Hasenfus trial begins in Nicaraguan court

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A government prosecutor Wednesday opened the case against U.S. mercenary Eugene Hasenfus by presenting documents found after Sandinista troops shot down his Contra supply plane.

The prosecutor, Ivan Villavicencio, handed evidence one piece at a time to the court secretary, including a card Nicaraguan authorities say gave Hasenfus access to restricted areas of Ilopango military airport in El Salvador.

Villavicencio also asked that the court view the videocassette of an interview Hasenfus gave to Mike Wallace on the CBS program "60 Minutes." The program, translated into Spanish, was shown on Nicaraguan television.

Hasenfus said in the interview that he believed he was working for the U.S. government when he made the supply runs.

A book of names, addresses and telephone numbers of former crew members of Air America, which Hasenfus said in the interview was a CIA airline that he worked for in Southeast Asia, also was entered as evidence in the court.

Neither Hasenfus nor his Nicaraguan lawyer, Enrique Sotelo Borgen, was in court. Presentation of evidence by the prosecution and defense to the special political tribunal trying the first American captured in Nicaragua's 4½-year war was to last eight to 12 days.

Hasenfus' lawyer told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that once the prosecution presents its case, the tribunal has to notify him in writing so he can respond in writing. It was not clear whether he would be allowed to present defense arguments in person.

Hasenfus, a 45-year-old former Marine from Marinette, Wis., is charged with terrorism, conspiracy and violating public security. If convicted by the three-member tribunal, he could face up to 30 years in prison.

Griffin Bell, a former U.S. attorney general who is acting as an adviser to the Nicaraguan lawyer, left Wednesday to prepare the defense after Sandinista authorities barred him from seeing Hasenfus. Bell said he would return Sunday.

Reynaldo Monterrey, the tribunal's president, said on the government Voice of Nicaragua radio that Hasenfus' lawyer could have 50 advisers if he wished, but only Sotelo Borgen could see evidence presented in the case.

The card which purportedly gave the captured mercenary access to restricted areas of Ilopango was numbered 4422, was made out to Hasenfus and bore the Salvadoran air force emblem.

The card, issued July 28 with an expiration date of Jan. 28, 1987, read "Group: USA" and "Specialty: Adviser."

Hasenfus has said that he participated in 10 arms drops to the U.S.-backed rebels from bases in El Salvador and Honduras and that the operations were coordinated by the CIA.

TABC agent says commission will monitor local liquor permits

By MICHELLE BLEIBERG
News Staff Writer

"The Main Event" presented by Sigma Phi Epsilon last week and sponsored by Budweiser and Pepsi was raided by Texas Alcohol and Beverage Commission agents and resulted in about 16 arrests for minors in possession, public intoxication and disorderly conduct.

Most of the arrests were for disorderly conduct, according to Bobby Hatcher, district supervisor for the TABC. Hatcher said most of the disorderly conduct reports were filed for fights and abusive language. He said he did not know how many Texas Tech students were involved.

Hank Blanchard of the TABC said that about 9 p.m. Friday, agents answered a call from the Lubbock County Sheriff's Office at the KoKo Palace at 5101 Avenue Q about a crowd getting out of control. He said TABC had planned to go to the fraternity event later but that the sheriff's office said additional officers were needed.

TABC agents said they weren't sure whether the liquor permit for the event, procured for the fraternity by the United Way, should have been issued in the first place.

The liquor permit, listed with the TABC in United Way's name, was a daily temporary mixed beverage permit requiring the sale of alcohol to stop at midnight. The United Way received the proceeds from the sale of alcohol at the event.

Hatcher said he did not know that the permit involved a fraternity selling the alcohol. He said if he had known the organization was advertising that all ages would be allowed to enter the event, he could "guarantee" a liquor permit of any kind would not have been issued. He said the fraternity probably didn't qualify.

Hatcher said liquor permits are applied for and granted on an individual basis. He said the agency will be looking very closely at fraternities, sororities and college organizations who want to purchase a permit.

"I don't think it will work (issuing permits to college organizations) because of the age element. There is no way to control it," he said.

Hatcher said it was his fault for not checking to see whether a college organization would be involved with the liquor permit.

"I am going to be careful as to who gets one (liquor permit). This permit probably should not have been issued," he said.

"I don't think these people realize how quickly things get out of control. If I can help it, another situation like that (Main Event) will not occur again. There are too many lives at stake."

According to Bill Baird, director of the United Way of Lubbock, the fraternity made out a check to the United Way for $50. The United Way then issued a check in its name to purchase the liquor permit.

"It was an exchange of funds," Baird said.

According to Hatcher, all the proceeds from the sale of liquor must go to the organization that purchases the permit.

Hatcher said that on the night of the event, his agents tried to find a representative of the United Way but were unsuccessful. Hatcher said a United Way representative should have been at the event but that an organization that acquires a liquor permit need not be represented at the event for which it was approved.

Baird said the United Way would have had more reservations about procuring a liquor license for the event if he could have predicted the related arrests. The fact that some of the proceeds came from the sale of alcohol, he said, doesn't have any effect on the United Way's acceptance of the liquor sales proceeds.

"United Way doesn't take a moral stance on alcohol. When bars and liquor stores contribute to the United Way, they are part of the community and become part of the solution," he said.

Baird said it is likely some of the proceeds will go to the United Way's Council on Alcoholism agency, which provides counseling and training for alcohol abusers.

"I don't want to hurt the United Way or any charitable organization in any way, and I doubt they had any idea what was going to happen," Hatcher said. "They are too good an organization to be involved with something that is going to cause trouble. It was just a good opportunity to make money."

Hance, Loeffler rally for Clements victory

By JAY MILLER
News Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, and former Lubbock Congressman Kent Hance said Wednesday that Republican gubernatorial challenger Bill Clements has the support to win in Tuesday's general election — if voter turnout is high.

The two men's remarks came during a GOP campaign rally on behalf of Clements in the University Center ballroom Wednesday night before a partisan crowd of about 120 people. The rally, a show of Republican Party unity heading into the waning days of the current campaign, was sponsored by the Texas Tech College Republicans.

Both Loeffler and Hance were defeated by Clements in the GOP primary last May, but each had nothing but praise for the campaign efforts and intentions of his former foe.

Hance told the crowd he has been campaigning throughout West Texas during the past month on behalf of the Clements campaign. He said the highest priority for Republicans in the closing days of this campaign should be to encourage people to vote.

"I think we can win the election Tuesday by a 54 (percent) to 46 (percent) margin if we turn out the vote," Hance said. "If we don't (encourage high voter turnout), it may be much closer."

Hance blasted Clements' challenger, Gov. Mark White, for raising taxes, undermining the state's higher education system and being unable to communicate with the federal government about problems facing Texas.

Hance said White's inability to communicate with the Reagan administration in regard to problems facing Texas was proven last spring when White was not invited to attend an energy meeting between President Reagan and the governors of three oil-producing states.

Many people felt White's exclusion from last April's energy summit was a political snub on the part of President Reagan. Hance, however, said since two of the other governors in attendance were Democrats, White's exclusion from the meeting was justified and a result of the governor's hostility toward the Reagan administration.

"It is clear why President Reagan did not invite Mark White," Hance said. "He didn't want him walking out of the White House and calling a press conference to blast him."

Hance said the selection of Clements as the next governor of Texas in Tuesday's election is essential to the futures of Tech, higher education in the state and the future generations of Texas.

Loeffler, the third-ranking Republican in the U.S. House, echoed Hance's remarks on the need for high voter turnout in Tuesday's general election. Loeffler said Clements has the support to win the post if the Republicans can turn out the vote.

Candy Mathers/The University Daily

Kent Hance and Tom Loeffler

"Bill Clements has a margin. It may be comfortable or it may be tight; we don't really know," Loeffler said. "The only thing we do know is that if we get out the vote Bill Clements wins Tuesday evening."

Loeffler, who has been touring the state throughout the past month for Clements, praised Clements' record of adamantly opposing taxes, protecting state funding for higher education and proposing a diversification of the state's economy.

"Bill Clements' plans are sound, and I take Bill's word that he will do his best to implement them," Loeffler said. "Bill Clements will take the bull by the horns and break that bull."

When asked why the campaign advertisements of both gubernatorial candidates have taken a negative slant, both men said the negativism was started and has been continued by White. Both men said Clements and his aides met last week and reached an agreement to pull the negative advertisements being aired by Clements off the state's television stations.

Hance said Clements' advertisements during this last week of the campaign will be strictly positive in nature.

New TTUHSC official named

Dr. Bernhard Mittermeyer has been appointed executive vice president of the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center.

Mittermeyer, formerly the U.S. Army surgeon general, will assume the position Nov. 11, said Tech President Lauro Cavazos. Mittermeyer was selected for the job, created to be a chief academic and operating officer for TTUHSC, after a nationwide search.

His job description entails academic and administrative duties.

responsibilities will be to provide leadership in the development and implementation of long-range planning for academic, clinical practice and research programs, and he is eminently qualified to do this," Cavazos said.

Mittermeyer said he accepted the position at TTUHSC because it is a young institution and has tremendous opportunities. He said he was impressed with personnel attitudes and research projects at the main medical center as well as at the Regional Academic Health Centers in Amarillo, Odessa and El Paso.

