NRC orders nuke shutdowns

By Stan Beniamin
AP Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission decided today to shut down temporarily nuclear power plants designed by Babcock & Wilcox, builder of the stricken Three Mile Island reactor.

Utility companies operating the other B&W plants volunteered to make the shutdowns for safety reviews and modifications.

The NRC then voted to accept the company proposals, but to formalize them through the issuance of orders by its regulatory staff that could allow the plants to reopen without further commission action when the improvements are completed.

NRC staff official Harold Denton said earlier this week that the plants would have to be closed at least two months to iron out any technical problems, and perhaps much longer if design changes must be made.

Utility officials have said such a shutdown could keep the Babcock & Wilcox plants closed through the peak summer months, leading to sporadic blackouts in some areas served by the facilities.

William Lee, president of Duke Power Co., which operates three of the B&W reactors, said his company would carry out its proposals and would not raise any legal objections to the formal orders.

Denton, who had recommended a mandatory shutdown Wednesday, told the commission today that the utilities promised to shut down the plants voluntarily to conduct new safety analyses, make safety modifications, preapre new emergency procedures and improve the training of plant operators.

Denton, the NRC's director of nuclear reactor regulation, said three plants already shut down for refueling or maintenance will remain out of operation until the improvements are accomplished. They are Arkansas Unit One in Arkansas, Crystal River Unit Three in Florida and Davis-Besse in Ohio.

He said the Rancho Seco plant in California promised to shut down Saturday.

Duke Power Co. promised to shut down one of the three Oconee units in South Carolina on Saturday, a second unit on May 12 and the third unit one week later.

Already shut down are the two remaining Babcock & Wilcox nuclear plants — the heavily damaged Three Mile Island Unit Two and its sister plant, Unit One, near Harrisburg, Pa.

Denton told the commission that these actions by the utilities have resolved the safety concerns of the NRC staff.

Last Monday, Denton's deputy, Edson Case, recommended immediate shutdowns, but Denton himself was not convinced and the commission postponed a decision so Denton and Case could hold hastily summoned meetings with officials of the utility companies and B&W.

When Denton returned to the commission Wednesday, he, too, recommended an immediate shutdown, complaining that the utilities had proposed no significant new improvements.

But company spokesmen stood up in that meeting to say they had some new ideas by that time, and the NRC postponed its decision again to Thursday.

On Thursday, it postponed it again to today because Denton wanted more time for further consultation with the companies.

Most oppose nuke closings

By Louis Harris
The Chicago Tribune

Although 41 percent of Americans report that they were "deeply disturbed" by the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant accident in Pennsylvania, a sizable 80-15 percent majority disagrees with the suggestion that "all nuclear power plants should be shut down permanently and no more should be allowed to be built."

A 57-40 percent majority would also oppose the policy that "all nuclear power plants in the country should be closed down until the federal government knows more about the safety risks involved in them."

The results of this latest ABC News - Harris Survey of 1,200 adults nationwide should not obscure the deep concern about nuclear power felt by most Americans since the Pennsylvania nuclear power plant accident:

— By 68-29 percent, a majority rejects the claim that "an unusual series of things went wrong there that are extremely unlikely to happen in other nuclear plants" and instead feels that "what happened at that Pennsylvania nuclear plant could happen at any of the other nuclear power plants in the United States." Thus, many Americans now feel that the risks involved in nuclear power plants are greater than they had previously thought.

— On the question of building more nuclear power plants in the United States, only a narrow 47-45 percent plurality now favors more construction. Earlier in April, a 52-42 percent majority approved the building of more nuclear power plants, while a year ago, a 55-25 percent majority approved such a step.

— By 90-9 percent, an overwhelming majority wants to see the Nuclear Regulatory Commission "continue to make spot inspections of nuclear power plants."

— By 72-26 percent, a big majority feels that "the federal government should issue more licenses for additional nucelar power plants but should insist on better safety standards."

— By an almost identical 71-26 percent, a majority agrees that "the federal government should allow the 44 more nuclear power plants now planned, but should supervise their construction more strictly than has been the case up to now."

Hispanics demand federal action

'Unlawful in line of duty'

By Marty Sabota
Staff Writer

Saying actual physical evidence disputes the officer's account of the slaying, a Mexican-American organization is demanding federal investigation and prosecution of a police officer who fatally shot an unarmed Mexican national in downtown Wichita Falls during the tornado curfew.

Ruben Sandoval of San Antonio, legal counsel to the League of United Latin American Citizens, said at a press conference today at GI Forum headquarters in Wichita Falls, that autopsy reports prove Officer Jay Wright shot 19-year-old Rosendo Daniel Ortiz in the middle of the back although the rookie officer's report states the fleeing man was reaching into his pocket and turning toward him when he fired.

The Wichita County grand jury no billed Wright April 18 because the young officer acted "in the line of duty," but Sandoval maintains what Wright did "was in the line of duty but was unlawful while in the line of duty."

"Ortiz represents one in a long line of Mexican nationals who have been brutalized and murdered under the pretext of badge and uniform."
— RUBEN SANDOVAL

The victim was shot early April 16 after Wright and his partner and roommate, Officer John Bailey, reportedly stopped Ortiz and another man for violation of the city's disaster-imposed 11 p.m. curfew. Ortiz, both officers' reports said, knocked Wright down and had run a short distance when he reached into his pocket and began turning toward to pursuing officers.

Thinking the man was reaching for a gun, Wright said he ordered the man to stop and fired the fatal shot, reports said.

"Violating the curfew was a misdemeanor and it does not allow a police officer to be judge, jury and executioner," Sandoval said.

Sandoval said he will continue to ask the grand jury to re-examine the case but believes the federal route would net more positive results.

Bob Greenwald, representative of the U.S. Justice Department Community Relations Services, said he was attending the conference "as a neutral third party" who would bring the two opposing groups together and see if any changes in police policy are warranted and whether the incident would be helpful in turning the community to constructive results.

Kell Freeway median from Kemp to Brook may take on a different look in the near future if plans to place temporary mobile homes for disaster victims on the strip is given the nod.

Two locations for temporary mobile homes are in the design phase and two or three other alfernative sites, including the Kell Freeway right of way, are being considered.

Group mobile home sites to house families displaced by the April 10 tornado are being planned at Kiwanis Park on Southwest Parkway and on Fairway behind the Safeway-Osbornes shopping complex, City Manager Gerald Fox said.

Students' security top priority

By Times Staff

"The history books may not even mention April 10 in Wichita Falls a thousand years from now, but it's going to cause us to tighten our belts the next few years," Dr. Lee Williamson, Wichita Falls public schools superintendent, told Rotarians Thursday.

But he emphasized the first responsibility to the students is "to get back into operation as soon as we can and enable families to develop some sort of routine."

"We don't want to break them up and send them to different schools," he said. "Kids adjust more quickly to a move than adults but it's still traumatic. They need security and we don't want to shake them anymore than we have to."

Williamson reeled off a list of 11 schools affected by the tornado which included McNiel Junior High, Rider High School and Ben Milam, Fowler, Jefferson, Lamar, Cunningham, Bonham, Franklin, Austin, Sam Houston and McGaha elementary schools.

McNiel was a total loss and he said he has made it his highest priority to keep its students as an entity.

All other damaged schools are expected to be repaired in the near future, but McNiel's fate is uncertain because the damage was so extensive it would be necessary to start all over again.

"We aren't even sure it will be rebuilt in the same location," Williamson said. "However, restoration at the present site would probably cost about three-fourths that of rebuilding in a new area."

But that decision is included in phase three and receiving little consideration until the plans for phase two — providing programming for the next year — can be worked out.

Solutions are still on the drawing board, Williamson said, and options include portable classrooms and busing.

"I want to see as little busing as possible," he said, "and I don't want to see the McNiel students bused to different schools."

On a different note, Williamson said people need to be reassured that their children will be safe if a tornado struck while school was in session.

"People are saying it's a good thing kids weren't in school," he said. "Actually, school is the safest place they could have been in Wichita Falls.

"If they had been in Ben Milam, they wouldn't have even gotten dirty. And the walls in the area where students would have been in McNiel were still intact. There might have been a few injuries but they would have been safe."

For this reason, Williamson said if a tornado is imminent at the end of a school day, the students will be kept at school.

"We'd rather have parents wondering where their kids are than to turn the kids loose and still have the parents wondering where they are," he said.

He said problems such as the delayed impact of the tax base are numerous but added optimistically, "I'm not sure what the future will bring, but we shall survive."

Dealing with the energy problem

Oil tax has less bite than figured

By BROOKS JACKSON
AP Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President's Carter's proposed tax on oil profits would have far less bite than generally supposed on the additional billions of dollars oil price decontrol will give to producers.

Although described originally as a 50 percent tax, the levy actually will cost oil companies only about 13 percent of the first three years' worth of extra income from decontrol, according to figures made public by the administration for the first time Thursday.

Carter's decision to eliminate gradually the federal ceilings on domestically produced oil will transfer $15.4 billion from consumers to oil companies by the end of 1981, administration officials said.

Far from taking half that amount, Carter's proposed "windfall profits tax" would net only $2 billion more in taxes that the oil companies would have to pay anyway under existing state and federal tax laws.

These figures contrast with the president's description of his proposed tax as the only barrier to a "massive ripoff" of consumers by oil companies.

If Congress enacts Carter's proposal intact, oil companies will get to keep $6 billion of their estimated $15.4 billion in additional revenue. If Congress passes no "windfall tax" at all, the companies still would get to keep only $8 billion, the new figures show.

The president proposes to funnel money from the windfall tax and from other oil-company taxes into a fund to help the poor pay their higher fuel bills, and to improve mass transit and look for new energy sources.

In an odd ceremony staged for photographers and reporters in the Oval Office, Carter signed a letter transmitting details of the tax plan to Congress. Ordinarily, signing ceremonies are reserved for bills that have been passed.

The president said the fight to enact his tax proposal "will be a classic confrontation pitting the common and the public good against the enormous power of a well-organized special interest."

When Carter unveiled his decontrol plan April 5, aides said the oil-profits tax would take half the additional income oil producers would get from allowing domestic oil prices to rise to world levels.

It was not explained clearly at the time, however, that about half the new oil revenue would be exempt from the windfall profits tax, and that the windfall tax itself would be allowed as a deduction to reduce federal income taxes which the oil companies would have to pay anyway.

Stuart Eizenstat, the president's chief domestic policy aide, provided the estimate that decontrol will produce a gross increase of $15.4 billion in oil prices over the next three years.

Only $3.3 billion of that would be taxed away by the windfall levy, which figures out not to 50 percent but to a little over 21 percent.

The reason is that the administration would exempt several categories of oil, including oil flowing in the Alaskan pipeline, oil from wells that produce relatively little oil, and oil from wells that require certain expensive techniques to induce production.

But it doesn't stop there. The $3.3 billion is an excise tax which the oil companies can deduct from their taxable income and thereby reduce the amount of federal income tax they otherwise would owe.

Thus, the "50 percent" oil profit tax would end up costing the companies a net of only $2 billion in added taxes over the first three years.

And that's about 13 percent of the $15.4 billion additional income expected to be realized by the companies under decontrol.

Carter promises fair gas rationing

By MIKE SHANAHAN
AP Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has rescued his standby gas rationing plan from almost certain death in Congress by promising special help to states where motorists drive greater distances.

The Senate Energy Commitee voted 9-8 Thursday to recommend that the full Senate adopt the proposal, which would go into effect only if the president declared an energy emergency.

A House committee previously voted to reject the proposal, but there are indications sentiment in the House also is shifting in its favor.

Under the rationing plan, gasoline coupons would be issued on the basis of how many cars are owned by each motorist. A person who commutes 50 miles to work in Texas could receive the same number of coupons as a resident of Connecticut who commutes 10 miles.

Late Wednesday, White House aides agreed to a compromise under which 10 percent of the nation's gasoline reserves during a serious shortage would be used to alleviate regional inequities.

Governors in states of high per capita gasoline usage, mainly in the West and South, would be allocated extra coupons which could be used to make the rationing system more fair.

The 10 percent allocation proposal was contained in letters from White House domestic adviser Stuart Eizenstat to key members of the Senate committee and the House Commerce Committee.

Until Carter promised to offset the potential imbalance, key House and Senate members had said the rationing plan was dead.

Among them was Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of a Senate energy conservation subcommittee, who said the rationing plan would have been rejected in the committee without the president's new proposal.

"That tipped the balance," he said, "along with the realization that the (energy) situation is really serious."

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the full energy committee, said members of the House and Senate are becoming aware that there will be serious gasoline shortages this summer, and that there will be insufficient reserves of heating oil this fall and winter.

While the rationing plan would not be ready for use until fall, if then, Jackson said Congress should give Carter some standby authority even if the proposal is imperfect.

Under federal law, Carter's emergency energy conservation measures can be either approved or rejected by Congress, but not changed.

The standby plan still has strong critics and there is no guarantee it will be approved by the full House or Senate.

al Griffin Bell had said a preliminary FBI investigation is under way and should be completed "within a week or 10 days."

Sandoval said LULAC thinks chances of prosecution following an investigation "are good," but they are going "all the way to see that things get going."

Their strategy includes sending letters to numerous high officials asking for the investigation and prosecution for Ortiz's civil rights violation.

However, Sandoval stressed LULAC is not viewing the incident as a violation of the civil rights of a minority, rather the violation of human rights.

Although Ortiz was found to be an illegal Mexican alien, Sandoval said that the statutes are meant to protect inhabitants as well as citizens.

"Unfortunately, state statues are still inadequate and we can't prove (the officer's) intention to kill," he said. "But from what we have learned such as autopsy results and the witnesses testimony, the officer probably panicked and fired. But that is no help to the deceased."

Sandoval maintains that the threat to Wright was not real and the officer should have let Ortiz "go for the moment because they already had one is custody."

"Circumstances warrant that we do everything possible through the lawful process," Sandoval said. "Ortiz represents one in a long line of Mexican nationals who have been brutalized and murdered under the pretext of badge and uniform."

Possible violations found in 150 of 251 stations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Department "strike force" teams found possible gasoline ceiling price violations at 150 of 251 stations audited last week in Los Angeles and New York City, the department announced today.

Sixty of the station owners agreed to reduce prices immediately to legal levels, the department said, and most of them also paid penalties. Legal action was initiated against the other 90 stations found in possible violation.

David J. Bardin of DOE's Economic Regulatory Administration said that "audit activities are continuing around the country. Special strike force efforts will be made in particular geographic areas where serious violations appear to be occurring most frequently."

He said the teams investigate consumer complaints of high prices of gasoline and heating oil telephoned in on DOE's toll-free hotline. The hotline, 800-424-9246, is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. EST.

The Kiwanis Park site would provide space for about 250 units, Fox said, while the 24-acre site on Fairway would handle about another 200.

"We are looking at two or three other sites which would include the Kell Freeway right of way," Fox said.

Officials with the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration also said the city had approached the FDAA with the idea and indicated the agency was reluctant to go along with the plan for safety reasons.

One official said talks were continuing between the agency and the city on the Kell proposal. If the city insists on using the Kell right of way, the official said, the FDAA cannot stop it.

Fox and other officials have estimated more than 2,000 mobile home spaces may be needed in group sites at a cost of $1,000 per space.

The potential $2 million cost for preparation of group sites would have to be handled by the city and state. While no details have been made available, Fox and others have indicated that talks between city and state officials have been continuing to determine who will pay what.

In a related matter, the City Council Tuesday will consider an emergency ordinance to allow mobile homes to be placed on dead end streets within the disaster area.

The measure, if approved, would authorize Fox to allow mobile homes to be placed next to the curb adjacent to a damaged residence provided the street is a dead end and cannot be extended because of natural or man-made obstacles.

Oklahoma man found guilty

An Oklahoma City man faces up to life in prison for his role in the January 1978 robbery of four people at a residence at 1400 Monroe.

A 30th District Court jury deliberated less than 30 minutes Thursday before finding Norman Claborne Gooding guilty of the first degree felony of aggravated robbery in connection with the incident.

A sentencing hearing was scheduled later today. Gooding elected to have District Judge Calvin Ashley assess punishment rather than the jury.

One of the four persons robbed, James Thomas Cole, 24, was killed during the 1978 incident.

Gooding faces two other counts of aggravated robbery and one of murder.

Emergency food program to end

Texas Department of Human Resources disaster recovery officials said they will close the emergency food stamp program in Wichita Falls and Vernon this weekend.

The program serving storm victims in Wichita Falls will end at 7 p.m. Saturday. The Wilbarger County program ends at 5 p.m. Friday.

Officials said emergency food stamps valued at $747,255 have been issued to 5,392 households in the eligible areas of the two counties in the wake of the April 10 tornado.

Beginning Monday, those in need of food stamps may apply under provisions of the regular program at the Wilbarger County courthouse and at the Wichita Falls TDHR office, 401 Burkburnett Road.

Barnhart quits GOP post

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Republicans have 30 days in which to select a new state party chairman.

Ray Barnhart of Pasadena resigned Thursday as state chairman shortly after being confirmed by the Senate as a new member of the Texas Highway and Public Transportation Commission.

The resignation went to Dorothy Doehne, San Antonio, state party vice chairman, who has 30 days in which to call a special meeting of the committee to elect a new party chairman.

Senate panel's budget exceeds House proposal

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee completed work Thursday on a state budget for 1980-81 which exceeds a House proposal by $600 million.

Chairman Grant Jones estimated the Senate bill totals $20.9 billion. If adopted, the spending total would exceed the House's $20.3 billion proposal — a budget that Governor Bill Clements termed "totally unacceptable."

Clements told a news conference Thursday the House bill was unacceptable because of its dollar total and some appropriations.

Texas

The $20.9 billion would leave about $40 million available for either tax relief or other spending, said Assistant Director Jim Oliver of the Legislative Budget Board.

The LBB proposal for 1980-81 totalled $20.8 billion.

Clements had proposed a $19.8 billion budget, with a plan to cut state taxes by $1 billion.

The Senate proposal now limits annual teacher pay increases to 5.1 percent — the increase Clements is supporting for all state employees. The House voted teachers a 7 percent hike Tuesday, contingent upon passage of a school finance bill.

Jones added that said "some realignment" of the present teacher step-increase scale would probably be made. Clements has favored doing away with the plan, which guarantees state teachers a annual pay increase for the first 12 years of their careers.

Bill will help crime victims

By LEE JONES
AP Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Violent crime often inflicts not only pain but financial hardship — medical bills, funeral expenses and lost wages.

A bill setting up a state fund, taken from the pockets of criminals, to help ease those hardships won tentative House approval Thursday, 91-43.

Final passage would return the bill (SB21) to the Senate for action on changes made by the House.

One amendment would see to it that a criminal's profits from writing about his experiences were available to compensate people he injured.

Victims of criminal violence or their survivors could receive up to $50,000 from the state for medical or funeral expenses, lost wages and rehabilitation expenses.

To qualify, a victim would have to report the crime within 72 hours.

Only victims whose economic losses resulted in financial hardship for themselves or their families could collect.

Hospital emergency rooms and policemen would have to inform victims of the availability of financial help from the state.

The Texas Industrial Accident Board, which decides workers' compensation claims, would administer the crime victim program.

Money for compensating victims would come from court costs of $10 paid by persons convicted of serious misdemeanors and $15 paid by convicted felons.

Senators took a major step toward starting the production and sale of gasohol — a blend of unleaded gasoline and alcohol that supposedly improves mileage and stretches gasoline supplies.

They passed on voice vote and sent to the House bills authorizing, but not appropriating, $20 million for gasohol plant construction and legalizing the manufacture of alcohol.

The Senate passed, 30-0, and sent to Gov. Bill Clements for signature or veto a bill providing up to 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine for assaulting a school teacher.

Existing law provides only a $200 fine for simple assault, but sponsors said teachers need the extra protection of a stiffer fine and a possible jail sentence to deter would-be attackers.

Also sent to Clements by the Senate was a bill conforming Texas' laws on strip mining to new federal regulations and, thereby, preserving the state's right to control surface mining.

Sen. Ron Clower, D-Garland, failed to toughen the land reclamation requirements, which impose lower standards for pasture and forest land than for prime farm land.

The bill would require mining companies to restore land at least to its original condition and separate-top soil and subsoil when digging up prime farm land for minerals such as lignite.

House members passed and sent to Clements on voice vote a bill exempting solar and wind-powered devices from property taxes.

They passed and returned to the Senate for action on amendments a bill raising auto inspection fees from $4 to $5 and applying the money toward pensions for state police, game wardens, liquor agents and Capitol guards.

The House passed and sent to the Senate bills that would:

— Authorize pension increases of up to 20 percent for retired teachers but only if money is provided in the general appropriation bill. Competing demands for available revenue are not expected to leave much for higher pensions.

— Give former prisoners of war special, free license plates for their automobiles.

— Enable cities and counties to provide extra pay for firemen, policemen and others who receive emergency medical technician training.

Regents discuss MSU reorganization

By PAT ZAJAC
Staff Writer

Beginning in September, Midwestern State University officials hope to streamline the school's academic administration in order to save on costs, free more faculty for teaching and improve communication between faculty and administration.

The plan, which was presented to the board of regents Thursday, calls for a consolidation of the 19 MSU departments and eight programs into 15 departments. Some 13 full-time positions will be eliminated over the next two years.

Programs that have produced small numbers of graduates — majors in French and German and the graduate programs in speech and drama — will be eliminated.

"We don't need five deans, 19 chairmen and eight program directors to administer a university of 4,000 students," he said.

The university's four schools — Business Administration and Economics, Education, Humanities & Social Sciences, and Sciences and Mathematics — will be eliminated. Instead, the 15 departments will be organized into six divisions. Deans of each of the four schools will be eliminated.

The regents neither approved nor disapproved the plan, preferring to leave the details to the administration.

"We're not in a position to say this deanship or that deanship should be eliminated. We're not that familiar with it all. We're leaving the mechanics...to the administration," Carter McGregor Jr., chairman, explained.

The plan, however, must be approved by the State Coordinating Board.

Heads of the 15 departments will work directly with Rogers on personnel and budget. They will meet as an Academic Council on curriculum matters and academic standards. They will be paid only from faculty salaries, but will receive three-hour reductions in teaching load.

The six division heads will be selected from the 15, but will not have their teaching loads reduced.

The thirteen positions to be eliminated will come through terminations or retirements, Rogers said.

