Man Alleged to Have Been Attentive To Widow

Says Mother Asked Father Which of Two Women He Loved Most

Special to The Record News.

FREDERICK, Okla., Aug. 16.—Mrs. Grace Jones, 28, wife of Grover Jones, tenant farmer on the N. E. Abernathy farm near here is dead and her husband and Mrs. E. O. Jacobs, 25, a widow, are in jail pending a thorough investigation of circumstances surrounding Mrs. Jones' death. No charges have been filed as yet but officers are still busy on the case.

Husband Intervenes.

Mrs. Jones was instantly killed about 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon as, it is reported, she and Mrs. Jacobs were scuffling over a gun at the Jacobs home. Mrs. Jones had gone there, it is said, to question the Jacobs women concerning some statements she is alleged to have made. Mr. Jones was sitting in a car at the front of the house when the trouble started and declared that he sought to separate the two women as they struggled about the place. He told Sheriff May and Deputy Sheriff Blackwood that just as he reached them, however, the gun went off. The bullet struck Mrs. Jones in the right breast and she died almost instantly.

Child Tells Story.

Trouble is declared to have been brewing for some time as a result of alleged attentions being paid by the man to Mrs. Jacobs. Alice Jones, 10-year old daughter of the dead woman, told members of the sheriff's department after the tragedy that a few days ago her mother asked her father who he cared for most, herself or Mrs. Jacobs. Mrs. Jones is the mother of three young children.

The dead woman is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Blackwell, residing north of Tipton. The body is being held at a local undertaking parlor pending completion of funeral arrangements.

ANIMATED CARTOON ARTIST HAS IDEAS

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16. — Burt Green, animated cartoon artist, who is suing Florenz Ziegfeld, producer of the Follies bearing his name, for $25,000 alleged to be due for four ideas originated another idea to obtain service on Ziegfeld, who had eluded process servers, it developed today.

A man in sailor's uniform appeared at Ziegfeld's office with a bundle of ostensibly bearing bottles and announced with a wink that "the captain" had sent Mr. Ziegfeld a present.

Entrance was said to have been gained without difficulty into the office of the producer. With the bundle containing bottled water were the papers in the suit. Ziegfeld admits the success of Green's latest ideas.

France Agrees To Evacuate Ruhr Within One Year

Agreement With Germans Is Signed at London; Interest Focuses on Governments Which Must Ratify.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Peace between France and Germany came one step nearer tonight when the representatives of the allied powers and Germany assembled in Premier MacDonald's room in the foreign office and signed or initiated a protocol providing the means for putting into effect the Dawes plan, designed to settle the perplexing reparations problem.

The agreement calls for evacuation of the Ruhr valley by the French on August 15, 1925.

The London conference after 30 trying days has thus been brought to a successful conclusion. All eyes now turn to Berlin and Paris, anxiously watching to see if the German reichstag and the French parliament will support Chancellor Marx and Premier Herriot in the bold step they have taken.

Both these premiers belong to minority governments which are none too stable and the reaction of the German and French peoples will be watched with some apprehension until their legislative bodies approve, and make it possible for German and French representatives to meet with the representatives of the other interested powers at Paris on August 30 and attach their formal signatures to the documents.

ALIENISTS PAY M'COY VISIT

Battle of Psychiatnists Will be Waged Over Fighter

By The Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 16.—The McCoy-Mors case which resulted in the death of Theresa Mors, divorced wife of a wealthy antique dealer, Tuesday night with a bullet hole in her head and the arrest of Kid McCoy, ex-pugilist, was without marked development today.

Most Tangled Affair.

The affair which has been described by District Attorney Asa Keyes as the most tangled one he has ever handled, did, however, produce a few new angles.

The district attorney sent three alienists into McCoy's cell to examine him mentally and physically.

The former prize ring idol willingly bared his body to the trio, but his mind and his heart remained covered under the seal of silence put on his lips by his attorneys.

McCoy's legal advisers also announced that they were preparing to tread the tortuous trail of psychiatric testimony with reports of alienists of their own choosing.

Woman Saw Too.

Prior to today's lull in the development of contradictory phases of the case, the police revealed late last night that they had found a woman who heard Mrs. Mors' last words and the shot that cut her down, as well as the footsteps of two men—not one—running from the apartment where the body was found.

Mrs. Iva Martin, neighbor of the dead woman, told of hearing Mrs. Mors cry:

"Oh my God. don't do that—." Then there was the sound of a shot and the thud of a falling body.

Two men, Mrs. Martin said, ran from the apartment. One of these she clearly saw in the moonlight and he was not McCoy. The second man she couldn't describe.

FOOD PRICES GROW DURING JULY

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16. — Increases in the price of foods and farm products during July were chiefly responsible for a general increase in wholesale prices during the month, according to figures made public today by the bureau of labor statistics of the labor department. The index number based on a survey of 404 commodities, increased from 144.6 in June to 147 for July, the bureau announced. The retail price of food increased three fourths of one per cent for the month, the report said.

CALLS FORMER CHIEF EXECUTIVE PRODIGAL SON

Asserts Deposed Governor Would be Executive In Fact if Elected

CALLS HIM DR. JEKYL

Declares Jim Now Seeks Favors from Men He Betrayed

Characterizing James E. Ferguson as "a prodigal son without repentance" and assailing the former governor's attempt to come back for "another unhampered rake-off of the public treasury," Judge H. G. Wills of Dallas vigorously scored the Ferguson candidacy and as staunchly defended Felix D. Robertson, in whose interests he spoke last night at the American Legion arena. The rally was held under the auspices of the Wichita County Robertson for Governor club and attracted approximately 800 people.

Jim to Be Governor.

The speaker speedily dismissed the idea that Mrs. Miriam Ferguson was to be the real governor of Texas and asked his hearers how many of them thought that the Temple man's wife would really be the state's chief executive. After answering the question for them, Judge Wills plunged into a caustic but at times amusing arraignment of the former governor. He reviewed at some length the impeachment records of 1917, went into detail on some of the pledges Mr. Ferguson had made since his wife went into the run-off and then denounced him as a man seeking popular favor again from the very persons he had "abused, fleeced, dishonored and disgraced."

Referring first to Mr. Ferguson as a Dr. Jekyl, declaring against lawlessness and then as a Mr. Hyde, accepting $156,000 from the brewery interests of the state, the speaker asserted that he had no personal grievance against Mr. Ferguson but that he was interested in learning how he or anyone else could afford to accept him again as the leader of Texas. Judge Wills paid his respects, also, to Gen. M. M. Crane of Dallas, who, in an address in behalf of Mrs. Ferguson Friday night, assailed the record of Judge Robertson.

Replies to Crane.

Producing a stenographic report of General Crane's address here, Judge Wills said:

"He (General Crane) drags the ku klux klan into this campaign when we know full well that it is not an issue and has no place in the present situation. We do know, though, that 256 saloon keepers that have been put out of business in Dallas and thousands of others all over the state, backed up by the big brewery owners are lining up solidly for Jim Ferguson and are making every effort to put him back in the governor's chair. They are making a desperate fight, with their sole object that of breaking down law and order, and yet they bring in the ku klux klan issue as a smoke screen in an effort to befuddle the people over the real questions they are facing."

General Crane's reference to the Catholic and Jew question in his Friday night address was mentioned by Judge Wills, who stated that the Ferguson speaker was not exactly accurate in all of his observations. He cited France, Italy, Spain, Portugal and the South American countries as ones in which the Catholic church was dominant and the temporal governments bowed to the will of the pope at Rome.

Flogging Cases.

Criticism offered by General Crane of Judge Robertson's failure to cause the arrest of 63 Dallas floggers drew fire from Judge Wills, who said that General Crane knew full well, or should know, that a district judge had nothing to do with the apprehen-

GRIFFIN TRIAL DUE MONDAY

Possibility of Continuance Or Venue Change Arises

The trial of C. E. Griffin, wealthy land owner and oil operator of Dundee is set for Monday morning in the 30th district court at Archer City. The case is expected to open at that time, although it is possible that a continuance or change of venue, perhaps both, may be sought by the defense. The state has announced that it was ready.

Griffin has been under bond of $10,000 following the death several months ago of Hugh Railey, another wealthy Dundee rancher who was shot while making an inspection trip along his ranch boundary lines. No one witnessed the shooting, but Griffin gave himself up immediately afterward and was formally charged with murder. He was subsequently indicted by the grand jury.

Enmity is said to have existed between the two men for some time.

The case will be handled for the state by District Attorney James V. Allred, Assistant District Attorney Robert K. Cruin and Leslie Humphrey, local attorney. Griffin is represented by W. F. Weeks and R. E. Taylor.

The rate is subject to ratification of the court Monday. Commissioner Knauth was not present yesterday and the matter will be given final approval on his return.

The bond issue was passed for the purpose of financing road construction in the vicinity of Electra, principally a hard road from that city to the storage dam of the irrigation project. DEFENSE CLAIMS VICTORY AFTER WITNESS TALKS

State's Expert Admits Boys' Minds Had Trace of Disorder

NO YOUTHS HANGED

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Testimony of Dr. H. Douglas Singer, fourth alienist for the prosecution, that Richard Loeb and Nathan Leopold, Jr., were entirely normal when they kidnaped and killed 14-year-old Robert Franks, last May 21, was subjected today to the expert cross examination of Clarence S. Darrow, chief defense counsel.

The hearing to determine whether Judge John R. Caverly shall inflict the death penalty on the youths on their plea of guilty, or shall impose penitentiary sentences upon the plea for mitigation of punishment, was enlivened by frequent clashes of Mr. Darrow with the witness and again with Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney.

Defense Claims Victory.

At adjournment the defense claimed that these were not gains:

Admission by Dr. Singer that he had reached conclusions by observation and not examination; that a split personality described by defense alienists as existing in both boys "might be evidence towards a mental disorder," that the present ages of both Loeb and Leopold is the critical time for developing "mental sickness," and that a dream life might influence a personality.

Dr. Singer did not deviate from his general declaration that he had found no evidence in his observations nor in the testimony of defense experts to sway him from his conclusions that there was "no evidence to indicate a diseased mind in either youth," and that they had displayed normal emotions and that their phantasy lives contained nothing abnormal.

340 Plead Guilty; One Hangs.

Mr. Darrow was gratified by getting into the record a statement by James Quinlan, at one time an official of the state penitentiary but now a lawyer, that 340 persons had pleaded guilty to murder in Illinois in the last ten years, and that only one, Thomas Fitzgerald, nearly forty years of age had been hanged. Mr. Darrow's point was to bring out that no youths of the ages of Leopold and Loeb had paid the supreme penalty upon pleas of guilty and that Mr. Crowe who has termed the Franks case a "perfect hanging case," sentenced Fitzgerald.

Once during today's short session Mr. Crowe charged that the defense was trying to cheat the law, Mr. Darrow countered by accusing Mr. Crowe of having held Loeb and Leopold illegally while he forced confessions from them. At another point the two argued heatedly when Mr. Crowe referred to the youths as "criminals."

Blake surrendered after the shooting. He said he was walking along the street when the bandit stuck a revolver against his ribs. "I grabbed the gun with both hands, gave it a twist and gained possession of it," Blake said. "The bandit started to run and I followed, firing. After I fired five shots the bandit fell dead.

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—New York's only woman magistrate, Jean Norris, today ordered Mrs. Marion B. Shaw, 24, an actress, taken from the court room to the detention pen because she was powdering her nose.

Mrs. Shaw, awaiting call to answer a charge of suspicion of grand larceny in passing a bad check, opened her vanity case and proceeded to erase the marks of a night in a cell.

"Don't let that woman make a boudoir of this court room," shouted Magistrate Norris and the offender was removed.

AGED TEXAS DIES FROM SLUGGING

Woman Out On Bond Following Fatal Auto Ride

By the Associated Press.

FORT WORTH, Aug. 16.—J. N. Biles, 65 years old, railroad man who was slugged and robbed Tuesday night while driving with a woman companion, died this morning. He never regained consciousness. The woman, Mrs. F. M. Mitchell, who is 35, was arrested after the slugging on a charge of robbery.

Mrs. Mitchell, who is also known as Mrs. Florence Bordes, is at liberty on $2,500 bond. She declared she is innocent.

Mrs. Gordes and Biles had gone for an automobile ride. Something got the matter with the automobile tail light and Biles got out to fix it. As he re-entered the car a highwayman slugged him and robbed him of jewelry and other valuables worth about $300.

An ambulance was summoned by Mrs. Gordes. Later the woman was arrested and questioned by police. The district attorney's office filed the charge against her on the theory that she knew the bandit or that she was aware of the plot to rob.

Leader Believes Clean Business Man Can Win in Texas

By The Associated Press.

BROWNVILLE, Texas, Aug. 16.—"The Lee telegram to Mrs. Ferguson does not meet my approval, and in my opinion does not express the sentiment of the republicans of Texas," R. B. Creager, national committeeman, said in answer to a direct question here this afternoon on his return from San Antonio.

Lee's Telegram

Mr. Lee sent a telegram to Mrs. Ferguson in which he expressed the hope that she would defeat Judge Robertson in the democratic run-off primary in order that "the state campaign would be relieved of the Klan issue."

"However, I see no occasion for any particular excitement or bitterness over the incident on the part of the members of the party in Texas" he continued, "and I am just as confident as I have been for some time that a clean, high-class business man will be elected the next governor of Texas on the republican ticket."

Asks Lee To Meeting

In reply to a telegram from Mr. Lee, in which the republican nominee for governor expressed a willingness to resign provided the party leaders are not in accord with his telegram to Mrs. Ferguson, Mr. Creager has wired to Mr. Lee asking him to be in Houston on August 26 if possible, or not later than August 27. As soon as a reply is received, Mr. Creager will ask Judge C. A. Boynton, who is acting chairman of the republican executive committee in the absence from the state of the chairman, to call a meeting of the committee in Houston on one of these dates.

"In the event Mr. Lee's offer to resign as the nominee of the party is accepted at the Houston meeting, the vacancy will likely be filled at that time," Mr. Creager said. "According to the law it is the duty of the executive committee to pick the nominee in a case of this kind. I am sure that the matter will work out harmoniously and satisfactory."

Advisors Called

Mr. Creager explained that the meeting in Houston had been planned before the telegram was sent to Mrs. Ferguson by Mr. Lee and that it would be attended by the executive committee and 40 or 50 other leading republicans, who will be invited. The Lee matter will be in addition to other matters to come before the meeting, he said.

Having just returned from the state convention in Fort Worth, Mr. Creager expressed the opinion that the party had named a splendid state ticket and that the platform adopted by it was not only the shortest but one of the best ever written by any committee.

Floating Cabaret Mystifies Dry Officials

By The Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Federal authorities tonight moved to learn the identity of the 17,000 ton "seagoing booze palace" which was reported today by the Herald Tribune to be cruising off the 12 mile limit, dispensing pre-prohibition concoctions to wealthy land lubbers.

Little stock was taken, however, in the newspapers reporter's evidence that the huge passenger ship on which he told of having spent a night in the company of gay and liberal drinkers—men and women—was the former North German Lloyd Liner Friedrich Der Grosse.

Dimgree Over Identity.

The description of the vessel, her dimensions and equipment, tallied more closely, said the authorities, with that of the North German Lloyd-built liner Kronprin Wilhelm, which was interned during the war, became an American transport, was renamed the Von Steuben and disappeared from official records last March 14, when the shipping board sold her at Baltimore for scrapping purposes.

Plenty of time has intervened since March for the multichased owners of the Von Steuben to have overhauled her and installed the glimmering bar, cabaret and hotel accommodations described by the news reporter, authorities pointed out.

At the same time, they declared there was ample evidence that the Friedrich der Grosse, a smaller vessel, was burned in the Pacific last year, while sailing under the post-war name City of Honolulu.

Jurisdiction Questioned

Officials disagree as to the extent of the government's jurisdiction over the floating saloon, or those wealthy visitors from shore, who went by power-boat, rum runner or private yacht to partake of the mystery ship's convivviality.

Captain W. V. E. Jacobs, commander of the coast guard, New York district, announced he had started an investigation to establish the identity of the craft. Then, he said, the government under whose flag she is registered—the news reporter said the British flag—would be called upon to suppress the vessel's activities.

Furthermore, said Captain Jacobs, the coast guard could arrest, fine and reprimand, on charges of "going foreign" the crew and passengers of any small boat that crossed the 12 mile limit in the direction of the mystery ship. Should the small boat be picked up in the vicinity of the "Deep Sea Emporium" said Captain Jacobs, its occupants could be more heavily fined and more severely reprimanded for

30 STOCKS SET NEW HIGH PRICE

Parley Developments Prove Stimulating To All Issues

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Thirty stocks mounted to new high prices for the year in today's brief but active session of the stock market, which was featured by a brisk demand for the standard industrials shares.

Buying was influenced by London cables stating that the allies and the Germans had reached a compromise agreement on the evacuation of the Ruhr, by the more optimistic tone of the weekly mercantile reviews and the probability of a long period of easy money rates.

U. S. Steel common resumed its traditional role of bellwether of the market, duplicating its year's hight 110, and then slipping back to 109 3-4 for a net gain of one point on the day. American Can closed more than two points higher at 121 3-8 after touching a new peak at 121 3-4.

Copper provided seven of the day's new highs although some of the gains were small. American Smelting led this group with a net gain of nearly 1 1-2 points at 73 3-4. Shares of motor companies engaged in the manufacture of trucks made the best showing in the automobile group, all the Mack Truck issues and White Motors climbed to new high grounds.

Rails failed to move forward as a group although they developed some strength, notably Southern Railway, which touched the record high prices of 68 5-8. Frisco preferred and Texas and Pacific also broke through their previous tops.

Other issues to sell at the year's best prices included Marine preferred, Allis Chalmer, Brooklyn Edison, Montgomery Ward, Associated Dry Goods, Liggett and Myers, and the B stock of General American Tank and Texas Gulf Sulphur.

Oils were rather backward, Pan-American B losing on profit taking.

Grain Letter

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Wheat: Reports of frost from a number of points in Canada is mainly responsible for a sharp davance of prices. December reached 1.38 3-4 and May 1.44 1-4, new highs for the season. Winnipeg advanced 2c and Liverpool, after opening 1 3-8 to 1 7-8 high closed 2 1-4@2 3-8 higher.

The movement of cash wheat is liberal but there is an active demand for all offerings. With the probability of continued active demand for our high quality wheat with reduced supplies in other countries, best opinion of the trade does not regard present price level unreasonably high.

Corn: Prices advanced about four cents making an unusual advance of 8 to 9 cents in 2 days. Some of the buying is attributed to covering by short interest, but the bull side was helped by continued cool backward weather over the corn belt, hopes of even a fair crop thus diminishing. All options made new highs of the season. Corn is in a tight situation. The market is a weather market, the future course depending upon what the weather will do in the future.

Oats: Prices advanced in sympathy with corn, all options reaching high marks but as compared with corn prices oats prices are relatively cheap considering the feeding value of the two grains.

Hogs Advance Within 10 Cents of Recent High

By The Associated Press.

FORT WORTH, Aug. 16.—An advance in the hog market today placed prices back to within ten cents of the high of the week, and within 25 cents of last week's close, the top being 9.90, with bulk sales at 9.50 to 9.75. The trade was active and averaged steady to 10 cents higher. Around 700 hogs were yarded.

The estimate called for 800 head of cattle and calves. Everything met with a relatively good demand, prices on all classes being considered steady.

Corn Makes Sensational Rise On Reports Of Frost in North

By The Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Violent upward swings in price and incessant rushes made to buy, made today one long to be remembered in the grain business here. Thorough alarm over chances that the unripened corn crop in widespread stretches of the best producing territory would be caught by frost was the chief disturbing influence.

The corn market quickly ran up as much as 5 1-4 cents above yesterday's gain of 5 7-8 cents, and closed excited at a net advance ranging from 1 to 4 1-4 cents, December 1.18 3-4 to 1.19 and May 1.20 1-4 to 1.20 3-4. Wheat and corn were also greatly unsettled, wheat finishing 1 1-2 to 3 1-2 cents higher, December 1.33 to 1.33 1-8 and May 1.37 3-4 to 1.38, with oats 1 1-8 to 1 7-8 cents up, and provisions ranging from 7 cents decline to a rise of 10 cents.

Advance reports from crop experts who had just traversed a large part of Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, added to the force of buying stampede in the corn market, and were supplemented by news of further unseasonable cold, wet weather detrimental to corn and oats. Heavy profit taking sales of both cereals failed to turn either down grade.

Wheat advances were especially stimulated by frost reports from Canada, and by optimism over the agreement between France and Germany.

TOM BALL OUT FOR ROBERTSON

Candidate Against Ferguson In 1924 Is Still Opposing Him

In answer to a telegram from Robert F. Farmer, chairman of the Wichita County Robertson for Governor club, Thomas H. Ball of Houston, candidate for governor in 1914 against James E. Ferguson, has written Mr. Farmer the following statement concerning his position in the present gubernatorial campaign:

To the Democratic Voters of Texas:

In 1914 the prohibition hosts of Texas demanded that I should make the race for governor against Ferguson. The result you know, and the manner and methods by which my defeat was accomplished are not necessary to be here detailed. Suffice it to say that when Ferguson was elected governor I did nothing to show ill will or to embarrass him in that office.

No Part in Impeachment.

I took no part in his impeachment and gave no advice to anyone in regard thereto, as I did not deem it becoming in me to do so. When grave charges were brought against him by the house of representatives, which employed General Crane to conduct the prosecution. I did not go about the legislature, but accepted the verdict of the senate, rendered by both his friends and apponents, that he was guilty as charged.

Since his impeachment, Ferguson has run for office, I believe, every two years, defiantly denouncing those who impeached him and asking for vindication. I have displayed no personal activity in opposing him in his various ventures, but have contented myself with voting against him and refusing to join in his justification.

I do not propose now to take the stump, but as so many of my friends and supporters have been writing and wiring me as to what course I thought should be pursued by those who like myself, had not supported either Judge Robertson or Mrs. Ferguson in the late primaries, I feel they are entitled to know what I think about it, and why.

Ferguson Never Repentant.

It is conceded that when Ferguson was denied a place on the ballot he had his wife's name substituted, and both have made the campaign upon the basis that Ferguson was entitled to vindication from the charges upon which he was found guilty. His wife's attitude in the matter is consistent with that of good women generally, who stick to their husbands after conviction and seek executive clemency in their behalf.

Ferguson, however, has never been repentant, but always defiant, and has denounced everybody connected with his impeachment. In each of his campaigns Ferguson has succeeded in arraying behind him his old socialistic and liquor following, and under our primary system, with the vote divided among numerous candidates, in his senatorial race he got in the run-off primary, and has succeeded in the pending gubernatorial race Mrs. Ferguson in the run-off.

If Mrs. Ferguson is elected, it will be placing Ferguson in power, vindicated or justified in all his acts; and the loyalty of his wife will place him in position to accomplish his ends by building up a powerful machine, with all that he stands for dominant in Texas affairs, after his wife has served the one term, which he says is all she wants.

Compact With Brewers.

I cannot be a party to serving his purpose or his ambition, for the reason that I have always held "public office to be a public trust," and I regard Ferguson's compact with the breweries and liquor dealers to see that no anti-liquor legislation was passed during his administration, and as a result of which, as found by the senate, he received a sum of money much larger than that received by Fall from Doheny or Sinclair, in addition to other charges of which he was found guilty, cannot be condoned or justified without lowering all public standards to a point never tolerated or considered.

The only excuse offered by those who prosecuted him and found him guilty, and their following, for their present attitude, that I have heard offered, is that Judge Robertson is supported by the ku klux klan. I have never been a member of that organization; I have never excused the acts charged against some of its members of going outside of the courts of the country to punish those whom they considered guilty of immoral conduct; I have never justified it, as an organization, in participating, as such, in party primaries; but I have not been able to join those who have seen fit to engage in passionate assaults upon them and the denouncement of its membership as being composed of cowards and assassins.

I have been unable to believe that associations of that character would have confined themselves to the character of offenders who are the alleged victims of summary punishment by them. So far as I know, no one has ever been punished by them for honesty, morality or integrity, in public or private life, and while I deny the right of the klan, or anybody else, to take the law in their hands, or the propriety of any secret organization, as such participating in our party primaries, I am of the opinion that a campaign against such practices pitched upon higher grounds than the anti-klan fight has been pitched would have been of more service and have accomplished better results, with less bitterness and religious dissension among our people.

Not For Klan Candidates.

In the last senatorial primary I did not support Bob Henry, the klansman who was running with a special dispensation, or Senator Mayfield, who is supposed to have quietly received the bulk of the klan vote. I supported Cullen Thomas, but as between Mayfield and Ferguson in the run-off primary, I had no hesitation in giving Senator Mayfield my support. In the late primary I supported one of the anti-klan candidates, and now with the run-off primary as between Judge Robertson and Ferguson, I had no difficulty in deciding to give my support to Judge Robertson.

I regard the klan as an upheaval and aftermath of the dislocation of the world and its social and economic conditions by the World war, and I look to see it go as the old ku klux klan did, and which, while it existed, acted without the law to accomplish its purposes, as did the California Vigilantes.

Believes Klan Will Pass.

The klan will pass as "ships in the night," and maybe 50 years from now someone will be found to write, as a number of old ku klux klan members have done, of some good that the klan did during its temporary existance; but, unless all history is changed, there will be no defenders of those who reward a betrayal of a great public trust by restoring to power and office, with their approval, one of the greatest exponents of such conduct in office.

I can waive my objections to the klan support of Judge Robertson, without endorsement of the things which are charged against the klan, but I cannot waive my objections to Ferguson's methods in obtaining the office of governor of Texas and the manner in which he discharged that great trust while in office, without a surrender of the ideals which I have always entertained.

Others might differ with me and pursue an opposite course, and they may not be able to understand or concur in my reasons, but I cannot understand the reasoning by which those who fought so long for clean politics and high standards of government, can allow their prejudice against a transient organization to warrant them in putting the seal of their approval upon official standards which mean, if followed, their being lowered to appoint where public office would no longer be a badge of honor.

My answer to our candidate's courageous words is that were I in Michigan, I would not vote to justify Newberry; if in Oklahoma, I would vote against Walton's vindication; if I were in Kentucky I would vote against Langley's vindication; if I were in New Mexico and Fall were running for office, I would vote against his vindication; and I have no disposition in Texas to vote for Ferguson's vindication or justification, and I would not directly, by voting for Ferguson's proxy, who joins him in a demand for public repudiation of the action of the legislature in impeaching him for grave and unforgivable offenses.

Too Soon.

You ask me why I sit and weep,
While others seem so glad,
Why tears roll down my dreary cheek.
And I alone am sad?

The summer has no charm for me,
Though all the rest feel gay.
I had my own vacation first
And now I have to pay. J. A. S.

HE ANALYZES SYSTEM EFFECT

Would "Bank" Power of Existing Electrical Power Plants

(Written Especially for The Record News.)

BABSON PARK, Mass., Aug. 16.—The possible development of 4,000,000 electrical horse power on the St. Lawrence river, whether the waterway project is undertaken or not, has again brought up the problem of the effect of super-power developments on existing public utility properties now generating and selling electrical power. At least one investment authority, Roger W. Babson, believes that such a development will strengthen the local companies and work to the advantage of those who own their securities.

Would Bank Power.

"Super-power proposes to 'bank' the power of existing producers of electrical energy by connecting individual systems and adding the output of water powers that may be developed as economical sources of electrical energy," says the statistician. "A single system has been proposed, for instance, that would embrace all territory between Boston and Washington, D. C. This would immediately make the same electrical power available in this entire territory that now exists only in our larger cities. Manufacturing under these circumstances need not concentrate in the congested districts, but could locate wherever natural advantages of raw material, nearness to market or other factors might dectate. Efficient, economical and almost unlimited electrical power would be available anywhere.

"Operating individually each company must maintain equipment to carry a peak load just as banks in the old days were forced to protect themselves with a reserve large enough to meet emergency demands. Under a super power arrangement with scores of plants operating on a connected system this reserve capacity is not required. Whenever any one company has demand for more power than it can produce the surplus can be drawn from surrounding properties. Likewise if a power producer has a hydro electric plant that will make more power than the immediate locality demands, the surplus can be supplied to others. This power 'borrowed or loaned,' is measured as it flows from one locality to another and the individual companies balance accounts and settle differences. Here we have a federal reserve system in the power field that pools all resources for the benefit of the group and eliminate the margin of protection that formerly had to be maintained by each individual operator.

How It Would Work.

"Assuming that a super-power project is put into operation, let's see what happens to the individual company. First, it continues to sell power and serve its locality just as it always has. The distributing end of the business is exactly the same except that the smaller company may be able to offer more power than it previously could deliver. On the producing end the arrangement offers several advantages and no great disadvantages. The emergency capacity already referred to need not be maintained. Auxiliary plants may be put into regular operation as increases in demand warrant until the entire capacity is running regularly. The super-power system will furnish additional power as it is needed. If none is used, none is paid for. In some cases this extra equipment may be put to work at once and the surplus power sold through the system to other companies needing it. Equipment, then, will work a greater part of the time. Many small companies may find that they can buy power from the system at less than it costs to produce it in a small plant in which case they close their plant and continue to sell power on a larger margin of profits. If a company, on the other hand, can produce more cheaply than it can buy from the system it continues to produce and only buys power in an emergency. A high cost producer then gets its power for less than it is now paying and is therefore in a stronger position. A low cost producer continues to operate exactly as it is today except that it is relieved of the burden of auxiliary equipment and has a possible market for its surplus power. In any case the property is in a stronger position and should be a better investment.

Public Would Benefit.

"A tremendous public advantage would also accrue from the economies of a super-power system. The development of water powers and the organization of systems that supply uniform electric service over large areas would make possible the electrification of many railroads. Where steam power is necessary the energy could be generated at the nearest possible point to the railroads and transmitted by high power lines to the point where it is needed.

"It is estimated that our energy requirements for 1930 will approximate 31,000,000,000 kilowatt hours. Super-power systems could produce and deliver this volume at a saving of $239,000,000 over what it would cost if produced under the individual meet system. A saving of some 50,000,000 tons of coal would also be made by the super-organization in producing this volume of power.

"Just now, when we have a tremendous cash reserve and business is a bit slack—the Babson chart shows general activity at 14 per cent below normal—we may well turn our attention toward super-power projects. And the present owners of power and light securities," concluded Mr. Babson, "can well afford to interest themselves in the promotion and development of this more effective organization of our power resources."

The Wise One.

Due to an accident, Mrs. Spronditt was spending a few days in the hospital.

"Yes," the nurse told her husband, "your wife can see you, but she can't talk much."

Mr. Spronditt winked knowingly. "Don't try to kid me, sister," he said.

Terrell Rancher Would Build Dam Near Cotulla

Matthew Cartwright, rancher and large business man of Terrell was in Wichita Falls Saturday inspecting the local irrigation ditches and the large dam in view of promoting a similar project in Cotulla. As yet plans are premature for the irrigation project in La Salle county and Mr. Carwright was merely in this city to inspect the local works for the purpose of gathering some idea for a similar system in La Salle county. Some irrigation work has been done in La Salle county but Mr. Cartwright is interested in a scheme by which an irrigation project will be launched in the county with an expenditure of from one to three million dollars.

