Spanish Blast Toll Nearing 200 Mark

TARRAGONA, Spain (AP) — A runaway truck loaded with industrial gas exploded in a Mediterranean coastal campsite Tuesday, engulfing hundreds of campers in flames. Police said at least 188 persons were killed and they feared the death toll would be much higher.

Hundreds of persons were seriously injured, police said. They said some victims were blown into the sea by the blast.

Flaming gas from the truck set off a chain reaction of smaller explosions of campers' cooking gas bottles.

One police officer said the scene "resembles hell or what we think hell is like."

A dozen houses near the campsite were destroyed and some occupants were killed, police said. The blasts demolished about 100 camping trailers.

Probe Ordered

A Madrid propylene transportation company — Cisternas Reunidas — took responsibility and said an investigation had been ordered. Officials said it was the worst-ever campsite disaster.

A spokesman for the trucking company said the truck was a Spanish vehicle built in 1974, part of its regular fleet, and was carrying its maximum load of 43 cubic meters of propylene at the time of the accident.

Police said the 38-ton truck, carrying a single tank, overturned on a bend in the road, hit a four-foot-high cement wall that separated the campsite from the Castellon-Tarragona highway, and exploded. The two-inch thick wall was partially destroyed by the impact and blast and the truck rolled into the camping area, the police said.

Sets Chain Reaction

The truck explosion set off the chain reaction in hundreds of butane gas bottles carried by the campers.

Medical sources said most of the estimated 300 campers evacuated from the scene suffered extremely serious burns and many were about to die.

Vicente Mirabet, head of a unit for burned people at La Fe health center in Valencia, said 40 campers had been admitted and that "most of them are in critical condition. I don't think many will survive."

Medical sources said many of the injured campers, some with burns over 75 percent off their bodies, were taken to hospitals in Valencia, Tarragona, Castellon and Barcelona.

Witnesses said the truck was traveling at about 40 mph down the highway next to the camp when the driver apparently lost control of the vehicle.

"It appears beyond any doubt the tank truck overturned while taking a bend and rolled onto the campsite where it exploded," a police spokesman said of the accident. "It appears the truck first hit the cement wall around the camp and then exploded.

Earlier, officials said the truck was filled with butane gas but later said it was propylene, a colorless gas obtained in the refining of petroleum.

Officials called the disaster "the worst one" ever in a campsite.

Antonio Betancurt, an officer of the paramilitary civil guard unit said he had many victims were "all burned beyond recognition." He said a search was on for more victims and that identification of the bodies "is going to be really difficult, even for their own relatives."

Officials said more than 800 campers were at the site four miles from San Carlos de la Rapita, just south of here, and most of the victims, including entire families, were French, West Germans, Britons, Dutch and Belgians. Tarragona is about 50 miles south of Barcelona.

Witnesses said the bodies of some victims were recovered from the Mediterranean 150 yards away.

"It has all been horrible," said a municipal policeman who was at the camp when the explosion occurred. "All of a sudden a terrific explosion burst out and flames engulfed us.

"Cries came out from everywhere in the camp. People could be seen running in all directions to safety. Some were ablaze. And we were helpless to do anything.

"I'll never be able to get rid of these horrible sights no matter how long I live."

The blast, which occurred about noon local time (7 a.m. CDT) as many of the campers were having lunch, was heard two miles away. The site is on a flat lot and separated from the sea by the cement wall and the highway which runs between Castellon and Tarragona.

The Spanish Air Ministry dispatched half a dozen helicopters and the army sent in soldiers to help evacuate the injured and medical authorities issued calls for blood donors.

Midland Hosts First Nuclear Waste Briefing

By PAT TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

MIDLAND — They came. They saw. And they worried.

About 100 persons showed up at The Fines Arts Center on the Midland College Campus Tuesday to see if Department of Energy officials could assauge their doubts concerning a proposed nuclear waste facility planned for the extreme southeast corner of New Mexico.

John F. O'Leary, the Energy Department's number two man and a native New Mexican, called controlling nuclear waste "an inherently dangerous type of technology."

Alluding to the finite nature of the nation's fossil fuel and the instability of imported oil prices, O'Leary said the nation increasingly would turn to nuclear power or coal.

And given the fact that mining coal is "the most hazardous industry in the country," O'Leary said the nation doubtlessly would turn to nuclear energy for its power needs.

However, he admitted there are problems with the nuclear industry, specifically the proliferation of nuclear weaponry, the difficulty in gaining permits from regulatory agencies and the waste disposal enigma.

Problems Not Handled Well

Of waste disposal, O'Leary said, "This is one (problem), I'm sorry to tell you as a representative of your government, that has not been handled well." He said there had been "disgraceful episodes" involving nuclear waste in the past and some "wholesale leakage."

Midland, the first host city in three days of the public hearings, owns rights to 920,000 acre-feet of water in Loving County, Texas, south of the proposed Delaware Basin site.

The subterranean salt formations there, among several formations being studied nationwide, are considered the most attractive location for the proposed Waste Isolation Pilot Project (WIPP).

A U.S. Geologic survey hydrologist's statement read Tuesday indicated that aquifers in eastern New Mexico and western Texas are isolated from water systems near the proposed WIPP site.

Ed Reed, a Midland geologist who spoke as a "private citizen," said his 40 years of hydrological experience in West Texas would lead him to concur with the U.S. geological study.

Water Questions Answered

Winkler County Judge E.C. Locklear who has raised questions about the WIPP, said Reed's comments had satisfied his own doubts about the water situation.

Asked if his fears of WIPP had been allayed totally totally by the DOE's presentation, Locklear said, "No, not particularly."

The former highway patrolman said the meeting had been profitable, "but it raised new questions in my mind." Locklear said the issue of transporting ultra-toxic waste across Texas roads and railways now was his chief concern.

That same issue disturbed Mack Wallace, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Wallace, who did not attend, sent a statement that was read by the commission's senior legal examiner Jerry Spence.

"Indeed, the transportation involved

Carter Scorns News 'Leaks' In Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter told key congressmen Tuesday that leaked information is jeopardizing the national interest, but his chief spokesman later refused to give any specific examples.

"I wouldn't give reporters the satisfaction," press secretary Jody Powell said.

Nor would he disclose any possible actions that might be taken to stem the leaks in Congress, the White House and federal agencies.

"There have been a number of situations in which classified information has been improperly released and it has caused us problems in intelligence gathering," Powell said.

Rather than a specific news story, Powell said, "You are talking about an accumulation of events that in sum led to the conclusion that this is a problem."

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee quoted the president as saying reliable intelligence sources are hesitating to give information to the administration for fear of reading it in the newspapers.

One administration official said Carter made a point of not telling the congressmen what to do about the problem, and of conceding that it also exists in the White House.

"The president cited some (examples) that did in fact damage the national interest, primarily in the field of a new reluctance of reliable sources to confide information to U.S. officials," Baker said.

In one such example, Baker said, "a formerly reliable source indicated that he knew of a particular situation but wasn't going to tell (the administration) because he was sure it would get in the press."

The press secretary said the problem

Taxpayers Vent Moods In Letters To Mayor

OF THE THOUSANDS of letters to Mayor Dirk West demanding a 25 percent city tax cut, most have been form letters made personal only by signatures of angry taxpayers.

However, a few of the individuals who are complaining about spiraling property taxes and property reassessments in Southwest Lubbock have managed to stand out from the others.

One woman mailed two of the letters — one for herself and one for her dead husband.

Unsure their letters would safely arrive at city hall, some taxpayers paid $1.40 to send them by registered mail and nearly 700 of the letters were hand delivered.

The city staff took it all in stride except for one incident in which a man asked for additional blank protest letters to circulate.

The man was told he had come to the wrong place.

Residential Section In Southwest City Gets Tax Rollback

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

THE TAX equalization board Tuesday slightly rolled back assessments in a 500-home section of Lubbock's recently reappraised southwest quadrant.

But the board stressed that this section is the only flaw found thus far in the revaluation program conducted by the City of Lubbock-Lubbock Independent School District tax department.

The affected area is bounded by 35th Street on the north, 42nd Street on the south, Slide Road on the west and Utica Avenue on the east.

10 Percent Values Cut

After detecting a pattern in the complaints of individual homeowners from that area, the city-school tax equalization board voted to reduce by 10 percent the tax values on improvements in this particular section.

The reduction applies only to the area's residential property, board chairman Deaton Rigsby said.

He added that land values set by the tax office won't be affected by the board's action. Therefore, Rigsby estimated, the board's decision will translate into an actual reduction of about eight percent in the overall residential property tax bills in the affected area.

"Excellent Job"

Jack House, vice chairman of the equalization board, said the city-school tax office "by and large has done an excellent job" in keeping assessed values in the southwest — this year's revaluation target — in line with market values, as required by law.

"This (westside section between 35th and 42nd streets) is the only area in which we have found any weakness so far. The board's action today was an effort to correct that weakness," House said.

Rigsby said the weakness was discovered while the board — meeting in subcommittees of three members — heard individual cases arising from the area in question. After checking recent sales data, he said, the board concurred that the section's tax values generally had been set "a little higher than they should be."

John Brooks, city-school tax assessor-collector, said the affected area was a perplexing one for his reappraisal staff. About half the sales in the section supported the higher values, while the other half did not, he said.

Brooks estimated there are 650 lots in this particular section. Discounting for vacant lots and commercial property, he said, the area contains about 500 homes.

Values Hiked, Eased

An Avalanche-Journal survey indicated that assessed values of some houses in the area in question had been increased 70-90 percent due to the tax office's reappraisal. The equalization board's action Tuesday will trim those increases slightly.

The number of complaints taken to the board continued to be light, despite much publicity generated by tax protest groups over property revaluation. On Tuesday, the board heard from about 40 persons and considered several cases that had been mailed in.

Thirty-four complainants appeared before the board Monday. The board's subcommittees have recommended some changes in individual cases based on evidence provided by homeowners.

Meanwhile Tuesday, the Lubbock Property Owners Association — which has been fighting the reappraisals and asking the city council to offset them with a 25 percent tax cut — complimented Brooks' office.

Gene Medley, chairman of the group, said in a letter to Brooks: "On behalf of the association, I wish to thank you for your attempts to make the appearances by the taxpayers before the board of equalization run more smoothly.

Carrying Out Law

"Your office is tasked with the burden of carrying out the law as given to you, and we realize this fact. Although we do not agree with the increase in taxation as enforced by your office, it is not our desire to have anyone appear before your board who does not have a legitimate complaint."

Medley concluded, "It is our intent to change the tax structure in Lubbock through the utilization of established constitutional procedures."

Montford Sets Crime Fight Price Tag

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

CRIMINAL District Attorney-elect John T. Montford Tuesday went before Lubbock County commissioners with a price tag for his "assault on crime" next year.

Offering alternative budgets, he asked for an increase of either $68,000 or $131,000 for calendar 1979.

The current budget for the office is for $386,553 under DA Alton Griffin, and Montford proposes a budget of either $454,560 or $518,160 with any grants being used primarily to hire more investigators.

If state or federal grants cannot be obtained, he said, he still would like for the county to fund the higher budget.

"The crime losses in Lubbock County are tremendous," he said, adding that the taxpayers would be saved money if his program succeeds in reducing the crime rate substantially.

County Judge Rodrick Shaw told Montford in opening budget hearings Tuesday afternoon that the court will develop an initial approach to the requests and consult again with him before the budget is adopted in September.

Montford, who will take office next Jan. 1, said the main purpose of his proposals is to hire and retain good attorneys and other assistants.

If his maximum budget were approved, he would spend $90,000 for seven investigators as opposed to the $34,700 being spent this year.

He would also hire an office administrator at a negotiable salary, possibly about $18,000 per year, and spend $14,000 for law students to work as law clerks at $3 per hour.

Salaries for assistants make up most of the proposed increase. They would be increased to a total of $240,000 in either budget. Projected expenditures are $153,846 in that category this year.

"If I can save money, I'll save it," Montford said. "I just believe in this incentive structure."

Shaw said attempts to retain experienced assistant district attorneys by raising their salaries have not been successful in the past.

"We need some help from the State of Texas because these are state courts and state functions," Commissioner Alton Brazell said.

The state now is paying only for part of the salaries of the criminal district attorney and district judges, Brazell noted.

Montford proposes the same Lubbock County contribution to his salary, $13,000, that Griffin is being paid this year.

Counting what the state will pay, he would make $27,000 next year.

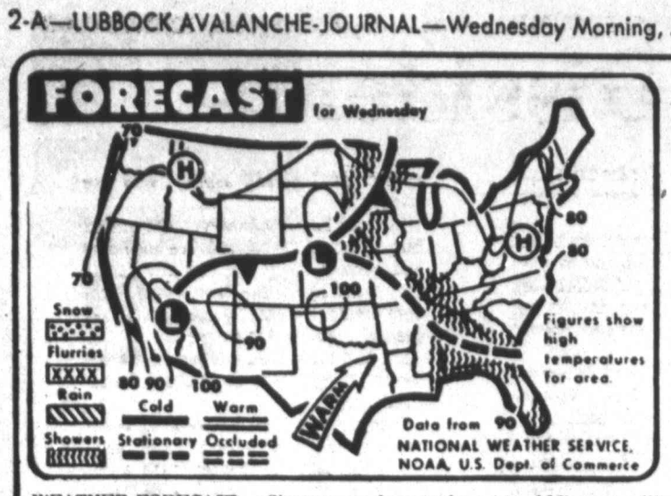

Other department heads will appear before the commissioners as budget hearings continue over the next several weeks.

County auditor Dale Gallimore projected a 1979 budget based on initial requests when the hearings opened at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday.

It showed $5,948,303 in general fund requests opposed to $5,788,420 in expected revenue in the same category.

Totals are $8,598,588 in revenue and

Group Commander Found Reese Tour 'Enjoyable, Rewarding'

By GERRY BURTON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Col. Monte D. Montgomery will assume command of the 64th Air Base Group at Reese Air Force Base Thursday. He will replace Col. Bobby R. Bagley.

The new base commander currently is commander of the 3504th Recruiting Group at Lackland AFB at San Antonio.

Bagley, a well-known figure on the South Plains for his stirring speeches on God and country as well as the life of a prisoner of war in Vietnam, will be going to Kelly AFB for an assignment with the Air Force security service.

"It has been a grand tour, one of the most enjoyable and rewarding of my career," Bagley said of his South Plains stay which began in April 1977.

"These people have a very special place in my heart, and I will welcome them all to San Antonio."

The "super" assignment at Reese has been two-fold in rewards and satisfaction received working with the young people of the Air Force and the pleasures of "meeting so many great Americans" in the South Plains community.

Talking patriotism to a South Plains audience, he said, is "like preaching to the choir, they all agree with you."

His book on five and a half years as a POW is one of the most popular subjects among those who have come to know Bagley even though it has not yet reached the Lubbock bookstores. Bagley plans to be back to autograph copies for his friends after it hits the South Plains area.

Bagley, a command pilot with more than 3,000 hours flying time, is a native of Georgia. He was on his 49th mission when his unarmed RF-101 was shot down near Hanoi.

Injuries received when his plane blew up around him were compounded by civilians who beat and tried to hang him and by North Vietnamese interrogators in five and a half years in five separate POW camps.

Other assignments have included tactical operations staff officer in Laon AB, France, before he went to Vietnam and commander of the Air Force security group at Karamursel Common Defense Installation, Turkey, after his release.

One of his first assignments was flying an F-86 with the 429th Fighter Bomber Squadron at Clovis AFB, N.M.

Bagley was flying out of Udorn Royal Thai AFB, Thailand, when he was captured. He had stayed past his year to get his flying time in, having previously served at Tan Son Nhut AB, Saigon, as briefing officer for both the commanding general of the 7th Air Force and the commander of United States Forces, Military Assistance Command, Vietnam.

Montgomery, a native of Oklahoma schooled in Delaware, went back to his native soil to win his wings at Vance AFB.

He entered the Air Force through the Air Force ROTC program at Rutgers University with his first assignment as ground control intercept in Friesing AB, Germany.

At Binh Thuy, Vietnam, he flew AC-47s with the 4th Commando Squadron and from 1971-75 he was with the Directorate of Programs, Aircraft Allocation Division, Headquarters, USAF.

Montgomery went to Lackland from the U.S. Army War College.

His decorations include the Distinguished Service Cross with three oak leaf clusters, the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal with one cluster, Air Medal with two silver clusters, the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry with two silver stars and the Vietnamese Air Service Honor Medal.

He holds a bachelor's degree in American Studies from Rutgers and a master's in management from Central Michigan University.

LULAC Decides Not To Join In Plainview Protest March

The League of United Latin-American Citizens will not join formally in a planned demonstration Saturday to protest recent court action in a Mexican-American man's death, the group's local leaders have decided.

The 10-member district executive board voted unanimously Monday against officially participating in a protest march from Hale Center to Plainview.

Although it supports the "concept of peaceful demonstration," the board said in an official statement, it will be up to individual members to decide whether to participate.

"For the district to decide as an organization to endorse the demonstration means all members are participating by virtue of the fact that they belong (to LULAC)," explained Tony Reyes, executive director of the Lubbock chapter.

He added that Ruben Bonilla, state LULAC director, will address the rally scheduled to be held at the county courthouse in Plainview Saturday. Reyes said he does not know what Bonilla will say.

The march and rallies are planned to protest a Hale County grand jury's decision Friday not to indict a deputy for the shooting death of Timothy Rosales Jr., 25, of Hale Center.

Rosales was killed instantly June 25 after being struck in the head by a bullet from deputy Charles Cypert's gun. The bullet reportedly was discharged during a struggle between Cypert and Rosales. The deputy had stopped Rosales, who was driving a car missing two tires, on a DWI complaint about four miles north of Mayfield.

After 12 hours of testimony from 21 witnesses and about 90 minutes of deliberation, the grand jury no-billed Cypert.

Area Mexican-American leaders said they were disappointed with the jury's decision. Besides the demonstration set for Saturday, they indicated they will seek federal action in the case.

Reyes said LULAC's executive board will send a telegram to the U.S. Justice Department, asking that it consider convening a federal grand jury to investigate "possible civil rights violations" in the Rosales death.

A meeting between Brown Beret representatives and Plainview Mexican-Americans was slated for Tuesday night. The groups were to discuss what actions to pursue in the case, said Gilbert Herrera.

Hot Temperatures Pressing Water Supply

The South Plains will continue to sizzle today as a ridge of high pressure maintained its grip on the area.

And, the dry air and torrid temperatures have brought another problem for the City of Lubbock — increased usage of water.

The city Monday pumped 70 million gallons of water, a record amount. "That amount may go even higher," Sam Wahl, city public works director, said, adding that the maximum which probably can be pumped in a day is 75 million gallons.

"We've still got 50 days of potentially high usage, and if we don't get a break from the weather... it's just hard to say what will happen," Wahl said. "Water rationing could be a possibility."

Residents in southwest Lubbock have already experienced problems with water pressure, and they can expect them to continue with peak usage, Wahl said.

Although Wahl and others across the area are hoping for a break from the scorching temperatures, forecasters aren't predicting one anytime soon.

Today's high is expected to soar to the upper 90s and tonight's low will be around 70. No precipitation is expected through Thursday.

Winds today will be southerly at 10 to 15 mph.

The weather outlook is calling for continued dry with hot afternoons Friday through Sunday. Highs will be in the 90s to near 100, and the lows in the 60s and 70s.

Elsewhere in Texas Tuesday, mostly sunny skies prevailed.

However, afternoon thundershowers were reported along the upper coast between Houston and Beaumont/Port Arthur, and the lower coast and portions of north central Texas were cloudy.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from the upper 80s along the upper coast to readings over 100 degrees throughout north central Texas and parts of South Texas.

Across the nation Tuesday, thunderstorms and thunder showers rumbled through much of the southeastern quarter of the nation from the Gulf through Maryland.

Thunderstorms accompanied by wind gusts of more than 50 mph caused some damage near Sumter, S.C. Earlier Tuesday, thunderstorms dumped heavy rain on southeastern North Carolina.

Storms stretched from the Carolinas across Virginia into Maryland, over the central Gulf Coast and in northwestern and northern Florida, and a few thunderstorms developed in northwestern North Dakota.

The national forecast for today is calling for widely scattered thunderstorms through the western portions of the Great Lakes, the central Great Plains and the eastern Gulf Coast states.

Showers are also expected over Montana, the south and central Rockies, Utah and Arizona.

Bush Wants 33 Percent Tax Reduction

In a speech Tuesday to the Downtown Lubbock Optimist Club, Republican congressional candidate George Bush advocated a 33 percent across the board tax reduction.

"I can't help but believe a tax cut, coupled with holding the line on government spending, can result in anything except a stimulated economy, and a lowering of skyrocketing inflation and unemployment," he said.

The 33 percent tax cut, before Congress in the Roth-Kemp bill, would be phased in over a three-year period. A family of four with an adjusted gross income of $8,000 would save $108 with such a proposal and the same family with an income of $40,000 would save $2,336 in taxes.

"I don't believe anyone wants continued government over-spending. The tax cuts, combined with holding spending to a minimum, will again provide the incentive for confidence in government," he said.

Care Advised In Buying Car

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new car is one of life's biggest purchases and getting bigger all the time, so when you shop for wheels some care is in order.

The Transportation Department advises that first you read about various autos in consumer and automobile magazines to help narrow the field. These reports will usually give details of features like roominess, mileage, repair frequency and so forth.

After narrowing the field, comparison shop at local dealerships. In addition to price, consider dependability and the dealer's reputation. Check the local Better Business Bureau or consumer office for complaints about the dealer.

A road test of the potential new car is most important, and make sure the dealer fixes any problems before you take delivery.

For more details on how to select a new car, the department has a booklet: "Common Sense in Buying a New Car." It's available without charge from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 693F, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Furor Builds As Trials Begin For Dissidents

DISSIDENT WIFE — Mrs. Natalia Shcharansky holds a photo of her husband, Soviet dissident mathematician Anatoly Shcharansky after holding a news conference at the Paris headquarters of the Human Rights League Monday on the day of the opening of the trial of the dissident mathematician in Moscow. MOSCOW (AP) — Dissident Anatoly Shcharansky was charged by a Moscow court Tuesday with passing state secrets to an American reporter. A separate Soviet court 100 miles away accused the wife of another Jewish dissident, Alexander Ginzburg, of threatening the life of a witness.

Authorities pressed their charges in the two trials amid a growing storm of international protest, closing the doors of the Shcharansky proceedings for security reasons and ejecting Ginzburg's wife Irina when she shouted at a prosecution witness, "God will be your judge."

Shcharansky, 30, faces the death penalty on an espionage charge involving an accusation that he passed scientific and military secrets to known American spies. It indicated Rtbert C. Toth of the Los Angeles Times was one of these. Toth has denied the allegation.

Ginzburg, 41, is charged with "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda" for distributing books by exiled author Alexander Solzhenitsyn and others. He could receive a total of up to five years in prison, five years at hard labor and five years in Siberian exile.

The trials proceeded despite earlier requests by Washington to call them off and as Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko flew to Geneva, where he is scheduled to meet U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance on Wednesday for talks on strategic arms limitation.

Several senators in Washington Tuesday demanded a tougher administration stand against the trials by blocking technical agreements and even suspending SALT negotiations.

In Moscow, court official Magomet Pirbudagov read reporters a statement saying Shcharansky was accused of collecting secret data on the locations, security classifications and officials of secret military-industrial enterprises.

He said Shcharansky "systematically turned over in Moscow the above-mentioned information to the West, observing measures of precaution and secrecy."

Eleven witnesses were heard Tuesday, accusing Shcharansky of "concrete espionage activity and assisting a foreign state in hostile activity against the U.S.S.R.," the spokesman said.

One of these, Sanya Lipavsky, is the man who roomed for a period with Shcharansky, then wrote a denunciation of him in the government newspaper Izvestia. According to Washington sources he himself had contacts with the Central Intelligence Agency.

The spokesman said Lipavsky testified that Shcharansky received espionage instructions from Vitaly Rubin, who emigrated from the Soviet Union in 1976.

According to other witnesses, the official said, Shcharansky passed on information to Toth. The instructions were received through the diplomatic mail of an unidentified embassy, the spokesman said, and Shcharansky was paid from overseas.

Pirbudagov did not mention Toth's name, though it did come up in Monday's proceedings. But he cited articles written by Toth from Moscow for his newspaper about parapsychology, space research and genetic engineering.

The statement said Shcharansky helped Toth to make contact with and to question scientists about alleged secret work "worming out information that is not subject to publication in the open press."

After receiving a classified document from a scientist, it said, the correspondent was detained by Soviet authorities.

He was then interrogated and signed a protocol about his contacts with Shcharansky before being allowed to leave the country.

In a statement from Washington Monday Toth denied having worked for any intelligence agency.

Since Tuesday's proceedings were closed and even Shcharansky's immediate family was barred there were no other sources of information on the trial besides the Pirbudagov statement.

In Kaluga, Mrs. Ginzburg was ejected twice when she refused to promise to be quiet during the proceedings. "These were just such dirty lies that I had to protest," she told reporters outside.

She confirmed a Tass news agency account that witness Arkady Gradoboyev claimed in court she threatened to kill him at the end of the first day's proceedings.

According to Mrs. Ginzburg she simply confronted him and asked, "Why are lying?"

In court Tuesday, however, she quoted him as saying, "Dissidents are hoodlums and bandits...They can buy any bandit they want to kill me. You heard Ginzburg's wife threatening me. I'm afraid she will buy a killer to get me."

She said the judge asked him to make a formal charge to the court about the alleged threat.

Then, during his testimony about Ginzburg and the alleged loose life of dissidents, she said she shouted, "It's a lie. Everything this man says is a lie." She was then ejected from the proceedings.

On Monday, court officials told two Western reporters Gradoboyev had a criminal record. They said he had been convicted four times on charges including pornography and theft.

Ginzburg's mother Ludmila, 70, remained in the courtroom.

In a third dissident trial in the Lithuanian capital of Vilnius, another member of the "Helsinki" human rights group to which Shcharansky and Ginzburg belonged, Viktoras Pyatkus, was accused of homosexuality, dissident sources said.

In addition to the formal charge against him of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda," the sources said, Pyatkus, 49, was accused of involving young people in criminal activities and drunkenness.

The sources said he refused to take part in the proceedings, now in their second day, and lay down in the dock with his eyes closed.

Senate Resolution Condemns Soviet Human Rights Abuses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate adopted Tuesday a resolution condemning the trials of three Soviet dissidents as human rights abuses and appealing for a "humanitarian" outcome to the cases.

About 37 senators joined in sponsorship of the resolution that was introduced by Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and more names were added after it passed on a voice vote. The measure now goes to the House.

Expressing a "sense of the Congress," the resolution declares that the trials of Soviet dissidents Anatoly Shcharansky, Alexander Ginzburg and Lithuanian Viktoras Petkas "are matters of deep concern to the American people."

"These deplorable events inevitably affect the climate of our relations and impose obstacles to the building of confidence and cooperation between our two countries," the resolution says.

The Congress, it says, "urges that the Supreme Soviet and its leadership to seek a humanitarian resolution to these cases and to work toward improving the climate in U.S.-Soviet relations."

The resolution, which was also expected to pass the House, came amid a rising chorus of criticism on Capitol Hill over the Soviet government's decisions to try the three for alleged anti-government agitation and, in Shcharansky's case, treason.

To a lesser extent, criticism also was aimed at the Carter administration for not taking what some senators feel is a strong enough stand against the trials.

Meanwhile, William Leurs, a senior State Department official, told a hearing of the U.S. Helsinki Commission that the administration already has had under consideration a series of new moves to express U.S. displeasure at the Soviet actions.

However, Leurs refused to say what measures were being weighed, except to exclude ongoing arms reduction talks.

Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., urged that President Carter cancel two impending technical agreements with the Soviet Union.

Several other lawmakers suggested such moves as suspension of the strategic arms limitations talks and U.S. withdrawal from the 1975 Helsinki Accords. That agreement established principles of human rights and was signed by 35 countries, including the Soviet Union.

In urging a temporary suspension of the SALT talks, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Carter should recall Secretary of State Cyrus Vance from Geneva "not to destroy SALT, but to demonstrate our outrage."

He also suggested that Attorney General Griffin Bell be dispatched as an official U.S. observer to the trials, which have been closed to outsiders.

Dissident Trial Called 'Reprisal'

KALUGA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — A light drizzle was falling outside the Kaluga courthouse Tuesday and Irina Ginzburg was close to tears, or maybe they were raindrops she was nervously brushing from her red-rimmed eyes.

"It's not a trial at all, it's a cruel reprisal," she told reporters who had traveled to this isolated manufacturing city 100 miles south of Moscow for the trial of human rights activist Alexander Ginzburg.

The small-boned brunette spoke in a high-pitched, agitated voice as she hastily described the events of the second day of the trial.

Around her were 20 supporters, elderly women bundled in gray coats, young bearded men in blue jeans. All waited patiently in the rain in a park outside the courthouse for the three hours of the morning session and five or six hours as the trial stretched on in the afternoon.

Only Mrs. Ginzburg and her husband's 70-year-old mother, Ludmila, had been allowed to attend the proceedings. Kaluga is Ginzburg's official residence.

Ginzburg, a 41-year-old Jewish activist, is being tried on charges of anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. He has pleaded innocent to the charges.

Soviet Dissident Freedom Efforts Aired

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's spokesman said Tuesday the administration unsuccessfully investigated opportunities to obtain the freedom of Anatoly F. Shcharansky and other Soviet dissidents.

White House press secretary Jody Powell offered no details on what efforts were made on behalf of the Jewish dissident activist who went on trial in Moscow on Monday charged with treason.

"We did explore various possibilities for Mr. Shcharansky's and others' freedom," Powell said at the daily White House news briefing.

"As one might gather from recent events, there seemed to be no particular interest in this course of action" on the part of others, presumably the Soviet Union.

Asked whether he meant to create the impression that the offer was turned down, the spokesman said, "I didn't mean to leave an impression one way or the other."

Powell also left open the possibility that the president would meet with Shcharansky's wife, who plans to visit the United States to build support for her husband.

He said Vice President Walter F. Mondale met with Mrs. Shcharansky in Jerusalem during the vice president's Middle East visit over the July Fourth weekend.

Better Farmland Use Urged By Department

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study by the Agriculture Department says that much more prime farmland could be brought into crop production than has been lost to urban development and other non-farm uses in the last decade.

The study by the department's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service said that there are 78 million acres of land "with a high potential for cropland development" if it is needed to produce the nation's food and fiber.

However, the report said that only 15 million of those acres have no problems which might hamper their switch into cropland. Problems include high water tables, forests, lack of dependable water and high erosion hazards.

AN EDITORIAL:

Penny Shifted Is Tax Earned

GETTING OUT of the "tax mess" may prove to be as complicated as getting into it.

All sorts of suggestions have been tossed out the past few days on how Texas taxpayers, those who support the cities and school districts might find some sort of tax relief.

The Texas Legislature opened a special session earlier in the week with a mandate from Gov. Dolph Briscoe to come up with a program enabling $1.6 billion in tax cuts over the next three years. He offered a number of suggested ways of reaching such a goal.

IN SOME WAYS, the Governor may have ignored, at both the state and local level, two or three of the more feasible and direct methods.

In seeking to make it possible for Texas citizens to have more control over the tax structure, both in the Legislature and at the local level, the Governor included ways and means to put a brake on spending.

In suggesting several areas for tax relief, the Governor touched on two or three methods which have attracted considerable support over the state.

THE TWO most direct methods, one group argues, would be to (1) reduce the state sales tax by a penny, and (2) amend the constitution to provide for a homestead exemption as it relates to city and school taxes.

An alternative, one favored by many, would be to just divert a penny of the 4-cent state sales tax and return it to the cities or jointly to the cities and schools.

There are good arguments for all three proposals.

Those who would reduce the sales tax a penny and provide larger homestead exemptions for city and/or school taxes say their plan has two advantages, in addition to relieving taxes on owner-occupied homes:

First, it would reduce tax revenues at the point where there is a surplus--at the state level--by cutting down on the source of revenue.

Secondly, it would force budget economies on the state Legislature next year, and preserve the penny sales tax for state use when and if it becomes necessary, thus lessening the pressure at some future date for an income tax at the state level.

WHILE THIS plan has merit, we would opt for more direct and we feel "broad based" relief.

By allocating another penny of the current four-cent state sales tax to the cities, and/or schools, local taxpayers would get an immediate windfall.

Currently, Lubbock receives about $7 million a year from the penny sales tax already allotted to cities from the overall five-cent levy. Another penny, and another $7 million. This comes out to the equivalent of 56 cents on the $100 valuation on the tax rate, or shared by the schools, half that.

The result—provided the tax rate were lowered, of course—would be near-instant relief from the increased valuations which have taxpayers up in arms. Too, there is room for argument that more persons would share in the tax load, and more nearly according to their ability to pay.

Should the state's oil-and gas-fueled economy falter, an additional penny could be added to the state sales tax later, rather than put on the obnoxious income tax. We do not buy the idea that Texas "eventually just has to have an income tax" nor that not saving the penny "to use later" would guarantee such a tax. The problem is now, not five years from now.

AN EDITORIAL:

'Money Can't Buy Me Love'

HOPE DOES indeed spring eternal.

How else can you explain the popularity of state-run lotteries in which, on the average, less than half the take is returned as prizes.

Such heavy odds against the players are no discouragement to millions of persistent losers who continue to plunk down their money in hopes of eventually joining the charmed circle of winners.

Even these lucky few, however, may turn out to be losers in some respects.

THE SUDDEN wealth of big lottery winnings can bring problems which most of the winners are not prepared to handle, according to a study released this week by Jerry and Rena Dictor LeBlanc.

Detailing their findings in a book, "Suddenly Rich," the LeBlancs note that the bad side of lottery luck can involve estrangement from family and friends, hostility at work, harassment by press and favor-seekers, fear of burglaries and sometimes threats of physical harm.

There are numerous testimonials that money has not bought happiness.

One cited an identity crisis as the most painful consequence of winning a million --"you get the fame with the money, and it's twice as heavy."

Hindsight gave winners some insight as to how they might better have handled their sudden riches.

M. STANTON EVANS:

Voters Won't Swallow Spoon-Fed ERA Twice

WASHINGTON—The campaign to extend the time limit for ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment is as good a specimen of political double think as one is likely to encounter.

So argue Phyllis Schlafly, Chairman of Stop ERA and the individual who has almost singlehandedly derailed the drive for ratification and reduced proponents of ERA to the extension stratagem.

Mrs. Schlafly recently appeared before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights to deliver a withering critique of the extension proposal. Her testimony made the following points:

1. TO ALTER THE time frame at this late date is to change the rules at the end of the game —rather like a football team that is trailing demanding to play a fifth quarter.

It is also to tamper with the amendatory process, since all the states that have ratified the ERA have done so on the basis of a congressional resolution stating that the time limit for ratification would be seven years.

If the substance of the amendment is to be changed in any way, Mrs. Schlafly contends, then the whole shebang should be resubmitted to all the states for their approval.

2. THE SEVEN-year time limit has been utilized for the past 50 years as a method of assuring that state legislative votes to ratify are reasonably contemporaneous.

In fact, no constitutional amendment that has made it through to ratification has taken more than four years.

If the extension proposal is adopted, ratification voted in 1972 will be cumulated with ratifications possibly voted as late 1986.

An interval of 14 years can hardly be considered reasonably contemporaneous.

3. This consideration becomes the more compelling when we note that several states that originally voted to ratify ERA have since rescinded their approval of the amendment.

RECISSIONS HAVE been voted in Nebraska, Tennessee, Idaho, and Kentucky.

It cannot be very plausibly argued that their previous ratifications would be contemporeneous with ratifications in the 1980s when these four states have explicitly disowned their former action.

4. Proponents of the extension are trying to stack the deck even further by denying that a state can rescind its previous ratification.

In this view, once a state has voted to ratify it is locked into that position forever. But states that have refused to ratify can be continuously pressured to approve the ERA—for a period up to 14 years!

Mrs. Schlafly notes that the 15 states that haven't ratified have been compelled to vote again and again on ERA—24 times in committee, 59 times on the floor of the legislature.

5. TO ADD AN extra fillip of unfairness, proponents of the extension are contending that the time can be expanded by a simple majority vote, even though the original amendment required a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress.

6. Not content with rigging things in this respect, ERA proponents have also managed to rig the hearings on the proposed extension.

IN HEARINGS HELD last fall, Mrs. Schlafly notes, seven lawyers were heard on the question of the extension. Six of these were pro-ERA, and only one came out clearly in opposition to the extension.

7. The unfairness of the proposal is so manifest that several liberal spokesmen who favor ERA have come out against the extension.

Even such liberal voices as The New York Times and the Washington Post have criticized the proposal.

They understand that the essence of the democratic process is to abide by the rules, and that the suggested ERA extension is a proposal to do exactly the reverse.

ROWLAND EVANS & ROBERT NOVAK:

Bonn's Voyage Yaw

NOVAK

BONN—The Soviet campaign to cast doubt on the dependability of the U.S. is in full bloom across Europe, particularly here in West Germany which for 30 years has been the root of the U.S. European strategy against Moscow.

The smell of this Soviet campaign is everywhere, sweetened with the apprehensions of America's NATO allies as to whether the Carter administration really knows what it wants and how to get it.

