CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA. — Too tall, too small, too heavy, too chesty — one by one, America's astronauts are dropping out of the international space scene. Transformer down

Residents near the intersection of Illinois Avenue and Midland Drive were greeted by the explosive sound of igniting transformer oil at about 6:30 p.m. Thursday. TU Electric crews wanted to perform maintenance earlier in the day on a large transformer behind Furr's Supermarket, but merchants complained because it would have interrupted electrical service, said LuAnn Morgan, district manager for TU Electric. After business hours, TU crews approached the transformer and found it was leaking oil. When the casing was opened, a loud explosion occurred, but no one was injured. Although this caused about 2,500 homes to be without electricity, service was restored within nine minutes, she said. A new transformer has been installed.

Navy orders 'stand down' to shore up its discipline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stung by yet another embarrassing sex-related incident, the Navy is ordering everyone in the service to pause for 24 hours of "preventive maintenance" against future breakdowns in discipline.

"It's time for the Navy to take a day and stand down and take a hard look at ourselves," Adm. Mike Boorda, the chief of naval operations, said Thursday. The day of introspection will be observed on a rotating basis by units worldwide, he said.

The purpose will be to think of ways to avoid discipline problems before they happen.

Boorda's announcement came after The Washington Post reported Thursday that a drunk Navy cook sexually assaulted a female sailor aboard a commercial jet and that the 20 or so other sailors on the flight chose not to intervene.

The Post said the alleged offender was a 49-year-old chief petty officer and the victim was

The White House demands that Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary explain why she spent public funds.

O'Leary's use of tax dollars to monitor press draws fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Calling the project "clearly unacceptable," the White House demanded Thursday that Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary explain why she spent $43,500 in public funds to rate journalists and analyze news reports for unfavorable coverage of her agency.

O'Leary said she has provided "everything they've asked for" surrounding the project and scoffed at suggestions by some members of Congress that she resign over the controversy. She said she was not aware of the contract at the time it was issued.

White House chief of staff Leon Panetta said he didn't want to speculate on whether the controversy would cost O'Leary her job running the Energy Department. "I want to see what the report is first," he said.

But on Capitol Hill, some members of Congress — led by longtime Republican opponents of O'Leary and the department — called for her resignation. Several critics, including one of the Clinton administration prepares for federal shutdown

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, left, and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole discuss the GOP and President Clinton's budget proposals Thursday on Capitol Hill. The GOP and the Clinton Administration are at a standoff on the issue.

■ President summons Cabinet to discuss plans to furlow 800,000 'non-essential' federal workers, close some services.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The alarms have sounded many times before in the midst of budget fights.

Unless the Congress and White House can agree on stopgap measures, the federal government must shut down many of its services in the next few days and begin juggling funds to avoid a U.S. default on debt payments.

The difference is that this time, it's serious, the Clinton administration urged Thursday with a series of moves that began when White House press secretary Michael McCurry said that "there are no chances as this point" of avoiding a shutdown.

To drive home the message, the president summoned his Cabinet to discuss plans to furlow 800,000 "non-essential" federal workers and close some services as of next Tuesday, the day the current spending authorization runs out.

The public would feel the effect, the administration pointed out, because many routine services would not be open for business. Although Social Security benefits and other checks would go out, the government would not process new applications. Passport offices would be closed, as would much of the Environmental Protection Administration.

Even the president's travels could be endangered, McCurry said, adding that lawyers were checking whether he could spend money to go to Japan next week

Crash ends police-car theft, chase

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A Midland man accused of burglary now faces felony charges after reportedly stealing an unmarked police car Thursday and attempting to flee.

A detective with the Midland Police Department, Larry Hunnicutt, was driving a suspect, Juan Martin Cortez, 17, around the city, asking questions about unsolved burglaries and fencing stolen property.

Hunnicutt stopped his vehicle in the 2900 block of Roosevelt Avenue and got out to speak to a burglary victim who was leaving her house, according to police reports.

Cortez's right arm was handcuffed to the passenger side door, and when Hunnicutt got out of the idling vehicle, "the suspect apparently leaned over and put the car in gear," said Officer Ron Sartor.

After the handcuffed suspect drove off in the police car, Hunnicutt borrowed a vehicle from the son of the woman he was speaking to and followed the police car from a distance, Sartor said.

Alerted by radio, other officers responded to the chase, but before he could be stopped, Cortez allegedly ran a stop sign at Garfield Street and Holloway Avenue and slammed into a van carrying two people.

Cortez is believed to have damaged at least one other vehicle before hitting the

Cartoonist to retire Calvin, Hobbes from funny pages

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Calvin and Hobbes, the terrible tyke and his sidekick tiger, will be retired from the funny pages on Dec. 31.

In a letter to newspaper editors Thursday, cartoonist Bill Watterson said the decision to end the strip was not a recent or easy decision.

"I believe I've done what I can do within the constraints of daily deadlines and small panels," Watterson, 38, said in the letter. "I am eager to work at a more thoughtful pace, with fewer artistic compromises."

"Calvin and Hobbes" hit the comic pages in 1986 and entertained millions with the antics a 6-year-old boy with an overactive imagination and a not-so-stuffed tiger.

The letter featured a drawing of the two cartoon characters getting kicked out a door. The two buddies are shown clutching each other as they fly through the air, leaving a trail of stars.

In the past nine years, the pair launched countless snowball ambushes, journeyed through space, tormented a baby sitter and ran afoul of

City interviews 7 applicants for vacant seat in District 4

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Seven applicants for the vacant City Council seat were interviewed publicly by the council on Thursday. The applicants largely echoed similar sentiments about various city issues including support for the planned new airport terminal and interest in development along the loop.

"I think we have some very good applicants. It will be a tough call," said Mayor Bobby Burns.

The council will announce its decision at Tuesday's regular council meeting.

The selected individual will represent District 4 — which generally covers southwest Midland — until June 3, 1996. Although council terms are two years, replacements serve only the remainder of the unexpired period.

Ten people originally applied for the vacant position.

One, Jesus Jaquez, a Southwestern Bell Telephone employee, withdrew from the applicant pool; another, Steve Hershberger, a self-employed attorney, was disqualified because

Arafat offers condolences to Rabin's widow

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat made his first visit to Israel since the peace process began, visiting the widow of Yitzhak Rabin Thursday night to offer his condolences.

Government spokesman Uri Dromi said Arafat and his entourage arrived at the Rabin home in north Tel Aviv around 10:15 p.m. (2:15 p.m. CST) and stayed only briefly. Arafat's presence in Israel was kept secret until he returned to his home in the autonomous Gaza Strip.

Dromi quoted Arafat as telling Leah Rabin that the slain premier was "a hero of peace" and that he had lost a personal friend. "He will be sorely missed by both me and the peace process," Dromi quoted Arafat as saying.

Mrs. Rabin replied that her husband had considered Arafat "a full partner in peace" and wished him success in seeing through the process of Israeli-Palestinian conciliation, according to Israel Radio.

Rabin was assassinated during a peace rally Saturday by a religious Jewish extremist who opposed his policy of gradually handing over parts of the West Bank and Gaza to Arafat. The area is considered the heart of the biblical land of Israel.

The secrecy that shrouded the visit reflected the strong opposition in Israel to Arafat, still reviled by many Israelis. Arafat stayed away from Rabin's funeral on Monday, saying he did not want to provoke extreme right-wing Israelis.

"It was my duty because, you know, in the moment of the funeral I could not be for security matters," Arafat told reporters upon returning to Gaza after his meeting with Mrs. Rabin.

Arafat was accompanied by Ahmed Qureia and Mahmoud Abbas, two of his top aides and leading figures in the PLO's 2 1/2-year negotiations with Israel.

Dromi would not say how Arafat traveled.

It was not known when Arafat last visited Israel. According to some reports, he secretly visited Tel Aviv in the late 1960s.

He officially returned to Palestinian land in July 1994, after a 25-year exile, to take over the reins of the Palestinian authority established in Gaza and Jericho two months earlier as part of his peace deal with Rabin.

Two months ago, Rabin and Arafat signed another deal transferring most Palestinian-populated parts of the West Bank to PLO rule as well.

Dromi said Arafat initiated the visit and that it was arranged by Yossi Ginossar, a former top official in Israel's Shin Bet security agency who until recently had served as an adviser to Rabin on Arab affairs.

Israeli plainclothes police officers bring Ohad Skornick, center, into Tel Aviv's magistrate's court Thursday.

Israelis detain 2 more suspects in alleged conspiracy

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's slaying was part of a carefully planned right-wing conspiracy, Israel's police minister said Thursday. Police unearthed a cache of guns and explosives at the home of the confessed killer.

Two more religious Jewish extremists were hauled into court handcuffed and shackled, and police said they planned to charge one of them with murder. Only one suspect has been accused of murder so far — confessed gunman Yigal Amir.

"We believe there was a conspiracy by a group of people who had the infrastructure and prepared their aims quite cautiously," Police Minister Moshe Shahal said.

An aide said Shahal believes the conspirators planned to kill other public figures as well.

At least five suspects, including Amir, are being held in connection with Rabin's assassination Saturday night. Two, Dror Adani, 26, and Ohad Skornick, 23, were brought before a Tel Aviv magistrate Thursday.

Police told Judge Haya Hefetz they plan to charge Adani, a resident of the West Bank settlement of Beit Hagai, with murder and conspiracy.

Adani, a slight, bearded man with a skullcap, is "part of a group that planned and carried out the murder of the prime minister," said police investigator Nissim Daoudi. He said the group hoarded weapons and tried to kill Rabin on several occasions.

Skornick, a close friend and classmate of Amir, is accused of conspiracy.

Daoudi said police searched Amir's home and found "weaponry that befits a terror organization, including timers for bombs and grenades."

The weapons — TNT and other explosives, time fuses and a silencer — were discovered in boxes buried in the yard of the home where Amir's mother, Geula, runs a preschool, Israel Radio said. Detectives waited for hours for the children to leave before they began digging. Arms were also found in the attic.

Amir, a 25-year-old law student, insists he acted alone.

None of the suspects has been formally charged, and the government has not yet presented any proof to back up its conspiracy allegations.

Skornick's family accused the government of making arrests simply to ease public pressure.

"They're just looking for a scapegoat," said his mother, Esther. "He is not a member of any organization. He knew what we all knew — people said Rabin should be murdered. Nobody believed it."

Police are investigating links between the suspects and groups that follow the teachings of the late Meir Kahane, a virulently anti-Arab rabbi. Avishai Raviv, leader of the militant pro-Kahane group Eyal, was arrested earlier in the week.

Eyal, believed to have fewer than 20 members, has been linked to vandalism of Palestinians' cars and assaults on Arabs and human rights activists, but never before to murder.

On Thursday, vandals splashed white paint on Kahane's grave in Jerusalem.

■ Joan Johnson, executive director of D-FY-IT of Midland Inc. She touted her recommendations for the position from various community leaders including Claudia Egan, who vacated the council position.

■ James E. Radtke, employed by Lynn Durham Inc. He related his involvement and volunteerism with the police and fire departments.

■ Ronnie D. Lynch, investment officer for Norwest Investment Services Inc. He said he was seeking the position because of his "love" of Midland and desire to "contribute something back to the community."

■ Michael B. Trost, owner of Discovery Playschool. He talked about recently knocking on doors in his district to find out what the residents wanted from their representative.

In addition to the points brought up by the applicants, council members asked about their views on taxes, development, city priorities and personal disposition.

The public service of sitting on the council — which regularly meets twice monthly — is rewarded with a $25 per month stipend.

Ms. Egan vacated the District 4 seat due to personal reasons and because she was moving outside of her district.

Ms. Egan represented that district for about 3 1/2 years. She successfully ran against incumbent Tom Johnston and James E. Radtke in 1992, then ran unopposed in May 1994 for a second term.

THREAT: Panetta turns up rhetoric to a near boil

for an Asian summit.

White House chief of staff Leon Panetta turned up the rhetoric to a near boil, charging that the Republicans were putting a "gun" to the president's head by trying to force him to sign cutbacks for Medicare and across-the-board spending restraints.

"That's a form of terrorism," Panetta said. "We are not going to accept that."

That's "inflammatory" language, shot back House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., in a letter. "Instead of meeting with your Cabinet to plan a government shutdown, you should be meeting with the leadership of Congress" to reach a compromise to keep it open, the lawmakers wrote.

Meanwhile, a day after the House passed a temporary spending bill to finance government agencies through Dec. 1, its members voted 227-194 for another bill raising the debt limit to $4.967 trillion and extending federal borrowing authority through Dec. 12.

The Senate adopted the spending measure by 50-46, and the debt-raising measure on a 49-47 vote. Senators made only minor changes in the bills, and the House seemed likely to accept the measures and ship them to the White House, perhaps on Friday.

But neither bill eases the tensions with the White House, since the president has promised to veto both because they include numerous provisions that he opposes.

In an afternoon interview, Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin pessimistically surveyed the hardening positions separating the Republican Congressional leadership and the Clinton White House and concluded that the situation was more "troubling" than in previous such fights.

"I think it's probably a mistake to think of this (dispute) in the context of what's happened in the past," the Treasury secretary said, referring to temporary budget crises that were resolved with relatively little visible disruption.

"I have a concern that this is going to be more difficult than it's been," Rubin said, "when you see the magnitude of differences between ourselves and the congressional Republicans."

At a White House briefing earlier, Rubin renewed a warning on his major concern, the need for Congress to raise the ceiling on U.S. borrowing. He said he would have to take "extraordinary actions to stave off default" by next Wednesday unless Congress sends the president a "clean" bill lifting the limit.

The government is now bumping up against a $4.9 trillion limit on its debt.

Rubin dismissed a House debt ceiling proposal, passed a day earlier, as "a shortcut to default on the full faith and credit of the United States of America for the first time in our history."

He added that he could continue finding ways to use government employee trust funds temporarily to keep the government fiscally afloat "for some period of time," although he would not say how long.

NAVY: Last 'stand down' was in response to Tailhook a 23-year-old 3rd class petty officer. The Post said none of the sailors on the flight intervened other than to ask the woman if she was all right.

In San Diego, Lt. Cmdr. Bruce Cole, a Navy spokesman, said it was not true that no one intervened. "Action was taken on her behalf to stop the incident," Cole said, but he would not say what action was taken or by whom.

Boorda said he could not comment on the sexual assault case because it is under investigation by the Naval Criminal Investigative Service. But in summoning several reporters to his headquarters office in the Pentagon, the admiral made no secret of the fact that the reported incident prompted him to act.

The Post report "troubled me," Boorda said, but added that his order for a daylong "stand down" for the Navy worldwide was in response to a string of embarrassing episodes recently that reflected poorly on the Navy. Among these, he said, was the Naval Academy's announcement this week that it is investigating 22 midshipmen for alleged marijuana and LSD use. On Oct. 15 two midshipmen were arrested at a hotel where LSD, a hallucinogen, allegedly was found.

And there have been these other recent incidents:

■ A 22-year-old Navy seaman based in Okinawa is on trial there, along with two Marines, for the rape of a 12-year-old Japanese girl. The seaman, Marcus D. Gill, admitted in court Tuesday that he raped the girl after abducting her Sept. 4.

■ Navy Capt. Everett Greene, leader of a SEAL commando unit and a former head of the Navy's equal-opportunity office, was charged with having an "unduly familiar" relationship with a female subordinate. He was acquitted in a court-martial in Washington last month, but Navy Secretary John Dalton decided this week to recommend that his scheduled promotion to admiral be stopped.

All this comes four years after the Tailhook scandal of September 1991 in which drunken Navy and Marine Corps aviators at a convention in Las Vegas groped and sexually harassed more than two dozen female colleagues.

The last time the Navy called a service-wide "stand down" was in 1992 in response to Tailhook. During a "stand down," normal duties are suspended to focus on a particular problem, such as a rash of accidents.

Boorda said he saw no reason to impose any new or tougher behavior standards or regulations, but wanted every sailor to think about how to stay out of trouble.

"Most of what we are talking about is common sense," he said.

As an example of the "preventive maintenance" he thinks is needed, Boorda cited the "buddy system" for sailors on liberty at foreign ports in which sailors go ashore with a friend so that help is available if needed.

Boorda said he saw a pattern of alcohol-related behavior problems. "That will definitely be a focus of what we talk about" on the service-wide day of reflection, he said.

Boorda stressed that he believes the vast majority — "99.99-something percent" — of people in the Navy do not get in trouble off ship or station. Still, he said, the percentage who do is "too darned big and I want to make it smaller."

Asked why the Navy continues to find itself mired in embarrassing behavioral problems; often involving alcohol use and sexual harassment or assault, even after the Tailhook episode, Boorda struggled to avoid sounding defensive.

"I don't want to make excuses for the Navy," he said, but added that because there are 433,000 people on active duty in the Navy, "there are going to be a few people who don't get the word" on what is unacceptable behavior.

O'LEARY: Ranking of journalists sparks furor journalists rated, described the rankings as a Nixon-like "enemies list."

Speaking by telephone to three reporters late Thursday, O'Leary said the contract had been mischaracterized. "This was a simple effort to analyze the way the department disseminated its messages. Nothing more," she said.

Asked whether she considered resigning, the secretary replied, "Of course not."

O'Leary said the decision to conduct the media study was made in the department's public affairs office without her direct knowledge. She said she saw two of the reports and after that concluded that the information "is not extremely valuable."

One Democratic senator said O'Leary, already under fire for her frequent travel at public expense, should reimburse taxpayers.

Earlier, O'Leary, who was traveling in Baton Rouge, La., said she didn't ask for an evaluation of reporters but for an analysis of news coverage. She said it would have cost the department $170,000 to do the job itself.

She said she told Panetta on Thursday morning, "There's no enemies list, no gumshoes, no investigators."

The Energy Department hired a company that conducts media analyses to scrutinize hundreds of articles and dozens of reporters' stories each month, from December 1994 through August 1995, on issues from nuclear waste to O'Leary's reputation.

The Carma International service scored reporters, politicians, newspapers and others on a scale of 0 to 100, with zero denoting the most unfavorable content, 50 a neutral reading and 100 most favorable.

Carma President Albert Barr said the goal wasn't to rate journalists' attitudes, but to examine news coverage.

"If a journalist on our list scores an unfavorable rating, it doesn't mean that journalist is unfavorably disposed to that client," he explained. "It doesn't mean you have a personal bias against that company."

The Wall Street Journal published a story Thursday on the issue after the Energy Department supplied copies of reports for April and July. The DOE then made all the monthly reports available, including graphics and pie charts on negative vs. positive stories, editorials and overall trends. The reports also highlight quotes, and rank journalists, newspapers and politicians in "top 25" lists — favorable, unfavorable and neutral. In July, President Clinton got a 47 ranking on the "neutral" list.

The July report gave H. Josef Hebert of The Associated Press a 30.8 score, indicating his articles were the least favorable. That occurred after he wrote about allegations that oversight at DOE nuclear weapons facilities was sloppy and that the health effects of radiation exposure had been underestimated. In a story on secret government radiation tests during the Cold War, Hebert reported that there were still "serious deficiencies" in the way the government protects the rights of participants in human experiments.

Jonathan Wolman, AP's bureau chief in Washington, said, "We don't design our coverage to curry favor at the Energy Department. We're proud of Hebert's reporting on energy and environmental issues."

The rankings fluctuate. In December 1994, for example, Hebert's rating was 55.0.

"I have always tried to cover the Energy Department — or any agency for that matter — in a fair and evenhanded manner, and I think my stories reflect that," Hebert said.

The Wall Street Journal didn't appear in the reports.

Las Vegas Review-Journal reporter Tony Batt, based in Washington, frequently writes about DOE's plans to build a high-level nuclear waste dump in Nevada. He scored 56 in July.

"The more I think about it, the more I think it's reprehensible that the Energy Department would use taxpayer dollars to fund a study that results in something comparable to Nixon's enemies list," he said.

The White House said O'Leary would be asked for a full accounting of the project. "On the face of it...it's clearly unacceptable," press secretary Mike McCurry said.

A senior White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the harsh language used by Panetta and others was intended as a warning to other agencies, not necessarily as an indication O'Leary would be dismissed. A final decision would be made on her status after Panetta got her report today, the official said.

van. The driver of the van, Billy Nathan Walker, 57, and his passenger, Robert Segovia, suffered injuries in the accident, but none of the injuries were severe, according to police reports.

Cortez was treated for injuries and returned to the Midland Central Detention Center.

Cortez is in jail on three burglary charges and a minor-in-possession of alcohol charge. Bond on the burglary charges is $30,000; bond on the alcohol charge is $250. He now faces felony charges of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and escape that results in injuries, a third-degree felony; bond is $20,000. Had Walker and Segovia's injuries been worse, this charge could be a first-degree felony, Sartor said.

Police have decided not to file traffic charges for the accident because it could be several years before the suspect could be released and pay them, Sartor said.

No damage estimates have been released in the accident. The investigation into Cortez's previous activities is continuing, according to police reports.

CALVIN: Cartoonist to discontinue strip

(From 1A)

Calvin's patient parents.

"Calvin and Hobbes" is distributed internationally to nearly 2,400 newspapers. More than 23 million copies of books based on the cartoon are in print. All 13 collections were million-dollar sellers in their first year.

In his letter, Watterson said he had not decided on what he will do next.

Lee Salem, editorial director at the Universal Press Syndicate in Kansas City, said that after Dec. 31, the company will not provide reruns of the strip to newspapers the way it did when Watterson took a nine-month leave of absence in 1991 and again last year.

Salem said two "Calvin and Hobbes" book collections will be released next year. The books include comic strips that already have appeared in newspapers.

Beyond that, Salem said Universal Press does not know if Watterson will produce new books or other materials.

"We hope he'll come up with something we can use in the market," Salem said, "but we don't know what the market will be."

The reclusive cartoonist has refused to be interviewed and will not reveal where he lives.

McNamara meets with Vietnamese counterpart

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — When former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara met the enemy's leading strategist Thursday, he raised a question he'd saved for 30 years: What really happened in the Tonkin Gulf on Aug. 4, 1964?

"Absolutely nothing," replied retired Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap.

Both sides agree that North Vietnam attacked a U.S. Navy ship in the gulf on Aug. 2 as it cruised close to shore. But it was an alleged second attack two days later that led to the first U.S. bombing raid on the North and propelled America deep into war.

Many U.S. historians have long believed either that the Johnson administration fabricated the second attack to win congressional support for widening the war, or that the White House had only flimsy evidence of a real attack.

McNamara was Johnson's secretary of defense at the time, but even he admitted Thursday that the administration may have made "serious misjudgments."

For McNamara, Giap's word was the clincher.

"It's a pretty damned good source," he said after the meeting.

As defense secretary from 1961-68 under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, McNamara was one of the leading proponents of U.S. support for South Vietnam against the Communist North. But he left office convinced the war was doomed to failure, he says, revealing his change of heart in memoirs published this year.

The 85-year-old Giap, wearing his olive green uniform with four gold stars on his shoulder, greeted him with an understatement: "I heard about you long ago."

McNamara laughed. "I heard about YOU long ago," he rejoined.

Then they talked for more than an hour, with McNamara frequently leaning forward and jabbing his finger for emphasis as he talked about the lessons of history.

McNamara, 79, emerged from the meeting describing it as extraordinary and saying he was struck by the lack of hostility.

Former U.S. Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, left, who helped direct America's war with Vietnamese General Vo Nguyen Giap, right, commander of the North Vietnamese Army, in Hanoi Thursday.

McNamara came to Hanoi for the first time to ask the Vietnamese to take part in a conference of top Vietnam War decision-makers. The New York-based Council on Foreign Relations, which is organizing the gathering, says it would be an opportunity to share archival materials and correct the historical record.

"You lost ... 3,200,000 people," McNamara told Giap. "We lost 58,000." He said the conference would help "ensure that our nations and other nations learn how to avoid such conflicts in the future."

He elaborated to reporters afterward: "The major questions are: Could we have avoided a tragedy — a tragedy for them and a tragedy for us — or could we have minimized it?"

Giap and Vietnamese officials have said they will give the conference serious consideration.

McNamara wasted little time in raising a question that clearly had nagged him for decades.

"To this day I don't know what happened on August 2 and August 4, 1964, in the Tonkin Gulf," he said to Giap. "I think we may have made two serious misjudgments. ... Did what we thought was an attack on August 4, 1964, the so-called second attack — did it occur?"

Giap replied, "On the fourth of August, there was absolutely nothing."

Reporters were ushered from the room soon after, but McNamara later quoted Giap as saying he believed U.S. surveillance ships were trying to provoke an attack so President Johnson would have an excuse to step up U.S. involvement.

McNamara, speaking later to reporters, disputed that interpretation: "That point that Giap made is absolutely without foundation."

Johnson quickly won congressional approval of the "Tonkin Gulf Resolution" authorizing him to "take all necessary measures" to repel attacks on U.S. forces. The first U.S. combat troops landed in South Vietnam seven months later.

McNamara said the administration believed the second attack had taken place and that it had to respond forcefully.

McNamara and the rest of the delegation from the Council on Foreign Relations also met Thursday with Deputy Premier Phan Van Khai and Deputy Vice President Nguyen Thi Binh, former foreign minister in South Vietnam's pro-Communist "provisional revolutionary government" during the war.

Extremest rabbis come under attack for ruthless rhetoric

JERUSALEM (AP) — As the possibility of giving up land to the Palestinians loomed ever larger, extremist rabbis' rhetoric grew more ruthless: Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin was a criminal. A traitor. He deserved to die.

Five days after an assassin echoing their edicts shot Rabin dead, fringe rabbis are coming under increasing attack by mainstream religious leaders who accuse them of corrupting society.

On Thursday, they called for the ouster of their extremist colleagues.

"These people must be thrown out" of their jobs, said Yehuda Amital, a rabbi at a West Bank religious seminary who counsels dialogue with Palestinians.

Another West Bank rabbi, Yoel Bin-Nun, said he would "fight to the death" against rabbis whose recent religious rulings named Rabin as a traitor and called for his death.

"I tell you that if you don't stand up and unequivocally demand that certain people quit all roles of authority ... watch out!" Bin-Nun told a gathering of religious leaders on Wednesday night.

"Some of them are here tonight," he added.

Bin-Nun said he would name the rabbis by the end of the seven-day mourning period for Rabin.

Only a few dozen of the thousands of rabbis in Israel are believed to fall into the extremist fringe on which the government has vowed to crack down.

Published religious rulings are customarily signed by initials, or using the hometowns of the rabbis, but hardly ever by the writers' full name, so the rabbis behind recent inflammatory rulings have not yet been exposed.

One ruling posted in some synagogues just before the Yom Kippur holiday in October was the "Pulsa Denora," an extremely rare curse in Jewish tradition naming someone as deserving of death.

The prosecutor's office said it was investigating Avigdor Eskin, an extremist activist who distributed the ruling, on suspicion of incitement. Eskin bragged to Israel TV that the last Pulsa Denora was issued against Russian communist Leon Trotsky shortly before he was murdered by a Spanish communist in Mexico in 1940.

Government officials said they were tracking down the rabbis behind the Pulsa Denora, and investigating charges against those rabbis who allowed Eskin to post the ruling in their synagogues.

It is not yet clear whether Yigal Amir — the 25-year-old religious law student who shot Rabin after a peace rally in Tel Aviv on Saturday — had seen the rulings. But he told a Tel Aviv court Monday that his orders to kill Rabin came from God.

Mountain plane crash kills 53

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — An air force plane carrying sergeants and their families to a party crashed into a mountain during a rainstorm. Rescuers said Thursday all 53 people aboard were killed.

The Fokker F-27 twin-engine plane crashed Wednesday night, diving into a deep ravine in the Cordoba Mountains, 500 miles northwest of Buenos Aires.

Rescuers on foot and mules reached the rocky crash site on Mount Champaqui at dawn and said there were no survivors among the 48 passengers and five crew members.

Bodies and wreckage were scattered over 500 yards, said police Inspector Jose Carreras in the small town of Villa Dolores, 12 miles away.

The plane was traveling from a base in the southern oil town of Comodoro Rivadavia. Air force spokesmen said the passengers were mostly sergeants, their wives and children going to a celebration at a military academy in Cordoba.

U.N. tribunal indicts 3 Serbian army officers

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A United Nations tribunal indicted three senior officers in Serbia's army Thursday, bringing its investigations into war crimes in the former Yugoslavia closer than ever before to the Serbian political leadership and President Slobodan Milosevic.

The indictments, the first handed down for officials in Serbia rather than Bosnian Serbs, were announced by the International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague as the Clinton administration said a trade embargo on Serbia would be slightly eased.

