For a few seconds, Davis soared, wings flapping, then pulled his parachute ripcord. Suddenly he plunged earthward at sickening speed, the parachute fouled on the bat wings. A moment later, his shattered body, face half buried in the ground, lay on the field, the wreckage of his wings and parachute draped over him.

MYSTERIES OF LIFE.

The DARK BLOND

By CARLETON KENDRICK

BEGIN HERE TODAY

MILICENT GRAVES, secretary to GEORGE DRIMGOLD, finds her employer in his office dead in a panic she rushes away and registers at a hotel under an assumed name.

JARVIS HAPP, distinguished-looking stranger, recognizes Millicent and offers to help her. He sends her to a beauty parlor where she is transformed into a brunet. Happ takes her home, introducing her as his secretary. His son, NORMAN HAPP, warns Millicent against his stepbrother, ROBERT CAISE, and tells her a mysterious woman in black ermine has some power over his stepmother.

Millicent falls asleep and wakes to find a note under her door reading: "The woman in black ermine is here." Millicent dresses, sees the woman in black drive away and follows in Robert Caise's car, but runs out of gas. She goes to the chauffeur's quarters and finds him dead.

Next morning a detective questions Millicent. She throws the keys to Robert Caise's car into the fountain pool and a moment later sees Mrs. Happ watching her.

CHAPTER XVIII

The steps Millicent had heard in the corridor went on, past her door. Millicent clung to the window ledge.

Mrs. Happ stared up at her, the diamond-hard eyes seeming to see through the girl's very soul. "Good morning," she said. "I presume you've heard the tragic news."

Millicent nodded. For the life of her, words would not come. Had Mrs. Happ seen her toss that key container into the pool?

"It's so dreadful," Mrs. Happ said. "Harry was an excellent chauffeur. I was really very much attached to him, although he worked mostly for my husband. Are you dressed?"

"I'm dressing," Millicent said.

"I thought that you would be fatigued, so I told them not to call you for breakfast, but the officers are here now, making an investigation. They think some hold-up man must have been lying in wait for Harry when he entered his room. It's really most tragic. But get your clothes on, my dear, and have some breakfast. Then I want to talk with you."

Millicent nodded, slid back from the window and dropped into a chair.

There was something about Mrs. Happ and her son, Robert, that filled Millicent with apprehension. They seemed so cold-blooded, so utterly merciless, and they seemed to crop up so unexpectedly. She could almost have sworn there was no one in sight when she started to toss that key container into the pool. Yet, Mrs. Happ must have been standing there all the time.

Millicent faced herself in the mirror, stared appraisingly at her reflection, then decided that she was going to keep her colors flying bravely to the end. She slipped out of her clothes, stepped into a hot shower, finished with needle-like sprays of cold water tingling the healthy young skin of her shapely body. She rubbed herself into a glow with a rough towel and suddenly felt infinitely better.

She dressed hastily, descended the stairs and found Mrs. Eaton waiting for her at the table.

"Good morning," Mrs. Eaton said in her colorless voice. "I presume you will have but little appetite this morning. You've heard what's happened. The officers are all back in the room now, taking photographs and measurements. They'll remove the body presently."

"Yes," Millicent said. "I heard what happened. It's horrible. But I have an appetite just the same. After all, you know, I only knew him slightly."

Millicent drew out a chair at the table and, as she did so, a door opened and a dark-haired young woman with clear gray eyes that flashed in quick appraisal entered the room.

Mrs. Eaton said tensely. "I don't think you two have met. This is Millicent Graves—Miss Duchene. Miss Graves is Mr. Jarvis Happ's new secretary, and this, Miss Graves, is Vera Duchene, the personal maid and assistant to Mrs. Happ."

Millicent was curious about this maid. She bowed and said, "I'm very pleased to meet you. Have you breakfasted?"

"Yes," Millicent said. "I heard it when the body was discovered."

"No," she said, "and I'm ravenous."

She sat down and reached for the electric coffee percolator which was bubbling on the table.

"Did you," asked Mrs. Eaton, "hear about what happened?"

"Oh, yes," Vera Duchene said lightly, almost breezily. "I heard it when the body was discovered."

"Where were you?"

"With friends."

"What time did you return here?"

"Sometime late last night."

"How late?"

