Comet produces fireball

Impact with Jupiter is bright, astronomer says

■ Comet's collision with Jupiter is seen by telescopes in Chile and Spain.

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The first fragment from comet Shoemaker-Levy 9 smashed into Jupiter on schedule Saturday, raising a plume of heat and clouds and leaving the planet scarred with a black dot about half the size of Earth.

Observatories in Chile and Spain and the orbiting Hubble Space Telescope captured views of a fireball and rising plume of hot gas that experts estimated at 1,200 miles wide.

"It's brighter than Io (a moon of Jupiter)," exclaimed co-discoverer Eugene Shoemaker. "I mean, it's bright."

Shoemaker and his fellow discovers — wife Carolyn Shoemaker and David Levy — received early data by computer from observatories around the globe and expressed glee time after time as the initial reports started arriving.

A Hubble Space Telescope image of Jupiter showed a dark spot, estimated at about half the diameter of the Earth in size, at the site where the comet fragment hit. The impact was hidden from Earth, but the site rotated into view within minutes. The Hubble also detected a plume rising above the horizon of Jupiter very shortly after the impact.

"It produced a fireball like that which was predicted," said Hal Weaver of the Space Telescope Science Institute. "That means the energy was 200,000 mega

Honoring Apollo 11

NASA marks 25 years after 'giant leap for mankind'

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA celebrated the 25th anniversary of Apollo 11's liftoff on Saturday with a countdown replay, with the launch of four model rockets, and without the crew.

Apollo 11 astronauts declined to attend the morning ceremony and sent regrets for a commemorative dinner. (All three attended the 20th anniversary launch ceremony.)

So instead of the first two men to walk on the moon — Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin — and their fellow crewman Michael Collins, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration settled for the last man on the moon and one who lost his chance to walk on the lunar surface because of an accident en route.

"It's their decision. I respect it. But I wish they were here," said Brent Wynn, who helped launch the model rockets.

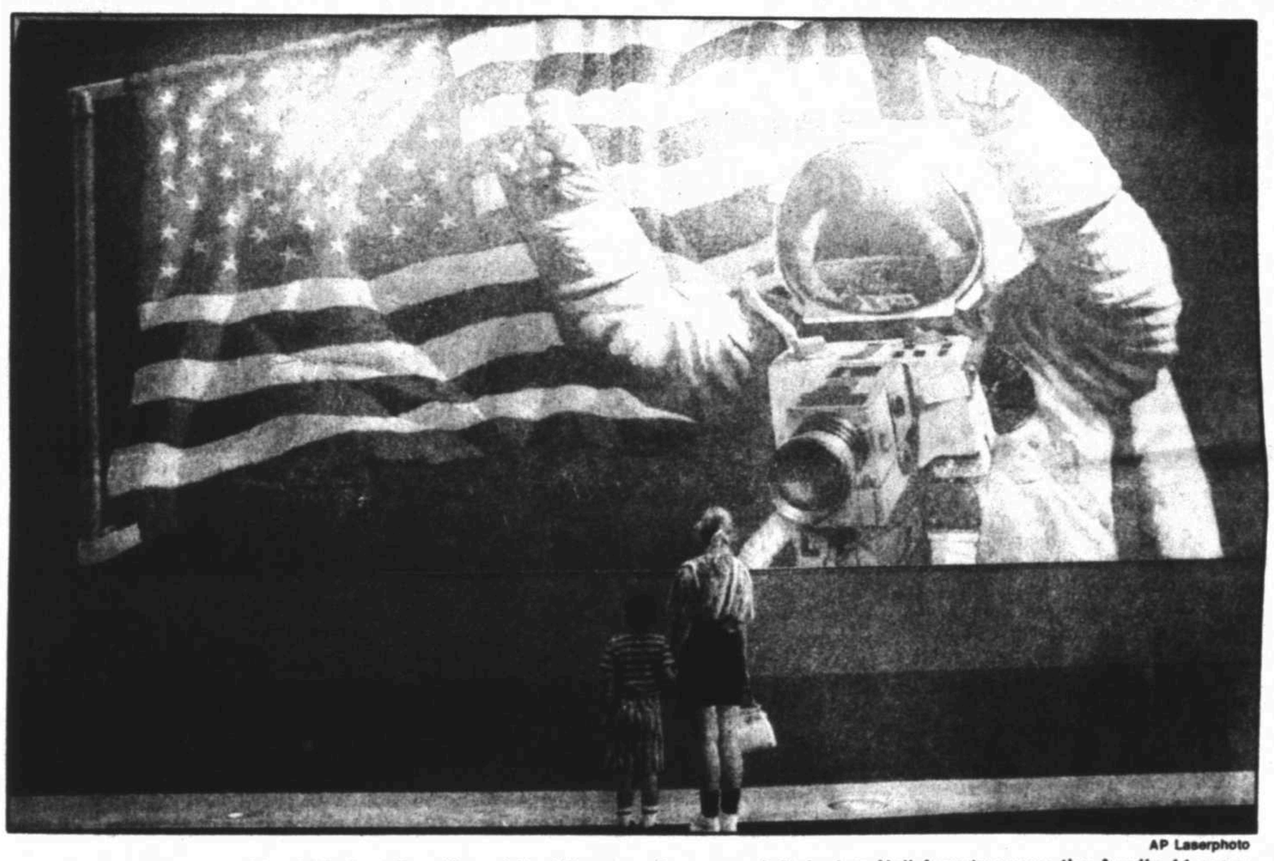

"After 25 years of constantly being hounded for autographs, they probably want to kick back," Wynn said. He quickly noted: "I brought stuff for them to autograph in case they spontaneously show up."

More than 500 people gathered for the launch ceremony at Kennedy Space Center, just three miles from where Apollo 11 blasted off at 9:32 a.m. EDT on July 16, 1969. Four days later, Armstrong and Aldrin became the first humans to walk on the moon.

Many of the celebrators had worked on Apollo 11 and are now retired or in different professions.

Did mission change Apollo 11 crewmen?

By John Noble Wilford
N.Y. Times News Service

"Space changes nobody," says Stuart Roosa, an astronaut on the Apollo 14 lunar mission.

"You bring back from space what you bring into space."

His observation was quoted by Andrew Chaikin in "A Man on the Moon: The Voyages of the Apollo Astronauts," just published by Viking. The lives of the three astronauts of Apollo 11, before and after the first lunar-landing mission, serve as case studies testing this proposition.

All three were born in 1930. Neil A. Armstrong, the commander who took the first lunar steps, was an aeronautical engineering graduate of Purdue University and a civilian test pilot, one of the best.

Edwin E. (Buzz) Aldrin Jr., the other moon walker, and Michael Collins, the command module pilot who remained in lunar orbit, came from military families, went to West Point and were career Air Force pilots.

In news accounts before the moon flight, Armstrong was described as an exceedingly reserved man who surrounded himself with walls of shyness, modesty and self-possession. Aldrin was seen as highly intelligent, openly ambitious and competitive and, above all, very intense. Collins was as open and breezy as Armstrong was reserved and Aldrin intense, but beneath the casual exterior lurked a hard determination; he was a family man with a passion for fishing and more than a passing interest in literature.

All three men left the astronaut corps in a year or two after Apollo 11, going quite separate ways. But have they

Ride simulates flying by carrier pilots

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The excitement of being catapulted off an aircraft carrier in a full-throttled U.S. Navy Grumman F-14 Tomcat jet fighter can be experienced in the safety of a crash-proof rocking, heaving and pitching mini-theater at the American Airpower Heritage Museum (AAHM) at the Confederate Air Force Headquarters at Midland International Airport.

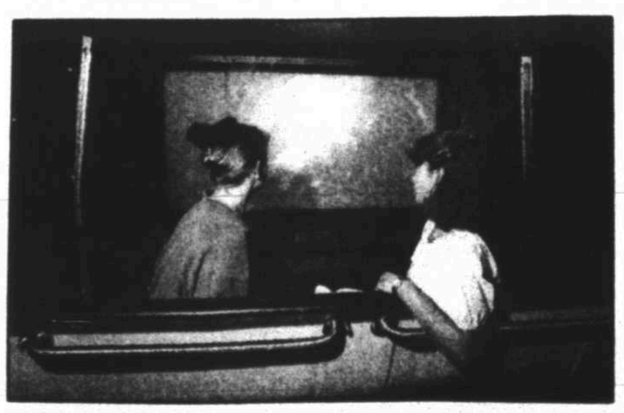

"It is very high-tech equipment," CAF spokeswoman Jennifer Welch said of the $160,000 van-like simulator manufactured by Doron Precision Systems Inc. of Binghamton, N.Y.

The three-minute ride costs $3.

"The ride has more dynamic movement," said AAHM director Tami O'-Bannion. "The catapult launch, rocket blast (in combat), and landing on the carrier are very dramatic."

Two "want-to-be pilots," Odessans Terry Gardiner, 35, and Walt Monahan, 41, climbed aboard the craft for their

Armadillos race for United Way

Jalapeno Sam blew into town Saturday and brought five of his 31 armadillos. He set up a race track, about 15-foot long, in the parking lot of the Sam's Club.

"C'mon, $2 a donation and race an armadillo," he announced over a public address system.

Soon after three children put up two bucks apiece, the armored mammals were lined up and ready to go.

"Kind of touch them along where the tail fits on the body, that'll make 'em run better," Jalapeno Sam said.

Some youngsters took the advice, others pushed, patted, picked simulated flight experience.

There are no cockpit controls in the simulator.

"It's OK," Gardiner said following the ride. "It would be a whole lot better if you could fly it yourself."

"I like the landing best," Monahan said. "They say naval aviators are the best pilots in the world, because they've got to land their aircraft on a moving airstrip."

During World War II, Midland geologist Jack Edwards flew carrier-based fighters, which are numbered among the types of 1939-45-era warplanes that the CAF restores and flies.

"You feel the surge. You're wide open, full-throttle (at takeoff, when) "the airplane's inertia from the catapult shot all of a sudden plays out," Edwards recalled.

"And there's a split milli-second before the prop takes over. That's a real sinking feeling out there . . . all that water."

Once airborne and climbing and "pretty well" sure you weren't "going to crash," Edwards said, you would bank and turn and view the carrier.

"That was always a thrill to look over and see that old carrier going away behind you and then climbing on up to make rendezvous with the skipper," Edwards said.

Other aviators, "walking their rudders," would "snuggle right in under your wing" in close formation.

"It was exciting," Edwards said of taking off from an aircraft carrier.

"But it was kind of an apprehensive excitement. You never knew what the hell was going to happen."

Returning to the carrier to land, sometimes in darkness, was yet another experience on a "rocking and a'rolling" carrier. Sometimes there were crosswinds to contend with or a rain squall to face.

"It gets to be pretty interesting," Edwards recalled. "And then turn the lights out, and it really gets interesting."

But the "best feeling in the world" is the moment when the aircraft's tailhook snarls the carrier's arresting cable upon landing.

"That's when you say, 'Man, I cheated death again. I'm back on this thing safe and sound.' "

"It's a damn sharp tug whenever that things holds. That's what you are sweating out . . . hoping that hook catches."

Heather Hernandez, 14, and D.J. Glasscock, 15, vicariously experienced the F-14 Tomcat's landing on the carrier about 50 years after Edwards' World War II carrier landings.

"I like the landing," D.J. said. "It felt like it was real." Heather was impressed by the takeoff and the landing.

CAF Col. Norvan Bourland, who was a bombardier-navigator aboard B-24 Liberator heavy bombers during the war, has viewed the film footage of the F-14 Tomcat and an earlier film of the flight of a World War II-era biplane in the pitching-and-heaving simulator.

"I enjoyed the prop better just because of my familiarity with it," Bourland said. "That brings back memories of the days when we flew those kinds of airplanes."

And youngsters who viewed the Tomcat's flight "really enjoy it," Bourland said. "Surprising, a lot of the adults seem to get a kick out of it."

up or stood clear of the creatures. Just don't hurt the animals, Jalapeno Sam said.

Cullen "Little Maverick" Linebarger, 9½, won the first competition at 2 p.m. It was his first armadillo race.

"I liked the part where the armadillo wanted to get out," said Cullen referring to some of the animals' tendency to climb over the sides of the track.

For winning the race, Cullen received a T-shirt that depicted an armadillo and read "State Championship Armadillo Race."

Cullen wasn't the only winner. Several races were held every hour between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m.

"He (Jalapeno Sam) always draws a good crowd and we wanted something different to raise money for the United Way," said Rudy Guevara, business development manager for Sam's Club.

Jalapeno Sam — 71-year-old Sam Lewis of San Angelo — puts on armadillo races for charity. He's done so around the world including in England, France, Germany, Japan and Australia.

His first race was in 1951 in Uvalde. Why? "I don't know . . . It's just a fun thing," he said.

In 1959, he raced against a skunk. In 1961-62, he raced armadillos at the state fair. In 1968, he began racing the animals on a regular basis for charity.

Around Texas, he's kind of a folk hero.

"They call me Jalapeno Sam because I'm hot," he said.

He's the inventor of the jalapeno lollipop and the jalapeno stuffed olive, which have been on the retail market since 1964. Other products include jalapeno guacamole, jalapeno mustard, jalapeno ketchup, jalapeno pecan and peanut brittle, jalapeno peach preserves and jalapeno jelly beans.

Jalapeno Sam first began serving up such creations in 1949, when he owned a restaurant in San Angelo. He began with jalapeno guacamole, a recipe he learned from a lady he met on a fishing trip to Mexico.

In addition to his hot jalapeno business and charitable armadillo races, Jalapeno Sam sells speciality and promotional advertising on T-shirts, pens, and baseball caps.

Aide denies Richards' San Angelo trip is political

HOUSTON (AP) — A memo sent from Gov. Ann Richards' official state office to her campaign headquarters indicates her Monday trip to San Angelo could be more of a political two-for-one, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

But a spokeswoman for the governor rejected the assertion, saying that the trip to visit sheep and goat farmers is a state visit, pure and simple.

"She's governor," said Cindy Rugeley, a Richards spokeswoman. "Just because it's an election year doesn't mean she's not supposed to represent these people and show she can work for them and get things done."

A July 8 memo — faxed by accident to the Houston Chronicle's Austin bureau — says the San Angelo trip "is designed to show that you are aware of the critical needs of Texas agriculture, particularly West Texas sheep and goat producers."

The memo, from Keith Jones of the governor's office to Ms. Richards, was addressed to the governor's speech writer at campaign headquarters.

The memo also says the "timing couldn't be better" for Ms. Richards' trip, noting that a senate subcomittee for agriculture recently cut all funding for Texas A&M University's wool research laboratory in San Angelo.

The memo says a letter from Ms. Richards helped restore funding for the laboratory when the Senate tried to cut the money last year.

Ms. Rugeley said there was nothing political about the memo or the governor's planned trip to San Angelo.

"It's a state trip," insisted Ms. Rugeley. "It is not a campaign speech. It's a state speech that the campaign is paying for."

Jones also denied that the trip was political. He said he wanted Ms. Richards to go to San Angelo so she can see firsthand the tough time sheep and goat ranchers have been having over the past two years.

Aid groups scramble to help mass of Rwandan refugees in Zaire

■ French colonel says situation is 'worse than catastrophic: . . .There's panic everywhere' as Rwandan rebels move within 12 miles of border.

Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — Hampered by poor preparation and limited resources, aid agencies are scrambling to cope with the enormous exodus of refugees from Rwanda, who have been trekking into Zaire at the rate of 10,000 an hour.

They face daunting challenges, including a shortage of drinking water, few suitable sites for camps and the possibility of epidemics. The only thing that could make it worse is a natural disaster, and a nearby volcano has been bubbling lava for weeks.

The outpouring of Hutu refugees from Rwanda continued Saturday at a slower pace than during the two previous days, when an estimated 350,000 to 500,000 people fled into Zaire.

No updated figures were available, but officials said the total number had reached at least 400,000, including 2,400 wounded government soldiers. Other estimates say the total has surpassed 500,000.

The Tutsi-led rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front has advanced to within 12 miles of Gisenyi, just across the border from Goma, said French Col. Didier Bolelli. Gisenyi was the site of the interim government until most of its top officials fled two days ago.

The rebels broke their promise to the United Nations to cease fire, U.N. representative Shaharyar Khan said Saturday in Kigali, the Rwandan capital. Rebel leader Gen. Paul Kagame promised on Friday that his troops would stop firing "within hours."

"We are still waiting for them to keep their word," Khan said.

But with their troops already controlling most of the country and government forces fleeing in disarray, there was no apparent reason for the rebels to stop short of a full military victory.

The Hutus have been fleeing out of fear that the rebels want to avenge the widespread massacres of minority Tutsis by extremist supporters of Rwanda's Hutu government. No evidence of reprisals by the rebels has surfaced.

Hutu militias have been blamed for most of the estimated 200,000 to 500,000 deaths in the past three months in the central African nation.

The sounds of gunfire, sporadic for days in Goma, picked up after dark Saturday, probably from continued looting attributed to troops on both sides of the border. Several concussions also were heard, but their source was unknown.

A French soldier was slightly wounded Saturday when his patrol came under fire from rebels at the edge of the security zone that the French have established in southwestern Rwanda.

Bolelli called the situation in Goma and southwestern Rwanda "worse than catastrophic." In the south, "There's panic everywhere" as the rebels move closer.

The vast human flood has overwhelmed the meagre resources in Goma, which had been prepared for an influx of Rwandans early in the civil war only to see most of the first refugees flee to Tanzania.

Spanish boats attack French fishing fleet

PARIS (AP) — France vowed on Saturday to protect its fishing fleet with navy ships if necessary after Spanish fishermen attacked French tuna boats. One was reportedly sinking.

Spanish fishermen accuse the French of using nets bigger than those permitted by European Union regulations, thus catching more fish than allowed off the Spanish coast. The French insist the nets are legal.

A French naval tug intervened Saturday to separate the two fishing fleets off Spain's northern coast of Galicia.

Two Spanish navy vessels were also headed to the site, the Spanish news agency EFE reported.

"I have the feeling that certain Spanish fishermen are looking purely and simply to eliminate French fishermen by force," French Fishing Minister Jean Puech said.

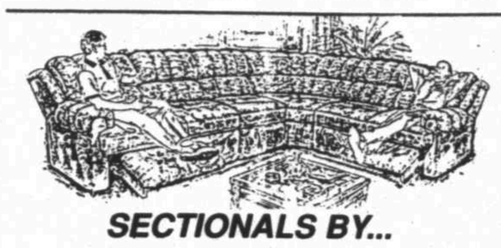

"France will continue to fish in this area, with the presence of the navy, to ensure that the law is respected," he said.

Puech was to meet Monday with Spanish Agriculture Minister Luis Atienza in Brussels, Belgium, EFE said.

According to the French ministry, about a half dozen French boats were attacked by 60 Spanish boats. The Spaniards threw smoke bombs, cut nets and tried to board. Some fired metal bolts with slingshots.

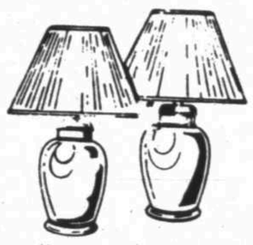

There were no injuries, the ministry said, but one French boat was rammed and sinking and its crew was transferred to another vessel.

MISSION: Crewmen handle fame differently

Neil Alden Armstrong
mission commander

He was born on a farm in Ohio, grew up in a small town, flew to the moon and then returned to be what he had always been, a very private person. In a culture besotted with celebrities, this may be as remarkable an occurrence as his visit to the Sea of Tranquillity. The man who will always be known as the first man on the moon has by choice become almost invisible.

By shunning publicity — he granted no interviews or scheduled appearances for the 25th anniversary of the lunar landing — Armstrong has resisted the temptations of fame and slipped into a quiet life on a large farm near Lebanon, Ohio, where the neighbors respect his privacy. He will turn 64 on Aug. 5; his light brown hair is graying and the waist is a little thicker. He still does some flying, has a wry sense of humor and lives comfortably on income from serving on several corporation boards.

Friends are not surprised at the way he has managed his post-lunar life.

"Neil's the same sort of private person he always was," said Julian Scheer, head of public affairs for the space agency in the Apollo era. "He didn't cash in, he didn't seek celebrityhood. When you think of Neil Armstrong as a genuine American hero, there's no tarnish."

When the Apollo 11 crew began training in 1968, it was not clear if theirs would be the first landing mission. But Armstrong was a natural for it. He had often demonstrated a mastery over flying machines and courage under extreme pressure. He flew 78 combat missions in the Korean War, once nursing a crippled jet fighter back to a carrier landing, and flew X-15 rocket planes to the fringes of space.

In 1966, when a malfunction caused his Gemini 8 spacecraft to tumble wildly out of control, Armstrong took charge, steadying the craft and steering it to an emergency splashdown. He showed the same coolness in the final moments of the Apollo 11 lunar landing, taking the controls to avoid a hazardous crater.

Reflecting on the landing at a news conference a decade later, Armstrong called the descent the most exciting part of the mission. "It was the most demanding, the systems were the most heavily loaded, there were the largest number of unknowns and the computers were being taxed to the limit," he said. This is why he considers the most significant message from the mission not the one about the "giant leap for mankind," but the words that brought relief and joy to an expectant world, "Houston, Tranquillity Base here. The Eagle has landed."

After the Apollo 11 mission and the celebratory tour of world capitals, Armstrong resigned as an astronaut and took a desk job at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Washington, but soon tired of his role as salesman for NASA programs. In 1971, he left NASA to become a professor of aerospace engineering at the University of Cincinnati; that was also when he and his wife, Janet — their 38-year marriage was recently dissolved — and their two sons moved to the farm.

In 1979 he left the university to devote more time to advising corporations, mainly in the aerospace and electronics businesses. From the many job offers and requests to use his name, he chose to do some television commercials for the Chrysler Corp. and was the host of a television documentary on the history of flight. He also served as vice chairman of the president's commission to investigate the Challenger space shuttle disaster in 1986.

Mike Collins, his Apollo 11 colleague, was fascinated by the Armstrong enigma. In his 1974 book "Carrying the Fire," Collins observed that Armstrong "never transmits anything but the surface layer, and that very sparingly." He said of Armstrong, "I like him, but I don't know what to make of him, or how to get to know him better."

Collins especially admired how his colleague had handled fame. He drew the image of Armstrong living in a castle surrounded by a moat full of dragons. "When he chooses, which is not often, he can lower the drawbridge and sally forth; but, more important, when he chooses, he can retreat with honor and dignity," Collins wrote. "Neil knows what he is doing, and he is doing it well."

Buzz Aldrin
lunar module pilot

For Aldrin, the return to Earth was more jarring than for Armstrong. Aldrin's problems began almost immediately as he struggled to adjust to life in the limelight. This made him increasingly uncomfortable, which led to erratic behavior and eventually depression and alcoholism.

For a while, he stayed with NASA, working on the space shuttle program; besides being a pilot, he had earned a doctorate in astronautics at MIT. He grew restless. In 1971, he decided to resume his Air Force career, leaving the space agency to command the test pilot school at Edwards Air Force Base in California. But with his lack of managerial experience and intense personality, he was, perhaps, not suited for the job. In any event, he was hospitalized for severe depression.

Aldrin told of that time in a confessional autobiography, "Return to Earth," written with Wayne Warga and published in 1973.

He attributed his troubles to his own relentless drive for achievement, the pressures to live up to his father's ambitions for him, possibly a genetic predisposition and certainly the traumatic readjustments to life after the moon. It was not just the public demands; it was also the loss of a sense of purpose, now that the Apollo goal had been achieved and his future was left undefined.

In an interview for Chaikin's book, Aldrin said: "There I was — introverted, supersensitive, a perfectionist, concerned about what people thought of me — Jesus, it was a setup. No wonder I was in trouble."

Even before Apollo 11, associates spoke of Aldrin's perfectionism, which made him so demanding of himself, perhaps as demanding as he sensed his father was. Edwin Eugene Aldrin Jr. was born and grew up in the New York City suburb of Montclair, N.J. His father was an Army colonel who was an accomplished aviator himself.

The son grew up with the nickname of Buzz, and in the 1970s adopted it as his legal name, perhaps to put some distance between him and his father. In his book, Buzz Aldrin recalled the pressures from his father and how he was angered that the son was not permitted to be the first to set foot on the moon. The elder Aldrin even visited NASA officials with that request.

The 64-year-old Buzz Aldrin has gone through other transitions since Apollo 11, including two divorces and a third marriage. His alcoholism and depression, friends say, are under control. He is full of energy and brimming with ideas. He lives in Laguna Beach, Calif., where he does some consulting for aerospace companies and develops designs for futuristic launching systems and flight concepts for Mars missions. It is a return to his old intellectual passion for the science of orbital mechanics.

But there is little money in such pursuits, which he calls an expensive hobby, and so he supplements his income with product endorsements — "Buzz Aldrin's 25th anniversary watch" and the fruit drink Snapple — and public appearances — "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" and a speaking part on "The Simpsons". Of the three astronauts, only Aldrin has plans to attend many of the events commemorating the anniversary.

Michael Collins
command module pilot

Given his engaging manner and polish, it was not surprising that Collins, upon returning from the moon, soon found a place in the establishment of Washington. He was the son and nephew of Army generals, and attended the exclusive St. Albans School in Washington before going to West Point.

He would have liked a chance to walk on the moon himself, but not enough to wait another two years for a mission. "I got tired of traveling," he once said. "I got tired of living out of suitcases in motel rooms and not having a chance to see the kids grow up."

So he left NASA and served a brief, unsatisfying stint as assistant secretary of state for public affairs. Then he became director of the National Air and Space Museum with responsibility for seeing the construction to completion.

He showed an unsuspected managerial flair, getting the work done on schedule and under budget. The museum is one of Washington's most popular tourist attractions, and it has on view the Apollo 11 command module that Collins had piloted.

He drew on an early interest in poetry and literature to produce his first book, "Carrying the Fire," published in 1974. It is generally regarded as the best account of what it is like to be an astronaut. Since then, he has written other books on Mars and space flight, recently completing a manuscript of a children's book on Mars.

Collins also spent five years in business as vice president and head of the Washington operations of the LTV Aerospace and Defense Co. He serves as a trustee of the National Geographic Society.

The 63-year-old Collins has kept busy, as he said, "to prevent the rest of my life from being an anticlimax." By his own account, his life "has not changed as much as I would have guessed," but it has been different from most other people's.

"I have been places and done things you simply would not believe," he wrote. "I feel like saying: I have dangled from a cord 100 miles up; I have seen the Earth eclipsed by the Moon, and enjoyed it. I have seen the Sun's true light, unfiltered by any planet's atmosphere. I have seen the ultimate black of infinity in a stillness undisturbed by any living thing."

People who know him say Collins is still happily married to his wife, Patricia, and they have two grown daughters. Their one heartbreak was the suicide of their son, Michael, a few years ago.

The Collinses now spend winters in Florida and the rest of the year at a house on the Outer Banks of North Carolina. His days are spent fishing and reading and writing.

Julian Scheer, a friend and former business associate, says: "Mike really enjoys life. He likes good food and good wine. He has a sparkling sense of humor and is completely relaxed."

NASA courts Russia as space partner

N.Y. Times News Service

When American astronauts landed on the moon in the Apollo 11 space ship 25 years ago this week, and walked the lifeless lunar surface, their feat marked a triumph in a Cold War race with the Soviet Union.

The first human steps on the moon were a badly needed success, coming a dozen years after the Soviet Union had launched its Sputnik satellite. But the future of the space effort is now in doubt, with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration gearing down for a series of unmanned, deep-science missions while it and the White House pursue cooperative space ventures with Russia, its former rival.

The choices are brought on by the public's lack of interest, budget wars and a sharp debate over the direction of the country's space program. On the horizon are international programs that share technology, talent and possibly space stations and rocket engines.

Only last month, Vice President Al Gore and Russian Premier Viktor Chernomyrdin signed the second of two major agreements to merge the basics of their space programs, in what NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin has hailed as "closing the books on the Cold War."

The first result of the agreement, expected soon, will have American astronauts flying aboard Russia's Mir space station for four months at a time, while Russian cosmonauts join the crews on future American space shuttle missions.

NASA will be buying $400 million worth of Russian hardware for the United States' multibillion-dollar International Space Station project, which will also involve Japan, Canada and the European space agency.

Other adventurous missions are on the drawing boards, and at Stanford University teams of Russians and Americans are fleshing out their costs and technical details.

Stanford's Bruce Lusignan, a specialist in communication satellites, is leading teams of American and Russian experts to plan joint space ventures. He has help from many specialists at NASA centers, including the Ames Research Center at nearby Mountain View and the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. Lockheed is already buying into the work of Russian rocket specialists, and Stanford has created a Center for International Cooperation in Space.

Shuttle flights cost $1 billion each, Lusignan argues, and the space station as it has been designed and redesigned has already consumed $11 billion — expenditures that are far higher than necessary.

"Our entire technical space community knows now that the shuttle should be dead," Lusignan said in a recent interview. "It's irresponsible to continue it. It's using technology that's already 20 years old, and it's an impossible job for the shuttle ever to get an entire space station into orbit. It's an archaic launch system, and we're faced with nothing more than a high-tech pork barrel that's destroying our entire space program."

Congress is cutting NASA's budget to nearly $13 billion from the agency's peak requests of more than $15 billion, and the shuttle program takes close to $6 billion.

LEAP: Shuttle crew is part of historic moment

King, now a public relations man in Washington, noted that more than 5.6 million parts were in the rocket and spacecraft — "any one of which could go wrong."

"With 99.9 percent success, 5,000 things still could happen," King said. "When you look back at it from that point of view, it's rather an awesome concept to contemplate."

King timed his remarks to end at 9:30 a.m., just in time for a replay of his launch commentary starting at the two-minute mark. He ran a little over. As a result, his pronouncement of "Liftoff! We have a liftoff! Thirty-two minutes past the hour! Liftoff of Apollo 11!" came at 9:33 a.m.

No one cared. All eyes were on four model Saturn rockets whooshing 200 feet into the air and then floating down gently with red and white parachutes.

"See. By goodness, we've still got it," King said.

At the same time in space, the crew of shuttle Columbia was informed by Mission Control of the historic moment. The command module of Apollo 11 also was named Columbia.

"Columbia's journey today, as her namesake did back then, is pushing the frontiers of knowledge and science for all mankind, and we thank you," Mission Control told the seven shuttle astronauts.

Apollo 13 astronaut Fred Haise, now an aerospace company executive, stood in for Armstrong, Aldrin and Collins on Saturday just as he did in 1969 as part of the Apollo 11 backup crew. An oxygen tank explosion on his way to the moon in 1970 stole his chance to walk on the lunar surface.

Apollo 17 commander Eugene Cernan, the last man to walk on the moon, in December 1972, was the Apollo 11 crew substitute for Saturday night's commemorative dinner.

Haise said he expected back then that, after Apollo, humans would return to the moon in his lifetime. He still believes humans will explore the solar system and beyond, "though not as quickly as many of us who are in the autumn of our careers would like to see."

Kennedy Space Center Director Robert Crippen, an ex-astronaut, said it's appropriate that shuttle Columbia was launched July 8 from the same pad as Apollo 11, and that pieces of a shattered comet were supposed to smash into Jupiter beginning Saturday.

"I wonder if it's a cosmic coincidence that it's occurring today or is it perhaps some higher power telling us there are still planets out there to be explored," Crippen said.

A Newsweek poll released Saturday found 56 percent of those Americans surveyed earlier this month believe the United States should send humans to Mars. Fifty-two percent indicated it should be an international mission rather than a U.S.-only expedition. The margin of error was plus or minus 4 percentage points.

IMPACT: Other collisions may be bigger

(From 1A)

tons of TNT or more."

Weaver added jubilantly: "The comet was not a dud."

Views taken some two hours after impact showed that a black spot persisted and astronomers said the scar may remain visible on Jupiter for as long as year.

The first comet fragment is one of the smallest, said Weaver, and he predicted even more fireworks as the other parts of Shoemaker-Levy 9 smash into the planet.

"This was just a preview," he said. "There will be even bigger shows later in the week."

One later comet fragment may be 10 times bigger than fragment A, said Weaver.

The Hubble images that confirmed a major impact on Jupiter prompted the two Shoemakers and Levy to take long drinks from a champagne bottle and other astronomers in the room at the Space Telescope Science Institute broke into applause.

"You can expect a good show," Shoemaker said gleefully. "You're going to see things and we're going to learn a lot."

"We are extremely lucky to see this impact," said Levy. "It's something that happens once in a 1,000 years."

Shoemaker said the energy released by the first fragment, one of the smallest, proves that the original comet was about 6 miles across before it split up into the 21 pieces impacting Jupiter. The first impact also shows, he said, that the chunks are not fragmenting further as they approach the planet. This means that all the impacts will release energy equal to thousands of tons of TNT, he said.

Fragment B was to hit Jupiter late Saturday night, C at about 3:43 a.m. CDT Sunday, and D about three hours later.

At one point Shoemaker said chart-like computer generated pictures and the actual initial plume sighting reports from telescopes Spain and Chile were consistent with a surface fireball impact of about 1,200 miles across.

The actual fireball was not shown in the first pictures from Spain and Chile, but a cloud from the impact point rose above the horizon of Jupiter as viewed from Earth.

A theoretical simulation showed a fireball that rose rapidly and then flattened out as it cooled.

The impact around 3 p.m. CDT was on the backside of Jupiter, but the site spun quickly into view as the planet rotated. The first reports were not received until a little more than three hours after the impact.

Shoemaker said other fragments will cause even bigger explosions because the first — called fragment "A" — is the smallest.

The Shoemakers and Levy were at the Space Telescope Science Institute in Baltimore when the first images arrived.

Astronomers worldwide were at their telescopes to watch as mountain-sized fragments of a shattered comet, hurtling through space at 130,000 mph, began smashing into Jupiter.

Other chunks of the 21-piece comet will follow at about six-hour intervals until Friday.

Haitian military acts 'cocky;' ambassador urges Americans to leave

■ Analyst: Military leadership may be putting up brave front, but they continue to act as if they have no fear of American invasion.

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE — The U.S. ambassador urged Americans to leave Haiti before Air France, the only airline still flying here, stops service at the end of the month.

In a meeting Friday with U.S. residents, Ambassador William Swing outlined contingency plans in the event of a U.S. invasion but said an invasion wasn't imminent, said Mickey McLaney, an American resident who attended the meeting.

"Swing advised us to leave, but he said, 'I know, probably none of you are leaving,'" McLaney said Saturday. "Swing said he didn't feel a panic situation yet, and made it perfectly clear he can't tell us to leave."

Also, when U.N. observers presented themselves at the airport in compliance with an expulsion order, Haiti's military could not resist inflicting a few humiliations.

Before the group boarded the plane, soldiers acting as functionaries poked through their belongings and contemptuously questioned the validity of some of their passports.

"The soldiers at the airport were acting as arrogant and cocky as I have ever seen them," said a diplomat who witnessed the departure this week of the 92-member mission, which had been monitoring human rights abuses here for more than a year. "They were looking very sure of themselves."

Haiti's military leadership may just be putting up a brave front for the rest of the world, but they continue to act as if they have no fear of an American invasion.

The order to expel the combined observer mission of the United Nations and Organization of American States came hours after four American amphibious assault ships carrying 2,000 marines arrived in Haitian waters.

Immediately after the monitors were expelled, a dozen men whose identities remain unknown were killed and clandestinely buried in a small town just west of here.

"I think they still believe the United States is not going to invade, that it's all a bluff," said a Haitian businessman with ties to the military. "Until there are indications to the contrary, they are going by the example of the Harlan County," the American vessel that was intimidated into leaving Haitian waters by paramilitary forces last October.

Hussein: Jordan can't count on Arab protection anymore

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Jordan must make peace with Israel because it no longer can depend on Arab allies for protection, King Hussein said.

The king's remarks to army officers, made Thursday, were reported by official media Saturday, a day after President Clinton announced Hussein and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel would hold a ground-breaking summit July 25 in Washington.

They also follow a long media campaign to muster public support for Jordan's swift moves toward a peace settlement with Israel. The two nations have technically been at war since 1948, when Jordan and other Arab countries tried to prevent the creation of a Jewish state.

Hussein said the collapse of Arab unity after the Persian Gulf War has left the kingdom "susceptible to fragmentation."

"Since the Gulf crisis, division between our Arab brethren has become a dominant fact in the region," he said, adding that Iraq, "which was our main backer in the region," could no longer be counted on.

"Tell me, whom do we count on? The Americans and the Gulf states are not behind us. Therefore, we must pursue peace with steadfastness."

Jordan's opposition to a military solution for Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait strained ties with Saudi Arabia and the rest of the Gulf bloc and increased Amman's sense of isolation in the Arab world.

Speaking during a visit to the artillery corps of the Fourth Royal Mechanized Division, the monarch said Jordan would become a surrogate homeland for Palestinians if a swift settlement with Israel was not achieved.

The Arab-Israeli wars triggered a massive influx of Palestinian refugees, who now comprise 60 percent of Jordan's population of 3.9 million.

The 1967 war also stripped Jordan of control of the West Bank, which it had ruled for 17 years. The king relinquished all claims to it in 1988, and the Palestine Liberation Organization now seeks to set up a Palestinian state on the territory.

"We are surrounded from all sides," the king said. "If the PLO fails to get what it seeks, then we will be pressured and the nation might collapse.

"The possibilities of making Jordan a substitute homeland for the Palestinians still exists and we do not have any ally in this region to protect us."

Earlier this month, Hussein said he expects U.S. military aid and a write-off of the country's $952 million debt to the United States in return for making peace with Israel.

Israel has hailed the upcoming summit as a breakthrough in Mideast peacemaking, which had stalled over disputes between Israel and Syria.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said he was optimistic Jordan and Israel will sign a peace treaty.

Still, Syrian President Hafez Assad has long played the role of spoiler in Mideast politics, and some doubts remained about whether Hussein would dare challenge his powerful neighbor and make a separate deal.

$10,000 REWARD

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CITIZENS OF MIDLAND

GRILLZ BURGERS

Fellow Citizens;

As the owner of GRILLZ® RESTAURANTS, I am offering a $10,000 cash reward for information leading to the indictment and conviction of individuals associated with what we strongly believe is a food tampering incident. We have exhausted every avenue through our own internal investigation, independent food testing and investigations by local and regional health officials. We have concluded that there is no plausible explanation as to how the contamination could have occurred at our restaurant. It is simply not possible to have live insect larvae on a freshly-cooked hamburger patty. They had to be put onto the meat after the cooking process was complete.

Samples of both fresh and cooked meat from the restaurant and its meat supplier, including a portion of the actual meat patty in question, have been tested by Professional Service Industries Laboratories, an independent food testing facility in Arlington, Texas. The test results showed no evidence of contamination according to food technologist Gary L. Heath. These results are totally consistent with the preliminary findings of the Midland and Odessa Health Departments and the Texas Department of Health.

I would like to know how insects – which according to health department authorities had to be in excess of 24 hours old – could be found on a single hamburger patty which was fully cooked and in the possesion of the purchaser for no more than two hours. We honestly believe that if this was not a prank which escalated out of control, then it was a deliberate action to discredit our reputation and destroy our business. We also believe that innocent people outside of our organization have been implicated without having any knowledge of the tampering.

It is clear that the incident could not have happened as it was portrayed on Memorial Day. However, an impression has been planted in the minds of a large portion of the population which has caused a significant decline in sales. More importantly, this incident has resulted in the loss of over 50 jobs, all because the media chose to give full-blown coverage to a set of circumstances which we believe did not give a complete and fair representation of the facts. We sincerely hope and pray that other retail businesses in our area are never subjected to this same type of persecution without being given an opportunity to adequately investigate and defend themselves.

We will now consolidate all evidence and turn it over to federal authorities for further investigation since food tampering is a federal crime.

If you have information which you feel is pertinent to this matter, please call 1-800-583-6162 from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Calls will be handled in strictest confidence.

Kidnappers seize Omani, Yemeni envoys in Algeria

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Two Arab ambassadors were reported Saturday to have been kidnapped. The abduction follows the killings by Islamic extremists of 14 foreigners, all Europeans, in the past two weeks.

Fifty-one foreigners have been killed since extremists began targeting foreigners in September, but kidnappings have been rare. Arabs had not been victims of the violence and considered themselves relatively safe.

The burnt wreckage of the car the ambassadors of Yemen and Oman were riding in was found Friday near Khemis el-Kechna, 20 miles east of Algiers, said the Algerian security services, in a statement carried by government radio.

The area is a stronghold of the Armed Islamic Group, the most extreme of Algeria's scattered bands of militant gunmen.

There was no sign of the two men, identified as Ambassador Hilal bin Salem bin Hamoud al-Siyabi of Oman and Ambassador Askar Ali Hussain of Yemen, the security services reported. A search was mounted.

The Algerians reported only that the pair had disappeared. But the Oman Foreign Ministery said the diplomats had been kidnapped. There was no claim of responsibility or ransom demand.

"The Algerian government is now exerting efforts to track down the kidnappers to know their demands and guarantee the safety of the ambassadors," Ahmed bin Yousef al-Hareth of the Foreign Ministry told The Associated Press from Muscat, Oman.

Oman's state-run television interrupted regular programming to report the kidnapping. A Foreign Ministry statement read on TV said al-Siyabi was kidnapped as he was leaving his house in Algiers at noon Friday. There were no details.