Syria denies ties to terrorists

Scott Brumley
News
Staff Writer

Syria had absolutely nothing to do with the attempt to blow up an El Al jetliner because the nation does not condone terrorism. That's what a Syrian official said after the British government officially broke diplomatic ties with Damascus.

The rift occurred after a British court found Nezar Hindawi, a Jordanian, guilty of planting explosives in the luggage of his pregnant Irish girlfriend who attempted to board the plane. The bomb was detected by airport security before the woman got on the plane.

Now the Syrian government says there will be serious consequences for Britain's actions. What Damascus failed to clarify is what those consequences will be.

If they involve an attempt to violently vindicate Syria, it would seem tantamount to admitting the statement of non-affiliation with terrorism is a bald-faced lie.

The Syrians have called for action against Britain and any nation that follows its lead, but how much real support can Syria expect aside from possible assistance from Muslim extremists? The Syrian government expects its Arab allies to take action against a vast portion of the market for its major export product, oil.

The question now arises: How long would the Middle East continue to be a problem area if countries such as Syria, Iran and Libya could not wield oil as a weapon?

Syria also has urged the United States, which has recalled its ambassador from Damascus, to exercise restraint in backing London for what it was correct in doing, considering the preponderance of evidence against Syria.

The British have reported that they have several sources linking Syrian intelligence to the bombing attempt, including a statement from an Israeli expert on Syria who said Hindawi was instructed to blow up the jet by a Syrian air force intelligence officer.

Syrian President Hafez Assad does not do much to enhance his nation's image by steadfastly aligning his country with nations identified with terrorism, such as Iran and Libya.

Britain is not the only nation to take action against the Syrians. France, ordinarily quiet in matters relating to the Middle East, recently said it had overwhelming evidence linking Syria with the series of bombings in Paris this summer.

It would appear that Syria has failed to cover its tracks in crossing the wrong nation. Would there be such a furor over a rift between Syria and the United States, which probably would not go to the lengths the British have? Probably not, since it is news only because someone finally has taken real action against a push by a Middle Eastern country.

Death penalty issue will plague society

Michelle Bleiberg
News
Staff Writer

Do prisoners deserve to die? Execution of death row inmates is a very controversial subject. So many pros and cons exist on the subject that I'm almost afraid to touch the issue. However, a recent article in Newsweek caught my eye and I feel compelled to write.

Gara LaMarche, head of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, was quoted in Newsweek as saying "The death penalty is a fact of life...." Deciding what is right and wrong on the death penalty is difficult, but does the death penalty have to be a fact of life?

The death penalty could be compared to the abortion issue: Is it right to kill an unborn baby or is it right to kill a person who has committed an unforgivable crime? Where do we draw the line on these issues? Furthermore, who has the power to decide who has the right to live and the right to die? I don't think anyone on the face of the earth has the power to decide who lives or who dies.

Is getting rid of the death penalty the answer, however? That is hard to say. On one hand people argue that death row inmates deserve to die. On the other hand people argue nobody deserves to die. As a twist on the subject, has anybody thought about the people who are pulling the switch or injecting death serums into death row inmates? Isn't that murder? I guess not since prison officials have approval from the United States Supreme Court to put the prisoners to death.

Now a big argument facing the death sentence is racial discrimination. Statistics show that killers of white people died on death row more than killers of black people. What is the difference? I thought the United States had a little bit more intelligence than to care what racial group has killed another racial group. It really doesn't matter. Killers are equal on the basis that they are murderers. It is ironic that officials are worrying whether they are being fair in deciding who dies and who doesn't die.

Something to think about, however, is that the inmates on death row deserve to suffer for all the pain and heartache they have caused. The inmates don't deserve to be put out of their misery. Let them suffer and wonder if they are going to be put to death or if they are going to have to spend the rest of their lives in prison.

The only problem with this, as many people would argue, is there is not enough space in the prisons to house these inmates, so why not kill them one by one? Sounds a bit morbid, but some feel it is the answer.

Whatever the arguments, one thing is sure — no easy answers exist on the subjects surrounding prisons. Pros and cons exist on each solution presented for prison affairs. The controversy surrounding killing death row inmates will continue to plague the country for a long time, and society in general and legislators in particular must be prepared to deal with it.

Clements lacks ability to lead Texas

Scott Phelan
Guest
Columnist

From what I have heard lately there are many Texas Tech students planning to vote for Bill Clements next week to be our governor again. When I ask some why, the usual response is "I hate Mark White!" (Before I go on I must admit I too sometimes feel the same way. However...) When I reply, "Yeah, but what do you think Bill Clements will do for Texas?" I usually see a pair of shoulders shrugged meaning, "I don't know."

One reason no one knows what Clements will do is because the Clements we are seeing today is not the same Clements we saw campaigning four years ago. Four years ago, Clements spouted off whatever he thought. Even though it was not wise for him politically, it allowed us to see how the real Clements thinks. He downgraded the ability of women to perform in business activities, insulted the intelligence of the Hispanic population and scoffed at the sincerity of religious fundamentalists.

Please note: He also lost!

Now four years later, he does not verbalize his opinions very much. Has he changed? I doubt it. One statement I have heard Clements say is that Texas is spending more now than it did when he was governor. What an intelligent observation, since more state spending is exactly what we voted for four years ago when we re-elected Ronald Reagan. We voted for less federal government and thus more state responsibility. That increased state responsibility means added financial burdens for our states.

With all the items Clements has promised not to cut and with all the spending he has promised to cut, it seems his only plan of attack would be to cut help for the poor.

I hope not!

Remember also that Clements does not like to acknowledge West Texas as being part of our state. If Clements had his way, there would be only two state-supported universities.

For those who do not know, Clements has said he feels Texas probably could have a nuclear waste disposal site constructed in our state. He may be right; but do you think he is planning this disposal site to be constructed around his hometown of Dallas? The possibility is highly unlikely. It is much easier to imagine it being in West Texas, the so-called "other" part of the state.

Think about it!

Mr. Clements rarely visits this part of the state. He sent Roger Staubach, Tom Loeffler and Kent Hance to campaign for him last week in Lubbock. I wish we could vote for one of those three men next Tuesday. However, (unless we want to waste our vote) Clements is who each of us must either vote for or against.

As you probably can see, I am not terribly fond of White either. I do feel, however, that he is at least trying to solve the previously unheard of problems our state is facing. He has taken positions that are not politically popular but are in the best interest of our state.

White also has visited West Texas repeatedly. I feel White is concerned about our situation. Though I consider myself a Republican, I will vote for what I consider to be the better future for Texas.

To my knowledge Bill Clements has superior experience in three areas: 1) oil, 2) business and 3) the oil business!

That is it, folks! The times in Texas are changing. We need some new solutions. White at least is addressing the problems.

For Clements to look at a potential $3 billion to $7 billion deficit and to say he would not raise any taxes to help pay for it shows me he is totally out of touch with reality. Hey! I don't want to have my taxes raised either, but we cannot just brush our problems aside and say they are not there.

Clements is fond of pointing out that when he was governor, we had a $1 billion dollar surplus. Let me point out that our state government is not like an everyday company. It is designed to help satisfy the needs of the people in the state. It is not designed to make a profit. Clements, if we had a surplus of $1 billion, then you were taxing us too much!

Anyway, that does not really apply to the situation we face today. Today our massive oil revenue is fading. If it comes back, Clements, that is great. For now, however, we must take a new direction.

Clements probably is going to win the election. However, I honestly feel a vote for Clements is not a vote for the future of Texas. A vote for Clements is a vote in the past. If Clements does indeed win this election, it will not be a win for women, or a win for Hispanics, or for West Texas, or (especially) for Texas Tech.

If Clements does win, he will do so without my vote. You have until Tuesday to decide if he gets yours!

Scott Phelan is a senior civil engineering major.

On Greeks again

To the editor:

It is my opinion that your comment of Derik's letter was cheap and was in response to your own feeling of being insulted. Or perhaps you did it to further demonstrate your feelings that Greeks are lower than yourself? Maybe we need to change The UD's name to The Editor's Say?

I think that before you comment on things you need to know about them first. "SX" is not equivalent to Sigma Chi. Chi (pronounced he — with a guttural "h") is not equivalent to an English "x" any more than the Greek "P" (pronounced rho — with a rolled "r") is equivalent to the English "p."

The equivalent sound to the English "x" is the Greek letter "Xi" pronounced kse). Axiom comes from a Greek word which contains the Greek letter "Xi." Christ comes from a Greek word containing the Greek letter Chi.

Next, I would like to comment on your comment about grammar corrections: To say it simply: "I'm sorry if we are making you do your job." And how many times have the meanings been changed in my letter due to some editor's grammar correction? I think you should limit corrections for libel-related things.

So you got information from ONE member concerning the incident? How nice. Who's to say that it was correct? It may have been interpreted as correct by that person but may not necessarily have been correct. On a rare occasion, I notice the letters of our fraternity on a bathroom wall. There will be scratches on it because someone at a later date attempted to remove them. If there wasn't, I would scratch it out. Why? because in my fraternity we are not permitted to write our letters on anything, including bathroom walls. Not only would this deface the walls, but also our name as well.

