Reagan: Policies like neighborhood watch program

NEW ORLEANS (AP) —In an address to the Veterans of Foreign Wars convention, President Reagan likened his Central America policy to a neighborhood watch program, in which neighbors keep an eye on each others' homes "so outside troublemakers and bullies will think twice."

He called it a "security shield" and added: "But this watch doesn't protect someone's silverware. It protects something much more valuable — freedom."

Reagan said his policy was to help Latin America progress toward peace and a better life.

"And let me say with all the conviction I can muster, America would not be America if we abandoned the struggling neighbors of our own hemisphere," he declared.

The president, his Central America policies under increasing fire, insisted today that "quiet, solid progress" is being made in the region despite the "distorted view" the American people are getting of the conflicts.

"We are doing everything we can to build peace and prosperity," Reagan told the veterans.

The president's speech occurred the day after Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid had told him that shows of force in Central America "threaten to touch off a conflagration."

President Reagan

Reagan flew here Sunday night from his summit with de la Madrid in the coastal town of La Paz, Mexico.

After having originally turned down the VFW's invitation, the president apparently felt compelled to open to his address with an apology.

"It seems there were some logistic problems about flying from the tip of Baja, Mexico, to Louisiana and then back to California," he said. "Well, let me say — and I want them to keep their ears open for this — I would fly halfway around the world for the honor of meeting with the Veterans of Foreign Wars," he declared in remarks prepared for delivery.

After addressing the VFW today, Reagan will fly to his ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif., for a two-week vacation with a week of campaign-style meetings and events in Los Angeles sandwiched in between.

He planned to return to the White House on Labor Day.

Pope honors Virgin Mary's birth

Pope John Paul

LOURDES, France (AP) — Pope John Paul II told 150,000 pilgrims today he had come to this shrine to the Virgin Mary to celebrate not only her assumption into heaven but also the second millennium of her birth.

The crowd, including thousands of disabled people, cheered and waved yellow and white banners as the sun shone through the clouds after the pope's homily at morning Mass. Hundreds of white pigeons were released and soared through the air to the strains of organ music and a choir.

The pontiff, wearing a gold robe and white and blue miter for the services, also delivered an Angelus blessing before retiring for lunch with local bishops.

John Paul, the first pope to journey to one of the most popular shrines to the mother of Jesus, celebrated the morning Mass after a full day of activities Sunday, including a speech denouncing states that impose a "civil death" on their people by denying them fundamental rights.

In his homily, the pope said the 2,000th anniversary of the birth of Christ is only 17 years away. "Would it therefore not be opportune to celebrate first the second millennium of the birth of Mary?," he asked.

"And this is why we are making this pilgrimage to Lourdes: not only to honor, by this solemnity of the assumption, the birth of Mary into heaven, but also to honor the blessed moment of her earthly birth," he said in French before pilgrims gathered in cool, misty weather in a meadow in the Our Lady of Lourdes sanctuary. Police estimated the crowd at 150,000.

Roman Catholic dogma teaches that Mary was born by immaculate conception, or without sin, and was bodily assumed into heaven. Todayis the feast day celebrating the assumption — one of the biggest holidays in Europe, with virtually all shops and offices closed for the day.

Lourdes is particularly linked to the dogma of immaculate conception because a 14-year-old local girl named Bernadette Soubirous said the Virgin Mary appeared to her here in 1858 and said, "I am the Immaculate Conception."

That was only four years after Pope Pius IX first promulgated the dogma of the Immaculate Conception. The town has since become one of the most popular honoring the Virgin Mary, drawing thousands of ill and dying people searching for miraculous cures from the shrine's springs.

Earlier today, the pontiff held meetings with priests and nuns at the Rosary Basilica and then proceeded by motorcade in his white popemobile to the crowded meadow.

Town dubbed Roman Catholic Disneyland

LOURDES, France (AP) — This small town with rows of souvenir and religious trinket shops selling everything from rosaries to Pope John Paul II T-shirts is used to critics who say it resembles a Roman Catholic Disneyland.

But Lourdes, where the major industry is based on the cult of the Virgin Mary and a tiny hillside grotto, is trying to counter its commercialist image to hundreds of reporters covering the papal visit — the first by any pontiff.

Included in the packet of background material each reporter received was a four-page handout which admitted philosophically that "there is no doubt that the stores in Lourdes will once again take a hammering. It will neither be the first time nor the last."

It included a point-by-point rebuttal by The Rev. Raymond Lavedan of the usual accusations of bad taste and moneymaking, concluding essentially that it is not for reporters or other supposed "sophisticates" to judge what the largely lower middle class crowds here choose to take home as a remembrance.

"If divine grace came down only on people with good taste, it would not come down very often," said the Lourdes rectory official.

Amputee fights until attacker passes out

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A legless 69-year-old woman who waged a successful 1½-hour battle against a naked attacker trying to undress her says she wanted to kill the man, but he finally passed out apparently from exhaustion.

"I don't know how I did it," she said.

Rosetta M. Smith said she was glad she couldn't move much during the struggle Saturday because "if I had gotten my hands on something, I would have tried to kill him."

The double amputee, who spends 24 hours a week on a kidney dialysis machine, was not injured in the attack. Cleo Joel Green, 25, of Louisville, was charged with first-degree criminal attempted rape and second-degree burglary in the incident.

"I'm not bruised or anything," Mrs. Smith said after police arrived. "But I'm so hurt, because I've never bothered anybody. Why would somebody want to do this to me?"

The intruder entered her first-floor apartment about 12:30 a.m. through a sliding glass door which had been left open "to get some of that cool country breeze," Mrs. Smith said. The man climbed over a 5-foot railing and cut the screen to unlock a screen door.

Drug addicts have to wait in line to get help

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a five-part series on drug use in Midland. In cases where first names only are used, the names are fictitious. The people, however, are real.

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

We pulled up to the back of a run-down cafe on the southside of Odessa. Three Hispanic men talking in the parking lot glanced over at us. Their faces went blank as they stood tall, waiting for Matt.

When he opened the door, a wave of heat hit me. With one foot out, Matt looked at the men and said over his shoulder, "You can crack the window — but lock the doors."

When he returned, he was grinning, the lines spreading on his worn, 35-year-old face.

"We scored," he said, opening his fist to display two small squares of foil.

Matt had been on and off heroin for 17 years.

He said he'd kicked the habit before — but only with the help of a methadone maintenance program in Houston.

He'd been on a waiting list for a similar program at the Lubbock Mental Health Mental Retardation Center for more than a month. Waiting lines are long for heroin addicts hoping to kick the habit — and to avoid withdrawal symptoms by switching over to methadone.

"No matter what you have to do, steal or whatever, to support your habit, go ahead and do heroin and we'll see you when we can," Matt said the Lubbock program personnel told him. "This is me, still waiting. And their hands are tied."

We parked in the shade next to a railroad track further along the road. Tree branches swung in as we rolled down the windows, hidden from cars passing by on the highway. He pulled off his belt.

A cup of water obtained earlier at a gas station was on the floor. He pulled a screw-on soft drink bottle cap from his pocket. A filter was ripped out of a cigarette shaken from his pack of Mariboros. A syringe was produced.

"We pretty well stay packed," Theron Cole, Lubbock's MHMR drug counselor supervisor, said of the methadone program.

A methadone program similar to the one in Lubbock and at least 10 others in the state was turned down in the Midland-Odessa area.

"Addicts are at the end of their rope when they go for help," Matt said. "What happens to them? Hell, where do you go for help? The (Midland) MHMR will put you in a hospital but when you're having withdrawals, the tranquilizers and mood-lifting drugs don't help."

According to Cole: "Theoretically, we could serve 1,000 people if all we did was dose them (with methadone) when they walk in the door."

Counseling, however, is important in all drug treatment programs, Cole said. Of the 110 persons participating in the Lubbock MHMR's drug treatments, about 80 to 90 are on the methadone program. All doses of methadone are controlled by a staff physician.

Random urinalysis are conducted to determine a patient's dependence or absence of street drugs, Cole said, adding counselors must watch the person eliminate.

"There are little ways of getting around urinalysis," said a Midland drug abuse counselor and ex-heroin addict. "I used a douche bag strapped to me that I had my girlfriend urinate in. You can also drink a lot of vinegar or pickle juice to flush your system out."

"If a person continues to abuse drugs over a period of time, we ask them to get off (the methadone program)," Cole said. "But we're always monitoring and counseling. We never let it go by. We watch a person's patterns and give the person choices."

"I'm tired of paying," Matt said. "Fine, I strung myself out, but I want off of it. And they just say, 'Go on out and do heroin.' Is this a sickness or is it not? Why can't they help?"

Fair, warm weather forecast

By The Associated Press

Light, southerly breezes that prevailed across the state this morning brought another day of generally fair and seasonably warm weather.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s and low 80s. Marfa had the lowest temperature statewide with a reading of 63 degrees at 4 a.m. It was 84 at Dallas and 83 at Fort Worth.

Forecasters called for another hot day today with the mercury expected to surge above the 100 degree mark over most of Central and North Texas and along the Rio Grande in Southwest Texas.

A weak tropical disturbance in the northwestern Gulf was expected to bring scattered showers and thunderstorms to the Coastal Plains and adjacent waters, and other widely scattered thunderstorms were expected to develop this afternoon over North and East Texas.

Lourdes dubbed Catholic Disneyland

About 1,000 souvenir shops do business in Lourdes — more than one for every 20 of the town's permanent residents. Shoppers can buy rosaries, crucifixes, John Paul II T-shirts and dozens of religious keepsakes.

But the big seller is the Virgin Mary, said to have appeared 18 times before 14-year-old Bernadette Soubirous in 1858 at what is now a hillside grotto where thousands of sick and dying people flock annually for what they hope will be a miracle cure.

The Catholic church has set up two special commissions to study the cure claims and recognizes 65 recoveries as miraculous.

Visitors can purchase representations of Mary in plastic and plaster, on 3-D postcards and in the shape of a bottle to take home some of Lourdes' reputedly healing waters.

The streets are festooned with banners. Sidewalk vendors hawk small flags with the pope's image and the latest souvenir edition of the local paper to tourists donning sunglasses and shorts.

Lavedan contends the number of shops is "in a direct relation" to the number of pilgrims — more than 4 million annually — and that the church has no objection to the sale of objects which serve as "references, reminders, echoes leading the faithful to the great sacrements of faith."

He adds the church has taken legal action to prevent the sale of "scandalous objects" such as "pieces of the grotto presented as a magical talisman."

Addicts have to wait in line for help

"Damn, it got a little hot that time," he said as he held the bent edges of the aluminum cap above the disposable lighter. When the powder melted, he stuck the syringe in the soaked filter and tightened the belt around his arm.

Licking his lips, he plunged the needle next to a track in his upper arm where he said he'd "been hittin' pretty good there lately."

"Methadone isn't good," said Valorie Burks, a drug abuse counselor at Midland's MHMR. "It keeps a person from feeling pain. It numbs everything. If you want off, you have to know what it feels like — the withdrawals — or you'll go back."