He estimated that 35 hours a week could be used for teaching instead of administration, $135,000 could be cut out of salary bases over the next two years and $8,000 in administration costs could be saved.

In other business, the board postponed any decision on the university outside employment policy after hearing arguments from a faculty member that the policy would be inequitable, unenforceable and would not insure high academic quality at MSU.

The board is now considering a policy that would limit a faculty member's outside earnings to 20 percent of his university earnings.

"Adoption can only be construed to mean that you have little confidence in our ability to act as responsible professionals concerned with the well-being of the university and capable of discharing our contractual obligations," Dr. Bob Becker, president of the Faculty Senate, told the board.

The Faculty Senate has suggested that faculty members be allowed to work outside the university as long as it does not interfere with their performance at MSU.

The 20 percent limitation on outside earnings would be more favorable to faculty members with higher salaries, Becker argued.

"A person making $15,000 per year is limited to $3,000, while a person making $35,000 can earn up to $7,000. Which person is more likely to need the money?" Becker said.

The policy would also hurt MSU's ability to attract professionals who are willing to teach for relatively low salaries, but expect to supplement their income with outside employment, Becker said.

"If we cannot retain the faculty we have and cannot attract qualified faculty because of this policy, MSU cannot help but suffer," he said.

The regents, however, appear to be concerned that there have been faculty members who have neglected their duties at the university.

Regent Bill Thacker cited a case in which students were required to take their papers to a professor's downtown office.

"Will the faculty so police their own ranks so this could be prevented?" McGregor asked.

After the meeting, Becker said that he will meet with other faculty to begin putting together a plan outlining how the faculty will police itself.

Floods pose added threat

By JIM MILLER
Staff Writer

Rain which pelted Wichita Falls today may be nothing more than a spring shower. It also may be an omen.

Either way, federal officials were aware of the potential for flooding. The Corps of Engineers awarded a $24,670 contract Sunday to Anthony Contracting Inc. of Oxen Hills, Md., for debris removal along seven drainage ditches from Memorial Stadium to Weeks Park.

That contract includes McGrath according to Bill McAda, public information officer for the Federal Disaster Assistance Admininistration.

The creek, which flows through the Midwestern State University area and into Weeks Park, is choked with debris from the April 10 tornado, debris waiting to become instant dams should Wichita Falls snap out of its drought condition.

The creek is also the primary reason for much of Faith Village being included in the flood plain of the city, according to Ernest Lillard, director of public works.

Under terms of the Corps' contract, the increased flood hazard along McGrath should be eased in the next few days. The contractor was given seven days to complete the cleanup operation.

Burkburnett petition canceled

By DOROTHY CROWDER
Burkburnett Bureau

BURKBURNETT (Special) — A petition to change method of election of Burkburnett's mayor which was to be circulated by Mrs. Thomas Smith has been cancelled.

Mrs. Smith had planned to take action to try to change the Burkburnett City Charter to allow the direct action of the mayor by popular vote.

The action was reconsidered in view of the advice municipal law authority S. G. Johndroe who spoke highly of the present charter at the Thursday called meeting of the Burkburnett City Council.

Mrs. Smith consulted Johndroe following the meeting of the council. "Mr. Johndroe explained the various aspects of electing a mayor by popular vote. I do not think many people realize how drastically such a procedure would change our municipal government. I know I didn't," she said.

"Since the council will now make public their votes in all such matters, I see no reason to continue with the petition. The public vote will allow people of Burkburnett to have a voice in election of their officials," Mrs. Smith said.

Burkburnett City Council Thursday made public their vote of April 17.

Coma victim awake again after a year

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) — When 23-year-old Karen Delahanty regained consciousness, she asked her mother, "How long have I been sleeping?" The reply: "A year."

Miss Delahanty spent that year in a coma — a year in which doctors first said she would not survive, then predicted she would not awaken.

Doctors aren't sure if she will regain use of her paralyzed legs and right arm, but to her parents, the fact that Miss Delahanty is alert and talkative is a miracle and a blessing.

The Avon, Conn., woman went into the coma when the car in which she was riding collided head-on with a police cruiser responding to an emergency call.

Less than a month ago, the mother, Lorraine Delahanty, affirmed her faith that recovery was possible. She told a reporter simply, "I beleve in miracles."

Miss Delahanty had responded to pain, even had wept, but never had spoken. On April 12, nurses at New Britain Memorial Hospital excitedly telephoned her mother to tell her that a nose tube used to feed her daughter had become dislodged. When a nurse went to reinsert it, Miss Delahanty cried out, "No!"

The next day, Good Friday, Mrs. Delahanty was ready to leave after her daily visit to her daughter's bedside. As was her habit, she was talking to her daughter, despite the comatose woman's apparent inability to comprehend. Her mother said she had to go home and prepare dinner for the rest of the family.

"I don't want you to go," the daughter responded, speaking slowly but clearly, according to Mrs. Delahanty.

"It had to be God. It's got to be a miracle. There's no other explanation," Mrs. Delahanty said Wednesday.

Talmadge ethics settlement denied

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief counsel for the Senate Ethics Committee says he knows nothing about a proposed settlement that a broadcast report says would have Sen. Herman Talmadge consent to censure by the full Senate.

CBS News reported Thursday that committee lawyers have drafted the settlement in the case against Talmadge, D-Ga., who is accused of financial misconduct.

However, Carl Eardley, the committee's chief counsel, said he was not aware of a proposal such as reported by CBS.

"I'm preparing for the trial on Monday. If there is a settlement, nobody has bothered to tell me about it," Eardley said.

The six-member Ethics Committee begins hearing evidence in public session Monday on the allegations it has filed against Talmadge.

If the committee finds the evidence supports the allegations, it can recommend that the Senate take action ranging from no punishment to censure or expulsion.

CBS, quoting unidentified sources, said the proposed agreement would have Talmadge state that he regretted his actions and would consent to censure by the full Senate.

CBS said a Talmadge spokesman had no comment on the report.

Under the agreement drafted by committee lawyers, according to the network, Talmadge would say he filed false Senate and campaign expense reports due to carelessness and disregard for Senate rules.

The network added that all allegations relating to a secret bank account would be left unresolved. That bank account allegedly contained more than $39,000 in campaign contributions and improperly obtained Senate expense funds.

Talmadge has denied having knowledge of the account.

What energy crunch?

President Carter's campaign to conserve energy didn't clear the House Commerce Committee this week, a pretty clear signal that Congress still doesn't believe the energy crunch is for real. The committee refused to endorse the administration's plan to limit lighted advertisements, although it did agree to submit it to the full House. And the committee voted against even sending to the full House the administration's request for authority to close gasoline stations on weekends.

The committee's disapproval doesn't kill the pair of the president's goals, but it certainly helps their opponents who continue to use rose-colored glasses in surveying the energy situation.

Opponents of the outdoor lighting plan argue that it would unfairly penalize the advertising industry. It would save about 4,000 barrels of oil a day.

The weekend closing proposal is opposed by congressmen from tourist states which depend on a ready supply of gasoline.

And then Wednesday, the Commerce Committee turned thumbs down on Carter's standby plan for gasoline rationing, a plan which clearly would discriminate against western states where distances are great, public transit is non-existent, and alternative forms of transportation are scarce as subways.

Gasoline rationing is not worth the trouble it creates. The bureaucracy that would be required, the hassle of contending with coupons and counterfeiting, plus the inequities of treating fairly motorists in various sections of the country, make it impractical.

The time has not yet arrived for gasoline rationing, but such modest efforts to conserve as reduction of outdoor sign lighting and closing stations on weekends should be considered seriously by Congress. Failure to do so represents a business-as-usual attitude on the part of Congress, rather than progress in correcting the energy shortfall.

Energy from waste

With fossil fuel rapidly becoming both more scarce and more expensive, some Texas communities are looking toward their own waste as a source of energy. Garland and Galveston currently are studying that possibility, and engineers at Texas Tech University and Texas A&M University are studying the feasibility of fuel derived from wastes in the Coastal Bend area.

The Federal Environmental Protection Agency has agreed to fund a $14,000 study for the Gulf Coast Waste Authority regarding the possible burning of garbage in the Galveston area to produce steam. This steam would be sold to the University of Texas Medical Branch, a local brewery and possibly additional customers.

In Garland, the possibility of incinerating trash to produce steam is also being studied. Specifically, water wall incineration where trash is burned in a cylinder surrounded by water, is under consideration. The surrounding water would turn to steam, providing power for generating other forms of energy.

Dr. Francis Holm of Texas A&M University is one of two engineers involved in "biomass" projects, which would utilize both agricultural and municipal solid wastes in the generation of energy. Of particular interest in the Corpus Christi area is the possibility of using gin trash — 9,600 tons of which is produced yearly — as a potential fuel source, especially to generate energy to power irrigation pumps in the area.

Dr. Harry W. Parker of Texas Tech University is working on a similar project where he is trying to convert trash into a usable gas. He says that through this process of using waste material, gas can be generated for approximately $3 per thousand cubic feet. Although this is considerably higher than the current price of gas, rising costs and dwindling resources may make this a viable alternative in the future.

Parker stressed that one attractive aspect of this type operation is that energy would be generated in the same area where it would help provide power for irrigation.

Nationwide, the Government Accounting Office reports that there are currently 20 solid waste projects operational in the country, and 40 more are either in the construction or planning stages.

Tight little group runs Iraq

BAGHDAD — Without prior knowledge no one would ever guess that modern-day Iraq occupies the scene where once people "took their ease in Babylon." For this country — the North Korea of the Middle East — is run by a tough, sometimes brutal, clique of closely-knit revolutionaries.

But even in this bastion of iron, there are signs of the contagious disease that is sweeping across the tier of states bordering Russia from Turkey through Iran to Pakistan and Afghanistan. It is the disease — compounded of religious fervor, ethnic division and great-power rivalry — which produces local weakness and even chaos.

The inner circle of power here in Iraq is as tightly-knit as a family. President Ahmed Hassan al-Bakr is a former school teacher from Takrit, a town about a hundred miles north of Baghdad on the east bank of the Tigris River. The No. 2 man in the regime, Vice President Saddam Hussein of the ruling Revolutionary Command Council, is also from Takrit.

The No. 3 man, Minister of Interior Izzat Ibrahim, comes from the town of Douar, just across the river from Takrit. The minister of defense, Adana Khary-Allah, is the son-in-law of President Hassan al-Bakr and the brother-in-law of Vice Chairman Saddam Hussein.

That tight little group controls the government through the Ba'ath Socialist party, a once-clandestine organization still filled with the fervor of socialism and Arab unity. The party controls the country through an apparatus of state power over political, economic and cultural life which seems almost communist in its totality.

Despite this solid base, however, the regime here shows manifest signs of unease. Two army divisions are stationed up north in the mountainous district around Sulaimaniya near the Iranian border.

In Baghdad there has recently been a move against gambling. The horse races in the suburb of Mansour have been stopped. So has the local lottery.

Further south, in the shrine cities of Karbala and Najaf there have been religious demonstrations. Visitors report the showing of pictures of the Iranian religious leader, Ayatollah Khomeini.

All over the country, there has been a tightening of controls on the Communist party. Even though party men are in the cabinet, and though the party is theoretically joined in a Progressive Front with the Ba'ath, leading Communists have been hounded and harassed. Most Central Committee members have left the country. The communist daily has been banned for a month. A dozen officers suspected of communist connections have been arrested and are under interrogation.

Behind all of these actions there is the fear that Iraq might catch the disease that is infecting countries to the north. The tightened military presence around Sulaimaniya is a precaution against a revival of Kurdish nationalism. The Iraqis have to be on guard, because the Kurds across the border in Iran have taken advantage of the weakness in Tehran to assert once again their bid for an independent state.

The restrictions on gambling in Baghdad and the tolerance of pictures in the religious shrines are both gestures toward the new ruler of Iran, Ayatollah Khomeini. Khomeini, of course, is a Shi'ite Muslim, and he has a following among the Shi'ites of Iraq who make up about 50 percent of the population. They are particularly strong in Karbala and Najaf, the most holy of Shi'ite shrines.

The regime, which is largely Sunni Muslim by heritage and secular by conviction, is plainly concerned lest there develop here a wave of Shi'ite fundamentalism, akin to that which swept the shah from power.

The hard policy against the Communists sums up all these worries and one more. The Iraqi Communists tend to draw their support from among Shi'ites and Kurds. So the crackdown is a warning against using the present discontents to gain more power internally.

It also delivers an external message. The Iraqis believe that the Russians, if not responsible for, are at least prepared to make the most of the recent troubles in Iran, Pakistan, Turkey and Afghanistan. By cracking down on the local Communists, the regime here in Baghdad is warning Moscow not to meddle in the internal affairs of this country.

The significance of all this, of course, is chiefly that it is happening here in Iraq. The dowmiest of American doves, the warmest sympathizers with the cause of the Palestinians and the ayatollah, those most prone to criticize American meddling and the national security state, cannot for one minute imagine that this revolutionary country has been bitten by the bug of Western imperialism. Concern about what is happening in this part of the world is not, in other words, the ravings of national security freaks. The concern in Iraq proves that there may indeed be making up among the sick men of Asia a fundamental shift in the world balance of power.

Public balks at treaty cost

By JOHN FELTON
Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — In trying to sell a special Middle East aid package to Congress, President Carter is struggling to explain why the $4.8 billion price tag is a bargain.

Although little outright opposition has surfaced, members of Congress have bluntly warned Carter that American taxpayers are unhappy about footing the Egypt-Israel peace treaty bill.

Opinion polls show the public opposed to additional aid to those countries by a two-to-one margin.

Apparently speaking for many colleagues, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, recently said: " I think all of us are receiving mail which raises a perfectly legitimate question: Why should we pay for the peace?"

His statement is of more than passing interest because Church is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which must approve the aid.

Appearing before Church's committee recently, Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Defense Secretary Harold Brown said Middle East peace benefits far outweigh the costs.

Brown called the treaty "the cornerstone of a comprehensive, long-term peace with resulting stability for the entire region."

Vance argued that the price of peace "is modest when compared with the cost of further war."

He said four Middle East wars in 30 years have cost the United States "several tens of billions of dollars in direct costs alone." The 1973 Arab-Israeli war cost the United States more than $7 billion in additional aid to Israel.

Carter has said both countries must be "confident of their security" to ensure "enduring peace."

The special U.S. aid package includes:

— For Israel, an $800 million grant to replace two air bases that will be taken over by Egypt and $2.2 billion in loans to purchase weapons and military supplies.

— For Egypt, $300 million in loans to bolster that nation's shaky economy, and $1.5 billion in loans to purchase weapons.

Carter said the actual cost to the American taxpayer will be only $1.1 billion over four years because most of the aid is in loans. But this is on top of the regular U.S. foreign aid program of $1.8 billion a year for Israel and $1 billion for Egypt.

The loans for weapons will carry interest rates of 9-10 percent, with repayment over 30 years.

The $300 million economic aid loan to Egypt is virtually a grant because the interest rate will be only 2-3 percent over 30 years.

There may be a move in Congress to convert at least part of the loans to grants.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has said heavy loan repayments will be "very burdensome." Israel already pays the United States nearly $450 million a year on past loans, and the new loans would add another $200 million.

Carter administration officials, however, have said Israel can readily make those payments.

Begin has asked for half of the $3 billion aid to Israel in grants, and for interest rates on the remaining loans to be lowered to 1-2 percent.

Brown and Vance admit the United States now is deeply involved in the Middle East but stress that the country is not committed to boosting its military presence there.

The U.S. aid will help Israel modernize its armed forces and replace military bases now in the Sinai. Under the treaty Israel will gradually turn over the Sinai to Egypt within three years.

Through the $800 million grant, the United States will pay most of the cost of moving two air bases from the Sinai to the Negev desert in Israel. The United States will build the new bases for Israel.

In addition to financial aid, Carter gave Israel security and oil guarantees in connection with the peace treaty. Egypt was offered a security guarantee, but turned it down.

The security guarantee pledged the United States to take "appropriate measures to promote full observance" of the peace treaty.

"There is no hidden purpose or hidden meaning" in the guarantee, Vance said. "It cannot be construed as representing a mutual security pact with Israel, even though its existence provides Israel with significant psychological reassurance as it enters into this new relationship with Egypt."

The oil guarantee commits the United States to supplying Israel with oil for up to 15 years if its normal supplies are cut off. Israel would pay for the oil.

Although the aid to Egypt is mostly military, both Brown and Vance emphasized the need to restore Egypt's troubled economy.

"The future of Egypt will not turn primarily on the strength of its armed forces," Brown said.

The $1.5 billion in arms sales loans will enable Egypt to purchase jets, air defense equipment and other military supplies. But even that huge infusion of American arms "is substantially smaller than what is required for full modernization of Egypt's armed forces," Brown said. And he insisted the United States is not attempting to transform Egypt into a "regional policeman."

Money might put us in solar

Here's a thought to brighten an environmentalist's day: It's just possible that nuclear power will turn out to be the catalyst that turns us into a solar-powered nation.

And here's one for the taxpayer: When you add up the billions it's going to cost to repair or redesign and retool the iffy reactors sprinkled around the countryside, it might be the money factor that gets us into solar energy.

Something has to. And maybe the narrow squeak at Three Mile Island will do it. Maybe it will embarrass the government into telling it like it really is — and how much, when all the chips are down, it's willing to spend to keep from making Fritos of us all.

For years now, the resident mouths in the White House have been telling us that yes, indeedy, nuclear reactors are safer than safe. We were told not to worry our pretty little heads about escaping lethal gas; that's what those built-in valves and safety checks were for.

Earthquakes crack the giant coolers? No way. It could never happen. Not with all that modern construction and reinforced concrete and super-complicated building codes. No, siree.

Now we know more about the reliability of safety valves and that perennial problem: the valves in the human head. We also know that not even the government is 100-percent sure an earthquake couldn't precipitate a radioactive wipe-out. That's why it closed those five nuclear plants a few weeks back, to double-check their vulnerability.

We are catching on to a lot of things since the near-catastrophe at Harrisburg and the shocker that most of the nuclear reactors built by the same company have a design idiosyncracy that could bring on an "unexpected rapid oxidation" that might be the last thing we'll ever have to worry about. Literally.

And, since we're getting so smart, we've also got a pretty good idea of what it's going to cost to fix up those billion-dollar babies. The government can't even find out why kissing is fun without spending $50,000, so guess what it'll be willing to give the utility companies in their hour of need.

Which, of course, will be on top of what the customers will have to pay in higher rates to help fix up the damage that almost did them in.

What I would be interested in at this critical point (and while there's still a possibility that my next glass of milk will taste funny) is one good argument against using the money to develop solar power instead.

You'll notice I didn't say "explore its possibilities" ... or "study its feasibility" or "test its practical application." It's already been tested and feasibilitied almost to extinction. We know it works.

And the only thing keeping it from becoming our primary energy source in the next 20 years, or so the administration tells us, is the fact that it would cost a budget-bustin' amount to get it off the ground.

Well, so be it. With all the glitches showing up in our nuclear reactors, we're going to have to spend a lot on something. Why not something that not only gets the job done, but is (with apologies to Icarus) guaranteed to be safe, non-polluting, plentiful and — eventually — the cheapest source of energy there is? And the oil cartel can't price it out of sight.

Even James Schlesinger, who has not exactly been a tower of strength in the OPEC-energy crisis, is trying to get Mr. Carter to put our money where his new hot water heater is.

Schlesinger wants the government to spend $2.5 billion to get the country going on solar energy by 1985. That's not nearly enough (since it couldn't start until late in 1981, it comes out to less than $1 billion a year), but if the president goes for it, it would be the first sizable commitment to solar energy since Congress okayed some $30,000 to put a solar water heater in the White House.

So, if we're going to do it eventually, and it looks like we probably will, why not do it right — and right now? Stimulating solar development in dribs and drabs would, the way prices are headed, cost more in the long run and, first thing you know, solar technology's budget would be almost as big as the Pentagon's.

I, for one, would vote to go for the biggie: the $100-plus billion that engineers say it will take to bring us into the solar age by the year 2000.

I realize what this would do to my tax bite. But I'd rather gripe about higher taxes than about being "radioactively disassembled" without my consent. And I'll bet I'm not the only one.

This scenario, of course, is not my favorite over-the-rainbow dream, which goes as follows: We could recognize that the energy crisis is the creation of Mr. Schlesinger's Energy department, close the DOE down, save the $15 billion it budgets, and let the relative cost of energy per unit of heat decide whether we use coal, gas, wood, synthetic whatever, or solar.

However, this approach smacks of logic, and dreams are the stuff Washington is made of.

Your Money's Worth

Hiring minors requires knowing laws

By SYLVIA PORTER
Field Syndicate

In just a few weeks, hundreds of thousands of you — perhaps millions — will be giving jobs to young teenagers out of school for the summer. Many of you will be hiring your own kids, achieving your twin aims of supplying your child or children with spending money and gaining significant tax advantages. Many others of you will be hiring children of friends or strangers and, in innocence, may make errors that will turn out to be irritations at best, painfully expensive violations of the Wage-Hour law at worst.

Do you know in detail the strict rules governing child labor in the United States? Are you aware that there may be much more than a few bitter sentences behind a headline reporting that a 14-year-old had been permanently injured trying to operate a power-drive machine? Probably not. Here is a quiz which will reveal the rules you must obey when you hire minors this year.

Q: Can I hire anyone under age 14 for a summer job?

A: If you own the business and hire your own child, yes. In this case, there is no minimum-age restriction. Also exempt from minimum-age restrictions, explains Prentice-Hall in a privately circulated letter on the subject, are children who deliver newspapers or distribute advertising handbills.

Q: What is the general minimum age for summer jobs?

A: It depends on the job. The mimimum age for non-hazardous factory work is 16. But for non-factory work (office and sales, say), you can hire a 14-year-old. Check your state law; it could be more rigid than the federal law I've just quoted.

Q: What is "hazardous" work?

A: It's work entailing the operation of a motor vehicle or other types of machinery, work in a mine, or work that would expose the child to radioactive materials.

To illustrate: The under-16-year-old cannot work in a boiler room or in an engine room; cannot use greasepits, racks or lifting equipment in a service station; cannot work in a freezer, or cook or bake; cannot operate power-driven machines, load or unload trucks, or do warehouse work (except clerical).

Q: What work, then, can a 14- to 15-year-old do?

