Police issue warrant for shooting suspect

By James Cannon
Staff Writer

Midland police have identified the suspected shooter in Thursday evening's drive-by shooting and have issued a warrant for his arrest.

Authorities are looking for 23-year-old Arthur Jeffrey Martinez for his alleged participation in the drive-by shooting. A warrant for aggravated assault causing bodily injury with a deadly weapon was issued Friday. He was at-large, as of Friday afternoon.

Residents alerted police to a report of shots fired near the intersection of College Avenue and Carlton Street about 8 p.m. Thursday. During the investigation, detectives learned that a black Chrysler 300 opened fire on a black Ford F-150 at the intersection, said Tasa Watts, Midland police's public information officer.

The truck was occupied by one male, who told police there were several males in the Chrysler taunting him. When the victim refused to back down, the men in the Chrysler opened fire, Watts said.

About a dozen 9 mm casings could be found in the intersection Thursday evening, mere feet from a group of children playing outside.

After the shots were fired, the Ford sped off in an attempt to get away from the men in the Chrysler. A vehicle pursuit ensued down West Wall Street until the man in the Ford lost the Chrysler, Watts said.

New director OKs dunes sagebrush lizard review

■ U.S. Sen. John Cornyn held up Wildlife Service confirmation until nominee promised review.

By Mella McEwen
Oil Editor

A new director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service was confirmed this week after promising to review the agency's proposal to list the dunes sagebrush lizard as an endangered species.

Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, agreed to release his hold on the nomination of Dan Ashe after Ashe agreed to several conditions. Cornyn said Ashe agreed to:

- look at the scientific uncertainties in the proposed listing and consider adding additional time for this review before making a final decision on the listing, which was expected this December;
- work to have more surveys of the lizard in Texas to get more accurate data surrounding the listing decision;
- hold and attend meetings in Texas with impacted counties and stakeholders to discuss their concerns, noting that these meetings would be beneficial to FWS' understanding of the situation on the ground; and
- post online the information it is using to make the Endangered Species Act decisions regarding the lizard. This would be information that could be requested under the Freedom of Information Act, but this will allow for more transparency.

City: Dog mistakenly euthanized after mix-up

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

When the Ramirez family left their dog, Beast, to complete his required quarantine period, they made sure to ask when they'd be able to pick him back up.

The dog had been accused of biting a girl in the family's Greenwood neighborhood, and Jessica Ramirez said they understood he had to be quarantined and observed for a 10-day period. But, Ramirez said the family members also knew they wanted to bring him back home once his time had been completed at the city's Animal Services shelter.

So when her grandmother, cousins and younger sister went to visit Beast a few days into his stay, Ramirez said they were surprised when staff weren't able to lead them to the dog right away. The family waited in the lobby as an employee made a phone call. Then they received the news: Beast had been accidentally put down.

"It was just horrible," Ramirez said. "I don't understand how in the world they could get that mixed up."

Hearing what had happened from her grandmother through a telephone call, Ramirez rushed to the shelter and demanded to see their dog. She eventually was led to the back where she found and identified Beast's body.

"I was pretty upset about it, obviously," Ramirez said. "They put an innocent animal down for no reason."

Tasa Watts, public information officer for the city, said Beast had been moved to a new kennel earlier in the week without the change being properly logged on what's known as an impound card.

The dog that had previously been in Beast's kennel was scheduled for euthanization. So on June 24, two Animal Services staff members went to Beast's new kennel and assumed the dog they were retrieving was the one that was supposed to be put

MPD: Teens arrested, face felony charges for beer theft

By James Cannon
Staff Writer

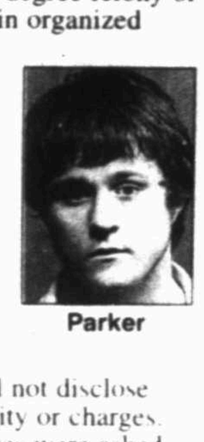

Three Midland teens each are being held on a $50,000 bond Friday on a charge of engaging in organized criminal activity after they allegedly broke into a convenience store, and stole beer, tobacco and candy.

Massey

Brandon Glen Massey, 17; Brent Douglas Huckabee, 18; and Kaden Wayne Parker, 17, all are being held on a third-degree felony of engaging in organized criminal activity.

Huckabee

Three juveniles were named by the trio, but because they are younger than 17, police will not disclose their identity or charges.

Parker

Detectives were asked to assist patrol officers Tuesday morning in reference to a burglary at Cedo's gas station on the 4300 block of West Illinois Avenue.

The burglary occurred sometime between closing and business hours, according to the arrest warrants.

The owner told police the burglars forced entry into the store and stole beer, cigarettes and candy.

When police and employees reviewed the surveillance camera video, one of the employees positively identified Massey. The video showed the teens enter a fenced-in courtyard behind the building.

Some males then began throwing items at the glass windows until it broke. The footage shows at least four suspects enter the building to steal items, the reports read.

Detectives later met with Massey and conducted an interview with him, after advising him of his rights.

He voluntarily admitted to being a "look out" during the burglary and said he helped carry the stolen beer.

He then identified Parker and Huckabee and three juveniles, according to the affidavits.

Parker and Huckabee then were contacted. Both subjects admitted to taking part in the burglary with Massey.

They both named the same three juveniles.

If Massey, Huckabee and Parker are found guilty of the third-degree felony, they could serve up to 10 years in prison.

Centers offers mental health first aid course

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

With one in four adults being affected by a mental illness each year, staff at the Permian Basin Community Centers want Midlanders to be prepared to respond.

The organization is offering three sessions of Mental Health First Aid Training this summer meant to equip attendees with the ability to respond to someone in a crisis and then get them the help they need, said Jill Stephens, Human Resources director at the Permian Basin Community Centers.

"Really the whole goal of it is to give you the tools you need to know what to do and know how to get them help," she said.

"There's really a lot of things people think they should do but shouldn't. Sometimes jumping in there and helping is the worst thing you can do."

Pam Shurley, one of the course's instructors, said the training goes over the basics of mental illness, including the signs and symptoms and what to do when encountering a friend, relative or stranger who's experiencing an incident.

"Mostly, it's to just dispel the stigma attached to it so people aren't afraid when they see someone who might be having a crisis," she said.

Shurley said while the negative stigma that comes with mental illness is decreasing, there still are those who are afraid to talk about the issue.

In their course, she said they approach responding to a mental illness the same way a typical first aid class would approach responding to a wound.

"This is just like a basic first aid course except for mental health," Shurley said.

The training goes over eight specific mental illnesses including anxiety, major depression, substance abuse disorders, schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, she said.

In the courses they've completed thus far, Shurley said people often are surprised at how common anxiety and depression are. By knowing more about it, she said they're more comfortable to talk about it and to refer friends or relatives to get help if that's necessary.

"It's mostly so they can direct someone else where to get help, to know when to call in for professional help (and) what kind of help is available," she said.

Stephens said they started offering the courses last year after Shurley and another staff member were able to attend a training session on the program. Developed in Australia, Stephens said the 12-hour first aid course has shown it makes people feel more comfortable in managing a crisis and being able to identify and understand signs of mental illness and substance abuse disorders.

She said the training is becoming more common in the U.S. and is being introduced in Texas through community mental health and mental retardation centers.

"It is very interactive," Stephens said. "It's not sitting there and listening. You're up and around; you get to do a lot of fun things."

Stephens and Shurley said the courses are open to anyone and are particularly helpful for those who interact with a lot of people whether in waiting rooms, churches or some other place.

MPD, MFD out in force during holiday weekend

By James Cannon
Staff Writer

ONLINE
www.mywesttexas.com
Find out more about "no refusal" weekend.

Midland police and the fire department have said they will be out in force during the holiday weekend looking for drunken drivers and for people violating the fireworks ban.

This weekend also will be a statewide "no refusal" weekend for people suspected of drunken driving.

The Texas Department of Transportation has trumpeted the "no refusal" holiday weekend as the first statewide program in the country. More than 200 law enforcement agencies in Texas will issue warrants to draw blood of suspected drunken drivers if they refuse to consent to a breathalyzer test, said Terry Pence, TxDOT traffic safety director.

Pence added that July 4 weekend is deadliest holiday of the year for alcohol-related crashes. The crackdown began 6 p.m. Friday and will last until 6 a.m. Tuesday.

Midland Police Chief Price Robinson declined to comment on whether his department will participate in the program, but he told the Reporter-Telegram officers will have an increased focus on the illegal activity during the holiday weekend.

He said officers also will continue the program to attempt to stop suspected drunken drivers from driving in the first place, forcing them to call a sober ride or taxi.

Law enforcement also will help the fire department enforce the fireworks ban in the city. The county fire marshals and the Midland County deputies will enforce the ban in the county.

County commissioners voted unanimously June 3 to enact the ban. Gov. Rick Perry has since extended the firework ban to more than 150 counties.

Police and fire marshals will issue a Class C misdemeanor to anyone caught violating the ordinance and issue a fine of up to $2,000 for violators caught within 5,000 feet of the city and up to $500 for people in the county.

"We will be out, vigorously enforcing this ban," Fire Marshal David Hickman told the Reporter-Telegram. "I promise you, people will be turning (violators) in."

He urged people to be vigilant and to report use of fire works by calling 685-7110.

But if a fire already has started, he said people should immediately contact 911.

Robinson said officers on duty this weekend have been instructed on how to deal with firework ban violators.

The conditions are severe and he said just the tiniest of sparks could cause a blaze that could potentially injure someone or destroy property.

Besides explosive fireworks, such as M-80s and bottle rockets, even sparklers are banned this year.

"Someone will (set off fireworks); they always do," Hickman said. "But it's zero tolerance this year. You will get a ticket, and then we will take your fireworks."

He encouraged those wishing to see fireworks on July 4 to attend the RockHounds baseball game or tailgate in the parking lot.

Hickman also warned that the use of open flame cooking pits and bonfires also are prohibited.

He said people cooking with a closed lidded pit or grill should be careful of flying embers. Charcoals should be completely extinguished and not left unattended.

"Just be safe and use common sense and we will all have a happy Fourth of July," Hickman said.

Perry hits 3,845 days in office

By Andrea Vasquez
Houston Chronicle

Texas Gov. Rick Perry is taking a big step this week. No, not that one.

Perry snagged the No. 50 spot on the list of longest-serving governors in U.S. history. As of Friday, the third-term Texas governor hit 3,845 days in office — or 10 years, six months and 11 days. That ousted former No. 50-holder, former Gov. John Love, R-Colo.

Eric Ostermeier is compiling the list and noted the milestone on his blog Smart Politics, through the University of Minnesota's Humphrey School of Public Affairs.

Gov. Terry Branstad, R-Iowa, holds the top spot on the list for his 6,014 consecutive days served from 1983 to 1999. He won election to a fifth term last year.

But Perry reigns as king in his home state of Texas. He is the first Lone State governor elected to more than two four-year terms. His predecessor George W. Bush was elected twice in a row, but resigned to run the country. The next closest was Republican Bill Clements, but his two four-year terms were nonconsecutive.

Disaster declaration signed for state wildfires

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

AUSTIN — President Barack Obama on Friday signed a major disaster declaration for parts of Texas ravaged by wildfires in April and early May, ordering federal aid to help state and local recovery efforts.

The White House had previously rejected Texas' request for a major disaster declaration, sparking a fight with Gov. Rick Perry, a Republican who is considering a run for president.

Texas is enduring one of its worst wildfire seasons with more than 3 million acres scorched by flames fueled by high temperatures, drought and strong winds.

One blaze that started near Possum Kingdom Lake, about 75 miles west of Fort Worth, destroyed more than 160 homes as it burned into three counties for two weeks.

Friday's declaration allows local governments in 45 counties to seek federal help paying for debris removal and emergency measures taken to save lives and protect property and public health."

COUNTIES QUALIFYING FOR EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE MEASURES, INCLUDING DIRECT FEDERAL ASSISTANCE, INCLUDE:

Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Bailey, Baylor, Brewster, Callahan, Carson, Castro, Clay, Coleman, Concho, Cottle, Crockett, Dawson, Duval, Eastland, Garza, Glasscock, Hall, Hemphill, Hockley, Irion, Kent, King, Lynn, Martin, Mason, Mitchell, Moore, Motley, Pecos, Presidio, Scurry, Stephens, Sterling, Sutton, Terrell, Terry, Throckmorton, Tom Green, Trinity, Tyler, Val Verde, and Young.

Source: Office of the governor

Perry welcomed the help but called it a "fraction" of what Texas needs in the wake of more than 11,900 wildfires since December.

"President Obama's decision to finally approve a portion of our disaster declaration request is good for Texas and some of the communities impacted by this season's wildfires," Perry said in a statement.

"Our prayers continue to go out to those putting their lives on the line fighting these fires, as well as those whose property and livelihoods remain in danger," Perry said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture earlier this week designated the entire state a natural disaster area, allowing farmers to apply for low-interest emergency loans.

Many producers in the nation's second-leading agricultural state have lost entire crops because of drought and wildfires.

May 31 marked the end of the driest-ever eight-month span and some parts of Texas have not seen significant rain since August.

Burn bans are in place in 235 of the state's 254 counties.

Two men sentenced for real estate fraud scheme

From staff reports

A 35-year-old Midland man has been sentenced to 84 months in a federal prison followed by 10 years parole for his role in a real estate fraud scheme and for failing to register as a sex offender.

Jason Heath Morrison and his co-defendant, Marcus Jacob Rosenberger, 35, of Odessa, both were ordered to pay $173,495.79 in restitution to their victims.

Rosenberger also was sentenced to 33 months in federal prison, followed by three years parole, for his part in the fraud.

He also was ordered to pay an additional $170,108.80 to the victims of a second real estate fraud scheme in which he was involved.

Judge Robert Junell also ordered the men to pay $2,800 in special assessments to the crime victims fund.

In February 2010, Midland police began investigating the two on charges of real estate fraud.

Authorities said Morrison's and Rosenberger's scheme involved convincing distressed homeowners, whose homes were in foreclosure, to sign over their properties to the men with the promise they would keep the house out of foreclosure and resell it.

According to court records, the men then placed ads in the local newspapers advertising the homes for sale.

Buyers then paid thousands of dollars in down payments and additional monthly payments on their new homes.

Authorities said Morrison and Rosenberger did not apply the money toward the mortgages of the homes and several residences were foreclosed upon and sold at auction, unbeknownst to the original homeowner or the new buyer.

Several buyers were evicted and lost all the money they paid to the two men, a press release stated.

Man gets 15 years for aggravated sexual assault

From staff reports

A man was sentenced to 15 years of imprisonment Friday after he was found guilty of aggravated sexual assault of a child.

The State of Texas v. Justin Miller began Wednesday in the 441st Judicial District Court in Midland. In addition to the sexual assault charge, he also was indicted on a count of indecency with a child by contact.

After deliberating for three hours Thursday, the jury returned with a guilty verdict.

The punishment phase began Friday; jurors took only one hour to sentence Miller to 15 years confinement in the Texas Department of Criminal Justice and a $10,000 fine.

Gas much cheaper than during Memorial Day

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Call it an Independence Day discount.

Gasoline prices usually peak in the summer. This year, however, they peaked a little earlier, on May 5. The subsequent slide has made gas about 24 cents per gallon cheaper than it was on Memorial Day.

The national average now stands at $3.55 per gallon. That's the cheapest gasoline has been since late March. Tom Kloza, publisher and chief oil analyst at Oil Price Information Service, expects the national average to drop another 25 to 30 cents per gallon this year.

"Prices will be lower until we get to hurricane season, then who knows?" Kloza said.

Hurricanes that pass through the Gulf of Mexico can potentially disrupt oil production and force fuel prices higher.

While gas is cheaper than it was on Memorial Day, it's hardly inexpensive. It's still 79 cents more than a year ago. And the only other year gas prices were higher for the July Fourth holiday was 2008, when gas was around $4.10 per gallon.

Police said they were called to the 800 block of Lorilla on Friday evening and found Dijuan Ausbie lying in the street. He had been shot twice in the chest and once in the back, according to the report.

He was transported to Scenic Mountain Medical Center and then flown to a Lubbock hospital, where he was in stable conditon Friday night.

Officers' initial investigation revealed that several males were arguing and then someone fired a handgun, according to the report. Police found 9mm casings at the scene.

No one was arrested as of press time Friday night.

in the Permian Estates subdivision, he alerted police to the drive-by shooting. The suspect looked visibly upset as investigators interviewed him and photographed his Ford pickup.