The Soviet ambassadors and their ample staffs here and in East Germany tirelessly contrast the serious nature of Soviet policies with the erratic political style of President Carter following the disillusionment of Vietnam and Watergate.

What distinguishes this Soviet propaganda campaign is President Leonid Brezhnev's surprising efforts to find an audience among the bad old cold war warriors of the German right—like Franz Josef Strauss.

THESE ARE THE leaders of the Christian Democratic Union (CDU) and Christian Social Union (CSU), parties which for the past decade have been in the opposition to the Social Democratic party now under Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

During his visit to Bonn in May, Brezhnev went out of his way both to admonish and to court Helmut Kohl, the CDU leader.

As the top opposition spokesman, it wasn't all that unusual for Kohl to be received by Brezhnev for a 45-minute lecture about the CDU's alleged anti-Soviet tendencies.

But Strauss was a different number.

Strauss has held a special place in the Kremlin's heart ever since his first election to the West German parliament in 1949, a German revanchist feared and attacked by the Kremlin as a latter-day Attila the Hun.

Yet it was with Strauss that Brezhnev exerted his charms to a greater degree than with any other German leader.

STRAUSS IS ONE of the smartest politicians in Europe, and a sly, witty debater of great force and positive views.

He listened while Brezhnev read a prepared statement rebuking revanchism and appealing for the conservative's support for Soviet-style European security. Strauss replied bluntly.

He described himself as having only one policy for Germany—the same policy proclaimed by Talleyrand for defeated France at the Congress of Vienna in 1815: rescue for France whatever can be rescued after the collapse of Napoleon.

There was blame enough to go around for Hitler's conquests, said Strauss, and a large share of it was the Stalin-Hitler non-aggression pact of 1939 which removed the last obstacle for Hitler's wars.

Strauss then told Brezhnev that a conflict is in the making in Africa, an explosion that could exceed the point of no return and lead to a tremendous worldwide war.

FROM BREZHNEV came no harsh response. Brezhnev listened, then insisted—over Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko's visible annoyance—on walking outside with Strauss and seeing him to his car.

This was unprecedented treatment for Strauss who, despite three decades at or near the pinnacle of West German politics, has never been invited to the Kremlin.

Brezhnev was praised in the controlled Soviet press for having tamed and charmed cold warrior Strauss and—at least for now—30 years of anti-Strauss invective disappeared from the Soviet press.

Brezhnev's point in courting Kohl and Strauss seems obvious:

*First, to feed them the suspicion that dependence on Washington is a long-range gamble which may not pay off; and

*Second, to emphasize that Moscow's will and determination will never change—and had better be taken into account.

Such Moscow-inspired atmospherics have clearly had an effect on Chancellor Schmidt, who is burdened with a virulent left wing.

WITHOUT CLEAR U.S. leadership for West Germany and other European states, Schmidt will hardly say anything nasty about Soviet adventures in Africa, Afghanistan, South Yemen or elsewhere.

Uncertain of elusive American leadership, Schmidt for good reason chooses to risk no offense to the Kremlin.

Kohl, Strauss and the conservatives, with the luxury of being out of power, have no inhibitions —today—about offending the Soviets, and no doubts about reasons for doing so.

But Brezhnev's subtle dialogue, craftily woven into his speech in Minsk, suggests that he may see a change coming.

If it does come, it will be pushed forward by worldwide Soviet propaganda about dependability and steadiness of Soviet world policies.

But it will be triggered by something else: the perception that Jimmy Carter's Washington either does not understand the game or is too tired to play.

HENRY J. TAYLOR:

No End To War

PRESIDENT CARTER has lost the confidence of world leaders. My recent trip abroad made this abysmally clear. U.S. foreign policy is in shreds and patches.

President Carter has reversed General Sherman and filled the White House with Georgians.

They are vigorous, lusty, ambitious men with the eyes of adventurers and they work on the party's nuts and bolts. Along with President Carter himself, they have one prime objective: to see that he is re-elected. But confusion reigns in the White House.

By President Carter's own official count, he receives from his departments and agencies an average 360 pages a day of memoranda on foreign, intelligence and security matters.

PRINCIPLE ASSISTANT for National Security Zbigniew Brzezinski cuts these 360 pages down to about 80. But the confusion remains.

One unanswered question is the extent to which democracy in the United States can wage a war which eventually is not supported by the national will and the extent to which such will can be manipulated by President Carter or anybody else.

I was in Geneva for the peace talks after France's defeat in Algeria. At the end, the French forces were absolutely supreme in Algeria. To stop the infiltration into Algeria, the French built the Morice Line.

It stopped effectively the men and supplies from outside Algeria that sustained the fighting power of France's enemies.

You and I call the United States the world's most powerful nation.

SINCE WORLD WAR II alone we have spent more than a trillion dollars.

Yet we may be appalled to realize that the United States has not had a military victory since 1945—not in 33 years.

Korea was the first major war we ever entered that we did not win. And one unwon war is too many of the world's No. 1 power.

The United States could not win at the conference table what it failed to gain on the battlefield. The Communists did not discover this; they only understood it. And, of course, they were dead right.

Like an Egyptian pyramid tipped upside down, each unwon war is a burden that becomes built on the burden of the previous unwon war.

AND, OBVIOUSLY, there is a limit to the number of unwon wars the United States can stand. Our country is the West's only superpower.

The East has two; the Soviet and Red China. Compared with the earlier status of Moscow and Peking, the United States has lost the military power, internal security and effective allies we had in 1945.

With barbarians outside the walls—as always —this is the enemy inside that can cost us our place as the world's No. 1 power.

JAY HARRIS:

A Dream Shared...

EVERY CITY HAS men and women who in their work, their civic and church endeavors, leave an indelible mark.

They are people above the ordinary, who are leaders, not only in their chosen professions, but in seeking a better way of life for the whole community.

Nelson Poynter was such a man...

The name to most persons in these parts probably means nothing. But, in a way, Mr. Poynter has had a degree of influence, even here.

Nelson Poynter, chairman of the board of the St. Petersburg, Fla., Times and Evening Independent, died Thursday June 15. He was 74 years old, and active up to the last minute.

MR. POYNTER spent his last day as he probably would have wished, had it been his choice.

He had helped break ground for a new St. Petersburg campus of the University of South Florida and then had been honored with a plaque honoring him and the Times for helping bring the campus to St. Pete. He became ill in his office and died that night of a cerebral hemorrhage.

To say that Nelson Poynter was unique in his trade would be stretching the point. The newspaper profession is filled with unusual, one-of-a-kind individuals.

But he stood tall in the crowd. Taking over the St. Petersburg papers from his father and family, Poynter helped turn them into what is generally recognized as among the best in the nation.

QUITE FRANKLY, we often disagree with the paper's liberal editorial philosophy.

But we admire The Times' news content, its broad scope of news and feature coverage--local to international. And we think its use of color is as good as one can find anywhere.

As a matter of fact, it was the St. Pete paper that we more or less "copied" years ago when The A-J first started extensive use of color. It and The Daily Oklahoman.

And when The A-J papers sold to Morris Communications and Bob Norris came here as general manager and vice president, we suddenly found we had something in common. He earlier in his career had worked for Mr. Poynter for three years.

FOR THOSE acquainted with St. Pete, the mention of the paper's liberal outlook may come as a shock.

The paper is in the middle of a conservative readership. St. Pete and Tampa, of course, in addition to a burgeoning young and middle-age population, also have one of Florida's larger retiree groups.

But, while the St. Pete Times beats the drums on its editorial pages for its own idea of how things should be, in its news columns, it "plays it down the middle." Which is as it should be.

And if the paper has any "sacred cows"—VIPs or those so-called "untouchables"—then we can't imagine who it could be. No one and no issue is "too hot to handle." The paper seeks better than average newsmen and because of its unique setup can afford what it costs.

"Most newspapers," he wrote, "overplay most deaths of newspaper people.

"Let's not do this in my case. A one-column head, no comment or a bunch of silly tributes. And it's a one-day story.

"You know, of course, there will be cremation, no funeral, or memorial service of any kind, no requests 'in lieu of flowers.' You might include that I have observed no one really likes to go to a funeral. I am trying to be considerate of my friends who might come to my funeral by having none."

The next day, there was a brief three-paragraph editorial tribute on the editorial page.

In his long career in journalism, Poynter worked on newspapers from Tokyo to Washington, D.C. His father, the late Paul Poynter, bought the St. Pete Times in 1912 and Nelson Poynter soon began his news career as a carrier and cub reporter.

"There never was any question what my career would be," he had said. "Journalism was in my blood from childhood." Ever seeking to improve and envisioning the vital role of the printed word, he said not so long ago: "We must have better newspapers if self-government is to survive..."

WE DO NOT mean to dwell on this one man's life unduly. But, to make a point.

He, in his way, had great influence on untold numbers of persons. He sought to discharge that opportunity and obligation in a fair and objective way.

Lubbock and this area has many men, who in their chosen fields of endeavor, are cut in the mold of professional and public servants, and whose lives also touch untold numbers.

This summer, there have been several men who have died whose work in their respective business and educational fields have helped make this city and the South Plains, indeed all of Texas and the nation, a better place in which to live.

All too often, in carping at those in business, in education, yes, even in public service, we overlook the many whose daily lives, work, dedication make it easier for the rest of us. May God bless them all...

OUR LANGUAGE MAN reports that the "cellar" as in "salt cellar" come from the old French word "saliere," a small vessel to hold salt.

Nothing spectacular about that. The word is losing ground. More and more people are just calling that thing a shaker.

Q. "What's the quickest way to get a bug out of your ear?"

A. Shine a flashlight in it. Or so a medico contends.

The chemical painkillers and stimulants used by dentists don't mix at all with the key ingredient in marijuana. Cross reaction of the two tends to make the blood pressure drop. So if you're going to the dentist, young fellow, keep off the grass.

REASSIGNED — David Toschi, chief investigator of the Zodiac murders in San Francisco, has been reassigned from the homicide division to the pawn shop detail for forging flattering letters about his work and says he is suspected of faking another letter from the Zodiac killer himself. Toschi, seen in this 1976 photo, has been on the case since 1969. San Francisco Police Chief Charles Gain announced the reassignment Monday, but refused to comment on whether Inspector Toschi was suspected of being the author of the latest letter from the killer. Zodiac Murders Investigator Shifted

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In the latest twist in one of the nation's most bizarre murder cases, the chief Zodiac investigator has been reassigned for forging flattering letters about his work and says he is suspected of faking another letter from the killer himself.

Police Chief Charles Gain announced Monday that Inspector David Toschi had been reassigned from the homicide squad to the pawn shop detail. Gain said he acted after Toschi admitted he had written letters praising himself, signed them with fictitious names and sent them to a newspaper writer.

Toschi, 47, had worked since 1969 on the hunt for the Zodiac, who in a series of ghoulish letters to newspapers, claimed he killed as many as 37 persons since 1966. The Zodiac had not been heard from since 1974, until the San Francisco Chronicle received a letter purportedly from him on April 24.

Before announcing Toschi's reassignment, Gain had said that the most recent Zodiac letter may actually have been written by someone else. He later refused to comment on whether Toschi was suspected of being that person.

Toschi, contacted at his home Monday night, acknowledged writing the praising letters to Armistead Maupin, author of a popular serialized fiction story published by the San Francisco Chronicle in which Toschi was the model for a character.

But Toschi said any suggestion that he faked the latest Zodiac letter was "absolutely absurd."

He said he was shocked when his superiors told him his handwriting had been secretly compared to the handwriting in the supposed Zodiac letter to the Chronicle.

"I wrote no Zodiac letter," he said. "I don't need another letter. It only brings me tons of extra work."

Handwriting experts, meanwhile, disagreed on the authenticity of the latest Zodiac letter. Robert Prouty, chief of the questioned-documents section of the state Bureau of Criminal Identification, said he didn't think it was genuine.

"Several letter characteristics, in my opinion, did not match the style used by Zodiac," he said. "The slant of some letters was not consistent with previous Zodiac communications."

But Sherwood Morrill, who formerly filled the post now held by Prouty, said, "there is no question in my mind" that the letter was genuine.

"I've heard they're accusing Toschi of writing them. If Toschi wrote the last one, he's the Zodiac. He (Zodiac) wrote them all."

The April letter said: "This is Zodiac speaking. I am back with you." The letter was signed with its usual circle with a cross through it. There have been no killings attributed to or claimed by the Zodiac since the letter.

Fake Bomb Terrorizes Hostages

NEW YORK (AP) — Police say the "hand grenade" used by a Polish immigrant to terrorize four hostages was a fake, stamped on the inside with the inspirational message on the Statue of Liberty: "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses..."

"We found no explosives at all," said Sgt. Hugh McGowan, chief of the police bomb squad, who opened the grenade-like device Tuesday at the department's remote range in the Bronx.

For nine hours Monday, Fraczek held four hostages in an office in a tower of the World Trade Center, threatening to detonate the grenade and a satchel he said contained 80 pounds of dynamite. The "dynamite" turned out to be a bundle of black bread, a Polish flag, a Polish bible and a bread knife, police said.

The disturbance caused the evacuation of about 4,000 people from 17 floors of the 110-story Tower 2 of the trade center. Thousands more milled about at the foot of the skyscraper.

Fraczek was ultimately overpowered by his hostages, who included a referee of the state Compensation Board, and arrested by police on charges of kidnapping and possession of a weapon, the bread knife.

McGowan said the grenade-like canister contained a flattened soft drink can which had been stamped with the verse from the base of Miss Liberty and with the first two verses of "America, America."

Similar Names 'Spark' Lawsuit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two anti-smoking groups, presumably united in their hatred of burning tobacco, may become locked in court battle over the similarity of tiheir names. Get ready for ASH v. NASH.

The aggrieved group is Action on Smoking and Health, a 10-year-old outfit claiming to be "the only national nonprofit organization devoted solely to the problems of smoking and health and nonsmoker's rights."

ASH filed suit in U.S. District Court against NASH — the National Association for Smoking and Health, Inc. — claiming trademark infringement, unfair competition and common law deceit.

ASH says it's been busy for a decade distributing newsletters, brochures, fundraising materials, special "ASH reports" on smoking-related topics — when along came NASH in 1975.

The suit says NASH is peddling an "anti-smoking spray can" and anti-smoker sentiments. ASH is especially disturbed on the latter, pointing out that it is against the noxious habit, not the smoker behind the cigarette.

The 11-page complaint is full of complications. It seems that ASH learned that NASH was to be sold but it apparently can't find the group. The complaint says NASH's last known address was on East Jewell Avenue in Denver.

ASH is concerned that its reputation "as a source of expert advice and reliable information in the field of smoking and health and nonsmokers' rights" might vanish like a puff of smoke through confusion with the more direct-action NASH.

According to the suit, NASH's anti-smoker spray "in essence directed the user to spray a smoker and-or the smoker's smoking material with the contents of the can." The spray sells for $4.95 a can with discounts for bulk purchases.

The interest of ASH in NASH was aroused when people started sending in a nationally syndicated column praising Paul Wright as "a genuine American hero." Wright is identified as the founder, executive director and principal incorporator of NASH.

The columnist, Bob Greene, quotes Wright as saying, "when you see someone smoking in a public place, ask him politely to put his cigarette out. If he refuses spray the hell out of him."

ASH says people were confused and uncertain on whether NASH really was ASH.

It also felt wounded by a flyer promoting Wright as "the only speaker in the nation today talking on this most timely and urgent topic." The topic, of course, is smoking.

And, ASH claims, NASH intentionally used marks designed to look as if they originated with ASH.

The federal court is asked to put a stop to all these actions and to assess damages for injury.

It also is asked to seize "all profits received from the sale of goods or services" identified as coming from National Association on (or for) Smoking and Health or NASH."

Neither Wright nor anyone else with NASH could be reached for comment.

Black Schools Get Worst

HOUSTON (AP) — A recent study by a Houston black community organization charges incompetent white teachers are sent to predominantly black schools.

But, a spokesman for the Houston Federation of Teachers has denied the accusations and says such a study is undermining the profession and is demoralizing to students.

Richard Shaw, president of the teacher group, said the Houston Area Urban League is wrong in blaming inexperienced white teachers at inner-city schools for any educational deficiencies.

The study contends there is a wide discrepancy between the caliber of education at predominantly black or brown schools and that at integrated or predominantly white schools.

J. Don Boney Jr., director of the league's education department, says the study shows the Singleton ratio, which mandates the staffing of each school on the district-wide teacher racial mix, "has been the primary mechanism for transferring highly qualified black teachers from predominantly black schools."

The federal court-ordered Singleton ratio has led to assigning "incompetent, inexperienced and emotionally unstable white teachers to black schools," Boney said.

Shaw contends that, under the ratio, "inexperienced teachers tend to be placed in inner-city schools, but you can't draw the conclusion by looking at their years of experience that they are doing a poor job."

Other studies show, however, teachers with fewer years of experience "are actually more effective with minority students than teachers with many years experience," Shaw said.

PEOPLE PLACES THINGS

'Little Con Artist' Visits Hollywood On His Looks

NEW YORK (AP) — Eleven-year-old Derrick Hartfield always wanted to see the movie stars, and he figured the place to see them was Hollywood. So he went, without a plane ticket or a dollar in his pocket.

The 4-foot-8, 90-pound boy — in his mother's words, "a little con artist" — is back in Queens, after an odyssey that took him across country and back.

He flew to Los Angeles, hitched a ride on a bus, walked around town "looking for movie stars," and finally was caught when a hotel clerk suspected that the T-shirted youth could not pay for a room.

"I knew I did something wrong," Derrick said, safe at home. "But it was fun."

On Saturday, Derrick walked from his home not far from Kennedy Airport to the airport. He said he had memorized a schedule of flights to Los Angeles the day before, when his family saw his grandmother off on vacation in Jamaica.

Once in the airport, Derrick said he walked around the metal detector "and got behind a man with a big bag," boarding American Airlines Flight 5 to Los Angeles. Only once during the flight did an attendant approach him for a ticket, but the attendant had to return to her seat upon takeoff and never bothered him again.

"Our people usually are very alert to that sort of thing," said an airline spokesman. "This is very unusual."

In Los Angeles, the boy said, he told flight attendants that he would be picked up by his grandmother. They took him to an office to wait for her and 15 minutes later — when they left him alone — Derrick "snuck out" into the California sunshine.

He climbed onto a bus, and told the driver he had no money but he wanted to "go to Hollywood to see the movie stars." The driver gave him a transfer to a Hollywood bus, which carried him to Tinseltown.

He wasn't impressed.

"I didn't see any stars. I thought they would be walking all over the place."

The end of the trip came when Derrick tried to check into the Holiday Inn. The clerk called the police.

American Airlines agreed to pay the boy's passage home, where his worried mother had reported him missing Saturday night.

Although he found that Hollywood wasn't littered with stars of the silver screen, he did meet one celebrity: Loretta Swit, of television's M.A.S.H., was on the flight home.

"She gave me her autograph," said the young traveller. "It's good to be back in New York, though."

Bank Robbed With Chickens

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Police were searching Tuesday for two men who used roasted chickens to rob a Mexico City bank.

The two men got about $87,000 in the robbery at the Small Business Bank (Banco Del Pequeno Comercio) in suburban Naucalpan.

Police said the pair told bank employees they had a bomb in a brown paper bag which they would explode if not given money from the vault. They left the bag behind when they fled.

The police bomb squad said the bag contained two roasted chickens.

Guards Get 'Field Trip'

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Six young would-be burglars picked the wrong time and the wrong place.

At the Elm Park Community School Monday night, Police Capt. James E. Sullivan was holding the last session in a class of 18 school security guard trainees.

When the class heard the sound of glass being smashed, Sullivan dispatched his students. The class surprised six youngsters who ran in several directions.

Five of the intruders, all juveniles, were caught and charged with malicious destruction of two school glass doors, valued at $700.

"The group all passed with flying colors the practical application portion of the 10-week course last night," Sullivan said Tuesday.

'Walking Tall' Star Arrested

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Bo Svenson, star of the movie "Part Two Walking Tall," was arrested in a brushy area near his Brentwood home for pointing a loaded rifle at a 15-year-old hiker and at a police officer, officials said Tuesday.

The 37-year-old actor who played the role of Sheriff Buford Pusser in the film, was booked Monday night for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon, police Sgt. Ray Tetzlaff said.

Svenson, who said he had been hunting a coyote that killed his pet cats, could face additional charges for possessing a loaded weapon within city limits, said Lt. Tim Wapato.

Svenson has been released on $1,000 bail.

Clothes Dealer-Thief Caught

NEW ULM, Minn. (UPI) — For several years, residents of this community of 15,000 wondered how Meine Clothing could consistently sell for less than Leuthold-Jensen next door.

Police have a theory. They have arrested Fred Meine Jr., owner of Meine clothing, and charged him with possession of stolen merchandise — stolen from Leuthold-Jensen.

During the past several years, authorities said, Meine removed clothing valued at $50,000 from Leuthold-Jensen through a secret panel in the basement between the two stores.

Bank Almost Made Off With

GAYLORD, Mich. (AP) — State police got a real surprise when they responded to a burglar alarm from the Gaylord State Bank — a moving bank.

Troopers said a construction crew building a permanent bank building was taking the bank's temporary housing away, but they forgot to disconnect the bank's alarm system.

WW I Veteran Awarded Silver Star

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — In July 1918, Benjamin Packer was an Army private first class, dodging shrapnel in a battle at Baalon, France. Sixty years later, Parker, 79, was awarded the Silver Star — this nation's third-highest military decoration.

"I was thrilled when I got the medal," said Packer, whose wife pinned the decoration on his Veterans of World War I hat Monday night.

Packer, an ammunition carrier, recalled the incident leading to the award: "I got to the front just before dawn. I saw five guys lying there covered with blood. There was shrapnel bombs exploding all around. I was lucky I didn't get killed," he said.

He said he and another ammunition carrier lifted the wounded soldiers onto their truck and drove them to a medical tent a half of mile away. One died en route, but the others survived, he said.

"People always say I should have gotten their names, but I never did," he said. "They were bleeding so bad, there wasn't time."

Council Makes Own Muzak

MILTON-FREEWATER, Ore. (AP) — You can get an earful of the municipal code when you go to Milton Freewater City Council meetings.

But you have to listen carefully.

To meet a state law that revised city ordnances be read in public, the council tape recorded its entire new code. The recording, which lasts for 5½ hours, has been played as background to regular council sessions for two weeks.

And since the new code must have two public readings, the council decided to speed up the recording by 15 percent. One observer said the tape sounded like chattering chipmunks but that it could be understood.

Demos Continue Fight Against GOP Tax Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation is worse than expected and economic growth is disappointing, but there is no basis for Republican contentions that a one-third cut in income tax rates would improve the situation, the House Budget Committee was told Tuesday.

The GOP proposal for such a tax cut, spread over three years, has been adopted by national Republican leaders as a major campaign issue.

President Carter and Democratic leaders in Congress favor a smaller tax reduction, but there have been signs that they fear defections among Democrats who must soon campaign for re-election against the GOP proposal.

Meanwhile, Carter's effort to bring a tax cut bill to the House floor without a reduction in the tax on capital gains, appeared close to failure. Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., said he intends to reconvene the House Ways and Means Committee, which he heads, to work on taxes next week. Ullman said a measure involving some easing of the capital gains tax will be before the panel.

The House Budget Committee, opening hearings Tuesday as it prepared to draft spending ceilings and revenue floors for the year starting Oct. 1, heard assessments that inflation continues to be worse than expected and that economic growth is slow. But committee members were told the country does not seem likely to slide into recession.

Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, and Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, both testified they know of no solid economic evidence to support Republican claims that a one-third tax cut would pay for itself by boosting the economy and federal revenues.

Bolling said testimony given his committee, including that of the principal academic framer of the Kemp-Roth proposal, left him unconvinced that it would "produce a veritable bonanza of jobs and increased economic output."

He said comparisons with the growth that followed a big tax cut in the 1960s are misleading because conditions have changed and "the evidence of history does not support the argument that taxes have reduced economic incentive to the point that growth is inhibited."

Mrs. Rivlin said evidence available to the Congressional Budget Office tends to support the conventional view that the Kemp-Roth proposal would greatly increase the federal deficit and be highly inflationary, without producing enough additional revenue to be self-financing.

Bolling said he would not object to a tax reduction for one year equivalent to the first stage of the Kemp-Roth plan, which he said would fall within the $15 billion-$25 billion range Carter and congressional tax writers have been discussing.

But he said Congress should not bind the government to further reductions in future years too remote for accurate economic forecasting.

Mrs. Rivlin told the Budget Committee that her office expects a moderate growth rate of 3.5 percent during 1978, slowing next year by 0.5 percent. But she said inflation of 6.8 percent to 7.8 percent for 1978 also is expected, with continued price rises in 1979. But she said the conditions for a true recession do not appear to be present, assuming monetary policy is not too tight.

Barry P. Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, testified that the 1978 inflation rate has worsened to about seven percent.

"That certainly is not something that gladdens, the heart," he said, "but neither is it cause for panic."

Bosworth voiced anew his oft-stated criticism of some large labor unions whose wage gains have exceeded the average increase of seven percent during the past two years. He said those unions, which he did not name, "must begin to moderate their gains and bring them back in line with the seven percent average of the rest of the economy."

A spokesman for the council, Tom Joyce, said later that Bosworth did not intend to establish a seven percent target for wage increases. Joyce said asking large unions to begin taking steps to keep wage hikes "in line with" the average was not the same as asking them to hold to a rigid seven percent maximum.

Meanwhile, Ullman was quoted as saying the Carter administration has made no progress in producing a compromise that would break the stalemate on tax legislation in his committee.

A major controversy in the committee has been over capital gains. Carter wants such taxes increased. Ullman was quoted by participants at a private breakfast session with reporters as saying he would urge Carter to back off from absolute opposition to any easing of capital gains taxation.

The administration has been trying to persuade a majority of the committee to approve a bill for a $15 billion tax reduction, but reportedly has been unable to muster enough Democratic support.

Ullman had said earlier he would suspend committee sessions until mid-July to give the administration time to make its case to members individually. After a meeting Tuesday with Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, he said he feels the administration has not succeeded and that the committee should resume work on a tax bill of its own making.

Blumenthal said, however, he will keep trying to reach a compromise until he has to leave later this week for the economic summit conference in Bonn, West Germany, scheduled Sunday and Monday.

Earlier, Blumenthal testified before a Senate panel and then told reporters that the administration has not changed its position on a tax measure. He hinted, however, that he would be willing to look at a minimum capital gains tax relief proposal, such as one that would protect homeowners from heavy taxes if they sold residences whose value had been inflated.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said at a news conference that Carter had brought up tax legislation at a breakfast meeting with congressional leaders, but did not discuss it in detail.

He said he assured the president "we will come up with something."

Closer Watch Needed

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Robert O. Aller, coordinator for Skylab operations, said Tuesday the 85-ton satellite will need closer attention to keep it in a proper attitude and keep it from crashing back to Earth before it can be boosted into higher orbit.

Aller said Skylab, which temporarily lost power in one of two sets of batteries on Saturday, apparently is more sensitive to changing conditions than anticipated and will have to be monitored more closely.

Despite the power loss, Aller said he is confident no major damage occurred and scientists will be able to correct problems aboard the craft within a few days.

The power loss caused gyroscopes and a computer aboard the craft to stop. Scientists at the Johnson Space Center have been working around the clock to recharge the batteries and re-program the computer.

Scientists hope to regain control of the craft this week and return it to a more favorable attitude position.

Alleged Murderer Of Family In Jail, Charges To Be Filed

WINNIE (AP) — Sheriff R.E. Culbertson said Tuesday five counts of capital murder will be filed in Jefferson County this week against Ovide Joseph Dugas Jr. in connection with the kidnap-slayings of five of his former in-laws.

"He's in custody and has been charged with five counts of aggravated kidnapping," Culbertson said. "He's not going to be able to make bond, so we're going to make sure we tie all our loose ends together in the case before we file charges."

Dugas, a 32-year-old refinery worker, is being held in neighboring Chambers County jail on $500,000 bond.

Culbertson said revenge over a broken marriage apparently led to the killings of Bishop Phillips, 64; his wife Ester, 66; son Elmer, 31; Elmer's wife, Martha, 34; and their son, Jason, 4.

Dugas was once married to Bishop and Ester Phillips' daughter, Mary, who authorities say has been located in Traverse City, Mich. Dugas apparently blamed the elder Phillips couple for the breakup of the four-year marriage that ended in divorce in 1975, Culberson said.

Sunday night Dugas led authorities to the bodies, buried in a 4-foot-deep grave off Farm Road 365 in Gilbert Woods near Fannett. All had been shot.

The gravesite was about 10 miles east of the modest frame house near Winnie from which the victims were abducted July 1. Elmer Phillips and his family had travelled from Woodward, Okla., to visit his parents.

Five counts of capital murder were filed Monday against Linda May Burnett of Nederland in connection with the slayings. She is being held in Jefferson County jail in Beaumont in lieu of $500,000 bond.

Culbertson said the 30-year-old mother of three has been an acquaintance of Dugas' since May.

A .45-caliber automatic pistol, converted to shoot .22-caliber shells and believed to have been used in the killings, has been found in Dugas' home in the Port Acres suburb of Port Arthur, according to Chambers County Sheriff Doil Pounds said. Another weapon, a .22-caliber rifle also believed to have been used in the killings, apparently was disassembled and its parts scattered throughout Chambers and Jefferson counties, he said.

Justice of the Peace Mary Dugat said the family had previously filed disturbance charges against Dugas and that he had undergone treatment at Beaumont Neurological Center in 1975.

Dugas and his wife reportedly had an argument in 1974 that resulted in Mrs. Dugas moving out of the couple's Port Acres home and taking her two children to her parents' home in Winnie, Judge Dugat said. Shortly thereafter Dugas broke into the house, she said and was charged with disorderly conduct, criminal mischief and assault, all misdemeanor charges.

Judge Dugat said Dugas had previously "brutalized" Mary Dugas and that when he broke into the Phillips' Winnie residence, he assaulted Ester Phillips, his mother-in-law.

She said she was uncertain about the disposition of those charges. At the recommendation of Dugas' attorney, Judge Dugat said, Dugas became an outpatient at the Neurological Center in Beaumont.

Pounds original complaint against Dugas said he told friends of angry feelings against the Phillipses and that he planned to kill them.

Dugas' brother, Richard Lee, said in a sworn statement to authorities that his brother told him July 4 he had kidnpped the family at gunpoint and taken them to a "prepared grave."

Richard Lee said his brother also claimed he "had bound the occupants of the residence, struck one of the occupants with a pistol and, in the company of an unknown female, transported Bishop Noel Phillips and the occupants of the residence to a prepared gravesite."

Funeral services for the family were held Tuesday in Winnie.

Make tracks to El Paso.

Enjoy a sunny two-nation vacation.

PEOPLE — PLACES — THINGS

'Little Con Artist' Visits Hollywood On His Looks

NEW YORK (AP) — Eleven-year-old Derrick Hartfield always wanted to see the movie stars, and he figured the place to see them was Hollywood. So he went, without a plane ticket or a dollar in his pocket.

The 4-foot-8, 90-pound boy — in his mother's words, "a little con artist" — is back in Queens, after an odyssey that took him across country and back.

He flew to Los Angeles, hitched a ride on a bus, walked around town "looking for movie stars," and finally was caught when a hotel clerk suspected that the T-shirted youth could not pay for a room.

"I knew I did something wrong," Derrick said, safe at home. "But it was fun."

On Saturday, Derrick walked from his home not far from Kennedy Airport to the airport. He said he had memorized a schedule of flights to Los Angeles the day before, when his family saw his grandmother off on vacation in Jamaica.

Once in the airport, Derrick said he walked around the metal detector "and got behind a man with a big bag," boarding American Airlines Flight 5 to Los Angeles. Only once during the flight did an attendant approach him for a ticket, but the attendant had to return to her seat upon takeoff and never bothered him again.

"Our people usually are very alert to that sort of thing," said an airline spokesman. "This is very unusual."

In Los Angeles, the boy said, he told flight attendants that he would be picked up by his grandmother. They took him to an office to wait for her and 15 minutes later — when they left him alone — Derrick "snuck out" into the California sunshine.

He climbed onto a bus, and told the driver he had no money but he wanted to "go to Hollywood to see the movie stars." The driver gave him a transfer to a Hollywood bus, which carried him to Tinseltown.

He wasn't impressed.

"I didn't see any stars. I thought they would be walking all over the place."

The end of the trip came when Derrick tried to check into the Holiday Inn. The clerk called the police.

American Airlines agreed to pay the boy's passage home, where his worried mother had reported him missing Saturday night.

Although he found that Hollywood wasn't littered with stars of the silver screen, he did meet one celebrity: Loretta Swit, of television's M.A.S.H., was on the flight home.

"She gave me her autograph," said the young traveller. "It's good to be back in New York, though."

Bank Robbed With Chickens

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Police were searching Tuesday for two men who used roasted chickens to rob a Mexico City bank.

The two men got about $87,000 in the robbery at the Small Business Bank (Banco Del Pequeno Comercio) in suburban Naucalpan.

Police said the pair told bank employees they had a bomb in a brown paper bag which they would explode if not given money from the vault. They left the bag behind when they fled.

The police bomb squad said the bag contained two roasted chickens.

Guards Get 'Field Trip'

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Six young would-be burglars picked the wrong time and the wrong place.

At the Elm Park Community School Monday night, Police Capt. James E. Sullivan was holding the last session in a class of 18 school security guard trainees.

When the class heard the sound of glass being smashed, Sullivan dispatched his students. The class surprised six youngsters who ran in several directions.

Five of the intruders, all juveniles, were caught and charged with malicious destruction of two school glass doors, valued at $700.

"The group all passed with flying colors the practical application portion of the 10-week course last night," Sullivan said Tuesday.

'Walking Tall' Star Arrested

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Bo Svenson, star of the movie "Part Two Walking Tall," was arrested in a brushy area near his Brentwood home for pointing a loaded rifle at a 15-year-old hiker and at a police officer, officials said Tuesday.

The 37-year-old actor who played the role of Sheriff Buford Pusser in the film, was booked Monday night for investigation of assault with a deadly weapon, police Sgt. Ray Tetzlaff said.

Svenson, who said he had been hunting a coyote that killed his pet cats, could face additional charges for possessing a loaded weapon within city limits, said Lt. Tim Wapato.

Svenson has been released on $1,000 bail.

Clothes Dealer-Thief Caught

NEW ULM, Minn. (UPI) — For several years, residents of this community of 15,000 wondered how Meine Clothing could consistently sell for less than Leuthold-Jensen next door.

Police have a theory. They have arrested Fred Meine Jr., owner of Meine clothing, and charged him with possession of stolen merchandise — stolen from Leuthold-Jensen.

During the past several years, authorities said, Meine removed clothing valued at $50,000 from Leuthold-Jensen through a secret panel in the basement between the two stores.

Bank Almost Made Off With

GAYLORD, Mich. (AP) — State police got a real surprise when they responded to a burglar alarm from the Gaylord State Bank — a moving bank.

Troopers said a construction crew building a permanent bank building was taking the bank's temporary housing away, but they forgot to disconnect the bank's alarm system.

WW I Veteran Awarded Silver Star

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — In July 1918, Benjamin Packer was an Army private first class, dodging shrapnel in a battle at Baalon, France. Sixty years later, Parker, 79, was awarded the Silver Star — this nation's third-highest military decoration.

"I was thrilled when I got the medal," said Packer, whose wife pinned the decoration on his Veterans of World War I hat Monday night.

Packer, an ammunition carrier, recalled the incident leading to the award: "I got to the front just before dawn. I saw five guys lying there covered with blood. There was shrapnel bombs exploding all around. I was lucky I didn't get killed," he said.

He said he and another ammunition carrier lifted the wounded soldiers onto their truck and drove them to a medical tent a half of mile away. One died en route, but the others survived, he said.

"People always say I should have gotten their names, but I never did," he said. "They were bleeding so bad, there wasn't time."

Council Makes Own Muzak

MILTON-FREEWATER, Ore. (AP) — You can get an earful of the municipal code when you go to Milton Freewater City Council meetings.

But you have to listen carefully.

To meet a state law that revised city ordnances be read in public, the council tape recorded its entire new code. The recording, which lasts for 5½ hours, has been played as background to regular council sessions for two weeks.

And since the new code must have two public readings, the council decided to speed up the recording by 15 percent. One observer said the tape sounded like chattering chipmunks but that it could be understood.

IT'S WET! — If the clouds offer no relief from 100-degree temperatures, then it is time to take matters into one's own hands and create some precipitation with a water hose. Such was the case on Monday for 10-year-old Lance Villers, Son of Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Villers of Abilene. (AP Laserphoto)

Demos Continue Fight Against GOP Tax Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation is worse than expected and economic growth is disappointing, but there is no basis for Republican contentions that a one-third cut in income tax rates would improve the situation, the House Budget Committee was told Tuesday.

The GOP proposal for such a tax cut, spread over three years, has been adopted by national Republican leaders as a major campaign issue.

President Carter and Democratic leaders in Congress favor a smaller tax reduction, but there have been signs that they fear defections among Democrats who must soon campaign for re-election against the GOP proposal.

Meanwhile, Carter's effort to bring a tax cut bill to the House floor without a reduction in the tax on capital gains, appeared close to failure. Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., said he intends to reconvene the House Ways and Means Committee, which he heads, to work on taxes next week. Ullman said a measure involving some easing of the capital gains tax will be before the panel.

