Midland woman killed in one-car rollover on interstate

By D. Lance Lunsford
Staff Writer

A Midland woman was killed Monday afternoon while traveling east on Interstate 20 about 3 miles west of the airport when the 4Runner she was driving apparently blew a tire and flipped across the opposite lane almost hurdling into the opposing service road.

Midland emergency crews pulled Hope Maria Conca, 43, of Midland from the wrecked vehicle at about 5 p.m. The 4Runner's windshield was severed and shattered with every window of the vehicle smashed as well.

Department of Public Safety troopers investigated the wreck and marked the scene in multiple areas. Troopers gathered evidence, determining the wreck's points of causation. Approximately 100 yards from the vehicle's final resting spot, troopers surveyed twisted pieces of the wreckage, pointing to pieces of rubber, plastic and tire marks.

DPS Trooper David Galvan said the vehicle appeared to have flipped twice.

"It looked like she hit her head twice on the concrete. She had massive head injuries," Galvan said.

Although Galvan made no official statement as to cause of the wreck, he said witnesses traveling in the opposite direction saw what may have been the initiating factor of the accident.

"One witness said she saw debris flying up from under the vehicle. It looked like she had a blowout on the rear passenger tire," Galvan said.

Although wrecks caused by tire blowouts are at the forefront of drivers' attention, Galvan said the tires were not made by Firestone. However, the blowout may have been the cause of the wreck, according to Galvan.

Ms. Conca was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital soon after the wreck. Despite the efforts of emergency room physicians, Ms. Conca died of the severe injuries sustained in the rollover. Her death was reported at about 8:45 p.m. Monday by the hospital supervis

Bank in Stanton robbed at gunpoint

By D. Lance Lunsford
Staff Writer

STANTON — An unidentified male robbed the First National Bank of Stanton, fleeing the scene on foot with an undetermined amount of cash at about 12:45 p.m. Monday in the city's sleepy downtown area. Described by the FBI as a white male between 25 and 30 years old, the man was last seen running northeast from the bank toward a local car dealership wearing a white T-shirt under a blue-patterned shirt with sleeves rolled up.

Stanton Police said the bank is fitted with alarms as well as security cameras, but said they did not know what type of gun the man used in the robbery. Bank officials said very little regarding the incident.

One bank official, who did not identify himself, would only say, "The bank is closed."

Stanton Police officers and FBI officials investigated the robbery all afternoon, isolating themselves inside the bank at 119 North Saint Peter St. Investigators only emerged for moments to collect several plastic cases from vehicles. They quickly ducked back inside with no comments.

Meanwhile, Stanton residents milled about the streets in their daily course while surveying the scene.

Bank patron George Costlow crosses the street leading away from the First National Bank of Stanton to find out why the bank's closed. Costlow had been on his way to the bank to make a deposit Monday afternoon.

At Stanton Drug, a popular gathering place, residents gossiped and chatted over what to make of the bank robbery — the first their town has seen since the early 1960s when a man escaped with the money but then took his own life soon after the heist.

Jim Smith, 38, of Stanton owns a flower shop next to the bank. He said he chatted with an employee of the bank as the robbery progressed, saying a friend called to tell him someone robbed the bank.

"My son was riding his scooter right here in the street," Smith said. "I ran inside to call White Motor Company and told them, so they could pull their keys out (of their vehicles)."

Although bank employees visited with law enforcement officials most of the day, the amount of money stolen had not been released as of Monday evening. Police said the man snuck away with an undetermined amount of 20, 50 and 100 dollar bills. Escaping on foot, authorities did not know whether he made it to a vehicle. Stanton Police said they had no leads regarding the identity, whereabouts, or destination of the suspect.

The Texas Department of Public Safety patrolled a section of Interstate 20 east of Midland during the moments following the robbery hoping to catch the man. According to the FBI, the suspect is a white male between 5 feet 8 inches and 6 feet tall with short brown hair, possibly receding. They reported he had a slight mustache with a slim build and a slim face, and he possibly had a tattoo on his forearm.

The FBI requested any information regarding the robbery be reported to its offices at (915)570-0255.

Odessa woman, 20, held on charges of injuring 2-month-old

ODESSA — An Odessa woman was arrested Monday by Fort Worth Police on charges of felony injury to a child.

Laura Ann Ramirez, 20, whom police believe beat her 2-month-old daughter, Miranda, is currently being held at the Tarrant County Jail, and will be handed over to Odessa police later this week. Miranda is hospitalized at Cook Children's Medical Center Hospital in Fort Worth suffering from a fractured skull, broken legs and broken ribs, according to the Odessa Police Department.

'It was relayed to me that the mother was under a large amount of stress and she wasn't able to handle the child and that's why she did what she did.'
— Lt. Duane Paul, Fort Worth Police

The child's grandmother noticed Miranda had a high fever during a weekend visit from Mrs. Ramirez, her husband and her 2-year-old child. The grandmother took the child to Arlington Memorial Hospital, where doctors said they found numerous fractured bones in different stages of healing.

The child was transferred to Cook Children's Medical Center Hospital, where police said she was in intensive care in stable condition.

Odessa police issued a warrant for Mrs. Ramirez Sunday after she admitted injuring her daughter to Forth Worth Police.

Retired patrolman recalls '61 Stanton bank robbery

By Jonathon Carrasco
MRT Correspondent

STANTON — It was almost 40 years ago the last time a bank in Stanton was robbed at gunpoint.

The last time the First National Bank of Stanton was robbed took place Aug. 14, 1961.

Early that afternoon, Roy E. Holland, a used-car salesman, approached Jack Ireton, the teller, and drew his .22 caliber revolver and demanded Ireton turn over the bank's money. After $5,005 had been surrendered, the agitated robber fled the scene, according to an account published in the Old Sorehead Gazette last year.

Ireton's colleagues working in the back of the bank were unaware of the incident taking place at the teller window until Ireton called the police to report the robbery, the Gazette reported in its historical account.

Jake Burton, Stanton's chief of police, was in his car across the street from the bank as the robber sped away. Although he pursued the vehicle, Burton was unable to catch the assailant.

Soon descriptions of the car were relayed over police radio where Texas Highway patrolman Bobie Papasan learned of the incident.

Papasan was near the Stanton-Lamesa and Big Spring-Andrews highway intersection where he decided to set up a road block. He attempted to radio his position, but because of the limitations of 1961 telecommunications he was unable to alert other officials.

Shortly after Papasan pulled into the intersection, a tan 1956 Ford approached the intersection and coasted to a halt, Holland took his .22 pistol and fired a single shot into his own temple.

"It just happed so quickly," said Papasan, now retired and living in Midland. "He could have shot me just as easily as he shot himself."

The single shot to the head surprisingly didn't kill Holland. Because of the radio trouble, Papasan had trouble contacting an ambulance but soon one was called to the scene to transport Holland to the Stanton hospital where he later died.

The stolen money was found in a paper sack under the seat and was returned in full to the bank.

Holland's widow later told police her husband had been in desperate financial trouble for sometime and was extremely upset. She said her husband was in Texas repossessing a car, and was on his way back home to Denver City. No one is certain why he chose Stanton's bank to rob.

Condit lawyer says there's no reason for lie detector test

By Hervey Pean
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. Gary Condit's lawyer Monday brushed aside a request from Chandra Levy's parents that his client take a lie detector test.

Abbe Lowell, appearing on NBC's "Today Show," said that the California congressman has already satisfied investigators' demands by answering all the questions put to him.

"There are no questions to test," said Lowell.

Condit

Levy

Robert and Susan Levy want Condit to take the test following news accounts that Condit admitted to police that he had an affair with their daughter, who has been missing since April 30. The Levys say Condit's reported admission contradicts the account he gave them in a telephone conversation last month.

"We'll probably ask the police department for a polygraph ... the family feels the investigation has been hindered because the congressman took so long to tell the truth," said Michael Frisby, a spokesman for the Levy family. "The family wants the comfort of knowing that the people who were closest to Chandra are giving complete and truthful information to investigators."

The Levys are also troubled that the congressman told them the last contact he had with Chandra was on April 24th. "Now we find he told police it was sometime after that," Frisby said. Condit acknowledged to police that he last spoke by phone with Levy on April 29, according to law enforcement sources quoted in news reports.

Levy, a former intern at the Justice Department's Bureau of Prisons, was last seen at a Washington health club, where she had gone to cancel her membership. She was planning to go back home to Modesto, Calif., and attend her graduation at the University of Southern California.

According to news reports, Condit admitted to a romantic relationship with Levy during his third interview with D.C. police and the FBI last Friday.

Police requested the third meeting because they were "uncomfortable" with what they had learned in the first two interviews, said Executive Assistant Police Chief Terrance Gainer. "We challenged him for clarity," Gainer said. "He provided the clarity and answered each one of our questions."

HELD: Woman talks to Fort Worth police

problems could have led to the abuse, which is believed to have occurred in Odessa and to have lasted the past two or three weeks.

"It was relayed to me that the mother was under a large amount of stress and she wasn't able to handle the child and that's why she did what she did," said Lt. Duane Paul, Fort Worth Police spokesperson. "The baby was crying and upsetting her and she just wasn't able to handle it."

Investigators believe Mrs. Ramirez broke the baby's legs while changing her diaper, and evidence indicates she broke the baby's ribs by squeezing her too hard, Paul said.

The other Ramirez child has been temporarily placed with the grandmother, but police do not believe the 25-year-old father was involved in the abuse.

"The husband is not the issue. The mother is the one being charged," said Officer Sherri Thompson, Odessa Police spokesperson.

As of Monday, Mrs. Ramirez had not been arraigned, Ms. Thompson said.

"(Mrs. Ramirez) is being evasive and not real clear about how the injury occurred," said Odessa Police Cap. D.C. Orren.

Orren said investigators found the Ramirez home to be "normal with nothing out of place." Neighbors of the Ramirezes said they knew nothing of the family, nor the incident.

The Associated Press contributed to this article.

TEST: Police may search landfills for intern

(From 1A)

Lowell deflected questions about whether Condit had confessed to an affair with Levy.

"We understand that the Levy family wants to do all it can to find Chandra but police have stated that they are fully satisfied with Congressman Condit's cooperation and with the answers to every single question they have posed," said Lowell. "Surely the time has come to focus less on Congressman Condit and more on the 99 other people police have identified who might be as helpful in providing information that could find Chandra."

Police have said they have interviewed roughly 100 people in the probe.

"Nothing can be ruled out now because, again, you know, until we can answer that question of what happened to her and find her one way or the other, we're going to have to continue to trace and retrace steps," District of Columbia Police Chief Charles Ramsey told reporters Monday.

He said police may also expand their search area to landfills. "That's just covering bases and making sure we look at all possibilities," he said.

In California, Susan Levy, responding to a shouted question as she emerged from her house in Modesto, said, "All we really want is the truth to come out now."

Levy family presses Condit to take lie detector test

By Brian Melley
Associated Press

MODESTO, Calif. — The mother of missing federal intern Chandra Levy said Monday that Rep. Gary Condit should take a lie detector test.

Standing at the door to her home, Susan Levy urged Condit "to come ahead and take the polygraph test and to help us find our daughter and bring her home, back to us alive and unhurt.

"I'm not accusing anybody of anything," she added, "but I think there is truth out there and someone knows the truth."

Chandra Levy, 24, was last seen in Washington, D.C., on April 30. Over the weekend, a source speaking on condition of anonymity said that the 53-year-old Condit, in his third interview with police and the FBI, told investigators for the first time that he had a romantic relationship with Levy.

In Washington, Condit lawyer Abbe Lowell said the congressman has cooperated with police and was willing to give them access to his apartment.

Lowell said Condit was ready to give investigators telephone and cell phone records and would make his staff available for questioning.

"The congressman will provide whatever additional information or material he can to police," Lowell said.

He said that if the police ask about a lie detector test he would discuss it with Condit, but he expressed doubt about the general usefulness of polygraphs.

The Levys' attorney, Billy Martin, said at a Washington news conference that the missing woman's family had specific questions for Condit.

Martin said he wrote to Condit's lawyer asking about the congressman's relationship with Levy, including when he last saw her, how they met and the nature of the relationship.

Earlier, in an interview on CNN's "Larry King Live," Martin said Condit's credibility is "suspect" but the family was not accusing him of anything.

"We have no information, no evidence at all to say that Congressman Condit has done anything wrong," Martin said. "What's troubling to the family is that he's not been helpful."

Washington police have said Condit is not a suspect in Levy's disappearance.

In his home district, support for Condit waned among some constituents while others continued to back him.

"He's let me down," said Elaine Tindle, 67. "He was really so good and I had confidence in him. He's lost my confidence."

Each morning, Tindle and three other women walk laps at a mall as they discuss the news of the day and whatever else is on their minds. Lately the hot topic has been Condit, and the group thinks the six-term Democrat ought to resign, Tindle said.

"I feel like he's got nothing to do with her disappearance, but all this other stuff coming out has put a black mark on him," she said.

Some see the story as an attempt by the media to bring down a local hero.

"I think they ought to find something out before they start persecuting him," said Jim Pilchard, an 84-year-old from Condit's hometown of Ceres. "I think the press should keep their noses out of everybody's damn business."

Some voters were bitter when Condit snubbed the local Fourth of July parades where he has been a fixture for years, but many said they were taking a wait-and-see approach before judging him.

Condit said later that he missed the parades because he was flying back to Washington so his wife, Carolyn, could be interviewed by investigators.

In this city of 189,000 that still has a small-town feel, voters say they are upset over the thought that Condit may have had an affair and lied about it.

Still, some stand behind Condit.

Todd Knutson, a 25-year-old who went to high school with Levy and has voted for Condit, said he supports the man once considered a "shining star for this area."

But Knutson also said he is a realist, and as far as Condit's future is concerned, he said: "I think he's done."

Midlander 'stable' after accident on Highway 80

By D. Lance Lunsford
Staff Writer

A Midland man was listed in stable condition after his car was smashed by an oncoming truck on Highway 80 at about 8 p.m. Monday.

Bradley Adams, 25, of Midland tried to cross westbound traffic by pulling out of the eastbound service road to access Highway 80 toward Midland, police at the scene said. Witnesses said Adams was behind a white car and followed that vehicle through the intersection without coming to a complete stop. He was hit by a F-350 Ford Pickup driven by Steven Schuelke, 31, of Midland who was on his way to work on an oil rig in Iraan.

"I was on my way to pick up my motor man," Schuelke said.

Acknowledging that his truck was probably totaled, he shrugged saying his own insurance covered his vehicle.

"It's pretty-well gone," he said. "But, I don't know about (the other vehicle)."

Passenger Jeff Holcomb, 31, of Midland said the wreck was inescapable.

"Doing about 60 miles per hour, we couldn't stop this big, old truck," Holcomb said. "I could see it coming, too."

Burned rubber etched into the pavement, marked about 30 yards worth of braking attempted by Schuelke. The strike of Schuelke's truck landed in the rear section of Adams' vehicle, sparing more excessive injuries as opposed to a direct hit in the driver-side door.

Emergency crews pulled Adams from the vehicle, strapping him to a backboard and transporting him to Midland Memorial Hospital for treatment.

Department of Public Safety Trooper David Galvan said Adams suffered neck and back injuries, but was considered in stable condition.

Doctors: 8-year-old boy who survived Florida shark attack may have suffered brain damage

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — An 8-year-old boy attacked by a shark over the weekend suffered harm to virtually every organ because of massive blood loss and may have brain damage, a doctor said Monday.

Jessie Arbogast's arm — reattached after it was pried out of the shark's mouth and delivered to surgeons — was healing well. But the boy remained in critical condition Monday after at least six surgeries to repair damage from Friday night's attack.

Jessie Arbogast

Dr. Rex Northup said Jessie arrived at the hospital with no blood pressure, no pulse and damage to "literally his entire body."

"Because of the shark injuries and loss of blood associated with that, his brain did go through a period of time with a very low amount of blood flow," Northup said. "If we can get another several days behind us where things don't deteriorate, we'll be happy with that."

Dr. Jack Tyson, a trauma surgeon at Baptist Hospital where the arm was reattached, said it was clear the boy was not brain dead after he and other doctors changed the dressings on his wounds and examined him Monday night. Northup said a new brain wave study showed he was relatively stable.

"It has the appearance at this point in time of perhaps someone who is in a deep sleep, that there plainly is still electrical activity," Northup said. "He does seem to respond to things that are painful or bothersome to him."

Jessie, who has been undergoing dialysis at Sacred Heart Children's Hospital since he went into kidney failure Sunday, has not been able to talk with family members.

"He has done a little bit of a spontaneous eye opening and blinking of his eyes, but at this point is not coherent," Northup said.

Northup said circulation in the reattached arm and in the severely gashed leg was good, though he said that the boy likely would be unable to use the arm for up to 18 months.

"By no means is he out of the woods," said Sacred Heart spokesman Clay DeStafano. "There's still the possibility that he won't survive at all."

The Ocean Springs, Miss., boy was attacked Friday evening in the surf at the Fort Pickens section of the Gulf Islands National Seashore in the Florida Panhandle.

His uncle, Vance Flosenzier, of Mobile, Ala., wrestled the 7-foot-long bull shark to shore with help of another beachgoer, said Megan MacPherson, a spokeswoman for Flosenzier. She said Flosenzier does not want to comment or release any information about himself and that he did not know the identity of the person who helped him.

"He's a big guy. He got hold of it and tossed it ashore," District Ranger Supervisor John Bandurski said of Flosenzier.

Ranger Jared Klein then shot the shark four times with a 9 mm pistol and pried its jaw open with a police baton. Volunteer firefighter Tony Thomas used a clamp to pull the boy's severed arm from the shark's gullet.

The boy was airlifted to Baptist Hospital about 30 minutes after the attack, said Tyson, who met him in the emergency room.

"In terms of circulating blood, I think he was fairly empty," Tyson said. "Friday night I had a dead child."

Transplanted Texas restaurant plays host to president

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush dropped in on a fellow Texas transplant Monday night, indulging his Tex-Mex cravings at a restaurant that followed him here from the Lone Star state.