"It's trading one addiction for another," said Bob Savage, Palmer Drug Abuse Program director. "I've been through the methadone detox. It's worse than heroin — and dangerous. It hasn't done anything to offset the crime rate."

Bob Warren, former counselor at the Midland PDAP and now director of the program in Brownsville, agreed: "They tried to alleviate the crime rate by giving heroin addicts something to satisfy their addiction and pain. What they did was give heroin addicts an additional drug — methadone."

Teen Challenge Director Chuck Redger said methadone can be given to some heroin addicts so they can "level out and function in society. But if you asked an ex-heroin junkie if he still needs drugs to function, he hasn't changed anything. He still can't face life and deal with it successfully."

"Even in El Paso, when I was into heroin, I saw a lot of heroin addicts still shooting up," agreed Teen Challenge's Outreach supervisor Rod Seals. "A lot of junkies are not only continuing on methadone, they are doing both."

He slowly pushed the plunger, filling his worn out vein with the liquid. He left the needle in a moment, then drew his blood into the syringe. When it was full, he thrust it back into his vein.

"C'mon," he whispered. "OK — now...it's rushing now."

Cole defended the methadone program in Lubbock, citing a person with a $100 a day habit, "which is nothing compared to most of the ones we see," will need about $36,000 a year to support it.

"Thirty-six thousand dollars a year translates to an awful lot of stolen goods," Cole said. "Even if they're doing only half methadone and half heroin, we've cut the stolen goods in half.

"We're cutting the crime rate and nobody gives us $36,000 a year to treat a patient."

Cole admitted some criminal element would be attracted to a city offering a methadone program.

"There is a certain percentage of people involved in these programs that are in transition from prison to becoming decent, tax-paying citizens.

"It will attract some, but if the program is good, patients will become detoxified. I'd say 80 percent of our clients are working and producing and paying taxes."

While Matt remained on the waiting list for the Lubbock methadone program, he talked of his success with a similar program in 1971.

"The maximum dose was 120 milligrams of methadone," Matt said. "They put me on the maintenance program, I took a maximum dose a day and went to school, held a job. Then I changed programs and tried to de-toxify myself — went in and said, 'Give me only 110 milligrams.'

"I got down to five milligrams a day — a half of a pill. Then I took it every other day. Then I quit."

But in 1974 or 1975, after being off the program for a year, Matt went back to heroin.

"I don't know," he said with a shrug. "I tried to open up a business and my marriage fell apart. I decided to go on the oblivion express. I thought, 'just one time I'm going to get wiped out.' "

He pulled the needle out, leaned back in the car seat and looked at me through half-closed eyes. "Euphoria."

In 1976, Matt was busted for drugs and sent to Huntsville. He served three and a half years of his six year sentence, getting out early on good behavior.

"I was clean when I came out of the pen. I was trying to hold down a job."

Pressures since then, however, drove him back to drugs and to Midland, where he lived with his mother.

Although his $100-$200 a day habit was bad, it wasn't as bad as the $350, seven gram a day habit he once had. But he still was unable to work.

"If I'm number five on the list, what about numbers one through four?" Matt asked. "What are they doing? I'm lucky, I had a life insurance policy that I cashed in.

"Society should be going for that. It should realize that when a person is going for help, he needs it," he said. "A guy goes and wants to get on a drug program — he can't. What's he going to do? He's going to go out and steal something, man. He's got to support his drug habit."

When he was admitted to the Lubbock program, he drove to Lubbock everyday to pick up his doses of methadone.

"Yeah, I think it will hold," he said he told the doctor about his first dose of 35 milligrams. "I'll have 35 milligrams Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Then I'll go down to 30 milligrams Monday. The quicker I can get off to five or 10, the better I'll be."

He called a few weeks later: in order to get completely detoxified, he would have to receive reduced methadone doses for more than the 21 days allowed non-Lubbock residents. According to Cole, the physician's policy was established "because he doesn't want to be responsible for anyone who is traveling (from outside the five-county area serviced by Lubbock's MHMR).

Matt moved in with friends in Lubbock.

A few weeks later he called: "When I got down to 20 (milligrams of methadone) I started getting the bone aches, the chills. I started freaking out." They raised his dose.

A month later, he called: "I'm on 15 now. I've been on 15 about six days."

The next day he said he'd taken a shot of heroin.

"I chipped," he said. "It was just a couple of papers but I saw these roaches crawling on the walls.

"I didn't tell them. It's stupid to say, 'No, I won't shoot up again' because I'm a heroin addict. I've got to take it one day at a time."

France sends more troops to aid Chad's army

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — France is sending 200 more troops to help Chad's army stop Libyan-backed rebels and has put four warplanes on standby in the neighboring Central African Republic for what French sources call "any eventuality."

In Paris, French Defense Minister Charles Hernu on Sunday announced that a detachment from a 500-man paratrooper contingent sent to N'Djamena last week was ordered to establish an outpost on the Chad army's forward defense line at Salal, 220 miles north of the capital.

The French Embassy in N'Djamena said reinforcements would be flown in to boost the the total number of French troops in the former colony to 700.

Chadian Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat announced Saturday that government forces had retreated out of range of the Libyan air attacks after losing the northern strategic oasis of Faya-Largeau, 500 miles north of N'Djamena, last week.

The pullback effectively turned over the sparsely populated northern half of the impoverished landlocked nation to the Libyan-backed forces of former President Goukouni Oueddei.

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy repeatedly has denied his forces are helping Goukouni's rebels in their campaign to topple President Hissene Habre, despite witness accounts and U.S. intelligence reports of a massive Libyan presence in the country.

The Reagan administration is also helping France support Habre's forces with a $25 million military aid package and two AWACS radar spy planes sent to neighboring Sudan to monitor the war.

Chad, a desolate desert nation wracked by civil strife for nearly two decades, has become a focus of confrontation between the United States and Libya. Washington accuses Khadafy of military aggression in Chad and Khadafy claims U.S. officials are using the Chad war as an excuse to intimidate him.

The French paratroopers have been ordered to train loyalist forces and set up heavily armed positions in the capital, the eastern city of Abeche, and in Salal. France has insisted the paratroopers will not engage in combat.

"I looked up from watching TV and saw someone coming at me," the perky, dark-haired woman said. "He slapped me out of my chair, threw my walker into the bathroom and threw me on the bed. I was hollering and screaming: 'Please don't hurt me. Please don't hurt me.' I don't know why nobody heard me."

The attacker terrorized Mrs. Smith for 90 minutes, demanding money as he beat, kicked, choked and threatened her. Insisting she was not injured, Mrs. Smith said she told him: "I need some money too. I ain't got no money."

As he searched her chest of drawers for money, she slid her purse out of sight under the bed.

Fearing for her life, Mrs. Smith said, she resisted the man's attempts to undress her, even after he had removed both her artificial legs.

"I don't know how I did it," she said of her survival. "I thank God. He looked after me like I was somebody special."

Although she was unable to get help by shouting after the man passed out, she was able to turn on a light over her front door that is used by the elderly to alert neighbors. Someone saw it and called the police.

Officers arrived at Mrs. Smith's apartment about 2 a.m. and found the man on the floor, naked and unconscious.

Green was being held Sunday without bond in the Jefferson County Jail pending a court appearance, police said.

Louisville Alderman Steve Magre said Saturday he hopes to find a way to beef up nighttime crime patrols in Dosker Manor, the public housing highrise for the elderly where Mrs. Smith lives.

Magre said he plans to meet with residents, the city housing authority, a youth anti-crime group and Louisville police this week, and in the meantime city police will give the area extra attention.

"I'm glad they're doing all this," Mrs. Smith said, "but he had to do that to me first."

Reagan: Policies like neighborhood watch

Explaining his administration's Central America policies once again, Reagan declared he was intent on seeing that the Soviets and Cubans do not "brutally impose Communist rule and deny individual freedom" in the area.

The national commander of the VFW, James Currieo, traveled to Central America last month and returned to report that Americans probably would "demand a couple divisions of troops down there" if they knew how serious the Communist threat was.

Reagan made it clear he agreed with Currieo's assessment of the seriousness of the situation, although the White House has refrained from taking a position on the VFW's apparent intention to raise money to help the rebels in Nicaragua fight the government.

"In spite of the discouraging hype and hoopla you often hear," Reagan said, "quiet, solid progress is being made in Central America."

Referring to Currieo's publicized belief that Americans are getting a distorted view of the Latin American situation, the president said he agreed.

"You wouldn't know democracy is taking root there," he said. "And I don't blame the media alone, because in many cases they are just reporting the disinformation they hear coming from people who put politics ahead of our national interests."

In his address to the VFW, Reagan said the United States supports "democracy, reform and human freedom" in the area. "We support any effort, any avenue, that will give the people of that region a more free and prosperous future." But he mentioned no specifics.

Maintaining the United States was doing "everything we can to build peace and prosperity" in the region, the president maintained the Soviets and Cubans were aiming for the opposite.

"Do you have any doubt which initiative the people in Central America would choose?" he asked.

Reagan took the occasion to praise his audience, saying, "Your uniforms may be in mothballs, but your readiness to assist your country is spit and polished."

He also said he believed his election in 1980 meant Americans wanted a "new direction in foreign affairs."

Virgin Mary's birth honored by Pope at Lourdes

The pope had planned to visit Lourdes two years ago, but the trip was canceled after he was seriously wounded in an assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981.

On the first day of his 30-hour stopover, John Paul called for prayers for victims of violence, but made no mention of the bombing and isolated anti-religious attacks that preceded his visit.

Security was strengthened after an anti-clerical group which calls itself Stop the Priests bombed a statue of Pontius Pilate at the shrine Friday and a fire was set at a Roman Catholic newspaper at nearby Toulouse. Investigators linked the blaze to the arrest Saturday of three people police said admitted the bombing.

In his address Sunday to thousands of pilgrims filling the square in front of the Basilica of the Rosary, the white-robed pontiff called for prayers for "all those who suffer intolerable blows to their human dignity, to their fundamental rights — all those who are prevented from freely using their liberty of thought and action, humiliated in their legitimate national aspirations."

The Polish-born pontiff did not cite specifics, saying "must we be more precise?"

The pope spoke after a hectic day that included a meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand, several speeches, and a candlelight procession through the sanctuary, where police with metal detectors searched spectators.

John Paul said in an earlier speech that "with you I am going to live a typical day of pilgrimage, very simply, through all the gestures and manifestations of piety."

There was no official crowd estimate for Sunday, but reporters on the scene said there appeared to be far fewer than the expected 200,000 people. Among the crowd were thousands of sick and disabled people in special carts.

There also was a large contingent of pilgrims from the pope's troubled homeland — including members of the outlawed Solidarity trade union. As he rode in the parade, the pope waved and pointed at a huge Solidarity banner.

Chilean leaders want to avert bloody conflicts

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX

An Analysis

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — After three months of increasing popular unrest against President Augusto Pinochet, Chileans are alarmed by the prospect of an uncontrollable cycle of political violence and deadly repression.

For the first time since the armed forces coup against an elected Marxist president a decade ago, there is serious discussion by government, opposition and church leaders of the need to avert bloody conflicts like that which plague El Salvador and Guatemala.

