Schools not liable, court decides

Justices rule school districts not responsible if not informed of harassment

By Mark Helm
Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — School districts cannot be held responsible when a teacher sexually harasses or abuses a student if the school authorities were not informed of the misconduct, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The 5-4 decision in a Texas case means that in order to collect monetary damages, a student must prove that school officials knew of the teacher's misconduct and chose to ignore it.

"Until Congress speaks directly on the subject, we will not hold a school district liable in damages ... for a teacher's sexual harassment of a student absent actual notice and deliberate indifference," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor wrote for the court.

She noted, however, that the ruling will not affect any right that a harassed student has to recover monetary damages from a guilty teacher, or against a school district under some state laws. But such state cases have proved virtually futile.

While refusing to hold school districts liable, O'Connor acknowledged that "harassment unfortunately is an all too common aspect of the educational experience ... and that a student suffers extraordinary harm when subjected to sexual harassment and abuse by a teacher, and that the teacher's conduct is reprehensible and undermines the basic purposes of the educational system."

A women's legal organization decried the decision, saying that unless school districts are held financially responsible, they will have no reason to enforce sexual harassment policies strictly.

"What the court is saying to schools is, 'Stick your head in the sand and ignore these problems,'" said Jocelyn Frey, legal director of the Washington-based National Partnership for Women and Families.

"Our view is that when a person is allowed to collect damages, that really gets the school going to correct the probelm. If schools don't have to worry about being liable, they have no reason to push strong enforcemnt of sexual harassment policy."

HOT, HOT, HOT

No relief in sight from scorching heat

By Richard Enos
Staff Writer

Midlanders probably won't see any relief from triple-digit heat through Saturday, according to the National Weather Service.

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high of 100 degrees and an overnight low around 75. George Mathews, a NWS meteorologist, said there's no relief in sight nor is precipitation likely for ranchers and farmers worried about the parched conditions.

"(There's) actually diminishing chances later in the week," Mathews said. "I don't think there's any way to get used to this."

TU Electric reported near-record power usage statewide on Monday. TU has already set all-time records on June 18 and June 19. The new company record is 394,543,000 kilowatt hours, surpassing the previous record of 385,272,000 set on July 28, 1997.

■ Heat, drought prompt fires across Texas/1B

LuAnn Morgan, TU's district manager, said that locally, power outages have not been a serious problem.

"Right now we're still in good shape," she said. "Right now we've got all our generators working. The only problems we're having is those localized problems, which usually take about 30 minutes (to fix)."

"It is unusual to have it this persistent," he said.

"The low temperature Saturday morning was the warmest ever recorded (for June), 82 degrees. The normal low is 67."

May had six days with highs at or over 100 and June's had 14 days. Temperatures this June are on average are 9 degrees above normal for the month.

"If it goes through the end of the month, it will make the warmest month ever," he said. "I think by and large it's upper-level high pressure that usually causes heat waves like this," he said.

Normally in the summertime the high pressure systems tend to stay in the Atlantic Ocean, near the Bermuda.

"It's more been over us than in the Atlantic," he said.

Precipitation continues to be elusive. Some weekend storms gathered over the Permian Basin, but did not deliver rain to the Midland-Odessa area.

"We're getting more and more low-level moisture here, but it is not breaking the heat," he said. "There were some real heavy rains in Dawson County."

The extended forecast for Wednesday through Saturday calls for highs at 100 and lows in the 70s.

Entrada meeting 'promising,' say Motran officials

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Local officials with the Midland-Odessa Transportation Alliance (Motran) and other proponents of the La Entrada al Pacifico trade corridor met with Mexican state and federal officials in Chihuahua City recently and "some promising information" came out of the meeting.

Motran and others are pushing for the completion and upgrade of a highway linking the Pacific port of Topolobampo with the Permian Basin, making a trade corridor for goods transported to and from Mexico and the Pacific Rim nations.

Area economist Ray Perryman has estimated as many as 7,000 additional trucks moving through the area each day, bringing millions of dollars to the local economy — if the La Entrada al Pacific trade corridor is completed.

The Mexican highway department, the Ministry of Communications and Transportation, has estimated that the new corridor, if completed, could ultimately draw in 40 percent of the cargo currently being unloaded in Long Beach, Calif.

"We are very pleased with progress reported in our meeting ... Mexico is well along the way on improvements necessary on their part of La Entrada al Pacifico," Perry said after the meeting.

Two highway projects are ongoing along the corridor, with Federal Highway 16 being expanded to four lanes along a 35-kilometer stretch between Chihuahua City and the city of Aldama. The second project is the creation of a highway between Cuauhtemoc and San Rapheal to be completed in 1998.

With those two projects completed, there will remain only a 12-mile stretch of road to be built to finally establish the La Entrada trade route.

Those Mexican highway projects, however, are not driven by trade, but rather by tourism, Perry said.

The Mexican federal government is working to open the Copper Canyon area up for tourist trade, but those same projects are a boon to La Entrada proponents, Perry added.

The federal highway officials at the meeting, however, were at first less than enthusiastic regarding requests by the Texas delegation to have a better highway constructed along a 23-mile section of highway south of Ojinaga near the Texas border, he said.

'Fort Stockton, we have a problem': W. Texas counties vie for spaceport

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Rocketships in West Texas?

Officials in Fort Stockton and Sanderson seem to think it's a good idea.

Pecos and Terrell counties are the state's only two inland locations participating in a study of possible spaceport sites, according to the San Angelo Standard-Times.

Proponents of the idea say the hot, dry weather and desolate terrain around Fort Stockton and Sanderson could be assets for a launch and re-entry port for reusable rockets.

Terry "Tex" Toler, Terrell County's economic and tourism development coordinator acknowledged that some might see a spaceport in Sanderson, an area known more for its cow pastures and oil fields, as an unlikely possibility.

"But like John Wayne used to say, 'Hey, it's a long shot, but it might just work,'" Toler said.

The five other areas participating in the study are located along the Gulf Coast: the Brazoria County Partnership, the Chambers-Jefferson Counties Partnership of Southeast Texas, the Galveston County Economic Development Alliance, the Mid-Texas Coast Coalition and a Harlingen-Kingsville partnership.

The study is being coordinated by the Texas Aerospace Commission, a state agency "dedicated to the continuing

JUN 23 1998

Villagers band together in fight for survival

By Paul Geitner
Associated Press

JUNIK, Yugoslavia — About a dozen men waited in a run-down restaurant at the edge of town, reloading their assault rifles and joking nervously as mortar shells exploded outside and bullets ricocheted down the empty street.

One was a young track star, another his former coach; their commander was a writer and former political prisoner.

"When it's a question of existence, you have to do it," said Lume Hagjiu, a 40-year-old author of eight books of poetry, sweating in his heavy camouflage uniform and gripping a worn Kalashnikov. "But I hate the war."

For weeks, Serbs trying to wipe out the Kosovo Liberation Army have targeted villages along Kosovo's border with Albania, aiming to seal off the secessionist province and prevent an influx of new arms and fighters.

One of the biggest villages still controlled by the KLA along the border, Junik is fighting back with everything it's got, determined to keep its border open.

None of the men in Junik, about five miles from the border, relished the fighting Monday, which began at midafternoon and lasted about 90 minutes.

But they were used to it. Serb forces positioned on the surrounding high ground have opened fire almost every day since the first attack on May 29, killing five villagers and wounding at least 10, they said.

The buildings show some of the battle scars: The roof of one house was destroyed; another house had a hole blown in the side.

"The first day was very difficult — all the families and children were here," said Gani Shehu, another KLA commander. Serb forces hit them with guns, grenades and mortars — "everything they had."

But the town of 12,000 knew what was coming and got ready, with help from the Kosovo Liberation Army.

"We learned a lesson from Drenica," Shehu says, referring to the site of the first Serb crackdown in March, where about 80 ethnic Albanian villagers were killed. "We picked up guns and decided to do something."

Most of the town's women, children and elderly have fled, some to Albania, some to safer villages. A third group of about 1,000 are trapped in the hills, the commanders say, surrounded by Serbs and unable to cross the border, which was sealed last week by the Yugoslav army.

On June 15, Serb forces shot at those refugees from helicopters. It's not clear what casualties they suffered, Shehu says.

About 4,000 people remain in the village, mostly men of fighting age, all with guns. All say they're willing to lay down their lives to defend their homes and win Kosovo's freedom from Serbia.

Junik hasn't had electricity for two months, and food is running out. The men have started slaughtering farm animals left behind. "Better we eat them than let the Serbs shoot them," Hagjiu says.

The men don't dare venture out of Junik openly — the first Serb police checkpoint is just a half-mile down the road. But neither do the Serbs move in — the road is blocked by twisted, rusting iron and guarded by KLA fighters.

Most of the men in Junik don't have uniforms; they wear old jeans or work clothes. All carry guns, however, and they quickly took up positions behind the front line when the first burst of machine-gun fire rang out. A house, a barn, even a haystack — wherever they could find cover.

When their clips ran out, and the mortar shells and grenades started falling, they retreated into the thick-walled restaurant, now a community kitchen.

KLA fighters farther up the hills continued to return fire.

Junik has held out for 24 days, Hagjiu says. He has no idea how much longer the fighting will last, but doesn't hold out much hope for a negotiated peace.

Despite Western pressure, the Serbs refuse to pull back until the separatist attacks stop. Out on the main highway Monday, convoys of Yugoslav army tanks and heavy guns were moving toward the area.

Truckloads of Serb police, singing and waving Yugoslav flags, roared through neighboring Decani, where buildings were burned and windows smashed.

A few miles in the other direction, the hamlet of Prilep was empty except for police and the stench of rotting farm animal carcasses.

The men of Junik say they won't let that happen to their town. And they won't stop shooting until the Serb forces stop shooting at them.

Hagjiu was jailed under the communists from 1979-83 for his poems about love and freedom for Kosovo. He made it to Sweden in 1985 and worked there as a translator until February, when he came back to fight with his people.

Shpejtim Maloku, the 18-year-old long-distance runner, proudly shows off his T-shirt commemorating a Kosovo-wide track meet last year in which he won the 5,000 meters in under 15 minutes.

With a bashful grin, he says he dreams of being a professional athlete. "But first of all my dream is for Kosovo to be free."

Thugs, neo-Nazis put damper on soccer tournament's festive face

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

TOULOUSE, France — A newspaper headline screamed, "Hooliganism: It's Escalating," and wary townsfolk in Toulouse scrutinized strangers in their midst. Those English fans partying on the Place du Capitole — were they the hooligans?

In scattered outbreaks of World Cup violence, real culprits were hard to miss. German neo-Nazis bludgeoned a policeman in Lens on Sunday, leaving him near death. English thugs, French-Tunisians and riot troops have fought pitched battles in Marseille.

Beyond the actual clashes, the fear of potential ones has thrown a wet blanket over an international sporting extravaganza.

Marseille at times resembles an armed camp, with metal barriers closing off sections of the Old Port, where local authorities had planned night after night of free concerts.

Lens, a hardscrabble industrial town that lives for soccer, is still shaken from Sunday's violence, which left a policeman comatose and on a respirator after being battered by German hooligans. Lyon is on alert, as is Montpellier, where Germany plays Iran on Thursday.

In Toulouse, where one-sixth of the 600,000 inhabitants are a university students, the bars now close at 11 p.m. An extra 500 police, with heavy riot gear, patrol the few places where soccer fans gather. Cars are checked coming into town.

Two huge video screens that had been set up so people without tickets could watch the games were covered with tarps for Monday's England-Romania match, just in case.

"It's a little silly, isn't it?" observed Brian Edwards of Stoke, a peaceable English fan with long experience in soccer crowds.

"The more you act like you expect trouble, the more likely you'll provoke it. There are always a few idiots around."

Many French who waited years to welcome the world for this tournament are beginning to wish everyone would just go home.

"What a mess," muttered Christophe Bourgan, a young French street sweeper whose crew crisscrossed Toulouse's Place du Capitole, picking up beer cans, bottles and half-chewed food by the ton. "This is worse than the Fete de la Musique."

And this year, even that — the Fete — was canceled. Every June 21, French cities and towns celebrate summer solstice with a nightlong music festival. Toulouse has one of the best, usually drawing 100,000 people.

But this year it was called off to avoid possible trouble.

The first violence erupted in Paris even before the games started. After an elaborate parade, local delinquents got rowdy with kilted Scots, well-lubricated for their game with Brazil. When police charged, dozens were hurt in a free-for-all.

Marseille's running battles followed a similar pattern. Youths from the tough part of town waved red Tunisian flags at drunken English fans. A fight started. Police charged, but the English stood and fought.

The German invasion in Lens, with several hundred masked and well-organized thugs giving Nazi salutes, added a new dimension to the threat.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Diana fund to keep operating

LONDON — The memorial fund for Princess Diana will keep operating, the trustees said Monday, despite earlier calls from the princess' brother to dissolve because of what he called "tacky" merchandising decisions.

Earl Spencer had criticized decisions to put his late sister's name on tubs of margarine and on lottery cards, and asked the trustees to set a deadline to disband the organization.

The Diana, Pricess of Wales Memorial Fund issued a statement Monday — approved by Buckingham Palace and Diana's family, including her brother — saying the fund would avoid actively raising funds.

However, the statement said the fund would "continue its work indefinitely, settling into a pattern of making grants mainly or wholly from the income derived from its long-term capital."

The statement said the fund probably would award a minimum of $6.7 million to charities every year.

Starting this fall, it said, the fund's donations will target four groups — "displaced people," such as the homeless; "people at the margins," including the unemployed, the disabled or drug addicts; "survivors of conflict," meaning everyone from those injured in war to those affected by family strife; and "the dying and the bereaved."

The fund, established after Diana's death in a Paris car crash Aug. 31, already has pledged $21.7 million to various charities.

■ President calls students 'heroes'

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Indonesia's president on Monday declared four student protesters shot to death by security forces last month heroes of the country's reform movement.

"In my view they are heroes and I declare them heroes," President B.J. Habibie said during a meeting with the parents of the dead students at Jakarta's state palace. "We hope their sacrifice will not be wasted."

The four students were gunned down during a pro-reform rally at Jakarta's Trisakti University on May 12. The military has charged 18 police officers in their deaths.

The deaths triggered a wave of rioting that killed about 1,200 people and helped force out former President Suharto after 32 years in power.

Since assuming the presidency, Habibie has promised sweeping reforms, including free and fair elections next year.

Habibie said the government would pay medical bills for an injured student who remains unconscious in an intensive care unit at a Jakarta hospital. He did not say whether compensation would be paid to the dead students' families.

■ EU approves advertising ban

LUXEMBOURG — The European Union gave final approval Monday to a law phasing out tobacco advertising in the 15-nation bloc.

The law will abolish almost all tobacco advertising by 2006. Approval was a formality after the ban received the backing of EU health ministers in December and a majority of legislators in the European Parliament last month.

Germany and Austria voted against the ban, arguing individual EU nations should be free to decide such public health issues. Spain and Denmark abstained.

Under the directive, most tobacco advertising will be illegal within four years and cigarette makers will have until October 2006 to end sponsorship of major sports and cultural events.

Tobacco advertising is already banned in Finland, France, Italy, Portugal and Sweden. Belgium plans to ban it next year.

■ Ruling party plans to cut staff

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's long-dominant political party intends to slash its executive committee staff by 30 percent to improve efficiency, a report said Monday.

The Institutional Revolutionary Party currently spends 5 million pesos ($565,000) each month on salaries for 1,200 employees. Cutting the staff by 30 percent would save the party 1.5 million pesos ($170,000) a month, the daily Reforma reported.

Jose Luis Stein, the National Executive Committee's secretary for administration and finance, said the party is looking to use its resources more effectively and eliminate job duplication.

The 69-year-old ruling party of President Ernesto Zedillo dominated all levels of Mexican politics until recent years. In 1997, the party lost control of the lower house of Congress for the first time.

Problems worsen for China's pragmatic regime

By Charles Hutzler
Associated Press

BEIJING — When President Clinton arrives in Beijing, he will meet a Chinese leadership beset by deepening problems — from a slowing economy to challenges to its own political authority.

For China, the summit is a chance to show itself as an emerging, responsible global power. But global power ultimately depends on internal stability, and China's leaders are struggling to keep the world's most-populous nation on a stable course.

Among the problems now troubling Zhongnanhai, the high-walled leadership compound in central Beijing:

■ New Premier Zhu Rongji, touted as a pragmatist, wants to keep economic growth strong and force failing state industries and banks to play by capitalist rules. But his plans are imperiled by Asia's financial upheaval, worsening unemployment and bureaucratic resistance.

■ As the economy quavers, risks are growing for the ruling Communist Party. Outbursts of protest and crime by dispossessed members of the once-protected proletariat are rocking cities.

■ Morale in the military — the ultimate protector of party power — is sinking. Feeling the economic pinch, the People's Liberation Army's own industries are laying off workers, many of them the wives of servicemen. Officers worry about how to support their families on meager salaries.

The domestic unease has stripped some gloss off the bright prospects for Zhu and his Cabinet, which marks its 100th day in office Friday, the day Clinton lands in Beijing.

For Clinton, eight days of negotiating and toasting Chinese leaders offers opportunities. They may be in a mood to compromise to preserve their huge stake in the U.S. market and win a presidential seal of approval to inspire foreign investors.

■ News analysis

"The initiative is all in the United States' hands," said Wang Shan, an author and political commentator. "China needs so many things from the United States."

At his inaugural news conference in March, Zhu promised 8 percent growth, a threshold seen as critical to meeting his three-year goal to turn around loss-making state industries and absorb more than 30 million state workers to be laid off.

The plans — along with a paring of the bureaucracy — would rid the economy of the last vestiges of central planning and launch a new phase in the acclaimed reforms that have quadrupled national wealth and pulled tens of millions of Chinese out of poverty.

When Zhu was announcing his plans, few decision-makers expected Asia's financial crisis to deteriorate and drag down China's already slowing economy. Japan's economic torpor and sinking yen have threatened a crucial export market and source of investment for China.

Exports declined in May for the first time in nearly two years. Foreign investment in the first five months of the year weakened.

Few economists now predict 8 percent growth. Even Finance Minister Xiang Huaicheng, who insisted last week that the target coul be et, conceded "relatively great effort will be required."

There may be a "recession with Chinese characteristics" — a 5 or 6 percent clip that in other countries would be considered booming — said Lin Yifu, an economist at elite Beijing University.

Questions remain, however, whether that will be enough to create jobs and keep simmering discontent in check. Layoffs are coming relentlessly. Last month the coal industry alone predicted it would lose a half-million workers in three years.

Hard-luck cities like Wuhan and Xi'an, once titans of centrally planned industry, have been beset by demonstrations this month. Some of the unemployed have turned to crime. Bombings have been reported in Wuhan, Kunming and other cities.

"People have no hope for the future," said Wang, the author.

Attempts to revive the economy and stave off unrest have taken on ad hoc, totalitarian and even desperate overtones.

