Budget plan would close some agencies

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White says he will offer the Legislature next Monday a "precision" budget plan that includes the recommended elimination of some state agencies.

In the first of a series of meetings with major state agencies, White told top Parks and Wildlife Department officials early Monday to prepare nearly $30 million in spending reductions from their $55 million, fiscal 1987 budget.

"They initially sent over $2 million in cuts, and that's inadequate," White told reporters Monday afternoon at an informal press conference in the parlor of the Governors Mansion. "That was not going to get the job done. We're going to have to get a lot tougher in making the decisions about cutting of their budget as well as other budgets."

Rep. Ed Kuempel, R-Seguin, House budget chairman for environmental affairs, said a $30 million cut for the Parks and Wildlife Department would force the closing of 20 to 25 state parks and the elimination of 200 to 250 state employees.

Some agencies, such as the Foundation School Program and the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation, likely will be spared under the governor's plans. Others, which White would not name, will be abolished.

White has cancelled most of his daytime campaign stops for the week to meet with the agency boards and executive directors. He said he will use those meetings to prepare a plan that the Legislature, meeting in a special session begining Aug. 6, can use to address the state's $3.5 billion deficit.

"I intend to let them know with precision the direction we wish them to take," White said of a meeting he will have with legislative budget writers two days before the special session starts. "Our mission is to make the necessary cuts to balance that budget with the least damage to services delivered."

The governor would not comment on the opinion of some state leaders, including Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, that cutting enough to balance the budget would decimate those services. Hobby and many senators have called for a tax increase to accompany moderate budget reductions.

"I'm not here to discuss any kind of revenue package until we have completed our cuts," he said. "We have to cut the budget."

In related news, White said he is considering the request of Hobby, Lewis and state banking officials to include interstate banking on the special session agenda. "I don't want to put Texas banks on the auction block," the governor said. "I want to make certain that we're going to have a strong banking system."

As of late Monday afternoon, lawmakers had pre-filed seven pieces of legislation for consideration during the session. They include:

— Two constitutional amendments that would prohibit the institution of a state personal income tax.

— A constitutional amendment that would allow a state run lottery.

— An amendment that would give so-called "initiative-and-referendum" power to the people. That provision would permit Texans to bypass the Legislature and bring proposed laws directly to voters in annual referenda.

Transcript reveals pilot's 'moment of awareness' of blast

By PAUL RECER
AP Aerospace Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Challenger's astronauts apparently survived the force of the blast that destroyed the space shuttle and some lived long enough to breathe almost five minutes of air from emergency packs, NASA officials say.

When the craft exploded, pilot Michael J. Smith uttered, "Uh-oh!" providing "the first potential indication of awareness" of disaster among the seven astronauts who died in the Jan. 28 tragedy, NASA said Monday.

It was the last utterance recorded on the spacecraft intercom system, said Dr. Joseph Kerwin, an astronaut-physician who investigated the crew's cause of death.

Kerwin said that despite a probable decompression of the cabin at 65,000 feet, the crew could have had 6 to 15 seconds of "useful consciousness" in the 12-mile fall toward the Atlantic Ocean.

He said the crew cabin smashed into the water at 207 mph, and that the destruction was so severe that the cause of death "cannot be positively determined."

An analysis of gauges on two of the emergency air packs, including Smith's, showed that three-fourths to seven-eighths of the five minutes of air had been expended "through normal breathing," said Kerwin.

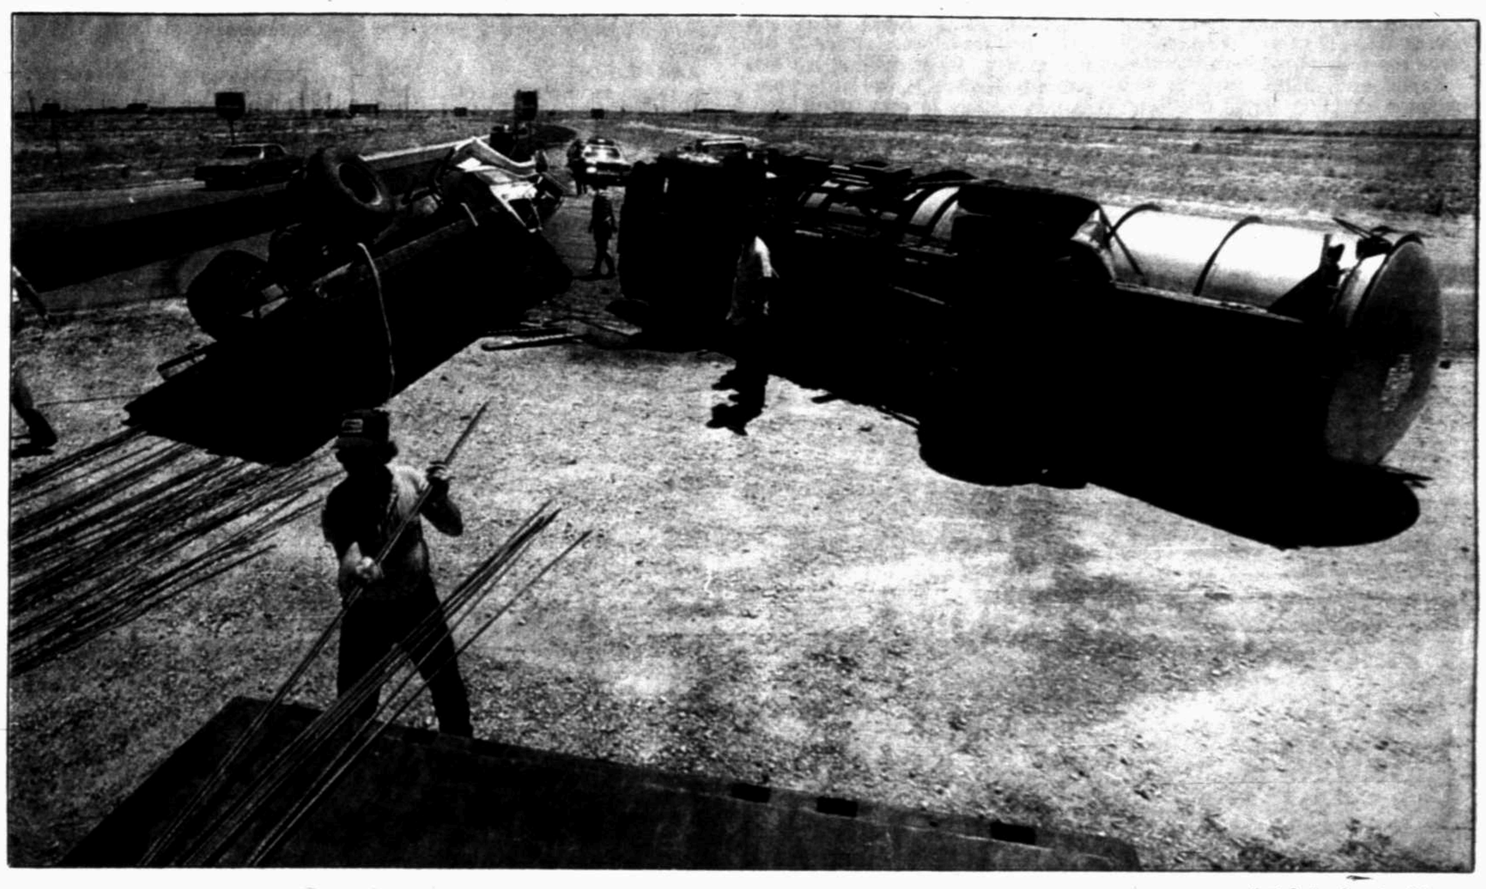

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration released a transcript Monday of the recorded intercom talk on the flight deck during Challenger's launch. Smith's single utterance came at 73 seconds after liftoff, the moment the spacecraft came apart.

The tapes were recovered from wreckage on the ocean floor, and NASA and IBM engineers spent months analyzing the recorded data.

NASA associate administrator Richard Truly said at a Washington news conference Monday that until last week it was believed that the crew had not sensed the disaster.

Smith's remark, said Truly, could indicate "there was a moment of awareness," although he did not know postively what triggered the remark.

Budget proposal includes salary cuts, repair policy

Departmental requests reflect Midland's economic condition

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

What a difference a year makes.

Last year — when the economy was better — departments in the city's general fund requested a $3.6 million budget increase from the year before.

Included in that proposal were merit raises for employees, cost-of-living pay hikes and a request for 17 new employees.

Departments also asked for a variety of office equipment and some specialty items such as a night-vision spotting scope and televisions for the city jail.

Not this year.

Faced with a sagging economy, city chiefs requested departments to ask only for what was absolutely necessary — meaning few capital outlays and no fringe items.

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

For the past few months, City Hall brass has hammered away behind closed doors trying to devise a strategy to keep city services at a quality level and still operate on a shoestring budget.

They say their efforts have been a success.

"About the only thing the citizens might notice is it may take a little longer to repair a street light or that we will repair (equipment) instead of replace," said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe.

Overall, the city has proposed an 8 percent cut from this year's budget — a savings of some $5 million.

The official proposal was delivered to City Secretary Bill Clanton's office last week.

CITY BUDGET

	1985-1986 Actual	1986-1987 Proposal	Change
Revenues	$60,482,584	$57,894,812	- $2,587,772
Expenditures	$61,899,498	$57,022,347	- $4,877,151

The final round of City Council budget hearings will be Aug. 26.

Although the majority of the trimming was due to salary reductions for city employees, the proposal includes cost-saving measures of a piecemeal nature.

Emphasizing there will be no noticeable reduction in city services, Poe said the city will be more prone to patching up water lines, streets and other problem areas.

Also, the city will lessen its work on items such as keeping traffic stripes freshly painted on streets.

Other changes proposed are:

— saving $74,000 by putting plans on hold to develop some city parks.

— leaving the assistant city manager post (the No. 3 man-in-charge) open when City Manager Jim Brown retires in January.

— buying fewer new city vehicles.

— saving overtime in serving Municipal Court warrants by re-allocation of some employees.

— transferring to private developers some of the costs in testing streets.

The idea is to try and get through this year, and then hope more funding is available in the 1987-88 budget for capital improvements.

"This is strictly a maintenance budget," said Poe, a 26-year City Hall veteran. "We will maintain status quo and any (capital) improvements will not be done."

An example of the proposed budget is a $30,000 savings in traffic paint.

OPEC ministers resume production cut talks

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC ministers opened a second day of discussions today on a production cutback proposal aimed at boosting the sagging price of oil on world markets.

With Iran and Iraq, the two warring Persian Gulf neighbors, also in disagreement at the Geneva talks, chances for unanimous agreement among the 13 member nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries appeared slim.

The ministers opened their fourth meeting this year on Monday by presenting their governments' responses to a proposal endorsed by the majority of OPEC nations at the previous conference in June.

Asked if the ministers had made progress on reaching an agreement, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani replied, "Not yet."

At the June conference in Brioni, Yugoslavia, the majority of ministers agreed to a proposed aggregate average production ceiling for 1986 of 17.6 million barrels a day. Cutting production is believed the only means of restoring higher prices.

The proposal calls for lower national production quotas, and some governments have rejected the quotas allocated by the plan.

"The problem is not the ceiling, the problem is how to divide that ceiling," said United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba, whose government has been demanding a higher quota.

Asked if he was optimistic about an accord, Rilwanu Lukman, the OPEC president and Nigeria's oil minister, told reporters, "I am not dancing with joy exactly."

Snatchers taking checks from outgoing mail

From Staff Reports

Mail snatchers are preying on Midland's north and northwest neighborhoods searching for cash and checks in outgoing mail, say postal service officials.

Midland's central post office has received about eight calls since Friday about the mail thefts, said Stan Sartain, manager of customer services.

"We've had an occasional incident, but not anything that's epidemic. This appears to be becoming a widespread thing.

"I think with the economy and a lot of people out of work, that people who were honest before are reaching a point of desperation and are looking at any way to get money," Sartain said.

The thieves use account numbers off the checks to attempt to get into accounts, Sartain said.

Sheila Gillespie of 4003 North Godfrey was one of the victims.

Mrs. Gillespie said she put a utility bill payment out Friday in her post box near the sidewalk and an hour later saw the box open with the flag up. The carrier came a couple of hours later to pick up the mail, she said.

Money wasn't taken out of her account, but Mrs. Gillespie said she will now take her mail to a postal collection box.

Until the thieves are caught, the postal service is advising mailers to take letters to a collection box or hand them to their carrier, Sartain said.

The service is also asking residents to watch for mail snatchers and take down license numbers.

"People can be watching and if they see somebody they can give us a good lead," Sartain said.

'Emotionally fragile' Jenco to meet with pope

WIESBADEN, West Germany (AP) — The Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, said to be "emotionally fragile" after nearly 19 months of captivity in Lebanon, flies to Rome today for a meeting with Pope John Paul II, officials and relatives said.

U.S. Air Force spokesman James Mangum said the freed hostage and 10 relatives who were reunited with him on Monday would leave the U.S. Air Force hospital in Wiesbaden at 3:15 p.m. (9:15 a.m. EDT) to travel to the Rhein-Main Air Base outside Frankfurt for the flight to Rome.

After meeting with the pope on Wednesday, the Roman Catholic priest plans to fly to London to talk with the Rev. Robert Runcie, the Archbishop of Canterbury, said Andrew Mihelich, Jenco's nephew.

Runcie's envoy, Terry Waite, made numerous trips to Lebanon in an attempt to secure the release of Jenco and other Americans held hostage there.

State Department spokesman Mike Austrian told a news conference in Wiesbaden that Jenco is scheduled to return to the United States on a flight bound for Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, D.C. on Friday.

Austrian said of Jenco, "While emotionally fragile and extremely fatigued from his long ordeal, he is well enough to travel for the next few days."

He said initial tests at the hospital in Wiesbaden showed the 51-year-old clergyman, who was released by his Shiite Moslem captors Saturday, was in "stable condition physically" but said he would be accompanied by a physician during the trip.

"The doctor is going with him to make him and his family more comfortable. It seemed simply prudent," Austrian said.

Austrian also commented on President Reagan's seven-minute telephone call to the former hostage.

At least 25 killed as mortar-laden car hits Beirut market

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A car laden with explosives and mortar shells blew up in a bustling market in Moslem west Beirut today, and police said the blast killed at least 25 people and wounded 170.

The blast came one day after a white Mercedes-Benz sedan packed with a quarter-ton of TNT exploded in the city's Christian sector, fueling fears of renewed eye-for-an-eye attacks between Christians and Moslems in Beirut.

No one has claimed responsibility for this week's attacks.

Thirty-two people died and 140 were injured in the Monday blast.

Today's car bomb went off at 11 a.m. beneath a bridge jammed with vegetable carts, taxicabs and pedestrians in the Moslem district of Barbir. The car was parked 20 yards from a hospital.

Bodies were hurled into the air as the gray Volkswagen Golf exploded, police and witnesses said.

Police said several mortar shells were attached to the explosive charge, estimated at 165 pounds, which multiplied the power of the blast.

Police said at least 25 people were killed and 170 wounded in the attack.

Syrian and Lebanese troops as well as Shiite Moslem Amal militiamen cordoned off the blast scene, firing submachine-gun volleys into the air to clear a path for ambulances and fire engines.

The explosion devastated 20 shops in the ground floor of a 13-story business center. More than 30 cars were wrecked and set ablaze, and glass shards from shattered windows littered the streets in a 200-yard radius.

Kamal and Zoheir Sayyed, who owned a clothing shop at the scene, said they were in the basement of their store when the blast occurred.

"My father was tending to customers upstairs. Suddenly this deafening blast blew me and my brother off our chairs," Zoheir said.

"Then I struggled up and raced up the stairs. My father was lying bleeding at the corner of the shop. We took him to hospital," said Zoheir, his white shirt stained by his father's blood.

A 20-year-old wounded customer in the shop, Ismail Fardous, blood dripping from his neck, searched around the shop for his missing father.

"My father had just left the shop when the explosion happened. I bounced in the air from the force of the blast. There was plenty of smoke around me and I felt as if I was being electrocuted," Fardous said. "I still can't find my father."

Moslem-controlled hospitals as well as the sprawling medical center of the American University of Beirut issued appeals for urgent blood donations to cope with the influx of casualties.

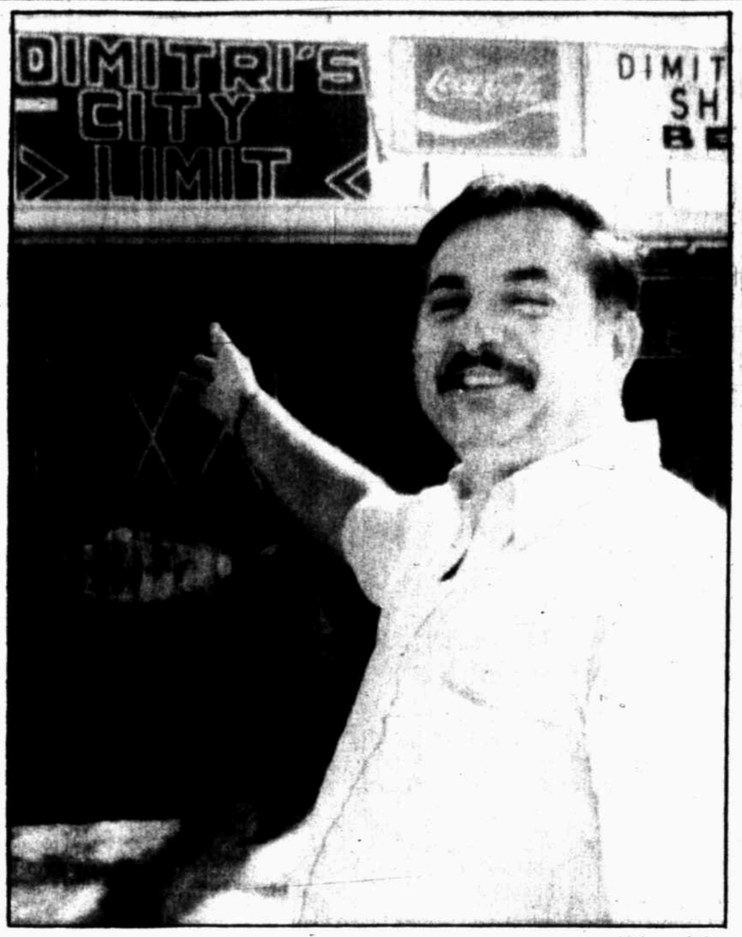

The Lebanese army command ordered all crossings between Christian east Beirut and the Moslem west closed following the explosion.

The car bombing came as Lebanon's Christian community mourned the victims of Monday's attack, which occurred in east Beirut's densly populated residential neighborhood of Ein Rummaneh.

The main residential and commercial districts of Beirut's Christian sector staged a one-day strike to protest the explosion that wrecked dozens of apartment buildings in Ein Rummaneh.

Schools, shops, banks, cafes and other businesses were closed in Ein Rummaneh, Furn el-Shubbak and Ashrafiyeh districts, the largest population centers in east Beirut.

Each neighborhood has its own commercial thoroughfare and all of them were shuttered.

Dimitrios Manetas has renamed his store the city of Dimitri.

Store becomes town in fireworks dispute

LA MARQUE, Texas (AP) — The operator of a roadside restaurant and fireworks stand has declared his location as a town after becoming fed up with nearby LaMarque police hassling his fireworks customers.

Dimitrios Manetas, a 40-year-old Greek immigrant, and his family became upset with La Marque police hassling their fireworks customers, so the Manetas have created their own town outside La Marque on the Galveston County Line.

"We just wanted to be left alone," said Manetas, pointing to rooftop sign on his business that reads, "Dimitri's City Limit."

His fireworks stand is located on the family's 17-acre tract just a few hundred feet outside of La Marque, an incorporated city of 15,372.

"We were able to get a license from the state to sell fireworks because we are in an unincorporated area of Galveston County," said Anita Manetas, 42, who helps interpret for her husband. But the license wasn't enough during the July 4th weekend.

La Marque City Manager Ivan Langford said city officials were just enforcing an ordinance against fireworks possession when they stopped some of Manetas' customers.

"We were simply observing who was purchasing fireworks from him and bringing them into our city," he said. "All we did was stop the people and take away their fireworks."

But says Mrs. Manetas, "All we got were complaints from customers of being harassed as soon as they drove into La Marque."

In rebellion, Manetas posted the handmade, wooden sign on top of his business, which is now considered the unofficial Dimitri City Hall.

For the past eight years, the Manetas have complained to La Marque and other neighboring cities about what they consider harassment of their customers, but with no success, Mrs. Manetas said.

The family did file suit three years ago against nearby Hitchcock after the city's officers continually stopped Manetas' firework customers. The suit was settled out-of-court.

Manetas has sworn himself in as mayor, while his wife has volunteered to be justice of the peace. Daughter Katina, 13, said she wants to be city treasurer. The other children, Maria, 11, and Nikolaos, 8, aren't sure about their roles in the one-store town.

"In my city, I have my own streets, my own water, my own sewer. I even have my own windmill to generate my own electricty," Manetas said. "We don't need anything from anybody."

Mrs. Manetas says her family plans to talk to a lawyer about formally incoporating although she says the town may need 200 people to call a vote.

BUDGET

Workers — who usually paint the streets several times — will do it only once the upcoming year, Poe said.

Also, the city will try to repair items such as water and sewer lines, patch streets and make do with equipment already on hand.

But the bottom line, officials say, is they have kept essential city services — such as police and fire protection — not raised taxes and still produced a workable budget.

"This (budget) has been one of the most challenging," said Poe, the city's budget chief. "I think all of the city employees realize the situation with the economy and are willing to do the best job possible."

The proposal is a turn-about from last year.

