Donations have increased this holiday season

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are giving more to charitable organizations this holiday season than they have in previous years, but the groups say donations still do not meet the soaring number of requests for help.

And there is "a different kind of person" asking for help this year, say charity spokesmen who are being tapped for assistance from people who in previous years were donors.

"In terms of contributions, we're up 12 percent over last year," said Keith Jones, spokesman for the Salvation Army in the Washington area. "But requests for our Christmas services such as groceries, gifts to shut-ins and toys for children in poor families are up in excess of 20 percent."

Jones said the demand for emergency financial assistance for such items as food, medicine, clothing and fuel is up close to 30 percent over last year.

Lt. Col. Ernest Miller, national spokesman for the Salvation Army, said this year the organization has received many letters from regular donors saying they are now in financial distress.

"SO MANY of those who had been our donors now find themselves unemployed," Miller said. "Suddenly they are finding themselves in the embarrassing position of having to ask for help."

Miller said many of those asking for assistance are unaccustomed to charity.

"These are people who are not eligible for public assistance because they own their own home," said Miller. "We had a letter from a man in suburban Detroit who has helped us in the past who is now selling his furniture piece-by-piece to put food on his table."

Miller, who has worked for the Salvation Army for 48 years, said donations are greatest in areas most in need of assistance, like Detroit, where contributions are running about 10 percent higher than last year.

"There is an acute awareness of need that is more intense than any time in my memory," he said.

Congress heard testimony last week on the plight of 2 million homeless and jobless Americans who could freeze or starve this winter unless helped.

"THE HOMELESS population is growing astronomically and changing radically," Mary Ellen Hombs of the capital's Community for Creative Non-Violence said before the House subcommittee on housing. "Unemployment, Reaganomics and the economy have combined to drive hundreds of thousands of middle-class people into utter and absolute destitution."

At the United Way of America, one of the nation's largest fund-raising organizations for health and welfare agencies, contributions are up about 5 percent over last year, said spokesman Stephen Delfin.

He said this year the organization expects an increase of $100 million in donations over $1.88 billion raised last year.

"People give more in hard times if they're working because they like to help people in a worse state than they are," Delfin said. "But giving would have to increase 100 percent in one year to cover the new needs."

Delfin said a recent survey of hotlines operated by United Way in 15 major cities showed there has been a sharp increase in requests for such basic services as food, shelter, job training and family counseling.

In Compton, Calif., the Compton Welfare Rights Organization reports between 600 and 700 applications for Christmas aid, compared to 150 applications last year.

"DONATIONS ARE up but it doesn't fulfill the need," said Phyllis Drierson, director of the program which gives food, clothes and toys during the holidays to those who are unemployed or underemployed.

"City employees and fire departments, people who are working, know how bad it is this year and donated 500 baskets of food," she said. "Last year they gave 300."

In Detroit, a civil rights organization called Focus Hope reports contributions to its assistance programs are 20 percent higher this holiday season than last year.

"People who would have given $10 are giving $15 or $25," said Eleanor Josaitis, who helped found the organization 15 years ago.

She said that last month, Focus Hope fed 1,600 elderly people and that there are now 9,000 to 10,000 on a waiting list.

She said the organization is helping 200 families in its adopt-a-family program but has 5,000 to 6,000 families that have asked for help.

SHE SAID that in one case, a suburban Detroit post office adopted eight to 10 families for the holidays and will provide them with food, clothes, and a toy for each child.

Ms. Josaitis said that its feeding program for mothers, infants and children fed 49,704 last month, compared to 31,000 at the same time last year.

The Community Christmas Bureau in Cleveland reports that more companies in the local area have offered holiday assistance to needy families.

"We have 75 families being helped by companies now, about a third more than last year," said Carolyn Miller, co-director of the program. She added, however, that there are between 2,000 and 3,000 more families than last year who have been referred to the program for assistance.

Government workers may be unemployed

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than half a million federal employees were ordered to work today while the possibility lingered that they would be sent home early.

Their jobs depended on passage of an emergency spending bill which had been worked out by a Senate-House conference committee Sunday night, almost two full days after the government officially ran out of operating money.

Avoiding a partial shutdown was considered so urgent that the committee began hammering out a compromise, even before the Senate officially approved its version of the catch-all spending bill.

But by the time negotiators approved the compromise late Sunday night, the Senate and House had already recessed for the day, meaning the measure could not be approved by both chambers and sent to President Reagan until at least this afternoon.

Congressional leaders predicted both chambers would approve the bill, which they had stripped of a jobs-creating provision because of the threat of a presidential veto.

White House spokesman Peter Roussel said late Sunday night that Reagan would "wait and see what the bill looks like" when it reaches his desk before deciding whether to sign it.

Although Reagan was likely to be pleased on the jobs issue, negotiators also removed the spending bill of $988 million Reagan wanted for production of the MX missile and they banned spending of $2.5 billion for MX research and development until Congress approves a deployment system for the nuclear weapon.

A memo from the Office of Management and Budget to agency heads last week advised all employees to report to work regardless of weekend congressional developments.

"A judgment will be made (this) morning as to whether there's a reasonable prospect of a (spending) resolution being passed and signed during the course of the day," said Edwin Dale, an aide to budget director David Stockman.

If it looks like the measure will be enacted, the memo said, non-essential workers will stay in their offices and perform "shutdown activities." If not, those workers will be sent home, likely at midday, officials said. They would stay off the job until a measure is approved.

To the rescue

A rescue worker carries a woman injured in the explosion of two fuel tanks at a power station Sunday near Caracas, Venezuela. At least 32 people were killed and hundreds were injured when two tanks containing more than 300 barrels of fuel and hydrogen exploded.

Power-plant blaze kills 32 people

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — More than 1,000 firemen and police battled a runaway blaze today in the fuel storage yards of a power plant where exploding oil and gas tanks killed at least 32 people.

Unconfirmed reports said 50 people were missing and as many as 300 injured in one of Venezuela's worst disasters.

The inferno raced across a half-mile of ground Sunday at the oil and gas storage tank farm of the Tacoa-Arrecifes plant, 20 miles east of this capital.

"Intense heat trapped about 30 firemen, volunteers and Civil Defense workers who were fighting the fire. From what I saw, I do not think anyone survived," said Caracas Electricity Co. President Oscar Machado, who also was burned by the blaze. His company operates the plant.

Machado said a tank containing 20,000 barrels of oil was endangered by the flames raging out of control.

"It is impossible to predict what will happen," he told a news conference Sunday night. "We are waiting for the fuel to run out."

People on a beach near the plant said they felt "waves of heat covering us" and "it seemed like everything was trembling."

Norma Ugueda said she jumped out of her car and ran behind some rocks. "Shortly afterwards my car exploded," she said.

Javier Carvalgo, 14, said: "I felt as though my head was splitting open from the heat." He suffered burns on his back and face.

A police helicopter circling the area was whipped by a fireball and crashed into the Caribbean, according to television reports. Its three occupants were rescued and only one was injured.

Machado said the first tank exploded while two workers were taking out oil.

The workers, Jose Manuel Rodriguez and Luis Natera, were killed in the initial blast, the government news agency Venpres said.

"It is an operation we have been carrying out every day for the past 40 years and nothing has happened before," Machado said.

But this time "it was as if a giant flame thrower was being operated. A fire

By MARK S.SMITH

HARWICH, England (AP) — Two loaded ferries collided in a raging night storm off this English port, killing at least five people and sinking one of the vessels in the icy North Sea, police and rescuers said early today.

They said another person was presumed dead from the Sunday night smashup, which flung some people into the frigid, gale-whipped water. Helicopters, tugs and other vessels pulled 64 people to safety following the collision between the 4,263-ton European Gateway and 3,514-ton Speedlink Vanguard.

Some survivors said they were unable to find lifejackets on the European Gateway or crew members to guide them to liferafts.

Flares fired by rescuers over the heaving water lit up Harwich and the surrounding countryside throughout the search in what one rescuer called "a bloody awful night."

Chief Superintendent Mike Humberston of Essex County police said all the casualties came from the European Gateway. The ferry capsized and sank in shallow water about 30 minutes after the collision two miles offshore. Harwich is about 75 miles northeast of London.

A spokesman for the European Gateway's owners, the shipping firm Townsend Thoresen, said the vessel had left nearby Felixstowe 15 minutes before to sail to the Dutch city Rotterdam with 34 truck drivers and 36 crew aboard.

The Townsend Thoresen spokesman said the company would investigate complaints about lifejackets and lifeboats. He said, however, that the ferry had a passenger certificate requiring lifejackets and lifeboat space for every person aboard and that the lifejackets were on board.

Police said there were no casualties aboard the other ferry. Colin Crowford, shipping and port manager for Sealink UK Ltd., said the Speedlink Vanguard was carrying a crew of 28 and no passengers.

Sealink U.K. Ltd. is owned by state-run British Rail which runs the nation's railroad network. Sealink in turn owns Northern Coasters Ltd. which owns the Speedlink Vanguard.

No tourists were believed to have been aboard either vessel.

"At this moment we do not know what caused the collision," the Townsend Thoresen spokesman said. "It is the first accident we have had in more than 20 years of operating."

He said the collision occurred at 10:48 p.m. (5:48 p.m. EST), ripping a 200-foot

Details surrounding crash not yet known

Reports that pilot error caused last week's light plane crash which killed four people near San Angelo are premature, according to an official with the National Transportation Safety Board.

J.H. Daugherty, air safety investigator with the NTSB's Fort Worth field office, said Monday the circumstances surrounding the accident won't be officially determined until the NTSB completes its investigation and issues a report, a process which could require several months.

"By law, the NTSB itself determines the cause of the accident," Daugherty said. "Historically, it takes three or four months." Daugherty said the board will eventually consider data gathered during the investigation and then issue official findings in the incident.

Daugherty said the board does not explain an accident with the phrase "pilot error," but instead details the specific conditions and actions involved in an accident.

"'Pilot error' is not an acceptable term in any investigation. It's one of those 'Gee, it sounds technical' kind of things," he said.

"The investigation is on-going right now," he said. "We've completed the on-scene phase."

Daugherty said autopsies and toxicology tests are now being performed on the four victims, who died when their single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza skidded to earth last Wednesday night in a pasture about six miles south of Carlsbad, Texas.

Killed in the crash were the plane's pilot and owner, Dr. Warren J. Hartmann, 41, of San Angelo; Levaun Charles Hall, 45, of Austin; Billye Bearfield Frock, 39, of San Angelo, and Lani Debra King, 28, also of San Angelo.

The plane had been reported missing after failing to reach San Angelo's Mathis Field Wednesday night. Searchers discovered the charred wreckage about 10:30 a.m. Friday.

Daugherty said a study of debris at the crash site indicated the plane skimmed into the rocky field.

"The preliminary indications are that it impacted the ground at a fairly high speed and at near-level flight," he said.

Daugherty said the plane apparently bounced once, returned to earth and plowed a several-hundred foot path before coming to rest.

Tom Green County Sheriff Ernest Haynes said Friday that a forward

"You don't know me from Adam, but like Adam, you're a first of your kind," said Rose Testagrosso, of Fitchburg, Mass. "Come on, Barney, thousands of us are with you in spirit and our prayers and we want to see you give it your best."

The comments are typical of hundreds of get-well wishes sent to Barney Clark since the 61-year-old retired dentist became the first recipient of a permanent artificial heart Dec. 2.

She's already started on some replies and plans to answer each letter, said hospital spokesman John Dwan.

John Codd of Pleasanton, Calif., a friend of Clark's, expressed hope that Clark will recover and quipped, "What some people won't do to get their picture in the paper!"

Cindy Strain, 35, of Seattle, said Clark had been her dentist when she was 11 years old. And a woman who said she was "grateful for the opportunity of being your babysitter 61 years ago" sent a card.

An avid golfer, Clark received a box of specially-made candy golf balls from Rogers Candy Co. of Seattle, with a card saying, "You deserve an Academy Award for special effects because you effect us all in a special way."

Many letters came from people awaiting donated hearts for transplant or who had relatives die from cardiomyopathy, the degenerative heart disease from which Clark suffered.

A woman wrote to say her grandson had been told his best hope for a healthy life was development of an artificial heart.

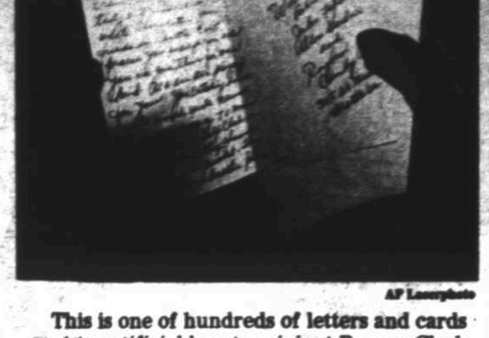

"I was lucky only to have two bypasses and an aorta valve replacement," wrote Jack Houk, Anderson, Calif., about his series of heart operations.

Connie Hull of Blissfield, Mich., wrote that a kidney transplant has increased the quality of her life, and said she has been able to have a child.

"Both kidney and baby doing fine," she said.

LaMar Sutton, of Edgerton, Ohio, wrote that since he had heart surgery, "I have never been so well. I know you will be also."

"I am an 82-year-old lady and I started myself an album of all famous people and you are one of these," said Estelle Maxwell, Suffern, N.Y., who wrote asking for a photo.

This is one of hundreds of letters and cards sent to artificial heart recipient Barney Clark at the University of Utah Medical Center where he is in critical condition following surgery to implant the artificial heart.

Envelopes referred to Clark as "artificial heart recipient," "Dr. Barney Clark — the 1st" and one had "Get Well" scribbled on it by a mailman.

"How about writing books?" Liz Swope of Van, Texas, suggested in a card to Clark.

Thick packets of letters, with pictures of hearts drawn on them by crayon, came from elementary schools all over the country.

"You are the bravest man I have ever heard of," said Lynette Rodriquez, a sixth-grader from Tampa, Fla.

"I hope your dental office is O.K.," classmate Rachel Amones wrote.

Many letters were from people lauding Clark's courage and telling him they were monitoring his progress.

"My entire family and myself thank you with all our hearts for having the courage to undertake this operation," wrote Jacquelyn, John and Jenevie Mix, whose envelope had no return address.

Clark was listed in serious condition Sunday. Doctors said he was sitting in a chair for short periods and his vital signs were normal.

Poster child misdiagnosed as having cystic fibrosis

BALTIMORE (AP) — When Rodney Brown, the 1976 national cystic fibrosis poster child, learned he never had the incurable disease, his reaction was pure delight: "I got to see the president for free!"

For 10 years, Rodney and his parents lived with the belief that he was afflicted with the often fatal respiratory illness. But tests eventually proved Rodney, now 13 and a 7th-grade pupil, suffers only from an asthma-like condition, his parents said Sunday.

Rodney was 15 months old and living in Indiana when doctors first diagnosed that his pneumatic condition stemmed from cystic fibrosis, said Rodney's mother, Cheryl.

After that, Rodney's daily routine included handfuls of antibiotics and long hours at physical and inhalation therapy to aid his troubled breathing. Rodney also was given X-rays about once every six months, Mrs. Brown said.

The wavy-haired boy became Indiana's cystic fibrosis poster child in 1975 and the national poster child the following year, meeting with then-President Ford.

But after the family moved in January 1980 to Gamber, a small community about 20 miles west of Baltimore, they found out about the inaccurate diagnosis, Mrs. Brown, 35, said.

"I think it just kind of goes to point out the need for continued research not only to improve the testing but to find a cure for the disease," said Rodney's father, Harold L. Brown, 36. "While many tests are good, there's always room for error."

The first test showing Rodney did not have cystic fibrosis was conducted by Dr. Beryl Rosentein at Johns Hopkins Hospital soon after the Browns' move, she said. During the next five months, Rodney was tested at Children's Hospital in Washington, D.C., and at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

But Rodney wasn't told about the inaccurate diagnosis until after the third test.

"We wanted to be positive beyond a shadow of a doubt first," said Harold Brown, an X-ray machine repairman.

When told he didn't have the disease at a conference in Rosenstein's office, Rodney was "delighted," said Mrs. Brown.

Recalled the boy's father: "When we first told Rodney, his reaction was: 'I got to see the president for free!'"

The Browns never publicized the mistake, but it came to light when an Indianapolis Star reporter who once wrote about Rodney recently asked a local Cystic Fibrosis Foundation chapter how he was doing.

Foundation officials told him about the faulty diagnosis, Mrs. Brown said.

One of those who conducted the test confirming Rodney didn't have cystic fibrosis was Dr. Van S. Hubbard, a specialist in pediatric metabolic disorders for the National Institutes of Health.

"He's doing very well," Hubbard said.

Community fears dioxin contamination

"People read the headlines, and it scares them off," Dr. Charles Schultheiss, a chiropractor assisting in the cleanup, said Sunday. "I can't estimate how many have said they won't come here because of the report of dioxin, but it's a good number.

"We've had about 200 volunteers thus far, but they'll be here all winter and won't make a dent in what needs to be done," Shultheiss said

Deer shot in head with arrow at zoo

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Children playing with an archery set may have been responsible for shooting an arrow into the head of a deer at the Green Hill Park Zoo, police say.

"All I can tell you is that the deer is alive," a young woman at the zoo said Sunday after technicians worked to remove a section of the arrow that remained lodged between the animal's eyes.

The spokeswoman refused to identify herself or answer any other questions about the incident.

Police said the injured deer was discovered Saturday morning at the small municipal "barnyard zoo" where people are encouraged to visit and pet a variety of animals.

"It sounds like some kids in the woods were fooling around with a bow and arrow and aimed at whatever they could," police supervisor Mary Didzbalis said Sunday.

"It's under investigation because our animal contol unit gets involved with all the animals there," she said. "Deer are so rare and hard to keep."

Head zookeeper Harold M. Carr Jr. said Saturday that park personnel had no idea who wounded the animal.

The Worcester Evening Gazette received several angry telephone calls from readers after running the photograph on its front page Saturday afternoon, said newsman Lee Hammel.

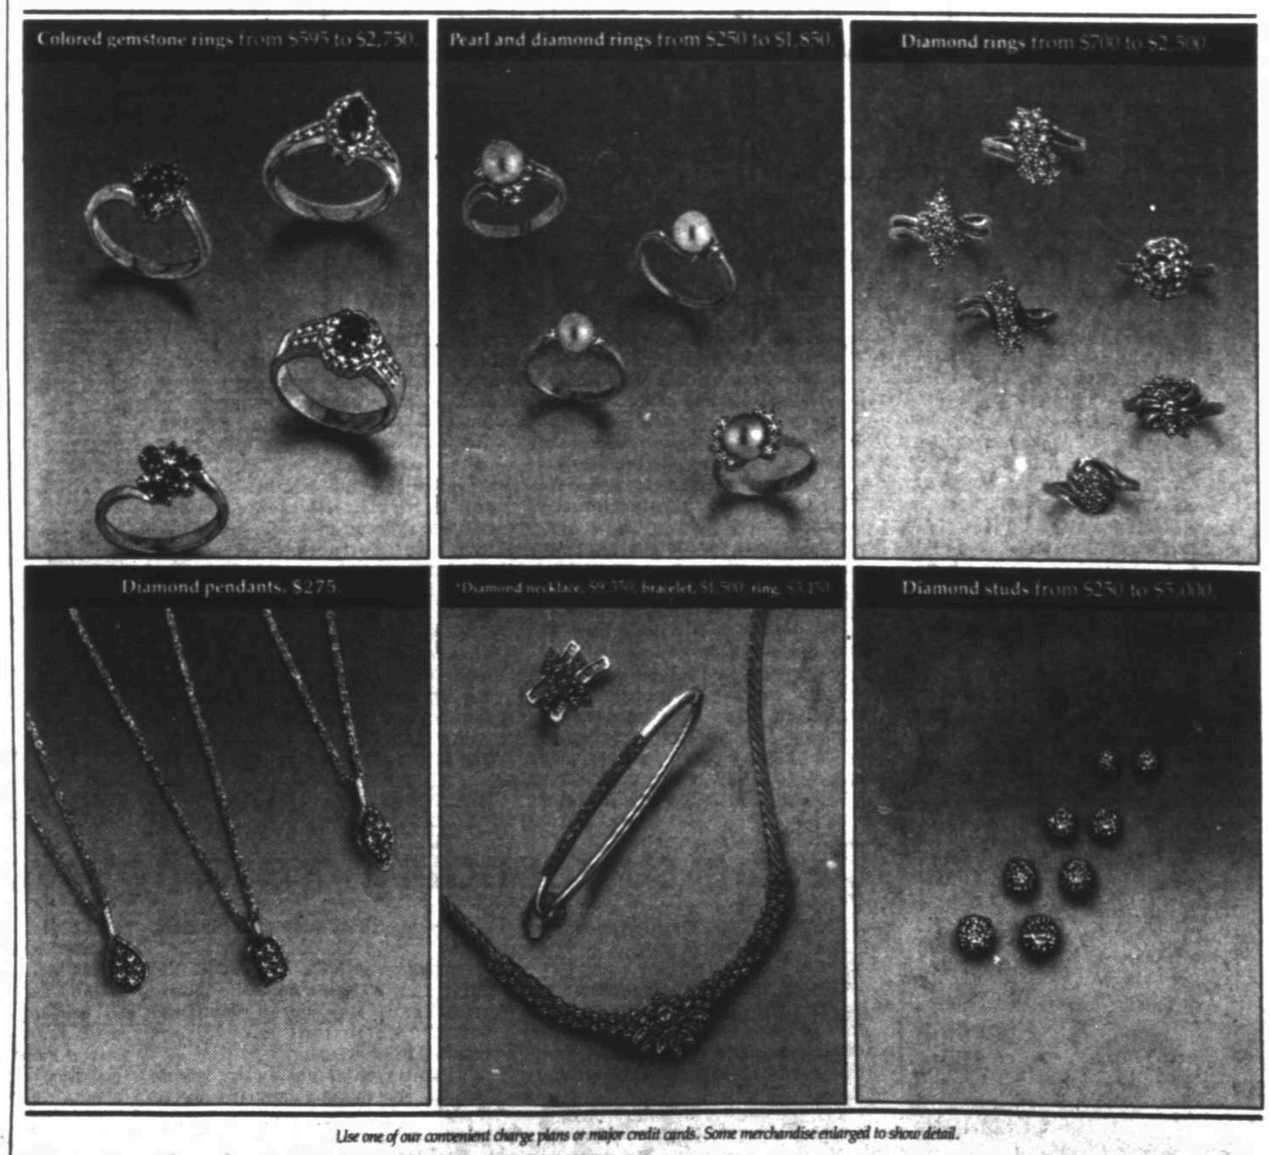

"People seemed angrier that we ran the picture than over the fact the deer was actually shot," said Hammel. "One of the callers said, 'Why did we have to run it on page one?'

"She was upset because children should not see a deer with an arrow in its head at the Christmas season."

Israel, Lebanon near agreement

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel and Lebanon could reach a political agreement in as little as a week now that the two nations have agreed to a framework for direct negotiations, U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib was quoted today as saying.

The Israeli newspaper Maariv quoted Habib as telling Prime Minister Menachem Begin that an agreement covering security arrangements in southern Lebanon, non-belligerency and normalization of relations could be "wound up within a week of direct negotiations between Israel and Lebanon."

The paper also quoted sources in Jerusalem as saying they believe Israel and Lebanon will sign such an agreement within a short time, either in Europe or in the Middle East.

The report came as Habib returned to Washington to brief President Reagan on the Israeli Cabinet concession that cleared the way for direct Israeli-Lebanese talks on future relations between the two countries as well as terms for withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon.

Meanwhile, Habib's deputy Morris Draper traveled to Beirut to report to Lebanese officials.

Israel agreed to skip Jerusalem as a site for the talks and said a venue would be chosen later. There was no immediate indication when the negotiations would begin.

The breakthrough Sunday came amid intense U.S. pressure on Israel for talks that would focus primarily on a speedy pullout of foreign forces from Lebanon.

Since Israel's June invasion to rout Palestinian guerrillas, Begin's government has insisted its primary goals included a security pact with Lebanon as well as an accord assuring peaceful relations between the two states. Israel hopes Lebanon will join Egypt as the second Arab nation to make peace with the Jewish state.

Israel had stalled direct negotiations with its insistence that the talks be held in Jerusalem and Beirut. Lebanon demanded that any talks deal only with a withdrawal of Israeli forces. It also opposed talks in Jerusalem to avoid implied recognition of Israel's claim to sovereignty over the Arab eastern sector of the city.

When the Israeli Cabinet met for its regular Sunday conference, Begin backed down on the Jerusalem issue. A senior Israeli official said the prime minister acted because he realized his position had deadlocked the talks.

"I take this upon myself. I think we have to be honest and not hide anything, and say that we are changing our decision," the official quoted Begin as saying.

The Israeli Cabinet also announced it had approved a document that would serve as a framework for the talks, and that the location would be chosen later.

The senior Israeli official, who declined to be identified, said the document had been worked out in direct Lebanese-Israeli contacts over the past eight weeks. He said it included three elements: security arrangements to safeguard Israel from attack by Lebanese-based forces, normal diplomatic relations between the two countries, and Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon.

Israel television said the framework included negotiations on Israeli reconnaissance flights over Lebanon, the role of Maj. Saad Haddad — the Israeli-backed leader of the "Free Lebanon" enclave in southern Lebanon — security outposts in Lebanon and the question of secure and open borders.

In Beirut, Foreign Minister Elie Salem confirmed that Lebanon had agreed to a framework for the talks and said they could begin immediately. He added that Lebanon insisted U.S. negotiators be present at bargaining sessions.

"We are ready to talk about anything they want, but we commit ourselves to nothing in advance," Salem said.

Newsweek magazine reported in this week's editions that Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon negotiated the "agreement of principles" with the Lebanese in top-secret talks. Newsweek said the accord establishes a framework for peace and calls for Lebanon to end hostilities with Israel and establish a 28-mile security zone in southern Lebanon.

Sharon disclosed the existence of the accord in an Israeli newspaper interview published last Friday, but gave no details.

As he did Friday, Salem again denied there had been any secret meetings between Israeli and Lebanese officials.

Shoppers begin to buy as Christmas nears

By The Associated Press

The countdown to Christmas is under way and retailers say shoppers are beginning to buy — enough to boost sales above last year's levels in many places.

"Sales are strong in every area," said Chris Bridenbaugh, spokeswoman for Nordstrom department stores, a 36-store chain with outlets in Alaska, Washington, Oregon, California, Utah and Montana.

Several retailers said the last week before the holiday would be critical.

J. Janvier Wetzel, executive vice president for marketing of The Broadway stores in Southern California, said: "The first two weeks (of December) were somewhat disappointing. It is apparent that consumers are still hesitant in their shopping and this means it will take a very strong finish to have a 'good' month."

Suzy Lewis, senior manager of public relations for the stores, said popular items included E.T. merchandise, "anything that's argyle" and electronics such as personal computers and video game cartridges.

Hussein may hold key to peace initiative

WASHINGTON (AP) — The outcome of meetings between Jordan's King Hussein and senior U.S. officials today and Tuesday is regarded as a crucial step in determining the success or failure of President Reagan's Mideast peace initiative.

Hussein, who arrived in Washington over the weekend, had a meeting scheduled with Secretary of State George P. Shultz today and with Reagan on Tuesday. The king called an unusual meeting of his top Cabinet ministers Sunday in Washington to prepare for the talks.

Shultz said repeatedly during his two-week tour of Europe, which ended Saturday, that the visit is a major event in the search for a lasting peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

The big question is whether Hussein has made a deal with Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat that would enable the king to represent Palestinians at the negotiating table in peace talks with Israel.

Arafat was quoted in an interview with the respected Beirut daily newspaper An Nahar as saying last week that he and Hussein were close to an understanding.

In London, a senior British foreign office official told a group of American reporters last week that he thought a general agreement had been reached subject to some kind of approval by Palestinians.

While he said he lacked details of the agreement, he believed it would be submitted to the PLO's legislative-type body, the Palestine National Council, at a meeting in Tunis tentatively set for next month.

Shultz and other U.S. officials declined to say whether an agreement had been reached. But the secretary noted there had been reports of this and U.S. officials hoped to learn from Hussein directly what had been achieved.

Entry by Jordan into the peace talks on behalf of the 1.3 million Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza strip is regarded as essential if Reagan's peace initiative is to have any chance.

The plan, unveiled on Sept. 1, calls for Israeli withdrawal from the territories, to be followed by Palestinian self government in association with Jordan. The nature of the Palestinian-Jordanian link wasn't spelled out.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachim Begin has rejected the plan, saying Israel will never withdraw from the occupied territories. Furthermore, his government feels the Reagan plan could lead to creation of a separate Palestinian state that would threaten Israel's security.

However, administration officials are gambling that if and when Jordan steps forward to negotiate with Arafat's approval, the Begin government would be unable to refuse joining such talks. Egypt and the United States, partners with Israel in the 1978 Camp David peace accords, would be the other negotiators.

But U.S. officials also know Hussein won't step forward to join the talks without getting approval from Arafat, because virtually all Arab nations take the position that only the PLO can negotiate on behalf of the Palestinians.

A major hangup is that Reagan's plan rejects the notion of a separate Palestinian state while such a nation is basic to the PLO strategy.

But Washington has argued, evidently persuasively, that the Reagan initiative remains the best and probably the last chance for the Palestinians to achieve some semblance of independence because the growth of Israeli settlements threatens to push the Palestinians out of the West Bank.

Incentive for Hussein to negotiate is that Israeli leaders say Jordan already is a Palestinian state. That is something with which non-Palestinian Hussein and Washington both disagree.

Temperatures expected to reach mid-70s

The lyrics might sound a little off key, but someone may have to begin re-writing some of the old Christmas standards if the National Weather Service forecast holds through the holidays.

According to the NWS predictions, tonight should be fair and mild with the low in the upper-30s and winds from the west-southwest at 10-15 mph. Tuesday should be partly cloudy with the high in the mid-70s and winds southwesterly at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Sunday's high of 58 finished 20 degrees short of the record high 78 set in 1978. The overnight low of 36 was easily warmer than the record low 11 set in 1973.

No precipitation in the last 24 hours leaves monthly and yearly rainfall amounts at 0.79 of an inch and 14.04 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 5:48 p.m.; sunrise Tuesday is at 7:45 a.m.

Fewer Americans will be audited in '83

WASHINGTON (AP) — More Americans next year will have to explain certain deductions on their tax returns, but fewer will go through full-scale audits.

"We will have more contacts with taxpayers but they will be a lot less intrusive than audits," said IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. "More people will hear from us but in a less troublesome way."

Egger said in an interview that the agency is studying ways to have computers better identify items on a tax return that need correction. Once the computer spots something questionable, the return goes to an IRS "classifier," who checks it. If the return doesn't pass that test, the taxpayer will receive written notice to correct the item.

The process is a refinement of the system under which about 2 million tax returns are selected for a full audit each year. However, an audit can require a taxpayer to pull together records and, in a face-to-face session with an IRS examiner, justify every item on a tax return.

IRS used the simpler procedure to some extent this year. Egger cited numerous cases in which IRS denied claims for charitable contributions to religious organizations that turned out to be nothing more than mail-order churches that the agency determined weren't qualified to receive tax-deductible donations.

Egger is bothered by IRS involvement in matters that have nothing to do with collecting taxes, such as helping to find young men for the Selective Service and seizing tax refunds due men who fall behind in child-support payments.

"There is a risk that the tax system would suffer if we were to revisit history...and people were to believe again that there is no such thing as confidentiality of information they supply to government" on their tax returns, Egger said. He apparently referred to abuse of tax returns during the Nixon administration.

Because most people believe their returns are confidential, they are more willing to be open and truthful, he added. If taxpayers get the idea their returns are open to anybody that wants to look, tax collections will suffer, he said.

The commissioner called on Congress to decide once and for all whether employee fringe benefits, such as meals and parking, should be taxed. Congress has blocked IRS from considering such items as taxable before 1984.

"They didn't repeal the law that taxes fringes as income," he said. "We are just prohibited from writing the rules. So what we've got are revenue agents making the rules as they go... without uniformity."

The commissioner said IRS plans a nationwide advertising campaign to notify taxpayers that a toll-free "hot line" telephone will be available again in 1983 to answer questions about filing tax returns.

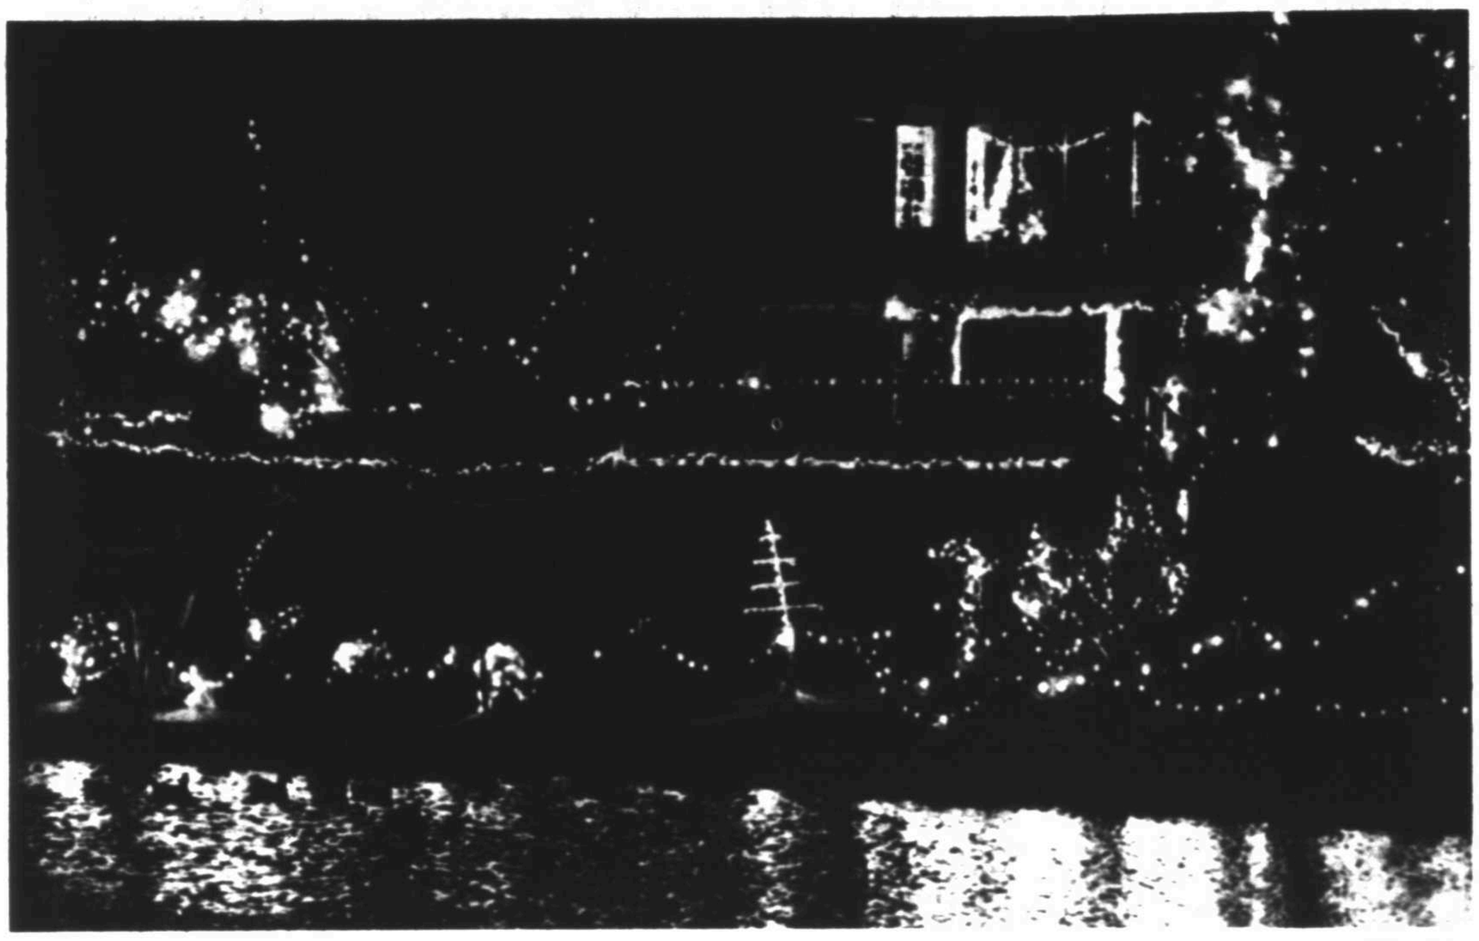

Over Egger's protests, the Reagan administration notified Congress earlier this year that it was sharply restricting the hot line to save about $50 million a year. The toll-free lines would remain but IRS personnel would answer only clerical questions, such as why a refund was delayed. Questions about deductions and income would not be answered.

IRS last year fielded 36 million telephoned questions. Ironically, because of the planned publicity to notify taxpayers that the service still exists, the agency expects more calls than ever in 1983.

Egger, who became chief of the 90,000-employee IRS when President Reagan took office, denied that the income tax system has become so complex that it threatens to fall of its own weight.

"We have an unbelievably complicated tax law," he conceded, but "it isn't so complex that the people can't handle it." Egger said a growing rebellion against government and authority is more responsible for tax cheating than is the complexity of the law.

Spies eavesdrop on FBI communications

WASHINGTON (AP) — Criminals and spies are eavesdropping on FBI radio communications throughout the nation, and the practice is not only legal, but also cheap.

In the past five years, there has been an explosion of eavesdropping on FBI radios all over the nation by organized crime figures, drug traffickers, career criminals, and even the news media and curious citizens.

As a result, fugitives have escaped, citizens have been injured, FBI agents have been threatened, investigations have been thwarted and the lives of agents and citizens have been endangered.

Calling the situation intolerable, the Justice Department asked Congress this month for $12 million to purchase radio systems that encode their transmissions. The department said that the very high frequency FM radio systems that all 59 FBI field offices use to communicate with agents in the street "can now be monitored by anyone in the country willing to pay $300 for an FM radio scanner," and without violating the law.

FBI Director William H. Webster has given the purchase of this equipment top priority in the bureau's multimillion-dollar program to acquire modern technology.

"It's dead serious," said Assistant FBI Director William A. Bayse, head of technical services, in an interview last week. "We're talking about a determined penetration of bureau on all fronts, including identification of personnel and vehicles and listening to the radio transmissions."

A grim joke has emerged from the problem. The FBI's Washington field office radio uses the call sign "KGB-770," because as one agent said, "We know the Soviet KGB is listening to every word."

Examples of serious problems in recent years include:

—In 1979, in a Northeastern city, the victim of an organized crime extortion cooperated with the FBI and arranged to pay the criminals. Agents relayed the payoff location to other agents by radio.

On arriving, the victim was searched and beaten by the criminals. Agents rushed in to save him from serious harm; they found radio scanners set to the FBI frequency.

—In a Midwestern office, agents relayed the address of a fugitive's hideout to radio cars. A malicious citizen listened in, found the telephone number for that address in a city directory, and warned the suspect that the FBI was on the way. Agents arrived minutes after the suspect fled and took another two weeks to apprehend him.

—On July 11, 1979, Colombian nationals engaged in South Florida narcotics wars opened fire with machine guns on a liquor store in a crowded suburban Miami shopping center. Two rival drug traffickers were killed, and two bystanders were wounded. The men have never been caught. Inside their abandoned van, agents found armor-shielded walls, automatic weapons and radio scanners tuned to police and FBI frequencies.

—In a California case still under investigation, a motorcycle gang gained enough information by monitoring FBI transmissions to identify an agent investigating them. They telephoned threats on the agent and his family.

Bureau officials will not divulge examples of monitoring by Soviet or other foreign intelligence agencies, but Bayse said, "You can assume the Soviets are going to use any kind of techniques they can to find out information about any of the intelligence agencies of the United States of which we are one."

The FBI has used radio channels in the very high frequency FM band for more than 20 years. Their transmissions cannot be picked up on normal FM radios, but cheap scanners are sold that can be set to any VHF channel or can automatically scan the VHF band of channels for any transmission.

"Our frequencies have been made public," Bayse said. FBI frequencies are available "in little, off-beat commercial documents" that sell for $5 at electronics stores, he said.

Leo Buss, chairman of the government's Interdepartmental Radio Advisory Committee, which assigns government radio channels, said those frequencies, including some used by law enforcement, were given out to citizens who asked for them, until a little over two months ago when they were classified.

Bayse said agents now use coded language on the radio, even changing the codes daily in sensitive operations, but "in a fast-breaking situation, you don't have time to convert to codes," Bayse said.

gash in the European Gateway's side. The bows of the other ferry were reported badly damaged.

Sea water flooded into the engine room of the European Gateway, snuffing out the ferry's generators and causing the vessel to list sharply.

The European Gateway managed to radio a distress call and the captain gave the order to abandon ship. The spokesman for the vessel's owner said some crewmen were able to launch a few liferafts but that others could not be launched because of the list.

The spokesman said one of the rescue ships, the 5,991-ton Danish cargo ferry Dana Futura, picked up between 30 and 40 survivors.

"There was a big bang and I was thrown on the cabin floor," said Simon Dowers, 23, a seaman on the European Gateway. "The lights went out almost at once, and I grabbed some clothes and went on deck.

"There was no panic. Other boats came along quite quickly and some people jumped into the water. They were all picked up almost at once, but all the time the ship was rolling over on top of us."

Truck driver Ivor Harvey, 39, said: "After the bang I looked out to starboard and I could see a ship going along the side, scraping as it went... Nobody panicked or anything. I even finished my drink and went to my cabin for warm clothes."

"There was just no time to launch the lifeboats and I could see only one liferaft," said survivor George Lawn.

Dutch truck driver Jeop Josee, 45, said: "Somebody told me to get into a lifebelt. But when I went back to my cabin there wasn't one there. I looked everywhere but there was nothing. Then they couldn't get the lifeboats launched. Someone gave me a lifejacket and I managed to get on to a pilot boat."

The British Rail passenger terminal at Harwich, which had been closed for the night before the collision occurred, was reopened to receive survivors before medical crews took them to hospitals in town and in nearby Colchester.

Medical staff said some survivors were seriously injured and many were suffering from exposure to cold. Police said two seriously injured men were transferred to a hospital at Ipswich.

The collision occurred near the estuary mouth of the River Orwell. Harwich, a major port for sailings between Britain and the European continent, is on the southern bank of the estuary.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two women, convinced their children have been skipping school to play video games, want the city to prohibit businesses from letting children play the games during school hours.

Mae Norris and Patty Martin of Pittsburgh said their children were caught playing Donkey Kong and Pac-Man during school hours. That prompted them to circulate petitions in the Homewood-Brushton area supporting enactment of an ordinance.

