the DEA's budget of $548.7 million for that year, Bonner said. It represented a 4.4 percent increase over the $979.1 million in assets seized by the DEA the previous year.

But Bonner said in an interview Tuesday that the seizures won't help defray the federal budget deficit just yet. The assets must first be forfeited, which can take years.

About 35 percent of the $1.025 billion seized, or about $359 million, was cash. The remainder was property such as boats, planes, cars and homes, Shults said. 1989.

NASA starts countdown

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA, relieved to have a fresh shuttle ready to fly after months of failed launch attempts, started the countdown Wednesday for this weekend's liftoff of Discovery with a solar probe.

Discovery is scheduled to blast off at 7:35 a.m. Saturday with five astronauts and the nuclear-powered probe Ulysses, which will be sent on a five-year journey through space.

The shuttle Columbia has been grounded by dangerous hydrogen leaks since May.

NASA also has spent the past several months repairing hydrogen leaks on the shuttle Atlantis and investigating the manufacture of the Hubble Space Telescope's mirrors. The telescope's primary mirror was found to be flawed.

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Queen Noor indicates Jordan still gets oil imports from Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jordan's Queen Noor said Wednesday her country continues to accept oil from Iraq despite U.N. sanctions against Baghdad because a total cutoff in supplies would cripple her nation.

The American-born wife of Jordan's King Hussein also appealed for economic aid for her country which she said is on the brink of financial disaster because of the Persian Gulf crisis brought on by Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2.

Noor said Jordan has reduced its dependence on Iraqi oil — it formerly received 90 percent from Iraq and Kuwait — and is looking for new suppliers. Moreover, she said Jordanians are not paying hard currency for the Iraqi oil, which is in repayment for Iraq's past debts to Jordan.

Jordan supports the U.N. sanctions and condemns Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, she said.

She said Iraqi oil shipments to Jordan must be viewed in the "proper context" of Jordan's tight economic straits. "The crisis has dealt us an economic blow," she said.

In addition, Jordan has sent some humanitarian supplies — food and medical equipment — to Iraq as allowed by the U.N. Security Council.

In a wide-ranging question-and-answer session at the Brookings Institute, the 39-year-old Noor, who grew up in the nation's capital, said she sought to clear up any misunderstandings about Jordan's position on the gulf crisis.

Jordan expects to lose $4.1 billion as a result of the sanctions against Iraq, its neighbor and formerly its most active trading partner, Noor said.

Diplomacy heats up in Mideast crisis

By John Wallach
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

UNITED NATIONS — Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein has sent a secret message to French President Francois Mitterrand, who is in the Middle East trying to mediate an end to the Persian Gulf crisis, Jordan's foreign minister disclosed Wednesday.

Foreign Minister Marwan Kassem also said that Iraq's Deputy Prime Minister Taher Yassin Ramadan, the second most powerful official in the Iraqi government, is scheduled to visit Jordan this week for talks with King Hussein. The Jordanian monarch also is actively trying to mediate an end to the crisis set off by Iraq's Aug. 2 takeover of oil-rich Kuwait.

The visits were part of a flurry of diplomacy that includes a Soviet mission to Baghdad, Amman and Tunis, Tunisia for talks with Iraqi, Jordanian and Palestine Liberation Organization officials. The Soviet mission is headed by Deputy Prime Minister Igor Belusov.

The diplomatic activity heated up after Saddam Hussein Monday welcomed a peace initiative proposed by Mitterrand last week before the United Nations. Mitterrand called for an Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait but said Kuwaitis "should express themselves democratically" about who should rule the country after an Iraqi pullout.

The Mitterrand speech and an address by President Bush here Monday that excluded any specific mention of the now-exiled Kuwaiti ruling family have been widely interpreted as an intentional overture to Iraq. Iraq has insisted that the wealthy Al-Sabah family, headed by the emir and Crown Prince Saad Abdullah, can never return to power in Kuwait. The United States had insisted that the family must be allowed to resume power.

In an interview, Kassem said that Jordan sent a long letter to Iraq prodding Saddam Hussein to seize the opening provided by Mitterrand and pointing out "that not only large states but most of the small ones you think you have on your side are against you." The letter demanded an unconditional withdrawl of Iraqi forces from Kuwait.

"Saddam has not only responded with his verbal message to Mitterrand but has written to him. That is why the French president is in Saudi Arabia," Kassem explained. He said he did not know the contents of the letter to Mitterrand or whether it contained any softening of the Iraqi demands.

Mitterrand arrived in Aubu Dhabi Wednesday on the first stop of a two-day Persian Gulf visit. His trip to the Middle East was the first by a Western leader with forces stationed in the region to protect Saudi Arabia and other gulf states from Iraq. After meeting leaders in Abu Dhabi, he was to visit Saudi Arabia for talks with King Fahd.

Despite the optimism generated by the diplomatic activity here and abroad this week, other officials were cautious about the chances for a diplomatic settlement.

"There is more motion than movement," said Clovis Maksoud, the Arab League ambassador to the United States. Maksoud recently announced his resignation from the post, citing the deep divisions in the organization that made it impossible for him to carry out his task, but agreed to remain in the job until Oct. 15.

He said the only hope now is based on the fact that "there is a shift from the collision course we were on to a stalemate which is unacceptable but from which the peace option at least may get a chance to surface."

Saudi Arabia's foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, also said in a brief interview that Saudi Arabia sees virtually no hope for a peaceful settlement of the crisis. The Saudi statesman cited comments by Iraq's information minister Tuesday saying President Bush's speech here on Monday contained no new elements.

"That was a very moderate speech," explained Saud. "If the Iraqis can't find anything to respond to in it, where is there any reason to hope?" he asked.

Hussein hedge raising hopes

Saddam Hussein appears to be softening his line in the face of worldwide resolve against his Aug. 2 invasion and subjugation of Kuwait, raising hopes that a bloodless settlement is possible in the Persian Gulf standoff.

Yet for all the movement toward compromise — Hussein's sudden call for peaceful dialogue instead of threats and warnings, his release of nine French nationals held at Iraqi targets as shields against attack, and the meeting Sunday of foreign ministers from Iraq and Saudi Arabia in New York — the threat posed by Hussein to ignite open warfare in the Middle East is still very strong.

Remember that this is the same Hussein who remarked recently that "Kuwait belongs to Iraq, and we will never give it up even if we have to fight over it for 1,000 years."

If some "miracle" were to occur and Hussein were to vacate Kuwait, how can the West trust this violent man who fights wars with poison gas and who one report indicates "understands little of the outside world."? Would he hesitate to go to war against the United States, or for that matter the world, if he thinks there's something to be gained?

Certainly President Bush must strive to resolve the crisis without an outbreak of fighting, but there are other matters that must be considered, too. The major one is the implication that Iraq might move against Israel, which would draw in the United States.

Even in the absence of open fighting between Israel and the Arab world, Hussein's future moves will have to be carefully monitored to ensure Israel's security. He is said to be close to acquiring nuclear warfare capability, a power that would make him an extremely dangerous adversary for Israel or the West.

For those who wonder why Israel is even in the picture, it should be remembered that the Arab world has been aligned against Israel since that nation was created by the United Nations as a sovereign state for the Jews in 1947. The battle continues because of historic cultural and religious differences.

Bush has orchestrated worldwide opposition to Hussein's blatant power play in the Middle East, even garnering condemnation from the Soviet Union which formerly supplied Iraq with arms.

The hard part is still to come, but now at least there is a ray of hope that Hussein can be backed down without a war.

Anderson

He stumbled into a $2 million deal that was too good to be true, literally. He came dangerously close to joining the list of people who have done business with shell banks on the island of Anguilla, a British dependency and tax haven in the Caribbean.

Anguilla has only 7,000 residents, but has 42 banks catering to offshore customers. The U.S. Treasury Department has warned American banks about dealing with the same bank that offered King $2 million, and an FBI source confirmed that the bank is under investigation.

But Jim King didn't know the pitfalls. While asking around about possible sources of venture capital, King learned about United Bank International in Anguilla.

According to King, a UBI representative calling himself "Mr. Greene" offered King a $1 million loan. All King had to do was pay a $15,000 fee up front. King hesitated, and then he said Greene offered another million. "They were good," King says of the sales pitch. He agreed to pay the fee, but on a hunch canceled the money transfer at the last minute.

That may have been the smartest decision of his business career. FBI agents later showed up on King's doorstep to ask him about his close encounter with UBI. They told him he was lucky.

The Chinese government was not. The Chinese Foreign Trade office recently filed a complaint with Anguillan authorities claiming that UBI had issued the Chinese a useless $1 million letter of credit for a huge shipment of shrimp. After some arm-twisting by British officials, the Anguillan authorities raided UBI and revoked the bank's license in May. But in July, UBI issued a $600,000 letter of credit to a Fort Lauderdale doctor for a fee of $60,000. An attorney for the doctor now says his client can't find a bank in the United States that will honor the UBI letter of credit.

A source at the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency told our associate Dean Boyd that in 1987 the Treasury Department issued a warning to American banks that UBI was not authorized to do business in the United States.

The Chinese government has hired a Miami lawyer, John Mattes, to prepare a lawsuit against UBI. Mattes claims that UBI is nothing more than a one-room storefront with nice stationery, but no tellers, no money and no credit.

Sources investigating UBI told us that some Anguillan banks could be catering to customers who know the banks are a front. Those customers don't care, because they can use the banks for their own criminal activities including laundering money or using the banks' bogus letters of credit to set up other deals. We asked a top Treasury Department official whether that is a possibility. "Absolutely," he said. "That's why the FBI has been put on the case."

UBI's manager is a Miami man, Michael De Bella. The Treasury Department and American banks have been watching De Bella for years. He has not been charged with anything. FBI sources told us they have had trouble determining court jurisdictions and getting cooperation from Anguillan authorities. Anguilla needs the money that offshore banks bring in, and authorities there can't afford to shake up their thriving banking business.

De Bella told us that the allegations are "not true." He said he will win the case against the Chinese government and claimed that the shrimp they sold him was "bad." And what about the letters of credit from UBI that U.S. banks won't honor? De Bella said he discharged his end of the deal by issuing the letters and it wasn't his fault if other banks wouldn't honor them.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Frederick P. Hitz has the bureaucracy's most unenviable job. He is the first independent inspector general for the Central Intelligence Agency — a job mandated by Congress. He was appointed by a president who didn't want the office established in the first place, and he is supposed to be the watchdog over an agency that is accustomed to answering to no one. The only person who can fire him is the president, who, as a former CIA director, isn't terribly excited about someone nosing around the CIA's business. To top it off, Hitz is a veteran of the agency from the cowboy days of William Casey. Don't look for Hitz to blow the lid off of anything.

Defeat of MISD bond issue urged

According to Midland Independent School District (MISD), the proposed bond issue of $24.49 million will "only" have a maximum impact of five cents per $100 valuation per year for the average homeowner. This means that if your house is valued at $50,000 you will pay $25 more per year in property taxes.

On the surface this doesn't sound too bad, but what MISD doesn't tell us is that if the bond is approved, there will then be the usual increase in taxes next year to cover the cost of additional staff in the new buildings.

The most recent increase passed by the school board in August was 3 percent of the effective tax rate. It would be a safe assumption that at least that amount will be passed again next year to cover the undisclosed costs of the proposed bond issue. Using the 3 percent figure, we will actually see an increase of eight cents per $100 valuation. On a $50,000 property that equals a $40 per year increase in our taxes. It is doubtful, however, that a 3 percent increase would cover the staffing of two completely new schools. It is a real possibility that our taxes could go up 8 percent of the effective tax rate (the amount allowed without triggering a possible rollback election). Thus, our tax burden would more likely be 13 cents per $100 valuation or $65 on that $50,000 property.

When will all of this unnecessary spending stop? We do not need more and more new campuses to furnish, staff and maintain. Yes, the high schools need new science facilities. Yes, several elementary schools need multipurpose rooms or refurbishing, but indiscriminate building is not only unnecessary, but an outright waste. Enhancing existing facilities is the answer.

We have been powerless to this point to say no to the annual automatic increases, because the school board cleverly keeps the increases at or just under the allowable 8 percent of the effective rate, so as not to trigger a rollback election. On Saturday we will have an opportunity to send a message to the school board. I urge you to exercise what little power we have against the bureaucrats and vote "no" on Oct. 6th.

Student achievement could be casualty

I hear a lot of people saying, "I just can't believe that more classrooms and school buildings are needed ... Midland isn't growing."

My reply is go and visit our campuses. See for yourself the packed cafeterias, libraries, locker rooms, and classrooms. To get a real feeling of the conditions, go to one of our junior high schools and stand in a hallway during passing period. If that doesn't convince you, nothing will. However, if you are brave enough to try that, don't wear your nicest shoes.

According to district information, 19 of our campuses exceeded 90 percent capacity — last year. This year, with an additional 800 students, I'm sure the number is even higher. Last year, Santa Rita Elementary and Goddard Junior High School both had exceeded 100 percent capacity and both schools have experienced big gains in enrollment this year.

Our city can't continue to shortchange our children, our city's future. We have been fortunate that student achievement has continued to be high, but facilities have been stretched to the breaking point. At some point student achievement will suffer and so will our city.

Negotiators nick deficit in the nick of time

WASHINGTON — Wild-eyed and wondering about its fate on the eve of "Armageddon", Washington read a New York Times jeremiad about the coming chaos. Cuts in the weather service would mean the "accuracy of weather forecasts might deteriorate."

Will

But in the nick of time, the budgeteers nicked the deficit just enough to justify the real purpose of the exercise, another change of what are smilingly called the "requirements" of the Gramm-Rudman "law." The target for fiscal 1991 was $64 billion in cuts. During the dickering, the official estimate of the budget deficit was increased by about that much, to $293.7 billion.

But before believing that number, bear in mind that two Sundays ago two intelligent senators, Democrat Fritz Hollings of South Carolina and Republican Phil Gramm of Texas, were asked "How big is the deficit?" That is, what is the relevant number for the difference between the inflow and outgo of government money?

Gramm said $250 billion (this was before the latest upward revision of projections). Hollings said that counting the year's costs of the savings-and-loan bailout and subtracting the funds from the Social Security and other trust funds, the number $427 billion was about right. So two experienced senators were apart by $177 billion in defining the problem. And $177 billion is more than quadruple the $40 billion that the budgeteers propose to nibble from the deficit.

Originally they set for themselves the modest goal of cutting $50 billion. But while the deficit projection was being increased by $60 billion, the deficit-cutting goal was being shrunk to $40 billion. That is, $40 billion not counting the cost of the Persian Gulf operation.

A pack-a-day smoker (someone not deterred by the prospective pain of emphysema and lung cancer) will pay $14.80 more next year — not nearly enough to pay the social costs of smoking. Yo, you three-beers-a-night guys, brace yourselves for paying an extra $29.20 a year. Call it Pain Lite.

The surtax on automobiles costing more than $30,000 is backdoor protectionism. The bulk of those cars are foreign. The surtax is actually a tariff against Germany (Mercedes, BMW, Porsche) and Britain (Jaguar).

But even if the filthy rich do not buy jets or yachts, they do not escape unnicked. For someone earning $200,000, the reduction of the value of itemized deductions will be equivalent to an increase in the top income-tax rate, from 28 to 28.8 percent. And you thought Bolshevism was dead.

Of the five-year increase of $134 billion in tax revenues, more than half, $74 billion, comes from regressive consumer excise taxes. The gas tax alone — the tax consumers have the least chance to minimize — will raise $45 billion, which is 24 times as much as all the taxes on yachts and jets and other toys for the filthy rich.

Conservatives are cast down and rising in revolt because the capital-gains rate will not be cut. But conservatives have this consolation: The conservative aim has been to scrub America clean of the last trace of liberalism, and this deficit-reduction deal does it.

This package and its implications should immunize Democrats against the dread charge that they even remember anything about liberalism. But, then, perhaps Republicans have outsmarted themselves. The Republican idea is to call opponents liberals. Republicans no longer can do that, without laughing, now that Democrats are preening like this:

We Democrats are proud because we have not made life more regressive by cutting capital-gains rates. That is the Democratic idea: opposition to capital-gains cuts.

Democratic liberalism having been validated by that victory, Democrats are now free to reject Sen. Daniel Moynihan's proposal to cut the regressive Social Security tax which, for 74 percent of taxpayers, is a bigger burden than the income tax.

Liberalism's service to those 74 percent is this warning: Stay away from yacht salesmen.

GOP blames Democrats for budget mess

Washington had a terrible time with the budget last week. The only thing the White House and the conservative Republicans agreed on is that the other side was to blame for the mess. The Democrats had no choice but to watch the spectacle in horror.

Buchwald

Now that a compromise has been reached, some questions can be answered.

"Why was the president so insistent on a cut in the capital gains tax as part of his budget reform?" I asked Frederic Decker, a deep thinker on the Hill.

Fred said, "Mr. Bush is always looking for new ways to help the rich."

"Why was Mr. Bush so sure that a tax cut would stimulate the economy and encourage people to invest in the nation's business?"

"The president assumed that people would only make successful investments such as the Silverado Savings and Loan Association."

I then talked to a White House spokesman. "Mr. Bush blames Congress for all the troubles he has been having with the budget. How can he be so sure that the opposition is at fault?"

"If you are a president you automatically know who is responsible for your woes. Bush and his administration have been honest and forthcoming in trying to present a budget that will strengthen the country and the economy. But when you have so many Benedict Arnold Republicans on the other side, the president has no choice but to take his case to the public."

"How does Mr. Bush intend to do that?" I asked.

"He will carry his message to every state in the union, as well as parts of the District of Columbia."

"Does he mean that?"

"Not really. He'll go to a few big fund-raisers and then send Dan Quayle to all the others, if he can ever find him."

"What good will it do if the vice president does take Bush's message to all the states?"

"We don't know about him, but it will give Marilyn Quayle a rest. In order to get the budget President Bush has to use all the hyperbole he can muster. There is nothing that pleases him more than to stick his finger in Newt Gingrich's eye."

I had another question for Frederic Decker, "Do you believe that the president frightens the Democrats?"

"They're scared silly. When he threatened them with excommunication because they wouldn't give the country a cut in the capital gains tax, they all hid under their desks."

I spoke to a Democratic congressman. "The president doesn't believe in new taxes. He believes that the lower the taxes the more the economy will survive. We're in a recession and the deficit is the worst it's ever been. Could it be that the President is practicing voodoo economics?"

The congressman said, "Who knows? But one thing we're sure of, Mr. Bush believes that you'll never stop white-collar crime in this country until you give the people in the highest income brackets a break."

Free-spirited Texan's 'Stealth' catching flak

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press Writer

TAYLOR, Texas — They thought it a hoot when John Hughes constructed an airplane tail atop his house, as if a plane had plunged through his roof.

They chuckled when young John stuck a Batman light in a front yard tree, the quickest and surest way to summon the Caped Crusader to this Central Texas hamlet.

They laughed out loud when the University of Texas graduate mounted fins and teeth on his 1971 Ford pickup and converted the work truck into a pseudo-killer shark.

But now John Hughes, 28, resident free spirit, dedicated bachelor and budding entrepreneur, is peddling red, white and blue contraceptives in a black cardboard replica of the Air Force's B-2 bomber stamped with bold white letters: "Stealth Condoms."

Northrop Corp., which manufactures the B-2, is not amused.

The defense contractor asked the U.S. Patent and Trademark office last July to refuse trademark registration, claiming the name "may falsely suggest a connection with" or "bring ... disrepute" to Northrop.

Entrepreneur John Hughes flies a package of his "Stealth Condoms" outside his Taylor, Texas, home. Hughes, wearing a shirt he printed to promote the product, also mounted an airplane tail on the roof of his house.