"Really, I couldn't say."

"Was it as late as midnight?"

"It may have been. I didn't look at my watch."

"Did you go to sleep at once?"

"Oh, yes."

"Where do you sleep?"

"In a room in the back of the house."

"Over the garage, isn't it?"

"I believe so; yes."

"You should, then, have heard a shot if it had been fired while you were in your room."

Vera Duchene poured more coffee and said, with what Millicent thought was insane stupidity, "What sort of a shot?"

"A pistol shot—a shot fired from an automatic."

"I don't waken very easily," Miss Duchene said. "Was he shot with an automatic?"

"Yes."

"Well, I didn't hear anything."

"Did you hear the garage door being opened? Did you hear the sound of a car leaving the garage?"

"No."

"I'm afraid I'll have to ask you to check up on the time you returned."

"Perhaps my friends will know."

"You might give me their names."

She stared at him with the impudence which only a pretty woman dares to show to a masculine official.

"And again," she said, "I might not. If you want me to find out, I'll find out—that is, if my friends know—but I wouldn't care to tell you who they are—not now at any rate."

The officer said slowly, "Well, there's probably no question but what it was a stick-up man or a prowler that did the job, but what we can't find out is why Harry Felding should have been out

"No," she said, "and I'm ravenous."

She sat down and reached for the electric coffee percolator which was bubbling on the table.

"Did you," asked Mrs. Eaton, "hear about what happened?"

Millicent buttered a piece of toast. "I'm afraid," she said, "I slept quite late this morning. I was very tired. I had a hard day yesterday."

"I heard that you came here yesterday," Miss Duchene said. "I wasn't here last night, you know."

Millicent raised polite eyebrows.

"No," Miss Duchene went on. "I was off for the evening. I didn't get in until early this morning. . . . She checked herself hastily and said, "until very late."

At that moment the door opened, and the officer who had interrogated Millicent entered the room, nodded to Mrs. Eaton and, turning toward Vera Duchene, said, "You're Vera Duchene?"

Miss Duchene raised her gray, appraising eyes to the officer, looked him over with cool speculation.

"Yes," she said, breaking off a piece of toast.

"How long have you been here?"

"About six months."

"You knew Harry Felding?"

"Of course."

"Did you know he was dead?"

"I heard it this morning, yes."

"You weren't here last night?"

"Not in the evening. It was my night off."

"Where were you?"

The officer said slowly, "Well, there's probably no question but what it was a stick-up man or a prowler that did the job, but what we can't find out is why Harry Felding should have been out driving Bob Caie's car."

"Was he driving Caie's car?"

"Yes. He started out with it, ran out of gasoline and walked back."

"Doesn't Mr. Happ know?"

"No, he can give us no information that is of any assistance."

"If he couldn't," Miss Duchene said, "it's a cinch I can't."

A stolid-faced cook appeared with soft-boiled eggs and some fried bacon. Millicent ate the food ravenously. Miss Duchene toyed with toast and coffee, let her eyes appraise the officer.

"My," she said, "but you're big and strong! Tell me, do you have to be a good pistol shot in order to be an officer?"

"You certainly do," he said. "These days they make you practice. They send you to a rookie school."

"It must be fascinating."

He smiled at her and said, "Well, it has its advantages."

"You going to be back here," she asked, "making more investigations?"

"I might arrange to come," he told her.

Her eyes flickered up to his, then dropped back to the coffee cup.

"And you didn't hear anything?" he asked.

"Not a thing," she said.

He left the room, Miss Duchene finished her breakfast, smiled across at Millicent and said, "I hope you'll like it here, but I don't think you will."

"No?" Millicent commented noncommittally.

"Has Bob Caie tried his particular brand of technique yet?" Vera Duchene inquired.

"I don't know," Millicent laughed. "It depends on what you mean by his particular brand of technique."

"He's good," Vera Duchene remarked, pushing her chair back from the table. "Well, if I'm going to keep my girlish figure I'd better break away from the food."

Millicent finished her breakfast, kept thinking over Miss Duchene's answers to the officers' questions. Millicent was certain Miss Duchene had started so say that she hadn't returned home until an early hour of the morning. Something had caused her to change her statement and she had lied to the officer. Why? Her room was over the garage. If she was in her room she must have heard the doors open and close.