The easing — officially described by the State Department as a "humanitarian" gesture — will allow natural gas into Serbia for an initial period of two months to heat homes and offset the effects of a winter that has come early to the Balkans.

Since Bosnian peace talks began in Dayton, Ohio, nine days ago, Milosevic has argued insistently to secure some relaxation of the three-year-old sanctions on Serbia, officials close to the negotiations said. This preoccupation has tended to make progress on other issues difficult.

The fact that the indictments of Serbian officers came on the same day as a gesture was made to Milosevic that may improve the atmosphere at the Ohio peace talks illustrates the growing tension between the international tribunal's quest for justice and the West's determination to secure a peace deal to end the 42-month-old Bosnian war.

The tribunal indicted Gen. Mile Mrksic, Maj. Veselin Sljivancanin and Capt. Miroslav Radic on charges related to the killing of 260 men from the Croatian town of Vukovar after a brutal three-month siege of the town ended with its surrender Nov. 19, 1991. They were then officers in the old Yugoslav Federal Army.

On the day the town surrendered, soldiers and officers from the Serbian-dominated force entered Vukovar hospital, where at least 1,000 people had taken shelter in the hope of being evacuated by international relief organizations. Men of fighting age were led away, never to be seen again. Most of them are now believed to be buried in a mass grave at Ovcara, near Vukovar.

At the time, the state of Yugoslavia was still formally in existence, although Croatia and Slovenia had seceded in June 1991. Thus supreme command of the army attacking Vukovar lay constitutionally with the federal presidency, where Serbia's — and thus Milosevic's influence — had become completely dominant after the departure of the Croatian and Slovene representatives.

"These indictments will automatically take us further up the line," Graham Blewitt, the tribunal's deputy prosecutor, said in a telephone interview.

"We do assume in an army that a chain of command exists," he said. "Either we will find that specific direct orders did come down the line for what happened in Vukovar. Or, if these officers were acting independently, then those further up had a responsibility to stop or punish the illegal activity."

Over the last year, 43 people, most of them Bosnian Serbs but also a few Bosnian Croats, have been indicted by the court. But only one suspect, Dusan Tadic, a Serb from the northwestern Bosnian town of Prijedor accused of crimes against Muslims at the Omarska camp, is in custody in The Hague.

■ False suspect sues government

OKLAHOMA CITY — A Jordanian-American who was strip-searched and led through a crowded airport in handcuffs hours after the Oklahoma bombing sued the government Thursday for more than $1.9 million.

Abraham Ahmad, 32, of Oklahoma City claimed that he was singled out because of his Middle Eastern appearance and name and because he was flying to Jordan.

He was held for more than two days before he was released. He was cleared of any wrongdoing and was never officially described as a suspect in the April 19 bombing of the federal building.

"No one should ever have to go through the mistreatment I went through," said Ahmad, who broke down in tears at a news conference in front of the courthouse, across from where the federal building once stood. "This ordeal has left me and my family hurt and emotionally scarred."

The complaint filed on Ahmad's behalf by the American Civil Liberties Union claims false arrest, false imprisonment, abuse of process, invasion of privacy, injury to reputation and defamation.

ACLU attorney Louis Bograde said the bombing, which killed 169 people, unleashed a storm of anti-Islamic sentiment.

"Federal employees revealed information about Mr. Ahmad's detention and his purported link to the bombing to the press," the complaint alleged. The leaks "led to a rash of defamatory press reports, a tidal wave of press harassment of the other members of the Ahmad family, and hostile and abusive behavior by the Ahmads' neighbors and other local residents."

■ United States withholds aid to Haiti

WASHINGTON — The United States is withholding $4.5 million in aid to Haiti because of its slow pace in privatizing state enterprises and reforming its civil service, the State Department said Thursday.

The $4.5 million package is the only undisbursed portion of a $45 million aid program for Haiti for 1995.

"We are encouraging the Haitian government to fulfill its commitments to the international community to meet these conditions, to make the necessary reforms in both of these areas," State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said.

Haiti's moves toward privatization slowed last month with the resignation of Prime Minister Smarck Michel. This week, the parliament chose a successor, former Foreign Minister Claudette Werleigh, and also agreed to hold a national debate on the privatization issue.

Michel was forced out because of opposition to privatization from most political parties, grassroots organizations and labor unions.

U.S. officials said the aid will not be disbursed until progress on privatization resumes. To meet the second condition, Haiti must take steps to pare the government payroll, they said.

The interruption of the reform process also has prompted the International Monetary Fund to hold back on its Haiti loan program.

■ Court allows raise in NYC fares

NEW YORK — The fare on New York City's subways and buses will rise on Sunday after all — but maybe only until Tuesday.

A federal appeals panel gave the Metropolitan Transportation Authority permission Thursday to temporarily hike bus and subway fares by 25 cents, to $1.50.

The three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals also ordered the MTA to devise a plan to compensate riders if the higher fare is overturned after a hearing set for Tuesday.

On Wednesday, a lower court blocked the fare increase after arguments from the New York Urban League and the Straphangers Campaign that the increase was unfair to urban minorities. The MTA then went to the appellate panel.

The plaintiffs contend in their lawsuit that the city's mostly black, Hispanic and Asian riders pay a larger percentage of the actual costs of their trips than do suburban commuters, who are predominately white.

Astronauts have right stuff, wrong size for Soyuz

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Too tall, too small, too heavy, too chesty — one by one, America's astronauts are dropping out of the international space scene.

They may have the right stuff, but they're the wrong size.

In the last month, two NASA astronauts have been disqualified from training for long stays aboard the Russian space station Mir. One was 2 inches too tall, the other 1 1/2 inches too short.

It gets worse. After three years of joint space cooperation, NASA has just learned that only about half of its 88 astronauts can meet rigid Russian size requirements for Soyuz spacecraft, the cramped ships that ferry cosmonauts aloft and also serve as Mir's emergency escape craft.

Astronauts must be 5 feet 4 1/2 inches to 6 feet tall, with seated height no more than 37 inches; weigh no more than 187 pounds; and, for Soyuz spacesuits, have chests no smaller than 38 inches and no larger than 44 inches.

Of the currently qualified astronauts, up to two-thirds are training specifically for space shuttle flights and are thus out of the running for Mir duty. Not all of the remaining 15 or so are eager to move to Russia for the required year of training then spend a minimum four months aboard the aging space station.

"Now you take who fits, and who's available, and who wants to go that's available, and who can speak Russian and do all this, and the list is very short," says David Leestma, director of NASA's flight crew operations.

"It's clearly a challenge," he says.

The Soyuz capsules pose a potentially more troublesome problem for the future. When the planned international space station starts taking in permanent residents, perhaps in just 2 1/2 years, the capsules will not only see duty as "lifeboats" but will also carry all crews up and back in the first few years of its existence.

AP Laserphoto

NASA Astronaut Norman Thagard waves from the capsule of the Soyuz rocket at Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan March 11 during a pre-launch visit.

Translation: NASA may not have enough Russian-speaking, ideally sized astronauts for its desired international space station slots over the next five years.

The Russians have been reluctant, at least so far, to modify the Soyuz to safely accommodate a greater variety of American shapes.

"People are just now beginning to understand the magnitude of the problem," Leestma says.

Astronaut Norman Thagard, the first American on Mir, was the perfect size — 5 foot 9 and 156 pounds, at least when he arrived aboard a Soyuz in March. He lost 17 1/2 pounds in the next four months.

The four other NASA astronauts slated to serve aboard Mir are to arrive and depart via space shuttle Atlantis, but would have to use the attached Soyuz for a emergency getaway.

This Saturday, a short visit to Mir is in the offing, with Atlantis scheduled for launch and, three days later, a docking with the Russian station.

Because of what NASA claims was miscommunication, NASA only last month got the skinny on the very specific Soyuz size criteria. Their origins are obvious enough: Cosmonauts sit curled in an almost fetal position in the bell-shaped Soyuz capsules, with knees bent toward their chests. The capsules parachute to Earth, typically in Kazakhstan, and the jarring impact can injure an oversized or undersized astronaut's back — or worse.

The criteria could have come from the early days of the U.S. space program. The original seven astronauts who flew the little Mercury capsules all stood 5 foot 7 to 5 foot 11 and weighed 150-185 pounds.

It's no wonder Russian cosmonauts still look so much alike.

"Soyuz is Spam-in-the-can, you know," Leestma says. "It's Mercury and Gemini all over again. It's never progressed any further. ... It works very well for them; it doesn't do much for tall Americans."

Or short Americans, hefty Americans, long-waisted Americans, small-chested Americans, or barrel-chested Americans.

NASA still has height limits for astronauts, but thanks to the comparatively roomy space shuttles, the range is greater than before — from 4 feet 10 1/2 inches to 6 feet 4.

Astronaut Scott Parazynski, 6 foot 2, was the first to be yanked from the Russian program. He returned to the United States in mid-October after training four months at cosmonaut headquarters outside Moscow. He would have been the fifth and final American to live on Mir, in 1997.

NASA knew he was a little tall but had hoped the Russians would modify a Soyuz for him, says Frank Culbertson, acting director of NASA's shuttle-Mir program.

The answer? Nyet.

Astronaut Wendy Lawrence, 5 foot 3, was dumped next. She had not yet moved to Russia, but was immersed in language study. She would have been the backup to an astronaut who's scheduled to fly to Mir next year. Her rejection came as a surprise; NASA says it had been given the wrong minimum height.

Expert confirms terminal illness in latest Kevorkian patient

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — The latest person to die in Jack Kevorkian's presence was indeed terminally ill, an outside expert said Thursday as questions arose over whether the man known as Doctor Death had moved too fast this time.

While Kevorkian's lawyer said the breast cancer that spread through Patricia Cashman's body was crumbling her bones, a preliminary autopsy found no visible traces of the disease.

At the request of The Associated Press, Dr. Jeffrey Forman, vice chairman of radiology at Wayne State University School of Medicine, reviewed some of Cashman's medical records, which were provided by Kevorkian's lawyer.

Cashman did have bone cancer, but it wouldn't necessarily have been detected during a routine autopsy, Forman said.

Cashman, 58, of San Marcos, Calif., was found Wednesday in a car near the morgue. Kevorkian's lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, said Cashman had undergone a mastectomy three years ago and suffered "excruciating" pain from the disease spreading through her body.

Kevorkian, appearing later Thursday on CNN's "Larry King Live," challenged the Oakland County prosecutor to charge him in Cashman's death.

"I dare you to charge me. D-A-R-E. If you don't you're either a coward or a liar," Kevorkian said.

Oakland County Prosecutor Richard Thompson said a decision on whether to charge Kevorkian had not yet been made.

"This is not a game," Thompson said. "As a prosecutor, you're not going to make decisions based on a dare."

Kevorkian, a retired pathologist, has acknowledged attending 26 suicides since 1990, most involving carbon monoxide.

Kevorkian already faces assisted-suicide charges in four deaths in Oakland County. He could get five years in prison in each case if convicted. Prosecutors failed last month to have him placed under house arrest while he awaits trial.

Fieger told the AP earlier Thursday that Kevorkian would not be available for comment.

The autopsy found that Cashman died of carbon monoxide poisoning. It was ruled a homicide. Prosecutors and investigators said they would wait for a final report before deciding whether to charge Kevorkian.

Cashman was in extreme pain, said her sister, Sherry McDonald, who was with her when she died.

"She could barely walk. She couldn't get up and out of bed by herself," McDonald said. "I hated to have her die, but I felt it was the right thing for her to do."

Cashman's neighbor, Barbara Allan, said she saw the woman last week at their mobile-home park and she seemed to be doing well.

"She was standing at the door," said Allan, who knew Cashman was being treated for cancer. "She looked good. She was a heavy-set woman, but she looked fine and seemed to be in a good mood."

Oakland County Medical Examiner L.J. Dragovic, whose employee found that "There was no cancer," accused Fieger of manipulating the media.

"We have to have demonstrable fact before we claim something," he said.

But Fieger continued to attack the findings of Dr. Kanu Virani, the county's deputy chief medical examiner, who performed an autopsy Wednesday.

Penguin USA wins publishing rights to Clark's Simpson book

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutor Marcia Clark signed a $4.2 million book deal Thursday for her story of the O.J. Simpson trial, the largest publishing contract yet to come out of the case.

A three-day, eight-way bidding war ended when Penguin USA won worldwide rights to Clark's unwritten, untitled book about the trial to be published next fall.

"Viking Penguin shares my vision for the creation of a book of quality and depth and I am delighted to enter into this project," Clark said in a statement.

She did not comment on the value of the contract, and Viking described it as a "multimillion" dollar deal. Two people close to the negotiations, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed the sale was for $4.2 million.

It was not known how much of the money she would receive in advance.

Simpson's deal for his jailhouse book, "I Want To Tell You," was worth about $1 million before sales, while Deputy District Attorney Christopher Darden signed a $1.7 million book deal last week.

Clark's deal comes close to the $4.5 million deal initially offered to House Speaker Newt Gingrich for his book, "To Renew America." Harper-Collins later withdrew the offer after ethics questions were raised, and Gingrich receives only royalties from sales.

Retired Gen. Colin Powell, who ruled out a potential presidential campaign Wednesday, reportedly received at least $6 million for his best-selling book, "My American Journey."

Clark's book deal came as coworkers were complaining about 11 percent bonuses given to her, Darden and Deputy District Attorney William Hodgman for their work prosecuting Simpson for the June 12, 1994, slayings of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman. The bonuses, handed out last week by District Attorney Gil Garcetti, totaled about $43,000.

Health-care task force carries bill of nearly $14 million, auditors say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration's ill-fated health-care reform plan cost nearly $14 million to draft, a sum that dwarfs the original White House price tag of less than $100,000, congressional auditors said Thursday.

Costs for the 12-member President's Task Force on Health Care Reform, which first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton oversaw, were spread across 10 agencies and totaled $13.8 million, the General Accounting Office said in a report.

More than half that amount, $7.7 million, was spent between June and November 1993 when the White House was writing a 1,342-page bill to encompass the reforms it had settled on, according to the report by the investigative arm of Congress.

The Clinton bill was almost immediately discarded by Congress, as various committees drafted their own plans and then feuded over which version should be voted on.

Congress abandoned the effort in late 1994 in a major blow to President Clinton's ambitious agenda.

Since then, the administration has been admonished that writing its own legislation was a costly waste of time and an infringement on a duty normally reserved for Congress.

Rep. William Clinger, R-Pa., chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, said the discrepancy between the original cost estimates and the final price tag was "another example of the Clinton administration not being forthcoming with the Congress and the American people."

The White House said the total cost for the task force "paled in comparison" to what opponents of the health-care plan spent trying to defeat it.

"The magnitude of the task was great, and the overall cost in comparison is relatively modest," spokeswoman Ginny Terzano said. She said that despite the low estimates it was "never our intent to mislead or misreport" the true costs of the effort.

The White House said it had never tried in its estimates to compile a government-wide cost figure for the health-care reform effort, and never claimed to have done so. The GAO was the first to calculate such a figure.

'The magnitude of the task was great, and the overall cost in comparison is relatively modest.'

— Ginny Terzano, White House spokeswoman

The task force's original charter, submitted in March 1993, stated that its final cost "is expected to be below $100,000."

In testimony before Congress in 1994, White House aide Patsy Thomasson gave a higher figure of about $211,000.

But signs quickly emerged that the figure was far too low.

The Associated Press reported in February that records it obtained under the Freedom of Information Act showed the administration paid hundreds of thousand of dollars in consulting fees to advisers who assisted the task force.

Some of those advisers with political connections to the Clintons were paid as much as $100,000 each.

A month later, the GAO announced a preliminary study had found as much as $9.6 million in expenditures related to the task force and warned that some of the information agencies provided was not complete.

Republican lawmakers accused the White House of hiding the task force's true costs, and Thomasson returned to Capitol Hill to acknowledge her original estimate included only administrative costs, which were "a minor part of the total cost."

Lawmakers asked the GAO to continue the audit, obtaining documents from all available agencies that worked on the issue.

In addition to the costs for writing the legislative plan, the audit found that the administration spent $5.69 million to develop the outlines of the plan and $433,966 to fight — unsuccessfully — a lawsuit by a doctors' group that forced the administration to make public the task force's documents.

Of the total, $7.56 million went for personnel, $5.4 million went to various contractors hired to assist the administration, $301,768 was spent on travel, $183,240 went for office space and $73,564 on telephone calls.

The audit found that the White House's share of the total cost was just $662,283, and that the bulk of the tab was absorbed by the budgets of other federal agencies.

The biggest contributor, the GAO found, was the Department of Health and Human Services, which spent $9.12 million on task force-related activities.

Other big spenders included the Department of Veteran Affairs ($1.26 million), the Treasury Department ($1 million), the Defense Department ($662,283) and the Justice Department ($462,330).

Judge sentences mother to prison for leaving sons to die in hot car

McMINNVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A young mother was sentenced to 18 years in prison Thursday for letting her two little boys die in a sweltering car outside a motel where she had gone to see her boyfriend.

Judge Charles Haston said he was not convinced Jennie Bain Ducker was remorseful and that her demeanor at her sentencing was hostile.

"My opinion about her has changed," Haston said before imposing the sentence. "Her testimony has more a ring of self-preservation than that of remorsefulness."

Ducker, 21, will have to serve at least six years before she is eligible for parole.

Ducker, a manic-depressive with a history of alcoholism, was convicted Oct. 3 of aggravated child abuse in the deaths of Devin, 2, and Dustin, 1. She could have gotten 50 years in prison.

The children died June 6 in McMinnville, about 60 miles southeast of Nashville, while Ducker, who was going through a divorce, was with a boyfriend and three other men in a motel room.

She had left the boys buckled in their car seats with the tinted windows rolled up for at least eight hours as the temperature inside the vehicle soared to an estimated 120 degrees.

"Stolen moments with this man in this motel room were more important than her babies," the judge said.

Ducker claimed the boys' deaths were an accident that occurred after she had a glass of wine and fell asleep.

Her lawyers had argued that her manic depression caused her to stay awake for days, then crash into a deep sleep. The disorder also clouded her judgment, they said.

However, authorities estimated her blood-alcohol level at the time she fell asleep at twice the legal limit for drivers.

Leaky pipe lawsuit yields $950 million for homeowners

UNION CITY, Tenn. (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of U.S. homeowners with leaky plastic pipes will share in a $950 million settlement with the manufacturers.

State Judge Mike Maloan on Thursday approved the settlement fund, set up by Shell Oil Co. and Hoechst Celanese.

The money will go toward repairing polybutylene plumbing installed in about 1 million houses and as many as 6 million mobile homes and apartments nationwide during the 1970s and '80s.

"This is an extraordinary success for consumers around the country," said Arthur Bryant, executive director of Trial Lawyers for Public Justice, which helped represent plaintiffs. "The relief is unprecedented."

Thousands of people had joined class-action lawsuits over the past 10 years, claiming the pipes leaked when exposed to chlorine and other chemicals in tap water.

Both companies have denied that the pipes are faulty and blamed poor installation and improper use.

"I think that it's good for all the parties involved," said Mary Lou Strange, an attorney for Shell. "Homeowners will begin to get relief, and Shell can turn its attention to making sure the agreement is fully implemented and can get back to its other businesses."

Plaintiffs' lawyers didn't know exactly how many people will benefit from the settlement; they said just over 1 million people already have responded to notices sent to more than 5.6 million potential claimants.

DuPont Co., which made materials for the fittings, has already agreed to a $120 million settlement.

The $950 million fund is an initial contribution that can be increased by Shell and Celanese if the fund runs dry. The companies have the option of litigating remaining claims.

Criticism gives Republican Party widespread case of 'jitters'

By John King
Associated Press

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — First came elections that shattered the GOP's aura of invincibility, then Colin Powell's lecture about the dangers of conservatism without compassion.

After a season of constant celebration, some Republicans have a sudden case of the jitters.

The obvious symptoms are public anxiety over the Republican agenda, and nervousness within the GOP ranks about the influence of unelected figures who deem themselves leaders of the party's ascendant conservative movement.

But there is considerable debate over a cure, between those who deny any jitters in the first place, those who believe the party is headed for deep trouble and those who come down somewhere in between.

The internal Republican ideological schisms at the center of this debate are hardly new, but have come into sharp focus in recent days because of the election results and Powell's decision not to run for president, two seemingly unrelated episodes that have set off an intriguing debate about the Republican message — and messengers.

On the morning after Tuesday's off-year balloting, there was clear concern among some Republicans that Democrats were finding some success in turning the tactical tables, using House Speaker Newt Gingrich as an election foil much as the GOP used President Clinton in 1994.

Virginia's Republican chairman attributed the GOP's failure to capture control of the state legislature at least in part to Democrats framing the election as a referendum on Gingrich and his agenda, and other Republicans predicted it would be a recurring tactic in 1996.

"It is clear they can use Gingrich to energize their coalition — blacks, white liberals and the like, as well as use him to raise money like we do with Clinton," said Rusty Paul, the Georgia Republican chairman.

Gingrich conceded he is a "very polarizing figure" but warns his fellow Republicans they will pay a higher price next year if they fail to adopt his agenda. In his view, shared by many fellow Republicans, the shaky poll numbers will improve once voters become convinced Republicans are keeping their promises.

Still, while not retreating from any of their party's broad goals, some Republican moderates predicted the election results would strengthen their hand in budget negotiations.

Many of their concerns were echoed by Powell as he took himself out of presidential contention but threw himself into Republican Party affairs. He vowed to convince his new political family that it spent too much time worrying about a right-wing fringe and too little thinking and talking about schools and children.

"We have to concern ourselves about those who may be cut loose, and we have to be prepared to help them," Powell said.

Gingrich and other conservative leaders would be quick to argue that they share Powell's concerns, but the retired general voices them in a way that many Republicans feel is missing in their party's field of presidential candidates.

"His message of hope and reconciliation is one that is badly needed in America," said Jack Kemp, the former congressman and housing secretary who had urged Powell to run.

For promoting Powell, Kemp was widely criticized in conservative circles, especially by those who were pushing him to seek the presidency. In the view of these conservatives, Powell had no right to the Republican nomination because of his views on social issues, including support of abortion rights and affirmative action.

Powell said such criticism had no role in his decision. Still, Democrats rushed to label the GOP intolerant, one where "moderates need not apply," in the words of Connecticut Democratic Sen. Christopher Dodd.

Even some leading conservatives were clearly sensitive to the suggestion. Arizona Sen. John McCain, for example, denounced "certain presumptuous conservatives" for thinking they decided who belonged in the party — and who didn't.

These tensions are sure to bubble over repeatedly in the budget battles and presidential campaigning to come. They are in many ways an inevitable byproduct of GOP success — as it grows, the Republican Party faces many of the strains in its coalition that long have been the stuff of Democratic legend.

As it deals with them, Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour warns that timidity isn't the answer. He sees no reason for jitters, but offers a cure.

"Do what we promised people last year we would do: to make government smaller, taxes lower, spending less, regulations fewer, to have genuine welfare reform that causes people to have to go to work," Barbour said. In his view, "The greater risk for Republicans is to stop short."

O.J. to photographers: 'Leave children alone'

NEPTUNE, N.J. (AP) — O.J. Simpson appealed to photographers Thursday to stop dogging his children's footsteps, telling The Associated Press the constant attention prevents them from leading a normal life.

"I just want to say, 'Stop following the kids,'" Simpson said in a second phone call to an AP reporter. He said the attention focused on 10-year-old Sydney and 7-year-old Justin is making it impossible for him to attend school functions with them or take part in their soccer games.

Earlier Thursday, Simpson said, he was pitching tennis balls to his daughter at a friend's home when suddenly she looked up and saw a photographer peering over the wall. She asked to go inside.

"You hear the press saying, 'He should be concerned with his kids,'" Simpson said by phone from his Brentwood mansion in Los Angeles. "But it's the press that's disconcerting."

The call was one of two Simpson made to this reporter, who is on vacation. He said he was calling primarily to express thanks for her fair coverage of his trial. He also declared his innocence.

The former football great was acquitted Oct. 3 of murdering his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

"I want to say thank you because the one thing that was consistent throughout this ordeal was that you seemed to be fair," Simpson said during the first conversation.

In the second call, Simpson said he was sure he would soon read stories saying: "O.J. doesn't go to his kids' soccer games," when in fact he could not go because it would attract a media crush.

He said he has had family conferences with Juditha Brown, the children's grandmother, and with a child psychologist, who advised he not attend because of the attention.

Asked about his decision to leave for Florida on his daughter's birthday, Simpson said he was aghast at the outcry.

"My daughter is 10. I have two adult kids. Judy (Brown) knows this too. When children's birthdays fall on a Tuesday or a Thursday, you have the party on the weekend."

That was what he did, he said, holding a party for Sydney the weekend before at Michael Jackson's Neverland Ranch in California.

Asked if he feels he is still forced to live like a prisoner, Simpson said he valued the chance to be back at his estate after the more than a year he spent in jail before and during his murder trial.

"I was in an 8-by-10 cell. Now I can go in a bunch of rooms. I've even been in a couple of restaurants," he said.

He joked about some of the more outlandish stories that have cropped up about him since his release.

'Everywhere I go, even people who drive by the house here are totally positive. In Panama City I didn't get one negative thing. They were very protective of me. People said, 'Get your head up and go on with your life.'

— O.J. Simpson

including one that he was secretly married in the Dominican Republic.

"I wasn't invited to my own wedding," he said laughing.

Simpson also said he was pleased at the positive reception he has generally received when he has gone out in public.

When he recently visited Panama City, Fla., he said, he was greeted by many well-wishers who said they were glad he was acquitted and wished him luck in the future.

"Everywhere I go, even people who drive by the house here are totally positive," Simpson said. "In Panama City I didn't get one negative thing. They were very protective of me. People said, 'Get your head up and go on with your life.'"

Simpson said he was dismayed by those who prejudged him and then criticized his jury's verdict. He said he felt positive about himself and his future.

"The only thing that endures is character," he said. "Fame and wealth — all that is illusion. All that endures is character."

He said that during the trial, his lawyers kept trying to present him with theories that supported the concept there was reasonable doubt he could have killed his ex-wife and Goldman.

"But reasonable doubt is something that all my lawyers will tell you I forbade them to say to me. I said, 'I don't want to say reasonable doubt. I'm innocent.'"

Asked if he was upset about a TV interview given by his former girlfriend Paula Barbieri, Simpson said: "Paula needed to do what she needed to do. I'm totally behind her. Paula's a good woman and she's been through a lot. I'm 1,000 percent behind her."

Barbieri said she thought Simpson was innocent but that they broke up because he seemed more interested in celebrity than he was in making a quiet life with her.

Simpson said that in spite of what has been written about a supposed public backlash against his acquittal, he sees just the opposite.

"It's encouraging to know that people believe in the system," he said.

Jackson considers run for president

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two-time presidential candidate Jesse Jackson said Thursday he's thinking anew about running in 1996 now that retired Gen. Colin Powell has ruled out a potential White House bid.

Less than 24 hours after Powell announced he would not run, Jackson said at a news conference that he has met with his advisers over the past few days to "assess the landscape."

"I still have the fire in my belly and clear vision in my head about what a president ought to do to make the nation better," said the founder of the National Rainbow Coalition and presidential candidate of 1984 and 1988.

"I have a plan to revitalize our economy to make us more fiscally responsible, to change our priorities, to make us more humane," he said.

Jackson said it was premature to say when he would reach a decision.

But while criticizing what he said was Clinton's inattention to urban issues, Jackson suggested he would stay on the political sidelines if the president begins to pay more attention to cities and racial inequities.

"I feel that Clinton, if he focuses on the covenant, honors it and addresses those people who elected him, he could be re-elected again. But if he abandons that base then that base has no allegiance to him," he said.

Jackson said it would be difficult for him to run in the Democratic primaries and that an independent candidacy would be the only way to "open the process up."

Jackson, while praising Powell personally, also said the general took a "step backward" by joining the Republican Party.

Noting GOP plans to cut popular federal programs for the poor, Jackson said Powell will have to do "some very heavy lifting" to meet his goal of making the party more attractive to black voters.

Ortiz life verdict ends tragic case

There is no question that the life prison sentence handed to Henry Lopez Ortiz this week for the Feb. 10 sexual assault and murder of 10-year-old Julianne Powell did not please many of the little girl's family, friends or acquaintances here in Midland. Her life was viciously and tragically snuffed out by Ortiz in an act that robbed her and her family of Julianne's childhood and life, and there was a strong feeling in this community that the only just punishment for Ortiz would be an eye for an eye, a life for a life.

