27 anti-apartheid leaders arrested

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Seizing people at home and off the street, security police reported arresting 27 anti-apartheid leaders in a 24-hour period ending Saturday.

It was another day of racial violence throughout South Africa.

Zulu warriors with clubs and spears attacked dozens of blacks near Durban, wounding an undetermined number, after illegal funerals for blacks killed in riots.

Near the white town of Aliwal North, in northern Cape province, four blacks were wounded when police fired bird shot at crowds, a police spokesman said, speaking anonymously in accordance with government rules. The township, wracked by violence last week, is about 200 miles north of Port Elizabeth.

Anti-apartheid disturbances were reported in more than a dozen other townships throughout the country, but there were no deaths, police said.

All 27 of the people detained appeared to be supporters of the multiracial United Democratic Front, the main organization opposing apartheid, the system through which 5 million whites dominate and deny the vote to 24 million blacks.

Friends said physician Dr. Farouk Meer, the Front's acting president, was arrested in a Durban drug store. Anglican Rev. Syd Lockett, national director of his church's Board of Social Responsibility, was detained outside his home near Cape Town, colleagues said.

They were jailed under long-established security laws, not the five-week-old state-of-emergency regulations under which more than 2,000 people have been held without access to lawyers or family. Of those people, 1,038 people were still in cells Saturday.

More than 600 people, almost all blacks, have died in a year of strife, about half killed by police and others by blacks who suspected them of complicity with the government. About 120 of the victims were killed after emergency law was imposed in 36 regions.

Louis le Grange, the law and order minister, warned of "stern action" if activists carry out a demonstration Wednesday to demand freedom for Nelson Mandela, the jailed black leader.

Mandela is in Pollsmoor Prison outside Cape Town, serving a life sentence after being convicted in 1964 of planning sabotage.

The man who called for the march, mixed-race Rev. Allan Boesak, could not be found Friday. The minister told reporters at his home near Cape Town Saturday he had disappeared briefly "to spend time with my family."

"The crackdown is yet another sign that the government is incapable of handling peaceful protest," said Boesak, a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church and president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

Balmorhea now on the lookout for old receipts

BALMORHEA (AP) — Officials are scrounging for receipts and other papers that will give them an idea of this city's financial status. It appears that for the last two years no one remembered to keep records on such things as water bills, insurance and employees.

"We found the books but there were no entries in the books," said Reeves County District Attorney Jack McGowen.

At worst, the lapse could lead to dissolution of the municipality of some 575 residents about 100 miles southeast of Odessa, said McGowen. "If they're not careful, they're not going to have a city anymore."

City Secretary Julie Campbell submitted her resignation to the council in early June, and council members discovered the record-keeping problem later that month, said Councilwoman Dora Machuca.

"There were a few things missing when I left but I understand they found them," Ms. Campbell said Saturday. "No city officials have contacted me."

Information on payment of city water bills was not kept, insurance on all but one of the city vehicles was allowed to lapse, and employee records including job descriptions are nonexistent, said McGowen.

If an uninsured city vehicle is involved in an accident and the city is found liable, "real estate owned by the taxpayers within the city limits could be liable for a pro rata share" of the judgment, McGowen said.

And "if the city gets in a position where it's insolvent, it can be forced into bankruptcy just like an individual could," he said.

Ms. Campbell said she worked for the city for 3½ years and resigned "because I wanted to leave."

Asked if she did or did not keep records, she said: "I have nothing to say. My husband and I just want to leave this behind."

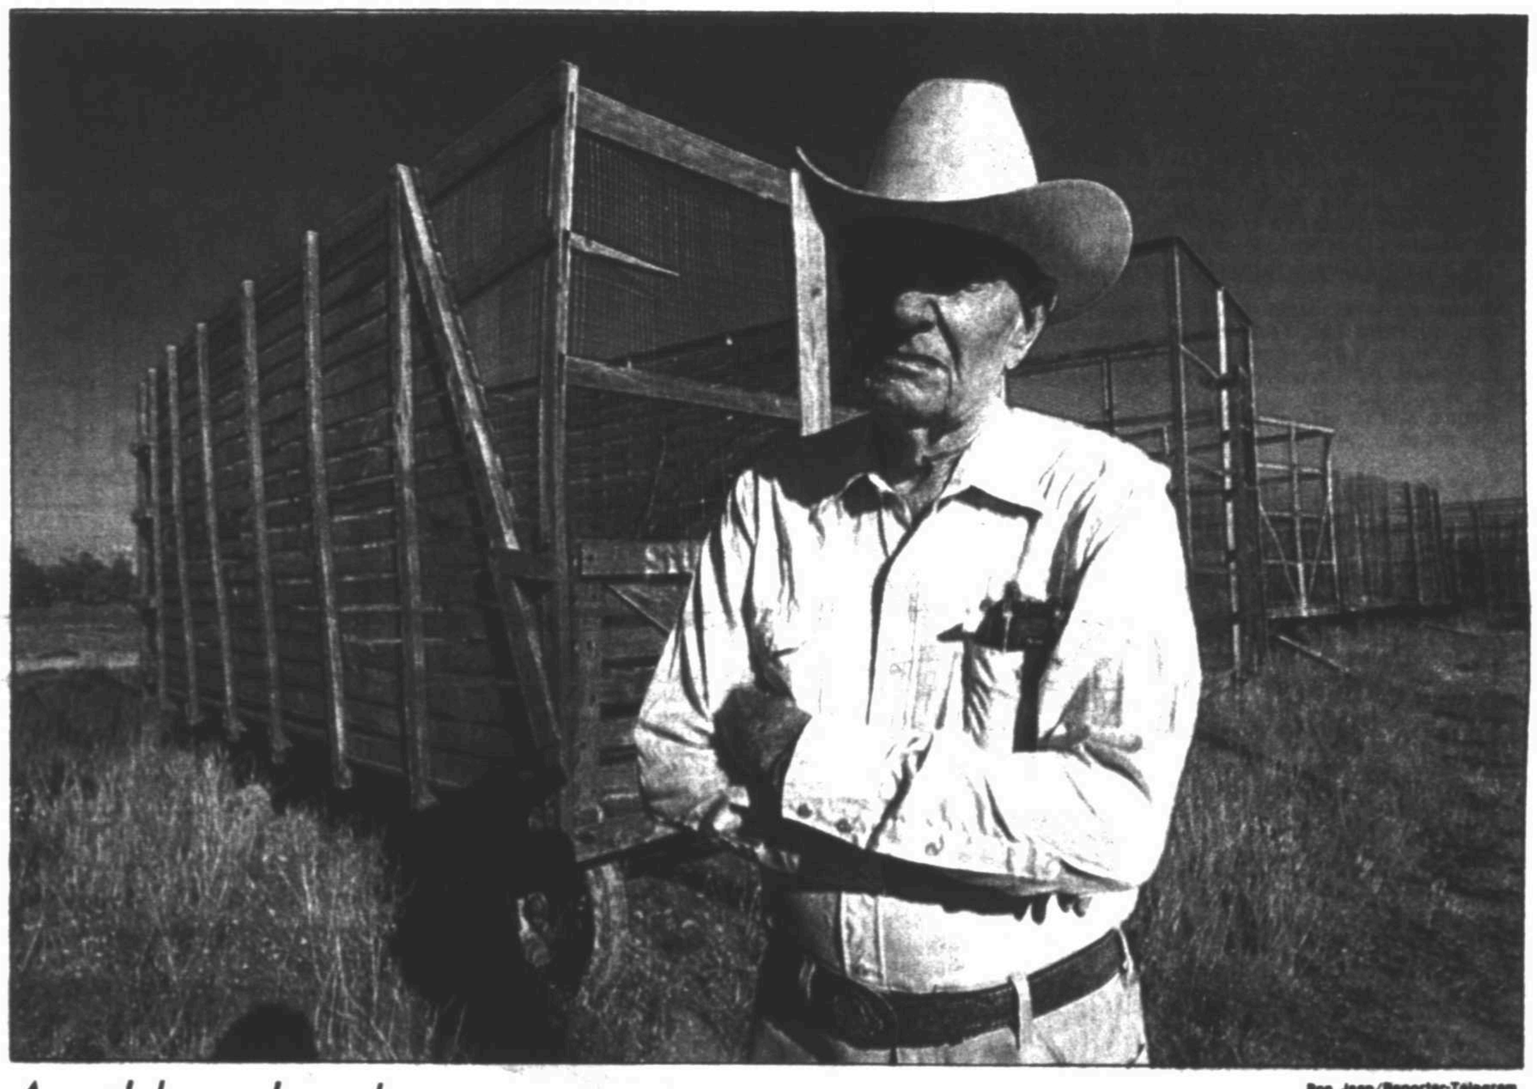

Ms. Machuca said she and other council members asked McGowen in June to investigate whether any laws were broken in the failure to keep records.

"We found no criminal intent on anybody's part, but we found what possibly is a whole lot of negligence on somebody's part," McGowen told the Odessa American.

McGowen said his investigation, conducted along with the Reeves County Sheriff's Department and the Texas Rangers, also found that audits had been skipped for the last two years.

"They quit. Other than making deposits, they just were not maintaining a good accounting system," McGowen said.

"Right now we're trying to get some stuff ready for an audit," Ms. Machuca said Friday. "We're trying to reconstruct some books. For the city's sake, I do worry about someone suing the city."

Ticor tax service subject of 'CreditWatch'

Standard & Poor's studies firm after financial difficulties

From Staff and Wire Reports

The tax service company which failed to submit county property tax payments for its 33 state lenders, has been placed on Standard & Poor's "CreditWatch."

Ticor Tax Realty Service could lose up to $400 million after encountering financial difficulties with the real estate arm of a Maryland savings and loan association.

The Los Angeles-based company has been placed on Standard & Poor's "CreditWatch" for possible downgrading. It previously had a "AA" claims-paying rating.

This winter, Ticor did not submit tax payments for its lenders, including Gibraltar Savings and Lomas & Neddleton, by the Dec. 31, 1984, deadline because of a malfunction in a new computer program, said Ron Bill of Dallas, Ticor vice president and area manager.

Because of the delay, over $880,000 in taxes were paid late to the Midland Independent School District.

"We finally received our money from Ticor," said Don Furgeson, MISD business manager. "But, it's really too early to tell if we could be affected this school year. I would think that maybe some of the mortgage companies using Ticor would consider changing to another company."

Officials at both Lomas and Neddleton and Gibraltar Savings said that it was too early for them to make a decision about changing companies, but said they were concerned about Ticor's situtation.

Bob Kmiec, Midland County appraisal director, said he will be watching Ticor closely to "keep last year's problems from recurring."

Ticor officials said the company has already suffered enough negative exposure from the late pay taxes, and the incident with the Maryland thrift would hurt the company's reputation even more.

The company does acknowledge its insurance role with Equity Programs Investment Corp. (EPIC), a subsidiary of Community Savings & Loan Association.

Maryland Gov. Harry Hughes this week placed a 20-day ban on withdrawals from Community to give it time to deal with Equity's problems. Withdrawals have been limited to $1,000 a month since May, when Community's troubles first surfaced.

S&P said that, among mortgage insurers, Ticor has the largest exposure to the more than $1 billion of mortgage-backed securities generated by Equity that have reported delinquent payments.

Ticor insurance also supports $1.1 billion in various housing bonds, it said.

The mortgage-insurance industry faces a potential loss of up to $400 million, S&P's announcement said, although actual losses will depend upon such factors as the number of actual defaults, the magnitude of losses from reselling properties and expenses incurred in foreclosing.

The loss exposure "will create severe stress in Ticor's capital structure," S&P predicted. It also said it has suspended any future ratings of mortgage-backed securities insured by Ticor "pending a resolution" of the Maryland difficulties. S&P currently rates seven of the mortgage securities issues in Equity's portfolio, but only two of them are public.

The rating agency also placed on its "CreditWatch" the "BB-minus" rating for the parent Ticor holding company's $43 million of debentures due in 2008.

Geter signs big deal, plans referral agency

DALLAS (AP) — Three years after Lenell Geter was arrested and sentenced to life in prison for an armed robbery he didn't commit, the aerospace engineer has signed an agreement for a "substantial" amount of money for a television movie and book detailing his ordeal.

The 28-year-old E-Systems engineer said he also is close to opening a non-profit referral service to help criminal suspects and inmates who may have been unjustly incarcerated.

"Things are coming along well," Geter told The Dallas Morning News in a story published Saturday.

Geter said he was besieged with offers from Hollywood producers for the rights to his story after CBS described his plight in "60 Minutes" and after Dallas County officials ultimately ordered his release from prison and dismissed all charges that had been filed against him.

Geter was arrested Aug. 24, 1982 and charged with the robbery of a Taco Bell in Garland, charges that later were changed and led to his conviction for the Aug. 23, 1982, robbery of a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant in Balch Springs on the southeast edge of Dallas.

He was sentenced to life in prison, but maintained his innocence. Helped by E-Systems colleagues, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, family, friends and others, Geter eventually was exonerated after spending 16 months in prison.

Charges were dropped March 24, 1984, by Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade.

City jail doesn't suffer ills of county facility

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

For months, the Midland County Jail has been embroiled in controversy, as the County Commissioners, a citizens' group and a special task force have wrangled over how to meet the requirements of the Texas Jail Standards Commission.

Meanwhile, five blocks east of the courthouse on Texas Avenue, the city jail operates in a virtual publicity vacuum, which is just fine with Chief of Police Wayne Gideon. While the county jail is plagued by overcrowding, Gideon's facility has enough surplus space to take in federal prisoners at $30 per head per day, which enables the jail to pay its own way and then some.

And as a municipal facility, the city jail is not subject to the Jail Standards Commission's requirements, according to Gideon.

"The standards are up to the individual cities," he said. Even though the Legislature has considered including city jails in the commission's jurisdiction, "It's been defeated every time."

While overcrowded conditions in the county jail have forced the commissioners to consider expansion, the city jail has no such problems, according to Gideon:

"When the Fire Department left (to move into its own building at 1500 West Wall Ave.) we converted one dormitory into a kind of trustee tank," he said. And in the other former dormitory, "We have exercise equipment."

Mattox using child-support cause for political gain, observers say

Mattox

AUSTIN (AP) — A New York lawyer and men's rights activist says Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox is using men for political gains through his child-support enforcement campaign.

Sidney Siller, a founder of the National Organization for Men, is representing Kenneth Ryan, a New York man from whom Mattox is trying to collect $34,000 in child support for Ryan's ex-wife, Jean Ryan of Austin.

Mattox is "trying to make political gains on the backs of men" with the enforcement program, Siller told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"Both parents have a responsibility to support their children. It isn't just the father," Siller said. "This country thinks it should be just the father who should get it on the chops."

Mattox brought Jean Ryan to a news conference Wednesday to discuss the successes of his child-support enforcement program. He cited the $34,000 owed to Ryan's three children as one of the problems that he has making collections in the 42,000 out-of-state cases he handles.

Mattox also said he wanted to disgrace people for not paying child support: "We are bringing forward a social stigma that should be attached to the failure to pay child support."

"I'll challenge the attorney general of Texas to a debate on the Ryan case or any other case he wants to talk about, because if I understand the nature of attorney generals, all they are concerned about is politics," Siller said.

The Associated Press' calls to Mattox's office for a response to Siller's comments went unanswered Saturday, and his home telephone number is unlisted.

Siller, also a monthly columnist on men's rights in Penthouse magazine, said Jean Ryan has no right to collect the back child support from Kenneth Ryan because she waited seven years to take action against him.

Kenneth Ryan had trouble paying child support for a time, Siller said, because of his own financial situation. But he said that Ryan did make some payments during the time that Jean Ryan claims he didn't.

Judge frees on new 'shock probation' convict who testified against Harrelson

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge has granted the early release of William Hampton Robinson III, serving a 10-year prison sentence on drug charges, and allowed him to leave for a Colorado ranch.

State District Judge William Harmon on Friday granted Robinson "shock" probation under a new law usually reserved for first offenders, prosecutors said.

The law allows a judge to decide whether an offender serving prison time has been shocked into good behavior and should be released on probation.

"He's here for two drug offenses, not aggravated robbery or murder," the judge said of his decision.

Robinson, 37, the son of a prominent Southeast Texas surgeon and rancher, was convicted of negligent homicide in the 1977 death of a Victoria rancher. Four years later, Robinson was accused of murdering a longtime friend, but the charge was dismissed after key witnesses disappeared.

Robinson also was subpoenaed by federal grand juries investigating the 1979 slaying of U.S. District Judge John Wood Jr. in San Antonio. He eventually testified against Charles V. Harrelson, a friend who was convicted of Wood's murder.

Harmon said he offered Robinson two choices: staying in prison a few more months and being paroled with a felony record or accepting shock probation and risking a 20-year sentence if he violates the terms.

Robinson will stay at an undisclosed Colorado ranch and will be supervised by authorities in that state, Harmon said. He also must write to a probation officer in Houston once a month, the judge said.

Assistant District Attorney Brad Beers, who prosecuted the drug cases, blasted the judge's decision.

"It's an absolute injustice. He now goes to Colorado with less supervision than he's ever had. He can literally do as he pleases," Beers said.

Robinson was arrested on a drug charge in October 1983, Beers said. While on bond, he was arrested on a second charge.

In January 1984, visiting State District Judge Frank Price sentenced Robinson to two 10-year probated terms. Six months later, State District Judge Dan Walton revoked the probation and sentenced Robinson to 10 years in prison, Beers said.

While appealing the sentence, he was arrested in January in Fort Bend County, south of Houston, on another drug charge. Chief Prosecutor Frank Follis said the charge was dismissed after Robinson agreed to forfeit a van.

NLRB to continue nursing home probe

BEAUMONT (AP) — The National Labor Relations Board says it has found sufficient evidence of unfair labor practices by a Beaumont nursing home and will continue its investigation.

But an attorney for the A.W. Schlesinger Geriatric Center said Friday he will fight the board's decision.

Service Employees International Union Local 706 struck against the center July 1 after rejecting management's contract offer to decrease wages and benefits. The workers then filed complaints against the center alleging unfair labor practices.

Louis Balvodine, director of the NLRB in Houston, declined to discuss the allegations but said he has asked the NLRB office in Washington to schedule a possible hearing within the next several weeks.

Mike Reynolds, NLRB assistant director, said the complaint means the case has enough merit for the board to continue investigating charges made by the union.

Balvodine said he considers the strike that began July 1 an "unfair labor strike" because of the Schlesinger Center's bargaining practices.

An unfair labor strike refers to workers walking off the job because of management practices, not because of economic conditions such as salaries.

In the event of an unfair labor strike, management must allow striking employees to return to work if the workers wish or, if the strikers win their case, the employer must pay back wages.

The Schlesinger Center ended negotiations with the nursing home about three weeks ago after learning of a decertification petition filed with the NLRB that could force an election to disband the union.

Schlesinger officials say negotiations before the petition is resolved could be illegal.

Exxon cashiers' scam uncovered

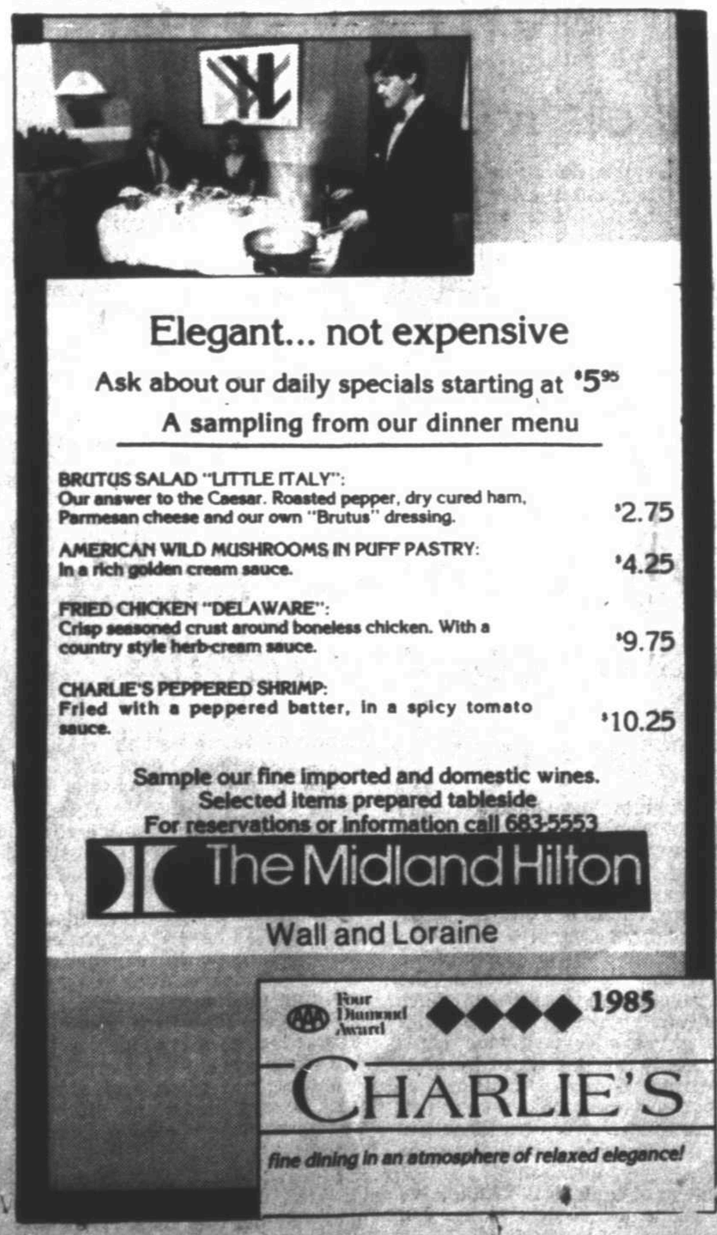

HOUSTON (AP) — Eight cashiers at Exxon service stations in Houston have been accused of using customers' credit cards to steal at least $48,000 in cash in a two-month period, police said.

The employees allegedly rang up false purchases, took the money from the cash register and left credit card receipts for the same amount, said police Sgt. Joe Salvato.

One of 12 customers whose cards were used was billed for about $10,000, Salvato said.

The suspects used credits cards accidentally left by customers or told the customers that their cards were being confiscated for non-payment of bills, he said.

Six suspects were arrested Friday, and two others were being sought, Salvato said. All have been charged with credit card abuse, he said.

Celebrity service sniffs out notables in Washington

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Beware, all notables traveling to Washington: Celebrity Service International has come to town and will be watching your every move in the capital city.

"It's a tracking system for notable people, and we serve as a clearinghouse," said Donna Schor, head of marketing for the service's recently opened Washington office.

"Lobbyists, for instance, will be able to use our service as a way of staying on top of who is coming to town instead of reading about it in the paper after they've gone," she explained. "If Lee Iacocca is in Washington, you want to know about it. You want to know how to contact him, what he is doing, where he is staying."

These days, the word "celebrity" denotes the political and corporate newsmaker as well as actors, artists, writers, sports figures, social leaders and rock stars. Their Washington itineraries, from congressional hearings and Kennedy Center performances to White House parties and charity balls, will be chronicled in a daily Washington Bulletin available to subscribers for a fee.

Vicki Bagley, a Washington real estate executive, recently bought controlling interest in the New York-based Celebrity Service, which was founded 48 years ago by Earl Blackwell by virtue of his connections to the social and theatrical worlds of New York and Hollywood. He will remain as chairman of the board.

"Celebrity is not only about glamour but power, and Washington is where you find the power groups," Bagley said in explaining why she felt a Washington presence was important for her newly acquired company. Bagley was formerly married to Smith W. Bagley, a Reynolds Tobacco heir with ties to the Carter administration, and she has lived here since the early days of that administration.

"Since we were already dealing with so many political people and had so many calls about political figures, it made sense to broaden our base in Washington," she said. "Political figures are endorsing things now and a lot of our clients use newsmakers for interviews or ads."

The company has a Los Angeles office as well as offices in Rome and Paris.

Lebanese cease-fire continues shakily

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christian chieftains refused to allow Syrian army observers into their strongholds to monitor a fragile Christian-Moslem truce Saturday, a day on which both sides kidnapped hapless civilian motorists trying to cross Beirut's dividing Green Line.

The cease-fire, which began Thursday, was violated early Saturday by a three-hour artillery, tank fire and rocket battle between Christian and Moslem forces in hills overlooking the capital. No casualties were reported.

Police said all the kidnap victims, who included both pedestrians and people in cars, were released hours later in a swap. But the Christian Voice of Free Lebanon radio said 12 Christians still are missing.

The total number of people abducted Saturday was not known.

The kidnappings, a regular occurrence when sectarian passions run high, prompted the army to close the last gateway still open across the Green Line, which separates the city's Christian and Moslem sectors.

A security committee representing the main Christian and Moslem factions and the army met Saturday for the third straight day.

But it failed to come up with a workable plan to position Syrian observers on both sides of the Green Line to monitor the truce, because Christians oppose allowing them inside their bastions.

Saeed Dawi, the Druse militia official on the committee, read a statement saying all factions want the cease-fire to stick.

But he made no mention of any progress toward agreement on deploying the Syrian observers. Sources close to the committee say the Christians want the observers stationed only along the Green Line, while the Moslems insist they be allowed deep inside both mostly Moslem west Beirut and Christian east Beirut.

Lebanon's Christians generally are against the pro-Soviet Syrians, who mainly back the Moslems in Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

Dawi said the committee will meet again after political leaders settle the issue. He did not elaborate.

The battles, a brief shelling of Christian areas, and the tit-for-tat gunpoint kidnappings underlined the lingering tension in Beirut despite the truce.

The cease-fire called Thursday by the security committee was endorsed by Lebanon's divided government and was backed by the Syrians. It was meant to end 12 days of indiscriminate shelling by both sides, in which police said 320 people, mainly civilians, were killed and 1,100 wounded.

Saturday's predawn artillery and rocket battles pitted Christian units of the army and the Lebanese Forces, the Christians' main militia, against Druse fighters around the war-battered mountain village of Souk el-Gharb overlooking the capital.

Police said gunners of the Shiite Moslem Amal militia later shelled townships on the coastal highway in the Christian heartland north of Beirut. Police had no word of casualties.

The Christian-controlled Central News Agency said "endless convoys" carrying ammunition from Syria were pouring into Amal positions in the central mountains. Much of the shelling of Christian areas has come from this sector.

Both sides fired tens of thousands of artillery shells and rockets during the recent fighting and apparently are replenishing their stockpiles.

As militias began grabbing motorists making the risky journey across the sniper-plagued Green Line, troops on both sides of the 3-mile demarcation line closed the Kaskas crossing, the only gateway still open.

Christian troops fired into the air to disperse about 300 cars and trucks lined bumper-to-bumper on the crossing.

South African funerals become political

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Funerals for blacks killed in South Africa's township violence have increasingly become political events in addition to being occasions for personal grief. Lately, the speakers have added a new theme. They denounce the United States almost as fervently as the white-minority government in Pretoria.

The violence and political turmoil in which at least 11 more blacks died last week have ensnared the Reagan administration in a conflict that many of its officials view with scant hope of early or peaceful resolution.

At least 625 blacks have been killed in the townships in the last year and scores of political activists have been detained. On Friday, mothers looked on in alarm as the police held for a brief time 800 schoolchildren who were arrested in a government effort to break a school boycott in Soweto.

The president and his policymakers have been assailed at home, notably in Congress, as well as in the black townships surrounding Johannesburg and in the eastern Cape.

Despite the criticism, the administration last week was still holding firm to its "constructive engagement" policy. President Reagan has opposed calls for economic sanctions. He has tried to maintain close relations with South Africa, believing this is the most effective way to encourage the dismantling of apartheid.

There were signs, however, that the White House was finding it a strain to hold to this course. Robert C. McFarlane, the president's national security adviser, acknowledged that he was disappointed when President P.W. Botha did not announce wide-ranging changes in apartheid in his much-anticipated speech several days ago. The clear suggestion was that the administration felt it had been misled by South African officials who briefed McFarlane before the speech.

Botha's adamancy was the latest indicator of the murky prospects for accommodation between South Africa's ruling whites, many of whom feel they are implementing changes at an admirable pace, and blacks, for whom Botha's limited offers seem too little and too late. State Department officials said they were sensitive, if not sympathetic, to the dilemma of Botha, who is under constant pressure from ultra-conservatives on his right.

But Reagan's critics jumped on one White House statement last week which, they contended, showed the administration as lacking in understanding of the sensibilities of South African blacks. The statement was a criticism of Bishop Desmond M. Tutu, South Africa's leading black cleric and 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner, for refusing to join a delegation of church leaders who met with Botha. Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, did not mention Bishop Tutu by name but lamented the refusal to participate in the meeting. Bishop Tutu, who is widely admired in the United States, had said he regarded the meeting as unlikely to be fruitful, adding that he had a sense of foreboding about South Africa's future.

The same day that Botha met the South African churchmen, he also received the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the head of Moral Majority. Falwell, who was completing a five-day visit to the country, said Christians should support South Africa as a country making progress in dealing with its problems and as a friend of the West. Tutu, Falwell contended, is "a phony" who does not represent South African blacks. Falwell later said he regretted using the word "phony." A longstanding supporter of Reagan, Falwell announced he would begin "a reverse campaign" to counter growing calls for American sanctions. He said he would urge Americans to buy South African Krugerrand gold coins and would show on television what he called the "untold story" of what is good about South Africa.

Falwell's embrace of the Botha government was widely denounced — the Baptist church in South Africa called him arrogant and ignorant — but it served to highlight a deep division on the issue among American conservatives. Conservatives have rallied to South Africa as a reliable ally and bulwark against communism on the African continent. But in recent months, many conservative Republicans in Congress have become important supporters of a bill that would impose moderate economic sanctions on Pretoria. The measure has been passed by the House, and final approval by the Senate is expected next month.

Senior administration officials have suggested that Reagan may veto the sanctions measure while simultaneously implementing some of the bill's elements by executive order. This might satisfy some critics of apartheid and help the White House to fight off attempts in Congress to override the veto.

But whatever the outcome in Washington, the campaign to withdraw investments from South Africa was advancing. Gov. Thomas H. Kean of New Jersey announced last week that he would sign legislation to withdraw $2 billion in state investments from companies doing business in South Africa.

ARRESTS

The government declared outdoor marches illegal in 1976 after a year of black rioting.

Outside Durban, a band of 200 to 300 Zulus carrying spears, shields, clubs and machetes chased away black mourners from among the 8,000 who buried eight riot victims in Umlazi black township. Witnesses said other mourners were beaten.

Mass funerals were declared illegal by the government this year to ward against further violence caused by heightened emotions.

Witnesses said members of a Zulu battle regiment, chanting a war cry, marched toward the mourners, who were singing hymns outside Umlazi Cemetery.

The mourners dashed for buses and cars, but about 70 people were left behind in the rush. Zulus chased them and beat men and women, said one witness, Billy Padock, a reporter for The Durban Daily News. He saw seven or eight mourners with serious cuts and club wounds, he said.

Police and the army, who occupy most areas elsewhere in the township, were not in evidence, Paddock said.

An undetermined number of the people being buried died in fighting three weeks ago between bands of Zulus and blacks supporting the Democratic Front.

Some of the 6 million Zulus, South Africa's largest tribe, belong to a political movement called Inkatha which claims that Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, the hereditary head of the Zulus, is the true leader of South African blacks.

Many other blacks, including members of the Democratic Front, dismiss Buthelezi's influence.

In an address Saturday, Buthelezi told Inkatha youth in Ulundi, a Zulu town 125 miles north of Durban, that Mandela must be freed unconditionally.

But Buthelezi said the war of sabotage by Mandela's outlawed African National Congress guerrillas had not significantly helped blacks.

JAIL

Because people charged with anything over a class C misdemeanor (which includes public intoxication, disorderly conduct and petty theft) are "immediately processed and transferred to the county," the city jail has few long-term residents, Gideon said

Having a maximum capacity of 72 prisoners and relatively few regular clients allows the jail's proprietors to sign contracts with the U.S. Marshall's Office to house federal prisoners in transit. While overcrowding in the county jail costs the county money by forcing the Sheriff's Office to board prisoners elsewhere, the city jail actually runs in the black: the federal government paid about $261,000 to house federal prisoners there in 1984, and the jail's operating costs were only about $102,000.

That cost figure doesn't include employee salaries, but Gideon notes that most of the employees would be needed to run the jail even if there were no federal prisoners to take care of.

The jail is run by a sergeant, five officers and two civilian employees, and also employs two cooks, according to Police Maj. Sid Corley. And trusties from the regular jail population function as an auxiliary to help deal with the larger group of federal prisoners. Of the 35 prisoners housed in an average day, 20 or 25 are likely to be federal prisoners, Gideon said.

"It works out good," said Capt. Roger Meurer, who supervises the jail, of the trusty arrangement.

The city jail may be immune to the strictures of the state's jail commission, but housing federal prisoners subjects it to federal standards, and inspections are made every couple of months, Gideon said.

Deputy U.S. Marshall Gail Boggs of the Midland office referred all questions concerning his office's use of the city jail to U.S. Marshall Bill Jonas in San Antonio, who could not be reached for comment.

To help ease the county jail crunch, Gideon and Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter have worked out an agreement whereby some prisoners arrested by city police can be released on bond directly from the city jail instead of first being transferred to the county jail, Gideon said.

"It's saving us a great deal of time from having to transfer (prisoners) to their custody. It's an effort by both agencies to speed the process, and it helps Gary from the standpoint of congestion in his own jail facility."

It has been suggested that the city could further ease the county's jail dilemma by merging the two facilities in a new building. This would dilute the cost of building a new jail solely for the county's use, should one have to be built. Current plans call for renovating the jail, which occupies the fifth floor of the courthouse, but if the Jail Standards Commission doesn't approve the results, a new county jail may have to be built anyway.

City officials have reacted cooly to the idea of combining the jails, and Gideon points out that the current facility at 404 E. Texas Ave. is upstairs from the Police Department offices, "where all of our records are located."

"Our facility is located directly across the street from the court that we serve," he added. "It's not the Hilton, but it's clean, it's sanitary, it's secure, and the meals are tasty, and that's what we're trying to accomplish."

GETER

Geter hired an agent, Ron Bernstein, to negotiate with those interested in his story, and the deals were struck last fall, the agent said.

Bernstein said the television movie script has been under review for a few months by CBS officials, who will determine whether to approve production. He said he does not know when the network will make a decision.

The proposal for a book also is being distributed to publishing houses, Bernstein said.

Ed Sigel, one of Geter's attorneys who has seen the script, said it portrays his former client as an "idealistic fellow with an absolutely clean record who was unprepared for the ordeal."

Said Sigel, "The first part ends with disaster and the second ends with success."

The script portrays Wade as "a tough old bird," Sigel said.

Geter says he also is about to open a non-profit referral service to help other criminal suspects and inmates who may have been incarcerated unjustly.

As part of his effort to start the "Geter Justice for All Foundation," Geter said information relating to the criminal justice system is being compiled in a home computer of an E-Systems co-worker.

A letterhead for the foundation is expected to be sent to a printer within a week. He said he also is preparing to seek tax-exempt status as a nonprofit foundation.

He said the the foundation would pass along the names of attorneys, civil rights agencies, Justice Department officials and others who could aid people facing criminal charges. Plans also call for providing spiritual literature and, if the foundation can afford it later, investigative help.

"It's something I really must see to its end," he said.

Death of nursing home resident probed

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Texas Department of Health says it is investigating the death of a 40-year-old woman at a Fort Worth nursing home.

Investigators also are trying to determine whether two other residents at the Wedgewood Nursing Home died under "unusual circumstances," said Charlene Stowers, spokeswoman for the department's Division of Long Term Care.

The investigation was prompted by complaints by a former Wedgewood employee, she said.

The nursing home in southwest Fort Worth is owned by Beverly Enterprises, an Austin company that lists itself as the nation's largest nursing home chain with about 700 homes.

Linda Briggs, who suffered a head injury in a 1981 car accident that claimed the lives of her husband, her father and her infant daughter, died Aug. 7 at the nursing home. She had lived there for two years.

A preliminary autopsy indicated that Mrs. Briggs died of respiratory failure, said Bill Fabian, spokesman for the Tarrant County Medical Examiner's Office. A final report should be completed in about two weeks, Fabian said.

The deaths of two elderly residents — MacMillan Sinclair, who died in late July, and Katie Owens, who died in August — are also being investigated, state health officials said.

Fabian said autopsies were not requested in the deaths of Sinclair or Owens.

Health officials said death by respiratory failure is unusual, and nursing home administrators are required to report such deaths "within a reasonable time."

"Death of a resident under unusual circumstances should be reported immediately," Ms. Stowers said, adding that Mrs. Briggs' death was not reported to the department of health.

"The (state) investigator, to my understanding, did come in and cleared the facility," said Sharon Slippen, spokeswoman for Beverly Enterprises. "Those claims have not been substantiated."

But state officials said the investigation probably won't be complete until next week.

Ms. Stowers said she was surprised at the allegations of patient neglect because Wedgewood consistently receives superior inspection ratings from state investigators. The most recent state inspection of the home was July 11.

"According to our records, this is one of the best nursing homes in the state," Ms. Stowers said. "They have very few deficiencies according to our files. However, we will conduct a full investigation of the facility.

"Any allegation that involves the accidental death of a patient is reason to be alarmed. Even if the family decides not to pursue the wrongful death, we would like to investigate."

If the state finds that nursing home employees were negligent in a patient's death, a report will be filed with the Fort Worth Police Department and the Tarrant County District Attorney's Office, Stowers said.

Realtor may have bribed SMU recruit

DALLAS (AP) — Sources with access to NCAA documents identify Sherwood Blount, a Dallas realtor and sports agent, as the booster whose financial aid to a football recruit and his family figured prominently in the NCAA's censure last week of Southern Methodist University, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

The NCAA named no names in its 36-count indictment, which included sanctions against SMU's football program banning TV and bowl appearances and unprecedented scholarship cuts over the next three years.

The Times Herald reported Friday that its sources, who asked not to be identified, said the principal figure was Blount, who played football at SMU from 1969 to 1971.

Blount's dealings with the family of Sean Stopperich, a high school All-America offensive tackle from a Pittsburgh suburb, was the critical part of the NCAA case against SMU, the sources said.

Blount refused comment to The Associated Press when contacted on Aug. 16, the day the NCAA announced its probation of SMU.

He has refused to comment on his involvement with the Stopperich family. Blount was unavailable Friday for comment on the Times Herald story. A secretary at his Dallas office said he was on vacation and could not be reached.

Stopperich had announced on Jan. 26, 1984, that he would attend college at nearby Pitt, where his idol, tackle Bill Fralic, played, and his mother was so elated that she called the local newspaper to report the news, The Dallas Morning News reported.

"Stopperich Staying Home," read the banner headline in the morning newspaper.

However, Blount flew to Pittsburgh under an assumed name on Feb. 4, 1985 — the Sunday before the Wednesday national signing date — and visited the Stopperich family at a hotel near their Canonsburg, Pa., home, the Times Herald said, quoting the sources.

Blount gave the family "at least $5,000 in cash" in exchange for the athlete's signature on a post-dated letter of intent with SMU, the sources said.

At the same meeting, the NCAA determined, Blount promised to provide the athlete's father, Carl Stopperich, an unemployed steelworker, with help in finding a job in Dallas, the family a rent-free apartment near the job, and a $300 monthly cash allowance for Sean during his enrollment at SMU, the sources said.

The 6-4, 275-pound Stopperich, who injured a knee and withdrew from SMU without playing a down, transferred to Pittsburgh. He now is at Temple University, which offered him a scholarship although he won't be eligible until 1986.

SMU officials denied any knowledge of the cash payments, and SMU president L. Donald Shields described the alleged violations as "an incredible situation of arrogance and ego."

In an effort to mitigate the NCAA's punishment, SMU announced earlier this month that it had sent letters to certain, unidentified boosters banning them from involvement in recruiting and from the SMU fieldhouse or practice facilities.

Asked if he was one of the school's letters banning certain boosters, Blount told the Times Herald, "I'll tell you what I've told everybody else at the papers. When I get my personal mail at my house, what's in it is none of your business."

Blount recently began working as a sports agent with former SMU and New England Patriots head coach Ron Meyer and former SMU assistant Steve Endicott. Some of their clients are Jon Koncak, a first-round draft pick in the National Basketball Association; Carl Wright, another former SMU basketball player; and Craig James, a former SMU football player who is now with the Patriots.

A remaining point of contention between the NCAA and SMU is whether the booster acted alone or in concert with an SMU assistant coach — which the Times Herald said both its sources identified as Tony Marciano.

Avoiding puppy paperwork gets man arrested, fined

GARLAND (AP) — A Garland man was arrested and faces a $1,000 fine for failing to fill out paperwork for a puppy he adopted two years ago.

Glenn Lay was arrested Aug. 2 for allegedly failing to comply with a city ordinance requiring people who adopt pets to file a status report showing they have had the animals sterilized, vaccinated for rabies and registered within six months of adoption.

Lay said he never filed a report on Muppy, the puppy, because it died after being hit by a car shortly after he adopted it from the Garland Animal Shelter in 1983.

"It's been two years since I've had the dog, and how can I file a report on something I don't have anymore?" Lay asked.

Lay, who was arrested after being stopped on a traffic charge, spent three hours in the Garland City Jail before posting $131 bond. His trial is set for Aug. 29 in city court.

"My children really loved the dog, and they miss him," Lay said. "We didn't abuse him or anything like that. This is really silly."

Pat Fowler, director of Garland's environmental health department, said Lay was sent three warnings before his arrest.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Convenience stores employ more people than oil patch

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — In past years, Texas' economy and taxes have been buoyed by a sea of oil, but while that oil has been vanishing, the state isn't in danger of being stranded, Comptroller Bob Bullock believes.

"Just about every economist that you read about, who's diagnosing Texas' ills, attaches a great deal of significance to the oil and gas situation," Bullock notes. And, he adds, with reason:

"Texas always has been much of a two-industry state — oil and agriculture....But we're getting away from that."

Bullock points to the appropriations bill passed by this year's Legislature for the 1986-87 biennium as an indicator of the changes that are taking place.

For 25 years, the comptroller comments, taxes on oil have been the number two money raiser for Texas, with natural gas number three (with sales taxes in first place).

For the new biennium, however, oil has dropped to sixth place.

"We will draw more off motor fuel taxes, franchise taxes and sales and gas taxes," Bullock says.

That, he says, indicates that Texas' economy is stronger than many people believe.

"Our economy hasn't collapsed without a strong oil and gas business," Bullock says, although it has suffered. "We've got more people working in convenience stores in Texas now than we've got working in the oil patch."

Manufacturing and service industries are likely to continue in importance, Bullock says, but he disagrees that high-tech jobs will replace the oil and gas industry in Texas.

"I don't believe that," he says — although he expects that "we will get our share" of high-tech industries.

About six per cent of Texas jobs now are associated with high-tech industry, Bullock says, but those jobs aren't likely to have the sort of impact that the oil industry has had.

For every job in the oil industry, there have been four related jobs, he says — and that's why the slowdown in the oil industry had such an effect in Texas.

Since 1981, Texas lost 58,000 oil industry jobs, meaning some 200,000 to 250,000 job in all were lost.

"Now that's really tough."

But, Bullock says, Texas' economy hasn't been destroyed. He and his economic experts are expecting slow but steady improvement.

"As far as the economy is concerned, we're not alarmed at it," Bullock says. "It's still a tiny bit below — less than one per cent — of the national average.

"The rate of unemployment is of concern, but considering the border area, which has some of the highest rates of unemployment in the nation, it's really pretty good.

Texas, he says, "has really got five economies....That's what makes us strong, that diversity."

Eighteen months ago, he says, Houston was "putting up a skyscraper a day," while Lubbock and Amarillo wre having problems because fo the drought and farm conditions.

Lubbock and Amarillo now are "up a bit," while the Gulf Coast area "is weak because of the oil and gas situation."

And, Bullock adds, Dallas' economic problems seem to have turned around, while Austin and San Antonio are doing well.

"I think we can expect a very mild improvement in the (Texas) economy. It will not be rapid, but it will be smooth and it will be steady, even though the oil and gas situation is not good."

The Comptroller's Office has not allowed for a $2 per barrel drop in the price of oil in calculating how much will be brought in by oil taxes during the next two years — and Bullock says that "barring anything unforeseen," Texas' $32 billion budget will be funded as planned.

While the oil industry has declined, the state has "managed to keep the doors open" — and "our priorities have not changed" as far as spending requirements, he says.

About 80 per cent of the state's budget will be going for edcuation, highways and human services — about the same as it has for the last 25 years, Bullock comments.

And while the decline of the oil industry has brought problems, those problems are being death with, he says, and he thinks that needs to be pointed out.

Texas has enjoyed boom times before and will again, despite its current difficulties, Bullock says.

"It hasn't broken us, and it hasn't bent us, and it hasn't bowed us," Bullock concludes — and he doesn't expect that to change.

Mauro's ads may violate constitution

WACO, Texas (AP) — The chairman of the Republican Party in McLennan County says Land Commissioner Garry Mauro's use of his name and picture in advertisments promoting the veterans land program may be a violation of the state constitution.

Craig Reid told the Waco Tribune-Herald he had relayed his protest to the state GOP headquarters in Austin.

But a spokesman for Mauro, a Democrat seeking re-election, says no laws have been broken because no state money has been used in putting up the signs along highways and other advertising.

Reid said he took the action after Rep. M.A. Taylor, R-Waco, pointed out a section of the Texas Constitution that says advertisements about the benefits of Texas may not include either the name or the picture of any living state official.

The billboards have a large color photograph of Mauro with his name and the words: "Texas Veterans Program: the best in the USA." The largest lettering on the sign is the telephone number: 1-800-252-VETS.

Robert Mead, Mauro's executive assistant, said Mauro had been aware of the constitutional provision. However, Mead said, no state money has been used for the billboards or similar advertising.

The billboards have a large color photograph of Mauro with his name and the words: "Texas Veterans Program: the best in the USA." The largest lettering on the sign is the telephone number: 1-800-252-VETS.

"We believe there may be something to this on the legality side and if there is not anything actually legally impacting on this, it is certainly the ethical intent of Legislature to prevent current office holders from kusing their office as a campaign tool, when the message is to educate," Reid said.

Reid said if Mauro's billboards are allowed to stand, other incumbent Democrats may be posting "informative" advertisement along the highways.

Mauro was elected in 1982 on a platform that included expanding the veterans land program to allow the purchase of homes as well as land.

A spokesman in Mauro's office said there are 280 of the billboards in Texas, with signboard companies volunteering the space and labor for the signs.

Mead said Mauro's campaign fund paid about $8,500 to have the billboards printed.

STATE IN BRIEF

Church boots sororities

AUSTIN (AP) — Predominantly white sororities at the University of Texas will have to move rush activities from a campus-area church because the groups haven't signed a university non-discrimination statement, church officials say.

The Rev. Bob Breihan, associate pastor of University United Methodist Church, said the church decided to bar the sororities because their refusal to sign the non-discrimination statement appeared inconsistent with church policy.

The issue arose when sororities and other off-campus groups were told last autumn by the Texas Student Publications Board that they must become official campus organizations to buy pages for group photographs in the Cactus yearbook.

Registering with the dean of students as an official campus group requires signing a statement that membership policies aren't discriminatory.

Evelyn Bennett, director of the Panhellenic Council, said the sororities voted in January not to accept the new requirement of the publications board.

Oil creeps onto beaches

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Fishermen in the Gulf have sighted more oil moving toward the Texas coast as crews finish cleaning up almost 1,100 tons of oil-stained sand after a slick struck shore last weekend.

N.R. Johnston and Steve Qualia, local sport fishermen, said Friday they saw a five-mile long, ¾-mile wide slick of oil 35 miles east of the Port Aransas jetties.

They spotted the slick Thursday afternoon while on a fishing trip, they told authorities.

State highway crews Thursday finished cleaning up oil-stained sand after oil struck portions of Mustang and Padre islands last weekend.

Trailer residents thirsty

ROYSE CITY (AP) — Residents of a trailer park outside this town 35 miles northeast of Dallas met Friday with officials of Blackland Water Corp. to see what could be done to get water to them for the first time in more than two weeks.

"I'm made. If my trailer caught on fire, I couldn't put it out," said Floyd Lee, one of the residents.

Blackland, a private company located here, buys water from the city of Rockwall and sells it to about 850 residents of unincorporated areas in Rockwall County.

But Rockwall City Manager Bill Eisen said demand in the incorporated areas served by the company has exceeded the capability of water lines and storage tanks used to supply water to the area.

Adult movies removed

ARLINGTON (AP) — The manager of an Arlington video store has pulled adult movies off his shelves after he was visited by police who warned that he might be violating the state's obscenity laws.

Don Smerlis Jr., manager of Video Station, said he took more than 200 adult tapes out of circulation Friday after police visited him and gave him a copy of state laws pertaining to obscene material.

Smerlis told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, "They dropped off a copy of the statute and said this was going to be an ongoing investigation."

"I pulled them temporarily while we study our options," Smerlis said.

Oil import fee wanted

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Saying they want to protect national security, executive members of the the nation's largest state group of independent oil producers Saturday unanimously endorsed an oil import fee.

The fee would not only ease growing U.S. dependence on foreign oil but would also bolster the sagging domestic market, Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association officials said.

MTV spotlights Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — MTV, the cable television music channel, will focus on Austin this weekend in a program called, "The Cutting Edge."