Millicent made up her mind she would ask Miss Duchene some questions on her own account.

She found the back stairs, climbed them, and had no difficulty locating the room over the garage.

The door was slightly ajar. Millicent pushed it open and said, "May I come in?"

Miss Duchene had been standing in front of a mirror. Now she whirled toward a closet door and flung something black into the

Babson Sees U. S. in Headlong Rush Toward Inflation

'Days of '49' Will Live Again at Exposition

Just as in the days when gold-mad prospectors rushed to California in '49, a mining camp village is to rise in San Diego's Balboa Park. As an exhibit in the California Pacific International Exposition this summer, the "Golden Gulch," shown in this artist's sketch, will be reached by visitors by stagecoach and mule-back. Real gold will be mined, and the rough-and-tumble life of the early gold...

never has been any nation which has spent, for long, more than it took in without destroying its currency! Why do we think we can avoid the same catastrophe? DESTRUCTION OF CURRENCY MEANS INFLATION

How does an unbalanced budget bring about the destruction of currency? First, the conservative people, who pay the taxes, who save, and who lend the government money, begin to be afraid (as many are rapidly becoming today) that the budget can never be balanced and that they will never be paid what is legitimately due them. This fear spreads wider and wider until finally the government can no longer borrow money from the people to meet its running expenses and to support its unemployed. Just when this point will be reached it is impossible to predict — but I can say very definitely that we will reach that point sooner or later if our government does not "crack down" on spending!

In the end, the government has to resort to printing paper money without proper backing. As the people lose faith in this paper currency, there is a mad scramble to buy goods, homes, and farms. Prices shoot sky-high. Dollar bills are printed by the trillion. Government relief money of $50 per month may not even buy a loaf of bread. We would then pass through a period of misery and starvation such as this country manly possible to support them! If spending continues at the present rate and government credit is thus destroyed, then who will pay the grocer's bill for those who are without jobs? Many of my readers contend that the morale of our unemployed must be maintained by "making" work for them and paying them a fair wage, or they will run riot and do injury to our present system of government. Let those readers imagine what a threat these 23,000,000 public wards will be when Uncle Sam can no longer borrow to pay for their food, clothes, and shelter!

VITAL NEED FOR PEOPLE'S LOBBY

Remember that the government's six-billion-a-year spending program has created and is creating a strong selfish group of vested interests. This is the real danger! Right down in Washington today there are eight or ten powerful blocs lobbying, bullying, and threatening our Congressmen to increase these huge pork-barrel expenditures. These blocs will be there next year, the year after and the year after that struggling just as hard as they are today for over-increasing appropriations for their own selfish interests. Congressmen are supposed to be representing the people. But they are not voting as the majority want them to vote for the people have no lobby. As a result the people are not running the country! Can anything be done? Yes! We can fight fire with fire. We, too, can bully and threaten and lobby our Congressmen. We are over 100,000,000 strong. We can send letters and telegrams demanding that they vote down increased expenditures. We MUST force them to vote as we want them to vote, or else WE FACE DISASTER in the not too distant future!

Business, as registered by the Babsonchart, stands at 1 per cent above a year ago, but is still 19 per cent below normal. (Copyright — 1935 — Publishers Financial Bureau)

Kit's a Wife, It's News to Her

If she's already married, it certainly has slipped Katherine "Kit" Klein's mind. The national women's skating champion, announcing her engagement to Dr. Thomas Outland of Scrre, Pa., was confronted with the statement of Philip Nicholas, boxer and her ex-trainer, that they married in 1933 and still are man and wife. "Kit," shown here with Nicholas while in training, says they were "sort of engaged," but never wed. Nicholas now is a Sandusky, O., night club operator.

THERE'S EVERY REASON why you'll want a new FORD V-8

POWER

The Ford V-8 engine has proved its superiority beyond question. It assures you of reserve power, instantly. At 50 to 60 miles per hour this engine is actually running at ease. The Ford is the only car under $2000 that gives you V-8 performance.

SAFETY

The new Ford V-8 gives you a welded, one-piece, all-steel body. Safety glass all around in all models at no extra cost. New safety-pressure brakes. Transverse springs, lower center of gravity and air-balloon tires give greater safety on curves.

