Space shuttle still performing its paces

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Astronaut C. Gordon Fullerton successfully exercised the grip of Columbia's 50-foot robot arm today, lifting a package of scientific instruments from the ship's cargo bay as the shuttle hummed along on the fourth day of its week-long mission.

The grab-and-lift was the first test of the robot's capacity to do the job it was built for: depositing and retrieving satellites in space.

The ship was in the midst of a prolonged thermal test when Fullerton donned binoculars to maneuver the arm into position to grab a 353-pound payload with Canadarm's wire-snare fingers.

The procedure was anything but routine. Sharp eyes and a firm grip on the controls had to substitute for guidance from a failed video monitor.

After capturing his target, the pilot, working by remote control from a post at the rear of Columbia's cockpit, flexed the spindly arm's metallic muscles and gingerly lifted the 353-pound payload from its berth, moving it around the cavernous bay, careful not to hit other experiments stored there.

"The PDP has been unberthed. It has been taken up, it's been lowered down and we're ready to reberth it again," said Fullerton. This initial test with the arm took only six minutes and it was executed perfectly.

The captured instruments — a Plasma Diagnostic Package — measure the shuttle's electromagnetic field. A television camera captured the maneuver and pictures of the test were received with satisfaction in Mission Control.

Fullerton and commander Jack R. Lousma, "feeling a little better" almost half-way through their mission, had to delay the exercise — first scheduled for Tuesday, because of the failure of the camera on the wrist of the Canadian-built mechanical arm.

"Fullerton reports that for the first time we have executed a grapple and capture with the arm," Mission Control reported shortly before the lifting exercise took place.

"The spacecraft is demonstrating to us that it's a pretty sound piece of machinery," flight director Neil Hutchinson reported. The ship's third flight was to end after 116 orbits next Monday in New Mexico.

Columbia's second flight was cut short last November by fuel-cell trouble. Flight 3 has encountered only minor trouble, and every orbit today added to the shuttle endurance record set Wednesday afternoon when it passed the 54-hour, 21-minute mark on its 37th orbit.

"We'd like to more than double that," Lousma said.

Today, Columbia was flying with its nose to the sun, its tail in the cold shadows. On Saturday, after 80 hours in that position, the astronauts are to fire three sets of engines in the tail to determine if they have been affected by long exposure to temperatures down to 215 degrees below zero.

"It's going to be a busy day," Mission Control told Lousma and Fullerton this morning. Fullerton said they were "definitely feeling ready to go to it." On Wednesday, NASA pared the crew's workload so they could recover from motion sickness and fatigue that had bothered them since they began their seven-day trip Monday.

First thing today, Lousma said he and Fullerton were "up and at 'em," and "feeling a little better."

The first order of business was to lift a 353-pound parcel and move it about the cargo bay. Eventually the arm should be lifting up to 65,000 pounds. Fullerton's job was tougher than planned because a camera attached to the wrist joint had failed on Tuesday — delaying the test.

The camera was to have been his remote eyes in guiding the arm's wire-mesh fingers to a lock on the plasma diagnostic package.

The faulty camera is one of several technical problems that have bedeviled Columbia. None has been serious or threatening, but they have kept the astronauts busy as troubleshooters.

Allocation bill veto sustained

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sponsor of an emergency energy allocation bill, vetoed with Senate concurrence, says President Reagan "had better pray" there won't be another energy crisis during his term.

Senate Energy Committee Chairman James McClure, R-Idaho, said that only a heavy, last-minute lobbying blitz by the president enabled the Senate to sustain the veto of a bill that would have given Reagan the authority to allocate crude oil and impose price controls in an emergency.

In a roll-call vote Wednesday 58 senators voted to override Reagan's veto, while 36 voted to sustain it. But opponents of the veto needed 63 votes — a two-thirds margin — to reverse the president's rejection of the emergency oil-allocation bill.

Reagan, who has insisted that oil supplies be kept free from all controls, personally called wavering senators, managing to pick up six converts, according to White House aides.

Still, 20 Republicans joined 38 Democrats in voting against the president. Only four of the 36 votes to sustain the veto were from Democrats.

McClure said the country needs the emergency mechanisms in the event of another oil embargo or war in the Middle East, even though Reagan insisted he didn't want the authority the bill would have given him.

"I congratulate the president but he had better pray as he has never prayed before that there be no interruption of petroleum supplies while he is in office," McClure told the Senate after the veto was sustained.

The debate was largely symbolic — the legislation wouldn't have forced Reagan to use the controls if he didn't want to and they would have expired at the end of his term, anyway.

"I don't understand why the president would want to spend so much political capital on an issue that means so little," McClure told reporters afterward.

And Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., another supporter, said: "If you can't trust Ronald Reagan not to overuse these powers, who can you trust?"

The veto was the first of three Reagan has cast to be challenged in either chamber.

His November veto of an emergency spending bill and December veto of a bankruptcy law revision were sustained without being brought to floor votes.

Congress gave the president standby allocation and pricing authority in the mid-1970s, but that ended last Sept. 30.

Reagan, claiming that Americans have been hurt by past efforts to allocate fuel supplies, vetoed last Saturday the bill to re-establish some of these powers.

Since the bill originally had passed the Senate by an 87-6 margin, Republican leaders warned Reagan that there was a good chance his veto might be overridden.

But the president and his lieutenants made a major effort to persuade GOP senators to stick by the president.

"They intensified it in the last two days," McClure said. "I knew it would be close. In the end, it was decided by those who had been undecided."

McClure had urged his GOP colleagues not to act out of "blind loyalty" to Reagan.

$2,000 personal bond set for state treasurer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A state district judge has set a $2,000 personal bond on official misconduct charges against state Treasurer Warren G. Harding, allowing Harding to avoid the embarrassment of being booked.

Harding's attorney, Robert O. Smith, said Wednesday that State District Judge Mace B. Thurman had agreed to accept $1,000 bonds on each of two charges and that Harding would not have to appear at the sheriff's office for booking.

"His being an elected official, the judge didn't feel he was going anywhere," Smith told reporters awaiting Harding's appearance at the Travis County courthouse.

Harding was indicted by a Travis County grand jury Tuesday on two third-degree felony counts of official misconduct. Prosecutors allege that two secretaries in the treasurer's office worked on Harding's re-election campaign on state time.

Smith said the case had been transferred into State District Judge Thomas D. Blackwell's court and set for a pre-trial hearing on April 1. He said Harding would appear at the hearing, which is for designation of attorney.

At a Capitol news conference Tuesday, two hours after the indictments were handed down, Harding denied the charges, saying they were the product of a political "witch hunt."

TI, Continental juggle Midland flight schedules

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Texas Air Corporation's recent financial takeover of Continental Airlines apparently has resulted in somewhat of a juggling act in the flight schedules of Continental and Texas International airlines at Midland Regional Airport.

Although representatives from both airlines were vague this morning in their explanations as to why flights were being scratched and added, the changes, according to The Associated Press, are a direct result of a 10-month court battle between Texas Air and Continental. In September 1981 Texas Air Corp. took over 51 percent of Continental Airlines' common stock which gave TAC control.

TAC, a Houston-based corporation which owns Texas International, Wednesday announced the merger between Texas International and Continental.

Continental officials said each airline will continue to operate under its own name and the merger will enable more flexibility to accomplish cost reduction and revenue increase through such rescheduling, according to AP reports.

Continental will be reducing its Midland flight schedule April 25, according

Place 6 school board candidates outline positions

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth in a 14-part series examining the candidates and bond issues appearing on the ballot in the April 3 city, school and hospital elections.

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Cities across the nation, and Midland in particular, are helplessly watching qualified and effective teachers quit their jobs to enter other career fields.

Although most of the public feels that the reason for the drastic increase in teachers abandoning their classrooms stems from low salaries, the four candidates for Place 6 on the Midland Independent School District agree there is more involved than simply the wages.

"Salaries are a big issue right now," Joseph Golding, owner of Golding's and Upstairs Downstairs, said, "but they could live with the salaries they have right now if they didn't have to put up with all of that other stuff."

That "stuff," according to all four candidates, includes overcrowding of classrooms, discipline problems, an overabundance of paper work, demeaning evaluations and a lack of recognition and appreciation.

"Salary is a factor, but I'm not hearing nearly as much about salary and money as I am about class size — about the frustrations and stress," Charleen Rosebery, agreed. "The demands of paper work that are ever increasing, the reliance, at least to a degree the impression of a reliance, on testing as a complete measurement of effectiveness, rather than a more personal approach."

THE PRESENT process of evaluating the teacher and his or her effectiveness in teaching is a concern of most of the candidates. According to Patrick Chaney, area manager for an oilfield service company, it is a very difficult process.

"How do you decide which teacher is an outstanding teacher, other than the fact that I like that person or the kids like that person?" he asked. "If one of my employees generates a certain amount of business, that's a way I have of keeping score.

election 82

"In teaching it's very difficult to keep score," he said. "I think there are a lot of problems involved in trying to come up with accurate information on who is effective and who is not, but I think there are better ways to do it than we are right now."

Chaney said that teachers are presently evaluated by performance reviews from their immediate supervisors and the comparison of their students' national achievement test scores with the performance of students across the nation.

"Many people will complain that if you start trying to put too much weight on these test scores, then the teachers will end up teaching for the tests," he said.

CHANEY SUGGESTED that one way to more accurately measure teachers' effectiveness would be to study measurement tools used in other systems for possible implementation into the Midland district. The board could pick and choose among these different plans for the ones best suited to the needs of the Midland district, he said. And bonuses can be used to improve teacher incentive and attitude.

"When you can start giving things away for rewarding outstanding performance, like time off to attend professional society meetings, or expense paid trips to self improvement courses, or paying the way for certain teachers to go through advanced studies or for educational travel, then I think you would see a real turnaround among the rank and file teachers in trying to do what they can to qualify for these types of bonuses and to qualify for these types of recognition," Chaney said.

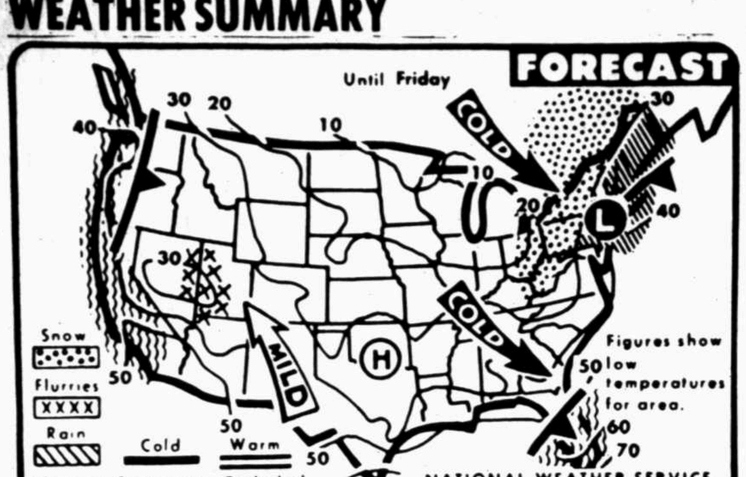

"I think what many teachers strive for and yearn for is almost total freedom to do their thing in the classsroom. They want to decide what is important and what is not. They want to be in control of their life and in control of the direction of their classroom," he continued. "If they earn that right, by being consistently outstanding teachers on a truly objective measurement scale, then we'll give them that right. I think that would increase morale."

Mrs. Rosebery said she felt that as the revised evaluation procedure recently approved by the school board is stepped up, a balance between observation of classrooms by supervisors and reliance on tests scores to measure teacher effectiveness will exist.

"I BELIEVE IN the testing but I don't believe that it should be the only measure of evaluating the teacher," she said, adding that there are also problems with observations.

Many of the candidates said they feel teachers resent the observations, feel threatened and often become defensive.

The revised policy pertaining to teacher evaluations was approved by the school board in an effort to make the observations a more positive and helpful experience, rather than a situation based on criticism.

"But I'm not sure that this attitude of communication has gotten through to the teachers," Mrs. Rosebery said.

"Sometimes it's not what is being done but the way it is being done that makes such a difference in the reception on the part of the teachers."

She suggested bringing the teachers into the discussion of evaluations to learn their individual ideas instead of communicating solely through their department heads.

"To actually have them involved, I think, would be beneficial and good input," she said.

"THERE IS STILL a lot of re-evaluation of teachers that have been with us for 10 or 15 years," Golding said. "And a lot of teachers feel it's unworthy and a lot of them feel like it's an insult to their teaching ability."

According to Paul Thorpe, owner of Paul Thorpe Spas, admitting there are problems faced by teachers and recognizing them as problems are the first steps in solving them. The next step, he said, is finding out what is causing the problem.

"In finding out what is causing the problems, you have got to have somebody go in there and listen to what the teachers' problems are," Thorpe said. "Some of them are justified and some of them probobably are not. Some of them are just the normal frustrations of any person in life."

"First, to me, is to admit there is a problem, recognize it and then analyze it as a problem. And then beyond that, its a matter of looking at the alternatives as far as solutions," he said.

Many of those solutions depend on the financial budget of the school district. "I don't know how much money we've got to work with — can we hire aides? I don't know all of those things," he said.

"THE APPROACH I would take is just like I would with the business," Thorpe continued. "If it's a problem, fine, we'll say it's a problem; if it's solvable, let's solve it; if it is something that we've got to live with because we don't have money or we don't have the means to solve it right now, then let's say that's one of the things we've got to live with."

The manner in which Thorpe said his company avoids problems is through regular communication with its employees.

"And I mean regular, in-depth communicatons," Thorpe said. "And that's not an evalution of whether they are doing the job, it's just are they happy.

"It's a communication deal," he said. "If I had six teachers or seven teachers or maybe up to even ten teachers under one guy (supervisor or department head), he would have an individual visit with them every week.

"The way I'd solve it is I would put proven management techniques to work in the school system," Thorpe said.

Those techniques and others can be implemented to alleviate several problems.

"IF WE TRY in every way to develop a school system that stimulates professional growth in every single way through effective management, work shops and self evalutations, and working close with their suprervisory level people, where encouragement, support and professional growths are the results, we'll see a marked change in our education," Chaney said.

"I think teachers look for the same things that any mature adult looks for. They look for a job that is satisfying to them, fulfilling to them, (one) that gives them an adequate salary and then provides them with some opportunity for growth," he continued.

Chaney also said he feels that courses for students such as time management, goal-setting and problem-solving could help with the discipline problem.

"I'm sick and tired of the educational system getting blamed for all of the ills of society," he said. "The fact is, many of the problems the school system is dealing with and taking the blame for are a result of parenting that is not up to what it could be."

"Crowds create situations of discord," Mrs. Rosebery said. "When you are using every inch of space, and the desks are crowded together, it is just easier for the normal childish horseplay to continue."

"TEACHERS JUST can't teach with the size of classrooms they are having to deal with," Golding agreed.

All candidates for Place 6, which is currently held by Ed Runyan who is not seeking re-election, enthusiastically support the upcoming bond issue.

"It is important that we continue to build to meet the needs of our youth, but it is equally important not to overbuild," Golding said.

Thorpe agreed, adding he felt that with his experience in business management, he could contribute greatly to the areas of expansion.

"The fact is that the school business is big business. The board will spend approximately $40 million during my first year in office. They handle the lives of 1,418 people.

"The school board job is not just a job for everybody. I don't consider it is enough to be a nice person or a concerned parent. I don't think that is the qualification," Thorpe said.

He cited the political and pressured decisions that must be made as needing "real tough qualifications."

Thorpe's business experience in Midland began with the establishment of Paul Thorpe Spas in 1965. He has been actively involved in the business and serves as a management consultant in several locations throughout the South in addition to his other business interests. He holds a lifetime Texas teaching certificate and has worked in the Odessa and Midland school systems.

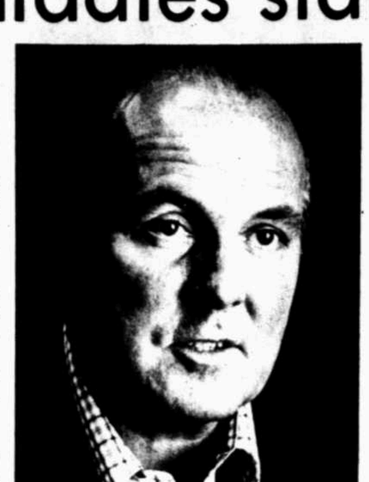

Since graduating from Sam Houston State University in 1964, he has continued his education through several management clinics and seminars and through American Management Association Programs. He has been a member of the Goddard PTA for three years and is currently on the PTA Board at Midland Freshman High School.

Mrs. Rosebery, a former teacher, is currently serving on the Head Start Policy Council and the Board of Directors of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women. She is also vice president of the Human Resources Advisory Committee of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission and chairman of the Parent and Family Life Education program for the Bowie Elementary PTA. She presently works periodically as a public relations consultant.

Golding, a gradute of Texas Tech University, served as the chairman of the Christmas Parade in 1979. He is a past member of the Midland Jaycees and is currently a member of the Midland Downtown Lion's Club.

Chaney, who has served as a classroom teacher as well as at the university level, is certified as a supervisor of student teachers and as a principal of secondary students. He has been involved in the development and implementation of numerous industrial training programs and has been a guest lecturer at technical seminars. He has also taught at Midland College.

Blowing dust gives West Texans grit

The blowing sands which give West Texas part of its color and denizens literal grit in their teeth again drifted into Midland today in the form of blowing dust.

Northeasterly winds of 25 to 35 mph were whipping the blowing sands this morning but were expected to decrease to 15 to 25 mph this afternoon.

Winds are to shift southeasterly at 10 to 15 mph late tonight and are to be southerly at 15 to 25 mph and gusty on Friday.

Today's high temperature was to be near 60 degrees. Tonight's low is to be near 40, and Friday's high is to be near 70.

Wednesday's peak temperature was 81 degrees, which was fairly close to the record high of 89 degrees for the date in 1938. The overnight low of 41 degrees was not so close to the record low of 23 degrees in 1955.

to Chuck Logue, Continental manager. He said the airlines will drop from seven daily flights to four.

"We are dropping those flights which are used the least by the travelling public," he said.

These flights include a 10:45 a.m. service to Houston, a 6:40 a.m. service to Denver and a 10:30 p.m. arrival from Houston which departs to El Paso.

Texas International, which has had a limited number of flights at the Midland airport, will add six flights April 25, according to Linda Hightower, TI representative.

"We will be increasing our service to six flights a day which will include three non-stop flights to Houston," she said.

In addition, Ms. Hightower said three other flights will be added to Denver, with connections through Lubbock and/or Amarillo.

Commissioners to hear draw report

Midland County commissioners, who for a year have been threatening to take Odessa to court over that city's dumping of sewage effluent into Monahans Draw, will consider a report on the draw by County Attorney J. Scott Henderson in their 9 a.m. Friday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

The draw, which cuts easterly through Midland County and which merges with Midland Draw east of Greenwood, carries Odessa's secondary-treated waste water and in doing so allegedly has contaminated water wells along the draw and has washed out some county roads.

Odessa, however, is permitted by the Texas Department of Water Resources to dump its effluent down the draw, which has been deemed a navigable stream.

In other business, the commissioners are to:

—Consider adopting a Midland County rabies ordinance.

—Consider industrial revenue bond financing for NDT Systems Inc. through the Midland Industrial Development Corp.

—Consider pipeline adjustment of Mobil Pipe Line.

—Consider approval of Longview Sub-division.

Two charged with armed robbery

Two men arrested following a convenience store holdup and high-speed chase early Wednesday morning have been formally charged with armed robbery.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine set bond of $50,000 each on James Spencer Williams, 19, of Merkel, and 23-year-old Romero Cruz of Topeka, Kan. They are charged with robbing the 7-Eleven Store at 2111 W. Wall Ave. about 1:25 a.m. Wednesday.

Police said Williams and Cruz were arrested after a car-chase and foot pursuit that ended near the M-System Food Store on South Big Spring Street. They remained in the city jail this morning and are also suspects in the reported holdup of an Odessa convenience store earlier that night.

Five city parking meters valued at $200 apiece were reported taken from the 200 block of North Baird Avenue. The meters, which contained an estimated $35 in change, were ripped from the ground sometime over the weekend.

A 20-year-old Joliet, Ill., man was jailed late Wednesday night after he allegedly broke the windshield of a police car after his arrest on public intoxication charges.

Officers said the man was arrested after they investigated a reported fight at the Joker's Lounge on West Wall Avenue shortly after 11 p.m. Wednesday. After being placed in the front seat of the squad car, police said he began kicking the windshield. He is charged with felony criminal mischief and public intoxication. Damage was estimated at $200.

Three women reported purse thefts from downtown office buildings Wednesday. A total of $217 was taken, along with several credit cards. The purses had been placed under desks.

Democrats proposing program to revive housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats are proposing a multibillion-dollar program aimed at reviving the nation's housing industry from the deep slump brought on by the recession and high mortgage interest rates.

The program, announced Wednesday, is designed to stimulate construction of 600,000 new single-family homes and provide 782,000 jobs. It was formulated by a task force under the guidance of Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington.

"New housing starts will generate more jobs and new economic activity in every community of the nation at the lowest cost in the shortest possible time," Jackson said.

The program, costing $3.26 billion through 1985, includes an interest subsidy of 4 percentage points on new mortgages, which could bring mortgage rates down to a minimum of 10 percent over a five-year period. Current rates are about 17 percent.

Republican Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana also is proposing a housing program that would reduce mortgage interests on new homes. The Reagan administration reportedly is trying to decide whether to endorse a mortgage-intersest subsidy bill.

Meanwhile, President Reagan prevailed in the Senate Wednesday with his veto of a bill that would have given him emergency oil-control powers if severe shortages occur.

Reagan, who said such powers aren't necessary and that previous efforts to allocate fuel supplies caused more harm than good, vetoed the bill Saturday. A majority of the Senate — including 20 Republicans — voted Wednesday to override the veto, but the 58-36 tally was five votes short of the necessary two-thirds margin.

In subcommittee action, a House panel on Wednesday approved an industry-backed version of the Clean Air Act, a bill that environmentalists attacked as a "drastic weakening" of the nation's commitment to pollution control.

The House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health and the environment voted for the bill 13-7 and it now goes to the full committee.

In the Senate, a Judiciary subcommittee voted 3-to-2 in favor of an administration-backed extension of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Civil rights leaders say the version the panel approved would weaken minority voting rights.

That version would require civil rights lawyers challenging local election laws to prove that the officials who enacted them intended them to be discriminatory.

Another version of a Voting Rights Act extension, approved by the House last fall and supported now by 65 senators, woubd require only that it be shown that an election law does discriminate against minorities.

Elsewhere in Congress Wednesday:

—The House, voting 299-103, approved a stopgap spending measure to keep money flowing to several federal departments and agencies for the rest of the fiscal year, which ends Sept. 30. The current spending authorization expires next Wednesday. Senate debate on the measure is scheduled for next week.

—The Senate voted 94-0 in favor of a bill under which federal agencies could not issue a "major regulation" before giving a detailed analysis of its effects. The bill, which also gives Congress authority to veto most types of regulations by a majority vote of both the House and Senate, now goes to the House.

—Treasury Secretary Donald Regan criticized the committees of Congress for rjecting President Reagan's proposed new budget cuts and forecast "even larger deficits" as a result. Regan told the House Budget Committee, however, that he is looking forward to cooperating with Congress on finding a compromise to the administration's proposed budget for fiscal 1983.

—The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 24-5 to authorize $10 million for a new U.S. radio station that would beam broadcasts to Cuba. Rep. Edward J. Derwinski, R-Ill., who supports the idea of such a station, said the United States should be "investing more and more in countering Soviet and Cuban propaganda."

Chamber to lobby for change in highway funds

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland Chamber of Commerce decided Wednesday afternoon to begin lobbying the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation and other state officials in trying to get part of the highway funds dedicated to new construction.

Paul Harvel, chamber executive vice president, said the highway funding may be changed to be used only for maintenance and not new construction. The chamber is concerned in light of work on Loop 250, he added.

First person the chamber will talk with is the highway department's district engineer. Others include local members of the state legislature and the governor's office.

Chamber President Larry Bell announced three committees and the persons who will chair them: Membership and member relations, Dave Leonard; economic development, Jim Alsup; and community affairs, Doug Henson.

A new committee and its purposes were outlined. The Program of Work committee will poll members to see where their interests and concerns lie in becoming involved in the chamber.

"We need to see where we're not doing things and what we might do," Bell explained.

Once the study is complete, the committee will get back on the telephone to recruit workers.

Bell also reported the annual membership dinner on Tuesday night had been a sell-out with more than 900 tickets sold and about 850 persons attending.

Resignations of William C. Thomas and William Rogers were announced by Bell, who will appoint two persons to fill those unexpired terms on the board.

NATO talks reflected relaxed atmosphere

By HENRY GOTTLIEB

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Defense ministers for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization met at an elegant resort hotel this week, and in some ways the lazy atmosphere was fitting for NATO's semi-annual nuclear planning session.

Deer heads hang on the Broadmoor Hotel's walls, Pikes Peak looms over the golf course and — this week at least — NATO colonels ambled through the lobby in tennis outfits on the way to a quick match between meetings.

No major decisions or initiatives were announced. Perhaps most startling for an alliance that sometimes resembles a big, brawling clan, no controversy surfaced.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and the other ministers ended their two-day session Wednesday with a declaration reaffirming a decision to deploy 572 new U.S. missiles in Europe. They made the original decision in December 1979, and this was the fifth straight time it was reaffirmed by the nuclear planners.

All but one of the 13 nations represented here denounced Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's proposal for a freeze on medium range nuclear weapons in Europe. Such a freeze would leave the Soviet Union with a huge missile advantage, the ministers said, repeating what most of them said when Brezhnev first made the offer.

The United States vowed to press for arms reduction in negotiations not just on medium-range weapons, such as the sophisticated Soviet SS-20s, but on long-range intercontinental ballistic missiles as well. A hope for arms control has been expressed in virtually every NATO communique since the alliance was founded in 1949.

Even countries like Greece and Denmark, which have periodically taken exception to NATO's plans to beef up weaponry, made no major stir.

The last time NATO defense ministers met, in December, Greece's socialist Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou blocked a final communique and the meeting ended without a formal statement for the first time in NATO history.

This time Greece simply added a stiffly worded footnote to the final text saying it had its own views on some subjects — without saying what those views were.

Denmark declined to reject the Brezhnev freeze proposal but didn't make an issue of it. The Danes merely added a statement that such subjects are "the province of ministers of foreign affiars."

The communique made no mention of the growing and widespread antinuclear movement sweeping Europe and surfacing in the United States this year.

"I wish I could tell you something startling and exciting," West German navy Capt. Heiko Leopold told a reporter before the meeting started on Tuesday.

Leopold, spokesman for West German defense minister Hans Apel, said when it was all over: "What did I tell you?"

The next time the ministers meet in Brussels on May 6 the atmosphere may be less placid. The sessions will be at NATO's mazelike headquarters, where the opportunities for recreation are limited to walking through seemingly endless corridors.

The subject will shift from nuclear weapons to conventional forces and officials from several delegations said they expect the talks to be tough.

NATO military planners led by U.S. Gen. Bernard Rogers, the supreme commander of allied forces, want governments to spend billions of dollars to upgrade ground forces and other conventional weapons in Europe.

Rogers has predicted the improvements would require the governments to increase their defense budgets by an average of 4 percent a year at a time when the European recession is making public money scarce.

NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns said the meeting that ended Wednesday showed widespread unity existed in the alliance. Next time, with the United States pushing its European allies to do more for their own defense, there could be more fireworks.

Unknown gunmen kill British soldiers

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two British soldiers were shot dead today and two others wounded by guerrillas firing from ambush in West Belfast, police said.

The soldiers, who were not immediately named, were the first full-time servicemen killed this year in the British-ruled province, torn by sectarian violence since 1969.

Two civilians were also hit in the attack, but neither was thought to have been seriously injured, said Belfast police spokeswoman Alison Tynan. Five more were suffering from shock.

There was no claim of responsibility for the attack, but suspicion immediately fell on the Irish Republican Army, fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and unite the province with the largely Catholic Irish republic.

Police said the ambush took place near the Springfield Road area of West Belfast, a staunchly IRA district and the scene of countless previous sniper attacks.

They said five gunmen mounted the attack from a private house guerrillas had taken over late Wednesday night, holding hostage the 81-year-old owner, her daughter and son-in-law.

Weinberger plays down MX plan reaction

By WAYNE SLATER

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger sought Wednesday to play down Tuesday's poor reception in a Senate subcommittee for the Reagan administration's "interim" plan to base MX missiles in the West.

A Senate Armed Services subcommittee Tuesday unanimously rejected the Reagan proposal and gave the Pentagon until December to come up with a new plan.