A: Clerical work, sales. As Prentice-Hall points out, this minor can pack customer's purchases in a retail store, make deliveries, run errands, do clean-up work, mark prices on the merchandise. In a food service establishment, a 14- or 15-year-old can prepare and serve food, but cannot cook it. Also permitted is operation of equipment such as milkshake blenders, coffee grinders, toasters, dishwashers and dumbwaiters.

Q: How do I get proof of the child's age? Ask for a birth certificate?

A: No. Federal and state anti-discrimination laws may forbid requests for a birth certificate, baptismal papers and the like. The proper form to use is an age certificate or working papers, which the child can obtain from his or her shcool.

Q: Are there advantages in hiring a 16-year-old as opposed to hiring a 14-year-old?

A: Yes. The big difference is that the 16-year-old can work in or about manufacturing plants; under-16s cannot. Minors over 16 can work in all occupations that are not open to a 14- or 15-year-old (unless the occupation itself is among the 17 listed as "hazardous" by the Secretary of Labor).

Another advantage to hiring the minor, age 16 or older, is that this child is not bound by the same tight restrictions on hours worked as is the minor under age 16.

Q: What are those restrictions on hours worked that apply to the under-16?

A: Under the the Wage-Hour law, the under-16 child is strictly prohibited from working more than eight hours in any day. When school is open, this child cannot work more than three hours a day — 18 hours a week — nor can he or she start work before 7 a.m. or work beyond 7 p.m.

From June 1 to Labor Day, though, the evening curfew hour is relaxed to 9 p.m. When school is closed (as it soon will be for so many millions of children) the maximimum work week is 40 hours.

Q: What about withholding taxes on minors?

A: With the possible exception of federal income tax withholding, you act as usual. You are mandated not to withhold federal income taxes if the minor states on his or her W-4 that (a) he had no income tax liability for 1978, and (b) he expects to incur no tax liability for the year 1979.

Business IQ

So you think you'd make a great executive? Try this test

By Barbara McDowell
NEA Writer

NEW YORK — Have you always insisted you belonged at the helm of a multinational conglomerate? Now you may be able to prove it, says Largent Parks Jr., a Dallas executive-search consultant.

Parks claims a Business IQ test he began administering for laughs has proven itself surprisingly effective in sizing up executive ability.

The quiz is based on the theory that there are three types of business intelligence: concrete, the type possessed by salespeople, clerks and other workers; functional, found in successful middle-managers and supervisors; and abstract, usually associated with top executives.

The test is composed of 13 pairs of words. The person being tested is to say what he or she thinks each pair has in common. It is important to give the first answer that comes to mind.

For example, the fist pair is "lemon" and "banana."

"If the response is 'both are yellow' or 'come from trees,' it suggests basic or concrete thinking," explains Parks. "If the answer is 'food,' it reveals a functional level of intelligence.

"A reply of 'fruit' says the person is abstract. The word 'fruit' is a conceptional term or a thought apart from a specific object."

Here are the 13 pairs and the types of responses indicative of (a) concrete, (b) functional, and (c) abstract thought:

1. Lemon-banana: (a) yellow, come from trees; (b) food; (c) fruit.

2. Coat-dress: (a) made of cloth; (b) people wear them; (c) clothing.

3. Ax-saw: (a) made of metal; (b) carpenters use them; (c) tools, cutting implements.

4. Dog-lion: (a) live outdoors; (b) have fur and tails; (c) animals, four-legged mammals.

5. North-west: (a) tell where you're going; (b) on maps, charts; (c) compass points, directions.

6. Nose-ear: (a) flesh, attached to the head; (b) parts of the body; (c) sense organs, receptors of stimuli.

7. Air-water: (a) clear, invisible; (b) elements of the environment; (c) necessary for life.

8. Table-chair: (a) have four legs; (b) used for meals; (c) furniture.

9. Egg-seed: (a) they grow; (b) food; (c) beginnings of life, points of origin.

10. Poem-statue: (a) found in books, museums, etc. (b) artists create them; (c) art.

11. Wood-alcohol: (a) both words have two o's; (b) fuel, used in manufacturing; (c) organic substances.

12. Praise-punishment: (a) both words start with p; (b) training tools, means of discipline; (c) motivators.

13. Fly-tree: (a) both have limbs; (b) found outdoors; (c) living organisms.

The test is scored by awarding two points for each abstract answer, one for each functional answer and zero for each concrete answer. If several answers are given for one pair, the most abstract one is used.

Extra credit points are awarded for age: one point if the person tested is between 35 and 39; two if between 40 and 49, three if between 50 and 54 and four if 55 or older.

Then the raw score is converted to the Business IQ as follows:

Score	IQ	Score	IQ
13	100	22	121
14	109	23	125
15	111	24	126
16	113	25	128
17	114	26	130
18	115	27	132
19	116	28	135
20	118	29	138
21	120	30	140

Concrete thinkers generally have Business IQs of 115 or less, while functional thinkers place between 116 and 127. A score of 128 or more suggests that the person tested is an abstract thinker who has a good chance of performing well in the executive suite.

Parks claims one executive's Business IQ was identical to the score he had received on a sophisticated battery of IQ tests taken a few months earlier.

But Parks insists his quiz is not about to replace the Stanford-Binet or the California Test of Mental Maturity.

"There is no way to compare this little 13-question test with those complicated exams that require the better part of a day to complete and are carefuly proctored," he emphasizes. "The Business IQ test is strictly for fun."

So even if you scored a perfect 140 on the test, don't demand that your boss turn over the company to you. At least, not until you have proven yourself in the real world of business.

One cleaner won't do it all

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

Can your household cleaner overcome sticky, greasy, ground-in grime and, at the same time, keep the flu away from your door?

Many so-called "all-purpose" cleaners on the market would have you believe that they can do every cleaning job around the house, while some advertise germ-killing powers.

Consumer Reports tested 32 all-purpose cleaners — seven sprays, 19 liquids (nine with ammonia), and six powders. Four of the cleaners tested were available with and without phosphates.

All the household cleaners worked just fine for light-duty mop-ups in areas that didn't accumulate much serious dirt. But no single cleaner could do everything.

Some promised to kill household germs. But none could make a house germ-free, prevent athlete's foot or keep your family from catching the flu.

To test the cleaners, we smeared lots of dirty fingerprints and smudges on white-painted door panels and tracked dirt across white vinyl asbestos tile floors. To simulate other kinds of soil, we "decorated" white panels with pencil marks, crayon scribbles, and a dab of black grease.

We used the cleaners as you would probably use them at home: sprays at full-strength, liquid cleaners in the strongest solution recommended, including full-strength if the label said it was all right, and powders diluted in water or used, undiluted, as scouring powder.

Spray cleaners were the best at heavy-duty jobs, but they also tended to be the most expensive per square foot of cleaning. And they were generally the least practical to use on large areas. Of the seven sprays tested, K-Mart and Walgreens were top-rated.

All the liquids cleaned walls satisfactorily and most were excellent or very good at spot-cleaning grease. Otherwise, performance varied. A few did well at cleaning floors, but many had hardly any effect on ground-in soil. Lestoil and Pine-Sol, used full-strength, were the best for spot-cleaning grease and crayon marks. White Magic All-Purpose Cleaner was the best for cleanups over large areas.

The powders were less convenient than liquids but better than many of them for cleaning floors. And the powders were as good as the liquid for cleaning walls, although they were often the worst of the lot for spot cleaning.

When used full-strength, some cleaners that contain solvents could remove paint. When samples of cleaners were applied to eight common household surfaces and left standing overnight, only plastic laminate survived unscathed. Damage could be minimized if drops and spills were wiped up quickly.

Some safety tips when using all-purpose cleaners:

- Most cleaners could conceivably cause eye irritation, but only if not flushed away immmediately after an accidental splash. Recently, because of such a hazard, the maker of Janitor in a Drum was ordered by the Consumer Product Safety Commission to include a safety warning on the container.
- Ammoniated liquids should never be mixed with chlorine-type bleach. Acrid fumes from this mixture might bring on nausea, watery eyes, irritation to nose and throat, or worse.

Many cleaners can leave your hands slightly rough and dry. Only Lestoil and the Lysol products recommended using rubber gloves — a good idea for all cleaners.

When used properly, household cleaners will keep floors, walls and other surfaces clean. But you'll probably need more than one type for all household cleaning chores.

Checking account interest to be hearings subject

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hearings will be held next month to draw up legislation that would permit consumers to receive interest from a variety of checking accounts, a House subcommittee chairman says.

Rep. Fernand J. St Germain, who chairs the House Banking subcommittee on financial institutions, announced plans for the hearings only days after interest-bearing checking accounts were declared illegal by the U.S. Court of Appeals here.

"The court decision requires that we face up to the situation, provide clear guidelines and stop all the gimmickry that has surrounded efforts to 'back-door' interest on checking accounts," the Rhode Island Democrat said Monday.

He called for legislation that would allow interest on checking accounts and let savings and loans, mutual savings banks and credit unions offer checking accounts.

In a related development, officials from federal agencies that regulate commercial banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions said they were discussing whether to appeal the court ruling.

Although the court said federal agencies exceeded their statutory authority by allowing the accounts, it invited Congress to rewrite the law if it approves of the practice.

House passes state tax delay

State

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas House has passed and sent to the governor a bill allowing businesses in areas hit by natural disasters - such as the Wichita Falls tornado - an extra 90 days to remit state taxes to the comptroller.

The representatives also passed a bill that would exempt the addresses and telephone numbers of police officers from mandatory disclosure under the state Open Records Act.

The measure next goes to the Sengte.

House members also passed a bill requiring each person who examines a public official's financial disclosure statement to leave in the file his name, address, employer's name and the date.

Rep. Luther Jones, D-El Paso, said concealing peace officers' addresses and telephone numbers from the public and press was a move "to protect police families."

An attorney general's opinion last year held that the addresses and telephone numbers had to be disclosed under the open records law as it currently exists.

Rep. Bill Blythe, D-Houston, sponsored the bill requiring the Secretary of State to place in financial disclosure files the identity of persons who inspect them.

Blythe, a sponsor of the original disclosure act, said some lobbyists and political enemies had used information from the files to pressure legislators or retaliate against them.

Flood-hit counties due aid

WASHINGTON (AP) - Residents of six southeast Texas counties swamped by floods are eligible for federal assistance after President Carter declared Texas a major disaster area for the second week in a row.

Counties certified for aid include Hardin, Orange, Montgomery, Liberty, Jefferson and Harris, Wilson said.

Carter declared a disaster area the previous week after tornadoes struck the Wichita Falls area of north central Texas on April 10 and the death toll topped 50.

Measles outbreak kills 16 children

World

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A measles epidemic has taken the lives of 16 children in a remote mountain village in the northern Philippines during the past two weeks, the Philippine News Agency reported today.

The report did not say how many other persons were suffering from the disease, which broke out early this month in the village of Kayapa 150 miles north of Manila. There are no roads to the village, and it can be reached only by an eight-hour hike on a mountain trail from the town of Bakun, it said.

Lt. Col. Rogelio C. Aguana, the constabulary commander in Benguet province, appealed to provincial health officers to send a medical team to the village to prevent the disease from spreading.

Black nationalists arrested

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa (AP) — South African security forces arrested three officials of the internal wing of the black nationalist South-West Africa People's Organization today, giving weight to speculation that the group is about to be outlawed.

SWAPO's banned external wing has been fighting South African troops for control of the territory from bases in Angola for 12 years. But the internal wing of the party has been allowed to operate within the territory. Sources predicted this week that it would be banned.

South Africa took the mineral-rich territory to its northwest from Germany in 1915 and received a League of Nations mandate to administer it in 1920. The United Nations revoked the mandate in 1966, but South Africa refused to give the region up until recently.

Panamanian students protest

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Several hundred angry high school students ran through downtown streets here today stoning offices to protest recent cost-of-living increases.

No injuries were reported and the national guard, Panama's army and police force, did not intefere. It was the third straight day students have demonstrated.

Every window in the Chamber of Commerce building was smashed and brick-sized rocks lay atop desks. Secretaries stood crying in the building after the students left.

One chamber executive, who asked not to be named, said about 400 students massed in front of the building, smashed in the glass entrance doors and walked in throwing rocks.

Crash kills missionaries

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Four American missionaries died in the crash of their light plane, police here said today.

Police identified the victims of the Thursday accident as Sam Fife, 54, of Miami, Fla.; Gary Chamler, 42, of Dover, Ohio, and Ron and Pat Kocsic, both 25, of Canton, Ohio.

Alleged organized crime chief is murdered in weight loss spa

LONG BRANCH, N.J. (AP) — Anthony "Little Pussy" Russo, once believed to be the kingpin of organized crime on the Jersey Shore, was shot and killed while in bed at a weight loss spa, officials say.

Paul Chaiet, an assistant Monmouth County prosecutor, said Thursday police had no suspects in the death of the 62-year-old Russo, who lived here and in Hallandale, Fla.

Russo's body was sprawled across his bed in the Harbor Island Spa when a hotel attendant checked about 9:30 a.m. Thursday at the request of Russo's attorney, who said the reputed Mafia figure had missed an appointment.

Attorney John Russell of Jersey City said he then rushed to the hotel-spa and found Russo, who he said suffered from a rare blood disease, hemorrhaging from the nose.

"I thought maybe he'd had some type of attack ... I put my hand on his chest, but felt no heart beat," Russell said. "Then I looked at him closely and saw the bullet hole."

Chaiet, who was assisted by the State Police organized crime unit and the state Division of Criminal Justice, said an autopsy showed Russo was shot three times in the right temple and once behind the left ear.

Russo, once identified by law enforcement officials as the Mafia kingpin in Monmouth County and the rackets boss along the shore, was jailed in 1970 for refusing to testify before the State Commission of Investigation.

Reputed Mafia boss indicted

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Reputed Mafia chieftain Joseph C. "Joe Bananas" Bonanno Sr. has been indicted by a federal grand jury on a charge of conspiring to "corruptly obstruct justice" by keeping information from a grand jury.

"The indictment, which was returned in sealed form Thursday and opened today, also charged Jack DiFilippi, said to be an employee of several firms operated by Bonanno's two sons, with six counts of perjury in answering questions before a grand jury.

Federal grand juries in California and Arizona have been investigating alleged violations of federal law, including the use of businesses to conceal personal income, assets and the source of capital.

A report of the indictment had appeared in today's editions of the Arizona Republic.

The Republic, which did not quote any sources, said the sealed indictment was issued Thursday.

Lonely days

...'God works in mysterious ways'

By SANDRA COLLINS
Marietta (Ohio) Times

BELMONT, W.Va. (AP) — Lillie Steele, 87, round-faced and stout matriarch of the Steele clan in Pleasants County, lives in a little house her son Emmett built for her just below his farmhouse outside Belmont.

"Mom, it ain't much, but it's a roof over your head and it's yours for as long as you live," he told her when it was done.

Mrs. Steele has spent many long hours in the house since Emmett and 50 other men were killed a year ago today in the collapse of construction scaffolding at a power plant cooling tower at nearby Willow Island.

Also among the dead were four of Mrs. Steele's grandsons and two great-grandsons.

"I'm not over it yet and I never will be," Mrs. Steele said in a copyright interview with the Marietta Times.

"But sometimes, you know, God works in mysterious ways. They were taken for some reason and I don't know why," she said.

The evening before the accident, Mrs. Steele recalled, she went up to Emmett's house.

Mother and son chatted until about 9 o'clock. Among other things, they talked about Emmett's job. He made good money as an ironworker, but Mrs. Steele thought it was about time he retired.

"Emmett, you're 62 now," Mrs. Steele said she told her son. "Why don't you quit. You've got enough money to retire and tend to the farm."

"Mom, I'm gonna work until October," he told her. "Then I can take my Social Security and get out and we can be together and have a good time."

They dropped the subject.

The next morning, she was sitting on her bed sorting quilt pieces when she saw a grandson come up the driveway and go into the big house.

"What's the matter," she remembered wondering. The grandson, John, didn't walk like he was sick, yet why else would he be off work?

The young man left the farmhouse and went to another Steele house farther down the road. "I knew something was wrong then," she said. She remembered that Emmett's legs had been cramping and hoped he hadn't fallen.

"I couldn't do anything, so I just sat and waited, and after a while, John walked in."

"How are you, Grandma?" he asked solemnly.

"All right, I suppose," she replied. "Why? Tell me what has happened."

"There's been an awful accident down at the powerhouse, Grandma. I don't know how many are killed, but there's a whole bunch of them and it's awful bad. The cooling tower fell and Emmett was on it."

Mrs. Steele recalled her reaction. "My children were gone and there wasn't nothing I could do. I wasn't mad at nobody. It wasn't nobody's fault.

"I just kept thinking that the Lord said He'd never put anything on us that we couldn't bear. I knew he'd take care of us. I kept repeating it over and over. He promised us...

"On the day of the funeral at the schoolhouse, I thought I couldn't stand it anymore, but I did. Somehow, God took all the grief away from me and it just seemed like I was numb."

She began talking about her grandsons — children of her son Lee — who died alongside their uncle Emmett in the tangled mass of scaffolding that plunged 168 feet to the center of the tower.

"Lee's boys were just like my own children. They were mighty sweet boys. They were always ready to help everybody. If there was sickness in the country, they were right there. If someone needed help on a farm, they were right there. I've got a mighty good family."

The young Steele widows sought counsel from the family matriarch when the first damage suits were filed.

"I told them get enough money from the companies to take care of their children," she said. "I told them that if they sued, the lawyers would get the biggest part of it." None of them have sued.

"You have to get over these things," she said.

City bands to withdraw from contest

The impact of the April 10 tornado hit several Wichita Falls young people again Thursday as three city bands were forced to withdraw from annual University Interscholastic League contests after months of preparation.

McNiel Junior High School Band and Rider High School bands Nos. 1 and 2 were unable to enter their respective events. The tornado destroyed the junior high school and did extensive damage to the band room at Rider.

The bands lost several instruments, and neither school had classes last week.

Wichita Falls High School bands also were affected, Charles Enloe, director of bands for the school district, said.

"Some of the people lost homes and they lost some uniforms and instruments. They went to contest and did a good job."

Wichita Falls High School Band No. 1 received a II rating in both concert and sight reading in the contest at Hirschi High School. The No. 2 band received a III rating in both concert and sight reading.

Junior high competition was Thursday morning in Vernon, Texas. Vernon and Mineral Wells Junior High School No. 1 both received I ratings, the highest given, in both concert and sight reading.

Barwise Junior High School received a II in each event, and Zundelowitz Junior High School received a IV in concert and a II in sight reading. City View Junior High School received a III in concert and a IV in sight reading, Holliday, Texas, Junior High School received a II in concert and a III in sight readng and Childress Junior High received a II in each category.

Other junior high band ratings included Burkburnett, I in concert and II in sight reading; Iowa Park, II in concert and I in sight reading; Graham No. 2 band, I in concert and II in sight reading; Graham No. 1 band, a II in each category; and Bowie, a II in each category.

Also, Mineral Wells No. 2 band, III in concert and I in sight reading; and Kirby Junior High School, I in concert and II in sight reading.

FDAA aid center to close Saturday

The Federal Disaster Assistance Administration center at the 4-H Center will be open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. through Saturday, when it will close permanently.

The center at Washington School will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and will remain open indefinitely.

The Notre Dame school center closed Thursday, according to FDAA officials.

COST TO CLEAR TORNADO DEBRIS TOPS $1 MILLION MARK
...two new major contracts awarded for removal in Wichita Falls and Vernon (Photo by Joe Brown)

Debris removal cost soars

Tornado debris clearance costs topped the $1 million mark Thursday when the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers awarded two more major contracts, Federal Disaster Assistance Administration officials said.

Engineers said the new contracts, worth $232,180, boosted the total dollars now obligated for debris removal in Wichita Falls and Vernon to slightly more that $1.26 million to clear an estimated 2,900 lots.

One of the contracts signed Thursday went to Fran & Sons, Greeley, Colo., to clear about 740 lots in an area on either side of U.S. 281 and south of Midwestern Parkway.

The second contract went to Starr and Sons Inc., Auburn, Ala. for $48,700. The firm will clear about 205 lots in the area across East Central Freeway east of Old Windthorst Road.

Work is scheduled to begin on the larger contract Friday morning, with the smaller contract work starting Saturday, officials said. Both projects are scheduled to be completed in 15 days.

Plans call for the awarding of three or more additional debris removal contracts within the next few days to clear an additional 450 lots on the fringe areas of the tornado's path.

Federal Coordinating Officer Joe D. Winkle said the debris removal contractors still are encountering some problems because not all right-of-entry agreements have been submitted by property owners. These agreements are required before the contractor can begin work.

"Our latest figures show we have something under 2,600 agreements," Winkle said, "but we have contracts now operating or ready to go on about 2,900 lots."

Agreement forms are available through Saturday evening at the 4-H Center and at City Hall. Agreements must be signed by May 6.

Hospital taxing authority sought

The first official step to create a hospital taxing authority to finance Wichita General Hospital has been taken.

Wichita General Hospital officials have applied to the Texas Legislature for a law creating a hospital district encompassing all of Wichita County except the area within Electra Hospital District.

Hospital board Chairman Dr. Philip Carpenter said the application, drawn up after an April 17 meeting between hospital administrators and city and county officials, is being made in the hope that Wichita Falls City Council and Wichita County commissioners will pass resolutions supporting creation of the taxing authority.

"At our meeting with the city council and commissioners court, all seemed to be of the opinion that a district would be the best way to finance (the hospital)," Carpenter said.

"We thought we should be preparing ourselves for that if they passed such a resolution suggesting (that a taxing authority be created.)," he said.

City and county officials have said they support the creation of a hospital district rather than float bond issues every time the hospital needs money for building or operating needs.

The legislation the hospital is asking for would clear the way for a referendum on the taxing authority, which is required before the hospital could levy property taxes not to exceed 75 cents on $100 valuation.

Wichita General Hospital officials have said that in order to pay for an estimated $9.6 million contained in the first phase of planned capital improvements, a capital fund must be developed. Hospital officials have never been able to establish enough capital with the almost $200,000 in annual tax support the city and county provide, according to hospital officials.

"We are asking (the legislature) to pass an act so if we do decide to ask for a vote on the district, we will have that part of it done and not have to wait two years for the next legislature," Carpenter said.