Cotulla is situated between San Antonia and Laredo. No definite plans have wet been formed and Mr. Cartwright's visit to the local dam was merely to inspect "one of the greatest irrigation propects in the United States."

Building Here Goes Into Slump

The complete list is a follows:

J. W. Williams, repair residence, north of Wood street $1,000.

J. F. Coffman, repair residence, 706 Harrison, $125.

Ten Letters Tax Roll Completed

Ten letters have been completed on the county tax assessing rolls for the year, Assessor Irvan Deaton announced Saturday. Two machines are at work typing the rolls, one starting at the front and the other at the rear of the alphabet. The letters A, B, S, T, U, V, W, X, Y and Z are all finished and a start will be made on the others Monday.

The law provides that the tax assessor shall complete his roll and turn it over to the tax collector by October 1 of each year. The local rolls will be finished before that date, however, and will probably go to Tax Collector Raley by the 25th of September.

THREE HELD IN ELECTRA CHARGED WITH BURGLARY

Three thieves, two white men and a negro, were arrested in Electra Saturday morning, by Constable Tom Shook and are now held in the county jail, facing charges of burglary. It is alleged that on Sunday night, August 10, robbers entered an Electra home and stole five suits of clothing and jewelry valued at several hundred dollars. A search has been in progress since that time and it is believed that the arrest Saturday will clear up the case.

All three men are alleged to have been implicated in the case. No charges have been filed as yet.

TEXAS TO SHARE IN SOUVENIRS

Next Governor To Have Hard Tasking Giving Out War Trophies

By Bascom N. Timmons
Record News Staff.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 16.—A nice easy job awaits the next governor of Texas—the distribution of the Texas share of the captured enemy war trophies.

Secretary of War Weeks has written to Governor Neff and the governors of the 47 other states that there is at this time no money available for carrying out the provisions of the act passed by the recent session of congress for the equitable distribution of these trophies, and hence no time can be set for their delivery.

May Seek Trophies.

It is expected that an appropriation will be obtained at the coming session of congress, but before distribution can begin Governor Neff's term will have expired and his successor will get the job.

Texas congressmen who have been besieged with requests for these materials know that it isn't going to be an easy job to settle the rival claims of towns.

In his letter to Governor Neff it was suggested by Secretary Weeks that the governor might desire to turn the distribution over to a board or commission. If this is done either by Governor Neff or his successor the the governor will be relieved of the detail and the chief of ordinance will deal directly with such board or commission.

There are approximately 2,532,232 captured articles, which will be turned over to the various states, territories and the District of Columbia, proportioned according to the number of troops furnished by each state or territory.

Texas Gets Big Share.

Texas having furnished 174,061 as her increment of the nation's total armed force of 4,034,743 will share accordingly.

Judging from letters to Texas senators and representatives it has been believed in Texas that there would be enough captured German cannon to decorate every court house square in Texas, but all the trophies captured is not enough for that. There are, however, for Texas, about 70 big guns of different sorts and 179 vehicular instruments of war, a total of 249 altogether, just three less than the number of Texas counties.

Here are some of them:

Thirteen 76-mm. minnenwerfers, with wheels; and one without trail; six 77-mm. guns and carriages, standard, and five light field; one 88-mm. gun and carriage, Austrian, non-recoil; eleven 105-mm. howitzers and carriages, of which three are short, three light field, two heavy, one heavy field, and one heavy field, non-recoil, one 120-mm. gun and carriage, bronze, non-recoil; one 135-mm. gun and carriage, long field; three 150-mm. mortars and carriage, non-recoil; five 150-mm. howitzers and carriages, short; five 150-mm. howitzers and carriages, heavy; one 150-mm. gun and carriage, long, non-recoil; one 150-mm. gun and carriage, long field, naval; one 150-mm. gun, long field, on transport vehicle, naval; one 150-mm. howitzer and carriage, with double recoil cylinder; five 170-mm. minnewerfers with wheels and one without wheels; two 210-mm. howitzers and carriages; one 210-mm. gun mortar, non-recoil on transport vehicle; one 240-mm. trench mortars, non-recoil and four 250-mm minnewerfers, on wheels.

In the list of one of the rare things to go to Texas is one captured observation tower.

The vehicles to go to the Lone Star state includes those used for guns of different sizes, ammunition wagons, escort wagons, caissons and limbers. Indeed, the war department doubts if Texas will really want these trophies, and if it does not only the seventy big guns will go for distribution as outside decorations for state, county and city buildings.

The list of articles for museums or for collections in libraries or other designated places where there are no museums is a large one. It includes sixteen armor bodies; 2,020 plain bayonets; 740 sawtooth bayonets; 366 canteens; 69 brass cartridge cases, 77-mm. long, 356 brass cartridge cases, 150-mm. howitzer; 56 brass cartridge cases, 210-mm. howitzer; 46 cartridge cases, 105-mm. howitzer; 27 brass cartridge cases for 175-mm. railway gun; one brass cartridge cases, 250-mm. gun.

There will be few towns in Texas that do not get captured German helments, for 600 steel and 23 Uhlan helmets go to the Lone Star state. It will also get sixty-two lances, Uhlan assorted, of wool and steel.

BIBLE THOUGHT AND PRAYER

THE GIFT OF PEACE:—Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.—John 14:27.

PRAYER:—
"Peace, perfect peace, by thronging duties pressed;
To do the will of Jesus, this is rest."

DID YOU KNOW?

That Senator James E. Couzens has been made chairman of the committee to ivestigate the internal revenue bureau and that Couzens freely admits that he is after the scalp of Andrew W. Mellon?

That republican leaders of Michigan say that Senator Couzens will be defeated for re-nomination in the Michigan primary, but the managers of the Couzens campaign are positive that their independent senator will go over the top an easy victor?

That to win the support of the La Follette progressives in the November election, members of congress must have voted for the bonus, for the democratic tax bill, for the child labor amendment and for all measures designed to revise the transportation act of 1920, including repeal of the so-called guarantee clause and the railroad labor board?

That John W. Davis has his speech of acceptance ready and that he will track the democratic platform, including the planks relative to the league of nations and religious liberty?

That State Chairman Herbert A. Pell of the New York state committee is of the opinion that it will be necessary for the democratic leaders of New York to make a more explicit statement or plank in their state platform than the plank which was adopted by the Madison Square Garden convention?

That Rudolph Spreckles of California, the sugar king and a man of many millions, is backing Senator La Follette for president and hopes to enlist the support of the native sons of California in his candidate for president?

That Senator Hiram Johnson, a native son of California, is sulking and will not declare his intentions until dog days have come and gone?

That Senator La Follette has adopted "Progressive" as the name of his party, chosen the American liberty bell as the official emblem of his ticket, has asked for the support of American women and has appointed a special committee to aid in electing friendly senators and representatives?

That Henry Morganthau, eminent banker and jewish philanthropist, has been made financial director of the Davis campaign, Henry L. Rosenfelt, another prominent American jew, has been made financial director of the La Follette campaign and will begin by asking for dollar subscriptions, while Colonel William L. Butler of Massachusetts, who boasts that his ancestors came over in the Mayflower, will direct the fat frying for the republicans?

That La Follette electors will be placed in the ballot in forty-eight American states and that Robert M. La Follette jr., and Mrs. Edward T. Costigan of Colorado will direct the work?

That John W. Davis received a campaign contribution of twenty dollars from a carpenter who lives at Clarksburg and it is the only direct contribution the democratic nominee has received?

GEORGIA.

Georgia as a cotton state was hit hard in 1923. Now cotton prospects in that state are better than they have been in several years. Georgia is a great peach growing state, but the peach growers have been hit hard this year.

In July in ten days, Georgia growers threw away four million bushels of peaches or eight thousand cars. There was a reason for it. The whole crop ripened during July, markets were glutted and peaches were not bringing shipping charges. This led to the determination of growers not to ship any more this year than the markets will consume.

According to a correspondent the situation was tragic throughout the peach belt. Late in July peaches were selling at eight cents a basket or forty cents a crate, hardly enough to pay for the crates and baskets in which they were packed, with no allowance for picking, packing and hauling.

In New York the price was as low as sixty cents a crate. Nearly two thousand cars of Georgia peaches were sold at prices below the actual freight charges in a single week. For the grower to break even in the New York market it is claimed that a price of one dollar and fifty cents per crate or approximately one and one-half cents a peach is necessary. Any return above that price is profit.

Total shipments of peaches last year for the entire season over a longer period was 8,701 cars. Total shipments this year to July 22 when the shut-down came was slightly under 7,500 cars.

There was the greatest peach crop in the history of Georgia produced this year but the markets would not consume the crop. Will poor old Jones get his canned peaches cheap the coming Christmas, or are there no canneries in Georgia?

A WILLING WORKER.

It is said the hard work of republican campaign oratory will be borne by General Charles G. Dawes, candidate for vice president on the Coolidge ticket. Governor Charles W. Bryan is a hard worker but the managers of the national campaign are to keep the governor going in the northwest states and Kansas and Colorado. He speaks the language of the natives and doesn't have to be hobbled away out in the blooming and bounding west.

DEAR MR. DAVIS:—YOUR INVITATION TO BATTLE IS CORDIALLY ACCEPTED

Their Name Was Legion

"One morning Jim opened his mail to find an anonymous letter which made charges against his wife and some man in town whose name Anita could not recall. Jim accused her, then went to the man in question, accusing him. I guess there was the usual scene—and a fight, in which Jim was bested. Those were drinking days, and once the whiskey had begun to work on him, he bought a revolver. Jim went with him, and there drank a number of glasses of whiskey. He hazily remembers Bartholomew arguing with him to be sensible and to trust his wife. Then, according to his story, his mind became a blank. When he awoke he dragged himself out of a drunken stupor to find that he was in his own home, that his revolver was clasped in his right hand, and that across the room, lay the dead body of his wife.

CHAPTER XXI.
The Sway of Justice.

"It was very evident what had happened," resumed Mrs. Jordan, "drunk, he had wandered home, they had quarreled and he had killed her Jim staggered forth, gave himself up to the first policeman he met—and confessed."

"It seems that after the arrest, Bartholomew came forward as Jim's friend and took charge of the baby, stating to the court that he was sending it out west to be adopted by a childless family. Then one night, in the darkness of the jail, someone slipped a packet into his cell. It contained saws, money and an address—the name of Franniston out here in Wyoming. He sawed his way out of the comparatively flimsy jail, and escaped. A week later he presented himself to Franniston here in Bellaine and asked for a job. He was given one, without question. Nothing was said to indicate that Franniston knew his real identity, nothing done to show that Franniston had the slightest idea that this man was the father of the girl whom Franniston had given his own name, but whom he had not adopted. So the relationship began. Then, a year later, the truth dawned on Jim. Bartholomew showed up in Bellaine, under the name of Barrows. Franniston could reveal the true identity of the girl, and she would be stained with the blackness of being the daughter of a man who had killed his wife. So he had Jim in his power."

"But was anything ever said to indicate that?" Was—"

"Nothing."

Bart Rogers still stared at the carpet.

"It was strange that the officials back east should learn of Jim's whereabouts so quickly—especially when they had been unable to find him for years. I wonder—"

"Jim says that Graham was the jailer back in Alponia. I suppose he was bribed to sneak the saws into the cell. Anyway, there was an investigation afterward and he lost his job. Then he came out here. So there—" concluded Mrs. Jordan—'is the story."

For a moment Bart stood uncertain, looking dully out the window, at the casket-like boxes which had been piled on the front veranda. Then, with a sudden resolve, he hurried up the stairway and to the doorway of the room Anita was in.

"It's Bart," he announced when her faint answer had come to his knock, "Bart Rogers. May I talk to you a moment?"

Assent came from within. Bart opened the door, and walked impulsively to the quiet, white-faced girl by the window.

"I just wanted to tell you that I've heard—the whole thing," he blurted. "And that I don't care who your father is or what he's done or—or anything of the kind! That I'll help you in any way you say and that I—I—I'm proud to know you as if you were—were a queen!"

Then just as suddenly as he had spoken, he was silent again, with a strange, boyish bashfulness. A second more and he had closed the door behind him and was hurrying down the hall, seething inwardly at his cowardice—for Bart, as he had hurried up the stairs had intended to tell her something far more important—at least to him!

When the streets of Bellaine became ablaze again with the torches and gasoline flares of their illicit occupants, it was with a surcharged air of uncertainty that appeared to pervade everything. Bart learned the reason.

It was in the figure of a big man who rolled down the center of the sidewalk, a bandage about his head, his gait and his expression evidence of the fact that the state of intoxication begun the day before had not been allowed to wane.

"What they goin' to do with a barbed wire fence, huh?" he sneered as some frightened concessionaire approached him. "Answer me that. Put that fathead mayor and his tin horn marshal in it, so we can look at the monkeys. That's all. Forget it—I told you that I'd see you were all right, didn't I?"

"Bull" Franniston had come out in the open. No longer was there any concealment about the fact that it was he who formed the bulwark upon which rested the hopes of Bellaine's unwelcome contingent. But Bart walked on, knowing that many men awaited his command at the mayor's home.

They came forth seemingly from a hundred places about the house as he reached the veranda and made himself known to the sentry stationed there. A moment later Bud Tarko, appearing taller and slimmer than ever in the shadows, slid forth, and in muffled tones began the giving of commands.

Ammunition was passed around while Bart Rogers took his place by the side of the mayor and worked at the lid of a case of guns. Names were called, men stepped forth, until the last of the two long lines were equipped. Once more came Tarko's voice, and this time, there was no attempt at repression.

"Aw-right, you fellows. Don't wait for no orders. Jam a clip o' cartridges in them cannons and fix them bayonets. I've run out o' commands. Hear me? Fix them bayonets!"

Bart Rogers stepped forward and in an even voice addressed the men. "I want you men to work in pairs," he said, "and take every person who looks like a gambler, a crook or a bootlegger to the stockade. If they show resistance—give 'em the bayonet! Do you understand?"

There was an unanimous answer. Bart grinned, then suddenly he found himself swinging with the old swagger of a line sergeant. A bark came into his voice.

"Tenshun!" He called merely from habit. "Ri-g-h-t—dress! Front! Squ-a-a-ds right! Hup!" Then with the old sing-song of the drill field echoing instinctively he took his place at the side of the marching men.

They were soon on the main street, marching toward town, the reflected lights gleaming on their affixed bayonets, the rifles clicking softly with the jar of the steady pace. A block more and Bart brought his company to a halt. Five minutes later, split up into three segments, the work of the night was on.

In the dance halls, pianos ceased suddenly to bang as determined appearing men showed themselves in the doorways, closed the pages of exit, and began to sift the crowd for the persons they sought.

Into the soft drink "parlors" they went, to search beneath the bars, to drag forth cartons and cases of bootleg, and to break the bottles by twos and fours and dozens with the stocks of their rifles. Into the tended city east of town, where gaunt-eyed moral lepers plied their trade, they hurried, to round up the cursing, snarling women and start them toward the stockade.

CHAPTER XXII.
Franniston on Fire.

The stockade began to fill. Bart sought the mayor.

"We'll have to start getting rid of this crowd," he announced. "This place'll be jammed in a minute. Don't you believe you'd better start court?"

The mayor grinned and turned to two of his men.

"Get a table somewhere and confiscate a couple of those gasoline torches. We're going to start building a new city hall!"

Court proceedings were simple:

"Guilty or not guilty?"

"Not guilty, your honor."

'All right. Go back there in the stockade and think it over." Then he cocked his head toward the heavens. "Sorry we haven't got a roof there. Looks a little like rain."

"Er—er—guilty, your honor"

"Thanks. Always liked honesty. Just for that, I'll let you off with a hundred and costs. Pay the gentleman with the six-shooter here and get out of town on the 1:22."

"Yes, sir, your honor"

"Thanks for the donation. We'll put your name in the corner-stone of the new city hall and jail. Mr. Clerk, call the next case!"

Bart laughed joyously and happily and moved on. But at the corner he halted.

Up in the office of "Bull" Franniston a lamp was burning. Two men were there—Bart could not see their forms—but the shadows against the back wall and ceiling were evident. It was "Bull" Franniston and the man who cared to be known to the world only as Leon Barrows.

"Get over there and guard that door!" Bart gave the order hurriedly to his legionnaire. Then Bart's attention centered again upon the room above.

Plainly, from the shadows, the men were quarrelling.

"Give me back that memorandum!" shouted "Bull." 'Hear me? Give me back that memorandum!"

A second's pause, while the other man apparently pled for restraint. "Bull" flung wide his arms.

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

LEO

Fairly good vibrations prevail, but the aspects do not counsel any great activity, either mental or physical; they portend an absence of friction and misunderstanding, and augur an atmosphere of restful recreation and a happy frame of mind. In the early evening, there are some slightly adverse indications, but they are of very short duration and, with ordinary conditions, will not cause either worry or anxiety.

A child born today will suffer from serious sickness during infancy, but, once this period is passed, it will develop both quickly and strongly. Its character will be rather weak; its disposition, attractive and affectionate; its mentality normal. The chief requisite in this child's training is strength of purpose, and the ability to say "no"; it should not be allowed too much indulgence, but should be self-helpful and self-reliant.

If today is your birthday, you are painstaking and conscientious in all that you do, and your integrity of purpose is unquestioned; you, however, lack in your "make-up" what is known as initiative. Ideas are the most valuable commodity in the world today; and ideas are born of initiative.

This is, of course, a quality hard to develop unless the original brain soil be favorable. You can, however, if you wish to do so, acquire it, as its main secret is knowledge, mastery of your task, plus dogged determination to ponder every difficulty until your brain evolves a remedy.

Do not think that initiative is wholly a heaven-sent gift; it is largely the fruit of study, of the exercise of imagination, of a spirit of daring, and of deep thinking.

You possess the several qualities of which initiative is compounded, viz, judgment, ideals, and courage. Remember that initiative begins, never with big, but with little things.

Advancement is applied initiative. Procrastination runs in your blood, and you have formed the habit of putting off; of deliberating too long. Are you willing to be like the multitude whose fit epitaph would be "Didn't dare to begin?"

Successful people born on this date are:

George W. Warren, organist and composer.

Peter Collier, scientist.

Michael A. Carrigan, archbishop of New York.

Laura de F. Gordon, lawyer and journalist.

'Barnyard Golf' Ranks High In Michigan Student Sports

By The Associated Press.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Aug.—Horseshoe pitching is more popular than baseball with University of Michigan students participating in intramural athletics, statistics compiled by Fielding H. Yost, director of athletics, have revealed.

The report shows that 670 found diversion in the ancient and honorable game of barnyard gold, while only 150 sought to emulate Ty Cobb or Babe Ruth.

Of the more than 8,000 students participating in intramural sports, 1,300 have shown a favoritism for basketball, and 1,178 for playground ball. Speedball, drawing 900, comes next in line and bowling with 717 students regularly on the alleys, is fourth.

Gymnastics was the least popular, only 35 participating. Indoor baseball attracted but 50.

Secret Societies Blamed For Philippines' Disorders

By The Associated Press.

MANILA, Aug. — Approximately 200 secret and fraternal societies are now in existance in the Philippines, according to an official report by the intelligence office of the Philippine constabulary, which asserts that most of the labor troubles in Manila as well as in the provinces are due to the activities of these societies. The report also declares that the agrarian troubles which flare up at intervals are attributable to these societies.

In Manila alone there are 134 secret societies and the majority of these have been organized during the last three years, according to the constabulary report.

In Occidental Negros, a rich sugar cane district, numerous cases of lawlessness have been reported and officials declare that rivalry between the two of the most powerful of the secret societies has been at the bottom of the trouble.

Bulgar Prohibitionists Try to Force Government

By The Associated Press.

PLODIV, Bulgaria, Aug.—The prohibition movement is gaining strength in Bulgaria, although this is a wine growing and spirit distilling country.

The strength of the movement has just been made evident here by the holding of the annual meeting of the four Associated Prohibition associations.

Among the resolutions passed was a call upon the government to put a stop to wine manufacturing, distilling and the importation of liquors, and also to submit the issue of prohibition to referendums in all cities, towns and villages.

A resolution was unanimously passed demanding that Premier Tsankoff carry out his promise of last March to submit the question of prohibition to parliament as a government measure.

British Six Meter Yachts Ready for Oyster Bay Event

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, August — The quartet of yachts of the international six meter class which will represent Great Britain in the contest for the British-American Cup in Oyster Bay next September has been completed by the selection of Lady Constance Baird's "Thistle." The other yachts previously chosen are Sir Thomas Glen Coats' "Echo," E. J. Lewis' "Zenith" and G. E. Haldinstein's and J. Colin Newman's "Betty."

The "Thistle," "Betty" and "Zenith" are Scottish designed craft, while the "Echo," was designed by her owner. The yachts will be shipped on the "Berengaria" after the Solent yachting fortnight, about the middle of August.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

A sultry, languid evening. The darkness had brought little relief. The pavements still held the heat of the baking sun.

"Too hot for the movies?" Warren gazed down a cross street at a flashing red-and-green sign before a flamboyant "picture palace."

"Oh, those small places are always stifling." Helen was fumbling for her powder puff. "Dear, the Randalls live near here. If you feel like going somewhere, let's call on them."

"Well I don't feel like that!" with an emphatic swing of his stick. "You don't put me through any social stunts of a sweltering night like this."

"We really ought to go. We haven't called since they had us to dinner. And we must have them before we go away. Dear, we're right here—we needn't stay long."

"That's what you always say. And when you get to a place—there's no dragging you away. Stay there chinning half the night.

"No, we won't stay late—not over an hour. It's down this next street, isn't it? If they're not there, we can leave our cards."

"No much luck!"

At the next corner they turned down a street of towering apartments packed close like gigantic Mah-Jongg tiles.

Entering the marbled, near-tapestried hallway of the Stanthrope Arms, they waited at the deserted switchboard until a colored youth brought down the elevator.

"Are the Randalls in?" asked Helen. "Mr. and Mrs. Curtis calling."

"Sumpin's wrong with their phone," pulling out the plug. "But I'll take you up."

"No, we don't want to butt in," protested Warren. "You go up and announce us."

"Dear, that isn't necessary. They're not formal—we can go on up."

A long wait. No sound from within.

"Ring again, dear. He said they were here."

"Well, they're not," when there was no response to his second summons. "That boob was asleep when he took 'em down. Poke your card under the door. That lets us off easy. We're in luck!"

"No, listen!" at approaching steps. "Someone's coming."

"Who is it?" came Mrs. Randall's voice, strained and painly agitated.

"Oh, we won't come in, if it's not convenient," stammered Helen. "Mr. Curtis and I just came by to invite you to dinner next week—next Thursday."

"Thank you, but I'm afraid we can't. That is, I can't. I'm going away tomorrow. I—we—"

Then with a nervous laugh she flung wide the door.

"You can come right in! You might as well know now as later."

The air was charged with discord and the hectic confusion of packing. Two open trunks and piles of clothing were prominently featured.

Mr. Randall in his shirt sleeves, his face flushed, stood in the door of the room beyond. Mrs. Randall, dishaveled and tearful, gazed at them with a reckless defiance.

"We shouldn't have butted in this way," Warren, disconcerted, drew back. "Your phone was out of order and the boy brought us up."

"That's quite all right," her laugh held an hysterical note. "I'm leaving Ralph tomorrow, and our friends might as well know now."

An embrassed silence followed this astounding announcement.

While Helen was groping for something to say, Warren blurted a blunt, "Well, we seem to've dropped in at a pretty awkward time. But you two have just had a little squabble. Be all blown over by tomorrow."

"This one won't! It's final. I'm packing now," with a dramatic gesture towards the trunks. "We've both decided we can't go on. Ralph, you tell them."

"I'll let you do that. That's more in your line," bitterly.

"Just what do you mean by that?" she flared.

"Anything you choose. You put your own interpretation on everything I do or say, anyway."

"Now, see here," broke in Warren. "Too hot to scrap. I tell you what—let's all go to a roof garden and cool off."

"It's past that, Curtis," gruffed Mr. Randall. "If Doris means half the things she said here tonight—our going on is out of the question."

"What about the things you said? You think I'd stay here after your remarks about my shirking all my duties?"

"And what did you say to bring that out?" he swung around.

"What I said was true—and you know it! You don't want me to go anywhere. You can't bear for me to have any pleasure. Just because I went to that dance at the Lindons'—"

"That's right, go ahead, tell your side of the story."

"Very well, I WILL! I'll tell just how you carry on whenever—"

"No, you won't! Not to us," brusqued Warren. "You can have a private scrapping match and it blows over. But once you drag in an outsider—it's a whole lot harder to make up."

"This can't be made up! It's gone too far. We're going to separate, and you might as well know why—"

"Now hold on, don't put yourself on record! Don't make any threats you may feel you have to live up to. Sorry we tuned in on this rumpus—but now we're here, I'll hand it to you straight. Never take a third party in on your rows. Fight 'em out alone and you can patch 'em up. Now we're going to beat it—and forget we've been here. And you forget it, too!"

"That's good advice, Curtis," Mr. Randall, his hands in his pockets, was frowning out the window. "But there's not much chance of patching thing up as long as Doris persists in her attitude."

"My attitude? What about YOUR attitude? What did you say just before they came in? Would you like me to repeat that?"

"Repeat nothing!" Warren cut in. "Guess you both said a lot of things you didn't mean—and harping on 'em don't help any. Chuck away those trunks! All this 'going-back-to-mother' scenery makes it harder to smooth things over."

"It isn't 'going-back-to-mother', I'm going out to live my own life!"

"Want to try it on your own, eh? Well you don't know hat you're up against. Now, after we're gone, you two go out. Take a walk, go to a movie—anything to get your mind off yourselves."

"That might've helped a few weeks ago—but not now. Things have gotten to be impossible. There's only one thing for us to do—and that's to separate. We've decided that today."

"Huh, too hot to decide anything," grumped Warren. "This heat's got on your nerves. I tell you what—you two go down on the east side. Walk through some of those crowded tenements. See how those poor devils live—eight and 10 in a room. You'll be so darned thankful for this big airy apartment—you'll forget to squabble."

A poignant silence followed this suggestion. With reddened eyes Mrs. Randall was glancing about her attractive linen-shrouded living-room.

"You women don't know when you're well off, that's the trouble," Warren shrewdly followed up his advantage. "Go out on a slumming trip and when you come back here thing'll look a whole lot different. You won't feel so much like exercising your temperament. Now we're going to breeze along and forget we've been here—and you're both to show up for dinner next Thursday!"

As the languid, perspiring youth took them down in the elevator, Helen maintained a discreet silence. But when they came out into the stifling night, she clung to Warren's arm in an excited flutter.

"Oh, I don't think she'll go now! The way she looked around the room when you said that about the tenements! Did you notice? Her whole expression changed."

"Yes, that brick struck home. Made her think where she might land if she had to hustle on her own. She has it pretty soft. Got a snap and don't know it. Won't draw another eight-course meal ticket like Randall."

Oh, that makes me WILD! You always have to drag in something about a 'meal ticket.' As though that was all that kept women living with their husbands."

"Well, it's what hold most of e'm!" he grinned.

"It ISN'T! It makes me furious for you to say that! Why—"

"Now, see here, we just came from one family fracas. What're you trying to do? Start one on your own?"

"No, but you're always talking about 'meal tickets!' Women aren't so helpless as you think. What about me? You think I couldn't earn my living?"

"That's right—take everything to yourself! You always got to ring in the personal," jabbing the pavement with his cane.

"But you think I couldn't?" flashed Helen, with perverse persistence. "You think I couldn't go out tomorrow and support myself?"

"Couldn't earn your salt!" he scoffed. "Like to see you apply for a job. What d'you think you can do? Pound a typewriter? Can't pick out your name with one finger!"

"I could take up interior decorating. I KNOW I could do that! Think how I fixed up our apartment—everyone says I could—"

"Interior decorating!" with a snort. "Every woman who can make a lampshade thinks she's cut out for that game. Talk about your over-crowded professions—they're swarming over each other. And decorators' jobs are scarcer'n hen's teeth. You'd stand a helluva chance!"

Then with a grin, as he tucked her arm through his,

"Now, Kitten, you'd better cuddle up to me, and not try any 'draggin'-out-the-trunk' stunt."

"What would you do if I did?" glancing up at him, with a defiant hoss of her head.

"I'd phone for a taxi and help lug out your bags," with a chuckle. "Now cut the comedy! Too late for that movie? What was the super-sloppy feature? 'Her Piebald Past' or 'Should Wives Wed'?"

NEXT WEEK—"AN X-RAY ON WARREN'S CHARACTER"

Political Life Arouses Indians of Montana

HELENA, Mont — Montana, Indians, apparently aroused by the reenactment of the Indian citizenship bill, are taking an increasing interest in politics. Several Indians, educated in the reservation schools, have filed this year for county offices, while Robert Yellowtail, three-quarter blood Crow Indian, of Lodge Grass, on the Crow reservation, has announced his desire to attend the white man's congress at Washington as a representative from Montana.

Yellowtail, who is 35 years old, completed his education by private tutoring after his graduation from the reservation schools. Encouraged by his tribesmen, he recently filed for congress from the second district, subject to the primary election Aug. 26. He is opposing Congressman Scott Leavitt, of Great Falls, who is completing his first term.

Montana's Indian population is estimated at 12,000, of whom 7,000 live in the second congressional district. More than 2,500 Indians from the six reservations will be allowed to vote this year. Yellowtail, who gives his occupation as a rancher, announces he will base his campaign on his knowledge of Indian problems.

Marie Corelli's Will Bars Actors from Her Gift House

STATFORD-ON-AVON, England.—The late Miss Marie Corelli left an estate valued at about $120,000, and bequeathed all her property to Miss Bertha Vyvyr, her life-long companion.

Mason Court, Miss Corelli's Stratford's residence, is to be preserved intact with its garden and paddock, and after Miss Vyver's death, it is to be preserved for the benefit and service of distinguished persons visiting Stratford-on-Avon from far countries. These visitors are to be selected and recommended to Miss Corelli's trustees by the council of the Society or Authors.

Miss Corelli, however, "absolutely excludes actors and actresses, and all persons connected with the stage," and "most strictly enjoins that no person connected with Stratford-on-Avon, officially or otherwise, shall be permitted to co-operate or be concerned in the carrying out of the trust"

SANTONE WALLOPS OSBORN WHEN KNOCKS MEAN RUNS

Wichita Falls Rally in Ninth Falls Short by Two Markers—Weis Poles Homer in First

Belated Spudder rally in the final round fell two markers shy, so Bouncing Bob Coleman and his Bruins moved on to Cowtown for series with Jake's Felines, lugging with them a 7-5 decision taken in the third, final, and deciding tilt of the San Antonio-Wichita Falls series. Galveston will move in today at Spud park for the first of three.