At least 24 people were killed Thursday and Friday when anti-government demonstrators defied a military curfew in Santiago and the port of Valparaiso, drawing gunfire from riot police and army soldiers. The death toll tripled that of previous "days of National Protest."

Chileans are increasingly disturbed by the monthly ritual of bloodshed not only because most take pride in orderliness but because nobody knows where it's leading. They worry about polarization and an uneasy standoff between a military strongman unlikely to be toppled by civilian unrest and a protest movement unlikely to be stamped out by his army.

Pinochet's key concession, offered Sunday by his interior minister, Sergio Onofre Jarpa, is a congressional election "much sooner" than the 1990 date set in the regime's constitution. The political opposition insists there can be no peace without "dialogue of equals" on all issues, including Pinochet's tenure in office, due to expire in 1989.

On Friday, Roman Catholic bishops repeated a month-old appeal by Pope John Paul II for reconciliation in this mostly Catholic nation, with a new warning that "only a prompt democratic opening can avoid a tragedy of vast proportions."

The next day Jarpa, a civilian sworn into the top Cabinet post last Wednesday, met with church leaders and said afterward: "I hope we all have enough awareness of what civil war means and will do all we can to settle things in peace."

Throughout this three-day weekend, marked by today's Catholic Feast of Assumption, tens of thousands of pilgrims prayed at the Lourdes Basilica in Santiago under a banner reading "Dialogue for Peace — Urgency of our Time."

Many pilgrims walked from the slums of Santiago, scene of nearly all the recent shooting deaths. The two-year-old recession that spawned the massive protest movement has put more than half the million or so adults living there out of work.

"The hardship of these people is itself a form of violence," said Monsignor Olivier d'Argouilles, the pastor at Lourdes. "For the adults, there is also a feeling of utter defenselessness against a repression far out of proportion to the threat."

The young, however, feel a need to strike back. Few teen-agers remember the arming of President Salvador Allende's militant supporters against the anticipated coup of 1973.

"In this climate they are learning nothing but violent behavior," the pastor said. "I fear for their future, if they live."

Dallas area residents keep an eye on results in Saturday's DART (Dallas Area Rapid Transit) authority referendum Saturday night at Dallas City Hall. Dallas and 13 suburban areas passed the referendum to fund a permanent transit authority. Seven suburban areas defeated the proposal.

Dallas, 13 suburbs approve $8.75 billion rapid transit

DALLAS (AP) — Supporters of the $8.75 billion Dallas Area Rapid Transit say they will not stop trying to win over areas that voted against Texas' first rail mass transit system.

Residents of Dallas and 13 suburbs voted Saturday to approve a plan under which they will pay a 1-cent sales tax to finance a vast rail network and double the region's bus service.

But residents of Cockrell Hill, Duncanville, Grand Prairie, Lancaster, Mesquite, The Colony and Wilmer, and unincorporated areas of Dallas County, rejected joining the transit system.

"The major suburban cities all voted in today and we are not going to give up on those that didn't," said DART chairwoman Adlene Harrison. "We are going to go out there and work with them to help them approve this later."

With all precincts counted, 101,986 voters, or 58.2 percent of all Dallas County voters casting ballots, favored DART and 73,161, or 41.8 percent, voted against the plan. The rail system will be 160 miles long and construction will continue over the next 27 years.

A total of 177,010 residents voted in the 21 communities — 23 percent of the registered voters.

Election administrator Conny Drake said the turnout in Dallas was the highest ever for an issue referendum.

Dallas voters will have to return to the polls later to approve a bond package backed by the sales tax which goes into effect Jan. 1.

Also on Jan. 1, the Dallas Transit System bus fare will be lowered from 70 cents to 50 cents. In three years, DART plans to double bus service and by 1986, new express and cross-town routes will be linked by 25 timed-transfer centers. Bus routes will criss-cross suburbs now virtually without public transportation.

Supporters said DART's approval is a clear mandate to ease the area's growing traffic congestion and reliance upon the automobile.

There was a clear understanding on the part of the public of the nature of the problem and how severe it was," said DART board member Sid Stahl. "They realized that DART represented a thoughtful and sensible solution."

DART campaign chairman Phil Montgomery attributed the victory "to the heavy volunteer effort ... by 1,500 DART volunteers, who staffed phone banks and handed out literature on street corners. DART also waged a massive media blitz."

Alien arrests up

GALVESTON (AP) — Arrests of illegal aliens in East Texas are up 128 percent over a nine-month period and the director of the U.S. Border Patrol in Galveston says that is due solely to an increase in the flood of foreigners.

Herm LaPoint said the only way to stem that flow is to make it impractical for employers to hire illegal aliens.

"The only way to stop the flow is to stop the incentive for coming here," he said. "Contrary to what a lot of people think, many employers do not pay illegal aliens below the minimum wage. They pay them good wages, but not union wages."

He said the Immigration and Naturalization Service has a free program that allows employers nationwide to determine whether their workers are U.S. citizens, but few use the service.

Officials arrested 13,000 illegal aliens in the 58-county East Texas area between October 1982 and June. They arrested 5,691 in the same nine-month period the previous year.

"It's not very hard to find an illegal alien in the Houston area," LaPoint said.

Ninety percent of the illegal aliens apprehended in Texas are Mexicans. Most of the others are from El Salvador.

"They come here for economic reasons, but once they get here, the Salvadoran community tells them they can apply for political asylum because of the strife in that country," LaPoint said.

Three injured in Dallas hotel blaze

DALLAS (AP) — Investigators say either arson or an electrical problem caused a fire that injured three people and routed about 200 people from their rooms as it spread quickly through a wing of a north Dallas hotel.

One guest and two firefighters were injured in the early Sunday morning fire that caused an estimated $500,000 damage to 81 rooms in the three-story East Manor wing of the Dunfey Dallas Hotel.

"The fire was either set or was caused by an electrical problem," said Capt. Jerry Foster of the fire department's arson investigation section.

He said just 24 hours earlier firefighters were called to extinguish a minor fire in a linen room of the West Manor of the hotel, and another fire was reported later Sunday morning an apartment complex next door to the hotel.

Flames shot 40 feet above the hotel after the blaze broke out in linen rooms on the first and second floor about 12:30 a.m. Sunday. Eighty-four firefighters used 21 major pieces of equipment to battle the five-alarm blaze, which burned almost two hours before it was extinguished.

"The two points of origin make it look suspicious, but I can't give a cause pending an inspection by someone with electrical expertise," said Foster.

He said the earlier fire at the apartment complex was arson.

"I don't think the two are connected, but it won't surprise me if they are," said Foster.

Hotel guest Kitoko Kokila, 30, of Zaire, remained in serious but stable condition Sunday in Parkland Memorial Hospital's intensive care unit, where he was being treated for burns on his hands and foot and possible smoke inhalation, a hospital spokesman said.

Two firefighters were treated and released from Parkland after suffering minor injuries when the roof collapsed on them.

The fire was confined to the hotel's East Manor, a separate building containing about 100 rooms, said hotel spokeswoman LaVerne Berres. She said she was not sure how many of the rooms were occupied. The hotel contains a total of 604 rooms.

Foster, however, said reports showed there was "100 percent occupancy" in the 81 rooms affected by the blaze. Thirty-three of the rooms were damaged by fire and 48 by smoke, he said.

A smoke alarm activated the central alarm system and "guests were notified by phone and knocking on doors," Ms. Berres said.

"The evacuation process seemed to be very well organized. There were volunteers. There was one guy who told us to exit as quickly as we could from the stairwell. He was running through the halls getting people out. He was crawling on his hands, staying as close to the ground as he could," said hotel guests Jim Moore, 26, of Springdale, Ark.

The rescuer was Neal Adams, a former New York City firefighter now in the Navy.

Jurors convict housewife in capital murder trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Southeast Texas housewife has been convicted of capital murder a second time in connection with the 1978 slayings of five people found shot and dumped in a mass grave.

Linda May Burnett's first conviction was overturned on appeal after she had spent four years on death row.

She slumped in her chair and cried softly Sunday when jurors, who three times had told a judge they were deadlocked, announced their guilty verdict.

The jury planned to begin considering punishment for Mrs. Burnett this afternoon. She could be sentenced either to death by injection or life imprisonment.

Mrs. Burnett, a 35-year-old Nederland housewife, was tried here only for the shotgun slaying of Martha Jean Phillips of Woodward, Okla.

Her first conviction was for the death of Mrs. Phillips' 3-year-old son Jason, but she also is charged with the slayings of the child's father, Elmer Phillips, and elderly grandparents, Bishop and Ester Phillips.

Prosecutors contended Mrs. Burnett helped her boyfriend, Joe Dugas, abduct and kill the five people because he blamed Bishop and Ester Phillips for the breakup of his marriage to their daughter, Mary Phillips Dugas.

Dugas led investigators to the common grave on July 9, 1978, more than a week after the five people were reported missing from the elder Phillips' blood-splattered home.

Each had been bound with rope, forced to kneel in a pre-dug grave and shot in the head at least once at close range. Investigators said the men also had been handcuffed.

Mrs. Burnett shot all four adults, but she and Dugas each fired a bullet into the child's head, prosecutors said.

Dugas was sentenced to death for Jason's murder, but was killed two months ago when he tried to escape as authorities transferred him back to death row from a court appearance.

Defense attorneys had contended Dugas, his two brothers and a distant cousin actually conspired to kill the Phillips family and used Mrs. Burnett as a scapegoat.

The Dugas brothers, Richard and Roy, and the cousin, Charles Neel, appeared as key prosecution witnesses during the San Antonio trial, and jurors asked the judge to have excerpts of the men's testimony read to them during deliberations.

Vandalism cuts phone service

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Vandals sawed through wires and criss-crossed connections to cut service to about 1,000 Southwestern Bell customers as a week-old strike against the phone company continued, officials said.

A phone company spokesman did not blame strikers for the vandalism Sunday, but said a special wrench usually available only to Bell employees was used to open three telephone connector boxes where lines were shorted out by cross-connections.

The vandalism left customers without service for much of the day, said Marco Gilliam, Southwestern Bell news and information manager.

Vandals also set fire to telephone equipment in Marshall over the weekend, cutting service to 1,100 customers in that East Texas city.

Two telephone pedestals were "doused with a flammable liquid and set on fire sometime Saturday night," said Bell spokesman Jim Lydon in Dallas.

Lydon said service was restored to 500 customers Sunday morning and that many of the 600 still without service were business customers.

Southwestern Bell has offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and indictment of anyone responsible for "malicious damage" to its equipment.

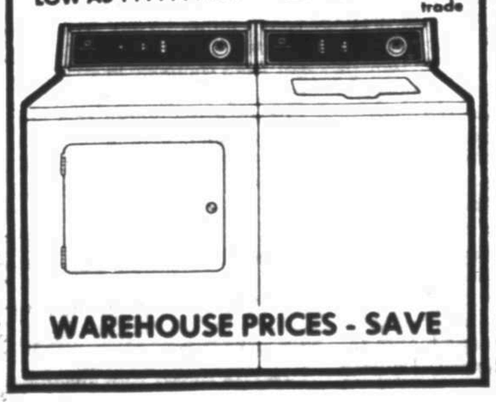

Gilliam said vandalism like that in San Antonio usually occurs "very rarely."