In a secret document, the Communist Party Central Committee ordered all government agencies to be on guard for challenges to the regime, Hong Kong newspapers have reported.

Israel: Palestinian rhetoric is obstacle to peace

JERUSALEM (AP) — On a recent episode of the Palestinian TV show "Children's Club" the kids took a break from games and puppet skits to listen to a song.

"Now we sing for the revolution and olive trees. We've stopped being pampered," sang an 8-year-old Palestinian boy. "Now we throw bombs and burn our enemies."

Extremist rhetoric laces Palestinian public discourse at all levels — mosque sermons, newspaper editorials, politician's statements, even children's television. Israeli officials say that without the backing of Palestinian public opinion, militants would not be able to carry out bombings and shootings.

And they believe Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's failure to curb hate speech is a prime symbol of what's wrong with the peace process.

"The sorts of terrorism we are facing are ones that find it very difficult to operate without a sympathetic environment," said Daniel Taub, a Foreign Ministry legal expert. "Incitement is the sort of thing that helps generate that environment."

Taub cited the official naming of a public square in the Gaza Strip after slain Hamas master bomber Yehiya Ayyash, calling it an act that "seriously undermined" anti-terror statements by the Palestinian leadership.

The militant rhetoric also plays out in the streets, where there is indulgence — sometimes even encouragement — of Palestinian children who confront Israeli soldiers with insults and stones, putting themselves at risk of injury or death.

Reports issued by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office list myriad examples of hostile propaganda.

A Palestinian Authority press release likened Israeli security practices to those of Nazi soldiers, and an editorial in al-Hayat al-Jeddida, a Palestinian Authority-backed newspaper, compared Zionism with Nazism.

Such comparisons are particularly offensive to Israelis, many of whom lost relatives to the Nazi Holocaust.

Also cited was a sermon in which the chief Muslim authority in Jerusalem, Mufti Ikrima Sabri, an Arafat appointee, refers to Jews as "the sons of monkeys and pigs."

Ahmed Tibi, a political adviser to Arafat, dismissed the Israeli complaints and said Netanyahu was more interested in "point-scoring" and finding excuses not to make peace.

"Are there some bad statements by Palestinians? Yes. Is it official policy? Of course not," said Tibi, who monitors Israeli media.

Palestinians contend Israel has been no less derelict in halting hatemongers in its camp. Netanyahu, for example, has failed to remove a shrine erected by extremists at the grave of Baruch Goldstein, a settler who massacred 29 Muslim worshippers in a Hebron mosque in 1994.

COURT: Four justices dissent from ruling

(From 1A)

Union called the decision "unfortunate and wrong." He said it left "no effective remedy for students who are sexually victimized by their teachers." He called on Congress to provide such a remedy.

But Virginia Collier, who was superintendent of the Lago Vista, Texas, school district when it was sued in the case, said officials there "had absolutely zero reason to know what was going on. Schools can't protect students from everything," she added. "We love and care for the children in our schools and we are doing our best to protect them, but we are only human. We can't be all things."

The court's ruling rejected a harassment claim against the public school district near Austin over a teacher's sexual relationship with a ninth-grade student.

Because the decision focused exclusively on a school setting involving teachers and students, it does not apply to on-the-job sexual harassment.

But the justices are expected to say more on that subject in a pair of decisions to be announced before the court ends its 1997-98 term this week or next.

In one case, the justices are considering whether employers should be held financially responsible for a supervisor's sexual misconduct when the victim complained to another supervisor.

In the other case, the question is whether a company is responsible if one of its supervisors harassed a woman and threatened to make her job difficult unless she succumbed to his sexual advances but never carried out the threat. She alleged that even though she received a promotion, she felt compelled to resign because of a hostile work environment.

In Monday's case, police found Frank Waldrop, then 52, a social studies teacher at Lago Vista High School, nude in the woods with a 15-year-old student, Alida Star Gebser, in January 1993.

According to the lawsuit that Gebser and her mother later filed against the Lago Vista school district, the sexual relationship had lasted for about six months. Gebser, now a college student, had apparently told no one about the affair.

Earlier, in October 1982, parents or guardians of at least two other girls had complained about what they called inappropriate comments Waldrop made to their daughters. He met with the adults and said he had meant no offense. The school principal admonished Waldrop and considered the matter resolved, according to court documents.

After the police discovered Waldrop and Gebser having sex, Waldrop was fired and stripped of his teaching certificate. He eventually pleaded no contest to a charge of attempted sexual assault.

A federal judge threw out Gebser's suit against the school district, however, after noting a lack of evidence that any administrative official knew about the sexual relationship.

In 1997, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the dismissal of the suit, rejecting arguments that school districts should be held responsible whenever a teacher sexually harasses a student.

On Monday, the Supreme Court agreed.

Joining O'Connor's majority opinion were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia, Anthony M. Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

Justices John Paul Stevens, David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer dissented.

Writing for the four, Stevens attacked the majority decision, saying: "As a matter of policy, the court ranks protection of the school's district's purse above the protection of immature high school students that those rules would provide."

Stevens also said the decision "thwarts the purposes of Title IX" of a 1972 law denying federal aid to schools that allow discrimination against girls in sports and other school activities.

In 1992, the Supreme Court ruled that under the 1972 law, sexually harassed students may collect monetary damages from their schools and school officials. But it did not say what standard should be used for imposing liability on a school district for the intentional acts of one of its teachers.

In their arguments before the court, lawyers for the Lago Vista school district said it would be unfair to make employers legally responsible when they don't know that the harassment is taking place.

Lawyers for Gebser contended that a school district should provide adequate procedures to prevent, discover and eradicate sexual harassment. School districts that fail to create a safe environment, they said, should be held financially liable, regardless of whether they knew about sexual harassment.

ENTRADA: Bottleneck hinders trade, Perry says

(From 1A)

The existing road through the mountains there is too steep in many places, as well as being narrow and in need of repair. Truck drivers avoid using the proposed La Entrada route because of the wear that stretch of road causes for brakes and drive trains, Perry said.

After it became clear how better roads could benefit both tourism and trade, the federal officials warmed to the idea and have agreed to fund a planning study during the next budget session, which is the first step in securing money for eventual construction.

With the removal of that bottleneck, the corridor would almost immediately see more trade traffic, since the entry through El Paso is so congested that it sometimes takes two days to get a truck through customs there, Perry said.

Then La Entrada promoters could concentrate on the remaining 12-mile stretch of road between the Copper Canyon area and Topolobampo, which must be constructed before Pacific nations can begin trading with the U.S. along that route.

It was decided at the meeting that local officials and their Mexican counterparts should begin meeting every two months to help move the trade corridor planning along, Perry said.

Coast Guard struggling to do more with less

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tracked by a U.S. Coast Guard cutter, the boat carrying suspected drug smugglers headed up the Yucatan channel, rounded Cuba's western end and slipped in Havana's harbor. There it mingled with a crowd of fishing boats. The cutter lurking outside lost it.

Better radar would have helped. But the Coast Guard — saddled with aging equipment to rescue boaters and catch drug traffickers, illegal immigrants and fish poachers on the high seas — does not have it.

"In a lot of ways, people are at risk," said Allen Boetig, a retired Coast Guard commander who recalled losing track of the suspicious craft. "The problem is, you never know what you lose. You never know how much drugs you miss, or how many people you didn't save."

Since 1992, the Coast Guard has assumed increased responsibilities as its work force shrank by nearly 10 percent. At the same time, its budget has risen just 1 percent a year in inflation-adjusted dollars, according to Congress' General Accounting Office.

Fears have arisen within and outside the Coast Guard that it will have to start cutting services unless Congress increases its 1999 budget beyond President Clinton's requested $4 billion.

"It's time to bolster their forces," said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., a member of the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee.

The budget request represents a 3 percent increase over 1998 and includes $35 million from new user fees on commercial ships, a tax strongly opposed by industry.

More broadly, the Coast Guard says it needs billions of dollars to replace old aircraft and cutters — some of which date from before World War II — and update sensors, communications and radar systems. It is unclear where the money will come from in a tight federal budget.

It would cost the Coast Guard $8 billion to replace every large ship and aircraft now in service. It is not going to get that much, but even a less-sweeping modernization would be sure to dwarf the service's regular equipment budget. That has averaged just under $400 million annually in the past decade.

Old technology can hamper work. Frequently pilots who spot suspicious activity cannot fully relay the information to a vessel in the vicinity because of poor communications. Night patrol boats could see better with infrared sensors, and faster boats could help snare drug traffickers.

"We don't have the speed on our surface craft," said Capt. Craig Schnappinger, manager of the service's modernization program. "Those are extremely fast cigarette boats that the drug folks use."

Even with the drag of older equipment, the Coast Guard stopped a record 103,000 pounds of cocaine from entering the United States in 1997 and arrested 233 drug traffickers.

It also reported seizing 50 tons of marijuana, saving 5,000 lives, helping 50,000 boaters in distress, intercepting more than 2,100 illegal immigrants and supervising more than 600 federally funded oil and chemical cleanups.

The Coast Guard has had to do more with less. It has decommissioned old cutters and aircraft and cut 4,000 jobs in four years. Staffing levels were reduced at 20 of 285 stations, although Congress opposed a 1995 proposal to close 23 stations. The Coast Guard Reserve has dipped below 8,000 members.

Cutbacks have meant more work for the Coast Guard's remaining 34,000 men and women. Eric A. Trent, the service's master chief petty officer, told a House subcommittee that most enlisted people work long hours, often averaging 80 hours a week.

Trent said he was "apprehensive and concerned about how much longer this effort can be sustained."

As anti-drug missions nearly doubled from 1995-97, the Coast Guard spent 14,000 fewer hours on fisheries enforcement. Fully one-third of U.S. marine stocks are now overfished or approaching that condition.

Cutbacks, too, have increased pressures on local and state marine agencies.

"It definitely left a vacuum here," said George Burgess, harbormaster in Marshfield, Mass., referring to reduced staffing at the Coast Guard station in nearby Scituate. Burgess' staff of six patrols two rivers and five miles of open sea that is heavily used by lobster and tuna boats, oil barges and recreational boaters.

For its part, the Coast Guard plays down its troubles.

"This agency is very adept at getting the most from a dollar," said Jack O'Dell, a spokesman.

Convicted killer escapes from Huntsville

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Authorities searched Monday night for a convicted killer who escaped a prison unit while working as a trusty at a state airport.

Robert James Hudspeth Jr., 47, was last seen Monday afternoon at the prison department airport near Interstate 45. He was confirmed missing from the Wynne Unit about 7:30 p.m.

"He had left a note earlier saying he was sick and going back to the unit," said Texas Department of Criminal Justice spokesman Larry Fitzgerald.

Officials say Hudspeth was driven to and from his airport job by prison guards. It was unclear how they lost track of him.

Fitzgerald said authorities suspect that, since the inmate had access to phones and other communication at the airport, Hudspeth had help in escaping.

"We suspicion he's probably gone, probably got a ride," Fitzgerald said.

Hudspeth had been in prison since Feb. 13, 1981, after his conviction on a murder charge from Travis County. He was serving a life term.

The escapee is a white male, 6-foot-1 and 210 pounds, with gray short hair and brown eyes. He has a cut scar on his right arm and a gunshot scar on his right torso.

Fitzgerald said Hudspeth was the fifth prison escapee in Texas this year. Fourteen escaped last year. All have been caught.

USS Missouri joins Arizona as historic bookend

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii (AP) — The two ships that marked the beginning and the end of World War II for the United States were linked Monday as the USS Missouri arrived here at Battleship Row.

The battleship, on which the Japanese surrendered, was tied up 1,000 feet away from the shrine that straddles the sunken USS Arizona in remembrance of the 1,177 crewman who died there.

More than 2,000 people lined the Pearl Harbor channel Monday morning as the oceangoing tug Sea Victory pulled the awesome 887-foot, 58,000-ton battlewagon up to its berth, ending an 18-day crossing from the West Coast.

"I think it is fitting that this ship be here. I like to think this is where it belongs ... near the Arizona in Pearl Harbor where the war began," said spectator Henry Walker. Walker witnessed the surrender signing ceremony on the ship in 1945 when he was a junior officer on watch on navigation bridge.

Former President George Bush, the honorary chairman of the USS Missouri Memorial Association, said the ship "will be an enduring symbol of peace."

SPACEPORT: Other states pursuing facility, as well development of the aviation and space industries throughout the state."

The Commission says it works closely with aviation and space companies, economic development organizations, and other government and quasi-government agencies to provide the best business environment possible to attract, retain and expand aerospace business throughout the state.

Each of the seven areas participating in the spaceport study paid the TAC between $12,500 and $14,000 for a technical assessment of its site.

As part of the assessment process, the participating communities will undergo site inspections beginning this week to determine their suitability for a spaceport.

Aerospace Corp. of California, which has been involved with military and commercial research and development since 1960, will do the assessments.

Texas is not alone in the quest, said TAC executive director Tom Moser of Kerrville.

"We're trying to make an attractive offer to aerospace companies," he said.

But so are several other states, including Florida, California, Alaska and New Mexico."

Locating the spaceport near Fort Stockton could create as many as 1,000 aerospace jobs, estimated Gregg McKenzie, Precinct 1 commissioner for Pecos County.

"Not only would it create jobs, but tourists would come in to visit, just like at Cape Canaveral," he said.

Clinton orders teen smoking survey; GOP readies new tobacco bill

By Sonya Ross
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — President Clinton ordered the government on Monday to ask teen-agers which cigarettes they smoke as a step toward nailing down companies' accountability.

Republican leaders, meanwhile, were putting the finishing touches on their own tobacco bill, a much narrower alternative to the legislation defeated last week in what Clinton described as "a brazen act of putting politics over people."

The Republican bill could include up to $4.3 billion for fighting smoking and drug use by teen-agers, but the leaders had not settled on a way to pay for it. One option under discussion was using some of the money that states gain in their lawsuits against the industry, GOP aides said.

The House bill also is expected to cap lawyers' fees and restrict vending machine placement. But it will not contain the lawsuit protection the industry demands. Nor is it likely to include a per-pack increase on cigarette prices.

Three-dozen states are suing tobacco companies to recoup the cost of treating sick smokers. Most recently, the industry reached a $6 billion settlement with Minnesota.

The president directed the Department of Health and Human Services to begin collecting information on tobacco use among young people as part of an annual survey on drugs.

Speaking at the annual Family Re-Union conference, with Vice President Al Gore as host, Clinton said the bigger tobacco bill was derailed because "43 senators followed the bidding of the Republican leadership and the tobacco companies."

"It was a brazen act of putting politics over people and partisanship over progress," Clinton said. "No one doubts that this came about, in part, because of an unanswered $40 million advertising campaign by the tobacco companies which could not be matched by the Cancer Society, the Heart Association, the Lung Association or most of you in this room."

> 'Companies will then no longer be able to evade accountability, and neither will Congress.'
> —President Clinton

Before leaving the White House, Clinton said he was disappointed by the senators' actions but remained hopeful that tough anti-smoking legislation would pass.

Once the survey results begin to come in, he said, "companies will then no longer be able to evade accountability, and neither will Congress."

The smoking survey will be part of the National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, which has been conducted since the early 1970s. Clinton asked public health officials to expand the number of young people they poll and to collect information on their tobacco use according to brand.

Chris Jennings, Clinton's health policy adviser, said the White House hopes to have the results within a year "so we can actually target the individual companies" that sell the most to young people.

White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said Monday's directive was just the first of several actions Clinton would take to make up for the sidetracked tobacco bill. He declined to say what more Clinton would do or when.

During the seventh annual Family Re-Union conference, Clinton also issued an executive order instructing federal agencies to begin enrolling uninsured children in Medicaid.

And he renewed his call for Congress to pass his proposed "patients' bill of rights," to protect the rights of people enrolled in managed-care programs.

Gore announced a new public-private Medicare Council, through which about 80 organizations would work to ensure that the elderly get information on preventive care. Gore's initiative also includes a national Internet site on the health concerns of the elderly, Americans with diabetes and osteoporosis.

In February, Clinton ordered several agencies to make a greater effort to enroll children who are eligible for benefits under Medicaid. Government estimates show that about 4.7 million out of roughly 10 million uninsured children are eligible.

The agencies involved are the Social Security Administration and the departments of Agriculture, Interior, Education, Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, Labor and Treasury. They run programs that cover many of the children the president is trying to reach, such as WIC nutritional assistance, food stamps, Head Start and public housing.

The order directs 350,000 federal workers, including Head Start teachers, school nurses, child support workers and others to ensure that all eligible children they encounter are enrolled in health insurance programs.

Sticker shock hits Seattle homebuyers

By Laurence M. Cruz
Associated Press

SEATTLE — When Ken Wallingford landed a job with a financial services company in Seattle, selling his three-bedroom, two-bathroom house in Dayton, Ohio, for his asking price of $80,000 was a cinch.

But the little research he did on Seattle housing prices did not prepare him for what he encountered once he arrived: Even modest two-bedroom condos were going for about twice what he sold his house for.

"I really have given up" on buying a place, said Wallingford, 37, who has been renting an apartment since his arrival.

"Affordable housing" has become an oxymoron in Seattle, where a population boom, the proliferation of Microsoft millionaires and other software entrepreneurs, and production overdrive at the Boeing Co. have contributed to an 18 percent increase in the past year in the average price of a single-family home.

At the end of 1997, the National Association of Realtors listed metropolitan Seattle as only the 63rd most expensive place in the country to buy a single-family home. It was far behind the Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and San Francisco areas, which were No. 1 and No. 2, but more expensive than a large share of the New York metropolitan area.

However, the average price of a single-family home in the Seattle area last month was almost $258,000, or up about $40,000 from a year ago, according to Kirkland, Wash.-based Northwest Multiple Listing Service. The national average in May was about $160,000, up less than 5 percent, according to the National Association of Realtors.

The presence of more than 3,000 Microsoft millionaires alone has helped drive up Seattle-area housing prices, real estate brokers say. So have the other high-tech companies that have sprung up, drawing young professionals to Seattle.

Software professionals are "young people who really don't know what to do with a lot of money, so they buy housing," said Dick Baldwin, a Seattle real estate broker.

Also, because of a backlog of jetliner orders at Boeing, employees are lapping up the overtime and further boosting housing demand.

Add to that the region's population growth of almost 12 percent since 1990, its 2.7 percent unemployment rate (the lowest in 32 years), the big run-up in the stock market, and the booming national economy, now in its eighth year of expansion.

This spring saw a buying frenzy in the Seattle area, with brokers telling stories of up to 18 offers on the same property, or of a half-dozen offers even before the for-sale sign was up.

Sam Pace of the Seattle-King County Association of Realtors recalled a buyer who went to unusual lengths to squelch the competition. The buyer not only put down a sizable "earnest money" deposit, but added a special clause to automatically exceed any competing bid up to a certain amount.

In its 150-year history, Seattle has seen fortunes come and go with the railroad and timber industries, the gold rush and World War II, which boosted Boeing's workforce twelvefold, then caused the bottom to fall out after the war was over. The housing wars, too, have their winners and losers.