At least six bullet holes could be seen on the vehicle, mostly on the driver's side and on the rear of the vehicle. One bullet appeared to go straight through the cab, passing from the rear window through the windshield.

A little more than an hour after the incident, police located the suspect's Chrysler at a residence. Police detained two other suspects who were allegedly in the Chrysler during the shooting spree.

Watts said the pair were cooperating with authorities. Charges have not been filed and police could not confirm if charges would be filed against the pair, as of Friday afternoon.

The Midland Police Department has not released the name of the victim because there is still a suspect at large. Police are asking anyone with information about Martinez's whereabouts to call CrimeStoppers at 694-TIPS or MPD.

LIZARD

From 1A

"With over-regulation growing like weeds in Washington, I will continue to use every opportunity to engage the Obama administration to keep this unprecedented overreach from killing jobs and stifling growth in Texas," Cornyn said in a statement.

"The proposed listing of the sand dune lizard as an endangered species is just the latest federal regulation that threatens not only thousands of jobs in Texas but also our domestic energy resources. I am pleased that the concerns of those most impacted by this premature proposal will be heard, and that Mr. Ashe will ensure that the Fish and Wildlife Service is making this important decision with the relevant data it warrants and on a time frame that ensures proper consideration of the matter."

"We appreciate Sen. Cornyn's efforts, of course," said Ben Shepperd, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "It clearly shows he understands the potential devastating effects on the oil and gas industry of a listing."

Shepperd added that he appreciated the senator's placing a hold on Ashe's nomination "until he got confirmation and confidence the director would look at this issue completely and fairly."

The association "sees no need for listing the lizard as endangered, and we appreciate Director Ashe's willingness to look at the case," he said.

down. Watts said city procedures require staff to properly identify dogs according to their impound cards before euthanization, but those rules were not followed, and Beast was mistakenly put down.

"We highly regret that this would happen and have taken measures to ensure this doesn't happen again," Watts said. "We do have policies and procedures in place to prevent this from happening. Unfortunately, they weren't followed."

The employee who neglected to log the kennel switch on the dog's impound card was suspended, Watts said, as were the two employees who didn't properly identify Beast before euthanizing him.

"Those three employees have been disciplined," Watts said. "They didn't follow proper policy and procedure. We do take this seriously."

Ramirez said Beast came into the shelter with a tag bearing his name, which she thought would have been enough to prevent something like this. She wanted to share their story so others take precautions to ensure the same thing doesn't happen to another family.

Watts said a similar incident happened about three years ago, but mix-ups are rare and are something they work to ensure does not happen by training employees and having specific procedures in place.

"It's very unfortunate," Watts said. "Our complete apologies to the family for this happening."

Ramirez said they wish the mistake hadn't happened, especially to their pet. "He wasn't even a year old," she said.

Perry undergoes minor back surgery

Gov. Rick Perry has undergone minor surgery, a procedure that was scheduled months ago.

A spokesman for the governor, Mark Miner, said "everything went well" during Friday's surgery for a recurring back ailment. Miner said the operation will have no impact on the governor's ability to fulfill his duties. The 61-year-old governor is an avid runner and in good health.

Group asks judge to block sonogram law

A reproductive rights group wants a federal judge in Texas to block a new state law requiring doctors to conduct a sonogram before an abortion.

The Center for Reproductive Rights already has filed a lawsuit seeking to overturn the law, which takes effect on Sept. 1. Friday's motion asks U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks in Austin to block the law pending the outcome of the lawsuit.

NEW MEXICO

Officials plan for return of residents

LOS ALAMOS — As firefighters held their ground Friday on the flank of a massive wildfire that burned near the nation's premier nuclear weapons laboratory, officials at the lab and in the surrounding town began planning for the return of thousands of residents and employees who fled the area earlier this week.

Officials didn't give a timetable for when they would lift the five-day-old evacuation order for the northern New Mexico town of Los Alamos, normally home to 12,000 residents. But some county workers were back Friday to prepare for the eventual rush of utility service calls, as well as possible flooding from surrounding mountainsides denuded by the wildfire.

Court rules Perry security records can stay secret

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. Rick Perry's safety concerns trump public records law and details from his travel expense records for his security force can be kept secret, the Texas Supreme Court ruled Friday.

Perry and the Texas Department of Public Safety have been fighting to keep the records closed since 2007, when the parent companies of the Houston Chronicle, San Antonio Express News and the Austin American-Statesman sued to get them.

DPS has in the past released expense totals but not a detailed accounting of how they add up. Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott said those details should be kept secret because providing too much information about Perry's security could put him in danger. Perry, who is considering running for president, has made recent trips to New York, Louisiana and California.

Two lower courts ruled that the documents should be public record, but those were overturned by the unanimous Supreme Court ruling written by Chief Justice Wallace Jefferson.

"Freedom from physical harm is indeed a hallmark of our common law," the ruling said.

However, Friday's ruling did not close off all the records for good. The ruling sent the case back to the trial court with orders for DPS to provide expert testimony on what records would put Perry in danger if released.

The Supreme Court ordered the lower court to give DPS experts some deference and to consider the testimony in the context of the new personal safety determination.

But it also noted that "vague assertions of harm will not carry the day."

In September 2010, the Associated Press obtained figures showing a 12-day Perry trip to Asia cost taxpayers more than $129,000.

The Republican governor went to China, Taiwan and South Korea. DPS released totals for expense categories, such as airfare, hotels and overtime.

The agency would not say how many DPS officers traveled with Perry or where they stayed.

Releasing detailed vouchers could reveal the size of Perry's security force, how far in advance they arrive at Perry's destination and what type of vehicles they use, DPS said.

The Texas Legislature earlier this week passed a law that would allow trip details to remain secret for 18 months.

The bill is not retroactive and would only apply to future trips.

July 4 fireworks banned for fear of wildfires

By Angela K. Brown
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — From Arizona to Florida, there will be fewer oohs and aahs at the rockets' red glare this Fourth of July: Many cities and counties across the nation's drought-stricken southern tier are banning fireworks because of the risk of wildfires.

New Mexico's governor prohibited fireworks on state and private wildlands and pleaded with people not to buy or set off pyrotechnics. Authorities in the lone Georgia county that banned sales shut down roadside vendors and made sure fireworks were off store shelves. Dozens of Texas cities have canceled shows, from large events in Austin and San Antonio to small-town celebrations where folks usually sit on blankets at parks and lakes.

"People are, of course, disappointed, but they know what could happen if the fireworks show did go on," said Sherri Davis, a city clerk in Saint Jo, a 1,000-resident farming community about 70 miles north of Fort Worth.

Parts of nearly a dozen states, from the Southeast to the West, are in a severe drought. And wildfires have charred thousands of square miles in recent months.

Some parts of the affected region already ban the sale or use of fireworks — or at least the types that explode or scatter fireballs, such as bottle rockets and Roman candles. This Independence Day, more expansive restrictions are in place, with many areas outlawing even sparklers.

While there have been a few protests and at least one court challenge, many people seem to have no problem with the precautions.

In Texas, most counties are now under burn bans, which prohibit some or all fireworks sales. Most Texas cities prohibit fireworks year-round anyway, but counties usually allow people to sell and use them twice a year, for about two weeks before July 4 and New Year's Day.

Amid the bone-dry brush along Interstate 10 near the U.S.-Mexico border, dozens of roadside booths were shuttered last week in El Paso County, which banned all fireworks. But in the adjacent city of Socorro, vendors were still allowed to sell them.

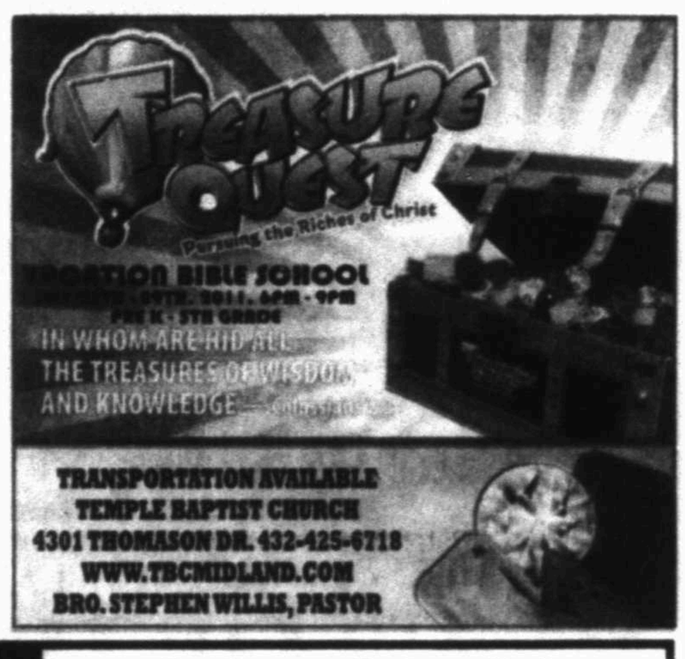

"I think this year sales are going to be better because people want what they can't have," said Michelle Saucedo, who runs a fireworks business in a Socorro warehouse. But she said she has been urging customers to be more careful this year. Blazes have scorched more than 5,100 square miles in Texas and have been blamed in four deaths — three of them firefighters — since the wildfire season began in November.

El Paso's Puerta Del Cielo Church expected to raise $2,000 to $3,000 in its annual fireworks fundraiser for a youth retreat. Because of the El Paso County ban, the church now must rely on donations.

"Our other option would be to sell water on the streets, and that would raise $200 in a two-week span, but now we cannot even do that because the city just banned that," said Tania Lemmon, the group's leader.

The city cracked down on street sales of bottled water because some vendors forged permits or had no permits at all.

Florida has many fireworks stores and stands. Technically, the only legal fireworks in Florida are those that emit small sparks and smoke, but there is a big loophole: Customers can buy rockets and explosives if they say the items will be used for such purposes as scaring birds and other pests away from farms or fish hatcheries. Police make almost no attempt to enforce the law.

DETROIT

GOP US Rep. McCotter running for president

U.S. Rep. Thaddeus McCotter, a guitar-playing five-term congressman from Detroit's suburbs known for his eccentric sense of humor and independent streak, said Friday that he plans to seek the Republican nomination for president.

The 45-year-old attorney said he will officially announce his candidacy — and join a crowded early field of GOP candidates — today at an Independence Day festival at Whitmore Lake, about 30 miles outside Detroit. He is expected to play guitar with his band at the event.

McCotter said he would push for a fundamental restructuring of government and for Wall Street banks that received federal bailout money to free up credit.

"We're not seeing credit flow down to entrepreneurs, innovators and workers that will grow the economy and shape it for the 21st century," he said. "To me that has to be a linchpin of any economic policy that goes forward."

WASHINGTON

FAA: Tired air traffic controllers can skip work

The Federal Aviation Administration announced new steps Friday to help prevent air traffic controllers from falling asleep on the job, including allowing controllers to use sick or annual leave time if they are too tired to work.

Controllers will also now be allowed to listen to the radio and read to help stay alert during overnight shifts when traffic is light under an agreement between the FAA and the National Air Traffic Controllers Association.

However, the policy changes don't include allowing controllers to take naps while on break or to schedule naps during overnight shifts even though sleep scientists say that's the most effective way to refresh tired workers.

Obama picks fight on taxes, big or just symbolic

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama is renewing an old fight with the business community by insisting that $400 billion in tax increases be part of a deficit-reduction package. His proposals have languished on Capitol Hill, repeatedly blocked by Republicans, often with help from Democrats.

Some would raise big money. Limiting tax deductions for high-income families and small business owners could raise more than $200 billion over the next decade. Others are more symbolic, such as scaling back a tax break for companies that buy corporate jets.

The corporate jet proposal would raise $3 billion over the next decade, according to GOP congressional aides. That's a relatively small sum in the big scheme of Washington budgets, but Obama and Democrats call attention to it repeatedly in their effort to portray Republicans as defenders of corporate fat cats.

No matter how Democrats characterize their proposals as revenue raisers or plugging tax loopholes, GOP leaders oppose them all, arguing that raising taxes in a bad economy would only make matters worse.

"If we choose to keep those tax breaks for millionaires and billionaires, if we choose to keep a tax break for corporate jet owners, if we choose to keep tax breaks for oil and natural gas companies that are making hundreds of billions of dollars," Obama said this week, "then that means we've got to cut some kids off from getting a college scholarship, that means we've got to stop funding certain grants for medical research, that means that food safety may be compromised, that means that Medicare has to bear a greater part of the burden."

The White House has identified about $600 billion in tax increases it wants over the next decade. About $400 billion of them were offered as part of deficit-reduction talks led by Vice President Joe Biden. That would be paired with more than $1 trillion in spending cuts.

Some of the tax proposals are vague, and budget experts have yet to calculate just how much they would raise.

For example, limiting deductions for high-income families and small businesses could raise anywhere between $210 billion and $290 billion, depending on what threshold is established as high income.

Obama is proposing to eliminate $41 billion in tax breaks for oil and natural gas companies, raise taxes on investment fund managers by $21 billion and change the way many businesses value their inventories for tax purposes. The change in inventory accounting would raise an estimated $70 billion over the next decade, hitting manufacturers and energy companies, among others.

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner has given Congress an Aug. 2 deadline for raising the current debt ceiling, currently $14.3 trillion, to avoid defaulting on the government's financial obligations for the first time in the nation's history. He warns that a default could trigger potentially dire consequences for an already anemic economy, including higher interest rates, tighter credit and new rounds of job layoffs.

The government hit the debt ceiling in May and has been juggling accounts since then to make all its payments.

Obama said he is proposing a balanced approach that spreads the pain among people who rely on government services and those most able to finance them.

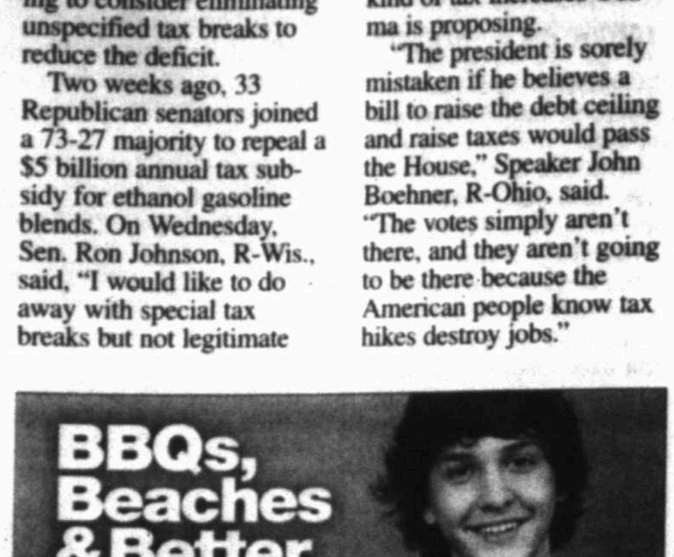

While Republican leaders argue that raising taxes is bad policy, bad politics and too unpopular to pass the Republican-controlled House, several GOP senators have said they are willing to consider eliminating unspecified tax breaks to reduce the deficit.

Two weeks ago, 33 Republican senators joined a 73-27 majority to repeal a $5 billion annual tax subsidy for ethanol gasoline blends. On Wednesday, Sen. Ron Johnson, R-Wis., said, "I would like to do away with special tax breaks but not legitimate business deductions."

But GOP leaders insist there is no support among Republicans to impose the kind of tax increases Obama is proposing.

"The president is sorely mistaken if he believes a bill to raise the debt ceiling and raise taxes would pass the House," Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said. "The votes simply aren't there, and they aren't going to be there because the American people know tax hikes destroy jobs."

Particularly in the movies, the French Riviera is as glamorous as it gets: a golden-hued playground for the likes of Grace Kelly and Cary Grant where open-top cars are cinematic law.

But today's teenybopper have just as much pull as the idols of yesterday. The gauzy "Monte Carlo" stars not our most regal cinema heroes, but the young TV upstarts Selena Gomez (Disney Channel star, pop singer and Justin Bieber girlfriend), Katie Cassidy ("Melrose Place") and Leighton Meester ("Gossip Girl").

The 18-year-old Grace (Gomez) has just graduated high school in a small Texas town. She has long dreamed of visiting Paris, saving up tips from waitressing alongside her friend, the brassy 21-year-old high school dropout Emma (Cassidy).

Grace's mother (Andie MacDowell, in the briefest of roles) and her stepfather (Brett Cullen) are happy to let her and Emma go for a week, so long as they take Grace's new stepsister, the 21-year-old Meg (Meester). This upsets Emma because she sees Meg as a nervous wet blanket, and Grace for having a family holiday forced on her long-held dream.