The punch was present in the Bear attack when needed the most, and thereby lies the yarn of just another Spudder defeat. The homelings clouted Rueben Marshall, mountainous Bear righthander, at a hard clip, but the Bruins got to Bob Osborn, Spud starboarder, more effectively and more often.

Hard Luck in Ninth.

In that ninth round Fate refused to smile kindly on Bud's proteges. Al White flared up with a smarting single to left. Jonnard aviated, but Oldfolks Coombs hit in a pinch for Osborn and blasted one through short for a base. Fitzgerald followed up with a meteor-like slam over first, scoring White and putting Coombs to third, but Fits himself was sucked in when Booe in right chunked to Galloway on first, who blotted out the sunlight between Fits, who had taken the turn, and first. The Spudder was nailed when he attempted to hoof it to second. Callaghan biffed a sweet drive to left center and Mike Meyers raced over and pulled the ball off the clover for the last out. A startling bit of robbery, it was.

Spuds Three in First.

Marshall passed Fitz, first up in the domestic opening round, and Callaghan followed with a single through short. Locker popped to second, but Art Weis stabbed Reuben for a drive to the port home run zone. Tabulate three for the Spudders. Turge hit to the shortfield and beat it out. Wano bounded to the same sector, and the Bears squelched further chances to count, Gross to Fuller on second to Galloway at first.

Coleman's underlings belligerently busted back in the second frame and chalked a trio. Wano lost a pop fly by Connolly in the glare of old Sol, and the pill flopped safe for a bingle. Meyers followed through with a single down second base way, Connolly romping to third, and Moke traveling to second on the throw to the hot corner in effort to cut Connolly away. Fuller aviated to left and Connolly checked at the platter after the catch. Brovold scored Meyers with a bingle to right. Warwick slapped a bingle to left. Marshall faded away at the plate, and Booe drove a stinger through the box, sending Brovold to the pan. Gross hoisted to Weis.

Bears Take Lead.

The visiting crew got over for another in the third. Galloway bounced one between first and second. With Connolly at bat, Jonnard heaved at the initial station to catch Galloway, who was playing wide. Wano missed the throw, and Galloway scooted to third. Connolly singled through short, scoring Jesms. Meyers rolled to the box, forcing Connolly at second. Fuller grounded to Turgeon, who touched second, forcing Meyers, and then flung to first for the completion of a double killing.

Spudders menaced in the fourth, but a dazzling stop by Brovold went the greater part of the way in quieting the threat. Wano led off with a single through the box. White clashed a sizzler at third, and Brovold speared the drive with his meat hand and threw the runner out at first. Jonnard and Osborn each grounded out to second.

Tie Up in Fifth.

Fitzgerald and Locker tied the count in the fifth. Fits broke out with a three-cushion poke to right center. Callaghan bounded out to short; Fits was held at the base. Locker lofted one to left, a hard-hit ball, and Fitzgerald scored after the catch. Weis doubled down the first base line, but Brovold snared onto a bullet drive by Turgeon.

Seventh Too Bad.

San Antonio jumped to the fore in the seventh, navigating the paths for three. Gross opened the canto with a single through short. Galloway bunted between the mound and first, making the initial station by a wide margin. Connolly bunted, and Osborn threw to Locker on third, forcing Gross. The play was close. In fact, it appeared that Gross was safe. Manager Coleman of the Bruins strenuously objected, and refused to be quieted without being chased from the park. Ump O'Toole caused his surreptious departure. Meyers filed out to left. Fuller singled through second, and both Galloway and Connolly scampered to the paying counter. Fuller made second on the throw-in. Brovold snapped a one-baser to-starboard and Fuller scored. Osborn walked Warwick and whiffed Marshall.

With one away in the eighth and Gross on first by virtue of a free ticket, Galloway hit into a double play, White to Turgeon to Wano.

Locker, first up in the Spudder eighth, walked, got to second on an infield out and expired there.

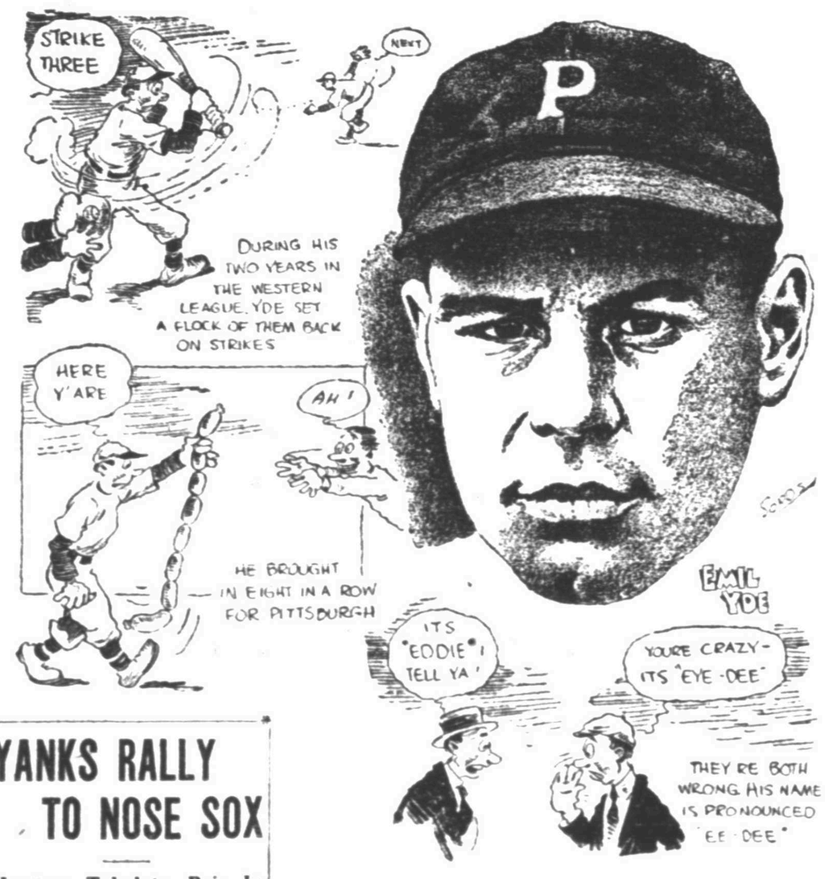
OKLAHOMA ROOKIE ONE REASON BUCCOS PUSH GIANTS



*He's Man of Letters Is Emil Yde, Brilliant

PALMER AND RICH BILLED

Lewis Squares Off With Carpenter in Six Rounds.

Wits and speed versus stamina and slugging ability! This fairly describes the 12-round main event of the American legion fistic program slated this coming Thursday eve. Wildcat Monte, Amarillo featherweight, and Frankie Fink, Dallas midget, will furnish the feature attraction of the card. Monte is the slugger; Kink is the wily one.

But the featherweight tilt is not the only acre in Promoter Wofford's deck. Harmon Kid Rich of this city and Johnny Palmer, Oklahoma City welter are billed for a ten-rounder. Rich probably has shown the best ring generalship of any battler who has appeared in a Wichita Falls arena. Palmer fought here several months ago, and carried over big with local fandom. For weeks, fans asked that Palmer be matched here again, but his services at the time were not available. He had a full boxing schedule already lined up. The past week, Wofford managed to get the Oklahoma scrapper to promise to show here with Rich Thursday.

Booger and Moco.

Booger Red Lewis, Galveston light heavy, and Moco Carpentier of Wichita Falls will square off in a six-canto squabble. This mill should bring the house down. Red has not as yet lost a bout in Wichita Falls. Moco on his only appearance here proved a vertiable demon in action, and knocked out his man quite handily. The pair probably will put on a rip-roaring, slam-bang session.

There are to be one or two four-round bouts or possibly a battle royal added to the card, said Wofford Saturday.

Fink Needs Conditioning.

On paper the Fink-Monte tussle rates as a whizzer. Fink in his fight with Nick Gundy here week before last showed great gobs of boxing finesse, and proved to Wichita Falls fandom that he has a punch. But toward the latter portion of the bout, Fink slowed up. He was in poor condition. Fink, as a rule, is a terror to men in his weight on the infighting, but Fink failed to produce much of this manner of battling with Gundy. He was afraid because of his condition, to tear loose. If Frankie is in shape by the time of his next go, he may cause the Amarillo Wildcat much trouble.

Monte In Shape.

Monte at present is in the best of condition, and expects to be at his zenith the night of the battle. Wildcat has been bowling 'em over right and left recently, and is confident he will stop Fink before the entire route of the scrap has been toiled off. Always a slashing, tearing in type of fighter, Monte hopes to mix it faster and more furiously on this occasion.

Looking at the coming bout from all angles, taking in Fink's broad knowledge of the game and his quickness, and not underestimating Monte's staying and mauling ability, the setto lines up as possibly one of the best of the summer foray in local boxing.

WILLS DEFEATS MALLORY AGAIN

Californian Easy Victor In Straight Sets

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Miss Helen Wills sturdy, dark-haired Californian, rules supreme as queen of American tennis courts. The 19 year old school girl from Berkeley proved her right to the national title beyond dispute this afternoon when she slashed her way to an overwhelming victory over Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory of New York, in the final singles match 6-1, 6-3.

Figuring in her third victory of the day, Miss Wills also captured the doubles championship. Paired with her veteran partner, Miss Hazel Hotchkiss Wrightman of Boston, she conquered Miss Eleonore Goss of New York and Mrs. Marion Z. Jessup of Wilmington, Del., in the final round, 6-4, 6-2, after previously disposing of Miss Mary K. Browne and Mrs. T. R. Dudley of Los Angeles, in the semi-finals, 9-7, 6-1.

These victories gained Miss Wills an ovation which has seldom been equaled in the big west side club's stadium for today completed a conquering march by this young westerner probably unequaled in tennis annals in which she added the highest national honors to her brilliant triumphs in both the Olympic singles and doubles championships.

Completes Brilliant Run

There was no doubt about the final outcome of the Wills-Mallory encounter from the moment the champion drove across a clean placement for the first point until Mrs. Mallory netted the final shot. It was the third straight year they have fought for the title, and Miss Wills, taking only 34 minutes to gain her second successive triumph, demonstrated more conclusively than ever that she is Mrs. Mallory's superior.

Never in Danger.

Miss Wills, except for a brief spell in the second set was a dominant, cooly confident figure, driving with rare skill and terrific power in an attack that simply smothered her veteran opponent. Analysis of the match showed that Mrs. Mallory earned but five points to 33 for Miss Wills, while the former champion chalked up 30 errors to her opponent's 38.

Beaten at her own game—power and speed—and crushed at every turn, Mrs. Mallory seemed to realize she was battling against hopeless odds. Except for occasional flashes of the forehand power for which she has long been famous, the nerve woman, who ruled American tennis heights for several years was an easy victim for the young girl.

Babe Ruth is murdering the ball these days with the healthy swing he employed in 1921 when he set his wonderful record of 59 home runs for the season. His mighty bat holds no terrors for some of the pitchers in the circuit however. Ruth goes on a rampage every day or two, only to be checked eventually by one of these lingers who seem to have the remarkable ability to "outsmart" him. When these lines were written the list of those who had not seen one of their shoots go sailing off Ruth's bludgeon for a ride over the fence this year included Urban Faber, Eddie Rommel, Howard Ehmke, George Mogridge, Ferguson Zachery, Zahniser, Wells, Whitehill, Shocker, Danforth, Davis, Charley Robertson, Joe Shaute, Sherry Smith and Ogden.

The list of those who can check Ruth shows that age and experience are not necessary to outsmart the king. Edwin Wells and Earl Whitehill, the two Tiger southpaws have had Ruth guessing ever since they bobbed into the league this year.

Faber's effectiveness against the Big Bammer is indicated by the fact that not only has he held Ruth home runless but in one game he fanned the Mauler three times.

Walter Johnson is one of the veterans who have felt the sting of Babe's blows as the home run king strives for a new record.

WALKER-LEONARD TITULAR TILT WILL BE GOOD GO, AVERS EDGREN

Benny Has Been Floored Before, So Mickey Stands Nice Chance Of Winning, Believes Critic

Benny Leonard, a natural welter weight although lightweight champion of the world, is a fit contender for the welter crown worn by Mickey Walker of New Jersey. That is why the match made between the two by Tex Rickard is going to be the greatest drawing card the welter class has had in years. Due to injuries to a thumb received by Leonard during his recent embroglio with Pal Moran, the bout has been postponed indefinitely, but when the two champions do clash fans will be sure to receive real value for their money.

Benny was a lightweight when he beat Freddy Welsh in 1917 and became world's champion. Shortly after that Benny became boxing instructor at Camp Upton, and on army grub and daily workouts with men of all weights he grew 15 pounds heavier. Out of the service Benny had to come down to the lightweight class again to go on with his profession, and it was hard work. He doesn't like to make even the modern lightweight limit of 135 pounds several hours before entering the ring, and it is doubtful that he has made it for a long time. Leonard and Tendler were to weigh in as lightweights in their last New York engagement, but the weighing, if any, was held behind locked doors, and not even newspaper men were allowed to see the men on the scales. I have been told by a boxing offcial that they did weigh in, and that neither was under 142 pounds.

As a welterweight Leonard should be at his strongest and in his best condition. Of course, the welter poundage is easy for him. He can train for strength and condition and not weaken himself by drawing the weight line too fine. So when Benny and Mickey meet the battle should be won by the best fighter of the two. There will be no weight advantage for Walker although Benny is lightweight champion and apparently going out of his class.

Walker will have an advantage in age. He was born in 1901 and Benny in 1896. Mickey is only 23, Benny 28. There is no advantage in experience. Of course, Leonard has been fighting longer and has met more good men, but beyond a certain stage experience in the ring isn't an advantage. Five years ago Leonard had five years less experience, but very likely he was a better fighter, had more activity, ambition, pep, and punch. Probably Leonard could take more punches five years ago than he can now. Probably Mickey Walker can take more punching today than Leonard can.

Benny Leonard has been a great chamion because he has an active brain with plenty of courage and determination and aggressiveness. He has often been knocked down and nearly knocked out, but hasn't been gut away. Patsy Cline came near putting Benny down for a ten-second count, but when Benny got up he used his head, recovered, and beat Cline. It was a close, shave. Again Charlie White caught Benny after a moving picture session at Hollywood, before Benny had trained back into fighting condition, and knocked him clear out of the ring. Leonard managed to climb back through the ropes and hold and stall until he recovered, then he fought along until the ninth round, when he knocked White out.

Ritchie Nearly Got Him

Ritchie Mitchell knocked Benny down and nearly out. That, so Leonard says, was his narrowest escape. He barely recovered in time to get up, managed to stall along until his strength came back, and then sailed in and knocked Mitchell out in the sixth.

Leonard boxed four rounds with Willie Ritchie in San Francisco in 1919. He trained hard, knowing that Ritchie had been a tough scrapper as a champion and had always taken good care of himself. Ritchie got into shape by playing through a golf tournament and doing a little boxing. It was a slugging bee from the start. In the second round Willie caught Benny on the chin with a hard right-hand and knocked him groggy. Instantly Willie was rushing Benny all over the ring, and for once Leonard had a hard time stalling through. He recovered and was knocked dizzy again several times in the second and third rounds. In the fourth Ritchie rushed Benny furiously, trying for a knockout and the championship, and ran into a left hook that had him reeling in turn. Then Leonard cut loose with everything and pronped Ritchie up on his heels time and again although he couldn't drop him or stop his rushes. A few months later Ritchie went east and boxed Leonard again. This time Leonard took the lead and never stopped until the referee stepped in to save Ritchie from a knockout a few seconds before the bell at the end of the eighth and last round.

Leonard is hard to keep down, but he can be put down. That gives Mickey Walker a chance to win decisively. Mickey is a great finisher when he starts his man. He is cool headed, even tempered, but very fast and aggressive. He knows how to keep up the pressure when things are going his way. No other fighter except Packey McFarland ever handled Jack Britton the way Mickey did when he beat Britton for the welterweight championship. Mickey got Jack going and wore him out. At the end of the fifteenth it looked as if Britton couldn't go another round, and he had used all of his great skill to stall along as far as he did.

Mickey Has Punch

Of course Mickey Walker hasn't beaten a lot of famous fighters, the way Leonard has. But there aren't many famous fighters in the welter class. He took on Lew Tendler a while ago — Tendler being Benny's rival on two occasions, and grown into a welterweight—and handled him easily. In 1923 Walker had thirteen ring battles. He won seven of them with knockouts. That's a very fair average. The lads he at the kayo on were Steve Latzo, John Rile, Morris Schaeffer, Cowboy Padgett, Nate Seigel, Bobby Green, and Max Herscovitch.

Mickey might have done more fighting if he hadn't been in a jam with the New York boxing commissioners. They told him to fight Dave Shade in New York, and Mickey wouldn't. Just said he'd pick his own opponents, make his own matches, and fight where he could run his own business. If he couldn't fight in New York he would box in New Jersey, which he has been doing. Also in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa and Canada.

Boxing Commish All Wrong

When the Leonard-Walker match was arranged by Rickard and announced as an event to be held in Rickard's Jersey bowl, the N. Y. Commission threatened to suspend the license of Rickard, Leonard, and Billy Gibson if Leonard went out of the state and boxed Walker. They suspended the New York license of Lew Tendler because Lew boxed Walker in Philadelphia. What legal right any state commission has to attempt to govern boxing in other states and blacklist boxers not under their control and not licensed in the state, or discipline New York boxers who in other states against boxers not under New York commission control, is a mystery clear only to the mind of a New York commissioner. To a mere outsider like myself, not interested in politics or political control of sport or anything else in the big money class it seems entirely unfair a combination in restraint of trade—or boxing—or something of that sort.

JOHNSTON WINS CASINO SINGLES

"Little Bill" and Griffin Beat Kinsey Brothers In Doubles

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 16.—"Little Bill" Johnston rose to his greatest form in winning the Casino cup singles on the turf lawn tennis court here today. In marvelous stroke he overwhelmed Harvey Snodgrass, Los Angeles, by a score of 6-2, 6-2, 6-2.

It was a different Johnston that entered with Clarence J. Griffin in the final of the national doubles championship against Howard and Robert Kinsey, San Francisco.

"Little Bill" was far from perfect in the matter of control. The outcome in the match, a victory for Griffin and Johnston, was decided by a misfortune by one of their adversaries, Robert Kinsey, during the fourth set, when he twisted his left knee.

Johnston and Griffin took the match by the official record of 7-5, 4-6, 6-3, 5-7, 4-5, defaulted.

Half Million To Be Cost Of Polo With Britishers

Half a million dollars will be the cost of preparing for the international polo matches in this country in September, beginning on the sixth. No doubt the gate receipts will cover this bill, as there was a tremendous early rush for tickets.

Polo between England and the United States is the real gilt edged sport. In the past the polo players representing this country have been recruited largely from the branch of "society" that lives on large estates on Long Island. Most of the British players have been army officers. That was natural, as the British army developed the modern game of polo.

Polo is one of the most exciting of all competitions, because it is played on horseback. The fast-galloping, quick-footed and intelligent polo ponies give a sensation of speed and a scrambling rush to the game that is impossible to any contest on foot. Lacrosse is the nearest thing to polo, and even lacrosse lacks the thrill that comes only with reckless disregard of danger.

COBB DEPENDS ON SOUTHPAWS

Dungaleers Left-Handing Rest of League To Death

Whitehill Dependable.

Earl Whitehill, southpaw rookie, served notice on the league the first chance Cobb gave him last spring that a string of victories would be left behind him when the season endec. Then Cobb grabbed off Edwin Wells, when Ed left the Texas league the best southpaw in the circuit departed. He made good over night with the Tigers and has left his mark on the other clubs already.

Then "Dutch" Leonard, left out in the cold by organized baseball when he refused to accept a Detroit contract two years ago, was reinstated. He joined the Tigers the other day in Detroit.

Leonard Back.

Now, if Leonard hits the stride hoped for Cobb will have three southpaws that he can shoot at any club in the league. This means that he can throw at the Yanks three portsiders in a row, shift to a right-hander for one game and then come back with his leftie trio again.

The Yanks have shown a weakness against southsiders all season. Babe Ruth himself dotes on righthanders for his homers. Only eight of his first 25 were collected off lefties. Three of these were at the expense of Ernie Wingard, young St. Louisan. Babe rang up three of the first 25 against Detroit but two of them were off Danss and Stoner, righthanders.

The third was off Cole, a leftie but not a consistent winner by any means.

It was Joe Shaute, young southpaw of the Indians, who off-sided the Yankees out of first place the other day in the final game of the Cleveland-New York series. The Tigers took advantage of Shaute's victory and annexed a slugfest from Boston, which carried them into the lead.

Of course, a lot depends on Dutch Leonard. He has been pitching independent ball all season and avows he can tame big league batters as he did before his illy-advised departure. It will take two or three starts to get the right dope on him.

But if he gets going good there'll be no one but the Tigers left in first place next month.

MUNY DIRECTORS IN CHARGE OF PROGRAM

Directors of the Municipal Golf club will be in charge of the next weekly club family night, it was announced Saturday.

An interesting and novel program is to be formed. The directors will hold a private session Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock for the formulation of plans.

Little Golf Activity At Country Club Now

There is little golf activity at the Wichita Falls Golf and Country club at present. A large number of the members are away on summer vacations.

No competitive play will be staged before September 1, or about the middle of that month, said Professional Bill Strachan Saturday.

Final Batting Averages of Twilight League

Shadie Hale of Floral Heights Methodists, champions of the Wichita Falls twilight league, kept up the terrific pace he set the first six weeks of the race, and at the close of the season is leading the league in hitting with an average of .541. Montgomery of the same club was the leading run scorer with 21. Manager Gordon of the Texhomas tabulated the figures were compiled by J. Arna Raley, league statistician.

New Nash Models Attract Attention of Auto Fanciers Over Country

PUBLIC SEEMS WELL PLEASED

Telegrams and Letters To Manufacturers Express Approval

Literally hundreds of thousands of people have visited Nash showrooms throughout the country to view the new Nash models since their announcement July 31. Dealers in all sections report places of business crowded day and night.

Public Pleased

"To say that the public is pleased with the cars in the new Nash advanced six and special six lines, is stating it very mildly," said E. H. McCarty, general sales manager of The Nash Motor company. "Telegrams received by us from our dealers and distributors tell us not only of unprecedented crowds in attendance but almost unanimously they refer to frank admiration expressed by visitors in the cars themselves as well as to surprise over the low prices. It is safe to say the Nash dealer organization will have a very busy period during the late summer and fall months."

Many View Models

Within 12 hours after the new Nash models were placed on view, 2,570 people visited the New York showrooms, while in the Brooklyn showroom 725 visitors called to admire the line and all other New York metropolitan showrooms representing the Nash line reported similar heavy attendance. In Chicago 700 visited the showroom of the Chicago Nash company Thursday with similar attendance at all outlying places of business. In Philadelphia 1,800 visitors were reported the first 48 hours by the Philadelphia Nash Motor company; from San Antonio, Texas comes word that 100 visitors were shown the cars on the day of the announcement; in Cleveland the initial showing was made to 653; Toledo 800; Cincinnati 839; Pittsburgh 630; Boston 475; New Orleans 498; Tulsa 175; Washington, D. C. 760; Grand Rapids 243; Buffalo 1,100; St. Louis 852; Minneapolis 2,517; Oklahoma City 700; Denver 150; Charlotte, N. C. 1,500; and Milwaukee, not including city dealers, 2,700. The foregoing reports of first day's attendance were taken at random from hundreds of telegrams. At practically all dealer and distributor points formal showings of the new cars will extend over a period of two weeks and at many of these attendance on the second and third days eclipsed in points of numbers the initial day's showing.

Expects Model Here Soon

The new body lines, the new four-wheel brakes, balloon tires and force-feed oiling system with which all of the new Nash models are equipped, were the object of close scrutiny and outspoken admiration on the part of visitors. Salesmen were kept busy answering inquiries as to the details of each of the beautiful models and of particular interest was the fact that the steering mechanism devised by Nash engineers especially for balloon tires and four-wheel brakes completely nullifies the normal steering resistance heretofore characteristic of cars equipped with balloons.

Jas. King, Nash King Motor says he expects to have the new Nash models on exhibition within a few days.

AMERICAN PLUGS AID WINNERS

Champions Used Without Change in First Four European Victors

Duplicating their successes scored in all the leading races in the United States during the last 12 months, cars equipped with Champion spark plugs made a clean sweep of the annual European racing classic, the International Grand Prix, August 3, according to cables to the Champion Spark Plug company.

The four winners—Campari in an Alfa Romeo, Divo and Benoist in Delages, and Wagner in another Alfa Romeo—were equipped through with Champions. Not one of them changed a plug during the entire race. Campari made the 503-mile distance (810 kilometers) in 7 hours, 5 minutes and 24 2-5 seconds, an average of 70.94 miles an hour.

In the grand prix for touring cars, a Peugeot driven by Dauvergne, also Champion equipped, won over a field of 40 entries, according to the same cables.

The classic this year was conducted at Lyons, near the same spot where thousands of the American expeditionary forces were trained during the world war.

Campari's triumph in this year's race more thoroughly establishes him as Europe's greatest race driver. The Italian driver has made a splendid record throughout southen Europe for months past. Count Zborowski, last year's winner with an American Miller Special, was forced out early with the same car owing to motor trouble. His was the only American entry.

Added Responsibility.

Henry: "What? You don't mean to tell me he's going to turn bigamist!"

"No. I'm going to get married."

FORD 10,000,000 REACHES COAST

Auspicious Scene Marks End Of Transcontinental Auto Trip

Ford car No. 10,000,000 completed its transcontinental journey July 29 at 1 o'clock when it arrived at the western terminal of the Lincoln highway, according to a telegram just received by the Ford Motor company from Frank Kulick, former racing driver, who piloted the car across the continent.

Arrival Auspicious.

The arrival in San Francisco was auspicious. The car, accompanied by a large number of motor cars, bedecked with California's choicest flowers, was driven to the city hall where Mayor James Rolph received a letter from Mayor John Hylan of New York in the presence of an enthusiastic crowd. It was then driven to the end of the Lincoln highway where a final greeting was extended by James H. Houlihan, official representative of the Lincoln Highway association on the west coast.

This marked the completion of one of the most memorable demonstrations in automotive history.

Started June 16.

The ten-millionth Ford was started westward across the nation's greatest highway on June 16, not to prove performance but to commemorate an achievement, and throughout the journey demonstrations, bands and parades marked the progress for nearly every mile of the entire distance. Greetings were extended by officials of every state through which the car passed and all along the route sentiment was freely expressed that to Henry Ford belongs the greatest of credit for having brought the benefits of the automobile within the reach of the largest number of people in all walks of life.

Meets Little Difficulty.

Burdened with the responsibility of upholding Ford tradition which has come to mean reliable transportation at the lowest possible cost, Ford car No. 10,000,000, one of approximately 7200 standard cars produced in a single day, performed in characteristic Ford fashion. The entire distance of a little less than 4,000 miles was covered with but one minor adjustment and with absolutely no mechanical difficulty of any nature. Although many hundreds of miles of road, particularly through the western states and across the Rocky mountains, are of dirt and gravel formation it is noteworthy that this, the lowest priced car built, averaged approximately 110 miles a day for the entire six weeks and was on schedule to the minute in every town visited.

The transcontinental trip of the ten-millionth car has formally ended but interest remains so keen that the car is now being routed up the Pacific coast to Portland and Seattle, from which point it will be shipped back to San Francisco and then driven overland to Los Angeles and probably back across the country to Detroit over a southern route.

Roosevelt 4-Starred Service Flag Presented to Museum

By The Associated Press.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y.—The service flag which hung from Sagamore Hill, home of the late Theodore Roosevelt, during the late World war has been presented to the Memorial Museum at Roosevelt House, New York City.

The flag, measuring three by four feet, and of the familiar red and white design, has four blue stars worked in the center. It fluttered from an upper window of the colonel's Oyster Bay home. It was placed there the day of enlistment of the first member of the family and not removed until the last of the Roosevelts returned from overseas service.

The four sons were all decorated for bravery in action. Two of them were wounded and one killed.

CHRYSLER TAKES ON BALLOONS

Model Is Designed for Big Tires From Ground On Up

The Chrysler Motor corporation announces through Lloyd Weaver, local Maxwell-Chrysler dealer, that it has adopted special six-ply balloon tires as standard equipment on all Chrysler six models. The size is 30x5.77.

Designed for Balloons.

"The Chrysler six is designed for balloon tires from the ground up," Mr. Weaver said yesterday. "But not until tire makers, working in conjunction with its engineers, had designed and perfected a special six-ply cord tire, stronger and more durable than other balloons, would it adopt them.

"The six-ply, high speed tires now used on the Chrysler are specially designed and constructed to meet the car's higher speed capacity and also to provide the greater resiliency of ordinary balloon types.

Ideal Combination.

"This gives the ideal combination. The Chrysler, with its pivotal steering, its new type of spring construction that eliminates side sway, and its extra wide fenders, is actually built for the adoption of balloons. And the tires, in turn, are built to measure for the Chrysler.

"No other automobile can offer this combination of a chassis designed to take a certain type of tire, and tires designed specifically for a certain car.

"The result is that the Chrysler, with tires 5.77 in. in width, drives as easily as though its pavement contact was no more than a narrow line. The design of the steering mechanism accounts for this. The steering pins are inclined to a line that passes through the center of the tires contact with the road.

"In addition the steering spindles turn on ball thrust bearings. That doesn't mean much until you get in the driver's seat. There you'll find you can turn the wheel with your little finger.

"Chrysler special balloons in combination with Chrysler special chassis design for balloons has served to develop every advantage claimed for the low-pressure tire and at the same time has eliminated every disadvantage."

The Perfect Conversationalist.

"So you married a lawyer?"

"Yes. She said they would always have somebody's divorce to talk about."

Your Car's Worst Enemy—Depreciation

One views with alarm the rapid depreciation of their automobile and the loss they must carry if they trade their car in within the year. Depreciation takes place in every car—but the extent of that depreciation does not depend upon the car—it depends upon the owner. You are responsible to no little degree for just what loss you sustain in your car.

An automobile is no better than its weakest part—the owner of an automobile who realizes that the proper man to look after those "weakest parts" is the service man at his regular dealers. The owner of a new car, who begins to consult the right man about his car—to place it in the hands of the dealer's organization, from whom he bought it—is the man who has the least depreciation.

The man who ignores simple mechanical warnings from his car—and then, in serious trouble, places it in the hands of the first garage he happens to come to, regardless of the knowledge of the repair man of his car—he is the man who writes off the heavy depreciation.

Oldsmobile Among First to Announce New Models for 1925 Season

REFINED SIX IS LATEST OUT

Keeps Fundamentals But Adds Many New Features

The Oldsmobile six was introduced in its refined and beautified 1925 costume today by the Olds Motor Works, Lansing, Michigan. Fundamentally the car remains the same as it was when it was introduced nearly a year ago and at which time it created a sensation in automotive circles as the lowest priced six cylinder car in the world. For the coming year it will add to this proven automobile refinements in line and mechanics.