ROOMINESS

It's longer, wider and roomier. Seat-widths are increased from 15 to 35 inches. There is ample leg room front and rear. The new angular gear-shift lever permits three-to sit in the front seat with comfort. Luggage space in all closed models.

COMFORT

"Front Seat Comfort" for back seat passengers—that's the result of the new "Full-floating Springs" with "Comfort Zone Seating." All seats are now cradled between the springs, and every passenger rides in the "Comfort Zone."

BEAUTY

Outside and inside the new Ford V-8 strikes a new note in modernity and beauty. Gracefully streamlined body—with a choice of attractive body colors in durable baked enamel. Newly designed, luxurious interiors, with quality upholstery.

ECONOMY

The new Ford V-8 costs less to operate than any Ford ever built.

CHURCH ANNOUNCEMENTS

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Dr. John Angus MacMillan,
Minister

Did you ever stop to think how dependent you are? Even a hermit can't really live alone. Self reliance is a splendid thing—but it has its limitations. Some folks seem to think that they are so self reliant that they can get along without God. "Not Good If Detached"—Sunday morning's sermon—will throw the spotlight of fact upon a few things we need to think about along this line. There will be good music. Come at 11 o'clock.

"Use Your Own Judgment" will be the title of the vesper address—at 5 p. m.

Junior church at 11 o'clock. Sunday school begins at 9:45 a. m.

Wednesday evening there will be "Church Night" dinner served by the women of the church, followed by a report of church groups—and entertainment. There will be something to eat, something to think about and something to enjoy. Don't miss it. And don't forget the time—Wednesday evening, April 10.

Doctors To Testify
Some Amarillo doctors will be introduced to give medical testimony, E. T. "Dusty" Miller, defense counsel, said yesterday. Defense counsel yesterday morning battered at the testimony of L. D. Lewis, the witness whose appearance Tuesday created a sensation. Lewis testified he did not know the Hammons and never had been in their home. He also explained his secret departure from Amarillo, January 15.

Raymond Hoggard, of Giles, underwent a major operation in a local hospital Monday. Yesterday afternoon he was reported "resting as well as could be expected". Mrs. N. A. Hightower and son, Harold, and Mrs. W. T. Hightower are visitors in Amarillo today.

Mrs. E. H. Whittington has gone to Holland for a visit with her mother, Mrs. S. M. Williams. Her sister, Mrs. Dave Cecil, of Amarillo, accompanied Mrs. Whittington for the visit.

Newlin Students Broadcast Today

This afternoon at 5:30 o'clock, a number of Newlin school students will broadcast a musical program over radio station KGRS in Amarillo. C. A. Wimberly, principal of the Newlin school, will have charge of the 30-minute broadcast, made available through the courtesy of Carl G. Clift, superintendent of Potter County schools.

The program will open with "The Anvil Chorus" by the entire group of 50 or more Newlin public school students. Other numbers will include a double duet, musical reading, solo, boys chorus, rhythm band numbers and a short talk by Superintendent Clift and Principal Wimberly.

The broadcast this afternoon follows an inspection tour by the Hall County school students to the principal business houses and industries in Amarillo. Students made the trip to Amarillo in an Estelline school bus. This morning they visited the West Texas Historical museum and West Texas State Teachers College at Canyon.

Other members of the faculty making the trip to Amarillo are Miss Agnes Nelson and Miss Eula Saye.

Committee Okays Social Security

WASHINGTON, April 5.—Final and formal approval was given by the House Ways and Means Committee today to the social security bill.

Seventeen Democrats present voted for a motion to report the measure to the House, while seven Republicans voted "present."

Democrats, meeting later, deferred until later in the day a final decision on whether to ask leaders to let them bring the bill up under "gag rule."

Huckabee To Head Revival Movement

DALLAS, April 5.—A "Save Texas Centennial Religious Movement" was planned here yesterday at a meeting of delegates from the six evangelical churches of Texas. Rev. George W. Truett was the principal speaker.

Rev. R. N. Huckabee of Amarillo, who instigated the movement, which calls for statewide revival meetings next year, was elected permanent chairman. Rev. B. A. Hodges of Waco was made secretary.

Six Attempt Break From Dallas Jail

DALLAS, Apr. 5.—An attempt to liberate six prisoners of the Dallas County jail was frustrated today when Jailer Dick Warren overpowered a prisoner who attacked him with a piece of pipe.