The president, first lady Laura Bush, Commerce Secretary Don Evans and some friends dined in a private room at Jean Georges, which opened at the Watergate Hotel in April under the boastful slogan that its Austin original was "a favorite of George W. and Laura" when they lived at the Texas governor's mansion.

True to its roots, the restaurant featured Texas-sized prices ($35 for a ribeye steak with Roquefort mashed potatoes), but details were hard to come by.

A manager identifying himself as Jim hung up on a reporter calling to ask about the presidential party's visit. On second try, a woman answering the restaurant's phone said, "We're not talking about it" and also hung up.

One dead, scores stranded in West Virginia flood

By Randy Coleman
Associated Press

MULLENS, W.Va. — Red mud filled thousands of homes and kept drivers stuck on mountain roads Monday after flash floods washed through the narrow valleys of southern West Virginia's depressed coal country, carrying off mobile homes and forcing residents to their rooftops.

Officials said up to 3,000 homes were damaged by water or mudslides, and some were destroyed. Police wouldn't let anyone drive cars down the hill into Mullens on Monday because so much mud filled the town after record flash flooding. Down the Guyandotte River, mud blocked roads into the town of Pineville.

"I've been in some of these homes. There's mud two feet thick," said state Del. Lacy Wright. "There's instances where they don't even know where their homes are."

At least one person was killed in southern West Virginia as thunderstorms sped through the region Sunday. Two people were killed in neighboring eastern Kentucky, more than two dozen families were evacuated in southwestern Virginia and thousands lost power in West Virginia, Indiana, Ohio and North Carolina.

The total cost of the damage was well over $20 million, said State Department of Military and Public Safety Secretary Joe Martin.

West Virginia Gov. Bob Wise, whose helicopter was used to pluck people off rooftops, had declared a state of emergency in eight counties.

"Let no one underestimate the severity of this flood," Wise said. "This is probably going to be the most costly flood in West Virginia's history."

Flooding after heavy rain is routine in the region, where most homes, roads and railroad tracks are squeezed together along creeks and rivers at the bottom of narrow valleys between steep mountains.

Nearly 8 inches of rain fell Sunday at Mullens, 55 miles south of Charleston, the National Weather Service said.

The Guyandotte and Tug Fork rivers jumped to record levels within hours, the Guyandotte peaking Sunday at 18 feet in Pineville, passing the 1997 record of 17.7 feet. A flood gauge in Welch quit working when the Tug Fork hit 17.8 feet, more than 4 feet above flood stage, the weather service said. Wright said the water rose 5 or 6 feet over Welch's 15-foot flood wall.

'We just cleaned up a couple of months ago and now this is worse. I'm getting tired of this.'
— Doug Acord
Corinne resident

The U.S. Geologic Survey said flooding on parts of the Guyandotte River exceeded the 100-year flood level, the estimated maximum expected in a 100-year period.

"It's never happened here like this," said Bill Wade, 82. "I saw a school bus completely covered in water. I saw a casket floating down the street. I saw motor homes and mobile homes floating in front of me."

The same region was hit by repeated storms from May 15 through June 11, causing millions of dollars in damage. Sixteen counties were eligible for some type of federal disaster assistance from that flood, including most of those flooded again Sunday.

"I might leave now," said Doug Acord, 47, in Corinne, where the Guyandotte River normally is around 6 inches deep but ran about 20 feet deep on Sunday. "We just cleaned up a couple of months ago and now this is worse. I'm getting tired of this."

The region's employment and population have plunged in the past 10 years, partly because new machinery has meant fewer people are needed to work in the coal mines that dominate the economy.

Wyoming County has lost 11 percent of its population since 1990 and now has 25,708 residents, according to the last census. McDowell County has lost 22 percent. McDowell's unemployment rate was 7.9 percent in May and Wyoming's was 6.4 percent, compared to a state rate of 5.1 percent. Many of those who remain in the area are elderly.

In the McDowell County town of Kimball, stores were covered with mud, windows were broken and wooden fronts were caved in.

"We're just completely in shock. This whole town is gone," said Donna Gianato, 36, who operated Gianato Hardware with her husband.

Asked if his town would rebuild, Kimball Mayor Jack Premo said: "I would put a big question mark beside that."

Being different pays!

I asked the salesman why should I buy his product. He answered, "Price, product, and quality." And, that was all I got. Was I frustrated? Certainly. He lost the sale because his product seemed like all the others.

Is it important to really be different? No. The differences need to exist in your customers' eyes only. Most businesses never point out any differences at all. They only say "buy from me." Give customers a clear and compelling reason why they should buy from you rather than somebody else.

You need to state these reasons so that your potential customers understand the differences instantly. You're telling potential customers exactly why they should buy from you and reminding current customers why they continue to deal with you. Since I'm not smart enough to describe it better, I'm calling these reasons "Unique Core Differentiators."

Call N. Mott Williamson at 915-686-9992 today to reserve your place at their next seminar on July 18.

My use of the word "core" is no accident. The things that make your business unique must infect your entire business. This includes your team members, the way you deal with your customers, and the way your business presents itself. Again, your customers must perceive the differences positively.

Here's a well-known example. Federal Express has a great Unique Core Differentiator that says it all—Absolutely Positively Overnight! The company promoted this statement and created a positive image in every customer's mind. They found something that made them stand out. Federal Express didn't offer an empty promise. They honed their operation so they could deliver. You know the result.

Here's another example. Many people don't like going to the dentist. The first line of one particular practice's booklet explains their difference perfectly. 'Our aim is to make you enjoy coming to see us.' This particular practice goes even further. They identified enough differences to fill a 12-page booklet. And they give this booklet to every client! You can't hire this dentist. He accepts only referred patients and lives in Australia.

Give customers a clear and compelling reason why they should buy from you rather than somebody else.

Start with the frustrations that customers have in dealing with your type of business. Then identify ways you can dramatically reduce these problems. Then promote this fact and have that promise control all your business activity. Everyone will gain, your customers, your team members, and you.

Call 915-686-9992 today to reserve your place at our next seminar Wednesday July 18 from 2:00-5:30 p.m. Start improving your business for an investment of only $90.

Lewellen improves your home seamlessly

"As dry as it's been for several years now, I'm amazed at how many people are having us install seamless rain gutters," puzzles Bill Lewellen, owner of Lewellen Construction. "We know it will rain again someday and when it does, people who have seamless gutters installed now will be ready."

Lewellen's state-of-the-art seamless gutter former turns out great-looking gutters that never need painting in your choice of 20 colors. You can have them install gutters all around your home to protect the foundation and the paint from rain damage—or you can just put guttering around a porch or an area with a particular runoff problem.

Having Lewellen's professionals install your guttering is a good idea. "Many well-intentioned homeowners aren't aware of techniques for keeping runoff from falling short or overshooting the gutter, rendering it useless," notes Bill. Lewellen's crews, on the other hand, know how many brackets to use for proper support, the degree of slope required for the water to flow to the downspout and other procedures learned from experience.

If you're looking for something with a more immediate payback, consider your windows. If they're drafty or if they're painted shut, summer is the perfect time to let Lewellen replace them with insulated windows. CertainTeed vinyl replacement windows with Thermaflect ™ glazing open and close easily and they can reduce the sun's heat by 70 percent compared with clear glass windows. And, because the color goes all the way through the vinyl, the color can't scratch or peel off, so you'll never have to paint them. These windows come with a lifetime warranty on materials and

CertainTeed's SureStart™ coverage pays 100 percent of the cost of replacing a defective window for up to five years.

Another way Lewellen can enhance the beauty and functionality of your home's exterior is with a patio cover from Amerimax. Whether you'd prefer a lattice cover to reduce but not eliminate the sun, or a solid cover for some deep shade, Lewellen can accommodate your desires. Amerimax's patio covers are made of alumawood®, which keeps its new look for years and years, unlike real wood.

If you have questions, or would like to see color samples and examples of Lewellen's work (gutters, windows, storm doors, siding, patio covers), go by their showroom at 908 South Garfield, just south of the railroad track.

If you're thinking of siding, Bill has some suggestions on how to evaluate bids you may have received. "Make sure you know what work is included in bids from each company. A bid may be lower because less work is being done." On the other hand, an extremely high bid may include unneeded extras—or it may just cover the higher overhead typical of some national companies with no real local representation.

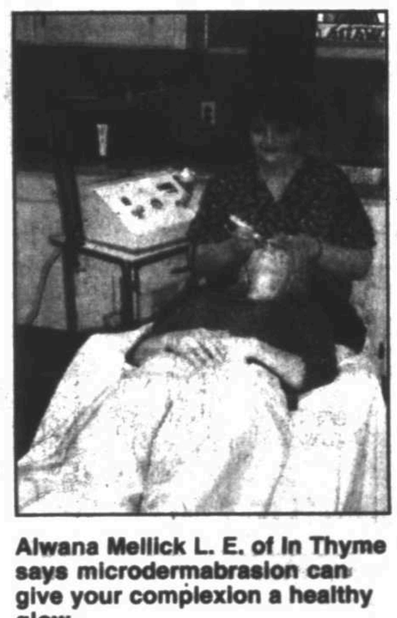
Lewellen's free estimates include a complete listing of work to be done. You'll know exactly what you're getting from Lewellen Construction.

Lewellen Construction has been in business for 25 years, the last 19 of those in Midland. Their address is 908 South Garfield. They are open 9-5 Monday through Friday. The phone number is 570-5551.

Rejuvenate your skin

The warm sun can be nice, but in West Texas it can dry and damage your skin over the years. Alwana Mellick L. E., owner of In Thyme Skin and Body Care, says a treatment called microdermabrasion, followed by a series of aftercare treatments, can give your skin a lasting healthy glow.

Microdermabrasion is designed to remove the upper layer of damaged skin and allow healthy new skin to replace it. Alwana declares that the real key is aftercare. "We usually do microdermabrasion as part of a series of six treatments. Maintenance treatments are designed to nourish the skin to prolong that healthy glow."



Alwana Mellick L. E. of In Thyme says microdermabrasion can give your complexion a healthy glow.

Alwana uses an antioxidant facial in the aftercare treatments to reduce free radicals that contribute to cell damage and aging. After all, if your skin is sun damaged, it didn't become that way overnight—and it will take more than one treatment to give you the look you desire.

Alwana is thoroughly trained as a Licensed Esthetician. She completed the level two Advanced Course on Medical Esthetics at the University of Pittsburg in Philadelphia, PA.

In Thyme Skin and Body Care is located at 111 North C, across from Hospice of Midland. They offer a wide range of skin and body care treatments including laser hair removal. Call 685-1995 for an appointment.

Southwest's Summerfest features cool flooring deals, no payments for 8 months

When was the last time you replaced your carpeting or other flooring? If you can't remember, it may indicate that it was a long time ago—meaning it's a good idea to look at replacing it this summer. That would make Southwest Floors' From now until September first, you'll have eight months of no payments, interest deferred on any flooring you buy at Southwest Floors. That means you don't have to make a payment until after Christmas.

If you're ready to replace worn carpeting or outdated linoleum but aren't sure what you need, let the experienced pros at Southwest help you. They're familiar with what carpet is best for different lifestyles—from heavy traffic to elegant living areas—and can advise you on the best carpet for your home.

Now through September first, take advantage of Southwest Floors' "no payments, no interest for eight months" sale.

The most useful rule, budget-wise, is to buy the best carpet or flooring you can afford. Southwest sells only top quality carpet because anything less will likely stretch or wear out prematurely—and even poor carpet costs too much to be replaced over and over again.

"We want our customers to be happy with the floor they bought for a long time," Robert says, adding, "Our business was built on reputation."

To get the maximum enjoyment from even the best carpet, it must be installed properly. Here's another area where Southwest Floors excels. "We have the best carpet installation crews in town," Robert announces. He knows, because Robert started out in the carpet business as an installer himself. All of Southwest's installers have served apprenticeships before becoming master installers. That means they have plenty of experience before being sent out on their own.

Southwest's crews will move your furniture out at no extra charge.

Southwest also sells ceramic tile, hardwood floors, laminated wood, Armstrong and Nafco floors. Robert says he's seen a real increase in tile and other hard floors in recent years, for two reasons. "One, they're easy to maintain and keep clean. Second, they last and last and last."

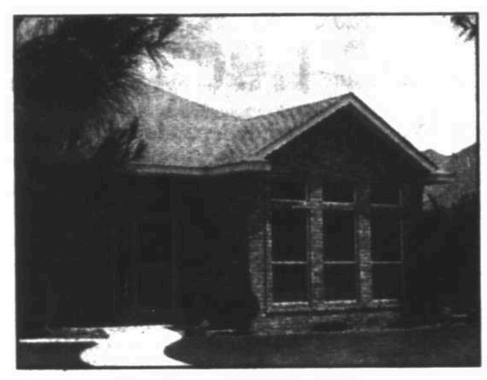
If you buy during this sale, you'll have a whole eight months to pay off your flooring without owing any interest. Or you can just wait and start paying after the eight months is up. Either way, Southwest Floors offers you a great way to redo your floors during the quieter summer months. Go by today and dream of how much more inviting your home can look with brand new carpet.

Southwest Floors was opened by Robert Burton in 1990. They carry a wide selection of carpet, tile, wood and vinyl flooring. The address is 1113 Andrews Highway, next to McDonald's. The phone number is 689-9312. Store hours are 9-5:30 Monday through Friday and 10-1 Saturday. They accept Visa, Master Card, American Express and Discover.

Window film from Mid West blocks ultraviolet rays

Your home and its furnishings are probably your biggest investment. The West Texas sun can attack all that with its blazing heat and damaging ultraviolet rays. Window film from Mid West Glass protects your home from the sun and in other ways. There are several types of film, each of which has its own protective features.

Reflective films block up to 80 percent of the sun's heat. If you have a west-facing room with lots of windows, you'll feel the difference after having Mid West install film, especially now that hot weather is here to stay. There, window film may actually save money on air conditioning costs. Reflective films can also provide privacy.



Window film from Mid West Glass beautifully protects your home from heat and UV rays.

If your furniture, carpeting, decorative accessories, drapes and other items are fading, films that block up to 100 percent of UV rays are available.

One misconception about film is that its protective value depends on how dark it is. Mid West's Brandon Herring points out that very dark film, if it is not also reflective, can actually absorb heat.

Mid West also sells security film that resists shattering. This film can't be punctured by most blunt objects and is very difficult to. If you're concerned about windows that could be broken by a baseball or golf ball, this film could be for you.

Not only are you gaining protection with film, you're gaining a beautiful home. Films come in a wide range of attractive colors.

"A lot of our customers like the way film makes their home look, as much as they like the heat blocking or the UV protection," Brandon relates.

Window film is surprisingly affordable, especially when compared to the cost of new windows. Films work on all types and shapes of windows including single or double pane, as well as sliding glass doors, French doors, storm doors, bay windows—basically anything with glass in it. All residential films have a lifetime warranty on color and against peeling, bubbling and cracking.

If you've been keeping the drapes closed for privacy or for protection from heat and UV damage, call Mid West Glass and start enjoying those windows again!

Mid-West Glass offers glass and windows for any use, as well as patio rooms. Located at 906 W. Front, the phone number for a free estimate is 682-7373.

West Texas Painting and Tile gives old fashioned value

After 18 years in a business he took over from his father, Gilbert Rodriguez has earned the trust of a long list of clients. "I have more than one customer who just gives me a list of needed repairs and tells me to do the work and send a bill. I appreciate having earned that level of trust," Gilbert relates.

That list of work can include interior and exterior painting, drywall repairs, glass replacement, installation of tile for floors, countertops, baths, showers, patios walkways and just about anywhere—stone work for walkways, fences, patios...even complete remodels.

One recent job began as a shower pan leak repair and ended up involving structural work due to the discovery of termite damage. Because Gilbert and his associates did all the work, the homeowner was not saddled with having to hire several contractors.

West Texas Painting and Tile is now expanding into commercial work as well as residential. They are insured and bonded.

There's no need to put off that paint job, tile work, fence building or any other home repair project. Call the company you can trust—West Texas Painting and Tile.

West Texas Painting and Tile is owned by Gilbert Rodriguez. The phone number is 683-4888.

Terra Nova tests may not be necessary

Midland Independent School District Superintendent Robert Nicks is continuing to demonstrate why he was enthusiastically selected for the school district's top job.

Most recently, Nicks has suggested the district take a second look at the wisdom of continuing the costly, perhaps pointless, Terra Nova testing of elementary students in the district.

The Terra Nova tests costs MISD more than $100,000 every year.

Many teachers complain that the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TAAS) test is already enough of a burden. While others continue to argue the TAAS is a necessary measuring tool for academic progress, many more make a strong case that we are concentrating too heavily on test-taking.

TAAS is a mandatory test. Terra Nova is optional.

In an effort to determine the value of Terra Nova testing, Nicks said he plans to talk to teachers and other district personnel. It's a wise move. By visiting campuses and talking to teachers, we have a hunch Nicks will get an accurate read on whether the district ought to continue Terra Nova testing.

Perhaps, it's an old-fashioned notion, but we think teachers ought to be allowed instructional time with their students that focuses on developing their overall pool of knowledge. We favor a curriculum that allows for lecture, discussion and the fostering of critical thinking. We admire teachers who go the extra mile to offer a stimulating classroom environment, even though it may not provide a quick, easy spike in standardized test scores.

The final blow to the future of Terra Nova testing at MISD might well have been this past year's administrative ball fumbling which delayed Terra Nova scores that would have helped determine students' eligibility for summer school.

We admire Nicks' ability to ask the simple question, "Why?"

Sometimes programs or positions in an enormous bureaucracy outlive their usefulness. But too often those routine entities quietly continue to absorb time and money and get penciled in for next year out of habit.

Nicks is setting a new tone at the central office.

He already has vowed to have a balanced budget next year and has begun to scrutinize otherwise-routine purchase orders.

Is Terra Nova testing necessary or beneficial to MISD students?

That remains to be seen.

But we are heartened to see that someone is asking the question.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, July 10, the 191st day of 2001. There are 174 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 10, 1951, armistice talks aimed at ending the Korean conflict began at Kaesong.