The House Budget Committee, opening hearings Tuesday as it prepared to draft spending ceilings and revenue floors for the year starting Oct. 1, heard assessments that inflation continues to be worse than expected and that economic growth is slow. But committee members were told the country does not seem likely to slide into recession.

Alice M. Rivlin, director of the Congressional Budget Office, and Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, both testified they know of no solid economic evidence to support Republican claims that a one-third tax cut would pay for itself by boosting the economy and federal revenues.

Bolling said testimony given his committee, including that of the principal academic framer of the Kemp-Roth proposal, left him unconvinced that it would "produce a veritable bonanza of jobs and increased economic output."

He said comparisons with the growth that followed a big tax cut in the 1960s are misleading because conditions have changed and "the evidence of history does not support the argument that taxes have reduced economic incentive to the point that growth is inhibited."

Mrs. Rivlin said evidence available to the Congressional Budget Office tends to support the conventional view that the Kemp-Roth proposal would greatly increase the federal deficit and be highly inflationary, without producing enough additional revenue to be self-financing.

Bolling said he would not object to a tax reduction for one year equivalent to the first stage of the Kemp-Roth plan, which he said would fall within the $15 billion-$25 billion range Carter and congressional tax writers have been discussing.

But he said Congress should not bind the government to further reductions in future years too remote for accurate economic forecasting.

Mrs. Rivlin told the Budget Committee that her office expects a moderate growth rate of 3.5 percent during 1978, slowing next year by 0.5 percent. But she said inflation of 6.8 percent to 7.8 percent for 1978 also is expected, with continued price rises in 1979. But she said the conditions for a true recession do not appear to be present, assuming monetary policy is not too tight.

Barry P. Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, testified that the 1978 inflation rate has worsened to about seven percent.

"That certainly is not something that gladdens, the heart," he said, "but neither is it cause for panic."

Bosworth voiced anew his oft-stated criticism of some large labor unions whose wage gains have exceeded the average increase of seven percent during the past two years. He said those unions, which he did not name, "must begin to moderate their gains and bring them back in line with the seven percent average of the rest of the economy."

A spokesman for the council, Tom Joyce, said later that Bosworth did not intend to establish a seven percent target for wage increases. Joyce said asking large unions to begin taking steps to keep wage hikes "in line with" the average was not the same as asking them to hold to a rigid seven percent maximum.

Meanwhile, Ullman was quoted as saying the Carter administration has made no progress in producing a compromise that would break the stalemate on tax legislation in his committee.

A major controversy in the committee has been over capital gains. Carter wants such taxes increased. Ullman was quoted by participants at a private breakfast session with reporters as saying he would urge Carter to back off from absolute opposition to any easing of capital gains taxation.

The administration has been trying to persuade a majority of the committee to approve a bill for a $15 billion tax reduction, but reportedly has been unable to muster enough Democratic support.

Ullman had said earlier he would suspend committee sessions until mid-July to give the administration time to make its case to members individually. After a meeting Tuesday with Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, he said he feels the administration has not succeeded and that the committee should resume work on a tax bill of its own making.

Blumenthal said, however, he will keep trying to reach a compromise until he has to leave later this week for the economic summit conference in Bonn, West Germany, scheduled Sunday and Monday.

Earlier, Blumenthal testified before a Senate panel and then told reporters that the administration has not changed its position on a tax measure. He hinted, however, that he would be willing to look at a minimum capital gains tax relief proposal, such as one that would protect homeowners from heavy taxes if they sold residences whose value had been inflated.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said at a news conference that Carter had brought up tax legislation at a breakfast meeting with congressional leaders, but did not discuss it in detail.

He said he assured the president "we will come up with something."

Closer Watch Needed

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Robert O. Aller, coordinator for Skylab operations, said Tuesday the 85-ton satellite will need closer attention to keep it in a proper attitude and keep it from crashing back to Earth before it can be boosted into higher orbit.

Aller said Skylab, which temporarily lost power in one of two sets of batteries on Saturday, apparently is more sensitive to changing conditions than anticipated and will have to be monitored more closely.

Despite the power loss, Aller said he is confident no major damage occurred and scientists will be able to correct problems aboard the craft within a few days.

The power loss caused gyroscopes and a computer aboard the craft to stop. Scientists at the Johnson Space Center have been working around the clock to recharge the batteries and re-program the computer.

Scientists hope to regain control of the craft this week and return it to a more favorable attitude position.

Alleged Murderer Of Family In Jail, Charges To Be Filed

WINNIE (AP) — Sheriff R.E. Culbertson said Tuesday five counts of capital murder will be filed in Jefferson County this week against Ovide Joseph Dugas Jr. in connection with the kidnap-slayings of five of his former in-laws.

"He's in custody and has been charged with five counts of aggravated kidnapping," Culbertson said. "He's not going to be able to make bond, so we're going to make sure we tie all our loose ends together in the case before we file charges."

Dugas, a 32-year-old refinery worker, is being held in neighboring Chambers County jail on $500,000 bond.

Culbertson said revenge over a broken marriage apparently led to the killings of Bishop Phillips, 64; his wife Ester, 66; son Elmer, 31; Elmer's wife, Martha, 34; and their son, Jason, 4.

Dugas was once married to Bishop and Ester Phillips' daughter, Mary, who authorities say has been located in Traverse City, Mich. Dugas apparently blamed the elder Phillips couple for the breakup of the four-year marriage that ended in divorce in 1975, Culberson said.

Sunday night Dugas led authorities to the bodies, buried in a 4-foot-deep grave off Farm Road 365 in Gilbert Woods near Fannett. All had been shot.

The gravesite was about 10 miles east of the modest frame house near Winnie from which the victims were abducted July 1. Elmer Phillips and his family had travelled from Woodward, Okla., to visit his parents.

Five counts of capital murder were filed Monday against Linda May Burnett of Nederland in connection with the slayings. She is being held in Jefferson County jail in Beaumont in lieu of $500,000 bond.

Culbertson said the 30-year-old mother of three has been an acquaintance of Dugas' since May.

A .45-caliber automatic pistol, converted to shoot .22-caliber shells and believed to have been used in the killings, has been found in Dugas' home in the Port Acres suburb of Port Arthur, according to Chambers County Sheriff Doil Pounds said. Another weapon, a .22-caliber rifle also believed to have been used in the killings, apparently was disassembled and its parts scattered throughout Chambers and Jefferson counties, he said.

Justice of the Peace Mary Dugat said the family had previously filed disturbance charges against Dugas and that he had undergone treatment at Beaumont Neurological Center in 1975.

Dugas and his wife reportedly had an argument in 1974 that resulted in Mrs. Dugas moving out of the couple's Port Acres home and taking her two children to her parents' home in Winnie, Judge Dugat said. Shortly thereafter Dugas broke into the house, she said and was charged with disorderly conduct, criminal mischief and assault, all misdemeanor charges.

Judge Dugat said Dugas had previously "brutalized" Mary Dugas and that when he broke into the Phillips' Winnie residence, he assaulted Ester Phillips, his mother-in-law.

She said she was uncertain about the disposition of those charges. At the recommendation of Dugas' attorney, Judge Dugat said, Dugas became an outpatient at the Neurological Center in Beaumont.

Pounds original complaint against Dugas said he told friends of angry feelings against the Phillipses and that he planned to kill them.

Dugas' brother, Richard Lee, said in a sworn statement to authorities that his brother told him July 4 he had kidnpped the family at gunpoint and taken them to a "prepared grave."

Richard Lee said his brother also claimed he "had bound the occupants of the residence, struck one of the occupants with a pistol and, in the company of an unknown female, transported Bishop Noel Phillips and the occupants of the residence to a prepared gravesite."

Funeral services for the family were held Tuesday in Winnie.

Missile 'Shell Game' Suggested To Keep U.S. Defenses Viable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior Pentagon officials believe the United States could temporarily hide many of its long-range missiles by shuffling them from silo to silo in a "shell game" that would keep the Russians from knowing exactly where to aim an attack.

The "shell game" would be an interim measure designed to protect land-based Minuteman III missiles during the early 1980s and until the United States can develop a bigger, more powerful missile in the 1986-1987 period.

The interim system might cost about $10 billion, officials calculate. This would be about half the price of developing and producing a full new advanced force of mobile missiles.

Sources said the interim concept of shuffling the Minuteman III missiles from silo to silo would not upset strategic nuclear stability between the United States and Russia and, instead, would add to factors discouraging any Soviet surprise attack.

Sources said defense officials favor moving the 550 Minuteman III missiles, each armed with three nuclear warheads, from their present fixed positions in launch silos and placing them on trucks that would shuttle the weapons among clusters of holes, possibly 10 holes per missile.

This concept has been called a "shell game" because the Russians would have to guess where the missiles were hidden in order to be able to destroy them in a surprise first strike.

According to current thinking, the United States might dig as many as 5,000 additional concrete-lined holes, or shelters, and space them perhaps a mile or two apart in wide areas of North Dakota, Wyoming and Montana where Minuteman III launch bases are now located. Apparently, 450 single-warhead Minuteman missiles would be left where they are.

Officials believe they could complete about 1,000 of the new holes by the early 1980s, roughly the time many U.S. experts believe the Russians will achieve the technology to seriously threaten the Minuteman force as it is now deployed.

Minuteman III missiles will be armed with a new triple warhead, about twice as powerful as the present model. That would enhance U.S. ability to destroy Soviet command and control centers, but the warheads would not be capable of what is called a "disarming first strike" against Soviet land-based missiles.

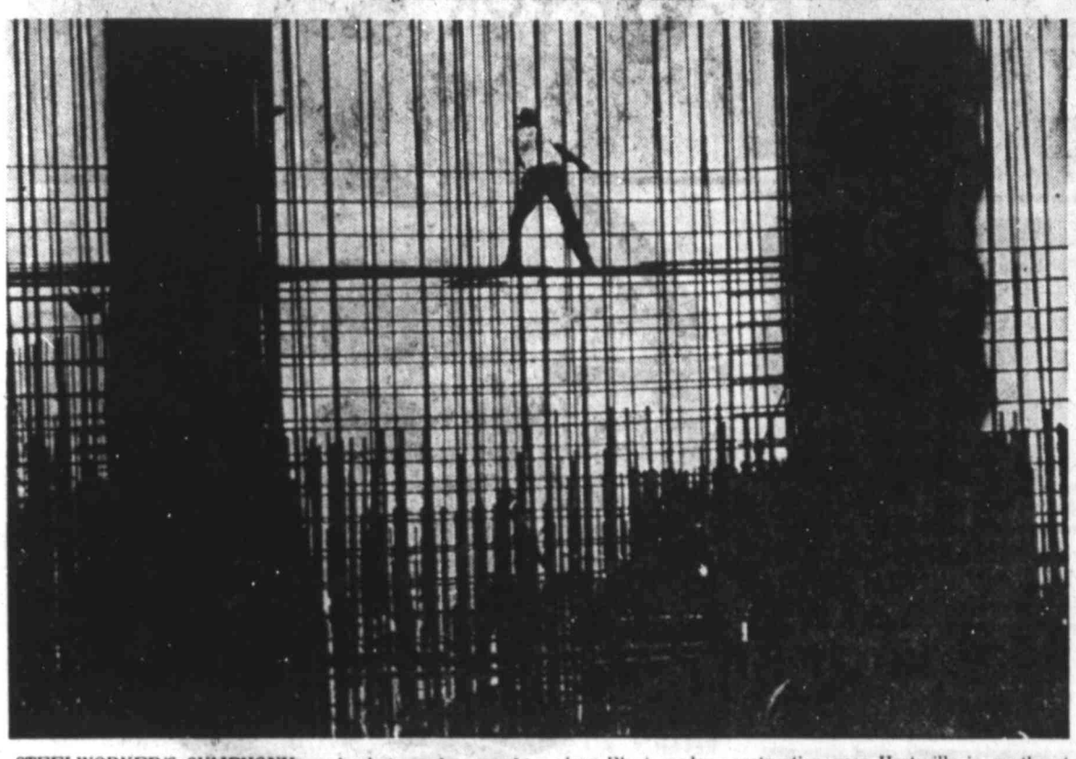

Meanwhile, unless the United States and the Soviet Union reach agreement banning moveable intercontinental missiles for the future, U.S. defense scientists are considering a more formidable and sophisticated mobile missile.

They are currently leaning toward an advanced land-based version of the Navy's Trident submarine-launched missile. It would be compatible with holes dug for the Minuteman III.

The Trident II, with a range of about 6,500 miles, would carry about six nuclear warheads and would be about as accurate as the Minuteman III. That system might cost about $20 billion, sources said, counting the $10 billion for the shelter holes.

This would seem to put the MX, the Air Force's candidate for the mobile land-based missile of the future, behind the Trident II in the competition. The MX would hurl about 10 huge warheads, and opponents in Congress might consider it a dangerous spur to the arms race. It also would cost more than the Trident II, officials said.

Final decisions still lie at least months in the future and may hinge on progress or lack of progress in the U.S.-Soviet negotiations on limiting strategic nuclear weapons.

CAMPAIGN RECALL — Tennessee Democratic senatorial candidate J.D. Lee stands outside federal court in Washington where he filed suit Tuesday against Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal to recover 164,000 $100 bill-like campaign hand bills. The Treasury confiscated the bills because they looked too much like the real thing. (AP Laserphoto)

'Money' Not Funny To Secret Service

WASHINGTON (AP) — J.D. Lee says he can't understand how anyone could mistake the fake $100 bills he had printed as a campaign gimmick for the real thing. After all, he says, the Lee picture on the Lee bill isn't anything like ol' Ben Franklin's on the genuine C-note.

Take, for instance, Franklin's hairline: it's receding while Lee has an enviable crop of hair. Franklin is unsmiling. Lee displays two rows of pearly whites. Franklin is wearing a fur collar on his coat and ruffles at the neck; running for office in Tennessee, Lee presumably wouldn't be caught dead in that.

Differences or no, it seems that Uncle Sam took a dim view of Lee's advertising. Secret Service agents swooped into his campaign headquarters in Nashville and Madisonville, Tenn., June 26 and July 5 and seized about 164,000 of the pseudo hundreds that Lee says cost him almost a penny apiece.

The campaign bills exhort clearly, "join the tax rebellion" — an admonition seldom made by the federal government.

Lee, running for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate, took a dim view of the Secret Service action. He sued Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal on Tuesday to get them back.

Lee didn't do it quietly. No, he called a press conference on the steps of the federal courthouse in Washington, made sure news people were notified, and hinted darkly at a plot by person or persons unknown to make him lose the race.

The Secret Service declined to discuss Lee's suit.

Lee said he had been told that a Nashville merchant accepted one of the campaign bills as a real one and that an automatic change machine paid off. "If that happened," he says somewhat indignantly, "that's the fault of the machine."

Lee's suit, filed in the federal district court, said the agents acted "without any warrant, court order or other official sanction."

Attached to the complaint was a 53-item list of ways in which his campaign bills differ from the $100 notes issued by the federal government.

For instance:

— "It would appear that Franklin has a weight problem (double chin) while Lee appears to be trim and fit ...

— "The real $100 bill states 'this note is legal tender for all debts, public and private' while the handout clearly states 'this bill is not legal tender.'"

— "The handout states 'paid for by Committee to Elect J.D. Lee, U.S. Senator ...'

And then, the clincher:

"The real $100 bill is slipping in value whereas the 'join the tax rebellion' slip has never had any value."

Informants Get Officer Out Of Jail

CHICAGO (AP) — A former drug addict and his wife stepped from the shadows of the drug underworld to secure the release from jail of their friend — a narcotics detective.

WARRER

Detective Bruce Warrer had spent six days in jail rather than reveal the names of the couple, whom he had used as informants in a drug arrest, last December.

Warrer had arrested two men on charges of possession of one-third pound of heroin; one-half pound of cocaine and one-quarter pound of PCP or angel dust.

The Cook County state's attorney said it couldn't prosecute the case if Warrer didn't reveal the names of the informant or the witness. Judge Louis B. Garippo of Circuit Court threatened Warrer with jail for contempt of court.

Warrer wouldn't bend. He told a reporter:

"My source told me 'we've known you for a long time. You've helped us get out, helped us get straight. We'd just as soon you gave our names. Don't go to jail for us. We'll just run.'"

But he refused to give their names to a grand jury, saying, "I have no other alternative to protect them."

Prosecutor Thomas Burnham responded: "He is seriously imperiling our chances of prosecution." And Judge Garippo ordered Warrer jailed.

He spent six days in jail before the informant and his wife — still not identified publicly — came and talked to Burnham.

Garippo released Warrer from jail Monday.

Warrer said he was glad to be out of jail, but added that he was prepared to stay indefinitely if necessary.

Prosecutors have promised to arrange for the informants to start a new life under assumed names.

World's First 'Test Tube' Birth To Come By Caesarian Section

LONDON (AP) — A British woman is expected in two or three weeks to give birth by Caesarian section to what experts believe will be the world's first living "test tube baby," her gynecologist said Tuesday.

The woman, identified only as Mrs. A., became pregnant from a laboratory experiment after nine childless years of marriage during which a defect in her fallopian tubes prevented her from conceiving.

Two British specialists implanted an egg from Mrs. A. in her womb four days after it had been fertilized in a test tube by her husband's sperm.

Dr. Patrick Steptoe, 65, a gynecologist, and Dr. Robert Edwards, 52, a Cambridge University physiologist, have spent more than a decade trying to bring a test tube baby to life.

"It must be recognized that in the weeks ahead an atmosphere of total calm is vital to the well-being of the mother and her child-to-be," Steptoe said in a statement issued Tuesday through the syndication service of Associated Newspapers Ltd., publishers of the Daily Mail and London Evening News.

"Of course, we also recognize that, because of the unique nature of this forthcoming birth, there is enormous public interest."

The statement said Steptoe and Edwards advised the couple to "make a special arrangement" with an international agency to relieve pressure on them and also "to secure a financial future for their child" and they made the arrangement for a fee with Associated Newspapers Ltd.

The doctors's technique aims to help women who cannot conceive because of an obstruction in the fallopian tubes which carry eggs from the ovaries to the uterus.

Medical and genetics research authorities in Britain say the international medical community believes no test tube baby has ever been born, although there have been reports of test tube conceptions which failed during pregnancy.

No proof has been offered to substantiate other claims that three test tube babies are alive in Europe. The report is believed groundless, said David Sanders, a spokesman for the British government's Medical Research Council.

Mrs. A. is believed to be 32 years old and married to a railroad man in his late 30s. Their identity is being withheld for ethical reasons.

The woman is now in the M3 maternity ward at Oldham and District General Infirmary at Oldham, about 190 miles northwest of London.

The British newspaper syndicate chosen by the couple to tell their story for a fee issued Tuesday's statement in which gynecologist Steptoe urged the news media not to put any pressure on his patient as she awaits the birth.

He said all announcements concerning the birth would be made through the news syndicate, which declined to reveal the amount of money the couple will receive for publication rights.

Mrs. A. reportedly will give birth by Caesarian section in the publicly-funded National Health Service hospital and is confident that she at last will have a baby after years of disappointments.

Various sources provided information which indicates that during their 12 years of research Edwards and Steptoe found they could fertilize female eggs with male sperm in the laboratory — in a "test tube" which is in fact a sophisticated and complex piece of glassware.

Women who previously volunteered to try the technique reportedly became pregnant, but the pregnancies did not continue the full nine-months cycle.

Many questions must remain unanswered, medical authorities said, until Steptoe and Edwards publish details of their research in the medical press.

Sanders said there is no single authority on the existence of a live test tube baby. "But the general feeling among the medical community is that there are none," the Medical Research Council spokesman said.

Professor Robert Williamson, professor of biochemistry at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School in London and an expert on genetics, said:

"To the best of my knowledge if this baby is born it will be the first time infertility has been successfully treated in this fashion."

Steptoe and Edwards have aroused controversy by their experiments, which raised questions about the possibilities which could lead to a test tube breed of man.

Steptoe has responded to critics by saying: "All I want is to help mothers whose child-bearing mechanism is slightly faulty."

The central ethical committee of the British Medical Association met in special session last week to endorse the experiment.

Dr. John Dawson, secretary of the committee, told reporters: "If Mr. Steptoe has succeeded, it will be a valuable addition to the treatment for infertile women.

"There is no problem about the legitimacy of the child, and providing he is acting in the best interests of the mother and child, we can have no objection."

Guerrillas Fire On Rhodesian Convoy

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas raked a military-escorted civilian convoy with gunfire Tuesday, reportedly killing one person and injuring 11, the military said.

A military spokesman in Salisbury declined to give details of the attack. The death and the injuries could not be confirmed.

The attack came as the convoy wound its way toward Karoi, a farming community 140 miles north of Salisbury, from the northwest resort of Kariba. It came on the final day of four-day holiday weekend called "Rhodes and Founders."

The annual holiday honors Cecil John Rhodes, the British entrepeneur who founded the first white settlement in Rhodesia nearly 90 years ago and first white pioneers.

Convoys were introduced last March on roads from Kariba, a small border fishing village and tourist resort located just two miles across the Kariba dam from Zambia.

As the six-year-old war by the guerrillas has escalated, protected convoys have been introduced on all but two of the country's major roads.

Renter Apparently Strips Residence Of Furniture

A Lubbock renter apparently took $2,000 worth of furniture from a 47th Place residence, according to the owner of the home.

Maude James told police that when she checked the home at 1910 47th Place, she found all furnishings gone, including the stove, refrigerator, and bedroom, living room and dining room suits.

Burglars who broke into an office building late Monday or early Tuesday made off with more than $700 worth of goods from two offices and caused about $300 worth of damage to the door they pried to gain entry to the structure, according to reports.

Bill Cox said a $220 calculator was taken from his office and Harold Douglas listed as missing a $200 adding machine and a $300 typewriter.

Mike Bridges said burglars took $900 worth of property from his 1311 48th St. home. He listed as missing water skiing equipment, jewelry and a cassette tape deck.

A stereo system and jewelry, altogether valued at $814, also was taken from Luther L. Bosquez' 2603 Bates St., rear, home, according to reports. Bosquez said the burglars kicked in the back door of his residence to get to the goods.

Fred E. Plank said someone took $800 worth of farm equipment from the alley behind his home at 3816 28th St. He told police the four pieces of equipment had been chained together.

Armando Hernandez said whoever pried a window in his 2320 18th St., rear, home Monday evening made off with a $400 television set.

Robert M. Phillips, manager of an apartment building at 409 University Ave., told police that whoever pried the cash boxes from three dryers in the complex's laundry room got only about $1.50.

Phillips said he had emptied the coin boxes late Monday before the burglary occurred, but that whoever took the money caused about $400 damage to two of the machines.

Winnie Blacknell said two television sets, a clock and a rifle were taken from her 3615 E. 15th Place home, but she did not estimate the value of the lost goods.

An Alabama man who spent Monday night in a motel at 608 Idalou Road told police he awoke Tuesday to find $250 worth of property missing from his car. Ron G. Harris said a camera, work clothes, cookware and plumbing tools were taken from the vehicle.

Charles A. Udell said $150 worth of tools were taken from his car while it was parked in front of his home at 2304 5th St., No. 105.

Car burglars also got a $60 pistol and four 8-track tapes from Bryant W. Bowles' vehicle at 810 N. University Ave., according to reports. Bowles said the burglars broke the front left door glass of the vehicle to get to the goods.

A 16-year-old Lubbock youth was arrested Monday on suspicion of stealing $3,500 worth of turquoise jewelry from the Texas Tech University Museum.

After Lubbock police got a call from Tech authorities, they went to the place of employment, and later, to the home of the named suspect.

Reports indicated officers from the two police agencies recovered five pieces of the allegedly stolen goods at the residence. Museum officials said 21 items, including several bracelets, rings and necklaces, were missing from their inventory.

The boy was turned over to juvenile authorities late Monday.

In recently reported break-ins, Jay Russell Addington of 1629 16th St., No. 329, said whoever pried his door Monday made off with a rifle, pistol and knife. Police were given the name of a suspect.

A Johnson House Motel employee discovered a vending machine burglary at the 4801 Ave. Q business Monday.

According to reports, $165 in change was taken after the cigarette machine was pried.

According to the victim, the stranger entered the store about 9 p.m. asking for change for a $100 bill. Although the attendant did not have enough cash in the register for the transaction, she reportedly offered to do the favor with her own money from her purse.

About 15 minutes later, reports showed, the suspect returned and, as the clerk was waiting on a customer, grabbed the employee's pocketbook and ran west from the scene.

Girl Gets Five Years For Armed Robbery

A jury — which earlier had taken only three minutes to find 17-year-old Stacy Staggs guilty of aggravated robbery — Tuesday assessed her five years in prison.

The panel in Judge William R. Shaver's 140th District Court did so after an emotional plea for probation by defense attorney Mary Anne Wiley and a vehement retort by prosecutor Cindy Miller.

Miss Staggs — convicted of taking part in the April 27 shotgun holdup of the Imperial 400 Motel at 910 Ave. Q — became 17 on March 16 of this year, and her age was stressed by Miss Wiley in final arguments.

"Her family is here. She is not an abandoned child. And she is a child, ladies and gentlemen," Miss Wiley stated.

Referring to the taffy-haired, Brownfield teenager as a young lady who had made a bad mistake, the defense lawyer pleaded with jurors not to deprive her of hope.

"We are not dealing with some terrorist. We're dealing with someone who messed up her life badly.

"Let her grow up — don't turn her into a criminal," Miss Wiley pleaded.

Mrs. Miller, prosecuting the case with Asst. Dist. Atty. Bonner Smith, retorted angrily that the defendant had turned herself into a criminal.

"It is time to make sure that another of your neighbors doesn't have to look down the barrel of a shotgun," Mrs. Miller argued.

Calling Miss Staggs a "self-professed Bonnie and Clyde," Mrs. Miller requested penitentiary time.

The seven-man, five-woman jury deliberated about an hour and 20 minutes before returning the five-year verdict.

Evidence during the two-day trial indicated a young man and woman entered the Avenue Q motel about 10 p.m. April 27. The man reportedly pulled a sawed-off shotgun and announced the holdup, while attendant Larry Anderson said the woman then seized cash.

Anderson identified Miss Staggs as the female bandit.

Other evidence marshaled by the state included accounts by police officers, who identified Miss Staggs as an occupant of a vehicle stopped about 11:30 p.m. near 34th Street and the Brownfield Highway.

Police testified that a sawed-off shotgun and a pistol were found inside the vehicle. Anderson testified that the female robber had taken a pistol which belonged to him during the heist.

Prosecutors climaxed the case by introducing a statement purportedly signed by the defendant one day after the holdup in which she admitted taking part in the crime.

Police Det. Randy Ward, who took the statement, testified that Miss Staggs seemed calm during the interview.

"She made references to feeling like Bonnie and Clyde..." the detective stated.

The shotgun found in the vehicle was found to be inoperative, according to police.

The male apprehended in connection with the case was 16 years old.

Hospital Receives Body Scanner To Aid Therapy

A total body scanner, a diagnostic X-ray device used in the treatment of cancer, was added Tuesday to the radiology department at Methodist Hospital.

The $700,000 scanner manufactured by General Electric's Medical Systems Division will be ready for use within four weeks.

"The scanner will be of great diagnostic benefit to our patients," said George M. Brewer, president of Methodist Hospital. "It adds the most sophisticated, new diagnostic equipment to the family of methods now in use."

Methodist Hospital will need no new facilities to house the scanner and its control room.

The computerized tomographic scanner uses a very low dose of radiation to take cross-sectional pictures of the body.

"The scans will enable physicians to locate benign or malignant growths when they are small, at a stage when they can be treated most effectively. These small growths might not have been detectable by previously used diagnostic methods," said Dr. Charles Votava, radiation therapist.

The full body scanner also can locate cysts, blood clots and aneurysms, showing the results of the scan on a television monitor.

'Bird' Awards Planned For Government Waste

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texas House members said Tuesday they are going to make periodic awards similar to the tongue-in-cheek Golden Fleece Awards made by Sen. William Proxmire for wasteful federal government spending.

Reps. Ben Grant, D-Marshall, and Ron Bird, D-San Antonio, said they will present the "Texas Bird" to state agencies for what they consider wasteful governmental spending.

They plan to present a "You-Took-It-For-Granted" award for the state department or agency for efforts in saving dollars for Texas taxpayers.

Lubbock Lions Club Installs New Officers

Other new officers installed were: Ralph Krebbs, president-elect; Bill Wade, first vice president; Gene Cribbs, second vice president; Mel Lisman, third vice president; Harold Harris, secretary-treasurer; Weldon Snodgrass, Lion tamer; Mark Stiff, tail twister; Weldon McElreath, chaplain; Carl Looney, Avedis Kasarjian, Max Myatt, Bill McMillan, Ray Bowen and Larry Elms, directors. Charles Lane is the immediate past president.

Ballinger city attorney Everett J. "Ebb" Grindstaff, past Lions International director from Texas, was the installing officer. Howard J. Harrington, District 2-T2 governor from Snyder, was master of ceremonies. Art Cook of Lubbock, immediate past district governor, introduced Grindstaff, who currently is a candidate for third vice president of Lions International.

The Lubbock Lions Club is the largest in the nation. It was ranked first in both district and the state, based on performance during the past year.

Cheap Flights Prove Far Too Popular

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Pan American World Airways suspended ticket sales for $50 one-way Amsterdam to Boston flights after the waiting list for the cheap passage had grown Tuesday to more than 2,500 persons, mostly young Americans.

"We have such a backlog that we are not selling any more cheap tickets," a Pan Am spokesman at Amsterdam's Schiphol airport said.

The special standby flights, which were arranged with Dutch government for a one-month period, were to be discontinued next Saturday, but the spokesman said it will be at least two weeks before the waiting list is cleared.

The airline is also considering organizing extra flights to get rid of the backlog as soon as possible, the spokesman said.

Study Casts Doubt On Nuclear Waste Proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House study cast new doubts Tuesday on the long-range suitability of nearly all current proposals for storing nuclear wastes underground.

Even deep salt beds, a leading contender as a permanent resting place for atomic wastes, got poor reviews in the report prepared by the president's Office of Science and Technology Policy.

Although salt is usually stable for long periods of time, either the heat from the radioactive wastes or water that might leak into the burial site could pose major problems, the study said.

The report was prepared for a task force that President Carter named earlier this year to recommend guidelines for selecting national nuclear waste disposal sites.

Most wastes from nuclear weapons are now in temporary storage in federal repositories in Washington, Idaho and South Carolina. Those from commercial nuclear reactors are being held at the reactor sites themselves, in cooling ponds.

John M. Deutch, head of the task force, told a House interior subcommittee a solution to the waste disposal problem is still years away, although the panel hopes to present some general recommendations to Carter by Oct. 1.

"I'm not here today to tell you that a solution is at hand, nor that it will be easily obtainable tomorrow," Deutch said.

The administration made the disposal-site report available to the energy and environment subcommittee.

On the subject of salt-formation burial, the study said the presence of even a small amount of water could dissolve some of the salt and open a path for the wastes to leak out.

And the heat given off by the radioactive material itself could cause salt formations to expand considerably, possibly fracturing overlying rock structures, it said.

"With conservative engineering salt may be an acceptable repository medium," the report said. "However, salt is soluble and does not provide the (water-holding) qualities of other rocks."

It also said that salt is extremely corrosive and may enter into chemical reactions with either the nuclear waste or the container it is kept in.

"All of these could be troublesome in the event of breachment of repository integrity," the report said.

Such salt formations are located along the Gulf Coast and in New Mexico, Utah and in parts of the mid-continental and eastern United States.

Italian Art Festival Outdone By American Counterpart

SPOLETO, Italy (UPI) — The current Spoleto Festival of Two Worlds is being called "Spoleto, Spoleto" this year to make sure nobody confuses it with its upstart but highly successful counterpart in the United States.

Not that this medieval Umbrian hilltop town north of Rome has to worry about being outstripped by the cultural outpourings of Charleston, S.C., — the folks here just like to make the point that they were first.

First, that is, in putting together an attractive 19-day package of cultural events able to attract some of the world's better known artists and provide a showcase for many who should be equally well known.

"Spoleto, Spoleto" is 21 years old this season, and for the first time there is talk that impresario Gian Carlo Menotti may have outdone himself.

Outdone himself by producing a New World clone in Charleston called "Spoleto U.S.A." that in financial backing at least has surpassed its Old World parent.

There are some who say the Charleston bash, whose second annual season closed last month, may have surpassed "Spoleto, Spoleto" in artistic innovation as well with the world premier of Tennessee Williams' new play "Creve Coeur."

There is no such standout event at Spoleto this year, but there is artistic innovation — some of it not so welcome.

The first piece of innovation was Frenchman Jean-Marie Simon's opening night production of Rossini's opera "La Cenerentola" (Cinderella).

Simon set his version of the opera in pre-revolutionary France complete with Directoire sets and costumes, added political overtones of class struggle and had contralto Benedetta Pecchioli interpret Cinderella as a vindictive stepdaughter who finally goes mad before running off with the prince.

The conservative opening night audience of Italians were not happy about the liberties taken with Rossini's work and there were shouts of "ridiculous" and "absurd" and sparse applause when the final curtain came down.

More liberal-minded critics, however, thought Simon had added a needed edge to the cloying Cinderella fable and had particular praise for the singers' expert handling of the difficult coloratura passages.

More successful with the audiences were the second night's production of Mozart's "Cosi' Fan Tutte" and Giulio Chazalettes' production of Verdi's classic opera "Falstaff."

Spoleto's 120-performance program is loaded with dance this season, but what was supposed to be the highlight attraction turned out to be a disappointment — with the critics if not the audience.

Italian critics said the much heralded appearance of Bolshoi Ballet soloists Ekaterina Maximova and Vladimir Vassiliev was virtually smothered on the stage by the overwhelming numbers of Belgium's Ballet de Wallonie.

The dramatic offerings featured an Italian language production of the award-winning Broadway hit "The Gin Game" by D.L. Coburn, but perhaps the most visually stunning production was the premier of "Accademia Ackerman," written and directed by Giancarlo Seppe.

House Minority Blocks Hearings On Tax Relief

AUSTIN (AP) — A stubborn minority of House members dug in its heels Tuesday and again blocked early hearings on tax relief constitutional amendments.

Rep. Wayne Peveto said, meanwhile, that much of Gov. Dolph Briscoe's tax relief program would fail unless Peveto's property tax reform bill is included in the special session.

Peveto, D-Orange, has added a 5 percent annual limit on increases in property tax revenue. He said even the real estate lobby now supports the bill after helping to kill it last year.

An 82-50 roll call fell eight votes short of the two-thirds needed to suspend House rules and let hearings begin on tax relief constitutional amendments. Hearings cannot start until Monday unless rules are suspended.

"We are going to be trying to find out what the guys' feeling is and their reasoning for not giving these folks a chance to testify," said Speaker Bill Clayton after the vote.

Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, leader of the resistance, said it would "be a terrible mistake" to deny both legislators and the public more time to study the proposals.

A key item grants a homestead exemption against school taxes of $10,000 — plus $10,000 more for persons over 65 — with the state making up the lost revenue.

Peveto said Clayton, several House conservatives, real estate lobbyists and farm lobbyists all had joined him in asking Briscoe to add reform of property tax administration to the special session's call.

His bill would lodge responsibility for tax appraisals of property at the county level, as in California, rather than in the 3,000 present taxing entities. The bill also would establish state oversight to assure that similar property would be appraised the same way throughout the state.

Representatives passed the bill last session but it died in the Senate, and Briscoe is known to fear it would remove local control over taxes.

Briscoe's package of constitutional amendments includes higher homestead exemptions, limits on property tax increases and agricultural use appraisal for rural land.

"We are going to have a hard time passing any of these constitutional amendments on the property tax because how are you going to administer them without reform of the system? We don't want to freeze in the inequities," Peveto said. "This thing could turn sour if he dosn't (submit property tax reform). That is an opinion, not a threat."

It takes 100 votes in the House and 21 in the Senate — two-thirds of each chamber — to submit a constitutional amendment to the people.

If Briscoe doesn't add property tax reform to the call, Peveto said, "The votes are on the floor to keep anything from happening in the way of constitutional amendments. And it's going to be a job even then."

Second Session Hinted

Clayton told reporters he was convinced Briscoe would call still another special session if legislators adjourn after 30 days — the constitutional limit — without enacting "substantial tax relief."

Senators, organized as a committee of the whole, heard from the Legislative Budget Board on the impact of tax relief proposals made by Briscoe.

Jim Oliver, a board assistant director, said if all the proposals are approved, biennial state expenditures could rise only 13 to 17 percent next session — less than half the usual increase.

If all of the anticipated $3 billion in new growth revenue remains available, the 1979 Legislature could boost expenditures 26 percent, he said.

Oliver also compared Texas with California, whose Proposition 13 vote prompted Briscoe to call the special session.

He said California was fifth in the nation in the percentage of per capita income taken by state and local taxes while Texas ranked 45th.

Oliver said California and Texas are almost equal in the number of state employees per 10,000 people — 505.7 for California and 505 for Texas.

"Where's all the money going in California? The level of salaries is the answer in part," Oliver said. He said the average California state employee makes 45.1 percent or $423 more than his or her Texas counterpart.