Radiator Changed.

The most striking changes are in the design of the radiator shell and hood. The raditor shell is nickled and follows the most approved and advanced designs in both European and American car constructions. It has a graceful double curve at the top with a slightly curved peak downward in the center which acts as a base for the long known Oldsmobile oval emblem. Extending downward the radiator shell follows slightly concave lines, broadening outward at the base which continue the easy curves that are features of the design.

The shell is somewhat higher than the previous style, which makes possible an almost level stream line hood extending back to the rear of the cowl. The hood follows the double curve of the top of the radiator shell, adding distinctiveness.

The refinement of the front lines is further added to by the use of new bell-shaped head and cowl lights, which are standard on all models. These lights are of a heavier and more substantial design than were the drum type formerly used, and their curving lines harmonize perfectly with the new design.

Duco Finish Used.

Durable Duco satin finish is used on all models. The standard models are finished in Oldsmobile blue, a rich, dignified shade, trimmed with ivory striping on body and wheels. The sport models continue to use the weathered bronze-green shade that has proven so popular during the past season. These are striped with black and gold. Throughout the line, even including the upper sections of the closed models, Duco is used, thus insuring a really permanent finish and one that can be economically and quickly repaired in case of mishap.

The full line of eight body types is continued. These are the touring, sport touring, roadster, sport roadster, two-passenger business coupe, four passenger coupe, sedan and De Luxe sedan. The touring and roadster are upholstered in black fabrikoid, while the open sport models have the heavily grained brown Spanish type upholstery. A new striped velour of a brown-taupe shade trims the interior of the closed models. These are also equipped with metal sun visors covered with black fabrikoid. All closed bodies are Fisher built.

New Radiator Lines.

The new radiator lines have been featured in a rearrangement of the operating instruments. These are grouped in a nickeled rimmed oval in the center of the instrument board. In circles at each side are the ammeter and oil gauge. Nearer the center are the speedometer and the ignition and light controls, both enclosed in miniature reproductions of the radiator shell. In the center at the bottom is the choke and above it the Oldsmobile emblem. In the sport and de luxe models a gasoline gauge replaces the Oldsmobile name-plate. On the same models also are used nickeled steering columns and large sized steering wheels with aluminum spiders. Gear shift and emergency brake levers are nickeled on all models.

On the sport roadster and sport touring cars the instrument board is of white nickeled metal that has been lacuered, making it only decidedly attractive but rust proof as well.

FLINT COMPANY OPENS NEW BRANCH

The opening of a new factory branch for the sale and service of Flint six cars in the city of Flint, Michigan, is announced by T. S. Johnston, general sales manager of the Flint Motor company. The branch showroom affords ample space for display of the Flint six lines, in addition to a most adequate service department. This is the twelfth direct factory branch which has been opened by the Flint Motor company in less than a year.

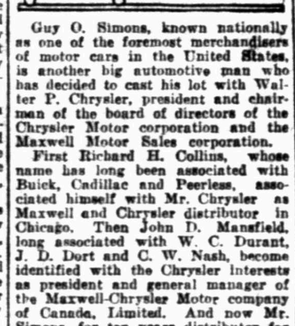
GUY O. SIMONS JOINS WALTER P. CHRYSLER



Guy O. Simons, known nationally as one of the foremost merchandisers of motor cars in the United States, is another big automotive man who has decided to cast his lot with Walter P. Chrysler, president and chairman of the board of directors of the Chrysler Motor corporation and the Maxwell Motor Sales corporation.

First Richard H. Collins, whose name has long been associated with Buick, Cadillac and Peerless, associated himself with Mr. Chrysler as Maxwell and Chrysler distributor in Chicago. Then John D. Mansfield, long associated with W. C. Durant, J. D. Dort and C. W. Nash, become identified with the Chrysler interests as president and general manager of the Maxwell-Chrysler Motor company of Canada, Limited. And now Mr. Simons, for ten years distributor for the Willys-Overland company in Michigan, the man who sold more cars for that company than any other dealer, has decided to become associated with Mr. Chrysler as Brooklyn and Long Island distributor of the Chrysler and Maxwell cars.

Mr. Simon began his automobile career in Ohio in 1900 as a dealer and in 1906 became associated with the Stoddard-Dayton company as service manager. In 1910 he organized the Motor Car Manufacturing company of Indianapolis, makers of the Pathfinder car. Mr. Simons served that company four years as vice-president and general manager. In 1914 he resigned to organize The Simons Sales company at Saginaw, Mich. The company did so well that after three years it was invited to move to Detroit and assume responsibility for the entire state of Michigan. The first year Mr. Simon was in business he sold less than 500 cars. Last year he sold nearly 9,000, a business in excess of $7,000,000.

MOTOR ROAD CONSTRUCTION IN INDIANA

In order to salvage as far as possible the original investment in the existing gravel and stone roads as bases for new motor highways the Indiana state highway department has lately embarked upon a more extensive program of bituminous construction, divided into two classes, one of which is known as "surface treatment" and the other as the "penetration method." Under the former method the surface of the road is treated with asphaltic materials. Under the latter a top course of asphalt is constructed by having the asphaltic binding material penetrate, under compaction, the gravel and stone in the base. The Indiana department is constructing this year 90.67 miles of surfaced treated roads and 36.02 miles of penetration macadam. These roads are located in Carroll, Porter, Lake, LaPorte, Starke, Marshall, Cass, Allen, Wells, Grant, Elkhart, Harrison, Floyd, Lawrence, Monroe, Dearborn, Jefferson, Delaware, Jay and Wayne counties, all of which are situated in the extreme northern, eastern and southern sections of the state.

BIG HIGHWAY PROGRAM IN TEXAS

Texas has over 2,000 miles of state highways under construction, according to the reports received by the U. S. bureau of public roads. This includes 146 miles of concrete and brick pavements, 425 miles of asphaltic pavements, 1,190 miles of gravel and macadam roads and the remainder sand-clay, shell and earth roads. This large program is estimated to cost amout $28,700,000 of which $13,300,000 is to be paid by the state and federal governments, leaving about $15,400,000 to be paid by the counties and road districts.

Last year 1,078.5 miles of state roads were completed in Texas at a cost of $10,637,821.47, but this year's work is expected to exceed these amounts by at least 50 per cent.

REO SEDAN BUS IN LONG TOW

Will Show Adaptability Of New Model For Inter-City Use

Development of automotive transportation has been progressing by leaps and bounds during the past few weeks. United States army officers are making history daily as they blaze a trail through the air in their round-the-world flight, and Lieutenant Russell Maughan has just accomplished the epochal feat of spanning the continent in a dawn-to-dusk sprint.

Add Another Chapter.

Now the Reo Motor Car company, one of the real pioneers in the manufacture of automobiles, is adding another chapter to this remarkable history of transportation by sending its new sedan-type cross country bus on a trip from coast to coast, the first cross continent trip ever attempted by a bus.

The long, low coach, brightly finished in body colors of orange and green with a belt of red and white, left the Reo shops at Lansing on Monday, July 14. By way of Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Akran, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg and Philadelphia, it was scheduled to proceed to New York, arriving there one week later. The start from New York was scheduled for July 23.

No attempt at great speed is planned for the Reo bus, the principal aim of the trip being to show the adaptability of the sedan type to inter-city work. This trip is expected to establish the fact that the bus can be operated satisfactorily in any part of the country.

The route adopted will bring the Reo to the western side of the mountains at Seattle. From there the bus will make Tacoma, Portland and Sacramento before going into San Francisco.

Similar to City Type.

The new Reo sedan bus is mounted on a six-cylinder chassis similar in construction to the one used with the pay-enter type bus for city service.

Sixteen passengers may be carried in the passenger's compartment and the smoking compartment of this inter-city bus, and auxiliary seats to accommodate two additional passengers are provided in the driver's compartment.

Appointments of the bus are all of the finest quality and everything contributing to the comfort of passengers on the road has been provided by the manufacturers. Equipment on the bus is exceptionally complete.

FLORIDA COMPLETES 769 MILES OF NEW ROADS

At the end of the year 1923 the state of Florida had completed 769.76 miles of new motor roads. Included in the mileage are 175.25 miles of graded and drained roads, 50.40 miles of rock base, 24.35 miles of brick pavements, 162.35 miles of asphaltic macadam and sheet asphalt roads and 66.31 miles of miscellaneous types. A total of 190.98 miles of new roads were built in 1923. This year the mileage constructed will be much greater, Duval county, alone, having undertaken the construction of 100 miles of asphalt pavements.

Purple And White Marmon Car Presented Ex-Ruler Of Elks

A Marmon seven-passenger touring car was presented to James G. McFarland of Watertown, South Dakota, retiring grand exalted ruler of the Elks, by the Boston Lodge of Elks, as a crowning feature of the Elks' convention held in Boston beginning July 8th. The car had been placed at the disposal of Mr. McFarland before it was presented to him, by the Marmon Boston company.

Mr. McFarland with Grand Exalted Ruler-elect, John G. Price rode in the car in the Elks' parade. The car was finished in the Elks' colors. The body is purple with white stripings. Each forward door, in gold letters, "Official Car, Grand Exalted Ruler," an on each rear door is the grand lodge insignia, of clock, star, Elk's head and the American flag. The wheels are painted in white and the covers of the two spare tires are of white with purple beading. The top cover is similarly finished.

The car was presented to Mr. McFarland in exercises in historic Copely Square in Boston. The speech of presentation was made by Daniel J. Kane, exalted ruler of the Boston lodge. Immediately after the presentation, and after he had accepted the machine, Mr. McFarland took the wheel to drive to Chicago.

The car has attracted considerable attention enroute from Boston to Chicago. Mr. McFarland was joined in Chicago by Mrs. McFarland, who made the trip with her husband in the machine from Chicago to their home in Watertown.

Galileo's Pendulum Honors Claimed for German

By the Associated Press.

WETZLAR.—History is all wrong when it credits Galileo Galilei with having invented the pendilum, according to Dr. Veltmann, keeper of the public archives of this city. In his opinion it was Jobst Bodeker of Warburg, Westphalia, who constructed the first centrifugal pendulum.

The instrument invented by Bodeker was made in 1578, while Galilei's pendulum is recorded as having been constructed in 1633. Bodeker's clock with pendulum was but short-lived, however. After being installed in the cathedral at Osnabruck it had to be nursed along from time to time by the inventor, and after his death it soon came to a full stop.

Dr. Veltmann bases his contention upon documents he has found in the archives under his care.

Clock Without Face or Hands Tells Time

LULLINGTON, England.—A clock in a church tower here has neither face nor hands, but has given the parishoners accurate time for nearly four centuries by striking the hours on the church bell.

Built in the sixteenth century by the village blacksmith, it comprises two heavy stones, a rope 30 feet long and a crude escapement. It is wound up daily by the sexton, the winding barrels being of oak, like beams in which the iron bearings work.

LONDON.—A bill designed to prevent burial alive has been presented in Parliament. It provides for medical inspection of a dead body before certificate of death, and for adequate inquiry before certification of cause. The cost would be chargeable to the estate of the deceased.

Further Cessation of Activities Marks Week In Wichita District

Drilling in Vicinity of Texas Company Pease Estate Producer Promises New Developments There for This Week

By A. HALLMAN
Record News Oil Editor

Further cessation of field activities provided in a negative way the predominant characteristic of the week just past in this district. The showing made in the Parker brothers well on the Love land, Kinnard survey, southwest of Iowa Park and about two miles north of the Roberts and Hill pool, Wichita county, and the Magnolia's completion on the Parrish land, section 26, proved the sole successful wildcat and semi-wildcat operations, and furnished the only new territory for exploitation, while dry holes in several portions of Archer county further spotted up its once immaculate surface with more $10,000 crocs marks.

Crude prices remained at their last week's levels, the Magnolia low, the Texas company, Prairie, and Gulf high, and the Humble betwixt and between. Refnied markets were generally reported to be a little stronger. Sinclair took a quantity of 64-66, end point 375, gasoline out of the district, price reported to be a little low. Tank-wagon took a drop and retail gasoline went to 18 cents.

Production in the district showed a 2,500-barrel daily decrease, this being due both to the lack of new completions for producers and to the fact that the week before showed an unusually large amount of oil in pipe lines due to the usual clean-up of field storage about the end of every month.

The Texhoma Oil and Refining company definitely discontinued proration in Archer county stating in a letter to producers of that county that they would take all and pay for all, Magnolia basis, and offering to clean up their storage oil at Magnolia posted prices. This latter clause, however, affected only about 15,000 to 20,000 barrels of storage crude and was not as big as it may have at first appeared.

Permit issuance gained a little, almost doubling the low mark of the week previous, but the 21 issued is a figure far short of the sixty a week of a month or so ago.

Archer County.

The Magnolia Petroleum company's No. 1, W. F. Parrish, northeast corner of the northwest forty acres of section 26, H&TCRR survey, abstract 1197, was completed early in the week from a sand at 1,595-98 feet and is being placed on the pump for an estimated potential production of 100 barrels a day. This well was about a quarter of a mile south of the Roy I. Carter-Gould et al, 1600-foot well on the White land, southwest corner of the north half of lot 15, block 34, recently placed on the pump for a reported 100-barrel well. To the east are four small wells in a 1396-foot sand, but the closest other 1600-foot production is in the Ray-Featherstone-Studham and Thrasher group on the Nichols and White to the west about two-thirds of a mile. Tex-O-Kan is rigging up for a test in the southwest corner of their lease on the White land, lot 16, section 34, and the Kentucky Oil corporation has spudded its No. 1-B. Parrish, in the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 26. Other tests are in prospect for this new territory and it is likely will be underway by the end of this week.

In the vicinity of the Texas company's discovery well on the Pease estate, No. 1, Graham, four tests are drilling and all down far enough to be at an interesting stage.

W. E. Norton has drilled six feet into a dry sand encountered at 1,436 feet in his No. 3, Graham, southwest corner of his lease in the J. W. Schnell survey, abstract 386, Pease estate, Archer county, and has shut down until tomorrow when the sand will be penetrated further. No salt water is reported to have shown so far, the total depth of the hole being 1,442 feet.

Landreth Production Co., tested again in a lower 1,200-foot sand in their test on the John Richards survey, Club ranch sub-division, block 125, and failed to get a well and are going on down to the 1400-foot sand. The Oil Investment company is drilling close to the 1,400-foot sand in their test on the Wilson, section 114, northeast corner of the northwest forty acres of the northeast quarter, ATNCL. A half-mile to the southwest of the discovery well the Texas company is drilling below 1,300 feet on their No. 1, Andrews, northeast corner of block 139, abstract 100, Roberts Carson survey.

In the Orton district the Texhoma Oil and Refining company and Stanniforth have taken a core in their No. 6, Kemp and Kempner, north offset to the Humble's No. 1, Orton, of the 1,484 foot sand, and were undecided yesterday whether to run casing and test or not.

The Sunshine State is starting its second hole near the Green Flowers pool, about 50 feet north of their No. 1, lost hole. On the west side of the Comac pool McGlotheran and Cooper have skidded west for their second hole, the first having been lost with an unsuccessful fishing job. Dilday is drilling close to the sand a bit further west.

The Sunshine State is still drilling southwest of Dundee, past 1960 feet now. T. B. Greenwood et al have started up again and are drilling near Holliday Creek, Albright land, Hooper and Wade Survey.

Shipley and Everts have two tests, still indeterminable factors on the J. B. Miller land, block 119, ATNCL, both scheduled for wells but neither completed as yet.

To their north and west the Atlantic Producing company has spudded and is drilling on a new 320-acre lease.

On the Krebs land, south of the old Henry Ford well of Waite Phillips, Everest and others abandoned at 1,751.

Gary-Preberson-Camp Oil and Gas company went wrong on their Falls county school lands tests, and got a dry hole at past 1,800 feet.

W. H. Figg and others are drilling on a test on the Perry Browning land, GECO survey, about a quarter of a mile east of the Parker et al discovery well in the 400-foot sand.

Wichita County.

Parker Brothers well on the Mrs. M. A. Love land, between Iowa Park and the Hill and Roberts pool has opened a new area in that district for drilling. The well has been placed on the pump with a guage not obtainable as yet, but a small nice well from the 1,800-foot sand, not yet drilled far into, is almost certain. Water trouble is said to be almost negligible. The test was drilled with cable tools and took a long time to get down, cavings delaying completion after the sand was encountered at 1,806 feet.

The well is about two miles north of the Roberts and Hill pool with its 1600 feet and 1700 feet production, but is separated from that area by three dry holes. The country to the north and east is practically untested however, and it is probable that it will be in that direction that the next tests will be drilled.

D. O. Johnston is about ready to start up on his test in the south corner of the county, water trouble having delayed spudding so far.

Cochran is trying to rid himself of cavings in his test on the Weeth land, south of the Ruyle Farm holdings, and has set a liner to keep back the sand in what is said to look like a well.

There are several drilling tests in the KWVFL section, the Petroleum Producers expecting to be on the sand today in their No. 6, Maer-Stanniforth. Other tests are drilling both on Texhoma and Maer-Stanniforth and Gwynn leases on the Burnett ranch, with no new completions there. There is some drilling in Beaver Creek, McCarty, district, with the United Central company's No. 11 due for completion today or tomorrow from a much higher sand level.

Grisham and Parks and the Panhandle Refining company are starting a well on the Walling land north of Burkburnett.

Wilbarger County.

Bridwell and Herdrick spudded and are drilling on their east offset to Thelma Wells and Al Guiberson, section 84, Dill land.

The Teapot Dome Oil company is drilling again after being shut down at 2,140 feet, failing to pick up the Wells-Guiberson sand in sufficient quantities to make a well. Other tests are drilling with no new developments. A contract has been signed for a test on the T. S. Archer place north of Vernon. T. B. Greenwood will drill the well.

Tonkawa and Cromwell Loom As Potential Market Disturbers

High-Lights Of the Week

MONDAY — Semi-completion of Parker Brothers well on M. A. Love land, Kinnard survey, southwest of Iowa Park, promises new pool from 1,500-foot sand there. Well is about two miles north and east of Roberts and Hill-Watkins pool, so far non-producing from 1,800-foot level.

The Texas company follows Humble lead of Saturday in cutting crude prices, reducing their Mexia, Currie and Powell prices to $1.35, Humble level, but not touching oil of other districts.

WEDNESDAY — Four new tests in the Ragle district, south Archer county, spudded to further develop or define that new pool.

THURSDAY—American Petroleum Institute figures show 5,850 barrel increase in national production for week ending August 9. Oklahoma up 13,500 barrels.

FRIDAY—Tank-wagon cut of one cent to 15 cents, forces retail gasoline prices here down to 18 cents. Tank-wagon and retail cuts general over state, ranging from one cent here to two cents at Houston, and nothing at Dallas.

GAS STOCKS GO DOWN IN WEEK

2.4 Per Cent Decrease In Stocks Despite Decrease In Shipments

The figures of the Western Refiner's association's weekly summary of the refinery industry as it concerns midcontinent independent refiners shows a decrease of 2.4 per cent in storage of the 141 refiners reporting to the association, approximately 2,800,000 gallons being drawn from storage during the week ending August 9. This decrease in storage is in the face of a decrease of 10 per cent in shipments and an increase of 2.1 per cent in production.

Crude run to stills was increased in amount 2.5 per cent, or total still charges amounted to 259,408 barrels a day compared with 236,222 barrels a day during the week before. Total gasoline stocks on hand at the end of the week for the 141 refiners amounts to 113,906,995 gallons, of which a large quantity is understood to be "bottoms", or tank bottom fluid unfit for sale and unavailable for marketing.

OKLAHOMA UP 13,000 BBLS.

Increases in These Two Pools Matter of Few Weeks Now, Predicted

Looming peak production for two pools in Oklahoma is presenting a potential overproductive period that may play as great or greater havoc with the crude oil market as did the Powell and California peaks which came toward the end of last year. That is the opinion of many who have paid close attention to the trend of production this year with the experience of last year as a basis for deductions. Nine deep wells in the Tonkawa pool produced more than 37,000 barrels of oil Wednesday of this past week as compared with 34,000 barrels the day before. There are 41 tests drilling to this sand, and at least nine of that 41 are due for completion this week. The prediction is being made that the deep pool production in that field will be doubled by the end of this next week which means that Tonkawa with its shallow production will be getting close to the 100,000-barrel a day mark.

A mile extension to the Cromwell pool to the north has started a huge increase of activity in that area in the district now considered proven and a large new flush output may be expected from that quarter within 30 days. Last week Cromwell pool production was estimated at 62,000 barrels a day, an increase of about 8,000 barrels a day over the figures of the previous week. It is the general opinion that the further development that has now been started in this district may place this figure at almost any time now over the 100,000 barrel mark despite the decline in production in older parts of the pool.

Gains from these two pools show for a 13,000-barrel daily increase in Oklahoma during the week ending August 9, according to the report of the American Petroleum institute, more than offsetting in themselves the 5,000-barrel decrease in California, and small decreases elsewhere in the nation. While curtailed drilling in other parts of the country may lessen production there somewhat, the rise in these two fields alone from present indications will continue to more than offset the decreases and give the nation big weekly increases in daily average production, although the extent to which this will go is still problematical.

The influence thus increased production will have on the market is not to be debated, rather being obvious. While prices may not suffer further reductions they will at least, it is believed here, be held at the low ebb they have now reached through a period when increases are to be more or less expected. Two months ago when the agitation for a shut-down in the Cromwell and Tonkawa pools was first started these very conditions were predicted. Efforts to bring about the shut-down failed.

TONKAWA OUTPUT

Production at Tonkawa totaled 71,526 barrels Thursday of last week, of which 38,278 barrels represented the output of nine deep wells, divided as follows:

Comar Oil Company	(3)	14,822
Wentz Oil Company	(1)	7,334
Blackwell Oil Co.	(1)	5,396
Gypsy Oil Co.	(1)	4,700
Pennock Oil Co.	(2)	3,276
T. B. Slick	(1)	2,710
Total	(9)	38,278

The number of drilling wells in the state of Oklahoma for the past week reached a total of 888, according to the current issue of the Oil Weekly.

Locations for new wells to be drilled in the different fields amounted to 72 in number, of which 21 were reported from Burbank, 11 from the Wewoka-Cromwell area and 14 from the Osage county fields.

The Wewoka-Cromwell territory sent in a report of 15,354 barrels of flush production from 17 successful completions, an amount slightly under the report of the previous week. Only two of the Tonkawa completions were in the deep sand.

The Brougham

Its tubular front axle—big and amply strong for its job—is another important bit of testimony to the thoroughness of Chrysler Six engineering. This axle is actually 34 per cent more rigid—it has approximately 400 per cent more strength to resist the up-and-down strains—than an I-beam of the same weight. Its resistance to horizontal or fore-and-aft strains is five times greater; its resistance to the twisting strains is 138 per cent higher. Exceptional riding is assured by the Chrysler spring suspension and six-ply special high-speed balloon tires.

Anyone can build a powerful car by building a large gas-eating motor, but the Chrysler gets 68 horse-power and over 70 miles an hour out of a motor which gives better than 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline.

Anyone can build a heavy car that holds the road—but the Chrysler, which can actually be driven in comfort at 60 miles an hour over rutted roads or cobbled streets, is far from being a heavy car.

The Chrysler Six brings its owners entire absence of a vibration period at any speed; a crankshaft, whose seven bearings absolutely preclude whip and distortion; a new type of combustion chamber that burns all the gas; a new way of distributing the gas equally to all cylinders; an air-cleaner for the carburetor; an oil filter which cleanses all the crankcase oil every 25 miles.

We are pleased to extend the convenience of time-payments. Ask about Chrysler's attractive plan.

Major Crude Buyers Here Have Three Different Price Schedules

NO CUTS MADE HERE LAST WEEK

Retail Gas Drops a Penny Here When Tank-Wagon Is Cut to 15 Cents

Expected changes in crude prices for this district failed to materialize last week, the Humble's fifteen-cent reduction on Saturday a week ago not being met in this district by either the Texas company, the Prairie Oil and Gas company, the Gulf Refining company, or the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing company up until the close of business yesterday. This condition of affairs leaves this district for the second time within two months with three existing price schedules for crude oil, the Magnolia Petroleum company maintaining the lowest, the Humble Oil and Refining company coming next, ten cents higher for "33 and above," and the Texas company highest with $1.50 for high gravity oil.

No Other Cuts.

Predictions that the Humble's cut would be met early last week by other major purchasers of this district were made freely during the first part of the week, the predictions of course, not being fulfilled, now the general attitude seems to consist of a belief in the stability of the present price schedule for a week or more at least. Such conjecture is always problematical, however, and in this instance at least may be upset at any time by threatened increased production from Oklahoma.

The Texas company, while not following the Humble cut in the Wichita district, did post revised prices for central Texas, effective as of 7 a. m. Monday, August 11, naming Mexia, Currie, and Powell crude at $1.35 a barrel, the Humble level and a fifteen cent cut for those oils. It is understood that this cut was met by the Gulf and Sun Pipeline companies for these districts.

Retail Gasoline.

Tank wagon reductions in the price of gasoline over the state Thursday and Friday resulted in a general decrease of from one to two cents in the retail price at the stations over Texas. In both instances the price was cut a penny here, from 16 to 15 (tank-wagon) and from 19 to 18 cents a gallon retail. What stations had not reduced the price yesterday here followed today. Gasoline stocks and reduced crude prices were given in every instance as the reason for the cuts.

Permit Issuance Almost Doubled During Past Week

Permit to drill issuance by the railroad commission's office during the past week showed almost double that of the former week, 21 being issued against 11 the week before, the 11 the week before being a new low mark for the district.

Of the 21 issued this past week 10 were for wells in Archer county, nine for wells in Wichita county and one for a well in Wilbarger county, and one for a Clay county test.

Of the 10 for Archer county four were for tests in the new Ragle district, south Archer county, one for a Shamrock Swastika test, one for a new Parrish test (Kentucky), one for a test about a quarter of a mile east of the Parker et al shallow well on the Perry Browning land in east Archer county, with the remainder scattered over the county. Wichita county's permits were pretty well scattered over the proven areas. Bridwell and Heydrick accounted for Wilbarger's sole new test, on east offset to Thelma Well's new producer. A new company, Piedmont Production company, will drill in Clay county.

Globe Drilling Company and Bowen and Ross Clay County Tests Are Both Due for Completion This Week

Cumley and Callendar are shut down on their No. 2, Stine, Clay county, undecided whether to try to plug back or go deeper. It is the opinion now that casing was set a little too low, shutting off some of the sand, and in case a good cement job seems possible the casing will be raised and cemented; otherwise the hole will be drilled deeper. In its present state the well, while it would probably make a little oil and water is not a producer, although a direct offset to a 200-barrel well in practically the same sand.

Bowen and Ross are drilling and expected yesterday to reach the shallow sand last night.

The Globe Drilling company had reached the shallow upper sand yesterday and were taking a core to decide whether to get casing and test. Tests on both should be available the first part of this week.

Stump et al finished up their test east of the old Body farm well, west of Petrolia, and abandoned it as dry, total depth being 2,000 feet. Further to the west on the Duncan survey, Dean land, the Piedmont Oil company, a new concern is making preparations to put down a test.

D'Yarnett and Sullivan drilled out the plug in their second well west of the Knox Finley group early in the week and is rigging up to pump, with estimated production uncertain, although it is said the well looks better than the well across the road, the No. 1, Knox Finley is drilling and should be near the sand on his No. 1, Howell, north and west of his other producers.

The probability of other tests for Clay county in the vicinity of the Cumley-Callendar group is likely if either of those tests drilling already should turn out successful. Cumley et al have erected a derrick and should spud this week on a test a mile to the south, Caroline Camp land. Others are known to be in prospect but it is hardly likely that other locations will be made until the drilling tests are completed.

Since the completion of the Cumley-Callendar-Stump well Clay county production has taken a jump from less than 300 barrels a day to nearly 500 barrels, although during the past week this figure dropped to 435 barrels, due to a slump in the older fields. It is considered hardly likely that the country around the Stine land well will remain untested even should the present drilling wells prove failures with this graphic indication of potential production before operators eyes.

Humble Laying Pipe on New Line to This District

Work on the Humble Pipeline company's new pipe line from their main line terminus east of Breckenridge to their Wichita district line near Iowa Park is proceeding rapidly, about eight miles of pipe having actually been laid so far, four from the Iowa Park end, and four from the Breckenridge end, in north Stephens county. Actual laying of pipe has been delayed somewhat by a delay in getting it on the grounds, but is expected to go forward rapidly now. Six-inch pipe is being laid from the south end north, and four-inch from the north end south. It is planned to run the line with a slight curve to the west so as to take in the Swastika district, at which place it is planned to install a pumping station. This field will also be the dividing line between the six-inch and the four-inch pipe. Two gangs are at work laying pipe.

R-F OIL CO. GETS BEST WELL

No. 2, Nichols Completed For Estimated 300 Barrels Per Day

The Ray-Featherstone Oil company late yesterday afternoon completed their No. 2, Nichols, and swabbed it at the rate of more than 300 barrels a day in two hours following the penetration of a sand encountered at 1,611 feet to a depth of 1,617 feet. The well is estimated as being at least a 300-barrel well, and reported to have made a much better initial performance than the No. 1 well, a location east.

This well is located 450 feet west and 150 feet north from the southeast corner of lot 6, section 30, A. P. Nichols land, ATNCR, Archer county. It is the second well drilled by Ray and Featherstone on this tract, a 167-acre lease purchased some time ago. The initial well, the first 1,600-foot producer in the district, was completed some time ago.

Casing was set above the sand yesterday. When the sand had been drilled into this afternoon to a depth of about six feet oil rose in the hole at a rate of about 500 feet an hour. Swabbing was started and the well is reported to have made in excess of 15 barrels an hour, for more than three hours.

UNITED CENTRAL RESEATING ON McCARTY NO. 11

The United Central Oil company is attempting to reseat in their No. 11, McCarty, west offset to the McCarty No. 2, Hammon-Lee-Bullington, et al, given depth of topping the sand being 1655 feet, which, accounting for surface level is about 20 feet higher than in the well to the east.

No. 12, a location south is drilling past 900 feet.

Shamrock's No. 9, Richardson-Mayfield Guages 182 Bbls., 24 Hrs.

Special to The Record News.

OLNEY, Aug. 16.—With four new tests drilling in the Ragle pool and three wells on the pump with a combined output of 197 barrels daily, this field although only recently discovered is making rapid strides in development and promises to be an important addition to the peroleum resources of this section. The discovery well continues to make 50 barrels a day while its western offset, the No. 3, is making 92 barrels a day by guage. The No. 1 Knight-Hines-Hayes to the southwest is reported making 55 barrels daily.

Of the tests drilling on the Ragle land the Knight-Hines-Hayes Ragle No. 2, C lease, which is the test to the west, is drilling at 680 feet. The Knight-Hines Ragle No. 2, B lease, which is the test farthest east, is drilling at 485 feet while the Knight Hines Ragle No. 2, D lease, which is between the other two is drilling at 735 feet.