On this date:

In 1850, Vice President Millard Fillmore assumed the presidency, following the death of President Taylor.

In 1890, Wyoming became the 44th state.

In 1919, President Wilson personally delivered the Treaty of Versailles to the Senate, and urged its ratification.

In 1925, the official news agency of the Soviet Union, TASS, was established.

In 1940, during World War II, the 114-day Battle of Britain began as Nazi forces began attacking southern England by air.

In 1943, during World War II, U.S. and British forces invaded Sicily.

In 1962, the Telstar communications satellite was launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

In 1973, the Bahamas became independent after three centuries of British colonial rule.

In 1999, the United States women's soccer team won the World Cup, beating China 5-4 on penalty kicks at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

Ten years ago: Boris N. Yeltsin took the oath of office as the first elected president of the Russian republic. President George H.W. Bush lifted economic sanctions against South Africa. President Bush announced he was appointing Alan Greenspan to a second term as Federal Reserve chairman.

Five years ago: In a tough speech to Congress laying out conditions for Mideast negotiations, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu demanded that Syria and the Palestinians stop terrorists from attacking Israel.

One year ago: Texas Gov. George W. Bush, facing a skeptical audience, told the NAACP convention in Baltimore that "the party of Lincoln has not always carried the mantle of Lincoln," and promised to work to improve relations.

O'Connor has disparities on death penalty, abortion

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor told the Minnesota Women Lawyers last week of her concern that the death penalty is unfair and that it's possible innocent people have been executed. She offered no evidence to support her statement, something a lawyer arguing before her would never be allowed to get away with. She did say six death row inmates were freed last year and 90 have been exonerated by new evidence since 1973.

Thomas

O'Connor noted that DNA testing might alleviate some of her concerns if more states that allow capital punishment passed laws mandating such testing after conviction. She also said defendants who have money often get better defense lawyers than defendants who are poor.

The exoneration of some death row inmates is not an argument in favor of eliminating capital punishment but a testimony to the fairness of a system skewed toward protecting the accused, sometimes to the detriment of justice. Universal DNA testing, where warranted, would make the system even more trustworthy, as would better lawyers for those unable to afford expensive ones.

What's most interesting about O'Connor's speech is that she seems to project on condemned killers an inalienable right to live. Yet, O'Connor does not project a similar view on pre-born babies, even as they are in the process of exiting the birth canal. She has written as much while casting swing votes upholding abortion on demand.

O'Connor lacks a unified legal and moral life ethic. She has written of a "possible" constitutional right to assisted suicide (Washington vs. Glucksberg, 1997), even though she voted with the majority in that case to uphold state laws that prohibit physician-assisted suicide.

In the case of Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Pennsylvania vs. Casey (1992), which upheld Roe vs. Wade, O'Connor was with the 5-4 majority that reaffirmed the "right" of a woman to kill her pre-born child, even while the majority recognized the State's "legitimate interests" in protecting both the health of the pregnant woman and "the life of the fetus that may become a child."

By the time of Stenberg vs. Carhart (2000), the Nebraska case in which that state sought to prohibit partial birth abortions — a procedure that sucks the brains from a baby as it is in the process of being born — O'Connor wrote that the law was unconstitutional because the state lacked the requisite exception "for the preservation of the ... health of the mother." Oops. The statement begs the question of how a woman can be a mother when the court had decided earlier that what she is carrying is a "fetus that may become a child." Any abortionist will state that the "health" of the woman is in jeopardy, if only to collect the fee. Abortionists aren't about to refer a "client" to a crisis pregnancy center where she'll be told the truth and offered help for herself and her baby without charge.

In Stenberg, O'Connor wrote that the issue of abortion "is one of the most contentious and controversial in contemporary American society." She neglected to mention the Supreme Court made it even more contentious and controversial by deciding the issue for itself, rather than letting the people's elected representatives hash it out.

She also said the issue presents "virtually irreconcilable points of view." Couldn't the same be said of capital punishment? O'Connor is squeamish about killing convicted murderers to protect a few she suspects are "probably" innocent, but she expresses no qualms about killing the preborn, whom we know are all innocent.

Why won't O'Connor at least call for more safeguards for the pre-born and for women before an abortion is allowed? Last week, one TV network reported on a new type of sonogram called "4-D." The image on the screen of a fully formed baby was so sharp it could have been a home movie of a child trying to swim. What the reporter didn't say was that the baby could be killed if the woman carrying it so decided. Why can't we have laws requiring abortion-minded women to see the image of the baby within them before they have an abortion? Wouldn't that be consumer-friendly full disclosure in the spirit of truth-in-labeling-laws?

If Justice O'Connor believes it's a good idea to improve safeguards for convicted killers, only a small fraction of whom may, in fact, be innocent, and if she's leaning toward eliminating the death penalty without those safeguards, as she seemed to be suggesting in her Minnesota speech, why not offer similar safeguards to the pre-born, the most certifiably innocent among us?

CIA analysts minimize Chinese threat

WASHINGTON — "New Beijing, Great Olympics" is the slogan entrancing the International Olympic Committee. If IOC boss Juan Antonio Samaranch prevails, Beijing will be the site of the 2008 Games; thus will the IOC's financial corruption find its soulmate in China's savage political corruption.

The world of sport is poised to condone the regime's imprisonment of U.S. citizens and residents, encourage its crackdown on dissidents in a modern version of "scholar pitting," and reward the recent systematic torture and murder of more than 220 peaceful adherents of the Falun Gong.

Safire

President Bush's reaction is to shrug and say that where our Olympic athletes compete is of no concern to him. He then pays lip service to human rights by mentioning the arrests of Americans to President Jiang Zemin toward the end of a phone call.

Why the kowtow? Apparently Bush feels the need to do penance for having blurted out a commitment to help Taiwan defend itself in case of invasion, an overdue change of policy out of which the State Department is still trying to wriggle.

Another reason is a dumb diplomatic deal: In return for Bush's acquiescence in the Beijing Olympics — sweetened by our release of $80 million of frozen Iraqi money to pay China for dual-use telecommunications equipment shipped to Saddam Hussein — the Chinese agreed to support Colin Powell's bid for "smart sanctions" in the Security Council. (The Chinese knew the Russians would block Powell's plan with their veto threat, and so got plenty for nothing.)

But the basic reason for Bush's waffling on China is this: The White House has long been getting a warped assessment of the Chinese threat from the Central Intelligence Agency.

Thanks to a national security scoop by Bill Gertz of The Washington Times, we learn that a commission of outside experts — reluctantly appointed by the CIA at the behest of the bipartisan Senate Intelligence Committee, then chaired by Sen. Richard Shelby of Alabama — recently concluded that our intelligence community suffered from an "institutional predisposition" to misinterpret data from China.

The commission led by retired Gen. John Tilelli, former commander of our forces in South Korea, and including Harvard's Stephen Rosen, Princeton's Aaron Friedberg, former Ambassador (and CIA hand) James Lilley and recently named Pentagon official Peter Rodman, held that CIA analysts had "overreached" in minimizing China's military threat.

Based on the most sensitive data, the competitive analysis is highly classified. It follows by six months another secret report to the Pentagon by the defense strategist Andrew Marshall criticizing major "intelligence gaps" befogging our Asian assessments. The Senate ought to release sanitized versions of both reports.

The director of central intelligence is likely to resist such disclosure of institutional weakness. George Tenet, the Middle East diplomat who returns to Langley, Va., from time to time to warm the DCI's chair, will fight tooth, nail, cloak and dagger against the appointment of a long-term, internal "Team B" to challenge complacent China evaluation.

Decades ago, such an in-house alternative view shook up the agency's assessment of the Soviet Union's strength and intentions. Following up Gertz's story, I find support for a new "Team B" on Senate Intelligence; Tenet, once its staff director, knows he can grumble but must go along.

Will this constrain the kowtowing? Hawks hot for maintaining sanctions and starting Team B will be chilled to learn that the leading candidate to chair the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board is Brent Scowcroft. He's the guy the last President Bush sent to Beijing in secret, just after the massacre in Tiananmen Square, to tell Jiang not to be upset at what we had to say in public.

It's bombs away for residents on Nantucket island

There is now talk on Martha's Vineyard that the Navy is looking at Nantucket as a replacement for bombing and target practice on Vieques, Puerto Rico.

A source who could not be named told me, "Nantucket is perfect for bombing and strafing. It has sandy beaches and the Navy is willing to buy the few houses on the island."

Buchwald

"Won't the residents be angry?"

"We'll only bomb the beaches and the town. The Marines will use their tanks to practice taking the harbor."

"It sounds good to the people living on Martha's Vineyard," I said.

"We are getting resistance from some of the natives on Nantucket. They want to know why the Navy doesn't use Martha's Vineyard instead."

He continued, "Martha's Vineyard has too many people on it, and they don't want to be disturbed. Besides, the only good beach target is always crowded with topless bathers."

"Do you have any angry people trying to stop you by protesting the use of Nantucket for target practice?"

"Yes, the green people — they are called green because they wear green pants with white whales on them — have threatened to picket the area as soon as the shooting starts."

"That should make it fun," I said.

"But if they go on any property that is off-limits, they will be arrested and thrown into jail."

"Look," the man said. "We're not just setting up a shooting gallery. We have to test somewhere, and what makes Nantucket so attractive is that it is out to sea, and removed from the mainland. It's the perfect place for planting land mines."

"When do you think you will have it ready?"

"Well, Bush has ordered Vieques closed in 2003, but I would say next August. The haggling over the real estate will begin soon. The people on the island have inflated ideas of what their houses are worth and we must stay within the Pentagon budget. We also have to think of the taxpayers, who wouldn't want us to pay too much for the land."

"What can people on Martha's Vineyard do to make the people on Nantucket happy?"

"Treat them with respect and sympathy. Open up your homes to them. Take them clamming and let them know you care. As usual, someone has to be a political pawn in a situation like this, and better them than you. I have to go now and dredge the Nantucket Harbor."

NAACP president calls for recommitment to racial equality

By Deborah Kong
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — NAACP president Kweisi Mfume invoked memories of the civil rights group's founding in 1909 as he asked its members Monday to recommit themselves to fighting for racial equality.

"We found a way to help a nation divided against itself through the confusion and turbulence of the 1960s," Mfume said in his keynote address to the NAACP's 92nd annual convention. "It is now a matter of having still yet a long way to go."

Speaking to about 4,800 people at a packed convention center hall, Mfume mentioned a lengthy list of issues on which he wants to see progress.

They include making health care affordable to everyone, cleaning up the environment, reforming the electoral system, ending the AIDS epidemic, removing the Confederate flag from public places and stopping hate crimes.

Mfume said Sunday that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People also is preparing to sue the paint industry in an effort to hold it accountable for health problems linked to lead in paint. He didn't say which companies would be sued and made no mention of that effort in his speech.

If NAACP members feel they face a difficult task now, they should remember the obstacles the group has already overcome, Mfume said.

About the time Mfume spoke on Monday, White House spokesman Ari Fleischer reacted sharply to NAACP board chairman Julian Bond's attack on the Bush administration in his speech to the convention Sunday night.

Bush has "appeased the wretched appetites of the extreme right wing, and he picked Cabinet officials whose devotion to the Confederacy is nearly canine in its uncritical affection," Bond said.

Fleischer said Bond's remarks were "excessive."

"The comments made by Mr. Bond are another reminder about why the tone in Washington needs to be changed," Fleischer said.

The spokesman added that "those remarks were not made under Kweisi Mfume's leadership, when Kweisi Mfume was president of the NAACP."

A reporter reminded Fleischer that Mfume is still the NAACP president, but the spokesman seemed not to notice that he misspoke. Bond assailed the civil rights records of Interior Secretary Gale Norton, a former Colorado attorney general, and Attorney General John Ashcroft.

The administration's tax cut and its faith-based initiative, which would allow government funds to flow to churches, mosques and synagogues that seek to ease social woes, were also targets of criticism.

Bush has asserted that church-based groups receiving government funds should be able to refuse employment to people outside their religion. Critics, including Bond, contend this could amount to government-funded discrimination.

Bond also said the Bush administration's tax cut "placed funding for important programs in a lockbox, raiding the treasury for a decade, closing the door on government aid for children, for schools, for the poor.

"This is government of the rich, by the rich and for the rich."

Neither Bond nor Mfume has met with Bush since he took office in January. However, Bush addressed the convention through a videotaped greeting on Monday.

"We must continue our work to make sure that my party keeps faith with the memory of Abraham Lincoln and Fredrick Douglass," Bush said.

Bush also said he had selected a diverse and well-qualified group of advisers including Secretary of State Colin Powell, Education Secretary Rod Paige, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice and Deputy Attorney General Larry Thompson.

Senate debates defense spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate neared passage Monday of legislation providing $6.5 billion for defense and widely varying other programs, a bill that has become a prop in the partisan battle over the shrinking federal surplus.

Senate approval was expected as early as today for the measure, which is mostly for the Pentagon but would do everything from helping the poor pay summer cooling bills to contributing $100 million to the United Nations' effort to halt the spread of AIDS. The House overwhelmingly passed a similar measure last month.

The backdrop of the spending bill debate is projected federal surpluses, which while still huge are shrinking because of the slumping economy and the cost of President Bush's recently enacted $1.35 trillion, 10-year tax cut.

The Senate bill, covering the remaining months in fiscal 2001, would provide $5.9 billion for the Pentagon and for Energy Department nuclear weapons and defense activities. Included is money for higher than anticipated fuel costs, higher salaries, the military's health care system, repairs to the bomb-damaged USS Cole, and development of the airborne laser and other weapons systems.

Chilean court rules Pinochet unfit to stand trial because of ill health

By Eduardo Gallardo
Associated Press

SANTIAGO, Chile — Gen. Augusto Pinochet cannot be tried on human rights charges because of his deteriorating health and mental condition, a divided court ruled Monday, effectively bringing the 85-year-old former dictator's legal troubles to an end.

The trial could theoretically resume if Pinochet's health improves, but that possibility is remote and even his staunchest opponents admitted that the general will never be held legally accountable for a military operation that killed scores of political prisoners shortly after he seized power in 1973.

"The ruling means that there is no hope now for scores of families that still expected that justice would be made," said Mireya Garcia, vice president of an organization of relatives of dissidents who disappeared after being arrested under Pinochet, who ruled Chile until 1990.

Hugo Gutierrez, one of the prosecutors, said the ruling "means that 11 years after democratic rule was restored, Chilean courts still have a long way to go to really make justice."

Pinochet's defense lawyer, Jose Eyzaguirre, lamented "that the ruling is based only on health grounds and not on legal considerations, because Gen. Pinochet is totally innocent."

But Pinochet's older son, also named Augusto, said the family reacted "with calm and satisfaction."

The 2-1 ruling by a three-judge panel of the Santiago Court of Appeals to suspend the legal action apparently brings to an end an odyssey that began when Pinochet went to London in October 1998 for back surgery.

British authorities unexpectedly arrested him at the request of a Spanish judge and kept him under house arrest for 16 months before releasing him on health grounds.

Pinochet returned to Chile in March 2000, but his immunity was lifted and he was forced to continue his legal battle in a country under civilian rule where the division over the former dictator was reflected by often violent demonstrations.

But after citing medical reports on Pinochet, the three-judge panel concluded: "He is not in a state of mental capacity that would allow him to efficiently exercise the judicial guarantees that he must enjoy throughout the legal procedure in order to have a just trial."

Pinochet, who earlier this year was diagnosed with "moderate dementia," now suffers from diabetes and arthritis, has a pacemaker and has had at least three mild strokes since 1998, according to his doctors. And in recent days doctors also grew worried over Pinochet's heart condition, retired Gen. Luis Cortes, a close Pinochet associate, said Monday.

The former dictator spent six days in the hospital last week and underwent dental surgery and treatment for high blood pressure. He remains at home under a treatment doctors describe as similar to the one at the hospital.

But prosecutors have expressed doubts about his real condition.

"I honestly hope that our courts of justice will not soon be subject to international shame by a sudden recovery of Pinochet," lawyer Hiram Villagra said.

Prosecutors announced they would seek a reversal of the ruling, but that could happen only if they prove the judges made a legal or technical mistake.

The government would not comment on Monday's ruling. "Court rulings are to be respected, not to be commented on," President Ricardo Lagos said. "The government is not satisfied or unsatisfied."

Chilean law exempts from penal responsibility only those pronounced mad or demented, but Pinochet's lawyers insisted that the retired general's deteriorated health prevents him from properly organizing his defense, thus depriving him of his constitutional right to a just trial.

"This is disappointing indeed but Pinochet will remain in history as having been spared from trial only because he is crazy," said Carmen Hertz, a prosecutor lawyer whose husband, journalist Carlos Berger, was one of the victims of the 1973 military operation.

But Pinochet can also have the charges dropped entirely by another panel in the same court that will open hearings in the coming days.

Dr. William F. Schulz, executive director of Amnesty International USA, said he was "greatly disappointed" that the charges against Pinochet are unlikely to be heard, but that "numerous other officials who committed human rights violations during his rule can and should be held accountable."

More than 60 military officers of various ranks have so far been tried for human rights violations under Pinochet, and about 10 have been sentenced to prison.

Despite Monday's ruling, Pinochet's arrest and trial are considered significant in a world where it's getting harder for leaders accused of atrocities to avoid facing the charges in their own countries — or elsewhere. The extradition of former Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic to a U.N. tribunal is only the latest example. Pinochet is charged in the "Caravan of Death," in which 75 political prisoners were killed shortly after the 1973 coup that ousted Marxist President Salvador Allende. Pinochet faces charges of covering up 18 kidnappings and 57 homicides.

State funding cuts to impact MISD

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

As state education funding reaches a 50-year low and property owners across the state have to make up the difference, the Midland Independent School District is stuck between a rock and a hard place.

Although the state of Texas has steadily increased funds to public education, the state's share of local funds has been on the decline. Since MISD is already at the legal limit for property tax funds, which is $1.50 per $100 property valuation, there is nowhere to turn but inwardly — and to deflate the district's swollen budget.