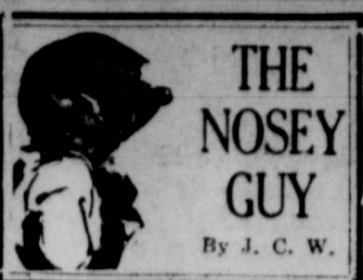

The escape attempt was made in the same cell block from which Harvey Bailey, kidnaper of Charles F. Urschel, fled two years ago.

Gilbert Sanderson, 18-year-old Dallas youth, suspected of automobile theft and robbery, tore a pipe from lavatory plumbing and slugged Warren on the head when the jailer brought his breakfast. Warren's head was badly lashed. The jailer grappled with the prisoner and swung an outer door shut, backing out.

Roy L. Brewer, manager of the Southwestern Associated Telephone Company, spent yesterday at Cheyenne, Okla., on business.

Mrs. Jack Boone is in Temple this week visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Martin.

Mf. and Mrs. J. S. Edwards and daughter, Peggy, of Hedley, were Memphis visitors yesterday.

Tomorrow, the patrons of the Memphis Independent School District will have an opportunity to select seven trustees to guide the school through the coming year. Fourteen names have been placed on the ticket, seven to be selected. The committee, selecting the 14, expressed the hope that the entire voting population of the school district will vote tomorrow and then abide by the selection made by the majority in order that Memphis may continue to have one of the best schools in the Panhandle.

Clean-up day should be set soon — the dusts having about ceased. Gardens, and flowers should have attention soon — if it will rain.

Over in Wheeler County, in the town of Shamrock, a daily has been published for a whole year — last Tuesday being the first birthday anniversary — and the people are now making remarks something like this, "Is the Texan out yet? There's a story in it I want to see", instead of the popular observation one year ago, "It won't last six months." Congratulations to the Shamrock Daily Texan's publishers.

ALLRED SPEEDS PIPELINE ACTION

GOVERNOR ALLRED yesterday sought to speed action on the gigantic pipeline project proposed from the Texas Panhandle to St. Louis and Detroit. He sent a message to the Legislature urging early passage of a bill creating a state agency to apply for Federal public works loan for the 60 million dollar project.

The Governor was spurred to action on this important undertaking by the Associated Press, possibly at the insistence of some member newspaper in the section affected. For some reason, he had failed to take the action necessary to keep the project moving along. It has dragged for some time with no one knowing the exact status of the plans.

Earlier in the week, probably because a member paper began to ask questions, the Associated Press went to Secretary Ickes and asked about the project. Ickes informed the newsman that nothing had been accomplished recently.

"Governor Allred sent a lawyer here to talk about it and I referred him to our legal staff," Ickes said. "I've had no report since."

Evidently Mr. Allred's lawyer had returned to Austin and imparted the information as to how the loan should be obtained—or, at least, how the State should go about making application for the public works loan.

The construction of such a line naturally will mean much to the Panhandle, which already is furnishing more natural gas to the world than any other section, as well as wasting more than probably all other gas producing sections combined. If the Legislature now does its part of the work, without undue delay, the proposed project should be well on its way toward realization within a few weeks.

RETIRING LAND MAY SOLVE PROBLEM

THE system whereby American government paid its farmers to grow less food, in a time when many people were having a hard time finding enough to eat, is on the verge of being dismantled, according to recent advices from Washington.

In addition, this land contributes directly to farm the necessary crop restriction will be attained through retirement of marginal land. And while any restrictive plan may look odd to people brought up in the belief that a granary can't be too full, it seems obvious that the new idea would be a good deal more logical than the old.

The Department of Agriculture hopes to kill two birds with one stone. It wants to check soil erosion as well as eliminate over-production. The retirement of marginal land offers itself as a program which can accomplish both ends.

Under present plans, approximately $1,000,000,000 of public works funds will be used to set up and finance the land retirement program.

Experts believe that millions of acres now being farmed should be withdrawn from production. In the first place, their cultivation makes them especially subject to erosion by wind and water. Deprived of its original cover, the topsoil is irreclaimably dissipated; eventually, if present trends continue unchecked, the land will be permanently worthless.