Yet the Amarillo jury that heard the testimony in the case and weighed the evidence believed that in this case justice would be better served by sparing the convicted killer's life and instead locking him behind bars for at least 40 years.

Perhaps that will provide justice in this case, though it was not the verdict many wanted; we hope so. The testimony, however, was unquestionable that Ortiz is a danger when left in open society. Ortiz had earlier been tried and acquitted of a rape charge and testimony revealed that he had fondled a 14-year-old girl in another incident.

Of course, other testimony was offered suggesting Ortiz's deep religious convictions and his good family life before the murder of Julianne Powell. One is left to wonder, however, whether the murder of Julianne and the other sexual encounters reportedly carried out by Ortiz are not indicative of a definite change in his personality for the worse.

The law permits sentences such as the one handed down to Ortiz and, in that regard, the Amarillo jury has performed its civic duty. Now, hopefully, healing can begin for Julianne Powell's family and the numerous Midlanders touched by this tragic case.

Press chief McCurry attack went too far

It is one thing to accuse your political opponents of being wrong or ideologically blind in promoting policies that you believe will hurt people. That's legitimate political discourse.

But ever since voters gave control of Congress to Republicans to balance the budget and shrink government, liberal Democrats' attacks have taken on a harder edge.

Faced with reforms of their favorite Big Government programs, they accuse their foes' policies of being mean-spirited and cruel. Words like "fascists" and "Nazis" are hurled about carelessly.

The other day, though, White House press chief Mike McCurry went over the edge. Not content with the lie that Congress "would like to see the (Medicare) program die and go away," he added, "that is also what they (Republicans) would want to see happen to seniors, too. ..."

Suggesting that Republicans want to hasten their parents and grandparents to early graves impugns motives and personalizes policy differences. This goes way beyond acceptable political discourse. No one has a monopoly on compassion, especially defenders of the destructive status quo.

The GOP leadership was outraged and properly demanded McCurry's resignation. How can Republicans negotiate with a president when his top spokesman says they want to kill people? The lame apology wrung out of McCurry was too little, too late. He must go.

Today in History

Today is Friday, Nov. 10, the 314th day of 1995. There are 51 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Nov. 10, 1871, journalist-explorer Henry M. Stanley found missing Scottish missionary David Livingstone in central Africa. Stanley delivered his famous greeting: "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?" Livingstone replied: "Yes, and I feel thankful that I am here to welcome you."

On this date:

In 1483, Martin Luther, the leader of the Protestant Reformation, was born in Eisleben, Germany.

In 1775, the U.S. Marines were organized under authority of the Continental Congress.

In 1919, the American Legion held its first national convention, in Minneapolis.

In 1928, Hirohito was enthroned as Emperor of Japan.

In 1951, direct-dial coast-to-coast telephone service began as Mayor M. Leslie Denning of Englewood, N.J., called his counterpart in Alameda, Calif.

In 1954, the Iwo Jima Memorial was dedicated in Arlington, Va.

In 1975, the U.N. General Assembly approved a resolution equating Zionism with racism. The world body repealed the resolution in December 1991.

In 1975, the ore-hauling ship Edmund Fitzgerald and its crew of 29 vanished during a storm in Lake Superior.

In 1982, Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev died of a heart attack at age 75.

In 1982, the newly finished Vietnam Veterans Memorial was opened to its first visitors in Washington, D.C.

In 1989, workers began punching a hole in the Berlin Wall, a day after East Germany abolished its border restrictions.

Ten years ago: Britain's Prince Charles and Princess Diana, during their visit to Washington D.C., attended morning services at the National Cathedral, toured the National Gallery of Art and were hosts at a dinner party at the British Embassy.

One year ago: U.S. officials said the United States planned to stop enforcing the arms embargo against the Bosnian government the following week, despite opposition in the U.N. Security Council to lifting the ban. Iraq, hoping to win an end to trade sanctions, recognized Kuwait's borders. Prominent attorney Louis Nizer died in New York at age 92.

Cabinet member favors mandatory service

WASHINGTON — More than two decades after the end of the draft, a member of President Clinton's Cabinet is supporting compulsory military service for all 18-year-old men and women to help teach that "freedom is not free."

Veterans Affairs Secretary Jesse Brown emphasized during a pre-Veterans Day interview with us that he was expressing his personal views and not speaking for the administration. In fact, Brown said he hasn't broached the controversial subject with Clinton, whose draft evasion during the Vietnam War continues to haunt his presidency.

Anderson

"I would be in favor of a draft," Brown told us. "I believe that every American should have an obligation to contribute something to society. When I talk about a draft I'm talking about all Americans, including women. Everyone should serve their country two years and I think you would wind up with people having a better feel of the democracy in which we live."

Brown volunteered for the Marines in 1963 and served two years in Vietnam before a gunshot wound left his right arm partially paralyzed. He spent his entire professional career with the Disabled American Veterans, a veterans advocacy group, before his Cabinet appointment.

Brown has positioned himself on the front lines in opposing Republican budget cuts, which he warns would take a heavy toll on the poorest vets. Senior administration officials have privately complained that Clinton has granted Brown a virtual blank check despite budget cutbacks because the president is seeking to overcompensate for his lack of military service. Brown is one of the few Cabinet members who has been able to use the Oval Office as a court of last resort when Clinton's budget officials have tried to slash VA spending.

Congressional sources say there is no chance Congress would even entertain the idea of reinstituting a peacetime draft, something that no major figure of either political party favors. The all-volunteer military has won plaudits for professionalism, and the entire armed forces is in the throes of downsizing. Even Brown — who would revive a GI Bill-style, free college education for two years of service — concedes: "I just don't think it's going to happen."

The Pentagon maintains that a military draft would have to be reinstated only to support a prolonged and large-scale conventional war. Defense Department officials also believe that peacetime draft registration could be suspended without threatening national security.

Brown's case for a draft is based on societal — not security — considerations. He views it as an admittedly high-cost social insurance policy that would help discipline and mold youth, and Brown believes it could help ease racial tensions — as it has since Harry Truman integrated the military.

"You can take people from all over the country with different racial attitudes, but when they were in the Marine Corps or the Army they could not act on those attitudes," Brown recalled. "They were in a structured environment with a specific goal to achieve. ... It was a forced melting pot that had devastating consequences if you did not conform. I think that was one of the reasons the military was so successful in bringing about change."

Brown may have a partial soulmate in retired Gen. Colin Powell. Although Powell supports an all-volunteer armed services, he has in recent months extolled the virtues of the military family and how facets of that life could serve as a model for the American family. Powell wrote that he was an "amenable, amiable and aimless" youth before joining the ROTC at the City College of New York.

Brown is not totally gung-ho on the military because he still believes in "the unstructured creativity of the American people." He notes that the blessings of freedom are the foundation for all else and worries that that ethic is lost on today's generation.

"Someone pays a price," Brown said. "All too often many people who benefit from freedom do so because the other guy paid the price."

Blame producers, advertisers of trash TV

It's a good indicator of how decadent the country has become that Bill Bennett, former federal appointee, and others can make national news by being against broadcast garbage.

However, so far the new barrage against daytime talk shows is about 50 klicks off the target. The problem is not the on-air performers; the problem is the suits who buy and broadcast and syndicate their shows. The on-air performers are just working folks, producing what they are being paid to produce.

Reese

The real peddlers of this refuse are the bigshot owners and corporate executives of networks, companies that market syndicated shows, and station owners who allow or direct their managers to buy it.

Not only are these characters the real peddlers of soul pollution, they are also first-class hypocrites, because they hide behind a facade of respectability.

It reminds me of story I heard once, perhaps apocryphal. According to the teller of the tale, a crime organization brought a famous European rock band to the United States for a tour. Thinking the boss would like to meet these famous musicians, a minion took them out to his house on Long Island.

When he told the boss, the famous band was in the hall ready to meet him, the boss said, "Get that garbage out of my house!" In other words, it was OK to peddle garbage and make money off it, but one did not wish to be associated with it.

That is the attitude of these corporate executives, some of them no doubt country club Republicans or silk stocking Democrats. They are contemptuous of their on-air performers and contemptuous of their audiences — but, hey, there's a buck to be made here.

So fire away at daytime degenerate exploitation shows, but don't aim at the performers. Aim at the people who pay them to perform. Performers have no choice but to perform the way the people who pay them — the people with the power to say you're on the air or you're off the air — want them to. If they are on the air, then what they are doing is what their paymasters want them to do. Aim your fire, too, at the advertisers who sponsor these shows.

Don't buy the cheap rationalization that the shows are what the public wants. There is a percentage of any public that would watch the live broadcast of the rape and murder of children, if such were available. Catering to people with low tastes is generally called pandering. It's what corporate executives in the entertainment racket have taken to doing.

Many of the prime-time shows are as sleazy and tasteless as the daytime junk. Vulgarities are now common even on so-called "quality" shows. Some newspapers now run stuff that 20 years ago would have gotten people fired. Are we more sophisticated? Or more decadent? Or more tasteless? Or less educated culturally?

I think the answer is just that we are more greedy. Many, or most, seem to have elevated material success to the status of a god, and therefore anything that contributes to material success they deem acceptable. This materialistic strain has always been part of America. Many Americans have always worshipped or admired the rich no matter how they became rich.

I'm quite sure that in most corporate environments any executive who suggested that the company should improve the quality of life even at the cost of some profits would quickly be made jobless, if not forcibly confined to a mental hospital.

It is possible, however, to make money without pandering, without exploiting human misery, without imitating the pimp, the dope dealer and the pornographer. There is no acceptable excuse for cultural pollution.

November is sweeps month. If you really want to send a message, then unplug the television and take a month off. You may discover there is actually life without TV.

If you find life unbearable without the TV, then you have a greater problem than the one Bill Bennett is talking about.

Is anybody going to be there to block Clinton?

A bunch of conservatives fell to talking presidential politics over the dinner table. The only thing they could agree on was that they couldn't agree on what was likely to happen with the race. And that the pork loin was wonderful — not to mention the Cabernet.

Murchison

The conversation was nondisputatious: no finger-pointing and no table-pounding, just endless head-scratching. I report these deliberations not as more than usually profound or prophetic but as representative of things conservatives are saying to themselves as they contemplate 1996.

Who is the Republican nominee going to be? Dole? No takers on that one. The table — occupied by long-time political activists and commentators, several of whom had served in the Reagan administration — couldn't see Dole going anywhere. One offered that Dole, no matter what he did, couldn't beat Bill Clinton.

Nor was there any excitement about Phil Gramm. The diners liked Gramm's politics, but they didn't much like Gramm himself: too cold, too arrogant. They thought him too focused on economics to the exclusion of the cultural issues that vex us ever more urgently.

Well? Who, then? Lamar Alexander? Winks and nudges all around. What does he stand for? Where's his center? Has he got one? On decentralization he's great, a diner countered.

Pat Buchanan? There was lots of residual affection for Buchanan at the table, owing to his challenge of George Bush, but no faith whatever in his prospects for the nomination. And a piece of heresy from one who knew him in Washington: As an executive, Pat's too soft — he's unwilling to rein in subordinates and make tough calls.

So, to the deep, urgent question: What about, yes, Colin Powell? If brows furrowed, no noses wrinkled. What about him?

One diner ventured that no one else but Powell seemed able to beat Clinton. Beat him how, though — as a Rockefeller Republican? Naw. Said the diner: Powell has elements of social conservatism that make him broadly appealing. Understand, he's not Reagan. But conservatives shouldn't write him off. They should find out if they can do business with him: probe, test, explore.

Still, as we acknowledged, he's not Reagan. Could anyone see the Republican right, the party's sheet anchor, remaining attached to him? What could be seen was a specter: Powell gets the nomination and Buchanan bolts, drawing off enough conservative votes to re-elect Clinton. And all without shame. The reasoning: Conservatives can govern through Congress.

This raised another provocative question. If Powell doesn't run, and Dole and Gramm can't win, and Buchanan can't even get the nomination, and Lamar Alexander and Dick Lugar ("Lugar for secretary of State!" we heard during the salad course) are more spectacularly doomed, and Bob Dornan even more spectacularly — who? Arlen Specter? Ha, Ha.

First From the Host's Left says simply, "Newt." The speaker of the House has an eye for windows of opportunity. A Powell decision not to go for the presidency would leave the Republican field flat and facing certain disaster. With his hand on the opportunity window sill, Gingrich could be counted on to vault through — and he'd very, very, very likely win.

But not necessarily. Fearlessly predicting Republican victory in the presidential race involves assuming the collapse of William J. Clinton, an assumption no one wished to make concerning a man whose political skills should be frozen and installed in the Smithsonian (preferably tomorrow). One stage or another in the continual reinvention of this president might intersect public fancy. Round and round and round he goes — where he stops, nobody knows.

Who will be there to block him? Newt? There's one thing First From the Host's Left believes he knows. This would be a presidential debate between the two sharpest, best-honed political minds of the day — to see it, he'd skip his daughter's soccer game, dinner with Mother Teresa, his own funeral and the Second Coming. He might even get the chance.

Australians boost hope for live AIDS vaccine

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Australian with the AIDS virus who unknowingly infected that country's blood supply 14 years ago has given scientists stronger evidence that a live AIDS vaccine might work.

The blood donor and six people infected by his plasma have remained healthy longer than a decade and even have normal immune systems because they have a genetically weak strain of the AIDS virus, Australian scientists report in today's edition of the journal Science.

Coincidentally, the HIV infecting the Australians is almost identical to a manmade strain U.S. researchers have developed as a possible AIDS vaccine — one many scientists fear could be deadly even though weakened. Until now, only one other person in the world had been found living with weak HIV.

"The Australians provide additional information that these kinds of strains can be safe over the long run," said Dr. Ronald Desrosiers of the New England Primate Research Center. He developed the potential vaccine.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, chief of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said, "This extraordinary experiment of nature ... makes you think again about the feasibility of a live attenuated vaccine.

"But it doesn't necessarily take us any closer to having an attenuated live vaccine," he warned. "These people have been followed for 10 years. ... You worry about what happens in 15 to 20 years."

More immediately, the findings help explain why some people ma ain healthy immune systems eyond the 10 years it typically takes HIV to turn deadly, wrote study author Nicholas Deacon of Australia's Macfarlane Burnet Centre for Medical Research.

The Australians' HIV is missing parts of a gene called nef. Scientists believe nef spurs HIV to reproduce frantically until it overwhelms patients' immune systems — and if nef doesn't work right, immune cells can control HIV just as they fight most viruses.

"These data show that survival after HIV infection can be determined by the HIV genome," Deacon concluded.

Kentucky county comes under fire for shooting strays

By Chris Duncan
Associated Press

SHEPHERDSVILLE, Ky. — It's a chore Bill "Hobert" Burkhead says he dreads: Nearly every day he leads one dog after another to a secluded spot behind the Bullitt County Animal Shelter.

One by one, Burkhead places the barrel of his gun between their eyes and pulls the trigger. The carcasses of the unwanted, stray dogs soon pile up in a nearby pit for burial.

Burkhead, the county dog warden, and other officials say shooting dogs instead of putting them to death with gas or by injection comes down to money.

"You can get 50 dogs dispatched for a dollar," said Judge-Executive John Harper, head of county government in this town about 30 miles south of Louisville.

The practice — which has gone on in Bullitt County for as long as anyone can remember — has drawn condemnation from animal welfare groups across the country.

"A gunshot is something we consider to be inhumane," said Sally Fekety of the Humane Society of the United States. "Fundamentally, one of the most critical obligations is to prepare the most humane death possible for animals needing euthanasia. It's our duty."

Animal welfare experts recommend an injection into the dog's leg of sodium pentobarbital, a barbiturate that can be administered only by prescription.

"Nobody wants to euthanize an animal, but when you're staring into its eyes and shooting it, that's a lot harder," said Jane Stern, executive director of the Anti-Cruelty Society in Chicago.

Harper said it costs $12 to euthanize an animal, compared with 2 cents for a bullet bought at bulk rate for the .22-caliber rifle used to dispatch the dogs. Stern contends it costs about $4.42 for a lethal injection.

"Sometimes, the dog is in more of a panic with an injection than with simple dispatch of a shot to the cerebellum," Harper said.

Kentucky has no law against shooting stray dogs.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate followed the House Thursday night in voting, largely along party lines, to increase Medicare premiums. In doing so, both chambers forged ahead without waiting for an overall agreement on how to redesign the Medicare program, which provides health insurance for 37 million people who are elderly or disabled.

It appears likely, but not certain, that Medicare premiums will actually increase in January. The issue is one of many tangled up in a huge confrontation between President Clinton and the Republican-controlled Congress.

By a vote of 52-44, the Senate rejected efforts by Democrats to block the proposed increase in Medicare premiums. On Wednesday, the House, by a vote of 230-197, approved the increase in premiums as part of a stopgap spending bill.

The proposed increase in the monthly premium, to $53.50 from $46.10, is one of the most contentious parts of the Republican plan to cut projected spending on Medicare by $270 billion in the next seven years.

Republicans said the change must be approved soon to take effect Jan. 1, when the premium would otherwise drop to $42.50 a month.

The timing is important for several reasons. If the premium increases in January, it will be covered by a cost-of-living increase in Social Security benefits, which takes effect at the same time. Medicare premiums are deducted from monthly Social Security checks.

But if the premium increased later in 1996, the change would be more noticeable, and it might become a political issue in the presidential election and in Congressional elections.

DAY WATCH

Republican women

The Midland County Republican Women have elected 11 delegates and three alternates to attend the 1995 state convention of the Texas Federation of Republican Women today and Saturday in Amarillo. The delegates are Pat Blackwell, Peggy Gault, Nita Helmer, Elsie Hugly, Joyce Jesek, Phyllis Peek, Margaret Rhea, Marvel Sayers, Phyllis Stine, Trinka Taylor and Frances Terry. The alternates are Mina Fitting, Jane Harmon and Mildred Smead. U.S. Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison will speak at the Saturday night banquet.

Handgun restrictions

FORT WORTH — Attorney General Dan Morales says Texas cities are busily passing locals laws to dismantle portions of the concealed weapons law that goes into effect Jan. 1. One by one, he said, communities are drafting their own lists of prohibited places for concealed handguns. He is urging that the Legislature clarify the new law "as soon as possible," the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported in today's editions. But lawmakers — some of whom say local governments are violating the legislative intent of the "right-to-carry" law — aren't scheduled to meet until 1997, and Gov. George W. Bush has said he is unlikely to call a special session before then. Even so, Morales said disparities between city and county powers to regulate guns must be dealt with, and until then, Texans can expect to see a confusing patchwork of laws and rules to govern their gun-toting on streets, in businesses and on public property.

New citizenship

McALLEN — Sara Orta decided on her birthday last week that it was time for a change. After 101 years as a Mexican citizen, Ms. Orta celebrated her new U.S. citizenship Thursday. Ms. Orta, a Harlingen resident since 1954, was recognized as the oldest of the nearly 300 new citizens from nine countries. Her daughter, Cirila Escalante, 77, joined her for the swearing in. "My daughter and I have lived a tranquil life in Harlingen and I guess the years just passed," Ms. Orta said before the ceremony. "I don't know why I waited so long to become a citizen, but we are here today. Have confidence in God, because he gives us life."

Midland County District Attorney's investigator J.D. Luckie, center, and police detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson speak with Henry Ortiz's wife, Julie Ortiz, left, and daughter, Anna Ortiz in the hallway of the Potter County courthouse while awaiting the sentence.

a glance inside

It is nine months to the day when 10-year-old Julianne Powell was brutally raped and suffocated by Henry Lopez Ortiz. It was a Friday night — Feb. 10 — when Julianne's mother, Lynn Fisher, arrived home to find that her daughter was missing. Julianne last had been heard from 10-15 minutes earlier. Her body was found a few hours later in a laundry hamper in Ortiz's apartment. Her mother had been suspicious of Ortiz, and police reacted quickly, preventing Ortiz from disposing of the child's body. It took almost six weeks to seat a jury and try Ortiz. The trial was conducted in the visiting courtroom of the old Potter County Courthouse where multi-millionaire T. Cullen Davis was tried in the 1970s. The trial was the first time that the Midland County district attorney's office used a piece of new high-tech equipment — the DOAR's Presenter — which served a variety of purposes including controlling the microphone system and displaying evidence. Potter County jurors convicted Ortiz of capital murder on Nov. 1; they sentenced him to life in prison on Wednesday.

Sentence brings end to 6-week ordeal

AMARILLO — Now that the trial of Henry Lopez Ortiz is over, the families of both the victim and Ortiz will try to pick up the pieces and start life again.

It took almost six weeks to seat a jury and try Ortiz, who was found guilty of capital murder Nov. 1. On Wednesday, the nine-man, three-woman jury sentenced him to life in prison instead of death by lethal injection.

Ortiz, 42, will serve life in prison for the Feb. 10 sexual assault, kidnapping and murder of 10-year-old Julianne Powell.

Julianne's mother, Lynn Fisher, and Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre were disappointed by the verdict.

Midland police detective Sgt. B.G. Johnson simply shook his head in disbelief.

Ortiz's family is grateful that he will not be sentenced to death.

Ortiz could have faced death by lethal injection. Instead, he will serve a minimum of 40 years in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

The jury decided Ortiz would be a future danger to society but determined there were mitigating circumstances that earned him a life sentence rather than the death penalty.

Two of the jurors held out for the death penalty. State law requires a unanimous decision in deciding future danger but requires only a 10-to-2 vote for the mitigating circumstances.

New equipment turns proceedings high-tech

AMARILLO — Technology played a part in the capital murder trial of Henry Lopez Ortiz in a Potter County courtroom, with everything from television monitors to a laptop computer and printer in the courtroom.

Ortiz, 42, was convicted Nov. 1 of capital murder for the Feb. 10 kidnapping, sexual assault and murder of Julianne Powell. He was sentenced to life in prison Wednesday.

The trial was one of the first high-tech trials for the Midland County District Attorney's office.

The state used a laptop computer, modem and printer in the courtroom so Assistant District Attorney Ralph Petty could work during court proceedings.

"This is my office," Petty said.

He said that having the computer at his fingertips freed him up to be in court, while being able to print case law for the judge within minutes.

Petty has loaded hundreds of cases with various legal references into the computer. Some of the documents have hundreds of pages, so Petty has an index to help him get to the part he wants.

As an example, he gave confessions and whether the law permits the use of trickery in getting a confession. Within moments, Petty had called up and printed the precise entry he needed.

Petty also assisted the court by developing the court's charge for the jury on the laptop computer.

Courtroom attracts well-publicized cases

AMARILLO — Potter County's visiting courtroom was not only the site of the capital murder trial of Henry Lopez Ortiz, but it was also where millionaire T. Cullen Davis was acquitted of capital murder.

The old courtroom is no longer used by the District Court, which moved to a new courthouse across the street in 1986. The old courthouse was built in 1931.

The old jail was on the old courthouse's top floor, which is now used only has a holding cell for the visiting courtroom and for storage. Ortiz may have been sitting in the same cell where Davis was held.

Ortiz, 42, was convicted Nov. 1 of capital murder for the Feb. 10 kidnapping, sexual assault and murder of Julianne Powell in Midland. He was sentenced to life in prison on Wednesday.

Like most trials held at the visiting courtroom, Ortiz's trial was moved here because of extensive pretrial publicity.

Davis was acquitted of the Aug. 3, 1976, multiple murders in Fort Worth. Several books were written and two television mini-series were made about the case.

Davis, who now lives in Colleyville, had been accused of killing Stan Farr, 30, and his stepdaughter, Andrea Lee Wilburn, 12, and of shooting his ex-wife, Priscilla Davis and Gus Gavrel Jr.

Gotta-have-it-now society places little value on patience

Now, now, now.

Gotta have it now.

Can't wait, hardly.

Fortunately, most of us have to. Often, it is by grand design.

But we wait and anticipate even if sometimes waiting doesn't pay off.

Your ship may not come in.

After all, a blunt realist might say, "If you didn't weigh anchor and didn't send your ship out to sea, what makes you think the vessel will return to dock at your harbor?"

Sobering.

Gotta act before getting, even if grace is your lot.

In many quarters nowadays, anticipation is just about antiquated.

Fact is, so many of our material wants are instantly, or nearly so, granted and satiated if only we have the cash or the credit and the connection, which is usually linked to the former.

Good?

Bad?

Getting it now, right now, just fuels the urge for another void to fill.

Those wished-for things may come too readily for our own health and well-being.

No longer, in today's Fed-Ex, UPS, televised, computerized, fax-it-now, Internet, high-tech, fast-foods, twist-off, touch-button society is patience a treasured virtue. Like the tiger, wolf, bear, elephant, hippo and rhino, highly nurtured patience is increasingly rare and more dear.

Do we not value old-fashioned, home-made ice cream over the store-bought stuff?

Were we not caught up with eagerness in awaiting the postman's or carrier's arrival and the opening of letters, cards, gifts and packages especially in the days of the old Sears, Roebuck & Co.'s mail-order business?

Today, we've got the almost here-now guarantees of L.L. Bean, Land's End and other catalogers.

Are we not amazed by the time, talent, skill and resources that go into most anything handcrafted and true in all details or things restored: airplanes, sailing ships, automobiles, furniture, houses, locomotives and works of art — all both big and small?

ORDEAL: Participants try to move on with lives

After the verdict was announced, the jury foreman said the jurors flip-flopped in their opinions with votes of 8 to 4, 4 to 8 and eventually 10 to 2. He said Ortiz's family life and Christian background before the murder were the biggest factors considered.

Defense attorney H.W. "Woody" Leverett broke down in tears in the back corner of the courtroom a few minutes after the verdict was announced and the courtroom was clearing out.

"I still think he deserves the death penalty, but the jury has spoken," Schorre said. "It's been a long case and the jury gave it a lot of attention ... we are disappointed in the verdict. He should have gotten the death penalty."

Jury selection started Oct. 3, and the trial started Oct. 23.

Testimony described the last day of Julianne's life and Ortiz's state-of-mind on Feb. 10 after he had a bad day at work.

Medical experts testified that the child had been sexually assaulted by Ortiz. Other experts testified about brain damage that Ortiz suffered after a baseball accident in 1977.

Doctors said alcohol, combined with the brain injury, could cause Ortiz to do things he wouldn't ordinarily do when he was sober.

The jury deliberated about an hour before deciding that Ortiz was guilty of capital murder.

During punishment, several experts testified that Ortiz would likely pose a continuing threat to society. Defense experts testified that Ortiz would not pose a threat to others in prison because he will likely be a victim rather than a predator.

A string of friends testified that Ortiz was a "man of God" who ministered to youth and prisoners. A pastor and several men who had been in a youth group led by Ortiz testified that he was a role model and father figure.

One juror said closing arguments by defense attorney Jacqueline Allen influenced him as did her reminder that Ortiz's first 32 years of life were unblemished and he was just "like you and I." She said he worked, raised a family, took his daughter to church and paid his taxes "no different from you and me."

Ms. Allen said he was impaired at the time of the murder and this was not the way he had lived his life. She spoke of his friends and a pastor who testified that Ortiz was active in church, was generous, a father figure and role model.

"Is that the monster the state has described to you? I think not," she said.

Ms. Allen said Ortiz's daughter was the "most telling witness ... and is probably the best indicator that all of Mr. Ortiz's 42 years have not been spent doing bad things."

Ms. Allen spoke of the mental health experts who called Ortiz a step above vegetative and profoundly depressed.

"Ms. Fisher's pain must be unbearable, but killing Mr. Ortiz is not going to bring this child back," Ms. Allen said.

"I wish I had the luxury on Feb. 10, 1995, to stand in apartment 2315 and plead for Julianne Powell's life," said Schorre about the pleas of Ortiz's attorneys for his life.

Ortiz's wife and daughter are returning to Nashville, Tenn., and the rest of his family will try to resume their day-to-day lives, as well.

Ms. Fisher and her sister, Maridell Fryar, returned to Midland immediately after the sentence was returned.

For those involved there was some closure, but the pain, nightmares and memories of the tragedy for both these families never really will end.

HIGH-TECH: Prosecution uses new equipment 1st time of the trial working the DOAR's Presenter that not only displayed evidence for the jury but also controlled the microphone system, which the county staff brought with them.

"We've dazzled these agencies with this equipment," Luckie said.

The equipment works with a lens and light to reproduce a photo, document or other evidence for viewing on television monitors — a 27-inch screen for the jury and one each for the defense and prosecution.

A mixer allows for split screen photos to be used for comparison or for the display of more than one photo at a time.

During the trial, the DOAR's Presenter was used to show and highlight the scratches found on Ortiz's body and how Julianne was found.