If a bond issue were approved instead of the hospital district, hospital financial adviser Frank Medinich said the hospital would need to bring in about $750,000 annually to pay off the bonds needed to finance the first phase of planned capital improvements.

If approved, the hospital district would create an interest and sinking fund to pay the interest and principal on such bonds. City and county officials have said they would not support the idea of the hospital selling the bonds, with the city and county underwriting the measure, unless the hospital has the taxing authority to pay for the work itself.

Enlarging the hospital's emergency room and remodeling the west wing is included in the first phase of the capital improvements master plan.

Face-making machine aid for sheriff's office

"It's called a 'Mimic,'" said Sheriff John Gibson. "It's a machine that can put together literally thousands of faces."

Gibson's office received the $3,500 facemaker after Wichita County commissioners approved a 75-25 matching funds arrangement with the federal government paying the larger share.

"We got it a couple of days after the tornado," Gibson said, "so we really haven't had time to look at it until this week."

The machine looks like a small television set. Underneath the viewing screen is a series of knobs that lets the operator select one of the hundreds of hairstyles, mouth shapes and facial structures.

"And," Gibson said, "you can move the features up and down on the screen. You would be amazed at how much difference just raising a pair of eyes a quarter of an inch can make."

Many law enforcement agencies use an "Iden-ta-Kit" to help crime victims put together a composite picture of a suspect.

But the "Mimic" is more complex, Gibson said, and offers a wider range of facial and hair features.

Gibson said he wants all law enforcement agencies in Wichita and the surrounding counties to make use of the machine.

"I really think this will help us greatly in the identification of criminals," he said, "and I want all law enforcement agencies to feel free to use the machine."

TV show's joke not funny to some

By PHIL RINGMAM
Staff Writer

To its victims, a tornado that takes 45 lives and leaves 20,000 homeless is not considered a laughing matter.

So when NBC's satirical "Saturday Night Live" television show on April 14 briefly lampooned Wichita Falls and the killer tornado that struck it four days earlier, many Wichitans were angered and several incensed enough to voice their complaints to NBC.

The latter included State Rep. Dave Allred, D-Wichita County.

"First of all, I don't think its funny. Second of all, I thought it was in poor taste," Allred said about a photograph that was shown on the show's Weekend Update spoof on the news that pictured a tornado-damaged house and a man wiping away tears with a handkerchief.

The commentary that accompanied the photo said the force of the tornado had driven boards through the walls of the man's house and "imbedded a handkerchief in his nose."

Allred, who admitted he did not see the show, said he did not think a tornado that took so many lives and caused so much damage was a suitable subject for humor.

"It irritated me and I thought it was in very poor taste," he said.

An NBC spokeswoman said Allred's complaint and those of other Wichitans have been brought to the attention of the network's broadcast standards personnel and "also to people higher up who should know about it."

She said two letters and a few telephone calls, in addition to Allred's, had been received by NBC concerning the show.

But one Wichitan, who also admitted he did not see the show but heard about it later, said he was not upset by the humor.

"The nature of humor is based on misfortune," he said, citing slapstick comedy. "Therefore, had the tornado struck Kalamazoo, Michigan, instead of Wichita Falls, Texas, Wichitans, by and large, would have laughed as many people I have talked to did."

Council considers water contract system

Wichita Falls Board of Aldermen is expected to approve a consultant's contract to establish a rate-making system for contract water sales to neighboring communites during Tuesday's regular meeting of the council.

The contract resolution is included among several routine items and three disaster-related measures on the agenda for the 8:30 a.m. meeting in council chambers at Memorial Auditorium.

City Manager Gerald Fox is presenting the resolution to award the contract for consulting services to Joe Nall & Associates for a system of esablishing contract water rates that can be used each year.

Earlier this year, negotiations between the city of Wichita Falls and contract water purchasers sparked considerable controversy over how rates should be determined.

Other routine items include consideration of amending no parking zones and speed limits on certain streets, public hearing on hazardous structures and award of bids for oil and gas leases at Lake Wichita and Lake Arrowhead.

Councilmen also are expected to extend the disaster state of emergency through May 11, create a Disaster Relief Trust Fund and authorize Fox to approve placement of temporary mobile homes on dead end streets within the disaster area.

Handicapped week slated

Nineteen community agencies have combined for the third consecutive year to sponsor National Handicapped Awareness Week, said Susan Browning, director of North Texas Easter Seal Rehabilitation Center.

The week is scheduled May 13-19 and will focus attention on the abilities of handicapped persons and on ways architectural and attitudinal barrriers can be eliminated or modified.

"A disability is a fact of life for some 35 million Americans," Ms. Browning said. "However, all too often these people are handicapped not by their disability but by conditions imposed by their communities."

Khomeini says revolution must go on

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said today even if he or one of his children is assassinated that the Islamic revolution "must go on."

It was believed the first time Khomeini referred to an assassination of himself or members of his family since he returned to Iran in February and engineered the overthrow of the monarchy.

"If one of my children is assassinated or if I am assassinated, you must realize that our movement is not dependent on individuals and that it must go on," he told representatives of the nation's oil workers at his headquarters in the holy city of Qom, the state radio reported.

There was no indication that Khomeini's life was in danger despite the assassination of the former chief of the Islamic revolutionary forces, Gen. Mohammad Vali Gharani, on Monday.

The assassination of Gharani was followed 24 hours later by an aborted attempt on the life of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, and the incidents prompted tightened security measures for top officials.

In Tehran, meanwhile, about 500 supporters of the leftist Fedayeen Khalq guerrillas staged a sit-in at the Justice Ministry today to protest the jailing of 41 guerrillas.

The 41 were arrested last week by revolutionary militiamen who stormed the Fedayeen headquarters in southern Abadan and uncovered arms and ammunition. The captives were brought to Tehran and jailed.

The Fedayeen in and around Abadan, in oil-rich Khuzestan province, have been accused of fomenting labor unrest in the petroleum industry.

Despite Khomeini's order to speed up revolutionary justice in Iran, no new executions were reported today. Two more of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's policemen were executed by firing squads Thursday, bringing to 160 the number shot since Khomeini's forces ousted the monarchy Feb. 12.

Non-white vote could influence British election

LONDON (AP) — Britain's 1.2 million non-white registered voters are considered a major factor in the general election next Thursday. They hold the key in a dozen districts and could tip the balance in 40 others, political analysts say.

The Guardian, a liberal newspaper, recently noted: "The ethnic vote ...is for the first time considered to be a real force in a British general election."

A Community Relations Commission study after the October 1974 election noted there were more than 50 districts in which non-white voters outnumbered the majorities that put winning candidates in the House of Commons.

"It's obvious that colored voters have the capacity to wield significant electoral power," a Labor Party campaign official said.

"Proportionately, they could elect as many as 12 blacks to the House of Commons if they chose. But there's little chance of that happening because they have never used their votes or have never been organized in the way they voted."

There are only five non-whites among the record 2,751 candidates running for the 635-seat House of Commons. But that's the highest number of non-whites ever to run in a general election in Britain.

There has been no non-white member of Commons since an Asian, Sapurji Saklatvala, was elected on a Communist ticket in 1928. However, there are signs that the traditionally-fragmented non-white vote is being organized to a greater extent than in any previous election.

Security for shah tightened to prevent PLO kidnapping

NASSAU, Bahamas (AP) — Reports of a Palestine Liberation Organization order to kidnap the deposed shah of Iran have prompted Bahamian police to consider even tighter security around the Paradise Island house where he is staying, officials said.

Meanwhile, the presence of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in the Bahamas is stirring further concern and stronger calls for him to leave the country by minority political parties.

The Bahamian Democratic Party warned Thursday that the island nation is "in serious danger of becoming involved in an international terrorist campaign."

High-level Bahamian police met late Thursday to discuss new security arrangements after hearing the Iranian magazine Javan was quoting PLO official Hani Al Hassan as saying PLO leader Yasser Arafat has called for "specialized guerrilla groups" to kidnap the shah.

"We know that Arafat doesn't fool around," said Bahamas police chief Salathiel Thompson on hearing of the report. Bahamas officers and private security guards have guarded the shah around the clock since his arrival March 30.

Beer sale age issue back in legislature

Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The old controversy at what age a person should be to buy beer was back in the state legislative hopper today.

The Oklahoma Senate Thursday authorized introduction of a bill designed to counter a Norman judge's ruling that the state has no law forbidding the sale of beer to minors.

Sen. Lee Cate, D-Norman, successfully moved to suspend legislative rules so he could introduce a bill he is drafting to control the sale of 3.2 percent beer to minors.

Cate's bill could touch off controversy in the Legislature because he plans to change the age from 18 to 19 for buying beer for consumption off the premises and lower it from 21 to 19 for purchasing beer for consumption on the premises.

The Norman Democrat said he will introduce the legislation in light of District Judge Preston Trimble's decision to throw out 21 beer revocation cases in Norman on grounds Oklahoma's law is unconstitutional because it discriminates between the sexes.

The state law controlling the sale of beer to minors permitted females to buy beer at age 18 for consumption off the peremises of a business establishment, but restricted males to age 21.

A 1976 U.S. Supreme Court ruling declared the state law unconstitutional, but the state legislature never has acted to change the law.

At that time, then-Attorney General Larry Derryberry said the Supreme Court ruling wiped out the state law, leaving the legal age for buying beer at age 18 for both sexes.

District Attorney Kay Huff of Norman said her office had moved to revoke 21 beer licenses under a 1953 state law that prohibits the sale of beer to minors but doesn't state the age for a minor. She said her office will appeal Trimble's ruling to the Oklahoma Supreme Court.

How much does it cost?

Texas Senate committee approves tax relief bill

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee has approved a tax relief bill without even knowing how much it costs.

The committee bill would revise the House version by eliminating proposed homestead exemptions for elderly and disabled Texans who have incomes exceeding $10,000 a year. It was approved 9-2.

Both proposals implement the 1978 Tax Relief Amendment, which voters adopted overwhelmingly, with the elderly promoting its passage in hopes of getting tax breaks.

Sen. Carl Parker assailed the 1978 amendment, however, as a "flimflam."

"If you had a recipe for Mulligan's stew and called it the 'Tax Relief Amendment,' it would pass," said Parker. "We flimflammed the public by putting that name on it."

Sen. Tom Creighton described the 1978 proposal as the "worst bill we've ever passed" and said if the amendment is carried out by the Legislature "it will bankrupt every political subdivision in Texas."

The Senate committee bill does not contain the $430 million in state money that the House had provided to reimburse school districts for revenue losses resulting from mandatory property tax cuts.

Sen. Grant Jones, committee chairman, said reimbursement would be covered in a separate school finance bill being written by the Senate Education Committee.

Jones, D-Abilene, admitted he had forgotten to ask the Legislative Budget Board to estimate how much the Senate bill would cost the state.

"In all honesty, I flat forgot to get a fiscal note," said Jones. He promised one would be made available before the full Senate votes on the bill.

R.H. Gibbons, a Fort Worth-area resident representing 500,000 elderly Texans, urged the committee not to base eligibility for the $10,000 homestead exemption on income.

The 1978 amendment automatically exempts $5,000 of the market value of each owner-occupied house in Texas from school district property taxes.

"The people feel very much deceived" by the income provision, said Gibbons, legislative director of the Texas Senior Citizens Association. The same provision in the House was removed by committee.

Said Gibbons, "$10,000 is not half enough."

Kerr-McGee president blames dead woman for own contamination

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Kerr-McGee Nuclear Corp.'s president testified Thursday he didn't contaminate Karen Silkwood's apartment with plutonium and doesn't know who did, although he blames her.

Innuendoes aiming blame for the contamination at Kerr-McGee or at Miss Silkwood or her union have been left hanging several times during the eight-week Silkwood contamination negligence trial.

After undergoing a lengthy cross-examination, former nuclear fuel plant manager Morgan Moore, 52, of Oklahoma City was asked on redirect if he contaminated the apartment.

"No sir," he said.

"Did you do anything to cause it to be contaminated," Kerr-McGee lawyer Bill Paul asked.

"No sir," Moore said.

On re-cross, Silkwood lawyer Gerry Spence carried the question one step further.

"Did you blame Karen Silkwood ... for contaminating her own apartment?" he asked.

"I have no proof of who contaminated her apartment," Moore said.

"But did you blame her?" Spence asked.

"I believe she did it," Moore said.

Miss Silkwood's survivors are suing Kerr-McGee for $11.5 million, alleging negligence in connection with her contamination. The company claims she contaminated herself, possibly while spiking her urine samples. She died in a Nov. 13, 1974, auto crash.

After pointing out Moore got a letter of commendation for his handling of negotiations with the Atomic Workers union while manager of Kerr-McGee's plutonium plant, Spence questioned the witness about a number of anti-union memos to employees during a union decertification election campaign.

One said "a union can't change anything a company is unwilling to change" and another said unions can't guarantee members a safe place to work.

Moore agreed he authored the memos, including one saying "strikes put friend against friend and neighbor against neighbor."

On re-direct examination, Moore pointed out the memos also encouraged employees to be sure to vote in the election.

Kerr-McGee's defense witnesses have maintained safety was the first priority at the nuclear fuel facility. Moore said safety was the first subject discussed in each monthly report.

Spence asked Moore about a list of annual management objectives contained in his personnel file. The list mentioned such items as training, contract bidding, manpower, efficiency, union relations and communication with employees.

"Is safety first on that list?" Spence asked.

"Well, they're all major objectives," Moore said.

"But ... where is safety listed?" Spence asked.

"It's ninth," Moore said.

Anti-nuclear protest scheduled

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Anti-nuclear protestors will stage a second public demonstration Saturday at the Kerr-McGee Sequoyah Uranium Enrichment Facility at Gore in conjunction with a national day of protest.

State said not bound by law

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Attorney General Jan Eric Cartwright has ruled state governmental entities aren't bound by a new amendment to the U.S. Civil Rights Act which mandates benefits for pregnant workers.

The opinion, which has the effect of law unless overturned by the courts, was handed down Thursday.

State agencies and most cities already have taken action to expand their group insurance policies to accomodate the new provision, which goes into effect Sunday.

The amendment, passed by Congress last year, declares that women affected by pregnancy, childbirth or related medical conditions "shall be treated the same for all employment-related purposes, including receipt of benefits under fringe benefit programs, as other persons not so affected but similar in their ability or ability to work."

Cartwright's ruling quotes the 10th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which says the powers not delegated to the federal government by the Constitution are reserved to the states.

MODEL CAMP BY BOTH SIDES IS PART OF CIVIL WAR REENACTMENT IN WACO
...other events include 'dying,' talent and knife-throwing contests Saturday and Sunday.

Sunday is final day for Festival of Arts

Oklahoma City's Festival of the Arts will continue through Sunday. Hours are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily and the festival, featuring works of art by more than 200 artists, fabulous food and theater performances, is being held in Civic Center Park in downtown Oklahoma City.

The Festival of the Arts, held annually for the past 13 years, draws large crowds — as many as 300,000 people look, enjoy and buy art works and sample food.

The festival, designed for family entertainment, encourages adults to bring the children. A special youth emporium is set up whereby children, for a minimal cost, may purchase their own art works.

There will be an opening day parade, a print tent for offset and photographic reproductions, a street market on Saturday and Sunday. There's plenty of parking space and free shuttle bus from COTPA garages.

Other sites in Oklahoma City are well worth visiting while at the festival. The Oklahoma Zoo, next to the Omniplex, features animals in natural habitats and is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. There's also a guided safari train.

The National Cowboy Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center, 1700 N.E. 63rd, is open 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. daily. Omniplex, zoo and museum charge nominal entry fees.

A tour of the State Capitol at 23rd and Lincoln and the museum at the Oklahoma Historical Society south of the Capitol in Wiley Post building are interesting sites to visit.

The Moscow Circus at the State Fairgrounds will perform April Friday through Sunday.

For information contact the Oklahoma City Convention and Tourism Center, Three Santa Fe Plaza, Oklahoma City, Okla. 73102 or call (405) 232-2211.

Museum sets summer opening

The Oklahoma Aviation and Space Hall of Fame and Museum will be opened in early summer.

The Kirkpatrick Center, 52nd and North Eastern, Oklahoma City, will house memorabilia pertaining to Oklahoma's early flyers — Wiley Post, Will Rogers, Charles Burrell Tibbs and others — who pioneered aviation not only in Oklahoma but also in Texas, the Southwest and the nation.

Clarence E. Page, president and acting curator of the Aviation Hall of Fame and Museum, has recently found scrapbooks and photographs covering the aviation career of early pilot Charles Burrell Tibbs. The priceless material had been in the possession of another early aviator, awaiting incorporation in a book or museum.

Newspapers on the scene 50 years ago have been preserved and tell the story of 1929 flying activities. Tibbs soloed first in 1915 and articles suggest the incredible lack of technical knowledge needed to fly. Instruction consisted of working controls of a plane on the ground for awhile, then taxiing down the field and a few hours later taking to the air about 15-20 feet. Learning how to bank and make turns came later.

The Canadian Air Force received some flight training near Fort Worth using "Jenneys." World War I was looming on the horizon and pilots trained at Kelley, Ellington and Gerstner Air Fields.

Exhibition flying was popular in those days. Wiley Post, one of the best known pilots in the world, who was killed with Will Rogers in Alaska in 1935, was a crackerjack parachute jumper.

The Oklahoma Aviation and Space Hall of Fame and Museum promises to be one of Oklahoma's major attractions this summer.

Mock Civil War battle to be this weekend

South, North to rise again at Brazos

The Battle of the Brazos, a reenactment of a full-scale Civil War battle, is a favorite attraction of the annual Brazos River Festival at Waco.

The festival will be Saturday and Sunday. The mock battle will be hosted by Company C of the Fourth Texas Infantry, with more than 400 men from regiments throughout Texas taking part. Companies from Louisiana and Illinois are expected to join activities.

Capt. James Austin, Company C of the Fourth Texas Infantry of Hood's Brigade, CSA, is in command. Rebel yells and shots from hundreds of black powder muzzle loaders will explode at the site as Confederates and Yankees re-create the scene that transpired more than 100 years ago.

The battle will be staged each day at 2:30 p.m. Equipment comes from several sources, Austin said. Some uniforms are made by participants while others have been found in Salvation Army and Goodwill shops. The men take great pride in getting uniforms just right.

A group of Waco residents became interested in muzzle loaders a few years ago and organized a club in which they learned how to shoot black powder guns. They soon branched out to reactivate Company C, a company that was formed in Robertson and Limestone counties during the Civil War. Some men who take part in the battle are actual descendants of Confederate soldiers while others are just interested in preserving the past.

Stunts of skilled battle performers amaze audiences at the festival. One has perfected a spectacular fall from the roof of a building which is always a hit.

Besides battle bravados, other events include a tomahawk and knife throwing contest, a "dying" contest and talent contest. Authentic Civil War Camps will be set up on the river banks and battle actors will live there during the festival. A fish fry Saturday night plus a Ladies Dress competition for period attire round out the family style entertainment in Waco.

For information, contact James Austin, (817) 857-4713.

From Hawaii to the snowy mountains

By EARL WILSON
Field Syndicate

NEW YORK — She started out as a Hawaiian hula dancer and shook her way to the top.

Victoria Racimo of Atlantic City and Washington Heights has been cast as Charlton Heston's co-star in "Wind River" and she's supposed to make people forget he was Moses and Ben Hur.

"The two of us are left alone in the snow in the mountains and we fall in love," Victoria says. "When we did the test I kissed him first and when the director yelled 'Cut,' we were still kissing."

It's all make-believe, of course! Victoria, who looks Indian, Filipino and Irish, and is, also stars in upcoming "Prophecy" and has some togetherness with handsome Armand Assante, Dyan Cannon's boy friend.

"I was the lead hula dancer in the Hotel Lexington's Hawaiian Room show while going to Barnard," says brown-haired Victoria.

Time passed and the hula honey got "Prophecy." John Frankenheimer, looking for a girl to play opposite Heston, told her she was too pretty. "Come back and try to look ugly," he told her.

"I dirtied up. I wore dirty dungarees, sloppy sandals and no makeup. Frankenheimer said, 'You're too ugly.' "

But she got the part and now she's soon off to the snows of Wyoming's mountain peaks, where they'll be filming for weeks.

Show

Victoria's the daughter of guitarist Francisco Racimo and Alice Racimo, who was a dancer on the Fred Waring show.

"I'd like to make a movie here at home in New York," she says. "We could shoot it on the subway. It would be an adventure picture."

I rode in a pale yellow 1923 Rolls that was open to the Woody Allen "Manhattan" premiere at the Ziegfeld and also to the opening of Raymond Serra, the Edward G. Robinson lookalike, in "Manny" at the Century — and it was cold!

Woody didn't show for his picture but many stars came — Bette Midler, Roy Scheider, Paul Simon, Dan Ackroyd, Gilda Radner and Bill Murray, Liz Ashley, Madeline Kahn, Maureen Stapleton, Garrett Morris. And I think that was Margaux Hemingway embracing Mary Hemingway. The Beautiful People went back to the Whitney Museum of Modern Art for supper and disco.

SHOW BIZ QUIZ: What personality was played in films by Henry Fonda and Buster Crabbe? Ans. to yesterday's: Charlie Chan was played by Japanese, English, Scandinavian and American actors — never by a Chinese.

TODAY'S BEST LAUGH: A restaurateur complained his place lost so much money he was going broke: "I'd sell the restaurant, but I can't afford to eat out."

WISH I'D SAID THAT: It's a strange time, sighed Rita Dimitri. Jerry Brown and Linda Ronstadt got almost as much publicity being together as Lee Marvin and Michelle Triola got splitting up.

REMEMBERED QUOTE: "The reason more people die of worry than of hard work is that more people worry than work."

EARL'S PEARLS: Phyllis Diller insists she and Raquel Welch have a lot in common: "We both wear size 10 — but hers is in dresses and mine is in shoes."

"It's amazing," notes Steven Kessler, "how many people stay home to watch the Johnny Carson show. Even Johnny Carson stays home a lot to watch it." That's earl, brother.

SEATTLE (AP) — Seven days a week, a 35-year-old Seattle nurse inserts earplugs, dons red pajamas, fluffs her pillow, pulls the covers up under her chin and falls asleep to the hushed wonder of spectators at the Seattle Science Center.