The Austin segment of the show, which is co-sponsored by the MTV network and IRS Records, was filmed in July and will feature more than a dozen bands plus scattered shots of the city.

Included in the program, scheduled to air tonight, are shots of bands that include Doctor's Mob, Brave Combo, Dino Lee and the White Trash Revue, Zeigeist.

Shuttle launch scrubbed by thunderstorms reset for today

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launch of space shuttle Discovery was scrubbed Saturday by a thunderstorm that lingered just long enough to cause a one-day postponement.

A new attempt to launch the ship and its crew of five on a satellite delivery-and-rescue mission was to be today at 7:57 a.m. EDT.

Storm clouds began building as Saturday's countdown reached the final scheduled "hold" at the 9-minutes-to-liftoff mark.

"We are taking a close look at thunderstorms in the vicinity of the landing facility," said Launch Control's Hugh Harris. Moments later, clouds closed in, thunder rolled over Cape Canaveral, and the clock ticked toward the end of the 34-minute "window" in which the shuttle could leave.

Launch director Bob Sieck allowed the count to continue to the 5-minute mark, hoping for a last-minute change, then ordered the scrub.

Within minutes, the sky again was a brilliant blue.

"The weather was simply unpredictable this morning and nobody wanted to take a chance," Harris said. "There were little rainshowers springing up out of nothing."

Officials worried not only about the shuttle climbing through rain and lightning, but also the visibility from the air of the Kennedy Space Center runway in case the shuttle had to make an emergency landing in the early minutes of flight.

Rain could damage the shuttle's fragile tiles and lightning could zap its computers and guidance systems.

In early afternoon, lightning struck a main transformer that feeds the northern half of the space center, including the launch control room and its many computers and the launch pad 3½ miles a way.

Lights were out in many areas of the Cape for up to 20 minutes, but NASA spokesman Dick Young said there was only a momentary outage in the launch control room and on the pad. Both have emergency power, but it was not needed.

Young said the shuttle, which was being drained of fuel at the time, lost internal power but that was picked up immediately by fuel cells that provide electricity while the ship is in orbit.

For a brief period, it appeared the liftoff might be delayed slightly because a freighter had to be chased from the restricted area near the launch pad. The problem was mooted by the storm clouds.

Meteorologists had predicted good weather for Saturday. For today, they forecast thunderclouds and rainshowers in the vicinity and offshore.

Only six of the 19 previous shuttle missions have been launched when they were supposed to; four of the delays caused by weather. Officials waited out rain in April and launched with 55-seconds to spare.

The launch window is determined by several factors, including the time that three communications satellites are to be deployed by the astronauts and by the position of the disabled satellite they will try to rescue.

The five astronauts had been in the shuttle cabin for more than two hours when the countdown was halted. They were given a free afternoon and time was set aside in the evening so that commander Joe Engle and pilot Richard Covey could practice emergency landings.

The other crew members are mission specialists James van Hoften, William Fisher and John M. Lounge.

On the first day of 8-day flight, the astronauts will launch a satellite for American Satellite Co. On succeeding days they will deploy satellites for the Australian government and Hughes Communications Services.

After the cargo bay is empty, the shuttle will close in on a satellite called Syncom, which failed to activate after it was launched by a shuttle crew in April. Two astronauts will make a six-hour space walk to rewire the satellite so it will respond to commands from the ground.

Officials fear Night Stalker search stalled

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A killer dubbed the "Night Stalker" who terrorizes suburban homes at night has been linked to 14 murders from Los Angeles to San Francisco, but officials fear the search for the man may have been hampered by the release of too much information.

Dental records that may be those of the gap-toothed killer have been sent to more than 3,000 dentists and a reward has grown to $35,000. Police would not comment Saturday on reports that the killer scrawled messages on the walls of victims' homes.

"We have definitely tied 14 murders to this individual and possibly as many as 33 individual cases in L.A. County and the case in San Francisco," Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block said at a hastily called news conference late Friday.

Previously, police had blamed the attacker for seven murders and 27 attacks, including rapes, beatings and kidnappings, most in the San Fernando and San Gabriel valley areas of Southern California. The first assault was reported Feb. 8 and the first slaying March 17.

Block criticized San Francisco Mayor Dianne Feinstein for telling reporters that last weekend's murder of San Francisco resident Peter Pan, 66, and the attempted murder of his wife Barbara, 64, had been linked to the "Night Stalker" through ballistics tests.

Ms. Feinstein revealed the results of ballistics tests Friday as she announced that she was adding $10,000 to a reward fund for information leading to the capture of the attacker. The fund now stands at $35,010.

She declined to elaborate on the caliber of the murder gun or any other details.

"There goes the gun into the bay," the San Francisco Chronicle quoted one unidentified police officer as saying after Ms. Feinstein's comments.

"I'm telling you that information (released to the media) has significantly jeopardized the investigation that is under way," Block said at his news conference in Los Angeles. "It places this community in jeopardy because it impedes our ability to go forward with the investigation."

Investigators are worried that the killer may change his methods because of the details that have been released, setting investigators back, Sheriff's Deputy Bob Stoneman said Saturday.

A police official said the killer left behind some physical evidence in the Pans' residence and in homes of some of the Los Angeles-area victims, according to the Los Angeles Times. The evidence found in a majority of the cases is so distinctive that it will allow investigators to rule out copy cats, the newspaper said.

Stoneman said he had no information about such evidence. He also refused any comments on reports about writing on the walls of some victims homes.

Block also declined to confirm reports that the killer scrawled a message on the wall of the Pans' Lake Merced-area residence and in the home of at least one Los Angeles-area victim.

However, he confirmed that the Southern California "Night Stalker" task force headed by his department has sent copies of what they believe to be the killer's dental records to more than 3,000 dentists in the Los Angeles area.

Although he criticized release of the dental information as the most damaging to the case, Block explained that the records were obtained from a dentist whose card was found in a car believed stolen by the "Night Stalker."

The dentist said he had treated a man matching the description, but the man had paid cash and given a phony name and address, the sheriff said.

Survivors of the killer's attacks have described him as having curly black hair and badly stained and gapped teeth.

Police throughout the state warned residents to take precautions against the killer, who typically enters his victims' homes at night through an unlocked door or window.

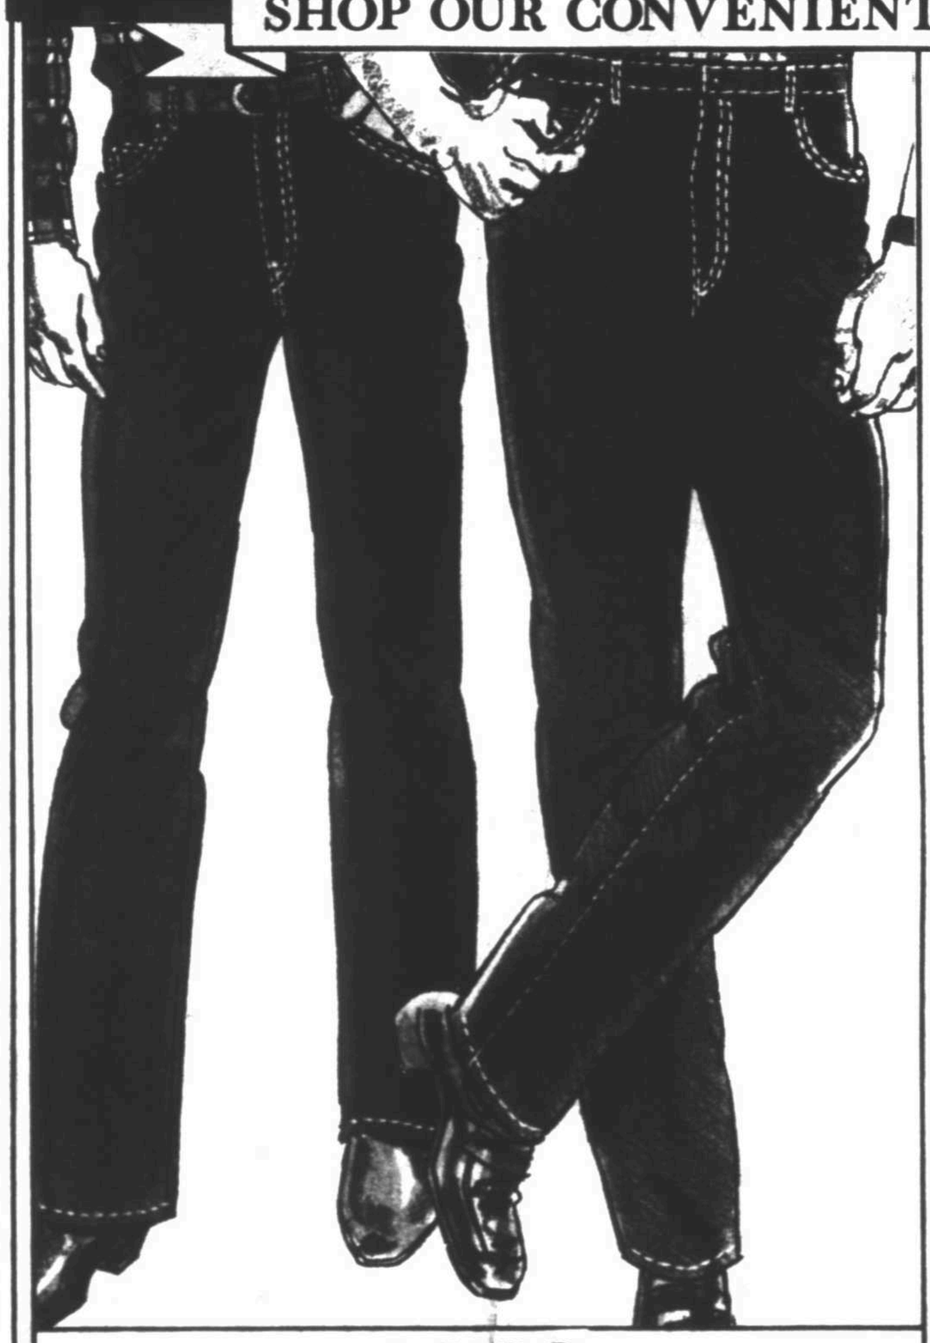

"We have no evidence to indicate where he might be," Block said. "We believe this individual will continue until he is stopped."

Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961

The Bay of Pigs invasion, an attempt by anti-Communist volunteers to overthrow the government of Fidel Castro, took place April 17, 1961. Early reports were optimistic, but survivors of the force of 1,200 men were defeated by Castro and surrendered within a few days.

NATION IN BRIEF

Plane crashes into peak

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A twin-engine plane plunged into a mountainside and burst into flames, killing all five people on board, authorities said Saturday.

The Piper Cheyenne II, which had left Louisville, Ky., smashed into Pinnacle Mountain, in western North Carolina, late Friday, said Roger Myers of the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta.

Residents reported seeing a "low-flying airplane and then a ball of fire," said Myers. The wreckage, with the pilot and four passengers dead, was found shortly after midnight, Myers said.

Reagan back in saddle

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan rode a horse Saturday for the first time since he underwent major abdominal surgery for colon cancer on July 13.

White House spokesman Albert Brashear confirmed that the president saddled up but refused to say how long the president rode or where he went on his 688-acre mountain-top ranch where he is vacationing.

"He went riding. I'm not going to say any more about it," Brashear said.

The White House released a photograph showing Reagan mounted on the horse, named "Elusive Hobby." The president, whose doctors cautioned him to cut down on exposure to sunlight after a patch of skin cancer was removed from his nose, was wearing western garb and a baseball cap.

Whitworth's bail raised

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Friends and relatives of a former Navy radioman charged with selling military secrets to the Soviets have offered to put up $250,000 in property and cash as bail.

The offers were outlined in documents submitted Friday to U.S. District Judge John Vukasin, who will decide Sept. 5 whether Jerry A. Whitworth, 46, of Davis, should be released on bail.

Whitworth has been held without bail since his arrest in June. He is accused of participating in a spy ring led by John A. Walker Jr., 47, who is awaiting trial. Walker's son, Michael, 22, also awaits trial; his brother, Arthur, recently was convicted of seven counts of espionage.

Whitworth has pleaded innocent to a dozen charges of espionage and tax fraud, and could face life in prison if convicted at his trial, which is set for November.

Lie detectors pushed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The judge who presided over John De Lorean's cocaine trial said Saturday he believes lie-detector evidence should play a larger role in criminal cases.

U.S. District Judge Robert M. Takasugi also said he might have admitted into evidence a lie-detector test that showed De Lorean was truthful in denying the drug charges, if the automaker's lawyers had more effectively contested government criticism of the test.

Takasugi joined De Lorean's defense attorney, Donald Re, and psychologist David C. Raskin, who administered the test, in a panel discussion of the case during the American Psychological Association's annual meeting.

"There should be more use of polygraphic evidence," said Takasugi, a former lie-detector examiner. "Polygraphic evidence presented by a person having the competence of Dr. Raskin could go far in terms if improving the quality of justice.

Gatorade contaminated

EMERYVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Urea was found in a lemon-lime bottle of Gatorade consumed by one of four people who reported falling ill after drinking the beverage, a state health official said Saturday.

Testing continued on other bottles, said Bill Ihle, a health department spokesman.

Urea is a highly soluble, crystalline solid found in urine and other body fluids or produced synthetically. It is commonly used in making plastics, fertilizer and adhesives.

None of those stricken was hospitalized.

Girl joins high school football team

ANNANDALE, N.J. (AP) — Elizabeth Balsley donned No. 18 Saturday and signed up for her high school football team after winning a court battle affirming the right of girls to try out for all-male teams. But the 15-year-old girl got a generally cool reception from the boys.

"I think it's really crazy. She should be judged as an individual. Her ability stops way before the football field. Her physical limitations are going to stop her," said 16-year-old Paul Ambrose, a junior wide receiver on the North Hunterdon Regional High School team.

"I think they're going to ignore me for a while," Miss Balsley, a junior, said of teammates. "I think eventually they'll accept me. I'm here. I'm going to stay here."

Miss Balsley said she was not bothered that the boys stuck to themselves Saturday, but she was annoyed with the cadre of photographers and reporters who hovered around her.

One exception among the boys was Jeff DeAngelis, 16, a sophomore fullback who stepped over to break the ice.

"I'd like to welcome you to the team. You've got guts. That's all I can say," DeAngelis said.

He said later of his action: "I guess if you're a football team, you've got to stick together."

In their first practice session, Miss Balsley and about 65 other team members were issued their gear before doing warm-up exercises, 50 pushups, two half-mile runs and two 40-yard dashes.

Miss Balsley pooped out after 37 pushups, fell far behind her teammates during the half-mile runs and had the slowest time during the 40-yard dashes.

But the football squad members, who will be assigned later to the varsity and junior varsity teams, applauded her as she crossed the finish line after the first half-mile run — 45 seconds over the maximum allowed time of two minutes and 45 seconds.

Nuclear-free zones dot the globe, defying major powers

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press

The decision by Pacific islanders to stake out half their ocean as "nuclear-free" brings a huge chunk of the Earth's surface into a spreading checkerboard of zones off-limits to nuclear activities.

The eight-nation South Pacific treaty, adopted Aug. 6, still allows U.S. and Soviet nuclear warships to transit the ocean. But by seeking in other ways to keep atomic weapons out of the area, the pact makes the South Seas the world's third major "no-nukes" region, joining Latin America and Antarctica.

The checkerboard encompasses many smaller zones, too, including more than 2,700 cities, towns and villages in the United States and around the world.

And now political pressure is mounting for drawing nuclear-free boundaries around two key areas on Europe's northern and southern flanks — the Nordic region and the Balkan peninsula.

The big powers have not been boxed in by the nuclear-free movement. They manage to steer their way through the checkerboard to deploy and test their nuclear weapons. But anti-nuclear activists say such zones help control the arms race.

"The more places we get to go nuclear-free, the fewer places the superpowers will have to play their superpower game," Albert Donnay, director of the Baltimore-based group Nuclear-Free America, said in a telephone interview.

The U.S. government takes no general position on nuclear-free zones.

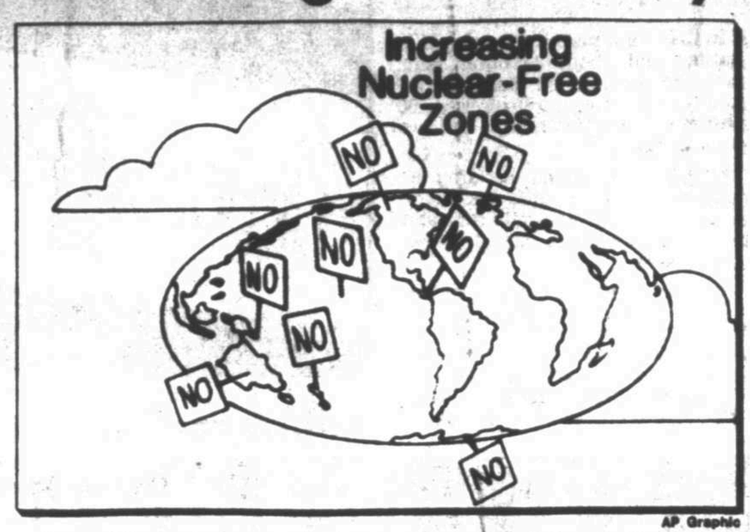

"We have to look at each one separately to judge whether it's a good one or a bad one," said spokesman Robert Shields of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

He noted, for example, that the United States subscribed to both the Antarctic and Latin American treaties.

But U.S. defense officials, speaking off the record, acknowledge that the campaign for nuclear-free areas poses a growing threat to what one called "our freedom of maneuver."

For one thing, Pentagon officials express concern that New Zealand's year-old ban on U.S. nuclear warships will boost anti-nuclear movements in Australia and Japan, important bases for U.S. military operations.

Over the past 26 years, since the 1959 Antarctic Treaty, much of the world has been covered by some kind of restriction on nuclear weapons.

AP Graphic

Some of the controls are sweeping. Under the 1968 Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, more than 100 nations are pledged not to acquire their own atomic arms. Other treaties ban placement of atomic weapons on the seabed and in orbit around the Earth, and bar nuclear tests in the atmosphere.

Other limitations apply to small areas.

Since Hawaii County, Hawaii, voted in 1981 to ban nuclear arms from its territory, 94 other U.S. counties, cities, towns and villages have adopted similar nuclear-free provisions. Around the world, such cities as London, Sydney, Australia, and Vancouver, British Columbia, have adopted "no-nuke" resolutions to try to end manufacturing or transport of weapons in their areas.

But many of these local bans are not legally binding. Nuclear-free zones established by treaty appear to be more effective.

The Antarctic Treaty outlaws nuclear weapons from the southernmost continent by declaring it a zone of peace. The Treaty of Tlatelolco of 1967 prohibits nuclear weapons in Latin America, although the superpowers do not recognize any prohibition on transit of weapons through the region.

The newest treaty, covering a 5,000-mile-long swath of the South Pacific, commits island nations not to possess atomic explosives, but lets individual governments decide whether to permit port visits by nuclear warships — a provision espoused by Australia and applauded by the United States.

The eight signatory nations — Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, Western Samoa and four smaller island countries — are sending delegations to Paris and Washington to ask the French and Americans to abide by the treaty terms.

France is expected to decline, in order to continue its underground nuclear tests in the island territory of French Polynesia. As for the United States, "there are a lot of questions," Shields told a reporter.

"For one thing, we've got a couple of American territories in that zone, American Samoa and Jarvis Island," he said. "There's a question of access" — that is, of the Pentagon's ability to freely deploy forces in the islands if the United States subscribes to the pact.

The anti-nuclear Greenpeace movement, which has campaigned hard for a nuclear-free Pacific, would prefer a treaty restricting transit of nuclear weapons, but "we think this one is an important first step," Eric Fersht, of Greenpeace's Washington office, said.

Now the activists are setting their sights on Europe.

The idea of nuclear-free zones in the Nordic region (Finland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark) and in the Balkans (Greece, Bulgaria, Romania and Yugoslavia) has been discussed for two decades.

Atomic weapons are not now based in the four Nordic countries, but Norway and Denmark, NATO members, do not rule out accepting U.S. "nukes" in wartime. In both countries, however, pressure has mounted for the center-right governments to renounce that option.

In Denmark, the opposition Social Democrats pushed through a parliamentary resolution last November calling for a nuclear-free Nordic zone.

Suit brought by Iowa church-run schools requests exemption from education laws

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Leaders of two fundamentalist churches are asking a federal judge to bar the state of Iowa from imposing its educational standards on their small, religion-based schools.

The issue is crucial, fundamentalists say, because public education is failing and they must teach their children as they wish, using large doses of the Bible and discipline. Parents of the children say they're willing to go to jail, if necessary.

The state, proud of its traditionally high literacy, argued during the first week of testimony in lawsuits brought by the churches that it must enforce its standards to guarantee that all Iowa children receive a sound education.

"Parents' rights are sacred in law, but they are not absolute," said Ivan Webber, a Keokuk lawyer defending the state. "That's why we have child abuse laws. That's why we have child labor laws."

But the church schools say schooling is part of their ministry, and argue that state regulation of their schools violates their constitutional protections of freedom of religion.

"We believe in civil government, but it can't interfere with the work of our ministry," testified the Rev. David Jaspers, pastor of Fellowship Baptist Church in Marshalltown and head of the 130-student Central Iowa Christian Academy.

Suits filed by the Marshalltown church school and the 64-student Keokuk Christian Academy challenge a state law requiring that private schools meet state standards and use state-certified teachers. Under the state's truancy laws, parents can be prosecuted for not sending their children to an approved school.

The state Department of Public Instruction says 77 of 230 private schools in Iowa are not state-approved.

The lawsuits were merged into one trial which is being heard by U.S. District Judge William C. Stuart.

Similar disputes have cropped up in Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota and other Midwestern states as fundamentalists say they want to challenge the basic underpinnings of public responsibility for educating children. They see education as simply another arm of the church, and don't want government intervening in how their children are taught.

Last May, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled in a similar case involving the Calvary Baptist Christian Academy in Charles City that the state had a clear right to regulate schools. Leaders of that school say they'll defy the high court and open Monday as scheduled.

"We cannot comply because of our faith," said the Rev. Randy Johnson, head of the Calvary Baptist Christian Academy. "To do so would be a denial of our faith."

Merle Fleming, an assistant state attorney general, accused fundamentalists of using the courts to delay enforcement of state law.

"They are using the same strategy as in Nebraska, which is litigating the same issues over and over," Ms. Fleming said. "They are using the legal system in an effort to manipulate the political system."

Spy-dust scandal 'embarrassed' administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former CIA director said Saturday the Reagan administration is trying deflect criticism of its own years of inaction by claiming the Soviets started using dangerous chemical dust to track Americans before Reagan took office.

"They are intimating that everybody's known about this for a long time, and I say baloney," said Stansfield Turner, director of the spy agency from 1977 to 1981 and a retired admiral.

"They feel they are subject to criticism for not having warned people about this earlier," he added.

The administration said last week the Soviets had been putting a chemical dust on U.S. citizens in the Soviet Union to track their movements since 1976, although only on a limited scale until 1982. The officials said the dust use was greatly increased recently and that, since it is considered a possible cancer-causing agent, present and former embassy employees were now being warned.

But Turner said he doubted the chemical was used before 1982, adding that officials were probably "embarrassed" they hadn't taken action more quickly after its use was detected.

"Despite taking an intense interest in the security of the embassy in Moscow, I never had any indication of Soviet dusting activity," Turner said. The existence or possibility of the tracking chemicals were known but "I was never informed that such chemicals were employed in Moscow or anywhere else," he said.

A State Department official said Turner may not have been told because the dusting was so uncommon then, but Turner didn't accept that assertion.

"I sincerely believe because of the strong interest I took, I surely would have been informed of it had it been known," he said. "I don't want any implication left that the Carter administration didn't do something about this."

Malcolm Toon, the U.S. ambassador to Moscow from 1975 to 1979, said he also was not made aware of the chemical agent. He said he would have warned embassy employees of any threat to their safety.

"If this had been discovered and I was not told...I am going to be terribly mad about this," Toon said.

Turner said the dust may have been spread on American officials by Soviet citizens who work in the U.S. embassy in Moscow — and he said the latest developments "reinforce the importance" of getting those people out of embassy jobs.

The State Department earlier this year fended off an effort in Congress to require the elimination of the Soviet employees from the embassy. But a department official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, confirmed Saturday that the administration was now considering asking Congress to replace many of the Soviets with Americans.

The Washington Post reported Saturday the administration was ready to propose to Congress an $18 million plan to replace half of the Soviets who work in the embassy.

'Campesinos' wait in vain for land promised by Mexican government

MEXICO CITY (AP) — In a program that grew out of Mexico's 1910-21 revolution, the government has distributed half the land area of the country to 2.8 million peasant families. But Porfirio Perez Bonilla still is waiting for his; so are hundreds of thousands of others.

The government maintains there isn't much land left to give them.

Perez Bonilla said he has been knocking on doors of government offices and campesino (peasant) organizations for 35 years, refusing to give up his dream of owning a piece of land.

"They gave us the pretext that our request has been shelved for lack of available land," said his companion, Jose Diaz Gutierrez, at the office of the Independent Campesino Confederation here in hopes of furthering their claims to the land the revolution said they could have.

"Land" was a cry of the revolution and the land distribution program that emerged from it was one of the world's most ambitious. Land or the hope for land has averted social unrest over the years.

But land takeovers when those hopes are frustrated and disputes even when they are fulfilled are still frequent causes of violence in the Mexican countryside. Land disputes in southern Mexico recently prompted small groups of campesinos to come to Mexico City to stage hunger strikes in the city's main plaza, the Zocolo.

While the government says there is little land left to give, campesino organizations argue that holdings larger than the legal limits remain and should be split up.

Under the legal limits, individuals may own a maximum of 100 hectares (247 acres) of irrigated land, 200 hectares (494 acres) of rain-fed land, or 400 hectares (988 acres) of dry grazing land — enough to support 500 head of cattle. For orchards and crops such as coffee, bananas and sugar cane, the limit is 300 hectares (741 acres).

Spreads larger than those are operating as single economic units, but they are registered in several names, a device used to get around the legal limitations and avoid government expropriation.

Campesino organizations estimate that more than 3 million landless farm laborers are constantly searching for work.

AP Laserphoto

Campesinos recently held a hunger strike in the Zocolo, Mexico City's main plaze, calling for better distribution of land.

A million and a half others who cannot live off their land join the job hunt part of the year, says Ramon Danzos Palomino, head of the Independent Center of Agricultural Workers and Campesinos. Many, he says, go to the United States.

"For many years the government has been saying that there is no more land to split up, that there are no large estates. That is because the law itself facilitates the existence or creation of large private landholdings," said the veteran activist, whose leadership of protests landed him in jail numerous times in the 1960s and 1970s.

Ruben Castillo Fregoso, technical secretary of President Miguel de la Madrid's agricultural cabinet, says agrarian reform is taking another direction.

AIDS threat growing in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The deadly disease AIDS, practically unheard of in Mexico two years ago, has prompted popular alarm and an explosion of publicity as the number of confirmed cases continues to grow.

Eight people have died in Mexico of acquired immune deficiency syndrome and there are 63 known victims listed by public hospitals, the federal Health Department said in a report this week. It said 22 of the cases were diagnosed from January through July of this year.

However, researchers say the isolation of the country's rural regions make it impossible to establish the actual number of AIDS victims and deaths.

This week a major Mexico City newspaper, El Universal, devoted two pages of its Sunday edition to the issue, illustrated on the front page by a picture of American actor and AIDS victim Rock Hudson.

Since then public dermatology clinics have been swamped by people worried that their skin ailments signal the onset of AIDS, said Dr. Romulo Bitar, a specialist at the Health Department's General Hospital of Mexico.

This week nearly every newspaper in the capital city published at least one article a day on the disease. Most are about AIDS itself, and the new attention among public health officials to screening blood donors.

Other stories reported on a 24-year-old woman in Tijuana who died of AIDS minutes after giving birth to a stillborn, premature baby. Doctors said she had been suffering from AIDS for five months, since receiving a blood transfusion at a Los Angeles hospital.

In Mexico City, a 36-year-old architect was found hanged in his room in the AIDS ward of the National Nutrition Institute hospital, where 16 victims were being treated. Much of Mexico's AIDS research is conducted at the center. Friends said the architect, who was hospitalized for the second time with the disease, had been depressed after receiving a poor diagnosis.

Last minutes of JAL Flight 123 tell of pilot's futile struggle

EDITOR'S NOTE: The crash of Boeing 747 on a Japanese flight on Aug. 12 was history's worst single-plane tragedy. This countdown to disaster tells of the struggle to save JAL Flight 123 in the last minutes of life for 520 people.

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press

TOKYO — At 6:25 p.m., Japan Air Lines Flight 123 was 12 minutes out of Tokyo's Haneda International Airport and had just reached its cruising altitude of 24,000 feet.

The 12 stewardesses were handing out puzzles, dolls and snap-together plastic models of the Boeing 747 to the children, and beverage service was about to begin.

First Officer Yutaka Sasaki, 39, an experienced co-pilot on international routes who was nearing the end of training for promotion, was acting as pilot.

Flying co-pilot was Capt. Masami Takahama, 49, a JAL pilot instructor with more than 12,400 hours. He was a specialist in the tricky art of controlling a plane with only engine power.

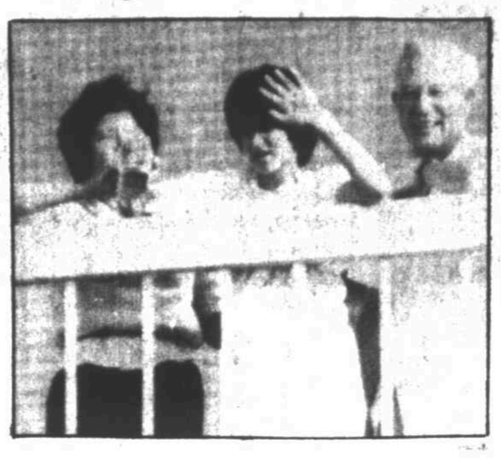

On this day, Aug. 12, the manifest listed 497 paid customers, 12 infants and a crew of 15. Despite the rush of the annual "o-bon" holiday, when millions of Japanese travel to attend family reunions and pay respects to ancestors, there were 31 empty seats.

At 6:24:41, JL123 radioed: "Reaching flight level 240 (24,000 feet)." It was the last routine message.

In the next 19 seconds, something happened. At 6:25:00, either Takahama or Sasaki pressed the button that sent a "7700 code," the equivalent of "mayday," that registered on radar screens at Tokyo Air Control Center.

"Trouble. Um...immediate request, turn back to Haneda. Descend and maintain 220 (22,000 feet)," JL123 radioed.

Transcripts released by Japan's Transport Ministry, which apparently are not complete, show the Air Control Center immediately told JL123 to "maintain magnetic heading 90 degrees," meaning directly east.

Keiko Kawakami, one of four survivors of the JAL crash, waves from a Takasaki, Japan, hospital with Dr. Etsuro Urano, hospital vice-director, right, and an unidentified person.

AP Laserphoto

In the main cabin, the passengers had heard a "bang." White mist formed by sudden loss of pressure filled the cabin as oxygen masks automatically dropped and a tape began giving instructions for their use.

It was the beginning of 32 minutes of terror, hope and a cockpit struggle to get the big plane under control — a struggle that ultimately failed on the forested slope of 5,406-foot Mount Osutaka, 70 miles northwest of Haneda.

The crash killed all but four of the 524 people aboard JL123, making it the worst single-plane accident in history.

According to the partial transcripts of radio and cockpit conversation, Takahama and Sasaki died apparently without knowing the nature of the "trouble" that doomed JL123.

Investigators have established that some undetermined force struck the plane's 35-foot vertical tail fin, causing it to disintegrate just before the plane reached the Izu coast.

In interviews, two senior JAL 747 pilots said the transcripts of air-ground radio communication and the cockpit voice recorder show nothing to indicate the crew was aware of the tail's destruction.

But there was a "sense of urgency" in Takahama's message, said Capt. Yoshio Iwao, JAL's chief 747 pilot, because "he didn't even ask for clearance" to change altitude.

Using the transcripts, Iwao reconstructed the next few minutes as follows:

Takahama and Sasaki saw warning lights go on as they suddenly began to lose the hydraulic pressure that powers the tail, ailerons and other control surfaces. At 18:26:44, the voice recorder carried Takahama's chilling words: "Hydro (hydraulics) all out."

"Takahama had everything happening to him at once — decompression, already a grave emergency, and all four hydraulics systems out," a situation for which no flight manual exists, Iwao said.

"In addition, he had chunks of tail fin missing, whether he knew it or not," he said. "It would be an overwhelming situation for any pilot. It was an abnormality of all abnormalities."

From then on, he said, Takahama was probably concentrating on stabilizing the plane. "It's like a fire," he said. "You put it out first and then start asking questions."

British Airways won't ground its fleet

LONDON (AP) — British Airways said Saturday its fleet of 30 Boeing 737s will keep flying while investigators try to find out why an engine on one of its 737s exploded during takeoff, killing 54 people.

The state-owned airline said a check of maintenance records had not turned up any engine problems relating to the accident on Thursday at Manchester airport in northwest England.

Of the 131 passengers and six crew aboard the 737, bound for Greece on a vacation flight, 83 survived.

British Airways owns British Airtours, which operated the Boeing 737 in Manchester.

Britain's Department of Transport dismissed as speculative reports that the Pratt & Whitney Group, which manufactures 737 jet engines, had traced the cause of the disaster.

The parent company of Pratt & Whitney, United Technologies Corp. of East Hartford, Conn., said the problem centered on the combustors, which ignite air and fuel in the engine's combustion chamber.

"Being such a technical matter, we'd much prefer to go into it very carefully rather than speculate on what it might or might not have been," said Noel Newstead, spokesman for the Department of Transport.

The department is heading the inquiry through its Accident Investigation Branch.

The branch said in a statement Friday it would call for the world fleet of more than 1,000 Boeing 737s to be grounded for inspection if anything in the early stages of the investigation pointed to structural faults.

Newstead said the branch's six-member team, aided by specialists from Boeing and Pratt & Whitney, would make an interim report "and we're not making any comments until that comes out." He did not indicate when that would be.

Pratt & Whitney said Friday night it messaged all airlines using engine types JT8D-1 to JT8D-15, "re-emphasizing earlier recommendations covering inspection and maintenance of the combustors."

A spokeswoman for British Airways said the message was "a very routine reminder" to maintenance engineers to follow the manufacturer's procedures.

The spokeswoman, insisting on anonymity, said the airline's 737s were undergoing normal maintenance as they returned from flights.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said Pratt & Whitney spokesman David Long refused to comment when asked in an interview if faulty maintenance was to blame for the engine exploding.

The twin-engine jetliner was speeding down the runway, filled with vacationers headed for the Greek island of Corfu, when the pilot reported trouble with the port engine. He aborted takeoff as fire engulfed the rear of the plane. Most of the 54 killed were trapped in the rear.

In a hangar at Manchester Airport, investigators worked Saturday to remove the left Pratt & Whitney JT8D-15 engine from the charred hulk of the jetliner.

The Accident Investigation Branch said Friday it could only confirm that the left engine failed and a fuel pipe ruptured.

Most popular engine now most probed engine

EAST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Pratt & Whitney Group's JT8D jet engine, "the most widely used engine in commercial aviation history," is now also one of the most scrutinized after several aircraft failures in the past several years.

Initial reports have indicated a JT8D engine exploded Thursday as a British Airtours Boeing 737 was taking off, rupturing fuel gear in the left wing and igniting escaping fuel. The fire killed 54 passengers.

But despite the recent bad publicity, the gas turbine engine also has a reputation for safety. More than 12,000 of the engines power planes such as the Boeing 737 and the McDonnell Douglas DC-9.

"There's no question that it has an extremely high reliability record that's acknowledged throughout the industry," company spokesman David Long said Saturday.

Earlier this year, Air Transport World Magazine, a trade publication, gave Pratt & Whitney its "Technical Achievement Award" for "excellence over a long period of time." The magazine called the engine's reliability "astounding."

"Inflight shutdown rate is currently one per 70,000 flight hours, or for some transports, about one for 25 years of service," the magazine reported.

But Long conceded "nobody can build anything perfect."

"You have to look at everything in its perspective," he said. "Thousands of planes are transporting millions of people and incidents do occur from time to time. There are periods when there may be a rash of them, but the safety record of flight makes it still one of the safest ways to travel."

Complications with Pratt & Whitney engines in the past several years have been linked to incidents ranging from Thursday's explosion and fire to a March 1984 fire that destroyed a Pacific Western Airlines plane.

On Friday, a Japan Air Lines DC-10 powered by P&W's JT9D-59 model engine caught fire before takeoff, but none of the 271 passengers and crew were injured. Long said he could not speculate on what may have caused that fire.

The JT8D provides between 14,000 and 16,000 pounds of thrust, Long said.

West Germans examine reasons spy defected to communist cause

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Security officials met in emergency session Saturday to assess the damage wrought upon their system by the defection to Communist East Germany of one of West Germany's highest placed counter-spies.

One great concern was for Bonn's spies abroad, put in danger of exposure.

"The main thrust of the meeting was, 'How could this have happened,'" said Michael-Andreas Butz, spokesman for the Interior Ministry.

The Bonn Panorama newspaper said intelligence officials fear the defector, Hans Joachim Tiedge, 48, may have handed the East Germans a list of 160 West German agents operating undercover in the Soviet bloc.

"Intelligence officials fear a wave of arrests of Western agents in East Germany in the near future," the newspaper said.

Tiedge headed a department responsible for fighting East German spy efforts.

Butz said Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann and several ranking security experts spent more than five hours reviewing the defection and Tiedge's knowledge of West German security operations.

"Primarily, they are attempting to assess the extent of the damage done," Butz said, but declined to give details.

He said Zimmermann broke off a vacation and returned to Bonn late Friday to attend the meeting.

Ministry sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said officials remained stunned by the report Friday from East Germany's ADN news agency that Tiedge had fled to East Berlin and asked for political asylum.

West German television, calling the spy scandal "the worst in the history of the republic," said Bonn officials were unaware of Tiedge's defection until the ADN report.

Interior Ministry officials said Tiedge had worked in West German intelligence for 19 years and held a "sensitive position" within the Constitutional Protection Office, which handles counter-espionage.

West German officials have said they have to assume Tiedge could give wide-ranging information to the East Germans.

U.S. and other Western security experts are trying to determine if the defection was also damaging to their interests.

Bonn officials declined to comment on reports in several West German newspapers that West Germany was trying to recall its undercover agents in East Gemany out of fear Tiedge would expose them.

The Constitutional Protection Office has halted all operations until it can be determined exactly what Tiedge knows and can pass on, according to a government source, who spoke on condition of not being named.

West German news media meanwhile reported that Tiedge had suffered from a drinking problem, financial difficulties and depression after the death of his wife three years ago.

"The question is how someone with such pressing personal problems could have held such a sensitive job," West Germany's ZDF television network said in a commentary.

Hans Neusel, Interior Ministry undersecretary, told reporters authorities knew Tiedge had personal problems but judged him fit enough to carry out his job.

Chilean army clashes with Carabineros, elite squad serving President Pinochet

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The Carabineros, a 35,000-man police force that shields President Augusto Pinochet from popular unrest, has suddenly become a source of trouble inside his military government.

During periodic anti-Pinochet protests, Carabinero riot squads — large men with olive green uniforms, helmets, tear gas and automatic rifles — are the busiest and most visible figures of the regime. Two years of clashes have resulted in the deaths of 19 Carabineros and 65 civilians.

Less visibly over the past year, Carabineros in civilian clothes have seized dissidents to extract political intelligence, a job long monopolized by the army that Pinochet commands.

The result of the Carabineros' activity was an army-police conflict that broke into the open this month after a civilian prosecuting judge implicated 14 Carabineros in the killing of three abducted Communists. The judge said "valuable evidence" came from the National Information Center, an army-run intelligence network.

Pinochet quickly dismissed the police chief, Cesar Mendoza, from both the force and the four-man military junta on Aug 2. In negotiations, he rejected an army bid to take command of the Carabineros but obliged new police chief Rodolfo Stange to disband the intelligence squad blamed for the triple slaying. Twenty-nine high-ranking officers retired.

The 14 implicated policemen were suspended from duty pending formal charges, but 12 remained free after senior police officers summoned them to headquarters to protect them from arrest.

Military specialists say the 69-year-old president appeared to defuse one of the most serious crises of his 12-year rule by preserving the supremacy of his 53,000-man army at the cost of lingering dissent in the police ranks.

"With one stroke, he liquidated the growing autonomy of Carabineros and untangled himself from a blatant political crime that couldn't be covered up," said Augusto Varas, an author who writes on military affairs.

Carabineros — the Spanish word means cavalrymen armed with carbines — began in 1927 as a mounted police guard charged with protecting a previous Chilean dictator, Gen. Carlos Ibanez, from a feared uprising by his own army.

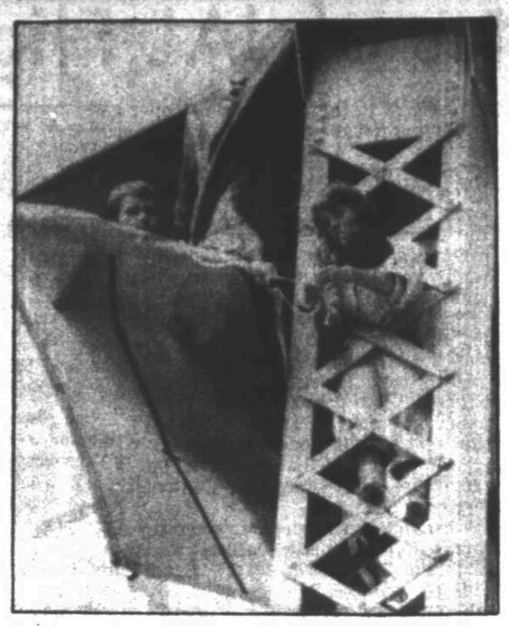

After helping overthrow Marxist President Salvador Allende in 1973, Carabineros gained status as a military service and grew faster than the army, navy or air force. Its share of defense spending doubled as it acquired anti-personnel weapons that underlined a growing political role.

Chile's independent Human Rights Commission says Dicomcar, the Carabinero intelligence squad, is thought to have abducted 69 dissidents since November and tortured them to get information about the outlawed Communist Party.

The pro-Moscow party, run from exile, has set itself apart from a broad democratic opposition by planting bombs and attacking police targets. The level of this armed opposition is low and sporadic, but it has remained the official justification for Pinochet's authoritarian rule.

However, public outrage over the killing of the three Communists, whose throats were cut with a pothook, appeared to set a limit to the violence traditionally used by the security forces to repress dissent.

Lately, Pinochet has told police officers they will be held individually responsible for abuses. The public warning coincides with a discreet Interior Ministry campaign to line up influential rightists to support an extension of Pinochet's presidential tenure.

Greenpeace campers jailed

POINT EDWARD, Ontario (AP) — Police arrested four Greenpeace protesters today when they climbed down from a bridge connecting Ontario and Michigan after an overnight protest against alleged chemical dumping, officials said.

The four members of the environmental activist group were arrested about 8 a.m., said Gord Conroy, toll supervisor for the Blue Water Bridge, which spans the St. Clair River and connects Point Edward with Port Huron, Mich., northeast of Detroit.

"They're being charged by the local police for trespassing," Conroy said.

They had hoisted a banner which read "Toxics Today, Tumors Tomorrow, End Toxic Dumping," and was emblazoned with "Greenpeace."

Sixty dead in China after severe earthquake

PEKING (AP) — A severe earthquake in the arid herding regions of northwestern China near the Soviet Union flattened earthen houses and cracked highways, killing an estimated 60 people and injuring more than 100, officials said Saturday.

The jolt Friday in the earthquake-prone Xinjiang Uighur region measured 7.4 on the Richter scale, signifying upheaval strong enough to cause widespread, heavy damage.

The toll was not higher because the epicenter was in pastoral Wuqia County, officials said. No damage was reported in Kashgar, a city of 300,000 about 80 miles southeast of Wuqia on the ancient silk road through Central Asia.

Soldiers and rescue teams rushed to the stricken district about 100 miles from the Soviet border as officials reported 13 aftershocks. Two measured higher than 5.0 on the Richter scale, a gauge of energy released by an earthquake as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph.

"The latest estimate is 60 dead," said Zhu Lingren, deputy director of the Xinjiang Seismological Bureau.

Geldof thanks Bermuda

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Pop stars Bob Geldof of the Boomtown Rats and Simon Le Bon of the group Duran Duran traveled to Bermuda Saturday and picked up the island's contribution to the Live Aid Fund for African famine victims.

In a noontime ceremony at Hamilton City Hall, a local Live Aid representative handed Geldof a check for $210,413, a contribution nearly equal to $4 for each of Bermuda's 56,000 people.

Geldof, addressing a crowd estimated at more than 200 people, thanked the British colony for its generosity. The proceedings were frequently interrupted by the screams of young fans.

Residents of this Atlantic island telephoned pledges during and after the televised Live Aid concerts in Philadelphia and London on July 13. The concerts raised an estimated $70 million worldwide.

Jets get bomb threats

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — A Saudi Arabian and an Egyptian airliner made unscheduled landings at Munich's Riem airport after receiving separate bomb threats, police said Saturday.

Police said the Saudi Tristar jet was flying from Paris to Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, with 111 passengers when an anonymous caller telephoned the Saudi airlines office in Paris and said a bomb was on board.

The plane landed at Riem at about 5:51 p.m. Friday. No bomb was found and the flight was resumed early Saturday.

A note containing a bomb threat was found at about 8 p.m. Friday aboard an Egyptian airliner carrying 130 passengers from Frankfurt to Cairo. No bomb was found and the plane took off again early Saturday, police said.

Spanish jet turns back

MADRID, Spain (AP) — An Aeromexico DC-10 jet returned Saturday to Madrid's Barajas Airport two hours after leaving for Mexico when the pilot detected abnormal wing vibration, the national news agency EFE reported.

The pilot of Aeromexico Flight 453 decided to return to Madrid so company mechanics could inspect the wings, an unidentified airline spokesman told EFE.

It was not known how many passengers were on board, EFE said.

Greek politician resigns

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The head of the major opposition New Democracy Party, Constantine Mitsotakis, resigned Saturday following interparty squabbles over the date of a party congress.

Mitsotakis, 67, said in a statement, "It was obvious that the disagreement over the date for holding the party's congress conceals doubts over the party's leadership." He headed the party since last year.

Mitsotakis said he would be a candidate when the party's parliamentary group meets next Thursday to select a new leader.

Temperature should climb to low 90s

From Staff and Wire Reports

Outdoor pleasure seekers can expect fair skies and warm afternoon temperatures will continue through Monday as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal predicts the high today will reach the 90 degree mark.

Tonight will be mostly fair with less than a 20 percent chance of isolated thunderstorms. The low will be in the mid 60s.

Monday will be fair with a high near 90.

Saturday's high of 94 was nine degrees below the record set in 1936. The low of 71 was 13 degrees above the record set in 1970.

STATE

Cooler air moved into North and West Texas Saturday behind a weak cold front that stretched from Lufkin to San Angelo to the Big Bend and prompted some scattered thunderstorms.

Other thunderstorms erupted along the coastal waters into the deep south, the National Weather Service said. Otherwise, Texas skies were partly cloudy with fair skies over the central High Plains near Lubbock.

Late-afternoon temperatures ranged from the middle 80s to middle 90s, although slightly cooler readings were reported in rainy areas. The 4 p.m. temperature extremes were 72 degrees at Waco and 98 at Austin.

A south wind of 15 to 20 mph flowed across Southeast and South Texas, while the wind had shifted to the north at 10 to 15 mph over the remainder of the state.

In the forecast for North Texas, skies should be fair through Monday with some scattered afternoon thunderstorms.

NATION

Strong thunderstorms packing hail, damaging wind and torrential rain developed Saturday from the Great Lakes to the southern Plains and into the Ohio and Tennessee valleys.

Wind damaged house roofs near Waxahachie, Texas, and toppled trees and power lines in Ellis County, Texas.

The National Weather Service said a tornado touched down near Manchester, Iowa, but no damage was reported.

Hail the size of marbles pelted parts of northern Alabama and near Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Very heavy rain fell over southeastern Wisconsin, with 0.70 of an inch falling in just 10 minutes at Muskego, southwest of Milwaukee.

Manor Park will build next phase

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Construction of the second of a four-part project at Manor Park, a Midland planned retirement community, will begin Monday, a company spokesman reported.

Saxton

Bill Saxton, chief executive officer for Midland Presbyterian Homes, said the cost of the 22 additional town houses and 10 garden homes is estimated to exceed $2 million.

"Of the 73 units currently standing, 67 are either occupied or reserved," Saxton said. The non-profit, non-denominational company operates Trinity Towers, and apartment-like complex for senior citizens on West Illinois Avenue and its newest addition, Manor Park located on Loop 250 and Sinclair Avenue. It began accepting its first occupants last year.

Despite a slump in the real estate market, Saxton reported there were no problems filling units, thus the need to get on with the expansion project.

"With the situation in Midland, this could bring about future growth," Saxton said. "I can safely estimate that we'll have 6,700 residents when we're fully developed."