The equipment was able to enlarge photos as well as show more details in small photos.

It also was effective in showing photos of Julianne alive and smiling and a photo of her dead.

A laser pointer helped witnesses focus on specific things for the jury to see in the photos.

As the DNA results were displayed on the screen, experts were able to explain to the jurors what they were seeing on the monitor.

This equipment can zoom in on evidence and can even read a fingerprint, Luckie explained.

It can stop frames and change negatives into photographs, Luckie said. A photograph also can be printed.

Existing equipment was used to make the new technology more affordable. The system typically costs somewhere around $20,000, Luckie said.

"We did without other things in our budget to get this," he said. "We used it for the first time on this trial."

"This gives us a chance to see things better."

He said people are so accustomed to seeing things on television, this is just another move toward adjusting to society.

Luckie said the jury has an important job to do and "they should be able to see all the evidence to help (them) make a decision."

He said considering how much it costs to try a case, this can help prevent having to do it more than once.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said one of the psychological reasonings behind using the DOAR's Presenter is that people tend to believe what they see on television, so the evidence seems more real to the jury.

Another benefit is that while a witness is identifying a photo or explaining something about it, the jury can see exactly what the witness is talking about while he is talking about it.

Additionally, instead of passing photos around and delaying the trial or missing key testimony by looking at photos instead of paying attention to testimony, the jury can simply look at the monitor.

"We are very thankful to the county commissioners who didn't back off the expenses of helping get this equipment," Luckie said. "They were committed to seeing justice would be done for Julianne."

AN EYE FOR AN EYE

Those are the words of Jesus in Matthew 5 given to remind us how to love and forgive. God tells us, "vengeance is mine; I will repay." Romans 12:19. For Christians, it is not an "eye for an eye." So is there any justice for Christians who suffer wrong?

Case in point. Henry Ortiz has been found guilty of the brutal rape and murder of 10 year old Julianne Powell. God says her family ought to forgive him? If it were my little girl, such forgiveness may well be life's hardest command. Yet I must learn how. But does that free this man? Genesis 9:6..."Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Yes, Exodus 20:13 does say, "thou shall not kill." But that means "murder." 5 times in Numbers 35 God says, "the avenger shall surely be put to death." Not by the offended. But by God's laws. Romans 13 explains, "let every soul be subject unto the higher powers." Then Romans 13:3, "whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." If you do the crime, God expects the law to punish. Even with death.

Bush gets tax break on lakeside home, reports say

Associated Press

Under a little-used tax law, Gov. George W. Bush and more than a dozen friends qualify for a special property tax break on their East Texas lakeside retreat.

Bush defends the arrangement, saying it is one many Texans can use.

A 1977 measure allows a club to designate property as "recreational, park and scenic land" and reduce its property taxes.

The property must be at least five acres and be covered by a deed restriction for at least 10 years.

The measure has allowed Bush and 17 other people to cut nearly half of their tax liability at their Rainbo Club near Athens in Henderson County, about 90 miles southeast of Dallas, according to reports this week by WFAA-TV, the Austin American-Statesman and The Dallas Morning News.

■ More local/state news/6B

Bush, whose only taxable property is the weekend getaway house, is studying ways to change the state's property tax laws. He defended his personal tax arrangement.

"The question is should you value property based upon its usage?" the governor said. "My answer is yes you should, whether it be for agricultural purposes or hunting and fishing or a homestead."

The Rainbo Club owns 1,187 acres and pays the taxes. Members lease the land — three acres in Bush's case — and own their homes. The homes are appraised at fair market value. Bush's house and guest cottage are valued at $54,280.

In 1994, Bush paid $931.28 in property taxes. He paid $343 to the club to cover his share of the property taxes assessed on the club-owned land. He also pays the club $6.96 to cover taxes assessed at fair market value on club-owned structures valued at about $78,000.

Henderson County Appraisal District records show the 1,187 acres would be valued at $652,850 if assessed at fair market value. Under the special appraisal, the assessment falls to $258,400.

The total annual property tax bill — paid by the club and divided among the owners — is $6,174. At fair market value, the annual tax bill would be $13,534.

Bush bought into the club in December 1991.

The group turned to the recreational and scenic land provision in 1992 after Henderson County officials stripped the property of an agricultural-use exemption that had lowered the tax bite. The tax break hinges on a deed restriction limiting the land's use through 2011.

Bush said the recreational designation is available to many Texans.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Go all-out to show the object of your affections how responsible you can be. Business changes could make this winter a time of great opportunity and growth. Retirement need not be dull. Make your post-work years truly golden by plunging into a whole new field. Problems with relatives can be resolved. A love letter works magic. Marriage beckons as next summer approaches. Keep your present job or home until something really fabulous comes along.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DAY: songwriter Donna Fargo, actress Ann Reinking, Protestant Reformation leader Martin Luther, Native American activist Russell Means.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Get as much work done as possible today in order to spend a worry-free weekend. Your spirits are lifted by a short business trip. Begin your holiday shopping.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Two heads are better than one today. A friendship will be loving and lasting if based on mutual respect. Act confident when negotiating a business deal.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Closer communication and cooperation between family members can help you achieve your aims. Avoid entering into secret negotiations; outsiders will view you with suspicion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Business travel will be very rewarding if you stick to a budget. Doing some consumer research before you make a major purchase will save you a bundle.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give financial concerns top priority today. Apply for a loan. Additional income could come through advertising or free-lance work. An older person offers well-intentioned advice.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Review your financial situation with your accountant. Limit credit card debt by paying cash for new purchases. A sense of fair play helps you make wise decisions. Set up a regular bill payment schedule.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Teamwork is essential when starting a family-owned business. Romance may have to wait. State your views in a frank but calm manner, rejecting superficial answers. Seek better rapport with all members of your household.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Getting better organized will reduce confusion. Initiate budget and financial talks. Working in solitude proves highly productive. Remain goal-oriented where business is concerned. Pay attention to loved ones' needs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Blend in with the crowd rather than going out on a limb alone. Influential people applaud your efforts to be part of a team. Sharing confidences causes warm feelings to run deep. Harmony prevails.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A well-researched investment will produce a nice pay-off. A promotion or special perks is possible. Your congenial attitude and urbane manner gets a new relationship off to a great start. Plan ahead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Romance heats up this weekend. Accepting someone's offer will signal a wish to become closer. Are you ready? If not, distance yourself from this person. As your social circle widens, wonderful plans take shape.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Give top priority to projects that will tax your mental prowess. Your intuition is right on target. Someone makes an interesting proposition. Seek legal advice before signing a contract.

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1NT	Pass	4♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ◇

The basic finesse is one of the simplest plays in bridge. But just because it is routine does not mean it should be employed at every opportunity.

The auction was good, old-fashioned standard American. After North opened one no trump, South knew where the hand should be played and got there by the most direct method.

West led the king of diamonds and, in response to partner's encouraging six, continued with the ace and another, declarer ruffing East's ten. It was obvious that, if one of the two finesses worked, there would be 10 tricks. Declarer drew two rounds of trumps, ending in hand, cashed the ace of clubs and continued with a club to the jack. That lost to the queen, and declarer ruffed the diamond return.

It was time for the second finesse. That, too, lost — down one. It was not a good day for finessers.

That is particularly true since the hand can be made without taking a single finesse! The play of the first three tricks all but marks East with the queen of diamonds, so declarer should draw trumps, in three rounds if necessary, ending on the table, and then lead the jack of diamonds, discarding a heart from hand when East produces the queen. Down to nothing but hearts and clubs, East must lead into one of dummy's tenaces to give declarer the 10th trick.

What if West turns up with the queen of diamonds? Declarer ruffs the fourth diamond and must fall back on one of two finesses

Pavarotti's voice stumbles on reach for high C's in his Act 1-ending aria

NEW YORK — The King of the High C's temporarily lost his title — and his voice.

King of High C's temporarily loses title — and his voice.

Luciano Pavarotti, singing the role of Tonio in Donizetti's "Daughter of the Regiment" at the Metropolitan Opera on Wednesday, stumbled as he reached for the first in a series of high C's in his Act 1-ending aria.

Several audience members gasped. Pavarotti finished without attempting any of the eight other high C's that make the aria one of the ultimate challenges for a tenor.

The 60-year-old superstar didn't come out for the customary curtain call. His understudy went on for Act 2 after Met general manager Joseph Volpe told the audience Pavarotti was suffering from phlegm on his vocal cords.

The role of Tonio helped establish Pavarotti's reputation when he sang it at the Met opposite Joan Sutherland in 1973. Audiences went wild over his seemingly effortless mastery of the perilous high C's.

But 22 years later, his voice has lost some of its agility, and it surprised many when he decided to tackle the part again. Still, he had made it through Saturday night's opening performance, hitting the high C's respectably, if a bit cautiously.

NEW YORK — So who's it going to be for Christopher Darden? His fellow prosecutor in the Trial of the Century, Marcia Clark? Or the focus of the Senate Hearing of the Century, Anita Hill?

Darden and Clark have insisted they aren't an item. But on Thursday, the Daily News cited unidentified sources in Los Angeles as saying Darden is seeing Hill, the Oklahoma law professor who accused Clarence Thomas of sexual harassment.

Hill and Darden were recently photographed together at a Los Angeles hotel. One source told the News that Darden laughed off speculation he was linked to Clark by telling a friend, "Doesn't everybody know? I'm with Anita Hill."

Hill didn't immediately return a call Thursday. Darden agent Norman Brokaw said: "Chris dates a lot of girls. Anita Hill is a friend. I don't know if they're romantically involved."

NEW YORK — Michael Jackson denied he's strapped for cash and said he didn't "sell" his Beatles music catalog to Sony Corp.

He called the $95 million deal a "merger," not a sale.

"It's just a great move, a corporate, entrepreneurial thing to do," Jackson said in Thursday's USA Today. "It's smart business. It's about growth. Everything in life to me is about growth."

The deal had led to reports that Jackson was spending too much on lawsuits and luxuries and needed the cash.

Jackson lawyer John Branca said Jackson originally wanted to buy the rights to father-in-law Elvis Presley's "Heartbreak Hotel," but Sony's U.S. chief, Michael Schulhof, reportedly told him the rights weren't for sale.

LOS ANGELES — Bruce Willis and Demi Moore want the one thing they can't get in Hollywood — a normal life.

Willis told the TV show "Extra" that he and his wife moved to Hailey, Idaho, from Los Angeles for the sake of their three children. Willis' mother, Marlena, lives in town.

"Hollywood is or can be a very toxic place," the "Die Hard" star said in an interview scheduled for broadcast Friday. "And I'm trying to keep that away from my kids as much as I can."

BONN, Germany — Marlene Dietrich was no Joan Crawford.

"She never hit. But she could look at you and turn you to ice," said Dietrich's daughter, Maria Riva, who like Crawford's daughter wrote an unflattering book about her movie-star mom.

Daughter says Marlene Dietrich could turn you to ice.

"I was her handmaid. She was the queen," the 70-year-old Riva said.

Dietrich saw her daughter, her husband and her lovers as instruments to help create and preserve the legend she became, Riva said in a recent interview.

"When I was a child, I thought all children cleaned (their mother's) shoes and put them away," Riva said.

Lonely, addicted to sleeping pills and to alcohol, the 90-year-old Dietrich died three years ago in her Paris apartment.

State board decides to fund art, spelling textbooks

AUSTIN (AP) — State Board of Education members, deciding to fund art or spelling books, drew a line down the middle Thursday.

The board's committees on students and school finance, meeting jointly, voted to cut an art book funding proposal from $45 million to $23 million in grades 1-5.

The remaining $22 million would be redirected to help schools buy spelling books for grades 1-6. Board members also want to add $5.35 million in additional funds.

Full board action is expected today on the proposal, which would put the new books in the classroom beginning in the 1997-98 school year. It's part of an overall proposal to spend about $360 million for new textbooks in various subjects for 1998-99.

Board member Robert Offutt of San Antonio, who offered the compromise proposal, said it reflects a move back to the more traditional method of teaching spelling by using a separate book for the subject.

Reading books adopted recently by the state had moved to a different approach in which spelling and other language art components are taught together. Separate spellers haven't been financed by the state under that approach, he said, although some school districts have paid for their own.

The president of the Texas Art Education Association, Kay Savay, said the art book funding will help. She said the last time the state adopted art books for elementary students was 30 years ago.

CASES: Trial follows well-known others

Davis as the gunman who was wearing a black wig at the time of the shooting. Despite those identifications, the jury acquitted the millionaire.

The jury selection for Davis' trial lasted seven weeks; the trial itself lasted 12 weeks. He was acquitted on Nov. 17, 1977.

In another trial in the courtroom, former attorney George Lott, 47, was convicted of capital murder in the July 1, 1992, shooting spree at the Tarrant County Courthouse that left two attorneys dead and three people wounded.

It was a capital crime because of the multiple deaths.

Lott fired 21 rounds in the courthouse. Police found in his van 700 rounds of ammunition and a list of people's addresses and phone numbers. Lott later turned himself in to a Dallas television station.

The former attorney was in a custody battle with his ex-wife and had been charged with child molestation in another state where his wife and son lived.

Lott handled his own defense and didn't file court documents for appeals to halt his execution. He was executed on Sept. 20, 1994.

That which they enjoy are products of the seasons.

So, too, are gaiety and honor. Neither just happens.

Now, each time we enjoy anything good, whether it be a movie, a book, a photograph, a lecture, a character, a story, a sunrise, a sunset, a flight, a walk, a run, a swim, food or conversation, we ought to consider the time it took to bring each to fruition. They didn't "just happen." It took patience and focus and time.

New Alabama biology textbooks to say evolution is theory, not fact

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The Alabama school board voted Thursday to include a message in new biology textbooks telling students evolution is a theory not a fact.

The insert was requested by members of the conservative Eagle Forum and others who contend evolution is presented in the textbooks as indisputable. A science curriculum adopted by the board in March requires that evolution be taught as a theory.

The message was approved 6-1 by the board. One member abstained, and Gov. Fob James, who is president of the board, could not vote or attend a public hearing because of a scheduling conflict.

The Republican governor demonstrated his support for the message before the hearing with a comical depiction of an ape evolving into a human. He said he believes the Bible's account of God creating life.

The insert begins, "This textbook discusses evolution, a controversial theory some scientists present as a scientific explanation for the origin of living things, such as plants, animals and humans.

"No one was present when life first appeared on Earth. Therefore, any statement about life's origins should be considered as theory, not fact."

The message of about 250 words ends with: "Study hard and keep an open mind. Someday you may contribute to the theories of how living things appeared on Earth."

Ethel Hall, the board vice president who cast the lone dissenting vote, said the wording of the insert is too complicated for ninth graders.

"It has more to do with people's religious beliefs that they can't separate" from scientific thought, she said.

SILVER JEWELRY HANDCAST FROM SILVER INGOTS RECOVERED FROM A SPANISH GALLEON SHIPWRECKED IN 1622

In September, 1622, during a hurricane off the Florida Keys, the Spanish galleon "Nuestra Senora de Atocha" sank to the ocean floor. She took down with her a most generous cargo of silver and gold not to be seen again for more than three centuries. On July 20, 1985, after fifteen years of heartache, hard work and frustration, the resting place of the lower hull of the Atocha was located by Mel Fisher's Treasure Salvors, Inc. They painstakingly retrieved the fabulous Treasure that had been destined for King Phillip IV of Spain.

Part of the 365 year old bounty, in the form of silver ingots, has been skillfully wrought into exquisite jewelry depicting the period of its disappearance: tall ships, anchors, crucifixes, Spanish crowns and sand dollar earrings, rings, pendants, chains, medallions and more. Each piece bears the stamp "Atocha 1622" and comes with a certificate of authenticity.

This precious cargo has reached a new destination, JCPenney... and the ultimate destination: YOU.

FAMILY MATTERS

Family's continuing division needs to be healed

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Here is a sensitive issue which I have not yet seen you discuss in your column.

The youngest of my sisters was 19 years old when she became pregnant by and married a 25-year-old black man. The interracial issue has completely divided our family.

May

The most severe result in my opinion is the effect it has had on my father. He continues to suffer health problems which I contribute fully to my sister's decision. Initially, my father threw my sister out of his house. It was an open and closed issue as far as he was concerned. This particular sister has tempted fate from the beginning by never going on the pill to prevent pregnancy. As a result, she has five mixed-race children. My father has never held her children responsible for her mistakes. He has 30 grandchildren and he treats these five the same as the rest. He did make it perfectly clear that he did not want any dealings with her husband whatsoever.

One of the oldest grandchildren got married this summer. My father attended the wedding because several of his grandchildren were in the wedding and he wanted to be a part of it. He was uncomfortable as was everyone else as a result of the interracial issue being ever present.

In addition, as a result of the interracial couple attending the wedding, my brother refused to attend. This hurt my niece's feelings as she decided to take his not attending personally. She did not offer any kind of compromise, such as the interracial couple attending the wedding and not attending the rehearsal dinner, but she still thinks she has the right to take it personally.

My brother has a teenage daughter who he instructed to have nothing to do with this particular sister because of his views. My brother's daughter begged her grandmother to talk to the forbidden aunt (largely to spite her father in my opinion). Grandma gave in and now my brother refuses to speak to my other.

This sister has always been starved for affection. She was always asking, "Do you love me?" so many times that it ended up being quite annoying. I personally think the fact that she has always been extremely insecure is one of the reasons she fell into the arms of the first man who told her he loved her. She thrives on the attention that their interracial marriage brings. She likes that everyone stares at her and she has their attention, be it disgust or otherwise. What really bothers me is that she seems to be happier as the division she caused in the family multiplies.

I hold her personally responsible for causing a multitude of sorrows within our family and my bitterness is showing. What do you suggest? UPSET

DEAR UPSET: I encourage your family to take another approach and look at the man, not the color of his skin. For example, does he love and treat your sister appropriately? Does he love and care for his children? Does he provide for his family? Is he a man of God? and so on. I encourage you to apply the same criteria to him and your sister that you do to the rest of the family.

Christ teaches us over and over that it is our spirit (what we cannot see) that matters, not the body (which we can see). Your family has suffered greatly. A place to start to end the suffering might be to meet with your father, mother, sisters and brothers to discuss this situation as a family. I believe that families need to support and love each other. Forgiveness and reconciliation are in God's plan for our lives. Perhaps when you meet, you could all discuss your brother-in-law's good points. There is nothing in your letter to suggest that he is not a good husband and father.

You already know how the present approach affects the family and how bad it feels — your family is divided and becoming bitter. It may be time to try another approach. Perhaps it is time to consider reconciliation and acceptance. I do not want to sound "preachy" about this situation, but I strongly believe that as St. Paul said, "...there are three things that last: faith, hope and love; and the greatest of these is love." Your father set an example by attending and participating in his granddaughter's wedding. His love overcame his beliefs. I encourage you family to consider the path of reconciliation — it can lead to "a peace that passes understanding."

THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES OFFER THE FOLLOWING TIPS ON "STOPPING THE REPORT CARD REFLEX":

- Sit down with your child and look over the report card.
- Praise your child. Find at least one good thing: attendance, no tardies.
- Be calm! Let your child tell you about his or her grades.
- Ask how you can help your child do better.
- Ask what your child can do to make better grades.
- Make a plan with your child's teacher and your child to do better.

DEAR ABBY

Single mom learns it takes entire village to help raise her children

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I never expressed my appreciation to my ex-husband for the few child support checks he sent to help support our three children, but I would like to publicly thank the following people who will recognize themselves:

Van Buren

Thank you to the grocer who cashed the occasional support checks I received — and held the ones that bounced until I could make them good.

Thank you to the parents who took my children with them on vacations I never could afford — even though I worked full-time while holding down several part-time jobs.

Thank you to the doctor and the dentist who charged me less than their regular rates for my children.

Thank you to my principal for paying me to paint the interior of his house so I could buy groceries during the last three weeks of summer before school resumed.

Thank you to the superintendent who valued me enough to ignore the demeaning letters from my ex-husband.

Thank you to the farmers who hired my sons to clean their chicken coops and help with harvesting their hay crops. What you paid them was their only spending money.

It has been more than 20 years since you opened your hearts to my children and me — but if you could see the two lawyers and Ph.D. chemist they became, you'd know we did a good job with the kids. Abby, I'm sure that most other single mothers have similar thank-yous to offer. — THANKFUL IN VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY: You really blew it! Your answer to the lady who had a friend whose daughter had an incontinent dog was terrible. Your suggestion that she leave the dog in a motel that permitted dogs was really the pits.

I am the general manager of a motel. We allow pets, although they cannot be left unattended in the room. Even the best behaved dogs will bark at the strange sounds in a strange place.

But an incontinent pet! I wouldn't want one in my motel under any circumstances.

Abby, how would you like to be a housekeeper for this person's room? Most probably, the carpet would have to be removed to relieve the room of its odor. Pretty expensive solution to this problem. I think you owe an apology to all motel keepers. — DIXIE COOPER, SUPER 8 MOTEL, HAVRE, MONT.

DEAR DIXIE COOPER: Oops! A thousand apologies for my unenlightened advice concerning the incontinent dog. Too late did I become aware that there are "diapers" for dogs.

If and when I ever go to Montana, I'll ask Jane and Ted if they can put me up for a night or two. (I don't bark, and I don't need diapers.)

DEAR ABBY: How do you deal with a husband who always leaves the toilet seat up, regardless of how many times you remind him to put it down?

Abby, I can't count the number of times I've fallen in in the middle of the night. We are not newlyweds; we've been married for 12 years, and he still hasn't learned. — FLUSTERED IN FLUSHING

DEAR FLUSTERED: Try leaving the seat up. Then you will be less apt to forget, and may eventually treat him to the same experience. (Once should be enough.) Or, visit a bath shop or watch your mail-order catalogs for a beeper that goes off when the seat is left up — which will act as a reminder to your absent-minded husband.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CHARLIE IN CINCINNATI: Samuel Johnson said, "Every animal revenges his pains upon those who happen to be near." Man is no exception.

Presidential 'candidate' offers new (but old) reasons for running

By Bill Goodykoontz
N.Y. Times News Service

When it comes to politics, are you frustrated with the status quo? Down on Democrats? Repulsed by Republicans? Ignoring independents?

Are you under the impression that when it comes to issues, all of the candidates flip-flop like live fish in a frying pan?

Well then, it is my duty as an American to let you know about an alternative out there. Of course I refer to . . . Colin Powell? Apparently not. Besides, if he wasn't signing books, he was in seclusion. President? I think he was running for J.D. Salinger.

No, I'm talking about Dale J. Pritchard, of St. Louis.

I first came across Pritchard's candidacy when one of his press releases crossed my desk. Immediately, I was taken by the reasons he listed for running, including:

- "I need a job."
- "The money, and you can get a good credit rating."
- "Power. It would be fun to order people around."
- "The inauguration party."
- "Living in the White House would be better than my apartment."
- "I want to meet movie stars."

I must admit, after looking at his platform, my first reaction was to consider running myself.

But after much contemplation, I decided against it, a decision that had absolutely nothing to do with whatever college pranks a thorough background check might have turned up, because things were different then and everyone did that kind of stuff, anyway.

Instead, I gave Pritchard a call.

"I've just become so disillusioned with politics," he said, noting that he used to be an active member of the Republican Party.

"It sounds cynical, but I think it's become a joke. Clinton is moving to the center, Dole is trying to become Pat Robertson. Perot, you know, is really bizarre, too.

"I think I'm the least bizarre of the people running. I just decided that I was a logical choice."

Despite what his press release says, Pritchard does have a job — he's a former Lutheran minister turned free-lance writer.

"You probably think, 'He's a little nuts,' or something like that," he said.

"I'm basically a pretty normal, rational person. But I think I'm being driven insane by the political process."

Pritchard kicked off his campaign by mailing his press release to major newspapers. Then he sent a batch to local television and radio stations. Now he's concentrating on local newspapers. He sends about five releases a day, and he's gotten a good response.

Total campaign costs so far: About $100.

Of course, Pritchard isn't really taking this whole campaign business seriously.

"Some people think it's real," he said. "It's so bizarre."

On the other hand, he really does plan to vote for himself, and hopes that others will, too.

"I'm going for several dozen" votes, he said.

"Who knows? I mean, 19 percent of the population voted for Perot, and he's more nuts than I am."

Let's see, then. He's not really running, but he does hope to get some votes. Makes as much sense as Pat Buchanan to me.

So why run at all?

"Basically, to fulfill my ego, like all other politicians," he said.

"To get attention. To think that I'm important. I'm getting reporters calling me — that's a nice way to be interrupted at home. I like it a lot."

I think he was kidding.

As we said our goodbyes, Pritchard thanked me for calling. "It'll help my ego," he said.

Not your ego, I corrected him, your campaign.

"No, no, it's all about my ego," he said.

Hmm. Maybe he is serious.

olunteering keeps retiree's life active

e block of stone was given as minder of his hard work, but o symbolizes Forrest Under- d: solid, dependable, unbend- n his determination and com- nent.

etirement was a familiar top- Underwood when he retired at om Shell Pipeline. A 45-year loyee, part of his duties had to counsel others about rement and their company efits.

was aware that I had to stay ve," said Underwood. He and wife, Tommie, built a house in land County and established irrigation system. That kept m busy the first two years. en I began looking for some- g else to do."

s a result of his search, Under- d today is known for his vol- eer work with the Midland nty Public Library and ends of the Library, Permian sin Petroleum Museum's Santa a Club and St. Luke's United thodist Church Prime Timers b. At 81, he's thinking of slow- down to allow younger people ir chance at these volunteer s.

He started with Friends of the brary upon the recommendation a former co-worker. "In 1982, I gan to carry books from the rary to the Friends' bookdrop. haul books every Wednesday d I still move books."

Underwood paused for a oment before adding with a ugh, "Anyone with a pickup can lunteer anywhere he wants."

That delivery job turned into a iends board job and then an dvisory Board job with the coun- — all during the frenzied peri- of looking for a new librarian and iding a new facility.

Underwood was appointed by e County Commission to the brary's Advisory Board. This mall group of concerned citizens ssists the librarian in making ay-to-day decisions on operating e facility. He served five years n this board, the first three being ppointed and the latter two as resident of the Friends board. nd during expansion of the brary, Underwood also served on e building committee. It was a me of clearing major hurdles.

The first hurdle was finding a new librarian to replace the person who resigned for another position elsewhere. After interviewing several applicants the Advisory Board recommended Sandra Wegner, who had been working as assistant librarian. Then came the petition drive for a new library. And once that was accomplished and the County Commissioners had committed $2.5 million, the board had to find another $2.5 million to build the structure.

The polished block of stone in Underwood's house came from the old library and was topped with a gold plate to commemorate his service on the Building Committee.

"Forrest had a lot of responsibility during an extremely busy time at the library," said Mrs. Wegner.

"The library is lucky to be the recipient of his volunteer time. He has a good sense of humor and I enjoy being around him. While he's no longer on the Friends' or Advisory Board, he's in here every Wednesday hauling those books (to the Friends' storage facility). As long as he can push that dolly, he'll be in here working," she added with a laugh. "I always look forward to having a short conversation with him."

The public library isn't Underwood's only interest. About the same time he delved into the Friends, he and his wife joined the Santa Rita Club. The couple work in the Gift Shop every Monday afternoon and have accumulated 1,600 hours of volunteer time since 1982. Underwood also has helped refurbish some of the exhibits, served on the club's board and on various committees, and as a docent for adult tours.

And the Prime Timers at St. Luke's have experienced Underwood's leadership as president. This group of retirees meets once a month for a covered dish luncheon. But they also lend their talents to take care of a large flower bed at the church's entrance and to raise money for a sound system. Over the years, Underwood said, he has held various offices administratively and with Sunday School.

But that's not the end of his resume on volunteersim. It includes time with Christmas in April and the city's volunteer program, and as a substitute driver on holidays for Meals on Wheels.