The woman, who prefers to remain unidentified and calls herself JODIE in the experiment, is the sleeping centerpiece of an exhibit called "Dreamstage." She's helping to show that people's brains and bodies buzz with action during sleep.

When the unmarried nurse gets off her nightshift job at a Seattle hospital, she drives to the center and gets wired for the show. A technician pastes 11 electrodes to her head, which are then plugged into a laser device and a sound synthesizer.

When she is deep in sleep, regular ripples of laser light appear on the dark ceiling above the bed. When she dreams, the red, blue, green and yellow lights flash comet-like and irregularly.

During deep sleep, the synthesizer emits an eerie low moan, but when she dreams, the synthesizer comes alive with a samba beat.

"It's a very easy, pleasant way to make $150 (a week)," Jodie said Thursday, just before she dozed off for the day. She said she isn't shy about sleeping in front of crowds.

"My only job is to sleep and that's what I'm doing," she said.

DENVER (AP) — A dispute is brewing over professional golfer LEE TREVINO'S endorsement of Coors beer, whose producer has been accused of unfair practices against its laborers, many of them Mexican-American like Trevino.

TREVINO

A leader in Denver's Mexican-American community charges that Adolph Coors Co. retained Trevino for the beer endorsements to confuse the community. He called on Trevino to cancel his contract with the Golden, Colo., brewer.

But a Trevino spokesman said the golfer's endorsement of the beer is not necessarily an endorsement of the brewer.

"I don't think he (Trevino) even knows what the labor practices are," said ALBERT SALINAS, a business manager of Lee Trevino Enterprises in Dallas. "... Trevino's intentions were not to side with anybody," Salinas said Thursday.

Coors claims it tries to recruit minority members for brewery jobs. But state Sen. DON SANDOVAL of Denver, who criticized the endorsements, said the company has done little to change allegedly discriminatory hiring policies involving minorities.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — His career marked by ups and downs, singer-composer ISSAC HAYES is again headed for superstardom, says the man who is guiding the "Black Moses" of soul music back to the promised land.

"He's going to make a comeback. He'll be another superstar in less than two years," WALLACE E. JOHNSON, Hayes' manager, said Thursday. "I think he could be the second Elvis Presley."

A co-founder of Holiday Inns Inc., Johnson, 77, is chairman of JM Management Co. Inc., with offices in Memphis, Dallas and California. The "M" in the company's name is Dr. JOE MAYES of Dallas.

Hayes, who began his professional recording career with the original Stax Records Inc. and was a disciple of the "Memphis Sound," gained international fame in 1971 for his soundtrack to the movie "Shaft." He won an Academy Award and a Grammy for his effort. Other music awards and several big-selling records followed before his career declined.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — LEE RADZIWILL and San Francisco hotel executive NEWTON COPE plan to marry a week from today, Cope has confirmed.

RADZIWILL

Cope, 57, said Thursday the ceremony here would be the third wedding for both him and the former princess, younger sister of JACQUELINE KENNEDY ONASSIS.

"We plan a very small wedding, with just six or eight close friends, then we will do a church wedding a month or so later, with all of our family and friends," Cope said, adding the couple will reside here "most of the time."

Princess Radziwill, 46, of New York is an interior designer. She married MICHAEL CANFIELD, now deceased, and later Prince STANISLAS RADZIWILL, also deceased, by whom she had two children.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Marvin-style case of ROD and SHERRY STEIGER has moved closer to trial, with a judge ruling that Mrs. Steiger's rights during the relationship could be asserted in her $3 million lawsuit.

Mrs. Steiger, 38, is seeking half of the 54-year-old actor's income during the eight years they lived together — both in and out of wedlock. She has estimated that figure at $600,000 a year.

Steiger says any "Marvin-style" rights were wiped out when the couple married in 1973 and signed a pre-nuptial agreement specifically keeping their property separate and barring her possession of his property.

But in his ruling Thursday, Superior Court Judge ROBERT FAINER said the prenuptial agreement "certainly doesn't destroy or eliminate or waive any 'Marvin' rights."

NEW YORK (AP) — ALLEN KLEIN, who once managed the Beatles and Rolling Stones rock groups and produced the movie, "The Greek Tycoon," is awaiting sentencing after being convicted of filing a fraudulent federal income tax return for 1970.

A U.S. District Court jury deliberated 16 hours before returning the verdict Thursday. Panelists acquitted Klein of five other tax fraud counts. The 13-week trial was Klein's second on the charges, the first having ended in a mistrial in 1977.

Klein, 48, of New York, faces up to a three-year prison term on the conviction when he appears for sentencing June 18 before Judge VINCENT L. BRODERICK.

Charges against Klein stemmed from his alleged failure to report income from the sale of "promotional" recordings of the Beatles and other performers.

Gunfight at San Rafael saloon

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) — In what could be a textbook case of mistaken identity, authorities are piecing together conflicting accounts of an incident outside a saloon in which five law enforcement officers got into a brawl and gunfight — with each other.

Two of the officers were wounded superficially and another needed 11 stitches over an eye, police said Thursday. One of the officers said he was knocked out and doesn't remember a thing.

"Thank God they were all lousy shots," said Police Chief Frank Benaderet.

Benaderet said it has been determined that San Rafael police officer James Cook, 33, and Larry Williams, a federal Treasury Department agent, walked out of a saloon about 2 a.m. Wednesday. After that, the stories get fuzzy.

Cook and Williams told investigators they were looking for a lost wallet — it isn't clear whose — in the dark parking lot when they saw three men. They were David Washington, a policeman from nearby San Mateo; Gary Lee, a military policeman based in San Francisco, and Loren Platt, a state Justice Department agent.

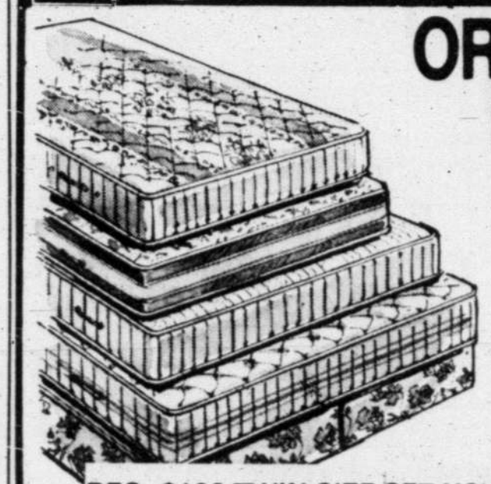

Benaderet said the group of three, which also had just stepped out of a saloon, apparently thought Cook and Williams were crooks stalking parked cars — including theirs.

Cook and Williams apparently thought they were being set upon by the other three, the police chief said.

Benaderet said both groups claimed to have identified themselves, and each claimed the other didn't do so.

"Words were exchanged and a fistfight ensued," Benaderet said.

"Although there are conflicting statements as to the chronology of events, it is apparent that Washington and Cook drew guns and began firing at each other."

Electric Circus unique disco

NEW YORK (AP) — It has three floors for dancing and entertainment, fun house mirrors and flashing lights, even a Carousel and a bright-red Fire Engine. Its circus-like atmosphere is electric.

It is New York City's newest discotheque, the Electric Circus. Owners are banking on its carnival atmosphere to provide competition for an uptown rival, Studio 54.

The new nightspot, at the corner of 15th Street and Fifth Avenue, opened to an invitation-only crowd Wednesday night despite the opposition of neighbors, two prior false openings and the absence of a liquor license.

Even though details — such as the liquor license and what night the disco will be closed — are undecided, maitre d' Patrick McGovern, is optimistic.

"The right people will come," he said as he stood sentinel at the disco's entrance. He turned away some would-be revelers and said goodbyes to opening night-guests.

McGovern allowed that some screening at the front door will ensure admission of "the right people." Studio 54's custom of picking patrons from a waiting line of would-be discomanes has forced Electric Circus "to be selective," he said.

Who will he allow to pay the $12 tariff for dancing from 11 p.m. until "whenever," six nights a week?

Marilyn Perry's films on foreign countries

NEW YORK (AP) — In the film library of the United Nations building, Marilyn Perry matched the transcript of a Security Council meeting on Lebanon with film of the meeting. She interviewed Lebanese Ambassador Ghassan Tueni, borrowed some film on the country from the Lebanese mission, and put together a 28-minute video segment called "International By-Line."

Miss Perry is a social events organizer and hostess, founder of a now-defunct social club called "Scamperry," president of her own public relations firm, and now an independent television producer.

She distributes cassettes she produces to more than 80 TV stations in this country because, she says, "People outside of New York really have an interest in what's going on in the United Nations."

Third World countries are her special interest, and each program starts with a brief history of the country, followed by an interview and film clip.

With her spotty but growing knowledge of technical matters, the encouragement of station managers and the help of U.N. employees, she has turned out about 30 programs over the last two years.

"Normally, if an independent TV producer comes in and wants to interview an ambassador and then peddle his film, we discourage it," says Marvin Bolotsky, Chief of Central Services at the United Nations. "We do not really work with independent television producers, but Marilyn Perry has an outlet."

GM transmissions investigation wanted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Center for Auto Safety wants an investigation by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration of General Motors' automatic transmissions in cars manufactured since 1976.

The center, which Ralph Nader helped found, said Thursday there are major design problems with the transmissions. In Detroit, the automaker denied the charges saying, "There has been no widespread failure of the four million GM automatic 200 transmissions produced thus far."

THE STORM ALARM.
THE BEST WAY TO USE OUR NATIONAL WEATHER SERVICE STATION.

The U.S. Government's weather warning system is now in our city. And the product that supports it—The Storm Alarm—is now at our store. The system is designed to protect you from tornadoes and other storms. Especially at night, when your family is asleep and most vulnerable. This is how it works. Any time a danger threatens, the weather station sends out a special signal. The signal sets off the Storm Alarm. (Just like smoke sets off a smoke alarm.) Your family is warned even if sound asleep. After the alarm goes off, a complete report on the emergency and survival instructions are heard. When the conditions are normal, the Storm Alarm picks up the weather station's continuous, up-to-the-minute forecasts. Superior reception from as far out as 40-50 miles. Works on household current. Built-in back-up battery feature if electricity fails. Unit only 3" x 5" x 1¼". Each year, severe weather injures and kills more and more people in our community. That's why we're one of the few U.S. cities to get a weather transmitter. Take full advantage of it with the Storm Alarm. Get the protection of this low-cost early storm warning system as soon as possible.

Carter advisers expect new price rises

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's advisers are offering little hope that consumers have seen the end to price surges such as the 1 percent increase in March.

"We can still expect months of bad news on the economy," especially on the inflation front, White House press secretary Jody Powell said Thursday after the Labor Department reported the latest rise.

The March increase — fueled by large price rises in food, fuel and housing — followed boosts of 1.2 percent in February and 0.9 percent in January. That translates to an annual inflation rate of 13 percent for the first quarter — the worst quarterly rise in 4½ years and far above the president's 7.4 percent target.

Despite continuing sharp increases in prices, Powell insisted the administration will stick to its anti-inflation policies that include voluntary wage and price guidelines.

Many officials — from Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller to Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability — have warned that the public needs signs soon that inflation is slowing.

Bosworth, in a recent interview with The Associated Press, said, "The next two to three months are crucial."

He explained that "if the price situation doesn't begin to improve," wage earners will abandon hope that government policies can soften the bite of inflation and start demanding ever higher wages that would only worsen the inflationary spiral.

Alfred E. Kahn, the president's anti-inflation chief, told the Congress' Joint Economic Committee on Thursday: "We still have some bad months ahead. We can win this fight if we persevere. There are no other quick fixes around."

Only last month, Kahn said, "I will regard this program as having failed if by sometime like the beginning of the summer, we don't see the inflation rate tapering."

The Commerce Department reported that gasoline rose in March by nearly 4 percent, while food, housing and transportation costs all rose a percentage point or more.

Bosworth said consumer and business activity were not as high during the first quarter of 1979 as at the end of 1978, indicating a slowing of the economy that could translate into a more modest rate of inflation.

Supporting his premise that a "price explosion" could come soon if inflation continues at current rates, Bosworth noted that most workers have been settling for wage increases of [illegible] percent or 8 percent — well below the inflation rate — over the last couple of years and will not do so indefinitely.

Already, President Carter's 7 percent guidelines for wage increases were stretched by the recent Teamsters contract calling for a 9 percent annual increase. The United Rubber Workers, meanwhile, are negotiating for a potentially guideline-busting contract.

Other news Thursday indicated the economy could be further fanned:

—Social Security benefits rose 9.9 percent to offset the impact of inflation on the nation's 35 million recipients. The average benefit will increase $25, to $283 a month, starting in July.

—The House Agriculture Committee voted 29-9 to raise sugar prices late this year and twice more by 1982 in an effort to help U.S. growers withstand cheaper foreign competition. The bill must be approved by the full House Ways and Means Committee and both the House and Senate.

Carter administation officials say the costs would be less than previously assumed, and regulation will pay off with increased fuel economy and cleaner air.

Air Force jet crashes in England

LEALHOLM, England (AP) — As horrified school children watched from their windows, a flaming A U.S. Air Force reconnaissance jet on a low-level training flight crashed in this north England village today, narrowly missing the school and houses. Both crewmen died.

A witness said the pilot apparently steered into an open area at the last minute. Police recovered the bodies of the two crewmen, whose names were withheld pending notification of relatives. No local residents were injured.

The jet was based at Alconbury in east England.

Witnesses said the Phantom RF-4 caught fire before crashing, and pupils saw it pass their classroom windows about 30 yards away. Fifty-five children were in school at the time.

"The children gasped and looked out the window," said headmistress Audrey Rayment. "The plane swooped past with flames and smoke pouring from it. Then we heard the sickening bang. We just prayed it had not smashed into the row of houses behind us."

The plane hit in a woman's garden and plowed along for hundreds of yards, spreading blazing debris. It smashed through stone walls and pasture hedges, killing a number of sheep before coming to rest in a farmyard.

Grow bouquets, shade flowers

By ALLAN and SHEILA SWENSON
NEA Garden Columnists

Bouquets are delightful additions to arrangements for table, mantle, porch or patio. Even if you live in an apartment with only room for a window box or balcony planter, you can enjoy the blooming beauty of flowers.

Talking with new and veteran gardeners alike this year, hundreds asked where they could get a reliable checklist of the best flowers to grow in particular locations and for specific purposes. Some wanted flowers for cutting for bouquets and arrangements. Others wanted names of the best for moist locations.

As we wrote, "Plan Your Own Landscape," our latest book, it seemed logical to provide lists of these plants as ready reference for everyone. Here are partial lists from that book.

For the best cutting flowers for bouquets: achillea, anthemis, aster, calendula, celosia, columbine, cornflower, cynoglossum, delphinjum, forget-me-not, gaillardia, gloriosa daisies, heuchera, iris, larkspur, marigold, pansy, petunia, pyrethrum, rose, shasta daisy, sweet sultan, verbena, wallflower and zinnia.

If you have a problem moist area, these plants thrive where others won't: astilbe, caladium, ferns, forget-me-not, foxglove, impatiens, lily of the valley, nicotiana, polyanthus, sweet violet, vinca and viola.

SHADE FLOWERS

Shady spots puzzle many people, especially those who want to enjoy more color in their landscape scene. Large trees often thwart lawns and your plans for blooming beauty around your outdoor living rooms.

Visiting veteran landscape gardeners this year, we harvested hints to help you make those shady spots sparkle more vibrantly. Many of these tips and secrets are included in our latest book mentioned above.

With thanks to all those who helped with that book, here's how you can brighten your own home grounds.

Gardening

Many flowers actually prefer shadier locations. Coleus, with its brightly — and often pastel-colored — variegated leaves is one solution. Caladiums, which grow quickly from bulbs, are another answer. For spring beauty, you can plant a variety of bulbs from daffodils to crocus in a naturalized setting beneath trees or in beds and borders, if you wish.

For summer when trees are in full leaf, however, those shady spots can be a problem. Try these plants — some perennials, others annuals — to give new sparkle to shaded spots:

Ageratum, anchusa, astilbe, azalea, begonia, bleeding heart, Boston ivy, caladium, coleus, columbine, coral bells, ferns, forget- me-not, foxglove, impatiens, lily of the valley, lobelia, mock orange, nemophila, nicotiana, pachysandra, pansy, periwinkle, plumbago, polyanthus, sweet violet, torenia, vinca, viola.

All about roses

By SUSAN GILBERT
Society of American Florists

Ranking right up there with football and pizza in the list of American favorites is an aromatic beauty adored by lovers, exalted by poets and even cultivated by our first president. It's none other than the rose.

According to florists across the country Americans prefer roses, be they long-stemmed hybrids or the miniature varieties, to any other flowers. In fact, there is a bill before Congress now to make the rose our national flower.

It's no wonder, then, that 1979 has been designated "The Year of the Rose," to celebrate the popularity of this long-standing symbol of love and friendship.

Roses are true natives of this land. Fossils found in rock formations in Colorado and Oregon are proof that wild roses were growing there 40 million years ago. Christopher Columbus was quick to associate the rose with America. On Oct. 11, 1492, he wrote in his ship's log that his sailors had sighted and picked up a rose bush floating in the sea, a sure sign that land was near.

With the rose being so thoroughly entangled in America's roots, it is a tidy coincidence that our first president was also our first rose breeder. George Washington laid out his own gardens at Mount Vernon and filled them with his own selection of roses. He developed a pale pink hybrid and named it 'Martha Washington."

Ask Doc Gard'ner

Redbud roots won't damage foundation

By NEIL SPERRY

DEAR DOC: We've just bought a home where two redbud trees are growing about 10 feet out from the house. Will their roots hurt the foundation?

RX: No. Redbuds aren't known for their swollen surface roots, and, even if they are, they wouldn't do any damage that far away.

DEAR DOC: When do you decide it's time to remove a loquat that was badly hurt by the winter weather?

RX: If it hasn't put out any substantial new growth yet this spring you can probably remove it now. The winter of 1978-79 will long be remembered by Texas gardeners. Loquats are just part of the problem.

DEAR DOC: We planted a new bermudagrass lawn three weeks ago, and, so far, it's more weeds than bermuda. How soon can we use a weed killer?

RX: Most weed killers warn that you should wait 10 or more weeks before applying the chemicals, since the new grass is especially tender. I'd suggest low mowing, say at ¾ of an inch. It won't hurt the bermuda, and you'll be amazed at how few weeds will survive sustained low mowing. You may not even need to spray when the time comes!

DEAR DOC: We found dozens of white grub worms in our flower beds last weekend when we tilled them up. Is there a good control for them this time of the year?

RX: Really, there's no real reason to worry about them now. They've done 98 percent of their damage for this season, and they're getting ready to pupate, prior to emerging as adult June bugs. You do want to mark your calendar, though, to treat for the next generation in early August. Apply diazinon granules at that time and water them in heavily so they'll penetrate deep into the soil.

DEAR DOC: What's the secret for growing lilacs here? Ours just don't look as good or bloom as well as they used to in Missouri.

RX: You really have a challenge. It's the summertime heat that discourages lilacs in North Texas. Plant them where they'll receive afternoon shade, and spray regularly for powdery mildew (benomyl, karathane or Acti-dione PM) to keep them vigorous.

Doc Gard'ner welcomes your questions. Drop him a card in care of the Wichita Falls Times and watch here for a speedy reply!

Gardeners hoe away worries

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — A dose of old-fashioned gardening is one of the best medicines you can take if you caught cabin fever during the past winter, advises Robin Powers, a psychological counselor in the University of Iowa Counseling Service.

Dr. Powers rates as its top attraction the potential of gardening to be an emotional safety valve.

"But it also can make you better nourished, more physically fit, richer and even smarter as you learn how to outwit gardeners' enemies, from drought to potato bugs," she says.

She sees the following emotional pluses in getting a garden plot into shape, sowing seeds, warring on weeds and finally harvesting your very own tomatoes, peas and beans, picked at their peak of ripeness and freshness.

—The more your job keeps you cooped up indoors, the more likely you are to need the elbow room of an outdoor interest such as gardening. If you work in an office or factory amidst clicking typewriters or noisy machinery, an hour or two in the solitude and quiet of your garden plot should renew your ability to cope again with close quarters and work pressure.

—You get a chance to slow down and work at your own pace as your own boss in a garden. This, too, helps you unwind.

—There's no substitute for the healing and comfort of getting back to the rhythms of nature. The seasons have real meaning as you plant and cultivate and harvest food instead of opening cans and packages the year around.

—Pulling up carrots or beets or whatever you've grown from seed for use on your own table gives the feeling of accomplishment which we all crave. On many jobs today, you never get to see any "flesh-and-blood" results from your 9 to 5 routine. This sense of achievement will also keep you from feeling guilty about wasting your leisure time.

—You tend to get overly introspective and addicted to worry when housebound in winter. Gardening will get you outside yourself by giving you something to look forward to. Then your worries will have shrunk when you get back to them.

—Gardening is neighborly. If you're a greenhorn, choose someone known to have a green thumb as your mentor, and you may have made a friend for life. Ask around and you'll find someone handy with a solution for problems ranging from "heavy" soil to the best time to plant string beans.

"Hence your garden can become as good a neighborhood icebreaker for you as small children are," Dr. Powers points out. "It's easy to visit with neighbors of all ages and economic backgrounds when you're sharing such a garden pointer as the fact that planting marigolds next to tomatoes will control bugs on the latter."

And you'll seldom feel happier with yourself than when you take fresh lettuce or cucumbers or a watermelon to a shut-in or friends who haven't found time to put in a garden, the University of Iowa counselor predicts.

"Besides all its emotional bonuses, gardening can make a real dent in your grocery bill if you don't go overboard on buying a lot of equipment you don't really need," she says.

Know proper pruning

A basic requirement of good garden design is proper pruning. Unfortunately, some people think that pruning is a mystery best left to professionals. But the truth is that pruning is as uncomplicated as rearranging the funriture in a room.

You can snip a branch as confidently as you can move a lamp. All you have to do is understand what pruning is all about.

Pruning is merely the removal of a part of the plant for the benefit of the whole plant. It accomplishes three things: directs the growth of the plant, improves its health and increases its production.

This can be an esthetic benefit but it is also a practical one. A lopsided tree can be brought into balance to prevent its uneven weight from breaking it.

You can also prune to keep a tree small, have it grow slim and taller or open it up by thinning it out.