Last summer, the city proposed a $61,343,328 budget for this year — a 6 percent increase from the year before.

It included 3 percent cost-of-living increases, 65 merit raises and a request for 16.5 additional employees.

Of the 27 departments in the general fund, 25 wanted — and, in many cases, received — more money.

"Last year at this time, we thought it (the economy) would show growth, and the city could afford some increases," Poe said. "We decided to add some new employees to help with improvements."

But when the price of oil dropped, it was obvious city revenues were going to shrink, officials said.

So, earlier this year, they initiated a hiring freeze and began austerity programs.

"We saw the handwriting on the wall when the oil prices started tumbling," Poe said, noting the city began spending cutbacks in January.

The problems increased in March when the sales tax dropped. The city's share of sales tax this year was $8.2 million — about $800,000 short of what finance experts predicted.

In April, Poe shipped a memo to all departments. The message was loud and clear: cutback.

He asked department heads to submit three budget plans — a zero increase, a 5 percent reduction and a 10 percent decrease.

"There are more people in Midland today without jobs than at any time in recent history," Poe wrote in the April 28 memo.

"In addition, there are many others that are taking reductions in pay to prevent layoffs. This just means they will be counting on us more now than ever in the past to provide these services we provide at the least cost possible.

"Because of my confidence in all city employees I know we will meet the challenge...."

With that setting the tone, only five of the 27 divisions asked for an increase in their budget this time around — the purchasing office, internal auditing, data processing, legislation and the city's ambulance service.

Four of the five increases were slight. Data processing is requesting about $60,000 more than last year.

The City Council also chipped in.

The council members ordered the salary reductions. Also, most of the civic groups asking for city money during initial budget talks had to settle for less than what they wanted.

For example, the Midland Arts Assembly — which requested some $45,000 — was budgeted $21,000.

The Human Relations Council, partially funded this year from the city's kitty, will not receive any money next year unless there is change of heart.

Since the budget will not be finally approved until next month, the assembly and other groups have been urging some council members to reconsider.

But, with the budget situation, several say it is doubtful such changes will be made.

Poe said the No. 1 savings was the cut in salaries.

City employees making $35,000 or more received a 5 percent pay cut. Those making less than $35,000 were cut 2 percent.

In addition, officials decided not to fill 33.5 general fund department positions and several others in the water and airport funds.

Those moves came only a year after the city had asked for the merit and cost-of-living raises and more employees.

Another difference is in capital outlays — items such as desks, specialized equipment, vehicles and a variety of other things.

Last year, outlay requests were about $2.8 million.

This year, the amount was reduced to some $1.7 million.

"We have the spirit of the employees," Poe said. "And we'll do the job (providing city services) with this budget.

But he did say if the economy keeps dragging for an indefinite amount of time, problems may surface.

"We can last through something like this for a year or two," he said. "But if it were to go longer than that, we would be worried our infrastructure would start to go down hill."

Poe said cities in the northeastern United States have those problems.

"We have to make capital improvements somewhere down the road.

CHANGE

Departments, which submitted more than $2.7 million in capital outlays last year during proposals, have requested $1.7 million this time around.

The proposed budget will go into effect Oct. 1 after final approval by the City Council.

Under the budget proposal process, departments decide what capital outlay items they need and then submit a list to the City Manager's office.

The list of items then must be approved by that office and the City Council before being finalized.

And, although the proposal is approved, it is possible the city will not buy the items.

Some of the items approved in last year's budget were not purchased due to cutbacks in spending.

But, in comparison to last year, department heads didn't ask for as many capital items.

An example is the Police Department, which proposed a list of about $60,000 of items, including:

— a $6,000 spotting scope to help fight crime at night.

— 15 pairs of binoculars valued at $1,875.

— six black-and-white televisions for the city jail.

— six Polaroid cameras to help in crime-fighting.

This year, the department's request was only $5,000.

The Municipal Court last year asked for about $25,000 worth of items including courtroom recording equipment, four dictating machines and three calculators.

This year's request: $4,600.

Traffic engineering asked for only $11,055 this year, compared to about $55,000 a year ago. Street maintenance requested $46,400 last summer — $1,400 in this proposal.

The city's fleet services, which is responsible for purchasing and maintaining city vehicles, requested more than $1.9 million in capital outlays a year ago.

The request was $1.3 million in this year's proposal.

And, although most of the departments asked for less this year, some requested more than they did last year.

Customer Service, which handles utility bills for the city, asked for $18,950 this year compared to $700 a year ago. Most of this year's request ($18,800) is for data processing equipment to read customers' returns.

The Parks division, which wanted $41,000 in 1985-86, requested $52,000.

Included in that list are soccer field restrooms ($7,000), two riding-type lawnmowers ($21,000) and a variety of edgers and trimmers.

The Fire Department asked for $36,133, about a $2,000 jump from last year.

Among the items requested are two exercise bicycle-rowing machines ($900), a $1,300 movie projector and $200 worth of condensed chemical dictionaries.

SESSION

— A bill enhancing the discipline powers of school districts, including semester-long expulsions for serious drug, alcohol, firearms and assault offenses.

— A bill forcing a methodical reduction in the number of state employees.

— A bill creating a second-degree felony for disclosing the content of criminal investigations "with the intent to hinder the arrest, prosecution, conviction or punishment of another."

So far, White has not opened the session agenda to anything other than budget cuts.

SPACE

The last word received by ground controllers was from commander Dick Scobee when he responded, "Go at throttle up," to confirm that Challenger's main engines were at full power. Words on the intercom were not radioed to the ground.

There were no comments on the tape from three crew members, school teacher Christa McAuliffe, astronaut Ron McNair, and payload specialist Gregory B. Jarvis. The three were on the middeck of Challenger, and Truly said passengers riding there are routinely instructed to remain silent during launch.

Truly said the families of the astronauts were informed of the findings before they were released Monday.

Houston lawyer Ronald Krist, who is representing one of the astronaut families, said he found the new information "troubling."

"What else are we not being told about?" he suggested.

Krist said he was representing a family, whom he declined to identify, in negotiations with Morton Thiokol Inc., the manufacturer of the shuttle solid rocket boosters.

Former shuttle astronaut Robert Overmeyer, in an interview on the "Today" show, said, "It would appear that for this one, unique, set of circumstances, unique to this accident, ...had NASA had parachutes on that crew capsule, you might have survived this accident."

He said it would be possible to install an escape system on the shuttle, but that would set back the resumption of the program.

"I'm afraid that the country would like to start flying for national defense, for lots of reasons, and it probably is not practical to do it at this time," he said.

"This was one unique set of circumstances at exactly that altitude. A little bit higher there's no way it would have survived, a little bit lower there's no way it would have survived. It was just a unique set of accident that caused that crew capsule to survive that explosion."

A presidential commission said the Challenger accident was caused by a failed joint in the right booster. Superheated gas burned through a fuel tank and ignited liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen. The tank and the orbiter then broke apart.

Kerwin said he and a team of engineers and scientists determined that at least some of the crew remained conscious long enough to activate the emergency air packs.

OPEC

He described demands for higher national quotas as "negotiating positions."

"We want an agreement on production control. There is plenty of room to maneuver," Lukman told reporters following a series of separate meetings between the ministers Monday afternoon.

Algerian Oil Minister Belkacem Nabi, whose country rejected the Brioni proposal and instead called for a bigger slash in production to push up prices faster, said Persian Gulf nations had expressed willingness to cut production.

A high-ranking OPEC delegate source who spoke on condition he not be identified said Saudi Arabia had asked to be allocated a national quota of 5 million barrels a day.

This would be about 500,000 barrels a day more than suggested in the Brioni proposal, the source said.

The respected Middle East Economic Survey said Monday that OPEC's aggregate output has reached 20.1 million barrels a day, with the Saudis reportedly pumping more than 6 million barrels a day.

OPEC's officially decreed but unobserved daily production ceiling is 16 million 42-gallon barrels.

The level of 20.1 million barrels a day is some 2.5 million barrels over the world's demand for OPEC oil, according to various industry estimates.

The glut has sent oil prices as low as $8 per barrel on some world markets, compared with $32 a barrel in December.

Iranian Oil Minister Gholamreza Aghazadeh, who arrived in Geneva after Monday's opening session at the Intercontinental hotel, said his government rejected the quota allocated to it under the Brioni proposal.

He said Iran still preferred a 10-percent cut from the official ceiling of 16 million barrels a day as a better way of shoring up prices.

He reiterated that Iran would insist on getting double the quota allocated to Iraq under any new ceiling.

Under the Brioni plan, Iraq would get a quota of 1.6 million barrels a day, while Iran would produce 2.4 million barrels daily.

But Iraq has demanded that its quota match Iran's.

"There will be no compromise," Iraqi Oil Minister Qassim Taki said Monday.

Benazir Bhutto launching new political tactic in Pakistan

By BARRY RENFREW

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Benazir Bhutto is planning a civil disobedience campaign that she hopes will force Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq from the presidency, according to sources in her Pakistan Peoples Party.

They said that the plan of the 33-year-old opposition leader is to launch strikes and have her followers put under court arrest, which she believes will overwhelm the government.

The sources added that she is gambling that the army will abandon Zia if soldiers are ordered to take harsh measures, such as firing on her supporters, and that the nation will turn against the government.

The sources spoke anonymously because Miss Bhutto herself has declined to discuss her plans publicly.

All she has said is that "consistent pressure will be applied on the regime."

Miss Bhutto, daughter of the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, is demanding that Zia, who seized power in a coup in 1977, step down and that elections be held by autumn.

After she returned to Pakistan in April from London, hundreds of thousands turned out for her speeches. But she suffered an apparent setback July 5, the day the party had set aside as one of nationwide protest. She predicted millions would turn out all across the country but the crowds numbered only in the tens of thousands.

The protests were to mark what party had designated as "Black Day," to mark the anniversary of Zia's military coup that ousted Miss Bhutto's father. He was hanged in 1979 after being found guilty of conspiring to murder in an attack on a political opponent.

The largest "Black Day" turnout was a crowd of about 30,000 in Lahore, in eastern Pakistan. Allied opposition groups also failed to respond in large numbers.

Miss Bhutto had said before the July 5 protests that they were to demonstrate her party's organizational ability and to prove it could mobilize supporters across the country. She has refused to accept the smaller turnout as a setback.

A second round of nationwide protests is planned for Independence Day, Aug. 14. The party plans to begin its main round of civil disobedience tactics in September, the party sources said.

The key to the plan is the belief that the armed forces will not fire on civilians in the province of Punjab, which dominates the country's three other provinces. The armed forces are overwhelmingly recruited from Punjab and previous governments have been forced out of power when soldiers have refused to fire on people there.

But some political experts question whether Miss Bhutto can engineer such a confrontation.

"Many of those ready to vote for her in an election may not be willing to get killed on her road to power," wrote Anwar Syed, a political scientist, in the Muslim newspaper.

Zia lifted martial law Dec. 30 after it had been in force for 8½ years. He appears firmly in control of the country with the support of the armed forces and a powerful bureaucracy in his handpicked government of Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo.

Zia, who is also the army commander, was apparently buoyed by the Peoples Party's reception July 5 and issued his strongest warning yet to his opponents.

"If any one tries to take an undemocratic path of violence and subversion the government, in order to maintain peace, I will not hesitate to send such elements to jail," he told Parliament on July 8.

He contends democracy was restored with his lifting of martial law and says the only national elections will be those scheduled for 1990.

Zia's administration is Pakistan's third military government in its 39 years as an independent nation.

Howe to meet Botha again as tour nears end

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, seeking to persuade the government to negotiate with black activists, conferred with top state officials today and was scheduled to meet again with President P.W. Botha.

Howe, winding up a weeklong trip to South Africa, is traveling on behalf of the 12-nation European Common Market, but his findings are expected to have a major effect on British policy toward its South African investments.

Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and President Reagan oppose economic sanctions as a means to end apartheid, the racial policy that empowers South Africa's 5 million whites to rule the country's 24 million voteless blacks.

This morning Howe met with Gerrit Viljoen, the minister of education, Foreign Minister R.F. Botha, and Minister of Finance Barend Du Plessis.

Du Plessis said, "We discussed financial matters, the effect of sanctions ... and also dwelt on political matters. The tenor of the discussion was friendly. It was a constructive discussion on both sides."

Most South African black activists have avoided the British foreign minister and have described his tour as an attempt to delay Western decisions on whether to impose sanctions.

Howe, seeking to encourage the negotiations as a way to end apartheid, held his first round of talks with President Botha on Wednesday. He also traveled to the neighboring black-ruled nations of Zambia, Botswana, Swaziland and Lesotho and held talks with their leaders.

Howe and his wife, Lady Elspeth, made a secret, half hour tour of Johannesburg's Soweto black township on Monday, riding in an unmarked car with a few security men.

He said afterward his impression of what he saw "really reveals the heart of the problem in South Africa."

"The world in which we are giving these interviews, the world of white South Africa, is further set apart from the physical, economic and social conditions of black South Africa than any other country I've ever visited," he told reporters.

In other developments, a Transvaal provincial court on Monday ruled that general orders issued under the nationwide state of emergency declared June 12 were invalid if they were made by anyone ranking lower than the commissioner of police.

The ruling favored the United Democratic Front, the nation's largest anti-apartheid organization, which challenged a July 10 order of the divisional police commissioner in Soweto prohibiting gatherings by 26 organizations.

Poet joins widespread call to nullify Mexican election

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Poet and essayist Octavio Paz and other prominent intellectuals have joined the call for nullification of elections in the northern border state of Chihuahua because of "reasonable doubt" about their legality.

"The testimony of citizens and the national and international press register sufficient irregularities so as to throw reasonable doubt on the legality of the entire process," an open letter printed Monday in the widely circulated magazine Proceso said.

The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, won the governor's race, all 14 state legislative elections and 65 of 67 mayoral races in the July 6 elections in Chihuahua, the largest in area of Mexico's 31 states.

The PRI never has lost a major election in its 57-year history.

Cries of vote rigging have united diverse sectors of Chihuahua society, including the traditionally silent Roman Catholic Church and the business community.

Most vocal has been the conservative National Action Party, which had hoped for an unprecedented major victory in Chihuahua but instead lost the seven major mayoralties it had won in 1973.

"From far away and without ties to the parties, we think that these results reveal a dangerous obsession with unanimity," the letter said, signed by 21 people. "From close up and with more elements for judging, a broad and diverse section of Chihuahuan society believes that its vote was not respected."

In addition to Paz, often mentioned as a possible winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature, among the others who signed the letter were writer Elena Poniatowska, critic Carlos Monsivais, essayist Enrique Krauze and Colegio de Mexico political science professor Lorenzo Meyer and anthropologist Fernando Benitez.

The letter noted that protests that have taken place regularly in Chihuahua, bordering Texas and New Mexico, since the elections.

Thousands of supporters of National Action, known as PAN and the largest minority party in Mexico, occupied a bridge linking Ciudad Juarez in Chihuahua and El Paso, Texas, Thursday and vowed not to leave until the government orders the vote annulled. PRI leaders say the vote was fair, and National Action only made its gains in 1983 elections because they were unprepared.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Nicaragua complains

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Nicaragua has filed a complaint at the World Court against Honduras and Costa Rica, seeking a ban on anti-Sandinista rebel activity launched from the territory of its Central American neighbors, a court source said today.

Nicaragua's request to the U.N. tribunal, officially known as the International Court of Justice, comes a month after the court denounced U.S. backing for Contra rebels trying to topple the leftist Sandinista government.

That case was filed in April 1984 by Nicaragua, which claimed that the Contras were killing Nicaraguan civilians as part of a U.S.-engineered attempt to overthrow the Managua government.

Honeymoon ending?

SAO MIGUEL, Azores Islands (AP) — The Duke and Duchess of York set sail late Monday after hosting a farewell dinner aboard the royal yacht Britannia to mark the end of their five-day honeymoon cruise in Portugal's lush mid-Atlantic archipelago.

The Royal Marine band played "Hey, Look Me Over" and "Seventy-Six Trombones" from the top deck as the newlyweds, in formal evening dress, waved goodbye to wellwishers lining the dockside at Sao Miguel's port of Ponta Delgada.

Queen Elizabeth II gave her second son, Prince Andrew, the title Duke of York just before his wedding July 23 to the former Sarah Ferguson. After the wedding, the couple flew to the Azores, 740 miles west of Lisbon, to begin their cruise.

The yacht put out to sea at 11 p.m. after the dinner for local officials including Azores regional president Joao Bosco de Mota Amaral and British ambassador to Portugal Michael Simpson-Orlebar.

Chess tourney begins

LONDON (AP) — World champion Garri Kasparov, mounting an aggressive defense, gained a draw against Anatoly Karpov in the opening game of their third battle for the world chess title.

Kasparov, 23, started with a disadvantage Monday by playing second against Karpov, 35, who played white. Karpov offered the draw after his 21st move.

The two Soviet players, who became bitter opponents in their first two contests, shook hands and quickly left the stage in the Park Lane Hotel ballroom.

Surinam plot halted

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The arrests of 14 people accused of planning to overthrow the government of Surinam mark the third time in five years officials have foiled alleged New Orleans-based plots to topple foreign leaders.

"Obviously, this is a hub," said U.S. Attorney John Volz. "It's a central point, a jumping off point to South America and Central America."

Robert Grimes, regional commissioner of U.S. Customs here, said Tommy Lynn Denley, 45, of Grenada, Miss., was the leader of a band of mercenaries who planned to pose as financiers.

According to documents, they apparently planned to take Surinam's president, Lt. Col. Desi Bouterse, hostage. Bouterse came to power in a military coup in February 1980.

Surinam is one of three small countries east of Venezuela off the northern coast of South America. Formerly called Dutch Guiana, it won independence from The Netherlands in 1975.

Thatcher to have surgery

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is to enter a hospital next week for an operation on her right hand, her office announced Monday.

It said the operation, to be carried out under general anesthesia, is for a condition called Dupuytren's contracture, a progressive condition that gradually draws the little finger towards the palm.

The statement said the 60-year-old Mrs. Thatcher would go to the hospital, which was not identified for security reasons, after a conference of leaders of seven Commonwealth nations in London Aug. 3-5.

Opening lead: King of ♣ Even seemingly simple hands can be complicated by a lack of entries to one hand or the other. Sometimes, you have to do some work to develop an entry.

North just about had enough to dredge up a raise to two hearts—possession of four-card support for his partner's suit was the key factor. Despite his powerful hand, South could do no more than go on to game.

West led the king of clubs, then continued with ace and another. Declarer took some time to consider the possibilities of the hand. Ten tricks were there for the taking—five trumps, four spades and the ace of diamonds—except for one snag: there was no guaranteed entry to dummy.

One possibility was to hope the king of diamonds was onside. A surer line was to use a trump as an entry. There would be no problem if the suit split 2-2, but what about a 3-1 division? If declarer ruffed the third club and was then forced to draw three rounds of trumps, he would have to fall back on finding the king of diamonds right.

Declarer found an elegant solution to his dilemma—instead of ruffing the third club, he discarded a diamond from dummy. The defenders had no recourse. West shifted to a diamond, dummy's queen fetched the king and declarer took his ace. He drew trumps in three rounds, cashed the ace-king of spades and then used the tables's eight of trumps as an entry to cash dummy's two spades, getting rid of his diamond losers.

Ryan O'Neal's son Griffin indicted in accidental death of director's son

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Actor Ryan O'Neal's 21-year-old son, Griffin, faces five years behind bars if convicted on a rarely used charge of boat manslaughter stemming from the death of the son of director Francis Ford Coppola.

An Anne Arundel County grand jury handed up a six-count indictment Monday that included the manslaughter charge as well as five counts dealing with reckless and negligent driving of a boat.

Gian-Carlo Coppola, 23, was killed May 26 while with O'Neal on a Memorial Day holiday outing on the crowded South River near Annapolis.

The two rented a 14-foot runabout during a break from filming of "Gardens of Stone," which Coppola's father was shooting in Arlington, Va.

Coppola was thrown to the deck of the runabout when it ran under a tow line connecting two other boats. He died of injuries to the back of his head and neck. O'Neal suffered a minor shoulder injury that did not require treatment at that time.

O'Neal told state natural resources police, who arrived at the scene just minutes after the accident, that Coppola was driving the boat at the time. Several witnesses told police O'Neal was operating the runabout.

An autopsy on Coppola showed his blood alcohol content to be .15 percent. It is illegal under Maryland law to operate a boat with blood alcohol level of .08 percent or above. O'Neal was not tested for alcohol content of his blood, natural resources police said.

Gerald Anders, an assistant state's attorney who handled the investigation, said boat manslaughter carries a maximum sentence of five years in jail and a $1,000 fine. The other charges carry jail sentences ranging from 30 days to three months and fines of $25 to $300.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rolling Stones lead guitarist Keith Richards became a father for the fourth time when his wife, Patti Hansen, gave birth to a girl.

The baby, the couple's second daughter, weighed 9 pounds, 3 ounces when she was born at 11:32 a.m. Monday, said Ted Albert, a spokesman for the rock group. He didn't specify the New York hospital where the baby was born.

"The parents are still mulling names," Albert said.

Richards, 42, and Hansen, 28, wed Dec. 18, 1983, in Cabo San Lucas, Mexico.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — About 700 arm wrestlers from the United States and 17 countries are vying for two spots in Sylvester Stallone's movie "Over the Top."

In the movie, Stallone portrays a trucker who trains in his 18-wheeler while trying to capture the arm-wrestling title.

As part of the film's promotion, Cannon Films and the International Arm Wrestling Council staged several tournaments, selecting 700 finalists who were invited to Las Vegas for the competition last weekend. Two will be chosen.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Joy Dirksen Baker, wife of former Republican Sen. Howard Baker Jr., was in serious but stable condition after surgery to clear an intestinal blockage, officials said.

