Officials eye Richards' role in UTPB expansion

■ Rep. Gary Watkins and Sen. John Montford hope Gov.-elect Ann Richards won't veto the bill they plan to file calling for expansion of UTPB.

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Election of Ann Richards as governor gives two Odessa-area lawmakers hope they can achieve expansion of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin over the objections of Midland legislators.

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, and Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, this past week said they plan to file a bill in the 72nd regular session that would enable UTPB to enroll freshmen and sophomores, despite opposition from Midland.

Republican Gov. Bill Clements in 1989 vetoed a similar provision to expand UTPB. Watkins and Montford, who represents Odessa, said they do not expect opposition from Ms. Richards, a Democrat.

"We're a great deal more optimistic," Watkins said. "The governor's office was a stumbling block last time and we feel like that shouldn't be a problem this time."

Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who also represents Midland, have not changed their opposition to expansion of the university.

"Midland College has not changed its position, either," said Jess Parrish, MC president. "We made our position plain last year," he said. "We are not opposed to UTPB obtaining four-year status as long as a major institution is developed at Midland College."

Midland College officials had previously requested that a UTPB facility be developed adjacent to the campus. In December of 1989, UTPB's Development Board offered a compromise plan between the two cities which called for four-year status at the university along with four-year teaching status to begin simultaneously at Odessa College and MC.

The Midland satellite facility would have 20 to 25 classrooms with space for support personnel.

Craddick said there has been no apparent progress in settling the controversy involving UTPB's presence in Midland. He said he will remain opposed to UTPB expansion unless the bill takes care of affected junior colleges and there is an agreement between the cities, but Watkins said he will proceed with or without an agreement.

"It really gets down to Midland wants it in Midland," Watkins said. "I think the community colleges, mainly Odessa, Midland and Howard community colleges, realize it's not really going to be a major impact on their institutions."

"It will impact us," MC President Parrish said. "Here we go again. We worked on this the last four sessions and outlined our conditions then."

Watkins said he expects to get together with Montford in December to draw up a bill that will be filed jointly in the House and Senate.

Hugs for Santa

Teachers reassured about list

■ Teachers were concerned that the list of who voted in recent bond election would be used against them.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Teachers concerned about being reprimanded for not voting in the school district's recent bond election, can rest easy, according to administrators.

Although some teachers — and other school district employees — expressed concern over the fact that the school district purchased the voter list from the Oct. 6 bond election, it won't be used to intimidate persons who did not vote.

The list was purchased strictly to analyze the results of the election, according to Joseph Baressi Jr., superintendent for Midland Independent School District. "The list was given to Larry Lusby (MISD computer and long-range planning director), to put the results into a computer," Baressi said. "No one else will see the list."

Baressi said the school district wanted to analyze the list as part of a project to investigate why the $24.5 million bond issue failed.

"We found out that we had a low turnout of employees, a low turnout of parents and a low turnout of voters overall," he said.

4 persons hospitalized after 2-vehicle accident

Staff Report

Four persons were hospitalized, all in critical condition, following a two-vehicle accident Saturday night, police said.

At 6:15 p.m., a 1983 four-door Chevy Impala westbound on Ohio collided with a 1988 two-door Action Wrecker truck southbound on Andrews Highway, the police report said. The right side of the Impala was severely damaged.

The street was blocked off quickly following the accident. Rescuers on the scene included the Midland police, fire department rescue units Station One and Battalion One and three ambulances.

Emergency medical assistants employed the "jaws of life" to remove the four occupants of the Impala. According to police reports, occupants of the Impala included the driver, Theresa W. Wiggins, 32; Matthew Wiggins, 13, seated in the right front seat; Donnie Wiggins, 4, seated in the back left seat; and Edrei Hendrix, 11, seated in the back right seat.

All four occupants were taken to Midland Memorial Hospital and were all listed in critical condition late Saturday night, reports said. Donnie was later transported to Odessa Medical Center.

James Wilmes, 29, the driver of the Action Wrecker was en route to the scene of another accident at the time of the collision, police said. He and his son, Corey, 8, were not injured in the accident.

Police said no citations had been issued at press time.

Emergency personnel assist the passengers of a 1983 four-door Chevy Impala involved in an accident with a truck. The accident occured about 6:15 p.m. Saturday at the intersection of Andrews Highway and Ohio Street. The "jaws of life" was used to remove passengers from the vehicle. One woman and three children were in critical condition late Saturday night as a result of their injuries.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair skies forecast

Staff Report

Today's forecast is for fair skies and warmer temperatures with a high near 80. Winds will be south 10-20 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is predicted to be fair with a low near 50.

Monday's forecast is fair and warm with a high in the low 70s, the NWS said.

Sunday's high was 65, compared to the record high of 84, set in 1981. The record low for today's date is 19, set in 1980.

STATE

A ridge of high pressure centered over the Mississippi Valley continued building across North Texas Saturday while cloudy skies and mild Autumn temperatures dominated weather patterns across most of the state.

Skies were clear in West Texas, except cloudy skies over the Panhandle and south plains, with southerly winds at 10-20 mph and temperatures mostly in the lower 60s.

Afternoon highs ranged from 59 in Amarillo and Dalhart to 69 in Sanderson.

Skies were partly to mostly cloudy across South Texas with hazy conditions in areas around Beaumont and Port Arthur.

Winds were light and variable with temperatures ranging from the lower 70s in the Hill Country to the low 80s in the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Sunday were expected to range from the 60s in North Texas to near 80 in the Rio Grande Valley, while evening lows were to dip into the 30s in the Panhandle and near 60 in the south.

NATION

Dry weather prevailed across most of the nation Saturday, but a blizzard brought snow and strong winds to northern Alaska and showers dampened the Atlantic coast and the Northwest.

A cold front scattered rain from Maine through New York state to the mid-Atlantic coast Thursday afternoon while another cold front brought rain to Washington state, northern Idaho and western Oregon.

Temperatures were in the 40s and 50s across much of the nation east of the Rocky Mountains Saturday afternoon while clouds, rain and blustery northwest winds kept temperatures in the 30s in the northern Atlantic coastal region.

In the northern and central high Plains, westerly winds pushed temperatures into the 60s and 70s. Highs were in the 70s and lower 80s from southern Texas to Florida.

Temperatures in the West were mostly in the 40s and 50s at midday, but warmed into the 80s in the southwestern deserts. Yuma, Ariz., reported a high of 88 degrees at 4 p.m. EST.

Early morning lows Saturday ranged from the the 50s and lower 60s in the southwestern deserts to the upper teens and 20s in the northern plateau and the northern Rocky Mountain region.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

Associated Press

■ For updated information on the Persian Gulf crisis, call Cityline at 560-2400, then press 6700 for world news.

Backed by more than 1,000 warplanes, U.S. and Saudi troops prepared Saturday for a mock invasion near the Kuwaiti border. A top Iraqi general warned the U.S.-led force that his army has a "surprise" up its sleeve.

President Bush, in Prague, Czechoslovakia to commemorate the first anniversary of the country's peaceful revolution, referred to the Persian Gulf crisis in a speech to lawmakers.

"You know from your own bitter experience that the world cannot turn a blind eye to aggression." he said. "You know the futility and vain hope that aggressors can be appeased."

In an essay written for the Nov. 26 issue of Newsweek, Bush renewed his effort to rally Americans behind his policies on the gulf crisis. He wrote that "the world must not reward aggression" and said the United States "cannot allow any tyrant to practice economic blackmail" with oil.

Imminent Thunder, as the current six-day exercises in the gulf are named, is being supported by about 1,100 aircraft, the largest force of warplanes yet assembled for a Desert Shield exercise.

The drill is meant to emphasize gaining control of the skies, which would be critical to smash Iraqi defenses.

"The first thing you want to do is establish air superiority," said Lt. Cmdr. Ron Morse, a U.S. Navy spokesman.

Baghdad has called Imminent Thunder a "provocative act" because of its proximity to Kuwait, which Iraq invaded Aug. 2. News reports have said part of the maneuvers could come within 10 miles of the Kuwaiti border.

No live ammunition will be fired, officials say.

The actual landing from amphibious landing craft and helicopters was set for Sunday. It was to involve 1,000 troops from the 4th Marine Expeditionary Battalion.

About 500 to 800 troops will hit the beach Sunday, according to pool reports based on briefings aboard the USS Nassau, the flagship for the amphibious landing. Commanders said a key objective is to practice an assault from ships 30 miles from shore.

In Baghdad, meanwhile, an Iraqi general said that the U.S.-dominated multinational force would face "uncalculated developments" should it attack Iraq.

Maj. Gen. Mundhir Abdul-Rahman, a missile expert and head of the Iraqi army's morale department, did not say what the "surprise elements" were. But he said they would thwart an offensive. His comments were published in Al-Qadissiya, the army's daily newspaper.

It was difficult to determine whether the general was speaking in his capacity as a specialist in long-range weaponry or as chief military morale booster.

In his article, Abdul-Rahman wrote: "The surprise element by Iraq will make the American aggression face uncalculated developments and unexpected results in (Iraq's) reaction, which would make their execution of aggression ... impossible."

Britain's daily Independent newspaper reported Saturday that Iraq is believed to have assembled three so-called "superguns" able to fire shells a distance of 465 miles.

U.S. intelligence sources believe the guns, largely assembled from British-made components, might have been delivered to Iraq before production of the weapons was discovered earlier this year.

Abdul-Rahman said his country was prepared to defend itself despite plans to increase U.S. troop strength. U.S. officials announced earlier this month that another 200,000 U.S. troops would join the 230,000 Americans already deployed in the region.

They face an estimated 430,000 Iraqi troops in southern Iraq and Kuwait.

In recent comments, Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein has indicated he still hopes for a peaceful solution to the gulf crisis. And a Soviet envoy, Yevgeny Primakov, has said he believes Saddam is softening his stance.

Still, Secretary of States James Baker has been seeking support for a U.N. resolution authorizing force against Iraq if peaceful means fail. He has argued that without such a resolution, the alliance against Iraq will not be presenting a united front.

U.N. diplomats say Baker is lobbying foreign ministers from Security Council nations to come to New York and personally vote on the proposed resolution — a rare step.

A Baker aide has said the United States would likely put forth the resolution before the end of the month.

The Security Council has passed several measures against Iraq, including strict trade sanctions.

In Baghdad, the Iraqi health minister said that as a result of the U.N. embargo, a shortage of medicine, other medical supplies and baby formula has become "deadly serious."

UTPB: Watkins optimistic their bill will pass

(From 1A)

"I don't think it's going to be easy with the current budget situation, but I feel comfortable with it. I think we have a good chance for it," said Watkins, who in the past session was a member of the Appropriations and Higher Education committees.

While on her gubernatorial campaign trail last March, Ms. Richards told Odessans, "I think now is the time for us to act on UTPB and when the bill is passed .. I am going to be perfectly willing to listen to what the parties have to say." She did not comment on UTPB's presence in Midland.

"I would certainly hope that she (Ms. Richards) wouldn't veto such a bill. I don't think she would," said Montford, who was chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee and is interim Finance Committee chairman.

Parrish said MC officials would oppose the bill.

Watkins noted that approval from the Higher Education Coordinating Board could be a problem, since the board this past month endorsed maintaining the status quo in higher education institutions.

"Of course, that's always been the position of the Coordinating Board the last 10 years and we've still had the creation of senior institutions in Corpus Christi and Dallas, so I don't know that that would be a barrier, necessarily," Watkins said.

"It does bother me that there is a good number of Clements appointees who tend to say no to a lot of things," he said.

Although the Legislature could overrule the board, he said, "We've never had to do that in the past, let's put it that way."

Sims said he hoped Montford and Watkins would not bring up the bill again, but he lines up with Craddick on the issue. "I represent the people of Midland and I don't feel like the people of Midland are in favor of it," he said.

On other issues to face the new Legislature, Craddick said he plans to file a bill seeking a new district court for Midland County. He also will propose a bill at the request of the Midland hospital district and the city of Midland that would allow local governments to split the extra half-cent local-option sales tax.

Sims plans to file a bill that would restrict the use of fresh water by oil producers to repressurize wells in secondary recovery.

In 1986, he said, Texas oil producers used 700 million barrels of fresh water for secondary recovery. "We've got to stop it sometime, because as we deplete our resource we're going to use more water for recovery and we're going to run out of fresh water," he said.

"There will be some people really opposed to it because fresh water is cheaper to use, but the problem I've had is that fresh water tastes a lot better than oil does," Sims said.

"I don't want to stop using fresh water altogether, because it would shut down a lot of oil production in Texas, and we don't want to do that," he said.

He expects most producers to turn to brine water.

Sims also is considering a change in hunting licenses that would provide a cheaper alternative for turkey hunters who now must buy a deer license, which costs $200.

He also would provide for a cheaper short-term hunting license for visitors and out-of-state hunters.

Sims also plans to refile a bill to abolish Daylight Savings Time.

Montford said budget considerations will be very important, with a shortfall estimated at $3.5 billion to maintain current services.

"The budget's going to be very tight this time," he said.

"We certainly are concerned about the support of our junior college facilities, Odessa College and Howard College in Big Spring as well as Midland College," he said. "We've got important considerations of Texas Tech and the Health Sciences Center, with a branch in Odessa."

Montford noted that the Criminal Justice Department asked for $1.7 billion in new prison construction, putting more pressure on lawmakers.

While Ms. Richards, in her campaign, played down the possibility of a tax increase next year, Montford said, "The numbers are very broad and wide, trying to make this budget balance without some added source of revenue."

Staff writer Myra Lee Salcedo contributed to this report.

MISD: Baressi says voting list was analyzed

According to Lusby's analysis, about 900 of 2,300 school district employees voted and approximately 2,700 of 32,000 parents of schoolchildren voted. Voting records show that 9,911 Midlanders cast ballots in the election with 5,708 or about 57.6 percent voting against the bond issue.

"We had a registration drive prior to the bond election," Lusby said. "After the election was defeated we wanted to analyze the approximate number of employees and parents who voted by precinct. We were disappointed with the turnout."

Baressi said, "The bond election failed because of poor timing and apathy." He said the timing was poor because the election followed on the heels of taxes being raised by several other local taxing entities and congressional debates on raising federal taxes.

Baressi said that rather than financing a scientific survey or hiring a consulting firm to analyze the results at taxpayers' expense, he elected to purchase the voting list and allow Lusby to analyze it.

"This will not violate any teacher's confidentiality," Baressi said.

"Mr. Lusby also did a computer analysis to see what the actual percentage of error was," Baressi added. The superintendent noted that the voting list had errors, including one that showed that he didn't vote. Baressi surmised that the error may have resulted in the fact that the "junior" was omitted from his name in registration records.

Sam J. Manning, president of the Midland Federation of Teachers, said he had only heard a few comments regarding the voting list purchase. "I didn't make much of it," Manning said. "A voting list is public information."

Charles Burbank, president of the Classroom Teachers Association of Midland, said that although teachers were initially concerned about the list, "It was all cleared up by Baressi. I was pretty satisfied with his explanation at a recent CTAM meeting."

Kay Walling, UniServ representative of the Texas State Teachers Association, said purchasing a voter list to obtain demographics was "perfectly valid."

"I've done it myself for TSTA," she said.

Ms. Walling said most of the complaints she received were from teachers who called her before the bond election. "They felt they were being pressured to register and pressured to vote," Ms. Walling said. "The school district bought a voting list before the election and sent out letters to MISD personnel asking them to vote. I received quite a number of calls when that happened," she said.

Ms. Walling added, "Teachers were intimidated and felt they were being hassled. Especially when some principals visited them asking them to vote."

Ms. Walling said another problem with the voter list before the bond election was that it wasn't accurate. "I know of one teacher who photocopied her voter registration card to prove that she was registered and sent it to the school district," Ms. Walling said.

The UniServ representative noted that the TSTA also encouraged teachers to register and vote. "We had our own registration drive," she said.

Despite the pressure on teachers to vote prior to the election, Ms. Walling said she didn't think they had anything to worry about concerning the school district's purchase of the voting list.

Jackie Hamilton, school board trustee, said she had received many phone calls from teachers fearful of being "singled out for not voting."

"My concern is that they still could be singled out," she said.

Baressi, however, added, "I would like to assure everyone, that list will not be shared."

Newly discovered violet named for Stormie Jones

Staff Report

Newly discovered yellow violets billed as "tough survivors" will now bear the namesake of Stormie Jones, the world's first heart-and-liver transplant patient.

Although she lost her battle to survive Nov. 11, the 13-year-old from White Settlement won the hearts of well-wishers nationwide. Lauded for her courage in beating the odds and surviving seven years after the momentuous transplant, Stormie died last Sunday in Pittsburgh after suffering from a cardiac arrest.

■ 13-year-old eulogized/3A

Andy McCollum, news director of KHYI-Fm (Y-95), a Dallas radio station, suggested the violets be named for Stormie after he read about them in a newspaper.

Described as "small, beautiful and tough as a boot," McCollum thought the association with Stormie was appropriate and launched a campaign to convince researchers of the same.

Researchers at Sul Ross University, who discovered the violets growing in the Guadalupe Mountains National Park near El Paso, agreed.

The violets will keep their scientific name, violaguadalupensis. But they will be known to most people by the new common name — the Stormie Jones violet.

White Settlement celebrates life of Stormie Jones

STATE

WHITE SETTLEMENT (AP) — Stormie Jones, the world's first heart-liver transplant recipient, was eulogized Saturday as a gallant, courageous youngster who strived to live a normal life.

The 13-year-old girl who battled organ rejection, hepatitis and medical complications before her body suddenly rejected her transplanted heart last Sunday, was laid to rest in a cemetery in this suburb of Fort Worth.

At a 45-minute funeral service, many of the estimated 400 mourners burst into laughter several times as Jerry Conley, a minister at West Freeway Church of Christ, celebrated her life.

"Everything was always upbeat with this very special child," Conley said. "Stormie has conquered life more gallantly perhaps than any person you or I have ever known. Her illness was not her enemy.

"Stormie was a very simple young lady," he said. "She didn't really want all the fanfare that went with all of this. She wanted to be just an average teen-age girl."

She was later buried at a private ceremony attended only by her family and close friends.

At the church service, White Settlement Mayor James Herring read a resolution the City Council approved earlier in the week, recognizing Stormie as an honored citizen.

"She lived her life for others," Herring said. "She didn't desire the notoriety that came her way but she was willing to do her part as a result of that. When called upon to step forward and talk to folks, talk to the news cameras ... she was always there and ready and willing."

Herring also read a poem one of Stormie's classmates wrote after her death.

"Most say you were just a little girl, but you were an angel to me," he read. "You've been our little lady, your courage was so true. When things seemed to go bad, you always pulled through."

Stormie died Nov. 10 at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh — where she underwent her historic operation on Feb. 14, 1984. She had been rushed to the hospital from her home with a sore throat and fever.

Doctors at the hospital said Friday that Stormie died because her body had suddenly rejected the transplanted heart. The autopsy results surprised Stormie's doctors, who said an organ rejection so many years after a transplant was rare.

"No one expected to see any rejection in Stormie," said Dr. F. Jay Fricker, her cardiologist at Children's. "After all, we had a track record of more than six years of never seeing any heart rejection. So why would we suddenly see it now?"

Fricker said it would take months for doctors to determine, if at all, what caused the heart rejection.

Doctors declined to speculate whether FK-506, an experimental anti-rejection drug Stormie began receiving last November, a second liver transplant she underwent last February or treatment for recurring bouts of hepatitis caused the rejection.

The blond, brown-eyed girl needed the heart-liver transplant because of hypocholesteremia, a rare genetic disorder that prevented her body from processing cholesterol. Her sister, Misty, suffers from a milder form of the disease.

Stormie had few major medical problems the first five years after her Valentine's Day transplant. But she had to return to Pittsburgh in 1988 for surgery to remove a bile duct obstruction.

She underwent a mild episode of liver rejection in November 1989 and began receiving the experimental FK-506 instead of the traditional anti-rejection drug cyclosporine.

Recent flu-like symptoms were the only indication something was wrong.

Proposed Twain ban a sign of the times, activists say

PLANO (AP) — Anti-censorship activists contend a city council member's push to take two Mark Twain classics out of public school classrooms signals a growing trend of screening racially and culturally sensitive material.

Councilman David Perry's complaints regarding "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" and "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" prompted a Plano Independent School District committee recently to recommend taking the books off required reading lists.

Although conservatives, particularly religious fundamentalists, long have dominated school censorship efforts, activists say a new breed of objectors is targeting books that seem to lack racial or cultural sensitivity.

"It is an anomaly," said Michael Hudson, vice president of People for the American Way, a national civil liberties group that opposes censorship. "Normally, the people who make these objections would be very opposed to all other forms of censorship."

Perry, Plano's first black council member, argued that the frequent use of the word "nigger" and other "racist, degrading portrayals" of black people in Twain's 19th-century novels embarrass minority students.

He asked the Plano school district to take both books off required reading lists and asked that they be "removed from our classroom atmosphere."

'Normally, the people who make these objections would be very opposed to all other forms of censorship.'

— Michael Hudson, vice president, People for the American Way

"Tom Sawyer" is required reading in seventh-grade English classes; "Huckleberry Finn" is required in the 11th grade.

"This is not about censorship," Perry said. "I see it as an issue of racial hurt and the need for sensitivity."

Last week, the district's Materials Review Committee recommended letting students choose from several books, including the Twain novels. The superintendent will decide whether to approve the plan after allowing a week for objections to be filed.

In recent years, complaints echoing Perry's about "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" have been filed more than a dozen times across the nation, making the book the fifth-most popular target in censorship efforts in the last decade, according to People for the American Way.

Educators argue that the book is far from racist and is instead a satirical attack on racism and hypocrisy.

Of the 191 censorship efforts identified by People for the American Way last year, one-third resulted in books being taken off reading lists or out of libraries, according to the group's most recent annual report.

John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men," called "filthy" because of explicit language, tops the list of books challenged since 1982, Hudson said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Right-to-die law needs changing

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Medical Association recommended changes in the state's right-to-die law Saturday to prevent what happened in Missouri where the parents of a terminally ill woman were barred from having life-sustaining treatments discontinued.

The TMA's House of Delegates also adopted anti-smoking measures as the association, which represents 29,000 doctors and medical students, concluded its two-day convention.

Delegates recommended lawmakers pass a law that would ban smoking in all public buildings, and adopted a measure encouraging pharmacies to not sell tobacco products.

Hugh Barton, general counsel of the TMA, said the recommended changes in the right-to-die law are needed to clear up any ambiguities in the Texas statute in light of the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the case of Nancy Cruzan.

Her parents sought to have artificial nutrition and hydration stopped so their daughter could die, but Missouri courts barred that action. The court said Missouri law required clear and convincing evidence of a patient's wishes. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the law.

Unlike Missouri law, family members in Texas can make the decision on whether to withhold life-sustaining procedures if the patient is unable to do so.

Even so, Barton said Texas law should be more clear.

CARE protests furs

AUSTIN (AP) — About 30 people gathered Saturday beside a small, black casket filled with fur coats, hats and mittens in memory of the animals who lost their lives in the name of fashion.

"In this day and age people do not need furs to live," Christopher Graham, 32, said as he delivered the eulogy in a downtown-area park. "This is unnecessary suffering."

Jeri Badgett, president of Consumers for Animal Rights Education (CARE), said the group wants to raise people's awareness of the slaughter of tens of millions of animals annually to sustain the fur industry, and the cruel ways these animals are trapped or raised in captivity.

"Hundreds of years ago, this may have been the only way to keep warm, but it's not that way now," she said.

During the brief memorial service in Waterloo Park, group members laid flowers on the casket before driving in a mock funeral procession to New Braunfels where they planned to protest in front of a mall.

Fired aides indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — Two former teacher aides have been indicted on charges of injury to a child after they allegedly held a retarded child's hand under scalding water after he soiled his pants.

Anita Brown, 30, and Virginia Blade, 34, were indicted on the first-degree felony charges by a Harris County grand jury on Friday. The accusations stem from an Oct. 4 incident at Reynolds Elementary School in Houston.

Prosecutor Kelly Siegler said Ms. Brown put a bib in the mouth of the 12-year-old student, while Ms. Blade held his hand under 130-degree water for 30 seconds. The boy suffered second- and third-degree burns.

The Houston Independent School District fired both women.

A third aide, Willie Faye Nelson, and teacher Alicia Morris, were each charged with failing to report child abuse, a misdemeanor offense.

GED essay test delayed

AUSTIN (AP) — A portion of the General Education Development high school equivalency test leaked out last week, delaying testing and certification across Texas, officials said.

Jorjana Price, a spokeswoman for the Texas Education Agency, said the agency ordered test centers not to administer the essay portion of the exam.

"TEA did this to protect credibility of the GED and maintain value of the credentials of those who do pass," she said.

GED candidates may take the other four sections of the test — math, science, reading and social studies — but the writing section will not be ready for several weeks, said Molly Hocking, chief reader of the GED essays in Texas.

Temptation removed

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A church member who sang her own selections rather than what others were singing apparently has removed the temptation by attending Mass at another church where there is no singing.

Elojia Macias, 34, had been banned from disrupting the services at Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church in San Antonio with her freelance singing.

Father Alexander Wangler obtained a permanent injunction against Mrs. Macias last month, and when she came back with the intent of singing her independent choices, she was arrested.

"The last report I had she went to early Mass at San Fernando Cathedral where there was no singing and sat in the back of the church," Wangler told the San Antonio Light. "She's told some people she would not come back."

Wangler said he did not press the charge of disrupting a meeting against Mrs. Macias. County Court-at-Law Tony Jimenez dismissed the misdemeanor charge, but court records show the permanent injunction still is in effect.

U-T scholars plan study on impact of U.S.-Mexico trade

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas scholars will investigate the implications of the proposed free trade agreement between the United States and Mexico, including social and economic effects on the border area.

Robert Sullivan, associate dean of UT-Austin's Graduate School of Business and chairman of the committee that will plan the study, said the immediate goal is to form a consortium-type effort "to look at the possible impacts of free trade on Texas and the United States."

"Our broader intent is to look at not only those issues, but also the possibilities of a Pan American trading bloc that would involve Canada, Mexico, the U.S., and maybe at later date, the rest of Latin America," Sullivan said Friday.

Sullivan said some of the proposals would go to the Higher Education Coordinating Board, the Texas Legislature "and probably even to federal agencies."

Scope of 'Keating 5' unprecedented

NATION

By Jill Lawrence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Are the "Keating Five" senators victims of a flawed system, or cynical cash-grabbers who championed the dubious cause of one jet-set constituent at the expense of everyone else in the country?

What is being examined in their Senate ethics hearing: the way the entire institution operates or the conduct of five members?

And how did a Senate leader, two national heroes, a former prosecutor and a man who arrived 23 years ago as a reformer come to this pass?

"It would be hard for it not to be a landmark case," associate Senate historian Donald Ritchie said of the tale unfolding before the Senate Ethics Committee. "Whatever comes out will affect the way business is done. They'll all have to look at themselves. It will be an important precedent for how to judge the behavior of other people in the future."

There are long days of witnesses and cross-examination to come, including an opening statement from Arizona Democratic Sen. Dennis DeConcini. But Robert Bennett, the ethics committee's blunt special counsel, already has presented his star witness: four tall stacks of paper.

Paper, he said, is the only reliable source of information on the web of contributions and favors linking the five senators to Charles H. Keating Jr. and his zealous attempts to thwart the federal regulators closing in on his failing Lincoln Savings and Loan Association.

"Paper doesn't suffer from human emotion or frailties, nor does it change with time," Bennett said. "Paper doesn't have faulty recollections. ... It's highly credible, this paper."

Bennett said the tens of thousands of documents his staff had examined showed no evidence of misconduct by Sens. John Glenn, D-Ohio, and John McCain, R-Ariz. — the first a former astronaut, the second a former Vietnam prisoner of war.

But he also implied that Democratic Sen. Don Riegle — the Michigan veteran and one-time rebel who now chairs the Senate Banking Committee — was not being straightforward about his role. And he suggested that DeConcini, a former prosecutor, and Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston of California crossed an ethical line in their dealings with Keating.

Glenn, McCain, Riegle and Cranston denied any wrongdoing before the committee Friday, and DeConcini is expected to do the same this week.

Much of the future testimony will center on the existence and location of that line under a system in which names on the contribution list inevitably turn up among those requesting help.

The Keating case concerns a timeless issue, influence peddling. But Ritchie said its scope — involving five senators — is unprecedented.

The only comparable case occurred more than 100 years ago, he said, when two House committees and one in the Senate uncovered a bribery scheme meant to head off a congressional investigation of railroad transportation rates.

Rep. Oakes Ames was accused of using undervalued railroad stock to bribe the vice president, two senators and three House members — including the speaker and Rep. James Garfield, who never cleared up his connection but later became president.

When asked how he had decided who would get the stock, Ames replied that he "gave it where it would do the best," Ritchie said.

The Keating case has taken on even broader significance in view of the collapse of the S&L industry, which could cost U.S. taxpayers up to $500 billion. Part of that is the $2 billion Lincoln failure, for which Keating now faces criminal and civil charges.

Ritchie compared the Keating hearings to a congressional investigation into the 1929 Wall Street crash. He said that inquiry laid bare the banking industry's abuses and gave the public some sense of who was responsible for the crash.

"If Keating were the only banker in the country who had problems, it would be different. But he's symbolic of a much larger problem," Ritchie said.

Illegal or not, pot's hot

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ruth knows that smoking marijuana, once virtually ignored by the public and police, is now considered "a very deviant thing. It's very taboo."

The 40-something San Francisco professional is married, has children and a respectable job. She knows that even though California's marijuana law is still relatively lenient, a drug bust could threaten her livelihood.

Yet she still smokes high-grade sinsemilla several times a week.

Why?

"It's a very nice high," she said. "Often in these drug stories, people forget to mention that part."

Ruth is far from alone. Marijuana is the most popular illegal drug today, the crack epidemic notwithstanding.

Perhaps as a result, 38 states arrest more people for marijuana than for cocaine and heroin combined, government statistics show. Last year, almost 400,000 people were busted on some kind of marijuana charge.

The drug's popularity stems in part from the fact that it is a known quantity — almost 66 million Americans have tried it at least once, many of them during its heyday in the 1960s and 1970s. The 1988 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse found that 6.6 million Americans used it once a week or more and 11.6 million had used it in the previous month.

It is considered relatively safe. Today's marijuana may be far stronger than its counterpart a decade ago, as the government says, but Harvard psychiatrist Lester Grinspoon notes there is "no reliable evidence of death caused by cannabis in a human being."

Other drugs — especially cocaine and heroin — are associated with high crime and violence, particularly in the most populous states. Police officers last year arrested 700,000 people for cocaine and heroin nationwide, more than any other illegal drug.

But in some states, nearly every drug arrest involves marijuana — 86 percent in Vermont, for example, 82 percent in North Dakota and 81 percent in Maine, according to FBI figures for 1988.

The reason so many people are arrested on marijuana charges seems obvious to one group — the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, which has advocated marijuana legalization for two decades.

Marijuana users "are easier targets" than, say, cocaine traffickers, said NORML spokesman John Dunlap. "They're a much more passive lot. The government knows it's an easy public relations victory."

Many police departments that once paid little attention to marijuana users have changed as attitudes harden toward all illegal drugs. An example is Arizona's Maricopa County, which includes Phoenix.

"The cops basically sort of ignored it" a few years ago, said Bill FitzGerald, spokesman for County Attorney Richard Romley.

Today, the county boasts a "Do Drugs, Do Time" program targeting all drug users.

Across America, government agencies have staged widely publicized raids on outdoor marijuana fields, indoor growing labs and stores that sell equipment for such labs in an attempt to curtail domestic crops that provide an estimated 25 percent of the U.S. supply.

"We cannot expect foreign countries to undertake vigorous anti-drug efforts inside their borders if we ourselves fail to do likewise," says the National Drug Control Strategy issued in January.

Despite the increased risks, many longtime marijuana smokers cannot imagine giving it up.

John, the scientist who asked that his real name not be used, said a single puff of sinsemilla "facilitates the imagination and has allowed occasional creative breakthroughs," some of which have led to "papers published in reputable journals."

His employers do not require random drug tests, but if they did, "That would be enough of an insult to my freedom that I would quit and contribute to the brain drain," said John, who is single.

Steven, a 34-year-old Massachusetts attorney and father of two, said, "If I didn't use it, I think I'd be an alcohol abuser." Alcohol would hurt his health far more, he said.

Steven, who did not want his last name used, recognizes the legal dangers, but believes he would face only a reprimand, not disbarment, if he were arrested on marijuana charges.

One in a Series

Two Distinct Entities Working Together Under the Laws of Texas and Humanity.

Midland County Hospital District

Texas law requires that no one will be denied healthcare regardless of ability to pay. Those who can't pay and who are residents of Midland County are called indigents and their care is the responsibility of Midland County taxpayers when no other payment source can be found.

In 1977, Midland County voters chose to form a Hospital District and elect a Board of Directors to administer the costs of caring for indigents as well as for expanding the Hospital into a first class care facility capable of providing the quality of care we all desired.

Today, the District sets a tax rate that provides revenue based only on the projected cost of care for Midland County indigents - the great majority are emergency cases. That amount this year was $7.9 million.

To meet the projected costs, the Hospital District's elected Board sets an ad valorem tax rate for property owners.

Tax revenues are not used for salaries, real estate, facilities, equipment or maintenance. They are used only for indigent care and only after every effort has been made to find alternative source of payment.

The Hospital District Board consists of Directors who are elected from seven areas of the County. Each Director answers to his or her district's voters and ensures a voice in how tax rates are set and how the costs of providing care are controlled. That's the way government works.

Midland Memorial Hospital

Memorial Hospital provides a 24-hour emergency center for treatment of injuries and illness. Emergency doctors and nurses work under a simple unwritten law (as well as a very clear Texas law): "Treat first, ask questions later." We call that the law of humanity.

Our Hospital is "administered" by an appointed Board of Trustees who oversee how the Hospital's resources are allocated and protected. Trustees are Midlanders selected for financial and management expertise who serve without pay.

Revenues in a not-for-profit Hospital are re-invested into updating of equipment, expansion of facilities and services and in recruitment and retention of high quality healthcare professionals. By law, taxes can also be used for this purpose.

But, NO tax funds are used in the administration of our Hospital; they are not even available for use by management. When tax revenues are not sufficient to pay the total indigent care cost, the hospital makes up the difference. Last year, the amount we were required to take from hospital revenues was $2.7 million.
If tax revenue shortfalls are allowed to continue, the money will come from hospital operations - from funds for maintenance of equipment and facilities. New services won't be introduced, specialists won't be attracted or will leave, and sooner or later, the reserves of the Hospital will be depleted to the point where Midland will face a near disaster like the one our friends at Medical Center in Odessa narrowly avoided.

Even though distinctly different, the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors and the Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees work together to ensure all citizens of Midland County receive the highest quality, lowest cost healthcare and the lowest possible tax rate.
The laws which distinguish us are clear - state law tells us what we must do - humanity tells us what we have to do.

Bennett to succeed Atwater

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush has asked former drug police director William Bennett to take over Lee Atwater's job as chairman of the Republican Party in January and Bennett has accepted, GOP sources said Saturday.

Bennett, a former secretary of education in Ronald Reagan's cabinet, formally resigned Nov. 8 as head of the Office of National Drug Control Strategy.

A GOP source said Atwater, who managed Bush's 1988 presidential campaign, will continue to play a major strategy role for the GOP, possibly with a title as the party's "general chairman."

A formal announcement will not be made until Bush returns from his eight-day trip to Czechoslovakia, Germany, France, Egypt and the Persian Gulf, said the source, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

Atwater, 39, has been undergoing intensive treatment for cancer since a tumor was discovered on the right side of his brain last March. His two-year term as GOP chairman expires in January.

B.J. Cooper, a Republican Party spokesman, said that Bennett "is on a short list of people being considered" to succeed Atwater "but there's been no formal announcement at this time."

Cooper said Bush's choice for a new Republican chairman would have to be ratified by the party's national committee in January.

Hundreds arrested in abortion protests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several hundred protesters were arrested Saturday in a second straight day of anti-abortion demonstrations outside abortion clinics.

Randall Terry, the head of Operation Rescue, was among those detained and loaded into two police buses outside a clinic in downtown Washington, witnesses said.

Police had no immediate comment on the number taken into custody, but a local TV station, WRC, said about 300 were arrested.

On Friday 340 protesters were arrested as part of the two-day campaign staged by Operation Rescue, a national anti-abortion activist group.

"If we saved one baby today, we accomplished more than anything," said Tom Hall of Buffalo, N.Y., a protester who was arrested on Friday. He said those arrested were given citations with $50 fines and released.

Operation Rescue members said about 1,000 people from across the country had come to Washington for the demonstrations. On Saturday they demonstrated at three places, including the downtown clinic and a Planned Parenthood office.

All the arrests apparently took place outside the clinic, where protesters sang hymns, waved banners and exchanged jeers with those opposed to their cause.

A group advocating abortion rights, the Washington Area Clinic Defense Task Force, said some 500 people participated in a counter-demonstration and joined efforts to ensure that women wanting to enter the clinic would not be impeded.

Karen Orlando, a member of the task force, said there was some pushing between the two groups but no real trouble. She said three abortion rights supporters were "mistakenly" arrested when they were caught in a crowd being moved by police into the buses.

Sears puts layoff plans in motion

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co. said Saturday it has begun notifying some store office workers they'll either be transferred or fired after New Year's Day.

The affected employees are an undetermined number among the estimated 20,000 people who work in areas including customer service, accounting and payroll in the 850 Sears stores across the nation, spokesman Gerald Buldak said.

The company began notifying workers late last week that they could be either transferred or lose their jobs through a nationwide cost-cutting effort, Buldak said.

Remains are Toussaint's

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists have positively identified a skeleton exhumed from a New York cemetery as the remains of a Haitian slave who is a candidate to become America's first black saint, Cardinal John O'Connor said Saturday.

A scientific team determined that a skeleton dug up earlier this month was that of Pierre Toussaint, the cardinal said.

"The definitive identification was made of the bones, all of them in order, not a single one missing," O'Connor said.

Toussaint was born in 1766 and brought to New York at age 21 by his French owners. When Toussaint's owner died, he left an impoverished widow and child. In a typical act of generosity, Toussaint secretly supported them for 20 years.

The widow freed Toussaint from slavery just before she died in 1807.

Once free, he bought the freedom of slaves and lavished money on charities, including an orphanage and the city's first school for black children.

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Terrorist issues threat

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Abul Abbas, the dissident Palestinian wanted in the West for terrorism, said Friday that U.S. interests around the world will be attacked if war breaks out in the Persian Gulf.

Speaking on Algerian television, Abbas said the number of U.S. forces in the gulf region surpasses what is needed to fulfill their official mission.

The American presence "does not target the defense of Kuwait or that of oil wells," he said. It targets "the destruction of the Iraqi potential."

"If the U.S.A. starts a war in the gulf," it should expect "that its interests in the region and in other parts of the world (would) be hit," he said.

Abbas, who heads a Palestinian group based in Iraq, is wanted by the United States for the October 1985 attack on the Achille Lauro oceanliner in which a wheelchair-bound passenger, Leon Klinghoffer of New York, was killed.

Front-line soldiers can chow down on fast-food

By Edith M. Lederer

IN EASTERN SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — Where's the beef? The Wolf burger makes its desert debut Sunday bringing a tasty morsel of Americana to front-line troops who are fed up with prepackaged Army chow.

It may not come from the golden arches, or be a Whopper oozing with onions and catsup, but it's free.

And so are the french fries, sodas, hot dogs and grilled cheese sandwiches that will be cooked on the U.S. military's version of a traveling fast-food stand — the Wolfmobile.

It was the brainchild of Chief Warrant Officer Wes Wolf, 42, of Monterey, Calif., who dreamed up the idea in the middle of organizing Thanksgiving dinner for most of the 230,000 Americans in Operation Desert Shield.

Maj. Gen. William "Gus" Pagonis, the U.S. Army's logistics chief, gave Wolf's name to the food-mobile, the military's treat for the GI fast-food junkie stranded in the sand dunes and surviving on cold rations, hot TV-style dinners and an occasional hot cooked meal.

"We have a generation of soldiers including myself that grew up on hamburgers and french fries, and so we're going to provide that," Pagonis said. "Out in the desert, you're going to see these Wolfmobiles."

The first Wolfmobile left Friday for the 1st Cavalry Division camped in the desert in eastern Saudi Arabia and the two Army cooks manning it will start grilling Wolfburgers and hot dogs on Sunday.

Wolf said 80 Wolfmobile trucks were being dispatched to the desert, where they would move among the front-line units.

Even if the Wolfmobiles can't get to every forward unit, Pagonis said, at least "when the soldiers come back to their base camp they can get french fries and a hamburger."

Much of the griping from Americans deployed here following the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2 has focused on food, and the complaints have been loudest from front-line units forced to eat more prepackaged combat rations.

"Gen. Pagonis insists that the soldiers in the desert receive the same quality food that we're giving to the soldiers back here in the rear," Wolf said. "He doesn't care what is forward as far as equipment ... and he's very, very concerned about that."

Short-order food is more popular than regular hot meals at Army bases in the states. So Wolf and Pagonis first decided to open a fast-food dining facility.

It's called The Pentagon and is open nightly, serving pizza, hot dogs, hamburgers and chili, but it's only available to soldiers in rear-line units.

Then it was time to take care of the soldiers in the desert.

"That's when we came up with the idea of a mobile-type truck," Wolf said. "We thought, well there's no reason that we can't ... put a couple of military cooks in there, get the supplies from the Saudi government. Then, the soldiers can just walk up and order a hamburger, fries and a soda and just walk away without paying for it."

Saudi Arabia is supplying all food for the U.S. forces here.

The Wolfmobile is a 30-foot-long, two-ton truck with a fold-out window and a ramp to walk up and order food. It's equipped with a Franklin stove, grills, a deep-fat fryer, freezer, refrigerator, a grilled-cheese maker and eight heat lamps to keep the food warm.