In Paris, their trip sours, not because of the usual culprits (rude Parisians, discombobulating rotaries, too much foie gras) but a hyper-speed tour bus that blitzes through tourist sites and eventually leaves them behind. This (along with sudden rain) is enough to make the trip a disaster in the eyes of Grace.

She sums up the status allure of the French capital, lamenting that she's not "the kind of person" who can go to Paris.

But at that moment, the trio crosses paths with a wealthy heiress who looks exactly like Grace, because, well, she's also Selena Gomez. As Cordelia Winthrop Scott, Gomez plays a British, snobby look-alike to Grace.

Urged on by Emma and buoyed by a confused hotel staff, Grace impersonates Cordelia, winning them a fancy room for the night and tickets on a private jet the next day to Monaco.

At Monte Carlo, the action generally swirls around the plush Hotel de Paris, as the girls live out a fantasy of luxury, complete with an international consortium of handsome men. Grace falls in with a young French aristocrat (Pierre Boulanger), Emma lands a dashing Italian (Giulio Berruti) while her hometown boyfriend (Cory Monteith) tries to track her down, and Meg hits it off with an Australian backpacker (Luke Bracey).

The disguise, naturally, begins to wear thin. But for the most part, the stakes never feel very high in "Monte Carlo."

The girls occasionally bicker, but they're never much at each other's throats. Until the final scenes bring things to a head, there are surprisingly few close scrapes and not even one visit to the local casinos.

"Monte Carlo," a 20th Century Fox release, is rated PG for brief mild language. Running time: 108 minutes. Two stars out of four.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

VENEZUELA

Chavez's cancer revelation rattles country

CARACAS — President Hugo Chavez's revelation that he is battling cancer raises questions about the future of his drive to bring socialism to Venezuela and create a Latin America free of Washington's influence.

The biggest question, though, is just how sick is he?

Suddenly, the issue isn't so much about how long Chavez should govern after 12 often tumultuous years in power, but how long he can.

In a surprise announcement Thursday night, Chavez disclosed that he had a cancerous tumor removed while on a trip to Cuba last month, though he didn't give details about what kind of cancer or say how soon he might return home.

During his tenure, Chavez has become a maverick leftist voice and an oil-rich benefactor for governments from Cuba to Nicaragua to Bolivia. His campaign to counter U.S. influence in Latin America has led him to build alliances with foes of Washington across the globe, from Iran to Libya's Moammar Ghadafi.

Now the uncertainty over his health has raised questions about how long that will continue and whether a successor would maintain what Chavez's opponents call his policy of "check book diplomacy" to prop up the region's left. Chavez denies accusations that he has lavished excessive oil-funded aid on allies, saying his government's oil deals with allies such as Cuba are mutually beneficial.

Defiant Gadhafi threatens attacks in Europe

TRIPOLI — A defiant Moammar Gadhafi threatened Friday to carry out attacks in Europe against "homes, offices, families," unless NATO halts its campaign of airstrikes against his regime in Libya.

The Libyan leader, sought by the International Criminal Court for a brutal crackdown on anti-government protesters, delivered the warning in a telephone message played to thousands of supporters gathered in the main square of the capital Tripoli.

It was one of the largest pro-government rallies in recent months, signaling that Gadhafi can still muster significant support. A green cloth, several hundred meters long and held aloft by supporters, snaked above the crowd filling Tripoli's Green Square. Green is Libya's national color.

A series of powerful explosions later rattled the heart of the capital, apparently new NATO airstrikes, as Gadhafi supporters cheered, honked horns and fired into the air in the street. Black smoke could be seen rising from the area near Gadhafi's Bab al-Aziziya compound.

Prince William, Kate charm Canada on royal visit

OTTAWA — Prince William and Kate joined in Canada Day celebrations on Friday, often stealing the show as they were feted by Canadian leaders and cheered by tens of thousands who lined the streets of the Canadian capital to get a glimpse of them.

Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper welcomed them to an afternoon program at Parliament Hill as "the world's most famous newlyweds" and said they represent "our unbreakable link with our past and our unqualified optimism for the future."

The crowd — many dressed in Canada's red and white colors — exploded in prolonged cheering and chants of "Will and Kate, Will and Kate."

A few wore homemade crowns in a nod to the royals.

Mexican artists confront raging violence with song, brush

By Olga R. Rodriguez
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Dozens of plastic foam heads rain onto the stage. Four drug traffickers in fringed jackets and sparkly pink cowboy hats bat them into the audience with toy AK-47s. All the while, the cast croons, "Let them slit our throats, let them pack us up ... let them not ask any questions, let them not investigate."

This is cabaret, Mexico style. Las Reinas Chulas, or the Beautiful Queens, parody drug violence in a show the women first produced in 2005 and that still fills nightclubs around Mexico, including a performance in the tourist town of Taxco this weekend.

Like other aspects of Mexican society, violence now pervades the arts. From paintings to movies to opera, the killings and kidnappings that dominate headlines are now the topic du jour for artists trying to process what's happening to their country. Many artists say they also hope their work helps to spark change in a society that seems to be growing numb to the daily bloodshed.

Dead bodies, blindfolded and hands tied, blot bucolic landscape paintings. Pieces of a car window shattered in a shootout provide material for glittery bracelets that are part of an art installation. A famous narco-ballad about a female drug trafficker who kills her lover becomes an opera.

"Art always tries to talk about where we are heading," said Ana Francis Mor, a performer with Las Reinas Chulas, who have been invited to perform in the U.S. and Europe. "It's a thermometer for society."

Even as the art flourishes, audience reaction and public support have been mixed, mirroring Mexico's ambivalence about how to cope with the wave of violence that government figures show has so far taken at least 35,000 lives. Other estimates peg the body count at around 40,000.

"Every day we hear about the corruption, the killings, the impunity, and it feels like all of that is closer and closer to us, yet no one does anything, no one says anything," said Semiramis Huerta, a cabaret actress in another show, "The United Narcos of Mexico," which closes with corrupt police and drug traffickers dancing in a chorus line.

Mexican art has long reflected the country's violent history, from the murals of Diego Rivera and David Siqueiros that dramatized the horrors of the Mexican Revolution to novels and narcocorridos detailing in word and song the entrails of the drug trade.

Narco themes have been showing up in visual arts for at least a decade, especially in states such as Sinaloa, home to a powerful cartel of the same name, where violence long predated President Felipe Calderon's late 2006 crackdown on organized crime. But in the last two years, more exhibits have gone national and even international, and the sheer amount of such art has climbed.

A movie, starkly titled "Hell," about a town overtaken by a drug lord who is also the mayor, swept the Arieles, the Mexican Oscars, this year. A Mexican art installation that reached the 2009 Venice Art Biennial in Italy includes a person mopping the bare floor with a mixture of water and blood.

Painter Ricardo Delgado Herbert showed his portraits of monster-like hit men holding handguns or automatic rifles at an exhibit of Latin American art in Miami Beach in March. The title of the collection, "Glorious Pistols from A to the Zetas," refers to the Zetas drug cartel, which is notorious for its gruesome violence.

Now the 36-year-old artist from the city of Tampico is working on a series of paintings depicting drug traffickers and soldiers as both saviors and executioners in the Stations of the Cross. It's his way of expressing how Mexicans are trapped in the crossfire between two forces that are neither completely good nor completely bad, Delgado Herbert said.

The artist grew up in the northeastern state of Tamaulipas listening to corridos and watching low-budget movies about cowboy detectives who chase after narcos.

He began painting the characters with crooked teeth and popped-out eyes in the aftermath of a 2004 shootout between soldiers and gunmen in Matamoros, across from Brownsville. He said that's when he realized "those characters I heard about growing up were among us and were confronting us."

"My work has been my constant complaint," he said. "I paint what I don't like."

A similar sense of disillusionment drives painter Gilda Lorena Martinez, whose series, "City of Sand and Blood," hung in the halls of the Mexican Congress in April.

Martinez has called Ciudad Juarez, Mexico's most violent city, home for 20 years and she started putting her feelings on canvas in 2008, as murders in the city were soaring.

She had to shut down her art school, moving it to her home, after a neighboring business received a bomb threat. One of her art students was killed outside his house. Conversations about who was leaving the city or where mothers were sending their teenagers to study outside of town became common.

Iowa couple opens farm, cares for 300 animals

By Cynthia Beaudette
Associated Press

WAPELLO, Iowa — Some people would be surprised to see hyenas in Wapello — especially one as friendly as Topanga, one of the more famous animals living in DeWayne and Melinda Connolly's Fairview Zoological Farm.

The couple care for about 300 animals, and opened their farm up to the public in May to provide an educational experience for visitors.

Topanga's big, toothy grin seems like a genuine reaction when DeWayne Connolly approaches her cage.

The hand-raised hyena is comfortable around most people and has even been on the David Letterman show with well-known animal handler Jack Hanna, whom DeWayne Connolly has worked with many times.

"I've been to New York 36 times for animal shows and it's been a good experience," said Connolly, who calls his animals "ambassadors" for their species. "The main thing is to educate the public about these animals and the environment."

The Connollys' interest in animal handling began in 1981, through a friend, Paul Seabold of Keokuk, who ran a transport operation bringing animals to zoos.

DeWayne Connolly eventually took over his friend's business and would bring home some animals to care for before they were taken to their new homes.

Sometimes, zookeepers would ask Connolly to care for an animal at his farm.

Some animals stayed at the Connolly farm, and the family gained experience caring for adult animals and hand-raising some of their babies for exhibitions and educational purposes.

The farm expanded to include birds, cattle and mammals.

On weekdays, DeWayne, 51, works at Tyson Foods in Columbus Junction and Melinda, 49, works at the Wal-Mart warehouse in Mount Pleasant. Their time off on weekends goes to opening the zoo to the public.

During the week, the zoo becomes a family operation with help from the couple's children, son Tim, 30, and daughters Montana, 21, and Billi Jo, 28. Tim's wife Amanda and Montana's fiancé, Travis, also pitch in.

Even Tim's 2-year-old daughter, Payton, lends a little helping hand by carrying George the tortoise on stage for the audience.

Visitors to the zoo are treated to a guided tour and an afternoon animal show.

"When someone leaves here, we want them to know something about animals," said DeWayne Connolly.

From anteaters to Arctic foxes, the farm is home to animals from around the world.

White buffalo, considered sacred by American Indians, roam the farm's grasslands, where prairie dogs also whoop and frolic. Several camels aren't far off.

Connolly considers the zoo's watusi steer, a species originally from Africa, one of the farm's most impressive wild residents with its seven-foot horn span.

Whimsical lemurs of Madagascar peer back at guests with large, expressive eyes and the comical coati mundi of South and Central America almost seem like stuffed toys. The resident anteater is so docile, DeWayne can hold it in his arms.

Although his animals are used to people, DeWayne said he and his staff always use caution.

"We never go in the pens with them," he said. "When we clean the cages, we transfer them to different areas." He also doesn't recommend keeping any wild animals as pets.

"I can't believe this is here," said farm guest Karla Kerr during a recent visit.

Bishops to review gay policies

By Robert Barr
Associated Press

LONDON — Church of England bishops say they temporarily have barred priests in civil partnerships from being appointed as bishops.

The statement Friday from the House of Bishops said a review of civil relationships would be completed next year and a broader review of the church's attitude toward homosexuals is to be published in 2013.

The Right Rev. Graham James, the bishop of Norwich, says bishops have devoted little time to the issues of homosexuality since they issued a statement in 2005, though deep disagreements the issue have strained the global Anglican Communion.

The Church of England's policy is that gay male priests who are celibate are eligible to become bishops, though no openly gay candidate has been advanced to a bishopric.

The temporary ban on promoting priests in civil partnerships would exclude a number of clergy including the Rev. Jeffrey John, the dean of St. Albans, who has been considered for advancement twice and rejected both times.

The church is still debating whether women, gay or not, can become bishops.

The bishops' statement on civil partnerships in 2005 said that "sexual intercourse, as an expression of faithful intimacy, properly belongs within marriage exclusively." It defined marriage as "a faithful, committed, permanent and legally sanctioned relationship between a man and a woman, is central to the stability and health of human society."

The statement said any candidate for holy orders who is in a civil partnership can expect to be asked whether the relationship is celibate, in accord with church teaching.

Leaders hold terror talks in London

Associated Press

LONDON — Pakistan has agreed to cooperate more closely on counterterrorism issues with Britain after the killing of Osama bin Laden, the prime minister's office said Friday.

David Cameron and Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari held their first face-to-face discussions in London since the May 2 raid by U.S. Navy SEALs in Abbottabad during which bin Laden was killed.

Pakistani leaders have denied knowing that bin Laden was in Abbottabad — and U.S. officials have said there's no evidence yet that the upper ranks of the Pakistani military or civilian leadership helped hide him. But Pakistanis are furious that the U.S. staged the raid without any warning or Islamabad's consent.

Earlier this week, it was revealed that Pakistan had ordered Britain to withdraw some of its military training teams from the country. Britain's military said the 18 trainers had been asked to leave over security concerns expressed by Pakistan's government following the Abbottabad raid.

Downing Street did not mention the incident, instead emphasizing cooperation between the two countries.

Cameron angered Pakistani officials last year when, on a visit to India, he said Pakistan must not be "allowed to look both ways" on terrorism. Since Bin Laden's death, he has argued that the West must continue to cooperate with Pakistan.

US coach Sundhage brings European flair

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

SINSHEIM, Germany — The American women haven't looked the same since Pia Sundhage got her hands on them.

After years of getting the ball to their forwards and letting them overwhelm defenses with their superior athleticism, Sundhage has injected a little European flair into the U.S. offense.

"I was always saying the States played a little too direct," said Sundhage, a Swede who is the first foreign coach the U.S. women have had. "They've been very, very successful, don't get me wrong. So I wanted to change that, but it couldn't be too big of a change. With a successful team, you can't change too much."

When the two-time World Cup champions play Colombia on Saturday, fans will see a possession-based offense. Instead of relying on the forwards to begin the attack, Sundhage wants the offense to develop in the midfield.

Think the fluid, pretty style of Barcelona, and you get an idea of what Sundhage is going for.

"Really knowing how to break down teams with many passes and much possession, truthfully that's the best way of defending is holding the ball," Abby Wambach said. "That's why Barcelona is so good. They literally force their opponents into submission because they always have the ball. It's demoralizing when you don't even get much chance."

Opponents used to know exactly what was coming when they played the U.S., regardless of who was in the lineup or where on the field the Americans took possession. But they were powerless to do anything about it. The U.S. forwards were either bigger or quicker — or both — and more skilled.

And because U.S. kids start out playing one-on-one in pretty much every sport, there was nothing Michelle Akers, Mia Hamm, Tiffeny Milbrett or Wambach loved more than taking on a defender or a goalkeeper.

"Yes, I love playing on a team that they're sending balls up to me and I'm fighting for balls. It's my style," Wambach said. "If you have a strong forward that can hold the ball, that can keep the ball for you, you can start the attack much further up field. For me, I love that. And I love being physical."

But the rest of the world is closing the gap on the Americans as countries devote more attention and resources to their women's programs. Two countries, Colombia and Equatorial Guinea, made their World Cup debut here in Germany. Not only is France back after an eight-year absence, it's ahead of two-time defending champion Germany on goal difference atop Group A after breaking down Canada with a crisp passing game Thursday.

If the United States doesn't adapt, it risks finding itself pulled back into the pack.

"We need to be smarter. We need to do different things," Sundhage said. "Change the point of attack more than once. For me, the game is about rhythm. In order to find rhythm, in order to decrease the tempo sometimes and increase the tempo, you need everybody involved."

RockHounds win consecutive games for second time since May 30

By Jordan Mason
Sports Writer

For the second consecutive night, the Midland RockHounds took the Arkansas Travelers' biggest shot and responded emphatically in a 8-6 win Friday that gave the team its first consecutive wins since June 22 and only its second win streak since May 30.

RockHounds left fielder Matt Sulentic, in his first action since the All-Star game, missed the cycle by a triple and powered a RockHounds scoring flurry that ultimately put the game out of Arkansas' reach.

RockHounds	8
Travelers	6

"I wasn't expecting a three-day break on the All-Star game," Sulentic said. "But that's what I had, and I'm very happy I could get the second half off to a good start."

Midland jumped out to an early 2-0 lead in the first on RBI singles by Shane Peterson and Stephen Parker.