"There will be no tax increase at the local level ... and we couldn't even if we wanted to," said Dale Strauss, MISD's board president. "Secondly, I know (Superintendent Robert Nicks) is working hard at reviewing our budget, and we're going to economize as best we can and live within the revenues we have."

Nicks said the state has changed its policies, but not in accordance with what it costs to operate a school district.

"Anytime you look at state funding, you have to look at it from a historical standpoint," he said. "Over the years, although the total number of dollars that the state contributed toward education has increased, it has not kept pace with the cost of education."

Strauss agreed.

"The state will tell you they're spending more money on education than they ever have, but everybody likes to sound as good as they can," he said. "But the reality is that of the total amount that needs to be spent on education, the state share has decreased substantially over the last 10-20 years."

MISD is in the same situation as about a fifth of Texas's school districts, who have reached their tax ceiling and cannot raise any more money for their students.

Strauss said the so-called "Robin Hood" school finance law, which requires the wealthier districts to share with smaller districts and reduce the state's burden, makes it more difficult. MISD supposedly got good news about a large tax valuation increase this year, but Strauss said later, the rise will come back to haunt it.

"When you have a value increase, and let's assume that the property values in Midland stay up after all of the appeals, that, in effect, only increases your revenue for one year," he said.

MISD reacts to Bush's education challenge

By Hillary S. Condon

Representatives of the Midland Independent School District say President Bush's challenge to Congress will bring Texas's educational values to the rest of the nation.

Bush used a Monday morning appearance at the White House to try to set the agenda for lawmakers returning to Washington from their Independence Day recess. He pressed them to make his top three priorities — a plan for student testing, new rights for managed-care patients and government funding for religious community groups — their own in the busy weeks between now and the

City takes steps to develop two new hike-and-bike trails

By Kristine Aleman
MRT Correspondent

With the summer months here, and lingering high gasoline prices, more Midlanders may be thinking it's a perfect time to park the car, strap on the helmet and climb on their bicycles.

While Midland already has one hike-and-bike trail running through town, there are plans for possibly two more trails that would serve more areas of the city. But are Midlanders ready to make the transition from car to bike?

The city has applied for two grants from the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) that would fund two additional trails — one starting at Lancaster Park off Cuthbert Avenue and another in Grassland Estates. However, the city will not hear whether it will receive the grants until later this year, said Monette Burke, director of community services for the city of Midland.

Midland's only hike and bike trail begins at Reyes-Mashburn-Nelms Park, off Fairgrounds Road. It runs west by DeZavala Elementary, through the center of town and around Wadley-Barron Park on A Street.

"The trail is designated and marked," Ms. Burke said. "There had to be some new construction. We had to go in and build walks and widen sidewalks to accommodate the hikers and bikers."

The projects are joint efforts of several city departments, including the parks and recreation division, the engineering division and the planning division, Ms. Burke said. TxDOT also contributes if the trail crosses a highway.

The first of the two trails, for which the city is seeking assistance, will head west from Lancaster Park to the corner of Loop 250 and Thomason Avenue. The second, which starts in Grasslands by Nueva Vista Golf Course, will run around Kelly Park and end in the Briarwood addition, near Wal-Mart.

However, many Midlanders do not know the trail exists, much less take advantage of it, which may defeat the purpose of the hike-and-bike trails.

"It's good to have a route like that. It's much better to have bike facilities than not," said Midlander David Eggleston, who is active in various cyclist organizations including the Permian Basin Bicycle Association and the Texas Bicycle Association. "But Midland doesn't have anywhere where runners, in-line skaters or walkers can go in the early morning and have a place to themselves."

Eggleston says many cyclists, like himself, prefer routes not interrupted by intersections and stop signs, but where they are able to ride at a constant speed for long distances, eventually choosing their own route. The lack of such a place prevents many Midlanders from setting down the keys and strapping on the helmet.

"The efforts that have been done so far are good. It's good to have bike facilities," Eggleston said. "I understand that there are some people that ride on those trails, but I'm waiting to see thousands of people riding. The trail hasn't generated tremendous crowds, but it's a start."

Ms. Burke said the trails are not only for recreation that benefits the citizens, but for safety, as well. The designated areas are marked and well lit so that motorists can be aware of cyclists and runners.

Currently, Eggleston is working with the Eco-Tourism committee of Keep Midland Beautiful to design a map of all bicycle, running and nature trails intended to help tourists and native Midlanders continue their hobbies safely.

"The reason why I'm so anxious to see Midlanders start riding bicycles is because Americans, in general, are overweight and in poor critical condition," Eggleston said. "The car culture drives us nuts. We're bombarded with car ads and the economy seems to be tied to car production.

"It hurts me that people are so not knowledgeable and are perfectly willing to just keep driving cars, not getting exercise and just living their lives that way."

Eggleston, 66, says he is in better shape than his children, covering more than 1,500 miles a year just by cycling to the store and taking care of other daily errands. Cycling also has saved him money, only purchasing gas for his car once every two months.

"Cycling is not just for kids and for recreation. In a lot of other countries, people ride bikes to work and shopping. We can do that, too," he said. "These days, we're liable to outlive our kids. But to each man his own."

Rucker seeking circuit-court judge to handle child-protection cases

WANTED: An associate judge in a circuit-court niche to preside exclusively over child-abuse-and-neglect cases in a 13-county West Texas area. Must be child friendly. Legal experience required. Annual salary: $80,000.

That, more or less, may be the gist of a message which Judge Dean Rucker will be sending out to licensed Texas lawyers interested in a circuit-court judgeship.

Rucker, the 46-year-old presiding judge of the 40-county Seventh Administrative Judicial Region of Texas and judge of the 318th Texas Judicial District Court that primarily handles family-law matters from divorce to child-custody cases, is applying for a $150,000-to-$175,000 federal grant to initially fund his proposed Child Protection Court of the Permian Basin.

Midland County would be the host county for the court that would handle child-protection cases for the counties of Andrews, Borden, Crane, Ector, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Midland, Reeves, Scurry, Ward and Winkler.

Midland may join Odessa in effort to receive transit funding

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

Due to the expected cuts in public transportation statewide, Midland will most likely submit a joint application with Odessa to help finance a joint transit plan.

Today at a 9 a.m. briefing session, City Council members will be updated on the plan. The Council is expected to vote on a resolution, which would authorize the City Manager's office to apply for the funding and create an urban management district, on July 24. An application does not commit the city to a transit system.

The application deadline for funding is Aug. 1.

"We have got three more weeks to get the application in," Assistant City Manager Marcus Johnston said. "It is getting down to crunch time."

Working with Odessa continues a recent trend. Just like the Joint Economic Development Task Force or the concept of branding — public transportation is an area that touches on the theme of making Midland-Odessa one Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA).

However, the plan, as it concerns public transportation, has just as much to do with funding. In June, it was announced that mass transit appropriations for the state's non-metropolitan areas was decreased by 11.3 percent. Thus, the Texas Department of Transportation (TxDOT) has suggested Midland and Odessa submit one application. Each city would have a separate system, operating under one management.

"It shows a regional approach to our transportation and that we don't want to spend any more money on the administration of the system than we have to," Johnston said. "Between the two cities, we are applying for $1.5 million. That is a pretty sizable chunk of money. We certainly don't want to fund this thing 100 percent ourselves when there is state and federal money out there to help us. That is a lot of money."

Midland's flexible route transportation system would reach an estimated 191,000 riders, and could be implemented as early as September 2003.

It would carry a start-up cost of $500,000 to the city. That is in addition to a $135,000-a-year operation budget. A leasing option would cost $170,000. Those numbers are expected to rise if the Texas Legislature continues to reduce the amount of available funds.

Hey, congressmen, leave those interns alone

More rambling thoughts ...

— This one ought to bring back some memories. It was on this date back in 1985 that the Coca-Cola Co., bowing to pressure from its irate customers, said it would resume selling old-formula Coke, while continuing to sell New Coke.

— There are those, and not just Oliver Stone types, who still believe that New Coke was a giant hoax to gain worldwide publicity for the beloved soft drink.

— And while we're on the subject, has there ever been a better television commercial than the one featuring Mean Joe Greene and the kid who ends up with Greene's jersey after giving the weary and battered football star his Coke?

— Just wondering: Why does the sun lighten your hair but darken your skin?

— And while we're asking questions that baffle the mind, here's another one: Why is the time of day with the slowest traffic called rush hour?

— Only members of Congress could stretch the Fourth of July holiday into a week-long vacation.

— The following appeared in a church bulletin: "The peacemaking meeting scheduled for today has been cancelled due to a conflict."

— Yeah, that ought to do it.

— The great Duke Ellington once said, "Love is indescribable and unconditional. I could tell you a thousand things that it is not, but not one that it is."

— After all that has gone on the past few years, why would any congressman in his right mind have an affair with an intern?

— Come on, guys. THINK! She's going to tell SOMEBODY, be it Linda Tripp or her aunt. It's just too juicy to keep to herself.

— But the thing I always wonder is how does the guy explain it to his wife, especially after it has been on the front pages of every newspaper in America.

— Somehow it just doesn't seem like "Come on, babe, don't believe everything you read" would work.

— Everyone should have at least one friend who owns a pickup truck.

— I mean, I liked it when Rhett Butler said "Frankly my dear, I don't give a damn," but enough is enough.

— Always remember these wise words first uttered by Rex Stout, an American author who died in 1975: "There are two kinds of statistics, the kind you look up and the kind you make up."

— And, no doubt, most of us prefer the latter, especially when in the midst of a heated political argument.

— There doesn't seem to be as many "honky tonk angels" around as there used to be.

— And that's too bad.

— Is there anything more irritating than a nagging headache that refuses to go away?

— Childhood memory: Playing catch in the backyard with your dad.

— Here's hoping Paula Poundstone is innocent of all charges.

— Do women still call soap operas "my stories?"

— And today's final quote comes from Aldous Huxley, who once said, "Most human beings have an almost infinite capacity for taking things for granted."

BUSH: MISD has mixed reactions to education plan

(From 1B)

August congressional recess, when Bush plans to vacation at his Texas ranch.

"This Congress needs to get an education reform bill on my desk before the summer recess," Bush said. "There is no need for further delay."

On the heels of an announcement, in which the need for more testing will be re-evaluated, Midland Independent School District representatives had mixed reactions to the President's challenge.

Superintendent Robert Nicks is considering a plan to remove non-mandatory national testing, like the Terra Nova test, to make more time for mandatory state testing like the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills. He said Bush's education reform in Texas improved the state's education.

"I think education has improved because of those requirements and the accountability system," he said.

MISD Board President Dale Strauss said while he doesn't believe in "testing for testing's sake," mandatory testing is a system that was good for Texas and will be good for the rest of the nation.

"Texas has been under mandatory testing for a good, long time now, that's what the (Texas Assessment of Academic Skills) testing is all about," he said. "What the President's trying to do is bring the TAAS test concept to the nation so that all states will require the same type of testing of their students as we've been doing in Texas. For the ability to assess how our children are progressing and how our schools are doing, I think it's a good idea."

The House and Senate must reconcile their separate versions of Bush's plan to use federal aid as leverage with failing schools and measure school performance by annually testing students in math and reading.

"I really do believe that in order for districts, teachers and administration to be able to judge the quality of their effort and the results, you really do need mandatory testing," said MISD board member and District 5 Representative Charles Tighe. "The question that comes in is what the mandatory testing consists of. ... Dr. Nicks has indicated he really has a question whether (the Terra Nova standardized test) is really worth the time and the effort and the expense and the distraction, and I agree with that."

Strauss said his idea of a good education reform package would essentially be an "education wish list," and he admits it would very likely not happen. Ideally, the way in which MISD received more than $3 million in grant money for the magnet school program is how Strauss would like to see education funding work.

"I think with our recent experience with the way the grant system worked and with the way a lot of the grants work, I think I'd like to see a lot more education spending made on a federal basis with no strings attached other then the accountability the President is asking for," he said. "In other words, there should be general block grants of some sort for educational purposes."

Of course, Strauss added, that probably will never happen.

"It's kind of a 'Pollyanna' view, because I don't think the federal government would ever do that," he said. "I'd like to see more federal commitment to improving our infrastructure. That's often one of the things we fight the hardest with, the need for more schools, more classrooms, better technology in the classrooms. These are the kinds of things the federal government could make a direct investment in without being concerned about it, and it would benefit all of the children."

Tighe said the reform would work if it could be educationally and fiscally feasible.

"I think that the proper approach both in the local level and by the Congress, is to make sure that the mandatory testing that they are requiring is feasible and the results are meaningful, and that the tests really do help you to judge the quality of education so that you can hold people accountable," Tighe said.

Tighe said the Congress just needs to make sure what it mandates is provided for financially.

"I would want them to put in remedial steps you should take and with some support in the way of funding," he said. "Sometimes legislators mandate policies, but they don't provide any funds for them. That's one of the problems that local districts sometimes have, they're burdened with the programs that have been mandated, but they've got to pay for them."

The Associated Press contributed to this article.

TRANSIT: Applications for state funding due by Aug. 1

(From 1B)

"The cost of the program already exceeds available money," Johnston said.

Should the state deny Midland-Odessa any money, Midland's public transportation needs will be put on hold.

"If the money doesn't come from the state, I don't see it happening," District 1 representative LuAnn Morgan said. "We want it, but we don't want to have to spend taxpayers' money on it. We can't do anything until we get what the state has allotted us."

Johnston said should the city not receive transportation funds or money from a "Commission Selected Projects," Midland will most likely reapply next year.

DEAR ABBY

Scattering of ashes is not as simple as it may seem

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am an attorney who provides legal assistance throughout the country to cemeteries, crematories, funeral homes and trade associations in the industry. I am writing to correct some popular misconceptions that were reflected in some of the letters in your column in the last few weeks.

First, all of the letter writers used the term "ashes" to describe cremated human remains. The remains of a cremated body are not ashes as the term is commonly understood. The remains are bone fragments that, if not mechanically reduced, can be too large to scatter. They do not immediately dissolve when scattered. They normally cannot be disbursed and blown away. Unfortunately, the movies and the media have misused the term "ashes" for many years, not realizing the problems it causes survivors who attempt to scatter remains in the manner often depicted.

Second, while it is permissible in all states to scatter cremated remains, there are legal requirements. No state law allows them to be scattered on private property without the consent of the property owner. Many national and state parks have specific rules, permit requirements and, sometimes, location limitations for the scattering of those remains. Several years ago, representatives of a national park and the leader of an Indian tribe contacted an industry association to complain about illegal scattering of cremated remains on the tribe's sacred burial grounds, which were located within the park. Most cemeteries also have rules and regulations that must be observed.

Third, adding an additional memorial for the cremated remains of a second spouse on the cemetery plot where the first spouse is buried has legal implications. When burial spaces are originally acquired, there is an expectation that a surviving spouse will be buried with the deceased spouse in an appropriate manner. If a companion memorial was purchased and installed when the first spouse died, changing the arrangement may require the legal consent of all survivors. In addition, most cemeteries have rules and regulations dealing with burial of cremated remains with human remains and the appropriate types of memorials.

Finally, when separating cremated remains as a keepsake, it is important to make sure that everyone agrees with the plan. The individuals who have the legal right to authorize a cremation usually have the right to determine the disposition of remains. Also, any individual who takes a portion of those remains should be cautioned to treat them in a respectful and proper manner. Unfortunately, there have been incidents where cremated remains have been disposed of in the same manner as garbage.

I hope this information will allow your readers to provide meaningful memorialization for their loved ones without violating any laws, rules and regulations - or the rights of other individuals. — HARVEY I. LAPIN, ESQ., NORTHBROOK, ILL.

DEAR HARVEY: I hope so, too. This is a subject that many people have enthusiastically embraced — as reflected in past columns. Anyone who wishes to scatter the "ashes" of a loved one should first contact the appropriate authorities to make sure they are in compliance with the law.

JUDGE: Rucker applying for federal grant to fund position cases that are filed within the 13 counties that make up the region," Rucker said Monday.

The Midland County Commissioners' Court unanimously passed a resolution that the county would be the host county for the specialized court and would provide an "adequate courtroom and quarters" for the associate judge and his or her administrative assistant.

Through the associate-judge concept, "We can ensure that sufficient time is given to these (child-protection) cases," Rucker said. "They are some of the most difficult, some of the most complex, and some of the most emotionally difficult cases that a judge faces in his or her career."

Under current judicial proceedings, child-protection cases are "sandwiched in with all of the other (legal) matters that are on a judge's docket," Rucker noted. Child-protection cases would be "all this (associate) judge will do."

'(Child protection cases) are some of the most difficult, some of the most complex, and some of the most emotionally difficult cases that a judge faces in his or her career.'

— Judge Dean Rucker

The associate judge's $80,000 pay would be midway between the Midland County judge's $60,000 salary and a district judge's state-paid $101,700 salary. Midland County sweetens by $6,000 each of the county's four state district-court judges.

The 76th session of the Texas Legislature in 1999 revised the Texas Family Code to create eight regional associate judgeships to handle "a specialized caseload of child-abuse-and-neglect cases." Two years later in 2001, the 77th Texas Legislature authorized eight additional courts to handle more of those cases.

Under Rucker's plan, Midland County would host one of the overall 16 courts which would be funded by the state of Texas.

The first-year operation would be through the Texas Court Improvement Project funded by a federal grant to the Supreme Court of Texas "to improve judicial proceedings in foster-care and adoption cases," Rucker noted.

Rucker would appoint the associate judge for the Child Protection Court of the Permian Basin and would name the judge's administrative assistant "with the blessing of the associate judge, obviously."

The court would variously be known as a cluster court, foster-care court and child-protection court.

Child-protection cases make up a minority of family-law cases heard by Rucker and County Court-at-Law Judges Al Walvoord and Marvin Moore. Those judges who would preside over child-protection cases only "on an as-needed basis" once the child-protection court is set up here.

Moore, 39, noted that Rucker presides over about 80 percent of family-law cases in Midland County and that Moore and Walvoord together hear about 20 percent of those cases.

In neighboring Odessa, six judges for Ector County hear child-abuse-and-neglect cases, Rucker noted.

"And these six judges would make referrals to this associate judge to hear cases," he said.