Each truck can feed between 500 and 800 soldiers before it needs to be resupplied.

Even though Wolf isn't planning to retire from the army yet, the rangy soldier likes the idea of franchising Wolf burgers some day.

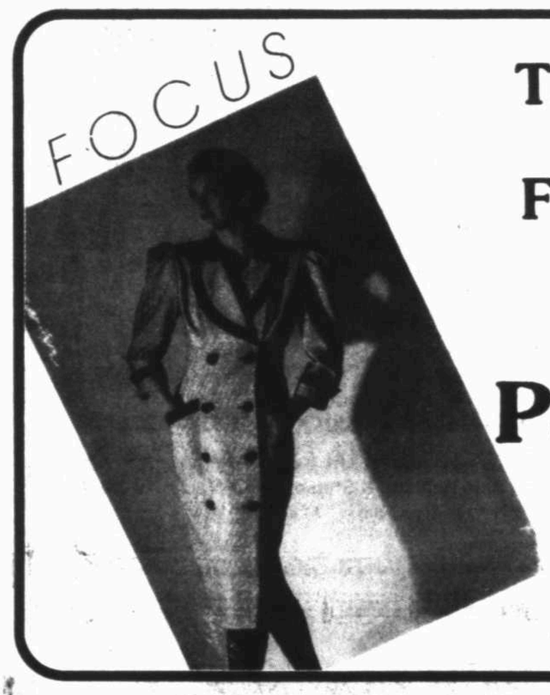

'We have a generation of soldiers including myself that grew up on hamburgers and french fries, and so we're going to provide that.'

CSCE summit launches new era

By Alison Smale

WORLD

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Newly united in a shared belief in democracy, Europe is leaving behind the hostility of the Cold War and embarking on what it hopes will be an era of peace and prosperity.

This week's summit in Paris of 34 nations — the United States, Soviet Union, Canada and all of Europe except isolationist Albania attending only as an observer — has been compared to the 1815 Congress of Vienna that drew the map of 19th century Europe.

French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas bills the meeting as "the most significant international event since 1945."

This week's summit ... has been compared to the 1815 Congress of Vienna that drew the map of 19th century Europe.

That year World War II ended, leaving Europe devastated and millions dead. Iron Curtain division soon added to the destruction, splitting the continent in half.

For most of the next 40 years, communist East and capitalist West locked in struggle to defend their ideals.

One of the few institutions that brought the Soviet Union, United States, Canada and Europe together was the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, or CSCE, a loose grouping born with the signing of the 1975 Helsinki human rights accord.

Subsequent meetings in Belgrade, Madrid and Vienna strengthened the human rights commitments and security provisions of that act, spurring demands for freedom in Eastern Europe.

It is fitting that it is the CSCE that will now seal the demise of the Cold War and sketch the outlines of a new Europe governed by trust in the rule of law and a free market.

On Monday, the leaders of NATO and the six nations of the crumbling Warsaw Pact will sign a historic accord slashing arsenals of tanks, helicopters and other conventional weapons.

New rules known as confidence-building measures will be adopted to ensure that Europe's armies know more about each other than ever before, reducing or even eliminating the danger of surprise attack.

The two military alliances that armed Europe to the teeth for 40 years will also sign a formal non-aggression pact.

To underline the shift from armed suspicion to dialogue, the leaders will put CSCE proceedings on a more permanent footing by:

— Agreeing that the heads of member states and governments meet at least once every two years.

For diplomats like John Maresca, U.S. ambassador to the negotiations on confidence-building measures in Vienna, this marks the end of a long road that began 18 years ago with the arduous negotiation of the 1975 Helsinki Final Act.

By enshrining human rights in a document signed by the Kremlin and its allies, it provided Western governments and Soviet and East European dissidents with a legal right to fight for more freedom in the Soviet bloc.

"It contained the seeds of what happened last year" with Eastern Europe's revolutions, Maresca said.

Now, some of the former dissidents, like Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel and Polish Premier Tadeusz Mazowiecki, will be in Paris to decide where CSCE should go from here in building a united continent linked to North America and the Soviet Union.

One idea, outlined in the landmark declaration that ended NATO's London summit in July, is for an Assembly of Europe, a kind of CSCE parliament.

In three days of public speeches and a 90-minute closed-door session allowing freer discussion, the leaders may decide to encourage their parliaments to set up this European assembly.

It is unlikely, however, that any such assembly — or other possible measures, such as an alliance to alleviate the East's energy woes — will prove an instant panacea for Europe's remaining ills.

The CSCE adopts all decisions by consensus, a mechanism Maresca says serves to protect "the essential interests" of all members.

That means painstaking negotiation to overcome any rift.

Thousands greet Bush in Prague

By Charles J. Lewis
Hearst News Service

PRAGUE — President Bush joined hundreds of thousands of jubliant Czechoslovaks Saturday as they sang "We Shall Overcome" at an emotional celebration marking the first anniversary of the 1989 "Velvet Revolution" that peacefully ended 42 years of one of the harshest Communist regimes in Eastern Europe.

In a speech to a chanting, singing throng in Wenceslas Square, Bush extolled the Czechoslovak revolution, saying: "In the face of force, you deployed the power of principle. Against a wall of lies you advanced the truth."

He thanked Czechoslovakia for supporting the U.S.-led anti-Iraq alliance. He said Czechoslovakia's experience as a victim of Nazi Germany's aggression before World War II explains why the Prague government was "among the first nations to condemn the outrage in the Persian Gulf."

Bush's visit marked the first time an American president had been to the Eastern European country. Crowd estimates in Wenceslas Square varied from 200,000 to 850,000. The Secret Service and Czech authorities estimated it at 700,000, which would make it the largest audience ever for a Bush speech.

His tough line against Iraq won applause from the crowd, as did a remark he made in an earlier address to the Czechoslovak Federal Assembly: "Iraq's brutal aggression against Kuwait is a rude reminder that none of us can remain secure when aggression remains unchecked."

In a separate encounter with reporters, Bush was asked by a Czech journalist how the United States would respond to any future aggression against Czechoslovakia "since we have no oil here.?" Bush declined to answer, saying the question was "too hypothetical."

Alexander Dubcek, right, leader of the 1968 Prague Spring liberalization movement — and now president of the Czechoslovak Parliament — applauds President Bush after he addressed the Federal Assembly Saturday.

In his speech to the assembly, Bush said previously announced trade agreements between the two countries had been completed and promised he will urge Congress to authorize a $60 million fund to help "unleash the creativity and drive of the Czechs and Slovak people."

He also said the United States will extend money from the $370 million in U.S. aid already committed to Central and Eastern Europe. He did not say how much money he will offer but vowed: "America will not fail you."

The president is scheduled to fly on Sunday to Germany, where he will meet with Chancellor Helmut Kohl. From there he will attend a three-day Paris meeting of the 34-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. He is expected to spend Thanksgiving with U.S. troops in the Persian Gulf and end his eight-day journey with a visit to Egypt on Friday.

At the Wenceslas Square celebration, Bush laid a wreath on the cobblestone street beneath a statue of King Wenceslas on horseback. The site is an informal memorial to the victims of the old Communist regime and has been built up over the years since 1968 when a young boy was killed there as Soviet troops invaded the country to put down the "Prague Spring" movement.

Demonstrations in the square a year ago led to the resignation of the Communist government and its replacement by a reform government headed by dissident playwright Vaclev Havel.

Havel, who had been sentenced to prison three times since 1979, is now president of a nation that is struggling to develop its democratic institutions and wean itself economically from the faltering Soviet Union, previously its dominant source of oil.

During his one-day blitz of Prague, Bush made frequent references to the nation-building work now under way in Czechoslovakia, and at one point he distributed copies of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights to members of the Federal Assembly.

He promised The Wenceslas Square audience that the United States will return the original of the Czechoslovak Declaration of Independence that was presented to President Woodrow Wilson in 1919 when Wilson was attending the Versailles Peace Conference in Paris.

Gas.
It's A Natural Way To Protect Our World.

Leading scientists tell us that increased use of natural gas could dramatically improve the quality of our environment. Gas is the cleanest burning of all fossil fuels. So, unlike other fuels such as oil and coal, natural gas doesn't emit high levels of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. These pollutants are believed to be a major cause of many of the environmental problems facing us today.

One way in which natural gas is now being used to help reduce air pollution involves the injection of gas into coal burning facilities. This procedure can result in reducing nitrogen oxide emissions by as much as 60%.

So, when it comes to heating your home this winter – or cooking your food or heating your water – natural gas is the way to go.

WORLD IN BRIEF

American hurt in dugout bombing

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A bomb hidden inside a softball bat exploded Saturday during a U.S.-Chile game, killing a Canadian and wounding two people, including an American Embassy official, police reported.

A man claiming to represent what he called the Chilean branch of the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed responsibility for the blast.

The caller warned President Bush against visiting Chile. Bush is scheduled to travel to Chile as part of a South American tour Dec. 2-8.

The attack, the second on Americans in Chile in two weeks, occurred during a game at the National Stadium between teams from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and a Chilean university.

Police said the softball bat was stuffed with 400 grams of dynamite and exploded in the dugout of the chamber team. The blast killed James Thomas, 36, a Candadian executive, they said.

The game's umpire, Vicente Alcayaga, said at least two other people were wounded, including Thomas Collins, "a security officer in the American embassy."

Gorbachev fights back

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Saturday proposed dumping his embattled prime minister and giving himself more power to break a political deadlock and swiftly introduce an emergency food program.

Losing popularity and power in his centrist position following a lackluster speech to the Supreme Soviet legislature Friday, Gorbachev came out fighting Saturday. In an address packed with new proposals, he urged lawmakers to approve a radical reorganization of the executive branch that would put it entirely under his control.

Although representatives of several restive republics vowed not to cooperate with the new government, the legislature voted overwhelmingly to give it preliminary approval.

Gorbachev's suggestions appeared to be a concession to his main rival and critic, Russian President Boris Yeltsin, who on Friday had demanded a coalition government and the resignation of Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov.

Premier makes appeal

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Chandra Shekhar, in his first national address since taking office, appealed Saturday for an end to the religious and sectarian battles that brought down his predecessor.

"The age of confrontation should be changed in the age of understanding, compassion and cordiality," Chandra Shekhar said in a broadcast on state-run television and radio.

Chandra Shekhar, who replaced V.P. Singh on Nov. 10, promised to "bring this country out of a muddy mire of misery and misfortune." It was a virtual duplication of a speech he gave Friday in Parliament, when his government won a vote of confidence.

Hours before his broadcast, Sikh militants killed 10 Hindus in the northern state of Punjab. Press Trust of India said 30 other people were killed in Punjab Friday.

Sikh militants have been fighting since 1982 to set up an independent nation in Punjab. About 2,800 people have been killed in the northern state this year. Thousands more have been killed in separatist insurrections in Kashmir, in the far north, and Assam in the east.

Blasts rocks station

TOKYO (AP) — Explosives apparently set by leftist radicals went off Sunday near the Grand Shrines of Ise, which Emperor Akihito is to visit next week, police said.

The blasts caused no injuries and only minor damage at the main train station in Ise, and along the Kinki Nippon Railroad, which Akihito and Empress Michiko will use when they travel to Ise to pray to the sun goddess next Tuesday and Wednesday.

The radicals oppose the monarchy as a remnant of Japan's prewar nationalism.

Two county judges stepping down soon

William B. Ahders

Willie DuBose

■ William Ahders and Willie DuBose will retire in January, after trying almost as many cases in the past nine years — 26,000 — as had been tried during the previous 90 years.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Two Midland County judges are hanging up their robes and putting down their gavels after many years of service to the community.

Although County Judge William B. Ahders and County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose will not step down officially until January 1991, they were the guests of honor at a farewell party at the courthouse last week.

Amid throngs of attorneys, county employees and other well-wishers and a large "Re-elect Judge Ahders" sign, the two were honored for their work with official proclamations from the commissioners' court.

DuBose was recognized for his commitment to the juvenile justice division, while Ahders received praise for being at the helm during a "challenging time" for the commissioners' court.

"The courthouse is like a family and they're very definitely part of the family," said County Attorney Mark Dettman, who has worked with the judges since 1981.

"I'm very fond of both of them," he said. "They broke me in as county attorney. I consider them friends as well as working associates."

Dettman's sentiments were echoed widely throughout the courthouse, where the general consensus was that the two are "true gentlemen," in County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry's words.

"I was here before they came and I'll be here after they leave," she said. "They've been a real pleasure to work with."

DuBose was sworn into the newly created court-at-law position on Feb. 15, 1978, and has adjudicated juvenile, civil, domestic and workers' compensation cases for nearly 13 years.

"I've enjoyed the whole thing," he said. "The lawyers in Midland make it a great pleasure to preside over the court."

DuBose has been a familiar face around the courthouse for years. A Lamesa native, he was the county attorney from 1968 to 1972. In the mid-'70s he sat in for a judge in the domestic relations court for a few months, an experience that persuaded him to take the court-at-law judgeship.

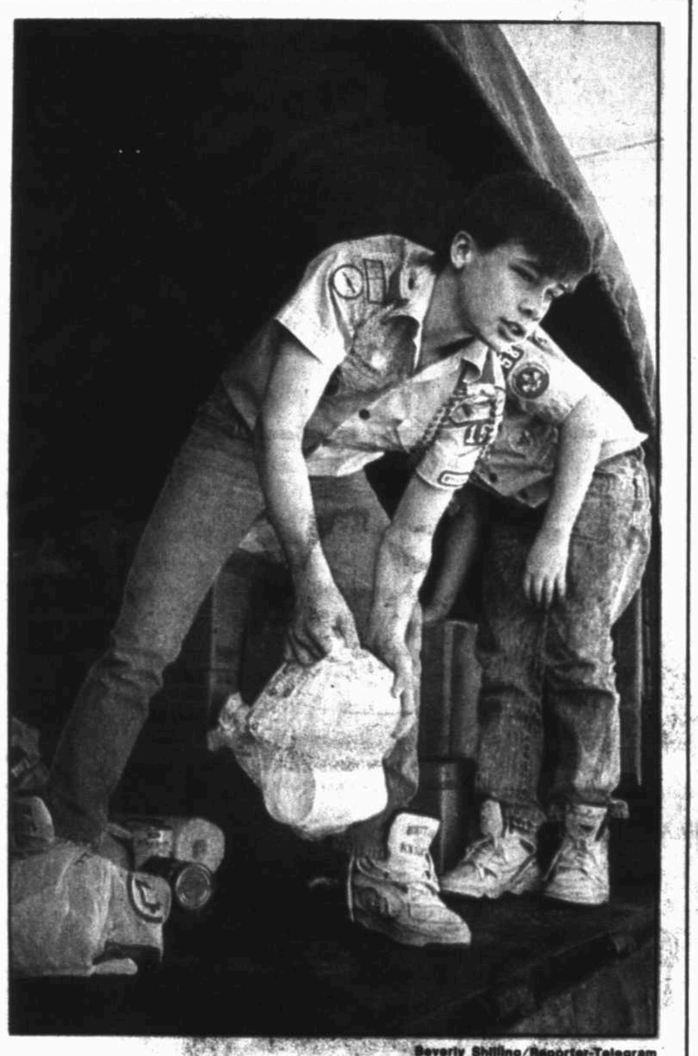

"I found it was something I enjoyed," he said. "It gave me a lot of satisfaction."

In between times, DuBose was a local attorney. He plans to return to private practice in Midland upon leaving the bench.

During his tenure, DuBose saw his court's jurisdiction shift as the Legislature added a second court-at-law in 1985.

"The jurisdiction changed from a maximum of $5,000 and misde-

'Scouting for Food'

Allen Mays, 13, of Greenwood Scout Troop 158, lends a hand with food collected during Saturday's Permian Basin Food Bank's food drive, "Scouting for Food," sponsored by the Boy Scouts of America. The food drive in Midland and Odessa is the Food Bank's largest annual campaign to collect food for distribution to the needy and hungry in West Texas. The food is distributed through 157 human-service agencies from Big Spring to Van Horn.

Travis County official issues subpoenas for ClayDesta records

■ Travis County attorney claims the bank won't surrender documents; the bank claims federal regulations prevent it from voluntarily providing the data.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — The Travis County attorney has issued subpoenas seeking records of ClayDesta National Bank as part of an investigation into allegations that the Midland bank forced customers to buy expensive insurance in order to get car loans.

County Attorney Ken Oden said Friday the subpoenas give nine individuals 10 days to turn over documents they either have refused to surrender or provided only in partial form.

"We were unsuccessful in getting these documents in informal negotiations," Oden said. Oden is seeking all memos, documents and minutes of the bank's board meetings dealing with the insurance issue.

The bank is owned by Clayton Williams, the Republican gubernatorial nominee who was defeated Nov. 6 by Democrat Ann Richards.

Paul Latham, ClayDesta National Bank board chairman, said he had not seen the subpoenas, and that he was "troubled and concerned" about Oden's allegations.

"The bank has complied and voluntarily given Oden everything he has asked for, except for information related to regularly scheduled Office of the Comptroller of Currency's (OCC's) examination of the bank."

Latham said that the OCC told bank officials that they were not authorized to voluntarily provide that information.

"We could face criminal penalties and would be federally liable if we did release that information," Latham said. "Mr. Oden has been notified of this by the OCC."

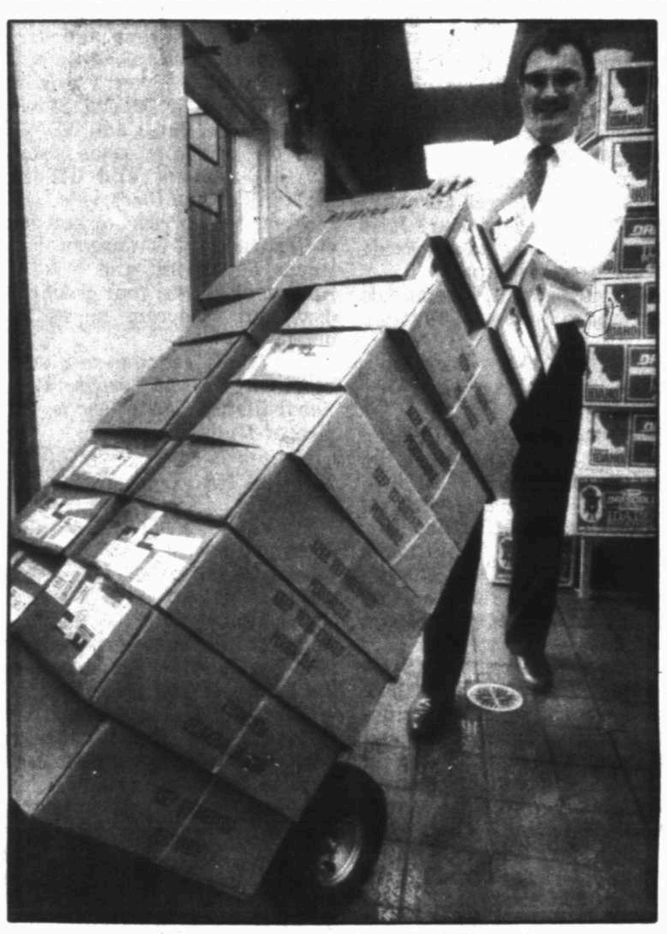

The board chairman said bank officials are troubled by Oden's suggestion that his office has been unable to receive information from them on a voluntary basis. "We have given him all the information he requested except for that relating to the OCC."

Latham also said, "We have offered and requested — for some time — to have our bank personnel appear before any grand jury and explain the documents on the loan progam."

Dozens of automobile buyers in Houston and Dallas say they were required to purchase expensive credit life insurance as a condition of obtaining loans from ClayDesta. Such insurance would pay off the car loans if the buyer could not pay. State law allows a banker to require such insurance, but it bars a lender from dictating where the insurance must be purchased.

Several consumers have charged in a lawsuit and in complaints to the investigators that officials with ClayDesta, an Austin insurance company called Service Life & Casualty Insurance, and car

Golden Corral rounds up needy for holiday meal

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

More than 1,000 needy people are expected to sit down together for a free Thanksgiving meal being hosted at the Golden Corral Restaurant this Thursday.

"It's a traditional Thanksgiving dinner, turkey, dressing, whipped potatoes, cranberry sauce, rolls and fresh baked pie," said Don Maier, general manager of the restaurant, who is coordinating the dinner.

The feast will take place from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday at the restaurant, located at 4709 North Midkiff Road.

Invitations — printed in Spanish and English — are being distributed by area community service organizations for the get-together. Each invitation admits an entire family. Individuals are welcome as well.

"I know it's not going to help a lot of people for a long time but it will be a hot meal for one day," Maier said, adding that such occasions give people the opportunity to get away from the worries of the world.

Howard County recount changes outcome

BIG SPRING (AP) — When the final vote was counted Nov. 6, Republican Robert Crenshaw thought he had won the Precinct 4 seat on the Howard County Commission by 51 votes.

Late last week, a hand-count of one absentee box showed instead that Crenshaw lost to Democrat Bobby Cathey by one vote, according to election officials.

A computer error occurred in counting Precinct 402's absentee ballots, County Clerk Margaret Ray said. The computer recorded 168 ballots cast in the box, but counted no more than a total of 14 votes in any one race.

Ms. Ray discovered the discrepancy as she transcribed election results into a record book.

The revised vote total is 851 for Cathey and 850 for Crenshaw. Cathey picked up 100 votes Friday to 48 for Crenshaw. Before the error was discovered, Crenshaw led 802 to 751.

The votes had been canvassed by Howard County commissioners Nov. 8, certified and the results sent to Austin, Ms. Ray said.

Cathey must file an election contest petition in 118th District Court to change the results, County Attorney Hardy Wilkerson said.

"The ball is in Mr. Cathey's court," Wilkerson said. "He has 30 days to file a petition. If he chooses not to file, Mr. Crenshaw will be the county commissioner."

Wilkerson said if the petition is filed, District Judge Bob Moore will conduct a hearing.

The district court then can order a recount or a new election or choose to do nothing, Wilkerson said.

GARY OTT

Who cares if loose lips sync Milli Vanilli's ship?

The newsroom was abuzz the other night when a story moved on the Associated Press wire that stated in part, "The rumors are true: Milli Vanilli — those dreadlocked, hunky dudes Rob and Fab — never actually sang on their debut album that sold 7 million copies, the producer-arranger conceded."

Ott

Instead, the story noted, the two young men were guilty of lip-syncing their way to fame and fortune.

There has even been talk that they may have to give up the Grammy Award for Best New Artist they won in 1989. The music industry, it seems, frowns upon entertainers who do nothing more than mouth the words to hit songs. It's a credibility deal, I suppose.

But the point is, this incident has become big news. It has caused a huge uproar, is what it has done. Everyone has an opinion on the controversy.

So do I.

My opinion is, "Who the heck is Milli Vanilli?"

I'm serious. I haven't the foggiest idea. A co-worker, who obviously felt pity for my ignorance in this matter, showed me a picture of the group the night the story broke. That didn't help.

Neither did a list of songs from their hit album.

I hate it when I discover I'm out of touch with what's going on in the rock world. It makes me feel so inadequate, not to mention old.

It wasn't always that way. At one time I could provide you with all kinds of meaningless facts and figures on any group you cared to name. I knew the group members, their hometowns and, in many cases, their favorite colors.

Now all of that has changed. If the group was formed less than than 15 years ago, chances are I don't know doodly-squat about them.

Such is the case with Milli Vanilli.

Again, co-workers have attempted to help me.

"Surely, you know them," someone said. "They're the ones who said on national TV that they are better than Elvis and Bob Dylan."

Oh great, I thought. A couple of egomaniacs. Better than Bob Dylan? And with just one album. My, the times they are a changin'.

Actually, I have mixed feelings about this little uproar. A part of me says we're dealing with a couple of do-nothing punks who have a lot of gall demeaning the names of Bob Dylan and Elvis Presley, two of my heroes.

Yet, another side of me thinks, "Hey, here are two young men who have managed to make a fortune by just mouthing the words to songs."

I can identify with that. As a child, while serving as a squeaky-voiced tenor in the youth choir at College Heights Baptist Church, I was often asked to mouth the words to such songs as, "Old Rugged Cross," "Onward Christian Soldiers," and my personal favorite, "Shall we Gather at the River."

For some reason, the choir director didn't want me actually singing. "Just move your lips," he would say, while patting me gently on the shoulder. "No one will know the difference."

He was lying, of course. Well, maybe that's a bit strong. What he was really doing was protecting the integrity of the choir.

Since it was considered somewhat unethical — not to mention, immoral — to kick a willing participant out of the church choir, he merely did the next best thing, that, of course, being to kick my voice out.

So, I reluctantly mouthed the words.

At the time, it hurt my feelings.

Of course, had someone handed me a Grammy Award and millions of dollars for my trouble, it might have eased the pain considerably.

Dean A. Chase Sr.

A memorial service for Dean A. Chase Sr., 81, of Midland, will be held at 11 a.m. Monday at St. Nicholas Episcopal Church with the Rev. Jon Stasney officiating.

He died Thursday at his home.

He was born May 30, 1909, in Nowata, Okla., was raised in that area and graduated from high school there.

He attended Oklahoma State University. Following his graduation, he was employed by Phillips Petroleum Co., for 18 years and then went to work for Lario Oil and Gas Co., as a production supervisor. He worked for that company until 1973 when he retired.

He married Dorothy Marie Houston on Jan. 10, 1935 in Wewoka, Okla. She preceded him in death on July 26, 1989.

Chase was a member of Sigma Chi.

Survivors include two sons, Don Mike Chase of Midland and D.A. Chase, Jr., of St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; one daughter, Kathleen Chase Grimes of Midland; one sister, Katherine Wallace of Eden Prairie, Minn.; nine grandchildren; 10 great-grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

Martha Adams

Services for Martha Adams, 67, of Midland will be held at 10 a.m. Monday at the Ellis Chapel with the Rev. Bob Porterfield of West Kentucky Street Baptist Church officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Adams

Mrs. Adams died Thursday at her home.

She was born March 27, 1923, in Hopkins County. She was reared in Clarksville.

She met A.L. "Sy" Adams in Clarksville and they were married on March 21, 1942. In 1951 they moved to Levelland and then to Midland in April 1952. Her husband was in trucking with the petroleum industry. He died May 8, 1980.

Mrs. Adams had been ill since 1981.

Survivors include one son, Cecil Adams in Midland; one daughter, Shirley Jeffcoat of Midland; eight brothers, Lewis Stevens, Cecil Stevens, Clovis Stevens and John Henry Stevens Jr., all of Garland, James Tidwell of Tyler, Travis Tidwell of Royce City, Donald Tidwell of Marysville, Calif., and J.B. Tidwell of Arlington; seven sisters, Mytilda Stevens and Gladine McGuire, both of Clarksville, Effie Dryden, Beulah Peacock and Jewel Crawford, all of Garland, Faye Hayes of Austin, and Dorothy Hudson of Spring; four grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

Algie Mays

Algie Mays, 95, of Midland died Friday at a local hospital.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Monday at the Holy Trinity Church of God in Christ with the Rev. A.L Jackson officiating. Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery with the Baker-Jackson Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He was born Oct. 15, 1895, in Leon County. He married Essie Mays in Leon County.

He had been an active member of the Church of God in Christ in Colorado City before moving to Midland. While in Midland, he was a member of Lighthouse Church of God in Christ and later the Holy Trinity Church of God in Christ.

Survivors include his wife; one brother, Booker Mays of Colorado City; two grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; seven great-great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Pallbearers will be Carl Harris, Gary Hubbard, Aurthur Hubbard, Lynell James, Otis Russell and Randy Sanders.

JUDGES: DuBose has seen jurisdiction shift

meanor criminal cases to $50,000 for each court. Now Judge (James) FitzGerald does criminal cases and I do civil and juvenile cases," he said, adding that the expanded jurisdiction had postponed the need for a fourth district court for a few years.

Dettman said DuBose and his fellow county judges tried almost as many cases in the past nine years — 26,000 — as Midland County tried in the 90 years before then.

"I haven't always agreed with all their rulings when we've tried cases together, but I've always respected their opinions as well-thought-out and just as fair to me as to the other side," Dettman said.

DuBose said the juvenile cases have been particularly significant to him.

"A lot of things concern me but I do my best for them," he said. "I hope I make a difference for some of the juveniles."

Though he will miss the daily interactions at the courthouse, DuBose said he has picked a felicitous time to leave his office.

"As exiting county attorney, I left the courthouse the first time they remodeled it; now I'm going and they're remodeling again," he said.

Midland attorney Al Walvoord will replace DuBose on the bench.

Ahders joined the court on Jan. 1, 1979, and has spent almost 12 years presiding over the commissioners' court, criminal cases, competency hearings and probate hearings.

An FBI agent for 26 years, Ahders came to the courthouse through law enforcement.

Photographs on the walls of his office show his loyalty: J. Edgar Hoover, Ronald Reagan, George Bush.

Of Hoover, Ahders recalled, "he was a short man, so he had his desk built on a platform. You'd go in his office, sit down and be looking up at him.

"You know, he was the one who said agents had to be at least 5-foot-8 to get in the bureau."

Ahders said Hoover was also a stickler for formality.

"When Bobby Kennedy first became attorney general, he came over to meet Hoover in his shirtsleeves and Hoover threw him out. Remember, as AG, Kennedy was Hoover's boss."

Ahders served with the bureau in his native Butte, Mont., Denver, Salt Lake City, Reno, San Francisco, Hawaii, Los Angeles, Seattle and Kansas City. Then he settled down in Midland in 1968 and became a municipal court judge.

He is proud of his participation in obtaining court of record status for the city courts.

"I saw what was happening in appeals court — you'd appeal in justice of the peace court and it would never come to fruition. That's why I decided to go for the court of record," he said.

"Wichita Falls was the only city court of record in Texas, but in 1970 Dallas Smith flew us down to Austin to testify for the legislative committee and Midland and Houton got it at the same time. I always say we're number two, not Houston."

From municipal judge, Ahders stepped directly to county judge, where he has weathered budget fights, courthouse floods, bat invasions, the emergence of a county sales tax and the construction of a new law enforcement building and jail.

"He didn't have his own agenda," said Precinct 4 Commissioner Winfree Brown of Ahders. "He did a good job of being equitable and everyone had a say in his court."

"He's delightful to work with and he's always there," said Precinct 3 Commissioner Louisa Valencia. "I feel like he really listens to my problems."

After so many years of public service, Ahders said he's ready to play some golf when he retires.

Midland attorney and landman Charles "Bro" Seltzer will take Ahders' seat in January.

Ready to help

Lt. David Wilkes, a member of the Fraternal Order of Midland Police, was one of several officers Saturday who helped distribute food for Thanksgiving Day meals for the city's needy residents. Some 150 boxes, containing enough food to feed four to six people, were distributed by FOP members.

MC early registration nears end

Staff Report

Only seven days remain to register early for spring semester classes at Midland College. Just two days of registration this week will be followed by the final five days from Nov. 26-30.

Persons wishing to register should visit the new Student Services area in the Student Center between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m., according to the alphabetical schedule which follows: A-E on Nov. 19, S-Z on Nov. 20; M-R on Nov. 26, F-L on Nov. 27, A-E on Nov. 28, S-Z on Nov. 29, and M-R on Nov. 30.

Although some returning students may register by mail, many will need to register in person. All persons receiving financial aid, or seeking such assistance, must register in person. First-time students with TASP scores or Pre-TASP scores as well as all students transferring from other colleges or universities must register in person.

After Nov. 30, prospective students may obtain permits which assign specific times to report for registration on Jan. 9, the official enrollment day. Time permits will be issued weekdays Dec. 3-14 and Jan. 3, 4, and 7. Spring semester classes begin on Monday, Jan. 14.

Persons wishing more information should call 685-4501.

HOLIDAY: For seniors, it can be more than a meal

(From 1B)

Isabel Gonzales, director for senior citizen services at Casa de Amigos, agreed with Maier about the need to for people to get together.

"To a lot of families this is a blessing," Ms. Gonzales said, adding that many people who have responded said they wouldn't have a Thanksgiving meal otherwise.

And Ms. Gonzales adds that the dinner is more than a meal, especially for some senior citizens.

"They would be alone and this is a time to be together with other people, in addition to having a meal," she said. "We feel a loneliness more (this time of year) because everyone else is celebrating," Ms. Gonzales added.

"The response we have gotten is that it is needed, the companionship and the meal itself," she said.

Maier said he was surprised at the response received since the idea for the dinner was first conceived about two months ago.

"As this thing is going on we are getting a bigger and bigger response," he said.

This will be the first year of this particular Thanksgiving celebration dinner.

"I envision this thing to be a project for the community for years to come," Maier said.

"Midland has been very good to the Golden Corral and this gives us an opportunity to give back," Maier said.

Although the Golden Corral Restaurant is footing the majority of the bill, Maier said the dinner is a community project.

"Probably 100 people are involved in it now. It's just a tremendous effort and I look at it be a real success," Maier said, adding that some local churches are helping with the dinner.

Anyone wanting to volunteer time or materials can contact Maier at the restaurant. Financial contributions can be made by contacting Jeff Hansard at Midland American Bank loan broker Lloyd Williams, violated insurance regulations and committed fraud.

Latham said that, according to the State Board of Insurance, the bank has violated no laws. "The State Board of Insurance has informed us that there are no violations of insurance regulations.

Williams and bank officials have denied the allegations.

Latham said ClayDesta National Bank officials "will cooperate in every way possible with the investigation and will continue to do everything we can without facing federal liabilities."

"We aren't going to violate any federal laws," Latham said. "So, we are accused of not cooperating."

Debate changes to War Powers

Now the debate over the U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia has shifted — as is the natural course of events — to a matter of constitutionality, specifically the War Powers Act. Can President Bush commit troops to a region where they may become involved in a war? Bush says yes; some of those in Congress aren't so sure.

Article I of the Constitution clearly gives to the Congress the power "to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water," yet it gives to the president the power to make treaties "provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." That at least implies that since the president has the power to make treaties, he also should be able to commit U.S. forces to regions of the world for whatever reason he believes they are needed.

The War Powers Act, enacted in 1973 to prevent the commitment of troops to another Vietnam, has been tossed up by some in the Congress as the reason Bush should consult with Congress before proceeding further. That is clearly a gambit on the part of Congress to restrict Bush's moves in the Persian Gulf deployment, moves some see as stumbling and uncertain.

Bush is correct, however, to resist the prying of Congress. If the Congress ever usurps the constitutional prerogative of the commander-in-chief to commit troops to a region, the balance of powers designed into the Constitution will be eroded.

Congress already can determine the duration of any troop commitment through its control of the federal pursestrings. But debating whether Bush should have committed troops to Saudi Arabia is not the relevant issue at this point. The Congress would be much wiser to send a signal of American solidarity behind Bush and the troops now deployed in the Persian Gulf region. That's essential if Iraqi President Saddam Hussein is to be convinced to back his way out of Kuwait without a shooting war.

The thought of war is repulsive to most Americans. There have even been increasing indications that opposition to the commitment is growing. That isn't in line with the traditional response to a crisis situation.

President Bush has indicated that he has not decided whether to use U.S. troops to force Iraqi troops out of Kuwait. At this point, Congress and the American people have to take the Bush statement in good faith.

Until there is reason enough to question Bush's commitment of troops to Saudi Arabia, the wisest course is to be supportive of the president's difficult decision.

OTHER VIEWS

Female soldier can't complain

American women have served with courage and distinction in our military forces for decades, but you wouldn't know it by the spoiled, shallow comments of a female sergeant in Saudi Arabia.

When Secretary of State James A. Baker III visited some American troops involved in Operation Desert Shield on Nov. 4, this unidentified woman from Alabama was quoted in press reports as saying:

"I'm tired of eating this dirt. I'm tired of drinking hot water. I'm ready to go home. (And) I haven't had a chance to have a baby."

Wonderful.

This woman, a volunteer, has been in Saudi Arabia less than three months and has not heard a single shot fired in anger. Although she has to cope with heat and dust, she is eating three square meals a day, has complete medical care and has access to amenities (unbroken sleep, regular showers, occasional entertainment) that other troops at other times could only dream about.

No doubt the conditions in Saudi Arabia are not pleasant, but compared to the terrible hardships other generations of American soldiers have endured at Valley Forge, Bastogne or the Pusan Perimeter, Operation Desert Shield is a Sunday afternoon picnic so far.

A history lesson would be in order for this childish woman who doesn't know how lucky she is.

Seas must not be turned into sewers

A quick glance at the globe shows most of the Earth is covered by water. There seems to be so much of it that it's hard to imagine that mere humans could make a difference in the vast seas. But we've been giving it the old college try.

It's time to stop and think about the future and consider the oceans aren't as limitless as previously thought. Fortunately, the world's largest industrial nations have reached agreement on a global ban on dumping industrial waste at sea and moved toward restricting marine pollution discharged on land.

At a meeting of the 43 signatory nations to the London Dumping Convention, a consensus was reached to phase out industrial waste dumping at sea by 1995. It is legally binding on all the nations that signed the 20-year-old London treaty, including the United States, Britain, Germany, France, the Soviet Union and almost all other industrialized nations. ...

The international agreement calls for dumping to stop without increasing pollution in other parts of the environment. Nations are encouraged to promote cleaner industrial processes, recycling, treatment of waste on land and more research and development on environmentally sound means of waste disposal.

These goals are to be applauded ... the seas must not be turned into sewers.

U.S. drug war strategy isn't working

WASHINGTON — William Bennett's resignation as the nation's field marshal in the drug war says a lot about who is waving the white flag. The most powerful nation in the world can't stop a few bands of drug-dealing cutthroats in Latin America. And at home, the black market in drugs is thriving, despite feeble government sophistry about how a recent increase in street violence is supposed to be interpreted as a drop in the drug supply.

Anderson

Bennett, an academic by training, has fought the war with sophistry, and his resignation will be painted in prosaic terms. Then he will be replaced by a low-profile person who will lower the profile of the agency until the public ceases to expect anything of it.

Bennett's strategy was to talk the enemy into submission. He fought a guerrilla war with words. There is some evidence that a few people listened — not abroad but at home. Cocaine use among the middle and upper classes is on the decline. It is no longer fashionable to serve up cocaine like canapes at a party.

But the drug lords saw the yuppie trend and accommodated. They came up with crack, a cheap form of cocaine to tempt the poor. So now the government can boast that it has made progress, when the burden has simply been shifted to the backs of those who are least equipped to carry it.

Bennett's early exit after his flamboyant entrance is merely symptomatic of one major reason the drug war is flagging — growing discontent among the allies. U.S. officials are being forced to acknowledge, although not publicly, that the governments of the supplier countries aren't 100 percent committed to wiping out drug traffic.

The mission of the drug war is lost on many Latin American leaders, their rank and file and the impoverished peasants who live off their coca crops. It is lost on the bureaucrats, judges, journalists and police officers who suffer when the drug barons lose their temper. Why should they put their lives on the line when the enemy is feeding the drug habits of Americans, including the mayor of the nation's capital?

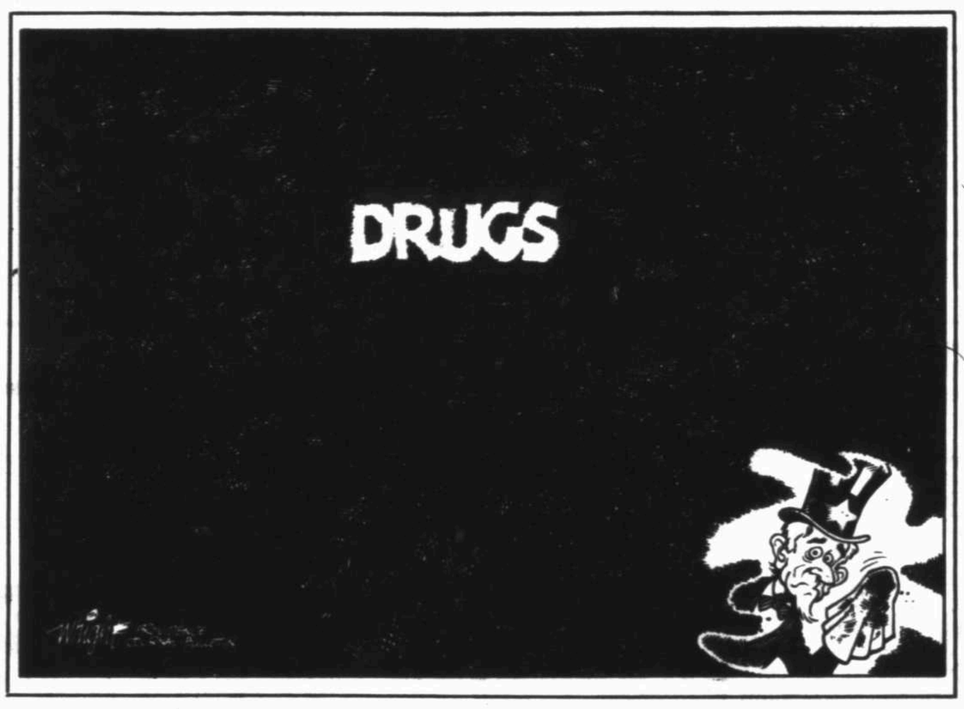

The U.S. government continues to talk tough, befitting the drug threat and the street crime that it spawns. But that talk is cheap in the United States compared to the price the supplier nations are paying. And their enthusiasm is waning.

In Peru, where the cocaine trade brings an estimated $1 billion into the economy, newly elected President Alberto Fujimori has announced that Peruvian coca growers should be asked, but not forced, to switch to other crops. Any ultimatum that leaves the farmers without alternatives, Fujimori observed, could lead to civil war.

The reluctant Latin American nations can rightly say that the toughness Washington expects of them is not necessarily practiced at home. Washington Mayor Marion Barry got a slap on the wrist. Compare that to some of Barry's fellow mayors in Colombia who have been gunned down in the streets because they dared to speak out against the cocaine cartels.