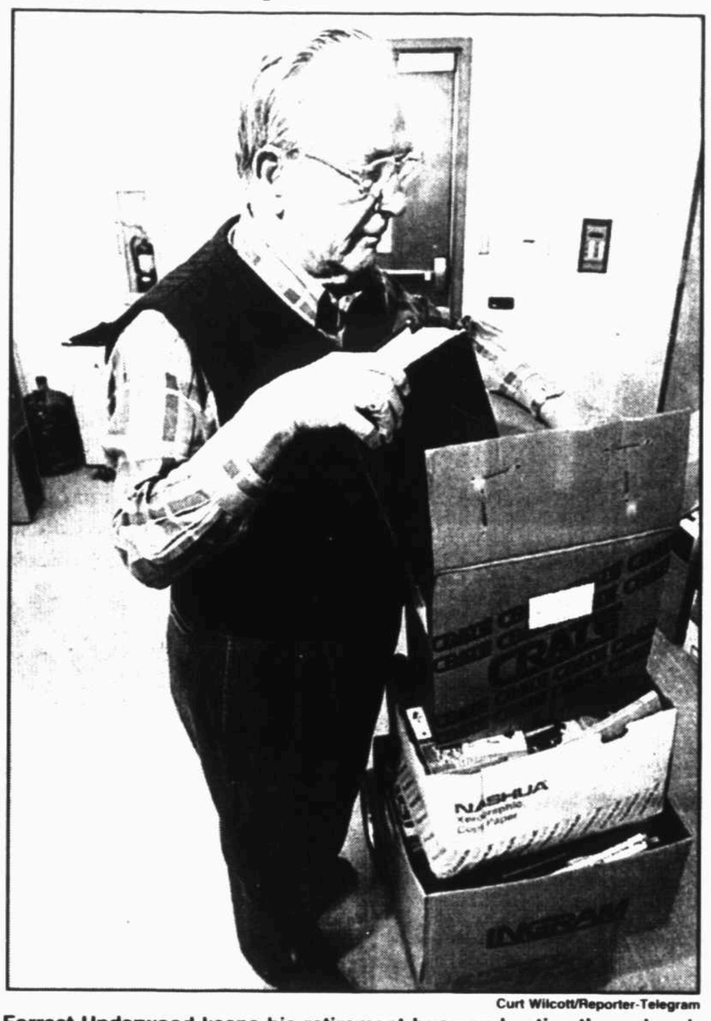
Retirement is simply a continuation of being needed, only in a different way than during the working years, in Underwood's opinion.

"People who are miserable in retirement don't feel they are accomplishing anything. They had a job and felt needed" and haven't found a substitute such as a volunteer job. "I'm the one who's benefiting from this voluntering. I'm helping myself. People wo do things they think are worthwhile feel they are accomplishing something."

Finding something to stay active and keep the mind stimulated is part of the formula for Underwood's energy. He learned how to operate a computer and "I love it. It's a mental stimulation and I find I need it.

"And I chose my parents well," he chuckled. His father died at 97, his mother at 78.

Like the block of stone, Underwood remains solid in his life — an enthusiastic volunteer who has enjoyed using his gifts to help others.



Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Forrest Underwood keeps his retirement busy and active through volunteer work with several area agencies. Underwood, shown loading books for the Friends of the Library's on-going book drive for the annual book sale, is well-known for his service to Midland County Public Library and its Friends. He also volunteers for the Petroleum Museum's Santa Rita Club and St. Luke's United Methodist Church's Prime Time Club.

Big community benefits grow from little seeds

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

The Lord works in a mysterious manner, his wonders to behold! Talk about mustard seeds and fertile soil — listen to this wonderous tale!

Page

As an example, look at Midland, Texas, during Lent in 1979 when the rector of Holy Trinity Church (now the Right Rev. Sam Hulsey, Bishop) sermonized on the Hospice movement then receiving recognition in England.

Sharon Holman, a church member, subsequently visited two Hospices in that country, bringing considerable material to which was added information garnered from the National Hospice Organization and other Hospices. Similar sharing of experience regarding both successes and failures has proven to be productive asset to the Hospice movement.

The next step was the formation of a steering committee consisting of physcians, nurses, priests, lawyers, pharmacists and financiers who spent 10 months in active research, finally culminating in a community-based program encouraging local education involving 100 speeches and institutional visits. With local physicians' backing, the "Hospice Program for Midland" was adopted by the Chamber of Commerce.

In January 1981 the steering committee became a board of directors, and Hospice of Midland (HOM) became licensed by the State of Texas as a Home Health Care Agency (not "Hospice of the Southwest," which developed later and is totally unrelated to the above). Funds for HOM were raised in conjunction with the American Cancer Society. An 11-week volunteer training progam graduated 40 volunteers and the project got off the a flying start — all on a home-grown basis.

Both state and national recognition has resulted from the high standard of care, the degree of community involvement and the expert management of the finances, all derived from either Medicare or community donations. The fact that 87.6 percent of the dollar goes directly to actual patient care, constituting an excellent example of what a nonprofit organization can accomplish.

The focus of Hospice is on patients with terminal illnesses and limited life expectancy on whom curative attempts have proven to be of no avail. Pain control and symptom management are achieved by individualized organizational plans of family doctors and the Hospice team. Emotional support is provided by nurses, social workers, chaplains and well-trained volunteers. Medicare access is provided to pay for medication, medical equipment and supplies, and nutritional supplements. This includes wheelchairs, hospital beds, bedside commondes, catheters, dressings, etc. Specialized therapies such as speech, occupational, respiratory and muscial can be ordered by the physician for palliative care. Family counseling and bereavement programs have proven to be very helpful. Telephone support is available day and night.

Hospitalization is available at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center when directly related to the Hospice diagnosis if home management seems inadequate. Patients in institutions such as Midland Presbyterian Homes can be cared for on a cooperative team basis by the staff at both facilities.

Thank God and all his able cohorts for creating a guiding light to ameiorate man's darkest hour.

By Dr. Michael L. Freedman

NEW YORK (AP) — If the calves of your legs begin to ache when you walk, keep on walking.

The pain is caused by a condition called claudication, poor circulation caused by blockage of the leg arteries. It occurs primarily in older people and can be associated with coronary artery disease. One person in 50 over the age of 65 suffers from claudication.

It's sometimes treated with medications and, in severe cases, by surgery. But a study has found that the best treatment for claudication is exercise rehabilitation — in plain language, walking.

Researchers at the Claude Pepper Older Americans Independence Center of the University of Maryland and the Baltimore Veterans Affairs Medical Center looked at 33 studies reporting on the use of exercise rehabilitation for claudication pain. Their conclusion: "The optimal exercise program for improving claudication pain ... uses intermittent walking to near-maximal pain during a program of at least six months."

Such programs had sessions that lasted at least 30 minutes for at least three times a week. The best programs had patients walk until the pain became severe. Other forms of exercise didn't help much.

But the pain paid off. Patients who went through such programs more than doubled the distance they could walk before claudication pain started.

The programs used treadmills on which patents could walk. But there's nothing to prevent anyone from going for a good walk on any given day. It will pay off in the long run — sorry, walk.

Older people shouldn't grumble when they have to take an eye test before having their driving licenses renewed. A new study finds a lower rate of highway deaths for persons 70 and over in states that require vision tests for drivers.

There is a similar but smaller life-saving effect for states that require tests of driving knowledge for license renewal.

The study covered the years 1985 through 1989, a time when 38 states required vision tests and four also required a driving knowledge test for license renewal.

Looking at the fatality rate for accidents involving at least one driver 70 or older, researchers at Johns Hopkins University and the University of Baltimore found the 70-and-over auto death rate was 7 percent lower in states with vision tests and 9 percent lower in states with both vision and knowledge tests. Older people don't drive as many miles as younger persons, but they have higher crash rates per mile driven than anyone other than 16-to-24-year-old drivers. The crash rate increases steadily after age 70, most likely because of increased visual difficulties and decreased reflexes, the researchers said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Family's continuing division needs to be healed

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Here is a sensitive issue which I have not yet seen you discuss in your column.

The youngest of my sisters was 19 years old when she became pregnant by and married a 25-year-old black man. The interracial issue has completely divided our family.

May

The most severe result in my opinion is the effect it has had on my father. He continues to suffer health problems which I contribute fully to my sister's decision. Initially, my father threw my sister out of his house. It was an open and closed issue as far as he was concerned. This particular sister has tempted fate from the beginning by never going on the pill to prevent pregnancy. As a result, she has five mixed-race children. My father has never held her children responsible for her mistakes. He has 30 grandchildren and he treats these five the same as the rest. He did make it perfectly clear that he did not want any dealings with her husband whatsoever.

One of the oldest grandchildren got married this summer. My father attended the wedding because several of his grandchildren were in the wedding and he wanted to be a part of it. He was uncomfortable as was everyone else as a result of the interracial issue being ever present.

In addition, as a result of the interracial couple attending the wedding, my brother refused to attend. This hurt my niece's feelings as she decided to take his not attending personally. She did not offer any kind of compromise, such as the interracial couple attending the wedding and not attending the rehearsal dinner, but she still thinks she has the right to take it personally.

My brother has a teenage daughter who he instructed to have nothing to do with this particular sister because of his views. My brother's daughter begged her grandmother to talk to the forbidden aunt (largely to spite her father in my opinion). Grandma gave in and now my brother refuses to speak to my other.

This sister has always been starved for affection. She was always asking, "Do you love me?" so many times that it ended up being quite annoying. I personally think the fact that she has always been extremely insecure is one of the reasons she fell into the arms of the first man who told her he loved her. She thrives on the attention that their interracial marriage brings. She likes that everyone stares at her and she has their attention, be it disgust or otherwise. What really bothers me is that she seems to be happier as the division she caused in the family multiplies.

I hold her personally responsible for causing a multitude of sorrows within our family and my bitterness is showing. What do you suggest? UPSET

DEAR UPSET: I encourage your family to take another approach and look at the man, not the color of his skin. For example, does he love and treat your sister appropriately? Does he love and care for his children? Does he provide for his family? Is he a man of God? and so on. I encourage you to apply the same criteria to him and your sister that you do to the rest of the family.

Christ teaches us over and over that it is our spirit (what we cannot see) that matters, not the body (which we can see). Your family has suffered greatly. A place to start to end the suffering might be to meet with your father, mother, sisters and brothers to discuss this situation as a family. I believe that families need to support and love each other. Forgiveness and reconciliation are in God's plan for our lives. Perhaps when you meet, you could all discuss your brother-in-law's good points. There is nothing in your letter to suggest that he is not a good husband and father.

You already know how the present approach affects the family and how bad it feels — your family is divided and becoming bitter. It may be time to try another approach. Perhaps it is time to consider reconciliation and acceptance. I do not want to sound "preachy" about this situation, but I strongly believe that as St. Paul said, "...there are three things that last: faith, hope and love; and the greatest of these is love." Your father set an example by attending and participating in his granddaughter's wedding. His love overcame his beliefs. I encourage you family to consider the path of reconciliation — it can lead to "a peace that passes understanding."

THE CENTERS FOR CHILDREN AND FAMILIES OFFER THE FOLLOWING TIPS ON "STOPPING THE REPORT CARD REFLEX":

- Sit down with your child and look over the report card.
- Praise your child. Find at least one good thing: attendance, no tardies.
- Be calm! Let your child tell you about his or her grades.
- Ask how you can help your child do better.
- Ask what your child can do to make better grades.
- Make a plan with your child's teacher and your child to do better.

DEAR ABBY

Single mom learns it takes entire village to help raise her children

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I never expressed my appreciation to my ex-husband for the few child support checks he sent to help support our three children, but I would like to publicly thank the following people who will recognize themselves:

Van Buren

Thank you to the grocer who cashed the occasional support checks I received — and held the ones that bounced until I could make them good.

Thank you to the parents who took my children with them on vacations I never could afford — even though I worked full-time while holding down several part-time jobs.

Thank you to the doctor and the dentist who charged me less than their regular rates for my children.

Thank you to my principal for paying me to paint the interior of his house so I could buy groceries during the last three weeks of summer before school resumed.

Thank you to the superintendent who valued me enough to ignore the demeaning letters from my ex-husband.

Thank you to the farmers who hired my sons to clean their chicken coops and help with harvesting their hay crops. What you paid them was their only spending money.

It has been more than 20 years since you opened your hearts to my children and me — but if you could see the two lawyers and Ph.D. chemist they became, you'd know we did a good job with the kids. Abby, I'm sure that most other single mothers have similar thank-yous to offer. — THANKFUL IN VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY: You really blew it! Your answer to the lady who had a friend whose daughter had an incontinent dog was terrible. Your suggestion that she leave the dog in a motel that permitted dogs was really the pits.

I am the general manager of a motel. We allow pets, although they cannot be left unattended in the room. Even the best behaved dogs will bark at the strange sounds in a strange place.

But an incontinent pet! I wouldn't want one in my motel under any circumstances.

Abby, how would you like to be a housekeeper for this person's room? Most probably, the carpet would have to be removed to relieve the room of its odor. Pretty expensive solution to this problem. I think you owe an apology to all motel keepers. — DIXIE COOPER, SUPER 8 MOTEL, HAVRE, MONT.

DEAR DIXIE COOPER: Oops! A thousand apologies for my unenlightened advice concerning the incontinent dog. Too late did I become aware that there are "diapers" for dogs.

If and when I ever go to Montana, I'll ask Jane and Ted if they can put me up for a night or two. (I don't bark, and I don't need diapers.)

DEAR ABBY: How do you deal with a husband who always leaves the toilet seat up, regardless of how many times you remind him to put it down?

Abby, I can't count the number of times I've fallen in in the middle of the night. We are not newlyweds; we've been married for 12 years, and he still hasn't learned. — FLUSTERED IN FLUSHING

DEAR FLUSTERED: Try leaving the seat up. Then you will be less apt to forget, and may eventually treat him to the same experience. (Once should be enough.) Or, visit a bath shop or watch your mail-order catalogs for a beeper that goes off when the seat is left up — which will act as a reminder to your absent-minded husband.

CONFIDENTIAL TO CHARLIE IN CINCINNATI: Samuel Johnson said, "Every animal revenges his pains upon those who happen to be near." Man is no exception.

Presidential 'candidate' offers new (but old) reasons for running

By Bill Goodykoontz
N.Y. Times News Service

When it comes to politics, are you frustrated with the status quo? Down on Democrats? Repulsed by Republicans? Ignoring independents?

Are you under the impression that when it comes to issues, all of the candidates flip-flop like live fish in a frying pan?

Well then, it is my duty as an American to let you know about an alternative out there. Of course I refer to . . . Colin Powell? Apparently not. Besides, if he wasn't signing books, he was in seclusion. President? I think he was running for J.D. Salinger.

No, I'm talking about Dale J. Pritchard, of St. Louis.

I first came across Pritchard's candidacy when one of his press releases crossed my desk. Immediately, I was taken by the reasons he listed for running, including:

- "I need a job."
- "The money, and you can get a good credit rating."
- "Power. It would be fun to order people around."
- "The inauguration party."
- "Living in the White House would be better than my apartment."
- "I want to meet movie stars."

I must admit, after looking at his platform, my first reaction was to consider running myself.

But after much contemplation, I decided against it, a decision that had absolutely nothing to do with whatever college pranks a thorough background check might have turned up, because things were different then and everyone did that kind of stuff, anyway.

Instead, I gave Pritchard a call.

"I've just become so disillusioned with politics," he said, noting that he used to be an active member of the Republican Party.

"It sounds cynical, but I think it's become a joke. Clinton is moving to the center, Dole is trying to become Pat Robertson. Perot, you know, is really bizarre, too.

"I think I'm the least bizarre of the people running. I just decided that I was a logical choice."

Despite what his press release says, Pritchard does have a job — he's a former Lutheran minister turned free-lance writer.

"You probably think, 'He's a little nuts,' or something like that," he said.

"I'm basically a pretty normal, rational person. But I think I'm being driven insane by the political process."

Pritchard kicked off his campaign by mailing his press release to major newspapers. Then he sent a batch to local television and radio stations. Now he's concentrating on local newspapers. He sends about five releases a day, and he's gotten a good response.

Total campaign costs so far: About $100.

Of course, Pritchard isn't really taking this whole campaign business seriously.

"Some people think it's real," he said. "It's so bizarre."

On the other hand, he really does plan to vote for himself, and hopes that others will, too.

"I'm going for several dozen" votes, he said.

"Who knows? I mean, 19 percent of the population voted for Perot, and he's more nuts than I am."

Let's see, then. He's not really running, but he does hope to get some votes. Makes as much sense as Pat Buchanan to me.

So why run at all?

"Basically, to fulfill my ego, like all other politicians," he said.

"To get attention. To think that I'm important. I'm getting reporters calling me — that's a nice way to be interrupted at home. I like it a lot."

I think he was kidding.

As we said our goodbyes, Pritchard thanked me for calling. "It'll help my ego," he said.

Not your ego, I corrected him, your campaign.

"No, no, it's all about my ego," he said.

Hmm. Maybe he is serious.

Volunteering keeps retiree's life active

By Lana Cunningham

The block of stone was given as a reminder of his hard work, but it also symbolizes Forrest Underwood: solid, dependable, unbending in his determination and commitment.

Retirement was a familiar topic to Underwood when he retired at 66 from Shell Pipeline. A 45-year employee, part of his duties had been to counsel others about retirement and their company benefits.

"I was aware that I had to stay active," said Underwood. He and his wife, Tommie, built a house in Midland County and established the irrigation system. That kept them busy the first two years. "Then I began looking for something else to do."

As a result of his search, Underwood today is known for his volunteer work with the Midland County Public Library and Friends of the Library, Permian Basin Petroleum Museum's Santa Rita Club and St. Luke's United Methodist Church Prime Timers club. At 81, he's thinking of slowing down to allow younger people their chance at these volunteer jobs.

He started with Friends of the Library upon the recommendation of a former co-worker. "In 1982, I began to carry books from the library to the Friends' bookdrop. I'd haul books every Wednesday and I still move books."

Underwood paused for a moment before adding with a laugh, "Anyone with a pickup can volunteer anywhere he wants."

That delivery job turned into a Friends board job and then an Advisory Board job with the county — all during the frenzied period of looking for a new libarian and buiding a new facility.

Underwood was appointed by the County Commission to the library's Advisory Board. This small group of concerned citizens assists the librarian in making day-to-day decisions on operating the facility. He served five years on this board, the first three being appointed and the latter two as president of the Friends board. And during expansion of the library, Underwood also served on the building committee. It was a time of clearing major hurdles.

The first hurdle was finding a new librarian to replace the person who resigned for another position elsewhere. After interviewing several applicants the Advisory Board recommended Sandra Wegner, who had been working as assistant librarian. Then came the petition drive for a new library. And once that was accomplished and the County Commissioners had committed $2.5 million, the board had to find another $2.5 million to build the structure.

The polished block of stone in Underwood's house came from the old library and was topped with a gold plate to commemorate his service on the Building Committee.

"Forrest had a lot of responsibility during an extremely busy time at the library," said Mrs. Wegner.

"The library is lucky to be the recipient of his volunteer time. He has a good sense of humor and I enjoy being around him. While he's no longer on the Friends' or Advisory Board, he's in here every Wednesday hauling those books (to the Friends' storage facility). As long as he can push that dolly, he'll be in here working," she added with a laugh. "I always look forward to having a short conversation with him."

The public library isn't Underwood's only interest. About the same time he delved into the Friends, he and his wife joined the Santa Rita Club. The couple work in the Gift Shop every Monday afternoon and have accumulated 1,600 hours of volunteer time since 1982. Underwood also has helped refurbish some of the exhibits, served on the club's board and on various committees, and as a docent for adult tours.

And the Prime Timers at St. Luke's have experienced Underwood's leadership as president. This group of retirees meets once a month for a covered dish luncheon. But they also lend their talents to take care of a large flower bed at the church's entrance and to raise money for a sound system. Over the years, Underwood said, he has held various offices administratively and with Sunday School.

But that's not the end of his resume on volunteersim. It includes time with Christmas in April and the city's volunteer program, and as a substitute driver on holidays for Meals on Wheels.

Retirement is simply a continuation of being needed, only in a different way than during the working years, in Underwood's opinion.

"People who are miserable in retirement don't feel they are accomplishing anything. They had a job and felt needed" and haven't found a substitute such as a volunteer job. "I'm the one who's benefiting from this voluntering. I'm helping myself. People wo do things they think are worthwhile feel they are accomplishing something."

Finding something to stay active and keep the mind stimulated is part of the formula for Underwood's energy. He learned how to operate a computer and "I love it. It's a mental stimulation and I find I need it.

"And I chose my parents well," he chuckled. His father died at 97, his mother at 78.

Like the block of stone, Underwood remains solid in his life — an enthusiastic volunteer who has enjoyed using his gifts to help others.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Forrest Underwood keeps his retirement busy and active through volunteer work with several area agencies. Underwood, shown loading books for the Friends of the Library's on-going book drive for the annual book sale, is well-known for his service to Midland County Public Library and its Friends. He also volunteers for the Petroleum Museum's Santa Rita Club and St. Luke's United Methodist Church's Prime Time Club.

Big community benefits grow from little seeds

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

The Lord works in a mysterious manner, his wonders to behold! Talk about mustard seeds and fertile soil — listen to this wonderous tale!

Page

As an example, look at Midland, Texas, during Lent in 1979 when the rector of Holy Trinity Church (now the Right Rev. Sam Hulsey, Bishop) sermonized on the Hospice movement then receiving recognition in England.

Sharon Holman, a church member, subsequently visited two Hospices in that country, bringing considerable material to which was added information garnered from the National Hospice Organization and other Hospices. Similar sharing of experience regarding both successes and failures has proven to be productive asset to the Hospice movement.

The next step was the formation of a steering committee consisting of physcians, nurses, priests, lawyers, pharmacists and financiers who spent 10 months in active research, finally culminating in a community-based program encouraging local education involving 100 speeches and institutional visits. With local physicians' backing, the "Hospice Program for Midland" was adopted by the Chamber of Commerce.

In January 1981 the steering committee became a board of directors, and Hospice of Midland (HOM) became licensed by the State of Texas as a Home Health Care Agency (not "Hospice of the Southwest," which developed later and is totally unrelated to the above). Funds for HOM were raised in conjunction with the American Cancer Society. An 11-week volunteer training progam graduated 40 volunteers and the project got off the a flying start — all on a home-grown basis.

Both state and national recognition has resulted from the high standard of care, the degree of community involvement and the expert management of the finances, all derived from either Medicare or community donations. The fact that 87.6 percent of the dollar goes directly to actual patient care, constituting an excellent example of what a nonprofit organization can accomplish.

The focus of Hospice is on patients with terminal illnesses and limited life expectancy on whom curative attempts have proven to be of no avail. Pain control and symptom management are achieved by individualized organizational plans of family doctors and the Hospice team. Emotional support is provided by nurses, social workers, chaplains and well-trained volunteers. Medicare access is provided to pay for medication, medical equipment and supplies, and nutritional supplements. This includes wheelchairs, hospital beds, bedside commondes, catheters, dressings, etc. Specialized therapies such as speech, occupational, respiratory and muscial can be ordered by the physician for palliative care. Family counseling and bereavement programs have proven to be very helpful. Telephone support is available day and night.

Hospitalization is available at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center when directly related to the Hospice diagnosis if home management seems inadequate. Patients in institutions such as Midland Presbyterian Homes can be cared for on a cooperative team basis by the staff at both facilities.

Thank God and all his able cohorts for creating a guiding light to ameiorate man's darkest hour.

Henry F. Page, M.D., F.A.C.P., is health and safety consultant to Midland Presbyterian Homes.

By Dr. Michael L. Freedman

NEW YORK (AP) — If the calves of your legs begin to ache when you walk, keep on walking.

The pain is caused by a condition called claudication, poor circulation caused by blockage of the leg arteries. It occurs primarily in older people and can be associated with coronary artery disease. One person in 50 over the age of 65 suffers from claudication.

It's sometimes treated with medications and, in severe cases, by surgery. But a study has found that the best treatment for claudication is exercise rehabilitation — in plain language, walking.

Researchers at the Claude Pepper Older Americans Independence Center of the University of Maryland and the Baltimore Veterans Affairs Medical Center looked at 33 studies reporting on the use of exercise rehabilitation for claudication pain. Their conclusion: "The optimal exercise program for improving claudication pain ... uses intermittent walking to near-maximal pain during a program of at least six months."

Such programs had sessions that lasted at least 30 minutes for at least three times a week. The best programs had patients walk until the pain became severe. Other forms of exercise didn't help much.

But the pain paid off. Patients who went through such programs more than doubled the distance they could walk before claudication pain started.

The programs used treadmills on which patents could walk. But there's nothing to prevent anyone from going for a good walk on any given day. It will pay off in the long run — sorry, walk.

Older people shouldn't grumble when they have to take an eye test before having their driving licenses renewed. A new study finds a lower rate of highway deaths for persons 70 and over in states that require vision tests for drivers.

There is a similar but smaller life-saving effect for states that require tests of driving knowledge for license renewal.

The study covered the years 1985 through 1989, a time when 38 states required vision tests and four also required a driving knowledge test for license renewal.

Looking at the fatality rate for accidents involving at least one driver 70 or older, researchers at Johns Hopkins University and the University of Baltimore found the 70-and-over auto death rate was 7 percent lower in states with vision tests and 9 percent lower in states with both vision and knowledge tests. Older people don't drive as many miles as younger persons, but they have higher crash rates per mile driven than anyone other than 16-to-24-year-old drivers. The crash rate increases steadily after age 70, most likely because of increased visual difficulties and decreased reflexes, the researchers said.

Dr. Michael L. Freedman is the Diane and Arthur Belfer Professor of Geriatric Medicine and Director of Geriatrics at New York University Medical Center.

Older Americans can manage investment risk

DENVER (AP) — All investors face investment risk, the possibility that an investment won't provide the returns originally expected. For older investors, the issue of risk is of particular importance because they have less time than younger investors to recover from investment setbacks.

So it's vitally important that you understand what types of investment risks you face and what you can do to minimize those risks.

Investment risks fall into two broad categories: systematic and unsystematic, according to Ron Meier, a certified public accountant and an academic associate at the College for Financial Planning, a division of the National Endowment for Financial Education (NEFE).

Systematic risks affect all, or most, types of investments. These risks include inflation (buying power) risk, interest rate risk and market risk. If the general economy is in a recession, for example, the value of most stocks will probably be depressed.

A major political event such as a presidential assassination or a war could also lower investment prices. Meier says it's difficult to minimize systematic risk, short of not investing at all.

Unsystematic risks, sometimes called "specific" risks, affect only a single company or industry. These types of risks include business risk, financial risk, country risk and default risk.

"Unsystematic risk can be minimized to some degree by diversification," says Meier. "If you buy equal values of stock in 10 different companies, each in 10 different industries, then if a single company or single industry goes sour, it only affects one-tenth of your portfolio."

Unsystematic risk is the type of risk investors most associate with investment risk, so let's examine more closely this type of risk and what you might do to minimize it.

■ Business risk. A given company's stocks or bonds may not be able to provide the price appreciation or income anticipated because of problems within that company. For example, poor management, a labor strike, or a new product that fails could depress returns for the company's investor.

Factors that hit the company's industry, but not other industries, also might affect the value of a company's securities. If steel prices rise, auto manufacturers will feel the pinch, but not clothing manufacturers.

■ Financial risk. This measures a company's percentage of debt to total assets. The higher the debt, the riskier the investment. "If a company's debt is under 30 percent of its total assets, there's not much cause for alarm," says Meier. "Thirty to 50 percent is a yellow light, and over 50 percent is a red flag." Some mutual fund rating services report the percentage of debt represented by the securities in which a fund invests.

■ Default or credit risk. This measures the risk that a company will default on its debt obligations. Investors typically understand this risk for corporate bonds. "But investors often mistakenly assume that state and local municipal debt, like federal debt, is free of default risk," says Meier. As the holders of Orange County municipal bonds will testify, it is not.

■ Country risk. As investors look more and more overseas, they must be alert to political risks in the countries whose stocks or bonds they invest in (some mutual funds invest only in specific countries or regions).

So what steps can you take to minimize unsystematic risk?

"The general rule of thumb is to buy at least a dozen different securities with no more than two or three securities in the same industry," says Meier. "If you buy GM stock, don't buy Ford bonds."

Meier adds that this rule may be difficult to follow for investors whose portfolios are heavily weighted with stock they bought from the company they work for, perhaps as part of their retirement plan. Their employment and their investments depend on the fortunes of a single company. They may need to consider selling some of that stock, when appropriate, and reinvesting it.

Be sure the industries you pick are substantially different. Stock in a computer company, bio-tech company and an aerospace company represents three different industries, but all three are generally categorized as technology stocks and may perform in a similar manner.

Read a mutual fund's prospectus and annual reports, or get information from a mutual fund rating service to spot investment concentrations. Meier points out that even mutual funds, many of which buy 100 or more different securities, can be affected by industry risk.

For example, sector mutual funds, such as technology or financial, invest primarily in a single industry and thus ride that industry's ups and downs. Even broader funds, such as growth and income, may not be well diversified if they invest predominantly in only two or three industries.

