ANNUAL W. T. C. MEET OPENS

Ferguson Urges Referendum In Bond Row

CLAIMS THIS IS ONLY LEGAL WAY TO SETTLE FUSS

CHARGES HIS OPPONENTS ARE MISREPRESENTING WIFE'S ATTITUDE

(By The Associated Press)
AUSTIN, Texas, June 21.—Texas road district bonds can be validated only by vote of the people in the districts involved, James E. Ferguson declared today.
"What I want and what the Governor wants is to pass a law referring the question of validating these bonds back to the people and if they then vote to validate these bonds then the objection raised by the Supreme Court of the United States has been met, and the credit of the State has been restored," he said.
Validity of $100,000,000 road bonds was jeopardized by the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Archer County case.
The former Governor's statement, explaining his speech at Wichita Falls last week follows in part:
"The bond validation crowd are attempting to misrepresent the Governor's attitude on the issue. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the Archer County bonds were void and unconstitutional. This being so, if the court has not said so, I said, I was eminently correct when I said that the people do not owe these bonds, then what is the validation crowd kicking about?
"I repeat that these bonds cannot be validated without the vote of the people. This bill submitted by the Eastern bond attorneys to the Governor does not provide for a vote of the people who live in the districts the bonds were issued.
"If Kemp and Moody want to say that the people should not be given a chance to pass on this question, then let them say so and then the people will know where to place them. They propose something that does not meet the objection of the Supreme Court and that also seeks to deprive the people of each road district of a right which the court says cannot be taken away from them.
"The Kemp-Moody crowd propose no legal validation while the Governor proposes legal validation. That is the difference. At the proper time the Legislature can take care of this question.
"If these bond buyers and bond brokers will stop slandering the State by talking about repudiation, nobody else will think about it."

"Osage King" And His Family

MISS WILLIE HALE

WILLIAM K. HALE

MRS. W. K. HALE

"KING OF OSAGE CATTLE COUNTRY" JUST PLAIN "DADDY" TO THEM

By NEA Service
PAWYHUSKA, Okla., June 21.—While William K. Hale, picturesque "King of the Osage Hills," awaits trial on charges of engineering a monster conspiracy that brought death to upwards of a dozen rich Osage Indians in order to obtain their wealth, there are two people in this rich cattle and oil country who are firmly convinced that he is an innocent man.
These two are Mrs. Hale, his wife and their beautiful 18-year old daughter, Willie.
In all the confused welter of events during and after the Osage "reign of terror," for which Hale is held accountable by state and federal prosecutors, there are no more tragic figures than these two women.
A College Girl
Willie Hale has been a student at Wild Key College, Sherman, Tex. Since the trial of Ernest Burkhart, nephew of Hale who, reputedly confessed that he participated in the dynamiting of the home of W. E. Smith and his wife at Hale's instigation, she and her mother have been here in Pawhuska at Hale's side.
The real affection displayed by Willie towards his wife and daughter makes it hard to picture him as "the faster mind" of a great conspiracy. It is another of the strange contrasts found in the Osage "Kings."
Mrs. Hale will probably take over the active management of her husband's properties as he is not freed shortly. His interests have suffered during his confinement. And Mrs. Hale will be able to look after them, for she has always been conversant with his affairs.
Married 24 Years
Mrs. Hale married Hale 24 years ago, in Greenville, Tex., when he was an energetic young cowboy, his entire fortune consisting of his pony and the clothes on his back.
"Together they came up here to the Osage region, then 'Indian Territory,' unsettled and wild as any part of the west. They established their cattle ranch in the midst of a vast, treeless plain, whose rolling hills would grow nothing except a coarse grass. Through the first year of their married life, Mrs. Hale saw only three other white women. She rode horseback with her husband to rodeos and roundups, his cowboy friends her only circle of acquaintance.
And she liked it.
"They are the best friends in the world," she says. "There is no truer gentleman than the plainsman."
Then, gradually, the territory became more thickly settled. Fairfax, the spot selected by the Hales for their home, grew into a town. There were a few years of prosperity—then a financial setback that wiped out

Burkhart Given Life Sentence In Rancher's Death

PAWYHUSKA, Okla., June 21. (AP)—Ernest Burkhart who pleaded guilty to a charge of murder in connection with the death of W. E. Smith, a Fairfax rancher, was sentenced today to life imprisonment.
Smith's death, officials claim, was a part of large murder conspiracy in which it was planned to obtain possession of the property of rich Osage Indians.
He was killed in an explosion that wrecked his home in March, 1923. His Osage Indian wife and a white housemaid, also were killed in the explosion. Burkhart in his confession which dramatically ended his trial after it had been in progress for nearly three weeks, declared he acted as an accomplice in the hiring of an assassin to set off the explosive.
W. K. Hale, his uncle, was named as the instigator of the plot.

STATE OFFICIAL TELLS PROGRESS OF TEXAS EMPIRE

BANDS PRESENT FROM OVER DOZEN TOWNS AT MORNING MEET

(By The Associated Press)
AMARILLO, Texas, June 21.—Texas' greatness, past, present and future, was extolled at the opening morning session of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention Monday by Mrs. Emma G. Meharg, Secretary of State, who brought greetings from Governor Miriam A. Ferguson. A brisk Northern kept down early attendance, but cloudless skies and a warming sun promised ideal weather for the remainder of the three days of surging activity the convention has grown to mean.

Many Bands Present
Bands from Littlefield, Lamesa, O'Donell, Memphis, Abilene, Quanah, Post, Colorado, Paducah, Lubbock and Gladview were among the first to arrive, while the West Texas State Teachers College band from Canyon reached here shortly before noon Monday.

Besides the address of Mrs. Meharg, principal events of the morning session were the annual address of President R. C. Lee, Glazier, the report of Mayor Porter A. Whaley, Stamford, and the address of Welcome by Congressman Marvin Jones, of Amarillo. John H. Kirby, Houston, and John W. Carpenter, Dallas, were prevented from being present by illness of persons near to them. Greetings from the East Texas Chamber of Commerce were delivered by E. A. Hount, Nacogdoches.