Ultimately, any skepticism about Washington's own commitment to the war on drugs comes from the insatiable American appetite for them. Washington wants the supplier countries to cut off the flow because Americans can't say "no."

Americans cannot expect others to spill their blood for us in a war that America is only fighting half-heartedly.

It would be humiliating, having to go to summer school to make up a failure in Telephone.

Here's another illustration why it's so hard to love the modern world, as we call it when all we really mean is "technology and all that."

To begin with, nobody wants to abolish technology and all that, because what would life be without a constant supply of new gadgets?

Besides, deploring technology's triumphant progress is for human antiques.

"Can't keep up with the times," people whisper. "Can't adapt to change." And so on. Nobody wants to be an antique. Certainly not me.

What is life, I always say, if not adapting to change? Truth is, I really love adapting to change.

When you're adapting to change seven days a week, eight hours a day, you feel vital, or "with it," as the phrase had it last time I adapted to change in contemporary slang.

My idea of a good time, in fact, is getting the whole family together and having all of us adapt to the latest change simultaneously.

Mind you, yes, I am embarrassed about the family's size when assembled for group adaptations. It must seem antiquatedly big to people who have adapted to the latest change in family dimensions.

But we can't really ask any of the children to do something ingenious to help the family adapt to this particular change, can we?

Maybe technology will soon come up with something new and exciting that wouldn't leave the rest of us sad and devastated after the sort of adapting required by a family of our particular size.

Something new, something exciting: That's what technology is giving our company in its new phone system. Or so I hear.

They say that after passing the course, people can go anywhere on earth without missing a single phone call being made to their number back home, no matter how trivial that call may be.

I yearn with all my heart to adapt to this marvelous change so I can feel modern and well adapted, and yet I hate it.

While having a midnight supper in Paris, I do not want to be interrupted by a college fund-raiser phoning me at Chez la Fenetre de Ma Tante under the impression that I am in the second martini at my New York residence and, therefore, softened up for easy fleecing.

Whether in Paris or Hong Kong, in Milwaukee or Galveston, at the Delaware Water Gap or on top of Old Smoky, I hate being rung up by people who think I am sitting at home dying for telephone chatter.

I go to places like Milwaukee and the Delaware Water Gap because the kind of people who use the telephone rarely know how to call me there.

With new phone systems, however, I'm told that pests no longer have to think at all. They call you at the place where you are normally a sitting duck, and the call automatically slides right on through to Hong Kong.

(A parenthetical point here: A few paragraphs back, reference was made to being "in the second martini." To forestall floods of contemptuous mail noting that all up-to-date imbibers adapted to change 10 years ago by giving up martinis, let me state that I too have adapted to that change and these days survive on a thin trickle of watered Almaden. The mention of martinis was just a Freudian slip probably betraying a certain suppressed unhappiness resulting from having to make that particular adaptation.)

Sanctions preferable to use of air power

WASHINGTON — Those who do not learn from the past are not really condemned to repeat it. They could not repeat it, even if they wanted to. Situations that are sufficiently similar in the relevant particulars rarely, if ever, recur, least of all in international relations. Nevertheless there is, as in the U.S. response to Iraqi aggression, a powerful inclination toward policy-by-analogy ("Hitler revisited"; "avoiding another Munich").

Will

Given the pull of analogies on current policymakers, it is good that it is not true that all we learn from the past is that we do not learn from it. There are certain consistencies, such as elements of American national character, and certain recurring ideas, concerning which the past illuminates the present crisis.

There is an old — as old as this nation — hope that economic coercion can radically reduce or even obviate reliance on combat in international conflicts. A second recurring hope is as old as airpower. It is that airpower, delivering economical doses of force precisely against an enemy's military assets, can substantially economize violence by reducing reliance on ground combat, with its horrible human costs.

When this Republic was young, it was brimming with the conviction that it could inaugurate a new science and ethic of politics, in international as well as domestic affairs. One of the nation's first noble experiments was the Embargo Act of 1807.

It lasted just 14 months. It still ranks as one of the nation's most complete and perhaps characteristic foreign-policy failures.

The embargo was intended as an alternative to war against England and France in defense of U.S. commercial rights as a neutral. But France liked the embargo because it hurt England more, and it hurt New England manufacturing and shipping interests most. It caused smuggling, sectional animosities and even secessionist sentiment in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The embargo was a joining of theory and practice by the President, Thomas Jefferson, most inclined to attempt such a joining. But that particular economic sanction, an infant nation's pinprick against two powerful nations locked in a long, violent struggle, could not succeed. And the 1940 U.S. embargo on strategic materials for Japan probably hastened what by then may have been inevitable: a Japanese turn toward war.

But history does not teach that sanctions as comprehensive as today's against Iraq will fail to coerce a country as dependent as Iraq is on imports of food and military components for its high-tech garrison state.

Sanctions are a form of force for inflicting serious pain. "Do not," warns Sen. Pat Moynihan, "expect any nation to give up what it considers vital interests simply because its supplies of orange pekoe tea run low."

And when food supplies run low, the elite soldiers will be the last to starve. Therefore the nation that imposes serious sanctions should be prepared by its political leadership, as the American public has not been, for grim consequences of its policy. Such sanctions take time, but they should take a toll on Iraq.

Today's inventory of air-delivered munitions is varied and sophisticated and, perhaps, makes air power able, in the context of Iraqi targets, to fulfill, at last, the long-deferred dream of war-winning blows delivered from the air.

But do not bet on military victory delivered from the air by Americans, with no American blood on the ground. A better bet is to give today's sanctions, which have sharp teeth, time to bite.

Groups pitch in for Desert Shield

Early in October my son-in-law and his company of young men and women were sent to Saudi Arabia as part of Operation Desert Shield. My choir and interested others at Trinity Presbyterian Church adopted A Co., 27th Support Batt. (Main), 1st Cav. Div. as our own. We assured the soldiers that they would not be forgotten.

We are beginning to hear from these 126 soldiers. They are receiving our letters, birthday cards and packages. It is delightful to hear their appreciation for the little we are able to do.

Several organizations have been most generous and helpful to us in the task we have assumed. The Friends of the Library, when they heard what we were doing, gave to us the paperbacks that remained after their sale. Those are being mailed to Saudi. Some of the duplicates are becoming part of a traveling library that is being set up by the Boy Scout program of Killeen, the home of 1st Cav. The Army will transport the library to the troops.

When Channel 2 heard that the guys and gals had requested fans, Jeff McDonald dug in the warehouse and found some cardboard fans that had at one time been used for a promotion. I cannot express my thanks enough! Those fans are headed for CPT Sam Wilds and A Company. They hit the mail last week.

The AT&T store in the mall has been delightful to us. They are faxing messages all the way to the Gulf. They will send one message a day per person to anyone who brings in a one-sheet letter. This has allowed much quicker access to our soldiers than the mail. The other plus in this situation is the cheerfulness and care that the folks at the AT&T store have shown — even to our teenagers who have taken their messages in to be faxed.

Other people we have met at garage sales have offered us books and other needed items at reduced process in order that we might be able to afford the postage to get the things to Saudi.

Thank you Midland for helping us take care of this part of Desert Shield! You are great!

Anderson's BST column misleading

Mr. Jack Anderson's column, published Oct. 1, 1990 on bovine somatotropin (BST) is not a balanced presentation of the facts and, therefore, is misleading. Anderson portrays himself as a consumer advocate but the product he is criticizing is one which will benefit the consumer by assuring him a continuous supply of wholesome, nutritious and affordable milk products.

In reporting the recent action by the United Kingdom's Veterinary Products Commission with regard to BST, Anderson leaves the impression that the VPC found it unsafe for humans.

In fact, the VPC gave BST an endorsement on the question of human safety. The official press release, issued by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on Sept. 13, 1990 stated, "The Committee is satisfied that Lilly's product is efficacious and if it were licensed it would not pose a risk either to human or environmental safety."

Also, Anderson failed to make any mention of two recently published scientific articles in this country. The articles, from the Journal of the American Medical Association and Science, addressed the human safety question in great detail and concluded that BST poses no danger to human health.

In 1985, the FDA approved for human consumption the milk and meat from BST-supplemented cows. Studies continue and are under review to substantiate the safety of BST for cows.

It is hoped that the debate on BST will in the future be conducted with facts and reason. At stake is how scientific advances are to be reviewed and regulated. If half-truths and scare stories become the rule, then science is at risk and society will be poorer.

Cuevas expresses his appreciation

I want to personally thank all District 2 residents and citizens of Midland for their support during my term as city councilman. What a wonderful 16 months we shared, filled with excitement, joy, and disappointments but most of all our success.

Our accomplishments are many, beginning with Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) residential paving programs of 1989-1990 and 1990-1991. They are 12 blocks on Tyler Street, seven blocks on Griffin, four blocks on Wall Street, four blocks on Texas Avenue, four blocks on Terrell, three blocks on Industrial, three blocks on Garden Lane, three blocks on Washington Avenue, two blocks on Jackson Street, one block on Michigan, one block on Mineola Street, the north section of Lamesa Road from Dommard to Loop 250, and FM 307 (Cloverdale) from Fairgrounds to the new Lamesa Road, some of which have been completed or will be completed in 1991.

Other programs include:

- Massive replacement of water and sewer lines in east and south Midland.
- Signalization of Lamesa Road at the intersections of Wadley, Scharbauer Drive, Louisiana, and Garden City Highway which are scheduled for completion in 1991.
- Creation of Homeownership Incentive Program (HIP) that made ownership possible for 33 families in 1990 and 38 more in 1991.
- Allocation of funds to complete parking lot and sand volleyball courts at Martin Luther King Park and funds to purchase a park site in east Midland.

Our greatest accomplishment was the construction of a 7,000-square-foot Southeast Senior Citizen Center.

All this could not have been possible without the help of my fellow council members John Castro, J.D. Faircloth, Bill Williams, Bob Monaghan, Robert Rendall, Tom Johnston and Mayor Carroll Thomas, your support and most of all our Lord above.

State elections are thankfully over

At last, the elections are finally over! For the next eighteen months or so, we will not have to listen to all the mud-slinging and name calling that has become so much a part of the American election process. After having thoroughly studies the Texas election results, it was interesting to study what the voters did in other states and this year the Commonwealth of Massachusetts rejected a tax roll-back! They also returned to the U.S. House of Representatives two avowed homosexuals, Barney Frank and Gerry Studds, the former having captured 65 percent of the vote.

However, there is positive news about the Bay State. In 1991 the U.S. Congressional Districts will be reapportioned and consequently Massachusetts will lose a seat in the House of Representatives. It will be interesting to see if Frank and Studds go after each others seats.

Grizzard wrong about Library of Congress

In his column on non-essential government services (Reporter-Telegram, Monday, Oct. 30), Lewis Grizzard advocated that citizens do their own research in the Library of Congress. He said that "they should have taught you the Dewey Decimal System in school." Now, that's the funniest line in his entire column,,'cause the Library of Congress doesn't use the Dewey Decimal System. They use the Library of Congress Classification Schedules. You could make book that even Newt Gingrich could have told him that!

CATA opposes wasteful spending

CATA (Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse) must be touching nerves to have Midland Memorial Hospital start using full page ads to try and counteract their efforts. It's a shame CATA is made up of people who can't afford full page ads. But then of course CATA can't tax the general population to help pay the bills. Just who is paying for those ads?

CATA isn't against the hospital or indigent care. CATA is against waste and unnecessary spending. CATA is for using all avenues of resources and every means of using available funds to the fullest advantage.

When we as individuals have our expenses (including taxes) go up and our resources shrink, we look for ways to cut corners and expenses. This is what we want our taxing entities to do. We don't want Medicaid patients charged to the Hospital District while waiting approval. We want those patients to complete the application for Medicaid and the District to wait the 90 to 120 days it takes for approval. If the District pays these accounts, the patient never gets a bill. Would you complete paperwork to pay a bill that is already paid? I doubt it.

If CATA could pay for full page ads they might be able to tell the whole story to the taxpayers in Midland County. In lieu of that, anyone interested in stopping more taxes will just have to come to our meetings to hear of the waste going on in all governing bodies.

Readers' views on Lee's Rebel flag

History should be appreciated

When the students of Robert E. Lee chose that name for Midland's second high school I wondered about the use of the name. I thought of Lee being a Confederate leader and wondered about his connection with West Texas, Midland not even existing at the time of the Civil War.

In the three decades since I have learned something about Robert E. Lee. A graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, where he was recognized for outstanding academic achievements, having no demerits in any of the years in which he was a cadet, his early military service was with the Army Engineers, where he helped to keep the Mississippi from silting up the port of St. Louis. He served as superintendent at West Point, and was a colonel in charge of the famed 2nd Calvary Regiment keeping the peace between the settlers and Indians in West Texas, headquartered out of Fort Mason, when the Civil War threatened.

Returning to his native Virginia, he was offered command of one of the Union armies by Abraham Lincoln. Though Lee personally opposed slavery and secession, he could not fight against his native Virginia, and after more than 30 years of service in the U.S. Army resigned his commission.

Initially, his abilities were not particularly recognized by the Confederate army. But after given command of the Army of Northern Virginia, Lee showed his superior military abilities. One of his top fighting units was Hood's Texas Brigade. After four years' losses of manpower and destitute of clothing, food, and supplies, Robert E. Lee surrendered his army to U.S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in April 1865.

Lee set an example for the South — seeking U.S. citizenship which was denied him by radical reconstructionists of that time — and by leading the young men of the South to seek an education, serving as president of Washington College, now Washington and Lee University.

Lee was criticized as being too considerate of those who served under him. Jefferson Davis spoke of him as being a Christian gentleman.

Abraham Lincoln was also criticized, for not showing more hate for the South. He was criticized when he, Lincoln, requested that "Dixie," a favorite tune of his, be played.

Are we to declare that Midland streets with southern names, Texas and Louisiana, be renamed? Should Illinois and Michigan be changed because of their northern connotation?

In neighboring Odessa which downtown streets are to be abandoned? Grant or Lee or Lincoln or Jackson? Should San Angelo, which grew out of Fort Concho, stop using the name of Beauregard for a major thoroughfare, because it was named for a future Confederate leader? Are Fort Davis and Jeff Davis County to be renamed because U.S. Secretary of War Jefferson Davis later served as president of the Confederate States of America?

Should we also delete from history the fact that black soldiers served at Fort Davis and Fort Concho in those last years when it was necessary to protect the frontier of West Texas?

Let's understand and appreciate our American history.

Problems with name of Lee

Let's face it, the real problem with local use of the Confederate flag relates to the namesake of Robert E. Lee High School. Perhaps it's time those so offended should offer some thought to renaming the school after a more culturally-acceptable individual to them.

Then they could proceed further by renaming Bowie, Crockett and Travis elementaries. Just think, if it hadn't been for these rascals we might still be part of Mexico and Texans wouldn't be eternally shamed by Great Grandpa Willie's rebel convictions!

For equality — nothing more and nothing less.

K.R. Gauntt
Midland

Rebel flag not sinister

Slavery is about as old as mankind. Many ethnic groups have endured slavery, some for greater periods of time than American blacks, who were sold into slavery by members of their own race.

The United States has done more to atone for the sin of slavery than any people before them. The goal of peace and goodwill is ill-served by members of any race who resurrect what they perceive as symbols of hate — symbols largely unknown to new generations.

The Rev. Michael R. DeVaughn and others of like mind are the racists in our society. Apparently they dread the insecurity of equality and campaign for the continuing status of the "abused minority." By and large, the predominantly white population has accepted blacks, who have not accepted themselves.

No doubt the high school named after General Robert E. Lee adopted a flag appropriate to the name. Surely there is nothing sinister about that. The criticism of the school's flag is "a tempest in a teapot!"

W.T. Wynn
Midland

Confederate flag a symbol

I was very disturbed to recently learn of a controversy regarding the use of the rebel flag by Robert E. Lee High School. I was even more disturbed by the incomprehensible decision of Jack Fryar, principal at Lee High School, to ban the rebel flag's display at school events and by a letter in the Midland Reporter-Telegram written by the Rev. DeVaughn suggesting the rebel flag represents divisiveness, oppression and slavery.

When I moved to Midland in 1981, I noted that Lee High School displayed a rebel flag as its symbol. I incorrectly assumed that Lee High School was an all-white school and that the prejudice I had seen in other cities where I had lived was in full bloom in Midland.

To my great surprise, I learned that the rebel flag belonged to a fully-integrated school and was proudly displayed by both black and white students and parents alike. I immediately knew which high school I wanted my children to attend — the high school which clearly melded the races into a cohesive unit, Lee High School. My own passionate dislike for the Confederate flag and what it stood for became love for the rebel flag and its meaning as part of the "New Tradition."

We must remember that we are not dealing with the Confederate flag and what it represents to some yet today. We are dealing with a symbol of a high school, its students and its supporters. Surely the Midland School Board will support the continued display of the rebel flag at Lee High School and take pride in the spirit and unity it engenders among all students there. Surely the school board members will not be swayed by the uninformed and misguided of this community, regardless of their position or personal prejudices.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Lee Principal Jack Fryar said that the rebel flag has not been banned at Lee High School, but that its use has never been approved or declined by the student body. Fryar said that the matter will be put to a vote of the students shortly after Thanksgiving and the decision sent to the Board of Education for their approval.

Congress voicing opposition to war in Mideast

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Domestic voices against war in the Middle East are getting louder, especially in the Congress.

That was only to be expected. The situation brought about by Iraq's grab of Kuwait is now well into its fourth month. That's considerably longer than many of us thought it would go unresolved. When a crisis like this drags on, doubts about how to deal with it are bound to grow.

Also, the nature of a prospective war in the Persian Gulf has changed radically since August. Initially, I certainly thought that our decision to resist Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein's seizure of a helpless neighbor would take the form of swift retaliatory action, relying mainly on our vastly superior air and naval forces, with limited ground warfare, probably an amphibious landing by the Marines to liberate Kuwait City and some of its hinterland.

There was a widespread assumption at the time that, after a defeat like that, Saddam would hot-foot it out of the rest of Kuwait and sue for peace to spare Iraq from being bombed to smithereens.

Should it come to war now, we'd face something entirely different: a large-scale ground war involving hundreds of thousands of troops. The military consensus is that we'd win all right, but fighting under those conditions isn't something that can be wrapped up in a tidy package. A chance always exists of getting bogged down in a war of attrition lasting months or longer.

By all accounts, the Iraqis have profited from the past few months of inaction to dig in and prepare to be attacked. As defensive warriors, judged by their performance in the long and incredibly bloody war with Iran a few years ago, the experts give them a passing grade.

So, in the final analysis, we can't be sure how long or destructive a war would be.

That being the case, it seems to me that President Bush would be extremely well-advised to go no further without asking the Congress for an unambiguous resolution supporting military action, if and when it has been determined that all genuine possibility of peacefully dislodging Saddam from Kuwait has been exhausted. The decision on when that point has been reached also should be a joint matter for the president and Congress.

Legislative leaders, including some of the president's warmest supporters like the highly respected Sen. Richard Lugar, have made clear they want no war without consultation and approval of Congress, though they so far haven't spelled out whether that would entail a formal declaration of war. Bush insists that, although he intends to work with the Congress "every step of the way," there might be "unforeseen" circumstances in which he would be compelled to order military action on his own.

What concerns me isn't so much the constitutional provision that reserves the right to declare war to the Congress. As commander-in-chief of the armed forces, the president also has important prerogatives under the Constitution in matters of national security.

But if our recent history has proved anything, it's that when a president takes the country into a major war solely on his own authority, no matter how morally justified he may be, the result isn't a happy one.

Harry Truman sent American forces to Korea on the basis of a United Nations resolution approving multinational action to stop communist aggression. In Korea then, as in the Gulf now, the "multinational" forces turned out to mean mostly Americans.

Truman described it as a police action. For the first time in our history, a president didn't seek Congress's endorsement for going to war. Soon, his growing legion of critics were condemning it as "Truman's war." Korea could well have led to the same tragic divisiveness among Americans that we later experienced over Vietnam. President Eisenhower wisely prevented that from happening by bringing about an armistice after taking office in 1953.

Vietnam has to be counted as a far worse example of the consequences of a president failing to obtain congressional approval before heading for war. The closest that Lyndon Johnson came was the so-called Gulf of Tonkin resolution, which wasn't intended as a blank check to launch an all-out conflict.

We don't do well in faraway wars that haven't come about as a result of a direct attack on us. We aren't a warlike nation and that is all to our credit.

By their very nature, democracies like the United States do best when the people perceive that the decision to go to war has been taken by themselves, through their elected representatives. To fight well, America has always needed to mobilize its spirit, as well as its soldiers.

Saddam is nobody's fool. He reads the newspapers and watches TV. He's obviously banking on mounting domestic dissent to weaken America's resolve to stand up to him. That's the chief reason he seems so self-confident.

A firm congressional resolution backing military action would dispel his illusions on that score. It might even be what it takes to persuade him to withdraw from Kuwait on his own.

I believe the Congress would give its solid approval for waging war, if that's what is required to punish Iraq's aggression and to end the danger of Saddam getting his hands on nuclear weapons.

But, in the unlikely event the vote went the other way, I'd say that Bush then would be wise to abide by the people's wishes, as expressed by their representatives. Otherwise, he could face division and bitterness at home all-too reminiscent of Vietnam.

"What? Back so soon?"

Grandma didn't even realize the grandchildren had been away; she was having such a good time at Terrace Gardens Nursing center. Now you can find temporary care for the members of your family. Feel free to go on a vacation, a business trip, or just rest. Terrace Gardens offers temporary care for a few days or a few weeks. We also provide fresh fruit express three times a week and have added many more things to our activity department.
We can also care for your loved one for just a day.

Teen to be tried as adult in murder

LIBERTY (AP) — A teen-ager accused of killing a Kenefick woman has been certified to be tried as an adult in the shooting death.

Jason Rich, 16, of Kenefick, was transferred to Liberty County Jail Friday from a juvenile facility in Beaumont. Authorities said prosecutors will seek a murder indictment against Rich from a Liberty County grand jury.

Rich is accused in the April 28 shooting of Valerie Collier, 35, at her home.

Sheriff's Detective Robert Dunn said Ms. Collier died of a shot to the back of the head with a .357-caliber Magnum pistol at close range as she lay face-down on her bed beside her 14-year-old niece.

Liberty County Court-at-Law Judge L.J. "Boots" Krueger certified Rich as an adult "because it involved a premeditated, willful, violent act against a person."

Doctors who examined Rich after his arrest told authorities he had been taking the psychedelic drug LSD for several months before the slaying.

The assailant asked the two for money, but when they told him they only had a few dollars in their purses, he shot Ms. Collier and fled without taking anything, officials said.

WE'RE GIVING AWAY $5,000 A WEEK.

(As if our CD rates weren't competitive enough.)

Team Bank's giving away a total of $75,000 between September 4 and November 30. Five thousand dollars every week and a $15,000 grand prize during the final week.

When you come by or mail in the coupon to invest a minimum of $5,000 (from another financial institution) in a new or maturing CD, or $2,000 in an IRA*, you'll then be eligible to win $5,000 in one of our weekly sweepstakes drawings as well as the grand prize drawing. So the sooner you enter, the more chances you'll have to win.

GO FOR THE GREEN SWEEPSTAKES

And if all this cash isn't incentive enough, take a look at our interest rates. They're extremely competitive. A new investment of at least $5,000 for 18 months will earn you a bonus rate.

8.00%

So enter Team Bank's one-of-a-kind Go For The Green Sweepstakes. Whether it's winning $5,000 or collecting a great interest rate, you're sure to end up with a lot of money.

*No purchase or bank transaction necessary. Interest rate for term of 18 months. Substantial penalty for early withdrawal. Rates subject to change. Limit one entry per person per day. Must be 18 years of age or older. Pick up official rules for details and restrictions at your nearest Team Bank office. Member FDIC.

'Orphan Train' gathering to be in Odessa

Staff Report

More than 4,000 orphaned, abandoned, homeless children were brought to Texas from New York City and Boston orphanages from the mid-1800s until as late as 1929.

Children were brought in groups traveling with two or more adults in charge, and placed out with new families. Since the children came on trains, today this era in history is known as the "Orphan Train Era" and stands out as the beginning of foster parent care in America.

During the 75 years of this mass movement of children in America, at least 150,000 children were relocated.

Odessa has been chosen as a place for a one-day gathering of these children who today are in their 70s and 80s. Wednesday, Nov. 28, from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m. Orphan Train Riders, families, friends and interested persons are invited to meet and share information.

Mary Ellen Johnson, a family historian as well as founder of the 785-member organization OTHSA (Orphan Train Heritage Society of America) will be in charge of the meeting.

Johnson travels around the country speaking to groups such as the National Foster Parents Association and historical/genealogical societies about the Orphan Trains. Gathering and preserving Orphan Trains' history is the purpose of OTHSA. Johnson also assists the Orphan Train riders and their descendants with family research.

A quarterly publication, Crossroads, gives useful information in seeking biological family and has three or more Orphan Train Riders stories per issue. Subscriptions are available.

For more information about attending this gathering or to share data, write to OTHSA, 4912 Trout Farm Rd., Springdale, AR 72764. A registration fee of $10 per person will be charged to attend the gathering.

"Texans make up the largest number of members from any one state in our organization so it is fitting that we hold reunions and gatherings in Texas," Johnson said in a news release.

A reunion is held in Arkansas every year in October where as many as 52 Orphan Train riders have gathered to meet each other and talk about their lives.

Johnson found these gatherings give this unique experience a chance to be talked about openly. For many years the "placing-out" was kept quiet and not shared with history book scholars thus it was not taught in the schools. Johnson's group is slowly changing this around as classroom teachers are sent free information packets with which to prepare lessons.

WITH ONEPLUS, THE PERCENTAGES ARE IN YOUR FAVOR.

OnePlus Banking does something to percentage rates that you'll favor. On savings and CDs, they're higher. But on loans and credit cards, they're lower.* And the charge for checking is at the lowest rate – it's free.

All you have to do is keep an average $2000 combined balance in checking and at least one other OnePlus account: savings, money-market, non-brokerage IRAs, even CDs.

It's easy to keep track of your percentages and manage your money better because all your OnePlus accounts are on one simple, consolidated monthly statement. OnePlus customers rate that kind of convenience.

So come by your nearest Texas Commerce Bank or call 685-6300 to learn more about OnePlus Banking. After all, it's in your best interest.

Building knowledge

Elizabeth Noble gives a class presentation on Greek architecture in Cathy Brigg's world history class at Lee High School. The students studied a unit on Rome, Greece and the Middle Ages as part of an observance of National Geography Awareness Week. Gov. Bill Clements also designated the week Texas Geography Awareness Week. Clements said, "The United States is a nation of worldwide involvement and global influence, the responsibilities of which demand an understanding of the lands, languages and cultures of the world."

Thanksgiving holiday gives students, faculty short week

By H.A. Tuck

Students and faculty have a short week, since they get a holiday Thursday and Friday for Thanksgiving.

Tuck

When classes resume on Monday, Nov. 25, there are just two weeks of instruction and one week of final exams to complete the fall term.

• • •

Early registration began last week for the 1991 spring semester, with several hundred students getting enrolled. With the early registration system being used, the process is quick. It also allows for complete selection of classes, meeting times, and payment of tuition and fees.

The early registration this week scheduled those whose last names begin with A-E to register on Monday and those who are S-Z on Tuesday.

There's no registration the remainder of the week. For the final week, Nov. 26-30, the schedule is: Nov. 26, M-R; Nov. 27, F-L; Nov. 28 A-E; Nov. 29-S-Z; and Nov. 30, M-R.

The last day for early registration is Nov. 30. Those who don't register by this time will register on Jan. 9 after receiving time permits for registration during the period between Dec. 3-Jan. 4.

While most of the students and faculty are enjoying a brief holiday, the Chaparral basketball team will have their turkey and dressing in Dodge City, Kan.

That's because the Chaps are slated to compete in the Cowboy Capital Classic Thursday-Saturday.

Midland opens the event against Garden City, Kan., at 7 p.m. Thursday after having played Garden City in the first round of the South Plains College tournament last Thursday. Midland faces Dodge City at 9 p.m. Friday, then finishes up against Marshalltown, Iowa, at 7 p.m. Saturday.

The team then gets a few days off before hosting a "Meeting of Champions" at Chaparral Center on Nov. 30-Dec. 1. For basketball junkies, or even casual fans, this brings together four of the top junior college teams in the country for two nights of fun and competition.

Odessa College and Midland College will face San Jacinto College of Pasadena, and Dixie College of St. George, Utah, in a couple of doubleheaders. Friday, Nov. 30, Odessa plays Dixie at 6 p.m. while Midland tries San Jacinto at 8 p.m. They'll swap opponents on Saturday, Dec. 1, with Odessa and San Jacinto playing at 5:30 p.m. and Midland playing Dixie at 7:30 p.m.

Reserved seats are available for that doubleheader at Chaparral Center or by calling 685-4582.

• • •

Speaking of tickets, don't delay getting yours for one of the nicest possible ways to begin the holiday season. The Andy Williams Christmas Show is coming to Chaparral Center Sunday, Dec. 2, for a 7:30 p.m. performance which includes the Midland High School Chorale.

All tickets are reserved and priced at $19.50. You can even charge your tickets if you wish, for a small extra fee, by calling 685-4584 or in person at Chaparral Center.

• • •

Quinn Carroll, radiography faculty, served on a Joint Review Committee which visited the Don Anna Branch Community College in Las Cruces, N.M., recently.

And John Deats, director of the Murray Fasken Learning Resource Center, was elected as a alternate delegate to the Texas Conference on Libraries and Information Services, which will be held in January at Austin.

• • •

Only four more days remain to view the two great exhibits now at McCormick Gallery. "Matrix" is a show selected from a summer workshop by Lubbock youngsters about the area's history and their own heritage. The resulting photos and writings are wonderful.

Also showing is an architectural exhibit, featuring drawings, computer-assisted drafting, models, and some unique and stylish furniture. The works are by Midland College architecture students and the furniture was designed and constructed by M.C. student Paul Zubiate.

They may be viewed today from 1-5 p.m., Monday and Tuesday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m. and Wednesday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building; admission is free.

The final show this semester is the Fall Student Show, which opens Nov. 27 and closed Dec. 10.

• • •

A regular meeting of the college's Board of Trustees is scheduled for 4 p.m. Tuesday in the Board Room. Newly-appointed Trustee Charlene Romero Wurtz is to be sworn in that afternoon. Other items on the agenda are routine in nature.

• • •

Don't know if it should come under the heading of "construction" or "confection", but the only class being held this week is a two-night Christmas short course on "Gingerbread House". It's being taught on Mondays (Nov. 19 and Nov. 26) from 7-9 p.m. by Cindy Wilson. Cost is $10. You should sign up at the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building.

For more information, call 685-4518.

• • •

For up-to-date information about the college and its many activities, call the MC CityLine information service at 560-2400, extension 1835.

Professor charged in theft

HOUSTON (AP) — Authorities are searching through more than 10,000 art history slides found at the Maryland home of a former University of Houston-Clear Lake professor who school officials believe took some $230,000 worth of slides from the university.

Robin Ptacek, who now serves as an assistant professor of visual arts at the University of Maryland-Baltimore County, surrendered to authorities Friday and was charged with felony theft in connection with the missing slides.

Hazardous waste forum to be Tuesday

Staff Report

SWEETWATER — A public forum on the controversial disposal of out-of-state hazardous waste in West Texas will be held at 1 p.m. Tuesday in the Nolan County Courthouse in Sweetwater.

It is hosted by two Texas legislators, Sen. Chet Brooks and Rep. Robert Saunders, co-chairmen of the 1990 Joint Task Force on Waste Management Policy.

The lawmakers have invited "experts" on the importation of waste and hazardous-waste disposal to address a group of legislators at the public forum.

Proposals for hazardous-waste landfills and incinerators in Mitchell and Lubbock counties have generated much concern.

Also, citizens in the Roby area north of Sweetwater are protesting the filing of an application with the Texas Water Commission for a hazardous-waste injection well in Fisher County.

Other area legislators at the forum will include Sen. Steve Carriker, a Roby farmer; Sen. Temple Dickson, a Sweetwater rancher-lawyer; Sen. Bill Sims, a San Angelo businessman-rancher; Rep. David Counts, a Knox City insurance agent and real-estate agent; Rep. Rob Junell, a San Angelo lawyer, and Rep. Robert Hunter, an Abilene college administrator.

Testimony at the hearing may be given orally or in writing.

Christmas 'angels' sought

Staff Report

The Foster Home Program is planning a Christmas project to benefit abused and neglected children of West Texas. The Angel Tree Project, which involves buying gifts for designated children, will be offered Nov. 26-Dec. 21.

Angel ornaments, bearing the name of a child and a desired gift, will be placed on Christmas trees in area malls. Persons may select an ornament and buy the gift written on it. Gifts will be given to the appropriate child by Children's Protective Services.

Tree-lighting ceremonies will be 1 p.m. Nov. 26 in Midland Park Mall and 10 a.m. the same day in Odessa's Winwood Mall.

Ed Nowell of Union Supply Company provided the funding for the 5,000 ornaments. Co-sponsors of the event are Magic 102 Radio, Channel 2 KMID-TV, the Odessa American and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

For more information about the Angel Tree Project or about foster parenting call 686-CARE.

Rebels plow Plainview

■ The Midland Lee Rebels leave little doubt as to who deserves to advance in the first round of the Class 5A small school playoffs, downing the Plainview Bulldogs 30-6 at Jones Stadium in Lubbock.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Plainview noseguard Timmy Allen may have slipped past K.C. Jones a few times in Midland Lee's 30-6 bi-district blasting of the Bulldogs here at Jones Stadium Saturday, but the 'Dog defender paid for it in the long run.

The Lee win sets up a re-match with 10th-ranked and undefeated El Paso Andress in the Texas Class 5A regular school playoffs at a time and site in El Paso yet to be determined. Andress downed the Rebels 10-3 in the season opener at El Paso.

Jones, Lee's 230-pound junior center, really did not even want to admit that he played well in the first half, much less blew Allen three yards off the line of scrimmage two out of every three plays.

"I got a good second half, but in the first half, not really," Jones said. "He just slid by a couple of times, but we turned it on in the second half."

What Jones did not say was that the Rebels' first touchdown could be dirctly attributed to him.

On their second possession of the game, the Rebs marched 43 yards in eight plays, three of which were Derrick Turner runs behind Jones for 14, six and one yards. The last run was a touchdown effort with 5:32 to play in the first quarter that gave Lee the only lead it would need with Todd Meade's extra point kick.

Meade also booted a 44-yard field goal that put the Rebs up 10-0 with 4:18 remaining in the first half, and just missed on a 47-yarder that was long enough but just left of the goal posts 4:18 before half time.

The Rebs scored plenty of points in the second half, if the 10 first-half points were not enough, and all were directly related to the Rebel defensive effort.

Lee's defense, which allowed Plainview 188 total yards, scored one touchdown on an interception and set up two more with secondary thefts.

The TD return, though, did not come from the defensive backfield. After linebacker Chris Posey pressured Bulldog

Melgoza puts Game Boy to test

■ After depending on their offensive unit last week against San Angelo, the Rebel defense does the job and carries the team to a bi-district championship.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

It was Melgoza's interception in the third period that was returned 11 yards for a touchdown that gave the Rebels a 16-0 lead over Plainview and ignited Lee to an eventual 30-6 bi-district victory.

"I was playing containment and we had pressure on the quarterback," said Melgoza. "He (O'Neal) tried to throw it into the ground and I just grabbed it.

"It was the first time I've ever scored in my life and I've always dreamed that one Friday or Saturday that I would score a touchdown and help the team with a score instead of just making tackles."

Red Raiders save best game for last

TEXAS TECH Red Raiders

■ Rodney Blackshear's record-breaking effort and two touchdown receptions lead the Techsters to a 62-7 roll-over win against lowly SMU.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Rodney Blackshear was just a twinkle in his daddy's eye when All-American back Donny Anderson established three Texas Tech school records 25 years ago.

Saturday, Blackshear eclipsed the third Anderson school football standard with his two touchdown receptions in the Red Raiders 62-7 pummeling of Southern Methodist at Jones Stadium.

With his first TD catch of the day, a 27-yard strike from Robert Hall that put Tech up 14-7 in the first quarter, the junior from Houston Reagan High claimed Tech's career TD reception record for his own. Blackshear entered the game tied with Anderson in that category with seven. He added one more in the third quarter to give him nine for his career.

Blackshear has also broken Anderson records for most pass reception yards in a season (Blackshear now has 973 after his 99-yard effort Saturday) and season kickoff return yardage (621).

A Texas Tech fan Spike remembers

BIG SPRING — Dennis Holmes loved Texas Tech University as if it were his own. He loved it like he had been a superstar football player or band drum ma jor or class president.

But Dennis never attended Texas Tech. He did have a daughter graduate from the Lubbock school. But aside from that, he had no other hard and fast connections with the school.

Patterson

Dennis first met Spike Dykes when Dykes coached at Big Spring High School. Dennis instantly became a fan of the man who now coaches at Tech, and tried to see him whenever Dykes returned to Big Spring.

But cancer killed Dennis Holmes on October 6. He was just 48. And the news of his death shook up an unknowing Dykes, who had earlier this year taken time out from his schedule to see Dennis in the last weeks of his life.

Dykes said from his Texas Tech office last week that he suspected something had happened after Dennis' wife, Kay, had sent him a thank you note for all he had done to brighten Dennis' final days.

Dennis was like hundreds of other West Texans. A terminal manager at Oil Transport Co. in Big Spring, Dennis was a big time sports fan.

"He was as great a sports fan and supporter of young people as there ever was," Dykes said. "He was just an upbeat human being. If he wasn't an inspiration, nobody was. He was a very treasured, valued human being."

Dennis would probably say those same words about Dykes.

After speaking to a group at Coahoma High School before the start of the 1990 football season, Dykes stopped back through Big Spring after hearing that Dennis' health had taken a downturn. The two spent the afternoon at Comanche Trails Golf Course with club pro Al Patterson and a few other golfers.

Patterson said Dykes never expected anything in return. He only wanted to visit Dennis after hearing his cancer had worsened.

Dennis had Texas Tech on virtually everything he owned. He wore mostly red and black clothes. The head covers on his golf clubs were adorned with Texas Tech insignias, as was his golf cart. When he couldn't get a red and black Suburban for his wife, he bought a plain red one and had black stripes put on it.

Shortly before his death, Dennis was admitted to a Lubbock hospital to receive chemotherapy treatment for the cancer.

"Spike told Dennis to call him whenever he was in Lubbock," Kay Holmes said. "Spike took time out of his schedule and gave Dennis a tour of the new athletic offices. I can't say if Spike did it just for Dennis, because I think Spike would do that for anybody. He's just that kind of guy."

Mrs. Holmes added that her husband never really spoke of Dykes' visits or the team jersey he was given by Dykes following the New Mexico game. But, it was the smile he displayed after those visits that exhibited his feelings.

"He was just real proud," Mrs. Holmes said of the visits and time Dykes took. "It meant a lot to him."

"Dennis had a strong will," Dykes said. "He had a terminal illness, yet he was so upbeat and fought it to the last breath he had. That's the real mark of people.

"We've got people who complain about everything in the world, but I never heard him complain about a thing. Dennis spread a lot of joy to a lot of people."

It's fairly obvious why Dennis Holmes was a Spike Dykes fan. The two seem to share some of thge same qualities. It's just unfortunate that something as tragic as cancer had to bring the two men together again.

The Lions (8-2) tied the game 21-21 when quarterback Tony Sacca, who threw for a career-high 277 yards, passed 14 yards to Al Golden with 7:15 remaining.

Penn State sealed the fate of Notre Dame (8-2) when defensive back Darren Perry intercepted a Rick Mirer pass intended for Shawn Davis and returned the ball to the Irish 19 with 59 seconds left.

The Lions moved the ball to the Notre Dame 17 in three plays, allowing the clock to run down to eight seconds before Fayak's attempt. Notre Dame's Walter Boyd returned a squib kick eight yards as time expired.

No. 10 Washington 55
Washington State 10

Mark Brunell threw for three touchdowns and rushed for another as the No. 10 Huskies blew past Washington State in a Pacific-10 game delayed by an explosives scare.

Rose Bowl-bound Washington (9-2 overall, 7-1 in the Pac-10) held Washington State (3-8, 2-6) to minus-7 yards rushing and sacked Drew Bledsoe seven times.

The Apple Cup game was delayed 30 minutes while police disarmed a radio-controlled explosive device that was found in the stands about 40 minutes prior to the scheduled kickoff.

Police said the device contained flash powder and probably would not have caused any injuries if it had detonated.

Walker leads Chaps in win

Staff Report

LEVELLAND — Eric Walker broke open a close game with three consecutive three-pointers to lead the Midland College basketball team to a 94-88 win over Trinidad (Colo.) College on the third day of the South Plains McDonald's Classic here Saturday.

Trinidad quickly erased MC's three-point halftime lead, but the Chaps broke loose on an 11-point run from which the Coloradans never recovered. Walker had three of his game-high five three-pointers in that run, while Carroll Boudreaux added another basket.

MC, 5-2, faces Garden City (Kan.) in the opening game of the Dodge City (Kan.) Classic. The Chaps defeated Garden City in the tournament here on Thursday.

FORT WORTH — Peter Gardere tied a school record by throwing four touchdown passes, three to the Cash twins, Keith and Kerry, and seventh-ranked Texas stayed on course for the Cotton Bowl with a 38-10 victory over Texas Christian on Saturday.

The Longhorns (6-1, 6-0 Southwest Conference) beat the Horned Frogs for the 23rd consecutive time. They can clinch the title and a trip to the Cotton Bowl by defeating Baylor in Waco next week. TCU (5-5, 3-4) lost its fourth straight after a 5-1 start.

Gardere tied a school record held by three other players. His four touchdown passes included two in a span of 53 seconds.