Avoid buying two similar mutual funds, such as two small-cap funds, since they're investing in the same type of stocks.

Study to determine if desert dust is harmful to elderly

DIAMOND BAR, Calif. (AP) — Air quality monitors are planning a three-year study to determine whether minute particles of desert dust are sending people, particularly older ones, to hospitals with heart-lung problems.

People who live in the Coachella Valley are exposed to some of the nation's worst pollution from a dust mixture known as PM10, the South Coast Air Quality Management District said recently in announcing the $204,000 study.

Desert dust combines with human air pollution to make up high concentrations of PM10 in the area of Palm Springs and Indio, the agency said.

Scientists will compare monitored levels of dust pollution with hospital admissions for pulmonary problems.

The Coachella Valley was chosen because of its high population of elderly people, the district said.

Scientists believe that particles smaller than 2.5 microns, which come mostly from manmade pollution, are more toxic than natural dust particles, which vary between 2.5 and 10 microns.

Ten microns is about one-tenth the diameter of a human hair.

The study will try to verify that, and it should help evaluate dust control strategies, said James M. Lents, executive officer of the agency.

Astros move

HOUSTON — Astros owner Drayton McLane Jr. on Thursday denied a report he intends to move the team after next season and is considering suing his fellow owners.

The Houston Chronicle reported Thursday that McLane may place the club in bankruptcy and file a lawsuit against the owners for blocking the move.

McLane says he is examining every possible way to keep the team in Houston and "at no time" has he ever considered such legal action.

"That is not the way to handle disputes," McLane said. "I have never had any thoughts or plans to place this franchise in bankruptcy despite the devastating financial losses over the last three years."

McLane claims the team has lost $60 million over the past three years,

Reid Laymance, the Chronicle's deputy sports editor, said: "We are confident with what we reported."

The Chronicle, citing unidentified sources, said McLane would keep the team in Houston for another season so he could build support among baseball leaders for a move out of the nation's fourth largest city.

The delay also would give Houston officials time to mount a ticket drive and find local buyers.

"Drayton is going to make all kinds of threats because he wants out in the worst way," one unidentified baseball official told the paper. "But the bottom line is, he can't get out in 1996 and he knows it. He is going to have to put up a positive front and say he is giving it one more year here to see if things improve."

McLane and Astros executive vice president Bob McClaren did not return phone calls to The Associated Press on Wednesday or Thursday.

McLane said he had scheduled a Friday news conference to announce the team's 1996 plans. The Astros owner has said he would decide by this weekend whether he will keep the team in Houston or attempt to sell it to Virginia businessman Bill Collins.

Rodman hurt

CHICAGO — Chicago Bulls forward Dennis Rodman said Thursday he will be out about a month with a leg injury, but the team said his status is day-to-day.

Rodman told Chicago radio station WSCR-AM that he ripped his left calf muscle trying to jump on the last play of Tuesday's game against the Toronto Raptors.

He said it feels similar to an injury he suffered three years ago that caused him to sit out for a month.

"I know it's a month," he told the station in a telephone interview .

Bobcats in way of MHS' .500 year

■ Midland High wants a repeat of last year's upset win over San Angelo and 5-5 record.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The San Angelo Central Bobcats were hoping to come roaring into Memorial Stadium at 7:30 p.m. today with the hopes of landing a state playoff berth. Those plans have gone awry.

In fact, Midland High, the Bobcats' opponents tonight, figure to have more to gain from a win than San Angelo.

Midland High pulled a huge upset over the Bobcats last year in San Angelo to grab that 5-5 ring and will be seeking to rerun that feat tonight. The best San Angelo can finish is 4-6, which would also leave MHS with the same record if the Bulldogs fall.

But the Bulldogs have shown a surge of improvement, winning two of their last three games after suffering consecutive losses to playoff bound Midland Lee, Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian.

The Bulldogs defeated Abilene High a week ago. Earlier this season, AHS pulled off an upset of the Bobcats. It's been a strange District 4-5A season and there is no reason to believe that the final week won't follow suit.

San Angelo also has another huge obstacle to overcome against the Purple Pack. The Bobcats were eliminated from the district race last week in a 32-7 loss to Odessa Permian.

The Bobcats thought they would be entering tonight's game with a chance to

Lady Rebels up to district speed

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Sports Writer

In the season following the gradution of four of the best post players District 4-5A girls basketball has seen, the race to the playoffs will be fast and furious.

And Midland Lee coach Elise Kail expects her Lady Rebels to be right in the thick of the "track meet."

"We're the same team," said Kail, who for the first time in four seasons is without the services of 6-foot-2 post Krissy Woodard. She signed a Division I scholarship with Northwestern State (La.) after leading the Lady Rebels to the area-round of the playoffs.

"We're going to play the same style," continued Kail. "But we're a lot quicker and a lot more aggressive defensively, which I have wanted for a long time."

Big Spring forfeits win, playoff shot

Staff report

Big Spring High School was forced to forfeit a football game it won earlier this season because it used an ineligible player, it was learned Thursday.

The Steers must forfeit an Oct. 22 District 4-4A win over Pecos because the team used a junior varsity player in the final quarter of a 56-8 blowout win. The player had already participated in the JV game earlier that week, which made his playing in the varsity game a University Interscholastic League violation.

"I was approached Monday by our principal (Kent Bowermon) that a possible violation had occurred," Big Spring varsity head coach Dwight Butler said. "I investigated it on Monday and Tuesday and found out that, in fact, a violation had occurred."

Butler had second thoughts about

The Midland College men's and women's basketball teams will take the floor at the Chaparral Classic with both teams going in opposite directions to start the 1995-96 season.

The Midland College women have blazed through their first four games, averaging 98.75 points per game en route to a 4-0 record. The men have had a tougher time, dropping two games last weekend at the WJCAC preseason shootout in Levelland.

Both teams will play at the friendly confines of Chaparral Center in the last two games of the night. The women will take on Collin County Community College at 6 p.m. while the

No. 18 Aggies struggle past Rice Owls, 17-10

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — Corey Pullig's 26-yard scoring pass to Albert Connell in the third quarter put Texas A&M ahead to stay and the 18th-rated Aggies struggled past Rice 17-10 Thursday night.

It was the fourth straight victory for Texas A&M (6-2, 4-1 Southwest Conference) and its 15th consecutive triumph over Rice (2-6-1, 1-4).

Owls quarterbacks Chad Nelson and Raphael Tillman failed to complete a pass until Tillman, in relief of the injured Nelson, hit Spencer George with a 10-yard completion with 1:40 left in the game. It was the only completion for Rice quarterbacks.

Punter Tucker Phillips completed two passes for Rice in the first half, each time catching Aggies special teams napping. His first-quarter, 37-yard pass to Jeff Venghaus gave the Owls a 7-0 lead.

Leeland McElroy had 168 yards on 28 carries for the Aggies, including a 45-yard TD run that tied the game 7-7 in the second

Bulldogs walk tightrope over losing season

There is an old saying in sports circles that goes, "The most important game you play is the next one."

Well, that next one has come for Midland High, and tonight's meeting with San Angelo is huge for the Bulldogs. Neither the Bobcats or Bulldogs will be playoff bound this season, but MHS does put its season on the line, so to speak.

Williamson

The result of tonight's game will be the difference between a 5-5 season or a 4-6 losing effort. It is tightrope night for MHS, one that can pay big dividends with a win.

And the Bulldogs do have recent history on their side as they enter this key contest. MHS has lost to every team that it lost to in 1994 and has beaten every team it beat in that same season a year ago. So, if the pattern holds, the Bulldogs will pull off that 5-5 mark for the second year in a row.

It seems that MHS has the worst of the 4-5A schedule, opening league play with Midland Lee, Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian. If you look, you will notice those three teams just happen to be playoff teams this year and last. That's a hard start to deal with in a league where you have to win one of those three games to stay in the playoff hunt.

Then, too, MHS seems to finish the season strong after putting those losses behind them. The 'Dogs have played well the last two weeks and the offense seems to be generating some punch while cutting down on hurtful turnovers.

Last week against Abilene High, MHS fullback-tyke Sam Powell (145 pounds) became the Bulldogs' first 100-yard rusher in a game this season with 173 yards rushing. Junior quarterback Russell Dunlavy had 96 yards rushing in a win against Dallas Jesuit, but was pulled late in that easy win. He could have easily cracked the 100-yard barrier.

Also, Midland Lee's John Norman was big news last week with two interceptions. On one, Norman set a Lee record with a 101-yard interception return. He returned the other for 48 yards.

Norman now has eight interceptions this year with return yardage of 359 yards and four touchdowns. Rarely will you see that kind of return yardage even with a player who has produced double digit interceptions. He may be a defensive star, but he is an offense waiting to happen.

Odessa Permian's outstanding linebacker Rory Couch was the league's most valuable defensive player last season, but he may have some competition for that honor this season from the junior Norman.

Regular season football play comes to an end tonight. While owning a 33-11 (.750) record in the 4-5A picking game, here's how Week 10 will turn out.

Midland High 24, San Angelo 18: The Bobcats own a 21-12-1 series advantage since 1961, but the Bulldogs avoid a losing season with a key victory, just like last year.

Odessa Permian 16, Abilene Cooper 14: This is a battle between playoff bound teams, but it has little meaning since both are headed for different playoff brackets. Permian leads the series 29-5, and the last Cooper win was in 1979.

Odessa High 34, Abilene High 20: This series is tied at 17-17 since 1961, but the Eagles own a meager 1-12 record at Ratliff Stadium, winning only in 1986.

Midland Lee 76, Open 0: This should have been Homecoming.

LEE: 4-5A teams come up short for '95

(From 1C)

throughout the district to graduate after starting three years for their respective teams.

Odessa High, which finished second in league play behind Midland High, lost 5-11 Donelle Jones, who plays for Western Texas. Abilene High will miss the services of 6-0 Tasha Newman while Odessa Permian is without 6-3 Angie Braziel, who is playing for South Plains this season.

So don't expect to see any slow, pass-the-ball-50-times-before-a-shot high school girls basketball this year.

According to the Texas Association of Basketball Coaches recent season picks, the top three teams in the district are Lee, Midland High and Odessa — not necessarily in that order.

Three-time 4-5A champion Midland has already been perfecting its running game in garnering two league titles since the Lady Dawgs lost their big post, 6-4 Lisa Koss, after the 1993 season. Odessa High will be no exception after its small junior varsity team ran its way to the district title with an undefeated record.

But the Lady Rebels — with the return of senior point guard Claire Wright and junior wing Jamie Rhoads, last year's Newcomer of the Year — won't be left behind when the race begins.

"As a team, we're a lot quicker than we were last year," said Rhoads. "We don't have as much height which means we'll have to get in on the boards a lot more aggressively, but we did all right the other night at our scrimmage.

"There's room for improvement but I think we'll get there because this team wants it bad enough," said Rhoads.

Defense will be the key to a speedier game.

"To be honest with you," said Wright, "defense was the weakest part of my game last year. But we've worked very hard on that and now our defense is so strong, it's going to be a major factor in our game."

Team depth, which Kail says the Lady Rebels have, will be another major factor in determining whether Lee can keep up a blistering pace for the entire game.

"It's a coach's dream and a coach's nightmare," said Kail. "I've got 38 kids (sophomores, JV and varsity) and I'm five deep in every position except point guard. It's been tough picking the varsity. I don't know who to put where.

"It's wonderful to have so many in every position but it's scary, too," said Kail.

There are 10 players on the Lady Rebel varsity right now but Kail says last year's sophomores combined with the current group of newcomers are a talented bunch.

"Several kids off the sophomore team last year have a chance to make varsity," said Kail.

Returning letter winners Colleen McCarty, a senior, and Nisha Washington, a junior, and junior newcomer Angie Seibold join Rhoads and Wright in the starting lineup. They fill the gaps left by Woodard and Michelle Benson and Farrah Fisher, all starters lost to graduation.

The second team is comprised of senior Staci Stevenson, junior Roxanne Pylant, senior Susanna Reed, sophomore Tamika Thurman and junior Kim Hall, who was called up to the varsity last year only to blow out her anterior cruciate ligament (knee) after a few games. She has yet to be released from under her doctor's care.

Kail hopes to utilize all of their services in her new faster-paced game and said the varsity could be expanded as the season wears on.

Seibold said the depth has made her a better player.

"It pushes you to do better," said Seibold. "Because you know if you don't work the hardest you can, someone will be there to take your spot."

Experience will be another asset for the Lady Rebels.

While Rhoads and Wright are the only returning starters, two of this year's starters have had significant experience on last year's team that participated in two high-pressure playoff games. McCarty and Nisha Washington now get their time in the limelight after backing up Woodard.

"We know what to expect and we know the pressures involved," said McCarty. "We should be able to handle it better this year."

McCarty, however, has had to learn a new position. After playing post for her entire career, McCarty has been moved to a wing position.

"It's new and it's hard to get used to," said McCarty. "But knowing what it's like to play post helps me remember to look inside for the post. I know if they're open and they don't get the ball, they get frustrated."

It's a trait that should make Washington and Seibold happy as they attempt to fill in for Woodard. But just because Woodard is gone, it doesn't mean her impact will not be felt.

"Krissy definitely made Nisha a lot stronger," said Kail.

"She was an awesome example," added Washington. "She really helped us learn what it takes to play post in this district.

"We'll miss her leadership, too. She was so big and the way she played on the court (combined with) her off-the-court leadership made a big difference," Washington said.

All these tools plus a stronger team attitude should make for another successful year in the long Maroon and Gray line of good girls basketball teams.

Midland Lee won the first girls basketball title in 4-5A during the 1977-78 season. The Lady Rebels went on to win the first three titles outright and were either champions or co-champions from 1980 to 1984. Since 1983, the first year in which two teams advanced to the playoffs, the Lady Rebels have seen playoff action seven times.

Last year's Lady Rebels, who finished third in league play, surprised some people by defeating Lubbock Coronado in bi-district, making them only the second 4-5A team in more than 20 years to beat a 3-5A playoff representative. They lost in the area round, however, to El Paso Hanks, missing what would have been a rematch with Midland High.

"This year everyone is so totally focused," said Wright. "We're really together as a team and we know what we want."

"Everybody gets along really well," added McCarty. "Things are clicking as a team and we feel like we are in good shape to start the season."

Jamie Rhoads, 5-foot-8, Jr., wing: Distnct 4-5A Newcomer of the Year was a big part of Lee's playoff run last year. "She probably put too much pressure on herself because she was a starter as a sophomore," said Kail. "But now she's more relaxed and I think it will help her."

Claire Wright, 5-6, Sr., point guard: Returning starter was the three-point specialist for the Lady Rebels but defense will make Wright a better overall player. "Her defense has improved dramatically," said Kail. "She's a totally different player than last year."

Colleen McCarty, 5-10, Sr., wing: Got serious experience going up against three-year starting post Krissy Woodard in practices last year but will be moved outside this year because "she's got a great cross-over dribble and she can pull up and take a beautiful shot," Kail said.

Nisha Washington, 5-9, Jr., post: Another benefit of Woodard's experience. Washington "is a game player," said Kail. "She gets after it in practice, but in a game she turns it up 10 notches. She's an excellent defensive player who makes good reads on passes."

Angie Seibold, 5-9, Jr., post: Will start after being one of the leading scorers on the junior varsity last year. "She's really turned into one of our strongest defensive players," said Kail. "And on offense, she'll take it to you. She doesn't care if you're 6-2 or 5-4."

Kim Hall, 5-6, Jr., wing: A big part of what Lee coach Elise Kail calls a talented junior class. Hall was called up to the varsity midway through last season only to tear her anterior cruciate ligament (knee). She has not yet been released to play after surgery this spring.

Staci Stevenson, 5-6, Sr., wing: Played on the varsity during the playoffs last year and was a "leader on the JV," said Kail. "She knows how to look inside for the post which is an important part of our offense."

Roxanne Pylant, 5-5, Jr., point guard: The JV starting point guard last year will add needed depth at the position behind Wright. "She's very aggressive on defense and will be able help take some of the pressure off Claire," said Kail.

Susanna Reed, 5-9, Sr., post: According to Kail, Reed was one of the best in her class as a freshman but concentrated as a sophomore and junior on swimming and softball, where she was all-state last year. "She brings a lot of successful experience and a new dimension to the team," said Kail.

Tamika Thurman, 5-10, Soph., post: The younger sister of Rebel quarterback John Thurman. Tamika is one of a very talented sophomore class for the Lady Rebels. "She's a strong athlete and a strong rebounder," said Kail. "She's still working on perfecting her shot but she's very open to coaching and very dedicated to the other girls on the team."

Courier advances to Stockholm Open quarterfinals

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Top-seeded Jim Courier dispatched another Australian in straight sets Thursday and advanced to the quarterfinals of the Stockholm Open.

Courier won 6-4, 6-3 against Todd Woodbridge, who forms one of the world's best doubles teams with Mark Woodforde, in one of the early matches at the Royal Tennis Hall.

The former world No. 1 from Florida had dropped only two games in his opener against Michael Tebbutt "and I could have possibly closed it out a little bit easier today," Courier said.

"I had break points at 3-0 (in the second set), but he's a crafty player and I certainly don't think that's its ever a gimme playing him. I kind of started slowly, but got going at the end of the first set. I played a pretty good second set."

Courier, who made his big breakthrough by making the quarters at Stockholm in 1988 at age 18, will next play unseeded David Prinosil of Germany on Friday.

Prinosil, ranked 71st in the world, won through to the quarters Wednesday and, like Courier, has not lost a set so far.

Courier, who's ranked seventh, could have rested this week like most of the other eight players who have qualified for the ATP World Championship starting Tuesday in Frankfurt.

But Stockholm is one of Courier's favorite European cities, having played here eight straight years. His best results came in 1988 and 1991, when he reached the semifinals.

"Frankfurt is next week and while I want to do well there I certainly want to do well here," he said. "I wouldn't have come here otherwise. I don't think Frankfurt really needs preparation like the Grand Slams. I'm here to play well and I'll deal with Frankfurt when I get there."

Arnaud Boetsch had a much tougher match than Courier as he rallied from a set down to win a third-set tiebreak by two points against Henrik Holm, a hard-serving Swede who grew up playing tennis in the Royal Tennis Club and worked as a ballboy during many Stockholm Opens as a kid.

The fifth-seeded Frenchman prevailed 2-6, 6-2, 7-6 (7-5) and will meet the winner between Swedish qualifier Mikael Tillstrom and third-seed Richard Krajicek of the Netherlands in the quarters.

Mets chosen as baseball's organization of the year by Baseball America

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The New York Mets were chosen as baseball's organization of the year by Baseball America on Thursday.

"We feel the Mets are on the verge of great things, much as they were in the mid-'80s," said Allan Simpson, the newspaper's editor.

Baseball America picked the Mets as organization of the year in 1983 and 1984, and the team went on to win World Series in 1986.

Lennox hope gets another blow

CHIANG MAI, Thailand (AP) — Lennox Lewis' hopes to fight heavyweight champion Frank Bruno in March received another blow, this time from the WBC.

The sanctioning body, in a ruling Thursday at its 32nd annual convention, reaffirmed its decision to have Bruno fight Mike Tyson.

"The date is still to be confirmed, but March 16 is the one we are looking at," Bruno's promoter, Frank Warren, said after the voting. "I'm highly delighted justice was seen to be done."

Lewis, the former champion, is seeking an injunction to prevent the WBC from replacing him with Tyson.

Lewis' manager, Frank Maloney, said the WBC was making up rules to suit itself and "making a person bigger than an organization, and that person is Mike Tyson."

"We are still in court in New Jersey. We are still pursuing the legal fight because I am right," said Panos Eliades, Lewis' financial backer.

What kind of alcoholic beverages do young people drink?
*Teenagers prefer wine coolers (their drink of choice) because they like the fruity, non-alcoholic taste and because they think wine coolers don't contain much alcohol. They drink more beer, however, because it is cheap and easy to get,

Top teams can end year right where they started

■ Prep Preview

Welcome to the final weekend of the high school regular season one last shot for some teams to reach the postseason four more quarters of tuning up for playoff-bound teams and the end of the line for those who don't make it.

This weekend will be especially significant for the five teams ranked No. 1 in The Associated Press poll, each of whom has the chance to end the season right where they began.

Maintaining the wire-to-wire leadership is doubly significant for Class 5A's Tyler John. Tyler 3A's Sealy and 1A's Thorndale. Each is riding a 25-game winning streak and aiming to remain unbeaten as they seek second straight state titles.

La Marque, the top-ranked team in 4A which actually opened the year tied at No. 1 with Stephenville, is going for its third straight perfect regular season. La Marque lost the last two state title games to Stephenville.

That brings us to Celina, the top-ranked team in Class 2A and the heavy favorite to take the championship away from two-time winner Goldthwaite.

Celina reached one milestone last week by giving coach G.A. Moore his 300th career victory, making him the third person in state history to reach that plateau.

The number of overwhelming storylines that thread together Celina and No. 7 Pilot Point (8-1) make Friday's game extra special.

Moore, the state's winningest active coach, is the main tie binding the two schools. He's probably driven the 16 miles between the two schools more than the local mailman.

Moore served two stints as coach of Pilot Point. He's also in his second tour of duty at Celina. He coached Pilot Point to consecutive state titles and he's won one at Celina during his first stop.

His son Gary Don is a senior quarterback who has led his teammates to a 9-0 start. But across the line, he'll see a lot familiar faces. Those Pilot Point players used to be his school chums.

The coach at Pilot Point these days is Jerry Jones, who was an assistant during Moore's first era at Pilot Point, then was named the head coach when Moore left for the second time in 1986.

CLASSIC: MC men (0-2) to make their home debut men will take on Pima (Ariz.) Community College at 8 p.m.

(From 1C)

The Chaps (0-2) will make their 1995-96 home debut against a team they defeated 90-84 last season. The Chaps will go into the game without highly touted freshman forward Ceedric Goodwyn, who went out with an ankle injury in the Chaps' 88-85 overtime loss to nationally-ranked McLennan Community College. Midland College hopes to get solid play from the rest of the team in the absence of Goodwyn.

"It is not one guy, but everybody that has to step up," said Midland College men's coach Pat Rafferty. "Last weekend, The guys knew they had to step up and tried to make it happen individually. That put too much pressure on us."

Leading the way for the Chaps will be sophomore guards D'Juan Baker, who is averaging 22 points per game, and Devon Phillips, who had 22 points in the Chaps' loss to McLennan.

Pima will take the floor in its first game of the season. Leading the Aztecs, who were 10-19 last year, will be Kenny Neal. The 6-foot-3 guard averaged 8.5 points and 3 boards a game. However, the fact that Pima has not played a game is something that worries Rafferty, who knows his team needs a win.

"We got to be prepared for anything and everything," said Rafferty. "These are a couple of important games for us. We want to silence the doubters who say we are not a good team. We've need to get a good taste in our mouths. We need to learn how to win."

Playing at home is also something that Rafferty knows is important to the program.

"We want people to come out and watch us play," said Rafferty. "We need to re-establish our identity at home and make it tough for opponents to come in here."

Playing at home is something that Ron Jones is all too familiar with. The Lady Chaps, 4-0 for the season, have run teams to death with one of the deepest benches in the nation.

How bad has it been? The Lady Chaps are outscoring their opponents 395-305, an average of 22.5 points a game.

Midland College did almost get a taste of mortality in its 85-84 Monday night squeaker over Tyler Junior College. Midland College, who is led by the Ndaisse Ndaiye, fought back from an 18-point deficit with Malyssa Thompson and Fatou Cisse' keying the one-point Lady victory. Thompson had 21 points and 10 rebounds while Cisse' had important baskets down the line to pull the Chaps back from four points down with 20 seconds to go.

If the Lady Chaps want to roll up big numbers and put Collin County in a big deficit in tonight's ball game, Midland College has to have better success at the three-point line. Midland College came into Monday night's game averaging over 10 treys a game but they went cold from downtown, converting on only five of 23 opportunities from beyond the 19 feet-9 inch line.

Collin County, just minutes northeast of Dallas, is next on the Chaps' list. Head coach Matt Rohrer's team went 11-19 in 1994-95 and will be lead by Amy Simmons, a 5-foot-11 post.

Friday will be a homecoming of sorts as former Midland College players, Tomenia Porter and Rashunda Jarmon. The duo played their freshman season in the green and gold of Midland College before deciding to leave for Paris Junior College.

That action will start at 2 p.m. when the South Plains Women will faces Paris. The Howard College men's team follows with its game versus Mesa CC.

USFL founder wants to start fan owned league

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Saying the NFL is doomed by the frenzy for sweet stadium deals that send teams scurrying from city to city, the founder of the defunct USFL has put together a new league that will make fans the owners.

"Do you think a Cleveland team majority owned by 70,000 Clevelanders would have voted to move to Baltimore?" Dave Dixon said. "That 100,000 Houstonians would move to Nashville?"

Within the next 10 days, Dixon plans to announce the formation of the FanOwnership Football League. He will unveil the plans in either Cleveland, which just lost the Browns to Baltimore, or Houston, which is expected to lose the Oilers to Nashville.

The New Orleans art dealer and businessman envisions a league that will offer cheaper tickets, a longer season, and, above all, stability.

Dixon was the founder of the United States Football League and a driving force behind the building of the Louisiana Superdome.

Johnny's still serves great barbecue after 44 years

by Pat Knight

One of my favorite things about eating at a barbecue place is the approach. As I approach the restaurant, I get to preview the aroma of the barbecue I'm about to enjoy. You don't get to do that with sushi.

Barbecue is as much about atmosphere as any fine French restaurant. The best barbecue atmosphere is what we call rustic.

Johnny's Barbecue has been in downtown Midland since 1951 and at its present location since 1955. After this long, the rustic decor seems to have absorbed the smoke flavor.

I love barbecue so much, I tried some of all their meat, along with coleslaw, pinto beans, iced tea and cobbler.

Brisket, of course, is the mainstay of any barbecue restaurant worth its sauce, and Johnny's has it down to a fine art. I put the barbecue sauce on the side so I could try the brisket straight, like a "purist."

The meat was very tender and juicy, with a fine hickory-smoked flavor, even without the sauce. Being a sauce person myself, I did add some, which gave it an even deeper flavor. Johnny's sauce is rich and vinegary, with a hint of sweetness.

A pleasant surprise was the smoked turkey breast, an offering to health-conscious barbecue fans. This meat was also moist and tender.

In fact, including the smoked ham, there really wasn't anything on my plate I couldn't have cut with a fork. I asked about their formula for such tender meat.

"There's not much of a secret," said founder John Hackney, who, though retired, still drops in from time to time. "All you do is cook it long and slow."

They make all their trimmings in-house. In fact, their Cole slaw is very unusual, mainly because there is no mayonnaise; they use a vinegar and oil dressing instead. The potato salad is also homemade, with small potato chunks and leaning toward the mustard.

Pinto beans come with a good dose of black pepper seasoning along with a dash of garlic. These beans are a definite winner.

After trying all this, I began to discover that Johnny's Barbecue doesn't just do one thing right, they do just about all of it right. In John's words, "We've tried to do anything we could to please people. That's what keeps our doors open."

He said "anything" includes catering for groups of anywhere from 15 to 3400 (yes, that's three-thousand, four-hundred.)

They also do custom cooking, especially around holiday time. You can bring your own meat in and they'll cook it for you the same way they do their own; long and slow.

Johnny's Barbecue has been in business since 1951. They have been at their jpresentlocation downtown at 316 North Big Spring. since 1955. They are open 11-7 Monday through Thursday and 11-8:30 Friday and Saturday. Call them at 683-4581 for catering information.

Oil futures were steady on the New York Mercantile Exchange Thursday.

West Texas Intermediate for December delivery rose 2 cents to close at $17.84 a barrel.

Natural gas futures fell 1.8 cents to $1.85 per thousand cubic feet.

Mortgage rates

WASHINGTON — The value of homes rose for most Americans in the summer as mortgage rates continued their slide and generated more demand, particularly for first-time buyers.

The National Association of Realtors reported Thursday that the median price of existing single-family homes was $116,200 in the third quarter, up 4.3 percent from a year earlier.

Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 7.7 percent in July through September, down from 8.6 percent a year earlier, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

Dollar plunges

NEW YORK — The dollar plunged Thursday as the rhetoric over the federal budget finally hit the currency markets. The Mexican peso's troubles added further pressure to the dollar.

The dollar fell 2 percent against the Japanese yen and 2 pfennigs against the German mark. The peso, which fell to its lowest level ever against the dollar on Wednesday, fell further Thursday before ending the day up against the dollar.

