Midlanders say 'yes' to bingo

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

In scant numbers, Midlanders walked into the polling places Saturday, took their chances and approved legalizing bingo for charitable purposes by a 3-to-1 vote.

The final count was 2,141 for bingo and 636 against, making the game of chance legal under the Texas Bingo Enabling Act, which went into effect in 1982.

"I'm just real proud it went over," said Jack Leonard, commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7208, which was raided and closed to bingo last Sept. 23 by State Comptroller Bob Bullock's "Raiders." "I thank everybody in Midland County (who voted in favor of legalizing the game)."

Since January 1982, more than 300 Texas counties, cities and peace justice precincts have approved making the game legal, and more than 2,100 bingo licenses have been issued by the Comptroller's Office, which is charged with enforcing bingo laws.

Without legalization, playing bingo in Texas is a Class C misdemeanor, which, like a moving traffic violation, carries a fine of up to $200. However, operating a gambling place is a felony, which carries up to a 10-year prison term and a $5,000 fine.

In Midland County, all 14 polling places, including absentee voting, overwhelmingly sanctioned bingo by ratios of 14 to 1 in northeast Midland and 10 to 1 in the rural Midkiff area to about 2½ to 1 in northwest Midland and almost 3 to 1 in central Midland.

"I'm for the people," said former VFW Commander Phil Bustamante, who engineered the pro-bingo campaign. "What the people want we give them."

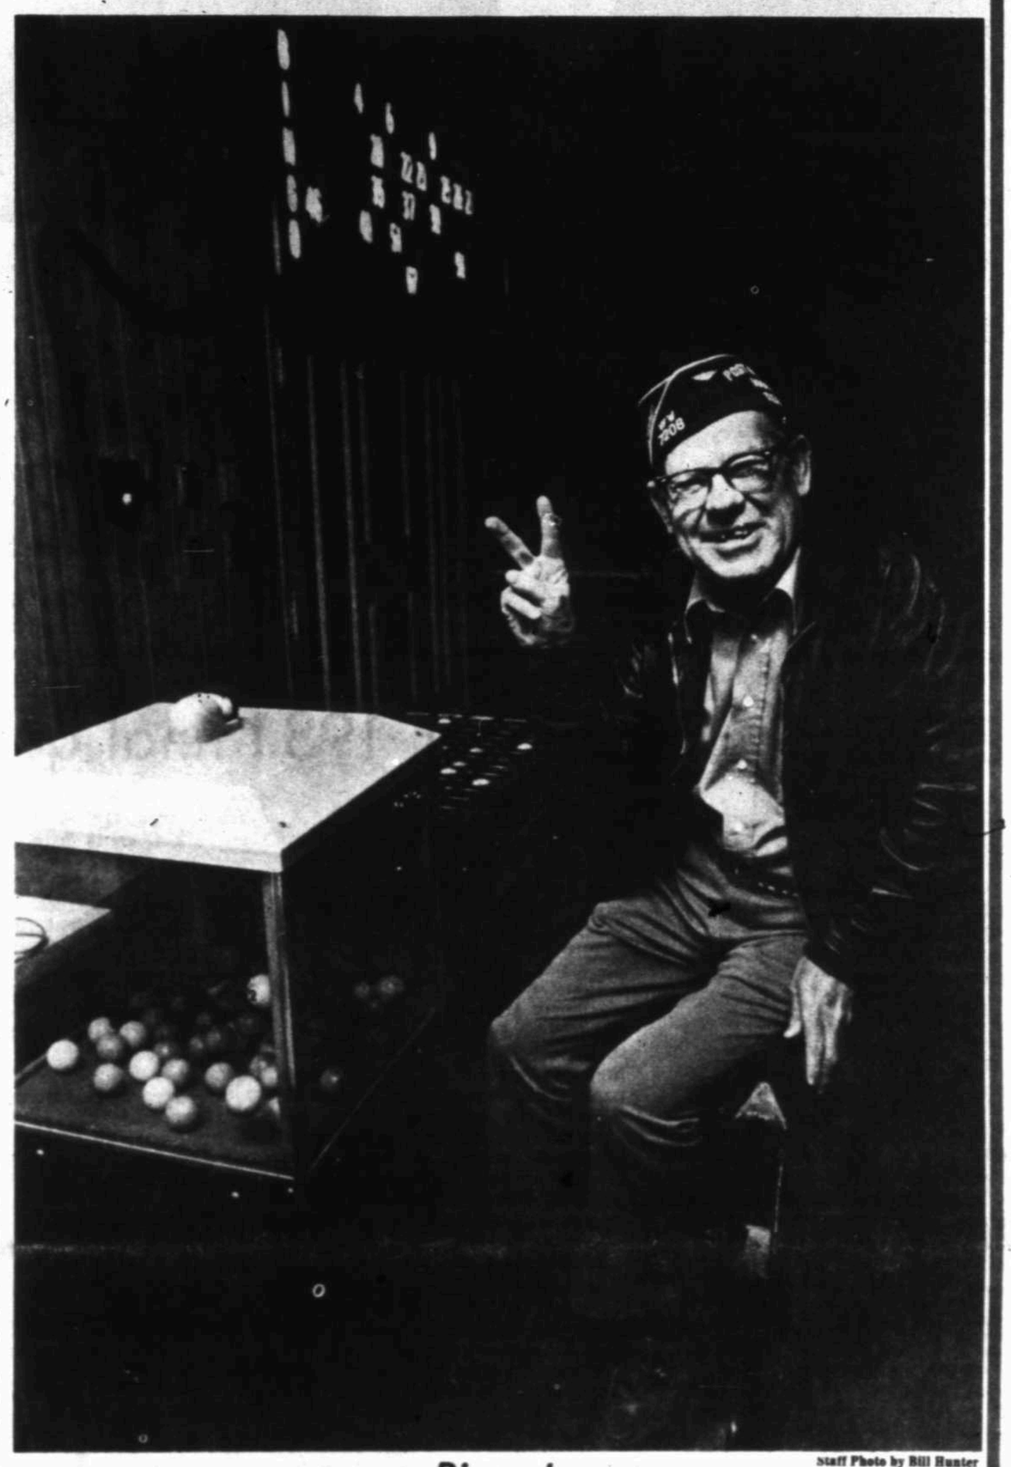

Leonard said he expected the VFW to be playing bingo in about a week or so, shortly after the post gets its bingo license from the State Comptroller. Until the bingo raid, which was the Comptroller's first bingo raid in Texas, the VFW post had operated bingo for prizes for players and for benefit of charitable organizations and needy people, including veterans. Heretofore, the post had played bingo on Thursday and Saturday nights

Bill Stovall, service officer and chaplain of VFW Post 7208, flashes a victory sign Saturday night following a 3-to-1 vote by Midlanders legalizing bingo for charitable purposes. The VFW, which ramrodded a pre-election campaign supporting bingo, expects to be playing bingo again in about a week.

Final quarter bank deposits over '81 figure

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Midland's total bank deposits rose in the last quarter of 1982 to close out the year at more than $2.098 billion. This is a 7 percent increase over the final figure for the same quarter in 1981, yet remains below the number recorded in the second quarter of 1982, when deposits reached $2.117 billion.

Deposits at seven of the nine Midland banks were up from the previous quarter ended Sept. 30, 1982. Deposits at all nine were up from the same quarter a year earlier.

Adding to the grand total for 1982 was a new bank, ClayDesta National, which opened Oct. 29.

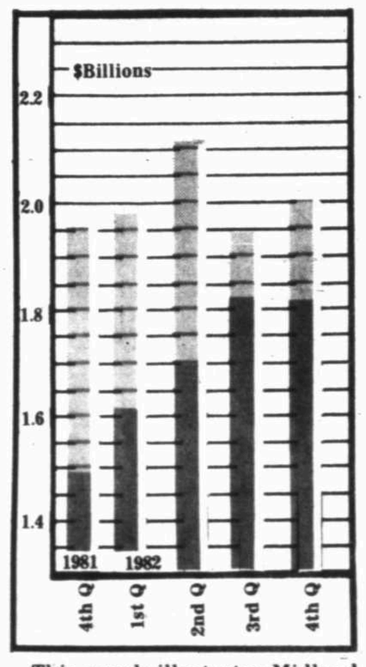

Initial deposit and loan activity recorded by ClayDesta National Bank was $12 million and $4.3 million respectively.

The year saw many changes in Midland's banking scene. Three new banks — ClayDesta, Security National and Midland American — and two savings and loans — Petroplex and Briercroft — opened here.

In addition, two banks and one savings and loan announced name changes to reflect their membership in bank holding companies or changes in their banking products. Commercial Bank and Trust changed to Texas American Bank Midland.

In January 1983, Midland National became First City National Bank of Eleven arrested in local gaming operation raids

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A lengthy undercover operation conducted by the Department of Public Safety ended in sweeping weekend raids on Midland's southside and the arrest of 11 persons on felony gambling charges.

Two out-of-town DPS intelligence officers began infiltrating local card and dice operations about two months ago, according to sources, who said Midland sheriff's deputies, city police officers and agents from the state Alcoholic Beverage Commission assisted the DPS in carrying out the raids at three nightspots and one private residence early Saturday morning.

Hit were King's Sandwich Shop, 301 N. Lee St.; RJ's Real Pit Bar B-Q, 2301 E. Ky. Ave.; Red's Drive-In, 1807 E. Front Ave.; and a residence at 1809 E. Front, according to police.

Ten of the arrested men, who range in age from 31 to 60, were jailed on promotion of gambling charges. The other suspect was booked for keeping a gambling place. Formal charges had not been completed by press time Saturday.

The raids were conducted on the basis of search warrants issued by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

Bipartisan compromise plan should salvage Social Security

WASHINGTON (AP) — A $169 billion bailout plan designed to keep Social Security solvent until 1990 won endorsement Saturday night from President Reagan, congressional leaders and a majority of a special bipartisan study commission.

The plan calls for a speed-up in scheduled increases in the payroll tax, taxing benefits received by upper- and middle-income pensioners and a six-month delay in this July's cost-of-living increase.

The agreement was reached on the last scheduled day of the commission's existence, a life already extended from Dec. 31 by Reagan. It came after strenuous bargaining back and forth between high-ranking White House staff members and some commission members holed up in the Blair House, the government VIP guest house across the street.

Three members of the 15-member commission dissented — Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, and former Rep. Joe Waggoner, D-La. Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., was absent, but voted in favor by proxy.

Armstrong said it amounted to a "package of tax increases" and would do nothing to restore public faith in Social Security.

But the movers and shakers immediately hailed what their negotiators and colleagues had done.

In a statement issued by the White House, Reagan said: "Each of us recognizes that this is a compromise solution. As such, it includes elements which each of us could not support if they were not part of a bipartisan compromise.

"However, in the interest of solving the Social Security problem promptly, equitably and on a bipartisan basis, we have agreed to support and work for this bipartisan solution."

A statement read by Kirk O'Donnell, an aide to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said the commission adopted a "bipartisan agreement acceptable to the president and to me, one which I can support and which I will work for."

O'Neill was the key to Democratic support of the package. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the president and the speaker dealt entirely through aides and never talked on the issue.

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., said in a statement read by aide Tom Griscom the pact justified his belief that "the great decisions of our time must be made in a bipartisan way."

House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois issued a statement saying news of the compromise was "a relief." He added, "It was not until those who chose to demagogue the issue fully realized the depth of the problem that any bipartisan solutions could be sought."

Speakes said the administration considered the commission's 12-3 vote "a decisive agreement" and would leave the drafting of legislation to the congressional leadership without submitting a bill of its own.

The president later extended the life of the commission through Thursday so its report could be printed.

The commission's chairman, Alan Greenspan, opened a news conference to describe the agreement with the comment, "All of us swallowed very hard."

Though the package is designed to keep Social Security solvent through 1989, it would erase only about two-thirds of the system's expected red ink over the next 75 years — estimated at about $1.6 trillion.

Already the Social Security trust fund handling pension checks has been forced to borrow money twice from the relatively more flush funds handling disability payments and Medicare. The pension account would run out of money by July without further borrowing, new revenues or benefit reductions.

The negotiators scrapped a plan to slightly increase the penalty for early retirement but kept a provision to gradually increase the bonus for those who work beyond age 65.

—Half of Social Security benefits would be taxed starting in 1984 for single retirees with adjusted gross incomes above $20,000 and for couples above $25,000. The negotiators agreed that Social Security benefits would not be counted in determining whether a person was above those thresholds. This would raise $30 billion.

—The once-only, six-month delay in this year's scheduled July cost-of-living increase would be coupled with liberalized rules for Supplemental Security Income, so that elderly people on that welfare program would not suffer any net loss. The six-month freeze would save $40 billion between now and 1990, $4 billion of that in the first year.

The 36 million Social Security beneficiaries normally would get an estimated 5 percent increase in their July 3 checks, reflecting inflation over the last year. The delay would mean that the average beneficiary, who gets about $400 a month, would lose $120.

—Some of the payroll tax increases scheduled for 1985 and 1990 would be speeded up to bring in an extra $40 billion by 1990, but workers would get an offsetting tax credit for 1984 to cushion them from actually paying more taxes overall.

Plane turns over following landing

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A light, high-wing private airplane which apparently ran out of fuel in its San Angelo-to-Midland flight landed in a plowed cotton field about five miles south east of Midland at about 2 p.m. Saturday and flipped over.

Neither the pilot of the Cessna 150, David Bleakney of Waco, nor his passenger, Adriana Herrera of Waco, was injured in the mishap.

The plane's main landing gear plowed furrows about 100 feet long before the nose wheel of the tricycle-geared craft dug into the field and caused the aircraft to flip over.

When Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Hiland Priddy and onlookers, including private pilots, found the downed craft about an hour later, the pilot and his passenger were gone.

The airplane's flaps were up in neutral position, and the aircraft's masterswitch and heater were out, the gyrocompass was running, and the throttle was out. The nosegear was bent backward, and oil was on the bottom of the plane's fuselage; otherwise, the craft

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecasts snow today for New York and New England. Snow will also fall over the area of Lake Superior. Rain is predicted for parts of Washington, Oregon and Nevada.

Midland weather should warm a bit

The good news is that it's going to be warmer today than it was Saturday. The bad news is that it's supposed to be a little cooler Monday. But such is the nature of winter weather in West Texas.

After a chilly high temperature of only 44 degrees Saturday, it is expected to warm up to the mid-50s today, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. But temperatures will cool down again Monday, with the high expected to reach only the low 50s.

The low temperature tonight is expected to dip into the low 30s. Winds will be light at only 5-10 mph.

Saturday's high of 44 and the Friday night low of 15 didn't approach the records of 79 and 15, set in 1935 and 1972, respectively.

A man identified by Midland police as Jerry Lynn Williams is carried to a waiting ambulance by Midland Fire Department emergency medical technicians following a shooting at 201 N. Lincoln St. about 8:15 p.m. Saturday. Details of the incident were unavailable at press time. Williams was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital where he was undergoing surgery for an abdominal wound late Saturday night. Police have a suspect in custody in connection with the shooting.

Midland, and First Savings and Loan became First Bankers Trust and Savings Association.

The total deposit figure for all nine banks in Midland reached $2,098,587,925 for the October through December period, up from $1,958,134,346 in the same quarter in 1981.

The number is also up from $1,942,516,495 reported during the previous quarter of 1982 ended Sept. 30.

Banks are required by law to report total deposits and total loans and discounts at the end of each quarter.

Loans net of discounts for the fourth quarter, which ended Dec. 31, totaled $1,804,719,374, up 18 percent from $1.48 billion for the same quarter in 1981. The figure is down from $1,815,466,507 recorded in the third quarter of 1982.

The First National Bank of Midland had deposits of $1,418,283,167, which is about $65 million above its 1981 figure of $1,348,227,760 for the same quarter. This compares with $1,326,917,488 in deposits in the previous quarter of this year, from July to September.

Loans net of discounts at FNB decreased in the last three months, with a total reported of $1,351,958,018, yet are above last year's fourth quarter results of $1,117,517,915. These figures compare with loans of $1,366,827,801 in the third quarter of 1982.

First City National Bank of Midland (formerly Midland National Bank) reported total deposits for the quarter of $394,419,992, versus $370,224,072 for the same quarter a year ago, and compared to $352.86 million last quarter.

Total loans net of discounts in the fourth quarter of 1982 were $282,116,581, up from $281.79 million in the third quarter of this year and also ahead of the same quarter last year, when the bank posted loans and discounts of $227,903,057.

The bank's name was formally changed Jan. 1 to more closely reflect its association with First City Bancorporation of Texas Inc., of which it has been a member since 1972.

Texas American Bank Midland closed out the year with total deposits of $145,755,432 and total loans net of discounts at $92,375,797. These figures are up from $137,563,278 in deposits and $83,547,330 in loans for the same quarter a year ago, and compare with $144,571,064 and $93,119,674 for the third quarter of this year.

Western State Bank recorded total deposits of $46,775,061 and total net loans of $32,752,860 for the period ended Dec. 31. These figures compare with $41,102,964 and $27,163,998 for the same quarter in 1981, and to $49.72 million and $36.8 million for 1982's third quarter.

At Metro Bank, officials reported total deposits reached $27,664,093 in the fourth quarter of 1982, and total loans were $24,404,260. Last year during the same quarter, the bank reported total deposits of $22,183,883, and total loans and discounts of $16,389,880.

Fourth quarter 1982 deposits were down slightly from the results reported in the third quarter of this year, when deposits totaled $29.9 million. Loans and discounts were up slightly compared to the $23.4 million reported three months ago.

Officials at Texas National Bank reported total deposits for the fourth quarter of 1982 at $41,625,644. Total loans were $11,083,938. Deposits were up from the total deposits of $38,832,387 recorded in the same quarter last year, and up from the total reported at the end of the third quarter of 1982, when deposits reached $33.6 million.

Total loans and discounts last year at this time were $7,997,158, and were $10.16 million at the end of the third quarter of this year.

At Midland American Bank, which began business July 26, 1982, total deposits were $3,168,537, and total loans and discounts were $2,215,388. This compares with $2,346,265 and $1,651,317, respectively, in the third quarter of 1982.

Security National Bank, which opened for business in August, reported total deposits at $13,727,469. Total loans and discounts were $3,503,484. These figures compare with $2,379,532 and $1,567,464, respectively, in the third quarter of 1982.

At Midland's newest bank, ClayDesta National, deposits in 1982 reached $12,168,530. Loans were $4,309,048. The bank opened for business Oct. 29 with $4 million in capital.

Midlanders OK bingo by 3-1 margin

and on Sunday afternoons.

Other veterans organizations, the city's two Catholic churches, and private clubs, including the Moose and Eagles lodges, had played bingo from only once a year, as in the case of St. Ann's Catholic Church's annual Family Fair, to two and three times a week.

"I feel that we won a victory in the election," said VFW Chaplain Bill Stovall, "because we're taking care of people, needy people, for charitable purposes."

"We've done lots of things for lots of people." He cited a burns hospital, a crippled children's home, a boys' ranch, Midland's High Sky Girls' Ranch, veterans in transient and "any veterans that needs help" among recipients of the post's bingo proceeds.

Stovall, spokesman for the post, said the veterans' organization was "very glad" that the election passed and was "very grateful" for those who voted in favor of legalizing bingo.

"There's lots of little old ladies that come out here (to play bingo) and that are on Social Security, and they don't have any recreation other than bingo games," he said. "And we like it, and they like it."

Under the Bingo Enabling Act, up to $2,500 in prizes may be awarded in any one bingo "occasion," while the top single prize to a player is limited to $500. After that, net proceeds are to be donated to charity.

Midland County has the option of placing a 2 percent tax on gross proceeds from bingo games.

The voter turnout (2,777) represented about 6.5 percent of Midland's almost 43,000 registered voters. Bingo proponents campaigned by radio, television and newspaper advertising. Active opposition seemed almost nil, though some church people and ministers opposed the game and viewed it as a form of gambling, as immoral, and without scriptural or spiritual basis as a money-making function of churches.

Aquilla Watson, an election judge, said she was disappointed in the voter turnout.

"I think if the taxpayers go to the trouble to set up the election for bingo that seems so important (as recreation and as a benefit for charity), I think the voters should come out and vote for it or against it."

Proposals may deter energy independence

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Oil and gas industry spokesmen say the nation's drive for energy independence will be deterred if energy tax proposals the Reagan administration is considering become law.

"The administration and Congress have to decide if they really want energy security or if they want to make energy security an impossibilty for this country by overtaxation," Lloyd N. Unsell, executive vice president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said Friday.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan has proposed several energy taxes that would take effect after Oct. 1, 1985, to help keep the federal deficit below $100 billion.

Among the proposals is a fee on imported oil, a tax that could be extended to domestic oil as well as imports, and a windfall profits or severance tax on natural gas, which would be tied to removal of federal price controls in 1985.

Unsell said that for every $1 billion spent in domestic exploration and production, 20,000 barrels a day is added to domestic production. But, he added, for every $1 billion increase in taxes on the energy industry, the United States spends $3.8 billion more for imports.

The pilot went to a nearby farm house and reported the field landing to officials, according to the DPS. Later, he reported to the control tower at Midland Regional Airport. The Federal Aviation Administration is to investigate the incident.

"How in the hell did he do that?" asked Red Little, a Midland pilot who happened by the upside-down red-white-and-blue Cessna after a helicopter and at least two light airplanes had circled over the downed craft. "That engine's turning," Little said as he looked into the cockpit. "He just got scared," he speculated. "Something scared him. He wanted on the ground, but, see, his flaps are not down."

Flaps are usually extended in landing to give added lift and to keep the craft from stalling at slow landing speeds.

Don Porterfield, an Andrews man who also flies, said he was about a quarter of a mile from where the plane plowed into the soft earth but said he didn't hear the aircraft passing overheard or see it until sometime after the field landing. "I've been out here the whole time, the whole morning. I didn't see that thing. I never heard it come down."

Recent notations in the craft's logbook said the "left magneto (is) a little rough at high power" and "tach out," an apparent reference to the tachometer. Glen Lawson, another pilot who looked over the craft, speculated on what might have happened to cause the flipover.

"I can see why he flipped," he said. "He didn't have flaps. If he had had those flaps down and that stick back, he would have landed" without incident.

"Any experienced pilot would have had those flaps down."

Then, Lawson reflected: "It was a good landing. He walked away from it. Any pilot will tell you that."

Wallace to name blacks to top spots in administration

This inauguration, his fourth, promises striking contrasts to his first, when his stark and defiant stand launched a painful new epoch of racial confrontation in Alabama.

Wallace, now 63 and confined to a wheelchair since being shot more than a decade ago, is seeking to make peace with blacks.

Already Wallace has named blacks to two top posts in his administration, the most statehouse influence given blacks in Alabama this century, and he has lined up four blacks for committee chairmanships in the state House, a record number.

"The burden of proof is still on the governor," said Joe Reed, chairman of the state's largest black political organization, the Alabama Democratic Conference. "But there are signs that the governor wants to make sure all elements of society have a fair share of democracy."

Reed said Wallace's selection of blacks for House committee posts and to direct the state revenue office and welfare agency, both sizeable bureaucracies, was a "positive sign."

But, he said, "that's just the alpha. We're a long way from the omega."

On Jan. 14, 1963, Wallace's inaugural rhetoric made him a national figure, for many a symbol of Deep South racial oppression.

"Let us rise to the call of freedom-loving blood that is in us and send our answer to the tyranny that clanks its chains upon the South," Wallace said on that cold, windy inaugural day. "In the name of the greatest people that have ever trod this earth, I draw the line in the dust and toss the gauntlet before the feet of tyranny, and I say segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever."

But by the 1982 campaign, Wallace was rid of racial rhetoric and talking about something else.

With Alabama's jobless rate climbing above 15 percent, one of the worst rates in the nation, Wallace billed himself as the foe of "rich Republicans" and the champion of the poor, the unemployed, the disabled like himself.

Dominant in Alabama's rural countryside and blue-collar districts, Wallace picked up just enough black votes to narrowly win the Democratic nomination. Then he was the lopsided favorite of blacks against his Republican opponent in the general election and won by a wide margin.

Wallace is succeeding Gov. Fob James, who chose not to seek a second term.

Wallace's inaugural speech is expected to focus on his concern for the many state residents out of work and in need of help.

Odessa woman dies in auto accident

ODESSA — A 23-year-old Odessa woman was killed and five others, including Midlander Monique Smith, were injured early Saturday morning when a pickup truck and a car collided in far west Odessa.

Killed was Jackie Rasco Halfacre of Route 2, Odessa. She was a passenger in a 1970 Chevrolet pickup truck driven by Benny Jay Dorman, 27, of Odessa.

Injured in the 12:15 a.m. mishap at Mercury Avenue and 22nd Street were:

—Ms. Smith, 20, of Perrie Lane, Midland. Ms. Smith, who suffered a broken leg and multiple lacerations, was listed in stable condition Saturday night in Ector County's Medical Center Hospital. She was a passenger in the Dorman pickup.

—Dorman. He was listed in stable condition in MCH with neck and elbow lacerations.

—Robert Paul Brightman, 30. Brightman, driver of a 1981 Ford car, was listed in stable condition in MCH with head and thigh injuries.

—Judy Brightman, 32, of Odessa. Ms. Brightman, a passenger in the Brightman car, was listed in serious condition in MCH with a possible broken neck.

—Teresa Chalker, 32, of Odessa. Ms. Chalker, a passenger in the car, was listed in serious condition in MCH with undetermined injuries.

At the time of the accident, both vehicles were southbound on Mercury Avenue. The mishap was investigated by Texas Department of Public Safety Troopers Gilbert Flores and Gary Albus. Justice of the Peace R.G. Hungerford pronounced Ms. Halfacre dead at the scene of the wreck.

Man reports attempted armed robbery

An attempted armed robbery was among the items under investigation this weekend by Midland police.

According to police reports, a 39-year-old North Marienfeld Street resident told police he was accosted by a black man on the parking lot behind the Wall Street Bar and Grill about 7:30 p.m. Friday.

The man was armed with a knife and said, "Give me all your money." The intended victim, however, wrapped his coat around his arm and refused to comply.

The man fled when a car pulled onto the parking lot. One of two suspects found in a nearby car was released after positive identification could not be made. The other suspect was jailed on outstanding traffic warrants, according to police.

In weekend burglary complaints, Jim Leider of 708 S. Atlanta said $4,900 worth of video equipment was taken in a break-in of his home Friday. Entry was gained by breaking a window.

A .357 magnum handgun and assorted jewelry valued at a total of $1,870 were reported stolen from the Nicki Dancy residence, 1820 S. Maple Ave. Entry was gained through a sliding glass door.

An electrical short is believed to have touched off a fire that did heavy damage to the contents and rear portion of the Centrilift-Hughes Co., 1001 S. Goode, about 6:20 a.m. Saturday. Five fire department units spent more than an hour on the scene.

Texan's nomination sparks controversy

EL PASO (AP) — President Reagan openly disdains communists. So does El Paso optometrist Shirley Levoy Abbott.

Reagan loves free enterprise. So does Abbott, self-made millionaire and owner of 50 Sunland Optical companies in 25 states.

Both, too, are lifelong Republicans who — as a result of jockeying to fill the first Belize ambassadorship in Central America — found themselves suddenly wedded in an uneasy union.

Reagan reportedly had planned to nominate the 58-year-old optician to the ambassadorship of tiny Belize, a country with 150,000 people and little reputation except among skin divers who love its clear-blue Caribbean waters and pristine reefs.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, learned to his dismay this month that Abbott's name was in the bin for the Belize post. Tower threatened to veto the ambassadorial appointment, saying the White House violated political protocal by proposing the name of another Texan.

Tower also said his choice was Brownsville businessman William Perrin, who for 15 years has operated a fiberglass boat manufacturing firm in Belize — formerly British Honduras.

"THE SENATOR proposed Mr. Perrin for the post two years ago, and he still stands by that," said Tower's assistant Washington press secretary, Terry Ware.

In the end, neither Texan got the nomination. The State Department in Washington announced Monday the post would go to Malcolm Barnebey, charge d'affairs in Belmopan, Belize's capitol city. Belize never qualified for an ambassadorship until it became an independent nation last year.

Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, also suggested the White House find Abbott a more suitable partisan position than in Belize.

Why?

"We don't know what (Abbott's) qualifications are," Ms. Ware said.

"He's now the director of the Peace Corps (in Belize). He knows the country," Ms. Ware said.

Belize is located on the Yucatan Peninsula, sandwiched between Mexico and Guatemala. It has been involved in a century-old border dispute with Guatemala, but British authorities — who ruled over the former colony until last spring — have pledged to help Belize if problems worsen.

El Paso optometrist Shirley Levoy Abbott was one of two Texans considered for the recent opening in the Belize ambassadorship in Central America. A Brownsville fiberglass boat manufacturer was also considered by the Reagan administration, but both Texans lost out when the Belize charge d'affairs was named as ambassador.

STILL, PROBLEMS are few in Belize, which exports sugar and some hardwoods, but is little-known internationally.

Nationally, the dispute over the filling of the Belize ambassadorial post quickened some critic's complaints that the Reagan administration wasn't picking the most qualified people for overseas posts.

Critics on Capitol Hill have alleged Reagan's choices often are rich contributors to Republican causes who have little experience in the diplomatic field.

Abbott, 6-1 and Oklahoma-born, apparently has the right political background, observers say.

For instance, he spent $1,400 of his own money in Washington last week interviewing for a post — any post — in the Reagan administration. He says he considers the expense part of his contribution to the Republican Party.

"I was the first El Pasoan to sign up for the 18-year-old-draft in World War II," he wrote.

After receiving his doctorate in optometry from Oregon's Pacific University in 1953, he said he returned to El Paso "flat broke but not oweing (sic) a soul in the world one thin dime."

HE DESCRIBED himself as "anti-communist and anti-socialist and a strong believer in the free enterprise system."

After building his optician business into a multimillion-dollar family enterprise, observers say Abbott longed for bigger things.

His break came after years of serving Republican causes when in 1972, he was named regional director of the American Revolutionary Bicentennial Administration for a five-state area from New Mexico to Louisiana.

In 1977, Abbott won a special election to fill the state representative's seat in Texas' 71st District. But the next year, he was defeated by schoolteacher Mary Polk, and lost again in 1980. He also ran for state senator in 1965 and state comptroller in 1970, but lost both races.

"I know some Democratic candidates who have run four or five times before they finally got elected," he says.

TDHR to review contract of Texas City nursing home

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Department of Human Resources officials are studying an agreement that allowed a Texas City nursing home to plead no contest to involuntary manslaughter in the death of a patient and will decide whether a contract with the owners should be revoked.

But an attorney for the Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. of Houston called the review "ludicrous."

Roy Westerfield, the department's deputy commissioner for programs, said staff attorneys were examining the contents of the plea bargain and would decide if the contract should be withdrawn.

"We expect within a few days to have a recommendation to the commissioner," Westerfield said. "To my knowledge, we've never had a case of this particular nature before."

If the commission withdraws its contract, Westerfield said, the Autumn Hills corporation could not care for patients whose care is subsidized by Medicaid funds.

Austin lawyer Roy Minton, who represented Autumn Hills in the plea bargain, said it would be "ludicrous."

"You mean that they're saying that because we worked this out as a plea bargain that they're going to decide to not pay anything?

"I think all they're going to do is get themselves in federal court," Minton said.

Autumn Hills pleaded no contest Dec. 27 to one count of involuntary manslaughter in the 1978 death of a patient and paid $100,000, plus $66 in court costs, to Galveston County.

In exchange, the state dismissed 38 murder indictments returned against the corporation and eight former and current employees in connection with the deaths of eight patients in 1978 and 1979.

Supreme Court Justice wants hearing to explain nomination

AUSTIN (AP) — Supreme Court Justice Jack Pope wants to appear before a Senate committee to explain why his nomination as chief justice should be approved.

Pope was appointed chief justice of the state's highest civil court by Gov. Bill Clements Nov. 23. Normally, the Senate would vote to accept or reject his nomination.

But a group of Democrats is trying to persuade other senators to return Pope's appointment — along with more than 100 others made by Clements — to Mark White after he is sworn in as governor Tuesday.

Pope, 69, already had announced he would not seek re-election to the Supreme Court and would be off the court if his appointment is rejected.

Pope requested the hearing in a letter delivered Friday to Sen. Ed Howard, D-Texarkana, head of the committee that reviews gubernatorial appointments.

In the letter, which was obtained by the Dallas Morning News, Pope said the Senate should not make a decision on what he called the primary issue involved without "a full and public hearing."

"That issue is whether I am qualified to perform the duties of office," wrote Pope, a lifelong Democrat.

By WILLIAM GARLAND

From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Texas delegation got off to a slam-bang start this year in Washington.

First there was the eruption of publicity from the resignation of former Rep. Phil Gramm, a drama that must now be known in Texas by everyone above the age of three.

Gramm's spirited resignation in the face of humiliation by Democrats was accompanied by a rousing call to his constituents to send him back to Washington via a special election to serve them as a Republican.

It was the hottest political story for a week.

But there also was a colorful scrap last week for committee assignments that left Texas with more clout in Congress than at any time since 1978.

No sooner had Gramm resigned than House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, called a "Texas press only" news conference to tout to the folks back home that while Gramm was grabbing the headlines, the heavily Democratic delegation under his leadership had unified and gained important committee posts.

1978 IS GENERALLY considered the Texas delegation's watershed year. The traditionally powerful delegation had 24 congressmen and in that year lost nine of them: six to retirement and three to election defeats.

That meant the loss of 190 years of important House seniority, and four current or former committee chairmen. Stalwarts like Reps. George Mahon, a Lubbock Democrat and chairman of the powerful House Appropriations Committee, and Olin "Tiger" Teague, the Democrat from College Station who chaired the House Science and Aeronautics Committee, departed Capitol Hill.

"It's just like when a college football team loses all its seniors," said Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, who serves along with Wright on the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee that makes committee assignments. "Our delegation now is much stronger than in 1978."

For one thing, there are new recruits — five new Democratic faces and one new Republican one — and the total number of congressmen had risen from 24 to 27 becuase of population gains from the last census.

THE RESIGNATION of Gramm brought to 21 the number of Texas House Democrats, making it second only to California in the size of its Democratic delegation (New York is third with 20).

The strength of the delegation during the first half of the Reagan presidency resided in the pivotal position of Texas' Democratic conservatives who gave Republicans a majority on budget and tax votes.

With more Democrats in the House, the power of those so-called "Boll Weevils" has diminished, and they probably will not supply a swing vote on issues supported by Reagan. They also won't be in a fool-proof bargaining position for issues in which they have interest.

The strength of Texas in the 98th Congress should be more traditional: In addition to being many in number, the members will hold strategically important posts.

For example, Texas has more military installations than any other state. Along with Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Texas will have four members protecting the state's military interests on the House Armed Services Committee. In addition to Reps. Abraham Kazen, D-Laredo, and Marvin Leath, D-Marlin, the delegation successfully obtained seats for freshmen Reps. Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, and Ronald Coleman, D-El Paso.

THAT'S IN ADDITION to having Wilson and Rep. Thomas Loeffler, R-Hunt, on the military subcommittees of the House Appropriations Committee.

"We have very few military installations that are in danger of being moved," Wilson joked this week.

On the Republican side, Loeffler not only has climbed to the third spot in the Republican leadership as deputy minority whip, but also has gained a highly-prized slot on the Budget Committee. He already had a seat on the Appropriations Committee. Third-term Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, will join Loeffler on the committee, the same one from which Gramm was evicted by his fellow Democrats.

Gramm's switch to the GOP side means he will also lose his seat on the House Energy and Commerce Committee, where he threw around his weight on behalf of Texas as a leading petroleum-issue strategist. Gramm worked at least as diligently on natural gas decontrol as he did on the budget, though the latter brought him most of his notoriety.

THE STATE DID land on that committee a new freshman, Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, to join Reps. Ralph Hall, D-Rockwall, and Mickey Leland, D-Houston.

With other successful committee bids by Texas freshmen congressmen, and the continuing reign of Rep. "Kika" de la Garza, D-Mission, as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, and Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, as chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, the delegation should be potent.

Memorial service scheduled for TV news pioneer

FORT WORTH (AP) — A memorial service is scheduled Monday for Doyle Davis Vinson, a television news pioneer who died at the age of 72.

Vinson, who died Friday of kidney failure in Arlington Memorial Hospital, conceived and produced the first local television news program in the Southwest. When WBAP-TV here signed on Sept. 27, 1948 as the Southwest's first television station, Vinson designed the nightly news program. The station became KXAS-TV in 1975.

"The Texas News" was one of the nation's first regular local TV news programs and the top-rated program of its type in the Dallas-Fort Worth area for nearly two decades.

Vinson's program used a newsreel format, including a series of local film stories with titles and a narrator. The reporter at the scene was seldom seen or heard. The anchor person was used to introduce the 10-minute program and later read national news stories. Two other people handled the sports and weather reports.

Weather forecaster Harold Taft, who has worked at the station since 1949, described Vinson as "a No. 1 newsman. He was all business; there was no foolishness about him."

Burning cigarette probably responsible for Houston blaze

HOUSTON (AP) — A burning cigarette may have sparked a blaze early Saturday that damaged the top floor of the downtown Plaza Hotel and forced the evacuation of 50 guests, the manager said.

No one was seriously hurt in the two-alarm fire.

Four people escaped their smoke-filled rooms by climbing down the ladder of a fire department truck. Other guests staying at the eight-story hotel fled by stairways and elevators.

Hotel manager David Wilson said a guest alerted the front desk clerk of the fire about 4:15 a.m.

The fire was confined to the eighth-floor room but most of the other 14 rooms had extensive smoke and water damage, said Assistant Fire Chief Dennis Holder.

Fire investigators had not determined what caused the fire. But after talking with the couple staying in the room, Wilson said, he believed the blaze was ignited by a burning cigarette.

The hotel was built in 1929 and does not have an alarm system or sprinkler system, both of which are required in newer hotels, Wilson said.

Democrats to support Kubiak

AUSTIN (AP) — The state chairman of the Democratic Party said Saturday that it will back a former state representative in the race for the seat vacated by Phil Gramm, who quit Congress to run for his seat as a Republican.

Gramm quit after the Democrats, angered with Gramm's support of President Reagan's economic policies, stripped him of his post on the House Budget Committee.

Texas Democratic Chairman Bob Slagle said the party will support Dan Kubiak, a former state House member from Rockdale.

The election is Feb. 12.

Eight other Democrats and a Libertarian also are running.

Slagle said an overwhelming majority of county chairmen in the district asked that the state party provide technical and financial assistance to Kubiak.

"We feel like the Democrats of Texas should make every effort to assist the strongest Democrat in the race against Gramm," Slagle said in a statement. "That clearly is Dan Kubiak."

Bill ups penalties for assault

AUSTIN (AP) — Sen. Carl Parker has filed a bill that would provide felony penalties for anyone assaulting a jailer or guard at a city or county jail or state prison.

Parker, D-Port Arthur, said state law now provides for severe penalties for assaulting peace officers, and his bill would include jailers and guards in that same category.

Penalties would range from two to 10 years in prison for aggravated assault and five years to life for deadly assault.

EDITOR'S NOTE — When a federal judge ordered two Beaumont high schools — one black and one white — to merge, parents complained, teachers worried and students were resentful. The year started with tension and fear. Then something unexpected happened. The football team won and kept winning. For a while, at least, nothing else mattered.

By PAUL RECER

BEAUMONT (AP) — Maybe it could happen only in football-crazy Texas. Maybe the smooth transition into racial integration at West Brook High School here is only temporary. And, maybe, just maybe, there will be rough days ahead for this court-ordered blending of black and white students.

But none of that mattered on Saturday, Dec. 18 when the Bruins of Beaumont trotted onto the floor of Houston's Astrodome. What did matter is that West Brook High School, created by judicial fiat only months before, was this day playing for the Texas high school football championship.

In 48 minutes of football, the West Brook players, black and white, were united to battle for an immortality of sorts. Together they sought the right to call themselves champions.

Forgotten were the uncertainties of September, the cultural differences that threatened once to separate them, the fact that they were specimens in a grand experiment in race relations.

FOR NOW THERE was only the joyful release of football, and a clear, pure, untainted chance for glory.

Fully one-tenth of Beaumont's 117,000 residents jammed one side of the Astrodome stands, their rhythmic cheers riding on electric waves. From high up, overlooking the artificial green of astroturf, there seemed no difference in the schoolboy gladiators. Skin tone was undetectable. All that mattered was the West Brook blue of the uniforms.

Maybe that was the point from the very beginning.

Across the way, fans of the opposing school also cheered. The white-clad players of Bell High School of Hurst, Texas, seemed formidable in those pre-game moments. Theirs was the assurance of a team that had never lost and was heavily favored.

A whistle blew. The football rose end over end. Bodies crunched bodies. The contest began.

BEAUMONT IS one of the original Texas oil towns. Spindletop, the historic well that started the state's energy boom, is nearby. The smell of petroleum hangs in the air.

It's also a city with racial traditions that date to the Old South, a city with a monument to a Confederate hero of the Civil War. Not far away, a town named Vidor remains a hotbed of the Ku Klux Klan.

The South Park School District, a banana-shaped political creation, skims around the south and west sides of Beaumont.

In the center of the district is the Pear Orchard, an area settled by ex-slaves that is still heart of the black community.

White families, many with large estate-sized homes, live on the Westside.

The residential patterns produced a natural segregation. Black students went to schools in their neighborhood and whites to schools near their homes.

FOR MOST OF the blacks, their high school was Hebert, an aging institution that had grown, piecemeal, over almost three decades. Hebert was the center of community life for the Pear Orchard.

Hebert's athletic teams were avidly followed and the school was accustomed to winning. The football team had not had a losing season in 27 years. It developed superior athletes with astonishing regularity. During one recent season, there were six Hebert graduates playing in the National Football League.

The Hebert coach, Alex Durley, nobly advanced the school's winning tradition. In seven years at Hebert, he established a record of 76 wins, seven losses and two ties. He is a quiet man with a confident expertise that inspires victory and fanatical loyalty.

He is also black.

In the Westside is the school district's newest high school, Forest Park. It is a sprawling building of modern, gleaming design, a showplace with wide hallways, a large gym, and airy, well-lighted classrooms.

FOREST PARK'S athletic tradition was lackluster and its football season last year was a dismal 3-7.

Desegregation lawsuits are an old story in the school district. The first was filed in the '60s.

An integration plan tried in 1970 failed to satisfy the courts and another suit was brought in 1976.

Five years later, on Aug. 5, 1981, the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the school district to integrate immediately.

On Aug. 16, just nine days later, elementary and junior high school students were assigned to schools by lottery.

Eleven days later, school started with half of the children being bused to new schools.

"It happened real fast and people didn't have time to think rationally," said a Beaumont resident. "All of a sudden you've got busing in three weeks. It was traumatic."

"WE RESENT being bused across town as much as the whites," said Ed Moore, president of the Citizen's Action Committe, a black group. "We can live with it as long as it's fair. The court put the burden on both communities."

Some parents reacted by taking their children out of the district schools. Private school enrollment ballooned. Altogether, the student enrollment in district schools dropped by 10 percent.

Next, U.S. District Judge Joe Fisher ordered Forest Park and Hebert High Schools, eight miles apart, to merge. By the fall of 1982, he said, Hebert was to have the ninth and 10th grades, and Forest Park the 11th and 12th of a technically united school.

Hebert and Forest Park were to be obliterated. In their place was to be a bifurcated school with a new name, a new symbol, new colors and a united student body. The two football teams, marching bands, pep squads, faculties and even Parent-Teacher Association chapters were to merge.

"IT WOULD have been easier," said Forest Park principal Jerry Mallett, "to start a new school."

At first there was anger and disharmony in both communities. Pear Orchard residents resented the loss of Hebert's identity. On the Westside, there were similar feelings about Forest Park. "The Forest Park kids no longer had Forest Park and the Hebert kids no longer had Hebert," said Don Branham, president of the South Park Classroom Teachers' Association. The adjustment necessary, he said, was staggering.

Once it became clear, though, that there was no choice, said Mallett, the school administrators decided to "do it right." The preparations started in the spring.

Committees in both schools were formed to select candidate school names, colors and mascots. The student bodies then voted.

The new school became West Brook. The colors blue and red. And the symbol was the Bruin. Songs for the new school were composed.

TO IDENTIFY the separated units of the single school, the old Forest Park building became West Brook Sr. High. Hebert became West Brook High. To the kids, they quickly became "Big Brook" and "Little Brook."

Mallett was selected as principal of the new school and Hebert's principal, Joe Bryant, became principal of South Park, the third high school in the district. He replaced a retiring principal.

The bands, with director Jack Trousdale auditioning and ranking each musician, were merged. About 55 students dropped out.

Durley, from Hebert, was named the football coach, and a new position was created for the Forest Park coach. The faculties were placed in the school based on the grade level they taught.

Students at Hebert who would attend "Big Brook" in the fall were bused to their new school building for a week of spring orientation. Westside ninth graders were bused the other way, to prepare them for "Little Brook."

When school started, recalls one teacher, "the students kind of circled each other for a while, like two dogs trying to get acquainted."

"ON BOTH sides there was a lot of apprehension," said Trousdale.

The students, black and white, lived only across town from each other, but they were traveling a great, great distance culturally.

To aggravate the situation, the combined football team started the season by losing. The new West Brook Bruins dropped four of the first five games. For Hebert athletes, long accustomed to winning, it was a shock.

Sports fans in the Pear Orchard complained that Durley was using too many players — white — from the old Forest Park team that lost the previous season.

Former Hebert players, according to Price, gathered at a Pear Orchard home and discussed walking off the West Brook team.

For a while, some white players declined to play, feeling they had no chance of making the team competing against the Hebert players.

"THE TEAM wasn't unified and the school wasn't unified," said Jerry Ball, who had starred as fullback at Hebert.

At one point, a group of black players met with Durley to complain that the workouts had been changed to accommodate the ex-Forest Park players.

Durley ignored the flak and continued coaching football.

"I played every kid I could to find out who could play for us," he explained.

After the fifth game, he knew. Out of 22 starters, 17 were from Hebert.

Ball credits Mallett, in part.

"He told us that we, as a football team, could bring the school together," he said.

MALLETT, THOUGH, believes that somewhere the complex chemistry of the team produced an urge to victory and turned a group of diverse teen-agers into teammates.

"When we became a team, we started winning," said one white player.

One by one, the opponents fell before the West Brook Blue. The team won six straight and, under a sort of "wild card" system, became eligible for the playoffs despite four losses.

Attendance, which had dropped to a dribble in the early season, began to pick up. A rythmic routine of West Brook cheers, some borrowed from Hebert, some from Forest Park, became a powerful voice. What had been created on the field — a sense of team unity — was mirrored in the stands.

"It was impressive — amazing," said Dr. Price. "Nobody suspected football could be a vehicle to pull the community together...It came together as a family."

GAME BY GAME, West Brook climbed toward the championship, winning some games only by last-minute miracle plays.

Finally, there was only one game left.

The night before, 2,000 Beaumont residents from all parts of town turned out for the final pep rally. The mayor issued a proclamation and students, black, white and believing every word, put up signs that said: "Ain't No Stopping Us Now."

West Brook won, defeating the all-white team from Hurst Bell by 21-10. It was a Cinderella story with a happy ending.

After the last play, the team lingered on the floor of the Astrodome, savoring the moment. Fans hugged and cheered and chanted. It lasted for more than half an hour. Then slowly, reluctantly, they began drifting out, still aglow with triumph.

In the final anaylsis, said Branham, the team couldn't have lost.

"They had already won," he said. "The unity they helped create runs a lot deeper than football."

Houston police car kills two

HOUSTON (AP) — A man and his female companion crossing a dimly lighted intersection were struck and killed early Saturday by a police car responding to an emergency call, investigators said.

The victims' identities were not immediately avaiable, said a spokeswoman for the Harris County Medical Examiner's Office.

Investigators said the couple was crossing Westheimer Road near the intersection of Rocky Road in west Houston when they were hit by a patrol car driven by Officer C.E. Jackson.

The intersection had no marked street crossing or traffic signal and there were no street lights for three blocks, investigators said.

Jackson, a member of the police department's DWI task force, was responding to a call shortly after midnight from another officer, but investigators were unsure how fast he was driving.

Supervisors in the department's accident division said there appeared to be no improper action by Jackson, but an investigation by the internal affairs division was ordered.

Austinites vote on sale of bonds

AUSTIN (AP) — Austin residents voted Saturday on whether to authorize the sale of $97 million in bonds to help finance the city's share of the South Texas Nuclear Project.

Some saw the election as a referendum on the nuclear project itself, while others thought it would be interpreted nationally as a vote on nuclear power in general.

The election was called because the city is running out of bond money to pay its share of the project.

The vote marks the seventh time in less than 11 years that issues related to the nuclear plant have gone before Austin voters. Fifteen months ago, voters authorized the city to sell its 16 percent interest in the project.

Fishermen defy ban on redfish, trout

AP Laserphoto

State game wardens Jack Maddux, left, and Michael Chapa prepare to burn nets confiscated in the Laguna Madre, located along the Gulf Coast north of Brownsville.

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Lured by a rich black market for selling their catches, some fishermen are daring to test state laws aimed at protecting redfish and speckled trout, state Parks and Wildlife Department officials say.

"If there's money involved, it's profitable to continue," said Tom Moore, chief of the department's coastal fisheries branch in Austin.

A law banning the sale of redfish and speckled trout caught in Texas waters went into effect in September 1981 after earlier measures to limit the amount of fish taken from the waters proved insufficient, Moore said.

One of those measures prohibits the use of any type of net fishing in about half the state's inside waters, including the lower Laguna Madre north of Brownsville.

Those caught breaking the 35-year-old law face a $200 fine and the loss of their net, Moore says.

Although authorities patrol the waterways almost daily, Moore estimated that about 85 percent of those fishermen netting illegally get away with their crime because they net under cover of darkness.

"Our people can't find them at night," he said.

Still, last year alone authorities confiscated 580,411 feet of net found in Texas waters, according to figures from the two coastal wildlife department regions.

At an average price of $1.50 per foot, according to Moore's figures, the state's moonlighters lost about $870,616.

State law requires those nets confiscated be destroyed, so its resale at profit to the state is prohibited.

"I'd hate to sell it, then have to pick it right back up again," said Bob Miles, wildlife department district supervisor in Brownsville. Miles says his wardens patrol the areas within his jurisdiction by boat and on land, and confiscate sometimes several times a week.

"We let it accumulate until it gets in our way, then burn it," Miles said.

Those who run successful moonlight netting missions and smuggle the fish back into the state find a "ready market" for redfish and speckled trout, Moore said.

"Somehow, they'll wind up in a cafe in Corpus Christi," he said. Moonlighters who sell their fish are getting over a dollar per pound, he added.

The law does not prohibit the sale of fish caught in the waters of other states or countries, so once it makes it to a Texas restaurant, there's no way of halting the sale to patrons.

Department officials say most of the state's commercial fishermen have not resorted to taking fish illegally since the redfish law went into effect, although they say moonlighters are making matters worse for those hoping the ban will be lifted within the next couple of years.

After September of this year, marine biologists are to study the fish populations to determine if the moratorium should be lifted.

Commercial fishermen fought the bill when it was proposed in the Legislature, saying there was no undisputed information that the fish population was in jeopardy.

Department officials point out that the amount of net confiscated since the redfish law went into effect appears to be going down slightly.

In the fiscal year before the law was passed, authorities confiscated 649,421 feet of net from Texas waters.

In the four-month period from September to date, 213,715 feet of net has been taken.

Braniff claims creditors agree to joint venture

FORT WORTH (AP) — Braniff International said Saturday that it has reached agreements with its major creditors and local airport officials that will help clear the way for its proposed joint venture with Pacific Southwest Airlines.

The agreements were announced at a bankruptcy court hearing where Braniff tried to win support for its plan to avoid liquidation.

The creditors' agreement was reached after late-night meetings Friday between creditors and officials of Braniff and PSA.

"We have resolved the issues that were remaining among the unsecured creditors," Braniff attorney Michael Crames told U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers. "It is a most significant step forward."

Unsecured creditors are those whose loans are not backed by Braniff assets.

Representatives of Braniff's secured creditors and lawyers for the airline's unions added their assent to the agreement.

Braniff chairman Howard Putnam said the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport board had agreed to drop all litigation against the airline, enabling PSA to "carve out their piece of the facilities" at the airport.

In June, the airport board voted to evict Braniff, but Flowers allowed the airline time to work out lease arrangements with other carriers. Braniff's terminal at the airport has been idle since last May, when the airline was grounded.

Last week, the airport board filed a motion with Flowers to dismiss the proceeding and throw Braniff into bankruptcy.

No details of the agreements were disclosed. Crames said documents explaining the agreements would be filed this week, which he expected to be ultimate.

Although creditors' committees approved the agreement Saturday, some individual creditors continued to object to the agreement.

Chief among those opposed are American and Delta airlines, both competitors and competitors of Braniff.

"This is the first a lot of us have heard of these new agreements," Rufus Garrett, attorney for Delta Air Lines, said Saturday. "The ball game seems to change every minute."

Braniff has asked Flowers to approve its venture with PSA and a plan to erase $467 million in secured debts. Flowers has indicated that he favors the plans.

Customs agents force landing

BRADY, Texas (AP) — Three people remained jailed in lieu of $1.2 million bond Saturday after U.S. Customs agents forced down a plane loaded with marijuana at this central Texas town.

The twin-engine aircraft was forced to land at Brady Municipal Airport about 4:45 a.m. Thursday by a planeload of federal agents.

McCulloch County Sheriff Glen Weatherman, whose department aided in the arrests, estimated that 120 pounds of marijuana were seized from the plane.

Peace Justice [illegible] A. Bareckman said Saturday he set bonds totaling $1.2 million for the two men and woman, who are charged with felony possession of marijuana.

Reagan in trouble with budget course

By OWEN ULLMANN

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is showing he can be flexible and help get the government's wild budget deficits under control. But no matter which way he bends, he faces political trouble.

In the past two weeks, the president or his top aides have proposed to do things Reagan once said he would never do: cut the defense budget, raise general taxes, speed up Social Security tax increases and pursue an economic policy calling for unusually slow growth.

The president's shift has come in response to pleas from close personal aides and political allies that he steer away from a budget course headed for deficits of at least $200 billion a year from now and into the future.

But each change seems to provoke new problems for each one it resolves, and some items in the emerging budget plan the president must send Congress in two weeks seems sure to displease everyone, from liberal Democrats to conservative Republicans:

—The deficit. The red ink for the fiscal year beginning next Oct. 1 will be the largest ever proposed by a president, somewhere between $150 billion and $200 billion, the administration concedes.

ALTHOUGH THE red ink projection will be lower than some economists had feared, its size is still worrisome and a political disappointment to Republicans who remember this was supposed to be the year Reagan would produce a balanced budget.

—The Pentagon. Reagan has agreed to trim $8 billion from his record spending plans for the Defense Department in 1984. The 3 percent cut, from an original budget of $247 billion, had been resisted up until the end by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. And it still doesn't sit well with the Pentagon's brass, which is upset that the reduction would be achieved in part by a freeze on military pay.

But many members of Congress, and even some White House budget officials,are angry because they contend Reagan didn't cut enough. The military budget still will climb 15 percent (or $30 billion) from 1983, they note.

—The Tax Increases. Reagan has refused to seek major new tax increases in 1983 or 1984, not counting Social Security, on the grounds that the economy will still be too weak from the long recession the country is trying to shrug off. However, administration officials say he is considering an income tax surcharge and energy taxes for later years if needed to keep the deficit below $100 billion. A final decision is expected this week.

The tax plan seems to please the president's top economic advisers and some fellow Republicans in the Senate. But other congressional Republicans, still upset about Reagan's support of a tax increase bill last year, are grumbling that the president is making the same tax mistake again. Congressional Democrats, meanwhile, may show little patience with Reagan's scheme, and choose instead to undo parts of the huge tax cut he pushed through in 1981.

—THE SOCIAL Security Problem. The administration is now saying it would consider moving up the date of scheduled payroll tax increases if coupled with a curb on benefit growth as part of a bipartisan compromise for solving the pension system's own deficit problems. But the president may get stuck as the man in the middle between liberal Democrats who want to rely mainly on tax increases to bolster the system and conservative Republicans who insist on solving the problem by curbing benefits.

—The Economic Forecast. Despite his penchant for optimism, Reagan has agreed to accept an administration economic forecast in the budget that calls for the slowest recovery from a recession since World War II, with unemployment remaining above 10 percent by the end of 1983. The forecast, prepared by chief White House economist Martin S. Feldstein, is responsible in part for the huge deficits estimated for the late 1980s.

The unusually pessimistic forecast has surprised many private economists, who expected the economy to stage a stronger recovery from the recession this year. It angered congressional Republicans, who fear the administration is not doing enough to stimulate economic growth and lower unemployment by the 1984 elections.

—The Domestic Cuts. White House budget director David A. Stockman has prepared non-defense program changes that are expected to hold 1984 spending down by $30 billion. The cuts affect an array of programs, including food stamps, Medicaid and Medicare, housing and farm subsidies, energy projects and government salaries. The administration also is thinking about imposing a freeze on certain benefits, such as retirement programs with automatic annual cost-of-living increases.

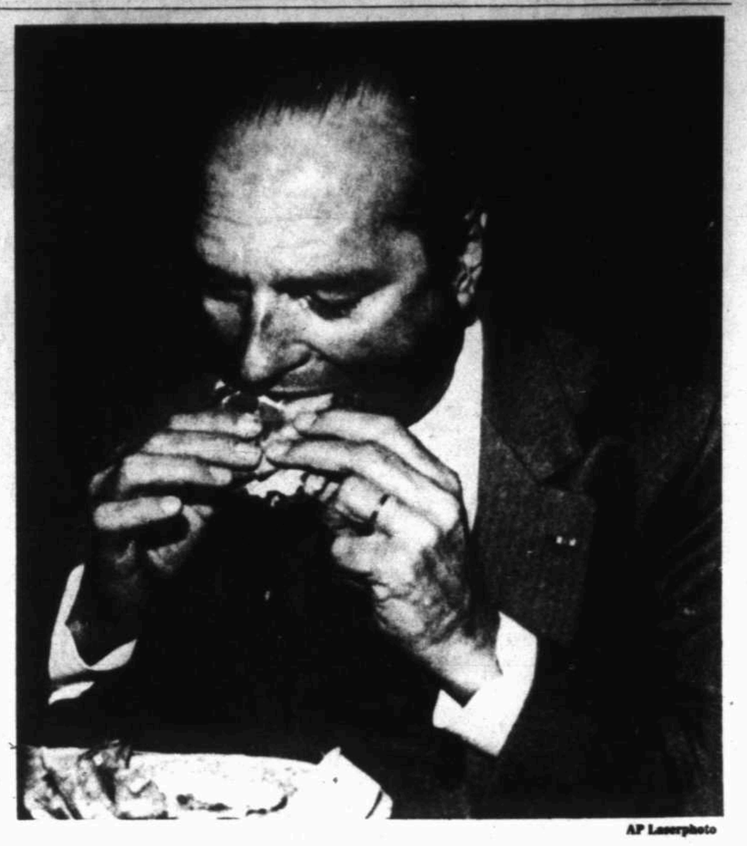

The administration insists these cuts are essential to keep the deficit from climbing above $200 billion, but Congress is balking even before details of the cuts become clear. Democrats and Republicans have warned the White House that they will not go along with new cuts in the same domestic programs pared in 1981 and 1982. To these critics, the Pentagon is a more appealing target.

—THE DISARRAY. A number of administration officials, speaking under the cloak of "unnamed sources," have talked about disarray within the White House as the president and his aides grope through politically unpleasant alternatives for solving the deficit problem. Until recently, some aides said, the president appeared unwilling to confront the fact that he had no choice but to trim his record defense buildup and seek new taxes to reduce the red ink.

But at an informal news conference Friday, Reagan said he has not changed economic course in any fundamental way. And he contended that the only disarray he's observed is in a press corps so confused by leaks that news accounts are "approaching chaos."

The president will have an opportunity to set the record straight at the end of this month, when he releases details of his budget plan to the public and to Congress.

Congress is vowing to rewrite the budget as soon as it gets its hands on it. Then, speculate some presidential aides, the disarray will really begin.

Mayor Jacques Chirac of Paris expressed the desire for "a real American hamburger" when he completed a speech at the Institute of French Studies at New York University. After the speech he and his entourage went to a local diner in Greenwich Village where he chomped down a burger, the first one he's had in at least seven years, according to an aide. His Honor said that the fast-food American-style hamburgers in Paris are "just not the same."

Heckler says she won't have trouble with priorities

WASHINGTON (AP) — Margaret Heckler says she won't have any difficulty exchanging the Main Street priorities of her Massachusetts congressional district for those of President Reagan if she's confirmed as the newest member of his Cabinet.

Mrs. Heckler opposed the president on issues like the MX missile and a nuclear freeze during her last year in the House — Reagan's second year in the White House. Her victorious opponent in last November's congressional race nonetheless sought to portray her as a Reagan Republican.

Their records indicate that she and the president also have their differences on abortion — an issue she must deal with if the Senate confirms her for the top job at the Department of Health and Human Services.

Mrs. Heckler opposes federal financing of abortions except in limited cases, as Reagan does. But unlike him, she hasn't been willing to support a constitutional amendment on the subject.

Now, she says:

"I have great respect for President Reagan. I share his goals for America.

"I will be seeking to implement the president's policies with as much competence and creativity and compassion as I can muster."

Mrs. Heckler maintained a reputation as a moderate during her 16 years in Congress. In an interview last week, however, she indicated that some of her stands were taken solely in the interest of representing her constituents' views.

"There is a very intimate relationship between a representative and one's district. I think one brings the priorities of the Main Street of that area to Washington," she said.

"In this case, I am not running from a district. I am not merely representing that segment, as rewarding as it was to me for the 16 years that I did it.

"Here, I have a totally different role. This is a presidential appointment in which I will be part of the presidential team — with great pride," she said.

"I am going to be looking at problems from a national perspective. I also am going to be primarily implementing the president's policies. I will be his secretary of health and human services.".

Mrs. Heckler was reluctant to talk about specific issues except to acknowledge that she won't be advocating adoption of the Equal Rights Amendment with her old fervor.

Among the issues that will confront her as secretary is a proposal to require that parents be notified when adolescent girls are given prescription contraceptives at federally-subsidized family-planning clinics. When she was a member of Congress, Mrs. Heckler urged the government to drop the idea, now in the final stages of administration review.

Ruling on school prayer won't change things much

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — A judge's ruling permitting organized prayer in Alabama public schools won't create changes in the classroom because "teachers will do what they have always done," a state Board of Education leader says.

The ruling is certain to be appealed, and even the leader of Moral Majority of Alabama doesn't expect it to stand up.

"My opinion is that this ruling will not have any effect on the state of Alabama in that teachers will do what they have always done," said Harold Martin of Brimingham. Martin is the presiding officer of the state Board of Education and a Methodist minister.

In a ruling Friday, U.S. District Judge Brevard Hand threw out a lawsuit challenging prayer in Alabama's public schools, and he said that the courts shouldn't decide America's "moral direction."

Hand held that states have the legal right to establish a religion and ruled that the suit had no standing in federal court.

"That man's got guts," said Gov. Fob James, who had waged a legal battle to defend Alabama's two school prayer laws.

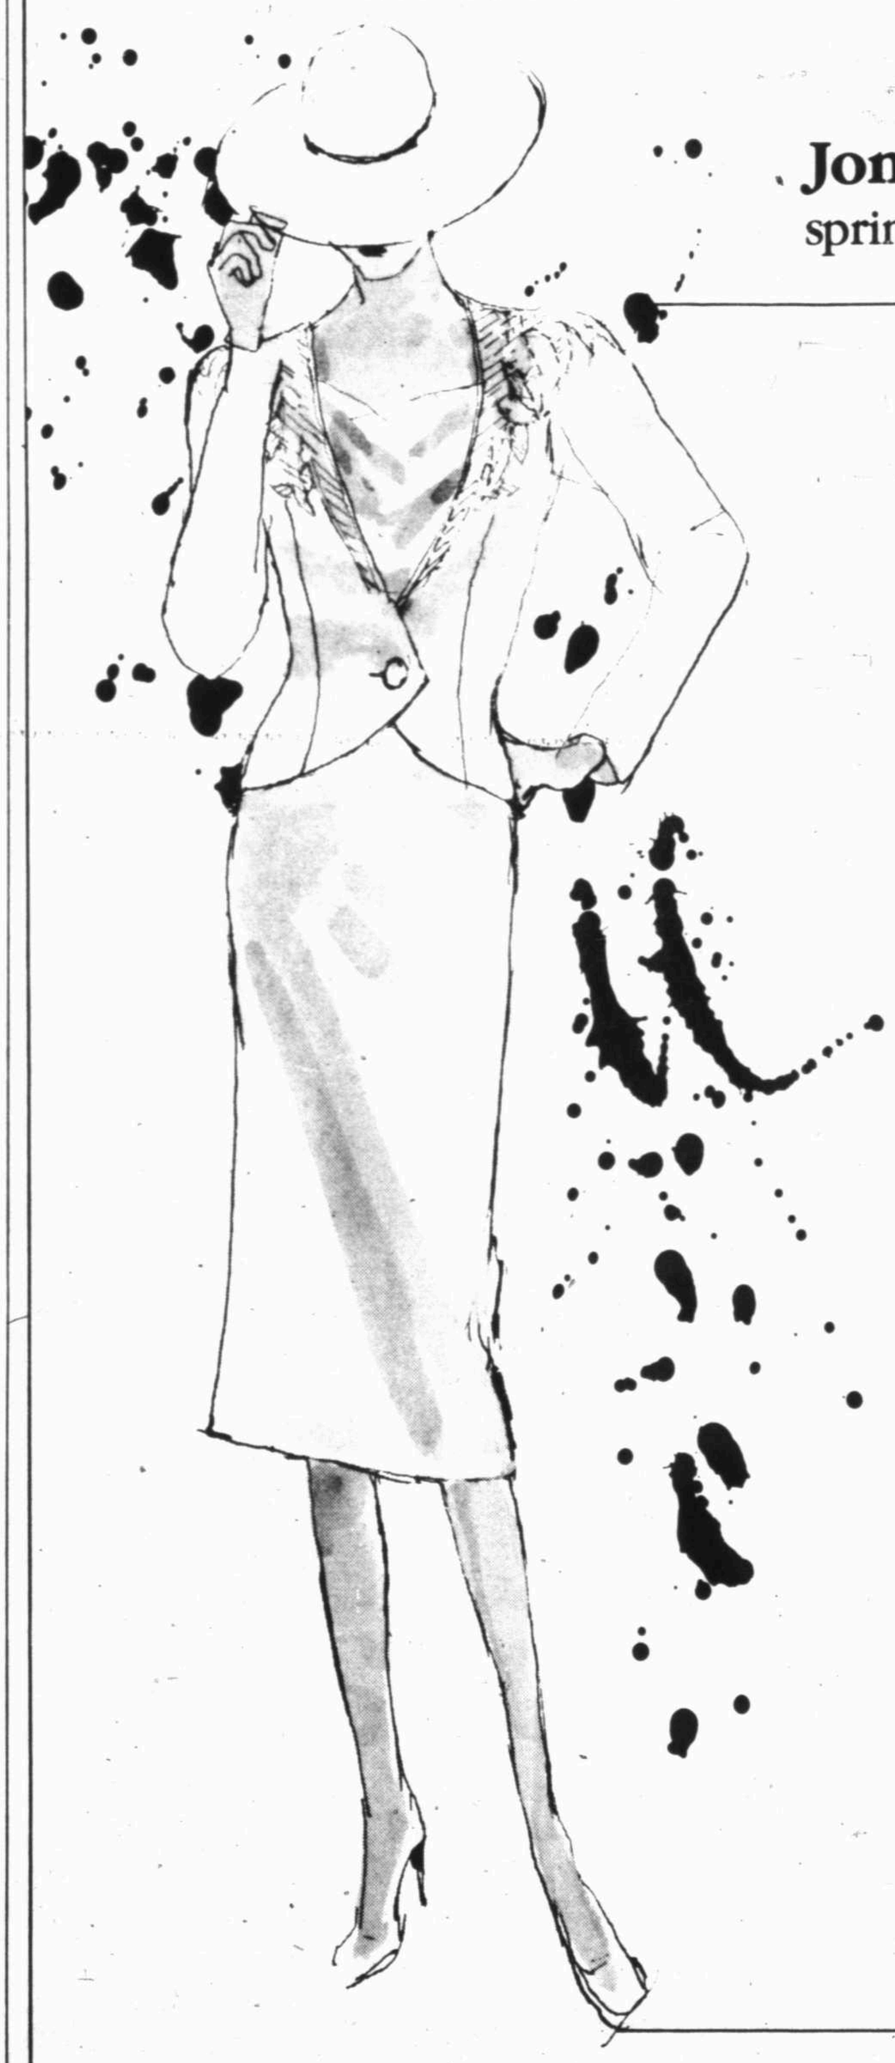

Meanwhile, students at Hall Elementary School, told of the ruling Friday afternoon by Mobile County School Board President Dan Alexander, recited: "God is great. God is good. Let us thank him for our food. Amen."

It was saying grace before lunch that caused Ishmael Jaffree, a self-decribed agnostic, to file the lawsuit, claiming religious practices in Mobile County schools were damaging three of his children.

Jaffree said he would appeal Hand's ruling, which he described as a "shot fired from a loose cannon."

Prior to the ruling, the state Board of Education had issued no guidelines to teachers on how to react to Alabama's school prayer laws, and Martin said the board would not write any now. The extent of religious activities in schools will be up to city and county school boards, he said.

"I am going to leave it up to the local board and the local superintendent to do what they feel they ought to do," he said Friday. But, he said, the state Board of Education has silent meditation at the opening of its meetings and that might be a way to appease everyone.

A school bus from Onslow County, N.C., was struck Friday by a train owned by the Seaboard Coastline at a crossing about 8 miles north of Jacksonville. The northbound train hit the bus, which was trying to cross the tracks at an intersection. Forty-one of the 53 elementary school children aboard the bus were injured.

41 students hurt in bus, train wreck

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Twelve of the 41 children injured when a train smashed their school bus remained hospitalized Saturday, seven of them with pelvic fractures, officials said.

The Seaboard Coast Line engine with nine freight cars hit the bus at 20 mph at a crossing Friday on U.S. 17, pushing it 200 feet along the track.

The bus, driven by a licensed 17-year-old, was carrying 53 children from grades 4 through 8 at Tabernacle School. No one was killed.

The bus driver said her brakes failed but a trooper said state police did not agree.

The most seriously injured child, Cindy Smith, 11, of Jacksonville, was in stable condition in the intensive care unit of Onslow Memorial Hospital, nursing supervisor Shelby Buffington said. The other 11, ages 11 to 14, were in good condition.

"The engine of the train hit the center of the bus and pushed it on down the track, about 200 feet," state police Sgt. Donald Cumbo said. "It could've burst into flames, there was gasoline out there. I shudder to think what it could have been."

Twenty-nine pupils were treated and released after the 3 p.m. wreck.

"I hit the brakes," bus driver Marilyn Francine Mills of Jacksonville said.

"I pumped them," said Miss Mills, weeping as she tended to the injured children beside the wreckage. "I pumped them hard, but the bus wouldn't stop. We were right over the tracks when it hit."

However, Cumbo, asked whether state police believe the brakes failed, said, "No, we don't think so. The bus had stopped and moved forward."

No charges were filed against Miss Mills, Cumbo said.

Joey Pullian, a seventh grader, said "We saw the train coming and we heard its horn and everyone tried to get to the other side of the bus."

Student Terrance Bankhead, said Miss Mills "tried to get off the tracks by getting it in reverse, but it wouldn't shift so then she tried to go forward."

The train engineer saw the bus stop but the bus lunged forward just before the train entered the crossing, Cumbo said.

Dozens of passers-by stopped to move children into 14 ambulances from Onslow County rescue squads and the Naval Regional Medical Center at Camp Lejeune.

Bigamist described as 'lump under a hat, retarded fool'

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — When Patricia Gardiner first met Giovanni Vigliotto, she thought he was "a lump under a hat...a homely man, some kind of retarded fool."

But 3½ days later, the two had made plans to marry and move to Hawaii, where Ms. Gardiner said Vigliotto told her he had a luxurious home with servants and bodyguards.

"The romance was quick and the courtship was short. I made an impulsive decision," Ms. Gardiner testified last week as the first witness at Vigliotto's fraud and bigamy trial.

Vigliotto, an ex-convict who claims to have married more than 100 times, is charged with bilking the Mesa real-estate saleswoman and part-time cocktail waitress of $36,000 in cash and property when he disappeared two weeks after their Nov. 16, 1981, marriage.

Ms. Gardiner, 42, described for the Maricopa County Superior Court jury her first encounter with Vigliotto, who was once quoted in a published interview as saying women make "me forget, for a brief time, that I'm short and dumpy and that I'm ugly."

SHE SAID THE meeting took place at a flea market and Vigliotto, wearing a 10-gallon cowboy hat, was bent over, tying his shoe laces. Her description of him as "a lump" came in response to questioning by deputy public defender Richard Steiner.

In other testimony, Mary Marcy of Chicago, Ms. Gardiner's 69-year-old mother, said she thought Vigliotto was polite and courteous. She also said she was not shocked by their quick decision to marry because her own husband of 47 years had proposed on their first date.

Although Ms. Gardiner said Vigliotto, 53, prodded her into quickly selling her house and making arrangements to move after they were wed, she said "he never got behind me and told me to hurry" into marriage.

Ms. Gardiner, who spent four days on the stand, also said Vigliotto told her many outlandish tales: that he had $49 million in a Nevada bank account; that he owned the oceanliner Queen Mary; that he was under indictment in New Jersey for 68 murders; and that his family was one of 13 which ran gambling at Lake Tahoe, Nev.

"It was very hard for me to decide what to believe and what was real," she said.

Before the wedding, he was "always flattering — wanting to know what I liked and what I wanted," she testified. She admired his "honest trait" of looking directly into her eyes. She found it easy to believe when he said she was what he wanted in a wife "because it was what I wanted to hear."

BUT AFTER THE wedding, "he was short with me," she testified. She said he woke her up at night demanding she cook for him. Once he put a gun to her throat.

And when he failed to rejoin her at midnight in San Diego as planned, only love for her dog Mindy kept her from leaping to her death, she said. Instead, she called the FBI.

Ms. Gardiner, who said she prefers not to use the name Vigliotto, is attempting to have the marriage, her fourth, annulled in a separate court proceeding on grounds that Vigliotto already had a wife when he married her.

In addition, she is asking that Vigliotto be required to pay her $47,000 for losses she claims to have sustained when he abandoned her.

Vigliotto "is in love with life, with women and with marriage," said Steiner in his opening statement Jan. 5 to the jury of 11 men and seven women, including alternates.

