U.S. works to keep sanctions

Photos help combat effort to lift U.N. ban on Iraqi oil sales

■ Clinton administration shares intelligence data with other Security Council members.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — New evidence of an Iraqi military buildup has helped the United States beat back an effort to lift United Nations sanctions against Baghdad, senior administration officials said Saturday.

They said the Clinton administration had shared intelligence data, including satellite photos, with other Security Council members to show that President Saddam Hussein has been rebuilding factories that could produce chemical weapons or missiles as well as integrating stolen Kuwaiti missiles and armored vehicles into the Iraqi army.

The photos also show that the Iraqi leader has spent billions on new presidential palaces while pleading poverty as a reason for allowing Iraq to resume oil sales, as France and Russia have urged.

The officials said that Madeleine K. Albright, Washington's delegate to the United Nations, returned Friday from a weeklong mission to seven countries certain that the United States had 10 votes, enough to maintain the current sanctions.

France and Russia, Iraq's closest partners before its invasion of Kuwait in 1990, supported quietly by China, have argued for nearly a year that Iraq is on the verge of complying with Security Council demands to eliminate key weapons programs and therefore should have the legal right to export its oil on the open market.

The United States and Britain have strongly disagreed, insisting on maximum Iraqi compliance with U.N. demands without spelling out exactly what Saddam must do if he wants to sell oil.

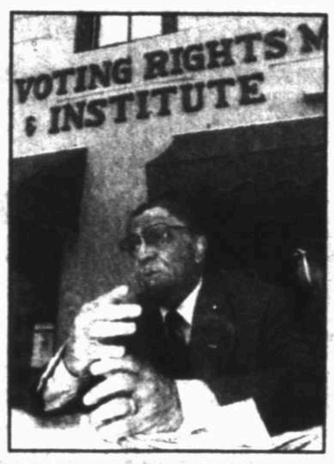

But over the past few months, support for the U.S.-British position has waned. A number of Security Council members, eager to do business with Iraq and to relieve the suffering of the Iraqi people, have become convinced that the Security Council should consider easing the ban on oil sales.

Old West Lives On

San Angelo resident Elmer Kelton is author of the novel "The Good Old Boys," which has been adapted into a television movie that will air tonight on TNT.

SAN ANGELO — Elmer Kelton, the consummate West Texas storyteller who authored "The Good Old Boys," flung himself into writing about the American West and, particularly Texas, the way a bird takes flight and soars — naturally.

Writing seemed innate to him after a bit of honing up and figuring out what not to do with his life: ironically, cowboying and ranching, the enduring fancy of most of his 33 Western novels.

He lives the ranch life in his writings.

Jones makes directorial debut in TV film

"The Good Old Boys" mount up and ride into town today when Elmer Kelton's novel airs at 7 p.m. on TNT. The television film marks the directorial debut of the film's star, Academy Award-winning actor Tommy Lee Jones.

"I feel like Miranda in 'The Tempest' — it's a brave new world for me" Jones said of his first experience as a director.

The process of making movies has been called art by committee by some in the film industry. Jones, who was an honorable mention All American in football at Harvard University, found the analogy too passive.

"Art by committee is one way to look at it," Jones said . "If I'm going to make an analogy, it's going to be more to football or polo —things that move fast and involve people who are making maximum efforts. I find that to be a better analogy than committee.

"Committees remind me of people sitting around a table. And you can't make a movie, certainly not with me, that way. So, it's more like being on a football team — you either win or you lose." A low, chuckling laugh followed his words.

His opportunity to direct came when he volunteered to ooccupy the director's

Groups to honor memory of Julianne with projects

From Staff Reports

A brief dedication and moment of silence before today's Circus Gatti matinee performance at 2 p.m. is the first of several activities planned this week that will honor the memory of 10-year-old Julianne Powell, who was assaulted and killed last month at her apartment complex in northwest Midland.

The week will culminate with two dedication ceremonies Friday afternoon: at Santa Rita Elementary School, where Julianne was a fifth-grader, and at Dennis the Menace Park.

Julianne's family said it hopes the activities this week "will bring heightened public awareness to the seriousness of crimes against children and the exploitation of children."

Police's annual banquet recognizes employees

Midland's men and women in blue, as well as civilian police employees, were honored at the Police Department's third annual awards banquet Saturday evening.

About 40 awards were presented, including ones for Officer of the Year and Rookie of the Year.

In addition, Police Chief Richard Czech praised the entire department — about 200 officers and civilians — describing it as "one of the finest in the country."

"We'd like to get together and honor each and every one of them," Czech said. "They do an excel-chair in lieu of his fees for playing the lead in the Kelton novel, Jones recalled. "They said OK, to my surprise."

A graduate of Harvard University with a cum laude degree in English, Jones also is making his screenwriting debut in "The Good Old Boys." He and J.T. Allen are co-writers of the screenplay.

"They find out who's available and they send samples of the work to the director, then you have interviews," Jones said of the path to selecting a writer.

"And it's a long, drawn-out process that often loses its direction. And so I basically started writing as a guideline for whatever writer I chose. And after a few days, I began following my own direction rather well, so I just hired myself."

The completed film, which also stars Sissy Spacek as Spring Renfro and Sam Shepard as Snort Yarnell, pleased him.

"I feel great about it; I love it," said Jones, who plays cowboy Hewey Calloway. "It's a sweet little film."

As an actor, Jones does not prepare for any two roles in the same way. "You read the script everyday and know your lines and do a lot of faking. Sometimes there's reading books. There's just a million different things to do, and the more you use and avail yourself of, the better.

"There are certainly classical considerations. There are old methods and new. You really need to be adaptable because no two companies or groups of people are the same. There are almost no standards here in the new world."

Jones shares more in common with his character, Calloway, than playing the role in the film. Both have a greater than passing knowledge of the hard-rode life of a cowboy on the dusty, dry plains of West Texas.

Calloway, who finds himself lassoed between the freedom of cowboying and the shackles of love, is a cowhand in and around Upland in 1906.

In creating this character and the story, Kelton — who has written 33 novels and two short-story collections — drew upon his memories of all the cowboys he had known, including his father and grandfather. His father was a cowboy in Crane and Upton counties who worked on the McElroy Ranch, and later had his own ranch; his grandfather was a cowboy who worked as foreman for the Scharbauer Cattle Co. north of Midland.

In addition, this award-winning San Angelo author also has written for the "Livestock Weekly," a West Texas ranch trade publication.

Jones's grandfather, Archie Lee Scott, worked on several ranches in West Texas following his move to Midland in 1924. As a child growing up in Midland, Jones dreamed of becoming a rancher. In the early 1980s, the actor purchased a ranch in the San Saba area.

"We're involved in pasture improvement and a commercial mama cow herd," Jones said. "We've spent the last three years converting all of our cows to fall calving. That is a struggle. We've done it — in good shape. We're breeding up. We've been saving all of our heifers and really building just from the ground up a first-rate commercial Brangus cow herd of mamas."

This past year, Jones said he'd doubled the pasturage.

"And I put a bulldozer on it to get rid of the nuisance brush. We're restoring some pastures, improving others. We have a reseeding program behind the bulldozer. Of course, we have to come up with a different regrowth program for every pasture. It's occurred to me in the last couple of weeks that the effectiveness of pasture improvement has increased many times by grazing deferral, which I'm into now."

He also has a passion for polo, and raises polo ponies.

"I was raised around horses. I enjoy them. And my family's always worked with horses and played with horses. And it's a lot of fun for me to continue that. I love to ride."

He feels "very much at home" in Midland and plans to be here during polo season.

Jones credits "being born in the country in West Texas in the United States" as the biggest break of his life. Still, his father's transfer to Libya when he was entering his sophomore year at Midland's Lee High School, played a major role in his choosing acting as a career. It was at St. Mark's, the private school in Dallas he attended while his parents were overseas, that he discovered theater.

His Broadway debut came in "A Patriot for Me," starring Maximilian Schell; his film debut was "Love Story." Since then he has played numerous film roles including Gary Gilmore in "The Executioner's Song," Loretta Lynn's husband, Doolittle Lynn, in "Coal Miner's Daughter," Woodrow Call in "Lonesome Dove" and Deputy Marshall Girard in "The Fugitive," a portrayal that earned him an Oscar.

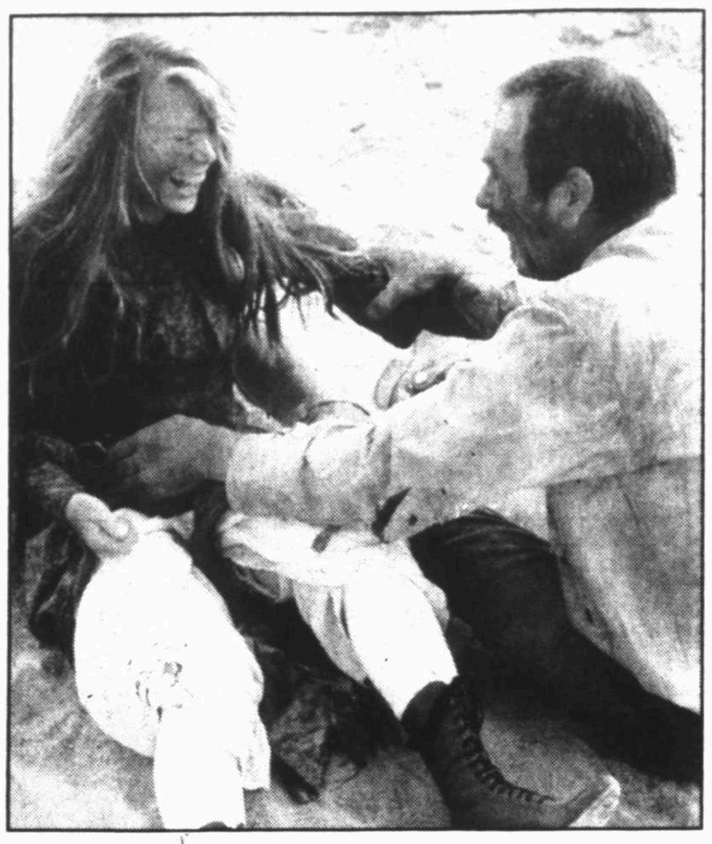

"No. Not really," he replied when asked if he has a favorite role. "Right now, it's Hewey Calloway. I kind of like ole Hewey."

Acting has its benefits, he said, thoughtfully. "You get paid well and meet a lot of interesting people and travel the world. All of that is secondary to the privilege of making your living with your imagination. That's the principle feature."

His latest project is "Batman Forever," the second sequel to the 1989 hit.

After he finishes filming early this month, "I don't really have anything to do until November. I don't know what I'll do during that time," he said. "I've got cattle to tend and I'm looking for another book. There's a lot of screen plays to read so I have plenty to do."

When it comes to directing another film, Jones said, "If I can get the job, I'll sure take it."

lent job and I commend them."

Among those singled out for their performances were Rodney Porter, who was named Officer of the Year, and Kenneth Callahan, named Rookie of the Year.

"It's good that your peers in the law-enforcement community look at and recognize the work you've done," said Callahan, who become a commissioned officer with the Midland Police Department in December 1993.

Porter also expressed appreciation for the award. "I'm happy," he said.

Porter said he made a career shift and became an officer three years and a month ago. "I always wanted to do it," he said.

He said he has enjoyed serving on the police force ever since. "I look forward to going to work every day," he said.

Other award recipients included: Ida Baker, who's in charge of the Police Department's evidence room, was named civilian of the year, and Daryl Selby, was named volunteer of the year.

A special medal of service was presented to Sgt. Price Robinson, who has been with the department for more than 14 years.

Three people were honored with chief's awards: Eva Luna, division manager of the communications and information department and who has worked for the city for nine years; Cpl. Jim White, the department's first public information officer, instrumental in the development of the citizens' police academy, and a 10-year-six-month veteran of the department; and Ron Sartor, community relations officer with the support services department and a Midland police veteran of 11 years, six months.

A special leadership award was presented to Sgt. David Garcia, public information officer.

The annual awards banquet began in 1991, the 50th anniversary of the Midland Police Department, "just to honor all of our officers and all of our employees," Czech said.

Poverty summit to open Monday; message to be less foreign aid

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — With rich nations cutting foreign aid and shaken by financial upheavals, the biggest poverty summit ever opens Monday with the task of telling the needy to do more with less.

The message was loud and clear on the eve of the week-long U.N. World Summit for Social Development: the aid burden will increasingly fall on private groups and individual governments.

"Success at the summit will not be seen in what governments do, but in the further development of this (grassroots) thought," said Keith Best, chairman of the New York-based World Federalist Movement, which works to integrate countries politically.

The U.N. summit will gather some 13,000 delegates for meetings on ways to alleviate poverty, redirect foreign aid, fight unemployment and improve public health and education.

It will culminate March 12 when leaders from more than 110 countries — including Vice President Al Gore, Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany and Chinese Premier Li Peng — sign a document stating goals for eliminating poverty, unemployment and social inequalities.

But they'll make few hard promises. The summit, conceived three years ago amid talk of a post-Cold War "peace dividend," faces the fact that little of the $935 billion in reduced military spending since 1987 has gone to improving the plight of the disadvantaged.

One in five people in the world lives on just $1 a day, and 47 children are born into poverty every minute. The income gap between the richest and poorest people in the world has nearly doubled since 1960.

At the same time, major industrialized countries cut foreign aid by almost 10 percent in 1992-1993. The slashing likely will continue, according to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

Investigators claim they warned Barings about Leeson

SINGAPORE (AP) — Investigators claimed Saturday that Barings was warned seven months before Nick Leeson brought down their bank that the trader held too much power with too little supervision.

They also made public a letter showing Barings was told of the potential problem as far back as 1992.

The disclosures raised questions about whether Leeson, a 28-year-old Briton, bears sole responsibility for ruining the 232-year-old Baring Brothers and Co. bank by losing $1 billion in futures trading.

Barings has said it first learned of the problem on Feb. 23, the day Leeson left Singapore for Malaysia. He resurfaced in Germany on Thursday and was detained by police at the Frankfurt airport.

Singapore is seeking his extradition, which Leeson says he will fight.

Leeson was the chief futures trader for Barings at the Singapore International Monetary Exchange, or SIMEX. He also was in charge of squaring his books — meaning he was policing himself.

This arrangement was viewed with concern by an internal audit of Baring Futures Singapore in August 1994.

"The audit found that ... there is a significant general risk that controls could be overridden by (Leeson). The front and the back office operations are managed and controlled by ... Leeson. This represents an excessive concentration of powers," said K. Shanmugan, a SIMEX lawyer.

Companies commonly divide responsibilities for initiating, settling and recording transactions to reduce the possibility of error and fraud, he said.

The audit advised restructuring the operations, but Barings ignored the recommendation, said Michael Lim, managing partner of Price Waterhouse, the international accountant appointed to administer Barings' Singapore office.

A SIMEX statement bluntly said a failure of internal controls allowed Leeson "to commit the Barings Group to substantial positions which now account for the loss sustained by the Barings Group."

Barings PLC, the bank's parent company, refused to comment Saturday.

The 11 SIMEX investigators at Saturday's news conference would not comment on criminal charges against Leeson.

A Singapore arrest warrant, based on a complaint from the bank, charges Leeson with "forgery for the purpose of fraud."

That carries a maximum sentence of seven years in prison. Leeson does not, however, face the prospect of flogging, a punishment reserved for those convicted of violent crimes, drug trafficking or vandalism.

The investigators said that SIMEX, where Leeson bet on the direction the Tokyo stock market would take, conveyed to Barings in January its concerns about the growing size of Leeson's gambles.

On Feb. 8, Barings treasurer Anthony Hawes flew to Singapore and assured the Singaporeans that things were under control, said Shanmugan, the exchange lawyer.

Asked if this meant Leeson was not the only one to blame, Shanmugan said: "There are various assumptions, but it is not fair to say that we are focusing our attention only on Leeson."

One of the major surprises at the news conference was the revelation that Leeson was trading for his own company and not for its customers.

The SIMEX statement noted there was only one outside customer, Banque Nationale de Paris. That suggested Barings must have known that millions of dollars of its own money was being gambled away.

A separate document from Price Waterhouse said that in January and February alone, Barings' head office poured in $890 million in mandatory up front money to support Leeson's futures bets.

Of this amount, it said, $196 million was paid out in the week of Feb. 17-24, the final days of Barings.

The bank was put into receivership last Sunday. A Dutch bank, the ING Group, is negotiating to take over Barings, an institution that includes Queen Elizabeth II among its clients.

The investigators also displayed a letter showing that as Leeson was about to take up his Singapore post in 1992, Baring executives disagreed over who would be his boss.

The letter dated March 25, 1992, from James Bax, a Barings director in Singapore and the managing director of Asia Pacific operations, voiced concerns about concentrating power with one trader.

Bax urged that Leeson be required to report to Simon Jones, another Barings director based in Singapore. But ultimately, Leeson reported to a boss in London, eight time zones away.

Bax's letter also said: "My concern is that once again we are in danger of setting up a structure which will subsequently prove disastrous and with which we will succeed in losing either a lot of money, or client goodwill, or both."

The letter was written to Andrew Fraser, head of equities at Barings' London headquarters.

A German court on Friday ordered Leeson to remain in custody today pending an extradition decision, which could take months.

Americans return to Italy for dedication of memorial in their honor

VEZZANO, Italy (AP) — It was only a glimpse, their faces through a window overlooking a town square.

That was the first and last time Larry Pisoni saw the two Americans who were among seven airmen who had bailed out of their burning B-25 after it was downed by the Germans over the Italian Alps.

"The next day they were marched 12 miles and killed in cold blood. Why?" said Pisoni, who was joined Saturday by three former U.S. servicemen who returned to Italy to pay tribute to the two fallen comrades.

The memorial, scheduled to be dedicated today, is for co-pilot Lucian Crutchfield of San Antonio and bombardier William Brooks of Cohoes, N.Y.

"They are symbols of what the United States stands for," said Pisoni, who became an American citizen and now lives in Annapolis, Md. He began to organize a tribute last year.

The simple gesture for his village of Vezzano to say "Thank You America" became an emotional reunion for three of the five survivors, nearly 25 other family members and friends and the Italian men and women who recall the burning plane and the seven Americans who bailed out.

Pilot Jay DeBoer of Muskegon, Mich.; Navigator Bob Cravey of Atlanta, and radio operator of Charles T. Reagin of Cory, Ind., made the journey back for the ceremony.

"I am finally going to their funeral," said DeBoer, who after parachuting out of the plane escaped into the mountains and met a priest walking the trail. With the help of an underground network and sympathetic Italians, he crossed into Switzerland disguised as a monk.

"The priest taught me how to play checkers," he said.

Reagin was taken prisoner by the Germans and sent to a POW camp in Germany.

"I came back to fill in the holes," he said. "Maybe just to see that it actually happened to me."

In the camp, Reagin met up with fellow airmen engineer Robert D. Mitchell of Oneida, Ill., who was also on board the plane. He is too ill to attend the ceremony.

But it was navigator Cravey's visit to the home where he was hid by an Italian family for nearly two months that captured the day.

As tears rolled down his face, he stood in a tiny room that has now been converted into a bathroom.

"Through this window I could see the German soldiers go to the fountain to shave," he said.

He said although the Germans searched the house several times they couldn't find the room because it was accessible only through the roof.

Cravey said during his escape he was met up by a man and his dog.

"When I came out of the snow bank I asked him 'Do you speak English?' He said, 'Sure, I lived for 20 years in New Jersey.'"

Cravey said his knows the weekend is a tribute to him and his comrades.

"What I did, that's nothing compared to what they did for me. They did this at the risk of their lives and their families and their children. It's unimaginable."

STATE

West Texas enjoyed sunshine and warm temperatures Saturday behind a front slowly pushing clouds and cooler temperatures eastward out of the state.

North Texas was cool and damp, but it was warmer in the South and West. Afternoon readings included 40 degrees in both Sherman and Paris while it was 79 in Wink.

Winds were from the southwest at 10 to 20 miles an hour across most of the state.

The forecast for North Texas is for decreasing cloudiness Sunday with highs in the middle 60s to middle 70s.

Forecasters said West Texas would have increasing clouds Monday. Highs in the 70s and lows in the 40s through Monday.

NATION

A storm system moved into the High Plains Saturday, spreading heavy snow from Colorado into the Dakotas and producing 60 mph wind gusts in the Sierra Nevada near Lake Tahoe, Calif.

The storm dumped almost 2 feet of snow overnight in parts of the Wasatch Mountains as the system moved through southern Idaho into Wyoming before shifting into the Plains.

Alta, Utah reported 20 inches of snow overnight, and area ski resorts throughout northern Utah got from 10 to 16 inches. Lesser amounts of snow were scattered across parts of Nevada, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

Snowfall was heavy in parts of the Colorado Rockies and was spreading into the Black Hills. As much as 8 inches was recorded near Custer, S.D., though most areas got no more than 6 inches. But snow was increasing at the rate of 2 inches per hour across northern South Dakota into the Aberdeen area.

The storm produced 50 mph winds in some areas, causing blizzard conditions in a few spots and bringing bitter cold. It felt like 57 below zero this morning in Devils Lake, N.D., with the wind chill.

Southern California got up to 2 inches of rain from the storm over a 24-hour period, and forecasters said more heavy rain was likely for the West Coast through the weekend.

Temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from 36 below zero at Warroad, Minn., overnight to an afternoon high of 82 at Fort Myers, Fla.

AUTHOR: Kelton keeps Old West alive in novels

said Kelton, 68, in an interview at his San Angelo home. "I was about as poor a cowboy that ever came out of Crane and Upton counties. I tried; I wished I could be. But I never had the knack. It was pretty clear early on that I was going to have to do something else for a living."

He tried oil-field work. "It was the hardest work I ever did in my whole life. Helped make a writer out of me one summer."

His keen boyhood interest in reading led him into writing.

Kelton, who did his apprenticeship in pulp-fiction short stories from the mid-1940s to the early 1950s, has evolved into a writer whose works are respected and honored in America and are gaining popularity in Europe.

"Good fiction, unless you're writing fantasy, basically should be a reflection of life as you see it through your own individual prism, through your own imagination and filtered through your own experiences, your own viewpoints, naturally."

HIS FICTION, NOW taking on classic status due to its enduring literary form and universal truths, is used in college and university literature studies.

"I pretty well got my (writing) spurs in the magazine field before novels" after returning to West Texas from a tour of duty as an infantry soldier in Europe during World War II.

His rejections were in pulp-magazine fiction. His post-war academic focus was in journalism at the University of Texas at Austin.

"As a fiction writer, you've got to realize that, first and foremost, you are a storyteller," Kelton reflected. "You're telling a story. And if your writing becomes so obvious (that) it calls attention to itself, you've diverted the reader from what you are trying to do, and that's 'tell a story.' You want it to be good and clean, but you don't want it to be so flowery and overwrought. You want to tell a story, and you want to tell it in a vivid way, but not to the point that the way you tell it gets in the way of it telling itself."

Kelton, at 68, is an unpretentious, self-effacing "good old boy" himself. He cherishes his Western heritage.

He was born into the ranch life in 1926 in Andrews County on the Scharbauer Cattle Co.'s Horse Camp at Five Wells Ranch. His grandfather, Bill Kelton — who came to the Midland country in 1906 — cowboyed for the Scharbauer Cattle Co. from about 1910 until the mid-1920s, when he and Arnold Scharbauer went into a ranching partnership north of Midland.

ELMER KELTON GREW up on the McElroy Ranch in Crane and Upton counties, where his father, Buck Kelton, cowboyed for 36 years before settling down on a ranch near Brownwood.

In Tommy Lee Jones' movie adaptation of Kelton's "The Good Old Boys," a replica of the old plank camp house on the ranch where his grandfather worked is the home-place setting in the film.

The movie — to air at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. today on TNT — was filmed in 1994 in the Davis Mountains territory of Alpine, Fort Davis and Marfa and in the Del Rio-Brackettville area.

Kelton, who previewed the film in a special showing in San Antonio last week, said he was "real happy" with Jones' interpretation of his book, its central character and its story line.

Jones is the movie version's coscriptwriter, director and principal actor. He plays Hewey Calloway. "He's a good horseman," Kelton said.

And like Jones, most of the players are Texans.

"THEY COME ACROSS like real people (and) not like Hollywood people," Kelton said.

"I think most people, if they like the book, will like the movie. It looks right and feels right."

In his book, the mesas and plains of Upton County's ranching country and old-town Upland "under some disguise" are the backdrop for the novel about a wandering cowboy, Hewey Calloway, who in 1906 tries to recapture the bygone era of open-range ranching.

The cowboy seeks not to be tied down to anything.

"Hewey Calloway tries to live a life that is already out of its time," Kelton writes in the novel's preface. "He attempts to remain a horseback man while the world relentlessly moves into a machine age." In his wanderlust, the cowboy "lives an impossible dream, trying to remain changeless in a world where the only constant is change."

"The Good Old Boys" is a story of lament and sadness, and it is a tale that is written in a cloak of humor. It is a good-natured survey of West Texas country at the turn of the century and of a man "who cannot have it all; nobody can."

At the end of Kelton's story, Calloway is "riding away into the sunrise" in search for "one more time like it used to be," Kelton said. "In the end, it's not going to work."

Calloway was trying "to live in the old way — the old open-range days after the open-range days were dying; they were gone. But he refused to recognize it."

His spirit was bound to nothing but his elusive freedom.

OWNING HIS OWN ranch, a dream of many a cowboy, would have "tied (him) down to one place," Kelton said. And Calloway would have no part of that.

"You don't always own it; it owns you."

Barbed-wire fencing was "the symbol of the closing of the open range" in the late 1800s and symbolized "a changing way of life," Kelton said. "It was probably a symptom as much as it was a cause."

Unlike most of his earlier works — including the eminently successful "The Time It Never Rained" about a 1950s drought-surviving West Texas rancher, Charlie Flagg — "The Good Old Boys" was written more on inspiration than on a writer's toil or perspiration.

"I'd still be trying to write that first book" had he leaned solely on inspiration.

But Kelton's first-hand knowledge of that drought reaffirmed his desire to write Western novels.

"Any ambition I had of being a big rancher sort of faded away during the drought: watching others struggle," Kelton reflected. "At least, I was making a living as a (newspaper) reporter," which was his "day work" until his recent retirement.

FLAGG, THE CENTRAL character in "The Time It Never Rained," persevered through the drought, as did many others, both farmers and ranchers, who lived off the land they loved.

"I admired them. To me, those are the real Western heroes," Kelton said of "those people who can stand up against that kind of adversity and endure and survive. They managed one way or another to stick it out."

Aside from "The Good Old Boys" and "The Time It Never Rained," Kelton's works include "The Day the Cowboys Quit," "Buffalo Wagons," "Eyes of the Hawk," "Stand Proud," "The Man Who Rode Midnight" and "Honor at Daybreak."

Critics have faulted some of his books for "not enough action" or "too much action."

Kelton's stance on that perspective is this: "You can't write for the critics. You can't afford to."

His works have been applauded by his readers and honored by his peers. "The Good Old Boys" and "The Time It Never Rained" won him the Western Heritage Award from the Cowboy Hall of Fame.

In "The Good Old Boys," which was first published in 1978, Hewey Calloway is a "composite of a lot of cowboys I knew when I was growing up," Kelton said.

AND PARTS OF the novel, close to his heart, were written in longhand in the 1970s when Kelton was at his ailing father's bedside. His father, bed-ridden from a stroke, retold his son "many of the old stories" from earlier times. More than the tales themselves, the "infectious color and spirit" of his father's recollections became "the heart and soul" of the novel.

Kelton's penchant for novel-writing was borne out of his childhood.

It was at his mother's behest that Kelton learned to read before his school days. He was so adept at reading that his teachers placed him in the third grade when he first entered school.

"I grew up reading Zane Grey," the prolific Wild West novelist, said Kelton, who also was influenced by the writings of Texas folklorist J. Frank Dobie, Western writer Will James and his Crane journalism-Spanish teacher and mentor, poet-folklorist Paul Patterson.

And they, like writers of the romantic American West, were influenced by Owen Wister's "The Virginian" about 1870s and 1880s Wyoming cowpunchers.

A major literary influence on writers of the American West was Sir Walter Scott, the early 1800s Scottish romantic writer.

" 'The Virginian' was a knight without armor riding horseback," Kelton said, and "set the patterns for the classic Westerns ever since. The old-fashioned Western is basically Sir Walter Scott in the West. The Westerns today owe a lot to 'The Virginian,' " the book and the 1929 Gary Cooper movie. "It was basically Sir Walter Scott updated."

SCOTT, WHO WROTE such classic works as "Ivanhoe" and "The Talisman," focused on the lives of both great and ordinary people who, as in Western themes, are enmeshed in changes that often are both violent and dramatic. Scott, too, believed in the basic decency of humanity.

Of the life of the cowboy, Kelton, the historian, noted that working the range land was "mostly hard work." And it still is. Cowboys ride horseback in roundups, mend fences, repair windmills and in many cases still feed from the chuck wagon. Unlike yesteryear, however, there are paved roads to town and pickup trucks to speed them along instead of wagons and buckboards and fast horses.

And the envisioned romance of cowboying probably came from its mythical freedom.

"They (writers and observers) always saw the cowboy as kind of like a free spirit, which they wish they could be, too."

HOWEVER, "BY DEFINITION, the cowboy was a ranchhand working for somebody else nearly all of the time," Kelton said. "So, he wasn't so free as it seemed, except in the sense, anytime he wanted to, he could just go somewhere else — kind of like Hewey Calloway, my character in this book.

"Hewey was always free. He was tied to a job as long as he worked that job. Any time he decided it was tiresome and he wanted to see something else, he got up and left. In that sense, he was free."

From Kelton's vantage point, the appeal of the Western novel often is in people's quest for faded freedoms.

"I think people today have lost so many freedoms that we, more or less, used to take for granted," Kelton said. Reading about the cowboy's Old West life "is sort of an escape for them. That's an ideal that probably nobody really had as much as they'd like to think. But still, it is an ideal, and they still look back on it with nostalgia."

A common theme of Kelton's works is "changing times and people's acceptance or resistance to change."

The cowboy, though not the drifter he once was, is yet on the range and is enjoying the freedom and toils it affords.

"EVERY GENERATION SINCE about 1880 has said that the cowboy is a thing of the past," Kelton reflected, and "that the Old West is dead. But it's still here, and they (cowboys) are still here. They just changed form to keep up with the time."

And Kelton is apt to quote fellow writer John Erickson: "The cowboy is still out there; you just don't see him off the interstate."

In interpreting the cowboy's life and his own West Texas ranching heritage, Kelton noted that writing is "solitary work."

His father, however, "never saw it that way. Work for him was something you did with a pick or shovel or on horseback."

For Elmer Kelton, work is writing on the keyboard. "There's a lot of work in sitting here and using your head and trying to bring something out of nothing but your imagination. And, sometimes, you don't know if you've got wheat or chaff. You hope for the best."

WORKS: U.S. tries to beat back effort to lift sanctions

tiative in the Security Council within the next several weeks, Ms. Albright held face-to-face meetings or telephone conversations with nine Security Council members.

She was accompanied by a U.S. intelligence official who dazzled foreign officials with an array of satellite photos showing that Saddam has poured billions of dollars into rebuilding Iraq's military and governmental infrastructure, administration officials said.

One photograph showed that Saddam had rebuilt the country's largest chemical weapons production plant, which was destroyed in the Persian Gulf war in 1991. Another set of photographs showed that Iraq had rebuilt two major ballistic missile factories, one near Mosul and the other in southern Iraq.

Ms. Albright said that if Iraq received large amounts of money from selling oil, and if international inspectors were not on the ground in Iraq to monitor weapons programs, the country would be able to resume full-scale chemical weapons production within two years and ballistic missile production within one year.

Other photographs showed equipment that Iraq had stolen from Kuwait and incorporated into the Iraqi military, including Russian-made Frog-7 missiles and hundreds of BMP-2 armored vehicles.

The armored vehicles have been given to the elite al-Nida Republican Guard unit, which was among those that Saddam sent to his southern border last October in what the Clinton administration believed was an effort to intimidate Kuwait.

Another set of photographs showed some of the lavish palaces and villas that Saddam has built for himself and his senior aides, including one palace near Lake Tharthar that is eight times bigger than the White House, and another complex near Saddam's birthplace in Tikrit, which includes a massive sports center for use by Saddam's family.