Islamic extremists have killed 14 Italians and East Europeans in the past two weeks in a campaign to drive foreigners out of the country, depriving the government of expertise and investment.

The bulk of the foreigners killed since September have been French, Italians and Russians, whose countries have the greatest presence in the North African country.

Kim Il Sung's death brings uncertainty

By Laura King
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — Like the border that divides the two Koreas, the events of a muggy midsummer's day now form a deep demarcation in the psyche of a troubled peninsula.

The afternoon of July 9 brought electrifying news: Kim Il Sung, the only leader the communist North had ever known, was dead.

North and South alike suddenly saw their world in dramatic new terms: Before and after, then and now.

"Everything has changed," said political scientist Lee Jong-seok.

The week since word of Kim's death has been a roller-coaster ride for the South. First came fear over the possibility of a power struggle in the North in the wake of Kim's death.

Less than an hour after death was announced, the South's military went on high alert. Top officials met in emergency sessions. Strangers clasped one another in shock.

As the days passed, clues emerged from the secretive North as to the shape of the new political hierarchy. The South was relieved by signs that Kim's son and handpicked heir, 52-year-old Kim Jong Il, was cementing his control.

But week's end brought a new outbreak of nervousness over indications a behind-the-scenes struggle might be occurring after all. On Saturday, the day before Kim's elaborate state funeral was to have taken place, the North postponed the event for two days.

That surprise move came amid signs that Kim Jong Il was purging political rivals — including his stepmother, who was edited out of official TV footage from the North.

The South reported no unusual military movements along the border, and six days after the death, it eased its high state of alert.

While the two sides' militaries kept wary watch, the week's key battle raged elsewhere.

Day after day, the North's official media hammered away at one theme: transforming grief for Kim, who had ruled for 46 years, into loyalty to his son.

But rallying real support for the younger Kim remained a formidable task. He lacks Kim Il Sung's charisma, and reports of his erratic personality have worried some Western observers.

Officials in the South expressed confidence that a North Korea under Kim Jong Il would make no drastic changes in foreign policy.

South Korean students shout anti-government slogans at a rally to protest the arrests of student leaders by police at Korea University in Seoul Saturday. Police claimed the student leaders were plotting a new anti-government strategy following the death earlier this month of North Korean leader Kim Il Sung.

NATO, U.N. commanders meet to plan Bosnia strategy

ZAGREB, Croatia (AP) — Top NATO and U.N. generals met Saturday to plan strategy just days ahead of a deadline for Bosnia's warring parties to accept peace or face a possible pullout of U.N. troops.

But indicators pointed toward further conflict, despite unprecedented international pressure on the combatants to settle. Fighting continued in Bosnia, and a leading Bosnian Serb official repeated his side's opposition to the peace plan, drawn up by the United States, Russia and Western Europe.

The Bosnian parliament and an assembly of Bosnian Serbs plan to vote separately on the plan Monday, the eve of the deadline set by its authors.

Adm. Leighton Smith, the American commanding NATO's southern flank, met Saturday in Zagreb with the commander of U.N. troops in former Yugoslavia, French Gen. Bertrand de Lapresle, and Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, U.N. commander for Bosnia, to coordinate planning for Tuesday and beyond.

Senior European politicians have warned of a possible pullout of U.N. troops from Bosnia should the plan be rejected. Maj. Yvon Desjardins, a spokesman for de Lapresle, said it was too soon to talk about a revised role for NATO and the United Nations.

But another U.N. spokesman, Paul Risley, said "all possible (military) contingency plans ... were discussed."

The proposed peace plan would give 51 percent of the republic to the Bosnian Muslim-Croat federation and leave Bosnian Serbs the rest.

Croats and Muslims appear set to accept, but the Serbs remain opposed. Though apparently willing to give up some of the 70 percent of territory they now hold, the Serbs are holding out for the right to join their land with Serbia proper — something the plan denies them.

Microsoft agrees to stop cornering market

WASHINGTON (AP) — Microsoft Corp. said Saturday it will end practices it used to corner the market for the programs that run millions of personal computers, resolving the highest profile antitrust case since the AT&T breakup a decade ago.

Microsoft must change contracts that forced computer makers to use its programs and eliminate some restrictions it imposed on other software makers. The company is the largest creator of PC software with well-known products like Windows. Word and Encarta

"While the company fairly and lawfully climbed to the top of industry ladder, it used unfair and illegal practices to maintain its dominant position," Attorney General Janet Reno said Saturday.

The settlement, worked out late Friday, "will prohibit the company from continuing to engage in monopolistic practices in the future," Reno said. A federal judge must approve it.

'While company fairly, lawfully climbed to top of industry ladder, it used unfair, illegal practices to maintain its dominant position.'

— Attorney General Janet Reno

The Redmond, Wash.-based company's business practices have been under review by U.S. agencies for four years. Competition enforcement authorities of the European Commission began probing Microsoft a year ago and reached a similar agreement with the company.

William Neukom, senior vice president of law and corporate affairs for Microsoft, said the company agreed to the settlements to avoid protracted court battles.

"We believe the terms are reasonable and it is a sensible time to put this behind us and move forward," Neukom said.

He said Microsoft continues to believe it has never done anything wrong.

"As we have said from the beginning of the investigation .... Microsoft believes that it has always conducted its business in a perfectly legal fashion," Neukom said.

Microsoft chief executive William Gates said in a written statement that the company was pleased to have settled on the same terms its separate disputes with the Justice Department and the European Commission.

Workers find 1800s graffiti about God in Washington Monument

WASHINGTON (AP) — Graffiti from the 1800s discovered by workers renovating the Washington Monument has quite a different tone from that usually found today on the sides of buildings and subway cars.

"Whoever is the human instrument under God in the conversion of one soul, erects a monument to his own memory more lofty and enduing (sic) than this," reads the inscription which can now be viewed by visitors to the monument.

It is signed BFB. No one knows who that is, or who left the small drawings and 19th century dates on other walls. But Park Service historians have decided to save the scribblings.

The markings in the lobby of the monument were covered over when it was decorated at the turn of the century. They were found when workers removed marble wainscoting as part of a year-long, $500,000 renovation which was just completed.

Gary Scott, National Park Service regional historian, says BFB probably carved the message sometime between 1854 and 1880, when construction stopped on the monument because funds had run out.

That includes the Civil War period when Union soldiers camped on the monument grounds while guarding against an invasion by Southern troops.

"The building was just wide open," Scott said.

The monument, begun in 1848 with public donations, was finally completed in 1884 after Congress provided funds.

Police: Rocker Cobain's suicide may spur 2 more

SAYREVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Two teen-agers despondent over the death of rock star Kurt Cobain were found dead in an apparent double suicide, police said.

Thomas Rodriguez, 15, and Nicholas Camperi, 14, died from blasts from a shotgun that had been locked in a gun locker at Rodriguez's house, Middlesex County Prosecutor Robert Gluck said Saturday.

Two suicide notes "indicated that they were depressed over his (Cobain's) death," Gluck said.

Interviews with relatives also led investigators to believe that Cobain's death may have prompted the suicide pact. Gluck did not elaborate.

Cobain, lead singer of rock band Nirvana, killed himself with a shotgun in his Seattle home on April 8. He was 27.

A week later, a 28-year-old Seattle man killed himself with a gun in what police believed was a reaction to Cobain's death.

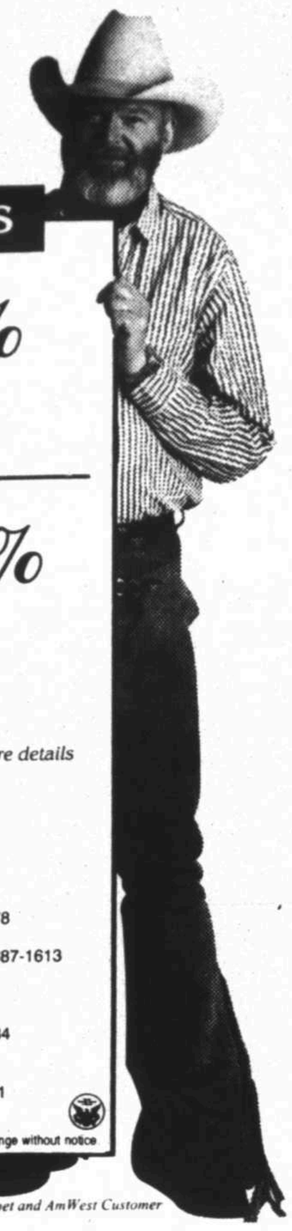

The teen-agers' bodies were found Friday afternoon in the basement of the Rodriguez house. The gun locker had been forced open.

Overweight
It's not your fault

Research sites chemical or metabolism disorders as the leading cause of weight problems. The fact is most overweight people eat less and more healthy than most people who are able to maintain their weight.

The abuse of fat and calories did not create the problem and restrictive calorie dieting offers only temporary success. Low calorie/fat dieting can further deteriorate our Metabolism and Sugar System, therefore we often gain back more weight than we lose.

The M Balance weight management system is a one-on-one diagnostic diet program designed to analyze the rate our body uses energies and all those things that may influence weight control.

No pills, formulas or pre-packaged foods. Losing weight is not the same as solving a weight problem.

Official: End's near for Haitian military

WASHINGTON (AP) — The end is near for Haiti's military leaders, but the administration still hopes they leave voluntarily rather than as a consequence of U.S. force, Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott said Saturday.

"The end of the day is approaching," Talbott said on CNN's "Evans & Novak," adding that "we certainly can't wait forever."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said last week that the president has made no decision regarding the use of military power.

But the administration has also stepped up the pressure, stationing 2,000 Marines in ships off the Haiti coast and conducting maneuvers in the region.

On Friday, U.S. military planes began broadcasting speeches in which Aristide vowed he would return soon to "reinstate security for all Haitians to live in peace." He did not say how he would return.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., said Saturday in the Republican response to President Clinton's weekly radio address that compassion for suffering in Haiti is not reason enough to endanger American troops.

"We cannot, as Americans, solve all or even part of this worldwide suffering. We have suffering here at home," Warner, a senior member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said.

Elsewhere, an invasion of Haiti would begin with a quick thrust led by Navy Seal teams, Marines and Army Rangers and turn quickly into an exercise in quelling violent, rival factions, according to senior military sources.

Once elite assault teams have secured the U.S. embassy, the airport and the government palace in the capital of Port-au-Prince, an Army force as large as 20,000 would move in to establish civil order.

In describing the invasion scenario, the military sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, portrayed an armed force ready to do the job, but concerned about what happens afterward.

As is often the case, military officers go into this action with their most recent engagement in mind. That would be Somalia.

Clinton administration officials have said repeatedly that no invasion is imminent, but three developments could trigger an armed assault: a sharp increase in the intensity of violence against Haitians; a threat to the lives of U.S. officials and civilians in Haiti; or the sudden departure of Haiti's military leaders.

Stern tells state to butt out of his finances

ALBANY, N.Y. (NYT) — Howard Stern, radio shock jock and Libertarian candidate for governor of New York, claims his personal finances are none of the public's business.

Stern filed a lawsuit Thursday in Albany against the state Ethics Commission in which he is attempting to strike down a law requiring that candidates for public office disclose personal financial information.

"While this requirement is intrusive and onerous to every citizen, it is especially invasive to someone like me who lives a highly visible life and is considered generally by the public as a controversial and highly visible celebrity," Stern said in an affidavit filed with the court. "Once filed, the forms are available for public inspection."

State Supreme Court Justice Lawrence E. Kahn signed an order Thursday for a July 28 hearing on Stern's motion for a preliminary injunction barring the Ethics Commission from enforcing the financial disclosure law until the constitutionality of the statute is reviewed in court.

Stern contends that imposing the reporting requirement on people like himself, who wish to be but are not yet public officials, violates the state and federal constitution and could have a chilling effect on free speech.

"The purpose of the law is to serve as a deterrent to corrupt officeholders by shedding the light of public disclosure on their personal financial affairs," Stern said.

"The law serves no such purpose for a candidate who does not hold office but seeks to exercise his First Amendment rights."

More Americans suffer from obesity

■ Study: Number of overweight adults, which had remained stable at about a fourth of adult population from 1960 to '80, jumps to one third between 1980 and '91.

Associated Press

American adults may be more aware of the need to exercise and count calories than they once were, but more of them than ever are overweight.

The number of overweight adults, which had remained stable at about a fourth of the adult population from 1960 through 1980, suddenly jumped to a third of all adults between 1980 and 1991, according to a recent study by the National Center for Health Statistics in the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

For purposes of the study, obesity was defined as being 20 percent or more above a person's desirable weight. That is about 25 pounds for an average 5-feet-4-inch woman and 30 pounds for an average 5-feet-10-inch man.

The increase in obesity rates continues despite a growing awareness that it has a negative effect on health and despite the continued growth of the diet industry, now estimated to have revenues of $40 billion to $50 billion a year.

The study's figures on children were not available last week, but several experts who had seen the data said that obesity among the nation's youth was increasing at an even faster rate than it was among adults.

Although the study confirms what experts have said they suspected, it is the first time the growth of the problem in the 80s has been measured.

The data on American weight patterns have been collected in several Government surveys that began in 1960. The studies are designed to determine the relationship between diet and health and help the government implement its food assistance programs.

The latest study found that the groups with the highest proportion of overweight people were black non-Hispanic women, at 49.5 percent, and Mexican-American women, at 47.9 percent. Those levels represent increases of 12.2 percent and 15.7 percent, respectively, compared with the 1980 rates.

Although the percentage of white non-Hispanic women who are overweight is lower, 32.4 percent, obesity in that group increased at a much higher rate, 35.6 percent, from 1980 to 1991.

The study offers additional support to health and nutrition professionals who argue that a national campaign to reduce obesity is essential to contain health care costs.

Dr. Philip Lee, assistant secretary of health in the Department of Health and Human Services, said on Friday, "The government is not doing enough. It is not focused. We don't have a coherent across-the-board policy. We are in the process of developing one."

On Tuesday the Journal of the American Medical Association will publish an article based on the study's findings about adults.

Neither the federal government, insurance companies nor the medical profession devote many resources to preventing obesity. According to the Agriculture Department, the food industry spends $36 billion a year on advertising in the United States.

Folks in Nicole Simpson's neighborhood get fed up

By Jennifer Bowles
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The aroma of espresso wafts through the morning air at Starbucks in Brentwood, where residents gather after a jog or before work to talk and read the newspaper.

A weary-looking waitress whips up a cappuccino for Andrea Clark.

"I couldn't sleep at all last night," the waitress said.

"It's all the nervous energy that's around here," responded Clark, a regular at Starbucks near Mezzaluna, where a waiter named Ronald Goldman used to serve up pasta and pizza.

Nervous because their upscale enclave is a secret no more. Nervous because their fancy homes, luxury cars and trendy shops are a fixture on the evening news. And nervous because their neighborhoods have been invaded by curiosity seekers in search of a glimpse of the place where Goldman and O.J. Simpson's former wife were murdered.

"It's out of hand, it's Disneyland," said Pauli Orchon, sitting on a ledge outside Starbucks as traffic whizzes along San Vicente Boulevard, the area's main thoroughfare.

A few blocks south, tourists with camcorders are a common site in front of Nicole Brown Simpson's condominium. Cars slow as they try to peer into the cloister of ficus that shields the spot where the two were slashed June 12.

A sign nailed to a nearby palm tree reads;

"Media & Lookie-loos: GET-A-LIFE — Go home and live your own so we can live ours in peace."

The rebuke does little to abate the stream of visitors from as far away as South Africa and Australia.

Peter Taylor, a salesman from Tulsa, Okla., brought his two young children to the murder scene on the last day of their two-week vacation. "I would have kicked myself had I not at least come down and looked," he said.

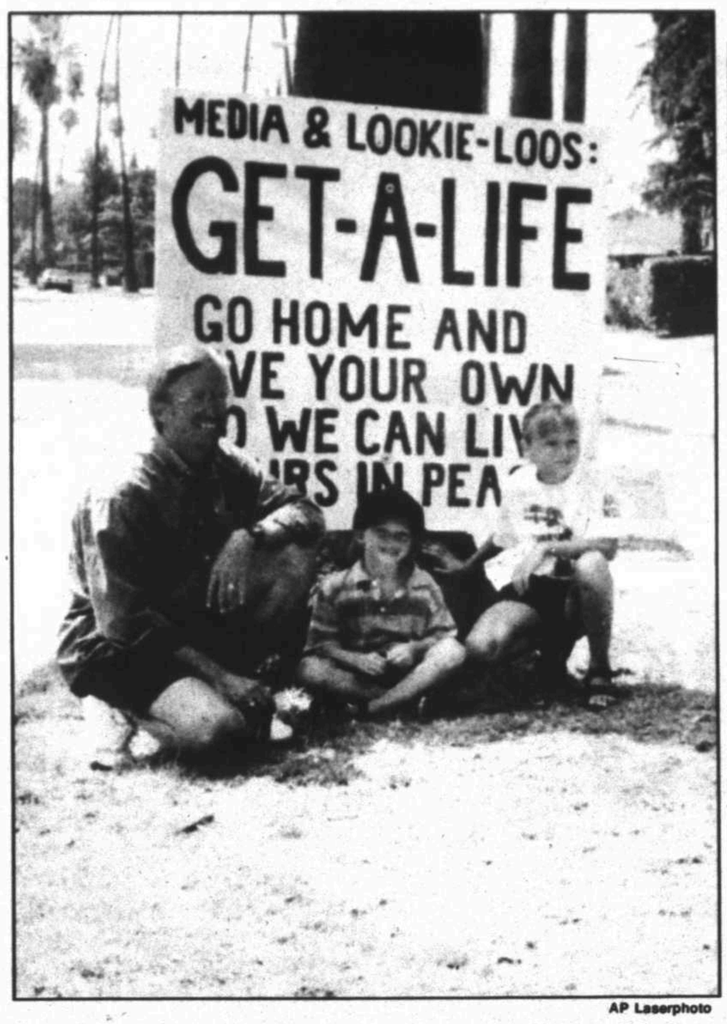

"Curiosity," was all New York City school teacher Rose Eng could say as she peered at the stone walkway leading up to where Ms. Brown, 35, and Goldman, 25, were found in a pool of blood.

"We even had dinner at Mezzaluna — but we went to the wrong one," Eng sighed.

As Eng snapped a picture of her friend standing in front of the condo, a motorist in a passing car barked, "SICKO!"

While many neighbors say they understand the fascination with the murders in which O.J. Simpson is accused, they are growing weary of lenses shoved in their faces and lawns being trampled.

"We're concerned that people are coming in who don't belong," said Denise Pilnak, as she returned home from her morning jog, her blond hair pulled back in a ponytail.

Peter Taylor, left, sits with his children, Max, 6, and Morgan, 9, in front of one of the various signs posted by neighbors on the street where Nicole Brown-Simpson lived. Brentwood residents are upset now that thousands make seemingly unholy pilgrimages to see the exact site where Nicole and Ron Goldman's bodies were discovered.

Health care keeps governors in waiting room

■ Nation's governors urge reform this year but seem divided on what health-care plan should look like, how to pay for it.

Associated Press

BOSTON — The nation's governors opened their summer meeting Saturday with a frustrating sense of deja vu: still waiting anxiously for word from Washington on what health-care reform will look like and mean for state budgets and programs.

But even as they urged Washington to act this year, it quickly became clear that the governors are unlikely to find enough common ground to speak with one voice on the thorniest issue in the debate — how to pay for reform.

"We're not able to resolve arguments over how to finance this," said Vermont Gov. Howard Dean.

As a result, the National Governors Association appeared unlikely to make any major new policy offerings on health care, as they did in January by adopting a plan calling for major insurance and other reforms but stopping short of demanding universal coverage.

Instead, the four-day NGA meeting shaped up more as a platform for the competing sides as the debate in Congress nears a turning point.

While waiting to hear from President Clinton, as well as the Senate Democratic and Republican leaders, governors of both parties said it was imperative that Congress adopt a reform package this year and urged Congress to use their framework.

"It is absolutely essential to pass a bill this year or you are going to retard progress among the states," said Dean. "It would be a tragedy for the American people if Congress doesn't pass a health-care bill this year."

South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell echoed Dean's call for action this year. But, voicing a view shared by many Republican governors, he said that if Congress cannot resolve financing for universal or near-universal coverage it should still pass insurance and other more incremental reforms.

"I've never seen a house built by putting the roof on first," he said. "Generally, you build a foundation." Dean wavered a bit when asked if he agreed, saying it would depend what was in any partial reform package. "We shouldn't settle for half a loaf," he said.

The governors also played a little game of partisan cat-and-mouse among themselves on the meeting's opening day.

After their caucus, Republicans said they expected Democrats to attempt to put the NGA on record supporting universal coverage, and would respond vigorously if they did but refrain from partisan volleys otherwise. The Democrats, however, said they had no plans to do that, and vowed not to be partisan unless the Republicans went first.

Having health care atop their agenda but on an uncertain path in Congress is becoming a recurring theme at the NGA sessions.

At last summer's meeting and again in January, Clinton said he hoped the governors would join him in a bipartisan search for health care reform answers.

Camp shows youths how to live with diabetes

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Diabetic youths are learning how to live wholesome, healthy, independent and full lives by following a daily regimen that is encouraged at Camp Sweeney for diabetic children.

Each summer, through scholarships funded by the Midland-based Camp for Diabetic Youth Foundation for West Texas and New Mexico, youths who suffer from diabetes attend the Gainesville camp.

"We learn how to control it (diabetes)," said 11-year-old Emily Moore of Odessa. "You just have to eat right, follow your diet."

Emily was among more than 20 West Texas and New Mexico youths who on Friday returned to Midland from a three-week stay at Camp Sweeney. While there, they rode horses, canoed, played field and court sports and learned about the diet and exercise regimens to follow in order to control the potentially crippling and debilitating disease.

"And there are people who care about you," said Amber Rutherford, 12, of Artesia, N.M.

The youths learn to "eat the proper foods and check your blood sugar and take your insulin like you're supposed to. We just learn that you are not the only person that has it," she said.

In diabetics, the body fails to produce the hormone insulin or fails to efficiently process the hormone for the body to maintain normal levels of glucose in the blood.

Network, sponsor want to give kids lift, six blimp ride

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

The sky's the limit for the Children's Miracle Network's latest effort to raise money for community children.

The organization and Blockbuster Video have teamed up nationwide to "Give a Kid a Lift," a fund-raiser that will not only raise money, but will send six residents who donate money on a blimp ride.

"Blockbuster has been a national sponsor for the past several years," said Christina Padilla, Children's Miracle Network Telethon coordinator. "This is the first year we have tried using the blimp as a fund-raiser, though. And, since our logo is a balloon, what better way to promote a campaign?"

Residents can register for the blimp ride at any Blockbuster Video in Midland and Odessa. For a $1 donation, customers can register their names on a paper blimp entry form. The names of six winners will be drawn and notified on August 2 for a ride in the Blockbuster blimp that is scheduled for August 5. Also to ride in the blimp will be the Blockbuster employee who gets the most donations registered.

All the money raised locally will go to the local chapter of the Children's Miracle Network.

"The money will help the kids here,"

Collyns to chair hall of fame committee

Staff Report

Five persons have been appointed to the Petroleum Hall of Fame Committee with longtime Midlander Bill Collyns being named chairman, according to Robert C. Leibrock, president of the Petroleum Museum's board of executors.

Leibrock, in naming Collyns as chairman, said, "Although the names of committee members — appointed every even year from the museum's two governing boards — remain anonymous, only the chairman's name is made public.

"This protection, mandated by the museum's governing boards, leaves the committee free to study and discuss the names submitted and to select the nominees without working under political duress," he said.

The committee will hold its initial meeting on July 25 and will meet for several weeks.

"By the end of September, members will have studied the files of 27 candidates, including three teams," Collyns said.

Following a study of each candidate's qualifications, the committee provides a slate of nominees for election to the Petroleum Hall of Fame. From those persons, the museum's boards of executors and trustees elect honorees by a majority vote at a meeting held in late fall.

An induction banquet is set for April for the honorees, their families, friends and business associates.

Although there have been a total of 187 candidates to the Petroleum Hall of Fame, the 1992 election brought the number of honorees in the Petroleum Hall of Fame to a total of 85, including the first woman elected — Edith Whatley McKanna.

Lunch forum to focus on drugs in workplace

By Gary Shanks

To help Midland-area business owners and managers deal with the problem of drugs in the workplace, a luncheon forum is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Midland Center.

Some statistics indicate that 10 percent of the work force is under the influence of drugs or alcohol while on the job and that 65 percent of accidents on the job are drug related, according to Bruce Partain, communications/membership manager for the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

About 76 percent of drug users are employed, and they are six times more likely to file worker's compensation claims, according to the statistics presented by the Texas Drug Free Workplace Initiative.

GARY OTT

Why must we choose between full lives, secure futures?

The conversation was one of those where I figured I'd be better off just sitting back and listening.

So I did.

Ott

The two participants — they were both men, and I'd guess them to be in their mid to late 40s — were discussing whether or not a person should "experience" as much of life as possible without regard to cost or be more cautious and security oriented, keeping a close eye on the bottom line.

Each had traveled a different route.

The first guy was advocating the more daring approach. He said that "memories, both good and bad," are the key ingredients to a full and happy life. He said the worst thing that could happen to a person was to wake up one morning and realize he hadn't done anything. "Can you imagine the regrets that would cause you?"

But his words were missing the mark with the second fellow, who kept insisting that "a secure retirement in which I don't have to rely on the government or my children" was more important. Or, as he added at one point, "Memories — and I don't care how exciting they are — won't put food on the table."

They both made convincing arguments, and each seemed well on his way to practicing what he was preaching.

The "live-life-to-its-fullest" person was talking about his past experiences, which — at least in my eyes — were quite impressive and included such diverse activities as living in San Francisco during the Height-Asbury days, hitchhiking cross country, spending a summer in Paris, opening several of his own businesses, many of which failed, and protesting segregated schools in Georgia in the mid-1960s.

But in order to do all of those things, he had been required to change jobs frequently and, as a result, he, by his own admission, had a very modest amount of money saved for his later years.

It was a situation that didn't seem to bother him.

"So what?" is how he so eloquently put it when that fact was pointed out to him. "I'll worry about that when the time comes. Besides, I might die before I retire and then what good would all of that money do me?"

I thought it was a rather simplistic answer, but I let it pass.

Mr. Cautious did not.

"Counting on death to take care of your retirement years seems a bit immature, don't you think?"

There was no answer.

So he continued to make his point. "The bottom line is this, by having some stability, some job security, some money stashed away, a person can look to the future with at least some degree of confidence. You never know what is going to happen tomorrow. You'd better be prepared."

He then gave a brief rundown of his own life. It was about what you would expect. He had been with the same company for more than 20 years, had received several promotions over the course of his career and now held a position with considerable stature and a comfortable salary. He had a nice retirement program with the company, and on the side, he was investing heavily in IRAs and other "safe" ventures.

His words, too, were falling on deaf ears.

"And, that's it?" Mr. Take-A-Chance said. "You work your whole life so you can grow old with more money than you'll ever spend. What's the point?"

"The point is I don't want to be a burden on anyone else."

"That's all fine and dandy, but you're letting life pass you by. Roll the dice occasionally. Take a chance. Look beyond the mundane."

There was a moment of silence. Then they both looked at me, awaiting my reaction.

I shrugged.

Make a choice, they demanded.

"Fine," I said. "I'll take both. Give me the money, and I'll buy my memories. After all, everything has a price."

DIABETES: Camp shows youths healthy eating habits

quires daily injections of insulin. Type II diabetes — "non-insulin" or "adult-onset diabetes" — may require use of oral medication.

"You need to take care of yourself right now while you're young," said Susan Vasquez, 13, of Andrews. "You learn how to test your blood sugar, take your insulin. If you don't (take care of your health), you'll regret it when you're older. You might be fat or something."

Jeremy Everett, 13, of Kermit said he needs to "eat all of the right foods," including fruits and vegetables, and to avoid foods that are high in fats and sugar.

"I can't eat it when I'm not supposed to," Jeremy said. "I'm just like a regular person except I just have to eat certain foods, take shots."

The Camp for Diabetic Youth Foundation was established by Jess Ann Thomason of Midland. The camp, governed by a board of directors, raises funds for scholarships to send the youths to camp.

At camp, the boys and girls "share their experiences, and they talk about (their diabetes)," Ms. Thomason said. And they learn how to cope with peer pressure, which is "quite a problem" among some teen-agers, Ms. Thomason said.

"For some of them, the blood sugar swings up and some swings low," she said.

The youths undergo "intensive study" at the camp, which she thinks is the "the best in the United States.

"These children have grown, matured," Ms. Thomason said.

"So many of them have lost weight. Others have picked up a little weight. They have their lives in control. And they are just extremely happy."

Brandie Scown, 14, of Odessa went into a coma for four days 1½ years ago and almost died after she, somewhat daringly, ate almost a whole bag of Oreo cookies.

"She had heard about other people who had cheated (on their diets)," said her mother, Romi Scown. But her "body couldn't process" the rich Oreo cookies.

Brandie was hospitalized, and her body was rehydrated.

She has benefited from attending the camp.

"You learn a lot about your diabetes and about yourself and how it affects you," Brandie said of camp. "And you learn how other people deal with it (diabetes).

"I can't have chocolate double-dipped fudge," Brandie said. However, she said that occasionally she can eat "plain ice cream.

"I'll say 'no' if can't have it (any food or drink)."

Brandie's mother said that a "big benefit" of the camp is teaching children "how to be on their own when they are away from us. They have to learn how to handle the peer pressure away from us."

Brandie's father, Mike Scown, said diabetics need discipline to maintain a healthy diet and a wholesome life.

"It doesn't change things a lot, but you have to live a regimen," he said. "We eat (meals) at a certain time. It's a routine. It's a healthy diet. Everybody ought to be on this diet," which includes natural foods that are low in sugar and fats and "lots of fruits and vegetables."

Brandie "lives a normal routine of a 14-year-old kid," Scown said.

lunch forum, which will feature Ron Backer — laboratory director for Harrison Laboratories in Midland — and Evelyn Blake — a certified employee assistance professional with the Texas Drug Free Workplace Initiative in Arlington.

The problem may not be as intense in Midland as in some larger urban areas, but it still bears concern, area businessmen have told chamber directors.

"We can't live in a sheltered environment and not know that these problems are out there," Partain said.

Drug use in the workplace has been identified as a problem by members of the Midland Small Business Council, Partain said.

"And there are some solutions out there. That's the exciting part about this," Partain said.

The identification of an employee need not in all cases lead to dismissal, he said.

The forum will feature ways that employers can intervene and give the employee a chance to mend his life and again become a productive employee.

"Employers can become part of the healing process and look out for their financial interests as well," Partain said.

Topics at the meeting will include ways to recognize the problem, steps in setting up a drug-free workplace, state and federal regulations, establishing policy, drug testing, employee assistance programs and a five-step formula for supervisors.

Discussion and participation are encouraged at the forum, which is sponsored by Harrison Laboratories and the Reporter-Telegram.

The Small Business Development Centers of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin participate in bringing the lucheon forums to Midland.

The luncheon forum for business is a quarterly presentation of the Midland chamber. The cost is $5 and includes lunch. To attend, contact Dawn Webster at 683-3381 or fax 682-9205.

Pickens urges officials to seize leadership in gas, oil industry

ARLINGTON (AP) — Boone Pickens, who heads of one of the nation's largest independent natural gas and oil producers, predicted another oil embargo on Saturday and urged Texas officials to seize the opportunity to redefine the state's leadership role in the oil and gas arena.

Pickens, chairman and chief executive officer of Dallas-based MESA Inc., said another oil embargo would "severely cripple" the United States. He urged that domestic natural gas be used to replace some of the nation's dependence on foreign oil.

Speaking to business editors and writers, Pickens urged the journalists to closely watch the environmental debate and the alternative fuels movement. The state of Texas is now crafting a plan on how to comply with federal Clean Air Act mandates.

Pickens, a major proponent of natural gas as a fuel, said it's important that the state of Texas not allow reformulated gasoline to be listed as an acceptable fuel.

"If a loophole is created for reformulated gasoline to meet the clean fuel mandates, it's not likely . . . we can stimulate a market for domestic natural gas. It's that simple," Pickens said.

Brownsville zoo to have Komodo dragons exhibit

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Some of the world's largest living lizards can be found for a while at the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownsville.

The exhibit of Komodo dragons, the name of the large lizard species, was unveiled Friday at the Gladys Porter Zoo.

The animals, which have big enough appetites to eat an animal the size of a deer, are on loan from the Cincinnati Zoo, where the Komodo's were bred. Two groups of hatchlings were produced, one in 1993 and one in 1991.

Komodos are found in the Indonesian islands of Komodo, Rintja, Padar, and western Flores in the Lesser Sunda Island chains.

About 2,000 Komodos live within the Lesser Sunda Islands. They are highly protected by the Indonesian government and are held in great esteem by Indonesians.

Records raise questions about study of Texas prisons by firm

■ Architectural company recommended building new facilities instead of adding onto existing ones.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — A state-paid architectural firm that says adding onto prisons would be more costly than building new prisons has made at least $6.8 million from the state in new prison construction, according to records obtained by The Associated Press.

Officials from Texas Comptroller John Sharp's office, which has recommended that the state add new beds to old prisons, on Saturday accused the Texas Department of Criminal Justice of conducting business laden with conflict of interest.

"The taxpayers got mugged again by the prison system," said Greg Hartman, Sharp's communications director. "Anyone would question a company that makes millions to build prisons being hired to study whether we need to build new prisons."

Prison officials defended the hiring of the Dallas-based architectural firm Henningson, Durham & Richardson, Inc., (HDR) to study the prospect of adding on beds to existing prisons.

TDCJ Executive Director Andy Collins said HDR has world-class credentials and was the only firm capable of doing the prison bed analysis under a tight deadline.

"We were asked to do an . . . examination. We did that," Collins said. "My argument is not with Mr. Sharp. I am not going to argue with anybody."

Merle Bachman, executive vice president of HDR, said:

"Anything we have done as a company is appropriate. We do studies all across the country for states that determine whether they need additional beds or to remodel. That's part of the business we do."

An audit by Sharp's office has recommended that the state, which faces a huge backlog of prisoners in county jails, can add 5,500 prison beds to existing facilities at a cost of just under $300 per bed.

Earlier this week, a study by HDR showed the state would have to pay out anywhere from $32,100 to $128,100 per bed to pull off Sharp's proposal.

The state is currently building some 76,000 new prison beds at costs much lower than $128,100 per bed.

Following the release of HDR's study, Texas Board of Criminal Justice Chairman Carol Vance called Sharp's recommendation "a dead issue."

Vance said Sharp's estimates failed to consider costs the state would have to pay out to ensure the prisons meet the Ruiz settlement, an accord that ended 20 years of federal court supervision over Texas prisons.

State legislators will make the ultimate decision about whether it's cost-effective to remodel prisons to add more beds.

Hartman said HDR's estimates are "ridiculous" and called leaders of the state's prison system "a group of bureaucratic terrorists unwilling to consider new ways to save money."

"The real question here is the credibility of the prison bureaucrats," Hartman said Saturday.

Authorities to seek pauper's burials for 30 unclaimed bodies of Davidians

WACO (AP) — Authorities say they will seek pauper's burials for the bodies of 30 followers of David Koresh who died during last year's confrontation with government officials.

All Branch Davidian bodies are unclaimed in a Fort Worth medical examiner's office. Seven have yet to be identified.

The bodies include Koresh's wife, Rachel Jones Koresh; her three children; her father; brother; her sister; and her sister's twins, also sired by Koresh; Juliet Santoyo Martinez, 30, and her five children, ranging in age from 3 to 13.

Justice of the Peace James Collier of Mart said Friday he has asked the county welfare department to help take care of the matter.

"We're going to have to do something," Collier said. "It's been what — 14 months since the fire? We've given the families a lot of time to make up their minds on what they want to do."

Four agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and six Branch Davidians died on Feb. 28, 1993, when the ATF tried to arrest cult leader Koresh for possessing automatic weapons.

Koresh and 78 followers died 51 days later in a fire set hours after FBI began spraying tear gas through holes they had punched in the walls of the sect's compound 10 miles east of Waco.

Collier asked for pauper's burials for 12 of the unclaimed victims, including Ms. Martinez and her children Audrey, 13; Abigail, 11; Joseph Robert, 8; Isaiah, 4; and Crystal, 3.

McLennan County also is looking to bury Perry Jones, 64, and his children: David Michael Jones, 30; Rachel Jones Koresh, 23; and Michele Jones, 18; and her 22-month-old twins, Chica and Latwan.

Perry Jones was considered Koresh's top lieutenant until he was killed in the Feb. 28, 1993, gunbattle. David Jones, the first victim identified following the April 19, 1993, blaze, was the postman who allegedly warned Koresh that government agents were planning to raid their home.

Collier said Mary Jones, wife of Perry Jones, agreed at first for the county to bury members of her family, but later objected.

"Something has to be done, and it's the county's responsibility if no one claims the bodies," Collier added.

Koresh's mother, Bonnie Haldeman, buried him at an undisclosed location in a private ceremony last year near Tyler, and Collier said he thought she might want to bury Rachel Jones Koresh with him. He said he's still waiting to hear.

In addition to Koresh's three children Cyrus, 8; Star, 6; and Bobbie Lane, 2; other unclaimed bodies include Raymond Friesen, 76; Douglas Wayne Martin, 42; Wayne Martin, 20; James Riddle, 32; Aisha Gyarfas, 17; Novellette Sinclair, 36; and two of Wayne Martin's daughters, Sheila, 15, and Lisa, 13.

Seven of the Branch Davidians have yet to be identified despite extensive DNA testing by the federal government.

Report exposes criminal history of youth who faces death penalty

HOUSTON (AP) — He's 16 and faces the death penalty or life in prison for the shooting death of a sporting goods manager.

He's also no stranger to trouble, and his tale is another indication of the woes facing Harris County authorities.

The suspect in the June 27 slaying of Donnie Jones Jr., 38, has been arrested in Houston eight times before, twice for armed felony assaults, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

Despite the record, the minor has never been to court and has spent a mere four days in juvenile detention, sources told the Chronicle. Because of his age, his name has been withheld from the media by authorities.

Jones' murder has caught considerable attention by crime-jaded locals.

The manager of an Academy sporting goods store was killed as he was holding on to the suspect after a security guard caught the teen shoplifting a $40 pair of athletic shoes.

A native of El Salvador, the teen has a criminal record that began when he was 12 years old, according to records given to the Chronicle by juvenile probation department sources.

Carole Allen, spokeswoman for the Harris County juvenile probation department, said Friday that she could not comment on the specifics of the teen's history since, by law, criminal juvenile histories are confidential.

But Ms. Allen said it would not be unusual for there to be no court appearance nor declaration of delinquency in a case like the one outlined in the records the Chronicle obtained.

"Sometimes the charges are minor, and the cases are just counseled and closed," Allen said. "Sometimes the (district attorney) doesn't want it, because there's not enough evidence."

Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Godwin agreed there did not appear to be anything unusual about this suspect's history, or the fact that he had never been to court.

According to the records and sources:

■ The teen most recently was arrested May 25 on a marijuana charge. He was released the next day to his older brother after one day in detention.

■ The suspect's criminal record depicts a problem childhood, beginning with the boy's referral to juvenile authorities in an October 1990 criminal trespassing case when he was 12.

■ Four months later, he was again referred to juvenile authorities, for a Class C misdemeanor theft charge. He was not detained in either of those cases, which juvenile sources said probably were closed after the youth received counseling.

■ On Sept. 18, 1991, the suspect was booked into juvenile detention facilities on a Class B misdemeanor theft charge. He was released two days later to child welfare authorities.

■ The youth was charged with Class B misdemeanor theft July 2, 1992, and spent a day in detention before being released to a relative.

■ Last Oct. 18, he was referred to juvenile authorities following his expulsion from school. Four days later, he was referred for aggravated assault with a weapon, but the screening officer in the case decided there was insufficient evidence to have him picked up or to forward the charges to the district attorney's office.

Sheep, goat producers plan to meet with governor, U.S. agriculture official

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Sheep and goat producers concerned about their industry plan to meet Monday with Gov. Ann Richards and a top U.S. Department of Agriculture official.

Richards and Bob Nash, agriculture undersecretary, will discuss how government can help as the Wool Act gradually ends.

Congress voted last October to phase out the Wool Act over the course of two years. Wool and mohair price-support payments will be cut 25 percent this year, 50 percent in 1995 and eliminated in 1996.

Texas producers are the biggest beneficiaries of the program, with some 16,000 ranchers in 35 West Texas counties earning $85 million of the subsidies in 1992.

Producers in Texas — source of more than 90 percent of the nation's mohair and 25 percent of U.S. wool — are trying to think up ways of replacing the lost income.

Ideas include adding more value to sheep and goat products, and trying to locate more processing facilities in the state.

"Texas processes less than 8 percent of the sheep and goat commodities it produces," said Ross Setzler, a consultant for Tejas Packing International Inc., a Brownwood project. "We have always had such good incentive programs that it didn't matter that our products were being processed out of state. Of course, now that has changed."

He said investors hope for financing assistance — from agencies including the Small Business Administration and Farmers Home Administration — that could help Tejas Packing start slaughtering and processing goat meat by next year.