But that lead evaporated in the second when Clay Fuller belted a two-run shot to left just moments after his bunt attempt to move Matt Cusick over was ruled foul.

Midland, though, didn't flinch after its early lead vanished into the West Texas night.

Instead, Jermaine Mitchell put the RockHounds right back up 4-2 on a two-run double to the short porch in right in the bottom of the fourth.

On the mound, meanwhile, Midland got a helping hand from A.J. Griffin in his first performance as a RockHound.

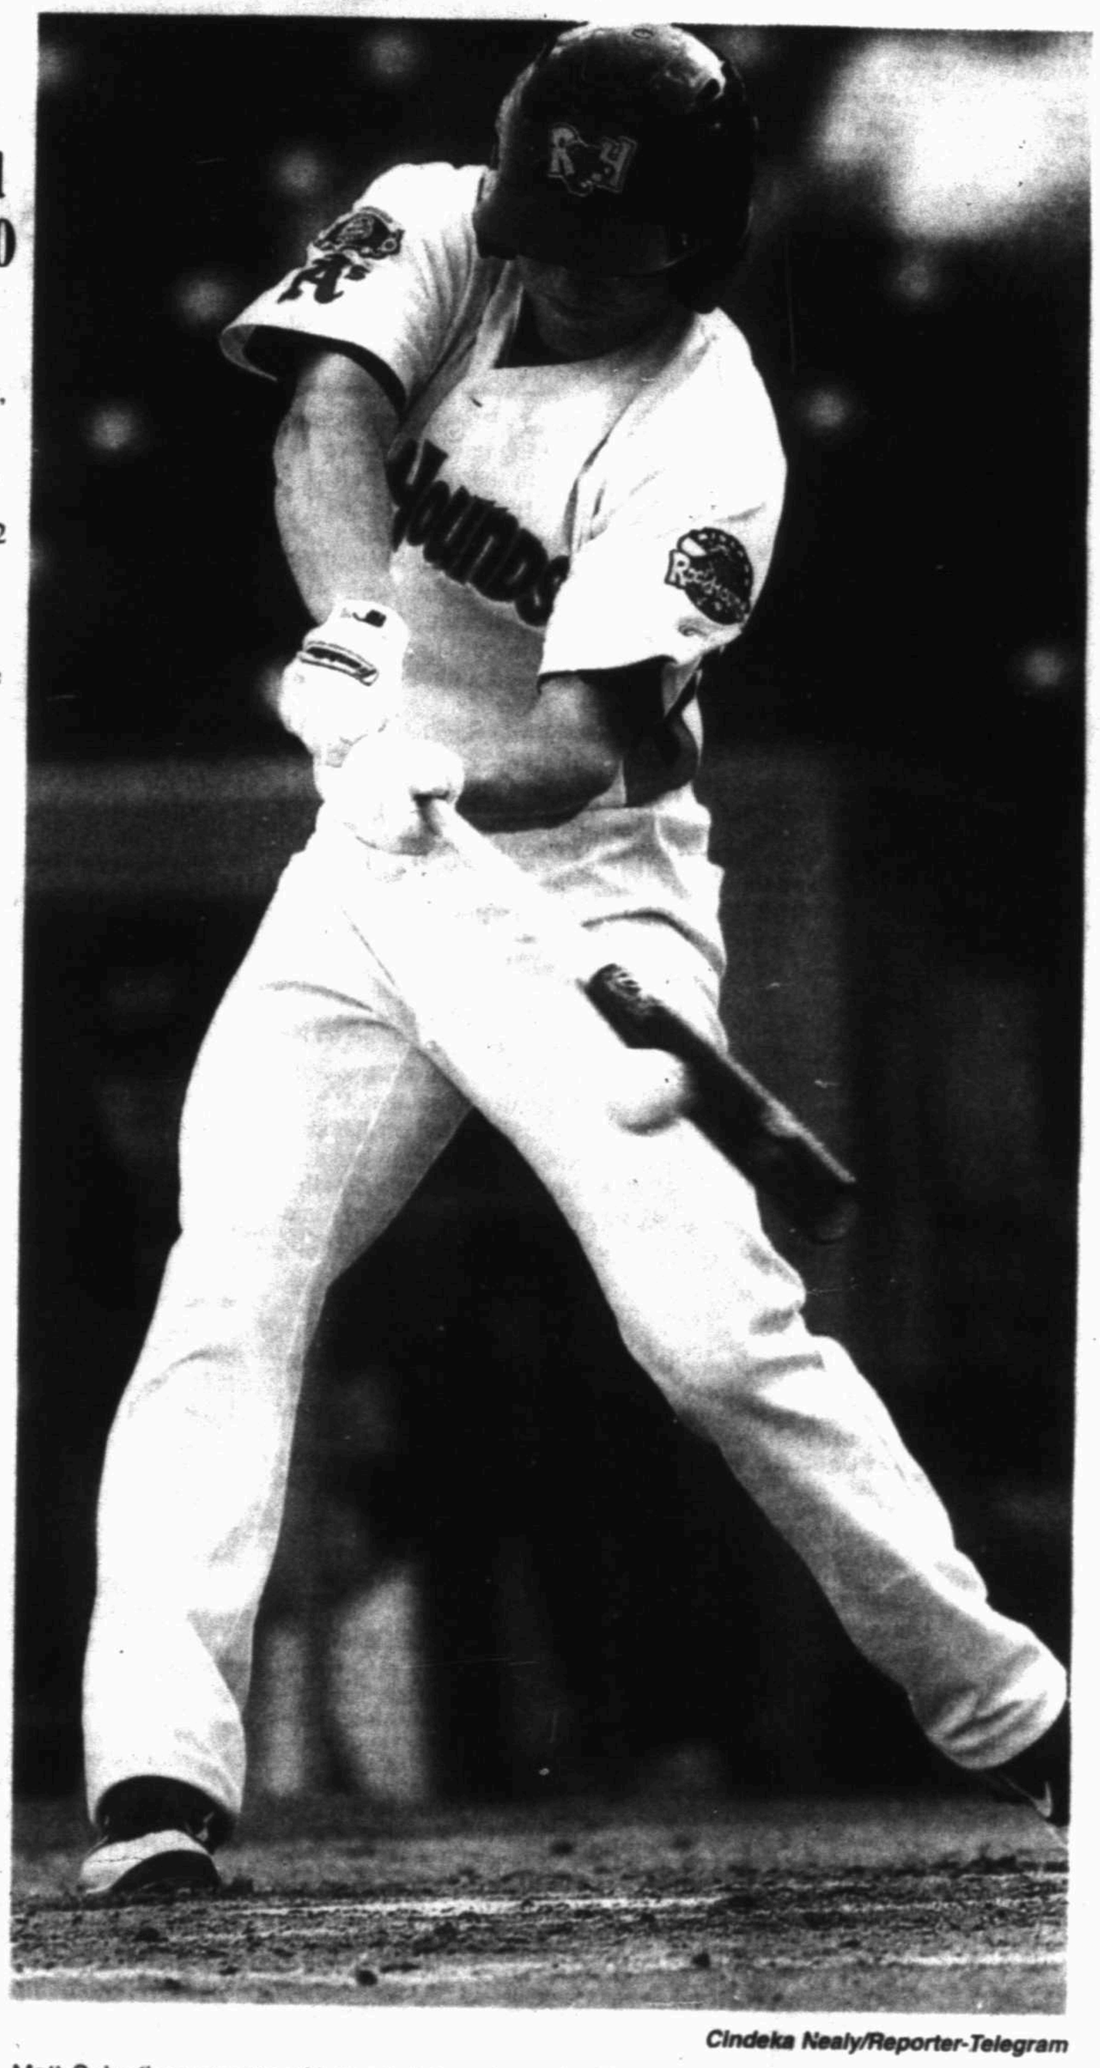

Griffin got the win in his debut, allowing only four hits in 5.2 innings and fanning five.

But two of the four hits Griffin allowed were home runs, with the second courtesy of Alberto Rosario in the fifth inning that cut the RockHound lead to 4-3.

Yet Midland responded again, this time with the help of Sulentic, who launched a two-run shot of his own to left that pushed the lead to 6-3.

NFLPA, owners break talks for week

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The NFL commissioner and the boss of the league's locked-out players stood together this week and addressed the league's rookies, a picture of cooperation that raised hopes pro football would soon be back in business.

This, however, is the reality: The league's longest work stoppage has now stretched into July, with gaps that still must be bridged before teams can be assembled and training camps can begin.

The next bargaining session has been scheduled for after the holiday weekend, putting the end point of this labor dispute — now well past the 100-day mark — ever closer to the preseason.

The negotiating teams led by NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell and NFL Players Association Executive Director DeMaurice Smith met for a couple of hours Friday morning at a Minneapolis law firm with U.S. Magistrate Judge Arthur Boylan, following a 15-hour Thursday session that stretched past midnight and gave the negotiators a short night's sleep.

Several people familiar with the situation said the talks would resume Tuesday in New York City. The people all spoke on condition of anonymity to The Associated Press because Boylan has ordered the details of the talks to be kept confidential.

No free agency now, maybe no NBA games later

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

NEW YORK — No free agency now, maybe no games later.

The NBA lockout claimed a quick casualty in Day 1, when the free agency period did not open as usual on July 1.

Games eventually could be lost, too, if owners and players can't make progress whenever they start talking again.

"It's going to get ugly. I've already been on the record saying I don't think they're going to play at all next season," Hall of Famer and TNT analyst Charles Barkley said Friday.

The last lockout reduced the 1998-99 season to 50 games, and players say they're prepared to hang in as long as necessary this time, rather than agree to the financial changes owners are seeking.

The silence of this July 1 was a sad contrast to the dizzying events of exactly one year earlier, when LeBron James welcomed the New York Knicks and New Jersey Nets to Cleveland to hear their pitches, and teams crisscrossed the country in pursuit of other stars that were available.

Interest in the league surged from there, right on through the NBA finals that drew some of the best TV ratings the event had seen in years.

"Basketball as a sport is in such a great place right now. It's a shame it came to this," agent Marc Cornstein said. "Hopefully, we can resolve this in a fair and equitable way."

And, owners would add, a profitable one. Tired of losing millions in a system that has guaranteed players 57 percent of revenues, they want an overhaul that would allow small-market teams to compete with the big spenders, and all of them to make money.

Deputy Commissioner Adam Silver has said some teams would be better off if there were no games this season, though stressed no owner wanted that to happen. The NHL shut down for a year to get the salary cap system it sought.

ANOTHER FINAL Rafael Nadal serves during his semifinal match against Andy Murray on Friday at the All England Lawn Tennis Championships at Wimbledon.

Djokovic, Nadal reach Wimbledon final

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Having ensured his first trip to a Wimbledon final and first turn at No. 1 in the rankings with a thrill-a-minute victory, Novak Djokovic dropped to his back at the baseline, limbs spread wide, chest heaving.

Moments later, he knelt and kissed the Centre Court grass, while his entourage bounced giddily in unison, huddling in a tight circle up in Djokovic's guest box.

Clearly, it meant so much to all of them that Djokovic beat 12th-seeded Jo-Wilfried Tsonga of France 7-6 (4), 6-2, 6-7 (9), 6-3 Friday in an entertaining and engaging semifinal filled with diving volleys and showmanship. What would mean even more: If Djokovic, who is 47-1 in 2011, can beat defending champion Rafael Nadal for the title Sunday at the All England Club.

As a kid in war-torn Serbia, Djokovic recalled, "I was always trying to visualize myself on Sunday, the last Sunday of Wimbledon. Being in the Wimbledon final — it's 'the thing' for me."

The top-seeded Nadal extended his winning streak at the grass-court Grand Slam tournament to 20 matches by ending the latest so-close-yet-so-far bid by a British man at Wimbledon, eliminating No. 4 Andy Murray 5-7, 6-2, 6-2, 6-4. It's the third consecutive year Murray has lost in the semifinals.

The last British man to win Wimbledon was Fred Perry in 1936, and the last to even reach the final was Bunny Austin in 1938; since then, the host country's men are a combined 0-11 in semifinals.

"I feel sad for Andy," said Nadal, who showed no signs of being hampered by the aching left heel that he's numbing with painkilling injections as he seeks a third Wimbledon championship and 11th Grand Slam trophy overall.

No matter Sunday's result, the Spaniard will be overtaken in the ATP rankings Monday by two-time Australian Open again in the next inning after Adam Heether was hit by a pitch and Parker reached on an error with two men down.

Sulentic went down 0-2 before slapping a two-run double to right to put the RockHounds up 8-3.

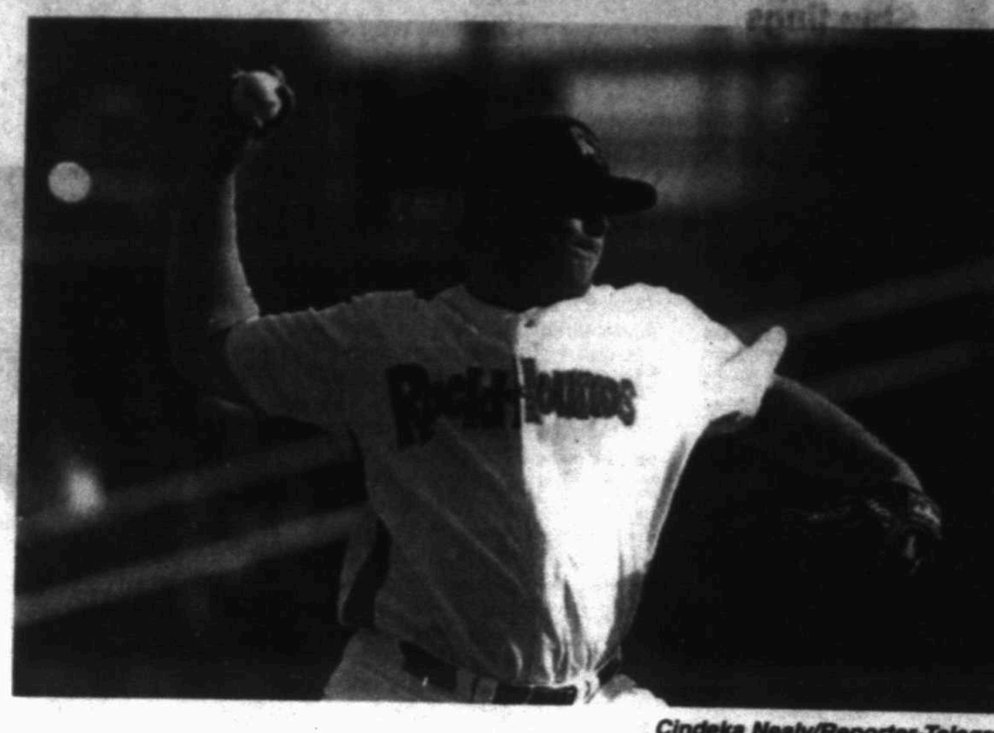

Arkansas cut that lead to 8-5 in the seventh on a two-run triple by Darwin Perez and added a run in the ninth before Andrew Carignan, also playing his first game as a RockHound this season, struck out Babe Jacobo looking with runners at second and third to end the game.

"We got a great performance out of two new guys today," Scarsone said. "We had Griffin who went out there and really had control of the game. Then Carignan at the end there ... he got the job done."

The RockHounds now have the chance to get their first series sweep since they swept the Travelers in the first series of the season, which is a feat that'll resonate with many members of the team.

"It feels good," Sulentic said. "The guys that have been here since the beginning can appreciate how far we've come as a team and are excited to continue to make that happen."

SOCKERS TODAY

CHIVAS EL PASO AT WEST TEXAS UNITED

When/where: 8 p.m. today, Grande Communications Stadium

Records: El Paso 8-3-2 (26 points); WTU 3-8 (9 points).

Last game: El Paso 1, Rio Grande Valley 1; Laredo 3, WTU 0.

Last meeting: El Paso 1, WTU 0 on June 11.

Notes & Quotes: In West Texas United's last meeting with Chivas, Sockers coach Warren Cottle came away from the 1-0 loss feeling the team had played one of its best matches of the year. The Sockers controlled much of the pace in the match, but couldn't finish on some solid scoring opportunities, including a couple penalty kicks. ... The Sockers are losers of six straight PDL matches with their most recent defeat coming at the hands of Laredo, 3-0, last weekend. They haven't won a match since May 19 and are in last place in the Mid South Division of the Premier Development League's Southern Conference. WTU does have a victory against FC Dallas' reserve team during that span, though. ... Chivas sits atop the Mid South Division with 26 points — two points better than the Laredo Heat. The Patriots haven't lost in their last five PDL matches, going 3-0-2 in that span.