Mrs. Baker was in the intensive care unit of East Tennessee Baptist Hospital on Monday, two days after the operation, said hospital spokeswoman Donna Creech.

Baker, who has said he will campaign for his party's presidential nomination, has been driving from the couple's Huntsville home to visit his wife here, said an aide to Baker.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Jon Voight has extended a mysterious invitation to witness a prophecy by Hopi elders that would provide "the perfect solution to the continuation of our existence here on this planet."

Reading from a rambling statement Monday, Voight was flanked at a news conference by actresses Elizabeth Taylor, Tyne Daly and Ally Sheedy, comedian Cheech Marin, Hopi elder Thomas Bininaca and others.

The guests, who left immediately after Voight's announcement, were observing silence in honor of the Hopis and were unavailable for comment, Voight said.

He said the message would be delivered on holy ground at the Hopi reservation in northern Arizona. He didn't exactly say when and declined to answer specific questions from baffled reporters.

He said only witnesses who were ready to accept the message will hear it.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After 26 days and a strike authorization vote, actors and producers were back at the bargaining table, trying to avert a walkout that could cost the entertainment industry millions of dollars.

Negotiators for both sides were optimistic Monday that a crippling movie and television industry strike could be avoided.

"My expectation is that we will walk in with the same positive attitude with which we began these negotiations and come away with a deal," Patty Duke, president of the Screen Actors Guild, said at a news conference.

Later in the day, officials for both SAG and the producers announced the talks would continue through midnight Wednesday.

Carol Akiyama, a spokeswoman for the producers, said Monday: "The parties resumed negotiations today. Just now, at the suggestion of SAG, we have set up a target deadline for negotiations of Wednesday midnight. It is not an ultimatum. If it looks like the parties are making progress close to Wednesday midnight then we will discuss extending the deadline."

Nearly 87 percent of the combined membership of the guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists gave bargainers authority to call a strike if negotiations deteriorate.

A 10-week SAG-AFTRA walkout in 1980 cost the industry an estimated $40 million and delayed the start of the prime-time television season for two months. The unions represent 92,000 members.

WESTBROOK, Maine (AP) — A retired auto worker from Detroit who claims to be "Rudy's No. 1 fan" was among nearly 200 people who paid last respects to Rudy Vallee on the day the singing idol of a half century ago would have turned 85.

"His voice — it was so romantic, so haunting and sincere. He was like his voice," said Norman Ostrowski. "He was the greatest."

Ostrowski, 68, and his wife, Rose, flew to Maine to attend a brief memorial service for Vallee, whose ashes were buried Monday in a family plot in St. Hyacinth's Cemetery in the paper mill city where he spent most of his childhood.

Death to deficits

It's almost like a bad horror movie, the way Congress attempts to avoid responsibility for reducing the federal deficit. What would we call it, "The Return of the Deficit"?

Alas! No matter how hard the lawmakers try to rid themselves of the budget monster, it keeps coming back.

When we last spoke about the deficit drama, Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., were trying to repair the automatic spending-cuts provision of their budget-balancing law, invalidated three weeks ago by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Rather than saddle the U.S. Comptroller General with the task of ordering the cuts, the new-and-improved Gramm-Rudman law would assign that duty to the director of the Office of Management and Budget. The revisionists contend that such a change would be constitutionally acceptable, in that Congress has no power over OMB. But their contention glosses over the fact that this provision would limit the OMB director's power to alter the drastic nature of the cuts. That, in itself, constitutes congressional authority over an executive-branch function.

Apart from the constitutional quandary, it appears doubtful Congress would relinquish so much of its authority over money matters. Already, there are rumblings on Capitol Hill about the perils of giving the executive branch additional power over the budget process. Ironically, many of these same lawmakers are hesitant to assume responsibility for the budget cuts, yet they are unwilling to let President Reagan wield the axe. Little wonder this nation faces a record $220 billion deficit for fiscal 1987.

Were Congress not incapable of controlling spending, there would be no need for such a blunt legislative instrument in the first place.

Gramm-Rudman is designed to protect Congress from the politically unpalatable task of making tough budget choices. The original version of the law would have shifted the responsibility in one direction; the revised version would simply pass the buck to someone else. In either event, the lawmakers are looking for the easy way out.

Such a way also can be found in the line-item veto, but that's not what Congress wants.

President Reagan has repeatedly asked Congress to give him the authority to blue-pencil specific budget items. The lawmakers have consistently resisted, preferring instead to pack the budget with pork-barrel programs. The net effect of such congressional generosity is a federal deficit that is wildly out of control.

Somehow, someone must apply the brakes to the runaway federal gravy train. It's obvious that restraint is not present on Capitol Hill. Budget cutting must begin and end with the president, who is particularly well-suited to the task because of his national constituency.

The line-item veto in presidential hands is certainly preferable to the indiscriminate across-the-board cuts in defense and non-exempt domestic programs that will likely emerge in Gramm-Rudman II.

Besides, it might mark the end of the deficit monster.

New broom sweeping

Well, a new broom is now sweeping at the Senior Citizen Center and in the process, sweeping out people. It's hard to imagine the foolishness of anyone tampering with success, but it's being done. The new management has undertaken the task of watchdog for our senior citizens' health, whether they want it or not. Oh, they will serve coffee with sugar available and we've all read about the harmful effects of both of these.

The food served at noon is still the same type of food we're all clogging our arteries with. No, it isn't a mandatory exercise program although some have already been bullied into some workouts they are unable to do and should not try to do. This is not mandatory yet!

The very small smoking area that the bridge players used has been abolished and a big sign reading "Cancer Control! No Smoking!" has been posted there. Before new management took over, this area, large enough for two card tables in the back of the main room, was for the bridge players. The main room is large enough to seat 150, has six ceiling fans and central air-conditioning. This smoking area is not exactly a great deal of space taken out of a room large enough to house fire trucks, which it did at one time.

Bridge players wiled away four to five afternoons every week unmolested and enjoying a facility they thought was theirs. Wrong! Under the new Gestapo-like regime, the previously successful program has been scrapped and seeds of dissension and unhappiness have been sown. There are no longer enough bridge players, smoking or non-smoking, to make up the numbers to play as before. The senior facility is no longer for all the senior citizens; it is only for those willing to "do it my way" or they can stay at home. Some are very alone and have nowhere else to go.

It shouldn't matter if the people dip, smoke or chew, this is their leisure time and they should be allowed to enjoy it without having the will of a petty tyrant forced on them. It seems terribly unfair that people who have smoked all of their lives are being deprived of a small area in the facility that their taxes helped pay for. This is little enough to ask.

Nice going, Parks & Recreation. With any luck and more overbearing effort on your part, you can "rule" more and more people away from the center and close it down completely. The city management will then have a real nice banquet hall.

Instructors show 'caring'

As I read with disbelief the article Friday, July 18th, about the ex-Midlander suing Gary Seth and the Alamo YMCA claiming negligence, I took great note that nowhere does it say that the young girl broke any bones. If no bones were broken while on the trampoline, it seems Seth did right in telling the parent that after a pulled muscle she should walk on the leg.

I write this letter because I have a pre-school daughter enrolled presently at the Alamo YMCA and during the past six months she has had either Seth of Mrs. Lynn Mark-Graf for instructor. The one thing I've personally seen stressed more than anything is safety. By safety, I mean they teach children the right and wrong way to mount or dismount the apparatuses and they are constantly there with their group of students. I have never seen a child unsupervised in the trampoline "pit" area. I dare say the students are more supervised in their 45-minute class there than they are while playing in their own backyard.

My interaction with the gymnastics instructors at the Alamo YMCA shows them to be a very caring professional staff whose sole intent is to teach children to the best of their ability, and yes, accidents can happen even for the experienced gymnast. But to file a federal negligence lawsuit and request a jury trial as the Dyserts in Ohio have done is grossly inappropriate.

Why didn't the "concerned parent" of this child seek immediate attention in an emergency room if they suspected Seth of wrongly diagnosing the injury instead of allowing the injury to worsen before seeking treatment?

As a concerned parent, I hate to see another parent exploit the situation. Hopefully, this negativeness will not take away from the good things the YMCA is doing for children or detract from the quality of instructors they now employ.

AID staffers pressured Third World

WASHINGTON — The State Department's messianic zeal for private enterprise has made it more difficult for needy Third World nations to get delivery of surplus American food crops. Some recipient countries are being pressured to "privatize" their distribution systems before food will be sent.

Jack Anderson

Foggy Bottom bureaucrats insist that no one has been starving as a result of the ideologically inspired red tape, but the effort to change the structure of the recipient regimes has left a sour taste in some far-off capitals.

It has also infuriated U.S. agricultural exporters and one member of the Senate.

"I do not believe in using food as a political weapon," Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., told our associate Stewart Harris.

Melcher was unable to interest his colleagues on the Agriculture Committee in the situation, so he hired a stenographer and conducted a solo hearing. He invited representatives of eight food-importing countries to tell their experiences with the State Department's arm-twisting as practiced by the Agency for International Development in the Food for Peace program.

Here are some of the complaints he heard:

— Riots and revolutions were raging in other African countries after a devastating famine when AID officials held up food shipments to Kenya for three months until the Kenyan government reluctantly agreed to let the private sector distribute U.S. food. As the Kenyans explained to Melcher, there was no one outside their government agencies who had the necessary expertise to handle the millions of tons of food waiting to come in. They also pointed out that there was no guarantee the food would find its way from the private distribution firms to the people who needed it most.

— The same problem — no private sector capability — plagued the Marxist regime in Mozambique. AID officials tried to strong-arm the Mozambiquan government into privatizing food distribution, but eventually backed down when the government stood firm. Still, the pressure alone aroused resentment in Mozambique, where 100,000 had died of starvation in 1984. "When you drive down the road and you see the dead bodies, you cannot permit (that kind of agreement) even for the best of philosophical reasons," a food importer told Melcher.

— U.S. diplomats in Manila told the Philippine government it had to let private importers compete with the government food agency.

— In the Dominican Republic, where 80 people died in 1984 food riots, AID officials insisted that the government abolish its food purchasing agency before rice would be shipped under Food for Peace. "To me, it typifies basically an attitude of arrogance on the part of our bureaucrats, who sit here in Washington and feel they know better than these governments do what needs to be done," Steve Gabbert, executive vice president of the Rice Millers Association, told Melcher.

AID officials say they're only enforcing "self-help" conditions mandated by Congress, and insist that emergency provisions in the program allow for immediate food deliveries regardless of agreement on privatization.

But U.S. agribusinessmen are concerned that the pressure to privatize may cause foreign buyers to buy their grain from Canada and Australia. In fact, Kenya bought 120,000 tons of wheat from Australia while the negotiations over distribution were dragging on.

"One would think the Australians and Canadians must have played a major role in helping the United States draft the (Food for Peace) language," Nebraska Wheat Growers executive director Ron Stoddard observed sarcastically.

UNDER THE DOME: The communist regime in Peking seems to be learning the intricate art of "kowtow" practiced so expertly over the years by their Nationalist Chinese rivals on Taiwan. The targets of the kowtow curriculum are members and staff aides of such congressional committees as House Armed Services and Senate Foreign Relations. Recently a mixed bag from these panels took a sightseeing — er, fact-finding trip through mainland China that included a rare glimpse of Tibet, which is seldom on the tourist itinerary. The Chinese hosts rolled out the red carpet.

NOURITY EDGE: It may be lights out for Captain Midnight, but that doesn't mean satellite communications are any less vulnerable to other pranksters or saboteurs. Meanwhile, advocates of fiber optic cables, which are supposedly more secure against outside interference, were embarrassed by the sabotage of a fiber optics cable in California last month. Someone simply cut the thing with a hacksaw, disrupting communications for days until the break was found and repaired. The sabotage occurred during a phone company strike, but the FBI has no suspects.

Administration doing 'South African wobble'

WASHINGTON — Less than 48 hours of bipartisan attack from Capitol Hill was all the White House staff could take before sending spokesman Larry Speakes out to soften President Reagan's no-sanctions stand, a symptom of what ails policymaking on South Africa.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

No wonder Reagan's position wobbles. His own strong views on dealing with the Pretoria regime encounter opposition from the State Department's African bureau and non-support from his West Wing aides. Secretary of State George Shultz, loyal to the president though he is, proved incapable last week of making a credible defense of Reagan's position.

The result is that the president's unmistakable opposition to sanctions was immediately diluted by his own men. Other critics of sanctions against South Africa — from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to Sen. Malcolm Wallop — are in danger of being cut off by their powerful ally.

This policy merry-go-round started twirling when the State Department's African bureau (called the "Boer-bashers" inside the bureaucracy) under Assistant Secretary Chester Crocker urged a presidential speech to signal tougher policy on Pretoria. But Reagan, supported by White House communications director Patrick J. Buchanan, wanted a different tone.

Thus, after its White House revision, the State Deparment text was softened. West Wing aides under chief of staff Donald T. Regan, typically agnostic on the sanctions question, saw no political benefit for the president no matter what he said. But they were unable to stop the speech as the policy struggle between Buchanan and the State Department intensified.

The struggle boiled down to the U.S. attitude toward the African National Congress (ANC), increasingly terrorist and labelled communist-controlled by the CIA. Buchanan's draft contained a line saying the South African government need not negotiate with "such an organization" unless it reforms.

That was excised by the Boer-bashers because they want talks with the ANC. In laying the groundwork for such talks, Crocker's deputy, Charles F. (Chas) Freeman, has carefully reminded one key black leader in South Africa that the U.S. never has designated the ANC as terrorist.

When national security director John Poindexter finally supported the State Department, the battle seemed over. The conservatives worried that, as written, the speech would have an effect opposite to what was intended: It would encourage intransigence, not moderation, in Pretoria.

Only three hours before delivery, Buchanan made a final appeal to Don Regan. The chief of staff, ever attentive to the president's real desires, agreed. The only spontaneous applause evoked in the East Room came when Reagan declared: "But the South African government is under no obligation to negotiate the future of the country with any organization that proclaims a goal of creating a communist state and uses terrorist tactics and violence to achieve it." Reagan himself added the words "and violence."

Shultz, described at State as furious at Buchanan, has learned not to accept defeat. His call in Senate testimony to release "all political prisoners" was not in the Reagan text. Other points clipped from the original State Department text reappeared in his testimony.

The Buchanan sentence hitting the ANC vanished from the secretary's statement. It was not even included in "talking points" on Reagan's speech cabled to American embassies. Diluting Reagan's intention further, Shultz told reporters the phrase "any organization" certainly did not describe the ANC. By Friday, Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Richard Lugar declared the sentence inoperative.

That followed three days of withering Capitol Hill assault. Attempting to explain the lack of support for a popular president, an interior memo circulated among conservatives in the administration blames State Department-orientation of White House lobbyists. A likelier reason is extreme political tenderness on the racial question short months before an election.

Such tenderness may explain why Speakes was directed on Air Force One Thursday to say the White House was considering sanctions after all. Presidential aide Dennis Thomas told us this was "not a change of policy," but critics blamed him for flinching under fire. Although Don Regan was not on Air Force One for this part of the trip, the pullback had to have his approval.

In Columbia, S.C., bantering with reporters, the president himself was equivocal about South Africa. That means battle may still be on about the far-off land whose fate is beyond U.S. control, and whether in the sixth year of his presidency Reagan can gain control of his own foreign policy.

Bolivian mess illustrates American hypocrisy

Washington must be crazy.

Congress argues two years over a piddling amount of money to fund Nicaraguan contras, limits U.S. military advisers to 55 in El Salvador, and then sits like a lump while the president sends 160 troops and six Army helicopters to Bolivia to chase drug dealers.

Charley Reese

The United States Army has no business in Bolivia. Bolivia changes governments as often as American actresses change their makeup and the only thing consistent about the Bolivian governments is they are corrupt and brutal.

That's all the U.S. needs to win friends in Latin America. Have American helicopters ferry corrupt police around so they can murder a few peasants to impress the Yankee idiots. Latin American governments used to shoot or jail a few peasants to show off as communists to the visiting Ivy Leaguers with the big check books. Now, drug dealers are the in thing. To dip into the U.S. Treasury, you now have to show the gringos you are against drug dealers.

Never mind that Bolivia is so impoverished that for the peasants it's either grow coca leaves or starve. Never mind that it's the U.S. market for drugs which has created the drug industry in Latin America. Never mind that it's very likely that the Bolivian bigshots we're cooperating with are the ones financing and organizing the drug trade. The Bolivian national police don't have any trouble finding and shooting political opponents. You have to be dumb to think that they just can't find the drug dealers without American help.

Of course it's easier for American politicians to help shoot a few Bolivian peasants than to put laws on the books that would exact severe penalties for middle and upper class Americans who make the whole sorry mess in Latin America possible. God knows you wouldn't want to put half of Hollywood and the rock music industry into prison, not to mention a lot of other affluent Americans who are respectable members of their communities. No, better to dump on the peasants.

Sometimes the hypocrisy is more than I can stand. Let me once more spell out the ugly facts. Selling illicit drugs is a retail business. It's a volume business. Now do you seriously suppose that thousands and thousands of customers, including 11-year-olds, can locate the drug dealers but the police can't? Grow up.

Wherever you find a large illicit drug trade, you will also find official corruption. It's true of Bolivia. It's true of the United States. I've seen very little action to deal with official corruption.

When I talk about official corruption, I'm not talking about street cops. Some are corrupt, sure, but the way the game is played is at the higher levels. It's the old shoot-the-peasant routine. You just make sure the street cops are so busy working the retail level, they never get a chance to work up to the wholesale and financier levels. That way you can have your drug busts and protect the drug trade, too.

Secondly, how can anyone claim to be against illicit drugs when he refuses to impose severe penalties for use? You'll never dry up the market unless you make it unpleasant to use drugs as well as to sell them.

This whole war against drugs is a con game. I would favor legalizing the drugs as long as that is coupled with a mandatory death penalty for anyone who sells or gives drugs to a minor. If adults wish to kill themselves or fry their brains, that's their business, but it is ridiculous to an absurd degree that a nation which calls itself a superpower can't protect its own children.

In the meantime, Reagan should catch hell for involving the Army in the internal police affairs of Bolivia. He's succumbing to that old trick in Washington of justifying whatever some bozo wants to do by calling it a national security problem.

Jenco's release linked to secret trip by Casey

Administration reaction was different when Peter Kilburn's body came home.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The release of the Rev. Lawrence Jenco by radical Moslem kidnappers in Lebanon comes within weeks of a secret trip to Syria by CIA Director William Casey, administration officials say.

A newspaper account, quoting an unidentified intelligence source, said Casey's trip helped bring about the Roman Catholic priest's freedom. However, other sources said it was not clear whether Jenco's release Saturday in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley resulted from the Casey mission.

Sources who spoke on the condition of anonymity told The Associated Press Monday that Casey visited Syria to meet with people believed to have contact with the kidnappers of Jenco and at least three other Americans in Lebanon.

The San Francisco Examiner, in a copyrighted story from Washington, said the mission was so secret that only President Reagan and three advisers knew of the trip, which was made within the last three weeks to discuss the hostages and Israeli defense concerns with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

CIA spokeswoman Sharon Foster refused to comment on the report, saying, "We don't discuss the director's travel. I can't confirm or deny that."

Other sources, however, confirmed that Casey was in the Middle East.

The Examiner reported that U.N. Ambassador Vernon Walters, who has often served as a special U.S. envoy on secret missions around the globe, has made several trips to Damascus to meet privately with Assad and is believed to have had a role in arranging Casey's trip.

Independent sources told The AP the Walters trips were earlier and not necessarily linked to Casey's.

The Casey trip appeared to coincide with an abortive plan to release Jenco and the three Americans who were being held with him.

The 51-year-old native of Joliet, Ill., was quoted by his brother, John, as saying that the four were told three weeks ago they would be freed, but were not, and received no explanation.

The Americans still missing are Terry A. Anderson, 38, of Lorain, Ohio, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press; David Jacobsen, 55, of Huntington Beach, Calif., director of the American University Hospital in Beirut; Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., the university's acting dean of agriculture; and William Buckley, 58, of Medford, Mass., a U.S. Embassy political officer.

Jenco said he never saw Buckley, and persons claiming to represent the Islamic Jihad have said he was executed, although no body has been found.

Rehnquist to appear before Senate committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice William H. Rehnquist, his nomination to become the nation's 16th chief justice opposed vigorously by civil rights groups and some Democrats, is beginning his formal quest for Senate confirmation.

Rehnquist, named by President Reagan to replace the retiring Warren E. Burger as the nation's top judge, was to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee today.

The hearing, originally scheduled for this morning, was delayed until 3 p.m. CDT to allow senators to attend services in New York for elder statesman W. Averell Harriman, 94, who died Saturday.

If Rehnquist's nomination is confirmed, Reagan plans to nominate Antonin Scalia, a conservative appeals court judge in the District of Columbia, to fill the court vacancy.

Senators from both parties have agreed on a hearing schedule that will allow the full Senate to vote on both nominees the week of Sept. 8.

Rehnquist's hearing will be extended through Wednesday and Thursday if necessary. Scalia's confirmation hearing is set to begin next Tuesday.

Rehnquist, 61, was expected to be asked about his 14-year tenure as the Supreme Court's most conservative member and about his political activities in Phoenix a quarter century ago.

Committee chairman Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., predicts smooth sailing for Rehnquist's nomination despite new charges that he tried to disqualify Democratic minority voters in Phoenix elections in the early 1960s.

"I think he'll be confirmed without any difficulty," Thurmond said last week. "Any matters available and known prior to his first confirmation would seem to me to have been settled by that confirmation."