Last Wednesday, vandals chopped through a large service cable on the side of a utility pole, interrupting service to 450 customers.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, August 16, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Israel's Menachem Begin, singer Ann Blyth, actor Robert Culp, ABC sportscaster Frank Gifford and singer Edye Gorme celebrate birthdays today. In the months ahead, your futuristic ideas gain widespread acceptance and praise. Turn your flights of fancy into dollars by learning how to market them. Your personal appearance can affect the way you are treated by important business people. A reconciliation will not be easy but is definitely worth the effort. You get a helping hand from an unexpected source. Act confident and others will jump on your bandwagon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Put your ideas in writing to protect them. Have a heart-to-heart talk with a friend. Dealing direct could save you a bundle. Speak for yourself when cash is involved.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pay attention to details or a project could quickly go over budget. If you feel uncomfortable with a creative program, get out. You are far more ambitious than you like to admit.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Travel can be lucrative if you take advantage of special fares and keep expenses down. A woman wants greater responsibility. You enjoy dating someone much older or younger than yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An unusual experience inspires you to work harder and pursue your education. Postpone signing legal documents. You need to develop greater rapport with your colleagues or fellow students.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have an opportunity to recoup some lost prestige. Seek a professional's advice on investments. Friends make a big difference in your finding the right employment opportunity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A change in your work hour solves a nagging problem. Get someone to help you complete a project on time. It is dangerous to compare a new love with an old one.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A disclosure made this morning will put a different slant on a major issue. Choose your partners with care to avoid jeopardizing your reputation. Those on business trips make wonderful new contacts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. Develop better rapport with your partner and you will begin to show financial progress. The time is right to present a pet project to someone influential.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Influential person is impressed by your trend-setting ideas. Keep key information to yourself until a contract has been signed. A compromise will be necessary. Romance is filled with adventure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Morning is the best time to seek a loan or favor from influential people. A phone call or letter brings a fascinating revelation. The pieces of a puzzle fall into place.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Say exactly what is on your mind. You will be amazed at the response you get from someone in authority. Keep an eye on spending. Romance is favored this afternoon and evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Go ahead and reveal your plans. Approval is easier to obtain than you dreamed possible. Resist the urge to combine business with pleasure—someone who is very conservative would not understand.

Broadway comes to television

NEW YORK (AP) — "Pump Boys & Dinettes on Television" is based on the successful Broadway country-rock musical, and that means there's not much of a story to follow, unless you count the guys' search for a calendar girl to promote their gas station.

Actually, the hunt for a "Pump Girl of the Year" doesn't go much past the Double Cupp Diner, and the two sisters who run that place, Rhetta and Prudie Cupp.

The plot is important only in light of NBC's plan, presumably discarded, to make a series of "Pump Boys & Dinettes on TV." That consideration aside, the hour-long video takeoff of the stage play, to be broadcast tonight, is pure diversion in the "Hee-Haw" style.

Producer Ernest Chambers assembled four members of the Broadway cast — John Foley, Mark Hardwick, Debra Monk and Cass Morgan — along with guest stars Tanya Tucker and Ron Carey, for the comedy pilot, which has a polished, stage-play look to it. Miss Tucker is there as herself, and Carey plays Hugo, a New Yorker whose car breaks down near the boys' station.

The Broadway run ended in June after 573 performances.

The gas station and the diner are on Highway 57, near Frog Level, N.C., and all of the action takes place there. Jackson, played by Foley, keeps the show going — "We live life ... in the slow lane," he says — and everyone, including Eddie, whose guitar does the talking, has a chance to perform.

The theatrical version was created by Miss Morgan, the dark-haired Rhetta, and her husband, Jim Wann, in the summer of '80, while he and Hardwick, a pianist, were playing country music at a Greenwich Village restaurant.

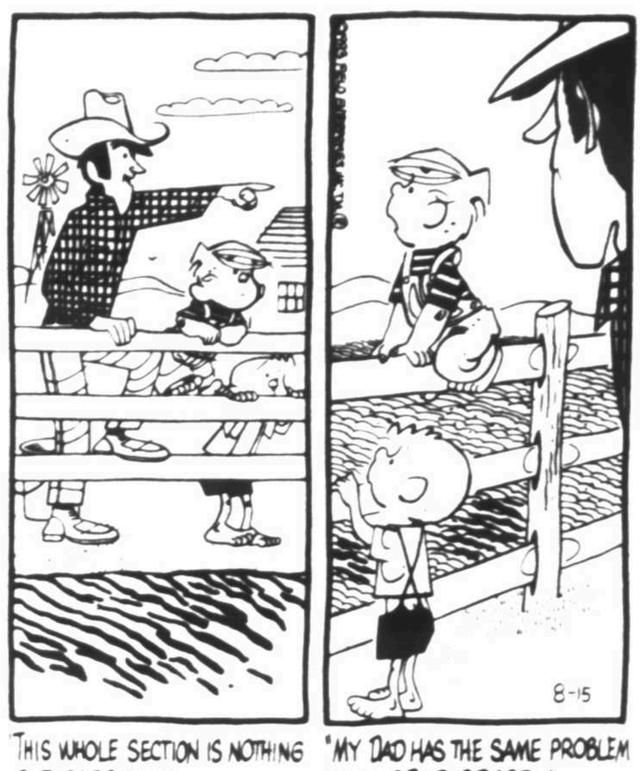

"It was the kind of place," Wann recalls, "where we'd get reprimanded if we played too loud and distracted the customers from drinking as much as possible. So to amuse ourselves, we started wearing gas station uniforms.

"And I started writinG songs about life at the gas station," he says. "That began the 'Pump Boys.'"

Miss Cass was working, coincidentally, with Miss Monk on a cabaret revue about two sisters who ran a diner.

The cooperative effort probably was inevitable.

Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A. — You should be cautious because of a potential misfit. If you respond two diamonds, you might never complete the description of your hand — the auction might get too high. Respond one heart. That way, you should have no problem getting to bid diamonds twice at a comfortable level.

Q.2 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠95 ♡QJ10875 ◇7 ♣AJ83
The bidding has proceeded:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 NT | Pass |
| 2 ♠ | Pass | ? | |

What action do you take?
A. — Partner's rebid has improved your hand considerably. However, don't raise clubs just yet. If you have a game, hearts is the most likely spot. Try it out by jumping to three hearts now, and see how partner reacts.

Q.3 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ94 ♡95 ◇A843 ♣QJ4
The bidding has proceeded:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 3 ♠ | Pass | ? | |

What action do you take?
A. — While your opening bid certainly has gotten partner excited, you have as little as the law allows for an opening bid, and partner did pass originally. Pass — you are as high as you want to be.

Q.4 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A109 ♡K72 ◇A1095 ♣QJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 3 ♠ | Pass | Pass | ? |

What action do you take?
A. — If you are the type who passes this kind of holding, your opponents are stealing you blind! Partner must have a fair hand on this auction, and it is up to you to protect his holding. Bid three no trump.

Q.5 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q8 ♡104 ◇AKQJ6 ♣AK82
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | Pass | ? |

What do you bid now?
A. — We are about to give you a piece of advice which you should cherish — it will be worth a lot of points to you over the years. In the balancing seat, you start showing all good hands with a double. This is a good hand. It is important that you first convince partner you have sound values and are not just reopening to prevent the opponents from buying the contract at a low level.

Q.6 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQJ10 ♡K108 ◇AK65 ♣K2
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A. — You have too good a hand not to make a jump shift, so it is simply a question of which suit should you choose? You would like to have a five-card suit for a jump shift, for partner might raise with a three-card holding. That is why it is dangerous to jump shift in spades. We would opt for two diamonds.

Checking Khadafy

Libya's megalomaniac, Col. Moammar Khadafy, has long dreamed of establishing a unified Arab empire stretching across North Africa and headed by (who else?) himself. The dream has proved elusive as most national leaders in the region have recognized Khadafy for the nut he is.

But now the colonel is trying again, this time by sending his air force to help pro-Libyan rebels overthrow the government of dirt-poor Chad, Libya's neighbor to the south.

Chad's fate would not normally command much attention in the world. The tangle of tribal and ethnic animosities that shape politics in Chad have made the country next to ungovernable ever since it gained independence from France in 1960. The present civil war is only the latest in a series that began when the French departed.

But Khadafy's reckless ambitions, his radical politics, and his vast storehouse of Soviet weaponry make him a dangerous troublemaker. If he succeeds in establishing a puppet regime in Chad, his potential for stirring conflict in the vulnerable nations that border Chad would increase dramatically. Two of these nations, the Sudan and Nigeria, are friendly to the West and strategically important for reasons of geography, resources, or population.

Then too, an expanding Libya backed by the Soviet Union would pose a definite threat to Egypt, the cornerstone of American influence in the Arab world.

All of which explains the Reagan administration's worry about Libyan aggression, and the president's decision to aid Chad by dispatching AWACS radar planes and accompanying F-15 fighters to next-door Sudan. Their mission is twofold: To detect Libyan air strikes and warn Chadian troops in advance, and to remind Khadafy that he does not have a blank check to bash his neighbors.

Zaire is helping out by sending troops — 1,500 so far and another 700-man battalion on the way — to bolster the defense of Chad's capital of Ndjamena. France, which has a security agreement with Chad, is providing logistical support. Unfortunately, the Mitterrand government is resisting Chad's request for French warplanes to counter Libya's Soviet-supplied air power.

The hope in Washington is that a multinational show of support for Chad's government, plus disapproval of Khadafy's intervention by the Organization of African Unity will induce the colonel to think again. If not, it will be time for France, Egypt, the OAU, and the United States (in that order) to consider sterner measures to bring Khadafy to heel.

Uncertain future

The military coup that overthrew Guatemala's Gen. Efrain Rios Montt has removed an eccentric political actor from the Central American scene, but it may not change anything else in that troubled region.

The military man now in charge, Brig. Gen. Oscar Mejia Victores, was the defense minister in Rios Montt's government and the deputy defense minister for Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia, whose ouster helped bring Rios Montt to power 17 months ago. The only apparent difference between Rios Montt and Mejia is their religion. Mejia is a Roman Catholic; Rios Montt is an evangelical Protestant.

In an overwhelmingly Catholic nation, that difference is significant. Rios Montt's fervent religious beliefs alienated many Guatemalans who supported him after the corrupt and brutal Lucas Garcia was overthrown. He would often appear on Guatemalan television to deliver rambling sermons against materialism, selfishness and other character flaws that he said contributed to Guatemala's social turmoil. He had a populist streak that led him to promise to ease the misery among Guatemala's Indians, who represent a majority of the country's 7.2 million people.

That kind of talk always disturbed the oligarchs who still dominate economic life in Guatemala. For them, the last straw may have been Rios Montt's recent decision to impose higher business taxes.