In late New York trading, the dollar fetched 100.35 yen, down from 102.55 yen Wednesday. The dollar also fetched 1.4100 marks, down from 1.4208.

In Mexico, the peso plunged to a historic low of 8.2500 pesos to the dollar. It hovered at 8 pesos for most of the day in thin trading and recovered in the final 15 minutes.

Other dollar rates in New York vs. late Wednesday: 1.1360 Swiss francs, down from 1.1455; 1.3525 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3530; 4.8605 French francs, down from 4.8920; and 1,593 Italian lire, unchanged.

The British pound rose to $1.5797, from $1.5790.

Record market

NEW YORK — Stocks climbed to record heights Thursday for the second day in a row, despite budget brawling in Washington that sent bond prices and the dollar lower. Technology issues surged.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 11.56 to 4,864.23, topping its previous closing high of 4,852.67 set on Wednesday.

Stocks rose despite a 1/2-point loss in the Treasury's 30-year bond and a sharp drop in the dollar. That occurred after President Clinton convened a Cabinet meeting to discuss how to shut the government down if Congress does not reach an agreement with the White House on the budget.

Big Board volume was substantial at 379 million shares.

The NYSE's composite index and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index both edged past Wednesday's record highs, with the NYSE index up 0.42 at 315.97, and S&P's 500 up 1.55 at 593.26.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 17.65 to 1,065.59. But the American Stock Exchange's market value index fell 0.42 to 530.81.

Price report suggests low inflation

By John D. McClain
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The fifth straight decline in energy costs helped push wholesale prices lower in October, and another report suggested modest economic growth. Some analysts said the combination was just what the Federal Reserve ordered.

The Labor Department reported Thursday its Producer Price Index fell 0.1 percent, the third drop in five months. Although the decline was led by energy prices, it was broad-based.

In the second report, the department said the number of new claims for jobless benefits shot up by 9,000 last week to the highest level since the summer.

New applications for unemployment insurance totaled a seasonally adjusted 375,000, highest since they totaled 416,000 during the week ended July 15.

Analysts said the current level reflects sluggish job growth, and the lack of inflationary pressures gives Fed policy-makers the latitude to lower interest rates to stimulate the economy if needed.

Some believe the Fed could act at its meeting next week, although others believe it will wait for the resolution of the federal budget impasse and more economic data later this year.

Many believe the central bank has achieved its objective of a soft landing — slow economic growth without inflation.

"One day soon, the Fed might have to stand back and declare victory," said economist Eugene Sherman of M.A. Schapiro & Co. in New York.

Besides falling finished wholesale goods prices, so-called pipeline inflation — prices for goods in earlier stages of production — also remained muted.

"At least at the producer level, there are no price pressures in place or materializing," Sherman said. "Inflation is just not a concern at this time."

"The data confirms that inflation in the United States is well under control," agreed economist Richard Berner of the Mellon Bank in Pittsburgh.

Analysts also predicted prices on the consumer level remained under control last month.

"Consumers are still value-conscious and selective," Berner said. "They are always shopping for bargains, meaning the retailer has to ... lure them with incentives."

The government's Consumer Price Index will be released next Wednesday. Consumer prices crept up a barely perceptible 0.1 percent in September and for the first nine months of 1995, were rising at a modest 2.8 percent annual rate.

For the year so far, wholesale prices were doing even better. They were up at an annual rate of just 1.4 percent, compared with a 1.7 percent advance in 1994.

Although wholesale prices rose 0.3 percent in September, the increase was driven by a 1 percent jump in food prices, the result of a summer drought that wilted vegetable harvests. Wholesale prices fell 0.1 percent in August.

The department said food prices held steady in October as vegetable costs fell 19.1 percent, retreating from their 38.6 percent spike a month earlier.

Energy prices dropped 0.9 percent, even more than the 0.5 percent decline month earlier. Energy costs have fallen each month since rising 0.6 percent in May.

Heating oil costs fell 11.1 percent, the steepest drop since 12.1 percent last January. Gasoline prices were down 2.7 percent and natural gas was down 0.6 percent. Electricity costs, however, rose 0.5 percent.

Contributing to the decline in vegetable costs, which was the largest since a 26.6 percent drop in January, were plunging prices for lettuce, down 51.6 percent; green peppers, down 46.4 percent; cucumbers, down 43.4 percent; and endive, down 42.8 percent.

The cost of poultry also fell, 1.4 percent, and fish and shellfish prices were down 0.5 percent. But beef and veal prices rose 3.3 percent, while pork advanced 2 percent.

Excluding the volatile food and energy costs, the core rate of wholesale inflation was unchanged in October.

Prices for finished consumer goods other than food and energy increased 0.1 percent on top of a 0.3 percent advance in September. Household appliances rose 0.4 percent and the cost of furniture was up 0.1 percent.

Automobile prices rose 0.4 percent, the department said, reflecting 1996 "quality changes" that added an average of $167.06 to the cost of a car.

Fannie Mae offers reverse mortgages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of older Americans may be eligible to turn the value of their homes into cash without having to move out under a new program by the nation's largest source of home mortgage funds.

Homes in Texas will not be eligible, however.

The Federal National Mortgage Association, known as Fannie Mae, said Thursday it would begin offering "reverse mortgages," which enable senior citizen homeowners to convert the equity in the homes into income.

"As the number of senior households nearly doubles by the 21st century, the Home Keeper Mortgage will be available to over 80 percent of older Americans who own their home," said Fannie Mae Vice Chairman Frank Raines.

"With staying in one's own home a major goal for older homeowners, the Home Keeper Mortgage can provide crucial funds for a senior who may wish to remain financially independent," he added.

The reverse mortgage is an adjustable-rate loan that allows seniors to borrow against the value of their home. The amount available depends on the number of borrowers, their ages and the value of their property.

The funds would be available for most personal financial needs, such as health care, home repair or a monthly income supplement. The difference between this and a traditional home equity loan is repayment would not be due until the borrower died, moved, sold the property or transferred title to another individual.

A borrower also could not be forced to sell or vacate the property to pay off the loan, even if the total of mortgage payments plus interest exceeded the value of the home.

Fannie Mae said seniors 62 and older who either own their homes or have very low mortgage debt remaining will be eligible. The mortgages will be available by the beginning of 1996 through Fannie Mae's lenders.

In Texas, however, the state constitution prohibits any second mortgages on homesteads.

During the most recent session of the Legislature, the lending industry had lobbied Texas lawmakers to put a proposed amendment before voters that would legalize home equity loans. House Speaker Pete Laney blocked the proposal, said Randall James, the state's deputy banking commissioner.

Ccntinental announces holiday fares

■ Airline responding to other airline discounts.

By Associated Press

HOUSTON — Continental Airlines weighed in with a Thanksgiving holiday fare sale, responding to similar discounts announced by American Airlines and America West Airlines.

The Continental sale applies to select U.S. cities. A passenger must depart on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday (Nov. 22-24) and return on Thursday, Friday or by noon on Saturday (Nov. 23-25).

The fare reductions applied mostly to travel to and from the Houston-based carrier's hub cities of Houston, Newark, Cleveland and Greensboro.

Sample round-trip Thanksgiving fares range from $38 for a Dallas to Houston flight to a Newark to San Francisco fare of $318 to a Cleveland to Seattle fare of $328.

Continental's fares came after Fort Worth-based American announced Thanksgiving holiday round-trip fares on flights between 58 cities in the United States, Canada, Europe and the Caribbean.

Subject to similar conditions, the round-trip fare on flights from Dallas-Fort Worth to Minneapolis-St. Paul will be $129; to San Francisco or Washington, D.C., will be $169; to Boston or Seattle-Tacoma will be $249; to London or Paris will be $349; and to Aruba or St. Croix, U.S. Virgin Islands will be $399.

Phoenix-based America West's non-refundable round-trip fares are being made available for travel Nov. 8-20 and require a three-day minimum stay, the Phoenix-based carrier said.

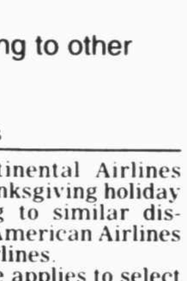
Some of the discounted round-trip flights include Columbus-Indianapolis ($38), Tampa-Orlando ($38), Denver-Las Vegas ($58), Phoenix-Seattle ($98), Minneapolis-San Francisco ($158), Denver-Mexico City ($188) and Atlanta-Los Angeles ($228).

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Reverse mortgages ideal for 'house-rich, cash poor'

By Bill Doyle

Q: My wife and I are 71 years old and retired. Our only income is from Social Security benefits and a $91-a-month pension. We have less than $12,000 in our savings account. Our five-bedroom home is mortgage-free and has a market value of approximately $300,000.



Doyle

The house is too big for us, but I can't persuade my wife to sell and move to a smaller and less expensive place.

I've heard about reverse mortgages but know little about them. In your opinion, is that an avenue we should pursue? If so, where can I find a bank that deals in reverse mortgages?

A: Your situation, of being "house-rich but cash-poor," seems tailor-made for a reverse mortgage. I say get one, so you will have more cash coming in during your senior years.

Your wife cannot be faulted for wanting to keep your longtime home, with its many fond memories — most likely of raising a family. That's a natural attitude.

A reverse mortgage can allow you to stay put.

A reverse mortgage is a loan, but instead of making regular payments, you receive money — typically monthly.

The size of the monthly checks depends on your ages and how much equity you have in the house. At age 71 and with $300,000 home equity, you probably could get more than $825 monthly. That kind of money certainly could improve your lifestyle.

Each check you receive increases your debt to the lender. However, most reverse mortgages needn't be paid off until you die or move from the house. At that point, the house would be sold to pay off the loan. Make sure the one you obtain has that provision.

Reverse mortgages are available in all states except Texas, and legislation now pending in Congress is expected to extend them to the Lone Star State soon.

You can obtain a state-by-state list of banks and other lenders providing reverse mortgages. Send $1 and a self-addressed, stamped No. 10 envelope to the National Center for Home Equity Conversion at its new address, Suite 115, 7373 147th St. W., Apple Valley, MN 55124. Ask for the Reverse Mortgage Locator.

As always when seeking credit, shop carefully among reverse mortgage providers in your area. Compare interest rates and make sure you understand all provisions of the loan.

Q: It is my belief that many senior citizens have obtained reverse mortgages without knowing the actual cost of such borrowing, because the mortgage lenders did not reveal those costs. Am I correct?

A: You were, in the past. There's little doubt that some unscrupulous lenders did not reveal the true costs of reverse mortgages to gullible seniors.

But all that changed last month. As of Oct. 1, federal regulations require lenders to disclose the total annual costs of reverse mortgages. And that includes ALL costs

The new disclosure rules show that total annual loan costs generally are higher in the early years. The longer you continue to live in the house and receive money from a reverse mortgage, the lower the annual costs.

Q: I would jump at the chance to get a reverse mortgage and "unlock the equity" in my home, were it not for the fact that it would put me in a higher income tax bracket. Do you have a solution to my problem?

A: You don't have a problem. The money received from a reverse mortgage is not subject to income tax, for the simple reason it is not income. Sure, it's cash money, but it's money you borrow — not income.

You didn't pay income tax on money you borrowed to buy your home.

Anyway, if you already have so much taxable income that some more would put you in a higher income tax bracket, it's doubtful you should be considering a reverse mortgage. Such borrowing is far more suitable for folks strapped for cash.

STEERS: Player's indentity withheld reporting the violation, but he wanted to show his team there were more important lessons to be learned than just playing high school football, he said.

"When I found out there was a violation — I've got to be perfectly honest — I thought about not saying anything. Then after a couple of sleepless nights and wanting to show the kids what is right I decided to turn ourselves in," Butler said. "We're trying to teach the kids honesty, integrity, self-discipline and honing up to your mistakes, and I felt like I could not look them in the eye and not say anything about it."

The player in question, who's identity was withheld, played about six plays in both the varsity and JV game the week of the Pecos game. Because of Homecoming distractions and a game that was out of hand, he was sent in at the end of the varsity game to finish up, which caused the violation.

"It was just a miscommunication on my part. I just dropped the ball," Butler said. "We've had to shuffle kids up and down (between varsity and JV) all season and it was Homecoming and we just didn't take care of the problem."

The forfeit costs Big Spring a possible playoff berth and puts Andrews into post-season play, making tonight's matchup between the two teams in Big Spring meaningless as far as the state playoffs go. Before the forfeit, the Steers were in position to make the playoffs for the second time in as many years with a win over Andrews.

The team was notified about the forfeit before practice on Wednesday which Butler called an "emotional" one, but he said the team rebounded a bit and is ready to take on Andrews tonight.

"It's still a big game for us regardless of the playoff situation because we've got a friendly rivalry with them," Butler said. "We expect them to come here and be ready to play and it should be a good ball game. It's going to be a real gut-check for us, to see just how we can respond."

The Steers' record falls to 2-7 overall and 1-3 in 4-4A play, which clinches the district's runner-up spot for Andrews (4-5, 3-1). The win improves Pecos to 3-6 and 2-2. San Angelo Lake View (7-1-1, 4-0) has clinched the district championship.

AGS: Defense helps Rice to early lead quarter. The score came after linebacker Keith Mitchell recovered a botched pitch by Nelson at the Owls 45. Two plays and 18 seconds later, McElroy broke a couple of tackles on the left side of the line of scrimmage and outraced defensive back Warrick Franklin to the end zone. It was the Aggies' longest rush of the year.

The defense helped Rice to a 10-7 lead early in the third quarter when Detron Smith fumbled after catching a pass from Corey Pullig and the Owls' Brynton Goynes recovered at the Texas A&M 31. The Owls moved to the Aggies 4 before stalling and Mike Ruff kicked a 22-yard field goal.

Texas A&M followed with its best drive of the game, going 75 yards in eight plays. Connell outjumped Rice's LaDouphyous Shaw to pull down Pullig's pass in the front corner of the end zone and give A&M its first lead at 14-10

Kyle Bryant accounted for the final margin when he capped a 67-yard drive with a 40-yard field goal with 7: 13 to go in the game.

Rice had a last chance when it took over at its 35 with 2: 38 left but the drive ended when Tillman's pass on fourth-and-15 from the Texas A&M 45 was intercepted by Reggie Brown.

The game marked the end of a series that began in 1920. With the demise of the Southwest Conference, Rice is headed to the Western Athletic Conference while Texas A&M goes to the expanded Big 12.

Nebraska should beat second top Kansas team

Kansas State was No. 8 when it lost to Nebraska 49-25 on Oct. 21. Now it's No. 10 Kansas' turn to try to knock off the top-ranked Huskers.

There's little reason to believe Kansas will come any closer to pulling off the feat than Kansas State.

For instance, compare how Nebraska (9-0) and Kansas (8-1) fared against Kansas State. The Huskers dominated Kansas State, building a 42-6 lead before the Wildcats made the score respectable in the fourth quarter. A week later, Kansas State manhandled Kansas 41-7... NEBRASKA 48-21.

FINAL: Tough week for San Angelo team

earn a playoff berth, but Abilene Cooper destroyed that hope last week with a 21-21 tie against Midland Lee, ending the league's search for three playoff teams.

"It was a tough week for us," said San Angelo coach Dan Gandy. "You want to be in the playoffs, but you also want to do it on merit. You just can't get into a situation where you depend on someone else to take care of your business and that's the situation we got into. The Abilene High game (a San Angelo loss) came back to haunt us."

San Angelo has had a full season of controversy that just never seemed to go away. The controversy started before the season when Gandy announced that August Pfluger would start at quarterback instead of returning starter Bobby Townsend.

Starting with the game against Midland Lee, Gandy has alternated those two players at quarterback, but the controversy still lingers.

"We had a lot of stress here last week and you could tell it hurt us against Permian last week," Gandy said. "We had people in here from Nightline and all our problems surfaced again. I think they are trying to use us as an example why there's not more black quarterbacks in the NFL, or something like that.

"When you have people in from New York for a little old District 4-5A football game, it's a major distraction and we didn't play well."

Still, the Bobcat talent level and team speed concerns MHS coach Ronnie Reeger.

"San Angelo is hard to prepare for because you have to prepare for two quarterbacks, who can both throw and run," Reeger said. "We hope that the win we had over them last year has some carryover value, but you don't know that, you just hope. They have good team speed and that's what really hurts us."

The Bulldogs are coming off their first district win of the season and that has been a boost to the team, according to Reeger.

"We needed that win (against Abilene High). We needed a district win," Reeger said. "The kids needed to have a good feeling about themselves and I think they have responded this week in a positive manner after that win. We've had some pretty good workouts."

The Bulldogs' offensive now appears to be on the move the last three weeks with 83 points, the best scoring punch of the season. One big factor last week was the 173 yards rushing by fullback Sam Powell. That was the first 100-yard performance of the season by a Bulldog.

"Not bad for a 145-pound fullback," Reeger said. "Sam's not very big. Last year we were steady Eddie with 100-yard games with Roy (Coats) back there, but we haven't had that this year. It was nice to see."

Gandy has taken notice of the Bulldog offensive rise.

"Those rascals (MHS) just get stronger as the year goes by and we have to play them last," Gandy said. "They pick on us when we are out of the district race. And it's the same this year. They're pretty salty and they seem to be getting their offense together just about the time we roll into town."

Even though no playoff hopes exist for either team, it will be interesting to see just which one will go down kicking the hardest.

Unlike Abilene Cooper last week against Midland Lee where a tie was worth a playoff berth, you can almost bet that neither team will shoot for a tie in this one.

Cowboys would like lopsided win

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

Want an indicator of how far the San Francisco 49ers have slipped?

The Super Bowl champions are 10-point underdogs against Dallas on Sunday, the biggest spread for any game this week.

What has the salary cap wrought? Maybe Cary Conklin at quarterback for San Francisco if Steve Young's shoulder and Elvis Grbac's ankle still hurt. Young says he'll play, but how far downfield can he throw?

This season, there is one standout team in the NFL, a couple of good ones and about 25 others.

The standout is Dallas, which is not about to get overconfident for San Francisco. Like any team, the Cowboys have been saying all the right things about the 49ers — nice things.

But they'd like nothing better than to deliver an overpowering victory against the team that kept the Cowboys from going for an unprecendented third straight Super Bowl title.

COWBOYS, 28-13

Cleveland (plus 5) at Pittsburgh (Monday night)

Art Modell says the Browns got clobbered by Houston last week because of leaks out of Baltimore about the big move. It's official now, and not only is the city of Cleveland demoralized, so is the team.

STEELERS, 37-10

Chicago (off) at Green Bay

The "off" is because of Brett Favre, Reggie White and the rest of the injured Packers.

Favre and Jones should play, the Packers are in desperation mode and desperation wins these days.

PACKERS, 27-24

Kansas City (plus 1) at San Diego

The last time these two met, Steve Bono took the Chiefs the length of the field to force OT and Tamarick Vanover returned a punt in overtime for a touchdown and a 29-23 victory, one of Kansas City's three OT wins this year.

Encore.

CHIEFS, 29-23 (OT)

Denver (plus 1 1/2) at Philadelphia

Philadelphia unraveled a little Monday night. It unravels a little more.

BRONCOS, 20-17

Buffalo (plus 3) at Atlanta

The Bills are used to winning. The Falcons aren't and they tend to lose to name teams. The Bills are a name team.

BILLS, 17-14

New England (plus 8 1/2) at Miami

Back in the days when the Patriots were considered "good," the Dolphins went up to Foxboro and won 20-3. Both teams have had roller-coaster rides since then, but the Dolphins are rising faster.

DOLPHINS, 27-12

Oakland (minus 6 1/2) at New York Giants

A reunion game for aching Jeff Hostetler, except most of Hoss' old buddies are playing in New England or Cleveland.

RAIDERS, 27-17

Carolina (plus 6 1/2) at St. Louis

Don't the oddsmakers believe the Panthers can win the NFC "West?"

PANTHERS, 15-12

Indianapolis (plus 1 1/2) at New Orleans

The Saints are coming, the Colts are going — at least at quarterback, where green Paul Justin or rattled Craig Erickson is the man.

SAINTS, 20-12

Tampa Bay (plus 5 1/2) at Detroit

Every time the Lions play to save Wayne Fontes' job, they win. Now they have to win seven straight.

LIONS, 24-18

San Francisco quarterback Steve Young, shown here at Thursday's practice, is still not sure if he will play against Dallas Sunday.

Deion ready for Rice

IRVING (AP) — Deion Sanders talked to some of his former San Francisco 49er teammates on Thursday. But Jerry Rice can go ahead and turn off his cellular phone. Deion won't be dialing him.

Things have been icy between the Dallas defensive back and the San Francisco wide receiver since last year's Super Bowl when Rice got mad at Sanders and some other 49ers for breaking a mid-week curfew.

Then Rice launched an anti-Sanders diatribe earlier this season, saying Sanders was taking credit for winning the Super Bowl.

They meet on the field Sunday in Texas Stadium with Sanders expected to be covering Rice, the NFL's all-time leading yardage receiver.

"I have nothing personal against Jerry," Sanders said. "He's one of the greatest receivers to play the game. But I never said I won a Super Bowl by myself."

Sanders said "it has been funny to see him upset and cursing. He's a good dude. He just said some things that didn't come out right."

Sanders, who defected to Dallas for a $35 million package that included a $13 million signing bonus, said he talked to San Francisco defensive backs Eric Davis and Tim McDonald on Thursday, warning them he might be on offense.

"I have no personal battles against the 49ers," he said. "They are just going through denial right now saying they don't miss Deion and don't miss Ricky Watters and don't miss Ray Rhodes."

Sanders promised no Andre Rison incident on Sunday. Last year Sanders and Rison, who was a wide receiver for Atlanta, settled a grievance on the field with their fists when the 49ers played the Falcons.

"There will be no freak show this time," Sanders said. "It's not going to get like that I promise you. Jerry and I have a nice respectful rivalry."

Sanders said his tight left hamstring was healing to the point where he might be able to also play offense. He had no offensive snaps last week because of the hamstring problem.

"I want to do my thing in the end zone," Sanders said. "I want to try to make this game all it's hyped up to be."

Sanders did return a punt 43 yards on a reverse and get his first interception as a Cowboy in a 34-12 win over Philadelphia on Monday night.

"I'm very happy I don't have to worry about Deion any more when we play the 49ers," said Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman.

Sanders said he was enjoying his stay with the Cowboys much more than he did the 49ers.

"This team is loose and confident and very close off the field," Sanders said. "Other than a Harris Barton cookout there was no camaraderie with the 49ers."

In Dallas, one word to call Emmitt Smith: super

By Timothy W. Smith
NYT News Service

IRVING, Texas — Dallas receiver Michael Irvin is convinced that if Emmitt Smith had not been slowed by a pulled hamstring in the National Conference championship game against San Francisco last season, the Cowroys would be talking about a four-peat right now.

"I'd have to say he's right," Smith said without a hint of arrogance.

It is a simple fact: the Cowboys win when Emmitt Smith runs.

In his six years with the Cowboys, the team is 40-3 when Smith rushes for 100 yards or more. In five of those years, he has gained more than 1,000 yards, including this season after his 158-yard performance against the Eagles on Monday night.

"The basis of our offense is our ability to run the football," said fullback Darryl Johnston. "He's probably the best in the NFL to do that."

So, as the 49ers limp into Texas Stadium on Sunday for what was supposed to be a showdown on the road to the Super Bowl, they will find the league's best running back performing at maximum strength.

With 1,137 yards and 16 touchdowns rushing on 216 carries and 224 yards receiving on 39 receptions, Smith has accounted for one-third of the Cowboys' total yards from scrimmage, two-thirds of their rushing yards and 50 percent of the touchdowns.

He has a very good chance of reaching the 2,000-yard rushing mark this year, a feat that has been accomplished only twice, by O.J. Simpson and Eric Dickerson.

This season, Smith, 26, has put some distance between his numbers and those of his contemporaries, like Barry Sanders (882 yards rushing, four rushing touchdowns) and Thurman Thomas (474 yards, three touchdowns).

Does Smith consider himself the best running back in the game?

"My work speaks for itself," he said. "I don't have to classify myself. I let all the spectators classify who they think is the best. Everybody has an opinion and I value everybody's opinion."

Here is Dallas Coach Barry Switzer's opinion: "He's tough to get down. He breaks tackles. He runs through people. You see so many times he'll break two or three tackles and all of a sudden the last guy gets him down or he pops free and makes a big play."

With 91 rushing touchdowns, Smith needs just nine more to reach 100. It's a phenomenal accomplishment. Only four other players have done it — Walter Payton, Jim Brown, John Riggins and Marcus Allen — and each needed more than 10 years. Smith has a chance to reach the mark in just six years. It took Payton 13 seasons to reach the NFL's career record in rushing yards (16,726) and rushing touchdowns (110).

"I hate to imagine, if he stays healthy, where Emmitt's going to end up," said Nate Newton, the Dallas guard.

Payton missed just one game with an injury his entire career (his rookie season), and he was just as productive near the conclusion of his career — rushing for 1,684 yards in his 10th season — as he was at the beginning.

Smith has missed just one game with an injury and two games at the start of the 1993 season because of a contract dispute.

"The only thing that's going to add to my longevity is being blessed by God above and being one of the fortunate ones who stays away from a lot of serious injuries," Smith said.

That is why the ending to last season has served as a catalyst for Smith this season. He missed the final game of the season against the Giants with a badly pulled hamstring, resting for three weeks before playing against Green Bay in the first playoff game.

Smith re-injured the hamstring against the Packers, but played against the 49ers in the National Conference championship game.

"If you don't have your wheels you might as well go home," he said. "My hamstring was to the point where I couldn't perform to my very best. It hurt. It hurt me. It hurt the team. I tried to go out and play, but when your leg's not functioning there's nothing you can do."

Operating on a bad leg and without tackle Erik Williams, a devastating blocker who helps clear traffic, Smith was stuffed by the 49ers. He gained only 74 yards on 20 carries in a 38-28 loss.

Even though they knew that Smith was limited with the hamstring injury, some of the 49ers said Smith was intimidated by them, afraid to run the ball against them. The criticism stung him, but Smith brushes it aside now.

"That was last season," he said. "It's in the past."

But quietly Smith has used that championship game to motivate himself. He spent the off season working on his most strenuous conditioning program and to strengthen his hamstrings.

He began eating more healthy foods, cutting down on the consumption of alcohol and drinking more than 120 ounces of water a day.

"I'm feeling much better this year, stronger," he said.

Because of his multiple talents as an exhilarating runner, sure-handed receiver and decisive blocker, Smith presents an unusual problem for opposing defenses.

"If they try to kill us with an eight-man front, then Troy Aikman comes into effect," Newton said, referring to the Cowboys' quarterback. "When you have a quality, highly durable back like Emmitt, you have to respect him because he can make plays at any time."

Smith, easily one of the most popular players on the team, went through a bitter contract squabble with the Cowboys' owner, Jerry Jones, two years ago.

When the team lost the first two games in Smith's absence, Jones quickly decided to pay him. Smith still trails Sanders in terms of salary but there is talk that Jones will re-negotiate his contract before it expires in 1997.

Stallions owner meets with 'Dome landlord

HOUSTON (AP) — The owner of the Canadian Football League's Baltimore Stallions met with the Astrodome's landlord's Thursday.

But Stallions owner Jim Speros insists that any move to Houston would only be considered if the city is left without an NFL team.

"I think this is all talk about working together and trying to find out what the Oilers are going to do," said Speros.

"I would have no interest in coming to Houston if the Houston Oilers were going to stay"

If the Stallions move to Houston, they would begin play in August 1996.

Speros wants to make a decision by January, but the Oilers' possible move to Nashville, Tenn., can't be finalized until NFL leaders meet in March.

"That would certainly be a concern because you want to sell season tickets and you want to get sponsorships sold and you want to get a good six or seven months marketing the club," Speros said.

Speros wants to leave Baltimore to avoid competing with the NFL's Cleveland Browns, who are moving to Maryland next season. Also, the Washington Redskins hope to build a new stadium just 32 miles from Memorial Stadium, where the two-year-old Stallions play their home games.

"Houston is No. 1 on my list," Speros said. "That's why we're here. Other cities are interested, but I believe Houston is the most attractive. It's the fourth-largest television market in the country, and our league needs that to help us get to the next level."

Speros has received feelers from as many as six other cities, including Miami, Milwaukee, Los Angeles and Orlando, Fla.

Astrodome USA had no comment regarding possible relocation of the Stallions.

Nomo latest Dodger to win rookie award

NYT News Service

The Dodgers continued their supremacy over the National League award named for perhaps the game's most memorable first-year player when pitcher Hideo Nomo was voted Thursday as winner of the Jackie Robinson rookie of the year award.