"The problem has gotten worse. The more games they bring out, the more children will play with them," said Ms. Norris, whose 7-year-old son, Darnell, plays the games "any chance he gets."

She said he learned that the boy was arriving late at Belmar Elementary School because he was stopping to play the games after leaving home.

"You'd be surprised. Some of these children are very good at these games," said Ms. Martin. "All it takes is a quarter and they can be going for hours."

The women said their efforts haven't drawn unanimous favor among city residents. Some have refused to sign the petition because they claim their children know better than to skip school.

truck was reduced to ashes within seconds."

Officials said they had not determined the cause of the initial explosion in the Belgian-made oil tank.

The first tank containing about 80,000 barrels of fuel oil — about half its capacity — exploded around 7 a.m. (6 a.m. EST) and the flames later ignited another tank containing hydrogen gas.

Initial damage was estimated by the company at more than $1 million. Unofficial sources said they believed the damage could be much higher as the company had recently invested about $500 million in equipment at the plant. At $34 a barrel, the cost in lost oil alone could be $3 million.

The explosion and fire cut power to nearby Simon Bolivar International Airport. Vacation-bound travelers wandered about in darkness until the airport's emergency generators started up.

The continuing fire threatened to cut power supplies to this city of 4 million people.

Machado suggested that even Christmas tree lights should be turned off.

"I appeal to everyone to save energy," he said.

However, a quick tour of downtown Caracas Sunday night found the city aglow with Christmas decorations, indicating few people, if any, were heeding Machado's appeal.

Government workers' jobs depend on bill

volunteering their services to the government.

The departments of Commerce, Defense, Education, Energy, Health and Human Services, Interior, Justice, Labor, State and Treasury and a number of other agencies, were affected.

Reagan has signed appropriation bills for the departments of Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, Agriculture departments and related agencies, as well as the Veterans Administration, National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency.

"Essential" government activities continue regardless of whether legislation is enacted. Among the activities considered "essential" are medical care, air traffic control, border and coastal protection, care of prisoners, law enforcement investigations and disaster assistance, according to the OMB memo.

The original House measure contained $5.4 billion for jobs, while the Senate bill earmarked $1.2 billion. Reagan, in a radio interview Saturday, repeated his plan to veto an emergency bill containing such provisions.

"I will have to veto it if it contains these various amounts that have been suggested, because, in truth, these aren't job-creating bills," he said.

It was the third time in 14 months that a budget stalemate threatened to partially close the government. Federal offices were briefly closed in November 1981, when an estimated 400,000 "non-essential" workers were dismissed at midday after Reagan vetoed an emergency money bill.

The bureaucracy had another close call in the spring.

Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — The news that horsemeat is now being sold in New York City is hailed by Frenchman Philippe Gastonnet as vindication of his life and art.

Gastonnet is a Paris horse butcher, as his father was before him. The recent decision by New York's department of health to authorize the sale of horsemeat for human consumption looks, from his vantage point, like a historical demarche on a par with America's discovery of the bidet.

He has no doubt whatsoever that, although the U.S. Demand for horse filet, horseburgers and horsefurters may prove slack initially, they will eventually find a permanent place in the American diet.

As he carefully explained from behind the counter of his boucherie chevaline with its de rigueur bust of a horse's head over the entrance in Paris's Rue Belles Feuilles (street of the beautiful leaves), "Chevaline is tastier and healthier than beef. The horse is a very healthy beast. It is subject to fewer maladies than the bovine and its meat contains fewer dangerous bacilli. Horsemeat should really be regarded as a health and diet food, but one that is good to eat."

What makes the 45-year-old butcher happiest about New York City's epochal gesture is not so much the glorious transatlantic future he foresees for "viande chevaline" as the fact that foreigners may now be forced to drop their disagreeable attitudes toward this particular French gastronic tradition.

Americans, he complains, tend to haughty superiority in his presence. "They wander into my shop and treat me like a circus freak," he said.

On the other hand, English people are invariably outraged. They often track him down for the sheer pleasure of upraiding him for the "barbarity" of his profession.

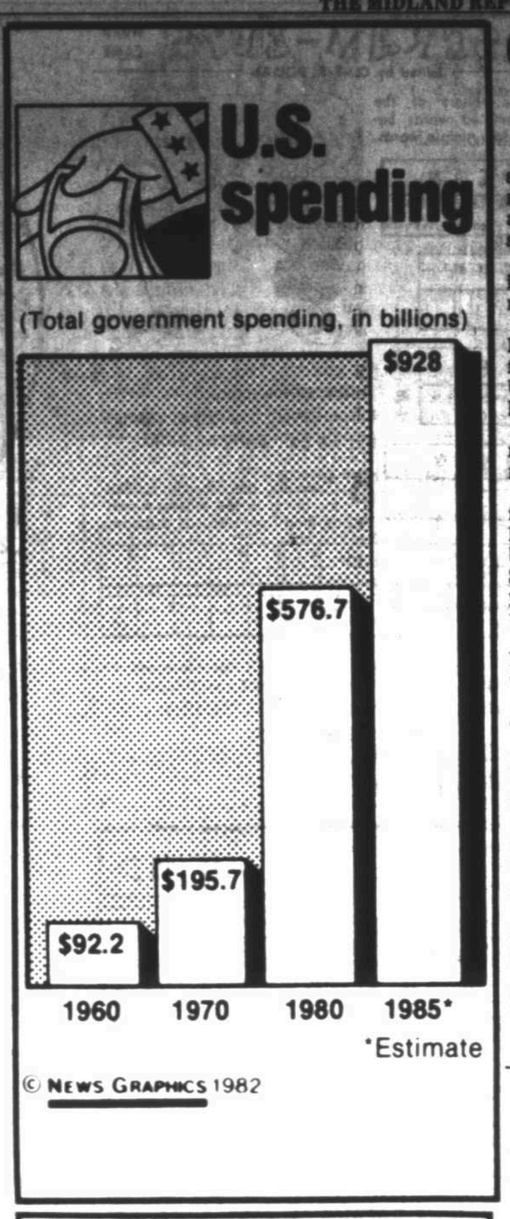

"It's nonsense," he argues. "The slaughter of horses for food, as long as it is practiced humanely, is no worse than killing cattle or any other animal for that purpose."

Contrary to widespread belief, the French haven't always eaten horse flesh. The practice started less than 150 years ago, deliberately promoted by Emperor Napoleon III as a way to provide the urban poor, who had been spawned by the industrial revolution, with protein they could not otherwise afford.

In the good old days, horsemeat was the cheapest thing you could buy. Now it's more expensive than best quality steak.

As a result, the socio-economic level of Gastonnet's customers, his is one of about 200 horse butcher shops remaining in the Paris area, has altered dramatically over the years.

These days, very few working class people frequent his establishment. Horsemeat has become an acquired taste of the middle and upper classes. It has snob appeal.

Oklahoma City learns Valley Girl talk, fer sure

By DIANE HUST

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Like, you know, there's a totally awesome way of talking today that, like, you know, shows you're a real rad chick or gnarly guy, and, like, you know, shows you're not a airhead, a Joanie or a space cadet, I mean, gag me with a spoon, fer sure.

(Translation: Young people today have a new slang. Speaking it helps you fit in well socially and shows you are not stupid or anachronistic, which are extremely undesirable qualities.)

Like, you know, this rad way of talking began last year in San Fernando Valley, Calif., is called Valley Girl talk and was made famous by a tubular record by Frank Zappa and his daughter Moon Unit. And, like, you know, it's spread this fall to Oklahoma City, Hoover Middle School and the eighth grade.

And, I mean, like you're faced, you're beige, you're, like, freakin' me out, like totally, if you don't understand me. I mean, like, gag me raw, gross me out the door, fer sure.

(Translation: This slang, called Valley Girl talk, became popular from a good record by rock star Frank Zappa and his daughter Moon Unit. It has spread from San Fernando Valley, Calif., where it began last year, to Oklahoma City, including Hoover Middle School's eighth grade. If you do not understand Valley Girl talk, you have embarrassed yourself, are boring and make me feel weird.)

"It's mostly just words you use by themselves, they're like, you know, sentences by themselves," says Tara Hardin. "So it's hard to use them in sentences to explain what they mean."

Like, Mindi Higbie, is no airhead, no way. She has even figured out, like, where some of these words come from, really.

Like a "Joanie" is named after a character on TV's "Happy Days," a real quaker, real straight.

And, you know, "fer sure" is probably said that way because most Valley Girls wear braces, Mindi thinks.

Like, also, "to the max," which means, like, you know, totally, is from the Latin "maximus," she says.

Like "Grody," you know, means, like barf me out, to the max. But something can be so grody, like, you know, a grody movie, so that it's really royal.

And "I'm sure," like, can mean "I'm not sure" or "I'm really sure." But it's no biggie, she adds. Whatever blows your skirt up, Tara says.

Valley Girl talk is, like, you know, so tubular, so massive, because it has a word for, like, you know, just about any kind of beastie, fer sure.

Like, if Sherri Lewis wants to face you, she can call you a smof (a person who wants everything); a waunch or wanch (a complainer); or a doofus (a person who makes a dumb statement).

And, like, you gross Sherri out to the max when you are thuggen other people (stealing their things) or are totally raggen (in a bad mood), she says.

Like, you know, if you've got only peanut butter between the ears, I mean, like totally, Doug Ramsay says, you're a hoser. I mean, like, take off.

But, like, you know, if Camellia Adamson wants to say something really tubular about you, she can, like, say you're cold-blooded, you're live, you're gnarly, you're rad, you're unreal. She's not going to tell you to bag your face, I'm sure, like, no way.

And, like, Mindi says, all the rad kids talk this way to each other at school, and, like, when they drop a line (phone), and like, when they hang out at a bone-a-rama (big clothing store) and spend some, like, you know, billys (dollars), and, like, sometimes when they talk to adults.

"My mom is starting to pick some of it up from me," Mindi says.

Like, you know, moms and dads may still face themselves and say "groovy," "hip" and "let's rap," but, I mean, like, you know, they're no space cadets. I mean like, are they way gnarly, or what?

Fer sure, fer sure.

Hearst Feature Service

A federal judge in Milwaukee ordered a company convicted of illegally selling microwave antennas to pay $476,000 in damages, the largest such award in history.

MWH Enterprises, a small Milwaukee manufacturer and retailer of the antennas, was found guilty of selling them with the knowledge that customers intended to use the devices to steal pay-TV signals.

"It's four times bigger than anybody else has received, and that's just the beginning," said Raymond Conley, general counsel for Movie Systems Inc., the subscription-TV company that filed the suit.

Movie Systems has filed a number of similar suits around the country, and Conley predicted a federal court will award his company more than $1 million in one of those cases early next year.

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for the northern and eastern Plains and New England.

Temperatures expected to reach mid-70s

The lyrics might sound a little off key, but someone may have to begin re-writing some of the old Christmas standards if the National Weather Service forecast holds through the holidays.

According to the NWS predictions, tonight should be fair and mild with the low in the upper-30s and winds from the west-southwest at 10-15 mph. Tuesday should be partly cloudy with the high in the mid-70s and winds southwesterly at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Sunday's high of 58 finished 20 degrees short of the record high 78 set in 1978. The overnight low of 36 was easily warmer than the record low 11 set in 1973.

No precipitation in the last 24 hours leaves monthly and yearly rainfall amounts at 0.79 of an inch and 14.04 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 5:48 p.m.; sunrise Tuesday is at 7:45 a.m.

Fewer Americans will be audited in '83

WASHINGTON (AP) — More Americans next year will have to explain certain deductions on their tax returns, but fewer will go through full-scale audits.

"We will have more contacts with taxpayers but they will be a lot less intrusive than audits," said IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. "More people will hear from us but in a less troublesome way."

Egger said in an interview that the agency is studying ways to have computers better identify items on a tax return that need correction. Once the computer spots something questionable, the return goes to an IRS "classifier," who checks it. If the return doesn't pass that test, the taxpayer will receive written notice to correct the item.

The process is a refinement of the system under which about 2 million tax returns are selected for a full audit each year. However, an audit can require a taxpayer to pull together records and, in a face-to-face session with an IRS examiner, justify every item on a tax return.

IRS used the simpler procedure to some extent this year. Egger cited numerous cases in which IRS denied claims for charitable contributions to religious organizations that turned out to be nothing more than mail-order churches that the agency determined weren't qualified to receive tax-deductible donations.

Egger is bothered by IRS involvement in matters that have nothing to do with collecting taxes, such as helping to find young men for the Selective Service and seizing tax refunds due men who fall behind in child-support payments.

"There is a risk that the tax system would suffer if we were to revisit history...and people were to believe again that there is no such thing as confidentiality of information they supply to government" on their tax returns, Egger said. He apparently referred to abuse of tax returns during the Nixon administration.

Because most people believe their returns are confidential, they are more willing to be open and truthful, he added. If taxpayers get the idea their returns are open to anybody that wants to look, tax collections will suffer, he said.

The commissioner called on Congress to decide once and for all whether employee fringe benefits, such as meals and parking, should be taxed. Congress has blocked IRS from considering such items as taxable before 1984.

"They didn't repeal the law that taxes fringes as income," he said. "We are just prohibited from writing the rules. So what we've got are revenue agents making the rules as they go... without uniformity."

The commissioner said IRS plans a nationwide advertising campaign to notify taxpayers that a toll-free "hot line" telephone will be available again in 1983 to answer questions about filing tax returns.

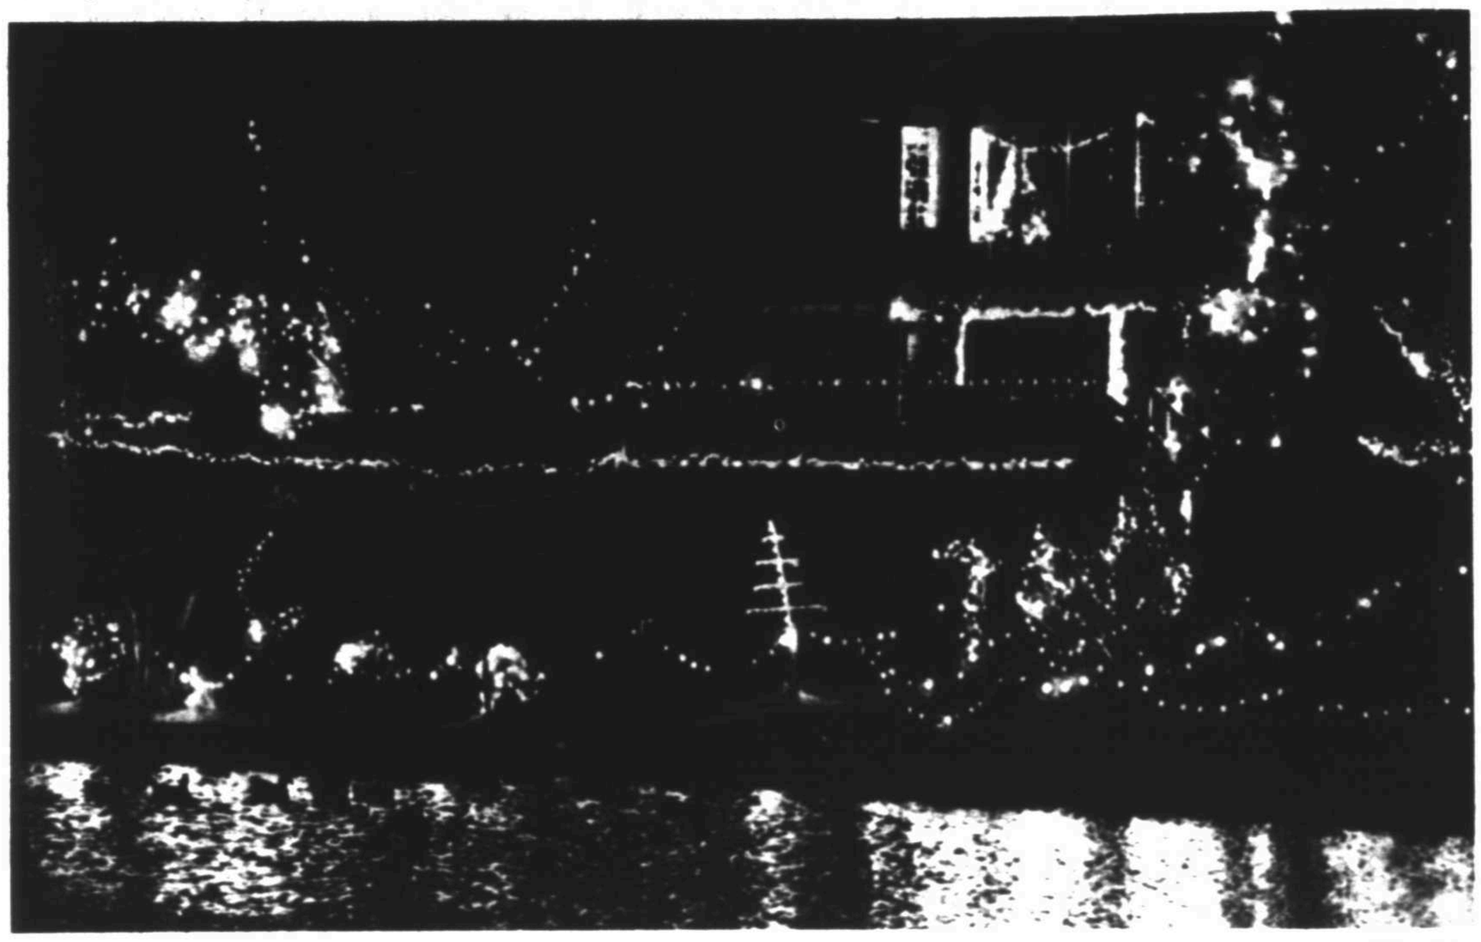

Over Egger's protests, the Reagan administration notified Congress earlier this year that it was sharply restricting the hot line to save about $50 million a year. The toll-free lines would remain but IRS personnel would answer only clerical questions, such as why a refund was delayed. Questions about deductions and income would not be answered.

IRS last year fielded 36 million telephoned questions. Ironically, because of the planned publicity to notify taxpayers that the service still exists, the agency expects more calls than ever in 1983.

Egger, who became chief of the 90,000-employee IRS when President Reagan took office, denied that the income tax system has become so complex that it threatens to fall of its own weight.

"We have an unbelievably complicated tax law," he conceded, but "it isn't so complex that the people can't handle it." Egger said a growing rebellion against government and authority is more responsible for tax cheating than is the complexity of the law.

Spies eavesdrop on FBI communications

WASHINGTON (AP) — Criminals and spies are eavesdropping on FBI radio communications throughout the nation, and the practice is not only legal, but also cheap.

In the past five years, there has been an explosion of eavesdropping on FBI radios all over the nation by organized crime figures, drug traffickers, career criminals, and even the news media and curious citizens.

As a result, fugitives have escaped, citizens have been injured, FBI agents have been threatened, investigations have been thwarted and the lives of agents and citizens have been endangered.

Calling the situation intolerable, the Justice Department asked Congress this month for $12 million to purchase radio systems that encode their transmissions. The department said that the very high frequency FM radio systems that all 59 FBI field offices use to communicate with agents in the street "can now be monitored by anyone in the country willing to pay $300 for an FM radio scanner," and without violating the law.

FBI Director William H. Webster has given the purchase of this equipment top priority in the bureau's multimillion-dollar program to acquire modern technology.

"It's dead serious," said Assistant FBI Director William A. Bayse, head of technical services, in an interview last week. "We're talking about a determined penetration of bureau on all fronts, including identification of personnel and vehicles and listening to the radio transmissions."

A grim joke has emerged from the problem. The FBI's Washington field office radio uses the call sign "KGB-770," because as one agent said, "We know the Soviet KGB is listening to every word."

Examples of serious problems in recent years include:

—In 1979, in a Northeastern city, the victim of an organized crime extortion cooperated with the FBI and arranged to pay the criminals. Agents relayed the payoff location to other agents by radio.

On arriving, the victim was searched and beaten by the criminals. Agents rushed in to save him from serious harm; they found radio scanners set to the FBI frequency.

—In a Midwestern office, agents relayed the address of a fugitive's hideout to radio cars. A malicious citizen listened in, found the telephone number for that address in a city directory, and warned the suspect that the FBI was on the way. Agents arrived minutes after the suspect fled and took another two weeks to apprehend him.

—On July 11, 1979, Colombian nationals engaged in South Florida narcotics wars opened fire with machine guns on a liquor store in a crowded suburban Miami shopping center. Two rival drug traffickers were killed, and two bystanders were wounded. The men have never been caught. Inside their abandoned van, agents found armor-shielded walls, automatic weapons and radio scanners tuned to police and FBI frequencies.

—In a California case still under investigation, a motorcycle gang gained enough information by monitoring FBI transmissions to identify an agent investigating them. They telephoned threats on the agent and his family.

Bureau officials will not divulge examples of monitoring by Soviet or other foreign intelligence agencies, but Bayse said, "You can assume the Soviets are going to use any kind of techniques they can to find out information about any of the intelligence agencies of the United States of which we are one."

The FBI has used radio channels in the very high frequency FM band for more than 20 years. Their transmissions cannot be picked up on normal FM radios, but cheap scanners are sold that can be set to any VHF channel or can automatically scan the VHF band of channels for any transmission.

"Our frequencies have been made public," Bayse said. FBI frequencies are available "in little, off-beat commercial documents" that sell for $5 at electronics stores, he said.

Leo Buss, chairman of the government's Interdepartmental Radio Advisory Committee, which assigns government radio channels, said those frequencies, including some used by law enforcement, were given out to citizens who asked for them, until a little over two months ago when they were classified.

Bayse said agents now use coded language on the radio, even changing the codes daily in sensitive operations, but "in a fast-breaking situation, you don't have time to convert to codes," Bayse said.

gash in the European Gateway's side. The bows of the other ferry were reported badly damaged.

Sea water flooded into the engine room of the European Gateway, snuffing out the ferry's generators and causing the vessel to list sharply.

The European Gateway managed to radio a distress call and the captain gave the order to abandon ship. The spokesman for the vessel's owner said some crewmen were able to launch a few liferafts but that others could not be launched because of the list.

The spokesman said one of the rescue ships, the 5,991-ton Danish cargo ferry Dana Futura, picked up between 30 and 40 survivors.

"There was a big bang and I was thrown on the cabin floor," said Simon Dowers, 23, a seaman on the European Gateway. "The lights went out almost at once, and I grabbed some clothes and went on deck.

"There was no panic. Other boats came along quite quickly and some people jumped into the water. They were all picked up almost at once, but all the time the ship was rolling over on top of us."

Truck driver Ivor Harvey, 39, said: "After the bang I looked out to starboard and I could see a ship going along the side, scraping as it went... Nobody panicked or anything. I even finished my drink and went to my cabin for warm clothes."

"There was just no time to launch the lifeboats and I could see only one liferaft," said survivor George Lawn.

Dutch truck driver Jeop Josee, 45, said: "Somebody told me to get into a lifebelt. But when I went back to my cabin there wasn't one there. I looked everywhere but there was nothing. Then they couldn't get the lifeboats launched. Someone gave me a lifejacket and I managed to get on to a pilot boat."

The British Rail passenger terminal at Harwich, which had been closed for the night before the collision occurred, was reopened to receive survivors before medical crews took them to hospitals in town and in nearby Colchester.

Medical staff said some survivors were seriously injured and many were suffering from exposure to cold. Police said two seriously injured men were transferred to a hospital at Ipswich.

The collision occurred near the estuary mouth of the River Orwell. Harwich, a major port for sailings between Britain and the European continent, is on the southern bank of the estuary.

Daugherty agreed with Haynes' analysis, adding that the damage done to the propeller "suggested a high rpm (revolutions per minute) at impact.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Two women, convinced their children have been skipping school to play video games, want the city to prohibit businesses from letting children play the games during school hours.

Mae Norris and Patty Martin of Pittsburgh said their children were caught playing Donkey Kong and Pac-Man during school hours. That prompted them to circulate petitions in the Homewood-Brushton area supporting enactment of an ordinance.

"The problem has gotten worse. The more games they bring out, the more children will play with them," said Ms. Norris, whose 7-year-old son, Darnell, plays the games "any chance he gets."

She said he learned that the boy was arriving late at Belmar Elementary School because he was stopping to play the games after leaving home.

"You'd be surprised. Some of these children are very good at these games," said Ms. Martin. "All it takes is a quarter and they can be going for hours."

The women said their efforts haven't drawn unanimous favor among city residents. Some have refused to sign the petition because they claim their children know better than to skip school.

truck was reduced to ashes within seconds."

Officials said they had not determined the cause of the initial explosion in the Belgian-made oil tank.

The first tank containing about 80,000 barrels of fuel oil — about half its capacity — exploded around 7 a.m. (6 a.m. EST) and the flames later ignited another tank containing hydrogen gas.

Initial damage was estimated by the company at more than $1 million. Unofficial sources said they believed the damage could be much higher as the company had recently invested about $500 million in equipment at the plant. At $34 a barrel, the cost in lost oil alone could be $3 million.

The explosion and fire cut power to nearby Simon Bolivar International Airport. Vacation-bound travelers wandered about in darkness until the airport's emergency generators started up.

The continuing fire threatened to cut power supplies to this city of 4 million people.

Machado suggested that even Christmas tree lights should be turned off.

"I appeal to everyone to save energy," he said.

However, a quick tour of downtown Caracas Sunday night found the city aglow with Christmas decorations, indicating few people, if any, were heeding Machado's appeal.

Government workers' jobs depend on bill

volunteering their services to the government.

The departments of Commerce, Defense, Education, Energy, Health and Human Services, Interior, Justice, Labor, State and Treasury and a number of other agencies, were affected.

Reagan has signed appropriation bills for the departments of Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, Agriculture departments and related agencies, as well as the Veterans Administration, National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency.

"Essential" government activities continue regardless of whether legislation is enacted. Among the activities considered "essential" are medical care, air traffic control, border and coastal protection, care of prisoners, law enforcement investigations and disaster assistance, according to the OMB memo.

The original House measure contained $5.4 billion for jobs, while the Senate bill earmarked $1.2 billion. Reagan, in a radio interview Saturday, repeated his plan to veto an emergency bill containing such provisions.

"I will have to veto it if it contains these various amounts that have been suggested, because, in truth, these aren't job-creating bills," he said.

It was the third time in 14 months that a budget stalemate threatened to partially close the government. Federal offices were briefly closed in November 1981, when an estimated 400,000 "non-essential" workers were dismissed at midday after Reagan vetoed an emergency money bill.

The bureaucracy had another close call in the spring.

Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — The news that horsemeat is now being sold in New York City is hailed by Frenchman Philippe Gastonnet as vindication of his life and art.

Gastonnet is a Paris horse butcher, as his father was before him. The recent decision by New York's department of health to authorize the sale of horsemeat for human consumption looks, from his vantage point, like a historical demarche on a par with America's discovery of the bidet.

He has no doubt whatsoever that, although the U.S. Demand for horse filet, horseburgers and horsefurters may prove slack initially, they will eventually find a permanent place in the American diet.

As he carefully explained from behind the counter of his boucherie chevaline with its de rigueur bust of a horse's head over the entrance in Paris's Rue Belles Feuilles (street of the beautiful leaves), "Chevaline is tastier and healthier than beef. The horse is a very healthy beast. It is subject to fewer maladies than the bovine and its meat contains fewer dangerous bacilli. Horsemeat should really be regarded as a health and diet food, but one that is good to eat."

What makes the 45-year-old butcher happiest about New York City's epochal gesture is not so much the glorious transatlantic future he foresees for "viande chevaline" as the fact that foreigners may now be forced to drop their disagreeable attitudes toward this particular French gastronic tradition.

Americans, he complains, tend to haughty superiority in his presence. "They wander into my shop and treat me like a circus freak," he said.

On the other hand, English people are invariably outraged. They often track him down for the sheer pleasure of upraiding him for the "barbarity" of his profession.

"It's nonsense," he argues. "The slaughter of horses for food, as long as it is practiced humanely, is no worse than killing cattle or any other animal for that purpose."

Contrary to widespread belief, the French haven't always eaten horse flesh. The practice started less than 150 years ago, deliberately promoted by Emperor Napoleon III as a way to provide the urban poor, who had been spawned by the industrial revolution, with protein they could not otherwise afford.

In the good old days, horsemeat was the cheapest thing you could buy. Now it's more expensive than best quality steak.

As a result, the socio-economic level of Gastonnet's customers, his is one of about 200 horse butcher shops remaining in the Paris area, has altered dramatically over the years.

These days, very few working class people frequent his establishment. Horsemeat has become an acquired taste of the middle and upper classes. It has snob appeal.

By DIANE HUST

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Like, you know, there's a totally awesome way of talking today that, like, you know, shows you're a real rad chick or gnarly guy, and, like, you know, shows you're not a airhead, a Joanie or a space cadet, I mean, gag me with a spoon, fer sure.

(Translation: Young people today have a new slang. Speaking it helps you fit in well socially and shows you are not stupid or anachronistic, which are extremely undesirable qualities.)

Like, you know, this rad way of talking began last year in San Fernando Valley, Calif., is called Valley Girl talk and was made famous by a tubular record by Frank Zappa and his daughter Moon Unit. And, like, you know, it's spread this fall to Oklahoma City, Hoover Middle School and the eighth grade.

And, I mean, like you're faced, you're beige, you're, like, freakin' me out, like totally, if you don't understand me. I mean, like, gag me raw, gross me out the door, fer sure.

(Translation: This slang, called Valley Girl talk, became popular from a good record by rock star Frank Zappa and his daughter Moon Unit. It has spread from San Fernando Valley, Calif., where it began last year, to Oklahoma City, including Hoover Middle School's eighth grade. If you do not understand Valley Girl talk, you have embarrassed yourself, are boring and make me feel weird.)

"It's mostly just words you use by themselves, they're like, you know, sentences by themselves," says Tara Hardin. "So it's hard to use them in sentences to explain what they mean."

Like, Mindi Higbie, is no airhead, no way. She has even figured out, like, where some of these words come from, really.

Like a "Joanie" is named after a character on TV's "Happy Days," a real quaker, real straight.

And, you know, "fer sure" is probably said that way because most Valley Girls wear braces, Mindi thinks.

Like, also, "to the max," which means, like, you know, totally, is from the Latin "maximus," she says.

Like "Grody," you know, means, like barf me out, to the max. But something can be so grody, like, you know, a grody movie, so that it's really royal.

And "I'm sure," like, can mean "I'm not sure" or "I'm really sure." But it's no biggie, she adds. Whatever blows your skirt up, Tara says.

Valley Girl talk is, like, you know, so tubular, so massive, because it has a word for, like, you know, just about any kind of beastie, fer sure.

Like, if Sherri Lewis wants to face you, she can call you a smof (a person who wants everything); a waunch or wanch (a complainer); or a doofus (a person who makes a dumb statement).

And, like, you gross Sherri out to the max when you are thuggen other people (stealing their things) or are totally raggen (in a bad mood), she says.

Like, you know, if you've got only peanut butter between the ears, I mean, like totally, Doug Ramsay says, you're a hoser. I mean, like, take off.

But, like, you know, if Camellia Adamson wants to say something really tubular about you, she can, like, say you're cold-blooded, you're live, you're gnarly, you're rad, you're unreal. She's not going to tell you to bag your face, I'm sure, like, no way.

And, like, Mindi says, all the rad kids talk this way to each other at school, and, like, when they drop a line (phone), and like, when they hang out at a bone-a-rama (big clothing store) and spend some, like, you know, billys (dollars), and, like, sometimes when they talk to adults.

"My mom is starting to pick some of it up from me," Mindi says.

Like, you know, moms and dads may still face themselves and say "groovy," "hip" and "let's rap," but, I mean, like, you know, they're no space cadets. I mean like, are they way gnarly, or what?

Fer sure, fer sure.

Hearst Feature Service

A federal judge in Milwaukee ordered a company convicted of illegally selling microwave antennas to pay $476,000 in damages, the largest such award in history.

MWH Enterprises, a small Milwaukee manufacturer and retailer of the antennas, was found guilty of selling them with the knowledge that customers intended to use the devices to steal pay-TV signals.

"It's four times bigger than anybody else has received, and that's just the beginning," said Raymond Conley, general counsel for Movie Systems Inc., the subscription-TV company that filed the suit.

Movie Systems has filed a number of similar suits around the country, and Conley predicted a federal court will award his company more than $1 million in one of those cases early next year.

Christmas tree sales slow this year

By The Associated Press

It wouldn't be Christmas without a tree. Or would it? Dealers in at least half a dozen major cities say sales of trees are slow this year and they blame uncertainty over the economy.

"It's extremely slow so far," said Bob Butler as he swept sawdust off his lot in the affluent Brentwood area of Los Angeles. It was a weekday morning and there were no customers.

"We're stocking probably 70 percent of normal because we don't know what's going on this year, how the public is going to react," said Butler.

The story was the same in Detroit. "The way times are, you can't expect too much," said George Ikirt, who has been selling trees in the Detroit suburb of Warren for 35 years. Sales this year are off 25 percent.

William Boyd, vice president of merchandising at Frank's Nursery Stores, a high-volume chain in Detroit, also said sales were flat. "After all, when we talk about essentials, the sun will come up tomorrow with or without a tree," Boyd added.

Glen Decker of the Northwest Optimist Club in Oklahoma City said, "We're just about sold out." He said prices have risen slightly since last year, but "the majority of them (customers) don't seem to mind."

Jerry Walker, manager of Apple's Christmas Tree Farm just outside Plymouth, Ind., said: "We're satisfied with how the season's going. You would think that with the economy being bad, that people would end up with a smaller tree, but I don't think it's necessarily so."

Walker's trees are priced by the foot — $2.12 a foot on trees under eight feet, $2.55 a foot on larger trees.

At the Grower's Market in Cambridge, Mass., a six-foot balsam fir goes for about $25 — an increase of about 10 percent from last year. Manager Frederick Ewing said he didn't know how sales would end up. "Call me Dec. 25 and I'll tell you," Ewing said. "This is the kind of business that you can't guess about."

Like Butler in California, several dealers said they were stocking fewer trees — just in case.

The Evergreen Nursery and Garden Center in Pittsburgh ordered 600 trees this year compared to 800 in 1981. "We got stuck with some last year," explained Larry Stocklin, manager and part owner of the nursery.

Stocklin said he had noticed more tree lots. "There are more outlets," he said, "people out of work trying to make some money."

John Buckley of Denver said he had stocked fewer trees and wishes he hadn't. "I figured sales would not be as good, but people are spending the same as last year. We seem to be just the same," he said.

Don McNeil, executive director of the National Christmas Tree Association in Milwaukee, said a check throughout the Midwest last week indicated that "retailers by and large are looking to have a sell-out season." That would mean 30.5 million to 31 million trees sold across the country.

Austrian coffeehouses enjoying revival

VIENNA, Austria (AP) - The city's coffeehouses, home to generations of writers, critics, actors and loafers, are celebrating a renaissance as owners and patrons prepare to mark their 300th anniversary.

After enduring for more than two centuries as a way of life in the capital of the old Austro-Hungarian empire, the institution fell on hard times after World War II, when reconstruction, economic hardship, and later television, thinned the ranks of coffeehouse regulars.

Dozens of cafes were closed, their premises converted to banks and offices.

Experts say they are not quite sure what reversed the trend, but a recent chamber of commerce survey showed that coffeehouses are again riding a wave of popularity, especially among young people.

Of 4,000 persons surveyed, more than 42 percent said they visited a coffeehouse daily. Eighty percent called themselves "regulars," and 20 percent said they go to a coffeehouse two to three times a week.

Ten percent said they visited one of the city's estimated 450 coffeehouses at least once a week. The largest section of regular guests are in the 19- to 25-year-old age group, the survey showed.

Legend has it that Franz Koltschitzky, a courier crossing enemy lines during the second Turkish siege of Vienna in 1683 was the Danube city's first professional coffee brewer.

The popular story goes that he used coffee left behind by Turkish invaders, who were beaten back with the help of Polish troops led by King Jan Sobieski.

A recent government booklet based on historical research gives a different version, pointing out that coffee was familiar to the well-to-do in Vienna decades before Koltschitzky.

The historians say two Armenians, Johannes Diodato and Isaac de Luca, were the first to receive a license to serve coffee to the public, hence the ancestors of the present-day "cafetiers."

Outwardly, little has changed in the old-style coffeehouses still operating here.

Depending on how strong the coffee is and on how much milk and whipped cream is added, some of the varieties served for centuries translate as "Turkish," "capuchin," "extended," or, if it's down to a very mild coffee with milk, "Franciscan."

The waiter, always to be called "Herr Ober," continues to address regular patrons as "doctor" or "professor," irrespective of their profession. He still exchanges every half hour the glass of water served with coffee, according to time-honored unwritten laws.

The billiard tables are still there, as are packs of cards and newspapers. But the coffeehouse is no longer what it used to be, a place teeming with literary and artistic talent.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Tennis star Chris Evert Lloyd, Phil Donahue, Jane Fonda and American elder statesman George Ball were born on this date, as were ventriloquist Paul Winchell and Penn State football coach Joe Paterno. Stop following the crowd and you will find yourself way out in front. The business outlook shows slow but steady improvement. Capitalize on a popular trend. Romance leads you to make some subtle changes in your appearance and lifestyle. Do not let your pride prevent you from asking for some much-needed advice. Your loved ones want to help you succeed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Adventure and personal growth are on your mind. Your co-workers help you complete a project on time. Do not lie down on the job just because Christmas is in the air.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A lucky time for those who are in the service or traveling. Snap decisions will not gain you your objectives. Do not withhold your love from mate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): High year-end profits could lead to a hefty Christmas bonus. Take special precautions with your valuables if traveling. Let loved ones know what is most important to you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep finances straight when doing some last minute shopping with friends. An irritating job situation begins to change. Give your parents the benefit of the doubt.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A former love returns for the holidays with his/her family in tow. Do not start something that you will not be able to finish. Your loyalty may be tested.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get guarantees before you agree to a job transfer. Postpone making major business decisions until after the holidays. A gift costs more than you anticipated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A new alliance helps consolidate your power. Financial success wipes out problems that threatened a marriage. Get together with positive people.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A floundering relationship may be best forgotten. Your suspicions about a loved one are apt to be proved true. Open up to those you care for most.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Parents should not make too many demands on students home from college for the first time. A mystery has your business associates up in the air.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A rejection turns out to be a lucky break. You were right to delay making a decision. Asking too many questions can give the impression that you are unqualified.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A surprise phone call puts you in a wonderful mood. Your apprehension about money is understandable. Refuse to pick up the check at a lunch arranged by someone else.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forget the notion that you must rescue someone everytime he or she gets you into a jam. You are not helping this person and you could be hurting your family's finances.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

©1982 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc

Q.1 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ ♡AJ987 ◇6 ♣K1092
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A. — There is a temptation among many bridge players to support partner immediately, because of the quality of their cards in his suit. Resist it! Your hand is too strong for a single raise and inadequate for a jump, which normally requires four trumps. The solution is a temporizing bid of two clubs — naturally, you intend supporting spades at your next turn, if you have one.

Q.2 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ108763 ◇Q92 ♣J76
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	?

What action do you take?

A. — You have a hand with excellent offensive potential but with little or no defense. This is the perfect opportunity to attempt to stop the opponents from getting together. Jump to three spades — exactly the same bid you would have made as an opening bid but, in view of East's interference, it guarantees a reasonable suit.

Q.3 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J5 ♡95 ◇AQ10952 ♣973
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1 NT	Dble	?

What action do you take?

A. — If you timidly removed to two diamonds, you simply don't grasp the playing potential of your hand. However, a redouble would be too optimistic — the opponents will surely run and partner will expect you to hold more in defensive values than you do. The choice lies between a pass, in the hope that you can pick up a doubled overtrick or two, and a jump to three diamonds to advise partner of your long, strong suit — that might enable him to bid three no trump and so gets our vote.

Q.4 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A ♡AK875 ◇954 ♣10952
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — Partner is telling you that he has six good diamonds and only four clubs. With his distribution and your controls, you might have a slam, but we would like an honor card in one of the minor suits before we make a try. Be content with a raise to five diamonds.

Q.5 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠9873 ♡K8 ◇52 ♣AKQ98
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — You are in slam territory, with no really good way to investigate. If you had an outside ace, you could cue bid it, but alas ... We suggest you jump to five spades — a bid over game tells partner that you have general values and slam interest, with no good bid to make.

Q.6 — East West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q10952 ♡QJ92 ♣J865
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	1 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — Even though your partner could do no more than overcall, your hands should fit well. Jump to four spades. Besides the fact that you might make it, you are disrupting enemy communications.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Silence marks wonders of existence

EDITOR'S NOTE: This first installment of a five-part series about the special qualities of Christmas, silence, humility, brotherhood, knowledge and love, examines the silence and hush of Christmas.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

A whispering, a still small voice, so faint and passing strange.

It seems remote, yet positively near. How puzzling and indistinct. But wait...be still.

"Have you not known? Have you not heard? Has'it not been told you from the beginning?"

Far back, it trembled in the prophet's cry, re-echoing through time. So dimly distant, yet persisting somehow, lingering in the present hour.

A WORLD, strident and distracted, scarcely hears. A restless clangor fills the introverted air, and overwhelms the muted, unseen stirring close at hand.

But is it real? And is it now?

The store aisles swarm. The hawkers shout, and anxious arms clutch at the glinting wares. The lamplights flash; parades go by; the streets are clogged with freight, with horns, with rush and crush and babble.

There's hardly any room at inns in Bethlehem or other towns.

So quiet, so calm that call. It's hard to apprehend amid the ratapian of life, amid the hectic crunch and hammering of steel cities.

Yet someone heard. A peasant Jewish maiden heard, in solitude.

"HAIL, O FAVORED one, the Lord is with you."

In silence and alone, she sensed that gentle utterance, incredulous and wondering. "Do not be afraid, Mary...you will conceive...and bear a son...Jesus...son of the Most High."

Over Christmas hangs that veiled and silver eloquence of silence. Thus it was when it began.

Only Mary, in the secret moorings of her soul, discerned the mystic message. No others heard or witnessed her response. "let it be to me according to your word..." Amazement bound her lips.

She told no one in Nazareth, not even Joseph, her betrothed, confiding later only to Elizabeth, an aging cousin in another town. It's odd, in moments of the greatest feeling, one speaks not at all, or breathlessly. "My soul doth magnify the Lord..."

TROUBLED JOSEPH, too, found reassurance in the deep discovery of a dream. "Joseph, son of David, do not fear to take Mary your wife...that which is conceived in her is the Holy Spirit; she will bear a son...Emanuel...God with us."

How tenuous and delicately spun the keenest understandings. Neither arts nor explanations can define them fully. They are couched in that profound and wordless language of the heart.