Weinberger minimized the importance of the action, calling it "a subcommittee vote in one house" that demonstrates Congressional hopes the administration will develop a plan for permanently deploying the nuclear missiles.

"We would all like to get it deployed in a survivable, permanent basing mode, and the sooner we can do that the better," Weinberger told reporters. "I do think it would be an error not to produce the missiles, and I've not seen any suggestion that the subcommittee decision means that."

The subcommittee acted Tuesday on a proposal backed by Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., and Sen. John Warner, R-Va., to trim $2 billion in funds from the administration's fiscal 1983 defense budget.

Hart warned that putting the MX into rebuilt Minuteman silos "will do nothing to reduce the perceived vulnerability of our land-based silos to pre-emptive nuclear attack."

Under the Reagan plan, 40 MX missiles would be deployed temporarily in conventional silos now housing Minuteman missiles.

"I think there is still some lingering support in the subcommittee for the race-track approach," said Weinberger, who was in Colorado Springs hosting a meeting of NATO defense ministers.

Wyoming could get MXs

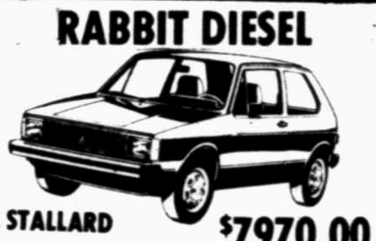

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Warren Air Force Base in Cheyenne could still figure in deployment of MX missiles, according to Wyoming's two U.S. Senators.

Sens. Alan Simpson and Malcolm Wallop both said Wednesday the Minuteman missile base could have a role in a permanent basing plan, which is where attention is focused after a Senate Armed Services subcommittee vote Tuesday.

The panel voted to withhold development funds until a permanent deployment plan was worked out. An interim plan was to put the first MX missiles in existing Minuteman silos. The subcommittee action has yet to be considered by the full committee.

But both Republican senators said the vote should encourage rapid decisions on a permanent basing plan.

By JONATHAN IMMANUEL

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israel dismissed the top two Palestinian mayors in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan today, and Arab protesters in the occupied territories reacted with a grenade ambush, killing one Israeli soldier and wounding three others.

The military command said Sgt. Pinhas Grossmark, 30, was killed and three soldiers were wounded in the grenade attack on an army vehicle in the occupied Gaza Strip. Grossmark was the first Israeli to die in a week of violence that has resulted in the deaths of five Arabs and the wounding of 21 in the occupied territories.

Israel Radio said two masked ambushers threw the grenades, one exploded in the army vehicle and another went off near an Arab's car, wounding three Arabs. The ambushers reportedly fled into an orange grove.

An Arab mob also attacked an Israeli car in the village of Adna near Hebron, 20 miles south of Jerusalem, the military said. One of the Israelis was injured by a thrown stone, and the car was set afire after the Israelis fled, the military said.

The Israeli military command said Bassam Shakaa of Nablus and Kerim Khalaf of Ramallah, cities north of Jerusalem, were sacked because of their "repeated attempts to disrupt public order." It accused them of taking their orders from the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Khalaf, speaking later at a news conference, charged that the dismissals were "the first step toward annexing the West Bank to Israel."

Memorial compromise reached

WASHINGTON (AP) — The planned design for a Vietnam Veterans Memorial, originally criticized as a "slap in the face" of those it is intended to honor, is being modified to include a flagpole, a statue and the words "God Bless America."

The original design, by Maya Ying Lin, a Yale University architecture, was selected in a national competition. It called for a set of polished granite walls in the shape of a chevron, bearing the names of 57,414 American men and women who died in the Vietnam War.

That plan, however, angered some veterans, prompted 27 members of Congress to write President Reagan in protest, and drew criticism from the conservative publication National Review and others.

Approval of the compromise design was announced Wednesday by Jan Scruggs, president of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Foundation, and Sen. John Warner, R-Va., a principal backer of legislation authorizing the memorial.

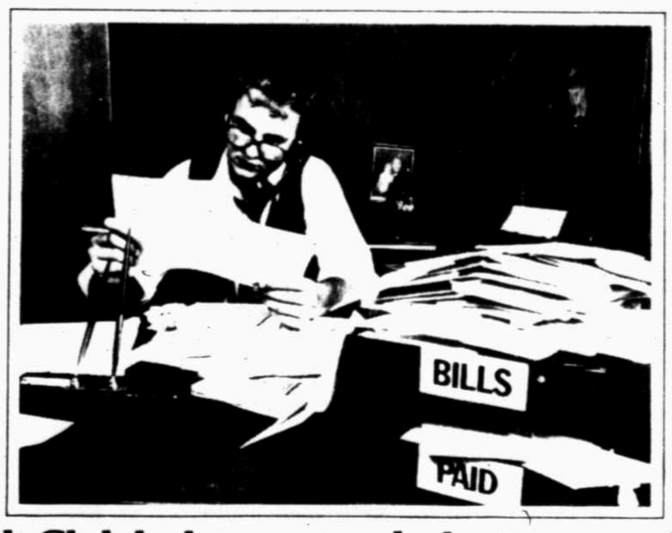

Warner said a compromise was reached at a second meeting of a cross-section of veterans organizations, Vietnam veterans and others.

The flagpole would be placed atop the apex of the two walls, Warner said, with a plaque reading, "A gift from the veterans of Vietnam to the people of the United States of America."

The statue would be placed in front of the walls. Scruggs and Warner, in a news release, described it as "a strong, commanding figure symbolizing all who served in Vietnam."

Limousines are symbol of power

By BETTY CUNIBERTI
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The long, luxurious limo glided up to the Sheraton Washington for an inaugural ball.

The chauffeur opened the door and the tuxedo-clad, New York businessman made his way to the hotel gala, where he was shocked to be turned away.

Never mind that this businessman happened to be Rand Araskog, chairman of the board of IT&T.

Never mind that the Sheraton Corp. is a subsidiary of IT&T.

The chairman of the board of IT&T could not get into a party in his own hotel, because it was already too crowded and the fire marshal's nerves were all aflutter.

So the chairman was chucked into the street...until the chauffeur interceded.

The chauffeur, whose job is to please, please, please, happened to know the cook. He smuggled Araskog in through the kitchen.

CREDIT THAT to old Limo Magic.

Nowhere is Limo Magic more important than in Washington, a city that would blow away if not anchored down by its iron-clad obsession with imagery, power and pecking orders.

What was a handful of limousine rental companies 10 years ago has multiplied to 69 listings in the current D.C. Yellow Pages. Douglas Jefferson, part-owner of Dav-El Livery Limousine rental, said, "Our company has grown between 50 percent and 100 percent every year for the last eight years."

Another company owner, Ibrahim Awadllah of Watergate Limousine, has seen his business grow from two cars 10 years ago to 92 now. He claims that makes him the biggest in Washington, though competitors scoff and say, "I see some real clunkers in his lot that he never uses."

The owners estimate the limo business in Washington to be in the neighborhood of $10 million a year.

With the exception of the beleaguered native Washingtonian, everybody in Washington is from someplace else. They probably haven't been here any longer than the current administration. So there's no time to build a reputation, no time to get to know each other. Impressions are what Washington is all about.

"A lot of us come to Washington with poor backgrounds. We're insecure. The limo is the right image," said lawyer and lobbyist William J. Colley, who was raised on a chicken farm in Arkansas and now darts about the nation's capital in a Rolls-Royce limo.

"IN WASHINGTON power is more the perception of power than power itself. If people think you have connections, that's better than having the connection itself," Colley said.

"The way people react toward one another is frequently determined by a power hierarchy, and the limousine is a clue to that," said Elliott McGinnies, chairman of the psychology department at American University in Washington.

"The limousine confirms one's self-perception of importance," said McGinnies, "and it's probably fun. I'd like to ride in a limo."

How strong a statement does the limo make?

George Meany, past director of the AFL-CIO, was so criticized for riding in his limo one block to the White House that "the policy now," said AFL-CIO information director Murray Seeger, "is for our current leadership to walk to the White House."

This flap over Meany ensued even though he was in his 80s and suffering from arthritis. The two top dogs at the AFL-CIO now do use two chauffeur-driven Chrysler New Yorkers, but Seeger points out, "our people, by Washington standards, are modest."

Social standards in Washington tend to be set by the current, or, in this case, reigning administration. Conspicuous consumption never has been more "in." The White House has doubled its driver service from 14 in the Jimmy Carter years to 28. The Carter cutbacks, said John Rogers, deputy management assistant to the president, "were symbolic cost-cutting measures. We felt it would be downright inefficient to have our top people wasting time hailing cabs."

THOSE 28 CARS do not even include the Secret Service fleet of bullet-proof, brick-proof, bow-and-arrow-proof stretch jobs that carry the president, first lady, vice president and foreign heads of state around, nor does it include the transportation provided Cabinet members, who are taken care of by their separate departments.

The White House fleet of 28 Chrysler St. Regis sedans is divided into a "priority list" for special assistants, with service after hours, and a "general list" for assistants and deputy assistants to use between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.

One famous bit of hierarchy lore involves Roderick Hills, who had put in his first day as counsel to then-President Ford. He worked late into the rainy night and hopped into a White House limo with another executive aide, counsel Philip Buchen.

The driver dropped Buchen off at his home and then told Hills he'd have to get out.

"You're on the 'B' list," the driver said to Hills. "My orders are that I can only take people on the 'A' list to their homes."

Hills, infuriated, tired, reclining in the back seat, grabbed the phone and dialed some numbers. He handed the phone to the driver.

"This is the president," the voice on the line said. "You may take Mr. Hills home."

"REPUBLICANS," SAID the aptly named George Coupe, co-owner of Admiral Limousine, "always spend more money and use more limos."

And thus there is Limo War in Washington.

The warfare is heightened by the fact that nearly all new limo companies are started by drivers from another company who develop a good clientele and then strike out on their own.

Who are the drivers? You will know them by their customers. Coupe drives Sinatra. Coupe's partner, Bernnie Resnick, squires Hope.

"Everyone has their claim to fame," said Jefferson, declining the name-dropping duel.

They battle for entire constituencies.

Jefferson says 90 percent of Dev-El Livery's business is corporate executives, who can write it off as a business expense.

Awadllah, an Arab and close friend of Jordan's King Hussein, specializes in foreign diplomats and their Washington negotiations, saying, "I handle NATO. I Handled Panama Canal. I handled Camp David. I drove both sides in that one."

THE LIMO WAR in Washington is Limo World War. When asked about a rumor that an upstart company had stolen some of his Middle Eastern territories, Awadllah sniffed, "only Qatar and (United Arab) Emirates. Little countries."

Joann Warnke, one of Awadllah's drivers, was tipped $500 for a two-and-a-half-hour driving job by a man who initially slumped down in the back seat, appalled that he was being driven by a woman.

"And there was a Saudi Prince," she recalled, "who said, 'I'll take you to Paris and London. I'll buy you a wardrobe.'

"I said, 'No.' Someday I'll kick myself. But I have to like who I see in the mirror."

Once Warnke drove two "regular, old, well-to-do Omanis" on a few errands...buying a Mercedes and $3,000 worth of merchandise at a toy store. When these regular guys discovered her birthday was the following day, they said, "Lock your car and hop on the Concorde to London. You can call Abe (Awadllah) and tell him where the car is." She declined.

A chauffeur for 27 years, Samson Davis once found an envelope left behind in his limo with "hundreds of thousands of dollars" in it. He returned it to his customer, who was promptly fired by his employer. It was the payroll of an entire hotel.

"IT NEVER occurred to me to keep it," Davis said. "I'm just not a dishonest person."

On one of his more unusual assignments, Davis drove a double wedding.

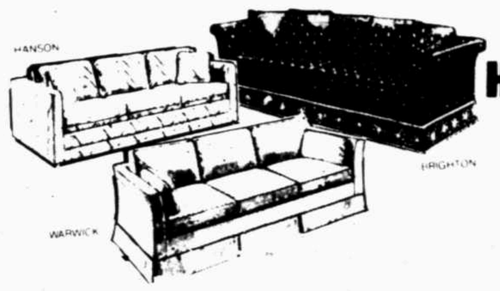

The couple got married in a church in Washington, then got married again in the back seat of the limo as it motored on a Virginia freeway. It seems they suddenly discovered that since the wedding license had been purchased in Virginia, the D.C. wedding wasn't legal.

Ed Hoffman, the president of Washington's trendy Woodward and Lothrop department stores, said of his personal limo, "I'm on three or four corporate boards and 15 charity boards and if I didn't have it, I literally could not make my schedule."

Hoffman owns his own chauffeured car, which places him in the penthouse of limodom, even if it is just a 1970 Lincoln. Rented limousines are somewhat flawed by the single letter "L" which appears on the license plate, telling the whole world that the person inside is not half as chic as one who owns his own.

"If you're going to get in a limo with an 'L' on the plate, sniffed attorney Walter Diercks, "you might as well get in a cab."

Divided frontage roads on Loop 250 from Midkiff Road to Big Spring Street will be opened Friday. Eastbound traffic from Midkiff to Big Spring will be limited to one lane on the existing F.M. 868, while westbound traffic will be routed onto the new two-lane frontage road.

Traffic to be rerouted

Construction work on Loop 250 in Midland has progressed to a point which will allow traffic to be routed onto the two divided frontage roads between Midkiff Road and Big Spring Street (S.H. 349) beginning Friday, according to the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Eastbound traffic along Loop 250 will be restricted to one lane between Midkiff Road and Big Spring Street on the existing F.M. 868 to a point just west of Big Spring Street. It will then be routed onto the new eastbound frontage road to the Big Spring Street intersection.

Westbound traffic will be routed onto the newly completed two-lane north frontage road from Big Spring Street to a point just west of Midkiff Road. It will then be restricted to one lane on the partially completed north frontage road to the Midland Drive intersection. The north frontage road will continue to operate with two lanes of westbound traffic from Midkiff Road westerly.

Drivers are requested to observe all warning signs within the constructions areas and to use extreme caution. Bill Burnett, resident engineer for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation in the Midland office, is in charge of the work, with W.A. Lancaster, district engineer in Odessa, providing overall supervision.

Cocaine trial on docket

The federal trial of three Midlanders and a Colorado man indicted by a federal grand jury for possession of six ounces of cocaine valued at $25,000 has been docketed for May 11 in U.S. District Court in Midland.

Indicted were Midlanders Fonda Gayle Hellums, 27, of 401 W. Dengar Ave.; Warren Curtis Hultgren Jr., 30, of 300 W. Illinois Ave., and Stephen John Sadowski, 27, of Route 7. Each was released under a $25,000 personal recognizance bond set by U.S. Magistrate J. Michael Cunningham.

Also indicted was Donald Thomas Rondinelli, 29, of Crested Butte, Colo. He was released under a $50,000 bailbond. The four defendants have pleaded "not guilty" to the accusations against them.

They were arrested in early March in Midland by agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, Federal Bureau of Investigation and Midland Police Department.

Lawmen uncovered about six ounces of the narcotic, which, at $100 to $150 per gram, could sell from $16,800 to $25,200.

"It just depends on what the market will bear," said DEA resident agent Howard L. Whitworth.

Ms. Hellums, who is cited in each of the four counts in the indictment, if convicted could be sentenced to 15 years in prison and fined $25,000 on each count. She is charged with conspiracy to possess cocaine, possession of the controlled substance and with intent to distribute the drug in February and March.

Hultgren, who was indicted on two counts, is charged with conspiracy to possession cocaine, a stimulant, and with intent to distribute the drug.

Sadowski, who is twice cited in the indictment, is charged with conspiracy and aiding and abetting the procurement of the drug.

Rondinelli, named in two counts, is accused of conspiracy to possess the drug and with possession with intent to distribute cocaine.

The jury trial of the case will be held before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton in the George Mahon Federal Building in Midland.

Mexia trial Monday

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An appeals court has withdrawn an order that would have delayed the trial of three Limestone County officers accused in the drownings of three teenagers.

Withdrawal of the order by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals presumably means the trial will begin as scheduled Monday in the court of County Circuit Judge Tom Price.

The trial has been moved three times.

On Tuesday the appeals court granted a request by defense attorneys to postpone the trial, and ordered the state to file a brief on whether Price's court had jurisdiction in the case.

Free services reduce risk

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Summertime traditionally means an upsurge in the number of burglars and vandals taking advantage of people on vacation and otherwise away from home for longer periods of time during nice weather.

One way to mitigate that risk is to take advantage of the free services provided by the Crime Prevention Unit of the Midland Police Department.

Foremost among those services is the home security survey that takes about 45 minutes to conduct and results in recommendations for increasing the odds against breakins and vandalism.

According to Crime Prevention Officer Ron Benton, 11,000 homes have been surveyed since the program got under way in 1972. During that period, only seven of those homeowners fell victim to burglars.

Assuming solid-core exterior doors, the average cost of installing proper locks and making other security improvements is $150. The price is even cheaper for do-it-yourselfers.

"PROPER locks, lighting, doors and alert neighbors who'll call the police when they see something suspicious in the neighborhood all help to cut down on crime," Benton said of the overall crime prevention program, which includes business security surveys and is headed up by Sgt. Lalo Camarillo. "It could save thousands of dollars in damage and loss."

Most residential burglaries occur during the day when people are away, according to Benton, while most vandalism takes place in the dark of night and centers on school property.

> "Proper locks, lighting, doors and alert neighbors who'll call the police when they see something suspicious in the neighborhood all help to cut down on crime."

"More and more," he continued, "interior doors are being used as exterior doors — especially doors leading from the garage to the interior of the house. One thing we're looking at is getting together with home and apartment builders and developing an overall home security code. Making homes safer when they're built would be the ideal situation."

Another project under way by the CPU is development of a construction site security program that will be presented to area contractors in the next month or so. "It will reduce equipment and material thefts and discourage vandalism," said Benton, who added that the unit is also putting together an auto theft security program for presentation to the public sometime in the near future.

ALSO IN THE works is a credit card and bad check program to be aimed at retail establishments, many of which have seen a large increase in those problems with the influx of new people into the Midland area.

"We'll show them (merchants) what to look for when cashing checks and handling credit cards," Benton noted.

"Two-thirds of those we arrest anymore are from out of town," said Camarillo.

In one popular CPU program, people can use — free of charge — an engraving device to mark their personal belongings for easier recovery in the event they're stolen and later recovered by police.

A driver's license number is typically used as the identifying mark because "it can be traced in a matter of seconds and tell us who the victim is and where he or she lives," said Benton.

MARKED GOODS also discourage theft because they're harder to dispose of. "We're averaging one and a half auto, residential and business burglaries a day," said Benton. "At the current (growth rate of the city) many categories could double from last year.

"We're trying to get those figures down, but we need the public's help."

Gypsy Moths unveil alternative budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some two dozen House Republicans from the Frost Belt — the so-called Gypsy Moth coalition — are mounting an attack on President Reagan's proposed cuts in domestic programs and increases in defense spending.

Reps. Bill Green of New York and Carl D. Pursell of Michigan were unveiling the Gypsy Moths' alternatives to Reagan's fiscal 1983 budget today in an appearance before the full House Budget Committee.

Richard S. Schweiker, secretary of health and human services, was scheduled as leadoff witness before the committee, which is chaired by Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla.

The panel was expected to question Schweiker closely about the impact on the working poor of Reagan's proposed cuts in health, welfare and social service programs.

Green and Pursell, co-chairman of the Gypsy Moths' nine-member steering committee, were expected to call for a reduction of at least $12 billion to $15 billion in Reagan's projected increase in defense spending for fiscal 1983.

They also were seeking major cuts in water projects, agricultural subsidies and foreign military sales, while arguing that energy aid for the poor, Medicaid and job-training funds should be preserved.

The moderate Republicans also say they favor tax increases of $25 billion to $30 billion to close the federal deficit, in part by repealing tax breaks that the oil industry got last year and by changes in the controversial provision that allows businesses to avoid federal taxes by buying tax credits that another company cannot use because of its losses.

The Gypsy Moths voted as a bloc last year with the president on his tax- and budget-cutting bills. Their votes, along with those of the Sun Belt Democrats coalition known as the Boll Weevils who bolted party ranks, helped Reagan cement his legislative victories in the Democratic-controlled House.

But, with the recession continuing and unemployment at 11.6 percent in Pennsylvania and 16 percent in Michigan, the Gypsy Moths are serving notice that their allegiance cannot be counted on this year.

They contend their hard-pressed states in the Northeast and Midwest get back only 84 cents for each tax dollar their citizens send to Washington, and they argue that further cuts in domestic programs will hit their region while most of the increases in defense spending while be in the South and West.

Court making it difficult for states to take kids

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has voted to make it more difficult for states to sever all ties between children and parents accused of abusing or neglecting them.

In a 5-4 ruling Wednesday, the justices said a state must offer "clear and convincing" proof that parents are unfit before officials can permanently take children away and forbid parental visits or communication with the children.

But the Supreme Court will take up the issue again on Tuesday in a separate case. At that time, the justices hear arguments on whether parents can seek federal court help to get back children removed by state officials.

The court appears destined to face an increasing number of cases presenting the sensitive issue of when officials can deny parents who are allegedly unfit the right to see their children.

Last June, the justices ruled 5-4 in a North Carolina case that poor people have no right to free legal help when the state tries to take away their children permanently.

That decision prompted three dissenters to say: "Surely there can be few losses more grievous than the abrogation of parental rights. Yet the court today asserts that this deprivation somehow is less serious than threatened losses deemed to require appointed counsel, because in this instance the parents' own 'personal liberty' is not at stake."

Writing for the dissenters in last June's case was Justice Harry A. Blackmun, who authored Wednesday's opinion stating "clear and convincing" proof must be offered that parents are unfit.

Most states, acting on their own initiative, already have "clear and convincing" standards.

Wednesday's decision, which struck down a New York state law, does not affect the initial decision by welfare officials to remove a child from a parent's custody temporarily.

The four dissenters, led by Justice William Rehnquist, offered their own criticism.

"By parsing the New York scheme and holding one narrow provision unconstitutional, the majority invites further federal court intrusion into every facet of state family law," Rehnquist wrote.

In March 1981, the court sidestepped the issue of what protections a state must provide when attempting to end a parent-child relationship. That action, based on a technicality, set the stage for Wednesday's decision.

Next Tuesday, the justices will hear arguments in what could become one of the most far-reaching of all parental rights cases.

The issue is whether allegedly unfit parents can invoke a powerful federal court procedure known as "habeas corpus" to get their children back from the state once all parental rights have been cut off.

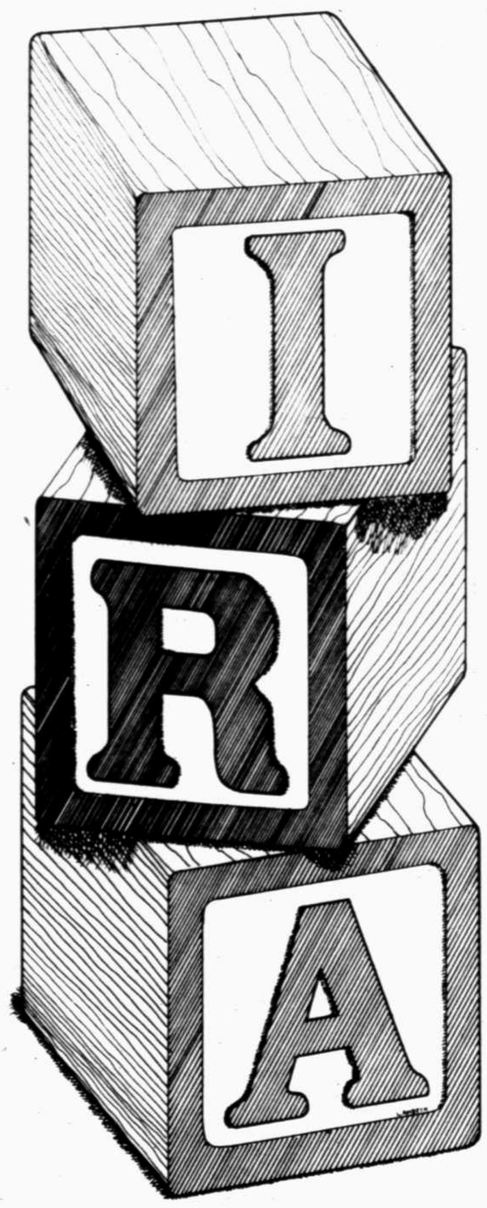

Habeas corpus allows a federal court to free someone from the custody of state officials on the basis of a denial of constitutional rights. It frequently is invoked by state prison inmates seeking to have federal courts overturn their convictions.

A decision in that case is expected by July.

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Todd Nelson saw that his bugs were alive, well and flying in space, and the 18-year-old Minnesota high school student finally broke into a grin.

Nelson, who endured grimly a week of feverish preparation and hours of interviews, watched on television Wednesday as two astronauts operated his bug box aboard the orbiting Columbia space shuttle. He saw his insects flutter and fly and float in weightlessness and realized, at last, he said, "We did indeed see a good result."

Only then, after days of solemn-faced public appearances, did Nelson show his youthful grin.

And like a true scientist, he was eager to get to a lab and study the results.

"I'm extremely curious to review the film in detail," he said.

Nelson's experiment, the first of 10 high school projects selected to fly aboard the shuttle, is a clear-sided box containing two chambers. In one chamber are 24 adult velvetbean moths and 12 housefly pupae. The second chamber contains 14 honeybees and 24 velvetbean moth pupae. The idea was to find out how the insects would react to flying in the weightlessness of space.

The moths, said Nelson, tended to fly more than the bees. But when the moths took to wing it was "in an extremely unstable pattern. I saw one make a 90-degree within five centimeters. It was very unstable."

Nelson had a duplicate box, with the duplicate number and type of insects in a high fidelity model of Columbia's cabin at the Johnson Space Center. After watching the insects fly in space, the youth thumped and tapped the duplicate box while a photographer took movies. In this way, he explained, he hoped to be able to compare the flight patterns of the bugs in the weightlessness of space with those on the ground.

Astronauts Jack Lousma and Gordon Fullerton spent about a half hour with the insect box and Lousma described what he saw.

"The bees just float around without flapping their wings," said Lousma. "That's like Gordo (Fullerton) — you don't see him flap his wings."

Lousma jarred the insect box once and the container was instantly filled with a cloud of flying bugs. Watching on television, Nelson pointed and then made notes.

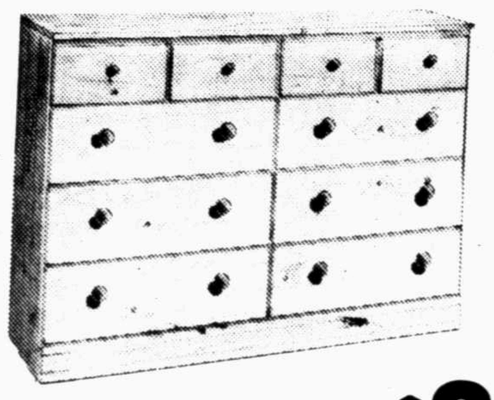

The houseflies in space were uniformly distributed throughout their chamber, but in the grounded box the flies tended to collect at the top. Nelson said he had no explanation for the behavior, other than the difference in gravity, but said that was one thing he wanted to study.

Nelson showed little emotion through endless interviews, and only rarely did he seem touched by the experience. Pressed for his feelings, he finally allowed that seeing his experiment fly in space "was the cream on the cake."

Was he excited? "Well," he said solemnly, "Yeah."

By JANE SEAGRAVE
Associated Press Writer

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — You are invited to attend the third landing of the space shuttle Columbia — but watch out for the burning sun, rattlesnakes and unexploded missiles.

That was the good news and the bad news Wednesday as range commander Maj. Gen. Alan Nord announced that a remote section of the highly restricted base would be set aside for spectators to watch the spacecraft touch down on barren white gypsum flats at midday Monday. The Army initially had said the public would not be allowed to watch.

Nord stressed that facilities at the viewing site, about five miles northwest of the shuttle's flight path, would be "austere" — no food, water, medical facilities or toilets.

He said visitors should beware of the intense sun that reflects off the sand, the snakes common to the area, and, especially, the unexploded bombs, or "duds" that lurk throughout the range from its years of use as a test site.

Nord said the viewing area was selected largely because it is believed to have fewer explosives than other sites. Forty White Sands technicians will comb the area for munitions before touchdown, but Nord noted "There's never any assurances that you have 100 percent of all duds out of the area."

Visitors will receive flyers describing the unexploded munitions and warning against picking them up.

Nord said a single two-lane road, leading 32 miles from the entrance gate, will be the lone access to the viewing site and will be open from 6 a.m. to 11 a.m. Monday. Landing is scheduled for 12:25 p.m.