Trailing 17-3, the Horned Frogs jumped back into the game briefly on a fake field goal with holder Mike Noack flipping a 6-yard scoring pass to Cedric Jackson. The third-period score came after Ken Walton recovered Gardere's fumble at the Texas 9.

Baylor 17, Rice 16

Rice wide receiver Nigel Codrington, the Southwest Conference high jump champion, leaped above two Baylor defenders on a desperation fourth-down pass with 1:03 left in the game and then struggled the final 3 yards into the end zone to complete a 34-yard touchdown pass play and pull Rice to within one point. The Owls then failed on a two-point conversion attempt.

Texas A&M 20, Arkansas 16

Bucky Richardson's 10-yard touchdown run in the third quarter secured Texas A&M's victory over Arkansas and extended the Razorbacks' losing streak to seven games for the first time ever in a season.

The last Arkansas team to lose six in a row was Frank Broyles' first team in 1958. The victory was the Aggies' first in Arkansas since 1976.

Richardson's touchdown came on third down and was the 11th play of an 82-yard drive. He drew the defense in with a fake to the fullback and then ran by Michael James at the 5 for a 20-10 lead.

A&M improved to 7-2-1 and 4-1-1 in the Southwest Conference. Arkansas is 2-8 and 0-7 in the SWC for the first time in school history.

A&M led 10-3 at the half, but Richardson threw to Gary Oliver for 14 yards and then turned upfield for 45 yards on the option and a first down at the Arkansas 12. The Aggies settled for Layne Talbot's 23-yard field goal and a 10-point lead.

No. 12 Houston 84
E. Washington 21

David Klingler set an NCAA record with 11 touchdown passes and tied the NCAA record of 47 touchdown passes in a season, leading 12th ranked Houston to an 84-21 victory over Eastern Washington on Saturday.

Klingler hit 13 of 14 first-quarter passes and directed Houston to touchdowns on its first six drives of the game. He continued the assault with a 21-point third quarter.

Houston (9-1) extended its Astrodome winning streak to 14. The Cougars will close out their season Dec. 1 against Arizona State in Tokyo.

It was the most points allowed by Eastern Washington (5-6) since losing to the Washington State freshman team 81-0 in 1922.

TECH: Raiders never had to punt

From 1C

"It felt pretty good breaking all those records," Blackshear said as his Raiders finished the year 4-7 and 3-5 in the Southwest Conference. "It was one of the bright spots of the season for me after we didn't win as many games as we had hoped. But records are going to be broken every year."

The loss dropped SMU to 1-9 and 0-7 in SWC, with a home date remaining next Saturday against Arkansas. For Mustang head coach Forrest Gregg, who will coach his last game against the Razorbacks before becoming full-time athletic director at SMU, the loss was hard to swallow.

"This was the worst game we've played in the two years I've been here," he said. "I can't think of anything good in the game except that it's over. We got beat in every way you could get beat. Our offense couldn't move against their third-string defense, and our defense couldn't stop their third-string offense."

Indeed, the Raiders did not have to punt all day as tailbacks Anthony Lynn and Donald Marshall both rushed for more than 90 yards. Also, quarterbacks Jason Rattan and Robert Hall each threw for nearly 80 yards each.

"It's not like we're world champions, but we have really played well the last two weeks," said Tech head coach Spike Dykes, whose team beat Texas Christian 40-28 last week.

Another highlight for the Raiders was the fact that both Hall and Jamie Gill have passed for more than 1,000 yards this season. Gill, who was injured for the SMU game, finished the year with 1,080 and Hall had 1,581 after his 79 yards against the Ponies.

Hall and Gill accomplished the dual 1,000-feat for only the third time in NCAA history. Both Brigham Young and Houston did it in 1988.

"Sometimes if you're not careful you can go on a two- or three-game losing streak like we did this year. But I thought we really played a good ball game and have played hard the last three weeks.

"We played hard against Texas (a 41-22 Longhorn win) and we played well these last two games," Dykes said. "I really think this team's pretty good right now. I know it wasn't, but the legacy of this team could have been great."

And even though SMU lost its school-record ninth straight game, Tech had plenty to do with that.

The Mustangs tied the game with 18 seconds left in the first quarter, as Mike Romo connected with Jason Wolf to make the score 7-7. But that was the last highlight for SMU.

DEFENSE: Time to plow the cotton field

From 1C

So, what's this about the GameBoy?

Melgoza was caught by Lee coach Earl Miller on Monday playing with the Nintendo portable game box and made him put it away.

"It's really just my little mind game," said Melgoza. "It gets me to thinking. It helped my reflexes on that interception, didn't it?"

Lee's bi-district victory was as opposite a win as the win over San Angelo a week ago. Last week, the offense carried Lee. This week it was the defense.

Melgoza, Jimmy Patton and Mike Loftis all had interceptions that were turned into 20 of the 30 points.

"This was my first playoff game to play in and I was really excited about it," said Patton, a junior. "I really think this was one of my better games. It was nice to get an interception that helped the team. I just backed up in coverage and the quarterback threw the ball to me."

Loftis said, "It feels good that we (defense) got it together against a good team. You have to give Plainview credit. They played hard."

Miller didn't seem to think it strange that Lee would look great offensively one week and great on defense the next.

"I've been around the game all my life, and that's football. That's why they call this game a team game," said Miller. "A team picks each other up. It doesn't matter how it's done as long as it gets done. I'm proud that the defense came to the rescue when we needed it. It was the same for our offense last week. These kids try to find a way to win."

Lee offensive coordinator Van Tom Whatley wasn't as thrilled with the Rebel showing, however.

"Well, it leaves me scratching my head," said Whatley. "We weren't horrible, but it wasn't a great effort by the offense. At least we won and have the chance to play Andress again."

Lee now advances to the region round of the Small School playoffs next week and the only thing known for sure at press time was that the game will be against El Paso Andress in El Paso. Time and site are still to be determined.

Andress defeated Lee 10-3 in the first regular season game of the year.

Lee center K.C. Jones said, "I played bad and I know it, but we're going to get Andress this time. We're in for them."

Lee assistant coach Eddie Bull said, "Plow up the cotton field and get it ready to play," in an obvious remark made by Miller last week in which he said, "We would love to have a chance to play Andress again, even if we have to play in a cotton field."

Miller said Saturday, "Well, these kids have given themselves an opportunity to play Andress again. I think they know what happened last time out there. You dream about getting this kind of chance."

REBELS: Field position advantage for Lee quarterback Pat O'Neal in the Plainview end zone, 260-pound lineman Roy Melgoza snatched a throw-away pass off the turf and ran it 11 yards for a score that put Lee up 16-0 with 3:12 to go in the third period.

From 1C

"It almost hit the ground and I almost tripped, but I scooped it up and wanted to score. It kind of pumped the team up," Melgoza said.

After Melgoza's score, Jimmy Patton picked O'Neal off at the Plainview 27, and Turner later punched in a five-yard run that gave the game an air of a rout.

If there was any question after that, Mike Loftins stole a pass from O'Neal on the next Plainview offensive play. Two plays later, fullback Jovan Tellez ran one yard for the Rebs' final score.

The Bulldogs (4-5-1) finally found a way to move the ball late in the game, as O'Neal scored from four yards out. The Plainview two-point pass was also intercepted, as Mike Brackens came down with the ball.

Offensive stats were not spectacular for Lee, as the Reb defense offered good field position most of the game and kept the Bulldogs pent up.

"We had bad field position the whole night. I'm not trying to make excuses, because that was a result of Lee's defense and kicking game," said Steve Parr, Plainview head coach. "You have got to give them credit."

For Lee head coach Earl Miller, the win will give him and the 8-2 Rebs a chance for revenge against Andress.

"At least we have a chance to go back to El Paso and make amends," he said. "I'm proud of the way we played tonight."

Brock a happy man with 'Canes, SWC

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The man called "Hoss" can chill down from his big sweat: the Cotton Bowl will demand the nation's attention Jan. 1.

Jim Brock has those glamorous Miami Hurricanes as his guest team on New Year's Day. A cat with canary feathers sticking out of his mouth couldn't look more satisfied.

The defending national champions could still have a big say about their successor. Ranked third, and with Boston College, Syracuse and San Diego State still on the schedule, the Hurricanes could be playing the Southwest Conference champion for the title.

"I'm not so sure they might not jump over those boys (Notre Dame and Colorado) before its all over," Brock said.

Analysis

"They'd never been in our game and wanted to come," Brock said. "The money is good, they got eight kids on the team from Texas. It wasn't too hard to get together on the dance floor."

Of course, the Cotton Bowl can't officially announce Miami is signed, sealed and delivered until Nov. 24 because of NCAA rules. However, it's a done deal and one which has CBS officials in New York smiling.

CBS and the Cotton Bowl have a deal through the 1992 game and arrangements such as the one bringing the Hurricanes to Dallas will help negotiations in the future.

"I think we'll have at least the number two bowl matchup and I don't know many who'll have a better one," Brock said.

Of course, the Cotton Bowl needs for the seventh-ranked Texas Longhorns to at least stay where they are and that's NOT a done deal.

Texas had to deal with Texas Christian on Saturday then must hook it up with Baylor and Texas A&M, both still in contention for Cotton Bowl berths. A&M has defeated Texas six consecutive years and the Baptist Bears bring down fire and brimstone on the 'Horns in Waco.

Brock can't play favorites because as he puts it: "We made a deal in 1941 with nine institutions and we take what's dealt to us."

However, it wouldn't take too much imagination to guess that Brock would be secretly rooting for the Longhorns, who haven't been to the Cotton Bowl since 1983.

SA Clark wins 5A spike title

AUSTIN (AP) — San Antonio Clark battled back from a one-game deficit Saturday, winning the University Interscholastic League Class 5A state volleyball title, 12-15, 15-10, 15-11 over Houston Clear Lake.

Class 4A Dumas downed Austin Reagan, 15-12, 15-10, while 2A East Bernard beat Jewett Leon, 15-8, 15-9, and Class A Plains beat Carmine Round Top, 15-8, 15-11.

Bellville won the 3A championship with a 14-16, 15-4, 15-10 victory over Springtown.

"We had to play great to beat this team," Dumas coach Jack Wilson said. "We were able to block them and intimidate them along the net."

All three games were hard-fought in the 5A match.

Clear Lake seized a 7-2 lead in the first game before Clark pulled within 9-7. But Clear Lake took control and won on Tracy McWilliams' ace.

The third game was tied 11-11 before Clear Lake mistakes gave the match to Clark.

"We just made too many errors," said Clear Lake coach Angie Chivers. "We did it to ourselves. I think we just lost our intensity."

It was Clark's second consecutive appearance in the finals.

Lady 'Dogs end tourney with win

Staff Report

DEL RIO — The Midland High Lady Bulldogs wrapped up the Del Rio Tournament with a 2-1 record thanks to a 53-44 victory Saturday over San Angelo Lake View.

That win raised MHS' record to 2-2 for the season. The Lady Bulldogs, who opened the tourney with a win Thursday over Eagle Pass, fell 54-53 Friday to San Antonio South San.

Sally Gibson keyed Saturday's victory for MHS. The 5-11 junior hit 11 field goals and added nine free throws en route to 31 points.

The Lady Bulldogs were scheduled to play Midland Lee for fourth place at the event, but the two teams agreed mutually to return to Midland instead.

California choreographs 'The Play II' to defeat Stanford

Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif. — California has "The Play." Now Stanford has "The Play II." The sequel was as bizarre as the original.

John Hopkins kicked a 39-yard field goal as time expired to cap the most improbable Big Game comeback since "The Play" as Stanford defeated California 27-25 Saturday night.

"I remember the night of 'The Play,' and I guess you could call this 'The Play II,' " said Stanford's Glyn Milburn, who ran for 196 yards and a touchdown.

"The Play" lasted a few seconds and involved five laterals and a trombone player. "The Play II" stretched over about five minutes and encompassed four plays, two penalties and several thousand celebrating Cal fans.

The game appeared lost for the Cardinal when Cal's John Hardy intercepted Palumbis' two-point conversion pass in the right corner of the end zone.

Enter the Cal fans, who ran onto the field to celebrate Hardy's play and an apparent victory. Instead, they helped save the day for Stanford.

Cal was penalized 15 yards for delay of game, and Stanford kicked off from midfield instead of its own 35. When Dan Byers recovered an onside kick after the ball had bounced off several players, Stanford had the ball at the Cal 37.

With time for one play, Palumbis threw a pass that fell incomplete. But Cal defensive lineman John Belli was assessed a 15-yard penalty for roughing Palumbis, and the Cardinal had a first down at the Bears' 22.

"When I was rushing I was pretty juiced up," Belli said. "I wanted to make something happen. ... I was just trying to get some heat on the quarterback. I didn't realize it was late when I hit him."

MHS boys, Lee girls win handily in water

Staff Report

SAN ANGELO — The Midland High boys swim team used a double win by Matt Houston along with a pool record in the 400-yard freestyle relay to win the boys championship at the San Angelo Invitational here Saturday.

Midland Lee used its superior depth to easily win the girls division.

Houston, who placed in last year's state meet as a sophomore, handily won the 50 freestyle and 100 butterfly. Other Bulldog winners included Steve Thomsen in the 100 free and Moss Fennell in the 500 free.

Houston, Thomsen and Fennell all swam a leg on the record-setting 400 relay team that clocked a pool record 3:21.17. The standout trio was joined on the record by foreign exchange student Stefan Nilsson, who also placed fourth in a pair of individual events.

Lee The MHS boys scored 241 points. Lubbock Coronado was second with 186 points, while Midland Lee placed sixth with 86.

HEY KIDS! WIN A TRIP FOR TWO ON SOUTHWEST AIRLINES.

Southwest Airlines, La Quinta Inns and the Midland Reporter-Telegram want to know what Christmas means to you. Just describe the meaning of this special holiday in 100 words or less. Then mail in your essay with the completed entry form. The contest is open to all area students enrolled in Elementary through Senior High School. Winners will receive a roundtrip for two to any Southwest Airlines published destination and three days'/two nights' accommodations at a La Quinta Inn in that same city. And the trips are good for the winner and an accompanying adult in each category — Elementary, Junior High and High School.

In the event that a La Quinta Inn is not located in the general vicinity of the Southwest destination selected, a substitute hotel will be provided. Meals, ground transportation and any other expenses are not provided. Entries must be postmarked no later than December 17, 1990. Essay should be on 8½" x 11" paper and must use the "What Christmas Means To Me" theme. No purchase necessary.

Orlando wins third straight game

Associated Press

Sam Vincent scored 26 points and the Orlando Magic held Indiana without a field goal during a nine-minute stretch of the second half to overcome Reggie Miller's season-high 34 points and beat the Pacers 96-89 Saturday night.

The victory was the third straight for Orlando since beginning the season with six consecutive losses. Terry Catledge had 20 points and Jerry Reynolds added 17 for the Magic, which held Indiana to 17 points in the third quarter and just 16 in the fourth.

Indiana led 56-51 at halftime but fell behind when it went the last 5:41 of the third quarter and first 3:39 of the fourth without a basket. The Pacers were limited to a pair of free throws by Miller during that stretch and trailed by 11 points when Miller hit a 15-foot jumper to break the dry spell.

Pistons 91, Hawks 83

Joe Dumars added 18 points and Bill Laimbeer 16 for the Pistons, who won their third straight game.

John Battle scored 16 points for Atlanta, which lost its fourth straight and fifth in six games. Moses Malone added 15 points while Duane Ferrell and Kevin Willis had 14 apiece.

Dumars started the run with two straight baskets and Aguirre finished it with six of the next eight points to give Detroit a 90-81 lead with 33.5 seconds left.

Hornets 112, Cavaliers 100

Armon Gilliam added 22 points and Rex Chapman 19 — including three of four 3-point attempts — as the Hornets raced to a 61-38 halftime lead.

Led by Brad Daugherty's nine points and six from Mark Price, the Cavaliers narrowed the lead to 71-68 on a driving layup by Larry Nance with 3:15 left in the third quarter.

The Cavs outscored the Hornets 30-10 during the stretch. The Hornets responded by going on a 10-3 run to close out the quarter, capped on a 19-foot jumper by Dell Curry that made it 81-71.

Celtics 102, Bullets 90

Washington led 84-79 with 8:07 left when Lewis made three straight layups and a short jumper to give Boston an 87-84 lead.

Kevin McHale followed with a shot in the lane, Kevin Gamble drove for a basket and Larry Bird made a technical foul shot to make it 92-84 with 3:15 remaining.

McHale scored 22 points, Lewis 21 and Gamble 19 as Boston won its third straight.

Knicks 106, 76ers 79

Kiki Vandeweghe scored 21 points and the New York Knicks used a 30-11 second-quarter spurt to defeat the Philadelphia 76ers.

The victory was only the second in four games at home for the Knicks, who led by at least 16 points in each of their two losses at Madison Square Garden.

But New York had no problem holding a big lead this time as the 76ers got no closer than 19 points in the second half. The Knicks' biggest lead was 29.

Mark Jackson scored 17 points for New York, while Patrick Ewing had 12 points and 10 rebounds and Charles Oakley 11 points and 13 rebounds.

Spurs 128, Suns 114

David Robinson had game highs of 40 points and 14 rebounds and Terry Cummings added 25 points as the San Antonio Spurs beat the Phoenix Suns.

Robinson also had five blocked shots for the Spurs. Rod Strickland had 17 points and Reggie Williams 14. Sean Elliott had 10.

Phoenix was led by Tom Chambers' 26 points. Mark West had 13 points for the Suns.

The Spurs led all the way, and Paul Pressey's 3-point play with 6:10 left in the third quarter gave San Antonio its biggest lead at 90-73. Then Phoenix went on a 14-6 run to cut the lead to 96-87 with 1:36 left in the third quarter.

Rockets 117, Heat 100

Otis Thorpe scored 9 of his game-high 28 points in the pivotal third quarter to lead the Houston Rockets over the Miami Heat.

Thorpe also grabbed 15 rebounds. Akeem Olajuwon added 21 points and 12 rebounds for Houston. Kenny Smith and Kennard Winchester added 13 points apiece for Houston.

Kevin Edwards led the Heat with 27 points, followed by Willy Burton with 21 and Rony Seikaly with 19 points and 12 rebounds.

Houston outscored Miami 10-4 to open the second half, taking a 57-45 lead with 9:08 remaining in the third quarter.

A pair of baskets by Thorpe increased the Rocket lead to 63-49 in the third quarter.

Bucks 111 Nets 99

The New Jersey Nets tied an NBA record with their 32nd straight road loss as Ricky Pierce scored 32 points to lead the Milwaukee Bucks over New Jersey.

The Nets tied the 36-year-old record for road futility set by Baltimore, which lost 32 straight from Jan 2, 1953-March 14, 1954. New Jersey's last road victory came at Miami on Dec. 19, 1989.

Jack Sikma added 26 points for Milwaukee.

Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The Cowboys and Rams, on equal footing for the first time in several years, meet Sunday with both teams trying to keep their dim playoff hopes alive.

Dallas is improved. Although the Cowboys' 3-7 record isn't exactly cause for celebration, it's certainly better than their marks the previous two years — 1-15 in 1989 and 3-13 in 1988.

While the Cowboys have shown modest improvement, the Rams have slipped into a steep decline.

Coming off an 11-5 season and an appearance in the NFC title game last January (a 30-3 loss to the 49ers), Los Angeles was touted as a strong contender for the Super Bowl.

But, with a porous defensive secondary and not much of a running game to go along with their Jim Everett-led passing attack, the Rams have struggled to a 3-6 record.

Both the Cowboys and Rams are coming off brushes with what Los Angeles coach John Robinson has called "the elite" of the NFC this year. The Cowboys lost 24-6 to the San Francisco 49ers, and the Rams were swamped 31-7 by the New York Giants. The 49ers and Giants are both 9-0.

Heading into the game against Dallas, Robinson said the Rams are being shortsighted.

"We don't want to think about anything but the Cowboys," he coach said. "Our reality is to deal with what's going on with us. It's not a good time to philosophize a lot, even the teams that are winning."

Since the NFC is a scramble, with only five teams above .500, it probably will be awhile until teams fall to the wayside in the wild-card race.

"The way the year is going, with so many teams with mediocre records, it gives teams hope for a long time," Robinson said.

The Cowboys rank next to last in the NFL in total offense, 24th in rushing and 27th in passing. The Rams are 26th overall in defense, 15th against the rush and 27th against the pass.

Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said the Cowboys' offense isn't where he thought it would be by now.

"We have been inconsistent at times and in some games we haven't had the football long enough to get everybody involved," Johnson said.

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman has had a disappointing season, ranking next to last among NFC passers, just barely ahead of Washington's Stan Humphries.

Aikman has completed 162 of 296 passes for 1,713 yards, with 14 interceptions and just five touchdowns.

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males

I'm a 32-year-old slim, Caucasian female who enjoys movies, travel, dancing, sports, quiet evenings at home and just about anything as long as I'm with someone special. I'm looking for a Caucasian male with similiar interests who is honest, secure, intelligent and caring. No drug us[illegible] or smokers and only light to non-dri[illegible]ers. Please send phone number and tell me about yourself.
MP - 631

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS

Retired, educated, Caucasian, Christian lady in her sixties (60s) would like to meet a gentleman 65 to 70. Non-smoker, non-drinker. I am warm, kind, flexible, romantic and compassionate with no dependents at home. I enjoy clean fun! I like to walk, c/w music, eating in or out, movies, concerts, travel, bridge or just making new friends. If you have the same values, write me. You won't be disappointed.
MP - 636

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS

I'm all woman: attractive, feminine, interesting, well-educated, adventurous, young-at-heart, and compassionate. You're over 55, college educated, see life with humor, optimism, tolerance, even in an election year! I like to cook for a man, dress up or down and discuss anything except science or sports. I love home life and travel, daybreaks and moonlight, laughter and sentiment.
MP - 637

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males

Help! SURELY There's ONE decent man left out there! I'm looking for someone affectionate and caring for friendship and possible relationship. I enjoy horseback riding, dancing, swimming, travel and quiet evenings at home in front of the fire place. If you have similar interests and want to spend some time, send phone number and picture if possible. All replies will be answered.
MP - 649

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS

Does this sound familiar?
Looking for that "special friend" (30-40) who enjoys movies, dining out, evenings at home, whatever. Are you honest and unpretentious, someone who isn't intimidated by an independent woman? I'm an unencumbered animal lover, science fiction buff who enjoys music and cooking. I need a compatible, Caucasian, non-smoker, non-drug user who enjoys eating.
Any takers?

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS

Retired, attractive petite, Caucasian, Christian lady in her 60s would like to meet gentleman in his 50s or 60s, who is an active Christian, non-smoker, non-drinker, honest, financially secure and would be nice if he played golf. I am healthy, active, kind and compassionate. I love home life as well as travel. Send letter with phone number and picture.
MP - 662

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS

Are you a Caucasian Senior Citizen who is physically, emotionally and spiritually healthy? So am I. But I am tired of going out alone, eating alone and doing everything alone. Are that way too? I'm 5'5" and weigh 155 lb. I have a dark complexion, gray, naturally curly hair, and a smile that will drive you crazy. I like having a good time and enjoy clean fun. I play most table games and like music real well - even Country Western dancing. I like to laugh a lot. I'm just a "good company" person. Let's meet. Whatcha say? Will answer all replies.
(MP - 584)

COUCH POTATO - Now that I have your attention...Do you like VCR movies, reading, good conversation, pets, games, occasionally dining out or partying with friends? If you're a solid, unattached Caucasian male between the ages of 35 and 45, you've just found anew friend. Let's get together. No fitness freaks please.
MP - 656

Attractive, fun-loving 39 year-old sales professional looking for someone to spend quality time with. I'm 5'6", 120 pounds, Caucasian, non-smoker, occasional social drinker. I love the outdoors, all kinds of music and life in general. Seeking a sincere, outgoing Caucasian man with a zest for life and a sense of humor. Would appreciate photo.
MP - 657

Gorgeous, modest, professional, adventurous, physically fit, 23 years-old, 5'4", blonde, blue-eyed, Caucasian female, looking for "Mr. Right"! I want to meet a tall, strong, professional, blonde, athletic, Christian, Caucasian male between the ages of 27-38. I'm a non-smoker, non-drug user, occasional social drinker who enjoys the theatre, dancing, children, working out, and most sports activities. Please respond with name and phone number.

MALE PERSONAL ADS

28 year-old Caucasian male, brown/blonde hair, blue eyes, 6', 190 lbs. Hard worker, non-drinker, non-drug user. Very laid back with good sense of humor. Would like to find a gal who is open and honest. No games, just fun. You could check this out or you can just stay home and watch HBO. What will it be?
MP - 648

Do you want to have fun? Like dancing and listening to c/w music? Between the ages of 23 and 27? I am a Caucasian, 26 year-old male who likes the same things. I am a social drinker and smoke, but do not do drugs and am not interested in anyone who uses drugs. Why don't we get together?
MP - 647

I am a tall, attractive, born again, spirit filled, Christian man, 38 years-old. I have a good job, but I'm not rich and don't drive a new car. I look at what's in a person's heart, not what's in his or her bank account. I like country, gospel and 50s rock and roll music. I'm seeking a Christian Lady up to 45 years old for possible lasting relationship. Photo, phone address please.
MP - 644

Single, Caucasian, male, 29, 6', fit and trim. Christian, non-smoker, educated, homeowner, old fashioned. Seeking old-fashioned woman interested in marriage, having children, and living a quiet country life.
MP - 643

Looking for that special lady, 40-53, Caucasian, non-drinker, who knows how to show her feelings toward a man. There must be one good one still around. I am 6'3", 185 lbs with brown hair and eyes. I have a good job and attended college. I enjoy dinners out, TV at night and riding motor cycles. Please send picture and phone number. All replies answered.
MP - 642

I am a Caucasian male, 36 years-old, 6'4" looking for a special lady, ages 18-40, who is interested in a strong, caring, loving, giving and honest man and possible commitment. I own my own home, am a non-drug user, non-smoker. I drink a little socially and enjoy movies, dining out, camping, children and home life. I'm hardworking and responsible.
MP - 641

Attractive male, 30 years-old, brown hair, eyes, outgoing. Likes country and rock and roll music, dancing, fishing, walks on the beach. Would like to meet lady who likes the same things. I'm a social drinker.
MP - 638

Here I am: a special loving, caring, giving, affectionate, nice looking, divorced, Caucasian, male 30-something. I love kids, am 5'8", 180 lbs, not fat, like to workout go to the lake, water ski and snow ski. If you are 24 to 40 and like to snuggle, take walks, talk, are honest and giving, and take care of yourself, then send me a letter and a current picture, which will be returned, I promise. Trust me! It's worth taking a chance.
MP - 654

I am a 24 years-old, single, male, 6', 185 lbs. I am looking for a special Christian female. I enjoy all outdoor sports and styling home with someone special. I have brown hair and hazel eyes, I enjoy Christian music and looking for female between 19 and 30 years old. All replies will be answered.
MP - 652

Single, Caucasian male, mid-30s, educated, not just trained. A "more" Christian. Enjoy music, movies, theatre, non-smoker, intelligent, virtuous, and loved by animals and small children. All this plus neat handwriting.
MP - 635

I'm a single, Caucasian male, 34 years-old, 6'3", 180 lbs., financially secure professional who loves life, traveling constantly, athletic, rock & roll music, reading, rafting and cuddling. People say I would be a great catch, but I've never been married and am very independent. I'm looking for a tall, dark, athletic woman who is confident in herself and is a worthy challenge.
MP - 633

MALE PERSONAL ADS

Ugly, short, with no personality, seeking one night stand with raving beauty... does not describe me. However, if you're a strong Christian, 35-40, and enjoy the arts, perhaps you're curious enough to find out who I am. Send letter, phone number and photo at your discretion.
MP - 630

Adventurous educated, fun loving romantic male, 6', 175 lbs., blonde hair, blue eyes and fifty years young. Professional Rodeo Cowboy with several business interests. I enjoy romantic evenings, traveling to romantic places and dancing the night away. If you are slender, gorgeous, and sexy, let's get together and have some fun.
MP - 627

Hello! I'm a black male, late 20s, college educated, good job, 6', 190 lbs. I don't smoke, drink or use drugs. I'd like to meet a nice lady 21 - 30, who is ambitious and has a positive attitude. Children ok. Send name, phone number and interests. I will answer all.
MP - 626

If you're a single lady with a pretty smile, pleasant laugh, dark curlie hair, slender, 25-29 years old, 5'6" - 5'9", non smoker, social drinker, play some musical instrument (piano or violin preferred) and not too many kids, we could be enjoying time together instead of reading personals. I'm single, Caucasian, 37 years old, 5'11", 190 lbs, well paid, degreed professional, looking for that someone special for some fun and more.
MP - 625

I am a Caucasian male, 36 years-old, 6'4" who is looking for a special lady who is interested in a strong, caring, giving and honest man and possible commitment. I own my own home. I'm a non-drug user, light social drinker. I enjoy the movies, dining out, camping and home life. I'm hardworking and responsible. Race unimportant, ages 18-40.
MP - 626

Attractive male, 30 years-old, brown hair and eyes, who is outgoing, social drinker, likes dancing, Country and Western and rock and roll music, fishing, walks on the beach, would like to meet an honest young lady with similar interests.
MP - 625

6'1" thin 49 year-old Caucasian; I am a non-smoking, non-drinking vegetarian with six degrees including a Ph.D. I am looking for a bright woman to be a good friend who is a good conversationalist, likes people, enjoys life, positive, and sensitive. Please no smokers, drug users, born-agains, or heavy drinkers. Include phone number and picture.
MP - 624

I am an educated, intelligent, employed, Caucasian male who enjoys reading, talking, TV, parties, and home life. I am open to most things to one degree or another. I'm not into the bar scene. I'm 5'10", 63, brown eyes and hair (some), non-religious. I drink sparingly, smoke (trying to quit), I don't own a pair of cowboy boots. I'm looking for a slim, empathetic, unencumbered lady, middle to late 40s to early 50s.
(MP-583)

Divorced 30 year-old Caucasian, male 6'2" 174 pounds, black hair, brown eyes, non-smoker, non-drinker, non-drug user. I have a steady job, own my home and am tired of spending days and nights alone. Looking for a woman 28-43 years-old for honest one person relationship. Lots of love to give to the right woman. Please include phone number when responding.
MP - 658

Are you lonesome like me? Think life has passed you by? Don't loose hope. Let's meet and live again. I'm a sinner looking for someone to love and share life with. I have lots of love to give! If you will give some back. Let's enjoy life together! Write.

A SUNNY DISPOSITION

The formal living room is brightened by a wall of windows and transoms which provide a great view of the lovely back yard.

By JILL HANCOCK

An open design between the kitchen, breakfast area and family room is just one appealing factor about this home. There is also a fabulous formal living room which is brightened by a wall of windows and transoms, as well as an intimate master bedroom that focuses on a corner marble fireplace. This four-bedroom home is filled with quality appointments that Paul West homes are noted for.

The house is tucked away on a private cul-de-sac in Polo Park. The exterior of the two-story home is highlighted by a lawn which features brick curbed flower beds which are filled with lush landscaping.

An arched transom and a leaded glass front door invites a person into the foyer. The walls are lined with a pale blue paper that features specks of cream, rose and white. A brass fixture descends from the tall ceiling and a tile flooring flows past the formal dining room, to the left, into the living room.

PALE GRAY colors the dining room walls. A white moulding is placed at mid-wall. A floor-to-ceiling window has an arched transom and plantation shutters. It overlooks the front lawn. A brass chandelier is centered above the dining room table. One wall in this room is open to the foyer and an adjacent wall has an opening which provides access into the living room.

A short corridor, to the right of the foyer, leads to a sequestered bedroom. The amenities in this room include three plantation shuttered windows, taupe walls and a large walk-in closet with shelves. It has a door which leads into a private dressing area with a marble vanity and a linen cabinet. The walls are covered in a taupe, teal and peach paper. The dressing room opens onto a bathing area.

Please see SUNNY/2D

Photos by JOE D. WILLIAMS

A very appealing aspect about this home is the open design between the kitchen, breakfast area and family room.

NOV 18 90

(From 1D)

The foyer extends into the formal living room. The back wall is lined with windows and transoms. This light and bright room has off-white walls and a tall ceiling. The carpeting in this centrally located room is bordered on two sides by a tile flooring. One provides access from the foyer to the kitchen area and a guest bedroom. The other connects the kitchen and breakfast area to the home's other two bedrooms.

The hallway to the left of the foyer leads to a guest bath. A southwest decor in shades of mauve and blue decorates the bath. It has a marble vanity and a spacious shower.

A guest bedroom is situated at the end of this hall. A plantation shuttered windows frames the front of the home. This room also has a walk-in closet and opens into the guest bath.

The kitchen is located across from the guest bath. This fantastic area is planned around an angled work island. An L-shaped cabinet frames the island. The appliances include a General Electric double, self-cleaning oven, microwave and a dishwasher, in addition to a Jenn-air cooktop. The ovens are surrounded by cabinets that are ideal for food storage and a broom closet. A bar which can accommodate six stools separates the kitchen from the breakfast room. The breakfast table is nestled in front of a bay window which provides a great view of the back yard. These two areas are decorated in a country print wallcovering in three different patterns.

Two doors, to the left of the fireplace, open to reveal a private study. This area has a built-in desk lining one wall, with a cabinet to one side, and another wall features cabinets with bookshelves. Two small windows brighten this area.

The laundry area is located next to the family room. It features a half-bath, a cabinet with a sink, an area to hang dry clothing and an additional pantry. The sink even has a disposal! A window frames the back yard. A door opens into the rear-entry, three-car garage with automatic door openers.

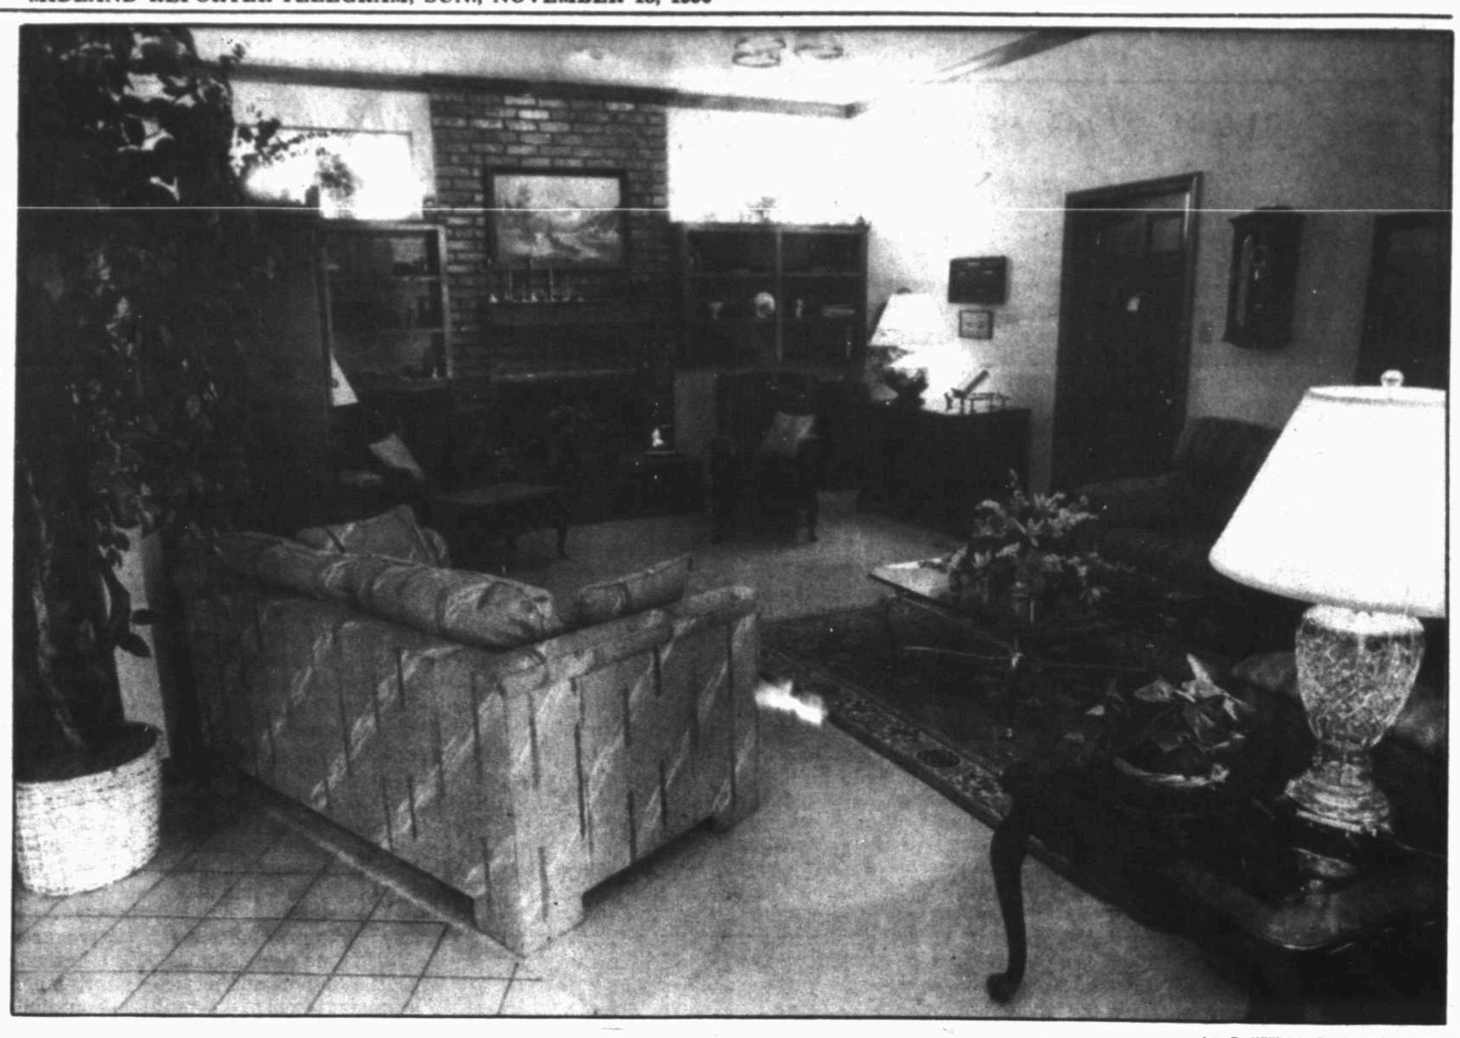

The master bedroom is situated in a corridor to the right of the formal living room. A door opens onto the back yard patio and a shuttered window is placed next to the door. A fireplace is inset in the corner to the right of the window. The marble fireplace has a carved mantle and serves as the focal point of this room. The other appointments in this room include two vertical shuttered windows and a tiered ceiling.

Two doors open into the master bath. A deep jacuzzi tub is centered along the back wall. A two sink marble vanity lines the opposite wall. The bath also has a built-in shower. The best amenity in this room, however, is a huge walk-in closet which wraps around behind the bathtub. Access is made into this closet through two doors, each opens onto a large dressing area. These two areas are connected by a corridor which has a built-in dresser along one wall. It has shelves for shoes and sweaters, in addition to storage cabinets. The other features in the bath are two medicine cabinets and a taupe, lavender and rose wallpaper border.

The home's fourth bedroom is located by the master bedroom. Two plantation shuttered windows frame the side yard. A desk is inset on the opposite wall. This bedroom also has a customized walk-in closet. A door opens into a private dressing area. It features a marble vanity, a peach wallcovering and it shares the bathing area with the first bedroom.

A few other extras which add to the appeal of this home include an alarm system, recessed lighting, a sprinkler system, ceiling fans, an intercom system, a water well and a storage building.

The Prudential Ruth Young Realtors is offering this over 3,400 square foot professionally decorated home for $247,000.

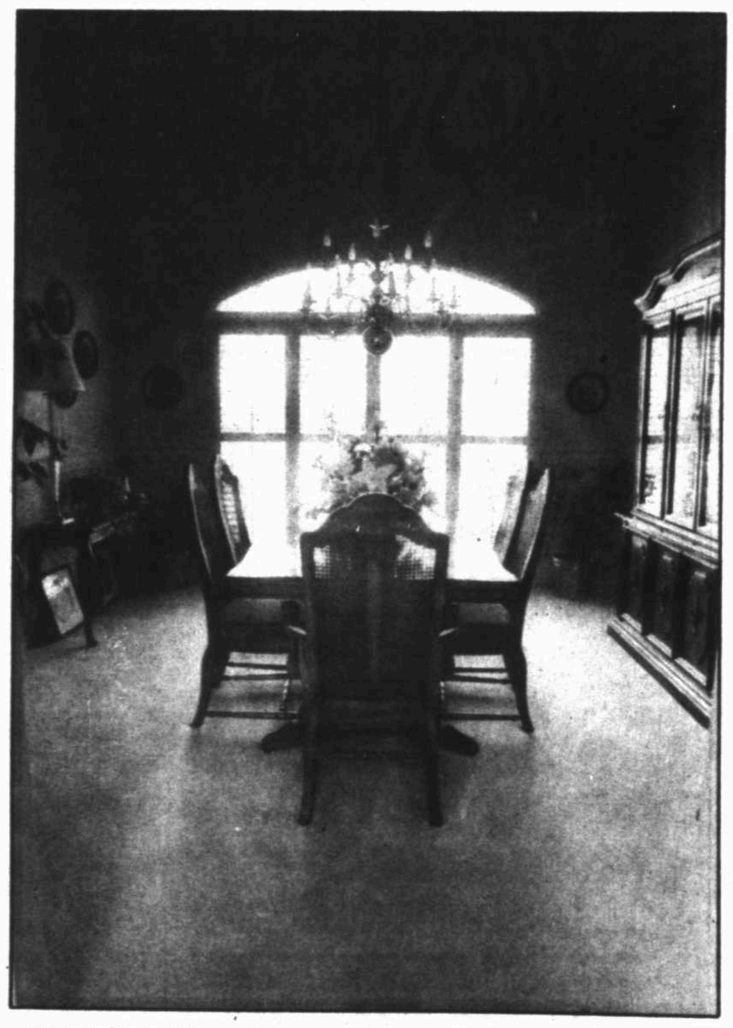

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

A bay window provides lot of sunshine into the breakfast area. The door opens onto the patio in the back yard.