Progress Recounted

Mrs. Meharg's address recounted the dreams of progress and betterment which the great men of history have dreamed, from Martin Luther to Sam Houston, then went on to picture the results of dreams of Sam Houston and Stephen F. Austin, founders and builders of the Lone Star State.

LIGHT HAIL FALLS OVER PLAINS

A light rainfall, accompanied by some hail in portions of the South Plains fell over this section of the state Sunday, the fall here as registered at the weather bureau amounting to .27 of an inch.
Pear was entertained for a time after the fall that crops to the southwest of Lubbock had been damaged greatly by the hail that accompanied the fall, but reports reaching here Monday said that the hail fall was not damaging to any great extent to crops as far west as Meadow. Beyond this point no reports had been received. The fall of hail, while rather heavy, was not intense enough to batter crops, and as the cloud came up from the southwest, this is believed to have been the section most heavily touched. The fall also was light to the northwest, reports said.
The stones fell for a few minutes in the city, doing slight damage to flowers and shrubbery, but the fall evidently played its last tattoo on roofs of the city, as no hail fell two miles east.
Monday morning was ushered in by a driving wind from the north, bringing considerable sand, but temperatures held only slightly above normal.

Intensive Investigation Of Auto Accidents Asked Of Grand Jury At Austin After Series Of Accidents

(By Associated Press.)
AUSTIN, June 21.—The Travis county grand jury was charged by Judge James E. Hamilton today to make an extensive investigation of automobile accidents which last week, within 48 hours, killed three persons and injured five.
Grady Puryear, Austin bookkeeper, driver of one of the three cars which figured Friday night in a crash that brought death to Miss Isabelle Crozier, of Dallas, and Miss Louise Spear, of Mission, Texas, university students, will stand examining trials on two counts of negligent homicide and on the charge of operating an automobile while intoxicated.
Frank Tannehill, Justice of the Peace, taking cognizance of the convening of the grand jury, set aside examining trials scheduled for today.
Arno Gold, 18, was killed Thursday when the car in which he was riding plunged through a bridge railing and dropped 25 feet, following a collision with a truck.
"Since your recess several days ago, three deaths have occurred because of speeding, and probably reckless driving. You have been called back to ascertain if any violation of criminal law have taken place," Judge Hamilton told the grand jurors.
"There has been entirely too much reckless driving of automobiles. Perhaps motorists do not realize the danger of such a practice, but if they do, they show disrespect for law — not only for law, but disrespect for government and human life."

VERNON, Texas, June 21. (AP)—Believing foul play caused the death of S. Joseph William Cubine, 9, who was reported to have drowned in a tank of water in the South Vernon oil field Friday, W. E. Cubine, the lad's father, has requested a thorough investigation of the tragedy.
Mr. Cubine believes the youth was struck and thrown into the water by a mesquite stick and a rock, found near the pool of water were believed to have been used.
Justice W. D. Hollar is conducting the inquest, which will be held late this afternoon, and states that a bad bruise was found on the lad's forehead. The funeral services were held Saturday with interment here.

The Woman's Day

By ALLENE SUMNER

Birds and Girls

"Birds of a feather flock together. But they don't. A girl with a beautiful face and red hair marries a man who looks like a reformed orange-squash. A clergyman makes a friend of an auctioneer and a banker would rather spend a day with one Adirondack fishing guide than with a whole vastful of bankers. Bargains during the daytime go and swim in the Y. M. C. A. pool. Porgers in their time off sing in the choir, and choirmasters when they are not singing shoot craps."

—Stephen Leacock.

Woman's Beauty

Millicent "just can't afford a manicure every week," and she asks me how to shine her own. Like this, Milly, for short. Have a stiff nail brush, a thin file with round edge, emery board, sharp nail scissors, orange stick, two buffers, rose powder and paste, cuticle remover, soap, powdered pumice, and bleaching cream. Shape the nails with the file, if very long, cut with scissors before shaping; the shape fits the finger; oval nails for oval fingers, squarer ones for blunter digits. Never a sharp, talon-like nail. While one hand is soaking in warm soapy water for 10 minutes cold cream is on the other. A bleaching cream is put under the nails. Loosen cuticle with remover. Remove stains with pumice and pumice stone. Polish.

Unfit Mamas

"A child born of a woman who has been to college should be taken from the mother as soon as weaned and placed in some institution where it would be properly cared for." This statement in an issue letter from a wealthy New York manufacturer to a eastern girls' college has excited the country. But who wants to argue?

July Fourth Party

Perhaps the children want a Fourth of July party. Make it an Uncle Sam birthday party. Invitations may be written inside folded water color flags. Decorate with rosettes and bunting of special Fourth of July decorating papers. Guests can find partners for games by matching broken colored candles. Blue dishes on special paper doilies on a white cloth could decorate the table with a centerpiece of a "birthday cake" made from a white paper covered round box in which red ribbons lead to the place cards and favors at each plate. Doll-shaped sandwiches, flap cakes and ice cream, and red and white candies make an appropriate light menu.

Table Manners

The hostess is served first at a formal dinner in order that the guests may "follow suit" her manner of handling the food, and in order that she may give any necessary directions to the servant about it. A teaspoon is never left in a cup and no beverage is sipped from the spoon. The spoon is merely for stirring and one first slip from the cup. Bread is broken into small pieces before buttering. Salad is cut only with the fork.

Garden Notes

A few little don'ts from "Garden Making and Keeping" by Hugh F. Imbrie, professor of agriculture at Columbia University, may lighten the busy lawnmowing guidance. "Do not," says he, "work on the lawn when it is wet. Do not cut the grass too close during the dry periods. Do not water the lawn too often, but when you do, saturate the soil well. Much damage is done by sprinkling the surface soil especially when the sun is high. Water in the late afternoon or evening. Grass may be cut shorter during the early spring than in mid-summer or early fall. Do not cut a new lawn too closely. When the grass is about three inches high, set the lawnmower blades high, and cut just before a rain."