'Breakthrough' on Iraqi weapons is far stretch

What Iraq's deputy prime minister, Tariq Aziz, recently termed a "breakthrough" that could lead to the lifting of the economic embargo imposed against that country at the end of the Persian Gulf War, actually is no change from the stonewalling position that nation has maintained.

Iraq is much better at stonewalling than at providing information.

In fact, a report by Richard Butler, the chief U.N. inspector, said as much. Butler noted that Iraq is still refusing to provide information on missiles, biologic al weapons and the chemical warfare agent VX. That is the main condition that Iraq must meet in order for the sanctions imposed in 1990 to be lifted.

Yet even when the two-month program of work arranged during the recent meetings is completed, say U.N. officials, some major issues would still need to be resolved.

So, to make a long story shorter, Iraq's hopes for quickly ending the economic sanctions against it aren't likely to occur anytime soon.

Beyond that, judging from Iraq's past actions the information being sought on the "weapons of mass destruction" won't be revealed anytime soon. Iraq is much better at stonewalling than at providing information.

So the statement by Tariq Aziz seems a little off base. We certainly wouldn't characterize recent developments as constituting a "break through" and can't believe anyone would who has watched Iraq's flip-flopping over the past decade.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, June 23, the 174th day of 1998. There are 191 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 23, 1938, the Civil Aeronautics Authority was established.

On this date:

In 1836, Congress approved the Deposit Act, which contained a provision for turning over surplus federal revenue to the states.

In 1868, Christopher Latham Sholes received a patent for an invention he called a "Type-Writer."

In 1931, aviators Wiley Post and Harold Gatty took off from New York on the first round-the-world flight in a single-engine plane.

In 1972, President Nixon and White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman discussed a plan to use the CIA to obstruct the FBI's Watergate investigation. (Revelation of the tape recording of this conversation sparked Nixon's resignation in 1974.)

(John Bobbitt was later acquitted of marital sexual assault; Lorena Bobbitt was later acquitted of malicious wounding by reason of insanity.)

One year ago: Civil rights activist Betty Shabazz, the widow of Malcolm X, died in New York of burns suffered in a fire set by her 12-year-old grandson; she was 61. (Malcolm Shabazz was sentenced to 18 months at a Massachusetts facility specializing in young arsonists.)

The tale of the Clinton hare vs. the Starr tortoise

There are many analogies that could be applied to the Clinton-Gore team of obfuscators, stonewallers, deceivers and flat-out liars.

Thomas

One is a baseball analogy. The administration is good at fouling off every accusation thrown at it because it had ample opportunity to hone its skills in the minor leagues before coming to the majors. Corruption was practiced on a small scale in Little Rock until they got it right. Then this tight-knit group of friends who shared a common conviction that they could do anything and not be held accountable moved to the big leagues. There they have attracted others to not only defend them but to accuse the independent counsel and other people of integrity of being guilty of crimes in order to make others, not themselves, the focus of attention.

But a better analogy is that of the hare and the tortoise. Clinton is the hare, using anything and everything at his disposal to delay his day of accountability. He races about, speaking of new solutions to old problems. He wants to save our children from everything, including an Internet-free life, cigarettes and school shootings. He denies any wrongdoing, even the most minimal mistakes, his life so pure it qualifies him for sainthood. While his minions confidently predict the president will win his race against time and the law, they fear the steady, slow and methodical course of the tortoise, Ken Starr.

The latest smear is that Starr has violated the law by talking to a small number of journalists. But White House personnel and other Clinton defenders have done the same thing, even telling what subpoenaed individuals testified before the grand jury. Top aide Sydney Blumenthal, who violated journalism ethics (are they any left?) by being a conduit to the Clinton-Gore campaign with information about the Dole campaign while still wearing his journalist's hat two years ago, may be the biggest leaker of all.

Watergate independent counsels Archibald Cox and Leon Jaworski met regularly with reporters to brief them on developments before their grand juries and to comment on decisions by Judge John Sirica. Some believe both men shared information that probably broke the same rule restricting dissemination of evidence that Starr is being accused of violating. Because the hated (by the press and so many liberals) Richard Nixon was the target in the Watergate cover-up, there was no outrage from journalists or others in established institutions about illegally leaked information. The press was quite content to get as much as it could on Nixon, from whatever source, including the still-anonymous "Deep Throat," made famous by the Washington Post's Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein.

As Starr, the tortoise, gets closer to the finish line, Clinton, the hare, sees that he's too far back to win the race. So others along the course throw as many obstacles in the way of the tortoise as they can. But Starr has the rule of law on his side, while Clinton has only the rule of the outlaw.

A New York Times editorial defends Starr, noting Justice Department rules allow him to discuss matters that do not come directly from grand jury testimony. And, cheering on the tortoise, it says: "Clinton's stature has declined steadily for definable reasons: deceptive or missing answers about his personal and campaign finances, his response and that of his associates to legal inquiries, his own abandonment of the plan to explain his mystifying dealings with (Monica) Lewinsky."

As in the ancient fable, the tortoise wins, not because he is faster but because he's smarter and keeps his eye on the goal. So far the hare is winning only the battle for public opinion. But the tortoise will be victorious because the goal is the truth, and not even Bill Clinton and his co-conspirators can hide it forever.

CHARLEY REESE

The misunderstood Constitution

Jefferson Davis, the last American president to preside over a constitutional republic (the Confederate States of America), had this to say about the Constitution and the union:

Reese

"I love the union and the Constitution," he said, "but I would rather leave the union with the Constitution than remain in the union without it."

I would guess many Americans have no idea what Davis meant because they have no idea what the original intent of the Constitution was. Many today, I suspect, think that the Constitution is what allows people to burn flags and dance naked in bars. Actually, the founding fathers had a rather more serious purpose in mind.

The first step in understanding the original intent is to recall that Colonial America existed for about 169 years prior to the American Revolution. These colonies existed separately and independent of each other. When they seceded from the British empire, they did so separately and independently.

The Declaration of Independence is clear on this point. It says, "We, therefore the representatives of the United States of America ... solemnly publish and declare. That these United Colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent states (note the plural) ... and that as free and independent states they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce and to do all the other acts and things which independent states may of right do."

They called themselves the United States because of the Articles of Confederation. Article 2 of that document states, "Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled."

Many people today seem to think that the federal government created the states, but it was the reverse. The states created the federal government as a stronger form of confederation by delegating certain of their powers to it. Thus, the purpose of the Constitution of 1787, like the Articles of Confederation, was to create a voluntary union to accomplish specific purposes, mainly to ensure a domestic free market, to provide for the common defense of the states and to deal with foreign countries with one voice.

In the original Constitution, people were not American citizens per se but were instead citizens of their respective states. The Constitution stipulated that each state would grant to the citizens of other states the rights and privileges it granted to its own. It's difficult to understand the War Between the States without understanding the loyalty that Americans -- North and South -- felt for their respective states.

But what is relevant for us today is that the people, mostly Southern, in the American Republic (1787-1860) understand that the powers of the federal government were strictly limited to those spelled out in the Constitution and that the Constitution would be interpreted literally and narrowly. And most importantly that the states themselves would be the final judge of the federal government's actions.

In the North, however, there arose new feelings of nationalism and a belief that a strong central government should provide economic benefits -- protective tariffs and infrastructure, for example. Southerners disagreed, and hence the split. The North prevailed and amended the Constitution to expand the powers of the federal government, so that's what we live under today.

But Davis also said that questions that are settled by force and violence remain forever unsettled and will arise again. And so, today, we are seeing more and more people object to an unlimited central government. It seems sometimes that human "progress" travels in a circle rather than a straight line.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Enabling us all in a time of modern geeks, technology

"Tobacco is an addiction which should not be enabled by public funds," writes Mike Harman of St. Albans, W.Va. Although his argument would be strengthened by using that instead of which to introduce a restrictive clause, he uses a verb that is gaining great popularity.

Safire

"Enabling Bad Behavior" was the headline over the letter to The New York Times from another reader, William Frago of Lake Forest, Ill., who objected to a leading feminist's vigorous defense of President Clinton: "I am afraid that Gloria Steinem has become an enabler to the very behavior the women's movement once sought to punish."

Especially in its noun form, enabler, this word has made a quantum jump from hero to villain. (In physics, a quantum jump is tiny but sudden. In general use, quantum means "huge and sudden"; it is used here to mean "sudden.")

Some people still use the word in its positive sense: Pastor Thomas Kilgore of the Second Baptist Church of Los Angeles says his task is "to be an enabler to the people who are farthest down and getting the bitter end of life." But many are substituting facilitator for that positive sense of "helper" and are using enabler to mean "one who by ignoring, appeasing or condoning makes possible the continuance of wrongdoing."

This sense has its origin in the group therapy that is now called the recovery movement. Bill Pittman of Alcoholics Anonymous, co-author of the 1989 "AA, The Way It Began," says that its use of "the word enabling first appeared in Al-Anon literature in the early '60s." Al-Anon is an organization of groups of family and friends of alcoholics. A 1965 book reads: "There are many occasions when we all engage in enabling destructive or inappropriate behavior in other people. ... Most instances are not so obvious or dramatic as the enabling that may have gone on with the alcoholic."

Wendy Kaminer, author of "I'm Dysfunctional, You're Dysfunctional," defines enabler as "someone who makes it easier for another to pursue an addiction, one complicit in bad behavior — like the wife of an alcoholic helping him hide the bottles from the kids." She says: "The word enable can be contrasted with the word empower. You empower a person to do something good, and you enable someone to do something bad."

Though a lexicographer would disagree (a dictator can be empowered to invade a neighbor and a surgeon enabled to save a life), usagists understand that latest connotation. A 1987 book published by the Johnson Institute was titled "The Family Enablers," and a 1994 book by Carol Remboldt further darkens the connotation with the title "Violence in Schools: The Enabling Factor."

That new sense is no longer limited to families of alcoholics or drug abusers, as indicated in usages by critics of a defender of Clinton's in his friendship with an intern. Michael Curtin, a trust attorney in Washington, was quoted by The Washington Post on how to give siblings with disabilities a feeling of self-worth and independence: "Whatever you do, you have to be careful not to be an enabler."

NO GEEK PIQUE

Under a green, bucolic photo of a farm in Minnesota, a state that likes to think of itself as the land of 10,000 lakes, Newsweek ran this caption: "The land of 10,000 geeks?" The story had to do with the Minnesota High-Tech Association's ads to attract technical workers from California's Silicon Valley.

This word's meaning has wandered far from its roots. "He is a foole, a sotte, and a geke," wrote Alexander Barclay in his 1515 "Certayne Egloges," using the lively words of the time to denounce a simpleton. Shakespeare chimed in twice, first in "Twelfth Night" about "the most notorious gecke and gull" and later in "Cymbeline" as a ghost denounces a rogue who made Posthumus "the geeck and scorn o' th' other's villainy."

The old synonym for "fool" took a sinister turn in American carnival slang to describe a "wild man" in a sideshow whose revolting act often included biting the head off a live snake or chicken. Despite this specialized sense, and notwithstanding World War II military use in the form of gook as a slur at Asians, the word continued to have a central sense of "fool."

Supreme Court strikes down government fine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court struck down a government fine as unconstitutional for the first time Monday, saying forfeitures intended as punishment cannot be "grossly disproportional" to the crime.

The 5-4 ruling said the government cannot force a man to forfeit $357,000 in cash he tried to take out of the country without filing the proper report. Because the amount of money far outweighed the harm caused, the penalty violated the Constitution, the justices said.

"We now hold that a punitive forfeiture violates the excessive fines clause if it is grossly disproportional to the gravity of a defendant's offense," Justice Clarence Thomas wrote for the court.

"It's a great victory for the defense," said James E. Blatt, the lawyer for Hosep Krikor Bajakajian, a California service station owner who tried to leave the country in 1994 with $357,000 in cash. "This case will benefit other defendants who have had their money taken from them," Blatt said.

However, he and other legal observers said they did not expect the ruling to significantly affect the government's ability to seize money or property in cases involving illegal drug activity. Many of those forfeitures are not considered punishment and therefore are not treated as fines, and the seriousness of the crime involved generally would be greater.

Justice Department spokesman John Russell said officials were disappointed by the ruling.

But the chief counsel for the Office of National Drug Control Policy, Chuck Blanchard, said, "I see it having very little or no effect on drug cases." The defendant in Monday's case was not involved in drugs or money-laundering, Blanchard said, adding that the court suggested the result may have been different for someone involved in those activities.

"I would be very surprised if this indicated that drug dealers' profits are now going to be found protected in some way," said Columbia University law professor Gerard Lynch. The high court has been closely divided in recent cases involving forfeitures, Lynch noted, adding, "The government is likely to keep on winning some and losing some."

A federal law requires that anyone who moves more than $10,000 in cash out of the United States must report it to the Treasury Department. Violators can be sentenced to up to five years in prison and be fined a maximum of $250,000.

The law also requires sentencing courts to order the unreported money forfeited.

Bajakajian was detained by U.S. Customs agents in Los Angeles on June 9, 1994, as he and his wife waited to board an airplane to Syria. The agents, alerted by a currency-detecting dog, found the cash that Bajakajian had not reported. His lawyers said Bajakajian did not trust government authorities.

He pleaded guilty to violating the reporting law and was sentenced to three years probation and fined $5,000.

A trial judge found that the money was not linked to illegal drugs or gambling, was not stolen and was not being laundered for tax evasion or any reason.

The judge ordered him to forfeit only $15,000 of the unreported money, rather than the full $357,000 demanded by the government. The judge ruled that forcing Bajakajian to lose any more would be "grossly disproportionate" to his crime. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the judge.

The Clinton administration appealed, but the Supreme Court ruled Monday the lower courts were right.

Thomas wrote that forfeitures are considered fines, and therefore are protected by the Constitution's Eighth Amendment ban on excessive fines, if they are imposed as punishment for an offense.

The government also can seek forfeitures through civil procedures, as it has done in a large number of drug cases. But in 1993, the high court ruled that such civil forfeitures sometimes can be considered punishment subject to the ban on excessive fines.

Until Monday, the court had never outlined a standard for determining when a fine is excessive.

Thomas' opinion was joined by the court's most liberal members — Justices John Paul Stevens, David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Dissenting were Thomas' usual conservative allies — Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

Writing for the four, Kennedy said the ruling may encourage Congress to lean more heavily toward civil forfeiture proceedings than criminal forfeitures.

"By invoking the excessive fines clause with excessive zeal, the majority may in the long run encourage Congress to circumvent it," Kennedy said.

Prosecution: Ennis Cosby killing 'robbery gone bad'

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Jailhouse letters show that Ennis Cosby was killed during a botched robbery, a prosecutor said Monday in opening statements at the murder trial of the man accused of gunning down the entertainer's son.

Bill Cosby and his wife, Camille, are not attending the trial, but a dozen unidentified family members and friends were present. They watched as photos of Ennis Cosby in a pool of blood were shown in court.

Deputy District Attorney Anne Ingalls said the series of letters allegedly written by Mikail Markhasev will show he was the killer.

A letter attributed to Markhasev describes a plan to go to Bel-Air, a wealthy area of Los Angeles, and rob "a connection," apparently a drug dealer. But the letter says the target was not home.

"The crime happened in Bel-Air," said one letter. "A robbery gone bad." It concludes: "I went to rob a connection and obviously found something else." It closes with a picture of a happy face and is signed "Peewee."

Defense attorney Henry Hall questioned the authenticity of the letters and said he would prove that another man who was with Markhasev on the fatal night is the killer.

Hall showed jurors a photo of prosecution witness Eli Zakaria, the man who was with Markhasev, and placed it by a police sketch of the killer, pointing out similarities.

Cosby, 27, was shot Jan. 16, 1997, while changing a tire on a dark road. Markhasev, 19, a Ukrainian immigrant with a history of gang affiliations and a previous brush with the law, was arrested nearly two months later.

Ingalls called as her first witness police Detective John Garcia, who showed jurors the photos of Cosby lying beside his mother's Mercedes-Benz. Alongside the car were a jack and lugnuts.

Ingalls said she would call witnesses with ties to Markhasev who would say he confessed. She said that one of them, Michael Chang, will testify that Markhasev told him: "I shot a nigger. It's all over the news."

Ingalls said Chang responded: "You shot Cosby's son?"

"He couldn't believe anyone would talk about killing Cosby's son," Ingalls said.

Hall said the racial epithet should not be part of the case.

"This case is not about racially charged issues, ethnicities or countries of origin," he said. "It is about whether my client, Mr. Markhasev, is the person who shot and killed Ennis Cosby."

Prosecutors to get Lewinsky's book purchase list

By Larry Margasak
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — While trying to negotiate an immunity deal for their client, Monica Lewinsky's attorneys are helping Whitewater prosecutors out of a sticky fight by providing them records of her book purchases, legal sources familiar with the deal said Monday.

Under the arrangement, Kramerbooks & afterwords, a Washington bookstore, will give up its fight challenging independent prosecutor Kenneth Starr's demand to learn what books the former White House intern purchased. The bookstore will give the information to Ms. Lewinsky's lawyers, who will turn it over to Starr, according to the sources, who would not be quoted by name.

In another development, the White House deputy chief of staff, John Podesta, was expected to return to the grand jury as early as Tuesday. Podesta played a role in trying to help Ms. Lewinsky find a job.

Kramerbooks has vigorously fought Starr's subpoena for the records on First Amendment grounds. The deal would allow the store to preserve its wish that it not be forced to give the records to prosecutors.

More importantly, one legal source said, the arrangement would allow the Lewinsky defense team to show good faith to prosecutors. Her new attorneys, veteran Washington lawyers Plato Cacheris and Jacob Stein, have tried to demonstrate in preliminary negotiations that they could proceed with the talks without the rancor generated during negotiations with William Ginsburg, Ms. Lewinsky's previous lawyer.

The book purchase arrangement was brokered on Ms. Lewinsky's side by Nathaniel Speights, who worked with Ginsburg but remained on the defense team when the new lawyers took over.

"Monica Lewinsky has cooperated with the Office of Independent Counsel on this issue," said her spokeswoman, Judy Smith.

Starr's spokesman, Charles Bakaly, declined to comment.

Kramerbooks, in announcing a news conference on Tuesday, said the store "will not be forced to turn over details of any book purchases by Monica Lewinsky to Ken Starr and the Office of Independent Counsel.

"The independent counsel has agreed to the terms of an agreement brokered by Kramerbooks' legal defense team. Kramerbooks has consistently defended the privacy and First Amendment rights of its customers."

Meanwhile, Attorney General Janet Reno filed appeals court papers saying Secret Service personnel should not have to answer certain questions about what they saw or heard regarding Clinton and Ms. Lewinsky. Chief U.S. District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson has ruled that two Secret Service officers and an agency lawyer must testify in Starr's probe.

Johnson "failed to accord" sufficient deference to Secret Service arguments that the safety of presidents would be imperiled by the testimony, said Reno's appeals court filing.