AP Laserphoto

The public "is likely to erroneously assume or believe that Applicant's goods are in some way affiliated, connected or associated with ... or sponsored, endorsed, or approved by" Northrop, the company claimed.

Hughes says he thinks it unlikely anybody would confuse his product with an $800 million Stealth bomber.

"It's a crazy deal," he said. "It would be hilarious except that they may put me out of business."

In Los Angeles, Northrop spokesman Ed Smith said: "As a matter of policy, we would not comment on anything that would be in the legal process."

While Northrop seemed offended, others were not, including editors at Playboy and Penthouse magazines. Both gave the product a free plug.

Other more mainstream publications also commented on Hughes' product, among them the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times.

"This is great," the Times quoted Major Dick Cole, a U.S. Air Force spokesman, as saying. "I had heard there was a company doing this, but when I went looking in stores locally, I couldn't find any."

Cole said the Air Force doesn't mind that its radar-evading jet is being linked with such a contraceptive, as long as no one thinks the Pentagon is paying for them.

Hughes, who makes his "real living" as a tile setter, said the idea of using the B-2 bomber in a marketing device came to him last year while traveling along a two-lane country road.

"I don't know how I came up with it," he said. "I don't know if I saw a blackbird or an airplane or what. I have no earthly idea. But I immediately saw the possibilities. ..."

Hughes buys his wares from a manufacturer, gets his cardboard bombers printed locally and pays a Catholic family to hand package them for sale.

German unification not all celebration

By Joel Connelly
Hearst News Service

BERLIN — A sign fluttered from the back of Christine Muller's bicycle, carrying a handwritten quote from author Heinrich Heine: "WHEN I THINK OF GERMANY AT NIGHT, I CANNOT SLEEP."

It was Muller's modest protest against the rapid unification of her country. She compared it to a fire sale in which prosperous, powerful West Germany pushed the weaker German Democratic Republic forever out of business.

German Unity Day, Oct. 3, became the country's newest national holiday. Millions of revelers seemed intent on boosting their country's world-leading beer consumption, which averages 23.4 gallons per person each year. A champagne manufacturer put its product in bottles decorated with pictures of Germany's original unifier, 19th-century "Iron Chancellor" Otto von Bismarck.

But some Germans were worried Wednesday, and a few thousand even took to the streets in angry protest.

The biggest concern on both sides of the fast-disappearing Berlin Wall is rapidly rising unemployment as eastern Germany's outmoded industries are shut down.

"I will be happy when there is equal opportunity for all," said Klaus Fischer, whose job with the German Democratic Republic's Radio Berlin International ended on Tuesday.

Eric Dollman hangs onto his job in eastern Berlin, but already has watched as 400 co-workers were laid off at the inefficient brewery where he works. "We will make better beer but what will they (laid-off workers) do?" asked Dollman.

The question is an urgent one. A minimum of 1.4 million persons are expected to be out of work in eastern Germany, an astronomical unemployment rate in a country that had only 16 million people. Many others are being kept on the payroll as shadow employees, paid to do little work while western Germany's businesses try to figure out how to rebuild the East's rust-belt industry.

The German Democratic Republic's Marxist economy inspired jokes as deadly as the industrial pollution. "They pretend to pay us and we pretend to work," was a popular workers' maxim.

But the country's controlled prices and welfare benefits provided a measure of protection to those fearful of a free marketplace.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Rebel soldiers seize command

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Mutinous soldiers seized an army brigade headquarters before dawn Thursday in the southern Philippines. Chief of Staff Gen. Renato de Villa said the uprising was isolated to one base.

The Cabinet held emergency meetings and the military went on nationwide alert, de Villa said.

Soldiers of the 53rd infantry battalion took over the headquarters of the 402nd brigade of the Philippine Army in Butuan city, 500 miles southeast of Manila, at around 1:00 a.m. Thursday (noon EDT Wednesday), de Villa said.

Speaking on Manila radio stations, he said the mutiny was led by an army major identified only as Major Cerdeno, and by a Lieutenant Batac. About 3,000 soldiers are based at the brigade.

Sukkot holiday begins

JERUSALEM (AP) — The last tinsel ornaments went up on makeshift huts outside religious homes Wednesday as Jews began the eight-day Sukkot holiday with army notices on gas mask distribution arriving in their mailboxes.

Sukkot, or the "Feast of the Tabernacles" marks the last harvest before the winter rains.

Outdoor huts called sukkah replace home dining rooms throughout the holiday starting at sundown Wednesday, serving as a symbol of the shelter God provided the Israelites during their wanderings out of Egypt to the Promised Land.

Some scholars say the Talmud also teaches that the flimsy structure of the Sukkot hut is meant to suggest Jews' vulnerability in a difficult world.

Amid the Persian Gulf crisis and Iraq's repeated threats to attack the Jewish state with chemical weapons, this lesson seems particularly potent.

Hijacker identified

CANTON, China (AP) — The hijacker who seized a Boeing 737 that sliced into two parked jets at Canton airport was identified by Chinese authorities Wednesday as a common criminal. The hijacker was among the 127 people who died in the fiery crash.

The official Xinhua News agency said 90 Chinese, 30 Taiwanese, four people from Hong Kong, two from Macao and one American were killed in the crash early Tuesday.

Chen Kaizhi, deputy party secretary of Guangdong province, identified the 27-year-old hijacker only as Xiaofeng of Hunan province, and called him "an active criminal" who had engaged in corruption in Guangdong, Hunan and Fujian provinces. Chen said he would provide details later.

Chen said the hijacker was identified from his remains.

A fatality list released more than 30 hours after the disaster at Canton's Baiyun International Airport gave an American victim's name as Mary Anna Gerk, but her parents in the United States identified her as Mary Anna Gilbert, 23, an English teacher from Alexander City, Ala.

Officials said Erin Lynne Thomas of Oklahoma City was sitting next to Ms. Gilbert and survived, suffering a broken shoulder, head injuries and burns.

Delegation kept out

MOSCOW (AP) — A Europarliament delegation was denied entry to a restive enclave of Azerbaijan on Wednesday, one day after riots erupted over an explosion that killed an Azerbaijani boy, news reports said.

The independent Interfax news agency said an "unidentified device" exploded Tuesday in Kirkijan village in the enclave, Nagorno-Karabakh.

Although the enclave is mostly Armenian, the explosion occurred in a predominantly Azerbaijani area of the village, killing the 9-year-old boy and wounding his 11-year-old brother, Interfax said.

About an hour later, 200 Azerbaijanis stormed into the Armenian section of the village, attacking its residents and accusing them of planting the device. Two Armenians were injured, Interfax said without giving further details.

Brown in town, on offensive

■ GOP hopeful Buster Brown questions his opponent's qualifications for state attorney general.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

With former U.S. Sen. John Tower at his side, GOP attorney general candidate J.E. "Buster" Brown Wednesday accused his opponent of lacking the trial experience necessary to be effective in office.

"I have 23 years of experience as a lawyer — my opponent has three," Brown said during a brief campaign stop Wednesday at Midland International Airport.

Brown presented documents in which he claimed that his opponent, Democrat Dan Morales, never tried a a civil lawsuit or felony case before a jury.

Brown

Raoul Trejo, a spokesman for the Morales campaign, refuted Brown's claims, saying that Morales tried 70 cases — including felonies and civil suits — during a two-year stint with the Bexar County District Attorney's Office.

"Mr. Morales has a lot of courtroom experience," he said. "I think Mr. Brown is just a desperate man who will say anything to get some ink."

The 34-year-old Morales, a state representative from San Antonio, is a 1981 graduate of Harvard Law School.

Brown, 49, said his opponent's experience lies mainly in the political realm and suggested that Morales would not be able to provide guidance for the staff of the attorney general's office.

"I intend to be not just a figurehead heading up that 350-lawyer law firm," Brown said. "I intend to be leading it."

He said he would personally represent the state in future "monumental" trials dealing with prison reform, education finance reform and the state's mental health services.

He pointed to single-member districts for state judges as an issue in which the attorney general should have been more involved. A federal appeals court recently reversed a ruling requiring state judges to be elected from single-member districts.

Brown accused current Attorney General Jim Mattox, a Democrat, of "dragging his feet" on filing an appeal to the ruling. Lawyers hired by a group of state judges eventually appealed the ruling, he said.

"Single-member districts for ... judges would have been horrible," said Brown, who has been practicing law since 1967. "A judge is supposed to look at cases not as a politician and not as a representative of certain groups in our society."

Tower, of Dallas, said he was supporting Brown because "he's far and away the best candidate in the race, and the best qualified."

The U.S. Senate refused in 1989 to confirm Tower's appointment as President Bush's defense secretary. Tower would not speculate on the effect of his endorsement on Brown's campaign.

"We'll know later," he said.

Lawmakers maintain task force funding

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House voted Wednesday to spare 49 drug-fighting task forces in Texas, including the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, and dozens more across the nation.

Members approved, in a 236-189 vote, a change to the crime bill that keeps federal money for anti-drug task forces administered by states.

If the full crime bill passes Thursday, the amendment by Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, will keep the Texas task forces operating with an expected $27 million next year.

Reps. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, and Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, also pushed for the change.

"It's ultimately going to be very good for the state of Texas and our war on drugs," said Mark Schnabel of the Texas Office of State-Federal Relations.

Texas allocates the money to task forces based on need, often to those in rural and border areas.

USPS names Rojas Midland postmaster

■ Twenty-nine-year USPS veteran Raul Rojas calls his appointment one of his proudest moments.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Midland's new postmaster received a warm welcome when he was officially sworn in Wednesday afternoon at the Midland General Mail Facility, Midland International Airport.

Raul Rojas, who replaced Kathie Hawley, was formally installed by the El Paso Texas Management Sectional Center of the U.S. Postal Service.

"This is one of the proudest moments of my life," Rojas said after being sworn in by Arnold R. Elias, division general manager, Tucson division.

Rojas was presented with a framed certificate designating him Midland postmaster before a crowd of about 65 people.

Attending the ceremony were Rojas' wife and two daughters; Jesse Durazo, management sectional center manager, El Paso; area postmasters; and local postal employees and notables including Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas.

Singling out the mayor, Elias told the crowd, "The last time I left you with a ground breaking of a new building. Now I leave you with a new postmaster. ... It is truly an important day in Midland in terms of postal service."

The ceremony made official Rojas' position, which he has held since Aug. 25.

"He is responsible for running the entire facilities. Any facility in Midland, it is his responsibility to see that mail is processed and delivered within the budget," said Stan Sartain, manager of customer service for the U.S. Postal Service in Midland. More than 2 million pieces of mail are processed each week in Midland.

"It's a much bigger responsibility (than my previous position),"

City to tap east side water tower soon

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Using water in Bob Ristom's northeast Midland home on a hot summer day was a matter of setting priorities.

Simple daily chores, like taking showers and washing dishes, fell victim to an unseen war taking place underground in the city of Midland's water pipes.

The home's plumbing system, like others on the city's entire east side, was competing for precious drops of water, which on some days dribbled out like a 90-year-old basketball player.

"It was so bad, literally, you could not water the lawn and take a shower," said Ristom, a local managerial consultant who lives in the Fairway Park subdivision. "If you were washing the dishes you had to put off washing the clothes.

"You could only make one demand at a time. It was quite inconvenient. It was disastrous."

But starting possibly today, Ristom and his family can simultaneously wash cars, clean clothes and dishes, shower and even wage a water-balloon fight without having to worry about dwindling water pressure.

The valve on the city of Midland's new water tower was expected to be opened this week, possibly today.

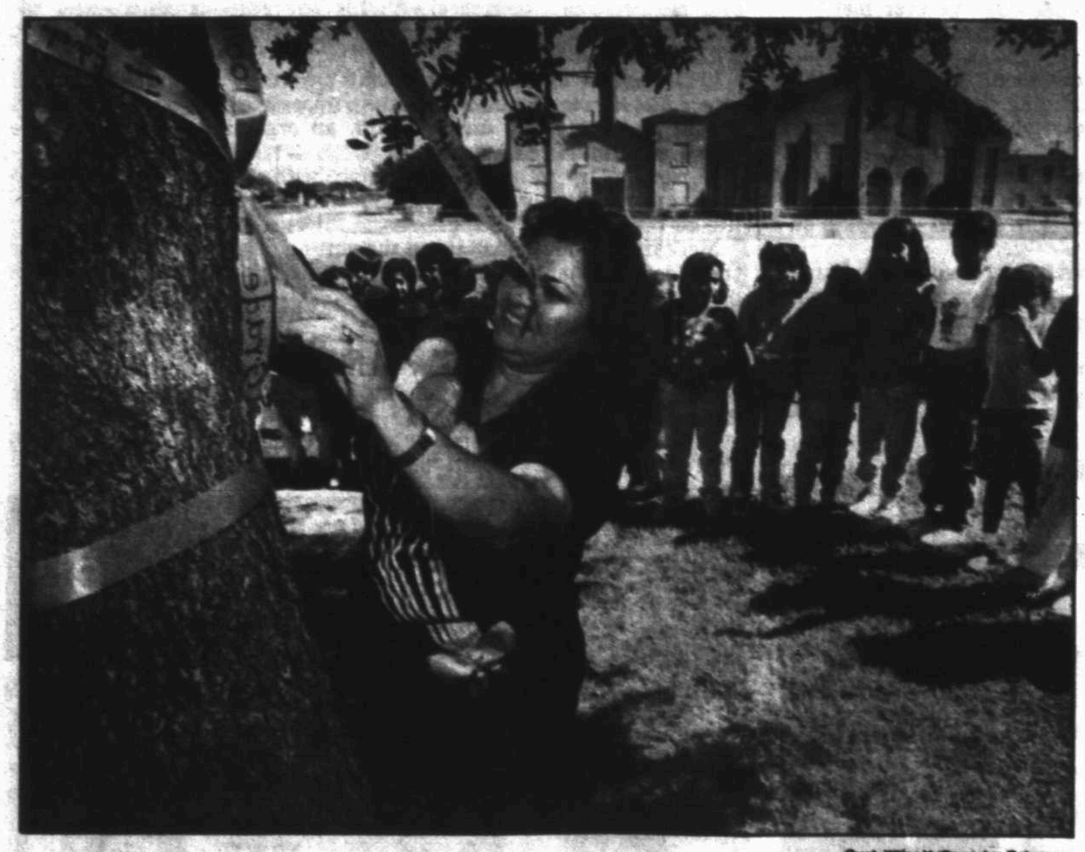

Harvey Hansen, the city's engineering and transportation director, said the 2 million-gallon water storage tank, elevated 140 feet off the ground, will help keep pipe pressure high in east and downtown Midland.

Construction on the storage tank, the city's third and biggest, has been ongoing in Hogan Park's southwest corner since June 1989.

The pressure caused by the 17 million pounds of fluid at maximum tank capacity will be especially handy when peak usage occurs during the late morning hours in the summer, Hansen said.

The city's other two elevated tanks, each of which holds only 1 million gallons, have not been able to keep water pressure up citywide, he said. One of the tanks is located in northwest Midland, while the other is in the southwest

Farmer's Almanac makes annual winter prediction

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Have you noticed an autumnal nip in the air, the leaves changing color, the woolly bear caterpillar getting woollier?

That's fall, podner, and rumor has it that it heralds a colder, snowier winter this year.

The 199th Old Farmer's Almanac predicts a long, chilly season beginning at the end of October, with a snow storm on General Election Day followed by flurries and occasional storms through December.

The almanac said January will bring some respite from the arctic conditions before a cold front dumps "well above normal snowfall" on the area on Valentine's Day.

A meteorological technician at the National Weather Service station at the Midland International Airport said his forecast "pretty much agreed" with the Old Farmer's Almanac.

He said the first killing frost of the season could come as early as Oct. 21.

He added, however, that NWS predicted warmer than average temperatures through October, so a first frost is more likely to freeze those last garden vegetables between Oct. 21 and Nov. 6. There is a 90 percent chance of below 32-degree temperatures before Thanksgiving.

November and December should be cooler than their aver-

Notrees just a shade different than other towns

NOTREES — Way back when, there was only one shade tree at Notrees. And it was cut down in the name of progress and petroleum.

Then, there was none, other than mesquite.

Today, there are a few shade trees about town.

Not many, but some.

And Notrees wasn't always a one-business town, not to mention the Shell gasoline plant and the Texaco petroleum offices on the outskirts of town, but it is now.

The United States Post Office is the business in town.

Todd

"It was a booming little town a few years back," said Lynn Oglesby, wife of the fire chief, Monty Oglesby.

The Notrees Volunteer Fire Department is in the old Shell filling station, which closed up a couple of years ago. It was Notrees' catch-all business. The old station sold hamburgers, a few groceries, and beer, which it stored in an old grease-rack stall, and pumped a little gasoline and squirted a bit of grease.

The fire trucks are in the station's old stalls.

It's been years since the old Brown's grocery store and later, Chambers & Son grocery store, and the neighboring cafe were opened. The tin-and-weathered-wood cafe building is giving way to unrelenting time. It's just falling in. And the old grocery store, while it has a way to go before falling in, is moving right along.

Up the road to Kermit about half a mile is the old Notrees brick school building. It's part of a ranch now. Cattle pens are out back, and the loading ramp is on the east side of the building. The flagpole is bare, the wooden tank atop the water tower is cracking open, weeds are growing all over the grounds, and the old arched metal "elementary" lettering has fallen to the ground and now reads "lementa."

Back in the middle of Notrees, Postmaster Millsie King keeps track of her patrons' mail. She rents out 40 boxes and figures that about 60 people live in "town" in Notrees and out on the ranches.

"There's no waiting in Notrees," Mrs. King just about guaranteed. "Some days we're real busy. Some days we're not. It kind of comes and goes."

Notrees was named by Charles J. Brown who, along with his wife, Coleete, operated Brown's grocery store and later put in a drug store.

Brown, who became the town's first postmaster, named the town "Notrees" after the old U.S. Post Office Department suggested that the town be named after something indicative of its locality.

That was in the mid-1940s.

"We had around 500 people at the time," Mrs. Brown said. "It was a little oil town."

Aside from mesquite shrubs, she said, the town had one lone tree.

"But Shell cut it down when they built the (gasoline) plant," Mrs. Brown recalled. "It was kind of a scrawny tree."

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Bond set

By Staff Reports

Charges are stacking up against a man arrested Sunday in connection with an alleged rape a few days earlier, officials said.

Darrin Lin Coffin, 31, remained in jail on a charge of aggravated sexual assault, as well as four additional counts of attempted sexual assault.

Bond for the assault was set at $100,000, and $50,000 each for the other four charges by Justice of the Peace R.H. Pine.

Police reported that they have received three additional attempted rape complaints that fit Coffin's method of operation. It has not be determined whether the suspect will be charged with the other crimes.

Coffin is also serving a term of probation from Ector County.

Odessa police may be looking into additional charges against the suspect, police said.

Assault

A Midland man remained unconscious in critical but stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital Wednesday from an assault that occurred Sept. 27, officials said.

Eusibio Saiz, 25, suffered massive head injuries when he was beat in the head with a baseball bat about 5:30 a.m. that morning at Midland Elms Apartments, 3601 Andrews Highway, police reported.

The assailant, who is wanted for attempted murder, was described as a white man, 21 years old, 6 feet tall and about 165 pounds.

Police are continuing an investigation.

Robbery attempt

A man armed with a knife got away with nothing when he attempted to rob a local business Tuesday evening, police said.

The would-be robber entered Al's Grocery, 411 N. Mineola St., about 8:30 p.m., demanded all the money and began waving a knife in the face of the owner in an attempt to cut him.

The owner reportedly picked up a stool-type chair and hit the man in the chest two or three times before the robber fled.