Only 19,000 vehicles will be able to get in during that period, he said, bringing an estimated 40,000 people.

Nord said he could not estimate how close visitors will be to the actual spacecraft as it lands on the Northrup Strip, since the exact landing spot depends on the weather. If the winds doesn't kick up the fine white sand, he said, onlookers should get a clear view of Columbia.

Overflow crowds who arrive too late to make it onto the preferred site will be encouraged to watch from nearby White Sands National Monument, which can accommodate about 30,000 people.

More than 250,000 people watched both the first two landings at Edwards Air Force Base in California's Mojave Desert. The site was switched to New Mexico this time because heavy rains made the California runways unusable.

The decision to open the site came at the urging of New Mexico officials, particularly Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M.

Shuttle, space station mission plans begun

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — After watching scientists here direct experiments aboard the space shuttle Columbia, Harry Craft admits he's a little nervous.

"They're pretty busy," he said, shaking his head as he anticipates a shuttle flight next year that will carry a compact European-built space station into orbit for the first time, with Craft as mission manager.

The new space station, called Spacelab, will carry four times as many scientific experiments as the current shuttle flight.

As Craft has been watching the quick pace in the mission control room in Houston, he said, he has been "multiplying everything by four."

Spacelab, built at a cost of $1 billion by the European Space Agency, which includes 10 Western European nations, will make its maiden flight in September 1983.

When it does, it will establish two milestones in space exploration:

— It will mark the dawn of manned spaceflight for Western Europeans. One of the six men aboard that flight will be a European.

— It will be the first time that scientists not trained as astronauts will travel in space, as the shuttle comes closer to its goal of making space travel routine.

They've come long way from toothpaste tubes

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — It's almost as if they hadn't left home. Despite occasional nausea from motion sickness, shuttle astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton are dining like kings.

Steak. Shrimp cocktail. Smoked turkey. You can't get those culinary delights out of a toothpaste-like tube. Space dining has come a long way since the days of John Glenn and the Mercury Program.

Each time they sit down to their rehydratable and thermostabilized meals, Columbia's crew is reaping the rewards of two decades of space research and development.

Before America's first orbital flight in 1962, scientists didn't know whether an astronaut would even be able to swallow in the weightlessness of zero gravity.

Now, they're stocking the shuttle like they would the kitchen of a fancy restaurant, enough to feed a crew of two for a day or a crew of seven for a month.

The process of food supply and preparation has been refined to the point where not only are the basic survival needs met, but food is nutritious, easily prepared and psychologically acceptable. All this within the limited constraints of weight and storage.

Aluminum squeeze tubes went out with the Gemini spacecraft in the mid-1960s. Taking their place were bite-sized cubes of fruit, meat, bread or dessert foods — coated with edible gelatin to control crumbling.

And rehydratables made their appearance, too. These were dried foods in clear plastic pouches. After adding water, the mixture was kneaded into a puree that the astronaut could squeeze through a tube into his mouth.

During the Apollo lunar program, the freeze-dried process greatly improved the rehydratables, allowing the food to retain much of its original flavor, nutrition and texture.

Thermally processed foods were developed which could be eaten in a more natural way, with a spoon rather than through a tube. Rehydratables also were put up in "spoon-bowl" packages.

Then came slices of fresh bread in plastic bags and sandwich spreads in aluminum cans with pull-tabs.

Dallas police officers examine a shack believed to be the home of a man arrested in connection with a shooting spree aboard a Dallas Transit System bus Wednesday afternoon.

Suspect lived in caves, carried voodoo doll

DALLAS (AP) — A man arrested in the shooting of four people on a city bus was described by police as a religious fanatic who had been living in caves and was carrying a machete, a voodoo doll and the jawbone of a large animal.

Authorities said the man pulled a 12-gauge shotgun from a golf bag and opened fire on the passengers, killing one and critically wounding two others. The bus driver also was shot but was reported in good condition.

W.K. Rudd, 37, was arrested about five minutes after the incident Wednesday. He was held on $95,000 bond.

"He said that he was a reverend of the Lord," said police Sgt. Bill Parker, adding that Rudd described himself as "the minister without a church."

Police said that Rudd's golf bag contained a machete, a voodoo doll, an ax with a two-foot handle, and the jawbone of an animal about the size of a cow.

Rudd's home, on city-owned land in a wooded area of South Dallas six blocks from the shooting scene, is a tent-like structure built with plastic draped over cedar poles.

Next to it is a cedar cross with a handpainted sign reading, "Free in Christ Mission" and "Brother Elder Rudd." Nearby is a makeshift pulpit with a Bible sitting atop a lectern.

"People are making him out as if he's some kind of animal," said Velda Fetter, a gas station cashier to whom Rudd surrendered. "He was just a human being who is a little strange."

Parker, the police sergeant, said Rudd has lived "in caves and in mountains for the past six years in various parts of the country."

People in the area said Rudd spent his days sitting under a convenience store sign and his evenings at the nearby Dallas Zoo.

Fifteen to 20 people were on the Dallas Transit System bus when the shots were fired. Police and witnesses said the gunman screamed "hit, hit, hit," and then opened fire.

"He put his stuff down and took out the gun and said, 'Everybody get off' and then he started shooting. He fired two shots when he got off and everybody was running," said witness Jacqueline Jackson.

"He just pulled out that shotgun and starting shooting," said passenger Herman Quillion, 25. "No one said nothing to him either. That's cold blooded for him to shoot people like that."

Willis Thomas, 37, of Dallas, was shot in the back and died, said Kay Scott, a spokeswoman at Parkland Hospital.

The other two passengers who were wounded — Hosley Minafee, 17, and Joseph Wren, 38, both of Dallas — were listed in critical condition, said hospital spokesman Tom Noble. Minafee was shot in the chest and Wren was shot the chest and leg, Ms. Scott said.

Thompson, a 16-year veteran of the Dallas Transit System, fled after the shootings and called authorities.

Police said they knew of no connection between Rudd and any of Wednesday's shooting victims.

Twelve years ago Rudd was arrested and convicted on a theft charge and sentenced to two years in prison, police spokesman Ed Spencer said

From Staff and Wire Reports

A proposed agreement filed by the Justice Department ends a civil antitrust suit against an Odessa company accused of conspiring to restrain competition in repossession services.

The proposed decree announced in Washington was filed in U.S. District Court in Midland Wednesday and will become final upon approval by the court.

The government originally filed suit Feb. 27, 1981, alleging that Business Investment and Development Corp. of Odessa, through its wholly owned subsidiary, American Lenders Service Co., had conspired with others in the repossession industry to fix prices and allocate business territories in violation of the Sherman Act.

Repossessors, who also are sometimes known as adjusters, provide services for banks, credit unions and other lenders who are seeking to recover merchandise sold under agreements where the merchandise is collateral for a loan.

The government charged that the conspiracy was based on preparing and publishing a fee schedule for repossession services and by restricting the area in which licensees of American Lenders could advertise and work.

American Lenders Service Co. has licensing agreements with about 60 individuals who own and operate independent repossession agencies. Some of those licensees also own stock in BIDCO.

Indian leader protests racial slur

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — District immigration director Richard Casillas said Hispanic leader Ruben Bonilla was "like a chief with no Indians" when it came to the issue of employer sanctions to keep illegal aliens out of U.S. jobs.

Bonilla, national counsel for the League of United Latin American Citizens, responded, "I'd rather be a chief without Indians than a turkey without feathers."

While the two debated whether Texas Hispanics favor a crackdown on illegal Mexican aliens, an American Indian leader stepped in the middle and protested the bandying about of what he considered to be an ethnic slur.

Casillas used the "chief with no Indians" expression to describe Bonilla, saying the LULAC official was "out of tune" with most Texas Hispanics when Bonilla opposed employer sanctions on grounds they would cause trouble for Mexican-Americans trying to find jobs.

Casillas released a study saying a large majority of Hispanics favor employer sanctions because illegal aliens take jobs away from them.

Ron Andrade, executive director of the National Congress of American Indians in Washington, D.C., meanwhile, telephoned The Associated Press here Wednesday and took umbrage with the use of the name of his ethnic group in the debate.

Andrade also said he agreed with Bonilla on the issue of employer sanctions, saying they might work a hardship on the Kickapoos and other Indians who migrate from Canada and Mexico into the United States to work.

"They could easily be barred from work" under proposed employer sanctions, he said.

Andrade said he was writing the Immigration and Naturalization Service asking it to reprimand Casillas, its San Antonio district director.

"He could have just as easily have said 'be Polish without a Pope' or 'black without a plantation,'" Andrade said.

The Indian leader's statement caused Casillas to apologize for using the terminology.

"I apologize. It was not meant as an ethnic slur. As a matter of fact I should have said something like 'a leader without any followers,'" Casillas said.

Casillas said he has "always referred with pride to our cosmopolitan heritage," including indigenous Americans, in his talks about the origin of names of lakes, rivers and cities.

"If it (Casillas') remark was just a simple use of terminology, that's one thing," Andrade said, "but we're fearful of any kind of ethnic slur. Those two together (ethnic remark and employer sanctions) frighten us."

Casillas said he did not blame Andrade for being upset.

"In fact, I think I'm Mestizo (Mexican-Indian) myself," the immigration official said. "In these times, people are edgy. There is so much bigotry in this world you can't blame people for being edgy.

Colleges say aid not enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group representing the nation's 111 predominantly black colleges says President Reagan's proposed increase in a special program that aids black colleges "fades into insignificance" next to overall cuts in student aid.

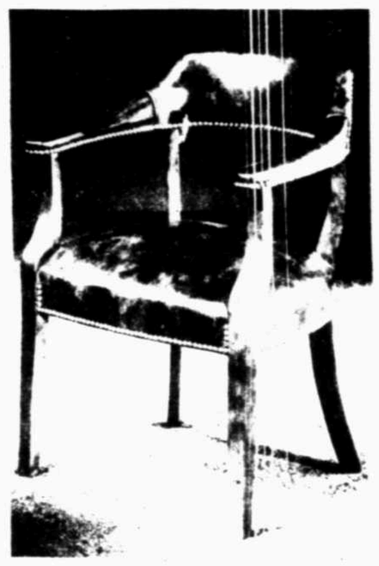

The National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education says that Reagan's plan to cut $1.5 billion from the current $3.3 billion in Pell Grants, College Work-Study, loans and other aid "would have a devastating impact on our institutions."

Presidents and leaders of many of the black colleges were to spend today lobbying Congress against the cuts. The association opens a three-day annual conference here on Friday.

The Reagan administration contends that overall aid to black colleges would rise by $26 million in fiscal 1983 to $212 million, including a share of a program for developing colleges. The administration has proposed increasing funds for that program by $5 million to $129 million.

But the association, in a policy statement, said that less than a third of the funds for developing colleges go to black institutions.

The 'canyon's' message

One thing that simply must be said for Midland's young people and those who have worked for the Wild River Canyon water amusement park is that they are committed to trying to keep the park open. The principals are working diligently and tirelessly toward that end and, regardless of where one stands on the park issue, the efforts of those involved in the drive to save "the Canyon" have to be admired.

Most recent in the Wild River Canyon story is notification that an "initiative petition" drive has been launched in hopes of calling a bond election for this summer to determine whether a majority of Midland voters want to allow the city to purchase the park. The water amusement park was placed on the auction block recently since a number of the original investors want to put their money elsewhere and likely will be sold and the land converted to another use. Unless, that is, the "Save the Canyon" drive is a success.

The city studied a presentation by Wild River Canyon proposing the purchase of the park with the goal of keeping it open for the benefit of the community's young people. But city officials nixed the idea, noting that many Midlanders likely would not support being taxed to save the water amusement park.

That, of course, is true and no one can fault the city for declining to buy the park, particularly in light of the fact that voters will be asked in about two weeks to approve a total of nearly $16.5 million in city and school bonds to finance such basics as improved streets, new fire substations and additional school classrooms, all necessities to meet the needs of the Tall City's burgeoning population.

But the message being sent loudly and clearly in this Wild River Canyon debate is that Midland's youth population — and at least a part of the adult population — believes, perhaps justifiably, that more recreational outlets are needed here. And the actions of the past couple of weeks aptly illustrate that the canyon's supporters aren't afraid to get involved in trying to bring about what they believe is worthwhile. More than 700 people signed petitions expressing a desire to see the park kept open. More than a few supporters showed up at a city council meeting at which proposals to save the canyon were considered. And now, another attempt is being made to save Wild River Canyon.

Those seeking to keep the park open have conducted their affairs in a most admirable manner and are voicing a sentiment about available recreational attractions that should not be overlooked. Saving Wild River Canyon may not be possible, but the message from the canyon's supporters nonetheless remains the same: Let's not forget our young people as we grow into a major city.

Are we listening?

A beneficial agreement

The United Auto Workers and General Motors have pursued a remarkable, statesmanlike course in their contract agreement that could help to shore up the depressed auto industry giant. Some doubt remains, however, that even the substantial wage concessions by the UAW will put U.S. automakers into price competition with the Japanese.

The revised General Motors contract announced recently and now awaiting ratification by UAW membership, gives both sides what they wanted most. To permit GM a $2.5 billion saving during the 30-month life of the agreement, the UAW agreed to defer three cost-of-living increases due this year and to give up two annual 3 percent wage raises and nine days of a paid time off a year.

In return, the union gets a profit-sharing plan and better job security, as well as an agreement to rescind two plant closings, saving 11,000 jobs. The settlement closely resembles a contract the UAW signed March 1 with Ford Motor Co. that will help eliminate the No. 2 automaker's $1.06 billion deficit.

Far from lowering the cost of U.S.-made vehicles, the wage concessions will merely reduce the anticipated rise in auto industry labor costs to 17 percent in the next 30 months, instead of the 24 percent scheduled under the old contract. Meanwhile, Japanese manufacturers, whose labor costs are half those of U.S. makers, are building cars that cost $1,700 a unit less than comparable U.S. models.

Nevertheless, the GM and Ford agreements are noteworthy on two counts. They reverse 50 years of adversarial relationship between U.S. manufacturers and the United Auto Workers. Moreover, they belatedly recognize that wage increases have to be based upon increased productivity. Despite current uncertainty, these new principles should make the U.S. auto industry a tougher, healthier competitor in the months to come.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

New transfer policy has FBI agents fuming

WASHINGTON — At night, an eerie stillness steals over FBI headquarters, broken now and again by lone footsteps. There are those who swear they have heard the angry snorts of J. Edgar Hoover in the empty corridors.

Jack Anderson

Even those who won't believe in ghosts admit that the late FBI director must be fuming over what has happened to his beloved FBI. He was a master bureaucrat who curried the favor and played on the fears of the nation's elected leaders.

He had them believing that he knew just how much evil lurked in the hearts of the politically prominent. They were fearful that their darkest deeds were on file alike in St. Peter's celestial books and J. Edgar Hoover's musty cabinets. No wonder he became the most powerful and feared bureaucrat in the history of the republic.

Yet the crafty old curmudgeon never permitted his minions to conduct any serious criminal investigations on Capitol Hill — unless the attorney general ordered it and put it in writing. Even then, Hoover was inclined to tip off the victim and blame the powers-above-him for the indignity rather than risk having an agent caught snooping in congressional closets. Hoover treated Capitol Hill as a protected preserve.

The long-departed FBI chief directed his battles against the likes of John Dillinger and Kreepy Karpis — until Hoover's bulldog visage became a national symbol of the crusade against public enemies. The glory rubbed off on FBI agents whem Hoover kept on a tight leash. He rigidly controlled what they did, where they went and even how they looked.

With Hoover gone except for his ghostly influence, the rigid rules have been relaxed and some of the old standards have been discarded. Yet the new FBI, with sideburns and patterned shirts that were once prohibited, is plagued with low morale.

The Senate is preparing to investigate the ABSCAM excesses — a caper that Hoover would never have permitted his agents to get dragged into. The ex-judge who now heads the FBI, William Webster, is also more moderate in his ways and broader in his outlook than Hoover ever was. Yet Webster is losing his hold on the agents who once trembled before Hoover's scowl.

J. Edgar arbitrarily transferred agents or banished them to Butte, without an audible murmur of resistance. But today hundreds of G-men are grousing over Webster's personnel policies. They don't like the way he shuffles them whimsically among the bureau's 60 field offices across the country, stirring charges that the transfers are capricious and counterproductive.

"There seems to be a real concern over the bureau's apparent lack of sensitivity to its personnel," said a circular distributed recently to members of the FBI Agents Association. "This has engendered a widespread perception amongst agents that decision makers don't feel much compassion for their fellow agents."

What has the agents steaming is Director Webster's plan to transfer about 300 of them within the next year from regional offices which they thought were their permanent assignments. They've put down roots there, both personally and professionally, and fear that the transfers will wreak havoc with their family lives and their careers.

According to several internal FBI memos examined by my associate Indy Badhwar, the new rotation policy springs from Webster's concern over a severe "staffing inbalance." The chief is troubled by a shortage of experienced agents in the FBI's "Top Twelve" offices — Philadelphia, Miami, Washington, Cleveland, San Francisco, Baltimore, New York, Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Newark and Houston.

These big-time bureaus, according to one Webster memo, are being forced to use junior agents — those with no more than four years' experience — "to investigate our most complex cases (while) our small or medium-sized offices are staffed with a majority of GS-13 (senior) agents."

Webster's solution to this situation is to transfer hundreds of G-men to the "Top Twelve" for as long as three years. They're being picked from a large pool of agents who joined the FBI in October 1969.

The affected agents are circulating petitions for signatures, hoping to pressure Webster into reconsidering his new policy, or at least negotiating with representatives of the disgruntled group. Basically, the agents feel they're being made to suffer for the bureau's own administrative blunders.

By longstanding tradition, they claim, rookie FBI agents are sent to their first assignment for seasoning. This relatively brief interlude is followed by an assignment that is regarded as a permanent move. So they settle down — buy homes, raise families.

"Many agents believe that the new policy is an attempted quick fix of a longstanding bureau problem," said one employee circular.

In addition to the personal hardship involved in the contemplated transfers, the affected agents point out that the plan will cost the FBI millions of dollars in moving expenses.

And one insider complained that some of the transfers make no sense at all. Most of them, the source said, involve shuttling junior agents from one small office to another. For example, agents have been transferred from Kansas City to Buffalo — and replaced with agents from Buffalo.

It's enough to rouse J. Edgar Hoover from the deep.

PRETTY PLEASE?: President Reagan was confined to a roped-off platform at a private function for Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., when a guest asked to shake his hand. Reagan turned to his Secret Service bodyguards and asked, "Is it OK?" Given the go-ahead, he unhooked the velvet rope and joined the crowd, explaining, "The Service doesn't always let me do this."

ART BUCHWALD

High noon's a 'hot time' in Kennesaw!

News Item — The town of Kennesaw, Ga., has just passed an ordinance requiring the head of every household to own a gun and ammunition. The law was prompted by a recent ordinance passed in Morton Grove, Ill., banning the possession of handguns by all residents, except police officers and military personnel.

Art Buchwald

Stage Manager — "The name of the town is Kennesaw, Georgia. It's a nice town, y'know what I mean? Nobody remarkable ever came out of it s'far as we know. We're just plain simple folk here, we can't claim to be nothing more than just another town along Route 41.

"I better show you around a bit. That large yellow house with the funeral wreath in front of it belongs to the Kettermans. Two days ago Hodding Ketterman shot his son, Junior, who was trying to sneak in the window at three o'clock in the morning and Hodding thought he was a thief. The town feels terrible about it, but everyone says Junior should have known better.

"There's one of our leading citizens, Jeffrey Bean, on his way down to the Sear's Roebuck parking lot to have a shootout with Abel Grimstead. It seems Jeffrey's dog knocked over all of Abel's garbage, and this made Abel real mad and he took his Smith and Wesson and pumped the dog full of lead. Most folks in town think Abel overreacted, but Abel says that's what guns are for, and there's nothing on the books says you can't shoot a dog on your property.

"Here comes Doc Lafferty. He looks a little peaked. He's been at the hospital all night removing a bullet from Hart Doubleday, who was practicing drawing his gun in front of the mirror and shot himself in the leg.

"Over there is the Court House. There's lots of excitement there because Betty Bentley is on trial for emptying her .45 into Lorelei Lee, who she suspected was playing around with her husband, Charles. Betty says it was an accident, and the gun went off while she was showing Lorelei how she won a silver cup at the Kennesaw Handgun church picnic last month.

"Here comes Hiram Dollop, who's become the village idiot because he refused to have a pistol in his house on religious grounds. Everyone thinks he's crazy, but he's harmless and except for the kids throwing mud at him because he doesn't own a gun, we leave him alone.

"Don't get nervous about those shots you just heard. That's 80-year-old Sam Francis. Every time the postman forgets to bring Sam his Social Security check, Sam starts shooting at the mail truck.

"Well, it's getting on to bedtime. The Putnams are having a party to celebrate the opening of a new pistol range they built in their basement. Outside of that, most of the people in our town are tucked into bed, their guns under their pillows, sleeping sweet dreams after another eventful day. Good night all."

GEORGE F. WILL

Two-faced view of tobacco should make government blush

WASHINGTON — I am not squeamish — I can watch an infant eat a poached egg — but I shudder and avert my gaze when the government deals with tobacco.

George F. Will

The government, which is having a tad of trouble with its budget, subsidizes both the growing of tobacco and the treatment of the many illnesses tobacco causes. Recently, officials of the Department of Health and Human Services endorsed toughening the warning message on cigarette packages and advertising.

Currently the message is: "The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health." Congress is considering mandating more specificity: rotating warnings would cite dangers of cancer, heart disease, emphysema and — because nicotine is a substance that crosses the mother's placenta — risks to unborn children. Those are the children who the President and many legislators, including some from tobacco states, want the government to protect with anti-abortion measures.

A few days after an administration health official testified for stronger warnings, he was back before Congress, visibly chagrined, saying that the administration was still undecided. Someone with a flair for understatement said that the administration's retreat reflects "the ongoing efforts of the tobacco industry."

This crude political decision in the upper reaches of the executive branch coincided with publication of another surgeon general's report on smoking. The 1982 report, the most powerful since the great report of 1964, says that smoking is the most important public health issue of our time and the chief preventable cause of death, and probably causes nearly one-third of all cancer deaths (129,000 of 430,000 of each year).

The report coincided with evidence from cancer epidemiologists that carcinogenic pollutants that enter the environment from industrial and other sources may be less important than once thought as cancer-causing substances. Such evidence underscores the status of tobacco as the only known cause of a cancer epidemic.

Tobacco spokesmen, who seem to have studied the philosophy of science at the same schools where anti-evolutionists matriculate, insist that the case against tobacco is unproven. They say the link with cancer is merely statistical because we cannot yet explain the disease mechanism that makes a cell cancerous.

But given the statistical connection between tobacco use and increased incidence of particular diseases, that argument is comparable to the argument that evolution is unproven because "the missing link" is still missing. As has been well said, tens of millions of Americans have quit smoking, and not one has died because of that.

Naturally (well, Americans think self-interestedness is as "natural" as breathing), tobacco interests say that strengthened warnings would constitute "unwarranted intrusion" into citizens' lives. But a conservative administration, which celebrates consumer sovereignty, should not flinch from measures designed to facilitate rational consumer choices. Conservatives make themselves ridiculous when they countenance calling the provision of scientific information an "intrusion."

In the peak of 1955, 53 percent of American men smoked; in 1966, 33 percent of American women smoked. Today the figures are 37 percent and 29 percent. The decline is attributable in large measure to government dissemination of information. Perhaps some conservatives are hostile to the government's informing function because it has an extraordinary cost-benefit ratio. This is inconvenient to persons whose "conservatism" is a monomaniacal disdain for government and all its works (other than military works, of course).

The administration retreated from the stronger cigarette warnings when accused of "Califanoism." Joe Califano, the former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, had a concept of "civil rights" as expansive as Montana, and some of his causes were as small and annoying as chiggers. But in his campaign against smoking he did no more than his duty.

Tobacco, which kills an estimated 340,000 Americans each year through various cancers and heart disease, and through emphysema, has killed, expensively and agonizingly, many more Americans than have been killed in all of America's wars and traffic accidents. More than $13 billion a year is spent on smoking-related health problems, and lost production and wages involve another $25 billion.

Yet in 1980, candidate Ronald Reagan said (in North Carolina) that "my own Cabinet members will be far too busy with substantive matters to waste their time proselytizing against the dangers of cigarette smoking." Anyone who spends as much time as Reagan does proselytizing against declining productivity, soaring budgets, inflation (which is especially virulent in the health industry), and stressing individual responsibility should not dismiss smoking as an insubstantial concern.

His administration — rhetorically indignant about soaring entitlement expenditures, ideologically vociferous against government-by-interest group, and emphatically "pro-life" — should be blushing.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. accompanies a waving Italian President Sandro Pertini from Andrews Air Force Base Wednesday. Pertini, on a state visit to the U.S., will meet with President Reagan today.

Reagan hopeful visit will cement Italian ties

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan views Italian President Alessandro Pertini's visit to the United States as a way to cement close ties between the two countries, administration officials say.

Pertini, 85, was meeting President Reagan today at the White House after an elaborate welcoming ceremony on the South Lawn.

The Italian president arrived here Wednesday afternoon to begin a nine-day U.S. visit that also will take him to San Francisco, Chicago and New York City.

Despite the friendship between the United States and Italy, it is unlikely Pertini's visit will change Italy's opposition to some U.S. policies, including those on Central America and El Salvador.

U.S. officials said Reagan likewise has little hope of convincing the Italians not to participate in the construction of a Soviet natural gas pipeline.

Although Pertini is Italy's chief of state, he is not the head of its government. Under Italy's constitution, that role is reserved for the prime minister.

Nevertheless, Pertini is meeting with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., several other cabinet members and members of Congress besides Reagan. The White House scheduled a black-tie state dinner at the White House tonight.

Senior U.S. officials described Pertini as a respected and popular statesman of "diamond-hard integrity" who began his political career as a foe of the fascist regime of Benito Mussolini.

His long experience in Italian politics includes several years in jail under Mussolini.

Officials said Reagan intends to congratulate Pertini personally for the success of Italian security forces in freeing U.S. Brig. Gen. James Dozier, who was kidnapped by Red Brigade terrorists, and for "enormous improvement" made in combatting terrorism in general.

The release of Dozier brought U.S.-Italian relations to a new high, according to U.S. officials who briefed reporters on the Pertini trip on the condition that they not be identified by name.

An Italian diplomatic official made much the same points, saying one of the few differences between Rome and Washington is the Soviet pipeline.

The United States takes the position that completion of the pipeline and delivery of Soviet natural gas to Western Europe will make members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization dangerously dependent on the Soviets for an important energy resource.

The Italian official, who also asked not to be identified, said Italy will not receive enough natural gas from the Soviets to make it dependent on Moscow. But he said Italy does need a new source of gas.

In any event, Italian participation in the pipeline deal is frozen, at least temporarily, over Italy's concern about the military crackdown in Poland.

The Italian official said Pertini intends to press for Reagan's support of an Italian initiative for closer ties between the United States and the European Economic Community, a link intended to supplement U.S. membership in the NATO military alliance.

U.S. officials added that there are many areas in which Italy's policies coincide with U.S. interests.

They cited, for example, Italy's decision to send three patrol boats to the Middle East to take part in the multi-national peacekeeping force in the Sinai Desert, and Italian willingness to permit the deployment of updated nuclear missiles in Europe.

Battle ends last campaigning day

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A gun battle between government troops and leftist guerrillas on a mountain overlooking the capital capped the last day of campaigning in the bitter race for El Salvador's first Constituent Assembly.

The government said its forces fought the guerrillas for two hours Wednesday before driving them from the slopes of Mount San Jacinto, nine miles outside San Salvador. It gave no casualty figures.

The guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos (We Will Win) said the rebels killed 14 soldiers in several other battles in Morazan, a northeastern province that is an insurgent stronghold.

Rebels also claimed they took over the town of Yoloaquin, just north of the provincial capital of San Francisco Gotera, 70 miles east of here. The army declined comment on the reports.

In Washington, U.S. officials confirmed reports that Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. had sent former CIA Deputy Director Vernon Walters to Havana earlier this month to try to persuade Fidel Castro to halt support for the guerrillas.

The New York Times today quoted U.S. officials as saying the Reagan administration does not oppose direct contacts or discussions between a newly elected Salvadoran government and the rebels.

Leftist parties in El Salvador are boycotting the elections, which they claim are a "farce" set up by the United States to maintain conservative groups in power. They want a negotiated settlement to the civil war that has claimed more than 32,000 lives here since October 1979, when the junta took power.