"There is no reason why the viewpoint of a single district judge, unsupported by the record, should take precedence over the considered judgment of the expert agency," said the Justice Department papers.

It should be up to the Secret Service, not Starr, to make "professional judgments about what is necessary to protect the life and safety of the president of the United States," the Justice Department papers concluded.

The Secret Service says a narrowly drawn "protective function privilege" — keeping agency personnel from testifying about what they see or hear while guarding the president — is indispensable to performing their mission.

Fires continue burning in Florida with persisting drought conditions

By Mike Schneider
Associated Press

Firefighters battled wildfires in drought-stricken counties of north and central Florida on Sunday, with little help in sight from Mother Nature.

Blazes in at least 19 counties burned under scorching Florida sunshine that has given rise to 100-degree temperatures and desert-like drought conditions.

More than 80 fires had been started in the past 24 hours, mostly by lighting strikes, and 80 to 90 new fires were expected daily unless Florida received some rainfall, officials said.

The National Weather Service forecast just a 30 percent chance of rain Monday while only few scattered thunderstorms were reported Sunday.

The U.S. Forest Service said that 80 percent of the state was at a drought index level equivalent to a desert, breaking a 67-year-old temperature record in Tallahassee with a reading of 101 degrees.

While the state prayed for rain, some worried a downpour would be a mixed blessing.

"If a thunder shower falls, it's a big help — but they also bring winds and lightning," said Barbara Doran, a spokeswoman for the Florida Emergency Operations Center in Tallahassee.

Lightning late Saturday sparked a fire that gutted 16 units of an Orlando apartment complex, leaving dozens of people homeless.

Poor visibility from smoke forced troopers on Sunday to shut down a 40-mile stretch of Interstate 95 in Flagler County in northeast Florida, near Daytona Beach, and a 10-mile stretch of U.S. 92 in nearby Deland, northeast of Orlando.

Since Memorial Day, fires have burned 76,000 acres in 39 counties, damaging 72 homes and 41 other structures in Florida. President Clinton has declared the entire state a fire disaster area, and a statewide, outdoor, burning ban remains in effect.

In Volusia County, about 40 miles north of Orlando, at least 30 people were still being kept away from their homes where firefighters battled 10 major fires, down from nearly two dozen Saturday.

At least a half dozen major fires — many believed to have been sparked by lightning — have burned 14,000 acres throughout the county, said Volusia spokeswoman Cindy Finney. Most of the blazes were in an unpopulated area in the middle of the county.

Planes dumped water and fire retardant over the blazes Sunday.

In North Florida, state officials reported, firefighters had a 13,000-acre fire in Apalachicola National Forest 70 percent contained. That fire has been burning since late May.

Smaller fires continued burning in Baker, Columbia, Gulf, Putnam and Okaloosa counties, state emergency management officials said.

In Taylor County, about 60 miles east of Tallahassee, 90 firefighters fought a blaze that so far has burned 10,000 acres of forest owned by paper and timber companies.

That fire, in an area known as San Pedro Bay, began as three fires Thursday that each burned hundreds of acres before converging as one larger fire.

Firefighters brought in from North Carolina and South Carolina were helping with the Taylor County fire. Ten residents whose homes are just two miles from the blaze were warned Sunday that they might have to evacuate.

Government confronts Internet privacy

By Ted Bridis
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Buy anything on the Internet — or just fill out an innocent-looking questionnaire on a Web site — and a company can learn a lot about you: what you read, what you wear, how you vote, maybe even information about your health.

Amid troubling questions about what companies do with all that information and what they should be allowed to do, the Clinton administration is organizing a two-day Internet privacy meeting starting Tuesday in Washington.

Companies and the government want to encourage the growth of fledgling Internet commerce while balancing the privacy rights of consumers. Industry wants to develop its own rules and punishments. Privacy advocates want the government to write tough new privacy laws — now.

So far, the Clinton administration, wary of stifling business on the Internet with burdensome new laws, has indicated it will give companies more time to come up with ways to regulate themselves.

"They have their eyes closed and their fingers crossed that it will all work out," complained Jeff Chester, executive director of the Washington-based Center for Media Education. "The administration has been on its knees pleading with American high-tech companies to come up with measures to protect online privacy, and they've been met with a loud chorus of denials."

The Internet can be a corporate candyland of personal consumer information. Customers routinely respond to questionnaires on Web sites, providing their names, e-mail and postal addresses and other personal data.

Once a person identifies himself to a Web site, companies can easily track which Web pages he reads at that site. Until a person identifies himself, only relatively innocuous information can be collected behind the scenes, such as which kinds of software the person uses.

"Once an individual gives over information, that can be tied to a whole bunch of data about what you've done at a Web site or at a whole bunch of Web sites," said Deirdre Mulligan, a lawyer with the Washington-based Center for Democracy and Technology.

On the eve of the privacy summit, nearly 50 large companies that sell products on the Internet formed a trade group Monday to convince the federal government that industry can police itself against abuse.

"Think of it as an online neighborhood watch," said Christopher Caine, a vice president at IBM.

The companies include America Online, AT&T, Disney, Equifax, Microsoft, Netscape, Procter & Gamble and the largest personal computer makers.

They proposed that companies should not collect information online from any child under 13 without a parent's consent or without directly notifying parents. They also urged companies to tell customers what information is being collected and how it's used and to offer customers the chance to keep their personal data private.

But, significantly, the Online Privacy Alliance did not announce how it will punish companies that violate its principles, saying its members "are finalizing an enforcement and consumer redress policy." Caine said the group will announce its plan by Sept. 15.

Odessa to get fuel distribution terminal

■ New Longhorn Partners Pipeline facility expected to boost local economy, drive down area gas prices.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

ODESSA — City of Odessa officials welcomed a new business Monday as Longhorn Partners Pipeline announced plans to build a $10 million refined motor fuels distribution terminal in Odessa.

The new project will create between five and 10 full-time jobs for both Longhorn employees and contractors, according to O.D. Harris, vice president, operations for Longhorn. He said that the new Odessa terminal will have four large tanks for different grades of gasoline and diesel and a state-of-the-art truck loading rack to distribute the fuels to service stations throughout the Permian Basin.

That is expected to translate into lower prices at the pump for Permian Basin drivers, according to economist M. Ray Perryman.

Perryman said that Permian Basin consumers should see an annual savings of $9 million due to lower gasoline prices because West Texas now will have access to refineries that produce fuels at a lower cost.

"That affects everyone's pocketbook," he said, "everyone who buys gasoline and diesel. That's more money available to be spent on other goods and services" to the tune of $30 million in increased spending overall and an additional 295 jobs.

Longhorn is constructing a 700-mile pipeline that will connect Gulf Coast refineries with El Paso. The system consists of an existing section of pipeline from Houston to Crane and three new sections under construction, from Crane to El Paso, an extension of the Houston to Crane section to the pipeline's point of origin at the GATX terminal in Galena Park, and a section from Crane to Odessa.

Already, Harris said, 50 miles of pipeline from Crane to El Paso are in the ground and workers are laying an average of 10 miles of pipeline a week. Also under construction are 19 storage tanks in El Paso. He predicted that the line and Odessa terminal will be completed by year's end.

"This is not a dream," he said, "it's happening. We're putting pipe in the ground now."

As important as the new terminal and new jobs are, Odessa Mayor Mike Atkins said that the $10 million investment will have a ripple effect on the area economy through creating construction jobs and, once the terminal is in operation, creating an additional $250,000 to $300,000 in ad valorem taxes for the various taxing entities.

Neil McDonald, director of economic development for the Odessa Chamber of Commerce, said that the new terminal will be loading between 75 and 100 trucks a day.

Texas smoke

AUSTIN — There's more evidence to support the feeling of city-dwelling Texans who think traffic snarls make their hometowns look like Los Angeles. The air lately is a lot like L.A., too. University of Texas chemical engineer David Allen, who's studying the smoke that began drifting over Texas in May, says those chemical air pollutants are similar to what Southern Californians, particularly in the Los Angeles area, breathe all the time.

Custody case

HOUSTON — In a case that questions what role race and family ties should play in custody decisions, jury selection began Monday in the trial of a white man suing a black family for guardianship of their child. The child is Franklin Chatman Jr., who began living part-time with Moore in late 1995. Franklin's mother, Suzanne Howard, had turned to Moore to help care for her son while she went to school and worked. The agreement remained intact until April 1997, when allegations of physical and sexual abuse began flying between Ms. Howard and Moore, a lawyer.

Commissioners set to hammer out '99 budget

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland County Judge Jeff Norwood is pledging a no-tax-hike general fund budget for fiscal year 1999.

"There will not be a tax increase in this budget if I have anything to say about it," Norwood, the county's chief fiscal officer and presiding officer of the governing five-member Commissioners' Court, said on Monday.

Norwood said that "regardless" of current departmental budgets and the 1999 requests, "We need to review each department and give them the funds they need to operate efficiently.

"But we need to be very careful about providing funds more than are necessary," he said of the county's 20-plus departments that employ about 500 people.

In the aggregate, departmental 1999 requests totaled "in excess of $25 million," which exceeds the current $21-million general fund budget by about $4 million. Requests included "about 34 new positions," more departmental operating funds in many instances, and "substantial" requests for new automobiles.

"By the time you fill positions and provide them with the necessary equipment to do their job, obviously that increases your budget dramatically," Norwood noted.

The majority of county funds are funneled into the crimi-

Marquez was arrested after his car tailed and harassed Ortiz while Ortiz and his family were driving on Midkiff Road. No motive has been established, Ms. Jauz said.

Heat, drought prompt fires across state

By Chris Newton
Associated Press

Drought-fueled fires raged in three counties across the state Monday as the first week of summer brought more triple-digit temperatures and turned thousands of acres of grassland into what firefighter called "Texas kindling."

A rainless lightning storm Sunday served as a lit match for many areas, setting off dozens of smaller fires.

Fires have caused 107 counties to put burning bans in effect. State officials estimate that over 143,000 acres have burned since May 1.

Roy Detwiler, a coordinator with the Paducah Fire Department, said several blazes in Cottle County were officially contained by 1 p.m. Monday. The fires, which began Sunday night at the Bird Ranch Complex, burned more than 1,000 acres.

Dozens of firefighters fought the blazes, climbing through grass that was nearly chest-high.

"We had the Texas Forest Service come in here with crop dusters and dump about 1,000 gallons of water on the fire every 18 minutes," Detwiler said. "We really need to get some rain in here quick or this is going to be a long summer. We call grassland 'Texas kindling' during a drought."

In Jeff Davis County, firefighters were still trying to extinguish a blaze that has burned nearly 200 acres since it began last week.

Art Amaro, a spokesman for the Fort Stockton police, said the overworked fire department is making use of anybody in a uniform to help contain the blaze.

"We've been helping the firefighters out there nal justice system, which includes the courts, the sheriff's public safety and detention divisions, the district attorney's prosecutorial staff, probation facilities, and county and district record-keeping.

"There was a number of departments that asked for significant increases," he said.

"Obviously, we will not be able to fund every request," Norwood noted. "We have to have a budget that provides what is absolutely necessary for the operation of our county departments. But we also have to be mindful the tax rate."

Norwood has pledged to propose a "real property tax cut that people can see on their tax statements."

The current tax rate is 23.11 cents per $100 valuation.

"I will not support a tax increase," Norwood asserted. "And I do not believe that there is a majority of the court who will support a tax increase."

The general fund's 1998 revenue includes about $9 million from property taxes, perhaps $8 million from the half-cent sales tax "because of the strong economy," and the balance from fines, fees, grants, and service charges, Norwood said. The sales-tax revenue had been projected at $6.8 million.

As a voting governmental body, the Commissioners' Court is to study and possibly amend the Norwood-prepared budget beginning on Aug. 17 after the proposed budget has been filed in the County Clerk's Office for public review.

The county's fiscal year 1999 begins on Oct. 1.

"We will prepare a budget with a property tax cut," Norwood said. "Every governmental entity should do everything they can to reduce the tax burden on citizens.

"In this country, the average family pays almost 40 percent of their total income in taxes to government at the federal, state, and local levels," Norwood said. "And the county should do everything we can to reduce that burden as much as possible."

DROUGHT: Fire has threatened more than 221 structures across state

(From 1B)

— they've been going at it for a long time," Amaro said. "Just when you think you have it under control, it starts up in another area and moves a different direction for a while."

The fire has threatened more that 221 structures, including several ranches and farms. The fire prompted the Federal Emergency Management Agency to grant Texas its third fire suppression grant of the year.

In Falls County, nearly 200 acres had burned in a fire that was still raging at 3 p.m. Monday.

No injuries have been reported in any of the fires.

Temperatures were near the century mark in all three of the counties reporting major open-land fires. Forecasters said there was no reprieve on the horizon.

Tuesday's highs were expected to reach the upper 90s and low 100s across the state.

Carlton Britton, a range management professor at Texas Tech who studies wildfires, said that as long the drought continues, grassland fires will continue to erupt.

"There's a million different ignition sources," Britton said. "Get it firmly fixed in your mind how much lightning we have...As we've seen in Mexico, you can't stop some of these."

Daniel Venat, a researcher with Regional Ranch Management said fighting the fires is almost futile — only rain will end the threat.

"It's like that game you play with the toy gophers that jump out of their holes," Venat said. "When ever you hit one, another bounces up. We need rain badly."

ASSAULT: Suspect said to have fired shots at officer from his car

(From 1B)

"That's what they're going to investigate," she said.

Ms. Jauz told the Reporter-Telegram that apparently the suspect fired a semi-automatic pistol while passing Ortiz on Midkiff.

"Ortiz never heard (shots) but his wife did," she said. "Officers found a gun. According to officers on the scene, the gun was hot, and it was obvious the gun had been fired."

During the time that the suspect allegedly was tailgating Ortiz, the officer tried several times to allow him to pass, Ms. Jauz said. At one point the suspect's car — a black Mustang — did pass Ortiz. The car, according to Ortiz, was being driven recklessly, slowing down and putting on the brakes in front of the officer's car.

As Ortiz passed over Interstate 20, Ortiz pulled his car over to allow the Mustang to pass. The Mustang did not pass and pulled over.

Ortiz then left his car, showed his badge, called 911, and ordered the Mustang's driver out of the car. Ortiz and the suspect struggled before other police arrived on the scene and the suspect was handcuffed, according to the police report.

A semi-automatic pistol was found between the Mustang's driver-side door and seat, the report stated.

Marquez was charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. A female passenger was charged with public intoxication.

An investigation is ongoing.

FUEL: Facility will help create jobs, says chamber seven days a week.

"That'll have a positive trickle down effect," he said. "We're very accustomed to repairing trucks and have experienced truck drivers. This will create jobs in the truck driving industry" and benefit both the Midland College and Odessa College truck driving education courses. "This will create opportunities for those who have been training for job enhancement," he said.

Carolyn Tripp, chairman of the board of directors of the Odessa Chamber, said Longhorn will be a positive addition to Odessa's petrochemical complex. She added that her company, Huntsman Chemical, already has been talking with Longhorn officials about working together on firefighting and other safety programs.

The Longhorn pipeline will transport 72,000 barrels per day of refined motor fuels to its El Paso terminal and its origination at GATX will allow it to receive product from as many as 12 Gulf Coast refineries. A common carrier, Longhorn will interconnect with other common carriers to ship product to Albuquerque, Tucson, Phoenix and potentially other markets.

Dallas-based Longhorn Partners was founded four years ago and is a partnership formed by Chisholm Holdings L.P. in partnership with affiliates of Williams Pipeline Co., Amoco Pipeline Co., The Beacon Group Energy Investment L.P. and Exxon Pipeline Co.

Parks and Wildlife touts pools

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department wants Texans to think cool. As in pool.

As broiling temperatures continue to bake the state, the Parks and Wildlife Department is reminding Texans about the many spring-fed lakes and pools across the state as a way to beat the heat.

Balmorhea State Park on the edge of the Davis Mountains in West Texas reports increased visitation to the state's largest pool — one and a half acres of water fed by 20 million gallons per day gushing from the San Solomon Springs.

Swimmers and scuba divers have been heading to the 77-degree waters because visibility has been enhanced by the lack of rainfall, according to Parks and Wildlife officials.

The Devils River State Natural Area north of Del Rio also is reporting reliable spring flow. The Devils River maintains an average temperature of 74 degrees and is a popular destination for canoeists.

Throughout North Texas, Possum Kingdom, Lake Mineral Wells, Lake Arrowhead and Meridian state parks all report plenty of water.

Custody case pits white man against black family

HOUSTON (AP) — In a case that questions what role race and family ties should play in custody decisions, jury selection began Monday in the trial of a white man suing a black family for guardianship of their child.

"This is a very important case. The future of a 4-year-old child is involved," Samuel Childs, attorney for plaintiff Jim Moore, told jurors as the trial got under way.

"The child is black and the family is black and Mr. Moore is obviously Caucasian, and he is seeking custody," Childs said.

The child is Franklin Chatman Jr., who began living part-time with Moore in late 1995. Franklin's mother, Suzanne Howard, had turned to Moore to help care for her son while she went to school and worked. The two met through Moore's ex-wife.

The agreement remained intact until April 1997, when allegations of physical and sexual abuse began flying between Ms. Howard and Moore, a lawyer. Soon after, Moore filed a petition seeking primary custody of Franklin.

Moore claims Franklin told him his mother abused him, burning his tongue with hot water, hitting him with a broom and forcing him to drink toilet water.

Ms. Howard counters that her son has exhibited inappropriate sexual behavior since living with Moore. Both deny the other's allegations.

Unable to substantiate either claim, the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services has recommended Franklin be placed with Ms. Howard's mother, Virginia Howard, a 60-year-old school teacher. The Howard family and Franklin's father have united to fight Moore.

None of the parties could comment Monday because of a judge's order prohibiting them from speaking about the dispute.

In most interracial custody cases there is not a blood relative who is willing or able to take the child or there is good reason not to place the child with that relative.

"Our agency policy is, whenever possible, to place a child with its family, whether that be an aunt or an uncle or a grandparent," Stewart Davis, a spokesman with TDPRS, said before the trial began. "If the aunt is a prostitute or the uncle is a drug dealer, we would look somewhere else."

When Moore first filed for custody, he was granted primary guardianship of Franklin while his mother and grandmother saw him every other weekend. Earlier this year, the court changed the agreement to allow each side to see Franklin on alternate weeks.

Black activists have expressed outrage over the way the case has progressed. Several protested outside the courthouse during jury selection, holding signs reading, "Bring Franklin Home."

"There are many children in this country who need people from outside of their biological family to take care of them, but Franklin Chatman is not one of them," said Kofi Taharka, chairman of the Houston chapter of the National Black United Front.

Scientist says Texas smoke similar to Los Angeles smog

AUSTIN (AP) — There's more evidence to support the feeling of city-dwelling Texans who think traffic snarls make their hometowns look like Los Angeles.

The air lately is a lot like L.A., too.