He said there was no dispute that Vigliotto had married more than 100 women in some 20 years. To those women, said Steiner, Vigliotto offered the opportunity "to withdraw from the humdrum of life and be treated...as queens, as all of us like."

STEINER DENIED that any fraud was involved.

As the trial got under way, Vigliotto announced that he had been admitted to mental hospitals on eight different occasions, and Steiner asked to add insanity as a defense. However, the motion was rejected by Judge Rufus Coulter Jr.

One prosecution witnesses yet to be called after the trial resumes Monday is Sharon Clark, a Fremont, Ind., trader's market operator whom Vigliotto allegedly married June 13, 1981.

She is expected to testify that Vigliotto left her penniless a month after their marriage, Deputy County Attorney David Stoller told the jury.

It was her persistence that led to his arrest. When he vanished after their marriage, he left behind a map marked with his planned stops. She tracked him back and forth for 10,000 miles, finally locating him at a Florida shopping center, she has told authorities.

Court rules CBS-TV can broadcast '60 Minutes' segment

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal appeals court ruled Saturday that CBS can broadcast on schedule a segment of "60 Minutes" about alleged brutality by New Orleans police during an investigation into an officer's death.

A federal district judge earlier ordered the segment, scheduled to be shown today on the popular news show, suppressed. The network appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, arguing that the district judge had overstepped constitutional bounds by censoring the segment.

"We find that CBS has shown that it will probably succeed on the merits of its appeal...and, accordingly, we grant the stay," the three-judge panel of the appeals court said in a short, written ruling issued Saturday evening.

Attorneys for the policemen said they would ask the Supreme Court, probably through Justice Byron White, to reverse the decision.

They were not certain of the procedure needed.

CBS had filed a two-page motion and 22 pages of briefs and petitions supporting its case at 9:45 a.m., said a spokeswoman for the 5th Circuit. Copies were flown to Judge Carolyn Randall in Houston and Judge Thomas Gee in Austin. The third judge who considered the case was Judge Albert Tate Jr. of New Orleans.

The broadcast was scheduled just three weeks before the start of a trial for seven officers accused of beating black citizens during the investigation.

Defense attorneys who had won a motion to move the trial to Dallas because of extensive publicity in Louisiana said broadcasting the program before the trial began would make it impossible to find an impartial jury.

U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier issued a handwritten order forbidding the broadcast on Friday after CBS refused to show him a script of the program segment. There was no hearing in open court. Duplantier conferred with attorneys in his private office.

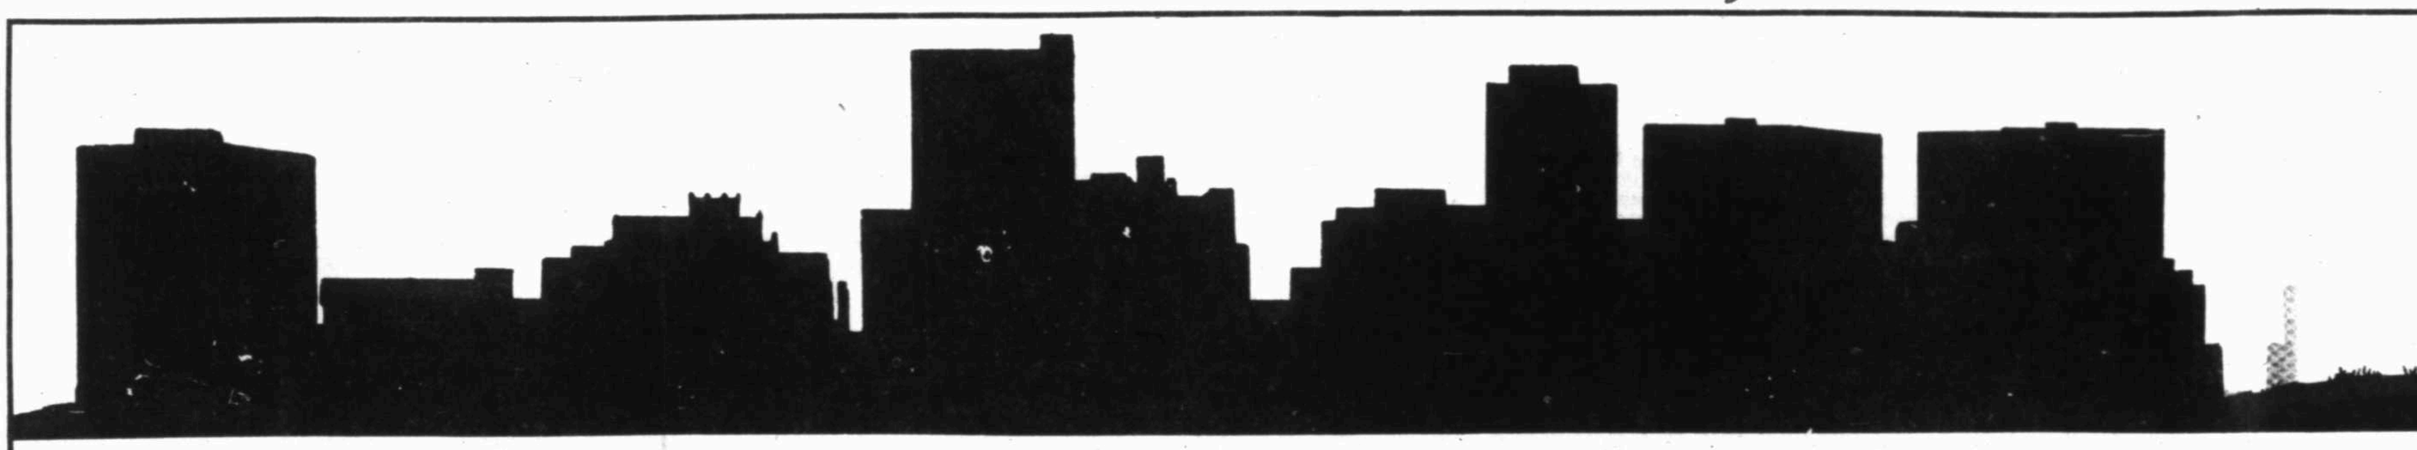

CBS said in its appeal that "the prior restraint contained in this broad injunctive order is unprecedented in the history of our nation and constitutes, with no question, a blatant violation of...freedoms of speech and of the press."

It "raises issues of national importance and seriously imperils the freedom of expression which, heretofore, has been secured to all citizens for more than 200 years," the network said. "If not corrected immediately, and prior to Sunday, January 16, 1983, it will allow the judiciary, a branch of government, the right of unbridled censorship over the contents and timing of news programs."

"The injunctive order prohibits the broadcast anywhere and goes far beyond even the relief sought by the defendants," the petition said.

CBS also said it did not know the trial date when it scheduled the broadcast, and that it would cost tens of thousands of dollars to replace the segment about the investigation with another.

Defense lawyers argued that delaying the broadcast until the trial would result in a minimum of "inconvenience to or interference with the news media."

California NOW leader has violent past

AP Laserphoto

But when she was arrested last week on a fugitive warrant and allegations of violence emerged from her past, those same friends and colleagues admitted that the private life of California's National Organization for Women president had eluded them.

In the days since her arrest, a sketchy portrait has emerged of the woman who was born Virginia Galluzzo on June 2, 1941 in Brooklyn, N.Y., of poor parents. When she was a child, the family moved to upstate New York where Ginny graduated from high school in the town of New Paltz.

According to biographical data gathered by the Ginny Foat Defense Fund, she became an airline stewardess shortly after high school. She would say later this was a job that taught her about sex discrimination. She also worked in a school for emotionally disturbed children in New York State.

While in her early 20s, Ms. Foat registered at City College of New York to study business and psychology, but she never graduated and it is unknown how long she remained there.

In 1965, she married John Sidote and they left New York, traveling to Nevada, New Orleans and ultimately to California.

It is Sidote, now her ex-husband, who has accused Ms. Foat of participating in a 1965 slaying in Louisiana — an allegation that led to her arrest last week on a fugitive warrant. She has not been charged by Louisiana authorities, but is being held in jail here pending a Feb. 11 court appearance for an extradition report.

Sidote, who served time on a murder conviction in Nevada, was paroled in 1981. But he was back in jail last week on a drunken driving charge and said he would fly back to Louisiana to testify against Ms. Foat.

Friends said they knew about Sidote.

"She was married before that, when she was very young, but it was annulled," said Jean Cordova of the defense fund. She and others said Ms. Foat spoke of the marriage to Sidote as a troubled one.

"Everybody knew she had married this guy, that she didn't really know who or what he was," said Jean Conger, another friend. "She found out he was violent and she was afraid of him. She got out of the marriage as soon as she could."

Court records show that in 1967, Sidote was convicted of involuntary manslaughter for killing an 18-year-old man outside a Torrance bar that Sidote had bought with Ms. Foat. Sidote went to state prison where a psychologist diagnosed him as a schizophrenic.

Ms. Foat's friends said that while Sidote was in prison, she left the state and ended the marriage.

But Los Angeles police detectives Warren Eggar and Tom Gorey told New Orleans newspapers that while Sidote was in prison, Ms. Foat became involved with a small-time hoodlum, Richard L. Busconi, who had been a friend of Sidote. They said she and Busconi lived together but never married.

In 1969, the detectives said, Ms. Foat was with Busconi in San Pedro, Calif., when he was gunned down and killed in a drug deal that went sour. They said no one was ever arrested in that case.

Ms. Cordova said that after Sidote went to prison, Ms. Foat left for Vancouver, British Columbia where she was hired as catering sales manager for a hotel. She met and married Ray Foat, a restaurateur, and in 1970 they returned to California, settled in Orange County and started a catering service. She and Foat remained married until 1980.

Ms. Cordova said she believed Ms. Foat had another brief marriage since then, but did not know the identity of her fourth husband.

In 1973, Ms. Foat became actively involved in the women's movement, began working with NOW and other political groups and later moved to Canoga Park, a suburb of Los Angeles, where she had another catering company, Ms. Cordova said.

In the past six months, Ms. Foat had lived alone in the upper half of a modest duplex in the Silverlake area of Los Angeles, four miles from downtown. Neighbors described her as charming and cheerful — "very attractive and charismatic."

Ms. Foat's political activism dated back to her youth, according to her official biography prepared for NOW, which said she had been an organizer of the 1963 Martin Luther King Jr. civil rights march on Washington.

In 1980, Ms. Foat was elected as a Kennedy delegate to the Democratic National Convention and earlier this month she was named a delegate to the state Democratic convention in Sacramento.

In July 1981, Ms. Foat was elected as California NOW coordinator — the equivalent of president. She was the first full-time paid leader of the organization and had responsiblity for administration, policy and supervising the 30,000-member statewide organization.

King Sr., British filmmaker win Nonviolent Peace Prize

ATLANTA (AP) — Hundreds of singing demonstrators marched to the Georgia capitol Saturday to mark the birthday of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. and to call for a national holiday in his honor.

"We want a national holiday!" the throng chanted after walking more than a mile through the windy streets on a cold winter day to commemorate the 54th anniversary of King's birth.

President Reagan devoted his weekly radio address to praise of King, but Reagan has opposed making Jan. 15 a national holiday, Reagan believes such holidays "have been reserved mainly for the Washingtons and Lincolns," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said.

King observances also were held in Los Angeles, New York, Baltimore and Seattle.

Coretta Scott King, the civil rights leader's widow, presented the annual Martin Luther King Jr. Nonviolent Peace Prize in Atlanta to King's father, Martin Luther King Sr., and British filmmaker Richard Attenborough, who produced and directed "Ghandi."

AT A RALLY on the steps of the state capitol, the Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference which King once led, declared that King's dream lives on.

"We're here to say to America that you've killed a dreamer...but you have not killed the dream...you have delayed the dream...you have frustrated the dream ...but we're here to tell you the dream will never die."

Lowery called for a united front of blacks, women, organized labor and the peace movement to work for equal opportunity, peace and freedom.

The march began at the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, which is hosting its 15th annual week-long observance of King's birthday.

Vice President George Bush planned to arrive in Atlanta later Saturday to lay a wreath at the King Center and give a speech at a special dinner to honor King's father.

The SCLC held a march in Los Angeles as part of ceremonies renaming 6-mile-long Santa Barbara Avenue in a black neighborhood of south central Los Angeles to Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard.

LOS ANGELES police blocked off a two-mile stretch of roads to accommodate 3,000 to 5,000 festive marchers who chanted "Jobs, Not Bombs" and "People Before Profit." The marchers included Shriners and youths wearing red berets.

About 100 People gathered for "A Memorial Mass for Peace" honoring King at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York and 75 people attended an obervance at Zion Baptist Church.

In Baltimore, about 150 people participated in an all-night prayer vigil that ended early Saturday at St. Marks United Methodist Church.

And in Seattle, 400 people gathered at the First AME Church on Friday night to hear speakers extol King's achievements and warn that gains made by blacks have eroded since his death

In a service at the Ebenezer Baptist Church, Mrs. King said her father-in-law and Attenborough are "two very special human beings who have demonstrated in their lives' work the meaning of nonviolent in the Kingian tradition."

SHE SAID THE elder King, affectionately known as Daddy King, "reached out into the larger community to fight against the injustices of his day," and in so doing influenced his son.

Mrs. King said her late husband was "a man of ultimate goodness because he had the example and life of Daddy King to emulate."

Mondale most liberal of potential candidates, ADA reports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale has the most liberal congressional voting record of any commonly mentioned potential presidential candidate, Americans for Democratic Action said on Saturday.

Mondale, who served in the Senate from 1965 through 1976, was given a cumulative rating of 92 out of a possible 100 in an analysis of votes of 12 prospective candidates on selected issues over the past 25 years.

"These ratings do not in any way, shape, or form represent an endorsement of any of these candidates," said Leon Shull, national director of ADA, a liberal organization that annually rates members of Congress.

In a fund-raising letter sent to former contributors last week, Mondale said he will announce his candidacy for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination on Feb. 21.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who has scheduled his announcement for Feb. 2, was rated as the second most liberal, with a score of 85. Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., was given the lowest score, a 33.

All eight of the Democrats who were listed scored higher than any of the Republicans.

Among the four Republicans, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., was rated the most liberal with a score of 13. Vice President George Bush, who served in the House from 1967 through 1970, was rated lowest with a 7.

"Our analysis demonstrates clearly that there are a number of liberal Democratic candidates, and several moderates," Shull said. "The ratings for the possible Republican candidates, on the other hand, show that each one comes from the extremely conservative wing of the party."

Former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew, who is exploring a bid for the Democratic nomination, was not listed because he has never served in Congress.

In ratings for 1982 only, Cranston and Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., were highest at 95, with each of them voting against the ADA position on only one out of 20 selected issues.

Cranston voted against one ADA position by opposing an amendment requiring corporations to pay for reclamation water at a higher rate. California has large reclamation projects.

Hart voted against an ADA position by voting to kill a provision requiring 10 percent withholding of income tax from interest and dividends. The amendment that would have killed the provision was rejected 49-48.

Hollings was the lowest in the annual as well as the cumulative record, although his 1982 score was a 55. His over-all record was dragged down by low ratings in his early years in the Senate. In his first year, 1967, his score was 8.

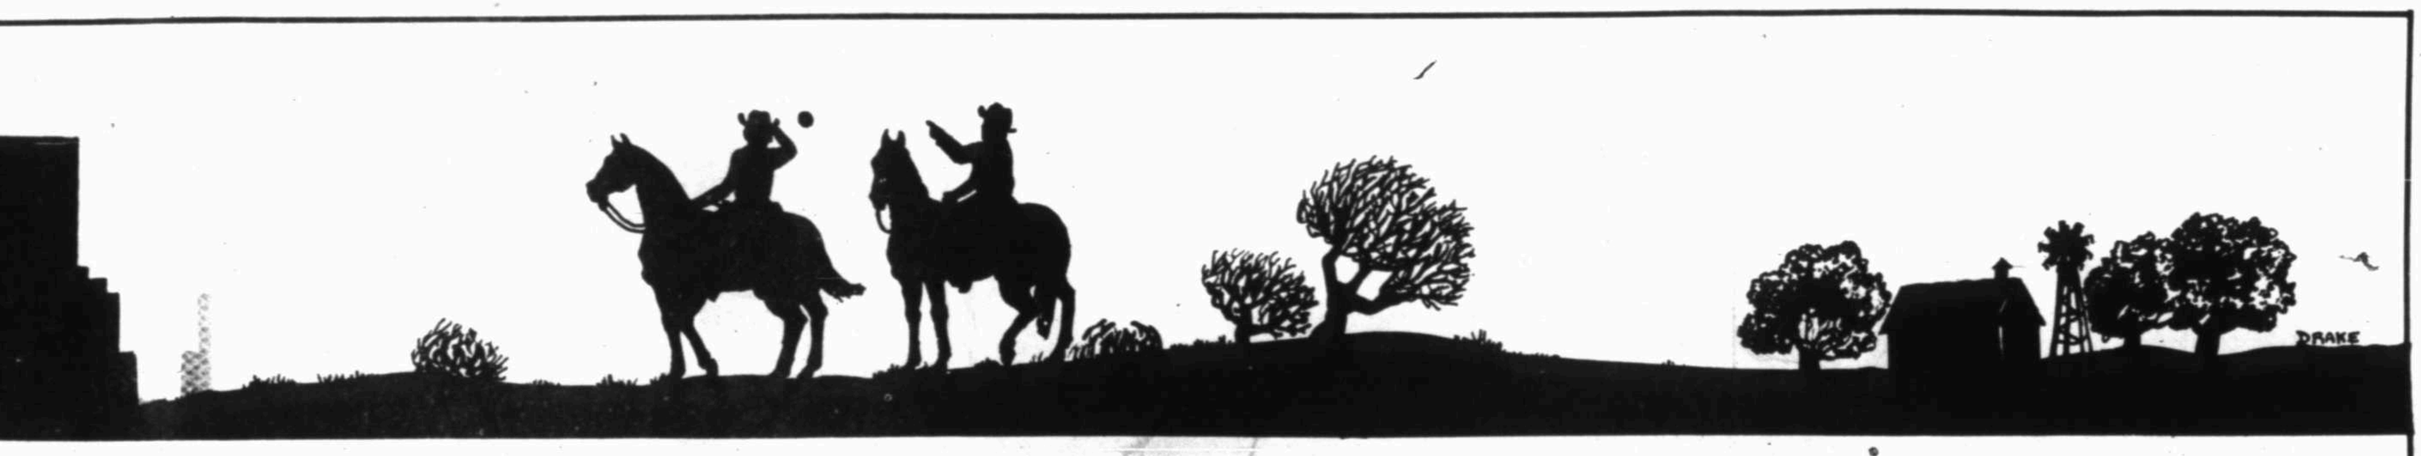

Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., and Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., who say they have not decided whether to run, had the second highest 1982 ratings at 85.

Although Baker had the highest cumulative rating of any of the Republicans, his 1982 score was the lowest among the three still in Congress. He was rated at a 5, siding with the ADA only on the close vote on the withhholding provision.

The ratings for Democrats now in Congress, with the career rating first and the 1982 score second, were: Bumpers 67 and 85; Cranston 85 and 95; Sen. John Glenn of Ohio 63 and 70; Hart 79 and 95; Hollings 33 and 55; and Udall 77 and 85.

Former Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., the 1972 Democratic presidential nominee, received a career score of 81. McGovern, who has said he may make a second presidential bid, was in the House from 1957 to 1960 and the Senate from 1963 to 1980.

Among Republicans still serving in Congress, the scores were Baker 13 and 5; Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas 8 and 15; and Rep. Jack Kemp of New York 12 and 15.

Minnesota town residents wondering if oil will bring bonanza

BROOTEN, Minn. (AP) — Water brought the first bonanza to Brooten, and townsfolk and farmers here now are wondering if oil will bring the second.

"Who knows?" said 54-year-old Kenneth Visser, part owner of the 580-acre hog farm where oil flowed from a 1,830-foot-deep well Tuesday. "I'm a farmer, not an oil man. We won't know until they get a pump on the pipe and we see what happens."

In farming, he warned, "you learn not to count your chickens before they're hatched."

If the well is a producer, it would be the first for Minnesota. Officials of the Minnesota Geological Survey have viewed the discovery with considerable skepticism, saying the state lacks the rock formations suitable for crude oil deposits.

Visser and his father, 78-year-old Hubert Visser, have owned the west-central Minnesota farm since 1955, and the mortgage is paid off. The elder Visser says it would be nice to get oil money, "but we can take it or leave it."

Under their oil lease, the son said, they'd get one-eighth of whatever the well produces — some $346,000 a year if estimates of the driller, Kansas City oilman Douglas Wilmoth, are realized.

Hopes of an oil bonanza here have been raised before. The well was first drilled in 1975 at the instigation of the elder Visser and another area farmer, Leoyd Miller, but it was capped when no crude was found. And 30 to 40 years earlier, there had been some area oil exploration — also with no results.

Miller's confidence remains unshaken. "I wasn't surprised, I wasn't shocked," he said of the oil found Tuesday. "I always thought the oil would come — sooner or later."

No one really knows how much oil is under the ground, but oil has become the major topic of conversational speculation in this town of 600 people.

Jack Eckstein's beef cattle farm adjoins the Visser place, and he is among area farmers who have signed leases with oil hunters. The oil report "sounds good," he says, "But I don't know."

"People don't know what to think yet," said Bonanza Valley State Bank executive vice president Martin Gjerde. "There's a guarded optimism."

"Oh brother, oh man, what it would do for this area if oil has been found!" chimed in Edwin Sandvig, at 89 still presiding as bank vice president.

AP Laserphoto

Herbert and Adeline Visser, along with their son Kenneth, are owners of a hog farm where oil was found. Until pumping begins it won't be known if Minnesota has its first producing oil well.

He and others like to tell of the first bonanza here — an agricultural boom brought by irrigation from a huge aquifer, or underground lake.

About 10 years ago, farmers began irrigating from wells, some only 40 feet deep. Since then, they haven't had a crop failure, Sandvig says, and corn production has increased by 100 bushels per acre.

"From the standpoint of crop production, we're better off around here than any other part of the state," he said.

The agricultural boom prompted John Bohmer, the bank president, and other community leaders to "sit down and come up with the Bonanza Valley name," said Gjerde. A sign identifies Brooten as "The Heart of the Bonanza Valley."

Now, Mayor Kay Mohr says, people "have their fingers crossed, hoping this will develop into something."

In recent years, the town has built sewers, a water system, streets and an airport. There has been little economic growth, however, and Mohr said, an "oil boom would take care of that."

Pumping at the well on the Visser farm could begin very soon, said Elroy Erie of R.J. Steichen & Co., the Minneapolis stock brokerage firm that underwrote the exploration. He said the work was financed by a limited partnership of 34 investors.

Kenneth Visser said some early reports on the amount of oil were exaggerated. "A barrel or two came in 1½ minutes" before the well was capped, he said.

Times Beach residents protest against town's plight

TIMES BEACH, Mo. (AP) — More than 100 residents of dioxin-plagued Times Beach advertised their plight to the traveling public Saturday, waving signs and banners at cars and trucks passing on nearby Interstate 44.

"They've poisoned us," Ralph Penn shouted into the face of oncoming traffic which streamed past this riverside community devestated by flooding and discovery of hazardous waste in the soil.

Truckers honked their horns and gave demonstrators the thumbs-up signal. Some motorists slowed to read the signs and waved. No one stopped.

"Everyone's with us but the government," said Penn, a laid-off auto worker. "They poisoned us 10 years ago and left us sitting there. They let me buy a house in this town and now I can't get rid of it — I'm stuck with it."

A neighbor, Eula Waltman, agreed that the federal government should to come in and buy out the 800 homes and businesses in the virtually abandoned community.

"But they're too busy helping foreign countries to do anything for us," said Ms. Waltman, a Times Beach resident since 1964 who lost has both her home and business, a combination filling station-liquor store.

Demonstrators braving 17-degree weather and a stiff breeze lined about a one-quarter-mile section of the highway. Several wore white protective clothing but most ignored a federal recommendation that they not return to the town without respirators and equipment to protect them from dioxin sprayed on roads in the early 1970s as a dust control measure.

"The EPA has destroyed Times Beach," read part of one sign carried by Dan Hrin, who has lived in the community for the past four years and experienced no health problems.

"It destroyed the town and businesses without any proof how much dioxin was in the soil," he said. "I think that's pretty unfair."

Near the west end of the demonstration stood about 10 carloads of Warren County residents who had driven in to join the protest. Flood debris from Times Beach has been dumped at a landfull there.

Memphis police officer slain by religious zealots laid to rest

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Patrolman Robert S. Hester, captured and beaten to death by a band of religious zealots, was buried Saturday by the police department he served for almost a decade.

"For many, many hours we have been caught up, are still caught up in a helpless passion," said the dead officer's commander, Inspector J. E. Ivy, during a 30-minute service at Eudora Baptist Church.

"We came to know Bobby as a quiet, peaceloving person...A lack of humility on the part of others led us to this hour."

Hester, 34, was beaten to death while being held by seven men led by Lindberg Sanders, 49, who preached to a small group of young men and taught them that the Bible identified policemen as anti-Christ and representatives of the devil.

Sanders and his followers were shot to death by members of the department's tactical squad early Thursday morning when officers stormed the small frame house where Hester had been held since his caputure during a routine trouble call there Tuesday night.

Hester's body, his hands cuffed behind his back, was found inside the front door. A medical examiner later ruled Hester died of head injuries inflicted by an unknown blunt instrument.

The Eudora Baptist Church sanctuary, which seats about 1,700, was packed with uniformed police officers, sheriff's deputies, members of police families, city officials and representatives of at least a dozen law enforcement agencies. Police badges were partially covered by black mourning bands.

More than 2,000 people, many of them in police uniform, attended the services and at least 350 cars followed the white hearse to Forest Hill Cemetery. A triple volley rifle salute was fired by the tactical squad and "Taps" was played.

About 100 mourners stood along the walls and another 200 or so listened to the service from the lobby at the rear of the sanctuary.

Hester's closed mahogany casket was almost lost in a cascade of flowers which filled the choir loft and surrounded the bier. Many of the floral arrangements were in the shape of police badges.

Hester's widow, Anita, flanked by two male members of the family and followed by the dead officer's mother and other family members, entered the sanctuary as an organist played "Rock of Ages."

The Rev. Floyd Simmons, pastor of Elliston Baptist Church where Hester worshipped, read the 23rd Psalm.

As a policeman, Ivy said, Hester was doing God's work.

"Who does God's work; will get God's pay," Ivy said.

Simmons, who referred to Hester as "my friend Bobby," told the congregation the death of the officer was a time for rejoicing, because Hester was surely to find everlasting life in Heaven.

"It's befitting that we recognize one who has been martyred for the cause," Simmons said. "We have come to look death in the eye.

Simmons referred only briefly to the manner of Hester's death.

"If I could have chosen the place and way in which he died, I would have not chosen this way," Simmons said.

Then he touched on the controversy over whether police commanders were too slow to send assault teams into the house to rescue the captured officer.

"I think the police and administration should be commended for their endurance in doing everything they could to save Bobby Hester," the minister said. "It's easy to be a Monday morning quarterback."

The department's handling of the incident also has drawn criticism from some black leaders, who have complained that officers used too much force in ending the siege. Hester was white; Sanders and his followers were black.

After the sermon, uniformed officers filed outside into the 32-degree cold and stood at attention in long files at the church entrance. As the casket was brought from the church, there was a shouted command and the policemen saluted.

Chicago policeman killed in holdup

CHICAGO (AP) — A plainclothes police officer who went to the scene of a narcotics-related holdup was shot fatally — the sixth slaying of a city policeman on duty in less than a year.

A second plainclothesman was wounded in the arm in the encounter Friday night with two men in a building where "narcotics activities" were going on," Police Superintendent Richard J. Brzeczek said.

The suspects were arrested moments later and three other people were taken in for questioning, Brzeczek said.

Brzeczek said it appeared the gunmen "were there to stick up a dope flat, a location where there were narcotics activities going on."

Tactical officer Larry J. Vincent, 29, died in the emergency room of Billings Hospital from a bullet wound in the face, said John Pontarelli, a spokesman for University of Chicago Hospitals.

Patrolman Clarence Spraggins, 34, was transported to Provident Hospital with a single gunshot wound in his right arm, and was in fair condition there.

Widow sues chemical company

NEW YORK (AP) — The wife of a gardener who died after he apparently inhaled the weed killer paraquat has filed a $37 million negligence suit against the chemical company that markets it.

Lucille Wilson of Mahopac, N.Y., charged in the suit filed Friday in State Supreme Court that the San Fancisco-based Chevron Chemical Co. "knew or should have known of the dangers and deadly propensities" of the herbicide.

Mrs. Wilson's 25-year-old husband, Scott, died Nov. 13 at a Bronx hospital following an unsuccessful lung transplant.

Attorney Harry Lipsig said Wilson inhaled paraquat Aug. 30 while working as a gardener in Boca Raton, Fla.

Chevron spokesman Michael Marcy said labels on the packaging warn that "...one swallow can kill" and also provide "explicit instructions on protective steps to follow in order to avoid swallowing."

"We understand that Mr. Wilson did not follow those protective steps and was not wearing the protective equipment and clothing called for by the label," Marcy said.

Airlines moves into new offices

FORT WORTH (AP) — Four years after it pulled its headquarters out of New York City, American Airlines finally finishes moving into its new office building Monday.

The nation's second-largest airline has been using two leased buildings in Grand Prairie while awaiting completion of the new $150 million, 550,000-square-foot headquarters near the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport.

The building was financed with $147 million in Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport special revenue bonds. American will lease the building from the airport, which owns the 350-acre site inside the Fort Worth city limits.

American, with more than $4 billion in revenues last year, becomes Fort Worth's largest corporate citizen.

Credit company employees indicted

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former employee of Safeco Credit Co. and two other men have been indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly arranging fraudulent loans that cost the company $355,434.

The indictment named the former manager of Safeco's Fountain Valley office, 36-year-old Van Charles Hartley of Huntington Beach; Joel Martin Roberts, 41, of Seal Beach; and Thomas Kimball Clevenger, 61, of Long Beach.

The indictment alleges that Roberts and Clevenger got Hartley to make five loans to sham companies and diverted the money to themselves.

Roberts and Clevenger, both on probation for previous fraud convictions, were arrested Thursday and held in lieu of $100,000 each. Hartley remained free Friday and will be arraigned with the other two on Monday.

The indictment accuses them of conspiracy, mail fraud, wire fraud and interstate transportation of property obtained by fraud. Roberts was also charged with using a fictitious name to implement a fraud.

Man dies in tavern fire

MURPHYSBORO, Ill. (AP) — A fire erupted in a tavern and spread through a downtown block Saturday, killing at least one person and destroying businesses and century-old buildings.

Firefighters, hampered by 25 mph winds and subfreezing temperatures, brought the fire under control at 7 a.m., nearly five hours after it broke out. One-third of the block was destroyed and other buildings were damaged, authorities said.

The cause of the fire was undetermined.

Police and witnesses said the one known victim, believed to be a handicapped man, was trapped in an apartment above the tavern. At least one other person may also have been trapped, police said.

Sherry Holder, who escaped from her nearby apartment, said she saw the victim hanging out of a window above the pub.

"He just fell back in when the fire got him," she said. The man was not identified immediately.

Witnesses said a sheriff's deputy scaled a ladder to rescue two men from the window ledge of a second-story apartment and brought several others through windows to safety before he was overcome by smoke.

Deputy William Mehrtens and three firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation at hospitals, and other rescue workers were treated at the scene, authorities said.

State police closed all highways through the southern Illinois city, and fire departments from Carbondale, Marion and other nearby cities were called to assist. The fire could be seen five miles away.

Pope calls on world's governments to pardon prisoners on death row

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday asked the world's governments to pardon prisoners on death row, the first time a pontiff has spoken out against capital punishment.

The pope also called on the United States and the Soviet Union to disarm simultaneously and said foreign interference in Central America aggravates tensions there.

In a wide-ranging speech to the Vatican diplomatic corps, John Paul said dialogue is the only road to peace and expressed his concern for the situations in Lebanon, Central America, Afghanistan, Northern Ireland, Iran and Iraq.

"The Holy See recommends clemency, or pardon, for those who are condemned to death, especially those condemned for political reasons," the pope said in French. His remarks were translated by The Associated Press.

Vatican spokesman the Rev. Romeo Panciroli said it was the first time a pope has criticized the death penalty.

Pope Pius XII, in 1955, said the state should decide whatever punishments it deemed necessary for its citizens.

Vatican City abolished the death penalty in the tiny independent city-state in 1966. Until then, anyone convicted of attempting to kill the pope could be sentenced to death.

The Vatican legal code even at that time was moot, because the Lateran treaties of 1929 between the Vatican and Italy gave Italy the responsibility of trying anyone convicted of a crime on Vatican soil. Capital punishment is illegal in Italy.

The pope, in a white cassock and skullcap and a red shawl, called for a reduction of nuclear and conventional arms and said "peace cannot be constructed by one side without the other, unilaterally."

He said a "true internal dialogue" is necessary to resolve "the serious problem of social misery and internal tension" in Central America, where "outside interference" is widening the gap between political factions.

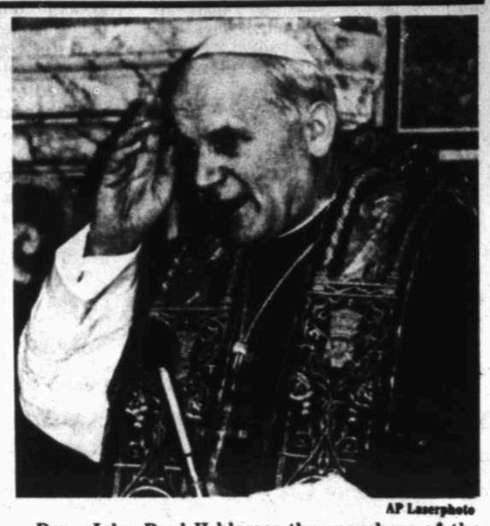

The pope is traveling to Central America at the end of February or the beginning of March, according to Vatican sources. The Vatican has not announced the trip officially or given a schedule.

The pope made his remarks to 200 diplomats accredited to the Holy See gathered in the Apostolic Palace's Royal Hall. Most men dressed in white tie and tails and women wore long dark dresses. Some African diplomats wore traditional dashikis, brightly colored tunics.

"The church cannot remain silent to the criminal action of making a certain number of people disappear, without trial, leaving their families in a cruel state of uncertainty," the pope said, in what Vatican observers called a reference to Argentina's military junta.

"The Church takes into its heart all those who are submitted to torture, whatever the political regime might be," John Paul said. He also condemned arbitrary arrest, concentration camps, and "various forms of oppression."

He said the people of Afghanistan, subjected to more than three years of Soviet occupation, are "legitimately proud of their independence."

Pope John Paul II blesses the members of the diplomatic corps to the Holy See. The pontiff received the diplomats in a special audience in the Royal Hall at the Vatican Saturday. He condemned the death penalty for the first time, called for bilateral disarmament and criticized foreign intervention in Central America.

Christian, Moslem leaders want world-wide ban on nuclear arms

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Christian and Moslem leaders representing millions of faithful around the world joined Saturday in calling for a ban on nuclear arms.

In a statement issued at the end of a three-day meeting, the 11 clergymen urged their fellow religious leaders to work for disarmament, saying nothing could "morally justify" atomic warfare.

"This was an important meeting," said one of the organizer, the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of Indiana's Notre Dame University. "For the first time we have had sessions among church leaders of many different faiths from all over the world."

"Politicians tend to react to public pressure and public discussion," Hesburgh told The Associated Press. "This is how we can help — by raising our public voices."

The conference statement said nuclear armaments are "a problem which demands to be examined from the standpoint of faith and moral values.

"We must stop an arms race that produces ever more sophisticated agents of annihilation at enormous costs, diverting resources that could be used to feed, clothe, house and cure millions of people."

The religious leaders also backed a declaration by leading Soviet bloc and Western scientists that condemned nuclear arms and the arms race.

That declaration was presented to Pope John Paul II last September.

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak's government expects some of the 17 Arab states that broke with it over peace with Israel to resume diplomatic ties this year.

Relations at official and unofficial levels have improved in the last 15 months to the point which, in the view of Egyptian leaders, makes the restoration of diplomatic ties almost a technicality.

Mubarak, who initiated the thaw after replacing the assassinated Anwar Sadat in October 1981, told a Sudanese newspaper last month: "The relationships and bonds between Egypt and the Arab countries transcend diplomatic forms and formalities."

In an interview with The Associated Press earlier this month, Mubarak said Egypt had contacts with all Arab countries which severed diplomatic relations except Syria.

Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly, in a policy review before Parliament Jan. 10, said Egypt is in no hurry for a diplomatic normalization and does not anticipate a collective resumption of relations. But he predicted "several Arab countries will restore diplomatic relations this year."

Osama el-Baz, political director of Mubarak's office, said the emphasis at this stage is on grassroots contacts and social, cultural, economic and other exchanges with the Arabs rather than formal diplomatic ties.

DIPLOMATIC SOURCES said Iraq and Jordan may well be among the first Arab states to resume diplomatic relations.

In an interview with the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram last month, Deputy Premier Tarek Aziz of Iraq said relations "should be restored now." He expressed readiness to meet Aly or State Minister for Foreign Affairs Butros Ghali anywhere to discuss this.

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization which also broke with Egypt in 1979, not only has said he is anxious to visit Cairo but also offered in an interview with the Egyptian weekly magazine Al-Mussawar to help organize an Egyptian-Arab-Palestinian conference to promote a reconciliation.

Without budging from basic commitment to the peace treaty with Israel signed on March 26, 1979, and its parent Camp David framework accords of 1978, Mubarak has taken a conciliatory line toward Arab critics.

Israel's invasion of Lebanon last June 6 gave Mubarak a chance to ingratiate himself further with Egypt's Arab detractors. He slowed down the normalization of relations with Israel, engaged in extensive contacts with Arab leaders and recalled his ambassador to Israel in protest of the massacre of Palestinians at two Beirut camps.

Following Sadat's signing of the peace treaty with Israel, all members of the Arab League except Sudan, Oman and Somalia severed diplomatic relations with Egypt and imposed all sorts of boycotts.

EGYPT'S ARAB League seat remains vacant, but the picture now is vastly different.

Insiders say there are more unpublicized than publicized personal contacts and exchanges of messages between Egyptian and Arab leaders.

In late December, they said, Mubarak secretly received an Arab Cabinet minister and took him on a plane tour of Sinai which was completely evacuated by Israel last April. They said the idea was to show the Arab visitor that Egypt was in effective control of the peninsula and that the visitor was so astounded he admitted the Arabs had misjudged Egyptian policy.

Even with neighboring hard-liner Libya, which fought a six-day war with Egypt in 1977 and opposes any peace with Israel, there have been secret contacts, the informants said. Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy has sent word to Mubarak proposing that the common border, closed since the war, be reopened, they said. Egypt is considering the request.

Earlier this month, the Kuwaiti Track and Field Federation invited its Egyptian counterpart to send athletes to a tournament scheduled for next month.

IN CAIRO'S International Book Fair last year, a half dozen Arab countries took part. More are expected to participate this year, and Iraq and Morocco will have pavilions for the first time.

An estimated 3 million Egyptians work in the Arab countries. Their status never was affected by the political quarrel and they send home much-needed hard currency remittances of more than $2 billion annually.

Shortly after taking office, Mubarak directed the Egyptian media to halt all attacks on fellow Arabs even if they continued to assail Egypt. He stuck to this position in his public statements, except for rare open criticism of Syria on grounds it was undermining Middle East peace efforts.

On diplomatic relations, Mubarak's stand has been that it is up to those who broke off relations to take the initiative in restoring them "in their own good time."

Lebanese open contacts with Syria

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese government opened a new round of contacts with Syria Saturday in attempts to bring about simultaneous withdrawal of Syrian and Israeli forces from this embattled Mediterranean nation.

Lebanese leaders also held day-long talks with U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib and his assistant, Morris Draper, on ways to accelerate the withdrawal talks with Israel. Habib and Draper then shuttled back to Israel. They did not comment on their talks in Beirut and a spokesman at the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv said their schedules were "very open and flexible."

At the same time, Christian and Druse Moslem militiamen battled with artillery and rockets in a cluster of mountain towns east and southeast of Beirut, collapsing an Israeli-sponsored cease-fire.

There was no immediate word on casualties in the renewed fighting in the Aley and Chouf regions where more than 90 people have died in hostilities since November.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Saturday that troop withdrawals from Lebanon could begin by mid-February if the Palestine Liberation Organization agreed to be the first to evacuate its forces.

PLO CHIEF YASSER Arafat had no immediate comment on Shamir's offer or any aspect of the talks. He met with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein in Bagdhad on Saturday and then flew to Qatar. The Gulf News Agency said Arafat planned to travel Sunday to Damascus, Syria to meet with his executive council.

In Damascus, Syrian President Hafez Assad pledged to support Lebanon in its efforts to "regain sovereignty over its entire territory" but warned he would not allow Israel to "reap political or military gains out of its Lebanon invasion."

A government spokesman in Damascus said Assad made his position clear in a three-hour conference he held with Jean Obeid, a special envoy of Lebanese President Amin Gemayel. Obeid traveled to the Syrian capital earlier Saturday.

"Israel must withdraw from Lebanon without achieving any gains and without dictating any conditions that would infringe on Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity," Assad's spokesman quoted him as saying.

An earlier Lebanese government statement said Lebanon was in the process of establishing contacts with Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization parallel to the withdrawal talks with Israel.

THERE WAS no word whether Obeid met with any PLO officials during his Damascus trip. The PLO maintains between 6,000 and 10,000 guerrillas behind Syrian lines in northern and eastern Lebanon.

Thousands of other guerrillas were forced to evacuate Beirut in August, two months after Israeli forces invaded Lebanon on June 6 to smash the PLO.

On Friday, the Syrians attacked the U.S.-mediated compromise agenda that broke a three-week stalemate in the Lebanese-Israeli withdrawal talks.

The compromise listed top items to be discussed as ending the 34-year-old state of war between Israel and Lebanon and withdrawal of Israel's invasion army.

"There is a new plot aimed at turning Lebanon into an American military protectorate. This became apparent in the light of the Lebanese-Israeli (agenda) agreement," Syria's state radio said.

"Syria is determined to resist and strive to undermine any agreement that would infringe on Lebanon's security, sovereignty or territorial integrity," the commentary said.

SYRIA MAINTAINS a 30,000-man army in northern and eastern Lebanon under a 1976 Arab League mandate that empowered Syria to police Lebanon's civil war armistice.

Israel insists on a complete Palestinian withdrawal and release of Israeli prisoners held by the PLO as a precondition for a simultaneous Syrian and Israeli pullout. The Israeli occupation army is estimated at 25,000.

Lebanon has formed three subcommittees to negotiate issues involved in the withdrawal of Israeli forces: one for ending the state of war, another for postwar mutual relations and the third for programming the withdrawal.

OPEC chairman looks for formula to avert price war within cartel

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The chairman of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries met Saturday with oil ministers from the Persian Gulf and Indonesia in search of a formula to avert a price war within the cartel.

The meeting was reported by the Gulf News Agency, which said the Arab side was represented by the oil minister of Iraq and ministers from the six-nation, Saudi-led Gulf Cooperation Council.

Saudi Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani was among those attending the meeting. A Bahrain government spokesman said it was the first of a planned series of "bilateral, trilateral, and multilateral OPEC consultations."

Yamani, whose country appears headed toward a collision with Iran that may split OPEC down the middle, told reporters he expected the informal consultations to continue for a few days. He fended off questions about internal OPEC disputes, which center on Saudi disapproval of efforts by Iran and others to discount oil prices and increase production.

Also at the meetings were Iraqi Oil Minister Qasim Taki, Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto and Yehia Diko of Nigeria, the current chairman of OPEC.

The United Arab Emirates news agency, which distributed the first public statement about their arrival, quoted official sources as saying Libyan Oil Minister Kamal Hassan al-Maksoud was expected to arrive Sunday to join the discussions in Manama'a Regency Hotel.

Can you tell the difference in impressed concrete and tile, brick or cobblestone? ...only in the price!

Add flair to your home and landscaping with Bomanite – colored and imprinted concrete. Offered in 20 patterns and a rainbow of colors, this exciting process will create the character of tile, brick, cobblestone or any number of random patterns — and at a substantial savings when compared with other surfaces. Bomanite, making the best impressions in concrete for 24 years, combines the economy, durability and strength of concrete with the beauty of hand-crafted masonry.

HERE'S HOW IT'S DONE:

At least two applications of our patented Bomanite Color Hardener are applied and worked into the surface with specialized floats. The concrete is then finished with the use of customized imprinting tools, which apply the pattern of your choice. Once completed, the surface is sealed for long-lasting beauty with Bomanite Color Curing Compound.

Sinking satellite

A Russian spy satellite containing a nuclear reactor is losing altitude and is expected to fall from orbit by the end of January.

Concerns have been raised that it will hit the Earth and cause a nuclear explosion. That is practically impossible says the Defense Department. Here are the possibilities:

U.S.S.R.: Cosmos falls in February

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union announced Saturday that the uranium fuel core from its crippled satellite will enter the Earth's atmosphere in mid-February, completing the disintegration of the Cosmos-1402.

A Soviet official said most of the radioactive debris will burn up in the upper atmosphere, and that the hazard from any remaining particles would not exceed internationally accepted limits.

The announcement was made in a statement by a Soviet official that was read on the main evening television news program "Vremya" and distributed by the official news agency Tass.

It was the second time the Soviets have publicly provided information on the troubled satellite since the Pentagon reported earlier this month that Cosmos-1402 was falling in orbit and would plunge back to Earth.

The announcement said the "main structure" of the satellite will enter the atmosphere in "late January." It said another part of the satellite, which Soviet scientists say was fragmented into three pieces after its operations were completed Dec. 28, burned up in the atmosphere Dec. 30.

"THE TWO REMAINING fragments are the main part of the satellite structure and the fuel core of the reactor separated from it," said the official, Oleg Belotserkovsky, director of the Moscow Physical-Technical Institute. He said the late-January and mid-February entry times are based on "preliminary calculations."

As for radioactive dangers, Belotserkovsky said the splitting of the fuel core off from the reactor "ensures guaranteed conditions for its burning down in the dense layers of the atmosphere and dispersal of materials into finely divided particles."

The radiation level from such particles "will be within limits recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection," he said.

The section that already burned up was not identified, but Western technology experts here said it is presumed to have been the payload. U.S. Defense Department experts have said the five-ton Cosmos-1402 carried radar to track American naval vessels, and it is believed the surveillance equipment was the first component to disintegrate.

The Soviets at first denied Cosmos-1402 was in trouble, saying pre-planned experiments were being conducted on schedule. But on Jan. 7, Tass confirmed U.S. Defense Department claims that the satellite was falling from orbit. The Soviet agency said the satellite had "ceased active existence" on Dec. 28, at which time ground controllers sent commands to separate the reactor from it.

FIVE YEARS AGO, when another nuclear-fueled cosmos was reported tumbling, the Soviets were silent on the subject until Jan. 24, 1978, when the United States announced the satellite had plunged over northwest Canada.

That satellite, Cosmos-954, mostly disintegrated, but radioactive debris was found over northwestern Canada. The Canadians say it cost them $6 million to clean up. The Soviets eventually agreed to pay half.

The United States and other Western governments have been pressing the Soviets for details on the latest cosmos, but as late as Friday, Western diplomats had said none was forthcoming.

"We haven't gotten very good answers," said one senior diplomat who declined to be identified. "Their position seems to be that everything is fine."

The diplomat complained that the Soviets had agreed, after the 1978 cosmos incident, to provide information when possible hazards are posed by falling space debris. "They're saying there is no need to supply any information because everything is going swimmingly," he said, adding that "they're playing the odds" that the cosmos debris will come down over water.

THE TASS ANNOUNCEMENT Saturday did not say where the re-entries are expected, but Western specialists said such calculations are nearly impossible to make.

"There are too many variables," said one technology expert who asked not to be identified. "You might be able to say where something will come down about two hours before it does. But it depends on the angle of entering the atmosphere, the trajectory at the time, all sorts of factors."

In 1979, when the 77-ton U.S. spacecraft Skylab re-entered the atmosphere, trackers could only say it would fall somewhere in the Indian Ocean. Most of it did, though some debris scattered over Australia.

The Cosmos-1402 has been tumbling in an orbit mostly over water, but also passing over North America, most of the Soviet Union, Africa, much of China and all of South America, Pentagon officials say.

Any radioactive pieces that escape burn-up in re-entry would pose no danger if they plunge into the ocean, according to American specialists. Close proximity to any debris that hits land would be dangerous for people, with about 200 yards considered "life-threatening," they say.

Romania literally plunges into darkness

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — The shadowy darkness swallows fossils inside their display cases and turns brocaded court costumes into ghostly silhouettes at Romania's National History Museum.

A woman shuffles into a dim chamber and turns on the light for a pair of visitors. Arms crossed, she waits for them to leave, then flips off the light and returns to the hissing radiator where she huddles against the morning chill.

Keeping the capital's 200-year-old museum unlit is just one of several steps being taken to combat an energy crisis that has literally plunged this Balkan country into darkness.

Official information about the crisis is hard to come by in Romania, where citizens are required to tell the Communist government about any contacts with foreigners within 24 hours.

But it quickly becomes clear to visitors that homes and public buildings go without heat, electricity and hot water for hours a day. About two-thirds of Bucharest's street lights are out — even more outside the city.

People have been reported trapped in elevators because of rotating blackouts. Patients wait in the dark in hospital emergency rooms. Schools extended winter vacation by two to four weeks to save on classroom utility costs.

AT THE ATHNEE Palace, considered one of Bucharest's most luxurious hotels, hallways form long, dark tunnels for guests to stumble through. Wall clocks are motionless, their hands paralyzed at a different time on every floor.

Gasoline is rationed everywhere but Bucharest, and the scarcity of fuel to sell has forced some stations to close and others to go on half-day schedules. Public transportation has been slashed by 30 percent.

The government-run media is coupling demands for conservation with promises that the situation will begin to improve this winter once coal-fueled furnaces are put back into operation following delayed repairs.

The government complains of lagging coal production and low water levels in lakes and reservoirs that supply hydroelectric power. But usually well-informed Western and Romanian sources blame mismanagement and President Nicolae Ceausescu's crash industrialization program for the energy crisis.

Ceausescu told the Romanian Communist Party conference in mid-December that "resolute action must be taken to reduce electricity consumption...by 10-15 percent."

A 20 percent cutback went into effect last June, when prices for household heating fuel soared 200 percent. No new price hikes have been announced.

CEAUSESCU ALSO called for stepped-up crude-oil, gas and coal production, recycling of materials and development of alternative sources of energy, such as solar power.

He said he had ordered "firm measures" to assure completion of Romania's first nuclear power plant on schedule by 1985 at the Danube River port of Cernavoda, about 125 miles southeast of Bucharest.

Declaring that Romania could be energy self-sufficient within three years, Ceausescu said work must be done "with a higher sense of responsibility and attention...."

Last year, substandard coal clogged filters and damaged furnaces in some major southern power stations. Three Communist Party leaders were sacked in the scandal.

The mining industry is also suffering a labor shortage.

"We have to resort to the army and to young people and other groups while securing the employment of people who receive wages without adequate production," Ceausescu said recently.

Research by Radio Free Europe indicates that during the industrialization program of the 1970s, Romania increased its refining capacity to more than 35 million tons of oil annually — about three times the amount domestically produced.

Rich nations grapple with world economy

PARIS (AP) — The rich nations of the West start three days of meetings in Paris Sunday to finalize a stop-gap plan to avert collapse of the world financial system under the burden of international debt.

They also will be studying longer term measures to solve the underlying problem — how to push the world economy out of recession.

The immediate issue is a major increase in the resources of the Washington-based International Monetary Fund. That will bolster the IMF's ability to bail out nations — such as Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, Poland and Romania — unable to repay principal and often even the interest on huge debts to Western banks and governments.

In March 1981, Poland announced its inability to meet a regular interest payment of $2.5 billion on its $27 billion debt to Western banks and governments.

As the world recession grew deeper, the income of debtor nations slumped. Concern heightened notably when Brazil, with an estimated debt of $87 billion, and Argentina with $40 billion outstanding, were unable to make interest payments.

But when apparently oil-rich Mexico could not meet the payments on its $80 billion debt last August, there was public fear in the United States and Europe of a chain reaction endangering the whole world financial structure. So far, banks and governments have patched together restructuring plans — the technical word for agreement to delay repayments or extend new loans to pay the old.

But after initial reluctance by the United States, the rich nations have agreed that the IMF must be strengthened against a run on its reserves.

After preliminary meetings of senior officials Sunday and Monday, the finance ministers and governors of central banks of the Group of Ten wealthy Western nations, plus Switzerland, are expected to complete the draft IMF agreement at their meeting Tuesday.

It is then expected to be formally approved by the IMF's Interim Committee in Washington. That meeting had been scheduled for April but was brought forward to Feb.

The Group of Ten nations include the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Japan, Canada, Belgium, and Italy.

Argentina, once bankers' dream, changes into bankers' nightmare

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — In 1976, Argentina was a banker's dream, a country with a low foreign debt and a treasury full of dollars. A new government was promising stability and an open door for foreign investors — and smiling bankers were rushing in, their attache cases crammed with cash.

Now, nearly seven years later, the smiles are grimaces and the bankers' hands are no longer full of dollars; they are stretched out in the classic attitude of someone pleading for a few coins.

Argentina is the latest of the world's economic basket cases, the newest candidate for the massive default that could shatter the world's financial system.

Argentina owes $45 billion, an astounding 543 percent increase since 1976. From its once-comfortable holdings of $8 billion to $10 billion in foreign reserves, it now has virtually none; even its gold reserves are mortgaged.

If Argentina's 27.9 million people were asked to pay their per-capita share of the debt, each would have to put up $1,612, more than the estimated per-capita income of $1,500 a year.

BANKERS ONCE talked of a 15 percent return on their investments here, but now they have to lend Argentina the money it needs to pay the interest on previous loans.

Argentina's situation has not drawn the attention that was paid to Brazil and Mexico, which neared default last year and became the subjects of massive emergency measures by world banks and the International Monetary Fund. But the situation here may be as dangerous, perhaps more so, because Argentina does not have the resources of Mexico with its huge oil reserves nor the political stability and solid industrial base of Brazil.

"There is a real concern about Argentina's ability to pay," said a diplomatic economist who asked not to be identified to avoid problems with the government here. "I want so badly to say that the chances of default are remote; they have always paid before. But they have never been in so much trouble. There is serious danger of default."

Actually, Argentina is already in default. It is at least $2.8 billion in arrears and has not made even an interest payment since September.

IN ADDITION, Argentina is behind on repayment of hundreds of millions of dollars in government-guaranteed loans from the U.S. Agency for International Development and in loans from the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

Traditionally, a non-industrial country like Argentina pays its debts with the hard currency, such as dollars, that it earns with its exports. But in 1981 Argentina spent more on imports than it earned from its exports, and in 1982 the trade surplus was only $2.1 billion. For this year, they expect a surplus of no more than $3 billion.

The same Band-Aid measures used to keep Brazil and Mexico from toppling into default are being arranged for Argentina, and most experts feel that a collapse can be avoided for now.

A bridge loan of $1.5 billion has just been approved and other short-term arrangements are being worked out. The IMF is negotiating a $2.1 billion standby credit and in May the major lenders will try to arrange a rescheduling of $11 billion due this year so they can be paid back over a longer period.

How did Argentina get into this plight?

"SIMPLY PUT," said a lending officer at a large American bank here, "it was a question of greed by the banks and greed by the government, with serious levels of corruption, mismanagement and political instability thrown in."

Until 1976, Argentina's borrowing was mainly related to trade, principally to finance the country's rich agricultural sector and a small but profitable industrial exporting sector. The country had a large trade surplus and debts were easily paid.

But with the advent of an ambitious military government in 1976, foreign bankers, overwhelmed by what one called a "lake of dollars" as the result of recycled income from oil-producing countries and from dollar-rich Europe, invaded Argentina. Suddenly banks that never had offices in Buenos Aires were operating full-service facilities.

"Banks wanted to get assets on their books regardless of risk," said an official of an American bank with one of the highest levels of debt-exposure. Banks put a lot of pressure on the Argentine government and businesses to borrow. We just threw money at them."

THE ARGENTINE government was eager for the money. The military decided that the best way to finance its growing fiscal deficit was with borrowed money. And with generals in power, the small and aging military force was updated and enlarged with billions of dollars worth of arms, all financed with borrowed money.

The process accelerated in 1978, after Argentina almost went to war with Chile, then exploded last year when Argentina tangled with Britain over the Falkland Islands.

So, from a once-solid and conservative base of relatively small loans anchored by Argentina's tested agricultural exports, the lending arrangements changed.

"Loans tied to either trade or capital development dropped over 60 percent, (and were) replaced by financial loans," another banker said.

While this was happening, a government program of overvaluing the Argentine peso against the dollar in an effort to combat inflation virtually destroyed the country's exporting ability.

In an effort to reverse this situation, the peso has been devalued again and again over the last year and a half. In mid-1980 the rate was 1,600 to the dollar; today it is 49,000 to the dollar.

BUT DEVALUATION was accompanied by intense inflation, which most experts say is running at 370 percent a year and going higher. This has led to a slight improvement in export earnings but at the expense of consumer buying power.

What's more, because of an indexing system that is tied to inflation, the government's fiscal deficit mushroomed, leading to increased demands for borrowing overseas to finance the shortfall.

Still, until mid-1982, after Argentine forces invaded the Falklands, there was no sense of alarm — in the government or in the world banking community.

But global economic problems have worsened; interest rates have fallen but not by very much. As a result, Argentina's debt increased from $12.3 billion in 1980 to the current level, and the repayment schedule has become a virtually intolerable burden.

Visit reveals vintage Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — Tramping through minefields. Firing a 105mm cannon after fussing with her hair. Shedding tears on the deck of a British warship.

It was all vintage Margaret Thatcher.

Brushing aside the misgivings of her Foreign Office, the British prime minister swept into the Falkland Islands last week for what she called a "personal pilgrimage" to the scene of her country's "famous victory" over Argentina.

The surprise five-day tour enraged Argentina and inadvertently touched off a currency crisis in Britain.

But the 1,800 British-descended residents of the Falklands gave her a reception befitting a conquering hero. President Reagan, in frank admiration, called her "the best man in England."

As it did during the 74-day war with Argentina that ended last June 14, the British press stood almost united behind Mrs. Thatcher.

She went on to compare the prime minister with such noted women from Britain's past as Queen Elizabeth I, Florence Nightingale, Emily Bronte and the fierce Queen Boadicea, who led a revolt against the Romans in the first century.

Even the liberal Guardian, a frequent Thatcher critic, allowed that the visit was "on the whole, good."

Mrs. Thatcher said she was determined to visit the 4,000-member British garrison on the Falklands — to "pay tribute to those who had liberated the islands" — and to talk with the islanders.

Stepping off the plane at Stanley airport after the 23-hour, 8,000-mile journey from London, she said: "It would be very strange if I didn't come to the Falklands, very strange indeed."

Because of fears of an Argentine retaliatory attack, there was no advance word of Mrs. Thatcher's trip and the islanders were visibly surprised when she appeared in their midst Jan. 8.

They poured from their houses as she made her way through the the capital to Government House, bouncing along the pot-holed streets in Civil Commissioner Sir Rex Hunt's old maroon London taxi cab.

When the motorcade stopped briefly, about 70 people gathered around to cheer and wave. Some wept as Mrs. Thatcher and her husband, Denis, stepped out to shake hands.

During her five days on the Falklands, Mrs. Thatcher spoke individually with at least half the islanders, aides said.

She assured them Britain was prepared to defend the islands "for a long, long time" and would continue to deflect Argentina's claims of sovereignty.

Whether addressing troops at Moody Brook Barracks, sailors aboard the destroyer HMS Antrim, or islanders in the Stanley town hall, Mrs. Thatcher's speeches bristled with patriotism.

In accepting the islanders' first Freedom of the Falklands award, she managed to use the word "British" six times in one sentence.

Recalling her own words in the House of Commons, she said her aim had been to "restore British sovereignty and British administration to the people of British stock, who were British, loyal British, and wished to remain British in the queen's islands."

Mrs. Thatcher mingled with troops in a style reminiscent of Britain's wartime leader Winston Churchill, tempered with feminity.

Argentineans incensed over Thatcher's visit

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The nation's military rulers felt a sting of salt in their wounds last week as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain roamed the islands they call the Malvinas.

The military regime called her surprise journey to the Falkland Islands an act of "provocation and arrogance."

Foreign Minister Juan Aguirre Lanari said in a note to the United Nations it "demonstrated a persistent will to humiliate my country."

Seven months have passed since Argentine troops surrendered to British forces in Stanley following 74 days of war in which the British listed 255 of their men killed and the Argentines 712.

The military junta's promise, after the June 14 surrender, to return government to civilians in 1984 has created a political carnival atmosphere that has relegated the war and its aftermath to a secondary plane for most Argentines.

But consequences of the war remain.

In defeat, the armed forces lost what little prestige they had left following six years of dictatorship that coincided with recession, hard times and hunger to this country of 28 million people.

Argentines, who had been led to believe by the official media they were winning the war, were rudely awakened by the capitulation. They heard stories of corruption and cowardice among officers from returning conscripts and this fed a growing antipathy toward the military.

"Basta de botas!" (Enough of the boots) reads grafitti on downtown walls. "Push them and they'll go," is another common slogan.

The generals have promised elections before year's end and the transfer of power by March 1984. But that is not soon enough for the civilian political parties and labor unions.

The unions brought the country to a halt with a general strike Dec. 6 and 10 days later the political parties gathered 100,000 people in the central Plaza de Mayo to demand an accelerated transition.

The defeat resulted in the ouster of the military president at the time of the war, Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, and his colleagues on the junta, Adm. Jorge Anaya and Gen. Basilio Lami Dozo. The junta that replaced them has assigned a panel of six retired officers the task of determining "political and strategic responsibility" for the war.

Many of the more than 5,000 young draftees who spent cold, wet, hungry months on the islands during the occupation are bitter.

"It makes you mad," said Luis Isinga, a 20-year-old Falklands veteran. Government officials promised the veterans help in finding work after discharge, but Luis said jobs at the post office or the state-run railroad never materialized.

"We put our lives on the line and now they can't find room for us," he said in an interview.

The government employs about 3 million people here.

Asphalt fallout still raining down

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Just as fallout from a nuclear explosion or an erupting volcano continues to descend upon the earth and its residences for many months afterward, the controversy over an asphalt plant that erupted from some county residents in late summer will continue its raining down in a public hearing here Tuesday.

The Texas Air Control Board has scheduled the public hearing to start at 6 p.m. in City Hall Council Chambers. Set up in the manner of a courtroom, the battle will put residents of Skyview Estates on one side and owners of Petroplex Land and Development, Co., on the other. Perched on the sidelines will be the TACB, which will provide some witnesses.

The rumblings began late last summer when some residents of Skyview Addition, a housing subdivision on large lots northeast of the city, learned of plans for the asphalt plant while discovering they were about to be annexed by the city. The subdivision is bounded on the east by County Road 1160 North and on the north by County Road 60, or the future Loop 250.

By the time they discovered plans for the plant, the facility already had been permitted by the Texas Air Control Board. The plant was put up across CR 1160 North and east of the subdivision.

Residents subsequently, and eventually through an attorney, requested the TACB hold a public hearing to consider an appeal of the permit exemption. The hearing was granted. It first was set for Dec. 7, but was postponed until this week.

Don Postell, staff attorney for the TACB, said the hearing won't be over quickly. "I would not be surprised to see it take several days to complete this hearing," he said.

Both sides will be presenting witnesses, as will the TACB. "We always put on at least our engineer who has reviewed the application. The hearing examiner will have the benefit of that review."

On the list for the TACB are John Haagensen, who is head of the Odessa TACB office, Wayne Davison, Cyril Durrenberger, Keith Zimmerman, Bruce Broberg, Charlie Sims, Neil Carmen, Joann Wiersema and Tom Porter.

The witness list for Petroplex includes Bill Cole, Russell Eiraimo, John Smith, Orrin Grangaard, John Malcom, Frank Engner, Ernie Harrell, Perry Marker and Charlie Sims.

Witnesses for the opposing, or Skyview residents, side will be Ken Waid, David Cabe, Randy Don Rogers, Ann Rhamy Johnson and Bill Stewart.

The hearing examiner, which in this case will be Ramon Dasch, acts as a judge, said Postell. He makes rulings on the evidence presented, prepares a report at the end of the hearing and then makes a recommendation to the nine-member civilian board.

According to Postell, there are three ways to go: affirm the permit, pull it or modify it.

The TACB board can adopt the hearing examiner's recommendation or draw up its own. Before the TACB board meets, both parties will be given a copy of the hearing examiner's recommendation, said Postell.

One or both parties can file exceptions and briefs. But additional witnesses and evidence will not be allowed at the session before the full TACB board. "They must get it all in at the hearing," the staff attorney added.

In September when the residents began shooting off clouds of steam in opposition to the plant, they had noted concern over dust and sulfur emissions and traffic from heavy trucks on CR 1160 North.

Haagensen had explained then the permit exemption to operate the plant had been given because the application met the clean air standards.

Once this hearing has concluded, it may not be the end of courtroom scenes for Petroplex Land and Development Co., Inc. Last Tuesday, Midland City Council decided to file suit against the firm for constructing the asphalt plant and putting it into operation in violation of city regulations.

In earlier council sessions, a representative of Petroplex Land and Development Co., Inc., had contended the TACB permit exemption had been granted and construction had been started before the city formally approved an annexation ordinance which included that tract of land.

In looking at the case, Postell noted that hearings of this type "happen all the time. I understand the people who are protesting. They're just using the rights given them."

Youths who like farming show stock

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midland County youth who fancy farm animals and work around the barnyard will exhibit their livestock and small animals in the 34th rendition of the Midland County Livestock Show today, Monday and Tuesday at the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 East.

The show will feature an estimated 250 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America members who will exhibit about 300 calves, lambs and swine in addition to goats, rabbits and chickens.

The show's main events, by times, will include:

—3 p.m. today: Judging of rabbits, chickens and goats by Gary Clevenger, the Martin County agricultural agent.

—8 a.m. Monday: Judging of lambs, swine and steers. Judges will be David "Peaberry" White, vocational-agriculture instructor at Fort Stockton, lambs; Leroy McDaniel, vocational agricultural instructor at Tahoka, swine, and Ronnie Woods, former Howard County agricultural extension agent, steers.

—5 p.m. Tuesday: Barbecue supper.

—6:30 p.m. Tuesday: Presentation of stock show awards.

—7 p.m. Tuesday: Auction of the top steers, lambs and swine. Auctioneer will be Tommy Marricle of Snyder and formerly of Midland.

"We've got real good quality in livestock," said Earnest Kiker, the Midland County agricultural agent. "We'll have a real excellent show."

This year's lineup will include about 160 lambs, 80 hogs and 60 calves.

"Overall," said Rusty Jones, president of the Midland County Livestock Association, "the total numbers of animals will be down." Last year's livestock tally was 362.

"The quality of the animals should be about what it always is: good quality," he said.

"Last year was an unusual year," noted Jones, who cited 1982's booming petroleum economy, which was reflected in the sale. "The economy was booming."

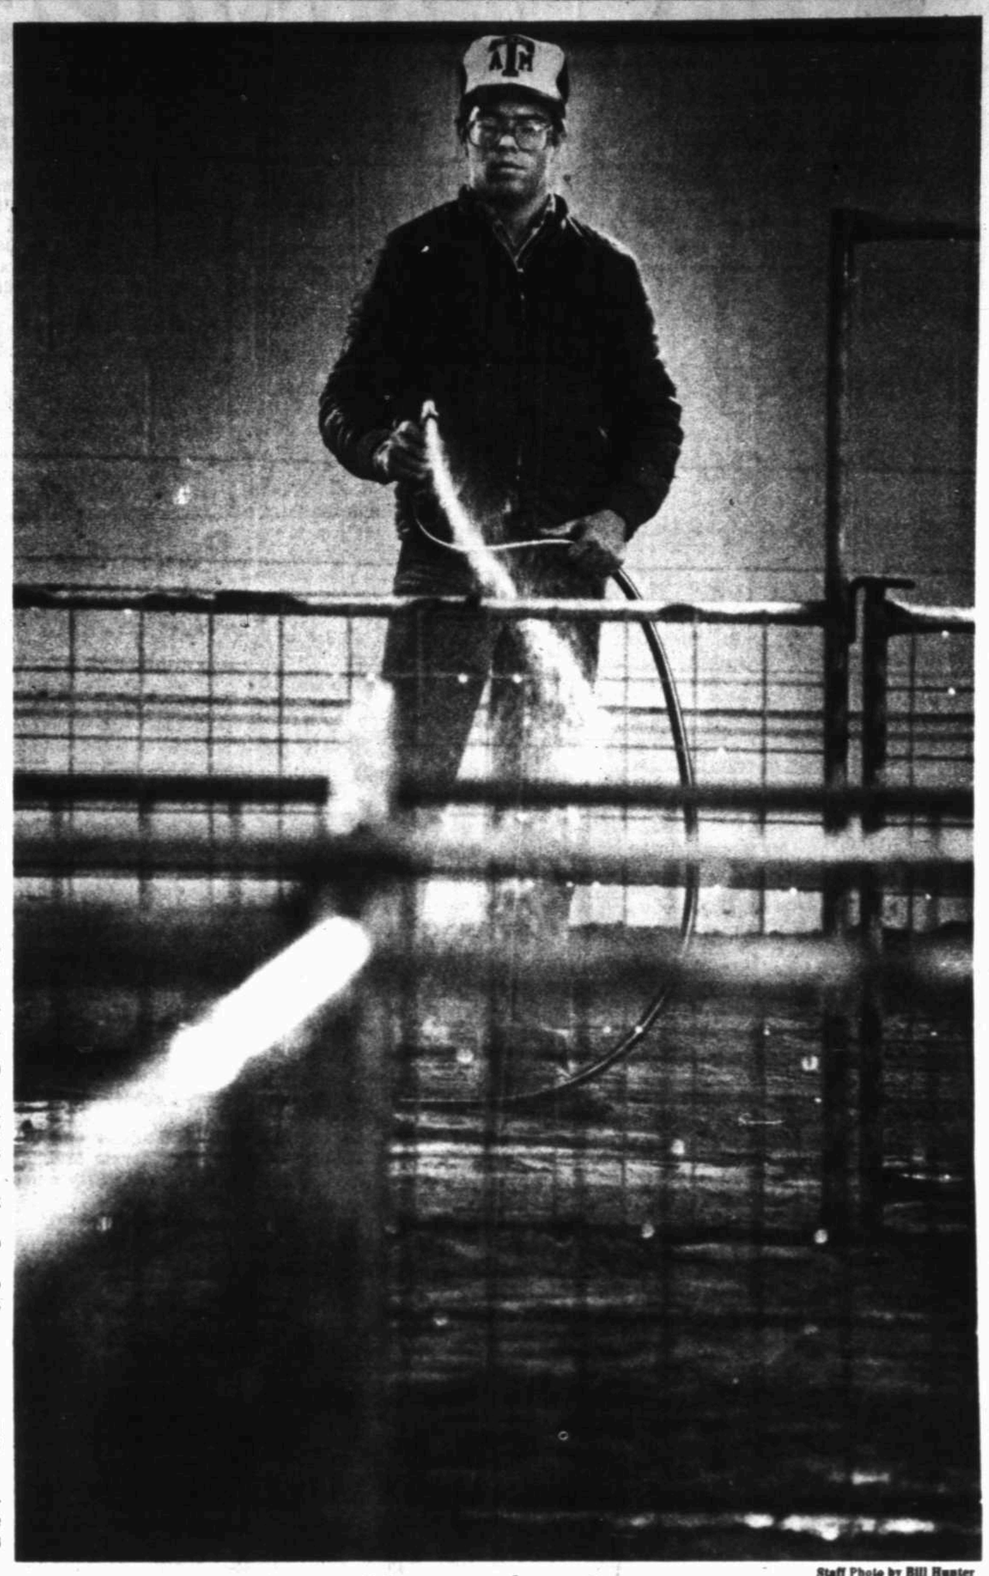

Last year's sale grossed the 4-H and FFA youths $94,297.70 in the sale of 20 steers, 46 hogs and and 56 lambs.

The top steer sale was $3 a pound for the grand champion calf, a 1,100-pound black Maine-Anjou calf shown by Paula McBryde.

High bid on a lamb was $14 a pound for Susan Hollums' champion medium-wool lamb. And the top price paid for a pig was $8.75 a pound for Scott Driver's grand champion hog.

Since last year's auction, the economy has tempered greatly.

"We're just expecting the economy to be reflected in the sale," Jones said. "Last year was a record. We can't do that every year, though we'd sure like to."

'Once made equal to man, woman becomes his superior'

Since the rise of Betsy Ross, Susan B. Anthony, Marilyn Monroe, Gloria Steinem and Sandra Day O'Connor, American women have made strides toward recognition. Within their ranks, many women have sought equality even though they really craved preferential treatment; there's nothing amiss about that. Everybody wants to be favored.

In their journey to equality, women have campaigned on the streets and in the boudoir.

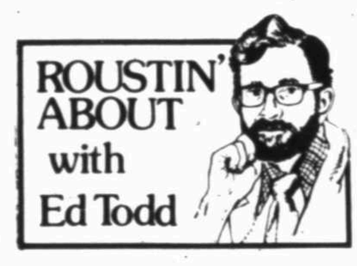

They have suffered, and they have conquered.

"Once made equal to man, woman becomes his superior," wrote the Greek philosopher Socrates, who is revered by women and men alike, by heathens and believers.

In their forward march to equality and into "man's world," some of the female persuasion have had the gall to suggest that they are superior to men. They, after all, manifest one of God's wonders: birth. They conceive, give birth and nurture. Man only impregnates and, historically, has provided the livelihood while the woman managed the household. Today, roles are changing somewhat, as more and more women work outside the home and develop careers.

And even some wives have been gullible enough to believe that their mates' "better-half" reference to them means that they, indeed, are better or best. They might forget that some men are natural cons who like to flatter and entertain. Men, too, have motives for been genteel; and women have motives for being utterly feminine and ladylike.

Indeed, a woman is an individual.

You just offend a proud woman, and you'll experience the Biblical wrath of a furious woman. They are not to be fooled with unless they — for whatever reason — want to be teased and touted. First, you might consider their motives. They're no fools; they're survivors.

Even suffragist Anthony found the answer to her question: "The only question to be settled now is: Are women persons?"