Next: Rio Grande Valley at El Paso, 8 p.m. July 9, Patriot Stadium; Rio Grande Valley at West Texas United, 7:30 p.m. Friday, Grande Communications Stadium.

Haye stares down Klitschko ahead of title fight

By Karl Ritter
Associated Press

HAMBURG, Germany — David Haye must rely on his blistering speed against the reach and power of Wladimir Klitschko in a much-anticipated heavyweight title fight.

The trash-talking Englishman has been looking for a fight with Klitschko or his older brother, Vitali, since he moved up from the cruiserweight division in 2008. It's finally happening Saturday in the unification bout at Imtech Arena in Hamburg.

Klitschko, the IBF and WBO champion, is the favorite (55-3, 49 KOs), and at 6-foot-6, has a 3-inch height advantage.

Klitschko weighed in Friday at 242 pounds, compared to 213 pounds for the 30-year-old Haye.

In the customary staredown, Haye smirked at the stone-faced Klitschko, as throngs of raucous British fans booed and heckled the Ukrainian.

"Me and Wladimir don't like each other. You'll see that in the fight," Haye said.

Undefeated in seven years, Klitschko tends to wear down his opponents with his jab before hammering them with a right cross. Haye said the first rounds would be crucial.

"I've got to make sure I land my bombs and he doesn't land his, plain and simple," he said. "I can't afford to be getting pumped in the face by his big jab."

WBA champion Haye has sought to rile his opponent in the lead up to the fight with taunts that go beyond the typical trash talk between boxers. Haye (25-1, 23 KOs) has promised to injure him, refused to shake his hand and worn a T-shirt depicting the severed heads of the Klitschko brothers.

Haye claimed the WBA belt in 2009 by defeating 7-foot-2 Russian fighter Nikolai Valuev, whom he had described as a "hairy freak" and a "circus act."

Klitschko has called the Briton's behavior "childish" and promised to respond in the ring.

"David Haye will of course pay for everything during the fight," Klitschko said Friday. "David Haye will be No. 50 on my knockout list. That's what is going to happen."

Many boxing fans say Haye has brought energy and excitement to a heavyweight division lacking strong profiles during the long reign of the Klitschkos. Haye calls the brothers "frauds," saying they've kept their belts by taking on lackluster opponents.

While that's a stretch, it's clear that Klitschko faces a career-defining moment against Haye, considered his strongest challenger yet. The Hamburg crowd will favor Klitschko, a fluent German-speaker, though Haye can count on the support of thousands of traveling British fans.

"David Haye has all the attributes to win, and win with a knockout," said Steve Victor, a 27-year-old IT consultant who traveled from London to watch the fight. "Speed, agility; his technical ability is better than any other in the division."

While both fighters are outstanding athletes, it remains to be seen who has the stronger chin. Haye has been knocked down by Lolenga Mock, Carl Thompson, Jean-Marc Mormeck and Monte Barrett, but came back to win each time except against Thompson.

Klitschko beaten by knockout in fights against Corrie Sanders and Lamon Brewster, in 2003 and 2004. He was downed three times but came back to win on points against Samuel Peters.

Cruz drives in 6 in Rangers' win over Florida

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Nelson Cruz homered and had six RBIs on his 31st birthday. Adrian Beltre drove in four runs with three hits and Alexi Ogando had a career-high eight strikeouts in the Texas Rangers' 15-5 victory over the Florida Marlins on Friday night.

Ogando (8-3) limited the Marlins to five hits and two runs over 6 2-3 innings. The right-hander had lost his last three starts, not pitching past the fifth inning in any of them while giving up 10 runs in 9 2-3 innings.

The Marlins didn't even have a baserunner until Hanley Ramirez led off the fifth with a walk. They got their first hit on Greg Dobbs' two-out single that inning, though they didn't score after John Buck struck out.

Texas got its first seven runs in 3 2-3 innings off Anibal Sanchez (6-2), who saw the end of his Marlins' season record of 14 consecutive starts without a loss.

Michael Young led off the second with a walk and put the AL West-leading Rangers ahead to stay when he scored on the first of Taylor Teagarden's two doubles.

Beltre had an RBI single in the third before Cruz hit his 19th homer — a 412-foot, three-run blast over the Rangers bullpen in right-center — to make it 5-0.

After the Marlins intentionally walked reigning AL MVP Josh Hamilton to load the bases with two outs in the fourth, Beltre hit a two-run double to right to chase Sanchez.

Andres Blanco led off the Texas eighth with his second homer, starting a six-run outburst that included a three-run triple by Cruz.

While Sanchez was getting knocked around, Ogando threw 29 of his first 36 pitches through three innings for strikes. Ogando struck out six while retiring the first 12 Marlins batters.

Ogando threw 102 pitches, 75 for strikes, and really had no trouble until the seventh when Florida started with three consecutive hits to finally score against him.

Ramirez led off the seventh with a single before Logan Morrison's double to straightaway center and Mike Stanton's RBI single.

DRIVING IN ANOTHER Texas' Josh Hamilton, second from left, and Adrian Beltre, right, congratulate Nelson Cruz (17) on his three-run home run that also scored the duo Friday in the third inning against the Florida Marlins in Arlington.

FRIDAY'S MLB ROUNDUP

Interleague

RED SOX 7, ASTROS 5: At Houston, Adrian Gonzalez hit a go-ahead two-run double after Dustin Pedroia drove in a pair of runs during Boston's six-run seventh inning, helping the Red Sox rally for a 7-5 win over the Houston Astros on Friday night.

Marco Scutaro started the game with his third homer of the season, but Boston didn't get another hit until J.D. Drew began the seventh inning with a single.

Josh Reddick and Drew Sutton each drove in a run before Pedroia's bases-loaded single with one out tied it at 5 and set up Gonzalez's clutch swing.

Houston starter Bud Norris struck out 10 in six-plus innings, but was charged with four runs and four hits in the opener of the third-ever series between these teams and the first since 2008.

YANKEES 5, METS 4: At New York, Mark Teixeira hit a two-run double. Eduardo Nunez had an RBI single among his career-high four hits and the New York Yankees took advantage of a generous call to help keep Jose Reyes off the basepaths in beating the crosstown rival Mets 5-1 on Friday night.

Alex Rodriguez and Robinson Cano had RBI doubles, and Ivan Nova (8-4) pitched five effective innings to help the Yankees win their season-high sixth straight game.

BRAVES 4, ORIOLES 0: At Atlanta, Jair Jurrjens threw a one-hitter for his first career shutout. Jason Heyward ended a long home-run drought and the Braves earned their fourth consecutive win.

Jurrjens (11-3) became the first NL pitcher with 11 wins and lowered the NL's best ERA to 1.89.

WHITE SOX 6, CUBS 4: At Chicago, Alexei Ramirez hit a two-run homer, leading the White Sox to the victory at Wrigley Field.

Ramirez connected in the seventh and Juan Pierre had a tiebreaking two-run triple later in the inning, sending the White Sox to their third straight win.

CARDINALS 5, RAYS 3: At St. Petersburg, Fla., Colby Rasmus hit a three-run homer during a wild eighth inning that featured four ejections, leading the Cardinals to the victory.

Jake Westbrook gave up two hits in seven scoreless innings for St. Louis, which has won four straight.

INDIANS 8, REDS 2: At Cincinnati, Grady Sizemore hit the first of Cleveland's three homers off Bronson Arroyo, and the Indians remained perfect against their intrastate rival.

Cleveland is 4-0 against Cincinnati, which has struggled mightily against the American League. The defending NL Central champs are 5-11 in interleague play.

PHILLIES 7, BLUE JAYS 6: At Toronto, Ryan Howard hit a go-ahead two-run single in the ninth inning, helping Philadelphia rally for the win.

With the Phillies trailing 6-5, Placido Polanco led off the ninth with a walk against closer Frank Francisco and Chase Utley followed with a fly to left that Juan Rivera misplayed into a double, putting runners at second and third. Howard then singled to center, giving Francisco (1-4) his fourth blown save in 13 chances.

National League

NATIONALS 2, PIRATES 1: At Washington, Matt Stairs drove in the winning run in the bottom of the ninth to give Washington the victory in a Davey Johnson home debut that looked much like any other game at Nationals Park this season — a nail-biter without much offense.

Stairs' drive off the right-field wall scored pinch-runner Alex Cora to give Johnson his first win as Washington's interim manager. Stairs began the day just 4 for 32 with no RBI as a pinch hitter.

Astros buyer moves on from discrimination case

By Kristie Rieken
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Businessman Jim Crane has stayed out of the spotlight since the announcement that his investment group had reached a deal to buy the Houston Astros for $680 million.

As he awaits word on approval from Major League Baseball, Crane says an almost decade-old discrimination settlement involving his company shouldn't factor into the decision.

In October 2001, Crane's former company, Eagle Global Logistics, agreed to a $9 million settlement of a lawsuit that alleged race, sex and age discrimination against employees and job applicants. It included $8.5 million in back pay and damages and a $500,000 fund to train women and minorities for leadership jobs at the company.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission alleged at the time that EGL had improperly failed or refused to promote or even find jobs for blacks, Hispanics and women. The EEOC also alleged that those three groups were paid less than whites and subject to disparate discipline and a hostile working environment.

Crane left EGL, an international freight company, in 2007 and founded Crane Worldwide Logistics the next year. At the time of the settlement, he described it as a commitment to a work environment free of discrimination.

"While we continue to deny the EEOC's allegations, we feel that it is in the best interest of our company and its future to resolve this matter at this time in a productive, forward-looking manner," he said in 2001.

In 2005, nearly $6 million of the settlement was returned to EGL by District Judge Lynn Hughes after it was found that 203 of 2,073 claims were with merit.

Crane did not respond to messages seeking comment on the issue, but addressed it in May during a news conference on the sale of the Astros.

"If you've done your homework on that, there really wasn't a problem there," Crane said. "We can address that later. But I don't think it's going to be a problem whatsoever."

Racial discrimination is a particularly sensitive subject for a league that celebrates diversity in a number of ways. The league marks Jackie Robinson Day annually in memory of the Brooklyn star who broke baseball's color barrier in 1947, and it backs youth programs to address the dwindling number of blacks in the majors.

Hincapie set to match Tour longevity record

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press

LA-ROCHE-SUR-YON, France — George Hincapie rode alongside Lance Armstrong on his record run of seven Tour de France victories — and is about to match a mark of his own at cycling's greatest race.

With the backdrop of a doping investigation in which Hincapie has reportedly implicated both Armstrong and himself, the American is about to equal Dutch rider Joop Zoetemelk's record of starting and finishing 16 Tours.

Hincapie, who turned 38 on Wednesday and now has a tiny hint of gray in his closely cropped dark hair, is a selfless workhorse who gained his greatest individual Tour glory with a dazzling mountain stage win up to Pla d'Adet in the Pyrenees six years ago.

Modest and soft-spoken, Hincapie was a bit reluctant to reflect on the record he's set to equal.

"With all this talk of the record, you guys are actually making me kind of nervous at the Tour — which I haven't been in a long time," Hincapie said Friday at a BMC team news conference. "I guess I haven't really dwelled on it that much."

LAUGH IT OFF George Hincapie laughs at a remark Friday during a press conference at the team hotel in La Roche sur Yon, western France. Hincapie rode alongside Lance Armstrong on his record run of seven Tour de France victories, and is about to match a mark of his own at cycling's greatest race.

For a rider who has spent most of his career in the background, it is a rare chance to take some of the limelight.

"It's an honor. When I first turned professional, I had hoped that I could do 10 years as a professional, and a couple of Tour de Frances," Hincapie said. "Being here 18 years later, and 16 Tour de Frances later, is something I never would have imagined."

Hincapie has been in the news for different reasons recently, after CBS' "60 Minutes" reported in May that he told federal authorities he and Armstrong supplied each other with performance-enhancing drugs and discussed them.

Armstrong has always denied doping during his seven consecutive Tour victories from 1999-2005. Hincapie has said he never spoke to "60 Minutes," but has otherwise declined to discuss the report.

He is looking forward to slipping into the background again at this year's race, where he will take on a lieutenant role again to help BMC leader Cadel Evans of Australia, a two-time runner-up at the Tour.

"My priorities here at the Tour are help Cadel try to win the Tour de France — he's been a phenomenal racer his whole career, and in the last two years, in my opinion, he's really stepped it up higher than he's ever been."

That doesn't mean Hincapie would pass up an opportunity for a breakaway if it suits him.

"I'd love to be in there, and to try to win a stage would be incredible," he said.

WOMEN'S WORLD CUP ROUNDUP

JAPAN ROUTS MEXICO 4-0 AT WOMEN'S WORLD CUP: At Leverkusen, Germany, Japan routed Mexico 4-0 Friday on a hat trick by Homare Sawa to reach the quarterfinals of the Women's World Cup for the second time.

Sawa, playing in her fifth World Cup, opened the scoring in the 13th minute before a crowd of 22,291 at Bay Arena. The 32-year-old captain added her second goal in the 39th after Shinobu Ohno had made it 2-0 in the 15th. Sawa had plenty of room in the 80th minute when she was set up by Yukari Kinga to complete her hat trick.

In Group B's late game in Dresden, England and New Zealand need a win to have any realistic hope of advancing. Mexico is in danger of elimination.

ENGLAND RALLIES FOR 2-1 WIN OVER NEW ZEALAND: At Dresden, Germany, Jill Scott rallied England with a second-half goal and assisted on another for a 2-1 win over New Zealand on Friday.

For more than an hour, England was in trouble. But the tall midfielder Scott turned things around with a 63rd-minute header and a low pass to Jess Clarke for an 81st-minute winner.

England moved into second place in Group B with four points, behind Japan, which beat Mexico 4-0 in the other group game to advance to the quarterfinals. With two losses, New Zealand was eliminated.

England will play Japan in the last group game on Tuesday.

FLAIR

From 1B

Now when the Americans get the ball, Sundhage wants it to go to the center midfielders, usually Carli Lloyd and Shannon Boxx. Based on what they see, they can send the ball out to the flanks or up to one of the forwards. Or they can direct it back to a defender and start the whole process over again.

Not only do the long possessions burn time off the clock, they can frustrate opponents like nothing else. Watch Barcelona play, and it often looks like a game of keepaway — until there's a lightning strike of a goal, that is.

"I think it's good for our system," captain Christie Rampone said Friday. "We can't always rely on one thing. Teams are getting better, stronger, putting more into their programs, as you can see. All these games (at the World Cup) have been close and they've been very good. So I think we need that addition to our attack."

As with any change, though, the transition has not always been smooth. After going more than two years without a loss, the Americans dropped three games in a five-month span. They lost to Mexico, a team that hadn't beaten the U.S. in 25 tries, in regional qualifying. They dropped a game to Sweden, then lost to England for the first time since 1988.

Wambach has scored only once this season — though part of that can be blamed on her being slowed by a right Achilles' tendon injury much of the last year.

"To input a Barcelona-ish kind of style, where you possess the ball, yeah, I get the ball much less," Wambach said. "But it is more pretty to play the game that way. When the ball does eventually get up to my area, I have to be better. That's the challenge I'm under. And it's fun that way, too. It's different."

FRIDAY'S GOLF ROUNDUP

PGA

At Newtown Square, Pa., if seeing the putts drop for birdie were not enough, K.J. Choi noticed his gallery growing and getting more excited for him Friday at Aronimink in the AT&T National.

With five birdies over his last six holes, Choi had a 6-under 64 to match the lowest score in the two years the AT&T National has been played at Aronimink. It gave him a two-shot lead over Chris Riley (66), Charlie Wi (66), Justin Leonard (67) and Bo Van Pelt (66).

Another day of brilliant weather did little to ease the scoring conditions on this classic course in the Philadelphia suburbs. Choi simply made it look easy at the end of the round by keeping it in the fairway and giving himself good looks at birdie. Three of his birdie putts were from about 10 feet or longer, and he closed out his round with a wedge into 16 inches for one last birdie.

Choi, already having a big year with his win at The Players Championship, was at 7-under 133 going into the weekend. He won the inaugural AT&T National in 2007 when it was played at Congressional, so the calendar might be more relevant than the course when it comes to his good play at this event.

Champions

MONTREAL CHAMPIONSHIP: At Blainville, Quebec, John Cook and John Huston shot 9-under 63s to match the course record and share the first-round lead in the Montreal Championship, the Champions Tour's lone Canadian event.