University of Texas chemical engineer David Allen, who's studying the smoke that began drifting over Texas in May, says those chemical air pollutants are similar to what Southern Californians, particularly in the Los Angeles area, breathe all the time.

"They are not that different," said Allen, an air pollution expert who should know. He came to UT in 1995 from the University of California at Los Angeles.

"If they persisted (here) for a long time, that would be of significant concern," he said.

A 1992 study of Los Angeles, considered a benchmark by researchers studying the potential health effects of air pollutants, found about 1,600 premature deaths there each year from the dirtiest air in the nation.

Subsequent studies in other cities with similar air quality problems have found similar results.

Allen's Austin lab is analyzing the smoke for the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, the state's air quality monitor.

More samples were collected last week as a lighter form of the pollutants ventured back into Texas from the fires burning out of control in rugged terrain in southeastern Mexico. The fires aren't expected to be extinguished without significant rainfall.

Allen's preliminary results show that by the time the smoke from burning brush and trees gets to Texas, its chemistry has been changed through reaction with other chemicals in the atmosphere. The size of its particulate matter also is different.

The bigger particles of cellulose, the chief part of the cell walls of plants, have fallen to the ground along the way, while the finer, more hazardous particles, similar to those emitted by diesel exhaust, remain. Thus, the state is issuing periodic health alerts when the invading smoke is particularly thick.

At least twice in May, the smoke made Austin's air exceed federal air pollution levels that are considered safe.

"These fine smoke particles have been linked to serious health implications because they get deposited deep in your lungs," said Matthew Fraser, an environmental engineer at Rice University in Houston.

"The immediate concern is for the weakest members of our society, such as asthmatics and other people with respiratory problems, the elderly and especially children," Fraser said.

Tiny particles from diesel exhaust and similar combustion sources in the Austin area normally are in the range of 20 to 25 micrograms per cubic meter of air. The worst episodes of Mexican smoke pushed Austin's particulate concentration as high as 191 micrograms, but only for brief periods.

The on-again, off-again phenomenon has had at least two good effects, Allen and Fraser said.

The smoke has visibly demonstrated how prevailing winds can transport air pollutants from one region to another, and it has shown the possible results of doing nothing to clean up growing air pollution in Texas.

"It's one more piece of evidence that we need to be thinking of regional strategies in controlling air pollution in Texas," Allen said. "And that includes Mexico."

Mauro attacks Bush on mandatory early release for prisoners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Days after Texas Gov. George W. Bush swept into town to raise a cool $1 million for his re-election, Democratic challenger Garry Mauro was making the rounds himself this week, using the drawing power of friends Bill and Hillary Clinton to help bring in a quarter-million dollars.

Speaking Monday at the National Press Club, Mauro attacked Bush for not doing more to end mandatory early prison release, saying one of the men accused in the horrific dragging death of a Jasper man might still have been behind bars had Bush lived up to a 1994 campaign pledge.

"During Governor Bush's first term, more than 60,000 felons will get out of prison early," Mauro told reporters. "On June 7th, 1998, Lawrence Russell Brewer was the ringleader of the gang of racist thugs who brutally dragged and murdered James Byrd Jr. in Jasper, Texas."

"If Bush had kept his promise, Brewer would have been in prison instead of making mischief."

In 1994, challenger Bush used TV commercials and speeches to paint Democratic Gov. Ann Richards as soft on criminals. Mauro played one of those ads Monday, in which Bush said 7,700 inmates had obtained mandatory early release under Richards' watch.

Bush's campaign noted that the governor did sign legislation ending mandatory release for anyone convicted of any crime after Sept. 1, 1996.

"Governor Bush did end mandatory release for anybody sentenced on his watch," said spokeswoman Mindy Tucker.

Bush also tried to end mandatory release for those sentenced prior to September 1996 but couldn't because of a Supreme Court ruling striking down a similar Florida law, Ms. Tucker said.

But Mauro said Bush didn't try hard enough and "blinked" in the face of the Supreme Court decision. "The Supreme Court very clearly stated why the Florida law wasn't good and then it stated why California law was just fine," said Mauro. "And all we had to do was model our law after the California law."

Retorted Ms. Tucker: "It would have been irresponsible for the Legislature and the governor to fly in the face of a Supreme Court ruling. If Garry Mauro wants to act irresponsible, that's just one more reason he should not be elected governor."

Brewer, 31, is one of three men charged with murder in the death of James Byrd Jr., who was beaten and dragged in chains by his ankles behind a pickup truck.

Asked by a reporter if he was blaming Bush for the death, Mauro said: "No. I'm saying that if Governor Bush had done what he said he was going to do ... at least one felon who participated in a brutal murder would have been in prison rather than on the streets."

DEAR ABBY

'Buckle up' applies to dogs as well as their drivers

DEAR ABBY: I would be grateful for the rest of my life if you would please print this. It could save lives.

Many people are not aware that there are now seat belts for dogs. They cost between $10 and $20, and keep dogs from jumping out of windows or crashing through windshields in accidents.

Van Buren

As an additional benefit, the animals are forced to sit and cannot jump all over the car, which is a distraction for the driver.

I bought my dog, Puppet, a seat belt at the local pet store. Every time I see a dog on a driver's lap in front of the steering wheel, I have the urge to make the driver stop so that I can show him or her Puppet's seat belt.

—ELISABETH SAENZ, GARLAND, TEXAS

DEAR ELISABETH: I didn't know that seat belts for dogs existed, but they certainly make sense. By the way, yours was not the only letter from a concerned animal lover that arrived today in my mail. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Please print this warning to your bird-loving readers. It is unsafe to put red dye into the sugar water for hummingbird feeders. The dye causes tumors to develop on the birds' tongues, which prevents them from feeding, and they die.

Please, Abby, help defenseless hummingbirds. They don't need red dye to find the food.

— ARIZONA APRIL

DEAR ARIZONA APRIL: According to the National Audubon Society in New York and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, "There is no evidence that adding red (or other) food coloring to sugar water will harm birds." A more practical idea is to put your feeder near red flowers or buy a red hummingbird feeder.

Bird lovers should be aware that sugar water ferments when left in the hot sun, turning the nectar deadly. Do not put out a feeder unless you are willing to clean it once or twice a week.

DEAR ABBY: I felt sad for "Hurt Bride," who couldn't accept her pregnant sister-in-law as a bridesmaid. She is forgetting that there is cause for much celebration in her family — a wedding AND a new baby.

A week after my husband's sister and her fiance announced their wedding date, we had to call and tell them I was pregnant and due right around the date of their wedding. My husband might have been able to attend the wedding if the baby was born by then, but that was all we could promise. Instead of being hurt, they congratulated us and postponed their wedding for two months.

At the wedding, when I thanked my new brother-in-law for rearranging their plans for us, he touched our new baby's head and said, "You were worth it." One reason I like reading your column is that it reaffirms what wonderful families I was born and married into.

— SUZANNA BORTZ, LAGUNA NIGUEL, CALIF.

DEAR SUZANNA: "Hurt Bride" would be wise to note your families' priorities.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 1998

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Tuesday, June 23, 1998:
Make the most out of the extraordinary opportunities that tumble into your life this year. Your imagination, creativity and ability to energize others remain extremely high. Opt for travel, more education and any other eye-opening, intellectually broadening experiences. Allow people who are different into your life. If you are single, romance grows. This could be "the" relationship you've dreamed of. If attached, you need to work on occasional oversensitivity. Much is happening in your life; make an effort to focus on your mate's needs as well. CANCER is a kindred spirit.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Opportunity strikes, if you are willing to go with what seems like an odd conversation. Check out hunches right now. Verification helps anchor a money matter. Emphasize home, security and greater freedom. New beginnings are possible. Tonight: Happy at home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Handle money matters early on. You feel as if someone has too many ideas for spending your money. Decline gracefully. Listen carefully to your intuition; it will lead to greater stability. Schedule a meeting for later. It could go on for a while. Tonight: Go to a favorite spot.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Little can stop you, but you need to consider all options before making a career decision. There are many potential paths you can take. Listen to instincts. You can obtain your goal because of your solid sense of direction. Financial matters ease up slightly. Tonight: Go shopping.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Take a back seat for the earlier part of the day. What goes on is informative, especially concerning a boss. You can make a powerful decision that allows a new beginning. Be willing to put yourself on the line. Others need to listen to what you have to say. Tonight: Personality-plus.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Gather with friends, and celebrate. Your vision of the future might be substantially changed. Listen more carefully to someone who generally has your financial well-being in mind. Together, you devise many different earning possibilities. Tonight: Make it a personal night.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Be prepared to take responsibility. An important associate comes through, offering the kind of support you need. A restriction helps you in the long run. Pull back and evaluate. Today's decisions could stick. You are heading for success. Tonight: Do exactly what you want.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Take a risk, and reach out to someone dear. A boss, who has far more authority than you, makes a decision. You find an associate nothing less than chintzy. New beginnings occur professionally. Read between the lines, then follow through with action. Tonight: Work late.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Opt to continue working with someone. On some level, you might want to do your own thing; however, that will not work right now. A co-worker might be resistant to change. Coax him. Make long-distance calls; reach out for others. Caring abounds. Tonight: A new mental adventure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Others put a lot on your plate. Claim your power, take action and make what you want happen. Creative potential seems thwarted, but a partner helps out. New beginnings in a relationship are possible. Financial security remains key. Tonight: Up for a close encounter?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Dig your heels in, and get work done. A family member can be difficult, as you see and already know. There is no changing this person. A caring relationship could develop into more, if you want. Meetings attended could be significant. Tonight: Welcome a new suggestion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Your imagination and innovative ideas come to the rescue in many a difficult situation. Again, someone calls for your assistance. Be careful about how much you give away. Remain realistic about your work. A project contains the seeds of a new beginning. Tonight: Extra hours at work.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Don't let a demanding family member distract you. Open up talks, and come to new understandings. It is easier to put the kibosh on a risk, but not now. If single, an encounter could lead to a lot more. Laughter spices up current relationships. Tonight: Put on your dancing shoes.

Study all four hands. Where should the contract be played and how many tricks are available?

North-South were not employing transfer bids, and as a result landed in four hearts with South as declarer after a straightforward auction. Is this game makable after the lead of the queen of spades?

As long as declarer ducks the queen of spades, odds are that four hearts will sneak home, although it can be defeated. Since leading another spade will set up a trick in that suit for declarer, East must shift, and the normal switch is to a diamond. Declarer wins in dummy, draws trumps with the help of a finesse, then leads a club. Declarer gets back to hand with the king of diamonds to lead a second club, and comes to 10 tricks — five hearts, three diamonds and two clubs. Ace of clubs and another at trick two, giving East a ruff, holds declarer to nine tricks.

Oddly, considering the distribution, three no trump is North-South's best game. After the normal lead of a diamond, 10 tricks can be taken, provided declarer resists the temptation to cash out the heart suit prematurely. That squeezes the closed hand — declarer can only afford to discard one diamond and cannot part with a spade, so must let go of a club. That limits North to nine tricks.

The road to an overtrick is to win the diamond lead in the South hand, then lead a club to the queen. When that holds, declarer returns to the table with a heart and leads another club, and the 10th trick is chalked up.

Schroder to report for 'NYPD Blue' duty

LOS ANGELES — Former "Silver Spoons" child star Rick Schroder is reporting for duty at "NYPD Blue" as Andy Sipowicz's new partner.

Schroder, 28, will replace Jimmy Smits, who announced earlier that he is leaving the show after four years.

Smits will appear in an undetermined number of episodes this fall while his character, Bobby Simone, is written out of the show.

"Schroder is a wonderful young actor who will bring tremendous energy to 'NYPD Blue' and allow us writers to approach our sixth season and beyond with fresh ideas," producer Steven Bochco said.

Sipowicz is played by three-time Emmy winner Dennis Franz.

Schroder has appeared in such movies as "The Champ" and "Crimson Tide." He was also in the miniseries "Lonesome Dove."

LOS ANGELES — Larry Flynt got married during a sumptuous weekend ceremony at his Hollywood Hills estate.

The Hustler magazine publisher exchanged vows with his former nurse, Elizabeth Barrios.

Larry Flynt tied the knot over the weekend with his former nurse.

"I put her off for seven years," Flynt, 55, said Monday. "Marriage is more important to women than to men. I could have done without it, to tell you the truth."

Woody Harrelson, who played Flynt in "The People vs. Larry Flynt," was among the 150 wedding guests, along with the movie's director, Milos Forman, and stars Courtney Love and Ed Norton.

Flynt, who has been paralyzed from the waist down since a 1978 assassination attempt, said the couple will honeymoon in St. Martin.

Althea Leasure Flynt, who was married to the publisher for 11 years, died in 1987 at age 33 in the bathtub of their home. The death was ruled a drowning stemming from drug intoxication and the effects of AIDS.

LONDON — Queen Elizabeth II is getting some help from the gas company.

Centrica PLC, the holding company that controls British Gas, will lend its corporate affairs director, Simon Lewis, to the palace for two years.

Lewis, 39, will be communications secretary to the queen.

"The queen and senior members of the Royal Family have decided to devote more resources to communications generally," said a palace spokeswoman, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Centrica will continue to pay Lewis his normal salary.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Reba McEntire said she had the chance to play Molly Brown in "Titanic" but had to bow out because of a scheduling conflict.

The country star said she was hired by director James Cameron for the part ultimately played by Kathy Bates. Ms. McEntire said she rearranged her schedule to do the role, but the shooting of "Titanic" was moved.

Reba McEntire said she was offered the Molly Brown role in "Titanic."

"We'd have lost no-telling-how-much money to move those dates again or cancel them," Ms. McEntire told The Tennessean.

Ms. McEntire, who has acted in several TV movies and in "Tremors" for the big screen, said her singing career remains her priority.

"Without the music, I lose my identity," she said. "The other things enhance it, make it more fun and exciting."

MINNEAPOLIS — The 17th annual Minnesota Black Music Awards ceremony was also the last.

Pete Rhodes, who founded the event in 1982 with his wife, Kimberly Bedell-Rhodes, had mixed feelings about Sunday's final program.

"You're always melancholy when you see the end of something you've put half your adult life into," Rhodes said. "But we're happy with the successes we've had."

Rhodes said fewer corporate sponsors, a decline in the local talent pool and decreasing attendance led to the program's demise. And the importance of the Twin Cities has diminished in the shadow of Atlanta, which Rhodes calls the "black music capital."

Rangers trade Witt

ARLINGTON — Bobby Witt, the second-winningest pitcher in Texas Rangers history, was traded to St. Louis Monday for a player to be named later.

Witt, 34, had been designated for assignment on June 16, giving the Rangers 10 days to trade him, release him or send him to the minors. Witt is expected to join the Cardinals in the next few days, the Rangers said.

He had struggled in nearly every outing this season despite a 5-4 record. His 7.66 ERA in 13 starts was the highest among qualifying American League starters.

In his Rangers career, Witt was 104-104 in 276 games from 1986-92 and 1995-98. He is second in team history in victories, innings (1,680 2-3) and strikeouts (1,405). He also has played for Oakland and Florida.

Also Monday, Texas activated second baseman Mark McLemore from the 15-day disabled list, where he had been placed June 7 for a pulled left hamstring.

To make room for McLemore, the club optioned lefthanded pitcher Matt Perisho to Class AAA Oklahoma.

Perisho, who pitched in 1997 for the Midland Angels, had two awful starts for Texas after he was called up June 16 to replace Witt. He finished his brief stint 0-2 with a 27.00 ERA.

The Rangers also announced that righthanded pitcher Mark Brandenburg, who has missed the entire season because of muscle problems in his back and chest wall, has been moved from the 15-day disabled list to the 60-day list.

Malone top citizen

TULSA, Okla. — Karl Malone had never heard of the Henry P. Iba Citizen Athlete Award until he was told he won it. On Monday, he proudly accepted it, saying it honored him as a person.

The Utah Jazz forward and Olympic gold medal swimmer Jenny Thompson found themselves talking at Monday's banquet as much about what they do for society as they do for sports. The annual award, named for late Oklahoma State basketball coach Henry Iba, recognizes a male and female athlete who use their sports fame to help others.

"When you go out in your profession, you never really know who's watching. That's the NBA game. That's the 'Mailman.' This, here, is Karl," Malone said, referring to his nickname.

He and his wife, Kay, formed the Karl Malone Foundation for Kids in an attempt to help children and their families through difficult times. He plans to give the $10,000 in award money to the foundation.

Thompson, 25, who has won five Olympic gold medals and holds world records in the 100- and 50-meter butterfly short course, pointed to her mother as her role model when it comes to helping others.

WIMBLEDON, England — Wimbledon lost two title contenders on opening day when Anna Kournikova withdrew because of a thumb injury and Yevgeny Kafelnikov was ousted in the first round.

While Pete Sampras, Andre Agassi, Steffi Graf and Monica Seles were among winners Monday, Kournikova said she could not play because of torn and strained ligaments in her right thumb.

She will be unable to play or practice for at least three weeks.

"I was hoping a miracle would happen or it would get better," she said. "But this morning when I woke up it was very difficult for me to move the finger."

The 17-year-old Russian, a 1997 Wimbledon semifinalist and No. 12 seed this year, hurt herself last Thursday during one of her biggest victories — a three-set win over Graf at Eastbourne.

Kournikova, whose glamour has made her the focus of tabloid coverage in Britain, skipped the rest of the Eastbourne event in what was originally described as a "precautionary" move. But further checks revealed a more serious injury.

Kournikova was replaced in the draw by American "lucky loser" Lilia Osterloh.

Angels lose wild one to Wranglers, 7-6

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

In a game dripping with bases loaded clutch hitting drama by both teams, the Wichita Wranglers defeated the Midland Angels Monday night at Christensen Stadium, 7-6, with an unearned run in the eighth inning.

Wichita's Kit Pellow reached on a throwing error by Midland Double-A All-Star third baseman Keith Luuloa and later scored on a bases loaded walk to Rod Myers, making a loser of Josh Deakman (1-1) even though he didn't give up an earned run in 3 2/3 innings of relief. Up until the uninspired finish, this game was one of the best staged at Christensen this year as both teams created hero after hero.

Trailing 2-0 in the fourth inning, Midland's Matt Curtis banged his first grand slam of the year off of former Texas Tech pitcher Jason Gooding to give the Angels a 4-2 lead. Curtis didn't even start the game, but was called to duty with center fielder Jed Dalton went down to an undisclosed injury.

With Eddie Christian and Norm Hutchins already on the disabled list, the Angel outfield is an accident waiting to happen. Curtis, a catcher by trade, has had to play a lot in the outfield recently.

Wichita's Andy Stewart answered the Curtis challenge with a bases loaded double in the fifth and then scored a run on a wild pitch by Midland starter Matt Beaumont for a 6-4 Wichita lead.

It was then Midland's turn to respond and it came from Danny Buxbaum, who nailed his 12th homer of the year to tie the game at 6-6 off Gooding. Midland got all six runs on just two hits (the two homers) as Gooding walked four Angels in those two innings.