The suspect was described as a Hispanic man, about 5 feet 6 inches tall, 140 pounds, with black hair and brown eyes.

WINTER: Almanac keeps predicting formula secret

age mean temperatures of 52.3 and 46 degrees, respectively, he said.

The earliest the Permian Basin has ever had frost — since records have been kept — was last year, on Oct. 19. The average first frost day is Nov. 9.

A trace of snow fell on Oct. 20, 1954, but the earliest a measurable amount of snow drifted across the prairie was Nov. 8, 1955, when 0.4 inches fell.

The NWS forecaster said his and the Old Farmer's Almanac's strategies for long-term weather predictions are about the same.

He said the NWS bases its predictions on past years' data and long-term weather patterns.

This year, for example, forecasters are expecting a return of El Nino, a winter storm in the Pacific that will bring moisture into West Texas. Hence, the prediction of above average rain or snowfall.

"It's about 65 percent art, 45 percent science," he said. "We need more data and a denser network of weather balloons to reverse the percentages. But we're better than we have been."

Dr. Richard Head, a meteorologist who formerly worked for the NASA Electronics Research Center, has predicted weather for the almanac since 1969, said almanac editor Judson Hale.

"We believe nothing in the universe happens haphazardly," Hale said in the 1990 almanac. "There is a cause and effect pattern to all phenomenon, including the weather, but neither we nor anyone else has as yet gained sufficient insight into the mysteries of the universe to predict weather with anything resembling total accuracy."

Like last year, when the almanac was off a few weeks on its forecast of a severe cold wave in the first half of January. Actually, that cold snap snapped in mid December instead.

It was right about the rest of the winter being milder than average, though.

Besides technology, the almanac also uses a secret weather predicting formula created by its founder, Robert Thomas, in 1792.

World's top musicians in town for jazz party

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

West Texas hospitality draws nationally known musicians to The Midland Jazz Classic the first week of October each year.

"I look forward to coming every time," said bass player Jack Lesberg, the event's musical director who has not missed a Classic since the event began 14 years ago.

"Everybody's so nice to us. We have a good time. It's really a party, a musician's party, which is what it's supposed to be. Hopefully, everybody else will have fun, too."

"I think they're the nicest people," tenor saxophonist Flip Phillips said, referring to the organizers of the event. "They treat you wonderful, and they try to take care of you. They all like to make you comfortable, which is great."

The 14th annual Classic opens today at the Holiday Inn Country Villa and closes Sunday. For Warren Vache Jr., who plays flugelhorn and cornet, the composition of players at the annual event is a "nice mix of people from the East and West coasts.

"I get a big kick out of playing down there," said Vache, who describes the event as containing "wonderful music and great entertainment — half of the fun of my coming down — I get to hear everyone else play. These are some of the best musicians I've ever met."

Vache, who played at the first Classic, has another reason he's eager to return to Texas.

"I can't wait to get some good Mexican food," said Vache, whose brother, Allan, is a co-owner of The Landing, located in the Hyatt Regency, San Antonio. Vache is from a musical family. His father plays bass and Allan plays clarinet.

According to Lesberg, this year's Classic features, "Most of the same fellows, but with a couple of little changes — like Lew Tabackin, a wonderful tenor sax player who plays the flute as well — it takes on a different color."

This year's mix of musicians also includes Randy Sandke, Dan Barrett, Bill Watrous, Ken Peplowski, Cal Collins, Dick Hyman, Derek Smith, Ralph Sutton, Phil Flanigan, Milt Hinton, Jake Hanna, Butch Miles and Jackie Williams.

During the Classic, different combinations of players perform sets throughout the night. Each set naturally includes a basic characteristic of jazz — improvisation.

For more information call 683-5208 or 682-5334. Hours for the Classic are 8 p.m. to midnight today through Saturday and from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday.

TOWER: Downtown benefits from tower

part of the city.

Hansen said that because the east and downtown areas had no nearby water tower, pressure sometimes dropped to as low as 20 pounds per square inch.

Although low pressure hasn't been a problem for firefighters battling blazes in those areas, more pressure is needed to ensure high state fire insurance ratings, he said.

The new tower will bring pressure in east and downtown Midland to as high as 57 pounds per square inch, with it never dropping much lower than 40 pounds per square inch, Hansen said.

Councilman Jose Cuevas said low water pressure has been an ongoing problem for east Midland residents.

"It's a complaint I received the minute I got on the City Council," Cuevas said. "People couldn't wash dishes if someone else was taking a shower in the house.

"It's going to be neat to wash dishes and water the lawn at the same time."

Hansen said the baby-blue tank, constructed by Pitt-Des Moines Inc. of Des Moines, Iowa, will be filled at night, start draining at daybreak and be almost empty by 10 p.m. on busy days.

The $1.4 million for the project came from the Texas Capital Access Program, through which the Texas Department of Commerce purchases bonds issued by local governmental entities statewide.

It took seven months to construct the 90-foot-tall hollow, concrete base which supports the 50-foot-tall storage tank, where the steel is 3½ inches thick in some places, Hansen said.

It took more than 1,000 gallons of baby-blue paint to coat the tank, which will be topped by a blinking red light, he said. A radio antenna for the city's communication system eventually may be placed on top, he said.

The city began filling the tank with water Tuesday night, and it was full by 6 a.m. Wednesday, Hansen said. Tests for bacteria were expected to be run either Wednesday or today, he said.

"If that test shows no bacteria, then we'll open the valve and that will be it," he said. "We expect the tests to come up negative because we chlorinated it very thoroughly."

Hansen said he does not expect the added water pressure to result in pipes busting all over east Midland.

"Fifty-seven pounds is certainly not excessive pressure," he said. "But any deteriorated lines or pipes may have some problems, but those would need to be replaced anyway. We don't anticipate any problems."

He said that at the rate Midland is growing toward the west and northwest, a similar tank may be needed for that area in 10 to 15 years.

"It depends on development in that area," Hansen said. "If it occurs sooner, the tank would be needed sooner."

McCrary named to state council

Staff Report

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Wednesday appointed Midland County Precinct 2 Commissioner Guy McCrary to the Texas Planning Council on Developmental Disabilities.

McCrary will fill the unexpired term of Priscilla Kirkwood of College Station, who resigned.

The council, which meets quarterly, is a coordinating body that works with the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, the Rehabilitation Commission, the Department of Health, the Department of Human Services, the Department on Aging, the Texas Education Agency, the Texas Commission for the Blind and the Texas Commission for the Deaf.

It works to develop a comprehensive delivery system for people with disabilities.

McCrary, a board member and the immediate past president of the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens, said his work with MARC and his personal experience with his 9-year-old daughter, who has Down's Syndrome, has made him more aware of the difficulties people with disabilities face.

"I'm honored to have been appointed by the governor," he said. "I would like to bring to the council the perspective of one who has been a parent and intimately involved with an organization in the service delivery business (MARC).

"I want to try to assure that people with disabilities are afforded every opportunity for quality living and to assure that they can contribute to their own well-being."

McCrary said that MARC is on the cutting edge of job placement for the mentally retarded, which he believes helps those with disabilities become more independent.

He will serve a term ending Feb. 1, 1993.

McCrary, the principal of Guy McCrary & Associates, recently completed his responsibilities as executive director of Objectives 2000.

He is also chairman of the funding review committee of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

In addition, he is a member of the Community Supervision and Corrections Advisory Board and the Teen Court Advisory Board.

McCoy excuses himself from hearing Mojo case

Staff Report

ODESSA — A new judge has been assigned to hear the lawsuit filed by Permian High School coaches against the University Interscholastic League, court records show.

Ray Anderson, 121st District Court Judge in Brownfield, will replace 358th District Court Judge Bill McCoy on the suit, which was filed last week.

Anderson said he was told of the assignment Monday by presiding District Court Judge Weldon Kirk of Sweetwater.

Judge McCoy "recused himself from the case, and when he does that the presiding judge has to find another judge to hear it," Anderson said.

Anderson said McCoy may have declined to hear the case because he felt he could not render an unbiased judgment. McCoy was not available for comment Wednesday.

Lucius Bunton IV, UIL's Austin attorney, said Anderson's assignment to the case may be moot because a change of venue in the case is expected.

He said state law requires that suits filed against UIL must be heard in Travis County. He also said he has delayed filing a motion for a change of venue at the request of the plaintiffs' attorney, T. Gerald Treece of Houston.

Permian coaches filed suit against UIL on Sept. 28, claiming the agency violated rules of due process when it banned the Permian Panthers from the state playoffs for pre-season rules violations.

Execution date set for Henry Lee Lucas

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dec. 3 execution date has been set for Henry Lee Lucas in the 1979 slaying of an unidentified female hitchhiker, Williamson County District Attorney Ken Anderson said Wednesday.

The woman was found strangled in a culvert off Interstate 35, north of Georgetown.

The execution date was set by State District Judge John Carter of Williamson County.

Lucas confessed to nearly 600 slayings before he began saying he had made up the confessions. He now acknowledges only one killing — the beating death of his mother in Tecumseh, Mich. in 1960.

The hitchhiker case is the only one for which Lucas has received the death penalty. He has been assessed six life terms, two 75-year sentences and one 60-year term for other Texas convictions.

Lucas still could appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, Anderson said. Lucas' attorney, Richard Alley of Fort Worth, didn't immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

The Agency Fair is part of Midland Park Mall's 10th anniversary celebration. United Way of Midland kicked off its annual fundraising campaign Sept. 26 and the final tally will be announced during a finale dinner Nov. 8.

Campaign theme is "go the distance" and volunteers are working to reach a goal of $2,503,000.

During the fair, people will be able to talk to agency representatives and learn about the services offered. Agencies also will post wish lists of items that may be donated. And participants will be able to donate to the United Way campaign.

To enter the drawing, people will be given a sheet to list their name and address; and they are being asked to stop at three agencies and get their entry form validated. The drawing will take place at 8:30 p.m.. The winner need not be present to win.

For more information about the Agency Fair, contact Lana Cunningham at United Way of Midland, 682-4358.

FUNDING: House OKs $27 million for task forces

(From 1B)

Law enforcement agencies in 200 counties received a portion of the $26 million the state was granted this year. Texas task forces received $23 million in 1989 and $7 million in 1988.

The Permian Basin Drug Task Force received $661,601, or about 75 percent of its funding, this year from federal grants. The remaining 25 percent came from state grants.

The Permian Basin agency employees 16 agents and began operation in February 1988.

Joe Commander, an Ector County District Attorney's Office narcotics investigator assigned to work with the task force, said the funding cut would have drastically affected efforts to stop the flow of drugs here.

"All the stuff comes right up through Mexico," Commander said. "Odessa is one of the first stopping points out of the Big Bend area.

"You get everything coming right this way. We have the same problems the big cities have."

Funding for the Ector County District Attorney's drug prosecution task force also was proposed to be cut but will now be saved. That agency has a five-member staff and receives 75 percent of its funding, or $135,879, from the federal government.

Mike Patton, chief investigator for the agency, said he was relieved to hear that the funding was left unscathed.

"Evidently they're still happy with it," Patton said. "This task force is extremely successful. It would be a shame if it were wiped out at this point."

In four years, Texas task forces have made 19,000 arrests, confiscated more than $1 billion in illegal narcotics and seized more than 300 clandestine labs, officials said.

PBRPC gets UMTA grant

Staff Report

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission (PBRPC) has been awarded a $40,000 public transportation grant, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, announced Wednesday.

The money, provided by the Urban Mass Transportation Administration (UMTA), will be used for technical studies on public transportation needs in Midland and Odessa.

Jerry Tschauner, PBRPC planning director, said the money will be used to update public transportation feasibility studies done in the 1970s.

Information from those studies could be used should either city decide to begin providing public transportaion.

"At the present time, it doesn't look like the city of Midland is looking for another transportation system," he said. Midland has been without public transportation since 1986, he said.

UMTA was established in 1968 and operates a variety of grant and loan programs.

Entomologists find 6-foot yellow jacket nest

PALESTINE (AP) — What has 60,000 legs, always dresses for dinner and gets aggressive when covered with plastic? Ask Garland McIlveen Jr.

"It's a monster," he said, standing beside a cratered road embankment, which an hour before had been the home of maybe the biggest yellow jacket nest ever documented in Texas.

McIlveen, an entomologist with the state agricultural extension service, spent a recent morning on County Road 328 in northeast Anderson County, capturing the prize nest.

"When you start putting plastic up there and start messing with that nest," he said, "they get really aggressive."

He and a crew from Texas A&M University came here to fumigate, cover and remove a nest more than 6 feet wide and 6 feet tall.

"This is probably going to be a record in terms of documentation," McIlveen said. "We've had people report them around this size or sometimes bigger, but we've never had them documented. So that's what we're here to do."

The species of yellow jacket, he explained, prefers nesting in hollows such as cellars, eaves and, in this case, cavities in the embankments on dead-end rural roads.

"This is characteristic of this particular species," McIlveen said. "Apparently there's plenty of food here for them.

"They always put (the nest) in an envelope; it won't be open celled like other yellow jackets.'"

McIlveen said the insect's latin name is vespula squamosa, but it commonly — and aptly — is known as the subterranean nester. The insect inhabits the southeast corner of the country, with its eastern border roughly Central Texas.

Nests as big as nine feet across have been documented in Florida, he said.

"But for the most part they are beneficial insects," he added.

By afternoon, the A&M crew was wisking the huge nest off to College Station. McIlveen was left alone, faced with the monumental task of counting an estimated 10,000 drugged and dying insects, searching for the queen.

"I'm thinking there's going to be more than one queen," he said, scratching the sting on the tip of his nose where an ambitious jacket reached through a small opening in his mask he had made for a camera. "What we're trying to establish is whether this is a first-year nest or a perennial," he explained. A queen, or queens, with ovaries will indicate the huge nest was more than a year old, he said.

Apparently, he said, folks living on the country road reported the nest after evening walks began turning painful at a particular point in the road. A nearby beekeeper eventually called an authority at the university.

Williams, Richards remain hung up on terms of debate

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Whether Texas voters will get to see their gubernatorial candidates in debate remained a toss-up Wednesday after Democrat Ann Richards accepted a third party invitation but Republican Clayton Williams demurred.

The ostensible sticking point in the ongoing fracas is whether arrangements for the face-off should be struck by the two opposing sides or whether a neutral third party, such as the League of Women Voters, should become involved.

A Texas league spokesman on Wednesday said that organization will bow out of talks unless it gets a commitment from Williams, a Midland businessman, by Friday.

Richards, who is the state treasurer, offered her commitment Wednesday in a joint appearance with league spokesman Diane Sheridan.

The league hosted gubernatorial debates in 1978, 1980 and 1984 and was hoping to hold another Oct. 30 in Dallas, exactly a week before the general election on Nov. 6.

The Williams' camp instead is proposing a Nov. 2 debate in Waco, Richards' hometown, at Baylor University. Williams' campaign manager, Zack Dawes, said that date is the only remaining open one on his candidate's calendar.

STATE

Dawes said having the debate arranged solely by the two sides is "very important," but he declined to explain why.

Sheridan said such arrangements tends to serve the purposes of the candidates more than voters.

Most recent polls show Williams out front with a substantial lead in a race characterized by negative advertising on both sides.

Dawes said Williams would like a format in which candidates answer questions given them ahead of time by a single moderator, who would conduct the debate.

Primary debates earlier this year used a moderator and a panel of reporters, who posed questions that candidates were not given for review.

Dawes also said Williams will only debate if both sides sign public pledges to refrain from negative television advertising for the rest of the campaign.

"If she'll say yes, we'll sign today," said Dawes.

Richards said she currently isn't running any negative advertising and has no plans to do so.

However, the Republican Party of Texas continues to run negative radio advertising that focuses specifically on her.

She was not optimistic that Williams, who ruled out joint appearances with her this past summer, would take part in a debate at all.

"In the long haul, I will promise you, he will not debate if he can get out of it," she said.

Referring to the image of a cowboy that Williams cultivates, she said, "You cannot be John Wayne and run from your opposition. You have got to stand up and take responsibility for the fact that you're trying to be chief executive of this state."

House panel proposes bill to make polluting criminal

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State agencies will draft proposed legislation to add criminal penalties to the punishments intentional polluters face and expand the attorney general's role in prosecuting offenders after a House subcommittee hearing Wednesday.

The meeting of members of the House Criminal Jurisprudence Committee took on a political tinge as the panel chairman, Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, is a candidate for attorney general.

Republican Party of Texas Chairman Fred Meyer questioned Morales' motives, since he will not be returning to the Legislature when it reconvenes in January.

"Now, as a lame-duck legislator, he finds he must suddenly hold hearings one month before the election," said Meyer. "Why?" The representative is opposed by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson.

In his opening statement, Morales said that the fines the Texas Water Commission, Texas Department of Health and Texas Air Control Board currently levy have become for some companies "more a routine cost of doing business than a deterrent."

"No thief, no burglar, no drug offender deserves worse" than the criminal penalities he advocates creating for intentional polluters, he said.

David Willettee, vice president of OxyChem of Houston and a spokesman for the Texas Association of Business, said current law already is "adequate" to deter willful polluters.

"I maintain that virtually without exception, environmental violations are the result of technical failures or malfunctions that cannot be anticipated," he said.

As a result, increasing criminal sanctions would be "ineffective," "a gross injustice" and "a serious deterrent to economic growth," he said.

Richard Abraham, director of the watchdog group Texans United, offered another view.

"Companies pollute because it's the cheapest way to do business," he said.

Sheriff Hickey's wife faces lesser charge

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — County prosecutors here have declined to press aggravated assault charges against the sheriff's wife, who was arrested Saturday during an anti-abortion demonstration.

Jan Hickey, wife of Nueces County Sheriff James Hickey, was taken to jail Saturday on charges of aggravated assault of a police officer and criminal trespass. Police arrested her outside a clinic that performs abortions.

But District Attorney Grant Jones and County Attorney Carlos Valdez have since said they would not prosecute the assault case.

Corpus Christi's municipal court, however, accepted the case Tuesday as a case of simple assault. She also still faces the trespassing charge.

Events surrounding Mrs. Hickey's arrest are the latest in a growing rift between the sheriff and city police. Sheriff Hickey, an anti-abortion advocate, is opposed to using law officers to stop protesters who block entrances to abortion clinics.

STATE in brief

Bryant's death baffles officials

HIGHLAND PARK (AP) — The death of the Dallas Theater Center's director has led to a paramedic being placed on administrative leave pending a formal investigation.

Ken Bryant, the center's director for over a year, died Tuesday at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas. His death came several hours after he was treated for injuries he suffered in a minor traffic accident, officials say.

Friends said Bryant was apparently uninjured in the accident, but was treated by paramedics after he fainted again while talking with police.

Darrell Fant, Highland Park's public safety director, said he has ordered an investigation and has placed one of the paramedics who treated Bryant on administrative leave with pay.

One of the youngest artistic directors of a major resident theater in the United States, the 35-year-old Bryant was appointed interim director in May 1989 and was named permanent director last December.

Texans killed in crash

MOUNT WASHINGTON, N.H. (AP) — Search teams planned to use a mountain-climbing tourist railroad Wednesday to bring down the bodies of three Texas men killed in a plane crash near the summit of Mount Washington.

Foul weather created problems for teams trying to recover the bodies of the men killed early Tuesday when their plane slammed into rock ledges on the mountain's north side.

"All of the bodies have been recovered from the scene" and taken to the summit to meet the Mount Washington Cog Railway, said Maj. Henry Mock of the Fish and Game Department, which was coordinating the effort.

Authorities said two of the victims were Jimmy Fred Jones, 33, and Stewart Eames, 27, both of Fort Worth. The identity of the third man still had not been released Wednesday.