The Texas Legislature authorized the associate judgeships because the child-protection cases from the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services "were not being handled as expeditiously as they should be," Rucker said. The Legislature suggested that some "children were being lost in foster care."

By law, a child-protection case is to be resolved within a year of its filing.

"The Legislature ... decided that it was appropriate to create some judicial position whose sole focus would be the disposition of these (child-protection) cases to ensure that the deadlines were met and to ensure that there is continuity in the handling of child-abuse-and-neglect cases and to ensure the best possible outcome for a child," Rucker said.

And the caseload of child-protection cases in Midland County has increased "somewhere in the neighborhood of 40 to 50 percent" since last year, Rucker noted. Much of that may be in the reporting of more child cases that range from "neglectful supervision by a parent to child abuse to sexual abuse of a child."

By Texas law, a person is a child from birth up to their 18th birthday.

CUTS: MISD already at limit for property tax funds

(From 1B)

"The next year, the state takes away more money from you because your property values went up the prior year. So even if you get additional revenues for that one year, you'll lose them two years down the road because that's part of the overall 'Robin Hood' state equalization plan. They catch up with you in the second year and they reduce your state funding."

And it gets more complicated.

Nicks said much of what the district plans to receive from the state, even with the drop in funding, is not definite.

"Much of it is based upon projections," he said. "Right now, we will project what we anticipate our average daily attendance to be, and then the state funding will pay us based on those projections. But if the ADA should vary one way or the other, then obviously that will have an impact in terms of what the state will allocate to the school district."

More of the qualifications are based on variables from the taxpayers themselves. The higher the local "effort," or tax base is, the better off the district is in qualifying for tax dollars from the state. Conversely, for every dollar the district fails to raise locally, they lose double from the state.

"The tax rate that we raise locally is only roughly half of the equation," Strauss said. "We look at it dollar for dollar, but basically, every dollar that we don't raise locally, we lose a dollar. So it's really a two-dollar loss, not a one-dollar loss. That's the toughest thing — how to handle setting tax rates and figure what our revenue's going to be."

Tammy Faye Messner says she can relate to gays, lesbians

TAMPA, Fla. — Tammy Faye Messner says she has lots in common with gays and lesbians — she, too, knows what it feels like to be ostracized.

"Like you, I've suffered," said Messner, the keynote speaker at Tampa's annual PrideFest party. "We've all been misunderstood. We've all been made fun of. But I'm not going to allow people who don't like me to rent space in my brain."

Messner, who ran the Praise the Lord television ministry in the mid-1980s with then-husband Jim Bakker, supported homosexuals at a time when the rest of America was fearful of AIDS.

At Friday night's gathering in Tampa, Messner delivered a rousing speech based on her faith that "God loves you just the way you are."

She led the crowd in a chorus of "Jesus Loves Me" and compared her own tribulations after the scandalous downfall of the ministry to those gays have experienced.

"I've been called everything by the media but a Christian," she said. "Yet I think God loves unique people."

The crowd was responsive. Lloyd Richardson, 28, of Tallahassee, echoed a typical sentiment when he said he was astounded by Messner's commitment to the gay community.

"I mean, she's Jim Bakker's ex-wife," Richardson said. "But God bless her. We need more like her."

NEW YORK — Robert Iler of "The Sopranos" appeared briefly in court Monday, but was not immediately indicted on charges he and two teen-agers robbed two other teen-age boys of $40 on Manhattan's Upper East Side.

Assistant District Attorney Robert Wallack told Manhattan Criminal Judge Judith Levitt that there had been no grand jury action on the case. Levitt ordered the parties to return to court on July 18, by which time grand jury activity should be complete.

The 16-year-old Iler — who plays Anthony "A.J." Soprano, the pot-smoking, mischievous son of Tony Soprano on the HBO mob drama — wore a dark suit to court. Accompanied by his mother, he left the courthouse immediately afterward without commenting.

Steven Mintz, Iler's lead attorney, said he and another lawyer met with prosecutors Monday morning and agreed that the case required "further investigation."

"We are very confident that, at the end of the day, Robert will be exonerated," Mintz said. "We'd like it all to go away quickly, but the process takes time."

Iler was arrested Wednesday with Michael Cournede, 19, and Alban Selimaj, 16. All three pleaded innocent to two counts of second-degree robbery. A 15-year-old boy also arrested in the case will face charges in Family Court because of his age.

Iler also pleaded innocent to a marijuana possession charge. He is free on $2,500 bail.

Cournede and Selimaj, who are free on bail, also were in court Monday, but left without making a statement.

Edward McGreevey, Iler's father, said his son is embarrassed "for all the grief he's caused his family and friends," the Daily News reported Monday.

LONDON — Bianca Jagger accused President Bush of playing "Russian roulette" with the planet as she helped launch a campaign on Monday warning of the dangers of climate change.

The former wife of Rolling Stone Mick Jagger joined Green Party activists in central London and criticized Bush for rejecting the 1997 Kyoto agreement on global warming.

"I think that Bush's policies are a Russian roulette endangering the survival of the planet," she said.

"He has refused to back the Kyoto protocol despite the fact that there has been a U.N. report written by 3,000 scientists that shows that unless we cut fossil fuel emissions global warming will be inevitable."

The European Union has declared it will push for ratification of the 1997 agreement without the United States.

World leaders will meet in Bonn, Germany, next week in a bid to restart stalled negotiations over the Kyoto agreement.

ST. PAUL — Gov. Jesse Ventura is ready to give Canada his complete attention this week as he heads north to strengthen ties with Minnesota's neighbor and No. 1 foreign trading partner.

"Canada always feels like the United States ignores them or takes for granted that they're up there," Ventura said. "If you just put a focus on Canadians, Canadians will just eat it up. That's what my job will be up there."

The governor begins a three-day Canadian tour Tuesday, visiting Winnipeg and Toronto as part of a trade mission. He plans to sign a renewed trade pact with Manitoba Premier Gary Doer as well as preside over a cooperation agreement between the Minneapolis Institute of Arts and the Winnipeg Art Gallery.

A series of speeches and Canadian broadcast interviews also are on Ventura's agenda.

Last year, Canada accounted for $2.4 billion in business for Minnesota, nearly a quarter of the state's $10.2 billion total trade outside the United States and more than the next three trading partners (Japan, China and the United Kingdom) combined.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, July 10, 2001:

Learn to not react to difficult people or situations. You have the ability to detach and get an overview. Invest in your education or your spirituality. Travel might help you open doors and grow. Your intuition guides you. Whenever you have a strong feeling, it might be appropriate to follow through on it. Also, trust in your ability to gain from research. If you are single, a special relationship could knock on your door within a year. If you are attached, share more of your fantasies with your loved one. You might want to start planning that special trip. PISCES inspires you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ Pressure develops from someone whose perspective significantly differs from yours. You could go at each other tooth and nail, or just take time to digest what is happening here. Do some soul-searching before you jump to any conclusions. Tonight: Get a good night's sleep.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ Aim for what you want, and do not allow a partner to upset you or drive you in a particular direction. Key into yourself, and make decisions accordingly. Pressure from others can only carry the weight you give it. A meeting provides an excellent networking occasion. Tonight: Where your friends are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★ Maintain the status quo, and put a good face to the world, professionally. Not everyone agrees with your perspective. In fact, inadvertently, you could send someone on the warpath. Maintain responsibilities, and give a testy friend time to chill out. Tonight: Work late.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Use diplomacy with someone in your day-to-day life. Work could prove to be demanding at times. Do your best to pull back and gain more perspective. Make calls, and seek out the experts. Your intellectual capacity helps you resolve a problem. Tonight: Put on a favorite piece of music.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ Seek out others, but also be ready for some negativity from someone who is relatively close to you. Don't get into your private War of the Roses; rather, give this person space. Discussion later on will prove to be far more fruitful. Verify another's information. Tonight: An easy chat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★ Let someone speak out. You might not agree, but then, you can't change this person's mind. Pressure comes from another, though you might not be inclined to bend. Give others space, and they will come forward. Tonight: Say yes.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ You could start a fight when you least expect it. High energy and anger mark a conversation. To make peace, you might use actions rather than words. You could be surprised by what a little nurturing does. Meanwhile, maintain high performance at work. Tonight: Go for a workout.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Use special care with finances and with love. Your creativity often allows you to find solutions, but it also sometimes plunges you into plenty of trouble. Avoid unnecessary risks. Later on, or in another day or so, research today's idea. Tonight: Let your imagination soar.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ You could have a dustup with someone when you least expect it. Remain level and forthright with others, but understand that there is a way of saying things that works. Soften some of your words and brashness. As a result, a partner helps you. Tonight: Happy at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ You could put your foot in your mouth. You might not want to discuss your needs, but you are better off doing just that. Give up on defensiveness. Someone will respond to your openness and vulnerability. Give it a try! Tonight: Get together with a loved one.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★ You could be sad when you see how destructive a friendship can be or how someone disappoints you. Deal with work. Don't obsess about this problem. Given time and more understanding, you might gain a different perspective. Tonight: Your treat.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ The moon spotlights you, although someone might challenge you when you least expect it. The boss demands a high level of productivity and responsiveness from you. Avoid getting into problems by curbing the tendency to daydream and not stay in focus. Tonight: Others respond as you would like them to.

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1NT	Pass	3♠	Pass
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♠

A finesse that can be taken both ways is a double pain. But sometimes you can enlist the aid of some surprising friends — your opponents!

The auction is routine for those who do not play transfer bids. South's 9 high-card points and respectable suit are enough to give North an option of which game to play, and North's decision in favor of four spades is clear cut.

With a choice of awkward leads, West elected to start the four of spades, taken in the closed hand with the seven. The queen of spades was run and, when East discarded a club, declarer drew the last trump. Since the contract was cold if West held the ace of clubs, or if declarer could find the jack of diamonds, South cashed three rounds of hearts, ending in hand, and led a club toward the king. West carefully inserted the nine and the king lost to East's ace. Now declarer's care in playing off the hearts earned its just rewards.

Since a heart would present a ruff-sluff and a diamond would be into the table's Q 10 tenace, East's only safe exit was a low club. But that only delayed matters for a trick. West was able to win the club with the jack, but now that defender was endplayed. On the forced diamond return, declarer played low from dummy and, no matter how the defenders wriggled, they could not make more than one diamond trick to go with the two clubs already banked.

There are two morals to this deal. First, "safe" trump leads, as West's salvo was here, more often than not present declarer with a crucial tempo rather than accomplish something positive for the defense. As unappetizing as a club lead might have been, that would have forced declarer to guess diamonds to come to 10 tricks. Secondly, eliminating a side suit before tackling other suits is a sound principle of declarer play.

Parents who are stressed out don't have time for kids

By T. Berry Brazelton, M.D.
N.Y. Times News Service

QUESTION: I agree with your column addressing the lack of self-esteem of violent kids. While the media has quickly placed blame on a variety of negative influences in our culture — and most Americans would rather just ask the question of why these atrocities have happened without really considering the answer — the real issues surrounding the personal development of these children seems to be largely overlooked.

Something went terribly wrong when these kids were growing up and nobody paid attention to them. Now we are paying the price for our lack of sensitivity and awareness.

I will share a little bit about myself to support your thesis. When I reached out to a counselor at my old high school and told her I HATED my parents and HATED my life, she said I was just going through a "stage." She wrote me off, like all the other teachers who always saw me slumped in my seat or walking down the hallways with my head down. Very few people reached out to me, and the love, guidance and mentorship they tried to give me was either inconsistent or just not enough. I didn't care about anyone and had violent visions of being empowered with a gun in my hand. Fortunately, I never had access to a gun. — B.D., via e-mail

Brazelton

DR. BRAZELTON: What a brilliant challenge to all my readers. You give us real insight into what a child can go through without the nurturing love he needs and wants.

I was appointed to a National Commission on Children in 1989-91, which was led by Sen. Jay Rockefeller. Thirty of us spent two years traveling around the country trying to assess the support systems available to families and young children. We came to the realization that the United States was the least family- and child-oriented society in the civilized world.

We have a strong bias against helping stressed or underprivileged families. We'd rather cling to the belief that they ought to be able to help themselves.

For example, there is still a bias against helping working mothers. Look at our day-care situation for working (and hence, stressed) parents. Most of the child care available in this country is care that I wouldn't trust, nor would most working families if they had choices. We are an unfeeling society in regard to stressed parents. We add guilt when parents feel helpless.

Unless we begin to face some of these biases, and deal with them more openly, we are headed for more and more damaged teen-agers.

Our outreach program at Children's Hospital in Boston, called Touchpoints, is designed to reach out to help young families and their infants right from the start. Health and child-care professionals are trained to use challenging yet predictable times in a child's development — times I call touchpoints — as opportunities for sharing the passion of the child's growth with parents.

This kind of supportive and preventive health care — and a parent-oriented child-care system — would go a long way toward helping children and their families toward successful outcomes.

I suspect that each of the families of those children who turned to violence as a solution to their problems were so stressed that their children lived in a state of emotional deprivation. To blame their families rather than wondering what it might have taken for our society to support them might be missing the real point of these tragedies.

'The Doctor & You'

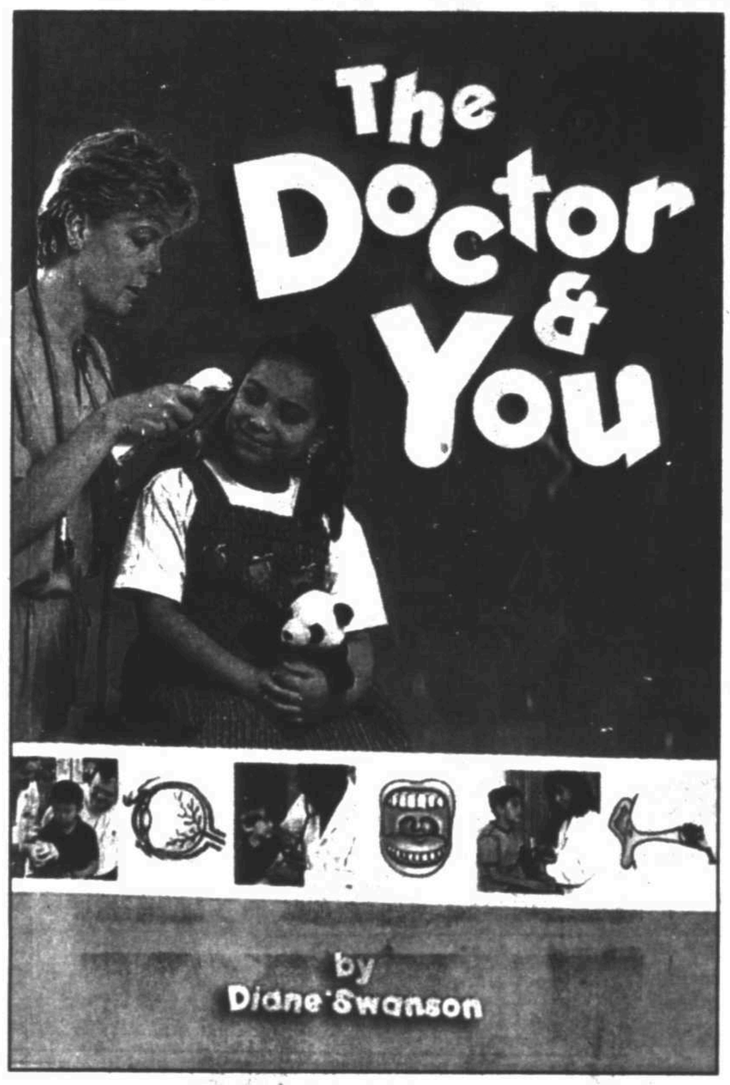
Book shows children how to be patients

Author Diane Swanson

By Lana Cunningham
MRT Correspondent

The young boy sat next to his mother and looked at the paperback book.

The woman pointed to a drawing of the throat. "Ugh. Let's skip that." On another page was a diagram of an eye. "What are those little lines?" he asked, and the mother read what was written about the eye and the instrument that looks into the eye.



'At this age (4 to 7), children are wanting to be in control of their own bodies. They are starting to take an interest in the 'what' and 'why.'

— Diane Swanson, author of 'The Doctor and You'

"Hot Stuff." "Hugs that Help." "Setting You Straight."

Diane Swanson set out to write a book that would help young children understand the mechanics of what was happening to them in a doctor's office.

The result is a book that focuses on various procedures that might scare a child, softened with words and pictures. "The Doctor & You" explains in simple terms what is happening and how the child can do his part as a patient.

The book is written for children ages 4 to 7. "At this age, children are wanting to be in control of their own bodies," said Ms. Swanson who lives in Victoria, B.C. "They are starting to take an interest in the 'what' and 'why.'"

A children's author who enjoys explaining the natural world in her writing, Ms. Swanson was approached by Annick Press to write the book about children and doctors. The idea intrigued her and she saw the gap in children's books — nothing really explained to this age group what a physician was doing when he or she approached the youngster with strange-looking instruments.

"Some children think any kind of physical pain means punishment. They think if they are going to the doctor it must be because they have done something bad," said the author in a telephone interview.

Ms. Swanson delved into the psychology of kids in the 4-7 age group. "I had to research how a child might think. I learned not to use the word 'take,' as in 'take a temperature' or 'take some blood.' Young children think you are taking something from them. It creates fear in their minds."

X-rays, she learned, also elicit fear. "If someone tells a child the X-ray helps see what's inside them, these children think their secrets or thoughts will be revealed." And when they see a blood sample taken, children often think they are "leaking."

Ms. Swanson took her research and coupled it with information from a child life specialist, Pat Hook at Victoria General Hospital. She also tried to include a lot of procedures a majority of children would encounter on a doctor visit. Then she wrote the book in simple language, added photos of a wide variety of children and medical personnel to explain each procedure, included a question a child might ask plus the answer for each section, and ended with "Your Job," which explains what the patient would need to do.

"The Your Job section is the result of research in the psyche of a child," said the mother of a grown daughter and son. "The child is wanting some control, and this suggests a way the child can feel more in control.

"Does It Hurt" was pulled out of the story and designed as a separate element with each section. "This is the first thing a child wants to know — will it hurt?