Nomo, 27, the first Japanese-born player to earn post-season honors and a crowd-pleasing sensation, edged out Atlanta Braves third baseman Chipper Jones in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

It marked the fourth year in a row that a Dodger player has been named rookie of the year, the second time the club has dominated the award for that stretch of time. This was also the 15th time over all that a Brooklyn or Los Angeles Dodger rookie won, giving the franchise more than twice as many of the awards as any other team.

The Cincinnati Reds are the Dodgers' closest rivals in the National League in the category with six recipients. The New York Yankees, Baltimore Orioles (once the St. Louis Browns) and Minnesota Twins (once the Washington Senators) each have seven rookies of the year.

Nomo followed immediately in the footsteps of Raul Mondesi, Mike Piazza and Eric Karros and carried out the Dodger tradition established by Robinson, Don Newcombe, Joe Black, Jim Gilliam, Frank Howard, Jim Lefebvre, Ted Sizemore, Rick Sutcliffe, Steve Howe, Fernando Valenzuela and Steve Sax.

Nomo won on the strength of a 13-6 record and 2.54 earned run average and a league strikeout crown (236 innings in 1911/3 innings).

He was an experienced pitcher from the Japanese major leagues when he signed with the Dodgers as a free agent last winter. In fact, he was named rookie of the year in the Japanese league in 1990 and was a five-time all-star. When he arrived in Los Angeles, the poised and polished Nomo created an aura much like that of Valenzuela 14 years before him.

Los Angeles pitcher Hideo Nomo becomes the fourth Dodger in a row to win the National League Rookie-of-the-Year award.

Using a tornado-like delivery, Nomo mesmerized batters. He also mesmerized baseball, leading to a start in the All-Star Game when the perennial Cy Young Award winner Greg Maddux was hurt. Nomo also proved an attendance draw in an off season at the box office, as he brought out Japanese and Americans of Japanese descent in great numbers whenever he pitched.

Nomo received 18 first-place votes and finished with 118 points in balloting by the 28-member committee consisting of two writers in each league city.

"For the next season, I'd like to target the World Series," Nomo said from Japan through a translator during a conference call.

Tom Lasorda, Nomo's manager, also on the conference call arranged by the Dodgers, instructed the translator to tell Nomo: "I am very, very proud of what he's done and I expect him to be better next year than he was this year."

Nomo's response: "I'd like to do my best for next year."

Former Ranger Bell named Tiger boss

The Associated Press

DETROIT — Buddy Bell always wanted to play for Sparky Anderson. Instead, he succeeds him as manager of the Detroit Tigers.

Bell

Bell, a Cleveland Indians coach who has never managed before, signed a two-year contract Thursday to help rebuild the team with the third worst record in the American League.

"When I was a player, the guy I always wanted to play for was Sparky," Bell said at a news conference. "He was a great manager and a great guy. His players liked him, yet he was tough, as I understand."

The hiring completes the first major task of Randy Smith, who 10 days earlier replaced Joe Klein as general manager.

"I hope to be here a long time, and I hope Buddy's here a long time," Smith said. "We both need a good long run to make this thing a success."

Bell, 44, and former Yankees manager Buck Showalter were said to be the top candidates for the managing job. Others under consideration were coaches Davey Lopes of San Diego and Jerry Narron of Texas.

Bell has been the infield coach for Cleveland the last two seasons. He is credited with helping mold the defense that helped the Indians make their first World Series appearance in 41 years.

"Being with Cleveland the last two years, and being in the World Series, it gives you the ability to know a good player when you see one," Bell said. "That's going to be important here."

Bell's ability to teach appealed to Smith. Bell was the Chicago White Sox director of minor league instruction from 1991-93.

"First of all, if we don't have patience, we're done here," Bell said. "We have a lot of young players. Yet, they have to understand that you have to know how to bunt, you have to know how to hit the cutoff. But a lot of managers forget you still have to teach. I understand the game, and I understand the problems."

Bell joined the majors in 1972 and played 18 years. He played mainly with Cleveland and Cincinnati, with stops at Texas and Houston. He was named to four AL All-Star teams and won six straight Gold Glove Awards at third base from 1979-84.

■ Baseball Roundup

He replaces one of the game's most popular managers. Anderson spent 17 years at Detroit and nine at Cincinnati. He has the most victories of any Tigers manager and is baseball's third winningest manager behind Connie Mack and John McGraw.

Bell has strong baseball bloodlines. His father, Gus, was a major league outfielder for 15 years. His son, David, is a second baseman with St. Louis.

The connections extend to the front office. Smith's father, Tal Smith, is president of the Houston Astros. Tigers president John McHale Jr. is the son John McHale, a long-time baseball executive.

"This is appealing," Bell said. "After meeting with these guys, I knew this was the place for me. And if I do well, the two years will take care of itself. I'm not here because I wanted to manage a big league baseball club. I'm here because of the people."

Winter Meetings

NEW YORK — For the third straight year, major league general managers won't attend the winter meetings in December. They will attend the owners' meetings in Los Angeles from Jan. 16-18.

A memo sent to teams Wednesday by Bill Murray, the executive director of baseball operations in the commissioner's office, told general managers and other major league front office personnel not to attend the winter meetings with the minor leagues in Los Angeles. Those sessions are scheduled for Los Angeles during the first week of December.

Owners previously had scheduled a meeting for the middle of the following once. Those sessions will take on the look of the winter meetings.

"It could be usual trade discussions," Murray said Thursday.

Acting commissioner Bud Selig has felt agents ganged up on teams when the winter meetings were held in December, attempting to run up salaries by creating the atmosphere of an auction.

By pushing the meetings back a month, some owners think many players already will have signed, preventing a run-up in prices.

"It was something that was discussed and decided at the executive council meeting," Murray said, referring to a session last week of baseball's ruling body.

Colbert braves weather, leads Sr. Championship

The Associated Press

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. — With some players wearing two sweaters and needing hand warmers, Jim Colbert shot a 4-under-68 in Thursday's chill for a three-stroke lead after one round of the Senior Tour Championship.

Colbert adjusted his club selections and finished with no bogeys. He had the only round under 70 on a day when temperatures dipped below 60 degrees at The Dunes Golf & Beach Club.

Six others were three strokes back, including defending champion Ray Floyd, Isao Aoki and Tony Jacklin, the last qualifier in the elite, 31-man field.

"It's hard to play on a day like this without making any bogeys," Colbert said. "But I had a good level of concentration and stayed in the game."

Most of the golfers were in rain gear during mid-morning tee times for the season-ending tournament. A cold breeze knocked down more pins than the players did early, and when conditions warmed by mid-afternoon, three-quarters of the field was finished.

"This over-50 group tend to tighten up a little more," Floyd said. "It definitely affects us."

It took Colbert, playing in the final group, seven holes to figure out his club choices, and when he did his game began to sparkle.

"I don't really like the cold any better than anyone out here, I just played real solid and always kind of got the ball out front," Colbert said.

Colbert went up from a pitching wedge to his middle wedge from 105 yards out on the eighth hole and slipped the ball 10 feet from the cup to set up his first birdie.

He hit an excellent 5-iron on the 200-yard ninth hole and snaked in a 40-foot putt to tie Aoki for first midway through the round.

■ Golf Roundup

Women's Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia — Sweden's Liselotte Neumann, a former U.S. Open champion, shot a wind-blown 67 on for a one-stroke lead in the Women's Australian Open.

Jane Geddes of the United States opened with a 68 on the Yarra Yarra course and England's Caroline Hall shot a 69. Among those at 70 was Sweden's Annika Sorenstam, the U.S. Open champion and the leading money winner on the LPGA and European tours. She was joined three back of the lead by Lorraine Lambert of Australia.

"I played extremely well for the conditions," said Neumann, the 1988 U.S. Open winner. "It's tough out there, it's getting very windy and harder and harder. But I'm driving the ball really well and putting myself in an excellent position to hit the greens."

Gordon ready to celebrate title

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — It's likely to be a joyous weekend for Jeff Gordon as he gets ready to put the finishing touches on his first Winston Cup championship.

If the precocious 24-year-old does anything but finish last in Sunday's season-ending NAPA 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway, he will cut short Dale Earnhardt's attempt to win his third straight series title.

Gordon finished 14th and was rookie of the year in 1993, then got his first two victories and finishing eighth in points last year. Now he's vying for the title in only his third year on the Winston Cup circuit.

He has led the points most of the season, fending off seven-time champion Earnhardt by winning eight poles and seven races — both series highs — and also showing an amazing consistency with 17 top-five and 23 top-10 finishes in 30 starts.

But Earnhardt, 44, made a fight of it, chopping the lead down to 142 points after trailing by 305 just four races ago.

"Thank goodness we had those 14 consecutive top-10 finishes," Gordon said of the streak that ended three races ago with a 30th-place finish at Charlotte, caused by a broken part in the rear end of his Chevrolet.

"I got a little bit worried about the Charlotte race, but we were still running great," he said.

"Sure, when the season started, we wanted to win the most races, most poles and the championship," said Gordon, who drives for Rick Hendrick, another first-time title winner if they can wrap it up. "We set high goals for ourselves, but who doesn't? It's just that we've sort of overwhelmed ourselves with what we've done."

Should he do what is expected this week and nail down the title, Gordon will become NASCAR's first $4 million man. He already has earned more than $2.4 million this season and a title would add a $1.3 million bonus as well as about $1 million more from the series point fund.

AP

"It's not over until it's officially over," Gordon said, apparently trying to reminding himself that disaster still lurks in wait for unsuspecting drivers. "I've seen freakier things happen. Crazy things do happen. I could blow up on the first lap. Who knows?

"I can't jump for joy, yet. Until it's officially, officially, officially over, I don't even feel good talking about the championship."

But, that's just what the youngster was forced to do as reporters descended upon him in hordes this week every time he made an appearance.

"We'd love to win, and we're going to go all out to win," Gordon said. "We've been a little conservative lately in a lot of things, but I think we're here with a little different attitude. Atlanta has been awfully good to us."

Gordon captured his first superspeedway victory in a NASCAR Busch Series race at Atlanta in 1992, then finished 21st in the Winston Cup finale at Atlanta later that year — his debut in the top series.

He also won the Purolator 500 on the 1.522-mile oval in March.

"I think it's going to be more fun if we can win the championship at Atlanta," Gordon said. "With the Braves and so much going on in Atlanta, I just might move here. I think we're going to enjoy this race."

Practice and qualifying begin Friday, with Gordon and the rest of Winston Cup's hotshoes aiming for the lap record of 185.830 set last November by Greg Sacks.

Schumacher: two Formula One goals to go

ADELAIDE, Australia (AP) — Michael Schumacher, who already has clinched his second straight world title, has two more goals to achieve this year.

He will be bidding for a record 10th Grand Prix victory in a season on Sunday — and for his first win at the Australian Grand Prix.

Schumacher's triumph in the Japanese Grand Prix two weeks ago at Suzuka gave him the opportunity to become the first driver to win 10 Formula One races in a season. He currently shares the record with Nigel Mansell, who won nine in 1992.

"To win this race is the goal, and if it happens, the record comes with it," said the 26-year-old German, whose best finish in Adelaide was second three years ago.

Schumacher waged a season-long battle with Damon Hill before clinching the title at last month's Pacific Grand Prix. He has won the last three races, and his Benetton team also has sealed the constructors' championship ahead of Hill's Williams team.

Schumacher has played down a possible repeat of last year's race, when he controversially clinched his first drivers' title after a collision with Hill sent both crashing out of the Adelaide race.

"We are the best of friends," he said with a wry smile.

"It would be good if we could stay apart," Hill said of his archrival. "It would be nice to have a good clean fight, hopefully with me in front this time."

Schumacher will be racing for Benetton-Renault for the last time in Adelaide. Next season, he switches to the less competitive Ferrari team where he will find it harder to add to the 19 wins he has scored in 68 Grands Prix.

The present Ferrari drivers, Jean Alesi and Gerhard Berger, will switch to Benetton next year.

Owner Byrd to enter three cars for Luyendyk

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Car owner Jonathan Byrd will enter three cars for driver Arie Luyendyk in the new Indy Racing League series in 1996.

Byrd said Thursday he has formed a new racing team that will compete in all five IRL events and in selected races sanctioned by Championship Auto Racing Teams, which runs the rival Indy-car series.

"We are committed to giving Arie all the tools to bring him his second Indy 500 win," said Byrd, who will enter two 1995 Cosworth-powered Reynard cars and an updated 1994 Reynard-Cosworth.

The new team, called Jonathan Byrd-Project Indy Racing, is owned by Byrd, Andreas Leberle and Fred Treadway.

Luyendyk is the first former Indy 500 winner who has said he will run the inaugural IRL series, which begins with the Indy 200 on a new one-mile oval at Walt Disney World at Orlando, Fla., on Jan. 27. The other races are at Phoenix, March 24; Indianapolis, May 26; Loudon, N.H., Aug. 18; and Las Vegas, Sept. 15.

The IRL three weeks ago sent entry forms for the Orlando race to 23 teams that competed during the 1995 Indy-car season, plus 17 newly formed teams. The entry deadline is Nov. 30.

Jodie Foster looks 'Home' to heal

Actress/director continues to gain respect in industry

Jodie Foster continues to carve out a niche in Hollywood

By Patricia Bibby
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Everything has come to a screeching halt for Jodie Foster.

The two-time Academy Award-winner and CEO of a film production company that commands millions of dollars to make movies of her very own liking, a woman who can produce, direct or act in just about any project she chooses, has been defeated.

And just what has done her in? A sly piece of technology — a fax machine!

A radiant Foster relaxes in the plush digs of the Rihga Royal hotel to tout her latest movie, "Home for the Holidays," which she both directed and co-produced. At this very moment, however, she's hunched over the obstinate fax machine, trying to feed it a simple, slim piece of paper. But every time she dials the number, she gets a very rude busy signal.

Who in the world, one wonders, demands Foster's undivided attention, requiring the star herself to interrupt a complicated schedule to tend to such a clerical chore?

Would you believe her mother? Foster was trying to fax her Mom two glowing reviews of "Home for the Holidays," produced by Foster's Egg Pictures and co-distributed by Paramount Pictures and PolyGram.

It seems apt, this sweet gesture that's the adult equivalent of running home with a straight "A" report card. For three decades, Brandy Foster has helped shape and mold her daughter's film career.

■ "Home For the Holidays" is playing at the UA Cine.

And it's apropos of the film, a story about family ties that can sometimes choke but invariably knit its members closer together.

"Home for the Holidays" is the second movie Foster has directed, after her directorial debut in 1991 with "Little Man Tate." A year later, she signed a deal with PolyGram, the music and entertainment group, to finance six films at Foster's film company, Egg Pictures. "Nell" was Egg's first film and "Home for the Holidays" its second.

With the Egg deal, Foster became one of the few women in Hollywood with the power to green-light her own projects. Part

Pam Tillis

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff writer

Somehow, Pam Tillis just keeps getting better.

With the release of her fourth album, "All of This Love," Tillis takes another step ahead in a day and age when too many artists duplicate ground they have already covered.

While Tillis' 1991 debut album was far stronger than first efforts of many other artists, she did take a step back with her second effort, "Homeward Looking Angel." But the daughter of Mel Tillis got right back on track, experimenting with a more pop/crossover sound on her third album, last year's "Sweetheart's Dance."

"All of This Love" is not entirely country, but even when she ventures off into a more pop sound ("You Can't Have a Good Time Without Me"), she does it with zest, but most of all she does it with that dynamic voice.

"Deep Down," the album's lead-off song and first single, stays mainly rooted to a more traditional country sound and is one of several songs on the album that showcases her strong vocals.

The moody "Sunset Red and Pale Moonlight," written by newcomer Kim Richey, is another highlight, but if it's memorable songs you yearn for, try out "The River and The Highway" and "Betty's Got a Bass Boat." As far apart in style as Dylan's songs are from Jim Stafford's, these two together form the album's finest eight minutes.

"The River and the Highway," co-written by Gerry House and Don Schlitz, is a sort of all-grown-up version of "Let that Pony Run." Telling the story of two disparate souls who

Ralph Fiennes: Leading man for the thinking moviegoer

Ralph Fiennes

NEW YORK — He has mastered Hamlet, brought the coldest of Nazis to life and made Americans take a hard look at their morally bereft television generation through an erudite whiz kid gone astray.

Ask actor Ralph Fiennes, veteran of London's Royal Shakespeare Company, what movie captures his imagination, though, and two unexpected words emerge from his mouth in a buttery British cadence: "Terminator II."

James Garner, who was originally cast as Augustus McRae in the "Lonesome Dove" miniseries but had to back out for health reasons, stars as Capt. Woodrow Call in the "Dove" sequel, "Streets of Laredo."

Garner gets Call to revive 'Dove'

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — James Garner poked at his white omelette (no yolk) and grumbled, "No tomato. I asked for tomato."

It was a minor irritation for the actor, who otherwise was in good spirits. He had just returned from a Canadian motor trip to Banff ("too touristy") and Lake Louise ("magnificent") with his "Rockford Files" buddy Stuart Margolin and their wives.

Garner was having breakfast in the empty dining room of the Bel Air Country Club, where he had a starting time at 10:30 a.m. Nothing pleases him more than the prospect of a brisk round of golf.

And plenty of other things please him in this 67th year of his life. He has three of his "Rockford File" two-hour movies "in the can" and is starting another one. And he is enthusiastic about the miniseries "Streets of Laredo," which airs Sunday and Tuesday on CBS.

It's the sequel to Larry McMurtry's "Lonesome Dove," which proved a triumph for Robert Duvall and

Don't blame Dave for tumble of 'Late Show'

Patterson

Recently, it seems everyone has had an opinion in the late night talk show debate. Lately, even reruns of Jay Leno's "Tonight Show" are beating out first runs of "The Late Show with David Letterman."

Critics say Letterman has lost his edge; that his comedy isn't what it used to be.

On top of the personal attacks, Letterman has lost a producer and even Bill Wendell, his long-time announcer, retired recently, leaving the show in a transitional state.

Last week's news that Letterman himself will jump ship at the end of the second millenium was enough to make his staunchest fans hurl themselves at felt-covered walls while covered in velcro.

As soon as Letterman announced he's outta there come the end of his contract, he hauls the show to L.A. for a week and tops Leno in the ratings. It's enough to make borderline skeptics wonder if the whole thing wasn't meticulously timed. Leno will try to one up Dave next week when he takes his "Tonight Show" to Las Vegas. It reeks of November sweeps doesn't it?

Fact is, as poor a network as Letterman is tied to, it's amazing he's able to pull the late night numbers he is. The critics are wrong: There's nothing wrong with Letterman ... but there is a lot wrong with CBS.

Network affiliates have pulled out left and right, leaving the former undisputed late night heavyweight to question his commitment to continuing.

But watch "Late Night" and it's easy to see the quality of Letterman's program hasn't slipped. The first 20 minutes of "Late Show" are just as funny as ever. His zingers are as zingy as ever and, at least in this opinion, he and his stable of off-the-wall writers remain far better joke-crafters than Leno and his crew. Which is not to say Leno isn't funny. It's just that Letterman is funnier more often.

Still, there are territories where Letterman would be wise to avoid in light of the show's recent turmoil:

■ There have been occasions when the talk show host has been an embarrassment; namely, he seems prone, of late, to make blunderous, borderline sexist remarks and/or gestures or facial expressions about whichever model or fabulously beautiful actress happens to be appearing on a particular night. This only makes the 48-year-old Letterman look more and more like he's in the middle of the mid-life crisis he is apparently experiencing.

■ Never, ever again should Letterman attempt to interview Jesse Jackson. Taking one of the funniest men in America and having him try to interview a man committed to a serious, worthwhile cause is not a good mix. Letterman's 15 minutes with Jesse Jackson were awful.

■ The Top 10 List should not be abandoned. For some reason, this is where many critics have zeroed in. It's just not as funny as it used to be, they've said.

FOSTER: Filmmaking is therapy, of sorts

▼VALASSIS COMMUNICATIONS, INC.

(From 10C)

of the reason the industry has so few women in positions of authority, she says, is because not many men in the movie business see women as peers.

"Women just don't find themselves in the positions when somebody sits across from them and says, 'You and I are buddies. I see myself in you. Here's $5 million (for a film),' " Foster says.

Does that mean she will push to get more women in high-profile spots at her film company? Foster is both politic and savvy in her response.

"We want the right director for the right movies," she says, adding that she currently has screenwriter Jane Anderson working on directing her first film.

And she cautions against budding female filmmakers trying to be another Jodie Foster: "It's much more important to develop your own voice and to stick to it and to believe in it."

In her latest film, Foster presents a stack of issues: fear of watching parents inch closer towards death, ever-simmering sibling rivalry, the alienation of moving away to find a career, the estrangement wrought when one family member is homosexual, and how families somehow manage to heal amid turmoil.

She compared making the film to a sort of therapy.

"It was a very healing experience for all of us," she says. "Each one of us had come from difficult films."

Foster's was last year's "Nell," in which she starred as the feral mountain woman. She earned another Oscar nomination, but it was a role that came at a high price. So encompassing was Nell's influence, it left her somewhat emotionally shattered.

It was like "having loved somebody so much that you didn't know where that person ended or you started," she says.

Letting go of Nell was a "very big moment in my life, personally. It was very moving and not something that I would be able to explain to anyone," Foster says. "It was probably one of the reasons why I wasn't really ready to act for a while."

Producing and directing "Home for the Holidays," however, was "smooth, sane, easy," she says. "Somehow, we just got together and it was like being given a gift."

The ensemble production focuses on Claudia Larson (Holly Hunter) — single mother, museum art restorer, dutiful daughter — whose life is so complex it defies those safe labels. Through utter obligation, she ventures off to Baltimore to spend Thanksgiving with her parents, Adele (Anne Bancroft) and Henry (Charles Durning).

The Larson's boisterous and eccentric antics, however, don't resemble anything that's ever taken place at the Foster household, where Foster, who turns 33 this month, was the youngest of four children.

"We're very cool and polite in my family," she says, in what could describe her own persona. "If anything, the bummer of our family is that we don't tend to exorcise our feelings. ... We sort of take each other's coat and say, 'How are you this year?' "

FIENNES: Actor cut from different cloth

(From 10C)

monster that's set to destroy and the force of good that resists it. It was classic."

On a recent gloomy afternoon, the heartbreakingly handsome and brooding Brit who won a Tony for playing Hamlet on Broadway this year sips English breakfast tea, stares out a skyscraper window and discusses the finer points of Schwarzenegger films.

Before "Strange Days," his first big-time American movie role was Amon Goeth, the pot-bellied, nasty-to-the-soul Nazi commandant in the 1993 Academy Award-winning "Schindler's List." It earned him an Oscar nomination for best supporting actor and the repugnance — and subsequent admiration — of audiences.

Last year, he portrayed another real-life anti-hero — Charles Van Doren — in Robert Redford's "Quiz Show." Van Doren, the son of one of America's most famous literary and intellectual families, earned fame and misfortune as a network pawn during the television game-show scandals of the 1950s.

Even when Fiennes is not acting, those traits come through. He is kind of ethereal himself; just to be in the man's presence is a strange experience. He has the odd effect of slowing down time — an hourlong interview feels like three — and his words often trail off into reveries of self-contemplation.

Forever elusive, he bristles when asked even the most unprying of personal questions about his upbringing and his life at home. He makes no mention of actress Alex Kingston, his wife of several years; news reports several days later will say they have separated.

He lights up — if one can call it that — only when asked about the intricacies of his craft and the characters he portrays.

"I'm interested in the way that fundamental goodness in people can win or lose against human fallibility and weakness — about the people who make mistakes, the weaker people, those who can somehow survive their faults," Fiennes says.

"Hamlet is the quintessential version of that. It's seemingly clear what his course of action is, yet he's constantly examining his inability to take action."

Fiennes, is shooting a new film, "The English Patient," in Italy and North Africa.

He plays a desert explorer, a distant man — surprise — nursing an obsession about what the desert does to people, how it reduces and denudes them.

"I don't know why I always end up playing these remote men," Fiennes says. "Maybe I feel some sort of empathy in that. The privacy of some people, I find it attractive; the unknowability of some people is just absolutely intriguing."

GARNER: 'Maverick' star enjoys his film work

range search for a Mexican bandit who has been marauding the railroad. He encounters a myriad of western characters and brutal action along the way.

"In the original 'Lonesome Dove,' I was going to do the Robert Duvall part, and I got sick," Garner said. "I think it was a good thing for everyone concerned because he was so marvelous in the role. I don't know what I would have done with it. It was the only time I lost a part and didn't really mind when I saw the picture.

"I was in Hawaii, reading the script. I'd had a physical just before I went over there. My doctor called me and said, 'You can't do 'Lonesome Dove.' You have an aneurysm in your aorta.' So I had to turn it down."

Garner resembles the $6 Million Man because of the repairs and replacements he has endured. He can still play golf, but any fancy horse riding for "Streets of Laredo" was a no-no.

"Because of my previous operations, the doctors didn't want me to do it," he said. "It was tempting fate a little bit; I don't think so, but the doctors do." Roy Clark, his double since the early days of "Maverick," got the duty.

Despite his laidback nature, Garner is not averse to work. He has been working all his adult life, scoring first with the 1950s TV series "Maverick." That was when he established his screen persona as the sly, sardonic hero who strives to avoid a fight but can handle it if all else fails.

It worked as Bret Maverick and again as Jim Rockford. Garner agreed to the "Rockford Files" TV movies on two conditions: He would make them for his own company, with cast and crew regulars from the 1974-1980 series, and he would not enter the studio lot of his partner, Universal Studio. He had sued the company over "Rockford" profits and received a settlement.

Garner soon begins the sixth and last of the "Rockford" movies under the present contract. Will he do more? That depends on CBS, he said, and if he can find good scripts.

"We got two outstanding scripts out of the six — two pretty good, and two of them fine, but not as good as the others. That's not a bad percentage," said Garner, a native of Oklahoma.

"The first was the highest-rated movie-of-the-week for the year. The second was hot, but nobody saw. (CBS) didn't do any advertising at all. I mean nothin'!

"I was back in Oklahoma giving the commencement speech at the university. I must have had 50 people ask me, 'When's the next one coming on?' I said, 'Tomorrow night!' Nobody knew."

TILLIS: 'Betty's got a Bass Boat' a highlight can no longer stay together, "River" easily challenges anything else Tillis has recorded as her most breathtaking ballad.

On the other hand, there's the playfulness of "Betty's Got a Bass Boat," a sort of female Bubba song, if you will. While male country singers and bands have way overdone the Bubba theme, the subject really hasn't been touched by a female singer. Tillis' "Betty" is the benchmark for any future attempts by female artists who care to handle good ol' boy songs. Filled with humor, the song tells of how her central character begins getting lucky, but only after she buys herself a pickup, a bass boat and a satellite dish.

"Betty's got a bass boat, Betty's got a truck, all of a sudden things are looking up/She's the most popular girl in town/Since she got a new camper and a huntin' hound."

The witty "Betty" has major hit written all over it, as does "It's Lonely Out There," one of only two songs Tillis co-wrote on the album. Tillis co-penned the latter with her husband; the other, "Tequila Mockingbird," a song she performed at last summer's American Cancer Society benefit at the Confederate Air Force Museum, Tillis co-wrote with her brother, Mel Jr.

The only song here that should have been left off is a remake of Bruce Hornsby's "Mandolin Rain," a song that was so exquisite in its original form it's never needed another interpretation.

"All of This Love," effectively measure the continued maturing of Tillis as a singer and now, as a producer. It is easily one of the top commercial country albums of the year, not to mention Tillis' personal best to this point.

PATTERSON: Dave shouldn't ditch Top 10

(From 10C)

Nonsense. Nightly monologues and stand-up comedy are often hit and miss, even when delivered by the best at their craft; in addition, humor is always subjective.

The Top 10 List remains one of the most consistently funny aspects of popular culture today. From time to time there will be a clunker in the bunch, but it is still what hundreds of thousands of people tune in for each night and talk about the next day, even though it's been cut back, lately. When it is ultimately viewed from a historical perspective, the Top 10 List segment will prove to have been a huge component of American humor, and will likely have a lasting impact. Just look at how many people imitate it now. Turn on your radio or TV or open your newspaper and you'll likely find a copy.

Letterman's ratings are not what they used to be and talk of his departure is a bit sad. Leno may eventually win the war, but not without a good fight from Dave. If Letterman does lose the battle, don't blame his material, blame only CBS for a lack of support and poor ratings.