Rios Montt's ascension to power, after several years of retirement, was engineered by a cadre of young military officers who remembered him as the inspirational commander of the country's military academy. These field-grade officers, like most Guatemalan military men, are nationalistic and strongly anti-communist. But, because they know the misery of life in the countryside better than do their seniors in Guatemala City, they looked to him to be less brutal in dealing with rural unrest.

His approach to the insurgency was fusiles y frijoles — bullets and beans — combining military power with food and social services for the rural poor. It was a controversial effort, satisfying neither human-rights activists nor many oligarchs who regarded it as too expensive. But fusiles y frijoles did help tame the insurgency, and the young officers supported it. What becomes of the program now will be a key indicator of the direction in which Mejia will move.

Mejia is regarded as a stern disciplinarian in the tradition of the Guatemalan military. If he goes by the book and orders Guatemala's young officers back to their barracks, it could mean a return to the bloody days of Lucas Garcia and more turmoil for both the people and the military.

The United States has been at arm's length in Guatemala since 1977, when Lucas Garcia refused further military aid because of U.S. criticism of his brutal policies. During Rios Montt's tenure, the Reagan administration occasionally suggested a renewal of military aid to Guatemala. The uncertainties about Guatemala's future in the wake of the coup should put an end to that kind of talk for some time.

Sales may leave allies wondering

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has put itself in a paradoxical situation as it starts approving the sale of high-technology goods to the Chinese mainland under a new, friendlier policy toward Peking. The White House must now try to explain to our allies why it is suddenly all right to sell high-tech items to a communist country.

Jack Anderson

The irony will not be lost on our friends. Ever since President Reagan took office, they have been subjected to stern lectures from Washington, warning against selling Western technology of potential military usefulness to the communist bloc.

Now the administration must persuade skeptical allies that Peking is somehow different from Moscow. The Japanese and West Europeans — as eager as anyone to grab a share of the communist-bloc high-tech market — may be forgiven if they fail to detect the difference.

The forum in which these doubts will eventually surface is a little-publicized spinoff of NATO called COCOM — for Coordinating Committee. It was set up in 1950 to control the sale of strategic material to communist countries. Japan and all NATO members except Iceland are represented on the committee.

Compliance with the COCOM rules is voluntary. But that didn't stop the United States from hauling the British before a COCOM jury of its peers in the mid-1970s to explain the proposed sale of 800 Rolls-Royce jet engines to Peking, plus a factory in China to make more.

A review of the Rolls-Royce case by the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research called it "a watershed in Peking's dealings with the West." The review, classified secret, was shown to my associate Dale Van Atta.

There is no doubt that the jet engines, called Spey-202s, are strictly military. The secret report said the Spey-202 is "the first piece of foreign hardware (with) no civilian application" that the Chinese have bought since their split with the Soviet Union.

The Brits had neglected to obtain COCOM approval before announcing the sale — "the first time that a member of COCOM had openly sold military equipment, clearly identified as such, to China," the report states. The situation raised "new questions about the future of COCOM."

British officials had discussed the sale with U.S. officials before the public announcement — but not before the Chinese had been promised the jet engines. This "precluded the possibility of waiting for necessary revisions of COCOM rules or extensive checking with other Allies," the State Department report noted. It added: "Significantly, the British did not disagree that the proposed sale would violate existing COCOM rules. But they argued that those rules were obsolete."

The United States, playing the role of staunch defender of COCOM, prevailed on the British to take their case to the committee and cast the only outright objection to the jet engine deal.

In objecting to the British transaction, the United States cited three reasons: the "technical jump" it would give Peking, the difficulties it would cause in enforcement of other COCOM restrictions and "the adverse political effect that such a deal would have on U.S. allies in Asia."

The British went ahead with their $200 million jet engine contract with the Chinese. Now U.S. objections may come back to haunt administration officials when they try to explain to COCOM that times have changed — or that our allies should "do as we say, not as we do."

PERIPATETIC POOH-BAH: James Miller, the high-flying chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, may be brought down to earth shortly by a subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee. Members want to know why he flits around the country and abroad at taxpayer expense during a time of severe budget restrictions — and often travels first class.

Miller's travel vouchers show he has spent about $20,000 on travel since Oct. 1, 1981. His peregrinations included visits to Acapulco, Paris, New Orleans, Tokyo and the Virgin Islands. An FTC spokesman said the chairman must go first class for health reasons and has a doctor's excuse to prove it.

One odd trip Miller made was to Atlanta to address the Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery Political Action Committee, which supported more Democrats than Republicans last year. The odd thing about the trip was that Miller gave the group a message it didn't want to hear — namely, that the administration believes doctors should not be exempt from regulation by the FTC.

INSIDE REPORT:

Appointee may not pass muster

WASHINGTON — Carlos F. Diaz-Alejandro, the leftish Yale University professor who may have been named to the Kissinger Commission on Central America because of mistaken identity, may yet be eased out for failure to pass security clearance.

One senior State Department official says Diaz-Alejandro, under fire by this country's Cuban refugee community for being too friendly toward Fidel Castro, was appointed because the Reagan administration thought he was somebody else. Although the White House stood by the appointment through the swearing-in last week, senior presidential aides hope the Cuban-born professor fails the FBI's security clearance. No classified information is being given commission members until clearances are final.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

A footnote: The State Department recommended Democratic Mayor Maurice Ferre of Miami, a staunch anti-communist, for the Kissinger Commission. Instead, the White House chose Mayor Henry Cisneros of San Antonio. An important figure in Walter F. Mondale's presidential campaign, Cisneros publicly blasted President Reagan's Central American policy the day before he was sworn in.

NO TO PALESTINIANS

Secretary of State George Shultz has personally vetoed a plan to give thousands of Palestinian refugees new homes in the U.S. after he was told it would not only infuriate Israel but would antagonize most Arab countries.

Another reason why Shultz changed his mind after first considering the plan a bell-ringer for the U.S.: Opening the gate of freedom to 50,000 Palestinians would create an anti-U.S. backlash in Central American countries now sending tens of thousands of refugees, mostly illegals, into the U.S.

Arab reaction against the plan is explained by the fact that moving Palestinian refugees away from squalid camps in Israeli-occupied Arab lands would cast doubt on the emotional belief in an eventual Palestinian homeland on the West Bank itself.

DU PONT'S WIFE RUNNING

Rejected by Gov. Pierre du Pont of Delaware when they asked him to run against Democratic Sen. Joseph Biden next year, Republican campaign managers have turned to his wife, Elise, and are encouraged by her response.

Elise du Pont, a political personage in her own right as an assistant administrator of the foreign aid program in Washington, did not relish serving as a stand-in for her husband against Biden. But she is most interested in opposing freshman Democratic Rep. Thomas Carper for Delaware's lone House seat.

A footnote: Senate GOP insiders are burning about the advice given Gov. du Pont and Tennessee's Gov. Lamar Alexander by Doug Bailey, partner in the Bailey-Deardourff political consulting firm. He recommended that the two governors, both Bailey-Deardourff clients, not run for the Senate next year. No other Republicans with anything like the popularity of the two governors are available in either Delaware or Tennessee.

JEANE K'S CLOUT

Jeane Kirkpatrick, ambassador to the U.N., showed her rising power when she single-handedly persuaded President Reagan the U.S. had to veto the Security Council resolution calling on Israel to stop building new settlements on the West Bank.

The night before the vote, national security adviser William P. Clark, a personal and ideological ally of Kirkpatrick's, ordered the State Department to make an exhaustive new study of what the U.S. position should be. Clark worried that a veto would infuriate the Arabs and thereby undercut the Mideast mission of his deputy, Robert McFarlane.

The diplomats at State, however, declined to interfere with Kirkpatrick's decision that failure to veto would be an unacceptable affront to Israel. The answer Clark received from the State Department: Kirkpatrick has made her decision, and we'll stick with it.

TAX INCREASE TALK

Sen. Robert Dole, Republican chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and Rep. James Jones, Democratic chairman of the House Budget Committee, got together on the telephone just before the August recess for a private chat about taxes, with this probable upshot: no major tax increase this year.

Dole and Jones agreed on the need for additional federal revenues to reduce the budget deficit but could not forge a common strategy. Dole insisted that any tax boost be twinned with spending cuts (on a dollar-for-dollar basis at least) opposed by Democrats. Thus, any tax hike passed by the Democratic House after Labor Day looks doomed in the Senate.

Jones feels the House should pass a tax bill anyway. But Dole is more interested in pushing his idea of a national conference on the economy — an idea the administration will find hard to oppose.

CHARLEY REESE

Plain people inhabit capital

The yellow drapes on the middle window of the north side of the East Room of the White House have big rips in them. President Reagan wears make-up for his press conferences so all of his wrinkles don't show. Some of the network TV stars are either bigger or smaller than they appear to be on television.

Charley Reese

If those strike you as rather banal observations about a presidential press conference, I'm sorry but that's the way it is. At the press conference I attended recently it was pretty obvious the president didn't have anything special he wanted to say and the reporters, at least those he called on, didn't have any special questions they wanted to ask.

The White House is lovely, of course, and so is the East Room despite the rips in the drapes and the clutter of TV cameras, micropones and lights. Press conferences, however, appear to be more social than informative.

There are about 1,600 reporters accredited to the White House. These include both foreign and domestic and range all the way from the networks and the big metropolitan dailies to local radio stations and writers for weeklies. Only about 100 or less show up for the press conferences and only 10 to 16 are called on to ask questions. These are usually the ones who sit in assigned seats (so the president can learn their names.)

Everybody gathers in the press room on the west side of the White House and then is led over to the East Room. White House aides make sure the right people sit in their assigned seats. There is a lot of socializing among the reporters. Then an aide lays down the ground rules — don't speak unless you are called on, no jumping up and down and so forth. Then everyone gets quiet and in a moment or two, the president strides in surrounded by aides. You get the idea that somebody gave him a que and told him "Okay, you're on now."

In this instance, the president made an opening statement decrying the fact that everyone seemed to be confused about his peaceful intentions in Central America. Then he called on reporters for questions and it was obvious from the questions that the reporters were either confused or sceptical about his intentions. The questions weren't very probing and the answers weren't very revealing. In plain words, the whole thing is just a show.

In the old days, the president, who after all is just an ordinary man would sit around with a few reporters and communicate. He was allowed the luxury of hemming and hawing, of starting and stopping and of saying things like, "Look, what I mean to say is this."

Television has changed that process. Now, the whole world watches and every syllable the president utters is dutifully noted, scrutinized and analysed. Consequently, the president is reduced to delivering lines rather than actually trying to communicate. The reporters, too, know the whole world is watching them so they get self-conscious. There is a lot of dressing up and primping for a press conference. Nobody wants to appear to be just normal in front of the whole world.

It is almost as if the importance of government has grown beyond the capacities of the human beings who have to govern. But the degree of importance of something is a subjective judgment. It is the press which has elevated government in the minds of the people by paying so much attention to it. If 1,600 people were paid to follow a cow around a pasture all day and record its every movement and sound, people would begin to think the cow was really something extraordinary.