Whoever wrote them could have been anyone other than an initiated member. And, sometimes junior members, or little sisters, or friends of the fraternity might do things which contradict the wishes of the fraternity. Could this be the case with that person who ordered such "wayward deeds," Laura?

I think it is good that you constantly remind fraternities of the dangers of hazing, particularly when a life is taken. There is NO EXCUSE for that type of irresponsibility. But in reference to the article you wrote, all I can say is that you can turn something good into a bad thing, and you sure are a master at it.

Financial aid woes

To the editor:

To those on campus who happen to make the mistake of a) getting married or b) getting a divorce, it will often mean a "name change." If you think that submitting your change of name to the registrar's office is sufficient paperwork, then you are a) mistakenly wrong or b) brain dead. Myself being mistaken, but having the privilege of a) being broke and b) needing the services of the financial aid office, has proved to be an enlightening experience once again.

After waiting in line for 30 minutes with 20 other fortunate souls, I had the opportunity to speak with a delightful person who informed me that my GSL check was not in because a) the application had not been mailed off yet and b) she had no idea why. Needless to say, I was a) pissed off and b) homicidal.

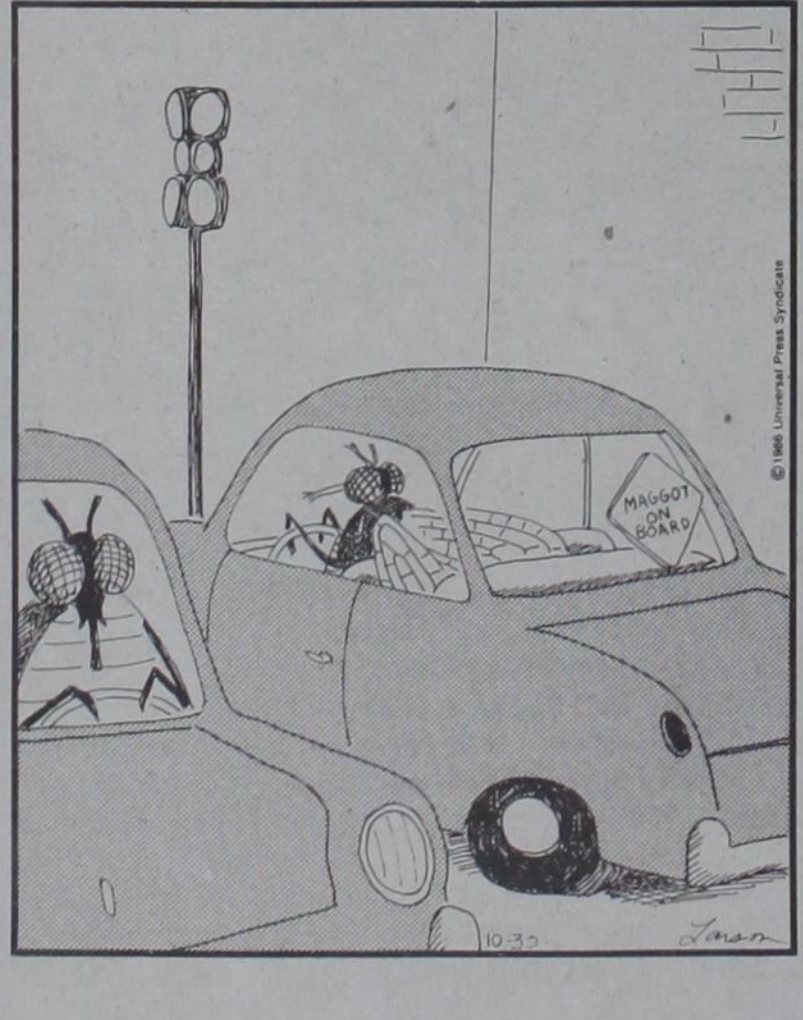

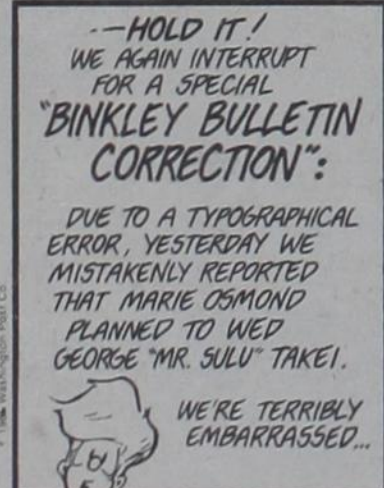

After waiting 30 minutes more, I was told by a "counselor" that my GSL application was not in my folder. I informed the young man that I had a) turned it in on Sept. 5 and b) had a "name change." At the mention of these two words, he a) went on a lengthy tirade about having two names and b) wandered off to retrieve my "other" folder. When he finally came back, I told him I had given my name change to the registrar's office; he promptly informed me that the financial aid office is on a completely different computer system from the registrar's office and went on to explain the computer system of the university.

I a) could not have known this since I have never been employed at this university and b) could have cared less about the hardware involved in this growing adventure. I calmly told the "counselor" that although I may have two names, I have only one Social Security number, to which he commented on the ignorance of the student population who cannot copy down their numbers correctly.

This whole ordeal could have been dealt with in a fairly short amount of time if the "counselor" had a) received a minimum amount of communication courses and b) not treated me as just another number. I also feel that "counselors" should have a counseling degree to call themselves such. Amusing as this may be, I am a) still anxiously awaiting word from the third floor of West Hall and b) praying this letter will not interfere with the processing of my aging file(s).

Reagan continues on Republican campaigns

By The Associated Press

President Reagan crusaded for continued Republican control of the Senate Wednesday while Democratic challengers in some of the nation's closest races were buoyed by fresh poll results and newspaper endorsements.

In Alabama's bizarre gubernatorial race, Attorney General Charlie Graddick signaled that he was considering dropping his write-in candidacy. Graddick, a conservative former Republican who lost the Democratic nomination on a court ruling earlier this year, has been running a distant third in public opinion polls.

As the candidates headed into the final week of campaigning, the Federal Election Commission reported that the Republican National Committee and GOP House and Senate campaign committees have raised more than $225 million since the beginning of the two-year election cycle, almost four times the $57 million reported by their Democratic counterpart committees.

Reagan left Washington aboard Air Force One for a seven-state swing that will end Election Day in California. He made an afternoon stop in South Dakota on behalf of freshman Sen. James Abdnor, who is in a tight re-election campaign with Democratic Rep. Tom Daschle.

On his way west, Reagan stopped in Evansville, Ind., where he accused Democrats of a "naked display of power politics" in awarding a House seat two years ago to Rep. Frank McCloskey. McCloskey's opponent this year is Richard McIntyre, his rival from the 1984 campaign.

McIntyre and McCloskey split the vote in 1984. GOP state officials in Indiana certified McIntyre the winner by a 34-vote margin, but the Democratic-ruled House conducted its own recount and found McCloskey the winner by four votes.

Reagan's stop in Indiana was his only one dedicated to a House race in a busy fall of campaigning. Both parties agree the Democrats will retain their majority in the new 435-member House that is elected next Tuesday, possibly gaining 10 or more seats in the process.

There are 36 statehouse races on the ballot, as well, with Republicans expected to pick up at least a half-dozen seats.

The main battleground in this year's mid-term elections is the struggle for control of the Senate, where Republicans currently hold a 53-47 edge but must defend 22 of the 34 seats at stake.

At the Abdnor rally in economically hardhit South Dakota, the president renewed his prediction that a second economic boom is at hand, and urged voters to re-elect the "clean-up crew" of conservative Republicans they sent to the Senate in 1980.

Democrats took a pounding from another source as consumer advocate Ralph Nader called a news conference in Washington to accuse the party of a "very serious strategic campaign error" by not formulating a national reply to Reagan.

But there was encouraging news for Democratic Senate challengers in Georgia and Alabama, two states where Reagan campaigned on Tuesday, as well as Idaho, where he is headed later in the week.

In Georgia, a poll conducted for a television station and released Tuesday night gave GOP Sen. Mack Mattingly a 47 percent to 44 percent lead over Democratic Rep. Wyche Fowler.

Birthday tape sent to hostage in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Television stations in Beirut broadcast a one-minute videotape Wednesday showing the daughter of kidnapped newsman Terry Anderson — a child the American hostage has never seen in person.

The tape was made to mark Anderson's 39th birthday and was sent to Beirut in the hope his captors would let him see the TV showing.

Anderson, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut on March 16, 1985, before his daughter was born.

U.S. seeks status of MIAs in Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Four U.S. military specialists went to Hanoi on Wednesday for technical talks aimed at resolving the status of 1,786 Americans listed as missing in action from the Vietnam War, which ended in 1975.

The talks, the fourth round this year, had been set for Oct. 8, but were suddenly canceled by Vietnam with no explanation. The technical talks began in December 1982.

The U.S. delegation is headed by Lt. Col. Joe Harvey, commander of the Honolulu-based U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center, the military unit in charge of settling the MIA issue.

Airlines compete for Love Field usage

DALLAS (AP) — Officials at Southwest Airlines, which would lose its monopoly at Love Field if a judge's decision stands, had little to say Wednesday about the ruling allowing Continental Airlines to serve the airport.