This hidden chord, this latent undercurrent, fashions the electric mystery of Christ's arrival. In the velvet stillness of the night, obscure, unknown, the sacred intervention came.

Silence is the corridor of creativity, the way of thought, of deepest love, of germinating seed, of insight and conviction.

It was quiet and sequestered in that stall in Bethlehem, where Joseph and his wife took shelter. It was quiet in the shepherd's field below, and quiet in the starry firmament above.

"Listen...in silence, O coastlands," the olden prophecies implored. "A voice cries in the wilderness... and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed."

Yet who would hear? Humanity-at-large, obsessed with clamorous pursuits, had little mind for fragile voices, for the thin and lonely cry from far frontiers. The jangling age blots out the inward plea.

Few knew or paid the slightest heed. Seldom does a noisy world detect the wonders of the quiet. Only isolated herdsmen of the hills and contemplative Magi were aware. "But Mary kept all these things, pondering them in her heart."

That curious quality of silence marks the greatest workings of existence. Silence is the corridor of creativity, the way of thought, of deepest love, of germinating seed, of insight and conviction.

"Be still," the psalms advise, "and know that I am God."

Time and life itself transcend audibility. And only in the transience of time, in passing acts and instants, do the lasting fruits of silence break into the stream of raucous human history which stores them up — in silence.

Thereby does Christmastime attain its timelessness. Eternity is joined with time. "When the time had fully come," wrote Paul, "God sent forth his son, born of woman..." The riches of the quiet wellspring of infinity were poured into the shrill and finite episode of mortal man.

APTLY, SILENCE clothed the process from the start. The wise men of the East did not divulge what they had found, and traveled home a secret route to guard their hallowed information.

Twice again, the woodsman Joseph realized his duty in the silent murmurings of sleep, warning him to flee to Egypt to protect the child from Herod's sword in Bethlehem, and later, indicating the return to Nazareth.

From his childhood to the age of 30, Jesus' years were wrapped in utmost silence. Nothing is disclosed of them. "His mother kept all these things in her heart."

Later, in his ministry, he often slipped away in solitude for reinforcement. In the golden orb of silence, he drew strength and peace, the elements enfolding his nativity on earth.

The racket of the world, the ringing, roaring, growling, pounding din of engines, instruments and tongues may deafen conscience to the gracious wooing of that silent sphere, but it endures. And falls upon the tranquil ear. Be still to hear, he said to man, and "I will come to him."

Baby Darling dolls growl 'Kill Mommy'

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — More golden-haired, blue-eyed "Baby Darling" dolls that seem to growl "Kill Mommy" at the pull of a string have turned up, this time in North Carolina.

Bobby and Ajzeleen Payne of nearby Rural Hall say they bought one of the dolls for their 7-year-old granddaughter at an auction in the Stokes County community of King a week ago. At least six of the dolls that utter the fiendish cry have been reported in the Gastonia, N.C., area.

Other dolls had been found late last week in South Carolina.

The Paynes' daughter, Susan Young, said she saw a story about the dolls in a newspaper on Sunday. If she hadn't checked the doll, she said, her daughter, Misti, would have received it on Christmas Day.

"It was a pretty little doll and I thought I got a good buy," said Payne, who paid $10 for the toy.

The doll came in a pink-and-white box fastened with blue ribbon and didn't appear to have been tampered with, Payne said.

But when he pulled the pacifier from the doll's mouth, it cried "like it's being beaten" for a few seconds before delivering its death threat, Mrs. Payne said.

"It was like a 'Twilight Zone' show ...," said Mrs. Young.

"I can't believe this. It's such a beautiful little doll. Pretty as can be. There must be some real sick people in this world."

Mrs. Young said her daughter was frightened by its message and said she didn't want the doll.

Payne said at least a dozen of the dolls were sold at the auction in the western part of the state along the Virginia border.

Frank Berkley, owner of a company that has been distributing the doll, denied on Sunday that "Baby Darling" actually says "Kill Mommy."

Berkley, owner of Bits and Pieces store in Gastonia, said the doll's message is "Kim loves mommy." He said each doll contains a switch that slows and deepens its "voice" to save battery power.

"It's a matter of psychology," Berkley said. "They get it in their heads that (the doll) is saying that, and that's what they hear."

Bob Rowland, a spokesman for the South Carolina consumer protection office, said the doll apparently is being sold at auction houses by independent distributors who aren't aware of its message.

AT&T break up could cause temporary confusion

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. breaks itself apart on Jan. 1, 1984, both stockholders and consumers may be confused for awhile.

AT&T filed a 471-page Plan of Reorganization with a federal judge, last week, outlining the steps it will take to comply with an antitrust settlement requiring it to give up its 22 wholly owned Bell System companies.

The settlement, signed last January with the Justice Department, separates local telephone service from long-distance service and requires that AT&T take control of all telephones now leased by the Bell companies to consumers.

Though AT&T will control the telephones, it intends to contract with the local companies for billing and collection for a substantial transition period, perhaps through 1987. In other words, consumers leasing a phone will owe AT&T the rental charge, but continue to get the bill from their local company.

Meanwhile, the plan creates a more complicated situation for the AT&T's 3.2 million stockholders.

AT&T is going to divide the 22 Bell companies among seven regional holding companies. At the time of the breakup, AT&T stockholders will receive one share of stock in each regional company for every 10 shares of AT&T they now hold.

Stockholders will also retain their AT&T stock in the surviving corporation. So a stockholder with 50 shares of AT&T will end up with a total of 85 shares worth roughly the same amount, 50 in AT&T and five in each of the seven holding companies.

Stockholders will be paid in cash for any fractional shares resulting from the 1-for-10 split. AT&T will also operate a special computerized clearinghouse for four-to-six months after the breakup to make it easier for small shareholders, those with fewer than 500 AT&T shares, to realign their stock among the seven companies if they wish to do so.

Each of the new regional companies will be listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Trading will probably begin in November or December of 1983. Stock certificates will not be distributed before February 1984.

AT&T also disclosed:

—The seven regional Bell companies will end up with approximately 75 percent of AT&T's current $140 billion to $150 billion in assets.

—After paying off the fractional shares, each regional company will be left with an estimated 2.7 million shareholders, compared to AT&T's 3.2 million. Thus AT&T and every regional company will still have more stockholders than any other publicly traded company.

—Between 30 percent and 40 percent of the company's 1 million employees will remain with the parent company. AT&T Treasurer Virginia Dwyer said employees will generally "follow their jobs" in determining which company they will work for.

The reorganization plan is open for public comment, and then must be approved by U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene.

The plan does not explain how rates may change for local and long-distance service and equipment. They largely will depend on state and federal regulators and the extent of competition in the long-distance and equipment markets.

The proposal makes it clear the biggest problem confronting consumers will be to figure out where to get service. Bill paying will be fairly simple in the beginning because the Bell companies are expected to handle joint billing for AT&T for equipment leases and long-distance calls.

How AT&T will be divided

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is a list of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s 22 wholly owned Bell System companies and how they will be divided among seven regional holding companies on Jan. 1, 1984:

—The Northeast regional company will become the parent of the New York Telephone Co. and the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co.

—The Mid-Atlantic regional company will include the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co.; the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania; the Diamond State Telephone Co., and the four Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Companies serving Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

—The Southeast regional company will include the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the South Central Bell Telephone Co.

—The Midwest regional company will include the Illinois Bell Telephone Co.; the Indiana Bell Telephone Co.; the Michigan Bell Telephone Co.; the Ohio Bell Telephone Co., and the Wisconsin Telephone Co.

—The Southwest regional company will include only the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

—The Mountains and Great Plains regional company will include the Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co.; the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., and the Pacific Northwest Bell Telephone Co.

—And the Far West regional company will include the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. and Bell of Nevada.

According to AT&T's reorganization plan, the regional companies were established with the goal of making them roughly equal in size.

If the Bell companies had been grouped by region at the end of 1981, all with the exception of the Southeast would have had roughly $16 billion to $17 billion in assets and between 100,000 and 122,000 employees. The Bell companies forming the Southeast region had assets of $21.8 billion and 137,500 employees at the end of 1981.

Hearst Feature Service

SAN LEANDRO, Calif. — Dartmouth Street is a leafy backdrop for the American dream, as envisioned by tract developers of 30 years past.

But it has become an empty dream for David Bienvenito, a new American and new owner of a green three-bedroom home on the street. His house now is empty.

Their neighbors are shocked over what has happened. A scorched juniper bush crawls across the lawn to the base of an acacia tree on Bienvenito's lawn. The interior of the bush has been burned to the blackened ground by a flaming cross.

San Leandro attained a kind of fame in the 1960s as the whitest of white suburbia, 99 and 44/100ths percent. As late as 1971, San Leandro, just south of Oakland, was pilloried as "a kind of racist bastion of white supremacy" in a report by the National Committee Against Racial Discrimination, a distinction shared with three other California communities.

But the barriers had dropped by the 1980 census, when almost 64,000 people were counted in San Leandro: 22 percent were non-white. The minorities included blacks, 1.4 percent; Hispanics, 13 percent; and Asians, 6.7 percent. The Asians included perhaps 300 Filipino families, according to mayor Valance Gill.

One Saturday night, Domingo Tuazon, a Filipino and one of Bienvenito's neighbors, saw Dartmouth Street come alive with fire engines and police cars. He hadn't even met his new neighbor and former countryman, David Bienvenito. "Nobody has ever bothered me," Tuazon said. "Why would they bother him?"

Two years ago, to the dismay of the mayor, someone burned a cross into the front lawn of a home. "KKK" was sprayed on the front door in red paint. The family, which is non-white, had lived in the neighborhood for 10 years without incident.

A few days later, according to Police Lt. Robert Sealey, someone tossed a hammer through the kitchen window of the only black family in another section of San Leandro. A cross burned on the front lawn. The owner, who put out the fire with a garden hose, found a note on her door with an obscene racial message. It was signed "Knights of the Ku Klux Klan."

The Bienvenitos had followed a path that other Filipinos describe as typical. According to this pattern, the family lives with considerable frugality while accumulating enough capital to buy a home.

The dream came true for the Bienvenito family when they purchased the green house on Dartmouth Street in an estate sale. Helped by friends and relatives, they moved their things from San Francisco.

Before they moved, according to Sealey, someone knocked on the door. A small cross of bamboo sticks and newspapers was blazing on the lawn. Police then promised to patrol the street, and the next night, Sealey said an officer saw a white male youth with long hair sprinting away from the Bienvenito home. The runner escaped, and a large cross, fed with some kind of flammable material, was quickly extinguished by a fire truck.

Jerry Manor, a computer engineer who lives next door, was stunned. He comes from rural Wisconsin. To him, Dartmouth Street is a quiet haven.

"When it happened the first night, I couldn't believe it," he said. "When it happened the second night, I was amazed."

But David and Mary Bienvenito didn't care, safety for their two kids came first. The next night, the family moved out. The Bienvenitos will stay with relatives until they can find another home.

"I hope they come back to San Leandro," said the mayor. "If they leave, the wrong people will win."

Cleaning up Midland

It was particularly pleasing late last week to learn of the incorporation of Clean Midland, a nonprofit organization setting out to clean up the Tall City environmentally.

The chosen task is no insignificant one, however. Every community in today's world — like communities of the past — faces the problem of handling effectively its trash and clutter in an aesthetically enhancing manner.

Midland's no exception. In fact, it stands to reason that a city undergoing population growth will face even more environmental challenges than will a static one. Midland has been experiencing rapid growth in recent years and additionally faces challenges from the wind and West Texas sand.

But the newly formed organization plans to attack these problems and others in hopes of making Midland a cleaner, more orderly city in the future which, in turn, will enhance the quality of life here.

The quasi-chamber-city organization intends to bring about a major change in people's attitudes and to alter the way they think and act in regard to environmental pollution. "We're going to try to reach the adults through their children," said Jim Everett, who's serving as chairman of the Clean Midland board this year.

The organization, he says, will attack the city's litter and appearance problems from a number of points and will coordinate citywide cleanups along with other special projects. One committee of the organization will even be involved with enhancing Midland's physical appearance via tree plantings and other projects.

"Our goal in Midland in the first year is to reduce the litter by about 30 percent," said Everett. "We want everyone in Midland who wants a cleaner, prettier town to be a member of our organization." He added that dues in the organization will by nominal but will increase as the change is made from public funding by the city and chamber to private financing.

Clean Midland has a worthwhile goal and deserves the support of every Midlander who wants to see the Tall City become the attractive, litter-free city we all know it can be.

Mugabe's Zimbabwe

A dark cloud that continues to hang over the heads of the people of Zimbabwe is the possibility that Prime Minister Mugabe will turn the country into a one-party state.

Mugabe is, after all, a Marxist. He has never disavowed this political orientation, even though in the interest of his economy he has made friendly gestures toward the West.

The specter of one-party rule was raised again recently by former Prime Minister Ian D. Smith. He favors economic aid for Zimbabweans, but warned in a newspaper interview that "there is the danger of the free world falling into the trap of aiding and abetting the establishment of a one-party Marxist dictatorship in a country that should be part of the free world."

Subsequent events demonstrated that he had struck a raw nerve in the Mugabe government. After Smith's visit to the United States and Britain he was ordered to surrender his passport. Police searched his farm for four hours. They entered his home looking for "subversive" material. At one time a few weeks ago he was arrested and detained for 90 minutes while police raised questions about the legality of a political gathering.

Some will say the former prime minister deserves such treatment, considering the strictness with which he governed the country, then Rhodesia, for years. But does he? The real issue, indeed the larger issue, is the validity of the warning that Zimbabwe may end up as a one-party dictatorship.

Marxist Mugabe is the only one who can answer that question. Until he rejects such a goal, the threat Ian Smith is talking about will continue to darken Zimbabwe's horizon and its hopes for human rights.

Another View:

New approach needed

The only notion worse than fighting unemployment by traditional jobs programs is the notion that the government should have no program at all. Yet these are the choices seemingly favored by liberals and conservatives in Washington today. The probable outcome is all too clear. Claiming to "put America back to work," the political leaders will strike a compromise between bad alternatives.

Instead President Reagan and Congress should come forth this winter with actions that credibly promise to accelerate recovery. And they should start large programs to help prepare the jobless — especially the young — for the new kinds of work that recovery will offer.

Most so-called jobs programs are not a true stimulus and do not address the challenge of work that is obsolete. Indeed, they have little effect on total employment at all. If new work is provided by special taxation, existing work is lost when the money for its wages goes for taxes instead. If some jobs are created by deficit financing, others are wiped out when the Treasury borrows their investment base away. If traditional jobs are saved by keeping out cheap imports, newer jobs are taken from Americans who live by the import trade. And if high inflation is the tactic tried, then everyone pays with deep recession that follows soon after.

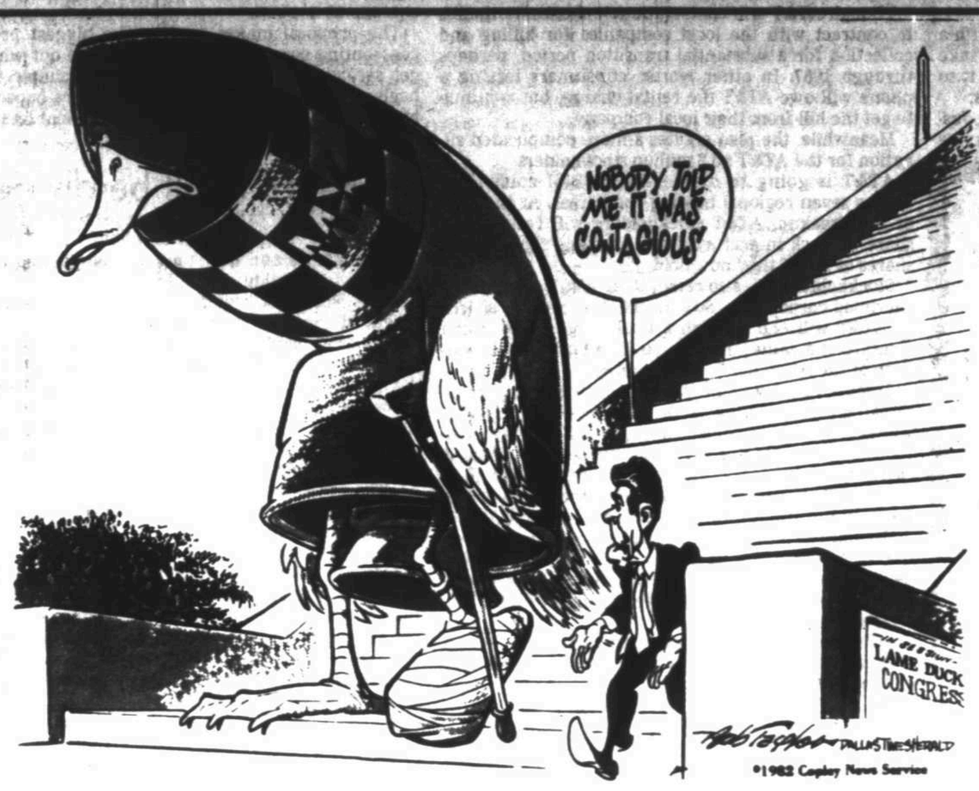

Yet the impotence of these ways to reduce unemployment does not mean the government should just get off people's backs and hope for the best. It has and should welcome a more creative role.

One imperative positive action to stimulate jobs is to cut back sharply on gargantuan federal deficits. The deficits ahead are a strong depressant on economic growth — that is to say, on jobs. The depressant will be removed if Mr. Reagan and Congress reduce the demands of national defense and of payments for Americans who are not poor. Tight fiscal discipline now would boost the confidence needed if consumers are to spend and businesses expand. It would truly stimulate new jobs.

Many of those jobs will be in unfamiliar places and new occupations. As old industries shrink and different work emerges, people deserve help to take advantage of the change. Otherwise, many will be hurt and pressures will increase to prevent the change from happening. This winter Mr. Reagan and Congress should forge a major program to support retraining workers whose jobs are gone, to ease the entry of young people into work, to help people move to where business is brisk, to help new business start where people are plentiful. Companies, unions, communities and individuals will meet these challenges better if the national government takes a vigorous lead.

Twelve million Americans are looking for work. Like high inflation, high unemployment will be difficult to bring down. But better tools are available than to try what won't work or to give the appearance of not trying at all.

CHARLEY REESE

Be selective consumer of news

If the press is going to sin against you, it will rarely do so by telling you an outright lie. The so-called respectable press leaves that to the supermarket gossip sheets. The respectable press is more clever.

Charley Reese

The real power of the press is the power of selectivity and emphasis. A news organization which has integrity will use that power judiciously, always seeking to present a balanced picture of events. A news organization with no integrity will use that power to make ideological or political points.

Even reporters, who are not supposed to inject opinion into news, can manipulate you by selective reporting. For example, CBS radio news reported that five doctors testified at a hearing on an anti-abortion matter, four in favor and one against. Then CBS quoted the one who was against it.

The report was accurate; but subtle slanting was at work, for the listener heard only the fifth witness ridiculing the legislation. He was denied the names and the messages of the four who were in favor of it. A balanced report would have included a pro as well as the con.

Another way reporters have of injecting opinions into stories is to quote anonymous sources. This is a despicable practice. The only excuse for granting a person anonymity is when he provides you with factual information about wrong-doing and would be punished by the wrong-doer if his identity were known.

There is no excuse whatsoever to give a politician or a bureaucrat a free shot at criticizing a policy or a person under the cloak of anonymity. If he has a conviction about a matter, he ought to be manly enough to state it publicly and stand by it. The Washington press corps is notorious for abusing the use of anonymous sources.

Another misuse of selective judgment is the practice by the press of presenting events out of proportion. NBC News recently started a "news story" with the statement that an execution in Texas had set off a new wave of controversy over the death penalty. They showed pictures of what looked like about 50 or 60 demonstrators. They interviewed a man who is a professional campaigner against the death penalty.

The fact is that there are 237,000,000 people in the United States, and 50 or 60 demonstrators is insignificant and does not by any stretch of common sense or reasonable judgment constitute a new wave of controversy over the death penalty. But, by focusing national attention on the actions and words of a minority, you can sometimes create a national controversy where, in fact, none really existed. This is precisely how the Vietnam anti-war movement was created. It was the cooperative project of a minority of dissenters and the national news media.

If you would like to become a more sophisticated consumer of news, I highly recommend joinging Accuracy in Media, 1341 G Street, N.W., Washington, D.C., 20005. For $15 you get a twice-monthly report on the misbehavior of the national news media. Ben Bradlee, executive editor of the Washington Post, hates AIM. That is an excellent recommendation.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Taxpayers almost funded terrorist training

WASHINGTON — The taxpayers came close to funding a terrorist-training camp in Virginia five years ago. They were spared the expense only because the ex-CIA agent who planned the stunt wasn't getting along with his wife.

Jack Anderson

This is just one of the startling revelations that turned up during an exhaustive closed-door investigation of renegade ex-CIA agent Edwin Wilson by the House Intelligence Committee. Wilson has just been convicted of illegally supplying weapons to agents of Libyan dictator Muammar Qaddafi.

Investigators for the House committee interviewed more than 100 witnesses. All of them were assured anonymity and warned not to speak to the press.

The committee's staff director, Thomas Latimer, seemed especially determined to keep my associate Dale Van Atta from finding out what the witnesses were telling the committee. Van Atta has been investigating the Wilson episode for more than two years.

To one witness, Latimer said: "I'll tell you our experience with (Van Atta), and I have never talked with (him), but people in the press will call up and they will lie to you and they will say, well, I know you are doing such-and-such and I know somebody you can talk to, and they are just fishing ..."

On one of his recent "fishing" expeditions, Van Atta hooked the committee's secret transcripts, from which the above quotes were taken. The transcripts are replete with allegations against Wilson which have never before been disclosed.

Wilson has been charged with supplying and helping to run a school for terrorists in Libya. According to federal investigators, the "supplies" provided to Qaddafi included explosives concealed in common household items like ashtrays. Such terrorist organizations as Italy's Red Brigade, the Irish Republican Army, Japan's Red Army and radical Palestinian groups are also believed to have enjoyed access to Wilson's "materials."

According to the intelligence-committee transcript, Wilson almost got the Justice Department's now-defunct Law Enforcement Assistance Administration to put up the seed money for training terrorists at his 3,000-acre, $5-million farm in Virginia's posh horse country.

Although the LEAA was set up to provide federal grants for improving law-enforcement work in this country, one witness told the committee that Wilson's idea was "to have people trained here (in America) and then shipped to Libya."

Late in the spring of 1977, Wilson decided to pitch the idea to the LEAA as a counter-intelligence/scounter-terrorism project. He began recruiting experienced law-enforcement officers and CIA operatives to instruct trainees. He then prepared an LEAA grant proposal which emulated a political violence and anti-terrorism course offered at the time by the California Specialized Training Institute at San Luis Obispo.

Wilson planned to build barracks and install firing ranges at his sprawling Virginia farm and rim the perimeter with miles of security fencing. As a cover for the real nature of the proposed operation, he described it as a security-training course for ARAMCO personnel. ARAMCO, a consortium of American companies working in Saudi Arabian oilfields, apparently was never aware of the ploy.

Wilson's training camp would cost money — perhaps as much as $20 million. But he was sure he could get at least part of it from Uncle Sam. One witness told the committee that Wilson "had his own people over there at LEAA."

Wilson met with his chief LEAA contact in mid-June 1977, according to a committee witness who participated in the session. The witness said Wilson asked for a grant of at least $850,000, and the LEAA official "assured both of us that he would walk it through; he would make sure that it goes through."

This witness said the negotiations reached a "very advanced stage" and that he "never did find out why it fell through."

The scheme collapsed when Wilson and his wife had a falling-out and he decided to drop his plan to locate the training camp at his home in Virginia, knowledgable sources told my associates Van Atta and Indy Badhwar.

When an active-duty CIA agent was able to recruit Green Berets in Fayetteville, N.C., to fly to Libya to do the training there, Wilson opened his school in Tripoli. His wife stayed home on the farm.

Footnote: Through his attorney, Wilson denied having attempted to set up a terrorist-training camp.

BORCHERDT BACKHAND: While serving as the White House liaison with women last summer, Wendy Borcherdt secretly helped to ax a meeting designed to patch up some of the differences between President Reagan and his female critics. The crucial blow came in the form of a memo that Borcherdt, now a controversial nominee as deputy under secretary of education, sent to presidential adviser Elizabeth Dole on June 18.

Republican National Committee co-chairman Betty Heitman had advised the president to meet with the leaders of women's groups to defuse animosity over Reagan's record on women's rights, but Borcherdt undercut her in the memo to Mrs. Dole.

"At least 70 percent of the women's organizations suggested by Betty Heitman are not only upset over the ERA position of this Administration," Borcherdt wrote, "but would use the meeting to unload their distress, their dissatisfaction, and their disapproval of what we are trying to do. I am totally opposed to having any meeting here at the White House with these groups with the President."

Allowing angry women's groups to vent their spleen was exactly what Heitman felt was politically wise, but Borcherdt and other arch-conservatives prevailed.

Mrs. Dole later dismissed Borcherdt, but the president then nominated her for the education post. When hearings on the nomination began several days ago, conservative senators, led by Borcherdt fan Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., blocked at least six women's groups from testifying against the nomination. "In the 22 years I've been here," said Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., "we've never done that."

INSIDE REPORT:

Pentagon's MX secrecy doomed densepack

WASHINGTON — Pro-defense Republican congressmen are furious that Secretary Caspar Weinberger or any other Defense Department official revealed the embarrassing split in the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) over the MX missile until just before the House voted on the new weapons system.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Reps. Jack Edwards of Alabama, senior Republican on the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, and Richard Cheney of Wyoming, chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, are complaining bitterly, but privately. They claim that the densepack basing mode for the MX was automatically knocked dead by belated disclosure from Gen. John Vessey, chairman of JCS, that three of the five chiefs opposed it.

If Weinberger or Vessey had revealed the chiefs' split months ago when densepack first came to Reagan's attention, the disagreement could have been played down by fancy language. As it is now, densepack seems beyond salvation.

KING DOLE'S BLOOPER

Sen. Robert Dole has been the uncrowned king of the Senate since his spectacular sponsorship of the $100-billion tax increase last summer, but his royalty became frayed last Thursday afternoon when he inadvertently prolonged the life of the lame-duck session and endangered President Reagan's nickel-a-gallon gasoline tax."

Dole tried to impose cloture on the conservative Republican filibuster against the tax in such a way that it also would suffocate a liberal Democratic amendment for extra unemployment benefits. Senate minority leader Robert Byrd warned that Democrats would not vote for cloture under those circumstances.

Dole called Byrd's bluff — and lost. Democrats voted against cloture, delaying another effort to end the filibuster until Saturday. Dole's new reputation as Senate strongman declined perceptibly.

MOSCOW MISSION FIZZLES

An unpublicized mission to Moscow Dec. 6 by Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker to seek resolution of the festering crisis in southern Africa got absolutely nowhere.

"They agreed to disagree about Angola," a high-level government source said of the secret diplomacy by Crocker, who heads the State Department's African Affairs bureau. The Reagan administration has refused to press for removal of South African rule over Namibia until Cuban troops leave Marxist Angola, where they are fighting anti-Communist guerrillas.

Although Crocker's mission fizzled, the mere attempt to draw the Soviet Union into African negotiations raised eyebrows in Washington. It has been U.S. policy under President Reagan to keep the Soviets out of regional talks generally, especially in the Mideast.

PAMPERING PERCY

President Reagan's political aides are advising him not to stop by a fund-raising dinner in Chicago Jan. 19 for Rep. Tom Corcoran, who may challenge Sen. Charles H. Percy for the Republican senatorial nomination, on his way to Percy's dinner there that night.

Since Reagan usually follows such advice, Illinois conservatives will be most unhappy. They see Corcoran as a Reaganite equipped to purge the liberal-leaning Percy.

Reagan's political aides were peeved that they were not consulted by chief of staff James Baker when he accepted Percy's invitation for the president to address his fund-raiser. But since that cannot be changed, they feel acceptance of Corcoran's request to drop by his competing event would be a slap in the face to the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Dec. 20, the 354th day of 1982. There are 11 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 20, 1922, 14 republics of Russia joined to form the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

On this date:

In 1803, a flag-raising ceremony in New Orleans marked the official transfer of the Louisiana Territory from France to the United States.

In 1860, South Carolina became the first state to secede from the Union.

In 1973, Spanish Premier Luis Carrero Blanco was killed when assassins bombed his car in Madrid.

Ten years ago: On one of the bloodiest days of the conflict in Northern Ireland, gunmen killed eight people and wounded five others.

Five years ago: It was disclosed that former U.S. Budget Director Bert Lance had agreed to sell his stock in the National Bank of Georgia to a Saudi Arabian businessman.

One year ago: In the wake of the U.S. suspension of a strategic cooperation pact due to Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin accused the Reagan Administration of treating his country like a "vassal state."

Thought for today: "What on earth would man do with himself if something did not stand in his way?" — H.G. Wells, English writer-historian (1866-1946).

Jagger says things wonderful with Hall

Mick Jagger

LONDON (AP) — Rolling Stone leader Mick Jagger flew to Barbados with model Jerry Hall, both insisting that press speculation about a rupture in their romance was nonsense.

"That was nothing, just a press story," Miss Hall said Sunday of the stories that she had left the rock singer in favor of a casino magnate. Jagger and Miss Hall were reunited in Paris last month.

"Mick and I are together and that's all that matters," she told reporters at London's Heathrow Airport.

Germaine Greer

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Author Germaine Greer ended her three-year teaching stint at Tulsa University with an auction, serving guests hot cider, mince pies and tart comments about the school's English department.

Calling the university's administration the "Napoleons of the Prairies," Ms. Greer said she quit as director of the women's literature program because "they were nickel-and-diming us to death."

Fifty people gathered and paid $1,500 for items ranging from a measuring spoon and a bedspread to a copper weather vane and artworks. The sale was to benefit a friend who needs a used car, she said.

The noted feminist said she was disappointed the school would not give her program the recognition it needed.

A chief irritant, she said, was the university's refusal to award scholarships for the study of works written before 1800. Her program concentrated on women writers of the 17th and 18th centuries, a period she felt was poorly known.

The chairman of the university's English department, Gordon Taylor, said the school's graduate program has long had a policy of focusing on modern letters.

Jessica Lange

NEW YORK (AP) — Jessica Lange, the former model who debuted on screen opposite the big ape in the 1976 remake of "King Kong," says she's fulfilling a long ambition in her film portrayal of 1930s actress Frances Farmer.

Miss Lange says she was working as a barmaid in 1974 when she read the tragedy-scarred autobiography of Miss Farmer, the subject of the new movie "Frances."

"Somehow I knew I'd play her one day, and that was before I'd ever made a film," Miss Lange says in the Dec. 27 issue of People magazine.

Miss Lange, 33, said she was so tired after filming "Frances," she almost refused a role opposite Dustin Hoffman in another current movie, "Tootsie."

"I almost said 'no' to 'Tootsie' because I just couldn't imagine having the energy after 'Frances,'" she said. "I still don't feel I've honestly recovered from 'Frances.' What's on-screen is only one-thousandth of what I actually expended."

Miniature wonderland combination of imagination, memory

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Every Christmas for the past 63 years, Charles Bowdish has been creating a miniature wonderland — an old-timer's gift to the young and the young-at-heart.

In 1919, Bowdish built an electric train and a hand-crafted miniature village around a festive tree for his brother's Christmas day wedding. He's been making it bigger and better ever since.

"We've always had a big Christmas, and I just went kind of hog wild that year," said Bowdish.

He estimates that 400,000 people filed through his home in Brookfield to see his miniature creations before the annual display was moved in 1948 to the Buhl Science Center in Pittsburgh, where more than 3 million people have seen it.

For Bowdish, 83, the fantasy villages replaced the life he and his family lived as members of a musical troupe that traveled the country performing in canvas theaters until 1917.

The scenes he creates combine imagination and memory, Bowdish said. "Some are historical, the story of this country," and all are built to scale, he said.

Each of the 1,000 lead and plastic figures, 25,000 trees and shrubs, six Lionel trains, three boats and 54 animations is constructed for the young-at-heart.

Viewed from an adult's vantage point from above, the bears in their den are invisible, as is the mother, crying babe in arms, who endlessly paces a floor. A man rocking in his hammock eludes many adults, as does the coal worker feeding a beehive coke oven.

But a child's-eye view reveals all that, and birds in trees, deer under a dramatic train trestle and anglers snapping their wrists to cast fishing lines.

As children of all ages form a constant line around the village, a technician shifts the scene from daylight to night. Electric lights come on everywhere.

The village, 10-by-76 feet, is designed to demonstrate how people lived, worked and played at the start of the century.

Realism reigns. There is a dilapidated home. A flock of messy pigeons congregates outside a barn. A pipe releases polluted water from a coal mine into the stream.

There are logging camps, mills, nurseries and an abandoned farm.

There are swings, cotton candy, a baseball diamond and a tree house.

The local hotel is called The Way Inn. In a back yard, there's a tire swing.

In the town center is the No Hope Volunteer Fire Co., and the Miracle Machine Co., whose slogan, "If it works, it's a miracle," hangs out front. A fence is constructed matchstick by matchstick.

The village "is frankly a nostalgic visit to the past," says Carl F. Wapiennik, a physicist at the science center who helps run the display for Bowdish. "We feel there is a place for sentiment in today's hectic world."

Preparations for the village begin in June. Bowdish builds 12 new structures this year; the others come from his collection.

Until this year, Bowdish slept on a cot at the science center while the village was being built, just to be sure everything was right.

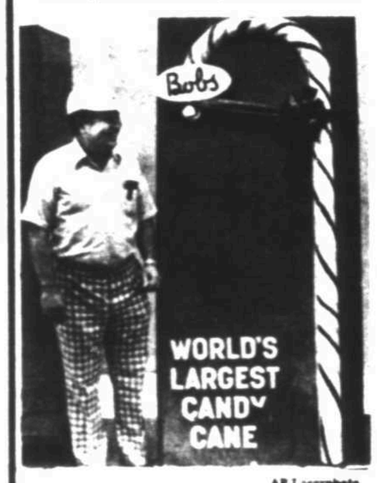

"Now I'm just a straw boss," he said.

Largest candy cane maker produces 1.5 million canes daily

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — While most people are getting ready for Christmas 1982, Bob McCormack Jr. and his family are gearing up for Christmas '83.

The McCormacks have to gear up ahead of time to keep pace with demand at their family business, Bobs Candies Inc., which claims to be the world's largest maker of candy canes.

Twenty-two million pounds of Bobs candy canes have been shipped to stores in all 50 states for this year's holiday season. Now the factory is churning out canes for next year.

AP Laserphoto

Bob McCormack Jr. is shown at the family business in Albany, Ga., Bobs Candies, the world's largest manufacturer of candy canes. The company has shipped 22 million pounds of canes to stores in all 50 states for the holidays.

"Unlike most businesses, we really have only one season, Christmas," said McCormack, the company's president and namesake of its founder. "But the factory stays at full production all year long."

Because candy canes are a simple blend of sugar, corn syrup, peppermint oil and food coloring, with less than 1 percent moisture, they store easily, McCormack explained.

The warehouse is filled from November to September, when the company begins shipping for Christmas, he said, noting, "From September until Thanksgiving is our busiest time of year."

Bobs Candies, which also makes other kinds of candies, does not disclose its sales figures.

But to back its claim to the title of the largest manufacturer of candy canes, the company says its average daily production is 69,207 pounds, or 1.5 million candy canes, and its total yearly production is 16.3 million pounds, or 354 million candy canes.

Since the company began making candy canes in 1919, Bobs Candies has sold more than 6 billion of the red- and white-striped treats, McCormack says.

But it wasn't until the mid-1940s that the company gained an advantage on its competitors through the inventiveness of McCormack's uncle, a Roman Catholic priest. When he wasn't tending to his priestly duties in Arkansas and later in Alabama, the Rev. Gregory Keller tinkered with machinery.

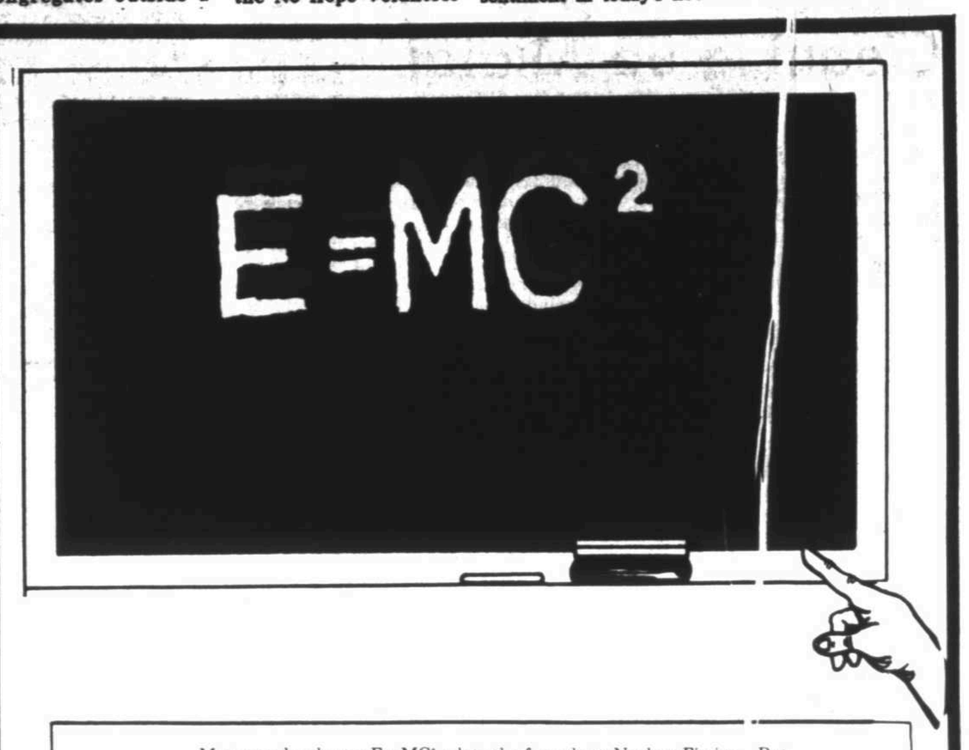

One of his first inventions was a machine Bobs Candies used in the 1940s to produce peanut butter and cracker sandwiches.

Then, seeing the laborious candy cane-making process and its uneven results, Keller invented a machine that stretched, twisted, cut and bent candy canes automatically and turned out uniformly striped ones every time.

The machine, which Keller patented, revolutionized the process and established Bobs as the industry leader.

Evidence indicates AIDS may be transmitted from mother to fetus

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Evidence is growing that the mysterious, often fatal Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome may be transmitted from a mother to her developing fetus.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control reported on the cases of 24 young children or infants who may have contracted the syndrome, known as AIDS, which has killed 312 of its 627 reported victims.

Ten of the 24 children died of infections often seen in AIDS victims, such as Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia and cytomegalovirus, and 12 are reported to have malfunctioning immune systems but have not yet developed the "opportunistic infections" that kill many AIDS victims once their immune systems have been compromised.

Federal investigators, and others studying the fast-growing AIDS epidemic, stress the difficulty of diagnosing AIDS in children because of the existence of known childhood syndromes that cause immunosuppression, a failure of the body's immune system to ward off infection. The CDC report, however, points out that the cases of the 24 children much more closely resemble those of AIDS patients than they do those other syndromes.

Dr. Harold Jaffe, assistant director of the Atlanta-based CDC AIDS Task Force, said that researchers were unable to produce a statistically valid picture of the normal occurrence of immunosupression in children because such problems are not normally reported to public health officials. But he said: "The people who are seeing this, including pediatric immunologists, think that it's extremely unusual."

The existence of AIDS in children would probably be confirmed by a continuing increase in reports of AIDS-like disease in children. That would rule out the other, extremely rare immunosuppressive syndromes.

So far, groups in whom AIDS has been confirmed include male homosexuals, Haitian immigrants, injectors of illicit drugs, hemophiliacs and, in three cases, persons who received blood transfusions. If some children, too, have contracted AIDS, Jaffe said, "it tells us two things: One, it expands the known risk groups, and two, it would point to an infectious agent that might be transmitted from mother to child."

Health officials have reported that they have information on the mothers of nine of the 12 children reported to be immunosuppressed but not victims of infections. Seven of those women inject themselves with illicit drugs, according to the CDC report. Despite the ever-increasing number of AIDS cases, investigators say they are no closer to identifying a cause of the epidemic than they were when the syndrome made its first appearance less than four years ago.

"With most other diseases," Jaffe said, "the more you learn about it the less you're scared about it. With this disease, the more I learn, the more scared I am."

Duke University researchers study exercise effects on heart

By The Associated Press

Duke University researchers are using mice and men in experiments aimed at determining why some hearts become diseased, and why exercise seems to keep others healthy.

"Fifty percent of all deaths in the U.S. every year are caused by heart disease," said Dr. R. Sanders Williams, chief of research in preventive cardiology at Duke. "We know exercise has some preventive effect, but we don't know exactly why. If we can find out, we might be able to design better exercise programs."

In one experiment, scientists led by Williams observe laboratory rats performing such exercises as running on a treadmill and swimming. Other rats get no exercise, but "sit around in their cages and get fat."

After their daily "workouts," the rats are tested to see how their systems have changed in comparison to their slothful counterparts.

Scientists check such things as blood pressure and cholesterol levels in the blood, Williams said. From their study, the scientists hope to draw conclusions about the effects of exercise that can help people ward off heart disease.

"We're trying to understand the effects of habitual exercise at the biochemical level," Williams said. "It's a complicated process, as if we were building the Empire State Building one brick at a time and were on the 14th floor now. We have a long way to go."

Plastic surgery doesn't refer to materials used

Dear Dr. Solomon: Exactly what is plastic surgery? Does it have anything to do with plastic materials doctors use? — Ms. H.R., Newark

Dear Mrs. R.: Plastic surgery is a specialty of medicine that seeks to heal and restore patients with injury, disfigurement or scarring resulting from accidents, disease or birth defects. It includes aesthetic or cosmetic surgery to correct or recontour facial and bodily features not pleasing the patient. The word plastic, from the Greek, means molding, or giving form and does not refer to the synthetic plastic materials which are sometimes used. Plastic surgery is not limited to skin grafting, although plastic surgeons may use skin grafts in some cases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If exercise is so good for a person, why do so many people have to go to doctors because they hurt themselves while exercising? — Jack, Detroit

Dear Jack: Exercise is an important part of any program designed to promote overall good health. That does not mean it has to be strenuous; rather it should be in keeping with the individual's age and general physical condition.