Relocation? Langston's wrote the book(s)

Langston

"How many rattlesnakes do you see?" "Where are the cowboys?" "Midland has buildings?" "Do you have a horse?" "I didn't know Midland was so 'tidy'."

We promise that these are all remarks we have heard from potential transferees to our city! And, realizing that it would be easier to sell new people on our vibrant, "tidy" and tremendously unique community if they knew a little about it before they even visited Midland, we decided to write a book: Midland Profile. It is a beautiful publication full of pertinent information on the city, schools, neighborhoods, arts, health facilities, sports, things for kids to do, etc. Many of our good builders, insurance, home mortgage, travel and other good business friends helped us makes it possible through advertisisng.

To date, we've distributed over 700 Midland Profiles and we are still sending 10 to 20 per week to a very complimentary group of new comers or potential new comers. It may not have been a candidate for the best seller list, but it really was (and is) so well received, that we decided to write another. The second publication, untitled, is intended for use by transferees after they have already arrived in Midland. It contains more specific information: suggestions on where to eat, shop, find a particular service.

Next we thought, what about a tour of the city specifically designed to introduce transferees to Midland? All Realtors, of course, talk about aspects of the city as they show homes to newcomers, but we believe that a comprehensive, mapped-out and full of information tour with a specially trained "guide" would be the best introduction to Midland — and home hunting and/or decisions on moving would then be less confusing and more pertinent! We've taken new-to-the-city, just looking or being recruited companies, doctors, attorneys, major oil transferees, etc. on our two hour drive. You may remember that we described the tour in a recent three-part series of our articles. And we have to share that we've received lots of "thanks" from companies and organizations that believed we made a positive contribution to their recruitment efforts!

But what about persons or groups out of town? Next, we decided it was important to reach them, too, so we decided to do a slide and eventual video on Midland. The written word may be magic, but just imagine those words accompanies by projected, full color pictures of our skyline, parks, theatre productions, symphony, museums, beautiful homes, clean wide streets, wonderful see-forever skies! The show is available for presentation to in or out of town (at our expense) to near, soon-to-be new, or potential residents. Managers and Human Relations Directors, what better way to encourage those employees you really want to consider a transfer to Midland!

Our latest effort to tell others about our area is a third book just now underway. It will concentrate on information for the families that have already made a commitment to move to our city. In it, we will describe the ages, average size and costs of homes, and amenities of most of Midland's neighborhoods. We will also provide a step-by-step guide to the home purchasing process, to building and even to renting.

All of the above our enhancements of Langston Realtors efforts to encourage relocations to the city, and then to enable those persons or companies to make decisions on housing from an informed, knowledgeable and confident basis. Please call me, or our V.P. of Relocation, Richard Langston for a copy of our publications, a tour and/or the slide presentation. Again — we love to share our city!

When the weather turns cold, the mind and body think heat. The instinct is to reach for the thermostat and let the furnace do its work.

However, with the instability of oil prices, more people are looking for home-heating alternatives.

With central heating, we are accustomed to heating the entire house, but that is no longer financially wise or energy efficient. One old idea making a comeback — never heat more than you need.

Our forefathers heated their homes one room at a time, using wood-burning stoves or fireplaces. Now there are a number of commonsense options that mix the modern with the time-tested to provide alternatives for those who want to save on their heating bills.

INSULATING

According to experts, more than 90 percent of American homes are not properly insulated. The best way to make it into the top 10 percent is to insulate your home during construction. If you have an older home, you can still remedy the situation by insulating as much of your home as possible.

The idea behind insulation is to trap heat during the cold months and dissipate it during the summer.

Insulation itself comes in two forms: batts, which are unrolled between rafters and wall studs, and loose fill that is blown onto roof rafters and into walls through holes from the outside.

According to the "The Book of Inside Information" (Boardroom Books) the best places to insulate include:

Roof or attic ceilings.

Exterior walls.

Basement walls, finished and unfinished.

Aboveground sections of basement walls.

The cost varies according to region and design of house, but the average home owner can expect to spend between $1,500 to $3,000 to adequately insulate his home.

However, there a number of ways to finance the expenditure, and although it is hard to predict a dollar amount for the savings created by insulating, experts agree that the project usually pays for itself after four years.

WOOD-BURNING STOVES

The name itself conjures images of a blackened potbellied stove in the corner of a mountain cabin — a place for friends and family to gather and ward off the chill.

The modern wood-burning stoves serve the same function, but their appearance and mechanics have changed dramatically. Current styles are usually fitted with glass doors and windows, ceramic tiles and brass or chrome fittings depending on how upscale you want to go.

The big change, however, has to do with the inner workings of the new stoves. Since July 1988 the Environmental Protection Agency has required stove-makers to meet strict emissions standards for their products.

Similar to the catalytic converter in your automobile, most new stoves use catalytic combusters to meet these standards. Using a chemical process, the catalyst ignites the pollution-laden smoke and burns it, creating more usable heat.

Another benefit, beside the more efficient burning of pollutants, is that these systems reduce creosote, the buildup that causes many chimney fires, by as much as 90 percent.

According to Steven Mavigilio of Wood N Energy, a trade journal for the wood stove industry, these standards have resulted in an increase of heating efficiency. He says current stoves are 70 percent to 80 percent efficient, which is about 30 percent more than stoves manufactured five to 10 years ago.

There are non-catalytic stoves, but to meet EPA requirements they have smaller fireboxes and must be fed with shorter pieces of wood. The result is a more time-consuming model that requires more trips to the woodshed.

Another model — known as "the lazy man's wood stove" — uses clean-burning energy pellets instead of logs. This model is popular where firewood is scarce.

Besides heating, the next important aspect of a wood-burning stove is its attractiveness.

One last word about installation. It is best to get a professional to install your stove. Although many stove shops claim any handyman can handle the task, it is best to have your home-heating unit installed by a chimneysweep certified by the National Chimneysweep Guild.

Discover the reasons why RE/MAX is high flying real estate company

The fact is...if you want your real estate career to take you someplace, take your career to RE/MAX.

For qualified individuals, RE/MAX is the next logical step up the ladder of success. Designed by top producers for top producers, RE/MAX offers experienced, full-time professionals the highest compensation possible, as well as all the support and services today's million dollar producers heed to become tomorrow's multimillion dollar producers. That's why RE/MAX sales associates across North America average three times as many as other real estate agents. RE/MAX isn't for everyone. But if you think you're ready to take the next step in your career, maybe you're ready for RE/MAX. Why not find out?

Melton

Fact 1: RE/MAX agents keep 100 percent of their commisions.

We believe that when you earn your keep, you should keep what you earn. Our experienced real estate agents receive the highest possible compensation. Re/MAX innovative program is the key to our agents' selling and listing success. Our experienced professionals benefit by working as independent entrepreneurs, yet enjoy the support of an international real estate network.

RE/MAX's sales associates average 10 years of real estate experience and rank among the top 20 percent of real estate sales people in the country. "Our top producing professionals no longer have to turn over their hard earned commissions to support training programs, corporate overhead, advertising and promotions and management," states Jan Melton. "RE/MAX's innovative program is the key to our agents' selling and listing success. Our experienced professionals benefit by working as independent entrepreneurs, yet enjoy the support of an international real estate network. They are in business for themselves, but not by themselves. RE/MAX associates have the freedom to negotiate directly with clients, develop and implement their own marketing strategies and conduct all types of real estate transactions."

The heart of our successful networks direct agent-to-agent interaction. Our agents set their own fees and deal directly with one another, with no middle man involved. As a result, the rate of RE/MAX referrals resulting in completed transactions is approximately four times higher than the industry average, according to Melton.

RE/MAX's innovative program is the key to our agent's selling and listing success. Our experienced professionals benefit by working as independent entrepreneurs, yet enjoy the support of an international real estate network.

"By working in a talent pool of experienced, energetic professionals, you share the varied expertise of some of the industry's best," said Melton.

Fact 5: RE/MAX operates like a graduate school for real estate professionals.

At RE/MAX you are not paying for training, educational programs and departments meant for the newly licensed agents. Nor are you wasting your time assisting new agents within your own office. At RE/MAX your energy and efforts go into your own activities. Designed by top producers for top producers, RE/MAX offers experienced, full-time professionals the highest compensation possible, as well as all the support and services today's million dollar producers need to become tomorrow's multimillion dollar producers. That's why RE/MAX sales associates across North America average three times as many sales as other real estate agents. But if you think you're ready to take the next step in your career, get the facts!

"The non-competitive, full-time, experienced and dedicated management staff at RE/MAX is a tremendous benefit to our associates," states Melton. "Management spends their time coaching and counseling the associates to achieve maximum success."

RE/MAX offers experienced full-time professionals the highest compensation possible, as well as all the support and services today's million dollar producers need to become tomorrow's multi-million dollar producers.

RE/MAX associates have the opportunity when, where and as often as they wish. No corporate directives limit individual advertising and promotions. Not only do RE/MAX associates decide how much to spend, they control their advertising by emphasizing their own names.

Fact 9: RE/MAX associates have the freedom to negotiate directly with their clients, develop and implement their own marketing strategies and conduct all types of real estate transactions.

Fact 11: RE/MAX isn't for everyone.

But, if you think you are ready, for qualified individuals RE/MAX is the next logical step up the ladder of success. Designed by top producers for top producers.

Fact 12: RE/MAX agents are the #1 priority.

Ever notice that in a conventional real estate office the interests of the owner and the agents are diametrically opposed?

COMPANY	INTEREST LINE	AGENTS
Want more of the commissions agents make		Want to keep more of the commissions they earn
OWNER		AGENTS

At most conventional firms, the company wants more of your commission to pay for training, educational programs and departments meant for newly-licensed agents. And they also expect you to assist these new agents in learning as much as possible as quickly as possible.

Get the Facts! Contact RE/MAX today and make sure your next step is a step in the right direction. Call Jan Melton or Carolyn Boyd at 697-8232 for a confidential meeting.

Thinking of leasing a new apartment?

Consider the comments of this Rental Expert.

Initially, I thought all rental agents were the same - they just wanted to lease apartments.

Yet, at Polo Park they really did try to help me find just the right apartment to suit my needs. Plus, they helped me get familiar with the area and made my move a pleasant experience.

But the final factor affecting my decision to lease my new apartment from Polo Park was the "We Care" Attitude of the entire staff and the service and attention I received personally. I really felt like my concerns were important and when it comes to making a decision about moving I feel thats important.

HOME(less) FOR THE HOLIDAYS

NOV 18 90

Although many Midlanders are sheltered from the world of the homeless, daily, social workers from a variety of agencies try to help those who have no home cope.

These workers watch the homeless suffer from an economy that is not what it used to be. They experience the need for more low income housing. They try to help those who have no reliable public transportation in the city to depend on. They deal with the fact that there is no city-wide shelter.

Unresolved and overburden, the homeless and their helpers face the daily problems of living in Midland without housing.

Traveling about most of the Tall City, it is difficult to believe that there are those who don't have enough to eat or have a roof over their head. Sometimes it's hard to understand why a person is homeless and it becomes even harder to find solutions for the problem. Sometimes it's difficult to recognize that a problem even exists.

However, as the holiday season approaches, thoughts turn to charitable causes, and the plight of the homeless is in the forefront. A man with a "Will Work for Food" sign or the ringing bells of the Salvation Army in front of stores serve as constant reminders that the issue of the homeless could strike anyone at anytime.

Defining or trying to explain "homelessness" is like trying to define a large number of varied people, according to Jerrie Westmorland, executive director for Midland County Housing Authority. "The homeless encompass every social problem to man."

The problem often appears to be overwhelming. But to the people who work with the homeless everyday, it's their job and they deal with it with love and understanding. There are numerous community agencies, churches and other public sectors that continously focus their efforts on the homeless.

Listed below is just a small sampling of those who daily are making an effort to help others who, for any reason, are less fortunate.

SALVATION ARMY

Salvation Army, 300 S. Baird, opens for breakfast at 6:30 a.m. sharp. The lobby — which is generally well-stocked with those waiting to be helped — is the foyer to a meal, a place to sleep and a bit of spiritual relief, whether it be from God or from Major Milton Wood and his staff.

Wood jokes heartily not only about his title at the Salvation Army — he said it is officially commanding officer but his co-workers auspiciously change it to demanding officer — but also with the people he constantly seeks to help. He predicts he helps roughly 300-350 people every week, whether they be transients passing through town, regulars, or men on his Corps Salvage Rehabilitation Center (CSRC) program.

Tea to honor artist Patty Paup Lambert

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

A tea reception this afternoon at the Midland Woman's Club will honor Houston watercolor artist Patty Paup Lambert, who is the daughter of longtime Midlander Chan Driscoll. The event is scheduled from two to four o'clock.

McKnight-Harrison

Patty recently received a blue ribbon in the prestigious Westheimer Art Show in the still life watercolor division, and this particular work will be on display at the Woman's Club, along with other of her paintings through the rest of November.

Patty has works on display at Rice University, Trinity University and in private collecions. She is an associate with the art department faculty at Rice University.

Patty is a graduate of Midland High School and Trinity University. She and her husband, Bill Lambert, are the parents of two daughters.

MEGAN BRAY is a newpledge of Kappa Kappa Gamma at The Colorado College in Colorado Springs. A freshman, she is the daughter of Marcie and Mike Bray. Rush was held the last week of October.

RETHA DOUGHERTY recently was honored on her 70th birthday with a Saturday evening barbecue at the home of her daughter, Diane Rhoden. Approximately 75 guests attended.

The weekend of festivities also included a Friday night hamburger fry and attendance at a Midland Community Theatre production and a Sunday morning brunch at Diane's house for the out-of-town guests.

In addition to Diane, her other three children were here for the milestone occasion. They are Jerry Dougherty Jr., a CPA in Houston, and his wife, Linda; Tom Dougherty, a professor at the University of Missouri in Columbia, and Pat Dougherty of Los Angeles, Calif. Pat is a writer for the popular television show, "Empty Nest." Special guests also included the honoree's five grandsons.

Other out-of-town guests included her sisters, Margie Short of Great Bend, Kan., and Lorraine Holmes, and her husbnad Keith, of El Dorado, Kan.; cousins, Melba and Jack Machey and Elaine and Pat Narey, all of Los Angeles; Eloise and Mike McFadden of Oklahoma City, Okla., and Marcile Brenner of Hays, Kan., and in-laws, Mary and L.D. Travis of Plano, Charles Dougherty of Waco and Dan Dougherty of Tulsa, Okla.

Retha and her late husband were both employed by Union Texas Petroleum for a number of years.

THE RANCHLAND HILLS Country Club Ladies Association met recently for a Margarita social, followed by a Mexican fiesta buffet of stuffed chili rellenos, chicken enchiladas, tacos, chili con queso, Spanish rice and assorted desserts.

Among the guests were Martha (Mrs. Durward) Cox, Jo (Mrs. Ned) Swallow, Neeta Heckathorne, Ann (Mrs. Clay) Atchison, Betty (Mrs. Bud) Dole and Joyce (Mrs. Cliff) Sherrod.

The next Association meeting will be Jan. 16.

THE FIRST WEEKEND of November always finds a number of Midlanders making their annual trek to Terlingua for the annual Chili Appreciation Society International Cookoff.

Among Midlanders seen at the event this year were Ken Large, who was chosen Chili Head of the Year, and his wife, Barbara; Kathleen and Durwood Owen, John Meyer, Joe Hathaway, Barbara and Hugh White and Harry Harrison.

The top winners in the chili division were Jerry Hunt of Shreveport, La., first; Dru Stewart of Hurst, second, and Bob Coats of Fort Worth, third. Winning tops in showmanship were Chili Mine of Fort Huachuca, Ariz., first; The Lite Bunch of Houston, second, and Bed Rock Chili of Tyler, third.

HOMELESS: Agencies strive to help needy

From 1E

Touring the premises, Wood constantly greets his volunteers, staff members and those seeking help with a smile and handshake. "I'm here all the time. I eat with the men, horseplay and wrestle. Last week, I bit a man in the back. I have a good time, but I let them know I'm concerned. I let them know they're needed and wanted and are great guys. Some have a few problems. But all of us have problems, that's nothing unique," Wood said.

In a caring manner, Woods easily explained his feelings. "They know they have a friend in the Salvation Army. No matter how dirty, how smelly, what race or creed or religion — they're welcome and our services are offered."

The Corps has a variety of needs and goals. One of Wood's primary concerns is the reduction in items being contributed. He said it used to be the Corps would make 35 to 40 pickups (of donations) in one day. In the last six months a good day will include three or four pick-ups.

Passing through the warehouse, there are old trashcans filled with used shoes. He said he can usually get $5 for a typical lot of shoes. Pointing to other odds and ends, he paused at an old mattress and commented about how any mattress, as long as it isn't wet, will bring in $3. Toward the back, bundled in bales like hay, are remnants of once colorful clothing. Although the clothing can't be worn, the Corps will bale it and sell the bales to a manufacturer to recyle into shingles for roofs or rags. Emphatically, he noted that nothing ever gets "dumped." For every pound of baled clothing collected, the Corps will earn 5½ cents.

For the holiday season the Salvation Army will sponsor the "Dress-A-Live-Doll" drive. The program is designed to help dress 1,000 needy Midland children. For more information regarding this program or about donating items call 693-3614.

CASA de AMIGOS

In Martha Covarrubias's mind, the homeless affect not only a number of transient people, but also includes a large number of Midland's families.

"In our mind, when we imagine the homeless, we imagine what we'd see on T.V. We think of people who don't have a place to sleep. In our minds come pictures of bag ladies or bums," Ms. Covarrubias, director of social services for Casa de Amigos, 1101 E. Garden Lane, explained. "We do see that type, but there is a whole other area of people we don't see. We see most often families that don't have a permanent residence because of lack of funds. They're living with other family members or moving from family member to family member. We see it all over, in the blacks, hispanics, anglos — all areas — it just doesn't hit one."

Through Casa De Amigos, Ms. Covarrubias is able to administer emergency assistance that includes food, clothing, housing repair and limited financial aid. Although she deals primarily with the physical materials that help the less fortunate, she believes a bag of groceries and one month's rent won't solve the problem. It simply acts as a band-aid.

"These people seem to have the attitude of surviving only today. There is no long term planning. We make referrals and provide a safe place to stay. We deal with food and clothing; we can meet those needs. The problem becomes how are they going to pay for next month's rent," Ms. Covarrubias said.

Lael Cordes-Pitts, executive director of Casa de Amigos, works and collaborates with Ms. Covarrubias. Both said homeless families and children live within a system of broken networks.

Ideally Ms. Covarrubia and Ms. Cordes-Pitt would like to put themselves out of business. However idealistic this notion is and overwhelming the problem seems, both feel a certain satisfaction when they can help one person overcome a problem — it makes a dent in the system.

MIDLAND SOUP KITCHEN MINISTRY

Mariano and Mary Rendon operate the Midland Soup Kitchen Ministry, 1009 Terrell St. Strikingly different than the cold, metal soup kitchens portrayed in movies, the Rendon's have created a kitchen full of hearty soup, cheerful color and warm hearts.

The kitchen serves up a complete meal six days a week from 11:30 a.m to 1 p.m., with only the obligation being a signature. Previously known as Blessing For Obedience, the kitchen is supported by a group of inter-denominational churches, and various restaurants and local businesses.

Although the kitchen receives aid, it is through much of the Rendon's effort and energies that the kitchen survives. Receiving only a meager salary, the Rendon's both said they wouldn't trade their job for anything. "It makes us feel beautiful. We're doing something — not very much — and we wouldn't trade it. You learn to love the people and do the most you can for them," Mrs. Rendon said.

Mrs. Rendon constantly takes the spot light off herself and her husband and shines it on the volunteers who work at the kitchen and the people who come through the doors. "When people come through the door, we have to make the difference. They are loving people. They give to us in other ways; with a smile, they make my day," she said.

Prevalent throughout the Rendon's conversations about the soup kitchen and their work is a prevalent strong faith and belief that, "the Lord does provide." However, their needs are still far reaching.

The couple is presently collecting blankets and warm clothing for those who come in during the cold months. They also would like to be able to serve three meals a day.

For the holidays, the Rendons will celebrate Thanksgiving and Christmas at the soup kitchen. "We give ourselves to this. This is our family now. At Thanksgiving, we look after them (the homeless). This is what God gave us and we're being obedient."

To make contributions to the soup kitchen call 686-SOUP.

ST. ANDREWS MISSION

Dealing with the homeless to Oscar Bejil, director of St. Andrews Mission, is sometimes as easy as just sitting and listening to someone talk.

"Sometimes people just need a friend, someone who cares. We give them extra attention. A lot of the problems we can't do anthing about," Bejil said. "We try to minister to them and show them they have a friend and they're not by themselves — that's important."

"You can give a man a fish and he'll be well off for a day. But teach a man to fish and you'll feed him forever" is the premise Bejil works under with those in a homeless situation.

VOLUNTEER CENTER

The Volunteer Center is like the nerve center in coordinating many of the functions, actions and services of Midland agencies and churches it serves. By coordinating information (names of individuals each agency helped and what service they received), the Volunteer Center is able to maintain a master list that traces any aid an individual in Midland has received.

"There are both negatives and positives to this system," Debra Mayes, executive director of the Volunteer Center, said. "On the negative aspects, we can track down people who are abusing the system. On the positive, we can designate those people with special needs. In a sense, we also are being a good steward of people's money, making sure it works for everybody."

Correlating into the Volunteer Center's programs that pertain to the the homeless is Information and Referral Midland. The goal of the hotline is to link any individual with a human service need, or answer a general information question through connection with an agency or resource.

Both programs collaborate and actually tie together the efforts each individual agency is making. "I like to think of it as centralization. It's efficient and effective," Ms. Mayes said.

Information and Referral Midland helpline's phone number is 697-HELP. Personnel familiar with area agencies are on call 24-hour, seven days a week.

MIDLAND COUNTY HOUSING AUTHORITY

"The homeless are a lot of people — a lot of different people," according to Jerry Westmoreland, executive director of Midland County Authority, "but many people who are homeless wouldn't be if given a chance."

Giving the homeless a chance is one of the precepts that Ms. Westmoreland's office is dealing with. Through a program designated as Project Self Sufficiency (PPS), the homeless are given a chance. By coordinating existing social services and creating new social services, combined with housing, the department is able to assist low income families in becoming self sufficient.

"The program shows potential for solving the problem of the homeless. The problem needs to be dissected so it won't be so overwhelming — attack it one problem at a time and with this (PSS), it's a start," Ms. Westmoreland said.

Facing the problem of the homeless in a positive manner is reflective of how Ms. Westmoreland views the plight of some of the homeless she has worked with. "I have seen a lot of people who don't try. But then I see people who try try so hard, they give 110 percent to overcome a problem. They face it in a positive manner and do all they can do. They ride their bike everywhere they go, walk in the cold to apply for a job; they go far above and beyond what anyone would expect today."

What's in a name?

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Despite its name, heartburn does not affect the heart.

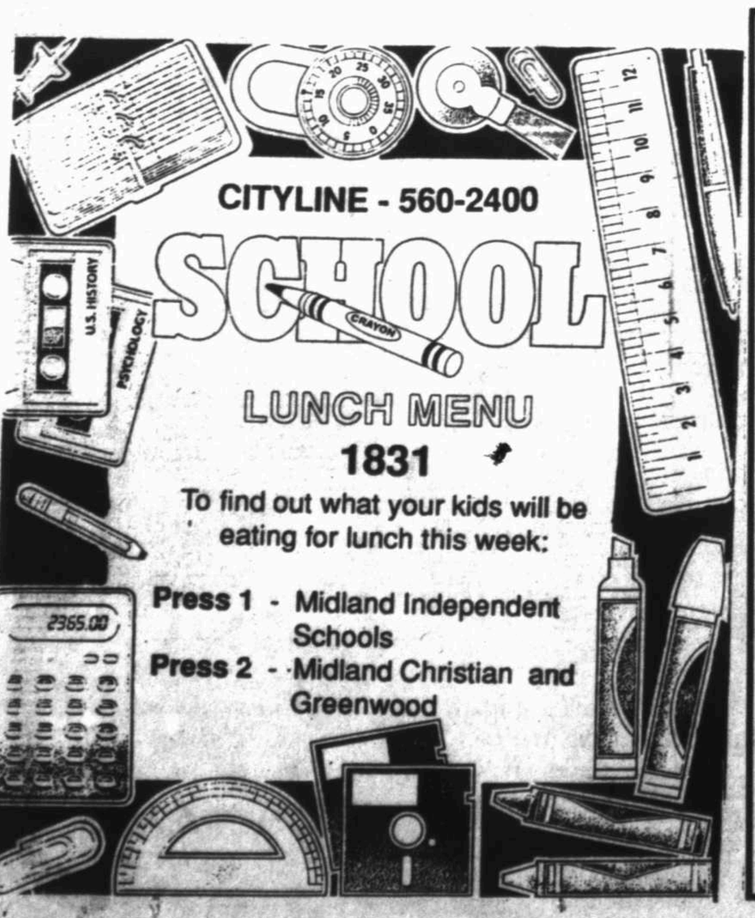

This common disorder, from which some 80 million Americans suffer each month, is caused when acids in the stomach flow backward into the esophagus. This tube between the stomach and the mouth passes close to the heart.

Items that can cause heartburn, according to the makers of Gaviscon Antacid, include fatty foods, onion, spices, coffee, soda pop, milk, fruit and whole grain foods.

Stress, nervous tension and emotional upset can also produce stomach acid, leading to heartburn.

Office management should enter '90s

By Carol Smith Monkman
Hearst News Service

One of the hardest things about trying to operate in a changing environment is knowing exactly when a change has occurred. People frequently wait for signs and evidence before they respond, when, in fact, the time to respond was long before the signs made themselves evident. So the search for clues is on.

One of the biggest clues managers have is also one of the most frequently ignored — language.

As the environment changes, people invent new terms to describe situations that didn't exist before. The language gives them a way to frame problems and look for solutions.

Ten years ago, for example, who had ever heard of a "golden parachute?" Three years ago who was talking about "mommy tracks"? So what kind of management terminology will we have in this decade?

HERE ARE some terms you'll be hearing a lot more of:

- Gold-collar worker: used to describe an employee whose expertise is in short supply.
- Family leave policy: an umbrella term used to describe benefits aimed at helping employees handle work and family conflicts.
- Self-management: a management philosophy involving democratic, self-contained work teams, a response to shortages of trained supervisors and the need to keep costs down.
- Grampies: "Growing Retired Active Monied People in an Excellent State" (yikes) for the over-60 segment that some would like to tap as a stopgap employee base in the face of worker shortages.
- Yiffies: coined in a recent Fortune article on 25-year-olds, this stands for "young, individualistic, freedom-minded and few." See also, "baby bust."
- Baby bust: the post-boom generation that is primarily responsible for impending labor shortages.
- Flexplace: replaces "flextime" as the hot benefit of the 1990s and refers to working out of non-traditional offices.
- Multicultural diversity: the process of blending men and women, recent immigrants, people with disabilities, and people of different ethnic backgrounds into a harmonious work force.
- Intergenerational day care: a philosophy of providing space for care of employee dependents, whether they are children or elderly parents.
- Rightsizing: A jargon-lovers dream, this is to replace "downsizing" as a means of describing layoffs and other shifts in the corporate work force.
- Pancake management: the process of reducing hierarchical structure of organizations that has dominated management theory over the past century.
- Tin parachutes: practice of giving middle managers incentives to stay with a company as a means of retaining the company's investment in its staff.
- Globalization: the word everybody loves to hate, but no one can ignore. Refers to increasing production and marketing abroad.
- Sandwich generation: people who are caring for young children as well as aging parents.
- Work force 2000: a catchall phrase that has come to represent the decrease in population growth, shift in makeup of the work force and shortages of skilled workers that will materialize in the next century.

WHAT CLUES does this mini-glossary reveal? Much of today's management-speak is concerned with changing demographics and the effect of those changes on the future of hiring and training.

But many of these changes are already upon us. A recent study by the management consulting firm Towers Perrin, for example, showed that 70 percent of employers are already having difficulty recruiting technical employees and more than half (55 percent) are having trouble hiring clerical workers.

Yet even in with such difficulties, companies are still dragging their feet about doing something to improve the situation. For example, the study showed the most common reason for rejecting job candidates is lack of writing or verbal skills, a situation that could be resolved with more commitment to pre-employment or on-the-job remedial training.

And although more than two-thirds (68 percent) of firms say they are concerned about the needs of women in the workplace, only 30 percent offer benefits such as extended maternity leave or allow employees to use sick days for care of sick dependents. Fewer still (15 percent) offer on-site day care or vouchers for use in nearby facilities.

IT'S NOT clear what companies are waiting for, but if they're waiting for a sign, they just missed it.

DEAR ABBY

Change for the better never comes too late

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just finished reading the letter from "Happy at Last in Oklahoma," the 85-year-old woman who changed her eating and health habits at age 80. What an inspiring letter!

Van Buren

I am 31 and happily married to a wonderful guy. We have a preschool-age son. Like "Happy in Oklahoma," I have also doubled my weight and am very uncomfortable with my shape.

After reading that letter, I am encouraged to try harder. My moods dictated my eating habits. Whenever I felt bored, lonely, sad or unhappy, I'd eat. Every Monday, I would begin a new diet, then I'd fall off it and try again. Abby, that lady's inspiring letter has changed my life forever. No more starving myself, overexercising and beginning again for me. I will begin right now to change my bad habits.

I cut her letter out of my newspaper and plan to keep it handy for reinforcement when I'm tempted to "cheat." May God bless this wonderful Oklahoma lady. Thank you, Abby, for running her letter. — CHANGING FOR GOOD AT 31

DEAR CHANGING: Many other readers were inspired by that letter. And for those who missed it, here are the highlights:

"My advice to people who want to do what I did: Remember, you didn't get fat overnight. Ease into your new habits. Never talk about what you are doing, just do it! Let others discover that you are losing weight.

"First, cut down the size of your servings, then limit your meals to healthy foods such as fruits, vegetables, cereals, lean meat and nonfat milk. Drink at least 10 glasses of liquid a day (most of it should be water). When you cut out the fats and sweets, you will be surprised at how good the other foods taste. Even a baked potato can be great. Start exercising. Begin slowly, then gradually increase the time, but do it so regularly that it becomes a habit.

"Moderation is the key to success. Substitute common sense for bad habits. Life for me didn't begin at 40. It began at 80."

DEAR ABBY: Recently at an amusement park, I noticed a group of people waiting in the middle of a line, when one of them broke in. By the time we were even with them (it was a double, divided line), they had all broken in at that spot. When the lines merged, my group was immediately in front of them. Then, one of them crowded in ahead of us. Shortly thereafter, all of them tried to push through.

Thinking they did not understand that this is rude, I began to politely explain, asking if they felt that we had crowded in front. "No, but one of our party is ahead of you," was the reply, "so we can all go." Any further explanation from me was met with anger and insults.

Please clarify this for me, Abby. I always thought that latecomers should go to the end of the line and wait their turn. If I am joined by a friend, instead of causing hostility by letting my friend in, I give up my place in line and join my friend at the end.

Was I ... OUT OF LINE?

DEAR OUT OF LINE: You were not out of line, but you were outnumbered. Too bad there were no security guards present at the time. Free-for-all fights have been known to erupt due to that sort of rudeness, but given today's climate for unpredictable violence, you used good judgment in not making an issue of it.

DEAR ABBY: I am an airline pilot, which requires me to be away from home two or three nights at a time.

When I am on one of these trips, the crew, both male and female, sometimes dine together. Meanwhile, my wife and six children are at home. I employ a full-time housekeeper to help my wife.

I think it's OK for my wife to go out with her friends at night for shopping, dinner and movies, but I say no when it comes to her going to a disco without me.

She says she enjoys going to discos to dance and listen to the music. I say she can wait until I get home so we can go together. She says she trusts me on my overnights and I should trust her. I do trust her, but why look for trouble?

Do you think I'm being unreasonable? — CORAL SPRINGS, FLA.

DEAR CORAL SPRINGS: No. In my view, a married woman with six children and a husband out of town doesn't belong in a disco listening to music and dancing with strangers.

DEAR ABBY: The "love story" about those two physically impaired birds, quite frankly, made me want to throw up! Why people find birds so appealing is beyond me.

Take my neighbor (please!) as an example. She has taken it upon herself to rescue every bleepin' bird in town. Every day she feeds them enough bread to supply an orphanage. All day long, the area looks like something out of Alfred Hitchcock's movie "The Birds." And the constant chirping is about to drive me to the booby hatch!

The old biddy and others like her can't seem to get it through their heads that well-fed birds won't go after insects as nature intended for them to do!

There are a lot of misguided bird lovers out there, Abby. Dare you risk ruffling their feathers by printing this? — NO BIRD LOVER IN SUNNY CALIFORNIA

DEAR NO BIRD LOVER: As a longtime friend of all furred and feathered creatures, I'll risk it.

DEAR ABBY: Would you please do road travelers a favor by printing this as an open letter to disc jockeys everywhere?

"Dear Disc Jockey: We appreciate the information and entertainment you provide, but please, please tell us the city you are broadcasting from. Station call letters mean nothing to a stranger in your area, so we don't know whether you are in front or behind us. This can be very important when you are giving weather and road information; plus, you do a disservice to your advertisers, because many times we would have stopped to purchase the products or services they were selling — if only we knew where they were located!

"We are retired and travel with an RV, so we are free to stop whenever and wherever we choose. There are literally thousands of us roaming the highways who are apt to stop for a day, week or month in your community if something strikes our fancy, and we always leave money behind! So, let us know where you are, and we may just stop by for a while."

Thanksgiving celebrated for 200 years

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Thanksgiving Day, which will be celebrated on Thursday, follows a tradition started by the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth, Mass., in 1621.

But, according to researchers at Hallmark Cards, Thanksgiving was not always a national celebration. For 150 years after the Pilgrims, it was observed only sporadically.

The day was officialy proclaimed by President George Washington in 1789, just for that year, and once again in 1795. President Thomas Jefferson actively opposed Thanksgiving during his two terms, 1801-1809. In 1863, President Abraham Lincoln made the present date for Thanksgiving official, but on two later occasions President Franklin D. Roosevelt changed it. In 1941, a joint Congressional resolution set the fourth Thursday in November as the permanent Thanksgiving date.

Business booming

NORTHBROOK, Ill. (AP) — The average shopper spends $37.50 for about 27 of the 1.3 million items sold weekly in U.S. supermarkets, according to Neilsen Marketing Research, and 61 percent of all such purchases are made between Thursday and Sunday.

AT WIT'S END

Even decision to eat must be weighed

By Erma Bombeck

I invited a group of my friends to lunch recently. As I reached out to shake the hand of Wanda, she pressed a plastic pouch in it and said, "Be a dear. Drop this in water five minutes before we eat."

Bombeck

"What is it?" I asked.

"Lunch. I'm on the Nutri-System diet."

Muriel arrived with a can of powdered mix in a brown paper bag, Dorothy clutched a frozen entree from Weight Watchers to her chest, and Helen pulled a scale out of her handbag as if it were the most natural thing in the world.

It was like hosting a famine.

Maralyn was the only one who hadn't brought her lunch. I was cheered until she said, "Put me close to the bathroom, Erma. I'm taking diuretics and am up and down a lot."

The entire world is on a diet. The standard greeting anymore isn't hello or have a good day, it's "I lost 23 pounds."

We chart the weight of movie stars and television personalities with all the fervor of seismologists measuring earthquakes — who is taking it off; who is putting it back on. As we walk down the aisles of a supermarket, we gravitate toward the word "lite" as though drawn by a magnet. We stock our carts with everything from sugar-free laxatives (as if you're going to pig out) to constructed bacon.

I have a container of oleo in my refrigerator that is new and supposed to be good for my heart. I put a chunk of it over steaming broccoli, and you know what happened? Nothing happened! It didn't melt. It just sat there. When I put some in a skillet to saute mushrooms, it disappeared. I felt like I was in the Twilight Zone.

Even Orville Redenbacher and his grandson (I hope that kid is in the will) have a commercial showing a popcorn-eating elephant that levitates after he eats it.

As my guests sat down at the table with their plastic pouches, boxes, measuring spoons, pills and scales, Wanda pointed to my plate and asked, "What do you call that?"

"A hamburger," I said.

"Who puts it out?" asked Dorothy.

"No one. I made it myself."

"What's in it?" asked Maralyn, returning from the bathroom.

"Meat. You want a bite?" I asked Muriel.

"I couldn't," she said.

"Don't tempt Muriel," said Wanda. "She's lost 15 pounds. Pretty soon she'll look like Tommy Lasorda."

Muriel smiled and said, "Thank you."

Healthy, tasty food is goal of both chefs, nutritionists

BOSTON (AP) — A group of nutritionists and chefs have joined together to forge a "new era" of eating, to show people there are ways to eat healthily and still enjoy good food.

"Welcome to the meeting of two formerly warring groups, the taste community and the science community," chef Julia Child said when the group met last month.

Cholesterol warnings, mixed messages on caffeine, scares over chemicals and the all-encompassing bad word "fat" have left many fretting over what they eat.

The conference, sponsored by the National Dairy Board and the American Institute of Wine and Food, attempted to allay people's fears and guilt about eating patterns.

"Fat is not a four-letter word," said Jan Weimer, a food consultant and conference organizer. "It has its place."

Dr. Carl Orringer, director of preventive cardiology at the University of Michigan Medical Center, applauded the group's efforts, but said that ultimately people need to recognize some food is not good for them.

The conference sponsors "would obviously like to avoid eliminating foods that they sponsor," he said. "In reality, what they're admitting is if it's better to eat less than more, then maybe it's better to eat even less, to the point where maybe it's better not to eat those foods at all."

Child noted that chefs traditionally have viewed dieticians and nutritionists as "the wicked stepmother," and the medical community has been dubious about chefs.

After months of negotiations and cooking, the group agreed on some general statements embracing the importance of tasty, healthy meals.

Dr. C. Wayne Callaway said people should focus on what they eat over longer periods, and regular, moderate exercise.

"We're teaching people how to eat, rather than what not to eat," he said.

The group plans to lobby fellow nutritionists and chefs and then take their ideas to the public.

Callaway believes peer pressure and changing market demands will make restaurateurs, store owners and even fast food chains change their ways.

Pre-nuptial agreements growing more popular

By John Marshall
Hearst News Service

All marriages end in one of two ways, and neither is usually pretty. All marriages end in either death or divorce.

This is not the stuff of valentines or sonnets, the usual view that lovers have of bliss ahead. It is the realist's view of married life, the kind of view held by lawyers whose practice includes sorting out the mess when marriages fail. And it is becoming a view held by more people facing second and third marriages, and wanting some form of fire insurance to prevent them from being burned again.

So they turn to prenuptial agreements. Once, prenuptial agreements seemed the sole province of the people likely to be seen on "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" — the Trumps, Jackie O., Hef, the Palm Beach and Beverly Hills set. Now, prenuptial agreements are being signed by members of the middle and professional classes in places as resolutely unchic as Seattle.

Statistics on prenuptial agreements aren't available because there is no requirement to file such legal documents with the state. But attorneys who draft prenuptial agreements report some increase in their use over the last five years.

The motivation for prenuptial agreements today is seldom the desire to emulate the Trumps and other members of the moneyed class. Rather, it is the recognition that people in this two-career era seldom come into marriages as dewy-eyed babes, free of financial baggage and other encumbrances.

THE URGE TO sign prenuptial agreements is particularly strong when partners to a new marriage have children from an earlier marriage whose interests they want to protect.

"People who have gone through a divorce know how difficult it is, how convoluted the process gets," says Seattle attorney Wolfgang Anderson.

The Johnsons (not their real name) are the kind of Seattle couple who turn to prenuptial agreements these days. Both have careers of their own and children from their first marriages.

She is the one who first pushed for a prenuptial agreement.

"My divorce was quite a shocker to me," she says. "With everything divided in half, that left me with two children to raise myself and having to move out of a home.

"It was a very difficult situation and I promised myself that I would never be put in that situation again. If I ever married again, I wanted to be in a situation where all those bases were covered. I was very scared to commit again because of the pain of my first marriage."

Her husband says they "never had a problem with the prenuptial agreement. Ours was done in a very friendly atmosphere."

"I knew she was worrying about what would happen if she got divorced again, so I was willing to sign a prenuptial agreement which did several things that satisfied her greatly, including the stipulation that if we ever got a divorce, then she would get the house. I wanted her to feel comfortable that I did love her."

CRAFTING A prenuptial agreement is not always this easy. Often, one partner is in favor of such an agreement, usually the partner with more financial assets, while the other views the agreement with reluctance, if not hostility.

Initial meetings with an attorney can be tense, even testy. What is being discussed in the flush of premarital excitement is, after all, what will happen if the marriage ends in divorce. A prenuptial agreement resembles a dissolution agreement, setting forth who gets what assets and similar obligations.

So difficult are some of these matters to discuss that many couples never get past the stage of meeting with an attorney.

"Frankly, a lot of people consult with me on prenuptial agreements and then decide not to pursue it further," says attorney Rita Bender of Seattle. "Prenuptial agreements can be emotionally disruptive.

"Here people are about to get married and now they're sitting down and trying to talk about how they will handle their property if the marriage doesn't work out. Prenuptial agreements are not exactly conducive to romance."

IMPARTIAL MEDIATORS are sometimes brought in to help work out the details. And parties to prenuptial agreements are forewarned that such agreements can be challenged in court at the time of a divorce, and often are. Prenuptial agreements, which are designed to minimize discord at the time of a divorce, can backfire, becoming yet another matter for lawyers to litigate.