It seemed a shame that this game had to be decided on an error and two walks in the eighth.

But the drama didn't end with the clutch hitting by Stewart, Curtis and Buxbaum. Right fielder Curtis nailed Raul Gonzalez at the plate to end the top of the ninth, and Wichita's right fielder Ryan Long threw out Midland's Greg Morris at the plate in the sixth.

Wichita third baseman Kit Pellow robbed Chuck Abbott of extra bases in the third with a diving, throw-em-out grab.

Midland even tried to add to the drama in the bottom of the ninth. Trent Durrington opened with a single, moved to second on a sacrifice by Abbott and to third on a grounder to second by Jason Herrick.

Then, more drama. None other than Luuloa came to the plate trying to move from goat to hero status with one swing of the bat. Luuloa already had two hits on the night to move his league leading average to .359 for the year.

Luuloa, however, came up with a broken bat grounder to Wichita shortstop Anthony Medrano for the final out, stranding Durrington at third.

ANGEL DUST: Gooding hasn't gotten a decision against Midland in five outings against the Angels this year... The Angels (6-4) still own a game lead over the Wranglers and San Antonio Missions (both at 5-5) in the second half race... This series is now tied at 2-2 with two to play... Abbott's 10-game hitting streak went by the boards with an 0-for-4 night... Curtis now owns an 11-game hitting streak and has driven in sev-

Jordan not decided on returning

AUSTIN — As Phil Jackson was cleaning out his office and leaving as coach of the Chicago Bulls, Michael Jordan sounded like a man who wanted to keep playing basketball.

As long as the Bulls don't change much more.

Without directly addressing whether he would play for another coach, Jordan said his teammates would have to stay for him to put off

DEERFIELD, Ill. — In true ex-hippie, free-wheeling Zen form, Phil Jackson roared away from work for the last time on a red and black Harley-Davidson adorned with the Chicago Bulls logo and his players' signatures.

His office bare, his memories full, he wore the contented smile of a man secure in the knowledge he's leaving at the right time. And, most importantly, on his terms.

"It was time to go," he said. "I've been pushing at this horn a little bit the last couple of years about leaving and being ready to leave. It's my time to go. It's the right time."

Despite an offer from Bulls chairman Jerry Reinsdorf to stay for one more year — with or without Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen — the Jackson era officially ended Monday.

He cleaned out the few remaining things in his office at the Bulls' practice facility, said his goodbyes and then hopped on his motorcycle. After nine years and six NBA titles, Jackson is looking for a different ride.

Are Dodgers playing reckless or crazy like a Fox?

By Beth Harris
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — The firing of Los Angeles Dodgers manager Bill Russell and general manager Fred Claire had the appearance of still another bold move by new owner Fox.

But Peter O'Malley, who sold the team to Rupert Murdoch's Fox Group and remained the Dodgers' chairman of the board, insisted Monday that he would have done the same thing even if the team didn't have new ownership.

"I've been asked 100 times since this morning, 'If the O'Malleys still owned the team, would you have done the same thing?'" he said. "The honest answer is yes. I've been disappointed in the team's performance.

"I felt we were flat and had been for some time."

Tom Lasorda, who retired as the Dodgers' manager in 1996 and has remained as a vice president, will become the GM for the rest of this season.

"I'm going to speak to the team and issue a challenge to them to perform the way they're capable of performing," said Lasorda, who guided the Dodgers to two World Series titles, the last a decade ago.

Glenn Hoffman, who was the manager at Triple-A Albuquerque and who played for Lasorda during part of his nine-year major league career, replaces Russell on an interim basis. Team president and CEO Bob Graziano said Hoffman could have the interim removed from his title if the team does well the rest of this season.

"There's a lot of baseball left ... we can't worry about what's going on around us," said catcher Charles Johnson, acquired from Florida in the deal for catcher Mike Piazza. "We've just got to worry about the group of guys we have here and play."

The firings Sunday are the latest major changes under the Fox ownership. The Dodgers recently traded fan favorites Hideo Nomo and Piazza, who had spent his entire career with Los Angeles. Both are now with the New York Mets.

The Dodgers, who missed the playoffs last season under Russell, were 12 1/2 games behind first-place San Diego in the NL West going into Monday night's game.

"This is a good team here. There's a lot of good players here," said pitcher Dave Mlicki, acquired in the Nomo trade. "Everybody's writing us off. It's not even the All-Star break yet. I think once everything gets settled and everybody gets to know each other, we'll be OK."

Graziano, promoted to team president and CEO when Fox bought the Dodgers, said the decision to fire Russell and Claire was his, in consultation with O'Malley. Graziano, an accountant who initially joined the organization in 1986 as the director of financial projects, used the word "transition" to describe the firing of Russell and Claire, both of whom had been with the organization for more than 30 years.

"It's always a difficult transition when you transition out people who have been with the organization for many years," said Graziano, who also said that he informed Fox of his decision and "that was extent of their involvement."

Cup play blacked out on Day 1 at Wimbledon

By Stephen Wade
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — The All England Club probably had the only giant-screen television in the country that wasn't tuned Monday to the soccer World Cup in France.

■ Wimbledon Notes

England played Romania on Monday in Toulouse, but Wimbledon officials declined requests to show the crucial match on a giant screen situated in the practice area near Court No. 1.

"While we thoroughly appreciate and understand that many of our visitors will be interested in the World Cup, the tennis must remain our first priority," said chief executive Chris Gorringe.

"It is therefore not our intention to show football matches on the large screen although we shall try to let people know the scores of certain matches via the general information system."

The World Cup ends July 12 with England among the favorites to reach at least the quarterfinals.

LET, ANDRE: Andre Agassi is dead set against a proposal under consideration by the International Tennis Federation to do away with the let rule.

"If you play (lets), I think you're just throwing in a whole other element," he said. "It just seems so random, almost somewhat lucky.

"A lot of times in crucial serves, you'll see a let. Sometimes a couple of them in a row. I don't think they should ever play it. I think that's ludicrous ... It would be a horrific change in the game."

The rule change will be debated in July at the ITF's annual general meeting in Ireland and could be voted on before the years is over. Designed to speed play, the rule would mean no replay of serves which catch the tape before going over.

ANDRE AND BROOKE: Andre Agassi said he was more upset than his wife, Brooke Shields, over unfounded allegations that she had been questioned about drugs at this year's Cannes Film Festival.

Earlier this month, Shields was granted what was described as "very substantial" libel damages from The Mail on Sunday over the May 24 story. The newspaper ran an apology for its erroneous story.

"I can take stuff a lot more toward me, more than I can toward her," Agassi said. "She's such a wonderful person. It bothers me a little bit, but you deal with what you have to deal with."

STRAWBERRY LINE: There's no shortage of strawberries at Wimbledon, and no price increase either.

Again, a cup filled with seven or eight berries and a dollop of cream sells for $3.05. Officials have ordered 24 tons of strawberries for the fortnight. The healthy alternative of yogurt and strawberries costs more — $4.70.

PETE IN JEOPARDY: How's this for pressure?

Four-time champion Pete Sampras will lose his No. 1 ATP Tour ranking if he fails to reach the Wimbledon final.

Sampras, who was ranked No. 1 for 102 straight weeks before briefly falling to No. 2 behind Marcelo Rios this spring, could lose his No. 1 to six possible players — Rios, Petr Korda, Carlos Moya, Greg Rusedski, Yevgeny Kafelnikov and Patrick Rafter.

Sampras on Monday beat Slovakia's Dominik Hrbaty 6-3, 6-3, 6-2. The last defending champion to lose in the first round was Manuel Santana in 1967.

TENNIS: Most favorites end up winning

(From 1C)

"I'm very sad about it," the Russian said. "This is my favorite tournament. I feel like I could do well on grass. I was getting ready for it the whole year."

Another Russian, seventh-seeded Kafelnikov, lost on Centre Court to big-serving Australian Mark Philippoussis, 6-7 (7-5), 7-6 (7-1), 6-4, 6-2.

Kafelnikov, winner of a Wimbledon warmup tournament in Germany, possesses an all-court game that made him one of the top title challengers. British bookmakers had rated him and Richard Krajicek as joint second favorites at 6-1 behind Sampras.

Philippoussis, who had considered skipping Wimbledon after a series of early-round defeats this year, served 21 aces and had 14 double faults. But Kafelnikov's serve doomed him with 22 double faults.

"I haven't had a great year but there is no reason I can't win this tournament," Philippoussis said.

Kafelnikov said his serving problems were due to the relentless pressure put on by the Australian.

"I had no other choice — just go for both serves," he said. "Mark picked up his game in the second set. Maybe I got tired running back and forth all the time."

In a late match, British hopes were raised when No. 12 Tim Henman outlasted Jiri Novak in five sets, 7-6 (7-4), 7-5, 5-7, 4-6, 6-2. Henman and Greg Rusedski, quarterfinalists last year, are seeking to become Britain's first male champion since 1936.

It was an emotionally draining day for Graf and Seles. Graf followed Sampras on Centre Court and beat Spain's Gala Leon Garcia 6-4, 6-1. The No. 4 seed is playing her 13th Wimbledon, but her first in two years and her first Grand Slam since major knee surgery a year ago.

Graf, saying she thought of retiring two months ago as injuries slowed her comeback, broke down in tears during her news conference.

"I get emotional because I don't take it for granted being here," she said. "It's just special to be here."

Seles, the No. 6 seed, downed Spain's Maria Antonio Sanchez Lorenzo 6-3, 6-4. Seles, whose career was disrupted by a stabbing in 1993, is coming off her inspiring run to the French Open final earlier this month, just three weeks after the death of her father Karolj.

"Right now, for the past four weeks, for the first time in my life, I have time to focus on tennis," she said. "I enjoy just playing again."

In her first Wimbledon appearance, 16-year-old Serena Williams beat Italy's Laura Golarsa 6-4, 6-3. Sister Venus, the No. 7 seed, plays today against Jana Nejedly.

In a change from last year, the wettest Wimbledon on record, the 112th championships started in sunshine and 70 degree temperatures. Dark clouds appeared in mid-afternoon but the skies cleared again by early evening.

Sampras opened play on Centre Court with a 6-3, 6-3, 6-2 victory over Slovakia's Dominik Hrbaty, a performance that belied the poor results that have cast doubt on Sampras' chances of defending his title.

"If you can't get up for an event like this, you shouldn't be playing," said the top-seeded American, seeking his fifth championship in six years. "This place over the years has brought out the best in me. You get more keyed up, more fired up, going out there at 2 o'clock on Monday. Over the years, it's been treating me pretty well."

Sampras served an ace on the first point, closed the first set with another ace and was never troubled. He finished with 17 aces and eight double faults.

The most entertaining moment came after Sampras nailed Hrbaty in the thigh with a service winner in the fourth game of the second set. Waiting to return on the next point, Hrbaty held up his racket in front of his body as mock protection, drawing laughter from Sampras and the spectators.

Within seconds of Sampras winning his match, 1992 champion Agassi completed a 6-2, 6-4, 6-3 victory on Court 1 over Spain's Alex Calatrava.

Wearing a long-sleeved white shirt, Agassi was in full control from the baseline. Calatrava, whose left knee was treated in the second set, ended the match with a double fault.

It was a convincing performance by the 13th-seeded Agassi, who has soared in the rankings since dropping to No. 141 last November. He has been bothered recently by a shoulder injury.

"Even though I was out playing I wasn't there 100 percent," Agassi said. "I had my energy elsewhere in a lot of cases. I need to take it up another level in this tournament. I'm ready to do that."

The highest women's seed playing Monday was No. 2 Lindsay Davenport, who cruised to a 6-2, 6-2 victory over Argentina's Florencia Labat. The first seed to lose was No. 11 Mary Pierce, with her latest Grand Slam flop a 7-6 (7-4), 6-3 defeat to Elena Tatarkova of Ukraine.

The first men's seed eliminated was No. 10 Alex Corretja, the French Open runner-up from Spain. He lost to American Justin Gimelstob, 7-6 (7-3), 6-2, 6-3.

In another defeat for a clay-court specialist, 1997 French Open champion Gustavo Kuerten of Brazil was ousted by Australia's Jason Stoltenberg 4-6, 6-3, 6-1, 4-6, 10-8.

In an early match, third-seeded Petr Korda, the Australian Open champion, defeated Spain's Javier Sanchez 6-3, 6-4, 6-3. Looking at home on the grass, the Czech lefthander served 16 aces and showed he could be among the top challengers.

As defending champion, Sampras had the honor of starting play on Centre Court, which has new grass for the first time in 40 years.

JACKSON: Coach delivers on promise

(From 1C)

"Phil Jackson will be long remembered as the best coach in Chicago Bulls' history and as one of the greatest coaches in the history of the National Basketball Association," Reinsdorf said in a statement. "He will be missed."

Reinsdorf did not mention a new Bulls coach, and the team doesn't have a timetable for naming one. George Karl, who was fired as coach of the Seattle SuperSonics, has been mentioned as a replacement, as has Kansas coach Roy Williams and Iowa State coach Tim Floyd.

There also has been speculation the Bulls might consider assistant Bill Cartwright, who played center on the Bulls' first three championship teams.

But Monday was Jackson's day, and it was a day long in coming. His relations with general manager Jerry Krause have been thorny for years, and Reinsdorf said Jackson told him after each of the last three seasons that he wanted to take a break.

Each time, though, Jackson was talked into coming back for one more year.

"Personally, I would like to thank him for giving us each of those seasons," Reinsdorf said. "We have all enjoyed them and are glad he gave us as much time as he did."

After signing a one-year, $6 million contract last summer, Jackson swore this season would be his last. He never wavered from that, telling his players from training camp on that this was it.

So despite all the rumors and what-ifs, when the team gathered at Michael Jordan's restaurant last Tuesday after a citywide celebration for the Bulls sixth championship, Jackson didn't need to say a word.

"Phil's been true to himself all year," Bulls backup center Bill Wennington said. "He's decided he needs time off, and I respect that. He's not caving in to pressures. He has a plan for his life and what he needs to do, and he's going at it."

Aside from a vacation in Turkey with his wife, June, and former New York Knicks teammate and U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley, Jackson has no plans.

"I don't know if there is a basketball challenge," Jackson said. "I'll have to wait and see if one presents itself."

And if it doesn't, well, that's fine, too.

"I feel happy," he said. "I'm glad to be on my way out of here."

As for the rest of the Bulls, Jackson said their futures are up to them. Jordan, Pippen and Dennis Rodman all are free agents, as are six of the other players on Chicago's 12-man playoff roster.

Jordan has said he doesn't want to play for anyone but Jackson, but he's since softened that stance. And Pippen has said he will be open-minded if the rest of the Bulls return, despite saying repeatedly he wanted to play somewhere else.

"One of the things we said last week was that we were going to support each other with whatever decisions we have to make because it's a personal time now and people have to do that for themselves," Jackson said.

"Whatever paths people may have to take, one thing they can't take away from us is the bonds we've made together winning these championships."

retirement.

"I hope Scottie Pippen and Dennis Rodman will come back," said Jordan, who was in Austin for a children's basketball clinic and celebrity charity game. "It will take some time for them to think about it, but I think there's a chance they will."

Before Jackson made his announcement at the Bulls' practice facility outside Chicago, Jordan was asked about his coach not returning.

"If that's his choice, that's his choice. I respect Phil," Jordan said. "But I haven't heard it from Phil yet."

Asked about the matter further, Jordan declined to answer.

Jordan once said he would play only for Jackson, though he's retreated from that lately. Pippen, unhappy after years of being undervalued and underpaid, has said he would rather go somewhere else, but he too has softened his stance. Rodman wants to return, but only if the rest of the gang comes back.

Jackson's departure was no surprise to his players. The team had dinner at Jordan's restaurant after a citywide celebration in Grant Park last Tuesday, and backup center Bill Wennington said it was understood Jackson was leaving.

Jordan repeated Monday that if the Bulls, who just won their sixth NBA championship, change too much he would strongly consider retiring.

"The coaches may not be the same and the players may not be the same, and that would be like starting over," Jordan said in listing possible reasons to leave.

When asked by a child attending the clinic if he was really going to retire, Jordan said, "I don't know. I want to play with the same guys I've been playing with. If that happens, great. If not, those things happen."

Asked why he would keep playing, Jordan smiled and said, "I still enjoy the game, and there are some young players in the league who still need some lessons."

The charity basketball clinic is run by Jordan's friend, Eric Martin, a former New Orleans Saints player. The clinic is usually in New Orleans, but Jordan asked if it could be in Austin this year so he could play some golf courses in the area.

The celebrity game Monday night also featured Bulls guard Ron Harper.

DODGERS: Lasorda takes over as GM season with the club, was elected to the Hall of Fame last year. He guided the Dodgers to two World Series titles, but the last was a decade ago.

Dodgers fan Bill Kivinski of Northridge welcomes a larger role for Lasorda.

"Everybody was hoping that he would be the interim manager, so at least being more involved and maybe getting the right kind of personnel will be good," he said.

Lasorda has been friends with Claire for many years and Russell first met Lasorda when Russell was a promising 17-year-old ball player.

"It was sad to see both Billy and Fred leave, but we've got to look forward and think about the future," Lasorda said. "There is a lot of talent here.

"These fellas can play better baseball. Our job is to get this ball club going in the right direction."

Hoffman becomes only the Dodgers' fourth new manager over the last 44 years. Russell is the first to be fired since Charlie Dressen was replaced by Walter Alston after the 1953 season.

O'Malley turned toward Hoffman at the news conference and said, "Glenn, I hope you're the manager of this ballclub for many, many years."

Hoffman, 39, led Albuquerque to a 27-41 record in his second season. He also oversaw the development of Paul Konerko, the Dodgers' third baseman.

Hoffman was an infielder with Boston, the Dodgers and the Angels before retiring in 1989.

Russell, 49, spent 32 years with the Dodgers as a player, coach and manager. He was a three-time All-Star shortstop for them.

Claire, 62, was in his 30th year with the team and 12th as general manager. Under his tenure, the Dodgers produced five of the last six NL rookies of the year — Eric Karros, Piazza, Raul Mondesi, Nomo and Hollandsworth. Los Angeles won the World Series in 1988, Claire's second season as GM.

Claire did not immediately return telephone calls to his home.

Diamondbacks' Benes cools off Ranger bats

Associated Press

■ Pro Baseball

ARLINGTON — Facing baseball's top hitting club, Andy Benes had a simple plan: Keep the ball down.

Benes did just that, allowing six hits in eight shutout innings Monday night to lead the Arizona Diamondbacks to a 6-0 win over the Texas Rangers. Benes (6-7) stayed ahead of the hitters and got a few breaks to help the expansion Diamondbacks get their second shutout.

"With this lineup, there is a small margin for error," said Benes, who allowed just two runners past first. "It's the kind of lineup where if you get the ball up, you're going to pay. They hit some balls sharp, but they just happened to be right at people. I was able to keep the ball down and got a few breaks."

By keeping the ball down, Benes was able to do what no team had been able to do for 91 games — blank Texas.