The thriving goat-meat market has proved to be one of producers' key alternatives to incentive payments. Tejas Packing would pay goat producers an incentive for producing a high-quality meat goat.

"We believe goats are where turkey was 30 years ago," Setzler said. "There's a demand out there for goat meat, and as we make it more readily available it is going to take off. But I think we're going to need to lean on the governor to help us with financing."

Towers make DFW leader in air traffic control

GRAPEVINE (AP) — In keeping with Texas tradition, Dallas-Fort Worth International dedicated two new air traffic control towers that make it a leader in air traffic control.

The airport, expected to be the world's busiest by decade's end, becomes the first commercial airport in the world with more than one tower.

"Everything you do in Texas, you do big," FAA Deputy Administrator Linda Daschle said at dedication ceremonies Friday.

"Nothing like this has ever happened before in American aviation. Again, Texas is in the forefront of change."

The two towers, on the east and west sides of the sprawling airport, guide aircraft that are taking off and landing. The original tower, in the center of DFW, now directs planes through the airport's maze of taxiways.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

New faces join MC in administrative, public relations departments

By H.A. Tuck

Rudy Gonzales arrived this week to begin duties as vice president of Administrative Services. He'll spend some time with Bob Phillips, who retires on July 28 after 20 years of service with MC.

Tuck

Elise Coombs assumes duties as public relations director next week, which includes writing this column.

Early in my first job with the Moore County News in Dumas, at age 12, it was emphasized that news writers used the editorial "we" in referring to themselves. Perhaps it was to imply there were several folks responsible in case a reader took exception, but primarily it was to place the reporting on an impersonal level.

I'm going to break that rule for the next few paragraphs to conclude my last Letter From College.

Since June 1978, Letter From College has appeared weekly in the Reporter-Telegram. That's more than 830 columns without a break, not even for holidays or vacations, plus zillions of news releases and thousands of photos. As I told someone when I announced my plans to retire, "I've written 'come and register' about as many ways as I know how."

Few have been as blessed as I. My parents appreciated not just education, but learning for its own sake. Teachers have been and continue to be in my family: my mother and an aunt, my brother and sister-in-law. From the time I first walked into that newspaper office, I knew I wanted to be a writer and, with very few detours, that's what I have done for a long and interesting career. Combining that with photography, helping others see the beauty, reality or excitement that can be captured on film, was a bonus.

Midland has been our home since 1968, when I became public relations director for the Midland Chamber of Commerce. Almost immediately, plans for a college in Midland began to take shape. From my chamber staff position, I was allowed to be involved with that planning and the early development of the college. I even taught some classes for MC at night in the Lee High School buildings.

Langford, the founding president, offered me a job in 1975; Jess Parrish kept me on during his 10 years as president, and David Daniel continued the last three.

From a barren site on the far edge of the city, Midland College has become an educational force in the community, the region, the state and the nation. The campus is an oasis in the desert, expanding outward to other parts of the community and to other towns in the region. It has thrived and bloomed, despite occasional setbacks, keeping a long-lasting honeymoon relationship with its constituents, its taxpayers and its students. Much of this is due to the leadership of the largely unsung board of trustees, the dedicated administration and staff, but primarily because of the outstanding faculty. A big help to me the past 10 years has been my secretary, Mary Lopez-Garza.

My job has been as chief cheerleader, pointing out what was being accomplished by others — both employees and students. Seeing students, especially the older ones, arrive tentatively, gain in confidence and skills, then depart for good jobs or another degree, has been the high point of it all.

Serving as the sports information director has allowed me to be associated with an unequaled group of athletes and coaches, as witnessed by a long string of championships. It's great fun to watch Spud and Mookie on television, but it's equally heartwarming to hear about those athletes who have become successful as teachers, coaches, business owners and parents.

Writing and photography have allowed me some extraordinary experiences, meeting U.S. presidents, princes, princesses, crooks, sports legends, authors, movers and shakers and thousands of just ordinary, extraordinarily wonderful people. Each person has a story, each face has character. It's been my privilege to record some of them. I appreciate the unique composition of Midland, and we'll continue to make it our home.

My wife, Jennie, and our sons, Terry and Tommy, sacrificed a lot during my career, which included many 16-hour days, weekend work and interrupted holidays. I look forward to spending more time with them and with our three grandchildren. There's volunteer work to be done and, since writing isn't easily exorcised, perhaps a book to write.

I might relate the time I shipped a live tarantula, then a dead tumbleweed; expound on ways to make the County Activity Building look like an elegant ballroom; tell how to push-start a diesel bus; spell out 101 ways to get your positive activities noticed by the media. On second thought, perhaps I won't write that book right now. Too many of those who were involved in the most hilarious (or embarrassing) events still are alive!

Thanks to those who encouraged me, who said they learned something from my writing; the thousands who learned a bit of the art and craft of photography; thanks also to those who overlooked my mistakes; apologies for those stories I overlooked or those I harmed.

And since I continue as a writer and as an educator, I'll close with the symbol that I have used at the end of each article for more than 50 years. Originally used by telegraphers to mark the end of their transmissions, it was adopted by newspaper writers to mark the end of their stories. It's known as -30-

Task force needed on oil bust cycle

Texaco recently announced a restructuring that will mean a loss of 120-160 company jobs in the Midland Division. That news was preceded by announced employee cuts by Exxon, Arco, and Amoco. In the past six months approximately 500 jobs have been lost in Midland. That hurts.

Downsizing, restructuring, and oil companies moving in and out of town is nothing new to Midland. In fact, it is as much a part of our history as the booms and busts, and some have measured their careers by the number of times they have lived in Midland.

Oldtimers dismiss the loss of major oil company employees with the casual comment: "They'll be back. They always come back." But there is something new about the recent exodus of oil company employees from Midland. They may not be back.

The oil industry today is undergoing a radical restructuring as it settles into a smaller permanent structure. What Midland loses today may very well be permanent, and that is why it is critical to halt a hemorrhage of well-educated, civic-minded and well-paid oil and gas employees from our city.

Diversification is great, and should not be discounted as a means of growing the economy, but oil and gas remains the heart, soul, and life blood of Midland, and retaining that should be job one.

Oil companies are forsaking Midland for Houston, but in the final analysis Midland has as much or more to offer a company in the oil business. There are some oil companies that need to be in Houston, but in this day of jet planes, faxes, computers and teleconferencing, almost any oil company can do business just as well in Midland as Houston. Parker & Parsley is proof of that. So are all the major oil companies that still have a presence here.

Because it sits in the middle of 60 percent of the oil in Texas — a number that will grow to 75 percent by the end of the decade — Midland is a world-class oil town, and this is a fact that needs to be developed, and hammered home constantly.

Those who think that oil company decisions on restructuring and transferring employees are capricious dictates from on high and cannot be influenced by a good argument are wrong. Such restructuring moves are preceded by months of agonizing planning, in which many factors — including windshield time, travel expenses, quality of life, moving expense, office rent and employee morale — are factored in.

In the midst of all this detailed planning there is still time and room for a town like Midland to make its case, before the ax falls — and it should!

A broad based task force of Midland citizens and institutions should be formed immediately to look at how Midland can best make its case, and then to aggressively and passionately pursue not only the task of keeping oil companies in Midland, but of getting others to move to town as well.

The best defense is still a good offense.

Commercial banks challenge credit unions

WASHINGTON — Some of the best small-loan bargains in the country — credit unions — are being challenged once again by an old enemy, commercial banks.

Anderson

With less than a 7 percent share of all deposits in the country, and relatively untainted by scandals or bankruptcies, credit unions rarely receive the media attention that follows the commercial banking and thrift industries. But sources on Capitol Hill are predicting that this relative anonymity will soon come to an end.

According to several congressional staffers, banking interests are once again gearing up to convince members of Congress to tax credit unions. Helped by a powerful lobby, bankers are seeking to end a tax exemption that they claim is depriving the U.S. Treasury of hundreds of millions of dollars per year.

Commercial banks have been trying for years to end the tax exemption that credit unions traditionally have enjoyed. Since 1980, credit union deposits have increased sixfold, eating up an ever larger share of the funds that would otherwise go to banks and thrifts. Since credit unions are depositor-run, non-profit institutions, most credit unions are able to offer better rates and lower fees than most commercial institutions. They're also less regulated than banks or thrifts.

"The bankers have gone overboard lately in fingering the credit unions as the enemy," a source on the House Banking Committee told our associate Dale Van Atta. "They are constantly visiting committee members (here) and over on the Senate side to talk about credit unions, about taxing them and so on."

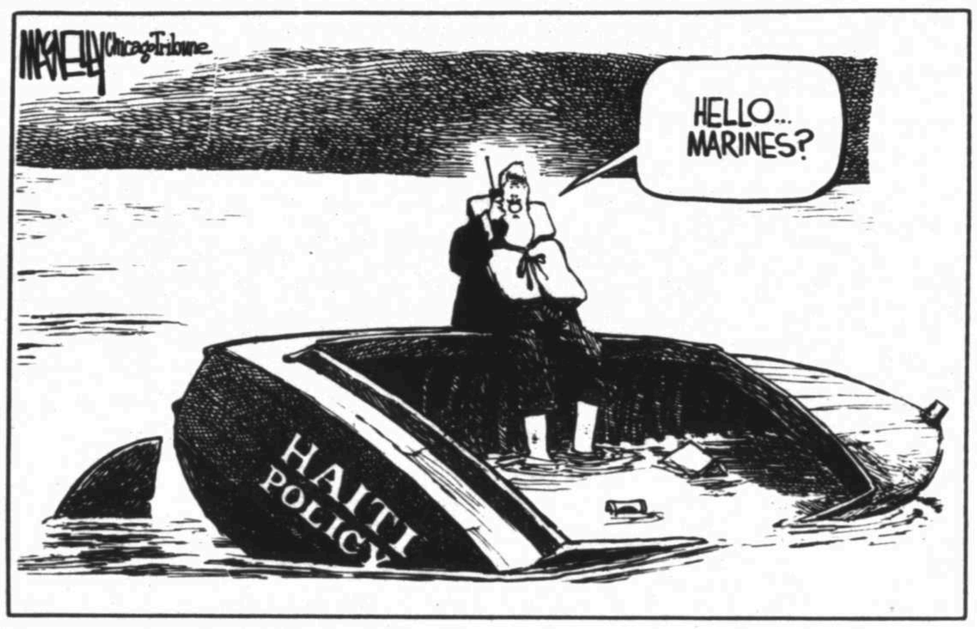

Were it not for the political activism of credit union members, these small institutions may have been taxed years ago. Several years ago, when banks were lobbying members of Congress to regulate and tax credit unions, the industry responded with "Operation Grassroots," which collected 6 million signatures and put 15,000 protesters on the National Mall in Washington. Although the protest will go down as one of the worst-timed demonstrations in history — the march on Washington took place on the same day that the Gulf War began — Congress heard the message nonetheless. They left the credit union system intact.

This time around, some congressional staffers say, banks are seeking to capitalize on the record turnover that Congress has seen in recent years to plead their case to a new crop of lawmakers.

House staffers have told us that banking industry lobbyists have made the rounds trying to find a sympathetic soul to carry their message on the credit union issue. While several freshman lawmakers are intrigued by the idea, bankers would prefer a more seasoned Democrat to do their bidding. Bankers might have to wait a long time, however, because many staffers and members of Congress already bank at their own federal credit union, which offers cheaper loans and higher rates on deposits than otherwise available in Washington.

"This is one issue that never goes away," complains credit union expert Mike Welch. "There is an ongoing effort by the banks to get the credit unions taxed. The bankers are having a rough time getting Congress excited about it since the banks themselves are making obscene profits compared to the credit unions. It's hard for them to convince any congressman that they're suffering."

'Irrational' Disney wants to desecrate sacred sod

HAYMARKET, Va. — In a churchyard here a gravestone reads:
Stonewall Jackson Campbell
May 2, 1863 Dec. 10, 1911

The infant Campbell was named for the Virginian who earned his name on a battlefield a few minutes gallop from the churchyard, a soldier who on May 2, 1863, received a mortal wound at Chancellorsville, not far from here.

Will

Problem is, much of American history was made not far from here, often by men who lived nearby: the church is hard by the intersection of the James Madison and John Marshall highways. Just over yonder lives Miss Beauregard, great-granddaughter of the Confederate general. And so it goes. You can hardly turn around out here without bumping into evocations of the nation's making.

This would be merely nice, not a problem, were it not for something that threatens to be the unmaking of this area. The Disney Company seems determined, almost irrationally so, to turn this area inside out and upside down by building, about a half mile from the churchyard and 3.5 miles from the Manassas field where Jackson fought, a huge commercial and residential real estate development, at the core of which will be an American history theme park.

Unfortunately, many faulty reasons have been indiscriminately adduced for opposing Disney's project, so the one sufficient reason may get lost in the melee. It is that Disney has decided to build something that would radically transform, beyond recognition, an area that is, arguably, America's most defining landscape.

America has various defining landscapes, not all of them bucolic. One is Manhattan's forever unfinished skyline, emblematic of our heroic materialism. But none is more drenched in the history of heroic idealism than Virginia's Piedmont region, a perishable window on the past, a place which, were Jefferson and Washington and Lee to revisit it, would be comfortably familiar to them.

Some of Disney's critics would, if they could, freeze this region in time. They cannot. Development will come to this place because it is a short drive from Washington and the government that will not stop growing. But Disney's mega-development, by its scale and nature, would change beyond recognition a historic region.

Some of Disney's critics get the vapors at the thought of what the theme park might do to the telling of America's story. But if Disney or anyone else wants to make a skit, or a hash, of history, well, the right to vulgarize is one of America's most vigorously exercised rights. Anyway, Disney would be hard-pressed to do worse than, say, Oliver Stone's movies.

Disney has armed its despisers by talking foolishly, as when Chairman Michael Eisner said, "I was dragged to Washington as a kid and it was the worst weekend of my life," or when a Disney "creative director" said the park would "make you feel what it was like to be a slave." (See your sister sold down the river, then get cotton candy?) However, again, the point is not what Disney wants to do, but where it wants to do it.

Eisner seems bent on becoming the archetype of the Hollywood vulgarian, greasing with money (some of it to politicians) the slide of a great corporation into the role of coarse bully, stamping its bootprints on hallowed places?

One of the roads that would have to become an enlarged congested highway to serve the park is Route 15 which runs north to Gettysburg. There one of the Berkeley boys now buried in the churchyard here was captured at the crest of Pickett's charge, at the wall on Cemetery Ridge now known as "the high-water mark of the Confederacy." From there Lee's army beat an honorable retreat.

It is astonishing that Disney, out of sheer stubbornness, is risking its reputation as a good corporate citizen, and is doing so to put here a project that could be put in many more suitable places. But it is not too late for Disney to learn a lesson from Lee, who is revered by the nation he tried to dismember, revered partly because he knew how to retreat and when to surrender.

Hemingway tries to cavort with Zelda Fitzgerald

There is an old story that Ernest Hemingway once saw Zelda and Scott Fitzgerald cavorting in the fountain outside New York's Plaza Hotel and felt challenged.

Being intensely competitive, Hemingway cried, "I can do a fountain cavort twice as good as Scott's and, what's more, I can do it without even getting my knees wet."

Baker

With which he leaped into the fountain and started to do the classic cavorter's veronica, which Manolete had taught him in the fountains of Andalusia.

Zelda, who never had any use for Hemingway anyway — or "Hemingway eningway," as she once wrote in Bullfight Digest — tripped him in mid-cavort. Hemingway came up soaked from toe to crown, including the famous gun arm which had terrified the entire animal population of the Serengeti.

Stumbling out of the fountain, he started to dry himself on the suit of the first man he encountered, who happened to be Robert Benchley. Struggling out of Hemingway's embrace, Benchley headed for the Plaza bar saying, "I've got to get out of this wet Ernest and into a dry martini."

This oft-told story is nonsense, of course. I tell it here only to show what a silly age we end-of-the-century Americans have put behind us. It is appalling to realize that our country was once so lighthearted that people told and re-told stories like this, stories with no moral weight and, worse, stories about people who drank — pardon the word — dry martinis.

Luckily we have survived and come safely to the present age of total earnestness, where we enjoy the governance of an earnest president and his earnest wife on whom earnest Republicans keep a piously earnest eye.

The above story about Robert Benchley, sad to say, was widely told in the 1940s by a generation that enjoyed belittling earnest Americans.

The punning punch line — "get out of this wet Ernest and into a dry martini" — was meant to be a sneer at those who earnestly sought to make a Depression-and-war-besotted America realize that life was no laughing matter.

These, remember, were people who actually drank dry martinis. No wonder they had world wars and dreadful depressions. Since jokes were told constantly without regard for the sensitive feelings of earnest people, it's not surprising that vulgarians among them might have joked about dry martinis.

But to drink the things! Such indifference to the liver is hard to conceive.

In some versions of the dry-martini story Robert Benchley is supposed to have said he had to "get out of these wet clothes" instead of "out of this wet Ernest" and into his dry martini.

Who cares? No true citizen of the earnest age. That's why it is sad to find this Benchley nonsense surfacing in The New York Times, a very Everest of earnestness, which recently said the "wet-clothes" line may have been Alexander Woollcott's.

How remarkable that so many people should once have known — and cared! — who Robert Benchley and Alexander Woollcott were. The explanation is that they were considered funny and that funniness was thought to have a value transcending its power to enlarge the consumer-goods market

If Benchley and his associates lacked earnestness, they did not lack interest in money. After many years of writing funny for small pay, Robert Benchley tried making some short funny films in Hollywood, proved to be good at it, and, having found where the money was, never came back to writing.

Among others in Hollywood about the same time were Scott Fitzgerald and William Faulkner. Both were famous drinkers. So were so many other writers of the time that medical treatises argued that prose composition led inexorably to the bottle.

Here in the age of earnestness that argument seems doubtful. Here in the age of earnestness, recoiling before the thought of a dry martini and lifting, a white wine spritzer, we can be pretty sure that what leads to the bottle is not writing, but lack of earnestness.

Voter: Past presidents knew value of religion

Now that the anniversary and remembrance of our fallen heroes are past. Now that the Independence Day fireworks have faded from sight and grown silent, let's reflect for a few moments on where our great nation finds itself. As our government has systematically expelled God from our schools and other institutions and anarchy rules the land, and the good Lord only knows what off the wall laws congress will pass next, let's hear from some of our past patriots and founding fathers.

First, here is the sixth president of the United States, John Quincy Adams, "The highest glory of the American Revolution was this: it connected, in one indissoluble bond the principles of civil government with the principles of Christianity." — Now let's hear from the governor of Virginia during the Revolutionary war, the great statesman of "give me liberty or give me death," fame, Patrick Henry. "It cannot be emphasized too strongly or too often that this great nation was founded, not by religionists, but by Christians; not on religions, but on the gospel of Jesus Christ! For this very reason persons of other faiths have been afforded asylum, prosperity, and freedom of worship here." — The great Republican president Abe Lincoln called this land "the last, best hope of mankind." I'm sure that in the enlightened nineties these statements would not be found very politically correct and I suppose the mighty ACLU, those self-appointed watch dogs of America, would haul them into court for speaking such blasphemy.

Two passages from God's word and I'll be through. Proverbs 14:34 says, "Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Also from Proverbs 29:2, "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice; but when a wicked man rules, the people groan."

Remember people, it's not too late too get this country back onto the right track. To do this we must be informed, be ready and come November - VOTE!

Flag thieves should think about people who paid

As you drive north on North Big Spring Street, just about a block South of Loop 250, you will notice two very tall empty flag poles. Until the early morning hours of July 4, these two poles were graced by the beauty of two flags flying in the West Texas wind. There have been very few times in the nine years we have operated our business that the public has seen these poles without their flags flying. In fact, just a few months ago, our business received a Certificate of Appreciation from the Marine Corps League "For Loyalty and Patriotism to Our County as exemplified by Publicly and Proudly Displaying the United States Flag." Indeed, this is an honor.

It seems to be a great sport to STEAL flags from businesses flying them. I'm sure, by now, these flags are hanging in the bedroom of some thoughtless individual and probably along side the stop sign he or she also took. I'm sure some mom or dad seeing such large flags in their kids bedroom could care less how they got there or where they came from. After all, it's just kids having fun.

Well, kids have your fun. Mom and dad, laugh along with them. Never mind that the flags cost $425 each. Never mind that it will cost several hundred dollars to have new ropes threaded through the pulleys. After all, it's just money and that company can afford it.

I just wonder if you who took the flags really know the real cost of those flags. Have you ever heard of World War I? Have you ever heard of World War II or the Korean War? Surely you have heard of the Vietnam War. Every man or woman who fought in any of those wars fought for those flags. Some paid a very high price, their life. So, the next time you think stealing a flag is just a matter of cutting the ropes and letting it fall to the ground, think again.

By the way, if you would like to have the knife back that you used to cut the ropes, come ask me for it. I have it.

MADD helper wonders why driver goes free

There is an incident that has happened recently that I think the citizens of Midland County should be made aware of. On March 16, about 3:30 p.m., there was an alcohol-related crash on Midland Drive and Andrews Highway. An innocent lady and a 15-year-old were in the turn lane waiting to turn into their home. An intoxicated woman hit the victims head-on, breaking both ankles of the 15-year-old and causing extensive internal injuries, broken ribs and crushed legs to the driver. After the family called MADD, we went to the hospital to assist the victims, therefore seeing much pain, mental and physical anguish, anxiety and fear with the victims and their families. I began to make calls trying to find something out about the crash and the D.W.I. I found out the D.W.I. woman had an active warrant for her arrest for breaking parole, active since 1990. Living in San Angelo, Midland and Stanton, no one had ever picked her up for breaking parole, therefore she was out driving without any insurance, no driver's license and D.W.I., causing serious bodily injuries to two people and the complete loss of their car and income.

With the victim in intensive care for 2 months, with the complete loss of her leg, we couldn't understand why no official would go to the hospital, where the D.W.I. woman was for several days, and arrest her. I made many calls to the parole board, the sheriff, DPS and Police Department trying to get something done about the D.W.I. driver who had an active warrant for her arrest. She got out of the hospital; then I was told no one could find her even though we knew where she was in Stanton. Then I was told no one could put her in their jail because it would cost the county money as she was in poor health and injured. I think someone had forgotten the county was paying for her hospital expenses and she was also receiving other aid from the government. Finally, there was a parole board hearing over in Stanton to see if there was probable cause to revoke her parole —although there was a warrant for her arrest for breaking parole since 1990, before she critically injured these people. As of this time, the D.W.I. woman still is out of prison, living in Stanton and waiting for a parole hearing to send her back to prison, we hope.

After seeing and hearing the suffering of the victims, all of this is hard for me to understand. Someone is responsible and liable for the loss of the victim's leg, that she can never work again and has to depend on someone else for her care.

This is the system that is supposed to protect innocent citizens. This is the same system that allowed my son, Joseph, and many others like him to be killed or injured. Maybe some of you have the answers, I don't.

Woman wonders why 1 man could build fire

Recently in the Reporter-Telegram, I read about the penalties for open fires in the county. As a resident of the county, I took heed and have not built any fires, even in a barrel. Today a man built a fire beside the road across the street from our business to burn off copper before he took it to the scales. When the officer showed up, he did not even make the man put the fire out, much less, fine him for the fire. I guess fines and penalties apply only to the landowners in the county that the officials know they can get their money from.

Adults should consider show's effect on children

I would like to register my disappointment in the management of KMID-TV. As I understand it, the station is reversing an earlier stand to begin showing "NYPD Blue." I had previously been proud of our area in refusing to carry this unwholesome program.

Many are glad this program will be available. I would ask them — in this case — to please consider the adverse effects of such blatant profanity, nudity and violence to the many young children who will unfortunately have unsupervised access to it. For too long, many adults have selfishly thought of themselves before those who follow. It would seem to me, as evidenced by the increasing juvenile crime, violence and pregnancy rates, that we will long be reaping the rewards of this neglect. Let's take a stand for what's right. Character really does count.

Southwest Air upsets innocent frequent fliers

On Friday, May 20, my wife and I had a very unusual, embarassing experience on Southwest Airlines. We earned two complimentary free tickets to fly roundtrip to any city served by Southwest Airlines because we had flown on that airline so often. We thought the tickets were very nice and assumed that we were confirmed all the way to New Orleans. Were we ever wrong!

In Houston, at Hobby Airport, the pilot, the gate attendant and two flight attendants called my wife and me to the front of the plane and told us to get off the plane. A flight attendant said the flight was overbooked. The pilot said that because we were nonfare paying passengers, we needed to give up our seats to fare paying passengers. We explained we had earned our tickets by flying many times on Southwest Airlines. The gate attendant said our tickets were nothing more than "Pink Passes."

I wrote my complaint to Southwest Airlines on May 22 and am still waiting for a reply.

Reader disagrees with Pfeifer on health care

I respectfully disagree with the Rev. Michael D. Pfeifer's letter (April 3) advocating health-care reform.

The reverend says health care is a basic human right. Health care is not a basic right anymore than there is a right to food, clothing and shelter. We have no right to health care at the expense of the taxpayer, Robin Hood-style.

The Judeo-Christian code instructs us as individuals to help our fellow man. The churches and helping organizations as well in charity can help the worthy poor and ailing.

The Reverend claims "the basic principle should be that we receive according to our need and pay according to our ability." This principle has failed miserably in the USSR, Cuba, Red China, South and Central America.

Such thinking has led to the present much abused welfare system where we have kept people dependent generation after generation. It is called Socialsm.

Is liberal media giving Rostenkowski a break?

Is Dan Rostenkowski immune to the scrutiny of the media?

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, he has had enormous influence on the decisions made that affect all Americans' lives. He is currently under indictment for in excess of twenty criminal acts, and I would like to know more about the impact this is having on his ability to influence governmental policy making and how it has affected this administration in general.

Considering his high position, I would think this situation would warrant daily updates on the legal maneuvering and reporting on how he is continuing, or failing, to continue to push for socialist health care and criminalizing self defense. Is he not being crucified because he, like the media, is liberal minded?

Rollerblade Barbie burns shorts

As executive director of the Bureau of Consumer Alarm, I am always on the alert for news stories that involve two key elements:

1. Fire.
2. Barbie.

So I was very interested when alert reader Michael Robinson sent me a column entitled "Ask Jack Sunn" from the Dec. 13, 1993, issue of the Jackson, Miss., Clarion-Ledger.

Barry

Here's an excerpt from a consumer's letter to this column, which I am not making up:

"Last year, my two daughters received presents of two Rollerblade Barbie dolls by Mattel. On March 8, my 8-year-old daughter was playing beauty shop with her 4-year-old brother. After spraying him with hair spray, the children began to play with the boot to Rollerblade Barbie. My little girl innocently ran the skate across her brother's bottom, which immediately ignited his clothes."

The letter adds that "There are no warnings concerning fire on these toys . . . I feel the need to warn potential buyers of their danger."

In his response, Jack Sunn says, cryptically, that "Mattel does not manufacture Rollerblade Barbie anymore." He does not address the critical question that the consumer's letter raised in my mind, as I'm sure it did yours, namely: Huh?

I realized that the only way to answer this question was to conduct a scientific experiment. As you may recall, last year, in response to a news item concerning a kitchen fire in Ohio, I did an experiment proving that if you put a Kellogg's strawberry Pop-Tart in a toaster and hold the toaster lever down for five minutes and 50 seconds, the Pop-Tart will turn into a snack-pastry blowtorch, shooting flames up to 30 inches high. Also your toaster will be ruined.

The problem was that I did not have a Rollerblade Barbie. My son happens to be a boy, and we never went through the Barbie phase. We went through The Masters of the Universe phase. For two years our household was the scene of a fierce, unceasing battle between armies of good and evil action figures.

So at the end of a recent column, I printed a note appealing for a Rollerblade Barbie. I got two immediately: one from Renee Simmons of Clinton, Iowa, and one from Randy Langhenry of Gainesville, Ga., who said it belonged to his 6-year-old daughter, Greta. ("It would help me if you could get Barbie back to north Georgia before Greta notices she's gone," Randy wrote.)

Rollerblade Barbie is basically a standard Barbie, which is to say, she represents the feminine beauty ideal, if your concept of a beautiful female is one who is 6 feet, 9 inches tall and weighs 52 pounds (37 of which are in the bust area) and has a rigidly perky smile and eyeballs the size of beer coasters and a one-molecule nose and enough hair to clog the Lincoln Tunnel.

But what makes this Barbie special is that she's wearing two little yellow Rollerblade booties, each of which has a wheel similar to the kind found in cigarette lighters, so that when you roll Barbie along, her booties shoot out sparks.

To insure high standards of scientific accuracy, I conducted the experiment in my driveway. Aside from Rollerblade Barbie, my materials consisted of several brands of hair spray and — this was a painful sacrifice — a set of my '68-vintage underwear. I spread the underwear on the driveway, then sprayed it with hair spray, then made Rollerblade Barbie skate across it, sparking her booties. I found that if you use the right brand of hair spray — I got excellent results with "Rave" — Rollerblade Barbie does indeed cause the underwear to burst dramatically into flame.

(While I was doing this, a neighbor walked up, and I just want to say that if you think it's easy to explain why you're squatting in your driveway, in front of a set of burning underwear, surrounded by hair spray bottles, holding a Barbie doll in your hand, then you are mistaken.)

So we can see why Mattel ceased manufacturing Rollerblade Barbie. I imagine that whichever toy designer dreamed up this exciting concept has been transferred to Mattel's coveted Bosnia plant. But what should be done about all the Rollerblade Barbies that are already in circulation? I believe that the only solution is for all concerned consumers to demand that our congresshumans pass a federal law requiring that all underwear, snack pastries and other household objects carry a prominent label stating: "WARNING! DO NOT SPRAY HAIR SPRAY ON THIS OBJECT AND SKATE ROLLERBLADE BARBIE OVER IT!"

Cisneros gives HUD gift to Dallas

Christmas came six months early at Dallas City Hall this week. U.S. Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros arrived at the party bearing a $25 million gift for the city's affordable housing program.

The grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development finally will enable the city to fund its ambitious plans for new in-town housing.

The municipal government now has the financial means to proceed with plans for stabilizing inner-city neighborhoods and funding downtown housing proposals. Construction of apartments in one or more of downtown's historic office buildings will proceed as early as this fall, enthusiastic city officials said.

It will take years to measure the full impact of Mr. Cisneros' commitment to Dallas. But almost as significant as the financial pledge from the HUD secretary was his challenge to the city.

All of the ingredients are in place for Dallas to take a leadership role on the affordable housing front, Mr. Cisneros said. He urged the city to prove that his new approach to solving America's housing shortage will work.

And indeed, Mr. Cisneros was right to choose Dallas as the starting place for his efforts to "reinvent" the housing department's sometimes shaky relationship with cities.

The Dallas City Council already has shown its support for affordable inner-city housing by approving a series of tax incentive programs and zoning changes. The only missing ingredient was sufficient funds for low-interest loans for prospective developers.

Now that Mr. Cisneros has resolved that issue. Dallas city officials should move swiftly to assure the housing secretary that his trust has been well placed.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The shorter the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis.
- We do not publish 'open' letters or copies of letters sent to others.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

Eastern wins

Midland Eastern pulled the Senior League District 3 playoff tournament out of the fire Saturday night at Simon Field with a 12-7 win over Odessa Sherwood after battling back from the loser's bracket.

The victory sends Eastern to the Senior Sectional Tournament, which begins Thursday in Lubbock. Sherwood is eliminated after needing only one victory over Eastern in two games to take the title.

Eastern scored six runs in the second inning, sending 11 batters to the plate. Michael Otho squeezed home one run. Jason Rogers singled home one run and Ross Nobles singled home another run in the inning while Eric Eschberger had a double.

Eastern put three more runs in lights in the fourth. Nobles and Otho each had an RBI in the frame.

Eastern closed out its scoring in the fifth as Russell Dunlavy had a three-run triple.

Michael Carrasco, the fourth Eastern pitcher, got the win.

A&M name stands

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M University's future arena will take the name of a wealthy booster.

Although groundbreaking on the new Chester J. Reed Special Events Center will not take place for another year, athletic director Wally Groff said the building's name will stand.

The A&M System Board of Regents meets next week to formally approve the construction and name of the 177,821 square-foot, $34.4 million arena. The project was given unanimous approval Friday by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board.

Groundbreaking for the proposed 12,500-seat center probably will be in May 1995, with completion 18 to 20 months after that, said Wesley Peel, System vice chancellor for facilities planning and construction.

Fuzzy whistles way to top

■ Fuzzy Zoeller, without a win in eight years, shoots a 64 to tie for the British Open lead.

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland — Fuzzy Zoeller, whistling while he worked his way to a 64, tied Brad Faxon the third-round lead Saturday in the 123rd British Open Championship.

The easy-going Zoeller, a former Masters and U.S. Open champ but the winner of nothing at all for eight years, completed three trips over the vulnerable Ailsa Course at Turnberry in 201, 9 under par.

The steady Faxon, 31, winner of four titles in an 11-season career on the PGA Tour, matched that total with a bogey-free round of 67.

"That's all you can ask for," Zoeller, 42, said of his share of the top spot, "to go into the final round with a chance to win."

But that will not be easy, he warned.

"If we have weather like this, it's going to take a low round because the golf course is vulnerable like this."

With the course still soft from early-week rains, the temperatures in the 60's and relatively gentle breezes ruffling the gorse and heather, the world's leading players had the Ailsa course at Turnberry at their mercy.

The exceptionally low overall scoring, however, did not extend to Tom Watson, the 44-year-old third-round leader who was hoping to match the record six British Opens won by Harry Vardon early this century.

The putting problems that have plagued him for seven seasons again cropped up in the middle of the round.

He missed a 3-footer for par on the 14th, then missed another, even shorter, par putt on the 16th.

It sent him reeling three shots off the pace.

But he kept the dream of another British Open alive with a birdie-birdie finish, a two-putt on the par-5 17th and a 15-footer on the 18th that completed a round of 69 left him a single shot back at 202.

He was tied at that figure with husky Ronan Rafferty of Northern Ireland, gritty young Jesper Parnevik of Sweden and Nick Price, the amiable man from Zimbabwe who has won three times on the American tour this season and 14 times around the world going back to his 1992 PGA Championship.

AUSTIN — Barry Switzer was a rookie again.

Five years removed from football, the former Oklahoma coach made his professional debut on Saturday by taking charge at the two-time NFL champion Dallas Cowboys training camp.

On his first day as boss of the Super Bowl champions in place of Jimmy Johnson, Switzer challenged the team to do it again and take him with them.

He did it in typical Switzer-style, emotionally waving his hands around and getting into the face of some of the players.

"I'm excited, it's like I'm a kid again," Switzer said. "I'm pumped up like it was my first day at Oklahoma."

Switzer, known for his pep talks at Oklahoma, gave the Cowboys one of his special motivational speeches.

"I challenged them," Switzer said. "I told them it was their work ethic that separated this team from

PASADENA, Calif. — In the World Cup, it simply doesn't get any better than this.

Romario vs. Roberto. Soccer dynasty Brazil vs. soccer dynasty Italy. South America vs. Europe.

And more. So much more.

"Maybe this is the way it was meant to be," Italy coach Arrigo Sacchi said. "We have in the final two great soccer nations."

They are two nations seeking an unprecedented fourth World Cup crown. On Sunday at the Rose Bowl — where Super Bowl and college football champions have been decided — they will settle who owns global soccer.

"It will be a great classic of international football, a clash of two three-time champions," Brazil coach Carlos Alberto Parreira said. "Finally, the world will have a four-time champion."

What more could the first World Cup staged in the United States ask for? A sensational tournament capped by the most attractive matchup.

Brazil won the last of its three titles in 1970, led by Pele, the greatest player soccer has seen. Italy won its third in 1982, and is seeking to become the first European team to win a World Cup held in the Western Hemispshere.

"Our people have waited too long for another World Cup," said Romario, whose superb scoring touch has guided Brazil into its first final since its last championship. "We have come to give the World Cup back to them."

Mac McGee and partner Scott Lovett shoot 64 in Saturday's second round of the GTCC Jamboree.

McGee-Lovett give chase

■ Ron and Dub Huckabee hold off fast charging Scott Lovett and Mac McGee for the lead heading into the final round.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

After an opening round 69, the pressure was off the team of Scott Lovett and Mac McGee. Three-time champions Ron and Dub Huckabee had scorched the field for an opening round 64 and seemed in control enroute to their fourth title.

But an early tee off time gave the Lovett-McGee team favorable weather conditions and smooth greens, enough for the duo to match the Huckabee's 64 from Friday and close to within one stroke of the lead heading into the final 18 holes of the 1994 Green Tree Country Club Jamboree.

"My partner made every putt he looked at, he played great golf today," said Lovett.

"It (64) is a pretty good score today," said McGee who was one of the first groups in Saturday. "It was nice and cool and the wind really didn't pick up until the back nine. The pin placements were pretty tough today. You really had to get it in the right position to the pins. The greens were smooth and played well.

"(64) should put us a shot behind or at the top going into tomorrow (Sunday)."

McGee was right. The seven-under-par score put his team just a single stroke back of the first day's leader Dub and Ron Huckabee.

The three-time champions of the Jamboree and runners-up a year ago fired a three-under 68 on Saturday to go along with Friday's 64.

"I didn't play very well today," said the younger Huckabee Ron. "Dad played good, he kept us in

Angels left stranded; Midland loses to Caps

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

You can bet the nightmares of the Midland Angels Saturday consisted of shooting ducks on a pond — and missing.

For the second night in a row, the Angels had trouble scoring runners from third base with less than two outs as the Shreveport Captains took the series lead 2-1 with a 7-5 Texas League victory at Christensen Stadium.

The big hurt for Midland came in the bottom of the ninth when the Angels loaded the bases with three consecutive singles to lead off the inning and failed to score as huge Stacy Jones, 6-foot-6, 230 pounds, recovered to record his league leading 23rd save of the season.

"Stacy getting out of a no-out, bases loaded jam was huge," said Shreveport catcher Doug Mirabelli. "He really battled out there when he was in trouble and that was the difference in the game.

"Midland had the tying run at second base with no outs and we were hoping to turn a double play. We get a liner to the shortstop (by Brian Grebeck), then a strikeout (on Ty Boykin). That relieved some of the pressure, but (Chris) Pritchett is up and he beat us two nights ago with a three-run double. He almost got another hit down the first base line, but (first baseman) Barry (Miller) made a good play on the ball to end the game."

Offense has had way in baseball's first half

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

It was only fitting that 15 runs were scored in the All-Star game and that baseball's midseason showcase would be punctuated by a dramatic ninth-inning home run by Fred McGriff.

This has been a season for hitters and homers and whether it's because of juiced-up baseballs or watered-down pitching staffs, there is no denying that the offense had things much its own way in the first half.

Fifteen batters reached the All-Star break hitting .330 or better. A dozen had driven in 70 or more runs. A half-dozen had 25 or more home runs.

Sluggers like Frank Thomas, Ken Griffey Jr. and Matt Williams all hit the break with home run totals that threatened Roger Maris' record of 61. Thomas and Griffey electrified the crowds in the All-Star home run derby with 500-foot shots that rattled around Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium.

While it's true that Pirates coach Rich Donnelly was tossing batting practice lollipops at them, Thomas and Griffey caused some oohs and aahs with their tape-measure shots.

Both have been hitting machines all season, the kind of batters that cause fans to pay attention when they're swinging.

Thomas, in particular, has been accumulating dramatic numbers and was leading the American League in six offensive categories. At the break, he was No. 1 in batting at .383, was one back of Griffey with 32 home runs and three behind Kirby Puckett with 78 RBIs.

That's a Triple Crown pace and made all the more remarkable by Thomas' selective approach at the plate that had produced a major league-leading 84 walks. He simply does not swing at bad pitches.

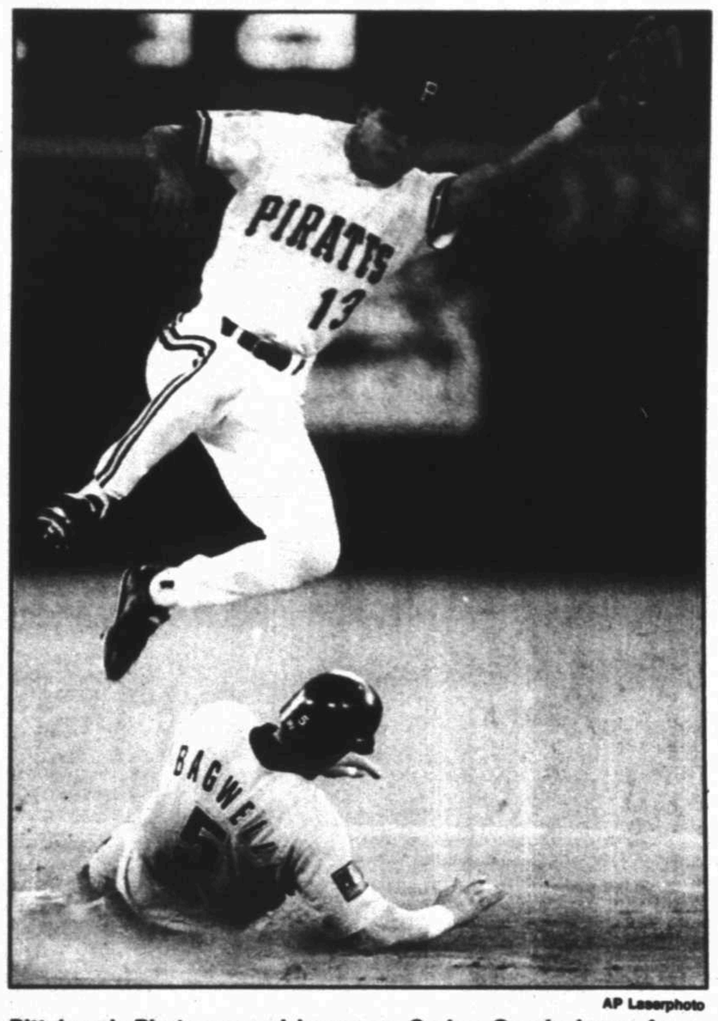

At .383, Thomas was only one percentage point ahead of New York's Paul O'Neill in the AL batting race. Tony Gwynn of San Diego led the National League, also at .383.