"These books for children that are deceptively simple-looking require a huge consideration for every word and approach," she said.

The section titled "Tap and Swing" explains the reflex hammer and what it does. Your Job states, "Let your leg hang l-o-o-s-e, like a cooked spaghetti noodle. Watch it swing suddenly when your knee is tapped. Neat!"

The blood pressure cuff is described as a hug machine, and the ophthalmoscope is shown looking into an eye, and how the eye appears.

"The Doctor and You" is being marketed in Canada and the United States by Firefly Books. A reviewer in Canada's Quill Inquirer said it should be in every pediatrician's office, which thrilled Ms. Swanson. "They're being put in bookstores and we're talking to medical associations" about the need to place them in doctors' offices.

Ms. Swanson has written about 50 books for children and is working on a sequel, "The Dentist and You," which will be published in 2002. She started her career writing magazine articles for "Ranger Rick" and still produces about six articles a year. Among honors she has received are: Orbis Pictus Award for Outstanding Nonfiction for Children; Ontario Silver Birch Award, Red Cedar Award, Canadian Children's Book Centre "Our Choice," and Book-of-the-Month Club Selection.

"I love children's sense of curiosity and awareness of the world," she said of her preference to write for younger readers. "They are blown away by animals. I tell children about rats, for example, and how they can walk across a line like a trapeze artist. I love children's openness to the world."

Looking at the drawing of the ear in the book, the young boy asked, "Why doesn't the light come out the other ear?"

"Because your brain stops it," the mother replied. That answer, however, wasn't in the book.

PARENT'S PERSPECTIVE

Children don't need expensive toys to have fun

By Barbara Lineback

Lineback

Most of you probably had the foresight and necessary parental survival skills such that you are now reading this over a leisurely cup of coffee while your children are at day care, summer school, Kids' College or vacation Bible school. Or they're taking lessons in karate, theater, horseback riding, art, yoga, bungee jumping, cooking, origami, herb gardening, ceramics, tai chi, macrame or ballroom dancing.

I, on the other hand, opted to have our children's summer activities take place primarily at home. Our daughters were all adopted in the last two years, so I decided they might optimally benefit from spending time with each other in their own backyard. There are certainly plenty of things for them to do. I spent many wide-eyed, fantasy-filled hours buying the girls every sort of plaything that I wished I could have had as a child.

But what do I know? When I was a little girl — a very long time ago, on a farm far, far away — there was really only one parenting policy: "Children should be seen and not heard." This rule came with its own related axiom: "Little pitchers have big ears," which meant that no discussions on anything remotely resembling real life should ever take place in front of unmarried children under the age of 18. So, adults regularly told us, "You children go outside and play!" And they meant it. And forget about TV: "That thing will rot your brain and ruin your eyesight!"

For playthings, my three siblings and I had one second-hand bicycle, a partially deflated basketball, a tire swing and a pair of stilts made out of old wheelbarrow handles. (We would have given anything for even a small assortment of Tinker Toys!) So, when we were told to go out and play, we improvised. We had a repertoire of activities, e.g., digging clay out of the stream bank, making a fort in the hay barn, knocking down wasps' nests and running away.

Once all of that fun was exhausted, there was always "Tick Roundup." We'd build a little corral out of dirt, sticks and stones. Then we'd pick some fat ticks off our hound dog and chase the ticks around the corral with kitchen matches while humming the theme song to "Rawhide."

Meanwhile, in an effort to keep my own children entertained, I pretty much just let them do what they want to do as long as no injuries occur. Right now, for instance, they have been playing quietly for almost two hours. What are they doing? What amazing, amazingly expensive, therapeutically designed toy, game or enormous piece of equipment we bought them is so entertaining?

Well, two of them are in the bathtub wearing their brand-new bathing suits and operating a lunch counter on the side of the tub. The other girl, also in her brand-new bathing suit, is outside the bathtub playing the customer. The bathtub is full of water and floating in the tub are about 83 plastic facsimiles of food, along with plates, cups, utensils, pots and pans from the girls' $299.99 molded-plastic play kitchen.

The girls never play with the actual pretend kitchen: "It's not even real, Mom!" Unlike the bathtub, which is "real" by virtue of the fact that they can fill it with water.

I just checked on them again, and now they are playing "Fill up this plastic cup by putting the handle of a plastic spoon in your mouth and using it to scoop water into the cup without using your hands."

I wonder if we can return the $299.99 molded-plastic pretend kitchen. I also wonder if we can return the 12-foot-by-30-inch above-ground swimming pool containing 1,374 gallons of water. This pool is sitting on a large tarp and is slowly but effectively murdering the grass on part of our formerly lovely backyard. But apparently the girls consider the bathtub to be a superior venue for bathing-suit activities. ("That pool isn't even real, Mom! Can't we go to the pool at Washington Park?")

Whenever they actually do go out and play in this pool, within five minutes at least one of the girls will be standing inside the house dripping water on the floor saying, "I want to come in! I'm cold! And I need another towel." (Let's see: three towels a day times three girls equals nine towels a day to launder because no towel has a chance to be used again after it's been, inevitably, dragged wet through some sort of dirt.).

I have explained to the girls that if the temperature of the house is 72 degrees and the temperature of the backyard is 102, then they will get warm faster if they just stay outside and stand in the sun . But they do not understand this 30-degree logic.

Once they are inside warming up on the couch under blankets, they sometimes watch TV, which they ordinarily do not do. But when they do watch, they play a surreal game I don't understand at all. For example, let's say they watch the cartoon "Madeline." As soon as the opening scene comes on, the girls begin to holler out, "I'm Madeline!" "No, I'm Madeline!" "I'm Miss Clavell!" "No, I'm Miss Clavell!" "OK, them I'm her (indicating a different girl)."

I don't get it. Do your children do this? Is this weird, or what? They actually call dibs on "being" some cartoon character! Once they've staked their claim to an animated alter ego, they often just wander off to build a real clubhouse out of furniture and blankets in a spot inside the house where it will block as many entrances to rooms and hallways as possible. But don't even get me started on that subject!

Is this TV thing some bizarre 21st-century concept I just don't get because I was a little pitcher who was only seen and not heard during the Eisenhower administration? Maybe I was outside playing "tick roundup" and missed the opportunity to watch a black-and-white cartoon during which I could have hollered "I'm Mighty Mouse!" to which my sister could have challenged, "No, I'm Mighty Mouse!" To which I could have retorted, "OK, them I'm that scantily clad, screeching girl mouse he's flying around with in his powerfully muscled mouse arms!"

No fair! I wanted to sing, "Here I come to save the day!" I'm telling! "Mom!"

Mom: "You girls go outside and play!"

I just wish somebody had clued me in to the fact that buying children actual toys and play equipment was a waste of money! I guess I wasn't so deprived as a kid after all.

Every All-Star eye on Ichiro

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

SEATTLE — His cap backward, Ichiro Suzuki got a quick hug from Ivan Rodriguez, bounced into the cage for batting practice and sent the first pitch over the right-field wall.

The huge roar from the hometown crowd at Safeco Field on Monday only confirmed what every other All-Star already knew:

It's the Year of Ichiro!

"This guy is one of the top five players in the world," New York Mets catcher Mike Piazza said.

And in an All-Star game full of intriguing subplots, Suzuki is the main reason fans in more than 200 countries are likely to watch Tuesday night.

Not to see what else Roger Clemens can throw in Piazza's direction. Not to hear A-Rod get booed at his old ballpark. Not to enjoy the tributes to Cal Ripken and Tony Gwynn, either.

"I'm pretty sure that every TV in Japan will be tuned into the game," NL starter Curt Schilling said.

"One of the things a veteran pitcher told me a long time ago is that as an opposing pitcher, you have the ability to shut up a stadium," he said. "I have the ability to shut up a country for a few minutes."

Schilling will get his chance when Suzuki leads off the bottom of the first inning for the American League.

"My philosophy is, I see the pitch I can handle and I hit it hard," Suzuki said through an interpreter earlier in the day.

This from a serious student of the game, whose Zen-like approach leads him to observe: "Each hit has its own character."

A seven-time batting champion in Japan, the 27-year-old Seattle outfielder leads the majors in hits and is tied for the top in steals.

Suzuki is hitting .347 for the best team in baseball and leads the AL in runs scored with 76.

"He was in the wrong league there," said San Francisco slugger Barry Bonds, who played against Suzuki on postseason tours. "Now he's in the right league. He was too good to play over there."

Saints will stay in New Orleans

By Mary Foster
AP Sports Writer

BATON ROUGE, La. — The New Orleans Saints aren't going anywhere for a while.

State officials announced Monday that they have agreed in principle with the NFL team with a financial package that will help keep the league's poorest franchise in New Orleans,

Steve Perry, chief of staff to Gov. Mike Foster said Monday that Louisiana will provide the Saints $12.5 million in guaranteed operating cash to assure the team's financial stability. The state also would continue what was called "an escalating inducement package" until a new or renovated stadium is functional.

In the next two weeks, Foster will appoint a committee to study whether to build a new stadium or totally renovate the team's current home, the Louisiana Superdome. The committee will report no later than Jan, 2003.

Tom Benson, the team's owner, has been asking the state to help the Saints move from last among NFL teams in revenue to at least 18th. He also reiterated his feeling that the Saints eventually need to move out of the Superdome and into a new stadium.

The agreement gives the Saints the right to abandon New Orleans by the 2004 season if the team believes the area's market has deteriorated to the point where it can't make money here, and if no agreement is reached on the team's future home field.

However the Saints would face an exit fee of roughly $50

Armstrong drops to 11th place at Tour de France

By Michael McDonough
Associated Press Writer

ANTWERP, Belgium — Lance Armstrong finished in 80th place in the second stage of the Tour de France on Monday and again had to fend off questions about drugs and cycling.

Belgium's Marc Wauters won the stage and took the overall lead. Armstrong, bidding for a third straight title, crossed the line in the main pack, 22 seconds behind Wauters.

The Texan dropped from third to 11th place in the overall standings but still remains a favorite to win his sport's most grueling event. Riders will cover more than 2,100 miles in the three-week race that ends July 29 in Paris.

Before the stage from Calais in northeast France to Antwerp, Armstrong defended his ties to an Italian doctor whose name has been linked to the drug EPO.

However, Armstrong said he would "re-evaluate" his relationship if the physician is found guilty of wrongdoing in an ongoing drug inquiry.

Wauters finished the 136.71-mile stage in 4 hours, 35 minutes, 47 seconds. He takes the leader's yellow jersey from France's Christophe Moreau of the Festina team.

Wauters crossed the line in a sprint finish. France's Arnaud Pretot was in second place and South Africa's Robert Hunter

Goran Ivanisevic raises his arms as he celebrates defeating Patrick Rafter to win the men's singles championship at Wimbledon Monday. Ivanisevic won 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 2-6, 9-7.

Ivanisevic downs Rafter for men's crown

By Steven Wine
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Goran Ivanisevic began to cry, his fragile psyche frayed by three hours of harrowing tennis and a decade of frustration at Wimbledon.

He kissed the ball, crossed himself and shook his arm trying to relax. But twice he double-faulted one point from victory, too nervous to put his serve in play.

As Ivanisevic's duel with Pat Rafter reached its climax, each point brought a deafening roar from the most boisterous crowd to attend a Wimbledon final. Finally, on the fourth championship point, Ivanisevic slapped a service winner and the title was his.

The popular Croat fell in a heap in disbelief and rolled over, his face buried in the Centre Court lawn that bedeviled him for so long. In a match likely to rank with the most memorable in Grand Slam history, three-time runner-up Ivanisevic finally won Wimbledon on Monday, outlasting Rafter 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 2-6, 9-7.

"I think I'm dreaming," he said. "Somebody is going to wake me up and tell me, 'Man, you didn't win.'"

With seven-time champion Pete Sampras sidelined by a fourth-round upset, Ivanisevic emerged as an improbable successor. The tournament was his 48th major event, the most ever for a first-time Grand Slam champion, and he became the first wild card to win a major men's title.

"This is what I was waiting all my life," the 29-year-old said.

Ivanisevic speaks in amusingly mangled English, his head-spinning self-analysis and rich baritone enhancing the comedic effect. But there was nothing funny about his defeats in the 1992, 1994 and 1998 finals.

Hampered by a sore shoulder that will require surgery at the end of the year, he came to this year's tournament with his career in an 18-month freefall. He needed a wild-card invitation because his ranking had tumbled to 125th.

But his big serve blossoms on grass, his favorite surface. He won Wimbledon on his 14th try, and he did it before a crowd of 13,370 that rocked the cathedral of tennis.

Aussie finishes second for second straight year

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Pat Rafter lunged at serves that seemed capable of carving craters into Centre Court. He returned some, barely ticked others and got his racket on too few.

He probably didn't know it when the fortnight began, but he certainly knew Monday. Goran Ivanisevic — a relic of Wimbledons past — was a very dangerous player again with his blazing serve.

"It's not much fun down the other end trying to get it back," Rafter said.

He couldn't do it on the final point of what may be his final match at Wimbledon. Ivanisevic lifted his left arm for one last serve. Rafter took it on his backhand, but the ball hit the net and dropped on his side.

Ivanisevic, cranky shoulder and all, had his first, improbable Wimbledon championship after finishing second three times. He beat Rafter 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 2-6, 9-7, firing 27 aces for a tournament total of 213, seven more than the Wimbledon record he set in 1992.

Despite planning year-end shoulder surgery, Ivanisevic became the second unseeded player — man or woman — to win a Wimbledon singles title. Boris Becker was 17 and just blossoming when he did it in 1985.

Ivanisevic was 29 and wilting when he came to Wimbledon this year.

He had dropped from an appearance in the 1998 Wimbledon final to the No. 125 ranking in the world. He got into the tournament only

USGA denies disabled caddie's cart request

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The Supreme Court ruling that lets Casey Martin ride a golf cart apparently doesn't extend to disabled caddies.

The U.S. Golf Association denied a request to allow cerebral palsy sufferer Lee Penterman to use a cart Monday while caddying for a friend in the U.S. Amateur Public Links Championship.

Penterman, who walks with a limp and has a gnarled right hand because of the disease, was on the bag anyway as his pal Ben Flam shot an even-par 71 in the first of two days of stroke play in the six-day event.

"I still think the ruling was unjust," Flam said. "He has a disability. It's like not giving a wheelchair to someone to get up a ramp."

USGA officials were surprised that the first request to use a cart in a national championship since the Martin ruling came from a caddie.

"The Martin case was about competitors and people whose livelihoods are involved. Clearly, that isn't the case," USGA spokesman Marty Parkes said.

"If he was a player, it would have been different. At our championships, we don't allow the use of a cart for caddies or spectators. We were concerned about the precedent this might set. If we provide a cart to one person (caddie), it's conceivable there could be a lot of carts out there."

The 38-year-old Penterman smiled through his fatigue after finishing the round shortly before noon. An early tee time kept the duo from the worst heat of the day as they covered the 7,005-yard Pecan Valley Golf Club.

"You missed too many fairways," Penterman jokingly told Flam as they walked off the final green.

Penterman plans to caddie again Tuesday. If Flam is in the top 64 after that round, he'll

Former Mariners to get very different receptions in Seattle

By Janie McCauley
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE — They're still angry at A-Rod. They've reconciled with Randy.

When Alex Rodriguez and Randy Johnson are introduced at Tuesday's All-Star game in Seattle, the two former Mariners are likely to get very different welcomes from the fans at Safeco Field.

But the crowd may also take some satisfaction that Seattle has the best team in baseball without them.

Last week, a sign briefly hung from a pub across the street from the ballpark that read: "No Randy? No Junior? No A-Rod? No problem."

Ex-Seattle center fielder Ken Griffey Jr., who battled a hamstring injury this season and hasn't been in the Cincinnati lineup until recently, didn't even make it to the All-Star game.

Rodriguez is used to Seattle's sour sentiments — he's already played two series here this year. He said he's more concerned with swiping a souvenir shoe or bat from retiring All-Star Cal Ripken Jr. than with fans firing insults his way.

"I don't have any preconceived notion but I'm cool with anything," said Rodriguez, the Texas shortstop who will start for the American League squad. "I'm flattered to be part of the game, flattered to be voted in, and I'm flattered they wanted me to do the home run contest.

"Boos are like noise. Whether you have cheers or you have noise, they're temporary. Boos are a great compliment."

It wasn't pleasant for Rodriguez the two times he's been back to town since signing a record $252 million contract with the Rangers.

Fans booed lustily when he returned for the first time in April, tossing paper bills from the bleachers and waving signs like "Pay-Rod." One man sitting just behind the visitor on-deck circle dangled a dollar from a fishing line just behind him before his first at-bat.

When Rodriguez was introduced for Monday's Home Run Derby, fans cheered and booed, and more paper money fluttered toward the field from the upper decks. The crowd cheered when he reached his 10 outs.

Seattle's players are hoping Rodriguez receives a little more respect for the All-Star game.

"Hopefully he'll get his due. He deserves it. ... The guy has meant so much to the city," said Mike Cameron, named as a replacement on the AL team Sunday for Tampa Bay's Greg Vaughn, who injured his hamstring.

Rodriguez spent six seasons here and Johnson pitched 10 years for the Mariners before being traded to Houston. He's now with the Arizona Diamondbacks and a National League All-Star.

Johnson returned to Seattle during an interleague game in 1999, and the fans stood and cheered as he walked to the mound from the bullpen. He figures the fans will be fine again this time.

"I've been here once already. I started and got a great ovation," Johnson said.

Both players praised Seattle for its success and expressed their excitement for the Mariners, who have a franchise-record eight players in Tuesday's game — including top vote-getter Ichiro Suzuki. It's the biggest contingent from one team since Pittsburgh had eight in 1960.

"They deserve to be here," Rodriguez said. "Obviously the team with the best record deserves it. They're playing beautiful baseball."

Mariners designated hitter Edgar Martinez and first baseman John Olerud weren't making any predictions on how the fans would treat Rodriguez and Johnson. The 47,116-seat Safeco Field is sold out and about half are expected to be Mariners fans.