Midland Briefing Seeks To Ease Nuclear Worries will expose the general public to a much greater potential threat than the problems encountered at the ultimate storage sites," Wallace said. "It is absolutely imperative that detailed, tested and proven transportation plans be totally completed prior to the first movement of these materials."

Rail Route "Surprising"

Speaking privately, Spence said he was surprised that the DOE was considering a rail route through Amarillo as one Texas conduit to the New Mexico site.

Spence said he believed a more prudent route would have been through Midland and he said he was surprised that the materials might not be routed around heavily populated areas.

Ken Carpenter, a spokesman for the American Friends o Service Committee in Austin, urged the DOE to consider the potential dangers to the environment and human life before any final decisions on WIPP are made.

Carpenter drew laughter and applause when he said he was impressed by the DOE film which showed that one of the waste carrying casks could "withstand more punishment than a Timex watch." However, Carpenter said he wondered if a decision to locate the WIPP in the southwest was not politically motivated.

One audience member, overheard during the brief recess, said "I'm just disappointed to see that there aren't 65,000 people here."

The woman was part of a small, but vocal section, who obviously had doubts about the WIPP.

Energy Department officials told the audience the state of New Mexico would be able to veto the project if it so desired. Though an attorney pointed out that the DOE really had no way of guaranteeing the state's veto power, O'Leary said a decision against the project nonetheless would be binding on the DOE.

The WIPP project, if approved, is scheduled to be operative by about 1985. The site would become the burial ground for some of the nation's estimated 100 million gallons of radioactive waste.

The waste — a product of more than 30 years of nuclear-related technology — is currently stored at several sites around the nation.

A similar public hearing will be held in the Amarillo Quality Inn, 2915 I-40 East, today.

Postal Talks Moving At Slow Pace

WASHINGTON (AP) — With barely a week before the deadline, negotiations toward a labor agreement covering 554,000 postal workers are moving slowly, the chief federal mediator said Tuesday.

"It's going to take a lot of hard work to get the negotiations moving forward," said Wayne L. Horvitz, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, two days after entering the talks.

"The parties are far apart and the talks are moving slowly," Horvitz said. The current three-year agreement expires July 20.

Union leaders have complained about the slow pace of the negotiations and have planned a protest demonstration for today in front of Postal Service headquarters in Washington.

Picketing in front of post offices in other cities was also expected.

National officers of the four postal unions have avoided strike talk, but the head of the New York City local of the letter carriers union brought up the possibility Tuesday.

"The arrogant attitude of the Postal Service toward the negotiations can trigger a postal strike," said Vincent R. Sombrotto, the local president.

Elvis Presley Plane Display Goes Broke

DALLAS (UPI) — It sounded too good to be true. And, of course, it was.

As envisioned by its sponsors — A Texas promoter and an Illinois preacher — thousands of Americans would pay $300 per couple for a peek at the interior of the "Lisa Marie," a plane once owned by Elvis Presley. The fee would be tax exempt. The money would go to a church building fund.

The tour opened May 1 at Texas Stadium during a rainstorm and never went much further after the state attorney general charged that the method of promoting Add-a-Tune violated Texas' deceptive trade practices law.

The Lisa Marie went back to Omni aircraft of Washington, D.C., the Rev. J. Lloyd Tomer went back to the First Church of God in Benton, Ill., and promoter Robert Dean Philpot this week filed for bankruptcy, listing $2,800 in assets and $7.4 million in liabilities.

"I think he's in the process of moving," said Phoenix, Ariz., attorney Thayer C. Lindauer after philpot's telephone was disconnected.

"It just never got off the ground," Omni president Tom Westrick said of the failed promotional tour which resulted in repossession of the plush 29-passenger plane.

"He (Tomer) told all of us we were not to give out any information, that any information was to come from him," said Tomer's wife, explaining he was not available Tuesday. "I'm not putting you off. I'm following instructions."

Lindauer insisted the difference in Vhilpot's liabilities and assets was not accurately portrayed in the bankruptcy filing.

"A lot of debts go way, way back," he said. "There are a lot of disputed claims. A person has to list every claim against him and tell the court and say whether it's a specific liquidated amount or dispute owing it."

Petitions Hit Busing, Taxes

group started circulating petitions to force a vote on propositions to cut city-school taxes so low that Lubbock won't be able to implement its court-ordered integration plan.

Municipal and school officials doubt the legality of the strategy, but the group — called We the People — is undaunted.

"We're enthusiastic and ready to go. I don't think we'll have any trouble getting the required number of signatures on our petitions," said Lenda Tarlton, a founder of the organization.

She said 150 to 200 members met Monday night in Hodges Community Center to kick off the campaign. They hope to get the City of Lubbock and Lubbock Independent School District to call special elections on proposed tax limitations.

The limitations basically would require each governmental entity to cut its tax levy in half. The organization also would dictate priorities for city and school district spending. On the district's side, court-ordered busing would not be a priority.

10,000 Signatures Sought

According to the city charter, the group believes, if 10,000 signatures can be obtained within the next two months, the city will be forced to hold an election on the proposed tax limitation.

Mrs. Tarlton said that while school officials can't be forced to call such an election, "they should consider it carefully."

Tuesday, We the People issued a statement on its petition drive:

"By petitions and the signatures of 10,000 people, an election must be held. If our local city government and school board can prove that their present budgets can be completely justified, then we may be defeated in that election.

"We plan to give them that opportunity.

"Let anyone come forth that will show us forced busing has improved social tensions and in particular the quality of education. Let anyone prove to us how an excessive evaluation of property does anything to improve our community's welfare and well being," the group said.

The statement concluded, "Our desires are very simple: let us have a voice in our government."

The organization said it "cannot condone governmental control of our children's future nor oppressive taxation for excessive bureaucratic waste."

"The people are ready for something — something tangible. I think a vote is what they want. We must get back to the point where people have some control over their government," Mrs. Tarlton said.

She said if city and school officials can justify their budgets, "then they have nothing to fear."

The group's proposition for the city government would require municipal tax monies be spent "first" on police, fire protection, garbage collection, water and sewer service, parks, streets, libraries and public transportation.

The proposition for the school district would require school taxes be spent "first" on "classroom teachers, instructional material, libraries, trainable handicapped, vocational classes and educable mentally retarded."

Mrs. Tarlton said the organization hopes to cut city-school taxes, which she says are so high — in light of recent property revaluation in the southwest quadrant — that "people are having to sell their homes."

And the group wants to ensure that the school district doesn't have enough money available to implement its court-ordered integration plan. The plan would require busing about 2,000 elementary children and several hundred secondary students a day beginning this fall — an aspect We the People detests.

"We do know that there are some cities that have escaped busing by not having the money to do it," Mrs. Tarlton said. She cited Syracuse, N.Y., as an example.

However, school officials say federal courts simply do not let school systems off the hook when they run out of money. They say the local anti-busing group's approach won't work.

Phillips Petroleum Plant Explodes

PHILLIPS (UPI) — An explosion of undetermined origin blasted the Phillips Petroleum plant late Tuesday, sending flames 150 feet high. The town's 2,500 residents were ordered to evacuate.

The rocketing flames made immediate rescue operations impossible and company officials were not able to determine if there were any fatalities or injuries, although one worker was taken to a hospital.

Hotel Falls, Kills Trio In Victoria

VICTORIA (AP) — The 65-year-old Denver Hotel collapsed Tuesday, burying four workmen who were preparing the local landmark for demolition. Three bodies were recovered and searchers used spotlights as they sifted through the rubble for the missing worker.

The four-story brick building in this South Texas city had been closed since 1971. A Victoria bank purchased the building earlier this year and had contracted for its demolition.

"There was a rumble ... just a rumble," said Manuel Villareal, who had left the building moments before it crumbled. "The ... place just caved in. There was no time for the people inside to get out."

Villareal, who was buying some fixtures from the hotel, said one man was crushed to death by a falling slab of concrete.

Firemen and police officers used front-end loaders to peel away the crumbled remains of the building to get to the victims.

Two of the dead were identitifed as Weldon Johnston of Webberville, owner of used building materials firm, and Sylvestra Castro, hometown unknown. Identities were withheld for the third victim and the missing worker.

Several holes were punched into the debris and microphones were lowered into the heap in hopes of contacting the fourth worker. But there was no response.

Witnesses said a five-man demolition crew, which had been gutting the structure for several weeks, was using jackhammers to weaken the structure so that it could be bulldozed this weekend. They were chipping away at a support column when the building collapsed.

As late as the early 1950s, the hotel was considered one of the best places to stay in Victoria, a town of about 50,000 near the Gulf of Mexico in South Texas. The building had a courtyard, a roof garden and what some said was an excellent dining room.

Carter Attacks News 'Leaks' In Washington

is exacerbated by the overabundance of classified documents and the number of persons in Congress and elsewhere with access to them.

"Nine times out of 10 my guess is it's somebody who does not understand that (leaking information) will cause problems," Powell said. "One thing that helps is making people a little more aware."

Powell said he sometimes cannot immediately figure out why the release of a classified document would damage the national interest, but later discovers there was a good reason to keep the information secret.

When they spoke to reporters earlier, Baker and Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., agreed the problem was serious.

"Right now," said Baker, "everybody and his brother has access to the most sensitive sort of information in the Congress, and that's too big a risk. So I think we have to back off and take another look at it."

Goldwater agreed the unauthorized release of sensitive information is widespread. "It's coming from the Pentagon. It's coming from the Capitol. God knows where it's coming from."

Personal Property Exemption Urged

AUSTIN (UPI) — Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said Tuesday he will seek an amendment to the state constitution exempting automobiles and other personal property from taxation.

Parker said his proposal would expand the homestead tax exemption to include household furnishings, two automobiles, certain acreage for agricultural use and a small amount of livestock from the property tax.

"Automobiles would be the propery that will receive the most attention in this proposed amendment because automobiles are probably the most overtaxed item of property owned by Texans," Parker said.

Corn Harvest Decline Expected; USDA Plays Down Strike Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers are expected to harvest 6.15 billion bushels of corn this fall, four percent less than the record crop of 1977, the Agriculture Department said Tuesday.

Reacting to a rise in price-depressing grain surpluses, the Carter administration ordered farmers to idle part of their cropland this year in order to qualify for federal price supports on wheat, corn and other feed grains.

Last winter, protesting farmers threatened to strike by not planting crops this year unless the government boosted prices. But USDA officials say there is no evidence that the strike movement had any effect on plantings.

Corn is the largest grain crop grown in the United States and is most important as a livestock feed. This year's harvest will provide most of the feed to produce beef, pork, poultry and milk through 1979.

Last year, when there were no acreage curbs, farmers produced a record corn harvest of 6.37 billion bushels which helped balloon stockpiles and led to this year's acreage set-aside program to curb production.

Although it was the department's first official 1978 corn estimate based on yield surveys, experts earlier had issued projections calling for a harvest of as much as 6.7 billion bushels or as little as 5.5 billion bushels.

The department's Crop Reporting Board also estimated 1978 wheat production at about 1.8 billion bushels, down 11 percent from last year's harvest of about 2.03 billion bushels.

No estimate was made of this year's soybean production, another important factor in future food supplies. Soybeans, after they are crushed, provide high-protein meal for livestock feed and oil for many food products.

The first soybean production estimate will be issued Aug. 10, along with the department's first estimate for cotton and a number of other crops. The report next month also will include updated estimates for corn and wheat.

Meanwhile, officials said that corn yields this year are expected to average 90.1 bushels per harvested acre, compared with 91 bushels in 1977.

Wheat yields were estimated at 31.9 bushels per acre, compared with 30.6 in 1977.

Rain drenched key corn production areas and delayed planting this spring. However, the added moisture will help provide a cushion against brief periods of drought in July and August, crucial months for corn's development.

Bumper grain crops the past few years helped cool the food price spiral of 1973 and 1974, when retail food prices rose 14.5 percent annually. However, another factor — a massive reduction in the nation's cattle herd — has interceded and food prices are soaring again.

The reduced cattle inventory, cut back because farmers and ranchers were losing money at depressed prices, means less beef for consumers. There is more pork and poultry than a year ago, but those are more expensive, too.

Also, the administration offered farmers an arrangement to store much of their surplus grain to keep it off the market so that wheat and corn prices will go up.

This has had an effect and, coupled with brisk exports, has helped boost grain prices appreciably since their low marks of last fall.

All of this, including high prices for cattle and improved prices for grain, has helped fan food price inflation again. Department experts say that retail food prices will average eight to 10 percent higher this year, compared with a 6.2 percent gain in 1977.

A year ago, in its first corn estimate, USDA forecast the crop at 6.33 billion bushels. Although the estimate varied in following months, the July forecast was within about 0.5 percent of the final production of about 6.37 billion bushels.

Corn reserves left over when the new crop's marketing year begins Oct. 1 are expected to be about 1.2 billion bushels, up from 884 million bushels last Oct. 1 and 399 million two years ago.

The wheat reserve left over at the beginning of the 1978-79 marketing year on June 1 was more than 1.17 billion bushels against 1.1 billion a year ago and 665 million two years ago.

The July report, based on field conditions the first of the month, put the 1978 winter wheat crop at 1,276,705 bushels, down 16 percent from 1,526,713,000 produced last year. A month ago, the winter wheat estimate was 1,307,548,000 bushels. The yield was put at 32.9 bushels an acre, compared with 31.5 in 1977.

Sales Up Chicken Costs

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers are turning away from higher-priced beef and pork in increasing numbers and heading for their supermarkets' poultry counters, driving the price of chicken steadily higher this summer.

In addition, strong export sales, largely to Japan and the Middle East, are helping to boost both demand and retail prices, even though chicken production is rising and chickens cost less to produce than they did a year ago.

According to the federal government's Bureau of Labor Statistics, the retail price of fresh whole chickens was 65.6 cents a pound in May, up 8 percent in the past year. The price per pound of hamburger rose 27 percent in the same period to $1.10, while the cost of pork roast was up 19 percent in May at $1.53 a pound.

Production of broilers (chickens weighing about 4 pounds at slaughter and a pound less when sold in stores) was up 7 percent over year-ago levels this spring, the Agriculture Department says. But it's estimated upcoming government figures will show that while production is up 10 percent in the first half of this year, retail prices will be 15-20 percent above first-half 1977 prices.

"People do make adjustments in their food consumption based on price," said Robert Wunderle, economist at Supermarkets General Corp., owner of the Woodbridge, N.J.-based Pathmark food chain.

"With high beef prices, what's the substitute? There are very few so far.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

THE INITIAL REACTION of Chicago Board of Trade brokers was neutral to slightly bearish following the USDA's production estimates Tuesday for corn and wheat.

The USDA estimated 1978 corn production at 6.145 billion bushels and total 1978 wheat output at 1.801 billion bushels.

Guesstimates by traders had averaged 6.119 billion bushels for corn and 1.771 billion bushels for wheat.

Following the USDA report, most cash firms were taking between two and three cents a bushel protection on corn and no protection on wheat or soybeans.

Traders generally had felt that a corn estimate above 6.1 billion bushels would be considered slightly bearish.

THE USDA'S ESTIMATES OF CORN and wheat production likely won't result in any huge market fluctuations in the coming months, according to a penal of experts gathered by the Board of Trade.

The panel agreed the USDA figures already were largely in the futures markets. However, they noted that the weak U. S. dollar provided a huge incentive for foreign consumption and stockpile demand.

In addition, Huber noted that domestic livestock feeding likely would increase 50 million to 100 million bushels this year due to good supplies, swelling livestock numbers and fairly low grains prices.

IN THE COMING MONTHS, THE NEARBY corn futures contract likely will range on the low side of $1.80 to $2.70 and the nearby wheat contract probably will hold between $2.15 and $3.40 a bushel, Rolier estimated.

Roller added that prices probably would fall more if government programs did not exist.

He observed that in the "unknown" export picture, China played a major part. He said the government seems to want more political and economic involvement with China and the new crop estimates might well activate Washington to try to bring that about sooner.

This would stablize prices and keep stocks from building as in the 1960s.

THE PANEL ALSO STRESSED THAT Tuesday's estimates were a "trend" report based on projected yields, not objective observation.

Panel members said critical pollination weather was coming to the Corn Belt in the next month and would play a key role in ultimate production.

Roller pointed out that the 1 billion people in China could play a crucial role simply by increasing wheat consumption by a loaf of bread or even a piece of bread a day.

Mahlmann, noting the increasing livestock numbers, including hogs, broilers and cattle, estimated domestic consumption could rise as much as 200 million bushels over current expectations.

Cattle Futures Recover From Slump, End Higher

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures quickly recovered an outset loss of 50 points and ended 27 to 65 points higher on 20,252 sales Tuesday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Distant August and October were up the most at the day's highs and the highest levels in four weeks.

Easiness in cash cattle and beef brought on outset selling but as in recent days good support was attracted on the setback and prices moved up as stops were touched off.

Wholesale beef was unchanged at 84 1/2 to 85 1/2 cents a pound. The six markets expect 13,800 head today.

Cash cattle were steady to off $1, with the best top at $56.50 per hundredweight. The Omaha top was $55.75. Slaughter was 139,000 head.

Feeder cattle futures finished 65 points higher to 15 points lower. Sales were 2,287 cars. September was up the most after gaining 70 cents, with April down the most. Initially, August was off 52 points.

Support was uncovered after outset selling on easy trends to cash cattle and beef. Some late buying was triggered by continued strength in cash feeder cattle, which posted sharp agains again Tuesday.

The six markets expect 2,700 head today. Cash feeder cattle were steady to up $5, with the best top at $93 per hundredweight at San Antonio.

Hog futures were up 52 points to down 32 points at the close on sales of 5,168 cars. June was up the most, with October off the most.

Prices swung 97 points lower in December to 85 points in distant October in erratic action. Outset selling followed heavy hog runs and lower prices for hogs and most pork products. Lack of deliveries brought scattered buying.

Wholesale hams were off one to two cents at 71 to 76 1/4 cents a pound, f.o.b. river. The six markets expect 26,500 headtoday.

Cash hogs were off 25 cents to $1.50, with the best top at $47.25 per hundredweight at Peoria. Slaughter was 274,000 head.

Pork belly (bacon) futures ended 10 to 95 points lower, led by nearby July. The contract was down 135 points before stiffening.

Wholesale bacon was unchanged to up 1 1/2 cents at 49 3/4 to 58 1/2 cents a pound, f.o.b. river.

Unrelated Jumble Of Exotic Tongues Marks Caucasus

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. (AP) — When the ancient Romans extended their empire into the Caucasus, the historian Pliny wrote, they needed 130 interpreters to deal with the jumble of languages they found.

Now the region, known to the ancients as the "Mountain of Languages," is the scene of a linguistic dispute that highlights the multilingual nature of the Soviet Union.

Although most of the languages of Pliny's day had no written form and have since faded away, the Caucasus region in the southern European part of the U.S.S.R. is still the home of about 50 languages, or more than a third of the 130 recognized languages of the country.

With its mix of entirely separate nationalities and babble of obscure and exotic languages, the Soviet Union has a language problem unlike anything in the United States, where the languages of most immigrants are gradually lost in America's melting pot.

In the U.S.S.R., ancient tribes live in forgotten corners where they have always lived, speaking the languages they have always spoken.

The Soviet ruble note carries the legend "one ruble" in 15 languages. Soviets have translated Shakespeare into almost 40 languages spoken throughout their nation.

Russian is the mother tongue for only about half the Soviet people — 128.8 million out of a total of 260 million.

The rest speak everything from Slavic to Baltic to Romance to Parsi to Finnic to Turkic to Mongolic to paleo-Asiatic to Eskimo-Aleut.

And among these, the last census, in 1970, showed a rise in the number of non-Russians who do not know Russian as a second language.

Despite the need to know Russian for anyone who wants to rise beyond his town or village, local languages live tenaciously on, as a sharp dispute here in the Caucasus recently showed.

For some reason buried in history, the three Caucasus republics of Georgia, Armenia and Adzerbaidjan are the only ones where the local language was officially designated the state tongue.

When drafters of new local constitutions attempted to remove this wording last April, in conformity with the other 12 Soviet republics, the move touched off a massive demonstration in front of Tbilisi's government house, and the wording was reinstated.

During the Georgian demonstration, according to Americans who live in Yerevan, tanks were driven into that Armenian capital city as well and stayed overnight, their engines idling, apparently to assure that no similar demonstrations took place.

The state-language wording was retained in Armenia and Adzerbaidjan as well.

But the problem was not that simple. Georgian, Armenian and Azer are not

Word soon reached Moscow of yet another demonstration, this one by the Abkhazian minority in Georgia, in protest of the designation of Georgian as the republic's state language.

Tbilisi's main newspaper, Zarya Vostoka, reported that the local government was flooded with protests and that there was even a move by the 503,000 Abkhazians to secede from the Georgian republic.

A Communist Party central committee member was dispatched from Moscow to deal with the problem, and conceded that the Abkhazians had just complaints but that nothing further could be done about the language question.

These language questions are multiplied throughout the Caucasus, many of whose 50 languages are totally unrelated linguistically, and some of which still have no written form.

In the Georgian republic of the Caucasus, 3.2 million people consider Georgian, with its rich literature and abundant collections of Christian poetry, to be their mother tongue.

But if a Georgian travels far into the hills surrounding Tbilisi, he, like the Roman Pliny, might need to take along a team of interpreters because of the number and variety of different dialects.

Roman Police Crack Hot Phone Call Ring

ROME (AP) — Police here said Tuesday they have cracked a ring of telephone operators who pocketed some $3.3 million in charges over five years.

After a four-month probe, in which 200 investigators monitored international calls, police have arrested 14 operators on charges of fraud. Police have also advised 50 other persons that they are under investigation.

Police sources said the operators accepted payoffs.

Clerks For Railroad Remaining On Strike

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — About 20,000 employees of the Norfolk & Western Railway remained off their jobs Tuesday in the second day of a strike by clerks that apparently will last at least another week.

The coal-hauling railway asked a federal judge in Chicago for an injunction to force the strikers back to work, but failed to win an immediate ruling.

Instead, U. S. District Court Judge Alfred Kirkland gave the N&W two days in which to file briefs supporting its injunction request and said the clerks' union could have five days to file its reply.

This meant no decision on the injunction will be handed down until the middle of next week, but a union spokesman here said if Kirkland enjoins the strike, the clerks will go back to work immediately.

"We are all law-abiding citizens," said Wayne Austin, chairman of the Brotherhood of Railway and Airlines Clerks local in nearby Salem.

Only about 4,000 to 5,000 of the N&W employees involved in the walkout are clerks, who normally handle desk work. The others are members of other unions who honored picket lines thrown up by the BRAC at N&W operations in 14 Southern and Midwestern states.

A spokesman at N&W headquarters here confirmed Tuesday that a total of about 20,000 of the railroad's 24,000 employees, 90 percent of whom are members of unions, have been idled by the strike.

The spokesman, Bill Martin, said the railroad was attempting to move some trains with supervisory employees to its commercial customers, but that he had no idea how many actually were running.

"It's so fluid I have no numbers," Martin said. "We're on a curtailed scheduled, of course, and are using supervisors to run our trains and serve our factories.

"Right now, we're still in the process of setting it up. Any number we gave would be a shotgun guess."

Martin said 400 to 500 N&W trains normally make runs daily, but that the figure had been reduced recently because of the vacation of coal miners — a vacation that ended Tuesday.

The N&W derives 40 percent of its revenue from hauling coal, the other 60 percent from moving merchandise over its far-flung system, which extends into southern Canada.

Lou Phelps, the railroad's public relations director, said "it is impossible to predict what the financial impact will be."

The N&W only recently had begun recovering from losses incurred during the months-long strike of coal miners, which ended in late March, and its coal tonnage had moved to record levels.

The clerks' strike hit the railroad unexpectedly at 6 a.m. Monday and the walkout spread to thousands of other workers when picket lines were set up.

The union said it called the strike because the N&W had refused to negotiate a contract acceptable to the union in terms of work rules and protection of workers against "technological changes."

The "technological changes" principally involve new equipment that will computerize and automate some work now done by the clerks.

N&W attorneys sought restraining orders aimed at ending the strike Monday in federal courts in Chicago and Abingdon, Va., but did not obtain them.

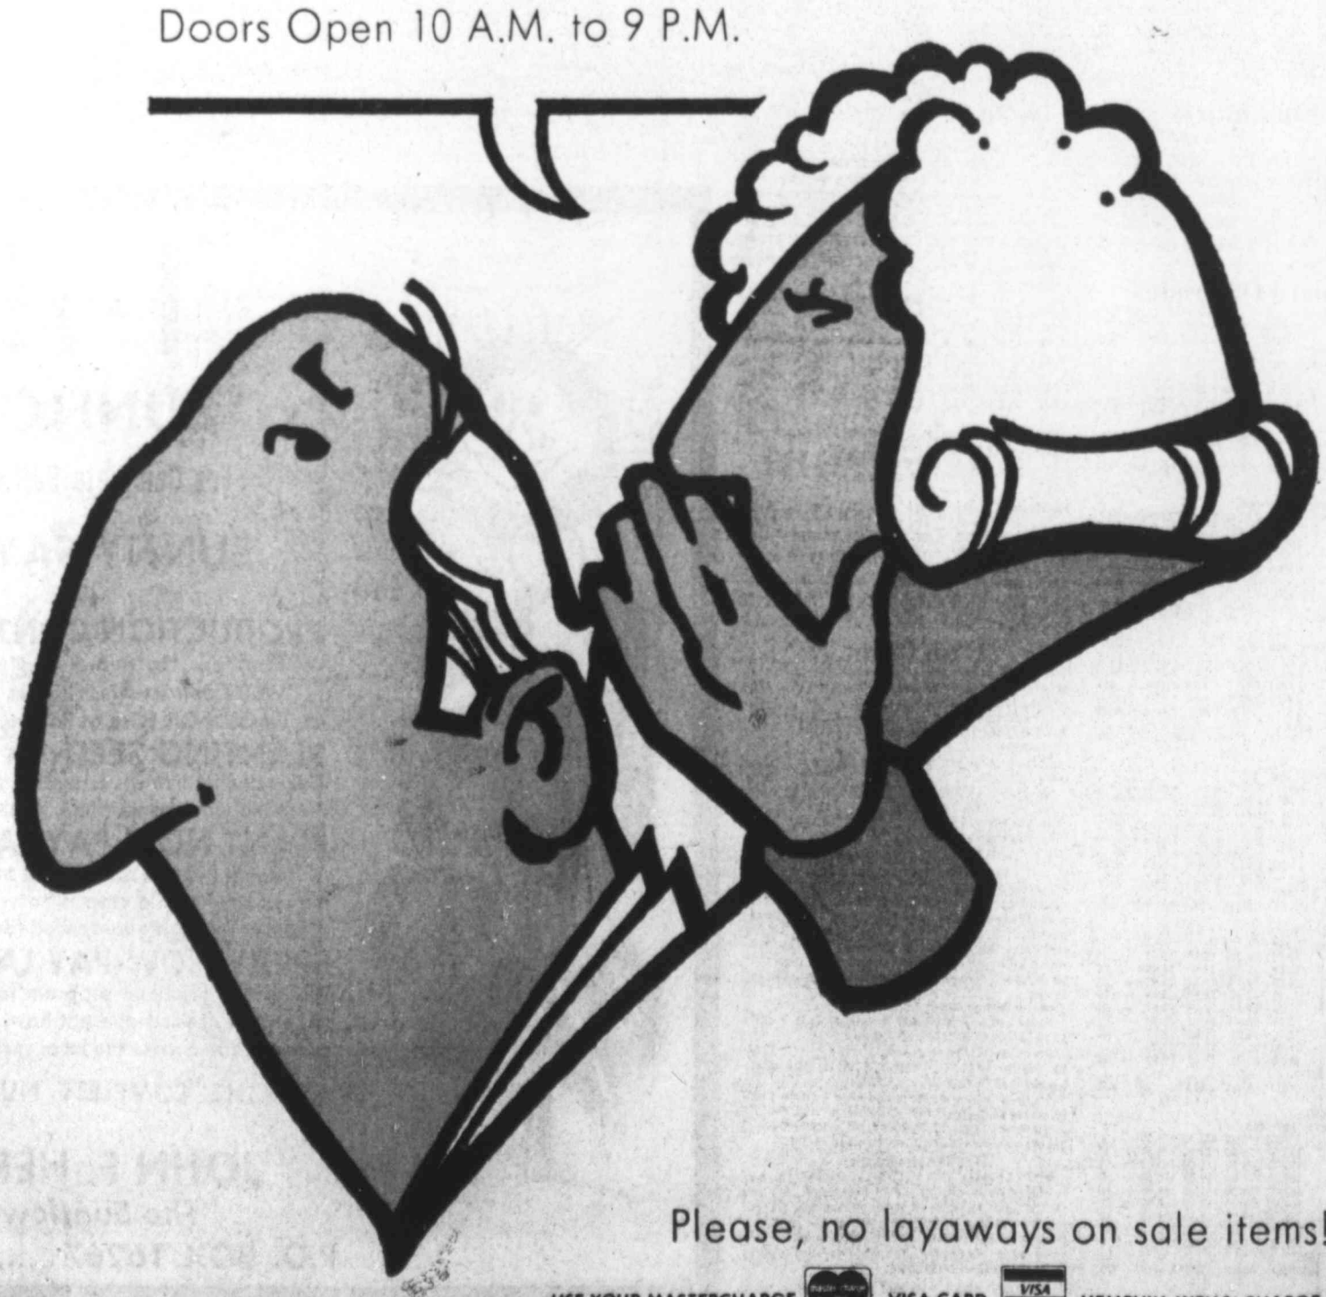

Phelps said Tuesday the N&W was "considerably surprised" when the clerks struck.

"We had absolutely zero notification that they were intending to strike," he said.

City Budget, Tax Cuts Expected In Response To Citizen Protest

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Although members of the Lubbock Property Owners Association may not get the city council to cut taxes by 25 percent, the council probably will make additional budget and tax cuts Thursday in response to the local tax revolt.

The more than 6,000 association letters that have arrived at city hall definitely will have an impact on council action, Mayor Dirk West said.

West noted the group does not represent a majority of the city's taxpayers, but said their thinking certainly is representative of the majority.

But the mayor said he wasn't so sure about the association's specific requests, like the 25 percent tax cut.

At the present tax rate, the owner of a $45,000 home would face a bill of $810 for both school and city taxes. A 25 percent cut in city taxes would produce a saving of $90 a year, but West said that would lower a house payment by less than $8 a month.

"It's not a very significant impact on a household budget," he said. "I don't think that's what they want."

The reduction is the rough equivalent in price of two theater tickets and less than the price of eating out, West pointed out.

However, a 25 percent tax cut would remove $4.3 million from the city's general fund and have a "rather significant impact on city services."

When the council convenes in a budget work session, Thursday, West said it will be looking for additional ways to cut the $71.9 million budget without any specific percentage cut in mind.

"We'll be looking at areas where cuts would have the least impact," he said. Cuts will not come in the "protection of life and property — not in fire or police protection," he said.

Areas where cuts are possible include library service, parks, brush pickup, Health Department increases and weed control.

The council will be looking for "those services and expenses that would have the least impact on the majority of citizens," he said.

To aid in that evaluation, West said City Manager Larry Cunningham is preparing statistics on what services would have to be cut back to achieve a 25 percent tax reduction.

But West said "it's apparent a cut in taxes can't only come from the city." Without mentioning the school district by name, the mayor said such a cut "has got to involve other taxing entities.

"The city has been the whipping boy so far on this tax revolt and there is no fat in the city's budget to start with," he said.

He theorized most people think of the City-School Tax Office only as the City Tax Office, so the city gets all the blame.

But the school district, with a higher tax rate than the city, received 53 percent of all property taxes collected, he noted.

Association talk of recalling council members if they did not sufficiently cut the budget was "a cheap shot," West said.

"None of us on the council are professional politicians — we don't even make our living as city council people," he said.

"We serve because we want to do something for the city," West said.

As for the association's demand that property taxes not be levied on automobiles, the mayor said it's not up to the city.

State law requires the city to tax all personal property, including cars, he said. Some cities interpret this to mean that furniture, jewelry and bank accounts should be taxed, in addition to homes and cars.

"This city wisely has chosen not to even start that practice," West said.

If Lubbock stopped taxing automobiles, the action probably would be challenged as unjust taxation by those who own commercial vehicles, West predicted.

The mayor said the council already had granted one of the association's requests — an increase in the homestead exemption for the elderly.

The council tentatively approved an increase from $3,000 to $5,000 in the exemption, which gives "a good tax break for those in small houses."

However, elderly owners of $70,000 homes "are not going to get much help" from the increased exemption, he said.

However, West said the association requested a "substantial increase" in the homestead exemption, without specifying what substantial means in dollars and cents.

West feels the council should be responsive to the demand for a tax cut, but he is concerned that "overreacting" could hinder the city's future growth.

"Lubbock is a growing, vibrant city because its citizens always wanted the best," he said, adding he hopes the city continues on the same track.

IT'S A PANDA LIFE — Two of the five pandas in the Peking Zoo munch on fresh green bamboo leaves in the early morning summer hours recently in Peking. Panda Specialist Gives Thoughts On Animal's Care

PEKING (AP) — Feted, feasted and fawned on, the five pandas in Peking Zoo are its biggest attraction. And being the most pampered residents may help explain why Peking is the only zoo to successfully breed and raise in captivity the cuddly black and white cousins of the racoon.

There are only nine of the rare bears in zoos outside China, including two in Washington. Some 20 others are in Chinese zoos while an unknown number still romp freely in the wilds of Szechwan province in southwestern China, one of their native habitats.

Deputy zoo director Li Yang-wen said wild pandas were sent in pairs to zoos in Washington, London, Paris, Mexico City and Tokyo but none have produced young. One of the French pandas died.

This spring a visiting group of officials from American zoos including New York, Washington and Denver spent two days here during which they consulted with Mrs. Yeh Chu-chun, the resident panda specialist.

Mrs. Leh has some thoughts about Washington's pandas, Ling-Ling and Hsing-Hsing, sent in 1972 as gifts marking President Nixon's visit to China.

Mrs. Yeh, noting the male panda may be too fat, suggested he go on a diet before the next breeding cycle — a 10-to-20 day period starting in late April.

Mrs. Yeh told an interviewer pandas are used to a mild, moist climate. Peking, with summer temperatures in the high 90s, is as hot as Washington, but drier.

The pandas spend the early summer morning hours here in two spacious outdoor enclosures sitting in the coolness of a raised platform or among the rocks, munching on fresh green bamboo leaves.

About mid-morning they go inside, with the wild ones lounging behind a barred and glass-encased enclosure and the zoo-born animals lounging behind a fine mesh screen. They are fed twice a day on milk, rice porridge and cakes made of corn flower and soy beans and their cages are kept clean.

The zoo's oldest panda, now 21, has retired to a quieter zoo away from the crowds of Chinese, American and other tourists who cluster around their enclosures.

Li explained that pregnant pandas are placed in quiet seclusion away from the public for the 140-day gestation period and for a further four to six months after the offspring are born.

Keepers observe the mothers each day but never touch the young pandas until they are more than four-months-old.

Pandas are protected in China. If a Chinese zoo wants new ones from the wilds it must apply for permission from the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry.

It is not a bad life in captivity. Saw-saw, born here three years ago, snoozed on a raised platform, combed his hair, climbed down a ladder, checked the closed entrance to his cooler mid-day quarters and then lounged on a rock in the sun to observe mid-morning visitors.

Apart from pandas, the 138-acre Peking Zoo is also home for 4,800 other birds and animals.

Last year Li visited the east African territories of Kenya, Tanzania and Ethiopia bringing back some 1,000 animals and birds including elephant, giraffe, zebra and antelope. Several have since given birth.

Nixon gave the zoo two American elks, but the male died about a year ago after becoming ill.

Polio In Mexico Poses Threat

SAN BENITO (AP) — An outbreak of polio in Northern Mexico could pose a danger to unimmunized tourists, according to the director of the Cameron County Health Department.

Dr. Verne Goerger said Tuesday that reports from Mexico show a "considerable amount" of polio in that nation's northern region. Goerger said the outbreak appears to be centered in Tampico, about 250 miles south of Brownsville.

The health department director is advising tourists to be sure their polio immunization is still good before crossing the border.

"If in doubt, get another one," Goerger said.

The doctor added that there have been some fatalities due to polio in Mexico recently. However, he said there have been no cases reported in the Rio Grande Valley.

Cost Fears Hold Back Rent Subsidy Program

By ROBERT M. COCKRUM
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A plan to eventually revitalize a part of East Lubbock through a rent subsidy program was delayed Tuesday by the South Plains Association of Governments because of a concern over its ultimate cost.

"Inherently, I like programs that aid housing, but I can't believe they don't eventually cost us," said Carolyn Jordan, SPAG board member and city councilwoman. "The mood of the city council now is not to spend any more money. I guess I'm a little more cautious than I was last month."

The SPAG board will take another look at the application to seek a "neighborhood strategy area" designation from the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The designation for the Canyon Lakes-Dunbar area could lead to the allocation of 184 housing units for rental subsidies.

"There is no grant money to this," said James B. Storey, assistant executive director of Lubbock's Urban Renewal Agency. He said the area was chosen for possible designation because "it's rundown now to the point of a low occupancy rate. The assurance of rent subsidies would help motivate landlords in the area to bring their properties up to standard."