Cook, a two-time winner this year, and Huston, coming off his first victory on the 50-and-over tour, each had 10 birdies and a bogey on the Fontainebleau Golf Club course on Canada Day. They matched the course mark set last year by D.A. Weibring in the inaugural tournament.

Defending champion Larry Mize was two strokes back along with Joey Sindelar, Tommy Armour III, Jeff Sluman, Jay Haas, Dan Forsman and Lu Chien-soon.

PGA European

FRENCH OPEN: At Saint-Quentin-en-Yve-Lines, France, James Morrison put aside the chronic stomach ailment and personal heartache, shooting a 5-under 66 to take a one-stroke lead after the second round of the French Open.

The Englishman almost skipped the tournament after having to go to the hospital Tuesday because of Crohn's disease, a chronic inflammation of the digestive tract that has bothered him for a decade. And his wife, Jessica, was diagnosed with a cancerous cyst last year, then had two miscarriages.

Morrison had a 10-under 132 total. Australia's Richard Green (68) was second.

NFL

and constituents all appeared in good spirits as they left the office building where they met and either walked away or climbed into black cars waiting by the doors.

But they had little to offer for an update.

"We'll continue to meet next week, and the goal is to get a deal done," Smith said on his way out.

Said NFL lead negotiator Jeff Pash: "We'll be back at it again next week."

Friday marked the fourth straight day of discussions, with a handful of owners and players joining their lawyers and leaders for the last two days.

The two sides have been trying to figure out how to agree on the division of revenues for this $9 billion business that has steadily grown in popularity, power and wealth over the last couple of decades as the NFL has become the nation's dominant pro sports league.

The revenue split, a major sticking point all along and particularly over the last couple of weeks, is considered a domino that must fall for a deal to get done.

There are several other issues to iron out as well, since the two sides are essentially creating a new collective bargaining agreement from scratch. The old one expired March 11, and the lockout began the next day. That's also when the NFLPA declared an end to its union status, a move the owners have protested as strategically convenient and have contested in court.

Among the players in Minneapolis this week were Jeff Saturday of the Indianapolis Colts and Brian Waters of the Kansas City Chiefs, with Jerry Jones of the Dallas Cowboys and John Mara of the New York Giants part of the group of owners.

For weeks, owners, players and their representatives have been crisscrossing the country, holding unannounced meetings in spots ranging from a Chicago suburb to the Maryland shore.

This week began with optimism stemming from the joint trip Smith and Goodell took to Sarasota, Fla., to address incoming rookies at an orientation symposium Wednesday morning. But they still left Minneapolis without a deal, and time has become more of a factor in this process.

Training camps start in about three weeks, with the preseason-opening Hall of Fame game scheduled Aug. 7 between the Chicago Bears and Arizona Cardinals. Even missing an exhibition game or two would begin to really cost the league money, not to mention testing the faith of the fans that have made this sport so big.

There also is the wild card of a pending ruling by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the players' antitrust lawsuit against the league, which was filed in Minneapolis and prompted Boylan's involvement as a mediator.

The appellate judges won't wait forever, and one of them warned earlier that neither side will like their decision on the legality of the lockout. But a faction on the players' side believes it's worth waiting on the court's ruling, and the owners have had plans in place for years to endure an extended work stoppage.

NBA

From 1B

With NBA owners seeking the same result, the question is: Would they be willing to take the same route?

"I'm not scared. I'm resigned to the potential damage that it can cause to our league, all of the people that earn a living from our league," Commissioner David Stern said. "As we get deeper into it, these things have the capacity to take on a life of their own. You never can predict what will happen."

With the NFL in a lockout since March, two of the four major U.S. sports are in shutdown mode. In case you're wondering, Major League Baseball is next on the clock, with its collective bargaining agreement expiring at the end of the day on Dec. 11 — though players and owners hope to have a new deal before then. The NHL's deal goes until Sept. 15, 2012.

The NFL already has lost free agency, minicamps and some workouts during its lockout, with training camps still a few weeks from opening. If the NBA's work stoppage were to last as long, it clearly would put the start of the 2011-12 season in October in jeopardy.

"If we were out as long as it appears the NFL will be out, even on a best-case scenario, given the length of our season, that would take us to a place that would assure a lot, I think, more damage because we have such a long season," Stern said last week. "And I think that motivates us on both sides to see whatever we can do."

Stewart vows to keep wrecking drivers who block

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

Stewart

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Tony Stewart vowed Friday to wreck any driver who blocks him on the track, even if that policing costs him a spot in NASCAR's championship race.

Stewart intentionally spun Brian Vickers last week at Sonoma because he felt Vickers was blocking him during the race. Vickers retaliated later by wrecking Stewart, who had a car capable of contending for the win but wound up 39th.

It dropped him to 12th in the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship standings.

"I am drawing a line in the sand and the next guy that blocks me, he is going to also suffer the same fate," Stewart said at Daytona International Speedway.

He also upped the ante, stating in a calm manner that he'd wreck the next driver enough to ensure he won't be able to come back and retaliate against Stewart.

"It doesn't matter who it is," he said. "I'll make sure that when I do it the next time that the guy doesn't have the opportunity to come back and wreck me."

His stance seems to be excessive, especially since Stewart is on the bubble of making the Chase with only 10 races left to qualify for the 12-driver field. Under new qualifying rules, only the top 10 drivers are guaranteed a Chase berth.

The other two spots will go to drivers ranked between 11th and 20th who have the most wins. Stewart is winless this season.

But racing smart to guarantee a Chase berth isn't on his agenda.

"I'm going to stay the course on it," Stewart said. "I'm just to the point where I'm fed up with some of the way some of these guys are racing each other. If we miss the Chase because of it, so be it. That's not what the team is going to want to hear. That's not what our sponsors are going to want to hear, but so be it.

"It is what it is. There's 42 guys out there, and they know how I race, they know what I expect. And I don't race them that way, I don't block guys and I'm not going to block guys. But if they block me, they will suffer the consequences."

Stewart is often vocal about on-track etiquette and an unspoken code of conduct, which he said he learned early in his NASCAR career from veterans who made it clear how things worked in this series.

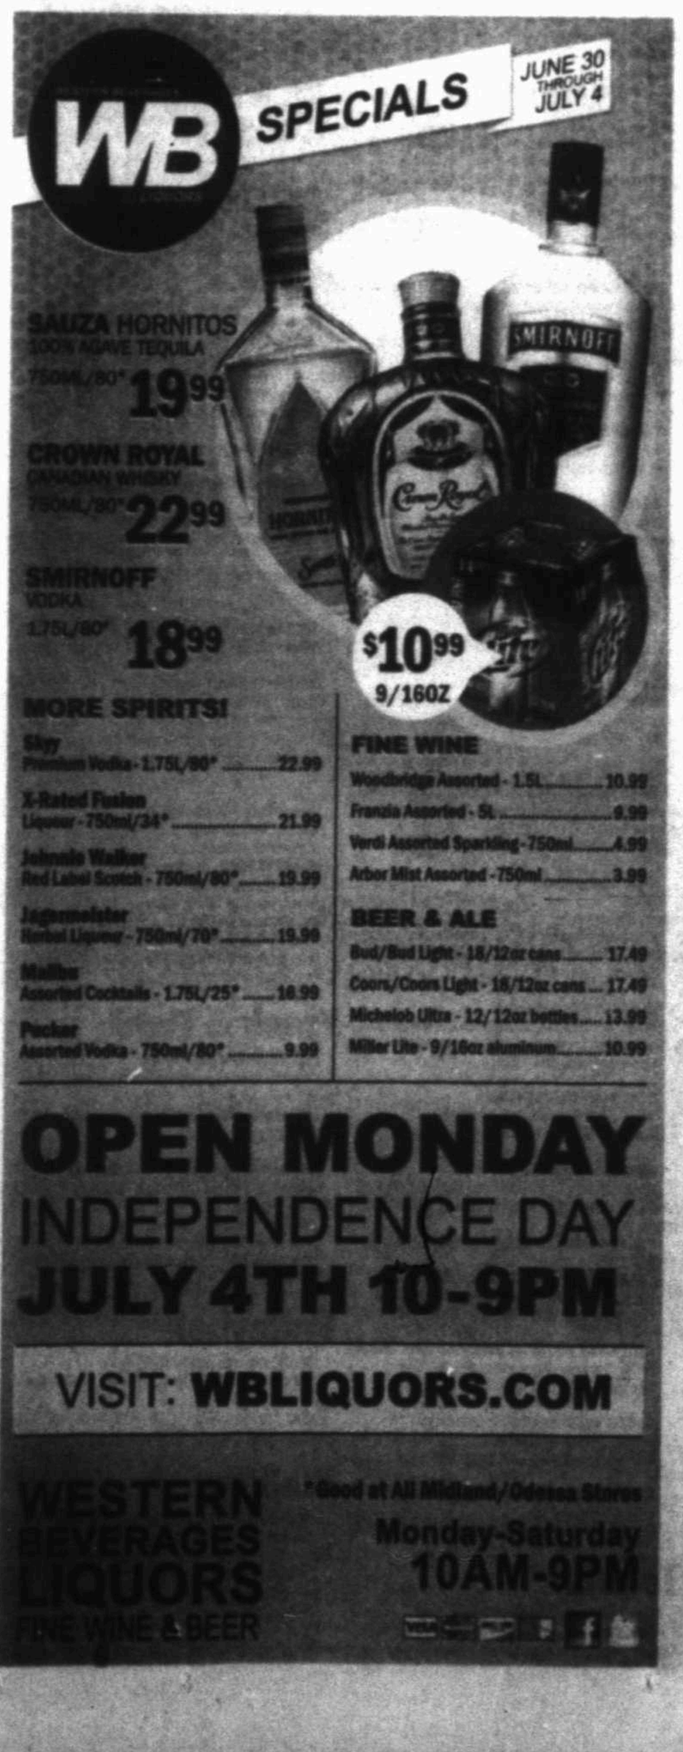

But the new "Boys, have at it," policy, and a hunger for drama and rivalries has made it impossible to teach young drivers the same lessons.

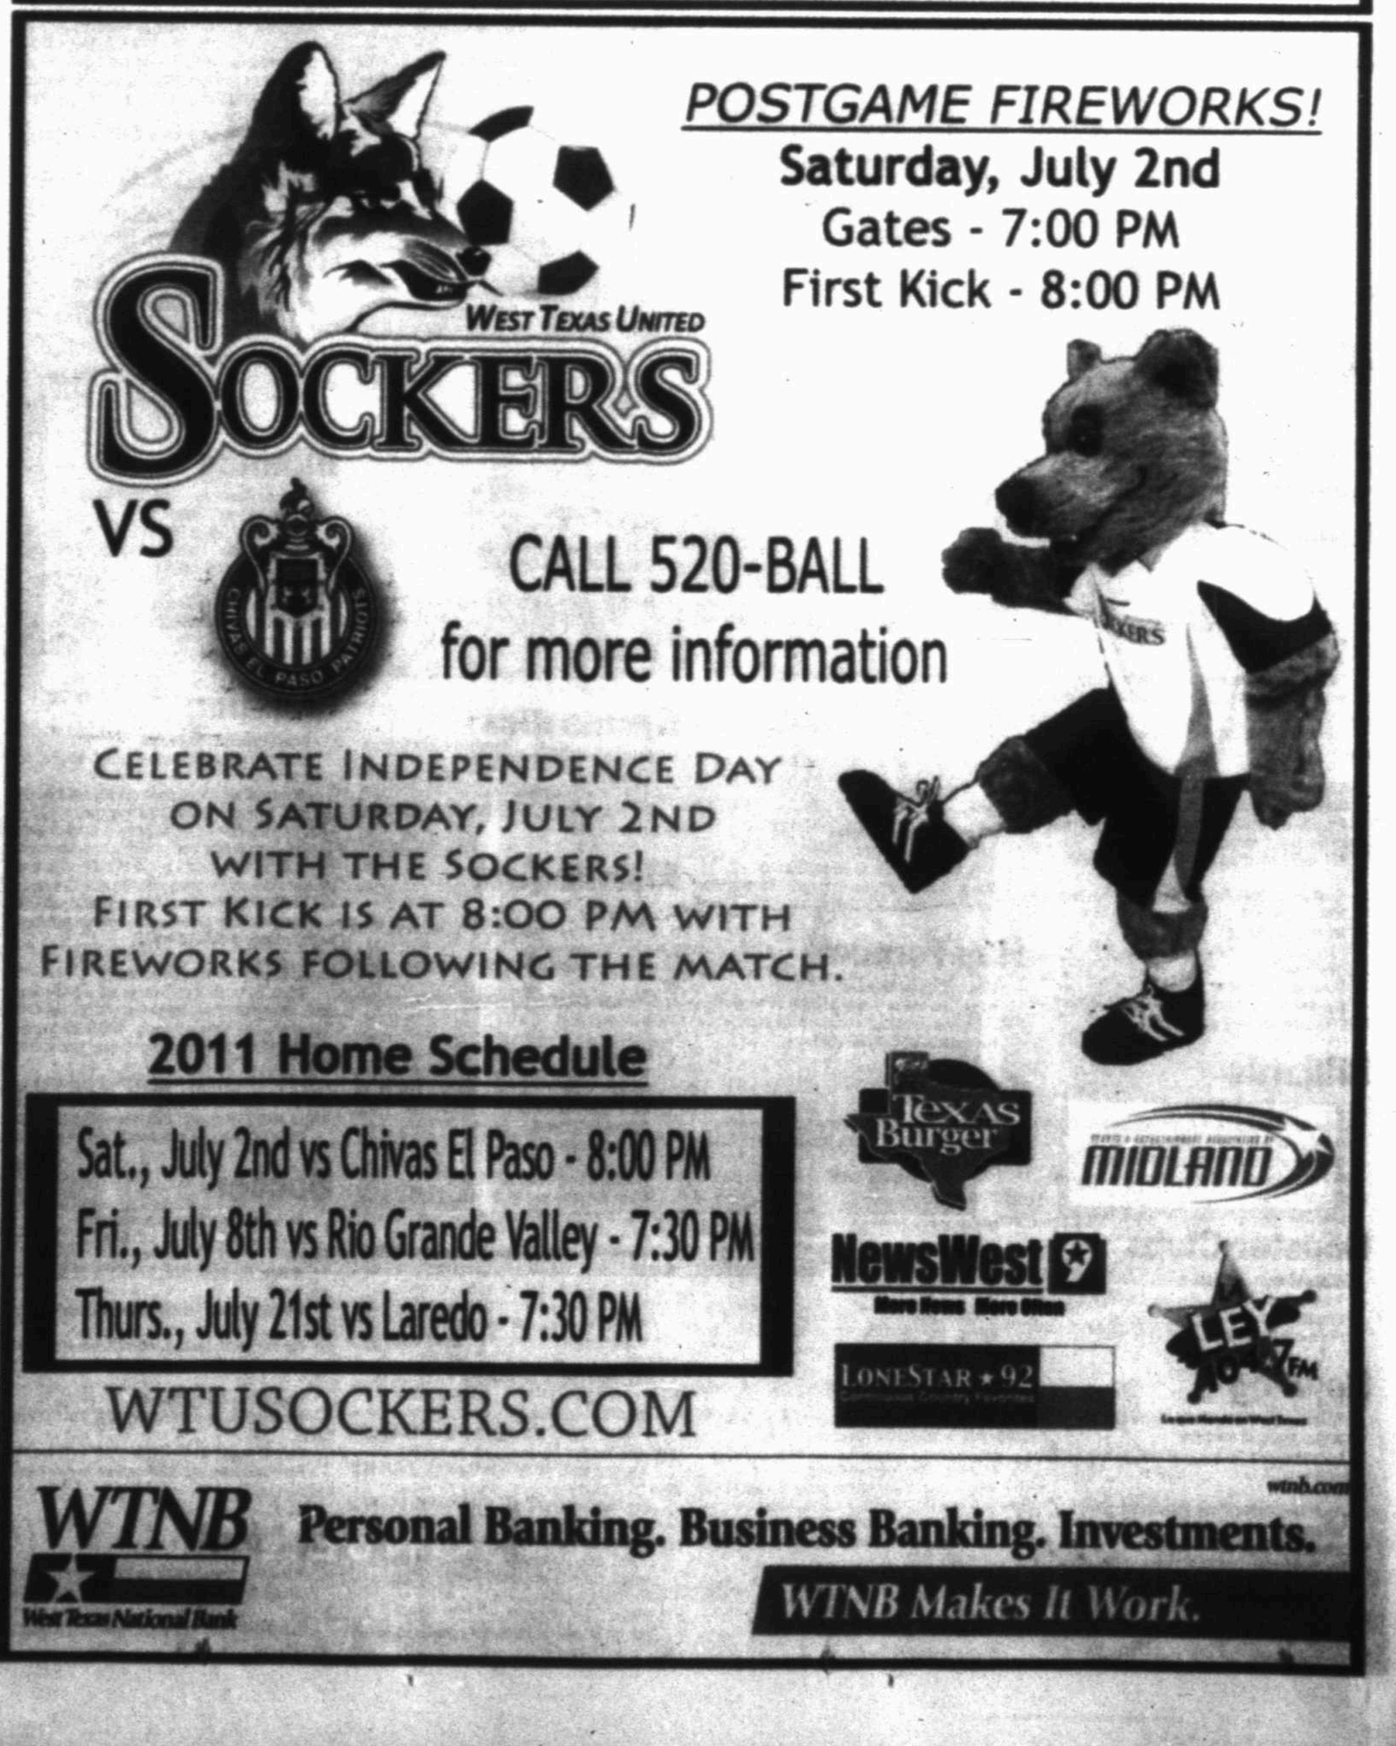

"When I came in here, I thought I was going to change how things worked, too, and Dale (Earnhardt) Sr. taught me how to do it, Dale Jarrett, Rusty Wallace, my teammate Bobby Labonte taught me, had to grab me and shake me beside a trailer one day and say, 'Listen, you've got to understand.'" Stewart said.