The Rangers, who entered the game with a major league best .292 average, were shut out for the first time since September 9, 1997, the longest active streak in the majors. Texas was the last team in the majors to be held scoreless this year.

"It had nothing to do with pressure," said Rangers first baseman Will Clark. "It had everything to do with that guy throwing the ball where he wanted to."

It was Benes's second quality outing in a row after two bad ones. Before beating Cincinnati last week, he had allowed 13 runs and 14 hits in his previous 7 1/3 innings. Benes has now allowed one earned run in his last two starts.

Dave Dellucci led the attack on Rangers starter John Burkett (4-8) by going 3-for-4 with two RBIs, a triple and a double. Burkett allowed five runs and nine hits in 7 1/3 innings.

Burkett has gone at least seven innings in his last five games and six of his last eight starts, but he has just one win in the span. Texas has scored only seven runs in Burkett's last five starts.

Twins 5, Astros 3

HOUSTON — The Houston Astros had Eric Milton scouted perfectly. Too bad it didn't do them much good.

Milton won for the first time since May 15 and Terry Steinbach homered to lead the Minnesota Twins past the Astros.

Milton (4-6) allowed two runs and two hits in 6 2/3 innings. The left-hander, who won his major league debut on April 5, had four no-decisions and two losses since beating the Yankees last month.

Houston rallied in the seventh after two were out. Milton walked Carl Everett and was charged with walking Sean Berry before Brad Ausmus connected for his third homer. Mike Trombley replaced Milton with a 3-0 count on Berry.

Jose Lima (7-4), the first six-game winner in the NL, continued to struggle. He gave up four runs and eight hits in seven innings.

Blue Jays 14, Expos 2

TORONTO — Juan Guzman pitched a seven-hitter for his first win since May 26 and Jose Canseco homered, leading the Blue Jays to a rout of the Expos.

Guzman (4-9) walked one and struck out five in his first complete game since Aug. 21, 1996. The right-hander had three losses and a no-decision in his previous four starts.

White Sox 5, Pirates 4

PITTSBURGH — The White Sox scored four runs in the first inning, then held off a Pittsburgh comeback with Ray Durham's go-ahead homer in the sixth.

Phillies 9, Red Sox 8, 10 innings

BOSTON — Gregg Jefferies singled home Alex Arias in the 10th inning as the Phillies rallied from a five-run deficit to beat the Red Sox.

Royals 3, Reds 0

CINCINNATI — Jeff King hit his fourth homer on Kansas City's eight-game road trip and Shane Mack added a solo shot as the Royals beat the slumping Reds.

Orioles 7, Mets 2

BALTIMORE — Mike Mussina pitched a two-hitter and the Orioles handed Bobby Jones his first loss since April 30.

Yankees 6, Braves 4

NEW YORK — Tim Raines hit a two-run double in the seventh inning and the Yankees rallied past the Braves.

Indians 3, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Dwight Gooden continued to dominate the Cubs and Omar Vizquel hit a tiebreaking RBI single in the seventh inning as the Indians beat Chicago.

Cardinals 4, Tigers 1

ST. LOUIS — Todd Stottlemyre pitched eight strong innings and Brian Jordan drove in two runs as the Cardinals won their season-high fifth straight.

Marlins 3, Devil Rays 2, 12 innings

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Antonio Alfonseca pitched out of a bases-loaded, one-out jam in the 12th inning to give the Marlins a victory over the Devil Rays.

Brewers 3, Rockies 2

MILWAUKEE — Jeromy Burnitz greeted reliever Chuck McElroy with a leadoff triple in the eighth and scored on John Jaha's groundout.

Spurs hoping to pick perimeter marksman

By Kelley Shannon
AP Sports Writer

Some facts and figures regarding the San Antonio Spurs' participation in the 1998 NBA draft Wednesday:
1997-98 record: 56-26
Draft picks: 24th and 52nd
What the Spurs want: a perimeter shooter.
1997 draft selection: Tim Duncan of Wake Forest, No. 1 pick
Duncan's rookie stats: 21.1 points, 11.9 rebounds, 2.51 blocks

SAN ANTONIO — More suspense and less celebration await the San Antonio Spurs in the upcoming NBA draft.

One year after jubilantly selecting Tim Duncan with the No. 1 overall pick, the Spurs are quietly scouting low first-round players in hopes of finding a perimeter shooter with promise.

"We'll have a wish list," said R.C. Buford, director of scouting for San Antonio. But, Buford noted, many other franchises also are looking for outside shooters.

The Spurs have the 24th and 52nd picks Wednesday.

Historically, a player drafted at the 24th position isn't someone who has an immediate impact on the team, Buford said, adding, "They normally have to have some time to develop."

There are exceptions. Sam Cassell was selected by Houston at that spot in 1993, and Latrell Sprewell by Golden State in 1992.

The Spurs have invited several potential draftees to town to work out, including Corey Benjamin of Oregon State, Bryce Drew of Valparaiso, Toby Bailey of UCLA, Ricky Davis of Iowa and Cory Carr of Texas Tech.

The Spurs won't reveal whom they expect to select. Buford said it is difficult to know which players will be available, especially after Houston and Orlando use a combined six picks between the 10th and 20th spots.

"People are all over the board trying to figure out who is going to be around after them," he said.

Spurs coaches and scouts had quite a different experience last summer, when San Antonio became a lottery team and drew the top pick after an injury-ravaged 1996-97 season. It was clear from the start that 7-foot Duncan of Wake Forest would be the No. 1 selection.

In his first season, Duncan didn't disappoint.

Alongside 7-foot-1 Robinson, a top draft pick himself in 1987, Duncan proved to be a powerful force for the Spurs, averaging 21.1 points, 11.9 rebounds, and 2.51 blocks. Duncan was named NBA Rookie of the Year.

Though the Spurs were well-manned inside, San Antonio coach Gregg Popovich this past season lamented the Spurs' struggles on the perimeter.

Sean Elliott was sidelined by a knee injury in January and missed the rest of the season. Chuck Person provided some of his trademark 3-pointers, but lower back problems affected his ability to play.

Despite the Spurs' shooting needs, the team may well draft the best overall player available at the 24th spot Wednesday night. Like Duncan, the player the Spurs select will get a three-year guaranteed contract, as all first-round draftees do.

But expectations for the new rookie won't be nearly as high.

"I'd like to think we'd all get big raises if we can find someone at 24 who has the impact of No. 1," Buford said.

England loses in 90th minute, Columbia wins

By Grant Clark
Bloomberg News

TOULOUSE, FRANCE — Romania scored a last-minute goal through the British goalkeeper's legs to defeat England 2-1 and secure a place in the second round of the World Cup finals, while Colombia raised its hopes of advancing with a 1-0 victory over Tunisia.

Romania's win in Toulouse came on a shot by Dan Petrescu in the 90th minute, when he managed to wrap his leg around a defender and poke the ball through English goalie David Seaman's legs. Colombia's game-winner in Montpellier also came late, with Leider Preciado scoring the only goal in the 83rd minute.

Romania now has six points after its two first-round victories, while England and Colombia each have three points. Tunisia has lost its first two games and can't advance to the second round.

Teams get three points for a win in the first round of the finals and one point for a tie. The top two finishers in each of eight groups advance to the second round, a 16-team single-elimination tournament for the World Cup. Ties are broken by the difference between goals scored and allowed.

Colombia, which has an smaller goal difference than England, needs to beat England in its final match on Friday if the Colombians are to claim the other qualifying spot in Group G. A tie is enough for the English to advance.

England coach Glenn Hoddle said his side paid the price for defending poorly.

"We've given away two terrible goals and if you defend like that at this level you get punished," Hoddle said. "We could have won the match if we'd taken our chances."

Viorel Moldovan, who plays in England for Coventry, put the Romanians ahead in the 47th minute, volleying home from close range after Gheorghe Hagi collected the ball off a throw-in and lobbed a gentle cross beyond the English defense.

Michael Owen looked like he might salvage a tie for England 10 minutes after coming on as a substitute. He scored from close range off a pass from Alan Shearer in the 83rd minute to even the score at 1-1.

In the 90th minute though Petrescu, another player who competes in England, followed a long-ball into the penalty area and hooked his foot around his Chelsea teammate Graeme Le Saux to knock the ball through Seaman's legs and into the net. Owen, the 18-year-old Liverpool striker, nearly tied the score again in injury time, only to see his 20-yard shot hit the post.

Romania coach Anghel Iordanescu was delighted with his team's play.

"We won a deserved victory which was earned by the tremendous efforts of my players throughout the match," Iordanescu said. "It was an exciting match and the difference was the English mistakes. Now we're going to make sure we win the group."

Earlier in Montpellier, a match packed with chances for both Colombia and Tunisia appeared to be heading for a scoreless tie until veteran midfielder Carlos Valderrama set up the winning goal with seven minutes remaining. The 36-year-old Colombian threaded a pass through the Tunisian defense to Preciado, who held off the challenge of two defenders to beat goalkeeper Chokri El-Ouaer from just inside the penalty area.

"The important thing was to win," Valderrama said. "I don't care whether we deserved it or not. There is one winner in football and it was us."

The Tunisians came close to scoring twice in the first half when Mehdi Ben Slimane and Riadh Bouazizi both hit the post.

The last matches of groups A and B are scheduled for Tuesday. Brazil faces Norway and Scotland plays Morocco, while Italy meets Austria and Cameroon takes on Chile in Group B.

World Cup has lost meaning to once optimistic American team

By Ronald Blum
AP Sports Writer

PORNIC, France — Summer vacation started early for the U.S. soccer team, which moved to a Brittany beach resort on Monday as the shock of World Cup elimination set in.

After Sunday night's 2-1 loss to Iran, American players returned to their chateau in Beaujolais wine country and sat around the swimming pool until the wee hours, trying to figure out what went wrong.

"Put on some Bob Seger and just hung out," Alexi Lalas said.

They then jetted across France on Monday and settled in a seaside village west of Nantes to prepare for Thursday's World Cup finale against Yugoslavia, little more than an exhibition for the United States.

"The joke around camp is we don't have to worry about security — except from Sam's Army," Brian McBride said, referring to the American group of fans who followed the team to the World Cup.

D & D Plumbing offers 'Stay Cool Guarantee'

Sleep cool tonight—guaranteed

When it's well over 100 degrees outside, air conditioning failure can bring great misery, especially if you have to spend the night in the heat. If your a/c fails, don't sweat—D & D Plumbing guarantees they'll have you sleeping in the cool tonight.

The details are really simple: if you call by 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and live in Midland County, D & D will either fix your a/c or put you up, at their expense, in the air-conditioned Hampton Inn.

D & D's technicians service just about all brands of air conditioners. Their huge stock of parts on each truck allows them to fix most problems in one trip, getting you back in the cool as quickly as possible. David Rotan, one of D & D's owners, says that in offering this guarantee over the last two summers, they've only sent people to the motel about two times a year. That means they'll probably have you resting in cool comfort in your own home that night.

If your old unit has given up under the strain of 100-degree-plus days, D & D has a special offer on Trane's XL 1200 (12 SEER) and XL 1400 (14 SEER) units. If you buy one before July 31, you'll get a free 10 year warranty on both parts and labor. Most warranties only cover the compressor and coils for 10 years. Trane is one of the few companies that makes its own compressors. When you buy a Trane, you know you're getting a unit powerful enough to stand up to the repeated torture of west Texas summers.

Have you ever gotten dents in your condenser coils (the outside unit) from hail, from the lawnmower or from children and pets playing? These dents can restrict airflow, reducing the efficiency of your unit. That's why Trane protects their coils with galvanized steel louvers. Trane's exclusive Weatherguard top further protects the unit's efficiency by keeping dirt, leaves and debris from clogging the air flow.

Trane's XL 1200 and XL 1400 still use reliable, efficient R-22 refrigerant. This is still in use in 99.5 percent of all residential units, and will continue to be produced until 2020, meaning it's safe to buy a unit using R-22. David explains that, while it will eventually be phased out, there has been no final agreement on what refrigerant will replace R-22. He says, "Trane will convert to alternate refrigerants only after long-term test programs prove their suitability as R-22 replacements."

Don't sweat summer's heat. Brothers David, Dwain and Derek Rotan of D & D Plumbing are the third generation of their family keeping Midlanders cool.

D & D Plumbing, Heating and Air Conditioning (plumbing license M-14772 and air conditioning license TACL B009344E) is owned by brothers Dwain and Derek Rotan. They offer complete plumbing and air conditioning service on all brands. They sell and install Trane equipment. They offer 24-hour emergency service. Call 687-1011.

D & D Plumbing's third generation of hometown service technicians includes brothers David (from left), Dwain and Derek Rotan. They guarantee you'll sleep cool tonight.

Sunbelt Business Brokers can help you live the American dream

Get real job security - become your own boss

A recent cartoon in the Wall Street Journal showed a manager giving a young underling the following outlook: "With hard work, you can be a manager in three years, a V. P. in eight, and downsized and out in 14." Unfortunately, in today's business environment this is all too true. That's one reason there is such an advantage in buying a business instead of being an employee. You have more control over your destiny. And, as the new owner of an existing business, you have an immediate cash flow and an established customer base.

Dan Kerr, owner of the local franchise of Sunbelt Business Brokers, says that while the decision to buy can be exciting, the choices and possibilities from there can be confusing. Sunbelt's professionals can help you get through the maze of decisions and questions. Dan outlines 10 basic steps involved in purchasing a business:

1. Evaluate the basic information on various businesses that are available.
2. Visit the business and get a "feel" for it.
3. Make arrangements through the broker (Sunbelt) to meet with the seller.
4. Do a preliminary evaluation of the information provided.
5. Make an offer through the broker, which protects you as the buyer.
6. Through the broker, negotiate price and terms.
7. Perform the final, up-close investigation of the business.
8. Have the legal documents prepared.
9. Close the purchase.
10. You are now part of the American dream.

Sunbelt Business Brokers can guide you through this process. Sunbelt Brokers are highly trained professionals whose goal is to help you find the right business for you and your family. There are no fees to the buyer.

Part of finding the right business is locating one which you would enjoy doing and which fits your vision. While profit margin and cash flow are important, they should not be the only criteria on which to base your decision, for two reasons.

One, just because a business is making a lot of money doesn't mean you would enjoy it or be good at it. Two, most businesses minimize profits in order to reduce their tax liability, so that not all profit is immediately apparent. Also, many businesses experience up to 20 percent growth under a new owner's infusion of new ideas and enthusiasm.

Unlike the sale of real estate or franchises, the sale of an ongoing business is very confidential for both the seller and the prospective buyer. All inquiries are held in strict confidence, and meetings can be scheduled at night or on weekends.

Are you ready to start living the American dream? Check Sunday's classifieds for local business listings, browse what's available on their web site (listed below) or call them at 520-1515 for a free consultation.

Sunbelt Business Brokers is a locally owned franchise which assists people in buying or selling a business. They are located at 4500 W. Illinois, Suite 211. The phone number is 520-1515 and their web site is www.sunbeltnewtwork.com.

Summer is barbecue season, so do it the easy way. Swing by Jib's at 3316 W. Illinois for some of the tenderest, mouth-wateringest barbecue brisket in these parts.

Earl plugs in to Jib's tender BBQ brisket

Awhile back, Effie and Sally Sue started a computer training and consulting business. Husbands Earl and Slim help them out when they're needed.

Earl sat before his plate of Jib's barbecue brisket and stared.

"Earl? You're just staring at your food," Effie exclaimed. "I've never seen you just stare at the best barbecue in these parts. Why, you yourself have said Jib's brisket has such a deep-smoked flavor, especially when you add their special recipe barbecue sauce, that you want to savor the flavor as long as you can. How can you enjoy it if you don't go ahead and start eating?"

"This could be my last meal," Earl said.

"What?"

"After we eat supper here, I go to Mastodon Oil to install that new printer and server you sold them. I could hook something up wrong and blow the whole building to smithereens."

Effie sighed. "It's a 20 story building, Earl. The worst you could do would be to rip out a couple of floors."

"Thanks a lot," Earl moaned.

"And the last thing you'll remember is a plate piled high with Jib's tender, mesquite-smoked brisket along with that crisp, tangy Cole slaw, those golden French fries and a big slice of buttery Texas toast."

"And I'll remember how much help you were," said Earl.

"Earl, we've been all through this. You have the manuals and wiring digrams, you called the help desk—"

"Where I listened to cheesy music and recorded voices saying how sorry they were about me running up my phone bill while all their representatives were on break," Earl interrupted.

"Yeah, but you finally got through and got the info you needed. You've hooked up computers, printers and stuff at our house, at your own job, for all our family members and half the town, it seems like. You know what you're doing. Besides, I'll be there and so will Slim. So eat your barbecue. You'll need your strength for the job tonight so you can check out the fire escape before you start."

"Very funny. You say Slim'll be there?" Earl inquired. "Then why isn't he here now, enjoying some tasty Jib's barbecue with us?"

"He ate barbecue here at lunch. Right now, he's at a rain dance in Coahoma."

"Excuse me, did you say he had brain damage in Oklahoma?"

"No," said Effie, icily, "that's what you say about my sister Twillie."

Located at 3316 W. Illinois, just north of Dunlap's, Jib's features steak fingers, chicken fried steak, chicken strips, deep-fried pork chops, catfish, shrimp, barbecue, smoked sausage, baby-back ribs and more made-from-scratch Texas fare. Their hours are 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and until 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Call ahead for carryout orders at 699-3008.

Your Social Security benefits: no more checks in the mail

As of January 1, 1999, the federal government will require direct deposit for all Social Security benefits. After that date, there will be no more checks in the mail. But there's no need to panic. You can take steps well in advance of the government deadline to facilitate the direct deposit process.

Daniel Watts

Consider opening a comprehensive management account, available from most brokerage firms, or a bank "sweep" account. A centralized asset account—a combination checkwriting, credit and/or debit card, money-market fund and brokerage account—is perhaps the single most useful tool widely available to investors today. And these accounts do more than just house your cash and investments—they simplify your financial life.

The all-in-one account

Introduced in the late 70s, centralized accounts are now offered by leading brokerage firms, some banks and a few other financial institutions. They are known by a variety of names, but all operate in essentially the same manner: the cash in your brokerage account is "swept" every day (or every week) into a money-market fund. You can choose from either a general money fund or a government securities fund, and may switch funds whenever you wish.

Beyond these basics, the accounts differ somewhat as to specific features, services, minimum balances and fees. Some offer credit cards, others debit cards. Some have lower minimum balances than others. Some provide itemization of your checks according to expense category (medical, charitable contributions, etc.), which can be a great help for tax preparation. Some even offer preferred lines of credit up to $100,000.

Easy access to your funds—when you want them

Think about what can happen if your money is spread among, say, a bank, a credit union, a brokerage firm and a couple of mutual fund companies, and you suddenly want to make a sizable investment in a stock.