Five conservative parties that have criticized the U.S.-backed junta's land and other social reforms are competing against the Christian Democrats, who control the three civilian seats on the ruling junta, for the 60 assembly seats in Sunday's election.

The assembly's job is to name a provisional president until it can reform the constitution and hold elections for a constitutional president and other national authorities, probably in 1983.

Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte asserted a Christian Democrat victory would put him in a stronger position as president and commander in chief of the armed forces to control the widely documented human rights abuses by government troops.

He claimed his opponents are supported by the rich minority that wants to reinstate the conditions that spawned the guerrilla movement.

Duarte's opponents countered that the Christian Democrats had destroyed this tiny Central American country's economy.

"When were you better off?" asked a candidate for the rightist National Conciliation Party, which was ousted in the 1979 coup. "El Salvador had an energetic people that was an example. We had big harvests of coffee and sugar, industry was progressing, there was work. The Christian Democrats destroyed all of that."

In another development Wednesday, Radio Venceremos said 500 political prisoners in three prisons around San Salvador began hunger strikes this week.

They apparently included Jose Antonio Morales Carbonell, son of junta member Jose Antonio Morales Ehrlich. Morales Carbonell, who has been jailed since 1980, said today he was hospitalized for wounds he suffered in a beating by prison authorities.

The hunger strikers reportedly are protesting the alleged beating of prisoners and planting of government spies among inmates. They also are demanding the right to receive visits from journalists, Radio Venceremos said.

Spanish court acquits women charged with illegal abortions

A tenth defendant described as the abortionist, Julia Garcia, was convicted but given a suspended sentence of 12½ years.

About 500 women demonstrated outside the courtroom as the defendants were tried for offenses allegedly committed between 1968 and 1976. The case was postponed twice before it came to trial last week because some of the defendants failed to appear in court.

The prosecution had demanded a 60-year jail sentence for Mrs. Garcia and 55 years for her daughter, who was accused of helping perform the abortions. It asked the court to impose six-month sentences on each of the other defendants, most of them the wives of blue-collar workers in Basauri, an industrial suburb of this northern Basque city.

The court said five defendants were acquitted for lack of evidence. Four others were spared conviction because "they acted so in the belief abortion was the least offence under the circumstances they were passing at the time."

The sentence also said the court took into account the long time elapsed since the offenses were committed.

Defense attorneys had argued that their clients had aborted their pregnancies because of economic hardship and because contraceptives were illegal at the time.

Contraceptives were outlawed in Spain until 1978, when they were made available by prescription only.

Election observers will be free to roam

By SOLL SUSSMAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The 150 independent observers coming from 40 countries to oversee elections here this Sunday are being given carte blanche to roam the country, Salvadoran officials say.

"The only thing that they can't do is make contact with the guerrilla groups, because we don't know how to arrange it," said Jose Abelardo Diaz-Flores, spokesman for the committee set up to aid the observers.

Jorge Bustamante, head of the electoral council, said there would be no travel restrictions placed on the observers.

"If it is a high-risk zone, we'll tell them it's a high-risk zone," he told The Associated Press Wednesday. "But if you still want to go, you'll go."

The leftist groups are locked in battle with troops loyal to the U.S.-backed civilian-military junta.

The junta called elections for a 60-seat Constituent Assembly in a bid to find a political solution to the violence that has claimed more than 32,000 lives since it came to power late in 1979.

Leftists are boycotting the vote. They claim there have been no honest elections in this tiny Central American country for more than 50 years, and that any leftist candidates put forward would risk assassination.

The junta has invited 66 countries to send observers here in an attempt to demonstrate it is holding fraud-free elections. About 25 countries have accepted. The other observer delegations represent international organizations, election tribunals, union groups, political parties or churches.

"We would be masochists to invite so many people to (see us) commit a fraud," Vice Foreign Minister Alejandro Gomez said.

The United States is sending an eight-member delegation headed by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan. It is scheduled to arrive Friday.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said the American delegation will meet privately with church and labor leaders before the balloting Sunday, but not with Salvadoran government officials. "On Sunday they fan out all over the country in different directions," the spokesman said.

Diaz-Flores said he already had received some requests from observers who want to travel to Morazan province, one of the areas where leftist guerrillas are strongest. He said the requests would be honored, but declined to name the delegations involved, to protect their safety.

Moscow calls decision anti-peace

MOSCOW (AP) — The NATO decision to go ahead with plans to deploy new U.S. medium-range nuclear missiles in Western Europe next year "runs counter to the interests of peace and lessening tension," Radio Moscow said today.

The brief radio commentary was the first Soviet reaction to NATO's reaffirmation Wednesday of its 1979 plan to deploy 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles by late next year. NATO defense ministers met in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Last month, President Leonid I. Brezhnev announced the Soviets were freezing deployment of SS-20 medium-range missiles in Europe, pending the start of NATO deployment.

The defense ministers said the Kremlin's offer was inadequate since the Soviets would be able to continue their missile buildup east of the Urals, well within range of Western Europe. They reaffirmed support for President Reagan's so-called zero-option plan under which NATO would not deploy the U.S. missiles if the Soviets promised to dismantle all their SS-20s and older model SS-4 and SS-5 missiles.

Man releases neighbor's wife, shot by police

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — An unemployed man who held his neighbor's wife hostage for 11 hours in her home and ate a meal that she cooked was killed by a blast from a policeman's shotgun minutes after letting the woman go.

Willie Woodall, 27, was gripping a pistol with both hands when he was shot to death at close range Wednesday night, officials said. He had worn a mask as he held his hostage.

"I could have talked to him. I could have prevented him from doing it," said Woodall's father, Richmond Woodall. He too is unemployed.

The younger Woodall had demanded $15,000, but dropped the demand as police negotiated with him throughout the afternoon. He later said he would release Mattie Rundles if police would pull back after dark.

THEN, ON the advice of Jack Young, an attorney, Woodall allowed Mrs. Rundles to leave her home safely. A police tactical team moved in and Woodall was killed; Police Chief Jim Black said Woodall was shot in the chest at close range.

It wasn't immediately clear how Young became involved.

Woodall had accosted Jim Rundles, an assistant to Jackson Mayor Dale Danks, as Rundles left home for work Wednesday. Woodall demanded $15,000, Rundles said.

"He was matter-of-fact about it," said Rundles, former minority affairs director under former Govs. Bill Waller and Cliff Finch. "We talked 15 or 20 minutes. I talked him as a father to a son, and he responded."

Rundles said that at one point, Woodall told him: "I'm sorry I'm even here." Although Woodall lived with his parents on the same block, Rundles said he didn't recognize Woodall's voice.

Told the there was no money at the home, Woodall allowed Rundles to leave with a promise to return with the $15,000, Rundles said.

Rundles said he called two bank officers but both were out, so he secured a loan from the Veterans Administration Credit Union.

"I didn't want to endanger my wife's life," he said. "That's why I didn't call the police."

Rundles said he had promised Woodall he wouldn't call police, but did after learning that his neighbors had notified the authorities.

The elder Woodall said his son was partially paralyzed from a motorcycle accident and had trouble using his right hand.

Sheriff jailed for contempt released

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A flamboyant Arkansas county sheriff who spent two nights in jail for contempt of court is free today — provided he doesn't interfere with the work of a court-appointed overseer of county jail operations.

Pulaski County Sheriff Tommy Robinson was released from the Federal Correctional Center in Memphis, Tenn., on Wednesday on an order from U.S. District Judge George Howard Jr.

He had ordered Robinson imprisoned and fined $75 a day Monday for refusing to allow overseer Dwayne Basinger access to the Pulaski County Jail. Robinson evicted Basinger last week.

"I was mad then, and I'm mad now, but I will abide by all court orders," an uncharacteristically reserved Robinson told the judge twice during an hour-long hearing Wednesday.

HOWARD told Robinson at the end of the hearing: "Don't be deceived by my patience, forbearance and tolerance. Don't interpret those characteristics as a weakness."

Just hours before his own incarceration, Robinson arrested County Judge Bill Beaumont and County Comptroller Jo Growcock for obstructing justice when they refused to process purchase orders for the sheriff's office without Basinger's approval.

Howard appointed Basinger in December to help bring the jail up to federal standards because of crowding, escapes and financial problems. The action stemmed from a lawsuit filed three years ago by inmates who said jail conditions violated their constitutional rights.

Robinson was ordered Wednesday to pay a $20,000 bond to be forfeited if he is found in contempt again. If that happens, the money would go to Beaumont and Mrs. Growcock, Howard said.

Greeted at the sheriff's department by a huge "Welcome Home TR" sign, Robinson later told a news conference that three friends guaranteed the bond if he would not discuss Basinger or Howard.

ATTORNEY Richard Quiggle, representing inmates in their lawsuit, asked Robinson during the hearing if he was sincere when he said he would comply with the order.

"Everything I do is sincere, and it was sincere," Robinson said.

Quiggle asked Robinson about a Tuesday newspaper interview in which Robinson said his research showed he could arrest a federal judge, and that someone should tell federal judges they are not God. Robinson replied he wouldn't continue making such statements.

Reagan food stamp story impossible official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Terming President Reagan "misinformed" about a food stamp incident he cited, Assistant Agriculture Secretary Mary Jarratt says such stories of extreme abuse serve little purpose in the debate over the $11 billion program.

"I agree that examples in the extreme do not present any constructive approach to the situation," Ms. Jarratt said Wednesday in response to questioning by Rep. Fred Richmond, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Agriculture nutrition subcommittee.

Richmond strongly criticized Reagan and other administration officials for repeating what he called untrue stories about food stamp use.

He specifically cited the president's story of how a young man used change from food stamps to buy a bottle of vodka and Ms. Jarratt agreed that it was virtually impossible for a transaction of that type to occur.

"It's unfortunate the president was misinformed," she said.

In a recent interview, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., discussing past conversations with Reagan at the White House, recalled that in response to a question about the prospect for massive budget deficits the president said:

"You know a person yesterday, a young man went into a grocery store and he had an orange in one hand and a bottle of vodka in the other, and he paid for the orange with food stamps and he took the change and paid for the vodka. That's what's wrong."

Noting that cash change in any food stamp transaction has been restricted to amounts less than $1 since 1977, Richmond said, "Show me a store that sells vodka for 99 cents, or really less than 70 cents since single oranges are at least 30 cents, and I'll believe anything."

Asked if it was "practically impossible" for that transaction to have occurred, Ms. Jarratt said, "Yes."

"That example," Ms. Jarratt said, "did not come from the department. We are following up on that with the White House. ... We will try to find the source of the story."

But she also said substantial amounts of food stamp benefits continue to go to ineligible recipients and that the Agriculture Department is continually implementing safeguards to reduce those losses. Official estimates place losses in the food stamp program due to waste, fraud, abuse and error at more than $1 billion a year.

Richmond, however, argued that repeated use of untrue stories amounted to a "fraud upon the public" to win support for an additional $2.3 billion in food stamp reductions in 1983, equaling the amount cut from the program this year.

"We don't need to change the program to counter these myths," Richmond told Ms. Jarratt. "We need to silence the storytellers. We need to silence the stories."

Shannon to ask for new trial

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Attorneys for a man convicted of criminally negligent homicide in the shooting death of an Air Force captain have asked for a new trial.

The motion, filed Monday, asks that Robert Shannon, 41, be tried again on a charge of criminally negligent homicide, a misdemeanor, because of alleged prosecutorial misconduct. Shannon originally was charged with first-degree murder in the slaying.

Shannon was convicted of the lesser charge March 6 by a jury that deliberated 21 hours. He is scheduled for sentencing April 12.

He was accused of shooting to death Air Force Capt. Charles Catalano, his former wife's lover, on April 25, 1981.

In Shannon's motion for a new trial, the defense said the prosecution failed to provide information to the defense, causing a delay in the proceedings.

Even after the court told the prosecution to supply that information, the prosecutors continued to withhold scientific evidence, including blood tests run on a window screen and clothing of the dead man, defense attorneys said.

The motion also alleged the prosecution "knowingly withheld from the court, the jury and the defense, information that had long been in the possession and knowledge of the prosecution which tended to negate the guilt of the accused."

Beef on the hoof

By MERLE ELLIS

A few months ago, I wrote about buying a side of beef for the freezer. The bottom line was this: There are a lot of pitfalls in buying a side of beef and unless you really know what you're doing, the chances of saving any money are rather slim.

As a result of that column, I have received several letters from readers who want to know about buying beef on the hoof, direct from the producer.

"Can you make any savings buying direct from the farmer?"

"What do you look for when you buy a steer?"

"How do you determine the quality of the meat when you buy a live animal?"

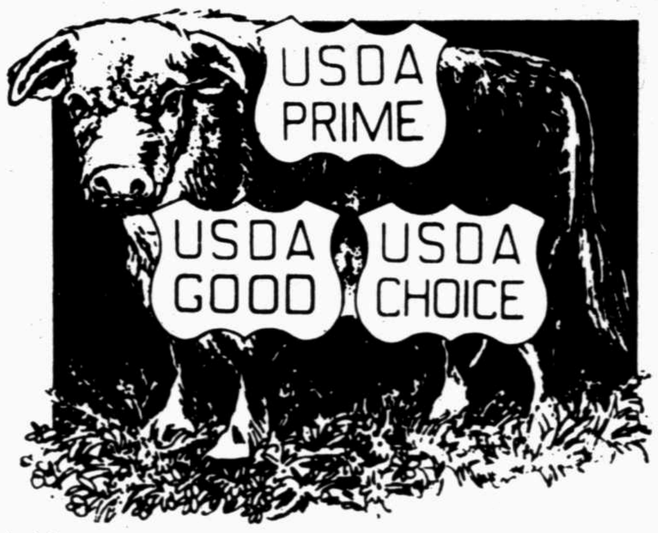

These questions and others pertaining to buying livestock are. I confess, a bit outside my area of expertise. I am a pretty good judge of the quality of beef when it is hanging on a hook in the cooler, but buying beef on the hoof is not really my bag.

To answer those questions, I called an old friend, George Strathearn, one of the most highly respected cattle judges in the country and Deputy Director of Agriculture and Food for the State of California. What follows are excerpts from my conversation with him.

"If I were an urban consumer and going to a supplier of live cattle to buy beef, I would find a reliable person to take along to advise me on what I should buy."

"Who is a reliable person?"

"A cattle buyer or someone who is familiar with and understands livestock."

"You're saying that your average 'Joe' going out to buy beef on the hoof is 'flying blind'?"

"Absolutely! Absolutely! For example, look at a bull — it appears kind of round and meaty, but the meat from a 7-year-old bull is not going to be tender.

"The conformation of the animal might be everything you look for, but, because of the age and sex of the animal, it's going to be tough.

"The second thing to do is determine the quality of beef you want. Do you want a standard grade of beef, a Good grade or a Choice grade? If you are buying beef basically for processed beef, for grinding hamburger and that kind of thing, you don't have to be quite as particular about the quality of the live animal. If you want some good steaks, then you need to be very concerned with that quality.

"The third thing that a person should find out about, particularly if he wants quality beef, is how the animal has been managed. Has it been grain fed, and, if so, for how long? In most instances, a steer should have been on feed for a minimum of 90 to 120 days.

"Where can a consumer find an expert?"

"In most every community where it might be practical for a consumer to buy direct from a producer, there is apt to be a livestock auction market nearby. I would talk to the livestock market operator. Or, almost every county has a farm adviser who can steer you to people who can give good advice. Those are two of the best ways I know."

(The day after our conversation, George Strathearn was killed in an automobile accident in Sacramento, California. He will be deeply missed by all who knew him.)

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Try larger rubber gloves

DEAR HELOISE:

Perhaps many persons do not use rubber gloves for dishwashing or other jobs because they purchase them in exactly the same size as their hands.

Kitchen workers are not surgeons. Always buy rubber gloves one size larger and if the phone rings, etc., you can slip them off easily.

It is really easy to get used to a size larger because larger is so much more convenient. — Mary Lesser

CORNMEAL SUBSTITUTE

Dear Heloise: Recently, my wife had all the ingredients mixed for cornbread, except one — the cornmeal! We were all out! So were the neighbors!

Since we had nothing to lose, I suggested substituting grits in the same amount as the cornmeal called for in the recipe.

The cornbread was delicious! We couldn't tell any real difference! — Roger Hawley

YOU CAN DO IT!

Dear Heloise: Many of your readers probably store their out-of-season clothing in plastic garbage cans, but my method of packing clothes for these cans has really been a boon to me.

Lay the garbage can on its side. First, roll your skirts hem to waistband until you have a long, thin roll. Place the hem against the bottom of the can. If the waistband extends out of the can, that's O.K.

Next fold blazers, lining side out, and roll them. Place hem side down on top of skirts. Continue with vests, slacks, dresses, (fold from waist and roll), etc.

By putting all hem ends down, the wider top portion of the can allows more room for shoulder padding in blazers, etc. When the can is filled, stand it up and fold over skirt tops.

An important step is an inventory. Place the list on top of the clothes, drop in a few mothballs, put the lid on and seal. Place at the back of your closet until you need the contents again.

It may sound unbelievable, but I got 17 skirts, 7 blazers, 4 vests and 11 sweaters in one 30-gallon can. If you don't believe it, come to see me and I'll show you. — Lenny

WASHING JEANS

Dear Heloise: The reason I am writing is to try to help the poor lady with the streaking jeans problem. If she will only turn them inside out before laundering, she will be amazed at the results. Zippers and snaps or buttons should be closed.

Also, before putting the jeans in the wash water, the soap powder should be completely dissolved in warm water. — Irene Crews

TORN SHOWER CURTAIN

Dear Heloise: One of the holes for the hooks in our beautiful shower curtain has torn out, which makes one side of it droop.

I asked around at hardware stores and was told I need a new grommet but no one seems to know where I can get one.

Can you help? I would hate to discard the curtain just because I can't locate a small part. — John McGee

While you are looking for the grommet, put a piece of clear plastic tape over the torn part, poke a hole in it for the hook and continue to use the curtain.

Or, if you know someone who sews, ask them to reinforce the curtain with a small piece of matching fabric, then work a button hole for the hook. This, too, will work very well through many showers. Hugs for writing. — Heloise

GARDENING GOODY

Dear Heloise: I love to work in the yard, but I have trouble stooping over for any length of time. So, my husband made me a sturdy little stool about nine inches high that I can sit on while pulling weeds, etc.

Sure saves my back! — Mrs. H. Williams

Scrapple is product of ingenuity

By MAJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

"Scrapple is the marriage of the Old World's sausage making with the New World's corn."

That's from Ed Habbersett, and he should know, since his family has been making Philadelphia scrapple since 1840.

Five generations of the Habbersett family have operated Habbersett Brothers Country Pork Products in Media, Pa. The scrapple is very popular in nearby Philadelphia, and the company does a thriving mail-order business.

Scrapple is a product of Yankee ingenuity, a determination not to waste a morsel of usable meat from hogs. Processors try to find a use for "everything but the squeal," and it pays off in lower prices on cuts such as loin because nothing goes to waste.

Meat from ham and shoulder bones and from the head (meat from the jowls is very heavy and flavorful) is cooked with the heart and liver until all are very tender. Cornmeal is added to thicken the broth and it is poured into molds and chilled.

The firm sells scrapple, sausage, bacon and frankfurters in six- to 30-pound boxes packed with dry ice. Scrapple will keep about three weeks, refrigerated, or six months in the freezer.

James Beard, in "American Cookery," suggests dredging thin slices of scrapple in flour and frying them in bacon fat or butter. "I know ... of two or three recipes for quail and partridge served on slices of crisp scrapple, and very good they are," he writes.

The Habbersetts are understandably proud of their products. "It's quite a tradition," Ed Habbersett said. "We're within 1½ miles of the original grist mill here (where corn was ground). The people were so frugal, they wanted to save everything."

This is Beard's version. The proportions aren't critical, as long as the mixture is thickened with enough cornmeal to solidify on cooling.

SCRAPPLE

Pork liver, kidneys and heart
Pork scraps
Cornmeal
Salt, freshly ground pepper
Sage or thyme (optional)

Clean the liver and kidneys. Add the heart if you like and simmer them in salted water just until tender. Remove the meat from the broth and chop. Combine the cooked meats with the pork scraps and return them to the pan and continue cooking until the meat is very, very tender.

When the meat is very tender, start dribbling cornmeal into the pot, stirring it thoroughly all the time until it takes on the consistency of cornmeal mush and bubbles and pops. (Wear mitts to protect your hands from spatters)

Season the mixture with salt and pepper, and the optional herbs. Pour it immediately into loaf pans and cool.

Beard's Pennsylvania scrapple version is made with pork shoulder or neck, cooked until it falls from the bone in simmering salted water. Shred the meat with two forks, season with salt, pepper, sage and thyme or summer savory (his favorite combination is thyme and plenty of pepper).

Stir in the meal as directed above and cook it through (15 to 20 minutes). Pour into pans and cool.

While I was poring over scrapple recipes, "The Country Gourmet Cookbook," by Sherrill and Gil Roth (Workman Publishers, New York, $8.95 paperback, $14.95 hardback), arrived. While I was looking through the book I came upon a recipe for "Livermush."

"Just the name seems to upset people," the Roths (correctly) write. "A good livermush can be prized as much as a good country ham. Our recipe makes a modest amount, manageable for those timid of the hog's head."

Lo and behold, it's scrapple, minus the heart and jowls, but scrapple nonetheless.

NANNIE FRALEY'S LIVERMUSH

1 lb. pork liver
1 lb. fresh, boneless, lean pork (as from the shoulder)
2 quarts water
1 tbsp. salt
1 tsp. EACH, freshly ground black pepper, freshly ground dried hot pepper, finely crumbled dried sage leaves
2 cups yellow cornmeal

Cut the liver and pork into two-inch cubes. Do not remove the fat. Place the cubes in a large, heavy 4- to 5- quart pot and cover with the water. Add the salt, bring them to a simmer, and simmer, covered, until the meat is so tender it breaks apart when pierced with a fork (about three hours). Do not skim the liquid during this time.

Drain the contents through a colander lined with cheesecloth. Catch the liquid in a bowl and reserve. Grind the meat and liver either in a food processor or grinder fitted with the fine plate.

Wipe the pot with a damp paper towel to remove any sediment and return the ground meat to the pot along with the reserved liquid. You should have about 4½ to five cups meat and about six cups liquid. Add the seasonings and bring the mixture to a full simmer over medium heat.

Have the cornmeal in a bowl close to the pot. When the liquid simmers, begin adding the cornmeal by small handfuls, letting it sift in a thin stream into the pot as you whisk it constantly. Switch to a wooden spoon when it gets too thick to whisk.

When all the cornmeal has been added, turn the heat to very low and simmer the mixture, uncovered, another 45 minutes. Stir it constantly and watch carefully that it doesn't scorch. The mixture should be very thick. The spoon will stand up in it by itself when it's correctly cooked.

Keep mower in good condition

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Want your lawn mower to cut better? Want to keep it virtually free of repairs? Want it to last twice as long as it otherwise might?

Of course you do. Then you have to keep it maintained properly with a little effort and a little knowledge. A simple thing like keeping the air filter clean can prevent poor engine performance and flooding. Take the air cleaner apart and remove accumulated dirt and grease. Wash the foam element in kerosene or a liquid detergent to remove stubborn dirt. Dry the foam by wrapping and squeezing it in a dry rag. Soak the element in 30-weight engine oil, using your hand to squeeze the oil-soaked element in order to distribute and remove excess oil.

From Bill Borachok, service manager for Jacobsen lawn cutting equipment, comes the suggestion that you can prevent future trouble by removing packed grass from the bottom of the cutter deck. This will avoid clogging. He says an advantage of the more expensive cast-iron cutting deck is the fact that it will have less packed grass because there are generally fewer areas where the grass can collect.

The mower's cutter bar should be examined before each use. Place the machine on its right side and make sure the cutter bar follows a straight line. It should be replaced if bent or cracked. Damage, even from a microscopic crack, could grow, allowing a piece of the bar to break off and be thrown out from under the mower, possibly causing serious injury.

Engineers recommend you check the oil level every five hours of operation and that you change the oil every 25 hours. Always change the oil when the engine is warm, and check your owner's manual to determine the appropriate type of oil for your mower.

Check the carburetor. Minor adjustments may be required to compensate for differences in fuel, temperature, altitude and engine load. All adjustments should be made with the air cleaner in place and the fuel tank half full.

Vegetables the Chinese way

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

Over the centuries, the Chinese have devised delicious ways of preparing vegetables.

CHINESE CABBAGE WITH DRIED SHRIMP

3 tbsps. dried shrimp
1½ cups hot water
1½ lbs. Chinese cabbage
¼ cup vegetable oil
1½ cloves garlic, crushed
1 tsp. salt
2 tbsps. chicken broth

Soak dried shrimp in 1½ cups hot water 10 to 15 minutes. Cut cabbage into 1½-inch square pieces. Heat oil in a wok over medium-high heat one minute. Drain shrimp well; discard water. Stir-fry garlic and softened shrimp until garlic is golden, about 30 seconds. Add cabbage. Stir-fry one minute. Add salt and chicken broth. Stir-fry three minutes or until cabbage is soft. Serve hot. Makes four servings.

STIR-FRIED CHINESE BROCCOLI

1 lb. Chinese broccoli
¼ cup vegetable oil
1 garlic clove, crushed
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. rice wine or dry sherry
¼ tsp. sugar
3 tbsps. chicken broth
¼ cup water

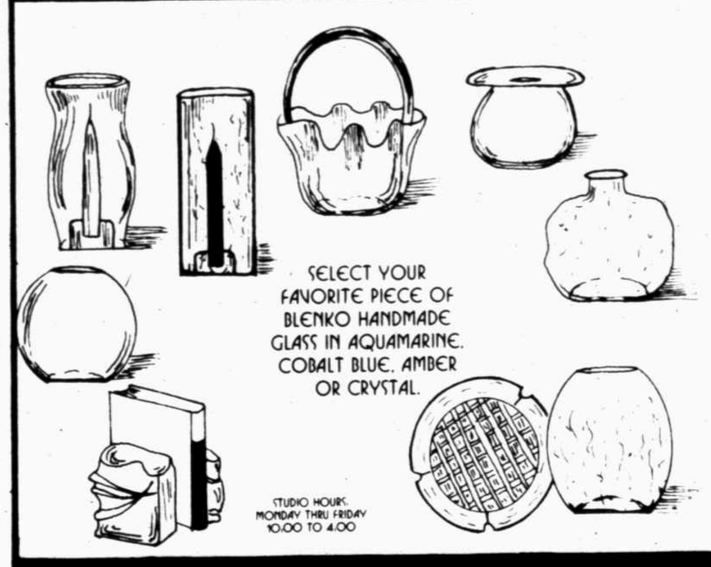

Rinse broccoli with cold water. Cut into two-inch flowerets and slice stems ¼ inch thick. Heat oil in a wok over high heat 30 seconds. Stir-fry garlic until golden, about 30 seconds. Add broccoli stems and salt; stir-fry 30 seconds. Add flowerets; stir-fry one minute. Add wine, sugar, chicken broth and water. Reduce heat to medium-low and continue to stir-fry until water is almost gone. Serve hot. Makes four servings.

STIR-FRIED SNOW PEAS WITH WATER CHESTNUTS

2 tbsps. dried shrimp
1 cup hot water
½ lb. fresh snow peas
2 cups water
½ tsp. salt
¼ cup vegetable oil
1 garlic clove, crushed
½ cup sliced water chestnuts
½ tsp. salt
2 tbsps. chicken broth

Soak dried shrimp in 1 cup hot water 10 to 15 minutes. Drain well; discard water. Chop softened shrimp into one-sixth-inch pieces with a cleaver. Snap off ends from snow peas; remove strings. Bring two cups water to a boil in a small saucepan. Add ½ teaspoon salt. To blanch snow peas, submerge 10 seconds in boiling water; drain and rinse with cold water. Heat oil in a wok over high heat 30 seconds. Stir-fry garlic and chopped shrimp 30 seconds. Add water chestnuts and salt; stir-fry one minute. Add blanched snow peas and chicken broth; stir-fry 20 seconds. Serve hot. Makes four servings.

Perfume called 'fragrance of gods'

When King Tutankhamen's tomb was opened in 1922 after being closed more than 3,200 years, archaeologists caught one fleeting whiff of perfume. The ancients called perfume "the fragrance of the gods."

4-H youth have China travel opportunity

The 4-H youth will have an opportunity to travel to China this summer. It's all part of the first 4-H International Program with the People's Republic of China, points out Midland County Extension Agent Cindy Mann.

The program includes two phases: Bicycling in South China, July 5-24, for young people 15 to 21 years of age, and Living in a Chinese Commune, July 18-August 10, for persons 18 to 25 years.