The residential community was designed to provide both independent living and health care. The project, estimated to cost about $40 million, consists of townhouses, garden homes and a three-story residential building. A central area for recreation, dining and worship adjoins a personal health care center, currently under construction.

Prospective buyers must be over 60 years old to live in the community and may choose between the spacious town houses ($70,000 to $105,000), the garden homes ($34,500 to $91,500) or a condo in the Wallace Building ($33,000 to $90,000).

The garden homes are six cluster units with a common hallway and laundry facilities and are located closer to the activities area than the townhouses. The Wallace Building units are connected to the activity area, chapel, dining room and the future health care center.

Each unit within the walled community is equipped with a strobe light outside that is set off by a remote control by the occupant.

At 80, Midland County man still sits tall in saddle

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Bethel T. Graham sits tall in the saddle and stands tall in his boots.

The aura is not just his 6-foot-1 stature and white hat.

"He's just a strong person," said his youngest son, Roy. "He possesses a lot of leadership characteristics in the family and community. If you could think of anybody other than God that hung the moon, it would have to be him."

The son obviously admires his father who, at 80, still goes on cattle roundups, chews the fat at the co-op cotton gin, and imparts humor in his wisdom.

He's a "retired Greenwood farmer, a non-retired cowboy," said his daughter, Joyce Lucas. "He's still blowing and going."

That's his nature and preference.

Graham, who recently turned 80, certainly doesn't view himself as "old," though others his age may be elderly.

"I have the thoughts of a young person all the time," said Graham. "I may play the part (of an old man) a little later."

That's not his intent.

As is his habit, Graham last week paid a visit to the Midland Farmers Co-op to partake of the fellowship there with the farmers and ranchers and anybody else who strolled in. There also was a colorful birthday cake on the head table; his 18-year-old granddaughter, Andrea, baked it.

"How old are you, Bethel?" asked Charlie Wright, the co-op's curious cotton-gin superintendent.

"Eighty."

"They're not going to take you water skiing like they did Ben?" he asked.

"No."

His friend, farmer Ben Golladay, not long ago did turn 80 years old and did go water skiing.

ONCE INSIDE the co-op office, Graham was encouraging his friends to eat slices of the cake. Meanwhile, he was chasing a pesky fly buzzing over the cake.

"He's going to have to find himself a landing field other than the cake."

The cake was in the middle of a long table where the farmers and ranchers do their word whittling.

"Anything that can't be worked out at this table, you don't know what's going to happen," Graham surmised. "You can get a lot of advice at this table, and a lot of the time, it's going to be wrong."

Jim Sawyer walked into the co-op office. "What's going on here?" he asked. "I saw all the cars and thought someone was giving money away."

H.A. "Peck" Hale has befriended Graham since the 1940s.

"All the years I've know him, I would describe him as very alert at all times. I have never seen him down in the dumps. If there was ever a dark moment in his life, he never showed it. His spirit is great. That's what makes him such a wonderful man."

Graham began his life on a West Texas ranch 80 years ago. By age 13, he was on his own, and by 17, he was cowboying.

We know 'music hath charms....'

Therapist establishes rhythm of work in Midland

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Ancient tribes believed the rhythmic sounds of the totem pole kept them alive. The early Greeks considered healing with music a science and equated the god Apollo with both medicine and music. The American Indian danced to inherited songs and Renaissance physicians wrote on the healing power of music.

Throughout the history of man, music has played an important role in the health and welfare of civilizations.

Today, music is catching on as an effective method of treating a variety of health-related problems. From paralysis and autism to orthodontism and emotional disturbances, music therapists are striking a chord with their patients.

Delaine Little, a Midland resident, has been using her background in music therapy to work with children for several years.

"Everyone likes music," she said. "That's what makes music therapy work. Every person is touched by music."

Ms. Little, who holds a degree in music therapy from West Texas State University, has contracted as a private therapist for several years and will soon be a consultant to Clearview, a drug and alcohol treatment center, scheduled to open in early October.

There, she plans to work with emotionally disturbed youths.

"It's mainly emotional problems," she said. "A lot of poor self-image, low self-esteem. We'll be working to try and bolster them."

Other plans include working with residents at a local nursing home, Terrace Gardens, and continuing her work with the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens.

The therapy required varies widely from group to group, suggested Ms. Little.

The children at MARC love Michael Jackson, she wearily admits.

"I don't normally get to use a lot of rock and roll music," she said. "Of course, it all depends on the age and the functional level of the child.

"A child should be able to 'pat beat' by the age of 18 months," she said. "Studies have shown that one-half of all first graders can't even march to music. If they can't maintain rhythm, it could affect them in reading ability and even later on in athletic activities."

Ms. Little explained that recent research by a Michigan therapist indicated that rhythmic movement is a critical development area that can eventually affect academics and athletic ability.

"Her studies showed that kids who can march at an early age are the ones who will make first-string on the the football team later on," she said. "It's somehow all related and has to do with eye-hand coordination."

Ms. Little works with the younger children by placing them on rocker boards and having them rock to music. For retarded children, however, she often uses music to stimulate them to think.

"For example, I might play the 1812 Overture and have them pretend that it's a movie score," she said. "Then I'll have them draw a picture of what the movie is about."

One child drew a picture of a space invasion, she noted.

"It's great," she said. "It stimulates the imagination and gets them to think on a different level from what they are used to."

Another exercise is "limited visual imageries," in which the child closes his eyes in the dark and takes "trips" with the brain, while listening to music.

"We may use a song about birds and have them pretend that they are flying," she said. "This helps them to relax." Ms. Little often uses music by Hap Palmer, a noted children's song writer.

Still another exercise encourages trust.

"We blindfold someone and then have them go through a maze, guided only by friends using rhythmic instruments," she said. The friends, she said, would shake a tambourine if the child should go left, or beat a drum if they should go straight.

Much of the music therapy Ms. Littel has used has been to encourage movement, especially in handicapped children.

"We use a lot of range-of-motion exercises when working with the handicapped," she said. "They do stretches to music. Even children in wheelchairs can put bells on their feet and kick."

Music history is often helpful too, she added.

"It helps to explain about some of the handicaps of the famous composers," she said. "They like the classical music more when they find out that Beethoven was deaf, or that Chopin and Schumann had crippled hands and had to wear special devices to play piano."

Future plans to work with the elderly, however, will require different therapy techniques, said Ms. Little.

"We'll probably do a lot of movement and use old songs," she said. "Using the old favorites to bring up memories will help build self-esteem."

GARY OTT

When the whole family treats you like a king....

One of the nice things about not visiting your parents very often is that when you do show up it is considered a big deal and everyone goes out of their way to treat you like a king.

They let you sleep until noon, fix all of your favorite meals and don't act insulted when you spend your free time with old friends instead of family members.

Parents are good about stuff like that. It is as though your mere presence is enough to make their day. They expect you to be a selfish slob because, after all, you always were as a child and some things never change.

So it was for me recently when I made my semi-annual trek to the old hometown for three days of relaxation and serious eating.

For the record, a typical day "at home" goes something like this.

Breakfast — three eggs over easy, four slices of bacon, grits, two pieces of slightly-burned toast smothered in an obscene amount of peach preserves and a pot of coffee — is served precisely at 11:30 a.m. each morning. That is followed by 30 minutes of what I call "leisure time" and generally consists of reading the morning paper, browsing through back editions of an assortment of magazines and chain-smoking. Mother, of course, takes advantage of this time to clean the dishes, which is the second time she gets to do it since everyone else had breakfast three hours earlier. If she is particularly enterprising she can double up and get your dirty laundry started at the same time.

Remember, we're talking selfish here.

But it all catches up with you because the next hour or so can best be described as "hard labor." That's when your mother gives you a nonstop running commentary on everything that has happened to the family during the past six months, including the terrible operation some obscure aunt suffered through after she fell from the porch while chasing off some juvenile delinquents who had been harrassing her by repeatedly ringing the door bell.

The best you can do during this dissertation is act semi-interested, nod periodically and toss out an occasional "uh-huh," "no kidding" or, if things become too unbearable, "right, mom, you told me that last night."

Still, it is a small price to pay for the royal treatment you are receiving during your three-day stay.

Besides, things pick up considerably after that.

There's the afternoon round of golf, for example, where all expenses are signed on your dad's tab, followed by a couple of hours of hanging out in the 19th Hole, where again the old man's signature comes in handy.

After spending as much of his money as your conscience will allow, you return home just in time for a cocktail before dinner is served, for which you have already set the menu.

It is during this time that all the sisters, brothers-in-law, nieces, nephews, cousins and any other relative within a 30-mile radius gather to hear you discuss — utilizing a great deal of exaggeration — all of your recent successes. It is also during this time that the barrage of not-so-subtle innuendoes are made about your unmarried status, the most popular of which is "You're going to end up just like your Uncle Bill. He's a very lonely man."

Following dinner, everyone goes through the ritual of sitting back, rubbing their stomachs and saying terribly profound things like, "God, I couldn't eat another bite if you stuck a gun to my head."

This continues for about 30 minutes.

Then someone makes the ridiculous suggestion that you look through old family albums. Most of you groan in protest but, somehow, the majority does not rule and they get dragged out anyway. You've seen the pictures a thousand times before but, almost out of duty, you check them out once more.

Everyone giggles briefly, but boredom soon sets in. It is a good idea to take advantage of this temporary lull to slip out of the house, pick up some friends and hit the local night spots. This should take up the remainder of the evening and, if all goes well, you can be back home in time to catch the tail-end of the late movie on TV.

After raiding the refrigerator, you should tumble into bed by 2 a.m. After all, you must get your sleep. You've got another busy day ahead of you.

GRAHAM

"I worked on a ranch," he recalled, "did a little fence repair and breaking horses the rest of the time." He was earning $40 a month plus room and board. Back in the 1920s, shop-made work boots cost him $25 a pair.

At age 18 in 1924, he married his sweetheart, Ernestine Westfall, in Howard County. The next year, they moved to what is now the Greenwood community in Midland County and set up a household and a farm and brought forth six children: Clayte, Betty Jean, Anna Beth, Ronald, Joyce and Roy. Only Ronald has died. He was killed in a pickup-truck accident in 1967. And Graham's wife of 60 years died last year at age 77. Since then, Graham has wedded — Lou.

At Greenwood, he farmed with teams, mules and horses, and later switched over to tractors.

"THERE WAS A LOT of them (coyotes) around," he recalled. "They wasn't too much of a problem unless you had sheep." He recalled chasing coyotes in a Model-T Ford. "Yeah," he said. "I've been guilty of that. I don't recommend it."

While he wasn't farming, chasing coyotes, raising a family or visiting the co-op, Graham was into community affairs. He was a charter member of the Greenwood Baptist Church and still is a deacon there. He was a trustee of the Prairie Lee School and later of the Greenwood Independent School District. He was a charter member of the farmers co-op, which dates back to 1930. And in the 1930s, he was a Midland County commissioner.

"They paid us $75 a month," Graham said. "That was a lot of money."

"It's a lot of money now," said his friend, farmer Gene Jones.

Graham retired from farming in 1957.

"That's what I was doing. I must have enjoyed it (farming). I kept doing it."

Later, he bought a ranch near Cisco, ranched for several years, sold out, and returned to his retirement at Greenwood.

"He's a good neighbor," Hoot Leonard, a farmer-rancher who manages the co-op, said of his friend. "He's always ready to help anybody that needs help. He always has an encouraging word for young farmers.

Leonard recalled back in the 1950s when he was trying to set up irrigation, Golladay, who was one to pull pranks and razz friendly-like, offered this advice to him: "'Well, from the experiences I've had with irrigated cotton, if you're really lucky, you'll make 50 cents on the dollar.'"

Countered Graham: "'It's not all that bad; you'll make it.'"

"Ben was just having some fun out of it," Leonard recalled. "Bethel could see it was serious to me."

And he held up quite well last spring when he was helping Billy Evans in a cattle roundup near Balmorhea. Graham, mounted on his horse, was chasing a strayed steer when his horse got entangled in some wire mesh. "It wasn't in view," Graham reasoned. "I believe my horse would have seen it." The excited horse threw his rider in getting out of the bind.

"I was trying to find a way, as the fellow says, to dismount gracefully," Graham said. "The next thing I knew, I was under him."

"I wound up under him," he recalled. "The horse was gentle; I couldn't lay no fault on him. It was just one of those freak accidents."

He got up, remounted, and continued on the roundup.

"You look up to him as an example, a good example," 16-year-old Mark Graham said of his grandfather. "He's always wanting to help if we have cows to get in. He's right in the middle of it."

Said Mark's father, Roy Graham: "I always thought he (Graham) was one who should be running the country. He has always been that kind of a daddy to me. He always knew the right answers."

Taxpayers' group stages protest at Georgetown

GEORGETOWN (AP) — More than 50 members of a new taxpayers association waved signs and shouted slogans during a protest at the Williamson County appraisal district office in Georgetown.

The marchers paraded two blocks Friday to the office and circled the building, saying they protested a sharp rise in the appraised value of their property.

Many carried signs saying "Proposition 13 Now."

Proposition 13 was a 1978 referendum in California that limited tax increases.

Gene Landers, one of the organizers of the Williamson County Taxpayers Association, said one of the main goals of the group would be to protest the Legislature's reduced funding of public schools.

Landry said the association wanted to establish a state network among tax protestors to force the Legislature to stop passing the tax burden to local governments.

Sqadron joins search exercise

From Staff Reports

The Midland Composite Squadron was among 14 squadrons representing the Midland Civil Air Patrol to participate in simulated search and rescue exercises Saturday in Midland.

Besides Midland, other participants included squadrons from Odessa, El Paso, San Angelo, Big Spring, Colorado City, Amarillo, Lubbock, Lamesa, Fort Worth, Denton, McCamey, Big Bend and Alpine.

The various groups will be notified of their performance evaluations within the next few weeks. The Civil Air Patrol is a non-profit, volunteer organization solely reliant upon community support and donations.

Bonilla stresses Hispanic voting power

GALVESTON (AP) — Corpus Christi attorney Ruben Bonilla began his term as chairman of the Mexican American Democrats of Texas Saturday by speaking of the need to harness Hispanic voting power.

"Our short-term goal is to maintain Democratic Party control in Texas," Bonilla said. "Our long-term goal is to take that to the 1988 conventions and recapture the White House and the Democratic Senate majority."

Delegates to the state MAD convention gave Bonilla a landslide victory over Norberto Beto Salinas of McAllen Saturday at the group's annual convention.

Bonilla, a former president of the League of United Latin American Citizens, the nation's largest Hispanic organization, also spoke of the need to translate Hispanic voting power into economic gains for South Texas.

"The name of the game is numbers, and the Democratic Party can count very well. The Democrats must rely on 1 million Hispanic voters to whip the Republicans," Bonilla said. "The message is economic development."

Bonilla said he hopes to help reunite the badly splintered state MAD and anchor the group firmly in the political mainstream.

"The Mexican American Democrats are not a special interest group. We are interested in a common agenda with all Texans."

That agenda, he said, includes jobs, a stable economy, reduction of the federal budget deficit and the trade deficit.

Nuclear plants could cause utility rates to mushroom

DALLAS (AP) — Utility bills for millions of residential customers in Texas could mushroom by as much as 41 percent when nuclear power plants begin operating, a state Public Utility Commission study says.

The recently completed computer analysis of five investor-owned utilities now building nuclear plants was designed to help PUC commissioners in future rate cases, said project coordinator Bob Reilly.

He said the study does not anticipate actions PUC commissioners could take to soften the financial impact on ratepayers. Reilly also warned that the study relies on a simplified analysis of financial conditions of the utilities and their respective nuclear projects.

The PUC estimates that Central Power & Light Co. residential customers could face the highest rate increases to pay for plant construction: 41.49 percent.

El Paso Electric Co. customers could be confronted with hikes of 38.78 percent, while Gulf States Utilities bills could rise by 38.73 percent, the study said.

Rates for Texas Utilities could go up 17.53 percent, while Houston Lighting & Power Co. rates might rise 15.51 percent, the study said.

CP&L and HL&P are partners in the twin-unit South Texas Project under construction on the Gulf Coast near Bay City.

El Paso Electric is a partner in the three-unit Palo Verde plant being built near Phoenix, Ariz. Gulf States is a partner in the River Bend nuclear plant in Louisiana and Texas Utilities is a partner in the twin-unit Comanche Peak project near Glen Rose.

The study also said the full impact of the rate hikes would probably not be felt until both units at Comanche Peak and the South Texas Project were operating.

For example, completion of the first unit at Comanche Peak could hike rates by 5.75 percent. Completion of only one unit at the South Texas Project could mean a 8.67 percent rate hike for HL&P customers and a 24.84 percent increase for CP&L ratepayers, the study said.

The light lets passersby know the resident needs aid. A light goes off in a central control area that lets medical staff know where assistance is needed.

Saxton said residents may call for assistance by pushing a control attached to their clothing.

"A lot of planning went into this project," he said. Much of that planning, however, means changes for residents of the parent Trinity Towers complex when some nursing care at the buildings will be transferred to the personal health care center upon its completion.

According to Saxton, three types of nursing care are provided at either one or both facilities. They are personal, custodial and nursing care.

"Personal care is for people who are in between independent retirement living and those in need of care.

"Custodial is when they actually need to have medication administered and nursing care is when they are more or less bed-ridden," he said. "We will be transferring the custodial and nursing beds from Trinity Towers to Manor Parks and have eight beds for personal care."

In addition, both Trinity Towers and Manor Park will have an infirmary for short term convalescence.

Manor Park has a medical staff of 23, Saxton said. That includes a medical director, an registered nurse director, four licensed vocational nurses and nursing assistants.

The general concept of Manor Park is a "continuing care retirement center," he said. "The need is not only housing, but the amenities that go with Manor Park...the security, the recreational facilities and the health care."

Manor Park, a four-phase, seven to nine year project, has a projected completion date of 1989. Groundbreaking ceremonies for phase one were held in September 1982.

A $1 million gift marked the beginning of the project. Guy and Joe Mabee presented the gift on behalf of the J.E. and L.E. Mabee Foundation in Tulsa, Okla. The donation went toward the initial construction of a portion of the personal care facility.

The personal health care facility is part of Manor Park's design that makes it stand apart from many conventional retirement communities in that health care is provided to active and independent residents living in townhouses and garden homes.

"We sort of made an investment in the future of Midland, and in the long run, it's going to be an on going service and something Midland can be proud of," Saxton said.

Water bonds approved by LCRA

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lower Colorado River Authority said Saturday its board of directors has endorsed two constitutional amendments to enact a statewide water plan.

The two amendments will be on the Nov. 5 ballot.

"This is an important issue that is vital to all Texans' interest," said LCRA chairman John Jones. "These proposed amendments would enact the statewide water program which was approved by the Texas Legislature during the last session.

"Three similar constitutional amendments have previously been defeated in 1969, 1976 and 1981. The Legislature has provided us a fourth and perhaps a final opportunity this decade to solicit public support."

TEC to conduct seminar for employers in October

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A seminar aimed at helping Texas employers control unemployment taxes is set for Oct. 18 in Midland, a Texas Employment Commission official says.

The seminar, one of 28 to be held throughout the state in 1985 and 1986, is designed to show employers how they can lower tax rates and contribute to stability in the work place, according to the TEC.

"I am well aware of the concern over rising tax costs," said TEC member Mary Scott Nabers. "Thousands of Texas businessmen and businesswomen do not understand that there are ways to reduce these costs. The law governing unemployment compensation is complex, and the procedures by which the law is administered are often bewildering."

Ms. Nabers, who was appointed to the TEC by Gov. Mark White last December, said "employers have been asking for help and these seminars are our way of responding to the requests."

Ms. Nabers said she is concerned because it is increasingly evident that many employers do not clearly understand a law that substantially affects their business costs. "I am talking daily to employers who are frustrated, confused and angry."

Reservations for the seminar are being accepted at 512-463-2425. The cost is $15, which includes breakfast.

The Midland seminar is scheduled from 8:30 a.m. to 11 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 West Highway 80.

Odessan to go on trial Tuesday on first of three robbery charges

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The trial of an 18-year-old youth on one of three aggravated robbery charges is scheduled to begin in 161st District Court with jury selection Tuesday morning.

Larry Marquez Ducthover, 701 Dwayne, was indicted May 9 by an Ector County grand jury in connection with three armed robberies during the month of February. Dutchover is accused of being involved in the Feb. 5 and Feb. 21 robbery of Whataburger, 1900 E. 8th St., and the Feb. 23 robbery of Harrigan's restaurant, Parkway and University.

Three other men also were indicted in connection with the robberies. They are: Ysmael Martinez Velarde, 22, Raymond Marquez Blanco Jr., 24, and Rudolfo Flores Martinez, 27.

During a pretrial hearing July 24 before District Judge Tryon Lewis, Dutchover's attorney, Steve Brannan, sought a change of venue for the trial, arguing that the Dutchover name had had too much publicity and this would deprive Dutchover of a fair trial. Lewis denied Brannan's motion.

Cost of security

Back in the 1970s, there was ample reason for an idea like the Strategic Petroleum Reserve — the stockpile of crude oil intended to cushion this country against the ravages of another oil embargo like the one carried out by the Arabs.

This country was vulnerable to that type of "hostage" situation because it relied heavily on imported oil, mainly from the Middle Eastern nations. As was made apparent in the Arab oil embargo of 1973, this country literally could be brought to its knees by foreign oil suppliers.

But over a period of years that situation has been changing. Now with more fuel-efficient vehicles on the streets and highways, and with oil consumption correspondingly reduced, along with redirected reliance on oil suppliers for needs above the domestic supply and a worldwide glut of crude oil to boot, the United States is not so susceptible to an oil embargo.

Furthermore, with OPEC (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) on the skids, the outlook is good that this country may never again fall prey to foreign price gougers and, potentially, be at the mercy of foreign oil cartels.

To say the least, all this has reduced the previously legitimate fear in this country of becoming an "oil hostage" and, as a result, the federal government's storehouse of crude oil in Texas and Louisiana salt caverns may appear less necessary. It isn't, of course, because it's this nation's "insurance policy." The question is this: Is it worthwhile to continue filling the SPR at the cost of an even more gigantic deficit?

For all the reasons heretofore cited the decision to curtail filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve when the level reaches 500 million barrels seems reasonable.

Certainly it would be more comfortable to have a larger reserve of crude than the 500 million barrels the government says translates into a 90-day supply. But decisions such as the one to cancel plans to further fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve are matters of trade-offs. The United States trades off, in this instance, even greater energy security for less of a federal deficit.

The decision wasn't an easy one because, frankly, it would be better to have a one- or two-year supply of crude on hand — just in case. Unfortunately the economic consequences might prove disastrous.

All in all, the federal government's decision to stop filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve appears wise, under current circumstances, even if it does leave Americans a little bit jumpy.

Memories of the earlier oil embargo are slow to fade.

Another View:

GOP efforts fall short

The Republican Party is going to extend its Operation Open Door a bit longer — maybe quite a bit longer.

This is better news for the Democrats than for the Republicans, for the original idea was to show Republican organizational muscle and Republican realignment appeal by getting 100,000 voters in four states to change their registration to Republican within 100 days.

In politics, alas, there comes, usually on Election Day but sometimes on self-imposed deadlines, unequivocal evidence that your project didn't work.

Republican spokesmen claim 100,000 switches, but to get anywhere near that number they have to include people who've signed cards promising to switch and supposed switchers in states other than the targeted four. The Democrats are understandably chortling.

They shouldn't chortle too much, though. True, this is the second time this month that Republican realignment fell a little short: in Texas the Republicans lost, 51-49, the special congressional election they had spent upwards of $1 million to win.

But both Operation Open Door and the Texas race were high-risk operations. They could only have been undertaken and gotten as close to success as they did by a party with a vast fund-raising base (made up mostly of smallish contributors) and formidable organizational skills.

And there continue to be strong indications that Republicans, as a party, have a stronger appeal in the South than ever.

The Republicans' liability is that while they have strong stars, they have almost no bench. For the Democrats, it works the other way around. They are blessed, almost every election year, with hundreds of aggressive, politically adept candidates.

The Republicans aren't. They work hard to come up with good candidates, and more often than they'd like to admit end up with successful entrepreneurs, who don't understand that ordinary voters are unfamiliar with the exhilaration of running your own business, and ideologues of the right, who are determined as a matter of principle to abolish those few agencies of government for which support among voters remains well-nigh universal.

The losses of their Texas and Operation Open Door gambles aren't going to make their difficult task of recruiting good candidates any easier.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 25, the 237th day of 1985. There are 128 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 25, 1944, Allied forces liberated Paris, ending four years of German occupation. The surrender of Maj. Gen. Dietrich von Choltitz — who had defied Adolf Hitler's orders to level the French capital rather than give it up — set off wild celebrations in the streets.

On this date:

In 1718, hundreds of French colonists arrived in Louisiana, with some of them settling in present-day New Orleans.

In 1825, Uruguay declared its independence from Brazil.

In 1835, Ann Rutledge, said by some to have been the early true love of Abraham Lincoln, died in Illinois at age 22.

In 1900, German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche died.

In 1916, the National Park Service was established within the Department of the Interior.

In 1921, the United States signed a peace treaty with Germany.

In 1943, U.S. forces overran New Georgia in the Solomon Islands during World War II.

In 1950, President Harry S. Truman ordered the Army to seize control of the nation's railroads to avert a strike.

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford said in a speech to the National Hardware Week Convention in Chicago that he would push Congress to ease tax burdens on business.

Five years ago: Director-choreographer Gower Champion died of a rare blood disease in a New York hospital hours before his show "42nd Street" opened on Broadway. Both the cast and audience were stunned when producer David Merrick announced the news of Champion's death during the curtain call.

One year ago: Author Truman Capote died in Los Angeles at the age of 59, leaving behind the uncompleted manuscript to a novel titled, "Answered Prayers."

Today's birthdays: Actress Ruby Keeler is 76. Actor Van Johnson is 69. Actor-producer Mel Ferrer is 68. Actor Don DeFore is 68. Conductor-composer Leonard Bernstein is 67. Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace is 66. Actor Sean Connery is 55. Actor Tom Skerritt is 52.

Thought for today: "To be capable of respect is almost as rare as to be worthy of it." — Joseph Joubert, French moralist (1754-1824).

CIA pondering Romania's ill leader

WASHINGTON — No Soviet bloc nation has been more independent than Romania. Its autonomy was dramatized last summer when the Romanian delegation proudly marched to the cheers of the Olympics crowd in Los Angeles — alone among Russia's allies in refusing to join the boycott.

Jack Anderson

The maverick responsible for this show of defiance is Nicolae Ceausescu (pronounced "chow-SHESS-koo"), who has ruled Romania with an iron fist since 1965. Yet many Romanians revere him as an indestructible national asset.

The fact of his mortality, however, has been of increasing interest to the Central Intelligence Agency, which has been sending top-secret reports about Ceausescu to President Reagan. The White House has moved him to the top of the list as the next world leader most likely to expire.

The secret dispatches coming out of Bucharest indicate that the 67-year-old leader is dying of prostate cancer. According to one classified prediction, he is not expected to last until spring.

The key to White House interest in Ceausescu is found in one paragraph of a top-secret CIA profile: "Although the great powers all play an important part in Ceausescu's thinking, he has been very interested in improving relations with the U.S. He believes Romania, which has an 830-mile border with the USSR, needs powerful friends, if only for the psychological boost they can provide."

This posture also gives him higher approval ratings at home. "Ceausescu enjoys a (great) measure of genuine popular support," the CIA profile says. "His people are highly nationalistic, proud of Romania's continued defiance of the Russians, and admire his ability to exploit great-power rivalries to promote Romanian national interests."

Aside from refusing to go along with the Olympic boycott, Ceausescu publicly opposed the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia, the Vietnamese takeover of Cambodia in 1979, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and both Soviet and American development of space weapons.

In another move that has been an irritant for Soviet-Romanian relations, Ceausescu courted the People's Republic of China. At first, according to a separate CIA report classified "secret," the Romanian ruler went "to unusual lengths to conceal from its Warsaw Pact allies its acquisition of non-Soviet equipment." But eventually Ceausescu acknowledged that he had purchased patrol boats and Il-28 fighter-bombers from China.

When Ceausescu took control of the Romanian Communist Party 20 years ago, the Soviets incorrectly assumed he would be a loyal puppet. After all, he had joined the then-illegal party at the age of 14, and he was scarcely out of his teens before he was thrown into jail for eight years, and intermittently tortured for his politics.

But Ceausescu shocked the Soviets a mere four years after he came to power by becoming the first post-World War II East European leader to host a U.S. head of state when he received President Richard Nixon in Bucharest.

The following year, he flew to New York for the 25th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations. He was later received by Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter at the White House, and once took a two-week tour of the United States.

Ironically, the popularity he has amassed in Bucharest is indirectly due to his repressive rule. "He has managed to carve out a measure of independence from Moscow, in part, because he has insisted on maintaining a rigid, orthodox communist system at home," the CIA says.

Still, the Romanian people generally seem to idolize him. They call him the "Hero of Heroes" and "Worker of Workers." Associates refer to him as the "First Personage of the World." And, in one speech, a political crony managed to compare him to Peter the Great, Julius Caesar, Alexander the Great, Napoleon and Abraham Lincoln.

But the old man has been slowing down. Close examination even of touched-up photos in Romanian newspapers show he is deteriorating. He is losing weight and appears tired. He has missed key meetings and even volleyball games, his favorite form of relaxation. The word in Bucharest is that his wife, Elena, is running the government.

GEORGE F. WILL

South African sanctions only a Hula Hoop

WASHINGTON — The United Nations, which is largely run by and for the benefit of tyrannical regimes, is divesting its pension fund of South African assets. Various European governments that are purchasing gas pumped through a Soviet pipeline built by slave labor are suddenly stern about South Africa. And the music of American moralism has reached fortissimo regarding South Africa, with a brisk staccato of demands for disinvestment and other gestures involving no noticeable risk or even inconvenience for those doing the demanding.

George F. Will

Clearly some of the current campaigning against South Africa is a fad, a moral Hula Hoop, fun for a while. Regarding interest in a foreign crisis, even altruism is not fuel for the long haul. For a foreign crisis to preoccupy a relatively content society such as ours, it must affect a vital interest of a majority on a continuing basis. Injustice in Africa does not. Not even the very vocal spokesmen for black Americans are audible often about the tyranny of black despots over the majority of the 400 million black Africans.

The New York Times recently carried this melancholy headline: "Uganda Regains Uneasy Normalcy." In South Africa in the last year more than 600 persons have died in political violence, some of them blacks and Indians killed by blacks. Six hundred has been the average weekly death toll during the last decade of Ugandan normalcy.

Nevertheless, the manifest and manifold injustices of South Africa's system make economic sanctions a temptation, because they can make us feel good. But should they?

Right-mindedness is not right behavior. If the aim of sanctions is described modestly enough, the success of sanctions is assured. That is, if the aim is to express disapproval, sanctions can not fail. Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, says sanctions would say "how we feel" about apartheid. But American opinion already is clear, indeed almost unanimous, in disapproving apartheid.

President Carter's grain embargo and Olympics boycott in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan were useful. They were useful not because they could do serious damage to the Soviet Union, still less because they would alter Soviet behavior, but because the measures helped awaken Americans from slumbers that Carter, among others, had induced with talk about "inordinate" fear of communism. Economic pressure against the Soviet empire should be continuous because it is our mortal enemy and its militarism should be burdened as much as possible.

But what of South Africa? Are sanctions supposed to destabilize it? One reason there is a Reagan Administration is that the preceding administration helped bring down the shah and Somoza, two exercises in making matters worse. Are sanctions to remain in place until Pretoria changes policies? If so, which policies?

Simon Jenkins of The Economist, writing in The Spectator, notes that force, not the sanctions, settled disputes involving Rhodesia and Argentina. The Arab oil embargo did not erode U.S. support for Israel; it stimulated conservation and development of alternative energy sources, which have weakened Arab economies.

Thanks to an oil embargo against South Africa, it is nearly self-sufficient, with the world's best process for producing oil from coal. Thanks to an arms embargo, South Africa, which was 60 percent dependent on imported arms 20 years ago, today is 90 percent self-sufficient and a net arms exporter.

Sanctions would raise the costs of apartheid, but as Jenkins says, "Apartheid is not a white tribal hobby to be dropped from the household budget when things get tight." Sanctions, he says, please people who believe they are entitled to reorder the world and that the reordering can be done without violence: "The modern crusader sits at home ripping up IBM stock....Defeat is someone else's fault and only the poor get hurt." In southern Africa, the 40 million poor would include many millions in states which are, and will remain, linked economically with South Africa.

Before the American Civil War, some abolitionists considered dissolution of the Union — secession by the North — preferable to continued association with slave states. This policy would have left the slaves to their fate, but their fate was not the most important thing to those abolitionists. The most important thing was the abolitionists' self-regarding fastidiousness about their own moral hygiene. Some advocates of sanctions and other measures to isolate South Africa seem most eager to isolate themselves from what is apt to be a long, tedious, morally ambiguous and largely unsatisfying process of constructive pressure through continued engagement.

ART BUCHWALD

Rising costs threatening annual mail delivery!

EDITOR'S NOTE: While Art Buchwald is on vacation we reprint some columns from the past.

POST OFFICE THREATENS TO CUT DOWN DELIVERIES TO THREE TIMES A WEEK — newspaper headline.

Art Buchwald

It had to happen. In the year 1990 the postmaster general went on television and announced to the country that because of a $900 billion deficit and Congress' refusal to permit him to charge $5 for a first-class stamp, the American people would receive their mail only one day a year. This would be known as Mail Day and would be considered a national holiday. He regretted the decision but assured the American people that they would still receive the best service of any postal system in the world, and he promised that with only a few exceptions no one would be inconvenienced by it.

At first people were angered by the news, but pretty soon they accepted it as they have everything else the U.S. Postal Service has done to them.

In a few years Mail Day became as popular as Christmas, and the excitement built up as the day came near.

Little children were told that if they were bad the Mailman (he was pictured as a man in a blue uniform with a long white beard) wouldn't bring them any Records-of-the-Month. Department stores hired men to play the role of Mailman, and men and women and children would sit on his knee and tell him what they wanted for Mail Day.

People decorated their doors and windows with old birthday and get-well cards and put colored lights on their mailboxes.

There was a great spirit of goodwill associated with the holiday. Doormen and elevator operators and building superintendents became kinder and more attentive. People greeted each other by saying, "Have a Merry Mail Day." Charity organizations raised funds on the streets for poor people who had no one to share their mail with.

Fraternal groups got together and walked through the streets singing Mail Carols. The churches and synagogues stayed open on Mail Day Eve so people could pray for letters from their children.

When youngsters asked where the Mailman lived, their parents told them he lived at the North Pole and he spent the entire year canceling stamps on letters and packages so he could leave them on Mail Day morning for them. When they asked how he delivered the mail, they were told he put it in bags and came down the chimney when everyone was sleeping. But if there were a dog in the house, he would pass it by. Everyone locked up their dogs on Mail Day Eve.

On the morning of Mail Day the entire family came downstairs and opened their bags of mail. Mothers got all the bills; fathers got all the newspapers and magazines that had piled up for the year. There were letters and postcards and birthday cards and Christmas cards for everyone. Grandmothers and grandfathers opened their Social Security checks. Children gleefully ripped open the junk mail with four-color catalogues and appeals from Indian reservations that didn't exist. There were also packages from stores and mail-order houses and tax returns and alumni fund appeals.

It took all day for people to open the mail. In the evening relatives came by to exchange canceled stamps and have Mail Day dinner. Every TV network put on a televised football game, and Perry Como had a special Mail Day TV program.

For 10 years Mail Day was the most exciting day of the year. But then in January, 2000, the postmaster general appeared on television and said that because of rising costs and a $17 trillion deficit the post office would be unable to deliver mail once a year as it had done in the past.

In the future, he said, mail would be delivered only one day during leap year. He felt that in this way the post office could operate with more efficiency and still provide the services that so many people depend on. But he warned that if Congress did not raise the price of a first-class stamp to $49 a letter, the post office would have to take more drastic measures, which included only delivering the mail once every 200 years.

Are we forgetting what really matters in our lives?

Modisett

The world's turning a little too fast recently.

It concerns me. It should concern you, too, if you care anything at all about quality. The quality of work. The quality of leisure. The quality of education. The quality of life in general.

Society continues to "progress." Only problem is, the more society "progresses," the more it becomes like a computer: Unfeeling, uncaring, lacking human emotion. A computer's a great tool, as long as it isn't running the computer operator! If it is, just try to stay out of the way. Remember that old saying about the faster you go...

Because of the maddening pace of this society, people get into the regrettable habit of forgetting all that really matters about life: Taking the time to really talk to your spouse. Taking a little while to do nothing but talk to your kid. Taking the time to see the world around you and to recognize your place on this great Universe. That can be an eye-opening experience, but all too often people don't do it because they've got "more important things to do." Yeah, like worry. Right?

The other evening, I wandered out under the stars in my backyard and, then, just sat and pondered the vastness of what lay before me. Where is my place in the scheme of things? What am I to do in this life? How small I am when the grandeur of this world, this universe is contemplated. These are thoughts each of us should have at some points in our lives. They help to put life into perspective and give us a reason to chuckle at ourselves.

I guess it's a quirk of human nature, but most people take themselves too seriously. We all think we're a little more important than we actually are or that we have to lead our lives a certain way. What's more, we teach that bad habit to our children at an extremely young age. Why would we do that — saddle our children with the false "pressures" we feel? Childhood is the only time of life when human beings do not have to feel a lot of the concerns of the adult life we think are unavoidable. And then we go and spoil it by telling our kids to worry and try to get ahead and to be the best. Thus, the cycle starts over.

Maybe the old adage is true: Misery loves company.

I certainly don't mean this as an insult to the airline industry, but for what it's worth, the next time I go on a long trip, I'll drive.

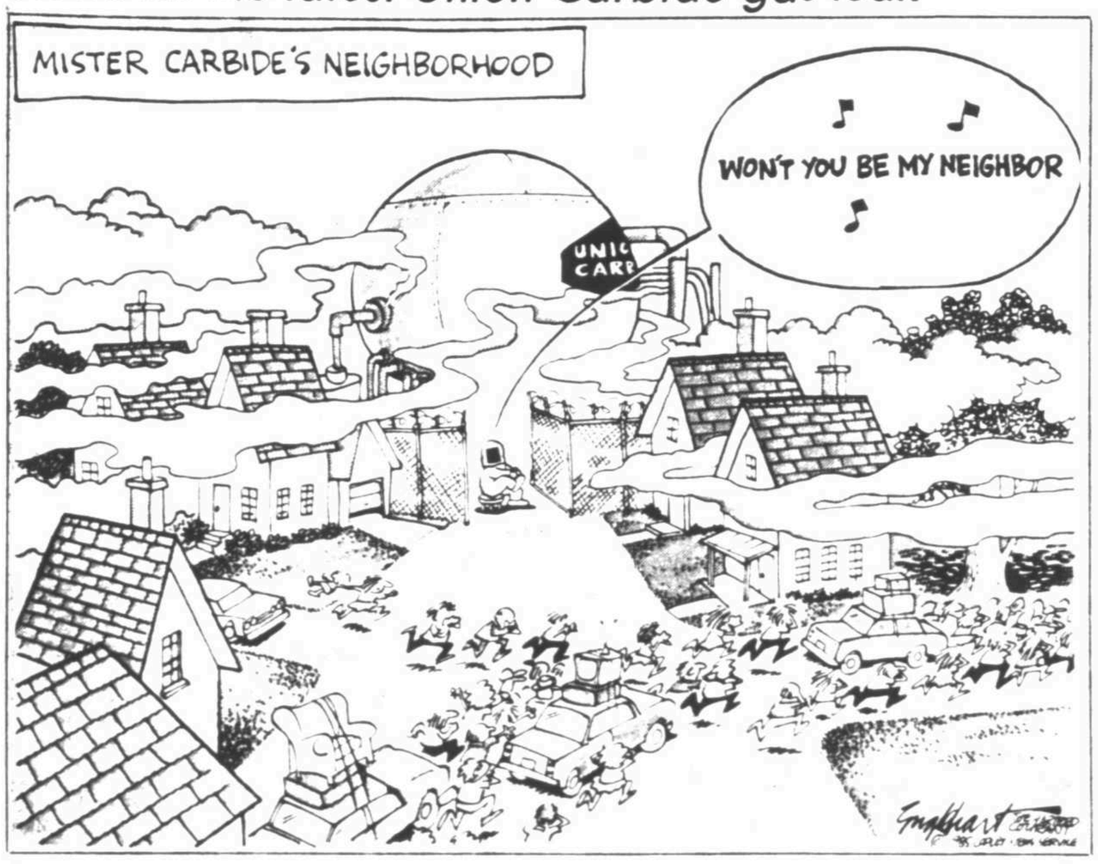

I fully understand the speed, ease and convenience of air travel, but those recent air disasters — in Dallas, Japan and England — have given me ample cause to think twice before flying.

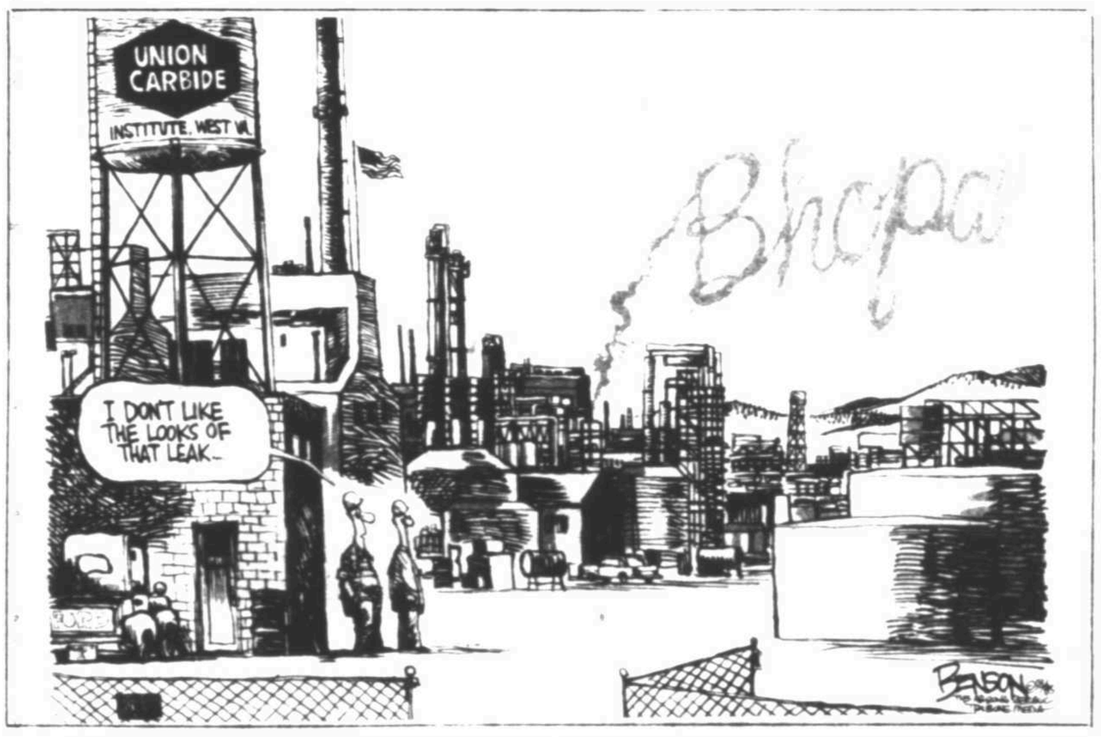

Oh, I know it's safer than driving, but when I drive, I'm in control of the vehicle. My life's in my own hands. I can handle that. When one flies, however, that's not the case.

Even a seat in the tail section of an airliner wouldn't be reassuring to me right now.

LETTERS

Just this once, I'll offer reply to others' ideas

I enjoy reading letters to the editor. I seldom deem it advisable to reply to the opinions expressed by others but I decided to do it just this once.

ABORTIONS: I am in favor of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. I am not opposed to the reproduction of the human race, but I question the feasibility of uncontrolled pregnancies. The world can ill afford a population explosion, as is apparent in the poverty and pestilence existing in underdeveloped nations. I am sure that if I agree not to interfere with the anti-abortionists' propaganda and programming, that they will agree to provide shelter, food and clothing, education and employment to the results of unintended, unnecessary and unwanted pregnancies that wind up on welfare, because I do not think that it should be my responsibility to support them.

ANIMALS: In my neighborhood there are more dogs and cats than humans. I read letters by pro-life animal lovers who bemoan the accidental injury of neglected animals darting in and out of vehicular traffic. Pity the poor driver who almost wrecks his car dodging one of these animals. I read articles and see video hypes for adopting "orphaned" animals, but I see no stories about the living conditions of many animals confined to "runs" with less square footage than the average living room. No protection from the elements and the "runs" are never cleaned.

Pity the poor neighbor who shares a common fence to a bevy of vociferous Dobermans who sleep all day and bark all night. Said neighbor, wishing to enjoy fresh air, cannot keep the windows open due to the nightly noise and the stench wafted upon the southerly breeze. The cats hunt a yard without grass. Since I attempt to raise a small garden in my side yard, it is the haven for the neighborhood cats who are hunting soft soil on which to defecate. Have you tried to weed a garden while watching for "soft" spots between the rows of peas and peppers? The animal control people will pick up these straying animals if you will catch and pen them. Have you ever tried to catch a strange cat?

APARTHEID: I recently read an article on apartheid in a Fort Worth paper. The columnist explained that apartheid meant separate development and was the choice of the dominant native tribes of Africa, now the developing nations of the African continent. I will not attempt to address the pros and cons of apartheid, but simply suggest that if South Africa were the economic and political giant trying to impose social opinion on the good ol' U.S.A., we would be non-plused to say the least. According to the columnist, apartheid dates back to the late 1940s or early 1950s. Before we try to police the world we should eliminate apartheid in this country. The American Indian Nations (tribes on reservations) are developing along lines separately from the Anglo-dominated political/economic society.

Is there anything wrong with the development of a society for the purpose of maintaining unique customs as long as it is compatible with neighboring societies. Does the old adage still hold true, "When in Rome...?"

Sanctions would hurt blacks in South Africa

My wife and I, along with three other Midland couples, just returned from a three-week visit of South Africa.

We found the land beautiful and the people intelligent and friendly. We saw none of the violence reported in the newspapers, nor have any of our South African friends. The problem is confined to the black neighborhoods and it is black against black, not black against white.

Most of the violence is done by the "Tsotsis," black teen-age gangs that terrorize the black communities. These teenagers are unemployed, hungry and don't have anything else to do.

Unemployment is the primary cause for black unrest, not apartheid.

Within the next month the Senate will vote on a bill that imposes sanctions against South Africa. If this bill is passed, the South Africa businessmen will be hurt, but the first to feel the hurt will be the blacks. The bill will cause more blacks to become unemployed and hurt the very ones the bill is designed to help.

Most of the blacks don't want these sanctions. Only the Communist-led radicals are pushing for it.

Let me urge the readers of this paper to write their senator, as I have done, and ask him to vote against this bill.

Why such a debate over new hospital?

I'm a little confused as to why there is such a debate over the new Physicians and Surgeons Hospital. Having lived in Midland over 22 years, it seems a first-class, quality hospital would be welcomed not only by the medical community but by the general public as well.

The two existing hospitals have served their respective purposes and, in fact, still do. But competition is part of the great American way and I don't see where hospitals are any different from other businesses which must compete in the marketplace.

Historically, competition has proven healthy by causing all parties involved to stay on their toes, to provide the best service possible for the least amount of dollars. Regardless of who owns which hospital, ultimately, it is my choice as a patient where I want to be cared for and if I can get the specialized, professional care locally, I just might not go out-of-town for it.

I have been a patient in other than Midland hospitals and have never delayed admission to find out who owned the facilities. Why would I do that here? Besides, a for-profit and/or proprietary hospital would most likely be better stewards of patient revenue. Physicians and Surgeons Hospital makes sense to me.

Suicidal deals have made U.S. lose power

THERE HE GOES AGAIN! How has the United States become a second-rate power in less than two decades? How have the Communists meanwhile become a superpower? By our leaders making suicidal deals like that made by our "conservative" President Reagan with Red China on July 23. Anyone who is well-informed about what is really going on in the news will know that I am referring to the pact that will make available as much as $12 billion worth of nuclear technology for the Red Chinese.

After the so-called Sino-Soviet split, our leaders did the same thing for Moscow. Claiming the rift proved that the Soviets were "mellowing," the United States poured vast amounts of high technology and credit (backed by U.S. taxpayers, of course) into the Soviet Union. Our leaders said aiding Moscow was in the interests of "peace." However, thanks to our help, the Soviet Union has become the most advanced military power and the foremost threat to real peace.

Instead of learning a lesson from this suicidal folly, our government is determined to compound its error. Our current policy of aiding Red China is still premised on the notion that Peking and Moscow are bitter enemies. Justifying the administration's pledge to supply Peking even with military aid, Defense Secretary Weinberger referred to China as our "ally" against what he called our "common enemy," the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, Peking emphatically denies it is allied with the U.S. against Moscow. And on July 22, Peking announced it will teach Russian to the Chinese masses to cement Sino-Soviet ties.

Anyone with any sense understands that Red China and the Soviet Union are bound together in a common conspiracy to impose Communism on the entire world. Between the two, look how much they already have. Giving aid and comfort to either tyranny is morally wrong and strategically suicidal.