On the Hausler land about a mile to the west, Jeffers and Newby in survey 167 are temporarily shut down at 100 feet making repairs and awaiting water.

Swastika No. 1.

In the Swastika field the Shamrock Oil company's Bridwell Mayfield-Richardson No. 9 made 182 barrels on the pump the first 24 hours. This is on the north end of the lease.

Bart Magee's No. 4 Scruggs has been drilled in from the sand found at 1,339 feet and is estimated at 100 barrels.

Lowry and Cavin have skidded rig west to their No. 2 location in block 2, Harbison land. This will be an offset to Clark and Magee's No. 5.

The Swastika Oil Syndicate has skidded rig to drill its No. 1 on the J. T. Richardson lease, block 7.

The Shamrock's Goldsmith Nos. 8 and 9 are on the sand at 1,323 and 1,332 feet respectively.

Wildcats.

The Union Oil company on the Keathley land, survey 153, has finished running eight-inch casing at 2,510 feet.

In survey 294, Baldwin land, near Jean, Litchfield is coring ahead for the shallow pay at 765 feet.

McLean and Davis in survey 90, Durham land, just north of the town of Padgitt are drilling a 1,110 feet.

About a mile east and a little south of the Peter-Kemp shallow field, J. I. Harvey has made a location on the Hill farm survey 195. Location is 1,020 feet west of the northeast corner and 150 feet south of the north line of survey, being on the highest point of land in this area with an elevation of 1,312 feet. A 30 Star machine has been moved and the test is due to spud Tuesday.

The five producers on the Kemp lease are being pumped steadily since the laying of the pipe line from this field. Five thousand barrels of oil which was in storage on the lease was moved out through the new line, relieving congestion in the field.

Twenty Years Ago

On August 16th, Reo celebrated its twentieth anniversary.

Just twenty years ago on that day, the Reo Motor Car Company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Michigan to manufacture and sell motor vehicles.

Anniversary days are good days on which to review the past, take stock of our accomplishments and to see how firmly we have adhered to the ideals which prompted our beginning.

The Reo Motor Car Company was originated on a policy of service.

In the eyes of the law it was incorporated to "manufacture and sell motor vehicles," but in the eyes of its organizers it was to do more than that.

It was to engage in the honest manufacture of quality motor cars to be sold at a fair price in consideration of the quality of the product. It was, furthermore, to safeguard the interests of the owners of its cars by doing nothing to depreciate the value of their cars prematurely and it was, also, to promote the interests of its dealers by maintaining a position of high rank in the automobile industry and by giving them a line of products that would pave the way to successful and satisfactory retail business.

Now, on its twentieth anniversary, the Reo Motor Car Company can look with pardonable pride on its past records.

Its accomplishments have been many and Reo has strictly adhered to those high ideals and that policy of service—manufacturing good dependable transportation—which marked its origin.

Reo has manufactured honestly and progressively—has been sure of every step and yet has sponsored more than its share of the most important advances in automotive progress.

It has consistently kept faith with Reo owners and has manufactured vehicles which are famous, among other things, for their remarkable resale value.

And it has promoted the interests of its dealers by maintaining a position second to none in the matter of financial stability and business character, and by producing the most complete line of motor transportation in the world.

Dealers come and go, but Reo is fortunate in that most of its original dealers have remained with Reo and have been successful.

This is a gratifying state of affairs and the Reo Motor Car Company has enjoyed this pleasant relationship and the co-operation of its loyal and hard-working sales organization.

Now, more than ever before, the company is a leader in financial soundness, in the stability of personnel and in the regularity of its production. Today it manufactures the most complete line of motor transportation in the world.

Since the early infancy of the automotive industry, Reo has consistently and continuously typified motor car goodness. Taking dictation from none but its buying public, sanely indifferent to passing fads and untried theories, and uninfluenced by practices not backed by good business or sound engineering, Reo has for twenty years been a dominant factor in a dominant industry.

In the Reo line you can choose from a complete series of personal cars—open and closed, powered with the sturdy T-6 Engine and equipped with genuine Balloon Tires.

For your business there is the Mighty Speed Wagon with twelve standard body styles, or the Speed Wagon Parcel Delivery, a handsome model that will add prestige to the finest establishment.

Two types of busses and a taxicab, with six-cylinder engines, attractive in appearance, unfaltering in performance, and economical in operation, will meet the demands of dealers in Transportation.

being in communication with rum smugglers.

Roamaine Q. Merrick, divisional prohibition chief for New York and northern New Jersey, held an opposite view of the government's jurisdiction where the doings of a vessel outside the 12 mile limit were involved. He held, in fact, that the government held no jurisdiction, either over the cabaret ship, or these persons who braved the bouncing billows in quest of its booze dispensary.

Although Captain Jacobs took steps to learn the identity of the unknown craft aboard which the newspaperman got his thrills, he continued to disbelieve that such a craft actually had been serenely entertaining guests off Fire Island for more than a month, as reported. Coast guardsment patrolling from Cape Cod to Cape May, had never seen or encountered such a gaff waited oasis, he declared. The captain advanced a theory that the vessel described was a member of the permanent Jersey coast rum fleet, and that its skipper, bored by dull times on the row, might have held occasional receptions off Fire Island for the rum running patrons, bootleggers and their guests. Such parties were becoming common among vessels of rum row, said Captain Jacobs.

The news reporter's description however was not of a bootlegger's party. He told of engaging passage, with several other men with feminine bound for the nameless ship whose busy hulls by day and maze of glimmering light by night had mystified the residents of Long Island.

The reporter told how the speedy boat was disabled in deep water, how she floated helplessly for hours, and how, finally, her passengers were rescued by another speedster which with compunctions, on a high powered launch a merry party of wealthy ones also was bound toward the floating casino.

He told of boarding the huge craft, at last, of paying a $5 cover charge and $5 for a stateroom for the night, of being ushered into the presence of a jazz orchestra, a staff of busy bar tenders, and a party of sixty revellers who drank and danced the night away.

THEY may grow 'em bigger, higher and handsomer in this vale of tears—I won't say—but, listen to me, MR. MONTGOMERY Co., alias Street, Phelps, Montgomery and Lowe, there were never gathered together under one big top four men more warmly welcomed into the business circles of the "City That Faith Built."

And while our 50,000 population, male and female, from Indiana Heights to Center Street and from Kell Avenue to Wilson Avenue, are shouting their welcomes, believe me, none are more heartfelt nor genuine than that of your tub-shaped friend across the street.

JUDGE WILLS

sion of criminals and was empowered only to pass on their cases as they were presented in open court by the district attorney. He declared, also, that Judge P. A. Martin of this city had caused the indictment of 36 men for flogging in Wichita county, yet he had never gotten out and captured a single one of them .

Says Impeachment Just.

The impeachment of the former governor in 1917 drew considerable attention from the speaker. He declared that the verdict of the court of inquiry was just and equitable and that Mr. Ferguson had no just complaint to make of the judgment. Had he been convicted on a technicality or had he been denied the service of attorneys, he might be entitled to another hearing, the speaker declared.

"But he wasn't convicted that way. He had enough of his whisky money left to hire the best lawyers in Texas; he was still clothed with his official power; he was given a fair and impartial trial, found to have disgraced and dishonored his office and the state, and was accordingly expelled."

The Prodigal Son.

It was then that the speaker gave a modern version of the Biblical story of the prodigal son and referred to Mr. Ferguson as an unrepentent sinner, coming back with no apologies and no admissions of guilt.

Brief mention of the press was made at this point, Judge Wills speaking kindly of the local papers which, he said, were not supporting his candidate but which in time "would see the light and come around." He said also that public opinion ran a little ahead of the papers anyhow and that they did not exert as much influence on events as they were credited with doing.

In concluding he asked, "What does Mrs. Ferguson know about running the state? No more than I know about teaching Sanskrit in Heidelberg university; no more than Joe Bailey knows about the rights of man.

"Like a good citizen, though, I'm going to obey the laws and wish her luck if she is elected. I'm going to strive to make the Ferguson administration a sucess; but I'm also going to strive to be the first to catch that old rascal the minute he tries to get his fingers on another public penny and I'm going to strive to send him to the penitentiary where he ought to have gone in the first place."

Refers to Joe Bailey.

Incidentally, Judge Wills' reference to former Senator Joe Bailey was not the first he had made. He scathingly denounced Bailey earlier in his address and poked considerable fun at the support he was lending the Ferguson candidacy.

The address was concluded with an appeal for an overwhelming vote for Felix Robertson next Saturday night and with a recital of some of Judge Robertson's religious activities in Dallas.

The speaker of the evening was introduced by Judge B. D. Sartin of this city who referred, also, to the impeachment of the former governor and touched on "the manner in which he brought more disgrace and shame to Texas than has any man in the past 50 years." He, too, ridiculed the idea Mrs. Ferguson would be more than a figure head in the governor's office and that Jim Ferguson would not, in fact, be the real executive of the state.

Robert Farmer, chairman of the Wichita County Robertson for Governor club presided at the meeting and spoke briefly but spiritedly of his convictions that the "people of Texas will not elect to governor a convicted liar and self-confessed perjurer."

Rev. A. J. Holt, pastor of the Lamar Avenue Baptist church opened the meeting with a short prayer.

CHANGES MADE IN SCHOOL TEXT BOOKS

New texts for use in the county and rural schools this year are being received by Superintendent Burl Bryant. Several large boxes arrived Saturday, were unpacked and made ready for distribution through the county school system.

Several changes in the text books have been made this year due to rulings on the text book contracts the state department of education had made with eastern publishers. Settlement of the controversy necessitated a number of changes in the books to be used here this winter.

WELCOME

The Montgomery Company, Inc.

In planning for the building of the interior fixtures of Wichita Falls' newest Men's Furnishing Store it was quite fitting that considerable care and thought should be given in selecting proper material and workmanship. In this connection it was the aim of Mr. Montgomery to place this contract in the hands of a reliable home contractor. We feel complimented that this work was entrusted to us and point with pride to the results of our effort in this deal.

Quality workmanship and highest grade materials have created an enviable record for us. Our employes are men of many years experience and are under the personal supervision of the management who has spent several years studying the art of planning and effectively executing special designed fixtures such as were placed in the Montgomery store.

CITATION IN ERROR BY PUBLICATION.

THE STATE OF TEXAS.
To the Sheriff or Constable of Wichita County, Greetings:

You are hereby commanded to summon F. Pappathan and G. D. Costan, by making publication of the citation once each week for four successive weeks previous to the return day hereof in some newspaper published in your county to be and appear before our Court of Civil Appeals of the 2nd Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas, at the October term, 1924, of said court, to be holden in the city of Ft. Worth, county of Tarrant and state of Texas, within sixty days from the date of service of this citation, then and there to defendant a Writ of Error sued out on the petition in writing of Blair-Hughes company, plaintiff in error, against C. E. Basham, E. S. Goodner, H. A. Gray, Jr., F. Pappathan and G. D. Costan as defendants in error.

Filed with the Clerk of the Dist. Court of Wichita County, Texas, on this the 28th day of July, 1924, for the revision and correction of a certain judgment rendered in the 78th Dist. Court of Wichita County, Texas, on the 18 day of April, 1924, at its March Term, 1924, in a certain cause pending in said court, numbered 12156-B on the docket thereof, wherein Blair-Hughes company was plaintiff and C. E. Basham, E. S. Goodner, H. A. Gray, Jr., F. Pappathan and G. D. Costan were defendants, and which said judgment is described in said petition, as follows, to-wit:

That on the 18th day of April, 1924, a judgment was entered in which it was ordered, adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff in said suit, the Blair-Hughes company, a corporation, should take nothing against defendants, H. A. Gray, Jr., C. E. Basham and E. S. Goodner, but that said defendants and each of them should go hence and recover of and from the plaintiff, Blair-Hughes company, all costs of said suit, and wherein it was further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that said plaintiff, Blair-Hughes company, should recover against defendants, F. Pappathan and G. D. Costan, jointly and severally, $800.00, being the amount of a check executed by said defendants to plaintiff on the 14th of September, 1920, with interest at 6 per cent from said date, and also $3,030.25 the principal amount of a promissory note executed by said defendants to plaintiff on the 14th day of September, 1920, due October 1st, 1920, providing for interest from said date at the rate of 10 per cent per annum and providing for 10 per cent upon principal and accrued interest as attorney's fees, making the aggregate amount of said judgment the sum of $5,135.10, on which sum $607.50 shall bear interest thereafter at the rate of 6 per cent per annum and $4,527.60 shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum, and wherein it was further ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiff, Blair-Hughes company pay all costs incurred by reason of making defendants, C. E. Basham, E. S. Goodner, and H. A. Gray, Jr., parties to the suit, except as to the said plaintiff will recover all of its costs against defendants, G. D. Costan and F. Pappathan.

Your petition further shows that it desires to remove the said judgment to the Court of Civil Appeals in and for the 2nd Supreme Judicial District of Texas, at Ft. Worth for revision and correction and your petitioner tender herewith a writ of error bond for the amount and conditioned as required by law, and prays for the issuance of a citation in error and prays that its petition for writ of error be granted, a transcript prepared and filed in the Court of Civil Appeals, and that such further proceedings may be had as are in law proper and required.

Herein fail not, but of this writ make due return within 60 days from the date of issuance, hereof, with your indorsement thereon, showing how you have executed the same.

Given under my hand and the seal of said court, at office in Wichita Falls, Texas, this the 29th day of July, A. D., 1924.

(Seal) A. F. KERR, Clerk
District Court, Wichita County, Texas.

READ THIS — Why You Should Live in Beautiful Indian Heights Addition — READ THIS

BECAUSE
1. It offers all modern conveniences.
2. It is just five minutes from the business district.
3. It is divided into exceptionally large lots.
4. It is located on the highest point west of the city.
5. The lots are cheaper in price than any other desirable city property.

Other points to consider.

SPACIOUS LAWNS:
make living conditions much more attractive, especially in the summer. But you can't have a roomy lawn on an ordinary "subdivision." But in Indian Heights an extra room.

IT IS COOLER IN INDIAN HEIGHTS
There is a difference in temperature of at least 10 degrees between this addition and the downtown district.

THE PAVEMENT
The pavement is now open to traffic. Drive out the Seymour road and through INDIAN HEIGHTS ADDITION, observe the commanding view and telephone us for price and terms on these building sites. You will be surprised at the low price you can purchase one of these building sites, less than $600, based on the average 50x150 foot lot. Sites purchased now mean a nice profit to the buyer within six months.

ELECTRA VOTING BOXES SPLIT

Re-Division Made By Commissioners Is Announced

Re-division of Electra into voting precincts has been completed and the new arrangement submitted to and approved by the commissioners court. The Electra division had not been finished and was not announced last week when the other portions of the county were cut up and more boxes created.

Five boxes, including one at Mount Carmel, are to be provided for Electra voters after the first of next year. Heretofore they have had but three.

The new divisions are:

Box 35: Start at the intersection of South Main street and Fort Worth and Denver railway, south the city limits, southeast on the center line of the Electra-K. M. A. highway to the south line of the county, east to the east line of commissioners precinct No. 4, north to its intersection with the Fort Worth and Denver railway and northwest to the intersection with South Main street.

1900 BLOCK NINTH PAVEMENT NOW BEING REPAIRED

Work was started Saurday on repairing the patched paving in front of the old street car barn in the 1900 block Ninth street. Two large holes have remained in the street since the barn was razed, marking the points where the tracks led in from the main line to the car sheds.

The north side of Ninth has been blocked for three weeks pending a repairing of the street. It is believed that this will be finished within a few days time now and the street can then be reopened.

MRS. J. N. PROTHRO AND FRIEND INJURED

Due to the fact that both Dr. A. R. Prothro and J. N. Prothro are in Colorado Springs, some confusion was evident in a story of an automobile accident in Colorado Springs Thursday. J. N. Prothro, local real estate man, had his car completely demolished Thursday when it collided with an ambulance in Colorado Springs. It was first reported that it was Dr A. R. Prothro and family who were in the accident but this mistake was noted Saturday. Mrs. J. N. Prothro and a friend were bruised when the car in which they were riding collided with an ambulance and was completely demolished. No other members of the family were injured.

OFFICERS CHECK MURDER DETAILS

Accused Negro Still Proves Defiant to Local Police

Further investigation of the M. T. Williams confession regarding the slaying July 8, last, of Wesley Ashmore failed yesterday to bring forth any more developments of importance. Officers working on it reported last night that while more corroborative material was obtained, the basic facts of the confession as made last Tuesday in the Cook county jail at Gainesville have been unchanged.

The negro has been subjected to almost constant grilling since early Friday morning but is still said to be surly, defiant and uncommunicative. Details of his original statements are being checked up from every possible angle, however, so as to preclude all chances of his coming out with a denial that would bear even a semblance of veracity.

The investigation now is largely in the hands of District Attorney James V. Allred, Assistant County Attorney Wayne Someville and various members of the city police department through whose efforts it was at first obtained. Chief of Police George H. Hodgins and Detective John Boone are continuing their work in an attempt to eventually clear away every shred of mystery.

Eddie Thomas, the negro implicated by Williams as his accomplice in the slaying, is still under observation. He still maintains his innocence regarding the murder.

Local Youths Stage Old Time "Chawin'" Contest

In the past there have been marathon dances, marathon walks, marathon dish washing contests and marathon swimming matches but the queerest contest of all was staged on a down town corner Saturday. No money was wagered, no odds were at stake—but each contestant stayed in the contest to the finish.

William Lawson, popular high school football player, and another local boy were the contestants. A package of Beechnut chewing tobacco was placed between the two contestants and each began cramming the "chawing" into their mouths. Half the sack was soon emptied and still the contest waxed fast and furious. Three-fourths of the tobacco soon disappeared and the two rivals has gained their second wind. With words of encouragement ringing in their ears the two contestants made rapid headway into the remaining portion and in a few minutes the tobacco was gone. The mouth of both boys who crammed to capacity and the gutter sprayed with "amber juice." The spectators acted as judges and by unanimous vote decreed the contest a tie.

148 ABSENTEE VOTES CAST

Voters Have Until Tuesday Night to Wind Up Balloting

A total of 148 votes had been cast at the county clerk's office at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, a tabulation of the ballots there revealed. Of this amount, 54 were marked and sent in or brought in Satruday, thus making it by far the most active of the week in respect to the absentee voting.

With Monday and Tuesday left in which the ballots may be cast, it is believed that the voting strength shown in the second primary will exceed that of the absentees in the July 26 election. A few less than 200 absentee votes were cast then. Ballots, it is believed, will pile up rapidly the first two days of this week.

Tuesday night is the time limit on which applications may be made for absentee ballots, although votes mailed to the county clerk during the day Tuesday and which do not arrive until later will be counted as well.

First Orange Car to Appear Street Railway Today

Don't be alarmed if you see an orange streak dashing up the Southland Street car line. A repainted green bug now of the sunset tint, will be placed on the Southland line early this morning, according to employees at the car barn. The car has a fresh coat of orange paint on it and will be the first of the entire string of cars that will make its appearance on the various lines in the city. It is the intention of the traction officials to repaint all the cars orange as soon as possible and put them into active service.

It is thought that three more orange painted cars will be placed on the city lines next Saturday and the number will be gradually increased until every street car operated in Wichita Falls will have an orange hue.

Little Green God Garners Edge On Cupid Past Week

Divorce applications and marriage licenses almost ran a dead heat last week, records at the district and county clerk's offices showing that 17 separations were sought, against the 16 matrimonial permits issued. Thus the little green god has a margain of one over Dan Cupid.

Added to the 17 divorce suits filed are seven divorce decrees granted by the district judge during the week. Something like a dozen divorce actions came up for hearing and of this number seven were granted.

Detectives at work on the case were unable Saturday to unearth any clues as to the identity of the burglars.

Adversity and Thrift

However well disguised it may be, adversity in youth is most frequently a blessing. There is nothing that strengthens character so thoroughly as self-denial. He only can appreciate Thrift who has been compelled to sacrifice things that hurt.

This is one reason why the youth, trained in Adversity's hard school, meets successfully the big trials of life where a more favored boy, whose life has been carefree, whose path has been smoothed with money, goes down in failure.

Visiting Girls Inspiration for Social Activities Here During Week

Wichita Falls College Girls Prepare for Rush Season at University

Rush week at the University of Texas starting September 17, is beginning to engage the attention of sorority girls all over the state, and already girls are arriving in Austin making plans and preparations for that week which is organized with a perfection which would do justice to an efficiency expert.

Not only are Wichita Falls university girls interested in this opening event, but large numbers of local university alumni, many of whom are young matrons, look forward to the week with a great deal of pleasure and this city is always well represented at this time.

Each sorority is naming the rush captain, a member who is not only an innate leader but also a person of poise and charm who is in general charge of the entertaining of the new girls invited to be guests of the sororities before the opening of the university.

Alpha Phi has chosen Miss Mary Goldman of Austin, holder of a shrine scholarship at the University of Texas for the coming year, to head their rush work. Zeta Tau Alpha has selected Miss Minifred Smith to head rush week for that chapter. Miss Smith was one of the 1923 Cactus beauties.

Thelma Showalter of Austin is rush week captain for Alpha Delta Phi sorority which will be at home during the year at 2405 Whitis avenue.

Kappa Kappa Gamma will be led by Miss Josephine Hidson of Fort Worth. Phi Beta Phi will be headed by Miss Erva Killingsworth of Waco; Delta Delta Delta by Miss Belea Doss of Bonham; Phi Mu by Miss Bailey of Rock Port; Gamma Phi Beta by Miss Elsie Eilers of San Antonio; Delta Zeta by Miss Charlotte Knowd of Temple, and Kappa Alpha Theta by Miss Jane Burgess of Dallas. Happa Delta will be headed by Miss Dorothy Pettigrew of Austin, and Miss Mamie Twitchell for Chi Omega will be assisted by Miss Virginia Harper.

Of course there is at the head of each sorority houses a careful chaperone, but her duties are chiefly social and the actual management of the entertaining falls on the girls.

Every girl accepts her share of rush work, be it the arrangements that precede the luncheons and dinners and teas, or the no less exacting duty of being a beautifully gowned and smiling hostess from 8 o'clock in the morning until 10 o'clock in the evening.

Supervised by the deans and aided by the alumni members of the sororities who are members of the Austin-Pan Hellenic association, rush week this year is to be an affair of feminine society, for the edit has gone forth that this is to be a week of "manless" rushing. This decree is final and almost fatal if, perchance, a rushee or sorority does break the rule.

All of this is of the week itself, but now is the days to arrive before the week there are furniture and floors to paint, curtains to hem and place cards to be made.

A visit to any sorority house within the next three weeks will show you that those who wear evening frocks and those who wear paint-spiashed aprons are all sisters good and true—the difference being merely a matter of time, for the apron is the cocoon for the social butterfly of September 17, the first day of rush week.

Today's Poem

WATER LILIES

Little waxen flower boats,
Floating on the water,
Are you frightened with perfume
For a fairy's daughter?
Are you bringing incense rare
To greet her birthday morning?
Is your fragrant cargo meant
Just for her adorning?
Little waxen flower boats,
The Fairy Child decrees
That burdens of your loyliness
Shall scent each passing breeze!
—Elizabeth H. Haner in the New York Sun.

Anglo-American Vs. Continental Literature

Article VII of a Series Written Especially for the Record News by Mrs. James C. Berney.

THE Nineteenth Century was a period of unrest all over Europe and England. This unrest in England was largely social, owing to its change from an agricultural to a manufacturing country, and later from the effect of the different inventions and discoveries such as the spinning jenny, steam engine, telegraph, telephone and electricity. This disquiet was reflected in literature of all kinds and assunged by a series of peaceful social and industrial revolutions which made England, at the end of the Victorian Age, a veritable "Land of Fulfillment" to the still struggling European nations.

Beginning with the "Reform Bill" in 1832 and with the revival of the romantic in poetry (advocating the rights of the common man) the status of the common man improved until at the end of Victoria's rule a great democracy was achieved, and a gigantic advance was made toward More's vision of Utopia.

The second great movement was the development of modern fiction and literary criticism; the third was a powerful movement to teach, unlift and benefit humanity. The fourth, and the most embracing, was the economic bent of philosophy and scientific writing of Lyell, Malthus, Spencer, Huxley and Tyndall, and the simultaneous publications of Darwin and Wallace on "Evolution of Mankind by Natural Sexual Selection" (1859).

Theory of Evolution.

While Diderot and Buffon of France indicated this great theory in their earlier writings, yet to Darwin in England and Wallace in Java (an Englishman) belongs the credit of having fully developed the probability of the evolution of man by means of natural sexual selection. This theory revolutionized the thought of the whole world, altered the attitude of mankind to revealed religion, was the cause of the "Naturalistic Novel," and inserted science as a permanent element in modern fiction. The first result of this theory was confusion and bitter conflict, but as the smoke has cleared away, we have found that science has no quarrel with religion, it only throws an added glow over the faith of mankind, by showing the real foundation for his belief.

It is a curious fact that Darwin and Wallace differed in one main fundamental of their theory. Darwin built up man, only as to his body and mind, while Wallace, taking the same view of the body, added a firm belief that the Almighty also gave at some period in the development of man a spiritual life or a soul. It is still a more curious fact, that both English and Americans seem unconsciously to have adopted the Wallace theory, as our greatest literature deals with man as a dual personality of body and soul, while the Continental literature accepted the theory of Darwin, setting forth only the development of the body. If you, my readers will think over the great books of English fiction since the days of George Eliot, you will discover that the great realists rediscovered this dual personality. If, on the other hand, you think over the great books of French fiction, written after the publication of "Evolution of Mankind by Natural Sexual Selection" you will find them considering man in reference to his bodily emotions, instincts and intellect.

Influence of Bible.

The question arises—why? Cannot the answer be found in the fact that the common people of England and America have been nurtured on the code of morals to be found in the Bible, from the early 15th century, that code which constitutes the soul as the judge of the acts of the body. Cannot further light be thrown on the query, when we remember that the reformation, which gave more Bibles to the people of England, was stifled in France, first by Louis XIV and later almost buried, with all religion, when the goddess of reason was erected for the worship of the people in the churches of France instead of the great leader and guide—the Christ.

Be us it may. Realism and naturalism took a different direction from the very beginning of England and America, also in France and Russia. The best Anglo-American realists in their fiction, except Whitman and George Moore, put more stress on the inner life, on the motives that actuate decision, than on the emotions and instincts of the body. They presented the whole man, his heredity, environment and training plus a certain inward personality that made his own will the deciding factor, in his fate. The French and Russian realists ignore this deciding personal factor, laying stress on heredity and environment as a deciding and predetermined facts which control the fate of man. It was therefore the acceptance of the theory of evolution plus the naturally skeptical and materialistic nature of a lately freed people, sore and pessimistic from memory of their wrongs, which gave rise to the "Naturalistic or Experimental Novel" with Zola as the head of the cult. This school of novelists, by the little commental circle in America and England, is urged upon us as our model of true artistic worth, although it as a product of different civilization and different mental viewpoint from both America and England.

The particular element that they object to in our writings, is that element which was most thoroughly kneaded into the racial consciousness during the Victorian Age—the element of clean morality necessary to true artistic merit.

Seattle Camp Fire Girls.

Miss Josephine Fisk, guardian of Idaka Fire, recently visited the headquarters of the Seattle Camp Fire girls while in that city, and presented the greetings of the Texas girls to those of the far northern state.

The Seattle girls are unique in that for their headquarters they utilize a trim little ocean going vessel, fully rigged and equipped in Camp Fire fittings, which was presented to them at the close of the war by Captain Keene, of Seattle.

The ship, "Camaraderie" serves as a meeting place for all the groups in the city. Besides an enormous recreation hall in the hold of the vessel, the lounges are used for workrooms in the various hand crafts.

The dining hall and mess are equipped with modern and electrical devices which make feasts and spreads a joy. Staterooms have been refurnished and redecorated to make sleeping quarters for the girls while the spacious decks furnish opportunity for the study of signaling and sea craft of all sorts.

NEW HUP PARTS PUT ON DISPLAY

Modern Materials In Contrast With Bulky Parts of Years Ago

Local Hupmobile distributors, through their parts displays, are offering prospects the next thing through the Hupp factories in their desire to show the kind of quality that is put into Hupmobiles.

Prospective buyers have been strongly impressed with the display, which shows in a forceful way why today's motor car is better than previous automobiles.

The parts board well illustrates the experience of Hupp designers in producing hundreds of thousands of cars. Parts much smaller and lighter than those of earlier cars are noticed, though the parts themselves are even stronger than the corresponding ones of earlier years. This is due to the resourcefulness of the matallurgist, who has introduced alloys into steel which have increased its strength and, at the same time, decreased its weight.

The idea of such a display is not alone to show the more important parts that enter into the manufacture of an automobile, but to describe the material of each part and to show by comparison why poorer materials cannot be used.

"Such a display takes the guess out of motor car buying," the dealers say. Every prospect should know what materials go into the car he buys before he purchases There is no longer any need to buy a car on faith."

Prominent among the parts displayed are the camshaft, camshaft generator chain, differential pinion, valve, spring clips, steering knuckles, clutch release bearing assembly, steering gear yoke assembly, oil pressure pump assembly, clutch gear, axle drive pinion, axle shaft and axle drive gear.

SMALLPOX MAY CAUSE DELAY

Surgeon General Warns Motorists to Make Preparations

Motorists planning extensive automobile tours are advised to have themselves vaccinated or revaccinated as a protection against delays through smallpox quarantines in a special bulletin just sent to all motor clubs affiliated with the American Automobile association.

This action on the part of A. A. A. is, in turn, a result of a request made by the surgeon-general of the United States in a special communication to the big national motoring organization.

"The increasing prevalence of smallpox in the United States and its continuous spread from city to city and from state to state," he warns, "will, if not checked, not only augment the number of victims, but may bring about a condition which will seriously interfere with the movements of automobile tourists and other travelers.

"It is conceivable that this interference might be of a degree that would involve the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars through quarantine measures, a contingency which might easily be avoided provided our people can be induced to protect themselves by vaccination and revaccination."

Thos. P. Henry, president of the A. A. A., believes that this is one of the important problems which affiliated clubs should take up with their members without delay, particularly with the touring season getting into full swing and motorists mapping out extensive journeys.

According to the A. A. A. executive, a number of communities have already imposed restrictions upon unvaccinated tourists who have resulted in great inconvenience and, in many instances, considerable hardship. This, he says, can be avoided by seeing a doctor before starting on the trip.

"Since the small ox menace is considerably scattered throughout the country and varies widely in intensity, it will hardly be possible for our organization to furnish local affiliated clubs with detailed information as to where the motorist is likely to encounter such difficulty," Mr. Henry explains. "In view of the fact that the precaution in itself is so inexpensive, so simple and so certain such effort would hardly be justifiable.