In addition, this land contributes directly to farm surpluses. It may be a hard pill to swallow, but we might as well recognize the fact that the American farmer has been producing more than he can possibly sell at a profit—has been doing it ever since the World War.

Unless his lost markets can be restored—and that, under present conditions, seems impossible—he must cut down on his production if he is to be prosperous.

The present way of meeting that situation is admittedly unsatisfactory. There is something so incongruous about paying men to raise less wheat and cotton and hogs at a time when millions of people are suffering for want of food and clothing that we can hardly expect to make this scheme permanent.

The land retirement idea looks like the answer to both problems. It calls for national planning in its best sense—a far-reaching, carefully devised plan to use our agricultural resources for the best interests of all the people.

Now that so many of our states are considering laws relative to sterilization of the unfit, particularly the mentally defective, you might like to see some of the figures concerning the distribution of mentally defective persons in various populations.

It is ordinarily believed that so-called mental deficiency represents merely a lessened amount of intelligence. You should realize, however, that there are many types of mental defects associated with various forms of physical disturbances.

There are, for example, cases in which the brain has been injured during birth, cases of accumulation of fluid in the brain, those in which the brain is smaller than normal; others in which disease has damaged the brain; some of inherited disturbances, such as Mongolian idocy and various forms of familial idocy, and cases in which glands fail to function properly, resulting in degeneration of the nervous system.

The most significant factor at present involves inheritance of such defects. Recently a special-ist analyzed groups of mental defects with a view to determining the extent to which heredity is involved. His conclusion was that there was little support for the idea that heredity plays an important role in causing mental deficiency. He feels that injury at birth is much more important as a causative factor.

Because some people have felt that the age of the parents is of considerable importance in relationship to the genius of the child, a special study was made on this point.

Figures in a survey made in Great Britain indicated that the ages of the fathers of Mongolian idiots and mentally defective children were on the average greater than those of the fathers of normal children; furthermore, that there are usually greater differences between the ages of the father and mother in the case of the mentally deficient child than in the case of the mentally sound

BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

Dropping of Belcher Case Is Smart Move, but Some NRA Attorneys Look Silly... Baruch Statement Makes Nye Wonder... Munitions Men Must Have War, Even if It's Only Against Ducks.

WASHINGTON, March 5.—Fear of old Justice Brandeis and a violent disagreement among New Deal lawyers led the government to drop the Belcher case—though it had been picked as the strongest supreme court test of NRA constitutionality.

Circumstances of the retreat are almost, though perhaps not quite, as ridiculous as the incident appears on the surface.

Stanley Reed, new solicitor general, made the decision; and persuaded Attorney General Cummings, Donald Richberg, and Roosevelt to concur with him.

The Belcher case, involving violation of wage and hour provisions under the lumber code which defense lawyers insisted were illegal along with the code itself, was due to be argued by Reed before the high court.

NRA and Justice Department lawyers had nursed it tenderly, speeding it along for what they fondly hoped would be the most complete vindication of the New Deal in the courts.

Reed took a good look at the case and said: "Hell, no!"

Sure of a Beating

The logic behind the decision was this:

The administration can count on adverse decisions from four of the nine justices any time it goes before the supreme court with a New Deal measure. To win, it must be sure of support from Hughes, Brandeis, Stone, Roberts, and Cardozo.

Brandeis is known to be violently opposed to improper delegations of power. The lumber code goes to the almost incredible extreme of permitting a code authority consisting of private individuals to allocate production among lumber manufacturers with no provision for NRA review.

Reed felt—and he was supported by Prof. Felix Frankfurter, chief apostle of Brandeis—that Brandeis would rip the code to shreds with a roar that might shake New Deal foundations.

NRA lawyers, who fought bitterly against abandonment of the case, had assumed the court would be nice enough to confine itself solely to the question of wages and hours.

But it was recalled that the court had decided the recent oil case on a point which had never been raised and that one illegal provision in a code might be used to throw the whole thing out.

child.

The idea that parents of advanced years produce more brilliant children than younger parents goes back to the ancient Greek Aristotle, who said, "Premature conjunctions produce imperfect offspring, feeble in mind and short in stature."