But Thurmond did not rule out the possibility that witnesses will testify about Rehnquist's role in a GOP effort in Phoenix to challenge the literacy and credentials of many minority voters.

Allegations about his role surfaced before Rehnquist's 1971 Supreme Court nomination was confirmed. He said at that time he personally had not engaged in any voter challenges.

Senate Democrats since have located several people who contradicted Rehnquist, contending that they saw him working as a GOP challenger at a predominantly Hispanic and black polling place.

Speaking in Denver Monday to the National Bar Association, an organization of black lawyers, Democratic National Chairman Paul G. Kirk Jr. said of Rehnquist, "Why should we have to settle for a nominee as chief justice a man who...did his best to intimidate black and Hispanic voters in Arizona?"

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of 185 civil rights groups, is urging the Senate to reject the Rehnquist nomination.

"He is an extremist, a man dramatically out of step with the bipartisan consensus on civil rights in this country," Benjamin L. Hooks, the Leadership Conference chairman and executive director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said at a Monday news conference.

Hooks called Rehnquist "an enemy of civil rights."

Eleanor Cutri Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, said her organization was going to make Rehnquist's nomination an issue in the the 1986 Senate elections.

"We believe the U.S. Senate has to begin asking some tough questions," she said.

Smeal was to appear before the Judiciary Committee this week, and was prepared to state that NOW finds Rehnquist's views "on sex discrimination and the rights of women more than reactionary — we find them frightening."

Joseph L. Rauh Jr., a longtime civil rights lawyer in Washington and counsel to the Leadership Council, predicted that the Senate will defeat Rehnquist's nomination.

"I hate to see the court desecrated this way," Rauh said, attacking what he called Rehnquist's "lifetime of opposition to individual rights."

Elaine Jones, a lawyer for the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, called Rehnquist's nomination a "palpably unfair" insult to black Americans on the eve of the Constitution's 200th birthday.

Before the Judiciary Committee, Rehnquist also is expected to be questioned about memoranda he wrote as a Supreme Court law clerk in 1952-53, including one in which he defended the separate-but-equal doctrine of racial segregation.

He also could be asked to explain his refusal to disqualify himself from a case involving Nixon administration surveillance of anti-war protesters, even though Rehnquist played a role in such a policy while working in the Justice Department.

By a 5-4 vote, the court ruled that the protesters could not challenge the surveillance program in court.

Asked Monday if the Reagan administration is confident Rehnquist will be confirmed, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We're hopeful, for sure."

Benjamin Hooks, center, chairman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and executive director of the NAACP, speaks with Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women, and Joseph Rauh Jr., counsel for the LCCR, during a Capitol Hill news conference Wednesday.

Temperatures will stay high

From Staff and Wire Reports

Hot temperatures will continue locally through Wednesday, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. A high of near 101 is being predicted for mid-week.

Tonight, under clear skies, Permian Basin area residents can look for a low near 70. Winds will be out of the south at less than 10 mph tonight, increasing to five to 15 mph on Wednesday.

The very warm 99-degree high on Monday was cooler by seven degrees than the record high set for the date in 1944. This morning's low of 69 was four degrees above the record low set in 1984.

STATE

Temperatures well over the 100-degree mark were forecast for much of the state today, and humidities combined with high temperatures to produce dangerous heat levels in much of North Central and Northwest Texas.

Wichita Falls and Laredo reported statewide high temperatures of 107 degrees Monday, and 105-degree readings were reported at Childress and Waco. Houston reported 100 degrees Monday, while Galveston had a relatively mild 87, according to the National Weather Service.

More hot weather was forecast today under the influence of a persistent high pressure system. Afternoon temperatures as high as 109 were forecast for the western part of North Central Texas along the Red River and in the Big Big area along the Rio Grande. Temperatures near or over 100 were forecast for the entire state.

The weather service warned that humidity could bring increased risk of ill effects from the heat.

Overnight temperatures cooled into the 70s and 80s, with a few 60s in West Texas and the Panhandle. Marfa was the coolest overnight at 54 degrees.

Only a few scattered high clouds were reported along the Southeast Texas coast this morning.

There was a slight chance of isolated thunderstorms in West Texas tonight, forecasters said.

NATION

Rain dampened sections of the Midwest, East and South today as a heat wave held steady after breaking high temperature records in 11 cities.

Showers and thunderstorms ranged across northern Illinois, southeast Iowa and northeast Missouri.

Penny Sutcliffe top City Women's qualifier at 76

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

"Darla Smith usually shoots in the high 70s, so she'll be tougher than her qualifying score of 83 and last year in the Women's West Texas at Lubbock, I didn't beat Jo Dickson until the 18th hole after being medalist in the qualifying round."

For Penny Sutcliffe, Monday's medal qualifying round of 76 was already past history and the recent graduate of New Mexico State University was looking forward to possible opponents as the City Women's tournament moved into its match play phase today at Hogan Park.

Both Smith, a former teammate at NMSU, and Dickson, who qualified with a second low round of 80, are in the title flight, but except for Sutcliffe the seeding of the eight championship flight players isn't necessarily determined by their qualifying score.

As for sleepers, she rates both Florence Larsh and Helen Brant capable of shooting better than their qualifying 84s.

If a player shoots higher than her handicap, par (72) plus the handicap is used to determine flight score and seeding. If a player shoots below her handicap, it stands as the qualifying score. So the 86 of Stacy Owens, a 14-handicapper, will stand no matter how they figure it.

SUTCLIFFE, who is working on the staff of Midland Country Club this summer and hunting for a golf job for the fall, put together a pair of 38s for her 76, one under her five-handicap.

"I hit my driver, but none of my putts fell," she said in clinically analyzing her round. "I used a ball marker from Europe a friend had given me and it just wasn't doing the job on the greens," she explained her 35-putt round. "I may not use the marker tomorrow."

Although she is at MCC this summer, she grew up at Hogan, working summers as a member of Rex Worrell's staff. "The course is in the best shape I've ever seen it," she praised after Monday's round.

ALTHOUGH PENNY has no pro tour aspirations, "I feel I need this tournament to regain my competitive edge. Since graduating, I've been enjoying life too much. I played up at Broadmoor about a month ago and didn't do very well."

The tournament is match play and that is to Sutcliffe's liking, "In match play, it's anybody's game. You can have a bad hole and be down only one. It doesn't require the concentration of medal play. Besides, it's more fun and for me that's what golf is about."

Darla Smith would rather play medal, but not if she shoots 83s. "I didn't do anything well today, drive, chip or putt." That's how someone who normally shoots in the upper 70s might feel.

As for Sutcliffe, she's hoping history doesn't repeat. "Last year I was Women's West Texas medalist and then lost in the semifinals."

OTHER low rounds Monday, included Dede Plank, 89, and Kay Lawson, 90.

Golfers began teeing off just after 8 a.m. today and with a 45-player field, there will be five flights of play. First round losers will play consolation Wednesday and after that a loss means elimination.

The tournament winds up Thursday.

About the only thing certain this year is that there will be a new champion. Last year's winner, Ann Combes, is attending graduate school at NMSU and Susan Britton, whose 13-year reign ended, is on vacation.

For Sutcliffe, this is her first City. "In the past they've always held it in the fall and I've been at college."

Morris' streak ends, but he wins

Associated Press

Detroit's Jack Morris, whose streak was broken after 44⅔ innings without allowing an earned run, outpitched Cleveland's Ken Schrom, who lost for the first time since May 25 as the Tigers beat the Indians 5-1 Monday night.

Morris' streak began with three straight shutouts, and he allowed only an unearned run against the Minnesota Twins last Wednesday. He had last allowed an earned run in a July 4 loss to Texas. In that stretch, his earned run average dropped from 4.23 to 3.21.

Morris won his straight decision as Detroit won for the 10th time in 13 games. It was Cleveland's fourth loss in five games.

"I wouldn't advise anybody giving out that Cy Young Award yet," Tiger Manager Sparky Anderson said in alluding to Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox, who is 17-2. "They better be careful. I've seen this guy (Morris) go out and win 10 or 12 games in a row."

Morris, 12-6, allowed six hits, striking out six and walking one. Bill Campbell came in for the final two innings.

American League

Orioles 4, Rangers 3

An eighth-inning RBI single by Larry Sheets and the combined seven-hit pitching of Storm Davis and Don Aase paced Baltimore. Davis, 7-8, went seven innings to improve his career record against Texas to 9-0. Aase allowed two hits over two innings for his 27th save.

Angels 6, A's 3

California's Doug DeCinces drove in three runs with a double and homer, and Kirk McCaskill, 12-6, put an end to Oakland's seven-game winning streak. Donnie Moore got his 11th save. The Angels wasted no time getting started with Gary Pettis hitting A's starter Joaquin Andujar's first pitch of the game for his third homer of the year.

Red Sox 3, White Sox 1

A two-run homer by Don Baylor and a solo homer by Dwight Evans backed Al Nipper, 5-7, as Boston extended Chicago's losing streak to eight games. The victory was only the third in 11 games for the Red Sox. It also was the first time since July 10 that a Boston pitcher other than Clemens has won a game. Nipper, who allowed seven hits, lost his shutout bid in the eighth inning on Greg Walker's two-out RBI single.

Blue Jays 6, Royals 0

Toronto's Jim Clancy pitched a four-hitter, and Tony Fernandez drove in four runs with a triple and a homer, helping Toronto break out of an offensive slump. Clancy, 12-5, won his sixth straight game and career victory No. 100 with three strikeouts and one walk. Fernandez, the leadoff hitter, hit a two-run triple in the fifth as the Blue Jays snapped a streak of 30 straight scoreless innings. He hit a two-run home run, his fifth, off Charlie Leibrandt, 9-7, in the seventh.

Twins 6, Mariners 5

Minnesota's Kirby Puckett drove in four runs with a three-run homer and an 11th-inning single that scored Greg Gagne. Keith Atherton, 5-3, allowed one run in three innings in gaining the victory.

Brewers 5, Yankees 4

Robin Yount drove in three runs with two triples, and rookie lefthander Juan Nieves won his 10th game for Milwaukee. Nieves, 10-4, scattered seven hits and struck out five Yankees before being relieved in the seventh inning by Dan Plesac, who got his ninth save.

National League

Astros 4, Braves 2

A three-run homer by Houston's Glenn Davis with two out in the eighth inning spoiled a fine performance by Doyle Alexander, who at one point retired 15 straight batters. Davis, whose homer was his 22nd, also had an RBI single in the first. Bob Knepper, 13-7, went eight innings, allowing six hits and two runs. Dave Smith pitched the ninth for his 18th save.

Dodgers 2, Giants 1

Orel Hershiser pitched a three-hitter and singled in a run in the fourth inning. Hershiser, 10-7, struck out 10 batters to equal his best effort of the season, and walked three in recording his fifth complete game of the year and 10th career shutout. Franklin Stubbs drove in the other Dodger run.

Mets 9, Cubs 2

New York's Bob Ojeda, the major league leader in earned run average at 2.28, pitched 7⅔ innings to improve to 12-2. Howard Johnson had a three-run double to spark a four-run first inning against Chicago's Scott Sanderson. Rookie Kevin Mitchell went 3-for-3, including a solo home run. Darryl Strawberry added a two-run homer in eighth, his 16th. Ryne Sandberg and Ron Cey homered for Chicago.

Pirates 7, Expos 4

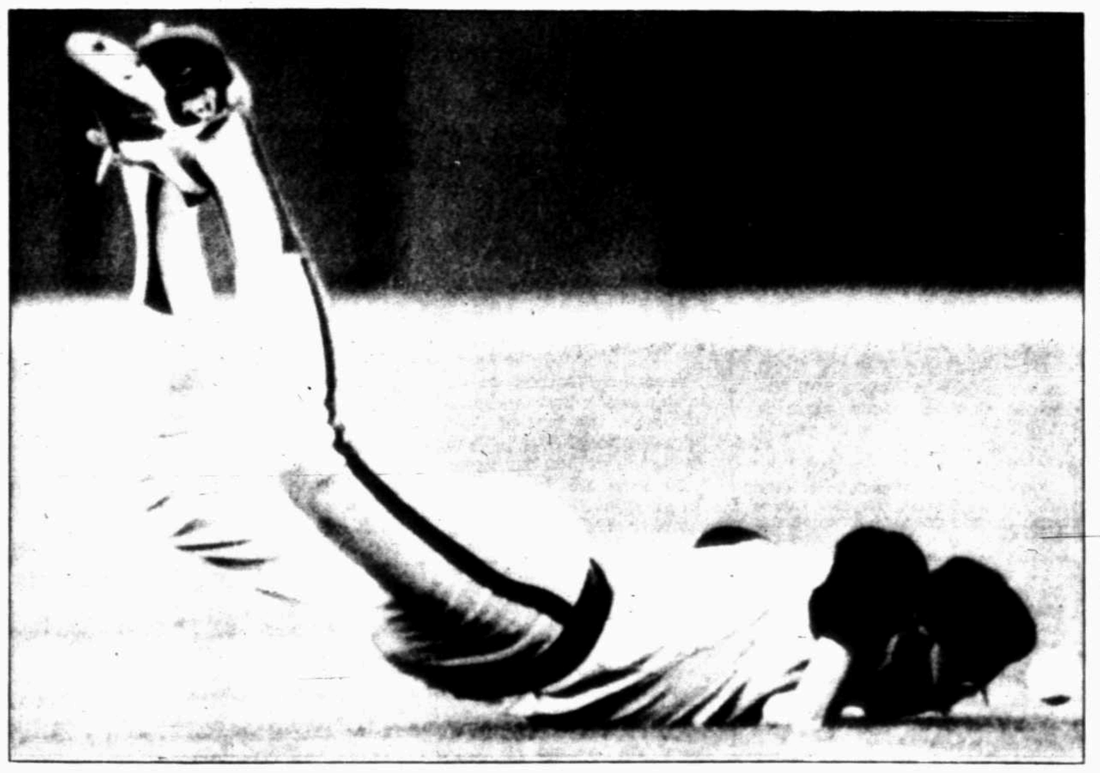

R.J. Reynolds drove in three runs with a two-run double and a single in a four-run seventh inning as Pittsburgh extended the Montreal Expos' losing streak to four games. The Pirates trailed 4-3 entering the sevegth but Joe Orsulak and Barry Bonds singled to knocked out Bryn Smith, 7-6. Bob McClure relieved, but Johnny Ray, Sid Bream, and Reynolds all hit RBI singles.

Cardinals 3, Phillies 1

Alan Knicely's first homerun of the season broke a 1-1 tie in the ninth inning, and anny Cox pitched a three-hitter as St. Louis won its seventh straight game. Cox, 5-8, struck out eight, equalling a career high, and walked none, to extend his walkless innings streak to 25. Bruce Ruffin, 3-2, had allowed only two hits through eight innings for Philadelphia.

Padres 5, Reds 2

Solo homers by Tony Gwynn, Kevin McReynolds and Jerry Royster backed Andy Hawkins, who scattered seven hits over 8⅓ innings as San Diego broke a three-game losing streak.

AP Laserphoto

California second baseman Bobby Grich can't handle this hot grounder from Oakland's Bruce Bochte, but the Angels extended their lead to four games over the Texas Rangers.

Mets blank Angels, 8-0

From Staff Reports

JACKSON, Miss. — Bill Fultz fired a four-hit shutout here Monday night to lead the Jackson Mets to an 8-0 win over the Midland Angels in Texas League baseball action.

Fultz, who raised his record to 4-3 for the year, walked only one batter and struckout six on his way to a complete game victory. The Angels never got a runner past second base in the game.

Midland's James Randall doubled to lead off the seventh inning, but Fultz went on to retire nine Angels in a row to sew up the win.

Meanwhile, the Mets erupted for five runs in the second inning to put the game away in a hurry. Angel starter Don Timberlake (5-7) took the brunt of the attack, lasting only 1⅔ innings, giving up five hits, three walks and five earned runs.

Centerfielder Shawn Abner led off the Met explosion with a walk, left fielder Jeff McKnight singled, and designated hitter Johnny Wilson blasted his second homer of the year for a quick 3-0 lead.

Midland left two runners on base in the third off Fultz when David Heath reached on an error and Jeff Schaefer followed with a single, but failed to score. The only other two hits off Fultz were singles by Kevin King and Dante Bichette.

Midland is now 3-5 on the road trip and has two more shots at the Mets tonight and Wednesday in an effort to pull even on the Eastern Division swing. This is the last time this year these two clubs will meet.

Meanwhile, pitcher Scott May helped the San Antonio Dodgers squeak by the Arkansas Travelers 3-2 to keep their winning streak going for the 11th game and stay at the top of the West Division in the Texas League.

The Angels are off Thursday before opening a short five-game homestand with San Antonio Friday at Angels Stadium.

Football fever still hasn't hit Midland fans

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Evidently, Midlanders haven't become too excited about the upcoming 1986 high school football season. Ticket sales were lagging as of Monday.

Currently, season football tickets are being sold to option holders only for fans of both Midland High and Midland Lee. Option holders are fans who owned season tickets a year ago.

As of Monday, only 300 MHS fans had renewed their options for 1986 and only 600 had renewed Lee options. Option holders have only until Friday, Aug. 8, to renew or face the possibility of losing them.

The general public will get a chance to purchase season tickets on Monday, Aug. 11, from the remaining tickets left.

Last year, Lee fans purchased all available season tickets to the tune of a record 2,696. That left the impression that there would again be no season tickets available for the general public to the Rebel games when the Aug. 11 date rolls around. However, if Lee fans don't pick up the pace, there may be a lot of season tickets left.

MHS, too, is behind last year's pace. Bulldog fans purchased 1,035 season tickets last year.

"We always have a lot of people who wait until the last minute to renew options, but I must say we're behind where we thought we would be at this time," noted Janelle Dozier, Midland athletic department secretary. "I don't know if the economy is a factor or not, but we really haven't sold what we expected. I'm sure things will pick up next week as the deadline nears."

A heavy season ticket sale was expected for both schools this year since Midland High and Midland Lee play the first district game of the year on Sept. 26 instead of the last game of the season when both or one of the clubs could be out of the district race. Also, the Lee-Permian contest will again be in Midland and the only sure way to see that game will be to have a season ticket.

MHS is also the home team when the Bulldogs face Lee and that game is included in the MHS season ticket package.

MHS season tickets are being sold for $20 for five home games while Lee season tickets are being sold for $16 that include four home games. Lee fans are also being given the option of purchasing an extra $5 ticket to include the MHS contest on the visitor's side of Memorial Stadium.

All option holders have been notified that they must renew their season tickets by Aug. 8. The general public can purchase season tickets on Aug. 11 at the Memorial Stadium ticket office, located at the northeast corner of Memorial Stadium.

All options not renewed by the 5 p.m. Aug. 8 deadline will go on sale to the general public. Those who purchase season tickets this year will also hold options on tickets for 1987.

Midland now knows real Hillin Jr.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Most Midlanders remember Bobby Hillin Jr. as a defensive lineman for the Midland High Bulldogs and West Texas football teams remember him as a gritty and pesky thorn that never approached 200 pounds on the scales.

The world will know Hillin Jr. as a racing champion after Sunday's national TV victory in the Talladega 500 when racing phenom became the youngest winner in the history of NASCAR stock car racing.

HILLIN, WHO turned 22 on June 5, is a year and nine months younger than Terry Labonte was in 1980 when he won the Southern 500 at Darlington, S.C.

"I'm just thankful," said Hillin, whose best previous finish was third on July 4 in the Firecracker 400 at Daytona Beach, Fla. "It means an awful lot to me."

Midland sports fans will catch up to the new Hillin Jr. in time and his football exploits will fade with time.

After all, Hillin Jr.'s love of racing was always above football. His grandfather, R.N. Hillin, and father, Bobby Hillin, both of Midland, love racing. Bobby Hillin once headed Hillin Racing in both sprint and Indy cars. He was the first Midlander to qualify a car for the Indianapolis 500.

Now Hillin Jr. is carrying the racing flag and won't forget the roots that led him toward what looks like a famous career.

"All my career I've been lucky," said the younger Hillin. "My dad and my grandfather helped me, especially my grandfather. He sponsored my first Winston Cup car.

"Then Harry Hyde was a big help to me," he added, referring to the man who was his first crew chief and now works with Tim Richmond. "He convinced my father that I was doing the right thing.

"The Stavola brothers (New Jersey businessmen Mickey and Bill) were the next to help me, then Bobby Allison came aboard, and finally Miller Beer. They took a chance, sticking their noses out for a 21-year-old who had never finished better than eighth. I've really been lucky the way things have fallen into place."

HIS FATHER and grandfather took a strong interest in his chosen career.

"I owe them a lot," the young Hillin said. "This will mean as much to them as it does to me."

Hillin Jr., who came to NASCAR's top division straight from the short tracks of West Texas as a 17-year-old high school MHS senior, took the lead nine laps from the end of Sunday's 188-lap, 500-mile race at Alabama International Motor Speedway.

Father, Bobby Hillin, wasn't able to attend his son's first NASCAR victory, but he watched it on TV.

"I don't get to go to many of his races and I was out of Midland Sunday, but saw the race on TV," said Hillin. "The great thing about the win was the fact that Bobby's grandfather was able to attend and see his first victory. I know that was a special moment for both of them. Needless to say, we are all proud of him.

Bobby Hillin Jr. tastes first NASCAR victory.

"I talked with him today (Monday) and Bobby is really excited. He told me before the race that he felt that he had a strong car and I felt halfway through the race that his car was strong and he wasn't really pushing it.

"I did have an anxious moment about mid-way in the race when he tried to pass Dale Earnhardt and nearly lost it, but when he made it through that, I knew he had a good chance."

Hillin Jr. couldn't have picked a better race to win. In fact, it was a record-setting day for competition, with 48 lead changes among 26 drivers. The previous mark of 18 different drivers in the lead was set in this race in 1975 and tied in the 1982 Southern 500.