Menus for the Family

Breakfast—Halves of cantaloupe, cereal thin cream, crisp toast, milk, coffee.

Lunch—Bouillon, croquettes, radishes, open tomato salad sandwich, milk, tea.

Dinner—Breaded veal cutlets, baked potato balls, creamed spinach, stuffed beet salad, junket cream pudding, grape bread, milk, coffee.

No special dishes need be prepared for small persons in addition to the day's menu.

Heart To Heart Talks With Cynthia Grey

BRINGING UP A HOME LAST RESORT FOR UNHAPPY WIFE

"I'm all through," writes "Thirty-six." "I've stood relect and tyranny and penury for fifteen years, and now I've had enough I left my husband a week ago and I am starting in a new life of independence, in which I shall never have to ask a man for anything, or try to please a man's whimsical tastes again."

"Won't you wish me well, Cynthia Grey, and tell me you approve of my decision? Don't you believe that cases like mine call for separation? My mother and friends are scandalized, but I know I am right. They just have small town ideas."

"Without knowing more of the circumstances, it is hard to judge. But if the husband was actually as impossible to live with as 'Thirty-six' believes, then I say, 'Go ahead in living your own life, and give the best of luck to you!'"

"I always feel a bit sad when I see a home breaking up, especially if there are children. But 'Thirty-six' has no children, and evidently has taken her quota of unhappiness from an unkind husband."

However, I hope she will consider carefully whether her troubles are partly imaginary, and also whether she can really make a satisfactory life for herself alone. She may find herself missing even the husband whom now she blames so bitterly.

Solitary life for a woman accustomed to a home and husband is not particularly pleasant. I do not believe, of course, that any kind of a husband is better than none. But I do hope that "Thirty-six" is not casting aside one who might yet develop into a fairly satisfactory spouse.

However, if she is sure she is right, I must commend her courage and her energy in starting out to build happiness for herself. Nowadays, the world is so full of things that women may do and enjoy, that no woman need let her personal frustrations wholly wreck life.

Women never before had so wide a field of work as they have today. And hard, ambitious work is a cure for all sorrows.

The NUT CRACKER by Joe Williams

In the old days it would be quite easy for any Milwaukee team, enjoying a long winning streak, to become intoxicated with success.

The old pepper may be a great thing, yet we never heard of a bushy, bristling fellow in the top of a barbed because he could yell "Attaboy!" louder than anybody else.

Don't let mistakes bother you. That's why they put rubbers on lead pencils and niblicks in golf bags.

The courts have decided Harry Greb must keep his manager two more years. This is what he gets for insisting on a no-decision arrangement, so popular with the modern pug.

And, by the way, is Mr. Greb still putting his best foot forward in the swank dance halls of the nation these days, or nights?

The headlines tell of a 70-year-old hubby who objects to his 80-year-old wife running around at night. O, dear, O dear, this younger generation!

Holand Locke, the Nebraska sprinter, is from the wide open spaces where men are deer.

Jack Dempsey was acquitted of speeding the other day in California. But he was not speeding toward a match with Wills. In case you might think otherwise.

Hank Gowdy will be remembered as the first ball player to enlist in the war. That is, he will be remembered as such by everybody but the baseball moguls.

They took the prince of Sweden for a ride in the subway last week. If diplomatic relations between the two countries are broken soon, you'll know why.

Depend on Marberry

Delving farther into the dope, we find that Marberry took part in 55 games and was responsible for saving many of them after the veteran stars, Johnson, Reuther and Coakley, faltered in the late innings.

While we were discussing Marberry, he began to warm up as Fitcher Alex Ferguson, started to waver. He looked great, showed me his old-time fast ball. There was also an ease to his delivery that made it seem as though his pitching arm had recovered its strength.

A pitcher with a sore arm invariably affects some mannerisms that are not a part of his regular delivery. The moment Marberry started to work in the exhibition games against the Braves his delivery lost its smoothness.

With the first two months of the American League race out of the way, it is apparent that Fred Marberry's arm is right again.

During that period he has several times been rushed to the relief of some pitcher in the late innings with Washington holding a slight lead.

In every instance there have been one or more runners on the bases and in most cases a base hit would have changed the complexion of the ball game. And Marberry has more than held his own.

SECRETS OF STARS on INSIDE BASEBALL as told to BILLY EVANS

(By JOE DUGAN) One of the most confusing plays that is put up to a third baseman has this setting:

First and second bases are occupied and the batsman elects to bunt the ball. Usually the thought is to place the bunt down the third-base line. This keeps the first baseman from rushing in for a force play at second or third.

On such plays it is well for the pitcher and third baseman to have an understanding as to who will take the bunt.

The ability of the pitcher to field bunts, the speed of the runners on the bases and the style bunt has much to do with the proper procedure.

I always prefer to try for a force at third base if the pitcher is a capable fielder. Then, if there is no chance to execute that play, he is in a position to get the batsman at first.

When it so happens that the pitcher is a poor fielder, I think the third sacker should take the bunt and play for one man sure.

If the ball is bunted hard, with the third baseman handling it rather than covering, the chance is occasionally offered to make a force play at second with an opportunity of starting a double play.

Every hit third baseman has his most difficult play. Left-handed hitters who are fast and hit the ball hard down the third-base line, in addition to being good bunters, keep the third baseman upset. They make most of any trouble.

Ty Cobb and Frankie Frisch are players of that type.

CRIME AND COMMUNITIES

Some observers might see no connection between the James G. Blaine marching clubs of the last century and present "crime waves" but there is.

The old political marching clubs were a symbol. They stood for a type of community life that has vanished from the earth.

IN NEW YORK SEE SAWING UP and down BROADWAY

NEW YORK, June 21.—There is, in Manhattan, an organization of "poor little rich men" whose hearts have "gone down to the sea in ships" but who have been divorced from their yearnings by the exigencies of business.

But they have found some compensation in carrying on a sea game such as only rich men could afford to play.