Certainly. But you begin to wonder what sort of a person some women, teen-agers and little darlings think they are when they fall victim to boardwalk manipulations. They'll dress up or dress down for favors while they're showing their wares and talents in beauty contests. Sometimes, you'd think judges thought they were rating livestock by the way they examine the hindquarter and brisket areas.

Of course, there's a motive behind such revealing promenading: recognition, fame and forture. And there's peer, parental and social pressure.

But girls aren't the only objects of gawking and grand expectations. See the little and big boys suited out for such sporting events as football, baseball and soccer? They, as well, can be victims of pressure and may find that their self-esteem is wounded just because of society's sometimes flaky values and unrealistic expectations.

Those unfortunate women who equate feminity and sex appeal to their bust and buns often are willing victims of such frivolous events as wet T-shirt and mud-wallowing contests. Just because of fashion, some dear girls and women torture their bodies with those insufferably tight clothes, particularly blue jeans. They must have motive.

Rumor has it that occasionally a woman will offer a wink, a come hither, and her body as a one-stand sex object to a macho cop if he'd forget about writing a ticket or hauling her in for drunken driving or shop lifting or working in a bawdy house. Shocking?

Ethics aside, women do have a way of influencing men.

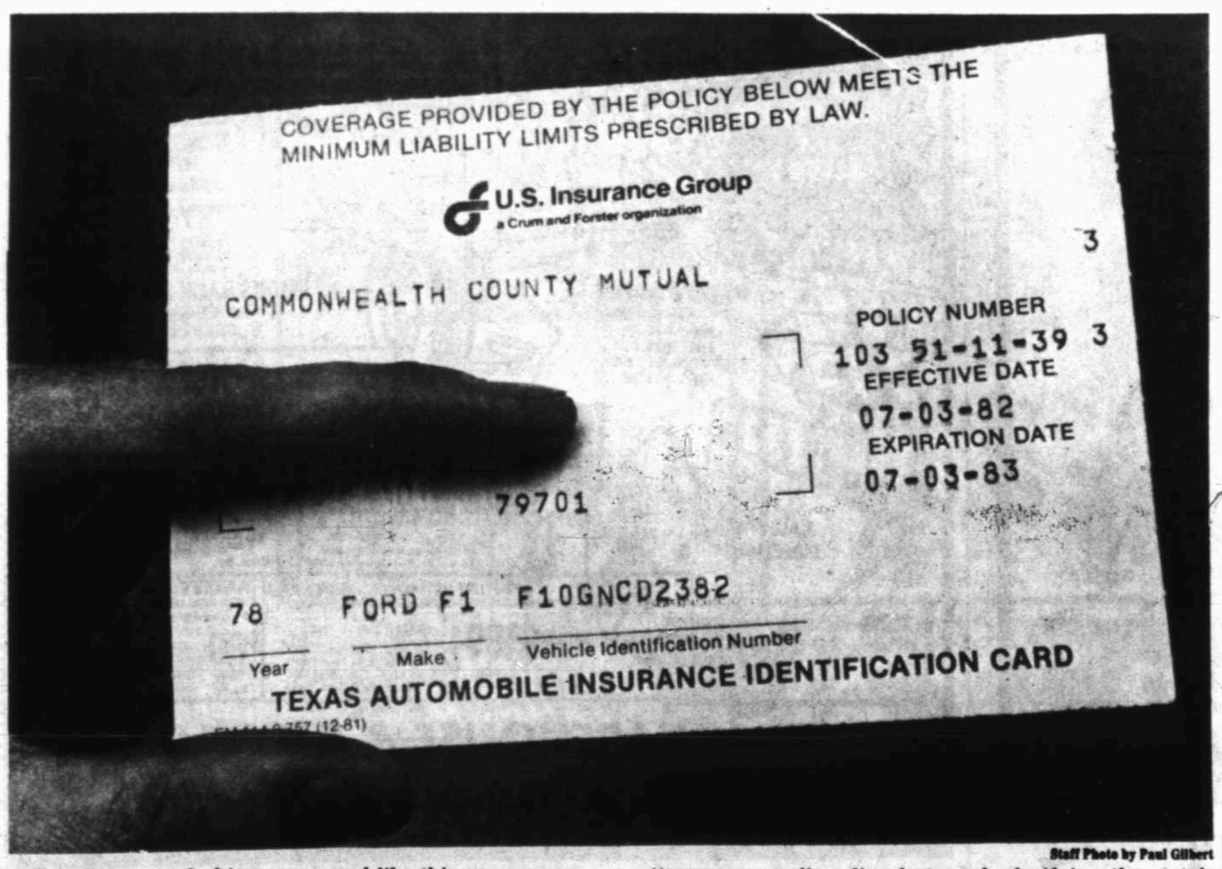

Now, women shouldn't think that society is victimizing them or that men just think they are wham-bam objects; some men probably think some women think that they are mere objects for their entertainment and means for their livelihood and prestige.

How women and men develop in large measure depends on the code by which they live and on whom or what they depend for their sustenance: themselves, God, someone else, society, gold and diamonds or stocks. Development and character are complex things.

Womanhood and equality?

"The only way women could have equal rights nowadays would be to surrender some," wrote Burton Hillis.

Beautiful Marilyn Monroe, America's 1950s Helen of Troy, had an interesting slant on being a woman: "I don't mind living in a man's world as long as I can be a woman in it."

Carrying a proof of insurance card like this one can save Texas motorists a ticket. But not having one will no longer result in fines, as was sometimes the case prior to a state attorney general's ruling last week clarifying the state's year-old financial responsibility law.

White's ruling clarifies year-old insurance law

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

While Texas motorists are still required to abide by the state's financial responsibility law, they can't be fined for not being able to show proof of compliance when asked for it by police.

That's the sum and substance of what Attorney General Mark White said in last week's ruling that attempts to clarify the year-old statute, the wording of which has led to confusion on the part of the public and the judicial system alike.

The law requires motorists to maintain minimum liability coverage and allows police to issue tickets when drivers can't produce evidence they're covered by insurance or other types of financial responsibility.

Apparent ambiguity in the law, however, has resulted in police officers issuing citations for "failure to produce proof of financial responsibility," thus leading judges and even some insured motorists to conclude that not carrying an insurance card or policy with them is a separate and distinct offense — something the law never intended, according to Jim Templeton of the DPS Safety Responsibility office in Austin.

"Only a very small percentage of the courts really ever did that, though," said Templeton. "And the ones that did do it have since ceased.

"The courts are really not the main problem. It's people who are covered by insurance getting a ticket 'cause they don't have their card with them and then automatically paying the fine.

"They don't even go to court. They don't show the court that they've got insurance. They sit down, mail the check in — which is a guilty plea — and the court doesn't know any better. It's a final conviction.

"Of course, that's not what the law was intended to do. If you don't carry your card, you're gonna get a ticket. But you can have the charge dismissed by showing the court you're actually covered. That's what the statute says and the attorney general's opinion upholds that."

If for some reason a particular court doesn't dismiss the charge, Templeton added, the motorist's recourse is an appeal to the next highest court.

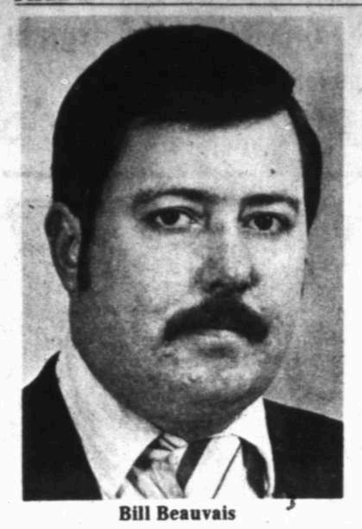

Commenting on local problems with the insurance law, Midland Assistant City Attorney Robin Smith said:

"When we originally started, I think some of the tickets were being written for failure to show proof. But after reviewing the law, we corrected that. It's been several months back."

Regardless of past driving record, the law calls for automatic suspension of driver's licenses on conviction of not maintaining financial responsibility — even if it's the only conviction a person has ever had.

Templeton and Smith agree that an analogy can be drawn between not carrying proof of insurance and not being able to produce a driver's license.

While both should be carried at all times to save the hassle and expense of a possible court appearance, judges over the years have normally dismissed cases where motorists have been able to demonstrate that they had a valid driver's license at the time the citation was issued.

Newspaper names ad manager

William M. "Bill" Beauvais, a member of The Midland Reporter-Telegram advertising staff for almost nine years and assistant retail advertising manager for the past year, has been named retail advertising manager.

The appointment, effective immediately, was announced by Dick Hardin, advertising director. As retail manager, Beauvais will supervise the newspaper's staff of nine retail account executives.

Said Hardin, "We are pleased that we had someone of Bill's ability within The Reporter-Telegram to fill this position which is vital not only to the newspaper but to the retail business community we serve."

A native of Hobbs, N.M., Beauvais attended Odessa Junior College, receiving an associate business degree, and Texas Tech University where he majored in advertising, graduating with a BBA degree in 1970.

Prior to joining The Reporter-Telegram staff in April of 1974, he was employed in the advertising departments of The Odessa American and the Kilgore News-Herald.

Weather seminars scheduled

In conjunction with several area Civil Defense offices, officials from the National Weather Service in Midland will conduct severe weather spotter training seminars in cities throughout West Texas and eastern New Mexico during February and March.

Jim Yates, meteorologist in charge of the seminars, said the training will cover several topics, including: the NWS's Severe Weather Warning System, identifying tornadoes and other severe weather, procedures for reporting severe weather, safety tips and question-and-answer discussions.

"While the training is aimed primarily at spotters, it should be of interest and value to the general public as well," Yates said.

The training is free, and will be held in various cities on the following dates:

—Wednesday, Feb. 2, at 2 p.m. in the city hall council room in Monahans.

—Monday, Feb. 14, at 2 p.m. in city hall council chambers, Northeast First and Logsdon, in Andrews.

—Wednesday, Feb. 16, at 3 p.m. in the Chamber of Commerce office, 307 N. Houston, in Lamesa.

> "While the training is aimed primarily at spotters, it should be of interest and value to the general public as well."

—Wednesday, Feb. 23, at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. in the city hall council chambers, 411 W. Eighth St., in Odessa.

—Monday, Feb. 28, at 10 a.m., 2 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. in Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at Midland College, 3600 N. Garfield St., in Midland.

—Wednesday, March 16, at 2 p.m. and 6 p.m. in Dora Roberts Community Center on Wipkey Drive in Big Spring.

—Monday, March 21, at 7 p.m. in the park building on 10th Street in Rankin.

—Thursday, March 24, at 9 a.m. and 1:15 p.m. at city hall, 300 N. Turner, in Hobbs, N.M.

HRC moves to new quarters

Volunteers and board members pitched in Saturday to relocate Midland's Human Relations Council office from 218 W. Illinois Ave. to a 500-square-foot space at 410 N. Weatherford St.

Dan O'Grady, HRC president, said HRC staff will hold regular office hours, from 8 a.m. to noon and from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., beginning Monday.

O'Grady said the new office won't be outfitted with phone service until Jan. 24. He said a staff person will remain at the 218 W. Illinois Ave. office for a week to field phone calls and refer inquiries to the new location.

He said the office will retain its phone number despite the move.

O'Grady said the new office was offered for "minimal" rent by Eddie Schoolcraft, owner of Basin Electric Co. "It's probably the nicest office space that we've ever received," O'Grady said.

The council was forced to vacate its former office after Midland County reclaimed the space.

The HRC is a non-profit organization formed in 1970 to promote communication and cooperation among Midland County's racial and ethnic groups.

Pulitzer vacates husband's house

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Party dresses, jewelry boxes, a set of dishes, a couch and various other keepsakes were loaded into a moving van as Roxanne Pulitzer left the house she shared while married to publishing heir Peter Pulitzer.

Mrs. Pulitzer's belongings were taken a short distance from the $1.5 million lakeside house to a modest Palm Beach apartment Friday. Circuit Judge Carl Harper had given her until 6 p.m. Friday to get out of the house in a divorce decree and property settlement that heavily favored Pulitzer.

Mrs. Pulitzer and her lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, refused to say much about her new home.

"Let's just say it won't be as large a place," Mitchelson said.

At the larger house on Friday night, servants prepared for the return of Pulitzer and the couple's twin 5-year-old sons.

"She has moved out," governess Estelle Godbout said late Friday. "I'm so very happy to again be taking care of my boys."

Mrs. Pulitzer, 31, had been ordered to leave by Monday, but Harper extended the deadline to Friday when her attorneys said she hadn't found a suitable home.

Pilot dies after parachuting from plane

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — A 41-year-old Air National Guard pilot died Saturday after he was forced to parachute from his disabled A-7D jet fighter into the Atlantic.

The victim was identified as Maj. John Johnson Jr. of Columbia, a 20-year veteran of the Air National Guard.

Lt. Fred Monk of the guard's public affairs office at McEntire Air Base near Columbia said Johnson died a few hours after he was plucked from 50-degree water 15 miles south of Myrtle Beach.

Monk said Johnson was on an air combat tactics training mission when his plane developed engine trouble. He was flying with three other aircraft, whose pilots told officials that he had ejected at about 11,000 feet.

"The cause of the accident is not known and a board of officers has been appointed to investigate," Monk said.

Johnson was picked up about an hour after he ejected by a helicopter from the 39th Aerospace Recovery Wing at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base.

South Texas officials band together

LAREDO (AP) — A gathering of South Texas city and county officials formally created a new political coalition Saturday that they hope will bring influence and industry to what they claim is an often overlooked region.

The officials from 13 counties named their body the Southwest Texas-Border Region Association, and elected its founder as president.

The group also voted on what it said would be the first of many endorsements for state posts.

"There are 2,000 appointed positions in this state and this area gets 3 percent of them," said coalition president Jerry White. "The reason we have no influence is because we compete on an individual basis while metropolitan areas speak in one voice."

White, Uvalde County judge, said the stricken South Texas border region was in desperate need of industrial development and new sources of water.

Webb County Commissioner J.R. Esparza said that by banding together, leaders in Austin and Washington will be forced to listen more carefully to the pleas of the region.

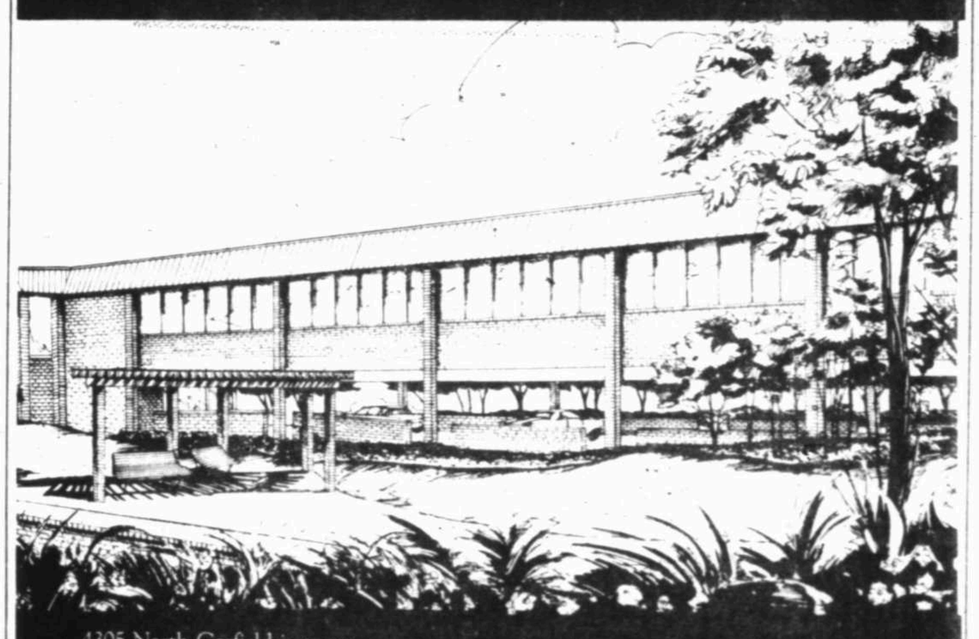

"We're going to have a lot of political clout," Esparza said. "This is one of a lot of things that are happening."

The association Saturday endorsed Webb County Judge C.Y. Benavides for the Texas Industrial Commission, State Rep. Arnold Gonzales of Corpus Christi for the post of director of the Texas Department of Community Affairs, and Esparza for the Governor's Committee of County Commissioners.

The association will continue its endorsements at its next meeting, scheduled for Jan. 29. White held one organizational meeting earlier this month.

Adult classes resume

Free Adult Basic Education (ABE) and English as a Second Language (ESL) classes resume Monday at Midland College.

Instruction is offered in reading, writing, English grammar, social studies, mathematics, science, high school equivalency preparation, English conversation and other courses.

The ABE Learning Center is open in the Occupational-Technical Building from 8 a.m. until 3 p.m.

"Many of these students are recent arrivals in the United States and have very little English language skills."

Mondays through Thursdays and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays on a "walk-in" basis. All instruction is based on individual needs.

Classes for ESL students are provided from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Mondays through Thursdays and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays.

The ABE program is designed to improve a person's ability to obtain employment, qualify for a job promotion and achieve a certificate of high school equivalency, thus becoming a more effective and productive citizen.

"We have a wide variety of students," said Bobbie Gideon, program director. "Some have recently dropped out of high school and need only a little encouragement and study to pass the GED examination. Others come to the center after years away from school and work quite hard to prepare for their GED exams."

Students currently taking ESL classes represent nine different nationalities and study on three different levels.

"Many of these students are recent arrivals in the United States and have very little English language skills. Others have been in this country for many years and want to continue to improve their English language skills," Mrs. Gideon pointed out.

ESL classes also are offered at Casa de Amigos from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Persons interested in enrolling in ABE or ESL courses should come to the ABE Learning Center in Room 132, Occupational-Technical Building on the MC campus. They may call 684-7851, extension 243, for more information.

JA plans '83 campaign kickoff

Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc., is launching its 1983 fund drive campaign with a kickoff scheduled for Thursday morning. Fund drive chairman R.Y. Walker, business manager of Arco Oil & Gas, quoted the operating fund goal at $100,000.

The drive is organized into divisions chaired by Jack Hauke, president of Texas Plastic Industries; Loyd Whitley, senior vice president of finance of Adobe Oil & Gas; Darryl Pounds, executive vice president of First City National Bank of Midland; Jack Mikel, vice president of The Ortloff Corporation; and John DeLong, manager of human resources for Gulf Exploration and Production.

Donations are tax deductible and are being received at Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc., 2311 Elizabeth Ave.

JA is a non-profit organization which teaches free enterprise to teenagers through operation of miniature companies and through classroom instruction.

Midland's JA ranks fourth in quality of the high school programs out of 164 JA areas nationwide.

First organized in 1919 in Springfield, Mass., JA came to Midland in 1962. Thirteen mini-companies with 10-30 members each and 50 freshman American History classes in school reach a combined membership of over 1,400.

A before-and-after survey of the mini-companies in Midland shows that knowledge of free enterprise and positive feelings about our business system improved from 40 percent before to 60 percent after on a multiple-choice format.

Utilities request connection

CLOVIS (AP) — A $77 million utility transmission interconnection proposed by Public Service Company of New Mexico and Southwestern Public Service Company would eliminate the need for additional generating plants, a PNM spokesman says.

Representatives of Public Service Company of New Mexico and Southwestern Public Service Company outlined the project last week to the Eastern Plains Council of Governments in Tucumcari.

The interconnection would allow transfer of excess electricity between the two companies and provide access to additional power-generating sources for both.

He said this would increase the reliability of both systems and offer each company's customers more economical sources of energy.

In the vicinity of Midland and Odessa there must be a hundred rubber-tired dirt-moving vehicles such as road graders, front-end loaders and tractors with blade attachments. Why was not some of this equipment rented or contracted to remove snow from at least one of the Midland Regional Airport's runways? — Bruce Pearson

ANSWER: Col. Wilson Banks says that, according to the National Weather Service, Midland's total annual snowfall averages 3.7 inches.

"With no more snow than this it has been our opinion that a costly investment in snow-removal equipment could not be justified. Some consideration could be given to contracting for this work if a local firm was willing to purchase the proper equipment and have it available for use at any time it might be needed. One local firm has agreed to look into this possibility and provide me with some cost figures. These will be forwarded to the city for consideration if and when they are received. If a plan is adopted, all parties that it benefits, such as airlines, general aviation and the city must be willing to share in the cost. In past years some airlines expressed a desire to help pay the cost of snow removal but others refused. The airlines would be the primary benefactors," Banks states.

"Some people are highly critical of our lack of a capability to remove snow and ice from our runways, taxiways and aircraft ramps and I believe a lot of the complaints stem from a lack of knowledge of all that it entails and the details must be considered.

"It would have taken a sizable fleet of equipment to remove the 8-10 inches of wet snow that accumulated on Runway 16R-34L over the New Year weekend and a considerable period of time. We had no operations on Saturday, Jan. 1. As soon as the thawing process began on Sunday, Jan. 2, we assembled a fleet of motor vehicles and drove them up and down the runway and adjoining taxiway many times to break up the snow and ice in order to hasten the melting process. By noon Sunday numerous privately owned aircrart were operating safely and the air carriers could have commenced operation at 4 p.m. had they not already cancelled most of their flights earlier in the day, the director continues.

"Having the proper equipment on hand and using it does not automatically solve the problem. Many airports in the so-called snowbelt area of the U.S. with lots of snow removal equipment are often out of operation for extended periods due to a heavy snow. Stapleton Airport at Denver is the most recent example that I can recall. Also, this week at Brainerd, Minn., an aircarrier landed and skidded off the runway into a snowbank resulting in the death of one passenger and severing the foot of another. From the preliminary information I have received on this accident the snowbank was apparently created by blading the runway.

"No more snow than we have can usually be cleared by nature by the time it could be cleared by the use of snow removal equipment. Naturally, we deeply regret any schedule delays or flight cancellations by the airlines and the problems. Unfortunately, our air transportation system does not work to perfection at all times, but it is the best in the world. Some delays and flight cancellations will be encountered from time to time at most airports due to weather and, as mentioned, having the proper and right amount of equipment on hand does not necessarily resolve the problem.

"Safety of the traveling public and aircraft crews must always be our primary concern and will never be compromised simply to stifle some complaints."

When I took out a life insurance policy recently, I was 27 years old. Why did my policy list my age as 28? — G.L.

ANSWER: A policyholder's age is usually based on his nearest birthday, not necessarily his last one. If your next birthday was less than six months away when you took out your policy, your age for insurance purposes was 28, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

Commissioner nominated

DALLAS (AP) — The comissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's western region has been nominated to head the agency's 13-state southern district.

The nomination of Edward O'Connor of San Pedro, Calif., is expected to be approved by the Justice Department later this month, INS officials said Friday.

He was among several people considered for the position, vacated Nov. 29 by the retirement of Durward E. Powell, who had been southern region commissioner since August 1978.

David Dean won't deny possibility of future candidacy

AUSTIN (AP) — Outgoing Secretary of State David Dean says he "won't be gone forever," but has put his plans to run for statewide office on hold for a while.

"Had Gov. (Bill) Clements been re-elected, it probably would have been a certainty that I would have made a statewide race within four to eight years, if not sooner," Dean said in an interview. "I can't say that the fire has been extinguished, but I can't say that I have any set plans right now."

Appointed by Clements as secretary of state in October 1981, Dean, 35, will pack up his office Tuesday, when longtime political foe Mark White is sworn in as governor.

For now, Dean is passing out resumes, looking for a law firm slot in either Dallas or in Austin, where he lives with his wife, Kathie, and their 5-year-old daughter. He expects to be back at the Capitol frequently to push for the changes he has recommended in the Secretary of State's Office.

He has never held elected office. But Dean has had a profound effect on the operation of the highest appointive office in the state as well as on the election system that chooses most of his colleagues.

Dean began as one of Democratic Gov. Dolph Briscoe's top aides, serving as the governor's general counsel. But when former Attorney General John Hill defeated Briscoe in the 1978 Democratic primary, Dean defected to the Republican party.

At the time it was a good move for the tall, handsome Dallas native. He continued as general counsel under Clements, Texas' first Republican governor since Reconstruction, and then was appointed secretary of state when George Strake stepped down to run for lieutenant governor.

He has only held the job for a little over a year, and many have disagreed with some of what he has done, but Dean has been one of the most active secretaries of state in recent history.

He reorganized the office, took on the massive job of compiling election results, supervised a detailed analysis of voting patterns, established a vote fraud task force, and started a project that will use statistics on corporation filings as an economic indicator.

He also began issuing secretary of state opinions on election laws — an authority similar to the attorney general's to issue opinions on all laws. Until Dean, no secretary of state had done it.

Former Attorney General White has designated John Fainter, who was his top assistant, as secretary of state. Dean pointedly refused to say anything about White's impending ascension into the state's highest office, though for the past year, Dean has taken full advantage of any opportunity to criticize White, and vice versa.

Dean said he "identifies" with the Republican party and does not regret changing allegiance.

Exercise classes continue

Midland Parks and Recreation Department is continuing its daytime exercise class for women. And in preparation for summer, the department is asking persons to become qualified as lifeguards.

The fitness exercise program for women meets from 1:30 to 3 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and 9 to 10:30 a.m. Friday in the city gymnasium, 300 Baldwin St.

The program teaches various ways of maintaining physical fitness in a sensible and correct way with a qualified instructor. Exercises include stretching, walking, jogging, dancercise, aerobics and light resistance. The exercises are done to music. Special attention is given to the beginner and the mature woman.

Fee is $11 for the course that ends April 29.

The department is looking for men and women over the age of 15 who are qualified to be lifeguards this summer. Men and women over 15 are being urged to take a lifesaving course to be able to work as a lifeguard. Salary will range from $4.89 to $5.13 per hour.

After receiving advanced lifesaving certification, persons who are 17 years or older are eligible to continue with a water safety instructor (WSI) course which would enable them to teach for the city during the summer swim program. The starting salary will be $5.13 per hour.

A spokesman for the department pointed out there has been a shortage of qualified personnel in the aquatics department for the past several years. Since the city has upgraded the salaries and is offering courses for qualifying, all vacancies should be filled this summer, the spokesman said.

Students at college are urged to take an advanced lifesaving class through their school or agencies. This would prepare them to take the WSI course when they come back to Midland for the summer.

To get the lifesaving certification, a person must be able to swim 250 yards using the crawl, sidestroke, breaststroke, backstroke or combination; perform a standing front dive from the side of the pool; and tread water for 30 seconds.

To become a water safety instructor, the person must have a current advanced lifesaving certificate and be able to perform at the swimmer's level.

For more information on any of the city course offerings, call the parks and recreation department, 683-4281, extension 316.

Payment approved

AUSTIN (AP) — In one of his final actions, Gov. Bill Clements has agreed to pay $1.6 million to the federal government to settle questions about job programs managed by Clements and his predecessor, Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

Clements' executive assistant, Hilary Doran, said Friday the U.S. Department of Labor had questioned $20 million in expenditures in programs under the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act over the past decade, but state officials had proved all but $4.1 million had been spent correctly.

"I'm not saying it was fraud. It was inadvertently careless bookkeeping," Doran said.

He said the governor had approved a $1.6 million compromise payment to settle the question.

education in brief

Two drilling courses to be offered

ODESSA — The Petroleum Extension Service of the University of Texas at Austin will conduct two courses beginning at the end of January and in early February.

A one-week Elementary Drilling Course, which begins Jan. 31, is for personnel not directly involved in drilling operations, but who need to know basic drilling principles and nomenclature such as secretaries, clerks, auditors, bookkeepers, tax personnel, insurance personnel, sales people and other interested personnel.

The course will meet from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. each day with the last day ending at 11 a.m. Fee for the course is $250 with all books and materials being furnished.

A four-week Drilling Technology Course, beginning Feb. 7, is designed to offer up-to-date practical information rather than theory. The student should have a minimum of one year's experience in the industry or first attend the Elementary Drilling Course.

The more advanced course is an excellent orientation, contains the latest information on equipment and methods and prepares personnel for advancement. It is not necessary to attend all four weeks if not needed or wanted by the student or company. A company may choose the part of the school deemed most beneficial to its employees.

The course will meet from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. each day. Fee for the course is $700 will all books and materials being furnished.

For more information or to register, contact the Odessa Training Center at (915) 337-8042.

Emerson Elementary PTA to meet

The Emerson Elementary School PTA will meet at 7 p.m. Feb. 1, in the Emerson cafeteria.

Second graders from the school will provide the entertaiment.

Host families sought for students

Host families are being sought for 25 high school students from Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Spain, France, Italy, Colombia, Brazil, Canada and Japan for the 1983-84 school year in a program sponsored by the American Intercultural Student Exchange.

The students, ages 15-17, will arrive in the United States in August, attend the local high school and return to their home countries in late June 1984. All speak fluent English, have been screened by their school representatives and will have spending money and medical insurance.

AISE also is seeking American high school students, ages 15-17, who would like to spend a year of school in Sweden, Norway, Finland, Germany, Spain or France, or participate in a five-week host family stay in Sweden, Norway, Finland, Spain or Colombia.

Host families with small children are welcome to participate in the program and host families may deduct $50 per month for income tax purposes.

For more information, contact Jo Parker, 1908 LaSalle, Amarillo, Texas 79106, or call (806) 353-4837.

Funds available to offset heating bills for residents

Some West Texans may be eligible for help in paying their winter heating bills under a program offered through the Texas Department of Human Resources.

Marlin W. Johnston, department commissioner, recently announced that financial assistance toward paying utility bills is available for households that in January 1983 received food stamps, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Supplemental Security Income or needs-tested Veterans Administration benefits.

Veterans who may be eligible for the program include those who receive payments under sections 415, 521, 541 or 542 of Title 38 of the U.S. Code. They also may qualify under section 306 of the Veterans and Survivors Pension Improvement Act of 1978.

Eligibility is limited by gross income. Aid is available for one-person households earning a gross income less than $339.49 per month. The monthly gross income limit expands to $546.49 for two-person households, $749.49 for three-person homes, $926.49 for four-person homes, $1,092.49 for five-person households and $1,277.49 for six-person homes.

Applicants can be eligible whether they live in privately owned or rental housing. Households are eligible even if they pay only a portion of home energy costs and even if the cost of utilities is included in the rent payment.

Johnston said application forms are mailed to persons who already receive food stamps, AFDC and SSI. Households receiving needs-tested veterans benefits should request an application from the DHR.

Anyone who thinks they may be eligible to apply and has not received an application should contact the DHR at 683-5411.

Classes resume at MC Monday

Classes start and late registration begins Monday when Midland College opens its spring semester. More than 2,500 signed up for credit classes during the two days of registration Wednesday and Thursday, a substantial increase over the same period last year.

"There are a number of courses which can take additional students, in both daytime and nighttime sections," said Dr. Don Hunt, vice president for instruction. "Of course, some of the classes have closed due to limits on space or lab equipment."

Persons who want to enroll as fulltime students, taking as many as five courses, must late register by Jan. 24. Part-time students may register for as many as three courses until Feb. 1.

"Due to the amount of subject matter to be covered, we encourage students to register as quickly as possible," Hunt said.

Those who wish to register should come to the Office of Student Services in the administration building between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday or 8 a.m. to 5 p.m Friday.

For more information about class opening, call 684-7851, extension 166.

Hawaiian volcano silent

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Kilauea Volcano fell silent Saturday after an early-morning eruption that saw glowing lava curtains shoot up to 120 feet along a 450-foot vent.

"We're still watching," said Jane Buchanan-Banks, spokeswoman for the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaii Volcanoes National Park Observatory.

She said a harmonic tremor, indicating underground movement of magma, was continuing at a low level.

"The tremor has never died," she said. "Even when it is at a low level, there could be a resurgence of activity."

The fountaining was the first sign of major activity on the volcano since Jan. 11. Kilauea has been erupting sporadically since Jan. 3.

Saturday's eruption, located in an area that had been active earlier in the week, began at 3:15 a.m.

Big Spring conference outlook on future of Texas agriculture

By EARNEST C. KIKER
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Major issues facing Texas agriculture will be addressed during the 1983 Agricultural Outlook and Market Strategies Conference in Big Spring Jan. 19, beginning at 8:30 a.m. The conference is set for the Tumbleweed Room in the Student Union Building on the Howard College campus.

Prospects for economic recovery and the 1983 legislative implications will be discussed. Important policy decisions, such as farm program participation, will also be outlined and decision criteria presented.

Following a 9 a.m. registration and a welcome by Howard County Judge Milton Kirby participants are scheduled to hear a presentation entitled "U.S. Economic Outlook and Implications for Agriculture," delivered by Sen. John Tower. Following a break House member Charles Stenholm will speak on the attitude in Washington concerning the agricultural trade outlook.

Three concurrent sessions are set to commence at 11 a.m. They include beef, "Sources and Rations for Economical Feed," chaired by David Barr, Howard County commissioner and rancher, assisted by Dr. Dennis Herd, Extension beef cattle specialist in nutrition; cotton, "Marketing Cotton," chaired by E.D. Holcomb, Martin County Field Crops Committee chairman, assisted by Dr. Carl Anderson, Extension economist in cotton marketing, and "Creating Market Orders" for pecans, chaired by Sylvestia Sims, Ector County pecan committee advisor, assisted by Dr. William Black, Extension economist in marketing and policy.

Following a "Dutch Treat" lunch at noon the conference will resume with a presentation by Dr. Calvin Brint, owner of Brints Cotton Co., Lubbock. Brint's presentation will be "Marketing Tools to Merchandise Our Area Agriculture Commodity Products." The conference is scheduled to adjourn at 1:45 p.m., under the direction of conference general chairman James Lee, chairman of the Howard County Program Building Committee.

It will be time to set out garden transplants before you know it. Although nurserymen try to stock representative varieties of vegetables and flowers during the spring garden rush, it's just not possible for even the largest nursery to have every variety. For this reason, you may want to start some of your own transplants.

The 1983 mail order nursery catalogs are arriving, so view them and make purchases with a purpose. Inexperienced gardeners or those unfamiliar with the West Texas climate should not waste money on seeds that have no chance of coming to bloom or fruit. Experienced gardeners may want to try new and different varieties of the old standards. Restraint is not easy when you look at page after page of pure horticultural perfection, but remember that ordering seed is the easy part.

Sow seed for your transplants at the proper time. Some transplants such as cabbage, broccoli, lettuce, green onions and spinach can be set in the garden four to five weeks before the last frost. Now is the time to sow the seeds of these early transplants. Use a soiless or commercial potting mix available at nurseries. Expandable peat pellets also work well. Germination temperatures should be near 75 degrees during the day and 65-70 degrees during the night.

Seeds can be started in milk cartons, cake pans, flower pots or almost any container that you are willing to punch holes in for drainage. Thoroughly moisten the planting medium and evenly space the seed on top. Cover lightly, re-water and then enclose the container in a polyethlene bag. Keep the plastic-covered container out of direct sunlight or it will overheat.

When seeds begin to sprout, gradually remove the bag over a period of several days. This lessens shock. You'll have to water more often when the poly bag is removed.

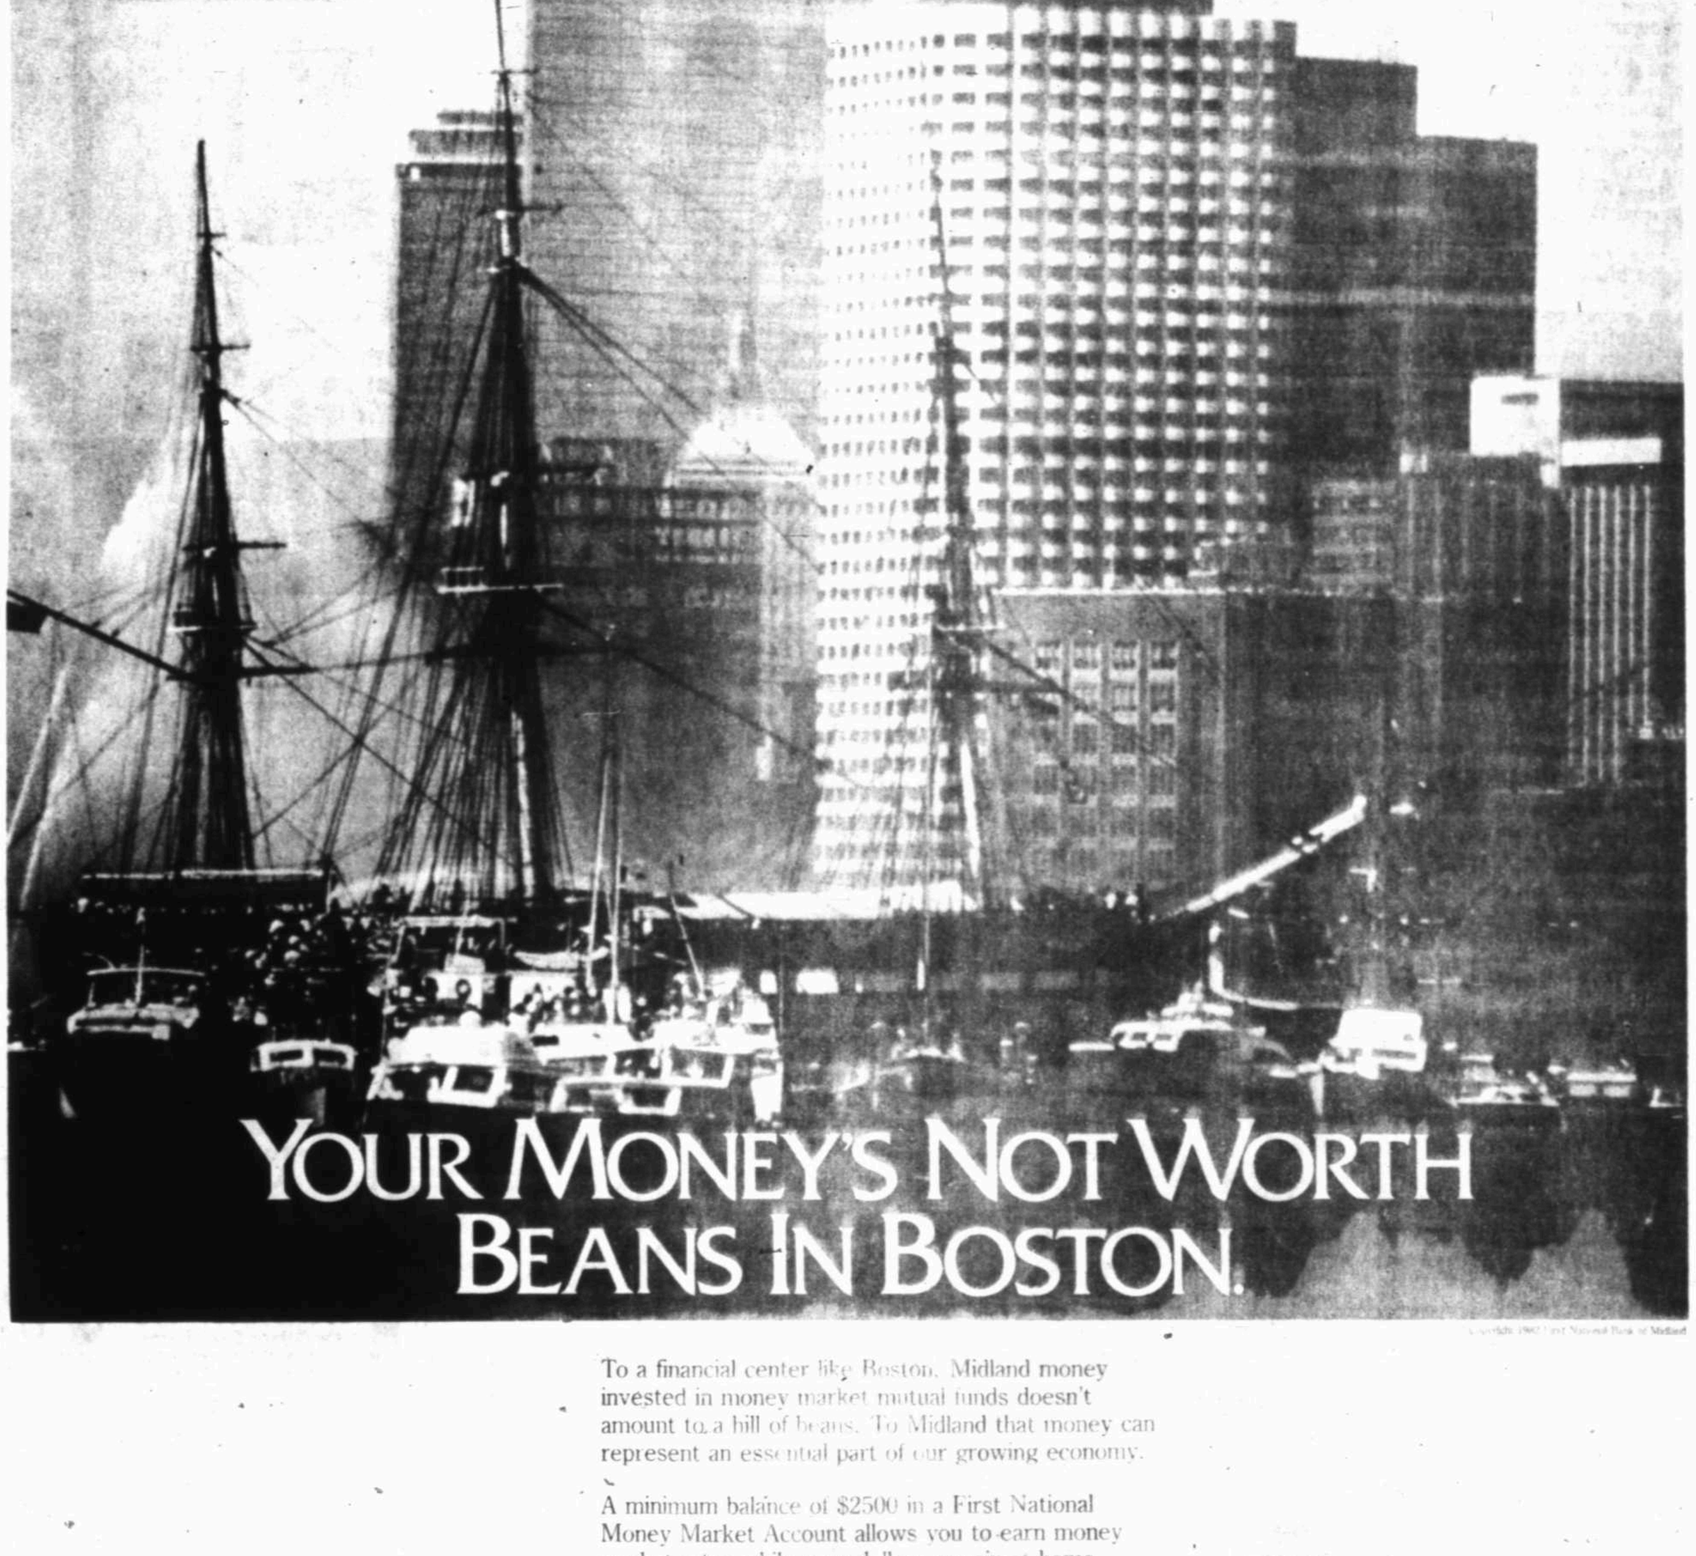

Most would-be transplant growers make two big mistakes. They start seed too early and they provide insufficient light for the developing seedlings. Both maladies allow transplants to become spindly, weak and yellow. Fluorescent grow lights help overcome the second problem. They must be within four inches of newly developing seedling leaves to be of much benefit.

In mid-February sow tomato, eggplant, pepper and flower seeds. You may want to try these tomato varieties in comparison plantings with your usual ones: Spring Giant, Early Girl, Park's Whopper, Floramerica, Big Set, Super Fantastic and Quick Pick. The results may be very enlightening.

Sowing small-seeded annuals directly in the bed usually ends in failure and frustration. For this reason, start your own transplants of alyssum, moss rose, fibrous rooted begonia, petunia, cockscomb, impatiens and coleus. Move your transplants to their final place when they are of adequate size (usually three to five leaves) and conditions are suitable for plant growth outdoors.

'Legal,' 'illegal' may make difference now in schools

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

In the past, there has been no differentiation between legal and illegal alien students who enroll in the Midland Independent School District. A Senate bill expected to be brought before the state Legislature which would provide $500 of state funds for each newly-enrolled student whose parents are aliens may change that.

The approval of the bill also could provide needed clarification of some legalese that seems to be hazy even to those in the Texas Education Agency. It also could cause more hassles during initial enrollment for the student and the parent, as well as for school administrators.

The word "alien," defined by Webster's as "a foreign-born resident who is not naturalized," is confusing enough when the terms "legal" and "illegal" are added. Now it seems that those terms are being phased out by certain agencies.

According to Payton Cook, MISD director of pupil and community services, "They used to use the word 'illegal' but now the Department of Education in Texas is using the word 'undocumented.' "

"THE ONLY difference between a legal and an illegal alien is that a legally admitted alien is someone that comes into the country with some kind of documentation from the federal immigration saying that they could come in," explained Dr. W.N. Kirby, TEA deputy commisioner for finance and program administration in Austin. "But there are 14 different kinds of paper and documents that could get people into the country. And that presents the real problem."

But the pending bill, SB 102, prefiled by Sen. Hector Uribe of Brownsville, would help districts pay for the special educational needs of all first-time students of alien parents — legal, illegal, documented or otherwise.

"As I understand the way the bill is written it covers everybody, whether they are here legally or illegally," Kirby said. "If your parents are born in a foreign country and it is the child's first time to enter the schools, he is eligible if the district meets the number of requirements."

Districts with 100 or more students of alien parents or those with at least 5 percent of the district's total enrollment entering for the first time would be eligible to receive $500 per new student of alien parents.

A FORM SENT to the TEA in September estimated that there are 164 students of alien parents currently enrolled in the Midland district, Cook said.

The introduction of the bill stemmed from a U.S. Supreme Court ruling last summer mandating that all districts in Texas must provide a free education for illegal aliens.

Although that ruling in itself may have hurt some school districts, MISD was not affected at the time. However, some schools, such as those located in the Rio Grande Valley, are hard put to provide for students as it is. According to Uribe, "It's a cruel irony that (students of alien parents) tend to be concentrated in the school districts that can least afford the extra teachers, materials and classroom space. The quality of education for all the children in those schools suffers."

It is estimated that more than 28,000 children of illegal aliens attend public schools in the state.

"The TEA felt that if they were going to be required to offer instructional services to all of the citizens, then it would be reasonable for the goverment to provide some funds for the costs," Cook said.

AND WHILE THE $500 per eligible student would be welcome in any district, John Martinez, MISD coordinator of bilingual education, said the district has been providing education for all students, alien or not, quite well.

"Here in Midland, the district policy has always been that we educate all children," Martinez said. "We are not in the business of determining whether students are illegal or legal. We just comply with the law in the state of Texas that says if a child resides in the boundaries of our district, we educate them.

"We have a limited budget and limited resources, but we do the best we can and I think we're doing pretty well," he added.

When a child enrolls for the first time in the district's kindergarten classes, Migrant Four-Year-Old program or Head Start program for 4-year-olds, a birth certificate or some other proof of birth, such as a baptismal certificate, is required, Cook said. Older students who enroll in the district for the first time are required to show only previous school records with the assumption being that they had to show proof of birth when they began in another district.

"IT'S A MATTER of establishing the birth one time and making the records that follow the child," Cook said.

That may change if the bill is passed, according to Kirby. "It probably is going to be that if, in fact, this become a law, we'll have to work on what documents a district will require," he said. "The State Board of Education will have to state some sort of rule itself and we'll develop some implementing rules.

"We'll probably have some reluctance on the part of some schools to ask for these types of documents. But we'll have to have some documentation or how can the state justify paying out that kind of money?" he pointed out.

"We could wind up being a Gestapo type of person," Cook lamented. "And the school doesn't want to get into that role."

While many people confuse the number of alien students with the number of those enrolled in the district's bilingual program, Martinez and Cook said that alien students do not necessarily have a deficiency in English.

THERE ARE about 1,000 students enrolled in bilingual classes in MISD. Those students represent 14 different "home" languages.

"Just because a youngster comes in and says that they hear another language at home, they still may not be placed in the bilingual program," Martinez pointed out.

"There is, in my mind, no correlation in a person's ability to speak English and their nationality," Cook agreed. "The mastering of English is not the major requirement for receiving citizenship.

"The assumption is because they don't speak English, we think they came across the Rio Grande in the dark of the moon," Cook continued. "That does not mean they are alien. Their families could have been here for generations."

Cranston top candidate in California paper poll

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — U.S. Sen. Alan Cranston won a lopsided victory Saturday over six other contenders for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination in a straw poll of party leaders in Cranston's home state.

Cranston, who is far behind former Vice President Walter Mondale and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio in national polls of Democratic voters, topped Mondale 40 percent to 15 percent in a Los Angeles Times survey of delegates to the California Democratic Party convention. Glenn finished fifth, with 4 percent.

Twenty-five percent of the delegates said they were undecided.

Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, who has withdrawn from contention, was the choice of 7 percent of the convention delegates.

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado, Glenn, Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona, and Sens. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina and Dale Bumpers of Arkansas trailed with 5 percent or less.

The Times said 1,416 of an expected 1,700 delegates responded to the Times poll.

Chess tourney planned

The Midland Chess Club will sponsor a tournament sanctioned by the United States Chess Federation Jan. 22-23 at the Best Western Motel on Interstate 20.

Entry fee for the five-round, Swiss-system tournament is $20 and all interested chess players are invited to compete. Competitors must be USCF members and membership can be arranged at the tournament site.

Amarillo chess master Gary Simms is expected to compete, along with local chess players Stanley Shanks, Doug Russell, Bill Knight, Tom Yantis and Eagle Elliott.

Prize money will be awarded. The first place finisher overall will garner $150. First place finishers in categories A, B and C will receive $100. Top competitors in category D and among the unrated players will receive $50.

Registration is Saturday from 8 to 8:45 a.m. Round One begins at 9:15 a.m. Saturday, followed by Round Two at 2 p.m. and Round Three at 7 p.m. Round Four starts at 8:30 a.m. Sunday, followed by Round Five at 1 p.m.

A time limit of 45 moves in two hours will be enforced.

The tournament director is Bob Montgomery of Midland.

Interested players are invited to compete. Interested spectators are invited to attend.

Paris dentist pleads guilty

AUSTIN (AP) — A state investigator says a Paris dentist has been fined $20,000 and ordered to pay more than $5,000 restitution after pleading guilty in state court to four indictments alleging that he had made false Medicaid claims.

Jack Elrod of the Texas attorney general's office said Saturday that G. Donald Haslam, 42, also was placed on the equivalent of five years' probation by State District Judge Jon Wisser, who accepted the plea bargain worked out with the attorney general's office.

Elrod, chief investigator for the Medicaid Fraud Division, said information from the investigation would be given to the State Board of Dental Examiners.

Elrod said restitution includes $3,900 paid to Haslam for dental work that was not done.

Powell to speak

AUSTIN (AP) — Jody Powell, presidential press secretary during the Carter administration, will speak at a Christian Life Commission luncheon Wednesday.

Commission director Phil Strickland said the meeting also will include discussion of the commission's legislative proposals.

Maureen Dickinson, left, who underwent a reversal tubal ligation in July 1982, is now pregnant. That's great news for her and her family, from left, sons David, 3, and Bradley, 1, and her husband, Mike.

Microscopic surgery proves successful

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

The first Midland woman to undergo a delicate microscopic surgery has received good news — she's pregnant.

Maureen Dickinson chose to have a tubal ligation in May 1981, after giving birth to her youngest son.

The tubal ligation in the female now rivals the vasectomy in popularity as a method of permanent sterilization. But Mrs. Dickinson changed her mind about being sterile.

After consulting with her husband, Mike, Mrs. Dickinson urged her physician to attempt the operation to reverse the sterilization.

"I thought this (having babies) was all over with after Bradley (their one-year-old) was born," Dickinson said. "But, Maureen decided she wanted to try for a girl."

On July 23, 1982, Dr. Luis Montaldo, obstetrician and gynecologist, and his associate Dr. Ricardo Cecchini performed the first microscopic tubal ligation reversal surgery in Midland.

"We were surprised she got pregnant so soon," Montaldo said, explaining that it was six weeks after the surgery that Mrs. Dickinson returned to his office pregnant.

He added that he advised Mrs. Dickinson to wait until now to announce the success of the operation because he wanted to "make sure everything went all right."

"I knew I was pregnant," Mrs. Dickinson said, "but when the tests finally came in, you could hear me scream from one end of the office to the other."

The surgical technique is not new. In fact, Montaldo said, "actually, with the right patient, 80 percent of the women will get pregnant."

And the surgical expertise and equipment is now available in the Midland area, according to Montaldo.

Although another one of Montaldo's patients — who had a reversal by a magnification technique — is ready to deliver within four weeks, that surgery is not always as precise as microscopic procedure.

Besides the high powered microscope, fine-quality microsurgical instruments are needed to allow the precise, secure handling of the flimsy, delicate tissue, Montaldo said. The scope also allows the use of miniaturized sutures with minimum trauma.

Mrs. Dickinson and her husband have two boys and are now looking forward to a girl — they hope. And if it should be another boy, "That's it," Dickinson said. "This is a very expensive kid."

Autry stay of execution lifted by federal judge

BEAUMONT (AP) — A federal judge has set aside a stay of execution for a condemned killer, clearing the way for another judge to set a new execution date.

But an attorney for 28-year-old James Autry said he would appeal.

Autry, of Port Arthur, was convicted of killing a convenience store clerk during an April 1980 robbery. He was ordered to die by injection Dec. 17, but U.S. District Judge Robert Parker granted a stay of execution until he could hear arguments in the case.

On Friday, Parker set aside the stay.

Autry's attorney, Charles Carver, said he was surprised by a portion of Parker's order that invited the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to review its policy of granting immunity from prosecution to witnesses.

Until now, Parker noted, the court has required witnesses to have evidence that could prove a defendant innocent to receive such immunity. But he said the court might wish to change that policy in hearings involving a death penalty and said this "may be an appropriate case" to set such a precedent.

Carver contended his client's defense was deprived of the testimony of John Alton Sandifer because the state threatened to try him for capital murder. Sandifer was with Autry when the clerk and a customer were killed.

Parker's order said no one knew what evidence Sandifer could offer, although he noted that statements Sandifer made to police tended to uphold Autry's conviction.

The potential danger of microwave ovens to people with pacemakers prompted many restaurants to post signs such as this one. But that was in the 1960s and '70s. According to most experts, the danger doesn't exist any more.

Microwave ovens shouldn't affect pacemakers

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

There's no calculating the number of hungry people who either lost their appetite — or went away hungry — after encountering a "microwave oven in use" sign while entering a restaurant.

During the 1960s and '70s, microwave ovens were considered to pose a potentially serious threat to people with heart pacemakers. Some scientific evidence, and apparently plenty of gossip, indicated that the radio waves emitted by a microwave could interfere with a pacemaker's proper operation.

But pacemaker owners can take heart from the view offered by people knowledgeable in the area: With improvements in microwave and pacemaker technology, the "quick-cooking" ovens pose no danger to pacemaker patients.

John Pevateaux, West Texas representative for Medtronic, which pioneered pacemakers about 25 years ago, said modern pacemakers are shielded from radio wave interference.

Pevateaux said that although he cannot remember a case in which microwaves scrambled a pacemaker's operation, the early pacemakers — lacking modern shielding — could possibly have been susceptible to radio wave influence.

Electrical impulses within the body instigate a rhythmic heartbeat. Pacemakers act as a standby electric generator should the body's system fail.

Pevateaux said early pacemakers "listened" for the electrical signals, but remained dormant so long as the body's system was functioning. If the body's electrical impulses ceased, the pacemaker assumed its heartbeat-stimulating role.

Strong radio waves could provide a pacemaker with "false" electrical signals. Thus, Pevateaux said, an unshielded, "self-inhibiting" pacemaker could have mistaken a radio wave for a heartbeat and stayed "off" even while the heart had stopped pumping.

"Basically, the early pacemaker did not have the shielding that they have today," he said. "It would, what we call, 'inhibit' itself.

"All of the present pacemakers are adequately shielded," said Pevateaux, noting that the modern devices are equipped with a titanium shield to reflect interfering waves.

Only a heavy dose of radio waves, like that from a television transmitting tower, could penetrate the shield, according to Pevateaux.

He said that as an added precaution, modern pacemakers are designed to begin signalling for a steady heartbeat when "confused" by radio wave interference.

Suzie Kent, of the Texas Department of Health's bureau of radiation control, said restaurant owners and others frequently inquire about the rumored hazards posed by microwave ovens.

"I must get 100 calls a year on that alone," she said.

Ms. Kent said her research has revealed no federal or state law that requires restaurant owners to post signs warning customers about the presence of a microwave oven.

She said many restaurant owners choose to post the signs anyway, either because they mistakenly believe it's required by law or as a "better-safe-than-sorry" hedge.

Several Midland restaurants boast "microwave in use" warnings.

Larry Hueber, Denny's manager, said the restaurant's management is aware the signs are not mandatory. He said a sign was posted based on past evidence that microwaves may interfere with pacemakers.

Fred Phillips, of Taco Villa, said a sign was placed at the company's 2111 N. Big Spring St. outlet on the assumption it was required by law.

Dr. Brian Mohr, a Midland cardiologist, said he receives several inquiries from pacemaker patients concerned about the problems posed by microwaves.

"Pacemakers are really sophisticated," said Mohr. "Even if the electromagnetic waves get into the pacemaker, it will not stop it. Pacemaker patients have absolutely nothing to worry about with microwaves."

Saturday chase leads to arrest

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A teen-age burglary suspect remained in custody Saturday following a bullet-punctuated police chase on the near westside early Friday afternoon.

Police gave the following account of the incident, which began shortly after noon:

A patrol officer responding to reports of a prowler at 1600 W. Kansas Ave. confronted the youth as he was carrying a plastic tray of bundled envelopes through the back yard of the residence, which is owned by Dr. Henrie E. Mast.

The 16-year-old suspect dropped the tray and fled after making a gesture indicating he had a gun. The officer fired one round from his service revolver during the ensuing foot chase, which ended when the officer and a citizen who joined the pursuit lost track of the youth in an alley in the 1500 block of West Cuthbert Avenue.

The bullet missed the escaping suspect and tore into a nearby residence, breaking a mirror but not injuring anyone.

Arriving back-up officers sealed off the area and conducted a search of the neighborhood. The youth was finally apprehended after police found him hiding in a yard at 1601 Cuthbert, two blocks from where the incident had begun an hour or so earlier.

The tray, some jewlery and the bundled envelopes, which contained foreign coins, were taken into evidence. Also recovered was a .22-caliber Derringer apparently dropped by the youth during the chase, according to police.

The items allegedly were taken from Dr. Mast's house after a window was broken to gain entry.

A police spokesman said Saturday that attempts would be made to have the North Colorado Street youth tried as an adult because of a lengthy juvenile record. He will turn 17 Wednesday, according to his arrest sheet.

Officer shoots, wounds would-be store robber

LUBBOCK (AP) — A 49-year-old Slaton man was seriously wounded Saturday by a Lubbock police officer as he held seven employees at gunpoint during a robbery at a grocery store, police said.

Charley Luther Pike was admitted to Lubbock General Hospital after he was shot in the right side of his neck. Police said the bullet lodged in his upper back.

None of the store employees was injured, said officers. Pike is charged with three counts of aggravated robbery and seven counts of aggravated kidnapping. Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack issued an arrest warrant for Pike Saturday.

Blalack said bond will be set at $250,000 when Pike is arraigned.

Police said Pike, who was wanted in connection with another armed robbery, entered the westside Save 'n Gain store at 10:20 a.m. Saturday. He ordered the manager and two other employees to remove money from a safe.

When the manager said that the store money had already been deposited, the man demanded the three men's wallets and then ordered other employees into the office.

Police information officer Bill Morgan said Pike was then shot once by 22-year veteran officer Larry Mayfield, 45, after the man pointed his revolver in the policeman's direction.

The employees were held inside the office for about 15 minutes, police said.

Pike was charged Friday in connection with a Holiday Inn robbery here Thursday. Police said $450 in cash and $180 in checks was taken.

Authorities said Pike was on parole from a California prison, where he had been serving a life sentence in the slaying of a police officer.

POSITIVE THINKING

Think your way out of discouragement

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Discouragement is a common problem and the person who means to live well must learn to eradicate it from control over his life. This is accomplished, of course, by a process of positive mental attitude.

We are discouraged (which means our courage is taken from us) by the thoughts that take over when things are not going well. To counter this dark and defeatist thinking one needs only to insert into the difficult situation a firm, even dogged, positive thought pattern. In a word, you can think your way out of discouragement.

One who did that effectively was the famous baseball pitcher of a few decades ago, the notable Cy Young, whom I saw pitch when I was a young boy. Many years later he made a statement to me that I've remembered ever since and applied in my own tough moments.

"Mr. Young, I understand you had a pretty good record in your Big League days."

"Pretty good!" he said. "I had the best record of any of them!"

"Your games-won record was outstanding, I recall."

"I won more games than anybody else," he conceded, "and that isn't egotism — it is just an honest statement of the facts. The record bears me out."

"How do pitchers today compare with those of the old days?" I went on probing.

"Some of them are very good, but compared to us they are sissies. We didn't pitch one game and then have a vacation of four or five days. Why, sometimes we'd pitch three days straight. And if we got into trouble in a game, the manager didn't rush out to the mound and hold an executive conference over us, or put another pitcher in. If we got into trouble we had to keep on pitching and pitch our way out of trouble."

Pitch your way out of trouble! Keep that classic phrase in mind, for it will stand you in good stead always. It will keep courage and persistence and determination in your mental attitude, and inevitably the sun of hope will break through the dark clouds of discouragement. Just hang in there and pitch your way out of trouble. And remember the old saying: God helps those who help themselves.

I suggest another technique that will help eliminate discouragement, one which many discouraged persons have used with good results, as the following story illustrates.

The man was grumpy, depressed, pessimistic. He lived in a suburb of New York, but he didn't like it. He didn't like the people who lived there. He didn't like his house. He didn't like himself. He was sick of commuting.

"I'm tired of living," he growled. "I'd just as soon pass out."

So I tried an experiment. "Tomorrow morning say to yourself, 'This is the last day of my life; I'm not going to live another day.' At breakfast say, 'I'd better enjoy this breakfast. I won't be eating another.' Then talk to your wife this last morning instead of glooming behind your paper. Smell the good aroma of the bacon and the coffee.

"As you walk to the station look at the beautiful houses you are passing; remind yourself that you won't be seeing your community again. When you are on the train, take a look around. It is the last time."

He really did this and told me later that everything that happened through the day registered on his memory, and it all seemed so wonderful: food, sunshine, people, just the thrill of living. "I never enjoyed anything so much as the trip home that night on the train. I walked up the street, saw the lighted windows. Then the door opened and there was my sweetheart whom I have loved for 35 years. I grabbed her and said, 'Honey, we're going to have a wonderful time all the rest of our lives!'"

What had happened? He had reconditioned his mind. He had learned to believe.

So if you are discouraged, by all means get more faith in life for as such faith grows, discouragement declines. (If you are facing discouragement or any situation in which aid and support is needed, I'll be happy to send you free an action manual, "Live Alive with Faith." Just write me at Pawling, N.Y. 12564).

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Premature babies usually catch up developmentally

Dear Dr. Solomon: Several months ago I gave birth to a premature baby. My obstetrician told me that a few years ago, the baby would probably not have lived. I'm very grateful that I have the baby, but it was so small when it was born that I wonder what effect this might have when he is older. Do you have any information on this? — Mrs. F.A., Dallas

Dear Mrs. A.: As you note, many premature babies born today would not have lived had they been born several years ago; therefore, research as to their future development is still in the early stages. However, one report indicates that while these children may show some developmental delays during early childhood, they eventually catch up with children who are born following a fullterm pregnancy.

Dr. Linda C. Mayes and her colleagues at the Vanderbilt University School of Medicine in Nashville, Tenn., studied 174 children born after an average pregnancy of less than 35 weeks. All showed developmental delays during their early years. In those who were followed for at least six years, however, most of these delays had disappeared.

An interesting finding noted by Dr. Mayes was that the highter the parents' socioeconomic status, the more likely the possibility of a favorable outcome by the time the child was of school age.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I had abdominal surgery and got a funny scar. My doctor calls it a keloid. Exactly what is a keloid? — Mr. S.N., Pa.

Dear Mr. S.N.: Sometimes nature grows too much scar tissue and produces a raised, welt-like overgrowth called a keloid. They are usually wider, firmer, thicker and redder than normal scars and may remain raised and red during the patient's lifetime or even grow larger over a period of years. Not all heavy scars are keloids, though they are frequently diagnosed as such. The so-called hypertrophic scar enlarges during the first few months after injury or surgery but, unlike the keolid, slowly softens over the following months. Treatment of the true keloid is difficult and unpredictable. X-ray and injections of cortisone drugs have been used in some cases.

For Gabe, Lexington, Ky.: Nitrous oxide, commonly known as laughing gas, is no laughing matter. Some people who have been foolish enlough to manufacture it at home and who have experimented with it have wound up in emergency rooms with a variety of pulmonary (relating to the lungs) symptoms.

MCT to provide greater variety of programming

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

The cost of almost everything keeps rising even in recessionary times.

Almost everything.

Midland Community Theatre's 1983 season contains two surprises for interested subscribers. Both are designed to please the long-standing membership as well as encourage newcomers to join the ranks of subscription holders.

"We have in fact changed the format of the season," Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director, said in a recent interview. "We've gone from nine membership productions to eight membership productions and added what this year will be three special performances to which anybody who is a member receives a 50 percent discount.

"What we're hoping it allows us to do and provide to the community is, first of all, to keep our membership prices the same (as last season), and more importantly, it allows us to produce and an audience to see a broader spectrum of theater," Strickland said.

THE REASON FOR the changed format is simple — greater variety in programming which the theater hopes will lead to increased membership and community participation.

"What we have found over the last couple of years, because membership shows have to appeal to the broadest possible base, is that we have been restrained from doing more contemporary pieces. Now we'll be able to offer things that are focused toward perhaps what is a more limited audience, but what we hope in the long run will provide a broader base for all our productions."

Of the three special productions, the first, "Tintypes," is currently being staged at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. This particular production, directed by Michael Spicer, co-director of MCT's theatre school, is MCT's entry into the Festival of American Community Theatres. It was staged last October in Theatre II at Theatre Midland. The current production, which has a new cast member, Renee Yarborough, will be onstage Friday and Saturday.

The other two special productions include "The Best Available," which has not been selected yet, and "The Shadow Box."

IN SEARCHING FOR a "Best Available," Strickland said, "We're looking at a number of alternatives including the possibility of an original script."

Ted Strickland

The only play to win the Pulitzer and the Tony in the same year, "The Shadow Box," has been on the theatre's list for several years as a possible production, but it wasn't until this season with the new format that MCT felt comfortable producing it.

"Because of its subject matter we had not felt we could produce it before to the entire membership and have it accepted," Strickland said. "The plot deals with three terminally ill cancer patients at a Hospice center, and how they and their families contend with and confront their imminent death."

In addition to the special productions and the subscription series, Strickland said, "We're also offering this year two Midland College productions that will be a cooperative effort between MC and MCT."

MCT's regular season offerings range from the opening musical, "Guys and Dolls," to the serious drama, "The Little Foxes."

"THE REGULAR plays on this year's season provide one of the best balanced seasons we've had in a number of years," Strickland said.

Of the specific productions slated for the season, Strickland said, "We start off with (Feb. 4-March 5 in Theatre I) one of the classic Broadway musicals. I think it's fair to say that 'Guy's and Dolls' would rank on everyone's top 10 list.

"This production is followed by 'Talley's Folly (March 4-19 in Theatre II).' (Lanford) Wilson is probably the most promising American playwright to come on the scene in the last 10 years," Strickland said, adding, "It's a warm romantic comedy.

"Then we do 'Tribute-(April 8-23 in Theatre I),' which is Bernard Slade's second play. It featured Jack Lemmon in both its Broadway and film versions. I'd classify it as a Broadway bittersweet comedy."

The next production is by a playwright whose other plays produced by MCT have met with resounding success — Neil Simon.

"WE'LL DO 'The Good Doctor (June 10-25—Theatre I),' which is one of Neil Simon's most original scripts in that he uses (Anton) Chekhov short stories as his base.

"Then we do 'The Little Foxes (Sept. 9-24—Theatre I),' which is one of the classic American dramas. It provided Elizabeth Taylor her vehicle to make her Broadway debut."

Next up is Shakespeare, with "The Taming of the Shrew" set for Sept. 30-Oct. 15 in Theatre II. "(It's) a play that's kept people laughing for 400 years," Strickland said. "And then we do 'Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris' (Oct. 21-Nov. 5—Theatre I), which as a musical is totally different in format than what is the standard musical, but it is filled from start to finish with glorious music by Jacques Brel."

In closing its 1983 season, MCT has chosen a familiar favorite.

"We close the season with what is probably the classic American comedy, 'Arsenic and Old Lace (Dec. 2-17—Theatre I),' which combines mystery, comedy and romance better than any show that I know of," Strickland said.

"With the addition of 'Little Foxes' and 'Shrew' and 'Arsenic' and 'Talley's Folly,' the season offers a broader look at the world of theater and more varied entertainment."

THOSE PURCHASING a season membership have a variety of options to choose from — options which range from holding a $1,000 membership to a $20 one.

The breakdown is summed up as follows: A regular A membership, 16 admissions good anytime, $50; a regular B membership, 16 admissions good Sunday through Thursday, $40; individual A membership, eight admissions good anytime, $30; individual B membership, good Sunday through Thursday, $20; family membership, 25 admissions good anytime, $80; sponsor membership, 32 admissions and other privileges, $150; sustaining membership, 36 admissions and other privileges, $250; benefactor, 42 admissions and special recognition, $500; and contributing, very special recognition, $1,000.

And, of course, all memberships at MCT entitle the owner to participate in classes and other MCT activities at a reduced rate. Those interested in inquiring about memberships may do so by calling Theatre Midland at 682-2544.

For MCT, 1982 was a very good year.

"It was the biggest and best year we've ever had; we had more membership and a higher total audience than in any year previously," Strickland said.

The theater is hoping to make 1983 an even bigger success.

"Our goals this year include a 10 percent increase, which will bring us to over 5,200 members for the year. And we'd like to break 40,000 people coming to the shows (last year's figure was close to 38,500).

"The national average for people who attend the arts is 3 percent of an area's population," Strickland said, pausing before adding, "And here in Midland for an individual show, we'll average between 6 and 9 percent."

Newshounds harassing Charles, Diana

LONDON (AP) — Angry accusations by Buckingham Palace that the presence of up to 50 reporters and cameramen is ruining the European skiing holiday of Prince Charles and Princess Diana appeared to have chastened Fleet Street on Saturday.

Only the Daily Telegraph, of nine national newspapers on London's newspaper row, published a picture of 21-year-old Diana after palace press secretary Michael Shea said the newshounds were harassing the couple.

Shea said editors should consider the dividing line between legitimate public interest in Diana and her 34-year-old husband and intrusion into private life.

The tabloid Sun, one of the most persistent pursuers of the couple, said Friday that Diana was showing "near paranoia" at being photographed on the holiday, which began last Sunday and is to end Monday.

"I can completely understand how she feels," assistant palace press secretary Victor Chapman told The Associated Press. "When I was there...She could not go downhill without being surrounded by press. This is a private holiday and the prince and princess should be left alone."

The royal couple are staying at Vaduz, Liechtenstein, home of Prince Franz Josef II, ruler of the tiny principality, and making daily forays into the neighboring Austrian and Swiss Alps.

New York students to sing abroad

The Intermediate School 44 Vocal Chorus, made up of students 11 to 14 years old, got a sendoff by school and government officials on Friday at the Venezuelan Consulate. They will be guests of the Venezuelan government during their two-week stay.

Stargell plays with orchestra

WASHINGTON (AP) — Baseball star Willie Stargell joined the Eastman Philharmonia for the world premiere Saturday night of "New Morning for the World," a musical composition for narrator and orchestra based on the writings of Martin Luther King Jr.

The piece, subtitled "Daybreak of Freedom," premiered on the slain civil rights leader's birthday at the start of a five-city tour that will take Stargell and the orchestra to Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh and Rochester after the Kennedy Center appearance.

Joseph Schwantner, professor of composition at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, wrote the King tribute expressly for the orchestra and Stargell, former captain of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The piece sets King's words to an ensemble of amplified piano, amplified celeste, harp and five percussion instruments.

In program notes, Schwartner said he chose words from King's writings and speeches that "bare witness to the power and nobility of Martin Luther King's ideas, principles and beliefs.

"This work of celebration is humbly dedicated to his memory."

Stargell, 41, retired from the Pirates last year — two decades and 475 home runs after joining the team. He was the leading home run hitter in Pirates' history.

He has not yet announced his future plans but Stargell has been offered a job as a Pirates batting instructor and unofficial good-will ambassador. He has also been offered a job as a cable TV analyst of Pirates games next season.

His & her Christmas gifts brainchild of Marcus

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

What was to shape and mold his life almost as much as he molded it began when he was a baby. He had no way of knowing, and certainly didn't care then, that his father and his aunt were about to launch a venture which was to become so intrinsically a part of his life as an adult that the names would be almost synonymous — Neiman—Marcus and...

His career with N-M began in 1926 following his graduation from Harvard. In 1977 he became chairman emeritus after serving as executive vice president from 1935 to 1950, president from 1950 to 1972, chairman of the board and chief executive officer from 1972 to 1975 and chairman of the executive committee from 1975 to 1977.

Stanley Marcus.

In 1982 the N-M stores celebrated their 75th Diamond Jubilee Anniversary. Today Stanley Marcus, who is referred to by those who worked with him as Mr. Stanley, is 76 years old.

The N-M and Stanley Marcus success story began with a decision made by three people.

"MY FATHER and his sister, Cary Marcus Neiman, and her husband founded the store in the expectation that they were going to bring to, as they said in their opening ad, the women of the Southwest the finest ready-to-wear to be found anywhere in the world," Marcus said in an interview held during his recent Midland visit.

Marcus was in Midland Thursday for a luncheon honoring the sponsors and co-sponsors of the Museum of the Southwest's Auction '83. The black-tie $150 per-couple invitational dinner and auction is slated for Midland Center Feb. 9.

"It was a pretty broad statement to make when Dallas was a thriving metropolis of some 73,822 people," Marcus said dryly. Chuckling he added, "No oil wells, no Cotton Bowl, no Fairmont Hotel.

"But they foresaw that ready-to-wear was going to become a very important factor because it was brand new at that time. They believed that if they treated their customers extremely well, they priced their merchandise fairly with a profit but always at a single price, never subject to bargaining, they could be successful. And they were.