"We don't have any problem with a leader of a country building palaces," Ms. Albright told her hosts. "But we do have a problem with a leader doing that and then crying crocodile tears for his people."

The United States estimates that since the end of the Persian Gulf war, Saddam has built 48 residences or buildings for his ruling elite at an estimated cost of between $1.5 billion and $2 billion.

Other intelligence reports cited by Ms. Albright included evidence that Iraq has tried as recently as late last year to import key components for making missiles, including ammonium perchlorate for solid rocket propellant and gyroscopes for missile guidance systems.

HONOR: Week culminates with two ceremonies

(From 1A)

Julianne's classmates, teachers and Santa Rita principal Bob Watkins will speak at a brief ceremony to unveil plans for a flower planter that is expected to be constructed at the front entrance of the school before the end of the school year. Ceremonies at Santa Rita will begin at 2:30 p.m. Friday.

Following the school ceremony, a Texas Mountain Laurel will be planted at Dennis the Menace Park to memorialize Julianne. The services at the park are expected to begin at 3:45 p.m. Mayor Bobby Burns, Sheriff Gary Painter and Rev. Tommy Potter, of First Christian Church, will speak briefly at the tree-planting service.

Community donations are being accepted to help defray the costs of the tree and a monument that will be placed at the foot of the tree. Any additional funds will go to the Julianne Powell Memorial Fund, which will assist the family in paying for Julianne's funeral and the transportation of her body back to California, where she was buried.

Contributions can be mailed to "A Tree for Julianne" in care of Keep Midland Beautiful, 500 N. Loraine St., Ste. 109, Midland, 79701.

Also this week, three local recycling companies will participate in cooperative efforts to benefit Julianne's family.

Persons who wish to contribute can take their donated aluminum cans to Butts Recycling, 26 W. Industrial Loop; Midland-Odessa Metals, 1605 Garden City Highway; or Commercial Metals, 2309 Garden City Highway.

Persons donating cans should indicate somewhere on the sacks containing the cans that proceeds are to benefit Julianne.

Butts Recycling will also donate proceeds from recycled newspapers.

The cooperative recycling efforts begin Saturday with donations being accepted through April 11.

Parts of two paragraphs were inadvertently omitted from the stories on Page 2G in today's Reporter-Telegram.

The paragraph in the Midland Community Concerts' story is:

"The ballroom dancers have been well-trained in the Fred Astaire Dance Studios," Ms. Perkins said. "And they will be onstage with a big band orchestra of 15 musicians and two vocalists. We haven't had a big band sound on community concerts in quite a while, so it's time."

The paragraph in "The Rainmaker" story is:

Others in the cast include MCT newcomer Jim King in the role of Deputy File and MCT veteran Larry Elkins as the sheriff. Assistant director is Deborah Morton. Corby Archa is the stage manager. Set design is by Nancy Daugherty, set construction by Greg Alexander, lights and sound by Edward W. Taylor and period costumes are by Mae Dawson.

Russians pay their respects to slain TV journalist

By Marcia Kunstel and Joseph Albright
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — Thousands of Russians turned out Saturday to bury a popular television journalist whose murder many see as the latest and blackest sign that their experiment with freedom is failing.

"I am 100 percent convinced they will never find the killers. It's not the last killing we'll see. There will be more. Mark my words," said a bitter Nikolai Malikov, 47, a musician and mechanic who spent hours waiting to enter the cemetery where television icon Vladislav "Vlad" Listyev was laid to rest.

Sunshine breaking an early whiff of spring over Moscow did not mollify Russians who came to mourn Listyev, 38, as they stood forlornly round the big old city cemetery that a ring of police prohibited them from entering until after the ceremony.

"Vlad's importance lay in the fact that he succeeded in showing that you can be a journalist interesting to all society without being political," said lawyer Mikhail Korobkov, 37.

It was precisely Listyev's nonpolitical, non-ideological approach to his talk show and earlier entertainment and news shows that made his death so disturbing.

At home, at work, in public transport, in the three days since police blamed two unknown, mob-linked assassins for the murder, Russians have savaged authorities for failing to protect them and, more broadly, for letting criminal elements infiltrate virtually everything.

Killings of bankers and even politicians have become almost routine. As Malikov said, no political murder would draw this show of sympathy from Russians sick of what they consider empty promises and posturing.

Tens of thousands filed past Listyev's coffin Friday at the Ostankino television center that had beamed his cheerful, mustachioed presence into the homes of some 200 million viewers across the former Soviet Union.

The crowd of mourners Saturday was the largest since an estimated 80,000 people poured out to the funeral of dissident physicist Andrei Sakharov in 1989. Paying last respects to Listyev were flower-bearing politicians, laborers, pop stars — people of all backgrounds.

Many see sinister and destabilizing motives behind the killing of Listyev, who was shot in the head last Wednesday night in his apartment building entryway.

His killing was calculated "to provoke panic, to reinforce a yearning for an iron-fisted regime in the mind of the average Russian," wrote the weekly Moscow News in a front-page editorial.

Mayor Anatoly Sobchak of St. Petersburg somberly assessed that the killing was one in a string of events designed to "discredit democracy" and throw support in next December's parliamentary elections to hard-line communists, fascists and nationalists promising order at any cost.

While Russians puzzled over the shooting of their favorite television personality — who combined the gush of Phil Donohue and the probing mind of Larry King — some theories quickly arose.

President Boris Yeltsin recently named Listyev to head the new Russian Public Television that on April1 is due to revamp programming and replace state-run Ostankino, the only television network reaching all the former Soviet republics.

Some speculate Listyev's killing was linked to his plans to restrict commercial advertising on the network. Others suggested a more general power struggle.

After Yeltsin called for an end to liquor and cigarette ads on television this year, Listyev was instrumental in a decision to ban all advertising temporarily from the powerful network until new advertising guidelines are written. He also was reported working on a plan to handle advertising in-house, which would have cut middlemen out of profits from advertising that sells for up to $50,000 a minute.

Somalian warlord laments departure of U.N. troops

MOGADISHU, Saturday (AP) — Ali Mahdi Mohamed, one of Somalia's main warlords, lamented the departure of U.N. troops Saturday, a day after his leading rival rejoiced at it.

Ali Mahdi described the end of the international intervention as "a major failure facing the future of the Somali people."

The last of 2,400 U.N. troops still in Somalia last week left Mogadishu on Thursday, protected by 1,500 American and 350 Italian marines.

The withdrawal ended the two-year, $2 billion intervention that left Somali clans divided as ever and, in Mogadishu, poised to battle for control of sea and air ports — sources of revenue from landing and docking fees.

The troops were part of a force that began entering the country in December 1992 and at one point totaled 38,000 soldiers from 21 countries.

It is credited with saving many Somalis from starvation that, along with war and disease, killed 350,000 people.

Ali Mahdi, who controls northern Mogadishu, praised United Nations humanitarian efforts, but said they failed in "restoring law and order and disarming the factions."

On Friday, Ali Mahdi's rival, Gen. Mohamed Farah Aidid, welcomed the departure of U.N. soldiers, saying international intervention had sabotaged political reconciliation in Somalia.

Aidid, who controls most of southern Mogadishu, said that with the departure of the U.N. military mission, a representative government would soon emerge from his talks with allied clan leaders.

Ali Mahdi had said earlier that if Aidid unilaterally formed a government, he would name his own. But on Saturday, Ali Mahdi said he was prepared to meet Aidid if there was a possibility of substantive discussions.

"Where, when and the conditions of our meeting will be settled by the joint negotiating committee," Ali Mahdi told reporters from his office.

Previous agreements between the two men to forge a political reconciliation in Somali came to naught.

Mexico's Salinas has trouble dealing with downfall, analysts say

By John Rice
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY — For six years, Carlos Salinas de Gortari was a confident, popular and powerful president. He was a rising young free-market statesman, Washington's choice to oversee the new world order in trade.

Yet the man who had dreamed of global leadership has found himself reviled and seemingly powerless, and prepared briefly to sleep amid the dolls of a poor child's room in Monterrey during a fast to clear his sullied name.

Few elected leaders go from god to goat more quickly than former Mexican presidents. But few former presidents have taken it harder than Salinas.

"Carlos Salinas de Gortari is a man who has always been in perfect control. ... He must feel as if his life's work is crashing down upon him," said M. Delal Baer of the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington.

Mexican presidents have often made dramatic breaks with their predecessors, the men who selected them.

The split between Salinas and President Ernesto Zedillo, however, may be the sharpest since Lazaro Cardenas ordered former strongman Plutarco Elias Calles to exile in the United States in 1936. Calles founded the Institutional Revolutionary Party that still governs.

Zedillo has blamed Salinas for the economic crash that hit Mexico three weeks after the two old friends embraced and exchanged the presidential sash on Dec. 1. Polls have found that most Mexicans agree Salinas is at fault.

"Mexico has a rather well-established tradition" of new leaders attacking the old "to re-establish the moral authority of the regime," Baer said. "The system is eating its young, so to speak, in order to survive."

Former officials have also accused Salinas of failing to fully probe the murder of his first candidate for president, Luis Donald Colosio, a friend who was assassinated last March. Zedillo was chosen to replace Colosio. A prosecutor said Saturday, though, that Salinas did not impede the investigation into Colosio's killing.

In addition, Salinas' brother Raul was imprisoned Tuesday on charges of masterminding the September assassination of a prominent politician, Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu, who was also a former brother-in-law.

The dead politician's brother, Mario Ruiz Massieu, was arrested at the Newark International Airport in New Jersey on Friday night and charged with failing to declare currency, a U.S. customs official said Saturday.

The official, Steve Duchesne, said Ruiz Massieu would be arraigned before a U.S. magistrate on Monday and could face up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $250,000.

The murders of Colosio and Ruiz Massieu, combined with a peasant revolt in southern Mexico, spoiled a year Salinas might have seen as a victory lap for his six-year presidency.

He led Mexico into the North American Free Trade Agreement and rebuilt the state-centered economy on free-market lines, halting inflation and attracting investment. U.S. leaders, who admired his open-market zeal, strongly backed Salinas to head the new World Trade Organization that is to regulate global commerce.

But his dream of being the first Mexican president to retire into international prominence collapsed with the Mexico peso on Dec. 20.

"To be reviled as an individual after you've been your country's No. 1 public figure is very difficult," said Roderick Camp, an expert on Mexican politics at Tulane University.

"The function of an ex-president is to be prudent and serve Mexico, shutting up and not creating more problems for the next president," said former President Jose Lopez Portillo, one of the most criticized former leaders. He spoke in an interview published Friday in the daily Excelsior.

Salinas' announcement of his fast, a traditional protest of the powerless in Mexico, was another shock. Many suspected Salinas might try to dominate the inexperienced Zedillo.

Salinas announced the fast Thursday night, suspended it Friday in Monterrey, flew back to Mexico City, and returned to Monterrey overnight to resume the fast early Saturday. However, he decided to end it later Saturday.

TV crew films police shooting unarmed suspect

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A television crew covering a mall robbery's aftermath filmed state troopers killing an unarmed suspect with three shots to the back Saturday as he lay prone on the ground, held down by other officers.

State Security Secretary Euclimar da Silva ordered police to identify and punish the officers responsible.

Rio's Globo television network showed the killing, in which one police officer, aware of the television camera and a group of spectators, shot the rendered suspect three times in the back.

Police killed the driver of a getaway van in a shootout before the arrest.

A Globo employee who didn't want to be identified told The Associated Press that three armed bandits tried to assault an armored car at about noon Saturday. The car was collecting money from shops in the Rio Sul shopping center on Rio's trendy South Side.

Police arrived in mid-robbery and shot the driver of the getaway van. The TV crew, at the shopping center covering another story, filmed the brief shootout and the arrest of the second suspect.

The video depicted police throwing the man to the ground while another officer shouted something unintelligible at the watching crowd and put his hand over the camera lens.

He then rushed back and helped about five officers drag the suspect by the shirt to the other side of the getaway van.

While spectators could still see the man's body underneath the van, the officer shot the suspect three times with the suspect's own revolver, the film showed.

The officer then rushed up to the camera crew and showed the revolver's empty chamber, again shouting something that the microphone did not catch.

Nerves are frayed in Rio of late after the deaths of several police officers shot and killed in incidents across the city.

March on Selma doesn't seem important to younger blacks

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press Writer

SELMA, Ala. — Every day, Marcus Rush walks by the Byzantine architecture of the Brown Chapel AME Church, where thousands of people once started a 54-mile trek that would change the nation.

Every day, he passes the imposing granite monument on the church's front sidewalk immortalizing the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., another reminder of the 1965 Selma-to-Montgomery march that inspired passage of the Voting Rights Act.

Still, amid 30th anniversary events and a commemorative march that begins at the church today, the 21-year-old who lives at a public housing project across the street wonders what all the fuss is about.

Even such a momentous episode — guaranteeing blacks access to the ballot booth in a region where they once were slaves — doesn't have much relevance three decades later to a jobless black man.

"I don't know too much about it," Rush said. "That was before my time."

As it was for 32-year-old Lee Marshall, who calls the famous march "ancient history."

"I'm just trying to make it in this world," Marshall said. "I'm just trying to survive before this world comes to an end. It's almost there with some of the things that are going on, the crime and drugs and all that."

The troubles of the day were different on March 7, 1965, as hundreds of protesters set out from the Selma church, attempting to march to the state Capitol in Montgomery for a voting rights demonstration.

Instead, they barely made it out of downtown Selma before getting mauled at the foot of the Edmund Pettus Bridge by a posse of lawmen. The unforgiving use of billy clubs and tear gas provided one of the grimmest, goriest spectacles of the civil rights movement.

Two weeks after "Bloody Sunday" horrified the nation, King and others led a second march authorized by a federal judge and protected by thousands of federal troops.

Later that year, Congress approved the law that ensured blacks would no longer be denied the right to vote through chicanery or intimidation across the South.

"Of all the things that have happened in our lifetime, this is the single most historic piece of legislation ever passed," said Joe Smitherman, a white who was mayor then. Now, drawing a modicum of black support, he's still mayor.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and U.S. Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., who suffered a blow to the head on "Bloody Sunday," will be among those participating in today's ceremonies. The commemorative march begins at the church, goes over the bridge again and culminates Saturday at the Alabama Capitol.

"This is a wonderful opportunity that has risen out of a very painful event 30 years ago," said state Sen. Hank Sanders, a black lawyer who stood with the white mayor at an anniversary event.

Sanders and Smitherman rattle off what they see as the signs of Selma's progressiveness, most notably the shift of political power in a county that's 58 percent black. In 1965, Dallas County didn't have a single elected official who was black. Now, blacks hold the majority on the City Council, as well as on the city and county school boards.

Still, like many U.S. cities, Selma is a town divided along racial lines. Blacks and whites may chat amiably on a downtown street corner during working hours, but public schools, churches, and the Elks Club, among other things, remain segregated.

Rush speaks for those who see voting as a useless exercise.

"It ain't going to change too much," he said. "They still won't bring no jobs in here."

Cancer to keep boy in the dark his whole life

PHOENIX (AP) — Doctors say 4-year-old Julian Nieves Armenta must spend the rest of his life in the dark if he wants to live. Freckles that pepper the boy's face could turn cancerous if he sees the light of day.

Armenta has had 10 cancerous growths removed from his face, scalp and an eyelid at a Phoenix hospital — marks left by a rare skin condition covering him with the dark freckles.

Doctors told the boy's mother, Rosa Iscela Nieves, that means the boy cannot go outside and must avoid all sunlight, even through windows.

"Then I'm going to play with my toys all day, and at night you can take me for a Happy Meal," he told his mother.

But Ms. Nieves said the prognosis means a change in lifestyle.

"I have to change the way we live," Ms. Nieves, 37, said in Spanish. "I have to sleep all day and take him where I want to at night. If I do everything the doctors tell me, then he'll live longer."

Julian was born in Nogales, Mexico, while his mother was visiting relatives. She works here and left her son in Mexico because she feared he wouldn't get medical care in the United States since he was born outside the country.

She brought him to Phoenix after learning doctors in his Sonoran hometown recently said his cancer would kill him by the time he was 5.

Dr. William Jacobsen, who removed the cancerous growths, said the condition isn't fatal if the boy avoids sunlight.

"He (will have to) play on the monkey bars at night with the moon," said William Jacobsen, a plastic surgeon at the county's Maricopa Medical Center, which is treating the boy without charge. He underwent surgery on Feb. 23 and again on Friday.

Julian's skin is covered with the dark potentially cancerous blotches, making it difficult to find a safe area for a skin graft. The lower eyelid where one cancer was removed was replaced by a graft from behind one of the boy's ears.

The disease, xeroderma pigmentosum, inhibits the body's ability to process ultraviolet rays. It affects about 1 in 500,000 children and is caused ny a mutated, recessive gene passed to a child by the father and mother.

The disease also makes the eyes especially sensitive. Doctors expect to operate on Julian again next week to remove the thin lining over his eyes, which also has become cancerous.

"When he was very little, his eyes would water and he would never open them when he was outside," Ms. Nieves said. "When the light hit his eyes, they became very red."

MACUNGIE, Pa. — Whatever it was in the seemingly unremarkable life of Jeffrey Howorth that reportedly led him to gun down both his parents in the family's ranch-style house here late Thursday afternoon, it apparently escaped everyone in Macungie.

Sixteen-year-old Jeffrey appeared to have at least a little bit of what every teen-ager here needs to get by before getting out, say classmates and neighbors in this small bedroom community just east of Allentown. He took several honors courses at Emmaus High School, was a member of the swimming team there, and was active in the family's church.

His only notable flaw, some fellow students say, was that he was exceedingly quiet, perhaps too shy to crack the social codes of the competitive cliques at his school.

"He was a swimmer," said Matt Schuler, a senior at Emmaus. "They don't party much. They are dedicated. They just stick together and don't really hang out with anyone else. That's what swimmers do."

The Pennsylvania state police say that Jeffrey waited for his parents to arrive home around 5 p.m. on Thursday and ambushed them as they walked through the door, emptying the family's .22-caliber rifle into them before they even got their jackets off. Nine shots were fired into his father, George, and five into his mother, Sue. Jeffrey then took off in their red Chevrolet Lumina, the police say.

The Missouri Highway Patrol found the car on Friday night on Interstate 70 near Williamsburg, about 90 miles west of St. Louis. Nearby was Jeffrey, who was taken into custody with a .22-caliber rifle, a 12-gauge shotgun, about 600 rounds of ammunition, and a backpack. The Pennsylvania authorities are expected to begin the process of seeking extradition on Monday.

Before fleeing his home, the authorities say, Jeffrey had left on the desk in his room some notes that indicate he had planned for some time to kill his parents. "I told you I would do it," he wrote, and "I want a movie to be made for me after I kill everyone."

"The notes were found in his bedroom in plain view," said the Lehigh County district attorney, Robert Steinberg. "Basically, they relate that there was some ill will over his parents and something that happened in relation to school."

The killings have proved all the more painful for the people of this area because they followed by only a week the slaying of another couple and one of their sons in nearby Salisbury Township, a crime the police say was committed by the couple's two other sons, Bryan and David Freeman, both skinheads.

"These are two independent events," said Capt. Robert G. Werts of the Pennsylvania state police. Although Jeffrey had a shaved head, it was apparently for swimming. He had a poster on his bedroom wall that said: "Give the boot to racism."

Peering past the plastic crime-scene tape into the Howorth home yields few clues to the mayhem that occurred there. The lamps were on Friday night as the police worked, illuminating a smallish living room that could have been torn from a page in a Sears catalogue: simple framed paintings, pastel furniture, and lace curtains.

Neighbors huddled outside and reflected on a quiet family that had been particularly interested in church life. Mrs. Howorth, 48, was a secretary at the Asbury United Methodist Church, and Howorth, 46, a senior project engineer at the Pennsylvania Power and Light Co., taught Sunday school. And both their sons — Jeffrey's older brother, Steve, is a student at Penn State — did weekend work at the church.

"They all kept to themselves pretty much," said Pauline Ferstermaker, 71. "Jeffrey was a quiet, good boy."

Tara Volkel, who graduated from another high school in the area a year ago, said Emmaus was well known for parents who push. "There's a lot of pressure there for good grades," she said. "Parents compare a lot. It's a lot of bragging and showing off about any accomplishment that makes their kid stand out."

But perhaps a greater pressure, applied by peers, is simply to fit in. "Being in the right crew here is almost more important than doing well in school," said Jon Barry, 18, a classmate of Jeffrey.

It was in this, some students say, that Jeffrey did not excel. "If no one could recognize him in high school," said his friend Matt Schuler, "maybe for him killing his parents was the way."

Several states institute programs to lower teen-pregnancy rate

By David Foster
Associated Press Writer

Here, kid, take this condom — but remember, don't have sex!

If America's teen-agers are confused by the mixed messages sent by various pregnancy-prevention programs, don't blame them. The adults who run the programs aren't much better off.

As Congress considers giving welfare bonuses to states that reduce the number of babies born to unwed mothers, the problem of teen pregnancy is getting renewed scrutiny. But finding programs that work — or even measuring whether they work — can be difficult.

Consider one of the hottest new efforts on the pregnancy-prevention scene, an Iowa program called It Takes Two.

The program stresses responsibility for both boys and girls, encouraging abstinence but also teaching about birth control. It's fast-moving and entertaining, including one segment in which students act out a TV game show, guessing the cost of raising a baby.

It Takes Two is popular among educators and is spreading throughout Iowa. National experts consider it a model in preventing teen pregnancy.

Yet nobody knows how effective the program really is.

"We feel pretty confident it will do what it's supposed to do, which is to make a short-term impact on attitude," said program director Tom Klaus.

Such doubts have taken on new urgency with a welfare-reform proposal approved Wednesday by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Republicans in Congress want to dismantle the federal welfare system and replace it with block grants to help states combat poverty.

The intent is to give states flexibility to deal with social ills in their own ways. But the Ways and Means Committee wants to retain some federal control, promising increased block grants to states that reduce their out-of-wedlock births without increasing abortions.

A state would get a 5 percent bonus if it showed a drop of 1 percentage point in its "illegitimacy ratio" — the number of out-of-wedlock births plus any increase in abortions, divided by total births. (So reducing out-of-wedlock births simply through abortions would not bring the ratio down.) A reduction of 2 points would reap a 10 percent bonus.

Republicans say the measure could reduce the strain on welfare. Nearly half of all women receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children have never married.

Feminist groups denounced the proposal, claiming it's an indirect method of capping abortions. State officials appeared lukewarm to the idea, welcoming the prospect of additional money but bridling at increased restrictions.

"We certainly share the goal of reducing teen pregnancy and births to unmarried women, but we want the flexibility of how to get there," said Janet Goss, spokeswoman for the American Public Welfare Association, which represents state welfare agencies.

Given statistical trends, it wouldn't be easy for states to get the bonus.

The birth rate among U.S. teens dipped slightly in 1992 after rising for five years. But only one-third of all out-of-wedlock births are to teen-agers, and the overall rate of out-of-wedlock births has climbed steadily.

In 1992, the last year for which the National Center for Health Statistics has data, 30.1 percent of all births were to unwed mothers. Just five years earlier, the rate was 24.5 percent.

A wide range of teen pregnancy-prevention programs exists, from the abstinence-only approach of Sex Respect programs, favored by conservative Christians, to the distribution of condoms in schools.

Dr. Henry Foster, President Clinton's choice for surgeon general, made a name for himself fighting teen-age pregnancy in Nashville housing projects with a program called I Have a Future. It aims to delay sexual activity in teen-agers through various tactics, including abstinence and contraception.

Reagan is 'doing fine,' Nancy says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Reagan is doing "fine" since his diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease, although the mind-crippling illness is wrenching for his wife, the former first lady said Saturday.

In an interview on CNN's "Larry King Weekend," Nancy Reagan wouldn't elaborate on her husband's physical condition. But, "there've been better" days, she said.

King asked if Alzheimer's is harder on loved ones than patients. "That's true," Mrs. Reagan responded but, reflecting on the joys of her life, she added: "You pay for everything, don't you?"

Reagan, 83, disclosed in November that he was in the early stages of Alzheimer's, an incurable neurological disorder that destroys the brain's memory cells. Some 4 million Americans have the disease, and 100,000 die every year.

Telescope zooms in on quasar that is 60 sextillion miles away

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Astronomers in space and on the ground cheered Saturday when ultraviolet telescopes aboard Endeavour zoomed in on a quasar near the edge of the universe, an incredible 60 sextillion miles away.

The quasar, the most distant and desired target of the astronomy mission, appeared as a very faint pinpoint of light to ground controllers. It was invisible to the shuttle crew.

The quasar is 10 billion light years away, or 60 sextillion miles — 60 followed by 21 zeros.

"This observation is right at the limit of what can possibly be done with this camera," said Arthur Davidsen, an astrophysicist at Johns Hopkins University. "It's the hardest thing we can do with this telescope, and it looks like it's going to work."

Davidsen wants to use this ultraviolet radiation-rich quasar in his search for intergalactic helium, supposedly formed within minutes of the Big Bang. Astronomers believe the universe was created in an immense explosion and that lots of hydrogen gas and much less helium gas ultimately were spread between galaxies.

The Hubble Space Telescope may have spotted this primordial helium a year ago, said NASA scientist Edward Weiler. But scientists need to confirm this because Hubble was not designed to observe such short wavelengths.

"That would be a very important confirmation of the Big Bang theory, that yes, indeed, there was 10 percent helium and 90 percent hydrogen," Weiler said. "If it doesn't confirm it, then we have a lot of problems."

The quasar, short for quasi-stellar object, is thought to be the size of several billion solar masses all collapsed into one giant black hole. This suspected black hole is sucking up everything around it and emitting considerable light at the far end of the ultraviolet spectrum.

By using the quasar as a light bulb, the Johns Hopkins telescope should be able to see whether anything is blocking its far-ultraviolet light. The obstructing material could be intergalactic helium.

Saturday morning's observation was meant to pinpoint the location of the quasar and study the surrounding area. The helium search was expected to begin later Saturday and continue throughout the 15 1/2-day mission ending March 17.

"We literally won't have enough information until we've done this a half-dozen times," Davidsen said.

The astronauts also aimed the three, $200 million telescopes at Io, one of Jupiter's moons. The Johns Hopkins telescope could detect ultraviolet emissions from the sulfur and other materials apparently spewing from an erupting volcano on Io. The measurements appeared on television as a line of squiggles.

Four of Endeavour's seven crew members are astrophysicists.

Martin Luther King's family reopens home

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — In a thawing of three months of icy relations between the family of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and the National Park Service, family members reopened King's birthplace to free, Park Service-conducted tours Saturday at 10 a.m.

Dexter Scott King, the head of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, said the decision was a temporary agreement spurred by his disappointment at seeing schoolchildren who had traveled to the King historic district kept outside the two-story, clapboard and shingle birthplace.

King, the slain civil rights leader's youngest son , barred the Park Service's uniformed guides and interpreters from the house on Dec. 28, when the two institutions clashed over Park Service plans to build an $11 million visitors center near the King center.

The King family had hoped to use the same site for a multimedia, interactive civil-rights museum. The family accused the Park Service not only of infringing on its property rights but also of trying to appropriate King's legacy.

Dexter King, 33, said he and the board of the King center would reevaluate the temporary agreement in July.

"They have recognized and respected our intellectual property rightsand they have agreed to work with us to decide what is appropriate in terms of the interpretative part of the visitors center," King said of the Park Service in an interview. "We stood on a principle, and legally if you don't protect your rights, you lose them."

Troy Lissimore, superintendent of the five-block national historic site who will oversee the visitors center, said he was pleased with the family's decision and looked forward to "a stronger working relationship."

The historical site draws more than 3 million visitors a year.

Despite the conditional tone of King's comments, others on the center's board said the announcement represented the beginning of a broader accord with the Park Service.

John Cox, secretary of the board, said that the Park Service was considering resumption of the more than $500,000 a year for maintenance it had been providing the King center and that it might provide logistical help on the interactive museum, which would be privately financed.

Barely three months ago, King and his allies had accused the Park Service of "dark ambitions" to appropriate the King legacy while being "poorly qualified to interpret the people's history." They sought broad public support for their positions, but found that most Atlanta residents, including city officials, supported the Park Service's plans as a lever to redevelop the historic district.

And instead of arousing a nationwide protest against the Park Service, Cox said, they found that the dispute, with its hints of vague philosophical differences, just confused people.

The dispute also shined a harsh light on the administration of the King center, which is running an estimated $600,000 deficit. Local columnists accused family members of trying to profit from a legacy that belonged to the world.

The Rev. Joseph L. Roberts Jr., who fills the position King once held as pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church here, said he was still baffled by what the King center felt it had accomplished, since little had changed with the plan for a visitors center.

Excavators hope to find gold, silver at Alamo

Precious metals and junk are both considered treasures

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Whether it's gold or silver or a chunk of Alamo battle artillery, it's treasure.

That's the position of historical researchers looking for Alamo relics as they start excavating a site believed to contain a water well dating to the famous 1836 Texas battle.

Diggers hope to find gold and silver presumably brought to the Alamo by Texas independence fighter Jim Bowie. Or a long lost battle cannon. Or perhaps less spectacular but historically significant smaller artifacts.

"Even if it's junk, it could really clarify history," said Frank Buschbacher, a historical researcher who heads Tesoro del Alamo preservation society and is project manager for the dig. An archaeology team from St. Mary's University is conducting the month-long excavation.

Buschbacher, who moved to Texas from California, said he is just glad to get the project started.

"When I first came to Texas, everybody without exception said, 'They're not going to let you do that ... dig in front of the shrine, the cradle of freedom,' " Buschbacher recalled.

But the dig has overcome skepticism and early financial difficulties and is happening, with city and state approval. Ground was broken Feb. 1, and archaeologists began their methodical work five days later.

Researchers recently uncovered their first relic — a rusty, pointed object — but they weren't immediately sure of its significance.

The first phase of the project targets a 12-foot square area eight to 14 feet deep. Ground-penetrating radar indicates the site is one of three underground anomalies in front of the Alamo, Buschbacher said.

He also wants to dig at the two other sites, believed to be a Spanish colonial-era well and an underground trench.

Buschbacher hopes to find gold or silver in the first well.

One legend has it that gold was brought by Spanish Roman Catholic Jesuit priests to the San Saba area, where Indians were used to work a silver mine. Alamo defender Bowie and his brother ultimately brought the silver and gold to a spot outside San Antonio and then to the Alamo, according to the disputed legend.

Buschbacher, 46, who has researched Alamo stories for nine years, said he also was captivated by information he received about gold at the Alamo from a psychic Mexican woman who helped locate historic artifacts in Mexico.

Waynne Cox, an archaeologist with the University of Texas at San Antonio — who was involved in a similar project of Buschbacher's last year that had to be scrapped because of funding problems — has doubts about the alleged treasure.

But Cox, currently conducting other archaeological work at the Alamo, said the excavation could produce valuable battle relics because the well existed before, during and immediately after the March 6, 1836, battle.

"I think it'll be quite an interesting time capsule ... if they can find the well," he said.

The Daughters of the Republic of Texas, who operate the Alamo for the state, also are skeptical about gold or silver treasure but say they will be watching to see what turns up.

"Our interest is in the archaeological aspect," said DRT member Dorothy Reed Black, an Alamo chapel hostess.

Buschbacher acknowledges he may be alone on the treasure hunt.

"Really, there are very few people who stand beside me on the treasure thing, and that's all right," he said. "In a way, the artifacts from the battle would be more precious. ... It's a win-win situation."

Whatever is found will belong to the city. The site is on a blocked-off city street. Researchers conducting the excavation have posted a $7,000 performance bond to assure the street is returned to good condition.

A total of $40,000 in financing has been secured for the first well dig, Buschbacher said. Another $80,000 would be needed for the other two digs.

As they have prepared for the dig, Buschbacher said, team members have held detailed meetings on the plans for the excavation, which must be conducted according to strict archaeological guidelines.

And because it involves the Alamo, he said, there's always the possibility the event could turn into "a circus," something the dig team hopes to avoid.