"Nothing like that happens in this day and age. It's so glamorized when two people do something on the race track, it's made to be such a soap opera, the whole point why it happened in the first place isn't getting resolved."

Borg and McEnroe vie for underwear sales

By Caroline Cheese
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Thirty years after their last spellbinding Wimbledon final, Bjorn Borg and John McEnroe are going head-to-head again — and this time, it's serious.

McEnroe unleashed his now famous "You cannot be serious" rant in that 1981 tournament, and the fiery American was tempted to use his trademark phrase again Friday as he revealed he had put his name to an underwear collection entitled "Bjorn Loves John."

Borg's name has been emblazoned on underwear since 1997, when his brand was launched. Now, he's invited McEnroe on board to collaborate on a collection featuring two designs each, with the pair competing for the most sales.

"I've been wearing his underwear for 10 years," McEnroe said. "Now I finally have a chance to see if my name has any cache below the waist."

McEnroe and Borg played each other 16 times in one of the sport's biggest rivalries, including in the finals of Wimbledon and the U.S. Open in 1980 and 1981. It was after his loss to McEnroe in the 1981 U.S. Open final that Borg suddenly walked away from the game at the age of 25.

McEnroe and Borg were eager to talk about their famous rivalry, both on the court and in underwear sales. Borg said the main characteristic he and McEnroe had in common was that "we hate to lose."

McEnroe added: "Since it's his company and his brand, I feel like my back's against the wall but I was told that I would have an equal opportunity to sell as many as him. This is a two-on-two battle as far as I'm concerned."

BRITISH HOPE: Britain could still have a Wimbledon champion this year after 17-year-old Liam Broady reached the boys' final.

■ Wimbledon Notebook

Broady beat Jason Kubler of Australia 6-4, 6-3 Friday to become the first British player to reach the boys' final since 2004. Stanley Matthews, the son of the England soccer player of the same name, was Britain's last boys' champion in 1962.

Broady's match was finished before Andy Murray's loss to Rafael Nadal in the men's semifinals.

Broady said Murray's success had kept the attention away from him. That won't be the case when he faces another Australian, Luke Saville, in Saturday's final on Court 1.

"I think I've done a lot better than most people would think to get here already," Broady said. "So tomorrow especially I think I'll just go out there and just play my tennis and see what comes out of it."

champion Djokovic, who'll rise from No. 2.

It will be the first time since February 2004 that a man other than Roger Federer or Nadal has been No. 1.

"Both of them are incredibly consistent with their success and so dominant the last couple years. They don't give you a lot of chances to become No. 1," said the 24-year-old Djokovic, beaten in last year's U.S. Open final by Nadal. "So I guess you need to lose only one match in seven months to get there. If you can do that, then well done."

Yes, Djokovic deserves to hear a "Well done!" or two for his surge, which he says stems in part from the confidence and pride he gained while leading Serbia to its first Davis Cup title in December. His two wins against France during the final series at Belgrade started a 43-match streak that ended with a semifinal loss to Federer at the French Open a month ago.

Otherwise, Djokovic has been perfect. He won the first seven tournaments he entered this year — including the Australian Open in January — and beat Nadal in four finals.

"His total game is really complete," Nadal said. "Good serve, very good movements. ... His eyes are very fast, and he can go inside the court very easy playing very difficult shots."

The degree of difficulty was extremely high in Friday's first semifinal, when Djokovic and Tsonga put on quite a display.

Anja Niedringhaus/AP

EXCITED TO STILL BE PLAYING Novak Djokovic celebrates Friday after defeating Jo-Wilfried Tsonga in their men's semifinal at the All England Lawn Tennis Championships at Wimbledon.

The highlight-reel points were numerous, starting in the sixth game, when Tsonga dove to his right for a forehand volley that Djokovic stretched to volley back. Somehow, Tsonga sprang up in time to knock home a volley winner, drawing a smile and applause from Djokovic. Tsonga walked toward the Royal Box — where past Wimbledon champions Bjorn Borg and Goran Ivanisevic were among the guests — and raised his arms overhead, basking in the raucous applause.

At 1-1 in the third set, both players wound up on the turf, with Tsonga diving to his left for a backhand volley. Djokovic sprawling as he stretched for a shot, and Tsonga then launching himself back to his right for another tumble, only to see his last shot land long.

Four games later, they were at it again, with both men ending up face-down on the grass.

"This is the only surface you can really dive," Tsonga observed, "because on the others, if you dive, you go directly to the hospital."

In the end, the outcome hinged on Djokovic's steadiness — he made only 13 unforced errors, 16 fewer than Tsonga —

Lake Austin SPA RESORT

Relax, savor Hill Country state of mind at Lake Austin Spa Resort

By Joy Sewing
Houston Chronicle

AUSTIN — Second chances don't come often, especially the chance to visit one of the country's best destination spas.

My trip to Lake Austin Spa Resort several years ago was an enchanting experience — a few days of luxury and lazy-day comfort in a quaint, tropical oasis. When I recently returned, I was eager to see if I'd have the same experience this time around.

Located a half-hour from downtown Austin, Lake Austin Spa Resort continues to entice visitors who unwind in the resort's intimate setting, flower and herb gardens, still waters, spa indulgences and assortment of culinary and lifestyle activities. It's also an opportunity to sample some of the beauty of the Hill Country — a unique vacation setting for guests from across the country as well as within the state.

Situated on nearly 20 lake-front acres, the resort is home to 40 guest rooms, all with a lake view and a private patio, a perfect place to watch the sunset while enjoying a glass of wine from the resort's wine list.

During my first visit, I stayed busy sampling almost everything, from cooking and fitness classes to spa treatments. I tried my hand at sculling and re-acquainted myself with kayaking. I hurried down the list of to-do's to say, "I did everything."

Second time around, I simply chilled — and I ate a lot.

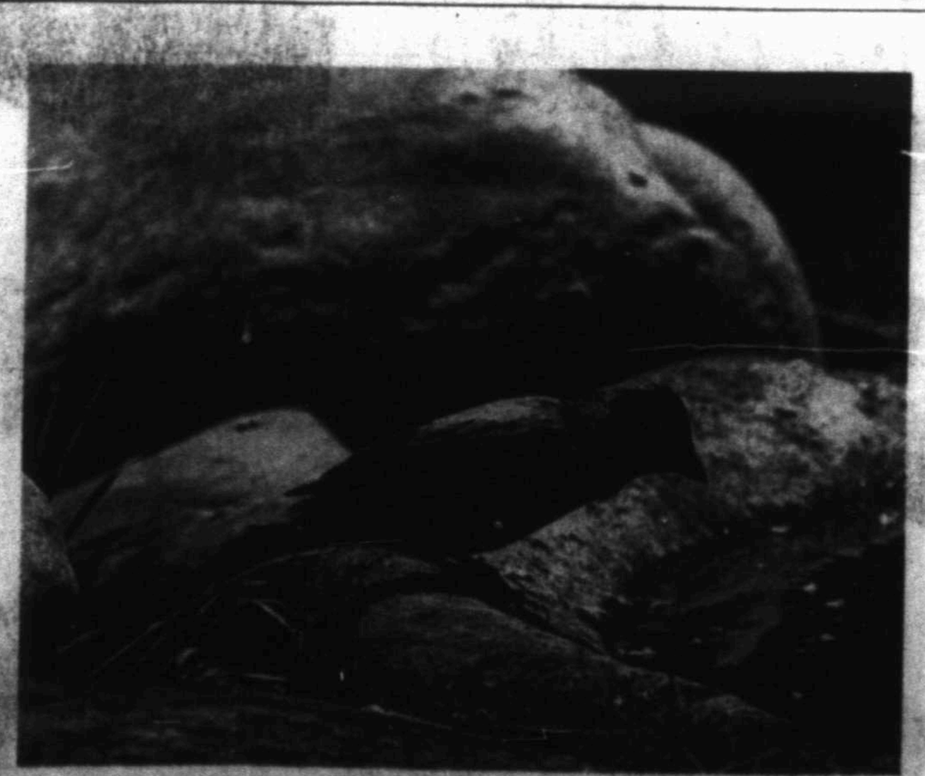

I enjoyed hours of quiet time by the main pool, with its postcard view of Lake Austin's tree canopy that seemed to gently kiss the blue sky. The pool is one of three at the resort. There's an Olympic-size lap pool in its own barn and a leisure pool surrounded by cabanas, both near the spa building.

When the sun became too intense, a likely trend this drought-baked summer, I took a break and went into the main dining area for homemade lemonade and a delightful assortment of baked sweets. Other guests had the same idea.

Food is a big deal here.

Longtime chef Terry Conlan recently retired and turned the reigns over to executive chef Stéphane Beaucamp, a French native who worked his way to Los Angeles, where he cooked up cuisine for Nicole Kidman and Elton John. (Yes, he's a fantastic chef, but his

Pedernales Falls lures with bird blinds, bike trails and river for wading

Pam LeBlanc

AUSTIN — Perched on a bench in a bird blind at Pedernales Falls State Park, I'm ogling a leopard frog the size of a fried egg when a bird that looks like it rolled in a rainbow lands on a nearby tree branch.

While I squeak in rookie bird-watcher's glee at the painted bunting, the more experienced birders around me nod in understanding.

"We see something new every time we come," says Betsy Pobanz of Austin, who stopped at the park for the day on her way to Fredericksburg, a pair of binoculars in hand.

Birding is just one of the attractions at this state park 40 miles west of Austin. It's also home to miles of mountain bike trails, a river that's perfect for wading and plenty of campsites. The 5,211-acre parcel of former ranchland, purchased by the state in 1970, gets about 133,000 visitors annually.

It was a favorite family haunt when I was a kid. We'd pack a picnic basket and head here a few times a year to grill steaks, scamper around the falls and wade up and down the river. I've come to catch up with a place that feels like an old friend, see what's new and make sure there's still enough water in the river to cool my heels despite the worsening drought.

"It exemplifies the Hill Country with little pockets of water, canyons and rocky areas, riparian stretches, dry upland areas and deep streams," says Bill McDaniel, who has served as park superintendent since 1990.

He's showing me the park's highlights, starting with this bird blind, which opened a little more than a year ago. As we watch, a parade of feathery creatures flaps through — cardinals, house finches, a western scrub jay and colorful finches.

An endangered golden-cheeked warbler was spotted six times in the past month, too, and a few lucky folks got to admire a Louisiana waterthrush, another local rarity.

"It's the best park around," says Roxana Strickland, a nature interpreter from Rock Island, who has spent the past 11 summers volunteering here. "The space of it, the camping is just awesome and the trails ... "

McDaniel is eager to show me what else is new, so we pull ourselves away from the blind and head to what will become the park's new star-gazing area.

Modeled after the one at McDonald Observatory in Fort Davis, the site now is just a 100-foot diameter pad made of crushed stone. When it's finished, it'll feature concentric rings of limestone seating blocks and a tower that will cast shadows on inlaid tiles to mark the seasonal solstices.

"It'll be the Stonehenge of P-Falls," McDaniel says. It'll also be the site of ranger-led star parties and interpretive programs.

Guests will be able to see images from a self-tracking telescope projected onto a viewing screen.

Next, we swing by the namesake falls area, where blue-green water streams down huge slabs of limestone that are wider than a football field and buckled like old driveways.

When I was a kid, you could sit in the spillway and scoot down the watery slide into pools at the bottom. The falls were closed to swimming in 1977 for safety reasons. Periodically, this riverbed floods, turning from a lazy stream into a roiling highway of water that sweeps away everything in its path.

But not today.

A gentle wind ruffles the leaves of trees that hug the hillside leading down to the river. From the overlook where we're standing high above the falls, I can hear the water splashing over the smooth rock. Thankfully, swimming and wading still are allowed farther downstream.

First, though, I want to check out the bike trails. About 7 miles of single-track pathways tempt cyclists.

McDaniel and I grab our bicycles and head to the Wolf Mountain trailhead. The trail, an old ranch road, is wide and easy to navigate. It's not at all technical (if you're looking for technical, try taking your bike on the park's equestrian trail), although it's got one whopper of a hill.

We stop to admire a spring-fed pool at one side, then hop back on our bikes and continue pedaling. The view spills out over miles of Hill Country, like an overturned bucket of rippling green and brown fabric starched into place, then studded with mesquite, ashe juniper, oak and prickly pear.

We ride for 30 minutes, then pop out on a paved park road and swing back around to park headquarters. I'm hot and sweaty, so I make a beeline for the part of the river where swimming is permitted.

I drive to the rear of the campground, then clamber down a steep rocky trail, where I settle in on a boulder next to the river and remove my sandals so I can dangle my toes in the blue-green liquid.

As I unpack a sandwich and some watermelon chunks, I watch a father and daughter test the waters for fishing. Farther upstream, a couple soak in waist-deep water, and after a while three guys scrape by, kayaks in tow.

It might be this very spot that once, according to family lore, I was floating on an inflatable raft in about 2 feet of water when I spotted — or thought — did — a snake. I leapt off the float and ran so fast the other direction that my dad, safely downriver, thought I was running on the water's surface.

That makes me smile.

It's nice to find a little country oasis just an hour's drive from home, especially when it's the source of so many childhood memories.

It's definitely time to make some more.

If you go ...

Pedernales Falls State Park is about 40 miles west of Austin, at 2585 Park Road 6026 near Johnson City. The park has 69 campsites with water and electric hookups, plus about 20 primitive sites and a youth group camping area.

Wood campfires are not permitted due to a burn ban; charcoal fires are allowed in grills. Dogs allowed on leash only. Open for day-use by equestrians. For camping reservations, call Texas Parks and Wildlife at 512-389-8900.

enticing French accent wins favor among many guests even before the cooking starts.)

Beaucamp said Austin strikes him as a place where he can spend more time cooking and less time traveling.

"My wife and I live a simple, ecofriendly, organic lifestyle," he said. "In the past, the way I lived and the way I cooked were different. This was a chance to bring them together."

His cuisine is clean, fresh and sensible, but not "diet," he explained.

He's modest. The food is delicious. Beaucamp works with Texas-based organic farms to bring in fresh meats, dairy products and fruits and vegetables.

At dinner one night as I sat on an outside patio, I savored the chilled spiced plum soup. It was pure heaven, accented with cloves, nutmeg and a touch of cinnamon. The chef was gracious enough to give me the recipe.

The resort offers a Gardening for Life program as part of its Five Star Culinary Experience weeks. Guests learn the basics of organic gardening, healing herbs, composting, healthy cooking from the garden and more.

Even if you're not skilled in the kitchen, you can sample some of the best spa cuisine in the country.

I did sneak away for a Custom Comfort massage, which is tailored for each guest's body issues. I've had massages at spas across the country, but my handsome European masseuse likely gave me the best ever.

The spa has more than 100 treatments, such as Bamboo Bliss ($210), which uses crafted bamboo tools warmed with lemongrass oil to massage the body, and the Texas Sage Herbal Infusion ($315), a detoxifying body treatment with desert sage clay masque and sheets of hot, fragrant sage and lavender.