"I honestly couldn't believe the way guys were driving out there at 200 miles an hour," Hillin said. "They were trading sheet metal like on a short track.

"With about 60 laps to go, everybody was racing like there was just a lap or two left. Guys were beating on each other to get the draft.

"I tried to use my head, but I tried to act like a hero once when I went under Dale Earnhardt about lap 140. I thought sure I had crashed the car. After that, I kept telling myself to take it easy."

HILLIN

He was second by lap 179 and slipped past Richmond into the lead on the first turn of lap 180.

"Once that green flag came out, my car was running so good I never had to take my foot off the floor," Hillin said. "The pedal was getting so hot that it burned my foot a little."

Hillin picked up $60,055, the biggest purse of his career, for his Stavola Brothers-Miller American Team. Hillin averaged 151.552 mph.

Ironically, teammate Allison became the oldest man ever to win a NASCAR stock car race when he won the Winston 500 in May on the same 2.66-mile, high-banked tri-oval.

Allison was among the leaders heading into the last lap when he tapped Sterling Marlin, lost control and set off a six-car melee just behind the front-running cars.

"I didn't even know it happened," Hillin said. "It was behind me."

But Hillin certainly knew about another multi-car tangle that came on the backstretch in lap 160. Harry Gant, leading the race, banged together with Phil Parsons, hit the wall and began a crash that took out contenders Geoff Bodine, Cale Yarborough, Buddy Baker and Darrell Waltrip. Only Parsons was able to continue.

In that wreck, Hillin was just behind Gant and actually bumped the back of Gant's car after it bounced off the wall.

"I don't know exactly how I got through there," he said.

Hillin, who drove right past the entrance to Victory Lane in his excitement after the race, said the oppressive heat bothered him until he took the lead.

"I had run out of sweat and it was pretty bad. But when I was leading that sucker, I didn't even know I was hot."

And now it's on to riding the raceways of America in search of career win No. 2.

Howser released from hospital

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City Royals Manager Dick Howser was released Monday from the hospital where he underwent brain surgery last week.

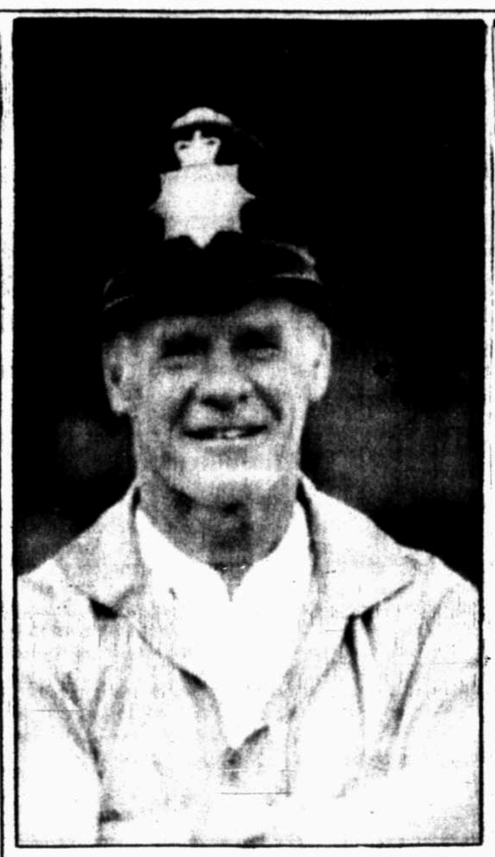

Howser will return to St. Luke's hospital Tuesday to begin radiation treatment for a malignant brain tumor. He is to undergo treatment as an outpatient five times a week for five weeks.

Dr. Charles Clough, a neurosurgeon who removed part of the tumor in a four-hour operation July 22, said Howser was responding well to treatment, according to Dean Vogelaar, spokesman for the Royals.

Howser, who guided the Royals to a seven-game World Series victory over the St. Louis Cardinals last season, was feeling good and continued to express thanks for the "kind thoughts, cards and prayers" that had been sent, Vogelaar said.

Howser, 50, was diagnosed as having the brain tumor when he went in for tests after managing the American League in the All-Star game. The tumor was found in the left frontal lobe of Howser's brain and was diagnosed as a malignant type of tumor known as a glioma.

Dallas coach Tom Landry dons a new hat as Cowboys arrive in London for exhibition game with the Chicago Bears.

'Armored rugby' arrives in London

Associated Press

American football, at one time jokingly dismissed in the British Isles as "armored rugby," is no longer the butt of English jokes.

The National Football League is sending two of its biggest names, the Super Bowl champion Chicago Bears and the Dallas Cowboys, to London for an exhibition game on Sunday, and a sellout crowd is expected at Wembley Stadium.

The Cowboys and Bears arrived in London Monday, with William "The Refrigerator" Perry's appearance drawing more attention than Coach Mike Ditka's explanation of life in the NFL.

The American version of football has made colossal strides in Europe recently, thanks to the Sky Channel and other television services that broadcast NFL game films. Over 80,000 tickets have been sold for the game, the second at Wembley between NFL teams. In 1983, the Minnesota Vikings played the St. Louis Cardinals in a stadium that used to pack them in only for soccer.

NFL

While the Cowboys and Bears look ahead to their London premier, the Cardinals and New England Patriots are getting ready for the first exhibition game of the year, Saturday's Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio.

New England signed second-round pick Vencie Glenn, a defensive back from Indiana State, on Monday, leaving only two draft choices unsigned. They are running back Reggie Dupard, the NFL team's first-round pick, and nose tackle Mike Ruth, a second-round pick. Both were away from camp for the 11th consecutive day.

The Cardinals, meanwhile, came to terms with All-American place-kicker John Lee of UCLA. Lee, a second-round selection, passed his physical Monday morning in St. Louis and signed a contract with the team.

Meanwhile, the Houston Oilers were all smiles over the newly acquired John Jefferson, who glided across the field and made a graceful leaping catch, bringing a grin to Houston receivers coach Milt Jackson.

"This team has a lot of young receivers and the best way you can teach them is to show them a picture of how it's supposed to be done," Jackson said. "John shows you that picture." Jefferson, who signed this season after playing with Cleveland last year, was a perennial All-Pro at San Diego before being traded to Green Bay.

Green Bay waived backup quarterback Jim Zorn and reached a tentative agreement with veteran quarterback Lynn Dickey, a player the team previously said wouldn't be offered a contract renewal. Dickey, 35, will tangle with Randy Wright, a third-year player, rookie Robbie Bosco and veteran Vince Ferragamo for the quarterback job.

Three more Aggies claim extra benefits

DALLAS (AP) — Three former basketball players at Texas A&M University say they took summer classes to make up for lost credits and stayed in dormitories for free at a junior college.

In a copyright story in Monday's editions, the Dallas Times Herald quoted former players Kenny Brown of Memphis, Reggie Roberts of McKinney and Brian Marshall of Windsor, Ontario, as saying they had attended Hill Junior College in Hillsboro without paying tuition or dorm fees.

Texas A&M President Frank Vandiver issued a statement earlier saying that in light of questions raised by the newspaper, "we have initiated an investigation."

Lane Stephenson, a university spokesman, said the school would have no further comment.

The Times Herald reported Sunday that six former basketball players said John Widdicombe, who was assistant coach from 1983-85, gave thousands of dollars in cash to players and arranged for them to get prepaid airline tickets. Widdicombe denied the allegations.

NCAA rules prohibit "extra benefits" for student athletes that are not available to the student body as a whole.

Brown, a guard who was the Aggies' captain and leading scorer in the 1984-85 season, said he was told by Widdicombe in 1982 that he needed to attend Hill College in the summer to be admitted to A&M in the fall because of poor grades at a previous junior college.

Brown said he took the classes, which were considerably easier than at A&M, without paying tuition or dorm fees. He said Ray Roberts, the school's athletic director, taught some of the classes and gave him small amounts of cash for meals.

Roberts denies giving Brown any cash and said he had no knowledge of any Aggie players attending Hill for free.

Roberts and Allen Boehm, a dean at Hill College, said a large number of athletes from A&M and other schools took mini-courses at the college where they could obtain three hours credit in two weeks by taking a class four hours a day, six days a week.

Brown said he took a baseball class in which the instructors "just went over the rules and stuff. It was so simple. It was kind of ridiculous. It was kind of a joke."

Dollar falters

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in early trading today. Gold prices were mixed.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to a closing 155.70 yen from Monday's 157.20. Later, in London, it was quoted at 156.20 yen.

Tokyo dealers said the dollar's latest decline was due to speculative selling. The closing price was the lowest since last Tuesday when the dollar ended trading at a post-World War II record low of 155.30 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—2.1197 West German marks, down from 2.1355

—1.7025 Swiss francs, down from 1.7205

—6.8575 French francs, down from 6.9075

—2.3890 Dutch guilders, down from 2.4030

—1,456.00 Italian lire, down from 1,466.50

—1.3870 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3882.

In London, the dollar also fell against the British pound, which at $1.4830 was more expensive than late Monday's $1.4740.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $354.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $353.20, but then fell back. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $353.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $353.60, compared with $353.50 late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $4.63 to close at a bid $352.92.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.03 a troy ounce, up from $5.02 late Monday.

LTV takes care of insurance problem

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Following a Senate Judiciary Hearing on the issue, LTV Corp. announced it has made arrangements with two life insurance companies to offer retiree-paid group medical insurance coverage to the company's retirees and surviving spouses.

The agreement with Metropolitan Life and John Hancock Mutual Life insurance companies would provide alternatives to the company-paid medical company that LTV Corp. has said it cannot continue under federal bankruptcy protection.

Medical insurance to thousands of retirees was terminated July 17 when LTV filed for federal bankruptcy protection.

The company Monday mailed letters notifying retirees of the alternative coverage, which would be retroactive to July 17, the company said in a news release late Monday.

The coverage would be available regardless of applicants' medical conditions and would cost $39 a month for those eligible for Medicare and $132 for those who are not eligible.

The company's announcement followed testimony Monday by insurance industry officials at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing.

The only ways insurance coverage could be resumed to the retired workers would be if LTV would pay an advance for expected medical costs, if the bankruptcy court orders LTV and the insurance carriers to provide the coverage, or if individuals purchase plans on their own, said Jim Patton, vice president of Blue Cross of Northern Ohio.

Patton said individuals purchasing their own insurance may be offered the group rate, representing a substantial savings.

"They are in trouble," Patton said of the retirees. "They need help, and we are pledged to do everything possible to see these people have the health care they so obviously need."

Ohio Sens. John Glenn and Howard Metzenbaum, both Democrats, have co-sponsored legislation requiring LTV to pay medical insurance benefits to the retirees, pending a court order.

United Mine Workers President Richard Trumka, prior to Patton's testimony, urged Congressional leaders to stop allowing LTV to commit "fraud" by canceling benefits to retirees.

Spring Hill mayor George Jones measures State Route 247. Jones says many of the town's roads aren't wide enough to accommodate traffic from the $3.5 billion Saturn plant.

Tennessee falls down on Saturn promises

SPRING HILL, Tenn. (AP) — A year ago, Spring Hill cheered after General Motors Corp. chose the small town for its planned Saturn car plant, but this year the windfall doesn't look as rosy, officials say.

Mayor George Jones says the state has failed to keep promises that helped attract the $3.5 billion plant to the town of 1,100 residents 30 miles south of Nashville.

"We're caught in a predicament that we're a small town, we're a small government, and the big fish always eat the little ones," Jones said.

Spring Hill is the home of the largest one-time corporate investment in U.S. history, but the town needs better roads, more water and schools to cope with the influx of the plant's 6,000 employees and their fami'NiT d1?1s mbPIPnother couple of months and then we'll be out in the cold."

The controversy comes even before GM has set a date to begin construction.

The company is "following up on their part," Jones said. "The state's the one that made all the promises that didn't come across."

GM already has paid Spring Hill $125,000 in lieu of taxes, but Jones said the money has gone to hire legal counsel and five neQ ten up by the police alone," Jones said.

The mayor blames state Economic and Community Development Commissioner William H. Lonc f's problems, including its inability to get a state grant to put in a sidewalk for schoolchildren.

"We're being put off because Commissioner Long is mad at me because I pushed the issue to make them stand behind their promises. He's taking it out on the people because I stood up to him," Jones said.

After the site was chosen, the mayr threatened to annex the 2,000-acre property if Spring Hill did not get its share of in-lieu-of-tax payments. GM threatened to find another location.

The company eventually agreed to pay Spring Hill $250,000 in each of the next 40 years, plus $1.7 million in capital funds to upgrade roads and other city services.

Unocal, Arco report steep earnings decline

From Staff and Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Unocal Corp., blaming lower fuel prices and higher interest costs from its takeover fight against T. Boone Pickens Jr., said Monday its earnings plunged by 71 percent in the second quarter of the year and 65 percent for the half.

Atlantic Richfield Co. reported second-quarter earnings of $150 million, or $.83 a share, compared to a net loss of $1.1 billion, or $5.06 a share, during the same period last year.

During the second quarter of 1985, California's second-largest oil company reported a $1.5 billion charge against earnings. Without the charge, earnings during the previous year's second quarter would have totaled $402 million, or $1.79 a share.

Unocal's chairman and chief executive, Fred Hartley, also warned that without a tariff on low-priced imported oil, the nation's reliance on foreign oil could increase from 33 percent last year to 67 percent by 1991.

Los Angeles-based Unocal, parent of Union Oil Co. of California, earned $34.6 million, or $.30 per share, on revenue of $2.1 billion for the three months ended June 30, compared the the year-earlier period when it earned $120.4 million, or $.83 per share, on revenue of $2.89 billion.

For the half, it earned $104.8 million, or $.90 per share, on revenue of $4.38 billion, compared to $301.1 million, or $1.89 per share, on revenue of $5.68 billion a year ago.

Hartley said major factors in the decline were sharply lower oil prices, domestic natural-gas production and chemicals earnings, as well as pre-tax interest costs, which rose 25 percent to $122 million for the quarter and 82 percent to $247 million for the half.

That sentiment was echoed by Arco's chairman and CEO Lodwrick Cook, who attributed his company's decline in real income from continued operations to steadily falling international oil prices.

"There is no question that earnings will be depressed further if prices remain at current levels," Cook said.

Unocal last year took on $4.2 billion in debt to buy back one-third of its stock as part of the company's successful effort to thwart a takeover attempt by Pickens of Amarillo, Texas.

"The second-quarter results reflect the full impact of the dramatic fall in world crude-oil prices," Hartley said. "Today, each barrel of oil we produce sells for approximately 40 percent of the price we received just seven months ago."

The company has slashed its 1986 capital-spending budget, of which about 75 percent goes for exploration, to $1.2 billion. In 1985, the budget had been $1.85 billion. Unocal also has trimmed staff by early retirement, frozen hiring and shut down marginally profitable operations.

"I regret that neither Congress nor the administration has taken any action to protect the American petroleum industry from Saudi Arabia's predatory pricing, which is driving down crude-oil prices," Hartley said.

He said large cutbacks in domestic exploration and production will make the United States increasingly dependent on imported oil, adding. "This increased dependence on insecure foreign supplies poses a serious threat to the nation's security and economic stability."

Arco's second-quarter charge in 1985 was part of a restructuring plan that included a $4 billion buyback of company stock and thousands of layoffs.

For the six months ended June 30, Arco reported earnings of $449 million, or $2.47 a share, compared to a net loss of $747 million, or $3.33 a share, for the first half of 1985.

Cook said income from continuing operations, without the charge, would have totaled $775 million, or $3.34 a share.

White eyes interstate banking

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White is studying proposals to allow interstate banking for the first time in Texas history.

However, White said Monday, he isn't ready to endorse suggested legislation that would allow out-of-state banks to buy Texas financial institutions.

"I don't want to put Texas banks on the auction block," White told a news conference. "I want to make certain that we're going to have a strong banking system."

The governor blamed the problems facing many Texas banks on the worldwide oil price drop he blames on Saudi Arabia, which some analysts say is glutting the market to drive down prices.

"If the price of oil goes back to $26 a barrel, the banks are in good shape, the real estate market's in good shape, the oil and gas industry's back at work, unemployment plummets, and state revenues continue to support services," White said.

Last week, State Banking Commissioner James Sexton said he is drafting a bill that could be considered by the special legislative session next month that would allow interstate banking.

While Texas law does prohibit ownership by out-of-state banks, Sexton noted that 38 other states allow some form of interstate banking.

But White indicated he isn't fully convinced.

"I've been talking with bankers from throughout Texas and members of various (banking) associations. I am trying to determine the proper course of action necessary to see that our strong banking institutions will continue," he said.

"I do not want to put Texas at the jeopardy of New York banks," White said.

University researches brine water

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Eleven energy companies are providing financial support to a University of Oklahoma chemistry professor who is tackling one of the oil field's oldest and most frustrating problems, according to the university.

Gordon Atkinson is studying ways of dealing with troublesome brines encounted by oil and gas explorers in nearly every petroleum reservoir.

Atkinson describes the brines as "essentially ancient sea water," and says they can produce solid materials capable of clogging well casings or closing pores in reservoir rocks.

Atkinson is now in the second year of the three-year study. He said he believes he will be able to advise the companies with a way of predicting when the brines will cause trouble.

"We're trying to bring modern chemistry to bear on these problems and give industry the tools it needs to anticipate them," he said.

"We're taking the most modern, up-to-date theoretical approach available to create a computer program that predicts what will happen when brines are encountered."

Exxon violations cost $143 million

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Energy Department said Monday it has reached a proposed settlement with Exxon Corp. calling for the company to pay $143 million to resolve allegations of regulatory pricing violations.

The plan calls for Exxon to pay $36.9 million to settle alleged violations involving potential overcharges for crude oil and petroleum products during a price control period that ended Jan. 28, 1981, the department said.

Another provision calls for Exxon to pay $106.1 million into an account maintained by a federal court and made up of payments from oil producers accused of incorrectly classifying some of their wells.

Nissan may offer rebates to hold sales

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Nissan, which has raised car prices in the United States by 11 percent since last fall, probably will have to offer incentives such as rebates to consumers to keep sales from falling further, a company official said Monday.

The price hikes, a reaction to a 50 percent increase in the value of the Japanese yen to the dollar in the same period of time, began affecting car sales here in June, said Mitsuya Goto, general manager of public affairs for Nissan's international division.

Nissan's sales of the passenger cars it imports were down by 2 percent in June, to 52,031, compared with levels of a year earlier. Nissan also builds cars in the United States for sale here.

Speaking at a four-day auto industry conference, Goto said, "We'll probably have to resort to incentives to sell our cars in the U.S." He gave no indication of when such incentives might be offered or what form they would take.

Although Nissan and other Japanese car makers have offered low interest-rate financing deals on trucks and have offered discounts to dealers on cars, such a program would mark the first time a major Japanese automaker offered incentives directly to consumers on passenger cars, a practice that has become commonplace among domestic car manufacturers.

Goto said the price increases so far have enabled Nissan to recover only 10 to 15 percent of the profits lost because of the yen's appreciation.

Toyota's U.S. car sales were down by less than 1 percent, to 47,241, in June compared with last year's levels. The largest of the importers said it had no plans to offer sales incentives on cars or trucks, said a spokeswoman in California.

One industry expert told the conference that the impact of price increases has not hurt sales greatly because of continued strong demand for Japanese cars.

Suburban drainage, library sale topics of commissioner's meeting

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Does anybody want to buy a used library for about $5-million?

Does anyone care whether or not Greenwood, now blistering in heat, gets inundated by another 100-year rain, which, theoretically wasn't due until 2068? It came 82 years premature. Midland was subjected to severe flash flooding in 1968.

The 1986 rains, which appeared to close out a seven-month drought, thoroughly cleansed the Greenwood community with "sheets" of runoff, caused flooding and created lakes.

Surveyor Richard "Dick" Shelton of Greenwood is determined to get relief via improved drainage channels and roads even if a "sympathetic" Midland County Commissioners' Court feels virtually helpless to solve drainage problems in Greenwood Estates — a flood-prone housing addition east of Midland.

Meanwhile, the county's 28-year-old library will be included in a sealbid offering by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), which intends to sell off remnants of pipe dreams of the now-defunct First National Bank (FNB) of Midland.

The FDIC took over the 93-year-old independent bank on Oct. 14, 1983, after the bank failed due to soured energy loans and optimism of ever-rising petroleum prices, which, instead of spiraling upward, took a nose dive and brought about the bank's crash.

THE FDIC PLANS to sell what was the bank's North Super Block and South Super Block and other properties, which it values at $14-million, via sealed bids in early September.

Betty Byrom, FDIC's section chief of owned real estate, on Monday proposed that the county's library property be included in the offering.

The commissioners, who are entertaining the idea of a windfall which would finance a new library, essentially said "Why not?" after placing conditions on the sealed-bid sale.

Any library sale would be predicated "with the hope being we'll get enough (money) to build a new library," said Commissioner Wally Craig.

Commissioner Durward Wright said that the commissioners "don't know exactly what the replacement cost would be" but estimated that $5-million would cover land and building costs.

"That might run considerably less, and it might run considerably more," Wright said.

"There's too many variables," said Craig.

Commissioner Win Brown noted that the county "is not in the business to make a profit on real estate."

"We're not either," said FDIC's Ms. Byrom.

THE COMMISSIONERS conditionally agreed to join the FDIC in the sealed-bid offer:

— The county would have the right to "reject all bids."

— If the county did accept an offer, then the county would be given "time to obtain other quarters."

"We could be advertising to sell this thing (library) with or without the FDIC," noted Craig.

Ms. Byrom said that the FDIC would be advertising the offering in August in the Reporter-Telegram and in The Wall Street Journal.