"THEY WORKED very hard. They stayed true to their dreams and their ideals and my brothers and I, as we inherited the business, tried to maintain those standards," he said.

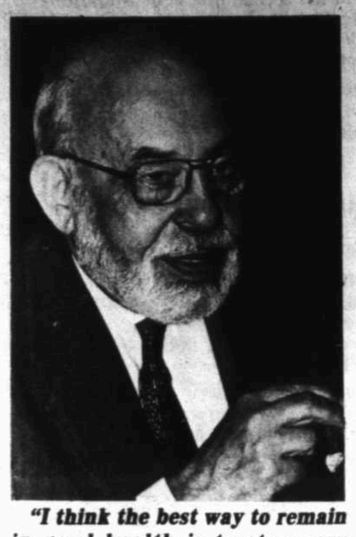

In conjunction with his association with N-M, Marcus has written three books, "Minding the Store" in 1974, "Quest for the Best" in 1979 and the just published, "His & Hers: The History of the Fantasy World of the Neiman-Marcus Christmas Catalogue."

It would be hard, if not impossible, to find a Texan who isn't at least familiar with the yearly N-M His & Hers Christmas gift.

The idea began with Marcus.

"It was my idea but inspired by a man named Walter Cronkite who would call up about two weeks before Christmas and say, 'We're doing a Christmas round-up story. What was the most exciting sale you made this Christmas?'

"Some years I had a very exciting story to tell him — such as the man who bought the corner window with everything in it, if we could reproduce it in his playroom without his wife knowing anything about it (and they did), or the next year it might be the fellow from Amarillo who came in and

"I think the best way to remain in good health is to stay very active. I will only take clients who can teach me something as well as my doing something for them."

SMILING BUT not pausing as he spoke, Marcus said, "Some years I didn't have a good story and I sensed the note of disappointment in their voices when I told them the best seller was nylon stockings. So I decided that I would protect against that in the future by actually creating something newsworthy.

"My associates and I got together and we talked about it and finally one of them came up with the concept of his & hers airplanes, which many of my colleagues thought was ridiculous because they said, 'After all, no store's every sold airplanes.'

"And I said, 'Well that's no reason why they shouldn't.'

"And so we put his & hers airplanes in and it was a tremendous smash hit. They broke every broadcasting system in the world. Every newspaper and every magazine carried a story about the his & hers airplanes," he said, adding, "So from then on it was a question of trying to top yourself over your previous years."

BUT ONE YEAR, Marcus received a special request in regards to the his & hers package. The request came from the daughter of a former Midlander.

"The feature item of that year, I forget what year probably around '64, was his & her camels. I had a call one day from the manager of our Fort Worth store asking for permission to break the camels. He said he had someone who wanted to buy just a lady camel and asked if I was willing to do so. And I said, 'I was willing, if the camels were.'

"Well the camels added no protest so we delivered a lady camel to Love Field at about 8 o'clock on Christmas Eve in time for the 10 o'clock news to pick up the story.

"And the announcer said, 'Ladies and gentlemen, you are about to see a Christmas present that some lucky woman in the Dallas-Fort Worth area is going to find under her tree tomorrow morning.'

"At that moment the lady in question was looking at the TV along with her daughter, and when she saw it she turned to her daughter and said, 'I wonder who the darn fool is who's going to get that?' The next morning she found out."

WITH A COMMENT like that, what happened to the poor camel?

His response came complete with that little twinkle his eyes get when he is telling a story.

"She was delighted and excited with this beast. She built a special stable for her. And I can tell you that this camel is living better than any camel in world history."

Marcus' book, "His & Hers: The History of the Fantasy World of the Neiman-Marcus Christmas Catalogue," traces the history of the catalogue and as he said, "In a way it becomes the history of inflation because you see from the 1939 period to the '50s prices remain fairly static and then they started to move upwards. And you see where a Steuben glass ashtray sold for $6 in 1939, sells for $169 today. And still sells.

"It also shows, I think, the standard of taste that N-M established this early in the game and certainly in this catalogue and as you look at some of the sketches and photographs 40 years ago they look contemporary enough to be worn on the street today."

MARCUS' RETIREMENT from N-M certainly has not meant that he has retired; in fact he is "very much opposed to retirement for people who are in good health." Instead it has afforded him the time to try some business ventures he always dreamed of pursuing.

The first was establishing a publishing business. It seems most appropriate that someone who lives at One Nonesuch Road would name his publishing house The Somesuch Press.

"I always wanted to be a publisher and when I retired I figured that this was the time, but publishing is a very expensive business to go into." Pausing, he added again with that merry twinkle, "So I went into it in a very small way, publishing very small books."

In addition, this entrepreneur tapes a daily radio program, "Stanley Marcus — Another Opinion," which is syndicated on 40 stations across the country. This business represents the fulfillment of another lifetime dream.

"I was being interviewed one day by a newspaper reporter who asked me the question, 'Now that you've retired from retailing and now that you're writing and consulting is there anything else in life that you'd like to do that you've haven't done?' and I said, 'Yes. I've always wanted to have my own radio or TV show. I think I would be a pretty good commentator.'

"THE NEXT DAY a producer called me up and said, 'I hear you want a radio show, how'd you like to have one?' And I said, 'Fine. What are the limitations?'

"He said, 'No limitations. You can talk about anything you want to talk about as long as you don't talk over two minutes. We will syndicate it around the country and you will make a fortune being a radio commentator.'

"Well, I've been at it about two years. I have not made the fortune yet, but I'm still on the air," he said laughing.

He also serves as marketing consultant for the Stanley Marcus Consultancy Service, where he handles N-M and 12 other clients.

Perhaps the comments he made in talking about this particular business best sum up his attitude about living.

"I think the best way to remain in good health is to stay very active. I will only take clients who can teach me something as well as my doing something for them. If it's a repetitious assignment, I won't take it regardless of what the fee is because I want new challenges and new problems."

Good chemistry exists between '48 HRS.' stars Nolte, Murphy

A Review

What is "48 HRS."? It's a scene out of "Cool Hand Luke," "Blade Runner," "Dirty Harry," television's "Hill Street Blues," "Bullitt," and more, but it does have something those don't — Eddie Murphy and Nick Nolte.

Directed by Walter Hill ("The Getaway" and "Hard Times"), "48 HRS." is about a slovenly super cop, a sort of Columbo-Steve McQueen blend (Nolte) who gets a convicted thief out of jail in order to find some cop killers. Murphy is the con and though it is obvious some of the dialogue is built around his "Saturday Night Live" routines, Murphy pulls no punches in his film debut.

Indeed, Murphy as Reggie Hammond seems light on his feet and his humor bursts forth in quick jabs followed by the sometimes pained, sometimes defiant expression of a street-wise San Francisco tough. Dressed in a Giorgio Armani suit with narrow tie and guard, Murphy prances around town a suiting contrast to Nolte, wearing yesterday's shirt and who knows what else.

Nolte as Jack Cates is paunchy and puffy with the kind of face that takes well to bruises and cuts. His voice has deepened (since "Cannery Row") and is raspy from shouting, smoking and suffering. And though his motivation isn't clear, we know he will track down the cop killers or be killed doing it.

Together they are dynamite — explosive and exploding as when they duke it out in an alleyway — each determined to win. In fact, their entire relationship is built on mutual need and frustration. Hammond wants to get the killers because one "ratted" on him and Cates wants them because they murdered other policemen or just because. Hammond is frantic for sexual gratification after two and a half years in jail and Cates is incapable of commitment to his girlfriend (Annette O'Toole).

"48 HRS." is a man's view of life tough-guy style, where the women are used and abused, the language is rough, and the streets are a jungle with only the predatory surviving. Photographer Ric Waite has captured that feel with dark, dingy clubs and back alleys allowing only the glare of haloed city lights to spill over onto the littered streets. But once too often Nolte and Murphy are shot face-to-face, forced by handcuffs to become unlikely siamese soulmates.

It is a bare bones plot, constructed by Rodger Spottoswoode, Walter Hill, Larry Gross, Steven E. de Souza and with personal contributions by the stars, that begs the question of how so many could have contributed so little. In fact, "48 HRS."is a compendium of smut and slang so thick that, if the obsenities were left out, only the conjunctions would remain — a world in which adjectives become nouns.

But among the abbreviations is the unabridged performance of James Remar as Ganz, the psychotic killer. A man of few words, Ganz takes pleasure in killing and living on the edge and his Indian partner Billy Bear (Sonny Landham) is what people used to call "mean" — pronounced with four syllables. Remar and Landham are what is perfectly clear in "48 HRS." — that sleazy underside of life that holds nothing dear.

"48 HRS." has a breakneck pace carried along by the careening of Cates' faded blue caddy along San Francisco streets. Not even a good chase car, it takes an entire cable car street to make the corner, but functions as Cates' and Hammond's home for the two days, as well as a plot device for comic relief and editing.

Despite scripting weaknesses, there is something at work in "48 HRS." akin to chemistry between the two stars, and oddly enough both men are at their best in the dramatic moments. The look on Nolte's face when he pulls his weapon to fire is nothing short of committed intensity — the "don't mess with me" school of enforcement. And Murphy is tough, tender, defiant and easy whenever the need arises.

Incidental to the plot, but a welcome addition, is The Busboys' hard-driving rendition of "The Boys Are Back In Town." They show up in a club scene and get the place to jumping with their up-tempo number.

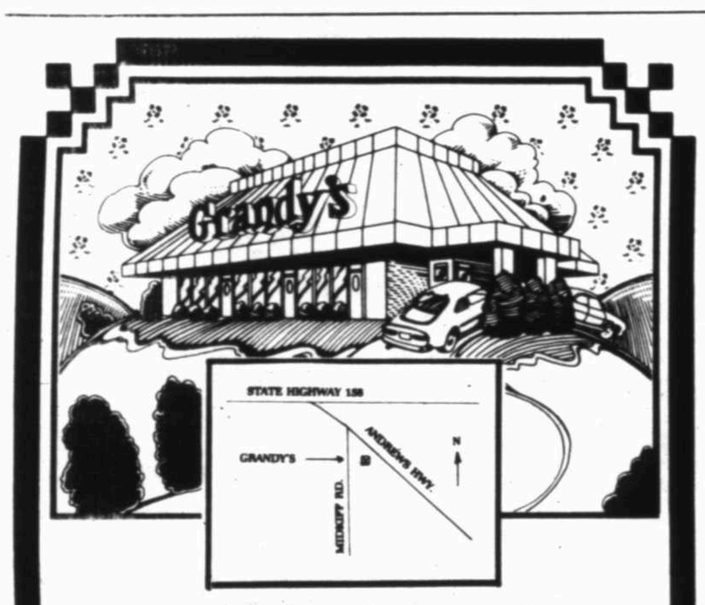

'48 HRS.," rated R, is really a movie for those who like the unorthodox cop who succeeds despite the rules, the con with a heart, and the city without a soul — that and the entertainment Nolte and Murphy provide in dealing with it all. "48 HRS." is not reecommended for viewing by children due to language, violence and content.

Pro-well group to meet

The Greenwood One Water Supply Corp., which is seeking subscribers to finance a water-well system for Greenwood area residents, will meet at 7 p.m. Monday in the Greenwood School.

With $300 paid by each household subscriber and with the backing of a $1.25 million Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) loan, a water system would by built by which Greenwood residents could tap onto wells bringing in potable water from fields south of the commumnity.

The corporation's goal, which was announced last Nov. 1, was 250 subscribers.

On the corporation's board of directors are Ted Pearce, president; Claude Bass, vice president; Bill Conner, secretary-treasurer; and Ken Ellis, Kent Lester, Don Capehart and Oswald Raggett.

Bullock to enter hospital

AUSTIN (AP) — State Comptroller Bob Bullock, joking about his physical condition, will enter Brackenridge Hospital on Monday for treatment of a ruptured disc in his neck.

"Keeping up with all the backsliding, flip-flopping and broken promises in this change of state administrations has caused me a serious pain in the neck," Bullock said in a statement Saturday. "Around Austin these days your neck has to do double duty to keep up with the changes in positions."

Bullock is scheduled for tests Monday and surgery to repair the disc Tuesday.

He announced last week that he would run for governor in the Democratic primary in 1986.

Paper sued

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Times Mirror Corp., parent company of The Los Angeles Times, is being sued for more than $1 million over a story that mistakenly said an Orange County computer company was having financial problems.

The Superior Court suit by Computer Automation of Irvine was filed on Friday, the same day the Times retracted its story on the front page of the business section of its Orange County editions.

Harold W. Fuson Jr., staff counsel for the newspaper, said Saturday, "We have not had an opportunity to review the complaint and therefore we have no comment."

The erroneous story, published Thursday, said Computer Automation was financially troubled, was burdened with noncompetive technology and was selling off land it owned in Anaheim.

In Friday's article, the Times said it had confused Computer Automation with General Automation, pointing out that Computer Automation last fiscal year earned $2.02 million.

Death's effects minimal

CALIFORNIA CITY, Calif. (AP) — The death of a skydiver during filming of a movie about the original NASA astronauts will not affect the project's completion, a film executive said Saturday.

The skydiver, Joseph Svec, 35, of Houston, died Friday when his parachute failed to open during the last shot for the movie, "The Right Stuff." The remainder of the film based upon Tom Wolfe's book had been finished since October, said Alan Ladd Jr., president of the Ladd Company.

"The movie is basically completed already," Ladd said, adding that he didn't think it would be necessary to re-shoot the scene in which Svec died.

Ladd, speaking by telephone from San Francisco, said the movie will be released by Warner Bros. as scheduled in October. It stars Sam Shepard, Scott Glenn, Dennis Quaid and Barbara Hershey.

The scene called for Svec to tumble out of control down to 4,000 feet and then deploy his parachute as a skydiving partner filmed the scene, according to Bob Phelps, manager of the California City Airport. But at 4,000 feet, neither parachute opened.

Phelps, who also is a skydiving trainer and a parachute rigger, had said Friday that Svec's main and reserve parachutes appeared to be okay when inspected after the tragedy.

The scene was to be a re-enactment of an actual incident in which famed test pilot Chuck Yeager bailed out of a plane with his helmet on fire.

Phelps said a smoke device attached to Svec's helmet had failed, but Svec appeared to be conscious during the fatal fall.

Ladd said Saturday authorities still did not know the cause of the accident.

Svec was an officer in the U.S. Parachute Association with more than 2,000 jumps. He was not a movie stuntman.

Last July 23, actor Vic Morrow and two southeast Asian children were killed during filming of a fiery Vietnam war sequence of the "Twilight Zone" movie. A low-flying helicopter was crippled by special-effects explosions and crashed atop them about 60 miles north of Los Angeles.

That film, co-produced by Steven Spielberg and John Landis, also was to be distributed by Warner Bros.

Mansion renovation scheduled

MORGAN'S POINT, Texas (AP) — The Ross Sterling mansion, nicknamed the "Texas White House," has been sold to a Houston developer who plans a $1.2 million renovation project to turn it into a museum.

Jack Baird, president of El Paisano Properties Corp., bought the house last month for $850,000 from Count and Countess DeMalleray De Barre of Paris. Real estate agents had been asking $1.2 million.

Baird said he plans to spend at least $1.2 million in the next two years restoring the home. He said he wants to make the mansion a replica of the White House during the Lyndon Johnson administration and open it as a museum.

The 34-room mansion, which fronts Galveston Bay, was built in 1927 by Sterling, a former Texas governor and a founder of Humble Oil & Refining Co.

According to legend, Sterling had trouble deciding how his mansion should be built. When architects pressed him, Sterling pulled a $1 bill from his pocket, pointed to the picture of the White House and said, "Make it look like this."

French seeking ex-Nazi

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — The Bolivian attorney general has asked the Supreme Court to consider the extradition of Klaus Altmann, a former Nazi commander wanted by West Germany for the alleged torture and murder of a World War II resistance fighter.

Altman also is accused by France of being responsible for the deaths of hundreds of French Jews.

The legal brief to be reviewed by the court this week is based on charges presented in a court at Augsburg, West Germany, that Altmann was responsible for the death of a French resistance fighter named Kemmler.

The brief said Altmann, also known as Klaus Barbie, should be jailed for murder "committed with treachery, cruelty and vile motives."

Altmann is a naturalized citizen of Bolivia, where he has lived with his wife and children since 1951.

In 1974, the French government tried to extradite him after convicting him in absentia for war crimes he allegedly committed as head of a Nazi unit in the German-occupied city of Lyons.

He was convicted of direct participation in the deaths of hundreds of Jews and of Jean Moulin, head of the French resistance and a personal delegate of the late President Charles de Gaulle during the war. Moulin died after he was tortured by Altmann, according to French court documents.

Bolivia's Supreme Court ruled in 1974 that Altmann could not be sent to France because the two countries had no extradition treaty.

Bolivia still has no such treaty with either Germany or France.

The German case differs from the French case because it is based on one specific death rather than a general accusation of war crimes.

Ex-HEW official dead

SALISBURY, Md. (AP) — Services will be held Monday for Bertha Sheppard Adkins, the undersecretary of Health, Education and Welfare under President Dwight Eisenhower.

She was appointed undersecretary in 1958. She once represented the United States at a United Nations seminar in Bogota, Colombia, at an American Day Festival in Pori, Finland, and as part of a U.S. delegation to Poland.

Upon leaving HEW, Miss Adkins was made head of the Foxcroft School in Middleburg, Va., staying there until 1967.

In 1968, she became co-chair of the campaign of New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, who sought the Republican presidential nomination.

She also was chairman of Adkins Co., a family lumber and building supply business with operations throughout Maryland's Eastern Shore.

She had lived for the past 15 years in a waterfront home overlooking the Tred Avon River in Oxford.

Many animals moved

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — The Indonesian government said Saturday that it just completed the biggest elephant relocation in world history — 230 pachyderms driven 30 miles in two months — a kind of jungle version of Hannibal's crossing the Alps.

It said the 1,000 men who drove the elephants through jungle and swamp fired rifles in the air to move the beasts, but that they kept the animals calm by gently calling them by their proper Indonesian name, "ganesha," or sometimes "mbah," which means grandma or grandpa.

THE MASS migration was announced by Emil Salim Said, the state minister for environment and development, who told a press conference the animals were moved from the food-short Air Sugihan area to a lush 190,000-acre preserve in the Lebong Hitam region of South Sumatra.

He said it was the first time in world history that so many elephants were relocated. Elim said during the operation only one baby elephant and an adult died, and that was because of illness.

He said about 1,000 people, including 440 members of the armed forces, were involved in the operation, which cost about $320,000.

According to Michael Grant's "History of Rome," the famous Carthaginian general Hannibal started across the Alps with 40,000 men and 37 elephants in his daring attempt to conquer Rome. During the crossing some 2,200 years ago he lost about half the men and half the elephants.

ELIM said "ganesha," which means elephant, was used in the Indonesian operation instead of the popular word "gajah" because of advice from animal experts.

The experts also said that "mbah" was to be used when working close to the pachyderms, and that the beaters should avoid wearing big hats because elephants don't like them.

The commander of the operation, army Lt. Col. I. Gampiong Manilla, said his men were careful to follow the advice and that none suffered serious injuries.

He said the elephants were driven from their former home through jungle corridors and shallow swampy canals that were specially prepared by the department of public works.

MANILLA said that gunshots and other loud noises were used to make the elephants move along. He said two helicopters also were used in the operation.

To prevent the elephants from returning to their former home, the government dug deep canals behind the herd as it advanced, Emil said.

He said about three years were spent studying the herd's movement at Air Sugihan and preparing their new location at Lebong Hitam.

Emil said that Lebong Hitam was much better suited for the elephants because it has abundant vegetation.

HE SAID Air Sugihan was almost fallow, and that the elephants, in their desperate search for food, ravaged farmers' crops in nearby settlements.

Emil estimated there are about 1,500 elephants living on Sumatra and the northern part of Borneo.

He said the animals must be protected and that the latest operation would be copied in other areas if the need arises.

Redskins advance to NFC championship game

Riggins powers Washington to 21-7 victory over Minnesota

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Riggins thundered through Minnesota's defense for 185 yards and a touchdown and set up two scoring passes by Joe Theismann as the Washington Redskins beat the Vikings 21-7 Saturday, and advanced into the National Football Conference championship game.

Riggins carried 37 times, one short of the National Football League playoff record, and gave a deep bow to the crowd as he left the field seconds before the game ended. Theismann completed 17 of 23 passes for 213 yards, including touchdowns of 3 yards to tight end Don Warren and 18 yards to wide receiver Alvin Garrett.

The Redskins, whose only loss during the strike-shortened nine-game season was to Dallas, will play either the Cowboys or Green Bay in next Saturday's conference championship game. The Packers play in Dallas Sunday in the NFC's other second-round playoff game.

RIGGINS, WHO had rolled up a Washington playoff-record 119 yards on 25 carries a week ago, when the Redskins opened their pursuit of the Super Bowl with a 31-7 romp over Detroit, was virtually unstoppable in the first half against the Vikings. He gained 75 yards on 19 rushes as the Redskins opened a 21-7 lead.

Two of the yards came on a scoring plunge on fourth-and-inches situation for Washington's second touchdown and a 14-0 lead with one minute remaining in the opening period.

The Vikings, who had the ball for barely 1½ minutes to that time, then scored when Ted Brown swept around left end for 18 yards and a touchdown. It was Brown who last Sunday had run 5 yards on a similar sweep with less than two minutes remaining to beat Atlanta 30-24 in Minnesota's playoff opener.

Theismann, who had hit Warren with a scoring strike to cap a 66-yard drive with the opening kickoff, followed Minnesota's TD 1:57 into the second quarter by driving the Redskins 70 yards in eight plays for their third touchdown.

He began it with an 11-yard pass to Garrett and completed it with the 18-yarder to the 5-foot-7, 178-pound wide receiver. Last week, Garrett, who had caught only one pass during the regular season, replaced injured Art Monk and caught three TD passes against the Lions.

FOR THE second straight week, all of the 55,045 seats in RFK Stadium were sold. This time, though, there were 452 no-shows, fans possibly deterred by the threat of a snowstorm that never materialized.

By the middle of the third quarter, still trailing 21-7, the Vikings resorted to trying to maintain possession on fourth-down plays. On a fourth-and-6 at the Washington 29, Tommy Kramer's pass to Sam McCullum in the end zone was batted away by leaping cornerback Joe Lavender.

Washington took over and methodically pushed deep into Minnesota territory, stalling at the 12-yard line. Mark Moseley, the record-setting placekicker who had missed wide to the left on a 47-yard field goal just befor halftime, kicked an apparent 29-yarder.

But Rich Milot of the Redskins was called for illegal use of the hands, the field goal was nullified, Washington was penalized 10 yards and Moseley missed again, wide to the right from 39 yards as the third quarter ended.

And with 10:23 to play and the Vikings still down by two touchdowns and facing a fourth-and 7 on the Washington 15, Kramer, passing out of a shotgun formation, was sacked by defensive end Tony McGee, killing Minnesota's final serious threat.

RIGGINS AND Theismann were the entire Washington offense on its first possession. The lumbering 235-pound fullback carried seven times for 34 yards and the quarterback completed all three of his passes — 17 yards to running back Nick Giaquinto, 12 yards to Charlie Brown and the 3-yarder for a touchdown on a rollout to the right to Warren, wide open on the far edge of the end zone 5:57 into the game.

The first two times Minnesota had the ball, Kramer was victimized by dropped passes and the Vikings failed to pick up a first down. And on Washington's third possesion, the Redskins made it 14-0, rolling 71 yards in seven plays.

The big one was a flea-flicker, Riggins taking the haldoff, then flipping the ball back to Theismann who unleashed a bomb to Garrett behind the Minnesota secondary. The 46-yard play carried to the 11-yard line. Four Riggins carries later, he was in the end zone with what turned out to be the winning touchdown.

Midway in the second quarter, the Vikings drove to the Redskins' 20-yard line. But after Brown was stopped for no gain and two Kramer passes fell incomplete, Rick Danmeier's field-goal attempt from 38 yards hit the left upright and bounced back, no good.

New York Jets defensive back Bobby Jackson (40) looks for running room past Los Angeles Raiders Mickey Marvin (65) and Marcus Allen (32) after intercepting a Jim Plunkett pass during the first half of Saturday's AFC playoff game in Los Angeles. The Jets posted a 17-14 victory over the Raiders.

Jets upset Raiders, 17-14

Todd hits Walker to set up Dierking's plunge

By JOHN NADEL
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Todd's 45-yard pass to Wesley Walker set up a 1-yard scoring plunge by Scott Dierking with 3:45 remaining Saturday, giving the New York Jets a 17-14 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders in a second-round National Football League playoff game.

Walker, who caught seven passes for 169 yards on the day, got open deep over the middle and Todd was right on target. Dierking scored the game-winning touchdown on the next play.

The upset triumph by the Jets, seeded sixth among American Football Conference playoff teams, advanced them into next weekend's AFC championship contest against the winner of Sunday's San Diego-Miami game.

The conference title game, scheduled next Sunday, will be played at either San Diego or Miami since both are seeded higher than the Jets.

Todd completed 15 of 24 passes for 277 yards on the afternoon, and linebacker Lance Mehl had two key interceptions for New York in the waning moments.

THE JETS, who are 8-3, drove 67 yards on six plays following a Los Angeles punt for the winning touchdown.

New York led at halftime 10-0, but seemed on the ropes when the Raiders scored a pair of third-period touchdowns to take their first lead. Los Angeles threatened to extend its advantage early in the fourth quarter, but New York defensive end Joe Klecko recovered a fumble by the Raiders' Marcus Allen at the the Jets' 14.

The Jets then moved into Los Angeles territory, but Burgess Owens stopped the threat with an interception in the Raiders' end zone.

The Jets had a chance to lock up the victory when Mehl intercepted a Jim Plunkett pass and returned it 8 yards to the Los Angeles 27-yard line with 2:49 left. But 23 seconds later, the Raiders had the ball back when Ted Hendricks recovered a fumble by Freeman McNeil and returned it 8 yards to the Los Angeles 33.

The Raiders moved to the New York 42-yard line, but Mehl picked off another Plunkett pass with 1:37 to go to wrap up the victory.

THE JETS took a 7-0 lead on a 20-yard scoring pass from Todd to Walker with 3:52 remaining in the first period to climax an 80-yard, 10-play drive.

The Jets made it 10-0 with 2:55 left before halftime on a 30-yard field goal by Pat Leahy. The three-pointer was set up by a 37-yard Todd-to-Walker pass.

The Raiders drove 77 yards with the second half kickoff to make it 10-7. Allen got the touchdown on a 4-yard run. Los Angeles took its 14-10 lead on a 57-yard pass from Plunkett to Malcolm Barnwell with 1:14 left in the period.

The game, played under ideal weather conditions, was attended by a crowd of 90,037. There were 90,688 tickets issued. The contest was blacked out on local television because the L.A. Coliseum's listed capacity for Raider games of about 73,000 was not reached by Thursday.

The Jets' McNeil, the NFL's leading rusher, picked up 105 yards on 23 carries. The Raiders' Allen, the NFL's Offensive Rookie of the Year, was held to only 36 yards on 15 carries to lead the Los Angeles ground game. He also caught six passes for 37 yards.

Plunkett completed 21 of 33 passes for 266 yards. He was sacked twice and intercepted three times. Todd was sacked on four occasions and was intercepted twice.

The Raiders moved into New York territory four times in the first half but came up empty on each occasion.

Less than five minutes into the game, Hendricks recovered a loose ball created by a poor Todd-to-McNeil exchange on an attempted handoff at the New York 34-yard line. But a couple of minutes later, Chris Bahr hit the right upright on a 34-yard field goal attempt.

LOS ANGELES got to the New York 27 early in the second quarter but

Green, Goldsberry, Harmon to attend Sports Banquet

The Midland Sports Banquet, the annual feast festival with great names of the sports world, past and present, will be held Feb. 8 at Green Tree Country Club, it was announced by Midland Cubs General Manager Bill Schammel.

And, as usual, the list of guests will be impressive.

For starters, Chicago Cubs General Manager Dallas Green will be among the headliners along with Chicago Cubs Farm Director Gordon Goldsberry. It will be the first banquet for Green.

Tom Harmon

MIDLAND CUB fans also will have an opportunity to meet Tom Harmon, who will pilot the Texas League farm club of the Chicago Nationals, this season. Harmon, a Lubbock native who lives in Austin, was the bullpen coach with Chicago last season.

Following an illustrious string of masters-of-ceremonies, a list that has included Bobby Winkles and Bobby Bragan, Cactus Pryor will keep the ball rolling at this year's fete.

Pryor is familiar to Texans from radio, TV and personal speaking engagements. Pryor at one time hosted Darrell Royal's weekly TV football show when Royal was head coach at the University of Texas.

FOR GREEN, it will be his second visit to Midland. Last season, Dallas came to the Tall City to watch the minor league farmhands for several days.

It was Green the Chicago Tribune Co. tapped to restore the long lost prestige of the Cubs when it bought the club from the Wrigleys in 1981. Green had developed the young talent at Philadelphia as director of the Phillies minor league system and later managed it to the 1980 World Championship. It was Philadelphia's first pennant since 1950.

Green added a second Class A club, Salinas, California League, to the Chicago minor league chain and so Midland will be drawing from two A clubs (Quad Cities, Midwest) this year, instead of one.

A former pitcher himself, one of Green's primary concerns is pitching. In an effort to correct what he felt was a glaring weakness last year, Green has established the position of a full-time pitching coach for Midland.

Schammel said other guests from the world of sports are being lined up for the night and will be announced as soon as they are confirmed.

Dallas Green

Gordon Goldsberry

BANQUET tickets again are $35. The evening's activities begin at 6:30 p.m. with a social hour and dinner is at 7:30 p.m.

The Texas League season is still three months away and Schammel already is rubbing his hands at the thought of having the final 12 games of the first half in cozy Cubs Stadium. "If we can win the first half, that means we get the West Division playoffs here instead of on the road. That hurt us last year, playing 10 games on the road before going into the playoffs at El Paso. It's just not the same as being at home."...The Cubs also will have the final five games of the second half at home...

Tulsa's Oilers are rumored in the market for a new manager to succeed Tommy Burgess...Brian Murphy, who managed Midland to a second half flag last season, is scouting for his old club the Kansas City Royals...

Eason passes East to victory

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Illinois quarterback Tony Eason opened the 58th annual Shrine East-West Game with a record 78-yard touchdown bomb and closed it with a 6-yard scoring pass to Oliver Williams with 14 seconds left to give the East a 26-25 triumph Saturday.

Stanford's John Elway completed 21 of 34 passes for 202 yards before he was shaken up late in the game. He was named the offensive player of the game, but the balloting was held before Eason's game-winning toss to his Illinois teammate.

The East offense got possession of the ball with 41 seconds left in the game after the West was forced to punt from its end zone. Eason hit Williams, an Illinois teammate, on a 29-yard completion in the winning drive.

Eason, who set nine NCAA passing records in his career, gave the East the lead at the start when he launched a pass to Tennessee's Mike Miller on the first play from scrimmage. He finished with 207 yards on 10 completions in 20 attempts.

Eason flung the ball 50 yards as Miller outleaped Arizona cornerback Al Gross and jogged into the end zone just 19 seconds into the game.

Elway then marched the West 71 yards in 11 plays, capped by a 14-yard touchdown run by Tim Harris of Washington State, to close the gap to 7-6. Chuck Nelson of Washington, the most accurate field goal kicker in NCAA history, missed the extra point when his low line drive was deflected, and he missed another conversion attempt later.

Nelson kicked a 29-yard field goal late in the first period to give the West a 9-7 lead. Elway, who completed 12 of 19 passes for 95 yards in the first quarter, drilled a low 7-yard touchdown pass to San Jose State's Tim Kearse early in the second period after LSU's James Britt fumbled away a punt return on the West 34-yard line.

San Jose State quarterback Steve Clarkson took over for Elway in the second period and combined with Stanford's Vincent White to give the West a 22-7 lead.

White bobbled but held onto a Clarkson pass for 25 yards and two plays later rammed into the end zone from five yards out. Indiana quarterback Babe Laufenberg brought the East back to 22-14 with a 14-play, 78-yard drive capped by a 9-yard touchdown pass to Miller with 1:28 left in the half.

Depth key to wins in MIHS swimming

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

Depth was the key to victory for the San Angelo girl's and Abilene Cooper boy's swim teams in the Midland Invitational High School Swim Meet at the City of Midland pool.

Despite capturing the most first-place finishes (six) the Midland High boys finished third, 12 points behind San Angelo, 316-304. Cooper won the boys title without a first place finish and both Cooper and Central garnered points in every swimming event.

What the Cougars did do was utilize the point-rich relays. Cooper had three teams finish in the money (3-6-10) in the 400-freestyle relay and two (2-4) in the 200-medley relay. That accounted for more than one-third (136 of 369) of their points. The relays are double the point value of the individual events.

The Bulldogs took first and eighth in the free-relay but didn't enter a medley relay team. Total points, 62, less than half of Coopers output.

"WE DECIDED to go the other way," Midland coach Jesse marsh said. "We did what we wanted to do. When district rolls around in five weeks we'll have both our relay teams out there."

The MHS boys were led by Andrew Jordan and Pat Rhamey, who each took home three first place trophies. Along with the relay victory, super sophomore Jordan won the 50 and 100-free. The senior Rhamey, also a member of the relay team, captured the 100 breaststroke and 200 individual medley.

Mike Seay and Steve Davis rounded out the victorious relay team. Seay had the other individual first place, capturing the 100 backstroke.

ACCEPT FOR the team title the San Angelo girls didn't have a first place trophy. But the Bobcats did place three girls in championship finals of three races. Central took second, fifth and seventh in the 100-free, third, sixth and seventh in the 50-free and sixth, seventh and eighth in the 100-breast, accounting for the 42-point margin, 301-259, over second place MHS.

The Bobcats doubled in four other events including the 400-free relay, 200-medley relay, 200-free, and 100-butterfly.

Other than Central, only MHS managed to get three persons into the finals of one event. The Bulldogs' Debbie Fleeger, Brandi Schafer and Michelle Craig took third, seventh and eighth respectively, in the 200-free. Schafer and Craig teamed with Rachelle Fink and Suzie Simpson to capture the 400-free relay.

Simpson was the only lady Bulldog to win an individual first place. The senior was out of the water and toweling herself dry befor the rest of the competition finished the 500-free. Simpson finished the event 50 seconds ahead of the field.

LED BY Jana Housman's first place finish in the 100-free, the Rebel girls came in fifth. Houseman also took second in the 50-free and was a member of the third place 400-free relay team.

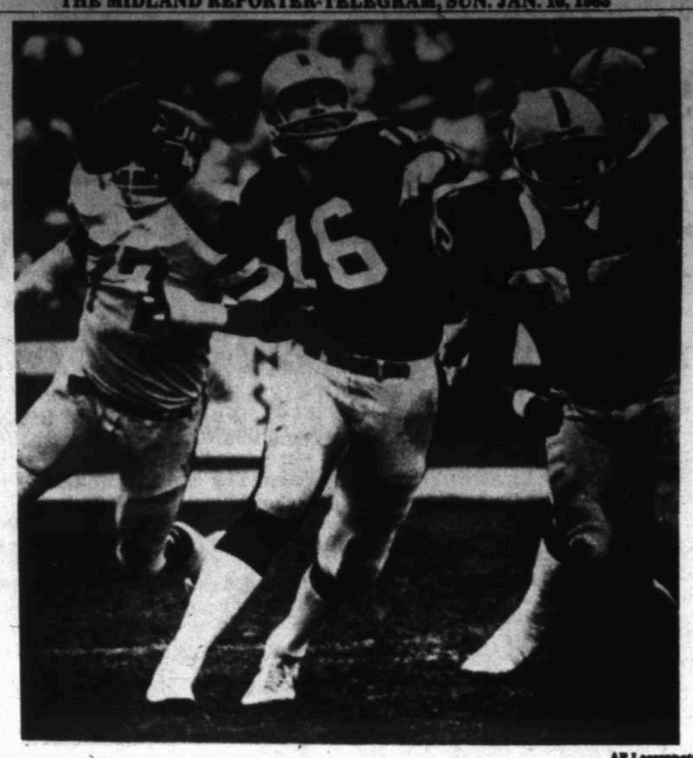

"I think our girls team did real good," coach Charles Guthrie said. "Every one of them bettered their times and Karen Eberly knocked 18 seconds off her best time in the 500-freestyle." Eberly finished third in the days longest event.

The Rebels will travel to Amarillo for an invitational meet Feb. 4 while the Bulldogs will abstain from competition until the district meet Feb. 18-19 at the COM facility.

The MHS boys went undefeated through the district dual meets while the girls were 5-2. The Lee girls were also 5-2 while the Rebel boys were 2-5.

"The district meet will be a lot closer because of depth," Marsh said. "Here a team scored points for anyone who finished in the top 16 at district only the top six are awarded points."

All 20 of the Bulldog entrants scored points in the meet.

Jackson intercepts Plunkett to stop first half L.A. drive

The Jets then moved to the Los Angeles 29, but Leahy missed badly on a 47-yard field goal attempt.

With 15 seconds to go, the Raiders out of timeouts and the ball at the New York 34, Plunkett hit Branch at the Jets' 18. It seemed Branch would be able to get out of bounds, stopping the clock for a field goal attempt, but Kirk Springs belted the Los Angeles receiver and the ball popped into the air. New York's Jerry Holmes grabbed it near the sideline to end the threat.

The Raiders had the ball for the first 7:56 of the third quarter, using 12 plays for their 77-yard scoring march. The second Los Angeles touchdown was set up when Lester Hayes partially blocked a punt by Chuck Ramsey and Jack Squirek recovered the ball at the New York 40-yard line. The deflected punt traveled only 17 yards.

Hayes intercepted a pass by Todd a few minutes later at the New York 42. The Raiders moved quickly to the Jets' 19 before Allen fumbled and Klecko recovered.

Klecko, who led the NFL in sacks during the 1981 season, saw his first extended action since suffering a serious knee injury in New York's second game of the season.

Skidmore wins Miller High Life Classic by defeating Cook

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Gary Skidmore, starting off the championship showdown Saturday with six strikes in his first seven balls, took a 234-180 victory over Steve Cook to win the $135,000 Miller High Life Classic men's bowling tournament.

The second-seeded Skidmore, from Albuquerque, N.M., had defeated Dennis Jacques 205-183 to reach the title game against Cook, who was the No.1 seed going into the finals

The victory was worth $23,000 to Skidmore, a 28-year-old who had won just one previous Professional Bowlers Association event.

Jacques, from Middletown, N.J., made the finals of a PBA event for the first time. He defeated Joe Staton of Anaheim 163-133 and Dave Husted of Milwaukie, Ore., 228-210 to earn the right to face Skidmore.

Jacques rolled two strikes to jump in front of Skidmore, but Skidmore stayed close and closed with strikes in the ninth, 10th and 11th frames.

Cook, from Roseville, Calif., began the title match with a split and was never able to recover against the fast-starting Skidmore, who bunched four consecutive strkes in the fourth through seventh frames.

Navratilova gives Austin lesson in power tennis

HOUSTON (AP) - Top-seeded Martina Navratilova gave Tracy Austin a lesson in power tennis Saturday night, blasting the No. 3 seed 6-2, 6-2 to gain the finals of the $150,000 Virginia Slims of Houston tennis tournament despite a controversial call at match point.

Navratilova, who has lost only three of her past 102 matches, moved into the finals against seventh seeded Sylvia Hanika, who defeated Eva Pfaff, 7-5,6-1 in the other semifinals match.

Hanikka, who lost to Navratilova in the finals of last week's tournament at Washington, has scored one of those three victories during Navratilova's hot streak.

Austin faced her strongest challenge since recovering from a back ailment against Navratilova and was not up to the task. Navratilova broke Austin in the fourth and eighth games of the first set.

Navratilova broke Austin again in the second game of the second set and wrapped it up with a service break in the eighth and final game with a controversial backhand volley that nicked the line at the first match point.

Despite the protests of the capacity crowd, the linesman called the ball good and the umpire upheld the decision.

Austin said the press had built Navratilova into an unbeatable figure.

"I'm not taking anything away from Martina, she's playing great," Austin said. "But you guys are helping her. I hear the girls talking in the locker room and they feel they have to play perfect to win.

"It's not the press's fault or Martina's fault. It's the players fault for thinking about who they are playing instead of playing the ball."

Navratilova offered encouragement for the media.

"I like that, keep writing, keeping building that aura," she said. "Really, it's because I haven't been struggling. I lost only 12 games in five matches at Washington last week."

Pfaff, who struggled through the singles and doubles draw playing four three-set matches and four tie-breakr games, finally cratered in the second set after a near comeback in the opening set against her fellow countryman from West Germany.

"We didn't finish playing doubles until midnight (Friday)," the weary Pfaff said. "I felt good at first, but I guess the concentration wasn't what it was supposed to be. I think I'll just be able to make it to the plane tomorrow."

Hanika broke Pfaff in the third game of the match but Pfaff broke back in the fourth game and held in the fifth game. During a stretch over the fifth and sixth games, Pfaff won seven straight pints.

Hanika, using her steady baseline game to pass the tiring Pfaff, broke her West German opponent in the 11th game to take the first set.

Pfaff lost her final chance to regain the momentum when she had Hanika down love-30 in the fourth game of the second set but hit three errors to allow Hanika to hold.

"I was making a lot of unforced errors in the first set," Hanika said. "But she was eitherhitting out or into the net. Sometimes I thought she was going to fall asleep, she looked so tired."

Hawkins' Simmons a SWC blue chipper

DALLAS (AP) — Edwin Simmons has gained 437 yards rushing in one game and 289 in another. He can dash 40 yards in 4.5 seconds. He can't leap tall buildings, but coaches still call him 'Superman.'

Edwin Simmons may be the next Hershel Walker, or Marcus Dupree, or Eric Dickerson — he has been compared to all three.

And Southwest Conference football coaches say Simmons, when compared to the flock of college prospects graduating from Texas high schools this year, may be incomparable.

"Coaches are comparing him to Hershel Walker, Marcus Dupree — all the top runners," said Kenneth Skidmore, Simmons' coach at Class 2A Hawkins in East Texas.

"I've been in coaching 12 years and I've never seen anything like him before. He has great speed, great lateral movement. He has all the moves of smaller backs, but he has such great strength. He can just run over people," Skidmore said.

SIMMONS TOPPED a list of "blue chip" prospects compiled by the Dallas Times Herald by polling the nine SWC head coaches. The list was published in the newspaper's Sunday editions.

On eight of the nine ballots, Simmons was among the top blue chippers.

Simmons, who has narrowed his list of suitors to the University of Southern California, Southern Methodist University and the University of Texas, rushed for 2,935 yards and 38 touchdowns in 12 games last season.

SMU dearly hopes it has the inside track on Simmons and Fort Worth Eastern Hills running back Jeff Atkins, who trailed Simmons on the blue chip list by one vote. The Ponies, who finished No. 2 in the nation with a win over Pittsburgh in the Cotton Bowl, hope Simmons and Atkins could replace the Pony Express — Dickerson and Craig James.

Atkins, at 5-11 and 205 pounds, has recorded 2,333 yards on the ground and 25 touchdowns in 11 games. He said he is still considering all of the schools hoping to sign his talent on Feb. 9, the first national signing date.

Also listed in the Times Herald blue chip roster were Temple tight end Albert Reese, Belton quarterback Bret Stafford, and Angleton linebacker David Stanley, all of whom also had seven votes.

They were followed, in order, by Cooper wide receiver Ronald Morris (6), Aldine MacArthur wide receiver James Shibest (6), Lake Highlands defensive back Aaron Grant (5), Arlington Bowie linebacker Brad Hastings (5), Jersey Willage lineman Paul Jetton (5), and Refugio defensive back James Lott (5).

Also listed with four votes were Bryan linebacker Rod Bernstine, Brownwood lineman Mike Davis, Houston Stratford lineman Jeff Glasser, Eastland quarterback Jay Hess, Dallas Skyline linebacker Dante Jones, Houston Yates tight end Sylvester Morgan, Conroe lineman Jay Muller, and Port Arthur Jefferson quarterback Craig Stump.

To be considered a blue chip prospect, a player had to receive four votes from the coaches.

Lobos dump Wyoming, 76-71

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — George Scott scored 21 points, Phil Smith added 11 and the two combined on a decisive free throw shooting exhibition to lead New Mexico to a come-from-behind 76-71 Western Athletic Conference victory over Wyoming Saturday night.

The triumph gives New Mexico a 2-0 record in the conference and 10-4 record overall. Wyoming, making its WAC debut, dropped to 8-6 for the season.

Scott, a 6-foot-8 center, and the 5-10 Smith, who had lost his starting job at point guard, hit 20 of 22 free throws, with most of them coming in the second half when the Lobos wiped out a nine point Wyoming lead.

Wyoming was led by leaping forward Anthony Martin with 22 points. But Martin fouled out with more than eight minutes left in the game and New Mexico's come back was aided by Wyoming's loss on fouls down the stretch of two other starters, center Mark Wrapp and guard Rodney Gowens.

Davis rejects suggestions of Rosenbloom's murder

MIAMI (AP) — The medical examiner who performed the autopsy on the body of Carroll Rosenbloom in 1979 rejects suggestions that the late Los Angeles Rams' owner may have been murdered while swimming off Golden Beach.

Dr. Joseph Davis, the Dade County coroner, said evidence he reviewed after Rosenbloom drowned April 2, 1979, indicated there was no "reason to believe that this is anything other than an unfortunate accident."

The suggestion that Rosenbloom, 72, may have been murdered was raised in a television documentary which investigates gambling ties to the National Football League.

The program, prepared by WGBH-TV in Boston and scheduled for broadcast Monday, includes a segment in which a Canadian tourist who witnessed the drowning said he saw "a black object going in an opposite direction of the waves" as he swam out to where Rosenbloom struggled in the water.

Friday, Los Angeles County Supervisor Kenneth Hahn asked U.S. Attorney General William French Smith to investigate the possibility that Rosenbloom's death was not an accident. He also asked for a probe into allegations that organized crime was involved in fixing of NFL games between 1968 and 1970.

Mike Kirk, the senior producer of the documentary, told The Miami Herald that the "black object" could have been a scuba diver pulling Rosenbloom beneath the surface. "That's the theory," said Kirk.

Davis told the newspaper that the Canadian man, identified as Raymond Tanguay of Montreal, was interviewed by homicide detectives shortly after the drowning and that Tanguay made no mention of seeing a black object.

The Herald reported, however, that Tanguay told a reporter in Montreal he did advise detectives of the object through his wife Suzanne, who interpreted. He said authorities had difficulty understanding, though, because of his wife's difficulty with English.

The program's producers told the newspaper that Tanguay "makes no suppositions" about Rosenbloom's death.

Tanguay said Rosenbloom was alive when he reached him in choppy seas. He described the black object as "about five feet long and about 20 inches wide. It might have been a man, it might have been a fish or both."

The newspaper reported Tanguay said he never concluded it was a man in a wetsuit, but that two private detectives who visited at his home last month suggested the possibility.

"I said it was possbile," said Tanguay. "I don't know what it was."

Three persons who said they witnessed the drowning told The Herald there was no sign of divers in the water nor along the beachfront that day.

"Nobody else was out there," said Rosalee Scott, who was standing at a second-floor window overlooking the beach.

The documentary says two unidentified men pulled Rosenbloom's body ashore, then ordered Tanguay to get away.

Scott, Theresa Politzer and Hugo Politzer told the Herald, however, that they were on the beach when the body was retrieved and they knew both rescuers as Golden Beach police officers.

East wins Hula Bowl, 30-14

HONOLULU (AP) — Pittsburgh's Dan Marino passed for 156 yards and one touchdown to lead the East to a 30-14 victory over the West in the annual Hula Bowl game Saturday night.

Marino's efforts won him the outstanding offensive player award. Navy's Paul Soraes won the defensive honor.

Dana Moore of Mississippi State opened the scoring late in the first quarter with a 30-yard field goal that capped a 70-yard drive led by Marino.

Three plays later, Soraes recovered a West fumble on the West 38. Seven plays later, Curt Warren of Penn State plunged over the West goal line for the first touchdown of the game.

The West took the kickoff and began a drive downfield but fumbled again on its own 43. The East took over and scored three plays later on a 43-yard pass from Minnesota's Mike Hohensee to Tony Hunter of Notre Dame.

Gary Kubiak of Texas A&M got the West moving for the first time, leading a 73-yard scoring drive, highlighted by a 25-yard pass from Kubiak to Hawaii's Reggie Young and capped by a 2-yard run by Jessie Clark of Arkansas.

The West got the ball again under the Hula Bowl rule that the trailing team receive the kickoff after a score. But the West was stopped and had to punt. The East also was unable to move and punted, but several plays later, the East regained the ball on a fumble recovery by Eric Dickerson of Southern Methodist. The West then stopped the East on the 2 with six seconds left in the half.

Knowing the risks is important to selecting the correct type and amount of insurance. Discovering what these risks might be involves a good hard look at property and family responsibilities. It involves thinking about the chance of various mishaps or events which could cause major trouble and expense. It is wise to insure against these. If you are in the business of saving money, it is also just as wise not to insure against the possibility of smaller losses that may not hurt at all. An insurance professional is trained to analyze your personal situation, has the actuarial tables to statistically substantiate the analysis and recommend proper insurance coverage.

Insurance is a means of planning adequate protection to meet future needs and loss potentials. Whether considering loss of finances due to catastrophe or planning for living needs upon retirement, insurance offers the varied avenues for everyone to reach their goals. Start planning today for the future with a call to POWELL INSURANCE AGENCY, 601 N. Marienfeld. We are the insurance professionals with an eye to the future. Tel . 686-2001. Open 8:30-4:30 Mon.-Fri.

INSURANCE TIP:

Whole insurance policies' cash values continue to rise even after the policies are paid in full.

Many of us have needs for large amounts of storage space but very little room to be used as such. For instance, some of us like both winter and summer sports. That means that we need at least a pair of skis, boots and poles, snow shoes, ice skates, and maybe even a snowmobile. When it comes to summer, some of us like to camp. That, in turn, means tents, lanterns, kerosene stoves, ice chests, sleeping bags, and on and on. But when there is no place to keep any of these things, having fun can become something of a burden. Why not let your rental store handle storage problems for you? Rent what you need only when you need it, at your convenience.

Do you like to go camping a weekend or two a year? Skiing two or three days a winter? Do you need to haul some items one day a year? How much will it cost to buy the equipment you need to get the job done? One thing is certain, it is a lot less expensive to rent it from BOB's ARENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. In addition, you may find we have some items you never knew about that will help you do the job better. Come in soon and let's get acquainted. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

English leads Nuggets past Rockets, 131-111

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Alex English scored 16 of his 39 points in the third quarter in leading the Denver Nuggets to a 131-111 National Basketball Association win over the Houston Rockets Saturday.

The Nuggets took the lead for keeps on a short jumper by Kiki Vandeweghe, who had 38 points, that gave Denver a 42-40 lead with 5:42 left in the first half.

After building a 60-50 halftime lead, English took over.

The 6-7 forward from South Carolina hit seven of nine shots from the floor in the third period as the 19-21 Nuggets expanded their lead to as many as 21 points.

The Rockets, who had the worst record in the NBA at 5-32, lost their fifth straight game and 18th of their 20.

Houston guard Allen Leavell hit a career-high 32 points to pace Houston. Joe Bryant added 20.

Spurs 117, Bullets 96

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — George Gervin had 31 points, Mike Mitchell added 22 and Artis Gilmore grabbed 17 rebounds as the San Antonio Spurs coasted to a 117-96 victory over the Washington Bullets.

The victory kept the Spurs in first place in the Midwest Division over Kansas City.

San Antonio led at halftime 53-43 and led by as many as 27 points in the fourth quarter.

The Bullets shot under 50 percent from the field for the 13th straight game, hitting 42 of 102 shots for 41 percent.

Gene Banks scored 19 points, Gilmore added 17 and Johnny Moore had 11 points and 13 assists after sitting out one game with food poisoning.

Jeff Ruland scored 17 points and Greg Ballard had 16 for Washington, which fell to 17-19 on the season, 14 games behind Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division.

THE NBA

Jazz 107, Mavericks 105

SALT LAKE CITY — A fourth quarter Dallas comeback fell short Saturday night as the Utah Jazz, behind Darrell Griffith's 32 points, held on for a 107-105 National Basketball Association victory.

The Jazz held a 92-80 lead going into the final period, but scored only 15 points the rest of the way.

Meanwhile, the Mavericks kept chipping away and cut the margin to two points with two minutes remaining. But neither team got another point.

Dallas was led by Mark Aguirre, who matched Griffith's 32 points. Jay Vincent scored 24 for the Mavericks and Jim Spanarkel added 17.

Nets 100, Knicks 96

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Otis Birdsong hit an 18-foot jump shot with 13 seconds left and Albert King scored 28 points, including two free throws after time ran out, to lead the New Jersey Nets to a 100-96 victory over the New York Knicks.

New York had a chance to send the game into overtime, but Vince Taylor missed a 15-footer with three seconds left. The ball rattled around the rim and went out of bounds, touched last by the Knicks.

76ers 114, Pacers 105

PHILADELPHIA — Moses Malone scored 28 points, including eight in the final four minutes, as the Philadelphia

Suns 114, Clippers 101

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Walt Davis scored 20 of his season-high 36 points in the fourth period as the Phoenix Suns avoided a second-half collapse and beat the San Diego Clippers 114-101 Saturday night in a National Basketball Association game.

Cavaliers 90, Celtics 86

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Cliff Robinson scored 25 points and World B. Free tossed in 24 as the Cleveland Cavaliers upset the Boston Celtics 90-86.

Lakers 120, Hawks 101

ATLANTA — Jamaal Wilkes' 21 points paced the Los Angeles Lakers in a 120-101 drubbing of the Atlanta Hawks.

Islanders beat Kings, 5-2

By The Associated Press

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — John Tonelli's three goals powered the New York Islanders to a 5-2 victory over the Los Angeles Kings, the three-time Stanley Cup champions' fifth victory in a row.

The Kings have won just twice in their last 18 games (2-13-3).

Tonelli, a 25-year-old left wing, scored twice in a freewheeling first period that saw New York take a 3-2 lead. Bryan Trottier opened the scoring at 3:50 when he knocked in a perfect pass from Mike Bossy on a power play for his 21st goal of the season.

Tonelli, who now has six goals in his last four games, notched his second career hat trick at 11:46 of the second period. With the Kings short-handed, Tonelli took a corner pass from Trottier and blasted in a 35-footer. It was Tonelli's 19th goal of the season and Trottier's fourth point of the game.

Defenseman Tomas Johnsson's eighth goal of the season at 15:43 of the third period sealed the victory.

THE NHL

Sabres 4 Capitals 2

LANDOVER, Md. — Phil Housley broke a 2-2 tie with a backhanded scoring shot late in the second period and the Buffalo Sabres went on to beat the Washington Capitals 4-2.

The 18-year-old rookie, who was one of three players Buffalo drafted in the first round last June, also assisted on Mike Foligno's first-period goal that tied the score at 1-1.

Nordiques 7, Flames 2

QUEBEC — Michel Goulet scored twice and the three Stastny brothers collected nine points between them as the Quebec Nordiques snapped a five-game losing string with a 7-2 victory over the Calgary Flames.

Marian Stastny had one goal and added three assists, Peter added one goal and two assists and Anton contributed one goal and an assist as Quebec stopped the Flames' four-game winning streak.

Red Wings 4, Maple Leafs 3

DETROIT — Dwight Foster scored at 9:06 of the third period Saturday night to give the Detroit Red Wings a 4-3 victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs.

The victory boosted the Red Wings' margin to six points over Toronto for fourth place in the Norris Division and moved Detroit to within two points of third-place St. Louis.

Whalers 2, Devils 1

HARTFORD, Conn. — Ron Francis scored on a backhander with 4:50 remaining Saturday night to give the Hartford Whalers a 2-1 victory over the New Jersey Devils.

The victory was the Whalers' second in a row after a 12-game winless streak.

The winning goal by Francis came when he intercepted an errant clearing pass by New Jersey's John Wensink. He took the puck, skated in alone on New Jersey's goal and flipped his backhand shot over goalie Chico Resch.

New Jersey had tied the scored just four minutes and 49 seconds earlier when former Whaler Mike Antonovich beat Hartford goaltender Greg Millen with wrist shot from between the face-off circles.

With the victory, Hartford's record improved to 12-28-5, while New Jersey fell to 9-28-9, the worst record in the NHL.

Bruins 2, Rangers 0

Peeters had 14 saves while extending his unbeaten streak to 22 games.

The Bruins peppered New York goalie Ed Mio with 41 shots in winning their fourth game in a row and snapping the Rangers' seven-game unbeaten streak.

Black Hawks 4, Flyers 4

PHILADELPHIA — Steve Larmer and Darryl Sutter scored third-period goals seven seconds apart to earn the Chicago Black Hawks a 4-4 tie with the Philadelphia Flyers.

The tie snapped Philadelpha's 10-game winning streak.

Frank Bathe gave Philadelphia a 4-2 lead with a 25-foot shot at 2:09 in the third period, but Larmer batted in a rebound at 2:58 and Sutter scored from the left circle at 3:05 to tie the game at 4-4.

Canadiens 8, Penguins 7

PITTSBURGH — Steve Shutt and Mark Napier each scored twice to key a six-goal second period that helped the Montreal Canadiens to an 8-7 win over the Pittsburgh Penguins.

With Montreal trailing 2-1, Shutt scored two goals in 10 seconds to put the Canadiens ahead to stay. Shutt scored at 5:11 against Penguin goalie Michel Dion, who was injured on the play.

Perkins' 36 points leads Tar Heels past Cavaliers, 101-95

Indiana holds off fourth quarter rally by Purdue to claim 81-78 victory

By The Associated Press

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Sam Perkins scored a career-high 36 points as No.11 North Carolina withstood a late second-half rally by Virginia and hung on for a 101-95 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Saturday.

It was the ninth straight triumph for the defending NCAA champions, who are 12-3 overall and 2-0 in ACC play.

In having its 34-game, home-court winning streak snapped, Virginia dropped to 12-2 overall and 3-1 in the ACC.

North Carolina led by its biggest margin, 85-62, with 9:41 remaining, but Virginia rallied to close the gap to 97-95 with 50 seconds left. A 23-7 spurt by the Cavaliers had brought them within 92-85 with 3:24 remaining.

After Jim Mullin's off-balance jumper cut the lead to 97-95, Jim Braddock and Michael Jordan each connected on a pair of free throws to clinch the victory.

INDIANA 81, PURDUE 78

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Randy Wittman and Ted Kitchel scored 23 points apiece Saturday, including 10 of Indiana's final 14 points from the free throw line, as the No.4-ranked Hoosiers turned back a second-half rally to beat Purdue 81-78 in a Big Ten Conference basketball game.

The Hoosiers, taking control with a 20-2 burst midway through the first half, held a 20-point lead before the Boilermakers' comeback. Purdue cut the margin to 15 at halftime and steadily closed the gap in the second half.

The victory, Indiana's first at Purdue since 1976, lifted the Hoosiers to 2-1 in the Big Ten and 12-1 for the season. Purdue, topped by Ricky Hall with 21 points and Palombizio with 19, fell to 2-2 and 11-3.

Auburn 75, Kentucky 67

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Darrell Lockhart poured in 22 points and led Auburn to a share of the Southeastern Conference basketball lead with a 75-67 upset of No.6 Kentucky in college basketball action Saturday.

It was Auburn's first victory over Kentucky at Lexington, where it had lost 26 previous games.

The victory raised Auburn to 10-3 overall and 3-1 in the SEC, which is good for at least a share of first place.Kentucky dropped to records of 11-3 and 3-2.

Auburn's Chuck Person added 20 points, including 12 in the second half, and Odell Mosteller had 15.

Georgia 67, Alabama 64

ATHENS, Ga. — Freshman Donald Hartry's 20-footer from the left of the key with 12 seconds remaining broke a 64-64 deadlock and Vern Fleming added a clinching free throw with one second to go as Georgia trimmed 10th-ranked Alabama 67-64 in a Southeastern Conference basketball game Saturday night.

It was the fourth SEC setback in five games for the Crimson Tide, which had rolled through their pre-conference schedule with eight consecutive victories.

Fleming led Georgia, 11-2 overall and 2-2 in the SEC, with 21 points, Terry Fair had 15 and Hartry 14, including five long shots over the Tide zone in the second half.

Terry Williams tallied 24 points for Alabama, Whatley had 14 and Hurt 10.

Minnesota 69, Michigan St. 67

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Substitute forward Barry Wohler stole the ball from Michgian State's Scott Skiles and sank the winning basket with four seconds remaining to lift 17th-ranked Minnesota to a 69-67 victory over the Spartans in Big Ten basketball.

Minnesota's 7-foot-3 center Randy Breuer, who finished with 25 points, hit 11 of the Golden Gophers' opening 13 points while holding Spartans center Kevin Willis scoreless until the 6:48 mark of the first half. From that point, Willis hit 10 points in a three-minute span to cut an eight-point Minnesota lead to 31-27.

Minnesota lifted its record to 3-1 in the Big Ten and 11-2 overall while Michigan State fell to 2-2 and 9-5.

Iowa 73, Iowa State 56

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Greg Stokes led all scorers with 21 points as 12th-rated Iowa used balanced scoring to defeat Iowa State Saturday 73-56 in a non-conference basketball game.

The victory lifted Iowa's record to 11-2. Iowa State fell to 8-5.

Three other Hawkeyes scored in double figures. Michael Payne tallied 14, while Bob Hansen and Steve Carfino each collected 12 points.

Barry Stevens led Iowa State with 18 points and teammate Ron Harris added 16.

In the first half, Ron Harris gave the Cyclones their only lead at 2-0, but the Hawkeyes scored the next eight points for an 8-2 advantage.

N.C. State 81, Ga. Tech 61

RALEIGH, N.C. — Ernie Myers, subbing for the injured Dereck Whittenburg, tied a school freshman record with 27 points to lead No.19-ranked North Carolina State to an 81-61 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory over Georgia Tech Saturday.

Myers tied the record set by Clyde Austin against Maryland in 1977. N.C. State snapped a two-game losing streak and raised its record to 8-3, 2-1 in the ACC. Whittenburg suffered a broken foot last Wednesday in a game against Virginia and is out for the season.

Illinois 63, Ohio State 55

CHAMPAIGN Ill. — Guard Derek Harper scored 21 points, 15 in the second half, to lead Illinois to a 63-55 Big Ten Basketball win over 20th-ranked Ohio State Saturday.

Forward Anthony Welch added 16 to the Illini effort.

Harper's output tied his season-high set earlier in the season against Illinois State.

Illinois led 30-27 at the end of an error-filled first half. Early in the game the Buckeyes went four minutes without a basket. Illinois followed that by going more than eight minutes without scoring a point.

Boston College 68, St. John's 64

NEWTON, Mass — Michael Adams scored a career-high 27 points, made eight steals and added five assists to ignite Boston College to a 68-64 upset over third-ranked St. John's in college basketball Saturday night.

Unranked Boston College, which reached the Final Eight of last year's NCAA tournament, improved its record to 11-2 overall and 2-1 in the Big East. St. John's lost for the first time, as its record fell to 14-1 overall and 4-1 in conference play.

The Redmen led only once, 37-36, after Chris Mullin hit the first basket of the second half. But they stayed close and trailed 57-54 before Adams, a sophomore guard, took charge.

Memphis State 80, Cincinnati 63

CINCINNATI — Junior guard Phillip Haynes scored 22 points to pace top-ranked Memphis State in an 80-63 romp over Cincinnati in a Metro Conference basketball game Saturday night.

Memphis State, which gained the No. 1 ranking last Monday only to be upset 69-56 by Virginia Tech that night, improved its record to 12-1 overall and 2-1 in the conference. Cincinnati fell to 8-7 and 0-3 in the Metro.

Center Derrick Phillips scored 18 points for Memphis State, 15 in the second half, and forward Keith Lee chippped in 16. Kevin Gaffney led Cincinnati with 16 points.

Mississippi St. 75, Tennessee 74, OT

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Jeff Malone scored 35 points, including nine in overtime, as Mississippi State upset No.18 Tennessee 75-74 in a Southeastern Conference basketball game Saturday night.

Missouri 78, Dayton 64

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Guard Jon Sundvold scored 25 points and center Steve Stipanovich set a school career-scoring record with 19 to lead No.14 Missouri to a 78-64 non-conference basketball win over Dayton.

Missouri scored the first eight points of the game behind Stipanovich, who had 12 first-half points and became Missouri's all-time scoring leader with 1,457 career points.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Lamar beats Arkansas State, 59-56

By The Associated Press

JONESBORO, Ark. — Reserve guard Nicky Snell scored 14 points in the second half Saturday to spark Lamar University to a 59-56 victory over Arkansas State in Southland Conference play.

Snell scored 16 altogether, including two free throws with 11 seconds left. It was the first Southland Conference game of the season for both teams.

The preseason favorite to win the league title, Lamar started slowly. The Cardinals trailed 16-4 with 11:50 left in the first half.

TEXAS BASKETBALL

Arkansas State shot 71 percent from the field in the first half, but the Indians dropped to 35 percent in the second half.

The top Indian scorer was Jeff Bolding with 15, followed by guard Daryl Dodson with 13.

For the Cardinals, forward Kenneth Perkins had 12.

Lamar is 10-3 overall. Arkansas State, which hosts the league's only conference game Monday against North Texas State, dropped to 8-5 overall. The Indians have lost three straight.

Sam Houston 78, Angelo St. 68

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Regi Harris drilled in 27 points to pace Sam Houston State to an easy 78-68 victory over Angelo State in the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams Saturday night.

The Bearkats, now 8-4 for the year, had as much as an 18-point lead in the second half to hand the Rams the LSC defeat. It was also the 100th collegiate victory for Sam Houston head coach Robert McPherson.

Allen, a freshman from Decatur, Ala., paced the Bearkats on the boards while Harris, a sophomore from Orlando, Fla., hit 11 of 16 shots from the floor. Sam Houston had a 39-29 halftime advantage.

S.F. Austin 69, Abilene Christian 47

NACOGDOCHES, Texas — Stephen F. Austin University opened the defense of its Lone Star Conference crown with a 69-47 win over Abilene Christian University.

Senior Craig Williams led the Wildcats with 16 points. The win for the Lumberjacks moved its overall record to 7-5 and 1-0 in the LSC. The Wildcats dropped to 7-6 and 0-1.

Illinois St. 89, W. Texas St. 73

AMARILLO, Texas — Illinois State, led by Dwayne Tyus' 19 points, never trailed Saturday night as it rolled to an 89-73 Missouri Valley Conference basketball victory over West Texas State.

Texas-Arlington 83, North Texas 80

ARLINGTON, Texas — Junior guard Danny Johnson scored 23 points to lead four Texas-Arlington players in double figures as the Mavericks outscored North Texas State 83-80 Saturday night in Southland Conference basketball action.

NW Louisiana 64, Hardin-Simmons 63

NATCHITOCHES, La. — Kenny Hale scored 18 of his 27 points in the second half Saturday to rally Northwestern Louisiana to a 64-63 come-from-behind victory over Hardin-Simmons in a TransAmerica Athletic Confernce basketball game.

Texas A&I 91, Howard Payne 90

SW Texas St. 70, E. Texas St. 53

SAN MARCOS, Texas — Guard Terry Murray scored 23 points as Southwest Texas opened Lone Star Conference play with a 70-53 win over East Texas State Saturday here.

Don Joyce robbed, bound, shot in motel

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Don Joyce, one of the original players with the Minnesota Vikings, was robbed, bound and shot twice trying to protect his wife from a gunman who surprised the couple in a Missouri motel room Thursday night.

Joyce was in intensive care at Missouri Delta Community Hospital in Sikeston, Mo., following surgery to remove a bullet from his shoulder, he said from his hospital bed Friday.

Joyce, 53, and his wife, Sharon, had been driving Thursday from their Mahtomedi, Minn., home to Mobile, Ala., where Joyce was scheduled to watch the Senior Bowl next weekend. Joyce is head scout for the BLESTO football scouting organization. Joyce said they stopped for the night at the Holiday Inn in Sikeston.

He was going out the door to get some luggage when a man stuck a .38-caliber handgun in his ribs and forced him back into the room, Joyce told a St. Paul reporter by telephone.

After taking Joyce's money, the man forced Mrs. Joyce to tie a coffee pot cord around her husband's wrists. The gunman stuffed a gag in Joyce's mouth and forced him into the bathroom, Joyce said.

"He said, 'If you don't mess with me, you won't get killed,'" Joyce said.

As the man began undressing Mrs. Joyce, the former football player worked his hands free and charged the gunman.

"It's something you do without thinking," Joyce said. "It's a miracle. I still can't believe it. I think I'm on borrowed time."

Morgan uses ace, Archer eagles in low-scoring L.A. Open round

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Gil Morgan, a winner last week, used a hole-in-one as the spark that ignited an 8-under-par 63 and a gave him a share of the third round lead Saturday in the $300,000 Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open Golf Tournament.

Morgan's ace, the second of his career, came with a 5-iron shot on the 173-yard seventh hole at the Rancho Park Municipal course. It opened a string of four holes that he played five under par.

But that was only a small portion of the heroics scored by a varied cast on this mild, cloudy day. Among the others:

Veteran George Archer, who scored consecutive eagles en route to a 10-under-par 61 that brought him from the cut figure to within a single stroke of the lead.

Arnold Palmer, who is seeking to break a 10-year victory drought, shot a 68 and was a single stroke back with 18 holes to play.

Gene Littler, 52, who one-putted 10 times with a new, strange putter that has the brand name "Basakwerd" and looks the part. He shot a 66 and was tied for the lead at 202 with Morgan, Mark McCumber and Lanny Wadkins. Wadkins, a playoff loser to Morgan last week, had a 67 and McCumber shot 65, finishing it off with a 31 on the back.

Tied with Archer and Palmer at 203, 10 under par and one off the pace, were Fuzzy Zoeller and second-round leader Gibby Gilbert. Zoeller had a 69, Gilbert 71.

Tom Watson, the current U.S. and British Open title-holder and the defending champion here, missed the green and bogeyed the final hole and dropped back to 204. He had a third-round 69.

J.C. Snead, with a 66, Lon Hinkle, with a 65, Keith Fergus, with a 69 and Andy North, with a 68, were at 205.

That places 13 men within three strokes of each other at the top of standings going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $54,000 first prize.

"That just shows the caliber of the pros out here. They're learning the course and you can see what's happening," Watson said.

With the field so closely bunched, the chances of a playoff are great, Wadkins said. "The odds of ending up with a tie are pretty good, except that with the experience and caliber of the players at the top," Wadkins said. "One of them may get hot and keep it cooking."

Youth admits shooting basketball coach

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — A 19-year-old high school dropout has pleaded guilty to shooting a basketball coach through the heart after the coach tried to break up a fight between the teen-ager and his girlfriend.

"I'm sorry for what I did. It wasn't out of an act of hatred," William Stacy Lamar Jones told Circuit Judge Howard Ballenger on Friday.

Ballenger said he will sentence Jones after a presentence report is completed on his background in about two weeks. At that time, Jones could receive up to 85 years in prison.

Jones pleaded guilty to assault and battery with intent to kill, aggravated assault, carrying a firearm into a public facility, malicious destruction of real property and four counts of pointing a firearm.

The Dec. 7 shooting occurred when girls' basketball coach Michael J. Austin ordered Jones off McDuffie High School grounds after the teen-ager tried to get Miss Clemmons, a cheerleader, to leave with him.

According to testimony, Jones returned a few minutes later to the crowded girls' locker room and fired a shot through the office window at Austin. Jones crawled inside and took Miss Clemmons.

He was apprehended before he could leave school grounds, police said.

During the hearing, the 29-year-old coach lifted his sweater and shirt, showing a deep crimson scar left from the bullet wound.

The bullet tore through Austin's heart and lung, and lodged in a back muscle.

"If there wasn't somebody up above, I'd be dead," said Austin, who plans to return to work in two weeks.

Arkansas wins 200th for Sutton

Arkansas 63, SMU 56

DALLAS - Guard Darrell Walker scored 13 of his 17 points in the second half to lift seventh-ranked Arkansas to a 63-56 Southwest Conference basketball victory over Southern Methodist Saturday night and present Eddie Sutton with his 200th victory as Razorback coach.

The unbeaten Razorbacks stretched their record to 13-0 and 3-0 in the SWC. SMU dropped to 10-3 and 2-2 with the loss, the Mustangs' fifth in a row to Arkansas.

The Mustangs have lost 16 of 18 games played since Sutton has been the Arkansas coach.

Houston 77, Texas 52

AUSTIN, Texas — Forward Clyde Drexler lead the University of Houston with 24 points to pace the 16th-ranked Cougars past the University of Texas Longhorns 77-52.

THE SWC

The win improved Houston's record to 13-2.

Despite trailing the Longhorns in shooting percentage, free throw percentage and rebounds in the first half, Houston used its muscle and finesse to overcome an early 10-point deficit and take a 13-point margin at halftime.

Seven-foot Akeem Olajuwon provided much of Houston's power and tossed in 14 points while grabbing 14 rebounds.

Texas A&M 68, Baylor 66

WACO, Texas — The Texas Aggies held off a late Baylor rally with the help of Tyren Naulls' 17 points to take a 68-66 win from the Bears here.

It was the Bruins' first loss at the Heart O' Texas Coliseum this season and only their fifth in the past 36 games.

The Aggies, 8-9 and now 2-2 in the Southwest Conference, had a 66-50 advantage with 5 minutes remaining in the contest before Baylor made its final surge, only to come up a basket short.

Baylor is now 9-5 on the year and 1-2 in SWC play.

TCU 57, Rice 48

HOUSTON — Darrell Browder scored 18 points and Doug Arnold added another 17 to lead the Texas Christian Horned Frogs to a 57-48 victory over the Rice Owls.

Browder, a 6-1 guard, took charge in the second half, scoring 12 of his game-leading total. Arnold hit 13 of his 17-point total in the first period.

Rice led for most of the first half with the longest lead coming at 23-18 at the 5:23 mark. But Arnold, a 6-9 senior, assumed control, scoring nine points while TCU took the lead for good.

Tech 55, Pan Am 52

LUBBOCK, Texas — Freshman Tony Benford sank four free throws and Bubba Jennings added two more to lead Texas Tech to a 55-52 squeaker over Pan American Saturday night in a non-conference basketball game.

The Raiders, who trailed most of the way, took the lead for good, 53-50, on a pair of free throws by Benford. Terry Jones countered with a crip shop with 10 seconds left to cut the margin to a point, but Jennings iced the victory with a pair of free throws with 9 seconds to play.

BOWLING BEAT

Tipton, Himes scale bowling 700 level

By RANDY ISENBERG

Ken Himes rolled a 714 series on games of 247-234-233 in the Friday Nite Owls Mixed league to set the pace for Midland bowlers in the final week of January, but as it turned out that was just an appetizer for the way Junior Tipton the following week.