There are no giants, gods or demigods in Washington. Just plain people like you and I. If you keep that in mind, you won't be looking toward the Potomac for miracles.

Western Electric workers join strike against AT&T

By The Associated Press

Forty thousand Western Electric Co. workers joined 675,000 Bell System employees on strike today as a "necessary economic move" because their wages and security would have been gutted under a proposed contract, union leaders say.

More than 80 percent of Western Electric workers voting Sunday chose to reject the company's proposal and go on strike, said Tom Hickman, director of manufacturing for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Workers walked off the job immediately and began picketing at plants around the country.

Leonard I. Massingale, president of Local 1504 in Indianapolis, where 200 to 300 workers walked out Sunday night, said the strike would be felt more sharply today after workers failed to appear for the 7 a.m. shift.

"The areas that are important to us — job security and wage security — are literally gutted," Massingale said of the proposed three-year contract.

"We're a very conservative people, a very conservative union. We look at the strike as distasteful but as a necessary economic move."

Pickets marched Sunday night at a Western Electric plant in Denver, where 1,600 workers were affected, said Dana McKinnell, the company's Colorado spokesman. The plant, which makes telephone switching equipment, remained open despite the strike, she said.

The Western Electric workers join 100,000 IBEW members, 525,000 Communications Workers of America members and 50,000 members of the Telecommunications International Union who struck American Telephone & Telegraph at midnight Aug. 6 when their contracts expired.

The Western Electric employees negotiate separately from the other unions, though financial terms of their contracts are identical, to allow for contract clauses covering working conditions at Western Electric plants.

In the earlier strike, both sides reported no progress Saturday during informal discussions. Union spokesman Duayne Trecker said the outstanding issues of wages, job security and working conditions for operators and technicians were reviewed.

CWA President Glenn E. Watts gave no indication the two sides were ready to resume full-scale bargaining, Trecker said.

Blacks woo conservatives in battle over holiday

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — Desperately in need of Republican House votes for a bill to create a Martin Luther King Jr. national holiday, a member of the Congressional Black Caucus posed a pointed question to GOP conservatives.

"Did the Republican Party," asked Rep. William H. Gray III, "want to be put in the position of being insensitive to the aspirations of minorities — which already is a problem for the president?"

After 14 years of watching the King holiday stall in the House, supporters decided to court, rather than scold, their opponents. Some conservatives were persuaded not only to support the bill, but to lead the way to passage.

When the green lights exploded on the House electronic voting board on Aug. 2, scores of conservative Republicans and many conservative Democrats voted "yes." With 289 votes needed, the final tally was 338 to 90.

Behind the scenes were veterans like three-term congressman Gray, a Philadelphia Democrat who reasoned, "If we got conservative Republicans, we would probably also get conservative Democrats. So conservative Republicans were really the key."

Skeptics rarely criticized the achievements of King, the civil rights leader slain April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn. They based their opposition on the cost of a national holiday. The Congressional Budget Office said the holiday would cost the government about $18 million in 1986, mostly in premium pay for government employees forced to work.

A newcomer emerged as the bill's chief spokeswoman — Rep. Katie Hall, a freshman Democrat from Gary, Ind.

Martin Luther King Jr. Rep. Katie Hall

She sought and received the chairmanship of a Post Office and Civil Service subcommittee so she could get the bill moving and accomplish her own dream of a Martin Luther King national holiday.

She held hearings in June, bringing in King's widow, Coretta, singer Stevie Wonder and Sen. Edward Kennedy. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, who usually avoids testimony before committees, added his voice.

"Sometimes when you get to the goal line it's good to go to someone fresh and new to take it over. She brought a freshness of approach, a spirit of reconciliation to what had sometimes been a bitter battle," Gray said.

Mrs. Hall said, "I prayed at each step of the way." She also compromised and cajoled.

To woo fiscal conservatives, Mrs. Hall amended the celebration from the day of King's birth, Jan. 15, to the third Monday in January. It is far less expensive for the government to open its offices once a week instead of twice.

To win over lawmakers worried about lack of time to prepare for the nation's 10th official holiday, supporters inserted a two-year waiting period that would make the measure effective in 1986 if signed into law this year.

To Republicans worried about the GOP's civil rights image a year before elections, they stressed the importance of the bill to minority voters.

"I told them, 'Here was an opportunity for a party that was increasingly developing a minority gulf to make a statement,' " Gray said.

Ms. Hall, meanwhile, got support from organized labor, enlisting Robert M. McGlotten, an associate director in the AFL-CIO legislative department.

"This time, people were not sitting on the fence," he said. "They were for it or against it. They recognized the voice in the black community was becoming more sophisticated and wanted to respond."

The bill would be considered under a rule that allows no amendments but requires a two-thirds passage. With one vacancy, the magic number was 289 and Democratic whips figured they could count on 200 majority votes.

Supporters began to woo the Republicans.

When the bill was called up, floor manager Katie Hall called to the microphones some of the more conservative members of the House.

One of the conservatives, Rep. Dan Lungren, R-Calif., told a reporter later that his conscience had bothered him ever since he voted against a similar bill in 1979.

"I thought that I had become so jaded thinking that it would cost money, that I would not take a look at the contributions King made," he said. Apparently he was persuasive. He said, "Members came up to me and said, 'Don't believe that speeches during debate don't make a difference.' "

Leaders cite Reagan's 'anti-Hispanic' record

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House adviser says President Reagan would win "a fair share" of Hispanic votes if he seeks reelection next year, but two leaders of the nation's fastest growing minority disagree.

New Mexico's Democratic Gov. Toney Anaya and Henry Cisneros, the mayor of San Antonio, and a member of Reagan's Central America commission, say Hispanics will continue to give overwhelming support to Democrats.

Reagan has a "tremendous anti-Hispanic, anti-minority, anti-woman record in his 2½ years...we're going to be able to point this out," Anaya, the nation's highest-ranking Hispanic official said during an appearance Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Cisneros, who appeared on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley" said Reagan's efforts to win Hispanic votes might change the polls "two to three points" but "80 percent" of the group would continue to vote Democratic.

Their comments came in the wake of President Reagan's announcement of a task force to study economically depressed towns along the Texas-Mexico border.

The president's announcement of an "interagency action group" to study the economic problems of border towns hurt by the devaluation of the Mexican peso was criticized Saturday by Mark White, the Democratic governor of Texas.

The program was "like the emperors of Rome handing out aspirin to the Christians after they've been mauled by the lions," White said.

Plane's crew, passengers reunited for hearings

CINCINNATI (AP) — Crew and passengers of an Air Canada DC-9 that burned at the Greater Cincinnati International Airport will be reunited for hearings this week to help pin down the cause of the fire.

The National Transportation Safety Board will hold at least three days of public hearings at a Fort Mitchell, Ky., motel close to the airport where the plane burned on June 2, killing 23 passengers.

The hearings that start Tuesday will include crew members, survivors, transportation safety board and Federal Aviation Administration investigators, and witnesses to the incident.

The NTSB also plans to call officials of Air Canada and McDonnell Douglas, builder of the DC-9.

The NTSB has presented only findings of fact so far in its investigation of the fire. Still unanswered are questions about how and where the fire started.

The hearings are expected to focus partly on the aircraft's electrical system, considered a possible cause of the fire on board the Dallas-to-Toronto flight that made an emergency landing at the Greater Cincinnati airport.

Based on hearing testimony and other evidence, the NTSB is expected to announce the probable cause of the fire and make recommendations sometime later this year or early next year.

FAA authorities probe crashes

By The Associated Press

Federal aviation authorities were examining wreckage today for clues to the causes of helicopter crashes near Washington's Mount St. Helens volcano and off the coast of New Jersey that killed seven people.

Divers were searching in the Atlantic for the pilot and a teen-age boy who were missing in the New Jersey crash.

Two people were critically injured in that crash, and a woman was hurt when a commuter helicopter struck a landing pad support near the East River in New York, authorities said.

"I think the tail end hit. There were pieces of it flying out and then it was gone," said Beth MacCurry, who saw the helicopter plunge into the Atlantic off Dover Township, N.J., on Sunday evening.

Richard Stampone, 45, and his son, Randy, 14, were pronounced dead on arrival at the Northern Ocean Hospital division in Point Pleasant, said hospital spokesman Robert Matthews.

Divers searched for the pilot, Angelo Cetrano, 39, of Wayne, N.J., and Fiore Nisovacchia, 14, a passenger, said William Eastmond, another spokesman for the hospital.

On Saturday, a helicopter operated by Spartan Helicopters of Toutle, Wash., crashed in a wooded area near the Spirit Lake Highway, about 20 miles northwest of Mount St. Helens, said Cowlitz County sheriff's Lt. Bob Covington.

Cubs fail to tame Madison, but Chicken arrives

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Rich Buonantony made his Texas League debut and might have won it, if Scott Madison had stayed in Albuquerque, where he belonged.

The San Antonio catcher hit two homers and a single, good for four runs batted in as the Dodgers beat the Midland Cubs, 6-2, at Cubs Stadium Sunday night to take a 2-1 lead in the series.

Madison drove in a run with a single in the first, hit a leadoff homer to tie it in the fourth and then won it with a two-run homer in the sixth. Larry See hit his 13th homer to open the ninth, which was Buonantony's final pitch. Although the rookie lost, he had pitched six-hit ball through eight innings.

"I don't know what I hit the first time, but the second time he got a fast ball up," said Madison, recalling his eighth and ninth homers. However, he preferred to talk about David Anderson, 7-7, after the win.

"David pitched a super game for us. He made the big pitches when he had to, like in the fourth inning when Midland had runners on second and third, he got the two strike outs and the third out on a fly. He gave seven innings until we could get Roberto (Alexander) into the game."

ACTUALLY, IT was the game's turning point. The score was 2-2 at the time and the Cubs had Anderson on the ropes, but came away empty.

"It was a big win for us because we are still in contention for the second half," said Madison, who has spent most of the season at Albuquerque in the Pacific Coast League.

"I spent 2½ months there to start the year, came back to AA for 16 games and then went back to Albuquerque for a couple of weeks." As back up catcher, Madison wasn't satisfied.

"I asked to be sent back to San Antonio. I know to get better, you've got to play every day. Sometimes you just have to swallow your pride and do what's best for you."

IF BUONANTONY looked comfortable in his first TL outing, maybe it was because Anderson was his mound rival.

"Yes, we were rivals in high school in Las Vegas, but we never pitched against each other. He was a sophomore and I was a senior," Anderson said. "But I couldn't let him beat me."

Anderson pitched five-hit ball for seven innings and had a 5-2 lead when he turned it over to Roberto Alexander, who blanked the Cubs over the final two innings for his 20th save.

Midland scored a second inning run when Randy LaVigne walked, went to second on a wild pitch, to third as Carlos Lezcano beat out a perfect bunt down the first base line dirt and scored as George Borges hit the sac fly to left.

Midland took a 2-1 lead in the second on Bill Hatcher's speed. Anderson hit Bill with a pitch. He stole second, took third on the overthrow and scored on Rick Baker's grounder to second.