Some of the injuries to which you refer are not inherent in the exercise but in the person's approach to it. For example, in my book "Stop Smoking, Lose Weight," I emphasize the importance of warming up before exercising. A person who starts running without doing some stretching exercises is taking a chance on pulling a muscle or suffering some other injury. Others start out running as if they intend to complete a marathon instead of gradually increasing the distance.

It is this attitude that often results in injury, not the exercise itself.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Two of my relatives have hearing problems. I don't know what the reason is or if it was inherited, but I'm pregnant now and I'm a little worried about whether it runs in the family. How long does it take before you can tell if a baby's hearing is normal? Do you have to wait until the baby can speak? — Blanche, New York City

Dear Blanche: According to Dr. Blair Simmons, of Stanford University Hospital, it is possible to tell if a baby has a hearing problem within 24 hours after birth. Dr. Simmons and his colleagues have developed a computer-operated piece of equipment that records the baby's motion and breathing patterns in response to a tone that is sounded intermittently. These patterns are then compared with the infant's normal motion and respiratory patterns with the aid of the computer.

The early detection of hearing loss is important. If the impairment is caught before six months or age, the infant has the best opportunity of developing normal speech.

The unit developed by Dr. Simmons is being used to test infants considered to be at risk of impaired hearing. It is not designed to be used by all infants. The possibility of a hearing deficiency in the general population of newborn babies is about one in a thousand.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Donations have increased this holiday season

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are giving more to charitable organizations this holiday season than they have in previous years, but the groups say donations still do not meet the soaring number of requests for help.

And there is "a different kind of person" asking for help this year, say charity spokesmen who are being tapped for assistance from people who in previous years were donors.

"In terms of contributions, we're up 12 percent over last year," said Keith Jones, spokesman for the Salvation Army in the Washington area. "But requests for our Christmas services such as groceries, gifts to shut-ins and toys for children in poor families are up in excess of 20 percent."

Jones said the demand for emergency financial assistance for such items as food, medicine, clothing and fuel is up close to 30 percent over last year.

Lt. Col. Ernest Miller, national spokesman for the Salvation Army, said this year the organization has received many letters from regular donors saying they are now in financial distress.

"SO MANY of those who had been our donors now find themselves unemployed," Miller said. "Suddenly they are finding themselves in the embarrassing position of having to ask for help."

Miller said many of those asking for assistance are unaccustomed to charity.

"These are people who are not eligible for public assistance because they own their own home," said Miller. "We had a letter from a man in suburban Detroit who has helped us in the past who is now selling his furniture piece-by-piece to put food on his table."

Miller, who has worked for the Salvation Army for 48 years, said donations are greatest in areas most in need of assistance, like Detroit, where contributions are running about 10 percent higher than last year.

"There is an acute awareness of need that is more intense than any time in my memory," he said.

Congress heard testimony last week on the plight of 2 million homeless and jobless Americans who could freeze or starve this winter unless helped.

"THE HOMELESS population is growing astronomically and changing radically," Mary Ellen Hombs of the capital's Community for Creative Non-Violence said before the House subcommittee on housing. "Unemployment, Reaganomics and the economy have combined to drive hundreds of thousands of middle-class people into utter and absolute destitution."

At the United Way of America, one of the nation's largest fund-raising organizations for health and welfare agencies, contributions are up about 6 percent over last year, said spokesman Stephen Delfin.

He said this year the organization expects an increase of $100 million in donations over $1.66 billion raised last year.

"People give more in hard times if they're working because they like to help people in a worse state than they are," Delfin said. "But giving would have to increase 100 percent in one year to cover the new needs."

Delfin said a recent survey of hotlines operated by United Way in 15 major cities showed there has been a sharp increase in requests for such basic services as food, shelter, job training and family counseling.

In Compton, Calif., the Compton Welfare Rights Organization reports between 600 and 700 applications for Christmas aid, compared to 150 applications last year.

"DONATIONS ARE up but it doesn't fulfill the need," said Phyllis Drierson, director of the program which gives food, clothes and toys during the holidays to those who are unemployed or underemployed.

"City employees and fire departments, people who are working, know how bad it is this year and donated 500 baskets of food," she said. "Last year they gave 300."

In Detroit, a civil rights organization called Focus Hope reports contributions to its assistance programs are 20 percent higher this holiday season than last year.

"People who would have given $10 are giving $15 or $25," said Eleanor Josaitis, who helped found the organization 15 years ago.

She said that last month, Focus Hope fed 1,600 elderly people and that there are now 9,000 to 10,000 on a waiting list.

She said the organization is helping 200 families in its adopt-a-family program but has 5,000 to 6,000 families that have asked for help.

SHE SAID that in one case, a suburban Detroit post office adopted eight to 10 families for the holidays and will provide them with food, clothes and a toy for each child.

Ms. Josaitis said that its feeding program for mothers, infants and children fed 49,704 last month, compared to 31,000 at the same time last year.

The Community Christmas Bureau in Cleveland reports that more companies in the local area have offered holiday assistance to needy families.

"We have 75 families being helped by companies now, about a third more than last year," said Carolyn Miller, co-director of the program. She added, however, that there are between 2,000 and 3,000 more families than last year who have been referred to the program for assistance.

Government workers may be unemployed

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than half a million federal employees were ordered to work today while the possibility lingered that they would be sent home early.

Their jobs depended on passage of an emergency spending bill which had been worked out by a Senate-House conference committee Sunday night, almost two full days after the government officially ran out of operating money.

Avoiding a partial shutdown was considered so urgent that the committee began hammering out a compromise, even before the Senate officially approved its version of the catch-all spending bill.

But by the time negotiators approved the compromise late Sunday night, the Senate and House had already recessed for the day, meaning the measure could not be approved by both chambers and sent to President Reagan until at least this afternoon.

Congressional leaders predicted both chambers would approve the bill, which they had stripped of a jobs-creating provision because of the threat of a presidential veto.

White House spokesman Peter Roussel said late Sunday night that Reagan would "wait and see what the bill looks like" when it reaches his desk before deciding whether to sign it.

Although Reagan was likely to be pleased on the jobs issue, negotiators also removed the spending bill of $988 million Reagan wanted for production of the MX missile and they banned spending of $2.5 billion for MX research and development until Congress approves a deployment system for the nuclear weapon.

A memo from the Office of Management and Budget to agency heads last week advised all employees to report to work regardless of weekend congressional developments.

"A judgment will be made (this) morning as to whether there's a reasonable prospect of a (spending) resolution being passed and signed during the course of the day," said Edwin Dale, an aide to budget director David Stockman.

If it looks like the measure will be enacted, the memo said, non-essential workers will stay in their offices and perform "shutdown activities." If not, those workers will be sent home, likely at midday, officials said. They would stay off the job until a measure is approved.

To the rescue

A rescue worker carries a woman injured in the explosion of two fuel tanks at a power station Sunday near Caracas, Venezuela. At least 32 people were killed and hundreds were injured when two tanks containing more than 300 barrels of fuel and hydrogen exploded.

Power-plant blaze kills 32 people

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — More than 1,000 firemen and police battled a runaway blaze today in the fuel storage yards of a power plant where exploding oil and gas tanks killed at least 32 people.

Unconfirmed reports said 50 people were missing and as many as 300 injured in one of Venezuela's worst disasters.

The inferno raced across a half-mile of ground Sunday at the oil and gas storage tank farm of the Tacoa-Arrecifes plant, 20 miles east of this capital.

"Intense heat trapped about 30 firemen, volunteers and Civil Defense workers who were fighting the fire. From what I saw, I do not think anyone survived," said Caracas Electricity Co. President Oscar Machado, who also was burned by the blaze. His company operates the plant.

Machado said a tank containing 20,000 barrels of oil was endangered by the flames raging out of control.

"It is impossible to predict what will happen," he told a news conference Sunday night. "We are waiting for the fuel to run out."

People on a beach near the plant said they felt "waves of heat covering us" and "it seemed like everything was trembling."

Norma Ugueda said she jumped out of her car and ran behind some rocks. "Shortly afterwards my car exploded," she said.

Javier Carvalgo, 14, said: "I felt as though my head was splitting open from the heat." He suffered burns on his back and face.

A police helicopter circling the area was whipped by a fireball and crashed into the Caribbean, according to television reports. Its three occupants were rescued and only one was injured.

Machado said the first tank exploded while two workers were taking out oil.

The workers, Jose Manuel Rodriguez and Luis Natera, were killed in the initial blast, the government news agency Venpres said.

"It is an operation we have been carrying out every day for the past 40 years and nothing has happened before," Machado said.

But this time "it was as if a giant flame thrower was being operated. A fire

By MARK S.SMITH

HARWICH, England (AP) — Two loaded ferries collided in a raging night storm off this English port, killing at least five people and sinking one of the vessels in the icy North Sea, police and rescuers said early today.

They said another person was presumed dead from the Sunday night smashup, which flung some people into the frigid, gale-whipped water. Helicopters, tugs and other vessels pulled 64 people to safety following the collision between the 4,263-ton European Gateway and 3,514-ton Speedlink Vanguard.

Survivors said many were unable to find lifejackets on the European Gateway or crew members to guide them to liferafts.

Flares fired by rescuers over the heaving water lit up Harwich and the surrounding countryside throughout the search in what one rescuer called "a bloody awful night."

Chief Superintendent Mike Humberston of Essex County police said all the casualties came from the European Gateway. The ferry capsized and sank in shallow water about 30 minutes after the collision two miles offshore. Harwich is about 75 miles northeast of London.

A spokesman for the European Gateway's owners, the shipping firm Townsend Thoresen, said the vessel had left nearby Felixstowe 15 minutes before to sail to the Dutch city Rotterdam with 34 truck drivers and 36 crew aboard.

Police said there were no casualties among anybody aboard the other ferry. Colin Crowford, shipping and port manager for Sealink UK Ltd., said the Speedlink Vanguard was carrying a crew of 28 and no passengers.

Sealink U.K. Ltd. is owned by state-run British Rail which runs the nation's railroad network. Sealink in turn owns Northern Coasters Ltd. which owns the Speedlink Vanguard.

No tourists were believed to have been aboard either vessel.

"At this moment we do not know what caused the collision," the Townsend Thoresen spokesman said. "It is the first accident we have had in more than 20 years of operating...Obviously there will be an official inquiry."

He said the collision occurred at 10.48 p.m. (4:48 p.m. CST), ripping a 200-foot gash in the European Gateway's side. The bows of the other ferry were reported badly damaged.

Supreme Soviet will not name president

MOSCOW (AP) — The Supreme Soviet will convene Tuesday to mark the 60th anniversary of the founding of the Soviet Union, but the national Parliament will not elect a president to succeed the late Leonid I. Brezhnev, a top Soviet official said today.

"The session will be commemorative and no such business will be decided," Vadim V. Zagladin, first deputy chief of the Communist Party International Department, told reporters.

He made the announcement in response to a question during a briefing in which he outlined events that will take place Tuesday and Wednesday to mark the founding of the Soviet Communist state. The actual anniversary is not until Dec. 30.

There had been speculation the Parliament would choose a successor to the presidency, a largely ceremonial post that Brezhnev held in addition to his all-powerful job as first secretary of the Communist Party.

The top party post went to former KGB secret police boss Yuri V. Andropov on Nov. 12, two days after Brezhnev died of a heart attack. There has been speculation that Andropov, who has been consolidating his grip on the Kremlin hierarchy, would also get the presidency.

Zagladin said Andropov will address the joint meeting of the Supreme Soviet, the Central Committee of the party, and the Parliament of the Russian Federation, one of the 15 republics making up the nation.

The meeting will be opened by Konstantin U. Chernenko, Zagladin said. Chernenko has apparently taken the No. 2 spot in the power lineup in the ruling 12-member Politburo of the Central Committee. He was thought to have been Andropov's chief rival to succeed Brezhnev.

Zagladin also was asked it there would be an amnesty for political prisoners.

"Of course not. Since we do not have political prisoners, there is no one to grant amnesty to," he said.

A host of East bloc leaders were arriving in Moscow to attend the gala Kremlin festivities.

Hungarian Communist Party leader Janos Kadar flew in on Sunday and meet today with Andropov. The official Tass news agency said they discussed bilateral relations, but gave no details.

Tass said President Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania, President Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria and East German President Erich Honecker arrived today. Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski was due in later in the day.

"You don't know me from Adam, but like Adam, you're a first of your kind," said Rose Testagrosso, of Fitchburg, Mass. "Come on, Barney, thousands of us are with you in spirit and our prayers and we want to see you give it your best."

The comments are typical of hundreds of get-well wishes sent to Barney Clark since the 61-year-old retired dentist became the first recipient of a permanent artificial heart Dec. 2.

She's already started on some replies and plans to answer each letter, said hospital spokesman John Dwan.

John Codd of Pleasanton, Calif., a friend of Clark's, expressed hope that Clark will recover and quipped, "What some people won't do to get their picture in the paper!"

Cindy Strain, 35, of Seattle, said Clark had been her dentist when she was 11 years old. And a woman who said she was "grateful for the opportunity of being your babysitter 61 years ago" sent a card.

An avid golfer, Clark received a box of specially-made candy golf balls from Rogers Candy Co. of Seattle, with a card saying, "You deserve an Academy Award for special effects because you effect us all in a special way."

Many letters came from people awaiting donated hearts for transplant or who had relatives die from cardiomyopathy, the degenerative heart disease from which Clark suffered.

A woman wrote to say her grandson had been told his best hope for a healthy life was development of an artificial heart.

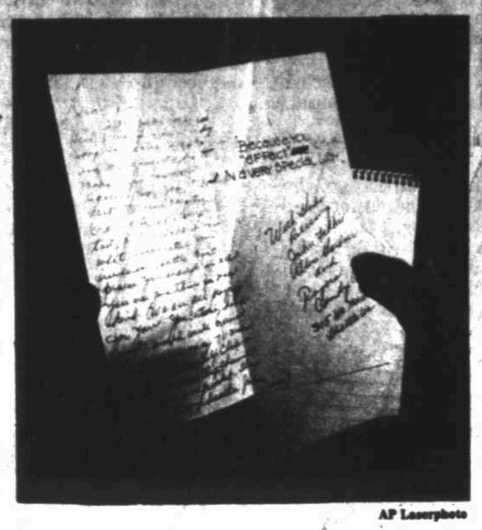

"I was lucky only to have two bypasses and an aorta valve replacement," wrote Jack Houk, Anderson, Calif., about his series of heart operations.

Connie Hull of Blissfield, Mich., wrote that a kidney transplant has increased the quality of her life, and said she has been able to have a child.

"Both kidney and baby doing fine," she said.

LaMar Sutton, of Edgerton, Ohio, wrote that since he had heart surgery, "I have never been so well. I know you will be also."

"I am an 82-year-old lady and I started myself an album of all famous people and you are one of these," said Estelle Maxwell, Suffern, N.Y., who wrote asking for a photo.

This is one of hundreds of letters and cards sent to artificial heart recipient Barney Clark at the University of Utah Medical Center where he is in critical condition following surgery to implant the artificial heart.

Envelopes referred to Clark as "artificial heart recipient," "Dr. Barney Clark — the 1st" and one had "Get Well" scribbled on it by a mailman.

"How about writing books?" Liz Swope of Van, Texas, suggested in a card to Clark.

Thick packets of letters, with pictures of hearts drawn on them by crayon, came from elementary schools all over the country.

"You are the bravest man I have ever heard of," said Lynette Rodriquez, a sixth-grader from Tampa, Fla.

"I hope your dental office is O.K.," classmate Rachel Amones wrote.

Many letters were from people lauding Clark's courage and telling him they were monitoring his progress.

"My entire family and myself thank you with all our hearts for having the courage to undertake this operation," wrote Jacquelyn, John and Jenevieve Mix, whose envelope had no return address.

Clark was listed in serious condition Sunday. Doctors said he was sitting in a chair for short periods and his vital signs were normal.

Poster child misdiagnosed as having cystic fibrosis

BALTIMORE (AP) — When Rodney Brown, the 1976 national cystic fibrosis poster child, learned he never had the incurable disease, his reaction was pure delight: "I got to see the president for free!"

For 10 years, Rodney and his parents lived with the belief that he was afflicted with the often fatal respiratory illness. But tests eventually proved Rodney, now 13 and a 7th-grade pupil, suffers only from an asthma-like condition, his parents said Sunday.

Rodney was 15 months old and living in Indiana when doctors first diagnosed that his pneumatic condition stemmed from cystic fibrosis, said Rodney's mother, Cheryl.

After that, Rodney's daily routine included handfuls of antibiotics and long hours at physical and inhalation therapy to aid his troubled breathing. Rodney also was given X-rays about once every six months, Mrs. Brown said.

The wavy-haired boy became Indiana's cystic fibrosis poster child in 1975 and the national poster child the following year, meeting with then-President Ford.

But after the family moved in January 1980 to Gamber, a small community about 20 miles west of Baltimore, they found out about the inaccurate diagnosis, Mrs. Brown, 35, said.

"I think it just kind of goes to point out the need for continued research not only to improve the testing but to find a cure for the disease," said Rodney's father, Harold L. Brown, 36. "While many tests are good, there's always room for error."

The first test showing Rodney did not have cystic fibrosis was conducted by Dr. Beryl Rosenfein at Johns Hopkins Hospital soon after the Browns' move, she said. During the next five months, Rodney was tested at Children's Hospital in Washington, D.C., and at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md.

But Rodney wasn't told about the inaccurate diagnosis until after the third test.

"We wanted to be positive beyond a shadow of a doubt first," said Harold Brown, an X-ray machine repairman.

When told he didn't have the disease at a conference in Rosenstein's office, Rodney was "delighted," said Mrs. Brown.

Recalled the boy's father: "When we first told Rodney, his reaction was: 'I got to see the president for free!'"

The Browns never publicized the mistake, but it came to light when an Indianapolis Star reporter who once wrote about Rodney recently asked a local Cystic Fibrosis Foundation chapter how he was doing.

Foundation officials told him about the faulty diagnosis, Mrs. Brown said.

One of those who conducted the test confirming Rodney didn't have cystic fibrosis was Dr. Van S. Hubbard, a specialist in pediatric metabolic disorders for the National Institutes of Health.

"He's doing very well," Hubbard said.

Community fears dioxin contamination

"People read the headlines, and it scares them off," Dr. Charles Schultheiss, a chiropractor assisting in the cleanup, said Sunday. "I can't estimate how many have said they won't come here because of the report of dioxin, but it's a good number.

"We've had about 200 volunteers thus far, but they'll be here all winter and won't make a dent in what needs to be done," Shultheiss said.

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Children playing with an archery set may have been responsible for shooting an arrow into the head of a deer at the Green Hill Park Zoo, police say.

"All I can tell you is that the deer is alive," a young woman at the zoo said Sunday after technicians worked to remove a section of the arrow that remained lodged between the animal's eyes.

The spokeswoman refused to identify herself or answer any other questions about the incident.

Police said the injured deer was discovered Saturday morning at the small municipal "barnyard zoo" where people are encouraged to visit and pet a variety of animals.

"It sounds like some kids in the woods were fooling around with a bow and arrow and aimed at whatever they could," police supervisor Mary Didzbalis said Sunday.

"It's under investigation because our animal contol unit gets involved with all the animals there," she said. "Deer are so rare and hard to keep."

Head zookeeper Harold M. Carr Jr. said Saturday that park personnel had no idea who wounded the animal.

The Worcester Evening Gazette received several angry telephone calls from readers after running the photograph on its front page Saturday afternoon, said newsman Lee Hammel.

"People seemed angrier that we ran the picture than over the fact the deer was actually shot," said Hammel. "One of the callers said, 'Why did we have to run it on page one?'

AP Laserphoto

Philidelphia Eagle defensive back Roynell Young intercepts a pass intended for Houston Oiler Mike Renfro in second quarter action at Veterans Stasium in Philadelphia Sunday.

The Cowboys earned a record-tying eighth consecutive playoff appearance and their 16th post-season visit in 17 years Sunday with a lackluster 21-7 victory over New Orleans.

The dressing room was like a tomb, and there were soft drinks instead of champagne.

Dallas, winning its sixth consecutive game, upped its record to 6-1 to remain in a tie with Washington atop the National Conference standings.

New Orleans dropped to 3-4 in its struggle to make the NFL "tournament" format.

The Cowboys struck for all 21 of their points in the second period, and then started clock-watching. They also watched George Rogers tear through their flex defense for a Saints record of 166 yards on 33 carries.

"It wasn't a great second half,' said a disgusted Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "It was a game we won."

New Orleans surprised the Cowboys with a Power I three-back offense and rushed for 245 yards, but could score only one touchdown on a 6-yard run by Rogers.

Interceptions by Anthony Dickerson and Everson Walls and a pass interference penalty in the Saints end zone on Dave Waymer gave Dallas the breaks it needed.

Running back Tony Dorsett, who scored two touchdowns and rushed for 105 yards on 25 carries, said it was important for Dallas to win its last two games going into the playoffs.

"We can't afford to lose," he said. "Washington is going very well right now. It is important to play at home. We don't like that travel time. Playing at home, you get the fans behind you."

Defensive end Harvey Martin said, "We'd like to play in the playoffs at home. We don't want to try to make it to the Super Bowl by knocking on the back door."

New Orleans quarterback Ken Stabler completed only two of 10 passes for 32 yards and was sacked twice and intercepted twice before he was hurt in the third period.

Stabler suffered a bad bruise to his left elbow, his throwing arm.

"If Kenny is well we can still make the playoffs," said New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips. "I'd be in the wrong profession if I didn't think we had a chance.

"Rogers had a fine day, but it's not much consolation when you lose," he said. "We did what we started out to do and that's run the football. But you have to hand it to Dallas. They had more poise in the clutch than we did."

"My arm is okay, but I don't know if I can play next week," he said. "I think it might be the ligaments in the elbow."

About the only fun the Cowboys had was quarterback Danny White's first career spike after he hit tight end Doug Cosbie with a 3-yard touchdown pass.

White rolled out on a bootleg and could have run for the touchdown. Instead, he pulled up and hit the wide-open Cosbie.

"Cosbie gave me the ball and said 'Merry Christmas' so I decided to spike it," said White. "Besides, those touchdown runs dont help your passing average."

Landry wasn't laughing.

"We can't play like we did today and bat Philadephia next week," Landry said.

The Eagles are the other club that has made it to eight consecutive NFL playoffs.

Eagles embarrass Oilers, 35-11

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was hard to tell whether the Philadelphia Eagles won or the Houston Oilers lost.

For the record, Wilbert Montgomery ran for three touchdowns while the defense intercepted four passes and crashed for seven sacks as the Eagles beat the Oilers 35-14 Sunday in a National Football League battle of also-rans.

But the Oilers also had four sacks and recovered a fumble. Not counting a club-record 90-yard touchdown run by Montgomery, the Oilers held the Eagles to 108 yards on the ground and 164 passing.

Both teams entered the game with 1-5 records and are almost assured a seat in front of a television set at playoff time.

Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil wasn't concerned with the artistry of the game.

"I'm very pleased to get the win," Vermeil said. "This really takes the monkey off our backs. We dug ourselves out of a big grave."

Vermeil was high on his defense, which started the game last in the National Conference.

"The defense showed the kind of defense it really is," Vermeil said. "They had something to prove to themselves and made up their minds to get after people.

"They were upset with their performance of the past weeks and were mad," Vermeil said.

Montgomery slowed down the last 5 yards. "I didn't want to pull a hamstring. I felt a little tingling back there," he said.

Houston Coach Ed Biles said the Oilers simply allowed the Eagles to make the big plays. He especially cited Richard Blackmore's TD run with an intercepted pass less than 2 minutes into the game.

"Their defensive line just overpowered us," Biles said.

He said his offensive line just has to get bigger and better.

"We've got to give (running back) Earl Campbell some help, open up some holes. No back is going to make anything without help."

Campbell said, "I'm somewhat disenchanted. I've always been a winner. Now I'm a loser. It's not easy to go home to your wife and kids a loser."

Houston quarterback Archie Manning blamed himself for the Blackmore interception. "It was a dumb, stupid play on my part and gave them the first score. Then we just didn't get the job done on first and third downs. We were struggling, ineffective."

College basketball roundup

'Sugoi' Sampson leads Cavs over Utah

As Virginia's Ralph Sampson did his thing against Utah in the finals of the Suntory basketball tournament Sunday, shouts of "sugoi!" (great) and "shinjirarena!" (unbelievable) issued from the 5,000 fans who packed into the Aoyama University gym.

Though still troubled by the after-affects of an intestinal infection, the 7-foot-4 center finished with 17 rebounds, 14 points and five blocked shots — and the Cavaliers finished with an 80-57 win over the Utes.

The victory completed a two-game sweep in this tourney for the top-ranked college basketball team in America, which defeated No. 14 Houston 72-63 without their sickened big man.

SAMPSON CAME to Japan with an intestinal infection contracted before last week's contest with Georgetown. He practiced Thursday but was judged too ill to play in Thursday night's opening game against Houston.

When Sampson took the floor Sunday against Utah, he was unable to connect on his first six shots and remained scoreless until near the end of the first half. Still Sampson's high-flying rebounds brought cheers from the animated crowd.

Led by Angelo Robinson, who led Utah with 12 points, and George Furgis, Utah stayed even with the Cavaliers in the opening eight minutes.

Utah's sticky man-to-man defense, using double coverage on the weakened Sampson, kept Virginia's offense at bay until Cavalier guards Othell Wilson and Rickey Stokes took control midway through the first half.

Sophomore forward Jim Miller tipped in a Sampson miss. Wilson popped in a jumper and drove in for a dunk and Sampson cracked into the scoring column with a slam dunk with four minutes remaining to give Virginia a 36-23 lead.

WHILE THE fans eyed Sampson, Virginia demonstrated it has the depth of talent required to pick up the pace when the two-time national Player of the Year is off the mark. Miller, who displayed a soft shooting touch Thursday night with 14 points, had nine Sunday. Tim Mullen went 5-for-9 from the field against Utah and had 11 points.

The six-foot Wilson got nine points, including a crowd-pleasing dunk, while Stokes, after a sterling game against Houston, made every shot he took Sunday, scoring 10 points on three drives and four free throws.

After he was named Most Valuable Player, Sampson said he was "winded" in the first half and played to "75 percent of my full strength."

"I don't think anybody is going to tell us we played badly today," said Utah Coach Jerry Pimm. "I was impressed by Ralph Sampson, but the other Virginia guys were really good. Each one of them knew their roles, their fundamentals. They beat us in every aspect of the game. They have a good program with a good coach, and I think they'll put up a good fight in their tough Atlantic Coast Conference."

IN OTHER action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 2 Kentucky beat Tulane 80-61, No. 3 Memphis State defeated Kansas 55-42, fourth-ranked UCLA beat seventh-ranked Iowa 75-66, co-No.5 Indiana edged Kansas State 48-46, No. 9 St. John's coasted past Princeton 58-46 and No. 10 Alabama stopped Louisiana Tech 88-73.

Also, No. 11 Tennessee outscored Miami of Ohio 69-62, 12th-ranked Louisville edged Oklahoma State 67-66, No. 13 Arkansas beat Northeast Louisiana 89-76, No. 16 Syracuse routed Niagara 105-82, No. 17 North Carolina swamped Pan American 106-50, 19th-ranked Villanova crushed Temple 82-55 and No. 20 West Virginia beat 66-65 Virginia Commonwealth in overtime.

Derrick Hord and Dirk Minniefield each scored 17 points to lead Kentucky over Tulane for the championship of the University of Kentucky Invitational tournament.

He credited a zone defense for Tulane's cold shooting and said the Wildcats "tried to be more aggressive to get our adrenaline going."

Andre Turner's 17 points led Memphis State over Kansas after the Tigers blew a 17-point lead. Memphis State built a 41-24 advantage at halftime then withstood a late rally by the Jayhawks.

MHS, Lee girls begin district play tonight

Local basketball teams are in the final push to get games in before the short Christmas break as all four local units hit the hardwood today. However, the Midland High and Midland Lee girls face the most crucial tests since District 4-5A opens today.

Midland Lee will host Abilene Cooper at 5 p.m. at Chaparral Center today to kick off district action with the junior varsities meeting at 3:15 p.m. Midland High waits until 8 p.m. when they face Abilene High in a road contest, but it is also a district affair.

Lee will carry a 10-4 record into the loop warfare, having won or tied for every district title the last four years. Midland High, with one district co-championship to its credit, owns an 8-6 mark heading into the Abilene game.

Lee is coming off a victory off Crosbyton in the consolation championship of the New Deal tournament this weekend while MHS is coming off a loss to Class A Klondike. Both local teams appear to be in the running for playoff berths since two teams get to go this year.

The boys will also be in action tonight. Midland High will square off against Snyder in the MHS gym while Lee faces Andrews in an 8 p.m. encounter at the Chap. MHS will take a 7-7 record into the Snyder game while Lee owns a 1-11 mark after both teams competed in the San Antonio tournament this weekend.

Both Midland High teams take to the court again Tuesday when the boys host Abernathy at 8 p.m. at the Chap and the girls face Andrews in an 8 p.m. contest at the MHS gym.

All teams will then be idle until Dec. 28 with the exception of the Lee JV, which plays Tuesday and Wednesday in the Hobbs, N.M., JV tournament.

'Killer Frogs' are back; SMU wins Dallas tourney

By The Associated Press

With Texas Christian's "Killer Frogs" off to their best start since 1958, the Southwest Conference is compiling one of its best records ever against outside basketball competition.

The SWC is 46-25 against non-conference opponents after another week of tournaments and intersectional matchups. The league's best-ever mark against outside foes was last year's 75-27 record.

TCU guard Darrell Browder scored 30 points Saturday as the Horned Frogs, now 7-1, knocked off previously unbeaten Iowa State 74-66 in Ames, Iowa.

"It was just my night," Browder said after he had riddled Iowa State. "The next game I might not shoot at all."

In other games, Southern Methodist won the inaugural Dallas Morning News Tournament by upsetting Penn State 75-68; Texas downed Harvard 73-58; Texas A&M took third place in the Champion Holiday Classic in Missoula, Mont., by nipping West Texas State 74-72; Rice beat Southwestern 59-41; Texas Tech downed Athletes in Action 66-60 and No. 13 Arkansas stayed unbeaten with an 89-76 victory over Northeast Louisiana.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss celebrated the Mustangs' first tournament victory since the 1966 Sun Bowl.

"This one means a lot to us," Bliss said. "We have worked awfully hard."

The schedule is sparse Monday night with SMU, 5-3, entertaining Southwestern and Rice, 5-2, at Lamar.

Arkansas, 8-0, meets Southern Mississippi at Pine Bluff, Ark., on Tuesday while TCU hosts Colorado and Texas Tech, 2-5, is at San Diego.

On Wednesday Texas, 3-4, hosts Missouri Western State.

On Thursday Tech is at Pepperdine to end the week's play.

Houston, 6-2, which lost to Virginia but beat Utah in the Suntory Classic plays at Pepperdine Monday Dec. 27 on national television (ESPN).

Mosley gets a kick out of football; Colts pull upset, tie Packers

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

While Moseley was breaking the National Football League record for consecutive successful field goals on Sunday with his 21st — and getting the 42-yarder in the snow to beat the New York Giants 15-14 in the process — Noll was watching quarterback Terry Bradshaw and the Steelers' offense fall apart again.

Bradshaw, benched a week ago when he managed to complete only two of 13 passes in the snow during a 13-0 loss in Buffalo, played the entire game in Cleveland, with little improvement. This time he completed 12 of 39 attempts and was intercepted four times, twice by Hanford Dixon in the final 65 seconds, as the Browns won 10-9.

In Sunday's other afternoon games it was Minnesota 34, Detroit 31; St. Louis 10, Chicago 7; Tampa Bay 24, Buffalo 23; Kansas City 37, Denver 16; New England 16, Seattle 0, and Green Bay 20, Baltimore 20 in an overtime tie.

On Sunday night, it was Atlanta 17, San Francisco 7.

For Moseley, one of the few straight-ahead players in a game dominated by shewinding soccer-style kickers, it was simply a matter of doing what comes naturally — putting the ball through the uprights as he had done 20 previous times to tie the record set by Garo Yepremian.

"I was just trying to concentrate on what I had to do," Moseley said. "A kick has got to be natural ... I hit it as well as I ever hit a ball."

"Moseley was fantastic," said Washington Coach Joe Gibbs. "It's almost like we have a patent on winning; just keep it close and let him kick the field goals."

"Last night I had a dream that this is how it would happen," said Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann, who holds the ball when Moseley kicks it.

Browns 10, Steelers 9

Despite Bradshaw's poor performance, Noll refused to lay the blame for the Steelers' recent failures solely at him quarterback's feet.

"Terry Bradshaw has the highest credentials I know of," said the Steelers' coach. "He's been to four Super Bowls and three weeks ago he was leading the league in passing. Today I think the problem was — with the bad footing — that he just wasn't getting set early enough with the ball.

"We missed some passes, too. Today was pretty much like last week. For whatever reason, there was no execution whatsoever. Our defensive guys did everything they could do to win the game, but offensively we just had no execution. You could go right down the line and the problem starts with the quarterback and goes right to the whole offense."

Bradshaw, too, said he was dismayed by his recent string of poor performances. "There's no reason for it," he said. "I don't have the answers ... We're just not moving the ball with any consistency at all. I don't know who's been good or bad for us."

Paul McDonald, getting his first NFL start in place of Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe, passed 22 yards to Ozzie Newsome to set up Johnny Davis' 1-yard TD run in the third period that wiped out the Steelers' 7-3 lead built on Bradshaw's 6-yard scoring pass to John Stallworth.

"I wouldn't be human if I didn't have butterflies," said McDonald. "Sure, you're apprehensive, but you just go out and try to play your own game. You don't try to win the game on your own." McDonald completed 19 of 40 passes.

Vikings 34, Lions 31

Tommy Kramer threw three TD passes in Minnesota's victory over Detroit, but it was nose tackle Charlie Johnson, formerly of the Eagles, who scored the winning TD, scooping up a Gary Danielson fumble and racing 44 yards with 2:08 to play. Danielson passed for three TDs, two in the closing minute.

Cardinals 10, Bears 7

Neil O'Donoghue of St. Louis didn't have a streak going — he was wide to the right on a 48-yard field goal attempt with a couple of minutes to play — but the 48-yarder he did hit with 25 seconds remaining was just as decisive as Moseley's kick.

"I played that one the same as the other one," he said. "But I started this one further out to the right. I hit the first one good, but it tailed off too fast. I gave myself a little more room for adjustment the second time around."

Bucs 24, Bills 23

Doug Williams' two touchdown passes and Cedric Brown's key fumble recovery carried Tampa Bay past the Bills. Lee Roy Selmon forced the last-minute fumble by Roosevelt Leaks, who had scored two TDs for Buffalo, and Brown pounced on it at the Tampa Bay 18-yard line.

Chiefs 37, Broncos 16

Denver quarterback Craig Morton made a brief speech in his official retirement, but the Chiefs' quarterback, Bill Kenney, ruined the day for the Broncos with two second-half touchdown passes. And safety Gary Barbaro returned an interception of a Steve DeBerg pass 43 yards for another Kansas City score.

Patriots 16, Seahawks 0

New England, which shut out Miami in the snow a week ago, blanked the Seahawks indoors this time. The Pats picked off four of Jim Zorn's passes and recovered two Theotis Brown fumbles to blunt Seattle drives. Steve Grogan passed 5 yards to Mark van Eeghen for the game's lone TD and John Smith kicked three field goals.

Packers 20, Colts 20

Baltimore Coach Frank Kush was far from happy after the Colts avoided a seventh loss. None of that "moral victory" business for him. "As far as I'm concerned, it is still not a win," he said. "We still haven't won one yet."

The Colts got a 1-yard TD run by Randy McMillan with 1:22 left in the fourth quarter to tie Green Bay, then each team missed a field goal attempt in the extra period.

Falcons 17, 49ers 7

William Andrews accounted for 176 yards rushing and receiving, and Atlanta shut down San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana as the defending Super Bowl champions fell to 2-5 and nearly out of the playoff picture.

Montana, who had thrown for more than 300 yards a league record five straight times, was held to 177. The 49ers' only touchdown came on a 7-yard pass from Montana to Dwight Clark to give them a 7-3 lead in the second period.

Andrews rushed for 108 yards and caught passes for 68 more to set up 1-yard scoring runs by Steve Bartkowski and Gerald Riggs as the Falcons all but clinched a playoff berth by improving their record to 5-2.

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Bear could roar like a lion and kick like a mule. The Bear lumbered along like ... well ... like a bear, but he could also be as swift as a deer. The Bear was a sly old fox. The Bear could be as ornery as a bobcat and, when he wanted, the Bear was a big ol' pussycat.

Paul William "Bear" Bryant.

Bud Casey, who coaches the running backs at Auburn, was a member of Bear Bryant's first group of freshmen in 1958.

"Everything about him stands out in my mind," Casey said, "but the first thing I can remember was my very first team meeting. I was scared to death; we all were. The first words out of his mouth at that meeting weren't 'Good morning' or 'How are you?' He said, 'How many of you have girl friends? Raise your hands.' I don't remember how many of us did, but he said, 'Those of you who raised your hands might as well leave now because you're not going to have time for football.'

"That set the tempo, but he also said, 'Before you leave here, you'll win a national championship.'" Three years later, Alabama won the first of five under the Bear.

Neil Callaway, who handles the offensive line at Auburn, played five positions for Bryant from 1975-77. He also remembers team meetings.

"We had them just like anyone else," Callaway said, "and at the end of a couple of those meetings the squad stood up and gave him a standing ovation for the things he said. I don't recall all the details, but one of them had to do with his challenging the NCAA for meal money and benefits for the players in general — strictly for the players, not for his personal gain."

"The biggest thing that impresses me about the man is his concern for the players no one even thinks he knows — the kids on the scout team or the ones no one ever hears of," said Hall.

"I wouldn't call the feeling the players had for him fear or awe; it was more like respect and worship. He was somebody you respected and were scared to disappoint. He never brutalized or abused anybody, but he had complete control. There was never any question that he had you right where he wanted you the whole time."

Auburn's head coach, Pat Dye, was in charge of linebackers and recruiting at Alabama from 1965-73. It was his first coaching job. Dye remains one of Bryant's biggest boosters, even though Auburn's 23-22 victory over Alabama last month may have been the game that convinced Bryant, who announced his retirement as University of Alabama coech last Wednesday, to step aside.

"My first year on the staff (1965), we lost our opener to Georgia and were tied by Tennessee a few weeks later," Dye recalled. "We weren't a very good team when we started the season, but we ended up national champions after beating Nebraska 39-28 in the Orange Bowl. It was one of the greatest coaching jobs I've ever seen.

"That same year, we were getting ready to play Ole Miss and practice wasn't going well, so Coach Bryant ran 'em all off the field one afternoon and brought 'em back at 5 o'clock the next morning. He got his point across."

The Bear usually got his point across ... but not always. One day in 1962, the Crimson Tide was running a play over and over in practice and a back named Carlton Rankin couldn't seem to get it right.

"Coach Bryant came down off that tower and headed straight for Carlton," recalled Richard Williamson, then a teammate, later an assistant coach and now executive director of the Bluebonnet Bowl. "Coach Bryant was going to kick him in the rear end. Carlton never saw him coming, but just as Coach Bryant started to kick, Carlton raised up out of his three-point stance. Coach Bryant missed and stumbled and kind of went in the air and fell. We just ran the play and nothing was said. Everyone was laughing — but not out loud."

Florida Coach Charley Pell, an overachiever as a 190-pound Alabama tackle in the early 1960s, remembers "two kinds of football players — those who watched the tower out of the corner of their eye to see which group Coach Bryant was watching, and those who didn't."

"I was one of those who absolutely refused to look up there. I didn't want to see him. But when he started down from the tower, word would spread all over. We'd depend on the tower-watchers to say, 'Look out, he's coming this way.' It was a wrath no one wanted, but you lived in that situation for four years.

"He should have come after me many times, but he only came after me once. He never laid a hand on me, but he got close enough to talk to me and he got my attention. He didn't have to come down many times to get your attention.

"You never knew when you were going to practice or for how long. Everything was always a mystery, but we knew we'd practice, practice, practice. You were supposed to be totally into it.

"One day, this big ol' tackle said, 'We don't have long now,' and Coach overheard him. He said, 'What?' The tackle was a quick thinker and he said, 'We don't have long until we play Georgia, Coach.' Coach laughed like hell at that."

Bryant always took care of his "boys," getting them jobs, giving them money, helping them with personal problems. Many of his players and assistants became head coaches, and more than one eventually was fired because they couldn't beat the Bear.

"He may have stayed on this long because he wanted to," said Charlie McClendon, who played for Bryant at Kentucky and later coached with him and against him. "But he did a heck of a lot for his staff hoping they'd be taken care of.

Campbell talks of leaving Texas

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Although stopping short of saying he will ask to be traded, runningback Earl Campbell says he may have to go elsewhere if things don't improve for the Houston Oilers.

Campbell gained 26 yards on 18 carries in Sunday's 35-14 thrashing at the hands of the Philadelphia Eagles, in a game where he was outshined by Philadelphia back Wilbert Montgomery's 147 yards in 17 carries.

"I am disenchanted. I still like Texas — I'm not saying Houston — because that's where I come from. I don't want to leave Texas, but I will if I have to. Wilbert was great out there today, but that should have been me," said Campbell, a former Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Texas.

Philadelphia defensive end Carl Hairston said the Eagles had felt they needed to shut down Campbell to win. "He was running real hard, but we played good defense. We shut down his cutback, shut down his holes," Hairston said.

Campbell said there were no holes to shut.

"I'm 26 years old and in good physical shape. I can still run, but you have to have the men up front, and we don't have them. I'm not downgrading anybody, but I have to think of myself. I'll play here until they say stop," Campbell said.

His mediocre statistics and the Oilers' 1-6 record is an embarrassment and a frustration, he said.

"I'm too good of a football player to be stopped here," Campbell said. "If my little boy — Earl Campbell Jr., who is 3 months old — could talk, he'd ask me, 'Daddy, do you still play football on Sunday?' But you got to live with it. I hope things can turn around. I love football too much to be turned back by this."

"It's hard to play here," Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk said of the Jayhawks' field house at Lawrence. "Their crowd is a great sixth man for them. We wanted to make them take the 18-foot shot, but they were hitting them."

Kenny Fields and Darren Daye scored 21 and 20 points, respectively, and Michael Holton contributed six key points in the final 17 seconds to boost UCLA over Iowa. The Bruins led 69-66 when they broke away from the Hawkeyes in the late stages with the help of a technical foul call on Iowa Coach Lute Olson.

Tony Brown hit a pair of free throws with 1:19 left to break a 44-44 tie and trigger Indiana over Kansas State. The Wildcats had gained a tie on Les Craft's jump shot with 2:15 remaining.