The majority of scientific observers today are convinced that the influence of the age of the parents, in the absence of any rare hereditary factors, is very slight. The one way in which the age of the parents may enter directly in the causation of a mental defect is the difficulty in childbirth involved with very old or very young mothers.

Memphis Owls To Bow Before Local Fans Sunday

by Harry GRAYSON

Same old muddling New York Boxing Commission. Same old threat to take what passes for an important match nowadays outside of Manhattan.

The only thing new in connection with the current heavy-weight controversy is that the challengers have slipped back to James J. Braddock.

Braddock, hauled out of the pugilistic boneyard as a filler-in in an elimination tournament, became the ranking challenger in the eyes of the New York board by thumping Art Lasky. Just why that should entitle the Jersey Mick to that distinction is what little Joe Jacobs, manager of Max Schmeling, and numerous others are trying to figure out.

Lasky had accomplished nothing out of the ordinary.

Braddock has been beaten more than a score of times since Tommy Loughran made him look like the missing persons bureau in the old Philly Phantom's last defense of the light-heavyweight leadership in the summer of 1929.

Be that as it may, the New York Boxing Commission blocks an attractive engagement by insisting that Schmeling first tackle Braddock before taking another whack at Maxie Baer.

Schmeling has earned a rematch with Baer, and undoubtedly will get it in June—at Soldiers' Field, Chicago, if not in New York.

Schmeling must be given considerable credit for his comeback after the terrific lacing he took from Baer and being outthrust by Steve Hamas.

Louis Touched by Bucks Office Magic

A second edition between Baer and Schmeling will do well financially anywhere, but the next golden ring harvest will come when—and if—the champion engages Joe Lewis, the young Detroit Negro.

In my opinion, Louis runs far more risk in charging the over-size Primo Carnera in New York in June than Baer does in giving Schmeling a second chance.

By ironing out or decisively defeating Carnera, Louis would make possible the richest ring gate since Dave Barry tolled off his famous long count.

Schmeling is sincere in his belief that he can score against Baer. Otherwise the German would not be accepting the challenger's end this late in his career. Der Moxie is well fixed.

Schmeling's courage is admirable, but most fighters believe they can win, and Baer has a bit too much of everything for the Ferocious Frankfurter.

Schmeling stopped no one of consequence in Walter Neusel and Hamas.

Humphries Says Champion Would Karyo Three Same Night

What kind of a warrior eventually will dethrone Baer? He'll have to be something more than a puncher. Baer can take it all right.

The fellow who licks Baer will have to be lightning fast—the Corbett or Tunney type.

The fighter beating Baer will have to be highly geared for a fall 15 rounds of sticking and stabbing and moving. He cannot afford to give Baer any rest periods.

Louis depends principally upon his punching, and may never bow well enough to dethrone Baer.

Until Louis clearly demonstrates his ability to take the solid punch of a puncher on what Will Gibson used to call the old potato, I will be inclined to agree with Joe Humphries, the venerable mouthpiece.

Old Joe contends that Baer would look like a florist if the three foremost contenders were pitched in there with him on the same night—distributing lilies.

Cards Bolster Deans With Farm Hands

By HARRY GRAYSON (Sports Editor, NEA Service)

TAMPA, April 5.—So Branch Rickey took the $15,000 for fat Pat Malone, and called it another good deal.

That's the only kind the baseball genius heading the St. Louis Cardinals and their vast farm system makes.

Check back painstakingly, and try to find one in which Rickey was gypped.

The Chicago Cubs chucked in Malone to boot when they purchased Catcher Jimmy O'Dea from the Red Birds' subsidiary at Columbus.

Rickey didn't want the 31-year-old Malone, who in the past has found keeping in condition irksome, but reasoned that some other outfit less well prepared would be looking for a seasoned right-hander. The New York Yankees turned out to be that club, and the $15,000 they paid for the former cavalryman swelled the amount Rickey collected for O'Dea to a fancy figure.

The St. Louis organization has done right well in sales in the past several years. Malone is the ninth athlete peddled since last fall, and it is easy to see what keeps the Cardinals' extensive string of chain stores solvent. Cincinnati paid $55,000 for First Baseman Johnny Mize. The New York Giants parted with $28,000 for Shortstop Billy Myers, and swapped him to the Reds. Cincinnati paid $20,000 each for Third Baseman Lew Riggs and Outfielder Ival Goodman.