But Storey said later that the project already is in trouble, having drawn unfavorable comment from the area HUD office in Dallas.

"The HUD letter says, among other things, that this program would cause impaction — use of federal funds in an area which already has other federal funds

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

(Author's Note: This is one of a series on How America Vacations and how shots can help. Today's column deals with renting a cabin near the beach.)

When people talk about the beach, the frame of reference is always a personal one.

Children see it as miles of smooth, white sand, seashells, making castles with a bucket and shovel, burying their feet, and floating on mattresses.

When Daddy fantasizes about the beach it's "innie" navels, bronze bodies shimmering with oil, cold beer, and holding your stomach in for six or eight hours at a time.

When Mother visualizes the beach, she sees it as a laundromat.

For some unexplained reason, children develop a towel fetish the moment they hit the sand. They must have a towel to spread on the beach, one to throw around their neck to look cool, one to mop their brow when they sweat, one to tease the dog, one to dry off their hair, one to step out of the shower, one to dry their left leg and left arm, one to dry their right leg and right arm. Also a wet one to leave on the coffee table to turn it white.

Five people using 15 towels a day adds up to 75 towels and 65 pounds of sand a day.

In addition to collecting enough sand to start her own beach, mothers are treated to a cabin with all the modern pushbuttons of a mausoleum.

When you take down the spider webs, the original structure is weakened. When you light the stove, you create an imbalance of nature. When you touch the draperies, you're defying the law of gravity.

We once rented a cabin that boasted it was furnished with the "bare basics." That included three iced tea spoons, two plates, one cup, an olive fork, a one-quart saucepan, a flour sifter and three waterbeds — especially when it rained.

It was also listed as being "on the beach" and for all I know it was at one time. That's before they filled it in with a four-lane highway. To get to the beach you had to pack supplies for the entire day, outrun the traffic, and take turns going back and forth for all the things you forget.

A lot of people exodus every year from the city to the beaches in search of pounding waves, sand and cool nights. Me? I'd settle for a laundromat with a window in it.

DEAR HELOISE:

I want to purchase a carpet that has the pad already attached. How can I tell which has the best padding? — Margaret Martin-Witt

DEAR MARGARET:

The Carpet and Rug Institute gave me the following information:

The primary reason a pad is used between the carpet and the floor is to make the carpet feel better when you step on it and to prolong the life of the carpet. It also acts as an insulator that can save energy.

Take a piece of the carpet with the foam and squeeze it between your fingers and thumb. The harder it is to squeeze, the better.

The foam should have some give, but if it is too soft or too thin it will not support you when you stand on it. The difference will become obvious to you as you compare several different carpets with attached pads.

Rub your fingers over the back. The better foams will not flake off, or little pieces will not break off as readily. If you dig with yor fingernails, you will be able to pull pieces out of most any foam back. — Heloise

I have a hint for the care of knitted hats and turbans — my favorite headwear for both winter and summer.

Wash them in cool water and soap made for wool and knitted clothing. Roll in a towel to remove the excess water.

Then put the hat or turban on a wig stand to dry. It's perfect. The hat or turban will look brand new — both clean and in excellent shape.

Don't remove it from the stand until it is thoroughly dry. — Mrs. Ruth Hines

DEAR HELOISE:

After collecting many empty plastic margarine containers, whipped topping containers, etc., I had a terrible time when I would go to my cabinet to take one out to use.

I could never find the lid to fit the container that I selected.

My daughter suggested I put markings-to-match on the container and lid such as a star, smiling face, square, circle or any clever or original sign — just so the matching signs were on the proper lid and bowl.

It sure has served me lots of time and aggravation. — Lorraine C. Hahn

This hand was an important one. It was played in a Boston regional and upon its result hinged the prestigious knockout championship. It was as simple as this: If East-West defeated five spades doubled by two tricks, they would win the tournament by two IMPs. If they defeated it by only one trick, they would lose by three IMPs.

Of course, every partnership should try to score the maximum on every hand. Mercy or carelessness have no place in bridge. The diagrammed hand dramatically depicts a determined defense that plucks declarer clean.

North's bidding is high but, in fact, he was right to bid five spades as a sacrifice. East-West are lay down for five clubs.

East made a key play at trick one to set the stage for what was to follow. He dropped the jack of clubs under his partner's king. This suit preference signaled West to switch to the highest of the unbid suits — hearts. It turned out to be a real winner.

West dutifully switched to the heart 10, which was covered by the jack, king and ace. Declarer played a trump to dummy's jack, won by East's ace. East returned the jack of diamonds which West won with the ace. The contract was already down one.

West realized that East's emphatic suit preference at trick one had to be based on the possession of the singleton king of hearts. With two or more hearts and the king he would not have been in a rush to have the suit played.

West led his remaining heart and East ruffed. Down two!

TIME SAVER

Ham is a great time saver in the kitchen if you take advantage of its versatility. It's wise to make a large enough purchase to allow for leftover meat that can be converted into a second day meal. For example, you may want to serve baked ham for one dinner and use the leftover meat for cubes for kabobs, fondue, salads, casseroles, chow mein or omelets. Or the ham can be sliced for panfrying or making Eggs Benedict or sandwiches; or ground for making a loaf, croquettes or stuffed peppers.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: Please don't tell me you aren't a lawyer. I already know that. If you were a lawyer, you'd be sitting back shoveling in money like the rest of 'em instead of slaving over seven columns a week.

You say you want to help people. Well, I need plenty right now. My wife and I went to an open-air theater last week and sat right behind a couple of gabby women. We asked them very nicely — twice — if they would keep their traps shut so we could hear the lines. They said they paid to get in, just like we did, and were there to enjoy themselves. The noisiest one yelled, "If you don't like it, move."

After 25 minutes of listening to those magpies my wife lost her temper and slammed the noisiest one over the head with her umbrella. The woman let out a terrible scream which could have been heard in the next county. The manager rushed over, took our names, refunded our money and asked us to leave.

Yesterday my wife received an order to appear in court. The charge is assault and battery. The loudmouth was neither assaulted nor battered. She had on a wig that a bullet couldn't have pierced. Must my wife go to court and defend herself against these phony charges? — Where's Justice?

Dear W.J.: Since you already know I'm not a lawyer, I don't have to tell you that. I will tell you, however, that you'd better hire one because your wife received a summons and this means no foolin'.

The "loudmouth" may not have been battered but a blow on the head is considered assault — and there's a law against it.

Dear Ann: Our neighbor's daughter is getting married and my daughter is a bridesmaid along with two other neighbor girls. Last night the bride's mother held a shower in the community center building. After the shower she presented the three bridesmaids with a bill for $52. They were to share the cost equally.

Since there was cake left over, the girls divided it to take home. The bride's mother stormed out of the building, calling them "hogs." Please set me straight. Were the girls wrong to take the cake? Also, was it their place to pay for the shower? What are the duties of bridesmaids these days? — Need Updating

Dear Up: I cannot imagine such gall as handing the bridesmaids a bill for a shower, unless it was agreed in advance that they would pay for it. As for taking the cake home — if the girls accepted the bill they automatically became "hostesses," which entitled them to it.

Dear Ann: I have an answer for insensitive people who compare the size of children. Our son is small for his age. I'm tired of biting my tongue when acquaintances (I'd hardly call them friends) make remarks such as: "Is he the shortest child in his class?" Or, "I can't believe he's seven. Look at how much taller my son is."

I invented an answer out of desperation 12 years ago and it has never failed to stop the questioner cold. Just smile and say sweetly: "We've always told Johnny we'd rather he be short and smart than big and dumb (long pause), like some people." It works! — Oklahoma Reader

Dear Okla.: Your comeback says it all. Thanks for sharing.

A DAILY MESSAGE FROM The Newspaper Bible

Mark 8:10-26, The Living Bible

10 Immediately after this He got into a boat with His disciples and came to the region of Dalmanutha.

11 When the local Jewish leaders learned of His arrival they came to argue with Him. "Do a miracle for us," they said. "Make something happen in the sky. Then we will believe in you."

12 His heart fell when He heard this and He said, "Certainly not. How many more miracles do you people need?"

13 So He got back into the boat and left them, and crossed to the other side of the lake.

15 As they were crossing, Jesus said to them very solemnly, "Beware of the yeast of King Herod and of the Pharisees."

16 "What does He mean?" the disciples asked each other. They finally decided that He must be talking about their forgetting to bring bread.

17 Jesus realized what they were discussing and said, "No, that isn't it at all! Can't you understand? Are your hearts too hard to take it in?

18 As Isaiah declared, 'Your eyes are to see with—why don't you look? Why don't you open your ears and listen?' Don't you remember anything at all?

19 What about the 5,000 men I fed with five loaves of bread? How many basketfuls of scraps did you pick up afterwards?" "Twelve," they said.

20 "And when I fed the 4,000 with seven loaves, how much was left?" "Seven basketfuls," they said.

21 "And yet you think I'm worried that we have no bread?"

22 When they arrived at Bethsaida, some people brought a blind man to Him and begged Him to touch and heal him.

23 Jesus took the blind man by the hand and led him out of the village, and spat upon his eyes, and laid His hands over them. "Can you see anything now?" Jesus asked him.

24 The man looked around. "Yes!" he said, "I see men! But I can't see them very clearly; they look like tree trunks walking around!"

25 Then Jesus placed His hands over the man's eyes again and as the man stared intently, his sight was completely restored, and he saw everything clearly, drinking in the sights around him.

26 Jesus sent him home to his family. "Don't even go back to the village first," He said.

Louisiana Home Yields Insight Of Plantation Family, Artist

Although it remained in one family for a century and a quarter, Shadows-on-the-Teche in New Iberia, La., is a house with two distant yet equally lively histories.

Both histories — when it was the town house of a wealthy Southern plantation family and when it was an artist's retreat frequently visited by famous 20th century personalities — are proudly displayed to visitors.

Shadows-on-the-Teche (or "The Shadows", as it is known to Louisianians) is a museum open to the public, owned by the National Trust for Historic Preservation, a private, nonprofit organization.

Surrounded by lush semitropical vegetation, the house on Bayou Teche dates to 1834, when it was completed for cane and cotton planter David Weeks. The materials used in its construction, primarily soft pink bricks and cypress wood, came from the estate. Classical Revival was the architectural rage in the early 1800s, and the house reflects that fashion, allowing for such Louisiana adaptations as opposing windows and doorways to provide for cross ventilation in the hot, humid Gulf Coast climate.

Weeks ordered furnishings, carpets and other fine decoration to be shipped by steamboat from New Orleans and other cities. He enjoyed his new house for only a few months when, in a vain attempt to recover his failing health, he sailed for New Haven, Conn., in the spring of 1834. He died in August.

His widow, aided by her brothers, took on the responsibility for educating the six children and managing the Weeks plantations. In 1841 she married Judge John Moore, a member of the U.S. House of Representatives, and the family prospered. The Shadows became a place of soirees on the bayou bank, and gatherings of family and friends with legendary antebellum hositality.

Sketch by William Wagner, FAIA

The Civil War brought an end to the traditional plantation life, and the Shadows began to decline. New Iberia was a headquarters for the Union army during the Red River Campaign of 1864. The troops confined the aging Mrs. Moore to a room on the upper floor, where she died in indignation.

After the war The Shadows remained in the Weeks family, but the mansion continued to deteriorate.

Then in 1922 a new era began for the stately house. Weeks Hall, the great-grandson of The Shadows builder, returned from service in World War I and art studies in Paris to find the building drifting to ruin in a tangle of neglected gardens under the great oaks his great-grandmother had planted. He determined to spend the rest of his life restoring the house, the gardens and the air of gracious hospitality that The Shadows was meant to offer.

His admirers described Weeks Hall as "the last of the Southern gentlemen." During the 1920s and 1930s Hall invited many of his famous friends to visit him. They signed their names on a prized door, and even today the signatures of H.L. Mencken, W.C. Fields, Cecil B. deMille, Mae West, the Lunts, Henry Miller and other notables can be seen in the ground floor office.

Because of his concern for the future of the house, upon his death in 1958 he left The Shadows to the National Trust, which has preserved the entire estate, including the colorful gardens, a variety of furnishings from the late 18th to the early 20 centuries, and thousands of family records.

For Hall then, and for many visitors today, The Shadows is more than a priceless family heirloom. It is also a place of haunting beauty and peace. Hall, a sensitive artist, said it best: "Nothing in life has meant, or will mean, more to me than this garden on a summer morning before sunrise. At all hours, no place is more tranquil nor more ageless. Its inherent charm to me has been in its placid seclusion from a changing world, and in that will be its value to others."

REMODELING IDEA — Shutter decor and huge ceiling fans combine to give a tropical feeling to this kitchen with natural wood cabinets and the latest appliances in almond. The double-oven range has a self-cleaning master oven and removable panels and shelves in the smaller oven that can be cleaned in the master oven. The vented hood includes a light for brightening the cooking area. A dishwasher and trash compactor flank the sink to form a clean-up center. The no-frost double-door refrigerator/freezer provides ample storage, and a microwave oven stands ready to be pressed into service at any time.

New Canine Biography Reveals History, Legend of Pekingese

By JAY SCRIBA
Women's News Service

Marco Polo admired the Pekengese in the 13th century: "golden coated, nimble dogs," romping in the jade pavilions of Kublai Khan.

The breed was ancient then, with tantalizing chroniclers' hints dating back to 500 B.C. Most delightful, according to Peke lovers, is this legend:

"Once upon a time a lioness grew tired of the brute attentions of her mate and yielded to the delicate caresses of a butterfly. The result of this was the Pekingese and ever afterwards these little dogs have had to be as brave as lions and as dainty as butterflies."

It might be merely amusing except that Chinese emperors really did breed Pekingese to resemble lions, making up for Peking's chronic lion shortage with dogs doughtly enough to stand in for the spirit King of Beasts that holy Budda kept up his voluminous sleeve.

And old Chinese art and literature are alive with Pekes frisking on painted scrolls, posed in exquisite carvings, working their cuddly wiles in proverbs.

Thus in her delightful new canine biography, "The Butterfly Lions: The Pekingese in History, Legend and Art" British authro Rummer Godden suggests that the breed has been wickedly maligned a rich ladies' lapdogs.

True, some have been "pampered and delicate, dressed in coats, bad-tempered, even snappy, sheezing, snoring and so adipose they can only waddle." True, too, that imperial Pekes once lounged on brocaded red silk, in cages made of cloisonne and white jade, with carrying rings for the palace eunuchs. Author Godden also writes that "they are the only puppies I know that will pull daisies and play with them."

Yet the fact is most Pekingese detest laps, are wary of fondling, and snore because of what centuries of human breeders have done to their delicate noses. For this connoisseur's dog is truly a noble animal, fastidious of fleas and dirt, aloof from the nastiness that other dogs love to roll in, yet ready for a frolic in foulest wet weather.

Even a miniature Peke can be brave as a lion, hurling its four-pound ball of fluff at wolfhounds that break its neck with a casual shake. Godden had one named Piers, "the most aristocratic name I could think of," that once took a Sussex town bus to go rabbiting on the downs, before catching another home.

Is it true that Pekingese were once train bearers at the Dragon Throne, taking the Son of Heaven's trailing robes in their mouths?

To this day, a Peke will take a piece of cloth in its mouth and gase up expectantly.

Are their feet really so feathery-furred that you can scarely hear them scampering?

It was the old Empress Tzu-hsi who, during the 1800s, had breeders create Pekes with feet so feathery-furred that they didn't disturb her daily siesta.

But let us visit the little dogs in their heyday, at the Summer Palace outside Peking, with its Hill of Tranquil Longevity, its Garden of Clear Rippling Waters, its tile roofs in imperial yellow.

Only royalty were allowed to own these "sleeve," or "beneath the table" dogs, as early travelers called them. So nearly divine were they that even household servants had to avert their eyes if they met one. Often a lonely princess' sole comfort, they were bedecked with silver bells and tassels of pedigree on silken collars. Even their food and medicine were special, although probably not as exotic as suggested in the famous "Pearls Dropped by the Lips of Her Imprial Majesty Tzu-hsi Dowager Empress of the Flowery Land of Confucius":

"Sharks' fins and curfews' livers and the breasts of quails, on these it may be fed...And for the day of sickness let it be annointed with the clarified fat of the leg of a sacred leopard, and give it drink a throstle's eggshell full of the juice of a custard apple in which has been dissolved three pinches of shredded rhinocreros horn, and apply to it piebald leeches."

It's a wonder any Pekingese survived to yap defiance at British-French invaders who sacked the Summer Palace in 1858 — in climax of the shameful "Opium Wars," fought literally to force addiction on the Chinese in return for profit.

But, so the story goes, five were salvaged when British soldiers broke into a locked pavillion to find them guarding a young court woman who had committed suicide rather than fall into the hands of the "red barbarians."

Most famous was "Lootie," the ironically named dog Maj. Hart Dunne gave to Queen Victoria. Dunne warned that "if not made much of, she will die." Yet even as a kenneled curiosity at Windsor, she lived 11 more years, proof of the longeity of a breed that has reached 25. Meanwhile a trickle of other bought, stolen and smuggled royal Pekes established the breed as an aristocratic British fad, a livelier chinoiserie.

Like peacocks or swans, a hamper of frolicking Pekingese gave one's baronial lawn a regal touch of class. The Peke was smart enough to hitch a ride across a swift stream, nipping onto the tail of a friendly swimming Labrador. It won so many obedience trails that its masters were finally asked not to enter, as the larger dogs were looking too silly.

Even the hard-nosed American financier, J.P. Morgan, became so itrigued that he offered 32,000 pounds, the highest price ever offered for any dog of any breed, for an English champion. He then offered a blank check, which was also refused — by Mrs. Clarice Ashton Cross, whose snooty Alderbourne Kennels have won thousands of Peke awards.

These early Western Pekes appear inferior when their photos are compared with the dogs on old Chinese court scrolls. Although the Summer Palace exiles were royal, imperial refugees apparently fled with the best. Yet English breeders were so good that, as early as 1913, it was easier to buy a good Peke in London than in Peking. And by 1921, rich Chinese were buying dogs in England.

The fierce Fu dog, incidentally, is not a Peke, but a legendary demon said to guard graves, temples and pavillions by dark of night. A more probable relative is a Haltese breed, brought over the ancient silk caravan route during Roman times. There are even fanciful tales of monkey lineage.

As if it were not enough to be a royal Manchu Pekingese, bounding over the Jade Girdle Bridge, past the Peony Terrace, after a butterfly on Ten Thousand Years Hill.

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH

BY
DR. GEORGE C. THOSTESON

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Our two-year-old son gets diarrhea when he eats fruits and vegetables. Our doctor does not seem to know the cause or how long it will last. It's been over a year now. Over a long period of time, isn't he missing some valuable nutrients? His skin is getting an unhealthy look. — R.T.

You have painted your son's allergy with a mighty broad brush — all fruits and vegetables. Can't things be narrowed down a bit more than that?

Legumes (peas, etc.) are potent allergens (reaction producers), but depending on the individual, tomatoes, celery, cabbage, cauliflower, white potatoes, carrots, squash, even lettuce can be irritating. Soybeans, which are found in all sorts of prepared foods these days, can be allergy producers. The same goes for fruits. Some are more potent allergens than others. The ones with seeds seem to be more so than those without. But there is no point in going down the whole list, which is literally endless when one speaks of allergies. Has the possibility of a milk intolerance been suggested?

Indeed, this younster is missing many valuable nutrients by excluding all the fruits and vegetables. That leaves only grains, meats and dairy products. The skin condition you mention in your letter could stem from deficiencies of those vegetable and fruit nutrients.

If you cannot do your own detective work in tracing specific causes of his reaction, you should consult an allergist, who is trained in these matters. Fruits and vegetables provide a wide range of vitamins he needs to grow properly. If he is not getting them, he will need supplements.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: My blood pressure is 160/100. Because I cannot take the regular medication for this, my doctor has put me on tranquilizers. They seem to have calmed me down and my pressure has come down a bit. I've never heard of tranquilizers being used for high blood pressure. What do you think? — Mrs. J.D.

Tranquilizers are commonly used when anxiety and tension are a factor in high blood pressure. If your pressure has dropped, then there is nothing wrong with it. But you might help eliminate the need by understanding and conquering the causes of your tension. It is important to know why you cannot use regular high blood pressure medicines. Tranquilizers do not get at the other (non-anxiety) part of your problem.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: About a year ago I had my cervix removed and the doctor used some silver nitrate. I've been afraid to get into the tub for fear there is still some of it in me that would get into the water. I am afraid even to touch my underclothes and I wash my hands seven or eight times a day. I am worried about touching food. — Mrs. E.F.

It is too bad your fears put you to all of this trouble. The silver nitrate (a cauterizing agent) has long since disappeared from your body and you can return to a sensible routine.

• • •

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is it possible for a person to have two gall bladders? During a routine examination I guess the X-ray showed I had two of them. The doctors said not to worry, but that it is rare. How rare is it? — S.K.

You're the one person in about 4,000 who has this anomaly. There are two separate bladders and two separate ducts leading from them. It's a plus for you. If you develop stones in one, the other will be there standing by for emergency action. These anomalies are genetic quirks.

Senior citizens will receive prompt replies, but a stamped, self-addressed envelope must be included with the request. The most useful replies will be printed in this column.)

HEARTLINE: My husband has recently passed away. I have four children who are all grown and married and have children of their own. I also have a rather large savings account that I do not want tied up in probate after I die.

My oldest daughter has been named executor of my will. I also want her wishes to prevail with regards to this account. Is there anything I can do to make it easier for her to withdraw money from my savings if I die suddenly or become ill? — N.T.

The first thing to do in this case is to get the advice of your attorney. This is because he or she can more easily see your entire financial picture and help decide what is best for you.

Here is one possibility for you to consider: establish a trust account at your bank, and name your daughter beneficiary to this account. Talk to a person in the trust department of your local bank about specific conditions.

Along with the trust account, which will allow you full control over this while you are alive, you might grant your daughter power of attorney so that she can handle your affairs if you become incapable of doing this. This assures that your daughter would have access to your account if you became ill.

To sign your daughter as a joint owner of your savings account may be practical for the moment, but some problems may develop later. For one thing, in the event of your death, anyone can contest her ownership of the account. And if you were the source of the most money of the account, it may be easy to establish her ineligibility to the claim.

With the combination trust account and the grant of power of attorney, you probably won't have the account probated. But, as in the case with any legal problem, consult an attorney to be sure you cover all aspects of gift and inheritance laws pertaining to your situation. Generally, state laws vary.

HEARTLINE: My father is 80 years old and he is in the hospital recovering from a stroke. He is going to have to be moved to a skilled nursing facility very shortly. Would Medicare cover the cost of an ambulance in these circumstances? — N.E.

Medicare's Part "B" medical insurance covers 80 percent of the reasonable charges for ambulance service only when both of the following conditions are met:

1. The ambulance service, its equipment and personnel must meet Medicare requirements.

2. Transportation of the patient by any other means could endanger the patient's life.

Medical Insurance will only pay the reasonable charges for transportation to the nearest facility. Transportation under these conditions applies when being transported from a hospital to a skilled nursing facility, hospital to hospital, or skilled nursing facility to a person's home.

For all persons on Medicare or going on Medicare shortly, Heartline has a very easy to understand book covering the whole program. To order, send $1.75 to Heartline's Guide to Medicare, 114 East Dayton St., West Alexandria, Ohio 45381. Please allow six weeks for delivery.

HEARTLINE: I used my home loan eligibility shortly after World War II and recently sold that home. Can I use my VA loan guaranty again to buy another home now? — J.D.

If your previous loan has been paid in full, you are eligible for another VA loan guaranty. The current interest rate is 8.75 percent.

Big Carrier Wins Vote; Senate Says 'No More'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Tuesday approved a $36 billion military authorization bill including $2 billion for a nuclear aircraft carrier that could be the last in a long line of these giant ships.

The bill, authorizing funds for weapons spending and research in the budget year beginning Oct. 1, was approved on a 87-2 vote with only Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and William Proxmire, D-Wis., in dissent.

A House-approved version of the bill would authorize $38 billion. Differences between them will have to be ironed out by Senate and House negotiators.

Earlier, by a voice vote, the Senate adopted a policy statement asserting that future aircraft carriers must be substantially smaller and less costly that the current line of 1,000-foot-long ships.

Critics described the large carriers as "helpless dinosaurs in the ocean" which are highly vulnerable to guided missiles and "may last only 10 minutes after the outbreak of war."

Even so, they said they would not oppose the nuclear carrier that had been added to the authorization bill by the Senate Armed Services Committee over the objections of the Carter administration.

The House already has approved construction of a carrier — the fifth of the Nimitz class.

Sen. John Culver, D-Iowa, said his carrier amendment puts the president and the Pentagon "on notice that this No. 12 is the last one." Culver noted that the Navy has said it needs no more than 12 big carriers.

"Many of us have said we don't need the 12th one or it's highly questionable," Culver said, adding, however, that he would support the ship.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, supported Culver's amendment, saying:

"I hope and think it's true this is the last bill that will have a carrier of this type."

He said, however, the policy statement "can't bind or prohibit any president."

The statement would require that all future carriers be smaller ones "unless and until the president has fully advised the Congress that construction of such ships is not in the national interest."

Even then, the amendment would require the president to give Congress proposals for alternatives to the large ships.

By a 68-22 vote, the Senate rejected an amendment by Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., to kill a provision authorizing $983 million for the first nine production models of the F-18 fighter aircraft.

Future Fleet Worries New Navy Chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. Thomas Hayward, the Navy's new chief, said Tuesday he is concerned whether the planned future fleet will be big enough to control the seas.

"I'm going to want a navy that will be larger than you can get with 15" new ships a year, Hayward said in his first meeting with Pentagon reporters since becoming chief of naval operations last week.

The Carter administration's shipbuilding plan, drasticaly reduced from Navy proposals earlier this year, contemplates a construction rate at about that level for four of the next five years.

Hayward obviously had no intention of picking a fight with the Carter administration, stressing that "I appreciate the problems that the leadership of this nation faces and the priorities that they place."

If carried out as now projected, the Carter administration program would give the United States a fleet of more than 525 ships by 1984, according to Defense Secretary Harold Brown's calculations. It now totals 459 ships, about the smallest since before World War II.

Hayward said that, "obviously, I'd like to see a larger Navy than it is today." But he cited no specific objective in numbers. He did say he would not support a 600-ship goal, which was the Navy's aim in past years.

Following the standard Navy line, the four-star admiral said, "we've got to build another carrier" as a top priority to replace the aging Midway. But he left himself room to support either a giant new nuclear-powered ship or a smaller oil-burning vessel favored by the administration.

That issue will be decided by Congress anyway, and it appears the House and Senate will vote a $2.4 billion nuclear carrier over the objections of President Carter and Brown.

Hayward stressed the importance of maintaining an edge in quality of ships and weapons over the Russians. He said they also are emphasizing quality as they, too, move toward limiting the size of their navy because of cost.

In general, Hayward said, he finds that the U.S. Navy is "in a lot better shape than a lot of people think it is in."

He said he foresees "no major course change" in the Navy's worldwide mission under the Carter administration.

And Hayward said that, like his predecessor Adm. James Holloway, he will give the highest priority to improving Navy life so trained and qualified sailors and officers will remain in service.

Name Change Set For Hospital

A-J Correspondent

BROWNFIELD — Brownfield General Hospital will change its name to Brownfield Regional Medical Center Hospital within a year.

The new name, according to Dan Powers, administrator, will more properly identify the services offered by the hospital to patients not only in Terry County Hospital District.

A recent study indicates that 30 per cent of the patient load comes from persons outside the district.

Expansion of the hospital is under way. Not only will the plant be enlarged, but the hospital is planning to expand its services to include nuclear medicine and improved diagnostic and therapy services.

"There is a trend now toward regional medical centers of the nature which we have in Brownfield. We provide an outstanding full general service with outstanding staff and medical personnel," Powers said.

According to Powers, the three main considerations which have gone into the long-range plan for the hospital includes the quality of care, preventing rural patients from having to travel long distances to seek medical aid, and the economic benefit to the community which the hospital provides.

The hospital has an annual budget of about $3 million, much of which is spent within the county hospital district.

Repair Work Near Completion

A-J Correspondent

PADUCAH — Cottle County Commissioners meeting here Monday learned work on a new heating and cooling system for the county courthouse should be completed by sometime early next week.

Contractors for the nearly $35,000 project told commissioners the last duct for the new system is scheduled to be installed by Sunday, with work on lowering ceilings and installing new lights scheduled for completion soon after.

High ceilings and poor lighting at the courthouse have caused some problems in the past with visitors at the facility being unable to hear proceedings.

Commissioners also viewed work being done to renovate the current courtroom for the justice of the peace to serve as both a JP court, a state district court and a county court.

Also approved was a proposal to advertise for bids on an oil and gas lease on the 80-acre county farm and a proposal to transfer $500 to both the ambulance and airport accounts from the general funds.

County tax assessor-collector Rue Young won approval of a request for $600 to pay salaries of extra office personnel, and county judge Roger Holley was authorized to obtain fire extinguishers for halls and offices in the county building.

County commissioners will convene again at 9 a.m. Thursday as the board of equalization.

State Court Hears Equal Rights Case

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court hears arguments Wednesday on one of its first cases arising from the state's Equal Rights Amendment.

Lawyers for Ann P. Miller of Dallas will argue that the Tyler Court of Civil Appeals' decision that the Texas ERA gives wives the right to collect money damages for loss of consortium.

Mrs. Miller sued David Andrew Whittlesey for $50,000, claiming he caused an auto accident in which her husband was injured. The injuries, she said, deprived her of consortium with her husband.

Courts have defined consortium as "conjugal fellowship of husband and wife, and the right of each to the company, cooperation, affection and aid of the other in every conjugal relation."

A Dallas trial judge threw out Mrs. Miller's case, saying that wives do not have standing to sue for loss of consortium although husbands can file such suits.

But the Tyler Court of Civil Appeals said the Texas ERA, adopted by the voters in 1972, changed all that. It said the Dallas court had to hear Mrs. Miller's suit. Whittlesey then appealed to the Supreme Court.

Cost Fears Delay Rent Program

and is mostly black," said Storey. "But it appears they forgot two things. One, we discussed this matter in a preapplication conference and we were told to go ahead and apply. Secondly, the criteria for impaction are different when applying for rehabilitation (in this case) and new construction."

Storey said other points raised by HUD have been answered in a letter by Mayor Dirk West. The letter asks that the city be allowed to file an amended application, possibly cutting down the size of the project, or at least to forward the matter on to Washington for a decision at HUD's central office.

Storey said he expects a reply in about a week.

Storey also drew a distinction between the project and other rent subsidy programs such as the city's Greenfair Manor.

"The difference is that Greenfair is publicly owned and this would be private," he said.

Storey said landlords would work directly with HUD in qualifying tenants for the rent subsidies.

James E. Lancaster, Lubbock County commissioner and treasurer of SPAG, said the subsidy, in effect, made the proposed project a kind of public housing, part of "a never-ending cycle."

Another county commissioner, Coy E. Biggs, said, "When you deal with HUD, they come along and tell you what you need for parks and schools and services."

"That's another issue," said Storey.

"It's all our money," said Biggs.

Mrs. Jordan moved to table consideration of the matter until next month, saying that any hesitancy now "will really red-flag it at HUD."

Part of her objection to the proposal was spurred by the impression that it had not been presented to the city council. Storey said that it was his understanding the item was considered in a council work session.

The SPAG board went on to approve, with little discussion, two other programs in Lubbock involving rental subsidies, but they apply to new construction.

With $1.2 million from HUD, construction of 40 three or four-bedroom dwellings at 24th Street and Albany Avenue is planned. The favorable recommendation, SPAG stipulated, was not intended to circumvent existing zoning in the area, which would have to be changed if HUD is eventually to approve the project.

Another project, with a cost not yet determined and also subject to housing assistance payments, entails construction of 66 units at 74th Street and Avenue X and 78 units at 56th Street and Chicago Avenue.

SPAG also granted favorable comment to a $622,873 staffing grant for the Central Plains Mental Health-Mental Retardation Center in Plainview.

The board concurred with comments from South Plains Health Systems in suggesting a cutback of services if more money is not allocated to meet required goals. It also noted, using state standards, that Floyd, Motley, Bailey and Lamb counties are especially underserved in the area of mental health and retardation.

Other grant applications, totaling almost $3 million, which received approval from the SPAG board of directors included:

—$1.5 million from HUD to Plainview for housing rehabilitation, street paving, park improvements and economic development, estimated to benefit 5,046 low to moderate-income persons;

—$325,000 from HUD to Morton for street improvements and housing rehabilitation in low and moderate-income neighborhoods;

—$250,000 from HUD to Earth for paving, water and sewer improvements in low and moderate-income areas;

—$200,000 from HUD to Anton for water and street improvements in low and moderate income neighborhoods;

—$21,000 from Bureau of Outdoor Recreation and local taxes for construction of two lighted and fenced tennis courts on school property to benefit an estimated 400 low to moderate-income persons.

The board also authorized Truett Mayes, SPAG executive director, to apply for a $35,540 grant from the Farmers Home Administration, matched by almost $12,000 in SPAG money, to finance local planning sessions.

"There would be city-by-city participation in these 'brainstorming' sessions," said Mayes. "The idea is to get local people to set the goals for their communities. It's been very successful with some other area towns."

SPAG also will renew its membership in the National Association of Regional Councils at a cost of $2,653 a year. Tabled until next month were the nominations to fill vacancies on the South Plains Health Systems with representatives from Lamb, Lubbock and Yoakum counties.

Water District Studies Check Of Open Wells

The High Plains Underground Water Conservation District recently warned of the potential dangers of 262 abandoned, open water wells in Lubbock County, but many landowners apparently have not taken heed.

The district sent letters out warning that accidents, such as a small child falling into the open pits — many of which are hidden by brush and debris — could occur if they were not capped immediately.

However, a recent check of 31 of the uncovered wells has shown that 18 were properly covered, 11 improperly capped and two were not even touched, assistant district manager Don Smith said Tuesday at the district's board meeting.

District manager Wayne Wyatt told board members the district might have to take stronger action against landowners if they did not start covering the hazards properly.

In other action, directors voted to raise the deposit for applying for a drilling permit from $10 to $50. Dean Thompson, the district's public information officer, said applicants can get their deposits refunded by submitting information on the completed well back to the district, abandoning the well site before drilling starts or the application is not accepted.

Too Much Partying For Bullock

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock blew out the candles on his birthday cake but he refused a few hours later to take a breath test when arrested on suspicion of drunken driving.

The 49-year-old state official was stopped about 1:40 a.m. Tuesday in North Austin by two officers who said he sat through a green traffic light then drove over the street curb numerous times.

Both tires on the right side of Bullock's bronze and white Cadillac were flat when Bullock finally stopped in answer to the patrol car's blinking red light, said Officer Mark Smith.

Smith and his fellow officer reported Bullock was "very cooperative" but declined an alcohol breath test.

Bullock's wife and another couple were in the car.

Bullock told the officers he had "a few beers" at a birthday celebration in an Austin steak house.

Bullock was booked in city jail on a complaint of driving while intoxicated then released about two hours later to his attorney, Randall Wood, a former top official in the comptroller's office.

At 7:30 a.m. he appeared before Municipal Judge Alberto Garcia, who released him on $500 personal bond. Arraignment on the charge was set for July 25.

"It was my birthday and he didn't recognize it," Bullock said of the appearance before the judge.

The new program will cover magnetic levitation and conventional rail technology, urban transportation systems, motor vehicles and traffic engineering, the department said.

White Says NY Times Must Disclose Notes

White's refusal left intact a New Jersey court's order that the Times hand over to it notes, tape recordings and documents or be held in contempt of court.

White left the door open, however, for the Times to return if the state judge rules that the subpoenaed material may be used by defense lawyers in the murder case.

"There is no present authority in this court that a newsman need not produce documents material to the prosecution or defense of a criminal case," White said in referring to a series of 1972 Supreme Court decisions.

"But," he added, "if the court is to address the issue tendered by (the Times), it appears to me that it would prefer to do so at a later stage in these proceedings."

The materials in question were gathered by Times reporter Myron A. Farber while preparing stories about the deaths of five hospital patients at Riverdell Hospital in Oradell, N.J., in 1965 and 1966.

A 1966 investigation of the deaths ended with no criminal charges being filed. After Farber's articles appeared in 1975, however, Dr. Mario Jascalevich was indicted on five counts of murder. Jascalevich was known as Dr. X in early news accounts.

Jascalevich is charged with committing murder by using curare, a powerful muscle-relaxing drug. His trial is under way in Bergen County Superior Court.

In response to a request by Jascalevich's lawyer, presiding Judge William J. Arnold ordered the newspaper and Farber to surrender all materials on the curare deaths.

But Arnold's order specifies that the material is to be given to him for a confidential inspection. He then will decide whether to give the material to Jascalevich's lawyer for trial use.

White's action Tuesday appears to leave the Times free to appeal such an Arnold decision when and if it comes.

"The asserted federal issue might not survive the trial court's in camera (private) inspection should (the Times) prevail," White said.

Arnold's order was upheld by a state appeals court and the New Jersey Supreme Court, and he gave the Times until 10 a.m. Friday to answer why it should not be held in contempt of court for not supplying the subpoenaed material.

The Times' emergency request had been submitted to Justice William J. Brennan Jr. on Monday but was sent to White when Brennan, a former member of the New Jersey Supreme Court, excused himself from the case.