"I know in the past series, they were a little hard on Alex," Martinez said. "Alex understands the way it goes. Everything comes with the territory. He's a professional about it. The All-Star game's a different event. We'll have to see."

The two may be wearing different uniforms now, but Olerud says their contributions in Seattle should be remembered.

"They did a lot of great things in Seattle," he said. "I hope they get a good reception."

Rodriguez joked that TV viewers around the world might not boo him but would probably figure out some way to show their displeasure.

"Maybe they'll be throwing rocks," he said.

Bruce Bochy, the San Diego manager working on Bobby Valentine's NL coaching staff, is expecting more of a frenzy than he's already seen in games against the Mariners this season.

"It should be unbelievable," he said. "With A-Rod and Randy Johnson, there will be a lot of excitement. It's good for baseball."

Gonzalez beats Sosa to win Home Run Derby

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

SEATTLE — Hey Barry, Luis Gonzalez is baseball's home run king, at least for this week.

Gonzalez, who has crept up behind Barry Bonds in the race to break Mark McGwire's record, beat Sammy Sosa 6-2 in the finals Monday night to win the All-Star Home Run Derby.

"I was kind of in a fog, especially considering the guys I was going against the last couple of rounds," said a wide-eyed Gonzalez. "I was so nervous in my first Home Run Derby. I just wanted to get past the first round, then the second round, I was thinking, geez."

Bonds was knocked out in the semifinals, and Alex Rodriguez didn't even make it out of the first round at Safeco Field, known more for pitching than bashing.

Bonds, whose 39 homers for San Francisco set a record at the All-Star break, hit the longest drive of the day — a 476-foot drive that a fan dropped out of the first row of the right field upper deck. He also had a 472-foot shot among his seven in the first round.

Oakland's Jason Giambi put on the best show, hitting a Home Run Derby-record 14 in the first round before he was knocked out 8-6 by Sosa in the semifinals.

"I was honored to be in it," Giambi said, adding that it "gets the heart pumping."

Gonzalez, who brought along Arizona bullpen catcher Jeff Motuzas to hit against, watched Giambi and concluded he had no shot.

"I was thinking that trophy had his name on it," Gonzalez said.

But Gonzalez, who with his 35 homers for Arizona this season has played the tortoise to Bonds' hare, showed that steady can succeed, too, hitting five homers in the first round, then beating Bonds 5-3 in the semifinals.

Bonds played down the competition to reach the season record set in 1998, when Mark McGwire outhomered Sosa 70-66 as they both topped Roger Maris' previous mark of 61, set in 1961.

"Mark had Sammy pushing him," Bonds said. "Me and Gonzo — what the hell are we doing? There's no fight."

And Gonzalez said there's no pressure on him. Arizona leads the NL West by 3 1/2 games while Bonds' Giants are 5 1/2 games back.

"It has not been a distraction to our ballclub, what I've been doing in the first half," Gonzalez said. "I'd just assume keep it that way. Hopefully, the thing it won't do is hinder our ballclub."

Gonzalez ranked his Derby win above his 30-game hitting streak and hitting for the cycle.

"You are out here among your peers," he said. "The whole world is watching and this is actually where you get recognition for doing something like this."

The Derby was somewhat lacking in drama. Unlike Baltimore's Camden Yards, which had the right-field warehouse, and Boston's Fenway Park, with its left field Green Monster, Safeco has no internal landmarks, and no one came close to putting one out of the 2-year-old ballpark.

TOUR: Armstrong subject of investigation

(From 1C)

was third. All had the same time.

Wauters shook hands with Belgium's King Albert II after winning the stage.

"It's like a dream," the Rabobank rider said. "The yellow jersey is a Godsend."

He will wear it Tuesday when he rides through his hometown of Lummen on the third stage, an all-Belgian leg of 123 miles between Antwerp and Seraing.

"I hope to be allowed to meet my wife and children and to stop for a few minutes," he said.

Fans turned out in force for the run through the pancake-flat Flanders region that overlaps France and Belgium. They took advantage of sunshine after a weekend of gloomy skies and strong winds.

For Armstrong, the day's racing was overshadowed by his association with Dr. Michele Ferrari. Armstrong said he was "proud" to work with Ferrari and described him as "honest."

Armstrong, in response to newspaper reports, released a statement Sunday acknowledging his ties to the doctor. The cyclist denies ever taking the banned performance-enhancer EPO.

Ferrari is the subject of an Italian investigation linked to his role as physician to several prominent cyclists. A trial is scheduled for September.

Armstrong said he worked with Ferrari "on a limited basis" since 1995, and is currently working with him on a possible attempt at breaking the world one-hour record.

Armstrong said he uses only "natural methods of improvement," including altitude tents and dietary advice.

"If the investigation throws up a guilty verdict, we'll re-evaluate the relationship," Armstrong said. "I feel he's honest and innocent."

Armstrong also described as "unfortunate" comments made by Ferrari in 1994 that played down the health risks of EPO.

The French sports daily L'Equipe said Ferrari, who worked for the Gewiss cycling team at the time, denied he prescribed EPO. Ferrari could not be reached at his home for comment.

Armstrong repeatedly has denied taking banned substances, most recently in response to a French investigation into the possibility that his U.S. Postal Service team may have used illicit substances in last year's Tour.

Armstrong has never failed a drug test and the investigation so far has yielded no evidence of improper drug use.

The drug tests carried out on the riders by a Belgian authority Monday will not be honored by world cycling's governing body.

The International Cycling Union said the forms filled out by riders were available only in the local language, Flemish. Also, the urine samples were not subjected to tests capable of detecting the performance-enhancer EPO.

'Hounds fail to convert on opportunities in 9-5 defeat

Staff Report

ROUND ROCK — The Midland RockHounds just haven't been able to get things done at the plate when it's really counted on their current road trip.

Twice Monday night against the Round Rock Express, the 'Hounds had the bases loaded and less than two outs with some formidable hitters at the plate, but brought home a total of only two runs. As a result, they couldn't overcome an early deficit and fell 9-5 at Dell Diamond.

It didn't help that Eric Thompson (1-3), making only his third start of the season, gave up two runs in each of the three innings he pitched. A single by Kyle Logan and a sacrifice fly by Charley Carter drove in runs to give Round Rock a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first, before the 'Hounds answered back in the top of the second on a solo home run by Brian Luderer to make it 2-1.

But Thompson struggled in each of the next two innings, giving up a pair of homers on a two-run shot by Danny Fatheree (his first of the season) in the second and a solo blast by Carter in the third which helped the Express build the lead to 6-1.

While Midland's bullpen did a respectable job over the next five innings, the 'Hounds lost excellent opportunities to get back in it. They loaded the bases with one out in the fifth, but only managed to score on a sacrifice fly by Todd Mensik which made it 6-2.

Trailing 9-4 headed into the top of the ninth, the 'Hounds loaded the bases with no outs and had Oscar Salazar, Mensik and Jacques Landry at the plate, two of whom rank in the top five in the Texas League in RBIs. Travis Wade relieved Kyle Kessel and got Salazar to ground out to first to bring home a run. Mensik and Landry were retired without incident to end the game.

It was Wade's 16th save of the season, which leads the Texas League.

CADDIE: USGA doesn't allow cart use

(From 1C)

advance to match play beginning Wednesday. The 36-hole final is Saturday.

Flam, a 20-year-old sophomore at Arizona State, seemed more upset about the USGA ruling than did Penterman, a Phoenix resident who remained upbeat.

"It was fun today. It was a lot of hard work," said Penterman, whose entire right side is atrophied. "We're going to come out tomorrow and try to do better."

The USGA allowed Penterman to ride a cart during practice rounds Saturday and Sunday, then told him late Sunday that he couldn't use it during the tournament.

Penterman said he thought the Martin ruling paved the way for him, too. He argued as much to the USGA, saying that if the Supreme Court said Martin did not have an advantage using a cart, than he didn't either.

"A caddie is a piece of the player's equipment," Penterman told the San Antonio Express-News. "Why can't a piece of equipment ride in a cart? It doesn't provide the player with an advantage."

Penterman considered seeking a court injunction, but decided against it — for this week. Flam says that in his eventual pro career he'd like to have Penterman on his bag, which could force another legal battle.

On May 29, Martin won a 3 1/2-year fight for the right to ride in PGA Tour events. He needs motorized help to get around the course because he suffers from Klippel-Trenaunay syndrome, a circulatory disorder in his right leg that makes walking painful.

ICHIRO: Rookie top AL vote getter

(From 1C)

Suzuki also piled up big numbers at the polls. The rookie was the majors' top votegetter in fan balloting for starting spots in the All-Star game.

"I did not expect the honor, so I would not have been disappointed if I did not make the All-Star team," he said.

Now, he's drawing a crowd wherever he goes.

"It is Ichiro-mania here," Kansas City first baseman Mike Sweeney said as a swarm of cameras surrounded Suzuki during a morning news conference. "People walk in and we all just point over there."

Rarely has there been so much buildup for one player in the All-Star game.

Pedro Martinez got it in 1999, and responded by striking out former MVPs Barry Larkin, Larry Walker, Sammy Sosa and Jeff Bagwell — and Mark McGwire — in two innings at Fenway Park.

Hideo Nomo backed up the Nomo-mania hype by pitching two scoreless innings in 1995. Bo Jackson lived up to the "Bo Knows" ads by becoming the MVP in 1989 and Dwight Gooden, the youngest All-Star ever at age 19, struck out the side when he relieved in 1984.

Count Cincinnati first baseman Sean Casey among those interested in getting a first-time view of Suzuki.

"I'm looking forward to seeing Ichiro, because everybody is looking forward to seeing him," he said. "It will be interesting to see him take batting practice and things like that. His style is different. It's stuff you don't see."

Such as the Sumo-style squats he does before hitting. Or the rice balls, made by his wife, Yumiko, that he eats prior to games.

Not to mention his Gold Glove-caliber fielding, rocket arm and daring baserunning.

And, his hitting.

A line-drive guy, Suzuki's ability to pull a ball deep when necessary prompted baseball to consider adding him to the AL squad for Monday night's home run derby. Arizona's Luis Gonzalez won the event, beating Sosa in the final round.

All that even though Suzuki has hit only five homers this season and has the slightest build on the AL team — he's listed at a mere 5-foot-9 and 160 pounds.

Montreal outfielder Vladimir Guerrero has seen Suzuki, sort of.

Guerrero likes to fool around on his Sony PlayStation, fiddling with a baseball game.

"A lot of times I set it up with the Seattle Mariners as the opponent," Guerrero said through an interpreter. "Suzuki does pretty well against me."

Suzuki will join Seattle teammates Edgar Martinez, Bret Boone and John Olerud in the starting lineup. There are eight Mariners on the AL roster — if all of them see action, they would become the first team to get eight players into an All-Star game.

Alex Rodriguez, who left the Mariners for Texas as a free agent, and Arizona pitcher Randy Johnson will return to Seattle.

Clemens will start for the AL and is expected to go two innings. He'll face Piazza for the first time since throwing the shattered barrel of a broken bat in his direction during last year's Subway Series.

Piazza missed last year's All-Star game after being beaned by Clemens.

"I'm sort of — ambivalent? Indifferent? 'Irrelevant' is too strong a word for me," Piazza said. "These things are perpetuated. I've moved on."

The AL has won four straight and 10 of 13. The NL leads the overall series 40-30-1.

Ripken and Gwynn will make their final All-Star appearances. Ripken will start for the AL, while Gwynn is an honorary member of the NL team and will not play.

"My priority is to get everyone in the game," AL manager Joe Torre said.

RAFTER: Aussie falls in five sets

(From 1C)

because officials gave him a wild-card invitation based on his three runner-up finishes.

He figured to last one, maybe two, rounds.

"He hadn't done anything in Grand Slams for the last few years," Rafter said. "Why would anybody give him any hope of coming back and doing what he's done?"

While Ivanisevic lost in the first round at Wimbledon last year, Rafter made it to the final for the first time. He won the first set against Pete Sampras and led 4-1 in the second.

Sampras went on to win in four sets, his fourth straight Wimbledon title and seventh in eight years. He was the man to beat this year but lost in the fourth round. That seemed to clear a path for Rafter.

"When I went out to play Pete, I probably thought I was the underdog," Rafter said. But he began Monday's match thinking he had a 50-50 chance of winning.

"The score line reflected that. It was a very tight match," said Rafter, who plans to take six months off after this year and may retire.

Might his second straight loss in the final bring him back to Wimbledon next summer?

"Who knows?" he said.

Rafter, 28, plans a busy summer with tournaments in Montreal, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Long Island. Then he takes another stab at Grand Slam glory, trying to repeat his 1997 and 1998 championships at the U.S. Open after being bounced in the first round the past two years.

GORAN: Champion was emotional

(From 1C)

Because rain washed out most of Saturday's schedule, the men's final began on a Monday for the first time since 1922. Finals are typically sold out in advance, but 10,000 tickets went on sale 2 1/2 hours before the match.

As the result, the stands were filled with a younger, noisier crowd than usual, with many fans likely attending Wimbledon for the first time. They sang, chanted, cheered double-faults and turned Centre Court into a kaleidoscope of flags, inflated kangaroos, face paint and clown hats.

For once, the only suits were in the royal box.

"I don't know if Wimbledon has seen anything like it," Rafter said. "I don't know if they will again. It was electric."

"So many Australian fans and Croatians, like a football match," Ivanisevic said. "The crowd was just too good."

The atmosphere was similar when rain forced Wimbledon to play on the middle Sunday in 1991 and 1997, but the staid tournament had never staged a final like this.

Support for the two players was even, just like the match. They played the longest fifth set of any final, dating back to 1877.

"It was the greatest final I've ever been a part of," said NBC commentator John McEnroe, whose five-set loss to Bjorn Borg in 1980 is considered by many the best final of the modern era.

"It was a very tight match," agreed Rafter, who lost to Sampras in last year's final. "This time hurts a little bit more than last time, that's for sure."

The 28-year-old Australian plans a six-month break at the end of this year and may retire. In perhaps his last bid for a Wimbledon title, he fell behind 3-0 and looked nervous doing it.

But Rafter soon settled down, and when he broke for a 2-0 lead in the second set, the stands became a sea of red, white and blue Aussie flags.

Every point found at least one player at the net. There were no baseline exchanges and few rallies of more than four shots.

But the stakes, atmosphere and swings in momentum made each point exciting nonetheless. Cheers at times drowned out the chair umpire's requests for "quiet, please."

Ivanisevic briefly came unhinged in the fourth set. Facing a break point, he hit an apparent service winner, but a lineswoman cited him for a foot fault, the only one of the match.

He thought his next serve was an ace and skipped in glee before realizing it had been called wide — a double-fault that gave the game to Rafter. Ivanisevic threw his racket and kicked the net, then argued in vain with the chair umpire.

In the past, such situations have unraveled his game and cost him matches. This time he quickly calmed down.

"I just kept my mind," he said. "I had to. You can't afford to be crazy in Wimbledon final."

The big left-hander, who was two points from defeat in the semifinals, found himself serving from behind during most of the last set. He kept coming through under pressure, easily pulling even at 5-all and again at 6-all. An ace made it 7-all.

Ivanisevic finished the tournament with 213 aces, breaking his 1992 Wimbledon record.

"He's just serving really well," Rafter said. "It's not much fun down at the other end trying to get it back."

The only service break of the set came in the 15th game. Rafter missed four first serves and Ivanisevic took advantage, smacking three excellent returns. The third one, for a winner at 15-40, gave him an 8-7 lead and a chance to serve for the championship.

Because he's known as neverboring Goran, he blew an easy volley, then double-faulted to fall behind 15-30. Two big serves, including his 27th ace, took him to match point.

Tears welled in his eyes, and he hit a double fault 5 feet long. A service winner set up another match point, which produced his 16th and final double fault.

"I knew I was going to be one, two double faults," Ivanisevic said. "My both arm was so heavy."

When Rafter hit a backhand wide, Ivanisevic looked to the sky in gratitude. Then he hit a shaky volley and lost the next point, returning the score to deuce.

The most feared serve in tennis finally bailed him out. He smacked a service winner to reach match point again, then swung another serve wide, and Rafter dumped the ball into the net.

"Thank God he missed it. Otherwise we'd still be playing," Ivanisevic said.

He collapsed as the crowd roared, then rose in a daze. At the net, Rafter gave him a hug, a pat on the back and a rub on the head.

Ivanisevic then crossed the court and ran up a stadium aisle to the VIP box for a group hug with his father, coach and friends. When he climbed onto a broadcasting booth with a grin as wide as his outstretched arms, the crowd renewed its chant of "Go-ran! Go-ran!"

"I don't care now if I ever win a match in my life again," he said. "Whatever I do in my life, wherever I go, I going to be always Wimbledon champion."

And the two sides added in a joint statement: "Neither party believes this course of action will become a reality because the State of Louisiana is committed to stepping up its participation to keep our national Football League Team long term in the city of New Orleans."

"Today is a great day," said Arnold Fielkow, the Saints' director of administration. "We ought not to speculate on what it might look like in 18 months. We agreed on a process we think makes sense and the state thinks make sense. We're confident a favorable report will come out of that study."

Crude falls

NEW YORK — Energy futures at the New York Mercantile Exchange fell Monday on profit taking spurred in part by Iraq's acceptance of a new phase of the United Nations oil-for-food program.

Front-month August crude, which had rallied nearly $2 a barrel on Thursday and Friday, lost 62 cents to close at $27.59 a barrel.

The selloff in crude futures spilled over to drag heating oil and gasoline futures lower, analysts said.

August gasoline futures fell .73 cent to close at 74.94 cents a gallon, while August heating oil dropped .99 cent to 72.79 cents a gallon.

Iraq and the United Nations agreed earlier Monday to extend the oil-for-food program for a new, five-month phase, setting the stage for a resumption of more than 2 million barrels a day of Iraqi crude oil.

The U.N. Security Council approved a five-month extension of the program last Tuesday after Britain and the United States, facing a veto by Russia, dropped a plan to overhaul sanctions imposed on Iraq after its 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

Iraq stopped oil exports June 4 after the Security Council extended the program for one month, instead of the usual six, to allow members to continue talks on the U.S.-backed sanctions overhaul plan.