Doctor believed slain

DALLAS (AP) — A pediatrician whose practice in suburban Mesquite was ruined after it was disclosed that he had AIDS was apparently slain in his Dallas apartment, police said.

The body of Dr. Robert Huse, 47, was found Tuesday in a bathroom tub, with the water running. He had not been seen since about Thursday, friends said.

"There were no signs of forced entry. It was not ransacked. He was clothed," said homicide Detective Chuck Hudson. "We have no reason to rule anything out at this point."

Huse lost his $90,000-a-year practice in late 1987 after a former roommate told patients the physician had AIDS. The patients left although Huse had not developed AIDS-related symptoms and there had been no cases of the virus being contracted through casual contact.

Texans celebrate unity

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — Hoisting Rhine wine and Texas-brewed beer, members of the German-American society of New Braunfels celebrated the reunification of Germany.

Benno Engel, a German teacher at New Braunfels High, said Central Texas, with its many German-American communities, has been watching the events of the last year with a sense of amazement as the barriers came down between what were East and West Germany.

The gathering at New Braunfels brought together people whose families had come from Germany as recently as three months ago to as long as three generations ago.

Clerk seriously wounded

FORT WORTH (AP) — A teenage sandwich shop clerk was recovering Wednesday from a shotgun blast fired by a would-be robber who allegedly tired of waiting for her to open a safe.

Stephanie McFarland was in good condition at Harris Methodist Hospital Wednesday afternoon, said Mandy Rhodes, hospital spokeswoman.

Beverely L. Harrison, 20, of Fort Worth, was arrested about one hour after the incident and arraigned Wednesday on a charge of attempted capital murder, county officials said.

Lt. David Ellis of the Fort Worth Police Department said Harrison was captured as he hid in an alley about four blocks from the sandwich shop, clutching a shotgun.

Pair parodies Williams' rape joke in song

HOUSTON (AP) — A pair of Houston businessmen have parodied Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams' cowboy image and his controversial joke about rape in song.

Donnell Price and Fred Cebrun of Futuristic Enterprises said Wednesday they hope "Texas, It's a Cryin' Shame" will attract Texas radio listeners before the Nov. 6 election.

Sung to the tune of "Home on the Range," the song has "great crossover appeal" with a twangy, sing-along style by Cebrun.

"His sense of humor is strange.

"His types of jokes

"Offend lots of folks.

"Texas, it's a cryin' shame."

The song specifically addresses a joke Williams made while at his Alpine ranch with reporters in April. Williams compared the rainy weather to rape, saying, "if it's inevitable, just relax and enjoy it." He has since apologized for the comment, but initially said it was intended to be "campfire humor."

"Clayton, what did you say? No woman enjoys being raped," Cebrun sings.

Later in the song, Cebrun warns:

"Hold onto your rope

"Because after the vote

"You might be back on the range."

Cebrun, 41, said he wrote the song in April while playing with his 3-year-old granddaughter, Renisha.

"We were just singing nursery songs," Cebrun recalled. "Then the news came on about his rape joke, and I just made a little rhyme with it and she and I just kept playing and rhyming."

Price, 34, a former general manager of a Houston radio station, said when he heard the song: "I felt there was no way someone would not want to support this."

Since then, the pair has approached Democrat Ann Richards' gubernatorial campaign, the National Organization for Women, Women Against Violence Everywhere, and the Democratic Party about the song, but with little success.

"Everybody in the campaign likes it and asks for copies, but nobody's been willing to put up the money for it," Price said. "They're hesitant."

Cebrun, who has written jingles, but never sung professionally, recorded the 2½-minute ditty at Joe Danger's studio in Houston. Aside from a few sample cassettes, the pair was awaiting orders before mass producing the song. Now they're taking it to stations themselves for air play.

"We had real good potential on it from the beginning," Price said. "It's worth us giving it our best effort."

Asked if they thought Clayton Williams would like the song, the pair laughed.

"I think he'd understand because it is part of the Texas spirit," Cebrun said. "All three of us are Texans, and we would not do something to hurt another Texan."

"Besides," Price said, "after November, we're going to have to work with whoever is elected."

But Price added with a laugh, "I don't know if we'll go to the governor's mansion looking for a job if it's Claytie, though."

Anxious market sends oil prices up $3

■ War worries returned to the oil market, sending oil prices surging more than $3.

By Dirk Beveridge

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil shot up more than $3 per barrel Wednesday, as war worries returned to the futures market in a rally that proved surprising even to traders who have grown accustomed to wild swings.

"It wasn't one headline," said Ron Caples, a broker with Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. "It wasn't one speech or one action or one rumor. The easiest way to describe it is the war premium is back, at least for today. I don't want to go out on a limb and predict prices tomorrow."

Contracts for November delivery of light sweet crude oil closed $3.37 higher at $37.32 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Later contract months all closed higher as oil made a substantial rebound from back-to-back dives Monday and Tuesday that totaled more than $5 a barrel.

Oil had opened slightly stronger Wednesday on an industry report showing the nation's crude supply went down by 9.4 million barrels last week, as well as news that Secretary of State James A. Baker III said he had found growing international support for a military strike against Iraq.

But after several hours of lackluster trading, oil suddenly began surging ahead late in the afternoon, led by strong buying from the large trading houses. The reason for the jump seemed to elude professional traders.

The rally may have been helped by news that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had gone to Kuwait, the oil-rich nation he conquered in August.

"A lot of people are feeling if he was down there, then maybe he was planning new strategies with his generals or whatever," said Thomas Blakeslee, an energy analyst with Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J.

Others said Saddam's visit to the occupied territory could not fully explain the rally.

Home heating oil and unleaded gasoline contracts followed crude futures, as they have throughout the volatile week.

Heating oil rose 7.38 cents to 99.41 cents per gallon for November delivery, with later months all closing higher.

Unleaded gasoline went up 7.07 cents to 94 cents per gallon for November delivery, with most later months closing higher.

Natural gas contracts all traded higher, with November contracts rising 3.5 cents to $1.915 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar lower

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar declined on world currency markets Wednesday amid expectations that interest rates are poised to move lower.

Gold prices bounced higher in a technical rally. On New York's Commodity Exchange, bullion settled at $393.90, up $4.80 a troy ounce.

In New York, the dollar closed at 136.04, down from 136.72 yen on Tuesday. In New York, it cost $1.9025 to buy one pound, more expensive for buyers than $1.8930 on Tuesday.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.5420 German marks, 1.2835 Swiss francs, 5.1660 French francs, 1,155.75 Italian lire and 1.1516 Canadian dollars.

Gold prices moved higher overseas. In London, the metal closed at a bid $390.75 a troy ounce, up from $388.75 late Tuesday.

Silver prices were mixed On New York' Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $4.690 a troy ounce, up from $4.679 on Tuesday.

Factory orders

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising oil prices from the Persian Gulf crisis helped push up the value of orders to factories for manufactured goods 1.8 percent in August, the government reported Wednesday. Analysts said the oil-inflated boost disguised the weakness in the industrial sector.

The Commerce Department said orders for both durable and non-durable goods totaled a seasonally adjusted $244.6 billion, but added that "most of the increase is attributed to the petroleum refining industry, which had substantial price increases during the month. Excluding petroleum, orders increased 0.6 percent."

Officials warn propane may run short

■ Federal officials are warning that low propane inventories could bring a repeat of shortages seen during last year's Christmas cold snap.

By Bill Mintz
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – With propane inventories running below average and demand running high, federal energy officials are warning of a possible repeat of the shortages of that fuel during last year's Christmas week cold snap.

One propane supplier said the shortages of pipeline capacity, trucks and rail cars that plagued last year's efforts to deliver the fuel are still a problem today.

An industry official who acknowledged problems with delivery, still predicted that inventories will return to near-normal levels by Dec. 1.

Last December was the fourth-coldest month recorded in the United States this century.

And the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration is predicting that the coming winter will be colder than normal, officials said.

Their comments came during a seminar Tuesday, convened by the U.S. Department of Energy and the New York-based Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, to assess the outlook for the coming winter heating season with industry representatives, federal officials and state energy officers.

In contrast with the warnings about propane supplies, officials of the Energy Information Administration, which is the Energy Department's statistical branch, said that heating oil inventories are substantially above last year's levels, and they predicted that supplies will be adequate for a normal winter.

However, Mark E. Rodekohr, an Energy Information Administration official, warned that prices – already high because of pressures on the market resulting from the Persian Gulf crisis – probably will go up even more as other countries that relied on Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil bid to replace the embargoed supplies.

John Lichtblau, chief executive of the petroleum research group, warned that crude oil prices, which reached $40 per barrel briefly last week, won't decline substantially until tensions ease in the Middle East.

Newest food trends displayed

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Steaks, salads, sauces, seasonings. They were all there Wednesday at the Sysco Food Show at Midland Center.

Sysco, a Houston food distribution company with sales offices in Midland and Odessa, occupied the entire Center as food companies from regional chili-makers (The Texas Chili Co.) to international companies like Nabisco and Kelloggs displayed their institutional foods.

"We cater to the away-from-home market," said Rick Brown, a spokesman for Sysco. "That includes hospitals, cafeterias, restaurants, hotels. You can find just about any food item you need in this show."

Some of the items seen to make it easier for the food profession were cans of ready-cooked vegetables, from spinach to sweet potatoes, and buckets of prepared salads and desserts for buffets and salad bars.

Many of the products evolved around mixes that offer quick ways to prepare food. One product by First Food of Dallas is a no-bake, no-cook dessert base requires one only to mix with water.

Well-heeled take luxury tax in stride

By Susan Hightower

HIGHLAND PARK, Texas (AP) — Shoppers in this deliriously rich Dallas enclave look at it this way: If you can afford a $50,000 Mercedes-Benz, surely, my dear, you can afford the luxury tax on it.

"I don't like it, but I think it's fair," said Rick Jones, sorting through designer shirts at the Polo Shop, one of this community's high-priced shops.

But Randle Stricklin, a salesman at Cartier Inc., where watches range in price from $1,000 to $20,000, complained the tax burden should fall evenly on all retailers.

"It hits hard," he said. "Why single out luxury dealers, who have suffered in the last 10 years — especially in Texas?"

Elsewhere in the country, merchants who cater to the carriage trade complain that the government proposal to raise taxes on big-ticket items — including expensive cars, yachts, jewelry and furs — discriminates against their wealthy clientele.

Though they protest, many merchants are bracing for a flurry of sales as customers rush to put an extra case of

SCOTT BURNS

Government backs several money funds

By Scott Burns

Q. In a recent column you said you had been telling readers that U.S. Treasury issues were providing a higher yield than comparable maturity CDs and that the interest rate advantage could be nearly a percentage point. Could you provide a list of these funds and more information? — C.W., Dallas, Texas.

A. Reader mail and phone calls on this topic have increased dramatically in recent weeks. Most people are more concerned about the SAFETY of their money than differences in yield. I don't blame them.

Burns

On Sept. 11 the Government Accounting Office reported that the FDIC reserve fund might not be adequate to cover future bank losses. The reserve fund is now $13.2 billion, down from $18.3 billion two years ago, and losses are expected to cost $2 billion this year. FDIC chairman William Seidman agrees with the GAO estimate. On the same day the Chase Manhattan Bank, a major institution, was forced to pay 13 percent interest on its subordinated notes, a rate that suggests "junk" quality financings. Not one of the nation's 20 largest banks, including Chase Manhattan, was included in the GAO list of potential losses.

On Sept. 12 the Congressional Budget Office testified that it expected as many as 700 bank failures by 1993 with costs that would bring the insurance fund down to $4 billion.

There are positive and negative things to be said about this news:

The positive is that further losses in the FDIC fund are NOT to be confused with exhausting the fund. Furthermore, even if the FDIC fund was emptied on future bank failures, bank deposits are further guaranteed by the "full faith and credit of the U.S. government." That means people who are worried about their money in banks should stop.

Unfortunately, the estimates of future losses are coming from the same government institutions that have routinely low-balled us on the cost of just about everything from Medicare to catastrophic health, to (most recently) the cost of the S & L bailout.

In fairness, they are not alone.

I know of no consistent source of accurate estimates for government program costs.

Worse, the phrase "full faith and credit of the U.S. government" has taken on visceral meaning. The credit of our government rests in its power to tax you and me. The lesson all of us are learning in the S & L debacle is that we are the Insurers of Last Resort while the folks in Washington are no more than well paid intermediaries who redistribute the funds.

Meanwhile, there is accelerating discussion of reducing the full limits of FDIC insurance. While this would only affect those who kept more than $100,000 in a deposit institution, it makes everyone worry.

What to do?

Invest with the devil himself.

Buy U.S. Treasury obligations.

They are the most secure interest bearing investment you can own and they are now offering interest rates that are very competitive:

7.25 percent; Average 3 month CD, Banxquote Money Markets

7.60 percent; Average yield on government money market funds.

In other words, in spite of offering checking privileges, instant liquidity, etc. you could earn significantly more in a money market mutual fund that only invests in the most secure short term government securities than you can in a bank CD.

The advantage does not stop at short term obligations. In the same week that the average 5 year maturity bank CD was yielding 7.90 percent, Salomon Brothers indicated that 5 year Treasuries were yielding 9.07 percent.

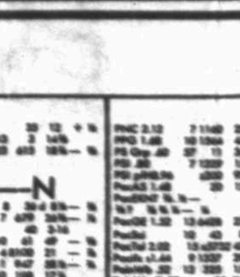

Message: Washington is doing its very

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market drifted in a narrow range today, levelling off after the wide swings of the past several sessions.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 7.42 to 2,512.62 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

But losers slightly outnumbered gainers in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 696 up, 755 down and 448 unchanged.

Stock prices began to rally late last week from their lowest levels in more than a year.

The upswing has drawn support from a drop in oil prices and some muted enthusiasm over the budget compromise reached by President Bush and many members of Congress.

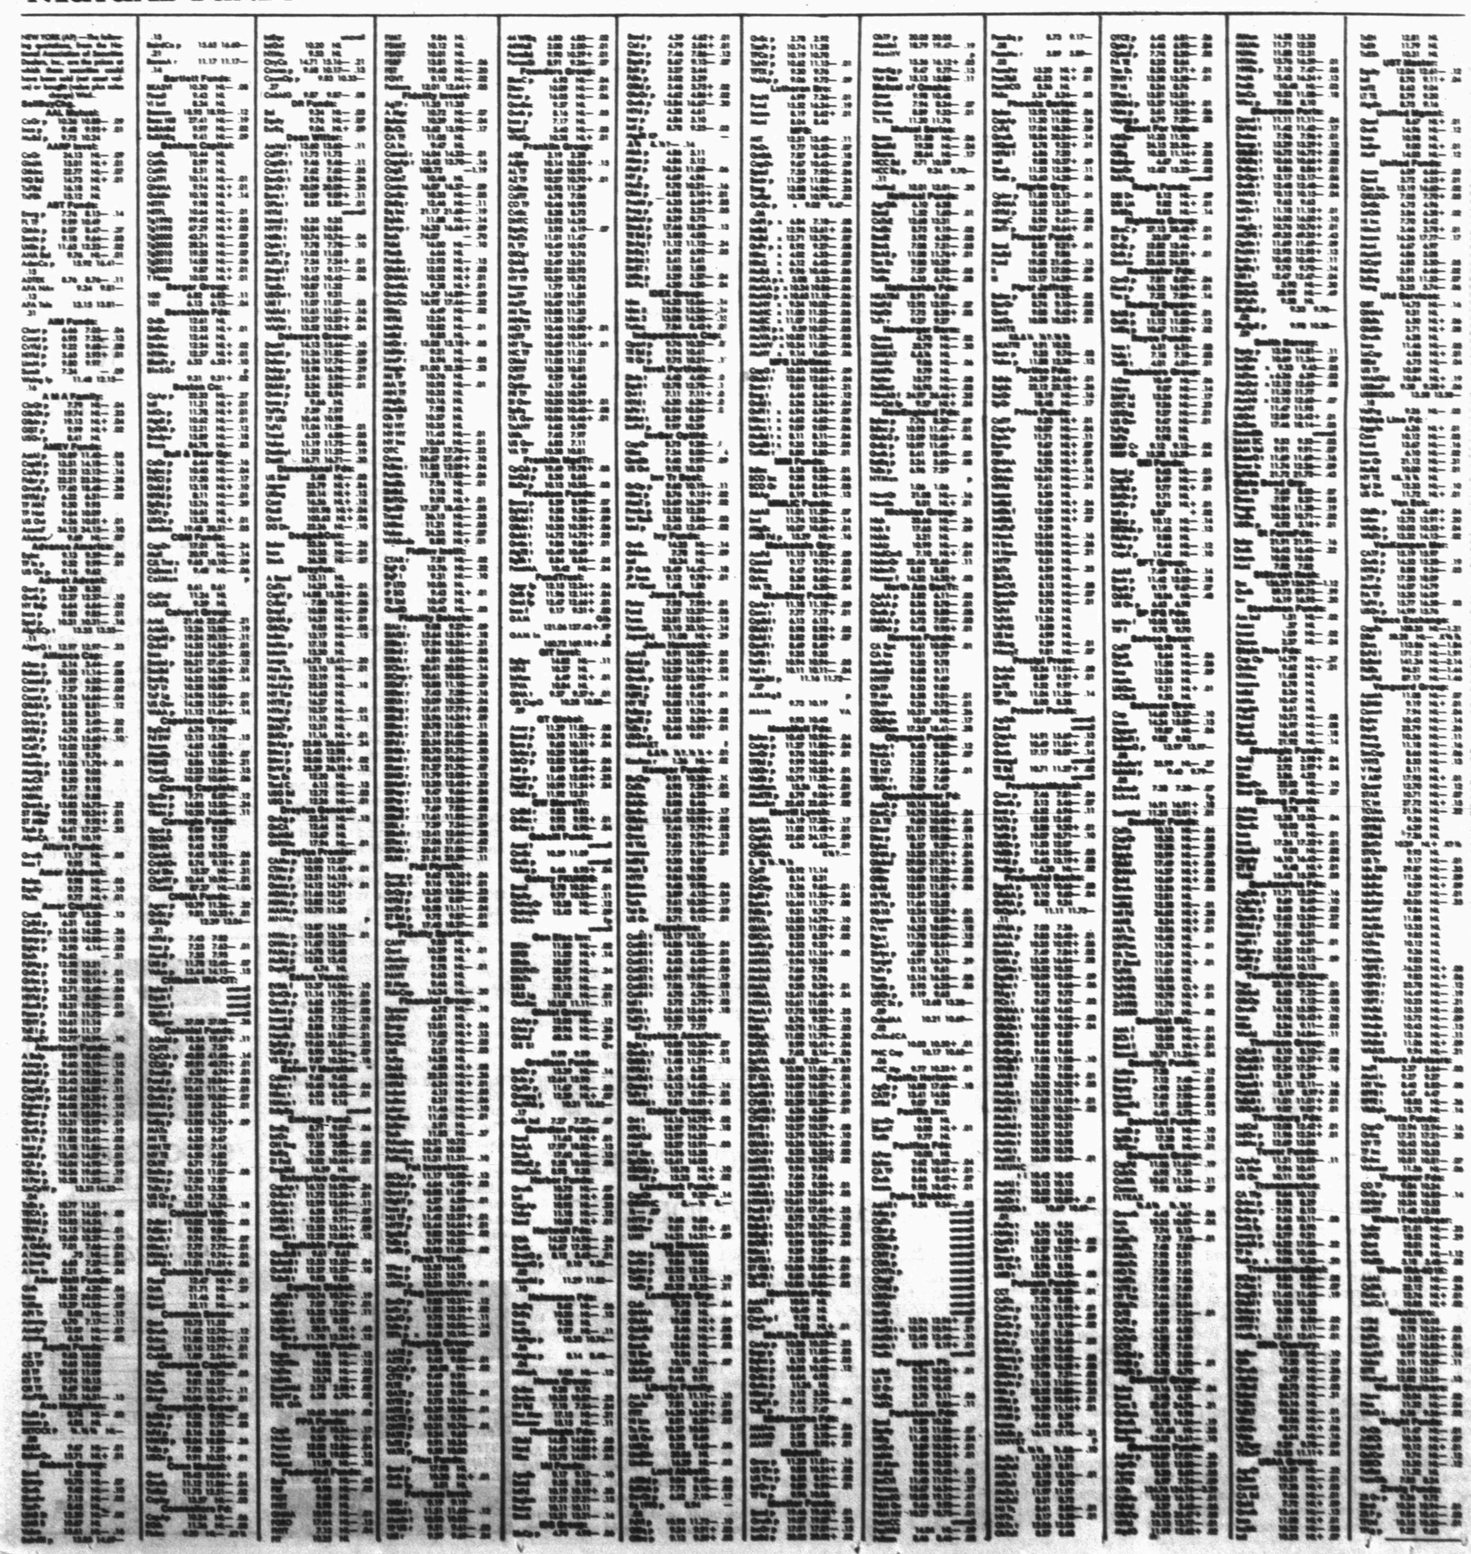

But analysts said traders remained cautious about chances for any major progress in shrinking the federal deficit, especially given the recession fears that have swept the financial world of late.

Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve, offered a bit of reassurance on that score today, saying the budget plan held out the prospect of "what appears to be a credible, enforcable reduction in the budget deficit."

Among the blue chips, Boeing rose ¾ to 43⅜; International Business Machines gained ¼ to 108½; General Electric slipped ⅛ to 55⅝, and Eastman Kodak lost ¾ to 37¼.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed stocks dropped .20 to 172.39. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .22 at 309.85.

TAX: Merchants brace for rush before tax begins

champagne or a pair of sapphire earrings on their tab for the holidays, before the tax takes effect.

The 10 percent luxury tax, part of a $500 billion deficit-reduction agreement unveiled Sunday, would apply to the portion of the price of some luxury items over certain thresholds.

For example, a $6,000 fur — priced $1,000 above the $5,000 tax threshold — would cost $6,100, if the taxes are approved by Congress. Cars would be taxed at 10 percent of the amount above $30,000. The threshold for jewelry would be $5,000.

"If you can afford to pay $30,000 for a car, you sure can afford to pay a few hundred dollars more," said Terri Jung of Austin as she left a Neiman-Marcus store.

"My first answer as a luxury car dealer is, maybe it isn't fair," said Todd Meier, president of Rodger Meier Cadillac, where $55,000 cars are sold from a chandelier-lit showroom. "But overall, as a citizen, I think it makes sense to tax people who theoretically can afford it."

Meier said virtually all of the more than 2,000 new Cadillacs he sells each year would be affected by the tax.

Highland Park, home of the billionaire Hunt brothers and tycoon T. Boone Pickens, sits squarely in the middle of Dallas, a separate world where nannies wheel their charges along streets lined with Mercedes-Benzes, Cadillacs and BMWs.

Highland Park shopper Billy McCarthy said the luxury tax was unjust. "It'll just be going for the wealthy," he said. "We're overtaxed as it is."

FOOD: Speed, ease dominate development

(From 1C)

Add peanut butter to the base and it becomes filling for a peanut butter pie. Add fruit and it becomes a chiffon dessert. With a little chocolate it becomes a delicious mousse.

Pioneer Flour Mills of San Antonio offers a pre-seasoned country gravy mix that requires only boiling water. "You can make a cup or a gallon," says the lady in the booth. "It's great for chicken fried steaks and biscuits."

The foods also get a little fancier. There were also filet mignon, specially trimmed, marinated and wrapped — ready for the charcoal, and plump shrimp battered and ready for the fryer at 30 cents a piece.

Exhibitors spoke to restaurant owners about cost per units and price per ounce and the words were not lost.

"There are a lot of new concepts and innovations in prepared foods today," said Brown, that make it easier on the restaurant owner to get meals out faster.

Brown expects 750 from San Angelo, Midland, Odessa and as far away as Sonora and Ozona to attend the show. Two shuttle buses are being used to transport attendees from San Angelo and Odessa.

Asset management accounts convenient

By Bill Doyle

Q. I have heard a lot about an "asset management account." This is supposed to be a way to get compound interest daily, as a means of earning more than is available on money market accounts and certificates of deposit.

I wrote to one brokerage firm for information about such accounts. They charge a $12 minimum fee. How would that save money?

Doyle

A. It probably wouldn't. But it is lower than the fees most brokerage firms levy on their asset management accounts — typically $50 to $100 annually.

Besides that, many brokerages lay on an additional fee when the size of the account drops below a certain level, which varies from $5,000 to $50,000 from firm to firm. And some firms charge still another fee unless there is certain activity in the account, such as the purchase and sale of stocks and bonds — resulting in brokerage commissions.

An asset management account provides a good deal of convenience, but it does not necessary save money.

It's an "all-in-one" account, combining a brokerage account, a money market account, a checking account, a credit line and a charge card — for which the customer receives one monthly statement.

The angle you heard about, no doubt, referred to the fact that all money in the account is automatically "swept" into a money market account to earn more interest. That spare cash doesn't sit around idle, earning nothing.

That's great, if the sweeping — all accomplished by computer — is done daily. Some asset management accounts sweep the money into money market accounts weekly or monthly. And some don't do it until there is a certain amount of cash, such as $1,000, involved.

These and other points should be checked out before deciding whether or not to open an asset management account. You'll learn that type of account is suitable for you only if you are financially well off and are fairly active in buying and selling securities.

Q. I opened an asset management account with a big brokerage firm and started using the credit card that came with it. The first monthly statement arrived yesterday and it is a shocker. I was horrified to see that every purchase I made with the credit card was deducted from my asset management account within a matter of days — some the very same day.

The statements from my other credit cards list all the purchases I made in the month. I pay the total by the date due, thus avoiding interest charges. And I don't have to pay for purchases immediately.

Is the asset management account card some new kind of credit card?

A. It's not a credit card. It's a debit card, through which you pay for a purchase as soon as the information about that purchase reaches your account. At that point, your account is "debited" for the amount of the purchase, which is deducted from your account.

A credit card, on the other hand, normally allows you 30 to 45 days to pay, before interest charges start. A credit card is a much better deal than a debit card for sensible people such as you, who pay their bills on time.

Most asset management accounts provide only debit cards, but some give customers the choice of credit or debit cards. If yours doesn't, I'm sure you will put that debit card away and go back to using your old reliable credit card.

BURNS: Government has money fund choices

best to make this a great year for the mutual fund industry...

What are some funds and how can you invest?

To explore the universe of 600 money market funds you can buy Donoghue's Money Fund Directory for $18 by calling 508-429-2452. This provides a 10 year yield history and other data on each fund. Check your local library and remember that these funds include tax-free funds and general money market funds that do not invest in U.S. government securities.

Income and Safety, "The Consumer's Guide to High Yields," is a newsletter published by the Institute for Econometric Research in Florida. You can subscribe for $100 a year or buy a single issue for $10. This newsletter ranks money market funds of all kinds plus longer term bond funds of all kinds. Call 1-800-327-6720.

Here are some specific funds:

Vanguard money market funds appear regularly in the top yielding funds listed in Donoghue's Moneyletter. They also are well rated by Income and Safety. The Vanguard Federal Money Market fund has a current yield of about 8.0 percent.

Like all Vanguard funds, it has a very low expense ratio (0.33 percent) which means more of the yield comes to you. The average expense ratio (the cost of operating the fund as a percent of assets managed) for ALL Vanguard funds was 0.36 percent in 1989. The average mutual fund has an expense ratio of 1.09 percent.

The minimum investment in this fund is $3,000 with minimum additional investments of $100 and minimum checks of $250. To get more information and a prospectus, call 1-800-662-7447.

Vanguard also has a short term government bond portfolio that invests in short term government obligations. This allows investors greater stability of income than money market funds.

Fidelity Investments government funds also appear regularly among the top yielding money market funds. Their Fidelity Spartan U.S. Government MMF recently offered a yield of 8.46 percent. One reason the return is so high is that the fund manager is absorbing part of the funds expenses. This fund requires an initial investment of at least $20,000. The Fidelity U.S. Government Reserves fund provides a lower yield, 7.7 percent, but requires a smaller initial investment, $2,500.

Their Spartan Limited Maturity Government fund, like Vanguard's short term fund, provides greater stability of income with limited risk to market value. It currently has an average maturity of 2 years and is providing a yield of 7.86 percent after an expense ratio of 0.80 percent. You can get information on Fidelity funds by calling 800-544-8888.

Dupree signs

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Marcus Dupree, one of pro football's most promising young runners before a knee injury seemingly ended his career in 1985, signed Wednesday with the Los Angeles Rams.

Dupree, 26, has not played in five years, and Rams coach John Robinson admitted he does not know what to expect of the former USFL player.

"It's new ground for us," Robinson said. "It's a longshot, I guess. You're talking about a guy who has the talent to be a great player.

"We'll continue to evaluate his return. ... Obviously, being away from football for five years, it will take a period of adjustment for him to get his skills back."

Robinson said Dupree will be on the regular roster rather than the practice squad but definitely won't play Sunday, when the Rams play host to the Cincinnati Bengals.

District 4-5A committee to meet again

■ As the University Interscholastic League looks at more possible violations by Odessa Permian, Odessa High comes under the allegation gun.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

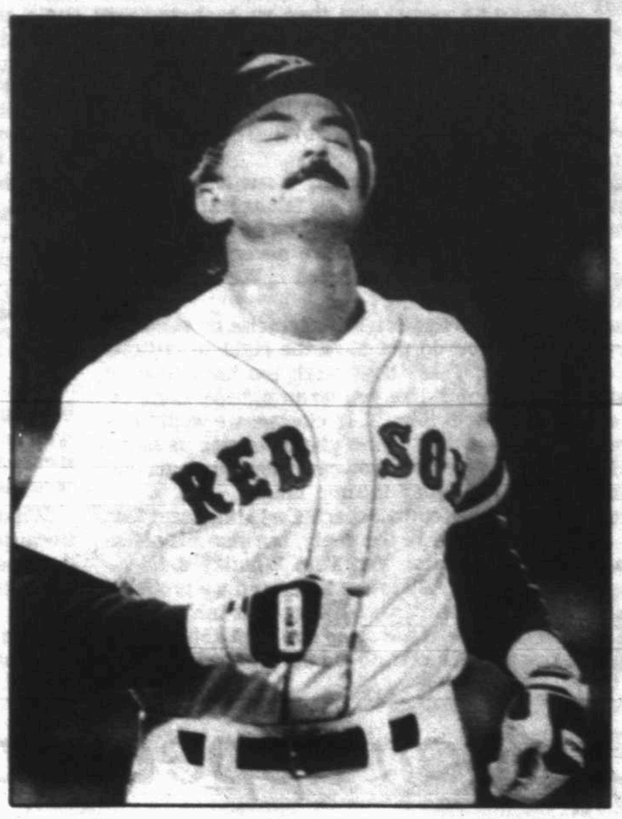

ODESSA — District 4-5A football already has a large cleaning bill to pay, but it appears more dirty laundry is on the way.

Gene Buinger, superintendent of the Ector County Independent School District, said Wednesday that he plans to call another meeting of the District 4-5A Executive Committee within the next month to discuss new allegations against the football program of Odessa High and "possibly Odessa Permian."

Sox win AL East, finally

Associated Press

BOSTON — At 10:36 p.m., Boston right fielder Tom Brunansky made a spectacular catch for the final out.

And after 162 games, the Boston Red Sox finally were champions of the American League East for the third time in five years.

Brunansky's sliding catch at the wall near the right-field foul pole robbed Chicago's Ozzie Guillen of a game-tying extra-base hit and nailed down a dramatic 3-1 victory over the White Sox on Wednesday night.

As two runners rounded the bases, the Red Sox players stood like statues for several seconds before they knew for sure that Brunansky had caught the ball.

"It was a fantastic catch," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "From the dugout, I could just see the ball hit his

Illnesses don't sideline Johnston

■ Twelve-year-old Clay Johnston fights diabetes, asthma and a heart condition to excel on the playing fields of Midland.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Every morning Clay Johnston stares in the face a reality seldom thrust upon 12-year-olds.

Johnston, a standout athlete in baseball and track, begins his day by taking the first of two daily insulin injections to treat his diabetes. He then makes sure he takes his asthma medication. Finally, he considers the on-court collapse and death of Loyola-Marymount basketball star Hank Gathers, and wonders if a faulty valve in his heart will someday force him to the sidelines forever.

"Hank Gathers had a heart problem and he didn't take care of it, and you see what happened to him. At the time I wasn't really concerned with my heart problem because I really didn't realize how serious it was. Now I think twice," Johnston said of the valve in his heart the does not completely close.

However, until the day comes when doctors tell him to become a spectator, Johnston will continue to run the 100-meter dash and pursue his dream of becoming a major league baseball player.

If he is able to keep playing, Johnston's success in the past few months may be a harbinger of things to come. He served as the star pitcher for the Midland Mid City Angels and Mid City all-star baseball teams this summer. The Mid City all-stars advanced to the state Little League tournament in Waco before eventually being eliminated.

Then Johnston posted the fastest 11- and 12-year-old qualifying time in the nation in the 100 meters at the ARCO/Jesse Owens regional track meet in Dallas June 21. After running a 12.43 100 in Dallas, he advanced to the national meet Aug. 10 in Los Angeles, where he ran a 12.9 — not near his qualifying time but still good enough for the gold medal in his age group.

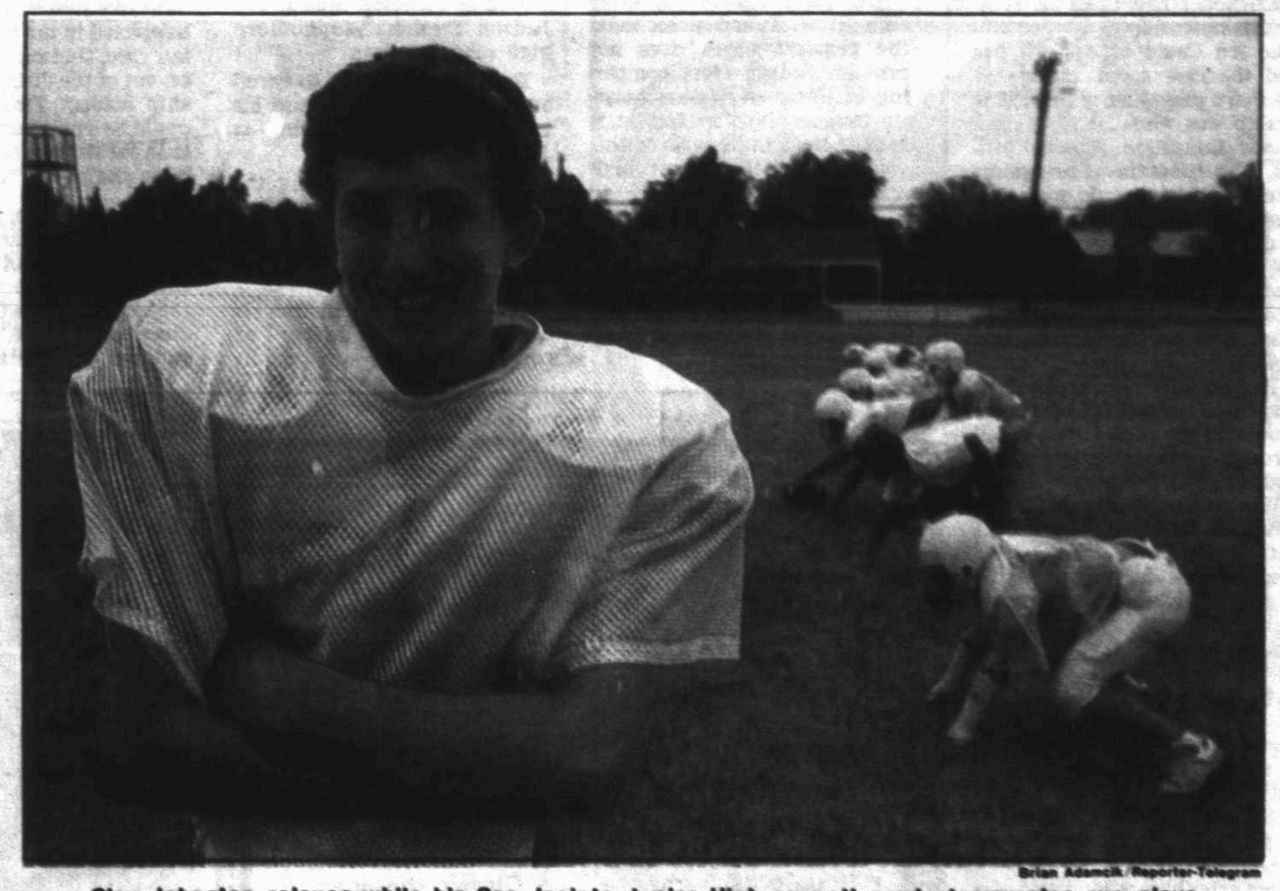

Now Johnston, a straight-A student who was involved in the Gifted Education Midland program last year, is used sparingly on the San Jacinto Junior High seventh-grade football team, mostly as a kicking specialist. Doctors orders have kept him from seeing much action on the gridiron, a situation SJHS coach Joe Golding appreciates.

"We have to be real careful about how we use Clay because of his heart. But he's a tremendous athlete and great kid," Golding said.

"I take precautions when I play, but I'm not going to worry the whole game about getting hurt. That's usually when you get hurt, when you start worrying about it," Johnston said.

JOHNSTON'S PARENTS, Byron and Jan, have their reservations about their son's involvement in athletics with his condition. Clay has suffered an asthma attack during a baseball game, and his heart malfunction is an ever-present concern. When his diabetes was diagnosed a year ago, it only compounded matters.

After all, it's only a football game

To paraphrase former professional football player and current television commentator Todd Christensen, it is OK for sports fans (derived from the word fanatic) to feel emotional while rooting for their respective teams and favorite players to win ball games — but when that emotion turns from excitement to a vile hatred, something is wrong.

Price

Christensen was addressing the turn of events at the Los Angeles Coliseum during an NFL game featuring the Pittsburgh Steelers and Los Angeles Raiders. A Pittsburgh fan was good-naturedly roaming the stands, pronouncing his allegiance to his team via a Steeler logo-emblazoned T-shirt and a big mouth. He was subsequently attacked by the Raider-partisan crowd and critically injured.

ON THE surface, that particular incident is not indicative of the high school football flap in Odessa these past few months.

After Odessa High coach Jerry Taylor turned Odessa Permian in for infractions of the University Interscholastic League code, Permian was found guilty, put on probation and booted from the 1990 playoffs.

Last Friday when the two teams played each other, the teenage players showed nothing but class in a clean but hard-hitting 24-6 Permian win. Each side had ample opportunity to land a low blow here or there, but opted to take the road to sportsmanship. However, that may not be the case with the prep football fans in Odessa.

PERMIAN COACHES Tam Hollingshead and Myron Schneider, who were suspended for two games by the UIL, have filed a suit against the governing body of Texas high school athletics and are seeking Permian's reinstatement into the playoffs. The Ector County Independent School District meets today to decide if it wants to join in on the legal battle.

Tuesday, more allegations were brought against Permian for recruiting students possibly living within OHS boundaries, while an Odessa attorney and proud Mojo booster released accusations against the Broncho football program.