Billy Goodwin scored four baskets during a 17-3 burst midway through the second half as St. John's beat Princeton. Ennis Whatley scored 15 points and had a team-record 14 assists, helping Alabama defeat Louisiana Tech. Dale Ellis scored 28 points as Tennessee held off Miami of Ohio to win the 17th Volunteer Classic. Lancaster Gordon scored 20 points, leading Louisville over previously unbeaten Oklahoma State.

"We had a real tough time guarding these guys," said Louisville Coach Denny Crum. "Oklahoma State is an exceptionally fine basketball team. This was not only the quickest team, but one of the best jumping and one of the most experienced teams we've played."

Darrell Walker scored 26 points and Joe Kleine added 13 as Arkansas coasted past Northeast Louisiana. Tony Bruin's 26 points paced Syracuse over Niagara.

Sam Perkins scored 20 points and four other North Carolina players scored in double figures, as the Tar Heels crushed Pan American to take third place in the Oil Capital Classic tournament. Ricky Ross' key free throws in the final minute enabled Tulsa to beat Oral Roberts 63-56 in the championship game.

Ed Pinckney tossed in 20 points as Villanova overwhelmed Big 5 rival Temple. Greg Jones scored 27 points, including three in overtime, to rally West Virginia over Virginia Commonwealth in the championship game of the Mountaineer Classic.

"It was a concentration thing," Jones said of his 6-for-9 free-throw shooting in the second half. "We didn't shoot well at all in the first half. We waited until the overtime period to do it."

San Marino world's oldest republic

SAN MARINO (AP) - It looks more like the setting for a fairy tale than a real republic but this tiny state has its own parliament, its own stamps and its own army and once upon a time it even had a coup d'etat.

It is the oldest republic in the world, founded in 301 A.D., and one of the smallest, with 23 square miles of territory in the hills on the Adriatic coast. It is surrounded on all sides by Italy and its 22,000 residents speak Italian.

Although it has a leftist coalition government — the only Communist-led government in Western Europe — most people here seem more interested in preserving the status quo than promoting class struggle.

"San Marino has a reality that is all its own," said Roberto De Biagi, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry.

There's no poverty, almost no unemployment, very low taxes, free medical service, free day-care centers and schools, clean streets, no terrorism, almost no crime and no compulsory military service.

Its capital, San Marino, is a medieval walled village perched on the top of a craggy mountain called Mount Titan. A winding road leads through green pasture land to the top, where policemen with white helmets and white gloves politely direct traffic. A funicular glides up and down the slopes.

The state's major source of income is tourism — an estimated 2.5 million visitors pass through each year. Tourists cram the narrow cobblestone streets and tidy squares surrounded by stone houses with red tile roofs and balconies.

The souvenir shops, the little post office selling commemorative stamps, the modern government palace made to look like a 13th-century building and the soldiers in medieval dress all make the state seem more like a cute place for tourists than a real-life country.

But World War II showed the republic's sovereignty was real. San Marino was neutral in the war, and so was spared from the Allied bombings. About 100,000 Italians sought refuge inside the city walls, and people in surrounding areas are still grateful to San Marino for saving their lives.

Indonesia site of 'explosiveness'

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

JAKARTA, Indonesia — About 10,000 persons had gathered at a square in central Jakarta last March 18 for a rally by Indonesia's ruling Golkar coalition when fighting broke out in the crowd. Before the night was over, rioting and arson instigated by youths shouting Islamic slogans had spread to other parts of the city, and troops were called in to quell the disturbances.

News of the rioting was suppressed locally, but witnesses reported later that many Golkar members, including women, had fled the scene after shedding their party uniforms, which were then heaped up and burned by the rampaging youths. The government denied reports that at least a dozen persons were killed.

Eight months later, critics of the government cite what has become known as the "Banteng Square incident" to support their contention that all is not well with the seemingly stable government of President Suharto, who has held power for the past 16 years.

Like the volcanoes that dot the islands of this sprawling archipelago of 150 million people, the critics say, tensions seething under the surface of the normally placid political landscape can erupt with little warning and great violence.

"There is a social explosiveness here," said one prominent dissident, Abdul Haris Nasution, a retired army general.

IT WAS PERHAPS with this in mind that the religious affairs minister, Alamsyah Ratu Prawiranegara, last month called in councils representing Moslems, Catholics, Protestants, Buddhists and Hindus to sign a joint statement that he said was to help reduce possible unrest connected with a session next March of the People's Consultative Assembly.

The assembly is scheduled to reelect Suharto, running unopposed, to another five-year term. He also wants it to ratify his declaration that the already tame political opposition parties must no longer be based on religion, but only on the official state ideology, known as pancasila.

On the surface, Suharto seems stronger than ever. At 61, he appears sufficiently in control to turn his attention to building a legacy of harmony and unity that will override the diversity of this 13,600-island archipelago and consolidate its nationhood.

Rebellions against Jakarta's rule have been put down in East Timor, Irian Jaya on New Guinea and the north Sumatran province of Aceh. Hundreds of Moslem agitators have been arrested, and troublesome student groups have been suppressed.

At the same time, Suharto has steadily pursued economic development. Per capita income of $560 last year lifted the country out of the ranks of the world's poorest nations. Potential rivals have been kept at bay as Suharto deftly has played them off against each other.

The Army's loyalty has been maintained through the parceling out of government posts and money and various "extrabudgetary enterprises."

WHILE EVEN OPPONENTS see no threat to Suharto and no immediate prospect of an upheaval, they point to festering resentments that could pose challenges in the future. The world recession is hitting Indonesia harder than expected, and the estimated 30 percent of the population that still lives in poverty may face tougher times ahead.

Besides opposition to Suharto's secularism from militants among the 90 percent Moslem population, there appears to be growing resentment against religious and ethnic minorities — particularly Christians, who hold some important government posts, and Chinese businessmen, who dominate the private economy through symbiotic relationships with Indonesian generals.

Although Indonesia remains strongly attached to the Nonaligned Movement, U.S. and Indonesian foreign policies closely coincide, and the United States staunchly supports Suharto, who paid a state visit to Washington in October.

The importance that the Reagan administration attaches to Indonesia, the world's fifth most populous nation and the largest Islamic state, was summarized in recent testimony before Congress by Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge, who has since been nominated as the new U.S. ambassador to Jakarta.

"Indonesia is the largest country in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, support for which is the cornerstone of U.S. policy in Southeast Asia," Holdridge said. "It is a moderate voice in the developing world, an important oil producer and a major arena for U.S. trade and investment. And it occupies a strategic position astride vital sea lanes connecting the Indian and Pacific Oceans."

NEGLECTED BY ITS Dutch colonialist rulers, Indonesia faced a difficult period after nationalists led by Sukarno won a four-year war of independence in 1949. President Sukarno consolidated his power under the slogan of "guided democracy" and aligned himself increasingly with Asian communist states and the 3-million-strong Indonesian Communist Party.

In 1965 the party was blamed for an unsuccessful coup attempt that resulted in the deaths of six senior generals and triggered a wave of murderous, military-backed retaliation against communists in rural areas. At least 500,000 Indonesians were killed in the succeeding months, including many noncommunist Chinese, as the reprisals took on the character of a holy war inflamed by anti-Chinese prejudice. More than 100,000 suspects were arrested, many of them to be held for years without trial.

Gen. Suharto, who as head of Jakarta's Strategic Command troops had crushed the abortive coup, gradually took power from Sukarno. He assumed key powers in March 1966 and a year later was named president by the assembly.

Suharto inherited an economic mess — inflation in 1966 was running at 640 percent — and launched a development-oriented "New Order" to replace the revolutionary philosophy of Sukarno, who died in 1970. As the basis of the new order, Suharto adopted the pancasila, or five principles described by historian John F. Cady as a "platitudinous affirmation" of nationalism, humanitarianism, representative government, social justice and faith in God.

From farmer to artist

A native Texan, Merritt Mauzey achieved national recognition as a print maker before his death in 1973. It was a career he did not pursue until he was 36 years old.

Included in the Museum of the Southwest's permanent collection are 146 works by Mauzey. These works will be on display on a rotating basis. The exhibit is made possible through the support of a member of the Midland chapter of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists.

Born in Clifton in 1898, Mauzey grew up in cotton country and eventually owned a cotton farm of his own. Although Mauzey was forced to sell his farm due to poor health and unstable crop production in 1920, he continued to work in the cotton industry.

Finally, in 1927, Mauzey moved with his wife and son to Dallas, where he was able to encourage his interest in art, while working full-time for a cotton exporter. He spent much of his free time haunting museums and galleries as well as reading books on art.

It wasn't until 1934 that his increasing interest in art prompted him to enroll in life drawing and etching classes during the evenings. Drawing on his memories of cotton farming, he began producing oil paintings and prints on the subject.

When he finally settled on lithography as his medium he said of the decision, "I chose lithography to tell my story in black and white as I am partial in my personal taste for lithography over all other black and white mediums — I love the strength of it, its vital qualities."

After making this choice, Mauzey began a series of prints about cotton. He wanted to document all aspects of its production, but it was not the mechanical side of the industry he wanted to capture but rather the human side — the daily life of the cotton farmer. He produced a number of lithographs on this subject, most focusing on the industry's human element.

In 1942, Mauzey was the recipient of a Guttenheim Fellowship in creative lithography. He received the award based on his proposal to make prints about Texas, thus the fellowship allowed him to travel and work as an artist for a full calendar year.

Following this experience, Mauzey returned to Dallas in 1943 where he was employed by the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. He worked in the retread shop until 1962, remaining prolific as an artist in his free time.

In addition to his art work, Mauzey was also the author of six children's books.

In "Cotton Farm Boy," "Texas Ranch Boy" and "Oil Field Boy," Mauzey documented aspects of rural life in Texas, with many of the images coming from his childhood memories of farming and ranch life. His other three children's books, "Salt Boy," "Rubber Boy" and "Rice Boy," explore new subjects, which he thoroughly researched to assure the story and illustrations contained in each were accurate.

Today, Mauzey's lithographs are included in the collections of the Amon Carter Museum of Western Art, the Corcoran Gallery of Art and the Whitney Museum of American Art.

His works on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., may be viewed during regular museum hours — from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday (the museum is closed Christmas Day) and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Included in the show are the tools required in creating lithographs.

LUFKIN (AP) — The everyday actions mark the passage of time here. The regular sound of tobacco-spitting. The constant smack of a domino announcing a win to the well-worn table. The calculated pull of colored beads along the abacus.

Each of these is perhaps more accurate than the dingy Dr Pepper clock on the wall, when it comes to graphing the time spent and the games played at one spot that has become a landmark of Lufkin — Domino Pavilion.

For nearly 14 years, the building — more commonly known as Domino Hall — has made the northeast corner of the courthouse lawn the busiest, noisiest and most charismatic. It has become a sort of combination second home and sport arena for the area's retired men, who never, but never, seem to tire of the game that draws them there.

That draw is tough to pinpoint. What is it about a one-room building filled with folding chairs, play-worn tables and vegetable-can spittoons that makes a man go there so frequently it could be considered his full-time office?

That "draw factor" lies somewhere between the fraternity of domino players and their fascination with the game. Most of them donate $3 each month for the coffee. In return, Domino Hall provides them with their friends, their entertainment and a dawn-to-dusk excuse to get out of the house.

It is a sort of men's club — minus the stuffed chairs and stuffy cigars — of the retired set. They'll be the first to say that women are welcome. But none of the women seem attracted to the domino hot spot. As for male regulars, there is no place they'd rather kill time.

As Russ Herring, one Domino Hall regular, says, "If it wasn't here, I guess I'd have to move."

Of course, many of the domino addicts are old enough to remember a time when Domino Hall wasn't here. But none can recall an era when the game itself wasn't.

"When we first started out playing, we were out right around here on the courthouse lawn under the oak trees," says John Eaton. "We moved to different corners, but you couldn't play when it was raining or in cold weather."

Mrs. Leland Jordan still recalls the outdoor domino games, too. She and her husband built the shelter in 1968.

"It was 28 years from the time I had the idea until the time came to pass that we built the building," she said.

Mrs. Jordan says her inspiration for the hall came from a moment of sadness. On the day of her father's funeral in 1940, she reminisced with the domino players about her father, who often had joined in the lawn games.

"As I walked away, the idea came to me to build a shelter so these men could play the game all year round," she says.

A busy life with many years spent abroad kept Mrs. Jordan and her husband from completing the project immediately. But when the time came, Mrs. Jordan consulted the man who knew best just what shape the building should take.

"They didn't want air conditioning. They didn't want central heating. They didn't want carpeting," she said. "They wanted it open so you could get a breeze, and they could feel like they were still playing under the trees."

As anyone who's had courthouse business knows, they're still playing. They play so hard and so intently that it borders on being considered part of courthouse business.

"I've played every Saturday night for the last 55 years," says Morgan Flournoy. "Every time one of my sons got married, why then I had to miss a Saturday night."

Rancher ready to claim independence of 'nation'

LOS INDIOS, Texas (AP) — A 72-year-old retired rancher, following his grandmother's prophecy, wants to turn a grassy, hurricane-carved island in the Rio Grande into a sovereign nation for the Indian people.

The 154-acre island-state would be called "Cherokee Nation," says Herbert M. Williams, who is half-Cherokee. He has already created sample postage stamps and coins for the tiny land.

"My mother always said, 'Son, one of these days you'll recover the land of our great-grandfathers.' This land was created by an act of God to give it back to the Indians," he said.

The uninhabited island — now in Mexican territory — was carved by Hurrican Beulah in October 1967 when the storm cut a new channel for the Rio Grande, moving the international boundary between Texas and Mexico slightly to the north.

Because the banks of the Rio Grande constitute Los Indios' only border, Williams contends the island is under the jurisdiction of neither the United States nor Mexico — an assessment disputed by officials of both countries.

Williams also refers to a 1905 treaty between the two nations which he says allows the original property owners to retain title to any land affected by changes in the river's course.

Williams said he now owns the island, having purchased it in 1968 from two other Texans. And when next spring's rains fill the river to its banks, the Indians will own it, he said.

"When the water's up, we'll start issuing the stamps, name ambassadors and cabinet ministers and put some families of Kickapoo Indians on the island," he said.

Many homeless, migrant Kickapoos now live in Southwest Texas near Eagle Pass. The Cherokee tribe, based in Tahlequah, Okla., has declined to participate in colonizing the island.

Mexican and U.S. government officials do not dispute the Texas-born Williams' ownership of the island. But they do challenge his interpretation of international boundary conventions.

"There's no question about what country it's in — Mexico," said Robert Ybarra, secretary of the International Boundary and Water Commission in El Paso.

"He's talking about secession from Mexico and he can't do that," Ybarra told the Dallas Times Herald. "He wants to start a new nation, and neither Mexico nor any other country will legally stand for that."

Mexican officials also say that only citizens of their country are permitted to own land in the border zone.

But so far, Mexican officials have ignored the obscure plot, just as Williams says he intends to ignore the government's claims to it.

He has had limited quantities of gold and silver coins minted and full-color postage stamps printed bearing the national motto: "Created by an Act of God."

Williams says he is confident that businesses would flock to the new nation, which he plans to fashion into a taxless oasis for the American free enterprise system — but without its restrictions.

"Because of the rules and regulations in our country today, no one can do a thing. They're always taking away a little more of our freedom," he said.

In his new country, Williams said, "people can do whatever they want as long as they're honest."

Clinch River Breeder Reactor project clings to life

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinch River Breeder Reactor stubbornly clung to life over the weekend, but an impatient Congress told electric utilities to share more of the cost of the experimental nuclear power plant if they want it completed.

A House-Senate conference committee agreed to approprite $181 million for Clinch River in fiscal 1983 but said none of the funds can be spent on building the plutonium-fueled reactor or buying more components for it.

The project, aimed at demonstrating the commercial worthiness of a new type of reactor that would produce or "breed" more fuel than it uses, was authorized by Congress in 1972.

Even though $1.3 billion has been spent in the past decade on designing and ordering 70 percent of the parts for the 375-megawatt power plant, construction has yet to get under way on a 90-acre site at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

"If it were not for the Senate majority leader, it if were not for it being built in his state, it would have long ago been terminated," Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said Sunday in urging the conferees to accept a House vote last week deleting funds for Clinch River from a stopgap spending bill.

Bumpers, a long-time opponent of the Oak Ridge project, argued the same case in the Senate in the wee hours of Friday morning.

But Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, sitting on a table near the front of the chamber and watching the vote, nodded to colleagues whose support he needed. He mustered a 49-48 majority at 4:30 a.m. to keep the project alive.

The House — led by an unusual coalition of environmentalists opposed to expansion of nuclear power and fiscal conservatives wary of spending federal money to subsidize utilities — voted 217-196 last Tuesday stop the flow of federal dollar to the project.

The conference committee cut the Senate's appropriation from $200 million to $181 million, agreeing to House negotiators' demands that none of the money be spent on construction or new parts during the life of the stopgap spending resolution.

"You're throwing $181 million right down the tubes here," Bumpers said Sunday. "We've put $1.3 billion into this ... technological turkey ... and have gotten zero out of it."

But Rep. John Myers, R-Ind., said both sides are giving up something in the conference report, explaining that there will be no construction to halt if Congress decides next year to withdraw authorization of the project.

"We've slowed it down," Myers said. "We've worked out a compromise here that everyone can accept."

The House bowed to the Senate in agreeing to language that will allow licensing proceedings by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to continue.

The conferees also ordered the Department of Energy to spend $1 million exploring ways for utilities to share a bigger burden of the cost.

When Clinch River was authorized, it was expected to cost $700 million.

Strategic planning consultant named UTPB assistant professor

ODESSA — James Lloyd Williams, a strategic planning consultant from Chicago, Ill., has been named assistant professor of finance at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, effective Jan. 1.

As a strategic planning consultant for ADP Network Services, Inc., of Chicago, Ill., Williams worked with economic and investment clients, including major oil companies and economic consulting firms.

Prior to his consultant position, he was a strategic planning specialist, providing market, financial and economic time sharing services to planners and economists. In addition, he designed and supervised the development of economic and financial forecasting models.

Williams also did consultant work in St. Louis, Mo., and held several teaching positions, including assistant professor of management science at Lindenwood College of St. Louis, Mo., and instructor of computer methods at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.

Currently completing doctoral work in economics at the University of Arkansas, Williams holds a master's degree in mathematics from the University of Arkansas and a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Arkansas Tech University.

He has written articles for the American Mathematics Society and Marketing Management magazine.

UTPB, Midland College sponsor tour of Polynesia

ODESSA — A course which involves a tour of the Polynesian Islands represents a cooperative effort between Midland College and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

According to Dr. Anne B. Hyde, UTPB instructor of anthropology, students from both schools will meet together for lectures prior to the trip, which will be from May 29 through June 12. Students also will travel together.

Midland College students will enroll in Archaeology 2302, Peoples and Cultures of Polynesia, while UTPB students will enroll in Anthropology 489 or Behavioral Science 689, Peoples and Cultures of Polynesia. Outside readings and class projects will be included in the work for the various classes.

Included in the course is a series of Saturday orientation lectures prior to the trip. Tours during the trip will include Tahiti and Moorea, Society Islands and Viti Levu, Fiji.

"We will visit cultural centers, archaeological sites and museums and explore traditional villages and modern cities during the trip," Dr. Hyde said, noting students attending the tours will participate in on-site seminars and discussions.

The Saturday lectures are open to the public and free of charge to anyone interested in attending, she said. The first lecture, scheduled April 9 at UTPB, will include an overview of the islands, peoples and cultures of Polynesia.

The second lecture, to be conducted at MC April 16, will examine Polynesian archaeology with case studies of the Fijian and Society Islands. The final lecture will look at ancient and contemporary Polynesian cultures with case studies of Fiji and Tahiti April 23 at UTPB.

One of the tours on the trip to Tahiti will include the Gauguin Museum, botanical gardens, Point Venus, Matavai Bay, Faaruumai waterfalls, the lagoonarium, local plantations and others. Also included will be places of interest in Papeete, the capital, and tours of Cook's Bay, Belvedere Overlook, Opunohu Valley Archaeological sites, farms, villages and other places of interest in Moorea.

At Viti Levu, Fiji, students will visit the Fiji Museum, botanical gardens, Fijian and Indian markets, Grand Pacific hotel and other places of interest in Suva, the capital. Sigatoka Valley plantation, villages and archaeological sites also will be included, along with visits to the National Dance Theatre of Fiji, the Orchid Island Gardens and the Fijian Cultural Center.

Cost of the trip is $2,250 plus tuition and fees at UTPB or MC. Covered in the trip cost is roundtrip airfare, transfers, luggage handling, hotel rooms at double occupancy, all tours, guides and buses.

Woman held for Midlander's murder

ODESSA — Authorities here are holding a 41-year-old woman arrested late Friday in San Angelo in connection with the shooting death of a Midland man Dec. 5.

Tom Green County sheriff's deputies arrested Angelita Flores Rodriguez a little after 11 p.m. Friday at a cafe in San Angelo. She was charged with first degree murder in connection with the death of Jesse Gutierrez Rodriguez, 26, of Midland. Deputies said the victim and Ms. Rodriguez are not related.

She is being held in lieu of $50,000 bond on that charge and is also charged with public intoxication and possession of dangerous drugs. The woman was arraigned by Peace Justice Jerry Jennison on Saturday and then released to Odessa police detectives.

Rodriguez's body was found in an alley in the 800 block of Magnolia Street in Odessa Dec. 5. He had been shot twice, police indicated.

Police investigate thefts, burglaries

Midland police are investigating a number of thefts and burglaries over the weekend including a break-in at a Tall City residence that cost the inhabitants $800 worth of personal effects.

Junior Reyes Meregildo of 607 N. D, Apt. A, told police his apartment was broken into between 11:30 p.m. Saturday and 9:15 p.m. Sunday. Meregildo said items taken by the burglars included a 19-inch color television, a television stand, a piggy bank and an AM/FM stereo with two speakers.

C.E. Patteson of 3303 W. Golf Course Road reported the theft of a .357 magnum revolver valued at $350. He said the revolver was taken from a vehicle parked outside 2517 Seaboard at 5 p.m. Sunday.

Lee J. Clemons of 1213 E. Oak reported a burglary there which occurred between 11 and 11:30 p.m. Saturday. Taken were a yellow gold ring and $50 in coins, he said. Entry to that residence was gained by prying open the back door.

Capital unlocks horns for brunch-to-bedtime merrymaking

By BETTY CUNIBERTI
By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In this city, Christmas is for kids — kids such as President and Mrs. Reagan, Cabinet officers, members of Congress and even the grumpy Washington press corps.

This month they all unlocked horns and entered a holiday cease-fire with a fistful of cookies in one hand and eggnog in the other.

Even Sarah McClendon, the reporter who berated President Reagan about women's rights during a press conference, gets invited to the White House to say hello (or whatever) to the current residents and fill herself with good cheer.

And even House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, the fiesty Democrat who has said that the president has "ice water in his veins," is asked to come shake Reagan's hand.

Everybody gets in. It's Christmas.

All year long, no town socializes quite so seriously as Washington. At Christmastime, they bring out the heavy-duty support stockings for brunch-to-bedtime merrymaking.

IT IS NECESSARY to begin this ritual the first week in December to get it all in before today, when much of official Washington stumbles onto trains and planes and heads home for the holidays. The president and Mrs. Reagan plan to spend Christmas at the White House, but most of their staff and the countless lobbyists, journalists and assorted power-seekers who followed a star to Washington will make a U-turn to revisit their roots. Members of Congress are currently sweating out the possibility that their lame-duck session will stretch into next week. They, too, hope to leave by this weekend.

After Congress leaves, Washington takes on the appearance of an abandoned Hollywood set. But in the weeks preceding, it could not be more active.

Getting off any elevator in the House of Representatives office buildings after 5 p.m., one notices something different. It smells like Sears. Or a movie theater. Popcorn! Walking down the long, dim hallways one passes a den of laughter and conversation, and then another, and another, as members' offices become sites of elbow-to-elbow Christmas parties.

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., stuffs his office with congressional staffers, lobbyists and job-seekers left unemployed by lame-duck sessions, all munching homemade cookies and breads made by Fazio's staff. A table is made into a bar. They are talking about action on the House floor that day, about Fazio's upcoming marriage and college basketball.

A party given by Reps. Lyle Williams, R-Ohio, and Silvio Conte, R-Mass., features celebrity guest Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini, a lightweight boxing champion. Mancini has been rethinking his next fight after his most recent opponent, Kim Duk Koo, died of brain injuries sustained in their match. "Don't miss this opportunity to meet a young man (age 21), who has been described as both a first-rate fighter and a first-rate person," the invitation trumpets.

Many members of Congress comply. They're not going to miss an opportunity to meet a first-rate person and have a picture taken with him. So many have their pictures taken with the champ that the Christmas spirit wears thin.

"Silvio's really mad," an aide to Conte told a reporter. "They're horning in on his territory, but how can he say no to his colleagues?"

In even-numbered years, Capitol Hill Christmas parties take on the added function of going-away bashes for members who were defeated or chose not to run in the previous month's election. Rep. John Burton, D-Calif., who decided not to run again after eight years, was properly sent off at such an affair. A renowned free spirit who enlivened the floor debates with his utterances ("These budget figures make my hair curl," he said shortly after getting a perm), Burton had told a reporter a few days earlier that he was leaving Washington because he was lonely. But when it came time for his going-away party, lonely John Burton had to hold it in a meeting room that would accommodate several hundred people.

EARLY ON, Burton received a "lewd-o-gram," a woman draped in a slinky dress singing a bawdy Bon Voyage song.

It is a big moment in the East Room of the White House. Six Christmas trees twinkle tiny, white lights and 400 children of foreign diplomats yell in unison, "Merry Christmas, Mrs. Reagan!" They yell it three times before she finally enters, carrying the guest of honor, 3-year-old Anita Asto. Asto is a Peruvian orphan, brought to this country for heart surgery and, finally, adoption, after Mrs. Reagan and the first lady of Peru intervened to cut red tape.

As dozens of reporters' cameras click, Mrs. Reagan takes a seat on the floor, all smiles at the gaiety, and Anita promptly starts crying. Very loudly. She is so frightened by a pair of dancing, 7-foot-tall candy canes that she is handed over to her mother.

Asto calms down but still looks apprehensive while Santa Claus sings a very jazzed-up version of a song about himself coming to town, and Aileen Quinn (who played Annie in the movie) and her dog, Sandy, perform. Quinn sings, and the dog accepts a heavy dose of petting.

The 400 children, in their native sarongs, Dutch hats and other forms of national dress, eat cookies and pastries and drink punch, giving their empty paper cups to tuxedoed waiters carrying silver trays. Mrs. Reagan and Quinn sign autographs. The children are loaded back into buses barely leaving enough time for the White House to prepare for the next wave of guests — members of Congress.

On Route 152 of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from Washington to Baltimore, garlands are strung around the interior; pate, chips and dips are making the rounds, wine and beer are being sipped from plastic glasses and a large cake with a train track on it is being divided. It is the 11th annual Association for Railroad Commuters Christmas party for about 40 Washington-to-Baltimore commuters.

RIDING THE train is one of the special charms of the East Coast. Friendships are made that otherwise never would have transpired. Through a routine of daily conversation over a period of months or even years, train friendships can become emotionally intimate, even if the people never see each other in any other place.

So it was only natural they would celebrate their own special Christmas at 60 mph eating, drinking and singing carols.

"I've become very close friends with some of these people," said Greg Cramer, 37, a chemist for the Food and Drug Administration. "In Baltimore some people got off the train and drank for four more hours."

Elegance was the key element of a reception at the National Building Museum following the television taping of "Christmas in Washington," a singing performance that aired nationally but, on the East Coast, had to compete with Monday Night Football. The president and Mrs. Reagan attended, so many of the poohbahs sloshed through six inches of snow to make merry.

Surrounded by a ring of Christmas trees and feasting on gingerbread, oyster soup, turkey, ham and caramel corn balls with candy canes stuck in them, a few of the VIPs revealed their Christmas wishes.

"Peace on earth, good will toward men, including the president," said Reagan's close friend, Charles Wick, director of the U.S. Information Agency.

> ...One passes a den of laughter and conversation, and then another, and another, as members' offices become sites of elbow-to-elbow Christmas parties.

"TO SOLVE the economic problems," said Jean French Smith, wife of Attorney General William French Smith.

"This has very little to do with Christmas, but I hope we get our immigration bill through Congress," the attorney general said.

Perhaps no holiday gathering exemplifies the Christmas spirit of forgiveness more poignantly than the two parties the White House throws for the White House press corps and their guests, all 1,000 of them.

The parties are split into two nights of 500 each, and there is always much guessing about which is the "A" list and which the "B" list. The White House insists the invitations are divided at random.

Strangely enough, the White House does not allow press coverage of the press parties. But reliable sources close to the punch bowl indicated that the parties were packed, that the White House shimmered with nearly a dozen decorated trees, that the scent of pine pervaded noses as one walked in, that the president and Mrs. Reagan greeted each guest and posed with each for a photo, and that no one could understand how the Reagans withstood it.

New Herald promised

BOSTON (AP — The editor hired by Rupert Murdoch to run the Boston Herald American has promised readers more photos, expanded sports and a new seven-column format.

"It's going to be a new product on Tuesday," editor Joe Robinowitz said Sunday. "When there is a big story out there we are going to go after it."

The newspaper is being purchased from The Hearst Corp. by Murdoch's News America Publishing Co. A ceremony marking the transfer was scheduled today in New York.

The tabloid will be renamed the Boston Herald, and will split its pages into seven columns rather than four, said Robinowitz. Sports coverage will be increased and editors will make space for more photographs, he said.

AP Laserphoto

The Cowboys earned a record-tying eighth consecutive playoff appearance and their 16th post-season visit in 17 years Sunday with a lackluster 21-7 victory over New Orleans.

The dressing room was like a tomb, and there were soft drinks instead of champagne.

Dallas, winning its sixth consecutive game, upped its record to 6-1 to remain in a tie with Washington atop the National Conference standings.

New Orleans dropped to 3-4 in its struggle to make the NFL "tournament" format.

The Cowboys struck for all 21 of their points in the second period, and then started clock-watching. They also watched George Rogers tear through their flex defense for a Saints record of 166 yards on 33 carries.

"It wasn't a great second half,' said a disgusted Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "It was a game we won."

New Orleans surprised the Cowboys with a Power I three-back offense and rushed for 245 yards, but could score only one touchdown on a 6-yard run by Rogers.

Interceptions by Anthony Dickerson and Everson Walls and a pass interference penalty in the Saints end zone on Dave Waymer gave Dallas the breaks it needed.

Running back Tony Dorsett, who scored two touchdowns and rushed for 105 yards on 25 carries, said it was important for Dallas to win its last two games going into the playoffs.

"We can't afford to lose," he said. "Washington is going very well right now. It is important to play at home. We don't like that travel time. Playing at home, you get the fans behind you."

Defensive end Harvey Martin said, "We'd like to play in the playoffs at home. We don't want to try to make it to the Super Bowl by knocking on the back door."

New Orleans quarterback Ken Stabler completed only two of 10 passes for 32 yards and was sacked twice and intercepted twice before he was hurt in the third period.

Stabler suffered a bad bruise to his left elbow, his throwing arm.

"If Kenny is well we can still make the playoffs," said New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips. "I'd be in the wrong profession if I didn't think we had a chance.

"Rogers had a fine day, but it's not much consolation when you lose," he said. "We did what we started out to do and that's run the football. But you have to hand it to Dallas. They had more poise in the clutch than we did."

"My arm is okay, but I don't know if I can play next week," he said. "I think it might be the ligaments in the elbow."

About the only fun the Cowboys had was quarterback Danny White's first career spike after he hit tight end Doug Cosbie with a 3-yard touchdown pass.

White rolled out on a bootleg and could have run for the touchdown. Instead, he pulled up and hit the wide-open Cosbie.

"Cosbie gave me the ball and said 'Merry Christmas' so I decided to spike it," said White. "Besides, those touchdown runs don't help your passing average."

Landry wasn't laughing.

"We can't play like we did today and beat Philadephia next week," Landry said.

The Eagles are the other club that has made it to eight consecutive NFL playoffs.

"I've come out of the hospital to play in games before, and I even had to get out of the hospital to announce my retirement." — Injury plauged Denver quarterback Craig Morton, whose 18-year NFL career will end at the close of the season.

There were two double-eagles made in PGA Tour play in 1982. Bob Gilder did it at the 509-yard 18th hole in the Westchester and Pat McGowan made one on the 510-yard first hole in the Disney.

Eagles embarrass Oilers, 35-14

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It was hard to tell whether the Philadelphia Eagles won or the Houston Oilers lost.

For the record, Wilbert Montgomery ran for three touchdowns while the defense intercepted four passes and crashed for seven sacks as the Eagles beat the Oilers 35-14 Sunday in a National Football League battle of also-rans.

But the Oilers also had four sacks and recovered a fumble. Not counting a club-record 90-yard touchdown run by Montgomery, the Oilers held the Eagles to 108 yards on the ground and 164 passing.

Both teams entered the game with 1-5 records and are almost assured a seat in front of a television set at playoff time.

Eagles Coach Dick Vermeil wasn't concerned with the artistry of the game.

"I'm very pleased to get the win," Vermeil said. "This really takes the monkey off our backs. We dug ourselves out of a big grave."

Vermeil was high on his defense, which started the game last in the National Conference.

"The defense showed the kind of defense it really is," Vermeil said. "They had something to prove to themselves and made up their minds to get after people.

"They were upset with their performance of the past weeks and were mad," Vermeil said.

Montgomery slowed down the last 5 yards. "I didn't want to pull a hamstring. I felt a little tingling back there," he said.

Houston Coach Ed Biles said the Oilers simply allowed the Eagles to make the big plays. He especially cited Richard Blackmore's TD run with an intercepted pass less than 2 minutes into the game.

"Their defensive line just overpowered us," Biles said.

He said his offensive line just has to get bigger and better.

"We've got to give (running back) Earl Campbell some help, open up some holes. No back is going to make anything without help."

Campbell said, "I'm somewhat disenchanted. I've always been a winner. Now I'm a loser. It's not easy to go home to your wife and kids a loser."

Houston quarterback Archie Manning blamed himself for the Blackmore interception. "It was a dumb, stupid play on my part and gave them the first score. Then we just didn't get the job done on first and third downs. We were struggling, ineffective."

College basketball roundup

'Sugoi' Sampson leads Cavs over Utah

As Virginia's Ralph Sampson did his thing against Utah in the finals of the Suntory basketball tournament Sunday, shouts of "sugoi!" (great) and "shinjirarenai!" (unbelievable) issued from the 5,000 fans who packed into the Aoyama University gym.

Though still troubled by the after-affects of an intestinal infection, the 7-foot-4 center finished with 17 rebounds, 14 points and five blocked shots — and the Cavaliers finished with an 80-57 win over the Utes.

The victory completed a two-game sweep in this tourney for the top-ranked college basketball team in America, which defeated No. 14 Houston 72-63 without their sickened big man.

SAMPSON CAME to Japan with an intestinal infection contracted before last week's contest with Georgetown. He practiced Thursday but was judged too ill to play in Thursday night's opening game against Houston.

When Sampson took the floor Sunday against Utah, he was unable to connect on his first six shots and remained scoreless until near the end of the first half. Still Sampson's high-flying rebounds brought cheers from the animated crowd.

Led by Angelo Robinson, who led Utah with 12 points, and George Furgis, Utah stayed even with the Cavaliers in the opening eight minutes.

Utah's sticky man-to-man defense, using double coverage on the weakened Sampson, kept Virginia's offense at bay until Cavalier guards Othell Wilson and Rickey Stokes took control midway through the first half.

Sophomore forward Jim Miller tipped in a Sampson miss, Wilson popped in a jumper and drove in for a dunk and Sampson cracked into the scoring column with a slam dunk with four minutes remaining to give Virginia a 36-23 lead.

WHILE THE fans eyed Sampson, Virginia demonstrated it has the depth of talent required to pick up the pace when the two-time national Player of the Year is off the mark. Miller, who displayed a soft shooting touch Thursday night with 14 points, had nine Sunday. Tim Mullen went 5-for-9 from the field against Utah and had 11 points.

The six-foot Wilson got nine points, including a crowd-pleasing dunk, while Stokes, after a sterling game against Houston, made every shot he took Sunday, scoring 10 points on three drives and four free throws.

After he was named Most Valuable Player, Sampson said he was "winded" in the first half and played to "75 percent of my full strength."

"I don't think anybody is going to tell us we played badly today," said Utah Coach Jerry Pimm. "I was impressed by Ralph Sampson, but the other Virginia guys were really good. Each one of them knew their roles, their fundamentals. They beat us in every aspect of the game. They have a good program with a good coach, and I think they'll put up a good fight in their tough Atlantic Coast Conference."

IN OTHER action involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 2 Kentucky beat Tulane 80-61; No. 3 Memphis State defeated Kansas 55-42; fourth-ranked UCLA beat seventh-ranked Iowa 75-66; co-No.5 Indiana edged Kansas State 48-46; No. 9 St. John's coasted past Princeton 58-46 and No. 10 Alabama stopped Louisiana Tech 88-73.

Also, No. 11 Tennessee outscored Miami of Ohio 69-62; 12th-ranked Louisville edged Oklahoma State 67-66; No. 13 Arkansas beat Northeast Louisiana 89-76; No. 16 Syracuse routed Niagara 105-82; No. 17 North Carolina swamped Pan American 106-50; 19th-ranked Villanova crushed Temple 82-55 and No. 20 West Virginia beat 66-65 Virginia Commonwealth in overtime.

Derrick Hord and Dirk Minniefield each scored 17 points to lead Kentucky over Tulane for the championship of the University of Kentucky Invitational tournament.

He credited a zone defense for Tulane's cold shooting and said the Wildcats "tried to be more aggressive to get our adrenaline going."

Andre Turner's 17 points led Memphis State over Kansas after the Tigers blew a 17-point lead. Memphis State built a 41-24 advantage at halftime, then withstood a late rally by the Jayhawks.

MHS, Lee girls begin district play tonight

Local basketball teams are in the final push to get games in before the short Christmas break as all four local units hit the hardwood today. However, the Midland High and Midland Lee girls face the most crucial tests since District 4-5A opens today.

Midland Lee will host Abilene Cooper at 5 p.m. at Chaparral Center today to kick off district action with the junior varsities meeting at 3:15 p.m. Midland High waits until 8 p.m. when they face Abilene High in a road contest, but it is also a district affair.

Lee will carry a 10-4 record into the loop warfare, having won or tied for every district title the last four years. Midland High, with one district co-championship to its credit, owns an 8-6 mark heading into the Abilene game.

Lee is coming off a victory off Crosbyton in the consolation championship of the New Deal tournament this weekend while MHS is coming off a loss to Class A Klondike. Both local teams appear to be in the running for playoff berths since two teams get to go this year.

The boys will also be in action tonight. Midland High will square off against Snyder in the MHS gym while Lee faces Andrews in an 8 p.m. encounter at the Chap. MHS will take a 7-7 record into the Snyder game while Lee owns a 1-11 mark after both teams competed in the San Antonio tournament this weekend.

Both Midland High teams take to the court again Tuesday when the boys host Abernathy at 8 p.m. at the Chap and the girls face Andrews in an 8 p.m. contest at the MHS gym.

All teams will then be idle until Dec. 28 with the exception of the Lee JV, which plays Tuesday and Wednesday in the Hobbs, N.M., JV tournament.

By The Associated Press

With Texas Christian's "Killer Frogs" off to their best start since 1958, the Southwest Conference is compiling one of its best records ever against outside basketball competition.

The SWC is 46-25 against non-conference opponents after another week of tournaments and intersectional matchups. The league's best-ever mark against outside foes was last year's 75-27 record.

TCU guard Darrell Browder scored 30 points Saturday as the Horned Frogs, now 7-1, knocked off previously unbeaten Iowa State 74-66 in Ames, Iowa.

"It was just my night," Browder said after he had riddled Iowa State. "The next game I might not shoot at all."

In other games, Southern Methodist won the inaugural Dallas Morning News Tournament by upsetting Penn State 75-68; Texas downed Harvard 73-58; Texas A&M took third place in the Champion Holiday Classic in Missoula, Mont., by nipping West Texas State 74-72; Rice beat Southwestern 59-41; Texas Tech downed Athletes in Action 66-60 and No. 13 Arkansas stayed unbeaten with an 89-76 victory over Northeast Louisiana.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss celebrated the Mustangs' first tournament victory since the 1966 Sun Bowl.

"This one means a lot to us," Bliss said. "We have worked awfully hard."

The schedule is sparse Monday night with SMU, 5-3, entertaining Southwestern and Rice, 5-2, at Lamar.

On Wednesday Texas, 3-4, hosts Missouri Western State.

On Thursday Tech is at Pepperdine to end the week's play.

Houston, 6-2, which lost to Virginia but beat Utah in the Suntory Classic plays at Pepperdine Monday Dec. 27 on national television (ESPN).

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

While Moseley was breaking the National Football League record for consecutive successful field goals on Sunday with his 21st — and getting the 42-yarder in the snow to beat the New York Giants 15-14 in the process — Noll was watching quarterback Terry Bradshaw and the Steelers' offense fall apart again.

Bradshaw, benched a week ago when he managed to complete only two of 13 passes in the snow during a 13-0 loss in Buffalo, played the entire game in Cleveland, with little improvement. This time he completed 12 of 39 attempts and was intercepted four times, twice by Hanford Dixon in the final 65 seconds, as the Browns won 10-9.

In Sunday's other afternoon games it was Minnesota 34, Detroit 31; St. Louis 10, Chicago 7; Tampa Bay 24, Buffalo 23; Kansas City 37, Denver 16; New England 16, Seattle 0, and Green Bay 20, Baltimore 20 in an overtime tie.

On Sunday night, it was Atlanta 17, San Francisco 7.

For Moseley, one of the few straight-ahead players in a game dominated by sidewinding soccer-style kickers, it was simply a matter of doing what comes naturally — putting the ball through the uprights as he had done 20 previous times to tie the record set by Garo Yepremian.

"I was just trying to concentrate on what I had to do," Moseley said. "A kick has got to be natural ... I hit it as well as I ever hit a ball."

"Moseley was fantastic," said Washington Coach Joe Gibbs. "It's almost like we have a patent on winning; just keep it close and let him kick the field goals."

"Last night I had a dream that this is how it would happen," said Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann, who holds the ball when Moseley kicks it.

Browns 10, Steelers 9

Despite Bradshaw's poor performance, Noll refused to lay the blame for the Steelers' recent failures solely at hiw quarterback's feet.