Considering all these difficult aspects of a prenuptial agreement can produce a charged atmosphere even when both parties think they have no dispute with each other. Emotions can surface at any time during the process, set off by any provocation, even an initial consultation with a lawyer.

Attorneys strongly advise most clients to stick to economic issues when forging a prenuptial agreement. Keep it simple and easy to enforce, they suggest.

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Thursdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Monday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

ANNIVERSARY

Couple celebrates golden anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. J.T. Rose of Midland celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a reception Saturday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lanny Cole. Hosts were the Rose's children.

Rose and the former Mary Lee Landfair were married Nov. 16, 1940, in Roswell, N.M. They have six children — Bennie Norman Rose of Odessa; Jimmie Lee Rose of Midland; Charles Wayne Rose of Mineral Wells; and Madaline M. Cole, Larry J. Rose and Lester Ray Rose, all of Midland — as well as 12 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The couple lived in Roswell and Monahans before moving to Midland in 1948. In 1973 they moved to Weatherford, and in 1982 they moved back to Midland. They have been employed with brick masons, in farming and ranching, and in house construction and sales. They are presently employed with Ace Transportation of Odessa.

Mr. and Mrs. J.T. Rose

Rose is a member of Veterans of Foreign Wars. He served for two years during World War II with the 133rd Evacuation Hospital attached to the Seventh Army.

After a honeymoon to St. John, U.S. Virgin Islands, the couple lives in Dallas.

Gadgets make kitchen work easier

Associated Press

It's possible to spend lots of money adapting a kitchen for special needs, but it isn't always necessary. Standard products can simplify chores and make daily living easier for the elderly or those with limited strength. Some are energy savers for everyone, with or without mobility problems. Here's a look at some possibilities, recommended by Country Kitchen Ideas.

■ A faucet sprayer, standard on most kitchen sinks, simplifies lots of chores. Equip it with a long hose and use it to fill pans on the counter or stove and save lifting and carrying. The sprayer also has a spray pattern that allows the user to shampoo with less bending at the kitchen sink.

■ One-handed can openers accommodate any size can.

■ Fruit or vegetable holders have three pins mounted on a suction base to hold a fruit or vegetable securely in place for one-handed paring or slicing.

■ Jar openers make it easier to open jars by improving leverage and grip.

■ Utensil extension handles extend the grip or handle of almost any standard utensil by 10 inches. They are lightweight and foldable.

■ Lapboards can be added at key locations around the kitchen to create work surfaces at the proper height for a seated cook.

■ Looped straps attach to handles of doors and drawers to help a person with a weak grasp open them.

■ Under-cabinet drawers provide additional storage within easy reach.

Shopping center is tourist attraction

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — What's the second biggest tourist attraction in Orlando, Fla.? According to the Belz Factory Outlet World, the shopping center drew more than 9 million people in 1989, second to Disney World. The shopping center offers special events, including a carousel for children to ride while parents shop, along with discount prices on name-brand merchandise.

Lying weaves tangled web

By Terry Lee Goodrich
N.Y. Times News Service

When Patty learned she would have to take a business trip with a co-worker — a man — she knew it would mean trouble with her jealous husband, innocent though the trip was.

The solution?

"I lied," said Patty, 37, a business analyst who lives in a small city west of Fort Worth. She asked that her real name not be used.

"Actually, it was a lie of omission. I got the idea from my mom. I was telling her about the fit he threw about the last trip I took. She said, 'Just don't tell him.' And I thought, 'Well, maybe I can pull it off ... ' "

Later, when her husband phoned her hotel's front desk, he learned that not one, but two, company representatives had checked in.

Ironically, her lie may have saved her marriage, Patty said, though she wouldn't recommend untruth as a marital lifeboat. In her case, the uncovering of the lie led to a confrontation between her and her husband, then to counseling. She concedes, though, it could just as easily have resulted in a trip to a divorce lawyer.

Everyone lies. Little lies, perhaps, which won't have consequences as serious as Patty's if found out, but lies all the same. We fudge on our ages, our weights, our incomes, our golf scores. We lie that the check's in the mail. We tell our children that Santa will come on Christmas Eve.

CONSIDER THE last time you got a call from a phone solicitor. Did you perhaps claim falsely that you gave at the office? That you were just on your way out the door? That your newborn (you're childless) required a diaper change?

Ever reach for the bedside phone to call in sick, then leap from bed to enjoy the day?

One estimate is that lying is so much a part of our lives by adulthood that the average American tells some 200 lies a day, according to an estimate cited in "The Book of Lies" by M. Hirsh Goldberg.

Few behaviors serve as many purposes as lying. We grow up to use lies — or at least, half-truths — to avoid obligations, curry favor, buy time, end conversations, keep relationships intact.

"Another payoff is that it's exciting," said Margaret Summy, a licensed professional counselor in Fort Worth. "It's living dangerously. Besides, we all want to be important, so we embellish our stories."

We also lie to gain support for our side, barely realizing we're doing so, said clinical psychologist David Welsh.

"In working with relationships such as parent-child or husband-wife, they look to the therapist to score points," he said. "They'll each tell me how a scenario unfolded, then look at me like, 'See?' Each person has a distorted memory, and they'll accuse each other of lying. But each is telling their own version of the truth."

PERHAPS THE most justifiable reason for fabrications is to spare feelings. For instance, the guests of honor at a dinner party probably wouldn't dream of telling their hosts that they didn't like the specially prepared meal even if it was terrible.

Rationalization aside, lying exacts a toll. If we act on false information, we can be hurt. If we lie and are discovered, it can erode the trust so vital to relationships. Besides, lying is a strain on the brain because one lie leads to another, and we have to remember to stick to our story.

Lying is stressful because of our societal standards, although "we can condition ourselves to where it's not so hard on us," said Joe Morris, who conducts polygraph tests and is president of Honesty Employment Loss Prevention Services in Dallas. "In some cultures, lying and cheating is considered normal."

For most of us, though, lying exacts a physical toll, Morris said. We breathe faster, our hearts beat harder and our blood pressure goes haywire.

The truth can exact a toll on the body, too, of course — especially if we're admitting a lie.

"Just about the most difficult thing for any human being to do is admit to someone they lied to them," Morris said. "It's very stressful. But on the flip side, you get a ton of relief. It removes a tremendous amount of tension, especially if you've been spending your nights and days worrying about it."

SO IT WAS with Patty, who had to tell other lies to cover up her initial deception with her husband. He waited until the night she returned from her business trip, then woke her from a sound sleep to confront her.

Traumatic as confessing was, it was also a relief, she said. And their story has a good ending, "because we've been going to a counselor ever since, and it's helping tremendously."

Not all couples are so fortunate, however.

What's New?

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

Their parents loved hula hoops, go-go boots and love beads, but the children of the '90s prefer slap bracelets, bubble necklaces and fanny-packs.

For generations, children and teenagers have claimed certain fads and trends for their very own, and the '90s crop of young people is no exception. Where these fads come from and how every region of the country seems to become infected at about the same time is puzzling, but one thing is certain — as long as there are children, there will be fads.

Midland's younger generation is enthusiastic in its acceptance of new trends. Take, for example, slap bracelets. These colorful, trendy accessories are made from a thin, bendable piece of metal about one inch wide and nine inches long that is covered with a fabric or plastic cover. When these bracelets are "slapped" on a wrist (or anything else), they automatically curve around it.

Both boys and girls are enamored with the slap bracelets and many consider them a "necessary" part of their lifestyle.

"I own a couple," said Sean Hancock, 10. "Some I have, some I can't find. They're neat bracelets." He doesn't play with them at school, though, because "some kids have had them taken away."

His twin brother, Seth, 10, said he lost his slap bracelet, but "mom is going to buy me two."

Seth prefers the slap bracelets to the yarn-braided bracelets because "the yarn ones don't last as long because they get torn up by the cat, or at school, they just get ripped off." With the slap bracelets, "you just have to slap them on; they are easy to get on."

Katie Koeninger, 9, is a big fan of slap bracelets too, because "they are straight and with the touch of a hand they are curved and can fit around your wrist like a bracelet."

ASHLEY CRAVIN, 8, has four slap bracelets, which she purchased at the skating rink. "I think they are neat," she said.

Her sister Melanya, who said she is "fixing to be 12," said at her school, "a lot of people wear slap bracelets, one on each wrist."

Not everyone likes slap bracelets, though. "Mom thinks she doesn't like them," Sean said. "She doesn't like the noise," adding that his mother says the bracelets look like they are made out of mini-blinds.

"Teachers take the bracelets away and don't give them back," said Katie, "because they cause such a noise in the classroom. Also, some have been banned from school because they are metal. You can peel the paper stuff off and cut yourself with the metal."

Ashley said she has learned not to play with the slap bracelets while she is in school. "I don't mess with them at school. They (bracelets) make noise while they (teachers) are trying to teach."

While slap bracelets make noise, another popular fashion trend is as quiet as a breeze — bubble necklaces. These little bottles of soap bubbles — complete with tiny bubble wands — are hung on a silken cord and worn around the neck.

"They look like the perfume bottles you wear around your neck, except for the little bubble blowers," Katie said. She occasionally takes hers to school, she added. "I usually have it hidden away in my desk or something."

Ashley also has taken her bubble necklace to school, and has had no problem with it causing any kind of disruption.

ANOTHER POPULAR "fad" of today is not really a fad at all. This pastime is collecting baseball cards, and it has been around long enough to have been enjoyed by these children's parents. One of the main differences, however, is that both boys and girls are finding it fun, and some are making a profit from collecting baseball cards.

Seth and Sean have collected cards for a year or two, they said.

"I've got too many to count," said Seth. "What I do is go to the baseball shop and trade cards for other good cards, and get our money's worth." He plans to buy some common cards at today's current price of 5 cents each, and hang on to them for a while. "In the future they can go up to $1,000 because they'll be so old."

His twin also sees collecting baseball cards as a way to make money. "I sell them in the summer to the baby sitter, but now he's moving," Sean said.

The twins' brother, Andy Hancock, who said he will "be 12 in January," has been collecting baseball cards "since late 1985. I have 1,000 to 2,000 — around in there. Quite a few of my friends collect baseball cards. We just do it mostly for fun."

He does have some cards he is particularly proud of, including a 1959 Willie Mays Topps card and some of the more rare current cards.

Ashley collects baseball cards too, she said. "I save a few, and when I want money I sell them."

Sports are trendy at Melanya's school too, but football pencils are the collectible of choice. "Two people in my class have over 50 (pencils)," she said.

She said bubble necklaces are popular with sixth-graders, as are seasonal earrings such as pumpkins and Christmas wreaths.

"Some wear hose cut off mid-calf that have lace 1½-inches on the end," she said. "Some are wearing Spandex (clothing), which is sort of like glue-on shiny stuff. ... Some schools have banned Spandex" because it fits next to the skin, she said. "It's not uncomfortable, it's like wearing hose."

Music of their own is always a favorite with young people, too. The younger girls still love New Kids On The Block, but older children seem to prefer rap music. They like such groups as MC Hammer and Vanilla Ice.

OTHER TRENDS mentioned by these youngsters included things decorated with pictures of cats, double-decker socks, musical hats, New Kids On The Block dolls, sweaters with sleeves that are too big and cover the hands, double shoelaces, torn jeans and fitted baseball caps.

And of course, Nintendo home video games are still popular, at least as far as this group was concerned.

Of course, young people who own all these trendy items need a way to carry them around, and what better way than waist- or fanny-packs, which are small, zippered pouches worn around the waist.

"I put in my tapes and cassette player," Sean said. "I listen to it and carry it around."

Besides, by keeping their belongings in a fanny-pack, their hands are free to play with their slap bracelets or blow bubble necklaces or thumb through their collections of baseball cards.

Slap Wraps 'all the rage' with younger set

By Anthony Ramirez
N.Y. Times News Service

Social scientists have long puzzled over fads, those brief, extraordinarily popular obsessions with peculiar objects and clothing. They have pondered their causes in late 20th-century America and their meaning for Western civilization.

But Tara Murtha is not puzzled. The 10-year-old likes the latest fad because it lets her do a neat trick with her big toe.

Her father, Eugene Murtha, is behind the latest craze among the schoolyard set. As president of the Main Street Toy Co., he makes and markets Slap Wraps, a long, thin piece of fabric-covered steel that curves into a bracelet when slapped around the wrist or ankle. It is basically a Venetian blind with an attitude. In the last three months alone, Main Street Toy has sold more than a million Slap Wraps, all of them by word of mouth.

Like other crazes in the toy business, slap bracelets are almost certainly doomed to a short life. But Main Street Toy, based in Simsbury, Conn., is led by experienced executives from Coleco Industries, the marketer of Cabbage Patch dolls, which is now bankrupt. They say they learned lessons from Coleco's mistakes about managing windfall profits from selling to 10-year-olds, like keeping corporate overhead lean. Meanwhile, they ride the rocket.

LAST NOVEMBER, when her father showed her a prototype Slap Wrap, Tara went crazy over it, endlessly snapping it around her wrist. Her coolest trick was to balance one on her big toe, flip it into the air, and let it fall onto her ankle with a giggle-provoking snap.

Under the perplexed gaze of adults, millions of Taras are slapping the metal slats on their limbs. Main Street says it has orders for five million of the bracelets, which sell for about $1.30 wholesale, or about $2.50 retail in Toys "R" Us, Kay Bees and other toy stores.

And like other companies with a hot toy, Main Street has found itself watching helplessly as competitors cash in on the frenzy. Main Street estimates that other companies have sold another 10 million to 15 million cheap and sometimes shoddy imitations for as little as 70 cents each. Some federal and state regulators, schools and parents have acted to stem the tide of the bracelets, concentrating on the knockoffs, which have been blamed for causing some minor injuries to children.

Main Street, whose sales may have benefited from negative publicity about the imitators, says it is planning legal action against the competitors for trademark infringement.

Although in business just two years, Main Street Toy knows a lot about the vagaries of the toy field. The 10-person company is led by five refugees from Coleco, once based in nearby West Hartford, Conn. At its peak in 1985, Coleco had sales of $776 million, mostly from Cabbage Patch dolls and an ill-fated personal computer called Adam. Coleco filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy in 1988 after children started relegating its products to the toy graveyard next to Hula Hoops and Teddy Ruxpin.

MAIN STREET was founded by Murtha, 39, a former vice president for marketing at Coleco, where he helped sell the games Scrabble, Parcheesi and Trivial Pursuit — products that Coleco had obtained through its purchase of Selchow & Righter. He also held senior positions at toy companies like Fisher-Price, the General Mills toy group and Milton Bradley. He recruited to his fledgling concern senior Coleco officials with skills in order processing, accounting and marketing.

"Slap Wraps is interesting because it shows how conservative the toy business has become," said Larry Carlat, editor of Toy and Hobby World magazine, a trade publication. Large toy companies, he explained, had turned down the product, which a small company was able to market successfully.

Murtha knew the slap bracelets would be the latest rage. "Big numbers was what I was thinking," he said. "It would make a perfect counter-seasonal product with multiple-purchase possibilities," meaning that a lot of people would buy a lot of Slap Wraps at times other than Christmas.

So far he's been right. Slap Wraps is the biggest cheap-novelty craze since Pet Rocks in the late Paleozoic Era, circa 1975, Carlat said.

Of course, Slap Wraps at perhaps $15 million in retail sales this year will not come close to Barbie dolls (about $680 million annually) or Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles (perhaps $1 billion for all merchandise). But slap bracelets only cost $2.50 — a cheap chotchke for recession-haunted times.

ORDERS ARE pouring in so fast that Main Street has stopped counting them — it simply weighs them, about 30 pounds a day. The company might post 1990 revenue of $6 million to $8 million compared with $2.5 million last year.

Main Street plans to come out with new lines of Slap Wraps, covered with cartoon characters and Valentine's Day greetings, for example. But for the moment, it wants to put a brake on expanding corporate overhead. "If we need to hire two people, we'll only hire one," Murtha said.

Slap Wraps was invented by Stuart Anders, a high-school shop teacher from Sun Prairie, Wis. In 1983, he was fiddling around with steel ribbons in his father's shop when he invented what would eventually become Slap Wraps.

By chance, he showed his invention to Philip Bart, an agent who represented toy inventors. Last November, when Bart got in touch with Murtha, the three men formed affiliated companies.

Murtha had hundreds of prototypes made for the Toy Fair held in February in New York, the industry convention where manufacturers sell wares to distributors and retailers.

Rival companies, seeing Slap Wraps at Toy Fair, saw their potential, too. Murtha was not worried then because Main Street expected to have its version out on the market as early as April. But the company did not introduce Slap Wraps until July.

WHEN MAIN STREET started testing the product to conform with federal safety regulations, it discovered that the steel could break and slice through the fabric, exposing sharp metal edges. By making Slap Wraps out of thicker gauge steel — 0.006 inch thick, instead of the prototype's 0.004 inch — it was less likely to break.

Introduction was postponed while the company developed a safer product and awaited shipments from its Hong Kong factory.

Meanwhile, competitors were able to bring out similar products at the same time as Main Street because they had copied the thin-steel prototype. Millions of knockoffs, made in Taiwan, flooded the Northeast.

In Wallingford, Conn., earlier this month, 4-year-old Nicole Tomaso was playing with a cheap knockoff when she ran screaming into the family living room. An exposed edge had cut her finger and nail.

Outraged, her father, Joseph N. Tomaso, filed a complaint with Connecticut's Department of Consumer Protection, which began an investigation. The agency is now asking Connecticut retailers to recall the imitations and has alerted its state counterparts, as well as the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, about the knockoffs' dangers. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Minnesota are contemplating action.

Anders, the inventor, is fatalistic about his product's future. "I'd like to think Slap Wraps will last 30 years," he said, "but I know it won't. I hope to be somewhere between Pet Rocks and the Hula Hoop."

Newest children's fad no hit with school officials

By Stacey Garfinkle
N.Y. Times News Service

Students are hitting themselves and having fun doing it. Some of their teachers, however, don't like it.

This latest fad centers on Slap Wraps — pliable 9-inch strips of metal encased in thick colored or patterned cloth. When the strips are slapped against wrists, they wrap around and form bracelets. The Slap Wraps can be used as bracelets, anklets, hair bands, and what teachers fear most, distractions.

"They're neat and they're new and everyone is wearing them," said Tiffany Lee, a fifth grader at Boca Raton (Fla.) Elementary School.

Amy Carpenter, a fifth-grade teacher at the school, confiscated the first two bracelets she saw in school. "I thought they were distracting and they could be dangerous," she said.

Noelle Stephens, one of Carpenter's students who had to surrender her bracelet, thought the punishment was harsh but agreed the bracelets can be harmful. "They rip off easily," she said showing an orange bracelet with tattered ends. "It cut my friend's little sister."

Slap Wraps were developed eight years ago by a former teacher named Stewart Anders.

"Imagine a ribbon like a ribbon you tie around a package and rubbing it against the edge of a scissors," the North Miami Beach resident said. "I knew metal could roll like that, it was just a matter of figuring out how to straighten it."

After years of trying to market the product, he met Phillip D. Bart, a man Anders said was instrumental in the success of Cabbage Patch Dolls. Within a month, a Connecticut-based toy company agreed to manufacture Slap Wraps, which were introduced at February's 1990 Toy Fair in New York.

Anders said an independent laboratory that is recognized by the Consumer Product Safety Commission tested his product and found it safe for all ages. However, Anders said, less expensive imitations, some of which bear a "Made in Taiwan" label, beat Slap Wrap to the market.

Anders said the imitations, which cost as little as 99 cents compared with the $1.99 to $2.49 cost of a Slap Wrap, are inferior.

The imitations are made of a metal that rusts and breaks easily, while Slap Wraps are made with stainless steel enclosed in a protective tube, Anders said. "We spent extra time and money to make ours safe."

"Big numbers was what I was thinking. It would make a perfect counter-seasonal product with multiple-purchase possibilities,' meaning that a lot of people would buy a lot of Slap Wraps at times other than Christmas.

Baseball cards have difference

By Gregory Lewis
Hearst News Service

Baseball cards, once the province of kids, are selling what in another era would be called pinups.

Score, a company that makes baseball cards, calls it the Dream Team — 13 cards of highly-personalized black-and-white photographs of the best baseball players at their positions. The poses include Oakland A's right fielder Jose Canseco standing in a field, rolling hills in the background, having just swung the bat. He's topless, too.

Dream Team may fulfill some collectors' fantasies.

"It's like buying a Playboy or Playgirl magazine," said Doug Sprague of Dave's Dougout in Albany.

Score's 1991 Major League Baseball card set — available in hobby shops in early January — is quite different from what conventional baseball card collectors are used to buying. Its 893 cards (plus seven bonus cards not available in retail packs) — the largest card-set in history — will be released in two series.

However, it's not the volume of cards but the sexy poses of Canseco and teammate Rickey Henderson — who posed in his classic base stealing crouch, clad only in shorts — that are causing people to pay attention to them.

The Dream Team subset also features Benito Santiago, the Giants' Will Clark, Roberto Alomar, Wade Boggs, Barry Larkin, Kirby Puckett, Frank Viola, Randy Myers, Doug Jones and the A's Dave Stewart. Those cards were shot in black and white by high-fashion photographer Michael O'Neill. Vanity Fair portrait photographer Annie Leibovitz shot the Canseco pose.

Not all of the cards push the hunk factor. For instance, Will Clark is clad in a double-breasted suit and tie, with lightning-bolt-streaked bat on the shoulder.

"1991 Score is our best," said Julie Haddon, Score spokeswoman. "We've gone the extra mile to make special cards. Card collecting is skyrocketing. We want to set the pace. We've introduced a more classy and sophisticated card."

In its 1990 set, Score struck gold with a black-and-white card of Bo Jackson in football shoulder pads and balancing a baseball bat over his shoulders. The card sells for $10.

"The Bo Jackson card was a tremendous success," said Haddon. "With the 1991 Dream Team the idea was to produce black-and-white, highly personalized cards of the player in a different lifestyle than baseball."

The jury is still out on 1991 Score.

"It's not for me," said Eric Fry, reacting to a picture of the Canseco card, which is included a brochure Score has distributed to hobby shop owners. "But maybe it'll get some women into the hobby."

Card companies are scrambling to get any edge they can to attract collectors to their product.

The competition between companies for 1991 baseball card dollars was heightened when Topps announced it would distribute in wax packs actual cards from previous years to celebrate its 40 years in the baseball market.

Fry, who operates Randy's Baseball Card Heaven in Mill Valley, said that the Score cards do "set them apart from the other companies. But it's hard to say how collectors will react. The 1989 Dream Team cards were sought after. The kids seemed to like them. But the 1991 (Dream Team) cards don't seem like baseball cards."

Employees yearn to cure cancer discrimination

By Jack Williams
Copley News Service

Despite a certain trepidation and the specter of ongoing therapy, Donna could live with the medical diagnosis: a form of cancer from which the rate of total recovery is 96 percent.

But none of the doctors, none of the tests and treatments could prepare her for the next jolt: the loss of a job that put a career in which she had invested 13 years on the critical list.

Donna, formerly a chief accountant for a sales firm who describes herself as both a surviving cancer patient and a victim of its lingering stigma, was dismissed by her employer when her request for an extension of medical leave was denied.

Donna, 37, had been diagnosed with Hodgkin's disease in July of '89 and faced months of chemotherapy and radiation treatment, a situation requiring flexibility and understanding on the part of her employer.

Instead, she said, "I was browbeaten ... I was the victim of a lot of harassment."

DONNA CONSIDERS herself among the one in four of the nation's 6 million cancer survivors who face on-the-job prejudice or discrimination at the workplace because of their medical histories, according to figures compiled by the National Coalition of Cancer Survivors, a consumer organization that promotes the rights of cancer patients.

"There are three myths affecting the job opportunities of cancer patients: that cancer is a death sentence, that it's contagious, and that cancer survivors are unproductive employees," said Barbara Hoffman, a Princeton, N.J., attorney who is senior vice president of the NCCS.

Hoffman said that discrimination is disproportionately apparent in law enforcement agencies, fire departments and among airline pilots.

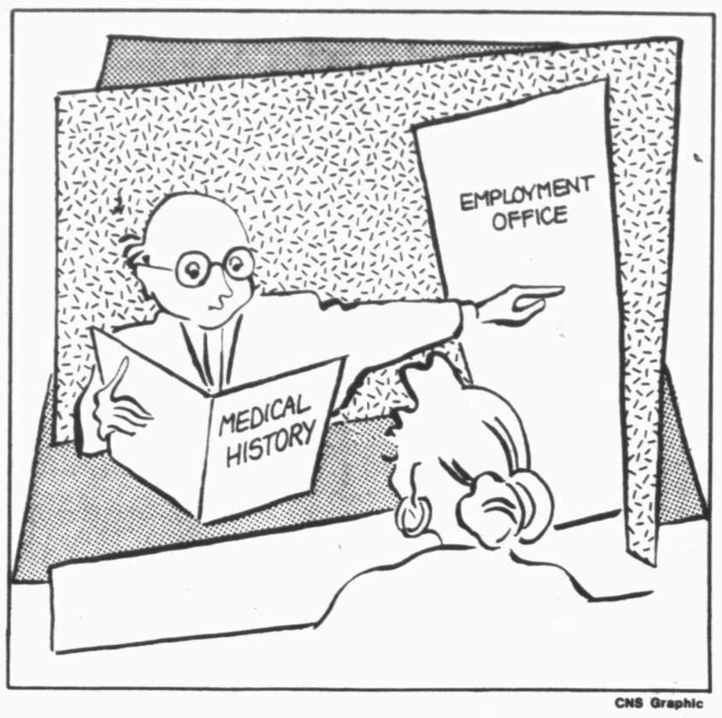

"Even 10, 15 years after treatment, people are finding that no employers will hire them," said Hoffman, who has co-edited a Consumer Reports book, "An Almanac of Resources for the Cancer Survivor."

WHILE LEGISLATION protects the right of an employer to require that employees perform essential duties, the Federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (which becomes law in July 1992) are designed, along with state laws, to protect victims such as Donna.

But the wheels of justice get mired in the system's inertia, and job discrimination often is difficult to prove, said Hoffman.

Case in point: the plight of Tim, who five years ago applied to a Long Island police department, passed all of the tests, but was refused a position because he once had Hodgkin's disease.

"He's an attorney now in the DA's office, still fighting it," said Hoffman. Red tape within the system has delayed his inevitable victory, she added.

CNS Graphic

More immediately successful was Ray, a survivor of lymphoma cancer, who originally was denied a position in the Houston Fire Department despite passing all the tests.

Ray was able to claim a position as a firefighter after suing in accordance with the Federal Rehab act, which prevents employers who receive federal funds from discriminating due to medical history.

DONNA, THE ACCOUNTANT, said that she considered legal action on the basis of harassment, but the acrimony of a trial was not something she relished.

Meanwhile, she continues to try to re-enter the workplace, where she can put to use her 13 years of clerical experience and a master's degree.

"I can't lie about my medical history," she said, "because down the line I will have to take time for follow-up examinations. And a new employer would require a physical exam to qualify for its health plan."

The reactions she has elicited from prospective employers have ranged, she said, from empathy to disdain.

"Some don't know what to do with their eyes all of a sudden. They'll look at the papers on their desk, or their shoes, as if they might be afraid the disease is contagious."

Contagious? Outrageous.

Yet, Hoffman can provide figures indicating that, in a national survey, 15 million people polled indicated that they felt cancer is contagious. Another 30 million were unsure.

Then there's the example of the Michigan woman who left her clerical position following surgery for cancer of the larynx and, upon her return, found her work area saturated with disinfectant.

"They had sprayed down her desk with Lysol because they didn't want to get her cancer germs," said Hoffman.

TO AVOID SUCH ignorance and confusion, Hoffman said she tries to encourage everyone involved — employers, cancer survivors and health care professionals — to appreciate one another's viewpoints and familiarize themselves with the laws of the land.

Compounding the problem, she noted, is the fact that at least 25 percent of all cancer survivors have inadequate or no health insurance.

And the issue of discrimination doesn't figure to go away. Not with a gradually increasing survival rate and a better quality of life enjoyed by the survivors.

"On the whole, employers tend to be fairly flexible," noted Tom Friedman, an oncology social worker for Stevens Cancer Center at Scripps Memorial Hospital in La Jolla, Calif.

But as the director of support groups for cancer patients and their families, Friedman said he often hears of employers giving cancer patients less responsibility and less public exposure — especially if the disease or its treatment has an effect on the patient's appearance.

"I was one of the lucky ones," said Donna. "I kept most of my hair (through three rounds of chemotherapy) and kept my weight stable. The cancer was detected early enough (in lymph nodes above her diaphragm) that I was given a 96 percent chance of full recovery.

"But right after chemotherapy I wasn't at my best. I was like anybody else who might have flulike symptoms."

SHE WORKED FOR two months after the diagnosis, then was granted a six-month disability leave. Because her doctors discouraged her from returning to work when the six months expired, she requested an extension. She was refused — and terminated.

Now Donna is determined to put the experience behind her — both the cancer and the loss of a job.

"I don't want to carry the fact that I had cancer as a liability forever."

Early infection detection important for treatment

Associated Press

The importance of early treatment of common infections has been underscored by the recent death of Muppet creater Jim Henson from blood poisoning and septic shock.

"Early and aggressive treatment of an infection before it releases toxins into the bloodstream is needed to prevent septic shock," said Dr. Alexander McMeeking, a specialist in infectious disease at New York University Medical Center.

"An infected wound or burn, a urinary tract infection, or symptoms of a possible internal infection, such as general weakness and fever, especially if accompanied by coughing, require prompt attention," McMeeking advised.

The incidence of septic shock has more than doubled in the past decade. Ironically, a significant percentage of that increase is attributed to medical advances against other diseases.

Chemotherapy for cancer and immunosuppressant drugs to prevent the rejection of organ transplants weaken the body's defenses against the bacteria, fungi and viruses that cause infections and are present everywhere in the environment, McMeeking explained.

"A growing body of evidence indicates certain common infectious agents, such as the streptococcal bacteria that killed Mr. Henson, are mutating into more deadly strains," he added.

While the prospect of someday being able to treat septic shock directly is encouraging, physicians can prevent most cases of septic shock through early recognition and appropriate treatment of infection.

Once in the bloodstream, the infectious agents release poisonous byproducts called pyrogenic toxins. In response, the body's defense mechanisms produce inflammatory agents which can damage blood vessels throughout the body.

As a result, less oxygen-rich blood reaches the body's organs, which begin to fail. This condition is known as septicemia or sepsis syndrome, which can lead to septic shock.

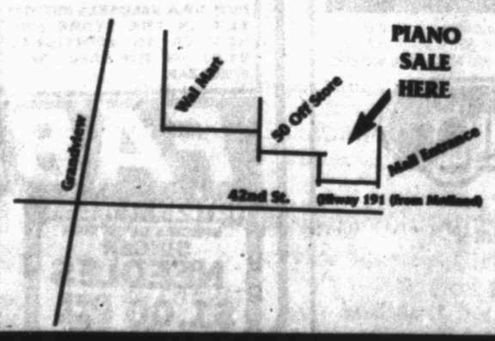

The inflammatory agents also damage small blood vessels and cells in the lungs, McMeeking said. Inflammation and fluid in the lungs leads to an advanced pneumonialike condition called adult respiratory distress syndrome, the most common cause of death in septic shock.

Once the toxins are unleashed, little can be done except to provide antibiotics to help the body fight the toxins. Other therapeutic measures may include drugs to constrict dilated blood vessels, and mechanical ventilation to help keep the lungs functioning.

Years haven't changed charming Italian town

By Evelyn Kieran
Copley News Service

"Isn't it fortunate that so many saints have birthdays in the summer?" Noted author Gore Vidal smiles at his own whimsy. "That way, they can all take turns doing this."

His arm sweeps toward the vast night sky, ablaze with spectacular fireworks.

"Last week, it was Ravello, tonight it's Maiori, next week, Amalfi celebrates its saint's day. Isn't it marvelous?"

Friends around him join in the laughter.

It's true. The towns along the Amalfi coast have very conveniently picked saints with summertime feast days as patrons — a great excuse for a celebration with food, fireworks, fantasy and fun for all the summer visitors. Not that Italians ever need an excuse to celebrate life — they do it all the time. It just helps to add some celestial blessings to the more spectacular feasts.

We were on the roof of the Palumbo hotel, Ravello's finest, where guests of owner-host Pascal Vuilleumier had gathered to enjoy the fireworks and generally celebrate Italy's great midsummer festival, Ferragosoto — a three-day national holiday that quickly escalates to a week.

The celebration dates to the Emperor Augustus, who along with a number of other Roman notables discovered that the corniche south of Naples was a far more pleasant place to spend the summer than the confines of Imperial Rome.

Later, the Roman Catholic Church decided the mid-August date coincided exactly with the day on which the Virgin Mother was assumed into heaven, so the once-pagan holiday was given a new cast and good Catholics were granted permission to celebrate along with ancient heathens.

For whatever reason, midsummer casts its own magic over this fabled coast, and we settled down to enjoy the elaborate feast the chefs of the Palumbo had labored all day to prepare.

I counted more than 21 different dishes on the buffet — each a masterpiece of Italian art — and that didn't include the grills off to one side where three chefs created a "fantasia di carne" to order. It bore no resemblance whatsoever to your typical backyard barbecue.

The whole evening was the stuff of dreams — charming people in a magnificent setting, summer breezes fragrant with garden scents and the soft sounds of strolling musicians — fabulous food, glorious fireworks ...

THE PALUMBO — and the town of Ravello — take such events as a matter of course. Life is good here. Very good. The former palace has been a hotel since before the turn of the century when such guests as Richard Wagner came for lengthy visits and stayed to compose music for the generations.

Later, Hollywood director John Huston discovered Ravello — and the Palumbo — and kept coming back long after his initial work was finished. The guest book abounds with celebrity comments — "The Palumbo is peace — it's perfect," wrote one enthusiastic guest.

The Vuilleumier family still treats guests as personal friends and takes a warm interest in ensuring individual well-being. Each room is different, with simple decor highlighting lovely antiques — but the plumbing is modern and functional.

The building climbs five levels in a succession of passages, corridors and beautifully lighted stairways, creating charming niches along the way. Public rooms are filled with comfortable chairs, fascinating artwork and lots of cozy corners to stop to read, write or enjoy an aperitif.

Breakfast is served in the rose-filled, trellised garden overlooking the sea and dinner in the rooftop dining room by candlelight.

We spoke with an English couple who were there for two weeks with their young daughter.

"We thought to do all the tourist things, you know," sighed Elizabeth Dale, "but it's just so pleasant right here, we get less ambitious every day."

Ravello is a quiet town. It's a corkscrew drive up from the frenzied traffic of the coast, and that tends to keep the crowds away. A few yards from the Palumbo and down an ancient stairway is the town square, site of the evening passagiotta — that lovely Mediterranean custom of an evening stroll about town. A few shops serve snacks and delicious gelati, since food is an integral part of any Italian gathering, and the environment provides its own music as people gather and talk.

The 11th century cathedral with its huge cast-bronze doors draws visitors into its cool interior where a fascinating pulpit depicts the story of Jonah and the whale and another reminds us with its elaborate tilework of the era when trade with the Arab world was commonplace.

There's evidence in the bell towers, the cloisters and in many of the buildings of the presence of Moors who came and fell in love with the place and brought their graceful architectural details here.

CNS Photo

JUST OFF THE square is the Villa Rudolfo, the 13th century residence of the family of that name, restored in the 19th century by a Scotsman, F. Nevil Reid, and later donated to the town. Concerts are held here throughout the summer, and it is difficult to imagine a more romantic setting for them.

Unless, that is, you venture into the gardens of the Villa Cimbrone, farther along this great balcony of a town, which sits 1,000 feet above the sea. The gardens are open to the public and draw poets, painters and the casual visitor into a maze of alleys, gardens and "rooms" filled with delightful sculptures and archaeological artifacts.

There are a few rooms in a small hotel in the main building of the villa where Greta Garbo is said to have stayed with Leopold Stokowski in a romance that scandalized their world. It is here, too, that Gore Vidal has his private apartments well-hidden from public view.

Strolling through the gardens, it is easy to people them with romantic figures of the centuries — the ambience of the whole place makes you long for hours here to just drift and dream.

Ravello is for those seeking peace — offered for centuries — its wisdom in its ancient stones and its inspirations in the stirring vistas of the sea.

After the Allied Forces landed at Salerno in Italy during World War II, Gen. Mark Clark explored the adjacent coast and decided the little town of Amalfi was an ideal spot for some R&R for his troops.

The town fathers were delighted — they had been hosting the not overly friendly Germans for some time.

"But," they explained to the general, "there is the problem of water."

They sighed a collective sigh, shrugged their expressive shoulders and waited.

Clark got the message and soon had troops securing a steady supply of potable water for the town. Thus did tourism get its real start on the historic coast.

The topography of the town sets natural limits to any real growth — it sits on a shallow shelf of coast at the foot of a deep chasm in the Lattari Mountains. Creamy cubes of buildings climb the nearly perpendicular walls of the chasm in an almost chaotic fashion, and busy shops and cafes line the Via Capuano, the one road through town.

THE ROAD WAS built over the stream that cut the chasm through the centuries and that periodically flooded the town. That same stream turns the wheels of a paper mill that has been in business since the Middle Ages. (You can sometimes see and often hear the stream through grates in the road.)

Only small cars are allowed to drive to the head of the chasm, in single file with a five-minute traffic light right in the middle of town dictating passage. It's a kick to see drivers pull up to the light, hop out to get a gelati from a nearby shop and return to enjoy the delicacy while they wait for the light to change.

It's fun, too, to sit in the square at the foot of the steps to the great Cathedral of Saint Andrew and watch the evening crowds gather for coffee and conversation or to head for a concert in the hallowed halls of the nearby monastery.

The statue and fountain in midsquare draw giggling tourists wanting their pictures taken drinking from the bust of a beautiful woman sitting at the feet of a rather raggedy-looking Saint Andrew. Mothers drag reluctant children to the waters to wash hands sticky with gelati and other goodies available all around the square. As the evening light fades, tables and chairs come out in the adjacent trattorias, and locals and visitors alike settle into the serious business of dinner.

Beyond the tourists, most of the livelihood of Amalfi comes from the sea — as it has throughout the ages. At the grand harbor, dozens of boats come and go all day long, heading for Salerno, Positano and the not-too-distant Capri. Fishing is still a mainstay occupation and supplies the dozens of restaurants in town as well as the grand hotels, Grandest of these is the Santa Caterina, a magnificent hostelry carved out of the coastal rocks by Guiseppe Gambardella in 1880. The original structure was destroyed by a rock slide on Christmas Eve in 1892. Gambardella's son, Crescenzo, personally rebuilt the hotel in a safer spot, and subsequent generations have added to the property until today it offers some 70 guest accommodations in addition to lovely public rooms, including an outstanding restaurant.

The Santa Caterina is a real beauty — acres of marble, rich Oriental carpets, handsome tapestries and polished antiques are supplemented by great bouquets of fresh flowers. Flowering vines are trellised at the windows and arches — particularly in the beautiful dining room — and the whole effect is that of walking into a fairyland.

THE GUEST ROOMS all have hand-painted tile floors — deliciously cool on bare feet — and generous terraces for sunning or just enjoying the view and ideal for breakfast or a cool aperitif. Supermodern baths feature heated towel bars, brass fixtures and a multitude of amenities to add to the list of creature comforts.

The hotel has two elevators to take guests from the entry level down to the water where a swimming pool and spiaggi (rocky ledges used all along the coast for sunbathing, swimming and boat launching) tempt some of the most elegant clientele in Italy. Terraces on every level permit guests to enjoy the fabulous view of the open sea and the adjacent coves.

At first, the casual visitor may be restless — there seems so little to do compared to the litany of activities offered by most of the resorts with which Americans are familiar — but slowly, subtly, the soporific effect of perfect service in beautiful, luxurious surroundings takes effect and it is enough just to be here.

The granddaughters of Guiseppe Gambardella, the charming Giusi and Ninni, run the Santa Caterina today — a tribute to their illustrious ancestors and to the reputation for true hospitality of the whole Amalfi coast. They are real "boss ladies" to a well-trained housekeeping staff that often outnumbers the guests and a kitchen crew that seems to outdo itself every day with a seemingly unlimited repertoire of dishes involving the bounty of the area.

Exhibitions include gunfights, historic district, aquarium

Associated Press

Gambler Luke Short and Marshal "Longhair" Jim Courtright are destined to face off at the White Elephant Saloon again Feb. 8, through reenactment of the "The Last Great Gunfight" in the Fort Worth Stockyards historic district.

The 1887 duel, believed to be the last famous gunfight of the old west, ended with the death of the marshal. Short was briefly jailed and protected from a lynch mob by Bat Masterson; he later was cleared. The parts will be played by local history buffs at the Stockyards' White Elephant Saloon, named after the original.

The district, once the center of the Texas cattle industry, includes the Livestock Exchange Building and the Cowtown Coliseum, site of the world's first indoor rodeo.

■ CAJUN-CREOLE culture and the history of French Louisiana is focus of Vermilionville, a re-created historic village attraction at Lafayette.

The settlement includes historic buildings — the Beau Bassin House and Maison Buller — and re-creations like La Chapelle des Attakapas, modeled after the first church built by Acadian settlers in St. Martinville. Crafts, music and food recall the days in 1755 and after when the French-speaking Acadians (or "Cajuns"), from Nova Scotia, and Creoles, descended from African, West Indian and European pioneers, settled the bayous and prairies of south Louisiana.

BETWEEN NOVEMBER and April each year, 15,000 to 20,000 gray whales pass the Monterey Bay Aquarium in Monterey, Calif., on their way from Alaska to Baja California and back.

The aquarium has outdoor decks three stories high, with guides to help visitors spot the whales. It also sponsors whale-watching boat trips during January, the peak of the migration season.

Crown Princess cruises as seagoing stately resort

By Philip Sousa
Copley News Service

ABOARD CROWN PRINCESS — I started the morning off in the midst of a crowd trying to find which way was up, down, forward or aft.