Tipton put together a 236-247-245—728 string in the His and Hers Mixed league Jan. 10.

AN ODDITY in the Tuesday Night Men's League at Dellwood occured Jan. 4 when Team Four, composed of Randy Warner, David Rich, Robert Rich, Richard Duniven and Mancil Taylor, came one pin short of rolling the same score. Mancil proved the spoil sport, rolling 146 while his teammates were kegling 145s. Taylor spared and rolled an eight in his tenth frame.

IN UPCOMING events: The Texas Women's Bowling Association tournament entries close Jan. 20. The event is scheduled for San Angelo this year...The Texas State Men's tournament will be held in Lubbock and entries close Jan. 23...

For the record: The Super Bowl Invitational is underway this month and the Midland Bowling Association Men;s city tournament is at Super Bowl this year...Dellwood will host the next Southwest Amateur Bowlers Association meet Jan. 29...Other SWABA meets are scheduled for Big Spring Bowl-A-Rama Jan. 15; Amarillo Bowl Jan. 22; and at Imperial at Lubbock and Stadium in San Angelo, both Feb. 5...

Senators seek Knight's ouster

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — A group of minority party senators has joined a movement seeking to oust Indiana University's controversial Bobby Knight as coach of the 1984 U.S. Olympic basketball team for allegedly insulting Puerto Ricans.

A resolution introduced in the island Senate charges Knight with "arrogance and petty nationalism" during the 1979 Pan American Games in San Juan.

A similar resolution was passed Thursday by the Puerto Rican House of Representatives, and Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo and Resident Commissioner in Washington Baltasar Corrada del Rio have asked the U.S. Olympic Committee to fire Knight as basketball coach.

The volatile Knight was involved in an incident over the availability of a practice court during the Pan American Games. He was convicted in absentia of slapping a local policeman during the argument, but Barcelo decided not to seek extradition in the case.

Raveling defends Knight

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington State's George Raveling, who will be on bench beside fiery Bobby Knight at the 1984 Olympics, defends Knight's selection as the head U.S. basketball coach for the Los Angeles Games.

The choice of Knight has drawn some criticism because of the flap he was involved in when he was the coach of the U.S. team at the 1979 Pan-American Games in Puerto Rico.

"Some people say that Coach Knight shouldn't be the Olympic coach," declared Raveling. "Well, they're entitled to their opinion. But I believe he'll get the job done for the United States and I believe he'll do it in an exemplary manner.

"I DON'T think that we should hold it against him for the rest of his life just because there was a controversy created in Puerto Rico."

In San Juan in August, 1979, following the Pan-Am Games, Knight was found guilty of assaulting a policeman. He was sentenced to the maximum of six months in jail and fined $500.

The assault charge was filed by a Puerto Rican policeman who said the incident took place at a practice gym. The policeman testified Knight hit him across the jaw.

Knight, who said he was innocent, did not attend the trial. He was not extradited from Indiana.

Raveling will be one of Knight's assistants in Los Angeles. He also helped Knight with the 1979 U.S. Pan-Am team although he didn't go to Puerto Rico because he had a basketball camp to run.

"I KNEW all the players on the Pan-American team," Raveling remarked. "I talked to a number of them when Coach Knight was not around and they all felt he got a very bad rap.

"Besides, the people who nominated and picked Coach Knight for the 1984 Olympics wouldn't have done so if they had thought all the things that were said about him in Puerto Rico were true."

The pair go a long way back — to two decades ago in Philadelphia when Raveling and Knight were young assistant coaches, Knight at Army and Raveling at Villanova. Knight is 41 and Raveling 45.

"If my son (10-year-old Mark Raveling) were good enough to play college basketball and Coach Knight wanted him," Raveling said with a smile, "that's where I'd encourage him to play.

"At the end of four years, my son would be a better human being for playing under Coach Knight."

RAVELING THINKS that the image of Knight as presented to the American public by the news media is an inaccurate one.

Cleveland gives honor to Thornton

CLEVELAND (AP) — The city has honored Andre Thornton of the Cleveland Indians for his humanitarian contributions to the area and for his accomplishments in baseball.

Friday was proclaimed "Andre Thornton Day" in Cleveland in a document presented to Thornton by city Recreation Commissioner John S. Nagy, who was representing Mayor George V. Voinovich.

The award coincided with the promotion of Thornton's new book, "Triumph Born of Tragedy." The book, co-written with Al Janssen, details Thornton's rebound from a 1977 van accident that claimed the lives of his first wife, Gertrude, and his daughter, Theresa.

He and his second wife, Gail, whom he married in November 1978, have two children, Andre, 10, and Jonathan David, 2.

Thornton, who has helped organize summer camps and other programs for children, had one of his best years in 1982, hitting 32 home runs and collecting a career-high 116 runs batted in.

Jones to fight Milton McCrory

Despite 19 knockouts, Demon Rum has Ayala on the ropes

By BOB SANSEVERE

PATERSON, N.J. (AP) — Tony Ayala Jr., the World Boxing Association's top-ranked junior middleweight contender, who was behind bars since New Year's Day after being accused of sexually assaulting a woman, was released from the Passaic County Jail Friday after posting $75,000 bond.

Ayala is unbeaten as a professional boxer. He's knocked out 19 of 22 opponents, 16 in four rounds or less. His toughest bouts have been with alcohol and the law.

AYALA, THE World Boxing Association's top-ranked junior middleweight contender and as recently as a month ago on the brink of a million-dollar championship fight, is charged with sexually assaulting a woman who lived in his West Paterson apartment complex.

If convicted, Ayala faces up to 60 years in jail. And if Ayala doesn't go to prison in New Jersey, Texas officials say they want him behind bars because he may have violated his probation on an earlier assault charge.

"Tony is like an animal in the ring and outside the ring," said Tony Padilla, a Texas promoter who has known Ayala since the boxer was 10. "He'll fight either way."

OTHERS DESCRIBE Ayala as a quiet man away from boxing, and a New Jersey sheriff says he has been a model prisoner since his arrest New Year's Day.

Efforts to interview Ayala were unsuccessful. Jail officials and the boxer's manager said Ayala did not want to talk to the media. People close to Ayala were reluctant to discuss the fighter or his latest legal problems.

The 19-year-old native of San Antonio, Texas, is on 10 years' probation for assaulting an 18-year-old woman in a drive-in theater restroom on Dec. 23, 1978 — when he was 15. He pleaded guilty to that charge.

Last August, Ayala was charged with burglary when he was found in a house in San Antonio, holding a tag bearing the name of a woman who lived there. The woman told police Ayala had tried to strike up a conversation with her outside her house a week earlier.

The burglary count and an accompanying motion to revoke probation were dropped after the homeowner, the woman's brother, failed to press charges.

AYALA, AN admitted alcoholic since age 12, told police he was drunk and had wandered into the wrong house, thinking it was his. His old home was in the same neighborhood.

He then underwent two months of treatment at an Orange, Calif., hospital for alcohol abuse and emotional problems and moved to West Paterson to train for a WBA title fight against Davey Moore. That fight — and his boxing career — now are in jeopardy.

Padilla, who has promoted fights for Ayala and his older brothers, Sammy and Mike, in the San Antonio area, says that Tony gets into trouble "on purpose."

"If anything, it's to get even with the old man. He's been pretty rough on them," Padilla said. Tony Ayala Sr., who trains Tony, pushed each of his sons into boxing at an early age, according to the promoter.

Mike, the oldest, fought Danny "Little Red" Lopez for the World Boxing Council featherweight title in June 1979, and was knocked out in the 15th round. Eighteen months earlier, Mike was charged in the shooting of another San Antonio fighter. He is on 10 years probation in that case.

SAMMY, ONCE 16th-ranked among WBC junior welterweights, recently was hospitalized for what the San Antonio News quoted hospital sources as saying was treatment for a drug overdose. His father denied the allegation.

"All three brothers are very moody people," Padilla said.

Ayala Sr. was unavailable for comment, his whereabouts unknown. In a story in the December 1982 issue of The Ring, he said: "If anybody is to blame for all the trouble, all the heartache, blame me. I raised him, molded him into the kind of person he is. And that's a good person. I just never knew he was so confused because of all he kept inside him."

In a story on Tony Ayala in the Oct. 19, 1981 issue of Sports Illustrated, his mother, Pauline, said:

"Sometimes I wonder if other families have had all the ups and downs that we've had. Sometimes I think this boxing has made my boys grow up too fast. They found out about life, girls, everything too early."

Ayala, known in the ring as Torito ("Baby Bull") had his first fight when he was 5 years old. He hasn't lost since he was 8, compiling a 140-8 amateur record including the 1979 National Golden Gloves championship. At 14, Ayala sparred against Pipino Cuevas, then the WBA welterweight champion.

In 1980, his first year as a professional, Ayala made $175,000 in seven bouts.

PADILLA said there's a story that makes the rounds in San Antonio about how tough Ayala Sr. has been on Tony.

An "18- or 19-year-old" opponent had 10-year-old Tony in a corner and was whaling him in the head when Ayala Sr. got close enough to his son to curse at him and hit him with a rope, Padilla said.

"The other guy was hitting Tony on top and the old man was hitting him in the legs with a skipping rope," the 68-year-old promoter said.

Ayala is a fierce competitor, often compared to Jake LaMotta, Rocky Graziano and Roberto Duran.

"My fight style is to punch, not run," Ayala has said.

Cardinals gaining on No. 1

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — When Louisville captured the NCAA basketball championship in 1980, impromptu roadsigns throughout Kentucky proclaimed the Cardinals to be "No.1 in the nation, No.2 in the state."

It was just another reminder to Coach Denny Crum that his team had yet to wrest the hearts of basketball fans from the University of Kentucky. But, Crum notes now, Louisville is gaining.

"It used to be the case where people didn't even mention us and Kentucky in the same breath," Crum said. "But our fan support has grown. When I first got here we would have 7,000 people in the stands. Now we fill it (Freedom Hall) up with 16,000 fans every game.

"And we can't compete with them on the court because they won't play us. So I can't really say we're competing if they won't play us."

Just as Adolph Rupp built a dynasty at Kentucky, Crum is molding a juggernaut at Louisville — something he says he didn't set out to do.

CRUM resigned as assistant coach at UCLA in 1972 and took the Louisville job, he says, only as a means to a hoped-for end — the head coaching post at UCLA when John Wooden retired.

When that offer finally came — in fact, it came twice — Crum decided to let it pass.

"I found I didn't want to leave," Crum said as he sat in his office, where momentos of his UCLA days are scattered about. "I love the lifestyle, I love the rich basketball tradition. It's just an easier existence. It might not be as easy if I weren't winning. Oh, and there's great fishing here, too.

"I could be making more money somewhere else and I've had plenty of other offers. But I'm happy here on the court and I'm happy off the court, and that's more than anyone could ask for."

Crum admits that Kentucky's popularity was an early source of frustration.

"We didn't have the record or the national ranking then to compete with Kentucky, so I felt I had to prove we were as good," Crum said.

At first, Crum had to settle for talking up his program, but the on-court proof wasn't long in coming. His first team won the Midwest Regional and advanced to the NCAA Final Four.

SINCE then, Louisville has been in the NCAA tournament eight times and has made three more trips to the Final Four, including its championship season.

Crum opened the 1982-83 season with an 11-year record of 263 wins and 74 losses, a winning percentage of 78.0 that ranks fifth on the all-time list for coaches with at least 10 years experience. The team is fourth nationally in victories over the last 10 years.

The Cardinals currently are No.9 in The Associated Press Top Twenty.

Another battle Crum fights is one of image. While Kentucky is pictured as an disciplined team, Louisville is often dismissed as a collection of "alley" ballplayers.

KENNY REDIN'S

While other people hike into coastal marshes to fish or hunt, volunteers such as Jack Vereen sacrifice their bodies so others can enjoy the outdoors.

They are entomology technicians — insect experts — who stand in the weeds counting the mosquitoes which sip their blood.

"I just came in from a bad one," Vereen said after a trip to "a place out along the Savannah River, tremendously populated with salt marsh mosquitoes that were tremendously hungry for the blood meal."

To make his count, the technician must stand in the sun for a minute, shake off any mosquitoes which have landed, then stand another full minute, counting mosquitoes that drop in to dine.

"You kind of in your mind just build up a block for the annoyance. But sometimes they are so bad you just can't stand them. You have to run back to the truck and get out of them for a while," Vereen said.

A bad reading is more than five mosquitoes landing in one minute, but sometimes readings get to a point of near horror.

"Yesterday and today I've had 25, 35 or 50 in a minute," Vereen said. "You get so many there, you can't count them.

"We have gotten them where the person standing there has looked blue from the abundance of mosquitoes on his body. We use the term 'blue million' because we assume there's a million mosquitoes on a person's body."

When the technician finds droves of mosquitoes, trucks roll in at night to spray insecticide.

"Sometimes you just don't stand there for a full minute," said Darrell Maddock, assistant director of the Chatham County Mosquito Control Commission.

The commission's job is to kill mosquito larvae before they become adults by treating waters where the insects breed. "When they get to be adults, we've goofed," he said.

Vereen is the county's one full-time mosquito patrolman. He has part-time assistants to help cover the 441 square miles, 34 percent of which is salt marsh.

"You walk into the shallow grass and into the brush," he said. "You start kicking them up in the shallow grass, then grab a piece of brush and shake it — really stir them up.

"Then you step back, arms at your sides, legs spread apart slightly ... then start counting the mosquitoes that land on your person."

It's really not all that bad, Vereen said.

"After being bitten several times, you get accustomed to it," he said. "The sting isn't so bad. Your body doesn't welt up as much. You just psyche up to it, it's not too bad."

Sour Grapes?

NHL upset, embarrassed over series with Russians

By BEN WALKER
AP Sports Writer

It may sound like a case of sour grapes, but people in the National Hockey League say they have good reason to be upset over the latest series against a team from the Soviet Union.

"We're tired of getting embarrassed by the Russians," said a testy Ed Snider, owner of the Philadelphia Flyers, after the Soviet Union All-Stars completed their North American tour last week by whipping his team 5-1. "This creates a public relations problem for our team and for the whole NHL."

THE SOVIETS charged through their visit, soundly beating Philadelphia, Montreal, Quebec and Minnesota, while losing one-goal games to Edmonton and Calgary. And they did all of that while criss-crossing Canada and the United States in 10 days.

The NHL periodically takes on USSR's best because the games present an opportunity for sellout crowds, provide a chance to see a different style of hockey and, to some degree, are played as a matter of prestige.

But, despite their contentions that these are merely international exhibitions, losing to the Soviets rankles those in the NHL.

"The people in the United States are pretty smart," Flyers Coach Bob McCammon said. "They know how many millions of people live in the Soviet Union and know this is their main sport and main team."

"IF THEY want to play NHL teams, they should sent club teams. If they want to bring all-stars, we should play all-stars," he said.

"Their hockey system is designed to build one elite team for one particular purpose, to represent the Soviet Union," he said. "Our hockey system is designed as an entertainment business enterprise."

Few in the NHL were entertained by the Soviets, who received about $25,000 per game. The Soviet team also attended the Dallas Cowboys-Minnesota Vikings National Football League game — "a man's game," commented Soviet Coach Victor Tikhonov — drank lots of Coca-Cola and watched the movie "Rocky III" during one airplane flight. Tikhonov liked the film so much that he took three pages of notes and gave his team a pep talk based on the movie.

This all-star team, which is training for the world championships next April and will form the nucleus of their 1984 Olympic team, also surprised many with its youth.

THEIR LEADING scorer, with five goals against the NHL, was Vladimir Krutov, age 22, and 24-year-old star defenseman Vyacheslav Festisov was described by Wayne Gretzky as "the best player I've ever played against."

The team's ranking veteran of past NHL competitions was goaltender Vladislav Tretiak, who posted a 4-0 record on the tour, including shutouts in Montreal and Quebec.

"Most of the NHL teams are higher than some of our teams," said 24-year-old Soviet center Igor Larionov, who scored four goals. "However, the four elite teams in Moscow can compete on a level with NHL teams."

Says Ziegler: "You have to look at the overall strength of the Soviet Union. They have 700,000 registered hockey players. Remember, even their weakest defenseman is still a great defenseman."

Bobby Clarke, the Flyers captain, sparked a Philadelphia victory and a tie in previous meetings with the Soviets. He says he's seen a change.

"For a couple of years, they didn't seem to play so well. Not now. They're a great team," Clarke says.

Too Tall is Mr. January

"Too Tall seems to rise to his most awesome heights in the playoffs," trumpets the Dallas media guide.

If the All-Pro defensive end does play his best with the money on the line, as evidence suggests, then he's someone Green Bay quarterback Lynn Dickey will bear watching Sunday in the second round of the National Conference playoffs in Texas Stadium.

Some "awesome" examples of an unleashed Jones in the playoffs:

—In 1977, Jones had 23 tackles, 2 quarterback traps, two batted-down passes and two forced fumbles.

—In 1978, he had 19 tackles, two sacks and a fumble recovery.

"Sure, I take pride in being a clutch man in the playoffs," said Jones. "I want to play the best I can all the time but it gives you a special feeling to deliver when it counts, when the money is there."

The incentive for Super Bowl XVII is $64,000.

The Cowboys already have earned at least $10,000 by virtue of their 30-17 victory over Tampa Bay last weekend in the first round of the playoffs.

"It's dollar time, but Green Bay won't be easy," Jones said. "I'm impressed with Dickey. He throws the ball well. He doesn't drop back very deep and gets rid of the ball fast. We'll try to make him rush those throws."

Making a quarterback rush his throws is something the 6-foot-9 Jones does best.

Jones, the fifth-leading tackler on the team, has batted passes down five times this year and forced numerous uncharted overthrows.

"Ed is a much more intense player than he has ever been," said defensive coordinator Ernie Stautner. "He's also quicker and stronger."

'Six Pack' John Mahaffey: Playing it straight

Los Angeles Times and Washington Post News Service

John was not a legendary drinker. In fact, there are lots of guys on the tour who left the bar long after he did. He never showed up in patent leather shoes and a silk scarf, and he was scarcely an international playboy. But he did miss the occasional tee-off, and he once played in an exhibition for an American tobacco company and then, after lingering too long over the mixed doubles, lectured them on the evils of tobacco.

Usually, you can tell you're drinking too much when the cop tells you as he pulls you off the freeway. Others know it when their wives pack up and go home. Some find out when they wake up in a strange town, and have to phone down to the desk to find out how they got there.

JOHN MAHAFFEY knew he was when his divots started to go further than his ball. "Fuzzy Zoeller used to call it my 'world-famous' John Mahaffey shot, the three-foot 'chili-dip' to an unguarded green 25 yards away." (Golfers call it the "chili-dip" shot because it looks like something that just fell off a taco.)

Contrary to some opinion, alcohol is not an aid to the game of golf, not in the sense a glove or a sandwedge is. "Only if you can get the course drunk," Sam Snead advises.

It occurred to John Mahaffey if he could be the PGA champion and victor of six other tournaments playing with a headache, swollen fingers, and/or jangled nerves, why not try to go out there with a glass of milk purring in his stomach, his eyes unstreaked by rivers of red, and his hands as steady as a faro dealer's?

"I was never a bad alcoholic. I never hid my drinking and only my close friends knew. I drank mostly beer, but that's enough if you play it by the six-pack. I would sometimes get vindictive and contrary with people. I wasn't what you would call a happy drunk."

JOHN MAHAFFEY quit drinking at last year's Memorial tournament in Columbus. (Golfers tell time by events. If a great earthquake strikes, society identifies it by the month or year or day or the presidential administration. A golfer will remember it as "the year I had the 63 at Colonial.")

John Mahaffey made a death bed promise to his father in November that he would continue to quit drinking.

This is the first year since college that John is teeing it up not only sober, but abstemious. He is one of the stars in the Glenn Campbell Los Angeles Open at Rancho, and he is coming off a win (with Joanne Carner) in the recent J.C. Penney mixed-team tourney in Florida.

It would be nice for the advocates of temperance and abstention if John Mahaffey, now 34, were to string together a few rounds of 62 and 63 at Rancho, but Mahaffey isn't looking for instant eagles and aces.

"But, at least, you have the satisfaction of knowing you're playing up to your potential. Your opponent is you and golf, and it's nice to know you're not conceding your opponent any shots." In the bar, that is.

Be prepared, Olympic tickets to go into orbit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It costs $20 a seat, just to apply, and there's no guarantee that the view you wind up with at a greatly inflated price will be the best in the house.

Yet, months before the official forms are issued, a local broker is accepting reservations for even the hardest-to-get tickets for the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

Ken Oberlin, owner of The Ticket Shack in nearby Costa Mesa, Calif., says his suppliers will be out-of-towners who win tickets in the computerized lottery, which the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee is banking on to elimninate many of the snafus accompanying past Olympic ticket-distribution plans.

"I'LL BUY 90 percent of my tickets from people who are drawn in the raffle and don't want to use them," Oberlin said. "People from all over the world will send their names to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. Many who get tickets won't want to come to California and can make a profit selling to me. I'll pay double the face amount."

To apply for his service, Oberlin is charging $20 per seat. Then comes the cost of the tickets themselves.

OBERLIN said he expects to sell some tickets for the cost of acquiring them plus 15 percent. For the more desired events, the prices could be much higher.

The LAOOC, which is trying to keep ticket prices in line with those charged for professional sports in southern California, strongly objects to the Oberlin operation and those of similar ticket brokers.

"Our ticket system was designed to sell tickets directly to consumers," and LAOOC spokesman said. "We believe it will work. The best way is to buy tickets directly from the LAOOC."

BUT RESELLING tickets for a hefty profit is legal in California, although the agent must be licensed and cannot resell tickets near the site of events.

Organizers have announced that 7 million tickets to the Games will go on sale next spring and be sold to individuals under a direct-mail system.

In announcing their distribution plan late last year, the LAOOC said that everyone ordering tickets within 60 days after they go on sale would have an equal chance to attend the events of their choice.

For high-demand events, such as the opening and closing ceremonies, track and field, gymnastics, basketball, boxing and swimming, the LAOOC said, "a random selection method, employing state-of-the art computer equipment," will be used to pick lucky ticket-buyers. A computer also will be used to allot tickets to other events "on a first-in, first-served basis," the organizers said.

OBERLIN plans to place ads across the nation urging people to obtain and return applications. If they are successful and want to sell the tickets, he guarantees to pay double the face value.

"The LAOOC is saying bad things about me, but this is a legitimate business," said Oberlin, who worked for another broker before opening The Ticket Shack eight years ago. "Most people don't have a chance to get good seats for big events in California. Many can't afford to stand in line many hours and will buy from me. I pay premium and I charge premium. All I am dong is supplying a service.

"We are not scalpers. I have a license and pay my bills. Like a department store, I buy at one price and sell at a higher price."

IF A CUSTOMER does not get a ticket to the event he specifies, Oberlin guarantees to return the deposit. "If I don't sell tickets that I have purchased," he added, "I have to eat 'em."

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

The place wreaked of so much tension, you'd have thought it was Region V tournament time as tip off approached for the Midland College-Howard College rematch at the Langford Chaparral Center Thursday night.

The teams responded by staging an appropriate encore to the blazing shootout of a few nights before when the Hawks won 102-96.

This time the Chaps, playing with more intensity than they have all season, squared accounts to send a big crowd home happy, unless you happened to drive over from Big Spring.

But really, who won or lost wasn't all that important. It was the way they played the game and the atmosphere. It bespoke the arrival of Juco basketball as an event in West Texas, something folks were getting excited about.

FOR YEARS, the West Texas jucos have been playing a caliber of basketball that compares favorably with any played in the state, at the two-year or four-year levels.

Three years ago, there wasn't much question that the best college team in the state was located over in Snyder. The only dispute was whether any of the state's NBA teams could handle 'em.

Western Texas College went on to win the nationals at Hutchinson, Kan., after which Coach Nolan Richardson took the whole gang to Tulsa University, where they knocked off defending NCAA champion Louisville, the first shot out of the box, and went on to the NIT championship.

IT WAS a year in which MC might easily have won nationals, except five of their six losses were at the hands of WTC.

The Western Junior College Conference recruits from all over the country, all the hot beds...Kentucky, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, Washington, Philadelphia, New York...

And the college coaches scout the league heavily. There are always one or two in the stands, even for a regular season game.

THURSDAY night's setting was a far cry from those early years, the mid-1970s, when the Chaps opened shop in the cramped new gym across the loop from a Chaparral Center that wasn't yet even on the planning board yet.

Only a few close friends of the players showed up for the games and since most of them came from out of town, you can imagine what kind of crowds there were, lost even in the tight confines of the new, but old, gym. It was a big night when the band showed up. Only trouble was the din created caused a throbbing and ringing in the ears that lasted until the next morning.

Now the big problem is the post-game rush to funnel out of the one stoplight exit at Garfield Street. Sometimes it takes a while.

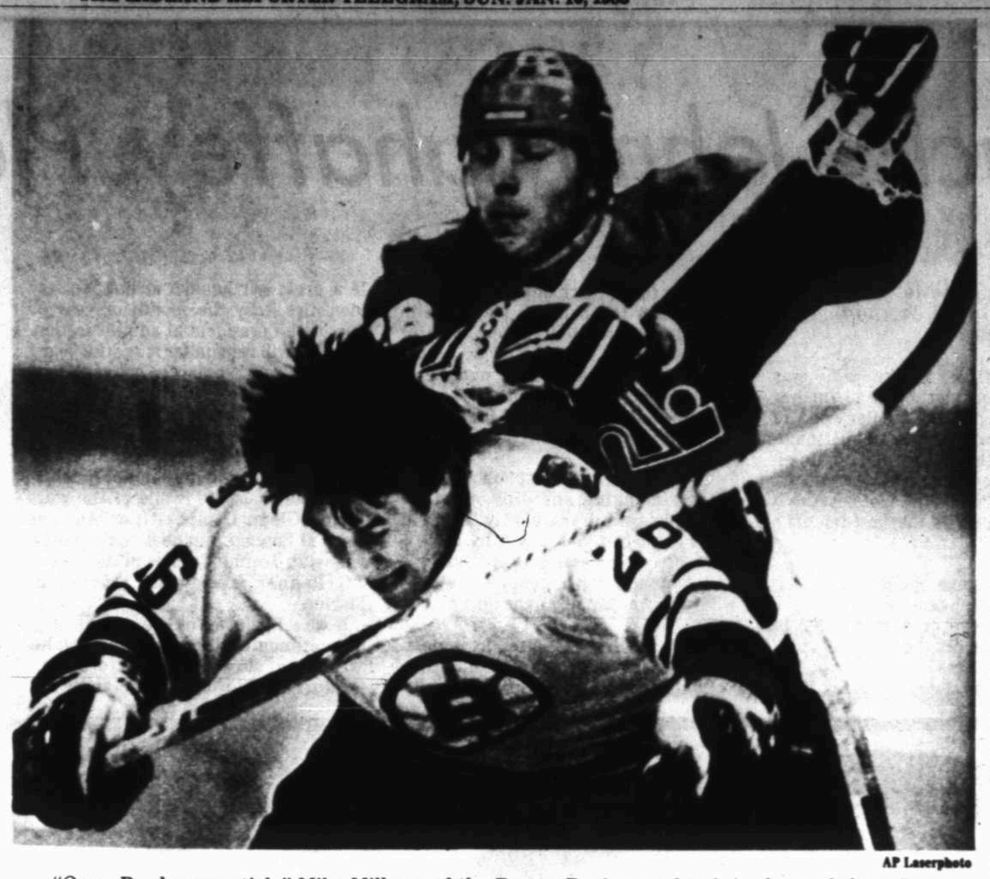

AFTER THE game Howard College Coach Harold Wilder didn't seem all that upset about the outcome, although you'd never have guessed it from his behavior on the sidelines during the contest. He probably remembered that the Chaps have to go back to Big Spring, so he'll get another chance.

In most games, coaches rave and rant on the sidelines when officials miss an "obvious foul on my man." Harold was raving and ranting at one point, chastising an official with, "When are you going to call a technical?" while pointing in the direction of composed Coach Jerry Stone, who was just getting up off his knees, an impromptu prayer to a god, "whoever he might be", presumably.

Wilder was asked after the game, about his behavior. "Is it calculated?"

Harold responded, "I just go along with the flow of the game. If I get upset over a call, it's just part of the job. After all, that's what they are paying me this big money for."

It was pointed out that the week before, he had complained about the strain of a coach's life and the insignificant remuneration involved. But that was before the Hawks beat MC at Big Spring.

NAACP to sue NCAA on ruling

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — When the National Collegiate Athletic Association adopted tougher academic standards this week, it amounted to "either accidental or deliberate racism," the head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says.

Dr. Benjamin Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, said Friday that the organization will sue the NCAA over the ruling.

He did not say when a suit would be filed, and added that he and the NAACP's legal staff are studying the matter.

At its convention in San Diego, the NCAA voted to require all student athletes to achieve a minimum score of 700 on the SAT college entrance examination or a 15 on the ACT test before being allowed to play for a Division I school.

Hooks said the new standards were "another case of blaming the victim for the crime." He said 55 percent of blacks taking the SAT tests score less than 700 while only 14 percent of whites score below that figure.

"You're a product of your environment," he said. "It has nothing to do with dumbness. So now you take a man in the 11th grade and say if you don't have a C average, you can't play college ball a year from now.

"That 18-year-old is a product of his environment. But for years we've known the educational system has been failing him — but we've done nothing about it. Teachers can be inadequate and incompetent. Administrators can be incompetent. But we punish the student athlete."

Hooks said the solution "is to find where it started wrong, and get it straight there. It's too late to punish the student in the 10th grade."

He said he plans to meet with presidents of black colleges and added, "We're going to make this a real fight."

All fighters risk brain damage, says AMA

CHICAGO (AP) — Though the "punch-drunk" fighter is often pictured as a scarred and stupefied veteran of the ring, all boxers risk chronic brain deterioration, medical researchers say.

They also reported that the more fights a fighter has the greater the likelihood of brain damage.

"Our data show that boxers with even a moderate number of bouts may suffer cerebral atrophy," the researchers said in the Jan. 14 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

In the same issue were two editorials urging that boxing be banned or suppressed. The team gave neurological examinations and CAT scans (computer-enhanced X-ray pictures of the brain's structure) to 40 ex-boxers who volunteered to see if abnormalities associated with fighting could be detected.

"We had everything from (an obvious) punch-drunk fighter — to a president of a major organization," said chief author Dr. Ronald J. Ross, in a telephone interview from Mayfield Heights, Ohio, where he is a radiologist in private practice.

The research indicated that while brain damage can come on early in a career, the severity is linked to the number of fights.

Enlargement of the brain's ventricles, indicating atrophy, was found to be significantly related to the number of bouts fought, the doctors said. Abnormalities in EEG readings — which measure the electrical activity of the brain — were also significantly linked to the number of bouts fought.

"The more fights a boxer has, the more likely there will be atrophy of the brain and loss of brain substance, and associated with this will be loss of mental ability and possibly loss of carrying on a productive life," Ross said.

However, Dr. Edwin A. Campbell, medical director for the New York State Athletic Commission, disputes the usefulness of the tests.

"I've been a party to (brain damage research) ... But frankly it doesn't conform to reality," Campbell said in a telephone interview from New York, where boxing safety standards are among the strictest in the nation.

Campbell contends that boxing provides young men with an avenue for accomplishment and self-esteem, and that it seldom produces the punch-drunk stereotype.

"I would like for some of these doctors who are so sure of themselves to see the vast amateur program and what it has done for the youth of America," he said. "I wish these doctors who are so certain of themselves would see how these kids develop. They don't just develop physically. They develop intellectually. They develop psychologically."

The American Medical Association, in an official stance on boxing, said that although the sport is dangerous and can result in death or long-term brain injury, banning it is an unrealistic approach.

The AMA last summer adopted nine recommendations, ranging from establishing a national computer registry for boxers to outlawing unlicensed fighters' participation in so-called "tough man" contests involving untrained and unconditioned amateurs.

Chaps 'On Road' again for week's cage action

"On the Road Again" was Willie Nelson's theme song in one of his recent movies, but it could be sung by Midland College Coach Jerry Stone. His Chaparrals have been on the road for three of four games since the holiday break and things don't improve this week.

Midland packs its ear muffs and heads for the wilds of Borger to play Frank Phillips College Monday and then will play in Odessa Thursday night in Western Junior College Conference action this week.

Things then get better after that. The following Monday, MC is home for a three-game run.

The Chaps lone home appearance came Thursday, an 87-79 victory over Howard College, that more than squared accounts for that 102-96 loss to the Hawks in the finals of the OIL Classic at Big Spring the week before.

The win boosted MC to 5-1 and keeps the Chaps tied for first place in the WJCC. Other one time losers are Amarillo, New Mexico Junior College and South Plains, so it's still a free-for-all for first.

Frank Phillips, 11-7 and 3-2, has never been easy for Midland here and Monday's game will be played in the Plainsmen's Silver Dome. FPC lost by 24 to Amarillo College Thursday, but had beaten the Badgers previously in non-conference play.

The win over Howard gave Midland a 2-game edge over Howard, which along with Amarillo, has enjoyed top 20 ranking nationally this season. Howard is only 2-2, the losses to MC and AC, but has some games to make up.

"That was a great game and one we are glad to put in the win column," Stone said of Thursday's win. "Both teams played well, but the crowd really helped us. Our players certainly got a boost from the enthusiastic support...and it was good to play at home once again."

"We know that Borger is too far for most of our fans to reach, but we hope to have a lot of Chaparral backers in Odessa Thursday. Anytime we play Odessa, it's a battle and we don't expect this one will be any different."

Mayer steps in for Teacher

CINCINNATI (AP) — Gene Mayer has been named to replace Brian Teacher in the first round of the $100,000 Central Trust Tennis Championships next week in Cincinnati.

Teacher withdrew because of an ankle injury, sponsors said Friday.

Mayer is ranked eighth in the men's international computer rankings.

I ARE A Good Deal.

You've heard all about the Individual Retirement Account. But maybe you don't realize just what a great deal the IRA really is. Interest rates are seesawing, your income is increasing, and income taxes are taking a greater portion of your earnings each year. Portions you need now. That's how the IRA can help you today. You can open an IRA and deduct up to $2000 from your 1982 income tax return. Each year until you retire, if you deduct $2000 annually, you can retire comfortably because your money earns interest on interest. Depending on your age now, you could have almost a million dollars at retirement.

When you begin making withdrawals from your IRA, between ages 59½ and 70½, you'll be protected even further from income taxes because you'll be in a much lower tax bracket.

Briercroft has other types of IRAs to help you now and later.

Briercroft offers the Spousal IRA for couples with only one working spouse. With this plan, you can deduct $2250 in taxes per year.

The Employer IRA is set up by employers, employee associations or labor unions who want to provide a retirement fund for the benefit of their employees. Once contributed, funds belong to the employee, not the employer.

The Rollover IRA is designed for individuals who receive lump-sum distributions from other qualified retirement or pension plans. That large amount of money, subject to taxation, can be sheltered with a Rollover IRA.

The best part of the IRA good deal.

The best part is simply this. You can open an IRA. As long as you are an employee, with or without an existing pension plan, you are qualified. Any way you slice it, the IRA is a great deal. Let us help you open yours today. Call the Briercroft office nearest you.

Chinese town opens up for tourists

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

KUNMING, China — The weather in this southern China provincial capital is so temperate that the Chinese call Kunming "the city of eternal spring." Trees line the main thoroughfare, as in so many Chinese cities, and even the concrete strip separating bike traffic from the cabs and buses is filled with flowers.

Few "foreign guests" have had the chance to see this beauty since the Flying Tigers left back in the 1940s, however. Near the borders of Burma and Vietnam, Kunming was opened for tourism in June 1978, and it has only rarely been included in tourist itineraries.

All that may be changing, and for me the changes here reflect the growing importance placed on tourism and the tourist shopping dollar by the Chinese. They've paved the road out to the spectacular Stone Forest 126 kilometers from Kunming, and renovated the old hotel among the huge boulders there. Colorfully dressed women from the area's many minorities set up their embroidery and other wares on sidewalks near the Stone Forest Hotel within minutes after tour buses arrive, and they've even learned to bargain in English.

Our local Chinese guide said the women have been selling their embroidery for only a year, but they are clearly a harbinger of the area's future.

KUNMING HAS had only 60,000 tourists, but direct charter flights began several months ago from Hong Kong. Lindblad Travel is opening a small guest house, with swimming pool, in Kunming, and a China International Travel Service spokesman said the city's hotel beds are expanding this year from 800 to 1,300.

I expect it is only a matter of time until all those hotel beds are full. China travel is anything but luxurious, and the newly built Kunming Hotel (just behind the old Kunming Hotel) where I stayed was the most comfortable of my trip. It was still being finished, room numbers were scribbled on paper and taped to each door, but already it had not just a Western-style shower but Western-style water pressure.

Time hadn't worn down the carpets yet and the curtains were thick enough to shut out the early morning sun. The hotel food was among the best I ate in China, and even the tour guide was amazed when we were able to get seconds on foods we liked.

Most tourists will no doubt stay in the multistory, Holiday Inn-inspired but Chinese-built Kunming Hotel, which our guide said will soon also have a dining area serving Western-style food. (It already has an auditorium where one night our group sat through a long, decidedly bizarre travel film about the glories of Yunnan Province.) The lobby could probably accommodate a basketball game but its vast expanse was filled only with a long, even row of red chairs for the customary welcome briefing, with tea, given to "foreign guests."

Kunming marked the Chinese end of the Burma Road during World War II, and the old Jeeps rumbling down the city's streets may bring back memories to military personnel who served here during that war. Yet as our guide explained during that first briefing here, nearly everything we saw around us dated back to 1949 and the Chinese Revolution.

Yunnan Province, of which Kunming is the capital, was "backward" compared to other Chinese provinces, he said, and nearly inaccessible except by plane and by narrow-gauge railroads traveling short distances.

TODAY, IN contrast, life is easier for the city's nearly 2 million people and its tourists. The people appeared more prosperous than in other cities I visited, and the streets less crowded. For tourists, the main square is within walking distance of the Kunming Hotels (old and new) and so are what can only be called "shopping opportunities."

China's Friendship Stores dot every city's tourist itinerary, the fare varying minimally from city to city. The size, of course, varies considerably. Peking's Friendship Store resembles a U.S. department store while Kunming's is, at least for now, in a small room in the back of a top floor of what must be the Chinese equivalent of Macy's.

We are told that there will soon be a much larger Friendship Store here, but I'd still recommend shopping where the Chinese shop. The fine artworks and silk brocades may be in the Friendship Stores, but the adventure is clearly elsewhere. One can make oneself understood, even without a word of Chinese, and the sight of an American buying Chinese slippers, playing cards or posters can draw crowds that number literally in the hundreds.

That was the case particularly in Kunming, where tourists are less frequent than in Shanghai or Peking or even some of the smaller but still well-traveled areas such as Guilin.

Kunming also has many scenic treasures, most of them only recently opened to foreign tours and tourists but already immortalized in simple but colorful brochures put together by the Travel and Tourism Bureau of Yunnan Province. Each brochure is inscribed with the name and drawing of a recommended place, and equal care has been taken with the prose inside.

Dianchi Lake, for instance, is no ordinary lake: "On calm and sunny days the lake is a broad expanse of shimmering emerald waters, and white sails can be seen gliding gently between the heaving waves and the floating clouds."

LITTLE COMPARES, however, with the massive Stone Forest several hours by bus out of Kunming. Said to be 270 million years old, the Stone Forest is comprised of craggy boulders that hug paths that curve up and down past reflecting pools that seem bottomless. Many of the rocks are marked with inscriptions and plaques.

The unusual geological formations, some as tall as California redwoods, long ago were below water. And a Chinese travel brochure explains: "Its many rock pillars were formed by rain water running through joints in very thick limestone, dissolving, percolating and splitting it."

It was a long drive out to the forest, but the trip was nearly as interesting for me as the forest. Time didn't exist as the air-conditioned tour bus glided past horse-drawn carts and water buffaloes pulling plows through rice paddies. Within walking distance of the Stone Forest Hotel is the Five Trees Village where sows slept in the sun and old women sat in dark mud houses husking corn and crushing grain.

The modern rest stop recently built between Kunming and the Stone Forest seemed to have emerged from nowhere with its comfortable stuffed chairs and modern facilities.

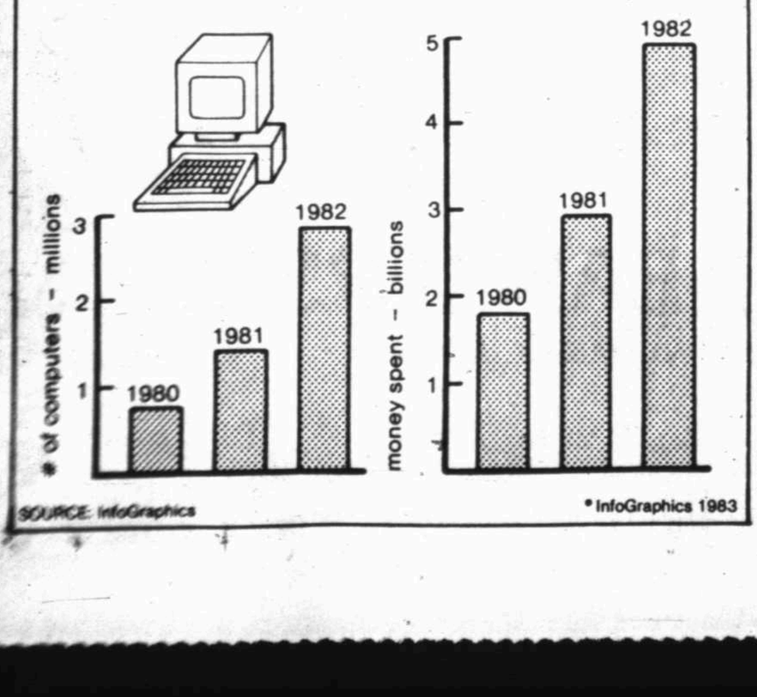

The Stone Forest Hotel is also a study in contrasts. The hotel is simple, yet its bar has a neon sign and there is even a video game off the lobby. Singers and dancers from the Sani people came to perform in the hotel dining room after dinner one evening, and our guide said plans call for a bar and performance area soon on a peak overlooking the lake near the hotel.

Already the Stone Forest Hotel has been expanded and redone for the tourist trade, they added toilets in each room, for example, although it remained the least inviting of the hotels I stayed in during my China travels. The lights didn't work, there were no locks on the doors and the mosquito nets that hung from the ceiling were there for a reason.

IT'S A FAR cry from the Kunming Lake Villa that Lindblad Travel plans to have operating in January. Jack Lindquist, vice president of Lindblad's Orient Division, says his company has just about finished refurbishing a Victorian-style mansion built in the '30s in Kunming by a Chinese industrialist. It will have modern conveniences, he says, and even a swimming pool. It will accommodate 20 guests and be used by Lindblad tours as well as be available for leasing.

Personal computer sales soar

The number of personal computers sold in the United States has virtually doubled each year since 1980. That year, Americans spent $1.8 billion for 724,000 systems. Estimates are that consumers paid $4.9 billion for 2.8 million personal computers in 1982.

Simulator is cheap way to learn to fly

By MARK POTTS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The field at the Marine base in New River, N.C., is socked in, and our CH-53E helicopter is making its landing approach on instruments. We are 1,600 feet up and several miles from the landing spot.

A voice calls out compass headings as ground control guides us in, the three engines of the copter whining loudly in our ears, the thump-thump-thump of the rotor increasingly audible as we near the ground. The giant copter pitches and sways as the inexperienced pilot fights the controls.

Suddenly, the airspeed indicator unwinds to zero. Other instruments move wildly. The helicopter plummets. Pilot error has put us into a fatal stall, and the $45 million assault helicopter — the pride of the Marines and Sikorsky Aircraft — crashes.

"Freeze!" says the copilot, and time stops.

The engine noise quiets. The motions end with the cockpit still locked in the crazy position it was in at the time of the crash. The instrument readings are frozen.

Calmly, the copilot explains to the rookie pilot that he pitched the nose of the helicopter too high, causing the stall and the certainly fatal crash. The pilot can even order up an instant replay of the crash to find out where he went wrong.

We are nowhere near North Carolina. We aren't even in a helicopter. We're inside a nondescript building in a commercial district in suburban Virginia, seated in a $10 million helicopter simulator built by a division of Sperry Corp. The pilot is a reporter who usually gets no closer to the cockpit than the non-smoking section of a 727. The copilot is an instructor. Atari has nothing on this.

Moments after the terrifying "crash," we are again simulating an approach into New River.

"That's the beauty of this thing," says instructor Tom McBrien, taking over the controls and guiding the simulator to a perfect landing. "Rather than going out and crashing a $45 million helicopter, we can do this 10 times and then go out and get a cup of coffee."

A veteran military pilot, McBrien now works for Sperry, training military instructors to use the simulator. The complex device, which from the outside resembles the front half of a helicopter perched on spindly hydraulic legs, is being assembled by Sperry at the Merrifield, Va., facility.

Sperry is also building simulators for F-18 and EF-111 jets and other aircraft at a new plant in Reston, Va. The Reston facility, equipped with 45-foot-high bays to house simulators under construction, also turns out electronic command centers and trainers for Navy and Coast Guard ships, and houses the company's electronic warfare engineers. Sperry employs about 1,000 persons in Reston and Merrifield.

Sperry has been in the flight simulator business for six years. The work is a logical outgrowth of its older naval simulator business and its primary business of computers, which are the key to sophisticated simulators. With a backlog of about $100 million in orders, Sperry is No. 2 in the industry to the pioneer Link simulation systems, a division of Singer Co.

Unlike Link, Sperry has limited its simulators to military aircraft, although company officials do not rule out eventual expansion to trainers for commercial aircraft or, further down the road, spacecraft. Sperry also makes simulators for the M-1 tank and other armored vehicles, as well as moving targets for training infantry.

Flight simulators are valuable not just because they don't crash like real aircraft. They also don't burn up fuel like the real thing. It costs about 10 percent of what it would in a real aircraft to train a pilot on a simulator.

"The business got an extra special boost when the energy crunch came in the '70s," says Sperry vice president for flight simulation systems Thomas G. Walkinshaw, who joined the company six years ago when Sperry, as part of its entry into the business, bought out the flight-simulator firm he helped found.

"It's a tough business to start from scratch," Walkinshaw says. "It takes a lot of different disciplines to build a flight simulator." It also takes a lot of time — about three years for an F-18 simulator. As a result, simulators are virtually custom-built, to contracts that usually call for one or two at a time. Sperry turns out about five simulators of various types a year at its Virginia facilities.

The idea of flight simulators goes back decades, the first one to duplicate motion accurately claimed an old pump organ as a direct ancestor. Many people are familiar with the classic Link simulator for small single-engine planes, which looks something like a closed cockpit with stunted wings on a pedestal and which doesn't do much more than respond to the joystick and rudder pedals.

But the advent of the silicon chip and increasingly sophisticated computer software and hardware has made flight simulators much more realistic. Four computers run the F-18 simulator. The "feel" of the controls on a simulator are just like those on the real aircraft, courtesy of a computer that checks control response 30 or more times a second.

Many of the simulators Sperry builds in Reston not only duplicate motions and sound accurately, they even include video images or computer-generated images that allow a pilot to see what any flight situation would look like. And the seat of the F-18 simulator includes air-filled bladders and other devices that simulate the G-forces sustained by a pilot in high-speed maneuvers.

Instructors can make the new simulators do just about anything that would occur in actual flight, and even a couple things that might not, such as weather that nobody would fly in. "We can give them a thunderstorm they'll never forget, without risking anything," McBrien says.

In addition to monitoring the pilot's performance, the computer also can play it back, so an instructor can review a student's mistakes just as they happened. The computer also can be programmed with preset flight data to give pilots experience with specific situations and so that pilots can be tested against each other on a uniform set of maneuvers. And by "freezing" the action at any time, a student and instructor can review the student's responses to a situation, and then have the simulator pick up just where it left off.

The Ungame teaches people to talk about feelings

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The game looks like plain fun. It includes a brightly colored board, plastic tokens, a die and a pile of cards. But to its inventor, Rhea Zakich, it is a way to help people stop playing games with their feelings.

Pick a card and you're confronted with questions like these:

—What do you think your friends say about you when you're not around?

—What is the worst thing parents can do to children?

—What would you do if you found $1,000 in a vacant lot?

—What TV or movie star would you like to invite to your birthday party?

The questions may seem mundane, but when Ms. Zakich wrote them, she did so to help herself express feelings that she had kept silent about since childhood. "I grew up in a family that said, 'You never cry,' 'You're not supposed to be afraid,' " she said.

Ms. Zakich's strong facade held up until 10 years ago, when she lost her voice. She'd had some tumorous growths removed from her vocal cords, and her doctor told her that she might never speak again. Her friends seemed to assume that, because she couldn't talk, she couldn't hear. They'd wave hello to her, ask her how she was and walk away. She tried writing notes, but few people stopped to read them. Her two young sons, freed from their mother's "nagging," ignored her.

"I was devastated," said Ms. Zakich, who has since regained her voice. "I was lonely and I was heartsick and fearful. It never occurred to anyone who had known me before that I might be going through those feelings...I had built a wall around myself so that nobody would know how I felt all those years. It's like I had built a prison and I was sitting in it, wondering why I didn't have any visitors. And nobody would have known how to get in."

After weeks of isolation and depression, Ms. Zakich figured out a way to make her family and friends sit down, say what was on their minds and read the notes that told what was on hers. She invented The Ungame.

She sat at her kitchen table and drew the board with markers and crayons. She painted empty thread spools for the tokens, and she never thought it would go beyond her home. But friends who played said that, although many of the questions seemed fairly ordinary, answering them had a curious effect.

"People started talking about things they usually didn't talk about with each other," she said. "I think in every case, whoever sat down and played it would say, 'Can we borrow this? We have teen-agers and we never hear them talk. We have kids who will never sit down with us.' Or they would say, 'I want to learn more about my wife. I've learned more in 15 minutes than I learned in 12 years of being married to her.' "

Ms. Zakich began making copies of The Ungame for friends and eventually had it produced commercially. Now, more than 1 million games have been sold, and some psychiatrists prescribe The Ungame for their patients. The game has been used as a tool in prisons and alcohol rehabilitation programs, and Ms. Zakich is invited to speak to groups of professional counselors.

"The game is like a counselor in that it poses questions that nobody else could get away with, without people saying, 'Why do you want to know? What are you going to do with what I tell you?' It listens," Ms. Zakich said. "I think that in a game, people will stay, and that's why it encouraged me to put it in a game form. I thought that, in my family, that's the only time we sit down and face each other, when we get out the Monopoly or something. And that's the only time we commit to a certain amount of time."

When Ms. Zakich made that first game at her kitchen table, however, the idea of sitting down to talk about feelings was completely foreign to her. She thought she had invented the game out of her need, which she discovered one night halfway through her six months of silence.

Infuriated at her inability to communiate, Ms. Zakich had spent weeks holed up in her house.

"There was this night when it just seemed overwhelming," she said. "I was pacing the floor, unable to sleep, and I felt literally as though I was drowning in something. I think it was probably years of unexpressed feeling. I felt like I was going to cry, and I hadn't cried for, I'll bet, thirty years. I don't think I had shed a tear. I was a steel person, and I had prided myself for that. I thought it was the epitome of being mature and successful. Now I'm convinced that it's sick, sick, sick."

When the feelings came, they came in a tidal wave.

"I crumpled," she said. "I remember lying on the living room floor in total darkness. It was sort of like by the moonlight and I was beginning to cry the kind of sobs that come up from the bottoms of your feet. It was like labor pains to me. I cried about everything, I think, that labor pains to me. I cried about everything, I think, that had ever happened to me that I had never honestly responded to. I saw these images of times when my feelings were hurt and times when I was frustrated or angry. As the scenes would come to me, I would wail and cry. There was a time after several hours of sobbing when I was done."

When Ms. Zakich describes the catharsis she experienced that night, she believes she was born again. She said she felt "an awareness that there wasn't any separation between who I was or what was left to me and who had created me."

She talks about the game that she invented a few days later with enthusiasm but without proselytizing. While The Ungame encourages people to talk about their feelings, she said, it allows them to say as little or as much as they want. The game includes two decks of cards, one "lighthearted" and the other for "deep understanding," but the responses people give seem to depend more on what they're comfortable saying in a particular group.

One woman, Ms. Zakich said, began crying when she answered the question, "What's your favorite color?" The woman said it was blue, because her grandmother had worn blue, and she had loved her grandmother. Another time, a young man in prison picked a card that said, "Say something about love." He said, "It's spelled L-O-V-E."

That was all that young man had to say, and, Ms. Zakich said, it was a satisfactory answer for him. There are no losers in the game, and the only rule is that no one speaks when it's another person's turn.

LEGAL NOTICES

o'clock a.m. of the Monday next after the expiration of 20 days from the date of service of this citation, then and there to answer the petition of BARBARA JEAN HAMILTON, Petitioner, filed in said Court on the 3rd day of December, 1982, against BRETT NEIL HAMILTON, Respondent, and said suit being number DR-14,217 on the docket of said Court, entitled "In the Matter of the Marriage of BARBARA JEAN HAMILTON and BRETT NEIL HAMILTON And in the Interest of ZEPHRUM TODD HIMILTON, A Minor" the nature of which suit is a request for divorce. Said child was born January 23, 1979 in Midland, Texas.

The Court has authority in this suit to enter any judgment or decree in the child's interest which will be binding upon you, including, but not necessarily limited to, the termination of the parent-child relationship, the determination of paternity, and the appointment of a conservator with authority to consent to the child's adoption.

Issued and given under my hand and seal of said Court at Midland, Texas, this the 14th day of January, 1983.

VIVIAN WOOD
Clerk of the District Court of Midland County, Texas
BY: Jimmie C. Madry, Deputy

LEGAL NOTICES

LEGAL NOTICE

The Planning and Zoning Commission of the City of Midland, Texas, will hold a public hearing at 3:30 p.m. on Monday, January 31, 1983, in the Council Chamber, City Hall, 300 North Loraine, Midland, Texas, on a request for the approval of a replat of the following described property:

A replat of Lot 10, Block 3, 349 Ranch Estates.

(Located at the NE corner of Pueblo and Chickasaw)

Pursuant to Section 5(c)(1)(B) of Article 974a, Vernon's Annotated Texas Civil Statutes, a copy of Section 5(c)(2) of the said Article 974a, setting forth the conditions whereby written approval by owners of lots within the immediate preceding subdivision plat sought to be replatted may be required, is quoted as follows for your information:

"(2) The City Planning Commission or other appropriate governing body shall require in any resubdivision or replatting to which this subsection applies written approval of 66-2/3 percent of:

"(A) the owners of all lots in such plat; or

"(B) the owners of all lots in such plat within 500 feet of the property sought to be replatted or resubdivided if such immediate preceding plat contains more than 100 lots.

"The provisions of Subdivision (2) of this subsection shall, however, apply only if 20 percent, or more, of the owners, to whom notice is required to be given, of the lots in such plat a portion of which is sought to be replatted or resubdivided file with the City Planning Commission or other appropriate governing body written protest of such replatting or resubdivision prior to or at the hearing referred to in the notice of the proposed replatting or resubdivision. In computing percentages of ownership, each lot in each subdivision shall be considered equal to all other lots regardless of size or number of owners, and the owners of each lot shall be entitled to cast only one vote per lot.

If any further information is desired, please feel free to contact the Planning Department, 683-4281, Extension 405.

Sam A. Listi, Senior Planner
Department of Planning and Community Development

BUILDING THE PETROPLEX

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.875%. *Principle and interest only is calculated in monthly payment.

Midland Senior Center: Something for everyone

The Center operates with a Center Management Committee and an Executive Board. It was moved into its present location, 2500 Delano, in January 1981 and began operating in February. Proir to this time, it was located at First Christian Church. The facility allows senior citizens of the community an opportunity for recreational activities daily. Anyone 55 years of age or over may participate and become an active patron.

There are many activities offered on a daily basis. In the craft areas ceramics, woodworking, stitchery and social workshops are available. Art classes are a favorite of many people. A volunteer art instructor, La Voe Peeler, comes in one afternoon a week to instruct, critique, etc. Bernice Hughey, another volunteer, gives assistance and planning with stitchery. Physical exercise classes, shuffleboard, pool, dancing and an electric exercise bicycle are available for those interested in fun and keeping fit.

Another option is a woodworking room with electrical and hand saws, assorted tools and kits for the handy man or woman. Table games such as bridge, pitch, canasta, skip-bo, forty-two and dominoes are played daily and are very popular. Bingo is played twice monthly for white elephant or country store prizes.

There is a library-lounge area for those who enjoy reading or watching television. Midland County Library furnishes books that can be checked out and returned at patrons' convenience. Many paperbacks are available for reading and "take home." Reference books are available also.

A federally-funded luncheon is served weekdays for persons 60 years or older, and they make a donation for the meal. Younger persons may eat there also for a set luncheon price. Reservations are requested. A covered dish Friday night social is held the second and fourth Friday evenings of each month.

A highlight of each year is Senior Citizens' month in May. It is always observed with special events and a dinner sponsored by the Parks and Recreation Department.

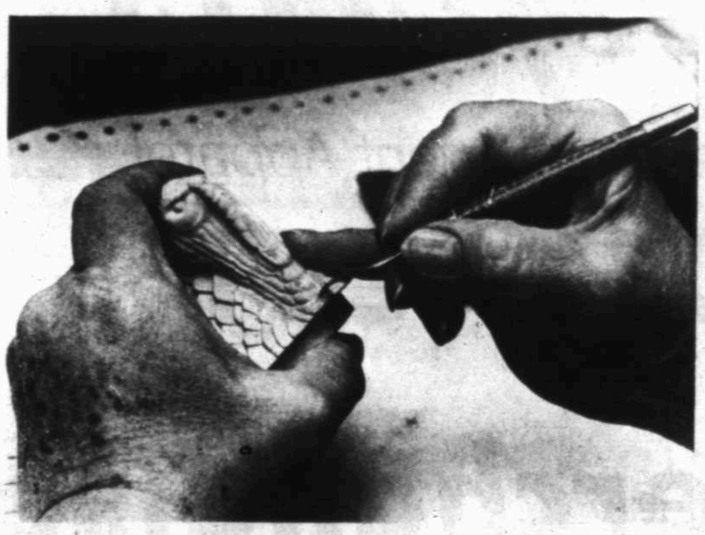

The Center publishes a monthly newsletter sponsored by the City of Midland, First National Bank and Midland Senior Citizens Inc. Melvyn J. Goffigon is editor.

Transportation is available to the Center on a daily basis by Midland Transit System (MidTran). Holders of an identification card may ride free. Persons 62 years of age and older qualify for this service.

All ethnic groups are invited to participate in activities offered at the Center. Various senior citizens' groups and boards — including American Association of Retired Persons, National Association of Retired Federal Employees, Meals on Wheels, Midland Senior Citizens Inc., and Friday Night Dance Group — have meetings at the Center.

SPRING — Nancy Susan Kelly of Houston, formerly of Midland, and Stephen Webb Wilson of Del Rio were married 4 p.m. Saturday at Cypress Creek Christian Church. The Revs. Glenn Wilkerson of Houston and Bill Brooks of Luling officiated.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Patrick W. Kelly of Houston and Col. and Mrs. Joseph Wilson of San Antonio.

Joan Kelly of Houston was her sister's maid of honor. Bridesmaids included Cindy Frith of Dallas and Pam Kelly of Midland, sisters of the bride, and Scotti and Shelli Wilson of San Antonio, sisters of the bridegroom.

Jack Wurster of Ventura, Calif., served as best man. Groomsmen included Chris Normyle of Madison, Wisc.; Lt. Cullen Shiffrin of Luke Air Force Base, Ariz.; Lt. J.K. Murphey of Davis Monthan Air Force Base, Ariz.; and Jeff Wilson of San Antonio, brother of the bridegroom.

After a wedding trip to Lake Tahoe the couple will live in Del Rio.

KOLLAJA-DAVIS

The Rev. Cliff Blackburn performed the wedding ceremony at 7:30 p.m. Saturday for Nancy Lee Kollaja and James Niles Davis.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin A. Kollaja of Midland are the parents of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stewart, also of Midland, are the bridegroom's parents.

The matron of honor was Allison Gleghorn. Suzanne Gibson of Lubbock and Krystal Koch of Houston were bridesmaids.

The best man was Richard Hemmingway of Dallas. Garth Davis and Glenn Davis of Lubbock, brothers of the bridegroom, were the groomsmen. The ushers were Paul Fillman and Terry Thompson of Lubbock.

The couple plans to reside in Lubbock, after a skiing trip to New Mexico.

THOMASON-BROWN

NEW ORLEANS, La. — Carrie Lyn Thomason and Randy Alan Brown, both of Midland, Texas, were married recently in the Redeemer Lutheran Church here.

The Rev. Clair A. Widerhoft officiated.

Mrs. Estill Thomason of 3308 Haynes St., Midland, is the mother of the bride. The bridegroom is the son of Fred G. Brown of 4319 Valley Drive and Mrs. Garst Brown, 3301 Windsor Drive.

Susan Gibbons of New Orleans and Thomas Portele of Midland were the honor attendants.

The couple is residing in Midland.

The bride and bridegroom attended The University of Texas-Austin. He is a geological technician with Wyoming Resources in Midland.

WILLIAMS-EVANS

The Golf Course Road Church of Christ was the setting for the marriage at 7:30 p.m. Saturday of Lisa Dianne Williams and Steve Elliot Evans. Don Davis officiated.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn W. Williams of 2015 Community Lane are the parents of the bride. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. John D. Evans of Albuquerque, N.M., and Lt. Col. Claire J. Evans of Niceville, Fla.

Laura Vandever was her sister's matron of honor. The father of the bridegroom was the best man. Groomsmen were Mack McBrayer of Red River, N.M., and Jim Vandever.

Bobby Williams and Brock Williams, cousins of the bride, seated the guests.

Kay Hudgens and Rebecca Garcia were the bridesmatrons. Jeanne Evans of Albuquerque, sister of the bridegroom, was the flower girl.

Out-of-city guests included the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ruben Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Dick Swindoll.

The couple will reside in Midland.

JULIAN-POSS

Deborah Kaye Julian, daughter of Mrs. Nadine Julian of Route 1, became the bride of Michael Wynn Poss, son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Sullins of San Angelo, in a ceremony performed at 4 p.m. Saturday in the chapel of the First Baptist Church by Judge Barbara G. Culver.

The maid of honor was Kathryn Ann Franz. Steve Livingston of San Angelo was the best man. Chuck Julian and Rick Julian, brothers of the bride, were the ushers.

Jennifer Poss of San Angelo, daughter of the bridegroom, was flower girl, and Albert Ricci of San Angelo, nephew of the bridegroom, was the ring bearer.

After a trip to Ruidoso, N.M., the couple will reside in Midland. The bride is employed by The Bar. She is a graduate of Midland High School. The bridegroom attended San Angelo State University and is employed by Century Pipe and Supply.

HOT TIPS ON HEATING

The family is in the den watching television, playing cards and just talking. Outdoors, temperatures are sliding below freezing. The central heating system is working hard — heating rooms no one is using.

A waste of energy, not to mention money.

Energy conscious families have come to realize that they can turn down the central heating system thermostat and still comfortably and economically heat the room being used.

They put a properly sized hot water electric baseboard heater on the floor adjacent to an exterior wall. By convection heating, the portable heater automatically warms the room evenly and efficiently. When the family disperses throughout the house, the central thermostat is turned back up.

Every day, more than 107,000,000 Americans read a newspaper. Every week, 90 percent of the adults in the country read at least one paper.

* * *

That may explain why newspaper advertising revenues lead all major media—more than television and radio combined.

FABRIC SECRETS

Consider using an "arrowhead" as a decorative and secure finish in tailored costumes, pleat tops and on finish seams that end within the garment. First, mark the triangular shape of an arrowhead on the fabric with chalk. Using a buttonhole twist in the needle, make two small stitches bringing the needle out at the lower left corner. Next, take a stitch from right to left at the upper corner. Insert the needle at the right corner and bring out at the left corner barely inside the initial two stitches. Repeat the procedure placing the threads side by side until the triangle is completely filled in.

Perhaps you received your sewing machine as a Christmas gift and need some help in getting started with your first project. You'll find our staff at LEGGETTS FABRICS most patient and anxious to share their years of experience in the world of home sewing with you. Chances are we will not suggest you use "arrowheads" right away but we will assist you with choosing a pattern that will be easy to follow. You'll find us at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and No. 9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. Hours: Mon-Sat. 10-6

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

A friendship which developed in Hawaii with entertainer Shari Lewis a couple of years ago prompted Rosalind and John Redfern Jr. to host a late night dinner party in her honor in their Country Club Drive home following her recent show at Theatre Midland.

The guests included Miss Lewis' conductor, Stormy Sacks, and her lighting director, Scott Irwin, both from Los Angeles; the Redferns' children, Doris and John Redfern III and son, John IV, and Rosalind and Arden Grover and children, Jeff and Rosson, in addition to friends, Evelyn and Payton Anderson, Zuma and Charles Renaud and Sam Woodward.

The guests all raved over Miss Lewis' show, agreeing that she gave an outstanding performance.

GREMLINS IN THE newspaper's computer input system inserted an "and" in the Dorothy Holt Kimsey party item last Sunday, resulting in the copy reading Dorothy and Holt Kimsey, instead of Dorothy Holt Kimsey, as the article was originally written. We are sorry for this error.

AN OCCASION to look forward to each year is the Epiphany Party held traditionally on January 6 by a trio of hostesses, Heidi (Mrs. George) Goebel, Laura (Mrs. Tom) Scott and Pat (Mrs. Robert) Thames. All three are former Girl Scout leaders, and their guest list includes many women who are and have been active in Girl Scouting.

This year's party was held in Heidi's home to mark the end of the holiday season and to commemorate the day in the Christian calendar which centers around the arrival of the Three Wise Men before the Baby Jesus.

The party always features several specialities of the hostesses and this year included Heidi's Gluehwein, a hot, spiced wine drink, and Stollen, a Christmas bread, both reflecting her German place of birth; Laura's hot seafood dip and white fruit cake, and Pat's chocolate bonbons and her Swedish crescent cookies.

The party rooms were aglow with a profusion of lighted candles, and decorations included Heidi's collection of angel figures and the Goebels' candle-decked Christmas tree, which they traditionally put up on Christmas Eve and leave until after the Twelfth Day of Christmas.

Heidi says that the hostesses strive to create "Gemuetlichkeit," a German word which signifies "a warm, cozy atmosphere where guests enjoy each other's company, along with good food and drink."

IN CHATTING with long-time Midlanders, Mary Elizabeth and Frank Ittner, we were pleased to hear that their son, Robert C. Ittner, recently has been named president of Brookhollow National Bank in Houston. Bob, as he is known to family and friends, graduated from Midland High School and received his M.B.A. in finance from the University of Texas-Austin, where he served as captain of the basketball team. He and his wife, Linda, who also is engaged in banking, make their home in Houston.

AT A COCKTAIL PARTY held in their home, so beautifully decorated for the holidays, Barbara and Lyle Case introduced Florrie Ligthart, the fiancee of their son, Steve, to their Midland friends. The couple will exchange wedding vows June 20 in a 15th Century church in the bride's hometown of Naarden, Holland, with a reception to follow in the garden of her parents' home.

Steve and Florrie met while attending school in the East. Now a student at Tuck Business School at Dartmouth, Steve plans to receive his M.B.A. degree on June 12, immediately before leaving for the wedding. Florrie attends Pace University's School of Nursing in Pleasantville, N.Y.

The Cases' younger son, Jeff, and their daughter, Kim, were also here for the party and a holiday visit. Jeff has since returned to Simpson College in Indianola, Iowa, and Kim to Colorado College in Colorado Springs.

The Case family is looking forward to their forthcoming European trip. To be accompanied by Midland friends, Carolyn and Barry Welton, they plan a three-and-a-half week tour of the Continent following the wedding, and Kim is anticipating the summer in France, where she will pursue her studies.

KATIE (MRS. BILL) HECK said their holiday visit to the East Coast could only be described as "a perfect trip." Going first to New York City, they visited their son, Jim, and his wife, the former Cathy Culp of Midland, and celebrated Jim's birthday at the famed New York restaurant, Tavern on the Green.

Departing by train, the foursome went on to Philadelphia, where they were joined by Bill's mother, Julia Heck, and his aunt, Agnes Guy of Bethlehem, Pa., for the trip to McLean, Va., for Christmas with the Hecks' daughter, Linden, and her husband, Larry Kettlewell.

Joining in the family celebration was the Hecks' younger son, Doug, who has since returned to Midland after a four-month internship in Sen. Paul Laxalt's Washington office.

We particularly enjoyed hearing about the wonderful surprise Bill's brother, Ted Heck, gave them in Philadelphia. He and a friend, Dorothy Storck, well-known columnist with the Philadelphia Enquirer, joined them unexpectedly on the train for the Philadelphia-Baltimore run, complete with a small decorated tree, champagne, snacks and gaily wrapped packages for a quick Christmas party, leaving them after the hour's ride. What marvelous Christmas spirit!

IT WAS FUN to hear about the clever party given by Midland High seniors, Christin Cobb and Tim Davis. They chose "Blues Brothers" as the theme for the event held at the home of Tim's parents, Dell and George Davis. Guests were asked to come in costume to resemble the characters from the John Belushi-Dan Ackroyd movie by the same name.

A scavenger hunt provided the evening's entertainment, sending guests to business establishments throughout the city for such items as a child's menu, a salad bowl from a pizza parlor and the signature of a drive-in restaurant manager.

Returning afterwards to the Davis home, they were served refresments and awarded prizes. Costume winners were Tracy Hunt and Roland McKinsey. Lisa Bernal, Gary Russell, LaDonna Callahan and Dodd Griffith won the scavenger hunt.

Also assisting with the party were Christin's mother, Gyrene (Mrs. Ed) Luna of Midland, and her sister, Carolee Drake of Haslett, Mich.

A CHRISTMAS CRUISE of the Hawaiian Islands was enjoyed by Sharri Pruett and her daughters, Michele and Wendy. At Honolulu, they boarded the U.S.S. Independence for the seven day cruise, with ports of call at the islands of Oahu, Kauai, Hawaii and Maui. Following the cruise, they returned to Oahu for five more days of vacationing. Plans for surfing, scuba diving and horseback riding were changed due to the winter rains, but they enjoyed sightseeing, shopping and all the shows.

Both girls received special treatment on the trip. Michele celebrated her 18th birthday on board ship and was honored at her table with a birthday cake and "The Happy Birthday Song." In Honolulu, Wendy was called on stage during the Al Harrington Show and asked to do the hula with Al, who is remembered as one of the stars of the "Hawaii Five-O" TV program.

We thought it was interesting to learn that since the holiday cruise, the ship has gone into government service to help the people of Kaui rebuild their island following last fall's hurricane.

Easy chicken dish for guests

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DINNER FOR SIX
Chicken Allium
Egg Noodles & Peas
Lime Chiffon Pie & Coffee

CHICKEN ALLIUM

Easy to prepare for guests.
1-pound Spanish onion, halved and thinly sliced
½ pound mushrooms, thinly sliced
4½-pound chicken, cut in 12 pieces
Salt, pepper and paprika

In a 3-quart baking dish (13⅛ by 8¾ by 1¾ inches) mix together onion and mushrooms. Sprinkle both sides of chicken pieces with salt and pepper; sprinkle skin sides with a generous amount of paprika; arrange, skin side up, over onions and mushrooms. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 400-degree oven until juices from breast portions, when pricked with a fork, are free of pink color — 35 to 40 minutes. Remove breast portions and keep warm. Continue baking remaining chicken until tender — 5 or 10 minutes longer. Pan juices will be thin. Makes 6 servings.

Good dental care means brushing, flossing, rinsing

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — We've all seen the advertisements for those new fluoride dental rinses that say they can reduce cavities by 40 percent. Are they a new dental cure-all, something that will help the teeth of every user?

The answer, unfortunately, is yes — and no.

The new rinses will indeed prevent tooth decay, but only if you combine them with good oral hygiene, according to dental experts. If you don't do the basics — flossing and brushing to remove the dental plaque that causes tooth decay — all the fluoride rinses in the world won't prevent cavities, says the head of the dental department at St. Peter's Hospital here.

"Fluoride rinses will do the job, but to work, the mouth must be clean. There aren't any short cuts," says Dr. Thomas N. Mottolese. "You also have to brush and floss the teeth, then use the fluoride rinse. If you don't do the brushing and flossing, the rinse isn't going to help."

Mottolese says that in a recent study at a school in Des Moines, Iowa — where the drinking water is fluoridated — two groups of children rinsed their mouths at school once a week with a 0.2 percent solution of fluoride or once a day with a 0.05 percent fluoride solution. After 30 months, results showed that both mouth rinse procedures effectively reduced the incidence of tooth decay.

The new dental rinses are recommended by the American Dental Association, which says they have been shown to be an effective decay-preventative that can be of significant value when used regularly in conjunction with a fluoride dentrifice in a conscientiously applied program of oral hygiene and regular professional care.

Dr. Bernard P. Tillis, editor of the New York State Dental Journal and a spokesman for the state's Dental Society, says his group also is recommending the use of fluoride mouth rinses. Tillis says dentists are finding a dramatic decrease in the number of cavities in children, which he attributes to fluoride.

"When I first started practicing dentistry 40 years ago, almost every child who came to the office had cavities. Now it is unusual to see a cavity," says Tillis. "There's no question it is due to fluoride."

Still, all the fluoride mouthwash in the world won't protect your teeth, Mottolese adds. The villain in tooth decay is plaque — a soft, sticky substance that forms on the surface of the teeth and hides in between the teeth and the gums. Brushing alone won't remove plaque — you also have to floss and rinse, Mottolese stresses.

"You could have the best tooth brush in the world and brush your teeth 27 times a day and still miss spots," says Mottolese. "It's really so basic. You have to combine what dentists call "FBI" — flossing, brushing and irrigating."

Flossing — drawing dental floss between the teeth — removes the plaque your tooth brush cannot reach. And there is a right way and a wrong way to floss and brush. Despite what you may have learned as a child, a soft tooth brush is preferable to a hard brush.

After brushing teeth and gums and flossing, rinse with a fluoride rinse for one minute. "It's like adding a wax job to your car after you've had all the cleaning and maintenance work done," says Mottolese. "The rinse becomes an added protection; the fluoride hardens the enamel on the teeth."

BLEDSOE-McLANE

Mrs. Evelyn McWhorter Bledsoe and Robert Chandler Bledsoe, both of Midland, announce the engagement of their daughter, Beverly Anne Bledsoe of Dallas, to David Glenn McLane of Dallas. He is the son of Mrs. Dixie McLane Taylor of Richland Springs and the late Alfred Ervin McLane.