Ship lovers all, they are tied to the land. And so they build models that cost as much, and sometimes more, than would a sailable yacht.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, one-time cabinet member and democratic leader, is president of the organization which is titled the Ship Model society and the membership list is a cross section of Dunn & Bradstreet and of Who's Who.

A glance at this list shows Booth Tarkington, the writer; Newcomb Carleton, head of the Western Union Company; H. O. Havemeyer, railroad executive; Johnston de Forest, lawyer and bank official; George F. Baker Jr., son of one of the world's richest men—and others of similar status.

For the great leaders must have their playthings and hobbies and distractions.

Thus John D. Rockefeller Jr., is an avid stamp collecting fan and is credited with owning one of the fine collections of the world.

And Henry B. Culver, famed attorney, knows more about ship models than perhaps any man in America.

The wall paper on his mansion in the upper Forties shows an Armada cruising ceilingward. Yet he has never been to sea in his life, any more than have his associates who build replicas of fine old sailing craft and re-dream the dreams of boyhood days when adventure called youngsters to square-rigged ships headed for "round the Horn."

In Culver's bathtub sails the replica of a fine old New England whaler and there is also an exact duplicate of an English man-of-war of the Jacobean period. This is but 29 inches long, but years of study were necessary to duplicate the intricate rigging.

So perfect are the models that the ghost of an old-time galleon skipper can haunt the rooms in peace.

Stewart's WASHINGTON LETTER

RAINEY ROAMS THE RANGE ALL ALONE NOW, AND SEEMS TO CARE NOT WHO KNOWS IT

By CHARLES F. STEWART, NEA Service Writer. WASHINGTON. — It's a commonplace that there's no longer an "opposition party" in Congress.

That is, none to speak of. There are a few "mavericks," as Representative Berger calls them. Besides the "mavericks," there are a few more whose brands are blurred.

These "mavericks" are a genuine "opposition," sometimes supported and sometimes no, by the doubtful herd. But they're not a party. They're a coalition, and too few, even as a coalition, to signify much.

They oppose the republican-democratic combination. Republicans and democrats pretend to fight like everything over issues of no importance. When a really vital issue comes up they decide it's non-partisan and vote the same way.

The genuine "mavericks," as I see 'em, are: Senators Frazier and Norris, elected as republicans; Senator La Follette, who calls himself "a republican (progressive)"; Senator Nye, who was appointed as a republican but makes his next run as an independent; Representative La Guardia, socialist; Representative La Follette, who was elected as a socialist but who always claimed to be republican before; Senator Wheeler and Representatives Huddleston and Rainey, elected as democrats; Senator Shipstead and Representatives Cars and Wetford, farmer-laborites.

Senator Reed of Missouri also almost qualifies.

It will be noted that I omit most of the "progressives." I think they fall more properly into the group referred to by Berger as "the elephant's tail."

Now, as to Representative Henry T. Rainey of Illinois: Rainey is a minority member of the House Ways and Means Committee, which framed the latest tax bill and set the seal of its approval on the Italian and French debt settlements.

These were important "non-partisan" propositions. All well regulated democrats voted with the majority on 'em.

But not Henry T. He has had three grand outbreaks in Congress this session—one over the tax bill, one over the Italian debt settlement and one over the French one.

He said they were iniquitous. He was licked and he knew it, but as Representative Huddleston put it "the victim of an assault must make an outcry, or consent's to be assumed."

Rainey provided the tax bill outcry and the two debt settlement outcries, and it was "some" outcry in each case. It was so loud and piercing that it produced some effect. To quite a few of Henry T.'s fellow lawmakers, whose brands aren't burned in too deep, it sounded like good stuff for the coming campaign. So they gathered around and helped him yell.

The essential thing it did was to align Rainey definitely in the ranks of the "mavericks." He's in the "opposition," and who knows it he evidently doesn't care.

"Come with me," said the Dream-Maker Man to the Twins. "We shall try to find your lost friends, the china elephant and his little clown driver. They must be on the moon somewhere."

THE MOON DISAPPEARS

Away they went—bzzzz!—like a great bee.

Away they went—bzzzz!—like a great bee, for moon airplanes make even more noise than earth ones.

While they were riding, the Twins told the Dream-Maker Man about their adventures and what they had been doing since they had climbed the golden ladder to the moon.

"Well, I declare!" said the Dream-Maker Man. "I declare! One would almost, but not quite, say that you both had been dreaming. But of course, I know better. But we must watch and see where we are going. I want to ask my friend, the Moon-in-the-Moon, something."

And the Dream-Maker Man looked over the edge of Snore's airplane and looked down. "My goodness!" he cried. "There's nothing there! The moon's gone."

"I can't," shouted Snore. "I can't stop unless I have some place to stop on. If the moon's gone, I'll have to keep on going."

Nancy couldn't help wondering what had become of all the poor moon people, the Fairy Winks and the queer policeman with the neck that stretched around corners, and the rubber alligators and the giant duck and everybody. And where could loco and Flaps be?

Suddenly Snore called out, "I have no more gasoline! We're going to fall!"

"And without anything to fall on!" thought Nancy and Nick. "Well, that is one comfort. At least we won't get bumped!"

The airplane turned with its nose straight down, and the fall began. But it wasn't a fall that made you dizzy and took your breath away. It was a lovely, cool, delicious, soft fall that made you feel wonderful.

"I could keep this up for quite a while," said Nancy.

"I shouldn't mind myself," said the Dream-Maker Man, "if there was anything to fall on. But—"

Suddenly bang—bump! They had landed on something dark and hard. And Snore's airplane flew to pieces.

Helpful Health Hints By DR. HUGH S. CUMMING Director General U. S. Public Health Service

Since anthrax is an infection which primarily occurs in the lower animals, and only sporadically, or as a result of accidental inoculation with the virus, in man, the fundamental method of attack on it consists in the veterinary control of the infection among animals.

The chief preventive measures as far as human anthrax is concerned, consists in the disinfection of all raw material used in the trades in which horses, hogs, wool and other animal substances likely to harbor the anthrax germ are handled.