"Better the coverage, better off we are," Wright said.

Construction of the 28,000-square-foot two-tier downtown public library started in 1957 and was completed in 1958 at a $400,000 cost.

Promises of a new five-level grandiose public library loomed in 1981 at peak of the most-recent oil boom. At that time, FNB President Charles Fraser announced that "the first $5.5-million of the construction cost would be borne" by the bank or its assign.

In 1981, when the economy was booming, bank leaders had envisioned incorporating a new library in the bank's architectural scheme of its downtown Eagle Plaza, which would be highlighted by one and possibly two 40-story bank towers.

But in March 1983, seven months before the ailing bank failed, the economic "uncertainty of the times" forced FNB to set aside its pledge to aid the county in building a new library. The bank had planned to lease library space, and with that rental income, the county would pay off revenue bonds which would finance the library's construction.

AND THE UNCERTAINTY of just when more heavy rains would fall and result in more flood damage caused Shelton to petition the commissioners for relief.

"We stand to lose everything we have" in the Greenwood Estates housing addition, he said. The house of Domingo and Ramonia Lopez was heavily damaged by the flooding, he noted.

Shelton, who said that he's "not from Texas, and I don't understand flash floods," complained that housing developer Don Huffman did not follow through with his commitment to draft a drainage plan for the 80-lot Greenwood Estates, which is about 10 percent developed and occupied, after the Commissioners' Court in 1982 approved the plat "subject to a drainage plan being presented to the court" and roads being built to county specifications. Shelton said that no drainage plan was submitted or implemented.

Further, he held that it is incumbent on the county to enforce the Huffman-Midland County agreement and to ensure the construction of good roads and an effective drainage system.

In addition, Shelton asked that the county place a moratorium on Greenwood housing sub-division development until the drainage problem is solved. However, County Attorney Mark H. Dettman said that the county doesn't have "any authority to do that." Of low-lying or flood-prone areas, "It's part 'buyer beware,'" Dettman said. "It's unusual in a desert for people to have flood problems."

Commissioners evasive on Painter's recent trip

From Staff Reports

If the Midland County commissioners on Monday discussed Sheriff Gary Painter's recent trip to Washington, D.C., to apprise federal officials of alleged terrorist training camps in Mexico, they aren't talking.

The commissioners supposedly were to discuss the trip and the expense — $881.43 — in a closed executive session.

But the sheriff wasn't around to answer any questions. He was in El Paso for the Sheriffs Association of Texas conference.

If they did discuss the trip, they took no formal action.

They did go into executive session for a brief time Monday.

Commissioner Durward Wright simply noted that a news article in Sunday's Reporter-Telegram reported that the Commissioners' Court was "to discuss Painter's county-funded trip." He made no further comment.

Last week, Painter said that his report to federal officials "was in the best interest of Midland County" and that he considered the trip, which included $594 in air fare, was "law-enforcement business." Painter said that he had gleaned reliable information on five terrorist training camps in Mexico as a result of a four-month investigation.

County Judge Bill Ahders, a retired special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said that Painter could have reported the information to the FBI office here and the FBI in turn would have forwarded the information to Washington.

The sheriff's budget includes funds for travel expenses.

Sting operation meets criticism

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A large scale sting operation — resulting in the deportation Saturday of several dozen illegal aliens from across West Texas — met criticism from civil libertarians and local officials who say the ploy was deceiving.

At least 68 illegal aliens were booted out of the country Saturday after being lured into the arms of federal agents at Midland Regional Air Terminal on a bogus chance they might win $25,000 and a myriad of other prizes.

Immigration and Naturalization Service agents lured the aliens who had arrest warrants pending against them to an airport building.

The aliens — mostly natives of Mexico — were notified in a letter the agency mailed out they would receive $1,000 and a chance to win a custom-built motor home or $25,000 cash if they showed up at the airport.

Many of the illegal aliens "have had arrest warrants pending for several years," said Al Giugni, director of the INS district office in El Paso.

"They took advantage of our court system and when they lost, they went into hiding to escape deportation."

INS spokesman Mario Ortiz said many of those arrested were flown to the Mexican border, marking the first time an INS plane had been used in deporting illegal aliens from the West Texas area.

At least 44 aliens from Mexico, Argentina and Chile were arrested and 24 freinds or family members also were apprehended when they failed to produce proof of U.S. citizenship, Ortiz said.

INS officials said the sting operation was devised because of widespread complaints of officials and citizens throughout West Texas that illegal aliens were getting jobs that should be going to residents that needed work.

Ortiz the sting was three months in the making. All of the aliens contacted, at their last known address, already had been ordered out of the United States after their deportation appeals were rejected.

Civil libertarians complained that the sting operation was unfair.

"It was a cruel joke to raise their expectations like that and then arrest them and their family members," Gerald Lopez, an Odessa lawyer affiliated with the American Civil Liberties Union and the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, told the Associated Press.

Midland City Councilman Orralia Corrales said the sting operation was "inhumane."

"While I am aware that they were here illegally, I do believe that they should have been notified and given time to leave the country."

"When the federal government stoops to lying, who can these people trust? I think there are other ways this thing can be resolved," Mrs. Corrales said.

Edia Hernandez, president of the Midland League of United Latin American Citizens, said many of the aliens "really do pay into the system" even though they are here illegally.

Mrs. Hernandez said "few American citizens want the type of jobs" held by illegal aliens.

"Many of them are starving. They have to have somewhere to live," she said.

Study says smokers may be thinner

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Though smokers may be asked to cough up 50 percent more in federal cigarette taxes as the result of an unexpected vote by the Senate Finance Committee last week, a study directed at the University of Lausanne in Switzerland concluded those cigarette smokers may be a bit trimmer than their non-puffing counterparts.

The study, conducted by Dr. Angela Hofstetter and published in the New England Journal of Medicine, found that people who smoke 24 cigarettes a day expend 10 percent more energy than those who don't smoke.

At this rate, researchers believe reformed smokers might be expected to gain as much as 22 pounds, assuming their food consumption doesn't change.

The fact that people often gain weight when they stop smoking is well known, but the reason for this is a matter of controversy. Some experts believe it occurs because they start to eat more.

However, the new study argues that some of the weight gain results from a reduced expenditure of energy.

Dr. Tulsi Singh, a Midland family practitioner, said the study's findings are true.

"The nicotine stimulates the central nervous system and adrenal gland, which in turn, produces an increased amount of adrenaline in the blood stream.

"Adrenaline gets the metabolism moving and calories burning — it primes your muscles and pumps up the cardiovascular and respiratory system.

"The adrenaline is what's responsible for the fight, flight, fright and frolic in us," Singh said.

Frank McFarlin, director of the Behavioral Modification Institute in Midland, which deals largely with helping people stop smoking or lose weight, agreed that smoking raises the body's metabolism.

He said smokers may also find it easier to lose weight because it is a habit that subconsciously relieves the body of tension.

"Without the cigarettes to relieve their tension, they're eating more as a means of compensation," McFarlin said.

Businessmen say diversification will need private funds

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

If Midland wants to diversify its economy, it needs a shot in the arm — and funding — from the private sector, say several area businessmen.

They say the city cannot wait on the Chamber of Commerce to lure businesses to the area.

"Silicon Valley was not built on industrial lots by the Chamber of Commerce," said Russell Ramsland Jr., whose company makes and sells semiconductor materials.

"Silicon Valley was built because of access to learning centers and universities and local businesses willing to invest," he said.

Last week Ramsland served on a panel that examined the city's need to vary its economy.

The panel, comprised of eight Permian Basin residents, was held at Midland College Thursday.

The city needs a private sector that is willing to invest in something other than oil and real estate, Ramsland said.

To diversify, Midland should follow Amarillo's example and set up a citywide business venture fund, he said.

The fund would create a pool of money that entrepreneurs could borrow from, he said.

"It's not that the money is not here — it's the will to invest is not here," Ramsland said.

Steve Hardin, manager with the Chamber of Commerce's Economic Development, said the city has no local-based venture fund.

But he added, "It would be an excellent idea. It would certainly be worth looking into."

Roger Robles, an insurance agent and president of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, agreed Midland is lacking private sector investment for diversification.

"We all need to take some calculated risks. It's just a wait-and-see attitude. Even the people who are not hurting are extremely cautious to the extent they are at a standstill.

"We need to overcome that. It has to be an attitude change because things are going to get worse if we don't do anything."

Getting the private sector to invest in industries other than oil will be a "long, slow process," Hardin said.

"It's just a long, slow educational process. It's certainly something that won't change overnight."

Chasing after little-known government contracts is another way Midland can vary its economy, said the director of a local center that helps businesses tread through federal red tape.

"There are these numerous contracts that people here are qualified to get. But nobody has wanted the hassle of doing business with the government," said David Thayer, director of the Permian Basin Bid Center.

"Anyone that can do business with Chevron can do business with the federal government," Thayer said.

Interest in government contracts is growing since the oil slump, he said.

The center, which opened in January, has 245 clients pursuing contracts and 11 have been awarded, Thayer said.

Government contracts can offer short-term relief to the oil downturn, he said.

"To reduce the impact of the oil downturn is a legitimate objective of government contracts. To be able to replace the petroleum industry is asking too much."

Jury sentences man to die for kidnap-murder charges

ANAHUAC (AP) — After deliberating about five hours, a jury sentenced a 32-year-old Winnie man to die by injection for the October kidnap-murder of a High Island tavern owner.

Johnny James, who earlier had glared at prosecutors and reporters, stared straight ahead, showing no emotion as State District Judge Carroll Wilborn pronounced the death sentence Monday.

James' wife, Esther, and other relatives sobbed, as did three women jurors when the sentence was read.

Defense Attorney Ron Marsh said he would appeal the sentence.

"I'm disappointed in the verdict," said Marsh, who said in his final argument that James could be rehabilitated if given a life sentence.

Jurors had a choice between the death penalty and life in prison when deciding James' fate. Jurors said they believed the murder of Barbara Harrington Mayfield was deliberate and James posed a threat to society unless he was executed.

Jurors needed only 37 minutes Wednesday to convict James in the Oct. 22 kidnap and murder of Ms. Mayfield, 47.

He also is charged with robbing, kidnapping, raping and shooting a 24-year-old Winnie convenience store clerk.

"It's a relief and I'm glad it's over," she said. "Now I can straighten up my back. It's been kind of bent over since all this happened."

District Attorney Mike Little and Assistant District Attorney Georgia Clapper said the brutality of Ms. Mayfield's death and James' past criminal record, left little doubt that he has a tendency toward violence.

Commissioners vote to bar vendor sales from roadside

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday voted to bar vendors from hawking their wares from roadside locations that are on county rights-of-way.

The action by a majority of Commissioners Court members on a resolution presented by County Engineer Don Bonifay means signs will be posted and sheriff's deputies will be expected to runoff anyone who sets up shop to sell fruit, vegetables, hay or whatever alongside county roads.

According to state law vendors are prohibited from setting up shop along county rights-of-way without approval of Commissioners Court but the law has never been strictly enforced.

The resolution was prompted by what County Judge Jan Fisher has described as the complaints of "legitimate owners" of businesses who claim vendors are competing against them.

Perry and Mary Kirklen, who have operated Mary's Burgers, 5900 W. 16th St., for about 21 years, asked the Ector County sheriff's office to make vendors parked across the street from their business move.

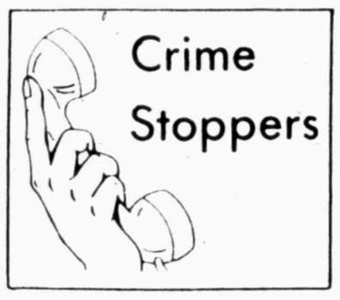

Among those asked to move was 75-year-old Wilbur W. Tindol, a fruit vendor who has been parking in the vicinity of West 16th Street and FM 1936 for some 10 years. Tindol claims this is the first year he's had any trouble.

Robert Caller, another vendor, claims the resolution "restricts entrepeneurship."

Ruddy Ballard, who operates Westside Produce on West 16th Street near the intersection of FM 1936 says the vendors don't park in front of her place, but she's against them "pulling up side the road."

He is described as a black male, five feet six to five feet eight inches tall, with a slender build. At the time of the robbery he was wearing a tan ski mask, a long-sleeve beige sweater and faded Levis blue jeans.

Information about the robbery could be worth $1,000 cash if it leads to an arrest and felony indictment. Crime Stoppers also pays cash rewards for other felony crimes.

Crime Stoppers can be reached in Midland at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS.

Oldest working city barbershop a tribute

By JILL WENDHOLT

LAKE JACKSON (AP) — The traditional red, white and blue striped pole outside the brown brick building stands as a salute to the past when the local barbershop was more than tufts of hair and dollops of shaving cream.

W.M. Wilcox opened the Lake Jackson barbershop in 1947. Today, it is the oldest working barbershop in the city.

"The barbershop used to be a gatherin' place in my time, where friends got together," the 76-year-old Wilcox says.

On Saturdays, men from all over town would gather at the shop, creating a sort of men's club. Etiquette dictated that if you took your hat off, that meant you wanted a cut or shave; if you left your hat on, that meant you came to chat or play checkers.

From early morning until supper time, men lined up for cuts. With a nod, they sank into one of the three heavily padded chairs and relaxed as the barber snipped at cowlicks and curls.

Wilcox pulls two album leaves from a manila envelope and points to black-and-white snapshots. In one frame, a young rascal squirmed as he got his first haircut.

"Now he must be 50 years old," he says. "You cut their children and their children. It's just a habit."

The barbershop has changed hands four times in 39 years, but the owners have remained friends. Call them barber buddies, but Wilcox, Ed Stevens, Bennie Hodges and Charles Kilsby remember snips and snippets from the old days with all the humor and warmth of a Norman Rockwell painting.

On the shelves behind the chairs are the old-style metal shears and a crude shaving blade that once were the tools of the trade, before blow dryers and buzz clippers surged onto the scene. Back then, tonics and grease held hair back instead of mousse and gels. Most men wanted a simple trim around the ears, not a fancy style.

Stevens, 86, was a barber for 66 years and ran the shop from 1957 to 1960. He had to stop cutting hair a few years ago. The problem was his eyes, he said.

But in the eyes of his buddies, he is the sage of snippers.

"He's barbered here longer than any other barber in the state of Texas," Hodges says.

Stevens perks up. "I began barbering in 1919, when I was 19 years old. A haircut was 50 cents. That was a good year," he says.

During the Depression, cuts got as low as 25 cents.

A sign taped to the mirror behind a barber chair reads "All haircuts $7.50." And here it is 1986 and the flat top is back again.

Hodges, 48, took over the business in 1965 and worked steadily until 1973, when he leased the shop for a few years.

Now the shop runs under the name Custom Cuts by Charles, referring to Charles Kilsby, 47.

Hodges and Kilsby are the new generation of barbers. But they miss the days when barbershops were beehives of activity, when Saturdays were so busy that they couldn't eat or take a bathroom break.

Both men started in the barber business when they were 19 years old. It was a trade that required an apprenticeship. A distinct pecking order was part of the training.

The owner's chair always was the front chair, closest to the large plate glass window. You started at the back and worked your way forward and there was real competition for business, both men say.

"There's no competition between barbershops now," Kilsby says. "Your competiton is across the street." He nods his head toward a beauty salon.

"In the 1960s, that's when we got hurt. The Beatles is what ruined barbering.

AP Laserphoto

Charles Kilsby, Bennie Hodges, Ed Stevens and W.M. Wilcox all have owned and operated the barber shop at 18a Circle Way in Lake Jackson. The barbershop has changed hands four times in 39 years, but the owners have remained friends and remember the snips and snippets from the old days with all the humor and warmth of a Norman Rockwell painting.

Police: One man hospitalized after early Monday shooting

Police Roundup

From Staff Reports

One man remains hospitalized in satisfactory condition following a shooting early Monday at a Midland nightclub, according to Midland police.

William Harold Jones, 22, 1500 Butternut Lane, suffered a gunshot wound to the hand and is in satisfactory condition. Damon Polk, 21, also 1500 Butternut Ln., suffered a gunshot wound to the scalp and was treated and released.

According to police, the shooting occurred about 12:20 a.m. at the Playmate Club, 200 S. Lee, when an argument began in the parking lot between Jones, Polk, and another man, described as a black male between 20 and 23 years old. Police said the suspect had been involved in another argument with at least one of the shooting victims July 26.

In other reports, items valued at more than $7,000 were reported stolen from a Midland residence Tuesday, apparently sometime between 8:45 a.m. and 12:05 p.m. Dorothy Copeland, 805 W. Golf Course Rd., told police a coin collection valued at $2,500, wedding and engagement rings valued at $2,700, $1,000 cash, a gold necklace valued at $300, a pearl necklace valued at $200, three rings valued at $200, and other jewelry valued at $200 were taken.

Reports said a back door was kicked in to gain entry.

Odessa police say veteran's resignation not in

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police Chief Alan Stewart said today he has not received the resignation of a 16-year veteran who was convicted Friday of driving while intoxicated.

Stewart said Lt. Tony Suttle, 36, told him Friday he planned to submit his resignation Monday but he had heard nothing from him as of late this morning.

Howard County Judge Milton L. Kirby Friday sentenced Suttle to two years probation, fined him $300 and assessed him $147 in court costs. Suttle could have been sentenced to as much as two years in jail and a maximum fine of $2,000 on the misdemeanor conviction.

Suttle was arrested May 3 as he rode his motorcycle on the Interstate 20 north service road in Big Spring.

Suttle, who has been head of the Uniform Patrol and Traffic Division, was placed on administrative leave with pay by Stewart May 5, then went on leave without pay July 8 when accrued vacation time was used up.

Under Texas law, a person convicted of driving while intoxicated is prohibited from working as a law enforcement officer.

Stewart said the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education (TECLOSE) will revoke Suttle's certification as a peace officer, which means Suttle will have to resign or be terminated since a peace officer can't be employed by a law enforcement agency with certification.

The chief said, under TECLOSE rules, Suttle would be permitted request reinstatement, probably after about two years and a voluntary resignation would look much better than termination.

Sheriff's deputies probing alleged lounge robbery, kidnapping, rape

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County sheriff's deputies are investigating the alleged robbery of a West Odessa lounge early today and the apparent kidnapping and rape of a 30-year-old barmaid.

Capt. Gene Kloss said the sheriff's office was notified about 2:30 a.m. today that the door's of Jean's Lounge, 2200 FM 1936, were found open and the barmaid's car was missing. Kloss said her shoes were found on the floor of the lounge and $202 was missing from the cash register.

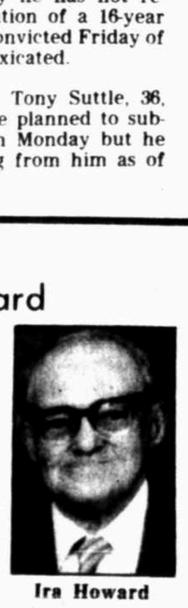

Kloss said the lounge's owner, Jean Mabery, received a call from the missing barmaid about 7:40 a.m. today. The woman told Ms. Mabery she was in Tovah, in Reeves County. She said a man in the bar around closing time had taken her and her car and raped her before she managed to get away from him near Tovah. Kloss said the woman's car has been recovered but officers won't know exactly what happened until they've had a chance to talk with the woman.

He said investigation so far indicates a man was sitting in the lounge around closing time at 2 a.m. The man was described by a witness as a white male, 26-to-27-years-old, about 5-feet 10-inches to 5-feet 11-inches tall, weighing about 190 pounds.

Kloss said the lounge's owner had gone to Tovah to get the barmaid this morning and deputies would interview her sometime today.

FUNDING

Midland will never have a completely diversified economy, but pursuing other industries can decrease the city's dependence on oil, Hardin said.

"Midland is a petroleum city and will always be based around the energy industry. We can decrease our dependence on the energy industry, but it won't be to a great degree," Hardin said.

To help Midland diversify during an "ideal" time with low land prices and cheap labor, the chamber is undertaking a target industry study.

The study, to be completed in the fall, will identify an industry that will fit into the city's economic situation, Hardin said.

Ramsland said electronic plants would fit in well with Midland's economy.

However, Ramsland said his company is overlooking Midland as a site for its next pilot plant because "there is not much financial support here."

Robles said while other businesses should be brought in, existing businessman need to be given a chance to expand and create other enterprises.

"The concern is always looking to attract new businesses and some feel we're not addressing the needs of existing businesses here."

Midland's unused manufacturing capability due to the oil slowdown could attract metal working trades, Thayer said.

Many metal working companies below production because of the oil slump could make pitches for government contracts to make machine parts, he said.

VENDOR

Precinct 3 Commissioner Gerrid Bowen expressed the belief the vendors aren't interferring with private enterprise, that if the vendors are taxpayers "they have their right of way too."

Precinct 3 Commissioner Bryan Henderson, saying if the vendors set up on private property there's nothing the county can do, added that county right-of-way wasn't acquired for vendors to "set up shop."

Similar complaints earlier this year about vendors operating vacant areas and business establishments within the city limits prompted Odessa City Council members to pass a city ordinance requiring all vendors to obtain permits.

SMOKERS

Singh said he didn't want people to use this as an excuse to keep smoking.

"Many people may be slimmer because of the cancers eating away at their body," Singh said.

"We have known for years that smoking in pregnant women causes fetal stunting, so I'm not at all surprised about the findings of the study."

MEETING

"Any more development that is done without adequate planning will cause more problems," Shelton said. "We're still talking about the health, safety, and welfare" of people living in the Greenwood area. "I feel the commissioners are sympathetic to our problems."

Hair takes a beating from summer sun's rays

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Soaking up some rays may be the essence of summer, but while you're relaxing, your hair is taking a beating.