Pruning, of course, can rejuvenate an old, sparse shrub or tree. Opening up the inside of the tree allows more air to circulate and more sun to penetrate to the innermost leaves. With the exception of spraying, this is the best possible way to prevent disease. Pruning can also keep a plant healthy by correcting or repairing damage. Removing a dead branch can keep the infection from spreading to healthy wood.

If you prune a tree correctly, its crop will improve. For example, the more branches an apple has, the greater the number of apples.

Reduce the number of branches.

Humidity important to indoor gardens

Indoor gardeners are a diverse group ranging from the kindergarten enthusiast with his first sprouting bean seed to the retired professional who's mastered the art of orchid hybridization.

You are an indoor gardener even if you possess only one living plant. Your "garden" may be the kitchen windowsill, a fluorescent-lighted bookcase, or even your place of employment where you combine gardening with your coffee break.

Indoor gardeners do not "grow" plants — the plants grow themselves. The responsibility of the indoor gardener is to provide the right environment in which a plant can flourish.

One of the most important things to consider is the available light. Reputable nurseries and plant shops can help you make an educated selection once you describe the exposure of your indoor garden site and the type of light is gets — ranging from very low light to direct sun.

A philodendron can do well in very low, low or moderate light, English ivy and jasmine need bright light and orchids require direct sunlight.

Also, be sure to think about humidity — the first places are kitchens and bathrooms with their steam and running water. But remember that kitchens also have ovens and ranges that give off excessive heat and use up the moisture. but misting the air can replace moisture lost through heating. But cactus, and other plants that are similar, like dry locations.

When you're trying to find the place for your plant, apply the same principals you would use in placing furniture or works of art. What you are doing, in effect, is "interior horticultural design."

Bluebelles honor mothers at banquet

Mrs. Pat Looney, executive director, announced that Kelly Collier, Janet Desborough and Mary Jo Overdorff were recipients of Bluebelle scholarships.

Ms. Collier has been in Bluebells for four years and is a student at Rider High School. She is the daughter of Lt. Col. Clifton Collier and Mrs. Barbara Wylie. She plans to attend Texas Christian University.

Ms. Desborough, daughter of Mrs. Shirley Desborough, is also a four-year member of Bluebelles and is a senior at Rider High School. She plans to attend Midwestern State University.

Ms. Overdorff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Overdorff, is a senior at Hirschi High School and has been in Bluebelles for four years. She plans to attend the MSU school of nursing.

Total service hours given by these three volunteers is 2,482.

Bricelle Hendrix, Hirschi, gave the invocation and a special presentation was made to Mrs. Fred Downend, former Bluebelle, and presently youth volunteer adviser, who was a tornado victim.

Special guests in addition to the mothers, were Mrs. Cloy Jackson, activity director at Monterrey Manor Nursing Home; Mrs. Louise Bahme, honorary Bluebelle, and Ms. Jo Lynne Brock, assistant to the executive director.

Nutrition for plants

Plants are living things and adequate nourishment is just as important to their well-being as regular watering. Whether they're grown outdoors or indoors, all plants need a balanced diet of three basic elements — nitrogen, phosphates (phosphorus), and postash (potassium). All three can be found in fertilizers available at your local garden center.

Fertilizers can be in the form of water soluble pellets, powders, liquids or dry tablets and sticks which can be inserted directly into the soil.

With a good nutritional diet, your house plants will grow up to produce glorious flowers and foliage — which means you'll also have to protect them from a whole host of unwelcome admirers.

Just about the best pest protective device is a regular spray program with a good all-around pesticide which discourages aphids, thrips, whiteflies and red spider mites from lavishing too much attention on your houseplants.

California teacher's deduction rejected

TION REJECTED — The question of what educational expenses are deductible has led to a setback for a California business teacher.

The U.S. Tax Court rejected the claimed deductions of Juanita F. Ardavany for the costs of attending law school.

A business instructor at Southwest Community College in Los Angeles, she had been encouraged to obtain her law degree in order to qualify to teach business law. After receiving her degree, she took and passed the state bar exam as a means of proving her ability.

Ms. Ardavany sought a deduction for the costs of law school under the law that allows deductions for education that improves or maintains a person's ability to do a job.

But the law doesn't allow deductions if the education qualifies an individual for some other job and that's what happened in this case, the court ruled, because she became qualified to practice law.

While she attended law school in order to keep her teaching position, her intent doesn't matter and the expense cannot be deducted, ruled Judge Howard A. Dawson.

To offer information on any small, individual aid that can be given, the following column will run daily in the Wichita Falls Times and Record News family pages.)

● Marjorie Booker, district supervisor in charge of the Texas Rehabilitation Commission office at 1000 Brook in Wichita Falls, reports that a client whom the commission placed in employment needs some additional help in repair of his wheelchair, braces and crutches. Call 322-7887.

● The Rev. W. C. Harting, pastor of St. Paul Lutheran Church, where three pickup truck loads of clothing, food and supplies were received from four Lutheran congregations in Dallas, said the clothes have been sorted to size and placed in the church basement.

"Those who suffered loss are welcome to come by between the hours of 8 a.m.-noon and 1-5 p.m. at the church, 11th and Holiday.

"In addition to clothing there also are food, pots and pans, bedding and a few items of furniture," Harting said.

The church and Our Redeemer Lutheran Church of Wichita Falls, both affiliated with the Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, also are administering cash assistance sent from the Dallas congregations, as well as the Synod's district, Harting said.

Additional clothing has arrived from Houston, Cypress, Dallas, Little Rock, Ark., and Round Rock, Texas. "From phone calls we have received more clothing and a variety of items are coming in; we are discouraging their sending more clothing because it is in plentiful supply," he said.

Clothing is available in sizes from infants to adults.

● Sandwiches are available at St. Mark's Methodist Church, 4319 McNiel, furnished by Floral Heights United Methodist Church, 2214 10th. Also at Floral Heights Scout Hut across from the church there is clothing, including work clothes, baby diapers and children's clothes, bedding, linens and towels.

● Mrs. John Barker, volunteer services chairman for the American Red Cross, lists two primary needs.

"One of our big needs is for people to help us prepare food that is being distributed in vans by the Red Cross throughout the city, like sandwiches, coffee and this kind of thing.

Another need is skilled clerical help, typists mainly. "We need to see them here at the Red Cross Volunteer Office in the Naval Reserve Building at the corner of Fifth and Denver," she said.

● Peggy Darter, volunteer coordinator for Community Council Voluntary Action Center, said: "We need volunteers willing to transport and assist elderly women with grocery shopping. This need has arisen because the Red Cross car that was previously used in this work is now being used in diaster assistance. Someone or a group with a station wagon would be wonderful, as we could arrange for several from the same neighborhood to go at the same time. One morning per week would be sufficient."

Dear Abby

This reader refuses to accept mediocrity

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Chicago Tribune

DEAR ABBY: STAN, who complained a lot in restaurants, may have gone overboard but he had the right idea. He had a habit of sending back food that was either undercooked, overcooked, cold, smelled "funny" or wasn't what he ordered. And if the service was poor he left no tip and complained to the management.

Stan also carried a little battery operated fan to blow smoke back into the faces of people who smoked while he was eating.

With the prices one has to pay in restaurants today, we should demand top quality food and first-class service. It is our willingness to accept mediocrity that makes for sloppy service, bad food and shoddy merchandise in general.

As for Stan's little fan, he should be congratulated for having the courage to give those inconsiderate boors a taste of their own pollution.

You probably think I'm just another cheap, demanding, hard-to-please klutz like Stan, but I'm not. I'm one of the millions of weak, gutless wonders of the world who gets ignored, pushed around and walked over while continuing to overtip for second-rate service because I never had the guts not to. — NO GUTS IN FARMINGTON

DE got no guts. So you may be a gutsier klutz than you think you are.

DEAR ABBY: Do you believe that only the good die young? — RUPERT IN TORONTO

DEAR RUPERT: Not necessarily. I'm more inclined to believe that only the YOUNG die GOOD!

DEAR ABBY: A friend recently invited us to her home for a salad dinner.

Every guest was asked to bring a salad as well as a going-away gift for a mutual friend who was moving.

When we arrived, there were no less than 75 people standing around. There was no place to sit. The guests were trying to juggle their plates in one hand and coffee cups in the other.

I am of the opinion that when you invite people to dinner you should provide them with a comfortable place to eat.

This was a building contractor's home. Maybe they just wanted to show it off to as many people as possible. Or perhaps they wanted to round up as many gifts as they could.

I've had it. The next time they invite us, I'll say, "Thanks, but no thanks." — PASADENA, TEX.

DEAR PASADENA: How does that little ditty go? "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me."

Are you the lonely face in the crowd? Friends make you a winner, and Abby tells you how to win them in her booklet, "How To Be Popular; You're Never Too Young or Too Old." Send $1 with a long, self-addressed, stamped (28 cents) envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Literary Club hears talk

Mrs. J. C. Porter presided and reports were made by various officers.

Mrs. B. L. Bryans gave the review of "The Thorn Birds" By Colleen McCullough, which, the reviewer said, "spans three generations and an infinite range of human emotions."

A covered dish luncheon was served.

Whooper hatched in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A rare whooping crane chick was hatched Thursday at the San Antonio Zoo from one of three eggs being tended by bantam jungle fowl hens acting as foster mothers.

The chick is "doing fine," said David McKelvey, senior aviculturist at the zoo. It is not yet possible to determine the sex of the chick, he said.

Ektu, mate of the late Crip, produced eight eggs last month, five of which were fertile. Crip died last month after living three decades in captivity.

One chick died last week after poking its beak through its shell. Another egg was sent to the Patuxent Wildlife Research Center in Maryland for incubation.

Midwestern flooding threatens wheat crop

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
Associated Press Writer

Rising Red River floodwaters, surging toward an expected crest today, churned along a 150-mile front of prime prairie farmland from Grand Forks, N.D. to Winnipeg, Manitoba, threatening the area's important wheat crop.

Officials in Winnipeg said by early today some 2,650 people in the Red River Valley notified the Canadian government of their evacuation plans. The valley, south of Winnipeg, has a population of between 12,000 and 15,000.

National Guard helicopters planned to continue their flights today over the upper Red River Valley, the crews scanning vast flooded areas in search of marooned farm families. "There was water as far as you could see going north into Canada," one helicopter pilot said after a flight Thursday.

"Our chopper pilots reported a couple of farm families who said they hadn't seen anybody in four days and appreciated the food brought in," Lt. Col. Adrian Beltrand said Thursday.

In East Grand Forks, Minn., and its sister community, Grand Forks, N.D., the Red River dropped slightly overnight to 48.97 feet from a high of 49.09 feet. An estimated 2,000 people remain away from their homes in the beleaguered communities, civil defense officials said.

The National Weather Service stuck to its predictions that the river would crest at 49.5 feet tonight, but Ray Sandford of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said, "I think the crest has been here."

The sun was shining in the valley today for the first time this week.

"It brightens the outlook on life. We've got enough problems fighting the flood without it being dreary outside," said James Bushaw, city councilman in Oslo, Minn., a small town surrounded by water about 20 miles north of Grand Forks.

A hot, steady sun baked South Florida Thursday as residents of the wealthy Gold Coast area north of Miami tried to dry out following Wednesday's record rainfall of more than 16 inches in a 24-hour period.

"It's like a big swimming pool here and it's impossible," said Mayor Lenny Kimmel of North Lauderdale, Fla. "The kids are out of school and they're swimming along with the fish and the snakes and the alligators."

In Hollywood, two children drowned Thursday at a flooded construction site where they were playing in a lake created by the heavy rains. Silva Louis, 8, drowned when he tried to help Dwanna Gordon, 4, who had slipped into a 12-foot hole. The children were the sixth and seventh reported victims of the Wednesday storm.

In Broward County, hardest hit by the deluge, Lew Watson of the Agricultural Extension Service said farm, nursery and livestock business may have been set back by as much as $20 million.

Wichitan works job as manager behind scenes

The young man spends hours every day washing towels, handing out equipment and helping coaches with the daily workout routine.

Like a screen writer for a motion picture, the manager receives little recognition for his work behind the scenes. And for Texas Tech track manager Steve Beck, the job has been even more difficult.

As a senior at Wichita Falls Rider, Beck turned in a 4:20.9 mile at the first meet of the season and established himself as one of the promising distance runners in the state.

STEVE BECK
...Tech manager

One week later, Beck injured his knee and was out for the rest of the season. During the summer he started his comeback in running, but the knee locked up and surgery had to be performed. His running days were over.

As Tech's track manager for the past four years, Beck, known to the Red Raider thinclads as "Rook," has had difficulty in watching track meets.

"It hurts," he said. "At times I look out at the races and wish it was me on the starting line. But I can't do anything about it. I just have to face reality."

Despite the disappointment in not being able to compete, the role as manager has done a great deal for Beck.

"The responsibilities of being a manager have helped me mature as a person," Beck said. "Also by being on both sides as manager and runner, I got to see everything from two points of view."

After graduation this summer, Beck will take his managerial experience and his long sports history with him and search for a job. At the present he wishes to either become a manager of a sporting goods store or work as a program director at the YMCA.

"Wherever I go, I always want to be connected with sports," Beck said. "Sports have been my whole life. I've always had a closet full of tennis shoes, T-shirts and jocks."

Wherever Beck ends up in the sports world, he can always look back on his college days with fond memories.

"I've really been lucky," Beck said. "I lettered four years, I've received a scholarship, and I've been able to attend some of the best track meets in the country. It makes me proud to think that I did all this. And now I even get an article about me in the paper."

Coaching a success for young volunteers

By JEFF MILAM
Staff Sports Writer

Kevin Herrmann and Don Hall are not your basic volunteer coaches.

Although they give of their free time, what makes them more notable is their age and the fact that success has somehow managed to follow them throughout their three years of coaching.

Herrmann, 22, and Hall, 21, decided back in 1976-77 to go together and take over a coachless YMCA Pee Wee basketball team. The team won second at the regional tournament to qualify for state, but because of financial problems stayed home.

The next season, the two former Notre Dame High School cagers decided to take on both a Pee Wee and Midget team. The Pee Wees went undefeated to win city and were consolation champs at regional. The Midgets? Well, it was a different story.

Last year, taking on just a Midget team which was composed mostly of graduating Pee Wees and a few holdovers from the previous season's Midgets, the team was second in city, won consolation in regional and qualified for state. Again, because of lack of finances, the youngsters shunned the trip.

Stay Fit
...see page 4C

Both Herrmann and Hall credit their success, as well as the team's, to a case of "coachable kids."

"The group of kids we work with are well-disciplined," Herrmann said. "They listen to what we have to say. We've had some pretty talented kids playing for us, but we've never had five individuals in any year. It's been a team effort."

Hall said the fact the kids, all from the Notre Dame district, have grown up together, has created no pressure from the parents.

"They (parents) are a great help," he added. "A lot of them are close friends and not strangers to one another. I'm sure this has to help our situation."

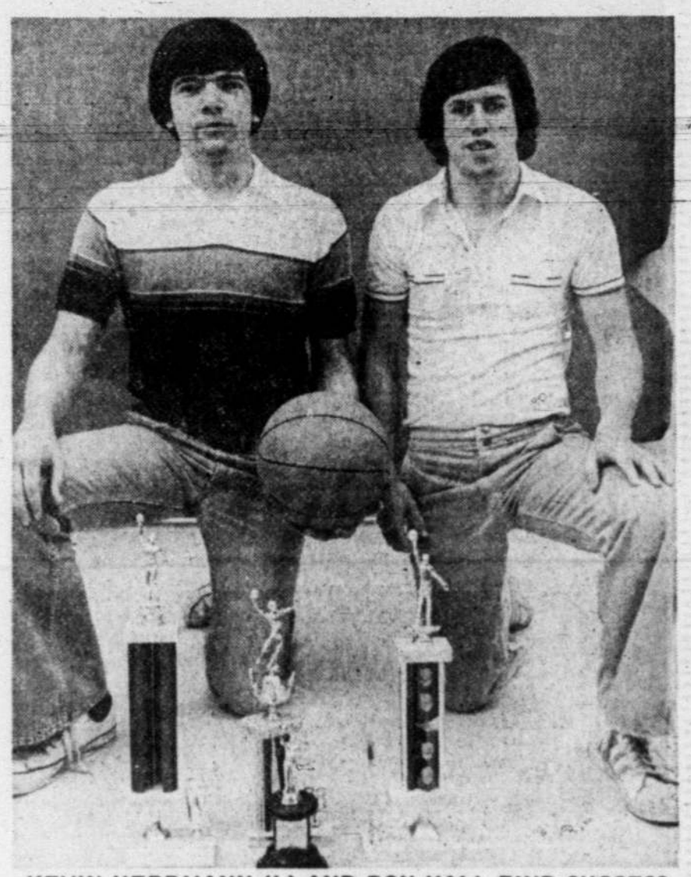

As for objectives, Herrmann says his goal is "to instill in the kids that we're out to have fun and learn the game of basketball. If we win, that's great, and if not, then we can learn from our mistakes and losses."

Hall added, "I like working with kids. When they go out and win, it's an accomplishment that the time you've put in has been worthwhile. I'm not saying it isn't when you lose, but winning is a happy ending."

Both decline to take much credit for their team's success, with Hall saying, "It wasn't all our doing. It would be stupid to think that. We've had some talent and when we started off this year, we didn't expect to do as well as we did. It just sort of blended together."

Whether or not their success story will continue another year depends on the kids. Most will be moving up into junior high, where an option of playing there or for the YMCA rests. They cannot do both.

Either way makes no difference to Herrmann and Hall. If the team is there, they will be, too.

Reporters pull their own strategy

In the beginning, there was baseball.

But man, realizing he had no way to have boxscores the next morning, created the baseball reporter.

And it was good.

Then the Texas Rangers came along, closing their doors to the baseball reporter. This created a stir throughout the world of baseball (except in Oakland where only 653 people even read the boxscores).

"That's not fair," shouted the reporters (a pretty clever way of putting it – "not fair", heh heh), but the Rangers would not bend.

And the baseball reporter was shut out (so to speak, heh heh), and it looked like nobody would live happily ever after.

But looks can be deceiving.

And baseball reporters can be clever (heh heh). And once again, man has a chance to read the boxscore the next morning.

What did the baseball reporter do that was so clever?

He conducted his interviews about the game before the contest instead of after.

One more time, it is good.

And in some ways, it is better.

Instead of the run-of-the-mill "Well, Loel, I was really chunkin' 'em in there today," we'll get the rest of the story, whether it happened or not.

If, for example, Doyle Alexander should pitch a no-hitter (heh heh), the reporter has his quotes ready for print by the seventh inning.

If he doesn't, well, the reporter is at least prepared whenever it happens.

"Well, Loel, I started thinking about it in the third inning. The — (fill in the team) have trouble with the fast ball, and mine was really moving tonight.

It's perfect. When the Rangers are winning, and Doyle does well, the reporter slips in the pre-game 'these guys are the greatest' quotes.

But what's better, he has an alternate set of "bad-mouthin" utterances ready for the June swoon, when things aren't going so well.

"I would have won that game if Bump hadn't muffed that simple grounder. And did you see the way Sundberg swung at that last pitch? I guarantee you, I'm not going to be on this team next year."

A triple-play? "Yeah, Loel," catcher Jim Sundberg said, "I never thought we'd pull that one off. When the line drive went into the corner, it didn't look like Johnny would get to it. Apparently, the Twins were thinking the same thing. His throw to second was on the dot, and I guess we were just lucky Smalley didn't touch the plate trying to score from third.

"I chased him into the dugout, and if Buddy hadn't helped me corner him finally in centerfield, we probably never would have gotten him out."

"I knew eet was out the meenute I heet eet," Bert Campaneris said of his 331-foot blast which hit the top of the wall, teetered a minute on the fence and dropped for a home run.

"Yeah, I've always been a good clutch hitter; I like it with men on base. I knew I had to bring 'em in," commented Rich Zisk of his infield single which scored Oliver from third when Nettles tripped trying to get the routine grounder out of his glove.

Defense saves Hawks, Sixers

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

Defense was the difference as the no-name Atlanta Hawks and the big-name Philadelphia 76ers stayed alive in the National Basketball Association playoffs.

Both clubs were one loss away from elimination prior to Thursday night's games, but both postponed their summer vacations with lopsided victories in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Steve Hawes and Eddie Johnson scored 12 points apiece in the second half as the scrappy Hawks beat the defending champion Washington Bullets 104-86 to even their best-of-seven series at three victories apiece. The deciding game will be played Sunday in Landover, Md.

"The most important thing in the game was defense," said Hawks Coach Hubie Brown. "It was absolutely great."

Meanwhile, at San Antonio, Julius Erving was shifted to guard as Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham juggled his lineup to give muscleman Darryl Dawkins a start at center. The Doctor responded with 32 points, 24 of them in the second half, as the 76ers routed the Spurs 120-97.

The Sixers, who now trail 3-2 in the series, will attempt to draw even on their home court Sunday.

"Our defense was the key," said Sixers Coach Billy Cunningham. "They missed some good shots, but it had a lot to do with our defense."

In the Western Conference semifinals, the Phoenix Suns will attempt to close out their series with a victory over the Kansas City Kings tonight at Phoenix in a nationally televised game.

The Suns took a 3-1 lead in that series with a 108-94 victory at Kansas City Wednesday night, a game in which the Kings shot just 33 percent from the field.

The winner of that series will take on the Seattle SuperSonics, who eliminated the Los Angeles Lakers 4-1 in the other West semifinal.

Atlanta went ahead to stay on a 12-foot jumper by Johnson that made it 35-33 midway through the second period. Hawes poured in 10 points during the third quarter and Johnson got 10 points in the final period as the Hawks pulled away from Washington.

Johnson and John Drew scored 22 points each for Atlanta and Hawes finished with 14 points and 14 rebounds. Washington's Elvin Hayes led all scorers with 24 points.

"It was the most intense game we've had in the series," said Bullets Coach Dick Motta. "I don't think there could have been any more intensity on either side."

The Hawks feel they can knock off the defending champs on Sunday.

"They feel the pressure now," said Atlanta reserve guard Terry Furlow. "They didn't think they'd feel this much pressure from the Atlanta Hawks. Right now, I like where we're sitting."

Motta, asked his plans for Sunday's series finale, said he wanted "to make sure no one misses the bus (back to Washington). We don't want any prisoners taken."