What one of the wealthier clubs ought to do is purchase Branch Rickey. He'd like to get out of St. Louis. So would Sam Breadon and the Cardinals, for that matter.

Cards Grow 'Em Down on the Farms

St. Louis has five right-handed farm hands this spring whom Rickey says will win the 1936 National League pennant, Deans or no Deans.

They are Mays Copeland, Ray Harrell, Ed Heusser, Norbert Kleinke, and Henry Pippen.

Rickey practically could name his own price for Red Copeland, who came up from Houston with Pippen.

The Giants offered $16,000 for Nub Kleinke, who graduated from Rochester with Harrell. The Cardinals easily could collect that much or more each for Harrell and the others.

Copeland is 21, stands 6 feet, and weighs 185 pounds. Harrell is 23, stands 6 feet 1 1/4 inches, and weighs 190. Dutch Heusser is 26, stands 6 feet 1, and weighs 197. Kleinke is 23, stands 6 feet 2, and weighs 190. Pippen is 23, stands 6 feet 2, and weighs 178.

at Houston in 1934. Harrell bagged 12 and dropped 9 at Rochester. Heusser prevailed in 11 contests and ran second in 12 with a sixth-place Knoxville aggregation before shifting to Columbus in late August. Heusser chiefly was employed as a relief worker by the American Association Red Birds, copping two engagements and losing as many in that role. It was in the little world series against Toronto that the sturdy slinger from Utah demonstrated his real worth by taking two games. Kleinke turned in 19 victories against 7 defeats at Rochester. Pippen won 15 and lost 16 at Houston.

Blow 'Em Down Like Dizzy and Daffy

There were better pitching records compiled in the minors last season than those of this newest Cardinal crop, including that of Kleinke, who appears the more formidable on paper. There are few finer prospects than Copeland, Harrell, Heusser, Kleinke, and Pippen, however. More than one of them are likely to be sent out for another campaign, but the sagacious Rickey promises you that all will be back blowing down National League batsmen in 1936.

Pippen may be converted into a flycatcher. Rickey had this rangy Nebraskan in the batting cage at 8 o'clock each morning during the early training course at Braden. It was as a pitcher that B.

R. first saw the renowned Chick Hafey.

The generous Cubs tossed in stocky Lyle Tinning and Dick Ward, right-handers, in forking over a sizable sum for Tex Carleton. Ward, a 190-pound six-footer of 24, accounted for 13 victories for Los Angeles while losing only 4 decisions last semester.

Wait Until They Start Playing for Keeps

The Deans have been bumped a time or two this spring, and Wild Bill Hallahan has lived up to his nickname. But Dizzy Dean hasn't had time to be softened up by sudden riches, even though he were the type that might be, and Brother Daffy, who isn't daffy at all, revealed far too much last season to be a one-year wonder. Hallahan usually threads a needle with the ball when the boys start playing for keeps, and the Cards have another efficient left-handed citizen in Willie Walker. Dazland, Harrell, Heusser, Kleinke, and Pippen, however, are still are capable finishers.

Naturally, the Deans, Hallahan, and Walker again are expected to bear the brunt of the world champion's bowling burden, but one or more of the newest farm crop are certain to step into the front line.

The Cardinals have a way of coming up with them, and Copeland, Harrell, Heusser, Kleinke, and Pippen possess unlimited possibilities.

Battle at Farmers' Stadium Opens Season Before League

The Memphis Owls, their bow before Sunday afternoon at Stadium, in a practice the Wellington division of the Red League one week.

The battle will get 3:30 o'clock, with the line-up in a parade of players, and fans look on.

Wellington, with the Owls, started off last 7-2 victory in the past. The club gave promise power and may be expected to beat in the fight Division honors.

A full hurling staff to be ready to go in the counter, whereas Baer was only regular last week, and the assistance of Cliff Sunday, as well as the moundman whom Baer add to the stall before the season opens, if the good one.

The Owls will have hitting infield, from the outfield, as well as field. The inner circle made up of Moore on first, Brooks on Intosh at short and third—all new faces circles with the first sackers, and a strong defensive fix sons, or more than average. The In the outfield will be an old-timer and the hardest hitting, M. Flo loop; Widener, who have what it takes and center field area, who saw a little of the Owls last year.