ANGLO

Two main gigantic literary, scientific and humanitarian streams flowed throughout the regin of Queen Victoria. Literature and science vied each other in an effort to find out the truth of life, and having found it, to proclaim it in such a way that a great lesson should be taught. This search for truth concerned men as far apart as Darwin, Wallace and the great Cardinal Newman. It was the prime endeavor of poets and novelists, of scientists and churchmen. Thus there was born that moral spirit, which permeated that period and demanded that literature serve as a truth bearer and as a means for uplifting mankind. The latter uplift element, together with its lack of the pure sexual details of life is the main point of attack of those who look with contempt upon the literature of the Victorian Age. Yet who could show more strongly the effect of unbridled sexual instincts than Eliot in Adam Bede or who could more clearly show the effect of a broken law of marriage than our own Hewthorne in Scarlet Letter, yet both great authors keep close to the bonds of delicacy instead of revealing in lascivious details like Drieser in the "Genius"; Moore in "Esther Wathers"; Lawrence in "A Bed of Roses"; Sherwood Anderson in almost all he has written and Hergesheimer in "Cytherea."

The one aim then of the Victorian Age has to sweep away error and reveal the underlying truth of life, the second aim was humaitarian. This spirit was born when the people of England realized that the oppression of men, women and little children in factories, mines and other industries was a crime and an economic error. When such novelists as Gaskell, Eliot and Dickens presented the lives of these oppressed with truth and sincerity, then indeed a great spirit of responsibility was loosed and the old saying "Am I my brother's keeper," assumed a fresh significance, and the more fortunate hastened to aid the poor, helpless and oppressed. Thus national brotherhood was born, mainly brought about by the writers of that day. With the expansion of England into a world empire, this feeling of brotherhood broadened out until it embraced all the possessions of Great Britain. Literature reflected this second aim, and Tennyson correctly expressed the sentiment of England and the modern sentiment of all English speaking people when he urged that the "war drum be no more heard, but instead there shall be a vast parliament of the world."

Brotherhood Sentiment.

The sentiment of universal brotherhood is a direct result of the great humanitarian, scientific, political and social writers of the Victorian Age. An age that held aloft the ideals of truth, love, brotherhood and democracy; while termed an age of realism may as equally be termed an age of idealism, as it revealed and held up those great ideals by which the world has progressed.

While England by means of peaceful revolutions was advancing toward democracy and brotherhood, Europe, torn to pieces from the time of the Napoleonic conquests, by wars of aggression and revolt, had only to dream of democracy while cowering under the heel of depotism. Her writings, like those of England, mirrored her life of oppression, misery, want and low morality. England was reaping the result of centuries of training and education of her common people, while Europe was witnessing the result of contrary measures. The general unrest in Europe was due to the unstable conditions of all governments. When all its countries lay prostate at the feet of Napoleon, save Russia, despite their humiliating position, they received and held on to the three magic words, liberty, equality and fraternity that were eventually to redeem them. Through successive years these words were their hidden ideals, and to them, unconsciously and consciously each country advanced, and vain was human effort to check the progress of "The Plan of the Ages." Vain was the effort to hold France quiescent from 1815 to 1870 under the rule of Bourbon kings and the despotic Empire of Louis Napoleon. Her liberation came from Germany in a way certainly not intended by the Germans. Providence who rules the fate of nations to advance the progress of "The Plan of the Ages" caused France to be free through the progress of her own ideas in Germany.

Bismarch, the iron chancellor, arose took the scattered fragments and made of it the powerful German confederation and a strong military power. With these forces, he revenged the wrongs committed on Prussia by Napoleon, by laying low her Napoleonic empire, thus setting the French people free from the tryrany of a one man depotic government. By his imposition of the most gigantic indemnity ever known up to that period, he welded the French into such frenzy of patriotism, that all differences of parties were merged, and the great French republic born. This republic, now fifty-four years old was so firmly cemented with the tear, trials, blood and heroic sacrifices of the whole French people, that it bids fair to reach the stability of our own beloved country.

Russia Satire.

Russia, because of the censure imposed by Catherine, produced a literature of satire and social abuses presented with brutal realism, indicitive of the condition of Russia. Later a naturalistic, shockingly indecent literature arose, born of the union of the science of evolution with the degraded conditions of Russia society. Tolstoi shines out as a star of the first magnitude, yet with all his greatness, he reveals to us, not universal social conditions, but loathesome morals in his own country which he is laboring to correct. While much of the philosophy he inculcates is applicable to all mankind, and while his art in expressing it, is often true and noble, yet the many details which he gives with the peasants ugly nasty view, while necessary to his delination, are not precisely the methods that are suitable for a country like ours, where such conditions are not prevalent and where each man may rise as high as his character and ability will allow. Yet the little circle of critics who urge that we adopt these ugly Russian and French details in our writings, showing in all its ugliness sex emotions unrestrained by spiritual laws, insist that it is prodery, and as such prevents the highest expression of art. To adopt the Russian spirit of social outlook, means to go back to the much abused Victorian spirit of humanitarians. With that most of us thoroughly agree, but we do not agree that the conditions which probably sanctions the baring of sex in its ugliness in Russia should cause us to go and do likewise.

In previous articles, attention has been called to the good and evil effect of the school of "experimental novel" headed by Zola, and to the greatness of Balzac and that master of language Flaubert. These three seem to represent the three streams of the late 19th century literature in France and these three are the special examples held up to us as the finest guides for writing. We who read for ourselves may possible hold other opinions, and consider those books, not as great models to copy in this depiction of low and obsene details, but types of great books in construction and original creations, marred by their authors depiction of only part of life, and that unlovely and unusual Books written by great geniuses, whose life was unfortunately cast in a country that at that time was almost wholly given over to materialism, to affairs with the upper classes and the almost legitimate "part marriages" which were so commonplace as to excite little or no comment.

Characters Reflected.

In reading many continental criticisms on French writers, it is quite a matter of course that each should have one or several "affairse". Take Diderot, Huysman and Sand, three selected at random, all great artists, all great lovers of humanity, yet all have their gallantries which are taken as a matter of course by French society. It is a matter of scientific knowledge that the book written by an author, is a reflection of life seen through the temperament of the writer. Thus the novels of the French, to a very great exent, only reflect the nature of their authors. This nature is usually sensuous and materialistic. Even as the Russians reflect in their literature, their own brutal and debasting social and moral conditions, so do the French reflect in their's a more refined, by as equally immoral viewpoint of life.

Now why should we, whose social and political conditions and moral training is so different, adopt those things which are realities in French and Russia, but unrealities in England and America. Let us rather turn for our models in spiritual content to Goethe, Shakespeare, Eliot, Meredith, Hardy, Hawthorne, Emerson Ibsen, Wharton, Glasgow and to the well beloved Conrad.

CUMMINGS IN ARCHER CITY

Says There Are 20 Women In County Who Would Be Good Governors

Special to the Record News.

ARCHER CITY, Texas, Aug. 16.—"There are twenty women in Archer City who would make just as good governors as Mrs. Ferguson. There isn't any woman in Archer City who wouldn't make a better governor than Felix Robertson," said Judge B. Y. Cummings of Wichita Falls, who spoke at the court house in behalf of Mrs. Ferguson's candidacy. Judge Cummings was heard by a large crowd. He said in part:

David and Goliath.

"When I was a boy, I used to read about David and Goliath, and I was never able to understand why it was, that when this great giant was plaguing the people of his day and generation, God did not find some great chieftain to rid the people of this menace. But He did not do so, He went out into the hills and selected a shepherd boy, a mere youth, and armed him with a puny sling shot and a pebble.

"And so today, I cannot understand why, out of the great array of good men who were in the race for governor of Texas, some strong man was not selected to lead the democracy of Texas to victory; but it was not done, and the people of Texas placed in the hands of this frail woman the flaming torch of Liberty, not the fiery cross of the ku klux klan, but the flaming cross of liberty, and I tell you that she will carry that torch to a glorious victory.

"They try to tell you that prohibition is the issue in this campaign. They might as well try to pull the wool over the eyes of the women of Texas by telling them that slavery was the issue, for both of these questions have been settled by constitutional amendments, national and state. The absurdity of their position is best illustrated by their own assertions; they tell you one minute that Mrs. Ferguson is too weak to be governor of Texas, and the next minute they are telling you she is going to abolish the prohibition laws. Do you know how strong she would have to be, to do that, to get congress, and three-fourths of the states, and the legislature of Texas and a majority of the voters of Texas, to unite in repealing prohibition legislation.

Always a Prohibitionist.

"But it is undisputed that Mrs. Ferguson has always been a prohibitionist. She will not only see to it that the dry laws stay on the statute books—but that they are enforced.

"I have been asked many times what manner of woman Mrs. Ferguson is. I will tell you—she is one of the greatest women in the world. Now I don't mean by that, that she is an exceptional woman, if she were I would not be so enthusiastic for her. She is just the average woman, just the average wife and mother, and to my mind that is the greatest woman in the world.

"Why, there are 20 women in Archer City, wives and mothers, that would make just as good governors as Mrs. Ferguson. There isn't a woman in Archer City that wouldn't make a better governor than Felix Robertson would make.

"I am serious when I make that statement. Do you know what he said at Wichita Falls, that to my mind is the most convincing proof of his ignorance, he said, in telling how economical he was going to be that he wouldn't ever sign an appropriation bill unless the money was already in the treasury. He hasn't sense enough to know that an appropriation bill is always passed at least six months before any money is collected from the taxpayers.

Afraid of Her Strength.

"They talk to you about Mrs. Ferguson being too weak to be governor. I tell you, it is not her weakness that they are afraid of, it is her strength. She will be strong enough to keep the hooded floggers in the penitentiary for the two years that she will serve us. And there won't be any more floggings in Texas, and I'll tell you why, there is too darned much Dan Moody in Texas for any of that bunch to ever whip another Texas citizen."

AUTO RACES TO FEATURE FAIR

Noted Drivers Coming Here for Competition For Big Prizes

Daredevils of the automobile racing world will be seen in the automobile races at the coming Texas-Oklahoma fair, September 29-October 5. The drivers will have their own specially designed speed wagons and will arrive the week before the opening of the exposition, according to R. E. Shepherd, fair secretary.

Noted Drivers Coming.

The biggest field of racing stars which has ever appeared in this section is expected to compete. Several of the nation's most popular drivers have signified their intention of coming to the Texas-Oklahoma fair, W. F. Weeks, director of speed, said.

No event on the fair entertainment program will produce more thrills—and maybe spills—than the auto racing. The thunderous roar of the motor, the exhaust spitting fire, with the racing demons speeding down the course, disappearing in a cloud of dust on the turn, only to emerge again on the back stretch, is a sight that will hold the crowd spellbound.

Danger Gives Thrills.

Added to this will be the constant danger of an accident for which the crowd is ever on the lookout.

Work of preparing the track for the speed kings will start this week, says Weeks. All of the rough places on the course will be ironed out, and it will be made as smooth as a paved highway. The track will be given the special treatments of "soaked down" several times before the opening day of the exposition.

Million Acres In North Texas Ranch Land to Be Opened Along Denver

OLD ESTATES BEING DIVIDED

Effort Being Made To Colonize Present Uninhabited Land

Approximately one million acres of land along the Fort Worth and Denver railroad will be put on sale in the near future, according to M. B. Oates, agricultural agent of the Fort Worth and Denver. The majority of the land is at present located in large tracts of ranch land but is adapted to cultivation and in the future will prove to be some of the best crop producing land in the state. The large ranches in the west are gradually being subdivided and with the announcement of several large ranch owners that they intend to sell their land in small tracts one can soon see the absolute disappearance of the historic ranches in west Texas.

Open School Lands.

On September 2 exactly 68,570 acres of school land will be sold. Sealed bids will be received on this land and all bids must be in not later than the mentioned date. Not more than eight sections will be sold to one individual. The purpose of this plant is to settle up the country. Anyone sending in a bid must also remit one-fortieth of money that he bids on the land. If the bid is accepted the balance will be paid in yearly payments during to next 40 years with an interest rate of 5 per cent. Fifty-seven thousand acres of this land is located in Dallam and Hartley counties while the remaining 11,5710 acres are scattered in different counties along the Fort Worth and Denver railroad.

Quanah Ranches Cut Up.

Many more large tracts are being subdivided and are being sold in the open market by the land owners. A. Norton of Quanah has offered 6,000 acres of land in small tracts to be sold; 1,500 acres of the Good ranch near Quanah will also be sold; the Mill Iron ranch near Estelline with an acreage of 180,000 acres is being divided and sold in smaller tracts; the Round Timbers ranch near Vernon is being subdivided and 6,500 acres will be put on the market; the James ranch near Dalhart with 80,000 acres will also be sold to the public; the Bush lands near Amarillo with an acreage of 100,000 acres are being sold; and the Capital Land Syndicate company is offering 100,000 acres of land near Dalhart.

Many more large tracts will be put on the market in the near future. Already owners controlling 542,570 acres have signified their intention of selling their land in small tracts and it is thought that owners controlling more than a half million more acres of land will put their land on the market.

BRANDS MILLER PARTY BOLTER

Judge Speer Tells Crowd Edwards Will Bow To No Clique

Special to The Record News.

DENTON, Texas, Aug. 16.—Branding Barry Miller as a party bolter and for many years a shireling of the whiskey interests in Texas, Judge John Speer, president of the Edwards-for-Lieutenant Governor club, spoke at the American legion picnic here today in behalf of the candidacy of Will C. Edwards of Denton for lieutenant governor.

Not a Factionalist.

"This man whom we present to the people of Texas is not a factionalist; he is not an extremist; he is not embittered nor soured because of the grouches and old-time grievances; but comes with a burning desire to be of real service to the state and it's citizenship, whom he loves," Judge Speer said.

"Edwards is not now and has never been a member of the ku klux klan, nor of the Farm Labor union, nor of the Knights of Columbus, nor of any political organization than the democratic party; to his party he has always been loyal, even though the candidate of his choice should not be nominated," Judge Speer continued. "But it is a matter of public information that his opponent, Barry Miller, bolted the ticket two years ago and not only refused to support the nominees but took the stump and gave his support to the opposition.

Runs Own Campaign.

"We know that Mr. Edwards has been importuned from many sources since the campaign began to modify his position on certain matters and to put on the soft pedal here and be more drastic there but he declined to take dictation from any one who differed with his views, for the purpose of getting votes, thus demonstrating the fact that should he be elected he will be his own man under no boligations to follow another's and not his own ideas. His opponent is the nominee of a small bunch of the political leaders of the Farm-Labor block and to procure this endorsement he had to abandon his own choice of the candidates for governor, and whose club he had joined and pledged his support, and lend his aid through the campaign before the first primary to another who, like himself, had been chosen as the anointed of that political organization. Mr. Miller had a right to change his support from one of these candidates to the other but no reason was ever assigned by him, and it must follow that it was prompted by a desire for the endorsement of that body. Edwards is not that kind of a man and when he is your lieutenant governor you need not expect him to thus turn political summersaluts to court popularity with any faction."

"Edwards believes in the enforcement of all laws as they appear upon the statute books, and that every man should have a fair trial in the court house before a jury of his peers." the speaker continued.

Boosting No One For Governor.

"Mr. Edwards is not taking sides in the governor's race in Texas, as a great many of his friends and supporters differ with him in that respect and out of deference to their views he has not sought to embarras his friends nor has he tried to procure a vote because of his own preferences in that race," Judge Speer said, adding that, "it is sufficient for him to say that regardless of his own preferences in the past he has finally cast his ballot for the nominee of the party, and thus kept his solemn pledge, and will do so again in the general election this year."

"Mr. Miller, his opponent, can not and will not dare say the same," Judge Speer continued. "In so far as Mr. Miller's campaign speeches have been reported in the daily Press we have never heard of his having said he would not do this year as he did two years ago—bolt and fight the nominees of his party."

Edwards For Prohibition.

"After a long fight to procure prohibition we now have it in the best form we ever had, not entirely satisfactory but in the first state which will lead to perfection if we keep up the fight. One way to improve this law and make it effective is to put men in office who believe in it, and not one who treats it with contempt. Edwards is a prohibitionist and believes in it and practices it."

"Those who believe in good government and clean living," the speaker said in conclusion, "are not ready to surrender while upon the threshold of the goal of their life's ambition. We do not believe the hosts of men and women in Texas whose earliest recollections of Barry Miller was when he was the hirelings of the breweries of Texas and drew a regular salary from those institutions which have since been outlawed as a menace to society will soon recant their efforts and apologize to the liquor interests by putting him in office."

Arrangements for Annual Foard County Fair Are Announced

NOTED RODEO TO BE FEATURE

Historical Pageant Of Foard County Also Big Event

Special to the Record News.

CROWELL, Texas, Aug. 16.—Official announcement has been made that the annual Foard county fair will be held here September 9, 10 and 11. Official preparations were launched here yesterday when the executive committee of the fair association met at the court house to discuss plans and ways and means and fill vacancies on the committee.

Exhibit Day First

The first day of the fair will be given over entirely to exhibits and stunt day. A number of community exhibits are expected and attractive prizes offered to the communities who have the best exhibits. Special attention will also be given to the club boys and girls, and speical facilities as to exhibit space and soon will be provided for the agricultural clubs over the county. Among the prizes offered in this department are trips for five prize winners to the Dallas fair.

Another special feature of exhibit day will be the canned goods and needlework booths. In former fairs, very little space has been accorded to the products of the home, but according to R. L. Kincaid, who will have charge of this feature, every care will be taken to give the women their full share of the fair this year.

Foard County Pageant.

In the afternoon of the first day there will be staged for the spectators an historical pageant of Foard county. The pageant will be under the direction and management of Mrs. R. L. Kincaid.

Rodeo Big Feature.

The second and third days will be given over to a rodeo of the famous Foard county quality, under the general supervision of J. B. Easley. Owing to the fact that the annual rodeo, scheduled for July 4 and 5 was rained out, it is planned to make the rodeo a trifle more interesting and spectacular than usual, if possible. Mr. Easley has had charge of the Foard county annual rodeo for several years.

Leo Spencer is general manager of the fair for the ensuing year, and his staff consists of the following: Mrs. R. L. Kincaid, general superintendent of the women's division; Miss Mae Andrews, superintendent of textile division; County Agent F. L. Rennels, superintendent of community and farm exhibits; G. D. Self, superintendent of advertising; J. B. Easley, superintendent of rodeo; and Judge Jesse Owens, superintendent of grounds and arrangements.

New Method Removes Wrinkles in 15 Minutes

A veritable wonder-worker for wrinkles and flabby faces is a simple, harmless application made by mixing a spoonful of powdered tarkroot with a spoonful of lemon juice. Not only does it quickly smooth out the wrinkles and age lines—before one's very eyes—but it has a stimulating influence upon the weakened and relaxed underlying tissues. The mixture is spread over the face with the fingertips, and in less than fifteen minutes the mirror shows that a most marvelous transformation has taken place. When the substance is washed off the average face actually looks ten or fifteen years younger.

The results are far better than those obtainable from the most expert massaging—and the cost is less than three cents a treatment. Powdered tarkroot can be obtained from any druggist.

Where Size Brings Better Service

One of the developments of the natural gas business brought about by necessity is the creation of large producing companies, like the Lone Star Gas Company. In the earlier days of the industry many local companies were formed and undertook to produce and distribute gas.

This worked very well until the field owned or leased by the local company began to show signs of depletion. Then it became necessary to obtain more gas, and this could not always be had nearby. As a result, the costs of production went up so the companies had to discontinue business or confine their efforts to distribution, buying the gas.

Before long that resulted in the organization of a large producing company that had available a number of sources from which a supply could be obtained at all times. This company, too, because of the magnitude of its operations and because it was sure of a market, could and did acquire fields in advance of the needs, and thus usually had a reasonable supply on hand.

Such organization relieved the distributors of the cost of hunting gas, procured a supply, and economized greatly on the cost of production, thus enabling the sale of gas at the present low prices and maintaining a high quality of service.

Ferguson rally at Wichita Falls 8 p. m., Friday, on Moore & Richolt lot. Speakers to be announced later.

You are urged to attend these meetings.

Who Is For Mrs. Ferguson Throughout Texas?

Here are a few of the many prominent Texans, men and women, who are supporting Mrs. Ferguson; many of them are actively campaigning in her behalf:

M. M. Crane of Dallas; life-long prohibitionist; prosecuted the Ferguson impechment proceedings.

Jed Adams of Dallas; life-long prohibitionist.

T. N. Jones of Tyler; life-long prohibitionist.

C. A. Leddy, former assistant attorney-general and active prohibition worker.

Mrs. Hortense Ward of Houston, well known worker for women's rights.

Tom S. Henderson of Tyler, for years chairman of the University of Texas board of regents, and a life-long prohibitionist.

Mrs. W. C. Martin of Dallas, prominent club woman.

On the other side, whom do we find? Cyclone Davis and Atticus Webb. They had Tom Bell, whom Ferguson defeated for governor in 1914, with 'em for a while, but when they called on him to speak he had so much to say against the klan he almost forgot to talk against Ferguson, and did entirely forget to say anything good about Robertson.

Klandidate Felix has quit talking about the whiskey ring. He soon saw that wouldn't do, with such an array as that listed above, against him. So he's been trying to blame Mrs. Ferguson for everything that her husband was impeached for, when governor. He's changed his tune. By next Friday he'll be trying to make an issue of the League of Nations. And Felix has been so busy he hasn't had time to make that affidavit that Jim Ferguson dared him to make.

Klandidate Felix thought the friends of the University of Texas would rally to him. But the ex-students are saying that they would rather see the University under Ferguson's control than under that of the klan.

The Klan's only hope for victory next Saturday is in the possibility that voters who are opposed to it, to its methods, to its candidates, will stay away from the polls.

Not to vote is to give half a vote to the klan.

Put yourself on record against klan domination by voting for Miriam Ferguson for governor.

Don't doubt that the klan will have its full vote out. It is organized, equipped, financed, trained.

A Wichita county klan leader offered a candidate 6,000 votes, not long ago, "to do the right thing." He knew the class of votes he was offering; he knew that they would do his bidding, like so many sheep corralled in a loading-pen.

There is only one way to fight that kind of politics—and that is to vote for Open Government.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 17, 1924.

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS, SUNDAY, AUGUST 17, 1924.

Once THE NUT was a BRILLIANT LAWYER OF NEW YORK. Today he is a TRAMP ON THE SUNNY HILLSIDES up around Croton-on-Hudson.

After a sensational arrival at fame and wealth, he gave away his fortune, called himself Harold Sharpe, and wrote second-class poetry for second-rate magazines.

He lives in a floppy old house in a neglected half acre. But his garden flames with flowers, and years when he doesn't forget to spray for worms he has his own vegetables.

"Poor chap—nice fellow," they think as, TIRED, GRIMY, SWEATY, with RED LINES OF COMBAT IN THEIR EYES, these capitalists with headaches come home from doing the work of the world.

"THE NUT" sits on a tilted box, a half smile on his faunal face, SUN DRENCHED, watching these so-called WISE MEN from WALL STREET.

"THE NUT" lives in a narrow frame house with floppy looking walls, on a hillside just beyond the village of Croton.

Croton-on-Hudson is one of those townships within Big-Bertha-shot of New York City, that seems to have dozed as pleasantly as Rip Van Winkle through the violent stages of progress all about it, and to have awakened hoary of beard, but content to remain there, in the midst of violent progress, placid, undisturbed and full of the peace of its yesterdays.

CAPITALISTS WITH HEADACHES have found it out, though, and built handsome homes along its SEDATIVE HILLSIDES. Art colonies have snuggled up against its lovely flank and the morning trains out of Croton carry their goodly share of commuters to the city. But somehow the village itself slumbers on.

Children still play marbles in its main street and the old inn where George Washington used to put up is still the old inn.

Ten years ago Harold Bringhurst was one of the brilliant and conclusively arrived lawyers in New York City. He was graduated with first honors from his University, was an outstanding member of the Bar almost from the first and after twelve years of practice, represented some of the most important corporation interests in the world.

On the side, Bringhurst WROTE POETRY which appeared more or less sporadically in some of the second-rate magazines under the pseudonym Harold Sharpe. But the second-rate poet soon succumbed to the first-rate lawyer and at thirty-four Bringhurst found himself the attorney for the defense in the famous American Rubber bribery case which he won brilliantly through sheer magniloquence and oratory, CLEVERNESS AND CUNNING.

Immediately after, there was some talk of a Bringhurst-for-governor boom.

But one year later, newspaper headlines announced with further sensation that Harold Bringhurst had given away his entire fortune of almost a million, in the form of an endowment to three non-sectarian hospitals and was retiring completely from public life.

That is the LAST OF HAROLD BRINGHURST so far as the spectacular streak he had cut in New York is concerned.

Sharpe bought the floppy old house on its half-acre of ground from an Italian day gardener, for the cash sum of seven-hundred-and-fifty dollars. There were three rooms. A front room which he converted into a study with book shelves to the ceiling and a fireplace made out of boulders which he himself collected from the hills. The bedroom was scarcely more than a built-on shed, so that one virtually slept out of doors under the stars, because half of the roof rolled back. Another of Sharpe's handmade devices. The garden is a pretty, irregular affair, but FLAMES WITH COLOR most of the year from one seasonal flower or another, and there is a truck-garden which Sharpe tends indifferently, but with sufficient regularity to enable him to go out and eat a sun-drenched tomato off his own vines or to gather string-beans those years that he does not forget to spray for worms.

But the village is close enough by to fill in any deflections of Sharpe's imperfect gardening tactics. He and his two airedale terriers are pretty free to roam the Westchester hills three seasons of the year at least; and in winter Sharpe does most of his writing. Still the second-rate verses for the second-rate magazines.

The children know him as "the Nut" because, after all, it IS a curious sight to see him, day after day, roaming the country side, tattered, bareheaded and with invariably some blooming flower stuck at a rakish angle behind his left ear.

Sharpe ISN'T TALKATIVE. He whistles most of the time, even when he is whittling branches for a group of waiting children, or binding up one of his dog's bruised paws, or just lying stretched on some sun-soaked hill-side in a bath of long green grasses.

He is full of bird-lore and plant-lore and weather-lore on those rare occasions when he holds conversation with the villagers or the art colonists or the capitalists. But those occasions are indeed rare and when he does talk, he PREFERS THE CHILDREN when he encounters them out hunting for wild strawberries, or plunging with their short, little legs through tall grasses for butterflies.

But all in all, weeks can go by with Sharpe practically silent, except for a line of talk he keeps for his dogs.

"Hey, West-Wind, you! I know where we can see a lark rise off her nest, if we get a good early start tomorrow morning before sunrise. Are you game?"

West-Wind is usually so game that he stands up on hind legs and bays.

And:

"Hey, you, North-Wind. Want to trail to the dam this morning and see the rainbow on the water falls?"

Does North-Wind want to tramp to the dam? Watch Sharpe try him.

"I wish to heavens," says one of the capitalists, driving past the house with the floppy-looking walls on his way to the station to catch the eight-thirty-five, "I wish to heavens somebody would throttle those two fool dogs of the Nut's."

But nobody does. As a matter of fact, the capitalist doesn't mean it. "The Nut" is a nice fellow—poor chap. ERILLIANT CAREER GONE TO SMASH. Bats in his belfry. Darn shame.

Evenings sometimes, after a day over the sun-soaked country-side, or a snug winter afternoon in the book-lined study writing the second-rate verse, "The Nut" strolls down with the two Winds, to watch the five-forty-five come in from the city.

There is an old barrel beside the station where he likes to sit, tilted, and see the men come up the stairs, city stained, dog-tired, and climb into their waiting limousines.

All of them have a greeting for Sharpe, sitting there tilted, with the sprig behind his ear, his two dogs at his feet and always that almost faunal smile on his long, sensitive face.

"Hello, Sharpe—"

"Hi."

There they come, trooping up the steps from the long black snake of panting train just pulling out of the shed beneath. CITY STAINED. CITY STRAINED. GRIM. TIRED. SWEATY. But with red lines in their eye-balls for tomorrow's combat. There they come. The capitalists with headaches—hot and torn and lacerated, out of the shambles of Wall Street—there they come—

And there sits "The Nut" with that half smile on his faunal face. SUN DRENCHED. Full of the LORE OF HIS LONG, MYSTERIOUS DAYS among the hills. There sits "The Nut", watching the so-called wise men pour home from Wall Street.

FANNIE HURST

Duel of the Jungle Giants That Man Ended

'Twas Tiger Versus Crocodile in Primitive Tooth and Claw Combat Until Civilization Spoke with a Deadly Big Game Gun.

IT was night in the Sumatra jungle. Suddenly a crashing sound, like thousands of trees being pulled up by their roots, vibrated through the forest. Then up from the brush shot two hurtling bodies. A tiger and a crocodile, kings of land and water, were battling each other for life.

Somewhere in that darkened thicket they had met—the tiger prowling close upon the heels of an unwary hunter and the crocodile taking an unccustomed vacation from his native estuary—and civil war was on in the jungles.

The first assault had thrown their bodies in relief against the moon. And the hunter, chilled by that awful roar, stood rigid while the combat raged. The hunter was the Rev. Leonard Oechsli, a Methodist missionary. How he happened to be there and what he did are herewith told.

The Two Victims of Missionary Oechsli's Rifle in the Enforced Friendliness of Death After They Had Been Dragged From the Scene of Their Battle Into a Nearby Clearing and the Tiger Had Been Identified As One Who Had Been a Particular Terror to the Natives.

SINGAPORE.

IF Lucifer has fallen to rise no more and all his savage dignity and regal impudence have been reduced to the status of a hearth rug, it's all his own fault. He should have been content to follow the ordinary habits of his kind instead of developing strange and utterly untiger-like traits of character. But Lucifer was temperamental to the point of prankishness. He was downright quixotic. Otherwise he might still be roaming the Sumatran jungles with every reasonable expectation of a long, sanguinary and well-fed existence.

Lucifer—so named because of his prideful appearance and the Satanic reputation he bore among the native Bataks—may be roughly identified as a "man-eating tiger." True, he had never eaten a man in his life and had never been convicted of any such intention. Moreover, in the natural course of events, a tiger does not become a man-eater until he has got so old that he can no longer cope with the ox and the wild buffalo, but must find his prey, instead, among the unprotected children of some native village.

But Lucifer was called a man-slayer by the Bataks because they were satisfied that he was only waiting a favorable opportunity to gobble them all up. Otherwise he wouldn't have made such persistent descents upon the haunts of men.

The first of these sorties—the first, at least, that could be attributed directly to this particular tiger—was made when the natives began to clear off a site in the rattan and banyan jungles near Tandjong Balei for a missionary schoolhouse.

Rev. Leonard Oechsli, the American missionary, who went down into Sumatra twelve years ago and has now developed an extensive network of Methodist mission posts all along the coast, was in general charge of the work. Most of the native workmen had but recently come down from the hills, having been persuaded to take up life in the settlements by reports of profitable employment on the rubber plantations.

These natives knew all about the tiger, man-eating and otherwise, and had reason to fear him. Moreover, they were never able to meet the tiger on anything like equal terms for the reason that the sale or possession of firearms in the island was forbidden by the Dutch Government.