Most everyone was headed for breakfast at either the Crown Court dining room, this ship's main restaurant, or the buffet-style Cafe Cabana. But we were all going in different — and in most cases wrong — directions.

Easy-to-follow diagrams with red "You Are Here" dots were sprinkled generously on each of the 11 passenger decks. But we still were having trouble finding our way.

However, the sheer size of this $200 million leviathan that Princess Cruises calls its newest "Super Love Boat" compounded the puzzle of getting from here to there the first few days aboard.

A way out seemingly favored by those seeking directions — or for that matter, information on just about anything — was a detour to the reception desk on the lower floor of the three-story "Plaza" atrium in the heart of the ship.

Open 24 hours a day and staffed by several young British men and women — all but one of them remarkably pleasant and patient — the desk was a good spot to learn about some of my fellow passengers' concerns.

ON THIS SPOT, known in older cruise ships as the purser's office, I overheard answers to a deluge of questions:

"No, sir, we are actually traveling in the other direction."

"You can book the tour at the counter under the 'Adventures Ashore Office' sign. It's just behind you, across the lobby."

"I'm sorry, but the pizzeria doesn't open until 11 a.m."

"No, ma'am, we have no detergent here. But you can buy it in the shop on the top floor of the lobby above us."

"I don't know how fast we're traveling. But I'll call the bridge and find out."

"Sorry. I don't know if 'My Left Foot' is a good movie. I haven't seen it."

"I am afraid I can't convert your bed into two twins. But your room steward will be glad to help."

"Certainly your friends must be somewhere on the ship. We'll page them and ask them to meet you here."

At 70,000 tons, it is larger than Cunard's QE2 and only a little smaller than Royal Caribbean Cruise Line's Sovereign of the Seas, the world's largest cruise vessel. Longer than two football fields, it carries up to 1,596 passengers.

LAUNCHED IN ITALY in July, the new Love Boat first cruised around the Mediterranean. Starting in October, it is doing weeklong Caribbean voyages out of Fort Lauderdale, Fla. From April through October 1991, it again will ply European waters.

The most eye-catching exterior feature, designed to be reminiscent of the head of a dolphin, is "The Dome," a 13,000-square-foot entertainment complex forward on the top deck above the spaceshiplike bridge. It houses a casino with blackjack, craps and roulette tables as well as banks of slot machines.

Other features include a dance floor, a bar and a lounge with wraparound windows looking out on the sea. The lounge is set apart by a glass partition surrounded by towering live foliage.

I soon found out that meeting — and losing — newfound companions aboard this giant liner was easy.

Just before sailing from Naples, Italy, on a 14-day voyage to the eastern Mediterranean and the Black Sea, I had lunch with Dorothy and Johnny Johnson of Sacramento, Calif. I didn't see them again until a week later.

CONVERSATIONS WITH THEM and other passengers once again convinced me that beauty in cruising lies in the eye of the traveling beholder.

"I'm more familiar with battleships than cruise liners, but we're really enjoying this one," said retired Marine Corps Col. George T. Fowler of Coronado, Calif. "The public facilities are very fine and spacious."

Sally H. Murphy of Highland Beach, Fla., who has sailed on some of the world's finest liners, also praised Crown Princess' expansive public areas, but would rather have fewer companions around.

"This is a lovely ship," she said, "but I prefer something smaller."

The important subject of stateroom space also drew mixed reviews: Most seasoned cruise travelers were impressed by the size of the cabins and their amenities; some first-timers were not.

Cassie and Ralph Gomez, sailing near the clouds on Aloha Deck in one of the ship's 36 "mini-suites" with private verandas, were among the former.

"We love it," the San Francisco businessman said of his 382-square-foot stateroom. "The views from our balcony are terrific and the marble bath with a full tub and separate shower is great."

A.J. ALEXANDER, a young teacher from England on his first holiday at sea, was traveling in an inside twin room down on Plaza Deck.

"I had no idea it would be so small," he said. "When my roommate and I are in at the same time, we have to stand to let the other move around."

For instance, standard inside and outside cabins — the least expensive and the majority of the ship's total of 795 — measure an impressive 195 square feet. At the other end of the space and price scales are 14 suites with private verandas. Those are 575 square feet.

All rooms have walk-in closet areas, ample drawer space, refrigerators, safes for valuables, remote-control television, direct-dial phones and separate beds that convert to queen size.

Cool shades of pale coral, aqua and eggshell abound. Pale woods, recessed lighting and other art deco-inspired touches give Crown Princess a decidedly modern look. Further enhancing that feeling is a $1 million collection of contemporary art; in all, more than 700 graphics, murals, sculptures and paintings by such artists as Andy Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein and Richard Estes are displayed throughout the public areas and in the staterooms.

"I am pleased with the ship, but thought it would be more luxurious," said Dorothy Johnson, the new friend from Sacramento with whom I lost contact for a week. "I like the Royal (Princess) much better."

CNS Photo

Princess Cruises' Crown Princess is uncommonly sleek for a ship that is longer than two football fields and capable of carrying up to 1,596 passengers.

Another experienced cruise traveler, Ralph Gomez, agreed.

"Crown Princess is beautiful as well as comfortable, and everything functions quite well," he said. "But it's a bit cold."

The Crown Court, the main restaurant, and the predominantly international fare served there also drew different opinions.

Celebrating their 58th cruise, Lorraine and Joachim "Joe" Artz of Beverly Hills were among the satisfied diners.

"The food is varied and more than adequate — it's very good," said Lorraine. "And if you want something that's not on the menu, you ask for it and you get it. I like that."

On the minus side, the Artzes wished the ceiling-to-floor service area, which in effect cuts the dining room in two, had been placed elsewhere.

"We cannot see anybody on the other side," Joe pointed out, "and vice versa."

CHARLOTTE AND KNUT Naess of Sweden, honeymooners on their first cruise, liked the Crown Court, but had mixed feelings about the fare.

"When we first came aboard, we were very impressed with the variety of items on the menus," Charlotte said. "But with few exceptions, most everything is quite bland."

Qualified praise came from Walker of Coronado:

"The only negative aspect of the ship is the dining room — I find it too noisy for me. On the other hand, the food is quite good."

This travel reporter's verdict:

Some sort of soundproofing would greatly benefit the 844-seat Crown Court, while more liberal use of spices would lift mere eating to refined dining — the latter a highlight of sea travel I have long appreciated aboard several of Princess' ships.

However, several other components of our "Love Boat" experience were heaped with nearly unanimous kudos.

Among these were the Italian officers under Capt. Nicola Di Steffano, a veteran skipper well known and respected by thousands of Americans and others who have sailed with him aboard the former Fairstar, the Fairsea and the Fairwind — ships that were under the Sitmar banner until that line's recent purchase by Princess.

ALSO EARNING HIGH marks were most of the spirited Italian and Portuguese dining and cabin stewards as well as the several Americans on the staff, notably Shane Stewart, the deputy cruise director, and Pam Massey and Judy Walters, who ran the very efficient shore excursions operation.

The two-level, 740-seat International Show Lounge impressed just about everybody aboard. Ditto for the elaborate production shows, for which Princess Cruises is deservedly acclaimed. They were staged in this nightclublike room several times a week.

Kipling's, a comfortable lounge with a glittering floor-to-ceiling mirrored bar, raised dancing area and ceiling fans, was very popular as a pre- and after-dinner social hub. In the late hours before and after the midnight buffet at the Cafe Cabana, the crowd was dancing at The Dome to live music.

Even later, the young and the energetic — and there were lots of both sets in our contingent — the hot spot was Jammers disco, thoughtfully located at the very bottom of the vessel a few steps from the large and very well-equipped beauty and fitness center.

OTHER NOTEWORTHY facilities included the 169-seat Princess Theatre, where first-run and classical films were shown three times daily; the Galleria, a two-level shopping arcade; and the Stage Door, a handsome but seldom-used midship lounge with a sunken dance floor and bar.

I also enjoyed Chianti, a champagne, wine and caviar bar; Flipper's, a swim-up bar in one of the two swimming pools on Lido Deck; and La Patisserie, across the way from the reception desk on Plaza Deck, where bar drinks, specialty coffees and fresh pastries were available throughout the day.

Other staples of quality cruise ships — a well-stocked library, a cozy card room and a fine medical center — were, of course, among the facilities.

Crown Princess still has a little way to go before reaching the point where it will completely please the casual and energetic young crowd for whom it was designed.

But it already has its fans.

IF YOU GO

Crown Princess, the newest "Love Boat" in the Princess fleet, will launched its inaugural season in the Caribbean Oct. 6 with two alternating weeklong itineraries.

Sailing round trip from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., the 1,596-passenger liner's Eastern Caribbean routing will take it to St. Thomas, in the U.S. Virgin Islands; San Juan, Puerto Rico; and Nassau in the Bahamas.

On its Western Caribbean itinerary, also round trip from Fort Lauderdale, the ship will call at Playa Del Carmen/Cozumel, Mexico; Grand Cayman in the Cayman Islands; Montego Bay, Jamaica; and Nassau.

Starting rates, which vary according to departure date, range from $1,145 to $1,425 per person, double occupancy, and include air transportation to and from Fort Lauderdale from most major cities in North America.

SUNDAY BUSINESS DIGEST

Haagen-Dazs

PARIS — Now that the Haagen-Dazs Co. has won over many American taste buds, it is taking on the land of napoleons, creme caramels and eclairs.

As part of a $50 million campaign to expand European sales, Haagen-Dazs, which is based in Teaneck, N.J., opened four slick shops in fashionable districts of Paris last summer and is now beginning large-scale distribution in French supermarkets.

Company officials say their European operation is going so well that the Paris shop at Place Victor Hugo is already the company's second-busiest in the world, behind one in Tokyo. Night and day, long lines of Parisians line up at the shop in the city's prestigious 16th arrondissement.

Gas blast

AUSTIN (AP) — The General Land Office says it has made more than $100 million for the Permanent School Fund by selling natural gas to state agencies.

The "in-kind" gas program also has saved state institutions more than $29.7 million in utility costs and provided $2.6 million in severance tax revenues since it was put into effect, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said.

"This has proven to be a win-win program for the school children of Texas and for a variety of state institutions which had been paying premium rates for natural gas service," he said Tuesday.

The Land Office oversees production of 18,000 oil and gas wells on state land.

In the in-kind gas program, it takes part of its royalty payments in natural gas. The Land Office then contracts with gas pipeline and distribution companies to deliver the gas to state institutions at rates lower than the regular ones.

Texas savings

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas residential electricity consumers are expected to save about $78 million in 1999 because of appliance standards that are being implemented, the Public Utility Commission reported.

Cup of Pepsi?

NEW YORK (AP) — After a year of test-marketing a high-caffeine soft drink, Pepsi-Cola Co. evidently woke up and smelled the coffee.

The No. 2 beverage maker behind Coca-Cola Co. says it has stopped testing its extra-kick Pepsi A.M., although Pepsi will continue to test a marketing strategy aimed at luring coffee drinkers to its regular cola in the morning.

Pepsi-Cola had begun testing Pepsi A.M. in August 1989 in Waterloo, Iowa, but decided to discontinue the beverage this past August, company spokeswoman Leigh Curtin said Monday.

"What we found from the test was we didn't need to reformulate our product for consumers to enjoy it in the morning," Curtin said.

Pepsi A.M. had about 25 percent more caffeine than regular Pepsi.

Workers' comp draws private firm

■ The state has revamped its workers' compensation system to help lower costs, and some private companies are forming their own systems.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The eyes of Texas employers will be turned on Austin Monday as the State Board of Insurance begins hearings on workers' compensation rates, which has become the hottest political issue in the state.

Such a big issue, in fact, that it took two month-long special sessions of the state legislature to pass a bill overhauling the system. After nearly 80 versions of the bill were considered, Senate Bill 1 was passed and the 321-page document signed by Gov. Bill Clements in December 1989.

The act established regional and field offices in Midland, which opened Friday at 4500 W. Illinois, Suite 315. The new field office has a staff of eight serving a 14-county area surrounding Midland and Odessa. The regional office has a staff of two, with a research specialist to be added later. Regional director Gene Gerber will supervise offices field offices in Midland/Odessa as well as Abilene, El Paso, Lubbock and offices to be opened next year in Amarillo, San Angelo and Del Rio.

Employers are concerned about workers' compensation because the cost of workers' comp has risen over 200 percent since 1985, scaring prospective businesses away from the state and making it too expensive for small businesses to provide coverage.

For employees, it's important because Texas is one of only two states that does not require workers' comp insurance. This, combined with rising costs, has left one of every three employees without coverage.

To combat this problem, one company has formed its own workers' compensation program to give employers a more cost-effective alternative to the state system or no system at all.

"We negotiated a plan of coverage with three insurance companies, all approved by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission, and we can reduce rates by 1/3 under our program," insists Tim Dillon, vice president and director of marketing for Dallas-based Advanced Staff Management Inc.

In response, Gene Gerber advised caution, saying "All I can advise is that companies considering such a proposal to take a good look at the policy and make sure they're getting what they think they're getting."

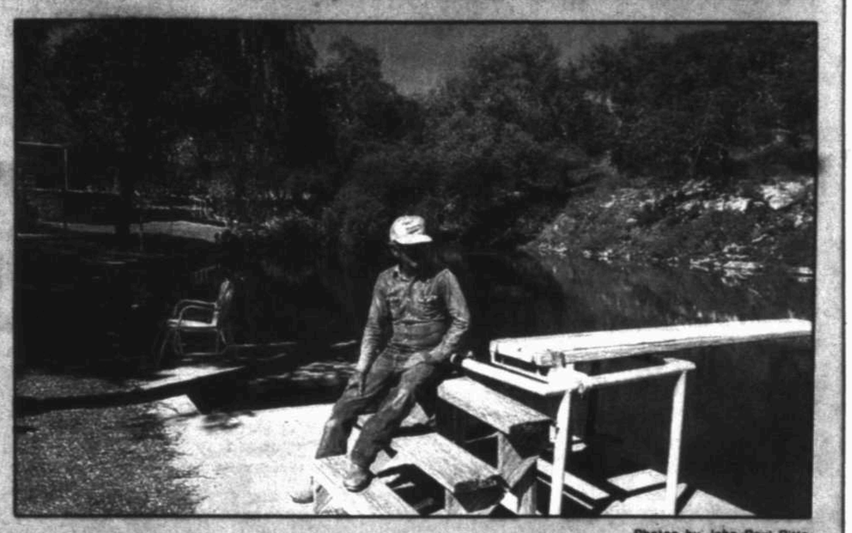

According to Dillon, the ASM program works this way:

ASM is an employee leasing company, so clients in effect lease their workers from ASM. ASM is responsible for all administrative, human resource and workers' compensation activities. After signing on with ASM, the client notifies the commission it rejects the act and then notifies employees that it is not subscribing to the state system.

Trans-Pecos ranchers worry about environmental push

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Ranching has always been a tough business in Terrell County. Dry, rocky and remote, it is a land fit mostly for goats and people who don't cotton to city lights. Bordering Mexico, the county boosts a population of only 1,500.

In the past drought and predators posed the main threat to the ranching business in the Trans Pecos, but now ranchers and landowners in the area face a new threat — the environmental-conservation movement. Ranchers in this part of Texas now fear the encroachment of bureaucrats more than that of mountain lions and coyotes.

If the oil business has been inundated with environmental concerns in recent months, the ranching industry has not been spared either.

The list of environmental issues facing ranchers and property owners in the area near the Big Bend is lengthy and includes wetlands, brush control, water conservation, water rights, endangered species of plants and animals, access across private land, trespassing and eminent domain for parks.

"Our business is facing a lot of problems. All we have ever wanted was to be on our land and be left alone, but they will not leave us alone," says Cy Banner, a Terrell County rancher whose family settled in the area in 1905.

Property owners like the Banners have a special fear of conservation groups, because they feel that they may have to fend off attempts by groups who want to create a national or state park in the area.

A ranch just down the canyon has already been purchased by a conservation group, and the Banners feel they may be next in line. "All they want is what they own and what adjoins them," said Banner.

The Banner family has reason for its "park fear" because they live in a canyon that would make an ideal location for a state or national park. The ranch house sits in a virtual oasis, thanks to a spring that flows thousands of gallons of crystal clear, warm water from the side of a nearby mountain.

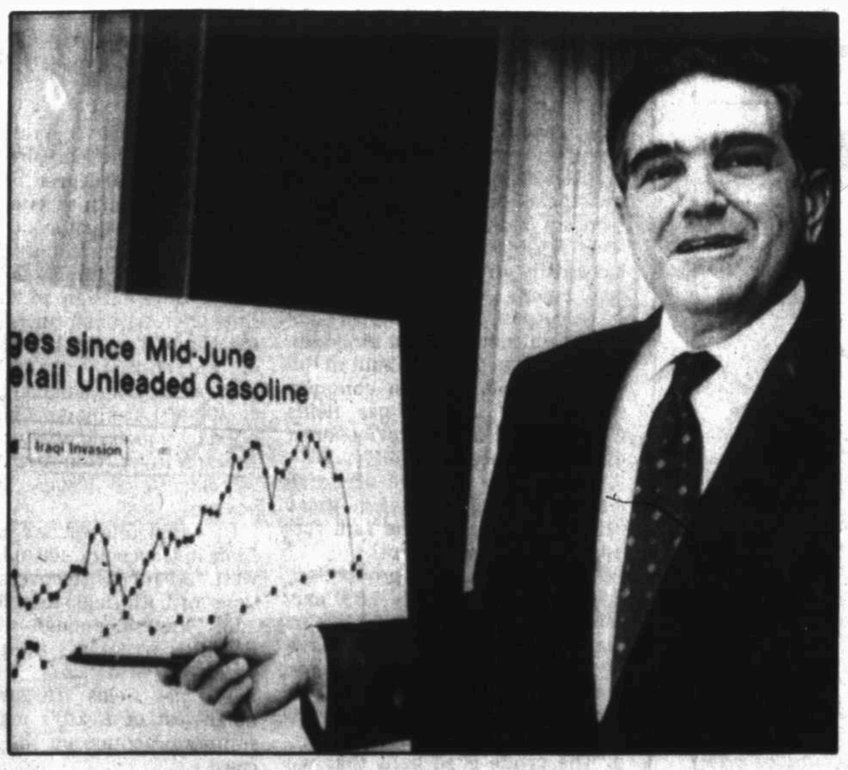

Not only does the spring feed a three-acre lake at the backdoor of the native rock house, it also nurtures a jungle-like setting of palm trees, elephant ear plants and banana trees that actually produce water.

"It's the 70 degree water," says William Cy "Chico" Banner. Chico, 27, is the only one of three Banner children who still live on the ranch. Maggie, 28, is married to the owner of a mercantile store in Sanderson and Jesse, 26, lives in San Antonio and has aspirations of going to New York.

Chico has his own house and canyon several miles on the other side of the ranch and says he doesn't miss the night life and socializing that appeal to most young single people.

Charles DiBona: Protector of oil's image

By Dirk Beveridge
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When world events send oil prices soaring, many consumers start thinking of giant oil companies as a bunch of villainous price-gougers.

It's probably impossible to make most of them think otherwise, but that doesn't stop Big Oil's chief spokesman from trying.

American Petroleum Institute President Charles J. DiBona even says that putting forth the industry's public relations defensive during the latest oil crisis has been easier than in earlier oil shocks. For one thing, the criticism has been milder.

"It's less intense for one reason: People aren't in lines," DiBona said in an interview as he prepared for yet another round of pitching the industry's views to New York financial writers. As the head of the leading oil trade group, the bespectacled 58-year-old DiBona has to do so before Congress, in news conferences and on television shows.

DiBona said oil's defense against the inevitable charges of price-gouging and profiteering was made easier by going on the offense.

When Iraq invaded Kuwait in early August, it didn't take a genius to figure out which way oil prices would be heading. API immediately geared up its public relations machinery to offer explanations for the higher prices.

About 1,600 reporters' phone calls poured in during the first week of the crisis. An estimated 5,000 media phone calls came in during the first three months.

"We made a major effort to get out early, present the facts early," DiBona said. "This was started on Aug. 2. On Aug. 9, I gave a presentation, with charts, to kind of spell out what was happening."

DiBona's latest charts show that wholesale gasoline prices have not risen as quickly as crude oil prices, which he calls evidence that no gouging is taking place. At one point during a media briefing, DiBona was asked why sharp drops in crude oil prices aren't followed by immediate falls in the price of gasoline at the pump, even though higher crude often leads to quick rises at the pump.

"That's a good question," the even-tempered DiBona replied.

He went on to explain that major oil companies can't control prices at the pump, so any gouging that might occur is happening only on a local level. He also said that as oil was rising, refiners and service stations realized they had to replace their stocks with more expensive petroleum, so they might raise the price, but when it goes down, companies are

■ RIG COUNTS MIXED. The Permian Basin rig count rose last week while bad weather caused a fall in the number of rigs working in the U.S.

The Basin tally rose six to 168 while the U.S. count fell 20 to 1,124.

Kerridge said some of the losses were offset by a "good increase in the offshore drilling rigs."

Besides Oklahoma, other major oil producing states reporting rig losses for the week include Pennsylvania, which dropped by eight; Wyoming, down by five;

Brazil trying to tap Amazonian oil

N.Y. Times News Service

URUCU, Brazil — A solitary, yellow-tipped drilling rig emerging from an endless horizon of green trees in Urucu is a sign that Brazil has finally struck oil in the Amazon region.

An outpost of heliports, prefabricated dormitories and air-conditioned offices has been built in the forest around the first commercially viable oil and gas fields found in the Amazon region since exploration began in 1917.

And at every step, Brazilian officials say they have taken great care not to damage the rain forests or the environment.

After two years of production, volume is small — only 5,000 barrels of oil a day. But hopes are so high that the jungle fields have become the largest destination for domestic investment by Brazil's state oil company, Petroleos Brasileiros SA, or Petrobras.

"The crude is so light that we could put it directly in the fuel tanks of the diesel trucks and jeeps," Arlindo Augusto Alves Filho, a company operations official, said as he perspired under the humid, 100-degree heat of in the camp, which is two degrees south of the equator.

By 1995, officials hope, Urucu oil wells will be pumping 20,000 barrels a day, enough to make the state of Amazonas, an area twice the size of Texas, self-sufficient in oil. Currently, the 10,000 barrel-a-day refinery in Manaus, the state capital of 1.3 million people, is supplied by tankers that churn up the Amazon River from Atlantic Coast oilfields — a 10-day, 1,000-mile voyage.

Of equal interest are huge gas finds in Urucu and 100 miles to the west, at Jurua. Recoverable volumes of both fields total 60 billion cubic meters, enough to supply Brazil's current gas needs for 20 years.

So, Petrobras planners are studying two ways of reaching local outlets: liquefying gas for shipping by tanker down the Solimoes River to Manaus and building a 400-mile gas line across the western Amazon region to supply Porto Velho.

In addition to making the Amazon region self-sufficient in gas, the reserves permit construction of gas-fired plants to generate electricity. Energy self-sufficiency has long been an elusive goal for Brazil, which has the largest Latin American economy.

In 1953, an American geologist reported the Amazon region lacked oil, and to prove him wrong, Brazil's government created a state monopoly by reserving oil exploration and production for Petrobras.

But almost four decades after the streets of Rio de Janeiro rang with the nationalist cry "O petroleo e nosso" — "The oil is ours" — Brazil produces only half the 1.3 million barrels a day that it needs. Drained of capital by politicians, the company postponed in the late 1980s a self-sufficiency program and cut its drilling rigs to 25 in 1989, from 79 in 1986.

Dallas firm prospers renting cars fast

By Linda Burke

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas car rental business doesn't use counters at the airport, rents only one kind of car and won't take cash.

What?

Yes, it's true, says Next Car Rental President Vicki Conard. The company, which opened Oct. 1 near Dallas Love Field, is using some unusual methods to make renting cars easier for its target market, the business traveler.

"Everybody's in a hurry these days. The whole world is in a hurry, and sometimes it's ridiculous the time people have to stand in line at a car rental counter to get the keys to their car," Mrs. Conard says.

So Mrs. Conard's husband, Jon, developed the concept, which simplifies the rental rates with one car model, the Mercury Sable, and puts the customer in the car as he arrives on the lot instead of into long waits for a set of keys at an airport counter.

Mrs. Conard, a former sales manager for an exclusive cosmetics distributor, and her entrepreneurial husband traveled frequently, she says, and learned firsthand many car rental horror stories.

"We could never understand why it was such a hassle to rent a car," Mrs. Conard says, citing several anecdotes of missing reservations, long lines and sales pitches to upgrade or buy insurance.

The idea for their own car rental business was born about a year and a half ago, she says, during what was an "opportune time because of what other businesses were or were not doing."

"The market is what it is," she says. "It will be a matter of cutting our market out of theirs (the competition's)."

And Next will have its work cut out for it in a market that hasn't experienced much growth in the past few years. Car rental analyst Charles Finnie with Alex Brown in Baltimore, Md., says growth will continue to stagnate in the industry in the coming year as the economy grinds to a halt.

"It's always a challenge to open a car rental agency because it is a very tough business," he said. "It's hard to be profitable because there are too many cars chasing too few people."

Friendly rivals Thrifty and Alamo car rental agencies have been supportive, Mrs. Conard says, by sending customers to Next when they run out of cars.

"They may lock out some customers who want a different kind of car, but generally, mid-size cars are what businesspeople are looking for when they rent a car," said Alamo sales manager Mark Lavigne.

Sables were chosen after several months of test-driving, Mrs. Conard says. With the single-car method, Next has cut out complex price structures and car classifications characteristic of the industry such as luxury and subcompact.

"We wanted to eliminate all those problems, and we decided the best way to do that was with one car," Mrs. Conard says. "This way, the customer always knows what he's going to get."

And he probably won't believe the price. Current introductory rates are $16 a day Thursdays through Sundays and $25 a day Mondays through noon Thursdays. You must be turning 25 or older to rent.

The business plans some aggressive expansion in the next six months into other Texas markets at Houston Hobby Airport, San Antonio and Austin, but the Love Field location will be its corporate headquarters.

DiBona's smooth presentation of Big Oil's line may also be explained by his stature as an old hand when it comes to fending off charges of gouging.

A Rhodes scholar and former Navy man, DiBona was a special consultant to President Richard M. Nixon and deputy director of the White House's Energy Policy Office in 1973.

DiBona joined Washington-based API in 1974 as executive vice president and chief operating officer. He became president and chief executive in 1979, just in time to steer the trade group through the oil shocks brought on by the Iranian Revolution.

DiBona sees one striking similarity in all oil crises: The emergence of a member of Congress as oil's No. 1 enemy. In DiBona's mind, it used to be Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, but he has been replaced by Sen. Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn.

Lieberman has held hearings into oil pricing and proposed a law against price-gouging during national emergencies. He even talks of bringing back the Windfall Profits Tax on domestic oil production, fighting words to those in the oil business.

"There's usually one leading demagogue," DiBona said. "That used to be Metzenbaum. Right now, it's Lieberman, a person who makes unfounded charges and who holds hearings and who makes the charges very early on during a period of crisis and then takes no trouble at all to give publicity to the information that comes up later to demonstrate those charges are unfounded."

Asked about DiBona's comment, Lieberman said: "I can't remember when I was last called a demagogue, if ever. Normally, I would take offense at it, but since I'm being called a demagogue by the leading spokesman of the oil industry, I take it as a compliment, a badge of honor."

DiBona, an economist, shows little patience for the industry's more vocal critics, whom he says generally come from the ranks of lawyers who have a dim understanding of economics.

"If they were all in Hungary or Poland, you would hold out no hope for their economies ever becoming efficient," DiBona said.

The oil companies claim they are unfairly attacked by politicians who complain loudly about price-gouging, then say nothing when subsequent investigations give the industry a clean bill of health.

Namedropping Policy

Namedropping is intended to inform readers of promotions, achievements, and changes among the professional business personnel and leaders of Midland.

New presidents, chairmen of the board, directors of major corporations or new officers of organizations are normally treated separately as free-standing stories.

Information for Sunday pages must be in the Business-Oil Department by the preceding Thursday at noon.

All information must be submitted in writing and include the name and telephone number of the person submitting it.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color portraits may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Austin publisher puts out fact guide

By Joyce Peterson

AUSTIN (AP) — Years ago an Indianapolis youngster began collecting World Almanacs and other reference books the way some boys collect baseball cards.

This week the youngster, grown into a successful Austin entrepreneur, plans to put his own name alongside such reference shelf institutions as Webster, Moody, Funk and Wagnall.

"Hoover's Handbook," the latest venture of Bookstop Inc., founder Gary Hoover, features singled-paged detailed profiles of more than 500 major corporations and other business enterprises, as varied as federal agencies and the American Red Cross.

While founding a business reference book may seem an unusual lifelong ambition, Hoover admits to an unusual passion for information, especially business facts.

At the age of 12, he convinced his parents to buy him a subscription to Fortune magazine to supplement his reference book collection. As a junior high student, he pestered his teachers for detailed information about General Motors, which, to his chagrin, they couldn't supply.

"Hoover's Handbook," he said, was born in much the same way as the Bookstop stores — it is a product he has always wanted and couldn't find.

"Somehow it has always turned out that the thing I need, other people need as well. I started the Bookstop because I wanted that kind of bookstore," he said. "The same with this book. I needed basic information."

Each company profile in the "Handbook" contains a statistical analysis of earnings, names of key officials, telephone and fax numbers, a capsule history of the firm or agency and other information.

It is not that such information is not available from other sources, Hoover said.

But at $19.95, the large-format paperback is far cheaper and more compact than standard investment information publications, which can cost hundreds of dollars per year.

He considers it an example of the democratization of information, a publication as affordable to the average job hunter or student as to libraries and Wall Street investment firms.

Hoover is also particularly proud of the history section of each profile.

"One of our big points is that businesses in general don't have a historical perspective," he said. As an example, he said, officials of some of the companies his researchers called didn't know their founders' names.

"You can't know where you're going if you don't know where you've been," he said.

The "Handbook" will be available in bookstores around the nation by the end of the week.

Hoover's company, the Reference Press, based in Austin, will publish an annual edition of the "Handbook" and has plans for other books, such as a directory to global businesses.

Hoover laughs when asked if the new publishing company is headed for the same future as Bookstop, a company that grew rapidly and stymied the competition in the years after its founding in 1981.

California feeling pinch of real estate woes

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — California has had more than its share of savings and loan fraud and mismanagement. But a robust real estate market has largely spared savings institutions here from the crippling losses suffered by their counterparts in depressed housing markets in Texas, Colorado, Arizona and the Northeast — at least until now.

No one is predicting a Texas-style collapse in California. But analysts and regulators are increasingly concerned with the potential effect of the recent sharp downturn in housing sales and prices on the state's savings and loans.

California is home to nine of the country's ten largest institutions and accounts for nearly a quarter of all savings and loan assets.

"Whatever the driving force is, the California housing market may be hitting the wall, and we find it serious and disconcerting," said Eric I. Hemel, a savings and loan analyst at the First Boston Corporation, in a recent research report.

Yet some admit to seeing an increase in missed mortgage payments as some sectors of the California economy slow and more homeowners lose jobs.

Almost all institutions have been forced to add to their reserves for loan losses to reflect the weakening markets.

The biggest fear among regulators and analysts is that as housing prices fall, the California economy will slip into recession.

In the most dire situation, further layoffs in faltering industries like aerospace and construction would leave many homeowners in the state unable to make their mortgage payments and collapsing home prices would leave them with no options but to sell at a loss or walk away from their house and let the lender foreclose.

Even if California's economy holds up, savings institutions will feel the impact of the real estate slowdown in the form of reduced demand for mortgages.

That would diminish opportunities for new profits at a time when most of the institutions need additional earnings to help build the higher capital levels and loan-loss reserves now required by federal regulators.

At the annual conference of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions in San Francisco this week, Timothy Ryan, the director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, said regulators had not yet seen signs of major trouble in the state.

But he added that regulators were meeting regularly with the managements of the major California savings institutions to monitor the situation.

Texan promotes recycled products

By Linda Burke

FORNEY, Texas (AP) — Businessman Jones Felvey wants people to stop thinking of recycled products as second-class citizens.

Felvey is president and founder of Corrugated Services, the only mill in Texas making corrugating medium — the wavy lining between the pieces of cardboard — used in the manufacture of boxes and grocery bags. And the medium his company makes doesn't come from virgin materials, but 100 percent from cardboard boxes others throw away with nary a thought.

"You haven't recycled a thing until you've used the finished product," he says. "And we have to make a recycled product that is just as good and costs no more."

The business began in 1966 manufacturing paper-printing plates (including rubber stamps) and in 1977 changed to its current product, corrugating medium. The factory moved to a 140,000-square-foot building in the Forney site east of Dallas in 1974.

Corrugating Services has been expanding rapidly since 1980, Felvey says, though the employee roster in the last five years has grown only to 106 from 97 workers. The company has expanded by automating and computerizing into a 24-hour-a-day, seven-day-a-week process.

The privately held company is benefiting from the recycling boom, with $20 million in sales expected this year, Felvey says, and the transformation of 60,000 tons of old corrugated boxes. He hopes that number will jump to 72,000 tons next year after completion of a 20,000-square-foot plant addition.

If the current sold-out demand for the plant's rolls of corrugating medium is to continue, Felvey says, manufacturers of cardboard boxes have to to sell their buyers on the recycled product.

"We've got to be the best because we are recycled, or they will throw rocks at us," he says. "The whole idea can be a lot of fun, but the challenge is to sell a product just as good."

A contest awarding $10,000, Felvey hopes, will be an incentive to get box manufacturers to sell the recycled wares.

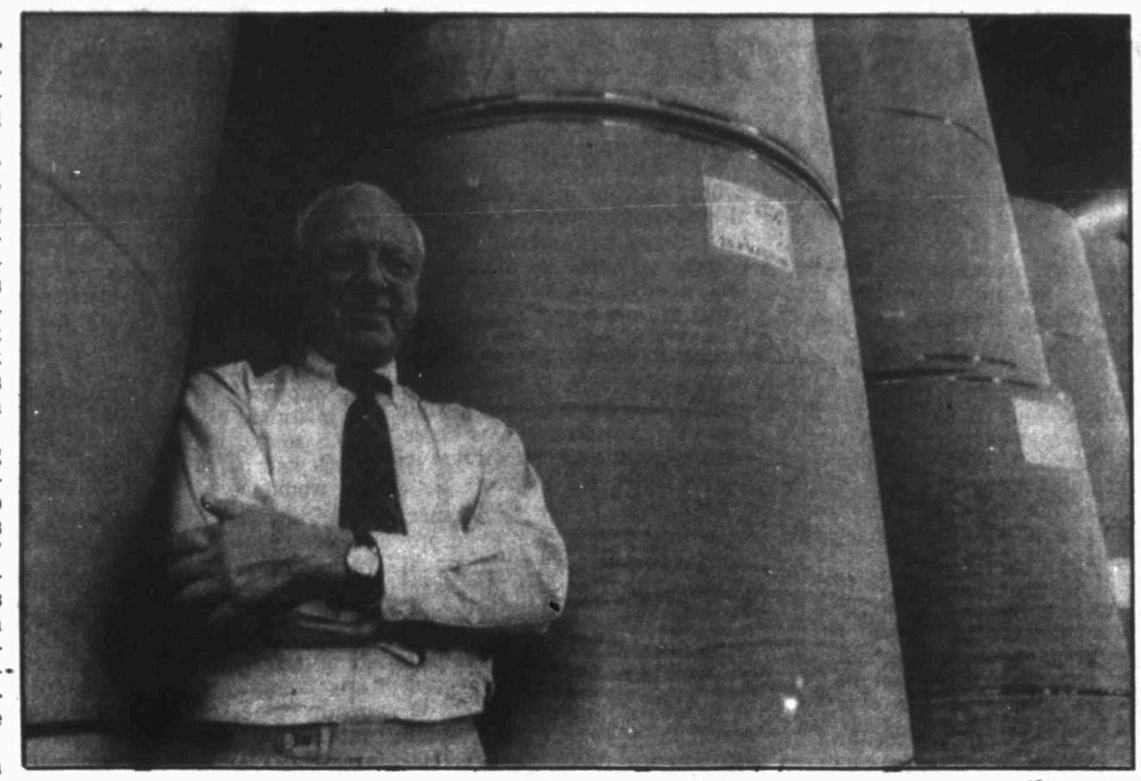

Corrugated Services also is a member of the Metroplex Corporate Recycling Council along with the likes of Coca-Cola Bottling Co., Mary Kay Cosmetics and Texas Instruments. The group wants to herald the benefits of using recycled products and preserving the environment.

The company, one of few in the country using 100 percent recycled raw materials to make the corrugating medium, provides independent box manufacturers in Texas and surrounding states with about 60 percent of the medium that they buy. The remainder is bought from the bigger, integrated paper mills such as Weyerhauser Paper Co., Inland Container and Western Kraft, he said.

Corrugated's edge, he says, is that the plant doesn't have to depend on the proximity of a forest for its supply of raw material.

"We are not as big as the International Paper companies, so we have to have a gimmick, and our gimmick is that our forest is wastepaper," Felvey says. "My raw materials are here and my market is here."

The recycling process begins when boxes and water are mixed in a large vat. A 370-foot-long machine — nicknamed Fightin' Lady — then filters, compresses, flattens and dries the material until it is rolled and ready. That process takes about 35 minutes, Felvey says, bragging that even the water used to soften the fibers is recycled.

Valley losing retirees

By Joel Williams

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — The Lower Rio Grande Valley's 10-year head start at drawing "winter Texans" is being threatened by other areas of the state which have turned up the heat in a $140 million competition.

Larger cities in South Texas, as well as more scenic areas to the west, apparently are succeeding in luring winter Texans away from the Valley, said Paul Taube, an economist at the University of Texas-Pan American.

The Valley has dominated the state's winter retiree trade for more than a decade as retirees from the Midwest, Canada, North Texas, Oklahoma and other areas with cold winters migrate to the subtropical southern tip of the state to escape the ice and snow.

But after years of steady growth, the number of retirees wintering in the Valley declined last year, according to the annual winter Texan survey by Vern Vincent and Gilberto de los Santos of UT-Pan American's School of Business Administration.

They found 79,000 wintering retirees in Cameron and Hidalgo counties at the peak of the 1989-90 season, down 2 percent from the 81,000 visiting at the peak of winter 1988-89. The season peaks in February.

"It's a lot more competitive than in the past," Vincent said.

He said promotional efforts by cities such as San Antonio and Corpus Christi, as well as the Big Bend area of West Texas have paid off at the Valley's expense.

Marge Johnson, administrative assistant at the Valley Chamber of Commerce in Weslaco, agreed that the Texas retiree industry is becoming increasingly competitive, but said the Valley was not in danger of losing much market share.

Ms. Johnson said the Valley's best source of winter business is word of mouth. Many retirees return because the concentration of recreational vehicle parks makes it easy for them to make friends and take part in activities designed for them, she said.

"We don't feel that there's any serious threat," she said. "A lot of people are coming in, about the normal amount that we see this time of year."

Taube, also with the UTPA School of Business Administration, said the Valley has relied too heavily on climate as its main attraction.

"The winter visitors are starting to look at some of those other locations because they have similar weather, but they also have more to offer," Taube said. "I think they are starting to get a little bored."

Taube said the Valley probably will not lose much business, but could see its growth rate flatten.

SCOTT BURNS

U.S. managers may lose out to Japanese

By Scott Burns

The Japanese may be poised to eat the lunch of yet another industry — U.S. money managers.

Scott Burns

That rather startling idea comes from George Russell, Jr.. Mr. Russell is chairman of the Frank Russell Company, the world's largest pension consulting organization. If the name sounds familiar it is because you've heard of the Russell stock indices and the Salomon-Russell International Index which compete for attention with traditional market gauges such as the Standard and Poors 500 index as performance benchmarks for the $2.5 trillion pension industry.

"The problem in the pension industry when I entered it in 1969," said Mr. Russell, "was that there was no performance information. The money was all run on an Old Boy Network basis. Now, if you are investing only in the United States, you are missing 70 percent of the market."

No, that figure isn't a misprint. While the value of U.S. companies accounted for 66 percent of total world capitalization as recently as 1970, the positions had nearly flipped by 1989 — Non-U.S. markets accounted for a staggering 70 percent of world capitalization.

Mr. Russell believes that just as American manufacturers were asleep at the switch when they assessed foreign competition 20 years ago, American money managers are asleep at the switch today. Here are some of the figures he uses to support his argument:

No Japanese firms were managing money globally 10 years ago. Today there are 8 purely Japanese firms managing money on a global basis. In addition, another 11 firms are in joint ventures with U.S. firms to do global money management. With only 160 Japanese money management firms, 11 percent manage money globally.

There are 15,000 registered investment managers in the United States. But only 60 of them manage money globally, less than 1 percent.

Now less than 3 percent of all U.S. pension assets are invested internationally. In effect, U.S. pensions are massively "underweighted" in non U.S. assets. If they were weighted to reflect a global wealth index, the 3 percent figure would shift to 70 percent, a cataclysmic change.

If pension sponsors shifted to only 10 percent in international investments, billions would be up for grabs and most American money managers would not be prepared. They could lose over $140 billion in pension assets, Mr. Russell says.

What does this mean for American money managers?

"You either become proactive... or you give up the assets," he says.

In fact, Mr. Russell makes a compelling case for more international investment. One reason non-U.S. assets now account for 70 percent of world capitalization is that non-U.S. assets have consistently offered higher returns than U.S. assets over the last 10 years. Still more interesting is the fact that an American money manager can increase his total return while reducing the instability of his return by having a portfolio that includes foreign investments.

At the end of 1989, for instance, a portfolio of U.S. stocks had provided a 10 year compound annual return of 17.41 percent. The standard deviation for that return, a measure of risk and instability, was 16.6 percent. If the same pension had been 70 percent invested in U.S. stocks and 30 percent invested in non-US stocks, it would have offered a 10 year compound return of 19.38 percent — almost 2 percent higher — with a standard deviation of 15.79 percent — nearly a percent lower.