State District Judge Harlan Martin said Tuesday he issued a summary judgment in a lawsuit that Houston-based Continental filed against the city of Dallas in late July.

Martin said the issues in the case centered on whether Continental intended to offer only in-state flights to and from Love Field, a requirement being met by the other two airlines using the airport. Continental says it wants to serve Houston's Hobby Airport.

Martin is expected to issue his order Nov. 7.

Southwest and its subsidiary, TranStar, are the only airlines now flying out of Love Field.

Soviets release censored film on Stalinism

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The cinematic shocker of the season is an allegory of Stalin terror and its effect 50 years later. It is believed to be the first Soviet film about the dictator's brutality and was delayed by censors for two years.

"I've never seen anything like it in my life," a middle-aged Moscow woman said Wednesday. "You can't say it's a good film; it's just stunning."

A woman too young to remember

Josef Stalin shuddered and said: "It's terrifying."

The movie is called "Pokayaniye" (Confession) and was made for television in Georgia, Stalin's native republic. It opened this month in Tbilisi, capital of the republic, and a Western visitor said it was the talk of the town.

It also has been shown to groups of intellectuals in Moscow, including the artists' society on Wednesday.

Neither Stalin nor his feared chief of secret police, Lavrenti Beria, is mentioned by name, but no Soviet audience could mistake the subject and final message that the country has yet to address Stalinism and its consequences.

Director Tengiz Abuladze uses costumes and surrealism in the 2½-hour film to create an atmosphere that has the effect of setting the action apart from the Soviet Union of the 1930s and the 1980s. His purpose probably was to get around censors, who might have objected to a more direct approach.

Soviet creative arts have undergone some liberalization since

Nikolai S. Gorbachev came to power in March 1985. The new leadership of the national film makers' union, elected at a congress last summer, has released several movies from the censor's shelf but nothing so stunning as "Confession."

It took 30 years for the film to be made.

Nikita S. Khrushchev denounced Stalin in 1956, three years after his death, and the dictator's name disappeared from public places.

Researchers develop National AIDS Commission

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The National Academy of Sciences, lamenting "woefully inadequate" federal programs to cope with America's new health threat, called Wednesday for creation of a National Commission on AIDS.

The prestigious academy, in a major report on the increasing problems of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, said the only way to avoid a health catastrophe in this country is to launch "perhaps the most wide-ranging and intensive efforts ever made against an infectious disease."

A panel of experts convened by the academy said the nation should be spending about $2 billion annually by 1990, most of it new federal money, in a multi-pronged effort to thwart the deadly disease.

Research into the nature of the viral disease, treatments and vaccines should get $1 billion a year by the end of the decade, said Dr. David Baltimore, a Nobel laureate who was co-chairman of the study.

"Our committee believes that sufficient areas of need and opportunity exist to quadruple the 1986 AIDS research funding by 1990 to about $1 billion in newly available funds," Baltimore told a news conference.

"We emphasized that these funds must be new appropriations, not funds redirected from other health and research efforts."

Counseling Center helps students adapt to college life

By CINDY PANDOLFO
News Staff Writer

A minority peer counseling program to help black and Hispanic students make a successful transition from high school to college is being sponsored by the Texas Tech University Counseling Center.

Dolores Mack, a counseling psychologist at the Counseling Center, developed the program because of her interest in minority students. After visiting universities with successful peer counseling programs, Mack designed a personalized program for Tech.

The major goal of peer minority counseling is to increase retention and help minority students make successful academic and social transitions at Tech.

Mack said a large percentage of students fail to make the necessary adjustments to the college environment during the first semester. Students who make it through the first six weeks generally continue their education.

Mack said the program is working successfully with the students who participate. Mack said the major obstacle she and peer counselors face are students they are unable to reach.

She said many minority students miss the benefits offered by the program because of mistaken ideas about what the program really concerns.

"When we make the initial call to the student and say the program is sponsored by the counseling office, right away the student thinks — I don't need that (a psychologist); there's nothing wrong with me," Mack said.

"Minority peer counseling is not for students who have emotional problems. It's for all minority students.

"We just want to show these kids that someone cares."

Mack said the most prevalent problem among entering freshmen is failure to recognize the differences between high school and college.

"University life is very different for both Anglo and minority students. Many entering freshmen just don't understand that college is not like high school," Mack explained.

"They don't study because they think the have had the same material in high school," she said. "Old study habits don't work; the student does poorly and becomes confused.

"Many students become psychological dropouts long before the semester ends."

Several things occur when a student drops out psychologically. Mack said some students drop out and never bother to withdraw. For students who decide to return to college later in life, failure to withdraw can be detrimental. Others begin to skip classes because they are discouraged.

When the program began two years ago, Mack trained two work-study students to serve as peer counselors. Today, eight students and one graduate student counsel minority students.

Peer counselors are minority students who have been trained to help other students. Because academic success is a mandatory requirement for any student interested in becoming a peer counselor, counselors must maintain a 2.5 grade point average. Eligibility in the work-study program also is mandatory.

Peer counselor Selso Mata said the counseling program deals with a lot of basics. Location and services offered by various campus organizations such as Programs for Academic Support Services (PASS), the Counseling Center or the Career Planning and Placement Service are important functions of a minority counselor, he said.

Students also face other problems. Peer pressure creates many problems for new students according to Cyndi Garza, a volunteer peer counselor. Garza said learning to say no and to set priorities is important if freshmen are to succeed at Tech.

Mata said he has encountered difficulty getting students involved in the minority counseling program. He said many students think they are in trouble or that they are in need of psychological help when Mata contacts them.

"They just don't understand," he said. "Finally when they find out what peer counseling is all about, they love it."

Peer counselor Danny Garcia pointed out that the absence of the generation gap eliminates a lot of problems. Students work better with an upper classman who has experienced similar problems.

All the peer counselors agree that the confidentiality of the program is beneficial. There also is unanimous agreement that the cramped office conditions creates many confidentiality problems for the counselors.

The Counseling Center has provided support for the peer counseling program. However, Mack and the student counselors said the administration is not committed to the program. If administrators were committed, Mack said, nine counselors would not be sharing one office.

Students interested in the minority peer counseling program can contact Mack at 742-3674 or can stop by the University Counseling Center at 214 West Hall.

Tech costume ball to provide safe, clean Halloween

By JILL JOHNSON
News Staff Writer

In an effort to ward off bad "spirits," the Texas Tech campus will host the Second Annual Halloween Masquerade Ball from 8 p.m. to midnight Friday in the University Center ballroom.

Sponsored by West Texans for a Clean Halloween, Odysseus Music Productions and the Tech Greek Council, the event will provide an opportunity for people to have a safe holiday.

A percentage of ticket sales revenues will be donated to the Lubbock Easter Seals chapter, sponsor of the "Safe Halloween" campaign, said Gerald Freeman, producer of Odysseus Music Productions.

Freeman said he approached the West Texans for a Clean Halloween committee with concern about safe entertainment for the upcoming holiday and worked with them to provide a safe and fun event.

Freeman said, "With the newly changed drinking laws, there is more concern that clean and wholesome entertainment should be provided for the newly affected age groups."

Freeman said last year's ball was very successful, with 500 to 750 people in attendance.

"This year we want to see a 50-50 ratio between community members and college students who come to the ball," Freeman said. He said he hopes to see between 700 to 1,200 people attend.

"The ball will be a much more extravagant event than last year's ball due to added community support, more live entertainment and increased support from various entrepreneurs," said Emma Bradley, member of the committee and associate producer of Odysseus Music Productions.

Scheduled events for the ball include live entertainment by the band Just and Jamming, dramatic entrepreneur Charles Contee and Big Al and the Time Machine will disc jockey.

"An alternative to drugs and alcohol should be made available to prove that you don't need drugs to have a good time.

Freeman said all ages are welcome to attend the security-controlled event.

Admission is $4.50 presale for people 17 and older, $5 at the door; 12-16 years $3.50 presale, $4 at the door; 6-12 years $2 presale, $2.50 at the door. For ticket information, call 799-8114.

Universities increase funds for recruiting

By JOHNNA BROWN
News Staff Writer

A report released by the Educational Testing Service (ETS) this month reported that American colleges and universities have not yet suffered the long-expected "Great Enrollment Drop of the Eighties," mainly because they have learned how to sell themselves better.

According to ETS, some public colleges now spend an average $30 per student on recruiting and private institutions may spend as much as $500 per student.

Marty Grassel, Texas Tech director of new student relations, said the university spends about $15 per admitted student and only $1.50 per contacted prospect.

"Each year, the Office of New Student Relations contacts about 70,000 prospective students," Grassel said. "Of those prospects, 10 percent apply to Tech and about 6,000 are admitted."

ETS researcher Hunter Breland reported that public four-year colleges have boosted their recruiting budgets by 63 percent or more since 1980, more than double the inflation rate.

However, Grassel said Tech's Office of New Student Relations budget has not increased since the office's creation in 1981.

"We have not seen an increase in our budget nor our staff since 1981," Grassel said. "We are fortunate the office has not and does not see any funding reductions because of higher education cuts, but we also do not foresee an increase in funds or staff."