WHILE ALL this intra-city bickering is going on, the casual fans stand back and wonder what effect it has on the players, those who have worked so long and hard only to see adults take a simple game like football and make it something that belongs in a court of law.

Christensen's main point as he made a commentary this week during a television show was that football fans who live vicariously through the achievements of others are walking a dangerous tight rope. When a fan allows himself to inflict serious injury, physical or mental, on other fans or athletes, maybe it's time for that fan to look deep inside himself.

The outcome of a football game carries no connotation of a fan's self-worth, even though it is nice to cheer for a winner. But when tens of thousands of dollars are spent to keep 17-year-olds playing football for two extra months, or people are mauled in the stands because of their allegiance to a chosen team, changes are needed.

In the great scheme of things football's value is minuscule if not nonexistent. That's the whole point — it's only football.

Fan, Lee coaches trade barbs

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Self-proclaimed Midland Lee football fan Tom Eustace decided to give some coaching aid to the Rebel coaching staff following the game with Amarillo Palo Duro with his own scouting report.

Eustace mailed his report to the Lee coaching staff. The letter contained what he felt were some general weaknesses and strengths of the team. He singled out one player in particular who was "going half-speed."

Eustace, who previously played football at Archer City and Austin College and is now a certified public accountant, enclosed a picture of himself making a tackle to show the Lee coaches, "that this wasn't someone who had no football experience." He also used the picture to illustrate a form tackle.

The letter from Eustace also included diagrams of three plays for "short yardage," "big gainer" and "sure shot long yardage pass play."

What Eustace didn't expect was the reply he got from the Lee staff.

"I was shocked at the reply I got," said Eustace. "I couldn't see why my letter would foster that kind of reply. I really didn't expect any kind of reply. My approach was to send in a scouting report and then sit back and see what happens on the field. They seemed to focus on the negative like they have a chip on their shoulders."

The letter to Eustace had no signature, but was ended with "Good bye!! The Lee Rebel Football Staff."

In part the letter read, "Your letter was so utterly ridiculous that we felt as if it would be in our best interest to tell you how big an idiot you really are ... We have never even seen a defense like you portrayed ... We laughed until we cried!!

"You have the right to criticize us as coaches, but you do not have the right to criticize our kids. These boys work too hard to have some 'genius' like you writing disparaging remarks about them ... In closing, we would like to tell you that when you have won as many games as we have, you can coach our team and we will do your income tax."

Lee head football coach Earl Miller said that he did not write the reply, but that his offensive coordinator Van Tom Whatley did.

"I didn't reply to the letter and we probably shouldn't have," said Miller, "but this guy is a real nut. He is the same one who kept yelling at us to pull a certain kid during the Palo Duro game. That really angered Van Tom and that was the reason he responded to the letter.

"What he (Eustace) needs to do is apply for this job when it's open. He's got the biggest ego of any man I've ever seen. I mean he sends us a picture of him making a tackle.

"I always heard that when you coach you will make 10 percent of the people unhappy. Well, I've made about 130 percent mad. I guess that other 30 percent is on the second time around."

But the reply won't keep Eustace from getting in his say.

"I plan on giving Coach Miller some more since we've got this thing going, but it deals more with coaching philosophy," said Eustace. "I just had the feeling that the team wasn't playing up to potential. In a 5A school, you hate to see 10 kids giving it their all and one that's not. That's coaching.

"There is no doubt Palo Duro has great talent, but I see the potential of Lee not doing as well as it can. I felt I saw some glaring weaknesses and felt they were coaching weaknesses."

Whatley said, "We felt a reply was needed because we don't want an accountant running down our kids. They work too hard for that. Everything he (Eustace) said, we do and we've won a lot of games without his help. We're human and make mistakes, but with 20 years of experience."

Carter title stands

Associated Press

DALLAS — Reaction Wednesday was mixed to an appeal's court decision to dismiss a challenge by state officials against Dallas Carter High School's 1988 Class 5A Football Championship.

The 3rd Court of Appeals has ruled the case moot, citing the time that's passed since the championship was won.

Texas Education Agency officials, who filed the case against Carter, said they would study the ruling but were not upset about the dismissal.

"We don't care that much and never did, although Carter thinks we took it personally," said Kevin O'Hanlon, a lawyer representing the TEA.

O'Hanlon said new procedures for such circumstances also were included in the school reform bill approved by the Legislature last summer.

DISD Athletic Director John Kincaid said the district and TEA went to court over what he believed became an athletic issue but really addressed administrative authority.

"In my opinion, I'm not sure that the actual issue was resolved by the case (dismissal)," Kincaid said.

Clarence Russeau, a DISD staffing specialist who was Carter High's principal in 1988, agreed with Kincaid. "It never was a football issue. It was an educational issue.

The Carter case was viewed as a dramatic example of what the Texas Education Agency and University Interscholastic League perceived as a problem with the no-pass, no-play law.

Under that law, a student must pass all classes to be eligible for extracurricular activities, such as sports, band or other UIL competition. It is considered a key element of educational reform in Texas' public schools.

In the Carter case, the school was temporarily forced out of the football playoffs on a ruling by Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby that Carter had violated the no-pass, no-play law by changing a grade for backfield star Gary Edwards from failing to passing.

Dye leaves hospital

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Auburn University coach Pat Dye left the hospital and returned to practice on Wednesday promising to develop better eating habits and avoid the stomach distress that has hit him twice this year.

Dye, who entered the hospital Sunday night, was diagnosed as having a pre-uclerous condition in his digestive track. He said in a Southeastern Conference telephone conference call with reporters Wednesday that tests are still being conducted to determine the best medicine for him.

"I'm still under surveillance, I guess you would say," the 50-year-old Auburn coach commented.

He said he suffered a similar stomach problem in the spring, but it cleared up when he took medication. "I didn't actually get to the point of throwing up blood, but I knew I was bleeding internally," he said.

Asked if he expects the problem will continue to bother him, he replied, "I don't think it's going to be a reoccurring problem because I'm going to take care of myself."

Judson appeals probation

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Judson High School will appeal a ruling placing its top 10 football team on a year's probation for allegedly recruiting an incoming freshman athlete, district officials said.

"We never attempted to recruit the student in question, and we have never attempted to recruit any student from any school," said Judson Athletic Director Frank Arnold.

The District 25-5A executive committee Tuesday assessed the penalty, which does not prohibit Judson from competing in University Interscholastic League playoffs. Judson is ranked No. 9 in Class 5A in this week's Associated Press high school football poll.

Arnold said a review of the case by the UIL state executive committee or a civil court "will produce drastically different conclusions, and we are prepared to pursue the appeals processes."

The committee ruled the student, Jarod Douglas, would be suspended from all varsity athletics for two years.

"This is very unfair," said Douglas, 15. "I don't know why they are doing this to me."

Lehnoff claimed Judson recruited the football player just before the season started when Douglas' mother, Carol, was employed as a clerical aide at the Judson freshman-sophomore high school campus.

Douglas was allowed to enroll at the high school because his mother would be working at Judson.

In addition to ordering the suspension and prohibiting Douglas from competing for two years, the District 25 executive committee also ruled:

—That the Judson district receive a public letter of reprimand.

—That an unnamed junior high school assistant coach, who was involved in the recruitment, be referred to the UIL state executive committee and issued "greater than a private reprimand."

Bill Fish, executive committee chairman, said that if Judson's football program were to commit a similar recruiting offense it could be ineligible for the playoffs.

"If there was another incident like this, sort of like what happened in the (Odessa) Permian case, (Judson) could be taken out of the district championship status," Fish said. "That could be a possibility, and something this committee would have the power to do."

Two weeks ago, the UIL state committee declared Permian ineligible for football playoffs this season. The panel found that Permian, the Class 5A state champion in 1989, had violated summer practice rules.

Wyche claims he tried to follow policy

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Sam Wyche, saying he was trying to comply with a league directive when he barred a woman from the Cincinnati Bengals' locker room, will keep his players in uniform for 20 minutes after this week's game to adhere to league policy.

While reiterating his belief that players shouldn't be interviewed in the nude by women, Wyche said Wednesday he would go out of his way to ensure that female reporters will have equal access to his players.

The Bengals coach has been threatened with a steep fine by commissioner Paul Tagliabue for banning Denise Tom of USA Today from the locker room after Monday night's 31-16 loss in Seattle. But Wyche said Wednesday he has yet to hear from the commissioner and Tagliabue's office said it was unlikely there would be a ruling until later this week.

Wyche, speaking by conference call from Renton, Wash., where the Bengals are training, said that, in fact, it was a directive from Tagliabue following incidents of alleged sexual harassment of Boston Herald reporter Lisa Olson by several New England Patriots that led to Monday's incident.

"We got a letter from the commissioner in light of what happened in New England that said everyone had to have equal access," Wyche said. "After we got this letter, I went to our players and said 'what do you want to do?' "

He said he offered them four ideas — to put up a partition beyond which no reporter could go; to keep them in uniform; to keep them on the field for interviews; or keep women outside but make any player the reporter wanted available. He said in view of the configuration of the locker room at the Kingdome, putting up a partition seemed impractical. Wyche added that they chose the alternative of talking to women outside the locker room.

"I handled it personally," he said of the dealings with Tom. "She said she wanted Boomer Esiason and she got him with a personal escort from the head coach. I don't think anyone else has gotten that.

"I didn't even think it was an incident until I started getting calls after the game."

For this week's game with the Los Angeles Rams, Wyche said:

"We'll resort to Plan B. We'll keep our players dressed for 20 minutes and then we'll ask everyone to leave. Then, once they get dressed, we'll let people back in if they want anything else. We won't blow a whistle or a horn or anything, and we'll try to cooperate and give everything they need."

This isn't the first time Wyche has had run-ins with league policy. Last year, he was fined $3,000 when he closed the locker room after a loss to Seattle in Cincinnati. Two years ago, he was fined by then-commissioner Pete Rozelle after knocking a microphone from a broadcast reporter's hand.

In 1983, when he was coaching at Indiana University, Wyche allegedly kept a female writer from the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette out of the team's locker room.

Fielder finishes with 51 homers

Associated Press

Cecil Fielder completed a startling season in stunning fashion Wednesday night, homering for the 50th and 51st times this year as the Detroit Tigers beat the New York Yankees 10-3.

Fielder, who returned to the major leagues this year after a season in Japan, waited until the last game of the year to become the first American Leaguer since 1961 to hit 50 home runs. After walking and lining out, he lofted a 2-1 fastball from Steve Adkins off the third deck in left field for No. 50 in the fourth inning.

The last major leaguer to accomplish the 50 feat was George Foster, who hit 52 for the Cincinnati Reds in 1977.

Orioles 3, Blue Jays 2

Five minutes after the Toronto Blue Jays learned they had been eliminated from the American League East pennant race, they lost to the Baltimore Orioles 3-2 on Mickey Tettleton's home run with two out in the ninth inning.

The Blue Jays needed to win while first-place Boston lost to Chicago in order to force a one-game playoff. But the Red Sox' 3-1 victory over the White Sox ended shortly before Tettleton hit his 15th home run of the season off Toronto relief ace Tom Henke (2-4).

Angels 11, Athletics 6

Willie McGee won his second National League batting title while Rickey Henderson failed to win the American League crown as the AL West champion Oakland Athletics lost to the California Angels 11-6 Wednesday.

John Orton and Max Venable drove in two runs apiece in a seven-run fourth inning as Oakland finished with a 103-59 record and its third consecutive division title.

American

Indians 5, Royals 2

George Brett became the first player to win batting titles in three different decades, holding off Rickey Henderson on the last day of the season.

Brett did not start for Kansas City in the final game, but entered as a pinch hitter in the fifth inning and had a sacrifice fly. He singled in his next at-bat, raising his average to .329.

Brewers 6, Rangers 3

Mike Felder's triple drove in the go-ahead run during a three-run seventh inning and the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Texas Rangers in the season finale to secure Teddy Higuera's sixth straight winning campaign.

Twins 7, Mariners 4

Randy Johnson hit Minnesota's Junior Ortiz with a pitch to score the go-ahead run as the Seattle Mariners failed to tie a club record for victories.

Division champs lose finales

Associated Press

Ken Caminiti tripled home the winning run in the top of the ninth inning as the Houston Astros beat Cincinnati 3-2 to leave the Reds with a losing second-half record.

The National League West champions fell below .500 for the second half. The Reds were 91-71 overall, but 41-42 since the All-Star break and 58-59 since June 4.

Mets 6, Pirates 3

Frank Viola became the 18th pitcher in history to win 20 games in each major league, and Pat Tabler had three RBIs as the New York Mets ended the season with a 6-3 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Viola (20-12) was 24-7 with the Minnesota Twins in 1988 en route to the American League Cy Young Award. He is the 10th pitcher since 1900 to win 20 in each league and the second in Mets history.

National

Giants 6, Braves 3

Matt Williams became the third Giant in as many seasons to win the National League RBI title and Bill Bathe's first career triple proved decisive as San Francisco beat the Atlanta Braves.

Expos 9, Cardinals 2

Spike Owen and Nelson Santovenia hit run-scoring triples to highlight a seven-run seventh inning as the Montreal Expos closed the season by handing the St. Louis Cardinals their seventh straight loss.

Cubs 4, Phillies 3

Greg Maddux won his 15th game and singled in a run as the Chicago Cubs defeated Philadelphia, tying the Phillies for fourth place in the National League East.

Both teams finished with 77-85 records.

AL EAST: Clemens to start

glove. I couldn't tell whether he made the catch. Then we saw the guys on the field leap and start celebrating."

The catch clinched the division title for the Red Sox, who finished the season 88-74, two games ahead of Toronto. Baltimore's 3-2 victory over the Blue Jays a few minutes later was not needed.

"I know the way Ozzie likes to hit and thought he might try to turn on the pitch," Brunansky said. "It hit me right in the pocket.

"When I had the ball and hit the ground, I locked in on it. When you leave your feet, you never know. If you hit the ground hard, the ball might pop out."

Third baseman Wade Boggs said the play typified Boston's gritty season in which the Red Sox blew a 6½-game lead in September and trailed by 1½ games early last week.

"That is what separates us from a lot of teams," Boggs said. "This team has heart and desire that I've never seen before."

Mike Boddicker pitched seven strong innings and relief ace Jeff Reardon protected the two-run lead thanks to Brunansky's catch.

With ace Roger Clemens sent ahead to Toronto to rest for a possible divisional playoff on Thursday, the Red Sox made it academic as they won for the sixth time in the last eight games.

Instead of pitching in the Sky-Dome on Thursday, Clemens (21-6) will face Oakland's Dave Stewart (22-11) in the opener of the best-of-7 AL playoffs Saturday night at Fenway Park.

Boddicker (17-8) scattered five hits in seven innings and Reardon gave up two hits in two innings for his 21st save. Boddicker struck out four and walked three and is 6-0 in his last nine starts.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Funds will become available for a pet project next month, but the source may be somewhat unusual. Romance looks happier as the winter holidays approach. Although marital ups and downs are possible, a tender, loving attitude will produce excellent results. Consider a short second honeymoon after the New Year. New insight into your associates' motives helps you attain a long-sought goal next April. July is the best time for a summer vacation.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: President Rutherford B. Hayes, actors Clifton Davis and Charlton Heston, actress Susan Sarandon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Discipline and continuity are vital now. You will accomplish more by not relying on outside help. Be supportive of your mate or partner. Let others know exactly what is expected of them.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be careful not to alienate your work associates today. Do not let petty irritations escalate into major blowups. Project humility and you will encourage someone to give you valuable tips.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A change in personnel may come as a surprise. Be sure to display plenty of team spirit! Focus on projects you can handle on your own later in the day. Romance beckons from afar.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could hear something to your advantage this morning. New developments at the office work to your benefit. Play host to an unexpected visitor. Give offspring more supervision.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may be doing some financial dickering today. Avoid pie-in-the-sky propositions. Socializing with people from different walks of life gives you valuable information. Use it wisely.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Other people may try to throw their weight around. You do the opposite. Double-check business details to avoid making expensive mistakes. Your love life takes on extra sparkle.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep cool in the face of minor irritations and avoid making irrevocable decisions. Donate no-longer-needed items to charity for a tax deduction. You finally reach someone who has been elusive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Heed the need to cooperate. Be willing to bend a little to avert a major hassle. Go the second mile for someone who is young or inexperienced. Pay bills before indulging in further spending.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Charity begins at home. Postpone making a new financial commitment. Fund-raising is part of the picture. Play your cards close to your chest. Romance looks especially exciting for singles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make certain you know which way the wind is blowing. Do your homework thoroughly before making a presentation to those in authority. A good evening for catching up on things at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep an eye on your long-term career goals. You have several attractive options. Hit the books this afternoon, digging for valuable facts and figures. Let family members know what you plan.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your keen business sense could result in your winning a decision today! Try handling certain matters by mail instead of face-to-face. A newcomer offers a compliment.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are highly selective when making friends and will keep them for life. Idealistic and hardworking, these Libras expect their relatives and associates to share their same values. Generally, these children will let their heads rule their hearts. They are capable of great sacrifice and make dependable, valued employees.

Opening lead: Ten of ♣

Can you remember how good a player you were two years after taking up the game? Our experience borders on acute embarrassment. The second-youngest player at the European Junior Championship was 20-year-old David Fohrer of Israel, who learned the game in 1988. We are impressed with how Fohrer, as declarer, handled this hand as declarer from the Israel-Turkey encounter.

The auction was routine—if you consider North's hand to be worth a vulnerable opening bid. However, if North passes and South opens, the same contract is likely to result.

West's club lead was taken by the ace and a club was ruffed in hand. The jack of hearts lost to West's ace and the club return was ruffed. Declarer took a winning diamond finesse, cashed the ace and exited with a diamond to West's king. This was now the position:

NORTH

SOUTH

West chose to exit with the eight of diamonds. Declarer ruffed in hand as East discarded a club, then drew the remaining trumps. Since West had shown up with the king of diamonds and a singleton ace of hearts, declarer decided that East was more likely to hold the king of spades. So South continued with a low spade and, when West followed low, dummy's nine was inserted. East won the ten and returned a low spade, but declarer ran it to the queen and a contract that was defeated one trick in the other room sailed home.

Highest bidder can have 'Breakfast at Tiffany's'

NEW YORK (AP) — "Breakfast at Tiffany's" with Audrey Hepburn was a hit movie in 1961, but these days the meal can be had for the high bid at a celebrity auction.

Hepburn

For the right price, a buyer can enjoy breakfast with Miss Hepburn at the tony Manhattan store. All proceeds will benefit the Manhattan Center for the Living, a non-profit group that assists people with life-threatening illnesses.

"They very sweetly contacted me and asked if I would help," Miss Hepburn said this week of the auction. "It was so easy to accept. I don't have to do anything but come up here and have breakfast."

The event is billed as a "Celebrity Fantasy Auction," and other big names are joining Miss Hepburn. Bidders can also buy lunch with actress Candice Bergen, drinks with NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw or a night at Shea Stadium with Susan Sarandon and Tim Robbins, co-stars of the baseball film "Bull Durham."

The auction will take place March 4 at the Manhattan Center for the Living.

NEW YORK (AP) — "Shogun, The Musical" is getting a new leading man.

Philip Casnoff, last seen on Broadway as the American grand master in "Chess," will play the role of English sea captain John Blackthorne when the musical begins previews at the Marquis Theater on Nov. 1.

Casnoff replaces Peter Karrie who opened in the show at Washington's Kennedy Center last month. Karrie, who has starred in the London productions of "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Les Miserables," will continue playing the role for the rest of the Washington engagement, which ends Saturday.

"It was an amicable parting," Sam Rudy, a spokesman for "Shogun," said Wednesday. "The fact that Peter is going to finish the Washington run is the best indication of that." He didn't say specifically why Karrie was leaving.