Recent school board decision disappointing

I am disappointed in MISD's recent school board decision to close campuses and concerned that 2 or 3 percent can dictate school policy.

Parents are deluding themselves in thinking that a closed campus environment is a cure for their children's drug problems. They may have plugged up a hole but another outlet will be found. This isn't solving their problem. What is more, radical surgery for the entire student body is not a just solution and penalizes the 97 percent who follow and obey the rules. In addition, those kids on drugs need not only a dose of punishment; they need help.

Let's face it! Parents are shifting their responsibility and dumping their problems on MISD. If my child violated school policy, I would deal with him swiftly and effectively. He would be punished and he would shoulder the responsibility and be held accountable for his actions. Parents need to get tough and take the initiative in tackling their problems and they must stop expecting and demanding that schools become surrogate parents. Parents must return to parenting and teachers must return to teaching. Parents have a duty and responsibility to see that their kids are ready to learn when they arrive at 8 a.m. Educators need to get on their soapbox. They have a case to plead.

I am sorry the freedom of choice has been taken away from the students. Consciously or unconsciously, we make choices every day, and when we make a wrong choice, we pay the penalty.

Students need this experience of trial and error for this is how they learn and bloom and grow. We can't protect and shield our kids forever. When they finally get freedom in college they won't know how to handle it and then it's too late. They need to learn this now before they leave the nest.

I don't see any winners with current board philosophy. The board has been unjust to the innocent, lenient to the guilty and wasteful in the use of school funds.

Soviet actions have ended U.S. policy of isolation

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

SAN FRANCISCO — Both George Washington and Thomas Jefferson advised our young country to avoid foreign entanglements and alliances. But as the world became increasingly smaller and we grew stronger the concept became no longer valid. America fought two world wars and a few "police actions" to provide stability in a turbulent world, but has sought peaceful solutions in troubled areas whenever possible.

Since World War II though, the Soviet Union has spread its imperialistic pattern on many fronts. The most recent foray has been in Central America. Nicaragua is apparently the chosen instrument by which the U.S.S.R intends to crack Central America with the assistance of its surrogate, Cuba. By making Nicaragua a military state with more weapons combined than the rest of her neighbors the Marxist junta also trains and supplies guerrillas in next door El Salvador.

But the anti-Sandinista forces, for a long time poorly armed and trained, managed to keep Sandinista regime forces at bay. Presently, with funds supplied by private sources in the U.S. and rather meager Congressional support, the anti-junta forces have set regime units reeling back in disorder, inflicting heavy casualties. They have the benefit also of excellent on-the-ground intelligence and sound training.

The former Sandinista guerrillas who prided themselves recently on killing four off-duty U.S. Marines in El Salvador are openly fighting and debating their role with the junta back in Managua, the rundown capital.

The rift between the guerrilla arm of the Sandinista junta and the regime has gone deep, knowledgeable sources in Nicaragua say. These messages, often delivered at great risk to the informants, have been carried by messenger and via clandestine radio with varying frequencies so that their whereabouts remain unknown.

It seems to me that the Sandinista guerrilla leaders now in Nicaragua are criticizing their own military and some of their own traveling leftist political spokesmen.

This was forecast months ago by Eden Pastora, better known as "Commander Zero," who has fought pro-junta guerrillas in the jungles of Nicaragua and who himself was once field commander of the revolutionary troops that ousted ex-dictator Somoza. Commander Zero, on whose head the junta has placed a high reward, recently crashed in a helicopter but survived to make his way back to his camp. He always insisted that junta leader Daniel Ortega sold out the revolution, which is why the junta must, in Commander Zero's words, "Be totally and thoroughly destroyed."

In Nicaragua there is a bewildering assemblage of North Koreans, Libyans, Bulgars, Cubans, Czechs and PLO, all of whom are supervised by Soviets in mufti.

The U.S.S.R doles out hard cash to the economically stricken junta through numerous cash and carry bags laden with Yankee dollars transported from Cuba. Nicaragua itself is an impoverished nation because its regime pays high interest on arms purchases to the U.S.S.R.

Soviet intrusion into our hemisphere is real and was allowed. How would Moscow react if we actively aided its satellites? Explosively, I'll bet.

The post-Vietnam disinclination by Americans to become involved abroad is a great open-sesame for the Russians. It has enabled the U.S.S.R. to use its surrogates in the Middle East, Far East, Africa and Central America.

Ironically we agreed to the Helsinki Accords but the Soviet Union shows little sign of relaxing its hold on Afghanistan or prisoners whisked away to forced labor in the Gulags. Now, the Soviets shed propaganda tears on behalf of the blacks in South Africa while the U.S. administration has done what it can to ameliorate the tension. Pro-Moscow agitators have used propaganda devices to call openly for bloodshed in which only black and white South Africans would suffer and the Soviets would hopefully profit.

Profiting from chaos is the Soviets' method, but in the case of Nicaragua it may boomerang. That's why the reports from Nicaragua seem so positive for the present, and since the little country lies within our hemisphere I do hope that this news catches on and snowballs.

Little Panama in Central America has just asked for our help to consolidate democracy and continue civilian government while restricting all Marxist influences. The trend has been hailed by our administration as a healthy one for the hemisphere which I hope others will follow.

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin will host an orientation for new and current students at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Student Lounge.

Dean of Admissions Dr. Russ Monahan said the orientation is being conducted to allow prospective students who have already been admitted as well as those who contemplate attending UTPB in the future the opportunity to ask questions in an informal, relaxed atmosphere.

New options concerning the various scholarships available and the new "Emergency Tuition and Fees Loan" program and "Option to Pay Tuition by Installment" program will be covered at orientation.

The orientation will be prior to fall registration, scheduled to begin Sept. 3. For information, call 563-2400, extension 2210.

Driver education class registering

From Staff Reports

Midland High School students interested in taking driver education during the first semester of the 1985-86 school year must register and pay fees Monday through Friday.

The one-semester course will include both classroom and behind-the-wheel instruction. Tuition is $95.

State law requires school districts to offer driver education as a one semester course, not during physical education as in the past.

Students interested in enrolling during the second semester may do so during the school year at Lee High School.

Disabled rig leg removed

SABINE PASS (AP) — Workers on Saturday removed a 188-foot long drilling rig leg that collapsed in the Sabine River, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

A mile-long stretch of the waterway was expected to reopen about 6:30 p.m. Saturday to all vessels, said Lt. Bob Fellarth of the Coast Guard Safety Marine Office.

The leg unit collapsed Thursday afternoon as it was being moved about four miles southeast of the Port Arthur Bridge.

A derrick barge was brought from Galveston late Friday to remove the leg of the 2-ton unit, Fellarth said.

The Coast Guard designated a mile-long safety zone and permitted only vessels such as tugboats and fishing boats to pass through the area. The vessels were escorted through the safety zone by the Coast Guard.

Officials feared larger vessels might cause waves that could topple the leg.

The rig, owned by Fluor Drilling Co., is one of 32 lying idle in the channel in the Port Arthur-Sabine Pass area.

Man recieves second organ

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A man who underwent a heart transplant 11 years ago and received a new kidney three weeks ago is the first person with organs from two donors, a doctor said.

Louis Bonesio, 51, of Gilroy, was reported doing well after his May 1974 heart transplant until he developed kidney disease. He underwent dialysis for 15 months, until a kidney became available with the July 29 death of a donor.

City Council to hold hearings on tax rate

Midland City Council will be holding a public hearing at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday at City Hall Council Chambers, 300 N. Loraine St., on setting the tax rate and giving final approval to Revenue Sharing and Community Development Block Grant budgets. The council also will consider approving the budget for 1985-86.

Total budget for next fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1, calls for expenditures of $61,318,328 compared to $57,649,579 for this year. The budget calls for a 3 percent increase in taxes.

The $899,000 in federal CD funds has been proposed to be divided among parks, street paving, Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, code enforcement, housing rehabilitation, Taylor Park Child Care Center and Freewill Foster Home.

Revenue Sharing money has been allocated for updating the city's computer system and adding to the police department's computers and additional dumpsters.

The council will rehear a request from Christian Church of Midland for a specific use permit for a day nursery on the north side of Neely Avenue between Ward and Maberry streets. On July 9, the council denied the permit, based on objections from some people in the neighborhood. But on Aug. 13, the council voted to reconsider the issue at Tuesday's meeting. That hearing will be at 1:45 p.m.

At 1:35 p.m., the council will hold a public hearing on a request by Celedonio G. Rey for a zone change from 1F-2, single family dwelling district, to PD, planned district for a housing development. The request is for the west side of North Edwards Street south of the intersection with West Cowden Street.

A 2:15 p.m. public hearing is to consider an amendment to the zoning code concerning temporary uses of land.

The Air Park Master Plan will go to the council for its approval before bids can be sought to construct the new facility northeast of the city. In addition, the Aviation Department will be asking approval of an ordinance establishing parking areas at Midland Regional Airport.

Public Works Department is seeking approval to set up Stop signs at various locations at the Regional Airport and for an ordinance to set speed limits on public roadways at that facility.

The council will consider a resolution authorizing executive of water supply facilities and services contract with Colorado River Municipal Water District.

MISD Trustees

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees will meet at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday in the MISD Board Room, 702 N. N Street.

Trustees will:

— Hear a summary of MISD recruiting and hiring for 1985.

— Consider approval of a pilot program to include junior achievement applied economics as a supplement to economics with emphasis on free enterprise.

— Consider approval of revised fees for driver education.

— Consider approval of bids for the Midland High School tennis courts, Lee High School track, Midland Memorial Stadium locker room and restroom facility and pest control.

— Consider approval of final budget amendments for 1984-85.

— Consider adoption of the 1985-86 budget.

— Adopt a resolution to set the tax rate for 1985-86.

— Hear a review of the elementary school social studies program.

— Consider approval of correlated language arts curriculum guide for grades 9-12.

— Consider approval of a stricter criteria for maintenance of Level II on the career ladder.

— Change pledged securities.

Housing Authority

Housing Authority of the City of Midland will meet at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the City Hall Conference Room, located in the basement.

On the agenda are a report on the program of rehabilitating homes, renewal of a service contract on air conditioners and a consideration to subscribe to Housing Affairs Letter.

City to receive first check from bank franchise tax

From Staff Reports

The city of Midland is due to receive a check for $146,910 from the state representing the first collection of the state's new franchise tax on banks, according to information released from State Comptroller Bob Bullock's office.

In addition, Midland Independent School District will receive $274,000.

Bullock is sending checks this week totalling $61.6 million to 1,996 local taxing districts as a result of a new law bringing banks under the franchise tax.

The law, passed last year by lawmakers, allocates receipts from the tax to cities, counties, school districts and other local taxing units where banks are located.

Other local taxing jurisdictions receiving checks and their amounts are:

— Midland County, $67,273;

— Midland County Hospital District, $24,080.

— Midland Junior College District, $33,651.

1746 Battle of Culloden halted Bonnie Charlie

Bonnie Prince Charlie's attempt to seize the throne of his Stuart grandfather was crushed at the Battle of Culloden in 1746. About 9,000 well-trained soldiers under the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II, faced 5,000 Scottish Highlanders. An estimated 1,000 Scots were killed and another 1,000 captured while the English suffered 50 killed and 200 wounded.

Odessa's Ector Theater closes its doors after 34 years of latest films

ODESSA (AP) — Moviegoers once lined up for two blocks to watch a film in the Ector, a plush theater that opened its doors downtown 34 years ago this month.

But the lines grew shorter over the years as suburban theaters lured them away, and after losing money for years, the Ector showed its last film Thursday, said theater co-owner Argene Hodge.

The big theater, with its light pink walls decorated with pale green and gold wheat stalks that climb from floor to ceiling, remained virtually unchanged from the day it opened in August 1951, Hodge said.

"When it was built, it was built for comfort and capacity," he said, noting the theater seated 1,350 until half of the downstairs seats were removed late last year.

"Theaters that are put up now are for quick turnover," Hodge said, "not for comfort or sound."

Four brothers — including Hodge's father, Homer J. Hodge of Winters — were principal owners of the cinema, he said.

Film enthusiasts in recent years have gone in ever-increasing numbers to theaters that have sprung up in suburban shopping malls, prompting owners to close the Ector, he said.

Hodge, who also owns another theater, said he and relatives have been losing money on the Ector for years.

"A building this old and as much memories as it has, it's hard to close it up," Hodge, 54, told the Odessa American. "But there comes a time where you can't continue to put money into it to keep it open."

The Ector, with its specially sculpted scalloped ceiling, featured the best-engineered sound of any theater in the state, Hodge said, but now, the ceiling is water-stained and soiled.

Karl Malone...the Mailman delivers.

Mailman delivers

Life is more than just basketball

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

For the tardy arrival at the basketball clinic, the demonstration underway, like a missed shot off the boards, was up for grabs.

As a gathering of media, parents, the curious, but mostly youngsters, gathered at one end of the court, it seemed as though Karl "Mailman" Malone was trying either to make a slam dunk or shatter the glass backboard, for which he has a reputation rivaling that of Darryl Dawkins.

In either case, the All-America from Louisiana Tech was failing miserably, time after time. Of course, there was one other option. He could be trying to knock the roof off the Midland College P.E. building. And considering his size, 6-9, 247 pounds, it was worth considering.

At any rate, each of the slam dunks hit the back of the rim and the ball wound up ricocheting in the rafters of the old gym like a confused pinball.

Not long after, as the post-clinic autograph session came to an end, the Mailman doodled on the posters, touching up the cartoon of Spud Webb with horn-rimmed specs, beard and applying a cast around his leg, presumably to prevent a 5-7 guard from exploring basketball's outer space, where he has no business.

Outside the gym, Malone asked the writer who was going to give him a lift to the motel to wait a few minutes. The reporter couldn't help overhear the No. 1 draft pick of the Utah Jazz discuss life with the group of youngsters.

"I had to sit out my first year in college," he told them, "because of my grade average. It was the best thing that could have happened to me. In high school I was the star of the team. Everything came easy for me. People made it easy and I accepted it as my right. I was better than anybody else."

Malone went on, "But sitting out that first year in college brought me back to earth. It made me realize that anything worth having is worth working for."

The young giant warned his young listeners of the pitfalls of athletic fame. "There are people out there who are just hanging around for the chance to take advantage of you just because of who you are. You must be on your guard. No one is going to give you something for nothing."

He said, "Listen to your parents, your mother. I remember when I was young my mother would lecture me and I'd think 'Isn't that woman ever going to stop talking'. Later I realized it was all concern for me. She just wanted me to be liked and to be successful."

In the car, Malone expressed regret that a star athlete had made the papers that morning for DWI, "He has a responsibility to the young people. I had heroes growing up...all kids do. It's too bad that happened. I hate to see it."

MALONE will be one of the players performing Thursday night in the Bill Williams Tire Company/Stadium Sports Classic, the benefit game for the Spud Webb scholarship fund at MC's Chaparral Center.

Asked about his obvious concern for young people, Malone admitted that he feels clinics are part of it...the public attention from the basketball fame..."I feel I have an opportunity to help young people learn from my mistakes. It's part of the responsibility that goes with the gifts God gave me and other athletes who have had the chance to make a name for themselves."

Brought up in rural Louisiana, Salt Lake City and Utah might not seem like the ideal place to break into the NBA. But Malone, who has signed a four-year contract with the Jazz, likes what he has seen.

For one thing, he rode with Coach Frank Layden in one of the honor cars in the annual Brigham Young parade this summer, and was wildly cheered by expectant fans. "It's one of the three longest parades in the world. It starts at 9 a.m. and ends around 3 p.m."

As for Mormons and their beliefs, "They look at their religion like we look at ours," says Malone, a Baptist. And Salt Lake City... "It's a laid-back the kind of life-style that I'm used to. I didn't come from a big city and I don't party. We should do fine together."

IT WAS partly because of his mother that Malone is embarking upon a career as a power forward in the NBA and not a defensive tackle or tight end in the NFL.

"My sports were baseball and basketball...I never played football. I could have gone to a high school eight miles down the road and played, but my mother wouldn't let me. 'You are going to play basketball,' she told me."

That was a blessing for quarterbacks and defensive backs and maybe broke the hearts of a few college coaches, perhaps, but it was tough

Owls have high hopes for 1985

AREA FOOTBALL

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one of a series of previews on area high school football teams. Today, a look at the Reagan County Owls. Tuesday, Crane.

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

BIG LAKE — It's looking like it could be a BIG year at Reagan County in the District 8-2A football chase, and the reason is some BIG returners up front for the Owls.

Coach Ronnie Reeger, entering his second year with Reagan County, welcomed a talented squad to camp this summer amid high expectations among Owl-backers.

"Most of the preseason polls have us favored, and I'd rather be picked on top than anywhere else," Reeger admits of the preseason hype. "It just shows that people think something of the talent we have. Of course, it doesn't mean anything until the season is all over.

"We don't really have any more size or experience than McCamey, though. Everyone in this district has something going for them, we're just the ones they decided to put the bug on."

BUT LOOKING around Reeger's returning roster, it's easy to see why most District 8-2A coaches size up Reagan County as the favorite.

Anchoring an experienced front line are 6-5, 236-pound center/tackle Mitchel Martin and 222-pound tackle Tim Nichols, who will help open holes for the strong Owl running game.

The main cog in Reagan County's ground attack will again be fullback Tim Tatum, a sure-fire college prospect entering his senior season. Tatum is entrenched in the backfield after being moved from the end position last season. But if he is a strong offensive performer, Tatum is even more feared on the defensive side of the field.

The key in the offensive backfield for Reeger and staff, however, is the return of three-year starter Bobby Gunnels at quarterback. Gunnels is primarily a running signal-caller, but the Owls pulled off a few games last season going to his strong arm in game-saving situations.

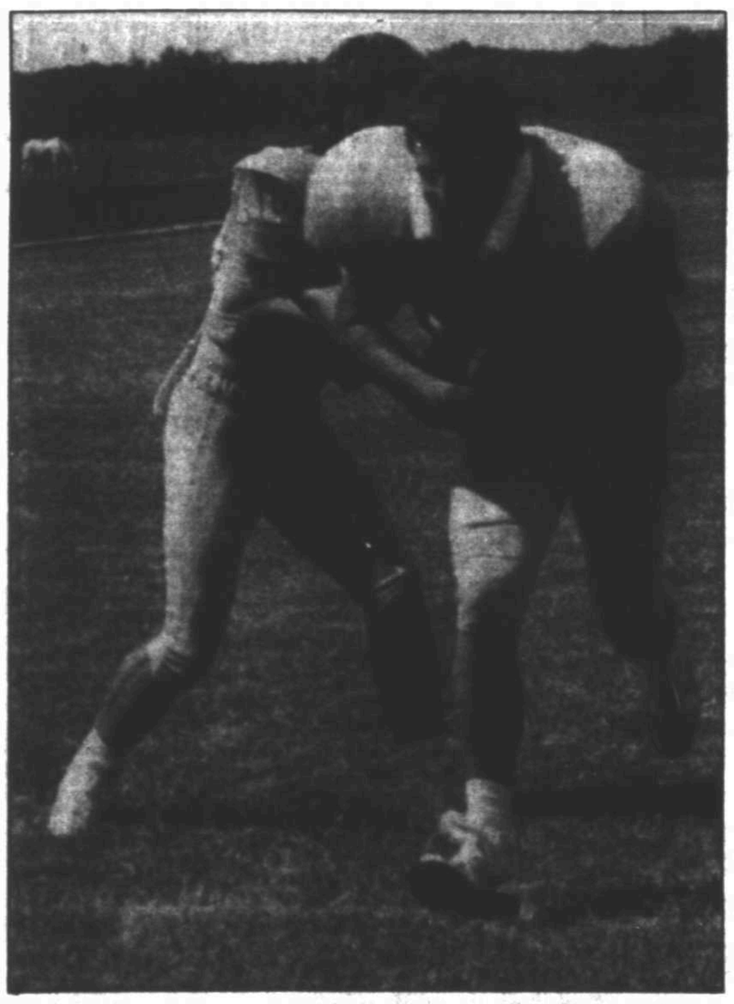

"WE THREW several times in desperation situations last season and won a few games because of it," Reeger said. "We are a running team more than anything else, but because of our success, we will throw some. We have a good receiving corps this season, though. I think we're better there this year than last year."

The big reason for Reeger's optimism for the pass-catching crew is senior Robert Saldibar, a fine pass-catcher and a cornerstone in the Owls defensive secondary.

But Reeger is quick to point out the emphasis is on defense in this tough 2A district, and defense wins football games.

"This is a defensive district, that is its main strength. And we rely on our defense to keep us in football games. I don't think anyone in the district is in a really down enough this year to where the offense is going to score a lot of points. You'll have to win with defense."

Ponies start chase for 11-0 vs. UTEP

SWC Preview

DALLAS (AP) — Humbled Southern Methodist, having to live with probation jokes and the frustration of knowing it can't win the Southwest Conference football title, starts getting even against the outside world Sept. 7.

The Mustangs, placed on three years' probation by the NCAA, open their season Sept. 7 in Texas Stadium against Texas-El Paso.

SMU then meets Arizona before it plunges into a full conference schedule against the others schools who have a goal the Mustangs don't — the Cotton Bowl.

"We can go 11-0 and that's our goal," said lineman Joe Phillips. "We'll be close together now. We still have something to play for."

They can also play the spoiler.

Dutch Baughman, assistant commissioner of the SWC, says SMU's league games will count in the standings.

"Everybody in the conference has to play them (the Mustangs)," said Baughman. "We look at it this way — every time SMU plays a league team somebody wins and somebody loses."

SMU will also be on television this year and has a nationally televised (Dec. 7) date against Oklahoma.

Other SMU TV games include Nov. 2 at Texas A&M and Nov. 16 against Texas Tech.

The Mustangs can't play in bowl games the next two years and will not be on television in 1986. Also, SMU will have no scholarships next year and only 15 to give in 1987.

SMU, the second winningest college football team in the nation the last three years, could be a national power again.

Coach Bobby Collins will decide soon how many of his 15 freshmen to redshirt because of the depth problems the Mustangs will have in three years. The Mustangs will have only 65 scholarship players in 1987, 30 below the allowable.

The Mustangs have 13 returning starters including perhaps the best one-two tailback tandem in the country in Reggie Dupard and Jeff Atkins.

Dupard, a senior, has rushed for 2,448 yards and 27 touchdowns. Last season he was the nation's No. 12 rusher with 1,160 yards and 16 touchdowns.

Also, the Mustangs recruited and signed the top running back in Texas, Bill Jones of Corsicana, a power runner with speed.

Don King, the Southwest Conference's all-conference quarterback, returns to lead a team that averaged 400 yards total offense per game last year.

The swift receivers include Jeffrey Jacobs, Ron Morris and Marquis Pleasant.

The Mustangs will have six senior starters on defense and seven senior starters on offense.

Collins has posted a 31-4-1 record since he came from Southern Mississippi in 1982.

SMU has accomplished what no other SWC team has ever done and that is to win 10 or more games in a season for four straight years.

Last year SMU was 10-2 including a 27-20 victory over Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl and finished eighth in the final Associated Press poll.

Chiefs rally to spill Oilers, 24-19

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Kansas City's Herman Heard caught a game-winning 22-yard touchdown pass and Kevin Ross returned an interception 60 yards for another score to lead the Chiefs to a 24-19 exhibition victory over the Houston Oilers Saturday night.

Kansas City, 2-1, fell behind 19-17 late in the third quarter on a 32-yard field goal by Houston kicker Joe Cooper before rallying on Heard's score with 5:27 to play.

Cooper recovered with his late field goal after throwing an unplanned pass earlier in the third quarter.

He had lined up to attempt a 52-yard field goal in the third quarter, but a bad snap from center Chuck Thomas forced him to try a desperation pass to tight end Jamie Williams.

Ross intercepted and ran in for the touchdown, giving the Chiefs a 17-16 lead. Moments later Cooper redeemed himself with a 32-yard field goal with 1:10 left in the third quarter.

The Oilers, 1-3, took a 16-10 halftime lead on a three-yard-high dive by Butch Woolfolk, quarterback Warren Moon's scrambling three-yard pass to tight end Cliff Dressel and Cooper's 47-yard field goal.

Houston's first-half touchdowns both were set up by Kansas City turnovers.

Noseguard Brian Sochia recovered a Bruce King fumble prior to Dressel's touchdown catch, and Steve Brown intercepted a pass by Bill Kenney to set up Woolfolk's score.

Dolphins 23, Raiders 17

LOS ANGELES — Rookie running backs Lorenzo Hampton and Ron Davenport provided Miami with a potent rushing attack and first-year place-kicker Fuad Reveiz booted three field goals as the Dolphins topped the Los Angeles Raiders.

NFL Roundup

The victory in the nationally televised contest at the Los Angeles Coliseum raised Miami's preseason record to 2-1 while the error-prone Raiders, who lost five fumbles, fell to 0-3.

Hampton, a first-round draft choice from Florida, gained 96 yards on 16 carries while Davenport, a sixth-round selection from Louisville, picked up 80 yards on 15 attempts.

Davenport scored Miami's first touchdown on an 18-yard run early in the second quarter to snap a 3-3 tie and put the Dolphins ahead for good.

Reveiz, a seventh-round draft pick from Tennessee, hit from 29 yards away to give Miami a 3-0 lead after 5:01 of play. He then connected from 25 yards out with 1:42 remaining before halftime to make it 13-3 at that stage, and from 29 yards away with 1:57 remaining in the game to complete the scoring.

Seahawks 27, Vikings 10

MINNEAPOLIS — Terry Taylor, Paul Moyer and Jacob Green ignited the Seattle Seahawks' aggressive defense, which intercepted five Minnesota passes, returned a fumble for a touchdown and blocked a punt, leading Seattle to a victory over the Vikings.

Midway through the first quarter, Taylor made his first of two interceptions and returned the ball 46 yards. Six plays later, Curt Warner's four-yard run gave Seattle a 7-0 lead with 4:51 left in the period.

On the Vikings' next play, quarterback Tommy Kramer fumbled and Green scooped up the loose football and rambled six yards into the end zone to make it 14-0.

1922 — In one of the wildest games ever played, the Chicago Cubs beat the Philadelphia Phillies 26-23. The Cubs led 25-6 in the fourth inning, but held on. The game ended with the Phillies leaving the bases loaded.

1967 — Dean Chance of Minnesota hurled his second no-hitter of the month, defeating the Indians 2-1. Chance hurled an abbreviated five perfect innings against Boston 17 days before.

Cub pitchers pick on Reds' 'Hard-Luck' Soto, 4-0

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Three Chicago pitchers combined on a seven-hitter as the Cubs defeated hard-luck Mario Soto and the Reds.

Soto, 10-15, allowed just four hits and an unearned run in seven innings, fanning six and retiring down 13 batters in a row over one stretch. But he still dropped his fourth consecutive decision and has lost 12 of his last 14. The Reds have scored two or fewer runs for him in 14 of his 31 starts.

Steve Trout, just off the disabled list, blanked the Reds over the first four innings, allowing three hits, in his first appearance since being disabled July 23 by an inflamed nerve in his left elbow. Winner George Frazier, 7-5, allowed three more hits over the next three innings and Lee Smith went the last two for his 28th save.

An unusual play let the Cubs score the game's first run in the second inning. Ron Cey singled and started a hit-and-run play with Leon Durham at bat. Durham's grounder deflected off the glove of first baseman Tony Perez and rolled into center field for an error that let Cey score standing up.

The score remained 1-0 until the Cubs added three runs off Ted Power in the ninth. Singles by Ryne Sandberg and Keith Moreland plus a double by Cey produced the first run. After Durham was intentionally walked, Richie Hebner batted for Chris Speier and Joe Price relieved Power.

Davey Lopes then batted for Hebner and hit into double play via the plate. Tom Hume relieved Price but Steve Lake singled for the final two runs.

Cincinnati Manager Pete didn't play and remained 12 hits shy of breaking Ty Cobb's all-time mark of 4,191 hits.

NL Roundup

of them have come at home.

The Phillies took a 2-0 lead in the first inning. With one out, Juan Samuel doubled and Von Hayes walked. After Mike Schmidt popped out, the runners moved up on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Wilson.

In the fourth, Wilson singled, was balked to second and scored when Giants right fielder David Green misplayed Rick Schu's liner for a two-base error.

The Phillies added three more runs in the sixth inning. Hayes singled, moved up on a groundout and crossed on Wilson's third single. After Wilson stole second, Schu walked and Tom Foley doubled both runners across.

Phillies 9, Giants 2

PHILADELPHIA — Glenn Wilson and Tom Foley drove in three runs apiece while Charles Hudson scattered 11 hits as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the San Francisco Giants.

Hudson, 7-11, pitched his first nine-inning complete game of the season as the Phillies defeated Mike Krukow, 8-9. Wilson has 77 RBIs and 53

Mets 5, Padres 1

NEW YORK — Ray Knight rapped out four hits and drove in three runs and Jesse Orosco bailed Ron Darling out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the eighth inning as the New York Mets defeated San Diego and ended the Padres' five-game winning streak.

Knight, who came into the game 0-for-19, had RBI singles in the second, sixth and eighth innings as the Mets rebounded from a double-header loss to the Padres on Friday night.

Darling, 12-5, left after a walk to Garry Templeton, Tony Gwynn's single and Steve Garvey's bunt single loaded the bases in the eighth with the Mets leading 3-1. Orosco retired Graig Nettles on a pop fly to shortstop Rafael Santana, who made the catch with his back to the plate in shallow left.

Terry Kennedy, who hit into a double play with two runners on base and no one out in the sixth, did it again. Orosco, covering at first, dug shortstop Santana's relay out of the dirt to complete the double play. He went on to record his 14th save.

After Tim Flannery's suicide squeeze bunt gave the Padres a 1-0 lead in the top of the second, the Mets took a 2-1 lead in their half of the inning against Dave Dravecky, 11-8, breaking a streak of 17 scoreless innings against San Diego.

Expos 5, Dodgers 2

MONTREAL — Tim Wallach hit a three-run homer as the Montreal Expos snapped a five-game losing streak with a victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers behind the five-hit pitching of Bryn Smith and Jeff Reardon.

Smith, 15-4, who allowed both Los Angeles runs and four hits in eight innings, retired the first 12 Dodgers before Pedro Guerrero drew a lead-off walk in the fifth. Guerrero later scored on a single by Steve Sax to cut Montreal's lead to 2-1.

Wallach's 12th homer in the bottom of the fifth inning off Rick Honeycutt, 7-11, was his first since Aug. 12 and his first at Olympic Stadium since July 19. With one out in the fifth, Andre Dawson doubled, Hubie Brooks walked and Wallach drilled a 1-0 pitch over the left-field wall.

Hot-hitting Tim Raines scored Montreal's first two runs. Raines, who has 11 hits in his last 17 at-bats, got an infield hit in the first inning and went to second on a throwing error by Los Angeles third baseman Enos Cabell. Two outs later, Brooks singled to score Raines.

Cardinals 7, Braves 0

ATLANTA — Terry Pendleton and Ozzie Smith each drove in two runs and Vince Coleman had three hits, an RBI and two stolen bases as the St. Louis Cardinals blanked the Atlanta Braves in a game called because of rain in the sixth inning.

The Cardinals had to wait out a pair of delays — one for 14 minutes and another for 2 hours, 4 minutes — before gaining their fourth victory in a row and retaining a one-game lead over the New York Mets in the NL East race.

The victory went to Bob Forsch, 6-5, who blanked the Braves on three hits for four innings. He was lifted after the lengthy rain delay and Bill Campbell retired the Braves in order in the fifth before rain halted play for good with one out and one runner aboard in the St. Louis sixth.

Thompson, Folk don't need light

From Staff Reports

Steve Thompson and Ron Folk proved to be the best golfers without sunlight at Mission Country Club Saturday, winning the club's member-guest tournament on a one-hole playoff — after dark.

Thompson and Folk carded a tournament total of 211 after three rounds, but it was a after dark par on a par 4 that won the championship.

The teams of Mickey Jones-Bruce Bangert and Robert Cannon-Kelly Sewell also finished with 211 totals to enter the extra hole competition.

Teams were told that there was only time to play on extra hole and if no one was able to win the hole, tri-champs would be named. Thompson and Folk's par saved pure champions.

El Paso bats punish Angel pitching again

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — The El Paso Diablos continued to swing potent bats against the beleaguered Midland Angel pitching staff here Saturday night in an 11-2 Texas League victory.

Allan Cartwright led a 16-hit El Paso attack with two hits, including his ninth homer of the year. Naturally, Billy Joe Robidoux continued to shake down Midland pitchers with three hits and two RBI.

Robidoux, Huppert and Purpura had three hits each as the Diablos scored at will.

In fact, Greg Key, Midland's designated pitcher, was used for the fifth time this season to finish off the El Paso eighth inning. Key gave up one run, which was just as effective as any of the other three Midland moundsmen. Reggie McKenzie took the loss, giving up seven runs in four innings of work.

The two teams play again tonight and Monday before Midland returns to Angels Stadium Tuesday to face San Antonio when the San Diego Chicken makes an appearance in Midland.

Seoul takes '85 World Series title

Little League

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) The 39th annual Little League World Series was decided, as are many Little League games, by mistakes and pitching.

Seoul, South Korea, defeated Mexicali, Mexico 7-1 Saturday, because control pitcher You Yong-Jung threw a one-hitter while Mexicali made crucial mistakes and its pitcher had trouble finding the plate.

"I felt good," said Jung, who hit a two-run double in a four-run fifth. "I was a little nervous because I wasn't loose the first couple of innings.

"We're proud to be champions. I wasn't sure we could do it. But by the end of the fifth, I was sure."

It was the second straight world championship for Korean Coach Seong-Yeol Kwag, who coached a different team from Seoul to last year's title, and it was only the second time one city has produced consecutive championship teams.

"This time, our pitching was weaker than last time, but they came through," he said.

Kwag said he only expected to get two innings from Jung, "but he started getting better ball control, so I kept him in."

SATURDAY WAS Mexicali Manager Jesus Limon's 29th birthday.

"I wanted a world championship for my birthday, but I'm still happy," he said. "We're all very happy just to have this chance."

The turning points were obvious: a three-run first and the four-run fifth, helped by pitcher Ricardo Ponce's wildness.

"In the first inning, the bunt they pulled off, and then the fifth," Limon said. "Ponce was in control and dominating, but it got away from him."

"Back home, we're going to have a big party," said Kwag with a smile. "We expect that — nationwide."

Asian teams have won 15 of the last 19 World Series, which have been held for 11-to 13-year-olds in Little League's birthplace since 1947.

SATURDAY'S CHAMPIONSHIP, the first without a U.S. team, attracted a crowd of 35,000 to Lamade Stadium and a national television audience that saw the Koreans score three times in the first and four more in the fifth.

With one out in the first, Dong-Hyuk Kim walked and took third on Kyung-Kwan Cho's single to center. Zin-Young You singled to left, scoring Kim and sending Cho to third, with You taking second on the throw.

Jai-Hak Shim's squeeze bunt scored Cho, and You came in when third baseman Santiago Villaescusa's errant throw got past the catcher.

Mexicali scored in the fourth after Ernesto Carrasco hit a perfect bunt down the third base line that third baseman Kyung-Hwan Cho threw away, allowing Carrasco to take second.

One out later, Ricardo Ponce singled to center and Carrasco slid home safely despite a strong throw from center fielder Shin-Il Lim.

SEOUL SCORED four unearned runs in the fifth. Kim singled with one out, took third when Cho reached base on an error and You walked to load the bases.

After a strikeout, Ponce walked Yong-Sub Han, hit Ji-Oung Ryu with a pitch and gave up a two-run double to Jung.

Jung, who won Seoul's Series opener, walked just one and struck out seven.

Ponce, a hard-throwing right-hander with a big kick in his delivery, struck out eight, walked five and gave up five hits.

Seoul had reached the championship by winning the Far East region, then routing Maracaibo, Venezuela, 13-2, and Binbrook, Ontario, 16-0.

Mexicali, a border city that played in the West region for 22 years before reaching the series for the first time this year, defeated Staten Island 6-3 and Morristown, Tenn., 2-1.

Kyung-Hwan CHO of Seoul, Korea, slides safely into home as Mexicali, Mexico catcher Oscar Perez drops the ball during action in the first inning of the Little League World Series championship game at Williamsport, Pa. CHO scored from third on a successful suicide squeeze bunt and Seoul went on to win the title, 7-1.

Alcott passes Garbacz for two-shot lead

DENVER (AP) — Amy Alcott, patient and unperturbed, stormed past a tempestuous Lori Garbacz to grab the third-round lead Saturday in the $300,000 LPGA National Pro-Am.

Garbacz, the second-round leader, had moved to a commanding 6-stroke lead midway through Saturday's round, but she frittered away her advantage in what amounted to an eight-shot swing over the final eight holes.

Alcott finished with a 2-under-par 70 for a total of 6-under 210. Garbacz, with nines of 32 and 41, was 2 strokes back at 212.

Beth Solomon eagled the 18th hole for a 70 and a 214 total. Kathy Baker, Becky Pearson and Rosie Jones were at 215, while Pat Bradley, Beth Daniel, Sherri Turner and Dawn Coe were grouped at 216. Defending champion Betsy King, 2 shots off the lead as the day began, faded to a 77 and was at 218.

When Alcott bogeyed the 10th hole, she fell to 3-under for the tournament and 6 shots behind the red-hot Garbacz, who birdied four of her first seven holes to move to 9-under.

But the lead quickly dissipated. While Alcott, who said her game plan was to be aggressive but not force birdies, birdied three of the last eight holes to move back to 6-under, Garbacz self-destructed.

She dropped a stroke at the 11th hole, then another at the 13th and another at the 15th. Garbacz, pursuing her first victory in seven years on the women's tour, surrendered her lead with a double bogey at No. 16, encountering sand trouble.

After missing a three-foot putt on the hole, she muttered an obscenity before a live ESPN camera.

Garbacz was later assessed a fine of $3,500 — the largest in LPGA history.

After suffering a double bogey on the 18th hole, which dropped her from the lead, Garbacz was approached by an ESPN cameraman and cursed at him as she told him to remove his camera.

Watson, Maltbie lead WSoG

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Defending champion Denis Watson of South Africa compiled what he called "a kind of unusual" 4-under-par 66 Saturday and regained a share of the lead in the third round of the NEC World Series of Golf.

"I missed several easy birdie opportunities and made the difficult ones," said Watson, who failed on two birdie putts from about 5 feet.

"There was a lot of solid grinding," said Watson, who completed three trips over the Firestone Country Club course in 202, eight shots under par.

He was tied with Roger Maltbie, who has had a share of the lead all three days. Maltbie saved a round of 68 with a 12-foot par putt in steady rain on the final hole and, grinning broadly, scampered away under an umbrella.

"I'm delighted to finish in the fashion I did, with good, par-saving putts on the last two holes," said Maltbie, who also made an 8-foot putt on the 17th hole.

Gordon Brand Jr. of England, who qualified for this elite event as the European Open champion, matched par 70 in the chilly showers and dropped two strokes back at 204.

The group at 205, 5-under-par and only three strokes back going into Sunday's final round in the chase of a $126,000 first prize, included Tom Kite, 45-year-old George Archer, Woody Blackburn and Mark McCumber.

Archer, who left an erratic driver in the bag and attacked the 7,173-yard course with a 3-wood, birdied three of the last five holes and matched the best round of the tournament with a 65.

Kite birdied four holes in a row beginning on the second and once had the lead alone. But he couldn't hold it. The strokes bled away on the back and he finished with a round of par 70. Blackburn closed up with a 67 and McCumber shot 68.

Hal Sutton, with a 70, and Calvin Peete, who had a 71, were next at 206.

"A lot of strange things can happen on the golf course," Denis Watson said. "Anybody within four strokes certainly has a chance to win."

Tom Watson was not that close. Watson, only two off the pace after two rounds, slipped to a 72 and was six back at 208. PGA champion Hubert Green had the same total after a 70. U.S. Open titleholder Andy North shot 73-211.

Maltbie, who broke a nine-year victory drought when he won the Westchester Classic earlier this season, got away to a birdie-birdie start, hit a 9-iron to within 4 feet of the flag on the ninth, played the front in 32 and then had to work hard to make it stand up.

"The weather had a lot to do with that. It was not a light rain," he said.

Denis Watson, who has been in a slump most of the season, did not make a bogey, one-putting to save par four times.

Texans move into tie for Jeremy lead

PARK CITY, Utah (AP) - Texans Miller Barber and Ben Crenshaw teamed to card an 8-under-par 64 Saturday to catapult into a tie for the lead going into the final day of the Jeremy Ranch Shootout near here.

The pair entered Saturday's third round of play tied for fourth and three strokes behind the leaders. But they shot into the first-place tie with eight birdies and no bogies.

They will enter Sunday's final day of play with a 24-under-par 192, the same score as Gene Littler and John Mahaffey.

The two teams took different paths to their scores and both expressed surprise that they were tied for the lead in the $450,000 PGA junior-senior tournament.

Barber-Crenshaw used the consistent play that netted them a 63 and 65 in the first two rounds. Littler-Mahaffey, on the other hand, slipped with a 67 after logging a 61 and 64 the first two days.

The team of Jack Fleck-Victor Regalado was fifth, three strokes off the pace at 21 under par.

Verplank earns PGA exemptions

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Amateur Scott Verplank of Dallas has been given an exemption to play in as many as 10 PGA Tour events in each of the next two seasons, a Tour Policy Board member said Saturday.

"Presumably, that includes the Tournament of Champions," said Roger Maltbie, a board member who is competing in the NEC World Series of Golf.

The decision was made at a regularly scheduled, closed-door meeting of the PGA Tour Policy Board early this week.

Verplank, 21, who will defend his national amateur championship next week in New Jersey, became the first amateur since 1956 to win a Tour event when he took the title in the Western Open in Oak Brook, Ill., last month.

The complex rules governing eligibility for the PGA Tour did not specifically cover amateurs.

Salmon run is cause for rejoicing

By NELSON BRYANT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — This Year's spawning runs of Atlantic salmon in the United States and Canada have given the salmon's champions cause for rejoicing.

In Maine's major salmon river, the Penobscot, a record number of fish have returned and the 196 caught and killed and the 247 caught and released are almost triple the number angled last year.

More than 300 salmon have returned to the Connecticut River this year thus far — last year's total was 92 — including one on June 3 that negotiated the recently completed fishway at the New England Electric System's dam at Bellows Falls, Vt., thus becoming the first of its species known to get beyond that point in nearly 200 years. A record 193 fish have already reached the Essex Dam fish lift on the Merrimack River in Lawrence, Mass. (Here and elsewhere in this piece when reference is made to a "record" number of salmon returning, it goes back to 1967, when the present effort to restore the species to its traditional New England spawning streams was begun. Early in the 19th century, for example — before dams had blocked their upstream passage — tens of thousands of salmon ascended the Connecticut and its tributaries each year.)

As with other species that move up rivers to spawn, the Atlantic salmon is born in fresh water, descends to the ocean to attain growth and maturity and then returns to its natal stream to spawn.

Unlike the various species of Pacific salmon that die after spawning, substantial numbers of Atlantic salmon may repeat this ritual two or three times.

In Canada, a cold spring delayed the arrival of salmon from the ocean about two to three weeks, but when they did show up they were more numerous than last year.

"We had predicted that," says Blair Moffatt of the St. Andrews, New Brunswick, office of The Atlantic Salmon Federation.

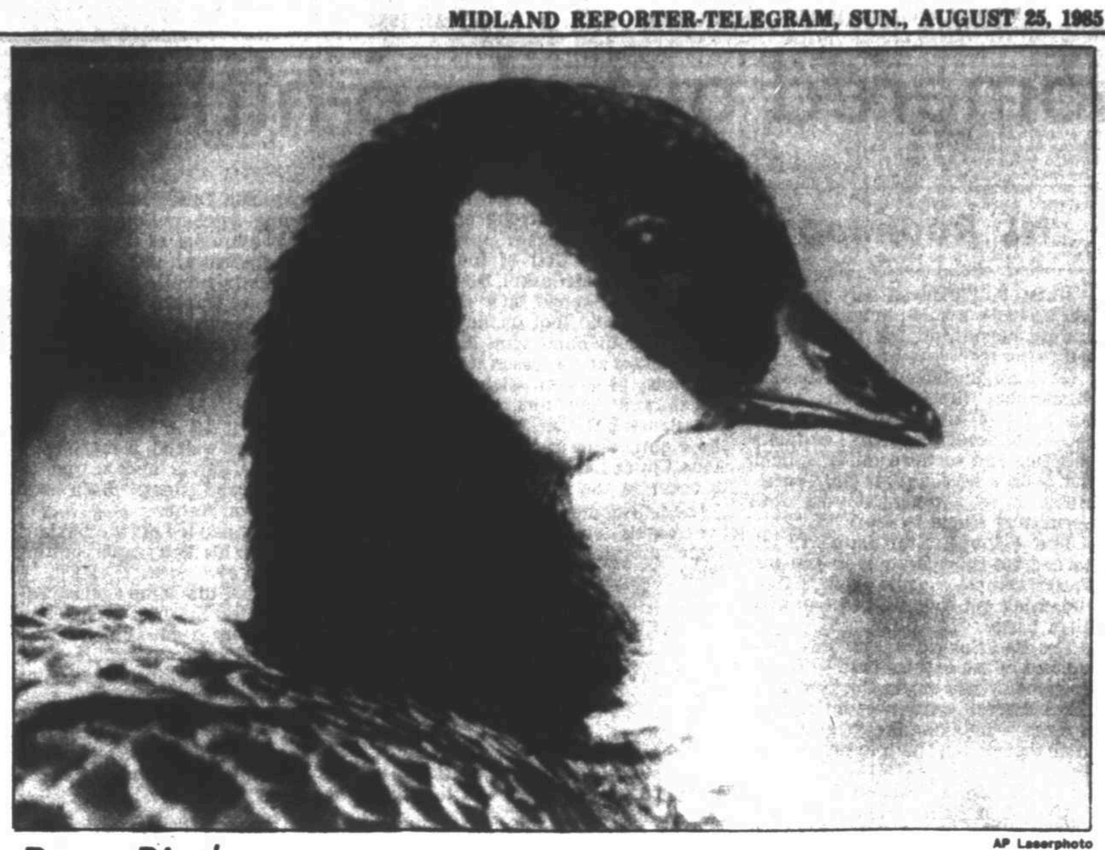

"In Cannada," says Moffatt, "we have had about a 30 percent increase over last year in the numbers of fish returning."

There are various reasons for this, including the closing of commercial fisheries for the species in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and the Gaspe Peninsula, and about a 35 percent reduction of the Newfoundland commercial fishery.

Another important factor has been the no-kill angling regulation in most provinces, which requires that all adult salmon be released. In addition, the water levels and temperatures in most salmon rivers have been ideal.

In Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland (of which Labrador is a part), anglers are permitted two grilse daily. A grilse is a small salmon, usually less than 5 pounds, that has returned after only one year at sea.

Both male and female grilse are capable of procreation, but the latter do not carry as many eggs as their larger counterparts.

Federal wildlife officials, in an effort to save the endangered Aleutian Canada goose, want to kill off foxes with a poisonous compound. With only about 4,000 known to exist, the geese live mostly on one tiny island near the tip of Aleutian chain. Environmentalists are concerned over the use of the poisonous compound.

Salmon derby attracts thousands

By NELSON BRYANT
New York Times News Service

From Aug. 24 to Sept. 2, thousands of fishermen will be taking part in the Empire State-Lake Ontario King Salmon Derby, an affair that this year offers more than $116,000 in cash and merchandise prizes.

Although the $28,000 grand prize — it includes a Sport-Craft boat and a 175-horsepower Evinrude outboard motor — goes to the angler who catches the largest king, or chinook, salmon, there are 20 other awards involving that species, plus others for coho salmon, steelhead (rainbow trout), brown trout and lake trout. The fisherman who catches the largest coho, for example, wins a $12,000 boat, motor and tackle package. There are also dozens of other cash awards for the largest salmon brought in to any port, for those caught on certain lures and lines and for fish that establish state records.

The deadline for registering by mail has passed, but one may also register at any one of approximately two dozen tackle shops and ticket sales outlets. This must be done at least one day before the contest's start. For a list of these places, call the derby headquarters at (716) 385-2805.

If what happened in 1983 and 1984 is a valid indication, the first 20 fish in the king salmon division of this year's affair will weigh in excess of 30 pounds. The largest king caught last year — by Tom Dickinson of Middleport, N.Y. — weighed 38 pounds 6 ounces.

August is the worst month of the year for trout fishing in most of the Northeast, but anglers visiting New Hampshire during the next several weeks might wish to try for the coho salmon that are now returning to the streams — including the Piscataqua — that enter the state's Great Bay.

In recent days, the fish have been running 12 to 20 feet deep and fishermen are going after them with various silvery lures — or bait, such as mackerel strips — trolled on lead core line, downriggers or planers. One of the best times to try for these coho is from daybreak to 9 A.M. on an outgoing tide. Although this angling is in tidal water, a state fishing license is required. The limit is two fish a day, 15 or more inches long. Updated reports — including tide information — on the fishery may be had by calling (603) 627-9702.

-0- The Montauk (N.Y.) Marine Basin is holding its first annual tournament for giant bluefin tuna Aug. 24 and 25.