The overland excursion by bicycle will begin with an orientation in Hong Kong and preceed through cities and towns in South China. It will take the travelers to a commune, a mountaintop Buddist monastery, the folk-art center of Roshan and the fabled hot spring spa of Conghua, points out Ms. Mann.

The commune experience will provide a rare privilege of living and working for 10 days with the Chinese people. Following orientation in Hong Kong, the group will travel into mainland China to visit Peking, the Han and Tang dynasty sites, the Great Wall, Ming Tombs, the Forbidden City, Guilin and much more.

Fees for the two programs, including international travel from San Francisco, lodging, meals, medical insurance, bicycle rental, orientation and educational serving costs plus an experienced group leader and translator are $2,190 for the bicycling tour and $2,590 for the commune living experience.

Details and applications may be obtained from Dan James, Extension 4-H and Youth Specialist, 17360 Coit Road, Dallas, Texas 75252 or from 4-H International, National 4-H Council, 7100 Connecticut Ave., Chevy Chase, Md. 20815. Deadline for applications is May 1.

The programs in China are part of a broad range of international exchange and training programs arranged through the National 4-H Council in support of 4-H youth programs, notes Ms. Mann.

DEAR ABBY

Dinnerware thief

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Since you announced that you are searching for a "diplomatic" way to retrieve one's stolen silverware at a dinner party, here's how a diplomat once handled it:

Shortly after World War II, General Patton hosted a delegation of senators and congressmen at his headquarters in Germany. Later that evening his aide reported that two place settings of Hitler's monogrammed gold dishes, goblets and tableware were missing! Patton's guests were already en route to their next stop — Rome. The American ambassador in Rome was telephoned and informed that it was suspected that someone in the U.S. delegation had stolen some of the Hitler monogrammed dinnerware.

When the airplane touched down in Rome, each member of the delegation was escorted to his hotel room, locked in and detained until all the luggage was searched. All of the missing pieces were found in the luggage of one of the delegation, and nothing more was ever said about the matter.

How do I know this? I was there. No names, please ... SERVED WITH PATTON (NOW RETIRED)

DEAR SERVED: Fascinating. Now if my readers can stand another story about how to diplomatically retrieve stolen tableware, here it is.

DEAR ABBY: It seems that during a British Commonwealth dinner, the chief of protocol came to Sir Winston Churchill and quietly whispered that one of the guests — we'll call him "Mr. So-and-So" — had pocketed a small silver saltshaker. Sir Winston immediately pocketed the matching pepper shaker, and just as they were all leaving the dinner table, Churchill sidled up to Mr. So-and-So and whispered, "Oh, dear. We were seen. Perhaps we both had better put them back!" — RENO FAN

DEAR ABBY: My grandmother died last year, leaving my brother, sister, my three cousins and myself each a substantial sum of money. In her will she stipulated we were to receive the money only if we were members of the church she attended.

This poses no problem for my kin. It does for me. You see, I am an atheist. Being an atheist does not mean I have no moral values. I do believe in not cheating, lying or doing anything of a hypocritical nature even though I profess no belief in God.

My conscience will not allow me to join a church, but I need my share of the inheritance badly. My wife is sick and I am out of work. I cannot afford legal fees to try and contest the will.

How can I best resolve this problem? Please sign me ... ATHEIST IN FLORIDA

DEAR ATHEIST: Have a talk with the minister. Tell him you don't believe in God, but you do believe in collecting your fair share of your grandmother's inheritance. He may persuade you to come to church and listen. After all, a church isn't a museum for saints, it's a hospital for sinners.

CONFIDENTIAL TO STUCK FOR AN EXPLANATION: If you don't want to do something, don't explain or apologize. Simply say, "No, because I don't WANT to." No one can ever argue with that!

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

AT WIT'S END

Letting go

By ERMA BOMBECK

I watched my mother put on lipstick the other day.

She twisted the tube as far as it would go. Then she dipped in a toothpick and scooped a little piece off and put it on her little finger. With quick, brisk strokes, she covered her lips.

Then, she carefully ran her finger over the rim to scrape any excess back into the tube, twisted it down and put a cap on it. You'd have thought it was an elixir to retain youth forever.

It occurred to me my mother has two cars in her garage, owns her own home, wears 35 credit cards next to her body and goes through the lipstick ritual at least four or five times a day. When I asked her why she didn't buy a new tube of lipstick, she said, "They don't make Persimmon Jungle anymore."

There is an entire list of things people never throw away in this country that has nothing to do with sentiment. Lipstick is only one of them.

I have never known a woman who can let go of a cookie sheet. In some of the finest kitchens in America are cookie sheets that look like they've been a drip pan for a 1938 Chrysler. They cost $2.95. You'd think they cost $295.

Keys are another commodity that have permanent status in our culture. To throw away a key is like dancing on a grave. It doesn't matter that it doesn't fit anything. Throw away a key today and tomorrow a trunk full of Krugerrands will fall in your path and you won't be able to open it without the key you threw away.

I've never been able to figure out why people save eyeglasses they can't see out of anymore. We have a whole drawer of them and my husband keeps saying, "But they're good yet," and I keep saying, "Only for bumping into walls."

It goes without saying that the No. 1 survivor among objects around the house is underwear.

It's all part of my Mother's Laws that I learned at her knee: If it doesn't show, don't replace it. If you're too full to eat it, save it and throw it away later. If it's too dirty to wash, store it. If it makes you happy when you see it again, put it in the kitchen drawer. If you can't get to it . . . use a toothpick.

Ripe pears a taste treat

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Of all the fruits I know, few have the sweet, juicy quality of a fresh pear that has reached just the right stage of ripeness. And this is one of the few fruits that do not ripen well on the tree.

This member of the rose family has a fine-grained flesh and delicate flavor, and of the half dozen or so types that I have sampled, each has a taste of its own.

The green Anjou, for instance, has a spicy tang, the golden-brown Bosc is buttery and aromatic with a natural fruit sugar, while the Winter Nelis, with its light russet hue is sweet and creamy.

Most pears are picked just before the fruit has matured. Then they are kept until market time in cold storage. For longer storage, they are kept in a controlled atmosphere where the oxygen levels in cold storage vaults are reduced and the pears are surrounded by the carbon dioxide they produce themselves.

In the Middle Ages, pear orchards were a feature of most castles and monasteries. Today, many varieties are known in Europe, but relatively few are cultivated in the United States.

France is probably the world's leading pear-growing country today, and espaliered trees, pruned to grow on wires placed against the walls of a French farmhouse, are a familiar sight in that country.

Pears play a versatile role in the kitchen, where they are used in aspics, salads and desserts. They also give a lift to meat dishes, as in this recipe for baked ham.

BAKED HAM

3 Western Anjou pears
Lemon juice
1 (1½ inch thick) fully cooked ham slice, weighing about 2 pounds
½ cup brown sugar
2 tablespoons water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon butter
1 teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon dry mustard

Core pears and cut into wedges. Dip in lemon juice to prevent discoloration. Place ham on rack in shallow pan and bake 20 minutes in 325-degree oven. Combine remaining ingredients in saucepan, simmer 5 minutes till slightly syrupy. Remove ham from oven and surround with pear wedges. Brush pears with ginger mixture to give a glaze. Return to oven to bake 20 minutes longer, basting frequently with remaining glaze mixture. Place ham on platter and ring with pear wedges. Serves 6.

Into a large shallow baking dish pour two tablespoons of the oil; add the peppers in a single layer; dribble the remaining oil over the tops and sprinkle with the cheese. Researcher says aquaintaince rapes more prevalent than she thought

By CYNTHIA ROBINS
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — An intelligent, attractive career woman who, at 28, does not consider herself naive or careless was raped, brutally, by someone she had known as a friend for three months.

The incident shattered her confidence, caused her to have nightmares and infected her with a general distrust of all men. She feels guilty and questions her actions over and over. She tends to blame herself: where, and how, did she go wrong?

But counselors are trying to teach her to direct the rage away from herself, to where it belongs — at the rapist. This woman is seeking help. Many don't.

There is a prevailing belief that if a woman reports a rape, she and her sexual history will be put on trial. In the case of an acquaintance rape, she is doubly doubtful that she will be believed. Experts in the field estimate that only one in every 10 or 12 rapes is reported: of those, probably half are rapes committed by persons known to the victims. And of those unreported rapes, authorities venture that 70 percent can be attributed to so-called casual acquaintance rapes.

THE question of whether a casual acquaintaince rape is rape or a "misunderstanding" prevents a lot of women who have been raped by men they know from reporting the assault. Nancy Graham, vice-president of O.D.N. Films, which produced a series of rape prevention films for teenagers, says on the subject of date rape: "Sex is a consentual decision-making process in which I want to have a vote. Sleeping with a man when you first meet is a negotiation. If a guy physically violates you, there is no negotiation."

Graham researched the topic of date rape for 18 months. "Prior to 1975," she says, "the attitude towards rape was that it wasn't rape unless by a stranger, preferably at an unguarded moment, with a weapon. If it was someone you knew, it was seduction or 'being had' or being jilted.

"The more that I got into the business of rape, the more I realized that rapes were much more frequent than I had thought, and that there were two different kinds. Acquaintanceship rape was by someone you trusted, and that had to be emotionally as traumatic as a stranger rape, but in a different way."

At San Francisco's Sexual Trauma Service, counselors have been trained to help the victims channel their humiliation and rage in the correct direction — against the attacker — and not against themselves.

Says Linda Eberth, a licenced clinical social worker who directs the service, "Other hospitals in the rest of the country do torturous things to women. Evidence collecting for rape was developed by coroners' offices — like plucking a pubic hair from the root. These things tend to traumatize the victim. We collect evidence for the Sex Crimes Detail as gently as possible. We take sperm collection, a gonorrhea culture and give treatment for veneral disease. We track the woman for six to eight weeks, right up through her period. We can't close the case without knowing about pregnancy."

EBERTH estimates that the total eight-week cost for caring for a victim is between $800 and $1,000, which is free to the victim, paid by the San Francisco Health Department.

Margaret Reiss, 34, is a clinical social worker who usually sees rape victims three to six weeks after they have been to the Sexual Trauma Service. She has been counseling rape victims since 1979 and makes this observation:

"Victims of stranger and acquaintanceship rape share the same issues, but much more severe in the case of an acquaintance rape is the issue of trust. A woman will ask herself 'How independent can I be?' It causes a re-evaluation of her lifestyle. Most women are perceptive, but they just don't listen to that still, small voice."

Reiss also helps rape victims redirect their anger. "So many of them have self-blame, and it is a precarious situation where I have to help them realize that the rape is not their fault. They ask themselves, 'How do I decide who is safe?' And I ask them to re-evaluate their lifestyle, where they've been, what they've been smoking or drinking. They really don't have the same analytical capabilities when they have been drinking, and so forth, and I ask them to ask themselves: 'Do I want to continue using coke, marijuana, alcohol — or do I want to meet people on a less intimate basis — like for coffee.'"

Being raped, says Reiss, "is a loss of peace, security and wholeness." In the case of a casual acquaintance rape, the victim has trusted her attacker. And as one victim puts it, "Who can you trust if you can't trust yourself?"

Pendergrass still paralyzed

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Singer Teddy Pendergrass remains paralyzed after undergoing a three-hour operation to stabilize the broken neck he suffered in an auto accident, officials said.

The 31-year-old rhythm and blues singer suffered extensive fractures when he crashed his Rolls-Royce into two trees on March 18.

Grand jury to continue investigation

AUSTIN, Texas — A new grand jury is expected to continue an investigation that has resulted in two felony counts against state Treasurer Warren G. Harding, a prosecutor says.

Harding was indicted Tuesday and charged with official misconduct for allegedly assigning two state employess to work on his 1978 election campaign on state time.

Assistant District Attorney David Douglas said investigators will look into other unspecified allegations, and a new grand jury will be enpaneled in a few weeks.

Snorting cocaine nothing to sniff at

By BRUCE BOYLE
Copley News Service

Given the choice of cocaine or its favorite food, a monkey will ask for the drug until it starves to death.

Once it was the star ingredient in Coca-Cola, the refresher in the pause.

Cocaine is basically a drug of the Western Hemisphere but its essence has been used, or abused, by cultures as disparate as Indians of the Peruvian mountains to lawyers from Beverly Hills.

The death of comedian John Belushi recently by an injected overdose of cocaine mixed with heroin brought national attention to a problem of increasing dimension.

BELUSHI DIED IN THE THROES of convulsions brought on after a week of "partying" and heavy drug use, according to authorities.

Cocaine's effectiveness has made it popular, and science has made it dangerous. Cocaine proponents have long argued that inhaling, or "snorting," cocaine was hardly more dangerous than chewing coca leaves.

But efforts by users to maximize the cocaine experience led to smoking and injecting the drug, sometimes with disastrous results as in Belushi's case.

Carol Sussman, spokeswoman for the National Institute for Drug Abuse in Maryland, said increasing numbers of cocaine users are switching from "snorting" to injecting or smoking cocaine.

"We don't really keep statistics on how people use a particular drug but many of the cocaine stories we hear now are about injecting, or smoking, cocaine," she said.

The institute does keep track of cocaine use and its statistics indicate that between 4 million and 5 million Americans used cocaine last year.

More than 14 million Americans have used cocaine at least once, according to institute officials. The only illegal substance used more is marijuana.

INJECTION HAS BECOME MORE popular in many cases because of the effort made to get the most out of a substance that costs as much as $140 per gram.

"Snorting cocaine is wasteful in that much of it stays on the nose lining. Injecting gives the maximum effect," said one drug authority.

It also increases the dangers. Sniffing cocaine normally produces temporary euphoria and its most dangerous side effect is usually damage to the sensitive nose lining by constant use.

That has always been considered a minor inconvenience by users and has provided a luxury cottage industry for some plastic surgeons who implant small plastic discs inside the nose to replace the lining.

Injection is a different story.

"Someone who injects cocaine for the first time may have no idea how powerful a dose he may be getting.

Cocaine is very stimulating and high doses can lead to convulsions. It also increases the body temperature — sometimes to more than 108 degrees."

JOHN BELUSHI EVIDENTLY WENT through many of these symptoms on March 5, first waking in a cold sweat, shaking and shivering, then getting so hot that he took a shower, then cold enough again that the woman who was with him said he covered himself with blankets.

Both injecting and smoking cocaine can be fatal. So, too, can the mixing of cocaine with other drugs.

Often cocaine is mixed with alcohol, a depressant which has the opposite effect on body chemistry.

Heroin, also a depressant, seems as incongruous a mixture for cocaine as alcohol, yet it is what killed Belushi.

The drug expert said mixing heroin and cocaine is not that unusual.

"I can't speculate on the Belushi case but I can say that someone addicted to heroin may occasionally add cocaine to a maintenance dose of heroin for an occasional lift," he said.

Smoking cocaine can have the same deadly results, with the added danger of "cooking" the raw product. Cooking cocaine with ether reduces the amount of material such as Borax or artificial sweeteners used to cut cocaine for street sale, making it purer and the "rush" more noticeable.

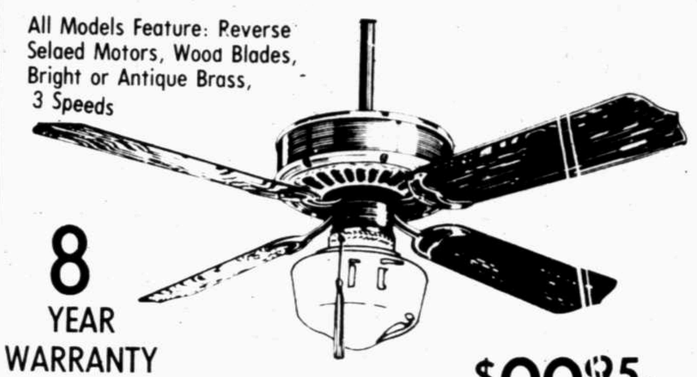

Ether is highly volatile and a free-basing accident is what caused comedian Richard Pryor to suffer severe burns in 1980.

Cocaine ready for smoking sells for about $300 a gram, according to authorities. But the process for purifying street cocaine which can be bought at half the price is fairly simple, if dangerous, and the "cooking" materials are on sale in some head shops and record stores.

Ordinances aimed at eliminating drug paraphernalia from stores have done little more than introduce new exercises in semantics to enforcement people.

Parody hits stands April 1

NEW YORK (AP) — Coca-Cola tries to buy Colombia, purchases Columbia Pictures by mistake and asks for its deposit back. Scientists discover that silicon turns into melba toast, causing panic in the computer industry. The Atari computer company buys NASA.

The newspaper reporting this looks a lot like the sober and influential Wall Street Journal, but it's not. It's "Off The Wall Street Journal," and it is to appear on the nation's newsstands on April Fools' Day.

The parody of the Wall Street Journal is being published by many of the same people who printed "Not The New York Times" when the real Times was struck in 1978.

"An estimated $35 billion changed hands in business transactions yesterday," says an item on Page 1. "Corporations continued to earn vast profits, once again reaffirming the soundness of the nation's free enterprise system."

One story says Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. "finds a Nicaraguan insurgent under his desk. Haig said this proves 'beyond an irrefutable iota of a doubt' there are communist influences in El Salvador and the State Department."

THE EDITORS of the parody, under the direction of Tony Hendra and Robert Vare, say there will be a first printing of 500,000 copies. They say it celebrates the 100th anniversary of the Journal, the first year of Reaganomics and the birth of supply-side economics.

"Atari, Inc., yesterday acquired the Strategic Air Command, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and most of the solar system," says an item about the computer and video game company.

In a lengthy editorial, as serious in tone as any in the real Journal, "Off The Wall Street Journal" urges President Reagan to provoke a nuclear exchange with the Russians:

"We urge the President to press the button. Our future is in the finger. Our destiny is in the wild blue yonder, streaked by the contrails of weapons of vast destruction ... speeding hither to their targets, smashing, killing, laying waste, cleansing, leveling."

Far back on the inside pages, among the dense figures in the stock market tables, are comments such as: Mafia — "In complete command."

Author Charles Bordin of Philadelphia goes eye-to-eye with Jellybean, an Angora rabbit at the Philadelphia Zoo. Football: Great American stag party

NEW YORK (AP) — The big guys are on the field, but it's the little guys in their easy chairs sipping beer on Sunday afternoons who made the National Football League's $2 billion television contract possible.

But what makes the little guys stand tall in the eyes of the networks and their advertisers is that on football Sundays they're sitting in front of the TV — by the millions.

NFL football is the great American stag party. In homes with televisions, about 45 percent of adult U.S. males between 18 and 49 watch pro football.

That's about 20 million men. And there's no other time when so many are watching TV. Day-time TV is primarily for women, and men don't watch as much as women at night.

"The demographics for football are special because men are so hard to reach," said Dave Martin, director of broadcast media for the Campbell-Ewald advertising agency in Detroit. "Cable grew because men were watching movies and sports. Men are selective TV watchers."

It's a sport the networks need. Pro football is a cornerstone of their profits — and it will cost them $2 billion over the next five seasons to keep it.

The deal, announced Monday in Phoenix by NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, is the most expensive TV contract in history, dwarfing the $646 million the networks paid for pro football for the past four seasons.

By comparison, the agreement baseball negotiated with NBC and ABC in 1979 pays major league clubs $200 million over four years.

The new agreement calls for ABC to continue broadcasting prime-time football while gaining its first Super Bowl in 1985. CBS will continue to cover the National Football Conference and have Super Bowls in 1984 and 1987. NBC will again be the network of the American Football Conference, with rights to the 1983 and 1986 Super Bowls.

An industry source said that CBS would pay $700 million to $750 million, ABC $650 million to $700 million and NBC $600 million to $650 million.

Why would they pay such sums?

In 1981, the CBS Broadcast Group, which includes the CBS television and radio networks and the group's news, sports and entertainment divisions, made a $300 million profit. The network televised about 4,500 hours of programming during the year, including about 100 hours of football.

An industry source estimates the network earned over $25 million for its 31 NFL broadcasts in the 1981-82 regular season and playoffs.

In addition, CBS televised Super Bowl XVI last January. It paid $6 million for broadcast rights and spent about $1.5 million on production. But with commercials costing $690,000 a minute, CBS made about $12 million.

There are 23.5 million men in America between the ages of 18 and 34. Over 45 percent, 10.6 million, watched pro football in 1980, according to the Simmons Market Research Bureau.

By comparison, 8.1 percent of men 18-34 watched the top-rated, prime-time "Dallas." Even other sports don't measure up with male audiences: 16.1 percent for baseball, 24.4 percent for college football, 7 percent for golf.

"There's absolutely nothing that competes with the NFL franchise in terms of sustained interest and building an audience," said James Rosenfield, executive vice-president of the CBS Broadcast Group.

Last year, ratings for ABC's Monday night games and CBS' Sunday football broadcasts were the highest ever. That put the NFL in a strong position for the recently concluded negotiations. The money increase was important to the clubs' profit concerns but also for the upcoming negotiations with the players who are asking for 55 percent of pro football's gross revenues.

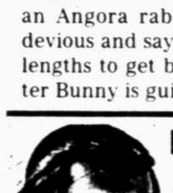

Besides the popularity of football, it's value for advertisers is enhanced because it is played in fall and winter, when Americans are more housebound, retail sales are strongest and Christmas is on the way.

Even during a recession, advertisers have paid the price. In the last quarter of 1981, advertising sales for sporting events were up 20 percent from the previous year.

"Marketing money is the last thing we can afford to cut back on," said Lee Miskowski, Ford Motor Co.'s general manager of marketing.

Teen-age depression not be minimized

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of the magazines you can buy in the supermarket had an article about teen-agers being depressed. I was a teen-ager about 40 years ago, and I wish I only had the worries now that I had then. What have these kids got to be depressed about? — Vincent, New York City

Dear Vincent: I must assume that the passage of some 40 years has dimmed your memory about what a difficult time adolescense can be. Sometimes the "good old days" become better the further they recede in time.

Adolescents worry about a number of things, although not all are equally affected by them. Some have family or school problems, others may have difficulty in their peer relationships. Even a condition as common as acne can cause a great deal of grief among young people.

In my own practice, I do not minimize either the seriousness or the significance of the depression I detect in my patients. The physician may be the only person they can confide in, and I approach the problem of depression just as I approach any other medical problem.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is pushing 80 and he seems to be getting more and more unsteady on his feet. Last week he fell twice in his apartment. Can anything be done about this? — Hank, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Dear Hank: A number of factors may account for the tendency of older people to fall — impaired vision, loss of muscle control, and diminished reflexes to name just a few. One very practical thing that can be done is to eliminate hazards around the house. Loose rugs, for example, are simply begging for an accident to happen. Poor lighting and slippery floors are other invitations to trouble.

Some of the drugs taken by older people may cause dizziness. While the medication may have to be continued, the physician should be advised that the patient appears unsteady since it might be possible to reduce the dosage.

In brief, there are a number of reasons why your father may be prone to falls. You can help by eliminating the environmental hazards around the house and by alerting the physician to his condition.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been tempted to use acupuncture to get rid of a pain in my shoulder, but I'd first like to know how it works. Will you explain? — Mark, Roanoke, Va.

Dear Mark: No one has actually shown why acupuncture is effective, but one theory is that it stimulates the release of endorphins from the brain.

Professor studying fly pill

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A biochemistry professor at the University of Nevada-Reno has an idea that could make the fly swatter obsolete: a birth control device for the common housefly.

And Gary Blomquist has been awarded a $125,000 National Science Foundation grant to help develop his idea with a two-year study of the mating habits of the pesky bugs.

Blomquist said Tuesday that his study will concentrate on the "perfume" emitted by female flies to attract romance-minded males. He said he hopes to find a way to counteract the substance and throw the male flies off the scent.

"The ultimate goal of this would be to develop a compound that would interfere with reproduction in the housefly but have no effect on any other animal," Blomquist said.

He added that he's calling the compound a "pill" because his study in some ways runs parallel to the research which developed the birth control pill for humans.

Meatloaf

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Meatloaf, an imposing rock 'n' roll singer known for his energetic stage shows, can't sell or mortgage his home here until an $8 million breach-of-contract lawsuit filed against him is settled, a judge has ordered.

The civil suit was filed by David Sonnenberg of New York and two other managers, according to attorney Urban S. Mulvehill, who is representing the managers.

Stamford Superior Court Judge Hugh C. Curran ordered Tuesday that an attachment be placed on the home and a condominium owned by Meatloaf, whose real name is Marvin Lee Aday, pending the outcome of the suit.

Ford

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Gerald Ford went to see a dentist — and stopped off to see President Reagan while he was at it.

"It was very impromptu," White House press secretary Larry Speakes said of the three-minute meeting Wednesday between Ford and Reagan in a White House office. "It was a handshake and a greeting."

Speakes said the former president, who stayed Tuesday night at the government's guest house for former presidents, was seen by a dentist who works part-time at a medical facility in the White House.

Speakes couldn't describe Ford's complaint.

"I didn't get into the dental problems," Speakes said. "I was covering the historic meeting between two presidents."

Sadat

KUWAIT (AP) — The widow of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat says a museum funded with the proceeds of Sadat's writings will be built on the spot in Cairo where he was assasinated.

The Kuwaiti paper Al-Siyassah reported Wednesday that Jihan Sadat said the museum will contain Sadat's personal effects, library and the military uniform he was wearing the day he was killed. Sadat was assassinated while reviewing a military parade last October.

"What Sadat did will not die by his death," Mrs. Sadat said.

A book finished by Sadat just before his death, titled "The Quest for Peace," will be published soon, with revenues set aside for the museum, Mrs. Sadat was quoted as saying.

Mrs. Sadat also said she planned to resume her lecturing career at Cairo University this fall and to prepare a doctoral thesis on English and Egyptian literature.

For young journalist, newspaper's folding just means bigger news

By MARK MITTELSTADT
Associated Press Writer

FINCHFORD, Iowa (AP) — The bad news around Turkey Foot Heights is that for the first time in six years there will be no News, and that means no more corny jokes or helpful hints from the 16-year-old who was the paper's entire staff.

But the good news is that somewhere along the way a little boy became a journalist, and the journalist is looking for bigger news.

"I just decided I wanted to have more time for myself," said Todd Engels, the publisher, editor, reporter, ad salesman, business agent and delivery boy for the Turkey Foot News, whose last issue rolled off the presses this week.

Engels has been putting the paper out almost single-handedly and hasn't missed a month since he started it in February 1976 at the age of 10. The paper got started because he and a friend "thought it would be neat to have a paper around here."

The paper's name came from Engels' Turkey Foot Heights neighborhood, a rolling, wooded area near Finchford scattered with homes of people who mostly work in nearby Cedar Falls and Waterloo.

The Turkey Foot News was one mimeographed page when it was started and Engels was not much interested in journalism.

"Since I started this, this has all exploded in my mind," he said. "I just think about journalism so much."

Engels is a sophomore at Cedar Falls High School and writes for the student newspaper, the Tiger Hi-Line. He said he hopes to be editor of that paper as a senior and continue with journalism past college.

The newspaper he is leaving behind started with a circulation of three or four copies, reached 40 at one point but has slipped to 30.

Todd's father, Richard, at first had the News printed at John Deere, where he works. But the young newspaperman decided to use colored paper and bigger pages, so the printing was taken to a Waterloo firm.

The result has been a paper that usually has six pages and includes front-page guides to what's inside, headlines, artwork and ads.

In putting together his paper, Engels said he tried to find items "that would be read by all ages, not just one age."

He scanned other newspapers and magazines for articles which might have a local angle, and mixed the neighborhood news with helpful hints, recipes and a liberal sprinkling of jokes.

The costs of producing the Turkey Foot News were paid out of advertising and subscription revenues. His folks helped, too.

Subscribers included a cousin of motorcyclist Evel Knievel. He sent Engels information that led to a story about the famed daredevil.

The rate for space in each issue was 25 cents a year. Advertisers included a window company, dentists and a gift shop.

In this week's 12-page final issue, Engels thanks his sponsors for their support and includes a story about video games.

"I did some research and talked to a guy who owns an arcade," he said. "It's telling how much people spend on the games and what games are popular."

The experience has convinced him that despite the gloomy predictions of some analysts and the deaths of papers like The Washington Star and The Bulletin in Philadelphia, the newspaper industry will remain strong in an age of electronics and growing demands on readers' time.

"I think it's going to keep growing," Engels said. "In my mind, a lot of people like to read the newspaper and keep up with the news."

For some at Star, it's the same old story

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — For some reporters and editors at The Minneapolis Star, the layoffs that will accompany the afternoon newspaper's merger with the Minneapolis Tribune are a familiar story.

John Ireland, Star assistant city editor, says he will be among about 100 employees laid off when the Star merges April 5 with the morning Tribune to form an all-day paper, the Minneapolis Star and Tribune.