Workers in tanneries and hair and wool factories can get protection by wearing rubber gloves and aprons.

Animals may be immunized against the disease, and the Pasteur method of vaccination is said to have been extensively employed with good results in France. The immunity thus conferred, however, is lost after a period of time, and revaccination becomes necessary.

Quinine against infected areas and rigid disinfection of materials before they are placed in the hands of the workmen are protective measures that should always be employed.

From the viewpoint of the number of deaths resulting from anthrax in the United States, the disease is not so important as compared with many other infectious diseases, the largest number of deaths reported in any one year as due to that cause being in 1917.

Although not important as a cause of death, anthrax occupies a most prominent place in the history of preventive medicine. The causative organism was the first disease-producing germ to be seen under the microscope and the first to be grown or propagated in pure culture.

The disease itself was the first to be experimentally transferred by direct inoculation of blood containing the infective germ and the first used to demonstrate the prophylactic value of the injection of a weakened virus. Those were transcendental pioneer achievements in the modern sciences of bacteriology and immunology.

One of the outstanding crimes on the Plains was enacted recently at Petersburg, over in Hale county, when a youth seventeen years old, marched into a bank in broad daylight and made them stick 'em up. He carried a flour sack and made the cashier rake $300 into same. The boy then undertook to get away on foot. He was promptly captured. He had evidently been attending Wild West Show 'em up picture shows, or reading cheap literature. Either is dangerous to the young of this nation.—Slaton Times.

NEIGHBORS' WIVES

By ERNEST LYNN Copyright NEA

BEGIN HERE TODAY

JOHN and FAY MILBURN buy a home of their own shortly after their baby girl is born and the advertising agency in which John is partner and copy writer lands a new contract.

John, in love with his wife Fay, but a romantic individual, is fascinated on meeting NELL ORME, of whom PAT FORBES, a friend of John's, hints that she is having trouble with her husband.

NEL and VERA BOYD, a young married couple, give a party and Vera shows an interest in John that he does not return, but which arouses Fay's jealousy. Nel Boyd later boasts of an arrangement with Vera whereby each leaves the other to do as he pleases.

Fay takes the baby to Houston to visit her parents, and during her absence John runs around a great deal with Pat Forbes, whose wild tendencies have aroused the suspicions of his wife.

Word begins to go around that John is being indiscreet, and NATHANIEL GRAHAM, his business partner, takes him to task. John resents this, and a gradually growing breach between him and Graham is widened.

ELEANOR MASON, who has literary talent and is known to the Milburns' friends, invites John to a party and later starts a violent flirtation with him. He kisses her and, when he leaves her, decides not to see her again.

PAUL DAVIDSON, a lawyer, who is a bachelor, an amateur actor and something of a rascal, appeals to John to break up an affair between himself and a girl named RITA JOHNS. He tells John that Rita wants to marry him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXI

"I had an idea she had fallen for you," John said, and was silent, turning the thing over in his mind. Finally, "Why," he asked, "don't you marry her?"

Paul scowled. "Why don't I jump in the lake—or take gas? No, John, I'm not out for marriage. I'm in this thing a little deeper than you think and I'll have to get out, that's all."

"Rita," he went on, inhaling a vicious quantity of cigarette smoke, "is not a bad sort. Clever—good looking—got money, too—at least, her people have it. You see, she's always had her own way—nobody has ever denied her anything. One thing she has set her mind on doing is going on the stage. I've helped her a little bit here and there, and in the process I seem to have succeeded in interesting her too much for my own good."

"But where do I come in?" John demanded. "As I understand it, you want me to play John Alden with reverse English. Now, just how far has this thing gone? Have you proposed to her?"

"Proposed? By all the gods—no! I made the mistake one night of kissing the young lady, under the influence of gin, an April moon, and a lifelong weakness I have had for black eyes."

"Well," and John grinned, "the young lady didn't think for a minute, did she, that she was the first to receive such favors? I can't see where you've committed yourself."

"Understand me, now," and Davidson smiled a rueful smile, "my technique in such cases requires that I whisper a few sweet nothings while I'm doing my stuff. To put the thing on a spiritual plane, so to speak. Perhaps the young lady drew her own conclusions."

John laughed heartily. "I don't doubt she had a lot to go on," he said, when he had recovered his composure. "Perhaps the gin influence was a little stronger than you thought. Come now, Paul, what did you tell her—that she was the only girl you had ever kissed? She surely wouldn't fall for that line!"

They had drawn up in front of the Milburns' house. Paul, lighting another cigarette, said, "I won't deny that I probably told her a good many things that I wouldn't have said had I been entirely sober. But as for actually proposing—John, I couldn't get drunk enough for that, and you know that."

John admitted that was probably true. Nevertheless, Paul, a jury probably would see only the young lady's side of the case—if she cared to sue for breach of promise.

"I hope," retorted Paul, "I'm a good enough lawyer to know that. But," and he made a gesture of impatience, "that's all over the mill damn now. We've got to get me out of this fix."

"All right, Paul, command me. I warn you, however, that I draw the line at murder, abduction and alienation of affections. I don't want the fair Rita to tell me to 'speak for yourself John.'"

Paul laughed. "It would serve you right if she did. The proposition's this: I've been trying to tell Rita that she's making a mistake to think of marrying, if she wants a stage career. She doesn't see how marriage will affect her career one way or the other. When that failed, I tried to tell her that she'd be making an awful mistake to marry me—told her what an awful bouncer I was, and all that sort of thing, you know. But no—it wouldn't work; she won't believe me."

"I'm waiting," said John, "to see where I come in."

Paul began talking very earnestly. "You're to tell her the same sort of thing in such a way that she will believe it! As a matter of fact, you know it's true—I am pretty much of a no-good hound. Now let me finish," he interrupted as John began to protest: "let me finish. I don't want to marry Rita, because I'm not the marrying kind—said if I were, I still wouldn't want to marry her because I'm not worth it."