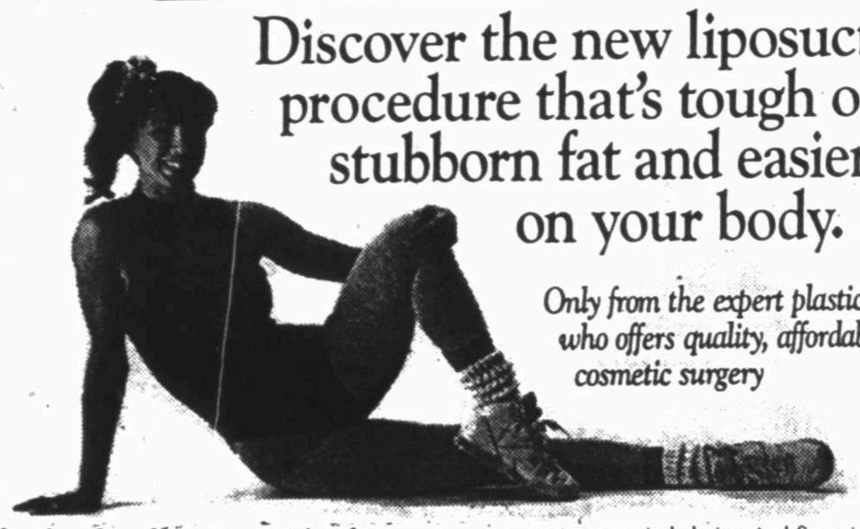

"We want to keep it a world-class excavation," Buschbacher said. "We are well aware that this is going to draw worldwide attention, and especially national attention."

Spelunkers in Northeast enter small, dingy world

By Paul Tolme
Associated Press Writer

WEYBRIDGE, Vt. — Compared with the expansive caves of the South and West, Vermont's 45 known caves are small and a bit dingy. The glaciers that once covered the region filled the caves with mud and rock.

However, to the state's small band of active cavers, the caves burrowed into the limestone comprise a beautiful and fragile underworld. To see that world, cavers, or spelunkers, crawl through muck and over boulders and squeeze themselves through small passages. It's a claustrophobic's nightmare.

In a cave near Middlebury College, for example, cavers enter through a crack in the rock several feet wide and squeeze themselves about 20 feet over ice or running water, depending on the season. Getting wet is unavoidable.

From there, cavers rappel 20 feet to a rock landing, then rappel another 50 feet to the cave floor. All of this is done in the dark with the aid of a miner's helmet and light. The interior is humid and musty; dripping water is the only sound.

Aside from the danger of falling, hypothermia is the primary risk in Vermont's caves because cavers sometimes must wade or swim through underground streams.

"Caving isn't superpopular in the Northeast because it's cold," said Kevin O'Classen, vice president of the Vermont Cavers Association. The temperature in a cave remains unchanged year-round; in Vermont, it's about 45 degrees.

The Middlebury cave reaches depths of nearly 150 feet. Its largest room is about 30 feet wide and 30 feet high. In spring the cave fills with water, evidenced by leaves stuck to the ceiling.

Smaller passages shoot to the sides and require cavers to shimmy on their stomachs across mud. Sometimes cavers can't turn around until they reach another room.

Without lights, cavers are in complete darkness, and no amount of time allows the eyes to adjust. Ordinary sounds such as breathing become magnified because the stone walls muffle all outside noises.

Caving evokes strange emotions and requires a beginner to squelch feelings of panic. The Vermont Cavers Association frowns on beginners entering alone or without training. "Safety and conservation are our general concerns," O'Classen said.

O'Classen carries battery packs that power his helmet light for 100 hours. He prides himself on being able to tie climbing knots behind his back and in the dark.

Cavers have varied reasons for coming to the sport, but all feel a responsibility for protecting the fragile rock formations and cave wildlife such as bats.

Ron Miller became an active caver in college after being exposed to the sport as a child. His parents went caving on their honeymoon.

The highlight of his caving experiences came in 1992 on a trip to Belize, when he and several other explorers discovered an underground Mayan site littered with hundreds of pieces of pottery and pottery fragments.

"There was a sense of awe that we were the first humans to trod the same path that these people had established roughly a thousand years earlier," Miller said.

The crew emerged in the jungle 15 hours after entering.

Although Vermont has nothing to match the magnitude of that cave, the state does have the essential component of caves: limestone. The soft rock is eaten away over the ages by running water.

New Hampshire's bedrock is primarily granite; it has only talus caves, formed by falling rock and boulders. Maine has patches of limestone and some small caves.

In the United States, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and Alabama are known for their lengthy caves. New Mexico and areas of the West also have expansive caves.

Consortiums launch Internet services for users in rural areas

WAPAKONETA, Ohio (AP) — Stockbroker Bob Althoff wants to cruise the information superhighway in the worst way. Problem is, he has no on-ramp.

Althoff is one of many computer enthusiasts in small cities and rural communities who have been financially blocked from the Internet, a complex international web of computer networks now used by an estimated 13.5 million people.

For most Americans, the Internet is a local phone call away. College students can log on through their university computers. Many businesses now provide access for their employees.

But finding information in the vast, uncharted territory of cyberspace takes time — and that makes it economically unfeasible when a long-distance call is needed to connect with a hub computer that provides Internet access.

"It's like having an information highway that goes all across America, but the only off-ramps are in the major cities," says Althoff, who lives in Chillicothe, a town of 22,000 about 40 miles south of Columbus.

Now, Althoff and others who are off the beaten path in Ohio should be able to dial up locally, through Com Net Inc., an Ohio-based consortium of 19 independent telephone companies.

The group has launched the service in Chillicothe, and eventually plans to install Internet dial-up sites in Akron, Canton and a half-dozen small Ohio towns.

Users will be able to reach the Internet, dialing locally, for a fee of $9.95 to $19.95 for up to 20 hours, said John Wilson, Com Net's chief operating officer.

Larger telephone companies are blocked from providing such services. The consent decree that broke up AT&T in 1984 barred the Baby Bells from providing computer connections across local phone boundaries.

Meanwhile, Com Net and an increasing number of other local projects are filling the gaps.

Last year, more than 1,100 private groups, local governments, school districts and others applied for $24.5 million in funding from the Commerce Department's National Telecommunication and Information Division. This year, $65 million is available.

Also, the Rural Datafication Project in Ann Arbor, Mich., is bringing the Internet to difficult-to-serve areas of West Virginia, New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

Jim Lemon of Ohio State University's College of Agriculture said access will make a difference for rural customers.

"If you're making decisions about what to do with your corn crop, you're dependent on a number of information sources," Lemon said. "Sometimes, operating in isolation, we make bad decisions."

Jack Harrison also knows about isolation.

The 74-year-old part-time pastor at a Presbyterian church in Calvert, Texas, sees tapping into the Internet as a way of keeping the information have-nots from leaving his small east Texas town.

The 1,300-person village could use Internet to spread the word about its annual barbecue and the town's businesses could use it as a way to expand, he said.

Young mayor gets A for effort

NOGALES, Ariz. (AP) — Louie Valdez may be the nation's youngest elected mayor. But he's no political neophyte.

At 23, he's been fascinated by politics nearly half his life. He's worked on three congressional campaigns, and has won four elections himself.

Since his inauguration, he's been praised for encouraging cooperation in a City Hall known for fractious politics.

"He has a tremendous amount of enthusiasm and motivation," said Hank Tintos, an alderman and businessman in this border town of 20,000. "He set himself certain goals and objectives, and I think he will be able to accomplish them."

Since he took office in January, he's persuaded the City Council to set up a youth advisory council and approve a competitive selection process for all new department heads.

"I guess I've got to give an A for effort," said Dan Doyle, a 59-year-old former mayor who lost a bitter primary election to Valdez by 54 votes, then lost the general-election runoff. "He's trying."

Valdez was elected to the local school board in a 1992 recall election, then won a four-year term. A year ago, he announced he would run for mayor.

With his brother Robert managing his campaign, Valdez beat Doyle and Jack Tidwell, a city councilman, in the primary.

"I expected to lose," Valdez said.

He attributes his victory to use of cable TV commercials for the first time in Nogales. He won the general election runoff by 10 percent.

In his campaign he promised to improve public health, safety and the environment and work for economic development and youth.

He said some people were skeptical of Valdez because of his age.

But Tintos said, "This community was willing to take a chance."

Valdez is thought to be the youngest mayor ever directly elected in a city of substantial population, according to the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

That doesn't include Brian Zimmerman, who was elected at age 11 as mayor of Crabb, Texas, population 125.

Valdez lives with his parents on the city's west side. He's on leave as a junior political science major from the University of Arizona.

Reservists power up for exercises

■ Air Force personnel will participate in readiness manuevers in the Midland area through March 12.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Seven-hundred U.S. Air Force reservists who are assigned to the 452nd Air Mobility Wing at March Air Force Base in California will be flying into Midland International Airport at mid-week for a five-day "readiness exercise."

The maneuver is to demonstrate the wing's capability to be deployed "somewhere in the world to help support a larger contingency," Air Force public affairs officer Capt. Stephen Razo said last week. "What we have to do is literally pick up part of this wing and move it."

Reservists will be bringing in "everything that is needed to support a re-fuel operation, as well as an airlift operation," Razo said.

Aircraft to be used in the exercise are the Boeing KC-135 refueling jet-powered transport and the Lockheed-Georgia C-141B Starlifter, the workhorse of the Air Force's Air Mobility Command.

The reservists who will participate in the readiness exercise Thursday through March 12 will be unloading their equipment at the airport on Thursday. The cargo will include tools, generators, lights and equipment necessary to "power up or power down airplanes — keep them running," Razo said.

"These are reservists, and obviously, the expertise of the reserves is high because a lot of these people do the same job on the reserves side" as they do in their civilian jobs. "We'll have everything from medical personnel, civil engineering personnel, security police, air-

British won war due to women, WWII pilot says

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The 1940 Battle of Britain to preserve and protect the British from Nazi military forces, especially the Luftwaffe, was but one of many World War II battles that ultimately ended in the Allied forces' defeat of the Axis powers.

And despite Adolf Hitler's conviction that his aerial onslaught, followed by an invasion, would subdue and conquer Great Britain, England was "unaware that she was a beaten nation," according to World War II British night-fighter pilot Jeremy Howard-Williams.

Howard-Williams, an author and lecturer on British wartime history, spoke on "The Battle of Britain: The Petticoat Factor" in concluding the three-day symposium, "Pilots and Poster Girls," sponsored by Midland College and the American Airpower Heritage Museum to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the war's end.

"In 1940, not many people gave much for our chances, including your ambassador, Joe Kennedy, (who) sent some very bad reports back to Franklin Roosevelt," Howard-Williams said on Saturday. "But we didn't know we were beaten. And that's the problem which Hitler didn't understand" — Britons' resolve to protect their homeland from invasion.

So, the Britons "dug in our heels and stayed" and dispatched young pilots in their Spitfire and Hurricane fighters to challenge the invading German Luftwaffe fighters and bombers over the English Channel.

Meanwhile, Hitler was planning a ground-troop invasion of England in the wake of his projected overwhelming airborne invasion.

History credits much to womanhood — the petticoat factor — in preparing England's Royal Air Force for the air attack.

"You (women) are the rocks we cling to in times of trouble (and are) "totally adorable," Howard-Williams declared.

Joan Baskin is to receive the Masons' Community Builder Award at a ceremony scheduled for Saturday.

Masons to present Baskin with award for volunteer work

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Three Masonic lodges in Midland have joined together to honor Joan Baskin, whose service to the community has consistently improved the lives of its citizens.

This is the third year that area Masons have presented one volunteer with the Community Builder Award to honor years of productive service and devotion to Midland.

"The Community Builder Award has been created to enable Masonic lodges to formally and publicly recognize outstanding non-Masons who have distinguished themselves through their service to the community," according to local Masonic literature.

Members of Midland's three lodges — the Acacia Lodge, the Centennial Lodge and the Midland Masonic Lodge — joined to select Mrs. Baskin for the honor.

"During the past 30 years, Joan Baskin has distinguished herself through unselfish service to her church, our public schools, the Chamber of Commerce, community theater, Junior League and many volunteer service organizations throughout the state of Texas," said Leonard Wood, president of the Masters Wardens and Secretaries Association of the 81st Masonic District.

Mrs. Baskin will be the guest of honor at an award ceremony 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Midland Masonic Lodge, 1600 W. Wall St.

Driving makes people assume particular personality

What is it about driving a car that makes people, regardless of age, sex or social status, assume a particular personality?

Ott

You can see it in their body language, or even in the way they hold their hands on the steering wheel. Some are quite casual, almost bored with the entire ordeal, as though driving a vehicle has become second-nature to them. Others, you can readily tell, are terribly nervous and can't wait to reach their ultimate destination so they can get out from behind that blasted wheel.

But everyone has his or her own style.

Let's take a closer look at five of the more popular ones.

1. "Mr. I'm so cool I'm not even going to pay attention to what I'm doing, so watch out." This one, as the name implies, is the guy — and it almost always is a guy — who makes you incredibly nervous because everytime he zips past you in his little sports car he is doing something other than watching the road. He might be talking on the telephone, or attempting to read a newspaper, or fidgeting with the radio, or checking out his hair in the rearview mirror. But the bottom line is, he's not looking out for your best interests. That wouldn't be cool.

2. "Miss I always wanted to race at the Indy 500 but never got a chance so I'll just make up for it now." Yeah, we're talking about your typical pedal-to-the-metal speedster here, and for whatever reason, women, especially young ones who have long blonde hair and drive convertibles, are the leaders of the pack. And despite the fact it can be terribly irritating when they roar past you on a crowded city street and then suddenly, without warning, swerve into your lane, you tend to forgive them because they look so darn good.

3. "Mr. I think I'll take this opportunity to do my best Mick Jagger impression while singing along with the radio." Frankly, this dude — and that, believe it or not, is what he actually likes to be called — is my personal favorite because he is obviously so self-confident that he doesn't see the need to worry about making a complete jackass of himself in front of others. Either that, or he is too dumb to realize that a car window can be seen through from the outside in as easily as from the inside out. So he sings to his heart's content. The rest of us, however, just giggle, and try to figure out which Rolling Stones song he is butchering at the time.

4. "Mrs. I'm so tense I'm going to grip this steering wheel as hard as I can, or until my knuckles turn with the Luftwaffe was in the powerful Rolls-Royce Merlin engine to power the Spitfire and the Hurricane. The inspiration behind the engine's development was a woman, Lady Houston, who in 1929 gave $500,000 toward a powerfully refined aircraft engine for the Royal Air Force's racing team. That engine became the Merlin, which also powered the latter versions of America's prized P-51 Mustang fighter.

And it was a woman who refined the engine's carburetor system for increased performance. Women built the front-line British fighters and made other vital contributions to the war effort.

"Without them I might be speaking German right now," he said.

The British "would have never won the war without" the United States, which entered the war in December 1941. "But we could very easily have lost it before you came in; that's the problem, isn't it?"

British Prime Minister Sir Winston Churchill once said that "the British people won the war," Howard-Williams said, and that "he had the luck to give the roar. He was the bulldog at the front."

Insight into the victorious struggle was imparted before Howard-Williams' talk by World War II's American Army Air Corps, Navy, and Marine Corps aces and "near aces" who described their exploits in both theatres.

"They fought the hard war," Jack Edwards — a naval aviator in the latter stages of the war — said of those pilots who fought the war in its earlier stages. "We finished up what they did. Odds were against them in every way."

"Their bravery is just unsurpassed," Edwards said of fighter pilots, such as Jack Ilfrey of the U.S. Army Air Forces, Tex Hill of the American Volunteer Group (The Flying Tigers), Archie Donahue of the Marine Corps, and Alex Vraciu of the U.S. Navy.

"They demand a lot of respect and admiration. They carried on in the face of overwhelming odds there for awhile and hardships. If it hadn't been for guys like them, we might be have been speaking Japanese or German."

The American fliers discussed the war with their former enemy, now friends, such as ex-Luftwaffe pilots Werner Seitz and Werner Morath. No World War II Japanese pilots participated in the event.

The American pilots discussed characteristics of the fighters, such as the Army's P-40 Warhawk, P-47 Thunderbolt, P-38 Lightning and the P-51 Mustang and the Navy's and the Marine Corps' F4F Wildcat, F6F Hellcat, and F4U Corsair.

Hill saluted and revered his former commander, Claire Chennault.

"He was a great guy," Hill said. "The guy knew exactly what he was doing. He was a man of few words. Whatever he said had meaning."

Vraciu, a Hellcat pilot and ace, described naval aerial battles, including the June 1944 Battle of the Philippine Sea and the Mariana Islands' "Turkey Shoot" in which American forces virtually destroyed most of the Japanese fleet and aircraft there. American losses were minimal.

The Turkey Shoot was an "old fighter pilot's dream," Vraciu said. "We outnumbered them; they didn't have a chance."

Morgan, a P-47 Thunderbolt pilot, said that the most satisfying part of his flying in the Mediterranean was "helping out the front-line troops" by bombing and strafing German forces and in strangling the German supply lines.

Donahue, a Marine Corps ace who mainly flew Corsairs, noted that the cockpit armor-plating of American fighters, such as the Corsair, Wildcat, and Hellcat, protected their pilots.

"You see, the Japanese airplanes didn't protect their pilots," Donahue said. Foss, also a Marine Corps ace "was shot down five times in an F4F" Wildcat and survived. "You could go down in that airplane and still live. In an Japanese airplane, you probably are going to go straight to hell."

The Wildcat "is a far better airplane than the (Japanese) Zero," Donahue said.

P-47 Thunderbolt pilot Earle Craig was on a strafing mission over Japan on Aug. 9, 1945, when there appeared to be "a sunrise at mid-day" on the horizon.

The "vivid and awful orange" was a "truly horrible sight." Craig was referring to the atomic-bomb blast over Nagasaki three days after the Enola Gay, a B-29 Superfortress, dropped an atomic bomb over Hiroshima.

The brilliant light and its destructive power "made us all seem rather humble if not futile," Craig recalled. "Truly, we realized the end of the war was nearby."

Residents complain about helicopter noise from training

CROCKETT (AP) — The thunder of $15 million Army helicopters over rural East Texas has residents here rattled.

About 40 landowners and ranchers attended a town hall meeting at the Houston County Courthouse to tell the Army Reserve that its AH-64 Apache helicopters are spooking their livestock and unnerving their families.

"We were terrorized," said Grapeland resident Truman Tate. "Now my 9-year-old is scared to death when an aircraft comes over."

The Army apologized for the inconvenience, but said they must continue the training over Crockett, which is about 100 miles north of Houston.

Reserve Capt. Joseph Ingignoli, a flight operations officer for the Conroe-based unit conducting the training exercises, appealed to groups' patriotism, noting that the helicopters were instrumental during the Gulf War.

"Most of the things we're doing, alarming you and annoying you, we're doing to avoid getting killed," he said.

The reservists say that while trying to avoid populated areas, they're using parts of 11 rural counties to perform training exercises to prepare pilots for battle.

Twice a month on weekends the reservists play high-tech war games at night to train pilots for combat, he said. Although the helicopters don't carry any laser-guided missiles, they do hover just feet off the ground in "battle positions," using infrared radar to lock on imaginary targets like car engines and cows.

"That's what we're doing when we're hovering," the captain said, "simulating finding targets."

Occasionally, however, helicopters sometimes terrorize cattle and exotic birds like emu and ostriches, causing problems for ranchers.

Reserve Lt. Col. Thad Podbielski, the acting attorney for the 90th Command, told ranchers that the Army reserve would pay fair market value for any livestock or property that is lost or damaged.

Ingignoli asked startled residents not to shine spotlights or shoot guns at the helicopters, as some have done.

Larry Hall, senior aviation official for the 90th U.S. Army Reserve Command, said the pilots "want to fly neighborly."

Hall said that private properties would be added to the Army Reserve's Restricted Area Zones, an area two miles in diameter off-limits to the attack helicopters.

Some pilots, ones the Army refers to as "cowboys," do intentionally break the rules, he said, adding that those pilots would be reprimanded if they're caught.

"If we find out where they are and what they are doing," he said. "We can take very severe actions to the point of taking their wings away."

Champion steer brings record price

HOUSTON (AP) — The grand champion steer of the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo brought a world record price of $500,000, show officials said.

The steer, a black Chianina named Shoop, was shown by Morgan Moylan, 14, of Eastland.

LeRoy and Lucille Melcher, along with Tom and Mary Steele, received a standing ovation for their combined bid when the auction was over.

"Mary and I have a desire to help all of our young people in this state, and everywhere else, for that matter," Steele said in explaining their bid.

Stock show vice president George DeMontrond, also the officer in charge of the steer committee, said the auction records don't represent market value of the animal, but the show's multi-million dollar effort to fund college scholarships for urban and rural students.

"Reserves are a 24-hour operation," Razo said.

Arrest

A 17-year-old Midland man was arrested Saturday after he allegedly broke into a house and sexually assaulted a 12-year-old girl, police reported.

The suspect, who was arrested about noon at Lee Street and Illinios Avenue, is expected to appear before a judge today to have bond set.

The man has been charged with burglary of a habitation with intent to commit a felony: sexual assault, police said.

According to reports, a known man entered the girl's room in a home in the 700 block of South Clay Avenue about 5:25 a.m. Saturday and sexually assaulted her.

The girl was later transported to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center and a warrant was issued for the man, police said.

Theater where Oswald arrest occurred burns

DALLAS (AP) — Six weeks after a grand reopening, the movie theater where Lee Harvey Oswald was arrested in connection with the assassination of President John F. Kennedy was partially gutted by a fire.

A five-alarm five early Saturday collapsed part of the roof and destroyed the screen of the 64-year-old Texas Theatre, one of several local landmarks and museums dedicated the Nov. 22, 1963, assassination.

The fire began around 2: 50 a.m. and was out by daybreak. It did not reach the seating area of the 1,080-seat theater, although about two feet of water pooled on the floor of the pit area in front of the screen.

No injuries were reported, although there was significant water and smoke damage throughout the building, located in the Oak Cliff neighborhood.

The damage, however, was "not irreparable," said Battalion Fire Chief Mike Jones.

The theater was open Friday night for moviegoers. The marquee advertised the movies "Bad Girls" and "Demon Knight."

In the lobby of the theater are glass cases containing newspaper headlines about Oswald's arrest, maps of his reported escape route and other memorabilia.

Several citizens were chasing Oswald down a street near the theater after the body of Dallas police officer J.D. Tippit was found beside his police car.

Exchange leads to murder charges

HOUSTON (AP) — A name scribbled by an 18-year-old woman during her final seconds has led to murder charges filed against a 41-year-old man.

Howard S. Traylor, 41, on probation for a 1992 sexual assault conviction, was still at large Saturday.

He's wanted in the death of Sheeba Abraham, who was shot in the chest about 4:45 p.m. Thursday when she went to exchange information with the driver of a pickup that had bumped her Honda Accord.

Ms. Abraham wrote the man's name on an envelope just before the man reached into his truck and pulled out an automatic pistol and shot at least five times at her and her boyfriend, Santosh Eype, 17, who was not hurt.

The name on the envelope, recovered at the scene, and witness descriptions of the truck and a partial license plate number — which showed the truck was registered to Traylor — led to the charges, said Houston Police Sgt. Mike Peters said.

FAA study aids terminal move

While it obviously was not pleasing to those in Midland who are opposed to construction of a new terminal building at Midland International Airport, a study just released by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) showing that Midland International is expected to double its current number of flights in the next decade has added fuel to the fire of city officials lobbying for a new terminal building.

In fact, according to the FAA study, if the growth anticipated for Midland International occurs, it will make it the ninth most affected airport in the nation in terms of growth in overall number of flights. That would translate to an 80 percent increase in flights into and out of the airport by 2005.

While experiencing more growth than other airports around the country, Midland International will merely be part of an increase in air travel and transportation that is expected to increase the number of air passengers 64 percent by the year 2005 while pushing the number of flights at the nation's largest 100 airports up by 38 percent.

What that growth means is that the new airport building that has been hotly debated in Midland definitely will be needed. In fact, if trade with Mexico increases as a result of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (GATT), a new airport building may be needed even sooner than city officials believe.

The FAA report seems to bolster what Midland city and airport officials have been saying for months — that a new terminal building is needed. And with the anticipated additional flights into and out of Midland International, it would be wiser to build the new terminal before the additional flights and passengers are using the airport.

No doubt the study will not end the difference of opinion between Midlanders over whether the new terminal building is needed. But it does bolster the contention of city officials that building the terminal is the wise thing to do.

GOP reverses, attacks Fourth Amendment

WASHINGTON — Republicans fought the Clinton health-care plan last year by manning the ramparts for the cause of "personal freedom." Can these be the same conservatives who now want to bulldoze the Bill of Rights?

Anderson

Fresh evidence of that reality will be provided this week when the Senate Judiciary Committee holds a hearing with a title only George Orwell could love: "The jury and the search for truth: The case against excluding relevant evidence at trial." In fact, conservatives would undermine the Fourth Amendment, which guarantees the "right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures..."

This constitutional touchstone was rejected as a "technicality" by the House last month when it passed legislation under the "Contract With America" that weakened the exclusionary rule. Because it requires that evidence seized illegally by the police in violation of the Fourth Amendment be excluded at trial, the exclusionary rule is the enforcement mechanism keeping cops honest and citizens safe in their own homes.

Republicans championed these rights when it came to defeating President Clinton's health-care reform plan last year. As they rewrite the Clinton crime bill, however, much of the civil libertarian rhetoric has yielded to rank hypocrisy.

When it comes to protecting corporate rights, some Republicans have been even more active than their rhetoric on personal rights. Many Republicans have had their hands in the pockets of pharmaceutical giants, which is probably why House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., is gunning for the Food and Drug Administration. The FDA, which enforces standards for food and drug products, is one tough cop conservatives despise.

There is other evidence of the influence of special interests in the legislation already passed by House Republicans. The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms — which has long been the nemesis of the National Rifle Association — would be prohibited from using evidence obtained in a warrantless search. Likewise the Internal Revenue Service.

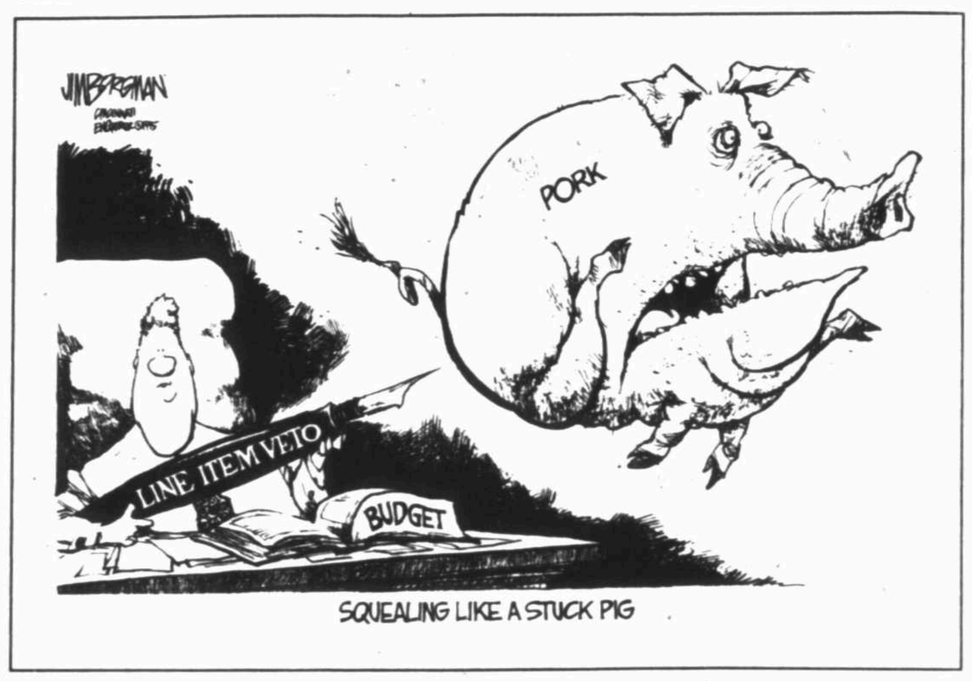

The current assault on the exclusionary rule is mandated more by pollsters than prosecutors. The GOP is trying to capitalize on public opinion polls showing crime eclipsing the economy as the biggest perceived problem facing the country. Even so, there is scant evidence to suggest that dangerous criminals are set free because of Fourth Amendment protections. Despite the lack of a groundswell from law enforcement for a change in the exclusionary rule, the GOP is pressing ahead. While there are varying proposals, most Republicans want a "good faith exception" to the Fourth Amendment enacted into law — explicitly allowing prosecutors to use evidence in court that was seized without warrant by the police.

The ACLU sees the "good faith" exception to the exclusionary rule as an "invitation to police abuse of the core protections of the Fourth Amendment.... The inevitable result will be an increase in the number of warrantless searches and a decrease in the privacy rights of all Americans."

The House wants to put law enforcement across the country on the honor system — so evidence can be gathered in warrantless searches as long as an officer acted "reasonably." But even under current law, evidence can be seized without a warrant if police are in hot pursuit, or if evidence is about to be destroyed.

Fiddling with the Fourth Amendment ought to be a crime.

SQUEALING LIKE A STUCK PIG

GEORGE WILL

Specter has high, if unrealistic, hopes for '96

WASHINGTON — The arrival here in January of the Republican congressional majorities reportedly coincided with a surge in demand for dry martinis at the better sort of bars. And the day Congress convened, meat toppings outsold vegetable toppings eight to one at Domino's Pizza stores, twice the ratio recorded when Democrats controlled Congress.

Will

So Republicans are gin-swilling carnivores. This does not require revision of stereotypes. But the image of Republicans will be radically altered if Pennsylvania Sen. Arlen Specter wins the party's presidential nomination.

Will he? Consider just one of many problems. The Republican nominating electorate, which is more conservative than the party as a whole (and the party is more homogeneously conservative than ever), is not apt to nominate one of the six Republican senators who opposed President Reagan's nomination of Robert Bork to the Supreme Court. Do Republicans remember that? Many do; the rest will be reminded.

Why is Specter running? He is running because he thinks he can win by rescuing Republicans from what he calls "the fringe," meaning supporters of the two Pats — Robertson and Buchanan. But if the menace is, as Specter describes it, "the far right 5 percent," how much rescuing does the other 95 percent need?

So far, Specter has all to himself the constituency of Republicans for whom abortion rights is the only issue. Perhaps he should wonder more than he seems to about why he has that group to himself. Speaking to The New Republic's Ruth Shalit, an excitable Specter aide exults, "Forty-three percent of Republicans in New Hampshire say they will vote for a pro-choice candidate. ... If we get 43 percent of the vote, where do we finish. ... That's right! We're first! By big numbers."

But what The Boston Globe poll actually said is that 53, not 43 percent will be "more inclined" to vote for a candidate who favors abortion rights. That inclination is a weak reed on which to rest a candidacy.

The campaign will practice "niche marketing" of Specter to pro-abortion single-issue Republicans in Iowa and New Hampshire while the other candidates, all pro-life, splinter the right-to-life constituency. Then when Specter becomes one of the three survivors of those first two states, the campaign will stress Specter the crimebuster, the former prosecutor and district attorney who wants more prisons and busier death chambers.

A campaign memo outlining Specter's glittering prospects stresses things like: 60 percent of Florida's Republican voters are retirees from Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York; and Ohio, Michigan and Illinois are "large industrial states similar to Pennsylvania," and in California's 1992 Republican Senate primary "a moderate" only narrowly lost to "a right-winger." Not persuaded? Here are two more reasons not to be.

First, few Republicans who favor abortion rights really think those rights are in peril. The Supreme Court as currently constituted will not overturn Roe v. Wade, and if the court ever did, thereby restoring abortion to the status of a practice states could regulate, regulations probably would reflect the current majority support for basic abortion rights. When Republicans controlled the Senate for six years in the 1980s, they brought to a vote only the mildest constitutional amendment pertaining to abortion (it would not have proscribed abortion; it would only have permitted states to set their own policies) and it fell 18 votes short.

Second, the implied premise of Specter's campaign is market failure — supposedly the Republican political market is inexplicably not supplying something ("moderate" presidential candidates) for which there is strong demand.

It almost seems that there have been more names for the species of Republicans that Specter is courting than there currently are members of the species. However, he is going to test the "moderates in the woodwork" theory, the notion that there are lots of stay-at-home moderates, waiting for their sort of fellow. The result is apt to be a theory slain by facts.

George Will's column is distrubuted by Washinton Post Writers Group.