Grassel said the Office of New Student Relations has not suffered as much as other offices on campus because university officials realize how important student recruitment is to the financial stability of the university.

In addition, ETS reported that American colleges as a whole believe they have to recruit students aggressively if they want to survive.

According to a report from The College Press Service, Gerald Bowker, University of Tennessee admissions director, said the new emphasis on recruiting is here to stay.

"Colleges really need to work on developing their image, regardless of whether we are in good times or bad times," Bowker said. "It doesn't stop because last year was a good year."

Leroy Twilley, admissions director at Western Illinois University, said in the CPS report that his office is doing everything from buying mailing lists from national testing companies, sending letters, inviting people to college activities, hosting college tours and visiting high schools to telemarketing.

Grassel said Tech's recruiting office contacts prospective students mainly by means of letters, phone calls, visiting high schools and college tours.

"We have also recruited prospective students by volunteer student groups, other student affairs offices and by the Ex-Students Association," Grassel said. "The Ex-Students Association has been a tremendous help with recruitment."

Bill Dean, Ex-Students Association executive director, said the organization supplements the Office of New Student Relations budget with about $20,000.

"The $20,000 funds a high school counselor conference held every summer, out-of-state travel by college recruiters and helps with college nights in metropolitan areas," Dean said.

Grassel said even though many American universities are concerned with the expected enrollment drop, Tech is not interested in maintaining an increase in enrollment from year to year.

"We are more interested in recruiting the best students possible," Grassel said. "We want to maintain and increase the academic integrity of the university."

Counselor says drug abuse at Tech no worse than at other college campuses

By SCOTT BRUMLEY
News Staff Writer

Though drug abuse has become a prevalent issue, it is no worse here than at any other college, a counselor at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center psychiatry clinic said.

Tom McGovern, an associate professor of psychiatry at TTUHSC, said drug use on any college campus mirrors the general population. He said alcohol often is overlooked as an abused drug.

McGovern said he could not divulge statistics from the clinic because of ethical and legal constraints, but he said he believes substance abuse is no worse now than it has been the past few years.

Judi Henry, an assistant to the dean of students, said of 30 Tech students brought before the office this semester, seven have faced alcohol or drug-related charges.

McGovern said the clinic's goal in treating chemical dependency is to make the user aware of the problems being caused by use of the substance and to educate the subject as to available choices.

Drug abuse is not an insurmountable problem, he said.

"There's a lot of hope in this situation," McGovern said.

Distinguishing patterns of use of a particular drug is important in treating the problem, he said. Many people drink, but those who continue to drink after alcohol begins to cause disastrous effects in their lives may require treatment, he said.

"Addicts use it (a drug) for the emotional high it produces and to satisfy their physical addiction," he said.

McGovern, who specializes in counseling alcoholics, said he believes alcohol is becoming less dominant as other drug problems emerge. He said of 10 people using a particular substance, one is abusing it.

"Ten years ago, the drug of choice was alcohol. Now, though it continues to be a problem, other drugs have come into play. There's no fixed pattern," McGovern said.

Students often do not have a substance abuse problem themselves, but a member of their family is dependent on a chemical substance, he said. Such a situation creates a great deal of stress on the student, sometimes necessitating counseling, he said.

McGovern, a member of the Alcohol Awareness Committee, said he commends the effort put forth to inform students about alcohol during the recent Alcohol Awareness Week.

Pam Anthrop, head of the committee, said the group's objective during the week-long program was to raise student awareness about substance abuse and to provide the most accurate information possible.

Love of music motivates Tech's van Appledorn

By MISSY COSTELLO
Lifestyles Staff Writer

She works in a second floor room looking out toward the library, a room made small by the overabundance of music. Music scores fill the shelves and spill onto the floor. A grand piano fills half her office in the music building, competing for space with a synthesizer, a stereo, the desk, and, of course, the music.

Mary Jeanne van Appledorn's very mannerisms personify her love of music. She has used the word "brebis" in the title of several of her works, a Latin word meaning short. "That probably zeroes in on something about me," she said. Both her manner of dress and her very personality are short and to the point. Brebis. Staccato.

Mary Jeanne van Appledorn is surrounded by music. Although the Tech professor of music is not well known as a composer locally, her works are known worldwide.

Last Sunday, her piece "Fluid Gold" premiered in Italy at premio Ancono as one of eight finalists. On Nov. 6 her "Liszt Fantasy" will premiere at the American Liszt Society. It will be performed by Dale Underwood, a saxophonist with the U.S. Navy band, using his sax and a tape.

"So it's a good bit away from here, and some here," she said of the performance of her music.

Closer to home, two of van Appledorn's works will have their world premieres in Lubbock soon. On Tuesday, the Texas Tech Choir will perform "Spirit Divine" as part of its Fall Choral Concert in Hemmle Recital Hall.

On Saturday, "Freedom of Youth," a piece for speaker and synthesizer, will be performed as part of the dedication ceremony for the bronze statue "Freedom of Youth" which was placed recently in the fountain of the Holden Hall courtyard.

Van Appledorn was commissioned by the Tech College of Arts and Sciences to write the "sound sculpture."

Both the music and the poem by Elizabeth Akers Allen are intended to capture the image of the subject of the sculpture, sculptor Rosie Sandifer Alford's daughter Jamie, as she swings on a rope above a pool of water. The words are as follows:

Freedom to dream,
to live without worry,
to soar in your imagination,
to face the future unafraid.
This is the "Freedom of Youth."
Backward, turn backward,
O time, in your flight,
Make me a child again just for tonight.

"I read the poem and I knew exactly what I wanted to do," van Appledorn said. "To soar in the imagination," she said with a flourish of her arm. "It's nothing but laser sweeps."

She said she felt the poem had nine parts, including the "water garden interlude" between the fifth and sixth lines. The nine parts of her piece are especially appropriate because the statue also is nine feet tall.

"Most of the pieces I do are for specific people or organizations," she said. "They have some specific performer in mind or some event."

Van Appledorn said she once was commissioned to write 10 piano pieces for children. At the time, she visited the Fort Davis area with friends and was impressed with the beauty of the area. "What a fantastic picture," she said. Inspired by her surroundings, she tapped out the pieces on a motel table in order to recall them when she returned home. "It's ongoing, all the time," she said of her composing. "When you're teaching, you're limited."

Creativity in action

"The teaching helps tremendously in constantly firing the creative process. There is no end to the creative discoveries."

She spoke of the Yamaha DX7 synthesizer that she will use in Saturday's statue dedication.

"I do use it (to compose)," she said. "One could layer in any number of tracks and have a whole orchestra."

"Many musicians fear this. It's an instrument. It will never replace anybody or anything else, if for no other reason than the sheer delight of playing one's instrument."

"I feel like I'm flying that thing," she said. "Or driving it."

"There was only so far we could go with C, D, E, F, G, A, B. There had to be a breakaway somewhere."

"Music is music. There are different kinds of it, this is true."

"At the university, we only have so much time, so much to teach. There are virtually hundreds of kinds of musics, to say nothing of the peoples of the world and their influences."

"The day is quite full."

Less proves to be more in newest film starring William Hurt, Marlee Matlin

By KRISTI FROELICH
Lifestyles Editor

It has been said that silence is golden, and in the case of Paramount's "Children of a Lesser God," about the relationship between a teacher in a deaf school and a deaf woman, it truly is golden.

The film stars Oscar winner William Hurt as the compassionate and incredibly sexy teacher James Leeds, who tries to win over the angry deaf woman played by Marlee Matlin.

Hurt is one of the most talented actors of today, proved by his Academy Award-winning performance in "Kiss of the Spider Woman." He takes on every role with a great deal of care, and "Children" is no exception. His portrayal of Leeds is heartwarming and develops with care.

Matlin's performance as the deaf Sarah Norman is right on the mark. She plays her silent role with emotion, anger and love. Matlin, who actually is hearing impaired, brings a sense of passion to the screen. You want to know what has made such a beautiful and intelligent woman so filled with hate and disgust.

Scenes between Hurt and Matlin spark passionate chemistry that is intriguing to watch. They are mesmerizing together, and it is easy to see why they now live together as a result of their roles in this film.

The characters in "Children of a Lesser God" are well-developed, which makes the audience care about what happens to them.

Everything is beautifully done in this film, including the dialogue, which is part sign language. It is amazing how much strength, anger and love can be portrayed through just the use of the hands.

This film is an enlightening drama of the human spirit and how it overcomes anger, fear and hate. And to have Hurt and Matlin performing the main characters only adds to the quality of the movie. They each can convey so much with the smallest facial expression or hand movement. The film was directed with subtlety by Randa Haines, who takes the initiative to let her actors feel and become the characters. She doesn't use heavy-handed methods, because with the expertise that Hurt brings to the role, she doesn't need to; and Haines has the smarts to know to leave well enough alone.

"Children of a Lesser God" is a warm, sensitive film with just the right touch of humor. The movie is rated R and is showing at the Mann Fox Theater at 4215 19th St.

This is one instance when "less" definitely is more.

Blindness doesn't hamper grad student

John Stoskopf

Candy Mathers/The University Daily

John Stoskopf demonstrates the use of a Braille writing machine. He has been blind since birth, but that didn't detain him from a career in the Peace Corps.