Wedding is set for 7 p.m. Feb. 12 at The Episcopal Church of the Incarnation in Dallas.

Her fiance was graduated from Southern Methodist University in Dallas. He is a member of Delta Chi Fraternity and is employed by Gardere & Wynne, a law firm in Dallas.

WOOD-SKINNER

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Graham Gist of Midland announce the engagement of their daughter, Kimberly Conger Wood, to David Godfrey Skinner of Jacksonville, Fla., son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chester Skinner Jr. of Jacksonville.

The wedding is planned for 7 p.m. March 12 in the First Presbyterian Church.

The bride-elect received her undergraduate and master's degrees from Vanderbilt University and is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta. She was employed by the Orange County Public School System in Orlando, Fla., where she taught special education.

Her fiance was graduated from Vanderbilt University School of Engineering. He was a member of the Vanderbilt football team and the Southeast Conference championship baseball team. He is employed as a civil engineer with the Auchter Co. in Jacksonville.

CHACON-RAMOS

EL PASO — Mr. and Mrs. Carlos Chacon of El Paso are announcing the engagement of their daughter, Laura, to Michael J. Ramos of Midland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Miguel G. Ramos of El Paso.

The couple will be married at 2:30 p.m. February 19 in Our Lady of Guadalupe Church in El Paso.

Miss Chacon is a junior student at The University of Texas-El Paso, majoring in accounting, and is an accounting clerk with International Fabrics of El Paso. Her fiance was graduated from The University of Texas-El Paso with a bachelor of business administration degree. He is a customer representative with Texas Electric Service Co. and is a member of the Midland Jaycees and Big Brothers/Big Sisters and a Junior Achievement sponsor for TESCO.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin J. Ward, 306 Dewberry St., announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Traci Janine, to Tommy M. Conner, son of Eugene L. Conner Jr., 212 Club Drive.

The wedding is planned for 7 p.m. February 26 in Wilshire Park Baptist Church.

The bride-elect is a 1980 graduate of Midland High School and is an engineering secretary for Union Texas Petroleum. Her fiance, who attended Midland College, is employed by Routh Electric Co.

Revised lifestyle policies

The following are policies for publication of stories and announcements in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the story is to run. For example, an item to appear in Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within five days of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

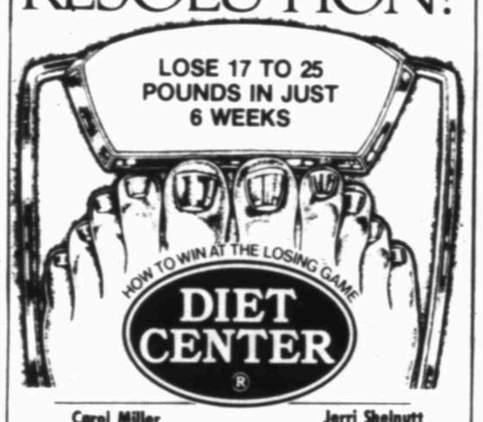

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Jerry Baugh was first place winner when the Old Timers Bridge Club met in the Allison Bridge Center. Betty McClure was second place winner. Gladys Hays won third and Naomi Boswell won the special prize. Hostesses were Eleanor Fenton and Naomi Boswell.

CREATIVE CUISINE GOURMET STUDY GROUP, AAUW

A Fiesta dinner was prepared Jan. 8 by members of the newly-formed Creative Cuisine Gourmet Study group of the American Association of University Women. Hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Bill Graham, 3907 Crestline.

The house was decorated to carry out the theme and music and foods from many provinces of Mexico were provided. Members joined in two dances, the "Jarabe tapetio" and the "Chiapenecas," performed by Mrs. J.L. Williford. Many members wore festive Mexican clothing, and discussions on Mexico were exchanged by members who had visited different areas.

Foods were chosen and prepared by three couples: Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. J.L. Williford and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Graham. Nine members and their husbands attended. Ann and Ken Greer were guests.

LIONESS 700

The January meeting of the Lioness 700 Club was held recently in the home of Betty Whitmire. Vice-president Elaine Pirkle presided. She gave a report on the family who was presented a basket of food at Christmas time.

The program was presented by Marge Holland, director of the Senior Citizens' Center. She gave a history of the Center and a listing of the many activities offered there. The Club voted to make a cash donation to the Center.

It was announced that the Lioness 700 Club will have a dessert table with coffee service at the Chili Fiesta, the Westside Lions' Club annual project which will be held in Dellwood Mall on Jan. 29. All members were asked to bring their special desserts for this fund-raising project.

The meeting was adjourned and refreshments served to 11 members and two guests.

20TH CENTURY STUDY CLUB

Mrs. Vance Hendricks gave a General Federated Women's Club report to the Twentieth Century Study Club Jan. 11 at Green Tree Country Club. The G.F.W.C. influences legislation and keeps members informed on current political, social, health and home matters. The club joined the G.F.W.C. in 1938.

A program about his homeland was presented by Marc Baarda, a Midland High School exchange student from Nybrock, Holland.

XI PHI ZETA, CHAPTER BSP

Xi Phi Zeta Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi had a Secret Sister gift exchange in the home of Mrs. Ronald Dean following a Mexican Casserole Supper to celebrate the holidays. A family Christmas dinner was held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Max Dickerson. Santa Claus made an appearance and presented the children with a gift. Tammie Gardner presented two songs in sign language.

Next meeting will be in the home of Mrs. Charles Gardner. The Valentine Tea will be held Feb. 6 in the home of Dot King. Janet Carlisle will represent the chapter as Valentine Sweetheart at the Valentine Ball Feb. 12 at the County Exhibit Building.

Substitutes are hit

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Two national celebrations played roles in the development of two ice cream treats, says Sealright Co., a manufacturer of ice cream packaging.

The Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia more than a hundred years ago saw the creation of the ice cream soda. A vendor ran out of cream and substituted ice cream, an immediate hit.

Variety of bread can be made in microwave

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

In these biting-weather, stay-at-home days, it warms one's spirits to be presented with a basket of steamy hot rolls or to watch your fresh baked bread loaf steam up the kitchen windows as it cools.

Flour is the essential ingredient in breads and rolls and if the ground grains were omitted, we'd be left with a sticky lump of goo. Hard to slice.

There are more varieties of flour than one might imagine. Even among unexotic white flours there are differences.

All-purpose is a general baking flour that does well in everything except delicate cakes such as angel food cake. Instant flour is granular, dissolves readily in water, needs no sifting and is more costly than all-purpose. Self-rising flour includes a leavening agent and salt.

Cake flour, the most expensive of them all, is used in baking delicate cakes. Such as angel food.

Semolina is produced from durum, the hard wheat used in pasta production. It is excellent as a soup thickener, good in milk puddings and savory dishes with grated cheese.

Matzo meal is a cracker meal made from ground flour and water crackers. Farina, the Portuguese word for "meal," includes all flours made from starchy tubers, vegetables, or grains.

Corn flour, ground white or yellow corn involving the entire kernel, is a handy wheat flour substitute for those on a gluten-free diet.

If your cupboard is bare of the flour called for in your recipe, substitutions may work just as well. If you lack flour altogether, 1½ teaspoons of ground arrowroot flour equal 1 tablespoon of flour. To substitute for 1 cup of all-purpose flour, use 1½ cups cake flour, ⅞ cup potato flour, 1¼ cup rye or coarsely ground whole grain flour, or 1 cup cornmeal. For cake flour, and as a less expensive alternative, for 1 cup use 1 cup minus 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour. As self-rising flour, 1 cup all-purpose flour plus 1¼ teaspoons baking powder plus ¼ teaspoon salt will suffice for 1 cup of the self-rising variety.

EVERREADY MUFFINS

4 cups all-bran cereal
2 cups 100 percent bran cereal
2 cups boiling water
1 quart buttermilk
3 cups sugar
4 beaten eggs
1 cup oil
5 cups all-purpose flour
5 tsps. baking soda
½ tsp. salt

Pour boiling water over cereals. Stir in buttermilk, sugar, eggs, oil, flour, soda and salt in that order. Stir until just blended. Refrigerate. Remove from refrigerator. Without stirring batter, fill paper baking cups half full. Arrange 6 cups in circle. Bake in microwave 2½ minutes. Remove muffins immediately from cups to cooling rack. Makes 6 dozen muffins. (Mixture can be stored in refrigerator for three to four weeks.)

HONEY BRAN COFFEECAKE

¾ cup all-purpose flour
2½ tsps. baking powder
½ tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. nutmeg
¼ tsp. salt
2 cups 40 percent bran flakes
½ cup milk
1 well-beaten egg
¼ cup honey
3 tbsps. melted shortening
¼ cup firmly packed brown sugar
2 tbsps. melted butter or margarine

Sift together flour, baking powder and spices. Stir in 1½ cups bran flakes. Combine milk, egg, honey and melted shortening. Pour in flour mixture. Moisten. Mix brown sugar, butter and remaining bran flakes. Pour batter into 8x8x2-inch glass baking dish. Top with sugar mixture. Bake in microwave 4½ minutes. Turn dish one-quarter turn every 1½ minutes. Makes nine to 12 pieces of coffeecake.

PECAN-DATE BREAD

1 cup chopped dates
¾ cup chopped pecans
1½ tsps. baking soda
½ tsp. salt
¾ cup boiling water
3 tbsps. shortening
2 eggs
½ tsp. lemon extract
½ tsp. vanilla
1 cup sugar
1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour

Combine dates, pecans, baking soda and salt. Mix water and shortening in lightly. Let stand 1 hour. Beat eggs lightly. Stir in remaining ingredients. Blend in date mixture with fork. Mix with rotary beater until well blended. Pour into greased 8½x4½x2½-inch glass loaf dish. Bake in microwave 8 minutes, turning dish quarter-turn every 2 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes before removing to cooling rack. Taste improves if refrigerated overnight before serving.

IRISH SODA BREAD

4 cups all-purpose flour
¼ cup sugar
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. baking powder
¼ cup butter or margarine
1½ cups currants
1 and one-third cups buttermilk
2 medium eggs
1 tsp. baking soda

Mix first four ingredients; sift into a bowl. Cut in butter with pastry blender until mixture resembles cornmeal. Stir in currants. Mix together remaining ingredients. Stir into flour mixture until well moistened, but do not overmix. Turn batter into a greased 2-quart round casserole, cover with paper towel. Cook in microwave 11 to 12 minutes, turning every 3 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes before removing to cooling rack. Makes 1 loaf. (For a crisp, brown top, brush with melted butter and place under broiler of conventional range for a few seconds.

Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A mine located 110 feet below the campus of the University of Minnesota houses the university's new mineral engineering laboratories.

The 48,000-square-foot space, connected by elevator to an above-ground classroom building, was built underground to conserve energy. The space, sheltered by the earth, requires less energy to heat and cool.

Is America's love of testing making the grade?

By MIKE SAGER
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Even now, the dream is as real as it was two years ago, when he woke up trembling in his garden apartment, the night before the state bar exam.

He had taken a review course and studied for months. He had stopped dating, had grown a beard. This test meant his life; he knew this just as surely as he had known it four years before, when he took the law-school admissions test, and before that when he took the college admissions test, and before that the pre-college admissions test, and before that the one for private school.

And now, though he has finished with filling spaces with a No. 2 pencil, he still has the dream every once in awhile, still awakens trembling. The dream is fuzzy, feelings more than pictures. He is late for the exam, frantic. Then he is finding his seat. People are already scribbling. He opens the test. The booklet is blank.

"The catastrophe of the test situation is enough to make people physically sick," says Washington, D.C., psychologist James Gray. "People may become nauseous, some sweat, there may be heart palpitations or dizziness. Others simply flee. They are compelled, when the test is passed out, to leave the room."

FOR SOME, LIKE the attorney, written tests are symbols of catastrophes of other kinds, Gray says. "Waking anxieties" of the present — for example, a big case in court or a visit from the home office — can manifest themselves in test anxieties of the past.

And if midnight demons visit some in the form of ominous little booklets, it is because written tests hover at every turn in our lives. We are conditioned to be tested, taught to regard and be regarded as a function of how well we score.

Tests may mean what jobs we have and how much money we make, where we live and even whom we marry. In Aldous Huxley's "Brave New World," people were chemogenetically engineered, decanted as socialized human beings, as future emotional engineers or sewage workers.

In our computer-scored world, we are first asked to mark in the blanks. The numbers are our destiny. Seven hundreds make us Alpha-Plus Intellectuals. Three hundreds make us Epsilon-Minus Semi-Morons.

It has been estimated that 95 percent of the people in the United States have taken a standardized test, and that the testing market is worth $300 million a year, more than $1.32 for every man, woman and child in the country. There are group tests with pencil and paper, individual tests given orally and tests that require playing with blocks. Tests are used to select the capable, to monitor progress, to assess the effectiveness of training or education.

WRITTEN, STANDARDIZED tests are required for selling insurance in Illinois, fighting fires in Philadelphia, captaining a ship in the merchant marine, receiving a scholarship from the state of Maryland, Union Carbide or the Brotherhood of Steamfitters. The District of Columbia requires tests for licensing in 22 different professions, from cosmetologist to podiatrist.

Driver's exams were taken by 5.2 million people last year, civil-service tests by more than 1 million. Even Sears, Roebuck & Co. gives test, in-house originals that quantify qualities like ability to alphabetize and "executive personality." Some newspapers give writers and editors spelling tests before considering them for jobs.

If we've been conditioned to feel the gravity of tests, to hate them, to fear them, or even to regard them as culturally or racially biased, we've also been conditioned to crave them. When we see a quiz in Cosmopolitan, we get out a pen and score ourselves. How Sexually Adventurous Are You? Do Your Love Styles Mesh? Is He Fabulous or Is He a Fink? We build our vocabulary with Reader's Digest, test our trivia in Sport. Then we turn the page upside down and see if we were right.

"EXPERIENCE MAKES US anxious about tests on the one hand, and to look for positive reinforcement on the other," says Ewing L. Phillips, a George Washington University professor of psychology. "If we get an A on a test or 600 on the boards, that reassures us that we are smart or smarter than the next person. We think we're going to be okay because we passed the quiz... or got 19 out of 20 right in the Reader's Digest. We seek the good things that come to us when the world considers us bright or smart or above average."

Our nation seems to need tests. At the turn of the century tests were seen as the means by which America's great opportunities could be apportioned equally. If he tried hard enough and had the ability, an immigrant boy from Brooklyn could find himself at Harvard.

Tests were deemed the answer to the societal chaos brought by the Industrial Revolution. With the coming of the machines and the growth of cities, a country raised on local autonomy and informal arrangements found itself beset by corruption, crime and malaise.

What emerged historian Robert Wiebe has called a "search for order." Progress was linked to efficiency; efficiency was linked to testing. "Whatever exists at all exists in some amount," said educational psychologist and testing pioneer Edward Thorndike. With raw data on individual abilities, human talents could be marshaled. Standards could govern people as they governed the width of railroad tracks. Order could be restored.

ONE OF THE FIRST American standardized tests was developed by Henry Goddard, of the Vineland, N.J., School for the Feebleminded. It was adapted from Frenchman Alfred Binet's Intelligence Scale. On Binet's scale, for example, a normal 8-year-old was one who could count backward from 20 to 0 and knew the date; a normal 12-year-old could put words arranged in random order into a sentence; a normal adult could give three differences between a president and a king.

Goddard's test was first used by U.S. officials to identify candidates for forced sterilization. From 1907 through 1928, more than 8,500 people were sterilized for eugenical reasons.

The same sort of test was used on immigrants at Ellis Island. Results in 1913 showed that 87 percent of Russian immigrants, 83 percent of Jews, 80 percent of Hungarians and 79 percent of Italians were feebleminded. The tests, brandished by xenophobes, helped bring about the National Origins Act of 1924, which placed quotas on immigration by country of origin.

By the late 1920s, said one American educator, America was engaged in "an orgy of tabulation." More than 2 million children in 111 large cities were being tested every year with one or more of about a dozen tests available. Some 200 U.S. colleges had begun using mental tests for admissions. Students were being "tracked" into opportunity on the assumption that these tests measured a genetically determined ability to learn.

THEN CAME the Cold War. Opportunity came to be seen as a weapon instead of a tool. President Truman's Commission on Higher Education, based on the results of intelligence tests given to military personnel in World War II, found that at least 49 percent of all Americans had the mental ability to complete 14 years of education. Millions of students marched into testing rooms, their futures to be determined on standardized scales.

Buoyed by faith in the possibility of legislating social change, the federal government launched preschool and educational-enrichment programs. Cities, counties and states established community colleges. Universities admitted a much broader range of students than ever before.

But when the high expectations of the 1960s crashed into the economic realities of the 1970s, tests became a symbol of the diminished prospects for the average American. Because they were one of the visible instruments in the process of allocating economic opportunity, tests were seen as creating winners and losers.

STANDARDIZED TESTS were attacked for being racially, sexually and culturally biased. Ralph Nader damned testing. In a Nader-published study of the Educational Testing Service (ETS) — a nonprofit publisher of more than 160 tests taken by more than 5 million people in 30 countries — it was said that the company's most widely used exam, the SAT, was no more able to predict student performance in college than would a roll of the dice. In a look at 827 ETS validity studies between 1964 and 1974, Nader found that the SAT delivered an average accuracy of 11.9 percent. ETS strongly disagrees.

Bernard McKenna, program-development specialist for the antitesting National Education Association, says that tests exist "because of the assumption that you can't educate everyone for everything. So you have to have some device, some economical way, that is easily administered to determine who should be a doctor and who should be a garbage man.

"An EKG can measure the heart," McKenna says, "but can a test judge human potential? Human beings can be so complex, you can never expect to be precise. America has a mania for precise numbers and measures. When I go to buy a new mattress, Consumer's Guide tells me to count the number of coils in the springs, and knowing to do this, I feel better. The government, businessmen, everyone wants some simple way to know how the system is running, on the naive assumption that they can find a simple index to know how to allocate resources."

Design for Today

by Belle Glaros

Designing an interior? Perhaps the most challenging aspect is to find furniture that exactly fits your plan. The reward lies in the fact that furniture is of primary functional importance. Its role is to provide a seating, dining, living, studying, sleeping or lying space. Everything else in a room is a form of embellishment when compared to the functional role of furniture. There is no "usual" furniture grouping. Your furniture must fit your needs, demands, and lifestyle. The decorative function of furniture is important but secondary Designing interior and exteriors is our business at BEVERLY HILLS INTERIORS INC., No. 3 Oak Ridge Square, 686-9607. Give wings to your imagination, with Beverly Hills all things are possible. Let us restore or rebuild your fine furniture, desgin and make cabinets to store and display your special and precious items or get you that accent piece you want.

The Forbidden City in the heart of Beijing (formerly Peking) is a marvel of Chinese architecture with its pavilions, marble terraces, tiled roofs and inclines. A tour group is the best way to get around this ancient land.

Travel in China new experience

By MIRIAM McIVER
Copley News Service

Travel in China is different from travel in most other countries. Few people speak any English, and except in Shanghai, streets are marked only in Chinese characters.

About the only way you can get around in a limited time is with a tour group. Besides your tour director, you will be accompanied at all times by at least one Chinese national tour guide.

For the most part guides are excellent and do their best to accommodate tourists, but they cannot be as flexible in changing itineraries as some would like.

On the other hand, don't be surprised if your itinerary is changed along the way.

You rarely know ahead of time, for instance, at which hotel you will be staying in any city until you arrive and are met by your local guide.

Nor do you know until then what you will see in that city. China is struggling mightily to handle the wave of tourists flocking to the country. They are training guides as fast as they can, they are building hotels at record speed, but they just aren't yet ready for all that is thrust upon them, and the strain shows. But their welcome seems very warm, so be patient.

WHILE WE WERE THERE, China was attempting to take the census of what is estimated to be a billion people. The actual counting period extended over 10 days, and it is by far the most ambitious one ever attempted. But there have been problems.

China is trying very hard to curb its burgeoning population, so one-child families are encouraged. An incentive used is a monthly bonus the government provides until the child reaches the age of 17.

If a second child is born, the bonus is terminated. It is reported that children are being "hidden," sometimes out in the country, where two children per family are allowed.

Also, deaths are sometimes not reported, so that the family may continue to receive the deceased's pension and his quota of rationed items.

So the actual count may or may not be too accurate. But for the first time many more questions are being asked that will give data on the composition of China's population, its mobility, its education level and the number of its unemployed, which is a serious problem right now.

And this time they have sophisticated computers, not abaci, to tabulate the results.

DURING A CRUISE of Shanghai Harbor we were fortunate to have aboard a singing group of young people from a Stamford, Conn., high school. They were nearing the end of their tour and put on an impromptu performance for us.

They were excellent, singing a cappella, with a wide selection of songs ranging from spirituals to Italian love songs.

Their leader said it had been an interesting experience, but sometimes frustrating.

At each city or town they visited, the local officials insisted on checking the lyrics of each song to be performed. Some spirituals had to be scratched because "God" and "Lord" were not acceptable.

In some cases they were permitted to substitute "peace." But what made the Chinese especially nervous were the non-words, such as fa-la-la!

On the Yangtze, during a lull after the spectacular portion through the gorges, we spotted what appeared to be a body floating downstream beside the boat. We had several times seen carcasses of pigs in the water, but never a human body.

And the attitude of the body was unusual, in that the arms and legs were extended up from the water, while the colorfully garbed torso and head floated on its back, as though rigor mortis had set in.

To our relief we found that it was a painted wooden statue from a monastery upstream that was undergoing restoration. It had either been discarded or had just floated away.

MUCH OF EVERYDAY city life takes place on the sidewalks.

Women set up their sewing machines in front of buildings and do a brisk business. One couple whose suitcases had not yet caught up with them chose material for trousers and skirts, were measured, and a few hours later picked up their new wardrobe — all well made and very inexpensive.

In the mornings we saw people, cups in hand, busily brushing their teeth over the curb.

We waited in the dingy airport at Xian for more than an hour while the pilot and crew finished lunch. When we finally boarded the Russian-made twin-propeller plane, it had been baking in the midday sun for several hours, and with no air conditioning, the cabin was like an oven.

The first thing the flight attendants did was to pass out pretty paper fans to the passengers, and with the energetic fanning from 40 tourists, it is a wonder that the plane didn't lift off without help from the propellers.

Shortly after takeoff, "smoke" began streaming into the cabin from above the luggage racks, causing no little consternation among the passengers.

Fortunately, it was only condensation formed when at the higher altitude, cool air was introduced. From then on the flight was comfortable and uneventful.

PROTECT YOUR HOME WHILE YOU'RE GONE

With gas prices lower this summer than last, more people will be leaving their homes for vacations this year. Whenever there is an empty house, the chances for burglary increase.

There are several steps homeowners can take to minimize this risk when they are away. First, have a neighbor pick up your mail every couple of days so that your absence isn't obvious from a large pile of letters and magazines. Stop delivery of your newspapers. Installing a timer or two to turn a few lights off and on at appropriate times of the evening is a good idea. This helps to give the house a lived-in appearance.

Notifying your local police that you'll be away is always advisable. This way, they can give your home special surveillance. Don't close all the curtains or drapes when you leave. This is a sure sign that nobody's home. If you have a lawn, make arrangements for someone you know to cut it at least once a week. The little amount of money involved is good insurance.

For health, comfort, foot care important to travelers

By JEAN LUNZER
Hearst Feature Service

Unhappy feet can ruin a trip. Travelers who never experience foot woes can be in for surprises when they start tramping distances over cobblestone streets or prowling historic ruins in ordinary leather street shoes or sandals with inadequate support.

Except possibly for a cruise on which shore excursions require only limited walking, durable, well-broken-in walking shoes should be the most important item of apparel in a traveler's wardrobe. Traveling is no time to be vain, and that most walking shoes are pretty bulky and unflattering should be ignored. Comfort and support are what counts.

This applies particularly to women, because they wear so many different kinds of shoes. But men travelers, too, need to take a good look at footwear and foot care when they're planning a trip. Without exception, the men I've talked to say the same thing: except for dress occasions, they want a thicker sole than the usual leather underpinning, and one which is flexible and spongy enough to absorb pavement or rough surface shock is best.

MEN WANT GOOD support, and some of them use arch inserts, particularly in athletic shoes. Cushiony socks are another route to foot comfort, and they suggest carrying a large enough supply to guarantee frequent changes. Many men like socks which are at least part cotton in preference to those which are all synthetic, because cotton is absorbent and seems to be cooler. While the part-cotton sock is especially important in hot areas, it helps in all but really cold conditions, when a light-weight wool may be the best choice.

One of my travel writer friends says he likes a leather or suede casual tie shoe with fewer eyelets than a regular oxford becase it provides an easier fit which will adjust to variations in temperature. A professional associate says he carries an old pair of sneakers for beaches or waters which may have coral, because coral cuts can be extremely painful.

He cautions both men and women to get used to wearing zoris (thong sandals) before taking them on a sun and beach trip — or buying them on the spot — because toes need to get used to the pressure of the thong and blisters can develop quickly. Also, zori wearers need to exercise caution if they're in and out of the water or taking long walks, because it's easy to burn the tops of your feet. Once that happens, forget about shoes for about a week.

Getting back to the ladies — the ones with the real shoe problems — sometimes it's actually their feet, not the shoes. Many of us wear high heels and don't do as much ordinary walking in flats as we should. When we do walk a lot on a trip, our feet really feel punished. In the rush of getting organized to go, it's easy to neglect our feet and to start out with callouses and unmanicured toenails.

SOME VETERAN TRAVELERS make a trip to the chiropodist before a trip, but I've never found that necessary. I do find an occasional pedicure helpful, as long as it's a professional one which gets rid of the rough edges, including callouses. A pedicure will cost about $15 to $18, but it's well worth it. If you start out with your feet in the best possible condition and treat them well while you're traveling, there should be no problems. A little soaking and a foot massage with an all-purpose lotion can do wonders before, during and after a trip.

Repeating what I said earlier, vanity has no place in travel, and the woman who can't abide the comfortable clodhopper shouldn't travel unless she shuns all distance walking. It hurts my feet just looking at some of the high heels I've seen tottering along the bumpy boulevards of Europe.

Even in the evening, I try to avoid extreme heels on my trips. In the distance from a taxi to a restaurant down a pedestrians-only lane, you can turn an ankle or feel the cobblestones coming right through your thin soles. And often you have a long walk back to the main drag before you're able to flag a cab.

Assuming you're flying, feet figure in the success of a trip from the minute you board the aircraft. On a long trip, it's pretty hard to avoid the problem of swelling, but if you can elevate your feet even a little by resting them on your carry-on bag, it will help.

Keep your circulation moving by getting up whenever possible, and exercise your feet with a rotary motion for a few minutes every hour or so. Instead of using airline socks while flying, I wear an open-mesh shower sandal ($5, the last time I bought a pair), and I have had less difficulty getting shoes back on at the end of a flight.

EVEN IN HOT AREAS, my regular walking shoes (thick foam soles) are comfortable worn with low-cut golf socks. For me, this type of shoe is preferable to a sandal worn without a sock, and at the end of the day, when I'm ready to dress up a little, it's far easier to get into lighter-weight shoes and (sometimes) hosiery.

Many experienced travelers like sandals for warm climes. They point out that the most comfortable sandal is leather, and the wider and softer the straps the better. The soles should be flexible and thick enough to keep your feet out of the dirt and dust which you are sure to encounter, even in some relatively clean places.

Even with shoes or sandals which are trusted friends, you can sometimes develop tender spots when you're walking more than usual. Carry a little moleskin with you for such emergencies. I've sometimes used it over a rough spot on a sandal as well as on a foot. If you'll carry a small plastic bottle of alcohol and swish a little of it over your feet, followed by a little lotion and a light dusting of either baby powder or foot powder, you'll have a wonderfully soothing treatment for tired feet.

Some travelers get by with one pair of all-purpose shoes, but I've found my feet are happier if I change two or three times a day. So I usually carry two for walking and two for dress, and cut down on other items in my bag. One pair of roomy walking shoes (with laces) goes into my flight bag if I'm not wearing them to board. I had the unsettling experience many years ago of having to go through foreign customs in turquoise brocade travel slippers because my feet had grown so many sizes in flight that my new high-heeled pumps simply would not go back on my feet. The heel height was ridiculous for traveling, and to wear new shoes was even worse. Knowing your shoes and how they'll behave under stress is a cardinal travel rule which should never be broken.

Valid transit visa necessary for travelers to China

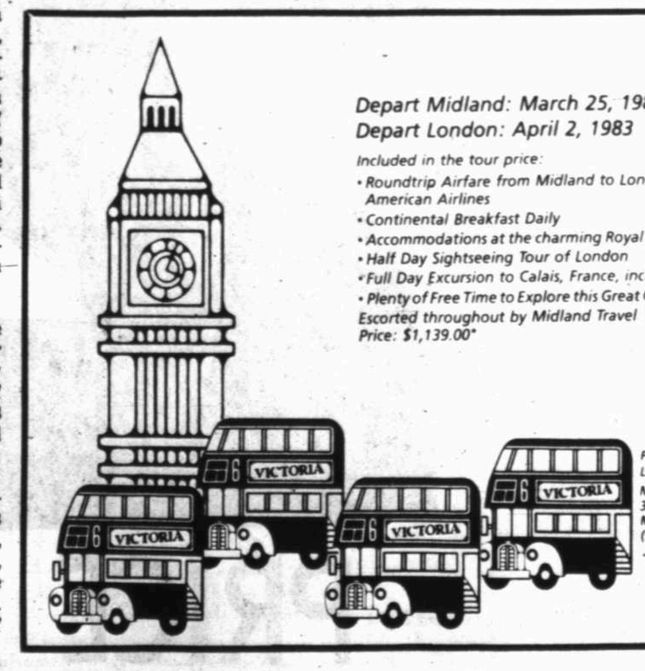

By GENE BURKE
Copley News Service

ADVISORY — TRAVEL TO CHINA: The Department of State advised all American citizens planning to travel to China that, until further notice, all American citizens transiting the People's Republic of China must possess valid transit visas, even if they do not intend to leave the aircraft. Chinese authorities state they will levy a fine of 2,000 Yuan (about $1,000) on any U.S. passport holder attempting to transit without a visa.

Q. I have read in the papers about the 10-year passport. Will you clarify for me what the cost is of a passport for a child of 8 years, and how long it will be valid?

A. If you file an application for a child of 8 years after Jan. 1, the fee is $20, plus a $7 execution fee, for a total of $27. The passport issued after Jan. 1 will have a validity of five years for minors under the age of 18. By statute a passport attests not only to the bearer's nationality but also to his identity. Since persons under 18 go through rapid changes in physical appearance, setting the validity period of five years for minors will help ensure that the passport serves the purpose of identity.

If you wish personalized information about passport requirements, send your questions to 'Gene Burke, Passport Agency, 11000 Wilshire Blvd., Federal Building, Suite 13100, West Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Save money with homemade cleaners

By SAM HAMILTON
Copley News Service

Here's some food for thought when it comes to recipes for housecleaning.

"Recipes for Low-Cost Household Cleaning Materials," compiled by the University of California Cooperative Extension, offers consumers a list of do-it-yourself recipes designed to help keep the house spick-and-span without buying brand-name cleaning products. At least not all the time.

And while being an amateur chemist might sound interesting, the cleaning formulas derived from your efforts can be useful and, more importantly, save money. The amount saved, of course, depends on what cleaning materials are prepared and how often they're used. But suffice it to say that over a period of time, your savings can be substantial.

"The formulas are practical and basically simple to make," says Dorothy Wheeler, home economist for the San Diego County Cooperative Extension office.

"They're scientifically sound for household use. Many of the formulas have been around for years."

For example, an all-purpose household cleaner can be prepared from this recipe:

One cup laundry detergent; ¾ cup household ammonia; one gallon water.

The cost at a supermarket for the detergent and ammonia needed to prepare this recipe was $1.87 for a 64-fluid-ounce container of store-brand laundry detergent and 63 cents for a two-quart bottle of ammonia.

Thus, for a total cost of $2.50 (not including water), you can make a gallon of your own all-purpose household cleaner and have plenty of ammonia and detergent left for making it over and over again.

By comparision at the same store, it cost $1.87 for a 28-ounce bottle of Mr. Clean all-purpose cleaner; $1.96 for the same-size Lysol cleaner, and $1.24 for a 22-ounce spray container of Fantastik. Like the more expensive brands, your homemade cleaner can be used in place of liquid, powder and aerosol foam cleaners for such jobs as washing woodwork, walls and floors.

The recipe will yield a more concentrated cleaning liquid by using less water. Also, it can be dispensed from a spray bottle.

For painted surfaces, the UC-Extension suggests a gentle cleaner — such as a mild liquid detergent used for washing dishes — be used so as not to remove the paint.

Here are three Extension recipes for carpet spot removal cleaner, listed in order of difficulty of spot removal:

- 1 teaspoon mild liquid detergent (the type used for hand dishwashing) and 1 cup lukewarm water.
- One-third cup white vinegar and two-thirds cup lukewarm water.
- 1 tablespoon household ammonia, ¾ cup water.

After the formula of your choice is prepared, squeeze the mixture onto the trouble spot, then blot with a damp cloth. Rinse well with clear water, being careful not to wet the carpet backing. Then blot dry.

Wheeler said tests of the various cleaning materials have been conducted under supervision of the Department of Family and Consumer Resources Unit of the University of California Cooperative Extension.

"If nothing else," said Wheeler, "making your own household cleaning remedies is a great way of supplementing store-bought cleaning supplies."

Copies of "Recipes for Low-Cost Household Cleaning Materials" can be obtained free by writing the University of California Cooperative Extension, 5555 Overland Ave., Building 4, San Diego CA 92123.

Cleaning formulas to be made at home

The University of California Cooperative Extension offers many formulas to help keep down the cost of keeping up the house. Among their recommendations:

SHAMPOO (for carpets and upholstery) — ¼ cup high-sudsing detergent (not soap) powder (for wool carpets, use neutral detergent such as Pink Dreft); 1 quart water; 1 tablespoon white vinegar.

Using an eggbeater, whip detergent, water and vinegar into stiff foam. Apply only the foam with a soft brush, sponge or terrycloth to the fabric surface. Rub gently, using even pressure. Scrape away soiled foam with spatula or dull knife. Wipe with clean damp cloth or sponge.

RUST STAIN REMOVER — Rust that may be the result of a porcelain finish having worn away can be removed by soaking with undiluted white vinegar. To prevent rust, coat stained area with porcelain touch-up paint available at plumbing supply outlets.

DISHWASHER CLEANER — In order to remove hard-water minerals and detergent buildup, run dishes through wash-and-rinse cycle but do not dry. Remove pots, pans and silverware. Turn dial to wash and add ¾ cup chlorine bleach. In the first rinse cycle, add 2 cups white vinegar. For monthly maintenance, add 2 cups vinegar to water in first rise cycle.

TILE GROUT CLEANER — Here's how to add luster to the kitchen, bathroom and shower. Brush or wipe with a mixture of one-third chlorine bleach and two-thirds water. Allow to stand 10-15 minutes, then wipe with clean wet cloth. This mixture can also be used to clean and disinfect showers. To remove mildew in showers, use undiluted bleach.

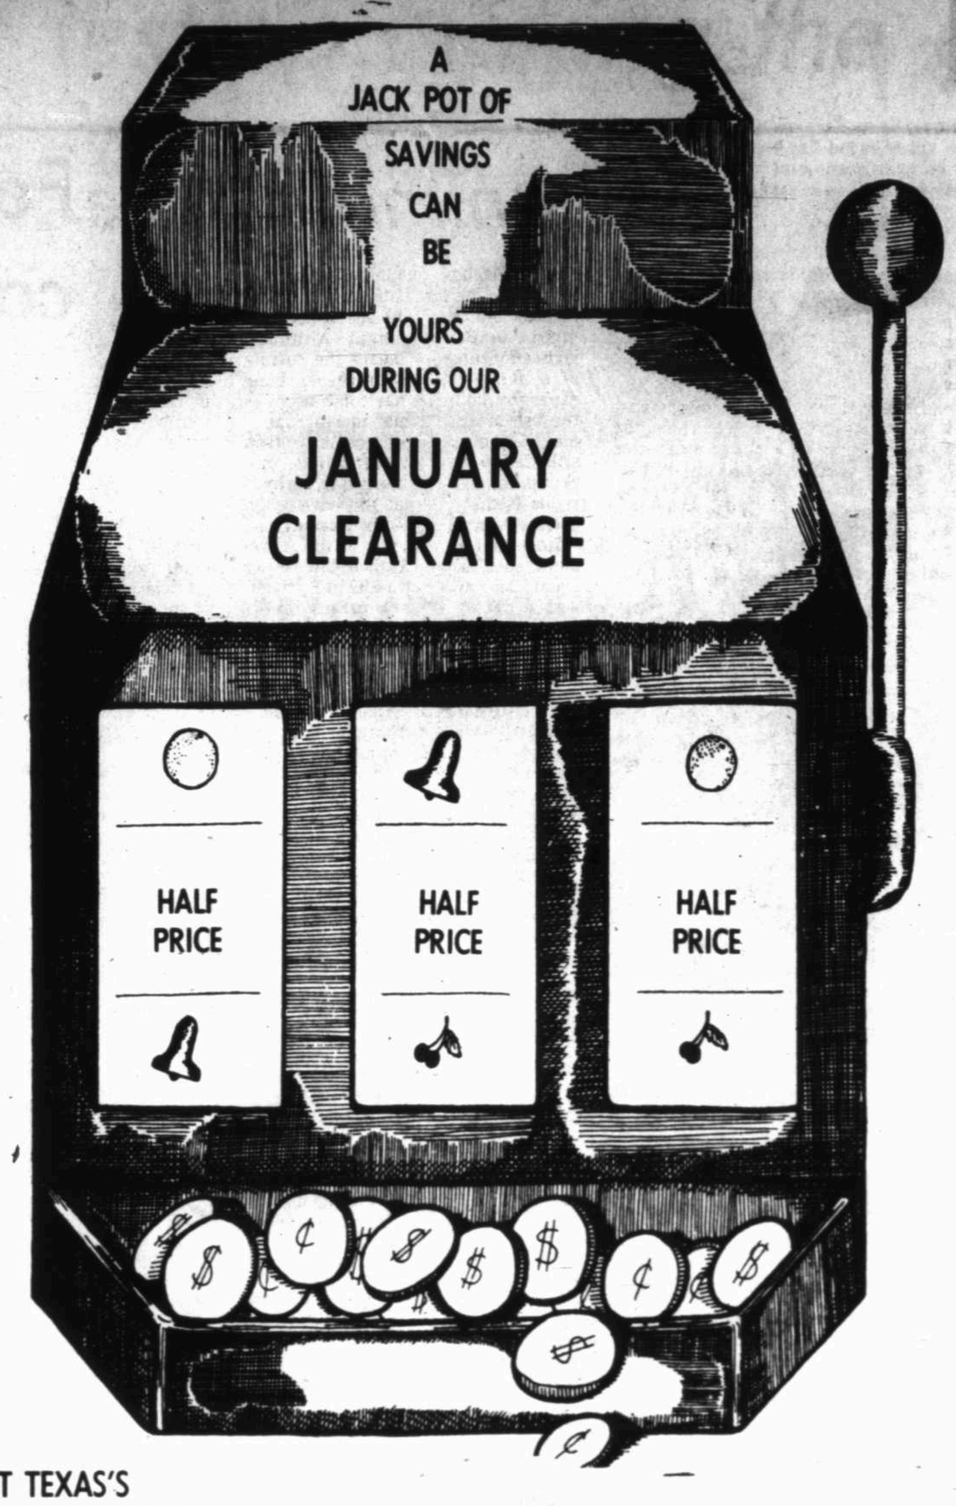

Music and silent movies

A professor at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music, he leads a special orchestra accompanying silent films. For each film, a score is assembled with music matching each scene — whether it's passionate, funny, despairing, or heroic — and Hunsberger must cue the students every time the mood changes. The 1924 version of "Peter Pan," for example, lasts 100 minutes and calls for 98 separate musical cues.

The Eastman orchestra was formed in connection with Rochester's International Museum of Photography, and has performed at Wolf Trap and the Chicago International Film Festival.

Activist group seeks animals' freedom

By GORDON DILLOW
Hearst Feature Service

Their martial-sounding names include words and phrases such as "liberation front," "guerrillas," "militia." Like an amateur spy network, they are loosely organized through a clandestine network of names and phone numbers; a reporter who calls one of their "confidential contacts" will be asked to give his name and number, then sometime later a hushed, anonymous voice will come on the line and say something like, "This is the Liberation Front. What do you want to know?"

Although still relatively few in number — estimates range from a few dozen to more than a hundred — their numbers appear to be growing. The "raids" they have staged have been increasingly frequent in recent months, and spokesmen for the groups promise more dramatic "raids" in the future.

International terrorists? Political militants? Hardly.

They are the radical activist wing of what is generically known as the "animal rights movement," and their basic goal is simple: to set the animals — food animals, research animals, all animals — free.

Operating under such names as the "Animal Liberation Front" and the "Urban Gorillas," in the past four months they have broken into research laboratories at the University of California-Berkeley, Howard University in Washington, the Bethesda Naval Medical Center and the University of Florida to release or "liberate" animal subjects of research experiments.

AND RADICAL ANIMAL rights movement members promise more actions to come. "This is just the beginning," said "Lynn Adams," the nom de guerre of a spokesperson for the Animal Liberation Front, a primarily East Coast organization, after describing the group's "liberation" of two dozen cats from a research facility at Howard University in December.

"Breaking and entering is a violation of man's law," she said. "But we respond to a higher law. We stole the animals to highlight what's going on. And we aren't finished yet."

Are these people simply a bunch of scatterbrained extremists ruled by emotions rather than reason? Or are they the advance wing of an enlightened movement that seeks to abolish the "human supremacist" notion that animals — or "non-human animals," as movement members call them — are inherently inferior species whose purpose on earth is to serve humans as food, beasts of burden and subjects for research?

Predictably, opinions about the animal rights movement and its methods differ, even within the movement itself. Members range from young leftists to public interest lawyers to grandmotherly types who have grown impatient with traditional animal welfare groups, but they share two common traits: They are all strict vegetarians — most of them refusing to eat eggs or milk, and certainly not meat — and they are all absolutely convinced that morality is on their side.

The animal rights movement has its roots in England, the home of the first society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and the birthplace of the anti-vivisectionist movement. Although vivisection literally means the cutting of a living animal for research or experimentation, it has come to mean the use of any animal in lab experiments. "Animal rights-ers" are often still called anti-vivisectionists; one group that is still active in animal rights is the National Anti-vivisection Society, headquartered in Washington.

More radical elements of the movement, such as the Animal Liberation Front, also have their roots in England, where hardly a week passes that a laboratory is not broken into or set afire, or a fox hunt disrupted by animal rights-ers.

IN DECEMBER, BRITISH Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was the target of a letter-bomb allegedly mailed by an extremely radical animal rights group called the Animal Rights Militia, but even the most radical elements of the American branch of the movement disavow such tactics.

The animal rights movement should not be confused with such traditional groups as the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals or the various humane societies, which animal rights-ers refer to as "animal welfare" groups.

Animal rights movement members go far beyond that. They believe that killing any animal for any reason is morally indefensible, as morally indefensible as killing a human being. They believe that animals should have the same basic rights as humans, that to do otherwise is a manifestation of "species-ism," and is no less reprehensible than racism or sexism or any other "isms" that have plagued the history of mankind.

"Each animal is an individual worthy of individual rights," said Ellen Bring of the Oakland-based "Animal Rights Connection," a group that works "within the system" to further the rights of animals.

Although they oppose the use of animals for food, most of the animal rights movement's radical efforts so far have been directed against the use of animals in medical and scientific research. There is no dearth of targets for their actions. According to estimates supplied by movement members, as many as 80 million animals — dogs, cats, rats, rabbits, monkeys, animals of all kinds — are subjected to experimentation in this country every year.

Calligraphy Guild announces upcoming programs

The Easy Writers Calligraphy Guild is an organization for persons interested in calligraphy as a beginner or advanced student. The guild offers opportunities to practice present skills and learn new techniques and knowledge.

This spring the guild will met montly, alternating workshops and programs. The January meeting will be a workshop on the foundational alphabet, bookhand. This will be Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Midland Palette Club. This workshop is being offered to benefit persons that have completed a course at Region 18 Education Service Center, Midland College and Midland ISD inservice.

In February a program is planned on the history of writing and calligraphy. The development of the various styles such as roman, uncial, celtic and gothic will be discussed.

The March meeting will be a workshop. It will teach an advanced alphabet, pointed italic or batarde. This alphabet is more complex than italic, but its detail and decoration are very pleasing. The results are well worth the effort in learning.

Calligraphic embossing is used to enhance work and design. Well-known calligrapher and auther Jacqueline Svaren was instuctor to several guild members this summer. In April, members will learn this simplified and effective process.

For the May meeting the guild will sponsor a book and supply fair to show the various tools and books that are helpful. Demonstrations and discussions will be a part of the program.

The guild invites persons interested in calligraphy and wishing to participate to join their group. Meetings and workshops are scheduled on the third Monday of each month at 7 p.m. at the Midland Palette Club. For further information call 682-2846.

Future is minister's present stock in trade

PASADENA, Calif. — From his pulpit, the Rev. Robert F. Kaufmann was dispensing his New Year's predictions, which include an Oscar for Dustin Hoffman and a Super Bowl win for the Washington Redskins.

And he was explaining to his flock, "However intrigued you may be at the prospect of my making a fool of myself this way every year, there is a purpose to this exercise."

He delivers and publishes his annual forecast, Kaufmann was saying, not for ego-boosting but "to assure me a good turnout" the following year in the knowledge that "many people with terribly small minds and bad tempers come to embarrass me publicly."

This being a milestone year for him, his 20th in the forecasting business, Kaufmann, who was a comic book writer, a swimming pool entrepreneur and a Brooklyn Dodgers hopeful en route to his Unitarian Universalist ministry, had chosen to review a few of his notable successes as a predictor.

There was, for example, the year 1967, when he predicted a rate increase for Pacific Telephone & Telegraph. Kaufmann grinned and added, "I could drag this one out every year and build my average with it."

BY HIS OWN CALCULATIONS, he has an 81 percent accuracy average, but he insists, "I don't care if I'm wrong. It doesn't bother me in the least." Just as well, considering his 1976 projection of a Ronald Reagan-Elliot Richardson ticket beating a Democratic slate headed by Hubert Humphrey. And his 1982 forecast of Tom Bradley as a "shoo-in" for governor.

Never mind. The object of the exercise is to get people to think and to act and to help change things they don't like. "How we act today predicts tomorrow," explains Kaufmann, who considers his church, Throop Memorial here, a church for "people who have thought themselves out of religion."

Kaufmann, who has been known to deliver sermons on such topics as "Why I Hate Sermons" (because he considers them manipulative and conducive to non-thinking), on combatting shyness and on the evils of smoking, seems to have found the forum he sought when, 16 years ago, at the age of 46, he decided he was either going to run for Congress, become a lawyer doing pro bono work or go into the ministry.

If his Sunday flock averages only 100 or so, he is encouraged by his conviction that "all these people are members of other organizations. People get turned on here and go out and do something about it." He considers his mission a success when the congregation splits on an issue and both sides work furiously for their cause.

Throop is the kind of church where the congregation is invited from the pulpit to sign petitions protesting U.S. policy in Latin America and where, in the church hall during the coffee hour, greeting cards are on sale for all occasions — "winter solstice, vernal equinox, Millard Fillmore's birthday."

(THE UNITARIAN CHURCH is a liberal religious movement, founded in 1825 and since 1961 merged with the Universalist Church in America. Unitarians are without dogma or creed and advocate congregational autonomy and tolerance of differing religious views. At Throop Memorial, there is no oral prayer, only moments of silence for individual prayer or meditation.)

Prediction Sunday is a day on which churchgoers must listen to Kaufmann's forecasts, but are then encouraged as the spirit moves them to stand and make their own.

First on his feet is Andy Glick, with a prediction that local symphony orchestras will fail.

Dr. Art Siegel, a physician, predicts a spread in communicable diseases, as a result of an influx of foreigners, and an outbreak of measles.

Beth Cardall predicts a crackdown by credit card issuers as a result of increasing fraud and, to help control this type of crime, the issuing of an I.D. number to every American at birth.

There are more predictions: a world championship for the Los Angeles Lakers, a 2 percent rise in real unemployment during 1983, another baby for Diana, Princess of Wales.

Now, for the record, here are a few of Kaufmann's forecasts:

—A RE-ELECTION BID by President Reagan. "The only thing that can change this would be a health problem — either his or Nancy's."

—A bull-and-bear roller coaster on Wall Street, with the market hitting a high around 1,300, falling back a couple of hundred points and settling somewhere in the middle.

—Doctors going broke and a number of hospitals going bankrupt as a result of the unemployed losing their medical insurance.

—Cutbacks in Medi-Cal reaching a point where "for the first time in a generation, people in this country will suffer and die from medical causes because of a lack of money."

—The death of the Chrysler corporation within five years and its merger with a large Japanese company.

—Climbing housing prices, a rough year for retailers and a few more bankruptcies.

—A CUT OF NO MORE than $7-10 billion in Reagan's defense budget. "We will take away a few of the military's trinkets," says Kaufmann, leaving the MX, but not the dense-pack basing plan.

—Domestic budget cuts of about $20 million. "The great safety net notwithstanding," Kaufmann says, "we will see old, poor people in worse shape than such people have been in for the last 50 years .... Democrats will moan and groan, but the cuts will be made."

—Continuing strife in the Middle East, continuing Soviet presence in Afghanistan, no major unrest in Poland. In Central America, Kaufmann predicts, "It is reasonable to expect trouble involving our big CIA base in Honduras. There will be shooting trouble in at least one of three nations — Nicaragua, Costa Rica or Guatemala. We may or may not be the ones who start it, but the nature of our presence there is sure to exacerbate it."

Just in case anyone in the congregation was snoozing, Kaufmann also offered up this little zinger: "As far as I am concerned, a nuclear war is inevitable. However, none seems likely this year. In point of fact, it will undoubtedly not seem likely even when one does happen."

Caribbean flavor makes winter warmer

There is nothing so appealing as winter stares us coldly in the face than the thought of sunshine, sparkling waters, shimmering beaches and fragrant local island cooking. Even if vacation is not the next thing on your list of coming events, you can still bring a little Caribbean flavor into life today.

Though there are literally thousands of islands in the Caribbean, from large population centers like Cuba to tiny deserted paradises, along with at least five major languages, there is a definite culinary thread that links them all.

Four major influences have left a clear mark on the cuisine, and while names change from island to island, many dishes remain essentially the same.

The first influence is that of the original Indian inhabitants of the islands. They, who were familiar with all the fruits and vegetables native to the area, taught what they knew to the European explorers. These Europeans, homesick for foods they knew and enjoyed, imported such things as citrus fruits, rice, breadfruit, coffee and sugar cane. Later, African slaves, brought in by plantation owners to work the sugar cane, coffee, rice and pineapple fields, introduced okra, callaloo, taro, akee, several kinds of squash and the all-important hot peppers much used for seasoning.

STILL LATER, WELL into the middle of the 19th century, and after the abolition of slavery, many indentured Chinese and Indian workers arrived to care for the huge plantations. Inexpensive labor was essential to the economic survival of the islands at that time. These Oriental immigrants brought their native curries with them along with their superb vegetable fritters and other vegetarian dishes, as well as their very unique cooking methods.

In the last 100 years these four very diverse cultures have merged into a distinct regional cuisine.

Meat has long been expensive on the islands. Pork, goat and chicken dominate, and seafood is a staple. Many of the vegetables that make up a large part of Caribbean cooking are mild, somewhat bland-tasting roots that are high in cabohydrates. While some dishes are prepared to feature the delicate flavor differences, a large number are will-seasoned. Fragrant slices and hot, red chilies are integral ingredients in most sauces, soups and meat dishes.

Not only do the spices add life to foods, but the islanders feel they help cool them off in the tropical heat. Stews and soups are important dishes. Long cooking over an open fire helps to tenderize meats and blend flavors.

Rice is the major grain crop. Rice is eaten at almost every meal, often mixed with peas or beans. The type of peas varies from kidney beans to black-eyed peas to black beans, but the principal is the same, lots of protein and carbohydrate mixed in one dish.

ANNATTO SEED, USED for oil, dye and seasoning, is as much in demand as salt on some islands, especially in Puerto Rico. There, almost every dish begins with the making of sofrito, a sauce of oil, annatto seed, coriander, peppers, onions, garlic, tomatoes and salt pork. It is an essential ingredient to authentic cooking.

Happily, sofrito is available in a ready-to-use form. Here are several recipes to introduce you to this sauce and to the pleasures of Caribbean cooking without a lot of extra effort.

Thick Beef Soup makes a sensational Sunday night dinner. Full of tasty vegetables and based on ready-to-eat chunk-style beef soup, this dish is easy and satisfies even the hungriest crowd. Flavored with prepared sofrito, this beef soup is as good as it is unusual. If batata, yautia, name and apio (all root vegetables) are not available in your local Spanish market, substitute sweet potato, pumpkin, celery root, turnip and potatoes instead. Peel the vegetables, cut them into large chunks and cook until just tender in boiling, salted water. Drain and add to other ingredients. Try a plain spinach salad with this and then splurge on the dessert. Fried plantains are also a wonderful accompaniment, but they can be difficult to peel. Cut three plantains in half crosswise and then cut the skin into lengthwise segments, then peel by segment. Melt a quarter pound of butter in a heavy skillet. Add plantain segments and fry until nicely browned. If plantains are not available in your area, use ripe, but very yellow firm bananas.

Stuffed Green Peppers is a delicious cold weather dish. Begin with a base of chunk-style split pea soup and canned corned beef, a Caribbean staple. Combine these with bread crumbs and stuff into fresh, seeded green peppers. A little cheese on top makes a nice brown crust. Add one teaspoon prepared sofrito as a slight flavor change.

BEEF, SAUSAGE AND Corn Soup is as good as it sounds. A meal in itself, it combines chunk-style beef soup with the rich flavor of Spanish sausages. Tomato sauce, whole grain corn and rice add body and wonderful flavor. This is the perfect dish to serve before a Saturday sports activity — it will keep everyone warm and happy all afternoon.

Don't wait. Treat your family to one of these great dishes today.

Bring the warmth of the Caribbean sun to your table with an island favorite, Thick Beef Soup. Use the unusual varitey of root vegetables from a local Spanish market in combination with a base of chunk-style beef soup — or substitute with more familiar American vegetables for a fast trip to another world for dinner.

THICK BEEF SOUP

2 cans (19 oz. each) chunk-style beef soup
1 can (16 oz.) chick peas, undrained
1 tablespoon sofrito
1 teaspoon sabor a jamon
1 large piece batata, cooked and drained
1 large piece yautia, cooked and drained
1 large piece name, cooked and drained
1 large piece pumpkin, cooked and drained
1 large piece apio, cooked and drained

In large saucepan, combine soup, chick peas, sofrito and sabor a jamon. Bring to boil; add remaining ingredients. Reduce heat. Cook over low heat 10 minutes; stir occasionally Makes six servings.

Note: If batata, yautia, name, pumpkin and apio are not available, substitute white potato, yam, turnip, winter squash and celery root.

STUFFED GREEN PEPPERS

6 large green pepers
1 can (19oz.) chunk-style split pea with ham soup
1 can (12 oz.) corned beef, broken up
1 tablespoon sofrito
1/2 cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese

Cut peppers in half lengthwise; remove seeds. Cook in boiling water for two minutes; drain and set aside. In saucepan combine soup, corned beef and sofrito. Bring to boil; stir in bread crumbs. Remove from heat. Spoon into pepper halves; sprinkle with cheese. Arrange in shallow baking dish. Bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes or until hot. Makes six servings.

BEEF, SAUSAGE AND CORN SOUP

2 cans (19 oz. each) chunk-style beef soup
1 can (8 oz.) tomato sauce
3 cups water
1 can (about 12 oz.) whole kernel golden corn
1 can (4-1/2 oz.) chorizo, sliced
1 tablespoon sofrito
1/2 cup sliced stuffed olives
1 cup canilla rice

In large Dutch oven, combine soup, tomato sauce and water. Stir in corn, chorizo, sofrito, olives and rice. Bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Reduce heat; cover. Cook 25 to 30 minutes or until rice is done, stirring occasionally. Makes about eight cups.

Julian Gold to present fashions of de la Renta

Julian Gold of Midland will present the fashion designs of Oscar de la Renta Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. — 5:30 p.m.

Informal modeling will be presented in the store both days. Mrs. Sid Shaw, representative of Oscar de la Renta, will be on hand to help with personal selections.

At a time when fashion is evolving from loose to fitted, the aesthetics of dress — the nuances of fine detail and fastidious workmanship, the way a collar is stitched to rise a certain way, the filigree delicay of lace, embroidery and flowered silk or even the flash of a handkerchief in a pocket — becomes the most important difference between the new as shock or the new as an instant classic.

This collection expresses the slim, more fitted silhouette in terms of the attitudes, needs, refinements and embellishments that international women now

People sometimes misunderstand the difference between "fit" and "tight." This collection is designed to lie close to the body, but in no way conflict or impede the free movement that all modern clothes must allow.

The hourglass curves of many of the clothes are a blend of shoulder emphasis (now round rather than square), the always-small waist and peplums or other accents at the hipline.

The designs feature black and white as well as strong jewel colors of great brilliance and depth.

The evening clothes are either soft organzas, lacy and flowery, or sophisticated in cut with movement toward the side or back. They combine gala formality with a more intimate elegance.

Romance blooms for spring with Oscar de la Renta's pink dotted and ruffled organza blouse and blue floral full skirt.

Oysters busily working on Japanese pearl farm

By DENIS D. GRAY
AP Writer

NAGA NOI ISLAND, Thailand (AP) — Munching plankton, swaying gently in a milky-green sea, each oyster slowly spins a lustrous sphere which one day will probably lighten a man's wallet and grace a woman's decolletage.

That's the scene under a raft bobbing in the Anadman Sea from which thousands of oysters are suspended and induced to yield pearls — objects coveted, hoarded and adored by Chinese emperors, Renaissance princes and the modern-day rich in much the same manner as gold, diamonds and rubies.

"Utsukushii desu, ne?" —"Beautiful, isn't it?" says Japanese expert Michiaki Ichimura, holding up a specimen he has just extracted with dental-like tools from inside an oyster. He drops the pearl into a cup already swimming with others, puts another oyster on his "operating table" and starts peering and carefully poking into its fleshy innards.

Ichimura is one of three Japanese technicians living and working on this tropical paradise of an island on which is found Thailand's premier pearl farm.

The trio's presence is no accident, since in the Asian pearl business just about all roads lead to Japan. Since achieving the first perfectly spherical pearl in 1905, the Japanese have gained an international reputation as both prodigious producers and importers of cultured pearls.

According to the Japan Pearl Promotion Society, Japan produced 51.7 tons of cultured pearls worth $259 million in 1981 and imported a total of 1.2 tons worth $57 million in 1981, all from Asian countries.

Most of the pearls from tropical Asia — commonly called South Sea pearls — are bigger and more expensive than the Japanese variety and are cultured on farms in the Philippines, Indonesia, Australia, Burma and Thailand.

Thailand's pearl industry got its real start 18 years ago through Dr. Suchit Hiranprueck, a diplomat turned businessman who purchased this island off Thailand's southwestern coast and embarked on a series of ventures with foreign pearl companies.

Today Naga Pearls Co. Ltd. is in partnership with South Sea Pearls Co. Ltd., one of Japan's top pearl concerns. Virtually all of the pearls harvested are sent to Japan for sale, says Suchart Hiranprueck, 31, son of the deceased founder of Naga and a director and general manager of the company.

Since the breeding of oysters — scientifically named pinctada maxima — which produce South Sea pearls is still in the experimental stage, Naga must rely on divers who plunge down to as deep as 195 feet with primitive equipment to gather oysters for the farm. Suchart says that 14 divers have died in various underwater mishaps.

The oysters are brought to this island and given a rest in underwater cages before a technician inserts into them a small sphere shaped from the shell of Mississippi River oysters.

The oysters are then placed into rope-meshed racks — six to eight oysters per panel — and lowered into the sea to a maximum depth of 10 feet. The oysters first try to reject the foreign object and then coat it with layers of nacre, or mother-of-pearl — the same substance from which the oyster's shell is built.

The average pearl from the farm measures 13mm in diameter — Japanese ones are invariably less than 10mm — and retails for about $400 in Japan. But from time to time one worth thousands of dollars will be plucked out: round, big, smooth of surface and texture and suffused with a pinkish "pearly gleam."

After the operation and a dip in an antibiotic bath, a new sphere is inserted and the oyster goes back to the raft for another 18 months. Each oyster can produce three or even four pearls in a lifetime, which spans 10 to 15 years, Suchart says.

Dr. Demento's flip side lacks lunacy

"Fish heads, fish heads, roly-poly fish heads, eat 'em up yum-yum." — From a song by Barnes and Barnes, a Dr. Demento radio favorite.

By JOHN M. BOGERT
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Though magnificently tasteless, the words to "Fish Heads" do not particularly stand out on Dr. Demento's two-hour Sunday night radio show.

How could they? On one recent show they went nearly unnoticed when played as part of three in a row with "Boogie Woogie Amputee" and "A Day in the Life of Green Acres" (the "Green Acres" television theme song sung to the Beatles' "A Day in the Life").

Surprisingly, Barry "Dr. Demento" Hansen, the man who has so enlivened the national airwaves for the last decade on Los Angeles' KMET radio, is noticeably undemented in person.

In fact, he, who can sound so convincingly insane introducing (deservedly) unnoticed numbers like Weird Al Yankovic's "Another One Rides the Bus," is actually a studious-looking chap when not assuming the Demento persona.

At home, he is a lot like a character from the old "Twilight Zone" television series. Small and bespectacled, he lives alone in a San Fernando Valley house (there is no Mrs. Demento) that is stacked in each room — floor to ceiling — with records and record memorabilia.

There are few amenities here for the man who describes himself as a "frumpy old hippie." The only visible creature comfort is a living room couch wedged between records and the huge speakers that he sits between — curtains drawn, air conditioning humming, isolated — listening to the specialty records that are his stock in trade.

A bomb could go off outside, but as long as electricity flowed through his powerful amplifiers, he might not know it.

"I do have a social life," he said in the high-pitched voice that needs only volume to reach the famous demented vocal signature. "I am also a train enthusiast. I take in a ball game now and then and I have friends, but mostly, I have this.

"THE TROUBLE IS, I so much love what I'm doing that I can't tell where my recreational listening ends and my work listening begins. I think I really am working all the time."

The much-in-demand Hansen, a giant in radio markets that include Australia, Guam, Canada and all the major U.S. cities, didn't set out to be the king of dementia.

Born in Minneapolis to "cultured parents," his early days were spent listening to music and playing piano with his mother. However, his father's addiction to Spike Jones — the 1940s maestro of music that often featured pistol shots and burps alongside harps and horns — set him off.

"I was something of a loner after my father died (when Hansen was 8). In high school I really wasn't someone who went with the gang. But all that changed when everyone realized what a record collection I had. Soon, I was going to all the parties with my rock records. That was my first DJ work."

He later did real disc jockey work while a student at Reed College in Portland, Ore. — where he wrote a thesis on early 20th century opera — before going to the University of California at Los Angeles, where he received a master's degree in folk music.

AFTER COLLEGE HE wrote for music magazines, co-produced a John Fahey album and traveled the fleabag circuit as a roadie with the bands Canned Heat and Spirit.

However, it was while writing liner notes for specialty records in Hollywood that Hansen discovered his marketable alter ego."

In the late '60s and early '70s, FM radio filled a huge vacuum in the music world. It was a free form that played anything from rock to classical. "It was a logical place for me. The people at KPPC-FM in Pasadena, Calif., knew me as a writer and researcher on musical topics, so they invited me to come by with more obscure numbers.

"While on the air, playing a song called 'Nervous Norvis,' a secretary came in and said, 'Anyone who'd play music like that would have to be demented.' I was thus born."

In the ensuing months, Hansen did a weekly show, drawing on his collection of undemented tunes. But, in time, he saw that it was the offbeat records that drew people's attention and, eventually, an offer from the much larger and richer KMET.

"I GUESS YOU CAN say I'm the last vestige of free-form radio. In a medium where success is achieved through a narrow broadcast formula, I am the exception to the rule.

"Radio goes for mass tastes. On my show I try to draw out the lighter side. I think it's a good idea to help the demented side of people come out, to help them let go in a harmless way. It's far better than having people go around bopping others on the head or trying to derail trains."

His show's unique format, however, is not necessarily his cup of tea.

"As Barry Hansen, I like to keep up with rock and I like to play old jazz, but I'll rarely play something like 'Boogie Woogie Amputee' here.

I'm a performer. Myself, I might prefer to be playing something by the Beatles, just like Mick Jagger might prefer listening to Chopin instead of running around a stage. But when we're on, I play weird music and he sings 'Satisfaction.'"

BUT HANSEN SEES no contradiction between his public and private self.

"I doubt very much if Jagger jumps up on the piano when he's at home. What you see is the private me. This is it."

Traded, purchased and received as gifts and demos, the records range in age from 100 to a day old. And it's all burglar-proofed and insured by Lloyds of London. The collection, from drab, brown envelopes holding 78 rpm discs to the colorful album covers of the '60s and '70s, has few single jewels.

"I don't have one record I can point to and say, 'This is worth thousands.' The value of this collection, which is the only private one of its kind in the world, lies in its diversity. There is virtually everything you want here behind my burglar alarms.

CB radio craze fading out to spot in history

By JAY LEVIN
Copley News Service

Three or four years ago, there were enough "good buddies" out there to entertain June Callier, known as "Nanny Goat" to CB enthusiasts.

Nowadays, the Encanto, Calif., resident finds little use for her citizens band radio, which reposes silently on a shelf in her home.

"I guess people got tired of it," Nanny Goat said. "You turn it on now, and all you get is static."

In 1978, 14 million Americans had licenses to operate CB radios; today, 5 million are licensed, according to the Federal Communications Commission.

The monthly CB Radio Times folded this summer, the victim of vanishing advertisers and disappearing subscribers, said editor Gordon West.

Acknowledging that CB popularity is on the decline, the FCC may stop licensing operators in 1983.

"People aren't renewing," said Mike Landis, an analyst for the commission's private radio bureau.

CB radio was born in the late 1950s but did not capture public fancy until 1974, thanks in large part to the trucker's song "Convoy" and the Burt Reynolds movie "Smokey and the Bandit."

"It was a chicken-and-egg type of thing. People suddenly wanted to have CB radios in their cars," said John Sodolski, vice president of the Electronic Industries Association, which represents manufacturers of telecommunication equipment. "There was a social milieu about it, with the jargon and movies and the interest in bucket-mouthing back and forth on the radio.

Like the hula hoop fad of the early '60s, the CB novelty faded. Its demise can be traced in part to an occurrence in the telecommunication field.

In 1977, the commission increased the number of CB channels to 40 from 23. That forced manufacturers of the 23-channel sets to unload their units at cut-rate prices; at the same time, foreign manufacturers "flooded the market" with radio sets, Sodolski said.

"A CB radio used to cost about $139 each," he said. "When the price dropped to $29.99, it suddenly became very ordinary."

Many manufacturers subsequently went under. Last year, 1.7 million CB units were sold in the nation, down from 10 million in 1976, according to Electronics Industries Association statistics.

As always, CB radio is used for emergency communication and by truckers and long-distance commuters, Sodolski said. He said the craze helped spark a demand for advanced forms of mobile communication, such as two-way car telephones.

Genes protect Indians

By LEO BOWLER
Copley News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — Southern Arizona's Pima Indians — who eat junk food, seldom exercise, are obese and are ridden by diabetes — have heart disease so infrequently that scientists surmise they have a gene that protects them from heart attacks.

Scientific investigators from the National Institutes of Health have found that although the Indians have most of the risk factors associated with heart disease, they suffer the disease seven times less often than the Caucasian population.

Dr. Barbara V. Howard, associate chief of the NIH Clinical Research Center in Phoenix, reported the findings to the recent 10th Annual Science Writers Forum here. The forum was sponsored by the American Heart Association to publicize significant scientific work in cardiac diseases.

The Indians, Howard said, were lean and hard and exercised heavily in eking out a living in the harsh land of the Gila River Valley until about 50 years ago.

Then things changed, and they began a sedentary lifestyle that left them overweight and ridden by diabetes. There is high unemployment, many are on welfare, and although some still farm the land, their native customs are dying, Howard said.

About 50 percent of the Indians — 68 percent of the females and 40 percent of the men — have adult-onset diabetes, often associated with obesity, Howard said. Ninety percent of them are obese. The females are 60 percent over normal body weight and the men 40 percent.

Still, tests show that only 4 percent to 6 percent of the population under 60 years of age and 12 percent to 17 percent over 60 have abnormal electrocardiograms, Howard said.

"They don't even have a coronary care unit in the reservation hospital," Howard said. "They eat a diet high in saturated fats, junk foods, and other foods generally thought to be harbingers of coronary disease."

Obesity, poor diets, and diabetes are three of the factors scientists say lead to heart disease.

Blood tests show that the Pimas have excessive amounts of low density lipoproteins, which are generally associated with high cholesterol, but they have lower cholesterol levels than the Caucasian population.

Howard says scientists think that their seeming immunity to heart disease must be genetic.

It is believed that the Pimas are from a race that migrated across a temporary land bridge between Europe and Asia early in the aboriginal settlement of North America. They were in one of the first waves to come across, according to Howard, and have been in the Gila Valley for more than 2,000 years.

Some scientists have also speculated that they lived with frequent famine for 2,000 years and that only those with the ability to withstand this lifestyle survived, so when food became more plentiful in the last 50 years, they simply couldn't handle the excess, hence their obesity and diabetes.

Author describes many uses for trash

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Americans account for about 5 percent of the world's population, but they produce 50 percent of the world's garbage.

It costs the average American city between $35 and $50 a ton to collect the trash. Most cities treat the expenditure as a dead loss. However, a few trailblazers defray some of the cost by reselling usable leftovers.

One person who would like to see these statistics of waste change is Carolyn Jabs, who has spent four years in researching uses for some of the discards of American civilization. In a book, she enumerates more than 2,000 ways to recycle and reuse the things people ordinarily throw away.

Ms. Jabs said she felt she had been in training to write the book all of her life.

"When I was a child growing up in the Midwest, I had a junk box under my bed. When I moved to New York, I furnished my first apartment with curbside chic — things I found on the street," she said. Then, after moving to a 100-acre farm in upstate New York, she began recycling garage sale and attic finds as decorative and useful accessories in her new rural life.

AS A RESULT OF these experiences, she has developed a recycling philosophy as well as a list of recycling do's and don'ts.

First, she stresses that nobody can use every bit of excess that comes into his life. She urges people to relax about recycling and treat the activity as fun rather than a chore.

Her prescription is simple: "Before you throw something away, just look at it. If you don't see any immediate value in keeping it, throw it away with a clear conscience."

Another rule is to change your attitude regarding leftovers.

"Don't see them as something you have to get rid of, but look at them as a new material," she said. An empty tin can is not merely a used food container. It is also a shiny metal cylinder. As such, new uses may come to mind — a building material, for example. Juice cans are so sturdy you can use them to build simple furniture, such as a hassock or a table base.

Whatever the project, treat the recycled material seriously — as if you had paid for it. And don't use slapdash methods of construction just because it didn't cost anything.

THE BEST REUSES are personal — marriages of available material and pressing need. For example, she inherited a collection of old feed sacks when she moved into her farm home. The sacks were too pretty to throw out, so she kept them. Before long, a use suggested itself. She combined them into a collage which — sprayed with an acrylic coating — is now a decorative wall hanging.

When Ms. Jabs and her husband were renovating their home, they found lots of old-fashioned door knobs on the premises. Using set screws, she attached the knobs to the wall and they are now highly decorative and useful hooks. She also recycled an air register grate into a trivet and old bleach bottles were cut and bent with the application of heat into pitchers and funnels.

Ms. Jabs said she has discovered that many of the plastic containers on sale at the dime store can be duplicated for free at home using leftover food and cleaning-supply containers.

Among some of the ideas in her book are uses for that most common throwaway — the brown paper grocery bag. She suggests you cut the bag at the seams, iron it on low heat to get the creases out and use the resulting material in a variety of ways. These include as a wall covering, gift wrap paper, or cut into strips and woven into placemats (spray with clear acrylic to lengthen use time and increase durability).

IF THESE IDEAS seem like too much trouble, just keep a supply of bags on hand to use as blotters in fried-food cooking. "They work better than paper towels, absorb more grease and are free," she said.

Styrofoam egg cartons can be tacked up in an outbuilding or attic as insulation. Or use the individual egg cups as seed starters.

Her favorite reuse idea calls for a rolltop deodorant bottle. She pops the top off and refills the bottle with water, then pops the top back on and uses it to moisten stamps. Or, she refills the bottle with suntan oil, then uses it to coat her body while keeping her hands dry and non-sticky.

("Re-Uses: 2,133 Ways to Recycle and Reuse the Things You Ordinarily Throw Away," is published by Crown.)

MCCLA to hear speaker

The Midland Country Club Ladies Association will have a return visit from Ruth Sharp of Dallas. She will speak to members and guests Jan. 28 on such famous and entertaining friends as Ginger Rogers and Pearl Bailey.

Cocktail hour is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. and luncheon for noon. Reservations can be made by calling 682-4378.

Ruth Sharp

Mrs. Sharp serves on the board of trustees of Southern Methodist University and was the first woman elected to the board of the Salvation Army. She is the only woman to serve on the Board of The Republic National Bank and was recently awarded the No. 1 Woman Philanthropist of Dallas. Mrs. Sharp is also past president of the Junior League of Dallas.

Mother of three, she is a graduate of SMU and a member of Phi Beta Phi sorority and Mortas Board.

Emergency shelter

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The Albert Einstein Home is an emergency shelter for children who have been physically abused, sexually molested, abandoned or exploited.

During the past year, it has temporarily housed 2,400 Orange County children between the ages of 5 and 18. More than half have suffered serious abuse, director Bill Steiner said.

During the Middle Ages, most European countries marked March 25 as the beginning of the New Year.

DEAR ABBY

Baby sitter tuned out

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I recently had an experience I hope you will share with your readers. Our daughter (14) was baby-sitting two children (5 and 7) on a military base about two blocks from where we live. We felt she was reasonably safe, and, of course, she had access to a telephone if she wanted to contact us.

She was supposed to have been through baby-sitting around midnight, so when she wasn't home at 12:30 we called her. No answer. We called again and again and nobody answered, so my wife and I became alarmed and went to the home where she was baby-sitting.