Zamira Zaitseva of the Soviet Union falls during the women's 1500 final Sunday as American Mary Decker wins the gold in a thrilling finish to the World Track Championships in Helsinki.

Decker decks Russian favorite

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — It was supposed to be a fun run for Mary Decker, but it turned into one of the most difficult and rewarding races of her brilliant career.

Decker, the heroine of the United States team that won the medals race in the inaugural, week-long World Track and Field Championships, had entered the women's 1,500-meter event "for fun and for experience."

She already had won the 3,000 in frontrunning fashion, destroying the myth that Europeans, particularly the Soviet Union runners, had the best women's middle-distance competitors in the world.

Now, she was after her second gold medal, and as usual, she went right to the front.

After some 1,330 meters, she was still there, but suddenly, the Soviet's Zamira Zaitseva, who had run on her shoulder until then, surged in front.

"It was different today, it was a different feeling," Decker said.

As they came around the final turn, Zaitseva cut off Decker, and the 25- year-old American appeared in trouble.

"She moved in on me and I had to let her go by," explained Decker.

That maneuever deeply concerned Decker.

"Down the stretch, I was getting worried because I couldn't get my momentum back," she said.

But she summoned up a final bit of strength and pounded past Zaitseva in the closing meters to win in 4 minutes, 00.90 seconds.

Decker's withering kick so stunned the Soviet runner that she fell across the finish line in a heap, a beaten second in 4:01.19.

Soviet runners also finished third and fourth, but Decker had shown them they no longer ruled the world.

Helped by Decker's scintillating victory, a 1-2 finish by Calvin Smith and Elliott Quow in the men's 200, a second by Steve Scott in the men's 1,500 and a third by Carol Lewis in the women's long jump, the Americans finished with a total of 24 medals, including eight golds, nine silvers and seven bronzes.

The Soviet Union was a close second with 23 medals (6-6-11), and East Germany, the gold medal leader with 10, was right behind in total medals with 22, including seven silvers and five bronzes.

No other country was in double figures in total medals, while Czechoslovakia was the only other nation to collect more than two gold medals, winning four.

Decker had come to the World Championships intent on winning the 3,000. She did that convincingly.

If she would win the 1,500, it would be a bonus, she figured.

"Only after winning the 3,000 did I start thinking about the 1,500," she said.

The petite American has become a serious threat for a gold medal in the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles.

No American woman has won a medal — no less a gold — in the women's 1,500 since the event was introduced into the Summer Games in 1972. The 3,000 will be run for the first time next year.

Decker said she has not decided whether she will compete in one event or two in the 1984 Olympics.

While Decker was the backbone of the women's team, which earned two gold medals, one silver and three bronzes, the often overlooked Smith was a key to the men's squad produced six golds, eight silvers and four bronzes.

Rookie Fabi claims 500-mile title

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — There was no jubilation in Teo Fabi.

The diminutive Italian acted like a craftsman who had simply done his job the best way he knew how as he accepted the plaudits for winning Sunday's Domino's Pizza 500, the third leg in the Triple Crown of Indy-car racing.

"Celebration?" he said with a shrug. "I don't worry about celebrating. I'm tired and I just want to go to bed."

The victory, worth $82,269 from the total purse of $422,227, was the biggest in the racing career of the balding 28-year-old from Milan. His biggest previous triumph came in Formula Two in Europe.

This victory came in only his seventh Indy-car start and firmly established Fabi as one of the rising young stars of American open-wheel racing.

But, only minutes after easily outrunning Al Unser Jr., another rising Indy-car rookie, and two-time defending CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series champion Rick Mears to the checkered flag, Fabi admitted his heart is elsewhere.

"I am Italian," he said with a shrug. "I like to stay home. Formula One races mostly in Europe and that is what I would like best. But, if I had not gotten the chance to drive for the Forsythes (brothers Gerald and John), I would be probably now driving for Toleman in Formula One, and that is not a very good team.

"Now, with what is happening this year, maybe a better ride in Formula One is possible. Or maybe I will be here again next year."

Fabi, who already had credentials as a qualifier after winning pole positions for the Indianapolis 500 and the Michigan 500 — the first two legs of the Triple Crown — as well as a 150-mile race at Milwaukee, had only finished three of his six previous Indy-car starts.

And a third-place finish in a road race at Cleveland last month was the best he had been able to do.

"Luck wins races and our luck had not been very good," Fabi explained.

Sunday, however, he started next to Indy 500 winner and Pocono polesitter Tom Sneva in the front row of the 34-car field, and either led or stayed with the leaders throughout the 200 laps, taking the lead for good 43 laps from the end.

"When (the 22-year-old Unser) passed me early in the race, the car was not handling right," Fabi explained. "But I made a pit stop, the crew changed the wing and the car ran perfect after that." Fabi's Skoal-sponsored March, powered by a Cosworth engine, averaged 134.852 mph in the race slowed by 10 caution flags totaling 65 laps.

John Paul Jr., driving for Midland's VDS team and winner of the Michigan 500, managed 29th place after a crash, but was not hurt.

The speed was the slowest in the 13-year history of the Indy-car race on Pocono International Raceway's 2.5-mile trioval; the number of caution flags tied the previous record for a race here, and the number of laps under the yellow flag broke the previous record by one.

Grid tickets now open to public

As the Midland Lee and Midland High football teams hit the field today for the first day of practice sessions, season tickets for both schools also went on sale to the general public at the athletic office, located in the northeast corner of Memorial Stadium.

Season tickets for both schools may be purchased until Aug. 26, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily, including the noon hour.

A book of five season tickets for all Lee home games are $15 per person. A book of six season tickets for MHS home games are $18, but does not include tickets to the final MHS-Lee game, where Lee is the home team this year.

MHS opens the Memorial Stadium football season Sept. 2 with an 8 p.m. game against Lubbock Monterey while Lee travels to Lubbock Coronado for a 7:30 p.m. outing on the same date. Lee's first home date is Sept. 9 when the Rebels host Monahans.

49ers play like it's 1981

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Joe Montana's passing was sharp, Fred Dean was devastating on pass rushes, and for a while the San Francisco 49ers were playing like it was 1981 again.

"I don't feel super. But I would if this had been a regular season game. This one doesn't count," Dean said after the 49ers pulled out their first 1983 exhibition victory, 17-15, on Ray Wersching's 33-yard field goal with 24 seconds remaining Sunday.

The kick wiped out the lead New England claimed on a John Smith field goal, also from 33 yards, with 1:57 left.

Call it a confidence builder for the 49ers, who were Super Bowl champions two years ago but went 3-6 in the short 1982 National Football League season.

"In the first half, we demonstrated that we can be a very good football team, but we have a long way to go," Coach Bill Walsh said.

The 49ers put things together in the second period, when all healthy front-line players were still in. Dean had two of his three sacks then, Montana completed 10 of 12 passes for 147 yards, including an 11-yard touchdown strike to Freddie Solomon, and the team burst to a 14-7 lead.

The Patriots, although 0-2 in pre-season play, also found encouraging signs in the game which drew 50,043 fans to Candlestick Park.

"I felt very comfortable out there today. I have a very good feeling about this game. We've made some offensive changes that I really like," said Steve Grogan, who got the Patriots off to a 7-0 lead with a 45-yard touchdown pass to Stanley Morgan in the first period.

Grogan and rookie Tony Eason combined for 200 yards passing, and Robert Weathers had 98 of the team's 183 yards rushing. John Hannah started and played the first half at left guard just a few days after joining the team.

"With only two days of practice my timing was off and, of course, I'm out of condition," Hannah said.

The Patriots came out of the game with no serious injuries, while the 49ers' lost safety Carlton Williamson, who broke a bone in his left leg and seems sure to miss the first few games of the regular NFL season.

"We wanted to stay healthy so we'd go into the season in full force," Dean said.

The 49ers are healthy and deep at the quarterback spot. Guy Benjamin completed 7 of 8 passes in his second-half opportunity, and young Bryan Clark completed two passes for 64 yards to set up the winning field goal.

"I expect Matt Cavanaugh will play next week," Walsh said.

Cavanaugh, acquired from New England last Wednesday, is the fourth man in the 49ers' competition for backup quarterback work.

The weekend's action concludes tonight with the Los Angeles Rams hosting Dallas. Coach Tom Landry said his starting quarterback will be Gary Hogaboom, who filled in admirably for the injured Danny White in last year's NFC championship until a couple of late interceptions did him in. White will play the second and fourth quarters.

In other Saturday games, it was Denver 21, Atlanta 10; Baltimore 10, Minnesota 7; Cleveland 27, Buffalo 10; New York Jets 20, Los Angeles Raiders 17; New Orleans 19, Miami 17;St. Louis 27, Chicago 24 in overtime; Detroit 17, Kansas City 13; Philadelphia 21, San Diego 20 and Tampa Bay 23, Houston 17.

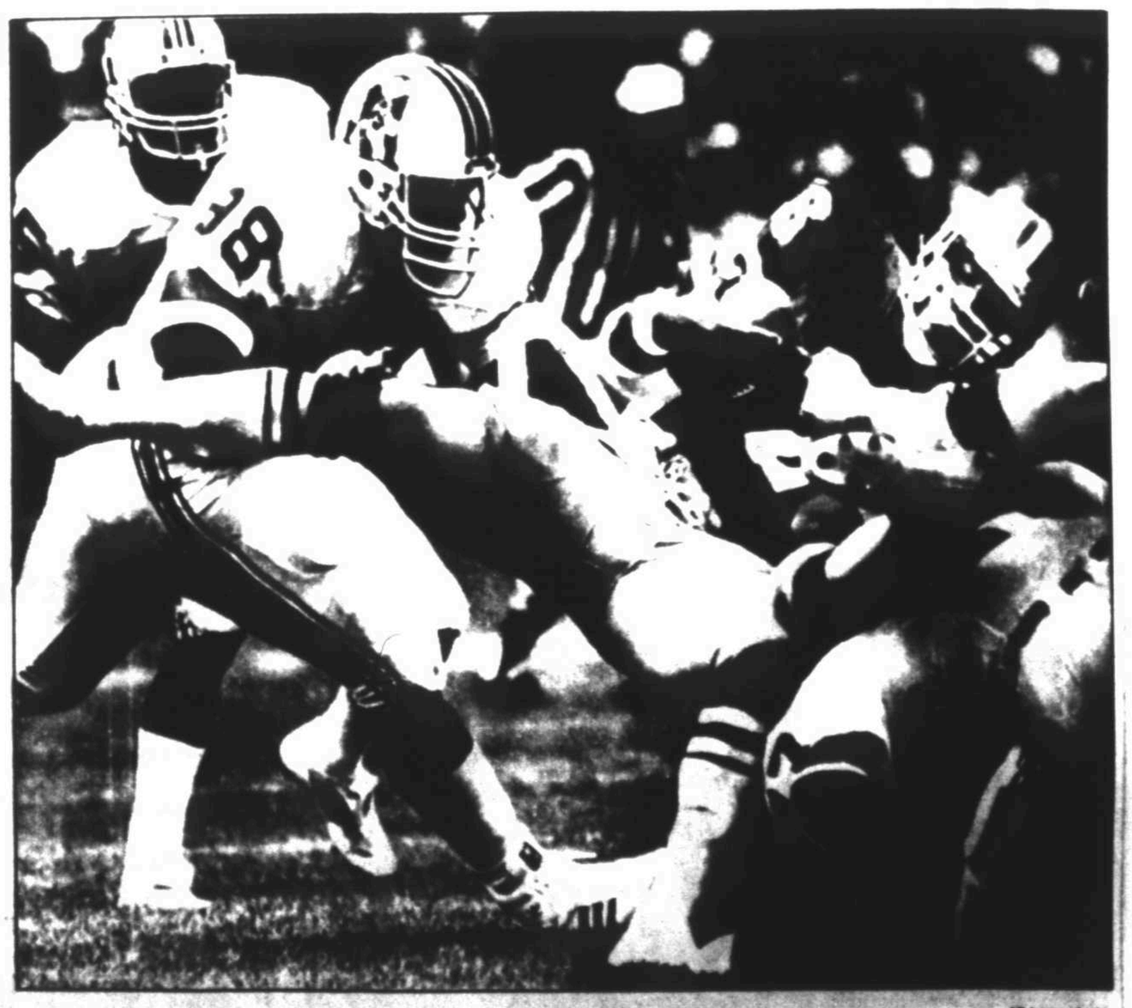

In last Friday night's games, Washington topped Cincinnati 27-23, the New York Giants beat Pittsburgh 22-13 and Seattle defeated Green Bay 38-21.