For guests into fitness or wanting to stretch their muscles, the resort offers an extensive menu of fitness classes, including the Foam Roller Remedy, which uses Styrofoam rollers to help stretch tired muscles, and Aqua Zumba, which integrates the Zumba fitness craze with a water fitness routine.

There also are several organized hikes, as well as a boat cruise that takes you along the shores of Lake Austin.

Nights here are tranquil and still, and you can see stars for miles. So an evening astronomy class seemed in order. With a little coaching by our instructor, I actually saw the Big Dipper for the first time.

My second opportunity to discover Lake Austin Spa Resort proved as enjoyable as the first.

Perhaps a third is in the stars.

TASTE OF AUSTIN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 22-year-old senior in college. Much of college social life revolves around alcohol. I have no problem drinking responsibly, but I take medication that prohibits me from imbibing alcohol.

Strangers and friends often ask, "Why aren't you drinking?" They either assume it's for religious reasons or I'm uptight. Saying I'm on meds seems like a bit of a buzz-kill.

This is particularly trouble-some when I'm invited "out for drinks" at a bar. I never know what to order or say. I hate feeling like I'm obligated to drink, but I don't want to pass on events because of the awkward questions.

What's a quick reply I can give to those who ask why I don't drink? And how can I go out for drinks without actually drinking? — STILL SOCIABLE AT STANFORD

DEAR STILL SOCIABLE: Order a "virgin" whatever you're being offered. There are many reasons why people don't drink. Among them: They don't like the taste, they don't like the buzz, the empty calories, they're allergic, they don't want to risk a traffic violation with alcohol in their system, or they never started drinking in the first place. To imbibe or not is a personal choice. It's OK to be different. And if you're challenged, it's perfectly fine to just say, "No thanks!"

DEAR ABBY: We live in a very nice neighborhood frequented by walkers and runners. For the second time in just a few months, several women who regularly walk past our home have approached me at neighborhood events to ask about items I can only think were found in our recycling bin. Specifically, how did I like a particular brand of pasta sauce, or would I recommend that bottle of chardonnay?

Abby, our recycling bins have lids and our bin is never left open, which means these women must be peeking inside to check out our eating and drinking habits. I am now so self-conscious about our recycling I have begun burying bottles and cans under the newspaper and watching the bin to catch them in the act. My husband suggested leaving a nasty note on top of our recyclables. Any suggestions? — FOR OUR EYES ONLY IN MILWAUKEE

DEAR EYES ONLY: Once garbage is put out for collection, it is no longer private property. A certain celebrity was embarrassed to learn this firsthand when some paparazzi rooted through her garbage and discovered to their glee some empty containers of meds to treat a private health matter.

It's possible the walkers are just trying to be friendly and strike up a conversation. But if your suspicions are correct, there are several ways to handle the situation. The first would be to delay putting out your recyclables until just before they are to be collected. Another would be to visit a novelty shop and pick up some fake hands or feet — or a large rubber rat — and place them strategically in one of your bins. Or, affix "sweet" Post-It notes to your jars and bottles reading, "This was great!" or, "Don't waste your money ..."

If that doesn't discourage them from inventorying your trash, then there's always the direct approach. Respond with, "Why do you ask?" And when they tell you, let them know how you feel about their answer.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic, 4-positive, 3-average, 2-so-so, 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, July 2, 2011:

This year, hang where you are comfortable, yet at the same time draw in others. Other times you shake up the status quo, plunging ahead, especially if you have a good financial idea. Test your ideas on those who have greater knowledge than you. If you are single, your allure attracts many people. Know what type of relationship you seek, and you will choose the right person. If you are attached, pay more attention to your sweetie. It isn't all about you! LEO can be quite possessive.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ Though you might be slow to get going, your mind is working overtime with ideas. You might want to discuss how you are feeling about a child or new friend. Later today, you seem to get a second wind. You feel like a kid again. Tonight: Fun and frolic.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ Use the early part of the day to get together with friends or family. A lengthy brunch fits the bill perfectly. You might want to rethink a key relationship, as a loved one or roommate expresses his or her concern. Tonight: Entertain from home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Balance your budget and clear out any bills. You will get a better sense of what you can spend. You might be eyeing a major purchase. Later today you note how in sync you are with those around you. Tonight: Hang out at a favorite spot.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Use the morning and early afternoon to the max. You have a lot going for you. Clearly someone cannot resist you. A splurge might be OK if you have planned for it. Just don't break your budget or go to excess. Tonight: Having a great time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ Your mind works overtime, as you are in the mood to present a friend or loved one with a proposition. Depending on the nature of this suggestion, you might want to make it in the morning if it involves just the two of you. Tonight: Let the good times roll.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ Use the daytime hours to the max. Choose to do only what you want. You will wind up being with a friend who always puts a smile on your face. Reveal an issue you need feedback on. Later in the day, you might want to act on this issue. Tonight: Not to be found — by most people.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Pressure builds. You want to please an authority figure or complete a request from a boss or older friend. Clear this demand out immediately, as you will want to network or socialize later. How about a baseball game? Tonight: Surrounded by fun. Join in.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Take off ASAP if that is what you want to do. Someone could be quite delighted by your plans. This person might join you or meet you halfway. If you want to retreat, be smart and don't answer your cellphone. Tonight: Very visible.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ Continue to allow a key individual to play the role he or she wants. This person likes being dominant and getting much more of what he or she wants. Plan on taking off or going to a concert or movie late afternoon. Tonight: Keep escape the theme.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★★ Others have strong ideas. Why not allow them to play out? You might enjoy getting to know and understand someone better. In this situation, you reveal much more of yourself, too. Tonight: Go for cozy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Complete errands and dive into a project. You might get much more done than you originally thought possible. Whether accepting an invitation for a barbecue or get-together at the last minute makes no difference — a good time will be had by all. Tonight: Follow another's lead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★ Listen to a child or new friend. This person wants to share much more of him- or herself. By being less judgmental and more open, you could be delighted to see this person's inner light. Tonight: Whatever feels comfortable.

You can seal a deal on a golf course.

You can parlay a bet, win a car, earn a pat on the back or a kiss on the cheek.

Start early and you catch the first light of day. Finish late and it might be a watermelon sunset. Here are six terrific golf courses — all near Texas' three largest cities — to enjoy the blue skies and breezes.

QUARRY GOLF CLUB, SAN ANTONIO

Not long ago, every golf course in America was rated by a single criterion: Its length. That meant the Quarry Golf Club, a relatively short course in San Antonio, was out. These days, though, manageable courses such as the Quarry are back in. The first nine holes here run along the brim of an old stone quarry; the next nine dive into the business end, where you have to play over rock walls, a lake and plenty of sand bunkers. Congratulate yourself if you par No. 17, which is tricked up with a deep ravine, a waterfall and a quarry wall.

THE RESORT COURSE AT WESTIN LA CANTERA, SAN ANTONIO

TPC San Antonio's 36 holes may be newer, but it's the Resort Course at Westin La Cantera that will linger in your thoughts. When you stand on the No. 7 tee box, you can't help wondering if a really good golfer - maybe a pro - were to strike the ball solidly, could he hit the Six Flags Fiesta Texas roller coaster in the near distance? Then you'll step up to the ball, look down the long fairway that unspools below you and regrip your driver. No way can you hold back. You swing as hard as you can, hoping for that coaster. Of course, the shot never had a chance. But for that one moment, that split second when you heard the club thwack the ball and looked to see if it was soaring toward Goliath, golf was as good as it gets. A round here reminds you why you play.

OLD AMERICAN GOLF CLUB, THE COLONY

It's not often that a new golf course is touted as an instant classic, but the Old American Golf Club, northwest of Dallas in The Colony, fits the bill. Sooner Tripp Davis and Longhorn Justin Leonard put aside their Red River rivalry to create the best North Texas golf course to open in years. Many of its 18 holes cling to the windy edges of Lake Lewisville and reflect the scrappy, rough-hewn style of early American and old Scottish classic courses. But leave your grip-it-and-rip-it game at home. You'll need to think your way around the deep bunkers and bumpy fairways of Old American if you want to go low.

• Contact: 972-370-5465; oldamericangolfclub.com. Green fees $125-$150.

COWBOYS GOLF CLUB, GRAPEVINE

While other golf courses were busying themselves the last few years with things like bankruptcy and deferred maintenance, Cowboys Golf Club did something typically Cowboys: It continued to win fans. Now 10 years old, architect Jeff Brauer's design feels timeless and inspired, a heavily forested parkland routing that you'd swear was anywhere but Dallas. With its lush fairways, soft greens, fingered bunkers that look like giant sea creatures and Cowboys paraphernalia, you are reminded of the Hill Country, northern Michigan and a football shrine — all at once. Yes, a round at Cowboys will cost you dearly. But with all food and nonalcoholic beverages included, it's still the best public golf outing in Dallas. (Don't miss the grilled jalapeño sausages served near the halfway mark.)

• Contact: 817-481-7277; cowboysgolfclub.com. Green fees $100-$190.

MEMORIAL PARK GOLF COURSE, HOUSTON

Such an oddity, Houston's Memorial Park Golf Course. It's city owned, which usually signals caution. It's old, though it was recently nipped and tucked. And it's maddeningly difficult to get a last-minute tee time. Why? Because the golf course is so good. Memorial Park is a crowd-pleaser, an amazingly affordable, tree-lined, manicured walk in the park — and yes, you should walk this classic. It's worth every drop of sweat, every puff of humidity that these 18 holes exact on a golfer. Where else could you play a Tour caliber, daily-fee golf course for under $50… on a weekend?

• Contact: 713-862-4033; memorialparkgolf.com. Green fees $21-$38.

REDSTONE GOLF CLUB, HUMBLE

First a friend mentioned it. Then I heard about it from Robert Rodriguez, the publisher of Avid Golfer magazine. It seems everybody likes the Tournament Course at Redstone Golf Club in Humble. And why shouldn't they? The daily-fee course, which now hosts the PGA Tour's annual Shell Open, is challenging, secluded and immaculately groomed. "If the Masters tournament ever leaves Augusta," Rodriguez said, "they should play it here."

2011 Hyundai Sonata Hybrid sedan

First Look

Automotive Rhythms
Motor News Media Corporation

It's an auspicious time in the auto industry that is warranting the proliferation of advanced ...ology, proactively measured perfor... ...ions, and of course, strategically ... answers to the incessant opportuni... ...ly free ourselves from petroleum

...n environmentally friendly ... in the Hybrid Blue Drive ... program to stay ... sustainable ... ...

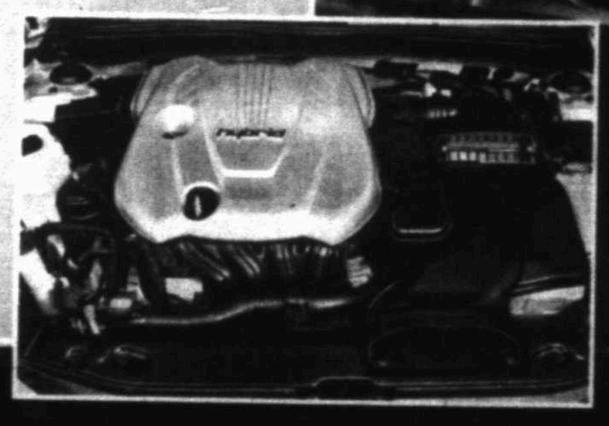

...vert-

Separating the motor from the gear set has several functional advantages over more heavily integrated systems. In addition to providing the flexibility to accommodate different applications, it also is one of the main factors contributing to the Sonata's superior highway fuel efficiency.

The Sonata Hybrid will be offered in one trim and with one option -- the Premium Package -- which is a must. Without Premium you will not get the easy-to-use touch screen navigation system, rear back up camera, Infinity sound system, leather seat covers, 17" alloy rims or the panoramic sunroof. A supervision cluster, multi-function 4.2" display and the Hybrid Technology Display with the navigation screen keeps you up to date on what your hybrid is doing and the mileage it is achieving. You even score points for optimal green thumb achievements.

Ask the Guys

Dear Classified Guys,

My dad was a collector. He filled his house with stuff I can't imagine anyone else would want. He had a 6-foot stuffed blue marlin in the garage that he didn't even catch. Then there were the ten huge boxes of used spark plugs, his bottle cap collection and pail after pail of bent nails that he vowed he would straighten one day. Since he passed away last year, I have to clean out his house. It's completely packed, and I need to decide whether to try and sell all his things or just rent a dumpster and throw them out. I mean who wants 42 years worth of greeting cards that have already been used? Any suggestions you guys can offer would be greatly appreciated.

Cash: Your Dad sounds like the type of man who saw value in everything. Unfortunately, that meant he probably kept everything too!

Carry: Since it's your task to clean out the house, it will probably involve both selling some items and throwing others out. It all depends on how much time you want to dedicate to the task and how many keepsakes you want to save.

Cash: Cleaning a family member's home can be an eye-opening experience. It's possible to learn a lot about a person from what they left behind. So while the process may seem overwhelming, you could learn even more about your father.

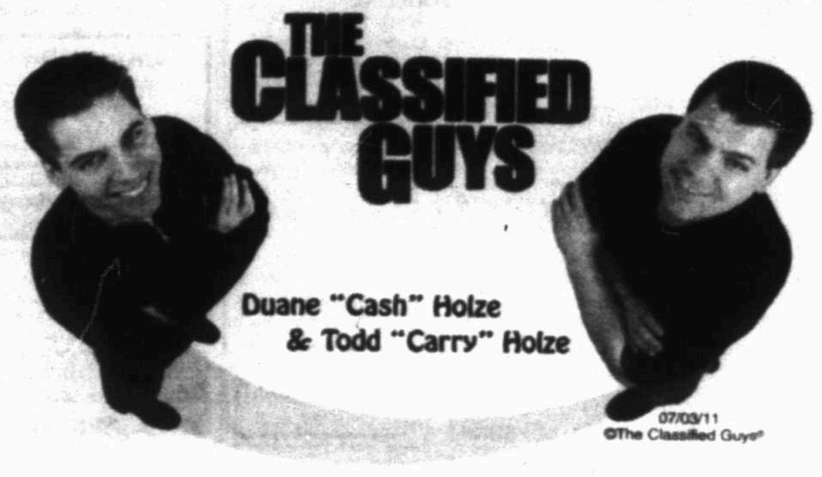

Carry: Start by setting aside items that have emotional value to you or the rest of your family like photos, letters or other keepsakes.

Cash: Since your Dad was a collector, there may be many items in the house that have value. Although you may not appreciate the bottle cap collection or stuffed blue marlin, someone else may want to purchase them. You never know who needs a collection of old used spark plugs!

Carry: Consider putting the unwanted items at a yard sale. Maybe your Dad knew how valuable all that stuff was after all.

Cash: Try advertising the large items like cars, appliances or furniture in the classified section. You don't need to wait for the yard sale to get started. In fact, it sounds like the added room would be helpful to your process.

Carry: You can also donate useful items to a local charity. For everything else, you'll probably need that dumpster. Unless, of course, you want to mount the 6-foot fish above your fireplace!

Fast Facts

Piled High

Clutter, Junk, Stuff; it goes by a lot of names, but in the end it is nothing more than items we don't throw away. And if you're one of those people, you're not alone. Experts estimate that over 3 million Americans never throw anything away, including old newspapers or even empty yogurt containers. Although the reasons for this are not completely known, researchers believe that the need to hoard is directly linked to the part of the brain that controls decision-making and problem solving. Whatever the reason, it seems many of us need to clean out the house.

Support in Numbers

We've all heard of support groups like Alcoholic Anonymous or Narcotics Anonymous, but did you know there is an organization called Clutters Anonymous? The group is dedicated to helping people clean out their lives by attacking the physical, emotional and spiritual aspects that cause us to collect unnecessary items. Like many other support groups, they even have a 12-step program. Today the organization has chapters throughout cities and states nationwide.

Dead Weight

At our last garage sale, my husband put out a large bucket of used rusty nails. When he labeled it $4, we told him it would never go. All morning we razzed him about selling the bucket of nails, and with each joke, he became more determined to prove us wrong.

Sure enough, around 3 o'clock a gentleman came and looked at the bucket of nails. He picked it up as if to feel its weight and then walked over to our checkout table.

"I'll take it," he said handing us the money.

Instantly my husband cheered, "I told you someone would want those nails!"

"Oh I don't want the nails," the man said as he dumped them on the table. "I'm just going to take the bucket!"

(Thanks to Franny P.)