In the request, lawyers for the newspaper and Farber said Judge Arnold had cleared the way for "the wholesale invasion of a reporter's investigative file."

If given a chance, they said, they would attempt to prove that Arnold's order violates the Constitution's free-press guarantees.

Jobs Available To Elderly Poor

WASHINGTON (AP) — It will be easier for older, low-income persons to obtain part-time federal jobs under new rules announced by the Labor Department.

Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said the department has amended its Senior Community Service Employment Program to include older Americans with incomes slightly above the poverty level.

The change increases by 25 percent the income eligibility standards for the program, which offers 37,500 jobs nationwide to persons aged 55 and older.

Marshall said that frequently persons with incomes slightly above the poverty level are in greater need of employment than individuals with incomes at or below the poverty level. This, he said, is because such individuals do not receive additional benefits available to the poor.

As an example, the individual nonfarm poverty level in the 48 contiguous states is $3,140. Under the new rule, a person would be eligible for the work program if his income were $3,925 or less.

Program participants work in a variety of activities in such places as day care centers, schools, hospitals, senior citizen centers and on beautification, conservation and restoration projects.

Persons interested in participating in the program should contact their local state employment service offices, Labor Department officials said.

Chinese Students Object To Politics

HONG KONG (AP) — Chinese medical students complain they spend too little time studying and too much time being politically indoctrinated, according to a letter published in Peking's official People's Daily newspaper.

Junior students of the Chungshan Medical School in Kwangtung province wrote in the July 5 issue of the newspaper, seen here Tuesday, that political indoctrination amounted to one-sixth of study time.

They complained that a science course in electrochemistry, which originally required 12 hours to learn, had now been cut to four hours.

But they had to undergo political indoctrination two afternoons a week as well as four extra "four formal political lessons, they wrote."

Wife-Beater Gets Three-Year Term

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A man has been sentenced to three years in prison for severely beating his wife after chaining her ankles together. "The beneficial effect of this sentence is it will serve as a warning to all those men who beat up on their wives," said David Reed, Alameda County deputy distict attorney.

Mauricio Perez of Oakland was sentenced Monday by Superior Court Judge Allen Broussard on charges of assault with a deadly weapon and false imprisonment.

Step 2: Now find the corresponding number for the month you were born. If your month is February, and your year numbers were preceded by a B, your month numbers would be 8 for Physical, 3 for Emotional and 31 for Intellectual. Enter your own numbers in the figure chart for Step 2.

Step 3: In the figure chart, enter your day of birth three times, one each for Physical (P), Emotional (E) and Intellectual (I). (If you were born on April 3, for instance, place a 3 in each column.)

Add the three columns to derive your permanent biorhythm numbers for your Physical, Emotional and Intellectual cycles. Now you can refer to today's rhythms.

These numbers are yours permanently. Check them each day for your biorhythm reading.

Hazardous Exports Criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration was criticized by members of a House subcommittee Tuesday as doing too little to prevent the export of hazardous products and substances that have been banned in the United States.

Pesticides such as DDT, such drugs as the contraceptive Depo Provera, children's sleepwear treated with the flame-retardant tris and certain baby pacifiers are among the products and substances that have been restricted here but sold elsewhere.

Rep. Robert Drinan, D-Mass., said that at a minimum other nations should be notified when products or substances have been banned in the United States.

"Why can't that be done today? It seems to me to be so elementary," Drinan asked presidential consumer adviser Esther Peterson.

Mrs. Peterson said that an interagency task force established by the president in May is expected to make recommendations in September and that might be one of them. The task force has representatives from most federal departments.

Drinan asked if a "moral policy" shouldn't be established that would prevent the sale overseas of products deemed unfit for the American market.

But Mrs. Peterson suggested that "differing economic, social and cultural conditions in a foreign country may suggest that a product whose use is banned or severely restricted in the United States may be justifiable for use in that country."

Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., pointed out that $5 million worth of children's sleepwear treated with Tris, a suspected cancer-causing flame retardant, was exported after sale of the garments was halted.

Rosenthal, chairman of a commerce, consumer and monetary affairs subcommittee that has been examining the problem, said the extent of exports of banned products is "significant."

As an example, more than six million pounds of cancelled or suspended pesticides were exported in 1976 and 25 million gallons of DDT were exported last year, he said.

More than 500,000 baby pacifiers were exported after a ban was proposed on them on June 30, 1977, because they could cause choking deaths in infants. Most manufacturers redesigned their products for sale in the United States before the ban went into effect Feb. 26.

Mrs. Peterson told the subcommittee, which is a unit of the House Government Operations Committee, that the uneven treatment of exports has led to ironic situations like the one with Depo Provera, an injectable contraceptive.

Robert Pitofsky, who has been a law professor at New York University, Georgetown University and Harvard University, participated as commissioner for the first time Monday after Senate confirmation.

The fifth place on the commission has been vacant since the resignation of Calvin Collier at the end of 1977.

Fitness Authority Jogging His Way To Health, Wealth

DALLAS (AP) — A strange phenomenon is sweeping Fat City USA thanks at least in part to a balding, ex-Air Force officer who got tired of being tired.

On any given day now, you can see some of the most unlikely bodies sweating their way through the nation's parks, up and down sidewalks, even sending motorists into tire-screeching spasms at busy intersections.

Dr. Kenneth Cooper, America's jogging guru, is deserving of the title but he's not about to quit now that he's got a sizeable chunk of humanity to "run for your life." He is fast approaching 17,000 miles, jogged over a period of 18 years.

Cooper's wife, Millie, predicts he will one day be remembered as the "father of physical fitness" with his bronze likeness caught in a jogging pose that is sure to keep the pigeons at a distance.

If the heart patients who have read Cooper's books or the ones who flock to his clinic here — 3,000 last year — don't erect a statue, chances are excellent the folks who make those snazzy jogging shoes and warmup suits will.

Cooper's first literary effort, "Aerobics" and three sequels are largely credited with sparking the running renaissance. The books have sold more than six million copies in 22 countries.

Webster's Dictionary defines aerobics as being "able to live, grow or take place only where free oxygen is present." In keeping with the definition, Cooper's work is aimed at strengthening an individual's cardiovascular system.

During his Air Force years, statistics showed only two percent of the personnel were over 50, but the leading cause of death in males was heart attack. Cooper's civilian research expanded on tests designed to determine the level of fitness in airmen.

Today, with heart disease still considered the leading killer in the country, people of all ages and sizes line up to be tested at Cooper's clinic for undiagnosed heart trouble or ways to prevent it. A separate research facility continues to study ways to combat heart problems.

Cooper, however, is not content with spreading the gospel of good health nationwide. He is now a mainstay on the international rubber chicken circuit. In Brazil, which he regards as the "most physically fit country," his name has become synonymous with jogging.

"Have you done your Cooper today?"

What skeptics said was a fad is now one of the biggest new industries anywhere and getting bigger with each purchase of $20 to $40 jogging shoes.

"After my first book was published in 1966, I thought this would all be a fad," Cooper said. "But by October 1977, statistics showed 11 percent of the adult population in the United States over 18 was involved."

The one thing harder to follow than Cooper on the run is Cooper with time to talk about running and its life-saving benefits. The soft, rapid-fire spiel is riddled with medical terms no doubt aimed at some of his envious and sometimes skeptical colleagues.

Translated, Cooper said it all means anyone willing to put forth the effort can feel better and stay healthier. However, it was not always that way — even for him.

"In high school and college, I was a track man," he said. "But when I got into medical school, I shot up to 200 pounds. I told my wife I thought I was dying of stagnation."

Cooper is now 47 and a trim 168 pounds. He averages 15 miles a week and says he hasn't missed a day's work since 1956. His aerobics research facilities are enjoying overwhelming success. Apllicants are encouraged to sign abbreviated contracts "to see if they're serious about the program.

"After all, if they're not," said Cooper, "there's somebody else who is."

Snackable Spacecraft May Travel To Planets

CHICAGO (AP) — The sleepy astronaut stretches and yawns, then reaches out to grab a quick snack as his spacecraft hurtles towards Mars.

He selects the control knob by his bunk. He snaps it off, sighs to himself with pleasure and begins chewing, enjoying the crunchiness and mild flavor.

In Douglas Worf's world, our next space heroes may well eat the ship that carries them to the planets and beyond.

In Robert DelVecchio's world, they almost did.

"It would pay NASA to have someone think this thing out," says Worf, a visiting professor of environmentai studies at North Carolina State University.

"It might well save a flight someday. It might be worth an extra thousand pounds or so. You've got to use materials and designs for as many purposes as possible.

"I don't know, it could well be crazy. If NASA buys it, they may be crazy too. We'll find out."

Worf was chief of biological life support programs for the space agency in the late 1950s when he first came up with the idea for "edible structural materials" — things to build space ships from that could be eaten in a pinch.

Independent of Worf was a small group of scientists at Grumman Aircraft Corp., who in the early 1960s choked back comic images of plump astronauts and produced a pleasant-tasting, strong, board-like substance. It was tough enough to be used in building — so tough it would break teeth, a flaw DelVecchio's men never overcame, though they tried.

Worf and DelVecchio thought parts inside and outside of the spaceship could be made of edible substances, such as proteins and carbohydrates. In an emergency, they reasoned, a desperate astronaut could survive by eating redundant systems and nonessential parts of his rocket and ship.

"We talked about the fact that because weight was such a critical situation in spaceflight, perhaps we could build or construct structures out of material that could be eaten," said DelVecchio, Grumman's chief aerospace physiologist. At the time, he was concerned about life systems for the lunar module — the spacecraft that eventually landed on the moon.

He sent his men to a local supermarket, where they bought nutritious but sticky foods — sugars, starches, binding agents, coloring agents, fudge and the like. Though they felt a little ridiculous about it, they planned to create a gunky mess that tasted good enough to eat and was strong enough to make it to the moon.

For a couple of months, the scientists tried various combinations of food and pressure until they came up with their edible board.

"The time and pressure we put into getting this stuff hard enough wouldn't reverse," said DelVecchio. "You could suck on it, and suck on it all day, and it wouldn't dissolve. You couldn't break it off with your teeth."

For DelVecchio, the failure wasn't a major one. He had spent less than $100 on materials.

Had it worked, he would have recommended use of the edible structural material to the lunar module contractor. He says it's possible the LEM would have had parts astronauts could eat.

Instead, the men from Grumman went on to other things.

Worf, however, never lost his determination to see the thing through. He left NASA in 1962, and since has worked for various companies and government agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, from which he retired.

Now 60, he sees coming soon a day when the space agency will be making long flights — long enough to justify use of instruments and parts that can be eaten, if necessary.

Worf has asked NASA to approve a study to determine, in part, whether reusable designs, such as edible ship parts, should be explored further. He thinks it would cost about $25,000 a year.

The current director of life sciences for NASA at Houston, Richard Johnson, isn't sure about the idea.

"The practicality of having structural members you are going to consume while you fly might sound attractive, but I don't know how the logistics would work out," said Johnson.

And, he said, other research is much more important today.

In 1844, the first public message was sent over a telegraph wire between Washington and Baltimore by Samuel Morse: "What hath God wrought?"

Median At Intersection Sought

The Citizens Traffic Commission Tuesday recommended that a median be placed at 38th Street and University Avenue which would allow 38th Street traffic to turn right only.

Area residents several months ago requested that the commission examine the intersection for a possible traffic signal, but Bill McDaniel, city traffic director, recommended traffic be "channelized" through the use of a median.

Within the past two years the intersection has been the site of 16 accidents.

McDaniel predicted the restriction of through traffic would be "a very controversial thing." He said the median would cost between $2,000 and $3,000 as compared with a signal which would cost the city approximately $20,000.

In other action the board voted to recommend that no parking be allowed on Hartford Avenue between 44th and 45th streets. The no parking zone was requested by area residents at last month's CTC meeting because students from Monterey High School were parking in the block.

Two requests for traffic alterations will be studied by the board.

A request from Gilbert Herrera for a 20-mile per hour school zone on Avenue Q near O.L. Slaton Junior High School will be considered when the board learns of school action on a previous CTC request that the school yard be fenced.

The commission had asked the school district to install the fence to keep students from crossing Avenue Q except at the light at 32nd Street.

The commission also voted to monitor the pedestrian situation after school begins in the fall.

Residents on 32nd Street between Indiana and Quaker avenues will be surveyed to determine their feelings about restricting parking to only one side of the street.

John Morehead, an ex-officio member of the board, requested that the parking be limited to only one side to allow for smoother traffic movement.

The survey also will indicate how far residents would like the parking restricted.

The commission denied a request from Mrs. Jewel Roberts for a four-way stop on Monterey Drive in the vicinity of 55th or 56th streets.

Instead, the commission voted to recommend increased police surveillance and enforcement on the street to remedy a speeding problem on Monterey Drive.

In other action, the CTC recommended that a new driving course for habitual traffic offenders be implemented on a one-year trial basis.

Highway Death Toll On Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — With drivers increasingly ignoring the 55 mile per hour national speed limit, the death toll on U.S. highways rose to 47,671 last year, an increase of 4.7 percent over 1976, the Department of Transportation reported Tuesday.

The DOT cited several factors for the increase but said the major reason was that more than half of America's drivers are breaking the speed limit.

Among other reasons, it said, were the growing automobile population, the greater number of miles driven and an increasing number of bicycles, motorcycles, mopeds and smaller cars on the road.

The 55 mph limit took effect on Jan. 1, 1974, as a fuel conservation measure in response to the Arab oil embargo. The department credits the lower speed with cutting traffic deaths dramatically, from 54,052 in 1973 to 45,196 in 1974 and 44,525 in 1975.

But the downward trend was reversed in 1976, when 45,523 died, and it continued in 1977.

A DOT survey last year disclosed that the average speed of flow-freeing traffic on rural interstate highways was 58 mph, while on urban interstate highways it was 56 mph.

The department attributed about half the fatality reduction since 1974 to lower speeds. Other factors, it said, are motor vehicle safety standards and improved highway design.

The DOT estimated that motor vehicle accidents cost American society more than $43 billion annually. The figure includes medical, funeral, legal, insurance and accident investigation expenses, plus estimates on income and production losses of killed and injured persons.

The figure does not include the value of a lost life, which the department said is incalculable.

The DOT recently launched a media campaign to encourage drivers to comply with the national speed limit. Included was the mailing of 30-second public service announcements to 725 television stations.

Helmetless Cyclists Up Death Rate

AUSTIN (AP) — Since Texas law was changed last year, allowing motorcyclists to unstrap their helmets, motorcycle accident deaths have increased dramatically, state police statistics show.

On Aug. 29, 1977, a 1968 law requiring adult cyclists to wear helmets was repealed. However, cyclists under 18 still must wear headgear.

For the five years before the 1968 law was enacted, the motorcycle death rate averaged 113.58 per 100,000 registered motorcycles, said Jim Robinson of the Department of Public Safety.

The rate dropped to 75.8 per 100,000 following the helmet requirement, but it rose to 94.41 per 100,000 in 1977 following repeal of the helmet law. In 1977, 270 motorcyclists died, compared to 186 in 1976.

"And the increase in deaths is attributable to more than just an increase in accidents, because the accident rate increase was pretty much in line, 13.8 percent, with what we've seen in other years," Robinson said.

During the recent Fourth of July weekend, motorcycle accidents claimed more lives than any other type of accident, he said.

"Usually single-vehicle accidents result in more deaths. This was the first holiday period when motorcycle deaths ran higher," Robinson said.

Only two of the 12 motorcyclists who died during the holiday weekend wore helmets, he said.

Neither DPS nor the Southwest Insurance Information Service has a running total on motorcycle deaths this year. However, both organizations expect deaths to increase annually as long as helmets remain optional for adults.

Rockefeller Services Scheduled For Thursday

POCANTICO HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — The funeral for John Davis Rockefeller III will be held Thursday at Riverside Church, the landmark Manhattan church that his father helped to build.

The family annnounced Tuesday that Riverside's pastor, the Rev. William Sloan Coffin Jr., will officiate at the 11 a.m. services. A private burial will take place at an undisclosed location.

Chief donor of the church at Riverside Drive and 122nd Street was Rockefeller's father, the late John D. Rockefeller Jr. It is Interdenominational-American Baptist and United Church of Christ.

Among messages of condolence that poured into this suburban Westchester County seat of the Rockefeller clan were those from President Carter; Vice President Walter Mondale, who succeeeded Rockefeller's brother, Nelson, in that office; and Sens. Robert Byrd and Jennings Randolph, both from West Virginia, where Rockefeller's son, John D. "Jay" Rockefeller IV, is governor.

The elder Rockefeller, one of five brothers, died at the age of 72 Monday evening. Police said a 16-year-old novice driver, David Low, of nearby Briarcliff, crossed a dividing line after sideswiping another car and crashed head-on into a 1965 Mustang convertible in which Rockefeller was riding.

Both died almost instantly.

Monico Lesko, 38, Rockefeller's secretary and owner and driver of the car he was riding in, survived and is hospitalized under intensive care.

The crash occurred on a curve on Route 448, a winding two-lane road overlooking the Hudson River in Westchester County, about 30 miles north of New York City. The scene is about a mile from Rockefeller's 3,000-acre estate in Scarborough, N.Y.

Rockefeller was on his way to the Pocantico Hills estate of Nelson A. Rockefeller, Republican governor of New York before he became President Gerald Ford's vice president.

"It was a hard crash, judging from the extensive fractures," said Carl Felgenhauer, an investigator for the Westchester County medical examiner.

Low, a high school senior, was taking driver's education to obtain a license. He was driving legitimately with a junior operator's license, which authorizes a 16-year-old to drive alone outside New York City and Nassau County between 5 a.m. and 9 p.m. The crash occurred about 6 p.m.

A quiet philanthropist, John Rockefeller founded Manhattan's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. He also was deeply involved in education and population control, and he had an abiding interest in Asia.

The eldest of the Rockefeller brothers was less publicized as an art collector than Nelson. Nevertheless, he amassed one of the finest collections of American art in existence and recently announced he was donating it to the Fine Arts Museum of San Francisco.

Besides Nelson, the elder Rockefeller's brothers were the late Winthrop Rockefeller, at one time governor of Arkansas; Laurance Rockefeller, a conservationist and businessman; and David Rockefeller, president and chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank. A sister, Abby Rockefeller Mauze, the oldest of the children, died of cancer in 1976.

The brothers were grandsons of John D. Rockefeller, who founded the family's legendary fortune in the mid-19th century on an oil refining empire that included Standard Oil Co.

Besides his son, Jay, Rockefeller is survived by his wife, the former Blanchette Ferry Hooker, whom he married in 1932; and by three daughters, Sandra Rockefeller, Hope Aldrich and Mrs. Mark Dayton. He had six grandchildren.

Airbus Group Wants British Decision

PARIS (AP) — Britain will have to decide "very, very soon" whether it intends to rejoin the European consortium Airbus Industrie and participate in the construction of the new B-10 model of the A-300 airbus, a company official said Tuesday.

The B-10 aircraft, a smaller version of the B-2 and B-4 models of the A-300, is expected to be certified airworthy in 1982. Deliveries are scheduled to start later that year or in early 1983.

The consortium's members — Aerospatiale of France, Deutsche Airbus of West Germany, Fokker-VFW of Holland and CASA of Spain — are already sharing the workload and orders for materials are going out on the basis of orders in hand, the spokeswoman said.

West Germany's Lufthansa has indicated an urgent need for the aircraft, the official said.

"Once the train gets moving, it will be very difficult for the British to jump on," she said.

British Aerospace, which manufactures the wings of the B-2 and B-4 versions of the airbus on a subcontract basis, will lose close to $190 million worth of business on the basis of current B-10 orders alone if the British government decides not to join the B-10 program, industry sources say.

The airbus official said that under current plans, Aerospatiale and VFW-Fokker would build the wings of the B-10.

British Aerospace would only get further contracts from the consortium if the British government re-enters the project — which it left some years ago — and injects a substantial amount of capital.

British authorities are currently debating whether to come into the airbus project, accept an offer to assist in the development of the Boeing 767-200 or collaborate with Mcdonnell Douglas in building the DCX-200. The last two projects are still on the drawing board.

Influencing the British decision is the fact that the B-10 will be offered with a choice of three jet engines — the Rolls-Royce RB 211-524, the Pratt and Whitney J-19D-20 and General Electric's CF-6. The European project is said in industry circles to appear more profitable for the British aviation industry as a whole.

Industry sources say that if Britain doesn't come in to the consortium again, France and Germany — the major partners of the airbus group — will end up spending considerably more on the B-10 project than they had originally intended.

Airbus Industrie's order book for the B-10 currently stands at 60 planes, of which 40 are options. These include 10 firm orders and 15 options from Lufthansa, six firm orders from Swissair, four firm orders from Air France and 25 options from Eastern Airlines.

United Airlines is also said to be considering the purchase of A-300 B-10s to replace its DC8s and Boeing 727s. The airline is said to be looking for up to 50 aircraft and an order for airbuses could be worth as much as $2 billion to the European consortium.

A decision on whether United orders the B-10s or opts for Boeing 767s or the DC-X200 is said in industry circles to hinge on the delivery dates and financing. The decision is expected to be announced by the end of August.

Bill Said To Establish 'Dictatorial Conditions'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill approved by a Senate subcommittee would destroy the collective bargaining rights of employees of financially troubled railroads, a labor spokesman said Tuesday.

J.R. Snyder, testifying on behalf of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, said the bill would create "dictatorial conditions" in the railroad industry.

But John Ingram, president of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, said the legislation was needed so railroad trustees and unions could "work out more feasible work rules."

Snyder and Ingram testified before the transporation subcommittee of the Senate Commerce Committee, which is holding hearings on the impact of railroad bankruptcies on the Midwest rail system.

The judicial machinery subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee has approved a bill empowering trustees appointed to reorganize bankrupt railroads to reject work rules negotiated as part of collective bargaining agreements.

Snyder called the bill "a meat-ax approach which would slaughter collective bargaining as it has applied to railroads in reorganization."

He said it "proposes a reversion to the dictatorial conditions which prevailed generally during the early phase of the development of this country as an industrial power."

"This would be the period prior to the Civil War and shortly thereafter to the turn of the century, a period marked by strikes, violence, bloodshed and labor injunctions."

Snyder urged approval instead of a provision approved by the House on Feb. 1. The House version would guarantee that wages or working conditions of bankrupt railroads could not be changed except in accord with the collective bargaining provisions of the Railway Labor Act.

The labor representative also opposed a provision in the Senate bill giving bankruptcy judges, instead of the Interstate Commerce Commission, control over abandonments of railroad lines.

"The bankrupty court has been, and will continue to be, concerned with the interest of creditors," Snyder said. "Existing law must be maintained in the interests of the railroad employees whom we represent."

Nicholas G. Manos of the Rock Island line defended the provision, saying, "No judge is going to demand that labor be enslaved."

Integration Group Recruiting Information Hotline Workers

Lubbock's Opportunity for Our Kids (LOOK), a desegregation support group, is recruiting volunteers to run an information hotline on the local schools' court-ordered integration plan.

Betty Anderson, who heads the effort, has sent letters to prospective volunteers asking "for a short-term commitment to help smoothly implement the Lubbock Independent School District's plan of desegregation.

"One of the activities to provide a smooth transition planned by LOOK is an information center .... Credible citywide rumor control and information centers have succeeded in keeping rumors to a minimum in many desegregating cities," Mrs. Anderson said.

"These telephone hotlines provide up-to-date officially verified information, serve as a check on rumors and serve as a sounding-board and flak catcher," she said.

LOOK hopes to put its information center into operation Aug. 7, to run for six weeks. The center will field questions from parents and students regarding the school system's integration plan, which goes into effect with the 1978-79 term.

The center will be staffed by volunteers. Training for telephone monitors will be conducted Aug. 3-4 by Art Peltz, a communications specialist with the U.S. Justice Department's community relations service.

Several Lubbock civic organizations have endorsed LOOK's goals of assisting the school district with integration. The organizations have suggested the names of members who might be interested in staffing the information center, serving as bus or classroom monitors, or doing other volunteer work.

Mrs. Anderson said she sent letters to about 150 possible volunteers. In addition, any citizen may volunteer to help with LOOK activities — or provide financial assistance — by calling the school district, League of Women Voters or Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

Former Mayor Roy Bass, who chairs LOOK, said the group is "coming along very well." He stressed that the organization is not for or against the integration plan itself, but only advocates "orderly obedience to the court order."

Bass said the group hopes to raise $3,000 to $5,000 to fund such efforts as the information center and distribution of school brochures.

At a LOOK steering committee meeting Tuesday, the group discussed circulating about 20,000 brochures explaining the integration plan and rallying support for its successful implementation.

At the meeting, school officials said they are preparing in-service activities and handbooks for teachers who will be involved in the integration plan.

Entertainment Machines Shown

NEW YORK (AP) — A one-of-a-kind collection of home entertainment memorabilia, spanning the 100 years from Thomas Edison's original tinfoil phonograph to the newest selectavision videocassette recorder, has embarked upon a nationwide tour as a salute to the broadcasting industry.

The traveling exhibition, culled from many sources by RCA, includes a model of that first phonograph that still works, a turn-of-the-century Victor-1 victrola with its eight-inch records and huge flowered horn, an early crystal set and a 1946 model of the first mass-produced television set.

PERU JOLTED

LIMA, Peru (AP) — An earthquake shook a lightly populated area in the northeastern Amazon jungle Tuesday, Peru's National Geophysics Institute reported. Seismologists said the quake's epicenter was about 550 miles northeast of Lima near the border with Brazil.

The Avalanche-Journal means value. Value that is both tangible and intangible.

Intangible value that comes with the quality of news coverage you receive by reading The Avalanche-Journal — a level of editorial excellence on the local, national and international levels unparalleled in West Texas.

Then there are the tangible benefits derived from reading the Avalanche-Journal. The cash benefits. The money you can save by subscribing to the A-J.

Earthquake Rocks Area Of Peru

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — An earthquake in the Peru-Brazil border area, about 500 miles east of Lima, Peru, was recorded by seismologists at the National Earthquake Information Service of the U.S. Geological Survey here Tuesday.

An agency spokesman, Waverly Person, said the quake had a magnitude of 5.7 on the Richter scale.

Person said, "It was not a major quake. I doubt very seriously if an earthquake of this depth and magnitude would cause damage because that area is very sparsely populated."

The Richter Scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Therefore, a quake which measures 6.5 is 10 times stronger than one which measures 5.5.

A quake of magnitude 2 is the smallest normally felt by humans. A quake of magnitude 3.5 can cause slight damage, magnitude 4 can cause moderate damage, magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage and 6 can cause severe damage.

An earthquake of magnitude 7 is a major quake capable of causing widespread, heavy damage. Magniture 8 signifies a "great" quake, one capable of tremendous damage.

The 1906 quake which devastated San Francisco hit 8.3 on the Richter Scale.

Voters In Childress Down School Bonds For Second Time

A-J Correspondent

CHILDRESS — A second effort to fund a proposed $1.9 million school building project here was resoundingly defeated at the polls Tuesday.

Unofficial results of the bond election show 844 votes against the proposal with 252 persons voting in favor of the building program.

Supt. Glen Lowrance expressed disappointment at the outcome and said the school board now must try to determine whether residents disagree with the idea of new construction or whether they disapprove of the tax increase.

The bond election asked for $1,995,000 to construct a new school for kindergarten through fifth grade plus improvements at junior high school.

Passage of the bond issue would have meant an estimated tax increase of 32 cents per $100 assessed property valuation.

An alternate plan was recently approved by the board, in the event that the bond issue failed. That plan would create a building fund by increasing taxes by 40 cents per $100 assessed valuation. An estimated $175,000 yearly would be set aside to accumulate in the fund. Lowrance noted that the plan would mean a bigger tax increase than the bond issue itself.

An earlier bond election also was defeated. In April, voters decided against both of two proposals that would have built an educational complex on the elementary and junior high school levels.

The basic proposal was estimated to cost about $2.5 million, while an alternate plan, including a new auditorium, carried a price tag of about $3 million. Both proposals were defeated by a three to one margin.

Childress Seeking Temporary Housing

A-J Correspondent

CHILDRESS — Faced with an immediate need for temporary housing in the city, Chamber of Commerce officials are calling on residents for assistance.

About 100 workers recently came to Childress to work on a pipeline construction project, and most available housing was rented to the employees.

The Chamber of Commerce learned this week that another 100 personnel of the same company are due to arrive in the city within a few days.

About one-fourth of the workers will bring their families.

The need for housing is a temporary one, so rental units are being sought. Company officials say the pipeline project should be completed by September.

Most Women Legislators Don't Feel Successful

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Less than half the women legislators in the country feel "very successful" in their jobs, according to a survey by a political science professor at Goucher College.

Professor Marianne Githens sent questionnaires to 703 women legislators, and 46 percent responded. She found among other things that states with relatively high-paying legislatures, such as Michigan, New York and California, have proportionally fewer women lawmakers. Nationally, women make up 9.3 percent of the state legislators.

Micronesians To Vote On Sovereignty Document

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — After four centuries of being subject to the fiat of some of the world's mightiest powers, the people of Micronesia get their say this week on their political destiny.

In dozens of tiny, sun-washed islands flung across the central Pacific, voters Wednesday are expected to approve the newest, and perhaps oddest, creation in global politics — the Federated States of Micronesia.

They will be voting on a document which declares that Micronesians assume full sovereignty, and elsewhere details the procedure for assigning that responsibility elsewhere.

It is a document which guarantees rights of assembly, free speech, equal protection of the laws and equal rights for women — and provides for any of those rights to be overruled by ancient customs.

They will be voting on creating a nation nearly as large as the United States, if you include the water, or half the size of Rhode Island, if you stick to dry land.

The capital of the new nation would be Kolonia, a drab collection of tin-roofed houses and ramshackle stores on Ponape, the rain-soaked pepper-growing center of the territory. A short walk around Kolonia takes in the history of Micronesia: a cultural center where bare-chested boys and girls perform traditional dances; a crumbling wall built by the Spanish; churches built by the Germans; roads laid out by the Japanese; a gravel airstrip where jets swoop in from Hawaii.

"Micronesia began in the days when man explored seas in rafts and canoes. The Micronesian nation is born in an age when men voyage among stars," the constitution declares. "With this constitution we, who have been the wards of other nations, become the proud guardian of our own islands, now and forever."

Micronesian representatives agreed earlier this year, however, that the new nation would exist in "free association" with the United States. That means the United States would control military and foreign affairs while giving the islanders continued access to the U.S. Treasury to prop up their primitive economy.

Except for giving Micronesians full control of internal affairs, the arrangement resembles the Strategic Trusteeship granted to the United States by the United Nations after World War II.

The drama in the referendum is deciding who is in and who is out.

The constitution must be approved by simple majorities in four of the six districts. Micronesian leaders, who visited New York earlier this year to brief the U.N. Trusteeship Council on the territory's status, were confident that the districts of Yap, Truk, Ponape and Kosrae will vote yes. Palau, in the southwestern corner of the territory, is expected to vote no, but the real race is in the Marshall Islands, where advocates of both positions are active and well-organized. The suspense will have time to build during the two weeks needed to collect ballot boxes by ship from the widely scattered atolls of the district.

U.S. officials, while officially standing aloof from the electioneering, privately worry about a close vote. A narrow decision either way would be a cloud over the new political arrangement, which will eventually go to the U.N. Security Council for approval.

The constitution has a 13-item Declaration of Rights, incorporating the U.S. Bill of Rights, a ban on capital punishment, and a prohibition of discrimination based on sex, race, ancestry, national origin, language or social status.

However, the document also upholds the prerogatives of the chiefs, and provides that traditions supercede any of the listed rights.

Time will tell how these contrary notions will be resolved. Yap, for instance, has a complex nine-level caste system with a heavy dose of male supremacy.

Catholic Group Seeks To Shed Light On Election Of Next Pope

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of leading Roman Catholics on Tuesday launched the first organized effort of its kind to throw some light on the highly secret process of choosing a new pope.

As a first step, the newly formed "Committee for the Responsible Election of the Pope" issued a volume of updated, probing biographies of the world's 117 cardinals who pick the man from among their number.

They "are largely faceless men," says the first issue of a newsletter, "Conclave Confidential," which the group also initiated in its project to open up the traditionally closed affair to public inspection.

"We want to bring about to the extent we can a consciousness-raising in regard to the significance and potentials of the office of the papacy," said James H. Andrews of Mission, Kan., co-chairman of the group.

It also is assembling data for computer analysis of just who the new pope might be, applying "simulated scenarios" of various possible circumstances at the time, as affecting chances of the likelier candidates.

Andrews told a news conference the project is a long-range, continuing effort and was not just looking to the "near-term" death of Pope Paul VI, now 80 and often ailing.

"We want full discussion of the men and the issues, rather than it being confined to a narrow club," said Andrews, chairman of the board of Sheed, Andrews and McMeel Publishers.

It issued the new volume of profiles, "The Inner Elite: Dossiers of Papal Candidates," by sociological analyst Gary MacEoin, who spent three years in research and in interviewing the cardinals.

"In any voluntary society," MacEoin said, "the decision-making process has to respond to the views of its members or either it will cease to be or a change will be forced in the system."

About 25 leading Catholics, laity and clergy, mostly lay professors, authors and columnists, make up the committee, which plans to expand as its work progresses.

Philip Scharper, the group's other co-chairman and editor-in-chief of Orbis Books, Maryknoll, N.Y., said the objective is to provide a free flow of information about the candidates and factors influencing the choice.

The undertaking, he said, is a "logical extension" of church reforms sparked by the Second Vatican Council of 1962-65, which "emphasized the importance of open communication and the church as the entire people of God."

As the committee expands, he said it expects also to enlist leading Protestants and others, since the papacy affects "the entire world of religion" and they have a stake in who holds it, too.

Asked if the effort sought to make the papal choice like a presidential election, Andrews said "there are parallels" although the "analogy limps," but that the cardinals "can't ignore a matter of public discussion. As much as it looks like they live in a vacuum, they don't. They speak to people."

The group isn't pushing for any favorites, he said, but "we certainly hope to be an influence to the extent that the challenge of information will get the cardinals to scrutinize their peers."

He said the research for the biographies brought out alarmingly that the cardinals actually knew little about each other, and there was an incredible "lack of basic information available to the world community about this inner elite."

In response to a question, he said the initial reaction of the church hierarchy probably will be that the project is "outrageous, rash and typically American," but as the work goes on, even the cardinals will recognize its value.

He noted that several chancery offices already have subscribed to the newsletter.

MacEoin noted that of the world's 117 active cardinals, those under 80 and thus eligible to participate in the election conclave, only 26 are Italians, and that for the first time in history, non-Europeans hold a majority.

Human Rights Unit To Hear Cypriots

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — The European Commission of Human Rights announced Tuesday it would hear Cyprus government charges of human rights violations by Turkish authorities on the racially-divided island.

Turkey, which maintains an occupation force in the Turkish sector of the island, failed to get the case rejected by the European body. In three days of oral hearings of the two parties, ended Monday, the Ankara government maintained it had no jurisdiction over areas of Cyprus where the alleged violations occurred.

A communique from the commission, watchdog body for the Convention, noted acceptance of the case but did not prejudge whether the Cypriot complaints were "well-founded."

New AD Settles Into Job

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

If it weren't for the clutter on his desk, Dick Tamburo could appreciate the view of Jones Stadium. But the stacks of files, while-you-were-out notes and the regular desk gear of a man moving in kept getting in the way.

It's been only a few days now since the new Tech athletic director got his key to the office, but beyond that. . .

"You hardly get started on one thing, before you need to check something else," Tamburo remarked Tuesday. "I came in Saturday, worked all day Sunday, Monday (and then Tuesday), but there is a lot of things that I need to do."

Tamburo is replacing J T King, who is retiring Aug. 31. King has moved out of the AD's office into an adjacent office and is assisting Tamburo with the change of command.

"We've been going over some of his files and I'm trying to work out the way I want them. Right now, I need to find out the procedure of hiring another secretary. With the change, there is plenty of things for one to do."

Tamburo had said when he was hired last month that he was considering hiring another administrator. But, Tuesday, he said this was in the future.