So that when their work on the Tandjong Balei school was suddenly interrupted by what to their terrified eyes seemed a whole drove of tigers, they were ready to quit. Most of them wanted to go back to the hills and the others refused for days to leave the native compound at Tandjong Balei.

Investigations by the missionaries, none of whom had been present when the raid of the tigers was staged, indicated that there had probably been not more than three tigers present at the little surprise party. They also learned that the tigers, strangely enough, had apparently made no effort to kill any of the workmen, but had contented themselves with chasing them away from their work.

One of these natives, a highly intelligent half-caste youth with a Chinese father and a Batak mother, had actually been knocked down by one of the beasts, but was otherwise unhurt. But as he lay there on the ground thinking that his days were over his senses were still clear enough to note that this particular tiger seemed to be the biggest that had ever lived or been imagined. This fact he duly reported to the white men and added by way of further identification that the stripings of this tiger were unusually broad and that his tail was almost solid black.

The white men were disposed to give but little credence to such a minute description, as they naturally concluded that the youth's mental state was hardly conducive to the registration of accurate impressions. But when the tiger Lucifer was finally laid low it was found that he measured thirteen feet from tip to tip—about three feet more than the average—and that the circles on his tail were indeed so very large that one might easily get the impression that the whole surface was black.

After about three weeks the missionaries persuaded the natives to start work again on the school. Meanwhile the Rev. Mr. Oechsli, convinced that prankish tigers might easily become a genuine menace to the spread of his work, had cabled to the United States for a high-powered sporting rifle.

But before the rifle arrived the natives got another scare. A worker who had gone into the jungle by himself for a moment suddenly came racing back with popping eyes. He had seen that "Devil Tiger" lurking in the underbrush. Once more panic took hold of them and they threw down their bolos and fled.

When the rifle finally arrived from the States the Rev. Mr. Oechsli brought all of his charges together and showed it to them. They had all seen these long sticks with the fire devils hidden in them before, and this one, Mr. Oechsli explained, could make twice as much noise and do twice as much damage as any other one in existence. Thus assured, the natives were led back to the schoolhouse, and after the first day's work Mr. Oechsli decided that, for the sake of establishing a proper morale, he would sleep on the now completed floor of the building.

The next morning he was awakened by excited yelps from one Ephraim Sihombing, his Batak servant. The native was crouching underneath the house and pointing to unmistakable and freshly made tiger tracks that measured a good six inches. Lucifer—for everyone was sure it was he—had simply come in and taken a lordly survey of the situation without even disturbing the sleepers.

The Rev. Mr. Oeschli immediately took the trail. After beating through the jungle most of the day and finally losing the tiger's tracks in an impenetrable thicket of bamboo, rattan and fibrous banyan growths he started back toward the clearing. But while skirting a swampy stretch that led into a small, sluggish river he again came upon a track—and this time it was so fresh that the water in it was still oozing up from the ground.

Darkness was now falling with tropical suddenness. Mr. Oechsli handed his flashlight to one of the two Bataks with him and started forward slowly, following the plainly visible trail. At the end of fifteen minutes he was back where he started. He had made a complete circuit and the tracks were still visible and still fresh. But now there was a double row of them.

Signs of panic appeared in the faces of the two natives. The significance of the situation was not lost on them, much less on Mr. Oechsli. A moment before he thought they were stalking the tiger; now the tiger seemed to be stalking them.

He hesitated for a moment. Then, making a motion to the natives, he started to beat back in a reverse circle. He had gone ten or fifteen yards when they were startled by a ripping sound, a savage, snarling crescendo and a threshing noise as of heavy bodies floundering about in the underbrush. In another moment the flood of light from the moon that had now arisen revealed a long, scaly reptilian torso about twenty-five yards away. It was a crocodile. But his head was obscured by what the hunting party was not long in seeing was the body of a tiger.

The whole length of the crocodile was lashing up and down in a convulsion of whip-like motions, while the tiger roared in pain or anger or perhaps both. For at first it looked as if those ugly jaws must have caught the shoulder or perhaps the neck of the tiger.

But even as the missionary and his followers paused in amazement the tiger flung himself loose, shook his head, took one look behind him in the manner of all feral beasts, and made a spring. The impact seemed to shoot the crocodile up into the air. The tiger dug his head into the armored dermal covering of the reptile and searched for a purchase with his teeth.

At this moment the missionary took aim and fired. The tiger gave off a grunt—a grunt of surprise, no doubt. A shiver ran through his body and he dropped like a log. One bullet had finished him. Another finished the crocodile.

That night there was great rejoicing and also a fierce babbling among the natives as they sat around the white man's candle and talked of other battles between beasts they had seen or heard of. Sihombing had witnessed—so he said—a death combat between two snakes that ended with both being squeezed to death. Another Batak swore that he had once seen a foolhardy tapir attack a rhinoceros.

But all agreed that no fiercer animal had ever lived on land or sea than Lucifer, now safely skinned—thanks to the white man—and out of the way of doing evil.

Romance of the "Little Red Devil" and the Roving Lord

Parents Snubbed Him, Police Arrested Him, His Captain Jailed Him, His Own Consul Called Him Bogus---and Still She Loved Him Madly.

Felice Lewin, the San Francisco Society Lass Who Loved a Sailor and Swore She'd Wed Him Whether He Was Lord or Deck Scrubber.

"Jack" Farrow, the "Roving Lord," in His Seagoing Clothes.

By WINIFRED VAN DUZER.

THIS is the story of the "Little Red Devil," the most courted girl in San Francisco society, who couldn't find a sweetheart to suit her until a mysterious, monocled youth came out of nowhere and claimed to be the heir to the imposing earldom of Westmorland.

Of course the youth may prove to be what he says. And again he may turn out to be only the deck scrubber on the revenue cutter Shawnee lying off shore, with no more title than that of second class quartermaster.

At any rate he has won the heart of the "Little Red Devil," thereby pulling down upon the city's blue bloods what usually falls when beautiful young heiresses fall in love with unidentified gentlemen.

And now Miss Felice Lewin declares that she will marry the young man who calls himself the Honorable John Neville Burg-Apton Villiers Farrow whether her friends and family or the whole English peerage like it or not.

"And she probably will," everybody says, "since she usually does as she likes!"

Miss Lewin is a fairly perfect example of the celebrated society flapper. Slenderly athletic, with chestnut hair trimmed to a boyish bob and level gray eyes looking straight into your own, she might have posed for almost any of the hundred and one portraits of sweatered young women behind steering wheels or tennis racquets on society pages.

Because of her vivacious charm, startling originality and artistic achievements, the daughter of Arthur Lewin, millionaire mining magnate, has been the petted darling of San Francisco exclusives—and the despair of her parents and friends!

For despite the dozens of eligible young men who have paid her court she has turned a cold shoulder on Cupid. One after another she has nipped all hopes and gone her venturesome way undisturbed by marriage plans.

Perhaps Felice grew restless between Daddy Lewin's continual urge toward matrimony and her own determination to have nothing to do with it. For suddenly she surprised everybody by opening a studio on Russian Hill and coming out as a member of the crowd that lives in this Western Greenwich Village. Even here she quickly rose to leadership, since she painted rather well, danced a little, wrote verse occasionally and performed the other gestures that artistic souls recognize.

Miss Lewin and the Young Man Who Calls Himself the "Honorable John Neville Burg-Apton Villiers Farrow" Photographed Aboard the Shawnee.

When this Bohemian set held its "Western Arts Ball" at the Palace Hotel, the feature of the evening was the "Little Red Devil" dance staged by Miss Lewin and three other girls from the colony.

The number was a miscellany of eccentric steps and figures that astonished the spectators. But what made everybody gasp were the costumes worn by the dancers; flame-colored silk tights from top to toe, with little red horns fastened upon either side of the head-piece!

The story of this dance went beyond the purlieus of Russian Hill and was the beginning of fame for Miss Lewin, who designed and led the number. She was described variously as a "Dangerous Sprite," a "Bohemian Vestal" and "The Little Red Devil."

It was this last sobriquet which clung when her portraits in the costume were being printed everywhere.

According to the story lately told by the dashing youth of the monocle, it was when one of these fell into his hands and he gazed long into the laughing pictured eyes of the San Francisco heiress that he felt his heart, long unwooed by women's wiles, breaking like thin ice.

He happened to be traveling the South Seas at the moment, expecting, he said, to return to England and Oxford. But when he saw that printed likeness—so he said—he wrote home that everything was off and rushed away to San Francisco to search for the lovely lady.

When next the "young and artistic English nobleman," as Russian Hill soon learned to call him, came to public view, he was being feted at teas, dances and studio parties by the Bohemians as the squire of Miss Lewin.

Then they remembered the American adventures of the present Lord Westmorland when, as Vere Anthony Francis St. Claire Lord Burghersh, son of the old Earl and buddy of the Prince of Wales, he was brought to Washington by Admiral Beatty as his aide during the international disarmament conference.

Instead of confining himself to activities in the Capitol the young Lord spent much of his time on the Congressional Limited commuting between the British Embassy and Broadway, where Leonora Hughes was dancing.

Leonora taught him the toddle, together with many other things that young Englishmen may learn from Yankee cuties. And just when everybody was watching the mails for wedding announcements, Burghersh was thrown into the Earldom by the death of his elderly relative, whereupon he promptly married the beautiful Mrs. Arthur Capel, daughter of Lord Ribbesdale, known as the "richest widow in England."

"But Felice has plenty of money—so Johnny needn't worry," their friends went on.

"We probably won't have to wait long now. Have you read the poem he wrote her?"

I am old
Very old.
With much knowledge
Yet
In her
Seductive presence
I am young,
Too young,
. . . . . Soft clay
In pale, Buddhistic hands.

It was about this time that the tale of Felice's romance got to Daddy Lewin and made him very angry indeed. San Francisco, it seems, is filled with unpractical, penniless and romantic English boys both of good, and not so good, families who invade the Far West, relying on Providence or somebody to do right by them. California girls admire them while California parents fear them.

So it was little wonder that Daddy Lewin stamped and stormed and declared that there'd be no wedding.

Felice, however, sent word back that there'd be a gorgeous wedding just before she sailed for England.

"England!" sniffed Mr. Lewin. "We'll see about that!"

Someone was dispatched to interview the monocled and white-spatted youth, together with the British Consul-General and anyone else who might know young "Johnny."

The British Consul plunged into a fever of search through various directories of nobility. Afterward he stated with diplomatic care:

"The gentleman's connection may be legitimate but I fail to find the name 'Farrow' in the Westmorland line. The family name is Fane."

And all the young man would say was that he actually was a Westmorland, three times removed.

Then while Felice and her daddy stormed at each other, Farrow appeared one day as best man at the wedding of his friend, Captain Donell-Syker at fashionable Grace Cathedral. Immediately afterward he was arrested and charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Although her family and friends denied all responsibility for the arrest, and although the case was dismissed as soon as it reached court, Felice was furious.

She was so upset that she hurried to send out invitations to a big tea at the fashionable St. Francis Hotel. There, over the orange pekoe she formally announced her engagement to the Honorable John Neville Burg-Apton Villiers Farrow.

Meantime certain things had been happening on the Shawnee. The vessel that chases rum runners and rescues ships in distress was short one second class quartermaster. Captain C. F. Howell instigated a short hunt. A person who flourished a monocle and wore white spats was brought aboard.

"It's him," said the Captain. "Chuck him into the brig for breach of discipline!"

And when Felice's friends came round to tell the Captain that he was holding in durance vile a member of the English peerage he stated that, noble or not, the man obeyed the clarion voice of the boatswain piping "All hands to scrubbing the decks!"

Up on Russian Hill, however, the girl who had refused half the young men in San Francisco's gilded set clung fiercely to the deck-scrubber—or possibly the Earl, as the future may prove.

"I'm going to marry him!" was her final word. "I'll marry him in spite of my family and Uncle Sam and everybody! Just wait!"

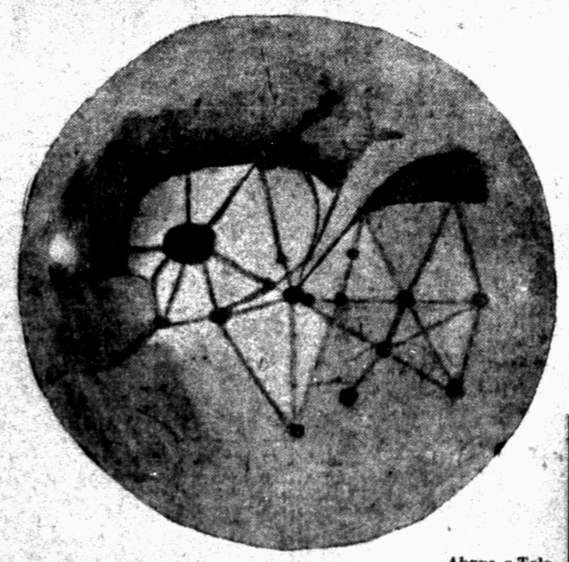
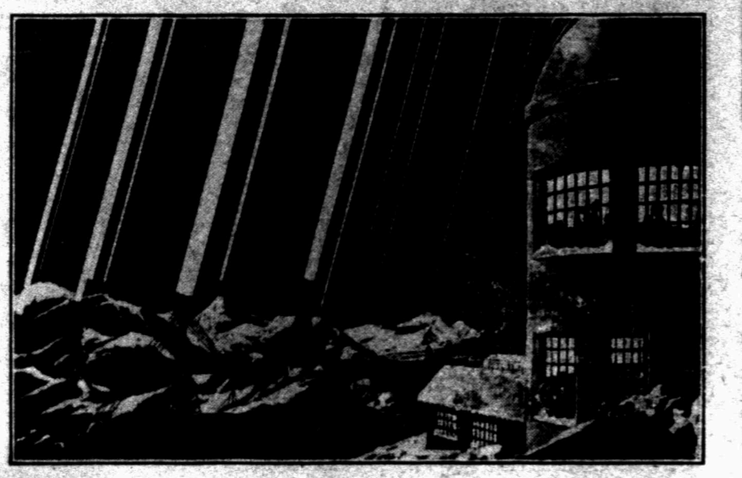
New and Interesting Facts from Science and Life

When Mars Comes to Make a Call on the Earth



Above, a Telescopic Photograph of Mars Made at the Arizonia Observatory by Prof. Lowell, Showing the Red Planet's System of Canals



H. Gernsback, Editor of Science and Invention, Would Signal to Mars by Erecting on a Range of Lofty Mountains 1,000 Powerful Arc Lights, Arranged in 10 Rows of 100 Lamps Each, 500 Feet Apart.

The Diagram Below Shows Orbits of the Earth and of Mars and Their Neighborly Positions on August 21.

NEXT Thursday, August 21, there will take place one of the greatest "social" events that have ever occurred among planets. Mars is growing neighborly and is coming to call on the earth. This event grows out of the fact that within the next four days Mars will be within 35,000,000 miles of the earth, at which time the red planet will be distant a mere three minutes as radio waves and light travel.

The red world will be 20,000,000 miles nearer to the earth than it has been at any time in the past one hundred and twenty years, and an attempt will then be made by scientists to establish communication—to solve once and for all the age-long mystery of whether or not the planet is inhabited.

One of the great dreams of scientists has always been to communicate with other planets. The dream has been reflected in fiction, in such wonderful stories as Jules Verne's "Around the Moon" and Mr. H. G. Wells's "First Men in the Moon."

Jules Verne's hero devised a method of shooting himself and his companions out of a huge cannon, while Mr. Wells's idea was the discovery of a metallic alloy which cut off the power of gravity, and so enabled its discoverer to travel through space.

In 1891 a certain Mme. Guzman left a legacy of 100,000 francs to any one who, within ten years, should discover a means of communicating with any planet.

Few persons outside the realms of science realize what an important experiment this is. For if it succeeds, the civilization of the world may be suddenly pushed forward by thousands of years! In other words, if there is human life on Mars, scientists may find that—as Mars is very much older than the earth—the Martians are far in advance of men in scientific knowledge. Once scientists get into communication with Mars, the inhabitants of that world will be able to impart their learning and discoveries.

This wonderful attempt, which will be conducted from the heights of the Jungfrau, 14,000 feet up in the Alps, will take place next Thursday, when Mars will be some 35,000,000 miles away, which is comparatively near when it is recalled that at times the planet is 250,000,000 miles distant.

The means of communication to be tried will be light signals, which will be sent out by a powerful lens, the snows of the peaks acting as reflectors.

Astronomers will carefully watch through high-powered telescopes to note any signs of activity on Mars as an indication that the signals have been received there. Not once, but many times, will the signals be repeated in the hope of attracting the Martians' attention. Other instruments of a highly scientific nature will be used, and it is possible that among these will be a wireless station capable of sending messages millions of miles into space.

Provided that the instruments employed prove satisfactory, the success of the scheme will depend upon whether or not Mars is inhabited. Many men of note have expressed their belief that there is life on Mars.

Many schemes have been suggested in the past how to establish communication with this planet, according to H. Gernsback, editor of Science and Invention, providing, of course, that it is inhabited by intelligent creatures—of which Mr. Gernsback says that he has always been convinced. The idea of flashing light rays on and off by interrupting the light has always seemed a cumbersome method. There is a much simpler way to establish communication with Mars, the cost of which is not excessive.

In the late 70's, Professor Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, evolved the photophone. This shows the principle of sending articulate speech or music over a beam of light. A light beam having no inertia or weight, it matters not how great the distance is over which such articulate speech or music can be sent. By slightly varying the light beam, it is possible to carry on a one-way conversation. Herr Ruhmer, in Germany, carried on conversation over a light beam for the maximum distance possible on earth—that is, about 100 miles. Longer distances are not possible on earth due to the curvature of the planet, as light rays do not follow this curvature, but shoot out into space.

There are many ways in which the voice can be superimposed on the rays of a searchlight. Probably the best way is to modulate by means of a microphone, the current flowing in the powerful arc light carbons. The voice of music is first stepped up and then impressed upon the arc light. Mr. Gernsback figures that it does not require more than 1,000 of such arc lights to show on Mars, if they are erected on some lofty mountain range. If these arc lights are disposed in rows, ten abreast, in strings of 100, and separated by 500 feet, as shown in the illustration above, this would be sufficient to produce a faint spot of light which could be observed by Martians under favorable conditions.

It would, of course, have to be night on earth for the experiment, while on Mars it should be about one hour or more after nightfall to obtain the best results.

If an observer on Mars would then train his powerful super-telescope toward the earth, he would see on the darkened portion of the earth a very faint spot of light. If he were a good physicist, which no doubt he would be, he would attach a photo-electric or other light-sensitive cell in the focus of the telescope. This, connected to an audion amplifier, would bring in the sounds faithfully and clearly.

"It is possible that even to-day the Martians are using such a system to signal us," Mr. Gernsback declares, "but so far our telescopes have not been developed sufficiently for us to see faint light spots on the darkened portion of Mars. If even one of our astronomers sees them, it would be a good idea to try a photo-electric cell attached to a telescope."

Astronomers say that it is possible that the Martians have been endeavoring to signal to the earth for a long time past, but, finding that their messages or signaling methods could not be understood by less intelligent scientists, gave it up as hopeless.

Perhaps the Martians know more about this earth than men imagine. If it is conceded that the Martians are millions of years ahead of men here, it must also be conceded that their super-telescopes are in such a state of perfection that probably they can observe human beings.

Control Methods of Malaria

IN many sections of the South and Southwest United States malaria prevails to a great extent, in some places standing first on the list of diseases which do the greatest injury to the community. According to the United States Public Health Service, this disease is caused by parasites in the blood of the person suffering from it; the parasites being carried from person to person by mosquitoes. That is, the mosquito receives the infection by feeding on a person whose blood contains the parasites. Then the infected mosquito injects these parasites into the second person. Another mosquito feeds on this person's blood, becomes infected, and injects the parasites into another person, and so on until whole communities are infected. The infection cannot be conveyed in any other way, the health service says. And the only mosquitoes which can convey the disease are the genus Anopheles.

Methods of controlling the trouble as suggested by the National Malaria Committee and the health service are: Get rid of all Anopheles mosquitoes; prevent the access of mosquitoes to persons; free all persons in the community of malaria parasites; and protect people against infection by means of quinine treatment. Quinine is used to free persons of the parasites and to protect them against infection.

The standard quinine treatment, recommended by the National Malaria Committee and approved by the Public Health Service as the most effective and practical method of treating the disease, is as follows: "For the acute attack, 10 grains of quinine sulphate taken through the mouth three times a day for a period of three or four days, followed by 10 grains every night before retiring for eight weeks. In infected persons not having acute attacks, only the eight weeks' treatment is necessary. The proportionate doses for children are: Under 1 year, one-half grain; 1 year, 1 grain; 2 years, 2 grains; 3 and 4 years, 3 grains; 5, 6 and 7 years, 4 grains; 8, 9 and 10 years, 6 grains; 11, 12, 13 and 14 years, 8 grains; 15 years or older, 10 grains. This treatment, however, should be taken only under a doctor's directions, which should be followed exactly."

Some CURIOUS Ways of the SPIDER

DID you ever see a spider dragging around a ball the size of a pea or larger? If so, perhaps you have wondered what it was. If you have studied the very interesting life of the spider of course you know that this is its egg-sac. In this sac are a large number of eggs. When they hatch out the little spiders often get to fighting with one another; the weaker ones get killed and are devoured by their brothers and sisters. This seems cruel, but in this way none but the strongest spiders survive.

After the baby spiders come out of the sac they sometimes climb up on their mother's back and are carried around by her until they get accustomed to the world. Spiders are very fierce creatures for their size. They will fight insects much larger than themselves, and those they can't catch in any other way they entrap by means of their webs, etc. When they bite they inject a kind of poison into the wound which settles their prey.

There are some species of spiders which are so fleet-footed that they do not have to depend on webs to catch their victims; these are very strong and large and resemble tarantulas. It is most interesting to study the way a spinning spider goes about building her web. The gummy fluid which makes the web is secreted by over a thousand microscopic glands, and the gossamer filaments from all these glands are spun together to make a single thread, which is itself so fine as to be almost invisible unless it has dew on it.

The spider after selecting a good location for the web spins an irregular framework from one point of support to another, round the margin. Next she runs a number of threads across, all meeting in the center like the radii of a circle. Then she runs some stay-lines round the web to hold it temporarily together; these threads are not sticky, and they are destroyed after the web is all finished.

For the last operation the spider starts at the center and spins a web in a spiral form round and round the web till she reaches the margin, and as this web is sticky it adheres to the other webs at every joint, thus making a strong job.

The spiders have long had "woman's rights." The females run things and do all the work. The males don't amount to anything and, being smaller than the females and not so strong, they have to look sharp not to be eaten up, for the mother spider likes nothing better than a juicy male spider for dinner.

ELECTRICITY for Diseased TEETH

WHEN a person receives a cut there is always some danger of dirt, germs or other foreign matter getting into the cut, spreading through the blood and thus causing infection. Treatment of infection is simple when the wound is on the surface of the body or when it is accessible for an application of an antiseptic. But suppose that the infected area was underneath the root of a tooth, the root itself being healthy. These infected tissues cannot be reached directly by any means except surgical. But the root, being healthy, was not to be extracted.

The principle on which the electrical treatment is based is that of "electrical ionization and migration of ions," a phase of electrolysis. When a chemical solution is made, as for example dilute sulphuric acid, such as is used in storage batteries, the solution consists in part of positive ions and negative ions, in this case the positive ions being hydrogen and the negative ions the sulphate radical. Now this simply means that the hydrogen ions have a positive charge of electricity, while the sulphate radical ions have a negative charge of electricity. The solution is said to be ionized. The action is called the "migration of ions."

Suppose that instead of hydrogen ions we substitute a metal such as zinc. If we make up a solution of zinc sulphate and apply the direct voltage, the antiseptic zinc ions which are positive will travel to the negative electrode. If they are made to travel through an area of the body which is infected they will act as an antiseptic and will heal the infected area.

Instead of zinc sulphate a solution containing iodine may be used, and the well known disinfecting properties of iodine may be utilized.

The method is described in Practical Electrics. A solution of the antiseptic salt was made and a small piece of absorbent cotton saturated with it. The root of the tooth was drilled through and the absorbent cotton was pushed to the bottom of the root. Now, the body is well known to be a conductor of electricity, and the wet tissues are very good conductors. An electrode having a thin, sharp point is inserted in the root where the disinfecting solution is. Another electrode is applied to the back of the hand or the palm of the hand, and a direct voltage of about thirty to forty volts is applied to the electrodes. A current therefore flows through the body, and this current consists of a flow of iodine and chlorine ions. The iodine ions, which are positive, flow to the negative electrode and thereby pass through the infected tissues around the tooth and exert their healing properties. The current through the tissues gives a very peculiar, tingling sensation. It is increased in rate until appreciable pain is produced, when the current is held fixed at that value.

FOOD and SHELTER from CACTUS

THE pulpy parts of stems and fruits of numerous varieties of the cactus plant are valuable as food for men and animals. The young pads or joints can be cooked and eaten in various ways as a vegetable. The fruits are toothsome and nutritious and may be prepared in a variety of ways. In Mexico, Sicily and elsewhere the natives live almost entirely on fresh cactus fruits when they are in season. They grow them in gardens and often gather them at dawn when they are coolest, although their temperature is always lower than that of the surrounding air. Even the seeds are saved sometimes to be eaten when the fruit itself is gone.

The prickly pears or tunas, sometimes called Indian figs or Barbary figs because of the numerous small seeds in them, are abundant and much used. A cactus tree which grows to a height of 60 feet, with a trunk two and a half feet in diameter, yields particularly delicious fruit. Among the other favored food varieties are small currant-like fruits which are eaten fresh or dried like raisins; the melon cacti; the Mexican "strawberry," so called because of its numerous small seeds, and Tetezo figs, one of the leading articles of diet among the natives of Southern Puebla.

The trunks of certain species of cacti furnish material for the construction of houses, corrals, etc., and they are also used for firewood. Amid the cacti thorns the little cactus wren finds a safe retreat where she can build her nest and rear her young unmolested by hawks. The woody axis of the cactus trunk, after being stripped of the layer of pulp surrounding it, is worked into furniture, canes, veneering, etc. The spines serve as needles, toothpicks and pins. Some are curved so that they can be used as natural, ready-made fish-hooks, while some of the straight ones are used for making barbs. The fruits of one species which resemble huge chestnut burrs have long been used by the Indians as hair brushes.

Travelers need never lack for water where cacti grow. By cutting off the top of a barrel cactus, pounding up the pulp and squeezing it one may obtain water which, though slightly salty and bitter, is clear and palatable. Another way to obtain water is to support a cactus trunk on stones, build a fire at either end and then make a hole in the middle. The action of the heat will cause considerable water to trickle from the hole. The Indians use the juice of a certain species for healing cracks in their feet and for treating internal complaints when on long journeys. The "mescal button" or "peyote" cactus is a strong stimulant, capable of allaying temporarily all hunger, thirst and fatigue. Mexican Indians use this cactus medicinally and religiously as a cure for all bodily ills.

Religious ORIGIN of Modern TOYS

HOW long have children's toys existed? A theory that, at any rate in their specialized and elaborate forms, toys are a modern development, was put forward by Mr. Edward Lovett, a London lecturer.

"There are no records that the children in ancient Greece or Rome ever played with toys," says this authority. "We have figures and drawings of these civilizations which show children playing at competitive games, but that is an entirely different thing."

In the British Museum there are many small articles labeled "possibly toys," but in Mr. Lovett's view, they are not toys at all, but thank-offerings to the gods made in the form of tiny figures of sheep, horses and so on. Mr. Lovett does not think children played with toys to any extent in old England. The oldest English dolls go back only as far as Queen Anne, and there are no records of them at an earlier period.

"You will often see in a miner's cottage a diminutive pick, shovel and hammer suspended over the mantelpiece," Mr. Lovett explains. "People who know nothing of the local ways may think they are toys, but they are not. They are relics of the time when votive offerings to the household gods were hung on the walls of the home. I do not doubt that if such objects were put into the hands of a child he would play with them. In fact, the origin of toys, as we know them, is probably that children got hold of objects intended as votive offerings and diverted them to their own play."

Just Why Editors Use Blue Pencils

AN editor has always required a pencil which, marking manuscripts, will show up above the color of ink or ordinary black lead pencil. Blue is the best color for such a pencil because, more than any other color—including red—it completely hides the words to be deleted.

Thus it follows that blue pencils have always been particularly suitable for editorial work.

There is also another reason why blue pencils are used in editorial offices to-day. Blue is the only color which may be used to mark an illustration without any fear of the marks being reproduced on the subsequent engraving—because blue photographs as white. So an editor may safely use a blue pencil for writing upon the illustration his instructions to the engravers.

Uncle Sam's HOUSE of DARKNESS

FOR the purpose of certain scientific experiments, the Department of Agriculture has built at the Arlington farm, across the Potomac from Washington a windowless house for growing plants.

A greenhouse might be called a house of light, but this curious structure is just the opposite—a house of darkness. It is meant to provide for plants an artificial night.

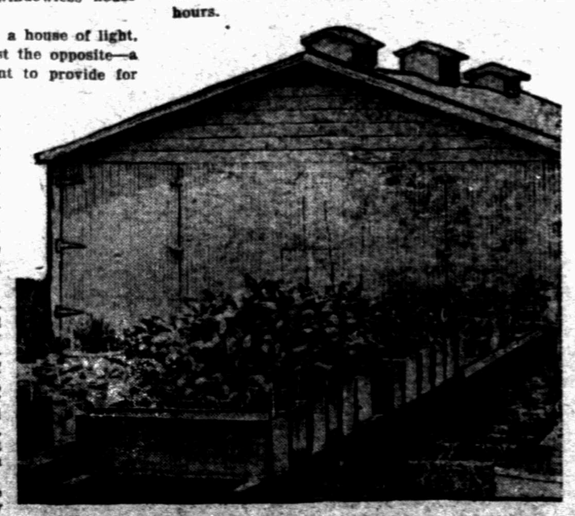
That seems an odd notion, but the object in view is highly practical. The plants, growing in boxes and pots, are run out of the dark house on wheeled trucks into the open and, after being exposed to daylight for a certain number of hours, are run back again, the doors being thereupon closed.

It has recently been discovered that plants of any kind can be made to flower at any desired season by suitably adjusting the number of hours of exposure to daylight. In fact, the flowering season of any vegetable species is determined and regulated by day-length, some plants requiring short days and others long days in order to blossom.

Thus chrysanthemums require short days and that is why they bloom in Autumn. The iris, on the other hand, demands long days, and so will not blossom until early Summer. Crocus, wild violet and other Spring flowers await the lengthening days of late March and April.

But experiments have proved that chrysanthemums can be produced in Spring or early Summer if the days are artificially shortened by keeping the plants in the dark a certain number of hours daily. The cosmos does not bloom in Summer because the days are too long, but by shortening its days it can be made to do so.