"The sun does enormous damage to the hair," says Philip Kingsley, trichologist and hair authority. "One of the most common effects of too much sun is severe dryness. People know when their skin is being damaged by the sun's rays. They can see the tanning and burning as it occurs. But while people can see the bleaching out and highlighting effects of the sun on their hair after it's happened, they don't notice it burning at the time."

According to Kingsley, hair grows 1-2 an inch every 28 days. "This means the ends of your hair have been through one, maybe two summers already," he says. "There is a lot of cumulative damage there. And that damage remains until you cut it off."

Don't panic, though. You don't have to stay indoors for the rest of the summer or snip your locks into a short coif to have healthy hair. Preventing the sun's damage is actually easier than trying to cure the problem.

"We can't repair hair 100 percent," says Dr. Sergio Nacht, director of biomedical research for Pantene. "But we can protect it 100 percent.

"Hair is made up of chains of keratine, a protein, held together by sulfur bonds," says Nacht. "The sun's radiation breaks these sulfur bonds and weakens the inner structure of the hair."

Last year, Nacht discovered that pantethine, a B vitamin containing the same sulfur bonds found in hair, could actually repair the havoc created by the sun. Pantene combines pantethine with a sunscreen in its Prestige shampoo and conditioner.

"When used as a part of daily hair care, these products give hair 100 percent protection from the sun's rays," says Nacht.

Like skin, your hair and scalp need a good sunscreen to protect them from the sun's ravaging rays. Apply sunscreen to your part and hairline and check out the array of hair products containing sunscreens.

Kingsley offers a selection of mousses and hair sprays with Sun Protection Factors (SPF) of 6 for normal hair and the more protective 15 for bleached, permed or tive 15 for bleached, permed or tinted hair. His waterproof Swim Cap cream with its SPF of 15 applied to damp hair forms a shell against the damaging effects of chlorine and salt water. It also conditions hair while you sun.

Besides breaking the bonds and weakening hair strands, the drying effect of sun frazzles the hair's outer layer, called the cuticle. The result is dull, lackluster locks.

"Picture the cuticle as layers of roof shingles covering the hair shaft," says Dr. A. John Penicnak of Cosmair. "As moisture leaves the hair, each of these 'shingles' dries out and curls up at the end. This causes light to reflect unevenly and hair to look dull."

Penicnak suggests using a conditioner such as Lancome's Conquete du Soleil Gel Fixant that protects against drying and dulling while adding moisture to smooth down ruffled cuticles. Because it acts as a styling gel, this product protects throughout the day.

A romp in the surf can also leave tresses feeling stiff and brittle. "Salt water dehydrates hair and strips it of essential components," says Nacht. "Likewise, the chlorine in swimming pools reacts with hair much the same way as the sun does — breaking the sulfur bonds and drying out the hair shaft."

Serious swimmers should slather conditioner on their hair and tuck it under a bathing cap. Rinse hair as soon as possible after slipping out of the pool.

"We recommend a clarifying gel for people who swim a lot," says Alan Stone, local salon owner and stylist. "It strips out the chlorine and helps keep the hair in proper balance."

Chlorinated water can be especially damaging to blonde and chemically treated hair, turning the tint to a pale green. To return hair to its natural shade, Avon experts suggest adding eight aspirins to warm water, soaking hair in the solution for 15 minutes, then rinsing and washing hair as usual.

Once the damage is done, however, there is still hope. Opt for a mild shampoo and towel dry hair instead of using a blowdryer. "Blowdrying is the sun without the sun," says Penicnak of the intense heat. "Damaged hair is in a fragile state. Let it dry naturally."

Incorporate a protein-rich conditioner with ingredients such as panthenol into your daily hair care regimen to aid in re-hydrating hair. "The biggest problem is that people don't leave their conditioner on long enough, especially in the summer," says Frankie, a stylist at the Vidal Sassoon Salon in New York City. "If you don't give your conditioner enough time to work, you are just rinsing money down the drain."

It's also important to remember wet hair is extremely fragile. Use a wide-tooth comb to detangle it and avoid brushing, which can cause breakage. Likewise, don't twist wet hair into a snug knot or tightly wrap an elastic tie around it.

And if you spend a lot of time in the sun, invest in sun-shading hats or neat turbans to hide hair when the sun is at its strongest.

"Covering the whole head with a hat is probably the most drastic way to protect your hair," says Stone. "But it's also probably the most complete way to prevent the sun's damage."

Summer looks that are hot

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

You don't have to blow your bank balance to be trendy this summer. There are plenty of inexpensive accessories that will make the hard bodies in the sun think you've got a whole new wardrobe. The look this summer is uncluttered, so just a few baubles should do it. Here's what to look for:

TANK TOPS: All-cotton with racing backs. They come in a bevy of colors.

HAIRPIECES: Long acrylic hairpieces in a variety of colors to braid, tie on as a ponytail or simply let curl down your back.

MAKEUP: New summer colors are an inexpensive way to lighten your look. Makeup artist Terry MacVittie uses a basic white highlighter underneath the makeup base to add a glow.

EARRINGS: Lightweight, colorful earrings are everywhere.

BRACELETS: Bangles are the favorites this year. They add snap and polish to the basics.

SUNGLASSES: You can wear them to shield your eyes or use them as headbands. They come in many colors and shapes, from totally rimless to aviator style to seamless "Solar Shields" shades with a narrow band across the top to block light coming in above the eyebrows.

BELTS: This summer they range from beaded plastics made by Swatch to rainbow belts in shimmering pastels by Esprit.

SCARVES: These accessories can be instant updaters if you wear them right. This year, cotton scarves look best tied as headbands or belts or tucked into a tote. If you tie a scarf around your neck, make it small like a bandana and preferably in cotton.

SOCKS: Wild designs carry the summer look down to your toes.

Pepper treated as jewel of spices in restuarants

By ERMA BOMBECK

The other night my husband and I took a guest from another country out to dinner. As we were poised over the pasta, from out of the darkness a waiter appeared with a pepper mill the size of a league bowling trophy and waited for instructions.

"What is THAT?" asked our guest.

"It's pepper," we said.

"What kind of pepper?" he asked.

"Just pepper."

Our guest reached for the mill and the waiter said, "I'll do it for you, sir."

Embarrassed, he sat back and watched the waiter grind away. When he started to leave, the visitor said, "I'll have some salt."

"You can serve yourself. It's on the table," said the waiter and disappeared into the darkness again. He had never seen anything like it.

"I supposed you want some kind of an explanation for all this," we said. He nodded.

Actually, we didn't have one. I don't know when pepper got to be right behind frankincense and myrrh in prominence. It used to be in a little jar that sat next to the salt on the table and everyone passed it around, sneezed, and it was no big deal. The next thing you know, in some of the fancier restaurants, waiters started carrying pepper mills around like they were a human sacrifice to be placed on the altar of a smoking volcano.

If pepper were one of the jewels of the spice family, I could understand why someone would dole it out grain by grain. Salad bars do that with the shrimp. They put them in the back row, behind all the lettuce and the garbanzo beans, and then angle the glass shield so that you sever a main artery if you try to dip a spoon into them. But pepper!

I think it was Johnny Carson who observed, "The bigger the pepper mill, the more expensive the restaurant." It has really gotten out of hand. After a while, they are going to wheel them to the table on a dolly. Frankly, I would welcome something to do while I'm sitting there at the table. Eating has become so passive. Someone pulls my chair out, flips my napkin for me and places it in my lap and inserts a menu between my curved fingers. I don't have to pour my own wine, spoon on my own parmesan or bring my own flashlight to read the check. They do it all.

Our guest, to put it mildly, was intrigued by the ritual. After the waiter left, he lifted the pasta to his lips and sampled it. "I don't taste the pepper," he said.

"That is because it never comes out of those mills."

"I don't understand."

We told him, "Eat!"

DEAR ABBY

Boy threatens suicide over relationship break up

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Please help me. I am a 16-year-old girl who has been dating a guy (my age) for two months. Last night we were talking on the phone, and I said I thought we'd better not see each other for a while, mostly because my parents are going through a painful divorce and I needed more time to myself. Well, he totally overreacted. He said, "Wait a minute," then he came back to the phone and said, "I have a handgun in my hand right now, and if you don't love me enough to keep on seeing me, I have nothing to live for. Goodbye." Then I heard a shot, and a noise like a loud thud — him falling.

I was so shocked, I fainted. When I came to, he was telling me he was OK, he didn't really kill himself, but he really would if I ever brought up the subject of breaking up with him again.

Right now I am so mad at him for frightening me like that and making me faint, I really don't want to keep going with him, but now I'm afraid he might go through with it and kill himself.

Abby, I want to get out of this relationship, but I don't want him to commit suicide, and I'm afraid he is crazy enough to do it. What should I do? — NEEDING HELP

DEAR NEEDING: Tell him that you refuse to accept responsibility for his life — that he and he alone is responsible for his own actions. And if he is considering suicide, he should get professional help from the suicide prevention hotline or his local mental health facility. Let him know that you refuse to be emotionally blackmailed. If your parents don't know about this boy's behavior, tell them. They may want to advise his parents. He's bad news. Keep your distance.

DEAR ABBY: I am sure you will think this is a very unusual request. I would like to write a love letter to my daughter. She is 17 and will be a senior in high school. I am very proud of her, but I am not very good at expressing my feelings. I want to give her a very meaningful, beautiful letter.

Please, Dear Abby, write a two-page letter for me. I will gladly pay you for your time.

Please, please, don't advise me to write the letter myself. I am not a very open person, and a letter writer I am not!

You may bill me for your time. Whatever the amount, it will be worth it. Thank you. — UNEXPRESSIVE MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: A single sentence written in your own words, straight from your heart, will be far more meaningful than two pages filled with fancy phrases composed by a stranger. Sincerity is eloquence at its best.

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. All correspondence is confidential.)

Proper care will foil summer frizzy hair

Associated Press

Frizzy hair can take the fizz out of summer evenings — but the problem can be smoothed out with proper hair care.

"Frizziness is the No. 1 hair complaint I hear in my salon," Gerard Bollei at the Galleria in New York City. "And during the summer — particularly for all those high-humidity nights — there isn't a woman who doesn't mention it."

He said most of the trouble is self-inflicted through overdoing brushing, shampooing, processing and blow-drying, all of which damage the protective outer layer of hair called the cuticle.

It is hard to control because individual strands move against each other, generating electrostatic charges. Ragged cuticles are especially prone to these charges and repel each other, producing the flyaway characteristics of frizzy hair.

In summer, humidity aggravates the problem because parched hair strands soak up moisture that accentuates every split end and surface flaw.

Experts say women should arm themselves with a frizzy hair tool kit. It includes a natural bristle brush — boar bristles for thick, coarse hair and silk for fine. You also need a wide-tooth comb to detangle, a protein-enriched shampoo to fill in any gaps in the cuticle and a conditioner that contains lubricating ingredients such as mineral or vegetable oil, vitamins A or E.

Don't worry about over-conditioning your hair — there is no such thing. Just be sure no conditioner residue builds up.

Experts offer hair tips

Associated Press

New York City hair experts offer the following tips to tame summer hair:

- A good cut can cut down on the frizzed look.
- Shampoo less frequently — every other day or every second day.
- Brush well between washings to dust and cleanse hair and fluff it out.

If all else fails, apply setting gel or lotion to slick down your own hair and then attach one of the new hairpieces at the crown.

Lewellen suggests improving instead of moving

"Why move, when you can improve the home you are already comfortable in?" asks Joan Lewellen of Lewellen Construction.

Lewellen Construction specializes in installation of quality, maintenance-free siding, storm windows and doors, replacement windows and doors, carport and patio covers. These things can really make a beautiful difference in the appearance of your home.

And, there couldn't be a better time to give your home a face lift with interest rates down and a number of financing plans available.

Joan points out that there's local bank financing of up to $100,000 available for home improvements. $5,000 can be borrowed with no security interest being required.

Members of Caprock Electric have a special opportunity when it comes to energy-saving home improvements. Members with good credit and a good payment record can borrow up to $3,000 at five percent a.p.r. for up to five years - for energy saving home projects like installation of storm windows/doors, weatherstripping, insulation, certain types of heat pumps and air conditioning units. For more information on this program contact Roger Burch or Chuck Elmore at 563-1943.

Special home improvement financing is also available for Texas Vets.

Not only will you want to be sure to get the best financing available, you will also want to have a reliable contractor on the job.

Bill Lewellen has been in the siding industry for 10 years. He learned the trade "from the ground up." So you can count on quality work. He started his own siding company because he wanted to set his own standards. To this day, Bill does much of the work himself and personally inspects every job.

Lewellen Construction goes the extra mile when it comes to insurance to protect the home owner and the workers. Most jobs done by a siding company are considered superficial so no city permit is required. Thus, there no particular requirement is made for insurance. And, since a majority of siding companies sub-contract their work many don't provide workmen's comp. Lewellen Construction carries both liability insurance and workmen's compensation.

Another evidence of the Lewellens' commitment to quality workmanship is their participation in the newly organized local chapter of the National Association of the Remodeling Industry. This not-for-profit trade association represents all segments of the professional remodeling service industry. One goal of the association is to protect the homeowners of the Permian Basin by encouraging "ethical conduct, sound business practices and professionalism in the remodeling industry."

Contractors and suppliers who are interested in finding out more about NARI are invited to the chapter's next meeting, August 21, 7:30 p.m. at the Best Western on I-20.

Homeowners, act now while the interest rates are down and call Lewellen Construction at 686-8007 for siding, windows, doors, carport covers and patio covers.

Why move when you can improve and avoid all the cost of selling and moving? Lewellen Construction can really make a difference in your home's appearance with maintenance-free siding, soffit and fascia, windows and doors. Call 686-8007 for more information.

Unique Cabinet Fronts can save you money and transform your kitchen

Have you been wishing that you could give your kitchen a whole new look, but were hesitant to get into a remodeling project that would take months and months to complete?

Unique Cabinet Fronts has the solution!

You can have new cabinet fronts without tearing out your cabinets, counter tops, flooring, plumbing, electrical wiring and on and on.

Unique Cabinet Fronts gives your cabinet fronts a "facelift" and lets you keep the good solid part of the cabinets that you have already paid for once.

Whether you have wood or metal cabinets, Unique can redo the fronts and sides in oak, cherry or a popular new European laminate and install beautiful new solid oak or cherry or laminate doors and drawer fronts in many styles and colors.

Bill Shields, who has been in the home remodeling business for 10 years, recognizes the frustration and expense caused by having a kitchen out of service for weeks, while installing new cabinets. That's why he began looking for a reasonable and top-quality alternative to complete cabinet replacement. After more than a year of research, he concluded that Unique Cabinet Fronts is the superior alternative.

Bill and Ruth Shields believe it's a waste to throw away the cabinetry you already own and have paid for! Most likely, 75 percent of your cabinets are structurally sound and usable (sides, backs, bottoms, tops, shelves, etc.) New cabinets really mean only new fronts.

The Unique system utilizes the 75 percent of your cabinets that is still good and turns your old outdated wood or metal cabinets into beautiful new cabinets quickly and usually for less than half the cost of conventional cabinet replacement.

Unique Cabinet oak doors and drawer fronts are hand rubbed and custom made for your kitchen. You can select your solid oak doors from a variety of styles and finishes, ranging from a natural finish to a dark Spanish Oak finish. One door, the Versador, even offers the option of glass, wallpaper, cane or other inset.

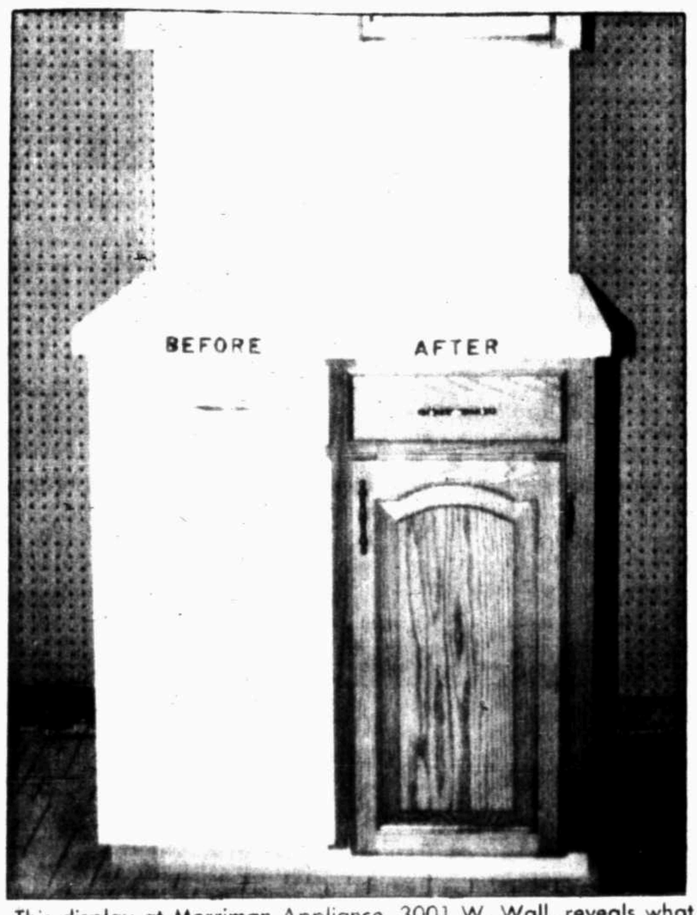

Because Unique Cabinet Fronts is a specialty manufacturer, they measure and cut each door to give you a custom fit.

A beautiful wood veneer, which matches the doors you select, will cover the framework and sides of your old cabinets - giving you a complete wood cabinet.

It takes only three to four days to install Unique Cabinet Fronts. Then for less than half the price of cabinet replacement, you have increased the value of your home and the beauty of your kitchen. If your home is on the market - this may be what it takes to make it really stand out from the rest.

Unique Cabinet Fronts can be used on old wood cabinets, metal cabinets, even long bell cabinets and bathroom cabinets.

Hobby begins tour in effort to erase $3 billion state deficit

By GARTH JONES

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby begins a statwide tour today in support of his plans to erase Texas' $3 billion deficit with an expanded and increased sales tax.

"This is the only acceptable approach in my opinion," Hobby said Monday.

Hobby gives a briefing in Dallas today on his deficit solution, which involves $650 million in budget cuts and a $2.25 billion tax bill.

Hobby said revenue could be raised by raising the state income tax from 4.125 to 5 percent, but in response to a question said he would be agreeable to an increase in the sales tax to 6 percent, an action that would make fewer budget cuts necessary.

Hobby will be in Lubbock, Amarillo and El Paso on Wednesday. On Thursday he will be in El Paso and Midland and on Friday in San Antonio.

The Legislature meets Aug. 6 in a special session to consider the deficit.

"The Legislature is meeting for what I think is a debate on nothing less than the future of Texas," Hobby said Monday in a talk to an orientation session of the Silver-Haired Legislature.

The 116 recently elected representatives will take part in the Silver-Haired Legislature starting Sept. 29. The three-day session will make recommendations to the 1987 Legislature on priority issues for older Texans.

"Our state, not just the government, is in an economic crisis the likes of which have not been seen for two generations," Hobby said.

Hobby said efforts by some legislators to solve the deficit solely through budget cuts are unacceptable.

"We have to, in my judgment, pass another tax bill of about $2 billion," Hobby said. "Who here is sorry we passed a $2.8 billion tax bill two years ago to take care of public schools and our highways?"

He received no reply.

"Nobody," he said. "and that is the reaction I find all over the state. It is not even controversial."

Hobby said he would make up $650 million of the deficit through budget cuts, including wiping out the promised 3 percent raise for state employees.

He said about $2.25 billion could be gained by raising the state sales tax from 4.125 percent to 5 percent and expanding it to cover many services not now covered. Exemptions for food and medicine would be continued.

"The state has relied on the sales tax for many years and that is the way to go," Hobby said. "The sales tax is the fairest way to go."

Hobby was asked about increasing the sales tax to 6 percent and eliminating some of the budget cuts.

"I could agree with that," he said.

Capitol rally touches off campaign to achieve new 'drug-free generation'

AUSTIN (AP) — A Capitol rally and march next month will touch off a national campaign to achieve what a recent Texas high school graduate calls a "whole new generation of drug-free youths."

Texas first lady Linda Gale White, joined by child television performer Cherie Johnson and others, announced Monday that the "Just Say No" campaign would open in Austin on Sept. 20.

"As a former teacher, I realize that our young people are faced with peer pressure. That pressure can lead them to experiment with drugs to escape their personal problems and also their problems at home and at school," Mrs. White told a news conference.

"But I also know how such pressure can be convincing.

In these stressful times, our young students should be encouraged to just say 'No,'" she said.

"Just Say No" was started in Oakland, Calif., in January 1985, and national executive director Tom Adams said there are now almost 10,000 clubs of children, ages 7 to 12, who are committed to not using drugs.

"There is no social movement in this country that's ever swept it as quickly and as brilliantly as this has, and largely it's because the kids want it — they need it — and there are sensitive and there are strong adults who want to help them to do it," Adams said.

Bobby Heard, a recent graduate of Round Rock High School and a member of two statewide anti-drug councils, told the news conference, "By saying no to drugs, we're saying yes to so much more."

"The real significance is the seed that is planted for a whole new generation of drug-free youths," he said.

Heard said after the September rally and march to Auditorium Shores on Town Lake "schools and communities, we hope, will declare themselves 'Just Say No' schools and Just Say No' communities."

Cherie, who has appeared on the TV show "Punky Brewster" for the past two years, gave Mrs. White a "Just Say No" T-shirt.

FBI says millions in transferred accounts led to indictment of two on fraud charges

By SUZANNE GAMBOA

DALLAS (AP) — The FBI said more than $5 million transferred from accounts of Southmark Corp. to banks in Dallas and the Caribbean led to the arrests of two people accused of scheming to defraud the company.