Thomas has almost singlehandedly kept the White Sox hot on the trail of Cleveland in the AL Central. The Indians, enjoying a renaissance in their new ballpark, may have been the best story of the first half. This is one of baseball's most dependable have-not teams, turned around by bright young stars like Kenny Lofton, Albert Belle and Carlos Baerga.

There were good races in the other AL divisions as well. The New York Yankees limped into the break with several injured players, but they were hanging on in the East, thanks to hitters like O'Neill and Wade Boggs, who was hitting .331.

In the West, Texas was the best of the sub-.500 teams, with Oakland, which started at 16-40, suddenly challenging for the division lead.

There were some National League surprises, too. Montreal's low-budget Expos slipped into first place in the East, just ahead of Atlanta at the break. Two of the young Expos, Marquis Grissom and Moises Alou, had big hits in the NL's All-Star victory.

Colorado grounds Cardinals

DENVER — Dante Bichette homered and drove in four runs and Andres Galarraga had two homers and three RBIs as Colorado continued to assault St. Louis pitching in a 15-4 win over the Cardinals Saturday.

The Rockies, in beating St. Louis for the third straight time in the series and fifth consecutive game overall, have scored 33 runs on 39 hits in the first three games of this four-game series.

Colorado also coaxed a club-record 16 walks out of St. Louis pitchers, the major-league high for this season and just one shy of the National League record. The New York Giants drew 17 walks against Brooklyn on April 30, 1944.

Lance Painter (3-3) allowed seven hits and three runs in seven innings to help the Rockies climb within three games of Los Angeles in the NL West.

Cardinals starter Omar Olivares (1-2) lasted just 4 1-3 innings, giving up seven runs on seven hits and six walks.

Bichette's RBI single gave the Rockies a 1-0 lead in the third, and Colorado scored three times in each of the next two innings.

Astros 7, Pirates 1

PITTSBURGH — Pete Harnisch won his fourth straight start since coming off the disabled list and Houston held onto an early lead this time.

■ NL Roundup

Scott Servais and Orlando Miller, the Astros' No. 7 and 8 hitters, singled in runs in the second inning and Luis Gonzalez hit a solo homer in the fourth as Houston took a 3-0 lead against Zane Smith (9-7).

The Astros held onto this lead, unlike Friday when the Pirates rallied from an 8-0 deficit to win 11-8.

Jeff Bagwell was 3-for-5 with two RBI doubles and is 7-for-10 with three doubles and a homer in his last two games.

Cubs 7, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — Mike Morgan pitched his first complete game in a year and Chicago hit four solo homers in a victory over Cincinnati.

Morgan (2-9) gave up seven hits and struck out five as he went the distance for the first time since July 15 last year. The right-hander emerged from a three-game slump in which he allowed 17 earned runs.

Glenallen Hill and Steve Buechele provided the bulk of the offense for Chicago. Nine of the Cubs' 11 hits were for extra bases.

Hill scored three times, doubled twice and homered in the sixth off John Roper (5-1). Buechele drove in three runs with a grounder, a sacrifice fly and a homer, also off Roper in the sixth.

Mets 5, Padres 4

NEW YORK — Todd Hundley drove in two runs in a three-run first inning that sent rookie Jason Jacome and New York to a victory over San Diego.

Hundley's two-run single in the first helped Jacome (2-1) win his first start at Shea Stadium. The left-hander allowed two runs and eight hits in six innings.

John Franco gave up two runs in the ninth but struck out Eddie Williams with runners at first and third for the final out and his 20th save.

Phillies 10, Dodgers 6

PHILADELPHIA — Jim Eisenreich hit a three-run homer and Mike Lieberthal hit his first major league home run as Philadelphia defeated Los Angeles.

The Phillies were outhit 12-11, but took advantage of three Dodgers errors to score four unearned runs.

Bobby Munoz (5-3) allowed five runs and nine hits in five innings to gain the victory. Toby Borland allowed no hits over the final 2 2-3 innings for his first major league save.

Orel Hershiser was supposed to start for the Dodgers but sustained a strained muscle in his left side while warming up and was replaced by Ramon Martinez. Martinez (8-6) gave up nine runs and eight hits in 4 1-3 innings.

The Dodgers took a 1-0 lead in the first on Tim Wallach's RBI single and made it 2-0 in the second on Brett Butler's sacrifice fly.

Giants 4, Expos 2

MONTREAL — Barry Bonds hit two homers for the second straight night and San Francisco won their seventh in a row, beating Montreal.

Bonds hit solo shots off Ken Hill (13-4) in the fourth and sixth and added an RBI single in the seventh that knocked Hill out of the game. He has homered 12 times in his last 22 games.

John Burkett (6-7) limited Montreal to a pair of runs on eight hits in 6 2-3 innings. He struck out six and walked two. Rod Beck pitched the ninth for his 19th save.

Braves 7, Marlins 5

ATLANTA — Fred McGriff hit a three-run homer in the seventh inning and Jose Oliva added two home runs, leading Atlanta to a come-from-behind victory over Florida.

With the Braves trailing 4-3, Roberto Kelly and Dave Justice reached base before McGriff drove a 2-2 pitch from Yorkis Perez over the rightfield wall for his 24th homer.

The hit made a winner of reliever Mark Wohlers (6-1), who worked one-third of an inning. John Johnstone (1-2) was the loser, allowing two hits and two runs in a third of an inning.

Greg McMichael pitched the ninth for his 19th save, matching his total from last year.

Rodriquez continues home run binge in Ranger win

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Ivan Rodriguez homered for the third time in five games and Kevin Brown allowed only seven hits in eight innings as the Texas Rangers beat the Toronto Blue Jays 4-2 Saturday night.

Brown (7-8), who entered the game with opponents hitting .322 against him, struck out six and walked two. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 10th save.

Texas, which leads the AL West with a 44-46 record, is guaranteed a team record for latest point in the season holding first place. The old mark was July 17, 1983, and the Rangers lead the Oakland by five games.

Rodriguez hit a two-run homer against Pat Hentgen (11-6) in a three-run third. He later singled, his 17th hit in 36 at-bats over his last nine games.

Hentgen, who had his five-game winning streak snapped, lasted seven innings and allowed nine hits. He struck out four and walked five.

Devon White hit a two-out homer, his 12th, to give the Blue Jays a 1-0 lead in the third, but Texas went in front to stay when Rodriguez hit an 0-2 pitch into the left field seats in the bottom of the inning. It was his 12th homer.

Jose Canseco then walked, crossed to third on Will Clark's single and scored on a single by Juan Gonzalez.

Angels 4, Orioles 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Lee Smith blew another save as California rallied for two runs in the ninth inning for a victory over Baltimore.

Smith, brought on in the ninth to protect a 3-2 lead, gave up a one-out homer to pinch hitter Bo Jackson and an RBI triple to Spike Owen as the Orioles dropped 1½ games behind the New York Yankees in the AL East.

Smith (1-3) blew a ninth-inning lead last Sunday against Oakland, giving up a two-run homer to Mark McGwire, and was the losing pitcher in this week's All-Star game after surrendering Fred McGriff's game-tying homer in the bottom of the ninth.

Twins 5, Brewers 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Jim Deshaies and three relievers limited Milwaukee to six hits and Minnesota hit three home runs in a victory against the Brewers.

Deshaies (5-9) gave up five hits in 6 1-3 innings. He stifled the Brewers until the sixth, when Greg Vaughn hit his 19th homer of the season, the major league-leading 27th allowed by the left-hander this season.

Rick Aguilera, Minnesota's fourth pitcher, worked a perfect ninth for his 20th save.

Pedro Munoz, Scott Leius and Alex Cole homered off Bill Wegman (6-3), who lost his third straight start.

■ AL Roundup

Indians 2, White Sox 0

CHICAGO — Dennis Martinez won his eighth straight decision, pitching a four-hitter, and Cleveland moved a game ahead in the AL Central by beating Chicago.

Martinez (9-4) allowed a single to Darrin Jackson in the second, double in the third by Tim Raines, single to Frank Thomas in the sixth and another single by pinch-hitter Warren Newson in the eighth. He walked two and struck out four.

The shutout was the second of the season for the 39-year-old right-hander and his fifth complete game. He has not lost since May 11, a span of 12 starts.

The Indians, with their second victory in the first three games of the four-game series, scored in the first on Omar Vizquel's single and an RBI double by Carlos Baerga, extending his hitting streak to 13 games.

Tigers 13, Royals 7

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Travis Fryman's grand slam capped an eight-run fourth inning and Kirk Gibson added a two-run homer in the seventh, powering Detroit to a victory over Kansas City.

Juan Samuel had a single, double and triple with two RBIs and three runs scored for the Tigers.

Wally Joyner went 5-for-5 for the Royals.

Joe Boever (8-2) won in relief of Bill Gullickson, who started the fifth with a 10-3 lead but failed to get out of the inning. Boever gave up two hits in four shutout innings.

Bob Milacki (0-5) gave up single runs in the second and third innings and began the fourth by giving up singles to Cecil Fielder, Gibson and Mickey Tettleton.

Jose DeJesus, recalled from Triple-A Omaha earlier in the day, gave up a two-run single to Samuel and then loaded the bases by walking Tony Phillips and Lou Whitaker.

Yankees 9, Mariners 3

SEATTLE — Jimmy Key became a 14-game winner and Gerald Williams homered twice to lead New York to a victory over Seattle.

Key (14-2) equaled his season-high with eight strikeouts to beat major league strikeout leader Randy Johnson (10-5). He also defeated the team that ended his 11-game winning streak July 2.

The left-hander went seven innings and allowed only three hits.

ANGELS: Midland fails in clutch fice fly in the game, but needed one more base hit to at least knot the game.

But that wasn't the only Angel failure. In the sixth, Midland had runners at first and third with no outs when Cap starter Andy Heckman (5-0) got Mike Wolff on strikes and Bo Ortiz, making his Angel debut, on a grounder to second.

Wolff had previously hit a solo homer, his eighth of the year, in the second inning, but it was the strikeout that had him muttering after the game.

"That's just a lack of concentration when you can't get the runner in from third (with less than two outs)," Wolff said. "It was just a poor performance on my part. We've left runners on third base the last two nights and we lost both games. You just can't do that."

Brian Grebeck also hit into a double play in the third inning with runners on first and second with one out.

Shreveport chipped away at the Angels and never trailed in the game after scoring four runs in the first two innings of play. Mirabelli had three RBIs on two hits, but that effort also told the difference in the two offenses. Mirabelli had a one-out double in the sixth to score a runner from third and scored another runner from third with a one-out grounder in the fourth. Calvin Murray and Joel Chimelis both had sacrifice flies with runners at third in the second and seventh. It was the execution that Midland couldn't match.

ANGEL DUST: Midland's Kyle Sebach (3-1, 4.09) will face Shreveport's Steve Whitaker (5-7, 4.28) at 6 p.m. today in the fourth game of the five-game set ... Ortiz was 0-for-3 in his Angel debut. He comes to Midland from the Bowie Baysox (Baltimore Double-A affiliate) where he was hitting .309 with 10 homers and 54 RBIs. Ortiz is the player to be named later in the trade that sent outfielder Dwight Smith to Baltimore on June 14 ... Cap center fielder Calvin Murray made a great catch against the green wall in the third to save a run on a blast by Jose Monzon, who came back with a solo homer (his second) in the fifth ...

Sweden's Henrik Larsen (7) drives around Bulgaria goalkeeper Borislav Mihaylov on his way to putting Sweden up 3-0 in the World Cup third-place match Saturday.

Sweden rocks Bulgaria, 4-0

PASADENA, Calif. (NYT) — As boring and passive as Sweden was in its semifinal shutout loss to Brazil, it was equally as spectacular in Saturday's 4-0 victory against Bulgaria in the World Cup's third-place game.

Midfielder Tomas Brolin scored one goal and set up two others with perfect assists as Sweden dominated the Bulgarians before a surprisingly large crowd of 83,716 at the Rose Bowl. Sweden, which had three shots in a conservative loss to Brazil on Wednesday, scored four goals on 11 shots in the first half.

"We were disappointed in our showing against Brazil," Brolin said. "We wanted to remember this World Cup fondly, so we came out eager. It was a day of fun soccer."

Sweden, which finished 4-1-2 for its best Cup finish since 1958, took charge in the opening minutes. Despite playing without injured leading scorer Martin Dahlin, the Swedes took a 1-0 lead in the eighth minute when Brolin headed in a crossing pass from Klaus Ingesson.

The Swedes, whose 15 goals likely will make them the Cup's highest-scoring team, then put the game away with three goals in a nine-minute span.

Off a quick restart after a foul, Brolin sent through a pass to Hakan Mild for a goal in the 30th minute. Seven minutes later, Henrik Larsson converted another perfect assist from Brolin into a 3-0 lead. It became 4-0 two minutes later when Kenett Andersson beat discouraged goalie Borislav Mihaylov with a header from 15 yards.

Bulgaria, which finished 4-3-0 in the 24-team tournament, is expected to return home national heroes despite losing its last two games. Bulgarian President Zhelu Zhelev already has compared his country's soccer success to the fall of communism.

But Saturday, Bulgaria had a goal nullified by a pushing penalty, hit the crossbar with a shot and saw star Hristo Stoichkov fail in his attempt to take the Cup scoring lead. Tied with Russia's Oleg Salenko with six goals, Stoichkov took eight unsuccessful shots.

The size of the crowd, which included Houston Rockets center Hakeem Olajuwon, was partly due to organizers discounting tickets at SoccerFest, being held at the Los Angeles Convention Center. Tickets to Sunday's Brazil-Italy final, on the other hand, are selling for as much as $425.

OPEN: 67 for Price despite problems

From 1C

Price shot 67 despite some inconsistent putting. Rafferty closed up with a 65, including birdies on two of the last three holes. And Parnevik came back from consecutive bogeys in the early going and played the back in 32, finishing off a 68.

David Feherty of Northern Ireland, who shot a 66 as Zoeller's playing companion, was alone at 203, placing seven men within two shots of the lead going into Sunday's final round.

English veteran Mark James shot 66 and was next at 205, 5 under par.

Larry Mize, who had a 64 despite weakness from overnight stomach trouble, led a large group at 204.

Also at that figure were Tom Kite, Davis Love, Craig Stadler, Peter Jacobsen, Colin Montgomerie of Scotland, Andrew Coltart of England, Peter Senior of Australia and Jumbo Ozaki of Japan.

Greg Norman, making a gallant effort at defending his title, closed to within three of the lead at one point, then hit his second into the burn on the 16th and made double bogey.

Shaken, he could do no better than match par-5 on the vulnerable 17th and finished with a 69 and a 207 total.

He all but conceded. "I think I've left a little too much to do," he said from a position six shots off the pace.

Zoeller flipped a wedge to tap-in distance for a birdie on the first hole, but did much of his scoring from considerably longer range.

■ More coverage/5C

He hoped a 15-footer to save par on the fourth — "one of those putts that keeps a round together," he said — and dropped three birdie putts from 20 feet or longer.

Faxon made a 20-footer on the second, scored from about 25 feet on the 10th, birdied the 17th with two putts, and made a good save from a bunker on the 14th.

Watson hung in despite his putting woes.

He chipped in from 30 feet for birdie on the third, missed the green and bogeyed the next, then two-putted for birdie-4 on the seventh.

FINAL: It's Baggio versus Romario

(From 1C)

Romario is the most dynamic of Brazil's cast of stars. His counterpart is Roberto Baggio, the 1993 player of the year and, in the last three games, an unstoppable force for the Azzurri.

Baggio, who has a hamstring problem, was thrust into the role played 12 years ago by Paolo Rossi, whose scoring exploits carried Italy to the crown.

"Paolo Rossi was my idol, and I celebrated Italy's victory in 1982 rallying in the streets with an Italian flag," Baggio said. "I hope to give Italian fans the same chance."

To win, Italy must apply some of the principles used by Sweden in the semifinals, but forgo crawling into a defensive shell, as the Swedes did. Italy's midfield, led by Dino Baggio, Nicola Berti and Demetrio Albertini, can play with anyone. It can offset some of Brazil's elegant short passing schemes and turn the flow the other way.

Then Baggio, Pierluigi Casiraghi and Giuseppe Signori can apply the finish.

That probably is the plan for Italy, which will miss suspended Alessandro Costacurta, its best defender in this tournament, and hopes veteran Franco Baresi can return to the defense after arthroscopic knee surgery during the first round.

The plan for Brazil is simple. It's always the same.

"Brazil will attack," coach Carlos Alberto Parreira said. "That is the only way we play soccer."

No one attacks like Brazil. Romario's searing runs down the middle and Bebeto's forays from the wing wear down defenses. Midfielder Zinho and defenders Jorginho and Mazinho create open space for the forwards with their ball control and quick moves.

But few teams defend like Brazil, either. Because they have the ball so much — and do so much with it — the Brazilians' goal area rarely is penetrated. They have outshot opponents 104-42 and their 0.5 goals against average is the lowest of any team to get out of the first round.

This final matches two nations expected to win soccer championships. It also matches countries plagued by severe World Cup disappointments recently.

Four years ago, host Italy was heavily favored until it lost in a penalty-kick shootout to Argentina in the semifinals. It was a bitter letdown.

Brazil was favored in 1982 and '86, but fell far short of challenging for the championship. The two decades without a title only have increased the pressure on the players.

That Brazil has looked championship-worthy throughout the tournament hasn't eased the burden much. There can be no substitute for a victory Sunday.

Hours after the final matchup was established, the streets of downtown Pasadena were blocked by dancing Brazilians and singing Italians. The beat of the samba drums sometimes drowned out the chants of "Forza Italia." Or the ringing of a bell painted in Italy's red-white-green colors overwhelmed the lilting "Ole, Ole Ole Ole, Bra-zil, Bra-zil." That was the precursor of days of partying, and perhaps a most memorable of World Cup finals.

"We have won nothing so far," Sacchi said. "It's not the time for celebrations and praise. Let's wait for the end of the tournament."

Watson can end quiet suffering

By Ron Sirak
AP Sports Writer

TURNBERRY, Scotland — It's been seven years for Tom Watson. Seven years without a victory. Seven years of sweating out short putts — and missing them.

But if there is one more round of greatness in this man with eight major championships in a brilliant career, he can end those years of quiet suffering Sunday with a victory in the British Open.

"I'm happy with my position," he said after a 69 in Saturday's third round left him at 202, one stroke behind co-leaders Fuzzy Zoeller, who shot a 64, and Brad Faxon, 67.

"I have a chance to win the Open championship."

But there were several golfers with a chance in this Open — 19 players were within five strokes of the lead.

A lot will depend on the weather and a lot will depend on Watson's putting. After putting well in the first two rounds, he was tentative Saturday, and missed two 3-foot par putts on the back nine, the kind of putts that have been plaguing him for those lean years.

"If we have good weather like this tomorrow, it is going to be a shootout," Nick Price said after a 67, tying him with Watson, Ronan Rafferty of Northern Ireland and Jesper Parnevik of Sweden.

"With weather like this it will take something in the mid-60s," Watson said.

Then lowering his voice in a mock whisper, he added, "I wish the wind would blow about 40 mph tomorrow," sounding very much like a man who did not want to make the number of birdie putts it would take to shoot in the mid-60s.

The weather is supposed to be good Sunday.

"It's hard to predict what will happen tomorrow," Faxon said about the final round. "I don't think anyone can predict the weather around here."

Playing in perfect conditions Saturday, the golfers had their way with the Ailsa Course at Turnberry. The 81 players in the field avergaed 69.39 on the par 70 layout.

Zoeller missed the course record by only one shot.

Two strokes behind the leaders was David Feherty of Northern Ireland at 203. Mark James of England was at 205.

Eleven golfers were at 206, including Larry Mize, Tom Kite, Craig Stadler, Davis Love and Loren Roberts.

Four players were at 207, six strokes behind, including defending champion Greg Norman of Australia, who double-bogeyed No. 16, and U.S. Open champion Ernie Els, who shot 69, his seventh consecutive sub-70 round in the British Open.

Watson was the clear favorite of the crowd and was carried to the first tee by a long, cheering, shouting, whistling ovation punctuated with cries of "Go get 'em, Tom," "Good luck, Tom," and "All the way, man." Only occasionally was an American accent heard among the Scottish burrs that carried the shouts.

But Watson had a balky driver, hitting only two fairways on the front nine, and putted very much like he was afraid of leaving himself any of the 3- and 4-foot putts he has been missing for years.

He left several birdie putts short, almost as if he was lagging to get down in two. When he finally did leave himself a pair of those testy 3-footers — at 14 and 16 — he missed them both and made bogeys.

But he saved his day with a two-putt birdie at 17 and a 10-foot birdie at 18.

"It's going to make dinner taste a whole lot better," he said of the birdie-birdie finish.

His two birdies on the front nine came with a chip-in at No. 3 and a two-putt birdie at the par-5 seventh.

For the 44-year-old Watson, a victory Sunday would be his first victory anywhere since 1987. And it would tie him with Harry Vardon with six British Open championships.

For the 42-year-old Zoeller, who has not won since 1986, winning the 123rd British Open would give him victories in three of the four major championships, a feat acomplished by only eight other players, including Watson.

"It's every golfer's dream to have all four," said Zoeller, who won the Masters in 1980 and the U.S. Open in 1984. "This would be another notch in the gun. I can't tell you how incredible that would be to me."

Unlike, Zoeller, Watson and Price, the 32-year-old Faxon never has never contended going into the final round of a major championship.

"I'm going to try to stay up late, eat a late meal and sleep late tomorrow," Faxon said.

"I'm just honored to be with them," he said of Zoeller, Watson and Price.

But he is also there on merit. Faxon has played 41 consecutive holes without a bogey.

"It started in a $1,000 no-bogey round with (Corey) Pavin, (Ben) Crenshaw and Love in practice on Tuesday," Faxon said. "I won the bet."

Conley passes Burrell in Mobil track standings

NEW YORK (AP) — Olympic and world triple jump champion Mike Conley has leaped past sprinter Leroy Burrell and into the men's overall lead in the Mobil Grand Prix standings.

Conley, winner of the triple jump at Friday's TSB Games at London with a leap of 56 feet, 10 inches, has 43 Grand Prix points.

Burrell skipped the London meet and slipped to second place with 42 points. Samuel Matete of Zambia, winner of the 400 hurdles Friday, is third with 40 points.

Women's Grand Prix leader Natalya Shikolenko of Belarus, the javelin winner at London with a throw of 234-3, holds a commanding lead with 43 Grand Prix points.

Michelle Freeman of Jamaica, the 100-meter hurdles winner at 13.03 seconds, is in second place with 34 Grand Prix points, followed by sprinter Juliet Cuthbert of Jamaica with 33 points.

The next Grand Prix meet is the Nikaia Mobil at Nice, France, on Monday.

U.S. to get another Davis Cup chance

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — The United States couldn't knock the Netherlands out of the Davis Cup on Saturday. However, heavy hitters Pete Sampras and Jim Courier will have another chance to deliver the knockout blow.

The Dutch stayed alive in the quarterfinals by winning the doubles match. Jacco Eltingh and Paul Haarhuis defeated Richey Reneberg and Jared Palmer in five sets to cut the U.S. lead to 2-1 in the best-of-5 match competition.

The Dutch pair, last year's world champions in doubles, prevailed 2-6, 7-6 (8-6), 6-3, 6-7 (2-7), 6-2 in a 3½-hour marathon on a hard court near the Rotterdam docks.

"I think Jacco and Paul's extra experience playing together was a big factor," said U.S. captain Tom Gullikson.

Despite the loss, the Americans can advance to the semifinals by winning one of Sunday's two singles matches — Sampras vs. Richard Krajicek and Courier vs. Eltingh.

Sampras and Courier easily won their opening singles matches on Friday, and will be heavily favored to repeat the feat on Sunday.

"But the chances are they're not going to play as well as Friday," Haarhuis said. "Maybe they'll trip up and twist their ankles."

The Americans won the first set in doubles in 24 minutes, but the Dutch evened the match by winning the second-set tiebreaker.

Reneberg and Palmer built a 5-2 lead in the tiebreaker after Haarhuis double-faulted and missed a backhand volley. But the Dutch fought back and won the set on a punch volley by Haarhuis.

CLASS: Switzer more motivated than team

(From 1C)

the rest of the NFL. It was their pride that made them different."

Wide receiver Alvin Harper said no player is motivated any more than Switzer.

"He watched our ring ceremony and said he wanted to be a part of it some day," Harper said. "He said everybody was questioning his coaching ability and he wants to prove them wrong.

"He wants to be part of history when we win three rings in a row."

Among those who has questioned Switzer's ability is Johnson, who departed after one too many disputes with owner Jerry Jones. Switzer has gotten some return shots in at his one-time friend and colleague, who will be taking a hiatus from coaching for a year as an analyst with Fox Television.

A sweat-soaked Switzer was at least as active as Johnson, on the St. Edward's University practice field bright and early when the kicking specialists took the field.

He stretched his hamstrings like he was a player. The 57-year-old Switzer constantly wiped away the sweat from his face as he refused to wear a hat.

"My eyes were burning and clouding up," Switzer said. "It was the Coppertone I guess."

Switzer was apprenhensive about his reception in a town that loves the Texas Longhorns, one of the Sooners' biggest rivals.

"I thought we had a great reception," Switzer said.

There was only one untoward moment. A fan spotted Mississippi State coach Jackie Sherrill on the sidelines. Sherrill was disliked in Austin when he coached at Texas A&M.

"It's bad enough having to put up with Switzer," shouted the fan. "Get out of here, Sherrill. Get off the sidelines."

An anti-Switzer banner was taken down by security guards.

While over 20 mini-cams followed Switzer's every move, Jones stayed away until the last few minutes of the morning practice, letting Switzer take center stage.

Switzer exchanged pleasantries with Texas Gov. Ann Richards, then got back into the thick of the practice, which included a brief scrimmage.

Switzer bounced in and out of the pile-ups, giving the players encouragement. At one point, he helped break up a fight.

Cornerback Kevin Smith said Switzer asked the players to be patient with him.

"He asked us to give him a chance," Smith said. "He said he has something to prove and he is going to prove everybody wrong because he is a winner."

Switzer said he was impressed with the champions.

"They are all business on the field," Switzer said. "They know the price that has to be paid."

Defensive back Bill Bates said: "Coach Switzer is going to make sure we keep ourselves at a championship level. There won't be any letting down because coach Johnson isn't around."

The Cowboys got first round draft pick Shante Carver into camp on Saturday. The defensive end from Arizona State signed a four-year contract for $3.1 million, including an $800,000 signing bonus.

Dallas has all its draft picks signed except for seventh-round pick Toddrick McIntosh, a defensive tackle from Florida state.

"I like what I see about this team," Switzer said. "We're not going to be depending on rookies to get the job done. That's good. We're a veteran team with a few holes to fill."

Then he added: "It feels great to be back in the game again. I want to thank Jerry Jones for the chance."

No other NFL team would take a chance on Switzer.

Switzer's second — and probably his last — began on Saturday and he liked the way it felt.

Challenger Rominger quits Tour de France

ALBI, France (AP) — Miguel Indurain received a special 30th birthday present Saturday as the Tour de France rider billed as his toughest challenger, Tony Rominger, quit the race.

Barely able to keep up with the pack, the Swiss cyclist finally succumbed to "severe diarrhea" that had left him weak and dehydrated, team doctor Benjamin Fernandez said.

Rominger got off his bike about 25 miles from the end of the 13th stage, from Bagneres de Bigorre to Albi.

Bjarne Riis of Denmark, fifth in the Tour last year, won the stage on a late breakaway. The route covered a fairly flat 145 miles after two tough stages in the Pyrenees.

Indurain celebrated his birthday in the leader's yellow jersey he has become accustomed to wearing in three Tour victories. He kept it again Saturday, maintaining his overall lead although he came in nine seconds behind Riis in the pack.

Virtually all the standings remained unchanged, with everyone except Indurain moving up one place due to Rominger dropping out.

Rominger had thought he was suffering from an intestinal virus since earlier in the week and hoped the stage wouldn't be too fast and thus allow him some time for recovery.

He never could get into the race. His Mapei teammates tried to lead him back when he was flagging, but Rominger finally spoke with his team director and got off his bike.

Rominger became the latest victim of the powerful Spaniard, who has rolled ever further ahead in time trials and mountain climbs as his challengers falter or drop out one by one.

Three-time champion Greg LeMond of the United States was gone by the sixth stage. Britain's Chris Boardman, the prologue winner and early leader, quit before the mountains. Italian Claudio Chiappucci, in the top six the last four years, failed to start the 12th stage.

Rominger, expected to be Indurain's chief competition after an impressive win in May's Tour of Spain, fell behind by minutes, not seconds, this week and was 7:56 behind Indurain when he quit.

After Rominger dropped out, Frenchman Richard Virenque inherited second place, also at 7:56 behind. Another French cyclist, Armand de Las Cuevas, was third at six seconds further back.

Virenque claimed France's third consecutive stage win Friday. Last year, France won just once.

Sunday's stage is from Castres to Montpellier, 126 miles.

Governor continues tradition of Cowboy visits

■ Ann Richards visits the Cowboys summer camp for the third year in a row, hoping the team's good fortune keeps up.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards showed up at the Dallas Cowboys' training camp Saturday and jokingly warned new coach Barry Switzer about the pressure he faces in trying to win a third consecutive Super Bowl.

Switzer responded that she too will face some pressure in a tough fight this fall.

"I don't want to put the pressure on ya, but I have been out here two years in row to watch this early training" and the Cowboys have won two Super Bowls, Richards said.

"Here I am again, No. 3," she said.

"You got it," Switzer replied. "And I'm not going to put any pressure on you, but you have got to beat someone swinging against you."

Switzer was referring to Richards' showdown in November with Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush.

Richards, a Democrat, attended training camp with longtime friend and writer Edwin Allen "Bud" Shrake Jr., who collaborated with Switzer on his autobiography "Bootlegger's Boy."

Some statements Switzer made in the book landed him on the wrong end of a $30 million libel lawsuit that went to trial in Austin in 1992. Switzer never had to pay out any judgment in the case.

He joked about the trial when he greeted Richards.

"The last time I saw you, I wasn't in as good a situation as I am now. I was in a trial sued for $30 million," Switzer laughed.

Later, Richards met with Cowboys owner Jerry Jones and players Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith.

"This is one of those things that you don't want to break the luck," Richards said. "Since I have done it for two years in a row, I promised Jerry I would be here when they got here."

Jones said: "Oh, you gotta keep coming out here. It's a tradition."

Richards told Jones, "You have made Texas so proud by winning two Super Bowls."

Jones replied, "We want to be the first team in football to threepeat."

Richards, Aikman and Smith shared laughs in a somewhat private huddle away from reporters gathered at the St. Edward's University practice facility.

Richards has frequently joked that she had a hand in the Cowboys second consecutive Super Bowl victory against Buffalo last January.

"During the second Super Bowl, I kept telling them, 'Put Emmitt in. Give Emmitt the ball,'" she said. "And they did, and it just worked out fine."

Ex-Longhorn's shot lifts 76ers

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — B.J. Tyler hit a 3-pointer with 2:19 left to give the Philadelphia 76ers a 98-94 victory against the New Jersey Nets on Saturday in the Doral Arrowwood Summer League.

Tyler's basket in the league for NBA rookies, free agents and selected veterans gave the Sixers a 92-90 lead they never relinquished.

Philadelphia, 2-1 in the summer round-robin tournament, was led by its two first-round draft choices: Sharone Wright of Clemson scored 22 points, and Tyler, of Texas, had 18 points and six assists.

Illegal engine takes two wins from Fowler

LONG POND, Pa.(AP) — Marty Ward and Jerry Rector were declared the winners of two NASCAR Sportsman races Saturday after Wally Fowler, the first-place finisher in both, was disqualified for having an illegal engine.

The announcement was made by NASCAR shortly after the car driven by Fowler, of Campobello, S.C., failed to pass a post-race inspection. The sanctioning body said alterations had given his Chevrolet engine "greater horsepower."

Fowler, who left the Pocono International Raceway immediately after the decision, couldn't be reached for comment.

Ward, of Marietta, S.C., finished second Saturday in a Chevrolet. Rector had finished second in a Chevrolet in a rain-delayed event from last month that was completed Thursday.

Fowler duplicated his feat of 48 hours earlier by overcoming an early pit stop and working his way through the field Saturday, to finish first with an average speed of 103.389 mph.

He forfeited more than $7,000 in earnings, including $3,645 Saturday, which went to Ward. No other penalties were announced. NASCAR does not conduct a points championship in the division, which is for older cars no longer used in either the more prestigious and lucrative Winston Cup and Busch Grand National groupings.

Fowler started second Saturday to Ward, but fell behind by pitting on the ninth lap. He took the lead at the halfway mark, and controlled the final 31 laps.

Ward, who took the lead when Fowler pitted, led laps 9-12 at the 2.5-mile triangle-shaped track, beat him at the end by .72 seconds.

Rector finished third in Saturday's 60-lap race, Mickey Hudspeth was fourth and Mike Gault fifth, as Chevrolets took the first five positions. David Smith was sixth in an Oldsmobile.

All the finishers in both races were moved up a spot by the disqualification.

Purvis gets 150 ARCA victory

LONG POND, Pa (AP) — Jeff Purvis took the lead halfway through the race and cruised to victory in the $146,930 Associated Financial 150 ARCA Supercar series race Saturday at Pocono International Raceway.

The victory was Purvis' sixth on a superspeedway — a track of one mile or better — tying him for third on the ARCA career list.

His Chevrolet led for the final 32 laps over the 2.5-mile track and was never seriously threatened. He was not pressed at the end because of an accident on the 58th of 60 laps.

Purvis' average speed, slowed for 14 laps by four caution flags, was 117.904 mph.

Dick Trickle, who failed to qualify for Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 500 Winston Cup race, finished second in a Chevrolet.

The victory was a form of redemption for Purvis, who failed to win at Pocono last year despite having the pole for both races. He started 15th on Saturday.

Polesitter Tim Steele led the first five laps in a Ford, but faded to finish ninth in the 38-car field.

Third in an Oldsmobile was Kerry Teague, followed. by Bob Schacht, also in an Oldsmobile. Points leader Bobby Bowsher was fifth in a Ford.

The victory was worth $11,500 to Purvis, who leads the Superspeedway points championship he won last year.

Heat helps Gordon capture pole

■ Molson-Indy

TORONTO (AP) — The combination of a hot day and a slick track helped Robby Gordon to escape with the pole position for Sunday's Toronto Molson-Indy.

Gordon, 25, starting from the pole for the first time in his young Indy-car career — his 32nd race — went into Saturday's 30-minute session holding the provisional pole with Friday's track qualifying record lap of 110.191 mph.

Neither Gordon nor any of the other top qualifiers was able to approach that mark, with only third-place Al Unser Jr., the PPG Cup point leader and winner of five of eight races this season, able to improve on Friday's lap.

"That was a good lap yesterday," Gordon said, smiling.

Saturday wasn't an easy day for Gordon, whose best previous start had been third. In the first five minutes of the session, Gordon bottomed hard in the middle of a fast turn. The sudden jar sent the car swerving toward the wall, where the right rear tire clipped a piece of protruding metal and sheared away the rubber.

Gordon was able to drive the car back to the pits on three wheels, but it cost him a long pit stop.

"I don't know what happened, but we're all right," Gordon said. "In the (morning) practice, we ran the whole session on used tires and we were the fastest in the session. We should be in good shape for the race."

Nigel Mansell gave Ford Cosworth-powered Lolas a sweep of the front row positions, followed by the powerful Team Penske trio of Unser — who improved from 109.516 Friday to 109.565 — Emerson Fittipaldi and defending race winner Paul Tracy.

The Penske drivers have outclassed everyone else in the series this season, winning every race since Michael Andretti began the season with a win in Australia. In fact, at least one of the Penske cars had been on the front row in every race since Andretti and Mansell led the way in Australia.

The other drivers have been playing catchup to the Ilmor-powered Penskes.

"The conditions have been very difficult on the track, but it's fabulous we at least get a Lola-Ford front row," said Mansell, who didn't even bother to go out Saturday until Unser began approaching his fast lap of 109.924 in the final 10 minutes of the session.

"My wrist was a little sore after I bent it back yesterday (hitting a tire barrier)," Mansell said. "We decided to take it a little easy until Al started getting close. But there wasn't much we could do under the circumstances."

All the drivers continued to complain that the 1.78-mile, 11-turn temporary circuit that winds through Exhibition Place in downtown Toronto is short of grip.

"I'd say that about one-third of the track has grip and the other two-thirds has none," said Mansell, the defending series champion. "I know last year, the track began to get more grip after the first 20 laps of the race, so I hope that happens again this time."

Unser, who leads Fittipaldi in the points 127-86, with Mansell third at 72 and Gordon next with 67, said, "We have our work cut out for us with the guys up front."

"Hopefully, we can keep them in sight and make a race out of it," Unser said.

The race has been shortened this year from 103 laps to 98.

Petty car to run in Miller

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Richard Petty's Pontiac Grand Prix — driven by Wally Dallenbach — will run Sunday in the Miller Genuine Draft 500, ending a three-race drought in which the car failed to qualify.

Dallenbach, unable to make the field for races at Michigan, Daytona and New Hampshire, stood on his qualifying time of Friday, 161.308 mph, and will start 21st in the $926,933 event to be run at the 2.5-mile Pocono International Raceway.

Geoff Bodine won the pole Friday — when the first 20 positions were set — with a race-record qualifying speed of 163.689 mph in a Ford Thunderbird.

The fastest of those who qualified Saturday was Jeremy Mayfield, who averaged 161.230 in a Ford. He was one of six drivers to emerge from second-day qualifying to make the 42-car field, and will start 23rd.

Jimmy Spencer, who crashed during his qualifying attempt Friday, got a provisional starting spot based on Winston Cup points. Also given a provisional start was Michael Waltrip.

Petty, whose 200 career victories and seven driver titles are NASCAR records, retired as a driver two years ago. He retained ownership of his car, however, and put Dallenbach in the driver's seat this season.

Driver dies from heart attack

BOLIVAR, Mo. (AP) — Race car driver Rob Biellier of Willard, Mo., suffered a heart attack and died Friday night while competing at Speedway U.S.A., authorities said.

Biellier was racing in the Late Model Stock division when his car slowed and brushed lightly against the retaining wall, track spokeswoman Debbie Handley said Saturday.

A small fire broke out, but an accident crew put it out before it reached the cockpit, Handley said. Biellier, 45, was taken to Citizens Memorial Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

The hospital listed cardiac arrest as cause of death.

Biellier's wife said he had a history of heart trouble, Handley said.

"It's sad, but he died doing what made him happy," said Shirley Biellier, the driver's mother.

Daniel on comeback trail; leads Big Apple

Associated Press

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Beth Daniel is showing some real progress as she tries to overcome a mistake she made earlier this year.

Daniel was riding a hot streak in late May and early June, winning two tournaments in three weeks. Then she hit a lull, and that's where the mistake comes in.

"In an attempt to come out of it, I took some time off and really didn't do anything to improve my game," she said. "That was a mistake and I'll never do that again. Little by little, I'm coming back."

She showed a lot of comeback on Saturday, shooting a bogey-free, 5-under-par 66 to build a three-shot lead after 54 holes of the LPGA's $650,000 JAL Big Apple Classic.

"I didn't expect to be leading after the third round," she said. "Today was a very easy round of golf. There was very little struggling. I only missed one green (the 17th), and that was downright embarrassing because I was using a wedge."

Otherwise, Daniel had the 6,095-yard Wykagyl Country Club course at her mercy, making birdie putts of 5, 9, 15, 24 and 25 feet in finishing three rounds at 8-under 205.

Marta Figueras-Dotti, Juli Inkster and Missie Berteotti were all at 208.

Figueras-Dotti shot the best round of the day, a 65. Berteotti, whose only victory was in 1983, shot a 67, and Inkster, who won here two years ago, had a 67.

"My putter really worked," Figueras-Dotti said. "I am surprised and pleased that I ended up with a 65. Now Sunday will be a pleasant day."

Berteotti, whose only win came in 1983, shot a 67 Saturday and said she can't wait to tee it up for the final round.

"I wanted to play well here. I was terrible last year," said Berteotti, who failed to make the 36-hole cut. "Now I'm anxious for tomorrow. I definitely have a shot."