While Erving led Philadelphia's offense, the Sixers got a big boost on the defensive end from guard Maurice Cheeks, who limited NBA scoring champion George Gervin to four points over the first three periods and 13 overall.

"The ball just wouldn't fall for me, that's all," said Gervin. "There will be days like this. We got a bad effort from all of us."

San Antonio Coach Doug Moe agreed.

"It is one of those nights you like to forget about," said Moe. "We just played so bad. We never gave ourselves a chance to get in the game. The effort was good, but we were just so bad."

Indy feud may linger

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The feud between the U.S. Auto Club and Championship Auto Racing Teams may remain unsettled until the brink of qualifications for the Indianapolis 500 race.

CART filed suit in U.S. District Court Thursday, seeking an order to force USAC to accept entries of six dissident racing teams for the race, and to allow them to participate fully in the May 27 classic and the qualifying events leading up to it.

Judge James Nowland has tentatively scheduled a hearing on the request for next Thursday, a scant two days before start of practice, scheduled to begin May 5. Formal qualifications are scheduled to begin the following weekend.

The suit came about because six CART teams, including that of the dissident organization's president, Pat Patrick, were disqualified last week by USAC, which said they were not in good standing. The annual Indianapolis 500 is sanctioned by USAC.

"What we are seeking is not to stop the Indianapolis 500, but to prohibit Indianapolis Motor Speedway and the United States Auto Club from excluding our members from participating in it," said CART attorney John W. Frasco.

Frasco said that even if the six CART teams are eventually allowed to qualify for the May 27 race, other teams would have an unfair competitive advantage if the CART teams weren't allowed full practice time.

USAC attorney Henry G. Ryder, who was at the court clerk's office when the suit was filed, said he would support the move for a quick hearing in the case.

"They are entitled on a request for a preliminary injunction," Ryder said. "We are not going to delay for the sake of delay. My next move is to defend this action on behalf of USAC."

The suit said USAC's refusal to accept the six CART entries, representing 19 cars, was designed to destroy CART and to split the rival organization by allowing some of its members to race but not others.

Frasco also argued that if the teams are unable to participate in the race, they will forfeit vast sums of money used to prepare for the event, as well as their share of the race's million-dollar purse and the amounts payable under sponsorship agreements.

The six rejected teams include Patrick Racing, Chaparral Racing, Penske Racing, Team McLaren, Fletcher Racing and All American Racers, Inc.

The suit also was filed on behalf of the eight drivers affiliated with the CART teams. The drivers include three-time Indy 500 winner Al Unser, whose picture is displayed on the tickets for this year's Indy race; two-time winners Bobby Unser and Johnny Rutherford, and Gordon Johncock, who has won one Indianapolis race. The other drivers participating in the suit are Mike Mosley, Rick Mears, Steve Krisiloff and Wally Dallenbach.

The drivers are not barred personally from participating in the race, but the decision last week by USAC eliminated the cars they were to drive.

Four tourneys dot area golf schedule

By TOM SELTZER
Staff Sports Writer

Area golfers will have their choice of tournaments as the 1979 season enters its second week with tournaments at Sheppard, Jacksboro, Knox City and Throckmorton.

Bill Dollar, Sammy Milam, Roy Reid and Robert Cates already have a victory under their belts by notching the Henrietta Four-Man Scramble title, the season opener, last week at Clay County Country Club. But many golfers will be dusting off their sticks for the first time Saturday at one of the four locations.

The second annual Sheppard Air Force Base Partnership will have a strong field with Bill Holstead and B.H. Alexander back to defend their title. The highly-touted team of Bob and Gary Henderson are the top challengers, with the Sheppard team of Link Pauley-Gil Ek and the city team of Todd Finkler-Jim Simpson also among the favorites.

The Sheppard course is recovering rapidly from a tough winter and will be in good shape. But because of a few bare spots, tournament director E.C. Black and his associates have decided to play winter rules so golfers will have an easier time on the demanding course.

There will be four flights, and golfers will be flighted, based on past records before the 36-hole tournament starts. Championship flight players will tee off from the blue markers, playing a 7074-yard course and other flights will play the course 400 yards shorter.

Plenty of spots are still available, and entries will be accepted through Friday evening. A buffet is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Saturday.

The popular Jacksboro Partnership has a full field again, with the 72nd team signing up last Sunday, according to club pro James Gammon.

Teams will qualify through Friday for places in four flights and the 36-hole event will begin Saturday.

Buddy Grisham-John Butler have the low qualifying round of 67. Edward Ball and Richard Osborn of Wichita Falls are also among the favorites. The course is reported to be in good shape.

Knox City is also hosting a partnership at the 6178-yard, par 71 course. About 30 teams have entered the 36-hole event, but more entries are needed, according to club president Kenneth Crownover.

The teams entered hail from a wide area including Vernon, Lubbock, Munday and Olney.

Cut back media luxuries, bring back 'real' umpires

By WICK TEMPLE
AP Sports Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — The umpires' strike has gone on long enough. Baseball is being hurt by a cheap image and by bad calls from well-meaning but not-quite-professional substitute umps.

The problem is not money. Baseball drew over 40 million people last year. A few teams are in financial trouble, but most are doing well. What the umpires are asking would cost each team about $20,000 a year.

The umpires are getting the heat from owners who want to present a tough front for upcoming negotiations with the players' union. These negotiations could cost them plenty. Marvin Miller and his players' association are tipping the balance of power in the game and a lot of baseball people are understandably worried.

The owners have had their way for so long that they tend to be very stubborn. The umpires may be a convenient target for a show of strength because of an attitude that nobody appreciates them anyway.

But the umps are picking up a lot of sympathy. Anyone who travels in a job knows that you can't make it on $53 a day expense money in major league cities.

Fortunately, there is a solution that will permit the umpires to be treated better and will allow the owners to save face.

All the owners have to do is cut out the free food and beer in the press box and use that money to pay umpires' salaries and expenses. The food and drink should be there but the news people could pay as they go.

Some teams already have cut out free items to the media. Some newspapers are refusing to take free food and beer. The Boston Globe, for instance, sends a check to the Red Sox every year for food and drink its writers have consumed in the Fenway Park press box.

This is a way of demonstrating that sports writers, long reputed to be free-loaders, are not. The argument in journalism is that the city council doesn't feed the reporters for free, so why should the sports teams?

In the past, some baseball teams have given regular writers expensive gifts, including TV sets. This has been pretty much wiped out by a campaign within the media to improve standards of professional ethics.

The National Football League once passed out wrist watches to media people covering the Super Bowl. No more. Each gets an inexpensive carrying bag full of the brochures, statistics and other printed material he or she needs to cover Super Bowl week.

But football and baseball still spend many thousands of dollars wining and dining the press. This is incongruous when juxtaposed with the cheap attitude toward the umpires.

Under this solution, the owners might even save money as well as face. The umpires would be paid salaries and expenses commensurate with the professional (and thankless) nature of their jobs.

No reporter can be bought for a hot dog and a beer. But neither does he or she need such largesse from the people he or she is covering.

And baseball can get back to the business it is supposed to be in — entertaining people with a quality product

J.R. RICHARD

CHICAGO (AP) — J.R. Richard is different. Not merely because he is an awesome sight on the mound at 6-foot-8 and 237 pounds but, unlike most pitchers, he wants to be a complete player.

Richard improved his record to 4-0, hurling the Houston Astros to a 6-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs Thursday. But he had mixed emotions about having to leave the game after five innings because of a slight back strain.

Richard also helped his cause by slugging a home run into a 12-17 mph wind.

"I like to go nine innings all the time, and every game I start I even think about going 10 innings," said Richard, "It makes you worq that much harder and your stamina that much stronger."

Why would he tell his manager his back was hurting, then resist leaving the game?

"That's because I have heart," said Richard. "You just don't want to come out when you have that big a lead but you can't jeopardize a whole season for one game."

"I want to become better in every respect — bunting, pitching, fielding and hitting," said Richard. "Every time I come up to bat, I think of myself as a hitter."

"I'm proud of hitting a home run, definitely," he said. "It's part of the game. I usually get one or two a year."

Richard, who now has eight career homers, allowed only three hits, three walks and struck out six before departing. He insisted he is not as wild as his reputation indicates.

"Do I scare batters?" said Richard, repeating the question. "I don't know. You would have to ask them. I've never had a chance to bat against myself, but intimidation is part of every pitcher's game."

Richard homered in the third inning, and Bob Watson and Alan Ashby contributed run-scoring singles in the fourth. Craig Reynolds doubled in a run in the fifth and singled home two runs in the sixth.

Ted Sizemore singled in a run off Richard in the fifth and Jerry Martin slugged his first homer of the season, off reliever Joe Sambito in the eighth. Sambito picked up his third save, and Martin's homer was the first run he allowed this season in seven relief appearacnces.

The Astros-Cubs game was the only one played in the National League Thursday. The only other scheduled game, San Francisco at New York, was rained out.

In the American League, Milwaukee beat Detroit twice 5-1, 7-5, the Boston Red Sox blanked the Seattle Mariners 2-0, the Baltimore Orioles downed the California Angels 4-2 and the Kansas City Royals nipped the Cleveland Indians 5-4. New York Yankees at Oakland was rained out.

Billy Sims Day

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Plans have been finalized for "Billy Sims Day" in the Oklahoma Senate in honor of the 1978 Heisman Trophy winner.

Senate President Pro Tem Gene Howard said activities honoring the University of Oklahoma halfback will begin at 1:30 p.m. on May 2 in the Senate.

Sims will be presented a resolution praising his achievements and is to address the Senate briefly before a reception in the Senate lounge.

Insurance FACTS

By Johnny & Bill Barnard

Among the important things to bear in mind concerning life insurance policies is that nothing should be left to chance. One of the questions to consider in detail is who can change the policy; either the amount or the beneficiary. It may be important, because of special circumstances, to consider or ask for an irrevocable beneficiary designation. In other words, a beneficiary that has been selected with no change possible. Obviously, this requires careful thought and may even demand the help of an attorney working in conjunction with your broker, especially if the policy is being purchased by a business.

Stay Fit

By HERBERT WEINBERG, Ph.D.

The rotation of the earth conspires against distance people. It provides brief winter days forcing us to cut short our long jogs, and then long summer days providing extended, enervating heat. If only the Deity would reverse the process so that we could run into the late wintry daylight and the quick sunset would limit hot summer workouts. Heat and humidity can be dangerous for those who run, cycle or play for extended periods of time.

Cool air is heavier air. It stays near the ground providing adequate oxygen. Summer air is lighter and rises which means we tend to gasp even with moderate exercise. We don't gasp in winter. That's why it's easier to prepare for the Boston Marathon as compared with the New York City Marathon (last year 11,000 runners). A marathon takes at least three months of serious preparation and since New York's takes place in October runners are into solid training in July and August. However, Boston's run takes place in April which finds heavy workouts taking place in February and March. Heat problems pursue the New York people.

Body temperature is controlled in part by our skin's ability to regulate heat. When we're cold pores close to retain heat; when we're warm pores open and perspiration is provided which evaporates to cool us. Sometimes we ask too much of skin. Though it can give us the warm-as-toast feeling during a winter run or an ice skating session, watch out if we send it into overdrive during a summer workout. Exercise on hot days finds the heat produced by our metabolism added to the heat of the environment which can cause the skin's cooling mechanism to go out of kilter. Or it can overload and stop altogether.

The consequences can be extreme including heat exhaustion and heat stroke. The latter can paralyze or kill; therefore, since we're now getting into warmer weather, let's convert the rest of this column into a bit of a first aid course dealing with these to heat ailments.

Heat exhaustion occurs because too much blood is required to be near the skin to provide water for perspiration. Other areas, including the brain, are deprived of blood supply causing enlarged pupils, shallow breathing and a weak pulse. The skin is pale, cold and clammy. The loss of water and salt (dehydration) contributes to overall weakness and dizziness or a spinning sensation forces its victims to stop. Unconsciousness may prevent further exhaustion.

Treatment involves getting the victim into a cool area and laying him on his back. Lift his feet about eight inches and loosen his clothing. Apply cold compresses to the forehead and body and have him sip salt water. Fanning helps too. It's an unpleasant experience and acts as its own reminder not to let it happen again.

Heat stroke (sunstroke) is an extension of heat exhaustion. However, in this instance the cooling mechanism completely stops and inner and outer heat runs out of control. There is dizziness, even delerium. The temperature shoots up, possibly to an astounding 106 degrees, and the skin is hot, red and dry - and breathing occurs up to 40 times per minute. There may vomiting.

This is an emergency, possibly a life-or-death situation, requiring immediate first aid and quick hospitalization.

Treatment is the same as with heat exhaustion, but with extreme emphasis on getting the high temperature lowered as quickly as is possible. Place the victim, if possible, within a tub of cold water or apply the cold compresses quickly, particularly on the forehead. Massage feet, arms and body toward the heart. Find rubbing alcohol and massage it on; the evaporation will cool him. Once the temperature is lowered continue observing him. It could begin to rise again requiring you to repeat the process.

There is a correlation between age and susceptibility to heat stroke. No matter what your age, however, avoiding having the sun directly strike your head on warm or hot days. Wear a shady hat. Sunglasses help too as does clothing that provides for plenty of air flow and ventilation. Drink plenty of water before you exercise and you may be surprised to learn that it's quite all right to drink water while you're exercising. In fact it's recommended in spite of what your old coach said. And salt your food throughly.

WF Panthers rally again for Mex-Tex baseball win

The Wichita Falls Panthers have a knack for coming from behind to win games in the Mex-Tex Baseball League.

After trailing 8-6 last Sunday at Spudder Park, the Panthers rallied for three runs in the eighth inning to defeat the Fort Worth Alacranes 9-8.

The victory was the third against no losses for the Wichitans, who travel to Fort Worth Sunday to meet the Bravos in a 1 p.m. game at Trinity Field.

Johnny Chavez started the comeback for the Panthers, tripling in a run and scoring himself on an error to tie things up. Julio Hill then beat out a bunt, stolen both second and third and was knocked home by Gilbert Lopez to win.

Raymond Villa was the winning pitcher. The Panthers collected 12 hits while the Alacranes posted 10.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Financial conditions could be a mixed bag for you today. The rewards you've earned will be worthwhile, but where you've contributed little dividends will be small.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be careful today that you don't show more favoritism to friends than you do to members of your family. Pals come and go, but family is always with you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Let your heart rule your head today. Instead of worrying about what's in it for you, bend a bit to do more for others.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Enjoy your friends for their companionship today, but be wary of being drawn into deals that could cost you money. Someone might get burned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) There's a possibility today that you could get in your own way and bungle something that could be profitable. Size situations up carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Today you could see more negative aspects than you do positive ones. Don't let self-defeating thoughts deceive you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Matters that mean something to you materially should be given priority over pleasurable pursuits. Work first. Play later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Persons with whom you are on a palsy-walsy basis socially must not be used to further your ambitions today. Such tactics could cost you a friend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Attitude is all-important today. If you start out thinking something is tough, it will prove to be so. If you see it as a snap, so will it be.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You're very good today at managing things affecting your self-interests, but you may not be too adept at masterminding things for others.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Concerning family finances today, you may be a shade sharper than your mate. He or she should talk money matters over with you before making decisions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Some of your friends will enjoy your repartee today, but it's not likely to be co-workers. They'd like a little less wind and a little more work.

ABC trying to attract Johnny?

By TOM JORY
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Will Johnny Carson leave "The Tonight Show" for a job with ABC? "I can't answer that," Carson tells CBS' Mike Wallace, conceding ABC may be "doing a little stroking, as all networks do," in an effort to attract him.

Carson, in an interview for CBS' "60 Minutes," to be broadcast Sunday evening at 6 p.m. CDT, recalls an informal get-together after his appearance as host on ABC's broadcast April 9 of the Academy Awards show.

"They ... made no direct overtures of my coming to the network," Carson says. "I would assume that when somebody has you socially for dinner — I'm not that naive — that they might say, 'Hey, it would be nice possibly if Johnny Carson worked over here.'"

Wallace and the "60 Minutes" crew visited Carson April 15 at his home in Bel-Air, Calif., about a week before the story broke that Carson wanted out of his NBC contract, which runs until mid-1981.

"Now who said I got three or four million dollars annually? Nobody has ever quoted my salary correct, and that's always intrigued me. Nobody has ever had the figure right."
— JOHNNY CARSON

CBS had planned to produce a profile of the entertainer for fall broadcast, but pulled some of the newsworthy material from the footage shot Easter Sunday for immediate broadcast.

The segment runs about 14 minutes. Carson tells Wallace he did not fight with his boss, NBC President Fred Silverman, over the amount of time he spends as host of "The Tonight Show," and he refuses to answer Wallace's repeated questions on his legendary salary.

"Now who said I got three or four million dollars annually?" asks the man who probably is the highest paid entertainer in TV.

"You know that you do," Wallace says.

"Nobody has ever quoted my salary correct," says Carson, "and that's always intrigued me. Nobody has ever had the figure right."

Wallace asks about reports Silverman had demanded that he show up as host of "The Tonight Show" more frequently, citing figures to show the program's audience declined when Carson was not there.

"After 17 years, I just found it impossible to keep my energy level, and do the kind of quality work I want to do, if I do the show," Carson replies. "So it's true I do work a three-day week now. ... I still do 135 or 140 ninety-minute television shows. It's been something like 4,500 shows altogether.

"And after that time, if I would have had to still do five days a week, I would have finished the show five years ago."

He says in the interview he wants to remain in television, though not as host of a nightly or even weekly program.

The segment includes interviews with Carson's wife, Joanna, his sidekick and friend, Ed McMahon, and Fred deCordova, producer of "The Tonight Show."

The "60 Minutes" segment was produced by David Lowe Jr., who, ironically, began his career as a cue-card boy for Carson when he was host of "Who Do You Trust?" in the early 1950s. It was Lowe's relationship with Carson, as well as contacts Carson had previously with Wallace, that apparently led to the rare interview. The Wallace segment was the last at CBS for Lowe, who will leave the network to set up his own production company.

Study questions 'Scared Straight'

By AGNES T. GOTTLIEB
AP Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The "scared straight" program in which inmates brutally tell juvenile offenders how bad their lives will be if they continue a life of crime is coming under question in the state where it was first developed.

A researcher says the program isn't as successful as some have claimed, the state is moving to limit participation, and the superintendent of Rahway Prison, home of the program, has been reassigned.

The Juvenile Awareness Program, portrayed in the Academy Award-winning documentary "Scared Straight," brings juvenile offenders into the prison to be told by inmates — in raw, frank language — of the horrors of life in the maximum security facility.

As word of the program spread, corrections officials from several states had contacted New Jersey for information on it.

But now a study commissioned by the state Department of Corrections casts doubt on the ability of the program, run by the 80-member Lifers Group of inmates, to deter youths from a life of crime.

Following that report, Correction Commissioner William Fauver said Thursday that participation in the program from now on will be limited to proven juvenile delinquents, and will no longer be open to teen-agers who merely show tendencies toward trouble.

More than 12,000 New Jersey teen-agers in trouble have participated in the inmate-run program.

Fauver said he had urged his assistants to warn other states that the program had not been evaluated and that claims made in the documentary had not been substantiated and were not endorsed by the state.

The reassignment was partly due to Fauver's belief that Hatrak had become too interested in the national publicity surrounding the "scared straight" program, The New York Times reported in today's editions.

Fauver said Thursday he reassigned Hatrak to a job in the department's administrative offices after reviewing a report by the state attorney general's office and a department study of prison management practices.

James Stabile, a spokesman for Fauver, declined comment on the report, except to say it uncovered no causes for criminal action.

The Newark Star-Ledger quoted Fauver as saying one of the reasons for the transfer was because, "Not enough attention was being paid to running the jail. You have to run it like a jail, not a Hollywood studio."

Finckenauer studied 81 teenagers with similar backgrounds, including 46 who participated in the Juvenile Awareness Program. He then surveyed court records six months later.

In the test group, 27 had been arrested before the counseling, and 14 of the control group had arrest records, he said.

His study showed that among persons who attended the session there was a 41 percent failure rate, compared to an 11 percent failure rate among the control group that did not attend the two-hour session.

Among the 46 who went through the program, he said, 19 were arrested within the next six months, while only four of the 35 who didn't participate were arrested.

"This is a far cry from the 80-90 percent success rates being claimed by the supporters of the Juvenile Awareness Project," Finckenauer's report said.

News special also uplifting

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When was the last time you saw a TV news special that made you feel happy? Here's one. "The Boston Goes to China," tonight's edition of "CBS Reports."

It is informative, as news specials are supposed to be, but it is also uplifting, which news specials seldom are.

Reporter Ed Bradley and his crew followed conductor Seiji Ozawa and the Boston Symphony Orchestra to China — the first major cultural exchange between the U.S. and China since the two nations normalized relations. Bradley seized the opportunity to produce a fine news report on the changing China, using a man-on-the-street approach that gives viewers a feel for the Chinese people, whom, it seems, are less a lot of happy automatons than some of us might have supposed.

In his side excursions into the streets of Shanghai and Peking, Bradley found people willing to talk about the demise of the Gang of Four and the end of the Cultural Revolution, and in an open manner that Bradley tells us would have meant jail a short time ago.

In Shanghai, for example, the cameras caught a group of demonstrators loudly protesting their imminent departure for the countryside work farms. There is something reassuring about their protest.

Then there is Bradley in the midst of a crowd, quizzing a man about the Gang of Four, a group of radicals led by the wife of the late Chairman Mao. At one point, the man told Bradley he'd said enough, and started to move away. The crowd squeezed him back toward Bradley. "They demand I say more to you," he said.

And there is the music. It is a moving moment when the Peking Central Philharmonic joins the Boston for a rendition of Beethoven's Fifth before an excited audience of 18,000. Until a year ago, the only piece in the Peking Philharmonic's reportoire was that revolutionary tune (and everybody's favorite) "Taking Tiger Mountain by Strategy."

It's nice, this, a warming piece of journalism that focuses on a ray of light in a world whose dark and ominous aspects are usually the subjects of news specials. Even the callused might get a shiver when, prompted to encore, the joined musicians launch into a spirited rendition of John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Can you imagine that? These Chinese in Mao suits, sitting in with the running dogs from Boston, playing that most American of anthems. It's the Fourth of July, and you want to believe the hopeful prophesy in Bradley's paraphrase of the Irish poet:

"Maybe," he says, "it's the music makers who are the movers and shakers."