Ireland, 38, joined the Star last September after the August folding of his former newspaper, The Washington Star — another big-city afternoon paper that fell victim to declining circulation.

"I was not totally surprised," Ireland said of the merger announced Wednesday. "I was told when I was hired that the paper could merge, but the staff would be combined and the only reduction would come from attrition. And I believe the people who told me that believed this."

Ireland, married with three children, said he began lining up another newspaper job when rumors started circulating several months ago about the possible merger.

Donald Dwight, publisher of both papers, told the two newsrooms of the merger about an hour before it was announced publicly. Some employees wept, while others received the news with stony faces.

Daily News considering employee trust plan

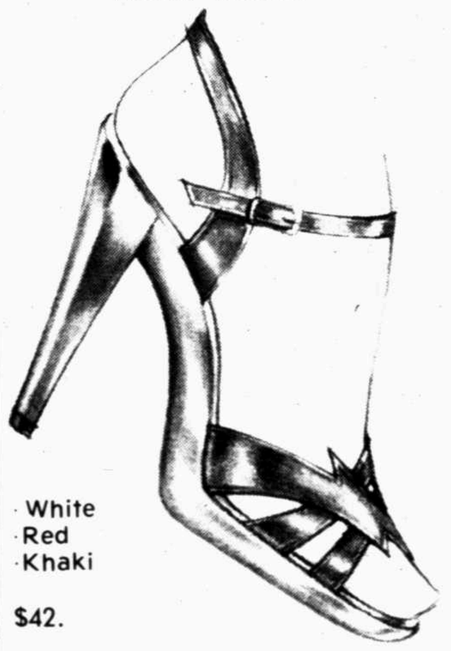

NEW YORK (AP) — Representatives of the 3,800 unionized employees of the Daily News and the management of the parent Tribune Co. have decided to talk about a possible purchase of the morning tabloid by an employee trust.

A meeting planned for today between labor lawyer Theodore W. Kheel and unidentified emissaries of Stanton R. Cook, president and chairman of the Chicago-based Tribune Co., was set up after a meeting Wednesday of 11 unions concerned about the future of the News.

The announcement Dec. 18 that the News faced an $11 million loss and was up for sale if the Tribune Co.

This 2-inch long baby turtle swims in the Pacific Ocean after one of nature's more mysterious occurences. A turtle emerges from the ocean to lay eggs, often returning to the same beach where it was hatched. It digs a pit in the sand and lays its eggs, which — if not disturbed — will hatch in 10 weeks. The young will claw out of the sand, head for the water and swim away, disappearing for many years.

Elderly artist gets recognition overnight

By EARL BOHN
Associated Press Writer

TRANSFER, Pa. (AP) — Ruth Perkins claims she understands more about what makes a good roast beef dinner than a good painting.

She hasn't sold any $650 roast beef dinners lately, but her oils on canvas fetch as much only a few years after customers in her antique shop passed them over at $5 and $10 apiece.

The 70-year-old, white-haired woman, who has been painting as a diversion most of her life, is baffled by her sudden commercial success, wondering just what it is that art buyers like in her work.

"People ask us why hers sell when good paintings don't," says her husband, Clarence.

"I just don't know," she says. "I go into art shops and see so many good paintings that aren't selling. To me it's a pity."

She is one of many Americans who paint without the benefit of formal training, and, as it did for some of the very good ones, recognition came virtually overnight for Mrs. Perkins.

It happened one day when a man was browsing through the antique shop the couple used to have beside Pennsylvania Highway 18 in the low, open hills of the Shenango Valley, about 20 miles northeast of Youngstown, Ohio.

"The chap came up with a painting, a self-portrait she did 20, 30 years ago, and he said, 'You don't know who did this, do you?' " says Perkins.

"He wanted pictures just as fast as she could get them done. That's where it all started," he says.

Mrs. Perkins says that happened three years ago. "Probably five the way time flies," says Perkins, 75, a husky man with small hands and a calm, pink face.

THE BROWSING stranger was "an old client and friend of mine," says Jay Johnson, agent for Mrs. Perkins and some 50 other folk artists.

"One day he said to me, 'Oh my...you've got to see these paintings.' That was her first sale," says Johnson, who operates the America's Folk Heritage Gallery in New York City.

Until then, Mrs. Perkins was known mostly for her work in the kitchen of Ma Perkins' Fried Chicken Restaurant.

Since then, the antique shop has became a studio where Mrs. Perkins has painted nearly 50 pictures. She's not making a fortune, but a lot more than she ever expected to from painting. Johnson says her works have been shown in his gallery and others in several states.

She remains unimpressed by her pictures.

"I don't like them that well. I paint them because apparently someone else likes them," Mrs. Perkins says.

"I like them, but I wouldn't tell her that," Perkins whispers with a slight smile while she is in the kitchen checking a beef roast cooking in her old gas stove.

Mrs. Perkins paints from memory. "Grandma's attic, Grandma's basement, fruit room and different things." She also paints from old photographs. Her colorful, simple "Family Gathering At Christmas," which was reproduced on Christmas cards, in a scene remembered from the big, old house they had in Kinsman, Ohio.

"Her use of perspective is, I think, unique," says art book author Bishop. "In some pieces, she uses four perspectives, each side of the picture representing one reality, and they all come together in the center."

THE STYLE was born more of necessity than artistry, says Mrs. Perkins, her eyes soft and friendly under curly silver hair. "I wanted to get more in the picture than just what you could see facing you."

In her pictures of family life, "you're immediately drawn in to what she's trying to show," says Johnson. "They're just simple, straightforward pictures."

Most folk art is that way, Johnson adds. "Basically, folk art is done by the common people for the common people. They're self-taught artists and have a natural sense of design and color. The academic rules of painting are unimportant to them.

"Folk art is just plain, ordinary, dumb art. A cow doesn't look much like a cow. You know what it is but that's about all."

After more than 20 years of working unseen in the kitchen of Ma Perkins' Fried Chicken Restaurant while her husband greeted customers, Mrs. Perkins was resentful when she began painting. That led her to paint "Original Garage Sale, Body Parts and Apples," which she calls her favorite.

During 1981, 27% of Midland's 849 teachers left the public school system. Some chose better paying jobs, some moved, and many quit because they could not afford to live in Midland on a teacher's salary. Other problems are the lack of quality working conditions, effective discipline, and demanding schedules. Being a competent teacher is a tough job. It requires persons who are teaching because that is what they really want to do.

And the conditions of teaching in Midland are getting tougher each year. Solving the problems requires a person who not only has the abilities and qualifications, but who has demonstrated the maturity and courage to stand up for what's right, and act.

In developing a statewide business network during the last seventeen years, Paul Thorpe has faced and solved these very problems. He has worked with several hundred employees in twenty-five different locations in developing salaries, benefits, working conditions, and career programs. The success of his business system is shown by the fact that it is now franchised in several areas of the Southwest.

Paul Thorpe has demonstrated his ability to be both sympathetic and successful in employee relations, and to get the job done. Put his proven management expertise to work for you on the School Board, Saturday, April 3.

Band leader hopes for return to dancing sanity

EDITOR'S NOTE: Howard Lanin remembers what it was like when dancing was dancing, not jumping around on the floor alone. He remembers college proms and debutante parties. He played at them all, as a big band leader. A musician since 1913, Lanin now says it's enough. Here, he reminisces.

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Howard Lanin, a pioneer of America's big band era 62 years ago, says it's time "people got back dancing cheek to cheek."

"Nowadays kids don't really have any rhythm, and what they do on the dance floor is pathetic," says the 84-year-old Lanin. "They do rock 'n' roll, disco and other crazy things. If they can't swing one another, they walk off."

Lanin claims to have discovered Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Artie Shaw, Glenn Miller, Benny Goodman, all of whom became big band leaders in the 1930s, '40s and '50s.

Big bands faded after World War II becaue of the high cost of moving around, and the lack of suitable ballrooms to accommodate them.

Lanin has played at thousands of parties and balls all over the world and still leads orchestras on special occasions. The most recent ws the inaugural party for Virginia Gov. Charles Robb.

LANIN'S BROTHER, Lester, whom he put into the business, led the orchestra at President Reagan's gala Washington ball Jan. 20 celebrating his first year at the White House.

"This is going to be my last year," he says as he rummages through old pictures and news clippings in his Center City office, and reminisces about his 69 years in the music business. "I think it is enough."

But Lanin, the son of a Russian immigrant who had played for the czars before coming to the United States in 1883, has talked of retirement many times before.

It's tough to give up a life's love, which is why Lanin never stops plugging the business, remembering the days "when Walter Winchell, the world's most famous gossip columnist, used to do my publicity."

"My father had the first cooperative orchestra in Europe and he played for royalty," Lanin says. "He came to this country with money in his pocket, one of the few immigrants like that."

Lanin boasts he was born around the corner from Philadelphia's Independence Hall, in sight of the Liberty Bell. Actually, his first home was seven blocks away.

Union records show Lanin joined the musician's union on Jan. 10, 1913, just a free-lance schoolboy drummer playing with classmates at small weekend dances.

"THAT'S WHEN I put on my first tuxedo," he says. "I started out playing the trumpet, gave it up for drums, and then decided it was better to be the director."

Lanin was one of 10 children, and "I made six of my eight brothers band leaders" — James, 86, and Lester, 78, played drums; William, 78, piano (all still alive); Samuel, clarinet; Joseph, piano, and Bernard, violin.

One brother, Edward, died at age 6, and Morris was born partly paralyzed and never learned to play a musical intrument.

"I opened Roseland, where it was 10 cents a dance, on New Year's Eve 1919 with my brother, Sam," Lanin says. "I opened the Waldorf-Astoria in New York in 1931.

"I started the President's Birthday Ball for Franklin Delano Roosevelt with proceeds to fight polio, and this later became the March of Dimes."

Lanin says he organized the first big band — five saxophones, six brass (trumpets, trombone) and four rhythm (piano, bass, drum and guitar) — in 1920, three years before Paul Whiteman came east to play at Atlantic City's old Ambassador.

"In the old days the bands went into a hotel and stayed there for months, even years," Lanin says. "Hotels don't bring in bands anymore, and they don't have any place to dance. All they got are lounges with loud groups and combos.

"TODAY THERE is hardly a college that has a prom anymore. I don't think anyone in America played more proms, or more debutante parties, than I did."

"Only three or four," Lanin says. "Count Basie. Woody Herman, the Glen Miller Orchestra, and Les Brown."

Lanin's career spans the musical world of waltz, fox trot, jazz and swing. He was the darling of the debutantes and often called "King of Society Dance Music."

He traveled to the exclusive Florida winter resorts, to the summer estates in Rhode Island, and to the rich hotels and mansions in Manhattan, Philadelphia and Washington at the beck and call, and high fees, of the Astors, Biddles, Dodges, du Ponts, Dorrances, Rockefellers, Morgans, Hearsts and other millionaires.

Also kings, queens, princesses, and presidents.

"The parties I played for were all lavish, grand-scale," he says.

But now that era is gone. Only memories. Lanin says one musician, more than any other, accounted for the demise.

"It was Benny Goodman," he says, the "King of Swing."

"Benny Goodman started the craze to dance without really embracing your partner. He stopped the typical ballroom dancing. He brought in a heavy four beats to the bar. There's not enough pause, or space, in between the beats to move the feet and do the steps. Ever try dancing to 'Stompin' at the Savoy?' The old style was two beat, which was easy to dance to.

"FROM GOODMAN it went to the twist and rock 'n' roll, led by Chubby Checker, and all the rest of what we got today.

"Disco is four beat, and the heaviest you can make it. You swing in an almost frenzy. I think it is atrocious. I wish young people would dance better."

Lanin keeps looking back, keeps hoping for a return to what he calls dancing sanity, keeps remembering how it all started for him, and made him what he was and is.

In 1913, when he broke into the business professionally, Lanin says a new style of dancing called the turkey trot came into vogue and Irene Castle shifted it into the fox trot to create the new American dance craze.

"Up to that time it was the Viennese waltz, the schottische, the quadrille, all European style dancing," Lanin says. "Today you hardly hear a waltz anymore. Whatever happened to three-quarter time? As soon as you try to play a waltz today people run off the floor."

Lanin gives credit to the beat that became the Lanin trademark to a fellow named Rudolph Valentino.

"Few people realize that Valentino, the movie idol, was imcomparable as a dancer, that he even taught regular dancing classes," Lanin recalls. "Playing for his classes taught me the importance of the just-right tempo for each dance style. It made a difference for Valentino. He knew how to dance. He knew how to embrace a lady."

FOR LANIN, after Valentino, came radio and he claims to have made the first live musical broadcast from Philadelphia in 1922 over station WDAR, which today is WFIL.

He broadcast three solid hours of music, five nights a week: "a nonstop, distinctive mixture of show tunes, traditional waltzes, Latin rhythms and jazz, all played with that get-up-and-get-with-it beat."

In 1937, Lanin played for the first of the shows staged by General Motors, which were called "GM Motorama," and soon he branched out into the entertainment business, showcasing music, singers and comedians for industry.

"I think I helped more people in the business than anyone else," Howard Lanin says, looking back over his life and work.

Hammer, Chinese sign largest duo venture

PEKING (AP) — American industrialist Armand Hammer, ignoring deteriorating Sino-American relations, signed an agreement today to help China develop the world's largest coal mine in the biggest venture yet between the two nations.

"I think the prospects of doing business in China are enormous. It's a tremendous opportunity for American businessmen," Hammer, chairman of Occidental Petroleum, told The Associated Press before the signing ceremony.

Hammer later said he was unconcerned by official reports Wednesday that the Communist Peking government is "well prepared" to downgrade diplomatic relations with Washington to protest U.S. arms sales to the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev announced the same day that the Soviet Union would like to normalize relations with China — prompting speculation that Peking might play its "Russian card" to pressure the Reagan administration to halt arms aid to Taiwan.

"As far as China's unhappiness about the present situation with the United States, it does not in any way affect their business relations with me or our company," Hammer told a news conference.

"China has made it clear that regardless of the climate at present, this hasn't and shouldn't reflect on this business deal between our company and the Chinese government. And we feel reassured."

The agreement was signed and toasted with champagne in the Great Hall of the People by Hammer and Kong Xun, chairman of the China National Coal Development Corp.

It gives Occidental a contract to develop an open-pit coal mine in Shanxi province, 310 miles west of Peking. Island Creek Coal Co., an Occidental subsidiary, will contribute an initial investment of $230 million to developing the Pingshuo mine. Construction will begin April 1, 1983, with production to reach 15 million tons annually by the end of the first three years. Final annual production should reach 45 million tons, Hammer said.

The Pingshuo pit, with reserves of 1.4 billion tons of coal, will be the world's biggest coal mine and represents the biggest Sino-American joint venture, Hammer said.

Profits from the coal mine will be split 50-50 until Occidental recovers its investment — a process Hammer said he expected to be "rapid." Thereafter, he said, the profits will be split 60-40, with the Chinese taking the larger share.

Hammer, who long has been associated with Soviet trade, says he gets along well with both the Soviets and Chinese because "we don't mix politics and business."

Negotiating with any government "is a long-drawn out process," he said. "There is a certain bureaucracy that must be overcome.

"You have to be patient, be prepared for long negotiations. There was some very tough bargaining (with the Chinese), but they were very cooperative and very straightforward."

Hammer said he has made three trips to China in the past 2½ years for the coal deal, while he once had to make monthly trips to Moscow for three years to complete an unspecified deal with the Soviets.

Military relaxes restrictions in Bangladesh

By HASAN SAEED

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — The country's new military rulers, one day after seizing power, today relaxed curfew and allowed people to return to streets patrolled by hundreds of troops.

Stores, offices, restaurants, banks and schools — closed since civilian President Abdus Sattar was ousted Wednesday in a bloodless coup led by Lt. Gen. Husaain Muhammed Ershad — reopened with the daytime easing of curfew, the Press Trust of India said.

Dacca Radio, monitored in New Delhi, India, said Sattar and members of his Cabinet faced possible death sentences if tried and convicted by special martial law courts on corruption charges and other "anti-state crimes."

All-India Radio reported that six prominent leaders of parties opposed to the ousted president's Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) have been arrested.

The Press Trust of India said the capital was calm except for a student demonstration at Dacca University to protest the military takeover and suspension of civil liberties. Their fate was not immediately known.

Curfew was eased to allow people outside their houses until 9 p.m., broadcasts announced. Communication links with foreign countries were partially restored today.

The military regime headed by Ershad has banned political and trade union activity, suspended the constitution and dissolved Parliament. Army day celebrations set for today and an independence day parade scheduled for Friday were canceled.

The ailing, 75-year-old Sattar, elected president last November, said in a radio broadcast shortly after the Wednesday coup that the military action was in the country's interests. It was not known whether he spoke under duress.

Ershad, 52, announced that elections would be held soon to pick a new president, but he indicated the leader would be someone who would take orders from the military. The career officer seized power after a widely-publicized, three-month dispute with Sattar over alleged official corruption and the army's role in Bangladesh politics.

"A new constitution may be formed," he said in a nationwide broadcast, monitored in neighboring India.

Bangladesh, formerly East Pakistan, is a predominantly Moslem country situated mostly on a low plain cut by the rivers Ganges and Brahmaputra and their delta. It has had a rocky history since it won independence from Pakistan with the help of Indian troops in 1971.

Independence leader Sheikh Mujibur Rahman was assassinated in January 1975 by right-wing army officers, and a quick succession of coups followed that ended temporarily in 1977 with Gen. Ziaur Rahman in the president's chair. Zia was slain last May 30.

Bids for improved Sino-Soviet relations unanswered

PEKING (AP) — China remained silent today on the Soviet Union's latest and highest-level bid for improved relations.

The new Soviet attempt to end the Moscow-Peking feud was delivered Wednesday by Soviet President Leonoid I. Brezhnev.

The Chinese foreign ministry had no immediate comment when asked by reporters about Brezhnev's call for new talks on the Sino-Soviet border dispute. A ministry spokesman said Brezhnev's statement has not yet been read.

It was the Soviet Union's third call to renew talks on its border with China. The last such talks were held in June 1978. In two diplomatic notes, the last on Feb. 3, the Soviets have proposed to reopen the talks.

China has not yet responded to the last note.

Speaking in Tashkent on Wednesday, Brezhnev said the Soviet Union is ready to discuss the 4,500-mile border at any time. China says there are disputed areas on the frontier and has called for disengagement of troops in those areas before talks can begin. Soviet officials say there are no disputed areas, but that they are willing to talk.

In a thinly-veiled reference to Sino-U.S. problems over Taiwan, the Soviet leader also said his nation continues to recognize China's sovereignty over Taiwan. China has hinted it may have to downgrade relations with the United States if America continues long-term arms sales to Taiwan, which China considers a renegade province.

Western diplomatic observers say the Soviet Union clearly is trying to take advantage of Sino-American problems and press its own case for better relations with its former Communist ally.

China is expected to weigh Brezhnev's statement carefully, but Western diplomatic observers said the Soviet leader's statements about the border or Taiwan are not new.

While Sino-U.S. relations are strained over the arms sales issue, China is extremely sensitive about speculation that it might play a "Russian card." Western and eastern European diplomatic sources say China probably has delayed answering the last Soviet note on the border because it does not want to appear to play the Soviets off against the Americans.

Most observers doubt the possibility of a Chinese shift toward the Soviet Union.

On the other hand, they note, a call from president Brezhnev requires a reply.

China recently has stepped up its criticism of Soviet foreign policy and last weekend unleashed one of its harshest denunciations of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Soviet expansion, China says, is the main obstacle to better Sino-Soviet relations.

Nicaraguan says he won't seek anti-U.S. resolution

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Nicaraguan junta leader Daniel Ortega appears to be softening his stand toward the United States in the face of U.S. offers to discuss differences between the two countries.

Talking to reporters here Wednesday, Ortega said he won't seek a resolution condemning the United States in today's U.N. Security Council debate of Nicaraguan charges that U.S.-backed forces are planning to invade his Central American nation.

Ortega said he only wanted to place Nicaragua's case before the world body.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto, here with Ortega, said the leftist Nicaraguan government was looking positively at the new U.S. proposals for easing strained relations between the two countries.

"Everything that aims at looking for a political negotiated solution is positive and we welcome it," D'Escoto said. However, he added, neither he nor Ortega plan to meet Reagan administration officials during their two-day visit here.

The proposals to clear the air between Washington and Managua came from Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and were relayed to the Sandinistas this month by Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda.

Haig reportedly offered to renew financial aid to Nicaragua and to stop training of Nicaraguan dissidents on U.S. soil if the Nicaraguans promise not to aid leftist guerrillas fighting to overthrow the U.S.-backed junta in neighboring El Salvador. Nicaragua has denied it is aiding the rebels.

In Mexico City, Castaneda's office said the United States and Nicaragua agreed to hold high-level bilateral talks "very soon" on "all pending problems between them." The talks are to take place in Managua, the Nicaraguan capital, the statement said.

Bonded workers' 'slavery' question before Indian Supreme Court

BY BRAHMA CHELLANEY

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Jeeva Ram, emaciated and wrinkled at age 46, has been working 16 hours a day for the past 32 years in his master's fields in central India in conditions close to slavery.

As a teen-ager, Ram was put to work to pay off his father's debt, the equivalent of about $40, borrowed from the village headman to provide a dowry for Ram's eldest sister.

Subsistence-level wages of 33 cents a day and high interest rates have kept Ram in debt bondage.

He has been unable either to pay off the debt or to accumulate enough money to marry.

Ram's case was among a group of similar cases recently brought to the notice of India's Supreme Court by social workers.

Most of those in bondage are tribespeople or "untouchables" — outcasts of traditional Hindu society — while their masters are high-caste Hindu landlords.

According to a recent study by two sociologists, nearly half of the bonded laborers originally borrowed the equivalent of less than $30 from their employers to fulfill social or religious obligations or to buy daily necessities.

A survey by the Gandhi Peace Foundation of three villages in the Rewa region, southeast of New Delhi, found that 80 percent of the bonded laborers there had lost their freedom for debts of less than 100 rupees ($11).

Shyamkali, a woman of Panasi village, borrowed 50 rupees at the time of her marriage five years ago and still owes the same amount, the survey said.

Bonded labor is banned by national and state laws but continues to flourish in most of India's 22 states. The Labor Ministry said in a recent report that it occurs mostly in agriculture but also in brickyards, stone quarries, building construction and forest projects.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has called the practice "barbarous" and acknowledged that her government has not been able to stamp out the centuries-old practice.

Emancipation and rehabilitation of bonded laborers was made one of the goals of a new 20-point program for progress unveiled in January by Mrs. Gandhi.

The worker "forfeits the right to move freely throughout the territory of India," said the three-year study by the Gandhi Peace Foundation and the national Labor Institute. "In most cases he is not even allowed to leave the village. He loses the right to sell his labor or the product of his labor in the open market."

Another report, by the government's commissioner for untouchables and aborigines, said bonded laborers are completely at the mercy of their masters, who may lease them out to other landlords. Once in serfdom, the laborers become increasingly enmeshed in debt bondage.

"Daughters are sold into prostitution. Wives are obliged to work in the fields if husband falls sick. If he is too old to work or dies, his son replaces him. If he tries to run away, he is hunted down like an animal, beaten and forced to work," columnist Ajit Barracharjea wrote recently in the Indian Express newspaper.

Bonded laborers, poorly fed and housed, are often portrayed in news reports as ignorant of the actual debt they owe their masters, and even if they are able to calculate the end of their bondage they are too cowed to speak out.

The Supreme Court recently investigated bonded labor in Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh and some other states. It ordered the release of nearly 50,000 workers, including many women and children, from virtual slavery at brickyards 30 miles north of New Delhi.

Opposition politician Madhu Dandavate, a former railway minister, told Parliament in early March that despite the court order the brickyard owners have refused to free the workers.

Mrs. Gandhi's labor minister, Bhagwat Jha Azad, said during a March 12 Parliament debate that "bonded laborers constitute one of the weakest sections of the rural poor." He said the government is determined to halt their exploitation.

Swamy Agniveesh, a social reformer who recently organized a "Bonded Labor Liberation Front," has filed several of the petitions before the Supreme Court. He periodically announces the release of groups of bonded laborers and says those freed now number in the thousands.

But the 40-year-old Agniveesh also says landlords assisted by thugs and paid-off local police are often able to crush his attempts to gain such rights for workers as the 5.5-rupee (60-cent) daily minimum legal wage.

Social rehabilitation programs and alternative employment opportunities for freed bonded laborers have been "lagging in many states," according to a report by the government-appointed Bonded Labor Committee. Spending on rehabilitation programs is currently budgeted at $4 million a year.

So "abysmally slow" is the rehabilitation process that some freed laborers have "relapsed into bondage," the report said.

The Hindustan Times newspaper reported the case of a freed laborer "rehabilitated with the allotment of a plot of land and supply of livestock. But the land proved to be barren and uncultivatable...so the livestock had to be sold, fresh debts were run up and (he) was back in bondage."

Mitterand moving slowly on schools

By JEFFREY ULBRICH

PARIS (AP) — President Francois Mitterrand, who quickly carried through on his Socialist Party's pledge to nationalize large chunks of industry, is moving much more cautiously with plans to reorganize the nation's school system.

Long a sore point with the political left, conservative governments for 22 years contributed major funding to France's private schools, which educate nearly two million children, or about one pupil in six, and are 95 percent Roman Catholic.

During last spring's presidential campaign, Mitterrand vowed to reshape the educational system into "a unified, secular public education service." But after 10 months in office, the government is still hesitating and has yet to announce just how it will institute the change.

"For the moment, we are in a fog," said the Rev. Paul Guiberteau, the French Episcopate's secretary-general for Catholic education. "We are waiting for a decision, or a proposition, or something from the (education) minister himself."

Education Minister Alain Savary began a series of "consultations" in January with various interested parties, including representatives of the Episcopate, other religious denominations, parent-teacher organizations and the powerful National Education Federation, a strongly leftist union that represents the majority of the 800,000 teachers in the public school system.

The Socialist and Communist Parties have always opposed private schools, and the teachers union has made abolition of private schools a priority issue, saying siphoning off public funds for private schools has damaged the state system.

"Public money for public service," was the slogan heard most often at the union's annual convention last month.

"If the present situation is maintained, it means war," the union's national secretary, Louis Astre, said.

The other side of the coin is the Catholic church hierarchy and a group of parent and teacher organizations united as the National Union for Free Teaching. These organizations have put together a "mobilization plan" which in 24 hours can orchestrate a letter-writing campaign and send thousands into the streets to demonstrate.

Though free public schooling was introduced in France 100 years ago, private schools always have been legally tolerated. In 1959, however, under President Charles de Gaulle, a law was passed creating a contractual relationship between the state and private schools.

Under a "simple" contract, the state pays teacher salaries and the church retains much of its control, including the right to appoint private-school directors. Under a more stringent "association" contract, the government provides additional funding for the operation of private schools, but assumes the right to choose the directors and exert more control.

While the church is not opposed to reform in the education system, it is not prepared to give up the Catholic character of its schools and the right of parents to choose where they want to educate their children.

"At the present time, we don't know what the government plans are," said Guiberteau. "It has not been put on paper or expressed in terms more clear than those three words — unified, public and secular."

Guiberteau said he suspects the government is taking its time in making proposals for fear of inciting a revolt among parents of children in private schools. He claims opinion polls show consistent support for private education.

"I think the government recognizes that the French Episcopate is very attached to the idea of freedom and Catholic schools," he said. "The pope himself repeated it recently to bishops from Western France when they were in Rome.

"And, among the people, there is a very large sentiment for continuation in this sector. Any number of public opinion polls show that 70 to 80 percent of the French people want to keep teaching as it is at the moment."

But when it comes to the crunch, the Socialists have a strong majority in Parliament. Not only that, but a third of the entire National Assembly comes from the teaching ranks, as do four of Mitterrand's Cabinet ministers, including Premier Pierre Mauroy.

Polish government speaks against U.S.

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The martial law regime accused the U.S. government today of exerting enormous pressure on Poland in an attempt to "alter the balance of forces and political realities in Europe."

Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek told the Polish Parliament that international tensions over events in Poland stem not from martial law but "from the substance of present U.S. policy."

He said Poland has become "the object of an unprecedented campaign," including "propaganda-political aggression, economic restrictions and efforts to isolate us and limit bilateral contacts."

"There is only one answer," he said, quoting Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski. "The Poles never bowed to foreign ultimatum. There are in our country conflicts and controversies. But foreigners will not resolve them."

He characterized as "unrealistic" and "inadmissable from the point of view of international law" conditions Western countries have set, notably an end to martial law, for lifting economic sanctions.

"We believe that a sense of realism will prevail," he said. "We are ready to continue developing bilateral relations with capitalist states, especially those in Western Europe..."