Inkster, who won here two years ago, gave birth to her second child last March and has been struggling to get back into form ever since.

"I took seven months off and it's taken a long time to get the competitive edge," Inkster said. "Yesterday I hit the ball better, but my score was 69. Today I was two strokes lower, even though I didn't drive as well."

While the foursome at the top was breaking 70, two LPGA Hall of Famers found the course less forgiving.

■ Golf Roundup

Deposit Guaranty Classic

MADISON, Miss. — Brian Henninger, left on the course when second-round play was suspended a day earlier, birdied five of 12 holes he played to take a share of the lead at the shortened Deposit Guaranty Golf Classic.

A second-round 4-under-par 68 pushed Henninger into a first-place tie with Mike Sullivan at 9-under 135. Sullivan, after an opening 66, completed his second-round 69 before rain suspended play Friday.

Henninger was one of 84 players who completed the second round Saturday.

Sullivan, whose second PGA Tour victory came five years ago, got an unexpected day off Saturday when the tournament was shortened to 54 holes because of soggy conditions and a shaky weather forecast. The third round, with 73 golfers who made the cut at even-par 144 or better, will be played Sunday at the 7,157-yard Annandale Golf Club.

Tommy Armour III completed a 7-under 65 Saturday to join four other players a stroke back. Guy Boros, Scott Hoch, Dave Stockton Jr. and Chris DiMarco were all at 136 after finishing their second rounds Friday.

Ameritech Open

AURORA, ILL. — John Paul Cain has had some nice things happen to him on the telephone.

Cain, who had to make a telephone call to get an exemption into the field, sank birdie putts on Nos. 15 and 16 to take a one-stroke lead after 36 holes of the $750,000 Ameritech Senior Open.

"When my kids were born, I called my parents, but to get in here and play well after I asked for the exemption, when I got the opportunity, is just a gift from heaven," Cain said.

Cain has won only one tournament as a senior, in 1989 at Grand Rapids, Mich., and expects to be nervous in Sunday's final round.

"You really can't help it," he said. "But I'll probably get a little extra out of it."

He'll be chased by Jim Colbert and Mike Hill, whose 64 tied Colbert's course record and pulled him into a share of second, one shot back. Cain and Colbert each shot 67s on their second trip around the par-72, 6,802-yard Stonebridge Country Club course. Cain was at 11-under 133, Colbert and Hill at 134.

the ballgame all day. I just couldn't help him. I putted out of sync all day. It just was one of those days it didn't bounce our way — a tough day."

The teams of Bill Baker and Steve Cole also picked up two shots on the leaders with a five-under-par 66 for a 135 total, three shots off the pace. Baker and Cole are tied with Bobby Carroll and Doyle Massey. They fired a three-under 68 to stay within striking distance.

The championship flight will tee off at 1:15 today on the east course. Other flights and times are as follows: president's flight 12:30 p.m., east course; first flight 12:30 p.m., west course; second flight 1:10 p.m., west course; third flight 8:55 a.m., east; fourth flight 8:55 a.m., west; fifth flight 8:15 a.m., west and sixth flight 8:15 a.m., east.

NOTES: Scott Northern had is first hole-in-one Friday to help himself and partner David Essex to a first-round lead in sixth flight play with a 73. Northern used a 5-iron on No. 17 West and won a $2,500 vacation package with the shot.

"It was a beautiful golf shot that went in," Northern joked as he relaxed with fellow golfers in the clubhouse. "It was a heck of a thrill."

These services are contained in the specifications entitled, "City of Midland, Texas, Midland International Airport, Total HVAC Maintenance and Service Contract", dated July, 1994.

Immediately following the closing time for receipt of bids, proposals will be publicly opened and read aloud. Any bid received after closing time will be returned unopened.

The items of work included in the Contract consist of the following facilities: (1) Terminal Building-/Central Utilities Plant; (2) Flight Service Station Building; (3) National Weather Service Station Building; (4) LaForce Office Center; (5) Airport Maintenance Building; (6) Parking Lot Buildings; (7) Air Cargo Building; and (8) Midland International Airport-Airfield Lighting Vault. A bid proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid; thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is in an amount equal to five percent (5%) of the required amount of the performance bond and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is hereby expressly understood and agreed the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or, if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance bond and payment bond. All lump sums and other applicable prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves the right to reject any or all bids and to waive formalities. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous contract thereof, or to reject the bid. Unreasonable or "unbalanced" prices will authorize the Owner to reject the bid.

This contract is subject to Equal Opportunity, Affirmative Action, Minority Business Enterprise Contract provisions, and other requirements stated in the Instructions to Bidders and other sections applicable to the contract specifications and documents.

All bidders and proposers shall make good faith efforts to contract to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially economically disadvantaged individuals (DBE). In the event that the bidder for this solicitation qualifies as a DBE, the contract goal shall be deemed to have been met. The apparent successful bidder (proposer) will be required to submit information concerning the DBE's that will participate in the contract. The information will include the name and address for each DBE, a description of the work to be performed by each named firm, and the dollar value of the contract (subcontract). If the bidder fails to achieve the contract goal as stated herein, it will be required to provide documentation demonstrating that it made good faith efforts in attempting to do so. Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:
★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?
Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?
Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?
A small deposit is required.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

A CUSTOM DESIGN!

Text by Tonya Bullard

Although there is definitely nothing small about the house at 3101 Tealwood, the abundance of little details make this house a home.

Quite obviously, a decorator has spent much time defining the accents throughout this home.

For example, this home has muted brick-red interior throughout the entryway, formal living room and den.

The entryway features textured wallpaper. A decorative border highlights the wall.

The linoleum has a red-brick pattern.

The formal living room contains a red-brick double fire place. The very vastness of the room is inviting.

Antique brass accents such as ceiling fan attachments and door knobs extend the invitation to share this room.

This room has high ceilings and white door facings and baseboards accent the neutral carpet.

The details in the den are highlighted by two skylights and a large window.

A custom-made, pillared mantle inset with an oval mirror and delicate engravings frames the fireplace.

Many details are found in the kitchen as well. A paneled lightly-stained pine ceiling creates a homey feeling. Contrasting dark cabinets continue this feeling.

The kitchen also has a separate cooking range complete with an overhead vent-a-hood. Cream-colored countertops provide ample workspace.

A custom-designed pantry with movable, fold-out shelves holds spices or cans of food.

The breakfast area overlooks the side-yard. The floor is covered by a honeycomb pattern linoleum.

Around the corner, a mirrored wet bar opens through white saloon style doors.

Inside this area (with service windows to both the living room and the office area) green-and-red-striped wallpaper covers the walls and glass shelves reflect the overhead lights.

In the dining room, three panels of ceiling-to-floor windows covered with wooden, louvered blinds overlook the circular drive.

Above the table area, a molded ceiling and a candle-like light fixture give the room a quiet, elegant appearance.

A large office area, with hazy-blue wallpaper and molded half-paneling on its walls and large window, is divided from the living area by louvered shutters.

For details on storage one may inquire in one of the three closets found in the hallway, which leads to the bedrooms.

The first bedroom, the guest room, has three sections of custom mini-blinds and double closets with brass doorknobs.

A second bedroom is near the full bath, which has a his-n-her sink, wood stained cabinets and a large opaque window above the bathtub.

At the end of the hall is the master suite. This spacious room, with a sculpted ceiling, two windows and a multi-bladed ceiling fan, can be fashioned to fit any amount of personal detail.

A good place to begin adding one's personal touch would be in the his-n-her bathrooms joined by an enormous walk-in closet.

The first bathroom contains stained cabinets, a single sink, a commode and a shower, which has a seat and a window.

The second bathroom features a bathtub with decorative tile, a vanity area, a huge mirror, a commode and stained cabinets.

From the den, a solid door with a pet-door in it leads to the shaded patio area and the plush, green back yard. A large building could be used for storage.

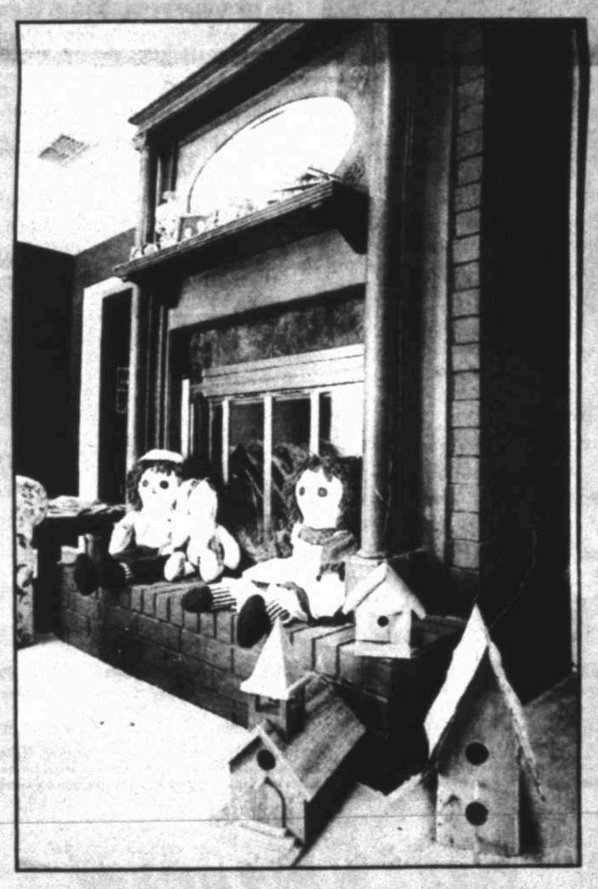

From the shingled roof to the tan brick, the exterior of this home has received special attention.

An outside parking area may be used for a private recreational vehicle.

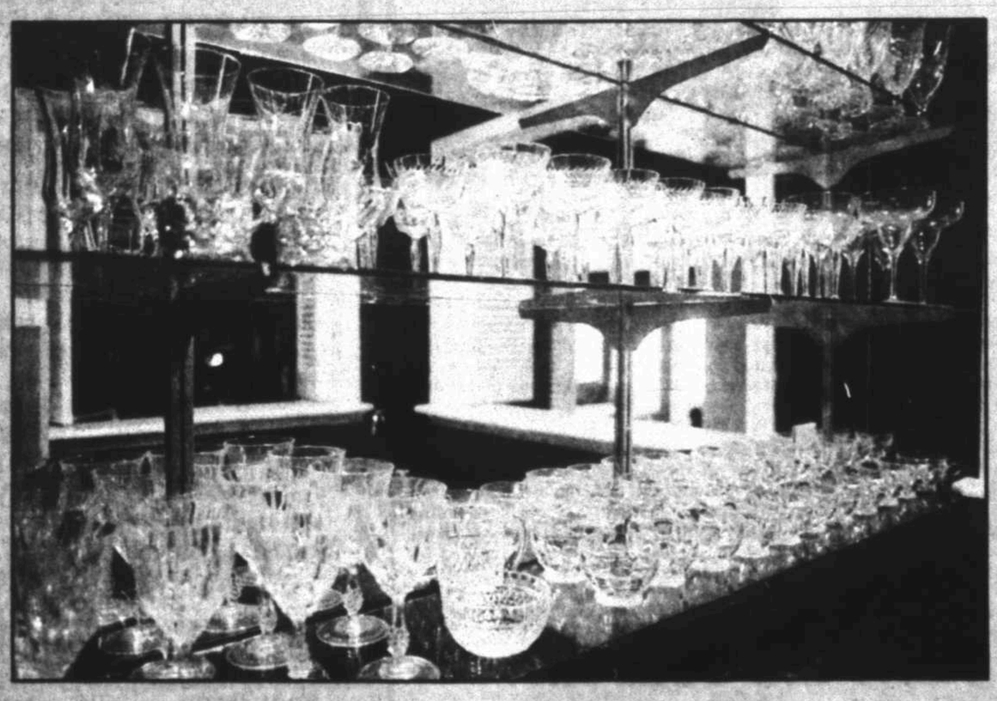

In addition the home has a double car garage. and the attic has a built-in floor. A new air conditioning unit and hot water heater were added in 1993.

The home, listed for $95,900, is located within walking distance of Kiwanis Park.

For more information about this home, or to schedule an exclusive appointment, call Ruth Young at Remax at 682-8820, or stop by her office at 4400 North Big Spring, at Mission Square, Suite #101.

Steps provided to save energy without losing your cool

Pat Orseth
President/Midland
Association of Realtors

Summer's in full swing and today's savvy home owners are looking for ways to keep cool while keeping energy costs low. Here are suggestions on keeping your home cool during these warm weather months from the Midland Association of REALTORS.

Nearly one-fourth of your home summer heat comes in through your windows from direct sunlight. The best solution is to use interior window shades, curtains or blinds, particularly those with a white or reflective backing that won't absorb heat. Regularly lowering the shades when the sun is directly on the window can reduce heat gain through a window by some 25 percent.

Awnings or overhanging eaves (especially on the south side) work well to shelter windows from sunlight. You may prefer eaves because they don't block desired winter sunlight as winter sun is lower. Solar shade screens will block out up to 75 percent of the sun's rays without obscuring your vision. Louvered sun screens are also recommended in warm climates.

If the time has come to replace your glass windows, consider Low-E glass which can minimize unwanted heat. Low-E glass also blocks out more than 60 percent of the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays which can damage carpeting and furniture.

If you prefer not to add to or alter your home's windows, consider planting a tree or shrub that will shade your window. Select a fast-growing or mature plant for cost effectiveness. It's a good idea to consult with a local nursery to make certain your choice is practical. This type of natural shading can cut interior heat by 10 to 15 degrees.

Windows are not the only source of heat gain. The walls and roof absorb heat as well. On a hot day, your roof surface may reach 150 degrees Fahrenheit and interior attic temperatures may reach 130 degrees Fahrenheit.

Consider installing a radiant barrier, a special type of reinforced foil that is stapled to rafters or laid over attic insulation. Foil barriers can block about 90 percent of incoming radiant heat to the attic insulation. Radiant barriers could save up to 10 percent on your utility bill.

When re-roofing, choose light colored shingles since they absorb less solar heat. Consider light colors when selecting siding or exterior paint colors.

Air leaks can result in significant heat gain during the summer months. Look for such unwanted air passages around doors and windows and where electrical, plumbing and gas enter.

Caulk around windows and doors and where piping and wiring run into the home. Add insulation tot he attic floor or between the roof rafters. Consult a local insulation specialist to determine the recommended amount of insulation in our area.

Until the outdoor air temperature reaches 85 degrees Fahrenheit, circulating the air inside your home may have a remarkable cooling effect. Open doors and windows at sundown and pull in cooler outside air with fans. Close the house in the morning to retain the cool air, unless it's humid outside. In humid weather, avoid opening the windows at night when the air temperature may be lower, but the moisture content higher.

Use room fans to move air around. Portable fans cost less than $.05 per hour to operate, ceiling fans a penny or two more. Whole house fans installed in a hallway ceiling or attic, can move 4,000 to 6,000 cubic feet of air per minute, thereby quickly replacing warm indoor air with cooler outdoor air. These fans can eliminate the need for an air conditioner during certain times of the year and, for maximum efficiency, can be wired to automatically turn off when your air conditioner comes on.

While you can't control the heat produced by the sun, you can reduce the amount of heat produced indoors. Cooking, bathing and using appliances all produce heat. Use appliances in the morning and evening hours and avoid heating your stove if possible. A microwave oven not only saves heat, but utility costs as well. A very hot day is a great time to use that outdoor grill.

When buying appliances, look for energy efficient models, especially for those appliances that run frequently. Consider moving your freezer or washer and dryer to non-air conditioned space.

Following these steps should help you feel cooler this summer. But when all else fails, remember that autumn is just around the corner.

Real Estate Facts . . .

Who gets the calico cat?

Chaparral Realtors

You've looked at a number of homes, and made the decision to buy one of them. You're satisfied that the price is a fair one, and the closing and possession dates are also satisfactory. You only have one question: Who gets the calico cat?

You and your family have fallen in love with the property owners' calico cat, and have decided that you will buy the house if the owner agrees to leave the cat. Does the cat stay or go?

Of course, this is a "tongue-in-cheek" example. The cat story will never happen, but what about the countertop microwave?

The microwave, like the calico cat, is considered personal property, and is not included int he sale of real estate. Real property is defined at "the land and any "improvements" on the land." Improvements are items which are "permanently affixed" to the land such as a house or garage, swimming pool, built-in oven, etc.

Everything else is considered "personal" property. Some examples might include: the countertop microwave, a portable gas grill, fireplace tools, or a calico cat.

When you find the right home to purchase, ask the real estate agent what stays, and what goes. Some sellers may be including items of personal property, such as a refrigerator or washer/dryer. If so, it must be specifically included in the property to be included - it isn't!

Take the same approach on items which may b e questionable. For example, is the TV antenna permanently mounted or not? What about the swing set in the back yard? If you have any doubts, ask that the item be included in the written contract. If some cost is attached to an item of personal property, spell that out to avoid any later misunderstandings.

Personal property is not included in the sale of real estate, so if you want the calico cat, put it in writing!

Crafts of Nature

As soon as the long-awaited summer vacation begins, parents begin hearing the long-familiar cries of "I'm bored!" from their offspring. And even going on vacation is no cure for this ailment. It seems children can be bored any time, anywhere.

Fortunately, the creative parent can help keep them occupied, even far away from home, by crafts projects that can be done when camping or traveling — or after you get home — by using items found on your travels.

Here are a few suggestions:

In her book, "Vacation Crafts," Phyllis Meras offers the following directions for making mementos using such items as pine cones, shells and sand or clay. These are some of her ideas:

SHELLS

The first step in making keepsakes from shells is to clean the shells themselves. Ms. Meras writes to first, wash the shells in warm, soapy water. (Soak in a solution of ¼-cup bleach and about 1 quart of water if necessary.) Gently wipe the shells dry.

After cleaning and drying the shells, you can decorate bookends, baskets or hats; make jewelry or create holiday decor.

For a child-pleasing craft, try this idea from Ms. Meras: "Tiny slipper or boat shells, painted with air-

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Summer reading favorite pastime

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

"What are you reading now?" This was the question we posed to several Midlanders recently. Whether for pleasure or personal enrichment, we are pleased to find that people make time for reading in this busy society of ours.

McKnight-Harrison

A prolific reader, Marjorie (Mrs. Clarence) Cardwell keeps abreast of the best-sellers and makes reading a part of her daily schedule. Most recently, she has read John Grisham's newest book, "The Chamber," "The Slow Waltz at Cedar Bend" by James Waller, author of the popular "The Bridges of Madison County," and that inimitable writer Erma Bombeck's latest, "A Marriage Made in Heaven, or Too Tired To Have An Affair," among other newly published books which can be found in her home library.

Johnnye Montgomery is one of those readers who always has several good books going at once. Currently, she is intrigued with "In Search of Our Mothers' Gardens," a collection of essays penned by Alice Walker, author of "The Color Purple." From time to time, she rereads a favorite, "Journal of a Solitude" by poet and novelist May Sarton. For a change of pace, she is now reading the mystery, "To Live and Die in L.A." by Gerald Petievich.

Normally a reader of mysteries, Paul Hiebert is currently enjoying a best-seller on another subject, "The Celestine Prophecy" by James Redfield. The novel's protagonist is intent on tracking down an ancient manuscript in Peru, which gives nine new insights into spiritual awareness. Paul tells us there is a sequel under way, which will reveal the 10th insight. Among Paul's favorite mystery writers are John Grisham, Sue Grafton, Clifford Irving, Dean Koontz, and Lawrence Sanders.

Louan Rogers is absorbed in Bob Woodward's new book, "The Agenda," about the Clinton administration. She just finished a best-seller, "Pigs in Heaven," by Barbara Kingsolver, which is this month's reading assignment for her book club. Her husband, Glenn, an orthodontist, reads for both business and pleasure. When not reading professional journals, he likes an absorbing mystery, such as Stuart E. Kaminsky's "Death of a Russian Priest." He also likes to read books on the subject of theology, with John Stott as one of his favorite authors.

Pam Allen declares "Women Who Run with the Wolves" by Clarissa Pinkola Estes a must read. "It is an eye opening, self-affirming book for women," Pam says, "and it wouldn't hurt men to read it either," she adds.

Although she usually can be found reading a mystery, Rhondy (Mrs. Jed) Barker discovered author Lynn V. Andrews' book, "Flight of the Seventh Moon," a companion volume to her earlier highly praised "Medicine Woman." The book explores long hidden areas of Native American culture and mysticism, and Ms. Andrews translates it into her newfound understanding into the mental, emotional, physical and spiritual aspects of everyday life.

A history buff, my spouse Harry Harrison is working his way through the 14-volume set of Samuel Eliot Morison's "History of the United States Naval Operations in World War II" for the second time. He recently finished another WW II book, "The Tigers Are Burning" by Martin Caidin, a prolific writer of military histories and studies. It details the Battle of Kursk, one of the largest land surface battles ever fought, which took place between the Russians and Germans in 1943.

And this columnist considers Dan Quayle's autobiography, "Standing Firm," which offers an insider's account of the Bush administration including his own hard-fought battles with the media, a good read.

IT WAS GOOD to see former Midlanders Joseph and Theresa Brunelle back at the Museum of the Southwest's Summer Sundays Lawn Concerts last weekend.

The couple, who now reside in Austin, are no strangers to Midland audiences. They return from time to time to perform for various functions in the Tall City, including the museum's Septemberfest. This marked their third appearance at the Lawn Concerts.

With Joseph playing guitar, the pair sing ballads and blues, and most of their material has been written by Joseph.

The popular Sunday evening gatherings find many families enjoying picnic suppers on the museum grounds prior to the concerts. The crowd brings its own seating. The grounds are dotted with lawn chairs and blankets.

Among the 525 persons we spotted in last week's throng were Kim and Gary Womack with their 15-month-old son, Weston; Barbara and Mark Collinsworth and children, Richmond and Alana; Lydia Wilkinson, Evelyn and Norman Gould, Ruth and Dave Hoff and Em Carnett.

Tonight's concert at 7:45 will feature Doubleshot, who specialize in contemporary country music and classic rock.

Marilyn McKnight-Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

CRAFTS: Get crafty with nature

plane model paint to resemble beetles or mushrooms or flowers, can be attractively glued to the top of notepaper. Fill the shells with a tiny dot of glue-soaked cotton ... Then lay them on a piece of newspaper or typing paper while you decorate them so that the cotton attaches itself to the paper. When the paint is dry, cut the shells from the paper and apply a little glue to the bottom of the paper on which thy have dried. This will give them a smooth base. Arrange them attractively at the top of your notepaper. If you like, you can make additional decorations, such as sea gulls, stems or leaves, with (marking pens) around the shells on the notepaper."

PINE CONES

Pine cones can be used to make animals and other decorative shapes, but Ms. Meras warns that before creating crafts with pine cones, they should be heated in a 150 degree to 200 degree oven for about an hour to kill any bugs they might be housing. "It is best to gather cones from recently felled trees, preferably in the spring, when the cones are fresh and shiny. If they are old, spray them with a light coat of clear plastic spray before using them, or apply a very light coat of gesso with a watercolor brush and let it dry; then spray-paint them," she wrote.

Then use your imagination to make rabbits, birds or any other animals you can see in the cones. Details can be added with paint, pipe cleaners, sticks, cotton balls, rocks or pebbles, a variety of beans, unpopped pop corn, rice, bird seed.

SAND

Many people find art in sand, which, fortunately for them, is cheap and easy to find, and available in many colors. But, Ms. Meras warns, "Before collecting sand and clay, however, make sure the law allows you to pick them up. Colored sand may not be taken from the Painted Desert of Arizona, and the clay from Martha's Vineyard's Gay Head Cliffs is similarly protected. But there are many parts of the country where sand and clay are simply turned up and left by the roadside when a new road is built."

One effective way to use sand in art is in bottles. Layered, different-colored soil can make a beautiful ornament for any home. Ms. Meras credits Doyle Blalock of Little Rock, Ark., with the following instructions for sand in bottles:

Materials needed are old newspaper, sands of different colors, funnel, teaspoon, clear glass bottle, straightened coat hanger or lead pencil; dowel or cut-off broom handle and paraffin.

First step is to dry the sand by spreading each color of sand in a separate pile on five layers of newspapers (in the yard and preferably in the sun). Turn the sand every 30 minutes or so to speed the drying, but be sure the sand is completely dry "or it will not fall into your bottle properly." If lumps occur, use a rolling pin to crush them after the sand is dry.

Sift out any remaining lumps. Using the funnel and the teaspoon, put a little sand — about one-half inch to start — of one color into the bottle, and top it with about one-half inch of another color. Use the pencil or coat hanger to push on the top layer, which will create a pattern by pushing the top layer into the bottom one.

Continue layering sand and using the pencil or hanger to make a pattern until reaching the point where the bottle begins to curve toward the top. Begin packing the sand tightly in the bottle by poking the wire hanger into the center of the bottle and moving it up and down so the sand falls. More sand may need to be added at this point.

Keep adding sand and packing it down until the sand is about ⅛-inch from the top of the bottle. "When there is no longer any give to the sand, poke a dowel or a broom handle into the mouth of the bottle. Stack magazine or newspapers on a table to act as a cushion. Holding the dowel or broom handle in the bottle top, bump the bottle on the cushion of magazines several times to pack the sand will harder," Ms. Meras wrote. "Unless it is truly packed hard, Mr. Blalock says, it will not stay in layers or in a design. If you need to add more sand during this process, do so."

When you are satisfied that the sand is packed in the bottle as hard as it can be and the bottle is full of sand to about ⅛-inch of the top, put a small piece of folded-up paper towel on top of the sand and seal with paraffin. Cap the bottle.

In "Creative Crafts for Campers," authors Catherine T. Hammett and Carol M. Horrocks list page after page of crafts that can be created while camping in the wild. One of the most fitting for that setting is basketry.

"Basket making is a craft that is ageless, one that is found in every part of the world," they wrote. "It is a popular camp handcraft because so many natural materials for basketry are found in camps, and because the articles made — from sit-upons to pack baskets — can be used in outdoor living....

"The word basket comes from the Old English, and means a vessel made of vegetable fibers. Thus, reeds, vines, splints, rushes, sweet grass, lauhaula and palmetto leaves, long needles of pine, straw or cornhusks may be woven into baskets of many shapes and uses."

After advising campers to keep conservation in mind when gathering their materials and prepare these materials properly for weaving, the authors list three common techniques of basket making: weaving, coiling and braiding.

Weaving, they wrote, "is a method of weaving a long, supple strand, or 'weaver,' over and under a series of spokes which form the framework."

Coiling is the method of basket making that is "used with reeds or vines, or with short lengths of grasses, pine needles, rushes, etc. These are wound into a coil or core, and stitched together with raffia, grass, thread or twine, using a large-eyed needle."

Braid is "used with rushes, cornhusks and other broadleafed, soft materials."

Some of the items that can be made with such techniques are hot dish mats, waste baskets, hats and, of course, baskets.

Children also love to create their own art out of common, everyday items. In his book, "Crafting with Nature's Materials," Chester Jay Alkema discusses how to make mosaics using such items as beans, rice, bird seed, flower seeds, pebbles, shells and other natural materials.

Use these natural items instead of crayons or paints to make pictures on flat surfaces. The colors and textures of seeds, grains and pebbles can bring dimension and life to an otherwise flat picture.

"When you are planning your mosaic, you might start by drawing a cartoon outlining in general the light and dark areas," he wrote. "The cartoon can then be transferred to whatever backing you have chosen — paper, Masonite, plywood, fibreboard, etc. Do not make a detailed cartoon. Let the materials themselves create the detail as you work."

Whatever you and your children decide to make this summer, these books and others like them can help you be more creative.

Boredom can be a thing of the past.

Survey finds many writers earn low wages

By Sarah Lyall
N.Y. Times News Service

In contrast to the glamorous few who earn huge advances and take in enormous royalty checks, most established fiction and nonfiction writers and playwrights are not close to being able to support themselves from their writing, according to a recent survey.

The survey found that for basic living expenses, writers are usually forced to rely on their spouses, on second jobs or on other sources of income, like retirement funds. Often, this outside income gives established authors higher-than-average household incomes. At the same time, the survey said, many authors have inadequate health insurance policies.

The survey was conducted by Princeton Survey Research Associates for the Authors League Fund, a New York City-based charitable organization that helps writers in financial need.

Questionnaires were sent to 1,000 nonfiction authors, novelists and playwrights from the Authors Guild and the Dramatists Guild; there were 637 responses.

But the sample is not necessarily representative of the writing community, the Authors League Fund said. To be a member of the Authors Guild, writers must have published a book within the last seven years or three magazine articles within the last six months. To be a member of the Dramatists Guild, a playwright must have had a play produced at one of a number of prestigious theaters.

Few members of either group are under the age of 30, meaning that the authors who responded to the questionnaire were less likely to have financial problems and more likely to have health insurance than authors as a whole.

In the sample, 24 percent of the authors said they received no income at all from their writing during the first half of 1993, and 16 percent earned less than $1,000. "Writing continues to be lucrative for a rarefied few, since only 9 percent report over $50,000 in earnings from writing," the survey said.

At the same time, the survey concluded that most established authors had other sources of income, because as a group they had higher-than-average household incomes.

Grubworms feast on grass roots

By Deborah A. Benge

They're hereeee. Silently doing what they do best — eating your grass roots. Ironically, the healthier and lusher you lawn is, the more likely it is to become a target for white grubworms.

Benge

Actually, lawns become a target for the white grubworm's mother to lay eggs in. Mother grub is a reddish-brown beetle about one-half inch long that can be seen flying around the lights at night during June. When you see the adult beetles, mating and egg laying aren't far behind.

Female June beetles can still be sen at dusk flying two to three feet above lawns, looking for a good place to lay eggs. Egg laying generally lasts up to 30 days and a female can lay 30 to 40 eggs in her life span. Females dig down into the soil, laying eggs two to five inches deep, sometimes in clumps. Eggs begin to hatch in three to four weeks.

Larvae (immature form of the beetles) hatch from eggs and pass through three larval stages. The first two stages occur rapidly, in about three weeks. The third stage lives in the soil for the rest of the year until it pupates changes into the adult beetle emerging from the soil in about May of the following year.

The first and second larval stages of the white grubworm grow rapidly and feed heavily on grass roots. Heavy feeding in July and August causes large brown or stressed areas in the lawn. Grasping suspect grass with both hands and pulling back will result in the turf lifting in patches or rolling back like a rug. Underneath the affected grass will have almost no roots and you'll probably see several grubs.

It's the third larval stage that most of us are most familiar with. This large white grub with a redding-brown head is what we see when digging in gardens and beds in the spring. During the third larval state, control becomes very difficult due to the sheer size and hardiness of the grub.

Control of grubs is difficult but there are some management steps you can take. Turf grass selection, cultural practices and as a last effort, chemical control to manage grubworms.

Some turf grass species can tolerate grubs feeding better than others. Common Bermuda grass and buffalo grass are among the most tolerant. Incidentally, these are also the best adapted turf grasses to our area. Tall fescue, St. Augustine and some of the hybrid Bermudas are very susceptible to grub damage.

The amounts of water and fertilizer a lawn receives will have a bearing on grub numbers and damage. Lawns maintained at high levels with lots of water and fertilizer will be more attractive to female beetles, resulting in higher grub numbers as compared to a lawn given modest or meager amounts of water and fertilizer. And lawns that are given minimal amounts of water develop a hard soil surface, making egg laying difficult and less likely to occur. With our June and current weather conditions, this may be true of many lawns. Our hot, dry days may have created conditions that could have interfered with egg laying. So we may be seeing less grub damage this year than most.

Biological control of grubs is being looked at, but is not practical or readily available at this time. There are some beneficial parasitic nematodes that will parasitize grubs. The research work needed to evaluate this method has not been fully completed at this time.

Milky spore is another biological control method that is effective against grubs, but not our white grub worm species. It will not work for us, so save your money.

If you have a serious infestation which warrants chemical control, timing and method of application are essential for good control. Check turf in several locations for young grubs. Three or more per square foot is a guideline for treatment.

Insecticides need to be applied in mid-July to early August. Chemical applications made at any other time will not be as effective and may be wasted effort.

Watering before and after insecticide is applied is very important. Watering heavily before treatment will bring the grubs to the soil surface for air. Applying insecticide and following with irrigation will move the insecticide to where the grubs are. These steps need to be consecutive and made without delay.

Insecticides recommended for control of white grub worms include Diazinon, Oftanol, Mocap and Triumph.

Remember, don't treat unless you have a problem, treat at the right time, use the correct application method and don't forget to use cultural practices to discourage egg laying in your lawn.

Air fare rules confusing

By Betsy Wade
N.Y. Times News Service

The airlines' rules and restrictions on their fares are in a muddle at the moment. Travelers may benefit in terms of cost, because the confusion derives from regional fare wars. And if refundable advance-purchase fares, now offered by a number of lines, at least in particular areas, continue to spread, the nonrefundable fare itself may expire.

In the meantime, it is difficult to know what rules apply. Here is a rundown on the situation.

Southwest Airlines, a no-frills line and the smallest of the 10 major airlines, began the current cycle. In February, according to Melanie Jones, a spokeswoman, it made almost all of its advance-purchase fares fully refundable for any reason at no charge, at the same time eliminating the requirement for a Saturday night stay.

The airline's seven-day advance purchase fare, an exception, continues to require a one-night stay, not necessarily a Saturday. Southwest's one-day advance purchase fare remains nonrefundable.

Meanwhile, Southwest has been incorporating routes it got by buying Morris Air last December, meaning its refundable tickets spread to additional routes. It started in May and June when Southwest began serving Seattle and Spokane, Wash.; Portland, Ore., and Orange County, Calif. On June 15, it announced its schedules for Boise, Idaho; Salt Lake City and Tucson, Ariz., effective Oct. 4.

As an example, in Tucson, it will retain Morris's schedule, with daily flights to San Diego, Los Angeles and Las Vegas.

SOUTHWEST'S SWITCH to refundable advance purchase fares caused United Airlines to offer tickets with matching rules in areas where they compete. In then moving into the Northwest, Southwest broadened its competition with Alaska Airlines, a premium-service line with routes touching Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington.

Alaska Airlines, in turn, made all of its fares refundable beginning March 15, according to Greg Witter, a spokesman, but for a $35 fee, meaning the passenger can decide not to go at all and get a refund, minus $35. Alaska has also dropped its Saturday-night stay requirement for advance purchase fares, although it, too, has some one-night stay restrictions.

If a ticket is being changed solely because the fare has dropped, Alaska will give the traveler a voucher for future travel for the full amount of the fare drop, rather than reticketing at the lower fare.

Thickening the brew, in April, most major airlines raised to $35 from $25 the fee for changing a domestic nonrefundable ticket, either to get a cheaper fare announced after the ticket was bought, or to change flights.

The rules governing reticketing are so tedious that no public affairs officer who was called during research for this column was able to give all the answers immediately.

AMERICAN AIRLINES' rules depend upon whether the change is made at an airline counter or through a travel agent, according to Teresa Hanson, a spokeswoman.

If a ticket is being turned in to get an identical ticket at a new lower price, presuming all restrictions are met, and the change is made at the counter, the $35 will be subtracted and the remaining amount refunded in the same form that the ticket was paid for — either credited to a charge card, or by a check.

If the customer will accept the refund in the form of a voucher for future travel on American, no fee is charged. If the change is made through a travel agent, the voucher choice is not available, and the $35 must be deducted from any refund.

If the ticket is being turned in just to change the date of travel, the $35 fee applies and an agent can do it as well as the airline itself.

United Airlines also will not charge the $35 fee for a change to a lower fare if the customer will accept a voucher for the difference. If a credit on a charge card or a check is the choice, the $35 is subtracted. However, with a United ticket, both choices are available from a travel agent or at a counter.

Meanwhile, on routes where United is competing with Southwest and Alaska Airlines, the airline sells tickets to match Southwest's rules, meaning most are refundable at no fee.

Joseph P. Hopkins, a spokesman for United, said that the lines were in competition in 435 domestic markets, meaning both lines are serving the two cities, even if by different routes.

AMERICA WEST competes with Southwest in a different way. According to Mike Mitchell, a spokesman, in many of the line's 1,000 markets, it has always offered refundable mid-priced coach tickets.

On the Phoenix-Los Angeles route, as an example, where the nonrefundable 14-day advance-purchase ticket costs $39 one way, he said a refundable K-class coach ticket would cost $62 one way, and a refundable B-class coach ticket $82. Both of these are capacity controlled, meaning there are not very many of them on each flight.

The refundable full coach Y-class fare on this route would be $99. The fee for changing a nonrefundable ticket, even to get a lower fare, is $35, and this is charged whatever the form of the refund. Changes can be made by travel agents or at the counter.

Continental Airlines is promoting its Peanuts fares, which Peggy Mahoney, a spokeswoman, says now apply to 50 percent of the line's departures. These low fares, first offered in October, buy travel that usually does not include meals, and with tight controls on carry-on luggage and boarding procedures.

Peanuts fares are refundable and changeable without fees, according to Ms. Mahoney. On non-Peanuts fares, a fee of $35 is charged for changing a ticket to a lower fare or a different date. The fee is charged on counter transactions and at travel agencies. But an agency may elect not to collect the fee, particularly if the change is made before the original ticket sale is included in the weekly report to the airline clearinghouse.

Northwest Airlines has been charging $50 to change a nonrefundable ticket since 1992, according to Jim Faulkner, a spokesman. If the ticket is being changed just to get a lower fare, and the customer accepts a voucher, from either an agent or the counter, the fee is waived.

DEAR ABBY

Parents' friendship with son's family gone to the dogs

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our son, daughter-in-law and grandson accepted our invitation for a Memorial Day cookout/pool party. They live about a 45-minute drive from our home.

Van Buren

Our daughter-in-law agreed somewhat reluctantly to leave their dog home, knowing that my wife and I are not "pet people."

Memorial Day morning, our daughter-in-law telephoned to say that she was sorry, but she just couldn't leave their dog alone all day. Then she gave me a "love me — love my dog" ultimatum, indicating that the dog was a member of their family. She expected me to cave in and say, "Well, all right ... bring the dog."

Instead, I said, "I'm sorry you're not coming, but I understand your feelings. Perhaps another time."

She said, "Well, goodbye," and then she hung up.

Abby, neither she nor my son has communicated with us since. Was I wrong? Or was she? — IN THE DOGHOUSE

DEAR NAMELESS: Who was right and who was wrong is unimportant. You had the right to ban pets from your home, and she had the right to decline your invitation because she couldn't bring the dog. The important issue here is maintaining a friendly relationship with your son and his wife. I urge you to break the silence now, before it escalates into a permanent breach.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are invited to a wedding. The invitation says "black tie." The groom is a friend of the family, and I am not in the wedding party. I understand they sent 300 invitations.

The tuxedo I have owned for 20 years no longer fits me, and I don't feel like buying a new one. Wouldn't it be all right if I wore a black suit with a white shirt and black bow tie? Sign me ... GOOD ENOUGH

DEAR GOOD ENOUGH: Absolutely! Most people will be so preoccupied with the way THEY look, they won't even notice what YOU'RE wearing.

DEAR ABBY: My name is Daniel and I am 11 years old. I am traveling north in August, and I will be staying for six days. I am sure I am going to get homesick, so I am not looking forward to the trip. You are usually able to answer people's questions, so hopefully, you can answer mine.

What happens if I get bored on the bus and want to go home? Do I go and tell the bus driver to turn around? Or do I sit there and get more and more upset worrying about getting homesick? — DANIEL IN CAMDEN, N.J.

DEAR DANIEL: Your problem is one that everyone has had from time to time — worrying about something that may never happen.

Don't let yourself think about getting lonesome. Take a book to read, a puzzle, or a game that one person can play ... something to keep your mind occupied during the bus ride.

Please write back after the trip and tell me if I was right or wrong. Good luck, Daniel.

DEAR READERS: "A conference is a gathering of important people who singly can do nothing, but together can decide that nothing can be done." — FRED ALLEN

AT WIT'S END

Hearing aids are most resistible item

By Erma Bombeck

One of the hardest things for people to admit is that they are losing their hearing. The whole world wears glasses, and dental work is a given sometime in your life. Even hip replacements and new organs are regarded with nonchalance. But to suggest someone isn't hearing like she used to is like telling her she's headed for God's waiting room.

Bombeck

I remember the exact day I said to my mother, "Did you hear what I said?"

"No, what did you say?"

"Mom, maybe you should have your hearing checked. You might need a hearing aid."

"You're the only one I can't hear," she said defensively. "I can hear everyone else. That's because you mumble."

"I do not mumble. One of these days I'm going to say something important and you'll miss it."

"When you say something important, just punch me on the arm or wave your hands in front of my face."

I have an offspring who has blown out six of our car speakers, so you can imagine what he's blown out of his ears. When he plays cassettes in his car, it sounds like one of those pickup trucks that you hear the bass and your car shakes — and it's five blocks behind you.

The battle between my mother and me went on for months until she broke down and was outfitted with a hearing aid. She hated it from the day she bought it. We were on a flight together one morning from Los Angeles to Monterey when Mom started beeping — a loud, eerie screech. Every businessman on the plane tried to shut off his pager. One man even slapped his and then held it to his ear.

I leaned over and whispered to her, as if she hadn't thought about it, "Turn it off."

"I did and it still beeps," she said. "It's never done that before."