Contrariwise, Spring flowers can be produced in Autumn by artificially lengthening their days, growing them under glass and exposing the plants after sundown to brilliant electric light for several hours.



The "House of Darkness" Used by the U. S. Department of Agriculture in Conducting Experiments in Plant Growth.

Blossoming, of course, is merely a preliminary to fruiting. Hence the horticulturist, by the adoption of such means, can produce not only flowers, but also small fruits at any season that is most desirable for his market. He can make his vegetables ripen whenever he chooses.

Temperature has little to do with the flowering and fruiting of plants. It is day-length that determines such matters, and each plant species has in that respect a preference of its own.

Around the World With Togo

LETTERS OF A JAPANESE SCHOOL BOY.

Love-Hunting in the South Sea Islands.

To Editor of Record News, who are married, therefore forbidden to think of thoze coconnut seas where there are so many house-parties & no houses.

Dearest Sir:—

When Hon. S. S. Resolute get her nose poked into the Southern Addition of Pacifick Ocean she commence to behave so cowcattish & flirty that I could at oncely see that we was approuching to those palm-gardens of Nature where authors goes to misbehave and write about it.

One a. m., while we was scooting along a very steam-heated section of the Equattor and the Fat Lady from Atlanta Ga say she were too hot to feel immoral I wilted down to my cabin for slight chin-shave—and what I find there, by golly? Cousin Nogi rubbing his chest with some sort of greece what smell like several Italian weddings.

"You got some tropikal itches, maybe, to be rubbing so plentiful?" I ask to know.

"Not necessilly," he denote. "Togo, where have you put your steamboat skedule that you forget? We are now on way to South Sea Islands which we mention with Broadway eye-wink. Who await me there for scandalous poppoises? I do not know yet, because there are no telefone. Yet perhapsly she will be a Poli-kooli maiden with a heart full of jamaica jinjer. Thus annointment with which I greece my chest are called coconnut butter. I purchase it from ship's barber shop. Price 25c. From its smell it are supposed to attract Malay maidens rapidly."

"Is those Malay maidens remarkabilliously beautiful?" I ask to know.

Togo Becomes Naturalist.

"Observe this foto which I traded with a sailor for a 2nd hand hat," he negotiate while poking forth portrait of a slightly tinged Venus, garnished with native lettuce.

"You should be ashamed!" I holla, tooking off my shirt. "Nogi, please to loaned me some of your coconnut butter."

Mr. Editor, I wish you would tell your printer not to print this part of my letter. There are something about thin hot strip of ocean which would turn Dr. Frank Crane into Mohammed. Pretty soonly we both throw away our Bradecker & commence reading Fred O'Brien.

"When I arrive into So Seas," I communte, "I shall quit my job of being Gen. Housewocker."

"In land there are no houses," dictate Nogi, "such jobs would be useless."

And so onwards. We got so tropikal that we commence to talk like a parrot & behave like a monkey. We think earnestly of those islands where white man have not injured the scenario by putting up a Methodist church, a suspender button factory & a gasoline service station. Nothing but Nature. You cannot umagine what a naturalist I got to be. "By heckery," I nummer in my sleep, "I shall capture 2 doz of those native beauties & sell them to Hon. Flo Ziegfeld."

Thusly you see how this land of bulu trees & bananaas make poets in a hurry.

Where Is She?

Well, Mr. Editor, our first station were Guam. By sight of that starspangly banner, waving longly over water, I observe that Congress have not yet gave that island away to Japan similar to Phillipines. But my mind was waving elsewhere. Me & Nogi put on so much coconnut butter that n. m. that we slip into land very easy.

"I shall have first flirtation," I nudge, "because I smell most tropikal."

Yet what we see there? Enlarged bldg distinctenally labelled U. S. NAVY GASOLINE STATION while 6 engaged airoplanes fly up top & 222 American Marines stood in rows to make us look pidsant. There also were Gov. Sharp in pure white militia uniform, acting very kindhearted because S S Resolute were biggest excursion boat ever arrive to that dock before.

From around every palm & toobab tree approach a Ford ottomobile to took us somewheres & back again free. This were extremely exciting.

"But where are She?" I nummer lowly.

"Where are Her?" si Nogi backwards.

Around corner of Guam Steam Laundry and Dyeing Works we observe several shapes. Perhapsly they was feminine. Some of them were smoking cigars. By closing my eyes and going swiftly, I could umagine that one (1) of them were beautiful, except for smallpox which she had got.

Missionaries No Longer Cheard.

And so onwards. When afternoon p. m. arrive up I did we must go back to bust one about Admiral, who look more sinful than others, snatch me secretively aside & report for happy whisper, "There are one Sight maybe you boys would miss bout to see." His eyes make wink.

"Oh, cagerly!" I pronounce. "What are it?"

"The First Methodist Church," he dictate.

Therefore we escape away from there & in 4 or 7 days we arrive up to Fiji Islands.

Mr. Editor, from your wise dictionary maybe you have heard considerable gossip about Fiji Islands & those cannibals what prefers missionaries to other beef. I go there expecting to enjoy some delight from this. But what I find? Missionaries are no longer elected there. I think I could tell why. Those missionaries what I saw look kind of tenuine & cold orange.

Yet no sooner our ship were in harbor than 30 X-cannibles all dressed in bay and shark-teeths, violets & nail-files in their hair, arrive aboard boat to teach us their national anthem, of title "Oo ua kabi, ah ua kabi." (leave the work to mother). The top of their heads looks like rattoons with the hair on the outside. A lot of that hair are sandpaper blonde—it arrive to that color from rubbing it with chemikal and what kill all kootchi loser residing there. Those Fiji natives are very beautiful, except for their faces and other qualifications.

When this native quire sing song they accompply it will Walter Camp exercises of wrist, thumbs, stomachs & other contortions while chewing American gum. "O ooa kabi pie, coal-scuttle-shell-and" they sing song until my heart jumped over.

"What cannibals mainly voices those gentlemen on front row have got," I exclam to a English speaking Englishman benext to me.

A Jolly Fine King.

"Those are not gentlemen, ignoral American," report Hon. English. "They are ladies from our island."

My heart stepped down & got sour. Pretty soonly an enlarged gentleman with more hair than ever came around. He had a respectable face like a Irish clergyman shovelling coal. He wore a American college cout & a lace petticoat with nothing else except his barefoot.

"Come & meet Sir Howli-Wooli, the last of the Cannible Kings," dictate Hon. English. I button up my shirt so I would not look too appettizing & tender, and with slightly quaker knees I walk ugly.

"Sir Howli-Wooli," commence Hon. English, when I were glad Hon. Cannible King stopped holding my hand, "our yg friend here wish to enquire about the superior flavor of fried Japanese."

I shudder to remember how Hon. Howli look at my delicious wish bone.

"My dear chap," he commence, "you are spoofing me. Of course my grandfather—crusty old boy, Grandfather—took a social bite now and then. But we all have our weaknesses. Do you follow me? Quite so. Mine's cricket. You don't play. How extraordury! Do drop in on the Cricket Club. Jolly little diggings. See you there at tea time. Righto. Well, I must be pressing on."

When we walk on shore we find a enlarged family of Ford awaiting to take us to Cricket Grounds for to behold a Great Spectacular of Native Dancing. And surely it was, Mr. Editor. There we find 2 or 7 thousand native chiefs, all arranged with lilies & human bones in their hair while every vegetable from the jungle were disarranged around their waist. In hands they carry huj war-clubbers with two prongs, one for poking people when they are up & one for stroking them when they are down. That dancing what they gave were more grand and elaborate than they show to Hon. Prince of Wales when he come for last visit; this were quite natural because me & Nogi sat prominently in middle of grand stand.

Beautiful, But for One Eye.

Mr. Editor, could you umagine 333 beetle-colored warriors, standing in regular militia rows, stamping large feet, swinging billy-hawks with drum-major axpressions, running at you with prongs forward, changing mind of suddenly & running backwards with prongs upward, dancing upside with whoops, dancing downside with yell, then still-stopping so sudden it almost jar your spine off. Could you umagine 333 persons doing that simontaneously together without a hitch of suspenders, and no music except a strong man hitting kindling wood on a Standard Oil can? Make yourself some gin this evening, Mr. Editor, and maybe you will see what I saw.

Then some 444 persons hanged with ropes of nevva nevva plant of listerine flowers. By looking at them very thoughtful I learned that they was ladies. Yet I could change my mind. They dance circular and straight while singing with voices:

"Oh my taboo, taboo
Silli-willi A
Silli-willi B,
Silli-willi atta-bubi
I. O. U."

"Observe the 3rd one from the left end," snagger Nogi without lungs, "she would be beautiful except for her last eye."

"Tell me, Mr. Sir," I report to Hon. English benext me, "what are that music they are singing straight at me? Are it a love-song perhapsly?"

"Unfortunately no," dictate Hon English. "Love songs is illegal here because of heated climate. I shall tell what they say:

"The Passengers of the Resolute
Are now in port.
It is a whale of a boat
Like the Waldorf Astoria.
The Passengers give us cigarettes—
They are pretty fair,
But we wouldn't walk a mile for them.
Most of the Passengers are fat;
Two of them look like Mutt and Jeff.
The Resolute has three big smokestacks
Larger than the Imperial Oil Refining Works has got.
This morning our brave chief Oy Oy
Crawled down one of those smokestacks
To see if he could find the Captain.
This afternoon we're going to send a boy around
To look for him.
The Passengers of the Resolute are all rich.
There is an author aboard
Who writes for the movies
And believes everything you tell him."

Walking Away from the Wife.

Last on the program, Mr. Editor, were a Fire Walking Match which give me foot-blisters to think about. Natives of Fiji does this by digging enlarged hole in ground and baking hot rocks for two (2) days in the wood of the guava tree. When this reception committee get ready to commence six (6) selected Fire Walkers step forthly with peered expression peculiar to bravery without any shoes on. Everybody yall. Then O! With quickness peculiar to rabbits crossing the Rubicon those six (6) untamed gentlemen hop-skip straight across 9 yards of fried stones!!!

And what you think then? Hon. Fire Walkers march away happily without Burns on the soul of their feet.

"How they learn to do that?" I ask Hon. English who was there.

"It are very ancient custom," he exchange. "Hon. Chief or Tulu what invented it wish to find some place where his wife would not darst to follow him."

I could unstand that pretty good, for I look around and observe some Fiji wives.

Well, Mr. Editor, our next stop were Pago Pago (pronounced Pango Pango to make it more unnatural). There we find natives wearing American pants which they steal from touerists. Because they are under American flag they are less polite than on other islands. They get acuainted by pinching you on elbow. Then they offer to sell you grandfather's spear for 10$ because mother are dying of lockjaw. When you pay them 15$ so that this sad case will not suffer, they run rapidly up hill to the factory & get another one of grandfather's spears. The simpsul natives of Pago Pago does not know the value of money, therefore they charge 2ce for everything without blushing.

In harbor of Pago Pago they got 2 life-size gas tanks, not so high as Woolworth Bldg., but wider. These decorations cost U. S. Navy dept 1-2 million $ & have been there 2 yrs. with 2 night watchman at 250$ pr month. There are no gas in those tanks because U. S. Govt too poor to pay for such a useless article. Thusly economy pays, even when the price are considerable high.

Tahiti Attactic City.

While steaming 4th from Pago Pago harbor I find Cousin Nogi in condition of weeping.

"Look at beauty of that scenario," he wep, "valleys running over with blooming vegetables amidst mountain jags filled with foliage. We have observed all kinds of Paradise yet never anything so perfectual as that. Boo & hoo!"

"There are sifficient rain here without your crying all over it." O pronounce. "Then why those subs?"

"This are Paradise," he negotiate, "without any Eave. I come of So Seas on a love-hunt. Yet what I find of feminine attentions?"

"There were the boun egged benwhat chassed you to Soat," I narrate.

"Be strengthened, Nogi," I dibitate. "Soonly we shall arrive to Tahiti, famous for French-speaking habits. In such a climate Hon. Walter E. Traprock was made crazy with Tahiti. Be chum, Nogi. In that location you will be loved, I bet my bootware."

Well, Mr. Editor, we arrive up to Papeete, Atlantic City of Tahiti, in the hot sunstroke of Sunday morning. From distance of sea we could observe several pink baboons arranged on pier for our benefat. Upon closely approach we dishovered our mistaken. They was not baboons but ladies in pink Mrs. Hubbard gowns. They were each of them so wide across that I were sure they came in pairs. 6 or 9 more of similar variety come out of French store labelled VINS LIQUERS et CIGARS. Every saloon in that very hot town began waving its sheltering palm when they see us coming. That row of pork double-ladies commence doing same in our Gen. Direction.

Lady Fratho-Bobta.

We attempt to back up the ship, but it were too late. Nextly we knew we stood on achore, surrounded by fatty ladies who look like they escaped from Mr. Barnum in kaliko nightdress.

"Ah, mon petit Japonais," holla one of them Frenchilly, "voulez vous dancer avec moi?"

"Non, non. I don't," snagger Nogi. "Pour l'amour de Machel, mon prune, avez un cour," she gollup. "You know who I are? I are Fratho-Bobta, belle of the Island."

She stand there looking like a church, but not so respectable. Nextly I knew she bragg Nogi between her fingers and commence the Shuku-Shaku or Courtship Dance.

Mr. Editor, have you ever observed 800 lbs of veal cutlets riding in a pink sack on a cheap motorcycle? This describe Miss Bootho-Bobta in emotion, only less so. All her fat seem to come untied from her bones & shake itself up to her knock and back again to where her knees should of been. I never see a lady what could go so many ways at once. Somewheres in midst of this mixture I could see Cousin Nogi holding onto his knock to keep it from falling off when his knockite did. Every muscel of that lady seem to slide with behavour peculiar to elephants skating on butter.

Then of suddenly following happen: She stop.
Nogi drops.
When nextly observed my dearie cousin were splunged into sea & swimming to ship with expression peculiar to gentleman who are willing to meet several sharks.

Hoping you are the same
Yours truly
NASHIMURA TOGO.

Potash & Perlmutter

Discuss The Ad Men's Convention in London
By MONTAGUE GLASS

"I met Charles Lickman in Wasserbuer's this morning, Mawruss," Abe Potash remarked the other day. "He is just back from London, England, where he went as a delegate or something to a big convention of American advertising men, and he says that London, England, is getting to be quite an American convention city along the lines of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, as to soft coal, but more like Hoboken, New Jersey, in the way of hotel accommodations."

"It's too bad they didn't think in time to hold the National Democratic Convention over there in London, England," Morris Perlmutter commented. "Maybe McAdoo and Mr. Smith could have compromised somewheres around the sixtieth ballot and agreed on a candidate who ain't never been connected with Wall Street or the oil business like the Prince of Wales or anyhow one of the two Haigs."

"But joking to one side, Mawruss, these here American conventions held in London, England, is bound to have a big effect in the way of hundred per cent Americanization of English business methods," Abe declared. "Lickman says that right after the close of this here American advertising convention there was to be copbination convention of American and English lawyers, and I bet yer that in less than six months from now, Mawruss, English lawyers would have taken a tip from their American competitors and would be putting in the littest up-to-the minute Chicago murder defence of moral imbecility for all English murderers of good financial standing."

DIVORCE AS AN AMUSEMENT

"And not alone in murders could the English lawyers get some good pointers from American delegates to this here lawyers convention, but the English law business could be stepped up in other ways—particularly as regards divorces. What the English law business has needed for some time is to get into contact through a Bar Association convention with some of them snappy legal go-getters from Nevada, Mawruss," Abe continued. "For many years past, the English lawyers and judges have had the back number idea that unless the details of a divorce case were absolutely unfit to print, Mawruss, the parties should remain married, y understand, but with the Reno idea of clean divorces for mental cruelty and incompability, Mawruss, it wouldn't be long before the English lawyers and judges would benefit from these London conventions of American lawyers and advertising men, and you would see among the announcement ads of the London papers:

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADM& RALTY DIVISION
Cholomondley v Cholomondley
and
5 Other Big Acts &
All seats—twenty five cents
'Bring the Kiddies.'"

"For that matter, Abe, this here American advertising men's convention would also have a stimulating effect on other English businesses which is practically diving on their feet from lack of advertising," Morris said. "Would you believe that I read in a newspaper where only twenty one people have been buried in Westminster Abbey, London, during the past four years, and not a line advertising anywheres to help matters?"

ADVERTISING OXFORD

"Maybe not a line of advertising as yet," Abe corrected, "but the chances is, Mawruss, that after this advertising convention has got in its good work, you would see in all the London papers:

BE BURIED IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY
IT'S DIFFERENT!
THE ABBEY WAY OF BURIAL.
Drop us a post card and archbishop will call.

Furthermore, Mawruss, when you consider what advertising has done for our American colleges and universities, Oxford and Cambridge universities, England, could soon wake up and come across with newspaper and magazine advertising too. In fact, I wouldn't be a bit surprised if right now the London papers is carrying an ad reading:

OXFORD UNIVERSITY
One of England's greatest educational institutions giving superior training for high salaried positions. Exclusive methods develop highest efficiency. Begin any time. Satisfaction guaranteed.

WE PLACE OUR GRADUATES

Phone for cataog Automatic 22856"

For that mater, Abe," Morris observed, "there are a lot of other English concerns which has begun to regard themselves as self-advertising, and has therefore got themselves into ruts where more up-to-date organizations are progressing by reasonable amount of display advertising. For instance, Abe, it wouldn't harm none if there should be a too column spread reading:

Banking that is Human and Helpful
BANK OF ENGLAND
depositor
'Service with Safety'

"At that, Mawruss, I suppose that the American delegates to this here London, England, are picking up a lot of English ideas and bringing them home with them," Abe said, "such as drinking tea in their offices every afternoon at half past four."

Representing the American Bar

"Well, I don't know," Morris remarked. "Not a great many American advertisers ever made big advertising contracts while under the influence of tea, Abe, and if tea-cups were handed around in American advertising agencies at half past four in the afternoon, it's a question to my mind whether they would get filled up with tea exactly. In fact, Abe, this new custom of holding American Conventions in London probably arose from the fact that when American conventions are held in America, the delegates are obliged to drink it in teacups, whereas when the convention is held in England, they could use glasses, schooners, seidels and steins.

"I would even go so far as to say, Abe, that after these here conventions of lawyers and advertising men are both closed, y understand, there would be a whole lot of doubt in the minds of the English delegates as to which convention was attended by the members of the American Bar Association—the lawyers or the advertisers, because a lot of the members of the advertising association, when they chose London for their convention, were much more interested in the American bar than they were in advertising.

"Don't you think that maybe next year the American Advertising Association and them American lawyers might want a change of scene and vintage and hold their convention in France, Mawruss?" Abe asked. "After all, it's just so important that these two important organizations should exchange their ideas with the French as well as the English."

"Perhaps you're right," Morris agreed, "but on the other hand, Abe, in holding these conventions abroad for the purpose of exchanging ideas, y understand, it's just so well that the exchange could be made without the use of an interpreter.

"So that when the Americans' idea is 'Four Martinis and Three Manhattans,' the foreigner to whom it is addressed could right away grasp it," Morris concluded, "and in return, Abe, the American delegates could immediately understand the idea of the foreigner, which would be: 'Seven shillings, gentlemen, Please.'"

Ring and Extra Bright Friends Convene

By Ring Lardner.

To the editor:

A few weeks ago I described in these columns a kind of a parlor game that could be played to wile away a evening at a house party or something. They was such a wild rush for copies of the paper that day that a good many folks failed to get copies and has wrote in requesting that I repeat how to play the game.

Well the rules is very simple, namely that four or five or any number of extra bright people set around the parlor or out on the porch and carry on a conversation in which each speech has got to contain the name of some certain kind of object, like for inst. the name of a city of over 20 population. When I wrote this game up before it was cities they had to name and I give a sample conversation to show what I was getting at. This time we will make it capital cities which will make it a whole lot more difficult.

The Singing Brother.

For convenience sakes we will say that five people is engaged in the game and their names are Black, Kelly, Mrs. Kelly, Gary and Mrs. Gary.

Kelly (to his wife)—Dear, did you call up the Parkers today? You know you ought to.

Mrs. Kelly—No. I didn't call them up, but I sent Paul over to see them.

Black (to Gary)—Say, Lem, is that town the Parkers come from a republican town?

Gary—No, no. It's a Jefferson city.

Kelly—Have you noticed what a fine score Hagen has been making in the golf match over in London?

Black—No. What tally has he?

Kelly—He has averaged 72, which sounds pretty good, though I don't know what par is.

Black—My brother Sacra meant to play in that tournament, but couldn't get away.

Mrs. Kelly—He's defending my brother in that damage suit, isn't he? I know my brother said he sent a fee to him, but he wouldn't take it.

Black—Fee? Nix! Not when your brother has been so nice about singing for us at parties.

Mrs. Kelly (to Gary)—Did you ever hear my brother Lem sing?

Gary—No. I was at a party once where he sang, but just as he was beginning, Mrs. Gary disappeared and I couldn't have Anna disappearing when nearly every room was supplied with a bowl of punch.

Shy Anne a Cut Up.

Mrs. Gary—And I was only up in the dressing room, fixing my lips. You can't have much of a but on rouge.

Mrs. Kelly—I've often been at Lem to sing at my parties, but he won't.

Kelly—I'll bet Nash will.

Black—Do you remember the night we asked Mr. Ridley to sing and he got so mad his son had to take him home?

Gary—He certainly was a mad Rid!

Mrs. Gary—Well, we must be starting to roam home.

Mrs. Kelly—Oh, not yet! Monty is coming in a minute with refreshments. You must have at least a Frankfort.

Kelly—I bought the Frankforts yesterday from a lame man. He was going past the house and I said, "Oh, limp, here, my man, and I will buy some Frankforts."

Mrs. Kelly—Here comes Montgomery now. And he's got some apples too.

Kelly (to Gary)—Did you ever see such apples as that? An Indian apple is much smaller.

Mrs. Kelly (to Mrs. Gary)—If you'll wait a minute, I'll have Mont peel your apple for you.

Mrs. Gary—How is Mont's girl friend? She was so quiet and nice I used to call her shy Ann.

Mrs. Gary—Raleigh?

Gary—I suppose the war saw the start of this boldness among girls.

Mrs. Gary—Well, we really must trot along. We'll see you in August again.

Milliners Retain the Tricorne and Beretta and Revive Spanish and Directoire Shapes

Here Are the Names by Which the New Hat Shapes Are Known, for It's Not Enough Today to Call a Hat a "Hat"

The straight sailor or CANOTIER in the sketch is of black hatter's plush with a design appliqueed in silver on the ribbon band. Beige felt is shaped into the plain POSTILLION which is simply trimmed with a band of matching grosgrain ribbon. The large sombrero sailor of black felt achieves distinction by its band which is hand painted in red and yellow.

Germaine's version of the BERETTA is shown in pansy purple with velvet embroidery. Above it is shown one of the GABY TOQUES named for its jaunty bow at the front. The hat and bow are here entirely made of Nubian brown ribbon. The PIERRETTE TRICORNE is of hatter's plush with trimming of silk faille and the GIRONDIN shape as conceived by Lewis is here trimmed with a bow caught into a buckle slide of pierced silver.

Suzanne Talbot's MANTILLA head dress for evening is shown. The chiffon scarf is so arranged that it can be crossed in the back and the ends fall like a mantilla at the sides. It is embroidered with mother of pearl and metalic embroidery.

FRENCH milliners have large vocabularies, and the only time they call a hat a chapeau is when they can't think of anything else to call it. Instead they talk of capelines, cloches, toques, tricornes, quatrecornes, berettas, boleros, postillions, girondins, casques, turbans, canotiers and sombreros. Every season there are new names; every season some of the old names are scrapped, and others, out of favor for a few seasons, are revived again.

Spanish names are strong in their appeal to the milliners this season. There is the very wide-brimmed sailor, sometimes merely spoken of as a Spanish sailor and sometimes as a sombrero sailor, that has been worn by smart women in France ever since the Grand Prix ball there, when it appeared as part of the picturesque Spanish costumery of the masqueraders.

The Spanish Hat

A hat much better suited for autumn and even for winter is the bolero sailor, also Spanish in origin. The bolero, one of the most interesting of native Spanish dances which, with the aid of castinets and spoken words, attempts to represent the course of love from extreme shyness to extreme passion, has at various times given its name to many an article of women's attire. Anything that in any way suggested the costumery of the Spanish dancer as she danced this passionate dance became a bolero, whether it was a little sleeveless jacket or the trim little hat that has come into the spotlight of fashion at the present time.

There are slight variations in the bolero, but always it has a rather small, slightly rounded crown with a distinctly upturned brim. It is at its best when trimmed very simply. The conventional pompon is well chosen—two of them placed at one side. Vasselin Villstard of Paris has trimmed one of her boleros with scarab wings, two at each side.

The Spanish mode of draping the mantilla has given inspiration to several of the French designers. One from Mme. Suzy that has been called the "duenna"—consists of a toque of black felt that rises high in a Spanish comb. Chantilly lace is draped around the toque, hanging at the sides like a mantilla, while Empire green ribbon stretches across the back with a little flat bow at either side.

Suzanne Talbot has taken the Spanish mantilla as the point of departure in an evening headdress. A cape-fitting turban is draped with a chiffon scarf so arranged that it can be crossed in the back with the ends falling like a mantilla at the sides. It is embroidered in mother-of-pearl and metallic threads.

Historic Names Appear

The rulers of England and of France have apparently contributed their share to the hat shapes and hat names chosen for autumn. There is a Tudor turban—round, close fitting—that might have been named after Mary Tudor, the Bloody Mary of English history, or after the other Mary Tudor who was a sister of Henry VIII, and was first married to the doddering French King Louis XII and later to her beloved Charles Brandon. Motion-picture enthusiasts and devourers of romantic fiction have become rather well acquainted with both these ladies within recent years, and it is possible that a bonnet or hat worn by the cinema reincarnation of one of these Tudor heroines inspired the milliner who designed and named the Tudor turban. But one merely has to speculate. Unfortunately there are no explanatory notes attached to the linings of the new hats. Once named, further explanations seem unnecessary.

There is a Francois I beretta among the new French shapes—quite obviously inspired by one of the numerous portraits of that ambitious and gallant monarch. The Louis XVI hat has been mentioned this summer, wide-brimmed and turned up at the back, such as kings and courtiers usually wore in the late eighteenth century. For Henry III of France is named a neat, rather high-crowned, narrow-brimmed model, rolled up at the left and often trimmed at the right by some sort of drooping touffe. And so it goes—in the course of years at this rate all of the rulers of the old French monarchy will have been honored by the busy milliners of Paris.

But the French ruler whose name is oftenest on the tongues of the milliners is Napoleon. If he had never done anything but wear that famous cocked hat of his he would have deserved immortality. No other hat is quite so famous. It would be interesting to make a list of the celebrated men and women whose names are closely associated with the hats they wore. Perhaps Mary Stuart would come a close second to the Little Corporal in this respect. Both seem to have had a flair for millinery, both knew how to wear a hat!

But to return to the Napoleon hat of this season. Probably not one milliner out of ten—even of the well-known ones—could give you a really definite description or sketch of the Napoleonic hat, yet they talk glibly of the Napoleonic tricorne and the Napoleonic effect. All that seems necessary to know is that the Napoleonic hat was cocked so that it went straight up in front, two horns of the tricorne coming down rather low at the side. Then there is the Pierrette tricorne—by which is usually meant a hat with sides cocked so that one point or horn comes at the front and one at either side. The front horn, however, is often rounded so as not to form a real point.

In the same group with the tricornes and the marquises are the quatracornes—which is just another way of saying what some less exact milliners would call a four-cornered tricorne.

Of course Napoleon himself was the most outstanding man of the Directoire and Empire period in French history, and of course the hats that he wore during those periods were primarily Directoire or Empire. But in millinery lingo a Napoleonic hat is one thing and a Directoire hat is another thing.

Generally speaking the Directoire shape has a fairly narrow, high crown with a comparatively narrow brim. It may taper in toward the top, or it may curve slightly outward. There are good historical precedents for either form. Sometimes the brim curves up slightly at either side and sometimes distinctly at one side. One of these Directoire shapes is called the postillion and another the girondin shape. The difference is not always apparent. Then there are demi-postillions, undoubtedly a development of the present time, with a shape like the historic prototype, but lacking a brim at one side.

The Beretta

The beretta is a shape that apparently owed nothing either to Spain or to the Napoleonic era. But it is spoken of enthusiastically by many, and it is likely to become one of the leading successors of the cloche among younger women who follow the fashion.

It, too, has an interesting history. Its prototype was a round, flat woolen cap worn by the Basque peasantry in France. The informal slouch cap worn by French artists was modeled on this. To begin with they were doubtless real Basque caps. It is from the artists' beretta or beret that the shape spoken of by present-day milliners is taken. Some subtle distinction may exist between the beret and the beretta in their minds, but it is not worth considering.

This Basque peasant beretta is not to be confused with the clerical biretta, which indeed did take its name from the same Latin root. The biretta, you know, is worn by clerics in the Catholic Church—black for priests, purple for bishops and red for cardinals. This might of course give inspiration for women's headgear. Milliners would not hesitate at the Pope's mitre if they found it to their liking; but for the present it is the beretta or beret, not the biretta.

The Liberty Cap

The Phrygian hat is also spoken of, and this goes back for inspiration almost as far as the Egyptian casques that were worn a season or so ago. The original of this is described as a "conical cap or bonnet with a peak bent or turned over in front." It was worn by Phrygian peasants centuries before Christ. For some reason or other whenever a Roman slave was given his freedom part of the ceremony consisted of putting one of these simple caps on his head. Hence it was that the Phrygian cap became symbolical of liberty. At the time of the French Revolution it was worn by the supporters of the cause of liberty, and the unfortunate King Louis XVI was mockingly made to wear one before he was beheaded.

The Goddess of Liberty, whether she presides over the destinies of the French Republic or graces the face of an American fifty-cent piece, wears one of these Phrygian caps. But she sat for her profile apparently before women began to wear their hats over their foreheads, so her Phrygian hat appears to be slipping off the back of her head, while the smart French woman wears hers almost touching her nose.

Fashion Notes

Linen seems to be gaining ground as the summer advances, as a material for little girls' frocks. Colored linens have proved very satisfactory this summer, and there seems to be a decided demand for frocks of this material on the part of the most discriminating shoppers. One summer shop window shows little girl frocks all of a dull raspberry shade—some in voile, but for the most part in linen.

In the little shop windows at a decidedly fashionable resort there are ever so many scant little one-piece lingerie frocks—sleeveless or with very short sleeves, and usually trimmed simply with lace and embroidery. Sometimes light-colored mull or voile frocks of this sort are shown also—all very suggestive of the mode of the Empire period, when frocks were very straight and scant and there was the same fad for sleeveless arms as there is today.

As the summer advances the parasols in the shops appear to be more and more ornate. Many of them are trimmed with flowers, but most striking in one of the summer shop windows recently was a vivid green umbrella trimmed with a branch of artificial apples—green apple leaves and small green and red apples.