The lavish musical, based on James Clavell's epic novel of 17th century Japan, opens in New York on Nov. 15.

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. (AP) — George Lindsey, who played gas station attendant Goober on "The Andy Griffith Show," says fans thought of the actors as good friends.

"I don't think the people who watched the show ever thought of any of the cast as actors," he said. "I think they thought of us as their good friends."

The show premiered 30 years ago Wednesday, on Oct. 3, 1960.

Lindsey is amazed that viewers still think the show's reruns are just as funny as the original episodes were in the 1960s.

Viewers long for the simple life in Mayberry, loosely based on Griffith's hometown of Mount Airy, N.C., he said.

"I think that at some point, everyone wishes their life could be as fun and carefree as Andy of Mayberry's," Lindsey said. "Like any small town, people don't appreciate its simplicity and peacefulness until years down the road."

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Singer Bobby Vinton, best-known for his 1960s song "Blue Velvet," enjoyed renewed popularity in the late 1980s with release of the quirky David Lynch movie named after the song.

Now, in the 1990s, the song "Blue Velvet" is being used overseas in commercials promoting Nivea skin cream, which is actually white but comes in a blue plastic bottle.

The movie "Blue Velvet" was immensely popular in Great Britain, elevating the popularity of the song. Now, with the 30-second Nivea commercials, it has landed in the No. 3 spot on that country's pop music chart.

"This is something I really can't comprehend. It is really something. It's just one of those songs," Vinton said Wednesday at his ranch here. "It was released over there in 1964 and it went into the top 10."

Now, 27 years later, the commercials have caught the imagination of teen-agers in Europe and it's back on the music charts.

"There is a cult of teen-agers who drive around in 1950s cars and listen to Bobby Vinton music. I'm so wholesome and all American — a real squeaky clean image, I have a tough time in America," Vinton said.

The singer has re-recorded many of his hits for a new album "Bobby Vinton Today."

"It's not an oldy-moldy album," he said.

Begin

"Mr. Begin is recuperating after an almost three-hour operation to replace an artificial right hip joint," said Dr. Dan Michaeli of Tel Aviv's Ichilov Hospital.

"He had a dislocation, something that happens through wear-and-tear on the joint, especially artificial ones."

Banged-up Andrews faces district opener

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Area Football

ANDREWS — Each District 3-4A team receives an open date sometime during the season.

W.T. Stapler wishes his team had one this week.

"We're beat all to pieces," Stapler said. "We are not in good shape."

The Mustangs, 2-2, split four non-district games despite having lost five starters off an already thin squad to serious injury.

Bruises and all, the Mustangs open 3-4A play Friday by hosting Fort Stockton, also 2-2, at the Mustang Bowl.

In other area action, Greenwood hosts Lamesa in a battle of undefeated teams, though Lamesa has one tie; Stanton goes for its first win of the season against McCamey; Iraan hosts Forsan; and Garden City opens its District 9-A season against Roscoe.

Big Spring and Rankin are open this week.

Injuries have forced Stapler to operate with a new quarterback and a makeshift offensive line. Consequently, the Mustangs have scored only 18 points in the last two weeks.

But the Mustangs blanked Levelland 10-0 last week, after playing Midland High close the previous outing. The Mustang defense has yielded an average of only 180⅛ yards per game during non-district play despite a lack of speed and all-district end Robby Gaston, one of the five injured starters.

The Andrews offense has been even more affected by injuries. Starting quarterback Al Gonzales went out for at least most of the season in the opener against Frenship, leaving the job to junior Kevin Nichols, who has completed only 39.0 of his passes, but has rushed for more than four yards per carry.

Injuries have also hit the Mustangs hard on the line.

"We had no tackles for practice last week, and we ended up playing with two tight ends at tackle against Levelland," Stapler said.

Despite the makeshift line, the Mustangs have three of the top 12 rushers in 3-4A. Halfback Chris Garrett is fourth in the loop with 344 yards on only 51 carries, while Russell Morris and Zach Wilson are 11th and 12th, respectively, with 164 and 157 yards.

Fort Stockton broke a 15-game losing streak two weeks ago against Kermit and made it two in a row last week with a 20-9 win over highly-regarded Crane.

In fact, the Panthers have played nothing but Class 3A teams this season. Stapler downplays the notion that playing the smaller schools tarnishes Stockton's 2-2 mark, however.

"They played against good athletes," Stapler said. "Crane and Greenwood are good football teams, and Kermit is stout."

Coach Mel Gierhart's Panthers are led by quarterback Shannon Beeles, who is among 3-4A leaders in several statistical categories.

Beeles leads the district in total offense with 177⅛ yards per game, is second in passing yards with 424 (on 27-for-58 accuracy), and is fifth in rushing with 286 yards on 34 carries.

Other skill-position threats for Stockton include wide receiver Flo Garcia, who leads the league in receptions with 14.

AT BIG SPRING, Coach David Thompson is using his team's open date to find some answers in the wake of last week's 14-14 tie with unheralded Snyder.

"We didn't play well offensively, so we're trying to find some people who will hit someone on offense," Thompson said.

Thompson said the open date came at a good time for his banged-up Steers.

"We have three or four kids who are hurt, and this will give them time to heal."

JOHNSTON: Respecting Jesse Owens

From 1D

But they still allow him to be compete.

"I guess the asthma originally concerned us, but we found out a lot of kids play sports with asthma and Clay does a good job of taking his medication. The heart problem gives us the greatest concern, and we certainly try not to do anything to aggravate it.

"Before September of 1989, none of us knew what a diabetic had to go through. Bill Carlson is the first and only diabetic to compete in the Iron Man Triathlon, and he spent some time with Clay in November of '89. He convinced Clay it wouldn't hinder him athletically," said Byron, who also cited NFL quarterbacks Wade Wilson and Jim Everett as diabetics who stand out in the arena.

To treat his diabetes, Johnston takes 730 insulin injections a year, and must check his blood about 500 times in that span.

"His teachers, friends and classmates have been real supportive in the last year. They don't kid him about his illness. Certainly, none of them have volunteered to take his place on any of those shots. Fortunately, Clay looks at it a day at a time, not 1,200 sticks a year."

Byron also cited the help of Clay's many coaches through the years, including Mid City baseball coach Joe Nobles, Midland High coaches Tim Whalen and Rick Wood, and MHS trainers Doc Dodson and Bill Schneider.

"A lot of people look at these guys as 'win at all costs' types. But they have certainly gone out of their way to help Clay. All the shots he takes can cause muscle problems, and Doc (who retired last spring) and Bill have been real helpful giving him ultrasound treatments.

"And I can't say enough about Tim Whalen (former head baseball coach at MHS) and Rick Wood (Whalen's assistant, who was promoted to the head job after Whalen was named the school district's assistant athletic director). Those guys have spent countless hours helping Clay learn how to play the game without over-exerting himself," Byron said.

Johnston's diabetes has also led Byron and Jan into an interest in the diabetic foundation.

"The city of Midland has been real supportive of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. They had a walk-a-thon Sept. 15 with 700 participants that raised $50,000 for the national foundation, and spring golf tournament that raised another $12,000," Byron said.

IF JOHNSTON needs a dose of courage, all he has to do is gander at his collector's card of Jesse Owens, the black Olympian who figuratively spit in Adolph Hitler's face at the 1936 summer games in Berlin.

Owens won four gold medals (in the 100, 200, 4 X 100 relay and long jump), disproving Hitler's white supremacy theory. Johnston had the card, a good luck gift from friend Chad Villareal, with him when he ran at the national meet in Los Angeles.

"I've been a fan of his for a long time. It takes a lot of courage to go up in front of thousands of Hitler followers, be booed and still win," Johnston said. "Chad gave me the card for good luck. I guess it was."

Luck or courage, maybe both, have been a large part of Johnston's early years. But his outlook on life, as with any 12-year-old, is profound in another fashion.

"I like baseball, it's a fun sport. But I also would like the money if I made it to the majors. I like running because I think I'm pretty fast. It's good for you, it's fun to compete and you can make friends with the people you run against," he said.

PERMIAN: Mojo to answer recruiting questions, Taylor looks back to December, 1989 workouts

From 1D

High," said Buinger, who is also this year's chairman of the executive committee that is composed of the superintendents of Odessa, Midland, San Angelo and Abilene.

But Buinger added that Permian's beleaguered football program may also face the prospect of dealing some more possible rules infractions of the University Interscholastic League.

Last month, the UIL handed Permian a stiff penalty for violating preseason workout rules. The UIL disqualified Permian from being eligible for playoff games this year and suspended two coaches, including head coach Tam Hollingshead, from coaching for two games. Hollingshead and his coaching staff have since filed a suit against the UIL against the disqualification ruling on grounds of lack of due process.

Hollingshead and assistant coach Myron Schneider have already removed themselves for the two games required by the UIL.

However, Buinger said that Permian may face more allegations from the State Executive Committee.

"We are currently waiting on a directive from the UIL on how to proceed, if we have to at all, on some more things that came up during our meeting with the State Executive Committee in Austin last month. When we get the word, we will ask the district committee to look at the allegations against both schools at the same time," said Buinger.

Taylor was granted a summary judgment, throwing out the case, last January, but two affidavits in the court files have two current Bronchos, Michael Aguilar and Ronnie Martinez that say Taylor pressured team members to be present for workouts, consisting of weight-lifting and touch football during the Christmas break.

When the UIL directs, Permian may have to answer questions about recruiting players into the Panther football program. Those allegations were made by Taylor during the meeting with the State Executive Committee, but not dealt with since Permian's infractions being discussed were for preseason workouts.

Joseph Baressi, superintendent of the Midland Independent School District and member of the district committee, said he has not received formal word on a call for another meeting.

"I was at UTPB Tuesday with Gene (Buinger) at a meeting and he said that it looked like a meeting would have to be called, but that he was waiting on a written directive out of Austin. He did say there was something we might have to look into on something that came out of that meeting against Permian and he also said there was something on Odessa High that we would have to discuss. Other than that, I don't know much about it at this time," said Baressi.

Season shaping up for sleek, sexy feminine form

By Trish Barr
Copley News Service

Pssst — Want to get a leg up on fall fashion? Designer Donna Karan's advice is: Run, don't walk to the nearest gym. And then buy stock in your favorite bodywear company.

While spring was all soft and flirty feminine, fall fashion is a tribute to the female form. Karan, for example, has always loved body clothes and this season hers are sleeker and sexier than ever.

"It's legs, legs, legs for Fall 1990," says Jane Hsiang, fashion director for Elle magazine. "Look for a modern interpretation of the colorful '60s spirit" in short skirts and A-line and chemise silhouettes, she adds. All of which puts pressure on the fashion-conscious to shape up.

Covering the leg is the key to understanding the current crop of short skirts, Karan says. In fact, Karan started her collection for fall by working from the legs up. Oscar de la Renta layered three pairs of semi-sheer tights to mix a color. Velvet tights were the news at Carolina Herrera, and cable-patterned legs made the look for Isaac Mizrahi.

Now, lest you panic over the thought of trying to wear Mizrahi's 12¼-inch "place-mat" skirt (it really could do double duty as a tablesetting), please understand that there is a discrepancy between runway and reality. Runway skirts with hems skimming the underpants will arrive in stores at lengths that almost cover the knees.

THE REASON for the in-store longer length? Designers remember 1987 when too-short skirts bombed; now they're not taking chances. Herrera leaves a 3-inch hem on her 23-inch skirts. Chanel offers customers the choice of five skirt lengths. Other designers, including Bill Blass, Marc Jacobs for Perry Ellis, Gianni Versace, Donna Karan, Geoffrey Beene and Calvin Klein, showed skirts at 18-or 19-inches long. Those same skirts will be 23 or 24 inches in stores.

Which is not to say that women won't be wearing shorter skirts this year. They will be. And under them will be leggings. In fact, bodywear in the form of unitards, stirrup pants and wrap tops will be the blue jeans of the '90s, fashion analysts say. The body stocking, says Karan, is the modern girdle. It gives a layer of Lycra support under a skirt, a long sweater or jacket. Ellen Saltzman, senior vice president and fashion director for R.H. Macy & Co., told Women's Wear Daily, "Certainly leggings are the first thing everyone is going to want as a basic."

While body stockings are a fall fashion must, over them women will have a variety of looks from which to choose.

"While the overall style direction for fall 1990 is one of many moods, contrasts and functions, femininity is a common denominator," according to Rand Burrus, fashion director for The Fashion Center in San Francisco. "Fall fashions range from innocence and romance to mysterious and naughty, from clean and classic to cozy and homespun."

ESSENTIALLY, THERE are five silhouette directions for fall, according to Patricia Fox, Saks Fifth Avenue director of fashion and marketing for Southern California. They include:

■ The '60s influence. Clothes hug the body with Lycra and Spandex and skirts are short. Key features are unitards, opaque hose, A-line silhouettes and even hot pants. Colors include Day-Glo and many brights. There are lots of '60s interpretations in accessories: wigs, false eyelashes and eyeliner, fishnet hosiery, beehive hairdos and headbands with falls or flips a la Mary Tyler Moore.

■ Exotica. Styles are interpreted from every part of the world, and exotic costumes are reinterpreted in luxurious fabrics that include metallics, velvet, satin and chiffon for day as well as evening. The key is inventive mixtures of patterns, prints, fabrics, colors and ethnic details and cultural styles. It includes Scottish kilts, peasant skirts, poet blouses, embroidery and passementerie, velvets and brocades, tweeds and patchwork.

■ Modernix. The look is clean and streamlined, with minimal accessories. It includes jumpsuits and long hooded coats, long jackets over short skirts, stirrup pants — generally anything that's molded to the body in a sleek and unitardish manner. Colors are dark with shocks of brights.

■ Urban Sport. The style uses all the traditional easy-to-wear silhouettes, set in harvest hues and rustic durable fabrics. Representative looks include parkas, hooded sweat shirts, chambray shirts, ski pants, skirts and shorts over leggings, jodhpurs and knickers and classic plaids.

■ Classics. Some things never change. They aren't trends; they're timeless. While the look offers little newness, it allows suits, dresses and separates to show off classic feminine styling. Long, curvy jackets, shapely coat dresses, short skirts, twin sets, woolens, classic trousers, velvet for day and monochromatic color are characteristic.

Major treatments within each silhouette include layering, wrapping, draping and tying.

Details for fall, according to Joan Kaner, fashion director for Neiman Marcus, include hoods on sweaters, dresses, jackets, blouses and outerwear. Other popular details feature quilting as trim or all over and large buttons that are being treated more as accessories.

Colors, she adds, include the primary brights: yellow, green, red, royal blue, purple — worn monochromatically or mixed. Neutrals include gray, from pale to charcoal, alone or played against brights or pales; browns, from beige to camel to dark chocolate; and pales, from aqua to mauve to rose to mint.

Kaner lists stretch fabrics as the big news of the season, including velvet for day or night in cotton, silk, panne, crushed and stretch velour. Also popular: wool in gabardine or flannel, cashmere, silk, satin, metallics, sequins, leather and vinyl. Chiffon is still important for blouses and late-afternoon attire.

Yes, there's variety for fall, but Kaner reminds us that the best looks are body-conscious: short skirts that show lots of leg, the bodysuit that becomes a key piece for '90s dressing.

N.Y. Times News Service

David Urso adds a dash of rosemary to his garlic potatoes, some oregano to his ratatouille, a pinch of thyme to his favorite chicken dish and lots of basil to his pesto. He also sprinkles herbs from his garden on the jewelry that he designs.

His new fall line of spice jewelry includes pins with alfalfa and paprika and irregularly shaped "mangled bangles" coated with mustard seed, cornmeal, nutmeg, lavender, yarrow or coffee.

The ingredients are embedded in resin on a base of patinaed brass, copper and new gold.

Urso, 34, of Kingston, N.Y., has been designing jewelry since 1974. In 1980, he received a bachelor of fine arts degree in goldsmithing and silversmithing from the State University of New York at New Paltz.

He uses resins and plexiglass and to create finishes and pigments.

Leslie Fay Collections Fall 1990 fashion shows will be presented noon Wednesday at Dillard's at Permian Mall in Odessa, and noon Oct. 11 at Dillard's in Midland Park Mall.

War negates cleavage

N.Y. Times News Service

"We may be going to war; it's not the time for decollete," said Alexander Liberman, the editorial director of Conde Nast magazines, at a recent cover meeting.

His statement on war and cleavage, which has since been passed on to several editors of Conde Nast magazines, seems to sum up the current fashion mood — if you don't think about it too much.

DEAR ABBY
Volunteers reap benefits

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, a writer stated that it was foolish to work for nothing as a hospital volunteer. Thanks for saying, "The rewards are far more valuable than money." You're so right, Abby.

Van Buren

In 1988, a study was done by the University of Michigan Survey Research Center. They followed 2,700 people in Tecumseh, Mich., over a 10-year period to determine the impact of social relationships on health. They found that regular volunteer work, more than any other activity, dramatically increased life expectancy!

This was especially significant for men: Men who did no volunteer work were 2 1/2 times more likely to die during the course of the 10-year study than those who volunteered at least once a week.

Research at Yale, the University of California, Johns Hopkins, the National Institute of Mental Health and Ohio State supports these findings. — LONGTIME VOLUNTEER LEADER, MECHANICSVILLE, VA.

DEAR LEADER: So what else is new? People who spend their time doing for others feel useful, productive and good about themselves. Volunteers, particularly those who work in hospitals, hospices and nursing homes, are too busy to dwell on their own troubles or feel depressed.

Those who give — get!

DEAR ABBY: I want to clear up a common misconception that has resulted in many painful feelings.

My best friend is 17 years old. She's pretty and popular, and she's worn a pacemaker for two years that I know of. Until people get to know her, they make rude comments like, "My grandfather has one of those — what's wrong with you? I thought they were only for old people."

This has caused a great deal of pain for my friend. I just wish you'd tell people that pacemakers aren't such a horrible thing. My friend is able to run, dance, swim and do everything I can do. Abby, please set the record straight and encourage people to be more understanding of this heart condition. — A FRIEND IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR FRIEND: Thanks for giving me this opportunity to state that anyone who has a heart is old enough to have a heart problem. And thanks to the advances in medical science and technology, we now have that modern miracle — the pacemaker.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter who lives in another city believes she has a ghost or spirit living in her house. She says that ever since she rented this house, things get moved around, lights get turned on, doors open by themselves, etc.

She is really upset by all this and doesn't know what to do. My suggestion was to move quickly, but moving is expensive, and besides, she can't find another place she can afford right now.

My question is: Is there some way to get the ghost to move so she won't have to?

I am not crazy, and neither is she. — LOUISE IN MARYSVILLE, WASH.

DEAR LOUISE: Advise your daughter to phone the clergyperson of her choice and ask whether he or she performs exorcisms (the act of expelling evil spirits). And if her clergyperson does not perform exorcisms, ask if he or she knows of someone who does. It may not help, but it can't hurt.

Want your phone to ring? Get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular" – for people of all ages. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

But, Gordon debuts

NEW YORK (AP) — Gordon Henderson is following the likes of Donna Karan and Anne Klein by launching a spin-off of his line of women's fashions. To be called But, Gordon, the sporty separates are to retail for about half the price of his designer collection.

For fall But, Gordon is introducing 180 pieces ranging from about $40 to $500 retail, according to a company spokesman.

New urbanity for light denim and chambray

By Deborah Hofmann
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — This fall, chambray and denim fabrics, rugged staples of men's wear, are lighter and more urbane-looking.

Denim work shirts by Joseph Abboud are in faded and dark indigo, stone-washed for a soft hand. "We're stressing versatility — the same shirts with a tie and tweed jacket and with jeans," Abboud said.