"It's probably because you and the airplane are on the same frequency."

"What does that mean?" she asked.

"Mom, I have no idea what I just said."

The aids continued beeping after she banged them against the armrest, wrapped her sweater around them and buried them in her hand luggage. For all I know, they're still beeping.

I don't know why she's so sensitive. I know if I mumbled, I'd admit it. Do you think I mumble?

WEDDINGS

BANKS-SEDENO

St. Ann's Catholic Church in Midland was the setting for the 2 p.m. Saturday wedding of Robyn Elaine Banks and Christopher Scott Sedeno, both of San Angelo. The Rev. Fred Nawarskas officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Johnny and Patricia Banks of Midland, and the granddaughter of Max and Hilda Schumann of Midland and the late Corine and J.W. Banks. Parents of the bridegroom are Donna and Bobby Martinez and Domingo Sedeno of San Angelo. New housing starts are rated by area

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly one out of every 10 single-family American homes was built in four metropolitan areas since the start of the decade, according to an analysis of housing permits.

The four areas are Atlanta, Washington, Chicago and Phoenix, says David Savageau, co-author of "Places Rated Almanac," which analyzed the number of housing permits issued in 325 metro areas in the period from Jan. 1, 1990, to Jan. 1, 1994.

"New housing construction is no longer a Sun Belt exclusive," Savageau noted. "New housing starts picked up in the Midwest and in some Mid-Atlantic areas."

San Francisco topped the list as the most expensive place to buy a home, he added, while the least expensive was the McAllen-Edinburg-Mission area in Texas.

Dean Davis holds a young crocodile as he shows it to children at the Glenmont Elementary School in Glenmont, N.Y. Davis, 42, is one of those rare individuals who managed to turn a boyhood hobby into a full-time livelihood.

Pet menagerie is a teaching tool

By Mary Esch

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — When he was 8, Dean Davis bought a tiny green turtle for a quarter, put it in a pan with a plastic palm tree, and fed it dried flies. He flushed it down the toilet when it died.

He got another. But he went to the library, to learn how to keep it.

Thirty-four years later, the cooter is thriving. So is the crocodile Davis bought at Woolworth's when he was 12, an alligator snapper he got when he was 8, and hundreds of other beasts he has acquired over the years.

Davis, 42, is one of those rare individuals who manage to turn a boyhood hobby into a full-time livelihood.

The self-taught naturalist — an outspoken man who is given to jibes at animal rights activists and his ex-wife — spends his days giving ecology talks at schools, civic meetings and museums and his nights tending to about 300 species of creatures.

His menagerie includes foot-long scorpions, tarantulas, whistling marmots, monkeys, macaws, sloths, rattlesnakes, chinchillas, prairie dogs, kinkajous, coatimundis, land crabs, cobras, pythons, tree frogs, sail-finned basilisk lizards, barking geckoes, and a nine-pound, rat-eating Amazon toad.

Many are cast-offs from zoos, pet shops or people who found an exotic novelty too hard to handle. Some were acquired through swaps arranged over computer bulletin boards linking zoo traders.

"I'll give a home to any animal people don't want," Davis says.

He tried to open his collection to the public as a zoo eight years ago. But he dropped the plan after harassment from animal rights activists.

"There are some groups who feel animals are better off dead than in a cage," says Davis, who is secretive about the location of his animals for fear of a break-in.

SINCE HE can't bring people to see his animals, Davis brings his animals to the people. He's booked about 275 days a year, he says, mainly in schools but also at museums such as the Museum of Natural History in New York City.

"This is the zoomobile," he says, chain-smoking cigarettes and swigging caffeine-packed Jolt cola beside his Buick Skylark during a break between shows at Glenmont Elementary School, just south of Albany. The car, littered with corncobs and Cheerios, has all but the driver's seat removed to accommodate cages and foam reptile boxes.

At Glenmont, children wearing wildlife T-shirts greet him by his first name; Davis has been doing programs there twice a year for four years, he says. Teachers plan science and writing projects around the shows.

Davis's 40-minute talks are fast-paced, funny and filled with facts. One show at Glenmont, on camouflage, included moths that mimic leaves, and a baby crocodile with bands that blend in with cattails.

"This guy's caterpillar is the coolest mimic," he says, holding up a butterfly. "It looks like bird doo-doo. It works so well that there are 20,000 kinds of butterflies with bird-dropping caterpillars."

"This is one of the deadliest snakes in the world," he says, draping a banded krait across his bare hands. "His fangs are thinner than an eyelash. He'd only bite me if I stepped on him or hurt him, because it would probably break his teeth. Nature gave him warning colors: black and yellow stripes."

UNLIKE MANY wildlife educators, Davis won't let anyone touch his animals. That would stress the animal and perhaps make it bite, he says.

"People have been hurt in these hands-on programs, and that's led to laws restricting them in some states," Davis says. "In Connecticut, everything has to be in a cage. In Pennsylvania, everything has to be on a leash. If I take a tarantula, I have to put a thread around it."

Davis was a guest lecturer at the New York State Museum in Albany for five years, until his contract was dropped last fall.

"I wasn't politically correct," Davis says. "Some people say I sound like Rush Limbaugh when I talk about animal rights. One line that got me in trouble was one I stole from Rush: If dolphins are smarter than people, how come we catch them in tuna nets?"

Although he has been collecting animals since childhood, Davis discourages others from doing so unless they can meet an animal's needs.

"Reptiles, especially turtles, take a long time to die," Davis says. "A kid might have one live for two years and think that's great. But that animal should have lived 45 years. It just died a slow death."

"This cooter eats a pound of water plants a day, plus worms, goldfish, dead mice," Davis says, referring to his 34-year-old dime-store turtle. "People starve them. They don't keep them warm enough. They don't provide ultraviolet light for basking."

WHEN SOMEONE gives him a new animal, Davis says, he seeks a mate for it.

"The only way you can tell if an animal is really healthy is if it reproduces," he says.

"I've had some Mexican two-footed worm lizards for 20 years," Davis says. "I've never gotten them to breed. I don't know if they're too hot, too cold, if it's some dietary deficiency ... that drives me berserk."

"With my two-toed sloths, vitamin E and selenium got them to breed like rats," he says.

He uses the young in shows, and gives some to zoos. Many become food.

"My 17-foot cobra will swallow a six-foot python like a piece of spaghetti," Davis says. "The baby turtles, I use as food for cottonmouths and anacondas. Nothing gets wasted."

His vocation has hazards. He has been bitten in the knee and the head by his 12-foot crocodile. A 9-foot monitor lizard cracked three of his ribs with her tail.

"I've been bitten by poisonous snakes 43 times," he says. A year ago, he lost a finger to gangrene resulting from a bite inflicted when a boy hassled a cottonmouth he was handling at a school.

"That cottonmouth was the great-grandchild of the first venomous snake that ever bit me, back when I was 12," he says.

The situation: With the weather becoming increasingly rainy and windy, there's tornado talk in the air. Suddenly your house doesn't seem as secure as it once did. You have no idea what to do if a tornado should invade your area.

What you should do: Verona Murrell, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service, says you should plan for a tornado ahead of time.

Designate the part of your house where you and your family should wait out the storm, and stock it with supplies such as water, blankets and nonperishable food.

If you have a basement, go there. If you don't, go to the most interior part of the lowest floor in the building. This goes for your home, or other places like a grocery store or shopping mall.

Once there, crouch over with your head to your knees.

"Make as small a target as possible," Murrell says.

If you're outside or in your car, you should go to a low area like a ditch, and lie flat on the ground.

What you shouldn't do: Don't take unnecessary risks securing your car or other items outside your home if a tornado warning is issued. (A warning means a tornado has been spotted, or is strongly suspected to exist; a tornado watch means the weather conditions are ripe for twister formation.)

When you learn of the warning, you should go immediately to your home's safest place and stay there until the danger has passed. As in any thunderstorm, stay away from electrical appliances and windows.

How to avoid the situation: It's impossible to choose a home in a tornado-free area. A twister could touch down anywhere.

But you can make sure you're prepared by doing tornado drills with your family.

When bad weather hits, Murrell advises you to keep tabs on the tornado conditions through the media or with a NOAA weather radio, available at electronics stores.

OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, July 17, 1994 — SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

COMING AUGUST 7...

AN UPDATE ON THE EASTERN SHELF

BRIEFING

An old standby gas engine sits idle at the Petroleum Museum. Natural gas prices are showing improvement.

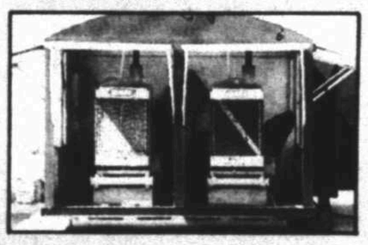

Stronger prices

Oil prices jumped nearly $1 in a single day early in the week, strengthened by a strike by Nigerian oil workers protesting that country's military regime and that was expected to expand to include management. Nigeria is the world's 10th largest crude producer.

Worries about the situation in North Korea following the death of its leader also boosted crude prices.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, August contracts for West Texas Intermediate jumped 70 cents in a single day to $20.18 a barrel early in the week and climbed as high as $20.43 before retreating back to $20.18 a barrel late in the week. The posted price was $18.75.

Natural gas prices eased slightly late the week, with August contracts slipping to $1.97 per thousand cubic feet on the Merc.

This power plant powers up another drilling rig.

Drilling steady

There was little change in drilling activity for the week ended July 8, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count inched up one to 109 for the week, up from 108 a year ago.

Eddy and Lea Counties, N.M. were the most active in the Basin with 15 rigs apiece, followed by Midland County with nine rigs.

The U.S. rig count rose two to 768, above last year's count of 713.

Among major producing states, Texas posted the sharpest increase, six rigs, while California posted the sharpest decline, five rigs.

Environmental education

ARCO Foundation has presented a grant of $5,000 to the National Resources Foundation of Texas, a free market environmental education based organization, which is expected to help the oil industry counter much of the unscientific and unneeded environmental regulation being imposed upon the industry.

Mike Bradford, a longtime Midlander and executive director of the National Resources Foundation of Texas, said the mission of the organization is to demonstrate the intrinsic relationship between environmental quality and economic sustainability, remembering that all life depends on natural resources and that the environment, economics and quality of life cannot be separated.

The organization uses a computer data base to collect appropriate information about the environment and economy, and experts in various fields to conduct forums on college campuses across the state.

ALTERNATIVE FUELS IN TEXAS

Gasoline fuels controversy

■ Reformulated gasoline inclusion sidetracks alternative fuel push

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

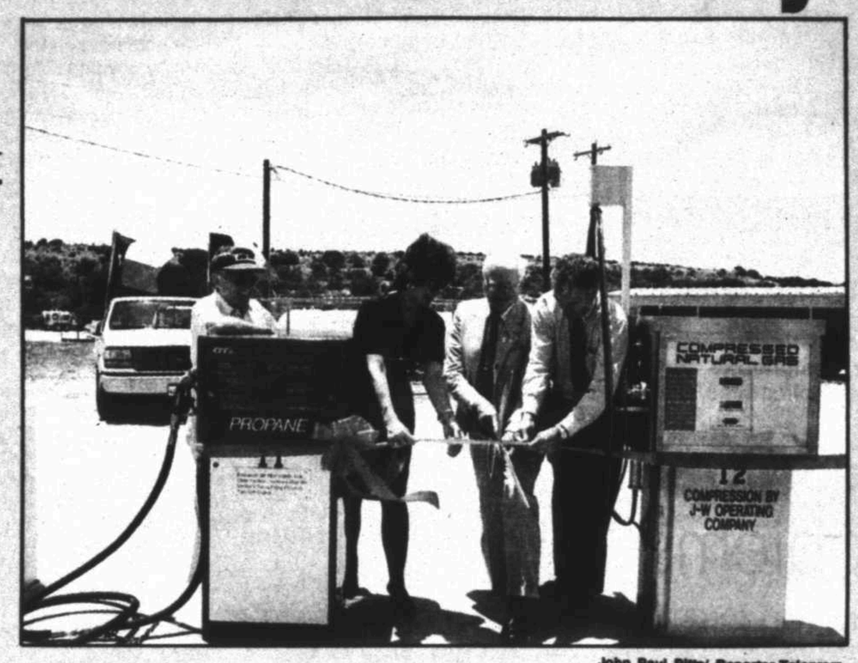

A debate raging over reformulated gasoline could have far-reaching consequences for the Texas energy industry.

If reformulated gasoline is not classified as an alternative fuel under the Texas Alternative Fuels Fleet (TAFF) program, thousands of fleet vehicles, including oilfield service vehicles 8,500 pounds and under, could be required to convert to propane or CNG in non-attainment areas. On the other hand, if reformulated gasoline is classified as an alternative fuel, it could deal a serious blow to the alternative fuel movement in the state.

The Texas fleet program, which calls for companies with fleets of more than 15 to convert 30 percent of their vehicles to alternative fuels by Sept. 1, 1998 and 90 percent of the fleet to alternative fuels by Sept. 1, 2002, is being challenged by the proposed inclusion of reformulated gasoline.

When the Texas program was initiated in 1989, ethanol, methanol, propane and CNG were the only fuels considered as "alternative." Since then, however, reformulated gasoline, which carries refining one step further to produce a gasoline that burns 20 percent cleaner, has been developed and is vying for inclusion as an alternative fuel.

While the federal Clean Air Act Amendments (CAAA) mandate states to enact fleet fuel programs in non-attainments areas with high ozone concentrations, critics say the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC) is more stringent than other states in that it does not recognize reformulate gasoline as a true alternative fuel.

John Paul Pitts/ Reporter-Telegram

Texas Railroad Commissioners Barry Williamson, Mary Scott Nabers and Jim Nugent cut the traditional ribbon at the opening of a new multi-fuel refueling center at Sonora.

Opponents to TAFF say it is unreasonable in that it excludes reformulated gasoline and low-sulphur fuel after 1998; does not make exceptions for vehicles that are not home-based and requires conversion of existing vehicles instead of phasing in new fuels as alternative fuel vehicles are purchased.

"While Texas Association of Business (TAB) believes that clean alternative fuels should be used to meet environmental and energy needs, the association maintains the position that the proposed program should not be more stringent than federal guidelines, and that alternative fuels that meet the necessary standards should be allowed by TNRCC," said Dane Harris, president of TAB, which represents 3,300 businesses in the state.

Dane pointed out that the cost of building additional refueling stations for fleet vehicles using CNG and aren't home-based, could cost as much as $250,000 with the cost of vehicle conversions ranging up to $3,000.

"There is a place for so-called reformulated gasoline in the clean-air effort," said Garry Mauro, Texas Land Commissioner and the driving force behind Texas's alternative fuel movement. "But TNRCC should not allow that fuel to replace true alternative fuels such as natural gas and propane in fleet conversions."

He warned that allowing refor-

While debate continues over reformulated gasoline in Texas, a multi-fuel refueling station, which sells propane, CNG, diesel and gasoline, opened recently at Sonora is the first of its kind in the nation and just may be the model for America's energy future.

It is rare when all three members of the Texas Railroad Commission appear at the same event, but so significant was the event in Texas energy history that it drew all three Railroad Commissioners, Jim Nugent, Barry Williamson and Mary Scott Nabers.

API sues over ethanol

■ American Petroleum Institute, refiners group seeks to overturn alcohol mandate.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two petroleum groups sued the government this week seeking to overturn an Environmental Protection Agency mandate that would use corn alcohol in reformulated gasoline.

At issue is an EPA decision last month to require that part of the oxygen-boosting additive in the cleaner gasoline come from a renewable source — in effect ethanol.

"They do not have the authority to take this action and furthermore, it is an irrational action," said Charles J. DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, which joined the National Petroleum Refiners Association in filing the lawsuit.

In a statement, the EPA said its decision to allow renewable fuels in gasoline is "right, lawful and good for the environment, and we stand by that decision."

The new fuel, with higher concentrations of oxygen, is required beginning in January for nine cities with the worst air pollution. Meantime, 11 Northeastern states, and Texas, Kentucky and the District of Columbia, have agreed to require the gasoline in areas of severe air pollution.

In 1995, 15 percent of the oxygenate in the cleaner fuel must come from renewable sources, the EPA said. The level rises to 30 percent after the first year. In the near term, ethanol is the only renewable that can be produced in the volumes needed to meet the clean gasoline goals.

CNG TECHNOLOGY

CNG refueling breakthrough

Staff Report

A new hydraulic compressor, developed by a division of Wagner & Brown of Midland, could be a major key in decreasing CNG refueling time and costs.

Developed by Total CNG Systems, LLC, of Midland, the compressor which will be used to compress natural gas for fleet fuel use is said to provide fill rates comprable to gasoline dispensers while requirng less storage and less energy to operate.

According to LCNG Newsletter, an industry publication, the patented system utilizes an oil-free, two-cylinder, single-stage hydraulic compressor to direct fill vehicles, which uses less electric power than a conventional four-stage reciprocating compressor.

The compressor is used to fill 10-gallon equivalent fuel cylinders at 4.5 gallons/minute (540 scfm), while utilizing only 30 hp. A prototype compressor station with a design capacity of 2,880 gallons per day has been in daily service for 10 months in Sterling City. "The compressor has a 14 inch stroke with piston speeds of two to seven inches per second, which results in a volumetric efficiency in excess of 97 percent," explains Drew Diggins, manager of Total CNG Systems.

The hydraulic compressor is most efficient with inlet pressures of between 700 and 1,000 psig. If available line pressures are not this high, a two or three-stage booster compressor can be utilized to feed the hydraulic compressor at 700 psig.

"The hydraulic compressor can take suction inlet pressures down to 140

Outlook not bright for Boren initiative

Pitts

Several weeks ago, the entire oil industry got behind an initiative drafted by Senator David Boren of Oklahoma, that would have given modest incentives to the domestic oil and gas industry and 100 members of Congress met with the President to present the initiative and communicate concerns.

Now, those attending the meeting with the President have received a form letter from President Clinton that offers only the slightest hope, that their concerns were communicated and will be acted upon.

We received a copy of the letter from the staff of Rep. Henry Bonilla this week. It was what some have described as very bony — hardly any meat at all.

In the letter Clinton notes that he would "like to work with Congress to identify policies that will extend the margin of economic production while ensuring revenue neutrality." Among the policies mentioned were relief for onshore stripper wells and royalty relief for new marginal fields in the Gulf of Mexico."

He also mentioned that he would like to lift the ban on exporting Alaskan oil, providing it did not impact the maritime industry, and that the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has been instructed to make sure agency rulemaking was adopted with cost-benefit analysis.

We asked Rep. Larry Combest for a reading on the letter: "He was very definite in acknowledging that he came to the meeting," said Combest.

"I don't want to hold out any false hope for anyone, but I cannot predict the administration will do anything. We don't need any more studies; we need some deeds." Combest said thousands more oil industry jobs could be lost as the administration studies what to do.

George Alcorn, president of IPAA, was asked to respond to the president's response: "He did not mention many of the things we talked about at the meeting," said Alcorn. "We also talked about new well incentives, gas well incentives and environmental regulatory relief. There is concern at IPAA that he focused only on stripper relief and Alaskan oil exports."

Alcorn did not totally disqualify the efforts of the Boren group, but at the same time he did not offer much hope that something positive would come out of the meeting with the president.

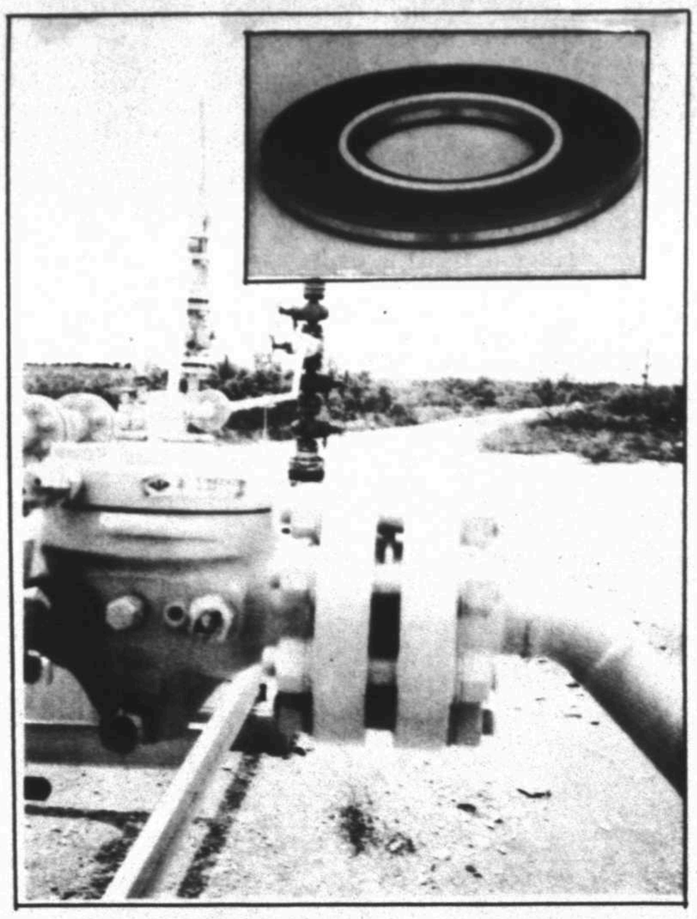

Following the meeting of 100 members of Congress with the president, we talked to several high-ranking members in the Department of Energy, and were told that they were almost positive that there would be some sort of relief for stripper wells. That was the one bright spot for stripper producers. But now, it appears that even that may be in danger of being compromised to the point of worthless.

The Initiative had proposed a $3 per barrel incentive for marginal wells, when the price hits a floor of $14. "We got word the other day that the administration is now thinking about a $3 per barrel incentive that would kick in if the price drops to $9. That's too low, too late, it would not amount to anything. They are cherry picking," said Alcorn. "The incentives we proposed were very modest."

OIL SHOW TECH PREVIEW

Pikotek has developed this VCS gasket, designed to be corrosion-proof and for use in high-pressure applications.

Gasket reduces costly production problems

Editors Note: The following article is part of a continuing review of technology that will be on display at the Permian Basin Oil Show.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Companies that spend millions on wellheads, injectors, and pipelines will often overlook the minor expenditures, such as the gaskets used to create seals in the flange connectors.

But, said Jim Doyle, a sales representative with Pikotek of Lakewood, Co., it is those gaskets — that typically sell for around $10 — that can be the most costly if they fail.

While not new to the industry the gasket technology is relatively new to the Permian Basin, where the company has recently launched sales efforts. The re-usable gaskets will be exhibited at the 1994 Permian Basin Oil Show.

"I stress to the people I talked to that they spend so much on wellheads, injectors, their pipelines, but they put in an inferior gasket, which can lead to disastrous results from a blowout or the loss of cathodic protection or seal integrity," said Doyle, who recently spent several weeks in the Permian Basin marketing his company's VCS gasket.

The VCS gasket was developed 12 years ago by a researcher for Arco Production Research, who has since left Arco to market the gasket. It was developed for use on the Alaskan North Slope after Arco experienced what Doyle called disastrous results with the typical gasket on the market and needed a gasket that would perform in high pressure situations.f

The VCS — Very Critical Service — flange gasket uses a matrix-reinforced, high density composite material permanently laminated to a corrosion-resistant metal alloy core. By using an advanced polymer resin compound in the reinforced composite material, the seal retainer has a higher compressive strength than a mild carbon steel RTJ — Ring Type Joint — gasket and remains completely reusable.

The RTJ forms a seal by deforming a metal ring into concentric grooves machined into the opposing flange face and can produce a high pressure positive seal if the flanges are in good condition, but that connection is also vulnerable to corrosion.

The VCS gaskets are reusable, Doyle said, because they don't have to be reformed to be used and they dont' require compressive metal bolt studs to seal.

"There's no undue stresses on the stud bolt or the flange, meaning it's not susceptible to bolt relaxation. If the stud bolts relax to any degree, the connection will start leaking," he noted.

While in the Permian Basin, Doyle said he noted problems with corrosion, especially downhole corrosion due to casing leaks. Also, Permian Basin producers have a problem with fugitive emissions of hydrogen sulfide (H_2S) gasses.

Doyle cautioned that this problem of H_2S emissions is going to become a major problem beginning in September, when Clean Air regulations begin shrinking the allowable parts-per-million H_2S emissions.

The VCS gaskets are sealed with pressure-energized elastomeric o-ring seals or spring-energized Teflon lip seals. The gasket uses a dove-tailor trapezoid-shaped seal groove, a patented design that serves to break all layers of seal retainer material and prevent "wicking" or "migration" of low molecular-weight hydrocarbons through the gasket material.

The VCS gasket is designed for high-pressure use, and has been used by Arco extensively in its North Slope operations for over 10 years with no recorded failures. It is used in the Permian Basin, Doyle said, by Exxon and Texaco, among others.

Pikotek also makes another gasket, the PGE, for lower-pressure use.

ETHANOL: EPA sued

Meanwhile, the agency on Wednesday rejected use of a manganese-based additive for gasoline, denying a petition by the Ethyl Corp., which claimed the product would reduce air pollution.

Proposed use of the additive has been highly controversial because of concern by some scientists and environmentalists about public exposure to manganese, a toxic substance harmful to the nervous system.

EPA Administrator Carol Browner said the agency has concerns about the health uncertainties raised by the proposed widespread use of the additive. She said more tests are needed to resolve "important unanswered questions" surrounding the potential manganese exposure.

Furthermore, EPA said it also has received reports that the additive adversely affects the performance of sophisticated emissions diagnostic systems required on new cars to protect air quality.

Opponents of the ethanol mandate contend the markets should determine which additive is used and that the more expensive ethanol will increase gasoline prices. Supporters say that without the rule, the petroleum-based MTBE, which is made from methanol, would dominate the multibillion-dollar oxygenate market.

"We want to be permitted to use the most efficient and appropriate oxygenate," DiBona said.

The National Corn Growers Association believes the rule will survive any legal challenge. And Rep. Dick Durbin, D-Ill. and co-chairman of the Congressional Alcohol Fuels Caucus, said the rule is "squarely based on EPA's statutory authority and congressional intent."

DiBona and Urvan R. Sternfels, president of the petroleum refiners group, also challenged claims that the domestic fuel additive would help reduce U.S. dependence on foreign oil and clean the environment.

"This is a shameful, unlawful abuse of power by EPA — the antithesis of everything 'green' has come to mean in the environmental movement," Sternfels said.

But Durbin said blocking the rule "would be a mandate for a virtual MTBE monopoly, which would hurt consumers and increase our dependence on foreign sources of energy."

DEBATE: Gasoline fuel

mulated gasoline to dominate the TAFF fleet conversion program of 1989, which centers on natural gas, could result in an outright halt to economic growth in the state, and that Texas should stay on its true alternative fuel course.

Mauro said reformulated gasoline was not a true alternative fuel, but conventional gasoline that is taken in refining step further.

To even further complicate the furor over reformulated gasoline, the Clinton administration recently announced that refineries would be required to make up to 30 percent of the new gasoline using ethanol, an alcohol devrivative made from corn.

The American Petroleum Institute has expressed outrage at this idea, which is seen as an added mandate that will only make reformulated gasoline even more costly.

Governor Ann Richards, normally a strong supporter of alternative fuels, has taken the political middle ground, calling for a fuels neutral policy.

"In the long run, it will have to be economics that dictate which fuel will prevail in Texas," said Dan Moody, president of Eddins-Walcher, a commercial fuel distributor. "If it doesn't make economic sense, it probably won't work."

COMPRESSOR: Saves time

psig. At suction pressure less than 140 psi, cooling the hydraulic compressor becomes less efficient as the cylinders tend to be very large in this type of application. We use the booster compressor in these instances," Diggins said.

The compressor can be stopped at its maximum discharge pressure and restarted without venting or unloading the compressor. This results in additional time, gas, and energy savings by eliminating a "captive blow down system."

As opposed to a typical filling operation, the Total CNG Systems process fills simultaneously from the compressor and the available gas in the storage bank. When the vehicle tank pressure equalizes with the storage bank, the suction to the hydraulic compressor is changed to the storage bank. The hydraulic compressor then completes the vehicles fill at rates of approximately 600 scfm.

"We are able to achieve more precise fills than conventional dispensers because vehicle tanks have a thermocouple mounted internally and an accurate pressure transducer that transmits those readings to the master computer," Diggins said. The computer then calculates the maximum safe fill based on internal tank temperatures and pressures, not ambient conditions.

By redirecting the available storage pressure to the compressor suction, 75 percent of the stored gas can be dispensed. IGT computer 'Cascade' models show how this compares to only 19 percent of usable stored gas for a conventional one-bank cascade, 33 percent for a two-bank cascade and 42 percent for a three-bank cascade.

The dollar savings gained through smaller storage requirements coupled with the elimination of a cascade priority sequence or dome load valve assembly, significantly reduces the up-front capital cost of a refueling facility, according to Diggins.

Conventional reciprocating compressors have 71 to 73 percent volumetric efficiency, while hydraulic compressors have 97+ percent volumetric efficiency. This 25 percent improvement in volumetric efficiency and the improved gas storage utilization translates into 30 percent electric power savings gained via the hydraulic compressor compared to conventional compressors.

The use of a single computer for compressor controls, valve sequence, card lock, or point of sale authorization, dispensing, and fleet data management, eliminates the multiple stand-alone computers employed with conventional systems.

PITTS: Outlook dim

Alcorn said he hopes the president recognizes that the meeting and the initiative were an honest attempt by the industry to tell the administration some of the real problems of the industry.

The IPAA president noted that if the nation was going to move into a natural gas era, it would need new gas wells, but the president mentioned nothing about gas well incentives. "If we don't drill for gas wells we will not have the reserves when we need them."

Jim Nugent, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, was not too optimistic either, even though the Clinton administration is studying an incentive package prepared by the Railroad Commission for possible federal applications.

"We are going to have to forget about Washington," said Nugent. "Whatever is done for the industry we will have to do ourselves."

John Paul Pitts is business/oil editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

FUEL: Alternate fuel facility paves the way

a," Nugent, chairman of the commission, said, speaking at the formal opening. Nugent said Sonora, and Sutton County, was the first in the nation to have a "rainbow" of fuels.

The state-of-the-art fuel station, which sells diesel, gasoline, propane and CNG, could reflect a future in which no single transportation fuel would dominate, but several fuels would be available to serve special niches, said Dan Moody, president of Eddins-Walcher Co. which owns and developed the concept for the facility which gives users a choice of alternative and traditional fuels.

"All fuels will have to make economic sense," said Moody. "Sonora is not in a non-attainment area. Companies here are converting to CNG and propane because it makes economic sense — not because it was mandated."

Eddins-Walcher owns 34 card fuels sites in West Texas and New Mexicos, and plans to establish other multi-fuel facilities in its area of operations, depending on success at the Sonora facility.

"Success here will determine how fast we take our multi-fuel concept into other areas," stated Moody.

Moody said Sonora, a ranch and oil and gas area, was an ideal market for fleet fuels because of a mix of driving distances, and an extraordinary number of small fleets in the area.

"No one fuel makes sense for all fleets. Light duty, oilfield vehicles that go to the fields each day and return at night may be able to use CNG, because they offer lower cost for short trips. Others that need to drive longer distances will propably opt for propane."

Moody said companies using propane or CNG on a day-to-day basis in the field would be able to take advantage of lower maintenance costs, and lower fuel prices, while reaping environmental benefits. He added that both were excellent fuels and it was time to end the animosity two gaseous fuels.

Moody noted that a high number of vehicles in the area use alternative fuels, that some were in the process of converting and others had shown a strong interest. Meridian Oil Co., which is one of the largest natural gas producers in Sutton County and expects to convert 40 vehicles to CNG by yearend, played a major role in bringing CNG into the energy mix.

Under an agreement with Eddins-Walcher, J-W Operating, the nation's largest privately-owned compressor company, will operate the CNG portion of the multi-fuel facility.

Except for the tanks, Moody said propane and CNG conversions are very similar.

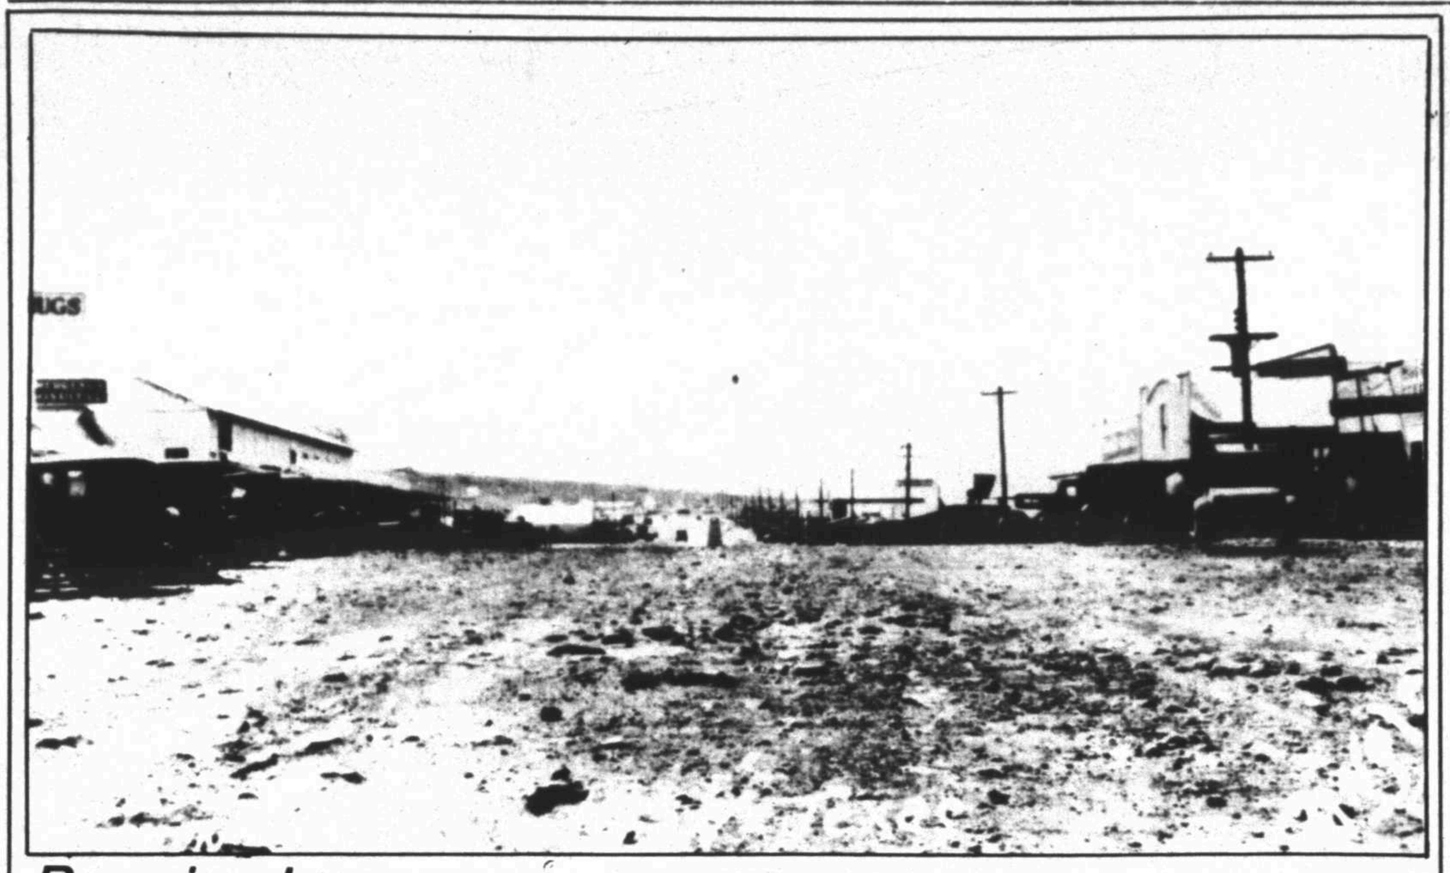

"It is the tanks that make the difference. A propane conversion will cost $1,500-$1,800, while a CNG conversion will cost about $3,000."

He said payback would vary with the user. "The more you drive the quicker the pay out."

While Moody sees no immediate benefit from being located on Interstate 10, he acknowledged that one day Sonora could play a role in alternate fuels by becoming a strategic refueling point on the interstate.

Booming Iraan

This street in downtown Iraan, shown during its early boomtown days, included a Modern Cleaners — far right. Modern Cleaners had locations throughout oil boomtowns. Iraan was one of three towns spawned by the prolific Yates field and got its start as a supply center and residence for oilfield workers. Among those who helped found Iraan were Ira and Ann Yates, H.L. George, George Blanton and John Yates, who set up the town's first business, a filling station.

Two environmental seminars scheduled

Staff Report

Two important seminars involving environmental concerns relative to the petroleum industry are being offered back-to-back in August.

An "Arid Area Oil Spill Control Seminar" takes place Aug. 2-3, presented by UTPB's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification and by Midland College's Department of Continuing Education. That seminar will be at the CEED Building. That's being followed Aug. 4-5 by a "Permian Basin Oil and Gas Environmental Compliance Seminar", offered by Midland College at its Davidson Lecture Hall, Health Science Building.

Cost of the oil spill seminar is $250 before July 26 and $295 after that (lunch included). The compliance seminar fee is $200 if paid by July 28, $250 after that.

Payments should be made to Midland College for either and/or both programs.

Detailed registration information is available by calling the Midland College Continuing Education Department at 685-4518 Monday through Thursday between 7 a.m.-8:30 p.m.

The Arid Area Oil Spill Control Seminar, which will meet from 7:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m., is designed to assist those in the oil and gas extraction industry, especially those assigned as environmental coordinators and consultants. Enrollment is limited to 25 participants. Topics included in the two-day event are: minimizing cost and liability of oil spills; containment of oil in rapidly moving water; building oil containments (an outside exercise); movement of oil on water; SPCC (spill prevention control and countermeasure) plans and reporting; chemical, oil and saltwater spill reporting; spill contingency planning; and handling media crises.

Assisting in the presentation of the last item will be Gayle Hill, news director for KWES-TV.

Audience for the compliance seminar will be much the same as for the spill seminar. Its hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Topics for this seminar are: management philosophy and the conflict between compliance and operating costs; discharge, wetlands and stormwater permitting and spill prevention control and countermeasure (SPCC) plans; surface and groundwater protection and remediation; underground injection control requirements, Texas Railroad Commission Rule 8 — completion and plugging issues; reporting oil, brine and chemical releases and submitting chemical inventories; air permits and exemptions; hazardous and non-hazardous oil field waste management; housekeeping; developing and internal environmental review system, and weathering a regulatory audit.

Directing both seminars are William F. Priebe, Professional Engineer, and R. Mark Henkhaus, Professional Engineer. Priebe has a B.S. in Chemical Engineering and an M.S. in Environmental Engineering, both from Texas A&M University. He has been an environmental engineer for 23 years, designing waste water treatment facilities for the food processing industry and permitting and regulatory compliance consulting for the refining and petrochemical industry. For the past 12 years he has provided in-house environmental consulting for a major oil and gas extraction company.

Henkhaus has a B.S. in Petroleum Engineering from Texas A&M University. He has held positions of increasing responsibility with state regulatory agencies in North and West Texas for the past 11 years. His experience includes well design, plugging, and environmental issues such as compliance with state regulations and groundwater remediation. He is a Registered Professional Engineer and a Registered Environmental Professional.

IOGCC says standards eased for foreign firms

BRECKENRIDGE, Co. — U.S. tax tollars spent overseas for oil and gas activities should be subject to the same environmental standards as those required for domestic operations, a national organization of 29 states said today.

The Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission (IOGCC), acting through a resolution directed to Congress and President Bill Clinton, said U.S. tax dollars are being used to fund oil and gas activities that don't comply with U.S. environmental standards and "gives these foreign producers an unfair cost advantage."

"The states ensure that domestic operators comply with the highest environmental standards in the world," said Cody Graves, Oklahoma Corporation Commissioner, the author of the resolution. "There is ample federal precedent for attaching compliance standards to the expenditure of taxpayer dollars."

It is estimated that the United States has spent more than $2 billion in recent years to support oil and gas exploration and production in countries including those that comprise the former U.S.S.R.

"The environment in many other oil and gas producing countries around the world is severely and unnecessarily harmed by the absence of environmental and conservation standards, and such pollution in those countries is not only damaging to the world environment, but gives these foreign producers an unfair cost advantage," the resolution stated.

"No one is saying we should relax U.S. standards," Graves said. "It only seems fair that the federal dollars paying for these overseas operations should be subject to the same environmental standards."

Chevron sells headquarters

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — After trying for a year, Chevron Corp. announced it has found a buyer for its 72-year-old landmark headquarters building at 225 Bush Street.

The oil giant wouldn't disclose the name of the buyer or the price, pending settlement of the deal, which is expected in a few weeks. Real estate industry sources said the buyer probably is an out-of-town developer, and estimated the price at $25 million to $30 million.

Chevron originally asked $45 million for the building, which stands 22 stories and contains 572,000 square feet of office space.

The estimated sales price per square foot — $43 to $52 — is considerably less than the $80 per square foot common in the financial district. But sources said the buyer of the Chevron building will be saddled with large vacancies and heavy rehabilitation costs.