The cash prizes total $25,000, with $7,500 going to the first-place boat. The tournament will be limited to 55 boats, and the entry fee for each is $500. The weekend affair begins with a meeting Friday evening attended by the captains and crews. For information, call the Marine Basin at (516) 668-5900.

-0- Each year, New York State issues thousands of so-called deer management permits that allow their possessors to take one deer of either sex in addition to the single, antlered animal allowed under the basic regulations. A permit may be granted to one hunter, or, this year, to a party of two, three or four.

Application forms for these permits are now available from license-issuing agencies, and in order to be considered they must be returned by Sept. 3. Permit applicants must possess a license allowing the taking of big game. Successful applicants should receive their permits well ahead of the Nov. 18 opening of the state's Southern Zone deer season.

The permit system is a management tool that enables biologists — through hunter harvest — to keep deer populations at proper levels in various areas.

Galveston Bay packs big sting

Galveston area waters are apparently well-populated with big stingrays, with two state records during 1985. The bay area has produced all six state record southern stingrays certified by the TPWD since the early 1970s. Louis Hunter, Texas City, broke the record which had been on the books since 1981 by catching a 214 pounder near Galveston's jetties in May.

The catch barely had time to be certified before David Lee Anderson, Texas City, caught one weighing four ounces more from the Bolivar Flats area June 8. Anderson's ray measured 91 inches in length and 58 in girth.

Also recently certified was the almaco jack of one pound, 14 ounces by Charles Bailey, Hitchcock, at the Clay Pile out of Galveston....

TEXAS IS knwon nationally as a deer hunting hotspot with more man days spent afield for that species than any other each year.

However, Texas hunters might be surprised that hunting rabbits and squirrels ranks relatively high in recreation days, according to the TPWD's small game survey.

Glenn Boydston, coordinator of technical programs for the TPWD, said about four million man-days were spent hunting white-tailed deer last fall and winter. "This is by far the largest amount of time spent hunting any species, but if you combined the approximately 800,000 man-days for rabbits and 900,000 for squirrels, you can see the importance of small game hunting."

GOVERNOR Mark White has proclaimed Sept. 28 as Hunting and Fishing Day in Texas. Officials of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. advise Texans interested in H&F Day activities to contact local sportsmen's organizations or the National Hunting and Fishing Day headquarters P.O. Box 1075, Riverside, Conn....

SOME LATE summer adjustments in visitor hours and services are in effect at Carlsbad Caverns and Guadalupe Mountain National Park. Cavern visiting hours are 7:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. with the cavern itself open to tours at 8 a.m. The three-mile long Blue tours will be available continuously from 3:30 p.m.; The last entry for the shorter Red tour will be at 5 p.m.

At Guadalupe, the new hours for the temporary visitor center at Frijole is 8 a.m. to 4:30 a.m. The McKittrick visitor contact station will have the same hours, but will be open only on Saturdays and Sundays. The park's evening campfire programs at Pine Springs will be offered at 8 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Guided hikes up the Guadalupe Mountains have been discontinued for the season, but numerous self-guided hikes are available over the park's extensive trail system.

THE TPWD labeled the Trinity River below the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex as in a "biologically critical state," and more fish kills can be expected unless more stringent waste discharge limits are applied.

Dennis Palafox, of the TPWD, said that five major fish kills in the river since 1971 were caused by low dissolved oxygen which resulted from deposits of oxygen-demanding sediments. "We suspect the source of these sediments is wastewater treatment plants in the metroplex."

He explained that these bottom sediments are re-suspended in the water when rainfall causes a rise. Palafox added many perceive the Trinity as a dead river because of poor water quality and associated fish kills.

Blue Jay's Stieb homered out of no-hitter in ninth

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Dave Stieb gave up two home runs in the ninth inning after coming within three outs of pitching the first no-hitter in the nine-year history of the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday night, and they went on to beat the Chicago White Sox 6-3.

Stieb, a 26-year-old right-hander who leads the American League in earned run average, didn't allow anything close to a hit until Rudy Law hit the first pitch in the ninth for a homer over the right field fence. The next batter, Bryan Little, also homered to right field.

It was Law's third homer of the season and Little's first.

Stieb, who struck out seven and walked three, was then relieved by Gary Lavelle, who immediately gave up another homer, Harold Baines' 11th. After one out and a single by Carlton Fisk, Tom Henke got his sixth save and extended his scoreless-inning streak for the season to 17⅔ innings.

George Bell provided Stieb, 12-9, a six-time all-star, with a 1-0 lead when he hit his 25th homer in the sixth inning off loser Tom Seaver, 12-9.

The ball landed on the roof in left field as Bell joined Hank Greenberg, Jimmie Foxx, Richie Zisk and Dick Allen as the only players in the 75-year history of Comiskey Park to hit a ball on the roof and into the center field bleachers. Bell reached the center field bleachers Friday night.

Seaver struck out three batters to climb into fourth place on the all-time strikeout list ahead of Walter Johnson. He now has 3,509, one more than Johnson.

Stieb, now 12-3 in his career against Chicago, so dominated the game for eight innings that the White Sox hit only four balls out of the infield, all of them routine outs.

Bell's homer in the sixth broke a scoreless tie and the Blue Jays went on to score twice in the seventh and three in the eighth.

In the seventh, Ernie Whitt walked and scored on a triple by Jesse Barfield, who came in on a wild pitch by Seaver. In the eighth, Willie Upshaw, Whitt and Barfield each singled in runs.

Twins 1, Red Sox 0

BOSTON — Mike Smithson scattered six hits in outdueling Boston's Bruce Hurst and pitching the Minnesota Twins to a victory over the slump-ridden Red Sox.

Hurst, 8-10, allowed only five hits but his two-out wild pitch in the fifth inning accounted for the game's only run.

Dave Engle started the fifth with Minnesota's first hit, lining a 1-2 pitch for a single to center. He moved to second on Tim Laudner's sacrifice and to third on an infield out. With a 1-2 count on Tim Teufel, Hurst threw a pitch into the dirt, permitting Engle to score.

The 6-foot-8 Smithson, 12-11, earned his third shutout in just his fourth complete game in 28 starts. He struck out five, walked two and hit a batter.

The Red Sox advanced only two runners as far as third base — Wade Boggs with two out in the first and Marty Barrett with two out in the seventh — in taking their eighth loss in nine games and 13th in the last 15.

Tigers 13, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Lance Parrish hit two of Detroit's four homers and Chet Lemon drove in five runs with a homer and double as the Tigers crushed the California Angels behind Jack Morris' strong pitching.

After Lou Whitaker opened the game with the first of four home runs off Kirk McCaskill, 9-8, Parrish hit a two-run homer later in the inning and a solo shot in the third to give him four home runs in his last three games and a season total of 22.

Morris, 14-7, went eight innings. He allowed four hits, walked two and struck out four in winning for the eighth time in his last 10 decisions. Chuck Cary retired the Angels in order in the ninth.

The four homers off McCaskill tied the Angels' club record for most home runs yielded by a pitcher in a game.

Orioles 4, A's 3

OAKLAND, Calif. — John Shelby's tie-breaking two-out, two-run single in the top of the 11th inning enabled the Baltimore Orioles to defeat the Oakland A's for their ninth victory in 11 games.

Larry Sheets started the inning with a single off reliever Keith Atherton, 4-6. Walks to pinch hitter Jim Dwyer and Lee Lacy between fly outs loaded the bases before Shelby hit a ground single into right field, just past the outstretched glove of first baseman Dusty Baker.

Winning pitcher Don Aase, 8-5, hurled two innings of shutout relief and Sammy Stewart pitched the 11th for his eighth save. He allowed a run on Dwayne Murphy's triple and Steve Henderson's single.

Cal Ripken doubled to lead off the Baltimore fourth and scored on the first of Mike Young's two RBI singles to give the Orioles a 1-0 lead. Baltimore made it 2-0 in the fifth when Eddie Murray walked, went to third on Ripken's single and scored on Young's second single. Both runs came off Don Sutton.

Dave Kingman led off the Oakland seventh with his 25th homer, cutting the lead to 2-1.

The A's tied the game against Baltimore starter Storm Davis in the eighth without a hit. Pinch hitter Dave Collins drew a leadoff walk, stole second and continued to third on catcher Al Pardo's throwing error. Alfredo Griffin's sacrifice fly tied the score 2-2.

Royals 8, Rangers 2

KANSAS CITY — George Brett drove in four runs with a single, double and home run and Bret Saberhagen won his sixth straight game as the Kansas City Royals claimed a triumph over the Texas Rangers.

Saberhagen, who gave up eight hits and struck out seven before departing after six innings, raised his season mark to 16-5, tying New York's Ron Guidry for the most victories in the American League.

The win moved Kansas City to within 1½ games of front-running California, which lost a 13-2 decision to Detroit, in the AL West.

Kansas City jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first when Willie Wilson, who singled and stole second, raced home on Brett's double. Hal McRae then singled to score Brett.

The Rangers responded with a run in the second on Steve Buechele's double, but the Royals padded their lead to 4-1 in the third when Brett hit a pitch from Rangers starter Burt Hooton 440-feet into the Kansas City bullpen in right field for his 19th homer.

McRae gave the Royals another run in the fifth when he singled in Wilson, who had a one-out single and swiped second for his 36th theft of the season.

The Royals scored three more times in the sixth against Texas reliever Chris Welsh on RBI singles by John Wathan and Brett and a wild pitch.

Two Midland teams will be in the Amateur Softball Association's first National Class A Church League slow pitch tournament at Hogan Park Labor Day weekend. It will be Midland's second straight year to host a national tournament.

Oddly enough, both Midland teams are from the Golf Course Road Church of Christ. Golf Course Road White is one of five teams to qualify through the Texas State tournament at San Angelo. Golf Coast Road Gray and Sherwood Baptist of Odessa qualified as host teams in local tournaments.

Golf Course Road White won the 1984 state championships and participated in nationals.

Other Texas teams to compete here Labor Day weekend are Temple Baptist of Odessa; Holy Angel of San Angelo; Bible Church of Waxahachie and St. Mary's of Brownsville. Teams from Oregon, Washington, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arkansas, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama and Indiana will compete and additional teams are expected to sign up prior to Monday's deadline.

The tournament is scheduled for the Bill Williams Complex at Hogan Park. The opening ceremonies will be 7 p.m. Friday and the first game is at 8 p.m. The tournament runs through Saturday and Sunday and the championship game is scheduled for noon Monday.

The Williams complex opened last year with the National ASA Women's Class A tournament. This year's tournament is hosted by the Midland Softball Association and City of Midland Parks and Recreation Dept. Freddie Ezell is tournament chairman.

Tampa Bay 14, New Orleans 10

NEW ORLEANS — Steve DeBerg, seeing as much action as he had in the prior two preseason games, rallied the Tampa Bay Buccaneers to a victory over the New Orleans Saints.

DeBerg started and played through the middle of the third quarter, finishing the night with 16 completions on 20 attempts for 183 yards, one interception and one touchdown. In two preseason games, he was 14-20-0 for 222 yards and three touchdowns.

Packers 28, Falcons 24

MILWAUKEE — Lynn Dickey, making his first appearance of the exhibition season, threw touchdown passes to Phillip Epps and Paul Coffman Saturday night to lead the Green Bay Packers to a victory over the Atlanta Falcons.

Epps, a fourth-year wide receiver from Texas Christian, caught six passes for 161 yards, including a 70-yard pass play from Dickey in the second quarter. The play was Green Bay's first touchdown of the season.

The victory was Green Bay's first exhibition win against two losses and marked Dickey's first playing minutes. The 35-year-old Dickey, who completed 14 of 23 passes for 286 yards and was intercepted twice, missed the first two preseason games with back spasms and a bruised throwing hand.

Giants 34, Jets 31

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Jeff Rutledge, who guided the New York Giants to a tying touchdown in the final seconds of regulation play, led them on a 62-yard drive that resulted in a 30-yard field goal by Eric Schubert at 5:26 of overtime for a victory over the New York Jets.

Rutledge guided the Giants to the tying touchdown with six seconds remaining, passing 11 yards to Lionel Manuel in the corner of the end zone to complete a nine-play drive of 82 yards. The drive began after the Giants recovered a disputed fumble by Johnnny Hector on their own four yard line.

The Jets had taken a 31-24 lead when backup quarterback Pat Ryan hit tight end Mickey Shuler with a 10-yard scoring pass early in the fourth quarter.

49ers 25, Chargers 10

SAN FRANCISCO — Matt Cavanaugh, filling in for Joe Montana, passed to Jerry Rice for a touchdown on the third play of the game and the San Francisco 49ers went on to a victory over the San Diego Chargers.

The scoring play to Rice, the 49ers' top draft pick out of Mississippi Valley State, covered 56 yards. Cavanaugh totaled 273 yards passing in three quarters of play, and Rice gained 125 yards on five receptions.

Denver 20, Indianapolis 3

DENVER — Fullback Gene Lang powered his way into the end zone on carries of 1 and 3 yards and the steady Denver defense dominated Indianapolis as the Broncos rolled to a victory over the Colts.

Both teams are 2-1 in National Football League preseason play.

Denver's defense kept the Colts off balance throughout the game, starting with the first Indianapolis series, when starting quarterback Art Schlichter was sacked twice in eight plays. The Broncos went on to flatten Schlichter once again in that quarter and then two more times before he was replaced by Mike Pagel in the fourth period.

Denver's offense mounted only one impressive drive, a 72-yard march that ended with Lang's second touchdown early in the fourth quarter, but showed moments of brilliance.

Browns 31, Bills 28

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Gary Danielson threw for two first-half touchdowns as the Cleveland Browns defeated the Buffalo Bills.

Danielson, who was replaced by Bernie Kosar for the second half, threw a 54-yard touchdown strike to former United States Football League player Kevin Mack, and a 23-yard touchdown pass to Dwight Walker.

Greg Bell ran for two touchdowns for the Bills, who dropped to 0-2-1 in pre-season play. The Browns are 2-1.

Cleveland broke out on top in dramatic fashion on its fourth play of the game.

MAILMAN

on backboards. As a junior, he made liars of the salesman who sold Tech two shatter-proof backboards with his thunderous dunks, the kind that threatened the well being of the MC PE gym. Louisiana Tech mailed out the shards as promotional souvenirs to the media. At the time, Louisiana Tech needed all the publicity it could get. Of such brainstorms are nicknames born.

"My first year, the 9,000-seat gym at Lousiana Tech was packed for games. Then, after we warmed up, I'd look around and the place was practically empty."

It was simply the custom at Ruston. While most colleges are seeking to establish and bring recognition to the women's game, at Lousiana Tech, it was the other way around.

Once the two-time NCAA champion women played their game, "Everybody went home," recalls Malone.

IT WAS Malone more than anyone who gave the men's program equal status with the women. As a junior, Karl led Tech to a 26-7 record and last year, Tech earned top 10 ranking, reached the NCAA quarterfinals before losing to Oklahoma in overtime. "We lost twice to Oklahoma and once to Lamar," Malone fills in the gaps.

Best player faced in college, "I guess it would have to be Joe Dumars," the No. 1 draft pick of the Cleveland Cavaliers, who will also be playing in the Midland benefit game this week, "And Wayman Tisdale was a pretty good player, too."

In a college athletic world in which all sorts of under-the-table inducements rumored and alleged, Malone confesses that "All they gave me at Louisiana Tech was a room and all the basketball shoes I could wear out...I did have a good summer job, though, and that was a big help."

But with an NBA career ahead, the sky's the limit financially. He already has sampled the rewards of endorsements and commercials on a regional basis. "It's something I really love doing, modeling for those things." And once his name is plastered across the NBA, the endorsements will come nationally. That's where the big money is, so big it could exceed his playing income.

And where will all this wealth go? "A farm in Homer, La. It's what I like to do and I'm starting a trucking business. It's something I've always wanted to do since I was a little boy. Three trucks as a start and a maximum of 10. I've already got a pick up."

Warned that pickups are dangerous on icy roads in the winter, Malone looked at the one issuing the warning. "I mean a pick up..." and the inference was that the difference in the "pickups" being discussed was the difference between a Mailman and a Spud.

OWLS

NICHOLS AND Martin, who has also piqued the interest of college scouts because of his size, impose a formidable defensive wall for opposing running backs to get around. And if they do, they must worry about the strong linebacking corps Reeger has assembled.

At linebacker, Reagan County boasts one of the area's best in Tatum. At 5-11, 190 pounds, Tatum is a hard-hitter and has raised the eyebrows of more than a few college scouts. Joining Tatum on the linebacking crew are seniors Zeke Harkelroad (190) and Terry Townsend (166) — a two-year starter.

The secondary is led by Gunnels and Saldibar, an all-district performer and two-year starter, but should draw help from another two-year starter Ricky Armstrong at safety.

Reagan County should be well prepared for the grueling district schedule by the time the district opener at McCamey rolls around on Oct. 11. The Owls play a tough five-game non-district slate facing four schools from District 7-3A. Crane, Ozona, Sonora and Coahoma as well as Reagan County's only Class A opponent Robert Lee comprise the balance of the schedule.

Brighton Court Townhomes

Luxurious Lifestyles the "Leasing" Way

For many of us, buying a home requires an important factor we do not have: Money for a downpayment. So, a popular alternative is leasing an apartment.

But sometimes an apartment's amenities are not geared for the professional who may want to host business meetings or important social occasions in his/her home. For those who enjoy a stylish, urban lifestyle, Brighton Court Townhomes and Polo Park Apartments offer just that.

Brighton Court, located at 3321 B Neely Avenue, is scenically nestled in a garden of lushly landscaped walkways and winding cobblestone streets.

Lifestyles

Capturing the quaint, quiet ambiance of elegant townhome living, each floor plan is designed to fit any family member's needs.

Every distinctive design is created with a blend of traditional grace and contemporary convenience. Outside, sturdy brick construction with wood and stucco accents and wood shake roofs capture the color and texture of the West.

Convenient amenities cater to active modern lifestyles, including sprinkler and security systems.

For larger social affairs, Brighton Court also features a private swimming pool and cabana.

A popular floor plan, the Chelsea townhome, features two bedrooms suites and two baths in approximately 1,513 square feet of living space.

Entering the tile foyer from the landscaped entryway, visitors readily notice the wall covering of rice paper with a contemporary-style chandelier.

The great room boasts a huge, caramel brick fireplace stretching to the high cathedral ceiling. An added thought was given to the fireplace by placing it directly above an open brick storage area for wood. A ceiling fan with tulip lights enhance the rich texture of plush caramel carpeting throughout the home. A sliding glass door with mini-blinds opens onto a covered patio and private courtyard.

Swing doors from the entry open into a large kitchen and breakfast nook. Many oak cabinets and cabinet tops in a caramel hue add convenience to this all-electric kitchen with microwave and conventional ovens, electric cooktop stove and dishwasher.

The breakfast nook, onlooking the green courtyard, provides a very informal dining spot, with a low-hanging wicker lamp and earth-tone shaded wallpaper. A door to another courtyard makes picnics at home easy and fun.

In the formal dining room, foil wallpaper in muted, floral shades is accented by a beautiful low-hanging brass chandelier, inlayed with smoky-gray glass.

Across the great room lies a convenient half bath in contemporary caramel wallpaper, with brass fixtures.

A tiled utility room opens into a two-car garage wired for an electric garage door opener.

Atop the carpeted U-shaped stairway is an extraordinary view of the richly-designed downstairs area.

And on either side of the upstairs landing are two large bedrooms with individual baths.

The guest bedroom has its own balcony onlooking the courtyard and a large walk-in closet.

The bath, with brass fixtures, has a marble vanity and oak-framed mirror complimented by rose and taupe floral wallpaper.

The immense master bedroom suite is reflected entirely by a mirrored wall of handy closet space.

In the master bath, a double marbled vanity accented by brass fixtures and caramel wallpaper is again reflected entirely by a mirrored walk-in closet. A separate toilet provides privacy.

Best of all, Brighton Court is located in the heart of Midland, convenient to schools, shopping and major thoroughfares.

And just as convenient to the downtown area for the busy professional of today are Polo Park Apartments.

Amenities are highlighted by select green house patios, individual fireplaces and individual storage units.

Each all-electric kitchen is furnished with a microwave oven, modern range, frost-free refrigerator with ice maker, disposal and dishwasher. Each kitchen is also planned for optimum efficeincy with minimum effort and abundant cabinets insure adequate storage.

For fitness buffs, complete exercise facilities are available including an exercise room, indoor racquet ball court, large swimming pool, lighted tennis courts, sauna bath and whirlpool.

A very unique floor plan in this apartment community is the the one bedroom with a den. For only $389 each month, one can live in approximately 896 square feet of luxury.

Beyond the tiled entry is a large living area a handsome brick fireplace and sliding door to a convenient fenced-in, covered patio for barbecues or quiet times.

The kitchen, with butcher block cabinets, looks into the living area from a high bar/buffet opening, perfect for decorative additions.

A separate dining area with a low-hanging chandelier sets the mood for special, quaint dining occasions.

Just beyond is a comfortable den with contemporary touches: long, individually-paned vertical windows onlooking a richly landscaped courtyard in the common area. Two large closets provide handy storage for off-season clothing.

Off the entry lies the master bedroom and bath. A large walk-in closet with shoe shelves can accommodate even the most "clothes happy" male or female. A long window looking onto more of the common area enriches the light, airy theme.

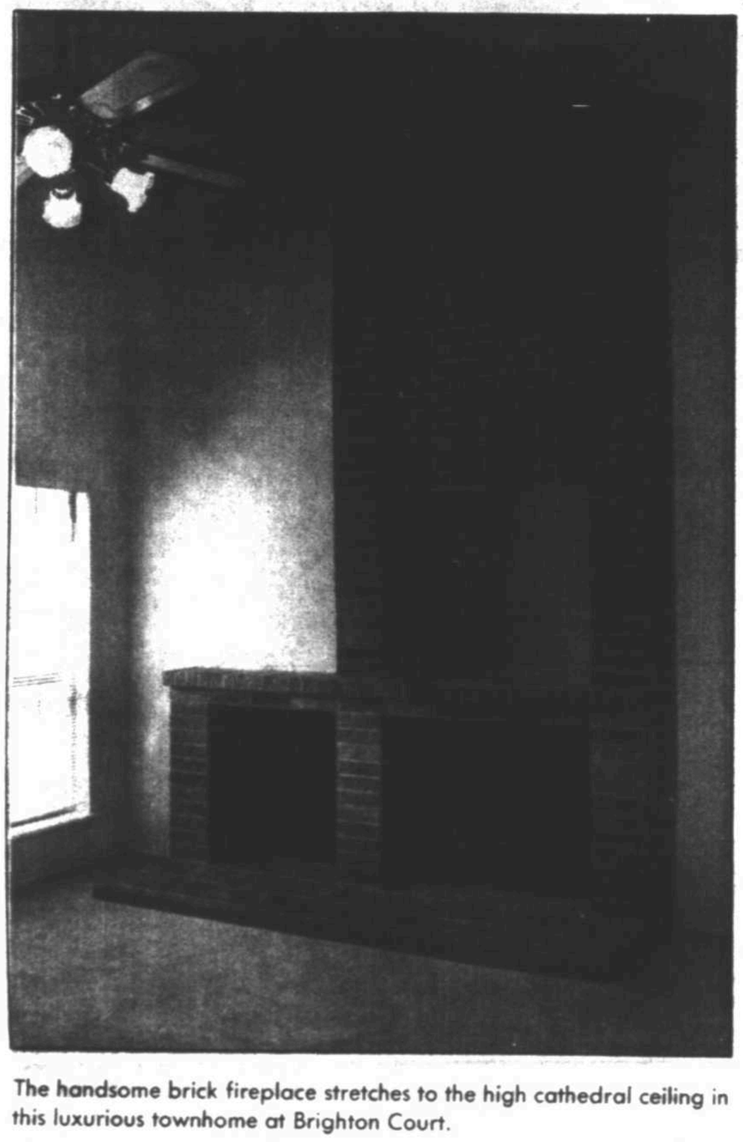

In the master bath, washer/dryer connections are strategically hidden from sight in a large closet. The elegant vanity with cabinets below and linen cabinets nearby offer spacious convenience for the user.

Each of the apartments in Polo Park has individual heating and air conditioning.

So, for a luxurious lifestyle in an urban setting, Brighton Court Townhomes and Polo Park Apartments offer the ultimate. For leasing information, call one of the competent leasing agents at either property.

The spacious living area in this one bedroom, den apartment at Polo Park Apartments can easily accommodate any busy professional's lifestyle.

The handsome brick fireplace stretches to the high cathedral ceiling in this luxurious townhome at Brighton Court.

Residents of Polo Park Apartments enjoy the comfortable clubroom located near the pool area.

Tenants and their guests may use this room for larger social gatherings.

29 states and D.C. had increases in annual home resale rates during 2nd quarter 1985

WASHINGTON——Twenty-nine states and the District of Columbia had higher home resale rates in the second quarter than in the same quarter last year, according to the National Association of Realtors.

Thirteen states and the nation's capital recorded increases of more than 10 percent in their seasonally adjusted annual rates (The annual rate of a particular quarter represents what the total nubmer of actual sales for a year would be if the relative sales pace in that quarter were maintained for four consecutive quarters. Seasonally adjusted annual rates are used in reporting monthly and quarterly data to factor out seasonal variations in resale activity. For example, home sales volume normally is higher in the summer and relatively light in the winter months, primarily because of differences in weather.) of existing-home sales activity, with three reporting increases of 20 percent or more. The findings contained in the association's quarterly state-by-state activity report cover resales of single-family homes, apartment condominiums and cooperatives.

Hawaii experienced the largest increase, with the annual resale-home pace climbing 27.1 paercent from the second quarter of 1984 to the second quarter of 1985. Delaware had the next highest increase at 22.9 peracent, followed by the District of Columbia at 20.5 percent.

Nationwide, the seasonally adjusted annual home resale rate rose 3.1 percent from the second quarter of 1984 to the second quarter of 1985 to 3.31 million, National Association of Realtors economists noted.

"Modestly lower mortgage interest rates were responsible for much of the improvement in the rate of existing-home sales," the economists said. "The decrease of nearly 1.9 percentage points in those rates since the second quarter last year allowed more Americans to become homeowners."

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported that effective commitment rates for fixed-rate loans averaged 12.98 percent in the second quarter of 1985, compared with 14.85 percent for the second quarter of last year.

For adjustable-rate mortgages with rate change limitations, those interest rates averaged 10.98 percent in the second quarter this year, compared with 12.51 in the second period last year. For ARMs with no rate change limits, the average effective commitment rate in this year's second quarter was 11.11 percent, while in last year's second quarter it was 12.85 percent.

"The nation's existing-home sales activity continues to be strong," the economists said. They noted that the sescond-quarter rate compares with a total of 2.120 million existing-home sales in 1982, 2.924 million in 1983 and 3.098 million in 1984. The peak year for home resales was 1978, when 4.199 million home resales occurred.

California continued to have the highest rate of resales, with a seasonally adjusted level of 395,700, followed by Pennsylvania at 199,700 and Texas, 198,200.

The other states with the top 10 rates were: New York, 176,400; Michigan, 164,400; Ohio, 147,000; Florida, 140,300; New Jersey, 138,000; Illinois $125,900 and North Carolina, 114,800.

The top 10 states together accounted for about 54 percent of the resale activity in the nation, the economists said.

The National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association, represents more than 650,000 members involved in all lphases of the real estate industry.

A need to read

An estimated 10,000 adult Midlanders cannot read. Volunteers in the Need to Read program are working on a one- to-one basis to help these 'functional illiterates' learn the reading skills they lack.

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

Left photo, tutor Don Tyler has been a Need to Read volunteer since the program was begun in 1984. He and student Ted have committed themselves to meet once each week. Bottom photo, tutor Lindsey Gunter, left, and student Rosa Ayala have been working together in the Need to Read program for nearly a year. During that time Mrs. Ayala has progressed from reading at or below first-grade level to reading at sixth-grade level.

Editor's note: Because of the personal nature of his story, the name of the male student has been changed.

Ted is a young man with a promising future. He is intelligent, has a good job he really enjoys and a family he loves.

Rosa Ayala is a young wife and mother. She, too, has a job she loves and three children she dotes on. Her daughter dreams of becoming a teacher.

But Ted and Mrs. Ayala share a secret handicap. Neither can read.

Between 15 percent and 20 percent of the U.S. adult population — in Midland, about 10,000 people — cannot read, according to information from Gov. Mark White's office and the National Initiative for Literacy, said Judy Morris, director of education at Casa de Amigos. Many realize the extent of their problem but may be too embarrassed or too afraid to seek help, she said.

Many factors contribute to an adult's lack of reading ability, said to Janice Langdale, coordinator of Need to Read Adult Literacy Council, including a learning disability that was not recognized during the school years, having to care for brothers and sisters while parents worked and education disrupted by frequent moves. "There's a lot of mobility in the oil field. Some kids can deal with that, and some kids ... are overwhelmed."

Mrs. Ayala had to quit school when she was in the fourth grade to go to work. "I've been working almost all my life," she said. The youngest of 13 children, nine of them living, Mrs. Ayala found work cleaning house and babysitting.

Ted attended 12 years of public school and received a Texas high school diploma, even though his reading skills were only on an early elementary school level. "During the years of the learning process I don't think I got (enough) attention at school," Ted said. Both his parents worked when he was growing up, and "it seemed like reading was always put off."

As a high school student Ted suffered many embarrassing moments when called on to read in class. His teachers, unaware of the extent of his problem, tried to help by suggesting he look up words in the dictionary. "The dictionary is just great for someone who knows how to read," he said.

Although his grades were poor, he was "passed because they felt sorry for me, I believe," Ted said.

Non-reading adults learn many techniques to help them cope in a reading world, such as buying foods which are pictured on the outside of their containers, said Mrs. Langdale.

Ted could read a few simple words, and after graduating from school, learned to get by through "trial and error," he said. "You learn the hard way. Some people say the hard way is the best way, but it ain't the right way. Everywhere you go you are faced with some material you have to read. If you don't know how to read the stop sign, you are just lost."

A bright and willing worker, Ted said finding a job was not a problem for him because "in oil field work, unless you are in a field where you need a degree, they don't even look at your educational background. I know a guy who doesn't even know how to count his money."

But for someone who can't read, advancing on the job is a problem. His lack of reading ability has limited his opportunities, Ted said.

After trying to teach himself to read and finding it too difficult, Ted sought help. "I've always had the desire to learn how to read different material and things that are interesting to me — on my job, the Bible, current events.

Fund-raising drive underway

Midland's Need to Read program is about a year old now, having been established in 1984 through the Adult Basic Education program housed at Midland College, said Janice Langdale, coordinator of Need to Read Adult Literacy Council. Casa de Amigos entered the program this year as both a tutoring site and a referral agency, she added.

Last year the Texas Education Association offered five grants of $20,000 each to local literacy councils throughout the state, Mrs. Langdale said. "The director of adult basic education, Barbara Gideon, and Judy Morris, who was one of the teachers in the learning center, wrote a proposal requesting money for one of the five grants, and received the grant."

The grant was to cover fiscal year July 1, 1984-June 30, 1985. "We got the money settled and the personnel in place toward the end of August," Mrs. Langdale said.

A nine-member steering committee suggested the names of people who were interested in public service and would be qualified to serve on Need to Read's executive board. The 16-member board was in place in January, Mrs. Langdale said. "We tried to draw members of the board from private enterprise sector and the education sector and the social service sector of the community."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Pre-nuptial festivities recently began for Susan Cowden and Kyle Raybourn, who are planning an autumn wedding.

Susan is the daughter of Margaret and Courtney Cowden and granddaughter of Frank Cowden Sr. Kyle is the son of Frances and Paul Porter of Arlington and formerly of Midland. Both are graduates of Midland High and Texas Tech.

Their engagement was announced by Susan's mother in the Cowden home, which was decorated with multi-colored, Holland mix arrangements throughout the entertainment areas. The guests for coffee in the morning and tea in the afternoon were greeted at the front door with a basket of fresh, multi-colored flowers and lovebirds with streamers proclaiming the Sept. 28 wedding date.

Serving in the house party were Susan's sister, Cynthia (Mrs. David) Clark; her niece, Christine Cowden; her sisters-in-law, Nancy (Mrs. Price) Cowden, Kaye (Mrs. C. Holt, Jr.) Cowden, Caroline (Mrs. Lynn) Cowden, and friends, Claire Aldridge, Roberta (Mrs. Charles) Fraser, Myna (Mrs. Jack) Young, Louise (Mrs. Garland) Lang and Phyllis (Mrs. John) Grimland.

Out-of-town guests included Kyle's mother and grandmother, Marguerite (Mrs. Marvin) Folkes of San Antonio.

The home of Spooks (Mrs. John) Starr was the setting for a cocktail buffet to honor the couple. Co-hosting the party were Suzy and Jim Boldrick, Norma Jean and Bud Boles, Bonnie and Orman Hubbard, Eloise and Bob Davenport, Patti and Watson LaForce and Carol and Pete Crain. Fresh flowers in many colors were used on the serving table and throughout Mrs. Starr's home and patio.

High school friends of the couple hosted a "Hats Off to Susan and Kyle" western dance at the American Legion Hall. Guests danced to the music of the Check-Point Band of Midland and enjoyed barbecue and popcorn. Red and white flowers and balloons decorated the hall.

Giving the party were Elizabeth Armstrong, Nita Bedford, Mark Blake, Starr Boldrick, Rosson Grover, Tom Hurt, Tricia Jowell, Randall Redfern, Rod Steele and Lynette Young.

Invitations to a recipe shower at Roberta's home requested: "Bring something special for their recipe book. She loves to travel and loves to cook. A favorite recipe with international flavor, an unusual for Kyle to savor."

The other hostesses were Claire, Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan, Marvel (Mrs. Jack) Sayers, Barbara (Mrs. Charles) Hartwell and daughter, Milby, and Barbara (Mrs. Ed) Magruder.

SHIRLEY IRELAND joined her sister and brother-in-law, former Midlanders Dorothy and Bob Martyn of Quanah, for a recent trip to London. Staying at the Swiss Cottage Holiday Inn, the threesome used the many modes of transportation, including bus, taxi, the underground and foot, to absorb the Capital City's history and color.

A bus tour of London enabled them to see the city's many well-known sights, including the Changing of the Guard and the Parade of Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace, the fabulous Crown Jewels at the Tower of London; Westminster Abbey, the resting place of Kings, and St. Paul's Cathedral, the second largest in the world.

The Texans enjoyed a bus trip through the lovely Chiltern Hills to Stratford-upon-Avon to see the birthplace of William Shakespeare and other buildings associated with the poet and dramatist and to Oxford, where they visited some of the colleges and famous buildings of the ancient university city. They also took train trips to Windsor Castle, while the royal family was in residence, and to the picturesque seaport village of Rye.

The sisters took advantage of the marvelous shopping, including a pilgrimage to Harrods, not to mention the china and woolen shops and the silver vaults. They were fascinated by the British Museum, which houses collections from ancient civilizations and is one of the most popular and frequently visited in the world; the National Gallery, a showplace for London's great paintings, and Grosvenor Square and Park, which pays tribute to Franklin Roosevelt with an impressive statue and is across the way from the imposing American Embassy.

Nighttime entertainment included Andrew Lloyd Webber's hit musicals, "Cats" and "Starlight Express," in addition to special enjoyment derived from the British food and atmosphere of the pubs.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHT Midland geologists and their wives enjoyed a delightful tour of Alaska the first two weeks of August, with the temperatures barely reaching 70 degrees. The West Texas Geological Society sponsored the field trip, which began at Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, and terminated in Anchorage, Alaska.

Arriving in Vancouver on a charter flight from Midland, the group ferried across the Vancouver Island to spend the day in the capital city of Victoria, visiting the world-reknowned Butchart Gardens, before boarding the SS Rotterdam for an Inland Passage cruise. Ports of call were Ketchikan, the King salmon capital of the world; Juneau, Alaska's capital city, and Skagway, an authentic gold rush town.

The participants then boarded three motor coaches, which transported them over the famous Alaskan highway past glacial lakes into Yukon Territory. Their three-day trek to colorful Fairbanks included overnight stops at the rip-roaring Canadian towns of Whitehorse and Beaver Creek. Highlighting their stay in Fairbanks were tours of the impressive Trans-Alaska Pipeline, an active gold-dredging operation and the University of Alaska.

Continuing on to Denali National Park, location of Mount McKinley, the highest peak in North America, they enjoyed a wildlife tour 55 miles into the park's interior, and some of the braver geologists and their wives took a wild raft ride down the 34-degree rapids of the Nenana River (and now have pneumonia to prove it)! Last stop before enplaning for home was Anchorage, the air crossroads of the world, where among other sightseeing attractions, they toured the Alyeska Ski Resort, possible site of the 1988 Winter Olympics.

Coordinators of the tour were Marie Bellony, executive director of the WTGS, and Vic Brockman, WTGS field trip chairman. Among others on the trip were Bruno Hanson, president-elect of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, and his wife, Marilyn, and WTGS officers, immediate past president Dan Kozak and wife Marjorie; president-elect Will Green and wife Marianne, and treasurer Scotty Alcorn and wife Blanche.

READ

"It took me a long time to find a place — someone to take the time to show (me) how to read since I didn't get those skills in school," he said.

The place Ted found was the Need to Read program. After hearing a radio announcement for the program and seeing a "Learn to read" sign in front of Casa de Amigos, Ted said he decided to give it a try.

"If they have a pressing enough reason they find us," said Mrs. Morris. Personal need — such as need for employment or a driver's license — is often the reason people enroll in Need to Read.

Mrs. Ayala had dreams of becoming a teachers' aide in her children's elementary school. She said the teachers at the school told her she needed to earn her General Equivalency Diploma — the equivalent of a high school diploma — to qualify for the position.

But Mrs. Ayala was unable to read and, of course, could not pass the GED test.

"Barbara Gideon (director of Adult Basic Education at Midland College) tested me and knew I needed to learn to read," Mrs. Ayala said. "She recommended Need to Read. ... I started because I got real sick and couldn't work. I wanted to get a better job."

THE NEED TO READ Program is new, enrolling its first students last fall, and is still a small operation. "We have one central person who coordinates everything, and everyone else is volunteer," Mrs. Morris said. Its current goal is to "add 100 additional students this year."

"Right now we have about 20 students in tutoring," Mrs. Langdale said. When the program began, there were 25 trained tutors and three previously-trained Junior League members involved in the program. Twelve more tutors completed training in June.

Even after learning about the program, people are often reluctant to enroll. "It's a hidden illness in that people are embarrassed about it, they don't want to admit it. ... People are afraid ... What has brought people in has been difficulty in getting a job, frustration with filling out job applications" or sometimes the inability to read a story to a child, said Mrs. Langdale.

The Need to Read Program is designed to give these adults the assistance they need. "There's a terrible feeling of helplessness that comes with illiteracy," Mrs. Morris said. Some adults who are functionally illiterate "can read some words, and may go all the way up to adults who are reading at the fourth grade level. They have a surprising amount of coping skills. The things they can't do are the more complex tasks" such as gaining employment, getting their children through school and operating mechanical devices; "all kinds of things that have to do with our safety."

Mrs. Langdale said Need to Read began through the Adult Basic Education program, which is housed at Midland College. "The Adult Basic Education Center at Midland College helps people earn their GEDs. In order to earn that a student needs to read at about a 10th-grade level."

STUDENTS MAY USE materials at the center to study for the GED examination, but people with reading levels lower than 10th grade have a difficult time understanding these aids.

When she began the Need to Read program last fall, Mrs. Ayala read at less than the first grade level, said Lindsey Gunter, Mrs. Ayala's tutor. "By March of 1985, she was reading on the sixth-grade level."

Ted has been in the Need to Read program for several months, he said, and can see a marked improvement in his reading skills. He and tutor Don Tyler meet for an hour once a week.

Though tutoring pairs are usually arranged so men tutor men, and women tutor women, Mrs. Langdale said "we do have a couple of women tutoring men, but that is the exception rather than the rule." Other criteria for forming tutoring pairs include age, compatibility and times they are available to meet. Students and tutors are asked to commit themselves to the program for a 12-week, or three-month period.

Tyler, who has had previous experience as a tutor, was in the first group of trained volunteers. When he was contacted as a possible tutor, he "jumped into it. ... I had always had an interest in tutoring and felt it would be a neat opportunity for me."

Mrs. Gunter, a former public school teacher, was one of the three Junior League members who were the first trained tutors.

TUTOR TRAINING usually takes about seven hours, in two training sessions, said Mrs. Langdale. Interested persons can call 684-7851, Ext. 243, for more information about becoming a tutor or a student.

Potential tutors are given a "unique training program," Tyler said. "It stimulates your ability to comprehend what these people are going through." The trainees must deal with a "fake language" in which "symbols stand for letters. You start to feeling some of the frustration, some of the tricks they use to figure out what that word was. ... It's a challenge to your thinking."

Tyler said one difficulty in teaching adult non-readers is finding material suitable for for their ages. "How do you give an adult something that's a challenge when it's written on a second grade level?" He and his students "use what they (the students) are interested in — something from their jobs, ... anything that fascinates them, then that's what we use."

Mrs. Ayala and Mrs. Gunter began with the recommended materials, and have since branched out to magazines, books and other sources of information, to exercise Mrs. Ayala's growing reading skills.

WORKING WITH Need to Read has proven to be a learning experience for Tyler, also. "When you see some of these folks (non-reading adults) and the problems they face with their jobs, with just carrying on with their lives, then you really get an eye-opening experience. ... You can become very frustrated because, how did they get through the system?"

Mrs. Gunter agreed: "I've learned more from Mrs. Ayala than she's learned from me, by about a million to one."

The Need to Read students are, for the most part, intelligent and eager learners, he said. "Surprisingly enough, most of the time, in a large percentage of cases, it is the self-confidence factor more than anything else" that has limited their reading skills. "Most know more than they think they do, they just don't have that confidence. Then need someone to provide that."

In her secondary school teaching experience, Mrs. Gunter said, she found as much as 50 percent of her seventh-grade classes "read at the fourth-grade level or below. A few tested at the seventh-grade level. I think students pegged as 'bright' are simply those who are reading on the grade level they are in. They are not necessarily bright, they just read better and that makes everything else easier."

Need to Read is one-on-one teaching, with the students receiving the individual attention they need and gaining motiviation to learn, Mrs. Gunter said.

BUT MOST OF THEM are undereducated, Mrs. Langdale said, though some have limited learning abilities. "At this point we have about 60 percent coming from another language, which is not as high a percentage as some people might think."

The program requires a committment of time and skill on the part of the tutors. Tyler said, "I think if more people understood the need that exists, there would be more people out there who'd be willing to help. ... if they knew how significant the need really was."

ABOUT FOUR MONTHS ago, Mrs. Ayala found her better job, and has continued her educational program, with the approval of her fellow employees. "My boss wants me to finish school," she said.

Her future goal is to earn her GED and eventually become a teacher or teachers' aide, but her immediate goal is more personal. "I like to read stories to the kids," she said. "I'm teaching my son to read."

And Ted has been so encouraged by his increasing reading ability that he has hopes of one day attending college. "But first I have to learn to read."

DRIVE

Board members are John Deats, president; Jim Servatius, vice-president; Ricardo Torres, secretary; Geoff Barnett, treasurer; Jim Henry, fundraising chairman; JoAnn Bagwell, Dennis Barnes, the Rev. Hadley Edwards, Barbara Gideon, Louis Hochman, Janice Langdale, Mona Lyman, Cecila Miranda, Judy Morris, Charron Rumple and Joyce Wilson.

Nearly all the people who work with Need to Read, from the board members to the tutors, volunteer their skills to the program. But even a small, volunteer-staffed operation needs funding. Mrs. Morris, now education director at Casa de Amigos and a Need to Read board member, said a fund-raising drive, begun with Barbara Bush's luncheon in Midland last February, was launched with a breakfast Wednesday . Republic-Bank First National Midland provided meeting space and a contintental breakfast for the invitation-only event.

Team members were given packets for the drive at the breakfast. Letters have been sent to corporations and individuals who will be contacted by team members. "Our goal is to raise $30,000 for Need to Read this year," said Mrs. Morris. "That's how much we will need for a year's operation."

For fiscal year July 1, 1985-June 30, 1986, Need to Read has received a $10,000 special grant from United Way, Mrs. Langdale said, and has applied for a grant from the Hearst Foundation. The organization hopes to raise additional moneys through their fund drive. "Most of our cost has been my salary and materials."

Students enrolled in Need to Read use textbooks and workbooks. "They are required to buy the workbooks, which are $2 apiece, but for some students that's a very difficult thing to buy. Some of our money needs to go into a scholarship situation," she added.

Mrs. Langdale stressed that "Midland College is being very generous in providing us space, but we are getting no financial support from Midland College. Need to Read is getting nothing from any taxes. Adult Basic Education is funded from the state and receives some monetary support from Midland College."

Abacus used in medieval England

A simplified form of the ancient counting device, the abacus, was used in medieval England. It consisted of a tablet ruled into spaces representing the positions of the counters. Coins, buttons, stones or other small objects were moved to make the calculations.

Reading aloud to children important

Hearst News Service

Instilling a love of reading, experts agree, is one of the best ways to ensure your child's success in school and to open up a lifetime of learning.

Reading, however, is a habit that requires concentration and periods of quiet time — commodities hard to come by in these fast-paced times. Today's kids face a myriad of temptations that vie for their attention and draw them away from books — television, home video games, arcades, shopping malls and other social-gathering places. Couple this competition for a child's attention with the breakdown of family life and it's no wonder kids don't read, says Dr. Charles Allen, an English-language specialist in the Baltimore city school system. "In the past there wasn't much else to do."

"Parents ought to be setting a good example by giving their children an opportunity to observe them reading. Children tend to emulate their parents. If they see their parents turning off the television and setting aside a specific time to engage in reading newspapers and books, the child will also develop the habit."

But, more important, Allen is "firmly convinced the most singularly important factor is that parents read (aloud) to their kids. If I have to choose one thing to do — every night — read aloud." Otherwise, Allen says, "nobody makes the connection that reading is supposed to sound like talking." Allen says he can tell almost immediately when testing a child whether parents read to him. "It's rare to find kids who are not read to who do well."

It's never too early to begin instilling love of the printed word. For your preschooler, the International Reading Association suggests choosing books and stories with rhyming words, repetitions, characters the child's own age, bright colors and fun things to feel. The IRA also offers the following tips.

- Stories for older children, ages 6 to 9, can be longer and more involved. Kids of this age like stories with morals and ones dealing with justice, humor, peer relationships, exotic animals and physical growth.
- Keep in mind that while boys and girls tend to have different interests, not all children follow this pattern and it's important to be flexible.
- Remember, it's not important that your child read every word, so long as he understands and follows the story.
- Exposure to books is a key element. The more your child is exposed to the pleasure of reading, the greater his or her interest.

Plassier among new designers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Stephane Plassier is a member of that group of young designers the French call "cr'eateurs." He is just 25 years old, has been in business less than two years, sells to some of the better-known fashion stores such as Henri Bendel, Saks Fifth Avenue, Bergdorf Goodman, Macy's, Neiman-Marcus, Charivari and Chevignon, and has just brought his collection here for the first time.

The clothes range from straight-lined loose-fitting jackets and coats to dresses so intricately cut a woman would need to be an engineer to wrap them properly around her body.

Like many a young designer striving too hard to express himself, Plassier tends to get tricky and gimmicky. A jacket that converts to pants, for example. Or a dress with a jacket attached to it. Or a fake fur ball gown.

But when he keeps things simple, they can be quite fetching. A loose-fitting printed leather trench coat is a winner. So is an elongated smoking jacket in a beautiful marbleized silk like antique endpaper. The jacket is, Plassier says, the big seller of the fall season. It is about $300 and anyone who buys it now will be able to get a matching shirt and pants for spring.

Danskin adds to aerobic wardrobe

New York Times News Service

Exercise fanatics who are tired of basic tights, leotards and leg warmers will be able to add one more item to their gym wardrobes. Danskin is showing something called a body band that is a circle of stretch fabric to be worn around the waist, hips or bosom. The idea is to have it in a contrasting color or, better still, to wear two in different colors.

The body bands will be in stores for spring in tropical tones of orange, pink, yellow, turquoise and green.

Washer, dryer locations surveyed

NEWTON, Iowa (AP) — Buyers of stacked, full-capacity washers and dryers want their laundry facilities in easy reach of their homes' living area, a survey by Maytag shows.

Only 4 percent among 100 purchasers of new equipment put it in the basement, while nearly 90 percent placed it near a living area on or above the first floor. The most popular location was a first-floor laundryroom. Other often-cited spots were the kitchen, hall closet and bathroom area.

Women's art shown

CHADDS FORD, Pa. (AP) — Examples of works by 38 of the more influential female artists of the mid-19th to mid-20th century period will be shown at the Brandywine River Museum from Sept. 7 through Nov. 24.

Among the artists featured in "America's Great Women Illustrators: 1850-1950" will be Alice Barber Stevens, Ellen Bernard Thompson Pyle, Elizabeth Shippen Green, Violet Oakley and Sarah Stilwell Weber.