ANOTHER VIEW

Blame for Somalia can be widely shared

Little fanfare attends the efforts this week (Feb. 27) of U.S. Marines helping to evacuate the last U.N. forces from Somalia.

Two years ago and one beach away, 26,000 American troops waded ashore in a televised spectacular meant to symbolize a new humanitarian vocation for the U.S. military after the end of the cold war.

Nobody wants to talk about that symbolism now. Somalia, including the death of 30 Americans, has become a cautionary example of a mercy mission gone wrong, cited mainly by those who would keep Americans out of future peacekeeping.

The story of international intervention in Somalia is not as negative as conventional wisdom holds.

Yes, with the departure of the last U.N. troops, anarchy and civil war are quickly returning.

Idealistic assumptions, ill-conceived expansion of the mission and fatal confusions over command and control marred military operations. They cost the lives of 100 peacekeepers and several hundred Somalis as the focus shifted from delivering food to hunting down Gen. Mohammed Farah Aidid.

But this time the fighting has not engulfed the food supply, so it is unlikely the deadly starvation that inspired international action will soon return. Some 350,000 Somalis died of hunger before President Bush sent the first American troops in December 1992. Perhaps 250,000 more were saved by the Americans and the U.N. forces that followed.

Lessons need to be learned from the many mistakes made by Washington and the United Nations. But the painful Somalia experience warrants tempered pride, not shame. The appropriate conclusion is to proceed with greater caution in future humanitarian emergencies.

Americans want to help when they see people starving. It is a human impulse. Sometimes soldiers can and should provide the help. But the need for soldiers instead of relief workers usually means the humanitarian crisis cannot be solved without subduing military conflict first.

Before political leaders send troops into these situations, they need to analyze the risks, define a mission that can be accomplished at acceptable costs and then honestly explain the decision to the American people and seek Congressional approval.

None of that ground was adequately covered for the Somalia operation by the Bush administration, which launched it, or the Clinton administration, which expanded it. American mistakes were compounded by U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, who allowed the United Nations to become embroiled in local clan feuds, compromising its neutrality.

The worst errors were made by the U.N. Security Council. With the enthusiastic participation of the United States, it hastily converted a food delivery operation into an ambitious and ultimately futile exercise in nation-building, coupled with a search-and-destroy war against Aidid.

Blame for the mistakes of Somalia can be widely shared. But so can credit for the larger good that was done, and now seems all but forgotten.

Precautions can prevent next Singapore sling

WASHINGTON — In Singapore last year, 27-year-old Nick Leeson was fined $140 for indecently exposing himself before a group of women in a discotheque.

Safire

But when he was running up $27 billion in financial-derivative trades that bankrupted a venerable merchant bank, what did the see-no-evil regulators of Simex, Singapore's swinging stock exchange, do? They shyly looked the other way.

"It would be much harder, nearly impossible, to work that kind of conspiracy in New York than in Singapore," says David Shulman, chief equity strategist at Salomon Brothers.

He cautions against making the new form of gambling the scapegoat for recent huge losses.

I have had my ear bent with how wonderful derivatives can be in sharing risk, and how swaps and hedges now bestraddling the financial world insure global traders against currency swings.

Wall Streeters pass along dire warnings about "disturbing the cosmic rhythms of the universe"; about regulation driving up the cost of hedging's insurance. And there's quavering in the Quadriad about triggering fearsome credit contraction by slowing the derivatives' merry-go-round.

But it strikes me, after the sudden ruination of London's Barings bank by its Singapore slinger in a simple index-option gamble, that our financial sages are being a little too cool and comfortable.

Gerald Corrigan, former head of the New York Fed now with Goldman, Sachs, has a neat way of accepting Establishment soothing syrup and then pouring it down the drain: "Derivatives reduce the statistical probability of a systemic financial disruption," he tells me, "but with the complexity, speed, interdependence and leverage growing out of financial derivatives — if you do have a systemic disruption, they would make it far more damaging than it otherwise would have been."

Translation: Although the new gambling may reduce the odds on a bust, it would turn any bust that does come into a global debacle. His Derivatives Policy Group, a suggestion of SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt, issues a report next week.

But too many old guys don't know what the young guys are doing, or how to stop them before one huge loss gets computer-driven into a chain reaction that wipes out wealth, reputation and jobs.

What to do about a danger we can sense but do not comprehend?

First, investment bankers owe it to customers, owners and trainees to do a thorough "values check."

Their economic purpose is to assemble capital and provide it wisely for business development, an honorable service in which they can take pride and make profit.

Their purpose is not to use inside expertise gained from companies they underwrite to trade for their own accounts, while advising investment clients to follow them along and enhance their early positions.

Such "proprietary activity," as this dog-wagging by the trading tail is euphemized, is legal but dishonorable — the banking equivalent of "honest graft" in politics. If the me-first, corporate-cultural sleaziness of high leverage and lightning-fast shuffling continues to grow, the business of investment banking will gain a stigma that will shame its practitioners and turn away its customers.

Next, in overseeing banking and securities, global exchanges and national regulators need to draw a line between legitimate risk and reckless endangerment.

That means getting the Bank for International Settlements in Basle, Switzerland (central bank for the G-10), to sit down with the International Organization of Securities Commissions in Montreal to plan now to avert a world financial crisis.

Working with the exchanges and reporting services, these too-sleepy bureaucracies could help set standards for managerial monitoring, public disclosure, leverage and firewalls in the interconnected marketplace.

They could stimulate the creation of regulatory software to counter trading software, making transparent to accountants and regulators who is trading how much on whose account and on what margin.

My sources in the bourses say that's how to defeat secrecy in Singapore and combat rogue traders everywhere.

Response to Smith's 'Speaking Out': Amen

Budget cuts will have devastating effect

At a time when 15.7 million American children are poor, 9 million children lack health care, tens of thousands are homeless, and a classroom of children is killed every two days by gunfire, Congress' rush to pass massive and indiscriminate budget cuts will have a devastating effect on our children and our future. In all areas of the "Contract With America" children would suffer the greatest losses especially those who are unlucky enough to be poor.

The local, state, and national offices of the Association for the Education of Young Children (WTAEYC, TAEYC, and NAEYC) along with the Children's Defense Fund (CDF) are calling for defeat of all congressional proposals that will unfairly balance the budget on the backs of children. The majority of these proposals recklessly dismantle decades of child protection programs without adequate debate, facts, or analysis of human consequences.

Congress needs to slow down, lay out the facts and consequences of their actions for the American people. While the American people voted for change, and for less government, they did not vote for callous government or to hurt millions of children.

Funeral procession has some close calls

My family roots have been tied to Odessa and Midland since the early 1930s and today many of my family are buried in both Midland and Odessa. Our family continues to grow and prosper here in the Permian Basin and we support our communities in a variety of ways. We have experienced a problem that must be resolved between our two cities.

I had the unfortunate occasion to attend my aunt's funeral recently and to make a bad situation worse was a failure of our two cities to ensure the safety of our family and friends during the transit from the ceremony to gravesite! Please allow me to explain.

After the funeral ceremony at our church the funeral procession was to transit to the gravesite in Midland. Odessa police escorted us without incident to the city limits where we were on our own. I was concerned about the lack of coordination between our cities and rightfully so! The long procession, grieving loved ones, and the lack of courtesy from some of the public was a formula for disaster! By the grace of God there were none, just a few close calls.

Later I discussed the matter with the funeral director and was appalled to learn that the two cities have charged for this public service and routinely do not coordinate for a funeral procession's safety. I and my family find this very disturbing and certainly this matter needs to be brought to the attention of the citizens of both Midland and Odessa and their city leaders.

The safety, common courtesy, and the longstanding tradition of respect for its citizens is reason enough for our two cities to ensure that grieving families can put their loved ones to rest without the fear of attending another funeral all too soon!

Terminal is needed for safety, expansion

The planned new terminal building at Midland International Airport (MAF) continues to be the subject of letters and talk around town, as well it should be since excellent commercial air service is the cornerstone of Midland's past and its future.

Leading architectural and engineering firms, working with city management, airport staff and the Airport Advisory Board, have developed a "state of the art" facility incorporating advances in function, design and security from new airports around the USA.

MAF is the ninth busiest airport in Texas, averaging around 51,000 boardings per month (up from 45,000 boardings just 15 months ago), and this number is growing. After having served on the Airport Advisory Board for six years when these plans were being developed, I strongly believe we should build this new facility for safety, for future expansion and to stay ahead of our competition in Lubbock, Amarillo and El Paso.

The Passenger Facility Charge (PFC— $3 per ticket) and FAA grants, plus airline landing fees, concession fees and parking fees, present us with a unique opportunity to finance this new facility. Please Note: FAA funds for renovation would be limited because FAA does not participate in funding projects that are considered maintenance projects. Also, no PFC funds have been approved for renovating the existing facility. Also please note: Over 60 percent of enplanements are generated by passengers not residing in Midland, so the users will be paying for this facility, not Midland residents.

The naysayers have always been wrong about Midland. In spite of tough economic times over the past decade Midland-Odessa has grown and should continue to grow in the future, but to do so we must have first-class air service. Let's go forward and build this new facility, which will carry us well into the 21st century.

Gingrich's following resembles KGB element

Forces on the Hill are hard at work attempting to turn back the clock on society to the pre-civil rights days of the 1960s. Every social program designed to benefit the undesirable elements (politically and socially correct term for ethnic minorities) of America. Never mind that the Constitution guarantees the promotion of the general welfare of America. These forces are bent on taking punitive measures on the undesirable elements due these forces, characterizing them with membership in the losing party.

These zealots of better government attack the weak and defenseless because they lack the lobbyist, PACs, and voice in government.

I believe Charley Reese was not far off the mark when he paralleled Gingrich to Gorbachev but did not go far enough. Gingrich's actions along with his Newtoid following resemble more a KGB element than a democratic form of government.

If this gestapo entourage is really bent on reforming government why don't they take a look at the Defense Department who cannot account for over 250 billion tax dollars. Maybe the trail will lead to them or one of their cronies.

I believe this group should take up the motto of how their form of governing will impact us all — "a little dab will do ya!"

Country needs moral leader to uplift people

When Joycelyn Elders have been "ousted" from the office of surgeon general, I felt relieved. President Clinton finally has come to his senses, but now that Dr. Henry Foster is being considered for the position, I could not help but wonder, Is this country running out of good doctors? A doctor by virtue of his profession is bound by his oath to preserve and uphold life. If there is anybody unfit for an office, it is a man of inconsistencies and of contradictions.

In my country of origin, doctors who perform abortions indiscriminately are people who barely made it in the medical field. Doctors whose licenses have been revoked by virtue of unethical conduct. And likewise doctors who are in the field for the money and nothing else. I like to believe it goes with this country. I know abortion here is legal but it does not make it moral. There is a big difference between what is acceptable and what is morally right and wrong. Deep in our hearts, we all know that, and if we cannot distinguish both the more there is a great need for this country for a moral leader who would uplift and enlighten people and not pull them into the gutter. A leader who sees men not merely as sexual reproductive beings but a man of body and soul. A leader should be like a mother in the strict sense of the word who would emphasize to her children in words and deeds about the value of eating good foods to nourish the body so as to be fit for work, pray and play. A mother who would inspire her children to pursue higher goals, teaching them to be a neighbor to a person in need.

This country in other words to be great again needs godly leaders. Leaders who will introduce God in every controversial issue to be tackled because when God has been denied everything becomes permissible.

Writer uses tragedy to further own agenda

I cannot tell you how horrified I was to read the letter in Sunday's paper regarding the need for sex education in school.

Not being a parent myself, I really have no strong opinion on this issue, but have always been more in favor of these programs than against.

What I find absolutely revolting about this letter was the writer's use of a recent tragedy to further her own agenda. Surely she did not mean to imply that this tragedy could have been avoided had the child received classes in sex education, or that even a fraction of the blame should lie with anyone but the monster who committed this crime. Further, did she have the permission of the child's mother to use her daughter's name in this manner? It has been said that death takes away all right to privacy. I find this one of the worst obscenities.

Common sense is far more brilliant

I would like to respond to the letter by Raymond Bill (Letters, Feb. 19). His letter implied that those people who are "uneducated" are pro-life, and that the more "educated" are pro-choice. You do not have to be a doctor to know that the fetus is a human being. You do not have to be a historian to know that the Supreme Court made law with their decision of Roe vs. Wade. You do not have to be an attorney to realize that under the Constitution the fetus should be due the same protection and rights that the rest of us enjoy. So my "educated" opinion is that Bill's letter proves that common sense is far more brilliant than educated rationalizations.

Important decisions were made behind doors

As a concerned landowner who lives within the affected area surrounding the 58-acre tract of land located on Midland Drive, south of Loop 250, I attended a meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 22, in which the existing plans for a new shopping center were presented. First, while it is not my intent to reflect on the ethics of city government, it has always been my belief that city employees, as all employees, have a responsibility to the employers. I feel that these persons should have, at the very least, reflected a neutral attitude to the proposal presented. I found myself listening to a "song-and-dance" routine that pretty much stated that this reasoning is a "done deal." It is apparent several important decisions have been made behind closed doors, without truly canvassing the parties who will ultimately pay the price for this reasoning.

It is of further concern to myself that we are so intent with expediting the economic intents of a development group that exhorts the idea that in any retail (economic) expansion that someone has to lose (give up) something. I do not believe those property owners surrounding the proposed shopping center find any consolation in providing for Midland's good, when staring at the potential property value drops when a large retail operation is placed in their front or backyards. I also do not feel that the parties east of the proposed shopping center will be particularly amused with the influx of water from the area to be put under asphalt. Granted, the developer plans on increasing the size of the impoundment area in front of the new development, and the city promises that, in its own time, it will improve drainage capacity on the east of Midland Drive, but the bottom line is that there will still be more water moved to the east. I find it interesting that property owners in the east, adjacent to Midkiff Road, were not asked their opinion on these changes!

As a final concern, as one who lives on the east side of Midland Drive, I find this move on rezoning quite disquieting. When purchasing my property, I carefully examined the zoning of all surrounding undeveloped properties. After discovering that all these were zoned for single-unit housing, I bought. Now I am assured by Madam Councilwoman that there is no possibility that the undeveloped properties on the east side of Midland Drive will be zoned as commercial. I take little reassurance in this promise. As a result of the rezoning, these properties are of little or no use as single-family residential properties and must therefore be continually vacant, or sometime in the future be rezoned commercial or multi-unit housing. I find the latter possibility much more a logical occurrence than the first.

Readers' views on: Handicap curb modifications

Mulloy's views are correct on curbing

In the Feb. 25 paper an article appeared regarding J.W. Mulloy's views on corner curbing for the access of handicapped people and the cost of an estimated $350,000 for the state to provide the work performed on these corners. Statewide cost $62,000,000. Wow! Only for a compliance? Why spend our monies on foolishness as this? When these walks are rarely used. Downtown is a different story. In this area I will agree there is a need for sloped curbing. But out there?

1. Many streets along Cuthbert to Golf Course Rd. don't even have sidewalks. Should we furnish the sidewalks too?
2. Very, very seldom have I seen a disabled person wheel around these areas before or now that sloped curbing is available.
3. Mulloy's views on the other uses is most correct. But why not spend our monies on limbs, wheelchairs, transportation for these individuals, which is needed mostly.

What a waste of money. I mean what a waste. Should we give the go-ahead on Andrews Highway, Midkiff Rd., Midland Drive? Come on. As for my and Mulloy's views on this matter, and anyone else's opinion, let's spend our money more wisely Midland. Do you not agree?

Letter proves opposite of open-minded view

This letter is in response to J.W. Mulloy's letter on Feb. 26.

Mulloy obviously considers himself "an open-minded person who has no undue desire to cause anyone difficulty." His letter proved quite the opposite. He lacks compassion, patience, and complete understanding.

Most people in their lives have said these words: "That can't happen to me." Obviously a handicap situation has not touched their lives. I suggest Mulloy use a wheelchair for one day in downtown Midland before complaining about this "unreasonable, useless, and wasted project."

Mulloy is underestimating the importance of being able to live life the way everyone else can. This is not about special treatment or services. It is about being independent and responsible for ourselves.

Jocelyn Williams
Midland

Views would change quickly if restricted

While visiting Midland for several days I happened to read a letter to the editor concerning the renovation of street corners. I was appalled at J.W. Mulloy's lack of understanding of the importance of the American Disabilities Act.

It is very obvious to me he has never been in a situation where his freedom of movement has been restricted. If he spent one day in a wheelchair in downtown Midland I'm sure he would change his viewpoint very quickly.

Handicapped individuals deserve every freedom and liberty that is afforded every person. It is not unreasonable for them to expect actions to be taken so they may enoy their freedom and independence.

This is one of the few government projects I support wholeheartedly and believe a majority of the public supports. Possibly Mulloy will change his viewpoint on this subjuect and try to be a little more open-minded.

Alternative fuels help reduce country's air pollution

By Barry Williamson

"Growing concern about the environment and our country's dependence on petroleum from unstable areas of the world have hastened the development of new domestic sources of power for vehicles and new vehicle technologies."

Williamson

So begins a chapter in "Taking an Alternative Route," a U.S. Department of Energy publication on alternative fuels. The importance of alternative vehicle fuels to reducing air pollution is clear. What isn't clear is that other aspect: "dependence on petroleum from unstable areas." Over-reliance on fuel sources not under U.S. control threatens national security, contributes to our nation's trade imbalance and harms our domestic energy industry.

It's a problem we need to face — and soon. American Petroleum Institute figures show that in 1994, for the first time, oil imports exceeded 50 percent of the petroleum consumed in the United States. This is no surprise. Texas energy producers have known for years this day was coming.

Like most Texans, you may assume the Lone Star State is energy-independent. Unfortunately, that's not true. If current trends continue, by the year 2000, Texas will import more fuel that it produces. We already import coal. Petroleum and natural gas are next.

Unless we make a change. Today is a good day to start.

March 2 was Texas Independence Day. As chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, the state's chief energy agency, I'd like to declare this day Texas Energy Independence Day.

Unfortunately, it usually takes the threat of war in the Middle East to make us focus on our country's efforts to become more energy independent. I hope Texas Energy Independence Day does the same job in a peaceful way. I encourage the oil and gas industry to continue to pursue energy independence, including seeking new sources and investing in technology that will enable us to get the most from known sources.

Part of the commemoration of Texas Energy Independence Day is the grand opening of a unique filling station in downtown Austin. The station is sponsored by the state primarily for public fleet vehicles. It's special because it dispenses only clean-burning, Texas-produced propane and compressed natural gas.

We also launched March 2 prime-time television spots to inform viewers across Texas about the environmental benefits of alternative fuels for cars, trucks and buses. Alternative fuels can cut emissions of smog-forming substances dramatically. Alternative-fueled vehicles are now exempt from public emissions inspection across the nation.

What can a consumer do to bring energy independence closer? One way is to choose domestic fuel alternatives whenever possible, including natural gas or propane. Natural gas is nature's cleanest fossil fuel, with the added benefit of reduced vehicle maintenance. It's half the price of gasoline, and supplies are stable. Better yet, virtually all natural gas used in the U.S. is produced here.

More than 95 percent of the propane consumed in the United States is domestic or produced by our trade partners Canada and Mexico. About a third of the U.S. production total is produced in Texas, and we haven't tapped our full capacity. Propane has been used for generations in home heating, cooking, agricultural weed control, camping and a host of other applications. Unlike some fuel alternatives, propane has a well-established refueling infrastructure and exhaustively tested safety standards. As we search for ways to effectively use all our domestic energy resources, clean-burning propane deserves fresh consideration.

When you fill your tank with gasoline or use electricity produced by coal or oil, you can't be sure whether the energy came from Texas, Wyoming or Iran. Whenever you use propane or natural gas to fuel your vehicle, you can be virtually certain that every dime you're paying for it goes back into the U.S. economy.

Dependence on foreign oil threatens the very freedom we Texans celebrate today.

Barry Williamson, formerly of Midland, is chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish 'open' letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, 79702 or you may fax to 682-3793.

HONOR: Masons give award to Baskin began in 1953 when she and her husband, Judge Pat Baskin, moved to Midland.

"We sort of fell in love with the community," Mrs. Baskin said. The Baskins chose Midland as their new home because the people here exhibited a more "Western" sense of community and of working together — a trait of looking at the city and saying, "What do we need to do? Let's do it," she said.

Over the years, Mrs. Baskin has volunteered for a number of community service programs and has even been asked to volunteer her time at the University of Texas at Austin, where she once studied.

Most recently, Mrs. Baskin has spearheaded a task force that has effectively dealt with the problem of child-care services for working parents.

An introspective study, funded by local governmental entities, identified a problem in affordable child care for working parents. Mrs. Baskin and her group has managed to find funding sources, such as local charitable foundations, and managed to get school-aged care givers trained through the Campfire Girls & Boys organization and the YMCA.

Working with the Midland Independent School District, these trained personnel now care for young students at 13 elementary school campuses until their parents pick them up after work.

"It was kind of like bringing a marriage of six people to the altar," she said of her efforts at coordinating the program.

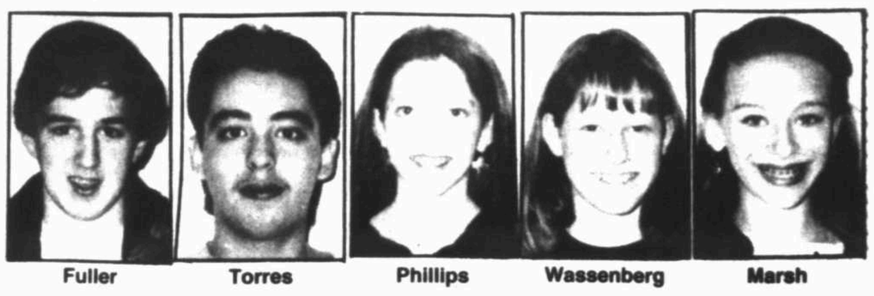

The after-school child-care program is provided on an ability-to-pay basis with a number of foundations, corporations and individuals providing money for "scholarships" to pay for the after-school day care.

Mayor threatens to shut off town's lights

ENCINAL (AP) — The mayor is threatening to shut off the street lights in this small South Texas town to force residents to pay a monthly user fee for garbage and light service.

Mayor Roy Salinas already has suspended the tiny city's municipal garbage pickup. And unless he gets his way, he promises to order Central Power and Light to shut off the street lights, too.

The problem, Salinas says, is that although everybody in the town of about 600 people pays their water bills, many have been less faithful about forking over the $13 charged for monthly garbage pickup and street light illumination by the Encinal Water Supply Corp., the private, non-profit corporation that also provides Encinal's water.

Salinas sees that as no way for the city settled in 1759 to get ahead in the 21st century.

"We need to have all of our utilities paid on the same bill," he said.

Salinas began trying to force them to pay on Wednesday when he suspended garbage pickup.

Residents have responded by throwing out their household rubbish either in clandestine sites in or outside the city limits or by simply burning it.

"On a hot, windless day, the smoke of burning garbage hangs stinking over Encinal," the mayor complained.

A CPL spokesman in Laredo said crews could show up as early as Monday to turn out the lights.

The mayor is using water service as the leverage the city needs to collect fees for municipal waste collection and street lighting.

"That way, if someone withholds their payment for garbage or electricity, we can shut the water off to their home," Salinas said.

But Marcelo Flores, manager of the water supply corporation, said water service should not be held hostage to gain garbage or electricity payments.

"We got quite a pot of stew here," said Flores.

He contends the battle also threatens a $2.25 million building project planned by the nonprofit corporation to give Encinal a new water well and sewer system.

Flores said most of that project's funding comes from federal and state grants, which may be withdrawn if they are not used soon.

The water supply corporation has met with Salinas. So far, nothing has been worked out.

"He basically says that either we do it his way or no way at all," Flores said.

Bless their hearts, these little old ladies don't want to be out there driving anymore than we want to get stuck behind them, especially while cruising at the breathtaking speed of 15 mph. If you play your cards right and dye your hair blonde, it'll just be a matter of weeks before you can become a "Miss I always wanted to race at the Indy 500 but never got a chance so I'll just make up for it now" kind of person. Just remember, though, you've got to look good and keep that pedal to the metal.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

By Sandra Wegner

There have been some changes at Centennial Branch Library. The Friends of the Library provided the funds and our Friends volunteer decorator, Shirley Gist, provided the direction for the project.

New carpet has been laid in the children's area; some walls have been painted; and the finishing touches are going on the wall. This is not a complete refurbishing but it should erase much of the wear of almost 10 years of public service.

Named for our community's 100th anniversary celebration in 1985, Centennial Branch Library opened at Midland Park Mall in the fall of that year. From the beginning the library collection has concentrated on children's books and popular adult fiction and non-fiction.

Not large in size, the branch has been limited in service and types of materials offered. The staff does work to provide reference assistance based on their small collection.

A library for the book person, the branch will soon add a new media to its offerings. The Friends have given $4,000 to start a collection of books-on-tape for the Branch. Staffers are now in the process of putting together that collection.

Because the libraries provide courier service between the downtown library and the Branch, books may be renewed or returned at either library. Books may also be reserved at either library and picked up at either library. Courier service runs three times weekly.

Making puppets from paper bags is the craft time scheduled for March at the downtown library's Children's Department.

Set for March 11, at 2:30 p.m., this session is for children ages 6 through 9. Pre-registration is not necessary.

The Friends of the Library recently gave this department several gifts: two new CD-ROM programs, a special set of volumes on countries of the world, two tape players, various promotional materials and a new book cart.

January was a busy month for the Children's Department. Over 15,000 children's materials were checked out and over 400 children attended special programs or tours.

Teachers, homeschool parents and children's group leaders may schedule special story times and/or tours of the department by calling 688-8991.

Despite CD-ROM and on-line computer data, the downtown library still relies on microfilm and microfiche as resources.

The Friends of the Library have given the downtown library a new reader-printer. This is the third reader-printer they have provided the library in the past year-and-a-half. These enable patrons to get printed copies of text information on microfilm and microfiche.

Another generous gift of the C.W. Duncan Foundation, plus Friends funds, has enabled the library to also purchase a new microfilm reader.

The largest single group of microfilm that the library owns is over 2100 reels of census microfilm in the Redfern Genealogy Research Center. Other examples of library microfilm and microfiche are a complete set of Society of Petroleum Engineers Technical Papers, 16 years of the Wall Street Journal, the last five years of the Federal Register, the Reporter-Telegram since 1929 and 25 years of the New York Times.

The Friends of the Library are blessed (or plagued) with a big supply of National Geographics to sell as used magazines in the foyer of the downtown library. Children with reports that could include these wonderful pictures should consider that source. Just use the library's index, decide which issue is needed and see if that issue is for sale. Our wonderful Friends' volunteer, Ed Gorence, keeps them in order so finding the right issue isn't difficult. Magazine donors have asked if the Friends will come pick up their donations. The Friends do not have the manpower to pick up magazines and since the publications are sold at 10 cents each, it isn't economically feasible. The Friends appreciate your donations and ask that you please continue to recycle your magazines for the library's benefit. General interest magazines sell best, particularly women's. Proceeds are used for library promotional materials and equipment.

Sandra Wegner is director of Midland County Library.

Chaps fall in first round, 97-85

■ Changing of guard takes place as three WJCAC teams fall to North Texas JCAC in opening round of Starburst JUCO tourney.

By Bill Petitt
Sports Writer

WACO — A changing of the guard took place in the world of Texas junior college basketball here Saturday.

The shift of power swung from the west to the north as Midland College dropped a first round game for the first time ever as Temple Junior College rallied for a one-point halftime deficit to knock the Chaps out of the Starburst Junior College Basktball Championships with a convincing 97-85 win here at the Ferrell Center.

Baker

Midland, which was 13-0 in Region V first round games prior to Saturday, ends its season at 22-7 while Temple improves to 16-14, despite having had to forfeit four games earlier in the year due to the play of an ineligible player.

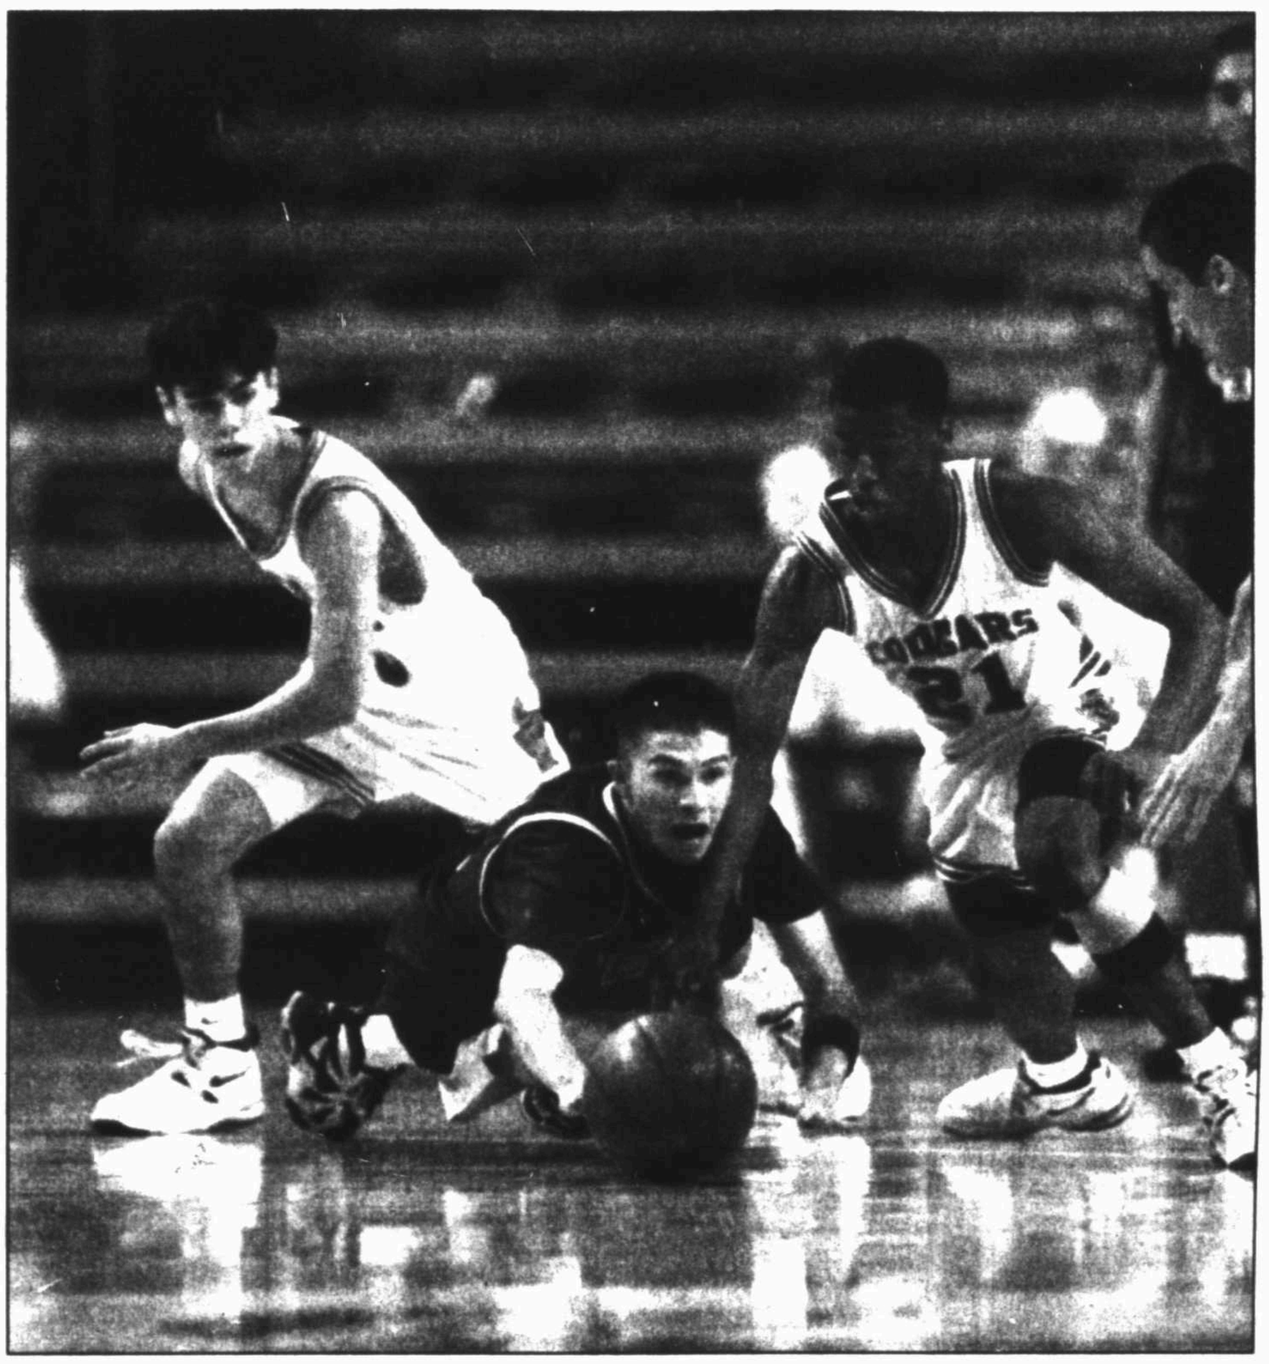

"I'm just tickled to death for our conference," said elated Temple coach Kirby Johnson after three of the four teams from the North Texas JCAC defeated the Western Junior College Athletic Conference. "We don't get a lot of respect around the state. The East and West get a lot, and deservedly so, but I don't think our conference has ever won three games in the opening round before."