As previously announced, most of the 700 Chevron employees at the Bush Street building will be moved in phases over to two modern Chevron towers at 575 Market Street and 555 Market Street in the next several years. Others will be transferred to Chevron's office park in suburban San Ramon.

Chairman Ken Derr, who has his office at Bush Street, eventually will move to 575 Market, which will house most of the company's executives.

The consolidation follows sharp reductions in Chevron's workforce. The worldwide total fell to 47,576 last year from 49,245 in 1992, and there were 6,200 cuts the year before. The number of San Francisco workers, which stood as high as 8,000 a decade ago, has declined to 1,900. There are 8,200 Chevron employees elsewhere in the Bay Area.

As a city-designated landmark, the Bush Street building's facade cannot be altered. The interior needs "major seismic work," and shows signs of "a lot of wear and tear," a San Francisco real estate broker observed.

ARTIFICIAL LIFT SCHOOL: Equipment failure and its attendant cost are extremely important in today's petroleum indutry. Since rod pumping is the predominant means of artificial lift, minimizing equipment failure in rod pumped wells can have a significant impact on profitability. This seminar is based on techniques which have been developed over the past 25 years and have proven successful in the majority of wells. Proven recommendations are provided for equipment selection and design, operating and chemical treatment. The instructors' purpose is to present ideas and methods that have helped Arco reduce equipment failures. Fee $375; John C. Patterson, Jim V. Curfew, instructors; July 25-26, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

LAND AND LEASING - OIL AND GAS: *For land secretaries, lease analysts, geologists, engineers and managers. Topics include prospect acquisition, drilling the prospect, interests and computation of interest, and getting paid. Eligible for 8 CPE credits. MEETINGS

WTGS to review Wolfcamp gas play

The West Texas Geological Society will meet Tuesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be Wayne R. Gibson, a Midland geologist. He will preset a review of the significant drilling and production results in the Val Verde Basin Wolfcamp gas play in Terrell County during 1993.

Approximately 48 wells were producing natural gas from multiple Wolfcamp sandstone reservoirs in the Pakenham field during the first quarter of 1994, The Pakenham field is the largest and most rapidly developing field in the Val Verde Basin Wolfcamp gas play. This play extends on a linear trend from the KM and KM West fields eastward through the Pakenham and Brown Bassett West Wolfcamp gas fields.

Some geological concepts and observations on this Wolfcamp play as well as on the successful Strawn thrust gas play in this are will also be presented. Exploitation of the ACU Strawn gas field is proceeding with the aid of a recent 3-D seismic survey. A similarity to the nearby Leatherwood Devonian (Strawn) field will be demonstrated with the aid of a cross section

Gibson will be accompanied by Paul Dolliver, a geologist with Geomap Co. of Plano. Dolliver will address the release of geologic data in Texas, especially wireline logs. The analysis of the Val Verde Basin gas play was accomplished using computer generated "stick cross sections" tied to a few well logs, because most of the recent well logs in the subject area have not been made available for public analysis.

Cost is $7 per person and reservations can be made by calling 683-1573.

Hardeman Basin topic of SIPES meeting

The Midland chapter, Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists will meet Wednesday at the Midland Country Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be Steve Ellsworth of Landmark Graphics Corp. in Dallas. His topic will be "Hardeman Basin: You Though 3-D Was Going to be Easy."

The Railroad Commission issued 1,160 drilling permits in June, compared to 1,149 in June 1993. The June total included 671 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 46 to reenter existing wellbores, 43 to deepen existing holes, 161 to plugback existing holes and 88 for other wells. There were 104 permits for new oil and gas holes issued in the Midland district, District 8. Total drilling permits issued to date in 1994 is 6,133, up 2 percent from 6,011 in the same period of 1993. Operators reported 338 gas, 327 oil and 34 service completions in June, compared to 252 gas, 386 oil and 36 service completions in June 1993. There were 94 oil and 11 gas completions in the Midland district. Well completions to date total 3,968, down 7 percent from 4,255 in 1993.

Acquisition triples Nuevo reserves

HOUSTON (AP) — Nuevo Energy Co. will more than triple its oil reserves after acquiring a working interest in oil fields off the Congolese coast in West Africa, the company said.

Nuevo and Walter International, an exploration and production company also based in Houston, announced an agreement to jointly purchase all the stock of two Amoco Production Co. subsidiaries for an undisclosed price.

The deal, to be closed in August, is subject to confirmation by the Congolese government.

Nuevo and Walter International would each own half of a 43.75 percent working interest in the Yombo Field, which consists of 18 producing wells on two platforms and a floating production, storage and off-loading vessel.

The Yombo Field was discovered in 1988 in 370 feet of water.

The acquisition would add about 4,650 barrels per day to Nuevo's current production of 6,000 barrels per day, said Charles Lapeyre, Nuevo's vice president for finance.

Nuevo had 6 million barrels in reserves at the end of 1993. Its half of the proven net reserves in the Yombo Field will be 17 million barrels.

The independent oil and gas company has properties in East Texas, onshore and offshore areas of the Gulf Coast, and in Alabama. The Yombo Field acquisition would be its first overseas.

Noble Affiliates wins offshores leases

ARDMORE, Okla. — Noble Affiliates Inc. has been awarded 21 federal offshore leases by the Minerals Management Service from the federal offshore lease sale held March 30. The company's share of the leases is $6.2 million for working interests ranging from 25 to 100 percent.

Included in the lease awards is Vermilion 333, which is adjacent to Vermilion 332. The company drilled two exploratory wells on Vermilion 332 during 1993 and temporarily suspended them subsequent to testing.

The Vermilion 332 No. 1 logged 48 feet of pay in one zone. The well tested 739 barrels of oil per day through a 12/64 inch choke with 3,550 pounds flowing tubing pressure.

The Vermilion 332 No. 2 was drilled 2,792 feet east of the No. 1. It logged 284 feet of potential pay in seven zones. One zone was tested at the rate of 576 barrels of oil per day through a 10/64 inch choke with 2,400 pounds flowing tubing pressure.

A third well is scheduled to be drilled on the property in the third quarter of this year. Installation of production facilities is projected for 1995.

Samedan Oil Corp., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Noble Affiliates, is operator of the property and owns a 50 percent working interest. Other working interest owners are British-Borneo Exploration Inc., 17 percent, Ranger Oil Co., 16.5 percent and Cometra Oil & Gas Inc., 16.5 percent.

Unocal to try convenience stores, fast food to some service stations

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Unocal Corp. will add convenience stores and franchise fast-food restaurants to some company service stations, the company said.

The new facilities will be called "FastBreak" convenience stores and are the first strategic move by Unocal's 76 Products Co., which formed last week under a corporate realignment to oversee West Coast refining and marketing.

"The gasoline marketing industry, particularly in California, is undergoing an evolution," said Lawrence W. Higby, the subsidiary's new president. "We will introduce new initiatives that strengthen Unocal in the marketplace," he said Tuesday.

Los Angeles-based Unocal is rebuilding about 200 of its 1,200 California service stations in the new format. Some also will include ProWash car washes.

The first of these facilities opened in June on Interstate 5, south of Bakersfield, Calif. near Lebec. It has a Nathan's Famous hot dog restaurant. Unocal also will reconfigure pump islands at 800 stations to improve customer convenience.

"We're looking ... to help build traffic and add revenue ...," said Unocal spokesman Barry Lane. "It's all built on the concept of added convenience for the customer."

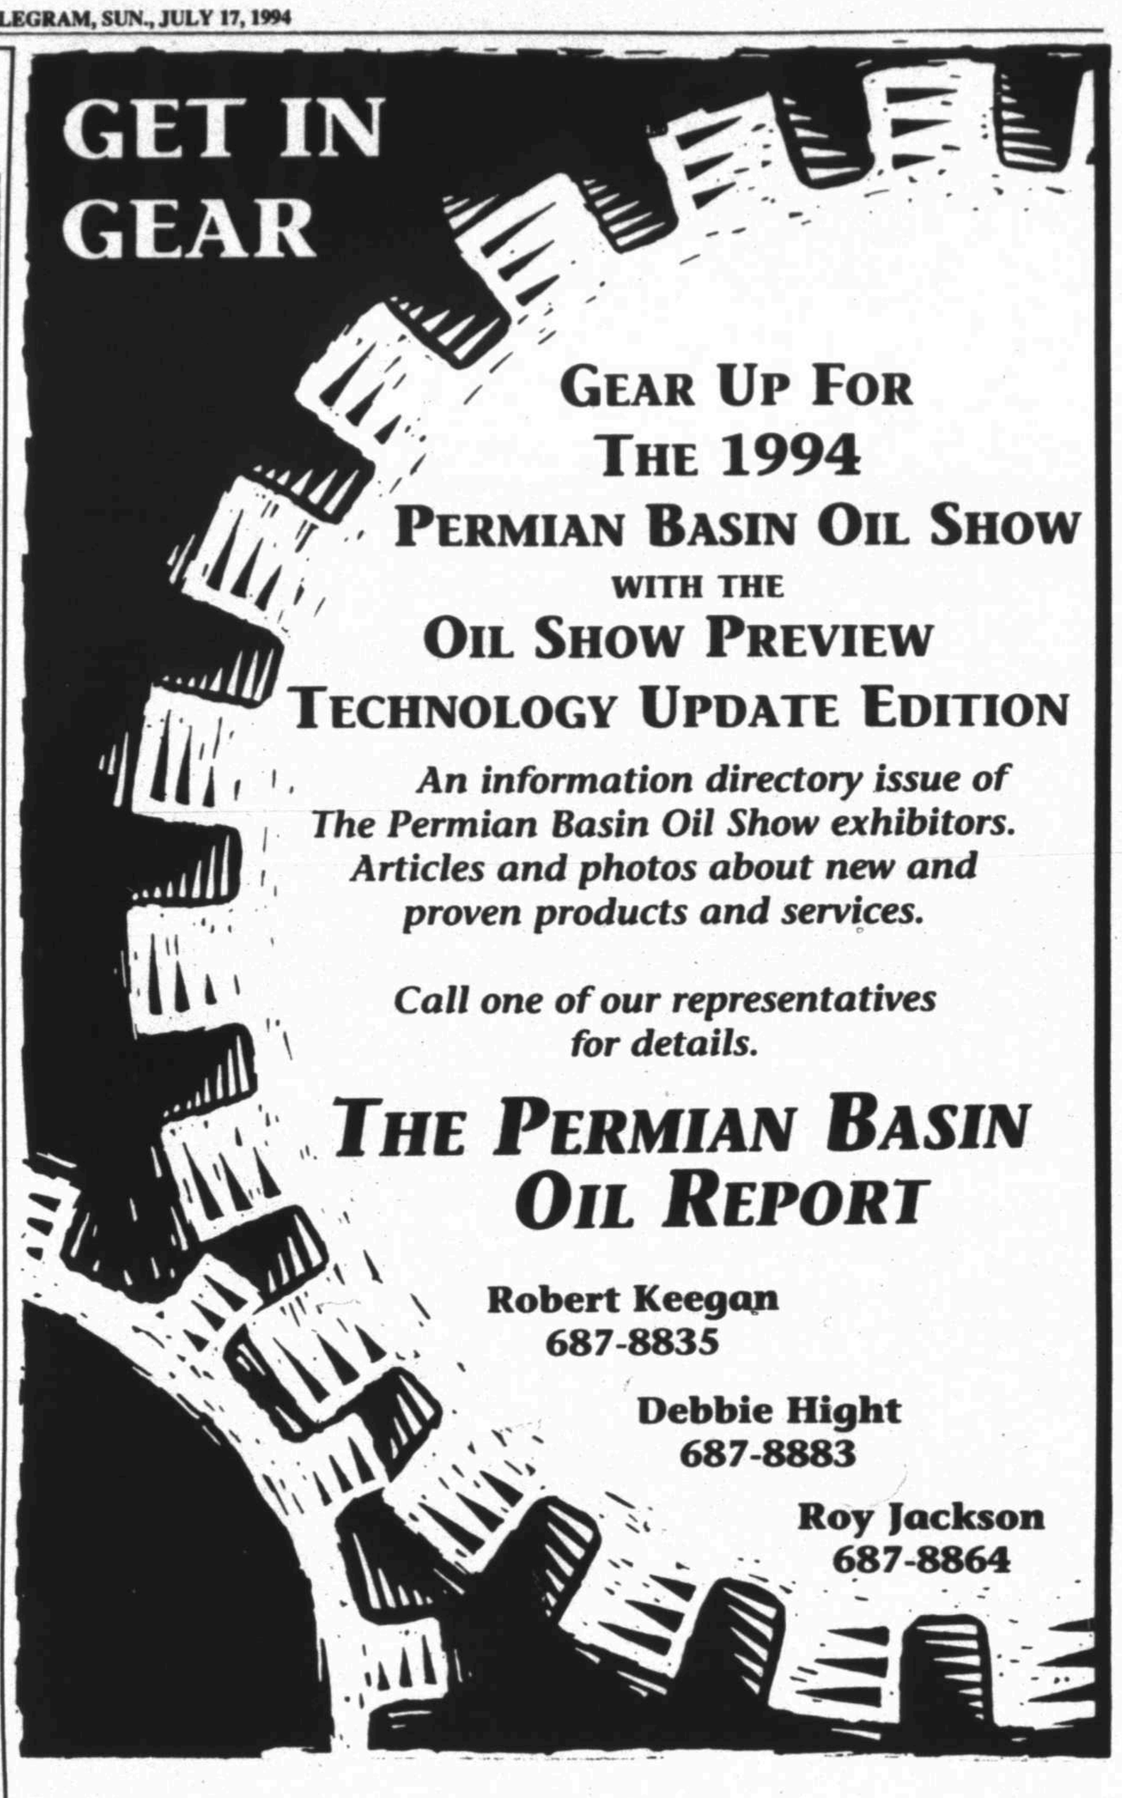

Lane declined to say how much the project — expected to take about three or four years — will cost. It will be financed with the company's capital budget for marketing, which averages about $45 million a year.

He also would not identify possible future franchises that might affiliate with Unocal.

The company in the past has tested the convenience store concept on a limited degree. This is Unocal's first large-scale entry into the convenience store market.

Analyst John Hilton at Argus Research Corp. in New York said Unocal is doing what other companies like Atlantic Richfield Co. — which initiated the convenience store concept — have found successful.

"They are a little late to the party," Hilton said. "But it should turn out to be a timely effort because of the apparent economic recovery on the West Coast."

Mitchell raises drilling budget

THE WOODLANDS — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp., has raised its drilling and production budget by $11.8 million - to $115.9 million - for the current fiscal year, which ends Jan. 31, 1995.

The company will apply $10 million of the increase to additional development drilling, with the remainder allocated to recompletions and other production activity.

Speaking at the annual meeting of stockholders, Chairman and Chief Executive George P. Mitchell said the increase was warranted both to take advantage of new opportunities and in recognition of the improved price outlook since March, when the original current-year budget was announced. He said the additional outlays would be directed mainly toward low-risk drilling in Southeast and East Central Texas.

Even with the increase, the drilling and production budget is still below comparable prior-year expenditures of $138.7 million, including first-quarter outlays by a development drilling partnership that the company bought out in May 1993. Mitchell's overall capital budget now stands at $242.6 million.

Railroad Commission fines Midland firm

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Davelle Resouces of Midland will have to reimburse the Texas Oil Filed Cleanup Fund $11,945 for two unplugged wells in Pecos County, the Texas Railroad Commission announced.

The commission also fined Davelle $3,000 for leaving the wells, on the White & Baker A lease, unplugged.

The fine and restitution to the cleanup fund was part of $25,500 in penalties assessed 16 oil and gas operators.

So far this year, the commission has issued $2.67 million in well plugging and pollution fines, compared with $1.58 million during the same period last year.

BecField Drilling opens office in Midland

BecField Drilling Services of Houston has opened its West Texas Area office in Midland at 203 W. Wall, Suite 400.

BecField Drilling Services is an independent directional and horizontal drilling service company and helped pioneer the development of "short radius" horizontal drilling techniques and technology.

Sonat chairman leaves to go to Tidewater

GeoQuest purchases software business

HOUSTON — GeoQuest has purchased the Stratlog geologic interpretation software business from Halliburton Co.

The Stratlog system, used for oil and gas exploration, provides geologic cross-sectional capabilities, multi-well log curve correlation and single-well displays that combine geological, geophysical, petrophysical and engineering data.

"Stratlog is an excellent addition to the GeoQuest software family," said Rex Ross, president of GeoQuest. "While Stratlog will continue to be offered as a stand-alone product, its capabilities will also be available to all IES, IESX and Charisma users via tight database integration. Furthermore, Stratlog technology will contribute to the geologic interpretation products being developed within the GeoFrame reservoir characterization system."

Stratlog software is used by more than 60 oil and gas companies worldwide, which will be supported by the global GeoQuest support structure. The Halliburton Stratlog staff members have joined the GeoQuest staff.

GeoQuest provides petroleum companies worldwide with software and computer services that assist in maximizing the value of exploration and production data. GeoQuest is an operating unit of Schlumberger, which operates offices, service locations and research and development facilities around the world.

IPAA supports lifting Alaskan export ban

The U.S. Department of Energy has released a study which shows the economic benefits of lifting the 21-year-old ban on the export of Alaskan North Slope Crude oil.

"The results of the study clearly show the need to lift the ban," said Denise Bode, president of the Independent Petroleum Association of America. "Permitting the export of Alaska oil makes good economic sense and will lead to a win-win situation for the domestic oil industry and for the nation's economy," added Bode.

IPAA has long advocated lifting the export ban. "By reducing the flood of Alaskan oil in the California and Gulf Coast markets, thousands of American jobs will be created in the exploration and production industry and in the related service and shipping industries," said Bode. "That's good news for the ailing domestic oil industry and for the country."

"We stand ready to work with the Clinton administration and Congress to permit the export of Alaskan oil," said Bode.

Indresco president, CEO gives resignation

DALLAS (AP) — Indresco Inc. said its president, chief operating officer and director has resigned "to pursue other interests."

Y.N. Sharif's resignation was effective June 30, the company said.

J.L. Jackson, chairman and chief executive officer, will take on the responsibilities of president, the company said. G.E. Leeson will become executive vice president for operations, and D.C. Mielke will have other responsibilities as senior vice president of finance and administration.

No other executive changes are anticipated, Indresco said.

Jackson said Sharif had been with the company since it was founded in August 1992.

Dallas-based Indresco, a supplier of refractories, mining equipment and specialized air tools, reported 1993 revenues of $540 million.

Baker Hughes Inteq betters gravel-packing

Baker Hughes INTEQ recently enhanced its gravel packing services with the introduction of the SC 1200 triplex pumps. Used in conjunction with the company's advanced gravel infuser and completion fluids technology, the SC 1200 will meet the current client need for high-rate placement of gravel.

The SC 1200 triplex pumps are skid mounted, high horsepower pumping units designed for high-rate gravel packing operations. Although the units are designed to pump gravel slurries, they are also capable of pumping any number of well treating fluids. The units are capable of being operated from a remote console up to 100 feet from the system. The units can be split into a pump skid and an engine skid for ease of handling. Also, for weight reduction, the fuel tanks are on a separate skid unit. This unit's modular design and relatively small footprint make it suitable for use on most offshore facilities.

Baker Hughes INTEQ is a leading worldwide supplier of integrated solutions, services and equipment for wellbore construction. The company has more than 100 service locations in 40 countries, with headquarters in Houston, Texas. Baker Hughes INTEQ is a division of Baker Hughes Incorporated, also headquarted in Houston.

Lyondell cleared in environmental matter

HOUSTON (AP) — An internal investigation at Lyondell Petrochemical Co. says managers weren't trying to circumvent the law when they failed to report an environmental violation.

Aided by an independent Washington law firm, a group of Lyondell directors interviewed more than 50 employees and examined more than 10,000 pages of documents, company officials said.

The directors concluded the failure to report the violation resulted from a "series of miscommunications and organizational failures and not a deliberate violation," the Houston Chronicle reported Tuesday.

The report allows Los Angeles-based Atlantic Richfield Co. to move forward with a possible sale of its stake in Lyondell.

Arco delayed the offering in June after Lyondell admitted it failed to tell state regulators it illegally released benzene into the air.

Lyondell submitted an annual report to the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission in April 1993, saying it had properly handled some benzene-laced wastewater at its Channelview plant.

Environmental regulations require benzene be handled in a closed setting. Lyondell had treated the benzene in an open-air facility.

A year later, shortly before filing its 1994 report to the state commission, some employees learned the company had not handled the benzene properly, according to a company filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

SUMMER TUNES

Above, Caren Caples belts out several songs during the outdoor concert. At right, Joe and Cyndee Turney, two of the founders of the West Texas Songwriters Association, perform for the crowd. Below, Ted and Lynn Ward and friend Scott McCollom enjoy a picnic while they listen to the outdoor performance.

A long spell of unseasonably hot days has done little to dissuade West Texans from attending the Museum of the Southwest's Summer Sundays Lawn Concerts.

On the last Sunday in June, fans came to hear members of the West Texas Songwriters Association perform their original material.

Emmett Roch sang about love and highways — "If love was a highway, I'd be a well traveled man"; Cyndee Turney bemoaned a Texan saying good-bye to the Lone Star State — "Faretheewelldear Texas, forever my home. I leave my love here, wherever I roam"; and husband Joe Turney sang about hamsters and garbage — a song he said wife Cyndee inspired that includes a surprise ending — "Thank you for reminding me to take out the trash . . . Yes, it's the third time today."

During their performances, children played tag across the museum lawn, families ate their picnic dinners and the sun finally came to rest below the tree line.

"Remember, the hits you are hearing on the air were all written by someone like us," Mrs. Turney said.

She reminded people that successful songs and the singers who perform them begin with good material.

"Probably the most important thing is we're connected with 33 other songwriting associations across the country," Mrs. Turney said in an interview.

"And through that we get leads on who's looking for songs and what kind. And we get

Here comes Motown's new exhibit, museum

By Yuri Kageyama
Associated Press

DETROIT — Receding hairlines and bulging midriffs haven't stopped the Contours. Snazzily decked in lavender suits, the five-man vocal group doesn't miss a bass-thumping beat, sweating, sliding and stepping on stage 32 years after their Motown million-seller "Do You Love Me."

"Just like in 1962 when I had some hair, we can still shake them down," second tenor and baritone Joe Billingslea calls out, sending a giddy nightclub audience to the dance floor.

Though Motown Records Corp. founder Berry Gordy moved his company to Los Angeles in 1972 and later sold it, the Contours and some other members of the original Motown crowd remain in Detroit.

They performed at a recent fund-raiser for something they believe is long overdue: a "Motown Sound" exhibit.

It is dedicated to the history of Motown Records, originator of an easily identifiable, stylish sound that became as legendary as Marvin Gaye, Diana Ross and the Supremes, the Temptations and Smokey Robinson.

The minute you hear the thumping bass, jangling rhythm guitar and popping drums, you know the sound. The Motown Sound. It was a carefully processed sound made to play well on radio, and its formula beat was best heard in the work of the Supremes.

"Simplicity is something we talk about all the time," Gordy said in an interview from Los Angeles. "Just break it down. We didn't use a lot of big words. Everything was really straight on.

"It was a music that was shared by all people from varying sides of the fence. The '60s were a tumultuous time. The music reflects the sound, the beautiful love songs, the protest songs are all embodied in the Motown Sound."

"Some artists who're still affiliated with the Motown label — their sound is not the original Motown sound," said Billingslea. "The original Motown sound originated in Detroit, Mich., at 2648 West Grand Boulevard, and it will always be that sound from that particular studio that will never be duplicated again. That was the Motown sound."

C.P. Spencer of the Originals, said the Motown sound had a lot to do with neighborhood.

"Everybody who created the Motown sound lived here," he said. "We lived right around the corner from Motown. If you didn't know how to play an instrument, we would go home and learn how to play. We'd go learn how to sing."

Inner city youth were especially important to Gordy.

"I was seeing so much potential in inner city youths," he said. "They're so smart. They can use that intelligence to create things. ... They weren't great when I met them. They were just kids in the inner city. ... These creative people had all this potential. I felt by helping them reach theirs, I could reach mine."

The exhibit is set to open next spring at the Henry Ford Museum in the Detroit suburb of Dearborn. Planners say the slick, multimedia "happening," complete with a dance floor, later will be the centerpiece for a new Motown Museum. The museum is to open in 1997 in the Detroit area.

Those who helped shape Motown say paying homage to that heritage should be rooted in the Detroit area.

"I think Motown should be just as significant worldwide as Walt Disney — Mickey Mouse or Donald Duck," said Spencer, who used to drive trucks before Gordy made him a singer. "That was all Detroit's. It was ours."

The $2.1 million Motown Sound exhibit already has about $300,000 in state and corporate funding. Requests are in for federal funds and additional corporate donations.

New York-based Ralph Appelbaum Associates, which has designed exhibits for the Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington D.C., is working out final plans for the exhibit.

Glitzy stage costumes will be on display amid a backdrop of 1960s kitsch. Visitors will go backstage, eavesdrop on business dealings and try out their singing skills. Taped voices of stars will narrate firsthand stories.

And Motown has many stories to tell.

There's the "rags to riches" story of Gordy, who quit his job on a Ford assembly line because, he said, "I was basically a dreamer of love songs."

His business marked the first crossover success for black artists, producers and sound engineers. More than 200 recordings among some 30,000 went gold or platinum.

In 1972, Gordy moved the company to Los Angeles. Sixteen years later, he sold it to an investment group headed by media partnership Boston Ventures for $61 million. In 1993, PolyGram bought it for $325 million.

Then, there's the music. Motown changed the sound of American popular music and influenced musicians everywhere.

"Motown took all of it and made it smooth so that all Americans understood it and felt it," said Rowena Stewart, executive director of the Motown Historical Museum.

"You can hear strings in its music from the classical world. You can hear spirituals. You can hear the wailing of the gospel in Marvin Gaye's music. The music is African-American, and its roots are African-American. But it becomes an American story."

What children are reading

The last time The New York Times Book Review ran a list of children's best sellers was in the spring of 1978.

Since then, the baby-boom generation has finally grown up, settled down and had children.

What with grandparents and parents showering the youngsters with books from birth, the children's publishing industry itself boomed.

Now those babies are mostly in school and moving into the middle grades.

The five best-seller lists below show both the books being bought for children this year and the books children themselves are buying.

How we ranked the books

The rankings reflect sales for six weeks, from March 20 to April 30, at 3,050 general-interest bookstores, plus wholesalers serving 38,000 other retailers.

The figures are statistically weighted to represent sales in all such outlets nationwide. Data were augmented with reports from 220 children's bookstores.

Stores and wholesalers provided sales figures each week for their best-selling children's titles in five categories.

The data from all sources represent the children's market in terms of geographical distribution, retail setting and bookstore size. An (a) next to the ranking indicates that a book's sales are barely distinguishable from those of the book above.

shark attacks — who the bad guys are who you don't want to deal with."

The music business has "tons" of bad guys — "more bad guys than good guys," she said.

"For instance, one company recently was asking people for money to get copyright sheets, and those are free. You write the Library of Congress and get them or we have them. We give them away.

"The bad guys also ask for money up front to help put your song on the air or to help make a better demo of your song. If you have a really good song, it should stand on its own merits.

"If one of the reputable companies is interested in your song, usually they will go ahead and take your song and have a better demo made — whatever they think is necessary to get your song out. They won't ask for money up front."

Currently the WTSA has 35 members, most from West Texas, with a fairly even split form Midland and Odessa. But the membership does include a member from Russell, Kan., and another from Illinois.

The organization meets at 7 p.m. on the third Monday of the month at the Prescott Cafe, next to Water Wonderland.

Annual dues are $25 for individuals and $40 for family memberships. For more information call 689-0213.

The group traces its beginning to a conversation on Feb. 25, 1991, between the Turneys and Roy Barrett, who organized the WTSA.

"Roy and Joe and myself were sitting around talking about it one night," recalled Mrs. Turney, who is WTSA secretary.

"We would all get together and do our original songs with each other, and we got to thinking there must be a whole lot of people out there who were songwriters other than ourselves who we just hadn't met yet.

"So Roy put an ad in the paper looking for songwriters. And we all met at the Last Chance Saloon. I think we had 12 people the first two times we met."

Once they organized, they wrote letters to around 50 other songwriting associations in the country. The WTSA is now listed in the Texas Music Office Director and in the Kerrville Music Foundation Directory.

The association holds monthly house concerts — outside artists performing in someone's home. Cost is $6 and the roster of talent the WTSA has presented includes, among others, Joseph and Theresa, Michael Elwood and Beth Galiger, Andy Wilkinson and The Billys.

The WTSA also does pitching sessions.

"We have a publisher come in and we do your song for them, and then they decide whether or not they want to take the song with them," Mrs. Turney said. "And then they will also tell you at that time what things you need to change in your song in order to make it more marketable."

In addition, original material written by WTSA members, other songwriters WTSA members know and WTSA 1993 contestants can be heard on KJBC, 1150 A.M., from 11 a.m. to noon Saturdays on "The Texas Music Show."

"We approached almost every station in Midland and Odessa trying to get someone to let us play our own songs on the air," Mrs. Turney said, remembering how WTSA secured its radio show.

"And none of them would stray away from their format far enough to let us try it, until we approached KJBC about it. Don Kennedy was all for it, he was like, 'When do you want to start?' "

That was June 12, 1993, and WTSA is still on the air.

"He gave us a two-week trial period, and said, 'If the people like it, we'll keep it on,' " Mrs. Turney said. "It's going real well."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JULY 17, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: No matter what kind of business you have or who you work for, things will improve if you concentrate more. Show greater interest in what your colleagues are doing. A joint venture that is launched early in 1995 could bring lasting fame and fortune! Wear your heart on your sleeve when pursuing romance. The pull of family ties will grow stronger next spring.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: "Baywatch" star David Hasselhoff, singer Phoebe Snow, baseball player Robert Thigpen, actress Lucie Arnaz.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not despair if a plan goes sour today. Good things are about to happen! Although you and a loved one are temporarily out of sync, a reconciliation is highly likely. Pour on the charm.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Sports hold special appeal today. Decide if you prefer to be a spectator or an active participant. Your mate may feel overworked. Call a conference on family matters. A willingness to compromise can produce miracles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Plan a truly fun day for the folks at home. You can learn something about the art of relaxation from a friend who has less money. Make children feel welcome at a social event.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Travel will make this a special time. Do not go overboard at a sale. A so-called bargain is nothing of the sort if you buy something you do not need. Phone an old friend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may be too blunt when expressing your views. Squelch an urge to show your siblings that you are "as good as they are." An affectionate, sympathetic approach sets the proper example for young people.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not ignore the resale factor when looking for a new car. Reading about a vehicle is fine, but road-testing it is even better. Family life is enhanced by a new parent-child compromise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Household projects and family activities are favored today. Talks with your offspring will touch your heart. Heap affection on those you love. Coming face-to-face with a childhood fear could help you conquer it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your potent charm wins you favors, gifts and employment offers. By being kind, you will enrich your love life. A family reunion will solve a mystery that has always puzzled you. Act quickly on new information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An emotional outburst could ruin your whole morning. Hang on a while longer; the tide will soon turn in your favor! Romance makes the afternoon hours go by in a flash. Be discreet.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Design a schedule for getting your homework and housework done without those chores intruding on your social time. Reading gives you new tools for coping with today's world.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have the Midas touch when it comes to real estate or media ventures. Keep up with the latest developments in your field. A subscription to a special journal is a wise investment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Listening to someone's psychobabble could make you impatient. Heed your instincts; they are right on target. Make plans for an upcoming vacation or trip. A fare reduction may be possible. Check with a travel agent.

Opening lead: Ten of ◇

The late Harry Fishbein was one of the most colorful characters on the bridge scene and not just because of the host of berets he possessed and wore all the time. He had a tremendous sense of humor and more often than not he was the goat in the tales he spun. This was one of his favorites.

Fishy came to the table of two young men whom he didn't recognize. He had hardly sat down before the young men were in six no trump. On lead with the ace and king of hearts in his hand, Fishy decided he might as well make sure of a top score by doubling.

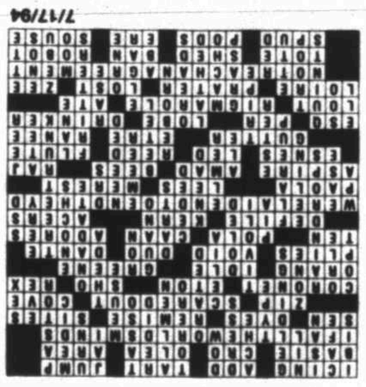

All would have been well had the auction ended there. However, the youngsters, destined to become two of the leading West Coast players, knew their opponents by reputation and South decided Fishbein would not have doubled without two sure tricks. South, therefore, corrected to seven clubs, on the theory that West had a 3-to-1 chance of leading the wrong suit. Fishy doubled again, more out of spite than any conviction he was going to defeat the contract.

Declarer's analysis was right on target—West led a diamond. Even so, declarer had only 12 tricks. However, declarer simply cashed the three top spades and six winners in clubs, coming down to A K 2 of diamonds in dummy and the 10 7 of hearts and one diamond in hand. East was a dead duck. Forced to hold three diamonds to prevent the two of diamonds from becoming the fulfilling trick, Fishy let go of the ace and king of hearts in the hope that West held the ten. Unfortunately, declarer had that card and it was now high. Seven clubs doubled and made!

Texas Folklife Festival

4-day event showcases heritage

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — A popular Texas tradition returns Aug. 4-7 when the Institute of Texan Cultures presents the vivid sights and sound of the state's proud heritage at the 23rd annual Texas Folklife Festival.

Each year 10,000 participants from 65 counties across Texas share their music, stories, crafts and foods with some 70,000 visitors whose image of Texas is suddenly broadened from a land of "cowboys and Indians" to an ethnic and cultural showcase of the world.

The 1994 event will be particularly memorable when someone becomes the 2 millionth visitor to pass through the gate. Festival organizers plan to reward this individual with a gift package, the contents of which will be announced later.

A new feature of this year's festival will be an International Bazaar. Pioneer and ethnic crafts will still be demonstrated and visitors will be able to actually purchase some unique gifts as well.

All during the year, participants have been preparing items to sell — from dolls dressed in regional costumes to spices from the old country and gallons of strawberry wine.

The festival has long been a favorite of senior citizens. To encourage the attendance of senior citizens this year, the festival has added "Seniors Night" Aug. 4. Visitors 65 and older will be admitted for $4.

"Kids Day" will be Aug. 7. Children 12 and under will be admitted free when accompanied by an adult, and special activities are scheduled for them.

Regular tickets to the Texas Folklife Festival are $6 for adults in advance and $8 at the gate, $1 for children 6-12 in advance and $2 at the gate and children under 6 are admitted free. groups of 20 or more adults may purchase advance tickets for $5 each.

Hours are 5 to 11 p.m. Aug. 4 and 5, noon to 11 p.m. Aug. 6 and noon to 9 p.m. Aug. 7.

The festival is presented by the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio as an extension of its role as a statewide educational center. It is held on the institute's grounds on HemisFair Park downtown.

For more information or to order advance tickets write Texas Folklife Festival, 801 S. Bowie St., San Antonio, Texas 78205-3296, or call 1-210-558-2300.

A perennial favorite at the Texas Folklife Festival is "Tanya," who performs middle-eastern dances and always invites unsuspecting audience members to join her on stage.

Prize-winning wildlife carvings on display

Staff Report

ODESSA — "Wood on the Wing," a collection of prize-winning wildlife carvings, is to tour 10 cities across the United States. One of those cities is Odessa, where the exhibition may be seen through Aug. 7 at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4909 E. University.

In conjunction with the exhibit, Midge Erskine of EOS Wildlife Refuge will speak at 3 p.m. today at the Institute. Mrs. Erskine will talk about the birds represented not the carved wildfowl collection and bring live birds from her refuge to talk about their adaptation to their environment. There is no charge for the talk or for viewing the exhibit.

The 13 intricately carved, life-sized pieces that make up the collection are all winning entries in the annual Louisiana Wildfowl Carvers Festival, one of the most prestigious art events of its kind in the country. Phillips Petroleum has been a major sponsor of the festival since 1979 and each year has purchased the best-of-show entry.

Carvings are judged on the basis of originality, degree of difficulty, realism and artistic composition. The winning entry is displayed for a year at the New Orleans Nature and Science Center before joining the Phillips Collection.

"Phillips has built the 'Wood on the Wing' collection over a 15-year period one carving at a time," said John Whitmire, senior vice president of exploration and production.

"Our company is involved in a number of projects to reverse the serious decline that has occurred in avian populations," said Whitmire. "This exhibit celebrates not only the superb artistry of the woodcarver, but also underscores the beauty and fragility of wildfowl and their habitat."

In 1991, Phillips and its partners received a Presidential Citation from former President Bush for their work in restoring a network of playas in the panhandle regions of Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Colorado and Kansas.

More recently, Phillips and the Houston Audubon Society have brought together a group of partners to enhance and preserve habitat on the Chenier Plain, a narrow strip of land along the Texas and Louisiana Gulf Coast that is considered the most important habitat on the North American continent for migrating birds.

"The Art Institute for the Permian Basin is pleased to host the 'Wood on the Wing' exhibition and is most grateful to Phillips Petroleum for sharing their collection with the Permian Basin community through the Art Institute," said Marilyn Bassinger, the institute's director.

She said Phillips is bearing all costs of the exhibition.

"Phillips Petroleum has always given generous support to the Art Institute, and this is just another example of their generosity to the museum and to the community. They are to be applauded for their philanthropy and for the excellence of their collection of wildfowl carvings."

William Merritt Chase's "Idle Hours" is a featured painting in "American Impressionism and Realism: The Painting of Modern Life, 1885-1915," at the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth from Aug. 21 to Oct. 30.

Paintings by American realists, impressionists are on display

Staff Report

FORT WORTH — The Amon Carter Museum, 3501 Camp Bowie Blvd., will present a major national traveling exhibition, "American Impressionism and Realism: The Painting of Modern Life, 1885-1915" from Aug. 21-Oct. 30.

The exhibition explores two turn-of-the-century movements in American art and features works by John Singer Sargent, Mary Cassatt, William Merritt Chase, Childe Hassam, Robert Henri, John Sloan, William Glackens and George Bellows.

Art historians have differentiated the two groups of painters by style — impressionist and reaslist, according to a press release from the museum. Impressionist denotes the lightly brushed, brightly colored works of such artists as William Merritt Chase and Childe Hassam in the late 1880s, and realist denotes the darker-toned urban scenes that Robert Henri, John Sloan and their colleagues produced beginning about 1905.

To illuminate the groups' similarities and differences, the exhibition focuses on three broad subjects that the artists of each movement explored — the country, the city and the home.

Although the American impressionists and realists reached their maturity in different centuries, painters from both groups shared common artistic backgrounds. They all benefited from some measure of academic training, appreciated the works of certain Old Masters, and adopted the manner of the French impressionists.

Group tours may be scheduled by calling the tour coordinator, 1-817-737-5913. Tours must be scheduled at least two weeks in advance.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

The exhibit was organized by The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and the Amon Carter Museum.

Christian artist Bryan Duncan to perform

Staff Report

Contemporary Christian artist Bryan Duncan performs at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 12 at Midland Center, 105 N. Main St.

Duncan

Advance tickets, priced at $10, may be purchased in Midland at Jericho Inspirational Gifts and The Lighthouse, and in Odessa at Heavenly Treasures and Ark Family Books and Gifts.

For more information call Trir or Robert Dorn, 570-7075. His Mic land concert is sponsored by Mir acle Marketing.

Dunbcan, a preacher's son, was kicked out of a Florida Bible college for "curfew violations and for not adhering to the strict dress code.

"They wanted your hair to be really short. Well, I was playing music down there, and short hair wasn't a hip thing," Duncan said.

He said his short time in college was characterized by "general overall rowdiness."

Now 41, Duncan has earned a solid following and his career bounded even higher when his most recent recording, 1993's "Mercy," earned him Album of the Year and Best Male Artist honors from Christian Research Project.

With five chart topping singles, "Mercy" also earned Duncan a nomination for a Dove Award as Vocalist of the Year.

"We've had enormous success with this record, and frankly I'm pretty surprised," said Duncan. "This album was more of an acknowledgment of the struggles. It felt like the end of the road to me, when I finally acknowledged that I was not capable of saving the world or of even turning people to Christ. I wasn't crying that victorious thing. The songs weren't about how I found Christ and now everything is fine. It was more about desperation."

It also was about relationships.

"I think relationships are the major point in being on the Earth," said Duncan. "You can't take anything with you, but the thing you can take that's closest to you is the relationships you have. There's a Scripture that says, 'How can you claim to love God if you don't love your brother?' "

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

(From 5H)

Signed to a recording contract with reunion Records in 1993, Crosse soon landed a spot performing with the Gaither Vocal Band. His new release is "My Place is With You."

Ms. Daggs sings a little pop and a little country.

Both artists will be at The Ark that afternoon for a "Meet the Artist Hour." During this time the artists will sign autographs and answer questions. The Ark will have refreshments. For more information call Phil Davis, 1-366-3335.

■ Musical to be staged

CROSBYTON — "God's Country," a musical prairie drama, will be produced by the Rio Blanco Heritage Foundation July 28-30 and Aug. 4-6 here.

In the production, the life and social history faced by early settlers is depicted by area talent. The setting for "God's Country" is the Blanco Canyon, where much of the original story took place.