The same applies in each of the 10 year periods from 1979 to 1989. What this means, quite simply, is that pension managers (or individuals) can have higher returns AND less risk simply by diversifying their investments to include non-U.S. investments.

The difference here is not minor. Suppose, for instance, you had invested $10,000 in 1980 in an all U.S. stock portfolio. By the end of 1989 your portfolio, at 17.41 percent, would have grown to $49,780.

Does this mean that a portfolio of domestic stocks is grossly out of synch with global investing? Yes and no. While the return figures cannot be ignored, some money managers would argue that virtually all large U.S. companies and many technology companies are already "global investments" because they are manufacturing and marketing on a global basis.

Citicorp to close realty units

N.Y. Times News Service

Following through with its previously announced plans to reduce expenses and cut back its real estate lending, Citicorp is closing nine of the 16 commercial real estate lending offices it has in the United States, a spokesman for the banking company said Wednesday.

The number of jobs lost in the move was not disclosed. Citicorp officials have said they plan to cut more than 2,000 jobs, mostly in the corporate and commercial real estate lending activities in the global banking group, which handles corporate finance in North America, Japan and Europe.

"The type of real estate lending we do is overbuilt," the spokesman said. "A lot of business has stopped."

NAMEDROPPING

Castle

Midlander STEPHEN N. CASTLE has been elected international president of the Council of Petroleum Accountants' Societies (COPAS) for 1991. He is also serving a three-year term on their board of directors.

Castle is a director of and secretary/treasurer of Hanley Petroleum Inc. and is a director of Lexington Management Group Inc., New York.

JAY S. TWEED of Midland has been named assistant vice president of the corporate bank at NCNB Texas.

Ref-Chem Corp. has announced two promotions in its Permian Basin division.

BEN H. NICHOLS is now vice president, construction for the Permian Basin division, responsible for all construction activities. He formerly served as construction manager.

E. RAY BYNUM was promoted to vice president of human resources from manager of human resources. He will be responsible for all human resources services in the Permian Basin divison.

Study finds pay cuts raise worker thefts

NEW YORK (AP) — Workers may well respond to pay cuts by stealing company property, eroding at least part of the cost savings their bosses sought, a new study says.

Employee thefts more than doubled at a manufacturing plant when a 15 percent pay cut was imposed, and fell back to normal when full wages were restored, the study found.

An identical pay cut at a comparable plant caused less of an increase in pilfering because management explained its reasons fully and sensitively, researcher Jerald Greenberg said.

"You can make people less likely to hurt the company by ... explaining to them in a socially sensitive manner, and a highly informative manner, why it was necessary for them to suffer this inequity," said Greenberg, a professor of management and human resources at Ohio State University.

The study focused on nonunion factory workers, largely semiskilled and unskilled. It would take further research to know if its conclusions apply to other kinds of employees, but "there's good theoretical reason to believe that it probably would," Greenberg said.

Another expert in worker psychology said he was skeptical about its applicability to white collar workers, skilled blue collar workers and professionals. They might just find jobs elsewhere instead of stealing, said Kenneth De Meuse of the University of Wisconsin in Eau Claire.

Greenberg presents the results of his study in the October issue of the Journal of Applied Psychology. He said it is not clear whether the extra pilfering is aimed at making up for lost income or getting revenge.

COMP: State, private workers' comp systems offer legal protection

(From 1G)

ASM's system includes research into the causes of accidents, Dillon said, noting that one of the most important provisions of the plan is its safety program.

"When an individual gets hurt on the job, we research to see how the accident occurred so we can implement a safety program and prevent its reccurence."

He said the plan also tries to crack down on negligent or fraudulent claims, describing claims made on accidents caused by drug or alcohol abuse as fraudulent. ASM does post-accident drug tests.

"The state workers' comp has a provision where an accident's not covered if the employee was under the influence. But there's no safeguard to prevent that claim from being paid," he noted.

Responded Gerber: "Under Workers' Comp, it's not a question of negligence. If someone gets hurt in the scope of their employment, we don't find fault. We pay the benefits and get the individual needed medical care."

Both the state system and ASM's policy provide for medical cost control. The state system incorporates methods used by group health plans, and has removed incentives to provide unnecessary medical care to increase benefits.

ASM operates on a case-by-case basis and does follow-up visits with injured employees, making sure they get the most efficient care possible. "We monitor medical costs, and we make sure we know who the medical providers are in our network. This keeps health care costs down, and helps us ensure our employee gets the best care," Dillon said.

Both plans also try to cut litigation costs. The newly revamped state system provides for prompt hearings, more clarity on the right to benefits and agency oversight of insurance companies.

Dillon says part of his company's package includes its legal and courtroom experience. By leasing the employees, the client transfers all risk to ASM and is shielded if an injured employee sues.

Gerber pointed out that the state system precludes employees from suing the company, and that not subscribing or taking another policy strips the employer of some of its common defense.

Dillon estimates that a client can save as much as 33 to 50 percent on operating costs and gives the example of one of the first clients to use the company's workers' comp plan. Instead of paying $30,000 into the workers' comp system — 25 percent of the estimated premium — the company saved $150,000 the first year. A second client saved $10,000 a month under ASM's plan, though the company had a credit modifier with the state system. ASM currently has 50 clients using the workers' comp plan, ranging from companies employing two to companies employing 300.

Asked why the company created the plan when so much effort had gone into reworking the state system, Dillon replied "There's still a lot of problems with the act."

He added that "Already the state board has filed for rate increases of 30 percent for 1991. And we feel there will more likely be an 18 percent increase in rates charged for workers' comp. They talk about a cutback in rates, but that's not happened. We have a $1 billion deficit in the system, and under the new act benefits have been increased. Insurance premiums have jumped 10 percent because benefits have been boosted."

For his part, Joe Gagen, former chairman of the Texas Industrial Accident Board (now the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission), said that he believes the changes in the system will produce a less expensive system, and that the commission estimates reduced litigation and effective medical cost control alone will save over $225 million in 1991.

"I know the difficult job the Board has in trying to balance the often conflicting interests. I am confident that when the Board fully considers all the provisions of Senate Bill 1, there will be a significant reduction in the rates Texas employers pay. That ultimately means more productive workers, reduced costs of goods and services, and less demand on our state and local tax base."

RANCH: Is an oasis

(From 1G)

"I have been to town (San Angelo) and I didn't like it," said Chico, a graduate of Angelo State University. "I don't like a lot of people."

The nearest store is 44 miles away at Sheffield and the nearest school 20 miles further down the road at Iraan. Says Sandy Banner: "It's an idyllic and remote life, but that's the way we like it." Although an income from oil and gas royalty would permit the family to travel if they desired, they have never taken a vacation, except to take the children to Six Flags when they were young.

The only radio reception in the area is from radio stations in northern Mexico, and telephones didn't come to the area until 1965, but the Banners say they never get bored, because "there is always something to do."

They don't abide trespassers, but they're not anti-social. "We have company all the time. When the kids were all at home, we had wall to wall sleeping bags nearly every weekend," said Sandy Banner. She says she came to visit friends at a nearby El Paso Natural Gas plant on the ranch about 30 years ago, met the rancher, got married and never left.

Said Cy Banner: "There is a move under foot that would classify our stock tanks as wetlands and put them under the jurisdiction of the Army Corp. of Engineers and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service."

"It is getting so bad with water rights that we may one day have to put meters on our windmills," said Banner.

About endangered species he notes: "We are told that if we do brush control work without permits we may even lose our mohair allotment. Supposedly there is a bird that lives around here called the Black Capped Vireo. I have lived here all my life, and I have never seen it." Actually it may not live in the area at all, but environmentalists have defined the low brush of the area as being habitat suitable for the seldom-seen bird.

The Banners are not alone in their frustrations. They belong to several organizations, such as the West Texas Chapter of the Texas Sheep & Goat Raisers Auxiliary, the Davis Mountain Trans-Pecos Heritage Association and Riverside and Landowners Coalition Inc. who now spend most of their time dealing, not with predator control, but with threats from environmental groups.

A statement in the newsletter of the West Texas goat raisers chapter sums it up: "We seem to be the center of all the attacks by the environmental groups of late, and we will continue to be an easy target if we don't get involved."

Ben Love (no relation to banker Ben Love of Houston) heads the Davis Mountain Trans-Pecos Heritage Association, which has led many of the battles to protect Trans-Pecos rancher rights, agrees.

"The Trans-Pecos is a better target for government land use regulation because we are so sparsely settled. We offer 10 times more available space for recreation than any other part of the state."

Love says federal agencies are using wetland and endangered species as a pretext for expanding their control over the use of private land. "I would say we have been hit even harder than the oil industry, but I think endangered species will be the next hurdle for the oil industry to overcome. They have already made statements about sunflowers in Pecos County being endangered by oil and gas activity."

ODESSA — Invitations, programs, political cartoons, Freedom Medals from the Valley Forge Foundation and commemorative decanters are among the items that greet visitors to Odessa's Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee St.

These range from the expected — photographs of the presidents, Goldie Dishong miniature dolls featuring the first ladies' inaugural gowns — to the unexpected — a brick from the original White House — to the downright bizarre — John Quincy Adams' alligator.

"We also have a library with several thousands books on the office of the presidency, which makes it a true resource center," said Bobbye Durrett. "The permanent exhibits show the campaigns which took these 41 men to the president's office.

"We have a numbered copy of Lincoln's hand which were cast on Sunday after his nomination. Everybody knows he was a big man — he was 6 foot 4 — but until you see his hands and put yours up next to them, you don't realize how enormous he was."

Currently the exhibits include an anniversary one celebrating 25 years of operation for the museum and its volunteers. Some, like Mrs. Durrett and her husband, R.E. Durrett Jr., first became involved with the museum when it opened in 1963.

"We are unique in that we are the only museum in the entire nation that is dedicated to the office of the president rather than to a specific chief executive," she said.

"The reason for the museum was the assassination of President Kennedy," Mrs. Durrett said. "Bill Holm and Louis Morton, who was with Odessa College at that time, and Dorothy Croft wanted to have some memorial for Kennedy that would be different. And they were joined by John Ben Shepperd, Basil Wilkerson, Camden Chancellor and Walter Mindel. They were called the committee of the seven, and some people later on have called them "The Magnificent Seven" — referring to the movie. Dorothy Croft and Cam Chancellor are the only original founders still alive of the seven."

These Odessans proposed a presidential room and received permission from the county to use the basement of the county library, Mrs. Durrett said.

"They spent 1964 raising money and gathering volunteers. It officially opened February 1965, and they had, at that time, almost 50,000 items from all over the country."

In 1969, the name was changed from Presidential Room to Presidential Museum because the museum had outgrown its space. In 1980, the museum inherited the entire building.

"The library received notice they were going to move, and the museum received notice that we could take over the whole building," Mrs. Durrett said. The building opened in 1984.

This month, in honor of 25 years of operation, an anniversary dinner is planned for 7 p.m. Nov. 27 at Odessa Country Club. The dinner theme will be "A Conversation

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

MOSC to fund 'Harmony'

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale will use grant money awarded to them by the Arts Assembly of Midland to fund in part a pilot program called "Harmony." This is a community integration effort designed to reach individuals who might not otherwise have the opportunity to hear classical music.

The "Harmony" program will offer tickets each year for classical, chamber and choral concerts to culturally and economically disadvantaged citizens in the Midland-Odessa area. The Arts assembly of Midland grant will fund tickets to be distributed at Casa de Amigos, Mental Health and Mental Retardation (MHMR), the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC), the Midland Senior Center and others.

It is hoped that this new program will stimulate an interest in music and familiarize diverse members of the community with the many types of music offered by the Symphony.

For further information about participating in the "Harmony Program," contact the Symphony office at 563-5269.

In Focus exhibit at OC

In Focus, A Photographic Society members exhibit entitled "Photography in Options - Options in Photography" located in the Options Gallery in the Odessa College library (LRC) will run through December 14. LRC hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, and 2-5 p.m. Sunday.

This exhibit seeks to push some of the traditional boundaries of photography, both in presentation, subject matter and technique. Works by 12 photographers encompass three dimensional works including a photographic shrine and a photographic books, photo collage, and palladium, Van Dyke Brown, black and white silver and color prints. Subject matter is wide ranging including portraiture, landscape and nonrepresenational.

In Focus seeks to unify serious photographers and to give a greater understanding and appreciation to the art of photography through exhibitions, lectures and community involvement. For information about participation in or collaboration with In Focus, call Michael Banschbach at 688-5536.

Crafts festival set

The first annual Tall City Arts and Crafts Festival will be held today in the Midland Convention Center. Featuring over 100 exhibitors from throughout Texas, New Mexico and Colorado, the festival will be open from 1-6 p.m. and no admission will be charged.

Items to be included in the inaugural festival include original art and limited edition prints, woodwork and soft sculpture, unfinished and finished furniture. There will also be Christmas decorations, dolls, quilts, pillows, vests, wall hangings, clothing, purses, china painting and jewelry. Exhibitors will be offering ceramics, floral arrangements, punch art, stained and leaded glass, potpourri, hardwood replicas of antique cars, gift baskets, photographs, clay sculpture, tree spirits and wood carvings.

Severed head fascinates actor

By Robert M. Andrews

WASHINGTON (AP) — It isn't the heavy breathing over Salome's dance of the seven veils that bothers opera singer Michael Devlin. It's being upstaged night after night by his own disembodied head.

"It's very strange, it's very strange indeed," says Devlin, who plays John the Baptist in the Washington Opera production of Richard Strauss' "Salome," and loses his head over a pretty woman.

The head, of course, is fake. But a strikingly realistic fake. It lolls on Salome's silver platter, eyes rolled back, blood oozing from beneath its long, matted hair, with a latex face that looks exactly like Devlin's.

The head was made from a life mask of Devlin, a baritone from Seattle, for the original Peter Hall production of "Salome" at the Los Angeles Music Center in 1986.

The head was bald when it arrived in Washington, so wigmaker Dennis Bergevin spent 40 hours hand-stitching and stapling a three-foot mane of human hair and cotton dreadlocks to the skull. The wig cost about $1,000.

Before each performance, a plastic bladder inside the skull is filled with a $37 quart of Nextel Brand Simulated Blood, a urethane-based suspension of red microbeads. It is unplugged shortly before the head is presented to Salome.

As soon as the curtain falls, makeup specialist Cynthia Ludwig and the stagehand rush the bloody head to a janitor's sink and wash it clean with cold water. Then it is carried downstairs in an elevator and put under a hair dryer for two or three hours.

Shortly before its next stage appearance, the face gets a fresh layer of greenish white pancake makeup with dark shadows here and there, bright red lipstick on the mouth and a coating of glycerine to make it look sweaty.

For much of the 90-minute opera, John the Baptist or Jokanaan (the prophet's Hebrew name) sits in a dark cistern where Herod has imprisoned him. He shouts dire warnings to the sinners above and emerges briefly to scorn seductive Salome's advances.

AP Laserphoto

Dennis Bergevin applies makeup to the stage prop of John the Baptist's head. The head is designed to look like that of opera singer Michael Devlin, who portrays John the Baptist in Washington Opera's production of "Salome."

"I'm sitting down there on a chair, singing into a microphone and watching (conductor) Gerry Schwarz on a little television set," says Devlin. "And two feet to the right is my head, lying in a bucket of blood. It's quite disconcerting."

Jokanaan doesn't get the girl, and who can blame her? After all, he denounces her as a "daughter of Sodom" and refuses even to look at her. So she strikes her bargain with Herod: she dances her veils away to total nudity before the leering king, and she wins Jokanaan's head on a platter.

After the executioner's ax falls in the dungeon, Devlin sneaks to the wings to watch soprano Maria Ewing, who plays Salome, make steamy love to his head. She cuddles it, nibbles it, showers it with kisses. "I will bite it with my teeth as one bites a ripe fruit," she sings.

Jokanaan might be forgiven for asking himself, "Did I say something wrong?"

Devlin has appeared a dozen times or more in this production of "Salome" in the past four years, but says he's still fascinated by his severed head.

After the ax falls, he said, "I always stand offstage and watch the rest of the show. It's never lost its power, seeing the executioner lift my head out of the cistern. It's my face. It's a chilling sight."

Carl Reiner's successes surpassed by his son Rob

NEW YORK (AP) — Carl Reiner was in an especially jovial mood the other day during one leg of a daunting, nationwide promotion tour for his new film, "Sibling Rivalry," that would have tired a man half his age.

Reiner

But Reiner, tall, trim and as busy as ever at 68, still looks a lot like his most well-known character, Alan Brady, the arrogant, variety show host on the old "Dick Van Dyke Show."

His good humor was evident despite decidedly mixed reviews about the movie, his latest film in a career that spans 40 years and includes such TV and movie comedy classics as "Your Show of Shows" "Where's Poppa," "All of Me" and "The Jerk." Reiner directed "Sibling Rivalry."

The critics have not been not especially kind to the comedy, which stars Kirstie Alley and involves a man who died during sex with her and the various cases of mistaken identity that occur as a result.

The title refers to three sets of siblings in the film and how they interact and compete with each other. Familial rivalry is a familiar subject to Reiner. Both with his own brother, who he credits with pushing him into show business, and his famous son, Rob.

"The prospect of a new Reiner comedy is a lip-smacking one. Rob Reiner, that is. Not papa Carl, whose best comedies were made years ago," wrote the New York Post film critic in panning "Sibling Rivalry."

Carl Reiner does not dispute those sentiments.

"Rob had the toughest time of all my kids," he said. "He wanted to be in show business and he had a father who was going on all cylinders. He was in competition with me and he was impatient. Then he ended up outrunning Dad."

Reiner also said that his son "outstripped me as far as acting, too. Whenever they'd see us on the street, they'd start yelling, 'hey Meathead!' One time, somebody called him Meatloaf and I yelled back, 'no, it's Meathead!' "

According to Carl Reiner, family members have always been competitive with each other — but they've also remained loyal.

Reiner's brother, Charlie, who owns a printing business in Atlanta, was always the "funnier one" when they were growing up in the Bronx, the sons of a watchmaker.

"But Charlie suffered because I was the more quiet, studious one and my mother would always say, 'why can't you be more like your brother, Carl?' We still talk about it."

But it was his brother who urged him to enroll in drama school and become an actor. And his brother still religiously tapes all Reiner's appearances on TV and saves all news clippings about him. "Everytime I'm on Carson, he still tapes it," said Reiner.

Reiner's other two children are daughter, Annie, a playwright and artist, and Lucas, who directed the film, "Spirit of '76."

"My other kids have had a problem with it," said Reiner of both his success and Rob's. "Annie was showing some of her work recently and the first people who greeted her at the door said 'aren't you Carl Reiner's daughter?' She's trying to have to her own identity. You want to make it on your own."

Estelle Reiner played the woman in the deli in Rob Reiner's film, "When Harry Met Sally ...," who said, "I'll have whatever she's having," in the memorable scene in which Meg Ryan faked an orgasm.

The Reiner family has a history of inserting relatives and other autobiographical details into their work. Carl Reiner's most celebrated comedy, "The Dick Van Dyke Show," was set in New Rochelle, N.Y., where he lived with his wife after their marriage. And Van Dyke character was, of course, named Rob, after you know who.

MUSEUM: First ladies part of celebration

with the six former first ladies, and then they make comments to each other," Mrs. Durrett said. "And, I hope it will be entertaining."

This isn't the first script Mrs. Durrett has written.

"I used to do children's theater plays," Mrs. Durrett said. "Art Cole (Midland Community Theatre's founding director) did four or five of mine when he was there at Midland."

Mrs. Durrett's children's theater material "has been produced all over the country." Her play "Johnny Appleseed" won a national award in the 1960s. Another of her children's plays was an updated version of "Sleeping Beauty."

"It takes the idea that every fairy tale has a programmer or director from the storybook world, and this one gets things mixed up, and she keeps putting the wrong characters in the wrong stories."

The program for the anniversary dinner celebration includes a cover designed by Odessa artist Delores Peterson, a history of the museum written by Kenneth Yeilding, a list of donors and board members and facts about all the first ladies again written by Mrs. Durrett. Currently, the University of Texas Press is considering a book Mrs. Durrett has written about Miriam "Ma" Ferguson, elected governor of Texas Nov. 9, 1924.

When Mrs. Durrett quit teaching in 1986, she "got hooked on the museum again" and now serves on the board. In addition to her script writing contribution, she played a major role in creating the current anniversary exhibit.

"We were temporarily without a director, and our curator, Dennis Lumpee, was acting director," said Mrs. Durrett. "We're very pleased to have him. He worked at Fort Concho for a number of years.

"There was just too much for one person to do," she said. "And I had been working with the collection and really knew a good deal about it, so I started pulling things."

The staff shortage was solved Thursday when Odessan Robert Reese became the director.

"He has a background in artistic exhibit and design and has a business background and computer knowledge, and, of course, is a local citizen, which we were trying to promote."

Mrs. Durrett will still likely find herself haunting the halls of the Presidential Museum more than most.

"I have written 14 murder mysteries, and I'm in the process of trying to get them published. Some of them take place in the museum. They center around a pair of characters — a very wealthy West Texas blonde who falls in love with the district attorney in this fictitious West Texas town with the Museum of the Presidents rather than a presidential museum."

Neil Young back with his band

Latest album may be his best, musician says

By John Horn

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Neil Young had just seen the movie "Spinal Tap" for the first time. And his life took on new meaning.

"That's my life. My life is 'Spinal Tap,'" said Young, reaching for the morning's first cup of coffee.

The 1984 mock documentary follows hapless rockers on tour, their future imperiled by a rift with the band's co-founder. Young, who turned 45 on Nov. 12, doesn't struggle like those low-rent musicians. He was, though, estranged, saying a few years ago he never would play again with longtime companions Crazy Horse.

But now Young has recorded an album with the legendary bar band.

Awestruck critics say "Ragged Glory" resurrects Young's spontaneous, hard-driving rock 'n' roll. That freewheeling sound was shelved at times in favor of Young's acoustic ballads and country rock on solo albums and collaborations with Mynah Birds, Buffalo Springfield and Crosby, Stills and Nash.

Young said the time was right to reunite with Crazy Horse. Any bad blood between him and the band is forgotten.

"Crazy Horse is a band that I'm a part of," said Young, wearing his standard uniform: jeans, T-shirt, tennis shoes, Ray Bans and stubble. "I lead the band, yeah. But I'm just a member. It's like returning to your roots. It brings me back to where I started."

Two of Young's most popular and acclaimed albums — 1975's "Tonight's the Night" and 1979's "Rust Never Sleeps" — were recorded with Crazy Horse. Their first effort together was 1969's "Everybody Knows This Is Nowhere." Their last was 1986's "Life."

Crazy Horse's own new album is titled "Left for Dead" in part, the band members say, because Young and others in the business abandoned them. In "Ragged Glory," Young is joined by Crazy Horse's guitarist Frank Sampedro, bassist Billy Talbot and drummer Ralph Molina.

"It may be the best one I've ever done with them," Young said. "It's even. And that's a little peculiar. There's not one song that really stands out."

Last year, Young released what some considered the best album of 1989 and perhaps of his career: "Freedom." Young, who's hardly given to flowery self-promotion, believes "Ragged Glory" is superior.

"I was amazed at the success of 'Freedom,' not because I didn't think it was good, but I was surprised that its shortcomings were not mentioned more often," Young said.

And what were these shortcomings? "Well, 'Ragged Glory' has what 'Freedom' doesn't have," he said. "'Freedom' was OK to listen to; it's got all the soft songs. But in this album, we'll lose all the people who like the soft songs."

Indeed, only one track on "Ragged Glory" — "Days That Used to Be" — could be considered contemplative both lyrically and musically.

Filled with longing reminiscences of the '60s — "Psychedelic music fills the air, Peace and love live there still" — the melancholy song says that personal dreams are threatened by "possessions and concessions."

"I usually shy away from this kind of song," Young said a few days before setting off on another trip on his sailboat. "I was in the middle of the ocean on my boat, halfway between here and there, and had been there for about 10 days. No airplanes. No other boats. No noise. But I did see a couple of humpback whales. The song came to me."

The band doesn't rehearse, arranges on the spot and avoids rerecording takes to cover glitches or raw edges. The album stands like a piece of unfinished furniture.

"It doesn't matter how you get it as long as it sounds good in the end," said bassist Talbot. "People make music, not the instruments. It's just us hanging out together."

On a whim, the band recorded the R&B classic "Farmer John" for the album, even though Young was the only one who knew how to play it. That carefree approach carries over to Young's songwriting, too.

"I don't sit down and say I'll play a G or something. It's mindless. It's the other way around from what most people think. It comes to you and you grab it and then find out what it is."

Young was born in Toronto and received a ukulele as a Christmas gift at age 13. He joined the Squires in 1963, and met Stephen Stills soon thereafter; he teamed with Stills in Buffalo Springfield and Crosby, Stills Nash & Young.

Throughout his career, he has been irreverent. His 1988 song, "This Note's for You," a critique of commercialism in the music business, yielded a controversial and award-winning video.

"I'm the lost character in this place because I don't know where I fit," Young said. "The record company is building an image, grooming you. I have no idea what that's all about. Where do I fit with this?"

Cole Porter's music resurrected

20 of Porter's hits will be updated on CD to benefit AIDS research

By David Bauder

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The songs of Cole Porter have come alive again for a cause the composer couldn't have imagined before his death in 1964.

"Red, Hot and Blue," a benefit album for AIDS research and relief, matches such artists as U2, Sinead O'Connor, Fine Young Cannibals, Neneh Cherry and the Neville Brothers to songs made popular in the 1930s and '40s.

The 20-song CD is a daydream come true for New York City art critic John Carlin and his friends at the New York city law firm that manages the late songwriter's trust fund.

"It struck me that the Cole Porter songs were a wonderful way to make a contemporary record that would appeal to all sorts of people and deliver a message," said Carlin, who wanted to do something for friends dying of AIDS.

"Everyone loves Cole Porter," he said. "No one's covered his songs for 20 or 30 years. In the back of my mind I always wondered what it would be like for David Byrne to sing a Cole Porter song, or Tom Waits."

IN THOSE cases, it sounds a lot like how Byrne and Waits sing their own songs. But other results will surprise fans of both Porter and contemporary music — like the Jungle Brothers' rap on "I Get a Kick Out of You" and the torch song stylings of country star k.d. lang and dance-pop singer Jody Watley.

"The songs worked better than we dreamed," Carlin said. "What was a simple love ballad, when played in this context, took on a different meaning."

Porter's career stretched from the '20s through the '50s. His songs were a staple on Broadway and in movies, and he was known for his humorous, often boundary-breaking, treatments of love and sex.

AIDS, of course, wasn't a worry when Porter was around. On a few of the new versions of Porter's songs, particularly Cherry's blunt rap to "I've Got You Under My Skin," the disease is addressed.

It was the initial participation of Cherry and Byrne that really got the project going because it helped convince other artists to join in, Carlin said. Carlin and two entertainment lawyers who work at the law firm that manages the Porter trust fund, F. Richard Pappas and Leigh Blake, put it together.

The album veers recklessly from style to style. There's the campy rock duet of Deborah Harry and Iggy Pop on "Well, Did You Evah," the cool soul of Fine Young Cannibals' "Love for Sale," the African language version of "Begin the Beguine" by Salif Keita and the rollicking Irish duet by Kirsty MacColl and the Pogues on "Miss Otis Regrets."

DESPITE THE album's variety, Carlin concedes there's something missing. The album has no Latin influences and not enough black voices, an important omission considering the impact of AIDS in those communities.

And there are no heavy metal artists.

Carlin said the lack of hard rock artists was largely by design — he didn't feel the genre was appropriate to Porter's songs. It's also because, he said, that community is without a doubt the most homophobic in the music business.

Last year, the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York City dropped the band Guns 'N Roses from an AIDS benefit concert after organization volunteers noted the lyrics to one of their songs, "One in a Million," contained the lyrics: "Immigrants and faggots, they make no sense to me."

Several artists asked to participate refused because of the stigma attached to AIDS and homosexuality, Carlin said.

"There were a few big artists," he said. "I don't want to give the names of people who didn't do it for the wrong reasons. I'm surprised at how many artists we did get."

THE ONLY artist Carlin will reveal who turned down a request to participate was Prince, but it had nothing to do with homophobia. Carlin said he wanted him to record a version of "Let's Misbehave," but Prince was too busy on his "Graffiti Bridge" movie and soundtrack.

When organizers approached an artist to ask for involvement, they suggested a tune from the Porter songbook. Most took the advice. Some artists, including MacColl and Watley, had their own ideas for songs.

"We wanted the album to be very modern and very youth-oriented," Carlin said. "We wanted a club sound, not an Ella Fitzgerald sound."

Watley, known for her dance music, remembered a Fitzgerald recording she listened to as a child to use as a model for her version of "After You, Who." She said she relished the chance to sing a jazz tune, something she can't do on her own records.

"After recording this song I've been asked by virtually everyone who heard it, 'Are you going to do an album like this?'" Watley said. "Even my mom asked me that."

An expert on Porter's work said he's excited about the project and predicted that Porter would have been, too.

"THE MAN was insatiable in his curiosity and he traveled all over the world to listen to all kinds of performances of his music," said Robert Kimball, who's written and edited several books on Porter's music. "He was genuinely open to all different interpretations. My feeling is he would have reacted very enthusiastically to it."

A 90-minute TV special featuring videos of artists performing their Porter songs is scheduled to air on ABC-TV at 11:30 p.m. on Dec. 1. A videocassette is expected to be released next year.

The lawyers have formed a nonprofit corporation called King Cole, Inc. that will funnel profits from "Red, Hot and Blue" to AIDS organizations all over the world. A committee of representatives from the project, including musicians and filmmakers, will recommend which charities receive the money.

Pompeii exhibit at Houston museum

Staff Report

Rediscovering Pompeii, a fascinating exhibition of almost 200 recently excavated frescoes, sculptures, jewelry, games, and everyday household objects — most of which have never been on public view — opened Nov. 11 at the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston. The exhibition will remain on view through January 27, 1991.

The Italian city of Pompeii was destroyed by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius in A.D. 79. Most of the city's 20,000 citizens were killed by the eruption. The town was also besieged by poisonous gas, tidal waves, and earthquakes. Over a three-day period, the volcano buried the prosperous commercial center under 15 feet of debris.

Pompeii remained silent and untouched for nearly 2,000 years until it was accidentally discovered in the mid-eighteenth century. Since then it has been continually explored for what it can reveal about ancient life in the first century.

One of the most poignant objects in the exhibit is the "Lady from Oplontis," the cast of the body of a young women discovered, along with other victims of the Vesuvius eruption, in a town near Pompeii. She was found with the bracelet she was wearing at the time of her death, along with her purse containing coins, rings, and gems (which have been replaced with copies.)

Sculptures in the exhibition include a bronze statuette of the wine god Bacchus, a reminder of the importance of this cult in classical antiquity. The marble relief with theater masks from the House of the Gilded Amorinin reflects the popularity of theater in Pompeian culture and is typical of the decoration often found in a first-century home.

Other artifacts in the exhibition that shed light on the complexity and foundations of early Roman life include an olive mill, made of volcanic stone and used by slaves or donkeys who turned the wheels to crush the olives into a paste; a wooden money holder, divided into two compartments and containing oxidized and encrusted coins; a charming food warmer, with handles in the form of human hands, found in a made-to-measure niche under the stairs of a Pompeian home; and a bronze hydraulic valve that was part of Pompeii's sophisticated plumbing system.

The Museum of Fine Arts, Houston is located at 1001 Bissonnet between Montrose and Main. Museum hours are Tuesdays-Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Thursday evening 5-9 p.m.; and Sundays 12:15 to 6 p.m. The museum is closed Mondays.

Tickets for Rediscovering Pompeii are $4 for adults and $1 for children 3-12 years and can be obtained through Rainbow Ticketmaster outlets, 1-800-749-9494. For more information call 1-713-639-7375.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — A self-made fight song expert says the U.S. Navy's "Anchor's Aweigh" is only the fifth most inspiring song of its kind, but Navy officials say they're glad of one thing: They beat Army.

Bill Studwell, a librarian at Northern Illinois University, spent more than a month listening to recorded songs and watching football games to compile his list of the 13 most inspiring fight songs in the country.

The winners, chosen from a pool of 30 to 40 songs, were graded on music quality, lyrics and overall tone. Notre Dame's came in first.

The librarian ranked "Anchors Aweigh" fifth — even though he describes himself as an avid Navy fan and an uncle of an academy graduate. Alas, he said, the school's fight song was not so inspiring as others.

"'Anchors Aweigh' is not as great as others at killing the opposition," he said. "It has almost a waltz beat to it, like a destroyer going up and down the ocean."

Naval Academy officials said they were happy the song ranked so high, but they were even happier that the Army's fight song didn't make the list at all.

Topping the list was Notre Dame's "Cheer, Cheer for Old Notre Dame" followed by the University of Michigan's "The Victors," the University of Wisconsin's "On Wisconsin" and Yale University's "Down the Field."

The University of Maine's "Stein Song" tied with "Anchors Aweigh" for fifth place.

Other songs ranked were:

7. University of Southern California's "Fight On, USC."
8. Georgia Tech's "Ramblin' Wreck From Georgia Tech."
9. University of Texas' "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You."
10. Ohio State University's "Across the Field."
11. University of Illinois' "The Pride of Illini."
12. Indiana University's "Indiana, Our Indiana."
13. University of Oklahoma's "Boomer Sooner."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your ability to read other people's motives will serve you well. Your excellent job performance will impress higher-ups, putting you in line for a raise or promotion. Increased responsibility means you must learn to delegate more authority. Acquiring new technical skills next March will build your self-confidence.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You would be smart to hang loose today. Concentrate on cheering up people who feel restricted in some way. Playing games with a loved one is not advisable. Explain your intentions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Excitement is in the air today! Romance blossoms in a surprising way. Public entertainment sets the scene for a helpful introduction. Your popularity is on the rise. Plan a small party.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are right to refuse to let your relatives interfere in what is essentially your business. Your tendency to be secretive has probably worried them. Discuss your overall strategy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Sharing your specialized knowledge today will win you important points. There is a good chance your career prospects will improve following a pleasant social encounter.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you feel confused about the direction your life is taking, it might be wise to talk things over with your parents. A child may complain of neglect. Do whatever you can.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your private life shows a surprising development! Loved one may be trying to get you to set a wedding date. Back off if you have any doubts. Take advantage of a support group.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Having a positive attitude will attract people to you. Try to strike a better balance between your career and your personal relationships. Intelligent tradeoffs will reduce domestic tension.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may find yourself waiting for something that will never happen. Get out of the house and take a long walk. A telephone call will bring good news tonight. Plan a vacation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A day trip could give you a much-needed change of scenery. Get in touch with friends you have not seen for some time. A longtime partnership moves onto more solid ground.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could fall under the spell of a dynamic individual. Your emotions are certain to be tested. Be careful. Tie up some loose ends that have been dangling for too long.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can take some of the guesswork out of a domestic crisis by reacting quickly to changes. It pays to be flexible. Dress to impress when attending social functions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Analyze your work and health habits; both could stand some improvement. Set your sights high. A lasting romantic alliance must be based on more than just physical attraction.

Trump Coup Tommy happened to be traveling in Europe during the time of the World Bridge Olympiad in Geneva, Switzerland, so he thought he might as well drop in for a few sessions of the side game. As our readers are aware, Tommy was a rather ordinary player who had the amazing knack of playing like a master when trumps broke badly, but undistinguishedly at other times. Although he was no match for the internationalists, he earned bragging rights on this hand for his fellow members back at the club.

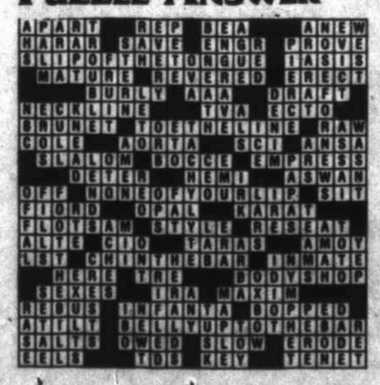

Tommy sat South and soon found himself in a four-spade contract. North's one-club opening bid had kept a vulnerable West out of the bidding. The defenders started with three rounds of hearts, and West shifted to the king of clubs. Tommy took the ace, and had he routinely tried the ace and king of spades next, the contract would have been defeated—East would have had to score a trump trick.

In this type of situation, though, Tommy never made a mistake. First he ruffed a club, then came the king of spades from hand and a spade to the ace. Had both defenders followed, Tommy would have returned to hand with a diamond to draw the last trump and claim the game. But when West discarded a club on the second spade, Tommy's careful preparation paid a huge dividend.

A club was ruffed in the closed hand, followed by three rounds of diamonds, ending in dummy. East was now down to J 7 in trumps, and Tommy was poised to strike with Q 9. When a minor-suit card was led from the table, East was couped out of a trump trick, and Tommy's mystique remained intact.

Award nominations sought

Staff Report

Nominations are being accepted until December 31 for the Texas Historical Commission's (THC) 1990 T.R. Fehrenbach Book Award. Up to three cash prizes of $1,000 each will be awarded.

Anyone interested in Texas history may submit a nomination, which will be judged by a panel of distinguished Texas scholars. Winners will be recognized during the commission's annual preservation conference in the spring of 1991. Eligible books must have been published between Jan. 1, 1990 and Dec. 31, 1990.

The book award was established in the 1960s and has grown into one of the most prestigious writing competitions in the state. It is named in honor of T.R. Fehrenbach, author, historian, and current chairman of the THC. Fehrenbach, the author of 18 books, including Lone Star, is considered one of Texas' leading authorities on Texas history. The award is cosponsored by Dow Chemical Co.

"Texas has a rich and fascinating history, and it's important to recognize and reward excellence in writing," said Curtis Tunnell, executive director of the THC, in a news release.

For more information about the T.R. Fehrenbach Book Award or to request official guidelines and nomination form, contact the THC, Publications Dept., P.O. Box 12276, Austin 78711, 1-512-463-6100.

John Updike's 'Rabbit' will finally be at rest

By Hillel Italie

Updike

Enough was enough. The author wanted to finish this book and forget about Harry "Rabbit" Angstrom. This "ordinary" man from Brewer, Pa., a speedy basketball star in high school who lags painfully behind the adult world, had haunted Updike for 30 years.

The books were increasingly difficult to write, burdened with telling new readers about old events and providing new events for old readers. After four novels it was time to leave Rabbit behind.

"As I was writing it I was fully aware not only of trying to make some sense to readers who hadn't read the others, but of trying to round out the series," said Updike, 58.

"There comes a time when you've used up your life, if your life is allowed to run its natural course. He's reached it a little earlier than many of us, and a little earlier then I hope to myself. He's had enough of the world."

The Rabbit books began in 1960 with "Rabbit, Run." Harry — nicknamed "Rabbit" but increasingly known as just Harry — is in his late 20s and going downhill. He's stuck in a dead-end town, out of shape, bored with his job, bored with his marriage. While his wife is pregnant, Rabbit runs away.

"The last quarter of a basketball game used to carry him into this world," Updike writes in "Rabbit, Run," as Harry takes to the road and drives south.

The 1960s confuse Harry, the '70s depress him and the '80s finish him off. He returns for three more books, published 10 years apart, his marriage to Janice Springer surviving while his relationship with his son, Nelson, deteriorating.

In "Rabbit Redux" (1971), the astronauts are walking on the moon and Harry is crawling on Earth. When Janice leaves for another man, Harry shacks up with his son, a teen-age runaway called Jill and a radical named Skeeter.

"My earliest sociological thought about myself had been that I was fortunate to be a boy and an American," Updike wrote in his essay "On Not Being a Dove."

Harry is no longer so lucky. The clean-cut kid from Brewer West High is suddenly in a world of drugs, Vietnam and "The Life and Times of Frederick Douglass." Rabbit, the man with all the inside moves, is on the outside in his own home, on the run.

"Harry, to some extent, belongs to the status quo, doesn't he?," Updike said. "He's a white male, which had been the good thing to be in this country. Not only were women saying men were brutes, kids were saying it. The whole country seems to be run by brutes."

"Rabbit Is Rich" (1981), for which Updike won the Pulitzer Prize, finds the Angstroms selling cars to a nation running out of gas. Janice's father has died, leaving behind a thriving business, but Harry is as unsettled as ever. He lusts for the wife of one of his country club friends and fights with Nelson, who marries and becomes a father.

What does the gruff, uptight Harry have in common with the polished, cerebral Updike? They're hardly soul mates, but Updike admits he envies Harry (still Rabbit in the author's eyes). He likes the idea of a life without book reviews and tape recorders. There's a purity to Rabbit, a simplicity, his thinking as old-fashioned and easy to understand as a two-handed set shot in basketball.

"To create a basketball hero and try to get inside his head was a sort of wish-fulfillment," Updike recalled. "I was self-conscious, shy, not good enough. But I went to a lot of basketball games because my father was a teacher and one of his duties was to go to the games and sell tickets. I watched a lot of basketball and felt envy, admiration."

They share other qualities, nervous energy and difficulties speaking. Both are stutterers: Updike literally, Harry spiritually, a man whose tongue is tied by a limited education and feelings of guilt about his family.

"Rabbit at Rest" (Knopf, $21.95) is a book of goodbyes. Retirees in Florida. President Reagan in Washington. In baseball, there's Philadelphia star Mike Schmidt's sudden, but graceful retirement in the middle of the 1989 season and Pete Rose's banishment, for gambling, a few months later.

Harry must leave as well. Now suffering from heart problems, he finally goes too far, committing an infidelity too great for himself or his family to endure. With Janice demanding an explanation, Harry again feels trapped, out of space, in need of escaping.

Updike sets Rabbit free, back on the highway, as alone with his thoughts as the author hunched over his typewriter, moving with the precision and single-mindedness of fingers tapping the keys.