We kept ringing the doorbell. No response. By this time we were frantic, so we called the police. Two officers were sent to the house, and they started pounding on the doors and windows until finally our daughter came to the door, wondering what all the commotion was about!

We were notified that our daughter was all right — the reason she didn't hear the telephone or doorbell was because she had been listening to music with headphones on, which completely shut her off from everything around her, including, of course, the two children for whom she was responsible!

Abby, I sincerely hope that you will print this letter warning your readers that headphones should NEVER be worn when a person is alone in the house, and certainly never by anyone who is responsible for the safety and welfare of others. — BEN C.

DEAR BEN: Thank you for a very valuable message.

DEAR ABBY: Would you please tell me if it's all right to enclose money in a sympathy card?

I know people who have done it. I think it's OK myself, but I don't want the people I send money to to think that I think they need it. I'd just rather send money than flowers — especially when I know there are going to be more than enough flowers.

Answer in the paper if you think it's important enough. — RATHER SEND CASH

DEAR RATHER: If you think the family could use the money instead of flowers, by all means send money. It will be deeply appreciated — by everyone except the florist.

DEAR ABBY: We were invited to a wedding and reception. The affair took place at a restaurant that was owned by the daughter of the groom.

After the ceremony, champagne was served, but no food of any kind was offered. The daughter (who owned the restaurant) asked if we would like something to eat, and we said yes. She brought us menus, and we ordered what we wanted.

After the food was served, we each received a check for our meal. Well, we ate the food, drank the champagne, wished the newlyweds well and departed, leaving the food checks on the table.

Since we were invited guests, we felt insulted to be asked to pay for anything.

This was a new one for us. Did we act properly? — PERPLEXED IN FLORIDA

DEAR PERPLEXED: Since you assumed when you ordered the refreshments that they were on the house, I think you acted properly. (This is a new one for me, too.)

Decade of 50s lives on

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN

PARIS — "Zozo" Jamet was only five years old when the 1950s ended, but, nowadays, as the Paris secretary explained, "I dress '50's style, I furnish my apartment with '50's furniture, I've a 1954 car and my friends and I only like '50's music."

"Zozo" — the name is a typical echo of the '50s in France and was adopted by her for that reason — is one of a growing band of young Europeans whose utter dedication to the sights, sounds and tastes of the "last good decade" once seemed a passing fad, but increasingly has taken on the characteristics of a lasting social phenomenon. It has been described as an attempt to get away from an ever-more distasteful present.

A recent pop concert in Paris devoted to the memory of Buddy Holly, Bill Haley and, of course, Elvis drew an audience of more than seven thousand. They weren't middle-aged remnants of that now-distant time but, almost exclusively, youngsters in their 'teens and twenties.

A group of chain stores in West Germany thrives on selling 1950s clothes and artifacts to young venerators of stiletto heels, "record players" (as distinct from later hi-fi) and Vespas.

Thousands of young men and women in Holland, Britain and Italy, having fruitfully rummaged through their parents' long-discarded clothing, currently are garbing themselves in what they are satisfied is a close approximation of how their counterparts looked three decades back. Billowy, calf-length skirts, headscarfs and gloves ("Always gloves," says Zozo) for the women; long, fitted jackets and gray flannel trousers (never jeans) for the men.

"Zozo and her friends pour over ancient copies of fashion magazines like "Elle" to certify the authenticity of their appearance. But they're emphatic they're not simply dressing-up, costuming themselves self-consciously in the sartorial trappings of another epoch.

Instead,they claim, they are really thrusting themselves "back into that time" and, for reasons, they regard as anything but frivolous.

"After the fifties, everything went wrong," according to Zozo's boy friend, Eric de Roncq, a bank clerk. "They were the last years of genuine imagination. Nearly everything 'modern' that was worthwhile was invented then. We would like to get back to that, to start again from that point — sort of wipe out the sixties and seventies."

A cardinal point for these "fifty-ites" is their abhorrence of drugs. For them, a major attraction of the "golden decade" was that it was the last in which the drug culture played only a peripheral role.

"People didn't need grass and cocaine in the fifties to feel alive," was how Brian Colby, a young Englishman who became associated with the movement here, expressed it. "There was a sense of adventure and invention in the air. It didn't require drugs."

Despite their denials that they're indulging in pure nostalgia, the devotees of the Eisenhower era — in Europe, it was the era of Adenauer, MacMillan and Khrushchev who have also acquired a retrospective patina — hold with near-religious rectitude to many of the totems of those times.

They watch only black-and-white television. Their idols are film stars like Jane Russell, Victor Mature, Marilyn Monroe and Kim Novak. They will pay virtually anything for a '50's Oldsmobile or Dodge with the requisite tail-fins, the symbol supreme of the decade. (The most recherche of all '50's cars is a Nash Metropolitan.)

But, said de Roncq, "Only superficially is it a case of turning back the clock. We're actually making a statement about the future. We want it to be unlike the recent past."

Thomas Jefferson is said to have invented the lever-operated double-door opener seen today on buses.

Wild rice native to America

By TONI GRIFFIN
Copley News Service

Time was that wild rice was synonymous with rare, treasured and costly. At that time, Minnesota Chippewa Indians were canoeing in lake waters, beating the six-foot tall wild grasses, in order to harvest the edible seed we know as wild rice.

But modern times have brought new methods of harvesting and production, yielding a rise in wild rice availability and a steadily declining price.

Wild rice is prized not only for its nutty taste and crunchy-chewy texture, but also because it is one of the truly American foods. It was the American Indians who named the edible seed, "wild rice," and ate it as a diet mainstay. The rice was as important to the Indian cuisine as wheat and oats are in our civilization.

One strong preparation advantage is the fact that the cooked wild rice is four times the volume of the raw food. One pound of rice will expand to about 10 to 12 cups of cooked rice, enough to serve 20 to 24 people.

HERE ARE a few wild rice cooking hints:

* Soaking the wild rice in water overnight, or pouring boiling water over it and letting it stand 30 minutes, will decrease cooking time and increase the volume.
* Cook rice until it puffs and the inner, lighter part is visible. Undercooking yields a crunchy, nut-like texture; overcooking causes mushiness.
* Cooked wild rice, well-drained and without other foods added, will keep in a tightly covered container, refrigerated for several weeks.
* Cooked wild rice freezes well. By keeping frozen cooked rice, preparing wild rice dishes will decrease food assembly time.

Following are basic directions for cooking wild rice, and several recipes for wild rice side dishes and desserts. Some of the recipes are from Beth Anderson's Wild Rice for All Seasons Cookbook.

BASIC WILD RICE

1 cup wild rice
4 cups water
1 tsp. salt

Wash rice thoroughly. Place the wild rice, water and salt in a 3-quart heavy saucepan and bring to a boil. Reduce heat, cover and simmer 45 to 60 minutes, or until rice has puffed and most of liquid has been absorbed. Fluff rice with a fork and cook, uncovered, to evaporate any excess liquid. Makes about 4 cups rice.

VARIATIONS: Substitute beef or chicken bouillon for the water, omitting salt. Substitute 1 cup white wine for 1 cup water.

WILD RICE, PORK AND APPLE SKILLET

4 pork chops, about 1 inch thick
Oil as needed
1 cup wild rice
1 large onion, sliced into rings
2½ cups chicken bouillon
2 large red cooking apples, cored and sliced

Brown the pork chops on both sides in an electric skillet set at 375 degrees, using as little oil as necessary. Remove chops and sprinkle rice in pan. Arrange chops and onion rings over the rice and pour chicken bouillon over this.

Bring to a boil, cover and lower heat to maintain a slow simmer, about 200 degrees, for an hour. Add unpeeled apple slices and simmer, covered, about 15 minutes more, until apples, rice and chops are tender. Serves 4.

LAYERED BROCCOLI-WILD RICE CASSEROLE

4 cups cooked wild rice, about 1 cup uncooked
2 tbsps. butter
4 tbsps. finely chopped onion
2 tbsps. flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
½ cup sour cream
6 broccoli stalks, cut in half, lengthwise, cutting through the flowerette
1 cup grated Monterey jack cheese, about ¼ pound
½ cup chopped pecans

Melt the butter and saute the onion in the butter, stirring until onion begins to soften slightly. Sprinkle in the flour and salt, stirring and cooking over low heat until mixture is smooth. Slowly stir in the milk, stirring until sauce thickens slightly. Fold in sour cream and blend into cooked wild rice.

Steam broccoli until just barely tender. Rinse under cold water to retain green color. Layer half of wild rice mixture in the bottom of a lightly buttered shallow casserole, about 7x11 inches. Alternating the flowerettes towards the sides of the casserole, place the broccoli, cut-side-down, on top of the rice. Spoon the remaining rice down the center of the broccoli. Sprinkle the cheese over the center of the rice and sprinkle chopped pecans over both cheese and rice. This recipe can be done ahead to this point. Cover and refrigerate until ready to reheat.

To reheat, bake casserole, covered, about 20 minutes at 350 degrees; uncover and bake another 10 minutes or until cheese bubbles and casserole is heated through. Serves 6-8.

This soup has a nutty flavor that is especially nice in the fall.

CREAM OF WILD RICE SOUP

½ cup (1 stick) butter
2 cups cooked wild rice, about ½ cup uncooked
1 large onion, diced
½ green pepper, diced
1½ ribs celery, diced
2 large fresh mushrooms, diced, or 1 small can sliced mushrooms, drained
1 cup flour
8 cups hot chicken broth
Salt and pepper, to taste
1 cup light cream or half and half
2 tbsps. dry sherry (optional)
Toasted almonds

Prepare the wild rice according to basic recipe above. Saute the onion, green pepper, celery and mushrooms in the butter about 3 minutes, or just until vegetables soften. Sprinkle in the flour, stirring and cooking until flour is mixed in, but do not let it begin to brown. Slowly add the chicken stock, stirring until all the flour-butter-vegetable mixture is blended well. Add the rice and season to taste with salt and pepper. Heat thoroughly, stir in the cream. Add the dry white wine, if desired. Heat gently, but do not boil. About 12 servings.

Stuffed Aubergine Provencale

Stuffed Aubergine Provencale makes elegant dinner for two

Glossy dark eggplant makes a stylish dinner for two when stuffed and filled with the flavors of Provence. Accented with ripe olives and enriched with two kinds of cheese, this vegetarian entree is nutritious and satisfying.

To prepare the eggplant shells, cut the vegetable lengthwise into halves and remove the pulp. To make the savory stuffing, cube the pulp then saute with onion, garlic and oil. Next add tomato sauce, ripe olives cut into quarters, thyme and basil. When the sauce is heated through, spoon it into the shells, layering with the sliced Jack cheese and Parmesan as the recipe directs. Top with tomato wedges and the elegant aubergine is ready to bake. After 20 minutes in a hot oven, the dish will be bubbling and aromatic with herbs and seasonings. Serve with crusty baguettes and fresh fruit for a continental-style supper.

Complete directions are given for microwave cooking as well. Allow about 25 minutes total microwaving time to prepare this recipe. Garnish the tops of the stuffed shells with more olives just before serving for a litle extra eye appeal.

STUFFED AUBERGINE

1 eggplant (1 to 1-1/4 pounds)
1 small onion, chopped (3/4 cup)
1 small clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1/2 can (8 oz. size) tomato sauce
1/2 cup pitted ripe olives, quartered
1 teaspoon thyme
1 teaspoon basil
1/4 teaspoon salt
4 oz. Monterey Jack cheese, sliced
1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1 medium tomato, cut in thin wedges

Trim off eggplant stem. Cut eggplant lengthwise into halves. Cut pulp out of center of each half, leaving 1/2-inch shell. Cube pulp. Combine pulp, onion, garlic and oil in large skillet. Cook stirring over medium-high heat for 10 minutes or until very tender. Eggplant will be soft and moist-looking when it is done. Mix in tomato sauce, olives, thyme, basil and salt. Heat through. Spoon 1/4 of the mixture into each shell and top each with a quarter of the cheeses. Repeat with remaining eggplant mixture and Monterey Jack cheese. Put tomato wedges on top. Sprinkle top with remaining 2 tablespoons Parmesan cheese. Oil cut edges of eggplant shells if exposed. Place in baking pan and bake at 400 degrees for 20 — 25 minutes or until hot and bubbly. Garnish tops with extra olives if desired. Makes two servings.

STUFFED AUBERGINE
(Microwave Method)

Trim off eggplant stem. Cut eggplant lengthwise into halves. Cut pulp out of center of each half, leaving a 1/2-inch shell. Cube pulp. Combine pulp, onion, garlic and oil in shallow casserole. Cook on high power 13 or 14 minutes, stirring every four minutes or until eggplant is very tender. Eggplant will be soft and moist-looking when it is done. Mix in tomato sauce, olives, thyme, basil and salt. Cook on high power one or two minutes to heat through. Fill eggplants as directed in conventional recipe. Place shells in non-metallic casserole dish and cook on high power eight or nine minutes, turning every three minutes, or until hot in center. Garnish tops with extra olives if desired.

Chicken, avocado combined in salad

STUFFED AVOCADO

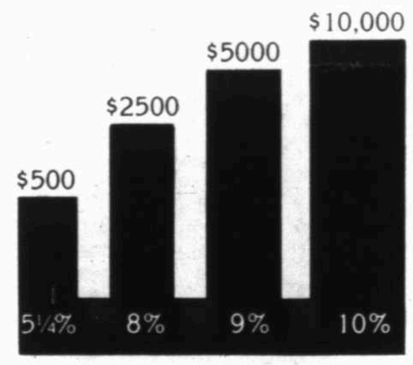

The cooked breast from a 4-pound frying or roasting chicken will give the amount needed.

2 cups diced (½-inch) cooked chicken breast
½ cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons chili sauce
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt to taste
2 medium or large avocados
Salad greens

Mix together chicken, mayonnaise, chili sauce, Worcestershire and salt. Cut avocados in half lengthwise; remove seeds; peel. Place each avocado half on salad greens on an individual salad plate; pack chicken mixture into avocado cavities. Serve at once. Makes 4 servings.

Some people lose their shirts in Las Vegas casinos, but Jack Flaxman lost his Cadillac when it plunged off the third story parking garage at the Horseshoe Casino. Security guards at the casino said Flaxman, a resident of Las Vegas, was pulling into a parking space and just kept going. "My whole life has been like this," Flaxman said.

AT WORK

Are you a sustainer or achiever?

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Why do some people get so much further ahead than others? Is it that they're more talented, or work harder? Often, the answer is neither.

Let's look at two young men in the photocopying room of a television network. Both are in their mid-'20s and ambitious to make it in the industry. Both want to "work their way up."

The first young man asked his boss exactly what he was supposed to do and did it, even down to imitating his boss's behavior. When the production people came in, begging for last-minute favors, rush jobs or extra copies, he stuck within strict confines of what was "right" — and never budged. He became a petty bureaucrat and protected his department, allying himself with his boss against the others.

The second young man realized that these people in production coming in for favors were just the people he wanted to be with. He did what they asked, staying late to accommodate them without asking for overtime. He read some of the material and made some suggestions. In short, he allied himself with production.

Notice that he did not disrespect the boss; he just didn't want to end up as manager of the copy room. His lucky break came one night when one harassed producer needed more help and he volunteered. He soon became an assistant producer.

The other clerk was furious at the unfairness of his not being chosen. Wasn't he the better worker? Then it hit him. Playing petty bureaucrat had cost him his reputation in the company. He blew his chances, when opportunity was so close.

There are, in fact, two kinds of people — those who get what they want and those who don't.

Those of us who don't I'll call the sustainers. We do our jobs well and are even driven to excellence. But we wait for our bosses to praise us, to develop our specific talents, to reward us by promoting us. And we wait... and wait... Nothing ever happens except that other people get ahead of us. We complain loudly, not to our bosses, but to our family and friends with contempt for those who do succeed.

We treat business as we treated school — waiting for the teacher to assign us a task, grade it and give us a gold star. But life, after all, is not school. We all have to give up being a student, no matter how good at it we may have been.

But the achievers, the second type of person, do get what they want. Although at first they look much like the sustainers, they have a different way of accounting for their progress.

They do their jobs well, even excellently, too. But there the comparison stops. They act as if they have a second job — that of promoting themselves and their bosses, even their professions. They don't wait for recognition or rewards, they go after them.

When questioned hard, achievers don't think of it as cheating or apple polishing. They'd say it is team effort or kinship. They set their minds on both getting the job done and making themselves visible and in line for the next step.

One critical difference between the nwo groups is surprising: Achievers tend to be more generous, looking out for the company as well as for themselves. Sustainers tend to be more selfish and wait self-righteously to be praised for their small contribution without noticing the whole.

Our petty bureaucrat was lucky — he learned his lesson. He took a job as secretary to a newly formed production unit and is now learning what it takes to work his way up. He doesn't think of it as cheating anymore.

Fashion '82: The hits, misses

By MARY STANYAN
Hearst Feature Service

Hundreds upon hundreds of new garments were paraded on fashion runways in the previews of clothes designed to be worn during the past 12 months. Some were misses, some were hits, and some of the looks that first came to light here and abroad in 1982 promise to continue for the coming year.

There was also a lot of fun and foolishness — the exaggerations that often get photographed, smiled at and then forgotten. But sometimes these, too — such as the football shoulders of Claude Montana a few seasons ago — eventually find their way into the contemporary fashion scene, modified and made wearable. What innovations will catch on — watered down or otherwise — the coming months will reveal. It took knickers a full year to evolve from an amusing novelty to standard fashion in every price range.

Let's consider the solid newsmakers that emerged from the salons of Europe and the workrooms of New York's Seventh Avenue, introduced by big enough names to assure that sincerest compliment — imitation, adaptation and just plain knock-offs by mass producers:

— The return of the tailored suit with wider shoulders and short, slim skirts. For the fashion daring, long, slender suits have hemlines extending to near the ankles. Suits of both sorts could be considered the past year's top fashion.

— The increased use of leather — once purely pour le sport — in high fashion city clothes.

— The new versions of romantic, ruffled clothes — in blouses for daytime wear, in filmy finery for evening. Notable in the later category: the return of the short (knee-high or midi) cocktail and evening dress.

— The introduction and fairly enthusiastic reception of tuxedo dressing for women — both in pants and skirted versions.

— The blouson silhouette, expressed both in separate battle jackets and in tops for suits and dresses.

— And the introduction of "minimalist" looks, as expressed by a few of the leading talents, in dramatic contrast to the mood of femininity that prevailed in the collections for the past year, when even the suits of simplest lines had their share of flouncy blouses and flirty accessories.

FOCUS: Glenn Little
Reigns by stark terror or mutual respect

Energy-Business Writer

When you are a small securities firm with just two brokers, you have to do something to get correspondents on the trading floors in New York to take notice.

For Midland broker Glenn Little, who founded his own firm, it's no big problem. He works with the old theory "the squeaky wheel gets the grease."

"Being a principal, you can get things done," he says in his typically brusque manner — which cuts to the bone every time.

"Since I'm geographically distant from New York, I have to reign either by stark terror or mutual respect," he explains.

The 29 year-old is founder and owner of Little and Company, a Midland-based discount investment securities firm specializing in one thing — trading. Like other discount brokers, Little does no research and offers no advice to his clients. He merely executes their orders to buy and sell stock.

LITTLE FEELS operating a small company is an advantage.

"New York does not put me on hold. If you are second in command, or calling from one of 30 offices, they do. It's sad to say about the New York Stock Exchange, but on heavy trading days, you just have to have clout," to get through.

Little's reputation is what gets through; he wants perfection and raises Cain when he doesn't get it. If a correspondent on the trading floor writes a client's name wrong on the stock buy or sell order, or makes an error of just one dollar, Little demands the order be torn down and redone.

How does a little guy like Little get on the trading floor? He uses Pershing Company as his correspondent on Wall Street. Pershing, the country's second largest broker in volume of stock traded, executes orders for about 200 other brokerage firms from all over the country.

LITTLE IS THE ultimate perfectionist, and describes himself as being "audacious" enough to demand perfection from others. He believes it to be the only way to earn, and keep, his clients' trust in him to do a fast, accurate job.

Being a company of just two — himself and one other broker — Little has nowhere to hide and no one else to blame if there's a mix-up in a client's order.

He doesn't even have a plush, private office, but instead shares space with the other broker, a secretary, and thousands of dollars worth of electronic gadgets which are his lifeline to New York.

The office is really a miniature trading floor.

"The buck stops here at this desk," Little says. "I can't say 'my boss will do it,' or 'New York will do it.' I am 100 percent accountable, and that's why I bust the chops of my people to do things right.

"WHEN YOU WORK FOR me, it's like being in a blast furnace — either you melt, or you get tempered. I've never had anybody I couldn't speed up by at least 50 percent," claims Little, who says he lives by nano-seconds and doesn't wear a watch.

He says he has no time for small talk while the market is trading wild, but he's happy to talk later — and talk he does do, for hours, at break-neck speed, with anecdotes and humor.

Little rushed through college at the University of Florida in two-thirds the normal time, and now holds a masters degree from the American Graduate School of International Management in Phoenix, Arizona. He decided to stay in the United States "and be wealthy," he says with a laugh, rather than go abroad like the rest of his class did.

Little was a registered broker at Howard Weil Labouisse Friedrichs Inc. securities firm in New Orleans and Midland for several years. Due to philosophical differences, his boss gave him the opportunity, shall we say, to leave and establish his own firm.

It was the best thing that could have happened, he admits. He says he bears no ill will toward the firm.

WHILE UNEMPLOYED, Little lifted weights to burn off excess energy, of which he has much, and did some thinking.

Why did he choose to start a discount, rather than full-service, stock brokerage firm?

"Truthfully, I was never a great guru," Little admits. Some stocks he bought went up, some went down. He found himself advising against certain buys because he thought they would harm the client, even though they might have meant a big commission for himself and money for the firm.

"One day I realized that many of my clients were smarter than I was, and there were more who wanted me not to advise them than to advise them. They just wanted me to write the ticket and put it in."

After nine tedious months of crawling through mounds of red tape and studying to pass half a dozen tests, Little opened his firm here in 1979.

HE WAS THE FIRST AND only discount brokerage firm in this region until May 1982, when Charles Schwab Corporation of San Francisco opened an office here. Little is the only securities firm locally owned; the rest are branch offices of major Dallas or New York firms. He says he has around 4,000 accounts. Many are from out of state; Hawaii, Idaho, Colorado, wherever.

Little was the little guy, the young (26) guy who took on the established financial community. It was a period of three years of 80-hour weeks, aggressive marketing, and lots of thought about how to streamline operations so as to concentrate on pure trading.

"It was very rough; there's no question about it," Little says. "I never was able to get the exact details, but I was pretty much assured there was a lottery in town, a betting pool, on when I would go under."

He relies heavily on advertising, especially through direct mail. He personally once did a mailing of 3,000 pieces by himself.

"I spend money like you would not believe, on two things: telling people I'm here, and perfecting things like the electronics."

SOME OF HIS advertisements have raised eyebrows in Midland.

"The first person through my door after I ran the first ad was an employee from another brokerage firm here. She held up the ad and asked me, 'Are you for real?' When I said yes, she said 'Oh God,' and walked out."

Little's full-page ad compared his commission fees for specific trades with rates quoted by other firms in Midland. He named names and printed prices.

His were lower.

Because he didn't offer stock market research or advice, Little was able to discount his commissions. "I'm a specialist. (Other firms) have tax shelters, new issues, annuities...we don't even do commodities. I've put blinders on and concentrated in one tiny facet of the business."

HIS TARGET AUDIENCE is the experienced investor who already has his mind made up. There are plenty of those people in Midland.

"I took over a lot of the easy trades in this town," Little claims. "In my opinion, 70 percent of all trades are non-solicited. That is, they call you and say they are thinking about buying Exxon, and ask you what you think. Naturally, the broker says 'lovely.'"

Little doesn't offer advice, but that's not to say he doesn't have strong opinions about certain stocks, market trends, institutional investors, OPEC, and more.

He is currently appalled, yet intrigued, by the blurring of distinctions between banks, savings and loans, brokerage houses and other financial institutions. Sears Roebuck bought brokerage firm Dean Witter Reynolds, for example, and is testing the idea of offering financial services at Sears.

"OH YEAH, WE CALL IT 'stocks and socks.' There are so many products, so many strategies, no one company can specialize in everything. The whole theory of supermarket financial services is ludicrous at best. I don't think it's going to work, but I guess we'll see.

"I mean, in my mind, because I really love Sears' rototiller, I'll go out and buy stock from them too?"

Eastman Kodak announces layoffs, trims capital spending

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Eastman Kodak Co. this past week announced layoffs and trimmed its capital spending plans for 1983, both only a week after it offered early retirement incentives to nearly four-fifths of its 93,200 U.S. workers.

The world's largest maker of photographic products also is expected to post per-share profit at least 50 cents lower than the $7.66 it earned in 1981, some analysts say.

Is Kodak having some serious problems?

Not really, analysts say. They view the labor cutbacks as a pragmatic reaction to a lengthy recession that has weakened demand for some of Kodak's products, and they say the moves could bolster Kodak's profit in the months to come.

Kodak said that next Friday it plans to eliminate 1,100 jobs in three equipment-manufacturing plants in Rochester, N.Y., where the company is headquartered.

AS FOR ITS retirement incentive plan, Kodak said it could not say how many workers would take advantage of it, but analysts said they did not expect the number to be large.

Kodak said both measures were aimed at paring its work force back into line with the soft economy.

"I don't think it reflects anything more than that," said Peter Enderlin of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. "It does show they're more aggressive in trying to control costs and improve profits."

Enderlin said labor expenses are by far Kodak's largest cost, "and now they're trying to adjust them more flexibly."

In addition, Kodak has made several major and expensive capital projects over the past two years — including its disc camera for amateurs and its Ektaprint copiers — which added employees and swelled its costs.

"Once those programs got going, you can't shut them off, yet the economy did shut off," said Thomas Henwood of First Boston Corp. "The economic environment relative to the capital investment which had begun grew farther apart."

HENWOOD ALSO said the cutbacks mainly reflect Kodak's desire to bring costs "more in line with what turned out to be the economic environment."

Some projects, mostly in Kodak's chemicals division, are coming to a close and that accounts for the reduced capital spending plans in 1983 to $1.36 billion from 1.53 billion in 1982, the company said.

Planned expenditures for its photographic division are up this year to $1.11 billion from $1.05 billion in 1982, Kodak said.

The recession will make its mark, however. Kodak's earnings after three quarters of 1982 were down 9 percent, and Enderlin sees its full-year profit at $7.15 a share, while Henwood estimates it will be close to $7. Both figures are under Kodak's $7.66-per-share profit in 1981.

Yet an expected upturn in the economy, the cost-cutting moves and a variety of new Kodak products should translate into a rebound this year, the analysts say, and Enderlin spots Kodak's profit in 1983 at $8.50 a share.

Meantime, Kodak also said this past week it is raising prices of most consumer films an average of 4 percent beginning Jan. 26.

THE PRODUCTS include 35mm films, disc films and some black and white photographic paper. Instant film was not affected.

In other news this past week:

—Wholesale prices climbed 3.5 percent in 1982, the smallest rise in 11 years, the Labor Department said. Gasoline prices fell a record 8.6 percent. In December alone, prices rose only 0.1 percent, the smallest one-month change since prices fell 0.1 percent in September.

—U.S. businesses plan a 5.2 percent cut in 1983 capital spending compared with last year, after adjusting for inflation, a Commerce Department survey showed. Economists said the drop reflects the recession, weak consumer demand and low corporate profits.

—Retail sales dipped 0.4 percent in December, confirming reports of a weak holiday shopping season and declining auto sales. Retail sales had risen 2.6 percent in November, the Commerce Department said.

MAJOR BANKS cut their prime lending rates to 11 percent from 11.5 percent, matching the reduction made by third-ranked Chase Manhattan Bank last Dec. 28. The cut brought the banks' base commercial charge to its lowest level in nearly 2½ years.

—Consumer installment debt expanded by a seasonally adjusted $2.52 billion in November, reflecting an increase in auto lending, the Federal Reserve Board said. Installment debt rose $1.09 billion in October after falling $324 million in October.

—Production in U.S. factories and mines fell 8.2 percent in 1982 from the previous year, the biggest annual decline in eight years, the Federal Reserve Board said. Production fell 0.1 percent in December, but that drop was the best production performance since last July's 0.1 percent gain.

—U.S. businesses cut their inventories by a record 1.1 percent in November, following a reduction of 0.2 percent in October. The latest decline was particularly large in the auto industry, and economists said it could lead to increases in production.

—The five major U.S. automakers said they sold 11.6 percent more cars in early January than in the same period a year ago. The companies said sales rose to 112,322 cars in the Jan. 1-10 period from 100,602 a year ago, and that the daily selling rate of 16,046 was the best for early January since 19,954 cars were sold each day in the period in 1980.

Reagan may wish he were in fifteenth president's shoes

By the Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — "Our present financial condition is without a parallel in history," James Buchanan, the 15th U.S. president, lamented upon taking office in 1857. "No nation has ever before been embarrassed from too large a surplus in its treasury."

Ronald Reagan, the 40th U.S. president, may well wish he were in Buchanan's shoes.

Unlike Buchanan, who was awash in too much black ink, Reagan is immersed in too much red. Without further sperding cuts or tax increases, the federal deficit is expected to swell to $200 billion in 1984 — nearly double the record $111 billion last year — and then on to an almost unbelievable $300 billion by 1988. Even by Washington's often inflated standards, such numbers are mind-boggling.

Roughly speaking, all the federal deficits from the administration of George Washington to that of Dwight D. Eisenhower would have to be combined to equal the projected red ink in the 1988 federal spending year alone. Or, looked at another way, the anticipated deficits represent the highest percentage of the gross national product — the value of the economy's total output of goods and services — in U.S. history outside of wartime. The "pump priming" deficits of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal, for example, pale by comparison.

How the deficit grew so large and how to bring it under control are fiercely contested, inside and outside the government. But there is overwhelming agreement that deficits of the scale envisioned over the next half decade could abort the anticipated recovery and plunge the nation back into a recession — perhaps an even more prolonged one than the current downturn, which is the worst since the Great Depression with unemployment now at 10.8 percent.

ENORMOUS FEDERAL borrowing, analysts say, will send interest rates spiraling upward and siphon off savings that otherwise could finance consumer purchases and business investment.

"At best, we would have a lopsided recovery that doesn't permit housing, capital investment, the export industries and the like to recover," Martin S. Feldstein, the White House's chief economic adviser, said.

Compounding those fears are growing worries that the Reagan administration and Congress may fail to agree on strong enough remedies or, worse yet, that they may reach an unbreakable impasse. With Congress reluctant to trim domestic programs further and the administration unlikely to accept steep cuts in its defense buildup — and with both sides under pressure to resist Social Security cutbacks — "the battle to reduce these exploding deficits will be long and difficult," Jack Carlson, chief economist of the National Association of Realtors, a Washington-based trade association, said.

Oddly enough, at this time last year, when deficit projections first pierced the $100 billion mark, the question of the impact of such revenue gaps on the economy could spark a lively debate. With inflation cutting $80 billion to $90 billion off the $1 trillion national debt annually, some analysts argued with considerable force that the end result of a $100 billion deficit was neutral for all practical purposes. This time around, however, the sheer magnitude of the numbers forestalls virtually all debate.

"These are real deficits. These are bad news," Michael J. Boskin, a Stanford University economist who specializes in government fiscal policy, said. "Even if instead of $300 billion, you would have maybe $240 billion or $200 billion, that would still be terrible."

SUCH STRATOSPHERIC projections of upcoming deficits assume that no action will be taken to bridge the revenue gap; in reality, measures are already in the hopper to do so. The administration has drawn up its budget plan for the new fiscal year and will send it to Congress at the end of the month after the president's State of the Union message. But the mere prospect of such red ink is sending shock waves through Washington and the rest of the nation.

"We can live for a short period, a year or two, with a deficit of almost any size," George Keller, chairman of Standard Oil Co. of California, said. "But we have to see a cure in sight. Borrowing and lending rates are based on what the community as a whole believes is going to happen to the economy. That's why you still see these incredibly high real long-term interest rates."

Most disturbing about the projected deficits is their strong potential for throttling recovery. Assuming that the deficits will be financed largely through borrowing — instead of printing more money or raising taxes — the amount of money the government will need to draw from the economy's total pool of savings will choke off consumer demand and private investment just when they are needed most.

"If nothing is done, government could be absorbing as much as one-half to two-thirds of the net national savings," Rudolph G. Penner, fiscal policy studies director of the American Enterprise Institute, said. "That astounds me because it presumes the amount of debt in the hands of private investors will be going up 15 percent to 20 percent per year. You don't have to compound that rate long to get explosive increases."

High interest rates also threaten the already shaky health of the nation's export industry. As interest rates rise, foreign investors are increasingly lured to U.S. financial markets, putting upward pressure on the value of the dollar. A "strong" dollar, in turn, makes American-made products more costly overseas, resulting in reduced demand for those products. At the same time, the dollar buys more abroad than before, boosting imports to this country and aggravating the U.S. trade deficit.

THE TRADE DEFICIT currently is between $30 billion and $40 billion a year. According to a study by the National Association of Manufacturers, that translates into a loss of as many as 1.5 million jobs in the U.S. economy — almost 10 percent of the total unemployed.

"We're certainly not going to have much of a recovery or do much about getting the unemployment rate down with these kinds of numbers," Bernard J. O'Keefe, the association's chairman, said recently. "And it all comes back to the deficit."

Stanford University's Boskin says the deficit also threaten to reduce the potential for growth in business investment well beyond this decade, because of the lower level from which it must spring during the 1980s. "We're talking about serious structural changes in the economy," he said. "Two or three quarters of high investment rates won't make up for the years of steady investment like that which produced the so-called-economic miracles of Japan and Germany."

To be sure, many analysts believe the fiscal future is not quite as gloomy as the administration's projections portray. They contend that the government's underlying assumptions about the course of economic recovery are overly pessimistic. For instance, administration economists are predicting economic growth at an anemic rate of 1.4 percent this year, the lowest rate for any of the eight postwar recessions. Most private analysts forecast a somewhat more robust pace of 2 percent to 3 percent.

But, the private analysts point out, that still means formidable deficits, ranging between $170 billion and $200 billion, with all the potentially damaging side effects.

MUCH OF THE RED ink is "structural," arising from mounting expenditures over which the government has little control without changing the law, such as Social Security benefits with their automatic cost-of-living increases. But much of the deficit also is "cyclical" — that is, it arises from the widening shortfall in tax revenues and mounting outlays for unemployment compensation and other social welfare spending during a recessionary period.

Such issues are likely to shape the debate when Congress reconvenes to begin the battle of the budget. But anyone looking for historical precedent to aid in the contest should shy away from James Buchanan. His administration started off with a surplus, but it ended up with a string of staggering deficits.

Final tally shows record number of completions

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The final tally is in.

The number of completions in the United States, Texas and the Permian Basin in 1982 exceeded the total recorded in 1981, the all-time boom year for the oil patch.

Petroleum Information reports there were 84,693 well completions in the U.S. last year, for a 7.4 percent increase over 1981. The number reflects record drilling activity in late 1981 and early 1982.

Taken alone, the completion total does not indicate the decline in drilling which took place in the last three quarters of 1982, PI noted.

Since drilling rose steadily throughout 1981, a record number of wells were being completed or awaiting completion when 1982 began. These wells accounted for much of the increase in completions in 1982 over the previous year.

MANY TEXAS OIL operators had a good year in 1982, despite the fact there were fewer drilling rigs turning, compared to 1981. In fact, the state's oilmen reported 1,421 gas and 702 oil discoveries in 1982, exceeding the total reported in 1981, according to the Texas Railroad Commission.

The 1982 completion total includes wells spudded in 1981 which were not completed until 1982.

Total new holes drilled (including wildcats, existing field, service holes and dry holes) in 1982 were 26,797, which represented an 8 percent increase over 1981's total of 24,722.

Texas completions reported were also up compared to 1981 figures. Operators completed 16,296 oil wells last year, versus 15,627 in 1981. They completed 6,273 gas wells versus 5,464 in 1981, and they had 629 service completions, versus 460 the previous year.

WILDCAT DRILLING and completion work in 1982 — purely exploratory work — resulted in 9,584 completions in the U.S., a 3 percent increase over 1981. Of the total wildcats completed, 1,076 were new oil field discoveries and 764 were new gas discoveries.

PI reported the overall new field wildcat success rate in 1982 reached 19.2 percent, up from 18.4 percent in 1981.

The average wildcat completion in the U.S. in 1982 was 6,122 feet deep, although total wildcat footage drilled was up slightly, from 57.6 million feet in 1981 to 58.7 million in 1982.

According to P.I., Texas continued to come out on top among the other energy producing states in the number of completions made. Oklahoma, Kansas and Louisiana followed.

THE APPALACHIAN Basin was the top-ranked geologic province during the year by total completions, with more than 10,000 completions.

The Permian Basin ranked second with 8,825. The Gulf Coast Basin was third with 8,156 wells completed.

In the Permian Basin, there were some outstanding oil and gas discoveries. Some were rank wildcats; others were new discoveries in either shallower or deeper pools within established areas.

Probably the well which created the most excitement was the William E. Hendon Jr. Powell "32" No. 1, which potentialed at 1,580 barrels of oil per day in August. The well is 11 miles northwest of Garden City in Glasscock County.

THE NO. 2 also came in at more than 1,000 BOPD and will be producing as soon as the Railroad Commission comes through on Hendon's request for a higher allowable. Further development drilling is planned in 1983.

The next highest oil producing wildcat at the time of its initial test was the Cooper 1-X, also near Garden City. Operated by Lario Oil & Gas, the 10,096-foot wildcat produced 642 barrels of oil per day from the Lower Wolfcamp formation.

Unfortunately, the well pooped out after a couple months and is now shut-in. No decision has yet been made about further testing or reworking of the well in 1983.

The third highest oil producing wildcat in the Permian Basin was Andover Oil Company's A.B. Connell "29" No. 2, which was completed last January. It pumped 600 barreis of oil per day from the Ellenburger, as a deeper pool wildcat.

ANDOVER, WHICH was acquired by Santa Fe International last Fall, has four other wells in the area, in Ector County about 23 miles northwest of Crane. There will be additional development drilling in the new field, the Jordan West, in 1983, a company spokesman said.

Midland County is the location for the fourth oil discovery on our list. C & K Petroleum's deeper pool wildcat, 10 miles east of Midland, flowed 545 barrels of oil per day from the Fusselman after being completed in April.

The company (now operating under the Enstar name) is drilling its third offset well in the new field, the Mid-Mar East. Nearest Fusselman production is approximately 50 miles north, a company spokesman said.

In Winkler County, seven miles southeast of Kermit, the Hogg No. 1 operated by Kimbark Oil & Gas Company flowed 528 barrels of oil per day. The well was completed in April from the Devonian. Company officials could not be reached for comment on 1983 plans near the well.

THERE WERE SEVERAL big gas discoveries made last year in the Permian Basin.

Topping the list was the Linebery No. 1, operated by American Trading and Production Company (ATAPCO), 11 miles northeast of Mentone, in Loving County.

The 17,140-foot well was completed in the Atoka at 15,950 feet and had a calculated absolute open flow of 112,500 thousand cubic feet of gas per day.The shallower pool wildcat was spudded in June 1981, blew out in October of the same year, and was finally completed in October 1982.

Like many gas wells completed in 1982, it is shut-in waiting for a pipeline connection.

ADDITIONAL WELLS are planned this year, but no time frame is set, said an ATAPCO geologist.

Also completed in October 1982 was the R.A. Thomas et al. No. 2 in Cottle County. Operated by Delwin Tex Oil & Gas Properties Inc., the 6,336-foot well is three miles southeast of Chalk. It was completed in the Atoka Conglomerate. Calculated absolute open flow was 94,662 MCF gas per day.

Bass Enterprises Production Company completed the third highest gas producing wildcat, the Pan Am "B" — M.J. Hill , G. P. No. 7, in Winkler County.

The 12,000-foot wildcat was completed in March and flowed 32,150 MCF gas per day from the 8,000 Pennsylvanian.

FOURTH ON THE LIST is the Powell No. 1-17 in Glasscock County, completed by L&B Oil Company in April. It flowed 31,322 MCF gas per day from the Fusselman, 12 miles northwest of Garden City.

The No. 2-17 was completed later as an oil well, and the number three will spud early in 1983.

In Reeves County, 25 miles southeast of Pecos, Gulf Oil Corporation completed the Northwest Hamon Unit No. 1 last January. The well flowed 16,992 MCF gas per day from the Ellenburger.

An offset well which produced 5 million cubic feet a day was completed in the last quarter of 1982. Further wells are under consideration by Gulf and its partners. The new field wildcat is about three miles south of the Toro Field where gas is also produced from the Ellenburger.

Changes in tax laws could put more money in your pocket

By RAY STASZEWSKI
Copley News Service

Fortunately for most individual taxpayers, the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Tax Act of 1982 — the largest tax increase in American history — did not take away many of the reductions and other benefits of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 — the largest tax cut in history.

Besides raising about $100 billion more revenue over the next three years, the law, which President Reagan signed last September, seeks to assure that businesses and individuals pay their fare share of the tax burden. For mischief makers, cheaters and crooks, minimum penalties and criminal fines have been increased substantially.

However, a number of changes in tax law which took place in the space of about 12 months could mean money in your pocket — a larger refund or less taxes to pay by April 15 for 1982.

Here is a rundown of some of the major changes to be felt by individuals as they cope with returns this year —

— Babysitting Credit Boosted: But not for going to the movies. The dependent care tax credit is for individuals who must pay others to mind their children (under 15 years old) while they work. It has been increased as much as 30 percent. Under the old law, these individuals were eligible for a tax credit of $400 if they spent over $2,000 on child care services. Now, the credit ranges from $720 to $1,440 depending on the number of children and adjusted gross income.

The maximum credit applies to persons with adjusted gross incomes up to $10,000. The credit is trimmed 1 percent for each $2,000 of adjusted gross income over $10,000. For example, if your adjusted gross income is $28,000 (meaning you more than likely earn above that), then you claim a 20 percent credit.

Make sure you pay your babysitter by check. By the way, you can hire your mother or any mature relative to do the job as long as you don't claim that person as a dependent. But pay by check, keep records of dates and hours worked, too.

Finally, if your employer provides non-discriminatory day care services, the value generally won't be taxed.

— Jobless Pay Tax: The amount of tax-free unemployment compensation has been reduced for 1982.

Looking at the positive side of unemployment, if that's possible, the longer a person was out of work last year, the less chance taxes will have to be paid — that is, the less other taxable income will have been earned.

If you are single and your total adjusted gross income plus benefits was over $12,000 in 1982, or $18,000 if married and filing jointly, you'll be taxed. The old limits were $20,000 and $25,000 respectively.

But note that supplemental jobless benefits from a company-financed fund are wages — therefore taxable, the IRS says.

Meanwhile, if you have been too ill to work and get benefits paid by the state, that's disability and not taxable. But if you get additional payments to supplement lost wages they most likely will be income under IRS rules. Check with the IRS, your employer or the insuror.

— Charitable Giving: No change for those who itemize, but starting for 1982 you may deduct $12.50 for yourself plus $12.50 for your spouse even if you don't itemize deductions.

To get the maximum $25 deduction, you have to give $100 to charity under the 25 percent rule. Use a check, money order or get a receipt.

— Send Spouse To Work: There is tax relief in 1982 for married couples who both work and the benefit will be doubled in 1983.

For 1982, if both of you work and file jointly make sure you take the special deduction of 5 percent of net earnings up to $30,000 of the spouse with the lower earnings. For 1982, you can claim up to $1,500.

Starting in 1983, the deduction is 10 percent, or a total of $3,000.

— Retirement Savings Eased: Opportunities to save under individual retirement accounts (IRAs) have been expanded but for 1982 you must act by April 15.

You can now set up an IRA even if your company or plant has a pension or profit-sharing plan. The limit is $2,000 for yourself or a maximum $2,250 for you and your non-working spouse in two IRAs divided between them as you choose.

Keogh and self employment plans have been liberalized for 1982 with the top annual contribution of $15,000 or 15 percent of net self-employment earnings whichever is less.

— New for 1983: Starting this year medical expense and casualty loss deductions will be trimmed.

For 1982, medical expenses are deductible to the extent they exceed 3 percent of adjusted gross income. In 1983, that excess limit goes to 5 percent. Also dropped for 1983 is the separate deduction for medical insurance which you can claim for 1982.

For 1983, deductions for drugs remain but the definition has been narrowed to prescription drugs and insulin.

For 1982, non-business casualty losses to property from fire, storm or theft, for example, are deductible up to fair market value except for the first $100 of the loss.

In 1983, taxpayers will only be able to deduct the losses to the extent they are more than 10 percent of adjusted gross income for the year. But the $100 exclusion remains.

After this June 30, withholding will be required at a flat 10 percent on dividends and interest. Certain pension, annuity and deferred income payments will be subject to voluntary withholding. If you are low income or elderly or get less than $150 a year from these sources, you may be exempt. If you qualify, you have to file an exemption certificate, but don't wait until June.

There are now reporting requirements for state and local income tax refunds, brokerage transactions, including barter exchanges, and other miscellaneous transactions. In any case, make sure there are no inconsistencies between your federal and state returns.

Red Sea well P&A'd

HOUSTON (SWN) — Texas Eastern Friday announced it has plugged and abandoned an exploratory well, which indicated minor but non-commercial hydrocarbon shows, off the Red Sea coast of the Democratic Republic of the Sudan. In addition, the Company said it will make a $25 million provision in 1982 (approximately 97 cents per share) for the possible impairment of its estimated $30 million expenditure on its Sudan exploration program.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

LOWER INTEREST RATE WITH "BUY DOWN"

The mortgage interest buydown-it's a unique way to lower the mortgage rate and complete the sale of real estate. Housing developers have been using this technique for years, especially during times of high interest rates. Have you ever noticed developer's ads extolling an interest rate 3% less than the going rate? The "buydown" is how they do it and here's how it works. The seller makes a cash advance to the bank which is applied to the interest payment for the first, second or however many years are offered. During that time, the lender will be receiving the WHOLE amount of the interest payment but the homebuyer's early payments can be as much as 3% less (the difference). The cash advance "buy down" the difference.

Today it is a common financial technique for homeseller to use when they prefer to sell the house free and clear without taking back any mortgages.

When the plan stops (when the cash advanced is used up) the homeowner assumes the full monthly payments. A big plus-the lower interest rate allows more buyers to qualify for the loan.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 226 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 decreased $1.8 billion to $201.7 billion for the week ending January 12, 1983.

The funds' 7-day average yield decreased to 8.02% from 8.34%. The funds' 30-day average yield fell to 8.16% from 8.22%.

The funds' average maturity figure increased one day to 37 days following two weeks at 36 days.

William E. Donoghue says, "This week's drop in assets is the smallest since the bank money market deposit account became available December 14, 1982. Assets of taxable money funds have declined $25.2 billion since the introduction of this account. Assets of tax-free money funds, however, increased $734.3 million this week as investors in the 36% and higher tax-brackets seek the attractive yields these funds offer. The funds' average maturity figure increased one day this week indicating money fund managers may believe the extra need for liquidity of the past weeks has passed. The record redemptions of the past weeks has been made without a hitch as many funds invested more heavily than usual in overnight securities."

Fed's pumping helps classic hedge thrive

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Notice to those who believe in structural disinflation: At least one key market does not agree with you.

It's the precious metals market — gold, silver, diamonds et al — the classic hedge against destruction of currencies.

As the U.S. Federal Reserve has been pumping up the money supply since last summer, the precious metals markets have been moving off the bottom.

Gold has climbed from below $300 an ounce to above $450. Silver has come back from a low bottom. Diamonds, which had been pummelled by 50 percent and more since 1980, have started the long climb back.

There is still gloom in the diamond industry — many people have been forced out of it — "but the crisis is definitely over," said Maurice Arenson, partner in Anglo Diamond Corp.

"I have a client who wants to buy several millions of dollars worth of best-quality diamonds and I can't fill his order," said Arenson. "De Beers (the South African cartel controlling the industry) has taken an enormous amount of rough cut diamonds off the market," he said — and the backlog has dropped and supply is now relatively tight.

"The seller is now asking full prices. Prices have come back approximately 20 percent since July and August and I can foresee steady improvement — probably an additional 15 to 20 percent gain in prices over the rest of this year," said Arenson.

His partner, David Mandelbaum, noted that prices of investment-grade diamonds "are still depressed," but prices of jewelry diamonds have gone up, and prices of the really large, "highly collectible" diamonds have also gone up. "The prices of investment grade diamonds are sure to follow," he said.

Just a few months ago, Arenson was convinced that diamond prices would not rise much in 1983, and he said his industry was in "an enormous crisis."

Of course, the diamond bears still think the crisis is real. They are convinced that the cartel is falling apart, that diamonds have little intrinsic value and that the public is wising up.

The bearish case was summed up by author Edward Jay Epstein in last year's book, "The Rise & Fall of Diamonds — the Shattering of a Brilliant Illusion." Epstein argued in the book that although the De Beers Consolidated Mines Ltd. cartel has monopolized the production and distribution of diamonds for over a century (controlling 85 percent of the world's uncut diamonds) its glittering era of power is drawing to a close.

"People will realize that diamonds are not forever, and jewelers will be flooded with customers trying to sell, not buy, diamonds. That will be the end of the diamond business," predicted a New York City diamond dealer in an interview with Epstein. Indeed, as diamond prices plunged after 1980, diamond dealers left the business in droves.

"The managers of the diamond cartel share a common nightmare — the nightmare that a giant new source of diamonds would be discovered outside their purview," said Epstein. In fact, some 50 million carats a year will be mined on newly discovered sites in Australia. That's more than the annual output of the De Beers cartel, said Epstein — but De Beers will be distributing the Australian diamonds, which are not high quality.

"One of the factors always cited (by the bears) is the huge find in Australia. But people are spending the money ($300 million) to develop that find, and De Beers will market the diamonds. I don't feel the rug has been pulled out from under the cartel," said Elaine Baker.

Graduate Center begins five courses this week

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer five (5) courses at the PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

"Put it in Writing" Tuesdays, January 18 — February 22, from 7:30-9:30 p.m. Mrs Joyce Sherrod will instruct the course. This is an in-depth course in business writing and engineers writing, which will teach participants to write clearly, accurately, and fast. Registration fee is $95, including participant's manual.

"Oil and Gas Fields in the Permian Basin — Part II" Wednesday, January 19 — February 16, and Tuesday, March 1, from 7-10 p.m. It is a team-taught course. It is designed to acquaint the new geologists with the different producing provinces of the Permian Basin. The first session "Tatum Basin" will be taught by John Cys, Senior Geologist, Mapco. Registration fee is $180.

"Tax Planning for Middle and Upper Income Taxpayers" Wednesday, January 19, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Dr. John M. Malloy, professor of accounting and director of the graduate tax program in the College of Business Administration at Texas Tech will instruct. A practical, results-oriented program designed to inform middle and upper income taxpayers about important opportunities for realizing significant personal tax savings. Fee is $130.

"Basics of Petroleum Land Titles" Thursday, January 20, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Douglas C. McNabb, attorney and partner in Houston law firm of Ferguson and McNabb will instruct the course. It is designed for land secretaries, lease analysts, beginning landmen, or anyone desiring a basic understanding of land titles. Fee, $130.

"Basic Fundamentals of the Petroleum Industry" Monday and Tuesday, January 24-25, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Raymond Bass, Jr. Petroleum Educational Services, Inc. Lafayette, Louisiana, will instruct the course.

Although this course is designed for non-technical support personnel, content is also of value to those in related technical fields. The seminar will give the participants a comprehensive overview of the many facets of the modern petroleum industry. Fee in $225.

For registration or further information, contact the Graduate Center at 563-2311.

Secretary of year nominees sought

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association is now accepting nominations for the Fifth Annual Energy Secretary of the Year Award. The honor was begun in 1978 by Richard S. Gaddy to bring attention to the many hard-working and dedicated secretaries in the energy business. Former winners were Martha Elder of Midland in 1978, Jo Johnson of Hobbs in 1979, Wanda Sides of Odessa in 1980, Joyce O'Bannon of Midland in 1981, and Margaret Woods of Monahans in 1982.

Any secretary employed by an energy-related company from the West Texas Southeast New Mexico area is eligible to compete.

The judging will be on responsibility, loyalty and efficiency plus any contributions made to the energy industry, civic and church work. The winner will be recognized during the 32nd Annual Meeting of the Permian Chapter, Professional Secretaries International on April 26, 1983. In addition, the honoree will receive $500 from Mr. Gaddy.

Nominations from family, friends and others familiar with the candidate's qualifications, should be sent to Award, P.O. Box 132, Midland, Texas 79702, before April 10th, 1983.

Louise Culver, who has been active in selling and listing residential property in Midland since 1963, has qualified for 1982 membership in the National Million Dollar Real Estate Club, based on her personal production for the year.

She is the co-owner and broker of the Carriage Company, REALTORS in Midland.

Stuart B. Schmaling, who has a strong background in radio sales and on-air broadcasting, will serve as account executive for Ad-Vantage Advertising Inc., which has recently opened an office to serve the Midland/Odessa area.

Steve Dickerson has been named regional manager for Northern Gas Products Company in Midland.

Dickerson is responsible for gas acquisitions and residue gas sales for the company's six processing plants in western and central Texas. He is also responsible for developing new business in southwestern Texas and southern New Mexico.

Larry Schulz has been promoted to manager of the West Texas Exploration Division of Delta Drilling Company, Midland.

Schulz was formerly Division Land Manager. He received a B.S. degree in Earth Science from the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and a B.B.A. degree in Petroleum Land Management from the University of Texas in Austin.

Jerry Larson has joined Wagner & Brown Oil and Gas Producers as controller. Formerly with Gulf Oil Corporation, Larson was regional controller of European downstream operations in London. During his career with Gulf he held a variety of positions in accounting, tax, finance, and planning.

CALENDAR

The Permian Basin Section of the Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists (PBS/SEPM) will meet at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in Midland Center. Wayne M. Ahr, Texas A&M University, will talk about "Alternative Origins for Porosity in Mississippian Biohermal Carbonates: Or — How do you find a reservoir in a mud mound?" To register or obtain information please contact the SEPM office at (915) 683-1573.

The Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants (CPAs) will meet January 20, 1983 at Odessa Petroleum Club, 419 W. 4th Street at 6:15 p.m. Carolyn Leonard, director of Internal Revenue Service, Austin, will be the guest speaker. For reservations contact Tina Easley, 684-7121.

The Permian Basin Chapter of the International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC) will meet Thursday at Ranchland Hills Country Club. Cocktails will be served at 6:30 p.m. and dinner will begin at 7:30 p.m.

The guest speakers for the evening will be Chester B. Benge Jr., president, and Ed McGhee, executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

Benge is president of Big 6 Drilling Company. This meeting will also include the installation of new officers for the current year. For further information contact I.A.D.C., 1031 Andrews Highway, Suite 207, Midland, 79701.

The Petroleum Accountants Society of the Permian Basin will hold its regular meeting Wednesday at the Ranchland Hills Country Club.

Technical session will begin at 5:15 and will be presented by the Joint Interest Committee, Rex Perkins, Chairman. Cocktail hour will follow.

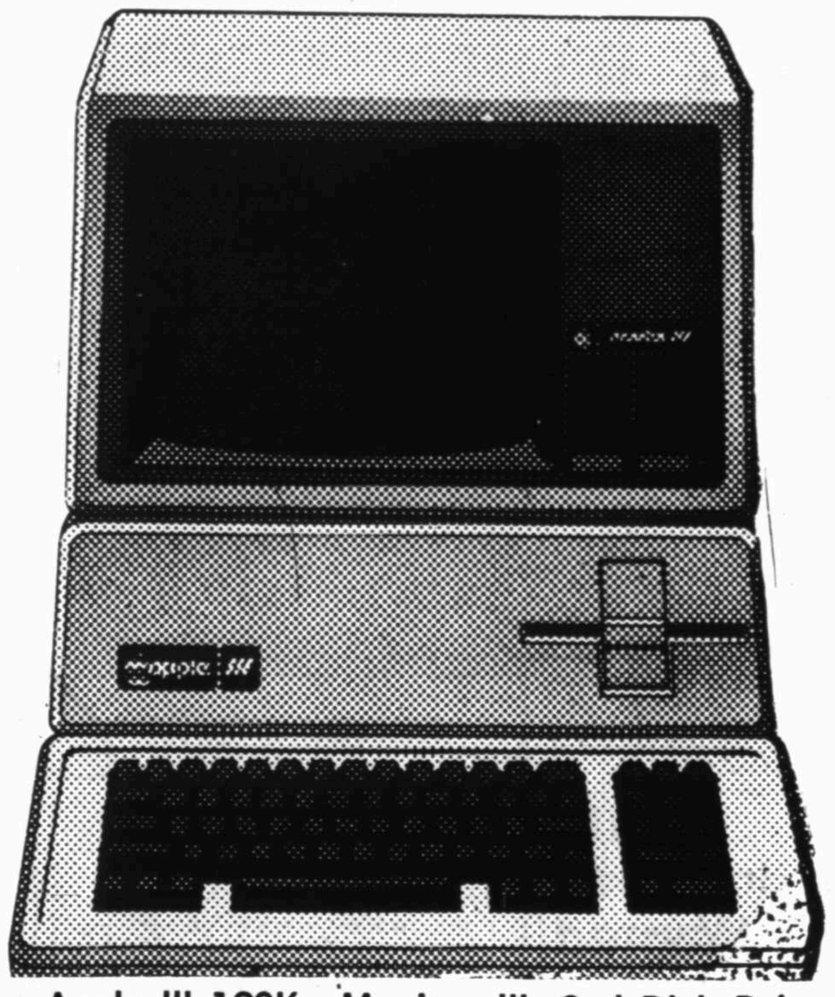

Dinner speaker will be Homer Fort, executive vice-president and director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

The Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers (SPE) will meet Tuesday at Ranchland Hills Country Club. This meeting will begin at 5:30 p.m., with a social hour, followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m. Immediately following dinner a speech will be given by Tyler Brinker, Region Drilling Manager for Union Oil Company of California in Los Angeles, California.

Mr. Brinker will discuss building an "ice island" offshore Alaska, and drilling an exploratory well on this island.

The Permian Basin Well Logging Society will meet at 11:30 a.m. Thursday at Midland Country Club. Jack LaVigne, an engineer with Schlumberger, will talk about "The Gamma Ray Spectroscopy Tool."

Flat beer sales likely, trade group says

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DENVER — The Adolph Coors Co., squeezed by the economy and intense competition from the giant Anheuser-Busch Cos. Inc. and Miller Brewing Co., slumped through a 10.1 percent sales drop in 1982, Coors said Friday.

"Our barrel sales decline in 1982 reflects the year-long slump experienced by a majority of companies in the brewing industry as well as increased industry-wide competition," William K. Coors, chairman and chief executive officer of the nation's sixth largest brewer, said in a statement released Friday.

By comparison, industry-wide beer sales figures are expected to be flat (final figures are not available), although they could drop very slightly — no more than .3 of 1 percent, said a spokesman for the United States Brewers Association, a Washington, D.C.-based trade group.

At the same time, the industry's leader, Anheuser-Busch, is expected to report a sales increase of 8.5 percent, a leading industry analyst said Friday.

Coors, founded a few miles west of Denver in Golden, Colo. in 1868 by Adolph Coors I, produces Coors Premium, Coors Light, George Killian's Irish Red ale and Herman Joseph's 1868. At one time, Coors was the nation's fourth-largest brewer.

The company's stock, traded over the counter and carried in the National Association of Securities Dealers listing, closed Friday at $13.50, up .25, with 100,300 shares traded.

Coors' decrease was from 13.261 million barrels of beer in 1981 to 11.919 million barrels in 1982. Coors' fourth quarter of 1982, which ended Dec. 26, marked the fourth straight quarterly sales decline.

Revenue and profit figures for the year will not be available until late February, a Coors spokesman said.

But for the first three quarters of 1982, Coors reported a profit of $38.08 million on sales of $722.86 million. Both profit and sales figures were down 9.6 percent from the corresponding period in 1981. Earnings per share also dropped, from $1.20 a share during the first three quarters of 1981 to $1.09 for the corresponding period.

"It's a very difficult situation they find themselves in," said Arthur Kirsch, an analyst of the beverage industry for Drexel-Burnham-Lambert, a New York-based brokerage. "The competition is very intense — they have one hell of a challenge," he said by phone from his New York office.

In addition to the slipping sales figures for 1982, Coors weathered its biggest work-force reduction ever, laying off 609 employees. Of those, however, 118 since have been rehired, spokesman Eric Riggle said. He also said on Friday that no more layoffs were contemplated.

Coors now employs about 9,000 persons, with 8,000 in Colorado, Riggle said.

On top of that, the company spent quite a bit of time in August denying rumors — which turned out to be false — that it was about to be purchased by the Coco-Cola Co., the Atlanta-based soft drink giant.

Riggle said Coors' softened 1982 performance has not changed the company's repeated public stance that it is not looking for a buyer or merger partner. "No," he said. "Nothing there."

In his statement Friday, Coors said, ". . we have made significant changes in our sales and marketing programs during the year, and we expect to see the results of these efforts during 1983."

However, he stopped short of saying whether he expected a reverse in the sales slippage this year, and Riggle refused to offer a preciction.

"There are some indications that the industry is going to be flat in 1983," Riggle said. "But we certainly hope that's not the case."

It may be, though, Kirsch thinks.

"Coors is going to move into new markets in 1983," Kirsch said. "But I still think they are going to decline.

"They better turn the decline into positives at some point," he added. "You can only go for so long with volumes continuing to decline." But he stressed that he was not predicting that the giant brewer was anywhere near a hopeless position.

Nonetheless, he said, Coors must do better in the states where its competition is heaviest, California and Texas, to significantly improve its market share.

Overall, the beer industry should grow about 1 percent in 1983, Kirsch said.

Small business seminars set

The Midland Chamber of Commerce has announced a series of six seminars for small business men and women. The seminars are sponsored by the Chamber's Small Business Council. They will be conducted at Midland College.

The seminars begin at 7 p.m. Feb. 22 with "Why Small Businesses Fail — And How to Prevent it." Jamie Thompson, owner of Exploration Graphics, and Eugene Nini, chairman of the UTPB accounting faculty, will discuss the topic.

The remaining five seminars will follow on Tuesday evenings, from 7-9:30 p.m., through March 29. All sessions will be at the college.

The price of enrollment is $100 for the series, or $25 per session for those not attending all six. To register, phone Alison Peeler at the Chamber office, 683-3381. Registration will be limited to 100.

When announcing the seminars, Paul Harvel, who heads the Midland Chamber, said although the Chamber has not given much attention to the needs of small business in the past, small business will be getting more attention in the future. The seminars and other small business-oriented programs now offered by the Chamber are part of an new effort to help keep small businesses strong.

Harvel said the seminars are open to all; both those now in business and those who would like to be.

The Chamber's Small Business Council was founded in 1982. It is chaired by Amy Stewart, owner of Energy Plus Inc. The main objectives of the group are to develop educational programs for small business, develop a Small Business Resource Library at the Chamber, and to stay informed of legislative matters effecting small businesses in Midland.

Stewart said another series of seminars is planned for next fall. It is possible one-day seminars may be scheduled between the series, she said.

Taxation, exploration seminars offered professionals

The first of two professional development seminars sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the National Association of Accountants will be held January 22nd, beginning at 8:30 a.m. at the Midland Holidome. Entitled "Current Developments in Taxation and Microcomputers," the two sessions will feature representatives from Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.; Price Waterhouse; Main Hurdman and Fox & Company.

In the first session, the representatives will be speaking on a number of areas of taxation, such as individual, partnership and corporate taxation, estate and gift taxation, windfall profit tax, etc. They will emphasize recent changes in the tax law made as a result of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 and the Subchapter S Revision Act of 1982.

The second session, beginning at 8:30 a.m. February 12, again at the Midland Holidome, will feature the conclusion of the taxation presentations and will also include a presentation by Jay Davison of the Management Consulting Department of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. He will update developments in Microcomputers, hardware and software currently available, and their current and potential applications.

The seminars will conclude at approximately 12:30 p.m. Each session is intended to provide a total of four hours of continuing education credit for C.P.A.'s Fees are $40.00 for both sessions or $25.00 for attendance at a single session. To register, call 561-9022. Registration will begin at 8:00 a.m. each day of the respective sessions as well. Questions about the seminars can be answered by calling Randy Underwood or Kevin Ong at 682-3791.

E.E. Milner of E.E. Milner and Associates, consulting petroleum engineers, Houston, and D.A. Warren, Jr. of Tefteller Inc., Midland, are offering two seminars, January 17-21, 1983 at the Holidome Inn, Midland.

The first seminar, January 17th and 18th, is a course in "Formation Evaluation Using DST or Production Test Data and a comparison with core and log evaluation." This course is designed for Geologist, Geophysicists, Log Analysts, Managers, and Landmen. The purpose of the course is to show how data and answers can be obtained from DST and Production Tests to help evaluate formations with various rock and fluid properties for their ability to store and produce hydrocarbons.

The second seminar, January 19, 20th and 21st is a course in "Advanced Formation Evaluation Using DST and Production Test Data." The course will show how data and answers obtained from a DST or Production Test of a liquid or gas test can aid in drilling, completion, production and reservoir engineering work. It should be of interest to engineers in production, reservoir, geological, and drilling. Also, other technically oriented personnel are invited to attend.

The fees are $225.00 per person for the two day course January 17th and 18th and $325.00 per person for the three day course, January 19th, 20th ahd 21st. A certificate will be presented to each perticipant. For more information or to obtain a registration form, you may call Tefteller, Inc. (915) 682-5574.

Spring slump continues

The annual "spring slump" continues. The Permian Basin regional rig count dropped to 313, according to a survey last week by Reed Rock Bit Co. That's 23 less than spotted the previous week.

The rig count for December 30 was 360.

The rig tally one year ago was 506. Two years ago it was 360.

Although the regional rig count declined overall last week, in some of the traditionally more active counties, such as Pecos, Ward and Lea, the rig count is holding up well. Significant drops in rig count were observed in Crockett, Ector, Glasscock, Martin and Terry counties.

Nationally, the International Association of Drilling Contractors report 2,723 rigs making hole Jan 10. One week earlier, 2,756 were spotted turing to the right.

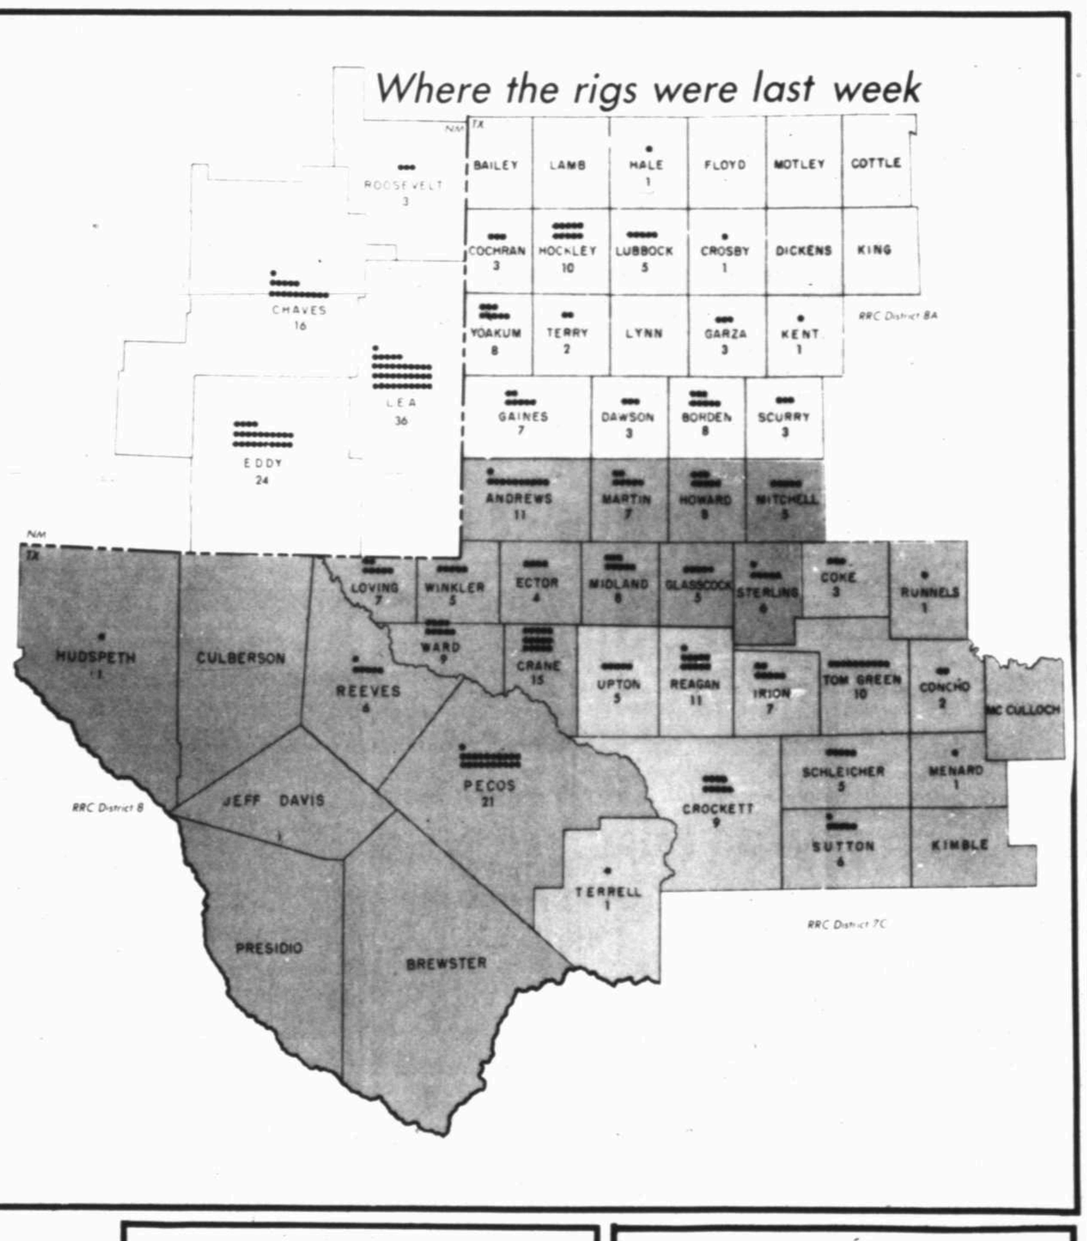

The tally one year ago was 4,443.

The latest IADc figures show 951 rigs active throughout inland-Texas. An additional 62 are drilling offshore.

One year ago 1,428 land rigs were busy in Texas.

New Mexico was given credit for 91 active rigs on the IADC's latest tally sheet. That's 67 fewer than found one year ago.

Deregulation provides savers profitable choices

By the Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

Back in the days when gasoline was 39 cents a gallon and inflation was something you did with balloons, saving money was a piece of cake. You simply stashed your idle cash in a savings account at a convenient bank or savings and loan, and the interest you earned was frosting.

But today, with deregulation revolutionizing the financial marketplace, savers face a more profitable but often bewildering choice of savings vehicles.

In fact, some say, saving is no longer saving. It is investing, and like buying stocks, a new car or home, you must shop around.

Just settling for 5 1/4 percent or 5 1/2 percent interest when you don't ave to "is like buying a ticket on the Titanic," says William E. Donoghue, a leading investment adviser.

IN ADDITION, saving is gaining increasing favor with consumers as inflation abates — a dramatic reversal from the inflationary 1970s, when inflation hedges such as precious metals or real estate were in vogue and saving was in disfavor. The percentage of disposable income saved by Americans rose to nearly 8 percent last year from 6.4 percent in 1981 and 5.8 percent in 1980.

The choices of savings instruments — those in which you are totally or almost totally certain of getting back your money plus interest — go far beyond the new money-market savings and super NOW checking accounts that banks and savings and loan associations have been pitching with great fanfare during the last month.

Alternatives include Treasury bills or other government securities, Individual Retirement Accounts, bank certificates of deposit, repurchase agreements, banker's acceptances and money-market funds, to name a few.

The choices are expected to continue growing at a dizzying pace, particularly as distinctions between banks and brokerage houses narrow. Investment companies, for example, may soon begin to offer insured money-market funds, either independently or in conjunction with banks.

The determining factor in selecting a savings vehicle, of course, is the amount you wish to invest. There is no hard-and-fast rule; some financial planners say you should aim to save as little as two months of take-home earnings, while others say six months is optimal. Some just advise you to save whatever amount gives you "peace of mind," since emotional well-being in these trying times is in itself a major asset.

IF THE AMOUNT YOU can save is less than $2,500, your choices are limited but you do not have to fret; there are other vehicles besides the traditional passbook accounts, which pay a meager 5 1/4 percent, 5 1/2 percent or checking accounts which often pay no interest at all. For example, several money-market funds, which pay much higher rates, accept minimum balances as low as $1,000; at least one even has no minimum-balance requirement.

If your amount is $2,500 or more, however, the choices and potential returns increase considerably. What is more, for more than $10,000, the savings options increase even more.

You also should consider what direction interest rates might be heading. If you think rates will fall further, you might want to deposit your savings in a bank certificate of deposit or other vehicle that locks in current interest rates. (Of course, locking up your funds is a bad idea if you need access to them before the vehicle's term expires.)

Safety is another major consideration. By definition, all savings instruments are reasonably safe, but some are safer than others. In general, the safer the instrument, the less it pays. A riskier instrument, such as a banker's acceptance, pays more than a Treasury bill, considered one of the safest investments.

—PASSBOOK ACCOUNTS AND STANDARD NON-INTEREST PAYING CHECKING ACCOUNTS. If you have less than $1,000 to save, these may be your only choices. Of course, they provide the utmost in convenience and safety. They are federally insured, provide immediate access, and minimum balances are generally not required. Passbook accounts, however, still pay only a maximum of 5 1/4 percent at federally regulated banks and 5 1/2 percent at federally regulated S&Ls. (By Jan. 1, 1984, the differential will end.)

Clearly, if you have more than $2,500 in a standard passbook account, in almost all circumstances you should transfer the funds at least to one of the new money-market savings accounts, which pays considerably more. But even if you have only $1,000, you still could qualify for a money-market fund, or buy a Treasury note or a repurchase agreement — all paying more than standard 5 1/4 percent or 5 1/2 percent for passbook accounts.

—INTEREST-PAYING CHECKING ACCOUNTS. These accounts, called NOW (negotiable order of withdrawal) accounts, pay up to 5 1/2 percent at banks and S&Ls, but many institutions require minimum deposits (some as low as $100, some as high as $1,000) before you can earn interest or waive checking service charges.