Earlier in the tournament, Odessa College squandered an 18-point lead with 10 minutes to play to fall 64-63 to Hill College. McLennan blasted South Plains 108-86 on Friday. Only WJCAC member New Mecico Junior College survived the opening round with an easy win over Collin County and will meet Temple today at 8 p.m in one semifinal matchup.

"I thought the key to the game was our press," said Johnson. "We got some steals off of our press under our own basket. We not only got a steals, but turned them into immediate points."

That press picked up the tempo of the game as Temple scored 65 second half points. Twenty of those points

El Paso Riverside's Ruben Rodriguez, center, loses control of the ball and tries to recover it as Abilene Cooper's Kareem Mitchell (21) and Eric Honeycutt, left, close in. Riverside ends title drought

■ El Paso Riverside defeats Abilene Cooper 48-45, becomes first El Paso team since 1976 to win Region I-5A basketball and advance to state tournament.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

El Paso has waited a long time for the Riverside Rangers to come along.

Riverside defeated District 4-5A champion Abilene Cooper, 48-45, at Chaparral Center Saturday afternoon to win the Region I basketball championship to become the first El Paso team since 1976 to earn a Class 5A Final Four berth in Austin.

El Paso Eastwood was the last to turn the trick and the Troopers won the state championship in 1976 before the days of two or three teams from each district making the playoffs. It is also the second year in a row for a district runnerup team to win the Region I crown. Midland High won it last year as a runnerup and the Rangers were the District 2-5A runnerup this year.

"It feels pretty darn good," said Riverside coach Jim Forbes, a former UTEP great and 1972 Olympic basketball team member. "1976 is a long time ago. It's nice to be the one to break the bad streak."

This could go down as one of the ugliest Region I finals in Midland history. Riverside brings home the win with a 38.2 percent shooting eye from the field while Cooper managed only 35.7 percent.

"Both teams had a bad case of the nerves," Forbes said. "It was the first chance for either team to get to the Final Four and you could tell that it was playing on the players."

The Rangers led the whole game until Cooper took a 43-41 lead with 1:21 left to

Hailey gets nod as 4-5A hoops MVP

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland High senior Jumon Hailey said recently that he would feel like this season would be a bust if his basketball Bullodogs didn't go back to the state tournament in Austin.

Hailey

Well, the Bulldogs didn't make that trip again, falling in the area playoffs to El Paso Irvin, but Hailey will be taking with him one huge accomplishment.

Hailey has been named the Most Valuable Player in District 4-5A by the league coaches, who picked the 4-5A All-District basketball team.

Hailey averaged just under 23 points per game and set Midland High's single game scoring record of 43 points against Abilene High. He also had a 38-point game, tying former Bulldog great Herbert Johnson for the single game mark before his record setting performance.

Midland High, the 4-5A runnerup, dominated the first team selections as three more Bulldogs received first team honors. They were 5-8 guard Cornelius Mitchell, 5-11 guard Lavius Taylor and 5-10 guard John Marc Sanon. All three are seniors.

Sophomore Jessica Moss delivered a two-run double in the bottom of the sixth inning at the Bill Williams Softball Complex Saturday afternoon to hand Midland High's softball team a historic 4-2 victory over Odessa Permian.

The win was Midland High's first District 6-5A softball victory in its history as the Lady Bulldogs climbed to 1-2 in the league's first competitive season.

"I didn't look at it that way (being the first district win ever by an MHS team), but I guess that's right," said MHS softball coach Sherri Culwell. "I know we'll take it against a good Permian team that always comes ready to play."

With the game knotted at 2-2 going into the bottom of the sixth, MHS put Heather Klein and Jamee Stennett on base with Moss coming to the plate. Moss may not have a nose for history, but she sure act-

Madsen makes sure Lee boys win final soccer game

By Mike Butts
Sports Writer

The man with the green shoes and the yellow cards has played his last soccer game for Midland Lee. Denmark foreign exchange student Henrik Madsen ended the Rebels year with two goals in a 3-2 shootout win over Abilene Cooper Saturday at Lee.

The Rebel program should continue to grow next year under first-year head coach John McCulloch.

But they'll do it without Madsen, who had 15 of Lee's 40 goals this year. And they'll be left wondering if they could have made the playoffs this season if Madsen hadn't missed three games with his accumulation of yellow cards. The Rebels finish their year at 5-7 in District 5-5A, 7-9 overall.

Northwest wind blows opponents' way in MHS soccer loss

By Tom Ruiz
MRT Correspondent

The northwest wind that blew across the Midland High soccer field became the Abilene Lady Eagles best friend Saturday as they blew past the Lady Bulldogs 3-0 in a District 5-5A contest.

The loss drops Midland to 2-9 in district and 4-9 overall. The win gives Abilene a 7-4 district record and 11-5 for the season.

More importantly, Abilene remains in the hunt for a playoff spot, a win against Odessa High Tuesday will put the Lady Eagles into post-season play.

Midland entered the game with vengeance in their hearts. In their first district meeting with Abilene, the Lady Dogs felt they were shortchanged in their 2-1 defeat at Abilene.

"The girls felt they were robbed of the game up there," Midland High coach Scott Hodkinson said. "They were really pumped up for this one because they wanted it so bad."

But the 20-25 mph wind became MHS' main foe.

Trying to take advantage of the situa-

ed like it with a double to center to plate the winning runs.

"I was thinking I just had to hit the ball," Moss said. "When you have two strikes, you have to protect the plate and be careful what you swing at. I saw the chance to turn on the ball and, thank God, I hit it."

In addition to Moss' heroics, Katrina Kelley went the distance to pick up the win to move MHS to 7-3 for the season. She allowed eight hits over seven innings of work and had four strikeouts.

"I pitched decent," Kelley said. "At least, it was good enough to get the job done this time."

Culwell added, "Our sophomores really came through for us today. Jessica came in and won the job at first base and all we needed from her was to come through at the plate. She has one of the most unorthodox stances I've ever seen, but she's getting the job done. Katrina was solid on the mound."

Permian took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Robin Goodpasture walked and later scored on an MHS error by Jamee Stennett. MHS tied the score in the bottom of the second when Jennifer Thompson singled and later scored on a sacrifice fly to right by Moss, who drove in three of the four Bulldog runs.

Permian led again 2-1 in the fifth when Mindy Lehman singled and scored with two outs on a double by Shelly Reeves. Again MHS answered in the bottom of the fifth when Shelia Vines scored on a heads-up play when she scored from third base on a bunt by Kenye Kay Butts.

Midland High survived a major Permian threat in the top of the sixth when the Panthers their first two runners on base. However, Laurie Kimmell hit a grounder to MHS second baseman Joye Lewis, who turned a double play to lighten the load and Kelley responded by ending the inning with a strikeout of Lehman.

tion MHS opened the game with the wind at their backs. But the Abilene defense had other plans as they consistently stymied the Midland offense.

Abilene kept Midland in their short end of the field. As a result Caroline Norton snuck in a header past diving MHS goalie Tina Richardson and into the cage for a 1-0 lead during the fifth minute of the first half.

The passing lanes, however, never materialized for the Lady Dogs because of the strong winds. Midland tried to play aggressively as they only got five shots at the goal in the first half.

What Midland could not do, Abilene did in the second half by utilizing the swirling gusts.

Fifteen minutes into the second half, Abilene scored on a goal by Gracie Valencia for a 2-0 lead. But it was Abilene's persistency on offense that created the goal.

The Lady Eagles camped out on Midland's side of the field for what seemed forever. Abilene got six consecutive shots at the goal before Valencia finally put it through the pipes.

"The ground was so hard and the wind was just unbelievable, that I felt we were lucky to have scored just one goal," said Abilene coach Renee Barbee.

The goal leashed the Lady Dogs for the day. Midland High just couldn't overcome the elements and the tenacious Abilene defense that allowed Midland only two looks at the goal for the rest of the game.

Abilene scored the game's final goal in the 78th minute when Suzanne Bates' bouncer barely cleared over the head of Richardson in what looked like a fly ball going over the head of a centerfielder.

"I am glad that the goal was not a factor in the game, Tina did a great job for us out there under the circumstances," said Hodkinson.

While Abilene is in charge of its own destiny, Midland will close out the season Tuesday in San Angelo.

Sophomore of the Year was Allen Hicks of Odessa Permian.

Lee also landed a second team pick in Dushawn Hicks, who caught fire late in the season. No other Bulldogs or Rebels made the second team.

play on a rebound layup by Mark Smith off the bench. Cooper then tried to air out the clock with stars Jason Pillion and John Hirsch on the bench with five fouls. But Riverside's Charlie Herrera came up with a steal and fed Roman Diaz for an easy basket for a 44-43 Riverside lead. The Rangers never trailed again as Diaz hit four of six free throws down the stretch to hold off the Cougars.

"When Cooper got that lead, all we were thinking about was coming up with a steal of some kind," Herrera said. "We got a layup out of it from Diaz and that was big in the game. I didn't score much (8 points), so I was glad to help out with the steal."

Riverside had been terrible at the free throw line until Diaz hit the key ones down the stretch.

"We are a terrible free throw shooting team, but at least we had the right guy at the line when we needed them," Forbes said. "Diaz is the only player we have hitting over 70 percent from the free throw line and he is an 85 percent shooter."

Diaz said, "We missed a lot of free throws (20 of 39 from the charity line), but we usually hit them when we need them.

"No one thought we would make it this far this year, but we did it. I don't even know how it feels. It's been so long for an El Paso team to go to Austin, we don't know how to feel."

Cooper got a game-high 18 points from Pillion and Eric Honeycutt had 12 points, but Honeycutt hit only three of 15 shots from the field. All-District performer Bart Fehr was held to a meager two points. Riverside got 17 points from Diaz and 10 from Ruben Rodriguez in the low scoring contest.

"I really expected a low scoring game," Forbes said. "Cooper did a good job of forcing us out of the open court game."

Snyder upends San Angelo for title

Stewart Doreen

Mother Nature played yet another cruel trick on the golfers competing in the Tall City Invitational.

The first blow came Friday as the miserable weather cancelled the first round, turning the 36-hole event into a one-day sprint to the finish. Saturday, the high winds would slow down the field at Green Tree Country Club, leaving only ballooned scores and plenty of shaking heads.

The team from Snyder, which is used to a gust here and there, rose above the elements and beat San Angelo for the first time this year to capture the team title.

"We played well," Snyder coach Matt Glenn said. "You can't hold back (in a one day event). You have to take chances."

"It's always good to beat (defending Class 5A state champion San Angelo) Central. It is a big win."

It was a team win all the way across the board for the Lady Tigers, who were tied with San Angelo after the top-four scores were taken. The tie breaker was the seldom used fifth score. Having a two-stroke advantage there gave Snyder the win.

■ Tall City Girls Invitational

Despite being beaten by the 4A Lady Tigers, San Angelo coach Jim Bartlett was happy with the effort given by his girls.

"Considering the wind, they did an outstanding job," Bartlett said. "Snyder has an excellent team. Snyder is used to winds like these. We'll be used to it next time."

In the medalist race, Snyder's Brooke Lawrance paced the field with an 83. The senior, who will play her college golf at the University of Arkansas, overcame a 41-putt performance to take first by three shots over Kasi Alexander of San Angelo. She admitted the win was nice, but also said that her play wasn't up to par.

Midland High placed fifth in the tournament with a 391 as Ingrid Weaver led the way with a 94. Midland Lee placed sixth overall with a 397. Christin Sutton's 94 led the Lady Rebels.

LEE: Sophomore keeper Smith saves three in shootout

had too fun much this season," Madsen said. "But we had it this game."

Cooper is at the bottom of the league at 3-15 and 1-10. Lee came into the game without a chance to make the playoffs.

"I scored a lot of goals but we didn't get anything out of it," said Madsen, a senior forward. "I think I learned a lot. I lost my head every time they fouled me (this year)."

The Denmark striker missed a total of three games with disqualifications this year.

Saturday Madsen gave the Rebels leads of 1-0 and 2-1 with scores on assists by Kyle Smith and Justin Robertson. He also scored on his shootout attempt, when a miss would have lost the game for Lee, which trailed 3-2.

"We haven't played much with (Madsen) this year but those games he did play he made a big difference," Lee coach John McCulloch said. "There were teams that marked him well and that hurt us."

But Madsen was far from the only hero for Lee Saturday. Sophomore keeper Phillip Smith came off the bench cold to save three of six Cooper shootout attempts. And junior Salvador Bombara got the winning shootout goal.

McCulloch started senior Kai Behrmann (five saves) and played junior Brian Kuntz in goal in the second half. So Smith, who started the Rebels first league game this year, wasn't expecting to play at all.

"We already discussed it that Kai would play because it was the last game of the season," Smith said. "And the next thing you know I'm in a shootout going in cold. That's kind of nervous."

Lee led 1-0 30 minutes in on Madsen's first goal and went up 2-1 when he scored 11 minutes into the second half. The Rebels looked like they would hang on for the win until Bombara was called for a foul in the penalty area and Cory Carter's kick tied the game at 2-2 75 minutes into the 80-minute game.

Cooper keeper Brent Camp, who made five saves in the first half, received a yellow and subsequent "soft" red card 14 minutes into the second half for a dissent disqualification. Eric Gore took his place in the game and midfielder Brian Foster played keeper in the shootout.

"I carry one keeper and when he gets chunked ... it's whoever feels good that day," Cooper coach Eric Bengs said.

Foster made one of Cooper's shootout goals and saved two shots by Lee.

But Adam Morris and Brandon Doty made good on their shootout kicks, setting up Madsen's tying kick to end the regular shootout. Smith saved Cooper's Matt Poynor's try in sudden death and Bombara's shot went under and past Foster.

Lee outshot Cooper 14-6 with Madsen taking eight of the Rebels attempts.

"That was a problem this year," McCulloch said. "We gave teams few chances to score and they scored and we created a lot of chances and didn't score."

The Lee seniors have played their last game. But Morris feels he's been witness to a turnaround in the Lee program, which hasn't made the playoffs in three years.

"I'm glad I'm a part of what's being started here," Morris said. "The coach has learned a lot and he's going to take this team to a new level."

Texas wins, reclaims tie for lead with Red Raider loss

Associated Press

■ SWC Roundup

HOUSTON — Rich McIver scored six of his nine points in the game's opening minutes, helping Texas take a big early lead that turned into a 108-74 victory over Rice Saturday, enabling the Longhorns to pull into a tie for the Southwest Conference regular season championship.

Texas' win, combined with Texas Tech's 108-106 loss to TCU later in the day, left both teams with 11-3 records in SWC play. The Longhorns moved to 20-6 for the season, the sixth time in seven years they've reached the 20-victory mark.

Depending on the outcome of Saturday night's games, Texas would either have the first seed or there would be a coin flip to determine the No. 1 seed in next weekend's SWC post-season tournament.

Texas Christian 108, Texas Tech 106

FORT WORTH — Juan Bragg hit two crucial shots from outside in the final 1:34 as Texas Christian held off Texas Tech, dropping the Red Raiders into a first-place tie with Texas for the regular-season Southwest Conference championship.

Tech could have wrapped up the title with a victory over TCU, but the loss dropped Tech to a 11-3 league mark, the same as Texas, which beat Rice, 108-74. Depending on the outcome of other games Saturday night, Texas either will get the top seed in next week's SWC champion or there will be a coin flip.

TCU had a 17-1 streak in the first half that put the Frogs up by eight points late in the first half, but Tech rallied for a 58-58 halftime tie.

Texas A&M 87, Baylor 78

WACO — Joe Wilbert scored 29 points and had 11 rebounds and Tony McGinnis added 27 points to lead Texas A&M to a come-from-behind win over Baylor.

With the score tied at 23 with 7 minutes left in the first half, Aundre Branch scored 7 of his squad's next 12 points to spark a 12-2 Baylor run that gave the Bears a 35-25 lead. They led 43-32 at the half. Wilbert and McGinnis scored 42 of their combined 56 points in the second half, to lead the Aggies (14-15) to the victory.

SMU 79, Houston 74

HOUSTON — Troy Matthews scored 21 of his 24 points in the second half as Southern Methodist defeated Houston.

The game was tied at 51-51 with 13:27 left, and Matthews took charge, scoring 16 of the Mustangs' next 18 points, including four 3-pointers, putting SMU (7-19, 3-11 Southwest Conference) ahead 69-62 with 6:59 remaining.

Women

No. 7 Texas Tech 97, TCU 43

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech jumped out to a 22-0 lead and crushed hapless Texas Christian behind 15 points from Noel Johnson.

The victory wrapped up Tech's fourth straight regular-season Southwest Conference championship. Tech won the national title in 1993.

Texas Tech (27-3, 13-1 SWC) held TCU scoreless until Sharita Hutton finally connected on a 12-foot jump shot for the Lady Frogs with 12:33 left in the first half.

Rice 67, Texas 47

HOUSTON — Angelica Smith scored her first career double-double with 21 points and 10 rebounds Saturday as Rice beat Texas 67-47 in a Southwest Conference game.

The Lady Owls (11-15, 7-7 SWC) outscored the Lady Longhorns 31-12 in the last 14 minutes to break Texas' 28-game undefeated streak over Rice.

Texas A&M 99, Baylor 65

COLLEGE STATION — Bambi Ferguson scored a career-high 20 points as Texas A&M beat Baylor.

The Lady Aggies (18-8, 9-5 SWC) scored a season-high 52 points in the first half.

Sudan caps perfect season with 1A title; Ozona's freshman trio wins 2A

The Associated Press

■ UIL Girls State

Danielle Martin sizzled from long range and led a full-court defensive blitz as Sudan finished a perfect season by repeating as Class A champions with a 66-42 victory over Alvord in the finals of the girls' state basketball tournament Saturday.

Sudan (39-0), only the 10th team in any class to win a title while undefeated, has won 58 straight games dating to last year. They beat Jayton for last year's title and also won crowns in 1983 and 1987.

Class 2A Finals

Ozona 61, Cooper 47

AUSTIN — Bobbie Bryson led a trio of freshmen who pressed and pumped in shots from all over the court as Ozona claimed its first ever state championship with a victory over Cooper.

Newcomers Bryson, Amber Tarr and Amber McWilliams helped turn Ozona from an 8-17 team last year into a 34-2 state champion with clutch ball handling and shooting down the stretch.

Cooper (31-4), a three-time state champion, was led by Leslee Zachry with 12 points and six rebounds.

McWilliams scored eight points, including two crowd-raising 3-pointers, during a decisive 20-5 run that allowed the Lady Lions to roar into the lead for good, 45-37, with 5:13 left.

Class 3A Finals

Bowie 65, Dripping Springs 50

AUSTIN — Rene Hanebutt scored 37, including five 3-pointers, as Bowie claimed the title by knocking off defending champion Dripping Springs.

Bowie finished the year 35-2 and claimed its second state title, while Dripping Springs, which was making its third straight appearance in the Class 3A finals, finished the year 27-12.

Class 4A Finals

Cleburne 55, Silsbee 50

AUSTIN — Lily Glick scored 20 points and Kim Lummus added 15, including four 3-pointers in a decisive first half run, as Cleburne held off Silsbee.

Cleburne finished the year 36-2 and won the title in its first state tournament appearance.

Silsbee, led by LaQuan Stallworth with 20 points and seven rebounds, finished the year 35-2 after falling just short of an incredible comeback in the fourth.

Class 5A Finals

Austin Westlake 59, Duncanville 56 OT

AUSTIN — Krista Watson scored 20 points and converted a steal into a key basket with 1:02 left in overtime as Austin Westlake ended Duncanville's unbeaten season with a 59-56 victory in the Class 5A championship game Saturday.

Westlake (36-4) won the 1993 Class 4A title but moved up to 5A this year.

Chap golfers set team, tournament marks with win

Staff Report

ROSWELL, N.M. — The Midland College No. 1 ranked golf team was sizzling again here Saturday.

The Chaparrals set a team and tournament record at the Bronco Invitational Collegiate Golf Tournament with a 16-under par 272 for a two-day total of 558. Needless to say, MC won the tournament, but by only two strokes over New Mexico Junior College. Odessa College was third, some 19 strokes back of MC.

Graham Davidson led the Chaps with a six-under 66 on Saturday on the New Mexico Military Institute course, which has a par of 72 while Jason Garduno was four-under at 68, Jason Brooks three-under at 69, Evan Little three-under at 69 and Derrick Pursley at one-under 71.

Garduno was medalist runnerup at 137 and Davidson was third at 138. NMJC's Johan Lundquist won the tournament with a 136.

This was the second tournament win of the spring season and sixth of the school year.

"This was one of the top displays of character, focus and competitiveness I've seen in my 17 years of coaching junior college golf," said MC golf coach Delnor Poss. "NMJC's score of 276 (12-under) was outstanding, but our young men's courage and tenacity came through."

MC is now headed for Tyler for another tournament today.

Jacobsen fires 64 to tie at Doral; Devlin rallies on senior tour

The Associated Press

■ Golf

MIAMI — Peter Jacobsen, already a two-time winner this year, gave himself the birthday present of a superlative 64 on Saturday and moved into a tie with Greg Norman for the third-round lead Saturday in the Doral-Ryder Open.

Jacobsen, playing on his 41st birthday, birdied five holes in a row, did not make a bogey and did not have a "5" on his card for his jaunt over the defenseless Blue Monster course at Doral.

Norman tied Jacobsen with birdies on the 17th and 18th holes to shoot a third-round 65 and put himself in position to win his third Doral title since 1990. The leaders have a three-shot advantage over Nick Faldo and second-round leader Davis Love III. Faldo shot a 66 in Saturday's windy conditions on the 6,939-yard, par-72 layout.

FHP Senior Health Care Classic

OJAI, Calif. — Bruce Devlin, who failed to finish in the top 10 in all 16 Senior PGA tournaments he entered a year ago, isn't having the same problem this time. His 4-under-par 66 tied him with Dave Eichelberger for the second-round lead.

Devlin and Eichelberger were both 10-under par at 130 entering today's final round.

ABILENE — Midland Lee's Lady Rebels lost to Abilene Cooper 3-0 here Saturday leaving them with only slim hopes of making the state playoffs. The District 5-5A loss, coupled with San Angelo's 1-0 defeat of Odessa Permian, means Lee must hope Midland High wins at San Angelo or Odessa High wins at Abilene this week for one of those two to fall into a third-place tie with the Lady Rebels (7-5 in district and 10-6 overall).

Cooper (11-0, 15-0) scored two of their goals off their three corner kicks. A Carolyn Pointer score made it 1-0 at the half. Stacy Metcalf and Melissa Butz got second half goals to close out the scoring.

"We made some mistakes and Cooper capitalized on them," Lee coach Van Gravitt said. "We needed to play flawlessly."

The Midland Lee junior varsity girls completed its season with a 1-0 win over Abilene Cooper with Tara Marshall scoring the winning goal. Lee won the district championship at 9-0-1 and 10-1-1 overall.

Dogs drop 2nd straight in 5-5A

"We were in complete disarray," MHS coach Tom Esikhati said. "We made a lot of defensive mistakes."

The Bulldogs were without injured starting stopper Kiley Miller and fell behind 3-1 at halftime after scoring the game's first goal. J.D. Garcia got the Bulldogs' first goal and Jason Paredes got an assist from Tyson Yarborough with less than a minute left for MHS' last goal. Abilene High got scores from Patrick Garcia, Adam Munoz, Marty Palmer and Ryan Hamner.

CHAPS: MC loses late lead, ends season came from the foul line as Temple connected on 20 of 27 freebies in the second half as Midland fouled to play catch up.

"I thought those passes were careless, poor passes, some bad decision and some of our guards were out of position when those passes were made," said Midland College coach Pat Rafferty.

The Chaps had an eight-point lead, 44-36, with 16:27 to play after a Devon Phillips slam dunk. Midland freshman guard Rob Foster swiped a pass and went in for an uncontested dunk, but missed, and Temple used the error to begin a comeback.

Temple went on a 7-0 run, capped off by a three pointer by Desmond Wesley, to trim the lead to 44-43.

"I thought the big shot of the game was, after a couple of steals, Desmond hitting that three. At that point I felt our guards were back in the game," said Johnson.

Temple took the lead for good at 54-53 after a Deuce Jones jumper with 12:11 to play. The Leopards built the lead to 12, 82-70 after a Jones' three-pointer with 2:52 to play and then Midland began fouling to catch up.

Erick Kelley led Temple with 23 points followed by 22 off the bench from Pat Fisher, 19 from Aaron Williams and 17 from Jones.

Midland was led by D'Juan Baker with 25 points. Kevin Rice ended his Chap career with a 20 point effort. But the telling statistic was the inside play of Temple. The Leopards outrebounded Midland 36-28 and outrscored MC's inside attack 47-22.

"I thought they exposed some our weaknesses that we have had all year long," said Rafferty. "We have not had a true point guard and we haven't been strong inside all year. Not to take anything way from our guys, they played hard, but they just manhandled just down low."

"Our inside game was a pleasant surprise," said Johnson. "People will tell you that our inside game is not that strong, but we pretty much pushed them around tonight."

In the first half, MC kept the tempo down to its liking. MC played the half-court game to a 33-32 lead at halftime despite playing without inside forces Ben Radford and Shedrich Franklin the final 8:29 of the half with foul trouble.

Foster, starting for the second consecutive game, sparked the Chaps with six points, three steals and three rebounds in the first.

The Chaps hit three of their first five shots to take a 6-4 lead after a Baker slam dunk with 16:56 remaining. Then, MC went cold, hitting just 3-of-14 over the next 10 minutes as Temple, ranked second in the nation in scoring with 107.8 points per game, built a 20-12 lead.

CHAMPS: Bulldogs fall to Coronado in championship single to open the scoring off MHS starter Heath Grizzle, who picked up the loss.

MHS would come right back as the Bulldogs put up two runs in the bottom of the first. Jason Rogers got the first RBI with a single with runners on first and second. MHS scored again with a bases-loaded fielder's choice off the bat of Craig Coleman to tie the game.

However, El Paso would open up their offense scoring in the third and fourth innings, scoring four runs led by the Gabe Flores' RBI triple and Sam Harrison's RBI double. It was the hitting that pleased Coronado coach Jon Carpenter.

"You have to be pleased with our hitting and production," he said. "It's is hard for them (the T-Birds) to be out of town. We needed experience and we got it."

MHS fell down by as much 9-2 before making a mini-comeback in the sixth and seventh innings. MHS' T. Stewart took advantage of T-Bird mistakes to score in the sixth, and Keith Lant and Craig Coleman would score for the Bulldogs in the seventh.

MHS coach Lou Kennedy thinks the Bulldogs' weekend will be a lift for the team when district begins.

"I was proud of our guys," he said. "We competed at the plate. A second (place) is a boost for you, but it starts over no matter what happens here. It is all on the line (in district)."

Coronado came into the final after taking it to Lee Rebels 25-19 at Ernie Johnson Field earlier. The game, which was relatively absent of quality pitching, produced more runs that hits. Coronado scored 25 on 20 hits. Fourteen others reached base on walks and hit batsmen.

Though Lee scored 19 runs on 12 hits and led 8-4 at one point of the game, the Rebels, who finished last in the tournament, allowed 17 runs in the fifth and sixth. It was a loss that coach Jesse Benavidez wants to bounce back from.

"We're making too many mistakes," he said. "I'm not satisfied with the way we're playing. If we can't make the routine play, then we're going to struggle."

Elegance Beyond Compare

end of the island, all add up to produce a wonderful place to cook. The surprises in the kitchen continue with the glass fronted flour bins and appliance 'garages'.

The kitchen is part of the more informal area of the house. An open plan design includes the den and breakfast area, both of which are impeccably designed and feature a lovely fireplace and elegant crown moulding.

Opening off from the kitchen area is the fenced patio, which is perfect for al fresco meals, and vegetable garden. These are just two of the three yards on the property.

Listed for $265,000 this large family home at 3905 Baybrook offers one very unusual aspect: a library. Originally the fifth bedroom, the library offers floor to ceiling shelving and storage, a beautiful hardwood floor and an adjoining bathroom.

Although charming bedrooms are the norm in this house, which offers white ceramic tile floors and plantation shutters throughout, none are quite as elegant as the master suite. Raising levels of luxury to new heights, the master suite offers masses of built-in features such as the jacuzzi tub and huge walk through closets. Like the rest of this impressive house, the master bath offers a wonderfully light, bright atmosphere thanks to the intelligent mix of artificial light and skylights.

For more information about this house, stop by the open house which is scheduled for 2 p.m. this afternoon. Roberta Aldridge of Langston Realtors will be on hand to show the house.

Capital Gains Legislation will encourage economic growth

Brian Cooper
President Midland
Association of
REALTORS

Proposals now before the U.S. Congress to lower the capital gains tax rate will encourage real estate investment and boost the nation's overall economic growth, according to the Midland Association of REALTORS, Inc.

More favorable treatment of capital gains is part of the Republican Party's "Contract with America". The tax measures included in the plan will soon be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee. "Tax laws that trigger residential and commercial investment benefit the entire economy," says Brian Cooper, president of the Midland Association of REALTORS. "Everything that touches real estate is tied to other industries."

Specifically, the capital gains provision would create a 50 percent exclusion for capital gains. A capital gain is an increase in the value of an asset between the time it is bought and the time it is sold. For example, if a property were purchased for $100,000 and sold for $150,000, the capital gain would total $50,000. Under the proposal, half that amount $25,000, would be excluded from taxation. The remaining $25,000 would be taxed at the owner's ordinary income tax rate. The 50 percent exclusion would have the effect of lowering the maximum capital gains tax rate - now 29.6 percent -- to no more than 19.8 percent.

Anecdotal evidence suggests that many long-time property owners are continuing to hold their properties, rather than sell them and pay taxes on the gain, explains Cooper. "Lowering the capital gains tax rate would provide a key incentive to invest in long-term assets, such as real estate," he says. "It could keep healthy markets thriving and help revive weaker areas."

Additionally, the tax legislation before Congress responds to the problems caused by inflation, Cooper notes. It includes a provision to index the basis of capital assets to eliminate taxation of inflationary gains. Through indexation, the taxable gain would be less than under current law, because the amount of any gain would be adjusted downward to reflect the inflation rate. Capital gains would become a true investment incentive, because the gain would be indexed to neutralize inflation, and only half of the adjusted gain would be taxed.

Another key real estate proposal before Congress would assist first-time buyers in the purchase of a home. This provision would offer incentives for individuals to save for a down payment on a home. "Coming up with down payment funds is an overwhelming obstacle for many entry-level home buyers," Cooper says. "A national plan to encourage saving for a home is a step toward building economic growth and social stability in our communities."

The Midland Association of REALTORS is one of more than 1,800 local boards and associations of REALTORS nationwide that comprise the National Association of REALTORS. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice for Real Estate," representing nearly 750,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

Lenders offer variety of home mortgage loans

Kay Sutton
Owner/Broker
Kay Sutton
Realtors

Home buyers should no longer assume that a 30 year fixed rate mortgage is the only loan with which to purchase a home. Lenders now offer a large variety of loans. Most lenders offer fixed rate Conventional, FHA and VA loans for a 30, 25, 20 or 15 year period with no pre-payment penalty! Also available are loans which balloon after a pre-determined length of time.