Czyrek, according to the official PAP news agency, said Poland, "despite temporary weakening," will retain an "active" role in shaping European events.

He also said Poland plans a "careful and critical" review of its trade with the West because, he said, "we fell victim to a peculiar credits mania." Some Western countries, he said, without naming them, "sold us technologies which were, in some cases, obsolete, forced upon us excessively high imports connected with license purchases, (and) demanded high interest rates."

Czyrek said relations with the Soviet Union represent the "cornerstone" of Polish foreign policy, and talked of Polish-born Pope John Paul II, who has been invited by Polish church authorities to visit this predominantly Roman Catholic country this summer.

"For understandable reasons we attach particular weight to relations with the Holy See," Czyrek said. "We know with what attention and concern the pope is approaching events in Poland, although on some matter there exists differences between us. But we are convinced that our viewpoints are close on such basic questions as...(preventing) further deterioration of the international situation and...(the issue of) restrictions and sanctions adopted against Poland."

The church has spoken out against martial law and the internment of some 4,000 people, including leaders of the suspended independent union Solidarity, since military rule was imposed Dec. 13. The U.S. government and some of its allies have imposed sanctions in hopes of ending martial law in Poland, which is some $26.5 billion in debt to the West.

NIT win over Purdue eases pain

By JIM O'CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Dick Versace made it to New York, won't go to New Orleans and is headed for Athens, Greece.

The coach of the National Invitation Tournament champion Bradley Braves spent the last two weeks convincing his team to keep the objective of making it to New York for the tournament semifinals in the forefront of its thinking.

It worked as Bradley captured its fourth NIT championship Wednesday night with a 67-58 victory over Purdue.

Once the game was over and Versace was facing a battery of microphones, the point of his team being snubbed by the NCAA selection committe came up and the fiery coach was quick with the answers.

"I put it to bed a long time ago," Versace said of the overlooking of his 26-10 team, the Missouri Valley Conference regular-season champions, by the committee, headed by Big East Commissioner Dave Gavitt. "You people wouldn't let it die. The NIT is a great tournament. I hope it never dies."

THE OTHER tournament going on is down to four teams and it culminates this weekend in New Orleans. Versace was asked if he planned to attend.

"The only way I would go to New Orleans is if I was one of the four. I played in the Superdome before but playing in this arena with the greatest basketball tradition in the world is just as exciting to me," Versace said referring to Madison Square Garden, home of the NIT.

Well, for one there is the matter of two airline tickets to anywhere in the world supplied to the winning coach of the tournament by a major airline.

"I'm going to go to Athens, Greece, for a week, live in a cave and send all of you a bottle of wine," Versace said when asked where he was headed.

HE WOULDN'T have a trip ahead of him at all if it weren't for the balanced scoring attack of Bradley, a team that basically relied on three players for scoring during the regular season.

Barney Mines and Willie Scott, not two of the big three, each scored 17 points and Mitchell Anderson and David Thirdkill, who are among the high-scoring trio, added 16 and 15, respectively. Anderson, who scored 25 points in a semifinal victory over Oklahoma, won the tournament most valuable player award.

The balanced scoring combined with some tenacious defense by Thirdkill that held Big Ten scoring champion Keith Edmonson to 11 points, 10.5 below his average, helped Bradley survive the fouling out of its starting and backup centers.

THE BOILERMAKERS had managed to get within one point at 43-42 on a jumper by Mike Scearce, who tied Cross for scoring honors with 16. After rebounding a missed shot, Purdue had a chance for its first lead since an early 8-6 advantage. Scearce, however, was called for an offensive foul and Thirdkill's three-point play started an 11-2 run that gave Bradley a 54-44 lead.

"It didn't seem like we'd ever get him out of there," Versace said of Cross, who played the final 9:39 with four personals.

But Versace did get out of his war of words with Gavitt and the NCAA when he was asked who he thought would emerge the champion this weekend in New Orleans.

With his tongue firmly entrenched in his cheek, he said: " ... as long as it's someone from the Big East."

MHS swimmers go to state

Long tank hours pay off at last

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

For nine Midland High School athletes the chlorinated blood shot eyes, prune-like fingertips and ultra dried hair caused by hours upon hours of swimming have paid off. The five girls and four boys, all members of the MHS swim team, will be in Austin for the State High School Swimming Championships Friday and Saturday.

Swimming coach Jesse Marsh believes his swimmers will perform well but doesn't think the team will be able to tally many points in the team competition.

"I've looked at the times from the regional qualifying meets, and it's going to be tough to score," he said. "The times I've seen are significantly better than last year."

A case in point is Andrea Freeman who will be competing in three events including the 500 freestyle, an event the junior has dominated this year. But her best time is a significant 20 seconds slower than one of the regional times. Marsh anticipates a new state record in the event. "Diane Zock of McCullum broke the state record in her regional meet," he said. "But state records aren't official unless they are set at the state meet." Freeman will also swim in the 200 freestyle and the 400 freestyle relay.

ON THE relay team with Freeman are Suzi Simpson, Debbie Fleeger and Julie Spaugh, which Marsh feels has "an outside chance" of winning their event.

Mike Seay, swimming the backstroke, will lead off the 200 medley relay for the boys squad. Pat Rhamey will swim the breastroke and freestylist Drew Richards will anchor the relay team. Senior Bill Worley will swim the butterfly leg for the relay team and will also swim in the 100 butterfly. "Worley and Freeman have the best chances for state titles." Marsh said.

Best chance maybe, but like Freeman, Worley faces an opponent who has beaten the existing state record. Marsh couldn't remember the boy's name but the time made a lasting impression. "49.9 seconds in the 100 butterfly is awfully swift," he said. Worley's best time is 54.2.

CARRIE MAYS is the only Midlander that will not be on a relay team. The versitile senior will be stroking her way through the water in the 100 butterfly and breaststroke events.

The preliminaries will be completed Friday with the six best times in each event advancing to the finals on Saturday.

All the events will be held in the UT Aquatic Center which Marsh considers "one of the fastest pools in the United States". Marsh believes the combination of a fast pool and record breaking regional times might lead to some national marks. "We should come close to some national records in this pool," he said.

The top two finishers in each event in will qualify for the National Championships to be held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin in April.

Marsh, who's team finished eighth last year, sees Clearlake High School as the undisputed favorite at the meet. "They should win both the girls and boys titles," he said.

Midland, Lee favorites in girls golf Invitational

They are the Midland High and Midland Lee girls golf teams. And they have a legitimate claim for recognition. After all, they are the No.1 and 2 teams in the race for the district 5-5A girls golf title.

But this week the two schools will take a break from district competition to host the Midland Girls Invitational Golf Tournament to be held at the Hogan Park Golf Course, Friday.

Besides the host schools, the field will include teams from Rankin, Snyder, San Angelo, Del Rio and the three Lubbock schools. Big Spring, Crain, Odessa High and Odessa Permian will be represented by individual entries.

The tournament will be a one round, 18 hole affair with team and indivdual medalist titles on the line. The more than forty competitors will begin teeing up at 9 a.m.

MHS is led by two outstanding returners from last year's squad including Janis Littlefield. The senior was runnerup for the district medalist title in 1980. Kelle Mobley, a junior, is currently leading this years crop for district medalist honors.

With only one round to play MHS

Cooper shoots for Grand Slam

By CHAD PUERLING
R-T Sports writer

The second leg of a five-city golf tour will be held in Midland Friday at Ranchland Golf Course. No it's not the TPA or even the LPGA, it's the District 5-5A boys championship.

Midland Lee holds down third place with a 304 stroke total following the first leg of the tournament which was held in Big Spring last week. Abilene Cooper's second team is in first place with a 301 followed closely by the Cooper No.1 team, who has a one stroke margin over Lee with a 303. A young Midland high team presently is in sixth place with 319 total strokes.

COOPER'S DOMINANCE comes as no surprise to either local coach. "Most golf teams are happy to have one outstanding golfer on their team." said Lee coach Van Thom Whatley. "Cooper has four great ones. I mean someone who can shoot in the low 70's on any course."

MHS coach John Ford sees Cooper dominating the district race also. "Abilene Cooper should finish 1-2 in the district, with Lee and San Angelo as darkhores."

The No.1 Rebel team is led by senior Emil Hale who shot a 72 in Big Spring, leaving him two strokes off the lead for medalist honors. Seniors dominate the experienced Lee team including Britt Gardner, Kevin Lundry and Rob Marbargar. David Hicks is the only junior on the team.

Whatley attributes at least some of the early success of the Rebel squad to Marbargar who had his personal best in the first round with a 76.

Whatley's strategy is too stay close to the Cooper teams for the first three rounds forcing them to make a decision.

"WE HAVE a district rule that says the teams that play together the last 36 holes are the teams that will be eligible for the district title. Cooper has rightfully spread its talent evenly between their two teams. If we can stay close going into the final rounds they may be forced to put all their eggs into one basket."

It's a prospect that delights Whatley as it will open the door for other teams to capture second place in district and advance to the regional meet. A position he hopes his Rebels will be ready for.

Both coaches believe this week's home course advantage should be beneficial to their team's chances for advancement in the district race. Tee time is scheduled for 8:30 a.m.

Final tuneup for worst meet

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

The Midland Lee and Midland High track teams hit the road for the final time this weekend before returning to Midland for the Tall City Relays next weekend at Memorial Stadium, the site that sends shutters through athletes across West Texas.

At least, the wheels will turn on paved surfaces this week as Midland Lee heads for the prestigious San Angelo Relays Friday and Saturday in quest for their fourth straight team title while Midland High will join both the Lee and Bulldog girls in Seminole Saturday for their final tuneup.

The District 5-5A girls meet will be held in conjunction with the Tall City Relays April 2, so track fans will get a double dose of action this year in the Tall City event, which is rapidly earning the reputation of getting some of the best talent in West Texas for the worst meet of the year.

MEMORIAL STADIUM has an unpaved surface with the poorest lighting in the league. Memorial Stadium is certianly not suited for track, but then again, many wonder what it is suited for. It's a horrible place for some of West Texas' best athletes to perform their skills. It's more like survival test.

The 1600 meter relay is unbeaten this year and posted a fine 3:19.3 last week with Sam Morney, Carlton Johnson, Troy Barber and Darren Williams carrying the baton.

Williams is unbeaten in the 100 meters this year with 10.9 his best. Morney has won twice and posted his best of 49.9 last week. Wayne Brandt took

Prep coach asks for probe of UAB

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — The high school coach of a highly recruited basketball player says he will ask the NCAA to look into the signing of Alfonso "Buck" Johnson by Alabama-Birmingham.

"My main concern is right and wrong and there's definitely been a wrong here," Hayes High School coach Jack Doss said Wednesday. "We'll definitely ask for an NCAA investigation."

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The storybook rise of Fernando Valenzuela from rural Mexico to baseball stardom in Los Angeles in a single year may have been tainted by the young pitcher's holdout.

Valenzuela threw 10 minutes of batting practice at the Los Angeles Dodgers' camp Wednesday in his first workout with the team this spring and said later that he had no regrets. He reported to spring training Tuesday night, a month after most of his Dodger teammates.

Asked if he thought his negotiations with the Dodgers, and his holdout, might hurt him in the fans' eyes, Valenzuela replied through an interpreter: "It's hard to tell if my image will be tarnished. The people will have to tell you that, and they will know if I was right in defending my rights.

"I do not regret anything. I am not here under protest. I'm here to join my teammates."

Valenzuela, the National League Cy Young Award winner and Rookie of the Year in 1981, had been asking $850,000 for 1982. The Dodgers, however, exercised their option to renew his contract unilaterally, giving him $350,000. He reportedly made $42,500 last year.

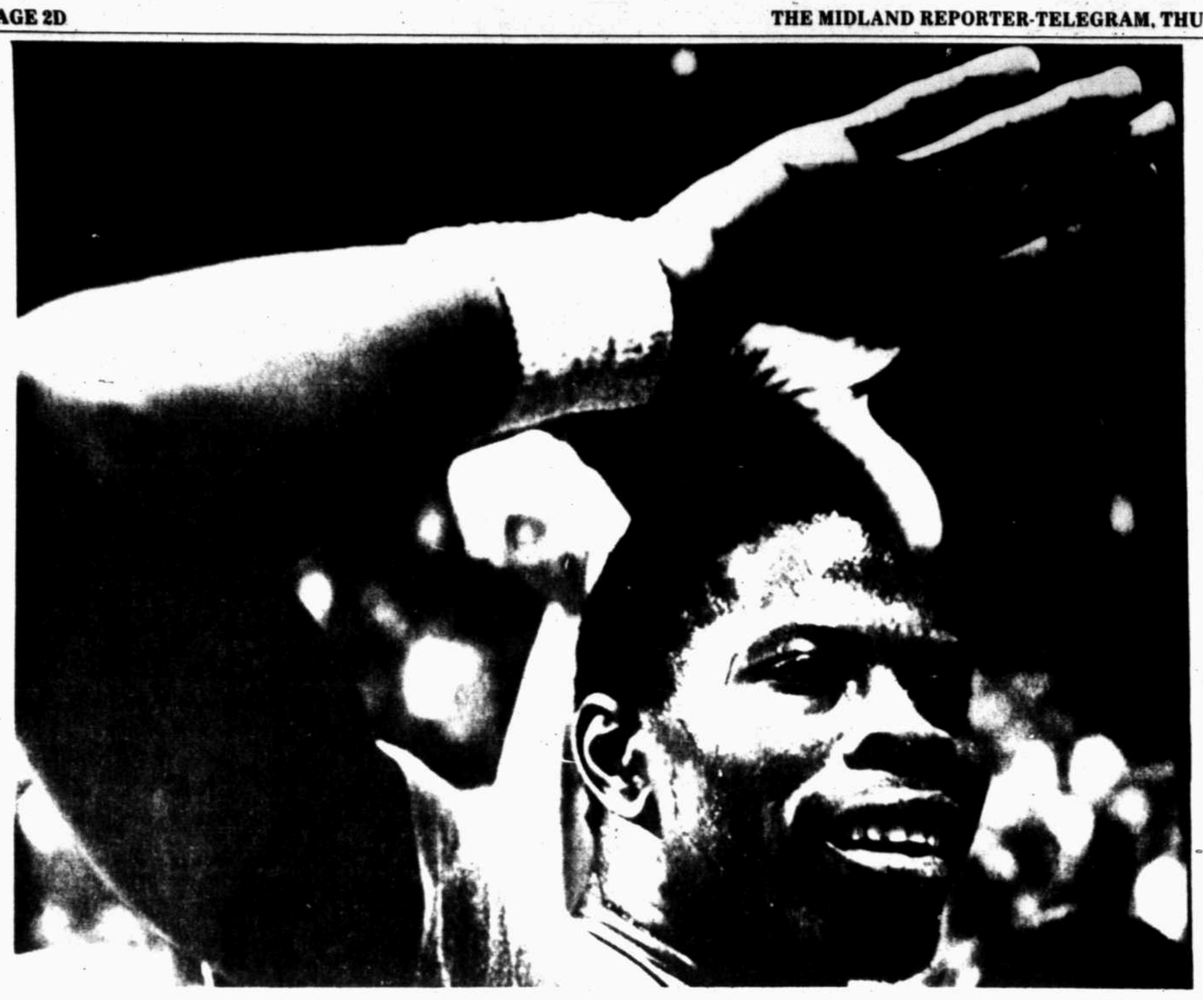

He said would not sign the 1982 contract although the Dodgers had offered about $100,000 extra in incentive bonuses.

Asked if he had come to camp in response to a letter the Dodgers had sent him, Valenzuela said: "Yes, I received the letter. I saw no success in the negotiations, so I decided to come here and join the team."

Valenzuela fended off a question concerning his dissatisfaction with $350,000 for 1982, saying: "The best people to answer that are my agent, Tony Demarco, and my attorney, Dick Moss. They negotiated in my behalf. They're the ones to answer that."

Neither DeMarco nor Moss accompanied Valenzuela to Vero Beach.

Although the regular-season opener is just some two weeks away, Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda said he thinks Valenzuela will be ready to pitch by the first or second week of the campaign. The left-hander pitched winter ball in his native Mexico and worked out during the holdout.

Hoyas haven't hit peak

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

According to center Pat Ewing, the Georgetown Hoyas haven't reached their pinnacle yet. If they do peak this weekend, the NCAA basketball title probably will go home to Washington with them.

"We are capable of playing better," said Georgetown's 7-foot freshman sensation, who has led the Hoyas to the Final Four in New Orleans. "I've developed somewhat but I need to learn to do other things, like how to get other people open more."

The sixth-ranked Hoyas have gotten enough people open for good shots to win the West Regional. Their coach, John Thompson, said they are playing as well as they have at any time this season.

On Saturday, the Hoyas have a semifinal showdown with 20th-ranked Louisville. The Cardinals won the Mideast Regional.

Georgetown, 29-6, and Louisville, 23-9, both are blessed with deep benches. That fact was not overlooked by Thompson.

"I know they have depth and they use it," said Thompson. "They get four new faces on the floor in a hurry and depend a lot on their pressure defense. I haven't made my mind up about matchups."

Louisville Coach Denny Crum, who guided the Cardinals to the national title in 1980 and has taken his team to the Final Four four times, wasn't too worried about matchups. He intends to do the same things that got Louisville to New Orleans.

"You can't change styles and different things," said Crum. "You've got to figure out what's best for your personnel and go with them. And, by the end of the year, you'll be playing better than if you tried to work three different styles and systems. It just doesn't work."

"I hope we haven't played our best game yet," said Smith, echoing the thoughts of Georgetown's Ewing about his club. If Smith is right and North Carolina's best is still to come, then the Tar Heels — with an awesome starting five — should walk away with the championship.

Dallas TJ edges Bulldogs, 3-2

Midland's Bulldogs lost to Dallas Thomas Jefferson, 3-2, at Memorial Stadium Field Wednesday in a non-district baseball game, but it wasn't the same all-thumbs team that lost to Odessa Permian, 8-3, in the District 5-5A opener Tuesday.

However, the lone error committed by the Purple Pack led to a three-run sixth as a double, single and double followed the miscue, enough damage to spoil a 13-strikeout pitching performance by Bill Miles, 3-2.

Faustino Granada had three hits, including a double, including a third inning double that gave Midland a 1-0 lead that lasted until the sixth. Midland pushed over a run in the sixth and had prospects of more, but Browning bore down to retire the side with the go-ahead run on base.

Celtics win 17th in row

By The Associated Press

It was shades of Bill Russell, Bob Cousy and the rest of the 1959-60 Boston Celtics en route to the second of eight straight National Basketball Association championships.

Their club record of 17 consecutive triumphs stood until Wednesday night, when the current crew of Robert Parrish, Larry Bird & Co. matched it with a 136-115 romp over the Cleveland Cavaliers.

"If we lose, I hope it's an intrasquad game in training camp," said Coach Bill Fitch, the Celtics' modern-day Red Auerbach.

SuperSonics 99, Bucks 97

Nuggets 129, Spurs 115

Alex English and Dan Issel scored 25 points apiece to lead Denver to its seventh straight victory. Denver's Kiki Vandeweghe added 19 points and Glen Gondrezick had 15.

Suns 104, Mavericks 96

Guards Dennis Johnson and Kyle Macy keyed a 12-0 spurt late in the fourth period as Phoenix snapped a three-game losing streak. Rich Kelley's three-point play with 4:32 remaining put Phoenix ahead to stay.

Bullets 114, Pacers 106

Leafs' gamble pays

By Associated Press

Maple Leafs Coach Mike Nykoluk didn't have much choice but to take a risk Wednesday night, so he lifted goaltender Michel Larocque with 34 seconds left in a tie game. Twenty-two seconds later, rookie Miroslav Frycer scored to give Toronto a 4-3 victory over the St. Louis Blues that kept alive the Leafs' slim playoff hopes.

Jets 5, Kings 3

The red-hot Jets won their sixth straight as Dale Hawerchuk, the NHL's top-scoring rookie, had a goal and two assists to reach the 100-point mark. Winnipeg has lost only two of its last 15 games.

Whalers 3, Nordiques 3

Quebec rallied with three goals in the final period, securing the deadlock on Michel Goulet's 40th of the season with 7:46 remaining. Anton Stastny started the Nordiques' rally at 3:37 with a power-play tally, then defenseman Mario Marois made it 3-2 at 7:40.

Rangers 7, Penguins 2

Don Maloney and Ed Johnstone each notched two goals and two assists as the Rangers blasted Pittsburgh to extend their unbeaten streak to eight, 6-0-2. New York also has outscored opponents 44-26 in that stretch.

Black Hawks 6, Red Wings 4

Canucks 5, Rockies 4

Right wing Jim Nill snapped a 4-4 with 7:59 remaining to lead Vancouver to its victory over Colorado.

Friday's action will be for the girls with competition beginning in the field events at 2:30 p.m. Running preliminaries will also begin at 2:30 p.m. with finals slated for 5 p.m.

The boys take over Saturday with a 9:45 a.m. start in the field events. Running prelims begin at 10 a.m. and finals are slated for a 1:30 p.m. start.

The Alamo, Goddard and San Jacinto girls will host five other teams in the seventh and eighth grade divisions Friday. The other teams are Trinity, Lake View Lincoln, and the San Angelo teams of Edison, Lee and Glenn. Edison, Glenn, Lee and Lake View will also join the Lee and Midland freshman schools in the ninth grade run.

An even larger field is scheduled for the Saturday edition when the boys tangle. Alamo, Goddard and San Jacinto will host the Odessa schools of Bonham, Hood, Blackshear, Nimitz and Crockett along with the San Angelo teams of Lincoln, Lee and Edison. Trinity is also in the field.

In Saturday's ninth grade competition, the two Midland freshman schools will play host to Bonham, Hood, Nimitz, Crockett, Edison, SA Lee and Lake View.

This meet is a prelude to next week's District 5-5A girls meet, which is being run this year in conjunction with the Tall City Relays.

Lee JV triumphs

The Midland Lee JV baseball team stung Odessa High 5-1 to run its record to 7-2.

Kerry Robertson, 3-1, pitched five innings of two-hit ball and struck out nine Bronchos while walking two. Rob Walker plated three runs with one hit and Sergio Ochoa drove in another run.

Who can stop awesome Hoyas?

One thing and another while wondering if this is the last year a certain writer be able will enter a saloon, pound on the bar defiantly and loudly proclaim: "I'm the only West Texan who has ever seen a Southwest Conference team in the finals of the NCAA tournament," and walk away unchallenged...

Although it's nice to see a SWC team reach the Final Four, in one respect, it was a disappointment when Boston College was eliminated. We like the way they move the basketball around. Reminds us of Bob Cousy's old Boston College teams....or was it Holy Cross? Let's see, Cousy played for BC and coached Holy Cross...No, that's not right. Cousy played for the Holy Cross team that lost the 1948 NCAA consolation game to Kansas State? Right.?

No one was more relieved over BC's departure Bradley University Coach Dick Versace, who hopes now that maybe the hate mail from Chestnut Hill will stop.

TALKING ABOUT movement, or lack of movement, how did a team that stands around as much as Villanova reach a regional final? It looked like they were waiting for a streetcar named Desire to show up so they could ride to the other end of the court...

Watching Georgetown decimate what-was-supposed-to-be a strong, well-coached Oregon State team Saturday, one got the feeling that Hoyas were on their way to the first of four straight NCAA titles, unless Pat Ewing declares hardship. Ewing's domination of the game made one wonder if selectors hadn't been a bit premature in naming Virginia's Ralph Sampson Player-of-the-Year.

Still, the fact remains, that as awesome as the Hoyas were Saturday, they lost to Boston College and had some close calls in earlier tournament games...Yet, it would take a lot of nerve to pick against them in New Orleans...

BACK TO foot-in-mouth Versace. After three Big East teams reached regional finals, perhaps, Versace would like to amend his criticism of the tournament officials for picking four teams from that league and criticize them from not picking more...

Although the intent was admirable that Small Player-of-the-Tournament was rubbed the wrong way for Spud Nuts. Spud may be only 5-6 but no one has to make apologies or excuses for him, which is what the Small Player award sounds like. Spud doesn't need any favors to hold his own. In fact, but for that blocked shot by Puntus Wilson in the first game, the one without which MC would have been an early casualty, Spud might well have been a contender for the MVP in the nationals at Hutchinson...

They sold 300 SRO tickets to the NJCAA finals Saturday night, the first time they've sold out the arena since Hutchinson JC made the finals in 1974...And with three championships in the last seven years, the Western Junior College Conference is rapidly establishing itself as the best juco cage league in the land...

Largemouth black bass popular Texas sportfish

The attention that the largemouth black bass receives in Texas leaves little doubt about the status of this popular sportfish. The northern largemouth bass (native or Texas bass) appears in most Texas streams and natural lakes. Extensive stocking programs over the past 50 years have resulted in it's introduction into thousands of man-made lakes and ponds.

Introduction of the Florida largemouth bass started in Texas during the early 1970's, according to Billy Higginbotham, fisheries specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. The Florida subspecies is known to grow larger than our native Texas largemouth. Although this characteristic was initially attributed to the long growing season and warm waters of Florida's original habitat, research has indicated that it's ability to grow larger is also genetically influenced.

The Florida bass has several negative characteristics that must be considered when stocking a pond or lake. Tests have shown that Forida bass do not grow as fast as our ntive largemouth during the first year of life. This may contribute to poorer survival, due in part to predation, during the first year. Additionally, Florida bass are unable to tolerate cold, harsh winers as well as native bass. Small shallow ponds in areas of the state subject to extreme cold are poor candidates for Florida bass.

The Florida and native bass are very similar in appearance and are difficult to distinguish with the untrained eye. However, Florida bass appear more golden-brown in color as compared to the greenish hue of the native bass. A better method of differentiating between the two subspecies is to count the scales along the lateral line. The Florida bass has 70 or more lateral line scales, while the native bass has 68 or less.

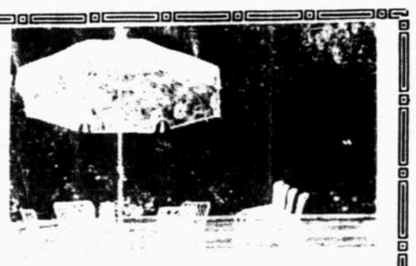

In waters where both fish appear, hybridization is common and from available information, highly desirable. The resulting offspring, called the superbass, is probably superior to either parental strain in growth and survival. The current state record, a 15½-pounder taken in January of 1981 from Lake Echo, has been verified as a hybrid. The hubridization of the two subspecies is upgrading the genetic composition of native bass populations; an impact that is sure to have positive effects for fishermen.

The life histories of largemouth bass are very similar. Florida bass begin spawning when water temperatures warm to approximately 60 degrees. Native bass spawn slightly later, when the water reaches about 64 degrees. If conditions favor rapid growth, one year old Largemouth bass prefer areas that are not subject to direct sunlight such as weedbeds, flooded timber and boat docks. Underwater structures such as submerged islands, creekbeds and brushpiles are also likely candidates to attract bass.

Steinbrenner hones ax for sacrificial manager

POMPANO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner, who had promised Manager Bob Lemon he would not be fired this season, may be having second thoughts.

"The next time he doesn't do what he's told he'll be in real trouble," Steinbrenner said Wednesday after the Yankees' 14-6 exhibition loss to the Texas Rangers, their 12th setback in 16 spring games.

Steinbrenner was upset because Lemon continued to play Dave Revering, normally a first baseman, at third base, where he committed an error in the Rangers' eight-run sixth inning.

"I told Lem two days ago that I wanted him at first base," said Steinbrenner. "I want him at first base with (Bob) Watson."

Informed of Steinbrenner's threat, Lemon replied: "I have no control over that. He's the boss, and that's all I'm saying."

Although Steinbrenner was upset with Lemon's managing during last October's World Series loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers, he rehired him for 1982 at the manager's request and said he would be given a full season at the helm.

The 61-year-old Lemon said this would be his last year and Gene Michael, whom Lemon succeeded last September, already has been named manager for three years beginning in 1983.

Earlier Wednesday, the Yankees acquired Butch Hobson from the California Angels as a backup for third baseman Graig Nettles, apparently ending the Revering experiment.

Hobson said he was "excited about being around Graig Nettles. A third baseman as good as he is should make me a better player."

In return for Hobson, the Yankees sent relief pitcher Bill Castro to the Angels. The deal drew immediate objection from the Major League Baseball Players Association, who said Hobson may have been sent to the Yankees as compensation for the Angels' signing of free agent outfielder Reggie Jackson.