"Be the greatest thing in the world for you if you did marry her," John growled, but again Davidson silenced him.

"You tell her anything in order to break it up. As a last resort, if everything else fails, you might tell her that I'm already engaged."

"What a fine liar you're making out of me!" John began doubtfully to run his fingers through the hair on the back of his head.

"Well," and Paul smiled, that same rueful smile, "if a guy can't tell a lie to help a friend—"

"Oh, I'll do it, Paul," John cut in. "But I don't care for the job."

They sealed the compact with a handshake.

John did it, but before he was through he wished himself heartily out of it; for he was caught in the backwash of a quarrel he almost lost Paul Davidson's friendship, and his experience with Rita taught him an unpleasant thing or two about women.

The difficulty of getting John and Rita together was surmounted by Paul, who broke a date with Rita to take her to a country club dance, and had John substitute for him.

John brought up the subject while they were sitting out on a dance on the club house steps. Overhead a July moon shined in orange splendor, and from the trees near the first came the pleasant drone of nocturnal insects. Rita, a shimmering thing in white satin, leaned her head back comfortably against a pillar and lazily watched the drifting smoke from her cigarette.

John studied her curiously. She was, he thought, a beautiful picture. Why was Paul so stupid?

Not knowing exactly how to start, he said rather awkwardly, "I rather pity Paul tonight."

"Because he can't be with me?" she finished for him with a disdainful smile. "Come, now, I expected better things from you."

"The awkward things, though, are the sincerest," he said lamely, and then, "Lady," he quoted, "by yonder moon I swear—"

She laughed. "Come, what's on your mind?"

"Well," he blurted out, "this thing between you and Paul. Do you really want him?"

She considered this a while in silence. Then, with a level look, she answered, "Since you're so frank—yes."

He pulled his arms around his knees, hugging them to his chin, and sat that way a while, silently smoking.

Her next remark was completely deafening. "Are you about to tell me that Paul is a blackguard and I shouldn't marry him? You know, I suspect some sort of conspiracy between you two."

Instantly the things he had been formulating in his mind to say to her went to smash. There was only one thing to do. "I'm about to tell you," he said calmly, "something that Paul couldn't tell you—he doesn't care for you. Of course, he went on hastily, for she had winced as though he had slapped her, "that's rather nastily brutal, and you'll think I shouldn't have said it. But there are two or three things I shouldn't have said it. But there are two or three things I shouldn't have said it. But there are two or three things I shouldn't have said it."

QUEER QUIRKS OF NATURE

BY ARTHUR N. PACK
President, The American Nature Association

A tank of goldfish adds so much to the attractiveness of a room that every home should have one; the following simple rules will preserve your fish to a healthy old age with very little trouble.

Fish need two things to keep them well and happy: the first is a sufficient supply of oxygen in the water, because fish breathe air quite the same as we do, although in a different manner.

Their gills act as lungs and get the air from the water which flows through them. The second great need of water plants is not meant any plant that has roots in the water and the leaves in the air, but only plants that live wholly under water all the time.

Such plants may be bought where you buy your goldfish or gathered from the bottom of any permanent pond. There are many varieties and some of them will do. These plants consume oxygen for breathing, and the fish keep clean and healthy by rubbing against them.

I have kept goldfish alive and perfectly happy for two and three years without once changing the water except by adding a little now and then to keep it at the required level, and is plenty of light without the direct rays of the spring and summer sun which would soon heat the tank enough to kill the fish.

To keep the water supplied with oxygen for the fish to breathe, it is absolutely essential to have a generous supply of growing water plants.

cleansing of the bottom by the use of a siphon for which a small rubber tube was used.

There is one great don't to remember and only one. Don't over feed. Fish grow according to the amount of food available but the house pet needs very little to keep it alive and well.

First, if you glance beneath the sofa you'll find "White" hastily tossed-soiled linen. And there are various objects left about the taste of which you will question.

But you cannot miss the faint odor of disinfectant, applied by District Attorney Ranton and his good play jury-men just before the summer rush of guests began.

This custom of skimming unpleasantly flavored play broths came into vogue last season. The district attorney selects a citizens' jury of 12. These represent a cross-section of Manhattan life. They attend a given list of plays that have been branded unsavory. Nine must vote the death penalty put under certain premises of lewd behavior. They have, in this, the cooperation of the Actors' Equity Association.

Thus far "The Bunk of 1926" a musical revue, is the sole candidate for the noose. Changes were ordered in "Sex," "The Shanghai Gesture" and "The Great Temptations."

"Lulu Belle" remains to be seen or obscene, as the case may be. Mae West, a rather clever young lady out of vaudeville, brought "Sex" to Broadway. It was followed by a great nose-holding fest on the part of the critics. It was a most ordinary piece, dragged in by its name and using obsolete "shocker" methods. In spite of everything that could be done, the public went. The play is a "success," from the box office standpoint.

"The Shanghai Gesture," as a play, has little merit, but it reveals Florence Reed at her tempestuous best. Miss Reed, an actress of talent, seems destined to ally her name with an endless series of vulgar pieces. Like "Sex," the basis of this play is prostitution, which in addition to being the "oldest profession," seems fast becoming the fadest subject for playwrights.

"The Bunk" began most naively in a little theater nearby in the residential section, with Gene Lockhart as author, impresario and what not. Then it stepped a newspaper editor, a publicity man and a couple of others, all determined to "build it up." They used sensationalism as the medium for getting it over. The advertising was "suggestive" and the gale went about the audience playing "Eve" to the better-and-egg Adams. In a measure it was victim of its own notoriety. It wasn't particularly "vulgar" show, but it made every effort at being considered naughty.

The producers have refused to accept the death verdict and have started injunction proceedings for "the freedom of the stage."

As for Miss Belasco, he has been turning out stuff that will do little good for a reputation which fast threatens to waver. Last season he gave Broadway an unforgettable bed-room production which was largely responsible for getting the district attorney's jury started. This year his contribution to art is "Lulu Belle," which offers little new, as a play outside the lines, which can scarcely come under the innocent appellation of "naughty." Its leading excuse for existence are Lenore Ulric's acting and the staging of a Harlem cabaret scene.