WINDOW SIMPLICITY
There are many ways to achieve a clean, simple and uncluttered window treatment without losing any positive decorating aspects. Vertical blinds that give windows new dimensions come in a wide variety of beautiful weaves and fashionable colors. Plain and patterned custom shades also come in fresh designs in exciting patterns and colors. Your own custom look can be created. Add scallops, tailored braid, tassels, pulls or eyelet and ruffles for a softer touch. Change the look of a child's room with patterned shades of bright-colored scenes. Then, repaint the window frame to match. Cheery wood-slat blinds will warm a room, creating a country feeling without ruffles.
We'll help you achieve the look you want at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. See us for a variety of window coverings. Treatments include custom made draperies, mini blinds and woven woods and, to add to the decor, we handle top treatments. Call us for a free in-home consultation. Draperies can be custom made to your requirements, from our fabric or yours. Hours: 8am-3:30pm Mon. thru Fri. and by appointment.

Red diamonds most rare

Copley News Service

Diamonds are found in many colors, such as pink, green, orange, sapphire, gold and even black, but the rarest ones are red, according to the Jewelry Industry Council.

"Fancies" are what gem dealers call diamonds with a pronounced and attractive body color. Among the most famous of these are the deep-blue Hope Diamond, the apple-green Saxony and the glowing-brown Earth Star.

Swan costume was ballerina's last wish

Copley News Service

Anna Pavlova, the world's greatest ballerina, went to the Netherlands in 1931 to begin a ballet tour. Upon her arrival at The Hague she collapsed.

On Jan. 23, feverish and delirious, she spoke her final words, "Get my swan costume ready." She died a few minutes later of pneumonia.

Cancer society adopts position on breast cancer

NEW YORK (AP) — The American Cancer Society has endorsed a variety of treatments for breast cancer, saying no single approach is suited to the needs of all patients.

The amount of healthy tissue to be removed along with a cancerous growth and the decision to use chemotherapy or radiation afterward "are matters to be resolved between the patient and her physician on an individual basis," the society said in a position paper approved by its board of directors.

The society strongly recommended testing during cancer surgery to determine whether the cancerous tissue is hormone-dependent. It said women about to undergo breast cancer surgery should request such a test.

Some forms of breast cancer are fueled by such hormones as estrogen or progesterone, and can be treated by stopping the body's production of them. A hormone receptor test will tell a doctor whether hormone treatment could be used to combat breast cancer should it recur.

When breast cancer is found, the appropriate operation may vary, according to the statement.

The cancer society endorsed the three surgical techniques used to remove the breast — simple mastectomy, modified radical mastectomy and radical mastectomy — and said each is appropriate under different circumstances.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Most urbanites classed in 'Type A'

Dear Dr. Solomon: When you write about type A and type B personalities, is the population pretty much equally divided between the two? I would also like to know what you think of exercise as a way to change type A behavior. If exercise can help bring down a person's blood pressure, could it also change his personality? — Mr. T.P., Yonkers, N.Y.

Dear Mr. P.: It has been estimated that 75 percent of Americans who live in cities can be considered to have type A personalities. It is likely that many if not most of these people do not want to change.

Exercise may help modify the type A personality however, those who become involved in comptetitive sports may be as competitive and aggressive in that area as they are in their other activities. Therefore, a noncompetitive activity, such as walking, might be preferable.

Dear Dr. Solomon: The men who write to you about their sexual problems usually complain that they are impotent. My problem is a little different. I become impotent only at certain times, but when it happens, it can be very embarrassing. What might cause something like this to happen at some times but not at other times? — Ty, Houston

Dear Ty: The most common cause of occasional impotence is psychological in nature; however, the heavy use of alcohol and certain medication, such as antihypertensives, is another possiblity. If this applies to you, cutting down on your drinking or having your physician suggest a change in medication may be all that is necessary.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is Little League elbow that young baseball players often get the same thing as tennis elbow? — Lester, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Lester: There are similaities between the two conditions you mention, and both involve inflammation. However, Little League pitcher's elbow occurs on the inner surface of the elbow, while the problem that occurs on the outer surface is commonly called tennis elbow.

For Mrs. D.R.P., Memphis, Tenn.: In the instance you mention, a loss of consciousness may have been the result of the fall. On the other hand, a loss of consciousness may have caused the fall. Knowing which occurred first would help the physician in managing the patient.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

The Oxford

By Lisa Gerlock

A hotel so rich in history and restored in such quality it even feels authentic, the Oxford in Denver turns things — like unpacking a suitcase — into experiences. Visitors store their clothing in wardrobes rather than closets.

In the modern world of travel, filled with countless Hiltons, Hyatts and Westins, it's refreshing to be hosted at a place such as the Oxford — a place that offers limousine rides in old-time Bentleys, and where room service, doormen and valets are on duty at such obstinate hours as 3 or 4 a.m.

But that's not the warmth of the Oxford's charm.

In a time when people so desperately reach for the past, buy new things that look old and pay generously for antiques, the Oxford is an original — not a replica, but the real thing. Subtle reminders hint at the realism of the quaint decor: the heavy wooden-framed windows don't glide as gracefully in their runners as today's sliding glass doors; hot and cold water spouts from two separate faucets; and the bathrooms are one step up from the level of the rest of the room.

But the hotel is restored from its original state, and thankfully, restored with the benefit of modern convenince. At least restrooms are only one step up in the adjoining room rather than housed in a community watercloset down the hall — or outside.

The hotel, almost a century old, was designed by Frank E. Edbrooke, architect of Denver's more famous old hotel, The Brown Palace. Upon the Oxford's grand opening in 1891, the hotel was advertised as having "its own power plant, the most perfect system of steam heating, electric and gas lighting, and bathrooms and separate water closets on each floor with the latest improved sanitary appliances." It was also advertised as "The Real Hub of Denver ... Fire Proof ... European Plan ... Absolutely Modern ... Rooms $1, $1.50 and $2 a day."

Just two blocks from Denver's Union Station, the original Oxford served as a soup kitchen for troops in transit, producing as many as 1,000 meals a day and renting all of its rooms — including the broom closets — to soldiers to do its part for the war effort.

Rumors abound, though no one officially confirms them, that the Oxford's third floor is haunted by the ghost of a wealthy Californian who was mysteriously murdered by Bat Masterson and Mattie Silk's husband, Count Thompson.

Ghosts or no ghosts, the floors of the hotel are beautiful, adorned with period pieces in the halls, often topped with treats and teas for guests.

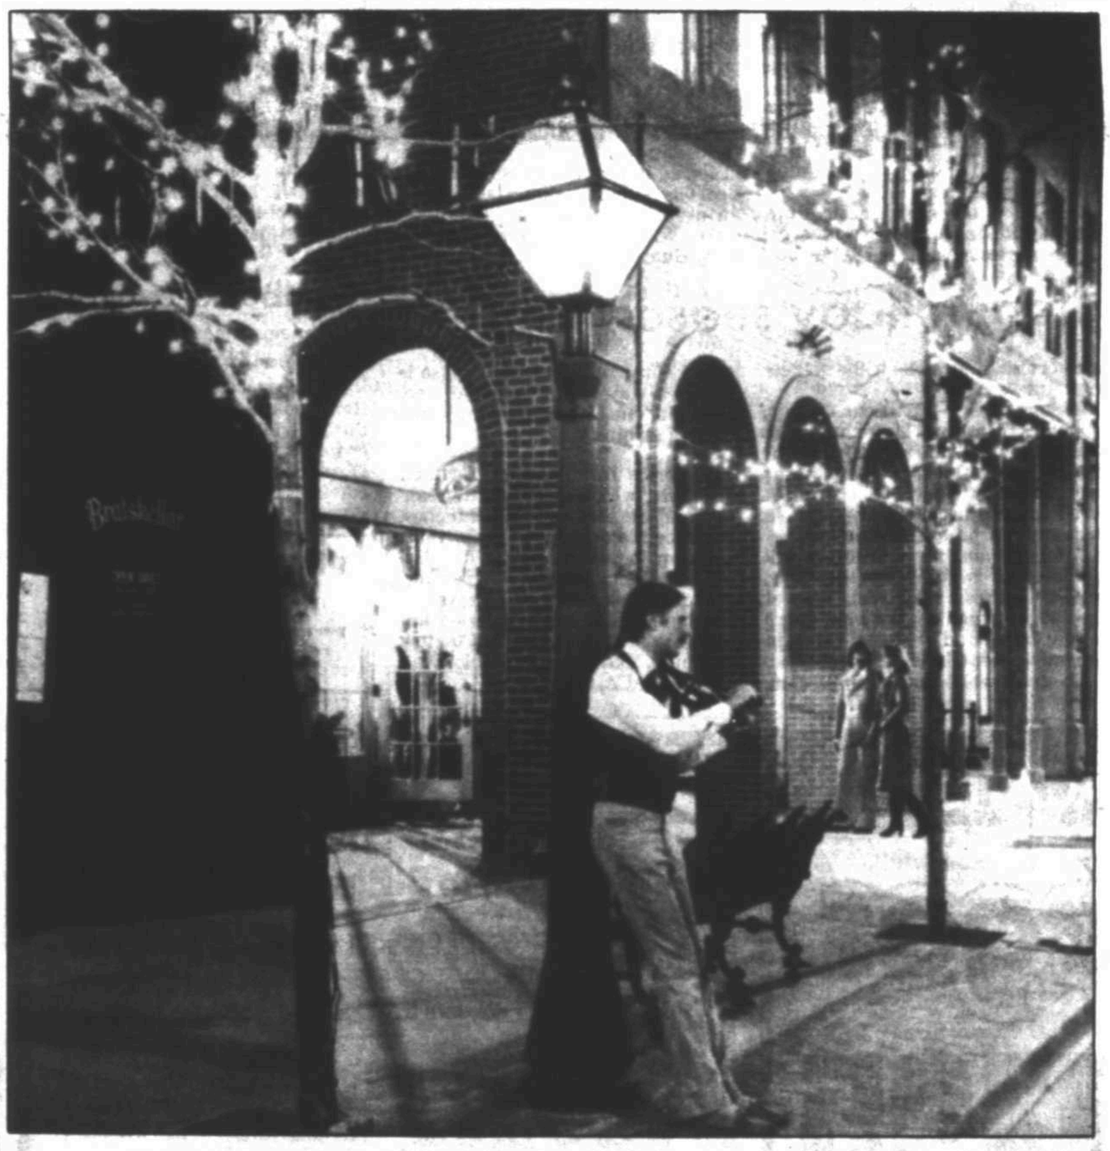

Furniture of the 19th century, unique to each room, include brass and wooden beds, some canopied or partially canopied, which were purchased in England and France, as the hotel's original furnishings. Some of the corner rooms have fireplaces, which are in great demand among guests who visit during Denver's cold winters.

Please see OXFORD, Page 2F

Whether you're hunting for ghosts, Christmas gifts, a historic atmosphere, a place to nestle before a skiing expedition or just a home base during a business trip, The Oxford in Denver is a hotel experience unlike any other...

THE REAL THING REVISITED

The same setting that attracted visitors to the Oxford's lobby, left, in 1891 remains much the same in 1985. The Old World-style hotel has an openness in the lobby that invites guests to a fire-burning hearth where they meet for high tea or fireside brandy.

Larimer Square, lower left, also illustrates Denver's history with its beautifully restored old buildings, which house boutiques, restaurants and art galleries.

Denver: Mile-high fun

By Loreen Arbus and Norm Chandler Fox
Copley News Service

The Rockies during the non-ski season is a getaway we tend to overlook. And especially overlooked is the idea of a vacation in Denver. That city's rapid growth, with an accompanying influx of newcomers, has added a sophisticated touch to this one-time gold-mining village nestled against a magnificent mountain backdrop. In fact, Denver has become so up-to-date it even suffers from an occasional bout of smog — although there are plenty of clear summer days when the rarefied atmosphere is especially invigorating.

Indeed, Denver no longer is just a place to change planes for a dude ranch or ski resort. And August is the perfect month to take advantage of some special annual events in the city and surrounding area.

The first item on your agenda should be to see what's playing at the Denver Center for the Performing Arts, a huge complex housing a concert hall, a theater where road companies of Broadway shows frequently appear, a theater-in-the-round, a hall for experimental works and, finally, a theater that features film classics. One of the country's oldest summer-stock companies, now in its 94th continuous season, plays at the Elitch Theater, located in Elitch Gardens Amusement Park (a great place to take the kids). Try to catch the annual Shakespeare Festival, presented under the stars in the Mary Rippon Amphitheater on the campus of the University of Colorado at Boulder, an easy 40-minute drive from downtown Denver.

While browsing through Larimer Square, a revitalized section of Denver, you'll wander past a variety of boutiques, restaurants and art galleries housed in century-old buildings that have been beautifully restored.

Colorado resorts offer relaxation

SAN JUAN NATIONAL FOREST, Colo. — It is Saturday afternoon and the dream is over.

Skies are leaden and thunder rolls through a forested valley, colliding headlong with rocky mountain peaks and echoing along a river that flows beside meadows carpeted with wildflowers.

Soon the rains will come — as will the train that signals a return to the real world.

For a few days, 30 guests at Colorado's famed Ah, Wilderness ranch have learned the true meaning of solitude in a setting as peaceful as a passing cloud, as pure as a rainbow.

None is eager to leave.

As they board the narrow-gauge train that will return them to Durango, they will carry with them the memories of deer peering from a forest, of icy waterfalls, picnics beneath ponderosa pine and an overnight pack trip to a pristine hideaway high in the Rockies.

AH, WILDERNESS is an experience that haunts the soul long after one returns to the restless world of cities and freeways.

Twenty-five miles north of Durango, it is accessible only by the century-old narrow-gauge train that struggles through the canyon three times a day en route to the mining town of Silverton. There is no other access, not even a road. Either one arrives by train or else hikes in; the nearest highway is five miles south of this ranch that's hidden among aspens and evergreens that spread their shade along the Animas River with its deep gorges, rapids and raging white water.

Few wish to leave, says ranch manager Larry Hays, a youthful John Denver look-alike. Hays was managing a hotel in Dallas when he got the offer to return to his native Colorado and he has never looked back.

Those who vacation on this riding ranch with its star-filled heavens soon learn why: Few wildernesses on Earth offer the harmony of the immense San Juan National Forest.

TWENTY YEARS AGO, traveling on the little narrow-gauge train to Silverton, I saw the weathered sign beside the river announcing Ah, Wilderness. In Denver the other day I boarded the same train on the same scenic trip that is a flashback to a more peaceful period, a brief moment when America was young and the West was a challenge to be met with courage. Was it really so inspiring, my earlier trip to a near-forgotten yesterday, following the paths of prospectors and railroaders who fought and frequently failed to conquer the Colorado wilderness?

Yes, of course.

Leaving Durango, the train soon was passing fields of columbine and cattle grazing and meadows choked with alfalfa and bales of hay. The steam whistle echoed mournfully as the train inched its way through the canyon, clinging tenaciously to a ledge hundreds of feet above the Animas where the river raged and boiled through rapids and mist-filled gorges.

A horse crops grass in a lush Rocky Mountain meadow.

The canyon has heard the train's whistle for more than a century now. In the beginning the train carried fortunes in ore between Silverton and Durango on its path beneath the peaks of the Continental Divide.

Exactly 90 minutes into the trip the train makes its brief stop at Ah, Wilderness.

Waiting beside the track are Larry Hays and his wranglers. While guests hike across a meadow, a horse-drawn wagon delivers luggage to cabins hidden in the forest.

HOME FOR A FEW days will be this world without telephones or TV, a world disturbed only by the voice of the wind, the rush of the river and the song of birds.

Inside the cabins, guests discover old-fashioned coal buckets filled with wood for a Franklin stove. There are rockers and down comforters and a kerosene lamp in the event the lights should fail, which occurs during summer thunderstorms.

At Ah, Wilderness guests dine family style in the main lodge on fowl and barbecued beef, cowboy biscuits and beans, homemade cakes and pies, blueberry pancakes and an assortment of other ranch-style offerings. While the fare is satisfying, dining can't be considered one of the pluses at Ah, Wilderness. The primary appeal is the rare opportunity to duck out on the world of terrorism and traffic to concentrate on catching a trout or panning for gold or riding a horse to a waterfall whose icy veil provides welcome relief on a hot summer day.

Ah, Wilderness is one of the few U.S. ranches to feature a female wrangler, Jehnet Carlson who grew up in Seattle, left school to shoe horses and later worked at ranches in Wyoming and Arizona before putting in her appearance this spring at Ah, Wilderness.

AFTER LONG TRAIL rides with Carlson, guests sink into a steamy hot tub; there are chuck wagon cookouts, square dances and songfests beside a campfire. Riders play horseshoes and billiards and explore deserted mines. Others spread their bedrolls beside an alpine lake during an overnight pack trip.

Ah, Wilderness is a year-round resort. Hunters arrive in the fall, and there is a winter package that features ice skating, cross-country skiing and sleigh rides. For the downhill skier, helicopters lift groups over the mountain to the slopes at Purgatory.

The six-day Sunday-to-Saturday package figures out to $450 for adults and $360 for youngsters.

And then there is Tall Timber, a resort up the tracks a mile or so from Ah, Wilderness where sybarites cast their lot with other vacationers. Tall Timber is a spiffy resort that appeals to discriminating types who place comfort and pleasure ahead of trail rides and such.

Spotted dead center of 180 acres, Tall Timber is a five-star Mobil Guide choice that displays five diamonds from the American Automobile Association crowd as well. Indeed, it is a country club in the wilderness that attracts the sort of clientele that favors Caneel Bay in the Virgin Islands and Mauna Kea in Hawaii.

Tall Timber is a first-class act, known for its style and its kitchen, which turns out magnificent meals in a new $1 million lodge with views of a meadow where deer and the elk play.

THE PRIVATELY owned spread is as far from civilization as Ah, Wilderness is. This, though, is where the comparison ends. While Ah, Wilderness is a riding ranch, Tall Timber caters to vacationers seeking solitude, luxury and none of the horseplay associated with Colorado's dude ranches.

Indeed, there is not a single nag in sight. Instead, Tall Timber offers tennis, hot tubs, a Finnish sauna, swimming and a par-three golf course that slices through a splendid aspen grove.

Guests have the option of taking the narrow-gauge train from Durango or skipping the wilderness journey in favor of a 15-minute helicopter ride.

Either way, the Sunday-through-Saturday rate is pegged at $1,085 per person, double occupancy, or $2,085 for a single, and none of this includes the alpine picnics by helicopter to distant meadows at $115 per head.

Tall Timber was built from the ground up by Dennis Beggrow and pals from the University of Denver.

Snug chalets with sleeping lofts rise in the forest, extravagant cottages featuring floor-to-ceiling fireplaces, deep sofas, barn board and gifts delivered each evening by the staff: miniature liqueurs, nuts and dried fruits, wines, candies and other surprises.

In addition, each guest is given a velour robe that's his or hers to keep when the vacation is over. Open since 1974, Tall Timber is a ritzy wilderness hideaway that accommodates 24 guests.

FOR MORE information on Ah Wilderness, write P.O. Box 997, Durango, Colo. 81301. The telephone number is (303) 247-4121. Ah Wilderness is Open year-round.

For more information on Tall Timber, write SSR Box 90, Durango, Colo. 81301. Their telephone number is (303) 259-4813. The season at Tall Timber is May 15-Oct. 31 and Dec. 5-Jan. 20.

OXFORD

One of the hotel's pianos, used for cocktail entertainment, was once owned by Baby Doe Tabor.

Surprises were discovered in the hotel when the restoration project was underway, such as original wood wainscotting, a large stained glass skylight and the original Wilton weave beneath three laters of newer carpet.

The hotel features a small lobby, complete with large chandeliers restored at $4,000 each, a large fireplace, bookcases, a library table, Oriental rugs and unusual railings on the veranda above the check-in desk.

The Sage Room, with base polished hardwood floors and white linen covered tables, is a European cafe-type lunch spot on the west wing of the hotel.

The hotel's most popular feature among the Denver locals is the Cruise Room/Bar, the longest-surviving business aspect of the hotel before it was closed for its refurbishing project. One of the region's finest remaining examples of art deco interiors, the bar and banquettes have been restored. The front of the bar is bathed with neon lights in art deco fashion. Alley Henson's famous etched panels have been preserved and refinished.

Other restaurants in the hotel include the Corner Room, the private Oxford Club, for members and hotel guests only.

The Oxford is a great place to mark for holiday plans. A snow-painted Christmas shopping scene, the neighborhood, which includes the famed 16th Street Mall, Larimer Square, Sakura Square, and the Denver Center for The Performing Arts, buzzes with excitement.

The Oxford is truly a taste of Colorado history, and it has become popular. Last year, some of Denver's up-and-comers rented the entire hotel for a weekend bash that drew some impressive names from throughout the world.

It is history. It is elegant. It is what Colorado could call one of its Coca-Colas. A resurrected classic that no one will let die.

COLORADO

In a city where almost everything appears to have been built three hours ago, the Brown Palace is one of the few spots in downtown Denver where you'll feel a sense of history. Now in its 93rd year, this gracious hotel had an open-atrium lobby long before John Portman was born; ask for the original building where the rooms are larger and more elegant. Some prefer the more modern Fairmont with its high-tech appointments and the Moulin Rouge supper club. If you want (or need) to stay in shape on your vacation, the Executive Tower Inn has racquetball, squash and handball courts. The resortlike setting of the Writers' Manor Hotel, located 15 minutes from downtown, includes tennis courts, swimming pools and a health club.

With serious dining encouraged by the corporate expense account, elegant yet Colorado-casual restaurants are flourishing. Our vote for the best dinner in town is at the Cafe Giovanni, where Janette and Giovanni Leoni have restored a vintage building with brick walls, wooden arches and iron railings. Entrees include a variety of veal and seafood dishes, plus excellent sweetbreads baked en papillote or a rosemary-scented rack of lamb with a black walnut sauce. If the mountain air increases your appetite for romance, visit Mon Petit. It's located in a lovely, suburban Victorian house and has intimate dining alcoves. Although the service can be overbearing and the menu is somewhat pompous (with 42 entrees, all of which are pretentiously named and require explanations), you will enjoy a classic French dinner.

Half an hour southwest of Denver is a hoot of place called The Fort, which replicates an adobe fort, circa 1840, serves traditional American food and, for that Wild West atmosphere, keeps a live bear in a pit near the entrance to serve as an official greeter. After trying the combination appetizers of spicy buffalo sausage, guacamole and the local specialty, Rocky Mountain oysters (beef testes delicately fried with cinnamon), delve into a succulent buffalo steak accompanied by hot pumpkin muffins.

If Chez Panisse's Alice Waters had designed a Denver restaurant, it might look like the Plum Tree Cafe Club which offers original entrees from a young staff that likes to experiment. A popular lunch stop is Govnr's Park, where unusual sandwiches, salads and omelets attract government workers from the nearby state Capitol. There's usually a busy singles crowd at the bar.

An hour's drive west of Denver on Interstate 70 is the restored gold-mining town of Central City, which in 1859 was known as "the richest square mile on earth." Today it's a national historic district, but summer weekends bring amateur gold-panners to the nearby streams. Late in August, the town sponsors its annual jazz-and-ragtime jamboree. On your way to Central City, stop off in nearby Black Hawk to dine at the Black Forest Inn, off Colorado 119, for German-style game specialties and the ubiquitous Schwarzwalder Kirschtorte. Arrive before 6 p.m. and enjoy happy hour in the antique-laden Teller House bar.

Another short jaunt (about 46 miles) from Denver is the restored gold and silver mining town of Georgetown off Interstate 70. The original Victorian buildings have survived and now house museums, restaurants and antique and clothing shops. After a shopping spree, lunch on European waffles or homemade soup and bread at the Happy Cooker. Don't miss the Hotel de Paris, built in 1875 by an eccentric Frenchman. The Georgetown-Silver Plume Railroad stops at the restored 19th century Lebanon Mill.

Time arrives to plan holiday season trips

The thought of a jolly fat man swathed in heavy woolen clothing trying to wedge his way down our chimney does little for us at this time of year but make us perspire — and maybe call the police. But be advised, Santa Claus and Rudolph and his buddies will be prancing through the sky sooner than you think. And, if you plan to spend a special Christmas vacation away from home, you had better think about booking your hotel or country inn, cruise ship and airline tickets, right now.

In some places — particularly such popular Christmas destinations as Williamsburg — it already may be too late; in others — such as the more popular resorts in Hawaii — hotel space is becoming as scarce as Alaskan sunshine in December.

A few of your favorite things will probably be waiting on this tour, which features a stay of six days at the lodge owned by the von Trapp family (of "Sound of Music" fame) in the snow-swept hills of Vermont.

The tour, which runs from December 19 through December 27, also includes a stay at the splendid Deerfield Inn, one of New England's most charming inns.

The price for this New England Christmas, which includes all breakfasts and dinners and most lunches, four receptions and roundtrip transportation between Hartford's Airport and the lodge, is $1,750 per person, double occupancy. Airfare is additional. For more information contact your travel agent or Country Inn Tours, 2930 Camino Diablo, Walnut Creek, CA 94596.

DEAR ABBY

Readers advise seeking memories in present, not future

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I just returned from the most wonderful experience we ever had. First we flew to Hawaii, then to Tokyo, Hong Kong and to the People's Republic of China. We're recently retired and aren't rich by any means, but we wouldn't have traded this trip for a million dollars — if we had it.

Why am I telling you this? To say "thank you" for the enclosed article my wife had clipped from the Los Angeles Times (Jan. 10, 1982). After reading it, she made me promise that when I retire, we'd take a fabulous trip. And we did.

Please run it again, Abby. I'm sure many other couples could benefit from it as we did. — GRATEFUL IN LA MIRADA, CALIF.

DEAR GRATEFUL: Here's the piece, and a follow-up letter. I hope they do for others what they did for you:

DEAR ABBY: I work for a travel agency and love it, but the one aspect of my job that saddens me is seeing so many widows booking tours, hoping to meet others in the same circumstances.

The most common remark I hear is, "How I wish my dear departed husband could have lived to take this trip with me! He worked so hard all his life, and just when he could have relaxed and enjoyed life, he died."

So Abby, tell your readers not to put off those vacation trips too long. Take a trip, and make some memories — together. — MEMORY MAKER IN MILWAUKEE

DEAR MEMORY MAKER: Thanks for a timely reminder that it's always later than we think.

Women, urge your men to enjoy the fruits of their labor now, and if they resist, tell 'em it's no fun for a widow to see the world on her husband's insurance money.

DEAR ABBY: Your readers might appreciate a follow-up story on the above article that appeared in our newspaper several years ago. Hazel, my wife of 42 years, cut it out and showed it to me. Because it made sense to us, we took a long-dreamed-of Caribbean cruise — something we always wanted to do, but never found the time.

Abby, we had the time of our lives! And I'm glad we went, because Hazel's health began to fail last year, and after a long illness, a merciful Lord took my beloved wife home to her eternal rest. I found this clipping in her Bible. Thanks for the memories, Abby. — HAZEL'S MAC

DEAR ABBY: I am going through a paternity suit with this girl I still have some very strong feelings for. I really was in love with her, but we had a falling out and I haven't spoken to her in six years.

The nearer the court date comes, the more I want to call her up and talk to her to see if there is any way we can get together and work things out.

I'm afraid if I call her, she could get me for harassment. I would really appreciate your advice. — STRONG FEELINGS

DEAR FEELINGS: Ask your lawyer if one phone call would be considered "harassment." In the meantime, I see no harm in writing her a letter, expressing your feelings.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WIT'S END

Fashion trendy

By ERMA BOMBECK

Erma Bombeck

I didn't start out to be a fashion trend-setter. It just happened.

Fifteen years ago (when I knew how to thread a sewing machine), I used to buy material by the bolt. With the same material I'd make shirts for the boys, a dress for my daughter, bathrobes for the family, shower curtains, throw pillows for the living room, a tablecloth, bedspreads and matching valances for the bedroom.

Sometimes the kids had to smile before I knew they were in a room.

Now I see where big-name designers are using home furnishing fabrics for coats and dresses for the fall.

I never throw anything away. If dresses made out of lined, water-stained draperies ever come back, I've got two 90-inch panels just waiting. If T-shirts made out of faded beach towels with a picture of the Partridge family are ever resurrected, I've got the towels for it.

One time I did the entire house in Early Percale. My husband called it the sheet experience. I used sheets to slipcover the sofa, throw over a table, fashion a headboard for the bed, cover cookbooks and I even stuck one to the kitchen wall in lieu of wallpaper.

There is a reason for this. I was sired by two depression babies. Depression babies never throw anything away. My earliest memories of my mother were, "You're not going to throw away the tops of those radishes, are you?"

She saved lids for jars that had broken, warranties for appliances that were buried in the back yard and wine corks with holes in them. I followed her example. I saved earrings that matched nothing, rubber bands on every doorknob, and for 15 years I had a pair of rubber fishing waders by the back door with a hole in the toe.

Every item of clothes that was discarded first was stripped of snaps, buttons, zippers and elastic. They were then classified and filed as "Paint Rags." Actually, this was responsible for a career move by my husband who taught school in the winter and needed a summer job. "Why don't you paint houses?" I asked. "You've got the rags for it."

I don't think I'll ever forget the sight of him on a ladder with my bra wrapped around his waist and the cups filled with caulking if I live to be a hundred.

No doubt about it. This fall, I'm going to be the best-dressed woman on my block. I'll make a vest out of that throw rug on the back porch with WELCOME running across my chest. The old slipcovers from the wicker porch furniture will make a great shirt. And the rosebud shower curtains will make a terrific windbreaker.

Remember Scarlett O'Hara when she had nothing to wear to meet Rhett? Her mother was a depression baby.

Treasures shown

New York Times News Service

Women, who have been barred from Mount Athos in northern Greece for more than a thousand years, will finally get to see some of the treasures of that monastic community. At the height of its splendor during the Byzantine Empire, the community consisted of 180 monasteries and 10,000 monks. Now numbering about 1,400 monks, the community has always excluded women and children as well as female animals from the mountain.

The treasures will be presented to the public at the Salonika International Fair, from October through May, as part of the 2,300th anniversary of the founding of Salonika, Greece's second city.

On display will be valuable heirlooms from Mount Athos: crucifixes, chalices, pastoral staffs, gold and silver reliquaries and rare icons. The collection of ethnological objects and handcrafts, including works of gold, enamel and wood relief, is said to be one of the richest in the Balkans. Also on view will be rare Byzantine manuscripts and ancient documents such as firmans, imperial golden bulls and ritual observance codes.

More information on the fair is available from the Greek National Tourist Organization (645 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022; 212-421-5777).

Jennifer Beals, who gained fame in the film "Flashdance," is now starring in "The Bride," which also stars Sting.

Jennifer Beals: 'The Bride'

By Jane Ardmore King Features Syndicate

She is a second-term junior at Yale majoring in American literature, and she zoomed to world attention starring in "Flashdance," her first film. She is now about to attain a certain immortality as the black-eyed, stunning female creation of Baron von Frankenstein in the just-released film, "The Bride."

That it has to be a significant part is attested by Jennifer Beals' accepting it. She'd made it very clear after that first film that she had no intention of forfeiting her university education for an instant career.

"I felt like somebody's goldfish that had been taken out of the tank for three months and this fish was in the completely wrong atmosphere," she explains.

"It needed to be stuck back in the tank before it could go out again. I'd learned how important school is to me. I really wanted to go back. As a matter of fact, I had only been on campus a week when 'Flashdance' happened...when I was told I'd been chosen. I'd auditioned some time before but not with any thought of getting it. Just for the experience."

She continues, "I'd been modeling to earn money for my tuition, and the agency I was with had different departments: photographic modeling department, runway department, acting. It was the acting agent who suggested...and it was not just a shock to get the part, it was petrifying.

"I didn't know what to say. So I went to New York for a weekend. My boyfriend went with me so we could talk about it and figure out what this meant. My boyfriend is very intelligent and understanding — Robert Simonds — he was just graduated from Yale this May, cum laude.

"He didn't really want me to do it. He was really excited for me, but it was sad all the same because we had just met. Well, the upshot of that weekend was I came back and talked to my dean and asked him what were the ramifications of leaving to do the film.

"I thought, 'If I can never come back, then I'm not going to do it.' I'd been looking forward to school, but, my God, if I could do both, I wasn't going to be ignorant about it! So I did 'Flashdance,' we filmed in about three months and I was back in time for the January term."

She's turned down innumerable scripts since. "My agent sifts through them and then sends along the possibilities. I love reading them. And 'The Bride' was so well written, seemed so real to me, a drama-romance with a little comedy now and then, a period piece but with such real characters."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Last week I watched the movie "The Pirates of Penzance" and was really struck by Kevin Kline. Please tell me about him and what he'll be doing next.

Sandra Bettendorf, Iowa

A. He's 37, from St. Louis, the son of a Jewish father and a Catholic mother, and the product of a strict school run by Benedictine monks. While at school, he became very interested in languages, classical music and acting. In the traditional senior play, that year called "The Haunted House," he had quite a different reaction from his friends. They were terrified; he was calm. "That's when I knew," he says, that he would become an actor.

First, though, he majored in music at the University of Indiana, intent on becoming a concert pianist. But after two years, he realized that he didn't have the discipline necessary for a classical music career. He switched to drama and then after graduating from the University of Indiana, to Juilliard in New York.

Kevin Kline

While there, he became a founding member of John Houseman's The Acting Company and traveled the country performing everything from Chekhov to "The Threepenny Opera"

He returned to New York, to instant theater success in the plays "Loose Ends," "The Robber Bridegroom," and "On the Twentieth Century," for which he won a Tony.

The original stage production of "The Pirate of Penzance" led not only to the movie version but also to his part in "Sophie's Choice." That, in turn, led to "The Big Chill," and his role in "Silverado."

He's currently onstage, as we go to press, in "Arms and the Man," New York's Circle in the Square's production of the George Bernard Shaw play, which may extend its run. Kline can also be seen in the film "Violets are Blue" co-starring Sissy Spacek, due for release in the fall.

His list of female companions over the years could take paragraphs. However, his present companion is actress Phoebe Cates.

Q. I'm curious about Mikhail Baryshnikov — where and when was he born? Did he defect or is he just a visitor to America? Will he be making any more movies? And why isn't he dancing as much anymore?

Mrs. Jean Benson Upland, Calif.

A. He was born in Riga, Latvia in 1948, the son of a dress fitter and an engineer. He began to study ballet at the age of 12, usually considered late for most dancers, but within a few years, he was a soloist with the famed Kirov Ballet. It was while on tour with that company in 1974 in Toronto that he defected to the West. He lives in New York and is currently applying for American citizenship.

Regarding movies: definitely more. First up is "White Nights" due out at Christmas, in which he portrays a Russian defector whose jet is forced to crash land in Siberia, reportedly one of his nightmares still. Plans also seem in the works for another dance-related film teaming him with Ann-Margret. And depending upon the state of his legs, which have sustained injuries in recent years and may require surgery, he might also go out on the road with a dance piece accompanying Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Requiem."

Mikhail Baryshnikov

Sada Thompson

Q. Please tell me what Sada Thompson has been doing lately — I miss seeing her on TV.

Joan Smith Lincoln, Neb.

A. She got her start on the stage and she's always preferred it, and that's what she's been doing lately — acting onstage. Currently, that means starring in a production of Tennessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie" at the Stratford Festival in Stratford, Ontario. It runs through October 16.

Q. I would like some background information on the actress Lynda Carter.

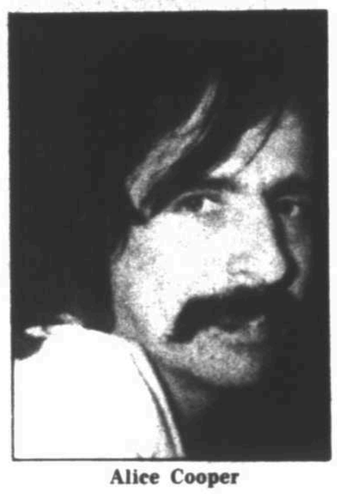

Shennie Felix Fresno, Calif.

A. She's 33, from Phoenix, Ariz., a girl who just couldn't fit in high school, so she became interested in singing. At 15, she started to perform professionally (well, sort of, for approximately $25 a weekend at various restaurants in Scottsdale) to help her mother out financially after her parents' divorce.

By 17, she's made her Las Vegas lounge debut, but her biggest break was winning the Miss World-U.S.A. title in 1973. That led to Hollywood and her star vehicle, the "Wonder Woman" series, which she won over 2,000 other auditioners.

The series had an effect on her personal life as well: on the set, she met manager-producer Ron Samuels. It was a virtual love at first sight, and they were married six months later. Samuels also began managing her career, and eager to dispense with the "Wonder Woman" stereotype, he arranged dramatic TV movies and musical specials for her.

She also returned to Las Vegas in high style, indeed: headlining in a lavish, $200,000 musical act that kicked off her successful, continuing career on the Vegas-Tahoe-Atlantic City circuit. She and Samuels were divorced in 1982, however. Last year, Ms. Carter married a Washington D.C. lawyer, Robert Altman. They divide their time between D.C. and L.A.

Alice Cooper

Q. I would like to know whatever happened to Alice Cooper? He hasn't come out with a new album for years. Has he quit recording?

Dana Williams Ringgold, Ga.

A. We asked an associate of Alice's and she assured us that he hasn't given up recording at all. He's just taken a break and is now in the process of writing material in preparation for going into the studio to record a new album that should be out later this year. Knowing Alice, she says, he'll probably have a new look as well by that time, but it won't take shape until he's further along with the concept of the album.

JENNIFER

She explains, "Eva is so interesting — someone being reincarnated, discovering her past lives in a way and learning, through education, how vulnerable her freedom is. That's the real link between Eva and me — our love of reading and our necessity to be free.

"It was only through this part, working in the foreign locations for 'The Bride,' having such fun and everyone being so great to work with that I realized for the first time that acting is what I want to do."

She sits in a big chair in her suite at the Chateau Marmont and runs slender fingers through her mop of black hair, lifting it from her white forehead, revealing the whole of her pale, delicately wrought face with its round dark eyes — the darkest eyes you have ever seen. In her narrow black pants and black velvet jacket, without makeup, she looks more the studious child than a star.

Ms. Beals started to become independent while she was still in high school. "By the time I was 16, I knew I wanted to go East to college. I told my best friend, 'If I even ever apply to a West Coast school, please do mortal damage to me.'

"One of our older friends had gone to USC, but I knew that I'd go insane with all that sunshine. I need snow and rain, I need changes in weather, I need that drastically. Also, I was thinking in terms of being close to New York so I could model and make money for school.

"The modeling had already started. I went to this agency in Chicago just sort of on a fluke because my friends were doing it and they felt I could make money as a model.

"The first person they wanted me to go and see was the photographer Skrebneski because he's so powerful and had such talent and that's the kind of person they felt I needed to work with. I really didn't know how famous he was. I knew zero about photography.

"So I walked into this beautiful office and sat there looking at incredible photographs of Keri Harper and Debra Larson. Debra is this beautiful blond girl who looks so cool and icy and Keri is very exotic and classical at the same time and I just thought, 'These girls must be foreign; they can't possibly be American.'

"And just then, Keri walked in. This glorious creature in a fur coat just sweeps in and picks up her check and I'm thinking, 'What am I doing here? This is absurd.'

"Then I was introduced to Victor Skrebneski; for a while, we talked. He is amazing! I had seen some of his pictures but had no idea how famous he was; but, sitting there surrounded by these portraits, I suddenly said, 'You know, these are simply great, these pictures!' He sort of smiled and said, 'Thank you.' It had been such a silly thing I'd said. Of course he's good. He's great. A really great artist."

Ms. Beals continues, "Four months later, I started working for him. He usually works with a 'family' of models — six girls — and if one of them leaves, he needs to replace her. Someone did leave and I was the replacement. A wonderful experience. It turned out that Debra and Keri were not cool and icy or exotic; they were very normal people and they were sweet to me and taught me so much."

The first time he photographed Ms. Beals, he took a head shot, black and white with very high contrast. "It was such a cool picture, I wish I had it," she says. "I don't remember what company it was for, but I do remember walking into that building where it was on the wall blown up really huge and it was frightening. You could see every pore.

"I worked with him for two years, 16 to 18, and it was really neat. I miss Victor; he was fun to work with. I wasn't really a great model because I refused to diet. I didn't want to be anorexic.

"When I went to Paris the summer after graduation from high school, I lost a lot of weight and looked more like a model. I went there to learn the language, but I figured I should earn some money while I was at it."

By that time, Ms. Beals had an agent in New York, and they had tried to help her get set up in Paris, but that didn't work. "The agency was too big and too snooty, too full of themselves and just really bad, so I switched agencies.

"I went to an agency called Del Phine. I walked in, they sent me over to French Vogue and I did an advertisement the first day. That's what I call people really working for you instead of having you sit around painting your toenails."

Everything worked out well in Paris. She was traveling with a friend, a boy who was a writer, and luckily they met a French couple who were going away on vacation and insisted the Americans stay at their apartment. "I think they offered because we were students and they understood what it was like to travel without much money," Ms. Beals says.

Two and one half months in Paris, then to Yale, where after one week, she was notified that she had the part in "Flashdance," for which 4,000 young women had been tested.

She still had no idea what she planned to do with her life. One of the reasons she'd chosen Yale was that she wanted a school strong in a number of departments since she wasn't certain what was to be her major. She still had made no "life" decisions after her success in that film. But something happened on "Bride."

Sting and Jennifer Beals in "The Bride"

Based on the classic Mary Shelley novel, this picture was filmed on location throughout southwestern France and on sound stages at London's Shepperton Studios. "Fabulous locations," Ms. Beals says. "We were brought to France last October even though Sting (who plays the Baron Charles Frankenstein) and I had little to do at that stage of shooting. Our director, Franc, wanted us all to spend time together so that when we did come to the work, we would feel comfortable."

She exclaims, "What a talented group! Geraldine Page as Mrs. Bowman, David Rappaport as the dwarf, Rinaldo, Clancy Brown as the original creature Frankenstein had created, and of course, Sting.

"Since he and I weren't needed much at the beginning, we practiced our riding, on horseback, through the woods. We had pleasant times. "He's a very very funny man," Beals says. "He and his grirlfriend, we spent time together, all of us, when we were filming in London; she was doing a play. She's really great, very very smart. She just gave birth to Sting's fourth child. A very independent, very secure girl, who, like Sting, is one of the funniest people I've ever met.

"I loved living in London," she continues. "It makes me want to live there forever, and I liked Sarlat the best of any town we were in in France. It is so quiet; we could go horseback riding every day, go swimming and running and just not see anyone, as if it were our world."

Production continued in the medieval walled city of Carcassone, at a chateu in Clermont Ferrand, Orcival, the old city of Perouge and Lyon. "Oh, and most amazing was when we arrived in Budapest, they had completely transformed the whole town. So much skill and care went into this picture."

And before the filming ended, Ms. Beals had decided that acting is what she wants to do with her life. Which doesn't mean she will move to Los Angeles.

"I love severe fluctuations in weather. London is the most outrageous. Last time there, I was taking pictures of my friends on a bright sunny day. Blamm, it starts hailing. The hail stopped. The sun came out. Then it started raining. Then sunny again. All within an hour. I love that."

She reflects, "When I finish school, I'll probably live in Connecticut, then probably in London. There's no point in living somewhere unless you want to. They can always mail scripts to me and I can go to meet them and talk it over." The girl who values freedom above all and was strictly leery about accepting that first film role now has a contract with Paramount.

"But," she reminds you, "you can always say no. If they say 'We want you to be in this picture' and threaten to drag me out of school, and I say no and they threaten suit and sue, it would be very bad public relations. The point is, you can work things out. You can suggest they find a script more suitable, something that will do us both good. You don't have to do anything." Professionally or personally.

Personally, Ms. Beals is a deeply caring human being. She has always been close to her mother, who has loved reading as much as her daughter. ("Before I could read," she says, "I made up stories and told them to myself.")

Her father died when she was very young, but she is close to her stepfather who is "even more excited than my mom" about her career and two brothers.

"My older brother, 25, was graduated from Wesleyan and is now at Yale graduate school because he's interested in Afro-American studies. He spent a year in Togo (that thin slice of republic between Ghana and Dahomey). He's particularly interested in African politics. My younger brother attends Syracuse; he's the comedian of our group, an amazing musician (specialty: drums)."

Marriage? "I think it's great to have a commitment, but unless one is having children...I have plenty of time before I'll be facing that sort of decision." Right now she's looking forward to that next semester at school. The goldfish is ready to get back to the tank.

'Bride' no 'Flash Frankenstein'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

"The Bride" is a stylish and revisionistic remake of that 1935 classic "The Bride of Frankenstein."

The number of movies — mostly bad — derived from Mary Shelley's nightmarish 1818 novel is already simply astounding. Besides the original 1931 "Frankenstein" and its first sequel, "The Bride of Frankenstein," there are "Son of Frankenstein" (1939), "Ghost of Frankenstein" (1942), "Frankenstein Meets the Wolf Man" (1943), "House of Frankenstein" (1944), "Abbot and Costello Meet Frankenstein" (1948), "The Curse of Frankenstein" (1957), "Frankenstein — 1970" (actually made in 1958), "Frankenstein's Daughter" (1959), "Evil of Frankenstein" (1964), "Frankenstein Meets the Space Monster" (1965), "Frankenstein Conquers the World" (1966), "Frankenstein Created Woman" (1967), "Frankenstein Must Be Destroyed!" (1970), "Frankenstein: The True Story" (1973) and "Frankenstein and the Monster from Hell" (1974).

And that, believe it or not, is just a partial resume of this extraordinarily hard-to-kill creature's film career. From the best of these sequels — such as "Frankenstein: The True Story" — to the very worst one — arguably "Frankenstein Meets the Space Monster" — this mad-scientist-creating-life theme has retained an incredible hold on filmgoers' imaginations.

One question this latest entry in the movie monster mania sweepstakes poses — inadvertently — is can the world really use yet another Frankenstein film?

"The Bride" answers with a fairly resounding "Yes."

The film's trendy casting of Sting, the lead singer of the rock group The Police, as Dr. Frankenstein and Jennifer Beals, star of "Flashdance," as his female creation, might be enough to make one fear a sort of glitzy, mishapen "Flash Frankenstein."

Instead, "The Bride" is a surprisingly Gothic, richly textured film; a very worthy successor to the higher quality movies based on Mrs. Shelley's book.

"The Bride" starts in medias res with the action already going at full speed. The doctor creates his beautiful woman, his first ugly male creation flees and the laboratory is destroyed, all in the first few minutes of the movie.

Ms. Beals isn't the greatest actress in the world, but she manages to project a languid, almost otherworldly beauty as the title character. Incidentally, just like Ms. Beals had a stand-in dancer for her in "Flashdance," she has a body double do the one nude scene in "The Bride" for her.

Sting is also certainly a better musical performer than movie actor, but he delivers a taut, if slightly stiff, performance as the modern Prometheus.

The true surprises in the film are the male monster, played by Clancy Brown, and a feisty midget, played by "Time Bandit's" David Rappaport, who befriends him in a "Of Mice and Men"-type relationship.

Their adventures provide a parallel and contrasting story to Sting and Ms. Beal's weird romance and director Franc Roddam does an excellent job of tying the two plot strands tightly together at the film's climax.

Roddam also uses some simply gorgeous photography and French locations that eerily resemble 19th century German Romantic landscape paintings, which are the ideal backdrop for Mrs. Shelley's tale.

One particularly well-chosen setting is a man-made forest planted in geometrically precise rows on the Frankenstein estate, subtly pointing up the baron's desire to control even nature itself.

Since even Frankenstein can't control his audience, it's hard to predict whether "The Bride" will be a box office success — it contains little of the gore that soaks most contemporary horror movies — but at least it succeeds in being one of the very, very few thinking-man's "Frankenstein" films.

"The Bride," rated R for some violence, brief nudity and sexual innuendo, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Volunteers' mildly controversial

While jolly John Candy and the usually lovable Tom Hanks seem like the last comedians in Hollywood likely to stir up too much in the way of controversy, their new movie, "Volunteers," is catching a surprising amount of flak.

The film, which opens with vintage footage of President Kennedy making his "Ask not what your country can do for you" speech, is a parody of the Peace Corps set in 1962.

Candy plays Tom Tuttle from Tacoma, a young engineer who joins the Peace Corps out of naive idealism, and Tom Hanks plays his opposite, a rich Yale snob from "the family that owns the state of Maine" who throws in with the corps solely to escape a sizable gambling debt.

This unlikely pair ends up, along with perky "Profiles in Courage" reader Rita Wilson, in a village on the banks of a remote river in Thailand (although the film was actually shot in Mexico).

Their assignment is to build a bridge across the river. It develops that a nearby warlord wants the bridge so that he can more profitably smuggle out his opium crop.

Hanks isn't interested in the bridge project at first. "It's not that I can't help these people," he says, "it's just that I don't want to." He instantly changes his tune, however, when the warlord offers him a chunk of the area's black market profits.

The local Communist guerrilla insurgents want the bridge so they can send their cadres into the village and they manage to win Candy over to their point of view.

The CIA wants the bridge so that the village can be turned into an airstrip for American-backed mercenaries to use in bombing the Communists.

In fact, the only ones who really never want the bridge built are the poor local villagers who are stuck with the Peace Corps volunteers determined to make them erect it.

The Peace Corps, among others, is not amused. Some of the criticism of spoofing the corps include:

— "It inaccurately portrays the Peace Corps," Hugh O'Neil, director of the corps' public affairs office in Washington, was quoted as saying in the Los Angeles Times.