Accordingly, some financial planners advise clients to avoid these accounts and place the money required for the minimum NOW account balance into some other, higher-yielding investment. You can always transfer funds into a standard, non-interest paying checking account just before you need to pay bills. (Some financial advisers suggest paying bills the same day each month so as to avoid the hassle of frequent transfers.)

However, to correct that disadvantage of the NOW accounts, some banks and S&Ls have lowered or plan to lower their account minimums. Others are offering "sweep" NOW accounts that automatically transfer balances above a certain threshold ($2,000, for example) into a higher-yielding account.

—TREASURY NOTES. Unlike Treasury bills, which have maturities of one year or less and require minimum investments of $10,000, Treasury notes have maturities ranging from one to 10 years and require minimum deposits of as little as $1,000, making them increasingly popular in recent years among some small savers. Both T-bills and notes are backed by the U.S. government and can be sold before reaching maturity at a competitive market rate.

Notes are available directly from the Federal Reserve or through banks and investment firms. Rates range from about 9 percent to about 10.8 percent depending on the maturity.

—INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS (IRAs). These accounts, offered at many banks, S&Ls, insurance companies and brokerage houses, allow an individual to invest up to $2,000 of earned income per year ($2,250 for one with a non-working spouse), deduct it from taxable income, and let it earn competitive interest without being taxed until withdrawn at retirement. Institutions invest the IRA money in all sorts of high-yielding securities, including stocks or Treasury bills. IRAs are available either at fixed or variable rates. Current rates on IRAs range from 9 percent to 11 percent.

Because IRAs reduce your taxable income and allow you to save dollars that otherwise would go to Uncle Sam, they are highly recommended by financial advisers for wage earners who can afford tying up part of their income for now. A person earning only about $10,000 a year, for example, may not be able to afford the luxury of an IRA.)

—MONEY-MARKET FUNDS. Some money-market funds allow minimum balances of as low as $1,000 (one, New York-based Alliance Capital Reserves, claims to have no minimum). They pay rates determined by the money-market instruments, such as Treasury bills or commercial paper, in which they invest. Current rates range between 8 percent and 9 percent.

Most companies that operate money funds also operate stock and bond mutual funds, allowing their more adventurous investors to shift funds when stocks or bonds appear to have better returns, as they have in recent months.

Major disadvantages of money-market funds are that many require minimum amounts for checks (usually $500) and they are uninsured. However, to alleviate the checking problem, many funds are lowering their check minimums. In addition, to alleviate the safety issue, many funds invest only in U.S. government-backed securities such as Treasury bills. And as mentioned before, some plan to offer insurance on their accounts, either through private insurers or in conjunction with banks.

—REPURCHASE AGREEMENTS (REPOS). These instruments, sold by some banks and S&Ls, also have been popular with small savers because of their low minimum deposits (usually $1,000) and because their yields are not limited by federal regulation.

Repos are securities bought from an institution at a certain price, with an agreement that the institution will repurchase them at a higher price later, usually between eight and 89 days. The difference between the prices is the yield. Currently, repos are yielding about 9 percent on a $1,000-minimum.

Repos, however, are not insured by the federal government and thus to minimize risk you should buy them from a reputable bank unlikely to fail. Holders of repos issued by failed banks have had problems recouping their investment.

Besides the above-mentioned instruments, you also can invest savings under $2,500 in certain bank certificates of deposit. The most popular is the so-called 30-month "small-savers" certificate, which at many banks and S&Ls requires a minimum balance of as little as $500.

Instruments with minimums above $2,500 include:

—MONEY-MARKET SAVINGS ACCOUNTS. These much-ballyhooed accounts, which banks and thrifts began offering last Dec. 14, are the banks' competitive answer to the rapidly growing money-market funds. Unlike the money-market funds, these new savings accounts are insured by the federal government. They can pay any interest set by the bank as long as the balance stays above the required opening balance of $2,500. (If the balance falls below this level, interest reverts to that for passbook accounts.)

In order to attract consumers to these new accounts, many banks and thrifts are offering them at introductory rates as high as 12 percent (one bank in Georgia offered 25 percent). Thus, at least for now they have a definite advantage over money-market funds and passbook accounts.

However, bankers and analysts say, once the introductory hoopla has waned, institutions will be forced to drop these rates closer to ongoing money-market rates (now between 8 percent and 9 percent) in order to keep them profitable. Once that happens, some say, rates offered by money-market funds may be higher because money-fund companies have lower overhead costs than banks, which, for example, must incur the expenses of maintaining their branch networks.

A major disadvantage of the new accounts is that the number of monthly transactions is limited to six, with no more than three checks.

—SUPER NOW CHECKING ACCOUNTS. These vehicles, offered beginning last Wednesday, offer unlimited check-writing privileges. But unlike the older, standard NOW accounts, interest on the Super NOWs is not limited by federal regulation, provided the balance is kept higher than the $2,500 minimum required to open them. (If it falls below, interest reverts to the 5 1/4 percent of the standard NOWs.)

However, because of checking service charges and other expenses, the Super NOWs are expected to yield about one percentage point less than money-market savings accounts, bankers say. Many banks and S&Ls are offering them now at introductory rates as high as 11 percent, but this is expected to decline after the inaugural fever abates.

—BANK CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT (CDs). Sometimes called time deposits, these instruments require you to lock up your funds for a given maturity, ranging from as little as seven days to up to 20 years or longer. All are insured and are available at most banks and S&Ls.

Regulations governing maturities and rates on CDs have changed dramatically in the last year. For example, before last Wednesday, the minimum-balances on the 7-to-31 day CD was $20,000. But last Wednesday, new legislation standardized the minimums for all CDs at no more than $2,500, thus making them much more affordable for the small saver.

The rate on shortest-term CD, the 7-to-31 day account, used to be mandated by the government based on a formula involving the 91-day Treasury bill rate. But as of last Wednesday, institutions are free to offer whatever rate they wish. Most banks are offering rates close to 8 1/2 percent.

The six-month CD, most familiar to savers, pays a rate based on a complex set of formulas based on the six-month Treasury bill rate. Currently, the rate is 8.7 percent.

The main disadvantage of CDs are the loss of interest and even principal for withdrawal of principal before the end of the term. For that and other reasons, many financial planners recommend that you avoid the longer-term CDs, unless you strongly believe that inflation and interest rates will drop and stay dropped for some time — not a sure possibility.

—TREASURY BILLS. Because they are said to be among the safest investments (backed by the U.S. Treasury, which runs the money printing presses), they also generally pay lower rates. The current interest rates on three-month and six-month bills, for example, are 7.9 percent, while one-year bills are 7.95 percent. However, the interest is not subject to state and local taxes.

Bills of maturities of three months, six months or one year are available in minimum denominations of $10,000, with $5,000 increments thereafter. They can be purchased from banks, S&Ls and securities firms for a fee, or directly from the Federal Reserve at no fee.

—FEDERAL AGENCY ISSUES. These securities are similar to Treasury bills, and are issued by such agencies as the Federal National Mortgage Association, the Government National Mortgage Association and Federal Home Loan Banks, just to name a few. Because they are not direct obligations of the Department of the Treasury but instead of the agencies that issue them, they are not quite as safe as Treasury bills. But to compensate for this, they generally pay more; for example, they currently pay about 8.3 percent.

—BANKER'S ACCEPTANCES. These instruments, available in denominations as small as $25,000, are issued by corporations that use the funds primarily to finance imports, exports or goods held in warehouses.

Although they are not insured, banker's acceptances are still considered relatively safe because they are backed by the credit of the borrowing company, collateralized by the goods being shipped or stored and guaranteed by a bank. Yields, generally higher than those on regular deposits, are currently about 8.35 percent.

They can be purchased from some banks and have maturities of about 60 or 90 days.

—COMMERCIAL PAPER. The investments, available in denominations as low as $5,000, are issued by corporations such as General Motors or General Electric, which use the funds for short-term operating expenses. They often pay more than other vehicles of comparable maturities.

They can be bought for a fee from banks or securities companies in maturities as short as a few days, although the smaller-denomination commercial paper generally requires longer maturities. For example, General Motors Acceptance Corp., the finance arm of the giant auto maker, currently issues a $5,000 commercial paper; however, its maturity is at least nine months. Generally, if you want a 90-day maturity, you will have to invest $25,000; for 30 days, $50,000, and for less than 30 days, $100,000. Rates generally are between 8 percent to 8 1/4 percent.

New solar energy system promising

Hearst Feature Service

If Arnold Goldman's venture into solar energy is as successful as his foray into computers, the sun will soon be providing significant amounts of power for homes and industry.

Claims that solar power will effectively compete with oil and gas as energy sources are neither new nor thus far realistic. But Goldman is the man who mated the office typewriter with the television screen. At the age of 27, he helped found the Lexitron Corporation, which designed, produced and marketed the first video-display word processor. With just $100,000 in sales in 1972, Lexitron was a $20 million business when Raytheon acquired the company five years later.

Goldman then sought a new challenge, and the result was Luz International, headquartered in California and Israel. Last summer, reports Science Digest's February issue, Luz signed a power-purchase contract with California Edison, and Luz's solar energy system is already providing textile mills and food processing plants in Jerusalem with steam power.

The Luz system uses collectors that take 90 percent of reflected sunlight and concentrate it on a thin steel tube. Special heat-absorbing oil courses through the glass-coated tubes, which can reach temperatures of 600 degrees Fahrenheit. The hot oil is then put through a heat-exchanger system that turns water into steam. Facilities can use the steam for power, turning it into electricity through use of turbines, or can use the heat in industrial processes.

The Luz team has added "refinements" that make the system significantly more efficient than those of competitors in the solar industry." Goldman is proudest of the vacuum in the chamber between the steel tube and the glass envelope that encases the tube.

"Other systems cool off during the night, but Luz's retains heat, allowing it to start earlier in the day," says Science Digest. "So little heat is lost that you can put your hand on the glass envelope without discomfort although, just inches away, the steel tube may be close to 500 degrees!"

Indeed, Theodore Barry & Associates, a Los Angeles consulting firm, judged the Luz system to be 20 percent more efficient than other systems.

Goldman has no fear of the increasing competition, even from gigantic corporate rivals. He told Science Digest: "If we can demonstrate that we're efficient, that we can provide reliable energy at a fair price, we have nothing to worry about."

China — U.S. sign marine pipeline accord

HOUSTON — Brown & Root Inc. and the Pipeline Bureau, Ministry of Petroleum Industry of the People's Republic of China (PRC) announced the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding with the intent to form a Joint Venture Company for the purpose of performing marine pipeline engineering and construction projects in the People's Republic of China.

Fiberglass line laid

Fiberglass high pressure line pipe is replacing steel in a 42-well injection system, operated by a major oil company out of Hobbs, New Mexico. Consisting of 13 miles of 2 and 3 inch diameter fiberglass pipe and some 4" steel IPC pipe, the Hobbs installation is the largest to date which employs a novel new mechanical joining system, Pronto-Lock III. The pipe and joining system are manufactured by CIBA-GEIGY Pipe Systems of Houston, Texas.

The operator chose CIBA HPLP which is rated at 2000 psi, for the system. They also chose Pronto-Lock III in place of Standard EUE 8 round coupling in this application.

In Pronto-Lock III, an integral rubber gasket in the box makes the seal, rather than the threads as with 8 round coupling.

Combine the efforts

Two newsworthy events in recent days provide a golden opportunity for the transformation of two local agencies into one more efficient, more meaningful organization.

The announcement Betty Sheeler will retire Jan. 15 as coordinator of the county-administered rent subsidy program and the housing rehabilitation project in the county's "window pane" area was followed only days later with acknowledgement that the Human Relations Council is looking for alternate office space, apparently without much luck.

This appears the perfect time to combine the important programs headed by Mrs. Sheeler with a revitalized and redirected Human Relations Council. Both Mrs. Sheeler and the HRC have been heavily involved in housing repair and rental assistance programs and, on occasion, their paths have appeared to overlap.

With Mrs. Sheeler's decision to step down as coordinator of the two Midland County programs and the HRC's impending move from the County Annex Building, where Mrs. Sheeler also offices, why not combine the two and search for one office instead of two? Mrs. Sheeler agreed this week that the programs administered by herself and the HRC are "compatible" and, in fact, other Human Relations Council-style agencies elsewhere in Texas administer federal rental subsidy (referred to as Section 8) and housing rehabilitation programs.

Additionally, in recent months the HRC has appeared to lose its direction, to be uncertain in what areas it should be proceeding and where, in fact, it was needed. This would be a good time to re-evaluate the purpose of the agency and, perhaps, to change directions if such a course appears justified.

Originally, the Human Relations Council was organized to facilitate racial harmony in Midland and to smooth the process of desegregation in city schools. Its efforts in that direction were needed at that time. The HRC was instrumental in Midland Independent School District's desegregation process, but Midland's schools are now integrated and working closely with the U.S. Justice Department. Is the HRC's work along these lines fruitful any longer or merely "busy work" that can be better handled by other organizations, particularly MISD?

With Midland's population growth in recent years and anticipated future growth, the need for the council will continue to exist and likely expand although a restructuring and rethinking of its purposes undoubtedly is in line. The HRC may determine it needs to be even more involved in housing for Midland's underprivileged elderly or infirm, particularly in light of the federal government's de-emphasis in those areas.

An important fact to keep in mind is that the programs both Mrs. Sheeler and the HRC have administered have a long history of relieving suffering and keeping racial harmony in the Tall City. Mrs. Sheeler is to be particularly commended for her efforts in helping less fortunate Midlanders find affordable housing with government assistance. That program still is utilized and needed. To a degree there probably is overlapping between Mrs. Sheeler's operations and some areas of the HRC. And there are some areas in which the administrative functions of each could be reduced and efficiency increased.

But by combining efforts, streamlining operations and expanding into other areas of need, the new agency could smooth the way for the expected growth of the city's ethnic minorities. A need for this kind of effort does exist in Midland. All that appears to be needed is a roadmap.

County commissioners, who would be responsible for combining the operations of Mrs. Sheeler and the HRC, should strongly consider doing so in order that the current needs being addressed can continue to be addressed and so future needs can be met.

Another View:

The rule and reality

Last February, the Department of Health and Human Services proposed and (as it must under the regulations) asked for public comment on what opponents promptly dubbed the "squeal rule."

The comments came roaring in, most of it adverse and much of it very much so. Despite that, Secretary of Health and Human Services Richard S. Schweiker, just before announcing his resignation, announced his intention of putting the squeal rule into effect.

Under the rule, family-planning agencies receiving federal funds would be required to notify parents within 10 days after dispensing oral contraceptives or other birth-control devices to women younger than 18. It is a classic example of rights in conflict, of good intentions in conflict with reality and of Morris K. Udall's "law of unintended consequences."

As to rights, there is the right of privacy, which even teen-agers should enjoy, against the right and indeed obligation of parents to be responsible for their children. The rule, in effect, attempts to alert parents to the sexual activity of their children. But that's not government's role. As President Reagan declared last February when asked about the administration's "contraceptive policy," the government "has no business injecting itself between parent and child in a family relationship and where it is very definitely a problem of concern to parents who are responsible for the children."

Consider the realities. More and more young people these days are sexually active. One may deplore that, but deploring a situation doesn't alter it. Anyone who knows young people knows that they are not always susceptible to good advice, including the good advice that abstinence is the best policy. Anyone who knows parents knows that many of them are incapable of discussing sex with their offspring.

The reality is that well over a million pregnancies occur every year among unwed 15- to 19-year olds, and of those nearly half are ended by abortion. An administration as opposed as this one is to abortions surely ought not to encourage them.

Yet that is what the squeal rule would do. The rule would not deter young people from engaging in sex. It would deter many, who for whatever reason are determined not to share these problems with their parents, from going to family-planning clinics. The clinics are not there just to give out contraceptives but to teach the facts of life, unknown to so many young, including facts on venereal disease and the consequences teen-agers have to bear for unwanted pregnancies, and to encourage family counseling and parent discussion and education.

The squeal rule ought not to go into effect. It will not accomplish what it is supposed to accomplish. It will lead to consequences that no reasonable person can desire.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Public servants lose basic U.S. rights

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan came to Washington full of determination to "get the government off our backs." True to his convictions, he has detoothed the regulatory agencies and weakened the regulations.

Jack Anderson

While he deplores government meddling in the affairs of private citizens, however, the Reagan administration is perfectly willing to invade the privacy of its own employees. Americans who choose public service are now asked to give up their rights as citizens. Consider this Bill of Reduced Rights:

— Right to privacy: President Reagan would like to draw a curtain of secrecy between the government's internal operations and the outside world. He does not want the acts and policies of his administration to reach the people through unauthorized press leaks.

The millions who compose the permanent government are suspect. They are not trusted with sensitive information, and their communications increasingly are monitored. This denigration of the regular institutions of government is aimed in part at the press; what the employees do not know, they cannot leak.

Nowhere is this peculiar schizophrenia more prevalent than inside the Pentagon. The most publicized example is the administration's plan to broaden the scope of a current regulation that subjects employees to lie-detector tests.

At the whim of their superiors, if the new regulations are adopted, Pentagon workers could be strapped to polygraph machines and interrogated on any number of subjects, from press leaks to their personal habits. This could become the biggest government snooping campaign since the Red Scare after World War II.

— Right to legal representation: The Justice Department, with the evident blessing of Deputy Attorney General Edward C. Schmults, last year issued a Cromwellian edict that would have effectively denied employees the right to legal representation if they sued the department. Supervisors were also forbidden to cooperate with employees' attorneys in any way.

In one case, employees challenged what they considered to be an unfair personnel policy. The administration warned the supervisors bluntly: "You may not provide information or documents to the attorney representing these employees."

The instructions that followed were even more outrageous. "If you or your employees have already provided information or documents to the attorney, either directly or indirectly," ordered a Justice Department administrator, "I want a report concerning all oral information provided and a copy of all such documents delivered to me ..."

In other words, the Justice Department official wanted to intrude upon the confidential relationship between the employees and their lawyer. This is a basic legal right enjoyed by murderers, traitors, embezzlers and you-name-it. Yet it was to be denied to civil servants who had merely sought relief from what they considered improper treatment.

"That was a direct infringement of attorney-client privilege," the employees' attorney, Mona Lyons, told my associate Indy Badhwar. "There was no way any lawyer could represent those employees under those strictures."

Fortunately, the U.S. Court of Appeals agreed with the lawyer. It ruled that the employees did not have to abide by the Justice Department directive. The court also took the opportunity to deliver a brief civics lecture to the Justice Department:

"Meaningful access to the courts is a fundamental right of citizenship in this country ... Undermining the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship ... cuts too deeply into the employees' First Amendment rights."

What is disturbing is that the court felt it necessary to point out these self-evident truths to the legal arm of the federal government.

— Right to a fair trial: The rights of defendants in military courts have always been severely circumscribed. But the men in the Pentagon also wanted to control the appeals process.

Congress created the Court of Military Appeals as an independent civilian tribunal to protect the rank-and-file from the generals and admirals. It is known as the GIs' Supreme Court.

The Pentagon brass have tried to control the appeals court, mainly by restricting its funding. This has been resisted by the court in general and its highest nonjudicial officer, Ward Mundy, in particular.

In retaliation, the Pentagon sat on a promotion for Mundy that had been recommended by the court's chief judge. Mundy resigned in disgust and sued the Defense Department. U.S. District Judge Harold Greene recently ruled in Mundy's favor, granting him back pay.

"Congress wanted a military court of last resort composed of civilians who could administer the military code evenhandedly, free from command influence," Greene wrote. "Objectivity cannot last long when the very people being judged by the court are in turn judging the court and its personnel."

President Reagan should beware. Public servants who are denied trust will become untrustworthy. Subordinates blocked from access to the information they need will grow uneasy and begin to connive. Some of those barred from talking to the press will begin to leak information wholesale. Suspicion and hostility at the top will, at length, permeate an organization with apprehension and decay.

GEORGE F. WILL

Wallenberg remark elicited a response

WASHINGTON — Like a northern pike rising at a lure, Sweden's ambassador has risen to defend his country against an accusation in a recent column. I welcome the opportunity to amplify the offending remark.

George F. Will

Writing about Raoul Wallenberg, the savior of thousands of Hungarian Jews, who disappeared into Soviet prisons in 1945, I quoted a Swedish official saying that, "We are working on the supposition that Wallenberg is still alive." I said: "Sweden's lethargy concerning the case — lethargy born of cowardice — hardly constitutes 'working.'"

In a letter to The Washington Post, the ambassador calls this "grossly unfair." He admits Sweden believed initial Soviet lies, but he says Sweden "has pursued this matter with a vigor and perseverance that probably exceeds what any government has done for one of its citizens."

Well.

Sweden's statement about its supposition was made when Sweden released documents pertaining to the case. Rep. Tom Lantos (D-Cal.), who as a boy in Budapest was saved by Wallenberg, wrote to the New York Times (May 26, 1982):

"It is both ironic and deplorable that Sweden has waited 20 years to release some 42 volumes of reports and eyewitness accounts. ... Had the information been made public earlier to those in a position to help Raoul Wallenberg, he may have been able to live his life with dignity — with his family — instead of in the infamy of the Soviet gulag. For years, the government of Sweden has engaged in ineffective silent diplomacy. ... Now they tell those of us who have fought so hard for his release that we can finally see their documents. If ... the Swedish government is now 'working on the supposition that he is still alive,' then it's about time."

Just after the war, Sweden's foreign minister was urged to press the case and disregard the fact that Soviet Foreign Minister Vyshinsky said that the Soviet Union did not have Wallenberg. The Swedish minister said: "What! Do you believe that Mr. Vyshinsky is lying?" Vyshinsky, the prosecutor in Stalin's show trials, lie? "Absolutely unheard of," said the minister.

The ambassador's claim that Sweden has done more for Wallenberg than any nation has done for a citizen is refuted by many cases, but especially that of Harald Feller, a Swiss diplomat who was in Budapest when Wallenberg was, doing similar rescue work. He, too, wound up in Soviet hands. But he was released in 1946 because his country arrested six Soviet spies and negotiated a swap.

Although Sweden found neutrality profitable between 1939 and 1945, after the war it discovered morality and ever since has been urging it on others, especially the United States, which frequently falls shorts of Sweden's exacting standards. Sweden has generally considered swaps beneath its dignity. "Sweden," said a Swedish foreign minister, "does not do such things." By the time (1979) Sweden proposed a swap, the Kremlin reacted with disdain.

Olaf Palme, who is again prime minister, and the world's moral tutor (he considers the United States as especially backward student), was prime minister in 1976. When Palme met with Kosygin, the Wallenberg case was not even on the agenda. Palme's administration dismissed the case in a word: "utagerad" (settled).

Even before Afghanistan, Wallenberg's supporters urged Sweden to boycott the 1980 Olympics in Moscow. Even after the invasion, Sweden did not boycott.

In October, 1981, a Soviet submarine ran aground while violating Swedish territorial waters. Wallenberg supporters urged using the submarine for leverage. When the Soviet Union asked for its boat back, Sweden could have said: Boat? What boat? We know nothing of any boat — just as you know nothing of Wallenberg.

But appearing on ABC's "Nightline" (Oct. 30, 1981), the foreign minister was asked if Sweden "might want to propose a trade." He said that "would certainly not serve any useful purpose." Do Swedes wonder why Soviet submarines show such contempt for Sweden's sovereignty? Cringing neutrality has not noticeably immunized Sweden from the aggressive disdain of Soviet submariners.

In her new biography, "Wallenberg," Kati Marton, a Hungarian-born journalist, concludes that Wallenberg fell victim to "Sweden's near-pathological fear of Russia":

"The scorn with which the Kremlin treated Stockholm's queries about Wallenberg was not altogether unjustified given the Swedes' lack of conviction following his imprisonment. The dim memory of an early 19th-century Russian invasion, Sweden's first and last, is not sufficient explanation for the country's spineless behavior on behalf of its captured diplomat."

Marton also says: "At Wallenberg's expense, Sweden has learned a painful lesson: the price demanded to maintain one's neutrality can sometimes be too high." The lesson certainly has been taught to all of Europe; whether it has been learned is increasingly doubtful.

ART BUCHWALD

'Sweepstakes' offering security?

There is one solution to the Social Security bankruptcy problem that has not been suggested yet, and that is the government might hold a sweepstakes for eligible senior citizens. The Department of Human Resources could hire one of the professional sweepstakes companies to write and mail out brown envelopes to everyone on the Social Security rolls.

Art Buchwald

The letter would read:

DEAR MRS. DALTON,

Do not throw away this letter. You may have won one of 300 prizes adding up to $1,000,000 in the 1983 SOCIAL SECURITY SWEEPSTAKES. Yes, that's what I said, ONE MILLION DOLLARS in prizes offered to you absolutely free by the SOCIAL SECURITY CLEARING HOUSE. All you have to do, MRS. DALTON, is return the enclosed coupon with your LUCKY number on it and you will be eligible for our MILLION DOLLAR SWEEPSTAKES.

Just think, MRS. DALTON, if your number is picked on March 15th, you could win $250 A MONTH FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE. You may be holding the WINNING ticket in your hand right now. But if you don't send it back right away you could be the sorriest senior citizen in America.

I know what you're saying. No one wins in a SWEEPSTAKES. But MR. CARLOS SEGURA, aged 70, of Long Beach, California, won $50,000, MISS KITTY SOAMES of St. Louis, aged 83, won $75,000, and MR. & MRS. JASON MARKS of Sun City, Arizona will receive Social Security checks for the next 20 years worth (are you ready for this?) over $100,000.

If they can win, MRS. DALTON, there is no reason why you can't join this illustrious list of people who took the time to send in their coupons.

Not only will you be eligible for the GRAND PRIZE of $250 A MONTH FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE, but you will also have a chance for other SUPER PRIZES in this once-in-a-lifetime SOCIAL SECURITY SUPER-SWEEPSTAKES DRAWING.

Listen to some of these other GRAND prizes.

A MONTH'S STAY in a PRIVATE room in the hospital of your choice, ALL MEDICAL EXPENSES PAID or $60,000 in CASH.

FOOD STAMPS FOR FIVE YEARS worth $20,000.

FREE HEATING FOR ONE YEAR worth $5,000.

A TWELVE MONTH VACATION IN A NURSING HOME WITH YOUR OWN ROCKER WORTH $30,000.

PLUS HUNDREDS OF OTHER VALUABLE MERCHANDISE including EYE GLASSES at a 50 percent DISCOUNT, PRESCRIPTION DRUGS AT COST, and a YEAR'S SUPPLY OF POLIDENT.

Now you understand, MRS. DALTON, why we want you to send in your SOCIAL SECURITY LUCKY NUMBER right now.

You are probably asking how we can afford all these unbelievable prizes at NO COST TO YOU.

The answer is that the SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION has a trust fund which was set up to take care of American senior citizens. The trust has decided the fairest way to distribute the money it has left in it is to hold a SWEEPSTAKES, making it possible for people who otherwise would get nothing from the system to win a SUPER PRIZE.

This is how the SWEEPSTAKES will work. On March 15th all the Social Security numbers that people like yourself sent in will be placed in a large silver bowl in the Rose Garden of the White House, and Miss America of 1983, in the presence of the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY, will draw the GRAND PRIZE WINNER — the person who will win $250 a month for the REST OF HIS OR HER LIFE. If you are the winner you will be flown by AIR FORCE ONE to WASHINGTON and PRESIDENT RONALD REAGAN will personally present you with your first SWEEPSTAKES SOCIAL SECURITY CHECK.

There is nothing to buy and a Social Security employee will not call on you. Consider this SWEEPSTAKES the U.S. GOVERNMENT'S way of taking care of its retired citizens who can now look forward to enjoying the September years of their lives, PROVIDING their LUCKY number is drawn.

No one has a better chance than you, MRS. DALTON, to win — so give your LUCK an opportunity to work for you. But you have to get your entry in NOW. The SOCIAL SECURITY CLEARING HOUSE may never have as much money to distribute amongst its winners again.

Two years not enough time for Reagan to achieve goals

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — The halfway mark of any presidential term — President Reagan was inaugurated two years ago Thursday — is a good time to take stock of past leadership and proposals for the future.

Hearst

In President Reagan's case this is not a simple matter, for two years is an extremely short time to achieve even half of what he had hoped to achieve. And in terms of halting the expansion of a bureaucracy that has been bulging like a balloon for half a century, even four years will not be enough in many instances.

A difficulty in looking to the future during this mid-January period is that the government is in a state of suspended animation, especially in the area of fiscal planning. The White House is in the process of preparing the next budget, but its details will not be known until the president, after listening to a flood of recommendations, delivers his budget message at the end of the month.

Despite these difficulties, a few observations can be made on both domestic and foreign policies at this point.

ONE IS THAT the president is continuing his efforts to keep the budget and the tax structure within control. To do that he has to strike a balance between what Americans can afford and what our government should do for our people.

A case in point is the defense budget. There is such a thing as letting it soar, but cutting it back so much the nation's security is in danger might be disastrous.

We were reminded of this the other day when Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger said he would recommend that the president reduce military spending by $8 billion in 1984. He said that would help to keep a projected $200 billion deficit within bounds.

That $8 billion figure is only about 3.3 percent of the total budget. That would suggest that Mr. Weinberger is correct in saying the slash would not eliminate any important weapons systems. That may be a case where we can have our cake and eat it too.

It is well known that the president has not been able to suddenly halt the growth of the budget. What is not so well known is that he has succeeded in many areas to slow the pace of that growth in the past two years and will do so in the next two.

Editor's Report

TO GET AN idea of the magnitude of the problem, all one has to do is take a look at a few budget figures. For instance, the 1980 federal budget was $576.7 billion. In 1982 it was $728 billion. We are told by experts that if it keeps on growing it soon will hit the one trillion dollar mark. To you and me, a trillion dollars is a mind-boggling figure.

Before it has an opportunity to boggle our minds let us hope the trend is curbed, and that is where Mr. Reagan comes in. A single event, or a single budget, is not as important as long-range planning. Our president has been trying for two years to do some trend-stopping planning, and I know he won't stop as he goes beyond his mid-term. We all should be behind him in that endeavor.

President Reagan is dispatching Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Shultz on key missions abroad. The vice president will visit seven Western allied capitals in Europe and the Vatican to confer on arms control proposals suggested by Soviet leader Yuri Andropov. At about the same time, toward the end of this month, Secretary Shultz will head for the People's Republic of China on a long-awaited trip. Though the secretary's recent trip to Europe was hailed as highly successful, the Soviet Union has since added pressure to its constant propaganda campaign aimed at trying to split the allies.

FOR THAT reason and to reassure NATO friends, the vice president will brief top government leaders and Pope John Paul II. He will also address the committee on disarmament in Geneva where our negotiating team has just been reshuffled. President Reagan dismissed Eugene V. Rostow as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and said that Secretary Shultz will have the principal role in coordinating the administration's arms control policies. As fine a public servant as Gene Rostow has been, the new chain of command makes better sense to me.

The president cited "encouraging words" from Andropov. He also observed that "moderate words are convincing when they're matched by moderate behavior." In that respect, Russia has never accepted the idea of on-site inspection of one another's nuclear facilities.

But the new Soviet leader has wasted little time concentrating attention on West Germany, preparing for March national elections, to try to sow the seeds of discord with the U.S. A large anti-nuclear protest movement exists within the Federal Republic of Germany — banned throughout the East bloc, by the way.

ANDROPOV HANKERS to promote a siren song of detente with West Germany whose conservative chancellor, huge Helmut Kohl, pledged to accept new Pershing missiles and is having second thoughts now as he confronts a blurry election picture. Vice President Bush will reiterate President Reagan's intention to negotiate seriously with the Russians if they really mean business on arms limitations. A summit meeting is an aspect of the reassurance.

There's also a great deal of relevance in the visit of Secretary Shultz to China. The Soviets, months before the death of Leonid Brezhnev, tried to win a propaganda campaign by having a high level meeting in Peking. The People's Republic of China was somewhat disgruntled over the U.S. administration's accommodations with Taiwan. So they, in effect, were playing their "Russian card."

But the Chinese recognized rather quickly that the U.S.S.R. wasn't about to come up with big loans and meaningful technology. The Russians spouted fanciful and flowery remarks about "cultural exchanges" and friendship. It ended there. The Chinese, more pragamatic than dogmatic, turned quietly back to American negotiators and began talking brass tacks. In his low-key but effective way, Secretary Shultz can smooth remaining Sino-U.S. differences. On his way back home, the secretary will stop over in Japan.

So while news from Washington has not made big headlines, you can see there is plenty of behind-the-scenes activity taking place. In fact there is never a dull or quiet moment for the president of the United States.

Abortion most critical issue facing U.S. today

By JULIE WEIS

Julie Weis moved to Midland two years ago from Indianapolis, Ind. She is a registered nurse. She serves as a local spokesperson for Birthright.

On Jan. 23, 1973, the United States Supreme Court ruled on the case of Roe vs. Wade, and thus legalized abortion. This Saturday we mark the 10th anniversary of the legalization of the senseless taking of human life.

Without a doubt, abortion has become the most emotional issue of politics and morality that faces our nation today.

In the first full year after abortion was legalized, there were 744,600 abortions performed in the United States. It is estimated that in 1982 approximately 1.65 million babies lost their lives. Right now upwards of one-third of all pregnancies in the United States end in abortion. More than 1.5 million teenagers became pregnant last year, and 38 percent of them elected to abort their babies. Imagine, if you can, a city the size of Houston being annihilated (at the rate of one person every 20 second for a year) and you will have some idea of the magnitude of this vast problem.

It is startling statistics like the ones mentioned above that have prompted more than 10 million Americans to become involved in the Pro-Life movement. One basic underlying belief is shared by those involved in the movement. We believe that human life begins at conception; therefore, the taking of that life is morally wrong. We are committed to do everything we can within our constitutional system to stop the killing of unborn children. Our ultimate goal is a Human Life Amendment to the Constitution that would reverse the Roe vs. Wade decision. Such a bill would extend full legal rights to a fetus from the moment of conception. Indeed, we are coming closer and closer to that goal. Such a bill was introduced in Congress last spring by Sen. Helms and Rep. Hyde. Unfortunately, but wisely so, they withdrew their bill because of its weakened condition. Everyone in the Right-to-Life Movement is hopeful that we will be more successful during the 1983 Congress.

Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun recently broke precedent and spoke out on the landmark 1973 decision. The court has received more mail concerning the abortion issue than any other ruling in its history and roughly 75 percent of that mail was opposed to their decision to legalize abortion.

Midland is extremely fortunate to have a chapter of Birthright as its Pro-Life agency. Birhright's motto is simple and clear:

— The right of every mother to give birth

— The right of every baby to be born

The original Birthright was "born" in 1968 in Toronto, Canada, by Louise Summerhill. She and her all-volunteer agency not only wanted to save babies from abortion, but they also wanted to save the mother from a lifetime of guilt and remorse.

Birthright has grown to include chapters all over the United States, Canada and parts of Europe and South Africa. Our local chapter of Birthright was established about four years ago. It was set up as a nonpolitical organization to offer a positive alternative to abortion.

Birthright is primarily a counseling service. All of our volunteers attend a variety of seminars and lectures that enable them to become productive listeners. Armed with these important skills, our volunteers are able to counsel any young woman (or not so young woman) who finds herself facing a problem pregnancy.

We are quite proud of the list of services we are able to offer residents of the city of Midland:

— Free pregnancy testing

— Personal counseling

— Information on medical and legal help

— Help in obtaining housing

— Information regarding adoption

— Transportation to and from the doctor's office

— Maternity clothes, cribs and layettes

The Birthright office is located at 805-A West Missouri Street. It is staffed Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. A telephone Hotline giving information about Birthright is available 24 hours a day by phoning 683-6072.

What can you do to defend the right to life?

1. Volunteer to work with your local pro-life agency.
2. Contribute financial aid.
3. Speak out on the issue.
4. Write your senators and other legislators.
5. Use your voting privilege.

Let's put aside the surveys, statistics, political positions and constitutional arguments and consider the basics. The one core issue here is that of human life. We must restore to our society a respect for the sanctity of the life of the unborn child. That can only be accomplished when we reverse our present abortion law.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

U.S. Jaycee week

To The Editor:

The week of Jan. 16-22, 1983, has been designated U.S. Jaycee Week across the nation in an effort to recognize the services being rendered by the Jaycees as well as the men who make up the organization.

The Midland Jayceettes, who serve as an auxiliary to the Midland Jaycees would like to encourage the public to celebrate this week with us. Our Jaycees do so much to serve the community and our community cares so much about the needs of her people that the working relationship between the two has really been beautiful.

Our Jaycees serve through labor in projects like Christmas In April, Labor Day rest stops, and timing at the West Texas regional swim meet. They raise money for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Christmas shopping spree, Jaycee campus and Muscular Dystrophy to name a few. The Midland Jaycees believe that part of building a strong future is in the building of strong leaders. With this belief they have worked to seek outstanding leaders in various fields of service to Midland.

Just last month, the Jaycees selected Bennie D. Cureton as Outstanding Young Law Enforcement Officer for 1982. They plan to select Outstanding Young Farmer and Outstanding Young Educator in the future in an effort to recognize these people's accomplishments and to make the public aware of the quality of service our community receives from her citizens.

In closing, the Midland Jaycees and the Midland Jayceettes would like to thank the businesses and the people of Midland for their continued support, both financial and moral. Let's work together for another good year of making Midland a great place to live.

Don't trust Soviets

To The Editor:

Many intellectuals and liberals are likely to begin another crusade for disarmament as a consequence of Mr. Andropov's latest proposals — proposals designed to bring about the demise of the USSR's most feared opponent, NATO. Divide and conquer has always been a useful tactic. However, as a rational being, I cannot bring myself to accept any offer made by the leader of a gang devoted to the wholesale looting of the productive citizens of his own country.

Can such a leader who has exhibited a total absence of respect for his own comrades and neighbors suddenly and conveniently acknowledge the rights of a nation — particularly a nation that his party openly despises and whose ruin has long been a party objective? Who has the most to gain or lose by war? Is it the Soviet citizen, who is stripped of dignity, respect, any sense of personal accomplishment and any right to private property, whose ultimate goal of existence is day-to-day survival or the capitalistic American who can take pride in individual accomplishment, has the right to own property and the freedom to spend his time and resources in whatever pursuits he wishes.

In the USSR the individual is considered to be "sacrificial fodder" for the good collective. Any atrocities are allowed so long as they can be justified on the cancerous, bankrupt moral principle, "the good of the whole."

Will our leaders succumb to the overtures of the man who invaded Czechoslovakia, directed the KGB, helped plot the invasion of Afghanistan, and tightened the noose with which an entire population is being slowly strangled? Let us make an effort to prevent this as I, for one, have no desire to be incinerated for the "good of the whole."

To defend oneself from such an aggressor is the right of the individual and our nation. We must remain steadfast in our defense and use all means to deter our adversary who has shown no limit to his ruthlessness.

Grateful ostomates

To The Editor:

On behalf of the hundreds of present and future ostomates in the Midland area, I would like to thank you for the two marvelous articles in the Jan. 3rd issue of The Reporter-Telegram. The pictures and story of the delightful child with a stoma to aid in the care of biliary atresia, as well as the Mark Linsalata column from San Antonio about ostemies in general are both tremendous.

We ostomates are grateful for every bit of enlightment the media helps give to the general public about our special kind of surgery. No other methods can so successfully help dispel the concerns and fears of those who may, for whatever reason, be faced with this procedure. Recently, on "Good Morning America," Rolf Benirschke calmly and casually told the world how much better off he is since having his ileostomy. By continuing to perform weekly as a place kicker for the San Diego Chargers' professional football team, he shows how strong and capable he remains. This is a marvelous demonstration to all who see and hear him.

The Midland-Odessa Chapter of the United Ostomy Association is extremely interested in the spread of such information. In addition, we have a group of trained visitors on whom local physicians may call. We are not professional people, except in rare instances, but often the counsel of one "who has been there" can be marvelous therapy for a prospective or new ostomy patient. We can demonstrate in person that health is regained, that activities are in no way impaired, that clothing is attractive and unchanged from pre-ostomy times. Our main purpose is to help every ostomy patient return to normal living through mutual aid and moral support.

Unfortunately, our area does not have an enterostomal therapist (E.T.); and R.N. specially trained in both the physical and psychological care of people who have ostomies. Ostomates here must, and do, go to Lubbock, San Angelo, Dallas and Scott and White for this type of help. One of the top priorities of the Midland-Odessa chapter is to obtain an E.T.

June McNatt, President
Midland-Odessa Chapter, U.O.A.

Caring people

To The Editor:

On Jan. 6, 1983, during the afternoon traffic rush on Wall Street, a small shaggy black dog ran into the traffic. Immediately she was struck by an oncoming car.

A nice lady stopped and dragged the injured dog to the gutter. She left and I was notified of the injured animal. Immediately I called Animal Control and gave them the location of the animal.

I went to the location to see if I could be of any help. Arriving at the scene, I found the dog had been moved up on the curb. A man was kneeling over her, his hand was on her heart.

He told me he was passing by and saw her thrashing around in the gutter. He stopped to help her. He said he was going to take her to the vet. However, by now she was dead.

All of this happened in less than five minutes. I told him Animal Control was on their way and I would wait for them. While I waited, it couldn't have been another five minutes, a young man rushed from across the street asking if he could help, a construction worker paused from his duties on some nearby construction, offered to help and a man just walking by stopped and offered to help.

Oh how it warms my heart to see so many wonderful caring people who will stop in their busy schedules and offer to help a small dying creature. I feel she knew before she died that so many came to help! I appreciate the good people of Midland and also our wonderful Animal Control. These people really do us a good job!

Before this letter was mailed another animal was hit on Wall Street. Her death was very slow and painful. Wall Street is not a race track. We need to slow down! It hasn't been too long ago that a small child was struck on Wall Street and died! Please drive with care everywhere!

Constructive anger

To The Editor:

Nothing matches the sheer anger and resentment felt by someone who finds his home or automobile burglarized. Unfortunately, that desire to see the responsible party's head on a chopping block leaves after too short a time.

A couple of months ago, when getting in my car to go to work, I realized it had been burglarized, and I had lost over $400 worth of goodies to someone who probably was not going to work that day as I was.

The only thing to do was to call the Midland Police Department. In about 20 minutes, I was greeted by a policeman who had the enthusiasm and motivation comparable of a rental horse. It was obvious that to the policeman this was a routine and hopeless situation. Had I not pointed it out to him, the officer would have left the scene without even knowing the method of entry.

Later that day, I visited the Midland Police Department and spoke with Captain Billy Ray, who made a much better impression than the investigating officer. It's shocking to discover the number of car, home, and business burglaries occurring in Midland each month. It's even more alarming when we look at the rise in crime this year over last year. Here are some facts:

In September, October and November of 1982 there were 650 burglaries. More than two-thirds of these were auto and residence burglaries. Over the same period last year, there were 348 burglaries. Burglaries are up 87 percent — that's almost double!

I think the citizens of Midland should be more aware of what's happening in their community.

The problem here is a lagging economy and a large number of transients, a seemingly understaffed and underfunded police department, and a bleeding heart criminal justice system. The fact is nothing will change until an aware and concerned working public gets involved.

Just last week my car was broken into again, but this time there was nothing left to steal. After being the target of two burglaries in two months, I feel as though I am an authority on the subject, and therefore I am offering this advice to anyone concerned with keeping his property.

When we read stories about someone being sued or imprisoned for protecting his or her property with a firearm, we should raise hell. When we report a burglary and the investigating officer doesn't do his job satisfactorily, we should raise more hell. And if we catch someone in the act of violating our property we should really raise lots and lots of on the spot hell.

I firmly believe that with awareness and community involvement, crime could be brought under control. Then everyone, including insurance companies will sleep much better.

Many Texans just waiting for White, legislators to make mistakes

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

AUSTIN — "Poor Mark White," remarked one long-time observer of the Legislature as lawmakers prepared to convene. "I feel sorry for him."

Why? inquired a reporter, suspecting the remark was in preparation for some elaborate piece of sarcasm.

After all, Mark White is being sworn in as governor, which he says has been his life-long ambition, having won that right in a contest which few political experts had thought he could win.

Most people would think White is in an enviable position — someone who has been blessed with good fortune.

And the odds are that White also would regard himself as someone who is far from needing to be pitied.

But, the observer noted, "he's got so many people just waiting for him to make a mistake."

Indeed, that is true for White, as it is true for all politicians.

And the 1983 Legislature will provide plenty of chances for politicians to make mistakes.

In reviewing the prospects for the session, it's somewhat difficult not to feel a little sorry for the entire Legislature and executive branch, because some difficult decisions will have to be made.

Most of those decisions will involve money.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, less than one day before lawmakers began the new session, announced he was cutting his September estimate of state revenues by $1.5 billion for the remainder of fiscal 1983, and for fiscal 1984 and 1985.

That means the $1 billion proposed spending bill prepared by the Legislative Budget Board for the new biennium is $700 million over what Bullock says will be available — and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby already had said, before the new figures came out, that the budget really didn't cover all the needs which should be met.

Those new figures also mean, as Bullock noted, that lawmakers can either reduce spending to meet the estimated revenue, increase taxes to raise enough money to meet the needs they feel must be funded, or vote (by a four-fifths margin) to override his estimate.

When asked how he felt about the situation as far as the Legislature and Legislative Budget Board were concerned, Bullock replied, "I feel sorry for them."

And despite Bullock's reputation (a well-earned one) for being a master of the verbal tongue lashing and sardonic quip, there's really no reason to think that Bullock isn't sorry to hit lawmakers with a massive bit of bad news.

Bullock candidly admits he intends to run for governor in 1986, and says he expects to win.

But, Bullock says, he also plans to work closely with White, commenting that White is his governor, just as White is governor of everyone else in Texas.

And, Bullock says, while he's a politician, and while he's ambitious, he's also a Texan who loves his state and wants Texas to prosper.

It would be hard, really, to find any state officials who don't want Texas to prosper, although it would be equally hard to find any agreement on what is the best way to achieve that prosperity — at least when one begins to talk about details.

Lyndon Johnson once remarked that it's easier to do what's right than it is to know what's right — and that's the sort of dilemma the Legislature will be facing on spending and other issues.

Lawmakers come in for a great deal of criticism, and much of it is deserved.

But as they start their 1983 session, it might be well to have things somewhat in perspective.

Few lawmakers are ever likely to be candidates for sainthood, but neither do they have forked tails and horns.

Some aren't very good at their jobs, but some are — and most really put in a pretty decent attempt to deal with some complex issues, which are difficult even to understand, let alone resolve.

And considering what they're paid, and the hours they put in, in many instances the state of Texas is really getting a bargain.

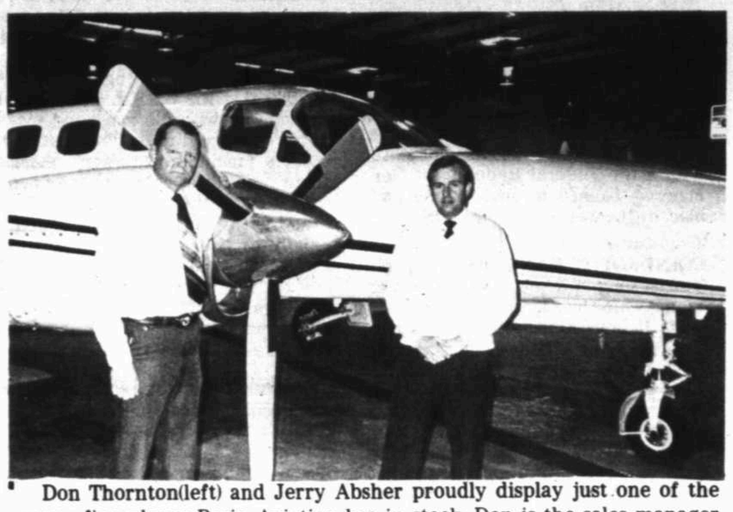

That's not to say that the system is perfect — some of its imperfections are glaring and in need of reform, but that's true of anything mankind has ever devised.

Admittedly, lawmakers should know they're going to be showered with brickbats as well as roses from time to time, but it's to be hoped that whatever's aimed at them will be deserved.

The funding crunch that lawmakers are facing will result in a lot of brickbats or roses being tossed, and it's a little hard to keep from feeling sorry for everybody involved.

Don Thornton(left) and Jerry Absher proudly display just one of the many fine planes Basin Aviation has in stock. Don is the sales manager and makes sure that you are getting the plane perfectly suited to your needs at the best price, while Jerry, as aviation dept. manager, assures that it is properly maintained and cared for, with only the best quality service. Baisn is the full service dealer for West Texas and New Mexico.

Basin Offers Uncompromising Quality

What do you think of when you hear the words "full service?" If you are like most people, the words more or less just pass right through your mind without much, if any, real thought. But when it comes right down to it, anyone who can truthfully claim to be "full service" has a distinct advantage over his competitors. In the society of the twentieth century and beyond, everything has gone to self-service or self-selection to the point that it is very hard to find a full service company anymore, one that will really do anything possible to satisfy you, the customer. Basin Aviation is that company.

Basin Aviation is the full-line Cessna dealer for West Texas and New Mexico, carrying everything from single engine to propjet to meet any need. They carry the airplanes in stock so that the customer may actually see and fly the plane before the purchase. Basin has an inventory of over $5 million new and used aircraft ready for customer selection and purchase. They have one of the most complete facilities around, with factory-trained technicians to maintain and service the aircraft that they sell. Knowledgeable personnel are also on hand to assist you in the decision of which plane would be best suited for your needs. Only a full service dealer could offer this complete package of benefits especially for you.

In addition to the fantastic selection of new and used aircraft and excellent service, Basin Aviation also offers full service charter branch. Basin Aviation's charter service is a 24 hour/day "on demand" charter service designed to give you the best service possible. Any size airplane, single engine through turboprop, may be chartered, with all charter flights catered and every step taken to assure you of the smoothest, quietest, and best charter flight you have ever taken. If you need to go somewhere fast, but don't have the time or patience you need to fly commercially; or if your destination is too far from a large commercial airport, remeber that a charter flight is much more personal, much easier to get work done on the flight, much more relaxing, and most of all, a small plane that you charter may fly to over 14,000 airports that a commercial flight cannot land! How's that for service!

Basin also offers other services besides their selling and chartering. If you need air ambulance, freight delivery, or emergency part delivery anywhere in the United States, you can count on Basin Aviation to get the job done right the first time. They also offer a full flight school, with any training from private pilot to commercial pilot available. The next ground school begins later this month. Call Basin Aviation for details

But now for the best part. For you skiers, Basin Aviation is offering an exciting weekend in Purgatory! The weekend oF January 20-23, you can get a catered flight directly to and from Durango, Colorado; lodging in deluxe condominiums, with kitchens, phones, and color television; 3-day lift tickets at Purgatory; and ground transportation to and from the airport. The lodging is located only 100 yards from the ski lift, and includes a pool and jacuzzi and locked ski storage. This does not include meals, ski rental, or any unscheduled delays. Hurry and call today — reservations are limited! Who else but a full service company could, or would, offer you such an exciting weekend for so little!

Next time you hear "full service" floating around, take a look and see if it really is a full service company. No matter how hard you look, you won't find a better airplane company than Basin Aviation. They service what they sell with factory trained technicians, sell only the best, and offer a complete line of other exciting and vital services as weH. So next time you need an airplane, a charter plane, or any service related to an airplane, call on the P1 dealer in Texas, Basin Aviation. They want to make you proud to say," I did my dealing through Basin Aviation!"

Continental Covers Texas

With the recent snow, many around Midland and surrounding areas have found that their roof could use just a slight bit of repair. If you have not made a close inspection of your house since the snow, perhaps today would be the best time to take a few minutes to walk around the house and look at your ceiling. If there are any water spots, no matter how small, you should definitely consider an inspection, and if needed, a repair or re-roof before the situation gets out of hand. If you find yourself wondering how much longer your roof will hold up, call on the professionals at Continental Roofing.

Continental Roofing is a family-owned and operated business, with over 10 years experience in the roofing industry. They have over 45 full-time, experienced workers, each dedicated to doing the best job possible at a reasonable price. With a family owned business, you know that you get the personal supervision and concern needed to please each and every customer. They know that a roof is a significant investment and must last and last, be it a new roof or a re-roofing job.

Continental roofing gives the customer a full service job, leaving nothing to outside sub-contractors. This also assures the customer that the job is done right the first time, with personal supervision and genuine concern for each job. This also cuts out the unnecessary added cost that is incurred with a sub-contractor. Dan Marcisz personally oversees the sheet metal shop, Duke Sutter is the labor foreman, and A. Greg Ybarra is the overall supervisor when owner Larry Neverkovec and his wife Cindy are gone. The complete job is personally supervised from start to finish to give you a job well every time. You can depend on it!

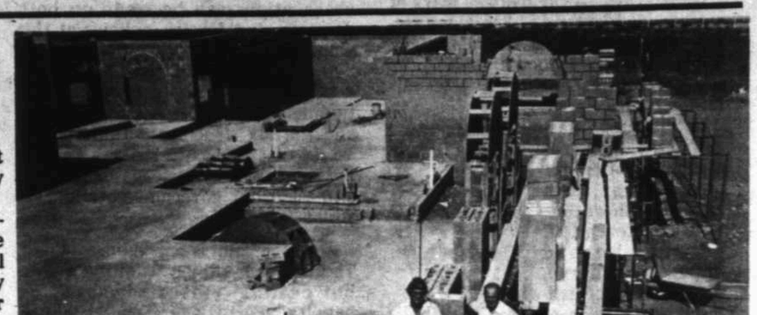

And if you have a large project currently underway or coming up in the near future, don't sweat it! Continental Roofing can handle any size job. They have currently under contract or recently completed many of Midland's finest residences, both single family and commercial. Those prospective customers who would like to see the quality work of Continental Roofing may drive by Wildflower Apartments, Sagewood Condominiums, Willowtree Condiminiums, La Quinta Inn, and many other and many other fine projects with the Continental Roofing sign displayed.

Continental Roofing is definitely not limited to any single type roof either. They will do residential, commercial, or industrial roofing in any style, from ordinary to unique. They are a Manufacturer's Approved Applicator for Lifetile. They specialize in hot tar roofing, as well as Monterrey Roofing Tile.

If you need either a new roof, or a repair of your roof, you know how important it is to you that you find someone who will do the job right the first time. Look no further. Continental Roofing covers Texas, with new branches opening in Lubbock and Amarillo. With that type success, you know you have found someone you can trust. They offer a two year warranty on workmanship, as well as a conditional guarantee on materials. Featherlite Builds Texas

Featherlite Block Company, the largest distributor of lightweight concrete block and quality clay brick in the Permian Basin, introduces to cost-conscious West Texas consumers a new way to build your home or business to the maximum efficiency, Korfil II. Korfil II is a lightweight concrete block with an expanded polystyrene insert stuffed into the core of the block at the plant. Walker & Walker Masonry of Odessa, pictured above, has a unique application for the new Korfil II. The walls of the house are two 8-inch Korfil block layered side-by-side, giving the house a 16-inch insulated block wall. Not only does this application provide an extremely efficient insulating quality(the u-value is .07,R-value is 14.29), but it also has sound absorbing qualities, fast and economical construction, extremely low maintenance, low fire insurance premium rating, and structural integrity unsurpassed by any material used for home building.

All of our brick and block are the prime choice of most Permian Basin contractors. Besides Walker & Walker, some of the other area contractors who have chosen FeatherHte's superior products and services are J.W. Cooper Construction, Lewis & Guy Masonry, Gerald Higdon Masonry, Cliff Rowe Construction, Tall City Masonry, and Sid Cox Masonry. Numerous other contractors have chosen Featherlite as THE company they can trust to supply them with quality materials and services. After all, a contractor's work not only depends on the quality of his skill and craftsmanship, but also on the quality of the products and materials he uses to perform his work. That is just one reason why so many contractors go with Feathrelite.

Featherlite offers one of the largest selections of brick in the Permian Basin, serving as distributor for Henderson Clay Products, Brazos Brick, Athens Brick, Payne Brick, Texas Clay Products, and Bricks Incorporated. In addition, Featherlite manufactures its own Mission Stone, concrete brick, Spectra-Glaze, Premium Yield Stucco, and architectural and structural precast concrete.

Featherlite is located at the corner of Midkiff and Industrial in Midland and may be reached at 563-0570. They have been serving the Permian Basin for over thirty years, and they are well acquainted with the needs and wants of West Texans. Ken Dodson, Bill Reese, and Tony Olague will be happy to assist you with your concrete block and brick needs, just give them a call. And remember, the quality of your building can only be as good as the quality of the block it is built with.

Texas banks scramble for brokerage licenses

AUSTIN — Banks in Texas are moving rapidly to offer discount brokerage services, Securities Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports.

Latham says over 400 applications for broker/dealer licenses have been filed with the State Securities Board by banks, with several licenses already issued.

The State Securities Board is in the process of changing requirements for banks and bank officials which are offering such services, with a proposed regulation approved earlier this year for publication.

In order for banks to be licensed, Latham says, "basically, they will have to submit an application and plan of business, and go through the registration process just as any other applicant for a broker/dealer license."

Several banks have begun offering such services using correspondent banks, but many now are "looking at dealing with customers directly," Latham says.

"In order to do that, we believe they need to be registered as a broker dealer, he reports.

Banks seeking to be licensed "covers the spectrum" from large holding company banks in urban areas to small independent rural banks, Latham reports.

The Securities Board also is proposing a change in its regulations on money market funds, an "extremely technical" amendment which Latham says is intended to cover a few funds considered to be money market funds but which have "some instruments with floating rates which go up and down."

The change, he says, "is to accommodate the industry and to get in line with the generally accepted concept of what a money market fund is..."

In one of his final opinions as Attorney General, Mark White ruled State-chartered credit unions are authorized to issue debt securities.

White also ruled that such securities "may be sold to the general public as well as to credit union members."

While such securities are exempt from the registration and licensing requirements of the Texas Securities Act, They aren't exempt from the anti-fraud provisions of that act, White wrote.

The credit union commissioner has the authority to regulate such securities, although no regulations dealing specifically with such securities have been issued.

In making the ruling, White said that the Credit Union Act gives credit unions authority to "borrow money from any source," and contains "no indication that incurring debt through the sale of bonds is not included in the general borrowing power."

Since such borrowing isn't restricted, the bonds may be offered to the general public.

Air Control Board officials are awaiting word from the Federal Environmental Protection Agency on possible sanctions against 12 Texas counties which EPA has listed as failing to meet Federal air quality standards.

Brazoria, Cameron, Dallas, El Paso, Galveston, Gregg, Harris, Jefferson, Nueces, Orange, Tarrant and Victoria were listed in December as not being in compliance, but the ACE feels that additional air quality monitoring data, plus implement of control efforts at the end of the year, may bring at least some of those counties into compliance.

EPA is expected to publish decisions on any possible sanctions — such as loss of Federal construction funds — around mid-year, after states have had an opportunity to comment on the proposed actions.

ACB Executive Director Bill Stewart notes that Congress failed last session to amend the Federal Clear Air Act, as had been expected, leaving states in uncertainty as to what actions to take on some of their own air quality efforts.

Several areas in Texas — including Bexar, Ector, McLennan and Travis counties — which had been designated initially as failing to meet certain of the standards managed to come into compliance before the end of 1982.

The Department of Water Resources will hold a hearing at 9 a.m. Jan. 28 in Room 118, Stephen F. Austin State Office Building, Austin, for public comment on proposed rules for permitting industrial waste disposal facilities.

In addition to land facilities, the hearing will cover incineration disposal. An official for DWR reports the rules are intended to update some existing provisions, partly due to changes in Federal requirements which were made last summer.

The proposals basically track the Federal requirements, the official said.

Corporate Moses walks brutal valley of crisis management

By The Los Angeles Times—
Washington Post News Service

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Sanford C. Sigoloff, the corporate Moses who is trying to lead Wickes Cos. Inc. back to the land of profits, chose a tough course for his company 10 months ago.

The $4 billion retail chain, headquartered here, was $2 billion in debt. Interest rates were rising. Creditor confidence in Wickes' ability to pay was falling. Suppliers were cutting the company off, creating a merchandise shortage that aggravated the shortage of customers and cash.

"We were going straight into dissolution," Sigoloff said. So, the Wickes chairman said he chose another path — escape through the brutal "valley of crisis management," a journey he hopes to complete by the end of this year.

Going through the valley means going through U.S. courts — asking protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal Bankruptcy Act of 1978. Wickes filed its petition last April 24 and thus became the largest company to seek protection under the act.

The Wickes case is instructive as an example of the tribulations and triumphs of Chapter 11 companies, and as a study of how they came to the valley in the first place. The case also provides some insights into other troubles those companies might face if Congress moves too slowly to revise what the Supreme Court says are unconstitutional portions of the current law.

CHAPTER 11 IS designed to stay collection of prior debts until the debtor has had a chance to reform past costly behavior. Correction often involves shutting or selling unprofitable divisions, cutting or freezing salaries and benefits and firing workers and managers.

An estimated 14,696 U.S. companies filed under the code in the year ended June 30, 1982, compared with 7,814 Chapter 11 companies the previous year, according to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Chapter 11 and other bankruptcy cases increased mostly because of the current recession, which is "three to eight times longer than the prior six recessions since World War II, and nine times as erratic", Sigoloff said. But he said American management — marked by a ruinous passion for the quick-fix and inflation-driven quarterly profits — was another big factor.

"Top managers in most of the country's businesses have grown up and have been successful in inflationary economies. But they haven't been trained to succeed in an economy where production costs outstrip prices that are held down by increased foreign competition, weak domestic markets and idle domestic-plant capacity," Sigoloff said.

AS A RESULT, MANY companies find themselves in a weakened cash-flow position, which they try to improve by borrowing and buying. "They panic," the Wickes chairman said.

"Conditions continue to worsen. Sales keep going down. Pretty soon, they're in a position where they don't have enough money to cover interest costs. From there, they slide into dissolution or go into the 'valley of crisis management,'" Sigoloff said.

Sigoloff has led Chapter 11 companies through the valley twice before, once as chief executive officer of Los Angeles-based Republic Corp., and again as president and chairman of Daylin Inc.

Both companies reached the land of profits. But several years after its salvation in 1976, former Los Angeles-based Daylin disappeared into the conglomerate embrace of New York-based W. R. Grace Co.

WICKES DIRECTORS, impressed by that record, called Sigoloff to his present duties last March. There were soon four high-level firings as Sigoloff took up the reins.

"This is the first time I've had to bring in a whole new team" in an attempt to return a company to prosperity, Sigoloff said. "Most times, it's a matter of keeping the people already on hand and giving them the right instructions. But in the case of Wickes, we had early retirements, and we lost all of the people who wouldn't work seven days a week," he said.

Sigoloff immediately set up crisis teams, who worked long hours ferreting out problems, such as "bleeders" — divisions losing too much money too fast to stem the flow or replace the losses with more infusions of cash.

It was a matter of "identifying those problems posing immediate threats to our life and separating them from problems we could live with for a while," Sigoloff said.

The biggest difficulty stemmed from Wickes' 1980 purchase of Gamble-Skogmo Inc., a Minneapolis-based general merchandiser, according to Sigoloff and other Wickes managers. Wickes paid $136 million and swapped some stock to get G-S, then sold $110 million worth of G-S properties to help support the purchase.

THE STRATEGY WAS to use as much of the G-S acquisition as possible to help boost Wickes' retail operations. But Wickes, already burdened with huge losses and debts, inherited another $794 million in short- and long-term obligations in its purchase of the Minneapolis company.

That, coupled with subsequent "mistakes" in attempts to raise additional capital, proved to be Wickes' undoing, said Jeff Chanin, a former bankruptcy lawyer who is now Wickes' senior vice president for operations.

"The failure to use the acquisition properly was nothing more, nor less, than the failure to execute," Chanin said. "Prior management had what they viewed as an excellent vehicle for redirection in the G-S acquisition. But they failed to make the tough decisions needed to reduce the enormous debts they incurred. At the same time interest rates were soaring," Chanin said.

Sigoloff and Chanin said "prior managements' failure" to take that look created "a panic situation" last February, in which all of Wickes' assets were put on the block. The company's 44 major bankers, already nervous, were shocked by the move. Jittery suppliers stopped shipping, "because no one knew how long the company would be around," Sigoloff said.

"NONE OF THAT DID anything to increase creditor or consumer confidence," Sigoloff said. And without the confidence of creditors, a financially distressed company is cut off from a critical source of sustenance, he said.

Regaining that confidence entailed cutting payrolls, from 40,000 Wickes employees worldwide at the time of Sigoloff's arrival last year to about 27,000 today.

And it involved face-to-face meetings, such as those with managers of Chicago-based Aldens Inc., a G-S catalog-sales subsidiary, to tell them they no longer had jobs.

New IRS Penalties

By Terry Zelin

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA) made changes in the area of taxpayer penalties. TEFRA changed penalties for failure to file a tax return, substantial underpayment of tax, "abusive" tax shelters, "frivolous" returns, and failure to furnish identifying numbers.

The new law adds a minimum penalty for an extended failure to file a tax return. TEFRA states, if an income tax return is not filed within 60 days of the due date (with extensions), the penalty is the lesser of $100 or the amount of tax due. Prior to TEFRA, the penalty was 5 percent of the tax due per each month up to a maximum of 25 percent. In addition, interest due on the amount of tax payable is now compounded daily for interest accruing after December 31, 1982.

TEFRA provides a penalty when a taxpayer substantially understates the correct income tax liability, as determined by the IRS and/or the courts. The penalty is 10 percent of the difference of the correct tax liability and the tax reported on the taxpayer's return if his understatement exceeds both 10 percent of the correct tax and $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of a corporation other than a Subchapter S corporation or a personal holding company). The purpose of this penalty is to reduce the attractiveness of "agressive tax planning." Before TEFRA if a taxpayer took a somewhat agressive position on his tax return the only costs of the Internal Revenue Service's nonacceptance was the additional tax plus interest. Most taxpayers do not mind borrowing from the Government at prime or less. However, when you add the penalty (nondeductible) to the costs of losing, the economic attractiveness of being extremely agressive is no longer present.

TEFRA instituted a penalty for promoting "abusive" tax shelters. The penalty can be imposed on any person who organizes, assists, or participates in the sale of any partnership or any other investment arrangement when that person makes either a material statement that the person knows is false about the availability of tax benefits to investors, or overstates the value of any item by more than 200 percent. The person promoting such activities can incur a penalty equal to the greater of $1000 or 10 percent of the activity's current and future gross income.

TEFRA also provides for a flat $500 penalty for any taxpayer who files a "frivolous" return that does not contain information from which a correct tax liability can be determined, or the return on its face is substantially incorrect because the taxpayer's conduct was a frivolous position or intended to delay administration of the tax law. Examples of "frivolous" positions are discounting U.S. dollars since the country is off the gold standard or reducing taxes so as not to support the Defense Department.

Of significance to the business sector is the increase in penalties for failure to supply taxpayur identification numbers. TEFRA imposes a $50 per failure (up from $5 prior law) up to a yearly maximum of $50,000. For instance, if a partnership fails to include taxpayer identification numbers for its one hundred partners, then the partnership could incur a penalty of $5,000.

Any person who aids, assists, or advises with respect to any document connected with any matter arising under the Internal Revenue laws and knows that an understatement of tax will result from such advice or assistance will also be subjected to a penalty. The penalty is $1000 for each document unless such document relates to a corporate tax liability in which case it is $10,000. Since the penalty is per tax document, if you have a partnership with 1,000 partners, the penalty could be $1 million dollars. This penalty provision applies even if the advice was "free".

In summary, TEFRA is going to lend the IRS more support in their goal of greater taxpayer compliance with the tax laws. More than ever the taxpayer must research business deals for realistic tax benefits, and insure adequate disclosure of all information in his tax return.

Direct response advertising season here

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Having endured the season to be jolly, we now find ourselves in the season of direct-response advertising.

'Tis the season for early evening TV pitches for newspaper and magazine subscriptions, record albums that cannot be bought in stores, and for wonderful machines that slice, grate, filet and peel and never need sharpening and never wear out. There are knitting and weaving machines that magically produce unlimited varieties of doilies, scarves and sweaters, and pots and pans with bottoms so slick that burned beans can never gain a foothold. The list is nearly endless.

"You can sell almost anything" with direct-response advertising, says Iris Shokoff, a media director at New York-based Grey Advertising's direct-response department. Normally, however, you have to wait until after the 11 p.m. news or the wee hours of the morning to be assaulted by these offers.

January, for reasons on which there is lots of speculation but little substantive knowledge, is the best month of the year for this sort of promotion, advertisers say, and that is why you see these ads on network television interspersed with the early evening news and other near-prime or "early fringe" slots.

Early fringe, explains Jeff Danowitz, senior vice president in charge of direct response advertising at Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne in New York, is that period extending from the end of the afternoon soap operas at about 3:30 through the early evening news at about 6 p.m.

THE SEASONAL cornucopia of class as well as schlock merchandise pours forth not only on TV, but into newspapers, magazines and into your mailbox as well. Direct response advertising, as the name implies, demands a different response than going to a store or dealership and buying the product. TV ads usually display an 800 telephone number that the viewer calls to order the product COD or prepaid or to express interest. The latter type of advertising is called "lead generation." A salesperson then calls or the company sends literature.

The TV season, says Shokoff, actually begins the week after Christmas and extends through the third week of March. The second-best season, she adds, starts the last week of June and runs through mid-September.

Those are bargain basement times for advertisers. Advertising volume drops during the post-holiday lull when toy and other Christmas advertisers have made their appeals, and later in the year, when the late summer doldrums have set in.

Time Inc., for example, has been running 120-second spots in the early evening and other hours to extend circulation bases of its magazines and books. Shokoff says a two-minute spot on national television costs as little as a 30-second spot at other times of the year. "You can get up to 45 percent off national rates," during those times, says Danowitz. The longer duration of the spot, he notes, allows viewers to write phone numbers and for the advertiser to make additional points in the sales pitch.

The newspaper business is slightly different. Most newspapers carry inventories of what is called "remnant" advertising for the same sorts of items that are often promoted on TV. This advertising gets into papers when a full-rate ad such as might be placed by General Motors Corp. or Sears, Roebuck and Co. drops out for one reason or another. The substitute ad pays a much lower rate, but as one advertising manager points out, "Once that space is gone, it's gone forever."

WHEN THE AD appears in magazines, newspapers or in mailers dropped into your mailbox, the invited response is to clip the coupon in the ad and send a check or credit card number. A newspaper ad for a bed lamp whose slim base slips between the covers of a book, making it possible to read at night without disturbing your bed partner, combines opportunities for response by including an 800 phone number as well as a coupon that you send to Barnes & Noble Bookstores in New York, along with your check for $29.95 plus $1.95 postage.

Actually, although direct-response advertising on early fringe television is highly visible, TV captures only a small proportion of the total spent on that method of advertising. It accounted for only $295 million in 1981, up from $253 million in 1980, said the Direct Marketing Association, a New York trade group. By contrast, advertisers spent $10.6 billion on direct mail last year, including catalogs, up from $10 billion a year earlier. Newspapers received $2.4 billion in 1981 against $2.1 billion the previous year.

Al Vova, general sales manager at WVIT, the Hartford, Conn., NBC affiliate, says rates are lowest in January and February and viewing is highest, averaging 8 hours, 20 minutes a day per household in those months. Yet a 30-second spot during those times will sell for as low as $40 against a high of $1,300, and 60-second spots go for $80 compared with a high of $2,000.

Of course, advertisers give up some options in order to qualify for their lower rates. "All the time is bought on a pre-emptive basis," says Danowitz, which means that advertisers buy their time on a standby footing. "We get what's left over; we'll take anything from Monday through Sunday, anytime between 3:30 and 6 p.m."

It boils down to a matter of economic alternatives, on both sides. As in the case of newspapers, the time slots for TV advertising, once lost, are never regained, so the unused time or space is sold for whatever price it will bring. And for advertisers, there is always the option of direct mail or other advertising.

DIRECT MAIL costs are high as well, points out Michael Moore, senior vice president, client services, for Chapman Direct, an affiliate of Young & Rubicam Advertising in New York. The affiliate generates about $20 million of revenues annually from direct response advertising from such clients as IBM, Merrill Lynch, Chase Manhattan Bank, Metropolitan Life, New York Telephone and the U.S. Postal Service itself.

"The cost of third-class postage alone is $109 to reach an audience of 1,000," he says. "By the time you add the envelope, letter or card, the cost is a minimum $200 and can go to $500." With the help of carefully culled mailing lists or other means, however, a mail audience can be more accurately targeted.

The overriding consideration is to get the most sales at the lowest cost per unit. Cletus Pride, director of promotions for National Geographic, says he uses the medium on television's three major networks to help recapture the 20 percent of subscribers who do not renew each year. "But you have to keep the cost of the order to less than half" the $15 subscription price for the magazine, he says. So far, he has been able to keep those costs within that limit.

Specific costs for TV time are hard to determine. Advertisers say the deal with each station varies according to the station's available time and its eagerness to sell it. "There's a lot of horse trading," Pride says.

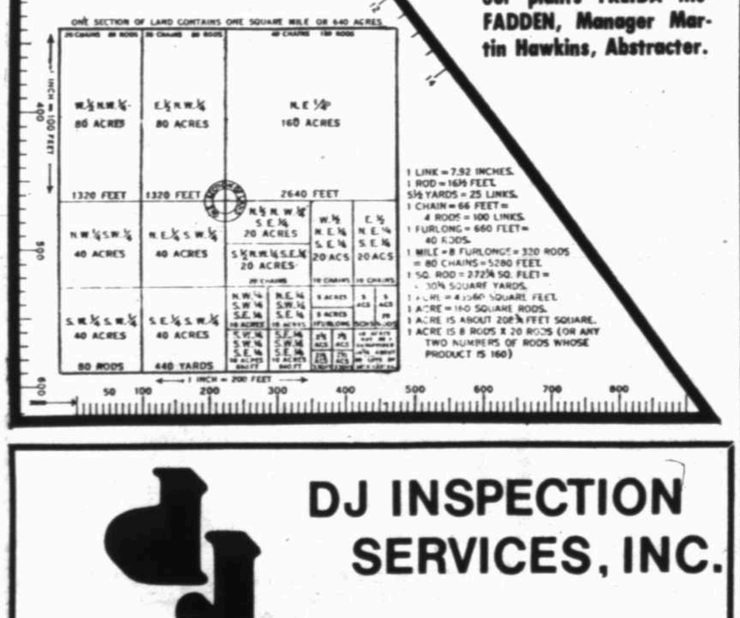

But another consideration that a lot of advertisers worry about creeps in: image. Does National Geographic, which regards itself as a class product, want its direct response ads to run back to back with one advertising "genuine" diamond rings or a $19.95 "gold" chain that its sponsors claim is indistinguishable from the genuine item, costing more than $4,000? "We've agonized over that," he says. "It's a bad neighborhood." But the rent is so low, he figures, that the risk is worth it.