"Terry Bradshaw has the highest credentials I know of," said the Steelers' coach. "He's been to four Super Bowls and three weeks ago he was leading the league in passing. Today I think the problem was — with the bad footing — that he just wasn't getting set early enough with the ball.

"We missed some passes, too. Today was pretty much like last week. For whatever reason, there was no execution whatsoever. Our defensive guys did everything they could do to win the game, but offensively we just had no execution. You could go right down the line and the problem starts with the quarterback and goes right to the whole offense."

Bradshaw, too, said he was dismayed by his recent string of poor performances. "There's no reason for it," he said. "I don't have the answers ... We're just not moving the ball with any consistency at all. I don't know who's been good or bad for us."

Paul McDonald, getting his first NFL start in place of Cleveland quarterback Brian Sipe, passed 22 yards to Ozzie Newsome to set up Johnny Davis' 1-yard TD run in the third period that wiped out the Steelers' 7-3 lead built on Bradshaw's 6-yard scoring pass to John Stallworth.

"I wouldn't be human if I didn't have butterflies," said McDonald. "Sure, you're apprehensive, but you just go out and try to play your own game. You don't try to win the game on your own." McDonald completed 19 of 40 passes.

Vikings 34, Lions 31

Tommy Kramer threw three TD passes in Minnesota's victory over Detroit, but it was nose tackle Charlie Johnson, formerly of the Eagles, who scored the winning TD, scooping up a Gary Danielson fumble and racing 44 yards with 2:08 to play. Danielson passed for three TDs, two in the closing minute.

Cardinals 10, Bears 7

Neil O'Donoghue of St. Louis didn't have a streak going — he was wide to the right on a 48-yard field goal attempt with a couple of minutes to play — but the 48-yarder he did hit with 25 seconds remaining was just as decisive as Moseley's kick.

"I played that one the same as the other one," he said. "But I started this one further out to the right. I hit the first one good, but it tailed off too fast. I gave myself a little more room for adjustment the second time around."

Bucs 24, Bills 23

Doug Williams' two touchdown passes and Cedric Brown's key fumble recovery carried Tampa Bay past the Bills. Lee Roy Selmon forced the last-minute fumble by Roosevelt Leaks, who had scored two TDs for Buffalo, and Brown pounced on it at the Tampa Bay 18-yard line.

Chiefs 37, Broncos 16

Denver quarterback Craig Morton made a brief speech in his official retirement, but the Chiefs' quarterback, Bill Kenney, ruined the day for the Broncos with two second-half touchdown passes. And safety Gary Barbaro returned an interception of a Steve DeBerg pass 43 yards for another Kansas City score.

Patriots 16, Seahawks 0

New England, which shut out Miami in the snow a week ago, blanked the Seahawks indoors this time. The Pats picked off four of Jim Zorn's passes and recovered two Theotis Brown fumbles to blunt Seattle drives. Steve Grogan passed 5 yards to Mark van Eeghen for the game's lone TD and John Smith kicked three field goals.

Packers 20, Colts 20

Baltimore Coach Frank Kush was far from happy after the Colts avoided a seventh loss. None of that "moral victory" business for him. "As far as I'm concerned, it is still not a win," he said. "We still haven't won one yet."

The Colts got a 1-yard TD run by Randy McMillan with 1:22 left in the fourth quarter to tie Green Bay, then each team missed a field goal attempt in the extra period.

Falcons 17, 49ers 7

William Andrews accounted for 176 yards rushing and receiving, and Atlanta shut down San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana as the defending Super Bowl champions fell to 2-5 and nearly out of the playoff picture.

Montana, who had thrown for more than 300 yards a league record five straight times, was held to 177. The 49ers' only touchdown came on a 7-yard pass from Montana to Dwight Clark to give them a 7-3 lead in the second period.

Andrews rushed for 108 yards and caught passes for 68 more to set up 1-yard scoring runs by Steve Bartkowski and Gerald Riggs as the Falcons all but clinched a playoff berth by improving their record to 5-2.

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Bear could roar like a lion and kick like a mule. The Bear lumbered along like ... well ... like a bear, but he could also be as swift as a deer. The Bear was a sly old fox. The Bear could be as ornery as a bobcat and, when he wanted, the Bear was a big ol' pussycat.

Paul William "Bear" Bryant.

Bud Casey, who coaches the running backs at Auburn, was a member of Bear Bryant's first group of freshmen in 1958.

"Everything about him stands out in my mind," Casey said, "but the first thing I can remember was my very first team meeting. I was scared to death, we all were. The first words out of his mouth at that meeting weren't 'Good morning' or 'How are you?' He said, 'How many of you have girl friends? Raise your hands.' I don't remember how many of us did, but he said, 'Those of you who raised your hands might as well leave now because you're not going to have time for football.'

"That set the tempo, but he also said, 'Before you leave here, you'll win a national championship.'" Three years later, Alabama won the first of five under the Bear.

Neil Callaway, who handles the offensive line at Auburn, played five positions for Bryant from 1975-77. He also remembers team meetings.

"We had them just like anyone else," Callaway said, "and at the end of a couple of those meetings the squad stood up and gave him a standing ovation for the things he said. I don't recall all the details, but one of them had to do with his challenging the NCAA for meal money and benefits for the players in general — strictly for the players, not for his personal gain."

"The biggest thing that impresses me about the man is his concern for the players no one even thinks he knows — the kids on the scout team or the ones no one ever hears of," said Hall.

"I wouldn't call the feeling the players had for him fear or awe; it was more like respect and worship. He was somebody you respected and were scared to disappoint. He never brutalized or abused anybody, but he had complete control. There was never any question that he had you right where he wanted you the whole time."

Auburn's head coach, Pat Dye, was in charge of linebackers and recruiting at Alabama from 1965-73. It was his first coaching job. Dye remains one of Bryant's biggest boosters, even though Auburn's 23-22 victory over Alabama last month may have been the game that convinced Bryant, who announced his retirement as University of Alabama coech last Wednesday, to step aside.

"My first year on the staff (1965), we lost our opener to Georgia and were tied by Tennessee a few weeks later," Dye recalled. "We weren't a very good team when we started the season, but we ended up national champions after beating Nebraska 39-28 in the Orange Bowl. It was one of the greatest coaching jobs I've ever seen.

"That same year, we were getting ready to play Ole Miss and practice wasn't going well, so Coach Bryant ran 'em all off the field one afternoon and brought 'em back at 5 o'clock the next morning. He got his point across."

The Bear usually got his point across ... but not always. One day in 1962, the Crimson Tide was running a play over and over in practice and a back named Carlton Rankin couldn't seem to get it right.

"Coach Bryant came down off that tower and headed straight for Carlton," recalled Richard Williamson, then a teammate, later an assistant coach and now executive director of the Bluebonnet Bowl. "Coach Bryant was going to kick him in the rear end. Carlton never saw him coming, but just as Coach Bryant started to kick, Carlton raised up out of his three-point stance. Coach Bryant missed and stumbled and kind of went in the air and fell. We just ran the play and nothing was said. Everyone was laughing — but not out loud."

Florida Coach Charley Pell, an overachiever as a 190-pound Alabama tackle in the early 1960s, remembers "two kinds of football players — those who watched the tower out of the corner of their eye to see which group Coach Bryant was watching, and those who didn't."

"I was one of those who absolutely refused to look up there. I didn't want to see him. But when he started down from the tower, word would spread all over. We'd depend on the tower-watchers to say, 'Look out, he's coming this way.' It was a wrath no one wanted, but you lived in that situation for four years.

"He should have come after me many times, but he only came after me once. He never laid a hand on me, but he got close enough to talk to me and he got my attention. He didn't have to come down many times to get your attention.

"You never knew when you were going to practice or for how long. Everything was always a mystery, but we knew we'd practice, practice, practice. You were supposed to be totally into it.

"One day, this big ol' tackle said, 'We don't have long now,' and Coach overheard him. He said, 'What?' The tackle was a quick thinker and he said, 'We don't have long until we play Georgia, Coach.' Coach laughed like hell at that."

Bryant always took care of his "boys," getting them jobs, giving them money, helping them with personal problems. Many of his players and assistants became head coaches, and more than one eventually was fired because they couldn't beat the Bear.

"He may have stayed on this long because he wanted to," said Charlie McClendon, who played for Bryant at Kentucky and later coached with him and against him. "But he did a heck of a lot for his staff hoping they'd be taken care of.

Campbell talks of leaving Texas

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Although stopping short of saying he will ask to be traded, runningback Earl Campbell says he may have to go elsewhere if things don't improve for the Houston Oilers.

Campbell gained 26 yards on 18 carries in Sunday's 35-14 thrashing at the hands of the Philadelphia Eagles, in a game where he was outshined by Philadelphia back Wilbert Montgomery's 147 yards in 17 carries.

"I am disenchanted. I still like Texas — I'm not saying Houston — because that's where I come from. I don't want to leave Texas, but I will if I have to. Wilbert was great out there today, but that should have been me," said Campbell, a former Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Texas.

Philadelphia defensive end Carl Hairston said the Eagles had felt they needed to shut down Campbell to win. "He was running real hard, but we played good defense. We shut down his cutback, shut down his holes," Hairston said.

Campbell said there were no holes to shut.

"I'm 26 years old and in good physical shape. I can still run, but you have to have the men up front, and we don't have them. I'm not downgrading anybody, but I have to think of myself. I'll play here until they say stop," Campbell said.

His mediocre statistics and the Oilers' 1-6 record is an embarrassment and a frustration, he said.

"I'm too good of a football player to be stopped here," Campbell said. "If my little boy — Earl Campbell Jr., who is 3 months old — could talk, he'd ask me, 'Daddy, do you still play football on Sunday?' But you got to live with it. I hope things can turn around. I love football too much to be turned back by this."

"It's hard to play here," Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk said of the Jayhawks' field house at Lawrence. "Their crowd is a great sixth man for them. We wanted to make them take the 18-foot shot, but they were hitting them."

Kenny Fields and Darren Daye scored 21 and 20 points, respectively, and Michael Holton contributed six key points in the final 17 seconds to boost UCLA over Iowa. The Bruins led 69-66 when they broke away from the Hawkeyes in the late stages with the help of a technical foul call on Iowa Coach Lute Olson.

Tony Brown hit a pair of free throws with 1:19 left to break a 44-44 tie and trigger Indiana over Kansas State. The Wildcats had gained a tie on Les Craft's jump shot with 2:15 remaining.

Billy Goodwin scored four baskets during a 17-3 burst midway through the second half as St. John's beat Princeton. Ennis Whatley scored 15 points and had a team-record 14 assists, helping Alabama defeat Louisiana Tech. Dale Ellis scored 28 points as Tennessee held off Miami of Ohio to win the 17th Volunteer Classic. Lancaster Gordon scored 20 points, leading Louisville over previously unbeaten Oklahoma State.

"We had a real tough time guarding these guys," said Louisville Coach Denny Crum. "Oklahoma State is an exceptionally fine basketball team. This was not only the quickest team, but one of the best jumping and one of the most experienced teams we've played."

Darrell Walker scored 26 points and Joe Kleine added 13 as Arkansas coasted past Northeast Louisiana. Tony Bruin's 26 points paced Syracuse over Niagara.

Sam Perkins scored 20 points and four other North Carolina players scored in double figures, as the Tar Heels crushed Pan American to take third place in the Oil Capital Classic tournament. Ricky Ross' key free throws in the final minute enabled Tulsa to beat Oral Roberts 63-56 in the championship game.

Ed Pinckney tossed in 20 points as Villanova overwhelmed Big 5 rival Temple. Greg Jones scored 27 points, including three in overtime, to rally West Virginia over Virginia Commonwealth in the championship game of the Mountaineer Classic.

"It was a concentration thing," Jones said of his 9-for-9 free-throw shooting in the second half. "We didn't shoot well at all in the first half. We waited until the overtime period to do it."

Lloyd concedes Martina No. 1

AP Laserphoto

Martina Navratilova comes in to attack a short ball during the finals of the Toyota Series Championship. Navratilova came from behind to beat Chris Evert Lloyd 4-6, 6-1, 6-2.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — There was no question in Martina Navratilova's mind. Now there should be no questions, period.

The world's top-ranked women's tennis player disposed of her closest rival, Chris Evert Lloyd, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, Sunday night to capture the $300,000 Toyota Championships, the finale of the nine-month Toyota Series.

"She's No. 1 now. I concede," Lloyd said after losing for only the sixth time in 81 matches this year and for the third time to Navratilova in four meetings.

The Czechoslovakian-born lefthander changed tactics from her usual powerful serve-and-volley game to run her 1982 match record to 90-3, but again had to answer questions about being No. 1.

"I'm glad (I won) because now there isn't any question about it (the No. 1 ranking), but I'm disappointed there was any question," Navratilova said. "My record was better. I had the best year that anybody's ever had, yet there was still doubt."

TO COMPLETE the night, Martina teamed with Pam Shriver to capture the doubles, defeating Paula Smith and Candy Reynolds, 6-4, 7-5. For that, she split $28,000. In the singles, she won $75,000 and increased her 1982 official earnings to a single-season Women's Tennis Association record $1,475,055.

Lloyd began by breaking Navratilova in the third game of the opening set, the final point coming on a cross-court forehand that Martina thought was wide. In the eighth game, with Navratilova leading love-30, the left-hander sent a backhand long. Again she complained about the call, which would have given her a love-40 advantage and a chance to break back.

Lloyd then ripped off the next three points to hold serve, then held her next serve to close out the set.

Despite the score, Navratilova was making Lloyd work for every point, changing speeds, hitting deft drop volleys and even trading groundstrokes with the baseline queen.

"I WAS still playing the right strategy," Navratilova said. "I kept the pressure up. I won the majority of the points by letting her know I was going to stay there for as long as it took.

"I was patient. I was going to wait for the right moment to come in. I wasn't going to come in on just any deep shots and let her pass me. I was tougher on the big points, but it (the match) was a lot closer than 6-1 and 6-2."

Lloyd said Navratilova "slowed down the pace and was not being too overly aggressive" in the final two sets.

"In the second set, that first game was huge," said Lloyd, who collected $40,000 for her runner-up finish. "I let up, but just for a minute. You can't do that for one minute against Martina.

"I was thinking, all this hard work and then it starts over again in two weeks," she of the beginning of the 1983 season.

TOP SEEDED Jimmy Connors ran past unseeded Brian Teacher Sunday in North Miami Beach, Fla., to win the inaugural $300,000 Nastase-Hamptons Invitational Tennis Tournament.

Connors, the 1982 U.S. Open and Wimbeldon champion, needed just 90 minutes to sweep Teacher. The winner quickly moved to a 4-1 lead in the first set and never was pressed as he finished Teacher off, 6-2, 6-2.

"He didn't play too well today," noted Connors, the world's No. 2 player behind John McEnroe in the Association of Tennis Professional rankings. "He did get to this point in the tournament by beating some good players. I expected him to play much better."

Connors won $80,000 and a gold, silver and marble trophy worth $30,000 for the victory.

ELSEWHERE SUNDAY, Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia swept Bill Scanlon in straight sets to win the Hartford Open, second-seeded Jaime Fillol of Chile beat top-seed Stan Smith to win the $100,000 Pinch Scotch Tennis Invitational for men 35 and older, and Australian Davis Cup veteran John Alexander won his first major Australian tennis title by beating his doubles partner, John Fitzgerald, in the $125,000 New South Wales Open.

Lendl, who won his 15th event on the World Championship Tennis tour this year, beat Scanlon, 6-2, 6-4, 7-5, to pick up $100,000, increasing his season earnings to $1.6 million.

Fillol took home $17,000 as he dashed past Smith, 6-3, 5-7, 7-5, in the tournament at Marco Island, Fla. The two finalists then combined to win the tournament doubles and split $19,000, beating Tom Gorman and Charles Pasarell, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1.

THE 31—YEAR OLD Alexander, runner-up in more than 20 previous Grand Prix events, went on to beat Fitzgerald, 4-6, 7-6, 6-4, after saving a match point during a tie-breaker in the second set. Alexander's forehand volley on Fitzgerald's match point hit the two-inch tape on top of the net and caromed away from the latter's reach, landing in the court.

"For most of the match, John played better than I did — a net cord was all that beat him," the fifth-seeded Alexander admitted after picking up the winner's check for $20,000. Alexander and Fitzgerald later played together in winning the doubles final from countrymen Cliff Letcher and Craig Miller, 6-4, 7-6. They split $7,500.

'Tom Terrific' is back at home in Mets uniform

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Tom Seaver is back where he belongs — in a New York Mets uniform with a big "41" on the back — ready to enlarge on more vital numbers insuring him a niche in baseball's Hall of Fame.

"Numbers" — statistics — are baseball's life blood, and Seaver is bidding to become one of the all-time pitching leaders, and he's already up there in victories (264), strikeouts (over 3,000) and shutouts (50-plus).

He is 38 years old, coming off his worst season in 16 years in the majors with some alarmists darkly whispering his 5-13 record is proof that his onetime fireballing right arm suddenly has gone dead.

Ridiculous.

Only the year before — the strike-punctured season of 1981 — he had the best record in the majors with a 14-2 mark and 2.55 earned run average that helped the Cincinnati Reds post the top winning percentage in the split campaign.

Historically deterioration in baseball — whether it be hitting, pitching or speed — is not a precipitous thing. Barring injury or some physical freak, talent erodes gradually over a period of time.

Who of us can say whether, when spring blossoms, we will see the Seaver of 1981 or the Seaver of 1982?

Tom Terrific, as Mets fans adoringly refer to him, has clinically studied what happened in that 12-month gap and believes he has come up with the answer.

"I got a severe case of the flu in spring training," he says. I was stuck in bed a week. I didn't pitch for six weeks. I tried to come back too quickly. I didn't have any stamina.

"I developed some bad pitching habits. Our pitching coach, Bill Fischer, and I began to use film to study the mechanics of my pitching motion to see what I was doing wrong.

"We worked 50 minutes at a stretch on mechanics. I tried to slow everything down and found I was slowing my arm down.

"It was a nightmare. But I think I have overcome the problem. I have no qualms about my ability to pitch again.

"I am confident I can win 15 or more games for the Mets next year."

If it is a gamble for the aging Seaver, it is a double gamble for the struggling Mets and their reasonably new ownership. But the Mets see in Seaver more than a 15-game winner. They see a role model who can not only stabilize the young pitching staff but can stimulate interest among the fans who haven't forgotten the championship years of 1969 and 1973.

In retrieving Seaver in a deal that sent three young Mets to the Reds, the Mets boosted Seaver's exisiting contract from $450,000 to $700,000 with three more option years and incentive clauses which General Manager Frank Cashen said could put the veteran right-hander in the $1 million-a-year bracket during the life of the contract.

At that, Seaver is underpaid. For years, while compiling records that put him in the class with Walter Johnson, Christy Mathewson and Grover Cleveland Alexander, he made one-third the salary of lesser practitioners capitalizing on free agency.

"No, it's never bugged me," Seaver said. "I have never been one to make a big issue over money. And I certainly don't begrudge other guys getting what they can."

In negotiating with the Mets, he insisted that his contract not be guaranteed beyond next year.

"If I can't pitch, why should they have to pay me?" he said. "If I can't pitch well enough to pick up a paycheck, I don't want to be paid."

He is unbelievably honest, refreshingly frank, lacking in pretensions — a man of ethics and class.

There remains a lot of little boy in him. He is a strong family man. He seems to have his priorities well organized. Poised and personable, he could be a corporate vice-president as well as a TV talk show host.

"Reminded me of my first All-Star game in 1967," he said. "I had a locker between Sandy Koufax and Hank Aaron.

"Lou Brock thought I was a bat boy. 'Hey, kid, get me a 7-Up, will you?'

"It was amusing this week to see the swap in role models."

Brock got the 7-Up himself. Whatever his age, Tom Seaver always will be a boy at heart — the All-American Boy.

Perkins recalls Bryant's help

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Ray Perkins says he will never forget the moment Alabama football Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant came to his aid when he needed help most.

It was Perkins' first spring training in 1963 when tragedy set back a promising career. While running the football in scrimmage, defensive back Billy Piper came up to make the tackle and the players collided head on. As it turned out, Perkins took the bulk of the hit.

He was rushed to a Birmingham hospital, where the diagnosis was frightening. A blood clot had been found on Perkins' brain and the freshman would be in intensive care for nine days. The moment was a tense one for Perkins and his wife, Carolyn, but one made easier with the help of a concerned head coach.

"I had always had a lot of respect for Coach Bryant, and I gained even more when I was having my operation," said Perkins, who was due in Tuscaloosa today for the first time since the announcement Wednesday that he would replace Bryant as head coach.

Bryant plans to retire after the Dec. 29 Liberty Bowl in Memphis, Tenn.

"Coach Bryant means a lot, not only to the university, but to the state," said Perkins in a telephone interview. "And not just winning football games and championships as much as what it's meant for the young men who have gone through a great learning experience under him. I know I went through it when I was here, and I wouldn't trade it for anything."

Perkins, 41, is stepping down as head coach of the New York Giants at the end of this season to become Alabama's first new head coach in 25 years.

Bryant, who picked up five national championships and a record for career victories before announcing last week that he was quitting, has created for his successor a tough act to follow.

Perkins was redshirted at Alabama in 1963 after his injury, but he came back the next season and was an All-American wide receiver on the undefeated 1966 Alabama team that is generally considered Bryant's best.

He played pro football in Baltimore. After retiring in 1972, he became an assistant coach under Bob Tyler at Mississippi State in 1973. From 1974-77, he was a tight end and receiver coach with the New England Patriots before going to San Diego in 1978 as offensive coordinator.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Salnikov swims to world record

SWIMMING — Vladimir Salnikov of the Soviet Union broke two world short-course records in the European Cup finals. The Soviet swimmer, a double Olympic and world champion, improved his world best time in the 1,500-meter freestyle to 14 minutes, 37.60 seconds. His intermediate time at the 800 mark was 7:48.24, another world mark. Salnikov had clocked 3:42.96 in the 400-meter freestyle to better his own previous world best time by almost two seconds.

Michael Gross of West Germany set a world best time of 1:56.18 in the 200 butterfly and captured the 200 freestyle in 1:45.97.

GOLF — Chen Tze-Ming of Taiwan shot a par 72 for a 72-hole total of 279 and an eight-stroke victory in the $99,000 Taiwan PGA championship.

SKIING — Paal Gunnar Mikkelsplass won the season-opening Nordic World Cup event, beating fellow Norwegian Holte To Haakon in a snow-swept 15-kilometer race.

Bulgarian veteran Petar Popangelov edged Vladimir Andreev of the Soviet Union and Swede Lars Goeran Halvarsson to win an international men's special slalom ski race.

Finland's Matti Nikaenen edged three Norwegians to win the opening ski jumping event of the World Cup.

Conradin Cathomen of Switzerland, scored his first-ever World Cup victory in a men's downhill ski race, upsetting Austrians Erwin Resch and Franz Klammer.

TABLE TENNIS — Danny Seemiller of Pittsburgh won his fourth U.S. national men's singles tables tennis championship by edging top-seeded Eric Boggan of Merrick, N.Y. 9-21, 22-20, 21-15, 17-21, 21-19. Seemiller also won the title in 1976, 1977 and 1980. It is the third straight year Boggan, 19, a winner himself in 1978, has finished second.

Balls will be flying in Bengals, Chargers game

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The last time they met — in paralyzing Midwest cold and polar winds — the Cincinnati Bengals went on to the Super Bowl and the San Diego Chargers went home sore losers.

The National Football League's "Ice Bowl" rematch has arrived, this time in temperatures feeling 100 degrees warmer.

Last January, when the Bengals and Chargers dueled for the American Conference title, the mercury dropped to nine below zero and the wind chill factor measured 59 below.

Those conditions, along with the Bengals defense, stopped San Diego's high-flying offense cold. Chargers' quarterback Dan Fouts had his worst outing in 50 games — 15 of 28 for 185 yards — and suffered minor frostbite to his fingers.

"It was inhumane to ask any man to play quarterback in those conditions," groused San Diego coach Don Coryell, reflecting on the 27-7 loss.

While temperatures won't be as low, the stakes remain high when the Bengals, 5-1, and Chargers, 4-2, meet in tonight's nationally televised contest at San Diego Jack Murphy Stadium.

With just three games remaining, a Cincinnati victory could damage the Chargers' chances of a homefield playoff advantage — and could send San Diego to a cold-weather site for a second year in a row.

"It's a crucial game for us," said Kellen Winslow, the Chargers' All-Pro tight end. "If we beat them, we're in the top three of the AFC. If two teams end up 7-2 at the end of the year, the first tiebreaker for the homefield advantage is head-to-head competition."

Cincinnati has a chance to claim its third victory in 13 months over the Chargers, a feat unaccomplished since San Diego, defending three-time AFC West champs, became title challengers five years ago.

"You don't want a ball club thinking they own you," said Winslow, who had one of his worst pro games in a 40-17 loss to the Bengals in November, 1981.

No team has handled the Chargers better in recent years.

"They got to our quarterback better than anyone — with six sacks," he recalled.

"The elements had a great deal to do with that game. That wasn't a fair test. Not when the Humane Society is announcing to bring your dogs in and we were on a bus to go play a game," said Winslow.

After the game, the Chargers bitterly complained that a large gate was left open in the first quarter, forcing San Diego to pass into the brisk wind.

The Bengals are unbeaten in four games since the strike ended and the Chargers are on a three-game winning streak.

Fouts, playing some of the best football of his 10-year career, had a record day in last week's 41-37 victory over San Francisco, passing for a personal-high 450 yards.

Thomas sparks Pistons over Celtics; Mavericks, Spurs lose

AP Laserphoto

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

Usually the Boston Celtics are the team that takes control of a game in the fourth quarter.

Usually, but not Sunday night.

The Celtics were ahead 108-100 in the fourth quarter and seemingly headed for their 21st victory in 26 games, but the Detroit Pistons outscored Boston 31-6 the rest of the way to capture a 131-114 National Basketball Association victory.

Isiah Thomas scored 12 of his season-high 32 points in the final period and also finished with 16 assists to lead the Pistons. Center Bill Laimbeer contributed 21 points and 16 rebounds for Detroit.

"From the time we were up 108-100, we played very poorly," Boston Coach Bill Fitch said. "It was just horrible. When they got the smell of blood, they just went out and took the game over. Isiah is a great player. When they got out of synch, he took over. We usually have somebody do that for us."

"Thomas improves with every game. He's much, much more mature than last year," Pistons Coach Scotty Robertson said. "He still doesn't make all the right plays, but he makes more right ones than wrong ones."

"It's a lot of fun playing the Celtics, win or lose," Thomas said. "I love the way they move the ball. They play the kind of basketball I enjoy. You have to credit my teammates for what I did tonight. I had a lot of easy shots."

In the only other NBA games Sunday night, Milwaukee defeated San Antonio 113-98 and Los Angeles edged Dallas 110-108.

Thomas broke a 112-112 tie with three minutes remaining, and the Pistons poured it on the rest of the way.

Detroit, which has split four games with the Celtics in the last 20 days, charged to a 72-69 halftime lead, but fell behind while being outscored 29-19 in the third quarter. Detroit won the fourth quarter 40-16.

Larry Bird led Boston with 20 points, while Robert Parish, making his first appearance in a week because of a twisted ankle, scored 18.

Because Boston had Parish, who scored 14 points in the second quarter, Robertson was especially thrilled with the victory.

"It was a great win on the road for us, especially since we did it despite the cavalry. When they brought in Parish, it was like the cowboy coming over the hill," Robertson said. "I was so impressed I wanted to get up and cheer him myself."

Robertson added that his players "had a lot of heart. They battled back. I told Isiah in the third period I wanted the ball in his hands and to make things happen.

Bucks 113, Spurs 98

Sidney Moncrief scored 27 points for Milwaukee despite a bruised knee and he and Paul Pressey held San Antonio scoring ace George Gervin to five field goals in 21 attempts.

"Nobody really stops Gervin," Bucks Coach Don Nelson said. "But our game plan was successful. It's nice to have good defenders on him, but we need a good team concept defense with a player like that. We got it tonight."

Moncrief, who was 11 of 16 from the field, had nine points in the first quarter to lead the Bucks to a 34-21 lead, then had 16 more in the third period for an 87-72 advantage.

Lakers 110, Mavericks 108

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, after being sidelined two games with a sinus infection, had 33 points and 17 rebounds, his best output of the season, leading Los Angeles over Dallas.

The Mavericks led by 15 points in the third period and still were ahead 101-96 with 3:35 to go. The Lakers took the lead at 107-106, lost it again and regained the advantage 109-108 on a goaltending call against Bill Garnett after a shot by Jamaal Wilkes.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who along with Wilkes scored 20 points, hit a free throw with 13 seconds remaining for the final margin. Dallas, which got 20 points from Mark Aguirre, missed its last three shots.

Jets help the Devils do it

By The Associated Press

New Jersey, which has had a devil of a time winning National Hockey League games this season, finally found the right combination.

The Devils broke a six-game losing streak Sunday night by defeating the Winnipeg Jets 3-2 with two third-period goals.

After losing only one of their first seven games, the Devils have dropped into the doldrums. Even with the latest victory, their mark of 7-22-7 is the second-worst in the NHL.

But Coach Bill MacMillan, naturally was pleased with the triumph.

"It was more like the seven games we played at the beginning of the season," MacMillan said. "It's just the 26 or 27 games in between that we're worried about. I thought we played very hard and paid the price to win."

Hector Marini and Don Lever both scored their 13th goals of the season in the third-period rally for New Jersey. But MacMillan said the Devils will have to get more than the 23 shots on goal they managed Sunday night to win consistently.

"We don't have a great deal of offensive thrust, certainly not as much as Winnipeg," MacMillan said. "We've got to make the best of the opportunities we get."

In other NHL action, Buffalo beat Quebec 3-1, Washington topped Philadelphia 3-1, Edmonton defeated Montreal 5-2 and Chicago outscored Los Angeles 6-4.

Goalie Glenn Resch was another hero for New Jersey, stopping 27 Winnipeg shots, 11 of them in the third period.

After Tapio Levo had given the Devils a 1-0 lead in the opening period, Winnipeg came back for a 2-1 edge in the middle session on goals by Dale Hawerchuk and Dave Christian. The Jets held New Jersey to only four shots in the second period.

"It's a shame to lose this hockey game," Winnipeg Coach Tom Watt said. "I don't know what more we're supposed to do defensively. We made one error and it's in the net and costs us two points.

Oilers 5, Canadiens 2

Messier, scoring four times in a game for the first time in his NHL career, scored twice in a span of less than two minutes in the second period to give Edmonton a 2-0. Then the Canadiens rallied to tie the score 2-2 on a second-period goal by Ryan Walter and a third-period shot by Gilbert Delorme.

But 35 seconds later, Messier got his third goal, his 20th of the season, to put the Oilers into the lead to stay. His final goal came into an empty net in the final minute.

Capitals 3, Flyers 1

Washington, which has never made the playoffs, extended its undefeated streak to 13 games as Milan Novy, Bob Gould and Mike Gartner scored goals 2:09 apart in the third period.

Tom Gorence's first-period goal for Philadelphia held up until Novy scored with only 3:43 remaining in the game. Gould put the Capitals ahead with 2:55 to go and Gartner followed with his insurance goal 1:21 later.

Black Hawks 6, Kings 4

Chicago, which has 13 wins and a tie at home since Oct. 10, handed Los Angeles its fifth straight loss on third-period goals by Darryl Sutter and Denis Savard.

Steve Bozek and Jim Fox, who had two goals for the Kings, scored in a 48-second span early in the final period for a 4-4 tie, but Sutter scored the game-winner four minutes later. Savard's insurance goal was his second of the game.

Sabres 3, Nordiques 1

Gilles Hamel scored four minutes later for insurance for the Sabres, who outshot the Nordiques 43-12.

But Quebec's Basil McRae scored on the Nordiques' first shot of the game and they held the lead until Craig Ramsey tied it midway through the second period.

Americans win NATO tournament

CASTEAU, Belgium (AP) — A bench-clearing brawl caused Italy to quit the final game of an annual NATO basketball tournament Saturday, giving the title to the U.S. team by forfeit after only 1 minute, 13 seconds of play.

The score was 2-2.

"It was a bad situation. It was one of those things, both teams were pretty fired up," said one organizer of the tournament at the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE).

"I feel very embarrassed."

At 1:13, some rough contact between U.S. guard Shelby Brown and Italy's Fabio Colombo at the Italian end of the court, erupted into a fight that cleared both benches.

Brown and Colombo were ejected. After order was restored, the Italian team — winner of the 1981 tournament — walked off the court, giving the title to the United States.

"We play physical just like they play physical," U.S. Coach Chuck Large said afterwards, adding, "It is a hell of a way to end a tournament of this caliber."

OPEC freezes base price, sets production ceiling for 1983

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC ministers, straining to hold their cartel together, reached formal agreement today on a production ceiling of 18.5 million barrels a day through 1983 and to freeze their base price at $34 a barrel, said Ahmed Zaki Yamani, oil minister of Saudi Arabia.

The minister put off until later a decision on how to divide the sales among each of the 13 countries in the oil cartel. It was not known for how long the ministers agreed to freeze their base price.

The ceiling, 1.5 million barrels less than estimated current production, was discussed on the second day of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' year-end conference.

Sources close to the talks said the new ceiling would include quotas for individual countries allowing higher sales for Iran, Libya, Venezuela, Indonesia and Nigeria.

The sources said Saudi Arabia was being asked to hold its production at about 1 million barrels a day below its current voluntary ceiling of 7 million.

In a series of closed-door talks Sunday, the ministers pleaded their cases in a controversy analysts believe could decide OPEC's fate. The cartel has been racked by disputes over how to share oil sales and avert a price collapse.

Yahaya Dikko, president of OPEC and oil minister of Nigeria, had said, however, that he was "optimistic" an agreement on a production-sharing plan could be reached today.

Belkacem Nabi, oil minister of Algeria, was also upbeat, saying "each member of the organization is ready to do what is necessary to make agreement."

A system for limiting each members' output is considered by analysts to be essential to OPEC's unity, because a world oil glut has pushed the group to the brink of a price-cutting war.

Though OPEC's official price of $34 a barrel is about $4 higher than equivalent oil sold outside the cartel, several ministers said they saw no chance that the base price would be changed.

"We have to keep the price at $34," said Humberto Calderon Berti, Venezuelan oil minister, who also said he was convinced OPEC would end its conference in agreement.

Despite the ministers' public optimism, Iran and Saudi Arabia, who hold the keys to an OPEC agreement, gave little indication Sunday that they were ready to compromise on the production-sharing issue.

Saudi Arabia is by far the biggest producer in OPEC, but Iran is trying to expand its role in the 13-member organization. Iran made a new, though mainly symbolic, step in that direction by proposing that a member of its delegation be named secretary-general of OPEC. Marc Nan Nguema of Gabon, who currently holds the job, is scheduled to step down next year.

A more serious problem for OPEC is Iran's insistence that it be given a bigger share of sales at Saudi Arabia's expense.

Saudi Arabian state radio Sunday accused some OPEC members of "premeditated internal sabotage" and said the country would take suitable measures to protect the interests of the majority in OPEC. But the radio did not say what those measures would be, nor did it name the countries it called the transgressors.

Yamani told reporters his country was not willing to be included in an OPEC production-sharing plan, but insisted Saudi Arabia had tried to accomodate the needs of other OPEC members. The Saudis have never committed themselves to the production quota plan worked out last March, but have maintained a self-imposed ceiling on a voluntary basis in what they call the interest of cartel unity.

Yamani said Sunday his country was pumping about 5 million barrels a day, well below the Saudis' voluntary limit of 7 million barrels. Iran says it is producing 3 million barrels, compared to the 1.2 million-barrel ceiling it was assigned in March.

OPEC's overall output is estimated at 19.5 million barrels daily, well above the total 17.5 million set in March.

Indonesia and other countries have said at this meeting that the Saudis should participate in the production quotas.

The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries opened its year-end meeting Sunday in Vienna, Austria. The OPEC representatives formally agreed to limit their oil production to 18.5 million barrels daily and froze the base price at $34 a barrel through 1983.

Midland's response 'encouraging'

BY JIM PRESNELL
Energy-Business Writer

Spokesmen for Midland banks and thrifts agreed Friday that public response has been encouraging for the first week of the federally insured money market depository account.

The time of year was all wrong for introducing a new financial product, according to Jerry King, marketing man at Midland National Bank. "We are pretty pleased with the response. We're not making an assesment yet, and we are not elated" about the money fund account.

King felt that many people were shopping for Christmas gifts, taking vacations, and basically trying not to think about their finances.

"Activity in the new accounts was substantial," King said. He noted the bank is keeping figures on new dollars in the MMF account vs. dollars converted from other Midland National accounts that pay less interest.

Annual interest on the $2,500 minimum accounts was in the 10-11 percent range for the initial week, an "unrealistic rate," according to the head of a local brokerage branch.

E.F. Hutton broker Frank Maggio commented Friday that the banks and S&Ls cannot continue to offer interest rates on the account that "...will cut into the spread between what banks can get as return on investments, and the interest rate they pay on these accounts.

"The spread just isn't there," Maggio said, when the banks are paying such premium rates. He said with his brokerage's money fund paying nine percent or so in annual interest, there is just enough room to make a profit.

The Hutton broker hasn't seen a big outflow of capital from his office, but he doesn't blame customers for taking some money out now to invest in the banks' new product. "It's a high rate of return," he noted.

Money fund assets, The Wall Street Journal said Friday, dropped $4.73 billion in the first week of new competition under the Depository Institutions Act. That leaves another $225 billion for the banks to aim at getting.

"We're not trying to erode the customer base of other banks, and we are not trying to get lots of new customers," Don Luntey of First National Bank of Midland said. "We are just trying to provide a meaningful, competitive product for our customers."

Luntey, head of operations at the large independent bank, noted that First National's core deposits had migrated to money market mutual funds in recent years. "I know bank employees who had money fund holdings," he said, "but now we should see money fund dollars coming back, and customers will be able to consolidate financial needs with us."

Luntey said there are areas of confusion about the bank and savings institution money fund instrument — especially regarding rates paid. "People ask, 'How is yours different from everyone else's?,' and there is no easy answer."

Interest may be set at different intervals, may or may not be tied to economic indices, and institutions have the option of guaranteeing a certain rate.

Robert Sutherland, president of Texas American Bank here, said the account has met "certain expectations" of bank officials. The sudden deregulation "...will be tough for us — for quite awhile. But it's always good for the consumer."

The presently-available MMF account "...is not a checking account. It is an investment account," Sutherland said. Checking privileges (limited to three drafts a month) are part of the account, said the banker, but in January, a SuperNOW checking account will be unveiled.

Those who need to pay bills out of dollars they'd like to invest should hold off for the SuperNOW, an account Sutherland notes "will pay similar high returns, and allow unlimited checking account privileges."

Mary Rawls, an account representative with the same bank, said passbook and CD savings customers think the depository MMF account is a good deal. She estimates 50 customers per day opened the new account in the first week.

"I think the (MMF) TABank account will bring in more dollars. Customers are depositing more money, more readily than before," Ms. Rawls stated.

Janice Ham, customer services officer for Western State Bank, said "Many sizeable accounts were opened," under the new rules, and "We are proud to be part of the accelerating competition — and we're proud to be helping Midland grow."

At 10.5 percent, Ms. Ham described Western State's interest on MMF accounts as "very competitive" during last week's campaign. "A lot of this was idle money; idle because the economy has put people in a quandary about how to use their money."

"Those who had been afraid of investing their money are bringing it into these accounts, because there is no risk involved," Ms. Ham said. A feeling of security and fairly high short-term returns seems to accompany the introduction to customers of the money market fund account in Midland.

Reagan administration changing its tune on FHA loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, long critical of federal insurance for home loans, is changing its tune now that it looks as if such loans might help end the nation's recession.

Make room for more, President Reagan is asking Congress, less than a year after sending exactly the opposite message.

Federally backed loan programs have been popular for years. Buyers like them because they carry relatively low interest rates and often require only small down payments. Lenders like them because of the federal guarantee of repayment.

But Reagan officials have opposed wide use of them on philosophical grounds.

Private insurance firms already cover a big majority of home loans, but the administration says they should handle almost all the business.

Now, it seems a record surge of applications for loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration is making a real contribution toward bringing the housing industry back from several years of near-depression.

Falling interest rates, led by FHA, have encouraged buyers to buy and builders to build. And that could lead the entire economy to recovery from the long recession, some analysts and officials say.

Early this year, the administration tried to persuade Congress to limit the amount in FHA loans the government would insure to $35 billion in 1983.

Congress voted a $39.8 billion ceiling instead. But the higher amount now appears inadequate in light of FHA applications that soared past an annual rate of 1 million last month.

No one wants to jeopardize recovery at this point — least of all the president.

So Reagan asked Congress on Friday to raise the ceiling to $45.9 billion for the year that began Oct. 1. Congress is expected to agree.

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr., whose department runs FHA, called Reagan's action "a clear signal to the economy that the administration is committed to strengthening the housing industry and increasing homeownership opportunities for Americans."

That was a far cry from Budget Director David Stockman's statement last year that FHA was among federal credit programs "that serve middle and upper income families and ... need to be curtailed."

Stockman told Congress the administration would "carefully review the need for FHA mortgage insurance."

Many people in the housing industry still believe some administration officials would like to do away with FHA, at least as a major program.

He said he hoped the recent flood of FHA applications would put to rest the idea the program was not important. But he added, "There are still some critics out there, as we know, so we might have that battle again."

The critics are not the people who make the loans.

Mark J. Riedy, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, conceded Friday that administration officials "don't talk publicly about phasing out FHA."

Riedy, whose group's members handle a majority of FHA loans, said he was pleased with the move to raise the limit. But he asked why there should be any limit at all.

"When you put restraints on the program, you run the risk of strangling the housing recovery which is concentrated in the FHA and Veterans Administration markets," he said.

The administration's budget documents for the current fiscal year said the proposed $35 billion limit "reflects projections of future housing activity" — projections now apparently outdated.

The recommended figure also reflected "the recognition that private mortgage insurers will be able to adequately serve a larger share of the housing market" — an idea now discarded.

Pierce's Friday statement, distributed by aides, said HUD officials have changed their estimate for total FHA applications this year to 800,000 from 625,000.

Recent months' increases have accompanied declines in interest rates for the economy as a whole, and for FHA-backed home loans in particular. The ceiling rate for FHA loans is currently 12 percent compared with rates of 13 percent to 14 percent for other home loans.

Government figures have shown home sales and construction rising quickly in the past few months. And those increases tend to spur sales of many other items, such as carpeting, furniture, appliances and landscaping.

That kind of spending can mean economic recovery — and the administration has noticed.

Union workers vote to end 11-month Fina strike

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — About 400 union workers planned to return to work today at the American Petrofina refinery here, marking the end of an 11-month-old strike that was settled during the weekend.