Thus for the unavowed dishes served before the official jury. Yet these are productions "selling out" the house at each performance. So, as usual, the final censorship seems to be up to audiences, who have merely to stay away.

CHINESE WINNER OF YALE HONORS

By NEA Service.
NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 21.—Duan Yung Kwai, strapping Chinese, is this year's most distinguished graduate of Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University.

Typical Oriental reserve finds laconic expression in typical American slang if you ask Kwai how he feels about it.

"Bunk!" says he. Of the two hundred or more budding scientist and engineers who will receive graduation credentials from "Sheff" in a few weeks, Kwai has been voted by his classmates the most brilliant. This makes him class orator.

Second place was voted him in versatility and likelihood of success in professional life. Civil engineering is the work in which he will turn, now that he has vaulted all of Sheffield's academic hurdles in perfect form.

Kwai is the son of Yung Kwai, secretary of the Chinese Legation at Washington.

His father and two brothers also are Yale graduates.

Central High School at Washington sent Kwai to "Old Eli."

As a freshman he attained first rank scholarship and won the New York Yale Club prizes in history and chemistry.

As a sophomore, he acquired general one-year honors for excellence in all studies and won prizes in drawing, engineering, mechanics, mathe-

As a senior, finally, he captured the class orator sweepstakes—the Sheffield graduate's most coveted award.

Between periods of academic work, Kwai found time to make the freshman swimming, university swimming and junior class water polo teams.

Memberships in the Sigma Xi national honorary scientific society, Tau Beta Pi fraternity, Aurelian Honor Society, and the Book and Bond society came to him at various stages of his rush to academic fame.

But—"Bunk!" says Kwai to anyone who suggests that his performance has been extraordinary.

Waco Man Held In Shooting Affray

WACO, June 21. (AP)—C. L. Sullins, 28, is charged with murder following the fatal shooting of H. L. Adams, 31, Sunday evening. The shooting occurred in the cotton mill district, both men having been employed in the cotton mill. Sullins claims that Adams was approaching him with a pistol and knife.

things you must consider before you make up your mind one way or the other about Paul.

He flipped his cigaret away and it described a glowing arc in the darkness. "I had to come right out with it—I couldn't lie to you. I had planned, you see, to give you all sorts of reasons why you shouldn't marry Paul, but you'd have seen through them. I might even have told you that he carried for somebody else, but the truth of the matter is, the woman isn't living, that Paul cares enough about to marry."

She regarded him in cold silence and he felt that he must say something in his own defense. "I got into this thing," he told her, "thinking I was acting for Paul's own good—but I think, after all, that it is for your own. If you married him, there'd only be a divorce. I know Paul, you see—know him as well as if he were my own brother. It's not his fault, but he wouldn't know how to be true to one woman. What little heart he has, is on his sleeve."

She was smiling at him—a rather superior sort of smile, he thought. "The matter of divorce," she said, hadn't bothered me—it would have helped my stage career—motorists, you know, and it's being done every day."

She regarded her beautifully manicured nails. "No, John—I'm calling you John, you see—if I wanted Paul badly enough I'd take him. But I don't!" What a superb actress she would make John thought—"Paul," she went on, "is an accident."

"Of course, John told himself, she'd hurt and she'd covering up. He said, "Of course, I feel like a rotter, sitting here and telling you all this. But anyone who married Paul would find out things about him that she didn't like."

She darted him a quick glance, her black eyes glistening. "I would have married Paul, because he interests me. But," she went on calmly, and her voice was a little hard, "if anyone had come along who interested me more—after we were married, you understand—I'd have dropped him like that." She snapped her fingers.

"After all," she said smiling, "I think I'd be as unlucky a choice in a marriage lottery as Paul."

"I think I understand," said John. "You are curious enough about marriage to experiment with it."

"Exactly—and Paul was the guinea pig."

What vindictiveness! John thought, scrambling to his feet as she rose, and she was smiling over her shoulder at him as she made her way toward the hall room.

"You might tell Paul that," she flung at him.

Ten minutes later he was taking her home.

He got hold of Paul the next morning, and explained the whole thing at lunch. "I rather imagine I hurt her pride, Paul, and—looking at Davidson keenly, "I rather imagine she's hurt yours."

But Paul appeared perfectly satisfied. "And if I can ever return the favor, John, call on me."

Later, though, John was to learn to what extent a woman's bitterness can go, for Paul called him up within two days and his first words over the phone were, "I say, John, didn't you rather overdo this thing about running me down? There are some things I can stand for, but the line has to be drawn some place."

BANKER HELD FOR SENTENCE AFTER GUILTY PLEA

INDEPENDENCE, Kansas, June 21. (AP)—Clarence Howard, assistant cashier of the Montgomery County National Bank of Cherryvale entered a plea of guilty to grand larceny yesterday before Justice C. L. Jukes and was bound over to the District Court to be sentenced to the penitentiary later.

Howard confessed Saturday to aiding in the frame-up and robbery of the bank of which he is assistant cashier and of which he owns $12,000 in stock. His partner in the crime, G. C. Robertson, former cashier of the bank, signed the same confession and is being held in custody. He will be taken into court before the close of the day for a plea.

The Cherryvale bank was robbed on May 26 of nearly $70,000 in money and bonds and none of it has been recovered. Two of the bandits, Leo Flournoy and Charles Mayes, were killed on June 4, at Picher, Oklahoma, in a battle with officers. The third member of the bandit party, known as Lyman Ford, old-time bank robber and convict, is being sought as well as Joe Ham and Jack Harvey, of Kansas City, and E. H. Little, of Springfield.

Howard claims that he was double-crossed by bandits and that he never profited a penny by the deal. The deal was brought about through the suggestion of Robertson last November, according to Howard.

News comes from London that a new English heavyweight prospect is being developed in the person of Charles Chetwynd. And just when we had settled back to enjoy the summer, too.