By MICHAEL STEPHENS
Lifestyles Staff Writer

In 1983 John Stoskopf decided he wanted to travel and teach in another country. So he joined the Peace Corps and was shipped off to Ecuador, where he spent two years working with the community of Ambato. After returning to the United States, Stoskopf began to work for certification in resource education. What makes his story even more unusual is that Stoskopf has been blind since birth.

Stoskopf, a 34-year-old Texas Tech graduate student, is from the area around Great Bend, Kan. He received his master's degree in sight-impaired and physically disabled education at Arkansas State University in Jonesboro. Shortly thereafter, he decided to join the Peace Corps.

His reasons for going to Ecuador were simple: "The Peace Corps is an easy, good way to get abroad," Stoskopf said. "I really got a chance to do and experience a lot of things that are part of their culture. They have different customs, even Christmas is different, and I did learn some things."

During his stay in Ambato, Stoskopf taught Braille to blind people in the community. He also performed another service by increasing community awareness of the abilities of sight-disabled people.

"I wanted them to learn that blind people could be something more than beggars," he said.

"There is a problem with that in Ecuador; there is no aid there, and so there are a lot of problems for blind people there."

Was Stoskopf successful in educating the people of Ambato?

"Yes, I think so. I got a lot of exposure and was in a lot of the papers down there. I think something got through to them."

In 1985, Stoskopf was bitten by a dog in Ambato. The subsequent rabies shots caused an extreme allergic reaction in him and as a result, Stoskopf can never return to Ecuador as a Peace Corps volunteer.

Last December, Stoskopf returned to the United States and began an internship at Maedgen Elementary School in Lubbock. There he works for his certification in visually impaired education with pre-adolescent and early adolescent students.

Stoskopf said he likes teaching, enough to want to continue it as a profession. Math, spelling and reading Braille are areas he has covered in his classes at Maedgen. He said that when his certification process is complete, he would like to retain that broad base of subject matter rather than specialize in any particular subject.

Stoskopf said he would like to remain in the resource areas of education.

"I get a lot of satisfaction from that type of teaching," he said. "There you can watch the improvements of the kids, their self-esteem and attitudes in them."

How well do you deal with the students, especially since resource education requires so much patience? "We get along fine, and believe me you learn plenty of patience in the Peace Corps," Stoskopf said.

His internship in Lubbock ends in less than a month, and Stoskopf will be on his way to being certified for teaching blind and disabled children. While he is sure of what he wants to do, he only knows one thing about where he wants to do it.

"I really want to move to one of the coasts," he said. "I'm tired of the Midwest and want to move somewhere else to teach."

In the meantime, Stoskopf has thought about returning to Ecuador or somewhere else overseas. "I have a lot of friends in Ecuador and I'd like to go overseas again, do some work with the blind somewhere," he said. "I'm not sure I would like to go into the Peace Corps again."

Through his series of adventures, Stoskopf has worked a long hard road for a cause he finds important: education. And he plans to carry on as a result of the patience and discipline he has displayed.

"I'll just go on," he said.

November wins crucial to December accolades

Brad Walker
Sports
Staff Writer

Look out, folks! The Texas Tech Red Raiders are favored to beat the Texas (We Used To Be A Shoe-In Top 10 Selection) Longhorns Saturday at Jones (I wish it was T. instead of Clifford and Aubrey) Stadium.

The same bunch the local yokels and embarrassed alums had begun to call the Pink Faders not long ago have been tabbed by the Las Vegasites to be one point better than the 'Horns in Lubbock in 1986.

This, people, is damn near monumental.

This could actually mean that a little respect is trickling down to the Hub City campus. Tech, now at 4-3 this year and 2-2 in the Southwest Conference, just has not been favored to beat Texas in quite awhile.

Much of the reason has something to do with the past, an ugly one for Tech. Texas leads the series 29-6 (21-5 in SWC games). Even during the Seventies, when Texas and Tech were the top two league teams in terms of bowl appearances, the Raiders won only twice.

Texas long has been in the midst of SWC and national title races, while Tech was merely fighting to play all the way into December.

This season you will find a couple of teams on basically the same scale. Tech again, still looking only for a bowl invitation. Texas however, is trying to adjust to a new coaching staff — possibly a lame-duck coaching staff. The Longhorns enter this Saturday at a very uncomfortable 3-3.

Less than three weeks ago, the Raiders finally beat that nagging monkey off their back. The "big game" monkey. They did it in Arkansas, of all places. Finally they can worry no more about how long it has been since they defeated a nationally ranked team.

Tech still has one problem to get rid of, though — November.

November has been less than kind to the Raiders, who had gained the reputation of "faders" partly because of their inability to finish a season in one piece.

If you have ever seen a Dirk West cartoon on the front of the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal sports section, you know what I mean.

By the end of the month, poor ol' Raider Red's ten-gallon is so shot up and full of holes that it ends up looking like a two-quart visor.

For the Eighties, Tech is 4-16-1 during November. Bowl commitments tend to frown upon schools that do not finish strong. They also frown upon teams with losing records.

Losing obviously has plagued Tech the past seven years. Keep your head above water for the first half of the season, then sink at the end. You want them to go 3-3 from the start? No problem. You want them 3-2 after mid-October? Now there is a problem.

That all-too-elusive winning season, the one that is going to get Tech back to bowls, big boys, and big time, is staring the Raiders in the face one more time. Saturday is the first day of November. Who will answer the wake-up call on game day — the Raiders or Faders?

The Texas Tech football team is at another one of those dreaded "crossroads." Underdogs constantly are in this situation.

It's awfully nice to be favored for a change.

Tech kicker embarks on 'dream' mission

By KENT BEST
Sports Editor

In his dreams, the scoreboard tells the story.

With less than a minute showing on the Jones Stadium clock, the Texas Tech football team has driven the length of the field to within field goal range. The scoreboard reads, Tech 14, Texas 14.

As 50,000 onlookers scoot to the edge of their seats, the call is made. In trots the man whose job it is to win the football game with a single swing of his leg. There will be no second chance. No time to sleep it over. No one to hand off to.

In his dream, Tech kicking specialist Scott Segrist calmly bisects the goal posts with a long, high one. Tech wins. Texas loses. It's the stuff of legends.

It's also the sort of stuff Segrist, a sophomore from Lubbock Monterey, lives for.

"I'm always aware that a game could come down to a field goal," he said. "I know these guys," he said, pointing to a group of Tech players headed to the locker room, "would like to run up a lot of points on them (Texas) and that would be great. But to tell you the truth," he said with a grin, "I'd love to beat UT with a field goal."

Segrist is no stranger to pressure-packed, game-on-the-line situations.

"The first kick I had in high school was a 44-yarder against (Lubbock) Coronado," he said. "Everybody said, 'What are they doing putting that kid in there?' I really enjoyed that feeling of pressure."

Pressure is something Segrist is just beginning to feel midway through his first season as the Raiders' No. 1 kicker. He kicked four field goals against Kansas State in the season opener and had a 43-yarder in the Orange Bowl against Miami a week later.

Since then, however, Segrist has missed seven out of eight, including his last three attempts. All but one of those kicks was beyond 43 yards. An excuse, perhaps. But not one that Segrist believes is valid.

"The distance shouldn't matter that much," Segrist said. "Distance shouldn't be a factor."

What is a factor to Segrist is consistency, something the muscular 165-pounder has lacked during the month of October.

"At times I've felt like just giving up. My power was gone. I wasn't getting as much height on my kicks. It was real frustrating."

"I'd come to practice every day just hoping that I would be able to kick the ball better," he said, shaking his head. "I was fighting it."

Credit Tech's open week for Segrist possibly solving some mechanical errors that have resulted in the midseason slump. According to Segrist, at some point between the Miami game, Sept. 13 and the New Mexico contest the following week, he added a half step to his approach on his field goal attempts.

"I really noticed it watching films of my kicks," he said. "It looked like I was doing the splits out there on my last step before the kick. I was taking about a 6½-foot last step.

"I'm also attacking the ball better by staying in a lower position. I was standing up higher before and it was affecting my kicks."

Segrist did have some added incentive to make some adjustments. It is, after all, UT and All-America kicker Jeff Ward coming to town.

"He's (Ward) ice out there," Segrist said of the Texas kicker's habit of kicking game-winning field goals. "He beat us the last time he came here."

That last time was 1984 when Ward booted two field goals within two minutes to lift the No. 2 'Horns past Tech, 13-10. It's a memory Segrist would just as soon forget.

As Segrist lined up to take his last kick of the day, Tech coaches and players clustered around the center of the field. Segrist approached the ball, coming in low, head down. You could almost see the charging defenders, their hands raised in futile blocks. The hunched linemen, providing the lone mode of resistance.

The kick was long and high. Segrist, a man with a mission, raised his hands in triumph.

Clinkscale to sign with Colts

By The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Defensive back Preston Davis was cut by the Indianapolis Colts, but the expected signing of former Dallas Cowboy Dexter Clinkscale was delayed, Coach Rod Dowhower said Wednesday.

"He hasn't signed yet. I imagine it has to do something with money. Not how much it is, but how it is distributed," Dowhower said.