The roomy medium-weight shirts have an easy drape, deep armholes, a small soft pointed collar, two pockets and rivet-style buttons. Abboud's blue jeans are snug at the seat but loose on the thighs.

"The 90s denims are anti-fit, relaxed, not uptight, meant to be worn with suede wingtips, not just boots," he said. His faded jeans are $66, shirts $80, and roomy jackets $155 at Bergdorf Goodman and Saks Fifth Avenue.

The Gap's classic denim shirt, $40, looks well-worn. It's medium-weight with a button-down collar, just right as a jacket over a T-shirt, or alone.

The Gap also makes many chambrays, a square weave of finer cotton than the dense slanted twill of denim; there are six variations of pocket and collar styles for the classic $30 shirt and a variety of striped models, each $32.

B. Free, by M. Julian, has a three-quarter-length hooded stone-washed denim wood toggle coat with a Navajo-print lining, $225, that looks great over a flap-yoke stone-washed denim shirt with leather lacing, $65.

Basic Elements, at 302 Columbus Avenue (74th Street), sells a 10-ounce prewashed chambray shirt constructed like a dress shirt, with box pleat, standard collar and cuffs and brown tortoise shell buttons. But flap pockets, a locker loop and a drop yoke give the $55 shirt a relaxed mood.

"It's not just about cowboys and country and western anymore," said Larry Hotz, a spokesman for the Men's Fashion Association, a trade group. "It used to be that denim meant play clothes; now men want to wear it to the office the next day."

AT WIT'S END
Empty nest may lead to fuller lives

By Erma Bombeck

For a long time sociologists had us believing that the "empty nest" was like some dreaded, uncontrollable disease, symptomized by crying, long periods of depression and an inability to function.

Bombeck

We'd hear stories about mothers who converted their grown children's rooms into shrines and fathers who called up their married sons and begged them to "come over and shoot a few baskets after dinner." Rumors circulated that mothers automatically set the table for three for the rest of their lives and dads gave up their bowling nights for fear they'd miss a call from the "kid."

In my mind, I put the empty nest right up there with menopause and gingivitis.

When our last child left home, a friend called and said, "You need company to get you through the first night alone?"

"Actually," I said, "you caught us as we were leaving. We're going out to dinner."

"You're going to have to face that empty house sometime," she warned.

She was right. We filled in all the small holes left by darts and nails and had his room painted and made into a small TV room. We had the rugs cleaned and the oil spots removed from the driveway. After that, we went on our first vacation that wasn't planned around a paper route.

I'm not saying there weren't adjustments. It was weeks before we stopped looking for the TV tuner in the bathroom, months before our hearing returned to normal, and I still haven't gotten over the shock of going into the garage and seeing my own car parked there.

In retrospect, we have learned to live with phones that ring only when they're for us, two loads of laundry a week and popcorn for dinner. Our friends marvel at how well we are able to deal with the trauma of just the two of us entering the twilight years alone. They say we are very brave. We smile and say, "Thank you."

Recently the University of Nebraska researched the empty nest syndrome and discovered that when children leave home, the marriage of the parents not only improves, but that they may even experience a mini honeymoon.

Some say this change of attitude is probably due to the independence of women who go from child raising to a second career that is just as fulfilling. I say there was a whole generation of parents who were lying to us through their teeth just to keep the prophecy alive.

Once-important pads given fashionable 'cold shoulder'

By Leigh Brown
N.Y. Times News Service

PALM BEACH, Fla. Yesterday, shoulder pads were as vital to dressing as zippers or hems. Today they are almost anathema to chic.

No trend-setting designer showed a single linebacker look this year, foreshadowing a complete shoulder turnaround: from thick to spare, square to round, augmented to natural. Its demise may indicate more about American psyches than about fashion.

The introduction of shoulder pads revolutionized dressing twice. The first time found Johnny marching off to war and Judy traipsing to work in missile factories. It was the 1940s; women found themselves alone — the men had hit World War II battle fronts — and their new roles as Rosie the Riveters demanded sturdier, more relaxed, more (let's just say it) workingman-like clothes. They went from gardening and changing diapers to building airplanes and tanks. Their clothes had to keep pace.

They discovered that the wide-leg sailor pants their heroes donned for swabbing the decks translated remarkably well to a woman's physique. Shirts — plain old men's-style, button-up shirts — were less constricting than women's tops, allowing freer movement on the job.

Then dresses began to feature striking shoulder pads. They were even bigger than the ones men sported in their suits, formidable prostheses that had less to do with fashion or ease of movement than with the new dynamics of American society.

Women in the '40s were in a territory never before explored. The war thrust them into positions of authority and responsibility that previously had been assumed only by men. They found out they could handle the job just fine.

Some fashion scholars have theorized those imposing, Joan Crawford-esque shoulder pads allowed newly empowered women to appear more like the men with whom they were competing on the job front after the war.

Sound familiar, go-go '80s women? Those same fashion-trend watchers have said the shoulder-pad cycle came full circle when women — rarely found in the career world in the happy-go-lucky '50s; unsure of their direction in the '60s; determined but not yet on the fast track in the '70s — decided the time had come to prove themselves in the job market again during the '80s. The shoulder pad returned with a vengeance.

It was no-holds-barred in those early '80s days. Women pulled out their MBAs, slipped into gray flannel suits with plenty of shoulder and demanded equal treatment, just as they had in the '40s. Soon, not a dress, blouse or jacket could be found without a piece of thick foam at the shoulder.

One look today at Giorgio Armani's unconstructed, padless jackets or Calvin Klein's spare cardigan shapes — sans mounds of foam next to the neckline — tells of the shoulder pad's doomsday in the '90s.

What does the abandonment of one of fashion's favorite magic tricks say about the state of men-women work relationships? It means women have arrived, some say. They need no longer rely on a male-friendly style of dressing to prove themselves equal. They just are.

A recent newspaper article told of a woman sculptor who had been asking other women to donate their shoulder pads to her latest work, a monumental piece composed not of bronze or marble, but of discarded foam inserts ripped out of outdated power suits. The sculpture, when completed, promises to be a tribute to the trials of post-ERA women who had to walk it like they talked it, so to speak — a memorial to their struggle up the corporate ladder of the '80s, a pad-collage record of the way we were.

Salt cutback no magic cure

If you have high blood pressure and cut back on salt, you probably think your blood pressure will drop. It might. But it is more likely to stay about the same, and it could even go up. That's the conclusion of two experts at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine.

Carper

After reviewing current research, they report that from 20 percent to 25 percent of those with high blood pressure who moderately restrict their sodium intake, as many doctors recommend, do have significant drops in blood pressure.

On the other hand, blood pressure actually rises significantly in 15 percent of such patients. "In these people salt restriction is hazardous," says Dr. Bernard Lamport, a co-author of the new review.

Further, he says, some people who reduce salt intake may suffer sleep disturbances and a loss of valuable nutrients.

As a test, Dr. Lamport advises people with high blood pressure to cut down on sodium for a couple of months under a doctor's supervision. "If blood pressure drops, continue on the regimen. And, of course, if it goes up, stop."

"Mainly," he says, "the public should know that sodium restriction is not a panacea for high blood pressure."

A calorie myth

Thin people can overeat without gaining weight because their body metabolism revs up, burning off the extra calories.

That's what a lot of people think, and that's what Dr. Susan Roberts, a physiologist at Tufts Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging, thought before her recent study. "I was surprised to find it's wrong," she says.

In fact, she found that normal individuals, after stuffing themselves, simply ate fewer calories on future days. Their appetites automatically shut down. Their metabolism did not change.

Dr. Roberts had seven normal-weight young men eat 1,000 more calories per day than usual for three weeks. All of them gained weight. After the experiment, they lost weight rapidly, although they did not go on diets. Unconsciously, they ate about 1,500 calories a day fewer than before they had gained the extra pounds. They thought they were eating more, but their "brains tricked them into eating less, especially of fatty foods," says Dr. Roberts.

It means, she says, that metabolism does not prevent putting on weight from overeating and that the secret to losing weight, even in ordinarily thin people, is still eating fewer calories.

Sober up with vitamin C?

A single megadose of vitamin C may help you sober up. But the catch is you have to take the vitamin before drinking, not after. And it only works on about half of the population. Unfortunately, in a few individuals vitamin C prolongs alcohol's circulation in the blood.

That's the suggestion of a new study by researchers at the University of South Florida College of Medicine.

On three separate occasions they gave 13 healthy men two or three alcoholic drinks. In one case, the men were also given 2,000 milligrams of vitamin C an hour before the alcohol. Another time, they took 2,000 milligrams of C for two weeks prior to the alcohol. Yet, another time, they received no vitamin C.

The vitamin C in both cases significantly speeded up clearance of alcohol from the blood in more than half the men.

Dr. Marianne Chen, head of the study, cautions that this does not mean people can drink and depend on vitamin C to sober up. But she says her study plus several others show that vitamin C works as an alcohol detoxifying agent on many people. The problem, she says, is "we don't know precisely who they are."

Nor do scientists know how the vitamin works, though they suspect it affects enzymes in the liver.

There's a time for everything — maybe even human reproduction

By Natalie Angier
N.Y. Times News Service

Songbirds mate in spring and their nestlings hatch en masse a month later. Sheep conceive in fall, carry their young for six months, and by early spring the fields are alive with the sound of bleating lambs.

A great number of species are seasonal breeders, cued by the length of the day, a softening of the wind or other environmental factors signaling the arrival of the optimal time for breeding.

By contrast, humans have long been thought to be beyond the sway of the seasons. After all, people can and do reproduce any day of the year.

But in a comprehensive report in the current issue of The Journal of Reproductive Rhythms, researchers present a wealth of data showing that human fertility rates are also influenced by the seasons.

They say the two outstanding factors affecting reproduction rates are the amount of sunlight and the temperature.

Calculating conception rates by studying birth records from around the world, the scientists say that while human reproduction is far less seasonally dictated than that of other creatures, it rises and falls in distinct patterns throughout the year.

Other researchers have noted peaks in birth figures that seemed too large to be mere statistical blips. But they dismissed such fertility spikes as the artifacts of human culture, perhaps spurred by holidays and ceremonies that give people the leisure and official blessing to mate.

The new report insists annual variations in human conception rates are seasonally determined. The researchers show peak fertility times vary from one latitude and climate to another.

THEY SAY geographical discrepancies reflect when people in those places are exposed to a mix of daylight and temperature that most closely approximates ideal conditions for human conception.

'The effects of climate and day length are becoming less effective in the modern world, because we're always indoors....And you can see it happening statistically in our data. The impact of the elements is going down the drain.'

— Dr. Till Roenneberg, University of Munich, co-author of reproduction study

According to the new analysis, the perfect time of year to conceive is when the sun shines for about 12 hours and the temperature hovers between 50 and 70 degrees Farenheit.

For reasons that remain mysterious, such conditions somehow help stimulate either ovulation in women, a burst of sperm production in men or a combination of the two.

In some regions of the world, the scientists say, people mating in the optimal fertility season have twice the chance of conceiving that they might have the rest of the year.

"What we think we've shown is that the rhythm of human conception cuts across all cultural, religious and social barriers," said Dr. Till Roenneberg of the University of Munich in West Germany, who wrote the report with Dr. Jurgen Aschoff of the nearby Max Planck Institute in Andechs. "The basis for this rhythm is a biological one."

Other scientists, while stressing humans are truly fertile year-round, say the results are persuasive.

"Many studies have shown that there is an annual periodicity in reproduction among animals," said Dr. Robert B. Barlow Jr., a neuroscientist at Syracuse University and at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Woods Hole, Mass.

"WHAT HASN'T BEEN clearly shown is that a similar phenomenon occurs in humans. This study is the most exhaustive, careful study to show that what applies to animals in general is also true for us."

But the researchers have also discovered that the influence of the seasons has flagged considerably with the advent of industrialization, as ever more people spend most of their time under artificial light and kept artificially heated or cooled.

They say the changes may partly explain rising infertility rates in Western nations, as well as other hormonal problems linked to the endocrine system.

"The effects of climate and day length are becoming less effective in the modern world, because we're always indoors, and the lighting and temperature are controlled," said Roenneberg.

"And you can see it happening statistically in our data. The impact of the elements is going down the drain."

In the new study, the scientists scrutinized birth records of 166 countries, representing tens of millions of births.

Studying the United States and Europe and the other countries of the temperate zone in the Northern Hemisphere the researchers found there are two annual conception peaks, which continue today but were especially notable before the era of extensive industrialization.

One statistical spike occurs around the spring equinox, in March, resulting in a spate of births in late December or early January. The second arrives in autumn, around October or November, leading to a slight glut of babies arriving in mid-summer.

THE CONCEPTION peaks blur slightly in one direction or the other, depending on weather conditions of a particular region.

For example, in the United States spring is colder than it is in Europe, and so the first conception peak here occurs somewhat after the vernal equinox, when the temperature is becoming a bit balmier.

But in Europe, where the later fall is often chilly and drizzly, the second reproductive peak is earlier than in the United States, corresponding more closely to the autumnal equinox, in September.

The ideal conception day, said Roenneberg, is "the sort of day in spring or autumn when you have nice nights and days that are agreeable and warm."

The researchers have yet to determine why human fertility rates respond to seasonal signals. In experiments with other animals, they have correlated day length with hormone levels in both males and females.

Studying the Siberian hamster, Dr. Fred W. Turek, a professor of neurobiology and physiology at Northwestern University, found that when the rodents were placed under lighting conditions mimicking a summery 15 hours of sunshine, the levels of testosterone in the male would soar.

The change prepared the male to mate at a time when any pups he sired would be born two weeks later, when the weather would be gentle and the food abundant.

"There's a tremendous selective pressure to maximize the survival of the young," Turek said. "For a hamster to have offspring in midwinter might be a complete waste of effort. The length of day is the cue that tells the animal what time of year it is."

Male needs to be part of any infertility examination

Associated Press

As many as one couple in six in the United States is involuntarily childless.

The man is the significant factor in 30 percent of these cases and an important contributing factor in another 20 percent.

"No evaluation of infertility is complete without considering the male factor," said Dr. Richard Amelar, a urologist at New York University Medical Center who specializes in male infertility.

Male infertility is often treatable, either medically or surgically.

Amelar termed semen analysis the most important single item in evaluating male fertility. "Since some variation in semen quality normally occurs, at least two specimens should be examined," he said.

Among factors causing male infertility, Amelar named problems with semen volume, sperm count, sperm movement and sperm development.

The leading cause of reduced semen quality is varicocele, an enlargement of the veins in the cord that suspends the testis within the scrotum. This results in impaired blood circulation in the testicles. The condition is surgically correctable.

Other contributors to poor semen quality include emotional stress, cigarette smoking, excess alcohol use, marijuana use and such practices as long hot baths which raise the temperature within the scrotum.

If a sperm count is low, too frequent sexual relations may result in insufficient time for sperm numbers to build up.

Hormonal imbalance may adversely affect sperm production. Blood tests can determine if this is a factor, and various medications may be able to reverse the effects.

The amount of seminal fluid may also be a factor.

New cancer test needs more study

DENVER (AP) — A researcher says he's developed a simple test that could cost as little as $25 and provide early detection of many cancers, but an American Cancer Society official said Wednesday it may not be specific enough.

Stuart Gordon of the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center admits more research is needed, but said results of early experiments, published Monday in the medical journal Cancer Research, are promising.

"This is too small a study to make any absolute statement, but it's enough to make us proceed" with full-fledged clinical trials, Gordon said.

The test, which uses just a few drops of blood, detects a protein that appears to be present at high levels only when normal cells are becoming malignant, he said.

The test was 100 percent effective in identifying the protein in the early stages of cancer growth, and was 76 percent effective in identifying late-stage cancers.

Dr. John Kaszlo, a senior vice president for research at the Atlanta-based American Cancer Society, said the test could be less useful than Gordon thinks, adding it was too early to tell.

"It's like taking your temperature. You don't know from the reading whether you have tuberculosis or you have the flu," he said.

Novello critical of cigarette ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — Surgeon General Antonia Novello and a prominent physicians' group criticized tobacco companies Wednesday for using advertisements that encourage young women to smoke.

"Let no woman be deceived," Novello said. "Tobacco is an addictive and deadly drug. It leaves its sinister mark across the entire physiological landscape — hypertension, bronchitis, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, heart disease and cancer."

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists said in a statement that 27 percent of American women smoke and more than 126,000 die each year from smoking-related disorders.

"Because of these well-known dangers, it is irresponsible for tobacco companies to single out women, especially educationally or otherwise disadvantaged women, and encourage them to smoke," the organization said in a statement.

"Tobacco companies must stop encouraging young women to smoke cigarettes," it said. "The health of women and of our future generations demand at least that much consideration."

Thomas Lauria of the Tobacco Institute responded by saying: "We are pointing out it's 1990, and to segregate women as being incapable of making the same choices about an adult consumer product as men seems paternalistic."

Novello said at a news conference that smoking is responsible for about 4,000 infant deaths in the United States each year and that pregnant women who smoke are more likely to have miscarriages, premature deliveries and low-birthweight babies.

The tobacco industry, she said, will spend $3.3 billion on advertising and promotion while the Department of Health and Human Services has only $3.5 million to spend on its anti-smoking campaign.

Lauria called the $3.3 billion figure misleading because it includes promotion. The actual expenditure, he said, is $540 million on print advertising and $150 million on billboards. Lauria said that was not out of line for a $42 billion a year industry.

Dr. Ezra C. Davidson, president of the physicians' group, said the most vulnerable women are teenagers who have limited understanding of the health risks of smoking.

"The magazines they read extol the glamour of cigarette smoking in the advertising and the advertising revenue very often makes the magazines reluctant to publish the other side — the side that warns of miscarriages, low birthweight, stillbirths, lung cancer, heart attacks and the many other deadly results of the cigarette habit," Davidson said.

Dr. Virginia Ernster of the University of California Medical School in San Francisco, said tobacco companies have dealt women a low blow.

"Their advertising is fictitious," she said. "It associates female smoking with images of physical fitness and independence.

"The reality of smoking for women is often quite different — addiction and death," she said.

Route 66 law may help Oklahoma communities

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahomans trying to bring Route 66 back to life say a new federal law might be the biggest step toward pulling people off big highways and through their communities.

The Route 66 Study Act of 1989 was signed into law by President Bush earlier this week. It directs the National Park Service to study and determine the impact historic Route 66 had on the nation's culture.

"With Route 66 we have something that could lift Oklahoma's tourism industry, which would mean more jobs and more money for the state's economy," said U.S. Rep. Wes Watkins, an author of the bill.

Watkins, D-Okla., said that also should be the case in other Route 66 states.

The study will address the feasibility of preserving what remains of the highway and the facilities associated with it through private and public efforts.

A group of delegates from each of the eight states along Route 66, including Oklahoma, will be organized to conduct the study.

In the past few years, several communities along the route have initiated efforts to promote it. Part of that is to preserve the highway's historical significance. Most of it, however, is in hopes of revitalizing small businesses that have lost out to those near larger highways.

"Hopefully this will help us gain recognition, and we should see more funding coming down," said Ruth Lyon, executive director of the statewide Route 66 Association. "It should mean great things for us."

The Bethany-based association began official operations in August. Efforts to organize all the fractional organizations began in October, 1989. It now has 800 members, Lyon said.

"We would be a good place for a national organization, because of the location," Lyon said.

Designated in 1926, the 2,200-mile highway stretched from Chicago to Santa Monica, Calif. The thoroughfare became the first completely paved highway across the western United States in 1938, running through Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE!!!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 65% adult and 35% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s) from $200 to $600 monthly! Some motor routes make even more. Although no motor routes are expected to be available, depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 AM Monday - Friday and 7 AM on Saturday and Sunday

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