— "It seems to me that the makers of this cheaply imagined film are old enough to realize they are dumping on one of the few idealistic patches of our checkered recent past," David Elliott, Copley News Service.

— "What is at the center of "Volunteers" is a moral muddiness that envelopes the film by its end, leaving not just an ambiguous or vaguely bitter taste in the mouth but a downright unpalatable one," Chris Stoehr, Dallas Times Herald.

"Volunteers" does, admittedly, have its bad points. It is rife with negative Asiatic stereotypes, but it does compensate for this a bit by making fun of all of the Americans in the movie, too.

The Peace Corps did suggest some changes to the original script, about "some cultural sensitivities in regard to the Thais," and the filmmakers went ahead and made them, according to O'Neil.

The movie also isn't as well-paced as it could have been, its rather scattered approach misses a lot of potentially good jokes and the ending is not terribly imaginative.

Despite these flaws, it is still a fairly funny film. There are many humorous references to other movies, including "Casablanca," "The Bridge Over the River Kwai" and even "Apocalypse Now," and the two best jokes in "Volunteers" — revolving around the use of subtitles — are very clever indeed.

Even the stalwart defender of the corps, O'Neil, told the Los Angeles Times, "it's a good comedy."

"Volunteers," rated R for some strong language, mild violence and sexual innuendo, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Cimino makes return with 'Year of Dragon'

Have you noticed how the advertisements for "Year of the Dragon" so often mention that it is from "Michael Cimino, the director of 'The Deerhunter,' " but neglect to mention that Cimino was more recently the director of one of Hollywood's most spectacular box office flops, "Heaven's Gate?"

Actually, many of the best and worst qualities from both "Deer Hunter" and "Heaven's Gate" are evident in "Year of the Dragon."

Mickey Rourke stars as "the most decorated cop in the history of the New York Police Department" who is ordered to stop the gang violence in Chinatown. He goes beyond the call of duty, however, in trying to put the Chinese Mafia out of business and brings a world of hurt down upon himself.

He keeps stating that the reason for his struggle is that Chinatown is "Vietnam all over again; nobody wants to win the war."

Equating New York's Chinese population with the Viet Cong is just one of the bits of casual racism that Cimino seems prone to. Most of the Chinese characters in "Year" are not much more sympathetically protrayed than Asians were in "Deer Hunter."

He does mitigate this some by obtrusively sticking in various facts about the history of discrimination against Chinese-Americans.

What was an interest in different immigrant ethnic groups in "Heaven's Gate," blossoms into a full-fledged obsession with Cimino in "Year."

"You made one mistake," Rourke tells a criminal who tries to bribe him, "I'm not Italian; I'm a Polock."

Perhaps even stranger is Cimino's attitude towards women. In one scene, Rourke rapes his Chinese girlfriend, played by Tracy Tzu, for no logical reason and she never complains afterward. Cimino apparently has few qualms about date rape.

Ms. Tzu, a professional model, is completely inadequate in her role, but the romance between her and the bigoted Rourke makes such little sense that a better actress might have just been wasted anyway.

Rourke is better. He gives an intense, thoroughly professional performance, but he's fighting a tough, uphill battle against a muddled script.

One nice surprise is John Lone as villain Joey Tai. It's hard to grasp that this sauve, sophisticated Chinese character is being played by the same man who was a completely believable Neanderthal in "Iceman."

Cimino gives the audience some nice surprises of his own, too. As in "Deer Hunter" and "Heaven's Gate," he stages many beautiful scenes with an operatic sweep. Parts of the film shot in Thailand are stunning. Give Cimino enough room, and he'll deliver a epic.

Unfortunately, in most of the movies he's made, Cimino starts rambling and loses the focus of his story. This slowed down "Deer Hunter," killed "Heaven's Gate" and hurts "Year."

If he had used a modicum of self-restraint, his latest film might have been great. As it is, "Year of the Dragon" is interesting, and it's certainly an major improvement over "Heaven's Gate."

"Year of the Dragon," rated R for strong violence, strong language and sexual situations, is now showing at North Park Cinemas.

'Return of Living Dead' not Romero sequel

The most important thing to know about "Return of the Living Dead" is that it is not — repeat, not — a sequel to George Romero's very similarly titled horror movies, 1968's "Night of the Living Dead" and 1979's "Dawn of the Dead."

Romero has just finished making his own sequel — unsurprising titled "Day of the Dead" — to complete his "Living Dead" trilogy.

"Return of the Living Dead," a film about cannibalistic zombies crawling out of their graves, steals very liberally from Romero's movies and the characters even make several references to them.

"Well, it worked in the movie," one character states after a pick-axe through the skull completely fails to stop a killer zombie.

"Return" is directed by Dan O'Bannon, who wrote the screenplay for "Alien" and certainly has talent as well as a slightly twisted sense of humor, but, when it comes to dead corpses munching on folks, he just doesn't have Romero's apparent innate flair.

O'Bannon's undead come shambling out of Louisville, Ky., after a weird chemical developed by the Army is accidentally spilled by a couple of dim-witted medical supply warehouse workers, Frank, played by James Karen, and Freddy, played by Thom Matthews.

When the accident happens, there are also some equally dim-witted teen-aged punkers hanging around waiting for Freddy to get off work. While they wait, they decide to party in a nearby graveyard — which is just about the worst place on earth to be when brain-sucking zombies start crawling from their crypts.

Most of the movie, focusing on this motley crew's struggle to fend off the fiendish hordes, is a touch-in-cheek parody of Romero's "Living Dead" films, which is bizarre since Romero's movies were very campy to start off with. "Dawn of the Dead," set in a Pittsburgh shopping mall, was especially satiric.

While O'Bannon does manage to pull off a few extremely funny jokes, like the "it worked in the movie" gag, on the overall "Return" is strictly amateurish as a comedy. He also doesn't have Romero's knack for stylized bloodletting.

Although even moderately squeamish people will probably want to avoid the film's cartoonish violence, hardcore gore fanatics are likely to be unsatisfied by its uneven mix of action and comedy.

After seeing "Return of the Living Dead" last weekend, one "Dawn of the Dead" fan in the audience said Romero's movies were far superior because they "were just interested in ripping people's guts out and spreading them around on the floor."

"Return of the Living Dead," rated R for graphic violence, strong language and some nudity, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

GOREN BRIDGE

Q.—We play strictly according to Goren. Our no trump range is 16-18 points. I held:
♠K9 ♡AQJ54 ◇AJ4 ♣QJ7
Since we readily open one no trump even if we hold a five-card major, and since I had a balanced hand with a stopper in every suit, I chose that opening bid. Partner had four hearts and 7 points, and we missed game when he elected to pass. Where did we go wrong? — J.L., Anchorage, Alaska

A.—There are divided thoughts about whether you should open one no trump when you hold a five-card major. I have no objection to it. Many 16-18 points hands with a five-card major are difficult to bid if you open with one of the suit and partner responds one no trump or one spade—you have to choose between an underbid and an overbid at your next turn.

Where you went wrong is that your hand is too strong for a one no trump opening bid. Although it counts only 18 HCP, in hearts it revalues to 19. Therefore, you should have opened the bidding with one heart.

Q.—I always seem to get into trouble when partner opens the bidding and I have a perfectly balanced hand of 13-15 points and four-card support for partner's suit. Should I jump raise partner's suit or jump to two no trump?—K.R., Toledo, Ohio

A.—The answer is yes to both questions! If that seems a trifle incomprehensible, it is because you have not asked a complete question. For example, suppose that you have this hand:

♠KJ5 ♡Q104 ◇KJ43 ♣A93

If partner opens the bidding with one diamond, your correct response is two no trump. Nine tricks are likely to be easier to collect than 11, especially since you have no ruffing value. With a stopper in every suit, it is wiser to aim for the no trump game than for five diamonds. Should you jump to three diamonds, there is a distinct possibility that partner's rebid might take you beyond three no trump.

Now let's switch the red suits around and presume that partner opens the bidding with one heart. Now, you need only one trick more to make game in hearts than in no trump and, although you don't have a ruffing value, it is more than likely that partner does.

It is a fairly close decision whether to bid three hearts or two no trump. However, there is usually a safety factor in a suit contract—your trumps prevent the opponents from scoring tricks in their long suit. We would prefer the jump raise of the major to a jump to two no trump.

Company uses restrooms for ads

DENVER (AP) — Move over, graffiti: a Denver company has a new use for the walls of stalls in restrooms — advertising.

People don't have to read the ads if they don't want to, said Dave Walstrom, president of National Indoor Advertising of Denver, a six-month-old firm arranging for the use of lavatory walls as billboard space.

The firm installs display panels for paid advertisements in office building toilet stalls and above urinals.

Advertisers include a Denver office supply company and a courier service. Walstrom said National is seeking 14 more advertisers.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — State Rep. Jon "Peaches" Johnson says he'll probably try to have John Peaches Johnson disqualified from the Oct. 19 election for a Louisiana Senate seat.

John Johnson officially entered the race for the late Sen. Nat G. Kiefer's seat by filing qualifying papers a few hours after he changed his name from Collins Anthony Lewis.

"I am prepared to say there is deception in the name change and an obvious attempt to get voters confused about my candidacy," Rep. Johnson said. He said his mother nicknamed him "Peaches" when he was a boy.

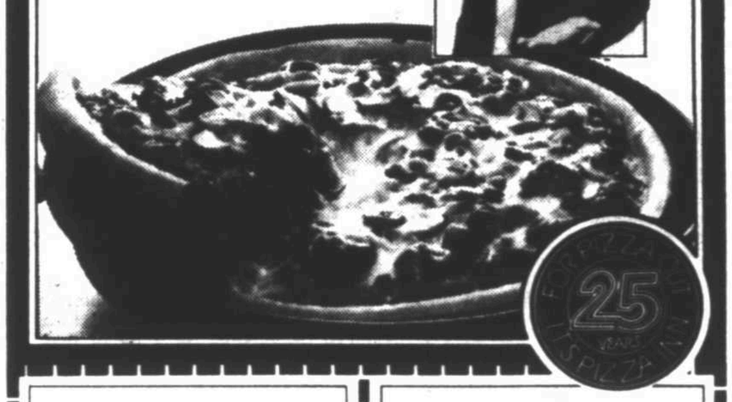

John Johnson's petition for a name change said he wanted his new name because he's admired it for a long time.

Perry Como's charming modesty, romanticism enthralls his audiences

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) — During a self-mocking ditty that he sings in his nationwide summer concert tour, Perry Como croons:

"I'll bet you'd like to know
If he stays awake through the whole show..."

Throughout his 53-year career, Perry Como has shunned pomposity.

His charming modesty as well as the innate romanticism of his baritone voice keeps the audiences enthralled. While he often accuses them of being "rejects from Lawrence Welk," a large number of the crowds includ young fans.

Como has a reputation for somnolence.

"I do get a little tired of some of the jokes," he admitted, "but I was amused by that skit on 'SCTV' (in which he appears near comatose as dancers leap around him). The producer sent me a tape and said that they meant it to be in the spirit of fun. I play it for my kids, just for laughs.

"The whole thing started when I was doing my show on live television. Everything went wrong: the scenery fell down; the cue cards got mixed up; you'd start a number with four cameras and end with one.

"I decided the only thing to do was take it as it came. People wrote in asking how I could be so casual. It all started to grow."

Como is an unabashed 73, "but I feel the same as I did 50 years ago." The hair has grayed, but his face retains that Italian handsomeness. Though he ballooned to 215 pounds during six months in a cast for a broken leg 14 years ago, he's now a trim 165. He plays golf when possible, but mostly he walks eight to 10 miles daily at a rapid clip near his home at Jupiter, Fla.

This year's tour will take the singer from Seattle to Atlantic City, with a number of one-night stands along the way. That takes him right back to his big band beginnings.

Born Pierino Roland Como, one of 13 children of immigrant Italians, he seemed destined to be a barber in Cannonsburg, Pa. But his lyric style got him a job with Freddy Carlone's band in 1933, then he joined Ted Weems.

"Those were great days," he recalled. "My wife and I would get in the car and drive to Chicago, where we'd play for eight weeks. Then Ted would say, 'Meet me on Catalina Island in four days.' "

"It started to get rough when our son was about five months old. This is an old story, but I went back home and I actually thought I would become a barber again. I was concerned about my wife, but she said, 'No, you're not going to quit.' Who knows — today I might have had a barbershop somewhere in Pennsylvania."

In 1943 he began what turned into a 50-year contract with RCA-Victor records. A series of hits brought him to Hollywood for wartime musicals.

"The first movie was 'Something for the Boys' at Fox," he related. "I came out with a 12-week contract at $1,250 a week, and on the first day I reported to makeup at 7 a.m. I sat in my dressing room and they never called me. That went on for two weeks, so I decided to go to the California Country Club, where I played golf.

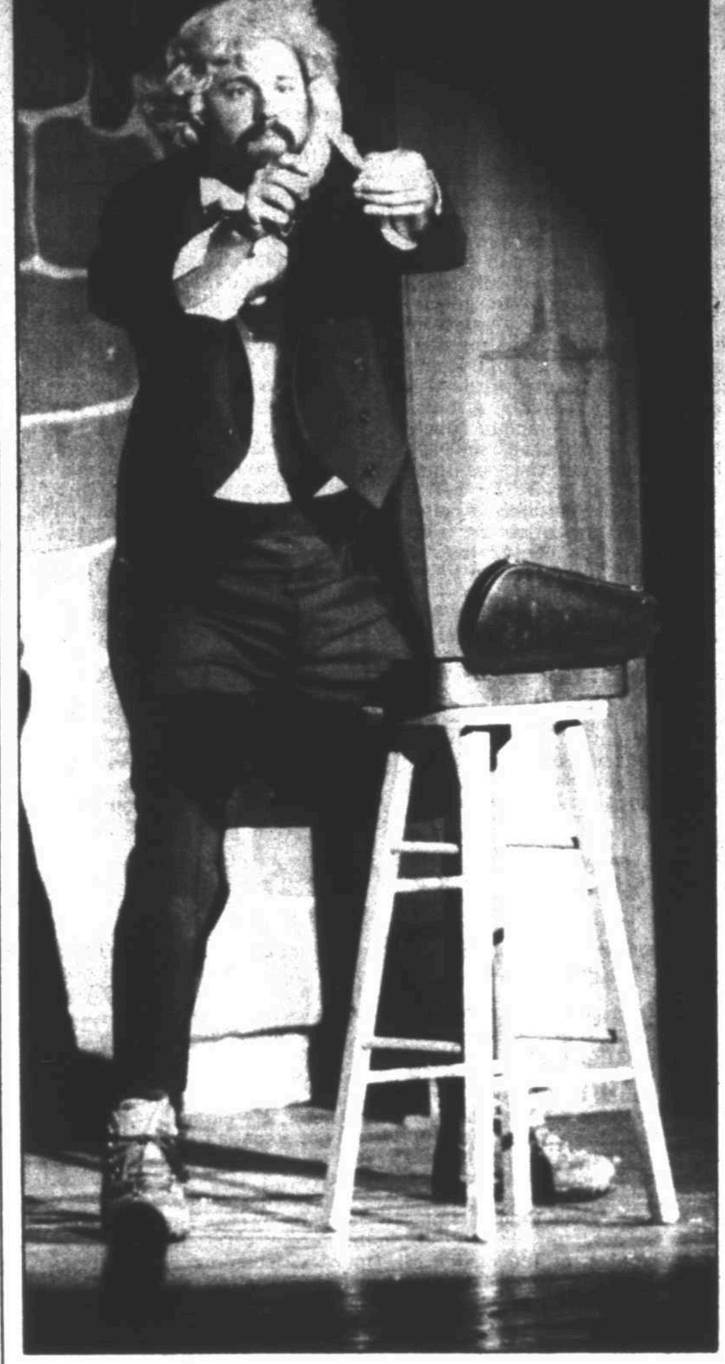

"After two weeks, I went back to the studio. They hadn't missed me."

After four films, Como decided "I was wasting their time and they were wasting mine." Returning to New York, he declined the easy money in night clubs to pursue a career in radio. He was able to spend more time with his family, now grown to three children, and the 15-minute, five-times-a-week show established him as a national favorite.

Como continues his annual Christmas TV show; this year's was scheduled for Italy but he's switching to Hawaii because of terrorist danger ("You can't take chances when you're responsible for a lot of people"). He records an occasional album, but admitted he doesn't understand today's music world.

"I've got 13 grandchildren, from 2 months to 23," he said. "When I ask them what they see in music videos, they say, 'Grandpa, we identify the singers with the pictures.'

"I try to understand what's going on in music, since I'm part of it. But in the past 15 years it just seems like I haven't been in the business."

Directed by Tandy Curlee, "Chapter Two" will play Monday, Tuesday, Thursday through Saturday and Sept. 3. Reservations may be made by calling 1-728-3491 between 1 and 5 p.m. weekdays. Those there on opening night will be treated to hors d'oeuvres during intermission at the Red Dog Saloon.

The Opera House has had a long and eventful history. Built in 1899-1900 by the Colorado City Opera House Company at a cost of $2,813, it was the second opera house in Colorado City. In 1911, the Opera House became a silent movie house. Then in the 1920, the slanting audience floor was taken out, a second floor level was established and the building turned into a rooming house.

In the mid 1960s, the romming house was given up by its owners to the city, county and school board for accumulated back taxes. The Colorado City Playhouse, Inc., a local community theater organization, asked the city council if the organization might renovate the building back into a theater. Terms for the lease of the building to the Playhouse were $1 per-year for 20 years with a 20-year option.

Playhouse members completed the renovations, working three nights per-week for two years. Recently, Colorado City Playhouse added $125,000 in improvements to, among others, the stage size, scenery and fly-rigs to make the facility adaptable to more ambitious projects than have been undertaken before.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Logic computer programs available for all age levels

By BILL TILLMAN

The next time you visit the library, why not spend an hour exploring the programs available for the library computers? Subject areas range from preschool programs about numbers, colors, and the alphabet, to adult programs concerning word-processing and programmaing. Among the array of choices is logic, a subject area becoming popular. The group of programs dealing with logic is not only a fascinating area, but also one that most age levels can enjoy.

One such program is CHESS. Whether you are an expert or a beginner, this game of strategy lets you choose the level of difficulty. Sharp graphics and full instructions accompany the program as you test your skills against the computer.

THE FACTORY is another logic program that patrons are finding quite interesting. Several strategies are focused upon, including problem solving, analyzing a process, determining a sequence and applying creativity. By using three levels, the student can experiment with machines, design products and then try to reproduce them. The third level of play lets the operator work backward to determine what process is required to construct the product.

If searching for oil and natural gas is an area of interest to you, then you will probably enjoy doing so with OIL RIG. This program is, of course, a simulation of what petroleum engineers do every working day. The seismic survey feature allows students to map underground layers in an imaginary area of sedimentary rocks. Keeping track of cost and income helps you monitor your progress.

GERTRUDE'S PUZZLES is another logic program recently added to the collection. Solving the puzzles is challenging, but you will also learn to work with similarities and differences in patterns and shapes. Your hostess is Gertrude, a puzzle-loving goose who rewards your good work with a treasure.

Would you like to become a detective for an hour? With SNOOPER TROOPS you can help find out whether or not there is a ghost at Granite Point. There are seven suspects, and if you find the guilty one, you will get a full confession. During your search you are provided with a snoopmobile, wrist radio, flashlight, camera and snoopnet computer to discover "whodunit."

The most recently acquired program in the area of logic is titled WHERE IN THE WORLD IS CARMEN SANDIEGO. Many patrons have shown an intense interest in this program. Become a super-sleuth while being introduced to world geography in a spy-game format. In playing the investigator, you combine graphic adventure, trivia, mystery and arcade animation while sorting clues. The World Almanac accompanies the program to help with the facts needed to solve various cases. Ten possible suspects, 30 cities and nearly 1,000 clues provide an almost endless amount of cases to be solved.

Plunge yourself into a contest that stretches your intellect to its limits with INTELLECTUAL DECATHALON. The decathalon is a 10-event game that challenges your logical capabilities by testing your powers of thought, concentration, memorization and eye/hand coordination. One can compete with as many as five other players or participate alone. Gold, silver and bronze medals are awarded in the true spirit of Olympic competition.

If your interests are in other areas of logic, you might want to explore such proagrams as ALGEBRA ARCADE, EXPLORER METROS, LOGO, PLANET MINERS, ROBOT ODYSSEY I or STEP BY STEP, an introduction to basic language. The computers for public use are located in the Fine Arts Department.

'Innocent' has shades of vendetta

"An Innocent Millionaire," by Stephen Vizinczey, Atlantic Monthly Press, $16.95.

By LESLIE HANSCOM
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Life never stops plagiarizing art. The discovery last month of a Spanish treasure galleon sunk three centuries ago off the coast of Florida seemed in many of its details a blatant steal from the plot of Stephen Vizinczey's novel, "An Innocent Millionaire." Even in ways remote from literature, it is a daring act to pilfer from Vizinczey, who has the reputation of being a ferociously litigious man.

This Hungarian writer's one other novel, "In Praise of Older Women," was the storm center of a seven-year lawsuit in which Vizinczey was tangled in combat with Ian Ballantine, his American publisher. The rights and wrongs of the dispute and even the way it was settled frustrate the understanding of the uninvolved observer, but it may be in the new novel that the last gun is fired. A considerable portion of "An Innocent Millionaire" is an excoriation of lawyers that is the unmistakable outcry of a wounded heart.

That the book, in part, has the character of a vendetta makes it all the more remarkable that it is so good. When it was first published two years ago in England, some of the most illustrious of British novelists competed in praising it. From the experience of reading it, Brigid Brophy said she "emerged spinning with admiration." Anthony Burgess said it had "a humor more mature than Wodehouse or even Waugh." Graham Greene said, "Bravo!"

None of these compliments give an idea of what the book is actually like, and that is not easy to do. Probably the one who came closest to finding a descriptive label for it was the reviewer in a Canadian quarterly who called it "an ironic romance." It is, as indicated at the top of this, a story of a young man's obsessive hunt for treasure and of the painful consequences of finding it. But that makes it sound like an action yarn. The book is a far richer invention than that, filled with humane insight (along with the anger), literary poise, high imagination and, best of all, pure comedy.

That all of these merits, plus the applause which "An Innocent Millionaire" has won in England and Canada couldn't, for a period, get it published in this country is a comment on the strange career of Stephen Vizinczey. By his interpretation, American publishers turned the book down because it isn't currently fashionable for a serious novel to have a lot of plot and cover a lot of ground in the way of social observation. That, he says, is now the province of "the garbage best-seller." When Vizinczey's novel was making the rounds, it is doubtful that even the dumbest editor could see it as a garbage best-seller, but it is also possible that that same editor might not have been eager to test the truth of the author's reputation as a combative personality.

Whatever that truth may be, Vizinczey, in an ordinary meeting, is Hungarian enough to have plenty of charm. He is a lean, balding man with an intense face and manner and an accent which makes interviewing him an exhausting exercise in guesswork. Although he writes English of a limpid purity, he puts it through terrible tortures in the pronunciation. A word like "detective," as uttered by him, conveys no more meaning to the Yankee ear than the mating signal of the grackle. Whatever inaccuracies may occur in this account are presented therefore with apologies and a hat off to Hungarian as a marvelous and mysterious tongue.

The writer's name, to confront another obstacle, is pronounced "Vis-in-say," with a stress on the last syllable. He was born in 1932 and bereaved two years later when, as he tells it, his father, headmaster of a district school and an early anti-fascist, was murdered in his office by a Nazi fanatic. In early manhood, Vizinczey had his own clash with totalitarianism, this time of the Communist persuasion. "I had three plays banned," he says, "before I was 23." This put him in the mood to join up when his countrymen revolted against Soviet occupation in 1956, the same year he graduated at the top of his class from the Hungarian Academy of Theater and Fine Arts.

In his escape to the West, Vizinczey wound up in Montreal, where the Canadian novelist, Hugh MacLennan, sponsored him for citizenship. Knowing about 50 words of English, he found work by passing himself off as a bookkeeper. This was an inappropriate job because numbers consistently put him to sleep. Once he misread a debt of $3,000 owed to his employer and paid it out to the debtor. The boss was too kind-hearted to fire him, but Vizinczey voluntarily quit. "I have never," he says, "made another person so happy."

Despairing of his situation, the Hungarian exile resolved to kill himself. "I was afraid to jump," he says, "so I thought starving might be the best way to go. To pass the time while starving, I thought I might as well learn English." Vizinczey learned it so brilliantly — leaving out the oral delivery — that he has placed himself in a category with Conrad and Nabokov as a foreigner who handles English in a way to strike jealousy into the heart of a native speaker.

It was while writing scripts for Canadian movies and television that he quit to work on "In Praise of Older Women," the imagined memories of a young man amorously obsessed, which in the 20 years since it was written, has been acclaimed as an erotic masterpiece. That book also had a cold reception from publishers, with the consequence that the author published it himself and hawked it around to bookstores in person. According to him, it has since sold between two and three million copies around the world.

Vizinczey's new novel is the work of 12 years, largely done in New York and on Anna Maria Island in Florida. His only other book in English, apart from "In Praise of Older Women," is "The Rules of Chaos," a collection of essays which he describes as "a critique of determinism which asks the question, 'In what sense are we free?' " In it, the author claims that he predicted in 1968 that the U.S. would lose the war in Vietnam. It was not, however, the kind of book calculated to be helpful in the responsibility of supporting his American wife and three daughters.

In speaking of his powerfully persuasive fiction, Vizinczey says that he achieves his effect by writing of nothing but character and fate.

Novel people with sympathetic, eccentric characters

"The Cider House Rules," By John Irving. Morrow. 560 Pages. $18.95.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press

"Maine has many towns; there wasn't one as charmless as St. Cloud's."

It follows then that St. Cloud's is the place where John Irving has decided to locate, in large part, his new novel, "The Cider House Rules."

Oddly, or not so considering Irving's formidable writing skill, St. Cloud's quickly loses its charmlessness, largely because of the warm and sympathetic — although sometimes eccentric — characters he has created to people his town.

There is Dr. Wilbur Larch, who presides over an orphanage but also performs illegal operations — the time is the 1920s and a few decades thereafter — to women with unwanted pregnancies.

There is Homer Wells, a permanent resident at the orphanage because Larch violated his own rule and bestowed rather than withheld love from the orphan and the boy does not want to leave. As Homer grows, Larch teaches him his operating techniques, but the youth rebels and refuses to have anything to do with illegal operations.

A Review

This is just one example of how Irving demonstrates the role rules play in the lives of men. There are others, and by the end of the novel the reader is well versed in Irving's thoughts on the rules men choose to live by and those they don't.

The novel, however, is much more than a detailing of the struggle between Larch and Homer over who possesses the correct set of rules.

There are many nicely made stories within the story. One tells of Melony, Homer's first love and also his first betrayal. There are Wally and Candy. And there is Mr. Rose, a dignified black man with his own set of rules.

Boa constrictor pays woman visit

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — Jo Shaw knew one of her neighbors kept a pet boa constrictor but she never visited it because she doesn't like snakes, "not one little bit."

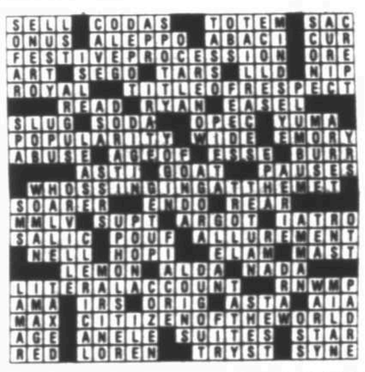

So when the snake paid her a visit, Ms. Shaw said, "I thought I was going to have a heart attack."

She found the snake, called "Sneavely," in her yard as she mowed her lawn one day last week. It was taken back to its owner, next-door neighbor Jane Hyatt, by animal control officers.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Observers at the State Fair auction ring suspect Anna Hitron is going to need a little financial help from relatives to cover her bid of $46,625 for a slab of salt pork in a charity auction.

Two year-old Anna shouldn't have any trouble raising the money, which works out to $2,500 a pound. Her grandfather is Louisville developer Al Schneider. He referred all questions to Anna. She shyly deferred to her mother, Dawn Hitron.

Craftsman building organ from scratch

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — John-Paul Buzard has an ear for beautiful music, an eye for fine wood and hands that are as comfortable on a keyboard as on a saw — just the qualities needed to build a large and rare organ from scratch.

Measuring 13 feet long, 12 feet high and 5 feet deep, the 632-pipe organ fills one end of a room in Smith Hall at the School of Music at the University of Illinois.

It will cost $12,000 — far less than the $84,000-$130,000 the university might have spent to buy a ready-made organ, said Buzard, 30, who has maintained the school's organs and harpsichords for five years.

"I have to be a scientist in terms of the organ's engineering and a musician and artist to know how to obtain the sound I want from the pipes," he said.

"There's a general awareness all over the world of the importance of instruments of this sort because of the importance of the organ music composed on them in the 17th and 18th centuries," said Jerald Hamilton, music professor and chairman of the organ division, in explaining the significance of the custom-made instrument, which will be used for practice and recitals.

Buzard, a minister's son, apprenticed with a Chicago organ-builder while in high school and later worked his way through Illinois and Northwestern universities tuning and caring for organs.

He began this project about a year ago, studying the empty room because "organs need to be designed to the room architecturally and acoustically."

He made sketches, then bluebrints before beginning construction, assisted by two apprentices. Because of Illinois' high humidity and the hard use a practice organ receives, construction is exceptionally solid.

"I don't rely on glue — I screw it down and use fancy joints and make it stronger than it needs to be," said Buzard.

He used redwood, walnut, maple, mahogany and oak. A few of the pipes were salvaged from an old university organ but most came from Pennsylvania, Germany and England. Buzard will tune each one himself for precise sound he desires.

The pipes are either wood or metal, with the largest eight feet tall.

The two keyboards have maple and ebony keys — traditional ivory is no longer available — and were manufactured in England. Buzard said it was faster and cheaper to have specialists prepare pipes and keyboards.

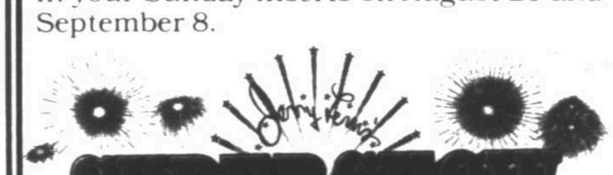

The organ also will feature trackers, intricate mechanical connections between the keyboard and the valves that release air into the pipes, Buzard said. Tracker organs are more sensitive to the touch than organs with electric relays, he said.

Crop of recipes uses tomatoes off the vine

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features Syndicate

Yes, you can fool Mother Nature. Just be one step ahead of her when she pulls unpredictable pranks.

Sometimes she makes all your tomatoes ripen at the same time. What do you do with the unexpected plenty? How many salads can you serve? And your neighbors have their own plenty.

Then again, Mother Nature might call for an early frost just when your vines are heavy with green tomatoes. What do you do with them? You can't let them shrivel on the vine.

Not to worry. Here's a whole crop of recipes, some for immediate enjoyment, some for pickling, relishes, chutney and sauces.

Make your own tomato juice; have some now, freeze the remainder. At zero degrees F. or below, juice will maintain quality and flavor up to six months. In freezing juice (or broths), avoid glass jars or bottles with narrow mouths and flared sides to prevent liquid from cracking jars when it expands. Instead, use straight-sided jars that are meant for the freezer.

FRESH TOMATO JUICE

Use vine-ripened tomatoes. Wash and trim them, then cut into quarters or eighths. Simmer for 10 to 15 minutes. Press through a food mill or sieve. Season with salt to taste, if desired (½ to 1 teaspoon per quart of juice). Pour into clean containers, leaving ½-inch head space in pint jars, or 1-inch head space in quart jars.

Its vinegary, sweet taste makes this unusual chutney a perfect condiment for a curried dish. But it's also marvelous with plain meats and poultry.

SPICED TOMATO CHUTNEY

5 pounds ripe tomatoes, peeled and diced (6½ cups)
1 cup sugar
1 cup seedless raisins
2 teaspoons salt
¼ teaspoon crushed red pepper
1 cup cider vinegar
1½ teaspoons whole allspice
4 cinnamon sticks

In a large saucepan combine tomatoes, sugar, raisins, salt, red pepper and vinegar; mix well. Tie allspice in a piece of cheesecloth. Add to saucepan along with cinnamon sticks. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer, covered, stirring frequently until very thick, about 2 hours. Remove allspice. Ladle into hot canning jars leaving ¼-inch head space. Cover and process according to jar manufacturer's directions.

• • •

Slice ripe or green tomatoes (½ inch thick), dip in batter, or coat them with flour or bread crumbs and fry in olive oil for a new vegetable accompaniment for meat or fish. Cornmeal adds flavor and crunch to these.

FRIED TOMATOES

4 firm tomatoes (1¼ pounds)
⅓ cup white cornmeal
⅓ cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon onion powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
¼ cup vegetable oil

Remove stem from tomatoes. Cut into ½-inch slices. In a pie pan or shallow bowl combine cornmeal, flour, onion powder, salt, black pepper and garlic powder. Dip both sides of tomatoes in cornmeal mixture, shaking off excess.

In a large skillet heat 2 tablespoons of the oil until hot. Place one half of tomato slice in skillet. Fry until golden, about 1½ minutes.

• • •

This relish doesn't have to be canned. It can be served immediately and keeps well in the fridge.

TOMATO RELISH

1 pound (3 to 4) ripe tomatoes, peeled and chopped
½ cup minced green pepper
½ cup finely diced celery
1 tablespoon minced onion flakes
2 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ cup cider vinegar
¼ cup water
1 tablespoon mixed pickling spice (tied in a cheesecloth bag)

In a medium bowl combine tomatoes, green pepper, celery, onion flakes, salt and sugar. In a small saucepan combine vinegar, water and pickling spice; bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer for 1 minute. Pour over vegetables. Cover and chill 24 hours. Remove spice bag. Drain and serve as an accompaniment to meat, fish or poultry.

Dixie Relish is a kind of variation of chow chow. Gingered Tomato Pickle is another good way to use green tomatoes.

DIXIE RELISH

1 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1¼ cups white vinegar
¾ cup water
2 tablespoons instant minced onion
1 tablespoon mustard seed
1 tablespoon salt
1½ teaspoons celery seed
1½ teaspoons mixed pickling spice
3½ pounds green tomatoes, peeled, cored and coarsely chopped (about 1½ quarts)
¾ cup red pepper squares
¾ cup green pepper squares
1 quart coarsely shredded green cabbage

In a large sauce pot combine brown sugar, vinegar, water, onion, mustard seed, salt, celery seed and pickling spice. Bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer, covered, for 15 minutes. Add tomatoes and red and green peppers. Simmer, covered for 5 minutes. Add cabbage. Simmer, covered, stirring occasionally, for 5 minutes. Immediately ladle into four hot sterilized one-pint jars, leaving ¼-inch head space. Cover as directed by manufacturer. Process in boiling-water bath according to manufacturer's directions for 10 minutes.

• • •

GINGERED TOMATO PICKLE

3 pounds green tomatoes
2 tablespoons salt
1½ cups white vinegar
½ cup onion flakes
2 teaspoons mustard seed
1 teaspoon celery seed
1 teaspoon ground ginger
1 whole red chili pepper
3 cups diced tart apples
1 cup sugar

Thinly slice tomatoes (makes about 2 quarts). Place in a large bowl, sprinkling salt over each layer; let stand for 2 hours. Drain thoroughly. In a Dutch oven or large saucepan, combine vinegar, onion flakes, mustard seed, celery seed, ginger and red pepper; bring to boiling point. Add apples; return to boiling point. Reduce heat; cover and simmer for 5 minutes. Add tomatoes and sugar, return to boiling point. Reduce heat; cover and simmer for 15 minutes or until tomatoes are tender.

Pack hot tomatoes and apples into hot sterilized jars. Fill with boiling liquid. Seal immediately.

Nothing can compare with the fragrance and flavor of a sauce made with garden-fresh tomatoes. Following are two: one with firm ripe tomatoes, the other with green.

Sometimes the inner flesh of green tomatoes is pink or a delicate red. If yours are, you might want to substitute green peppers for the red called for in the Green Tomato Sauce recipe, or combine red and green peppers.

Both these sauces freeze well and they may be served over cooked pasta, rice, omelets or vegetables. I've served the Green Tomato Sauce over steamed wedges of cabbage.

FRESH RED TOMATO SAUCE

3 pounds firm ripe tomatoes
½ cup chopped onion
½ teaspoon minced garlic
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon Italian seasoning, crushed
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 bay leaf
2 tablespoons dry white wine or water

Chop tomatoes (makes about 6 cups); set aside. In a non-stick skillet or skillet sprayed with no-stick cooking spray, cook onion and garlic until tender, about 3 minutes. Add salt, Italian seasoning, black pepper, bay leaf and reserved tomatoes; bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer, uncovered, until tomatoes are tender, about 15 minutes. Add wine; continue to simmer, uncovered, 5 minutes. Remove and discard bay leaf.

GREEN TOMATO SAUCE

2 large green tomatoes
3 tablespoons olive oil
2 red bell peppers, cut lengthwise
1 medium onion, thinly sliced
⅛ cup coarsely chopped fresh basil, or ½ teaspoon dry basil
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

If desired, peel tomatoes by holding over range heat, using a long-handled fork, until skin pops and peels off easily (though peeling is not necessary). Coarsely chop tomatoes; set aside.

In skillet place oil, red peppers and onion. Saute over low heat, stirring frequently, until onion is soft but not brown and peppers are tender crisp. Add tomatoes. Cook over medium heat until tomatoes are tender, 10 to 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Stir in basil, salt and black pepper; cook 5 minutes.

This tomato pie combines protein, vegetables, dairy and bread-cereal food groups in a quiche that can be served as a main dish or cut into small portions for an appetizer or hors d'oeuvres.

FRESH TOMATO PIE

2 medium-sized fully ripened tomatoes
Pastry for a one-crust 9-inch pie
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 cup finely chopped onions
1 cup diced green pepper
4 eggs
1 cup milk
1½ cups shredded Cheddar cheese
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon ground black pepper

Preheat oven to 450F. Slice tomatoes and set aside. Roll pastry to fit a 9-inch pie pan. Fit pastry into pan; flute edges. Prick bottom and sides of pastry with a fork; refrigerate for 10 minutes. Bake until golden, about 8 minutes. Remove from oven. Reduce oven temperature to 325F.

In medium skillet melt butter. Add onions and green peppers. Saute for 5 minutes. In a bowl, lightly beat eggs. Stir in milk, cheese, salt, black pepper and sauteed onions and green pepper. Arrange tomato slices on the bottom of the pie shell. Pour mixture over all. Bake in 325F oven until knife inserted in center comes out clean, about 50 minutes.

Good-tasting bounty makes canning worth all work

By SHARON ADDY

Spiced Tomato Chutney

It's that time of year again when my eyes are glazed, one hand is permanently fixed to my aching back and my knees are crusted and wrinkled from crawling down the garden path.

With aspirin easing my aches and pains, I stay awake at night counting the snapping lids and wondering why I bother. Aren't the stores full of beans, pickles, peaches and tomatoes? Of course they are! I see them in my dreams, rows and rows with different labels mocking me in my Herculean task. But even in my dreams I see the prices.

I go at canning in a big way, trying to put up enough vegetables and fruits to supply our family of four, two adults and two small children, for a year. After a while it feels as if I can everything that sits on the kitchen counter too long. I'm afraid some morning I'll wake up to find I've put up the dish cloth, pan scrubber and measuring spoons.

For me, canning really starts with beans. I always try to put up at least a dozen jars of mixed beans and peas for soups and casseroles, as well as enough green and wax beans so we can have them once a week all year. That doesn't sound like much until you realize there are 52 weeks to a year, and it takes a whole mountain of beans, individually washed and cut, to fill that many jars.

About the time I'm really sick of working with beans, the plants begin to slow down. While the beans rest, I concentrate on pickles. A few gardens ago I learned that cucumbers grow very nicely when trained to a fence. No more crawling around on the ground playing hide and seek with that vegetable. Now I kneel before the wall of greenery like someone in prayer and break them off.

I have three recipes for dill pickles that I make every year. They are all good, but one of them creates a truly perfect pickle, crisp and firm with just the right fragrance and tang. It's a true complement to any food. However, I'm not sure which recipe creates this masterpiece.

Over the past few years I've tried a few schemes to find out. Separating the jars worked until I ran out of shelf space. Once I wrote notes on lick-and-stick labels. They curled and fell off. Another year I marked a code on each lid with black crayon, only to have one daughter wipe it off so her little sister wouldn't be blamed for marking up the jars.

Someday I may devise an infallible marking system, but I've noticed that my pickle gobblers are less interested in perfection than I am.

Peaches and tomatoes don't come in at the same time, but they are similar in the way they're handled. They're both hot and slippery when you're at work removing the skins. Many times I've scalded my fingers trying to catch a tomato before it slides off the spoon and splashes into the simmering water.

Slipping off the jacket is the worst part of tomatoes. It's easy after that. But those peaches — once the skin is off, they're slippery and soft and need more work.

Holding a slightly warm peach more carefully than I handle anything, I slide it around in the cup of my hand as I cut it with a butter knife. The peach coats my hand and the juice drips through my fingers. It's torment for this peach lover to feel that nectar run down the back of my hand and drip off.

Next the halves must be separated and the stone removed. Working slowly, wedging carefully, the fruit tears away from the pit. Oh, so gradually, one half of the peach works free. The peach pit is stubborn. Working delicately around the stone, I find I've dug a hole right through the peach, down to my hand.

After the peaches are halved, I begin the process of sliding them down a knife into the jar. If the first peach goes in with the flat side down, all the rest fit in nicely. Cautiously I begin to slide that first peach into the quart jar. Slipping bit by bit, the peach flips off the knife and lands on the bottom of the jar, upside down. By the fifth try I'm ready to shake the jar recklessly. It looks so easy in the canning books.

Vegetables should go from the garden to the jar faster than possible. You've got to catch those vitamins before they evaporate. I pick the vegetables just before I put them up.

I got into the habit of waiting until after 10 in the morning to go out picking when the garden was only big enough to support one rabbit. I learned that most of the mosquitoes have had their breakfast and are napping by the time the 10 o'clock sun warms the earth. Picking vegetables takes forever when one hand is busy swatting mosquitoes.

Body aching, with dishpan hands up to my elbows, I can my way through beans, peaches, pears, apple sauce, sweet pickles and tomatoes with an occasional change of pace as the green peppers, kohlrabi, lima beans, corn, cauliflower and broccoli come due for freezing. Until late in the fall I'm busy putting up and preserving, protecting color and texture, trapping vitamins and minerals with no help from artificial chemicals or the nibblers' fingers.

Sometimes in November I carry the canning kettle down to the basement to rest next to the rows and rows of filled jars. All the long days of monotonous repetition are over. My fears of spilling the hot water bath or dropping a jar of food still bubbling hot and processing, are forgotten as I look at the treasure I've captured for the winter.

There are yellow and green beans, the soup mix, pickles in quarts and pints, a lovely light green when compared to the dark, shiny sweet pickles next to them. Bright red whole tomatoes are on another shelf, lots of them for chili and soup on cold winter nights. Then there are the rows and rows of tomato sauce, deep red and thick, simmered for hours.

The jars of apple sauce are brown, a natural chemical reaction with the air as the sauce cooked in an open kettle. We all sampled each batch, checking carefully to insure the proper tartness. The pears I keep white for beauty. I use the same color keeper on the peaches. Bright gold and white they stand side by side, ambrosia captured in an extra-light syrup. Currant and apple jelly are clear jewels of ruby and amber.

Each jar holds the promise of good food, just the way we like it.

This is why I can. Probably why hundreds of people do. Canning is hours of labor, boring drudgery on the days the kids and I would rather go to the beach, but the reward is worth the effort. It's an artistic accomplishment — just like a beautifully decorated cake or an arrangement of flowers. Besides, it tastes good.

Money seems more important than sex in marriages

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS
King Features Syndicate

Only two scant decades ago money flowed freely through the national landscape, but sexual expression was repressed. The ladies in TV sitcoms wore respectable clothes; homosexuals were still tucked away in closets; extramarital affairs for women were frowned upon. Most young wives in the early '60s had been virgin brides. Some of them didn't know they were entitled to multiple orgasms. Others didn't even know they were entitled to one.

Then came the sexual revolution.

And then came the recessions.

Today almost any kind of sexual relationship is sanctioned or cheerfully ignored by a significant portion of the populace. Nudity is commonplace in films, the theater and even on television. Virgin brides are an endangered species. We seem to have a surfeit of sexual possibilities or at least of sexual images. Money, on the other hand, is scarce.

Thus it follows that we would invest in money all the heavy psychological significance we once invested in sex — and we have.

What is the one thing you probably don't know about your best friend? How much money she (or her husband) makes each year.

You'll hear about her husband's impotence, her love affair with his best friend. She'll tell you if she's multi-orgasmic or inorgasmic. His foot fetish is an open secret. But annual income figures won't be divulged no matter how far she lets her hair down over several glasses of wine.

WE LIVE IN a sexual tell-all society, where money has replaced sex as the taboo topic, even among friends.

"Talking about money in general terms is more than acceptable," says sociologist Wendy Panapoulous. "You can't be current if you don't talk about money market funds, prime rates and tax shelters. But talking about money in specific personal amounts — as in what you earned or what you paid for a new dress — is tacky."

In fact, talking salaries in '85 is just about as tacky as discussing your sex problems at a Tupperware party would have been in 1952.

Brenda, who's been dating Lawrence for a year, doesn't know how much money he makes, nor does he know her annual income. "But I know everything about his ex-wife and what went wrong with their marriage," she says.

"Money is private. When people start talking about salaries, they want to get married."

William Boykins, Ph.D., a teacher in Brenda's MBA program, warns his classes that this "money shyness" — which he says is "too prevalent" — really "hurts women. They don't know what the going rates are, so they don't know when they're being paid less than their male counterparts."

Brenda says, "That can't be helped. No one wants to talk about the principal means of measuring our self-worth."

Once a woman could feel good about herself if she looked good. Now she needs a job with a good title too. No one respects the housewife, but everyone respects the working woman.

Remember the days when a woman could keep her self-respect only by keeping her virtue? If so, you're probably over 30; and the value system you recall was based on sex, not currency. Today a woman, like a man, earns her self-respect in real dollars. What she does about sex is her own business. Celibacy and fidelity are choices, not grounds for merit badges.

ELAINE HOMAN, who, at 39, does remember the old sexual value system, says, "I had no trouble casting aside my mother's rigid sexual advice and becoming a free woman in the late '60s. I remember the period through the recession of '74 as a glorious time, not just for the sexual freedom but for the freedom not to earn bunches of money. Everyone I knew then was creative and proudly poor."

"I'm just not interested in an involvement with a man who doesn't have a future. The last guy I dated seriously was a high-school teacher...a really great guy, but he'll never make any money, will he? Of course, I had to break it off," says Judy Wayne Cross, age 28, a management consultant from Atlanta.

"I like to date women who are close to the same financial level I'm on, though I don't feel comfortable yet with women who earn much more. When I get married, I want a wife who can add significantly to the family income. Anyway, women in dead-end jobs just have to be boring," says Dean Pace, 29, a rising exec from Houston.

The '80s woman needs quite an impressive composite profile if she's going to catch the desirable '80s man. In the old romantic office fantasy, the beautiful secretary snared the handsome wealthy boss, then retired to raise babies. Today's fantasy couple are Mary Cunningham and Bill Agee, described in the press as "a power pair."

Agee was Ms. Cunningham's mentor at Bendix. She's the woman who lost her job over their friendship (romance?). But she went on to another top-level job at Seagram's and eventually they went on to marriage.

Says industrial psychologist William Langdorfer, "Agee and Cunningham captured the imaginations of young working women because they represent the new ideal: a professional couple with two important jobs, his more so; two large incomes, his larger, in a mutually supportive relationship. He is the older mentor figure and she the bright young woman moving up almost at his side. They seem to have money, power and sex in all the right proportions."

While Mary Cunningham is an attractive woman, she wouldn't have been likely to capture the heart of Bill Agee if she hadn't also been ambitious, smart and a money-earner.

Nor would she have found him exciting if he'd lived in a cottage in the woods as a poet, washing dishes at the local diner for his meals. Times have changed: Where once there was romance in unconventional lifestyles and forbidden sex, today lust is lustier among the Krugerrands.

"MONEY IS SEXY," maintains Jane, a business writer. "The only really sexy men I've met in the past few months are brokers. They're on the cutting edge, and they're full of zing and vitality. They make the eggheads I used to date look like the proverbial plate of chopped liver."

Jane became a business writer — which represents a considerable switch in direction from the serious playwriting she once did — because she wanted to meet "the power types." She admits, "I want to find a real money man. Why not?"

Only 10 years ago Jane was considering breast augmentation surgery to increase her small bustline. Now she says, "I'm glad I didn't do it. Too much cleavage isn't sexy anymore. Expensive clothes, a well-tended look, a foreign car, expertise with the wine list — these are the things that make a woman sexy today."

In other words, Jane believes, "Plain old sex isn't sexy anymore, but money is."

"The two-career couples in my practice have put sex on the back burner. They aren't making love very often, but they hardly notice. They're fighting about money, about who controls the spending of it, not about orgasm," says a Marin County therapist.