Adjustable Rate Mortgage (ARM) comes with a variety of rate adjustments. Some mortgages adjust every year, others do not have an adjustment for several years. Buyers shopping for an adjustable rate mortgage should ask what determines the interest rate and what the margin is. Negative amortization is no longer considered as an option in ARM.

When shopping for a home mortgage loan, buyers should be careful to compare apples to apples - and not obtain rates from several lenders over a period of three to four days. Interest rates may vary within a twenty-four hour period, and often vary within an eight hour day.

We currently have a first time homebuyer program available for buyers who fit the requirements. those requirements include income limits, as well as sales price limits. Income limits will vary, depending on the number of family members.

If you are shopping for a home, take the time to visit with a Realtor and a lender about mortgages available to you.

OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1995 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Injection automation in the North Cowden field.

Prices retreat

Energy prices fell this past week, due largely to reports that supplies were more plentiful than previously believed.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, April contracts for West Texas Intermediate ended at $18.35 per barrel late in the week. The posted price was at $16.75 a barrel.

Natural gas futures were also lower, with April contracts at $1.48 per thousand cubic feet late in the week on the Merc.

Smith acquisition

The Hanover Co., a provider of oil and gas equipment from the wellhead through the pipeline, has completed its acquisition of the assets of Smith Industries INc.'s oil and gas production equipment division.

The new company, now named Hanover/Smith, will reopen a 210,000 square foot fabrication facility in Columbus Texas. Hanover Maintech will continue to fabricate fas compressor packages at the Houston facility.

Robert Pierce, vice president of operations, said Hanover plans to employ 300 to 350 in the fabrication division by the end of the year.

Roughnecks ready the tongs on a trip.

Drilling slumps

Drilling activity fell sharply during the week ended February 24, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count slipped four rigs to 111 for the week but remains above the year-ago total of 101.

Nationwide, the rig count fell below the 700 mark, dropping 28 rigs to 696. A year ago the count was 747.

Among major producing states, Texas posted the largest drop with nine rigs. The biggest gain was in California, three rigs.

Pipeline sale

Pinnacle Natural gas Co. has completed the purchase of the Shell Brahaney gas pipeline from Shell Western Exploration & Production in the Wasson field of Yoakum County. Terms of the transaction were not disclosed.

Pinnacle will continue to operate the line as a low-pressure gathering system.

Nowcam renamed

Camco International Inc. has renamed its coiled tubing and nitrogen services unit, Nowcam Services, to Camco Coiled Tubing Services.

"We're changing Nowcam's name to emphasize our commitment to advanced coiled tubing technology," said Brian Moore, operations manager of the unit.

ICO focuses on tubular technology

■ ICO strives to become the melting pot of tubular technology.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/oil editor

As major oil companies trim down and depend less on in-house expertise and more on alliances with service companies, ICO (the innovation company) has developed an acquisition strategy to insure they will have a full array of expertise when it comes to tubular services.

In the last five years the company has systematically made a series of acquisitions that includes virtually every segment of the tubular service industry from inspection to protection, and has made it the largest tubular inspection company in the industry.

Listed among ICO services are wellhead scanalog inspection, EMI and visual inspection of rods and tubing; magna-fluxing of rods and couplings; hydrostatic testing and straightening and rethreading.

With the acquisition of B&W Maintenance and Manufacturing, which builds electromagnetic testing equipment, the tubular conglomerate was able to add not only a large inventory of equipment, but a whole new level of expertise.

With Spincote the company was able to apply epoxy coatings to all oil country tubulars, and now with the acquisition of Permian Enterprises of Odessa, ICO is able to provide cement coatings to tubulars. Cement coatings have come into favor in waterfloods and CO2 projects as an economical means of corrosion control.

"We intend to service the entire United States through Permian Enterprises products," says Lonnie White, ICO division manager in Odessa, who also acknowledges ICO has a strong eye out for international markets. "Acquisitions have definitely been a part of our strategy for adding equipment, personnel and expertise." He said the company was looking to add a good mix of services that would give the company the ability to service all tubular needs.

Among the regional inspection companies that have been added to the growing company are: Frontier Inspection at Farmington, N.M., Tubular Sound of Houston and Shearer Supply of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. A big acquisition was the purchase of Baker-Hughes Tubular Services in 1992.

NO FRILLS CO2 PROJECT KICKS OFF

A group of Amoco employees, participating partners and Texas Railroad Commission officials gather around the No. 1 injection well in Amoco's North Cowden Unit to officially dedicate the company's CO2 validation project.

Amoco takes first CO2 steps in Cowden

By John Paul Pitts
Business/ oil editor

Less than a decade ago, majors oil companies had almost put tertiary enhanced oil recovery projects on permanent hold. When asked about CO2, projects the typical response was that it would take $27 oil to make them happen.

This week Amoco announced the start of a $2.5 million 200 acre validation project in the North Cowden that is expected to lead to the eventual tertiary development of the entire 22,000 acre Grayburg unit. Moreover, the project is expected to be the forerunner of things to come in the oilpatch, because it is considered a commercial project with $17 to $18 oil.

What made the difference? "The difference is a back-to-basics, no-frills approach to EOR," said Ken Craig, Amoco's facility manager. "We know how to use all the bells and whistles of technology to automate our systems, but because of the constant battle to control costs, the back-to-basics approach to enhanced oil recovery makes a lot of sense." For Amoco it is the second no-frills EOR project, the company's Cedar Lake project last year was the first.

The fact that carbon dioxide costs are far less than a decade ago, that Amoco has elected to go with less automation and no processing plant in the project has made a big difference in the cost of building tertiary projects. But Jerry Brown, Amoco Group Vice President for exploration and production in North America, said the real driving factor in bringing costs down is a tighter focus on all areas of cost containment.

"It's a 101 little things all packaged together. When you try to make money with a commodity like oil, you have to figure out how to lower costs," said Brown. While the no-frills approach is a definite departure from Amoco's traditional method of CO2 application, Brown said the tight focus on cost did not change the company's commitment to safety.

Jim Posey, Vice President of the Permian Basin Business Unit, said Amoco's ability to tackle a very high cost structure now gave the company the ability to execute CO2 projects in today's economic. He attributed the success of the North Cowden project to the spirit, of determination and persistence of Amoco employees and alliance partners.

"We at Amoco have learned that we can't do everything by ourselves. We could not have done this project without our alliance partners such as Enron and B&H Maintenance and Construction of Eunice, New Mexico.

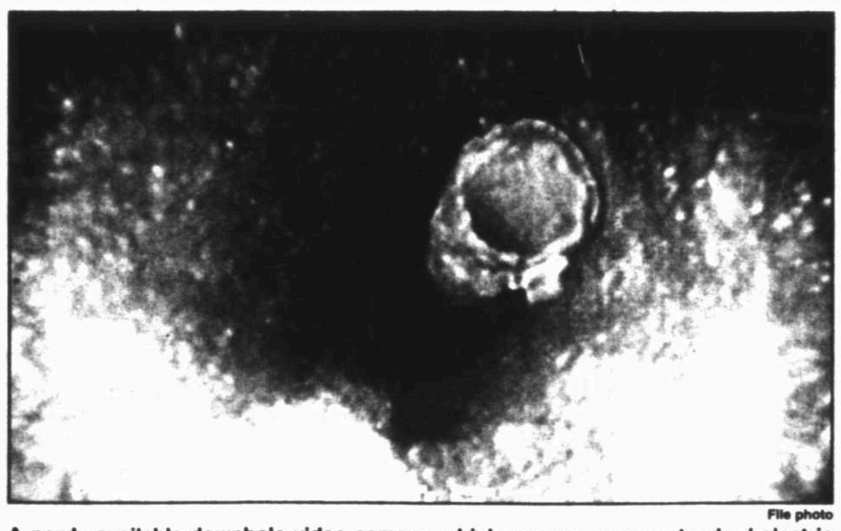

B&H had the task to building the four miles of six inch CO2 line from Enron's delivery point off the Central Basin Platform to the project and for building most of the plumbing for the unit, which included laying water and CO2 lines to the 18 injection wells in the combination line drive and five-spot pattern.

"A big part of the success of the validation project was the alliance," said Billy Thrash, a project estimator for B&H. "It came in on time and under cost, without a single accident thanks in part to incentives we had built into the project for crews. We had everyone looking for ways to do things better and faster and to look out for each other."

New downhole camera usable on standard wireline

A newly available downhole video camera, which can run on any standard electric wireline, can help operators identify any problems in the wellbore.

■ A new downhole camera lets any wireline or coiled tubing unit run video surveys.

Since the first oil well was drilled, oilmen have wished they could see what was in the hole, especially if there were problems with the well.

About a dozen years ago, technology made that possible, providing a video camera that could be run downhole on a special wireline.

Now, technology has struck again, developing a downhole camera that can operate on standard electrical wireline units utilizing single or multiple conductor cables up to 30,000 feet in length. This means virtually every electrical wireline and coiled tubing unit in the world is capable of running video surveys.

The system is known as the Hitwell Video Scan Acquisition System or VSAS, a video format offering a high resolution picture updating itself every two to seven seconds. Updating time is tied directly to the quality and electrical characteristics of the cable.

Aztec PRS, a two-year-old Odessa-based company, has two cameras in its Odessa office and a third in Oklahoma City.

"This is a super tool for whenever you have to go downhole and there's something in the hole you don't know what it is," said H.C. "Junior" McElyea of Odessa-based Aztec, PRS. "You can drop the camera down there and see exactly what you've got."

He added that the camera can be particularly useful in the aging reservoirs of the Permian Basin, where operators deal with corroded pipe.

"This is something we have to put up

Natural gas gaining favor over alternate sources

By N.Y. Times News Service

PORTLAND, Ore. — Windmills and geothermal energy, once considered hot prospects as alternative electricity sources, are falling out of favor.

Major utilities are now looking at natural gas fired generators because they are cheaper than the alternative sources.

As a result, Puget Sound Power & Light Co. has backed out of a proposed wind-energy farm planned for the Columbia River Gorge, and the Bonneville Power Administration said it may drop participating in another wind farm and a geothermal-energy project.

The trend has alarmed conservationists and has signaled a shift in energy production priorities that some say could cost consumers in the long run.

"It's incredibly short-sighted," said Denis Hayes, a leading national environmentalist and director of the Seattle-based Bullitt Foundation.

His remarks came this week during a conference on renewable energy. The conference, sponsored by the Northwest Power Planning Council, was held to examine energy produced by naturally occurring forces such as wind, water and underground heat.

Such sources gained increasing favor in the late 1980s, at a time when the Northwest economy was booming and the region's supply of surplus energy had all but dried up.

When that happened, utilities began to look more favorably toward windmills and generators run by geothermal heat, which escapes from the earth in large quantities in a number of locations. Nuclear power had become too costly, utility officials said, and coal got scant consideration because it pollutes.

Windmill builders made technical improvements that cut the cost of wind-produced electricity to 5 cents per kilowatt hour — 3 cents when federal tax credits were figured in.

Geothermal developers began bidding to build plants that could produce electricity for less than 4 cents per kilowatt-hour, making them competitive with other forms of power generation, according to figures from the Northwest Power Planning Council, which plans energy development for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Within the last year, however, things changed. A new glut of natural gas, from new fields, caused gas prices to drop, making gas-fired generators less expensive to build. Power from those plants now is being sold at about 3 cents per kilowatt-hour, making 4- and 5-cent power from some renewable resources less attractive, officials said.

The change "makes renewables' near-term prospects look bad," said Scott Spettel, resource planning manager for the Eugene (Ore.) Water and Electric Board.

Managers at Puget Power, worried that Washington state regulators might not allow them to pass the cost of the wind farm development to its 821,000 Washington state ratepayers, decided in December to drop participation in the project near Goldendale near the Columbia River Gorge.

Puget Power's two other utility partners, Oregon-based Pacific Power & Light Co. and Portland General Electric Co., are still purusing the wind farm project, said Puget Power Vice President Rich Lauckhart.

Utility officials said they want to keep costs — and prices — low to prevent losing large industrial customers, many of whom are shopping for ing of over 400 oil, water and gas lines in the project area without a single break.

AMOCO: Initiates CO2 project

Thrash said the formation of the alliance made it possible to give Amoco a steady crew that learned to work well together without any retraining. The project which was started in October of 1994, utilized between 35 and 40 workers.

The North Cowden Unit which comprises 21,251 acres of the 37,000 acres in the Cowden field was discovered in 1930, and has produced over 300 million barrels since then . It has been a candidate for CO2 since 1981 when the first one acre pilot was installed. Lower prices dampened initial tertiary plans, then in 1988 reservoir concerns delayed tertiary plans again, followed by high costs of the 1990s. Now with the validation project in place, it appears total tertiary for the giant field is only a few years out.

Amoco is obviously pleased with their new found formulas for cost control and are anxious to move on. With a new focus on cost control that enables the company to install CO2 projects for the approximately the same cost of waterflood, Posey said projects such as the North Cowden would be the first of many things Amoco would do in the Permian Basin. "We will be around for a long time."

Jerry Brown, group vice president, is a little more graphic. "I think we will turn off the lights on assets like this."

cheaper electricity. This has forced them into short-term decisions that favor gas-fired plants.

Utilities say they are pursuing gas-fired generators now because they appear to be cheaper than renewal sources. But some experts say there is no certainty that those new generators will always be cheaper.

Gas prices may rise, they said, eliminating the advantage of using that fuel or even making alternatives cheaper in the long run.

"Since most of the costs of a gas plant is fuel, there's a risk in the future," said Dick Byers, an analyst for the Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission. "For wind plants, there isn't any fuel costs."

Hayes and other environmentalists, alarmed by the shift, said they're now pushing harder to get utilities to producing at least part of the power they sell on renewable sources.

Spettel, from the Eugene utility, said his organization intends to use renewable sources to meet at least part of its demand.

He said renewables may prove cheaper in the long run, compared to gas-fired plants, particularly if natural-gas prices increase in the future, making it more expensive to operate generators with that fuel.

Noble tests well offshore Tunisia

ARDMORE, Okla. - Noble Affiliates Inc. has announced the results of an exploratory well drilled on its 1.2 million acre Cap Bon Marin permit offshore Tunisia.

The No. 1 Zelfa was drilled 11 miles offshore in 190 feet of water to a total depth of 10,270 feet. Three zones, ranging from 51 to 112 feet thick, tested hydrocarbons.

The lower zone was tested through 66 feet of perforated interval. It tested at the rate of 2,440 barrels of oil and 3 million cubic feet of gas (95 percent CO2) per day through a 48/64 inch choke with 705 pounds flowing tubing pressure.

The middle zone was tested through 56 feet of perforated interval. It tested at the rate of 1,300 barrels of condensate and 9.6 Mmcfd (85 percent CO2) per day through a 48/64 inch choke with 1,350 pounds flowing tubing pressure.

The upper zone was tested through 33 feet of perforated interval. It tested at the rate of 800 barrels of oil and 7.4 Mmcfd (3 percent CO2) through a 40/64 inch choke with 1,448 pounds pressure.

Tenneco bids for chemical company

HOUSTON (AP) — In a move to offset falling chemical stock prices, Tenneco Inc. put up its Albright & Wilson chemicals division in a $811 million stock offering.

"We are pleased with the offering and with the substantial value created at Albright & Wilson over the past two years which we will now realize," said Dana G. Mead, Tenneco's chairman and chief executive officer.

Albright & Wilson's sale, when completed by early March, will mark the largest action to date in the Tenneco's plan to shift assets into higher-return, faster-growth opportunities in three of its divisions — packaging, automotive parts and natural gas.

Albright & Wilson is located near Birmingham, England.

As part of that plan, Tenneco has committed about $600 million in the last six months to projects expected to contribute to future earnings.

The 1994 earnings results Tenneco announced Feb. 7 for continuing operations of $3.49 per share are not affected by the restatement related to the Albright & Wilson offer.

Tenneco is one of the nation's largest diversified industrial companies with 1994 revenues of $12.2 billion. The Houston-based company's major interests include natural gas transportation, marketing, automotive parts, ship design, construction and repair and packaging.

CAMERA: New system more affordable in today's economy

with out here in sour gas country," said McElyea, secretary-treasurer of the company. "Especially now that companies are doing enhanced recovery, mixing CO2 and water together, that gets really corrosive."

The fact that the camera can operate on standard electrical wireline units is another benefit, according to McElyea, because it is more affordable and a time-saver.

"It's invaluable now that this area is getting into enhanced recovery and suffering from a tight economy where everyone's watching their nickels."

"We can furnish the truck and the camera or we can furnish the camera and an engineer to run it on someone else's wireline. The camera's highly portable and breaks down into small packages we can put on an airplane or truck and take it anywhere it needs to go. We can make it available anywhere at any time. We just have to send our engineer with it.

"It's more affordable because you don't have to have expensive coaxial cable or fiber optic cable and you don't need a special dedicated truck to run the camera on."

The system, he said, was first used in Florida to inspect sewer lines. And, McElyea said, a Canadian company is using the downhole video camera to perform pipeline inspections, technology Aztec is looking to get and provide in the Permian Basin.

The use of downhole camera for the oil and gas industry was pioneered in West Virginia, according to McElyea, where, instead of running expensive open hole logs, operators would use the camera and see where the oil, the gas and the water were entering the wellbore.

In the Permian Basin, "rather than spending several days groping in the dark, wondering what you've got, you can run the camera in there and tell exactly what the problem is," McElyea said.

As an example, he cites a job Aztec did in New Mexico, where drillers had been having problems for two weeks with a well at 2,500 feet. The camera showed that the problem was actually higher up, at 2,000 feet, where the casing had parted. The drillers would get outside the casing at 2,000 feet and could get no further than 2,500 feet.

"We ran a string of 4-1/2 inch casing inside that string, cut a long muleshoe with a long stinger, ran it in the hole to where the casing had parted, ran the camera inside the stinger, caught the bottom of the casing that had parted and dropped it on in the hole and saved the well."

While he insists the camera is a super tool, McElyea acknowledges that it's not ideal. "The camera will see exactly what your eye will see," he points out. "And you can see only as well as the fluid will let you. The clearer the fluid, the better you can see. Think of it this way: Put a glass of water over a dime, then start adding tea to the water."

Huntsman, Texaco form joint venture

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Huntsman Corp. and Texaco have announced plans to jointly own and operate Texaco's lubricant additives business, which generated $360 million in revenues in 1994.

The 450-employee business supplies oil additives that are blended into automotive crankcase oil, transmission and hydraulic fluids, gear oils and industrial and metal working oils.

Allen J. Krowe, vice chairman of Texaco, said the 50-50 joint venture benefits Huntsman by adding to its diversified chemical business and Texaco as a customer of lubricant additives.

A Huntsman news release said the companies expect to close the agreement during the second quarter of 1995. Terms were not announced.

Huntsman Corp. purchased Texaco Chemical Co. in April 1994 for $850 million. Huntsman produces ethylene, propylene, ethylene glycol, ethylene oxide and other specialty chemicals.

Texaco's lubricant additives business includes manufacturing facilities in Port Arthur, Texas; Belgium, Brazil and South Korea.

"Both of us are committed to high growth and long-term viability in the lubricant additives marketplace," said Jon M. Huntsman chairman and CEO of Salt Lake City-based Huntsman Corp.

Noble replaces reserved at record pace

ARDMORE, Okla. - Noble Affiliates Inc. announces that its proved oil and gas reserves increased for the year.

The company replaced 139 percent of its record oil production of 8.3 million barrels for the year. Proved oil reserves at December 31, 1994 are estimated to be 75.5 million barrels, a 3.5 percent increase over the 1993 level.

Record natural gas production of 90.4 billion cubic feet was replaced 195 percent with new gas reserves. At year-end 1994, proved natural gas reserves were estimated at 779 billion cubic feet, a 12.3 percent increase over the prior year.

During the year, the company spent $189.7 million on property acquisition, development and exploration costs. Accordingly, the company spent $4.64 per barrel of oil equivalent to add new reserves.

Royal Dutch-Shell credits chemicals with profit rise

LONDON (AP) — Royal Dutch-Shell Group said profits more than doubled in the fourth quarter as a turnaround in its chemical business helped lift the giant Anglo-Dutch oil company's bottom line.

Earnings for the year were up 36 percent despite flat revenues.

The company earned 1.65 billion pounds ($2.60 billion) in the three months ended Dec. 31, compared with profits of 671 million pounds in the same period a year earlier.

Royal Dutch-Shell said earnings for the year were 4.07 billion pounds ($6.27 billion), up from 3 billion pounds in 1993.

The effects of weak oil prices were partly offset by increases in crude production and higher sales of refined fuel.

But Royal Dutch-Shell attributed its performance mainly to a return to profitability in its chemicals unit after three years of losses. Cost-cutting in the division paid off, and the entire industry enjoyed an upswing in 1994 with economies improving in the United States and parts of Europe.

The chemicals operation earned 196 million pounds ($311 million) in the fourth quarter, compared with a loss of 68 million pounds a year earlier. Annual profits from chemicals came to 340 million pounds ($534 million) compared with a loss of 409 million pounds in 1993.

Royal Dutch-Shell said its results also were boosted by one-time gains, including 322 million pounds ($483 million) from the sale of property in Hong Kong.

Refinery's bond sale raises recall prospects

GOODHOPE, La. (AP) — TransAmerican Refining Corp. is selling $440 million worth of bonds needed to finance the plant's revitalization, raising the prospect that workers will soon be recalled.

"This is going to enable to us to get started on the road we had begun before," said Gary Karr, vice president of refining for the company.

TransAmerican said it sold $440 million worth of junk bonds in one group of $340 million and another of $100 million.

Karr said the company is still mapping out its plan of recalling laid-off employees, a process that could stretch over several months. He said some accounting, administrative and engineering personnel were called back immediately.

Callbacks for laborers will begin have begun, he said, adding that company officials had been preparing for the rehirings for several weeks.

"This won't be something that will happen overnight," he said. cautioned. "We won't be able to hire 1,200 people back in one night. It'll be a gradual progression."

Karr said about 230 workers remained at the plant after the waves of layoffs in December and January. He estimated that the plant would employ as many as 2,000 people at the height of construction.

The bonds were withdrawn from the market several times last year because no one would buy them.

Karr said the bond market held better opportunities for the financing at the beginning of the year.

"This was a combination of things but much of this had to do with timing," agreed said Simon Ward, investor relations manager for TransTexas Gas, another subsidiary of parent TransAmerican Natural Gas of Houston. TransAmerican Natural Gas is owned by Houston businessman John Stanley.

The TransAmerican Refining also sought less money in bonds this time because the parent company is investing more of its own cash and stock in the Goodhope plant, said Joseph Maly, vice president of investment banking for Jefferies & Co. in Los Angeles, which handled the deal.

TransAmerican Natural Gas has put up $170 million in TransTexas stock and $50 million in cash to secure the deal. It also agreed to invest another $100 million in cash in the future, Maly said.

After 11 years of virtual near inactivity, the refinery hired hundreds of workers last year in its attempt to restart and refashion the plant to process more than 200,000 barrels of heavy crude oil a day.

Industry analysts have said the $480 million effort to refurbish the plant would make it the biggest restart of an American refinery in decades.

The project's first phase, estimated to cost $309 million, includes installation of a coker unit, a catalytic cracking unit, and a hydrodesulphurization unit. It was already under way before last fall's bond troubles, and is expected to be completed in August 1996.

The project's second phase, which includes construction of a sulphur recovery unit, is expected to be completed in August 1997 at a cost of $125 million.

Firms plan venture in Scotland

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Subsidiaries of J. Ray McDermott and Halliburton Co. have finished forming a company that will operate offshore petroleum equipment fabrication yards in Scotland.

Under the agreement, Brown & Root McDermott Fabricators Ltd. will operate McDermott's yard at Ardersier with Brown & Root's yard at Nigg. The yards build and refurbish offshore oil platforms and other equipment for drilling in the North Sea.

Brown & Root is a Halliburton subsidiary, while McDermott International Inc. holds a majority interest in J. Ray McDermott.

The new company is owned equally by J. Ray McDermott and Brown & Root Energy Services.

About 600 people are employed at Ardersier and over 1,000 at Nigg on current contracts. The new company is expected to finish all pending contracts, J. Ray McDermott said.

Dresser opens office in Hanoi

HOUSTON (AP) — Dresser Industries Inc. announced the opening of an office in Hanoi.

The Dallas-based energy company, which operates in 50 countries, said the office will arrange and coordinate technical presentations and determine market requirements for the firm's products, services and technology.

Dresser said it has been pursuing business in Vietnam since the U.S. government lifted trade sanctions with the country last year.

"This is a long-awaited day for Dresser Industries," Bill Bradford, Dresser president, said. "The Hanoi office opening marks a new era for not only our company, but the Vietnamese community as well. Our goal is to strengthen the output and production of oil and gas here for the mutual benefit of both the Vietnamese and international oil companies."

Wiser Oil reports earnings

DALLAS - The Wiser Oil Co. reported full year 1994 earnings of $8,988,000 or $1.01 per share on revenues of $65,356,000.

These results compare to 1993 earnings of $1,016,000 or 11 cents per share on revenues of $42,921,000. Included in 1994 earnings are pretax fourth quarter gains of $9,367,000 primarily from the sale of a portion of Wiser's security holdings and, to a lesser extent, oil and gas property sales. These transactions reflected two strategic decisions made in 1994: to begin liquidating the company's large investment portfolio in a tax effective fashion and to dispose of certain non-strategic oil and gas properties.

Without the gains on asset sales, Wiser would have reported a $65,000 pretax profit in 1994, compared to a pretax loss of $1,075,000 in 1993. The company's 1994 U.S. pretax profit was $2,447,000 which was largely offset by a pretax loss of $2,382,000 in its Canadian subsidiary.

Operating cash flow, before working capital changes, in 1994 was $19 ,806,000- compared to $17,659,000 in 1993. While the operating cash flow does not include the gains on asset sales, it has been reduced by $1,589,000 for income taxes associated with those gains.

In the fourth quarter of 1994, Wiser earned $7,406,000 or 83 cents per share on revenues of $23,9018,000 compared to $1,177,000 or 13 cents per share on revenues of $13,529,000 in the fourth quarter of 1993. Without the $9,367,000 gains on asset sales, the company would have reported a substantial fourth quarter loss, most of which is attributable to its Canadian operations.

Domestic oil and natural gas production volumes fell 16 percent and 21 percent, respectively during the quarter due to the sale of producing properties, natural declines, gas curtailments due to certain mechanical problems and capacity restraints. In addition, weak natural gas price realizations were only partially offset by higher crude oil prices.

Halliburton makes deal with Chinese

DALLAS (AP) — Halliburton Energy Services signed an exclusive joint venture agreement with the Liaohe Petroleum Exploration Bureau for the manufacture and sale of oil field flow measure equipment.

The agreement was signed in Beijing, China, as part of a presidential business development mission led by U.S. Secretary of Energy Hazel O'Leary.

Halliburton owns 51 percent of the venture, which will produce and sell high technology turbine flow meters and flow measurement products.

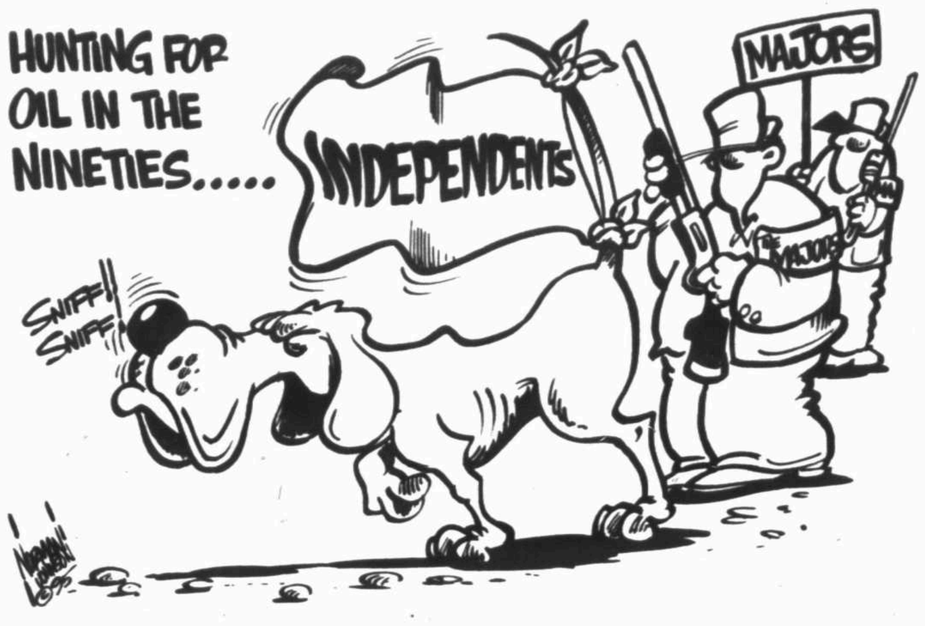

The 10-year project is projected to generate $40 million in revenues.

Dallas-based Halliburton is the largest oil field service company based in the U.S. It was founded in 1919 and is one of the world's largest diversified energy services, engineering, maintenance and construction companies

The Liaohe Province contains China's third-largest producing oil and gas field, generating approximately 14 million tons of oil and 1.7 billion cubic meters of gas.

Maxus, Argentine firms to merge

DALLAS (AP) — Maxus Energy Corp. has agreed to be merged into Argentina's largest oil company, YPF Sociedad Ansnima, which would pay about $750 million for Maxus' common stock.

Speculation about a Maxus takeover had been ongoing, and the petroleum company, which has nearly $1 billion in debt, confirmed more than a month ago that it was talking to unnamed suitors.

Under the deal, YPF would buy all of the nearly 135 million outstanding shares of Maxus common stock for $5.50 per share in a tender offer. Shareholders also would get a cash payment of 10 cents per share when rights issued to them are redeemed.

After the tender offer, the remaining shares of Maxus common stock would be exchanged, also for $5.50 per share, in a merger. The company's more than 4 million shares of preferred stock, much of which is owned by Prudential Insurance, would remain outstanding.

Maxus said its board has approved the tender offer and the merger, and recommends that shareholders accept.

YPF, based in Piso, Argentina. said it has received a commitment letter from The Chase Manhattan Bank N.A. to provide financing of up to $800 million for the purchase.

The offer will begin in the next few days, the company said. The deal is still subject to various conditions, including that a majority of Maxus' voting stock be tendered.

Josi A. Estenssoro, YPF's chief executive officer, said in a news release that the acquisition "will establish YPF as an international oil and gas company, which has been a cornerstone of the strategy for YPF since its privatization in 1993."

Maxus' assets in Indonesia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia and the United States "were a great fit for YPF in this respect," he said.

In December, Maxus announced a plan to raise money by spinning off natural gas properties in western Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle as a stand-alone company called Midgard Energy Co. Maxus will suspend its efforts to sell Midgard as part of the agreement with YPF.

After the merger, Peter Gaffney would become interim chief executive officer of Maxus, YPF said. He would replace Charles Blackburn, Maxus' current chief executive officer, who has been asked to become a consultant to YPF and remain a board member.

C. Van Levy, senior vice president of Jefferies & Co. in Houston, said the move would let Maxus take advantage of its Latin American and other international strengths.

"I think merging yourself into a well-capitalized company does benefit your existing shareholders," he said.

But for YPF, Levy said: "The question is, will more equity be coming, particularly in their market where they just got hammered?"

PRINCIPLE OF OPERATION

When the safety relief valve is tested the ISOLATOR VALVE is locked in the closed position enabling the test media to be connected to the test port below the safety relief valve. Pressure is then applied to the safety relief valve through the test port until relieving set pressure is verified. The pressure gauge below the closed ISOLATOR VALVE enables the technician to monitor system pressure while testing is in progress. Installation in accordance with UG-135, appendix M-5.

Drilling under royal castle causes uproar

By DIRK BEVERIDGE
AP Business Writer

GERRARDS CROSS, England — Desmond Oswald doesn't quite understand what all the fuss is about. He thinks there's oil under Windsor Castle so he's going to drill a hole and find out.

Queen Elizabeth II has given her blessing, but a number of her subjects think it's about time to rebel. The very idea of searching for oil under one of England's most-cherished landmarks is "appalling," if you ask Elizabeth Still, a Berkshire County councilor.