STATE OFFICIAL TELLS PROGRESS OF TEXAS EMPIRE

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE) highway and commercial body heads and secretaries, was the last review by the general officers present and the award of a special $100 prize. The review began shortly before 2 p. m.

Opposition to the taking over of state junior colleges by the State was voiced by H. Mount, of Nacogdoches, who declared that the State cannot afford to undertake additional expenditures at this time.

Accomplishments Reviewed

Accomplishments of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce were reviewed by retiring president Lee. He pointed out that an average of 70,000 new farms in the annual growth of the West Texas empire and declined that statistics show there have been more new farms opened in West Texas during the last five years than in California and Florida combined. He also pointed to the 17 irrigation projects completed, begun or under consideration in West Texas, and the extensive rail building contemplated in the Plains country. Last year was the most prosperous in the history of the Chamber, he stated, its income having been $80,000.

A bevy of interested citizens watched the departure of Lubbock's special train to the Amarillo convention of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce at 6 o'clock Monday morning. The four pullman cars of the special train were filled with men and women wearing the peaked crowned sombreros and black and red sashes that are to distinguish the delegates of this city at the meeting. Members of the high school band, in full uniform were conspicuous in the group of citizens. This group is the official music making body from Lubbock.

The group began gathering at the station almost an hour before the time for departure and most of them were wearing the sombrero, and flaunting red and black pennants, although a few of the men were carrying this paraphernalia preparatory to donning it later in the day. The train pulled out promptly at 6 o'clock.

"KING OF OSAGE CATTLE COUNTRY" JUST PLAIN "DADDY" TO THEM

(CONTINUED FROM FIRST PAGE) the Hale's savings and sent them to living in a tent for a season. But prosperity returned, and Hale became one of the powers of the cattle country.

It was six years after their marriage that Willie was born.

She Fits Her Name Willie is a boy's name in most places, but in the cattle country it is given both sexes. And Willie Hale fits her name; very feminine and winsome in a shimmering party frock, but very boyish and athletic when she goes riding across the uplands beside her father. She rides better than most young men, and is very proud of being a "crunch girl."

A cattleman's life is unlike life in the towns. There is apt to be a closer bond between members of the family than in the case in less isolated establishments. And so breezy, hearty "Daddy" Hale is, and always has been, "The Best Man on Earth" to his wife and his daughter.

Consequently, his indictment on a charge of murder came to them as a tragic shock. The charge that he induced a gang of thugs to commit a whole series of murders is simply unbelievable to them. He maintains that he is being framed; to Mrs. Hale and Willie this is the only possible explanation.

COUPLE DROWN IN TEXAS CREEK

ABILENE, Texas, June 21. (AP)—R. C. Milliken, 21, and wife, 17, were drowned about six o'clock Sunday afternoon while boating in Cedar Creek north of Abilene.

The double tragedy occurred when Mrs. Milliken stepped in water over her head. Both Milliken and R. L. Damron, who was with the couple, attempted to save her, and Milliken also lost his life. The body of Mrs. Milliken was recovered after about five minutes, and efforts were made to revive her, but that of her husband remained in the water three quarters of an hour.

Three Drown in California

VUBA CITY, Calif., June 19. (AP)—Three persons were drowned in Feather River near here yesterday when a log raft on which they and two others were standing turned and threw them into the water.

Clarence Orstatt, Olaf Onstitt, 49, and Nellie Simcher, 16, are the dead. Two sisters of the Simcher girl were rescued. None of the five could swim and the bodies of the three drowned were carried away by the stream before they could be reached.

BLANTON SEEKS TO BLOCK NAME OF OPPONENT

ABILENE, Texas, June 21. (AP)—Thomas L. Blanton, of Abilene, member of Congress from this district, seeks to prevent the name of J. R. Smith, of Burnet, his only opponent for re-election, from appearing on the ballots in the district at the July 21 primary. It was disclosed today when the Taylor county democratic executive committee convened.

The Congressman's contention is that Smith has failed to meet the requirements of article 3112, revised civil statutes, by not applying to the democratic chairman of the congressional district for a place on the ticket. His name has been received by the local county committee, according to James P. Stilson, county chairman, but it has not been received by Judge Fred Conckrell, Abilene, the district chairman, according to Mr. Blanton.

On motion of W. J. Cunningham, seconded by R. M. Wagstaff, the county committee voted to refer the matter to the Attorney General to determine whether the schedule is mandatory when a candidate for Congress files with the county chairman and not with the district chairman, when there is a duly qualified district chairman.

MISS LURA BROWN, DAUGHTER of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Brown, returned Monday morning from Dallas where she has been about six weeks following an operation there. She is much improved now.

SENATE TURNS AGAIN TO VARE CAMPAIGN FUND

GREENFIELD IS RECALLED BY SENATE BOARD FOR QUESTIONING

WASHINGTON, June 21. (AP)—Leaving unfinished for the present, its inquiry into political activities of the Anti-Saloon League, the Senate campaign funds committee again heard testimony today about the inner organization of William S. Vare's successful campaign against Governor Pinchot and Senator Pepper for the Republican Senatorial nomination in Pennsylvania.

With Wayne D. Wheeler remaining at his office subject to call, the committee recalled Albert M. Greenfield, the Philadelphia capitalist.

Upon his first appearance June 9, Greenfield said he collected about $50,000 for the Vare-Baldemann organization.

"Since you appeared it has come out that you had something else to do with the campaign," Chairman Reed said. "Now tell us all about it."

"I had little more to do with the campaign," replied Greenfield. "When I appeared before I was not asked about my own contribution. I have no desire to withhold any information from the committee."

"You did have connections other than the mere collection of funds?" Reed asked.

"I had no other connection," the witness insisted.

"I won't argue with you," Senator Reed retorted. "Did you give any money?"

"I did," $25,000.

"Did you collect any money?" "I did. Approximately $50,000."

"You were a member of the business men's committee of the Vare committee?"

"I was."