The Indianapolis News reported Wednesday that Clinkscale would sign a three-year contract worth more than $720,000.

The five-year veteran did not report to the Cowboys this year. The Colts then claimed Clinkscale on waivers, but he declined the offer and became a free agent.

Clinkscale, 28, met last week with the Colts, Miami Dolphins, Detroit Lions, Kansas City Chiefs and Los Angeles Raiders.

"It was a very difficult decision between the Colts and Miami," Clinkscale said Tuesday night in a telephone interview with the News.

"Dexter's experienced. He'll give us an experience factor," Dowhower said.

Clinkscale had a career-high 100 tackles with Dallas last year. He was a starter the past three seasons and has nine interceptions and nine fumble recoveries in his career.

Basketball scrimmage slated

The Texas Tech men's basketball team, fresh off its second consecutive Southwest Conference tournament championship, will have its first organized intrasquad scrimmage at 7 p.m. today in the Lubbock High School gym.

Tech Coach Gerald Myers will divide the squad into different units for the game.

The public is invited to attend, and there will be no admission charge.

Today's organized scrimmage is the first of three intrasquad contests for the Red Raiders, whose regular-season opener is less than a month away.

The team will play at 6:30 p.m.

Tuesday in Lamesa, the hometown of freshman guard Jerry Mason, and will scrimmage Nov. 11 in Levelland. Tip-off for the latter will be at 7 p.m. in the South Plains College Texan Dome.

Admission for all the scrimmages is free.

The Raiders open the season with an exhibition game against the Poland National team on Nov. 20 in the Lubbock Municipal Coliseum.

The regular-season opener is set for Nov. 28 when Tech hosts Cal State-Fullerton.

For ticket information on the upcoming season, contact the Texas Tech Athletic Ticket Office at the north end of Jones Stadium.

Cowboy takes hard-line stance in battle against drugs, alcohol

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — No one has to tell Doug Cosbie that when you talk about drugs and alcohol, you're talking about life and death.

The fact that Cosbie, the Cowboys' player representative, was pleased to learn an arbitrator had ruled against commissioner Pete Rozelle's plan to institute random drug testing does not mean Cosbie fears testing or that he is unconcerned about drug abuse.

Nor is he unconcerned about alcohol abuse. And for good reason. At age six, Cosbie found out what alcohol could do to a man and to a family.

His family.

Cosbie, the Cowboys' tight end, was six when Bud Cosbie walked out the door and didn't look back.

"My father was an alcoholic. My parents got divorced when I was six years old," Cosbie said. "My mom tells me stories that my father used to get his paycheck on a Friday afternoon, and by Saturday morning it was all gone. He would cash it and spend it all at the bar with his buddies."

"You don't really understand all that much about alcohol when you're six years old, but I saw what it did to a family," Cosbie continued. "It ruined a relationship I had with my father, and it cost him a career. He was a policeman in San Francisco, and one day his lieutenant got on him for not answering a call. My father had been drinking on duty. He went in and turned in his badge."

"He died about four years ago, and I would say in the 20 years between the time I was six until he died, I saw him about four or five times. As far as I know, he died of alcohol."

Cosbie said he frequently was exposed to drugs as he grew up in the San Francisco Bay area. In college at Santa Clara, it was not unusual that he knew some of the small-time drug dealers on campus.

"Cocaine wasn't around so much. People were more into marijuana and mushrooms," Cosbie said.

"There were quite a few guys who sold drugs to students, and I knew one guy named John who was a year ahead of me. I knew him pretty well,

—Doug Cosbie

but I didn't really hang around him.

"I guess it was my rookie year here, and John was already out of school. He was a salesman working for some company by then. That was his legitimate job," Cosbie said.

"But one day he called a couple of my friends. He said some people were coming by to see him, and he wanted them to come check on him that afternoon. That was all he said. When they got there, the front door was open, and John was lying in the middle of the floor. He had been shot in the back of the head."

"My friends left and called the police, and by the time the police got there, the place had been ransacked, so my friends figured whoever killed him had still been in the house when they came by. The police found $40,000 in cash in the trunk of John's car."

That was the second life that Cosbie had seen go to waste.

"In both cases, drugs and alcohol ruined people's lives, but they made a choice. They made a bad choice, but nobody becomes a drug addict by accident," Cosbie said.

"I drink beer, but I've never had anyone pour one down my throat. That's why I think education is the only way society is going to solve its drug problem."

"I think you have to do it with education and start with the kids. It's hard in our society. You see all the beer commercials on TV, and they're all athletes or outdoorsmen. It's like, to be a man, you've got to drink beer."

"There's nothing wrong with drinking a beer, but there is when you do it to extremes. I drank beer in high school. Everybody did. But there's a reason most states have a law that you have to be 21 now. You've got to be mature enough to make a decision."

On the skids Decimated spikers forced to regroup

By LYNDOL LOYD
Sports Staff Writer

Last weekend perhaps ranks among the most disappointing of Texas Tech volleyball Coach Donna Martin's career.

The Red Raider spikers, already knocked into the fringes of the Southwest Conference title chase, suffered road losses at the hands of Rice and Houston Friday and Saturday, although they went into the matches off a momentum-building upset of nationally ranked Texas-Arlington last week.

Much of the time, two members of the starting lineup, Becky Boxwell and Susan Kelly, were forced to sit on the bench and watch the slim possibility of a title fade away.

The Raiders, 19-9 last year, fell to 9-10 and 2-5 in the SWC.

"It was all just so frustrating," Martin said Wednesday after having a few days to reflect on her team's situation. "I guess it's not quite as frustrating, though, as it would have been if our team was at full strength for both of our matches."

The start of the Raiders' physical problems happened midway through the weekend's first match when junior outside hitter Becky Boxwell, the team leader in kills and digs, suffered a severely sprained ankle during the third game against Rice.

"Becky had been playing so well for us lately, and she is such a strong player that it's hard to do without her on the court when you are used to having her in the match," Martin said. "She had also been playing very strong defense with an excellent passing game."

Despite Boxwell's injury in the five-game defeat to Rice, last year's second team All-SWC member already had 10 kills and 11 digs in the match.

Sophomore middle blocker Susan Kelly, the team leader in blocks, had severe stomach cramps and joined Boxwell on the sidelines in the three-sets-to-one loss to the Cougars.

That left the Raiders with at least kills and six digs in the Houston match.

"Helton played very well for us. I was impressed with her play, but no one else could seem to come in and one too many holes to fill.

"We ended up moving Kelley Bronk to the middle blocker position, where she did an excellent job," Martin said. "The only problem was that then we really hurt for someone at the outside hitter's position and no one from the bench could seem to fill the void."

"Perhaps the biggest disappointment for me was the fact that the players from the bench were not able to come into the game and be effective for us, with the exception of Connie Helton," Martin said.

Helton, a 5-7 sophomore setter from Kent, Wash., contributed two do the job," Martin said.

The Raiders are getting a much-needed rest this week, both to recover from the losses to the Owls and Cougars and to prepare for nationally ranked Texas.

Tech meets the Longhorns at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Student Recreation Center.

"I feel like now we are pretty much out of the conference race," Martin said. "About the most we can do is try to finish as well as we did last year. Now we have to play for pride more than anything."

The status of Boxwell and Kelly for Sunday's match is indefinite.

Commissioner wants day games

NEW YORK (AP) — At least one World Series game a year should be played in daylight, Commissioner Peter Ueberroth said Tuesday, adding he would try to convince the television networks to cooperate.

Two of the seven games ran past midnight, and others ended close to midnight.

"I'd like to see, at least on the weekend, one game played during the day," Ueberroth said.

This was the second year in a row that all Series games were played at night.

Newsome breaking up 'Dream Backfield'

By The Associated Press

IRVING — Tony Dorsett gets the carries. Herschel Walker gets the hype.

And Timmy Newsome gets the leftovers.

A pass here, a block there, and very few moments in front of the minicam. Newsome just quietly goes about his job in the Dallas Cowboys backfield.

So why has he created such a stir? Easy. Because Newsome insists on keeping his spot in the starting lineup, the "Dream Backfield" of Dorsett and Walker has not materialized.

Dorsett and Newsome.

It doesn't have the same ring. No wonder a "Free Herschel" movement has swept the state.

"It doesn't bother me," Newsome said. "The thing I try to do is go out there and do what I do best."

"I realize a lot of people probably would like to see just Tony and Herschel back there, but that doesn't bother me. My job is to go out there and play football and play it extremely well."

Newsome has played well. Dallas Coach Tom Landry calls Newsome an important part of the team's offense and said he does not feel an urge to rush Walker into the starting lineup. Publicity. Carries. Who needs it?

Newsome Dorsett

Newsome gets something he values even more — the respect of his teammates.

"I think Timmy is an unknown quantity as far as most people are concerned," quarterback Steve Pelluer said. "He's an exceptional receiver and a solid part of our offense. He doesn't make many mistakes and blocks well."

Dorsett said, "He's an unsung hero. He doesn't get the publicity, but that's how the cookie crumbles. We as players know his importance. Timmy is a great back in his own right. He's not as fast as some backs around, but he's always in there making the big play."