Oswald looks at things from a purely geological perspective. In his mind, the only pertinent issues are whether he can find oil — which he calculates at about a one in eight shot — and if, so whether he can produce it.

"What I've got is a geologic structure sitting here that hasn't been drilled," Oswald said in an interview. "It's something that should be drilled. In any other place in the world, it would have been drilled long ago."

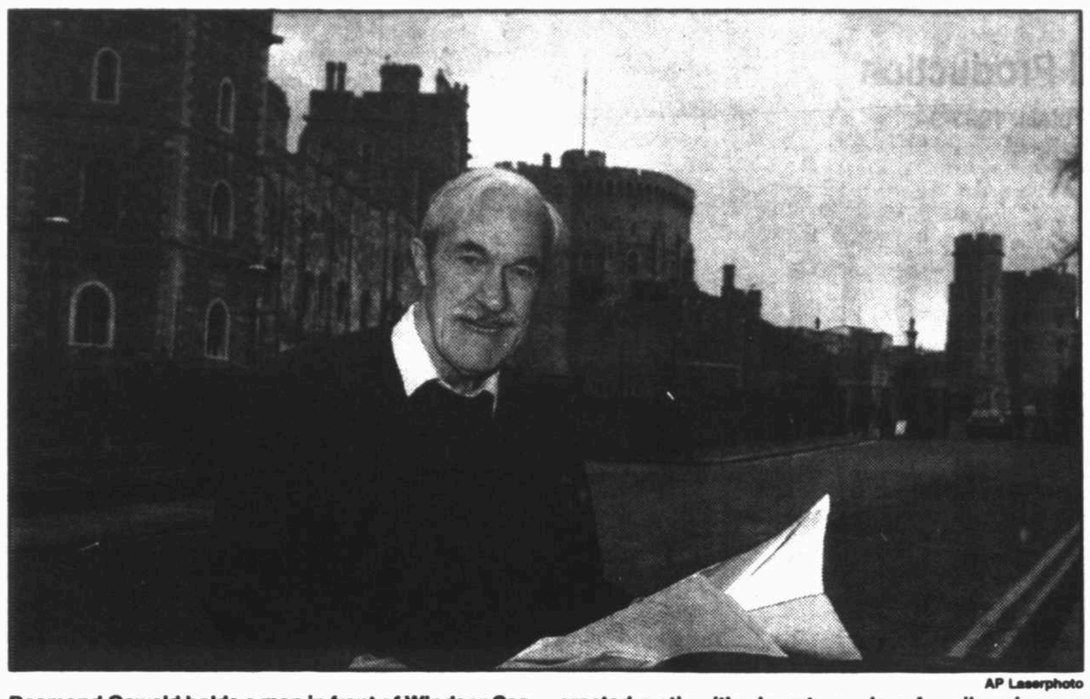

This is the same outlook Oswald took into the oil fields of Libya and Iran during a career that spanned three decades with Chevron Corp. Oswald, who admits to being "70ish," took early retirement from San Francisco-based Chevron during the oil bust of the mid-1980s.

Why drill under Windsor Castle?

Why not? Oswald says.

"I'm interested in this geology not to become a billionaire. If it works, it would be the highlight of my career."

Like most major oil company geologists, Oswald was accustomed to being safely anonymous, and all the attention the Windsor project is getting has caught him off guard.

AP Laserphoto

Desmond Oswald holds a map in front of Windsor Castle, the historic resident of Queen Elizabeth II. Oswald, who spent years as a geologist for Chevron Corp., has created a stir with plans to explore for oil under one of Britain's most cherished landmarks.

Big oil companies have layers of executives monitoring projects each step of the way. Thus, nobody gets credit for a good deal but nobody is saddled with the blame when a company blows millions on a bad prospect.

At a big oil company, "if I get an idea to drill for oil and the president of the company approves it, if there's no oil, he doesn't fire me — he approved it," Oswald said.

When oil is found, the oil company may issue a terse press release and that's that. Oswald says he didn't realize things would be any different on this deal — his first since leaving Chevron.

"I had thought the whole thing could be done quite quietly. I thought we could just get on with the job, then if one found something it would generate a certain amount of attention."

For a while, he was right.

Oswald, a native of Calgary, Canada, began work on the project in 1989 by setting up a private company — Canuk Exploration Ltd. He then cornered the rights to find oil under the castle by gaining a license that kept any competitors from getting in on the deal as long as Oswald follows a timetable acceptable to British regulators.

Initially, Oswald was able to study seismic tests without getting onto the castle grounds. But then came the delicate matter of gaining permission from the Crown Estate Commission, which manages royal properties.

"I pointed out that I had a license and I meant to exercise that license and I would be able to advance without being detrimental for them. I pointed out it was unfortunate that the exploration well had to be located right on the castle grounds.

"They had a lot of reservations, but we discussed it and they said subject to certain conditions they would be amenable to it."

His efforts gained only minor attention in the local newspapers. But late last year, as soon as it became time for Oswald to get an actual drilling permit, the critics started complaining.

Britain's feisty national press got hold of the story, filling newspapers with cartoons that showed the queen wearing a cowboy hat and hobnobbing with J.R. Ewing, the oil tycoon from the TV show "Dallas." Stories speculated about the tranquil gardens of Windsor Castle being defiled by oil pumping units, known in Britain as nodding donkeys.

Oswald says the attacks were coming from "uninformed and ill-informed scientists" although one strong objection came from a county councilor, Jim Lennox, a former oil company executive who has seen wells blow up and doesn't want this happening at the 900-year-old castle.

Oswald plays down any possibility of a blowout and says images of an oil boom in Windsor are overstated.

Despite the uproar, Berkshire County planning officials gave Oswald the go-ahead. If he finds oil, he will need further permission to produce it. He says that can be done at a discreet distance from the castle, by drilling at an angle.

The initial drilling will cost about $800,000, Oswald believes. The results could be lucrative. Oswald estimates the rocks under Windsor Castle could contain 50 million barrels of oil or more — although nobody ever knows such things for certain until they drill.

Oswald's optimism is based on seismic tests that have convinced him that Windsor Castle sits about 1,000 feet above a reservoir. First, Oswald will have to drill through 750 feet of chalk, then expects to hit 250 feet of clay before reaching a 100-foot layer of sandstone where he hopes to find oil.

This is the same geologic pattern that extends toward the south, where British Petroleum produces oil from Britain's biggest onshore field, Wytch Farm, albeit from much deeper and older rock layers.

"It looked to me like it could have potential," Oswald said.

Castle hot tourist spot

By The Associated Press

Windsor Castle, besides being the favorite residence of Queen Elizabeth II, is also a popular stop for tourists, according to Baedeker's guide to Britain.

The 900-year-old castle, built around two courtyards and featuring its easily recognizable Round Tower, has been enlarged and renovated by monarchs through the years, including additions to fortify it against attack in the 12th and 13th centuries. In later years, additions were built by Henry VIII and Elizabeth I.

The castle's state apartments are open to the public when the queen is not staying there. Tourists can see artwork and period furniture, as well as some historical artifacts including the bullet that killed Lord Nelson in the Battle of Trafalgar.

St. George's Chapel is the burial place for British kings and queens including Henry VIII and his third wife, Jane Seymour; and George V and Queen Mary, grandparents of Elizabeth II.

On the grounds of the castle are Frogmore House and Mausoleum, where Queen Victoria and her husband, Prince Albert, are buried.

In 1992 the castle was damaged extensively by a fire that all but destroyed the massive St. George's Hall, where state dinners have been held. Repairs are expected to take several years.

Texas Natural Gas Production

Statewide Monthly Totals, 1993-94

Texas production

Texas preliminary November crude production averaged 1,421,940 barrels daily, down from 1,503,864 barrels daily averaged in November 1993. The preliminary Texas oil production figure for November is 42,658,199 barrels, down from the 45,115,910 barrels reported in November 1993. Texas oil and gas wells produced 463,128,761 thousand cubic feet of gas in preliminary November production, up 3 percent compared to November 1993's gas production total of 451,504,998 Mcf.,

Tom Brown reports increase in reserves and production

Midland-based Tom Brown Inc. announced significant increases in reserves for year-end 1994 and production increases from a successful drilling program in the Val Verde Basin of West Texas. Oil and gas reserves increased 37 percent to 207 billion cubic feet equivalent in 1994 from last year's record level of 151 Bcfe. Gas reserves increased 37 percent to 180 Bcf from 131 Bcf in 1993, and oil reserves increased 36 percent to 4.5 million barrels from 3.3 million. The increases are attributable to the company's continued success in the Wind River Basin of Wyoming and to discoveries of oil and gas reserves in the Val Verde Basin.

Donald Evans, chairman of the board and chief executive officer, stated that the company was able to add sizable reserves in 1994 and also, of importance, at a finding cost of only 28 cents per million cubic feet equivalent, for a five year average finding cost of 26 cents per Mcfe, one of the lowest in the industry.

He also noted that the recent results from the Val Verde Basin drilling program increased reserves 26 Bcfe. In particular, the results added 1.4 million barrels of oil to an otherwise declining oil supply from its Spraberry reserves and the company expects 1995 levels of production to benefit significantly from these discoveries.

To date, 21 wells have been drilled in the Val Verde Basin, 12 of which are producers, three dry holes and six in various stages of drilling or completion. The Conoco-operated wells, in which the company owns a 50 percent working interest, are producing oil and gas in excess of 22 million cubic feet of gas per day and 1,100 barrels of oil per day. The No. 2-1R Alex Mitchell, which has yet to be connected to the pipeline, will produce in excess of 5 Mmcfd and 200 bopd. The company and Conoco plan to drill 26 wells in this area in 1995 at an estimated cost of $17 million net to the company,.

In the Muddy Ridge and Pavillion fields of the Wind River Basin, the company increased reserves 34 Bcfe through the drilling and completion of 10 wells in 1994. Also, compression and gathering facilities were added which increased capacity to equal the deliverability of approximately 50 Mmcfd. Sales of natural gas from these fields reached in excess of 40 Mmcfd in January 1995. The company plans to drill 10 wells in its existing fields in this basin in 1995 and will continue exploration activity on its 500,000 acre option blocks surrounding these fields.

The company plans to release fourth quarter results in March and expects a fourth quarter net loss of approximately 8 cents a share due to weak gas prices, curtailment of gas and the expensing of exploratory 3-d seismic costs of approximately $.7 million on the company's Wind River Basin option acreage.

Travel still restricted in Cuba

"It is with infinite reluctance that the temporary sojourner in Cuba leaves her delicious shores, and takes his farewell look at their enchanting features. A brief residence in the island passes like a midsummer night's dream, and it requires a strenuous effort of the mind to arrive at the conviction that the memories one brings away with him are not delusive sports of the imagination..."

CUBA'S PAST BRINGS MEANING TO ITS PRESENT

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

The delicious shores of Cuba offer more than 130 beaches crowned by the magnificent one at Varadero, where crystal clear aquamarine sea waters wash fine white sand. In this largest island in the Caribbean, the lush vegetation grows from soil so rich some Cubans and writers have claimed in jest that a pencil planted in most parts of the countryside could sprout leaves.

"The mountains and the seashore were absolutely beautiful," said Midlander David Rosen, who spent a week in Cuba this December as part of a 17-member humanitarian group under the auspices of B'nai B'rith International, a Jewish service organization with members in 54 countries which is primarily Jewish oriented but does provide aid to non-Jewish populations. "Generally, it was very clean. There was not any air pollution because there are not any factories operating. We did pass an oil field and that made me feel like I was home."

The B'nai B'rith contingent consisted of 11 Americans, four Panamanians and two from Curacao. They delivered 350 pounds of medicines — from cold medicines and antibiotics to vitamins — and 1,000 pairs of eyeglasses that were donated by Lions Club International. Rosen will speak about his trip and give a slide show at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Temple Beth El, 1501 N. Grandview, Odessa. The presentation is free and the public is invited to attend.

"B'nai B'rith is an important player in the Cuban mission because we remain apolitical," said Rosen, a vice president of the B'nai B'rith District 7. "It's important not to alienate pro- or anti-Castro Cuban Jews. We define our Varadero Beach, with its aquamarine water and fine white sand, is the loveliest in all of Cuba and the site of European resort investments.

Cuba has a growing tourist trade with international monies being spent on resort facilities and beach hotels.

"It's clear that many European countries are making investments there," said Midlander David Rosen, who spent a week in Cuba this December as part of a 17-member humanitarian group under the auspices of B'nai B'rith International. "Groups of European tourists were there. They have an absolutely beautiful beach at Varadero, but it's like going to another country. If a person just went to Varadero, he wouldn't be seeing what Cuba is like."

Legally, neither the investment money nor the tourists are from the United States.

Travel transaction limitations issued May 27, 1993, by the U.S. government, prohibit all U.S. citizens but the following from traveling to Cuba either directly or through a third country such as Canada or Mexico: U.S. and foreign government officials, including representatives of international organizations of which the United States is a member, traveling on official business; persons gathering news or making news or documentary films; persons visiting close relatives residing in Cuba; and, a full time professional engaging in full time research in their professional areas where the research is specifically related to Cuba, is largely academic in nature, and there is substantial likelihood the product of research will be disseminated.

MWC fund-raiser is festive, successful

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

One of the most successful fund-raisers to date was the way Midland Woman's Club officials described their recent luncheon and fashion show at the clubhouse in Hogan park.

The "Festive Fund-Raiser" featured spring and resort wear from Evelyn's of Ruidoso's Midland shop. Many Midland women have been shopping at the Ruidoso store for years. The Midland branch has only been in existence for the past couple of years. Cheryl Harris is co-owner of the local shop with her mother, Evelyn Vuicich, who started the family business.

Ms. Harris provided the commentary for the event. Models were Patsy (Mrs. E.J.) Gardner, Katie (Mrs. V.V.) Hibler, Hazel (Mrs. W.W.) Smith, Eloise (Mrs. E.C.) Ruhmann, Dorise (Mrs. Bud) Watson and Madge (Mrs. Porter) Wallis.

Mix and match separates were shown, many with their own coordinated belts and accessories. Shorts with sweaters, palazzo pants, and split skirts are popular this year. Bright colors predominated, with coral reported to be a favorite.

A delicious luncheon beforehand featured Chicken Quiche, Sugar Peas, White Frozen Fruit Salad, Blueberry Muffins, and Poundcake with Lemon Sauce.

Decorations included topiary trees in pastels, seashells, flowers and curlicue ribbons.

Approximately 150 women attended, among them a party from Manor Park, as well as a group of members from the Woman's Wednesday Club. Also seen in the crowd were a number of mother-daughter pairs. They included Lydia Wilkinson and Janet (Mrs. Corby) Considine, Lorraine Mansker and Billy Merle Farmer, Frances (Mrs. Derwood) Ratliff and Roxanne (Mrs. Ben) Strickling, Joan (Mrs., Gene) Tanselli of Corvallis, Ore., and Lia (Mrs. Montie) Watson, Lula Belle (Mrs. J.T.) Klingler and Nancy Klingler, and Barbara (Mrs. Arlis) Ratliff and Laura (Mrs. Roger) Huitt, both of Garden City.

MIDLAND'S LOSS is Corpus Christi's gain. Brad and Jane Kisner, longtime directors of music ministries for First United Methodist Church, left Wednesday to make their home in the port city. They have accepted the positions of director and associate director of music and fine arts at Corpus Christi's First United Methodist Church.

Numerous social courtesies were extended to them prior to their departure. Among them was a beach party last weekend at the home of Lou Ann and John Gray. In anticipation of the Kisner family's new lifestyle with the church literally overlooking the shore, they were showered with all kinds of beach gear, including toys for their children, three-year-old Evan and one-year-old Sarah.

Entertainment included the viewing of videos of church choir tours the Kisners have conducted. Pictures and other memorabilia on display brought back memories of the eleven-and-a-half years they resided in our community.

The family was further honored at a reception in First Methodist's Fellowship Hall following the late service last Sunday. In addition, they were guests of honor at a staff party held at the home of Billie and Jim Ross and a kidnap breakfast given by a group of young people from the church at the new Denny's Restaurant.

The festivities continued Saturday evening in Corpus when the Kisners were honored by their new church family.

MORE RUSH NEWS — Lindsey Walker is a new pledge of Delta Gamma sorority at Texas Tech University. She is the daughter of Midlanders Linda and David Walker.

MEMBERS AND GUESTS of the Midland Country Club Ladies Association were treated to a preview of spring and summer fashions at the group's February luncheon meeting.

Robbie Casey's presented the show, including fashions by Helga, Escada, Koos, Stanley Platos and Laurel.

Fashions ranged from very casual to formal, and a grand finale featured designer furs.

Casual wear included knits in red, white and blue, as well as animal prints, which continue to be popular. Denim was featured in pretty pastel pinks and blues. Vivid pinks, oranges and yellows also were shown in daywear. The "little black dress" was seen for both day and evening. Sequins were featured for evening wear in dresses and pants.

The luncheon featured Roast Pork Tenderloin with natural sauce, Assorted Fresh Fruit on lettuce leaves with MCC's new Sweetheart Dressing and Lemon Meringue Pie.

Hostesses for the social hour preceding lunch were Dot (Mrs. Winston) Barclay, Marjorie (Mrs. Clarence) Cardwell and Mimi (Mrs. Bob) Beggs.

Spotted in the audience were Karen (Mrs. Ron) King, Susan (Mrs. Eddy) Oheinberg, Dee (Mrs. Paul) Morris, Winnie (Mrs. T.B.) O'Brien, Susie (Mrs. Gary) Burnett and Eleanor (Mrs. Ken) Terrell.

CUBA: Humanitarians relax in Cuban culture

(From 1G)

Failure to comply with these regulations could result in prosecution upon return to the United States. Visitors who attempt to enter Cuba without the proper documentation are subject to detention and arrest.

Despite having their trip licensed by the U.S. State Department as an humanitarian mission and thereby being in possession of the proper documentation, Rosen said he and members of the group experienced feelings of apprehension when they arrived in Havana.

"Initially, there was a lot of trepidation," said Rosen, who is a vice president of the B'nai B'rith District 7. "Certainly, when the plane landed, we wondered if we would be personally inspected — how critical the customs would be there at the airport. But our fears were unfounded. There was no problem at all."

The contrast between the airport at Miami and Havana was, Rosen said, "incredibly dramatic. Guys were fixing the runaway (Havana), riding up and down on their bicycles rather than their trucks. And they had no mechanical equipment to do the work with. Everything was with hammers and shovels."

The limited military presence they saw amazed them.

"There was very little military and police," said Rosen, who will give a public talk and slide show presentation about his trip at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Temple Beth El, 1501 N. Grandview, Odessa. "The military were guarding different government buildings, but there was one percent of what we anticipated seeing.

"And we were surprised by the lack of cult of personality. In the homes, in the streets, we didn't see pictures of Castro or Marx or Lenin. We were surprised at that. There were no statues of Marx or Lenin. Mostly the statues were of Cuban heroes of the 1800s.

"There are some — but few — billboards around. In the hospital we visited, there were pictures of Castro and Che Guevara, particularly in the hospital administration area."

They found themselves easily relaxing into the culture.

"As the days wore on in Havana, we felt more and more comfortable leaving our hotel and taking off in different directions by ourselves and leaving our interpreter and tour guide."

They discovered 40 percent of the people spoke "easily understood" English. And, 70 percent of the members of the B'nai B'rith group spoke Spanish.

When they ate Cuban food, they experienced another revelation.

"It wasn't real tasty to my palette," said Rosen. "Not like Mexican food at all. Nothing we had was highly spiced. Most of it was relatively bland."

The hotels served buffets where there was plenty of food. The restaurants were different.

"You could look at a menu (in a restaurant) but it was irrelevant," said Rosen. "They would tell you what they had to serve you, which was usually two or three things."

And transportation was difficult, at least for the Cubans.

"A lot of the Cuban people who lived in Havana had never been to a town that was 120 miles away," Rosen said. "For us, it was simple because we had a tourist bus that took us wherever we wanted to go. The ease of transportation in the United States is just incredible. We can get on a bus or a train or a plane at the drop of a hat and not think it's going to cost us three months wages to go visit someone."

WALKING AND bicycling were the main forms of transportation in the cities with older cars also being used, Rosen said, adding that none of his group saw any rush hour traffic situations.

"The primary mode of transportation is bicycle. The buses are infrequent and extremely crowded, making it difficult for people to get around. So, even though there are farmers markets that do have food, it's difficult for people to get to them who don't live in the immediate neighborhoods."

Highway transportation was no better.

"At these rest stops on the highways it appeared that people were just hanging around waiting for some kind of transportation. At different highway intersections there were people whose job it was to stop vehicles and put additional passengers in them depending upon what kind of vehicle it was. So a large dump truck might have a load of 20 people riding in the back."

The tour guide assigned to the B'nai B'rith group would remind them of the "triumphs of the revolution," such as universal literacy — the country has the highest literacy rate in Latin America — and universal health care.

"In the hospital we visited, they are performing laparoscopies that they started two years ago. They do some organ transplants, but they have a big problem in shortages with disposable technology. When equipment breaks down, getting spare parts is very expensive because if it's American equipment, the parts will come from Third World countries.

"A specific question I had was, because treatment was free, do you have abuse of it. Do people come in for every little thing? And they said, 'Yes. That is a problem.'"

Since they were in Havana at Christmas, Rosen, the only member of the delegation from Texas, said they were astonished by the lack of Christmas celebration.

"We saw virtually no Christmas celebration. There was a tree in our hotel lobby, but people didn't say Merry Christmas to you like they do here as a matter of course. We met with the minister of religious affairs and she indicated that about five percent of the population participates in institutional religion.

"On Christmas Day, along the sea wall, there was a carnival. There were floats, people dressed up in carnival costumes, dancing on the floats. It was really interesting. Here, it was Christmas Day and these floats had absolutely no religious overtones to them at all."

Jews have migrated to Cuba for much of its history, said Rosen. "But there was a particularly large influx in the '30s before World War II as Jews tried to escape Hitler. Cuba continued to let Jewish immigrants in after the U.S. closed immigration to the Jews in the '30s. So there's a long standing connection between Cuba and the Jews of the world and the fact they were a haven when even the United States wouldn't be. It was the U.S. who finally pressured Cuba to stop letting in Jews from Europe to Cuba."

Religion was discouraged in Cuba following the revolution which placed Castro in power.

Then, in 1991, "Castro declared it was okay to be a practicing believer in religion and a good communist," Rosen said. "That's when all the religions in Cuba started coming out of the woodwork again. At the time, about 120 families were officially on government rolls as being Jewish."

They are the only Jewish families who receive meat from the kosher butcher in Havana, said Rosen. In the three years since then, 1,500 to 2,000 people have said that they are Jewish.

"They have really been cut off from the world Jewish community for the last 36 years. Part of our mission was to help bring them back into that community."

CUBA NOW HAS seven cities with identifiable Jewish populations, Rosen said, recalling his visit with the Jewish community in Cienfuegos as "the most touching part of our entire visit."

"We visited with eight families in someone's home. At the time, they were in blackout. No electricity. There are rolling blackouts in Havana and through the country. They'll have a blackout for maybe six hours one night, maybe twice a week. That house happened to be blacked out that night. So we visited with that family by lantern light, flashlight and candlelight.

"And a group of about 10 young children heartily sang a couple of Jewish songs to us. That was incredibly touching, that here having been cut off for almost 40 years from the world Jewish community, these children's voices could be so strong and so accurate in their renditions of these songs."

The up-to-date knowledge the Cubans had of U.S. pop culture astounded Rosen.

"They could tell you exactly when Michael Jordan quit playing basketball and how he's doing playing baseball. They knew the name of Madonna's latest CD. It was interesting that as cut off as it would appear that they are from the United States, they are extremely aware of American pop culture."

Cubans don't receive CNN on their television sets, Rosen said, adding that it was available on the television set in the hotel in Havana. And it's not hard to call out to the United States, at least not from the hotels, but it is more difficult to call into Cuba from the United States. In fact, his wife, Andree, was never successful reaching the hotel.

"I was usually able to get out in 10 to 15 minutes," Rosen said. "Of course, it was $3 a minute."

A LACK OF entrepreneurial spirit among the Cubans he met, troubled Rosen.

"We felt it was a pity that there really couldn't be a lot of entrepreneurship there. It was very difficult for people to establish private businesses. You know there are some private businesses, but there's so little money and people have so few assets, that a business would be very difficult."

The Cubans who seem to do best, Rosen said, have money coming in from family members outside Cuba, many of whom live in the United States or Spain. The average Cuban's monthly wage is 180 pesos. Officially, a peso is worth $1.

"The American government limits the amount that can go from the U.S. to Cuba," said Rosen. "The Cubans let in any amount."

The hotel rate in Havana was around $70 a night and included two meals, said the Midlander, who like the other members of the group paid his own way. The hotel for seven days and airfare cost around $1,350 from Miami.

Home looked good to Rosen when he arrived back in the United States.

"It was nice to be able to stop at a restaurant, read the menu and order something and not wonder whether they even have it," said Rosen. "It's nice to go to a store and see goods in the store and be able to buy them, to walk into a supermarket and buy whatever you want. Transportation to another part of the country or another city in this state is simple. No matter how poor Americans are, they've absolutely no idea how wonderful we have it here."

DEAR ABBY

Snowbird gets wings clipped before take off

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your "visiting snowbird" letter gave me a chuckle, as I had a similar experience while living in Hawaii.

One Sunday afternoon, my telephone rang, and the caller identified himself as "Joe."

"Joe who?" I inquired.

"You remember me; I used to go with your daughter in high school."

"Yes, I remember you. How are you?"

"Fine," he replied. "I understand you have built a new home in Hawaii — well, my wife and I are coming your way and we'd like to see you."

Somewhat startled, I said, "That would be nice ..."

Then he added, "My wife's folks would also like to come."

"How nice," I said.

Then Joe said, "I understand you are single now —would it be all right if I brought my mother for you?"

Van Buren

I ignored that question and asked, "Would you like me to find a two-bedroom condo? Or would a three-bedroom condo be better?"

There was a long pause. Then he said, "Well — our plans are not firmed up as yet. I will have to get back to you."

Abby, would you believe, I never heard from Joe again? — TOM IN ARIZONA

DEAR TOM: I believe you. And congratulations for having handled a rather sticky situation with tact and diplomacy.

DEAR ABBY: I have often wondered why some divorced men refer to themselves as "bachelors."

I am a genuine bachelor and consider it an insult when a divorced man refers to himself as a "bachelor." I have even heard some widowers call themselves "bachelors."

Abby, a divorced woman is called a "divorcee," so why can't they think up a name for a divorced man? Or simply call him a "divorced man" instead of a bachelor?

A genuine bachelor, in my book, is a man who has never married. — BOSTON BACHELOR

DEAR BACHELOR: Sorry, you must be looking in the wrong book. My Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (Tenth Edition) defines a bachelor as "a: an unmarried man; b: a male animal (as a fur seal) without a mate during breeding time." So, widowers and divorced men may appropriately be called bachelors.

DEAR ABBY: What? I must need glasses! I swear I must have been hallucinating when I read the letter from "Single in Long Beach."

Well, I, too, am single — in Florida — and this man must be a saint! I've never heard any man say, "I'll come early and polish silverware, stay late until all the cleanup is done ..."

Abby, how about having him come to my house and help me throw away the plastic "silverware" and paper plates? He won't have to worry about the pots and pans, because everyone will be too busy raving about the delicious dessert he brought.

I have two daughters who would look at this man with stars in their eyes and wonder how a man like this came out of extinction. He's too good to be true! — KRIS IN DESTIN, FLA.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

mission in terms of not only bringing supplies on a continuing basis, which we think we'll be able to do, but also to direct Jewish education."

Centuries ago, when Columbus landed in "Colba" Oct. 27, 1492, he encountered Indian tribes who cultivated manioc and yucca, crops which still exist there today. Although these tribes, some of whom traced their ancestry back to 3500 B.C., had disappeared as a race by 1570, the Spanish acquired a new industry through them, one which they introduced to Europe — tobacco.

The Cuban cigar, not legally purchased in the United States due to the U.S. trade embargo, is still famous throughout the world. Among the most sought after is the Cohiba cigar, which Rosen said, sold for $2.50 in Havana and $25 in London — per cigar.

In the Spanish-ruled Cuba of the 1850s Ballou described, sugar was king. This industry's foundation was slaves. Cuba's slave population in 1774 was estimated between 30,000 and 45,000. By 1860, it had jumped to 470,000 and has been estimated to have been as high as 1.5 million.

"The Cuban gentry looked to the United States, where slavery was thriving prior to 1860, to stabilize their situation and insulate Cuba from the abolitionist tendencies that were becoming popular in Europe," said Paula DiPerna in her book, "The Complete Travel Guide to Cuba."

Yet, U.S. efforts to buy the island or take it by force failed. When the American Civil War ended slavery in the United States, the institution in Cuba, which had seen its uprisings since 1533, failed and was finally abolished in 1886. Conditions did not improve much. Even the hundreds of Chinese workers, imported to Cuba to supplement the slave labor force, lived as miserably after abolition as before, said Ms. DiPerna.

Poverty was rampant. Ballou described it thus in 1885: "Saturday is the harvest day for beggars in the Cuban cities, on which occasion they go about by scores from door to door carrying a large canvas bag" for gathering rolls. "These mixed with vegetables, bits of fish and sometimes meat and bones when they can be procured are boiled into a soup, thus keeping soul and body together in the poor creatures during the week."

The 1880s and 1890s saw unprecedented U.S. investment in Cuba. By 1895, the United States had some $30 million invested there, including public works and railroads. The island, which lies 90 miles south of Key West, Fla., was, Ms. DiPerna says, "A U.S.-controlled Monopoly board."

THE SECOND Cuban revolution ended July 17, 1898. The victory was hollow for the Cuban army, which had been fighting Spain since 1868. The Cuban army was denied permission to attend the surrender ceremony by the United States, which had declared war on Spain April 25, 1898. The Cuban population then was about 1.5 million. Around 10 percent of the population had died during the war years; 60 percent was illiterate; and only 90,000 of the school-age population of 550,000 were in school.

Not until May 20, 1902, was the Cuban flag finally raised. The U.S. governor withdrew leaving behind some $100 million invested by the United States in sugar, tobacco, railroads, schools and utilities. In the republic which followed, the Cuban presidency was entered through a door controlled by the United States. "Fortunes were made and lost in sugar, but no improvement took place in the life of the average person," said Ms. DiPerna.

The average Cuban's life began to change when, on Jan. 1, 1959, the guerrilla army led by Fidel Castro marched victorious into Cuban cities. That same year, the new government reduced rents by 50 percent March 6, and declared all beaches open to the public March 17. Particularly at Varadero, many Cubans, who had lived within sight of the beach, walked on it for the first time in 1959. The precedent for private ownership of the Varadero Beach, Ms. DiPerna said, had been established in 1930, when the U.S. industrialist Irene Du Pont made extensive property purchases and built a large estate there.

Also in 1959, the First Agrarian Reform confiscated land owned by Batista supporters and fixed private land ownership at a maximum of 1,000 acres. "These socialist rumblings naturally alarmed the well-to-do, many of whom had supported Castro but were unwilling to surrender lucrative lands or rental incomes," said Ms. DiPerna. "The flight of the upper classes began."

In 1959, the population of Cuba was around 5.7 million people, said Rosen. "From the time of the revolution to 10 years after, about 20 percent of the population left. There were 15,000 Jews at the time of the revolution, and 90 percent of those people left."

IN DECEMBER of 1960, the new government launched an aggressive literacy campaign which lasted a year. The illiteracy rate dropped from around "25 percent to 3.9 percent," said Ms. DiPerna, "which today includes non-Spanish speaking immigrants and those with learning disabilities."

Castro's government began to nationalize U.S. properties — the refineries, factories and utilities. "More nationalization," Ms. DiPerna said, "including Cuban-owned large businesses, preceded the suspension of diplomatic relations between the United States and Cuba in 1960."

The 1961 Bay of Pigs fiasco followed by a U.S. embargo on all trade with Cuba, and the subsequent international crises in 1962, when the United States imposed a military blockade on the island in protest of the Soviet deployment of missiles there, led to a total break in diplomatic relations between the two countries. Castro had declared himself a Marxist-Leninist in December of 1961. U.S. citizens were forbidden to travel to Cuba, and for most, Cuba faded into the communist world.