World's Homeless: Final Part

'We have lost our past'

By PETER ARNETT
AP Correspondent

AKHNA FOREST, Cyprus (AP) — A road barely wide enough for two cars to pass separates the Greek Cypriots camped in Akhna Forest from their 3000-year-old village. They can see their abandoned fields and homes, and the looting going on.

"We have lost our past even though we see it before our eyes," said teacher Flora Ioannou, near tears. "I know it is difficult for outsiders to understand our anger."

That road might as well be the span of an ocean for this group — they are among the world's 10.5 million homeless. They are refugees in their own land, trapped in a political and social convulsion that has divided their island home and uprooted nearly 200,000 persons.

The 5,000 people of Akhna were among the 156,500 Greek Cypriots dislodged from their lands when Turkish military forces invaded the eastern Mediterranean island in 1974. The Turkish government said the aim was to protect the minority of Turkish Cypriots.

But the mention of the Turks to the Greek Cypriots leaves a sour taste, like the bitter lemons that grow so profusely on the island.

"We watch them looting Akhna," said Christos Pavlou, a member of the camp council in Akhna Forest. "We stand in the road.

"First the soldiers took the windows and doors of our houses, along with everything inside. Then they took the roofs. Just last week they lifted the asbestos roof off the Akhna cinema and took it north."

While Turkish forces remain in place today, more than 37,000 Turkish Cypriots have fled north as the result of Greek Cypriot reprisals.

Prosperous Akhna village, with its potato fields and lemon and fig trees, was one of the Turkish targets in 1974.

The residents of the village fled across the road to the Akhna Forest, a thinly wooded stand of eucalyptus and pine trees that lay just inside the territory of the British military base of Dhekelia, and was therefore protected from the Turks.

Initially, 45,000 people from scores of other villages also camped in the forest in automobiles and tents. But now 3,000 remain, shivering in the late winter winds blowing strongly off the Troodos Mountains to the west, and nursing their anger.

Papa-Lambros, a Cypriot orthodox priest, is a dominant figure in the camp, with his black beard, blue tunic and black hat.

"They are even carrying off the earth from our fields," he said with vehemence.

The people of the forest have learned to be cautious. Every 100 meters along the Turk side of the road are army posts. Three Greeks have been killed trying to get into their old village.

On the other side, Refet Tahir, a Turk who said he ran a coffee shop in a southern village and was given one previously owned by a Greek Cypriot in Bellapais, doesn't trust the Greeks any more than they trust him.

Kyrikou Giorgi, left, is an 86-year-old Greek woman who now lives in Akhna refugee forest on the island of Cyprus. "I lived in a stone house in my own village. Here in the forest the worms come right through the floor," she said.

"No, we can't live together again," he said. "We don't trust the Greeks anymore, and if the Turkish army had not arrived they would have killed us all."

The history of sun-splashed Cyprus, with its the ancient Greek and early Christian ruins, dates back to 2000 B.C. The Turks arrived on the "Island of Aphrodite" in 1571 and dominated the place until the British took over late in the 19th century.

But the Greek and Turkish communities remained fiercely exclusive, with no intermarriage between the Christian Greeks and the Moslem Turks, and very little socializing. An independent nation was established in 1960, but no sense of national unity ever developed.

Bloody intercommunal fighting broke out over the years. Greek Cypriots were demanding Enosis, union with Greece.

The Turks decided to invade the island in 1974 in a quick, bloody war that gave them a third of the island, including the modern city of Famagusta, and the idyllic north coast resort of Kyrennia.

Today, the United States and the United Nations are trying to bring both sides together and agree on the withdrawal of the invasion troops, the return of property, and a restoration of trade and other ties between the two peoples.

But with one third of the population refugees, tempers are on edge. Even though the people of the Akhna Forest could be resettled elsewhere, in housing superior to their ramshackle temporary huts, they refuse to go.

"We stay here to defy the Turks," said Eleni Kalou, tending flowers outside her green plywood house, her child playing at her feet. "We have visited the president in Nicosia to remind him that we want to go home soon."

Priest Papa-Lambros said, "We know our side is fair and just. The United States should press Turkey to leave us. Our committee sent President Carter a telegram of congratulations after his election, but he didn't respond to us. Does that mean he doesn't care about our fate?"

The United Nations has spent $100 million on refugee assistance since the 1974 war, 80 percent of it on the Greek side of the island. A total of $50 million has been spent on new housing on the Greek side, but not a penny has gone north for housing.

"We won't give money for Turks to build on Greek property," said the chief of the U.N. High Commission for Refugees, Alfred Zur Lippe-Weissenfeld. But U.N. money has provided food, health and social services in the north.

Particularly galling to the Greek Cypriots is that the Turkish invasion has pushed them out of some of the prettiest land in the Mediterranean.

Thais heading off refugees

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A fleet of Thai navy boats is patrolling the Gulf of Thailand to try to prevent more than 10 boats carrying Vietnamese refugees from entering Thai waters, an Interior Ministry spokesman said today.

The spokesman said a government plane spotted a line of refugee boats in international waters earlier this week apparently heading toward the Thai coast.

The official added that a mass exodus of "boat people" from Vietnam to Thailand is expected within the next week because of favorable monsoon winds.

Nearly 1,000 refugees from Vietnam arrived in Thailand by sea this week.

Authorities in southern Thailand said 420 Vietnamese who landed Wednesday on an island off the coast of Chumphon Province sank their boat so the Thais would have to let them land. But the authorities said the boat would be raised and repaired and the refugees towed out to sea.

In another southern province, Pattani, police allowed 436 Vietnamese boat people to come ashore after they sank their vessel offshore.

A third group of 518 refugees have been held for several weeks aboard the Thai freighter that brought them to Samut Prakarn, on the coast 15 miles south of Bangkok. A spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees said the United States, Australia and Canada agreed to take about 300 of them, and the rest would be resettled within six months.

Thailand has been flooded by refugees from Vietnam over the past year, many of them ethnic Chinese fleeing the Communist government, which has confiscated their businesses and has been trying to resettle them in rural communities.

Several thousand Cambodians fled into Thailand after the Vietnamese invasion drove Premier Pol Pot's government from Phnom Penh in January. More than 50,000 recently crossed the border after a Vietnamese drive in northwest Cambodia, but Pol Pot guerrillas among them are herding the civilians into southwest Cambodia. Thai troops and border police are keeping watch to try to prevent any of them escaping into Thailand.

The Interior Ministry said there were 145,243 refugees in Thailand on April 1, plus about 50,000 others in the country illegally.

Hong Kong, Malaysia, Indonesia, the Philippines and Australia also have more Vietnamese refugees than they want, and the Indonesian government is holding an international conference on the problem May 15-16 in Jakarta. The Indonesian government says the Vietnamese government has agreed to attend. It will its first participation in such a conference.

The conference will discuss establishment of refugee processing centers on two Indonesian islands southeast of Singapore.

Clements' security increased

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Security surrounding Gov. Bill Clements has quietly doubled since he took office Jan. 16, KTBC-TV said today.

"That security is provided by the Department of Public Safety and is paid for by the taxpayer at a price of almost $600,000 every two years," the story said.

KTBC-TV said that sources in the governor's office say "Clements is not that security-conscious but his special assistant Alan Clark and his wife, Rita, are."

The story noted that a Clements is highly visible to the public and in terms of security is vulnerable. It said several threats had been made against his life.

KTBC-TV said, without giving any names or figures for security reasons, that a full-time around-the-clock security force guards the Mansion. Some of them escort the governor when he travels.

Five DPS troopers are assigned to the governor's Dallas residence, four on a full time basis.

Cambodians accuse Thais

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — President Heng Samrin's Cambodian government accused Thailand today of "false neutrality" and warned it to stop aiding the forces of ousted Premier Pol Pot escaping to southwest Cambodia.

SPK, the new Cambodian government's news agency, said the Thais were helping the Pol Pot remnants by providing transit through Thai territory and other forms of aid. Thailand is practicing a "false neutrality vis-a-vis Cambodia," the dispatch said.

Heng Samrin's government was installed by a Vietnamese invasion force on Jan. 7, and the Vietnamese and their Cambodian allies have been fighting Pol Pot guerrilla holdouts ever since.

Probe of DPT vaccine link to infant deaths suggested

ATLANTA (AP) — The national Center for Disease Control should conduct a detailed study into the deaths of four Tennessee infants who died within 24 hours of receiving a diphtheria-pertussis-tetanus vaccine, a group of consultants says.

The infants were between two and six months old when they died between November and March and did not live in the same community.

The deaths were attributed to the little-understood sudden infant death syndrome, which claims between 10,000 and 16,000 infants annually.

A batch of more than 480,000 doses of the vaccine, called DPT or DTP, was voluntarily recalled by the manufacturer, Wyeth Laboratories of Philadelphia, even though laboratory tests indicated the vaccine was safe.

"The consensus of this meeting is that it is not possible to decide if there is a meaningful association between the DPT vaccine and the deaths," Dr. Donald Millar, chairman of the meeting, said after the session Thursday.

Millar said the consultants suggested that the CDC investigators try to uncover more details concerning the children — "factors other than the vaccine."

Millar, director of the CDC's bureau of state services, said the consultants would submit a written report within 10 days.

"You expect children to experience sudden death syndrome when the rate of death is between 10,000 and 16,000 a year," he said. "But the question is whether the four occurring 24 hours after receiving the vaccine is significant. The answer is — we can't say.

The CDC said the only batch of the DPT vaccine involved is the one which was being used in Tennessee at the time the four children died. Other vaccine is still being used without question, Millar said.

Raw sugar price boost could raise food bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the same day the Labor Department announced a 1 percent increase in consumer prices, the House Agriculture Committee approved legislation that could boost every American's food bill by nearly $3 in the next 2½ years.

The House panel voted 29-9 Thursday to raise raw sugar prices by 5.3 percent this year and up to 7 percent in 1980 and 1981.

That could add a maximum 74 cents to each consumer's food bill this year and $1 per person during the next two years, according to government estimates. Refiners and food companies generally pass through the higher sugar prices to consumers.

The increased prices would be reflected in such products as beverages, canned goods, and sweets. A five-pound bag of refined sugar could rise 4 cents by the end of the year.

The Agriculture Department's chief economist Howard W. Hjort said the bill is "fully justified" to help the most efficient U.S. sugar growers and processors compete with foreign competition.

The measure also would provide up to $60 million in direct subsidies to many farmers.

Raw sugar prices have been raised three times in 18 months by the federal government, a pace that President Carter's chief inflation fighter, Alfred E. Kahn, says accounted for 1 percent of the 10 percent boost in average food prices last year.

Roloff home incident probe may take weeks

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The foreman of a Nueces County grand jury says it could take "weeks" to complete the investigation of a stabbing incident at a youth home operated by evangelist Lester Roloff.

The panel began its investigation here Thursday by interviewing a local reporter who recently wrote a story detailing a murder plot allegedly hatched by five teen-age residents of the Rebekah Home for Girls. The girls said they wanted to kill another resident of the home.

Corpus Christi Caller reporter Martha Callaway had reported that the five girls — ages 14-16 — said they plotted to kill Misty Hardman in order to have the homes closed. Miss Hardman, 16, was stabbed in the back three times with a butcher knife last July.

Chavez asks for boycott

SALINAS, Calif. (AP) — United Farm Workers President Cesar Chavez has called for the union's second nationwide boycott of California iceberg lettuce.

The boycott Chavez requested Thursday came as a strike by field workers against growers completed its 14th week.

"After three months of striking, we've come to the conclusion that very little progress has been made in the last 40 years" to resolve farm labor disputes, Chavez said.

Chavez had announced intentions of calling for a boycott a month ago, but he formally launched the action after testifying before a U.S. Senate Labor and Resources Committee hearing here chaired by Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J.

The labor leader already has called for a boycott against United Brands' Chiquita bananas. SunHarvest, a United Brands holding, is one of 11 producers hit by the UFW strike.

"As long as Mexican farmworkers do our work and keep our place, we're tolerated," Chavez said as the opening witness in two days of hearings.

Idi Amin seeks military aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Deposed Uganda President Idi Amin is reported alive in Libya and futilely seeking military help to regain power, according to a U.S. official.

Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Robert Keeley told the House Africa subcommittee Thursday that "as of last week he was still seeking military support."

Keeley said Amin is reported to have sought help from Iraq as well as Libya, but he said he doesn't believe Amin could regain power even with aid.

"It can't be ruled out as impossible," Keeley testified. "But his remaining forces are a rabble and would be very difficult to reorganize."

Keeley said the several thousand troops loyal to Amin have turned into bands "looting and doing horrible things in their wake."

Libya apparently flew Amin out of Uganda when his government fell, Keeley said.

He said Libya sent about 1,200 troops to Amin's aid but the Libyans were driven out by Tanzanian forces that had invaded after Amin attacked that nation.

More than a third of the Libyans were killed, Keeley said.

Keeley supported President Carter's request that Congress lift the trade and aid ban it imposed against Uganda last year in an effort to force out Amin.

Chairman Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., said he and other House members are sponsoring legislation to lift the ban quickly and clear the way for emergency U.S. aid.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., introduced similar bills in the Senate.

Kenya holds Amin torture troopers

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Seven Ugandan soldiers carrying papers identifying them as members of Idi Amin's torture and death gestapo have been jailed for one year for illegally entering Kenya.

The seven were fleeing pursuing Tanzanian army units, crossed from Uganda into Kenya Thursday and were caught by police, the prosecutor told a court in the frontier town of Busia.

The prosecutor said their documents identified them as members of the State Research Bureau, Amin's secret police force which was responsible for the torture and murder of thousands of his foes.

In their defense, the seven men said they were visiting relatives in Kenya.

Since the overthrow of Amin's regime earlier this month by Tanzanian and Ugandan exile forces, large numbers of Amin loyalists have crossed into Kenya, posing as refugees.

Kenyan authorities have indicated they will repatriate to Uganda fugitives sought for trial by the provisional government of President Yusufu Lule which was installed after Amin's overthrow.

Lule's government already has asked for the repatriation of Amin's former British advisor, "Major" Bob Astles, who has been in custody in Kenya for two weeks.

Meanwhile, Kampala Radio reported today that Britain has pledged $2 million in emergency aid to help in the reconstruction of Uganda and said more assistance would be forthcoming.

The radio said the pledge was conveyed to Lule Thursday by the acting British high commissioner in Kampala, Richard Posnett. Britain granted independence to Uganda in 1962 and was frequently lambasted by Amin.

Rubber workers considering strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United Rubber Workers union, unable to end an unusual contract feud with Uniroyal Inc., is back home pondering whether to call a strike against the nation's No. 3 tire maker.

URW President Peter Bommarito said late Thursday night before returning to union headquarters in Akron, Ohio, that he would call a top-level meeting Monday to decide on a course of action.

Bommarito and other union bargainers flew home after chief federal mediator Wayne L. Horvitz declared urther negotiations would be "unproductive." He did not say when bargaining might resume.

After four full days of talks, the two sides had not resolved any differences in a dispute that is hung up over President Carter's anti-inflation guidelines and a union charge that the company "welched" on a contract agreement in the face of government pressure.

"They can't lie out of it," Bommarito said of the company's insistence that it had never reached an agreement with the URW.

Bommarito, saying he has sought to avoid a strike, told reporters a walkout by 8,200 Uniroyal workers is among three options the union would consider next week. He would not identify the other options.

The URW lifted a strike deadline against Uniroyal last Friday, when the old pact expired, and has extended the deadline from day to day.

The union has targeted Uniroyal to set the pattern for new three-year contracts covering a total of 55,000 workers at the "Big Four" tire companies, which also include Goodyear, Firestone and Goodrich.

Horvitz said he planned to meet here today with officials from all four tire companies to review where the Uniroyal dispute stands.

The highly unusual and confusing dispute with Uniroyal began April 19, when the union declared it had reached a tentative economic agreement with Uniroyal, Firestone and Goodrich. Within a few hours, the three companies issued denials.

Bommarito then charged that the deal fell through because Uniroyal had backed down on prior contract pledges under very heavy pressure from Carter's inflation advisers, who feared a large settlement could destroy the president's voluntary guidelines.

Uniroyal acknowledged that the administration pressed the company to stay within the 7 percent annual ceiling on wage and fringe benefit increases, but it denied that it reneged on any agreement.

Road improvement program approved

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A $238 million improvement program for highways across the state has been approved by the Texas Highway and Public Transportation Commission.

The commission said Thursday 845 projects in 203 counties will be involved, with more than 72 percent of the work scheduled for U.S. and state highways. Farm-to-market roads also will receive attention.

The general condition and safety of 5,253 miles of the state's 71,000-mile highway network will be improved, the three-member commission said.

In a separate program, 196 miles of urban streets and highways will be improved in a two-year project. State and federal funds will pay for the program.

Vance wants more secrecy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance says he may reduce the number of government officials privy to classified information in order to combat leaks to the news media.

"The leaking of classified information does a great disservice to our nation ... because it may well prejudice our negotiating positions," Vance said Thursday.

He suggested that "one of the ways to stop these leaks is to reduce the number of people who are privy to this information."

Vance commented after being asked at a meeting of a Senate Appropriations subcommittee about two recent leaks, both linked to the negotiations with the Soviet Union over a new strategic arms limitation agreement.

One leak concerned secret testimony that the Central Intelligence Agency is considering using the U-2 spy plane to monitor Soviet missile tests to make up for the loss of monitoring stations in Iran.

The Mercedes-Benz 240 Diesel—is it the world's finest economy car, or is it the world's most economical fine car?

Best EPA mileage figures in its class, yet first class finish in side and out. So frugal-minded that a manual shift is standard, yet so Mercedes-Benz that 4-Wheel independent suspension, 4-wheel disc brakes, even a quartz-crystal chronometer are standard, too.

WE ALSO HAVE A FINE SELECTION OF PREVIOUSLY OWNED MERCEDES.

Has your Home been Damaged or Destroyed! We suggest the following steps:
1. Do Not pay off your mortgage with the Insurance Fund.
2. Escrow the Insurance Money with Mortgage Company.
3. If your home is only partially damaged, have an Architect or engineer check it. It will be money well spent.
4. GET SEVERAL BIDS. Beware of the unscrupulous firms. Ask for a detailed list of work to be done.
5. Check with SBA for reconstruction or repair loans.
6. Don't Panic — Go slow.

We would like an opportunity to help you solve your rebuilding or reconstruction problems, large or small. We can help your arrange financing, and we will give you a competitive bid. In business since 1963

Americans facing lack of apartments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Families searching for apartments this spring face hard times because fewer units are available. And housing experts say the situation will get worse, especially with inflation boosting rents.

"There is really a crisis in multi-family rental housing in this country," Lawrence B. Simons, federal housing commissioner, said in an interview Thursday.

Jay Shackford of the National Association of Home Builders agreed. "The vacancy rate has been declining since the recession of 1974-75," he said. "You don't see the big rental apartment projects going up any more. They're just too costly."

Statistics show that the tightest rental market is in the Northeast and that apartment dwellers in central cities everywhere fare a bit better than their counterparts in rural and suburban locales.

Most housing experts believe at least six to seven apartments of every 100 must be on the market to give families enough choices.

However, the Census Bureau reported Thursday the rental vacancy rate nationwide was 4.8 percent in the first three months this year — the first time in more than two decades of records-keeping that fewer than five of every 100 units were on the market.

The agency also released its annual survey showing the vacancy rate in 1978 at 5 percent, down from 5.2 percent the previous year and significantly below the 6.2 percent figure of 1974. In the early 1960s, the vacancy rate was 8 percent or higher.

The number of vacant homes for sale also fell in 1978 to one in 100, compared with 1.2 per hundred in the four preceding years.

The one out of three American families who live in rented housing paid a median monthly rent of $158 in 1978. A year earlier, they paid $147 per month, she said.

Undercover drug agent's autopsy reveals no poison

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A pathologist says preliminary autopsy results show no traces of poison in the body of fired federal undercover drug agent Sante Bario, who died early Tuesday after more than four months in a mysterious coma.

"At the time of autopsy, there was no sign of any poisoning," Dr. David M. Spain of Brooklyn, N.Y., said Thursday after he took part in the autopsy.

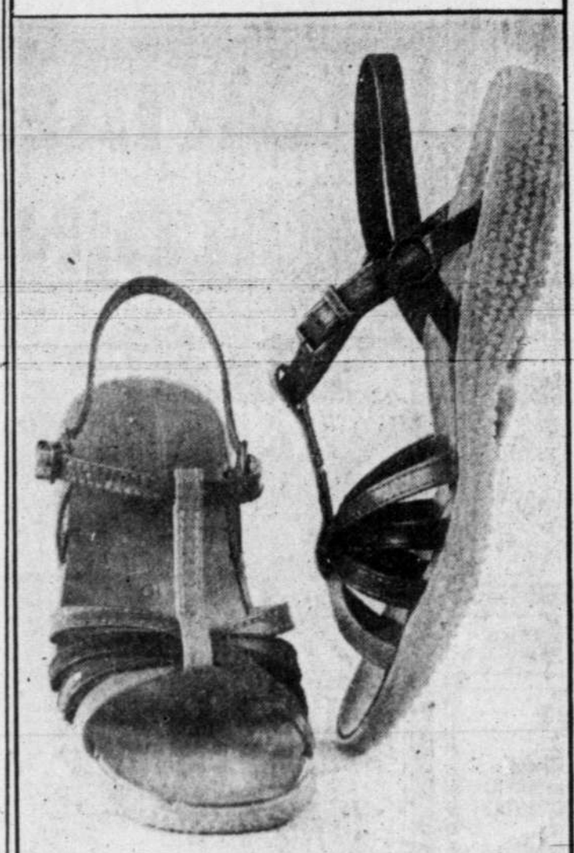

Bario, who was charged with accepting a $9,000 bribe last October to overlook a cache of cocaine, lapsed into the puzzling coma Dec. 16 in his individual jail cell after eating part of a peanut butter sandwich.

Bario had suffered massive brain damage and died about 1:30 a.m. Tuesday without regaining consciousness. He had been removed from life support systems in January.

Spain said Bario died from a respiratory infection spawned by life support efforts.

It was first believed he had been poisoned after traces of strychnine were reportedly found in initial tests last December. Bexar County Medical Examiner Dr. Ruben Santos said, however, that later tests did not turn up any trace of poison.