To collect the necessary funds to make your investment, you may find yourself making in-person withdrawals, telephone redemptions and mail redemptions. After all this time and inconvenience your stock may well have moved up sharply. In contrast, if you have a centralized asset account, all your funds are right there, ready to be re-deployed at a moment's notice.

"A centralized asset account—a combination checkwriting, credit and/or debit card, money-market fund and brokerage account—is perhaps the single most useful tool widely available to investors today."

Centralized accounts provide access to funds in another way, too. By using your checkwriting privileges, credit/debit cards or credit line, you can tap into your account to pay bills or come up with cash no matter where you are. Since all these services are linked, you don't have to worry about overdrawing your account or running short of cash.

If you're not sure whether this type of account is right for you, check with a Financial Consultant at the offering institution. If you'd like to enroll now to receive your Social Security benefits by direct deposit, just call 1-800-772-1213.

If you'd like additional information about Smith Barney's central asset account, FMA¹, give me a call at 620-6067. We have a variety of materials available at no cost.

Jones on verge of track fame

By Bert Rosenthal
AP Track Writer

NEW ORLEANS — Every so often, an athlete bursts onto the scene with limitless potential. Marion Jones is in that class.

At only 22, she already has accomplished what few have in a career and she has the ability to pump life into track and field in the United States, where public acceptance and attendance has been lagging.

"She's amazing," Mike Powell, the world record-holder in the long jump, said. "She's going to be a big star, after she wins five gold medals in the 2000 Olympic Games."

No track and field athlete — man or woman — ever has won five gold medals in one Olympics. Fanny Blankers-Koen of the Netherlands won four women's golds in 1948 and Jesse Owens in 1936 and Carl Lewis in 1984 won four men's golds.

Jones wants five at Sydney — in the 100 and 200 meters, the long jump, and 400 and 1,600 relays. And she is carefully working her way toward that unprecedented feat.

Last year, in her first full season on the circuit, she won the 100 and long jump at the USA Championships. She also was the only woman to win two golds at the World Championships at Athens, Greece — in the 100 and 400 relay, and at the end of the season, she was voted the sport's outstanding women's athlete.

Over the weekend, she tried a triple — the 100, 200 and long jump — at the USA Championships, and won all three easily. She owns the world's three best performances this year in the three events, including one wind-aided effort in the long jump.

She even ran the fastest 400 by an American in her only race at that distance this year. Jones appears to have no peers in her specialities and she is a distinct threat to eventually break the world records in all three events — 10.49 seconds by Florence Griffith Joyner in the 100, 21.34 by Griffith Joyner in the 200 and 24 feet, 8 1-4 inches by Russia's Galina Chistyakova in the long jump.

"She's making the sport right now," said Zundra Feagin-Alexander, the runnerup to Jones in the 200 at the national championships Sunday. "She's giving us some publicity which we don't get in the United States.

"She's stepped into the void that people like FloJo left. She's showing the other women you can be great. She's an inspiration."

Feagin-Alexander also compared Jones with Wilma Rudolph, the 1960 Olympic gold medalist in the 100, 200 and 400 relay.

"She reminds you of a modern-day Wilma," Feagin-Alexander said. "So tall (5-10) with that great stride.

"She's good for our sport. With her, we don't have to worry about not having someone who can step up and dominate internationally."

Jones also is being compared to Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the world record-holder in the heptathlon, the American record-holder in the long jump, a three-time Olympic gold medalist and three-time world champion.

"I don't deserve the title (best women's track and field athlete) right now," Jones said after her triple — the first in the women's events in 50 years at the USA Championships. "I still consider Jackie the best female athlete and probably always will."

Jones' coach, Trevor Graham, can't wait to see what she eventually will accomplish.

"She's got a lot of talent," he said. "She's not close to her peak yet."

Carr signs to coach Michigan through 2004

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan football coach Lloyd Carr, who in January led the Wolverines to their first national title since 1948, has signed a new contract that will run through the 2004 season.

Carr's base salary will remain $280,000, but he will receive an additional $465,000 for additional services, including television, radio and Internet appearances, the school said Monday. The university said in a release that the new contract brings Carr's compensation "into line with his national and Big Ten Conference peers."

"The new seven-year contract underscores the University of Michigan's commitment to Lloyd," athletic director Tom Goss said.

Carr became Michigan's interim head coach in May 1995 after Gary Moeller was fired following a drunken outburst in a Southfield restaurant.

It was widely reported that Carr's job was in jeopardy before last season. The Wolverines were coming off four straight four-loss seasons before going undefeated and winning the Rose Bowl.

MONEY MATTERS

With the right game plan, your Individual Retirement Account (IRA) may live on past you. You can select an adult or child, a relative or friend, your estate, a trust or a charity as a beneficiary of your IRA upon your death. By selecting certain beneficiaries, you may reduce your tax burden by sharing your life and provide your heirs with income and continued tax-deferred growth. For while you must take required minimum distributions beginning at age 70½, depending on whom you select as a beneficiary, these distributions can be reduced, prolonging the tax-advantaged status of the assets.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar rose Monday against the Japanese yen and German mark after the Japanese government failed to provide global finance leaders with a strong economic recovery plan.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 138.16 yen, up from 136.10 late Friday. That strength pushed the dollar higher vs. the mark as well, with the U.S. currency changing hands at 1.7941 marks, up from 1.7885.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.4975 Swiss francs, up from 1.4987; 6.0135 French francs, up from 5.9935; 1,766 Italian lire, up from 1,761; and 1.4712 Canadian dollars, up from 1.4711.

The British pound was quoted at $1.6748, up from $1.6739.

Billboard concern

NEW YORK — Radio heavyweight Chancellor Media Corp. is getting into the billboard business, buying the privately held Martin Media LP for about $610 million in cash.

The deal announced Monday would unite the nation's second biggest radio company with the seventh biggest outdoor advertising concern.

Chancellor indicated it hoped to make more deals in the outdoor ad business. Its clout with local advertisers would be particularly strengthened in the half-dozen markets where it has radio stations and Martin Media has billboards — Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, San Diego, Cincinnati, Washington, D.C., and Riverside, Calif.

Martin Media, based in Paso Robles, Calif., has more than 13,000 billboards and other outdoor advertising displays in 29 markets in 12 states from California to Connecticut. Its 1997 revenues were $78.2 million.

Chancellor, based in Irving, Texas, owns 108 radio stations in 22 markets and recently launched a national radio syndication operation.

Sunbeam investigated

NEW YORK — A week and a half after firing its chief executive, Sunbeam Corp. is being investigated by the Securities and Exchange Commission for possible irregularities in its accounting practices, The Wall Street Journal reported.

The informal probe is an effort to determine whether there is reason enough to initiate a full-blown investigation, a person familiar with the matter told the Journal.

David Levine, an aide to SEC division of enforcement director Richard Walker, declined to comment.

"We cannot confirm or deny if there is an investigation," he said.

A spokeswoman for the Delray Beach, Fla.-based Sunbeam also declined to comment.

Dow steady

NEW YORK — Big-name technology shares rallied Monday as portfolio managers began sprucing up for quarterly shareholder reports, but most stocks struggled after a summit on the Asian fiscal crisis proved disappointing.

The Dow Jones industrial average slipped 1.74 to 8,711.13 after retreating from a 50-point gain.

The Nasdaq composite index jumped 24.53, or 1.4 percent, to 1,805.8.

The Standard & Poor's 500 rose 2.59 to 1,103.24.

NYSE composite volume totaled 638.05 million shares.

The NYSE composite index rose 0.96 to 564.88, and the American Stock Exchange composite index rose 0.02 to 693.99.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies rose 3.23 to 441.65.

OPEC will seek ways to boost prices

■ Crude futures surge 13 percent on hopes for more output cuts.

N.Y. Times News Service

VIENNA — OPEC members will push for more cuts in oil production at the group's meeting this week as they look for ways to boost oil prices that recently sunk to their lowest level since 1986.

"We hope everybody will see the seriousness of the problem," said Sheikh Saud Nasser Al-Sabah, minister of oil for Kuwait, as he arrived in Vienna ahead of the Wednesday meeting.

Crude oil in New York surged on hopes for more output cuts. Four non-OPEC nations — Russia, Mexico, Norway and Oman — will send observers to join the meeting of OPEC's 11 nations. Russia, whose economy has been battered by low oil prices, is coming for the first time.

Crude oil for July delivery rose $1.59, or 13.4 percent, to $13.43 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the biggest one-day gain, on a percentage basis, since Jan. 22, 1991. Oil futures have risen 18 percent since touching a 12-year low of $11.42 a week ago.

"Everyone is expecting OPEC to cut more at this meeting," said David Markham, a broker at ED&F Man International Ltd. in London. "They have to, but it's going to be interesting to see how much they do."

Eight OPEC and non-OPEC nations have so far agreed on cutbacks of 740,000 barrels a day in a second round of cuts this year aimed at lifting prices. The initiative came after a previous slew of cuts among 17 nations that began in April failed to eliminate excess supply, with demand still reeling from an economic slowdown in Asia.

Oil market analysts say the new cuts, which start July 1, need to be at least 1 million barrels a day, or 260,000 barrels a day more than pledged so far, to have an appreciable effect on prices.

That would need to come from an ever-shrinking pool of remaining producers still willing to cut more, unless existing promises are expanded. "There will be no further cuts from Norway for the time being," Norwegian Oil and Energy Ministry spokeswoman Sissel Edvardsen told reporters after a meeting between oil ministers from Norway and Venezuela Monday in Oslo.

Obaid Bin Saif Al-Nasseri, minister of petroleum and mineral resources for the United Arab Emirates, said as he arrived at his hotel in Vienna that he is hopeful the meeting will result in higher prices, but he declined to say how much oil he believes needs to be removed from the market.

Among OPEC members that haven't yet joined the second round of cuts, Indonesia has said its economic troubles will prevent it from making further sacrifices while Iraq, whose exports are already restricted by the United Nations, is intent on increasing, not decreasing its oil flow.

Within Opec, that leaves Algeria, Libya and Nigeria. Mexico has already expressed doubts about Nigeria's commitment to cuts, especially after the political upheaval caused by Nigerian President Sani Abacha's death earlier this month.

Russian Fuel and Energy Minster Sergei Generalov, who is expected to arrive in Vienna Tuesday, said that Russia may commit to further cuts if all other exporters will. Russia has pledged to reduce exports by 63,000 barrels a day, beginning July.

The extent of oil's decline - down 43 percent in eight months - has mobilized support from outside OPEC, and together with its observers, this conference will see 15 countries represented, more than ever before in OPEC's 37-year history.

Union expects GM strike to expand

■ At annual convention, UAW officials say they expect strike against GM to last into August.

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — The autoworkers strikes against General Motors Corp. in Michigan could last into August and may expand to other key GM parts plants where union-management disputes continue to fester, a top union leader said Monday.

"I would hope we could find a way to settle these this week," said Richard Shoemaker, the United Autoworkers Union vice president who directs relations with GM. "If we don't find the framework to put these behind us this week, I would not be surprised if it doesn't continue into the second or third week of August."

Negotiations continued Monday at the two strike-idled parts plants in Flint, Mich., but there has been "very little progress on the key issues," Shoemaker said in an interview shortly before the start of the union's triennial convention at the Las Vegas Convention Center.

GM did not immediately comment.

The strikes by 9,200 workers began June 5 at the Flint Metal Center stamping plant and June 11 at Delphi Flint East, which makes engine parts and dashboard instruments. The resulting lack of parts has affected 24 assembly lines and nearly 100 parts plants, virtually halting GM's North American production.

The plant closures and slowdowns had resulted in layoffs of about 121,500 workers by Monday.

Two United Auto Workers union pickets wave their signs and acknowledge the honks of motorists as they spent Father's Day in front of the General Motors Corp.'s Metal Fabricating plant in Flint, Mich.

UAW President Stephen P. Yokich rejected GM's position that the Flint dispute is about GM's need to become leaner and more competitive. He vowed the union would "last one day longer" than GM and win the crippling strikes against the biggest automaker.

"This strike is about not living up to the agreements that they made with the locals across the bargaining table," Yokich said in a speech to the 2,000 delegates at the UAW's 32nd constitutional convention. "We are not going to stand for that."

Labor Secretary Alexis Herman also spoke to the convention, but was careful not to take sides in the GM dispute. She said she was confident the collective bargaining process would prevail in the Flint dispute, and that GM employees would return to work soon.

The strikes are costing GM about $75 million a day in lost production. If the walkouts last into mid-August, the after-tax penalty on second and third-quarter profits could total more than $2 billion, said analyst David Healy of Burnham Securities Inc.

'I would hope we could find a way to settle these this week. If we don't find the framework to put these behind us this week, I would not be surprised if it doesn't continue into the second or third week of August.'

GM strike to cut economic growth rate

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A strike at General Motors Corp. will probably cut U.S. economic growth by about half a percentage point this quarter, now that the world's largest automaker has been forced to shut down most of its North American assembly plants.

GM accounts for more than 1 percent of all U.S. output. With much of that halted by the 17-day-old strike, gross domestic product, industrial production and factory hours will all be lower this quarter than previously thought. The number of jobs created in the nation will also be smaller.

"The strike is going to have some restraining impact on the economy, and it further reduces the risk of any overheating in June or July," said William Sullivan, chief money market economist at Morgan Stanley Dean Witter in New York.

Still, the impact will probably be transitory, and growth could rebound in the third quarter. "As soon as a company comes back (from a strike) they try to recoup as quickly as possible with overtime and extra shifts," said Diane Swonk, deputy chief economist at First Chicago, NBD. "Also, the competition tries to pick up as much business as it can."

Strikes at two GM parts plants have shut all or part of 24 assembly factories, idling 122,400 workers and halting 93 percent of production. Even if the walkout were settled today, second-quarter growth will be reduced by about 0.5 percentage point to a 2.0 percent annual rate, Swonk said.

That estimate takes into account the strike and weakening demand for U.S. goods from Asia, which will offset still-strong consumer spending.

Trade is the main reason economists expect slower second-quarter growth. With Japan's economy now in recession, that country is going to be taking in fewer and fewer U.S. exports, which means the effect of Asia's slowdown will be even more pronounced than it was in the first part of the year.

"We already know there's a big bite taken from second-quarter growth in the form of trade, a smaller bite from inventories and now another nibble is taken out for the GM strike," said Kenneth Mayland, chief economist at KeyCorp in Cleveland.

Such a slowdown would put growth well below the 4.8 percent annual rate seen in the first three months of the year, and would reaffirm Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan's view that the economy is cooling. That means an increase in the overnight bank lending rate isn't needed at this point to prevent inflation from accelerating.

CompUSA agrees to buy Computer City

■ Deal worth $275 million, expected to close in 90 days.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Eighteen months after a courtship that went nowhere, CompUSA is headed to the altar with rival retailer Computer City.

CompUSA announced Monday that it's buying the chain from Fort Worth-based Tandy for $275 million.

The deal is subject to regulatory approval but is expected to close within 90 days, the two companies said.

A decision on possible store closings won't be made until then, according to a CompUSA statement. Analysts say CompUSA likely won't keep operating all of the 256 stores it will have after the acquisition.

"CompUSA will probably close down a meaningful number of Computer City stores," said Peter Caruso, an analyst at Merrill Lynch in New York.

CompUSA indicated some people will lose their jobs. "We do expect to gain synergies and efficiencies," the company said in a statement addressing the question of layoffs.

Tandy is selling the sickly Computer City chain as it tries to sustain a turnaround it began last year. The company earned $186.9 million on sales of $5.3 billion last year after losing $91.6 million in 1996.

The sale "will allow us to completely focus on Radio Shack at a time when profits are at an all-time high," Tandy president Leonard Roberts said Monday. "Computer City was a losing operation for the company."

Tandy sold its 17 Incredib e Universe stores in December 1996 when it decided the electronics superstore concept was too expensive.

Dallas-based CompUSA has wooed Computer City before, but talks broke off in February 1997.

This time, analysts say both CompUSA and Tandy will end up in better financial shape.

Industry leader CompUSA eliminates its biggest competitor and Tandy gets rid of a drag on its earnings, said George Sutton of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Dallas.

CompUSA had fiscal 1997 sales of $4.61 billion, while Computer City had 1997 sales of $1.9 billion. Computer City started out strong in 1991 but had been struggling to improve sales and profits since 1995.

CompUSA operates 160 U.S. stores and offers its own build-to-order line of personal computers. In its statement, the chain said it was sticking with its current plan to open 20 stores this fiscal year.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

World Wide Web has wide variety of mutual fund sites

By Eric Tyson

Q: What Internet sites devoted to mutual funds do you like?

A: Mutual funds sites are all over the World Wide Web, and they offer prospective and current fund investors a variety of information and online capabilities.

Tyson

One of the best mutual fund research companies, Morningstar, has a site (http://www.morningstar.net) that is one of the better Web resources for mutual fund investors. It includes Morningstar's well-known research reports on individual mutual funds. Compared with Morningstar's traditional printed reports, the online versions are watered down, however.

NetWorth (http://networth.galt.com), which is part of the online Quicken Financial Network, is a solid runner-up to Morningstar's site. NetWorth also provides access to Morningstar reports on individual funds, but the reports are less comprehensive than those on Morningstar's site.

The sites put out by individual fund companies are increasingly valuable resources because they can save you time communicating with the companies. At the better fund company sites, you can typically look at fund prospectuses and annual reports, download or electronically file account applications, view your current account balance and recent account history and, at some companies, place investment orders.

Top honors for content among those sites clearly belong to the nation's second largest fund company, Vanguard (http://www.vanguard.com). Its Online University is an excellent mutual fund primer for beginning investors. And its individual fund profiles are neatly organized and packed with lots of useful information.

The nation's largest mutual fund company, Fidelity, has a Web site (http://www.fidelity.com) that befits its size. There you can find information and performance data not only on Fidelity's large family of funds but also on hundreds of non-Fidelity funds available through its discount brokerage services. If, like millions of other investors, you have a mutual fund account at Fidelity, you can place online fund trades for any one of the funds.

T. Rowe Price's site (http://www.troweprice.com) is worthy of mention for its content on such topics as conservative stock investing, value investing and retirement planning.

American Century Investments, formed from the recent merger of The Benham Group and Twentieth Century, has an excellent site (http://www.americancentury.com) that allows you to purchase its funds online.

Q: How we can leave our estate to our children? We don't have that much, but we don't want them to have to pay taxes on it. We are 74 and 82 years old.

A: If your estate is worth less than $625,000, you shouldn't owe any federal estate taxes on your estate at your passing. However, each state has different estate and inheritance taxes, so please take the time to research those laws for your state.

In addition to estate and inheritance taxes, you also should be aware of possible attorney probate fees. In many states, nonretirement assets such as your home and investments held outside of retirement accounts might be subject to probate.

By establishing a proper living trust for your nonretirement assets, you could save your heirs substantial probate legal fees.

In the event that your estate is worth more than $625,000, take the time to learn about estate tax reduction strategies. Among my favorite strategies is to gift some money now to your heirs in order to reduce your taxable estate.