Showings and tickets are limited. For ticket information call 1-806-675-2906 or write God's Country, P.O. Box 386, Crosbyton, Texas 79322.

■ Musicians sought

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The Jim Beam Country Caravan Talent Search invites unsigned country music artists to submit an audio tape of their performances for a chance to get their break in the country music business. All tapes received by Aug. 20 will be screened and narrowed down to five finalists.

The finalist will be flown to Nashville to perform before a panel of industry professionals and a live audience.

The winner will then be showcased before an audience of country music industry executives in a private performance.

Official rules may be obtained by sending a legal sized, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Jim Beam caravan Talent Search, c/o ARS, 43 North Canal St., Chicago, Ill. 60606.

■ War exihibit closes

ALPINE — "Quiet Shadows, Women in the Pacific War," a photo essay exhibition from the Admiral Nimitz Museum, closes July 25 at the Museum of the Big Bend here.

Dedicated to all women who served in the Pacific Theatre, the exhibit illustrates the stories of women caught up in the storms of war.

"This exhibit points out how much the United States was involved in World War II and how all Americans joined the war effort," said Ken Perry, museum director.

"Everyone should see this exhibit . . . Bring the family, so no one will forget the sacrifices made."

From the experiences of the Army and Navy nurse to those of civilian women who served with the American Red Cross, the USO, and the press corps, the stories are varied and unique. The last part of the exhibit details the experiences of those women who called the Philippines home. They endured not only the initial Japanese attack but 36 months of captivity in internment camps.

Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

■ Bernal exhibit closes

Evocative portraits and colorful documents of ceremonies and a variety of personal environments are shown in the exhibition "Chicanismo: Photographs by Louis Carlos Bernal," which closes today at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The display of 50 color and black-and-white photographs made between 1973 and 1988 reveals the spirit and unique identity of the barrios, those neighborhoods occupied mostly by Chicanos, U.S. citizens of Mexican-American heritage.

The exhibition has been shown in conjunction with "The Lowrider Car Show" in the Thomas Gallery. The lowrider vehicles represent a contemporary Chicano art form.

Hours today are 2 to 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

■ Symposium slated

TAOS, N.M. — The Kit Carson Historic Museums and the New Mexico Endowment for the Humanities are sponsoring a day-long symposium July 30 at the Taos Civic Plaza and Convention Center.

After Mexican Independence in 1821, more than 80 percent of all Anglo-Hispanic intermarriages in New Mexico took place in Taos.

The symposium will focus on the immigration into New Mexico of male foreigners after 1821, and their intermarriage with New Mexico Hispanas and the various aspects of the roles played by Hispanics in the process of cultural assimilation.

The program, "Women and Cultural Change in Territorial Taos," will especially focus on the life and role of Josefa Jaramillo, the wife of Kit Carson for 25 years.

The program begins at 10 a.m. and ends at 9 p.m. All sessions are free to the public but tickets are required. An evening banquet, which costs $18, also is planned.

For more information or to make reservations call the museum, 1-505-758-0505, or write P.O. Drawer CCC, Taos, New Mexico 87571.

California dance clubs throw elaborate parties

By Niko Price
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — With his spit-shined black leather boots, dark jeans, blue dress shirt, black 5-gallon hat and oversized belt buckle sporting the Virgin of Guadalupe, Eric Ramirez doesn't look much like a gang member.

Yet, just three short years ago, he was.

As a member of one of the city's toughest gangs, he shot and wounded two people, he says. Then, he quit to join a gang of graffiti artists called a tagging crew. And then came banda music.

On weekend nights, Ramirez doesn't hang out on street corners any more. He weaves and bobs through a sea of cowboy hats, frantically shifting his feet and flinging his girlfriend from side to side.

Ramirez, now 20, heads one of the city's thousand-odd banda clubs — groups of youths, mostly teen-agers, who get together to the sound of tubas and slightly out-of-tune horns to dance quebradita, a stiff-hipped lambada-like two-step from Bavaria by way of northern Mexico.

The clubs throw parties Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons in rented halls, warehouses, parking lots and living rooms. They spend as much as a few thousand dollars a shot on rent, bands, disc jockeys, security guards, glossy fliers and beer.

'Every time we go out, it's the same people, so you already feel comfortable and you feel like it's a family.'

— Claudia Garcia, 17, new all-girl club member

Drawing anywhere from a few hundred to a few thousand people, the parties, called pachangones, charge only a few dollars' admission. Many offer discounts to those who arrive in cowboy boots and hats — and most people do.

"Every time we go out, it's the same people, so you already feel comfortable and you feel like it's a family," said Claudia Garcia, 17, a member of a new all-girl club, Besitos Traicioneros, or Cheating Little Kisses.

For youths like Ramirez, the clubs have brought more than a change in clothes. He now is devoting himself to painting, getting good grades and working toward a career as a movie cartoonist.

"I got in this club, and they told me, 'You're either in the club or in the crew,' so I dropped the tagging," he said. "It was nice. You just went and danced with the girls."

That was part of the idea when KLAX, the most popular radio station in the country's biggest market, started Club Casimiro in August 1992, disc jockey Juan Carlos Hidalgo said.

"Definitely, it's an alternative to the gangs," Hidalgo said.

Club Casimiro now has about 600 members, and many of the station's 2 million other listeners have organized into about 500 clubs, he estimated.

With the growth, the parties have become more elaborate. There are new dance steps, and club members say some of the parties now involve drugs and strippers. And — to the dismay of people like Ramirez — gangs.

Many Hispanic gang members felt abandoned by girls in favor of relatively clean-living cowboys, and muscled in on the clubs or formed their own.

"I think gangsters are just taking over. You're dancing and then all of a sudden you see people go 'pop, pop, pop,'" said Ramirez, pointing his finger in the air like a gun. "They just, like, play around and shoot."

Some police officials say they have seen innocent quebradita clubs expand into dangerous and brazen gangs that pepper parties with gunfire and defend their territory.

"They're doing the same thing as the typical gang members. They're bringing guns. A lot of the quebradita clubs are shooting other quebradita clubs," said Officer Gabriel Barboza, who works in a gang unit in East Los Angeles.

But that transformation hasn't occurred a few dozen miles to the south in Orange County, and police and club members say that's due in large part to Rosa Maria Zepeda, considered the grandmother of the local quebradita scene at a stately thirtysomething.

One year ago, she rounded up the presidents of a dozen or so Orange County clubs and convinced them to form an organization called United Clubs.

The clubs agreed to live by the rules — dancers are suspended or expelled for fighting, for example, and even pay fines for failing to tuck in their club T-shirts.

"What we're trying to do is all be together like a family," said Agustin Lozano, 20, president of member Club Pura Banda in Santa Ana. "We try to get the gangs out so we can enjoy the dancing."

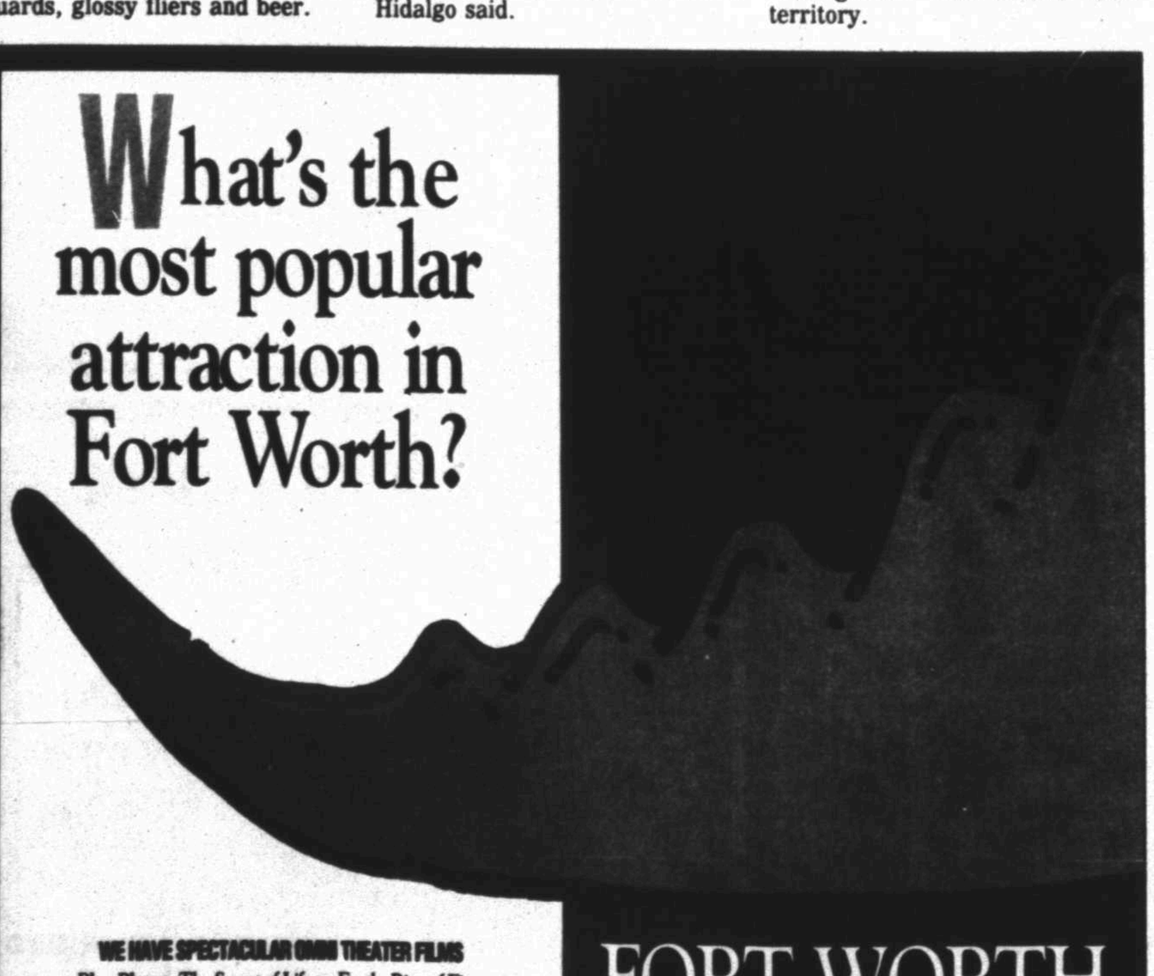

At a recent Pura Banda meeting, the 25 members crammed into a living room did seem like family. Ranging in age from 2 to 22, they lounged on couches and the floor, talking and teasing in Spanish about T-shirts, parties and a trip to an amusement park.

Pura Banda, and the other United Clubs, also discuss more weighty topics. They have donated supplies to earthquake victims, paid for family members' operations and traveled to Tijuana to give toys to poor children.

Santa Ana police Officer Jose Vargas said teen-agers need to be part of a group — and better a dance club than a deadly gang.

"At these clubs, they meet and give each other the gang signs," he said. "Then they settle their arguments out on the dance floor — which I think is a lot healthier than having 9 mms flying out all around you."

Overcoming all obstacles

Manor Park facility latest step toward improved service

For more than 33 years, an extraordinary group of Midland's citizens have been daring to care, stepping out on the outer edge of conventional wisdom with impossible dreams, ignoring droughts and oil busts and chronic pessimism, doing whatever it takes to make life good for the people who come here.

And now they've done it again.

With the completion of the John F. Younger Special Care Center at Manor Park, Midland Presbyterian Homes has once again demonstrated its commitment to excellence in continuing care for older adults.

It began in 1960, with Beth Fasken, mother of Murray Fasken.

John Younger remembers how Mrs. Fasken, a woman of steely determination, plied him, her son Murray, Matthew Lynn, a Presbyterian minister, and others with handwritten letters urging them to create an "old-folks home."

CARE: Alzheimer's care facility officially opens today

(From 2)

Younger remembers that she wanted to start with a 500-room facility that she would call "Evergreen."

"She pursued her interest with me and with Dr. Lynn and with her son Murray, as well as several others," he said.

"She was very active in trying to get things done. She was a Canadian by birth, and she had a set of long-playing records recorded in a park in Canada, and you could hear the bird songs.

"They were very soothing and pleasing to her, and she would invite Charlene and me over for dessert and and she would play those records."

Midlanders Murray Fasken, James Steedman, P.F. Bridgewater and John Perkins formed a committee to study the matter and two months later recomended that the community take up the project.

In 1963, Midland Presbyterian Homes incorporated and acquired a five-acre tract in the 2800 block of West Illinois Avenue.

Meanwhile, Younger had bought into the dream and had begun to pursue the idea of a church-sponsored retirement home as a project for church he belonged to, Memorial Christian. However, Memorial Christian was still new and small, and the prospect of the kind of indebtedness such a venture would entail was too much for the parishioners.

However, the church's minister, Bob Gartman, was deeply interested in the project. Lynn was a friend of his and Gartman recommended to Lynn that they put Younger on the board of Midland Presbyterian Homes.

"I attended one meeting, and the next meeting they railroaded me through as president," Younger said. "At that time, the median age of Midlanders was about 28 or 29, according to somebody's statistics, so there wasn't exactly a grassroots demand for a retirement center for older people. All the board members really worked to raise money for that project.

"But we were in George Mahon's district at that time, and he was very influential. He helped us get the first FHA-approved loan, and we opened in 1970."

Trinity Towers, complete with a five-story tower and 40 outside apartments, offered an innovative lifestyle for older people who were able to live independently but who wanted easy access to health care and a secure environment.

It was immediately occupied, with a waiting list of prospective residents.

A second tower went up in 1978, adding capacity for independent residents, but also offering 49 health-care beds.

Total capacity for Trinity Towers increased to 174.

And still there was a waiting list. In 1981, MPH formed a fund-raising committee to finance the building of Manor Park, which would incorporate many of the unique features of Trinity Towers in an area a little more spread out.

The Captain W.E. Wallace Estate donated 40 acres at the western edge of Midland, and in 1983, with more than $6 million in donations, Manor Park opened debt-free.

In 1985 the Barney Greathouse Activity Building was built with a $1 million donation from Mrs. Greathouse, housing a jacuzzi, recreation and activity rooms, dining room, chapel, commissary, gift shop, and beauty and barber shops.

MPH completed Mabee Health Care in 1985, largely financed by contributions from the L.E. and J.E. Mabee Foundation Inc.

Once the Mabee Health Care facility was in operation, Trinity Towers' health-care residents transferred to Manor Park, thus allowing the remodeling of Trinity Towers. This provided personal-care rooms that offer minimal care to residents who can no longer function independently, but don't require nursing care.

In 1988, MPH added Respite Care, designed to provide residents an option in temporary care for persons 62 or older who may need supervision and assistance.

The Younger Center, a specialized facility to care for persons with Alzheimer's disease and related disorders, formally opens today. It provides 30 semi-private rooms for up to 60 residents, and utilizes the Mabee Health Care Center as the facility support core to provide services including a clinic, physical therapy, laundry and central supply.

This facility utilizes low-impact colors and lighting, special furnishings and space design, and a staff-to-resident ratio of 3 to 1.

Center designed to meet residents' needs

You won't find any grand entrance into the John F. Younger Special Care Center. You enter unobtrusively through a side door into an area awash with calm. This is just one of many surprises at the facility, the newest in a series of innovations designed to meet the needs of patients with Alzheimer's and related disorders.

Midland Presbyterian Homes' Community Relations Director Chris Newman explains that the unit was designed from inside out to meet the needs of its residents.

"We tried to find materials and colors that would be satisfying and not disturbing," Ms. Newman said. "We're doing everything we can to eliminate any reasons for confusion or frustration, from the lack of knobs and visible controls on lights and furnishings, to the wardrobes, designed to show only one day's clothing at a time, laid out in the order it's to be put on."

The focus is on familiarity, with a careful control of stimuli. There are no long institutional halls and no glaring lights. The noises you hear are the comforting sounds of voices in conversation or footsteps in no particular hurry. Doors are wide and there are easily identifiable logos on bathrooms. At the entryway to residents' rooms are big plaques bearing their favorite photos.

The reason for the prominent lack of an entryway is as common-sense as the multitudinous other innovations: main entries tend to draw residents to them.

Since people with Alzheimer's like to wander, wandering is encouraged, but not to the outside. Instead, the emphasis is placed on the door to an exterior area where a wide wandering path winds around the building and through non-toxic shrubbery, past soft lights and grassy areas.

Back inside, the 30 rooms are divided into three pods of 10 rooms. A carpeted walking path connects the pods. The pods can be differentiated by colors, with all rooms in each pod painted the same color, so that a resident wandering out of his/her residential pod will be able to tell by the color. In the middle of each pod is a vinyl flooring area where residents will have their meals and activities. Tables will seat four, with placemates laminated into the table top to help guide residents. Each pod contains a bathing room with tubs and showers designed for the special needs of both the elderly and persons with Alzheimer's.

Personal photos of the residents, posted prominently at the doors to their rooms, will also reduce confusion and help them to orient themselves.

There is the ubiquitous nurses' desk at each pod. It is designed to eliminate accessibility of equipment. The working counter is recessed well below a wide shelf, leaving staff people visible and available to residents without distractions. And there are television monitors everywhere.

Ms. Newman likens the monitors to those in a cardiac care unit.

"People with Alzheimer's have the same needs for constant supervision as people with heart problems," she said.

The center has a 3 to 1 ratio of staff to residents.

And staff people be forgotten.

"Because the level of care in the Alzheimer's center is so intense, there is a special respite area for the staff, where each individual can get away on a regular basis to rest and regroup. This is as important for the well-being of the residents as it is for the well-being of the staff."

For family members who may have questions or needs for counseling, there is a secluded family room within the center.

There are 30 semi-private rooms in the center, as well as two isolation rooms. Since the transition from daylight to darkness bothers a lot of people with Alzheimer's, special "sundowning" lights inside a cornice at the window will provide a gradual shift from day to night. The windows can be opened outward to about six inches.

There are no television sets or telephones in residents' rooms. Noise is a problem to people with Alzheimer's.

A facility support core will provide clinic, physical therapy, laundry and central supply services.

Local philanthropist devoted much to project

John Younger's causes are many and varied. He has served on the boards of the Abell-Hangar Foundation, Midland Community Theater, High Sky Children's Ranch, Marine Military Academy in Harlingen. He's past president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and helped establish the Midland YMCA and the Permian Basin Museum Library and Hall of Fame. He established A&M's Century Club, and in 1989, was named Texas A&M distinguished alumnus. In 1992, he was named Trustee of the Year by both the Texas and National Associations of Homes for the Aging.

He began his work toward the building of Trinity Towers in 1967 after becoming a trustee of Midland Presbyterian Homes. A year later he became chairman of the board.

Under his guidance, Trinity Towers received a HUD loan and he began donation drives that soon netted the $200,000 needed to maintain the facility until it became operational.

In his 26 years on the board, Younger has served in various fund-raising and developmental positions.

After the groundbreaking for Trinity Towers on Jan. 19, 1969, he foresaw the growing demands for retirement living from an ever-increasing older population.

> " ... That's one of the reasons we're naming it (the special care center) for him. He's been on that board for so long and he knows the names of just about every one of those (sources for money). It's amazing how he just kept coming up with more and more."
> — Thomas Coleman, chairman of the board

While serving as treasurer in 1974, he saw the establishment of the second tower.

Between 1979 and 1981, during the development of Manor Park, he again served as chairman of the board, and has since continued in various capacities, throughout MPH's continuing improvement and development of both Trinity Towers and Manor Park.

John and Charlene Younger came to Midland the first time in 1940 when he was a mud man for Baroid NL Division.

They didn't stay long, however. With a bachelor's in chemical engineering from Texas A&M, he was called to active duty as a chemical warfare officer in 1941. He was sent to Port Khorramshahr, Iran, where he spent 31 months supervising wartime shipments as executive officer of the port. He was discharged in 1945 as lieutenant colonel, and awarded the bronze star.

He joined The Western Company in 1945, and was soon promoted to head the newly formed perforating department. Between 1946-48, he supervised development and introduction of bullet and jet perforating services.

Then in 1951 he was named vice president in charge of wireline services and assistant general manager for research.

He resigned in 1957 to found Airport 20 Corp., an oil and real estate firm that he now serves as president.

Like many oil-field hands, the Youngers spent most of their early years moving.

"We moved 13 times in nine years," Mrs. Younger said. "But when John asked me where I wanted to come back to, I said 'I don't care, just as long as it's Midland.'"

Younger says he feels his own efforts have been overrated.

"The Trinity Towers Manor Park project has been blessed all the way through with extremely good and active members of the board, and with a very good staff. We've only had two administrators — Clyde Hayden and then Bill Saxton took his place.

"One group that has made a tremendous difference is the auxiliaries of Trinity Towers and Manor Park. You can't give them enough credit.

"The people of the community and even outside Midland have been so generous.

"Beth Fasken didn't live to see her dream (of a retirement home) realized. I wish she had. I think she would have been proud."

Respite care offered at three locations

A major concern to caregivers is their own ability. Whether the loved one is in need of care because of Alzheimer's and related disorders, or mentally alert yet needing personal care, his well-being depends on the presence in good health of the caregiver.

To meet this concern, Midland Presbyterian Homes Trinity Towers and Manor Park offer respite care at Trinity Towers for persons who are mentally alert but need personal care. Respite care at the Mabee Health Care Center includes personal, intermediate and nursing services. Respite care is also available at the Younger Center for persons with Alzheimer's and related disorders.

Maximum stay in the respite care facilities is 30 days, minimum stay of two days. Respite care recipients are offered the same services available to residents.

In general, services offered include social, recreational and therapeutic activities, all meals and snacks, 24-hour security services, bathing services, mail delivery, and laundry service.

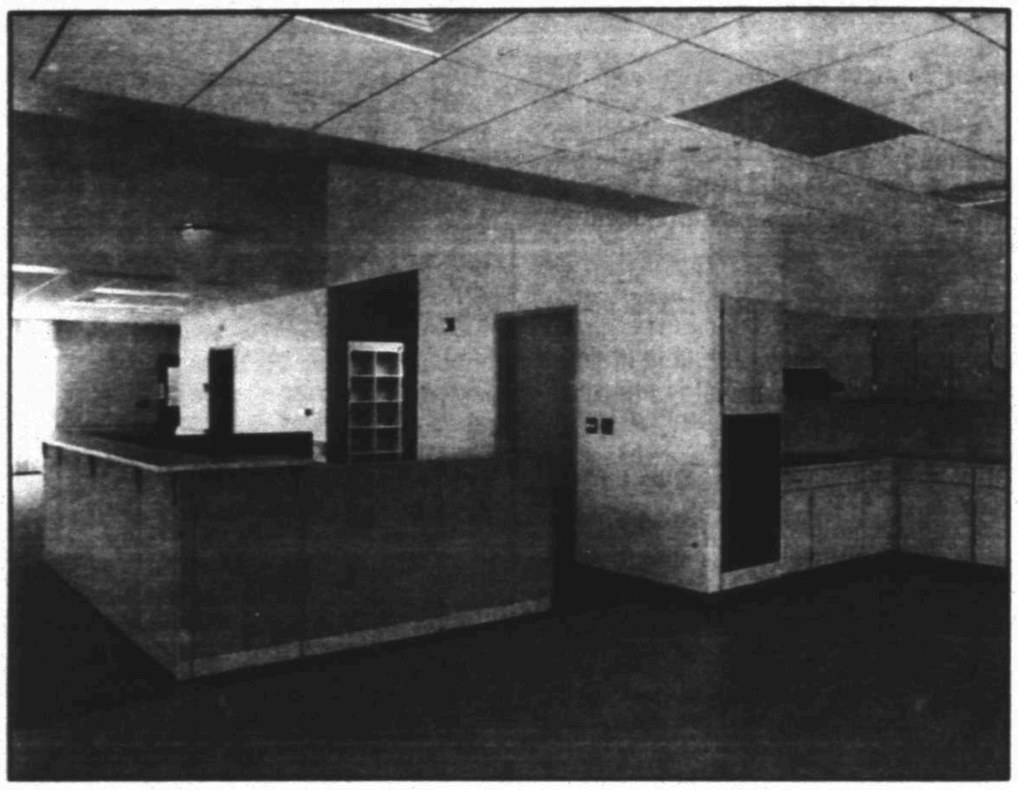

For additional fees, health-care supplies, medical transportation, and beauty and barber shop services are also available.

Bill Saxton, chief executive officer of MPH, said the area of respite care is one where he foresees ongoing growth and opportunities.

"The respite care centers are probably another area beneficial to employers who often have to rely on substitutes to handle crucial assignments when employees are faced with having to care for family members.

"When (trainer) Dorothy (Coons) comes, this is one of the things we will be discussing. I see a real opportunity for further outreach sometime in the future."

With one in three families in the Midland area touched by Alzheimer's, and a steadily aging population nationwide, his prediction sounds as close as tomorrow.

Facilities appeal to those with differing interests

Trinity Towers offers downtown convenience; Manor Park more secluded

Trinity Towers and Manor Park are managed by the same board, and same administration, but their styles are varied enough to appeal to retirees with very different tastes in lifestyle.

Trinity Towers is close to down-town, a mere 10 minutes' drive to Midland County Public Library, Midland Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, banks, shopping areas, churches, and city and county offices.

Trinity Towers' facilities are concentrated on five acres. Living is more urban, with the sights and sounds of life outside the complex going on constantly. There is no entrance fee involved with Trinity Towers.

Manor Park, located at the western edge of Midland, has a more secluded atmosphere. Residences in general are more spacious than Trinity Towers' apartments and suites. Although Loop 250 runs just west of the complex, there is less street noise at Manor Park.

Both Manor Park and Trinity Towers feature 24-hour security guards, emergency communication systems, on-site beauty and barber shops, building and grounds maintenance, telephone and TV cable hook-ups and social and recreational activities.

Manor Park garden homes range in size from one bedroom, one-bath homes measuring just under 900 square feet to large two-bedroom, two-bath homes of almost 1,200 square feet, with optional fireplaces, garden windows, extended dining room windows, and extended breakfast nooks at extra cost.

The Wallace Apartments are available in sizes ranging from the efficiency one bedroom, one bath with 516 square feet of floor space, to the two-bedroom, two-bath 1,197-square-foot apartment. One meal a day is furnished with the maintenance fee.

Manor Park townhouses begin with one bedroom, one bath units located at interior positions of the townhouse cluster, with 881 square feet. They range to as large as three bedrooms, three baths with 2,390 square feet of floor space, located at the end of the cluster. These have such added amenities as a living room fireplace, dining room bay window, and a wet bar, for an additional cost.

Manor Park residents pay a refundable entrance fee. In addition, a maintenance fee is assessed to cover security, water, garbage and sewer, appliance maintenance, activities, weekly housekeeping and other amenities. The entrance fees entitle residents to first priority for a place at Mabee Health Care and John F. Younger Special Care Centers.

Trinity Towers offers one and two bedroom apartments, and a Tower special apartment, large suites and small suites in the Towers. Trinity Towers residents pay no entrance fee other than the $1,000 processing and renewal fee required of all Midland Presbyterian Homes residents.

Trinity Towers residents receive eight free infirmary days each fiscal year, and will be given priority for a place at Mabee Health Care and John F. Younger Special Care Centers.

Mabee offers services found in nursing homes

The Mabee Health Care Center was built in 1985 to meet the needs of Trinity Towers and Manor Park residents.

The 36,500 square-foot facility offers all the services of a conventional nursing home — from personal to intermediate to full nursing care, and infirmary facilities.

In keeping with the continuing-care concept of Midland Presbyterian Homes' Trinity Towers and Manor Park, rooms in the Mabee Center are offered first to Manor Park and Trinity Towers residents who need them.

The monthly fee includes daily housekeeping services, social, recreational and therapeutic activities, emergency nurse call systems, all meals and snacks, 24 hour nursing services, bathing services, personal mail delivery, and laundry service for linens and personal clothing.

Also offered at additional cost are health-care supplies necessary for personal hygiene and nursing treatments, delivery of residents' medications from a local pharmacy, telephone, newspaper and cable television service, medical transportation, and a beauty or barber shop.

Living accommodation furnishings include private bathrooms, hospital bed and bedside table, window treatments, and telephone and cable hookups.

Mabee Health Care also offers respite care for the temporary care of residents whose primary caregivers must be away or are otherwise unable to care for them.

Services provided are the same as those for permanent residents.

Care center aids full-time caregivers

For the full-time caregiver with a loved one with Alzheimer's, the very dailiness can sometimes be overwhelming. Manor Park's Day Care Center provides relief for those caregivers.

The center, which accommodates up to 15, will provide a secure environment under the supervision of licensed/certified personnel who are especially trained in the care of people with Alzheimer's and related disorders.

The Day Care Center, like the Younger Special Care Center, is designed especially for people with Alzheimer's and related disorders in mind.

Colors are muted and matte surfaces are non-slippery. There are wide aisles and clearly marked restrooms. Recreational areas and outside walking-path and sitting areas are easily recognizable and have easy access.

The daily fee covers snacks and the noon meal, social, recreational and therapeutic activities, supervision and/or administration of medication, shower and restrooms, family support, a library, and other resources.

Also available at additional cost are a beauty/barber shop, morning transportation, health-care supplies necessary for personal hygiene, bathing and dressing changes as needed, medical transportation by appointment, and specialized therapies.

Opportunities exist to help facility's future

Now that the John F. Younger Center is completed, the residents, staff, and the board can step back and behold the beauty of what their community has done.

But vision is never static. Even as we watch, we see new needs. We see new ways to serve the community, and new outreach.

For those who want to be a part of this process, opportunities abound.

The courtyard at Manor Park hints at the seclusion the facility offers. Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

"There were so many donations coming in from so many sources, I really hate to start naming them, because I'll almost surely leave someone out. The people of the Permian Basin are overwhelmingly generous."

— Thomas I. Coleman

You could honor a loved one, a friend, or a relative by giving the gift that never tarnishes — the funding of a room, a wing, a wandering area, or other special funding.

This unique means of celebrating past and present lives and occasions was once common only to the very old and the very rich. However, the practice has gained acceptance among corporations and businesses that no longer find it feasible in light of new tax laws to give large gifts to customers or friends.

The library in the Greathouse Activities Center exists in its present state because of just such an endowment from DA&S Well Service. The company funds such projects every year instead of spending the money on a Christmas party.

Furthermore, with the changing attitudes toward responsible giving, many families are now giving gifts to charities in celebration of birthdays, weddings, and other happy occasions instead of presents and parties.

The members of the Midland Presbyterian Homes board are always happy to discuss naming opportunities at any of their facilities.

Coleman: City's generosity is plus

"If there's anything I'd like to say, it would have to be about the overwhelming generosity of the people. They caught the vision. I'd like to take out an ad — hang it on the side of the Wilco Building — to thank the people who have made this possible."

Thomas I. Coleman has been chairman of the board of Midland Presbyterian Homes trustees for the last four years. He said thet since the groundbreaking for the John F. Younger Special Care Center in May 1993, work has been ongoing at a rapid pace, escalating toward the end.

"As chairman of the board, I'm ex officio on all boards, and got a daily update, and most of the problems didn't come until the completion of the building."

Coleman, who grew up in the construction business in Dallas, said this hasn't surprised him since that's how things usually go.

He said the fund-raising for the center got a slow start, but increased in the last six to eight months. He attributes

Auxiliary members help residents

Of the 65 members in the Trinity Towers Auxiliary, more than a few have been active for 15 to 20 years, according to Jana Ward, who serves as director of the organization.

"I don't think a lot of people realize what we do," she said. "We have a really good auxiliary, with daily activities.

"We have lots of games, Bible studies throughout the week, exercise programs, crafts classes of different kinds, and various other activities.

"Most of our members do something with the residents at least once a month," she said. "We have a weekly juice cart that we take to the residents in personal care on three floors. We provide a bus service and take residents shopping and to concerts.

"Oh, and we have monthly birthday parties. We also have big dinners, and residents can invite their family members.

"Then there are other times when we have coffee and pie," Ms. Ward said.

"I love to have new members. We have a lot of residents about ready to move in, and we could use both men and women in the auxiliary. Even if you don't have a lot of time, just come and visit. Most of our residents love to meet people, and they love to sit and talk."

Margaret Coleman, president of the Manor Park Auxiliary, says she joined when her mother-in-law, Vesta Coleman, bought a unit in the Wallace Apartments.

"She was the first Wallace resident. I wanted to do what I could for all the residents."

Vesta Coleman died three years ago, but the work of the auxiliary continues and Mrs. Coleman doesn't plan to quit.

There is a happy hour every month. "It has grown into almost a meal now," Mrs. Coleman says. "It's at four o'clock, and everyone really enjoys it.

"We help the activities director with the monthly birthday parties. Every week one of our members sees that the people from the Mabee Care Center get taken over to the chapel on Sunday afternoon at four o'clock, where rotating ministers do church services. On Sunday mornings, Gladys Hickman comes out and helps with the Bible study," Mrs. Coleman said.

"In the beginning, Ellen Boothe organized a library for the residents, and she still comes several times a week and helps keep it organized. She did this before the library was funded.

"Gwyn Sparks, our most recently retired president, comes twice a month to play and lead in singing for the people in Mabee Center." Mrs. Coleman said.

"On Wednesday and Thursday, there are people who go with the residents to shop for groceries, or if they're unable to get out, they shop for them.

"Every . . . March we have a jamboree, which is a barbecue cookout. We also provide assistance for the Christmas bazaar and a New Year's party. Our members also take juice to residents of the Mabee Center every afternoon. Another member of the auxiliary does games for the residents of the Mabee center every week."

She said one of the biggest jobs the auxiliary does is the annual Christmas decorations for the complex.

She said the auxiliary is very rewarding. "Everybody is so faithful and so willing to work, it's really a pleasure. And we love to have new members."

With the opening of the Younger Center, social services coordinator Lettie England will be recruiting and training a special auxiliary for the Alzheimer's residents.

Even if you don't have a lot of time, just come and visit. Most of our residents love to meet people, and they love to sit and talk.

Resident talks about living at Trinity Towers

Ona Burns, 86, a 1967 inductee into the National Guild of Piano Teachers Hall of Fame, has lived in her apartment in Trinity Towers for six years. She says she loves Trinity Towers because she has the freedom to pursue her own interests and because meals and housekeeping services are provided.

"I teach piano in the Midland College Classics program, and play programs at nursing homes in this area. I drive everywhere. I moved here from Brownwood to be close to my son and daughter, who live in Midland.

"I had experience with lots of nursing homes, and this is so much better. They are so gracious, and they have delicious meals in the large central building."

Since its opening in 1970 with one tower of residence and health-care rooms and 40 outside apartments, Trinity Towers has been a forerunner in the quest to meet the needs of the community.

If the Trinity Towers/Manor Park board and staff had been content to let Trinity Towers stay as it was, it still would offer some of the best retirement living quarters in the Southwest for a significant number of people.

However, with the demand for more retirement rooms and apartments, and the persistent waiting list of occupants, the board saw an opportunity to provide enhancements not available with the building of the first tower.

They added a second tower in 1978. The capacity increased from 94 to 174. An activity room, ceramic room, basement and storage space were added.

A personal-care floor was opened in 1986, and in 1990 personal-care capacity was added on a second floor.

Trinity Towers offers a means of independent living for persons 62 or older who desire to live close in, with 24-hour security, emergency communication systems, and prepared meals.

Trinity Towers residents, both in apartments and residential rooms, are

Saxton instrumental in center's concept

"People have been very generous toward the Midland Presbyterian Homes over the years, whether it's Trinity Towers or Manor Park. If you can prove a need, the community is ready to stand behind you."

Bill Saxton came to Midland because of the concept of Trinity Towers.

"I visited Midland in 1972 or '73 because I had met Clyde Hayden, who was then administrator of Trinity Towers, when there was only one tower and 40 apartments surrounding the tower," Saxton said.

"I was very impressed with what the board was doing in regards to retirement.

"Bivins in Amarillo, where I was executive director, was mainly a nursing home. I was trying to make my board aware of the possibilities of going into retirement. I took the chairman of the board on a tour of places in Texas, and one of the places I took him was to Trinity Towers, as an example of a new concept. Then when they built the second tower in 1978, I came down for the dedication.

"Then in 1979, one Monday evening about 7:30, I got a call from Clyde Hayden saying he'd just announced his retirement.

"Bivins and Trinity Towers were the two premier facilities in the state. I knew what the (MPH) board had done before, and I knew they were very active citywide," he said.

"In December of 1980, I moved to Midland as administrator of Trinity Towers. In October of the following year, the committee formed to develop Manor Park.

"The people saw a need, and they came forward to meet that need."

Saxton said the construction of the John F. Younger Special Care Center is another example of how the people of the community have come to meet a need.

"Ten years ago when we built Manor Park, we had never heard of Alzheimer's. But now we have a waiting list of 76 people for the Younger Center, in addition to the day-care and respite-care centers. In the Mabee Health Care Center there are 75 residents, and (some of) the people in Trinity Towers are likely to need to come to Mabee."

Saxton says the Younger Center is the second in the state especially built for Alzheimer's victims. The first one built was the James West Special Care Center in Fort Worth. It opened in February.

"What we have is the result of maybe four years of preparation. This has been a long process.

"We're probably one of the leaders in the field of aging, whether regional, state or national."

He said the staff and the MPH board are constantly examining outreach needs and opportunities.

"One of the ideas behind the day-care center was to help employers to keep employees working. Employees can have their relatives at day care without having to worry about their meals or their welfare. This can keep the employee productive.

"Respite care is another example. If there is a caregiver taking care of a love one, the (loved one) can come here for up to 30 days to give caregivers a vacation, or a time to rest. And there are other outreach services we're looking at in the future."

Expert is to train staff

The trouble with special-care facilities — no matter how urgently needed, planned or state-of-the-art they are — is that their purpose can only be fulfilled to the extent of the competence of the personnel manning the facilities.

In order to ensure that every resident and day-care client of the Younger Center is given the ultimate in special care, Midland Presbyterian Homes has hired Dorothy Coons — consultant and lecturer on the designing of Alzheimer's facilities and associate professor emeritus at the University of Michigan's Institute of Gerontology — to train every member of the Manor Park staff.

Once the initial training period is over, Ms. Coons will return in August to provide more intensive training to Younger Center staff members.

Among the concerns Ms. Coons will deal with are the effects of staff activities and approaches on behavior, therapeutic intervention, working with persons with dementia and special environmental needs.

Her awards include Clark Tibbits Award from the Association for Gerontology in Higher Education and Distinguished Service Award from the Michigan Non-Profit Homes Association.

She has written and spoken extensively on care of the aged, and on special needs of dementia victims.

Housing representative is to speak at dedication

Keynote speaker at today's dedication of the John F. Younger Special Care Center will be Dr. Herbert Shore, executive vice president of the North American Association of Jewish Homes & Housing for the Aging in Dallas.

Among his professional activities, Shore was a delegate to the White House Conference on Aging, past president of the American Association of Homes for the Aging and a member of President Johnson's Task Force on Nursing Homes and Related Facilities Caring for the Elderly.

In the 1970s, when there was a lack of professionalism among nursing-home personnel in many facilities, Shore established a graduate program to teach nursing-home administrators. The federal government sponsored this study because of the need for trained people.

Among his students was Bill Saxton.

"When I was in class, it was hart to keep notes," Saxton said.

"He was, and is, very forceful, very dynamic, a very effective public speaker. He really charges people up."

Saxton said his former professor also gets instant name recognition.

"Wherever you go nationally, you mention Herb Shore, and you get respect."

Shore is executive vice president emeritus at Golden Acres Dallas Home for Jewish Aged, and he has done studies and consultations on homes for the aging for organizations and corporations nationwide.

Shore and Dorothy Coons, who will be conducting special training sessions for Manor Park employees, once taught together in Michigan in the 1960s.

this to the competence of the people involved.

"People keep coming up and saying 'How are you doing this?' I've been on other boards, but the difference here is, these people don't just come and go, they stay," Coleman said.

"People like John Younger, Wilma Maley, Dean Stoltz. These people know what they want and they know how to get it. They're tenacious."

He admits the time they've had to spend on the project has been daunting.

"We have an executive committee working once a month and the full board meets every other month. Some days I've spent half a day or more, with meetings three in a row. When we finally get into the new facility, some of that will cease, and we can get back to our regular meetings.

"This (Younger Center) is an example of just how much good you can do if nobody cares who gets the credit. Everybody has worked and given, and we're practically debt-free.

"There are still needs to be met. We have a number of naming opportunities for people who want to honor loved ones or celebrate special occasions."

Coleman said he's excited about the respite- and day-care centers.

"It's natural to take care of the person with Alzheimer's. It's the care-giver who needs respite, and that's why the respite- and day-care is so important. The care-givers can get a breather without worrying about whether their family member with Alzheimer's is all right.

"Bill Saxton and all the staff have such a loving attitude. They're not out there just for the paycheck. When you work in a place like this, you can't do it for the money."

He said with the project nearing completion, there have already been inquiries from facilities in other towns and cities.

"I hope this will be a model for other communities. Bill Saxton has received calls from out of state and from other facilities in Texas."

Three Cheers for the John F. Younger Special Care Center, a State-of-the-art Alzheimer's unit.

There are many retirees at Manor Park living in apartments, garden homes or town houses who enjoy the extensive facilities, great entertainment and interesting trips planned by our terrific and beloved activities director.