Members of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union Local 4-23 ratified the new 2¼ year contract Saturday.

Union spokesman Doug Dubose said the workers agreed to the new contract only because of a management threat to hire replacements for all 400 striking workers.

"We're real proud of our people," Dubose said. "They're a solid group and they're still solid. They haven't been broken by any means."

He said union members made several concessions, but declined to specify them.

Federal mediator Hal Stookey had said the final stumbling block to a settlement was agreement on a back-to-work order. The dispute stemmed from the firing of a union officer during the strike, allegedly for picket line violence.

Union members also critized Fina for announcing a plan to lay off about 90 workers at the refinery.

Fina spokesman Gary Bruner said the company was pleased with the new contract, and said company officials never tried to break the union.

"We've made clear from the very beginning that the main issue, from the company's viewpoint, is that we had to have some flexibility in the staffing and managing of our workers at the refinery in order to operate profitably," he said. "This contract allows us to do that."

The new contract includes an immediate 9 percent wage increase and a 90 cents per hour boost in eight months. It expires July 1, 1985.

The accord was tentatively approved Wednesday night by union negotiators and representatives of the Dallas-based company.

Union members walked off their jobs January 8, when the previous contract expired.

Blast at power plant kills 95

CARACAS, Venezuela (AFP) — Firemen Sunday night gave up their fight against a huge fire at the Tacoa power station north of here, which killed at least 95 people according to a Venezuelan radio report.

Reports on the number of injured varied between 143 and 350.

The firemen abandoned their efforts for the rest of the night when the fire threatened to blow up a third fuel oil tank. The blaze started at dawn Sunday when one tank containing 45,000 tons of fuel oil exploded.

At noon, another tank blew up, sending flames over firemen and reporters in an area about 550 yards in diameter, and engulfing a police helicopter on the ground. Two police officers were badly burned.

By Sunday night, as flames were still leaping 65 yards into the air, the army had surrounded the area and evacuated all remaining civilians, according to reports reaching here from the scene of the disaster.

Aircraft from the Orinoco region's iron mining enterprises were spreading firefighting chemicals over the flames.

The explosion of the second tank caused most of the deaths.

The radio reported that 30 firemen, four police officers and 61 civilians were known dead.

After the second blast, nearby residents were evacuated, along with thousands of spectators, many of them Sunday bathers.

San Marino world's oldest republic

SAN MARINO (AP) - It looks more like the setting for a fairy tale than a real republic but this tiny state has its own parliament, its own stamps and its own army and once upon a time it even had a coup d'etat.

It is the oldest republic in the world, founded in 301 A.D., and one of the smallest, with 23 square miles of territory in the hills on the Adriatic coast. It is surrounded on all sides by Italy and its 22,000 residents speak Italian.

Although it has a leftist coalition government — the only Communist-led government in Western Europe — most people here seem more interested in preserving the status quo than promoting class struggle.

"San Marino has a reality that is all its own," said Roberto De Biagi, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry.

There's no poverty, almost no unemployment, very low taxes, free medical service, free day-care centers and schools, clean streets, no terrorism, almost no crime and no compulsory military service.

Its capital, San Marino, is a medieval walled village perched on the top of a craggy mountain called Mount Titan. A winding road leads through green pasture land to the top, where policemen with white helmets and white gloves politely direct traffic. A funicular glides up and down the slopes.

The state's major source of income is tourism — an estimated 2.5 million visitors pass through each year. Tourists cram the narrow cobblestone streets and tidy squares surrounded by stone houses with red tile roofs and balconies.

The souvenir shops, the little post office selling commemorative stamps, the modern government palace made to look like a 13th-century building and the soldiers in medieval dress all make the state seem more like a cute place for tourists than a real-life country.

But World War II showed the republic's sovereignty was real. San Marino was neutral in the war, and so was spared from the Allied bombings. About 100,000 Italians sought refuge inside the city walls, and people in surrounding areas are still grateful to San Marino for saving their lives.

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

JAKARTA, Indonesia — About 10,000 persons had gathered at a square in central Jakarta last March 18 for a rally by Indonesia's ruling Golkar coalition when fighting broke out in the crowd. Before the night was over, rioting and arson instigated by youths shouting Islamic slogans had spread to other parts of the city, and troops were called in to quell the disturbances.

News of the rioting was suppressed locally, but witnesses reported later that many Golkar members, including women, had fled the scene after shedding their party uniforms, which were then heaped up and burned by the rampaging youths. The government denied reports that at least a dozen persons were killed.

Eight months later, critics of the government cite what has become known as the "Banteng Square incident" to support their contention that all is not well with the seemingly stable government of President Suharto, who has held power for the past 16 years.

Like the volcanoes that dot the islands of this sprawling archipelago of 150 million people, the critics say, tensions seething under the surface of the normally placid political landscape can erupt with little warning and great violence.

"There is a social explosiveness here," said one prominent dissident, Abdul Haris Nasution, a retired army general.

IT WAS PERHAPS with this in mind that the religious affairs minister, Alamsyah Ratu Prawiranegara, last month called in councils representing Moslems, Catholics, Protestants, Buddhists and Hindus to sign a joint statement that he said was to help reduce possible unrest connected with a session next March of the People's Consultative Assembly.

The assembly is scheduled to reelect Suharto, running unopposed, to another five-year term. He also wants it to ratify his declaration that the already tame political opposition parties must no longer be based on religion, but only on the official state ideology, known as pancasila.

On the surface, Suharto seems stronger than ever. At 61, he appears sufficiently in control to turn his attention to building a legacy of harmony and unity that will override the diversity of this 13,600-island archipelago and consolidate its nationhood.

Rebellions against Jakarta's rule have been put down in East Timor, Irian Jaya on New Guinea and the north Sumatran province of Aceh. Hundreds of Moslem agitators have been arrested, and troublesome student groups have been suppressed.

At the same time, Suharto has steadily pursued economic development. Per capita income of $560 last year lifted the country out of the ranks of the world's poorest nations. Potential rivals have been kept at bay as Suharto deftly has played them off against each other.

The Army's loyalty has been maintained through the parceling out of government posts and money and various "extrabudgetary enterprises."

WHILE EVEN OPPONENTS see no threat to Suharto and no immediate prospect of an upheaval, they point to festering resentments that could pose challenges in the future. The world recession is hitting Indonesia harder than expected, and the estimated 50 percent of the population that still lives in poverty may face tougher times ahead.

Besides opposition to Suharto's secularism from militants among the 90 percent Moslem population, there appears to be growing resentment against religious and ethnic minorities — particularly Christians, who hold some important government posts, and Chinese businessmen, who dominate the private economy through symbiotic relationships with Indonesian generals.

Although Indonesia remains strongly attached to the Nonaligned Movement, U.S. and Indonesian foreign policies closely coincide, and the United States staunchly supports Suharto, who paid a state visit to Washington in October.

The importance that the Reagan administration attaches to Indonesia, the world's fifth most populous nation and the largest Islamic state, was summarized in recent testimony before Congress by Assistant Secretary of State John Holdridge, who has since been nominated as the new U.S. ambassador to Jakarta.

"Indonesia is the largest country in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, support for which is the cornerstone of U.S. policy in Southeast Asia," Holdridge said. "It is a moderate voice in the developing world, an important oil producer and a major arena for U.S. trade and investment. And it occupies a strategic position astride vital sea lanes connecting the Indian and Pacific Oceans."

NEGLECTED BY ITS Dutch colonialist rulers, Indonesia faced a difficult period after nationalists led by Sukarno won a four-year war of independence in 1949. President Sukarno consolidated his power under the slogan of "guided democracy" and aligned himself increasingly with Asian communist states and the 3-million-strong Indonesian Communist Party.

In 1965 the party was blamed for an unsuccessful coup attempt that resulted in the deaths of six senior generals and triggered a wave of murderous, military-backed retaliation against communists in rural areas. At least 500,000 Indonesians were killed in the succeeding months, including many noncommunist Chinese, as the reprisals took on the character of a holy war inflamed by anti-Chinese prejudice. More than 100,000 suspects were arrested, many of them to be held for years without trial.

Gen. Suharto, who as head of Jakarta's Strategic Command troops had crushed the abortive coup, gradually took power from Sukarno. He assumed key powers in March 1966 and a year later was named president by the assembly.

Suharto inherited an economic mess — inflation in 1966 was running at 640 percent — and launched a development-oriented "New Order" to replace the revolutionary philosophy of Sukarno, who died in 1970. As the basis of the new order, Suharto adopted the pancasila, or five principles described by historian John F. Cady as a "platitudinous affirmation" of nationalism, humanitarianism, representative government, social justice and faith in God.

From farmer to artist

A native Texan, Merritt Mauzey achieved national recognition as a print maker before his death in 1973. It was a career he did not pursue until he was 36 years old.

Included in the Museum of the Southwest's permanent collection are 146 works by Mauzey. These works will be on display on a rotating basis. The exhibit is made possible through the support of a member of the Midland chapter of the Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists.

Born in Clifton in 1898, Mauzey grew up in cotton country and eventually owned a cotton farm of his own. Although Mauzey was forced to sell his farm due to poor health and unstable crop production in 1920, he continued to work in the cotton industry.

Finally, in 1927, Mauzey moved with his wife and son to Dallas, where he was able to encourage his interest in art, while working full-time for a cotton exporter. He spent much of his free time haunting museums and galleries as well as reading books on art.

It wasn't until 1934 that his increasing interest in art prompted him to enroll in life drawing and etching classes during the evenings. Drawing on his memories of cotton farming, he began producing oil paintings and prints on the subject.

When he finally settled on lithography as his medium he said of the decision, "I chose lithography to tell my story in black and white as I am partial in my personal taste for lithography over all other black and white mediums — I love the strength of it, its vital qualities."

After making this choice, Mauzey began a series of prints about cotton. He wanted to document all aspects of its production, but it was not the mechanical side of the industry he wanted to capture but rather the human side — the daily life of the cotton farmer. He produced a number of lithographs on this subject, most focusing on the industry's human element.

In 1942, Mauzey was the recipient of a Guttenheim Fellowship in creative lithography. He received the award based on his proposal to make prints about Texas, thus the fellowship allowed him to travel and work as an artist for a full calendar year.

Following this experience, Mauzey returned to Dallas in 1943 where he was employed by the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. He worked in the retread shop until 1962, remaining prolific as an artist in his free time.

In addition to his art work, Mauzey was also the author of six children's books.

In "Cotton Farm Boy," "Texas Ranch Boy" and "Oil Field Boy," Mauzey documented aspects of rural life in Texas, with many of the images coming from his childhood memories of farming and ranch life. His other three children's books, "Salt Boy," "Rubber Boy" and "Rice Boy," explore new subjects, which he thoroughly researched to assure the story and illustrations contained in each were accurate.

Today, Mauzey's lithographs are included in the collections of the Amon Carter Museum of Western Art, the Corcoran Gallery of Art and the Whitney Museum of American Art.

His works on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., may be viewed during regular museum hours — from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday (the museum is closed Christmas Day) and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Included in the show are the tools required in creating lithographs.

LUFKIN (AP) — The everyday actions mark the passage of time here. The regular sound of tobacco-spitting. The constant smack of a domino announcing a win to the well-worn table. The calculated pull of colored beads along the abacus.

Each of these is perhaps more accurate than the dingy Dr Pepper clock on the wall, when it comes to graphing the time spent and the games played at one spot that has become a landmark of Lufkin — Domino Pavilion.

For nearly 14 years, the building — more commonly known as Domino Hall — has made the northeast corner of the courthouse lawn the busiest, noisiest and most charismatic. It has become a sort of combination second home and sport arena for the area's retired men, who never, but never, seem to tire of the game that draws them there.

That draw is tough to pinpoint. What is it about a one-room building filled with folding chairs, play-worn tables and vegetable-can spittoons that makes a man go there so frequently it could be considered his full-time office?

That "draw factor" lies somewhere between the fraternity of domino players and their fascination with the game. Most of them donate $3 each month for the coffee. In return, Domino Hall provides them with their friends, their entertainment and a dawn-to-dusk excuse to get out of the house.

It is a sort of men's club — minus the stuffed chairs and stuffy cigars — of the retired set. They'll be the first to say that women are welcome. But none of the women seem attracted to the domino hot spot. As for male regulars, there is no place they'd rather kill time.

As Russ Herring, one Domino Hall regular, says, "If it wasn't here, I guess I'd have to move."

Of course, many of the domino addicts are old enough to remember a time when Domino Hall wasn't here. But none can recall an era when the game itself wasn't.

"When we first started out playing, we were out right around here on the courthouse lawn under the oak trees," says John Eaton. "We moved to different corners, but you couldn't play when it was raining or in cold weather."

Mrs. Leland Jordan still recalls the outdoor domino games, too. She and her husband built the shelter in 1968.

"It was 28 years from the time I had the idea until the time came to pass that we built the building," she said.

Mrs. Jordan says her inspiration for the hall came from a moment of sadness. On the day of her father's funeral in 1940, she reminisced with the domino players about her father, who often had joined in the lawn games.

"As I walked away, the idea came to me to build a shelter so these men could play the game all year round," she says.

A busy life with many years spent abroad kept Mrs. Jordan and her husband from completing the project immediately. But when the time came, Mrs. Jordan consulted the man who knew best just what shape the building should take.

"They didn't want air conditioning. They didn't want central heating. They didn't want carpeting," she said. "They wanted it open so you could get a breeze, and they could feel like they were still playing under the trees."

As anyone who's had courthouse business knows, they're still playing. They play so hard and so intently that it borders on being considered part of courthouse business.

"I've played every Saturday night for the last 55 years," says Morgan Flournoy. "Every time one of my sons got married, why then I had to miss a Saturday night."

Rancher ready to claim independence of 'nation'

LOS INDIOS, Texas (AP) — A 72-year-old retired rancher, following his grandmother's prophecy, wants to turn a grassy, hurricane-carved island in the Rio Grande into a sovereign nation for the Indian people.

The 154-acre island-state would be called "Cherokee Nation," says Herbert M. Williams, who is half-Cherokee. He has already created sample postage stamps and coins for the tiny land.

"My mother always said, 'Son, one of these days you'll recover the land of our great-grandfathers.' This land was created by an act of God to give it back to the Indians," he said.

The uninhabited island — now in Mexican territory — was carved by Hurrican Beulah in October 1967 when the storm cut a new channel for the Rio Grande, moving the international boundary between Texas and Mexico slightly to the north.

Because the banks of the Rio Grande constitute Los Indios' only border, Williams contends the island is under the jurisdiction of neither the United States nor Mexico — an assessment disputed by officials of both countries.

Williams also refers to a 1905 treaty between the two nations which he says allows the original property owners to retain title to any land affected by changes in the river's course.

Williams said he now owns the island, having purchased it in 1968 from two other Texans. And when next spring's rains fill the river to its banks, the Indians will own it, he said.

"When the water's up, we'll start issuing the stamps, name ambassadors and cabinet ministers and put some families of Kickapoo Indians on the island," he said.

Many homeless, migrant Kickapoos now live in Southwest Texas near Eagle Pass. The Cherokee tribe, based in Tahlequah, Okla., has declined to participate in colonizing the island.

Mexican and U.S. government officials do not dispute the Texas-born Williams' ownership of the island. But they do challenge his interpretation of international boundary conventions.

"There's no question about what country it's in — Mexico," said Robert Ybarra, secretary of the International Boundary and Water Commission in El Paso.

Strategic planning consultant named UTPB assistant professor

ODESSA — James Lloyd Williams, a strategic planning consultant from Chicago, Ill., has been named assistant professor of finance at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, effective Jan. 1.

As a strategic planning consultant for ADP Network Services, Inc., of Chicago, Ill., Williams worked with economic and investment clients, including major oil companies and economic consulting firms.

Prior to his consultant position, he was a strategic planning specialist, providing market, financial and economic time sharing services to planners and economists. In addition, he designed and supervised the development of economic and financial forecasting models.

Williams also did consultant work in St. Louis, Mo., and held several teaching positions, including assistant professor of management science at Lindenwood College of St. Louis, Mo., and instructor of computer methods at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.

Currently completing doctoral work in economics at the University of Arkansas, Williams holds a master's degree in mathematics from the University of Arkansas and a bachelor's degree in mathematics from Arkansas Tech University.

He has written articles for the American Mathematics Society and Marketing Management magazine.

Clinch River Breeder Reactor project clings to life

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinch River Breeder Reactor stubbornly clung to life over the weekend, but an impatient Congress told electric utilities to share more of the cost of the experimental nuclear power plant if they want it completed.

A House-Senate conference committee agreed to approprite $181 million for Clinch River in fiscal 1983 but said none of the funds can be spent on building the plutonium-fueled reactor or buying more components for it.

The project, aimed at demonstrating the commercial worthiness of a new type of reactor that would produce or "breed" more fuel than it uses, was authorized by Congress in 1972.

Even though $1.3 billion has been spent in the past decade on designing and ordering 70 percent of the parts for the 375-megawatt power plant, construction has yet to get under way on a 90-acre site at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

"If it were not for the Senate majority leader, it if were not for it being built in his state, it would have long ago been terminated," Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., said Sunday in urging the conferees to accept a House vote last week deleting funds for Clinch River from a stopgap spending bill.

Bumpers, a long-time opponent of the Oak Ridge project, argued the same case in the Senate in the wee hours of Friday morning.

But Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, sitting on a table near the front of the chamber and watching the vote, nodded to colleagues whose support he needed. He mustered a 49-48 majority at 4:30 a.m. to keep the project alive.

The House — led by an unusual coalition of environmentalists opposed to expansion of nuclear power and fiscal conservatives wary of spending federal money to subsidize utilities — voted 217-196 last Tuesday stop the flow of federal dollar to the project.

UTPB, Midland College sponsor tour of Polynesia

ODESSA — A course which involves a tour of the Polynesian Islands represents a cooperative effort between Midland College and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

According to Dr. Anne B. Hyde, UTPB instructor of anthropology, students from both schools will meet together for lectures prior to the trip, which will be from May 29 through June 12. Students also will travel together.

Midland College students will enroll in Archaeology 2302, Peoples and Cultures of Polynesia, while UTPB students will enroll in Anthropology 489 or Behavioral Science 689, Peoples and Cultures of Polynesia. Outside readings and class projects will be included in the work for the various classes.

Included in the course is a series of Saturday orientation lectures prior to the trip. Tours during the trip will include Tahiti and Moorea, Society Islands and Viti Levu, Fiji.

"We will visit cultural centers, archaeological sites and museums and explore traditional villages and modern cities during the trip," Dr. Hyde said, noting students attending the tours will participate in on-site seminars and discussions.

The Saturday lectures are open to the public and free of charge to anyone interested in attending, she said. The first lecture, scheduled April 9 at UTPB, will include an overview of the islands, peoples and cultures of Polynesia.

The second lecture, to be conducted at MC April 16, will examine Polynesian archaeology with case studies of the Fijian and Society Islands. The final lecture will look at ancient and contemporary Polynesian cultures with case studies of Fiji and Tahiti April 23 at UTPB.

One of the tours on the trip to Tahiti will include the Gauguin Museum, botanical gardens, Point Venus, Matavai Bay, Faaruumai waterfalls, the lagoonarium, local plantations and others. Also included will be places of interest in Papeete, the capital, and tours of Cook's Bay, Belvedere Overlook, Opunohu Valley Archaeological sites, farms, villages and other places of interest in Moorea.

At Viti Levu, Fiji, students will visit the Fiji Museum, botanical gardens, Fijian and Indian markets, Grand Pacific hotel and other places of interest in Suva, the capital. Sigatoka Valley plantation, villages and archaeological sites also will be included, along with visits to the National Dance Theatre of Fiji, the Orchid Island Gardens and the Fijian Cultural Center.

Cost of the trip is $2,250 plus tuition and fees at UTPB or MC. Covered in the trip cost is roundtrip airfare, transfers, luggage handling, hotel rooms at double occupancy, all tours, guides and buses.

Autopsy reveals cause of man's death

ODESSA — An autopsy revealed that a dead man found in a refrigerator at the Goldsmith dump Friday died from a gunshot wound to the head, Ector County sheriff's officials said, but the man's identity still is not known.

According to Capt. Gene Kloss, the man had been shot in the head with either a .38-caliber or .357-caliber weapon and had been dead one or two days.

The dead man was found early Friday afternoon by a man at the Goldsmith dump. The man opened an old refrigerator, Kloss said, and found the nude body of the black man inside. The man then called the sheriff's department.

The dead man is believed to be about 30 years old, but other identification eludes officers at this time.

Woman held for Midlander's murder

Tom Green County sheriff's deputies arrested Angelita Flores Rodriguez a little after 11 p.m. Friday at a cafe in San Angelo. She was charged with first degree murder in connection with the death of Jesse Gutierrez Rodriguez, 26, of Midland. Deputies said the victim and Ms. Rodriguez are not related.

She is being held in lieu of $50,000 bond on that charge and is also charged with public intoxication and possession of dangerous drugs. The woman was arraigned by Peace Justice Jerry Jennison on Saturday and then released to Odessa police detectives.

Rodriguez's body was found in an alley in the 800 block of Magnolia Street in Odessa Dec. 5. He had been shot twice, police indicated.

Police investigate thefts, burglaries

Midland police are investigating a number of thefts and burglaries over the weekend including a break-in at a Tall City residence that cost the inhabitants $800 worth of personal effects.

Junior Reyes Meregildo of 607 N. D, Apt. A, told police his apartment was broken into between 11:30 p.m. Saturday and 9:15 p.m. Sunday. Meregildo said items taken by the burglars included a 19-inch color television, a television stand, a piggy bank and an AM/FM stereo with two speakers.

C.E. Patteson of 3303 W. Golf Course Road reported the theft of a .357 magnum revolver valued at $350. He said the revolver was taken from a vehicle parked outside 2517 Seaboard at 5 p.m. Sunday.

Lee J. Clemons of 1213 E. Oak reported a burglary there which occurred between 11 and 11:30 p.m. Saturday. Taken were a yellow gold ring and $50 in coins, he said. Entry to that residence was gained by prying open the back door.

First annual Big Brother, Big Sister of Year named

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland Inc. named winners in its first annual Big Brother and Big Sister of the Year competition at its Christmas party Saturday. The party was held at the Big Brothers/Big Sisters office, 1900 W. Illinois, from 1-4 p.m. Saturday and was attended by the 210 adults and children who are matched in a Big Brother or Big Sister friendship.

Winners were selected on the basis of nominating letters submitted by their Little Brother or Little Sister, as well as the quality of the friendship as judged by parents and teachers. Those receiving honorable mention were: Dr. Greg Bartha, Bud Dole, Dirk Dieterich, Marvin Eastman, John Layman, Mark Griffith, Brenda Massey, Barbara McBride and Linda and Tom Brandt.

Following are the letters that were submitted by the matches of the Big Brother and Big Sister of the Year:

Hello, my name is Matthew Dawson and my Big Brother's name is Andy Graham. My Big Brother and I have been together for 2½ years. My Big Brother and I have lots of fun going to the movies, skating, bowling, Cubs baseball, out to eat and to his house. When we are at his house, we play with his Intelevision and his juke box. The reason I vote for my Big Brother is because he is nice and every time the swimming party comes up he supplies the pool. He is a lot of fun to be with and you ought to hear him sing. I think he should be Big Brother of the Year because to me he is Big Brother of the Year every day of the year.

My Big Sister, Beulah, really means a lot to me. I feel very comfortable with her and that is pretty rare for me. I can talk to her very easily without feeling shy like I usually do when I talk to somebody.

Beulah and I really have a lot of fun together and even though I have known her for only a short time, it sometimes seems like she is really my big sister.

That is what my Big Sister, Beulah Casey, means to me and why she should receive the award.

Amy Kelly

Food sensitivities: Subtle symptoms stir controversy

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Your nose is running the gamut ... from nonstop to stuffy. Your head feels like somebody mistook it for a soccer ball. And your nerves are wound up like a fishing line.

Could it be something you ate?

A growing number of health professionals are saying "yes." Despite the persistent doubts of the medical establishment, they're saying all of us have hidden food intolerances and sensitivities — minor allergies some call them — that to varying degrees impair our health and disposition.

Medical science has long acknowledged the acute food allergies that afflict some of us — the immediate reactions that clearly establish a cause/effect relationship.

But the more subtle symptoms — often not perceived until we stop eating a certain food that has become a staple of our diet — continue to be sources of controversy.

Some doctors and nutritionists who within the last three decades have studied the body's reactions to certain foods are attributing all sorts of ailments to food sensitivities. Estimates are that as many as 60 percent of the people visiting doctors' offices have symptoms either caused or complicated by chronic food sensitivities, that all of us are ingesting foods that tax our immunity systems.

AT THE HEART of these claims is a test that has drawn considerable attention recently among people seeking a cure to persistent symptoms their doctors have been unable to alleviate, and among health-conscious people in general.

Called the cytotoxic test (derived from the Greek word "cyto," meaning cell and "toxic," meaning poisoning effect), it is designed to pinpoint those foods to which we have intolerances. In so doing, say its advocates, it can also identify foods to which we are physically addicted — without which we would experience the discomforts of withdrawal.

After a blood sample is taken from the patient, concentrated amounts of a variety of foods without additives — usually 150 or more — are mixed with the patient's white blood cells (the body's first line of defense against ailments). If the cell is impaired or destroyed — as observed under a microscope — the technicians conclude that the patient's chemistry is incompatible with that food. The degree of incompatibility may be slight, moderate or severe. Some tests also include food additives such as preservatives, colorings, flavor enhancers and sweeteners.

At Physicians Laboratores Inc. in San Diego, where about five patients a day are tested on 186 different food substances, most patients react to 20 to 40 different items.

Patients are advised to remove from their diet for a minimum of two weeks to a maximum of three months (many adherents of the test differ here) the foods to which a negative reaction is shown. The reactive foods can then be reintroduced on a rotational diet — to be consumed once every four days.

Sadly, those foods we crave and consume most frequently often show up as culprits on cytotoxic tests. Among the most common food products that elicit a reaction: milk, wheat, corn, eggs, yeast (both baker's and brewer's), soybean, coffee, citrus fruits and chocolate.

SYMPTOMS SAID TO be associated with food intolerances include headaches, dizziness, ringing of the ears, blurred vision, watery eyes, runny or stuffy nose, heart arrythmias, nausea, rashes, chronic fatigue, joint ache, pallor, depression and mental lethargy.

If you wake up in the morning with a headache or runny nose and get immediate relief from a cup of coffee or what you eat for breakfast, it could be that you're addicted to those substances; that the temporary symptoms you experienced were manifestations of withdrawal, say the test's adherents.

They also claim that people prone to food binges are victims of food addictions, and that although we originally craved certain foods because our body needed them, necessity has turned into abuse in many cases.

"We acquire sensitivities by overeating certain foods or being born with them," said Doug Kaufmann, a former lab technichian and Navy medic who launched Physicians Laboratories Inc. four years ago to administer and evaluate cytotoxic tests. Kauffman's labs — believed to be the country's largest source of such tests — are in San Diego, Los Angeles, Mill Valley, Chicago and New York.

The test has attracted the most attention in California, although its major researchers — Dr. and Mrs. William Bryan — are based at Washington University in St. Louis. Kaufmann, 33, who studied under the Bryans, says his labs have processed 17,000 tests, growing from a handful four years ago to the present average of 600 a month.

He claims he gets referrals from 300 physicians, some of whom he says he has convinced by testing them free of charge. "I want to work through the medical community," he said. "My statement to the medical doctors is this: Give me your hardest patient. Once you see what it does, you'll be sold. A lot of doctors question its validity because it's such a simple concept — foods indirectly contributing to disease."

TO SUPPORT HIS point, Kaufmann cites this quote from a 1977 medical journal by Dr. John H. Boyles: "The history of medicine has repeatedly demonstrated that the simplest concepts are often the last to be accepted. The theory of food and chemical allergy, unfortunately, is an example."

Steadfast in its resistance to cytotoxic testing is the American Medical Association, which concludes that the method should be reserved for experimental use only, and the American Academy of Allergy and Physicians.

"The academy says there is no proof that cytotoxic testing is effective for diagnosis of food or inhalant allergies," said Dr. Ron Simon, a board-certified internist and allergist who is president of the San Diego Allergy Society.

Said Simon: "Lots of studies in medical literature suggest the test is invalid." You can't, he added, accept individual anecdotes or testimonials — which proponents of the test voluminously cight in their promotions — as medical documentation.

As for the hidden intolerances that Kauffman is concerned with, "If you eat something and feel fine (regardless of what the test may show), why worry?" said Simon.

Counters Kaufmann: "We're out of the allergists' league and they're out of ours. We're dealing with an isolated field of medicine they don't understand. They're zeroing in on the Type 1, the acute and immediate food allergies that only 3 percent of the population have."

ADDS DR. GEOFFREY Cheung, a biochemist and medical school instructor employed by Physicians Labs: "What they (the allergists) ignore and we address are the 95 percent of the population who suffer from delayed, masked, occult, secondary and cyclical sensitivities. The cytotoxic test is no more an allergy test than a flight to the moon. Some people may administer our test and call it an allergy test but that's a misnomer."

Addresses provided to transsexuals seeking help

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I would like to express my thanks for all the kind words and support you have given to transsexuals over the years. (A transsexual is a person genetically of one sex with a psychological urge to belong to the opposite sex — an urge sometimes so overwhelming that it leads to a sex-change operation.)

While addressing a national convention of electrologists recently, I was frequently asked, "Where should we refer our transsexual clients?"

In the past, Abby, you have recommended the Janus Information Facility as an information and counseling source for transvestites and transsexuals.

It might be helpful to provide your readers with other sources, since thousands are seeking help.

GENERAL INFORMATION SERVICE: Janus Information Facility, 1952 Union, San Francisco, Calif. 94123.

TREATMENT PROGRAMS: Gender Dysphoria Program of Orange County, Inc. (a non-profit corporation), 31815 Camino Capistrano, Suite L, San Juan Capistrano, Calif. 92675.

Again, Abby, thanks for your help and understanding over the years. — CHRISTINE JORGENSEN

DEAR CHRISTINE JORGENSEN: Because the whole subject of transsexuality has been so universally misunderstood and those who need help don't know where to get it, I am printing your letter.

Read on for a letter that will make your day:

DEAR ABBY: This is truly a story with a happy ending, which I hope you will print for others who might be suffering as much as I was.

After years of anguish and worry, wondering what was causing my son's unhappiness, nine months ago, at age 32, he confided to me that he was a transsexual and had made his decision that he must finally live the truth and become what he was mentally and psychologically intended to be — a female.

At first I suffered guilt, shame, confusion, fear, and I even went into mourning for the son I had lost. But then, the love for my child transcended these feelings, and above all, I realized that he needed my love and support more than ever. He had already sought the necessary psychological counseling and hormonal therapy, and four months ago he successfully underwent the sex-change surgery.

I now have a happy daughter, at peace with herself, and it fills me with joy to hear her laughter — something I had never heard before. — HAPPY MOTHER IN CALIFORNIA

Too many seals, sea lions in California, scientists say

By TIMOTHY CARLSON
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — California seals and sea lions — once on the verge of being wiped out by commercial hunters — have become too numerous and may once again have to be "harvested," say two marine scientists.

Dr. Charles Cooper of San Diego State University and Brent S. Stewart of Hubbs-Sea World Research Institute said that if the rapid growth continues, "profound" changes in the marine environment could occur. Already, the burgeoning population of seals and sea lions is disrupting coastal commercial and sports fishing, damaging gear, entangling nets and stealing fish.

At a symposium sponsored by the California Coastal Commission last month, the two scientists insisted they desired only to provoke further study on potential problems. But environmentalists and animal rights groups say the language of their study reflects a bias toward commercial fishing interests.

"I disagree with their conclusions," said Martha Davis, a spokeswoman for Greenpeace, a conservation group which has led the fight to stop the yearly slaughter of Canadian fur seals. "There is no question that as a result of protection there will be an increasing number of conflicts in the marine environment, but to call it an 'overgrowth' and to assert that the optimum management strategy is to commercially harvest the seals is a mistake," she said.

"We have found over and over that commercial harvesting increased the value of species' pelts, which led to illegal harvesting. These additional pressures could easily lead to endangering these species once again."

The scientists contend that campaigns designed to protect the popular sea mammals — such as the Greenpeace voyages to stop the slaughter of seals in the Pribilof Islands — may have worked too well and that public attitude changes may be necessary before any supervised slaughter can begin.

Legislative hurdles involved in changing present policies protecting seals and sea lions are formidable. Elephant seals and Guadalupe seals are protected species under the Federal Marine Mammal Protection Act. Since the measure was enacted, it had been illegal to injure, harass or kill sea mammals without a federal permit — except for scientific purposes.

Getting a majority of Congress behind any fundamental change, such as a sea lion harvesting measure, would be a slow and thorny process. And an imposing set of California state laws prohibiting injury to sea mammals would also have to be changed.

Nonetheless, Cooper and Stewart say it's not too early to begin thinking about "thinning" the seal and sea lion herds.

"The main theme is that we are having a spectacular conservation success story resulting from law enforcement backed up by public opinion," they wrote in a paper delivered at the symposium. "But along with that success story could be an increasing number of conflicts. What we have to do in the future is consider the whole marine environment, rather than just one separate species. Nothing in the biology of these species precludes sustained yield harvest for saleable products.

"Basically, we're raising a flag," they added. "It may be that the public would prefer an unlimited mammal population, even if it does bring unintended problems."

Elephant seals breeding on San Miguel Island have been observed doubling their populations every five years. Cooper said there are now approximately 60,000 elephant seals on San Miguel in the Channel Islands. "In 1958, there were exactly eight," said Cooper.

Gifts for folks back home added to spending bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is tying the ribbons on a multibillion-dollar Christmas package that has visions of sugarplums dancing in the heads of contractors and lobbyists everywhere.

The package is the stopgap spending bill essential to keep the government going. Its very necessity is what makes it so attractive to congressmen and senators who want to take home a little something special — like money.

So in the spirit of the season, working busily as Santa's elves, lawmakers and appropriations committees last week were decorating the bill, adding specifics that would provide gifts for the folks back home.

The House tucked in $3 million, as an example, for the yet-to-be-built Carl Albert Congressional Research and Studies Center, which will be located in the former House speaker's home state of Oklahoma.

And then there's the Delmarva fox squirrel. The House decided that the little fellow's home in the Blackwater National Wildlife Refuge in Maryland needed sprucing up. Thus, Congress directs "habitat improvement" at Blackwater in the $25 million it allocates for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Since the bill is not yet final, no one is sure exactly which of these programs will survive. But, as surely as Christmas comes once a year, some of the special projects pushed by members of Congress will come to reality.

Their task was made easier this year by the decision of House Democrats to tack a $5.4 billion jobs program onto the bill. Jobs take money anyway, so the House Appropriations Committee simply put in specific programs and created new ones.

The Small Business Administration, for example, would get $50 million for "natural resources development programs." Translated, that means people would get jobs planting trees.

Roads, bridges and canals, along with improvements in national parks, fish hatcheries and wildlife refuges, were particularly popular in the House committee when it wrote its version of the bill.

The committee directed that Cow Castle Creek in Orangeburg, S.C., be cleared of snags, and that the shoreline be protected at the Fourth Street Bridge in Florance, Kan. The wildlife refuge in San Francisco Bay would get a new fishing pier, while the Charles M. Russell wildlife refuge in Montana would acquire a new administration building.

The list of projects runs on for pages, leading a scornful Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., to call it "one of the biggest grab-bags of Christmas presents this chamber has ever seen."

Conte said the measure was "drafted with a magnet. Every program with a nut or bolt within five miles has been drawn into this bill.... Somewhere on the way to the forum, this jobs bill got hijacked and soaked in a pork barrel."

Meanwhile, still to come was the House-Senate conference committee that resolves differences in the House and Senate bills, making the final decision on who gets how much.

And if usual tradition is followed, the committee also will have a few surprises for Christmas.

Nine-year-old New Mexican quadruplets still believe in Santa

By The Associated Press

Jolly old St. Nick, who comes down chimneys and leaves gifts for good little girls and boys, still lives in the imaginations of the Segura quadruplets, born nine years ago on Christmas Eve.

"They just keep wondering how come he doesn't die or something; he's so old," said the quads' mother, Margie Segura, 34, of Artesia, N.M.

Santa Claus? "He's nice," said Florencio, the first-born of the identical quadruplets.

The boys' faith in the tooth fairy has been shattered, but they still believe Santa mysteriously will appear to bring them Christmas gifts.

Florencio, Fabian, Fernando and Fermin were born Dec. 24, 1973, at Artesia General Hospital. Doctors told Mrs. Segura and her husband, Florencio Sr., that the birth, which did not involve fertility drugs, could be figured at odds of 180 million to one.

Santa will be leaving weights and benches under the Christmas tree for the Segura quads, who now are in second grade at Yucca Elementary School in Artesia.

"We're trying to get them into physical fitness," Mrs. Segura said. Their sister, Katie, 13, wants a cassette player and tapes for Christmas.

When Christmas comes, it's a double celebration for the Seguras — the quads' birthday party is on Christmas Eve. "They usually invite the whole class," said Mrs. Segura.

Ask Fermin what he likes most about Christmas, and he'll reply: "My birthday. We're going to have cake, ice cream, punch and cookies."

Their birthday presents this year will be a surprise. Last year, they got boxing gloves and have "gotten some practice on each other," their mother said.

The boys still pose a problem of identification for their father, said Mrs. Segura. But he's starting to tell them apart "a little bit more now."

They're not having to wear name tags in school this year, either, said Mrs. Segura. There are two second grade classes at Yucca, and there are two Seguras in each class. Fabian now wears glasses, so that helps.

There's only about a half-inch difference in height between Fermin, the last-born, and Florencio. Fermin is about a pound heavier than Florencio.

The boys still dress alike. And all want to be truck drivers when they grow up. Their father drives tankers for Navajo Crude Oil.

New Mexico now has two sets of quadruplets, and Santa also will be turning his sleigh in the direction of Las Cruces to visit Ryan, Matthew, Courtney and Marisa Muench, who are 1¾ years old.

The quads are toddlers and "they climb on chairs and up on tables, wherever they can get," said their father, Joe Muench, 35, sports editor at the Las Cruces Sun-News.

The quads, who were born June 12, 1981, weigh about 22 pounds each. "They eat regular table food," said Muench. "They like pudding and bananas. They go through two bananas in about one and a half minutes."

The Muenches will be spending Christmas at home this year. "We can't charter an airplane," Muench quipped.

When their other child, Joseph, 6 and in first grade, awakes on Christmas morning, the family will open their gifts. The quads get up too early, about 5:30 a.m., so Joseph will be the Christmas Day alarm clock.

Joseph will be getting clothes, cars and trucks from Santa this year, and the quads are getting "little big-wheel bikes," Muench said.

Manufacturing employment listed

Although U.S. manufacturing employment continues to be concentrated in the North, over 25 percent of the jobs in many Southern states are manufacturing-based. This list includes North Carolina (34 percent), South Carolina (32 percent), Tennessee (29 percent), Arkansas (28 percent) and Alabama and Mississippi (27 percent each).

Diving can cause spinal damage

Diving and head-first sliding into water account for the most serious aquatic injuries because of spinal cord damage. Of the 700 or so spinal cord injuries resulting yearly from U.S. aquatic accidents, the majority are serious enough to cause permanent paralysis.

Brazil stifled by worldwide recession

By K. MICHAEL FRASER

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — It is vast, industrious and rich in fertile land and mineral ores — no longer the country known only for filling the world's coffee cups or its ears with samba and bossa nova music. Its leaders and many others talk of its someday becoming a world power.

But today Brazil is in trouble.

It has run out of liquid foreign reserves and is paying its bills on a day-to-day basis.

An Analysis

How did it happen?

Brazil banked on rapid industrialization, diversified exports and massive energy projects to bring large dividends. But instead it is facing declining world demand for the things it has to sell — motor vehicles, aircraft, military weapons, shoes, soybeans — as well as the old standbys, coffee and sugar.

BRAZIL'S MOST important economic authorities — Antonio Delfim Netto of the Planning Ministry, Ernane Galveas of the Finance Ministry and Carlos Geraldo Langoni of the Central Bank — are dashing from the modern inland capital of Brasilia to New York and Washington, to London and Tokyo, and to all the world's money centers scraping together loans to stave off disaster.

Strongly backed by the United States, Brazil is receiving help. President Reagan, during his visit here earlier this month, announced a $1.23 billion loan.

U.S.Treasury Secretary Donald Regan has urged U.S. banks to keep their doors open for Brazilian requests.

The rescue operation is taking shape. A tentative agreement was reached with the U.N.-affiliated International Monetary Fund in Washington for emergency loans of $5.9 billion that most likely will be received in February. And foreign banks have been responding, too — but slowly.

THE ECONOMIC drama is rooted in the 1960s when the military-backed regime launched an aggressive industrialization program using easily obtainable foreign money.

The country borrowed heavily. The foreign debt has now reached almost $100 billion, including long, short and medium term loans.

Much of the money was invested in projects, such as the $14 billion Itaipu hydroelectric-dam project, which is the world's largest. An additional $3 billion was put into the Tubarao steel mill.

But by the beginning of the 1980s, the strategy began to fray. The debt reached the point where just paying the interest and the amortization — $18 billion this year for medium and long term loans — left nothing to invest.

The country, which imports almost 70 percent of its petroleum, has been forced to pay precious dollars, $11 billion last year, to fill its oil needs.

THEN THERE were some mistakes. The Tubarao steel mill, for example, is ready to start producing, but Brazil already has more steel than it can use.

And Brazil does not yet have the need for all the electricity Itaipu will generate, because it has been unable to build the factories the electricity is supposed to run.

Last year, when the country had a 110 percent inflation rate, the planning minister threw the economy into reverse. His aim was to slow growth and to build a trade surplus to give Brazil hard currency and less dependence on foreign loans.

The surplus was $1.2 billion, but the cost was unemployment and recession. The government has released no national unemployment figures; it gives a figure of 5.5 percent for the nation's six largest cities. Others say the government figures are unrealistic. Paulo Francici, vice president of the Federation of the Indusrtries for the State of Sao Paulo, estimates unemployment in that industrial state at 12 to 15 percent.

THIS YEAR, Delfim tried the same strategy, but faced the worldwide recession. Despite the efforts to increase exports, the goods sold outside the country in 1982 will be at the $20 billion mark, down 13 percent from last year.

The trade surplus for the year will be $800 million, a long way off from the $3 billion target.

Brazil has the world's ninth largest economy with a $285 billion gross national product, the sum total of all its goods and services.