Elsewhere on the Nymex, natural gas futures fell 6.5 cents to $3.153 per 1,000 cubic feet. In London, Brent crude from the North Sea slipped 66 cents to $26.15 a barrel.

The British pound was quoted at $1.4104, up from $1.4055.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 125.50 Japanese yen, and the pound was worth $1.4078.

Based on late European euro rates, the dollar was worth 2.3002 German marks, down from 2.3168; 7.7144 French francs, down from 7.7702; 2.5914 Dutch guilders, down from 2.6110, and 2,276.89 Italian lire, down from 2,293.62.

TXU to auction electric capacity

By David Koenig
Associated Press

DALLAS — TXU Corp. said Monday it will auction options to buy 15 percent of its electric capacity in Texas, as required by the state's electric-deregulation law.

TXU said the auction would boost competition for electric service in Texas by giving competitors a chance to buy power for resale to residential and business customers.

"The law says we as a large generator must auction off or sell to retail electric providers about 15 percent of our capacity," said Rand LaVonn, a spokesman for the Dallas-based utility. "So if somebody wants to start (a rival electric retailer), they can get power to resell."

TXU said retail electric providers and wholesalers can register for the auction through July 24 and auctions will be conducted over the Internet from Aug. 23 to Sept. 1.

It is the first such auction in the state, TXU said.

'The law says we as a large generator must auction off or sell to retail electric providers about 15 percent of our capacity.'
— Rand LaVonn, spokesman for TXU Corp.

TXU said it will auction options for 3,175 megawatts of capacity, enough to power more than 500,000 average Texas homes.

The power options will be auctioned in 25-megawatt blocks. Under the 1999 deregulation law, rival electric companies can buy power in blocks lasting up to two years.

Company officials declined to say what price they expect for either the options or the electricity itself.

"Since (bidding companies) will be buying in large volume, one would think they would be able to buy at a competitive rate," LaVonn said.

Terry Hadley, a spokesman for the state Public Utility Commission, said the state's 1999 deregulation law sets no limits on prices that TXU, Reliant Energy, American Electric Power and other investor-owned utilities may charge. It did, however, determine how bidding would be conducted, he said.

By law, TXU can't sell the auctioned power to a subsidiary and buyers can't resell the energy to TXU.

The law requires the big utilities to sell at least 15 percent of their capacity through 2007 or until new competitors control at least 40 percent of the big utility's market for residential and small-business electricity, according to the PUC.

The law requires the big utilities to begin auctions no later than Sept. 1, with new auctions four times per year.

A spokeswoman for Reliant said she didn't know whether the Houston-based company had scheduled an auction. AEP officials did not immediately return phone calls.

In trading Monday, TXU shares rose 17 cents to $49.44.

Comcast makes bid to become No. 1 in cable market

By Bill Bergstrom
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Comcast, the company willing to spend $41 billion to be No. 1 in the U.S. cable market, was started nearly four decades ago by a man with a background in marketing Muzak and men's suspenders.

Ralph J. Roberts and two partners bought the antenna television system in Tupelo, Miss. — 1,200 subscribers strong — in 1963. Comcast now has 8.4 million customers, the result of ambitious acquisitions by Roberts' son, Brian, who became company president in 1990.

The father and son have now made a hostile bid for the nation's top cable TV operator, AT&T Broadband. If they succeed, Comcast would dominate the nation's cable and high-speed Internet access market, reaching some 22 million customers — one-third of all U.S. households that are wired for cable.

The company picked a good time: In March, a federal court struck down a law requiring new restrictions on the size and scope of cable businesses. Analysts said that opened the door for industry megadeals.

AT&T said Monday that it has no plans to sell AT&T Broadband, but will evaluate the Comcast proposal "and do what is in the best long-term interests of our shareowners."

Comcast had approached AT&T last fall but recent talks fell apart amid concerns over Comcast's stock voting structure — the Roberts family holds a 2 percent economic stake but controls 86 percent of the voting power — and other issues, including where to base the combined company.

Comcast made its move now because it wants AT&T investors to pressure the company to make a deal before a shareholder vote on plans to spin off AT&T Broadband as an independent company.

"They are very aggressive," Atlanta telecommunications analyst Jeff Kagan said. "They want to be No. 1. This is their shot."

Before he formed American Cable Systems in 1963, the senior Roberts was an advertising account executive, a Muzak Corp. vice president and president of Pioneer Industries, a men's accessories company.

The company was renamed Comcast in 1969 and made its first public stock offering in 1972, trading on the Nasdaq exchange. What followed was a series of acquisitions that helped the company grow to 3.3 million cable customers by 1994.

It is now the nation's third-largest cable operator, stretching from northern New Jersey to northern Virginia and into Michigan, Tennessee, Florida, Indiana and New Mexico. Its 2000 revenues were $8.2 billion.

Roberts, 81, who did not comment during conference calls Monday, has declared himself pleased in the past with his son's moves.

"He's come along beautifully," he told The Philadelphia Inquirer last year. "One of the great things of any entrepreneurial endeavor is to try and make a transition to a next generation. Frequently it doesn't happen because egos get in the way. But in this case, I'm delighted that we've been able to work so well together."

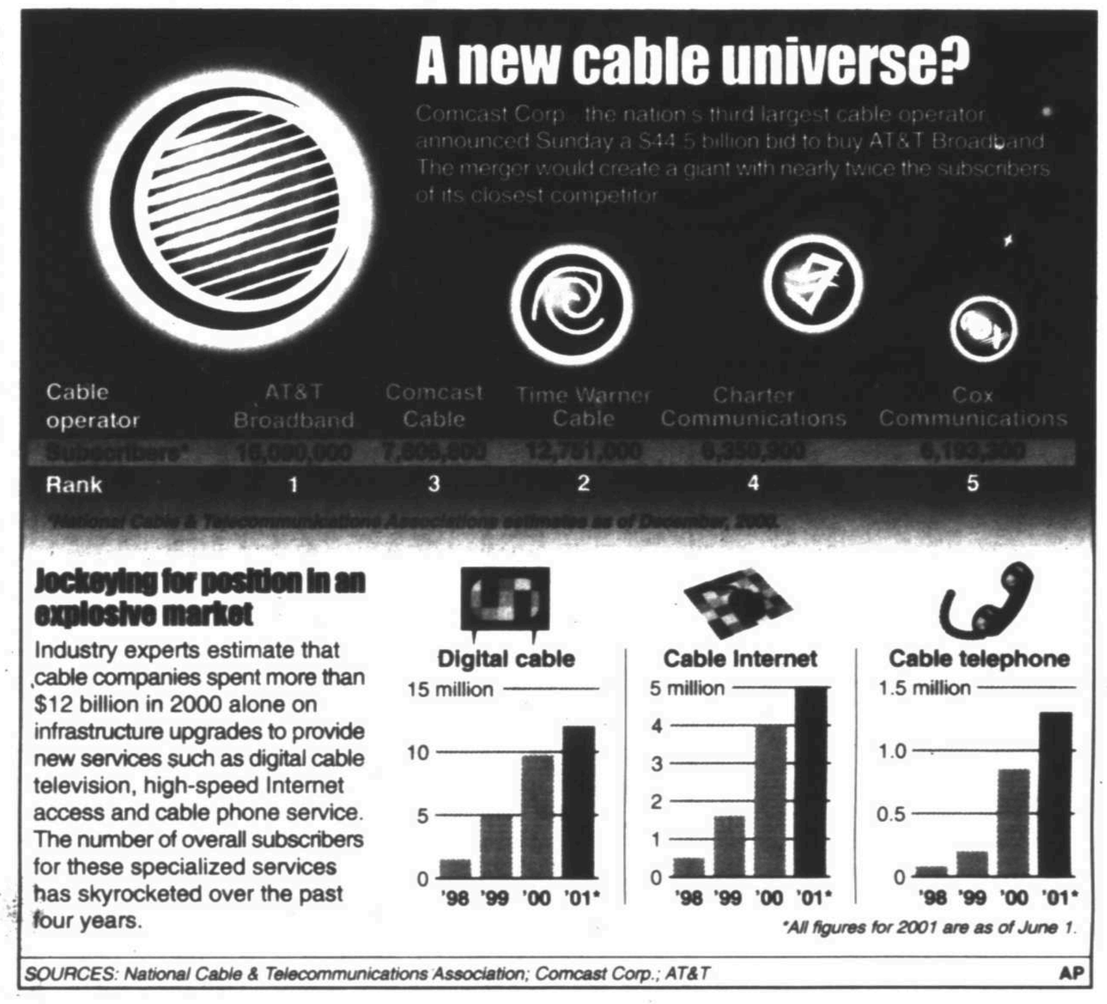
Brian Roberts, 42, chaired the National Cable & Telecommunications Association from 1995 to 1996, when the federal Telecommunications Act became law. He also chaired the cable industry research and development arm, CableLabs, from 1999 until earlier this year.

He also helped found the host committee that brought the 2000 Republican Convention to Philadelphia.

The younger Roberts has also overseen Comcast's expansion into electronic retailing with the purchase of a controlling stake in QVC in 1995. Comcast also owns majority stakes in pro hockey's Philadelphia Flyers and basketball's Philadelphia 76ers.

Comcast had 1.6 million digital cable subscribers and 542,000 high-speed Internet subscribers by the end of the first quarter and wants to build on that growth, Roberts said.

"This deal is the best opportunity that we have seen to give us the future that could replicate the past," he said.



Online grocer Webvan files for bankruptcy

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Webvan, which sought to revolutionize grocery shopping by taking orders online and delivering to customers' homes, shut down Monday after burning through $830 million without making a profit.

The company, one of the Internet's highest-profile businesses, said it will file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy and lay off 2,000 employees

Webvan joins other online grocery services on the dot-com scrap heap, including ShopLink.com and Streamline.com, two New England services that closed last year. GroceryWorks.com, backed by supermarket giant Safeway, temporarily closed last month. Peapod, Webvan's biggest rival, nearly failed last year before receiving a cash infusion from a Dutch grocer.

"We do believe we had a brilliant concept," Webvan spokesman Bud Grebey said. "We were just ahead of our time."

Webvan was forced by competition to sell items at nearly the same price as many supermarkets. But it also had to absorb an estimated $10 to $15 for each delivery, making it virtually impossible to make money.

According to a recent survey by the research firm Jupiter Media Metrix, less than 1 percent of the U.S. population had ordered groceries online in the past year.

Webvan maintained it had 750,000 active customers in seven markets — San Francisco, Los Angeles, Orange County, Calif., San Diego, Seattle, Chicago and Portland, Ore. The company had already pulled out of Atlanta, Sacramento and the Dallas area.

The company's market value has plunged by $7.2 billion since the 1999 initial public offering at $15 per share. The stock's last trading price Monday was 6 cents per share.

Analysts said they doubt online grocery delivery will work unless it is offered by established supermarket chains catering to busy, high-income households.

"It won't be a way to make more money for the traditional supermarkets, but it might be a way for them to retain their most desirable customers by offering them another sales option," said Miles Cook, a vice president at the consulting firm Bain & Co.

Market in Brief

Bargain hunting and news of an unsolicited bid for AT&T's cable TV business helped revive blue chip and technology stocks Monday, pushing the major indexes higher after a weeklong slump.

The gains were moderate, though, reflecting investors' unwillingness to make any big moves ahead of upcoming second-quarter earnings reports.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 46.72 at 10,299.40, its first advance in a week.

The broader market also closed higher, with the Nasdaq composite index rising 22.55 to 2,026.71, and the Standard & Poor's 500 index gaining 8.19 to 1,198.78.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

U.S. savings bonds do not offer investors growth potential

By Eric Tyson

Q: I disagree with your statement that stocks have returned 10 percent annually. We had losses in the stock market and were not able to deal with the lack of control. On the other hand, we used to lend money to property buyers, and these mortgages reliably generated 10 percent per annum. As I am now 77 and planning out the transfer of my estate, U.S. Treasuries appear to be the best place to put my assets for the benefit of my wife and our sons. What advice do you have, including details on the acquisition of U.S. Treasuries?

Tyson

A: Not everyone who invests in the stock market makes 10 percent annually. Some do worse, and some do better.

But facts are facts, and during the previous two centuries, the average annual rate of return for U.S. stock investors has hovered right around 10 percent. While the past is no guarantee of the future, it's hard to argue with nearly 200 years of data.

If you invest in the stock market and the market goes down and then you sell, yes, you will lose money as you did. While you can't control what happens to stock prices or the fortunes of individual companies, you can control when you can sell.

You can also control the volatility of your portfolio by investing in diversified stock mutual funds. And with index stock mutual funds, which invest to replicate the performance of a stock market index, you can achieve the overall market rate of return, which, as stated above, has historically been 10 percent per year.

Lending money to property owners (mortgages) can provide decent returns, but recognize that these borrowers could default. If they were such good credit risks, why aren't they borrowing from banks and paying less than 10 percent?

As for your money, if you're investing for both your wife and your children, I would go for a mixture of income as well as growth. Putting a portion of your money into Treasuries is fine. These can bought directly from a local Federal Reserve office; check the U.S. government section of your local phone directory. I would consider some bond and stock mutual funds as well.

Q: Regarding your recent column on U.S. savings bonds, I believe the best advice on buying such bonds is to avoid them altogether. The interest payments on the bonds ensure higher taxes and higher inflation for all Americans. I believe you should only invest in things that are productive and can produce a real profit. Agreed?

A: To a large degree, yes, I do agree with you. I think U.S. bonds are overused. Many people think they are tax-free; while it is true that savings-bond interest is free of state tax, the interest on bonds is federally taxable. If you're in a high tax bracket, U.S. bonds don't really make sense, since they are federally taxable. If you're not in a high tax bracket, their state-tax-free nature means you're giving up yield.

Like other bonds, U.S. bonds do not offer investors growth potential. After paying taxes and adjusting for the loss of purchasing power caused by inflation, U.S. savings bond investors are making no real return and sometimes earn a negative real return.

And you make a good point that we, the U.S. taxpayers, foot the interest costs on savings bonds. Since it's always easier to spend other people's money (just ask any child!), the government doesn't have an incentive to control its debt or taxes and inflation.

South Korean IOC presidential candidate gets American praise

Associated Press

MOSCOW — A week before the vote, South Korea's Kim Un-yong received a boost for his IOC presidential hopes from an unlikely source — the head of the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Kim, running against American Anita DeFrantz and three other candidates, would not be bad for the Olympic community despite being linked to the Salt Lake City scandal, USOC president Sandy Baldwin said.

"Dr. Kim is one of the brightest people I have ever met," she told The Washington Post.

Baldwin later said she supported DeFrantz to succeed Juan Antonio Samaranch as IOC president. The USOC has endorsed DeFrantz, considered a long shot.

"I wasn't endorsing him," Baldwin told The Associated Press on Monday. "My endorsement is for Anita. ... All I have said is, 'We are very supportive of Anita.' However, it's going to be difficult for an American to win the election."

Kim also received what could be viewed as a more symbolic lift when it was determined his name will be atop the ballot at the election next Monday for the most powerful position in international sports.

After an IOC investigation of the million-dollar bribery scheme surrounding Salt Lake's winning bid for the 2002 Winter Games, Kim was slapped with a severe warning. The punishment fell just short of the expulsions and resignations that swept 10 members from the ranks.

At least one of the International Olympic Committee's worldwide sponsors, John Hancock financial services, has questioned whether the election of Kim, considered among the favorites, would be a rebuke of membership and financial reforms adopted in the wake of the scandal.

But Baldwin, who does not vote, said public relations issues "would go away fairly quickly" if Kim were elected.

"Do I think we would go through some? Yes," she told The Washington Post. "But Dr. Kim is a very practical man. Ultimately, his image is important to him. I think he would work very hard to change that perception."

Kim was pleased by Baldwin's remarks.

"Very good news," he said. "Any nice words would be helpful. Maybe she knows I work for the Olympics and sports."

DeFrantz was upset.

"Does she vote?" she asked. "I guess she's expressing her opinion."

Baldwin, scheduled to arrive at the IOC meetings on Wednesday, said she would discuss the situation with DeFrantz.

"I would assume we'd all sit down together in Moscow if Anita doesn't appear to be winning and try to strategize the American point of view," she told the AP.

Hopkins, Trinidad launch war of words

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernard Hopkins grabbed a miniature Puerto Rican flag from Felix Trinidad Jr.'s hand and threw it down Monday during an outdoor press conference to hype their undisputed middleweight title fight in September.

Trinidad and his father, who also trains and manages him, reacted with class. The fighters did not touch one another and the crowd in midtown Manhattan's Bryant Park did not misbehave.

"The way he threw down the banner that's the way he'll go down on Sept. 15," the senior Trinidad said.

His son's reaction was: "I'm not going to touch you. On Sept. 15, I will knock you down."

Replied Hopkins: "I don't apologize for anything I do. I think before I do anything."

The IBF-WBC champion from Philadelphia then took a larger paper Puerto Rican flag, lowered it halfway down the stick and said: "the flag of Puerto Rico will be at half mast."

As the fighters were leaving, Trinidad, the WBA champion, said to Hopkins: "Thank you for recognizing you did wrong."

"I'm didn't apologize," Hopkins said, "and I'm not backing down."

While many in the crowd shouted their displeasure at Hopkins, the elder Trinidad said: "I want all the people of Puerto Rico to treat Hopkins well and give him respect as a human being."

Hopkins sees his fight against Trinidad as a war. He makes it sound as if their battle for the undisputed middleweight championship will be a street fight.

"I've been accused of being dirty," the 36-year-old Hopkins told reporters at HBO offices before the outdoor press conference.

After Trinidad knocked out William Joppy for the WBA title on May 12, Hopkins had talked about using elbows and knees, of turning the pay-per-view fight against the 28-year-old Puerto Rican into a brawl Sept. 15 in Madison Square Garden.

Asked how he would react to roughhouse tactics, Trinidad said through an interpreter, "The referee has to look closely if a fighter fights dirty. I'm planning to fight a clean fight and let the referee do his job."