According to a nationwide survey of 400 psychiatrists (reported in Psychology Today), money is the most common cause of marital fights. Only 10 percent of the responding psychiatrists said sex was the prime cause of fights.

Eric Newton, psychologist and author, says, "That's quite a switch from the marital situation 10 or 15 years ago. Sex just seemed to be more important to everybody then. Now I don't see as many people leaving marriages because of sexual dissatisfaction. They look at material comforts first."

Like many of these working wives, Linda says, "We don't have as much time for sex as we once did. Before I went back to work, I paid a lot more attention to how often we made love. Now I just forget about sex for days at a time."

The last time Linda felt "really sexy" was when Ron called her at work to announce his raise. "We really celebrated that night," she says.

Newton believes this de-emphasis of sex in many two-career marriages is the natural result of "sharing the power." Earning money gives a spouse more power in the financial decision-making process. Not so long ago most wives didn't work. Those who had jobs only worked "to help out" or held low-paying jobs in teaching or creative fields to satisfy their egos rather than build the family stock portfolio.

"These women only had real power in terms of their sexuality," Newton says. "They devoted more time to being seductive. They thought about sex, worried about keeping it alive in their marriages, because they perceived sex as their real hold over their husbands."

NOW WOMEN feel more like financial partners in their marriages. The result? "A lot of women have cast aside their courtesan ways," he says. "When hubby comes home, there's no geisha to stoke his fires. Both spouses are tired. Maybe no one's thinking about sex."

Yet Linda and many other wives say there's nothing wrong with their sex lives. They do enjoy marital relations...when they get around to having them.

Gerri and her husband, Roland, on the other hand, don't enjoy sex. In fact, they've given it up.

"Recent research indicates that when a wife has a job that outshines her husband's, sex lives may suffer," writes Carin Rubenstein in Psychology Today.

Gerri is one of the estimated 10 percent working wives who outearn their husbands. She is a pediatrician in southern Illinois; he is a history professor at a state university. Because the university is held in low academic esteem, he doesn't even have the psychological advantage of a prestigious career.

Gerri says, "At first he didn't mind the disparity in our incomes. For years he worked, putting me through medical school. Then I didn't make much money as a resident or during the first year of practice. When the money finally started rolling in, we both enjoyed it...for a while."

He's lost interest in her sexually; and he's had several affairs with grad students. Gerri isn't sure their marriage will survive. She's not even sure if she cares.

"I worked so hard to get where I am," she says, "I'm going to enjoy it, with or without him."

Their problems aren't unique to couples in which the wife greatly outearns the husband. According to a report published by sociologists William Philliber and Dana Hiller, men married to "overachieving women" are 11 times more likely to die prematurely from heart disease than other men. And the incidences of mutual physical and psychological abuse in such marriages is also greater than normal.

It's Classic Coke — cans down

Return of 'the real thing' sends 'new competitor' reeling

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Some thought it would be a close fight, but it's turned out to be anything but that. The real thing is back, and as Vice President George Bush would say: "It's kicking a--!"

Coca-Cola Classic has been in Midland stores for about three weeks, and according to reports it's disappearing from the shelves like t-bone steaks at a $4 buffet.

"Shelves were emptying as fast as we could fill them," said John Spangler, manager of Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Midland. "People were hoarding the cokes like we were only going to stock them for a week." He estimates that the returning classic is outselling new Coke by about three to one.

A spokesman at Albertsons, 1002 Andrews Highway, said that when the old formula was re-introduced, the store sold hardly a six-pack of the new Coke while the shelves were empty of Classic Coke every night.

John Love, assistant manager of the M System Food Store, 2200 Rankin Highway, was even more optimistic in his sales report. He saidClassic Coke is outselling the new Coke about 10 to 1. Love said that his store was treating new Coke like other low-selling flavors.

Sales dominance persists even in vending machines. A spokesperson for Key City Vending Co., which stocks vending machines throughout the area, said Classic Coke was selling much better than the new Coke.

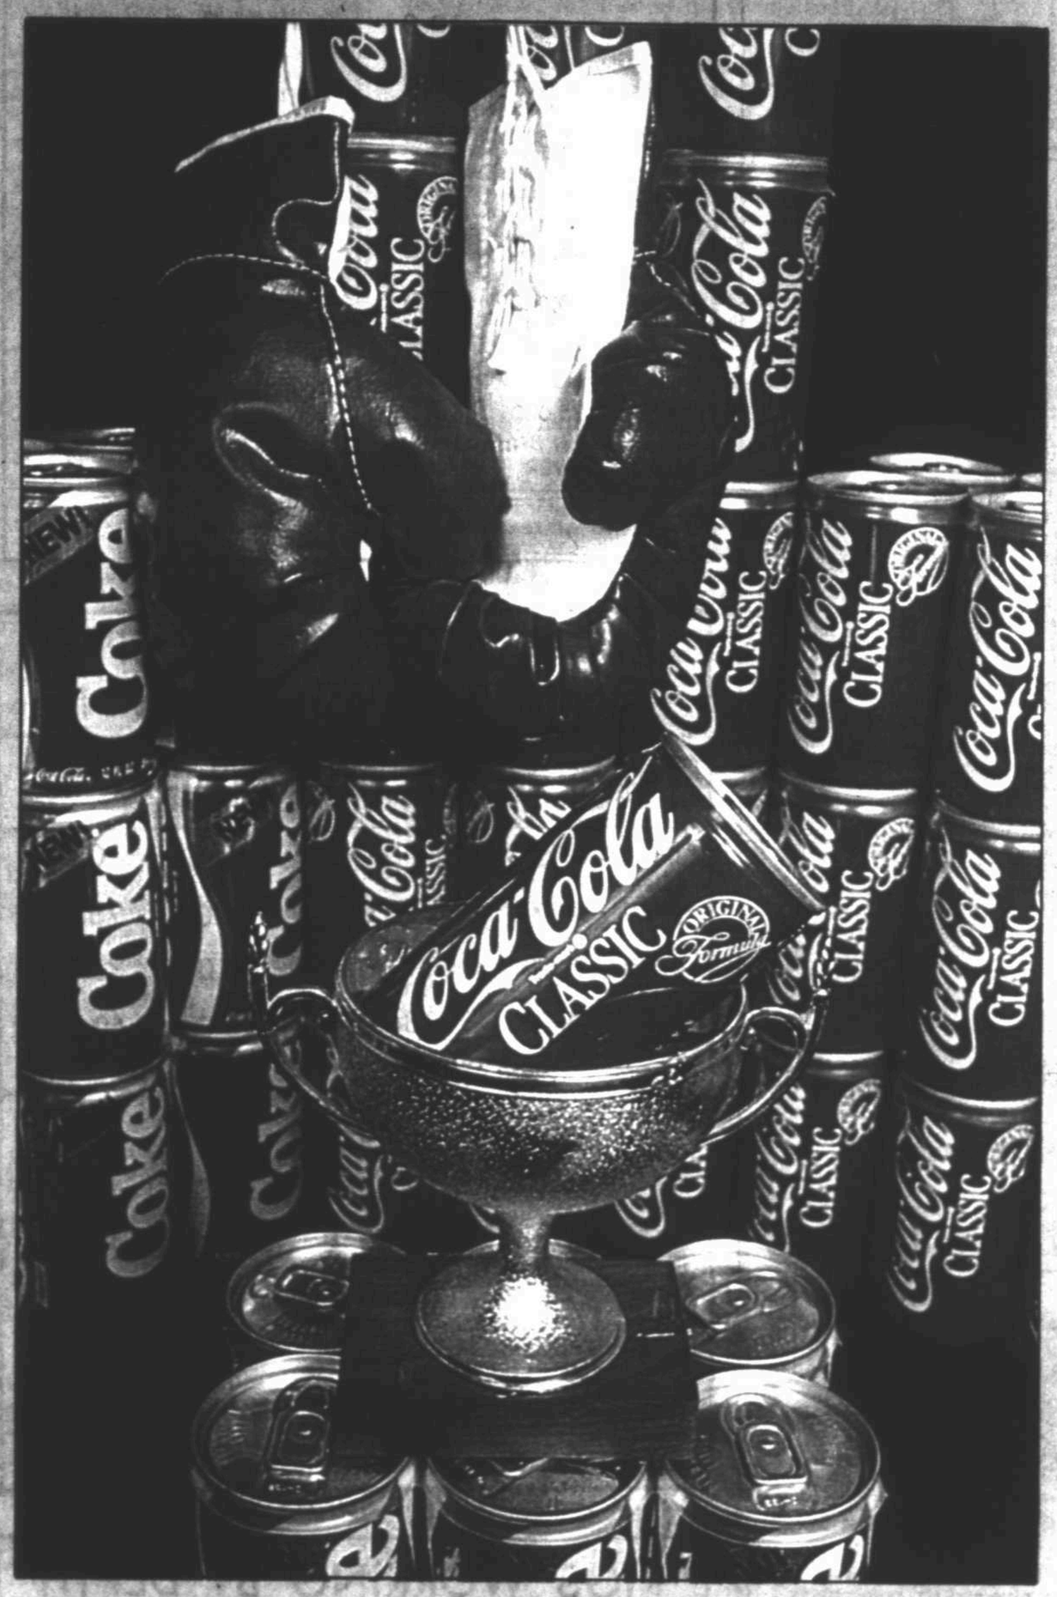

Retailers report that comments from customers have ranged from "Thank God it's back" to "It's about time."

Sometimes actions speak louder than words. The soft drink industry is a strong, profitable business, and Spangler said that his bottling company has had a sales increase every month except June this year.

Love said Coca-Cola sales at his store decreased during June, a dip he attributed to the new Coke. "Bringing back the old Coke brought sales back to a normal level," he commented.

None of the stores surveyed - Albertson, Furrs, M System, Skaggs Alpha Beta and Safeway - were planning any special advertising or promotions to help spur sales other than the normal price promotions. Shelf space was not a problem, either, the retailers said.

The Coca-Cola Co., according to industry watchers, is determined to keep the Coca-Cola Classic low-profile, since the company is determined to keep the new Coke as the flagship brand. While it has made three commercials available to its bottlers for regional use, the company does not plan to air any national commercials. Nor does the company, or Spangler's bottling firm, plan any special promotions to introduce the drink.

Ron Japp/Reporter-Telegram

Since its re-entry to the market, the original Coca-Cola formula, Coca-Cola Classic is outselling its newest competitor, New Coke.

Experts in the cut-throat beverage industry disagree among themselves on whether or not Coca-Cola made a potentially fatal mistake in changing the 99-year-old formula or a canny marketing move. Spangler, for one, said he is glad the company admitted it had made a mistake.

"After the initial shock" of learning of the formula change, Spangler said, "and listening to the reasons why, it made sense. You can run a taste test, a scientific taste test, and people will choose the new Coke. But the company didn't tell people they were going to take the old formula away. It's an emotional thing."

The widespread national response to the return of original formula drink seems to be a prime illustration of the old saying "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

After all, how do you improve a "classic?" remarked one "old Coke" fan.

Old Coke drinkers may gloat for now, but retailers predict that while old Coke sales will continue to sell better than new Coke the lead may diminish some in months to come.

Native Midlander making computer programming easy

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business/Oil Writer

Writing a computer program is tough enough, but compiling one based on a new, largely-unknown programming language seems an almost impossible task.

"The new programming language, Modula-2, has the potential to replace the current computer language," said Bob Warfield, a 25-year-old Midland native and president of Interfaced Technologies. "Simplifying and adding flexibility to the computer industry is a problem that has needed to be confronted for a long time."

The young Houston software company has formulated "easy to use" integrated software for microcomputers, based on Modula-2. Thus far, it has marketed a compiler tool — the Modula-2 Software Development System — and has plans for additional software packages called Farsight.

"It used to be that the first computer language beginners learned was BASIC. It came with the computer and wasn't too difficult to learn. Then, Pascal was developed. Now, Modula-2 has the potential to replace them both because it is easier to learn and writes larger programs," he explained.

"Because the language is so new, in order to develop our own software programs based on Modula-2, we first had to develop a compiler for the language," he said. A compiler is a special program that translates a programmer's statements in Modula-2 into language that the computer itself understands.

He said the compiler is beginning to sell well and several thousand people are now using Modula-2. A boost to the company came from Micropro, a California-based company which manufactures Word Star, one of the best-selling word processors. The company is using Modula-2 in its most recent development, Easy.

Also, a Boca Raton, Fla., firm has agreed to distribute ITC's compiler product to the educational market. Warfield said he hopes discount sales of M2-SDS to colleges and universities will quicken the pace of a widespread adoption of the Modula-2 programming language.

Bob Warfield

Warfield said the lack of a Modula-2 compiler has been one factor limiting acceptance of Modula-2 within the academic and computer programming industry.

Another problem has been public awareness. "People didn't know about Modula-2 and they didn't know how to use it. Modula-2 has been appearing more in the press now," he said.

"Modula-2 is so logical. People just don't know what they can do with a computer yet," he said, adding that ultimately, he would like to see ITC become the first publishing housing of business software for microcomputers.

British merchant banks coming to Wall Street

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The British are coming to Wall Street. Aiming to emulate American brokerages and commercial banks that are firmly entrenched in the London financial market, merchant banks from Britain are scrambling to expand into the New York capital market.

Robert Fleming Holdings Ltd., one of the largest merchant banks in London, announced two weeks ago that it had agreed to purchase F. Eberstadt & Co., a small, specialized Wall Street research firm. Last month, S.G. Warburg, the venerable London firm, reorganized and widened its American securities business.

And over the last few years other large British financial institutions — such as Kleinwort, Benson Ltd.; Mercantile House Holdings P.L.C., and J. Rothschild Holdings P.L.C. — have begun building American bases of operation.

"This is the largest capital market, and we felt it was essential to be here," said Ian Peacock, executive vice president of Kleinwort, Benson, which last year acquired ACLI Government Securities. Added Iain Saunders, head of Fleming's New York subsidiary: "Not to have a presence in New York is increasingly a disadvantage. That will only become more true."

Nonetheless, the forays by the British have thus far been less than a resounding success. These latest attempts to penetrate American underwriting and brokerage businesses are not the first.

Robert Fleming's acquisition of F. Eberstadt, for instance, was an acknowledgement of the troubles Fleming had faced in trying to build an American business on its own. Fleming has had a New York operation since 1968, but it was unable to build a meaningful presence.

The reason for the renewed push by Fleming and others is that with the capital markets growing increasingly international and the major markets gearing up for 24-hour trading, financial services concerns are finding it necessary to operate in every key financial center.

That means New York and London and now Tokyo. American, British and Japanese banking and securities firms have been rushing to establish beachheads in each other's markets, making acquisitions and spending lavishly on building their operations.

"Merchant banks have not needed to be in New York that badly up till now," said Robert Pirie, chief executive of Rothschild Inc., a New York firm owned by the British and French branches of the Rothschild family. "But eventually they will find that they will have to be everywhere, in all markets, or they will have to carve out very comfortable niches."

One problem is that some of the British institutions have been chary of exposing themselves to the American securities industry's sharp earnings fluctuations.

"Traditionally, the British merchant banks didn't make markets in securities in a big way, and they didn't have great distribution capacity," said Francois J.P. Mayer, who is a senior managing director of L.F. Rothschild and a director of London-based J. Rothschild. "So they developed without great amounts of capital."

Analysts say LTV not yet headed for upturn

DALLAS (AP) — When LTV Corp. announced in February 1984 it was merging with Republic Steel to become the nation's second-largest steel maker, company officials hailed the move as one that would increase productivity, cut costs and yield a lean, mean competitor.

Yet after 18 months, hundreds of millions of dollars in losses, massive layoffs and plant closings, the jury still is out on the merger, industry analysts and company officials say. LTV officials, who have staked much of the company's future on its heavy investment in steel, believe they have turned the corner recently after a major restructuring. But analysts say it isn't clear whether the company is getting the most out of the acquisition, and that more plant closings, price cuts and layoffs will be necessary.

"What happened is more confusion and less efficiency. The results have been very disappointing to date," said John Jacobson, director of steel services for Chase Econometrics.

"On paper, the move made lots of sense," Jacobson said. "In terms of execution, it doesn't look as good. They aren't making any money."

In fact, LTV has posted massive losses this year. In the first quarter, the company had losses of $156 million, and then a record $472.3 million in the second quarter.

But the bulk of the losses were one-time special charges stemming from the indefinite idling of LTV's Aliquippa, Pa., steel plant. The actual operating loss for the period ended June 30 was $73.5 million, below what analysts had predicted and considerably less than the first quarter.

"They were a little better than we expected," Merrill Lynch analyst Charles Bradford said of the results. "But clearly they will continue to have substantial losses for the year."

Raymond A. Hay, LTV's chairman and chief executive officer, said the second-quarter results for the troubled steel unit were cause for optimism.

"If you look at the numbers, you'll see that those numbers reflect ... a break-even in operating results — a very substantial improvement from the first quarter — and the net loss really is the fact that we have a substantial amount of debt and the interest on that debt every month is somewhere in the neighborhood of $25 million," Hay said.

Since 1982, the aerospace, defense and steel company's overall losses have topped $750 million, most of it in the steel business.

"We really worked hard to try to figure out how to deal with the problem of the steel business and the corporation's liquidity and the long-term financial stability of the company," Hay said.

Price supports no cure for over productivity

If by some stroke of magic, butter and cheese could be transformed into oil, our nation's underground Strategic Oil Reserve could be filled to overflow overnight. That's the conclusion of the Food Marketing Institute, a nonprofit organization that conducts market research on behalf of food retailers and wholesalers.

While the oil industry attracts much attention for its current glut of crude, and the government garners criticism for its underground strategic reserves, the dairy industry exists without similar problems.

For years the industry has been operating under a glut that only gets worse with the passing of each year. Each year the government continues to buy mountains of dairy products for storage in underground caves and mines, more cows and more milk continue to flood the marketplace. It's a disturbing problem that costs taxpayers billions annually. Fiscal 1983 was one of the worse years for the program. That year, the government purchased 16.7 billion pounds of surplus dairy products, when it could only use 2.5 billion pounds for federal nutrition and military programs. What happened to the additional 14 billion pounds? They were put into storage in underground caves, joining 69 million other pounds of dairy products that have been put into storage since 1978.

IT IS THE OLD case of the built-in breeder effect in which the rich get richer and the productive get more productive — a condition that seems to afflict farmers and those with disposable investment capital.

So what happens when there is a clear case of excess capacity and over productivity in the marketplace? That condition recently resulted in the closing of refineries and the laying off of thousands of workers in Texas. It was a harsh measure but an unavoidable one. When one gears up to produce 1,000 units and the public only buys 10 units, the only alternative is to gear back and reduce overhead to a survival point.

It seems almost criminal that in this land of free enterprise and productivity that the American farmer should be penalized for producing more food than America can consume, when the rest of the world is on the opposite end of the problem. But, that's the nature of free enterprise system. The same system that rewarded productivity must also be the same system that corrects over productivity. Government programs are poor managers when it comes to solving problems of productivity. Russia suffers from chronic under productivity and will probably never get a handle on the problem because of the totalitarian nature of its government. It also appears that the U.S. may never get a handle on over productivity problems because of continuing price support programs, which are clearly not working.

WHILE THE U.S. dairy stockpile continues to grow so does milk production. In 1984 the annual production per cow increased from 11,900 pounds to 12,600 pounds. This year production is expected to increase another 1.5 percent. At the same time the number of milk cows continues to soar. In the late 1970's, when the price support system was started, milk replacement heifers numbered 36 per 100 cows, today the number is 44 per 100 cows. New research and bouvine hormones introduced by the Food & Drug Administration are expected to push production and milk cow numbers even higher.

History indicates one fact clearly: price supports are not a disincentive to curb production. If anything, they seem to be an incentive to produce more, thus compounding the oversupply problem.

What happens when price supports become a way of life. The National Milk Producers Federation is currently proposing a mandatory, paid diversion program if government stocks exceed 7 billion pounds. Since government purchases this year are expected to exceed 9 billion pounds, a paid diversion program would become effective as soon as the legislation is enacted October 1, 1985. In essence this means the taxpayer would again be asked to pay dairy farmers not to produce milk.

ONE DOES NOT have to have too much upstairs to know that there is something inherently wrong with paying someone not to do something in the business world. Of course there are some in New York City who think it normal to pay the mafia not to blow up their store. I fear this practice of paying farmers not to produce could also become normal.

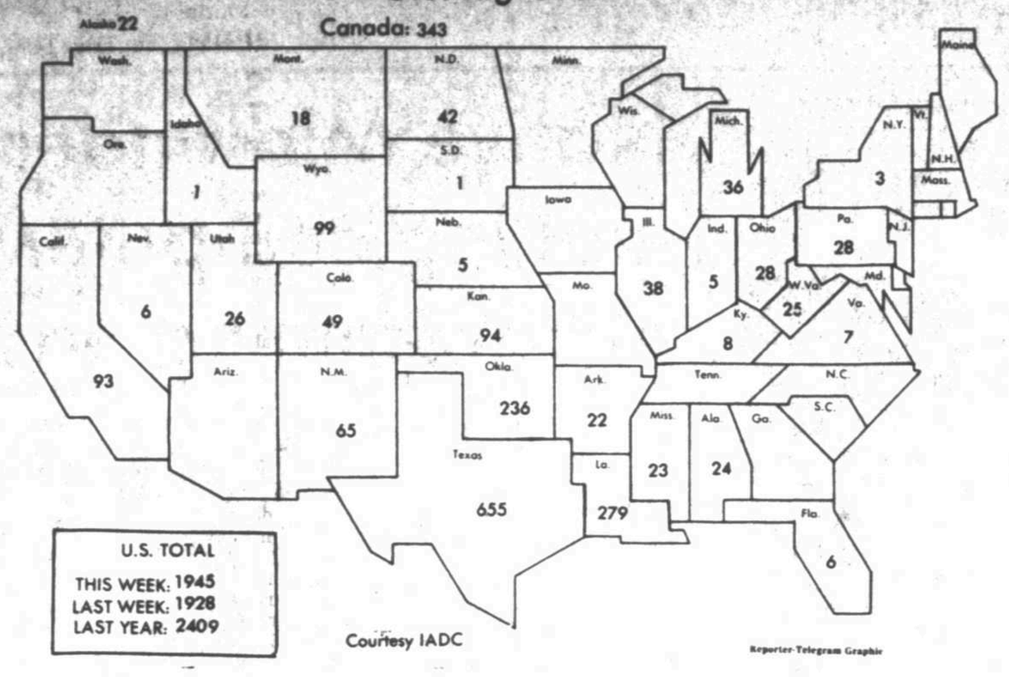

Who knows? In time dairy farmers and other farmers could come to like the idea of being paid not to produce, and even feel they had a right to be paid not to produce.

In fact the only right anyone has in any business is the right to privately own production, produce all you can and sell it for what you can get.

U.S. Rig Count

Permian Basin Rig Count

Permian rig count makes comeback

The number of rigs working in the Permian Basin Area made a sizeable increase over last week, jumping 12 for a total of 274. The U.S. rig count also rose this week, up 17 to 1,945.

Locally, Midland County held steady at 15, while Ector County slipped two to 15 after small increases during the previous two weeks. Andrews County now has 27 rigs working, up two from last week, as it continues to be the most active in the Basin. Martin County upped its count by one and Glasscock remained at five working rigs. Howard County saw the biggest increase in the region with a jump of three for a total of seven.

The Permian Basin count stood at 262 last week and 329 a year ago.

The U.S. count rose by recording increases in Oklahoma and Illinois by nine and six, respectively. Texas dropped two for a total of 655 and New Mexico gained one, after several weeks of decline, to post a 65 rig total.

New drilling activity was reported in Hawaii and Idaho this week. Canada, after last week's big jump, dropped 20 rigs to record a 343 rig tally.

The national count stood at 1,928 last week and 2,409 last year.

Gas prices dip, but what kept them up?

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — During the energy crises of the 1970s, the American public learned that when crude oil prices rise, gasoline prices at the pump do too. For most of this year, however, the public has found that even when oil prices fall, gasoline prices may rise.

From the winter to midsummer, as world crude oil prices fell by up to $2 a barrel, the retail price of gasoline, which is produced from crude oil, jumped nearly 10 cents to an average price nationally of $1.24 a gallon in July.

Gasoline pump prices have begun falling as the peak summer driving season slackens. But the decline has not lessened a widespread debate among oil industry executives, consumer advocates, and gasoline dealers over what kept the gas prices up so long.

SOME GASOLINE dealer and consumer groups contend that the oil companies kept their wholesale prices unnecessarily high, thereby forcing dealers to keep the pump prices high. However, oil industry spokesmen and analysts say prices stayed up because dealers kept their retail prices high even as the wholesale prices oil companies charge them declined.

Still, a third point of view is that a combination of factors, not just the push for greater profits, led both oil companies and dealers to keep their prices high.

Those interviewed said the central issue was whether the usual relationship between crude oil prices and gas pump prices, in which a slump in one leads relatively quickly to a cut in the other, has changed.

MATTHEW J. TROY, executive director of the Long Island (N.Y.) Gasoline Retailers Association, says last spring's pricing pattern was "a very clear signal" of a change in the relationship between the two.

"There's no way a drop in crude prices should not bring a drop in retail prices," he said. "But this time there was a significant factor in the marketplace — I don't know what — that prevented that from happening."

As a result, Troy said, gas prices could remain relatively high even if oil prices continued as expected on a downward trend.

Edwin Rothschild, assistant director of the Citizens Labor Energy Coalition, a consumer group, said that that factor was the oil companies, which he said had raised their wholesale prices to "artificial" levels. He said that conclusion was warranted by the sizable profits the companies' retail divisions made in the spring, profits that substantially outstripped the earnings of their other divisions.

ROBERT JACOBS, executive director of the Illinois Gasoline Dealers Association, asserted that the "fierce competition" for customers among the nation's 130,000 gasoline outlets would have worked against dealers acting alone to keep pump prices up.

Jacobs maintained that the oil companies had manipulated the market to keep prices high, saying that for every $1 decrease in crude oil prices, gasoline prices should fall 2 cents.

But that assertion was disputed by Daniel Lundberg, who heads an industry survey and consulting organization. "There is no way to quantify the impact of a $1-a-barrel price drop on gasoline prices," he said, because of many variables involved in the way oil is traded today, among them whether the crude oil is sold at its official price, at a bargain rate or traded for some other commodity. "The price of crude oil doesn't exert the all-powerful influence it once did on gasoline prices," he said.

INDUSTRY SPOKESMEN also deny that they are responsible for the continued high prices. Gerald A. Schanke, marketing director for the American Petroleum Institute, a trade association, said the notion of a direct relationship between crude oil prices and retail gasoline prices was a misconception. He said that while gasoline prices often follow oil prices, over the short term they "rarely move in parallel" and sometimes actually may diverge as they did through the early summer.

Schanke maintained that the gasoline price rise resulted from "normal market forces" that lead to higher prices when demand increases, as well as from developments that the oil companies could not control: the increase in gasoline importation, gasoline tax increases in 13 states since last year, and a federal program that began July 1 to reduce the lead content of gasoline. Industry officials say the lead reduction program increased the cost of producing gasoline by about 2 cents a gallon.

SANFORD MARGOSHES, an oil analyst with the Shearson Lehman Brothers brokerage firm, said one major reason retail gasoline prices remained firm while crude oil prices were sliding was that oil companies and dealers alike moved to recover profits lost over the nine months ending Jan. 31, when retail prices dropped to an average of $1.13 a gallon from $1.21 a gallon.

Further, Margoshes said, the difference in prices was merely "an aberration that happens from time to time — there's no reason to think the fundamental patterns have changed."

This year's retail price increases interrupted a steady slide of prices from 1981, when the average price peaked at $1.38 a gallon. The average price of crude oil reaching American refineries that year was $31.77 a barrel, according to the Independent Petroleum Association of America. Data from the Federal Department of Energy show that as of June the average price of crude oil reaching American refineries was $27.24 a barrel.

ACCORDING TO THE Dan Lundberg Survey Inc., of North Hollywood, Calif., which polls 17,400 gasoline stations every two weeks, pump prices last month for regular leaded gas and regular and premium unleaded grades, were $1.12, $1.20, and $1.32. The prices were 4 to 6 cents higher than in July 1984 and 3 to 5 cents higher than those last April. In New York City, the average prices in June, the latest figures available for the various grades, were $1.22, $1.27, and $1.41, according to the city's Department of Consumer Affairs.

Analysts said that prices at full-service stations, where gasoline is pumped by attendants and automobiles are repaired, can be as much as 30 cents higher than at self-service stations, and that prices in cities are higher than in suburban and rural areas.

The totals on the utilization chart represent the depth at which each rig is rated. However, some rigs that have been rated for deeper depths are driling at shallower depths. This should account for any disparity that may appear in the totals in the above tables.

Drilling activity edges higher

Intermediate drilling, both exploratory and development, continues to edge up in the Permian Basin. Deeper exploratory drilling remains unchanged this week.

Rigs drilling exploratory wells in the Permian Basin numbered 62, up from 59. Ten rigs, up from seven last time, are drilling exploratory wells from 5,001 to 7,500 ft. Development drilling rigs went from 239 to 243, with 84 rigs, up from 80 last time, drilling from 7,501 to 10,000 ft.

The rig count showed a 1.5 percent increase, with 45.9 percent of the rigs available in the Permian Basin at work. There were 97 rigs drilling in the 10,001 to 12,500 ft. range, up from 92 last time. There was slightly more activity in the deeper depths, with three additional rigs drilling at depths below 17,501 ft.

The U.S. rig count gained considerably, with an additional 22 rigs drilling exploratory wells and 52 more rigs drilling development wells. Intermediate drilling, especially in the 10,001 to 12,500 ft. range, continued to lead activity. There were a total of 2,154 rigs active in the U.S., compared to 2,080 last time.

Plant start-up delayed a week

WINTERSBURG, Ariz. (AP) — Plans to restart the Palo Verde nuclear plant following a month-long shutdown have been pushed back to next week, a plant spokesman says.

Plant workers were expected to continue testing the first unit's backup cooling system, said Brad Parker, a spokesman for the Arizona Nuclear Power Project, which operates the plant 50 miles west of downtown Phoenix.

Contractors discuss lost time accidents

In-office drilling personnel can help control the frequency of "no lost time" accidents and the seriousness of "lost time" accidents, said Sandra Streeter, insurance and safety, BJM Drilling and Exploration, Inc.

Streeter spoke to the Drilling Contractor's Safety Planning Committee Tuesday at their meeting.

Marion D. Goff, Permian Risk Services, Inc., also gave a talk on facts he has encountered as an adjuster and appraiser, and how these accidents could have been avoided. He also presented a film about where the accident actually begins.

Ron Rosignol, United General Insurance Agency, gave a presentation on workmen's compensation premiums. He informed the group as to the destiny of drilling companies unless they can become the controlling factor in claims paid.

The next meeting will be at 1:30 p.m. October 22 in the Texas American Bank's Community Room. Members will arrange to have a corporate attorney speak at the next meeting in October.

Franchising may be cooking 'bland stew in melting pot'

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Arthur Bryant's House of Good Eats is a matter-of-fact sort of storefront, nestled among crumbling buildings. The beer comes, often as not, in chipped frosty mugs. The ribs and fries are unceremoniously dumped on dull plastic plates by the same hands that emerge from behind the counter to answer the pay phone.

But clocks on the wall keep time in Greenwich Mean as well as Central Standard — a nod to the presidents, actors and journalists whose patronage has put the place on the map.

Bryant's is unique, a success built on its one-of-a-kind barbecue sauce and its uncompromising Kansas City character. So when the rib joint announced plans to sell franchises — to clone itself and become a coast-to-coast chain — questions were raised.

How do you duplicate a rough-cut original? Would every Bryant's have a coating of grease on the floor? Extra ribs for patrons who tipped the counterman? Extra clocks on the wall?

Franchising's critics warn that, neon sign by neon sign, highway strip by highway strip, the local and regional flavors of America are blending into one bland stew. And there is no question that hundreds of once-diverse communities now look more and more alike, wearing their branches of national franchises like new designer jeans, with the labels showing.

Americans this year will spend $640 each at the country's 323,000 franchise stores and restaurants, up from $379 just five years ago, according to the Department of Commerce. But the figure jumps to $2,000 a person when auto dealerships, gas stations and soft drink bottlers are included.

This cloning of America "is a disaster, architecturally and culturally," warned Marshall Fishwick, a professor of humanities and communications at Virginia Tech. "It destroys any unique sense of place. Inevitably, it is a step toward the drab, the lackluster and the monotonous."

Finance commission redrafts new commercial lending regulations

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — New regulations proposing to restrict some commercial lending and to increase the net worth of State-chartered savings and loan associations are being redrafted by the Savings and Loan Section of the State Finance Commission.

Representatives of associations and the Texas Savings and Loan League asked for modifications of the proposals, which Savings and Loan Commissioner L.L. Bowman III said are intended to halt some abuses in the industry, and to increase the financial strength of associations.

The regulations proposed by the section call for associations to maintain minimum net worth, computed as a percentage of total liabilities, of 3.0 percent as of January 1, 1986, with that percentage increasing to 6.0 percent by January 1, 1992.

However, Bowman said the Section expects to redraft the requirements to require an increase of 0.25 percent annually, instead of 0.5 percent, up to 5.0 percent.

Texas Savings and Loan League Executive Vice President Tom King said the 5.0 percent requirement would be more in keeping with the traditional maximum for thrift institutions.

Bowman said the change would be "more of a statement to the national government that we can take care of our business in Texas."

"We're suffering from our net worth and capital requirements at this point in time," he commented.

Bowman said the revised regulations should require net worth in amounts comparable to Federal requirements, so that State-chartered associations "won't rush to convert" to Federal charters.

Other comments on the proposed regulations centered on changes proposed for commercial real estate loans, and "wrap-around" real estate loans.

Bowman notes such "wrap-around" loans are relatively new—and that regulatory officials are trying to decide how to deal with them.

Bowman reported one instance in which an association had loaned funds where there were five underlying liens—making a "six-lien wrap."

The Savings and Loan Department, he said, is concerned over the potential problems such loans with multiple liens may cause—so that the agency is attmepting to bring such multiple wraps under additional controls.

Lenders expressed concern over proposals to eliminate inclusion of interest in loans for commercial real estate projects, saying elimination of "interest carry" would place savings and loans in a less competitive position against banks.

Bowman said that provision is expected to be modified, and that the final regulations will include "interest carry" on construction projects.

The concern regulators have, he said, is with "time bomb loans," in which an entire project, including interest, is financed—and in which a developer, with no personal liability, could "walk away," leaving an association with large loan losses.

The new regulations are being prepared as part of the department's efforts to strengthen control over associations, under new legislation to become effective later this month.

Legislative leaders are reviewing a request by the Black Legislative Caucus for a study of State investments in companies doing business in South Africa. Caucus Chairman Rep. Paul Ragsdale, D-Dallas, called for the study last month.

Ragsdale and other caucus members supported legislation during the regular session to have the State withdraw investments from any South African-related firms.

That legislation failed, but Rep. Betty Denton, D-Waco, announced she intends to conduct a study on the "disinvestment" issue.

The caucus called on Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to begin studies on the need for "legislative direction of the fund managers and trustees for managing their portfolios of stock in companies with significant South African interests."

Last December, the Unviersity of Texas System Board of Regents reported some $600 million (or 27 percent) of the school's $2.2 billion portfolio related to firms with South African interests.

The regents, while saying they "deplored" South Africa's apartheid policies, noted the Permanent University Fund has no investments directly in South African corporate or governmental entities, and argued the PUF shouldn't be used "to advance foreign policy, social, economic, or politiical objectives in foreign lands, including South Africa."

Investments by the Teacher Retirement System and Employees Retirement System also have come in for legislative scrutiny.

Speaker Lewis' office is reviewing the request for possible inclusion as a topic for interim study by House committees before the 1987 Legislature convenes.

Hobby's office says no decision has been made on a Senate study.

Adobe declares cash dividend

Adobe Oil & Gas Corp. has announced that its board of directors had authorized a common stock quarterly cash dividend for the third quarter, 1985, of seven cents per share to be paid on September 27, 1985 to shareholders of record on September 6, 1985.

Mitchell Energy Corp. announces its cash dividend per share

THE WOODLANDS, TX, (SWN) — Directors of Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. today declared a regular quarterly cash dividend of six cents per share on the company's common stock. The dividend is payable October 2, to stockholders of record on September 11.

Permian Basin Royalty Trust reports dividend

FORT WORTH (SWN) — InterFirst Bank Fort Worth, as Trustee of the Permian Basin Royalty Trust, today declared a cash distribution to the holders of its units of beneficial interest of $.066181 per unit, payable Sept. 16, 1985, to unit holders of record on Aug. 30,1985.

LTV CORP.

The result was May's reorganization plan, which included the indefinite idling of most of its Aliquippa steelworks, the laying off of 1,300 workers, and a program of divestitures and cost reductions.

The writedown made the company's balance sheet "look a lot worse" than it actually was, Bradford said.

"Its basic position isn't bad. It still has more benefits to come from the merger," he said.

LTV's sales in the second period rose 34 percent, to $2.1 billion, from $1.6 billion in the second quarter of 1984, mainly as a result of the Republic Steel merger.

LTV spokesman Charles Palmer concedes the integration process has been tough for the company.

"Ever since we merged with Republic, it has been one big jungle of trying to eliminate duplications ... to streamline the company to a racehorse instead of a clunker," Palmer said.

Hay said LTV's struggle to integrate Republic, coupled with sagging U.S. steel prices from foreign imports, are to blame for huge steel losses and a deterioration in market share.

"We obviously had a problem with the confluence of those events," he said.

The reorganization, Hay said, is beginning to show benefits. Midway through the third period, LTV Steel is in a state of "transition," regaining market share and continuing a strict program of cost reductions, he said.

Part of LTV's strategy is to regain market share by "meeting the market price," Hay said. "We're no longer trying to hold onto prices, which probably exacerbated some of our market share losses," he said.

In the second quarter, steel losses narrowed to $39.7 million from $111.7 million the previous quarter.

But despite the gains and despite a healthy aerospace division, LTV is expected to report a loss for the year, due in large part to its staggering debt, analysts say.

"Clearly the company has too much debt," Bradford said. "If we had an economic downturn, it would be very vulnerable."

Southern area unaffected by oil slowdown

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A corridor extending from Shreveport to Dallas-Fort Worth seems to have escaped the decline in population growth triggered by a 1982 slowdown in the petroleum industry, according to a Louisiana Tech University researcher.

It was one of several unaffected places whose economies were less dependent on the whims of the oil industry than other parts of the Gulf South, said James Michael, Tech's director of economic research.

Using the changes of addresses on tax returns for 1982 and 1983, the Census Bureau found that five states in the Gulf South — Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Mississippi — saw a net migration-related population growth of 365,679 in 1982.

That is, 365,679 more people moved into the 552 counties in the five-state area than moved out in the year between April 1982 and April 1983.

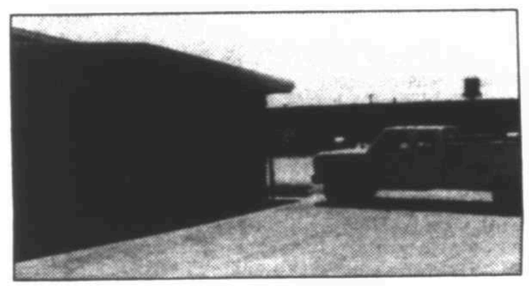

More than 60 percent of that growth was concentrated in five clusters of counties: a corridor from Fort Worth to Shreveport, a corridor from Austin to San Antonio, the area around Houston, a corridor from Oklahoma City to northwest Arkansas, and seven growth parishes in south Louisiana.

The seven south Louisiana parishes were St. Tammany, Lafayette, Livingston, Ascension, Vernon, St. John and Tangipahoa.

The Dallas-Shreveport corridor was the largest gainer, with a net increase of 87,360, Michael said. He said the Houston area grew 44,935; the Austin area 40,146, Oklahoma City and its suburbs 32,874 and south Louisiana 14,961.

Now open to serve the West Texas, New Mexico areas.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or " indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

Study says bank bailout may cost more than anticipated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The price tag to save Continental Illinois National Bank could exceed the original Congressional Budget Office estimate of $3.8 billion because of a federal attitude that some banks are too big to fail, a congressional study says.

The report released this week also said that such a federal policy of saving big banks could create a situation in which investors snub smaller, community banks that are not viewed as key to the economy.

The study, done primarily by a House Banking subcommittee staff, was undertaken to probe the role of the federal government in assisting Continental Illinois National Bank, which found itself deep in financial problems in 1984.

The study said the Continental assistance program developed by the FDIC and other federal banking regulatory agencies results in a policy that certain banks "are too big to fail."

With that in mind, the study said, "investors, creditors and borrowers are more likely to be impressed with the solidity and stability of a fail-safe bank, resulting in a competitive disadvantage in the funding and ultimately the profit arenas for banks that are not fail-safe."

The study was done under the guidance of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee chairman, Rep. Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I., who held hearings in 1984 on Continental's financial problems.

The study was conducted by an inquiry team of the subcommittee on Financial Institutions, Regulations and Insurance and also utilized a staff which partly consisted of General Accounting Office auditors.

"A year has passed and I am still not convinced that a $4.5 billion bailout was all that stood between the safety and soundness of the financial system and the doomsday scenarios of our federal regulators," said St Germain.

"Indeed, the banking system would have survived, Continental's 2,000 or so correspondent banks — the FDIC could never produce the exact number — would have survived, and the American taxpayer would have survived without another government handout," he said in releasing the report.

In July 1984, the FDIC announced a permanent assistance package for Continental, consisting of installation of a new management team, removal of $4.5 billion in problem loans, infusion of $1 billion in new capital, and maintenance of credit lines from major banks and the Federal Reserve.

The report said that Continental's problems were the direct result of top management's decision to catapult the bank from the 8th ranked commercial lender to one of the country's top three — in just six years.

It cited a failure by Ernst & Whinney, Continental's independent certified public accountants, to detect the burgeoning problems of the bank, and said the auditing profession ought to improve its oversight of large commercial banks.

The 202-page report also hit hard upon a policy developed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and other federal bank regulatory agencies that the report said arises from the Continental situation.

"This policy is the result of a conscious policy of avoiding potential ripple effects in the economy of a large bank failure, and the FDIC's professed administrative inability to pay off accounts in failed large banks," said the St Germain report.

Such a federal fail-safe policy is "inequitable in that stockholders in fail-safe banks are more likely to see their investments protected than are stockholders in banks that are allowed to fail," the report stated.

"Under current policies, depositors with more than the insured amount in their accounts are in effect fully insured in fail-safe banks, in contrast to their treatment when a small bank fails and they are forced to endure delay and less-than-full recovery of their deposits," said the report.

Current law provides no limitation on the amount of assistance to a bank found to be "essential." The report said that law combined with the FDIC's announced commitment to provide whatever capital assistance Continental may need "means that the potential cost of saving Continental could be even larger than the Congressional Budget Office estimate of $3.8 billion."

The reports went on to say, "the bailout suggests that undue discretion has been vested in the FDIC's 'right' to decide whether a bank's survival is 'essential' to the well-being of the community."

The report recommended that Congress re-think the FDIC laws with consideration to equip the agency with the resources to liquidate large banks.

The report also said that in the future the FDIC could attach conditions to the extension of assistance to banks.

In Continental's case, for instance, several top officers of the bank received lucrative separation packages called golden parachutes, even though those same officers' policy decisions were in "great degree" responsible for Continental's problems, the report said.

Commission extends oil allowable to 100 percent

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission has extended the 100 percent statewide oil allowable through September.

The production factor was set Monday after major crude oil buyers submitted nominations for 2,230,019 barrels per day in September, a decrease of 19,122 barrels a day from August.

The commission first went to 100 percent oil production in April 1972. It applies to all fields except those assigned lower rates of production to avoid possible waste. Production in the East Texas Field, for example, is restricted to 86 percent of potential.

Buddy Temple, commission chairman, reported that crude oil and petroleum products imported into the United States for the four weeks ending July 26 averaged 5,016,000 barrels a day, a decrease of 419,000 barrels per day from the same period last year.

Here are crude oil nominations submitted by major purchasers for September, in barrels per day, with any changes from August in parentheses:

Amoco 170,000 (down 1,000)
Chevron 158,500 (down 500)
Exxon 292,350 (up 2,650)
Mobil 157,000 (down 5,900)
Phillips 76,000
Texaco 95,100 (down 2,000)

Study says ARMs permanent feature of market

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Even though falling interest rates helped traditional fixed-rate mortgages regain popularity among home borrowers in the last year, adjustable-rate mortgages still made up more than half of all home loans and should remain attractive, a thrift industry study concluded this week.

The continued appeal of ARMs proves they have become "a permanent feature of the U.S. mortgage market," the U.S. League of Savings Institutions said in an annual survey of its members' home lending practices.

But the survey also suggests ARMs are a rather select feature, because most S&Ls reported that they grant the loans, which often carry a lower-than-usual interest rate, only to borrowers who meet more strict credit standards.

The poll of 1,100 S&Ls, conducted in May, concludes that borrowers have shed their fears about the ARMs, whose interest rates are not fixed but are pegged to floating indexes such as the rate on Treasury securities. When first offered in the early 1980s, the mortgages were dogged by fears that monthly payments would soar, forcing borrowers to default if inflation drove interest rates sharply upward.

However, the survey states, a healthy 55 percent of all home loans last May were ARMs, compared to 69 percent in May 1984. That the bottom did not fall out of the ARM market suggests that features such as reduced interest rates and flexibility have helped them stay popular, league economist Dennis Jacoby said.

"ARMs are here to stay," agreed Andrew Carron, a mortgage banking expert and vice president of Shearson Lehman Brothers in New York, "although there's a definite cyclical element to them."

Virtually all lenders now include some form of protection against "payment shock" in ARM contracts, the industry poll showed. All but 0.8 percent of the lenders surveyed have placed caps on the maximum interest rates or monthly payments that can be charged borrowers, either over the life of the mortgage or during pre-established periods of time.

What has changed, the poll concluded, is the index to which most ARMs rates are pegged. Nearly half of all ARMs in the May 1984 survey were indexed to the so-called "cost of funds" rate, which is the interest rate that regional divisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board charged S&Ls to borrow money. But by this May, 71.5 percent of all ARMs were indexed either to six-month or one-year Treasury bills.

The study said that borrowers preferred the volatile Treasury index, which plummeted during the year as the rate on T-bills fell, over the slow-changing cost-of-funds index, which offers more long-term stability.

Lenders in Los Angeles, one of the cities surveyed, ignored the national trend and instead used the cost-of-funds index for 58 percent of all loans. High housing prices in the Los Angeles area, and the large mortgages that accompany them, may make the more stable funds index more attractive, League officials said.

The poll also reported that most lenders have significantly stiffened credit requirements for ARM borrowers. A total of 55 percent of lenders surveyed said that their loan standards were more strict for ARMs than for fixed-rate mortgages, compared to 31 percent in 1984.

American charges boarding fee

DALLAS (SWN) — American Airlines will institute a $2.50 surcharge on each passenger boarding its flights at Logan International Airport to cover a five-cents-per-gallon fuel tax imposed by the City of Boston. The surcharge will be applied to tickets purchased on or after Sept. 6.

The fee applies to all boardings at Logan Airport. The surcharge will be shown separately in the fare calculation section of a ticket.

Thomas G. Plaskett, American's senior vice president for marketing, said the fee was necessary for the airline to recover its added cost resulting from the new tax, which is estimated to be about $1.2 million over the next 12 months.

"We regret that the city has looked to the traveling public for help in restoring its financial health," Plaskett said. "The monies collected from this tax go into the city's general fund and are not tied in any manner to airport operations.

Anti-collision vehicle radar gets government approval

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Driving home one night through dense fog, George Rashid pulled over to the side of the road and decided that if airplanes use radar, automobiles can too.

More than 30 years later, his sons said Wednesday that they have received government approval for their late father's invention — a radar device designed to warn car and truck drivers of possible front-end collisions.

The Rashid Radar Collision Warning System uses radar to detect an object in the path of a vehicle and a microprocessor to determine whether a collision is imminent. If an automobile is closing in on a slower or stationary object, the system flashes a series of warning lights and sounds a siren until the driver hits the brakes.

The Federal Communications Commission has approved the system for use after three years of testing that covered more than a million miles, said Jack Rashid, vice president for marketing of Vehicle Radar Safety Systems Inc., the family-owned company that developed the system.

Vehicle Radar sees the warning system as the first step toward a radar brake system, which would both detect an imminent collision and activate the brakes. The company, based in Mount Clemens, Mich., has already developed a radar brake system but has not yet applied for FCC approval. The company will wait to see how the warning system does first, said Penny Farthing, company counsel.

The three-part warning system consists of a radar antenna, an electronic signal processor and a dashboard monitor.

The microwave radar antenna, when installed, looks like a third headlight above the front bumper of the car and acts as both a radar emitter and receiver. It sends out a narrow beam signal directly in front of the car, which bounces back to the antenna after hitting a slower moving vehicle or stationary object, as high or higher than the antenna. The beam misses objects to the side of the car, as well as road signs and overpasses, Rashid said.

When the radar beam bounces back, the signal processor analyzes it to determine the speed and distance of the object, compared with the speed of the car using the radar system. The processor, a small box weighing less than five pounds, instantly evaluates the information to determine if a crash is possible.