Other factors have taken Brazil out of control of its own economic situation. Poland, Mexico, Argentina and a host of smaller countries have been unable to pay their debts, and the world's bankers have become cautious about taking any more risks.

BRAZIL, WHICH is larger than the continental United States, covers more than half of South America. Its coast is ribboned with 3,000 miles of beaches.

Egyptians seek foreign jobs with higher pay

GEBEL TEAR, Egypt (AP) —Mohieddin Bakr Hassan, 28, returned a few months ago to this mud-hut village between the desert and the Nile with $8,000 he earned while working for two years in neighboring Libya.

He is building a house and garden for his wife and two children on a plot of land he bought on the outskirts of the village.

More than 150 able-bodied farmers from the village of 3,000 people about 140 miles south of Cairo are still working in Libya. With the money they send home, new stone homes are being built on the village perimeter.

What is happening here is happening all over Egypt. Men are going abroad to work because the pay is higher.

It is a development that is changing age-old patterns of life — millions of Egyptians working abroad and dramatically improving standards of living at home.

"The desert is behind us and the river is in front of us," Bakr Hassan told a visitor recently. "We have to go outside to find work, to build a new future for our children. Our wives understand."

The government estimates that $2.25 billion was sent home last year by the estimated 3.5 million Egyptians working outside the country. Next to oil revenue of $2.7 billion, expatriate paychecks are Egypt's second most important source of foreign exchange.

The trend helps relieve Egypt's over-population problem and is a boom for roughly 25 percent of the work force that is taking advantage of it.

An Egyptian doctor, lawyer, teacher or engineer can earn $1,500-$2,000 a month to start and get free housing and other benefits in Saudi Arabia. The Egyptian government would pay the same professional about $50 monthly, and the private sector could never match Saudi pay.

An Egyptian can live on a government salary only because the prices of basic commodities are kept low by government subsidy, but even that is becoming increasingly difficult with housing costs soaring.

The boom has its drawbacks. The influx of dollars fuels inflation at home, where the per-capita income is $450 a year. The exodus of workers causes labor shortages, and puts the economy at the mercy of forces beyond its control.

Hiring a good plumber, electrician or carpenter is not nearly as easy as it was before 1970, when the government of the President Gamal Abdel Nasser strictly limited travel abroad. Allowing free travel from Egypt is one of the major tenets of the late President Anwar Sadat's "open door" economic policy.

In Minya, the provincial town near here, landowners complain the day wage of an agricultural worker has soared from the Egyptian pound equivalent of about a dollar in 1970 to $3.50 today.

"Some of my crops rotted on the fields because I could not get people to harvest it. Some landowners have even had to sell to the peasants, but not me, thank God," said Abdel-azim Ali Khalifa, a landowner in Bergaya, a potato and sugar cane growing village on the Nile's west bank north of Minya.

Khalifa estimated there were 1,000 television sets and 30 cars in his village of 28,000. Most of the luxuries were purchased with money sent from abroad, he said.

The People's Assembly, Egypt's parliament, has debated the pros and cons of allowing workers to migrate, but has come down firmly in favor of allowing the trend to continue — and putting more money into training programs.

Woman has gusto for life

WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — The air was peppered with calorie laden aromas. The woodiness of grilled eggplant collided with the husky fragrance of roasted oysters and drifted away in a smoky swirl filled with the essences of charcoaled leeks, scallions and mushrooms.

Martha Stewart was entertaining.

This particular spread was to celebrate publication of her new book, "Entertaining," which details recipes and hints for cocktail parties, wedding fests and holiday feasts.

Mrs. Stewart entertains a lot. And as head of her own catering firm, she cooks a lot. With passion.

"I do everything with passion," she said in the sitting room of her renovated 19th century house. "I am an artist, and whatever way I can do art, I do. My book is a record. Food is so ephemeral. You make it, it's gorgeous and you eat it.

"What I really want to do is really inspire people," she said. "I don't care if they follow my recipes to a tee — I just want to give them ideas."

Copper pots dangled over a work counter where Mrs. Stewart's mother, Martha Kostyra, steamed cabbage pirogis. Baskets of every size wove a wicker ceiling over a low kitchen table where a glass bowl of fresh spinach glistened with salad dressing.

An iron wood-burning stove stood cold with assorted tin molds clustered on its flat top, but flames flickered in the brick fireplace nearby and Mrs. Stewart stoked a smaller blaze in the beehive oven in the brick wall, where she was to cook tiny pizzas.

"Martha's biggest claim to fame as a cook when she was young was when she brought the entire football team home for breakfast," her mother said.

'Monster' to see universe's birth

LONDON (AP) — British scientists are planning to build a mammoth new "six-eyed monster" telescope, the world's largest, which they believe will let them see the universe as it was at the time of the Big Bang.

The telescope, to be built over a 10-year period in the Canary Islands, will capture light from so far away — and so long ago — that those who peer into it will see the glowing debris of the Big Bang, the massive explosion that many astronomers think marked the birth of the universe.

"When one looks with a very big telescope such as this, one is looking back in time," said Professor Alec Boksenberg, director of the Royal Greenwich Observatory and coordinator of the project.

"The light has taken a long time to get here. When it left, the universe was a lot younger than it is now. With this new telescope, we can go back quite close to the time the universe was created, at the time of the Big Bang, approximately 10 billion years ago," he said.

Such a vista could provide important new evidence about the Big Bang theory, including the question of whether it is comprehensive enough, Boksenberg said.

IN RECENT DECADES, scientists have noted that galaxies, nebulae and other astronomical bodies are hurtling away from one another at fantastic speeds. By measuring velocity and direction, they have concluded the matter must have been launched by an inconceivably powerful explosion.

Will the universe continue to expand, or will it collapse back in upon itself? Would such a collapse be followed by another Big Bang? Was the Big Bang only one in a series of such explosions?

"It is the central question in astronomy today," Boksenberg said in an interview.

The telescope that the Royal Greenwich Observatory hopes to build would cost about $64.8 million at today's prices and be 10 times as powerful as any existing light telescope.

Currently, the world's largest is the 236.2-inch reflecting telescope on Mount Semirodriki in the Soviet Caucasus. It is followed by the Hale Observatory's 200-inch reflector on Mount Palomar near Pasadena, Calif.

La Palma in the Canary Islands, where the new telescope is to be built, is the site of the telescope Greenwich currently operates — 165.4 inches in diameter, built on top of a 7,800-foot mountain.

Reflectors are more powerful than lens, or refracting, telescopes but are limited by size. Beyond the diameter of today's largest reflectors, the mirror becomes too big to manufacture — and the housing that contains it becomes prohibitively expensive.

The British design, which builds on a small prototype in operation at the University of Arizona, combines 25-foot mirrors in one housing.

"Instead of one big eye, you make a sort of six-eyed monster," said Boksenberg.

"Each mirror is feasible to build, but at the same time the whole structure is very much smaller. You then focus and combine the six images into one image using special optical elements, including fiber optics."

As Boksenberg and his colleagues envision it, the monster would be operated by remote control from Herstmonceux Castle, the Greenwich Observatory's headquarters 65 miles southeast of London.

IN RECENT YEARS, light telescopes have fallen somewhat behind radiotelescopes — which listen, rather than look at the universe — in the march of astronomic discovery. Boksenberg sees the new reflecting telescope reversing the trend:

"It turns out that in the optical and infrared range, the universe is transmitting the most information — data on molecular and atomic composition, an object's physical state, whether it's a gas or solid, how hot it is, how fast it's going — finally, what it looks like. Without that, you can't make much of the other observations radioastronomy can provide."

Early in 1983 Boksenberg expects to make formal application to Britain's Science and Engineering Research Council for funds to start building the telescope.

The decade-long timetable is "depressingly long," he said, but added: "This is the instrument British astronomers need to keep ahead of the world for the rest of the century."

According to Boksenberg, a group of scientists at the University of Arizona are working along similar lines and may also attempt a multimirror telescope.

But he doubts a trans-Atlantic race will develop. Rather, he said, it's possible the British and American groups will join forces, perhaps including European scientists in their project.

"In Britain, we have a strong tradition of astronomy, beginning with the founding of the Royal Greenwich Observatory by King Charles II (in 1675), and our modern astronomical research is second to none."

Town prepares for crow invasion

HOLDREGE, Neb. (AP) — At last winter's peak, the crows outnumbered the townsfolk 20 to 1 and now the people of Holdrege fear a fresh invasion is on the wing.

"Some of the crows are getting into the trash and spreading it around," said Terry Currey, the administrator of the village.

About 25,000 crows were in town last week. Last winter, the number reached 100,000 by February.

The big, black birds tend to congregate in the north park during the afternoon and sleep in the south park at night.

Currey said the crows come looking for trees to roost in, and a heavy snowstorm could drive even more off the farms and into town of fewer than 6,000 people.

"Then food would become an attraction," Currey said, and garbage would be their main target. "That's one of the health hazards," Currey said.

The number of crows was cut last year when the city invited people to shoot the birds. Such a program will not be undertaken this year unless the mayor and City Council mandate it, Currey said.

City officials say they haven't taken any steps yet to combat the new invasion, but they are watching the situation closely.

"We are considering the use of automatic noisemakers to drive the crows away from certain areas," Currey said.

Four noisemakers were purchased last year for $175 each, but didn't arrive until April, long after the crows had left.

Currey said the devices give off the sounds of gunfire and run several hours on a bottle of propane.

"We might consider using them in the parks," he said. "But since there are only four, the birds will probably just go somewhere else."

In the meantime, he said, "people should make sure they have tight lids or heavy lids on their trash containers."

Korea donates ambulances for refugee medical service

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — The South Korean government has donated 20 ambulances to provide medical services for about 3 million Afghan refugees living in different camps in Pakistan, The Associated Press of Pakistan news agency said last week.

It said the ambulances will be handed over to Pakistan Dec. 22.

In these tough times, Christmas message survives

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL

With the longing only a small boy can muster, he looks at a yellow car with a Snoopy doll at the wheel. The car, like the boy, is a magnificent miniature. It has a fiberglass body, a working 8-horsepower engine, and a price tag of $2,200.

"I want that car," says the boy.

"No, no," says mom. "That's Snoopy's car."

In a rented house near Children's Hospital in Pittsburgh, the Petersen family waits for a gift so grand that it is beyond price. Without a new liver, Susan Petersen won't make it to her third Christmas next year. Despite her fears, Susan's mother says: "Christmas is your family. We're all together, and we still have Susan. It's going to be a real nice Christmas."

In the prosperous place called America, there are new stresses in a time tougher than many can remember.

Christmas, 1982: a kaleidoscope of sights and sounds.

In Miami, Maria Valles wraps medicine and gifts to send to her family in Cuba; in Kansas City, anti-nuclear demonstrators carry a coffin among shoppers; in a home for the elderly in Concord, N.H., widow Bertha McNeal has to force herself into the Christmas spirit. But in Salt Lake City, a child is born and isn't that what it's all about?

In New York, a child in a yellow parka evokes the continuing wonder of Christmas. She reaches a gloved hand toward the tree in Rockefeller Center

AP Laserphoto

and says, "So big!"

Wonder is in short supply in New York; the clamor for attention is not. Nearby, their cries competing: a Jew-for-Jesus, a Santa Claus, a Salvation Army solicitor who asks "Is there somebody out there who cares about New York City like I do?" and a Bible-waving man proclaiming "the only answer is Jesus, Jesus, Jesus." It comes out GEE-sis.

A tall man in tattered black coat and green and red scarf swings his blind man's cane along 42nd street. "Thank you, thank you," he mumbles as coins clink into his plastic cup. A well-dressed man hurries past. The "blind man" wheels around and shouts: "You give me nothing."

And at the F.A.O. Schwarz toy store, a child's heaven on Earth, an elderly couple watches a robot. It marches forward, stops. Its chest pops open, guns flip out and the chest assembly spins, flashing and popping. The couple recoils. "I don't think so," says she. "No," says he.

BOURBON STREET, NEW Orleans. Girls in G-strings disco under a string of Christmas bulbs. In the Absinthe House, manager Bill Standfield speaks, not at all fondly, of Christmas: "This place falls apart. It just dies. It's the worst time of the year."

The holiday spirit, however, is alive on the sleazy "Block" in Baltimore, where red ribbons adorn X-rated videotapes at the Troc Pleasure Palace. The tape that sells best is "Talk Dirty To Me, Part II" for $79.95. Come Christmas Eve, strippers at the Stage Door will give themselves a Christmas party. "The bartender dresses up like Santa Claus, all the girls bring their boyfriends or their husbands," says a stripper named Sharon. "Then you get to see the little kids up on the stage dancing."

It's Christmas.

The air has the raw smell of wood smoke in Crested Butte, Colo. Snow crunches underfoot. At dusk, a bearded young man pedals home with a big blue spruce strapped across the handlebars of his bicycle.

Gambling knows no hours and no season. In Atlantic City, N.J., the gaudy casinos do not welcome Saint Nick. There are no decorations anywhere, but some cashiers in money cages are wearing holiday red and white blouses. Baptist pastor Samuel Jeanes, a critic of the gambling scene, explains the casinos want "nothing that would make a gambler say, 'hey, I got to go home and buy some toys for the kids.'"

For years the great aunt of an asthmatic girl, now 14, has given her the same present: a reprieve from the hospital in New York state. The aunt skimped to provide air fare and to rent a breathing device. This year she was short $60. Ellen Trivers, a Pan-Am ticket clerk, took up a collection among her colleagues and the child will have her trip.

SAN FRANSICSO'S faded Market Street: A stooped man snatches a soft drink can from a bench and drops it into a box under his arm. It will be worth a penny at the grocery store.

In the pristine whiteness of a maternity ward at the Latter Day Saints Hospital in Salt Lake City, David Hulbert is at his wife's bedside repeating once more, to a stranger, his litany of the morning: A boy. 7:26 a.m. Seven pounds, 8 ounces; 21 inches. No name yet. His dad's blue eyes. "It's the best thing that has happened in my life. And at Christmas time, it's special too."

In Middletown, Conn., the Rev. William O. Roberts Jr., tells his First Church of Christ that mothers "pregnant with new life," have always shared a vision of what their child's world should be:

"Peace and Justice will reign forevermore, war and injustice will be no more...the hungry He fills with good things and the rich He sends away empty."

But this may not be the year.

A chill mist rises off the San Jacinto River in Houston and 300 residents of a tent city try to make it through another day. Christmas in this echo of Hooverville is heralded by a "Thank You" sign lined with red and green tinsel. Help for the people in the tents, enthusiastic six months ago, is a trickle now; 75 children face bleak holidays. The community bulletin board says: "Remember Jesus was born in a place like this."

SUFFERING ALWAYS seems more so at Christmas. With millions unemployed, this year is worse than most. But God must have loved the rich; he made so many of them.

On Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills, Calif., where Rolls Royces roam, a saleswoman at Yves St. Laurent points to the favored gift in women's wear, a $1,050 rainbow pinstripe wool suit. Another store, The Happy Millionaire, offers $45 snakeskin belts for $20 and $750 Italian designer suits for men for a mere $390, in line with the slogan painted on its window: "We treat millionaires with poor people's prices and they simply love it."

A rainy afternoon in Dallas. Shoppers crowd the fine-jewelry counter at Neiman-Marcus. A favored customer in mink gets immediate attention; it takes her only a few minutes and a Neiman charge card to buy two pieces. The bill is in the high four figures. "Recession?" says the clerk. "We don't have one here."

Even in devastated Detroit there are bright spots. No letup at the Clark Avenue assembly plant which turns out 45 Cadillacs an hour, 16 hours a day. Company officials brag about their 7.4 percent in November-to-November sales. The recession seems to have missed the market for cars that sell for $16,000 and up. At Cadillac, the line will stop only for Christmas.

Wreaths and candles in all 21 windows on the north face of the White House proclaim the season. It is a glittering backdrop to the 35-year-old man, an opponent of nuclear weapons, who has camped outside the fence at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue for 18 months. "I'm sitting on Ground Zero," says William Thomas. "I'm going to be incinerated in a millisecond. It's as sure as the sun rising in the morning unless there is a change in people's thinking."

Inside the White House there are wreaths on doors and trees, trees, trees. A soft drink company sent boxes of ornaments, but they sit unopened and unhung. Few, it seems, want an ornament picturing Santa holding a bottle of Coke.

THE WORK-BOUND traffic on this crisp day streaks by and no one gives heed to the five homeless black men capturing a little warmth by draping themselves over a steam vent. A few steps away, the Nation's Christmas Tree awaited only the president's smiling touch to blaze into seasonal glory. And beyond, at the stark new Vietnam Veterans Memorial, there is a single Christmas wreath from a St. Clair High School somewhere in these United States and a man, using a flashlight in the gloom to find one precious name out of 57,939.

On Skid Row in Los Angeles, the holidays creep up slowly, as if too much holly too soon would dredge up Christmases past when the winos, the old men and faded women, belonged somewhere. "You have to be cautious in getting people to have hope," says Grady Jackson, who spent Christmas night 1975 in an alley curled around a bottle. Now he's program director of the Salvation Army's Harbor Light Center for alcoholic men.

Christmas is passing by Huber Avenue in Detroit this year. The Chrysler Corporation's foundry is closed. No people; only cavernous buildings, brown weeds, bags of garbage and an Olds that was stripped before it was burned. There is a sign: "For sale or lease 1,114,000 square feet."

Where is Christmas? It is in the heart of Denise Brown of Washington who has been out of work 12 months. "My kid is going to have a Christmas this year," she says while waiting for her unemployment check. "Somehow, I'll make it nice for her."

AP Laserphoto

Demonstrators carry anti-MX missile signs and a coffin with a man blowing on a saxophone through a Kansas City shopping center filled with Christmas shoppers to make people aware of the risk of nuclear war.

Where is Christmas? It is in the Odd Fellows Home in Concord, N.H., where plastic holly entwines the banisters of the central staircase. Faded Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus dolls sit on each newel post. Bertha McNeal, 82, has decorated her room. Lights in the window, cards on the wall, a tiny tree. She wears a Christmas tree pin. "I force myself to get into the spirit since my husband died three years ago," she says. "A person can't carry grief on their shoulders forever."

For the one person in three in Miami who is of Cuban extraction, Christmas dinner, now and always, is a nostalgic meal: roast pork, white rice, black beans and yucca, a root eaten with garlic. Then a midnight church service nicknamed "misa de gallo:" rooster mass. Cuban children are lucky, they get gifts twice, on Dec. 25 from Santa and Jan. 5 from Los Tres Reyes Magos,the three kings. "We love American customs," says Maria Valles, "but we want to keep the good things from Cuba too." She is sending medicines and gifts back home.

HARD TIMES have even come to Plains, Ga. Mayor Boze Godwin, the pharmacist, said a third of the town's work force of nine had to be laid off. The block-long business district has no street decorations. The hometown of Jimmy Carter can't afford it.

Around Pittsburgh, 30 adults and 20 children spend this Christmas waiting for the right liver to be donated for transplant. A child must die before 19-month old Susan Petersen can live. Lizabeth Petersen, who came with her family from Santa Rosa, Calif., goes nowhere without the beeper that can summon her and Susan to the hospital. "When the call comes, it won't be all joy. There will be happiness but being scared too."

Christmas in America, 1982. There will be happiness but being scared too.

ESSEX, Conn. (AP) — A 6-year-old boy who stole an ornament from a Christmas display has learned that Santa Claus not only is generous, he's also willing to forgive errors in judgment.

During a recent visit to Santa's Land in Putney, Vt., Thad Gritzmacher saw an ornament that he wanted hanging on a Christmas tree. The ornament was a little red book telling the story of Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

The boy's mother, LaDonna Gritzmacher, noticed that when they got home to Essex, Thad had the ornament in his pocket.

Capital unlocks horns for brunch-to-bedtime merrymaking

By BETTY CUNIBERTI
By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In this city, Christmas is for kids — kids such as President and Mrs. Reagan, Cabinet officers, members of Congress and even the grumpy Washington press corps.

This month they all unlocked horns and entered a holiday cease-fire with a fistful of cookies in one hand and eggnog in the other.

Even Sarah McClendon, the reporter who berated President Reagan about women's rights during a press conference, gets invited to the White House to say hello (or whatever) to the current residents and fill herself with good cheer.

And even House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, the fiesty Democrat who has said that the president has "ice water in his veins," is asked to come shake Reagan's hand.

Everybody gets in. It's Christmas.

All year long, no town socializes quite so seriously as Washington. At Christmastime, they bring out the heavy-duty support stockings for brunch-to-bedtime merrymaking.

IT IS NECESSARY to begin this ritual the first week in December to get it all in before today, when much of official Washington stumbles onto trains and planes and heads home for the holidays. The president and Mrs. Reagan plan to spend Christmas at the White House, but most of their staff and the countless lobbyists, journalists and assorted power-seekers who followed a star to Washington will make a U-turn to revisit their roots. Members of Congress are currently sweating out the possibility that their lame-duck session will stretch into next week. They, too, hope to leave by this weekend.

After Congress leaves, Washington takes on the appearance of an abandoned Hollywood set. But in the weeks preceding, it could not be more active.

Getting off any elevator in the House of Representatives office buildings after 5 p.m., one notices something different. It smells like Sears. Or a movie theater. Popcorn! Walking down the long, dim hallways one passes a den of laughter and conversation, and then another, and another, as members' offices become sites of elbow-to-elbow Christmas parties.

Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., stuffs his office with congressional staffers, lobbyists and job-seekers left unemployed by lame-duck sessions, all munching homemade cookies and breads made by Fazio's staff. A table is made into a bar. They are talking about action on the House floor that day, about Fazio's upcoming marriage and college basketball.

A party given by Reps. Lyle Williams, R-Ohio, and Silvio Conte, R-Mass., features celebrity guest Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini, a lightweight boxing champion. Mancini has been rethinking his next fight after his most recent opponent, Kim Duk Koo, died of brain injuries sustained in their match. "Don't miss this opportunity to meet a young man (age 21), who has been described as both a first-rate fighter and a first-rate person," the invitation trumpets.

Many members of Congress comply. They're not going to miss an opportunity to meet a first-rate person and have a picture taken with him. So many have their pictures taken with the champ that the Christmas spirit wears thin.

"Silvio's really mad," an aide to Conte told a reporter. "They're horning in on his territory, but how can he say no to his colleagues?"

In even-numbered years, Capitol Hill Christmas parties take on the added function of going-away bashes for members who were defeated or chose not to run in the previous month's election. Rep. John Burton, D-Calif., who decided not to run again after eight years, was properly sent off at such an affair. A renowned free spirit who enlivened the floor debates with his utterances ("These budget figures make my hair curl," he said shortly after getting a perm), Burton had told a reporter a few days earlier that he was leaving Washington because he was lonely. But when it came time for his going-away party, lonely John Burton had to hold it in a meeting room that would accommodate several hundred people.

EARLY ON, Burton received a "lewd-o-gram," a woman draped in a slinky dress singing a bawdy Bon Voyage song.

It is a big moment in the East Room of the White House. Six Christmas trees twinkle tiny, white lights and 400 children of foreign diplomats yell in unison, "Merry Christmas, Mrs. Reagan!" They yell it three times before she finally enters, carrying the guest of honor, 3-year-old Anita Asto. Asto is a Peruvian orphan, brought to this country for heart surgery and, finally, adoption, after Mrs. Reagan and the first lady of Peru intervened to cut red tape.

As dozens of reporters' cameras click, Mrs. Reagan takes a seat on the floor, all smiles at the gaiety, and Anita promptly starts crying. Very loudly. She is so frightened by a pair of dancing, 7-foot-tall candy canes that she is handed over to her mother.

Asto calms down but still looks apprehensive while Santa Claus sings a very jazzed-up version of a song about himself coming to town, and Aileen Quinn (who played Annie in the movie) and her dog, Sandy, perform. Quinn sings, and the dog accepts a heavy dose of petting.

The 400 children, in their native sarongs, Dutch hats and other forms of national dress, eat cookies and pastries and drink punch, giving their empty paper cups to tuxedoed waiters carrying silver trays. Mrs. Reagan and Quinn sign autographs. The children are loaded back into buses barely leaving enough time for the White House to prepare for the next wave of guests — members of Congress.

On Route 152 of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from Washington to Baltimore, garlands are strung around the interior; pate, chips and dips are making the rounds, wine and beer are being sipped from plastic glasses and a large cake with a train track on it is being divided. It is the 11th annual Association for Railroad Commuters Christmas party for about 40 Washington-to-Baltimore commuters.

RIDING THE train is one of the special charms of the East Coast. Friendships are made that otherwise never would have transpired. Through a routine of daily conversation over a period of months or even years, train friendships can become emotionally intimate, even if the people never see each other in any other place.

So it was only natural they would celebrate their own special Christmas at 60 mph eating, drinking and singing carols.

"I've become very close friends with some of these people," said Greg Cramer, 37, a chemist for the Food and Drug Administration. "In Baltimore some people got off the train and drank for four more hours."

Elegance was the key element of a reception at the National Building Museum following the television taping of "Christmas in Washington," a singing performance that aired nationally but, on the East Coast, had to compete with Monday Night Football. The president and Mrs. Reagan attended, so many of the poohbahs sloshed through six inches of snow to make merry.

Surrounded by a ring of Christmas trees and feasting on gingerbread, oyster soup, turkey, ham and caramel corn balls with candy canes stuck in them, a few of the VIPs revealed their Christmas wishes.

"Peace on earth, good will toward men, including the president," said Reagan's close friend, Charles Wick, director of the U.S. Information Agency.

> ...One passes a den of laughter and conversation, and then another, and another, as members' offices become sites of elbow-to-elbow Christmas parties.

"TO SOLVE the economic problems," said Jean French Smith, wife of Attorney General William French Smith.

"This has very little to do with Christmas, but I hope we get our immigration bill through Congress," the attorney general said.

Perhaps no holiday gathering exemplifies the Christmas spirit of forgiveness more poignantly than the two parties the White House throws for the White House press corps and their guests, all 1,000 of them.

The parties are split into two nights of 500 each, and there is always much guessing about which is the "A" list and which the "B" list. The White House insists the invitations are divided at random.

Strangely enough, the White House does not allow press coverage of the press parties. But reliable sources close to the punch bowl indicated that the parties were packed, that the White House shimmered with nearly a dozen decorated trees, that the scent of pine pervaded noses as one walked in, that the president and Mrs. Reagan greeted each guest and posed with each for a photo, and that no one could understand how the Reagans withstood it.

New Herald promised

BOSTON (AP — The editor hired by Rupert Murdoch to run the Boston Herald American has promised readers more photos, expanded sports and a new seven-column format.

"It's going to be a new product on Tuesday," editor Joe Robinowitz said Sunday. "When there is a big story out there we are going to go after it."

The newspaper is being purchased from The Hearst Corp. by Murdoch's News America Publishing Co. A ceremony marking the transfer was scheduled today in New York.

The tabloid will be renamed the Boston Herald, and will split its pages into seven columns rather than four, said Robinowitz. Sports coverage will be increased and editors will make space for more photographs, he said.

Half-a-million cubic feet of marble were used in the construction of Marble House, one of the fabulous mansions in Newport, R.I., that marked an era of upper crust society.

Once upon a time — and not so long ago, at that — the wealthy old families of America passed their summers at a handful of sparkling resorts by the sea. For New Yorkers, the most splendid destination any July could offer was Newport, R.I.: for the upper crust of Los Angeles, it was Newport Beach, Calif.

Among the rich before World War II, "going to the beach" was a two-month affair. Trunks were filled with clothing and equipment, servants and house guests were mobilized, yachts were refitted and lavish parties were planned, all for "the season" that began the last week of June and ended the first of September.

Today, much of that has changed on both coasts. The grand style of the old wealth has been reduced; new wealth has risen to challenge the "old money," and the middle class has acquired places in the summer sun as well. In California, the transformation has been astonishingly swift: Newport Beach, once a tiny shadow of Newport, R,I., has grown to be almost twice as large, and as much a commercial center as a summer resort. Joining both 'old' and 'new' money are the yachts, shown above at berth in the harbor alongside the Pacific Coast Highway.

William P. Ficker, the Newport Beach architect who captained the winning yacht in the 1970 America's Cup Races at Newport, R.I., says: "Both cities are wealthy; each has its own kind of richness...But both communities, because they have unique assets, attract special people."

Nouveau riche take over

Sometimes it is discreet and tasteful; often it is brash and flashy. Either way, it seems inexhaustible, even at the bottom of a long recession. And it is changing the face of Newport Beach.

There was the young couple who dined at one of the town's chic new restaurants, ordered several bottles of $500 wine and paid their $2,500 tab on the spot with cash. There was the birthday party for a 12-year-old boy that included a live circus, a formal dinner and a private film screening.

There is the cost of a membership at Big Canyon Country Club: $7,500 when the club opened a decade ago but $87,000 or more today. There are whispers of con men and cocaine brokers, and tales of the would-be rich who rent the expensive house and lease the new Rolls, but who are always caught short when the gardener presents his bill.

There are real estate stories. One house on an acre of Harbor Island, for example, a handsome but hardly palatial home, is on the market for $10 million, and is expected to sell for nearly that. There are beach houses known as "teardowners"; one man bought an ocean-front home for $525,000 and razed it immediately to make room for a bigger one.

AND THERE IS the Newporter's favorite subject of all: the traffic. At some hours these days, Newport Boulevard and Pacific Coast Highway are choked with shiny Mercedes Benzes and Rolls-Royces, many sporting personalized license plates that indicate where the driver made his wealth. ("That," sniffed one old-timer, "is very new money.")

"The congestion is the worst thing," said Athalie Richardson Irvine Clarke, who first saw Newport Beach in 1929 as the bride of James Irvine Jr., owner of the Irvine Ranch, the largest landholding in the area. "It's bumper-to-bumper sometimes. You certainly didn't have that in the old days. It was only a village then...It's still a wonderful place, but it is nothing like what it was when I first came."

Mrs. Clarke, a courtly lady who bears the names of three old California families, made it clear she does not wish to criticize. "I don't want to say anything derogatory about anyone," she said firmly.

But Willard S. Voit, a scion of the sporting-goods family, was willing to be blunter. "It's the gold-chain crowd," he mused at the bar of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, an old-money sanctuary on the bay. "The place has changed horrendously."

The new people, their cars and the traffic jams have become symbols of the unwelcome side of growth — and "growth" may be too mild a term. As late as 1940, Newport Beach was a summer resort that counted only 4,400 permanent residents. After World War II it became a thriving suburb as the population tripled to 13,000 by 1950, doubled to 27,000 in 1960, and doubled again to 54,000 in 1972.

Today, in place of the little beach village Mrs. Clarke remembers, stands a city of 67,000 that is part resort, part commercial center, and — in the words of some residents — Orange County's "golden ghetto."

To the town's new commercial boosters, the result is (as an exuberant Irvine Co. brochure puts it) "Wall Street West." But to some old-timers — a category roughly including anyone who moved in more than 10 years ago — it looks more like Paradise Lost.

"THE HALYCON days are gone," sighed Toni Allen, who moved to Newport Beach with her banker husband in 1969 and bought a four-bedroom house for $52,500. "There's an awful lot more conspicuous extravagance now....The neighborhood feeling is going."

"It used to be a terrific, casual place," Voit said. "You have black-tie parties now; you didn't have that before. I go to some of them, so I shouldn't complain...But there wasn't a lot of this," he said, tugging at a visitor's necktie.

These may be its flaws, but Newport Beach still glitters like a jewel on its spectacular stretch of the Orange County coast south of Los Angeles. Its setting includes one of the finest beaches in the state; a four-mile-long bay that qualifies — with its 9,000 yachts — as the largest pleasure boat harbor in the world; eight islands of houses with their own private docks; inland hills that give landlocked homeowners spectacular views; and, on most days, cool sea breezes that push Southern California's smog onto less-favored tracts.

Its man-made amenities include half a dozen first-class restaurants, seven yacht clubs, four golf courses and two tennis clubs, charming old shopping districts, opulent new retail malls and clusters of reflecting-glass office buildings that have sprung up in bean fields and pastures like instant oil cities in the Arabian desert.

All this growth is exactly what the old Newporters complain about. It has even driven a few to move away, like Frank and Elizabeth Bret.

"I just became overwhelmed by all the ugliness," said Mrs. Bret, who left town after living here 19 years. "All the new development. It's all gray, it's all cement, it's all parking lots. And the people — the whole personality of the place changed. And the people — the whole personality of the place changed...Suddenly everything was very big-time, and there was a tremendous sense of material striving that just didn't mean anything."

Three years ago, Bret, a former president of the Disneyland Hotel, took a sabbatical from his job. "At the end of six months, we realized we just didn't want to go back," Mrs. Bret said. They chose early retirement and moved to the San Juan Islands off the Washington coast.

IN THE DAYS before World War II, the idea of too much of anything in Newport Beach was unimaginable. The compact little resort on the Balboa Peninsula came alive only in the summer, when the great families of Pasadena and San Marino motored down to their beach houses.

"It was a glorious age to live through," recalled Mrs. Clarke. "We had picnics on the beach, and barbecues, and musicals in the afternoons. But it was all in a very simple style, very family-oriented. People were unpretentious."

The first summer cottage in Newport Beach was built in 1889, when Newport, R.I., was already well established as a wealthy retreat. The Orange County settlement had been named "Newport Beach" in 1870, but not in conscious imitation of the Eastern resort; its two principal landowners, James Irvine and James McFadden, hoped to make it into the main industrial harbor of Southern California — the region's "new port." Luckily, the project failed.

Not until the 1940s was Newport truly discovered. The yacht harbor and its islands were created after President Franklin D. Roosevelt provided federal money for dredging. The boating facilities drew Hollywood yachtsmen like Humphrey Bogart, James Cagney, Errol Flynn and John Wayne. But as late as 1954, architect William P. Ficker recalls, it was still a summer place that was so empty in the winter "it was kind of eerie." Not until 1956 did the freeway bring the area within commuting range of Los Angeles. Suddenly, Newport Beach was a year-round community, not merely a seasonal resort.

Today, some Orange County environmentalists blame the Irvine Co., the heirs of James Irvine, for many of their ills. But for most of this century, the company may actually have acted as a brake on development. "Newport Beach could have taken off earlier," said architect Raymond Watson, a former president of the landowning firm. "The difference was the Irvine Co., which restrained the growth of the city, and then planned its growth."

Newport Beach rode the crest of the extraordinary housing inflation of the 1970s. Single-family homes now start at about $220,000 and escalate fast into waterfront homes costing millions.

HIGH INTEREST rates have depressed housing sales here as elsewhere — up to a point. Middle-range offerings, like the Belcourt Hill condominums (named after one of the great mansions of Newport, R.I., and priced at $405,000 and up for two bedrooms) have encountered some buyer resistance. But at the top of the market, developers say, there is plenty of demand.

And with empty land running out, they say, the town's next phase is redevelopment: replacing old beach cottages in Balboa and West Newport with luxury homes.

To the outsider, the nagging question arises: Where does all the money come from?

"From all over the United States," Buie said. "Successful people, professional people. Doctors, lawyers, businessmen...The industrial area is a great attraction for businesses to move into the area." Frequently, he said, businesses move to Newport Beach because their owners want to live here.

That is most of the answer. Newport Beach has so many physicians that several practices have failed for a shortage of patients. The list of new businesses in the commercial area that sprawls across the city lines is long. Entertainment and sports figures have arrived too:

but there is another, relatively small but unquantifiable source of money, law enforcement officials say: the drug trade. Several drug dealers are believed to have invessted in Newport Beach; some residents have told stories of being offered large sums of cash for their homes by young men with no visible means of support.

WHATEVER THE source, the wealth here has spawned a social hierarchy as complex as any on the East Coast. What is different in California is that the hierarchy is less rigid. "You'd really have to stretch to find a hereditary aristocracy," said architect Ficker. "The stratified structure of Newport, R.I., has never really emerged here."

Still, Newport Beachers move in distinct and separate circles, and often identify each other by their real estate. Bay Island, a tiny enclave with 18 houses and no automobiles, is perhaps the most exclusive preserve of the old money, but Harbor Island, the tip of the Balboa Peninsula and Corona del Mar are equally correct addresses. Linda Isle and Lido Isle are also distinguished and expensive, but with just a bit less history. Big Canyon and Spyglass Hill are inland and spectacular but — well — new. The bluffs are solid suburban; West Newport is still beach-bum territory, one of the few remaining preserves of summer rentals.

Clubs fill a similar function. Members at Newport Harbor like to think of it as perhaps the hardest club to get into in California. The Balboa Yacht Club, they say, is full of people who have applied to join Newport Harbor. The Balboa Bay Club, a fvorite haunt of Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., is open to "anyone who wants to buy his way in," a member jibed. As for the newest club of all, Big Canyon Country Club, "If you've got the money andd you don't have a police record, you can get in — and I'm not sure about the police record," one member said cheerfully.

THERE ARE CHIC restaurants to be seen at, and at the pinnacle of local society a whirl of private parties and charity benefits. At least some of the new money appears no less devoted than the old to raising funds for worthy causes.

The town's local politics inevitably revolve around issues of development. Newport Beach does not have many poor people in its population — county officials say there are 15 welfare cases and 62 food stamp recipients within the city limits — and at current housing prices, it is unlikely to acquire many more. Liberals have demanded that the town make some effort to provide "affordable housing"; the state Department of Housing and Community Development charged last year that the town's policy of favoring low-density development is "inherently exclusionary."

But the most passionate issue is preserving Newport Beach's natural beauty in the face of continued commercial development. The last two City Council elections have been fought between "growth" and "no-growth" camps, and the current majority is held by middle-of-the-road "controlled growth" advocates.

Both camps seem to agree that Newport Beach, for all its growing pains, has handled massive development remarkably well. "Despite the drawbacks, the unfamiliar faces, the congestion and the damn planes," Toni Allen said, "it's a wonderful place to live."

Sealed proposals addressed to the Honorable Mayor and City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, will be received in the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, Midland, Texas, until 2:00 P.M., January 6, 1983, for furnishing all necessary materials, machinery, equipment, superintendence and labor for constructing certain sanitary sewer improvements for the City of Midland, Texas.

Immediately following the closing time of receipt of bids, proposals will be publicly opened and read aloud. Any bid received after closing time will be returned unopened.

The principal items of work are as follows; installing approximately 18,900 linear feet of 42-inch vitrified clay pipe and 125 linear feet of 27-inch vitrified clay pipe provided by the City of Midland, Texas; furnishing and installing reinforced concrete box interconnect structures, manholes and connections to existing manholes; approximately 550 linear feet of 42-inch Ductile Iron Pipe, Class 53; approximately 350 linear feet of welded steel casing; removal and replacement of pavement; and miscellaneous items of construction.

Bidders must submit a Cashier's or Certified Check issued by a bank satisfactory to the Owner, or a Bid Bond from a reliable Surety Company, payable without recourse to the order of the City of Midland, Texas, in an amount not less than five percent (5%) of the largest possible bid submitted as a guaranty that the Bidder will enter into a contract and execute bonds and guaranty in the forms provided within ten (10) days after notice of award of contract to him. Bids without the required Check or Bid Bond will not be considered.

The successful Bidder must furnish a Performance Bond and Payment Bond on the Forms provided in the amount of 100% of the total contract price from a Surety Company holding a permit from the State of Texas to act as Surety, or other Surety or Sureties acceptable to the Owner.

All lump sum and unit prices must be stated in both script and figures. The Owner reserves the right to reject any or all bids and to waive formalities, and to accept the bid which seems most advantageous to the City's interest. In case of ambiguity or lack of clearness in stating the prices in the bids, the Owner reserves the right to consider the most advantageous construction thereof, or to reject the bid.

Attention is called to the provisions of the Acts of the 43rd Legislature of the State of Texas, page 91, Chapter 45, (Article 5159A Civil Statutes 1925) concerning the wage scale and payments of prevailing rates of wages as established by the Owner. Said scale of prevailing minimum rates of wages is set forth in the specifications.

Information for Bidders, proposal forms, and specifications are on file in the office of the Director of Public Works, City Hall, 300 N. Loraine, Midland, Texas, 79701 and in the offices of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc., Consulting Engineers, 5214 Thomason Drive, Midland, Texas, 79703, phone (915) 697-1447.

Copies of the plans and specifications may be secured at the office of Parkhill Smith & Cooper, Inc., Consulting Engineers, 5214 Thomason Drive, Midland, Texas 79703, (915) 697-1447, upon receipt of a $50.00 Deposit as a guarantee of the safe return of the plans and specifications. The full amount of the deposit will be returned if a bona fide bid is submitted and the Plans and Specifications are returned within ten (10) days after receipt of bids, or in case no bid is submitted, if Plans and Specifications are returned on or before date of receipt of bids, otherwise, the deposit will be forfeited.

NOTICE TO BIDDERS
Sealed proposals, addressed to the Mayor and City Council of the City of Midland, Texas, for the furnishing and installation of approximately 500 lineal feet CMP, 401 L.F. of spiral welded casing pipe, 405 lineal feet of 8" VCP sewer pipe and 360 lineal feet of 8" DIP water line will be received at the office of the City Secretary, City Hall, Midland, Texas, until 2:30 p. m. on the 4th day of January, 1983 and publicly opened and read aloud at 3:00 p. m. on the same day.
Any bid received after closing time as stated above will be returned unopened.
Bid envelopes shall be plainly marked "Proposal for Project No. W-207, Utility Adjustments on State Highway 349."
The successful bidder will be required to coordinate this work with the State Highway Department's contractor on State Highway 349.
Complete copies of plans, specifications, and contract documents may be examined and/or obtained at the office of the Field Engineer in the Municipal Service Center, 1600 South Street, Midland, Texas.
A bid bond or proposal guaranty is to accompany the bid, thereby guaranteeing the good faith of the bidder and that the bidder will enter into the written contract. The guaranty is to amount to five percent (5%) of the total bid and must be in the form of cash or certified check, issued by a bank satisfactory to the City of Midland, or a bid bond. If in the form of cash or certified check, it is expressly understood and agreed that the City of Midland is given the right to retain such as liquidated damages if such bidder withdraws its bid anytime after such bid is opened and before official rejection of such bid, or if successful in securing the award thereof, such bidder fails to enter into the contract and furnish satisfactory performance and payment bonds. If a bid bond is submitted, it shall be executed on forms contained in these contract documents by a corporate surety authorized to do business in the State of Texas, and acceptable to the City of Midland.
The City of Midland, Texas, reserves the right to accept or reject any or all proposals or bids, to waive technicalities, and to make any investigation deemed necessary concerning the bidders ability to perform the work covered by the plans and specifications, to award this bid by items and to accept what in the judgment of the Mayor and City Council is the most advantageous bid.

The 1st year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8 3/8% loan to value interest will be charged at a rate of 12 3/8% for the 1st 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payment 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period the graduation in payment will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 12.876%. *Principle and Interest only is calculated in monthly payument.