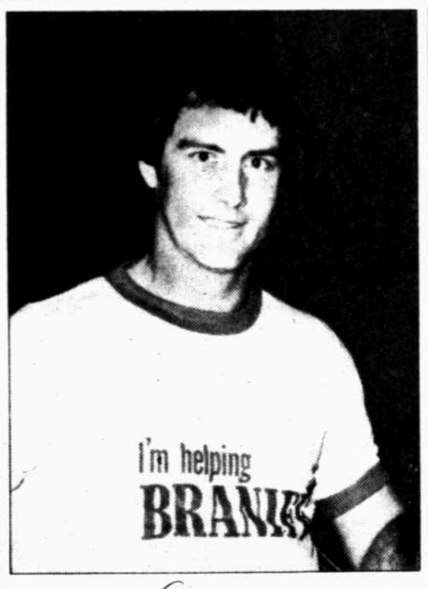

"If this is in any way connected to the signing of Reggie Jackson, it is absolutely improper," said Don Fehr, the association's counsel.

Buzzie Bavasi, the Angels' executive vice president, had said he intended to compensate the Yankees if California signed Jackson, even though compensation was not required in Jackson's case.

Braniff Braniff
"JOIN THE FIGHT FOR BRANIFF!"
"...they've been leading the entire airline industry in giving all of us a more comfortable ...more affordable way to fly."
As a quarterback I know that being a leader isn't easy. You have to give the team total loyalty and support. Braniff has been giving the Dallas Cowboys more than that for 22 years now. And last fall, they even dedicated a plane to the Cowboys. Maybe that's why I'm fighting for Braniff. Or maybe it's because they've been leading the entire airline industry in giving all of us a more comfortable . . . more affordable way to fly. All I know is, their TEXAS CLASS(sm) service shows a lot of Texas pride. The same pride that's made both the Cowboys and Braniff a Texas tradition. And that's why I'm urging you to fly Braniff. Your reservations right now are a vote of confidence in their leadership and dedication to Texas!
The Dallas Cowboys are standing up to fight for Braniff. And lots of other concerned Texans are joining in too. Join the fight to keep the kind of service you deserve, from people who honestly appreciate your business. Make your reservations now. Join the fight for Braniff. The Cowboys have.

USC to appeal penalty

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The president of the University of Southern California said Wednesday the school will appeal the NCAA's report regarding alleged violations in the Trojans' athletic program.

An NCAA probe into the Southern Cal football program reportedly centered around two principal points — assistant coach Marv Goux' alleged sale of football tickets at above face value on behalf of the players, and players expecting to receive academic credit for a course in which they were not attending classes. Goux has denied the ticket allegations.

USC President James H. Zumberge announced the appeal in a prepared release. The release also stated that the NCAA had requested that Southern Cal not make any public announcement on the report from the Committee on Infractions until either the committee makes an announcement itself, or the matter has been resolved by the NCAA through its regular enforcement procedures.

The NCAA's recommended sanction against the school's football program reportedly was a three-year probation that would keep the Trojans out of bowl games and off television for the next two years.

The NCAA report was received by the university on March 15. Southern Cal then had 15 days to decide whether to accept or appeal the findings.

Under NCAA rules, the appeal will be heard by the 19-member NCAA Council, the elected governing body of the NCAA.

The earliest the appeal could be heard would be April 21-23 in St. Louis.

the pole vault with a charge of 13-0, his best, and Roosevelt Fort remains unbeaten in the long jump with a 22-2½ last week. Carl Piccolo in the distance races, and Damon Polk in the hurdles give the Rebels more threats at titles. Clarence Smith and Luther Johnson add depth in a couple of events while Van Gravitt has been earning places in the shot put.

THE MHS girls, who will have the knowledge of dirt under their feet when they face powerful Abilene Cooper in the district meet April 2, have placed second three weeks in a row and hope to break that streak this weekend in the Indian Relays.

The Bulldogs have relay strength to go along with firsts taken last week by Lydia Jackson in the 100 meters with a 12.48, Demetra Fort in the triple jump with a 34-9 and Rochelle Gill in the high jump with a 4-10.

The Midland High boys have also been showing weekly improvement. The Bulldogs captured the 1600 meter relay title in Big Spring last week with a 3:22.8 behind Chuck St. Germain, Earl Phillips, Anthony Adams and Ricky Madrid.

TROY BUSH, who had a jump of 6-5 last year, got his first victory in the high jump in Big Spring with a 6-2. Todd Crawford continues to improve in the hurdles with two seconds last week. Byron Campbell's 148-11 earned him another second place in the discus.

The Bulldogs' future seems ahead of them since their JVs scored 103 points last week in Big Spring. Terry McGowan and John Hibbitts are improving in the sprints as is Tony Carrasco in the hurdles. Other young Bulldogs of note are Jesse Diaz and Juan Salinas in the distance races and Randall Swindell in the long jump.

Midland, Lee

Lee's second place in district has surprised some observers as the Rebel squad has no seniors on the team. Consistancy has been the hallmark of this years linksters.

The final district meet will be held April 1 at Hogan Park.

Idaho out to keep coach

MOSCOW, Idaho (AP) — University of Idaho basketball Coach Don Monson can have a multiyear contract and a salary increase if he'll stay in Moscow, says university president Richard Gibb.

"Every effort" is being made to keep Monson at Idaho, despite rumored job offers from several major colleges including the University of Arizona, Gibb said Wednesday.

Private contributions could also be added as a bonus on top of Monson's coaching salary, Gibb said.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, March 26, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Diana Ross, best-selling author Erica Jong and actors James Caan, Alan Arkin and Leonard Nimoy celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: the poet Robert Frost. Pursue a creative or artistic goal now and you will achieve it. Your finances improve, reducing domestic tension. You welcome the romantic overtures of someone you admire. As work becomes more rewarding, you find yourself more and more enthusiastic about a special career. Look for a golden opportunity to mix business with pleasure when traveling. Young adults should exercise patience and self-control. Those sharing this birthday find adolescence the most trying period of their lives.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Disband groups in which the members are not finding rewards or gaining worthwhile objectives. Foreign business negotiations now have a better chance of success.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A longtime wish may now be fulfilled. A change of residence may be involved. Check with your family before deciding. Love brings you luck and improves your chances for success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Competitors make you an offer you cannot refuse. Love may be more of an illusion than a reality. Dismiss any fears you have about starting a new business. You are on solid ground.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Everything you earn seems to go to the government or into someone else's pocket. Put more savings aside for the future. You may have to backpedal on a promise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be alert to new work opportunities and you will scoop up rich rewards. A blind date turns out to be sensational. People make promises they will not be able to keep.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take advantage of a lull at work to make plans for the future. New career goals are easier to focus on now. Financial considerations bring you and family member closer together.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Luck is on your side, and you are able to do pretty much what you want this weekend. Let loved one know your plans in advance. You could find an affluent partner.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A dip in business profits may move you to make technological changes. Computer sciences offers you a way to increase efficiency and cut costs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A partnership may not be your cup of tea. Seek the advice of someone experienced before launching a new business venture. Family member strains your patience.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Insure your loved ones' security by agreeing to a change in the way you do things. Talent and ingenuity give you the advantage over a newcomer in your field.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good-natured remark could irritate you. Keep your temper under control! Teamwork pays off handsomely now. Gentle persuasion works best when dealing with a child.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Things are going your way now! Make the most of every opportunity. A phone call boosts your confidence. Romance is happier and more exciting than in your fondest dreams.

The members of the club had begun to think that something must have happened to Trump Coup Tommy, but their fears were allayed when one day he suddenly reappeared and sat down at the table as if nothing had happened. You remember him of course — he is the player who bid atrociously and played worse, except in one circumstance: when trumps broke badly, Tommy became a master declarer.

His peculiar skill became evident in the first rubber. The only justification for his bidding over three no trump was that there was no reason to let partner make a contract when Tommy could go down instead. Three no trump would have been made by taking a double finesse in clubs once it became obvious that diamonds wouldn't run. When East alerted Tommy to the fact that trumps were unlikely to break by making a penalty double, it was tantamount to signing his own death warrant.

The nine of spades was covered by the jack and king and taken by the ace. Declarer led a trump to the queen and returned a trump. Since East had already given away the trump division with his double, he followed with the ten and declarer won the king.

Tommy now demonstrated how simple his contract was — he didn't even need the double finesse in clubs! He led a heart, and West did the best he could by rising with the ace and returning a heart. Declarer won dummy's king, cashed the queen of spades and ruffed a spade. He then cashed the ace and king of clubs before ruffing another spade.

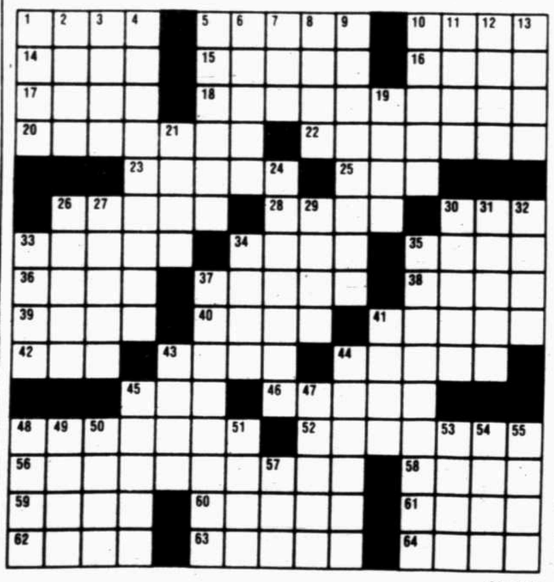

Declarer had lost only one trick. He was down to A-9 of trumps and a club while East held J-8 of trumps and a spade. Tommy simply exited with a club. He did not care which defender won the trick, because he was certain to win the last tricks since his trump tenace was perched over East.

Blind singer conveys warmth, ease

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

At age 1, he was homeless. At 6, he encountered running water and indoor plumbing for the first time when he entered school. At 7, he mastered the violin; at 8 the piano; and, at 12 the guitar. Before completing high school, he was suspended for 12 months from music class for concentrating on rock n' roll instead of classical music.

After about two years in the country music arena, the Country Music Association named him Male Vocalist of the Year in 1974. He also won a Grammy as the Top Male Country Performer.

Today at 36, he plays every keyboard, string, percussion and woodwind instrument, and says he is still learning — not just about music, but about living.

Warmth, combined with a comfortable easiness, perhaps best describes Ronnie Milsap's tone on the phone as he says, softly, "Try to taste all you can. There's so much you can get from life." Laughing, he adds, singing, "What am I living for, if not for you." Then with a more serious tone in his voice he says, "People who say, 'I don't have a reason to live,' I don't understand. I've been so fortunate."

Milsap is blind, has been since birth. Abandoned by parents who could not provide for a handicapped child, Milsap was raised by his grandparents "where North Carolina meets east Tennessee" until he was sent to the State School for the Blind at Raleigh. It was there he met Wallace Grieves, who introduced him to the world of music while instilling in him an eagerness for experiencing life.

His conversation does not deal with these matters. This is just commonly known background on the country entertainer who will bring his show, complete with a performance by Ricky Skaggs, to Midland's Chaparral Center Saturday. Rather, Milsap talks about his music and how his career is going.

Milsap, who takes the holidays and June off to be with his family, is heading out early this year on tour. He's been touring for seven years and although "it's not quite as glamorous as folks think it is," what "really makes it worthwhile is the people you meet and the friends you make and the old friends you reacquaint yourself with."

While at home in Nashville this winter Milsap cut his 14th album for RCA. He says, "We just keep hanging in there."

Today his success is certainly more than hanging in there, a complete turnaround from the early 1970s, when he and his wife, Joyce, left Memphis "$25,000 in debt, with a song in my heart," adding after a pause, "and that was about all I had." At that time he was playing basically rock. However, "I was mixing Beethoven and Hank Williams together," he says, chuckling under his breath. "My training (classical) is very helpful in what I do today."

"When you grow up in the Smokies that's really part of your roots. My dream was to make it as a country star."

Today his marriage is another part of his success story. "We've been married 17 years this Oct. 30. It's hard keeping a relationship together that long especially in this business, but it's been easy for Joyce and me" because when a relationship "works, its good."

After nine years in Nashville and success as a country star, "My dream is to continue to do what I do until the fun's gone. I still have an awful lot of fun. I work now because I want to, not because I have to."

It certainly hasn't always been that way. To those starting out, Milsap recommends what he did, "Sacrifice your time and be willing to practice and work at something."

He feels much of his success is due to the team he works with.

"There are a lot of teams around other performers; some teams work real well and some don't. You have to have the right team of people around you — that makes it work. In our team nobody is more inportant than anybody else."

Although his awards are important to him as a gauge, "you don't live your life for awards. We want to bring our show to as many people as possible."

He loves to come to Texas.

"I've been home with more people in Texas than anywhere else. If I didn't live in Nashville, I'd be in Texas. It's a different attitude, a different mood.

"Texas and Oklahoma have low unemployment figures compared to other states. There's got to be a reason."

Texans are "my kind of people; they love to work, to apply themselves real hard. They don't expect the job to be there; they make a place for themselves.

"You've got to stick to what you've got until the job's done. I've never been able to expect the job to be there; I've had to go for it."

Country entertainer Ronnie Milsap will perform at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m. Saturday. Also on the evening's entertainment bill is Ricky Skaggs. Tickets, priced at $8 and $9, may be purchased at Endless Horizons, both Music Haul locations and Chaparral Center.

Caine, Reeve right on target in 'Deathtrap'

Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD - Well, the premise of Ira Levin's fiendishly clever comedy-thriller, "Deathtrap," is that a failing playwright would stop at nothing, not even murder most foul, to get his hands on another hit, particularly a play so good that "not even a brilliant director could hurt it."

As adapted to the screen by writer Jay Presson Allen and director Sidney Lumet, the movie is, if anything, even more delightfully baffling than the play, and the play is the longest-running mystery-thriller in Broadway history.

It's a Chinese puzzle of a story, deliciously intricate and continually surprising, with more twists than a Perrier convention. And, given its ostensibly grim subject — it is, after all, murder — "Deathtrap" is also wonderfully humorous. The dialogue is crisp, literate and very funny.

As a decided bonus, it's also the finest work Michael Caine has done since ... well, since "Sleuth," another very slickly crafted little mystery. Through his outbursts of anger and his often transparent scheming, you can practically hear his mind whirring. And it's obvious that Caine is having a wonderful time with the character. As for Christopher Reeve, the other player in a deadly game of cat-and-mouse, he's something of a revelation, if only because he's almost symbiotically identified with "Superman." He's a richly gifted actor, and in "Deathtrap" he displays a marvelous flair for villainy.

CAINE plays Sidney Bruhl, once a very successful writer of mystery plays but now suffering an almost terminal case of writer's block. His latest effort has opened and closed on the same night, and it's only the foremost of several recent failures.

Bruhl would, it's clear, literally kill for what playwrights dream of — a one-set, two-act, five-character smash hit. And lo and behold, just such a play has been delivered into his hands, written by an unknown former student at one of Bruhl's seminars. Even more conveniently, only Bruhl and the writer have read it, and the writer (Reeve) won't submit it to anyone else until he gets Bruhl's opinion of it.

It indeed seems a perfect opportunity for a desperate man, as Bruhl informs his ailing, wealthy wife (Dyan Cannon.) And so he invites the writer to his comfortable, remote home in East Hampton for a ... discussion.

'Butterfly' lacking focus, relevance

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

"BUTTERFLY" is a decrepit lust-in-the-dust melodrama with as much relevance and far less humor than "Tobacco Road." The source is a James M. Cain novel, and if the film is authentic, he must have been satirizing his other steamy works, such as "The Postman Always Rings Twice" and "Mildred Pierce." The plot is a tangle of moral corruption, seeming incest, confused parentage and general venality. Matt Cimber is credited with the writing and direction, and both lack focus. Under such conditions, you can only feel sympathy for the actors, some of them accomplished: Stacy Keach, Lois Nettleton, Edward Albert, James Franciscus. Orson Welles makes an appearance as a burlesque-theater judge. Pia Zadora, acclaimed the new star of the year by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association, protrays the object of massive amounts of passion. Neither her acting nor her plastic-doll face are equal to the challenge. Rated R, nudity and sex.

Motion Picture Association of America rating definitions:

G — General audiences. All ages admitted.

Engelbert Humperdinck picked name for easy indentification

By MORRIS WILLSON
Hearst Feature Service

How did singer Engelbert Humperdinck come up with the name Engelbert Humperdinck?

In a telephone interview from London the undisputed "King of Musical Romance," explained, "I was born Arnold Dorsey, but I decided that for my singing career I needed a name so unusual, so zany, that people would remember it and would not confuse it with anyone else.

"I chanced upon the name, Engelbert Humperdinck, who was a 19th Century German composer — the creator of the 'Hansel and Gretel' opera. And I decided that it indeed was a name that was truly different.

"After some show business success in my native England, I arrived in Las Vegas in 1968 for my debut at the Riviera Hotel. Some of the patrons wondered what an Engelbert Humperdinck was."

Enge, as he prefers to be called offstage, recalled that mutual friend Tony Zoppi, then the publicity director for the Riviera, helped educate the show business world to Humperdinck, who a year earlier had taken an old western song, "Release Me," and used it to knock the Beatles out of the No. 1 position on the charts. "Release Me" now has sold more than 8 million records.

His audiences and fan clubs are very important to Enge, and he admits that he never refuses an autograph. There are now more than 150 fan club chapters; memberships ranging from 300 per chapter upwards.

Many young women sitting near the stage used to throw panties onto the stage. "But the era of panty-throwing demonstrations is over now," Enge confided, "for those little girls have grown up — and now they throw hotel room keys.

"But I don't take the keys or the mushy letters seriously," Enge said. "The entire thing is just a part of the business — though, of course, I am flattered by it all."

Music concert to be Sunday

Sue Arnold

Emilia Simone

The second concert in The Friends of Music concert season will be held at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at First Christian Church, 1301 Louisiana Ave. Sunday's performance is a special "Guest Artist" concert featuring "Music for Two Voices" presented by soprano Emilia Simone and mezzo-soprano Sue Arnold, accompanied by pianist Darryl Knapp.

Ms. Simone's stage credits include appearances in New York City in leading roles with the Bronx Opera Company and Bel Canto Opera. She has toured throughout Europe as Maria in Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story."

Ms. Simone currently resides in Lubbock, where she is assistant professor of voice at Texas Tech University. While in Midland, Ms. Simone also will perform at the First United Methodist Church, corner of Main Street and Illinois Avenue, at 8 p.m. Friday when the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale presents Johannes Brahms' "Ein Deutsches Requiem." Other featured soloist for the chorale's performance will be William Rhodes of Austin.

Ms. Arnold is known to Midland audiences for her solo concert of Sacred Music Recital and her solos in the Christmas presentation of Handel's "Messiah."

Currently professor of voice at Texas Tech, Ms. Arnold is a former soloist with Robert Shaw. She has sung under the direction of Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland and Pierre Boulez.

Sunday's program will be an all duet concert featuring music for two voices by Antonio Vivaldi, Henry Purcell and Mendelssohn.

NEW YORK (AP) — Television, the great humbler, has drawn the lofty Jane Fonda into its web of mediocrity. Her film, "9 To 5," comes to ABC tonight as a limited TV series. And it's limited both in future and content.

At least Miss Fonda has managed to avoid being disgraced on the air. Although she starred in the movie with Dolly Parton and Lily Tomlin, Miss Fonda is only executive producer for the TV show.

Miss Fonda, known for her political activism, compassionate causes and thematic movies like "The China Syndrome," said the impact of the miniseries "Roots" convinced her that TV was the most effective medium for raising issues and making waves. "9 To 5" is her first foray into mumbo-jumbo land, and the lessons she learns may help her next time.

Although she considers the sitcom "9 To 5" "issue-oriented," the subjects raised in the first two episodes are merely mental Muzak. The movie was a fluffy piece of nonsense that turned a plausible situation into a mish-mash of banality and silliness. The TV show takes a more dignified tact, but vapidity isn't the essence of good situation comedy either.

Capitalizing on the dominant influence of women watching prime time, ABC has taken three female secretaries and permitted them to give their unprincipled, lame-brain boss a comeuppance each week. It brings to mind how the hyperactive Gale Storm would outwit her father and Mr. Honeywell in "My Little Margie."

Rita Moreno brings a real vitality to Violet, the strong-willed, extremely competent head of the secretarial pool. This was Miss Tomlin's role in the movie. If this were a better world, Violet would be at the office controls. But, instead, she and her two office compatriots, played by Valerie Curtin and Rachel Dennison, are forced to scramble under the inequitable thumb of boss Franklin Hart (Jeffrey Tambor).

Miss Curtin plays the less secure Judy Bernly, the movie role that made Miss Fonda look like a spinster. ABC couldn't get Miss Parton to play the role of Hart's chesty secretary, so they went for her genes instead. Miss Dennison is Miss Parton's younger sister, and their common link has nothing to do with acting ability.

"9 To 5" provides another example of Hollywood's condescension toward business. One of America's major exports into Japan is television programming, so it's no wonder the Japanese have been out-trading us. From what they see, they must think American business is slipshod and run by a bunch of clods.

Court reverses gas price decision

DENVER (AP) — A federal appeals court here has reversed a ruling against a price escalation clause in a Northern Utilities Inc. contract with its Wyoming natural gas suppliers.

That ruling could mean natural gas consumers in Wyoming won't get refunds totaling more than $75 million that were ordered two years ago by a lower court ruling.

On Tuesday the 10th Circuit Court ordered the case sent back to a U.S. District Court in Wyoming for further proceedings.

The Kerr-McGee Corp., Amoco Production Co., and Phillips Petroleum Co., had appealed the district court ruling against the escalation clause. Those companies own interests in the Beaver Creek field in Wyoming and supply natural gas to Northern.

At issue was a paragraph added to 1970 renewal contracts between Northern and the three producers. The paragraph provides for an increase in the gas price to be triggered by a rise in the price of gas sold by any producer in the area.

Gas prices were raised under that clause in 1976, resulting in lawsuits between Northern and the producers.

The district court judge voided the price-escalator paragraph because he said it would result in prices beyond Northern's contemplation at the time the contract was executed.

The judge concluded that enforcement of the price escalator clause was unconscionable and contrary to public policy.

The appeals court, however, found that the clause was not contrary to the federal Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 nor did it violate Wyoming's public policy.

"The fact that prices under intrastate gas contracts containing indefinite price escalator clauses are high and will continue to rise does not mean that these contracts are against federal public policy," the appeals court wrote.

"However, when Congress designed the NGPA the balance Congress struck already took into account the conflicting interests of producers and consumers," the appeals court found.

The appeals court noted that "failure of the Wyoming Legisture to alter the policy expressed by the NGPA clearly indicates that indefinite price escalation provisions are not against the public policy of the state of Wyoming."

The trial court's finding that sharp price increases were not contemplated by Northern at the time of contracting "cannot support a determination of unconscionability under Wyoming law," the appeals court ruled.

"Northern was not compelled to enter into the contract and clearly believed the contract terms were to its advantage..." the appeals court noted.

"In this case, the rise in gas prices borne by the consumer as the result of this contract ... is not contrary to either federal or Wyoming public policy, nor is it the result of unconscionability," the appeals court concluded.

In a November 1980 ruling, U.S. District Judge Clarence Brimmer said the price escalation clause was unconscionable and against public policy. He ordered the three gas suppliers to refund $75 million to Northern Utilities for the eventual benefit of consumers in Riverton, Lander, Laramie and Casper.

Gulf postpones office

CASPER, Wyo. (AP) — Gulf Oil Corp. says it will postpone construction of a new office building in Casper "at this time" because of declining world prices for crude oil.

However, Gulf spokesman Fred Meurer said Gulf does not plan any decreases in its current workforce of about 300 and still plans an expansion in Casper in the future.

Gulf had planned to start construction this spring on a 150,000-square foot office building and expand it later as part of a plan to increase its workforce to about 500 by 1990.

Casper officials had predicted the building would be one of Casper's largest office buildings. By comparison, the new Herschler State Office Building in Cheyenne would be about 280,000 square feet.

Meurer said Gulf had already called for bids on the building and had planned to award a contract next month.

Wallop says wilderness bill good one for comment

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Wyoming Sen. Malcolm Wallop says the proposed Wyoming Wilderness Act of 1982 is a good "foundation proposal" for public comment, but he has stopped short of saying he is "comfortable" with the measure.

He told reporters in his weekly telephone news conference from Washington, D.C., he has no personal reservations about the legislation he is co-sponsoring with the rest of the state's congressional delegation.

The measure would bar oil and gas leasing in wilderness areas and create new wilderness areas totaling about 480,000 acres. It also would open 3.6 million acres of national forest land to multiple use. A public hearing on the bill is scheduled for April 30 in Casper.

Wallop said the state's congressional delegation and Gov. Ed Herschler's office "generally agree" on the measure.

"What we have said is that this is the foundation proposal, and that now is the time for people who want more or less, or boundary changes or other changes in the bill to come forward."

But rather than being comfortable with the measure now, Wallop said he is "very comfortable with the proposal that the public can at last comment on."

The Wyoming Republican, who is seeking his second term this year, said the congressional delegation is seeking public comment from all perspectives on the bill as written.

"It depends on the arguments they make and other things and how it looks when we go to trying to push its passage here," Wallop said.

"I'm comfortable we have done it. It's long overdue. I think it was a good job and is clearly a starting point that provides a lot of protection for unprotected country now existing in Wyoming," he said.

Wallop also said he expects hearings in southwestern Wyoming next month on a bill he's co-sponsoring with Colorado Sen. William Armstrong to aid communities suffering impact from energy development.

According to Wallop, the legislation would provide for companies causing the impact to negotiate aid directly with communities affected and immediately write off that financial help on taxes.

"It doesn't put Wyoming or Colorado or any other state in competition with some chairman from the heavy coal states of the East or something to vie for a formula," he said.

"It puts the communities and the companies causing the impact directly into conversation with each other, and they establish the need and directly go forward to satisfy that need and write it off against taxes, rather than having a straight federal appropriation."

Conservationists blast Reagan solar, nuclear policies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's proposals to sharply curtail spending on solar energy research and conservation constitute a "brutal, comprehensive assault on the environment," critics charge.

Opponents of the proposed budget cuts held an outdoor news conference here Wednesday and charged also that Reagan's energy plan would make "virtually inevitable the widespread proliferation of nuclear weapons."

The news conference underscored growing indications that the president's position on shifting the nation's energy policy toward nuclear power and away from solar energy and conservation efforts faces strong congressional opposition.

Reagan's 1983 fiscal year budget would eliminate 21 energy programs, such as home weatherization programs for low-income families, and would limit research funds for solar energy to $83 million. Energy conservation programs would be cut to $18 million.

Spending for nuclear programs would be set at $1.1 billion. The bulk of nuclear energy research — $577 million — would go for breeder reactor programs and for disposing of nuclear waste.

Rep. Richard Ottinger, D-N.Y., and two Northeastern Republicans, Reps. Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island, and Jim Jeffords of Vermont, announced jointly that 170 House members have signed a resolution "endorsing a balanced energy policy."

Ottinger said the resolution was 'yet one more indication that Congress will reject the president's energy budget proposal and once again formulate its own response.'"

Denis Hayes, former director of the Solar Energy Research Institute, called Reagan's energy program another example of a "federal government run amok."

"The administration has embarked upon an energy program that will rape the lands, devastate the poor, ravage the economy and make virtually inevitable the widespread proliferation of nuclear weapons," he said.

Richard Munson, director of Solar Lobby, said if Reagan has his way "we will spend more on the military bands than on all solar and conservation efforts."

Synfuels plant plans abandoned

DOUGLAS, Wyo. (AP) — WyCoalGas Inc. President Ray Newsom says the company has abandoned its plans to build a $3.5 billion coal gasification plant near here because the project is too risky.

"In the forseeable future, the project is just too risky," he said at the company's Houston, Texas headquarters.

He added that if WyCoalGas tries another synthetic fuel project, it won't be a coal gasification project like the one planned for Converse County.

Newsom said the company is dropping the huge project for four reasons. He cited escalating plant costs, high interest rates, inflation and substantial changes in world energy prices.

Plans for the coal gasification plant were announced by the Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co. subsidiary in 1980. It was originally expected to cost about $2.3 billion but that figure rose rapidly because of inflation and rising interest rates.

But an irrigator who would have shared water from LaPrele Reservoir with the proposed plant said area ranchers were "elated" at the news.

Richard Cross, a board member of the Powder River Basin Resource Council, said irrigators below the dam southwest of Douglas feared WyCoalGas could have used as much as 75 percent of the stored water. He said irrigators above the dam feared the company would hold irrigators strictly to use of one acre-foot from the LaPrele Creek per 70 acres.

In a dry winter like last year's, he said, WyCoalGas' use of up to 2,500 acre-feet during the winter and then another 25 percent of storage later could have harmed irrigators.