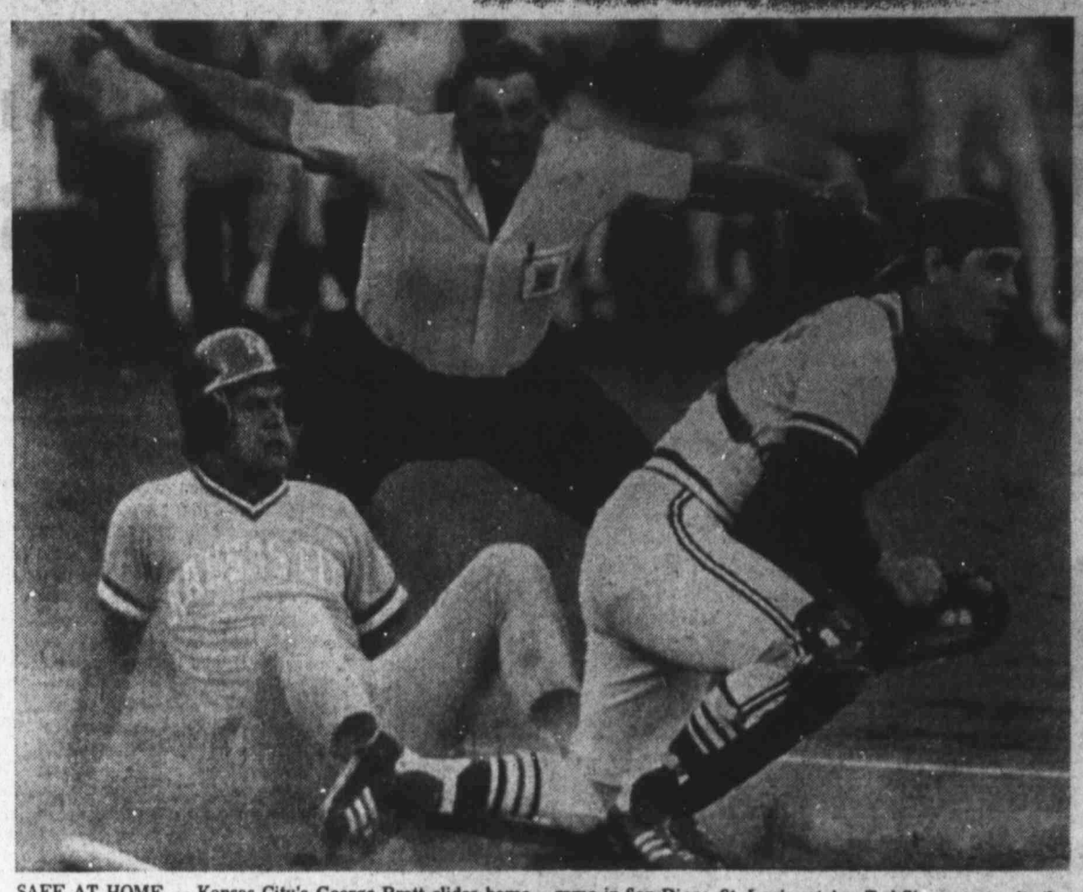

"We will work into it. Right now, I want to get to meet and visit and get to know the coaches and the people in the athletic department.

"I haven't had to sit down with them individually and get to know them and their programs. I want to develop the family approach. We're all a part of the same (athletic) family.

"It will help when this athletic building can be remodeled and all the coaches can be in one building.

"But, I want to get to visit with Bill Talley (the academic counselor). That is an important area, meeting the needs of the student-athlete. And that's what it should be," said Tamburo. "We have a commitment with the young men to see that they get an education, and that when they get that degree they have something."

The new athletic director has yet to move his family from Champaign, Ill., where he was the assistant AD at the University of Illinois. However, he has purchased a house and will be on the job here except for a few days later in the summer when he moves his family to Lubbock.

SAFE AT HOME — Kansas City's George Brett slides home safely for the American League's second run in the top of the first inning during Tuesday night's 49th annual All-Star baseball game in San Diego. Garvey, NL Win Again

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Steve Garvey ripped a game-tying, two-run single and then tripled and scored the winning run as the National League came from behind for a 7-3 victory over the Americans in the 49th All-Star baseball game.

It was the seventh consecutive victory for the NL, which has won 15 of the last 16 contests against the Americans and now holds a 30-18-1 edge in this game.

Garvey opened the eighth inning with his triple against releiver Rich Gossage, a huge drive against the right field fence that missed being a home run by perhaps five feet.

Then Gossage, working to Dave Concepcion, uncorked his wild pitch, allowing Garvey to score. Suddenly, the tight game came apart at the seams for the AL stars, who were battling to overcome an All-Star jinx that has hounded them for the past two decades.

Concepcion walked and hometown hero Dave Winfield of the San Diego Padres singled to left where Chicago's Chet Lemon booted the ball for an error, giving the NL runners at second and third.

Bob Booone of Philadelphia, playing for the NL All-Stars exactly 20 years after his dad played in one for the AL, followed with a two-run single and it was 6-3.

Boone advanced to second on an infield out and dashed home with another run on Dave Lopes' line single to right. That was plenty of cushion for relievers Bruce Sutter of Pittsburgh and Phil Niekro of Atlanta, who retired the Americans in order in the bottom of the ninth to continue a frustration that has resulted in 20 losses in 22 games against the NL.

This game started out as if it might

British Open To Start

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland (AP) — Jack Nicklaus is here. So are Tom Watson, Lee Trevino and Gary Player. But the individual drawing the most attention on the eve of the 107th British Open Golf Championship is the weatherman.

"The weather is the factor playing the major role in the tournament," said Arnold Palmer, twice a winner of this ancient title, a one-shot loser at St. Andrews in 1960 and entertaining some hopes of winning again.

"In bluebird weather, it's not a difficult course," said Nicklaus, the outstanding figure in the game in the last two decades.

"You have to have the wind and the weather to make this course play the way it's supposed to play. If you get a good day, you'd better take advantage of it, shoot yourself a number, because you know your're not going to have those conditions very long."

The last three British Open Championships have been played in unusually warm, sunny, windless weather. Some very un-British-Open scores have been returned, particularly the scores of 130 and 131 for the final 36 holes at Turnberry last year, with Watson beating Nicklaus by a shot in what has been called the greatest golf tournament of all time.

This year the tournament returns to the Old Course at St. Andrews for the first time since Nicklaus won in 1970. And with the return to Scotland's East Coast has been the return of more typically British Open weather — raw, wet, chilling cold and occasional blustery winds off the North Sea.

While the rest of Britain is basking under sun and 70-degree temperatures, the

NBC Tournament To Begin Tonight

The 1978 National Baseball Congress West Region Tournament will get under way today at 6:30 p.m. when Lubbock battles the Lubbock Cardinals at Mackenzie Park.

A second game will follow, scheduled for 8:30 p.m., between Brownfield and the Lubbock Brewers.

The tourney, as usual, will be spread over two weekends.

Action will continue Thursday with games matching the Lubbock Chaps versus the Lubbock Texans and the Lubbock Z's against the Lubbock Indians.

Games will be played Friday, Saturday and Sunday, as well. The tournament will then take a break before resuming July 20. It will conclude Sunday, July 23.

The Abilene Bulls, the defending West Region champions and state runners-up in 1977, are again rated as the favorites for the regional title. The tourney victory will advance to the state meet, and there is the possibility that an at-large team for the state meet will be chosen from the regional field.

The Bulls are 14-1 this season, with their only loss coming to the Lubbock Z's. The teams divided a doubleheader recently, the Bulls taking the first game 16-2 and the Z's rallying to win the second contest 14-12.

The Bulls are comprised primarily of Hardin-Simmons players and Hardin-Simmons exes. Third baseman Carl Bystrom, second baseman Rusty Hamric and pitcher Larry Martindale were all-state selections in 1977.

The Z's have finished second in the regional tournament the past two seasons and are seeking to climb the final hurdle this year.

The team counts several former Coronado High School players on its roster, including rightfielder and manager Ricky Green, first baseman Royce Green and pitcher Jimmy Foster.

The Z's are 7-3 going into the tournament.

Nine Lubbock units are entered in the meet. Aside from the Z's, entered are the Cardinals (Coronado athletes and managed by CHS coach John Dudley), Chaps (LCC athletes) Brewers (Texas Tech athletes), Bulls, Rebels, Indians, Lubbock and Texans.

Baseball Meetings Set For Canada

SAN DIEGO (AP) — For the first time, baseball's winter meetings will be held in Canada next year, the National Association of Professional Baseball announced Tuesday.

John Moss, chairman of the Site Selection Committee, said meetings will be held at Orlando, Fla., this year, at Toronto in 1979, Dallas in 1980 And Miami in 1981.

Moss said Canada also is "in the running" for the 1982 meetings.

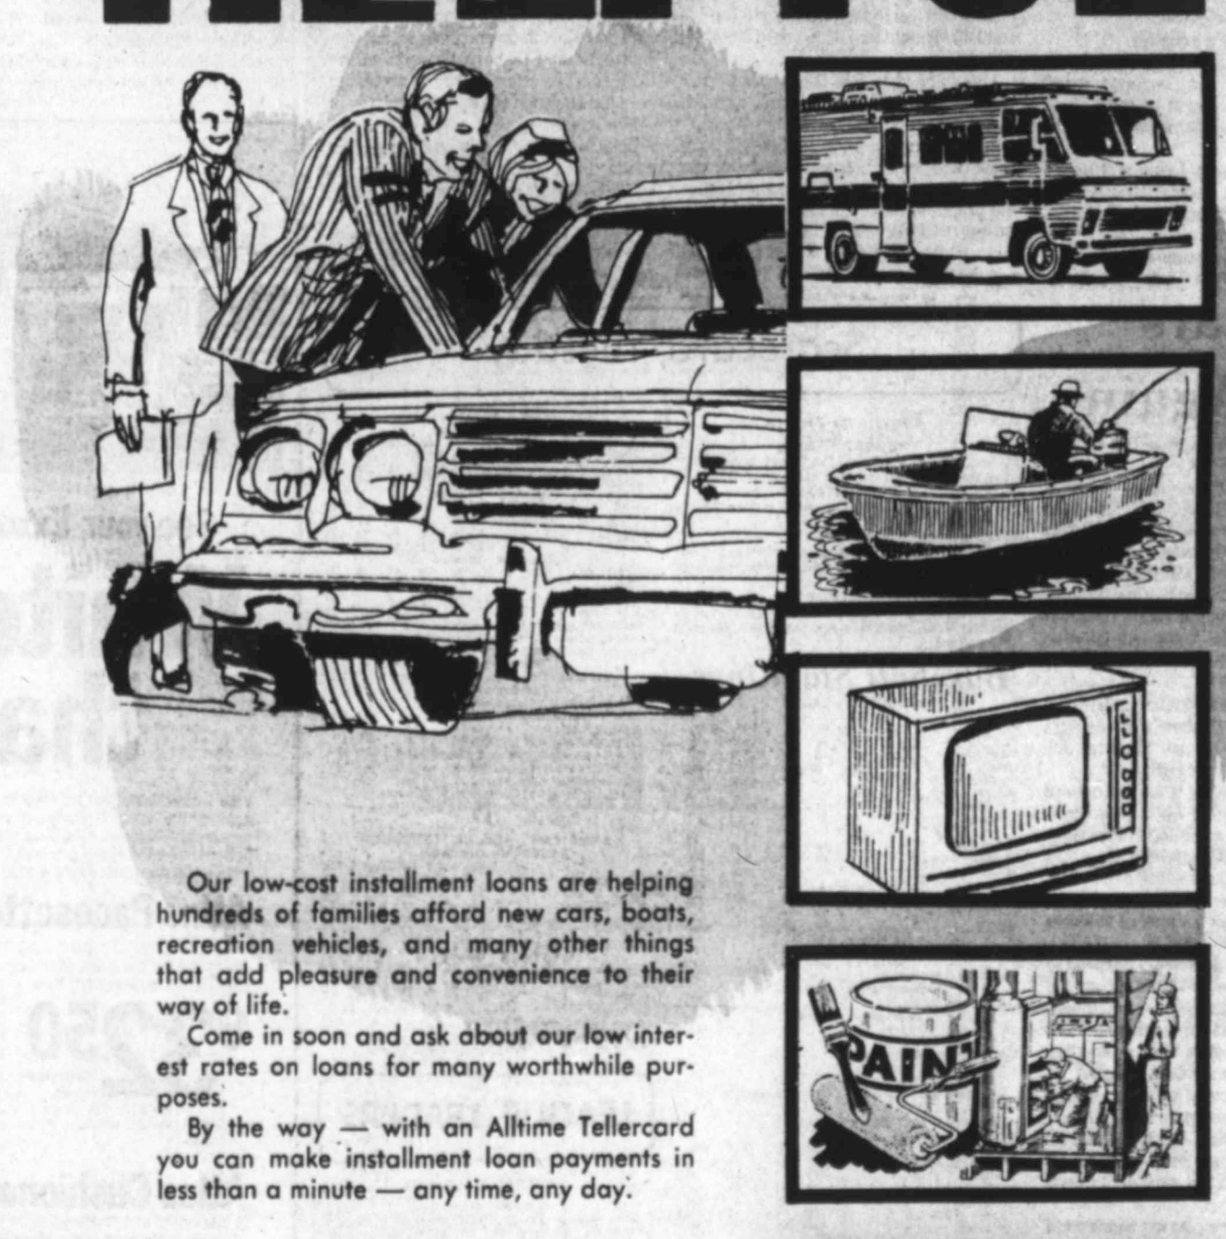

A delegation will travel to Vancouver, B.C., next month to check out that city's qualifications for 1982, Moss said.

Vancouver returned to the Pacific Coast League this season. It is the proposed site for a domed, downtown stadium within five years.

Defectors Draw Mixed Reviews

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Defectors from the All-Star Game drew both support and criticism Tuesday from others involved in baseball's midsummer classic.

Out of the 49th game Tuesday night were Thurman Munson, Carl Yastrzemski, Rick Burleson, Reggie Jackson, and Johnny Bench. In the past others have elected to skip the All Stars and take the three-day rest afforded most major leaguers at this time of the year.

Jackson reported he had a fever, but there was suspicion that he feared he would play only a few innings and then be replaced by his Billy Martin, his New York Yankees manager, who directed the American League All-Stars.

Munson was named to the squad, but said his bad knee needed the rest. Bench has suffered back problems this season. Burleson hurt an ankle on Sunday and reportedly will be lost to his Boston Red Sox for several games, and Yastrzemski also has been ailing.

Yaz hit a home run last Saturday but in that game was a designated hitter.

American League President Lee MacPhail came to Yastrzemski's defense, telling newsmen, "He has played hurt for some time and thought he needed the time off. He's played a lot of All-Star games for us and I can't fault him."

Jackson waited until the day before the game to say he was too ill to play.

Bench was the overwhelming choice of voting fans to be the National League catcher even though he has been hurt much of the 1978 season.

Ted Simmons, the St. Louis catcher who replaces him, said in answer to a question, "John certainly is very talented and popular and I can't take anything away from him. But he has been hurt, and I think I've played well enough to deserve to start."

Martin referred to last year to say pitcher Nolan Ryan of the California Angels never would be selected by him for the All-Star squad.

"He dishonored the All-Star game," said Martin of Ryan who wasn't originally selected in 1977 and then refused to join the club as a replacement for injured teammate Frank Tanana.

"A healthy man should never refuse," the fiery Yankee skipper declared.

Los Angeles Dodgers' center fielder Rick Monday was suffering from a shoulder injury when the fans selected him. Even before he knew he could play, Monday said, "I'll sit on the bench if (Manager) Tommy (Lasorda) will let me."

Auerbach Considers Offers With Trio

BOSTON (AP) — Red Auerbach is negotiating with two National Basketball Association teams, including the New York Knicks, while he decides whether to remain Boston Celtics president and general manager under new owner John Y. Brown.

"As of now, I'm paid and employed by the Celtics," said Auerbach at a Tuesday news conference with Brown and the owner's partner, Harry Mangurian. "I will continue to do my job until such time as I've made a decision.

"I will talk to Sonny Werblin of the Knicks and one other ball club, and maybe some people in television."

CBS TV has made a job offer.

Brown and Mangurian, former owners of the Buffalo Braves, swapped teams last week with Irv Levin of the Celtics. Levin will move the former Buffalo franchise to San Diego.

Brown said Tuesday Levin will probably take with him several Braves front office officials, including General Manager Norm Sonju.

Levin and Brown capped their swap with a multi-player deal. Auerbach, whose contract with the Celtics expires Aug. 1, wasn't consulted.

"I was mad," Auerbach said. "I wasn't consulted...but I realize now that under the circumstances I couldn't be."

Auerbach said he was not pleased with the Celtics' loss of forward Kermit Washington and center Kevin Kunnert, a Houston Rockets free agent Boston signed last month.

"We were going on a building program," Auerbach said. "I liked the players...so Levin wanted them for himself."

Brown defended the deal and Auerbach conceded that Boston obtained a large dose of offense in forward Marvin Barnes and Billy Knight and little guard Nate Archibald.

Also shipped to San Diego was Celtics No. 1 draftee Freeman Williams, a guard, and rights to sign forward Sidney Wicks.

Brown said the new San Diego franchise will cover compensation to the Rockets for the loss of Kunnert. Under the proposed plan, San Diego would give Boston two second round college draft picks which the Celtics would use to repay the Rockets.

However, if the Rockets aren't satisfied with that payment — the team has already demanded star Celtics center Dave Cowens as compensation — NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien would have to step in and make a decision.

Brown, confronted by a huge pack of reporters, said repeatedly he wants Auerbach to stay and will give him time to think over his offer.

"I've got a lot of things to think about," said Auerbach, "and I'm thinking about them."

If Auerbach quits, other members of the front office staff also will depart, although Celtics Coach Tom Sanders and assistant K.C. Jones recently signed new contracts and apparently are secure. Both coaches attended the news conference but stayed in the background.

The dapper Brown, a Kentucky-based millionaire in the fast food business, insisted, "I'm not interested in being a basketball coach or general manager, but I'll be active.

"I don't just want a seat in the stands, but I'm not coming here to short-change anyone in Boston."

Mangurian, a furniture dealer from Florida, said he likes to stay out of the spotlight.

Auerbach, smoking his usual cigar and sandwiched between the new owners, said he still is loyal to the Celtics.

"After 28 years," he fumed at a questioner, "how can you not be sentimental?"

Coach of the team from 1950-1966, Auerbach won nine NBA titles. Boston won four more while Auerbach was running the front office under several different owners.

Boston was 32-50 last season, its worst record in history, and missed the playoffs. However, Auerbach said Tuesday his rebuilding plan would have brought the team back "if not next season, in two years."

NL Stars Win Again

The American League opened with a rush, jumping off to a 3-0 lead as Rod Carew became the first man in All-Star history to hit two triples in a single game.

Carew, leading off for the American League, ripped NL starter Vida Blue for a shot up the alley in left-center field that went for three bases. A moment later, he scored on George Brett's double, also to left center.

Brett went to third on an infield out and scored when Carlton Fisk lifted a sacrifice fly which second baseman Joe Morgan caught in short right field.

The Americans made it 3-0 in the third when Carew again led off with a triple, this one off the fence in left-center field, and scored on Brett's sacrifice fly.

The National League came back to tie the score with three runs in the third inning with the help of a streak of wildness by AL starter Jim Palmer.

Larry Bowa of Philadelphia opened the inning with a single and stole second before advancing to third on an infield out. Then Palmer issued three straight walks to Joe Morgan, George Foster and Greg Luzinski, forcing in the first NL run.

"I had some pine tar on my hands and I couldn't get it off," he said. "It was sticky and I couldn't get the ball to react."

Farquhar Qualifies In Tourney

DALLAS (UPI) — Bob Tway of NCAA champion Oklahoma State won medalist honors Tuesday in the 75th Trans-Mississippi amateur golf tournament, firing an even-par 71 for a 36-hole total of 4-under-par 138.

Tway will be the top seed when the low 64 qualifiers begin match play Wednesday over the 6,713-yard Brook Hollow Country Club course. The tournament ends with a 36-hole finals match Sunday.

Tway also owned a four-shot advantage over his nearest competitor in the race for medalist honors. Gary Pinns of Winston Salem, N.C., was in econd place at 142. Next came tournament co-favorite Lindy Miller, another Oklahoma State golfer, at 143, followed by Danny Dodson of Las Vegas, Nev., at 144.

Joining Tway and Miller in the field of 64 were Oklahoma State teammates Rafel Alcaron (146) and Britt Harrison (149). The fifth member of the Cowboys championship team — Danny Edwards — has turned professional.

Doug Clark, a sophomore at Stanford University, Trans-Miss winner two years ago at Spyglass Hill and the co-choice this year with Miller, made the field with a 148. The tournament's two Walker Cup members — John Grace (148) of Fort Worth and John Farquhar (149) of Lubbock — also qualified.

Tway, whose biggest win to date has been the 1977 Southern Amateur, said he considered himself a legitimate threat for the Trans-Miss title.

"I'm hitting the ball well right now," he said. "And I'm putting the ball really well. At Brook Hollow, where the fairways are narrow and the rough is high, the idea is to hit the ball in the fairway.

"But you never know. If you play poorly one day you are out of it."

Campbell Tops In Public Links

Campbell fired a 2-under-par 138 in 36 holes of medal play, shooting twin 69s Monday and Tuesday on the par-70, 6,574-yard Bangor Municipal Course.

Campbell's 138 total was six strokes better than his nearest competitors, Artie Diaz of Phoenix, Ariz., who had a 71-73, and Philip Pleat of Manchester, N.H., also 71-73.

Defending champion Jerry Vidovic, wof Blue Island, Ill., who won the 1977 Public Links tournament in Milwaukee, stood at 149 — good enough to make the cut. He carded a 75-74.

After the 36 holes of medal play were completed Tuesday, the field of 159 amateurs from across the country was cut to the 64 low scorers.

LCC Signs Final Baseball Recruits

Three days earlier Hays inked Ernest Day, a Lubbock High standout, to a letter-of-intent.

Hix hit .512, led District 5-AAAA in doubles, and stole 11 bases. He played third base and shortstop for the Panthers.

Wolfe hit .345 for Duncanville, which made a fourth straight appearance in the state baseball tournament. A designated hitter in high school, Wolfe will be tried at catcher by Hays.

Other LCC recruits include Bob Nottebart, a catcher from Galveston Junior College. His father, Don, pitched in the major league for the Houston Astros and Cincinnati Reds. Bob Nottebart played his high school ball at Houston Westbury.

Shortstop Lewis Stephenson of Richardson Pearce, who hit .340, and outfielder Greg Watts of Abilene Cooper, who hit .320, also have signed with LCC.

Day, a centerfielder, hit .470 as a senior for the Westerners and played in the Texas High School All-Star game in Houston last month.

Hays added three new moundsmen to the team. Heading the list is New Mexico all-stater Chris Cook, a southpaw from Deming who was 13-2 with a 0.84 ERA. Kevin Burks of Burkburnett, a 10-3 moundsman for the Class AAA state runners-up, and Nowell Delgado, who was 10-4 with 0.44 ERA for victoria, also signed with the Chaparrals.

Tech Signs Cager

Texas Tech went back to New York City and Brooklyn Canarsie High School for a guard in winding up its basketball recruiting.

Signed to a Tech letter-of-intent is 5-11 Larry Washington, an all-New York City selection from Canarsie, the high school which Geoff Huston attended before coming to Tech. Huston will be a senior for the Raiders this fall.

In addition to his all-NYC honors, Washington was named most valuable player in the Phoenix, Ariz., prep tournament held this summer. The Phoenix meet brought in outstanding seniors from all over the nation.

"Larry has all the tools to be a good college guard," reported Tech coach Gerald Myers in announcing the signing. He's a good floor man, can handle the ball and pass. He's very quick, and especially effective on fast-break situations.

Washington is the fifth player Tech has signed this year in basketball. Earlier, the Raiders picked up Steve Smith and Jeff Taylor from Hobbs, Steve Little from Abilene High and Adam Beadle from Western Texas College.

McCovey: 'Blacks Aided NL Lead'

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Acquiring black players first put the National League ahead of the American in talent, San Francisco Giants' first baseman Willie McCovey said Tuesday.

And he says the Cincinnati Reds are so well known because they have "bigger egos."

McCovey made the remarks in a telephone interview with the San Diego Union.

The Reds are quoted more often in newspapers and praised more often publicly by their manager, Sparky Anderson, said McCovey, adding: "You've got more guys on that Reds team with bigger egos, because the are more nationally known than the players are here (in San Francisco)."

"I don't know if the National League is as dominant as the recent games indicate," McCovey said, referring to the All-Star contests, "but at one point a few years ago it was, I think.

"About six or eight years ago, when (Roberto) Clemente and (Hank) Aaron and those sort of fellows were in their prime and making the All-Star team every year, I think the National League was superior. THAT superior.

"If you looked around, the National League just had that many more true superstars — and I don't mean guys they call 'superstar' today — and you couldn't find a real superstar in the American League, not since Mantle retired...

"The only good team in the American League was the Yankees and at one time you had to be lilly-white to play with 'em. It was a big breakthrough when they brought up Elston Howard. So all your great black superstars went to the National League, with the Giants and with Brooklyn."

McCovey, despite a career batting average over .270 and almost career home runs, still wasn't listed on the preseason All-Star ballot distributed early this season.

McCovey said that omission isn't "worth complaining about" but that "anybody who has anything to do with baseball knows that a 20-year guy who's accomplished what I've accomplished, his name should be on the All-Star ballot."

Kansas Youth Amazes With Running Talents

LAWRENCE, Kan. (UPI) — A little more than a year ago, Ray Foster told Bucky Cox he wanted to see how fast he could run a quarter-mile. Bucky cut loose, and responded with the fastest time of his life.

But before Foster could reach Bucky to congratulate him on his performance, he heard the boy crying.

"It hurts when you run that hard," Bucky said. He was 4 years old at the time.

Now Bucky has stopped crying. But he has just started to run.

Adam Buckminster Cox — Bucky to his friends and family — may not be a prominent name in the track world but he has given every indication it eventually will be.

Bucky, who celebrates his sixth birthday today, gained regional fame a week ago when he ran in his first marathon. He covered the 26 miles, 385 yards in 5 hours, 25 minutes and 9 seconds, an unofficial world record for his age group by more than an hour.

"Ray and I and his mother had a discussion with him right after the race," said Bucky's father, Randolph Cox. "We told him he was a special little boy but that he wasn't better than anyone else. Everybody has tried to instill that in him.

"We're proud of his accomplishments, but we know it doesn't make him better than anyone else," Cox said.

The knowledge of what the 3-foot-10, 40-pound Bucky accomplished on July 4 doesn't seem to have registered in the first grader's mind.

Bucky has been running wth his mother and Foster for the past 1½ years and has worked himself into a daily routine of six miles through the streets of Lawrence and the gentle rolling hills on the University of Kansas campus, where Foster is a research associate in the Bureau of Child Research.

Four days after he set the tentative world record for children under 6 years of age, Bucky was back at it, participating in a 4-mile "fun run" through the KU campus.

With Foster and his father running alongside and his mother providing a watchful eye from her bicycle, Bucky ran the distance without pause, finishing near the back of the 15-runner field in 37 minutes, 27 seconds.

His finish brought a round of applause from spectators, just as it had when he finished 64th out of the 68 runners who finished the Sundown Salute Marathon in 90-degree heat.

"We expected people in Junction City and Lawrence to be excited about what he did," said Foster, "But we didn't think everybody else would be so excited."

"Our only emphasis is having a healthy body which includes having a good cardiovascular system. That's why we run and why we encourage Bucky to run," he said.

Foster said he doesn't think the Bucky's success will have ill effects on his later life, but he did say he and the child's mother were conviced they shouldn't try to restrict his success to a track.

"If you ranked all the values in the world from 1 to 10," said Foster, "running wouldn't make it. What we try to do is encourage him to be as multidimensional as he can."

Foster said the only negative feeling he had about Bucky's success was that it might push some parents, caught up in the "Little League syndrome" to making their children run, saying "if Bucky can do it, you can do it."

"I'm afraid some people might hear about Bucky and go out and buy shoes for their pudgy, out-of-shape 5-year-old kid and force him to run," he said. "They could either hurt the kid or make it so he doesn't want to run.

Weather Judges Winner

Nicklaus, as usual, is forecast as the man to beat.

"And he's been beaten with some frequency over the years," said Nicklaus. "I've won a couple and in some others I've played well enough to win. Only someone else played a little better. That's what happened last year."

In addition to his two victories, the game's greatest player has been a British Open runner-up six times and once missed a playoff by a single shot.

"I've been right there, right in the title hunt, in almost all the British Opens I've played," he said, noting that he greatly enjoys playing in Britain.

"In particular, I enjoy St. Andrews," he said. "There is the sense of history, of tradition here that adds a special mystique. It would be a very nice place to win a golf tournament."

And, Nicklaus said he's made a minor adjustment — a strengthening of the left hand — that has corrected a swing problem that has plagued him all year.

"Even when I was winning early in the year, I wasn't satisfied with the way I was hitting the ball," he said. "It was an artificial swing. It became more pronounced over the last couple of months." he said.

He and his teacher, Jack Grout, eventually discovered the problem — "as usual, one of fundamentals," Nicklaus said — and the result is that he's swinging with his old authority and confidence.

He and Watson, winner of two of the last three British Opens and the heir apparent to Nicklaus' long-time role as the game's premier performer, are listed as co-favorites at 6-1 by Britain's legal bookies.

Although he's collected three titles and more than $200,000 this season, Watson does not appear to be at the absolute peak form he held coming into this championship a year ago. Also, he's less than delighted with the number of "blind" shots — shots in which the player actually cannot see his target — required by this centuries-old course that is the birthplace of golf.

It's a unique layout, unlike any other.

"No one would build a course like this now," said Palmer, the 48-year-old whose victories in 1961 and 1962 helped reestablish the British Open as one of golf's Big Four titles. The others are the U.S. Open, Masters and U.S. PGA.

"If you built a course like this in America, people would laugh at you, say, 'What kind of course is this?'" Nicklaus said. "But I love it. I think it's a wonderful old course, completely natural."

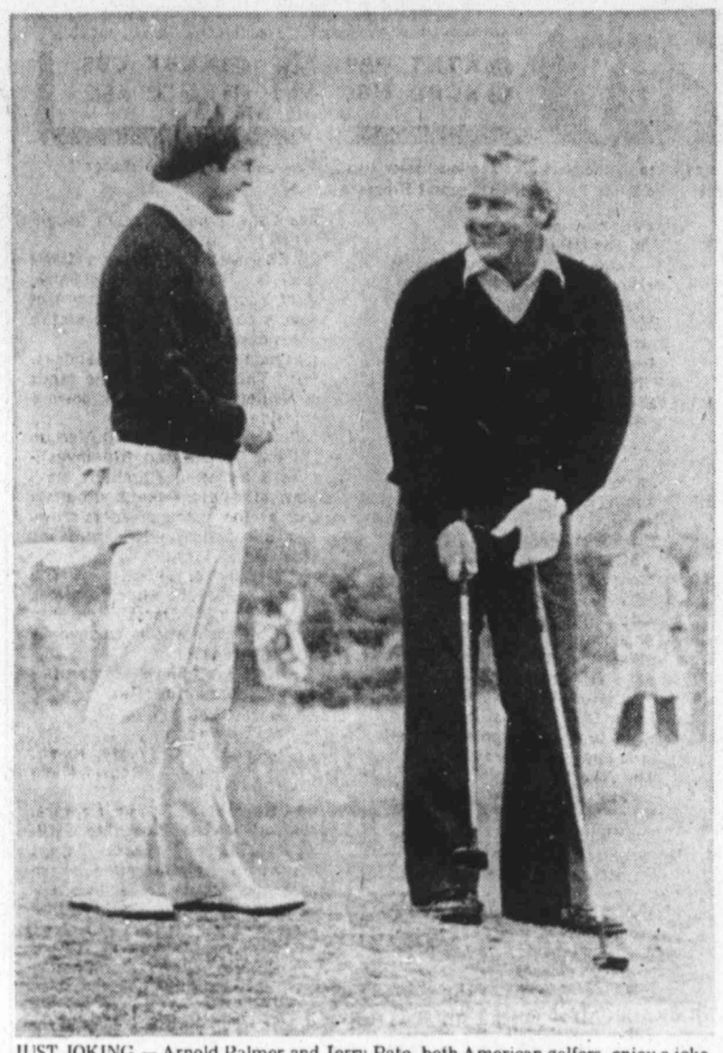

It plays to a par 72 and stretches 6,933 yards. There is little rough. It's only two fairways wide its entire length with the out-going nine holes completely parallel to the incoming nine. A unique feature is the double greens. Seven greens, ranging up to an acre in size, serve 14 holes.

And there are the hidden pot bunkers, the swales and ridges and valleys in the greens and the streams, particularly the Swilken Burn. Some of the other trouble areas have gained their names in the centuries since Mary Queen of Scots played here — the Principal's nose, Valley of Sin, Cheape's Bunkers, Elysian Fields and Kitchen, Hell, Grave and Ginger Beer bunkers and, of course, the famed, 17th road hole where a road intrudes into the fairway and bites into the back of the green.

"In addition to the weather, the key factors will be positioning the ball in the fairways, staying out of bunkers, and putting," said Palmer, who added that he has played better in recent weeks than at any time in years. "I'm putting better than I have in a long time — actually, that's the best part of my game right now," he said. He had seven birdies in one practice round.

Trevino got in only one practice round after his late arrival from Milwaukee, where he lost an eight-hole title playoff. It was the fifth time this year he'd been a runner-up. The cold, chill weather and the inactivity of the long flight combined to aggravate his back troubles.

Saturday's final round will be telecast on a delayed basis to the United States by ABC.

Campbell Impresses Houston

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell, the nation's leading collegiate rusher last season and No. 1 pro draft pick of the Houston Oilers, still has to prove himself to Oiler offensive coordinator Ken Shipp.

"People do tackle better in the pros," Shipp said, contemplating the former Texas All-American's prospects against 240-pound pro linebackers. "So Earl will have to show me what he can do. I'm not really worried about anything with Earl though.

"The little time I've been around him, I've been impressed with how he handles himself."

Campbell has been the center of attention at the Oilers training camp at Angelo State University since rookies started working out Monday in preparation for the Oiler's pre-season opener Aug. 5 in the Astrodome against the Denver Broncos.

Campbell, who led the nation in rushing with 1,744 yards last season, starts camp as the No. 2 fullback behind Tim Wilson.

"Life's too short to coach bad characters and Earl definitely isn't one of those," Shipp said. "He has the ability to burst and get the long run. We also think he'll be the kind of runner who can give us four yards at a time."

Prior to the arrival of the veterans July 21, Rob Carpenter, a rookie sensation at fullback last season, has been listed as the No. 1 halfback ahead of Ronnie Coleman and newcomer Anthony Davis.

"We're not going to depend on one man, no matter how well he does," Shipp said. "That was Buffalo's downfall when they had O.J. (Simpson). When defenses stopped O.J., they stopped Buffalo."

Shipp said the Oilers would not have a blueprint offense "that will let everybody know what we're doing next."

The offense also has unanswered questions at quarterback and tight end, Shipp said.

"We have no experience behind Dan Pastorini at quarterback," Shipp said. "That's just one position where we don't have experience. Another is tight end."

Second year quarterback Tommy Duniven from Texas Tech, who has played in one pro game, and rookie Gifford Nielson will battle for the backup position.

The Oilers also are looking for a backup tight end to replace Jimmy Giles. Giles went to Tampa Bay in a deal that gave the Oilers the No. 1 draft choice and the right to select Campbell.

Olton Tags Assistant As New Football Coach

OLTON (Special)—Larry Shackleford, an assistant at Olton High School for the past seven years, has been named the new head football coach and athletic director.

A 1971 graduate of Texas Tech, Shackleford worked with the secondary and running backs for the past five years at Olton. He also serves as head track coach.

Originally from Cotton Center, the new head mentor says next year's team will "include a strong backfield and some returning lineman with experience."

A vacancy has surfaced in the junior high coaching staff at Olton, according to Superintendent Joe Turner. Person interested in the junior high position, which will be coupled with a social studies teaching field, can contact Turner at 285-2641.

On March 3, 1920, the Montreal Canadiens defeated Quebec 16-3 in a National Hockey League game.

'Cinderella' Signs With Supersonics

SEATTLE (AP) — Coach Lenny Wilkens, who led the Seattle SuperSonics out of the early season doldrums and into the National Basketball Association championship series, signed a new five-year contract Tuesday, the team announced.

The new contract keeps Wilkens as coach and director of player personnel for the next three years, and in an "executive position" with the club during the final two years.

The club said the contract did not rule out Wilkens' coaching during the last two years of the contract.

"I'm happy to be part of this organization," said Wilkens of the team which once fired him as coach. "If we can manage to stay healthy next year we should have another fine season."

"I think the big thing in my contract is the money," Wilkens said. "They were willing to give me the other things I wanted ... I think when someone does something of value, they should be compensated."

Wilkens took over as coach last November, after the team stumbled to a 5-17 record under coach Bob Hopkins. The season ended with a 47-35 record, playoff wins over Los Angeles, Portland and Denver, and the team extending the Washington Bullets to seven games before losing the championship series.

Team owner Sam Schulman called Wilkens' return as coach "very exciting ... his coaching story last year was like a Cinderella story that I'm sure will be told for many years to come."

Actress Becomes Film Producer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — It's still a closed male club on the business side of the movie business, says Katherine Browne, who nevertheless has become a producer.

How did she do it?

"Very simple," she explains. "I use Mr. Darrin McGavin."

And why not, since she is Mrs. Darrin McGavin?

The result of their collaboration can be seen in the nation's theaters this summer. "Zero to Sixty," a comedy chase with McGavin, Sylvia Miles, Joan Collins, the Hudson Brothers and young Denise Nickerson, is being released by First Artists. It's a departure for First Artists, which generally has sponsored films by its founders — Barbra Streisand, Paul Newman, Sidney Poitier, Dustin Hoffman and Steve McQueen — or French-made comedies.

"It's a romantic comedy with heavy action," explained producer Browne. "Denise is a 16-year-old who can do anything. Darren is Mr. Square America. They get into the business of repossessing cars. In fact, they repossess an entire used-car lot.