One of those plays came in the final minute of the Cowboys' 17-14 victory over Philadelphia. Dallas had a third-and-13 on the Eagles' 36-yard line. Newsome ran his man into the player covering rookie Mike Sherrard, then broke free for the 18-yard reception that set up the team's winning field goal.

"Timmy is an unselfish player who does whatever you ask him to do, and he'll do it pretty darn well," Landry said.

What the Cowboys have asked Newsome to do is catch the ball and block. This fullback doesn't get many carries in the Cowboys' tailback offense.

Walker averages 4.8 yards on 75 carries. Dorsett, who has been slowed by a sprained knee, averages four yards on 77 carries. Newsome averages 3.4 yards on 24 carries.

The logic is simple. Newsome never has broken a run for more than 30 yards. Dorsett and Walker may break for 30 yards on any play. Every carry by Newsome takes the ball out of the hands of an explosive Dorsett or Walker.

That is why he rarely carries the ball.

"That's fine as long as I can get my hands on the ball a sufficient amount of times," Newsome said. "Maybe a total of six or seven times. Then I feel like I can do something with the football."

Some of the credit goes to offensive coordinator Paul Hackett, who wants the quarterbacks to dump off the ball to the backs. Newsome's 26 receptions ties the second-highest total of his pro career, with the season only half over.

"He's been a tremendous asset to me," Newsome said of Hackett. "He's a firm believer if you can't throw it downfield, then dump it to the backs and let them run with the football. When you have running backs, you need to get it into their hands."

"If you average six, seven yards every time you catch a pass, that puts a lot of pressure on the defense. That's the key in the NFL. If you get second-and-short, the defenses don't know what you're going to do."

Defenses don't know what to do when Walker, Dorsett and Newsome are on the field at the same time.

"There are times when they are out there that I can probably get single coverage in a pass pattern," Newsome said. "Any time I get single coverage on a linebacker, I should be able to beat him. That's what I have to do."

Most people assumed Walker would move into the starting lineup with Dorsett when the Cowboys signed Walker this summer.

"As far as Herschel coming in and taking over my spot or whatever, it was not something I was that concerned about because I know my talents and I know my ability as a football player," Newsome said.

"I know when I set my mind to it I can go out and play just as well as anyone else. The only thing that concerned me was whether I would be given an opportunity to compete for a job. That was the bottom line."

Astros' Lanier captures Manager of Year honor

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hal Lanier of the Houston Astros, who learned his managing skills from St. Louis' Whitey Herzog, on Wednesday matched an honor won by his old boss by being named The Associated Press' Manager of the Year.

Lanier guided the Astros to the NL Western Division title in his first year as a manager after five years as a coach for Herzog, who was manager of the year in 1985.

Lanier received 53 votes and was a runaway winner over Boston's John McNamara in nationwide voting by sports writers and broadcasters, which took place before the playoffs.

McNamara, whose Red Sox lost to the New York Mets in the World Series, received 14 votes.

Texas Manager Bobby Valentine, a rookie like Lanier, was third with 12 votes, followed by Davey Johnson of the Mets with 10 votes.

New York Yankees Manager Lou Piniella, Pat Corrales of the Cleveland Indians and Gene Mauch of the California Angels each received one vote.

Lanier's Astros charged from an also-ran status all the way to the NL playoffs where they lost to the Mets in six games.

"Whitey taught me how to run a pitching staff, and I think that is a major part of managing," said Lanier, who was the Cardinals' third-base coach in 1985. "I think I added to that a knowledge of how to recognize the talent we had and what we could do and couldn't do."

Lanier said his 10-year major league playing career, five years as a minor league manager and five seasons of watching Herzog had prepared him for the challenge.

"I don't think I had any surprises," Lanier said. "I've been around a long time and even though it was my first year as a major league manager, I've just about seen it all."

Lanier was twice named Manager of the Year in the minor leagues and he was part of the Cardinals' 1982 World Series champion and their 1985 Eastern Division title.

Lanier pulled the right strings with a pitching staff headed by Mike Scott, the major league leader in strikeouts and earned run average, Nolan Ryan, baseball's all-time strikeout king, and left-hander Bob Knepper.

Houston also became aggressive on the bases under Lanier. The Astros almost doubled their stolen bases from 1985, stealing 163 compared to 96.

That was a key to the Astros' charge to their first divisional crown since 1980, when Manager Bill Virdon was named manager of the year.

"I knew we had more speed on the team than had been used," Lanier said.

"And I feel that the players were ready for a change."

Women netters to battle best in ITCA tournament

Coming off an undefeated weekend of play, the Texas Tech women's tennis team will face its toughest competition of the fall season this week in Austin when it meets some of the best collegiate players from Texas and Louisiana at the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association Qualifying Tournament.

Competition will be today through Sunday on the University of Texas courts. It will not be a flighted tournament, and all pairings, including the No. 1 through No. 6 players from all participating teams, will be determined in an open-draw format.

In singles play, the winner and runner-up will earn a spot in the prestigious ITCA National Tournament in Richmond, Va., next spring. In doubles, only the winning team gets an automatic bid to the spring tournament.

Play begins in singles competition at 8 a.m. today, Friday and Saturday, while doubles action is set to start at 1 p.m. on those days. Finals in singles competition will be at 9 a.m. Sunday, followed by doubles finals at 11 a.m.

Competing for Texas Tech in singles will be Annemarie Walson, who has a fall record of 6-2; Cathy Carlson, 7-1; Julie Hrebec, 4-3; Eva Ziegler, 8-0; Barbara Fitterer, 6-2; Lisa Roberts, 7-1; and Paula Brigrance, 6-0.

In doubles, Tech teams will be Walson-Brigrance and Carlson-Hrebec, both with a fall record of 7-0; and Roberts-Ziegler, 4-2.

The Raiders are coming off a sweep last weekend in the Texas Tech

Quadrangular, where they defeated West Texas State, UT-San Antonio and New Mexico State — each by the score of 9-0 — in dual matches. No Tech player in singles or doubles play lost a match during the two-day tournament.

"I'm really looking forward to this tournament to see what progress our players have made so far this fall. The competition will be very tough, but I expect one or two of our players to be really competitive in singles play and one of our doubles teams to have a chance to challenge for the championship," Coach Mickey Bowes said.

Tech will close its fall season Nov. 7-9 in Minneapolis, Minn.

Tech soccer squad beats Texas, SWTS

The Texas Tech soccer team used some staunch defense to score back-to-back road victories over Texas and Southwest Texas State Friday and Saturday as the defending Southwest Conference champions improved their season record to 7-1-1.

Tech handed Texas one of the most lopsided outcomes in the history of the league with a 7-0 whipping in Austin.

Center-fullback Joe Naughton got things going early for the Raiders, scoring the first goal on an outside shot. Uwe Balzis and Gerry Reneau helped Tech pour it on as the Raiders built up a 6-0 halftime lead. Balzis scored three goals on the day.

Balzis led the charge again Saturday in San Marcos with two goals as Tech defeated the Bobcats 4-2 in a non-conference tilt.

Mets reject plea bargain option

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The World Series champion New York Mets finished their National League business in Houston a couple of weeks ago. But two players are returning, not to face the Astros, but criminal charges.

Mets pitcher Ron Darling, 25, and second baseman, Tim Lincecum, 28, are charged with aggravated assault on a police officer stemming from a July 19 incident at Cooter's nightclub in which the two allegedly got in a fight with police.

Dick DeGuerin, the players' attorney, said Wednesday the two won't accept a plea bargain during a scheduled pre-trial hearing today.

"There will be no plea bargain," DeGuerin said in response to an earlier report that a plea deal might be offered. "My clients have already entered a plea of innocent."

Today's hearing before State District Judge Joe Kegans is to set a trial date and time for the defense to ask for state evidence, DeGuerin said.

"It's possible the trial will be this year, but most likely it will be next year because of my scheduling and the court's schedule," the Houston attorney said.

DeGuerin said a request for a dismissal of charges likely wouldn't be granted if he asked for it. In order to have the case dismissed, the indictment against the players would have to be issued improperly or have some other technical error, which it doesn't, he said.

The attorney also said Mets pitchers Rick Aguilera, 24, and Bob Ojeda, 28, are pleading innocent to charges of hindering apprehension.

In the July incident, Teufel is accused of leaving the club premises with an alcoholic beverage, a violation of state law.

Police officer D.L. Bristley, working off-duty as a security guard, said Teufel was told it was against the law, but Teufel kept going and a fight broke out when the officer tried to stop the player.

Teufel is accused of hitting Bristley with his elbow and kicking him in the groin. Prosecutors say Darling grabbed another policeman, R.G. Gresham, by the throat.

Ojeda and Aguilera allegedly tried to help Darling and Teufel avoid arrest.

Coryell resigns Chargers post

SAN DIEGO — San Diego Chargers Coach Don Coryell resigned Wednesday following a meeting with team owner Alex Spanos, a Chargers spokesman said.

"I feel a change would be beneficial to the Chargers," said Coryell, 62. Coryell was in his ninth season with San Diego, which is 1-7 this season. The team has lost seven straight games.

Chargers spokesman Rick Smith said Coryell would be replaced by Al Saunders, who was named assistant head coach at the end of last season.

Coryell is the only coach who has won more than 100 games at both the professional and collegiate level.