Times have been difficult in Cuba since the fall of communism in the former USSR, but Rosen saw no homeless, no people living on the streets, in any of the four cities they visited — Havana, Cienfuegos, Trinidad or Varadero.

"One of the goals of the revolution was to redistribute housing, which they did," he said. "I ran into a family of doctors who had been living in a big two story house, and it was taken away from them and they were moved to a much smaller apartment."

Yet, he met many Cubans who were hungry.

"It was clear that some of the reasons that Jewish people came to the synagogue were the meals that they got after Saturday morning services," Rosen said. "At our churches and synagogues we get good turnout when we put on a meal, but it's not because people need the food. There, it was clear that food was a strong enticement to participation."

Since October, farmers have been allowed to sell produce directly to customers. The prices are set by supply and demand, not by state dictate. In January, the Washington Post reported that 160 such markets were operating across Cuba. Unlike the dollar stores, the money exchanged is Cuban pesos. However, prices are high. Pork, the most prized item, costs at least 40 pesos a pound for the best cuts — more than one-fourth the average Cuban's monthly wage of 180 pesos, reported the Jan. 23 Washington Post article.

"Officially, the peso is worth $1, but on the black market a dollar will buy 50," the article said. "Yucca costs 2 pesos per piece, oranges 1 peso each, rice 7 pesos per pound. A box lunch of pork, rice and fried bananas goes for 30 pesos."

ROSEN DISCOVERED there were "not a lot of goods readily available for ordinary Cubans to buy in stores. Clothing and food (not the food bought in the farmers markets) are rationed. For example, you get a booklet or a coupon that allows you to buy one dress in the first quarter of 1995, but you still have to have the money for it.

"In stores, there were some goods that there were no controls on, that you didn't need a coupon for. We saw people lined up outside. Even outside many of the dollar stores, ingress and egress was controlled. They didn't let too many people in at once."

The dollar stores, Rosen said, "Are those in which there are plenty of imported goods of all kinds—food, hardware, clothing — that cap only be bought with dollars. Dollar stores are run by the government. And they are full of people with money, but it's clear that there's the poor and the slightly better off poor."

The dollar stores he entered were located in a "well-to-do neighborhood" at 42nd and Fifth Avenue, Havana. He found the address ironic because it was the same as the New York City address of 42nd and Fifth Avenue, where exclusive stores are located. The Havana dollar stores at that address were, Rosen said, "Full of people buying stuff. I recall a pretty top of the line refrigerator priced at $3,000. I couldn't imagine who would buy that in Cuba. That's a lot of money for a refrigerator even here."

During his week in Cuba, Rosen found the Cubans to be "intelligent, enthusiastic people who are in a rough situation.

"A good wage for doctors or engineers was approximately $5 (300 pesos) a month. Everyone was given a ration of six pounds of rice, beans and peas, and a little bit of chicken per month. Their salary goes on to supplement food, clothing and rent."

Other scarcities exist in Cuba. Numerous buildings and houses need repairs and fresh paint.

"The buildings were probably beautiful when they were built in the '40s and '50s, but they haven't been kept up, virtually everything needs a coat of paint, needs upkeep," Rosen said. "In the synagogues, the ceilings were falling down, the chairs had big holes in them. We can't see using $200,000 to $300,000 to fix up a synagogue, when the people need money for food, clothing and transportation.

"In the town of Trinidad, we went into a church to compare the upkeep of that church to the upkeep of the synagogue. It was in perfect shape. And we think that's primarily due to donations from tourists and the international Catholic Church."

As for the Cubans they met, Rosen said, "We wished we could have gathered them up and brought them to the United States and given them a better life, but that's just not reality. There will be continuing help. This wasn't a one time mission. We're going to continue aid to the extent that's allowed."

Dinosaur fossils visit U.S.

ATLANTA (AP) — A collection of 75 dinosaur fossils rarely seen outside their native China and Mongolia will be shown in Atlanta. The exhibit, which includes an 85-foot-long, 25-foot tall Sauropod and 13 other complete creatures unearthed in China and the Gobi Desert, will open April 1 at the Fernbank Museum of Natural History. The fossils, which are all from the Cretaceous period of 65 million to 145 million years ago, were last shown in Tokyo in 1990. This is the first showing in the U.S.

"The Great Dinosaurs of China" exhibit is cosponsored by the Beijing and Inner Mongolian Museums of Natural History.

Tickets for the exhibit, which runs through Dec. 31, are $9.50 for adults and $7.50 for children, students and senior citizens.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

West Texas gardeners face challenges from weather, water, soil

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Do you remember June 1994? For days temperatures soared well above 100 degrees F., and hot dry winds sucked the moisture out of man, beast and plant.

Benge-Frost

If you garden or spend much time outside, I'm sure it made an impression on you. Plants took a beating, and in some cases, only the tough survived. What to know what can make your landscape a survivor?

Gardening in West Texas is a challenge, to say the least, but summers like this last one can make you take another look at how it's being done. To keep your landscape on the survivor list, consider xeriscape. Xeriscape is a name coined for a sensible approach to beautiful, creative landscaping but with water conservation methods.

Xeriscape embraces seven principles. These principles are actually age-old, basic horticulture techniques that have been put in a slick package called xeriscape. Those principles are:

- planning and design
- soil analysis and improvements
- appropriate plant selection
- practical turf sizes
- mulches
- efficient irrigation methods
- appropriate maintenance.

Xeriscape is not gravel, concrete and cacti. It can have all the elements of a traditional landscape, but without the flagrant use of water.

Xeriscape isn't new, but the word is. The emphasis of using all seven principles may be a new way of presenting a practical way of having a beautiful landscape and being a good steward of our limited water supply. Let's look briefly at the seven principles.

■ Planning and design. With any good landscape, a plan is critical. Creating the desired effect includes a well though-out landscape design. A sketch of your home, property lines, existing features, utility lines and hardscaping can get you off to a good start. Identifying the public, private and service areas of your property is next. From that point, appearance, function, maintenance and water requirements come into play.

An excellent opportunity to learn how to do this extremely important step is at the Home Landscape School, 7 p.m. April 10, 11, 17 and 18 at the Confederate Air Force Museum Headquarters at Midland Air Terminal. More details next month.

■ Soil analysis and improvements. To increase the water- and nuritent-holding capacities of the soil, improve plant growth and rooting, organic matter can be added to the soil. Thoroughly till in four inches of organic matter (shredded bark, compost, leaves, cotton burs, etc.) into color beds, gardens and landscape beds.

■ Appropriate plant selection. Select plants that have a proven track record in our area - plants that are tough, drought tolerant and pest resistant. Plants can be native or introduced, but make sure they can tolerate hot, dry, alkaline conditions. There are many great, good looking and hardy plants to choose from.

■ Practical turf sizes. Use manageable amounts of turf. Grass is the biggest user of water and requires the most maintenance. Reducing large turf areas by increasing the size of landscaped beds and hardscaping (such as decks and patios) will result in water savings, a beautiful and more functional landscape.

■ Mulches. No other practice can make a bigger difference in plants than mulching. Mulching with three- and four-inch layers of organic material can conserve water, reduce soil surface salts, moderate soil temperature fluctuations, reduce weeds and much more. Shredded wood chips, compost, pine bark, cotton seed hulls, pine needles and more can be used. This will make a big difference in plant performance and water saving. Remember, mulch is a layer of material on top of the soil, like a blanket.

■ Efficient irrigation. Whether it is hose-end sprinkler, automatic sprinkler or drip irrigation, the goal is to give plants a sufficient amount of water, but without waste. Too many times automatic sprinklers are timed to come on too frequently and for too short a period of time. This practice can cause shallow rooting and waste water. Another problem with many irrigation systems is the grass areas and bed areas are all watered on the same frequency. In reality, grass needs to be watered more often than landscaped beds, trees and shrubs. In fact, trees, shrubs, ground covers and perennials would be healthier without frequent irrigations.

■ Appropriate maintenance. Regular maintenance will preserve the beauty of a xeriscape and continue the water conservation. These maintenance practices include proper fertilization, properly timed pest control, proper pruning and periodic check of irrigation. For example, grass can be maintained more water-efficiently by cutting the grass on a five- or six-day basis, cutting it a little taller, using slow release fertilizers and watering with one inch on an "as needed" basis.

When you take these seven principles and put them together in a landscape, the results are a beautiful landscape that conserves water and makes your landscape a survivor.

To find out more about xeriscape principles, growing plants and West Texas and native plants that will beautify your landscape, attend the final session of Spring Garden School: Xeriscape and Landscaping with Native Plants 7 p.m. Tuesday at CAF at Midland Air Terminal. Preregister at Ector of Midland County Extension offices. Preregistration is $5 per household. Registration at the door is $10 per household. Speakers will be Burr Williams, educational director of Sibley Learning Center, and Suellis Bryant, master gardener with native plant expertise. For more information call 335-3071 or 687-1351.

Deborah Benge-Frost is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector Counties.

Center offers second chance

Most students entering college now will need to take the Texas Academic Skills Program (TASP) test before completing nine semester hours of college courses.

The TASP test is a state-required test designed to ensure that students who enroll in Texas public colleges and universities have the necessary academic skills to perform effectively in college.

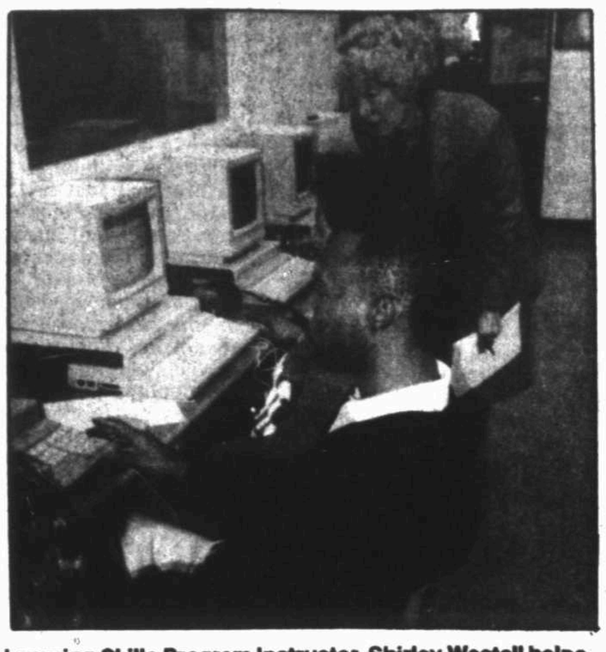

The Midland College Learning Skills Center in the Occupational Technical Building is offering an open lab to provide anyone an opportunity to study for each area of the TASP test.

"It's highly recommended that people prepare for the TASP so they will be more successful when they take the test and eliminate having to take state-mandated remediation courses," Cindy Turland, Learning Skills Center director, said.

Instruction is one-on-one in reading, writing and math with computer assisted instruction available.

Course fee is $25 and students may register through the Continuing Education Department. Lab hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and 8 a.m.-9 p.m. Tuesday-Thursday.

Midland College students who not fall under the requirements for TASP remediation but who want an academic refresher course can take flexible entry courses in READ 0190.FE, MATH 0190.FE or ENGL 0190.FE. These developmental lab courses, designed to increase a student's skill level, are not normally transferable.

Learning Skills Program Instructor Shirley Westall helps a student through a computer tutorial. Students in the Learning Skills Center attend labs designed to improve their academic skills or prepare for the GED. Citizenship classes, English as a Second Language and a Literacy Program through Midland Need to Read is also offered.

New sections of these courses begin Monday of each month. Students may register during regular registration or through the first class day of any given section.

Students may be referred to and begin attending the Learning Skills Lab at anytime.

Hours for these flexible entry labs are 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and 8 a.m.-9 p.m. Tuesday-Thursday. Cost for the program is the cost of one additional lab hour.

The Learning Skills Center also offers instruction in GED Preparation for persons who did not finish high school.

"We're looking forward to a May traditional graduation ceremony for those who have participated in the Midland College GED preparation program," Turland said.

She added that it is not too late for students to begin GED preparation classes now and still graduate in May.

Other classes offered in the Learning Skills Center include Adult Basic Education classes for persons who would like to learn to read, write or improve their basic academic skills, English as a Second Language for adults needing reading, writing, speaking and listening English language skills, Citizenship classes for Resident Legal Aliens who need to prepare for American citizenship and a Literacy Program through Midland Need to Read.

"We offer educational opportunities to people in the community who may need a second chance to be successful students," Turland said.

For information about the Learning Skills Center, call 685-4567.

Resisting advances

Lizzie (Jodi McElligott) resists the advances of Starbuck (Jack Cotton), left, in this scene from MCT's production of "The Rainmaker." H.C. Richard Nash's "The Rainmaker."

"The Rainmaker" photos by Joe D. Williams

"Comic, but not slapstick; poignant, but not melodramatic."

'The Rainmaker'

A drought has laid siege to the community, blighting the dreams of all who live there. Suddenly, like an avenging angel, Bill Starbuck arrives. He promises rain. All it will cost is money.

N. Richard Nash's "The Rainmaker" washes Theatre Midland's stage through March 18 as Midland Community Theatre presents a revival of the 1954 American classic.

"The play is as moving now as it was 40 years ago because of its beautiful structure," said director Shawn Watson, teacher of dramatic literature and theater arts at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "The conflict is carefully shaped to lead to a confrontation that is both exciting and poignant."

"Rain in a dry season is a sight to behold," Starbuck tells the family of ranchers that is watching its cattle die. Older brother Noah Curry, played by MCT newcomer Harrell Sharrick, suspects a con. Younger brother Jim, played by Shane Manley, declares that he believes Starbuck can produce rain.

The father, H.C., played by Corby Considine, is skeptical, but willing to chance it and his $100 to find out if the rainmaker can produce. The rancher with the most at stake is the daughter, plain Lizzie, played by Jodie McElligott, who has walked long down her path to spinsterhood.

"The characters are cleverly handled," Ms. Watson said. "They seem like the 'folks next door,' but at the same time they are larger than life; they represent some of out worst fears and greatest hopes."

"The Rainmaker" is on stage in Theatre Midland's Mabee Theatre II, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., while the opening musical, "Annie," is running in the Davis Theatre. Both are revival productions being staged during MCT's 50th anniversary season.

"The Rainmaker" was originally produced at MCT in February 1957 with Herb Wales in the role of Starbuck. The production, which ran for three nights, was presented in the auditorium of San Jacinto Junior High School.

Then, the play was only three years old, and had started as a television script. Billed as a "cloudburst of a hit," the comedy enjoyed successful runs on Broadway and in London. It was later made into a movie starring Burt Lancaster and Katharine Hepburn.

"The thing that is particularly delightful about this show is that it is a Western and the local color will appeal to a lot of people, but the plot will have universal appeal because it is a family story and a love story," Ms. Watson said.

Jack Cotton makes his Midland Community Theatre debut as Starbuck, the rainmaker.

"He's a con man, a 1920s used-cars salesman," Cotton said of Starbuck. "He's a romantic dreamer. He lives in his own world."

Although new to the MCT stage, Cotton, who is the executive chef at Green Tree Country Club, has worked on several productions in Odessa, including "Lone Star" at UTPB and "Hamlet" and "Romeo and Juliet" at the Globe Theatre. He auditioned for "The Rainmaker" because he had previously worked with the director.

Others in the cast include MCT newcomer Jim King in the role of Deputy File and MCT veteran Larry Elkins as the sheriff. Assistant director is Deborah Morton. Corby Archa is the stage manager. Set

MCC kicks off membership drive

The membership drive for Midland Community Concerts' 1995-96 season of family musical entertainment kicks off Monday.

"We would be happy with 1,400," said Dorothy Perkins, publicity chairman for MCC. "We got up to almost 1,200 this year. Floyd Cramer helped us tremendously."

New members who sign up by March 13 will receive as a bonus the two remainin g concerts in the 1994-95 season: the Bulgarian Children's Chorus, March 13, and pianist and comedian Dale Gonyea, April 6. Both are at 7 p.m. at Midland High School Auditorium. Concerts in the 1995-96 season will be at the same location at 7:30 p.m.

"We're compromising from the early birds to the late birds," Ms. Perkins said.

Admission to concerts is by season membership only. Those memberships cost $30 for adults, $10 for students through high school and $70 for a family membership. Newcomers will be entitled to attend the last two concerts of the 1994-95 season at no extra cost.

"We hope they will hasten to join us," said Ms. Perkins, who has been a member since MCC's inception in the 1940s.

"In its 48th year of furnishing the best quality professional performers, the new season opens with the hilarious off-Broadway musical 'Forever Plaid,' in October," Ms. Perkins said. "It's touring the country and is a very popular attraction.

"The creators of it are the same ones who did 'The Taffetas,' which was produced here a few years ago, and people will remember happily what a good production that was."

Next up will be "The Magic of Ballroom" with the Fred Astaire Studio Dancers.

The grant will cover the usual 75 cents per student fee for tours on a first-come, first-serve basis for the first 6,000 students to tour museum exhibitions. Discounted tours are offered for all major institute exhibitions.

Edward W. Taylor and period costumes are by Mae Dawson.

When the play opens, Watson said, "The Curry family is at an impasse. Nobody has what he or she needs or wants, but in the course of the play, all of the problems are solved, making the ending the start of a new life for everybody concerned. That is what gives the play its tone of optimism, but its charm comes from its characters."

Tickets are priced at $8 for Friday and Saturday and $6 for Thursday and Sunday. For reservations call 682-4111. The production is being co-produced by Midland American Bank.

Ms. Watson said the play is a mixture of whimsy and sentiment, humor and romance and challenges the director and actors "to capture the right tone. 'The Rainmaker' is comic, but not slapstick; poignant, but not melodramatic."

Then, the Imperial Chinese Acrobats and Magicians will perform in February 1996. Featured during the 1992 tour of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, the acrobats will return to North America for their own coast-to-coast tour.

The season closes in April 1996 with the Harlem Spiritual Ensemble singing gospel and spirituals.

"The Harlem Spiritual Ensemble has not toured this direction either, so we're fortunate to get them in West Texas," Ms. Perkins said.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A promising relationship will continue to grow. As spring approaches, concentrate on getting a business on a sound financial footing. A creative project that catches the public's fancy will prove especially profitable. Romance should be a source of deep satisfaction throughout the summer. Encourage teen-agers to live up to their potential. A hasty marriage or impulsive business alliance could bring regrets. Look before you leap!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE! actress Samantha Eggar, magician Penn Jillette, football player Rocky Bleier, actress Marsha Warfield.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Give your family and friends more pats on the back. Accepting a luncheon invitation could bring unexpected perks. Romance deserves more time and attention. Show your one-and-only how much you truly care.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Domestic tension could be related to a financial situation. You may have to pay a price for having taken the wrong advice. A secret wish will come true if you are patient. Be affectionate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Swiftly-unfolding developments could keep you on edge. Do your best to avert a verbal clash with a relative or in-law. Being at odds with a family member could complicate a property matter.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your outside activities could be thrown off-course by an idea brewing on the home front. Be a good sport if you must alter your plans. Wrap up the weekend with a cozy supper.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you decide to redecorate your living quarters, keep a close eye on expenses. Otherwise, you could end up with a big dent in your budget. Singles are reminded to repay their married friends' hospitality.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Handle your financial affairs in the most discreet manner possible. Protect both personal and joint interests. Keeping track of expenditures proves surprisingly easy.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Discussions with kinfolk or nice neighbors adds to a spirited and entertaining day. Go out for a walk if the weather permits. A chance encounter could prove fortuitous. Strike while the iron is hot.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not believe everything you hear or read today. Someone's impression could be way off-base. Investigate the background of anyone offering you a "steal."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A good day to focus on the creative pursuits you enjoy most. An intellectual debate proves highly stimulating. Be open to new ideas. Put romance on the back burner while you look up old friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Going public with a controversial idea will not win you new friends. Bide your time; you will attract more allies using honey than vinegar. Plan on ordering a household item by phone or mail.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A business or financial success will prompt others to pass on the good word about you. Do not quibble about the precise circumstances. Someone's "good news" could take you by surprise. Be discreet.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A friend's problem could suddenly become very costly. Offer a sympathetic shoulder but little or no money. Your popularity continues to grow. Be wary of romantic overtures from someone who already has a partner.

Sometimes you can benefit in strange ways from good technique. Consider this example.

The key to North-South reaching the excellent diamond slam was North's decision to raise to game with a singleton queen. South decided that his prime values and intermediates warranted contracting for 12 tricks in that suit.

West led a middling heart, taken in dummy. The queen of trumps was cashed, and declarer came to hand with the king of clubs to cash the two high diamonds, discarding a card from each major from the table — had the suit split evenly, 12 tricks would have been there for the taking and South would have been playing for overtricks. However, West had a sure trump trick, so it seemed that declarer would have to guess the location of the queen of spades to get home.

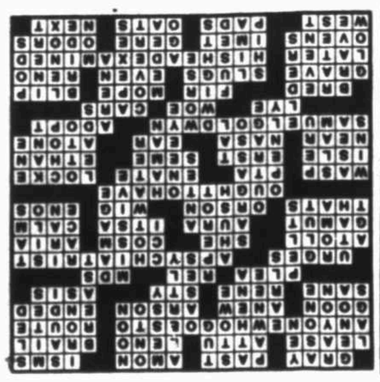

First, however, declarer tested another chance, crossing to the ace of clubs and ruffing the low club in an attempt to drop the queen. No luck.

Still not content with trying to guess the spades, declarer entered dummy with the ace of hearts and ruffed a heart, then led a spade to the ace and ruffed dummy's remaining club with the last trump. The defense was dead.

If West pitched a spade, declarer would cash the high spade in hand and West's trump and East's queen of spades would both win the last trick. But overruffing was no better. West would then have to lead a spade into declarer's tenace, resolving the problem in that suit. Making six-odd.

A PINNACLE PRODUCTION

Russian opera singers scale new heights, enjoy new opportunities

By Cori Ellison
N.Y. Times News Service

Russia's choicest exports, operatically speaking, have always been its lower voices, the fruity mezzo-sopranos, sturdy baritones and cavernous basses whose earthy tones roll down as smoothly as 100-proof vodka.

Russian sopranos have been more of an acquired taste, like kvass, the viscous brown home brew with the wild afterbite. Even the greatest example in recent memory, Galina Vishnevskaya, was prized more for her sterling artistry than for her steely timbre.

But all that has changed. In the last few years, Russia's sopranos have been enjoying a roaring trade in the free-market economy.

The smoldering Maria Guleghina has become a mainstay of the Metropolitan Opera's verismo wing; the shimmering coloratura Olga Makarina will soon headline the New York City Opera's new production of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor," and the promising baby-dramatic Marina Shaguch just may be the Norma everyone has been waiting for in the Bellini opera of that name.

In recent days, two of Russia's finest sopranos, Galina Gorchakova and Lyuba Kazarnovskaya, have been on display at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in New York City, alternating in the monumental role of Fevronia in the Kirov Opera production of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh."

Ms. Gorchakova gives the final performance this afternoon, and Ms. Kazarnovskaya will be heard in recital on Monday evening at the Walter Reade Theater.

Neither singer is a stranger to New York. The robust Ms. Gorchakova seized attention three years ago, during the Kirov's appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House. As Renata in Prokofiev's "Fiery Angel," she unfurled a glinting, indomitable, apparently effortless theater-filler of a voice with the androgynous snarl of a Rosa Ponselle or a Maria Callas, riding easily over Prokofiev's orchestral tempests.

Her Met debut, as Cio-Cio San in Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" in January, also produced sure and imposing vocalism despite a less felicitous pairing of artist and repertory; this Butterfly was as hardy as a waterbug.

Ms. Kazarnovskaya's warmly received Met debut, as Tatyana in "Yevgeny Onegin" in December 1992, revealed another instrument of generous size, but it was her generosity of spirit that struck audiences first. More recently at the Met, her ripe, buckwheat-and-honey timbre and embracing stage presence made her a heart-tugging Desdemona in Verdi's "Otello" and a rousing Nedda in Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci."

Had these women been born a decade earlier, Western tongues might never have tripped over their names.

"If it weren't for glasnost, I'd still be working in some provincial theater or the Novosibirsk Opera," Ms. Gorchakova said in blunt Russian in a recent telephone conversation from St. Petersburg, where she lives with her husband, Nikolai Mikhalsky, a bass, and their 8-year-old son.

"If it weren't for glasnost, I'd still be working in some provincial theater or the Novosibirsk Opera.'
—Galina Gorchakova, Russian soprano

Born 32 years ago in Novosibirsk, Siberia, to a soprano and a baritone employed at the opera house there, Ms. Gorchakova studied opera, essentially a Western European art form, during one of the iciest phases of the cold war. "The isolation from the West probably influenced our everyday lives more than our training," she said. "Our education consisted mostly of studying the foundations of classical music, which is known to both East and West. And we had recordings."

Ms. Kazarnovskaya, who is 35 and was born in Moscow, begs to differ.

"Most Russians didn't really have a chance to know the true Italian school," she said in fluid, ebullient English in her apartment on the Upper West Side of Manhattan as her 20-month-old son Andryusha provided an obbligato of polyglot babble. "They were singing in the Soviet tradition, like all the Russian sopranos in the 50s and 60s, and thought they were the best in the world. But it was awful. The poor people didn't know how to produce the right sound. Very rarely, we heard something like the tour of La Scala in the 70s, with the young Caballe and Domingo.

"Only because of glasnost, perestroika and the breaking of the Iron Curtain, we started to hear what's going on in the West, to relearn style and languages," she continued, mourning the prerevolutionary golden age, when Moscow and St. Petersburg were international opera centers and sopranos like Nina Koshetz, Felia Litvinne, Medea Mei-Figner and Antonina Nezhdanova were jewels in the czar's crown.

Ms. Kazarnovskaya attributes her success to an unusual background. The daughter of a philologist and a military historian, she enrolled at 16 in Knessini College in Moscow to study with Nadezhda Malysheva, an accompanist of Fyodor Chaliapin, who drilled her in Italian vocalises and art songs. Three years later, she went to the Moscow Conservatory to work with Elena Shumilova, a Bolshoi diva who had studied exclusively with Italian teachers.

At 22, Ms. Kazarnovskaya made her professional debut, as Tatyana at the Stanislavsky Theater in Moscow, where she also sang Puccini's "Boheme," Gounod's "Faust" and Verdi's "Battaglia di Legnano," all in Russian. "Until a few years ago," she said, "we didn't sing Western operas in the original languages."

The next year, Yevgeny Svetlanov invited her to make her Bolshoi debut in "Onegin." In 1986, Yuri Temirkanov chose her for the Kirov's new production of Verdi's "Forza del Destino," and she remained a company stalwart until 1989.

Soon after Ms. Kazarnovskaya left the Kirov, Ms. Gorchakova arrived to fill the vacuum, fresh from two seasons as a house soprano in the remote Yekaterinburg. Her 1990 Kirov debut, as Yaroslavna in Borodin's "Prince Igor," immediately established her as prima donna.

But for political vagaries, the story might have ended there for both sopranos. In 1989, just before the collapse of the Soviet Union, Ms. Kazarnovskaya was forced to leave Russia because of her marriage to a Viennese agent, Robert Roszyk. He helped her make connections in the West, and before long she was busy working with conductors like Daniel Barenboim, Charles Dutoit, Bernard Haitink and Riccardo Muti.

Ms. Gorchakova stayed in St. Petersburg long enough to reap the benefits of glasnost, perestroika and the fall of communism.

The Kirov and its new artistic director, Valery Gergiyev, made tours and recordings that served as a mighty springboard for her career. After a 1991 concert presentation of "The Fiery Angel" in London, Ms. Gorchakova found herself in demand at houses like La Scala and Covent Garden.

Although the two divas share a few roles, their career paths and artistic profiles contrast as sharply as their voices. Ms. Gorchakova plans to keep the Tchaikovsky roles Tatyana and Lisa (in "Queen of Spades") in her repertory and to sing both at the Met.

But to preserve her vocal well-being, she has dropped the punishing "Fiery Angel."

Ms. Kazarnovskaya's menu is more eclectic. After her recital, she will take part in concert performances of Verdi's "Trovatore" with the Israel Philharmonic, sing Vitellia in Mozart's "Clemenza di Tito" in Buenos Aires and return to the Kirov for Richard Strauss's "Salome."

Exhibit celebrates works of Duchamp, Man Ray — friends, rule breakers

By Vicki Goldberg
N.Y. Times News Service

It was a marriage of true minds, with scarcely an impediment. Well, language may have been a problem at first. In 1915, when Marcel Duchamp and Man Ray met on Duchamp's first trip here from France, they could barely communicate in the usual way, which was seldom their primary interest anyway.

At their first meeting, they played tennis without a net, carefully keeping score. Robert Frost would compare free verse to playing tennis without a net, meaning that rules were necessary to give resonance to art; Duchamp and Man Ray made careers out of breaking rules in pursuit of new resonance and new ways of playing the game.

By the time they met, Duchamp (1887-1968) had already contributed to the founding of Dada in Europe. His "Nude Descending a Staircase" had caused a scandal at the 1913 Armory Show in New York; one newspaper called it an "explosion in a shingle factory," and even Teddy Roosevelt berated it.

Man Ray (1890-1976) did not have his first one-man show until a month or so after their meeting, but he was already operating on a Dada wavelength. Their free-verse tennis match initiated a 53-year friendship.

"Conspiratorial Laughter — A Friendship: Man Ray and Duchamp," at the Zabriskie Gallery in New York City through April 15, celebrates that half century.

On view are close to 90 objects, photographs (including a couple of previously unpublished Man Rays), publications, ephemera and films, adding up to a healthy slice of history. Not exactly a retrospective of either artist, it does give Duchamp in outline, partly through Man Ray's photographs.

The show also clarifies Duchamp's well-known influence on his friend, elucidates their collaboration in the 20s and suggests Man Ray's importance to Duchamp and his reputation.

Duchamp designed his own compact, lightweight retrospective, then edited and reissued it several times. The contents of the 1968 version are on view in the Zabriskie show, titled "From or by Marcel Duchamp or Rrose Selavy (the Box in a Valise)," a briefcase-sized green box filled with miniature replicas and reproductions of much of his work.

He must be the first artist to have willingly squeezed his career into a suitcase, as if to make of his devotees traveling salesmen for his fame.

Photography and mechanical reproduction, both of which interested him greatly, made this compression possible. So did the fact that he did not produce much; he notoriously withdrew from art in 1923 to devote himself to chess (while slyly continuing to make art and maintain his position in the art world ever after).

Duchamp stands with Picasso as one of the revolutionaries of 20th-century art and in fact profoundly changed the very nature of what could be called art. Man Ray was his American avatar, a genuine artist whose ample wit and vitality cannot save him from seeming derivative beside his close friend.

Duchamp's ready-mades (the bicycle wheel, bottle rack, urinal) questioned the accepted dogmas of originality and artistic signature — the mark of the artist's hand. The ready-mades glorified the machine-age multiple and put forward the new dictum that any object could be art if an artist said it was.

His reliance on irony and continuous play with language cast art in new molds. His supposed withdrawal from the field (though far too few artists have followed him there) underlined the emphasis he placed on the mind's role in art, posited an even more extensive interconnection between life and art than the ready-mades had, and burnished both his myth and the concept of the grand gesture as a work of art in itself.

And his greatest work, "The Bride Stripped Bare by Her Bachelors, Even (The Large Glass)," must be the earliest example in art of the miserable 20th-century notion that men and women cannot communicate, not even in sexual matters.

Duchamp's theories lurk somewhere in the background of Dada, aspects of Surrealism, camp, the neo-Dada of Robert Rauschenberg and Jasper Johns, Pop Art, Op Art, conceptualism and postmodernism.

Man Ray was long neglected in America, but his stock has risen greatly in recent years, in part because the ascent of photography brought to the fore his brilliant photographs. He himself dearly hoped that people would ignore these and pay attention to his paintings instead.

The Zabriskie show suggests that his photographs were his major contribution to Duchamp's art and reputation. He documented his elegant friend, helping to insure his inscription in the cult of personality.

(The show's many photographs of Duchamp and of the two of them records not only a friendship but an artist who did not bequeath many objects to be exhibited.) Man Ray documented Duchamp's objects, some of which subsequently disappeared.

Duchamp and Man Ray were both outrageous when outrage still had an effect. Man Ray glued a picture of an eye to a metronome and called it "Object to Be Destroyed"; someone destroyed it at an opening.