Katherine Browne grew up in San Luis Obispo in mid-California as a movie-crazy kid. "I always wanted to be in the movies, and then I saw my first play," she recalled. "I thought that it would be much more fun."

Fortunately, she had a supportive mother who allowed Kathie to enroll in little theaters in Los Angeles. Next came television ("Mannix," "Cade County") and movies ("Man's Favorite Sport," "The Brass Bottle").

"Television I didn't enjoy; it seemed too fast and temporary," oberved the willowy blond. "Movies last. I became fascinated with how they are put together, and I spent my time off in sound departments and cutting rooms watching how things are done.

"Then I met Darrin and fell madly in love. Fortunately, he did, too, and we were married on New Year's Eve, 1970. He had just finished his 'Outsider' series and wanted to do movies. I wanted to do them, too, but I wouldn't accept jobs that would take me away from him. I think if you're going to bother to be married, it should be in perpetuity."

IT'S A GREAT BIG BEAUTIFUL WORLD

Nor, does it stand still. So much happens each and everyday that regular school textbooks would have to be up-dated and printed continuously to keep up with the daily newspaper. Each day, the Avalanche-Journal contains enough information to fill an average size novel. The Avalanche-Journal Newspaper in Education (NIE) program is designed to use this information to help students study math, science, social studies, reading and language arts while keeping abreast of current events and changes throughout the world.

The program includes teacher's guides and a Living Textbook Conference which simplify teaching with newspapers. The Newspaper in Education/Living Textbook Conference is conducted by specially trained educational consultants. New ideas and techniques for using newspapers in the classroom are covered and any interested teacher or administrator is invited. The Avalanche-Journal is delivered to the school at a reduced rate.

For information on the complete Avalanche-Journal NIE program contact the Educational Services Department at:

Success Proves Greatest Problem For Welk

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — Some might call it corny and even laugh at the squeaky-clean entertainment of Lawrence Welk and his "champagne music makers." The phenomenally successful Welk can laugh, too — all the way to the bank.

WELK

Nearly eight years after being bumped from the ABC network, Welk, 75, has the most popular and successful independent program on television, with more than 250 stations in the United States and Canada and a viewing audience estimated at more than 36 million.

During a recent interview between shows at Harrah's in this Lake Tahoe resort, Welk said his ratings now are "a little better" than when he was on the network and, as far as he's concerned, going independent is the best thing that happened to him.

Welk, speaking in that trademark accent he got while growing up in the German immigrant town of Strasburg, N.D., says as an independent he can't be "bounced" out of a community.

One station might drop his show, but he can go to another station in the area and, "as long as the ratings are good, that's what counts," he says.

Welk says there've been some overtures by networks to sign him up again, but, "I like it this way. It's more secure."

The decision to cancel his network show, says Welk, was based on the assumption that he catered to an older audience viewed as "not being the buyers of America."

But Welk says that thinking was faulty, because "there are more and more young people joining us than ever before." He says that's particularly true in small towns and rural farm areas where families watch shows together.

Welk banks on that family audience. He says there's no question about being able to successfully use the same format he's employed for 40 years or more.

Welk, raised a Catholic, says he keeps up with the family audience as other television shows "try to see how far they can go and how permissive they can be."

His format, he says, "is to try and not do harm to any," with his show. He goes so far as to use only a bit of Dixieland music in his act, even though it's his favorite, because, "I'm a great believer in pleasing people, not pleasing myself."

Welk used to employ a gadget that measured applause to figure out what his audiences liked best. Now he says he can tell instinctively what's weak or strong in his show.

He says he has had people tell him they "don't really know what it is about my show, but they always seem to feel good when it's finished.

"The reason for this is I didn't irritate them," he says. "We don't have loud music or some questionable things they resented."

There are about 50 people on stage during Welk's show, including the band, singers and dancers. In the entire Welk organization, there are about 130 people. Welk says it's tough to keep them all motivated.

Nobody comes out and does a show like his, he explains, so there's a tendency to become "lazy and complacent." Some competition to keep the Welkmen on their toes would be — what else — "just wondaful."

YUGOSLAVS TO HELP BURMA

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Yugoslavia is to help develop Burma's first copper mine at Monywa, about 400 miles northwest of here, the state-owned Working People Daily reported. An agreement signed between Burma and Yugoslavia envisages an output of 60,000 tons of copper concentrates a year.

Wacky California Disc Jockey Rues Loss Of Radio Craziness

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard "Sweet Dick" Whittington recently had a small part in a new episode of "The Waltons." It seemed odd to find him amid CBS' tribe of quiet, stable Virginians.

This is because he usually is a practitioner of weird as the morning disc jockey at station KGIL in suburban San Fernando, where he's worked for most of the last 13 years.

Take what he considers his proudest moment. The year was 1975. He got to wondering who fathered "66 illegitimate dinghies" he counted while touring the Queen Mary, berthed at nearby Long Beach.

He decided a tour boat, King of Long Beach, was responsible. So, he set out to make the Queen an honest ocean liner. Which led to a huge wedding to legitimize her 66 dinghies.

—A 26-foot-long bridal garter.

—Th late Bing Crosby crooning "True Love" via a phone and loudspeaker hookup.

—Crowds of men and women on the decks of the King of Long Beach and the Queen Mary shouting "I do" at the appropriate moment.

"They give me complete freedom here as long as I don't endanger the license," says the free-wheeling Whittington, at 44 one of a dwindling breed of zanies working in radio today.

A Korean War veteran and ex-boxer, he readily admits he tries to come up each year with a massive mind-duster, such as the Queen Mary caper, to publicize KGIL, nationally if possible.

This year's event was a trip to New Zealand, where he got officials to acquire Winnetka as a new state. Winnetka is a tiny Los Angeles suburb of which he happens to be the mayor.

In 1964, during what he calls "a low point in my career," he got a certain amount of publicity he didn't quite plan while working at a small radio station in Phoenix, Ariz.

He hadn't been paid for 1 1/2 weeks, he says, was brooding about life and for some reason decided it was time "to do a fantasy trip," a joke, really, while on the air one afternoon.

This led, he said, to certain traffic reports that included sightings "of a huge teapot over a highway just outside town. It was spritzing tea, either plain or with cream and sugar."

You may not think folks would believe reports of a huge, hovering, spritzing teapot. Wrong. Sweet Dick was canned immediately.

Sweet Dick also was immediately put on a Los Angeles-bound bus, he says, by members of the Phoenix constabulary who told him: "You're under a great deal of danger."

G-Rated Movies Show Sharp Dip In Film Market

A view of the film market and the industry's Code and Rating Administration would indicate so. Consult your local listings and you'll find precious few G-rated movies outside of those offered by Disney and the "four-wall" operators, who hire theatres and hype their nature and and children's movies with television spots.

The 10-year history of the rating system, sponsored by the Motion Picture Association of America signals the falling trend. In 1968 when the ratings began, 41 percent of the films reviewed were classified G, meaning acceptable for family audiences. G films fell to 27.7 percent the following year, and they have been sliding ever since.

In 1977, only 11.5 percent of films were rated G. The largest category was R (children must be accompanied by adults) with 43.3 percent. PG (parental guidance advised) followed with 38.5 percent. The X (children forbidden) was given to 6.7 percent, most of them hard core porno.

"Most companies are afraid of the G rating," remarked Samuel Z. Arkoff, president of American International Pictures. "They're afraid that teen-agers will be turned off when they see a G, believing it to be a children's picture. I've heard of some producers who deliberately took a G picture and asked for a PG rating because of that."

American International has rarely presented a G film, but it has one this summer in "Matilda," starring Elliott Gould and a boxing kangaroo. Arkoff also expects the forthcoming "Chomps," produced by Hanna-Barbera, to be G rated.

"Unless you are Disney, which is the greatest name in show business, G pictures are generally harder to sell," Arkoff admitted. "But some projects seem worthy of the effort."

Albert Ruddy, who produced the R-rated "The Godfather" as well as "Matilda," explained: "The material of 'Matilda' was always G, and that's the way we made it. What attracted me to going for a G was seeing the great old movies on the late show. It's almost a cliche, but I couldn't help thinking, 'Why don't they make movies like that anymore?'

"Those pictures were not trite or trashy or relegated to a children's audience, yet today they would be rated G. Too many people feel that the G rating means 'for children.' Not true. Th G means 'for everybody.'"

"I am convinced that ratings have nothing to do with box-office performance," he said. "The only exception is the X, which can hurt because some theatres won't play an X film and some newspapers won't advertise one.

"Success depends on the movie itself. I'm sure that Paramount would have preferred a PG on 'Saturday Night Fever' (it is rated R). Yet it is doing a fantastic business. The same with 'The Godfather' and 'The Exorcist.' I don't think they would have made 20 cents more if they had been rated PG."

Valenti denies that teen-agers were turned off by the G, citing evidence from his daughter, 14, and son, 12: "When they and their friends talk about films, it's not a matter of ratings but 'How is the movie?'"

Two summer attractions, "Heaven Can Wait" and "International Velvet," seem suitable for the entire family, yet both are rated PG.

"I suspect that's because of the relationship of Christopher (Plummer) and Nanette (Newman), who live together but aren't married," suggested writer-producer Bryan Forbes. "Also because of certain words that are used."

But the worst word this reviewer heard was "bloody," which may shock the English but not Americans. An MGM executive suggested the car chase that ends in an explosion might have prompted the PG. Yet the sequence seems no more violent than what children see nightly on the TV cop shows.

Michael Eisner, production head of Paramount, says the studio didn't aim for a PG with "Heaven Can Wait," — "we just sent it over and that's what they gave us." But he added: "I suppose there is some kind of physiological negativism about the G rating with kids who might think it's some kind of wilderness movie. Some people believe a G means the picture is so clean it's juvenile. It's unfortunate."

Critics of the ratings contend that the G would be more appealing for producers if it were divided into two parts: Films suitable for all ages and those that might be too frightening or suggestive for pre-teen-agers.

"Nothing can be gained by changing the ratings," Valenti insists. "After 10 years we're finally getting across to the public the meaning of the four ratings we have. One of the system's best factors — and it has its faults — is that it is simple. And simplicity is one of the great assets of durability."

SCHOOL BUILDING USE

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that public school buildings may be used for church services. In a 5-2 decision, the state's highest court also held it was legal for local school boards to grant the same discount rentals to church groups that are available to other non-profit organizations.

Nine-Year-Old Boy Rescues Infant

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — A 9-year-old boy who is an avid viewer of the "Emergency" television series was the hero of a real-life drama when he rescued a 7-month-old baby from a burning, smoke-filled house, firemen said Tuesday.

David Pringle climbed through a window that he broke with a garden rake Monday to reach the baby, Raul Hermosillo, who was crawling on the floor about 20 feet from the fire.

"I grabbed the baby and put him against my shoulder so he wouldn't get more smoke," said David, who admitted that he was "scared to death."

In two or three more minutes, the heat and smoke would have killed the baby boy, said Fire Department Investigator Lon Cahill. The baby was alone in the house when the fire broke out.

"David's a calm, level-headed young man," Cahill said. "It was a situation that would have stopped many adults."

The baby's mother, Debra Hermosillo, had been locked out of the house when she stepped outside and the front door accidentally shut behind her, Cahill said.

The fire apparently started while she was next door calling police and a locksmith, the investigator said.

Damage to the home was estimated at $10,000.

Oil, Airlines Top Stocks

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil and airline issues led the way Tuesday as the stock market rang up its fourth consecutive advance.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had risen 11 points last Thursday through Monday, tacked on another 4.50 to 821.29.

British Petroleum led the active list as of the 4 p.m. close in New York, up ⅜ at 16½ on reports — not officially confirmed — that the company had found a new oil field off the Shetland Islands north of Scotland.

Among other oil issues, Texaco gained 1 to 24¾, Exxon was up 1 at 45⅛ and Gulf Oil added ½ to 23¼, all in active trading.

Houston Oil & Minerals rose 1¼ to 22¾ in brisk trading on the American Stock Exchange.

Eugene Nowak, petroleum industry analyst at Blyth Eastman Dillon attributed the strength in the group to unsubstantiated rumors that Texaco had encountered a significant amount of natural gas in its drilling in the Baltimore Canyon off the New Jersey coast.

New York (AP) — Tuesday's national prices for New York Stock Exchange issues as of NYSE close. Prices and volume consolidated for securities also traded on other markets.

Many Variables To Israeli Jet Sale To Taiwan

TAIPEI, Taiwan (UPI) — Nationalist China is badly in need of better fighter planes for its Air Force but is reluctant to buy them from Israel.

President Carter has given Israel U.S. permission to sell Taiwan 50 to 60 Kfir jet fighters equipped with American engines. But the government here has since twice denied any decision, or even intention, to buy the Israeli warplanes.

Taipei months ago asked to purchase the same number of F4 Phantom jets from the United States. The U.S. government, unwilling to antagonize Peking, has so far not agreed to the request.

Carter apparently hopes that the sale of Israel's Kfir will satisfy Taiwan's defense needs and the Nationalists would not have to buy the phantoms from Washington.

Saudi Arabia is Taiwan's only remaining friend in the Middle East, and a valuable one. It kept supplying Taiwan with nearly all the oil it needed during the 1973 embargo and could be counted on to do the same in the event of future restrictions.

It has extended loans totaling nearly $200 million to Taiwan and more are being negotiated.

Saudi Arabia quietly expressed its displeasure when Taiwan bought an unknown number of ship-to-ship Gabriel missiles from Israel, government officials said.

It is expected to be even more offended if Taiwan chooses to pay another $500 million for the Kfir jets.

"We would be stupid to do anything to affect our friendship with Saudi Arabia," one ranking Taiwan government official told UPI. "We are still trying to get the Phantoms from the United States."

The official would not say whether his government would try to buy the Kfir jets as a last resort, or how to go about it without angering the Saudis.

Nationalist China has never made public its military strength, but it is known to have between 500 and 600 jet fighters. The backbone of the air force is the short-range F4E which, according to military experts, can match the Communist Chinese MiG-21 but not the MiG25.

According to deliberately ambiguous budget figures released by the government, it can be figured Nationalist China is spending some $1.8 billion this year on its military forces. Most of the money is to buy jet fighters, missiles and tanks.

With a standing army of half a million men and a reserve force of nearly 2 million, Taiwan is confident that it can defend itself against any Communist Chinese invasion, a possibility Taipei never discounts.

The island's arsenals are turning out air-to-air missiles, a modified version of the heatseeking Sidewinder, and nearly all the conventional weapons used by the ground forces, ranging from automatic rifles to 155mm howitzers.

Tracking Productivity Important To Economy

By WILLIAM GLASGALL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Productivity is a measure of how efficiently the nation produces goods and provides services. Government figures show our overall productivity has not been growing as rapidly as in the past. Some worry is expressed that foreign countries are surpassing us in efficiency. In any event, declining productivity will be felt in every American's pocketbook.

Here are some questions and answers about productivity, its measurement and its meaning:

Q. What is productivity and what is the government measuring?

A. Productivity describes how much of something — hours of labor or dollars' worth of new equipment, for instance — it takes to produce an item or provide a specific service. The most common measure used by the government looks at output per hour of human labor. But the Labor Department, which measures productivity, notes its man-hour index reflects other factors as well. The number of man-hours it takes to build a car, for instance, includes the amount of work assembly-line machinery can do. And that reflects how much an automaker has invested in new machinery that can work faster and more efficiently.

Q. Why bother keeping track of productivity figures?

A. Productivity figures tell us how efficiently we're working, and work efficiency is seen as a major weapon against inflation. According to economist Tilford Gaines at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. in New York, in inflationary times, "greater productivity is the only way that higher labor (and other) costs can be paid without raising prices." For example, if a man who makes 100 razor blades a week gets his weekly salary raised from $200 to $220, then the price of razor blades goes up 10 percent to cover this new cost — unless the worker's productivity increases to 110 razor blades a week. The 10 extra blades, in theory, pay for the extra salary cost.

Q. Where do we stand now on productivity?

A. The Labor Department says overall productivity in the private, non-farm sector of the economy rose 2.2 percent in 1977, against a rise of 4.1 percent in 1976. While productivity in the auto industry rose 7 percent last year, productivity in steel gained just 1.5 percent and that of flour and milling industries declined by 7.1 percent.

Q. Can this be explained?

A. A report by the economic consulting firm of A. Gary Shilling & Co. suggests that the productivity growth rate has declined in the past three years because businesses have been "supercautious" about purchasing new plants and equipment in a time of considerable uncertainty over future trends. "They have been responding to rising sales and production by adding labor costs, such as second shifts that can be eliminated if business turns down, rather than capital equipment that may only sit there and rot," the Shilling report noted. This means manufacturers may be more willing to increase their labor bill, cutting into productivity gains.

Q. Isn't it hard to measure productivity in some industries?

A. "Productivity is the most elusive concept we have to deal with in economics," notes Gaines. Just over half the economy — secretaries, travel agents, bus drivers, bankers — is involved in service jobs that don't produce easily-measured thousands of autos, tons of steel, boxes of bolts or sacks of flour. The government has developed ways to measure productivity in such service industries as hotels. But in education, for instance, the visible "product" is difficult to determine. Or take "the case of one M.D. who used to care for 300 patients and all their medical requirements," Gaines says. "Today I have a doctor for every different ailment that might hit me," he adds, asking: "Are the new doctors as productive as the old general practitioners?"

Q. What about government workers? Do the Labor Department's measurements apply to them?

A. The Labor Department's measurements apply to private industry, and economists note that as the government sector grows (government comprises 15 to 20 percent of the economy now), the broad sample of workers used in determining an overall productivity index for private industry shrinks. There are measures of productivity in government, of course. But Rockefeller Foundation Comptroller Herbert Heaton points out these indices might have little meaning. For instance, a trash collector's "productivity" might be measured in tons of refuse picked up per shift. "Less frequent garbage pickups means more pickup weight per stop and per truck shift, but less sanitation," Heaton says.

Q. How does our productivity compare with that of other industrialized nations?

A. Using conventional measurements, United States per-capita output was more than 50 percent above that of any other industrialized nation in 1950. By 1974, however, Sweden and Switzerland would seem to have overtaken us, with Canada and West Germany close behind.

Q. What does this mean?

A. Some of the gain may be due to adaptation of the latest production techniques as Europe and Japan recovered from the devastation of World War II. But economists generally agree the actual level of productivity here still is the world's highest, even though our lead has narrowed. Economists say American productivity figures would look healthier if a more complex system of measuring productivity around the world were used. The system would take into account such things as differences in consumer purchasing power — how long you would work to buy a car, a toaster or a haircut. It also would include the taxes, subsidies and restrictions in international trade that can distort currency exchange rates and values of internationally traded items.

Officials Focus On Black Woman's Case

OCALA, Fla. (AP) — Mary Worlds, who claims she was convicted of a crime that never occurred, spent her first full day in jail Tuesday, and the head of Florida's Parole and Probation Commission said it may be six months before his agency can even begin reviewing her case.

Mrs. Worlds' case also has drawn the attention of Florida Gov. Reubin Askew, Attorney General Robert Shevin and the U.S. Civil Rights Commission in Atlanta, all of whom are conducting independent investigations of circumstances surrounding her conviction and three-year sentence.

Mrs. Worlds, 29, was locked up Monday at the nearby Lowell State Prison for Women to begin serving the term for aggravated battery.

The black woman was convicted by an all-white jury last year on charges of burning a patient with a cigarette at the Marianna Sunland Training Center, a state institution for the retarded where she worked as a supervisor. Her jailing was delayed while she appealed the jury verdict to the judge.

Mrs. World's accuser was a subordinate, Eudora Conner. She said she witnessed the incident but didn't intervene, seek medical attention for the patient or report the incident for four months.

"I think all the jury heard was a white woman said a black woman burned a patient," said Mrs. Worlds, a college-educated mother of two young children who was promoted over Mrs. Conner in 1975.

Mrs. Conner said she neglected to report the incident because she didn't want to get her supervisor in trouble. She has never said why she changed her mind.

Maurice Crockett, chairman of the state parole commission, said Tuesday his agency can't review the case until it receives papers from the state Department of Corrections. That, he said, could take six months.

At Mrs. Worlds' trial, seven co-workers who regularly tended the patient testified that they never found any evidence of cigarette burns.

A doctor summoned as a state witness said he examined the patient, Susan Mischock, six months afterwards and couldn't swear that the discoloration on her arms were marks from a cigarette burns or natural skin texture changes brought on by aging.

The Tampa Tribune in recent stories has raised questions about possible racial motivation behind the charges.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am 71 and in good health. I have four-year savings certificates paying 7½ percent and a mutual fund which pays about 8 or 8½ percent. I now have $10,000 more to invest. Since the commission on the mutual fund is about 80 cents a share, how long is it before the better income on the mutual fund pays off the commission?

I realize the broker has to make a living. But I wonder where to put the $10,000 — in more savings certificates or in the mutual fund?

A. The mutual fund you named in your letter has a commission charge of 8½ percent. Its dividends produce a current yield of almost exactly 8½ percent — 1 percentage point more than the interest paid on four-year savings certificates.

So, if the dividends paid by that mutual fund remain constant, it would take eight and a half years for the fund to overcome the commission bite and become a better income producer.

Even if you're in the best of health, at age 71 you should be realistic enough to know that you don't have too many years left.

For a person in your position, there are other high-yielding investments available. I suggest you look at such things as longer-term savings certificates, corporate bonds, quality common stocks of utility companies and no-load mutual funds which don't charge commissions.

• • •

Q. What sort of short-term investment program would you suggest for a single man, 22, with about $5,000 to invest? My annual income is $17,500 and I have a union pension plan, as well as a retirement program through a major insurance company. A number of my friends are in the same position.

A. You don't clue me in on your definition of "short-term." The old definition — geared to the break between short-term and long-term capital gains taxation — was six months. Now, that period has been extended to one year.

The key, of course, is when you will want to put your hands on the money. If you are going to need the money within a couple of years, the answer has to be to keep it in the insured savings account.

But, it it's strictly "extra" cash you can let ride, you can afford to take some risks with it. I'd suggest common stocks — 50 shares of a $100 stock or 100 shares of $50 stock or even 200 shares of a $25 stock. Don't go reaching for the low-priced items. Too many of those are extra risky.

• • •

Q. Where can I get individual advice on what stocks to buy from a respectable party?

A. You're asking the age-old question, "Where can I find a good broker?" There's no pat answer. It's strictly a trial and error thing.

You find your broker the same way you pick your doctor, dentist, plumber or plasterer — by contacting those who seem to have good reputations and trying them out. This column cannot recommend individual brokers.

• • •

Q. If I buy a "bearer" bond at a discount from its par value and redeem it at value when it matures, I am supposed to reported the difference as a capital gain and pay capital gains owner's name on them, how does anyone know the price paid for them and the profit at the time they are redeemed?

A. You, the owner, know. Let your conscience by your guide. If it guides you in the wrong direction and the Internal Revenue Service catches you — as can happen — you'll be in big trouble.

Doctors Skeptical Of Midwifery

ARLINGTON (AP) — There's no framed diploma on the wall, no mood music wafting through a lushly-appointed office. But Ken Revell, the Dallas-Fort Worth area's only advertising midwife, says the results are just the same.

The 30-year-old ex-Marine admits he has no impressive credentials to lend credibility to the happy words "mother and daughter are fine." He learned his work from other midwives and textbooks.

However, natural childbirth is in vogue and Revell said his lack of schooling doesn't seem to matter to the prospective parents.

"When people call me, they've already checked me out," he said. "I think what appeals to them is having the child in their home."

Revell has been a practicing midwife for about six weeks. He moonlighted for nine months while working as an un-licensed private nurse, but quit when his part-time delivery schedule got too heavy. He said he has had six healthy deliveries since he quit nursing.

"It took me three months to get listed as a midwife in the Yellow Pages," he said with a chuckle. "Southwestern Bell didn't believe midwifery was legal so I had to convince them."

"It seems to me that it's practicing medicine without a license," said Dr. James Short, director of the Tarrant County Medical Society in Fort Worth. "I wonder what his (Revell's) position will be on malpractice, if something goes wrong during delivery?"

John Sortore, director of investigations for the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners, said there is no law on midwifery in Texas. In fact, Sortore said the Texas appeals court ruled in the 1950s that obstetrics was "not the practice of medicine."

"We take the position that child birth is a normal phenomenon," he said. "Anybody can do it. It's when they (midwives) start performing Caesarean sections and using different kinds of drugs that it becomes questionable."

Sortore said a legal opinion has been requested from the Texas attorney general on those questions.

Revell knows how doctors feel about his occupation. He said he has extended an invitation to anyone in the Tarrant County Medical Society to watch him work.

To date, the invitation has not been accepted. But Revell really doesn't have time to worry about it. He's too busy trying to get recognized in the community — and what better way to do it than cut the competition's prices.

"I charge $675 for everything from prenatal through postnatal care. You can save $800 to $900 in hospital costs. And when it's done at home, the father can catch his own child," he said.

"They don't allow that in hospitals. Usually, if he's in the delivery room, he's at the mother's head coaching her or over in a corner watching."

Students Clash With Troops In Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Students clashed with national guard troops who tried to break up anti-government demonstrations in Managua and several other southern towns Tuesday, rescue officials said. Three persons were reported killed and at least 13 injured.

The biggest clash was in San Marco, where three died and five were hurt, said Vanancio Venegas, a hospital official in the town of Jinotepe, where violence also was reported. Demonstrations and student-police clashes also were reported in the town of Diriamba.

Rene Orudes, chief of operations of the Jinotepe Red Cross, said eight persons were injured in Jinotepe. He said there were injuries in Diriamba but the number was unknown.

Five Killed Sunday

Five students were killed and 19 were injured Sunday in fighting in Jinotepe, 30 miles south of Managua. Diriamba and San Marco are near Jinotepe.

In the capital, national guard troops ringed two universites and used tear gas to disperse students who had taken control of the campuses.

The trouble began after crowds gathered to protest the deaths of the five students in Jinotepe on Sunday.

President Anastasio Somoza issued an appeal earlier Tuesday asking parents to convince their children to end occupation of the nation's public schools, which started 10 days ago. Somoza, in a speech to 15,000 people, suggested the students causing the trouble go to Cuba.

Warning Given

"They don't go to Cuba and make these kind of disturbances because they know for certain that Fidel Castro would send them to jail for 30 years," Somoza said.

The Nicaraguan president has often blamed Castro for arming and training leftist guerrillas operating in Nicaragua, which has been plagued with sporadic demonstrations and violence since the assassination Jan. 10 of newspaper publisher Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, a staunch foe of Somoza. More than 100 persons have been killed since then in clashes with the national guard, Nicaragua's army.

Third World Nations Hit Trade Law Plans

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — A spokesman for Third World nations said Tuesday that proposed trade laws sought by Japan, the United States and Common Market nations would harm the progress of developing nations.

Ambassador Petar Tomic, a Yugoslavian who represents 76 developing countries in plenary sessions of the Tokyo Round trade talks, told a news conference that the group unanimously opposes two sections of a "fair trade" code under discussion in the multilateral negotiations.

He said the Third World bloc opposes a ban or a limit on export subsidies and the right to impose "selective safeguards," which would allow states to restrict imports from a particular country when they pose a threat to a domestic industry.

If the Third World's export capabilities were reduced, Tomic said, "it is clear that exports of developed countries to us cannot develop the same way they have developed in the past." He said both proposals might force Third World nations to reduce exports.

The Third World nations seek the right to retain export subsidies but they also seek an end to all countervailing duties, which are tariffs used to offset export subsidies.

The industrialized nations are attempting to work out the fair trade system that would create new international trading rules.

Tomic also said the developing nations are beginning to worry about the effect of currency fluctuations on reduced tariffs. "What does a reduction in tariffs means as long as values keep changing? This would be no solution," he said.

The world monetary situation will be a key issue at a summit meeting in Bonn, West Germany July 16-17 of the United States, Canada, Japan, France, Britain, West Germany and Italy.

Meanwhile in Tokyo, Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda told reporters Monday he will take drastic measures to reduce his country's trade surplus, but he warned there will be no stability in international trade unless the value of the U.S. dollar can be stabilized.

Fukuda said inflation in the United States and the American trade deficit are matters of major concern to Japan and European countries and that both topics will be discussed at the Bonn summit meeting.

He emphasized, however, that even if Japan increases imports and imposes export restrictions, the measures might not reduce Japan's trade surplus because continued inflation in the United States would make Japanese exports more expensive.

"The dollar dominated values of Japanese exports could go up by anywhere between 10 and 15 percent this year," he said, despite the fact that export volume will remain the same as last year.

Japan exports $83 billion worth of goods a year. The Japanese trade surplus for 1977 was $20.4 billion.

Two-Thirds Rule Draws Labor Rebuff

AUSTIN (AP) — The United Labor Legislative Committee of the Texas AFL-CIO voted unanimously Tuesday to oppose a proposal that would require a two-thirds vote of the Legislature or local governments to approve new taxes or tax increases.

University of Texas economics professor Dan Morgan told the committee enemies of organized labor have been trying for 10 years to impose a two-thirds rule across the nation.

"This country was founded on the democratic vote, and now the same right-wing minority that has always opposed progressive legislation wants to hamstring our legislative bodies," said Texas AFL-CIO president Harry Hubbard.

National Power System Studied

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of Energy plans to look into the notion of creating a nationwide electric power grid, linking all regions.

The study by the department's Economic Regulatory Administration is scheduled for completion in about one year, the department said Tuesday.

It was undertaken in response to a request earlier by the late Sen. Lee Metcalf, D-Mont., who had proposed a national electricity grid.

The announcement said the Department of Energy, using the results of previous studies by the Interior Department and the Congressional Research Service, will examine a wider range of possibilities including additions to the existing powerline interconnection system.

Another concept to be studied is that of "a federally owned and operated system of generating facilities and high voltage transmission lines connecting all regions of the U.S. in a centralized grid," the announcement said.

It explained that a national grid might make it easier to transfer power to an area suffering a power breakdown.

The department study will examine whether greater interconnection of power systems can improve the economy and reliability of electricity service and save fuel.

The announcement went on to say the study will cover technical and economic feasibility of a national grid and will compare its potential benefits and costs.

Most electric utility companies and government power-marketing agencies are already connected with others nearby in large regional systems or "pools," enabling them to sell power to each other both on a regular and on an emergency basis.

Following the great northeastern blackout of 1965, powerlines interconnecting these regional pools were also strengthened, enabling the regions to support each other more adequately.

The Energy Department will be seeking to determine whether such support between regions could be improved by further interconnections in a nationwide grid of powerlines which could provide a greater variety and capacity of routes for electricity transfers.

The ability to transfer large amounts of electricity long distances through a nationwide grid also presents the possibility of making more efficient use of existing

Sears Recalls Ladders

WASHINGTON (AP) — A second recall notice involving 7,500 Sears five-foot household aluminum ladders has been issued by the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

The recall was first announced in March, but commission spokesmen said it is being repeated in hopes of encouraging returns of more of the ladders.

Sears reports that under certain conditions the top cap may split, causing the ladder to collpse, although no injuries have been reported to date.

Sears officials urged owners of the ladders to return them for exchange or a refund. The ladders sold for about $13, have green legs, and carry either model number 133.42435 or stock number 42435 on the upper side of the end rail.

The ladders were sold between January 1977 and March 1978 in Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Wyoming and parts of Iowa and Kentucky.

Surgeon Says Rules Slow Heart Research

HOUSTON (AP) — Famed heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley believes federal restrictions will slow the development of new heart disease treatments and that the progress of past 10 years "won't be duplicated in the next two decades."

Cooley, speaking Monday to the Texas Rehabilitation Association, said, "part of the problem in health care delivery today is that the government is involved. A good deal of the hospital and doctor bills goes to satisfy federal regulations."

The surgeon said more than 30 open-heart operations are scheduled each day at the Texas Heart Institute in Houston, but expansion of the health facility is being stalled by more and more federal restrictions.

"We are trying to win by playing within the rules but cardiac medicine will endure a temporary setback," he said.

He objected "most strenuously" to the federal regulation that doctors must "go to the patient the night before a new procedure is tried and say we are going to use an experimental device. Washington says to tell the patient everything that is to be done, but it is dehumanizing for the patient."

Cooley, surgeon-in-chief at the heart institute, also criticized recent studies released by the Veterans Administration and the National Heart Institute questioning coronary bypass operations.

About 3,500 of these operations have been performed at the Texas Heart Institute since 1977.

One much-discussed alternative to the bypass surgery involves the insertion of a tube through the patient's arm then guided toward the vessels in the heart where a small section balloons to open blocked passageways.

Cooley said of the alternate method, "I wouldn't want a member of my own family to be among the first 100 patients." He called the procedure "gimmicky".

Man Stabs Worker

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) — A man who was annoyed because construction work was being done near his apartment stabbed a worker with a carpenter's knife several times in the back, and the worker struck him on the head with a hammer in self-defense, police said. Both were hospitalized Tuesday.

Budget Reduced With Simpler Facilities

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the smaller federal agencies has cut its public relations budget from about $744,000 to less than $600,000 by buying cheaper desks and typewriters and eliminating walls, its chairman said Tuesday.

A saving of $150,000 a year is not much by federal spending standards. But then the total budget of the National Endowment for the Humanities next year is about $146,000,000 — less than one-sixth what the Pentagon spends on public relations alone.

Chairman Joseph D. Duffey escorted reporters and the head of the General Services Administration, Jay Solomon, on a tour of the new space. Solomon, an advocate of better use of federal buildings, asked permission to bring some of his design staff back to see it when it is occupied.

One example of savings: if the endowment had bought the wooden desks which the GSA prescribes, they would have cost $349 each, or a total of $10,470 for the 30 needed. Instead the agency bought metal desks and had them painted for a total of $5,265, saving $5,205.

Many of the employees in the public relations section preferred manual typewriters over the popular electric model. So the endowment bought reconditioned manuals for $60 each rather than the electrics at $740 each. Buying them was a cultural shock to the suppliers, officials said, since they think the government buys only the latest and most expensive models.

"The employees now think they're in the best space in the building," Duffey said. The endowment is in rented space on five floors of a commercial building, but expects to stay only about two years before moving to the old Washington Post Offfice Building, a Pennsylvania Avenue landmark wich is about to be renovated by the GSA.

Eliminating walls made a significant saving, the agency said: 30 employees will share space normally assigned to half that number. Duffey said the space arrangement is more like that of a newspaper city room or a publishing house than the usual federal agency.

Further savings were realized by avoiding the need for individual air-conditioning ducts, light switches and fixtures, electrical outlets and other standard accoutrements.

When the space is occupied, the walls will be decorated with posters of such endowment projects as the King Tut show, the Adams Chronicles, paintings from the Soviet Union.

The endowment anticipates additional savings by being able to store research materials needed frequently on shelves, rather than in a basement storage area. The endowment has also cut its mailing list from an average of 7,000 to about 200 by eliminating duplications and by such devices as sending releases about Latin American projects, for example, only to those interested. Formerly, all releases went to everyone on the list, which was handled commercially.

U.S., Germany Sign Transport Accord

WASHINGTON (AP) — West German Transport Minister Kurt Gscheidle and Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams will sign a joint memorandum of understanding Wednesday concerning cooperation in research and development of advanced ground transportation systems.

Announcing this Tuesday, the Department of Transportation said the memorandum of understanding extends and expands a cooperative research and information-sharing program begun in 1973.

Police Crack Major Stolen Goods Ring

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Syracuse police said Tuesday that they have broken up a major burglary ring linked to organized crime that spanned four states and South America.

Police Chief Thomas Sardino said 42 warrants were issued and some of those named in were being booked on charges that included burglary to interstate transportation of stolen goods. He said about $1.5 million worth of stolen goods had been recovered. The alleged burglary ring operated in New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Connecticut, as well as Washington, D.C., and South America.

Buckling Byways Battled

HOUSTON (AP) — It is becoming a common sight along the freeways and streets of Houston to see a car bounce upward and flop downward and hear the thud of the shock absorbers. Nothing to worry about, just another buckle in the heavily-traveled roadways of this fast growing city.

The Houston street repair division is out almost every day working on the cracks that appear suddenly as temperatures rise and traffic increases.

The Texas Highway Department is also finding it difficult to keep up with repairs. Last weekend state workers spent seven hours repairing a pavement rupture across both southbound lanes of Interstate 45 north of Conroe. Traffic Hot, dry weather causes concrete to expand and the ground to dry up.

As W.G. Stephenson, superintendent of Houston street repairs, said Tuesday, "The road literally pops up. And the situation worsens on a hot afternoon during rush hour traffic."

Richard Kabat, an administrative engineer for the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, explained:

"The traffic will act like a jackhammer and break the concrete. Usually we can shutdown one or two lanes if it just crumbles, but if it buckles and ruptures, we have to detour traffic."

Since the first of May, 120 cases of buckled streets have been reported in Houston, 14 in one day.

Five of the buckles are now being repaired, 47 have been permanently replaced, and the remainder temporarily fixed, all at a cost of $260,000.

But recently a buckle snapped across four lanes of traffic on a busy Houston street. And, another buckle caught a city bus driver by surprise and his vehicle had to be towed off.

FLOODED FLAGS DRY OUT — Flags which had been stored in the basement of the Rochester, Minn., firehouse were soaked in muddy water when the building was flooded last week, along with thousands of homes and businesses. Firemen used their water hoses Monday to wash the mud from the flags. The flags then were hung on a line and fence to dry. (AP Laserphoto)