Susan Carol Briggs and Paul Richard Meinardus were ordered held at Lew Sterrett Justice Center Monday pending a Thursday hearing after being indicted on charges of wire fraud, bank fraud and conspiracy.

FBI agents began investigating after auditors of Southmark Corp., a real estate-based company, discovered $3.1 million missing from a company account at San Jacinto Savings and Loan July 22, a federal affidavit said.

The money passed through Meinardus' personal account and ended up in three accounts at a bank in the Cayman Islands, three islands northwest of Jamaica, the affadavit said.

Briggs worked in Southmark's treasury department less than a year and was responsible for transferring funds, Thomas C. Walker, Southmark senior vice president, said Monday.

Walker said Briggs left Southmark July 3 in a "mutual resignation."

Meinardus, a former employee of Electronic Data Systems, was fired last Tuesday, said Bill Wright, EDS spokesman. Wright would not disclose Meinardus' position or duties.

A wire transfer, ordered and authorized by Briggs, shifted the $3.1 million to Meinardus' account at Richardson Savings & Loan, the FBI affidavit said.

In an interview with an FBI agent, Meinardus said he didn't know the money was transferred into his checking account until July 22 and said he didn't know who transferred the money.

Records subpoenaed by a grand jury showed the $3.1 million was deposited in Meinardus' account and then transferred to three accounts in the Cayman Islands National Bank in Grand Cayman.

The accounts were in the names of Paul R. Meinardus, Susan or Devin Briggs and Ray Howdeshell, the affidavit said.

Jerome Levy, Southmark corporate counsel, told officials July 24 that company auditors also discovered a $500,000 shortage. Auditors said Briggs approved a wire transfer of the money Feb. 21 and the money was sent to a personal account listed under the initials DBL at First City Bank in Dallas.

A computer printout of the account showed it was registered to a Devin Briggs and had more than $2.3 million in deposits, the affidavit said.

Nuclear project plans test on main reactor next year

BAY CITY, Texas (AP) — South Texas Nuclear Project plans a hot functional test in January for its main reactor and piping since it successfully completed a pressure test, officials said.

The nuclear project, which is co-owned by Houston Lighting & Power Co., Central Power and Light Co. and the cities of Austin and San Antonio, is scheduled for loading of nuclear fuel in June 1987. Commercial operation is planned for December of that year.

Recently, the STNP reactor coolant system and interconnected piping were tested against 3,000 pounds per square inch of pressure, which is 750 pounds more than normal operating pressure, officials said.

The reactor coolant system provides cooling water flow to transfer heat from the reactor to four steam generators. Steam from these devices drives a 1.25 million kilowatt turbine-generator to produce electricity which will serve customers throughout South Texas.

STNP is 12 miles southwest of Bay City in Matagorda County.

Eye care comes to elderly

AUSTIN (AP) — A statewide program for the disadvantaged elderly is bringing eye care at no out-of-pocket cost to older Texans who otherwise might have to do without.

Officials of the Texas Eye Care Project said Monday, 31 percent of patients seen so far had never had an eye exam until they called the toll-free line (1-800 222-EYES) for referral to one of the program's volunteer eye physicians.

"We know we're reaching our target population when nearly a third of these patients have never had an eye examination," said Dr. Robert Robinson, president of the Texas Ophthalmological Association.

The program, which is nationwide, has been in operation in Texas since Feb. 10, and offers eye care to patients without Medicare or other insurance at no charge.

Since the program started, 3,443 older Texas residents have called for eye information, and 2,212 — including 74 without insurance — have been referred to volunteer ophthalmologists for examination and treatment.

Capitol named landmark

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas Capitol in Austin, in the company of 18 other historically significant places such as the Empire State Building, has been named a national historic landmark by the Department of the Interior.

The designations, announced by Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, are meant to encourage local preservation of the landmarks. The owner receives a certificate and can apply for a bronze plaque.

A Department of the Interior release said the designations are based on outstanding architecture and association with historical events or persons.

Station won't lower prices

ARLINGTON (AP) — A Texaco service station manager who says he has a "personal vendetta" with Texaco Inc. is charging almost 70 cents more than many competitors for gasoline.

While most service stations are charging about 72 cents a gallon for regular, Joe Mercer is still charges $1.39. While other stations charge 74 cents for unleaded gasoline, Mercer charges $1.45.

Mercer attributes his high prices to a continuing dispute with Texaco Inc., owner of the station. Texaco charges him $7,250 a month for leasing privileges, more than other station operators pay, he said.

But Arlington City Councilman Dick Malec, who has bought gas at the station, said it's unfair for the consumer to "pay for a situation between a vendor and his licensee. It's bad for the image of Arlington."

Mercer agrees his price is high, but says he has good reason.

Administration avoided association with Kilburn's death

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the body of slain American hostage Peter Kilburn was brought back to the United States in April, it was without ceremony and without news coverage.

It suggested to Kilburn's family that the administration wanted to avoid being identified with the tragedy, especially since Kilburn's captors said they murdered him because of the U.S. bombing raid on Libya days earlier.

"The whole administration has tried to distance itself from the hostage situation," Tim Kilburn, a nephew, said in a telephone interview from Aptos, Calif., Monday. "Reagan has this image he doesn't want to be in contact with anything that looks bad."

But when the Rev. Lawrence Jenco was released over the weekend, the administration encouraged celebration.

Richard Burt, the American ambassador to West Germany, warmly greeted Jenco upon his arrival Sunday at Weisbaden Air Base in Germany. Jenco received a seven-minute telephone call Monday from President Reagan who told him "our prayers for your release have finally been answered."

And members of Jenco's family were flown at government expense to meet him.

In his telephone call, Reagan told Jenco, "The patient and persistent efforts of so many people have been successful."

By contrast, Reagan did not issue a public statement on the death of Kilburn — although his press spokesman did — and he wrote a letter to the Kilburn family rather than telephoned his condolences. News organizations were not alerted in advance when an Air Force plane arrived in Washington on April 20 with Kilburn's body, and they were discouraged from sending reporters and photographers after learning it had arrived.

Kilburn, who was 62, had been a librarian at the American University in Beirut and had been held 16 months before he was murdered.

More and more, the hostage families, as well as some of the hostages themselves, have come to believe that too little is being done on behalf of their loves ones, two of whom have been held longer than the 444 days that 52 American hostages were held in Iran.

Peggy Say, sister of American hostage Terry Anderson, asked the U.S. government Monday to "stop tap-dancing around the word 'negotiate' " and to bargain with Shiite Moslem kidnappers for the release of her brother and other Americans held captive in Lebanon.

And another hostage, David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut, said in a videotape brought by Jenco that the hostages felt abandoned by their government and urged the administration to negotiate for their release. He warned that failure to negotiate would result in their deaths.

In addition to Kilburn, one other American hostage in Lebanon, William Buckley, is said by his captors to have been slain, although no body has been found. Buckley, the U.S. embassy political officer, was kidnapped on March 18, 1984, making him the hostage who has been missing the longest.

Despite criticism of President Carter's methods, all 52 hostages came home alive.

Little is said about the Lebanon hostages by Reagan or his administration, unless there is a compelling reason for them to speak. When they do speak, they insist they are doing everything they can short of negotiating with the captors, which is precisely what some family members wish they would do.

CRS workers give thanks for Jenco's release

NEW YORK (AP) — Workers at Catholic Relief Services attended Mass twice a week to pray for the safe return of the Rev. Lawrence Jenco during the 19 months their colleague was held by Lebanese extremists.

On Monday, they gave thanks for answered prayers.

About 200 well-wishers, including members of Jenco's family, attended a service at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, in the same building as the group's world headquarters.

"For so many months we have been working and praying. This is no longer a ransom petition, but a Mass of thanksgiving. We come here to thank the Lord for listening to our prayers," said Archbishop Theodore McCarrick of Newark, N.J.

Jenco, who was director of relief organization in Lebanon when he was kidnapped Jan. 8, 1985, was released Saturday. On Monday, he was in Weisbaden, West Germany, where he was reunited with his family.

"Let this be another lesson on how powerful prayers can be," said McCarrick, who is also chairman of the organization's Board of Directors Sub-Committee on Eurasia.

McCarrick thanked the church and government agencies that worked toward Jenco's release, but added that the hostages still being held could not be forgotten.

"There are still those in captivity. We cannot stop praying. We still have others over there," he said, referring to hostages Terry Anderson, chief Mideast correspondent for The Associated Press, David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut and Thomas Sutherland, the university's acting dean of agriculture.

Lawrence Pezzullo, executive director of organization, said he was joyful about Jenco's release and that the CRS hoped to continue saying Masses for the other hostages until they are released.

An Analysis

Anderson, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who is the second longest held, marked his 500th day in captivity today.

Anderson's sister, who was en route to the United States after a trip to the Middle East to try to win his release, said, "I want them (the U.S. government) to get out there and do it, like they did for other American hostages," referring to the successful contacts that won the release of 39 hostages on the TWA airliner that was hijacked to Lebanon in June of last year.

Besides Buckley, Anderson and Jacobsen, the kidnappers who are believed to be Shiite Moslem extremists are also holding Thomas Sutherland, acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut.

The kidnappers are demanding the release of 17 Shiites imprisoned in Kuwait for bombing the American Embassy and other buildings there.

Many former U.S. officials and terrorism experts agree with the administration that it shouldn't negotiate with terrorists.

And some quiet diplomatic efforts do go forward out of public scrutiny. For example, it was learned Monday that CIA Director William Casey secretly traveled to Syria recently in an attempt to win the release of American hostages being held in Lebanon and could have played a role in the release of Jenco, according to one report.

But many hostage relatives believe the administration does find ways to negotiate when it feels it has to, and argue the time is long past when it should do so.

Tim Kilburn, for one, said "our government's policy is not to negotiate, even though they do negotiate (in other situations). They ask other countries to negotiate, rather than do it in the open."

Kilburn said he continues to believe that the attack on Libya was a mistake that led directly to his uncle's death.

Titanic expedition's head wants ship to 'rest in peace'

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — The head of the Titanic expedition says he hopes the mission will satisfy other scientists and explorers, allowing the ship to become an undisturbed memorial for the 1,513 who died when it sank 74 years ago.

Chief scientist Robert Ballard, who also led the expedition that found the ship last September, said he had no desire ever to return to the Titanic and that 57,000 photographs and more than 50 hours of videotapes of the wreck should satisfy other would-be visitors.

"I hope that through the efforts that we accomplished in the last few weeks that it will satisfy the curiosity of everyone...and that there will be no real reason or need to go back, and that the Titanic can finally rest in peace," h said.

Ballard and his research team from the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution returned to this Cape Cod port Monday to the cheers and applause of several hundred colleagues, family members and other onlookers.

In brief comments to reporters, Ballard also said the 11 dives to the Titanic 2½ miles below the sea made it clear the ship can never be raised.

"I feel very confident that the Titanic will never be salvaged, never raised. The bow section is buried so deep in the mud, almost 50 feet into the bottom, that it would be impossible to pull it out," he said. "Plus its state of deterioration...it's very fragile and any attempt to raise it would break it up."

Ballard spoke to reporters after a reunion with his wife and two children and a champagne toast on the deck of the Atlantis II, the research vessel that served as the mission's off-shore base.

But he gave few details of the expedition in which a trio of scientists descended daily to the Titanic's grave in a miniature submarine and deployed a camera-toting robot to go inside the most luxurious ship of its day.

Ballard said he would detail the mission at a news conference Wednesday in Washington. He also said he would release on Wednesday another sample of the photographs and videotape.

"I think you'll be very pleased with the quality of the material," he told reporters.

The expedition released a three-minute videotape and 12 color slides on July 18 featuring close-up shots of the rust-covered deck and a still-hanging chandelier.

Martin Bowen, who went down on six of the 11 dives in the Alvin research submarine, said he was impressed with the vivid colors of the Titanic — blue and green metal, brown wood and the massive rust formations that hang throughout the ship.

"The colors are breathtaking," agreed William Lange, the expedition's video technician, who said there are about 140, 23-minute tapes from the mission.

.GOP senator proposes sanctions bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Richard Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Comittee, is asking Congress to ignore appeals from President Reagan and adopt sanctions aimed at pushing South Africa's white minority government toward negotiations with blacks.

Lugar, R-Ind., was to present his proposals at a closed meeting of the committee today. A spokesman, Mark Helmke, said a sanctions bill probably would be drafted and ready for action on the Senate floor by the end of the week.

"The basic theme is that these are all sanctions that hurt the white South African government and infrastructure," Helmke said. "The idea is to convince South Africa that the United States is serious about the need to enact substantive sanctions."

"Lugar is saying this should be the basic thrust of a clear message to the white government that we want them to change," Helmke said.

The Lugar proposal calls for writing into law the five limited sanctions imposed by Reagan last year and adding new ones, including these seven:

— Ban the import of the products of industries controlled in part by the South African government, including steel, uranium, cement and aluminum.

— End U.S. landing rights for South African aircraft.

— Direct the State Department to stop issuing visas for travel to the United States for employees of the South African government and government-controlled industries and to revoke visas previously issued to such persons.

— Give Reagan authority to sell off U.S. gold reserves to depress the world price of gold and wreck the South African gold mining industry, one of the country's most lucrative enterprises.

— Freeze U.S. bank accounts of employees of the South African government and the state-controlled companies and freeze the U.S. investments of such companies.

— Prohibit any new investment in South Africa by any U.S. company which does not adopt the so-called Sullivan principles aimed at giving equal treatment and wages to black employees. Helmke said Lugar might agree to endorse a total ban on new U.S. investment, a step sought by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan.

— Punish foreign companies which move to take competitive advantage of the U.S. sanctions at the expense of U.S. corporations.

The sanctions already in place which the Lugar plan would write into law include the prohibition of the sale in the United States of the South African gold coin, the Krugerrand; a ban on computer sales to the South African government; the ending of bank loans to the South African government; and a ban on the export to South Africa of U.S. nuclear technology.

Helmke said the president would be authorized to modify or lift the sanctions if the South African government took any two of the following four steps: released Nelson Mandela, the jailed leader of the outlawed African National Congress; ended the state of emergency and freed all of the political prisoners jailed under its terms; legalized all political parties, including the African National Congress, and repealed the Home Areas Act under which blacks can be moved to artificially created homelands, losing their South African citizenship in the process.

Lugar is opposed, at least for now, to calls for a total U.S. disinvestment from South Africa, a step included in a tougher bill passed by the House last month.

U.S.-South African textile pact draws Democrats' ire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats say they are outraged by a Reagan administration tentative trade agreement to boost textile imports from South Africa at a time when pressure is growing for U.S. sanctions against the white-ruled nation.

"It's outrageous that, at the same time the American people are demanding an end to our economic support of apartheid, the administration has secretly agreed to increase that support," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said in remarks quoted late Monday by his aide, Chris Matthews.

In today's editions, The Washington Post reported that the office of Special Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter reached the agreement June 27 to raise U.S. imports of South African textiles by 4 percent starting Sept. 1.

Yeutter could not be reached by telephone Monday night, but congressional sources confirmed that he had answered inquiries on the deal from O'Neill and other liberals in Congress.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. William H. Gray, D-Pa., asked the trade representative about the pact last Friday and received acknowledgment of its existence Monday, the newspaper said.

"The administration does South Africa a favor, sticks its finger in the eye of millions of U.S. textile workers, and guarantees an increasing share of the U.S. market for South Africa," Kennedy said in remarks prepared for delivery today. The text of the remarks were confirmed by a congressional source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hoosier Hay Express 'bails out' South Carolina

Associated Press

A train carrying enough hay to feed nearly 70,000 cows for a week was making stops today in seared South Carolina with the largest emergency shipment of fodder since Midwest farmers began donations 1½ weeks ago.

As the mile-long Hoosier Hay Express neared the state Monday, meteorologists predicted renewed hot, dry conditions this week for the Southeast after a week's respite.

"It may be that we could be flirting in the next few days with the upper 90s again, maybe even 100," said forecaster Bill Lerner in Atlanta.

This month's death toll from the heat wave in the South and Midwest has reached 52, and agricultural losses from months of drought have risen to almost $2 billion, with damage reported in southern Pennsylvania just north of the Mason-Dixon Line.

On Monday, the Georgia Crop Reporting Service issued its gloomiest weekly report in 13 years, saying more than two-thirds of the state's corn, soybean and hay crops are either poor or very poor. The state already has estimated drought damage at $200 million.

In addition, Tennessee Valley Authority officials said the utility has spent $100 million this year to offset decreased hydroelectric output. Rate increases were being considered for TVA's 2.8 million power customers in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, Virginia, and Kentucky, said Hugh Gardner, manager of power system operations.

Temperatures Monday ranged from the 90s to 110 degrees in the Southeast, across the Southern Plains and lower Mississippi Valley, with records for the date reached in 11 cities, including 106 degrees at Dodge City, Kan., breaking a 76-year-old record by two degrees.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reagan weighs plan to subsidize U.S. wheat sales to Soviet Union

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, amid conflicting arguments from his Cabinet and complaints from overseas, is weighing a plan championed by farm-state lawmakers to subsidize American wheat sales to the Soviet Union.

Reagan listened to recommendations Monday from leaders of the State, Treasury, Agriculture and Labor departments, the Pentagon, the CIA, the Office of Management and Budget, the U.S. Trade Representative's office and the National Security Council.

"I don't think there's anybody in the room willing to predict what the president's decision will be on it," presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said afterward. He said the meeting aired "conflicting recommendations."

The plan was put forward by Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and others to boost America's sagging farm exports, which have tumbled from a peak of $43.8 billion in 1981 to an expected level of $27.5 billion this year.

The proposal has major political overtones in an election year when Republican control of the Senate depends heavily on the outcome of several Midwestern races.

Iowa train blown off bridge

BOONE, Iowa (AP) — Eighteen cars of a train loaded with hazardous chemicals were apparently blown off a bridge into the Des Moines River during a fierce storm that struck north-central Iowa, officials said today.

Emergency officials said the river was not initially threatened. Some 200 children attending a Bible camp nearby were evacuated as a precaution, said Iowa Disaster Services spokesman Dennis Hart.

Twenty residents also were evacuated as officials cleared a one-mile square area near the bridge.

Hart said he did not know if any of the cars had leaked chemicals into the river, which flows into the Saylorville Reservoir and then through Des Moines and into the Mississippi.

Emergency clean-up crews were dispatched, and other crews took samples to check for contamination.

Lockheed employees not indicted

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Associated Press reported erroneously July 25 that Lockheed Corp. was one of more than 20 defense companies whose employees were indicted for allegedly defrauding the government and contractors by engaging in bribery and kickback schemes.

No Lockheed employees were indicted. Lockheed was a victim of the alleged scheme that led to the indictment of 19 defense industry workers and one company.

Personal income growth slows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hard times in energy and farm states held back personal income growth during the first three months of the year with residents of oil-rich Alaska faring the worst, the government says.

The Commerce Department said Monday that incomes rose by a modest 1.1 percent nationwide from January through March but that residents of 10 states suffered declines in personal incomes.

Hardest hit was Alaska, where incomes took a 9 percent plunge from their level in the final three months of 1985. The government blamed declines in oil exploration, which cut into employment by energy companies and reduced state tax revenues.

Since January, 115,000 jobs have been lost in oil and gas states as companies have cut back sharply on drilling plans because of the dramatic fall in oil prices.

Farm incomes, which have been depressed by large crop surpluses, dropped even farther during the first three months of the year, led by a 6.1 percent decline in incomes for residents of North Dakota, one of eight farm states to suffer declines in earnings during the first three months of the year.

Singer didn't suffer heart attack

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Singer Ella Fitzgerald remained hospitalized in good condition after doctors concluded she did not suffer a heart attack, a spokesman said.

Miss Fitzgerald, 68, was taken to the Niagara Falls Memorial Medical Center by ambulance Sunday suffering from congestive heart failure, a weakening of the heart, hospital officials said.

Tests on Monday showed she did not suffer a heart attack, said hospital spokeswoman Lanora Ziobrowski.

More than 150 calls from around the country had come in since Miss Fitzgerald was hospitalized, said hospital spokesman Ray Smith. The White House and singer Mel Torme were among the callers, he said. Smith said he didn't know who phoned from the White House.

Miss Fitzgerald's manager, Pete Cavello, said the singer had suffered from a respiratory problem.

Detroit city workers say 'hell no' to contract

DETROIT (AP) — The leader of 7,000 striking city workers called for outside help today after his members overwhelmingly rejected a contract endorsed by union officials, sending a municipal strike into its 14th day.

Members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees spurned by a 3-to-1 margin Monday a tentative, three-year pact reached during the weekend.

Approval would have ended a strike that has caused 40,000 tons of garbage to go uncollected and idled bus service for 200,000 commuters in the nation's sixth-largest city.

The rejection was a blow to bargainers on both sides.

"I accepted it. The leadership accepted it. The membership said, 'Hell no,' " AFSCME Council 25 President James Glass said early today. "It's very clear the membership has spoken loud and clear."

Glass said the union was considering several options, adding he wants the city to agree to bring in an outside arbitrator who would render a binding decision in the wage dispute.

Glass said he also may ask union members if they would be willing to return to work while talks continue.

Mayor Coleman Young, meanwhile, said late Monday he was disappointed and surprised by the rejection, and repeated the city's contention that the walkout is illegal under Michigan law.

"It was and still is possible for those workers to continue to work and continue negotiations at the same time," the mayor said. "No prolonged strike will produce money that doesn't exist."

Last week, the city asked the Michigan Court of Appeals to order strikers back to work, but an appellate panel declined to rule until the legality of the strike is addressed by a lower court judge.