Veteran Steve DeBerg, trying to beat out rookie John Elway for the starting quarterback job at Denver, connected on six of eight passes for 101 yards and two touchdowns in the Broncos' win over Atlanta. Elway, the NFL's No. 1 draft pick, took over when a strained groin muscle forced DeBerg from the contest early in the second quarter. Elway connected on 10 of 17 attempts for 137 yards and one TD.

Denver is 2-0 in exhibition play, while Atlanta is 1-1.

Brian Sipe tossed touchdown passes of 6 yards to Boyce Green and 32 to Rocky Belk and Green added a 71-yard TD run as Cleveland boosted its record to 2-0 and dropped Buffalo to 0-2.

Mark Gastineau, the only healthy member of the Jets' Sack Exchange, ran 75 yards for a TD after recovering Marcus Allen's fumble in the first quarter. Both the Jets, who had three interceptions, recovered five fumbles and made nine sacks, and the Raiders are 1-1.

Pittsburgh sinks Montreal Expos

By The Associated Press

The Pittsburgh Pirates were feeling embarrassed last weekend after being swept out of first place at home by the Montreal Expos. So they headed up to Canada and returned the favor.

The Pirates entered a three-game series with the Expos on Aug. 5 with a half-game lead in the National League East, then were blasted each time by Montreal to drop to third. But the Bucs began a resurgence in Montreal this weekend, where they completed their own sweep in hostile territory with a 5-3 decision Sunday.

That kept Pittsburgh 1½ games behind first-place Philadelphia in the division. The Phillies beat St. Louis 5-1 Sunday. Montreal is third, three games out.

Dave Parker was Sunday's hero for Pittsburgh, lining a two-run, bases loaded single in the seventh inning. Parker had not hit the ball out of the infield in three previous at bats before connecting on the first pitch by reliever Dan Schatzeder.

"You don't forget something like that easily," Parker said of the sweep in Pittsburgh at the hands of the Expos. "We averaged over 30,000 last weekend in Pittsburgh, and they beat us.

"These three games on the weekend were televised back to Pittsburgh, so we wanted to do well and show the fans we could sweep them, too."

Added reliever Kent Tekulve, who got the final out for his 14th save: "It's nice to be able to turn it around after being swept last weekend. Baseball is a game that goes in cycles,, especially when you have two even-matched teams."

Expos right fielder Warren Cromartie was annoyed at his team's inconsistency.

"I'm tired of that yo-yo stuff," he said. "It has to stop."

Phillies 5, Cardinals 1

John Denny, 13-5 with the third-best National League ERA at 2.44, scattered 10 hits, struck out seven batters and did not give up a walk in eight innings. He also had a single, laid down a perfect sacrifice bunt and scored on Gregg Gross' third-inning triple.

"I try to take the philosophy to give as much as I can for as long as I can, whether it's batting, pitching or running the bases," said Denny, a former Cardinal. "This is a good game for me personally. The Cardinals have always been tough on me. They're a very aggressive hitting team."

Denny struggled only in the fifth, when the Cardinals loaded the bases with one out. But he got out of that jam and cruised to his seventh straight victory. Reliever Al Holland fanned three Cardinals in the ninth.

National League

Dodgers 5, Braves 4

The top two teams in the West have met in four series and the Dodgers have taken two-of-three games each time. Still, they trail the Braves by 5½ games.The Braves have 44 games remaining, while Los Angeles has 47.

Dusty Baker cracked a two-run homer and Steve Sax added four singles and scored twice for visiting LA. Atlanta's Bob Horner slugged a two-run homer off Fernando Valenzuela to make it close.

"We're satisfied. There's still time to go," said Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda. "We're hoping now we can start gaining some ground."

Braves Manager Joe Torre wasn't disturbed by the weekend's results.

"I felt if we won one game, we couldn't get hurt," he explained. "It's not as good as I wanted, but it could have been worse."

Mets 5, Cubs 2

In New York, George Foster's 10th career grand slam homer and the strong pitching of Ed Lynch carried the Mets to a three-game sweep of Chicago. New York has won six in a row over the Cubs.

"You can't make up for the past," said Foster, who hit into a double play in his previous at bat. "I'm just trying to focus on the positive."

Lynch who had lost his last three starts, struck out three and walked one in eight innings before needing help from Jesse Orosco, who earned his 13th save.

Padres 10, Reds 9

Terry Kennedy drove in three runs with a double, a homer, and a 10th inning single which won the game. The Padres scored the winning run off Tom Hume, who walked pinch-hitter Sixto Lezcano with one out. Pinch runner Luis Salazar then stole second and came home on Kennedy's single to center.

Johnny Bench ripped a two-run homer and Paul Householder added a three-run shot for host Cincinnati. Padres starter Tim Lollar hit his first homer of the season.

Giants 5, Astros 2

Jeff Leonard had a home run, triple and single and drove in two runs for San Francisco. Mark Davis struck out three and walked four in six innings, surrendering only four hits. Gary Lavelle pitched the final three innings to earn his 13th save.

Chicago White Sox manager Tony LaRussa pulls up third base bag after a heated argument with home plate umpire Jim Evans, who ruled a homerun as a ground rule double. LaRussa was ejected.

Sox steal base, Birds steal win

By The Associated Press

Manager Tony LaRussa of the Chicago White Sox stole a base, but the Baltimore Orioles stole the game.

After a heated argument with the umpires during which he uprooted third base and heaved it into the dugout, LaRussa remained on the bench for an inning after he was ejected, prompting the Orioles to play Sunday's game under protest.

It all became moot when reliever Tim Stoddard pitched out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the bottom of the ninth and preserved the Orioles' 2-1 triumph over the Chicago White Sox.

The controversy started in the fifth inning with the White Sox leading 1-0 when Rudy Law walked and Carlton Fisk hit what appeared to be a home run into the first row of the left-field seats. Third base umpire Greg Kosc gave the home run sign, but Orioles Manager Joe Altobelli claimed fan interference and home plate umpire Jim Evans, the crew chief, overruled Kosc and called it a ground-rule double.

"In our judgment, a fan reached onto the playing field and touched the ball, which would have hit the fence had it not been touched," said Evans.

That's when LaRussa, a practicing lawyer during the off-season, went into his rebuttal. All it got him was a contempt of court charge, although he claimed he didn't know he was ejected. In the bottom of the sixth, Evans went into the dugout and talked to LaRussa, who finally left.

"I didn't think I was thrown out of the game," LaRussa said. Then he ripped into the Orioles, which should make for an interesting series if the two teams meet in the American League playoffs. "All the Orioles do is cry and moan over every call and pretty soon the calls don't go against them. That's a pretty good edge."

The victory was their second in a row after a seven-game losing streak and vaulted the Orioles back into first place in the AL East, one percentage point ahead of Detroit (the Tigers lost to New York 4-1), one-half game in front of the Yankees, one ahead of Milwaukee (the Brewers lost to Toronto 4-3) and 1½ in front of the Blue Jays.

With the Orioles and White Sox knotted 1-1 — Chicago failed to score after Fisk's "home run" became a double — Baltimore's John Lowenstein drew a one-out walk off Richard Dotson in the top of the ninth. Pinch runner John Shelby stole second and scored on Joe Nolan's single. In the bottom of the ninth, Stoddard struck out Fisk and Tom Paciorek and got Greg Luzinski on a grounder to preserve Scott McGregor's 15th victory.

Yankees 4, Tigers 1

At Detroit, Dave Winfield doubled home the go-ahead run in the eighth inning and Ken Griffey followed with a two-run homer. Juan Berenguer held the Yankees to a pair of singles until the eighth when Roy Smalley led off with a triple. One out later, Winfield collected his 23rd RBI in his last 13 games and his 19th game-winner of the season. Griffey then greeted Howard Bailey with his homer. Shane Rawley and Rich Gossage checked the Tigers on seven hits, including Larry herndon's fourth-inning homer.

American League

Blue Jays 4, Brewers 3

At Toronto, pinch runner Garth Iorg scored the tying run from second base on a wild pitch in the eighth inning and Lloyd Moseby homered on the next pitch from reliever Peter Ladd, giving the Blue Jays their third consecutive triumph over Milwaukee. Ladd came on after Damaso Garcia opened the inning with a double off Tom Tellmann and then gave way to Iorg. Moseby's 16th homer made a winner of Dave Stieb, who checked the Brewers on four hits through eight innings. Milwaukee led 3-0 after 2½ innings.

Red Sox 4-3, Royals 3-6

At Boston, George Brett and Amos Otis drove in two runs apiece, Leon Roberts homered and Royals relief ace Dan Quisenberry notched his 31st save with three scoreless innings in the nightcap. The Red Sox won the opener 4-3 on Rick Miller's tie-breaking bases-loaded single in the ninth inning. Bob Stanley notched his 22nd save by retiring the last four batters.

A's 6, Twins 0

At Oakland, Steve McCatty hurled a three-hitter for his first shutout since Sept. 8, 1981, and Davey Lopes hit a two-run homer. McCatty, who won his first game since July 9, walked three and struck out three in his first complete game of the season. Mike Davis had a two-run triple, while Dwayne Murphy drove in the other two with a grounder and sacrifice fly.

Angels 7, Mariners 2

At Anaheim, Rick Burleson scored three runs and drove in another and Fred Lynn hit a two-run homer to back Tommy John's four-hit pitching. John lost his shutout bid when Richie Zisk homered in the seventh inning. Dave Henderson connected in the eighth.

Indians 3, Rangers 0

At Arlington, rookie Neal Heaton pitched a four-hitter for his first major league shutout and Andre Thornton had three hits. Heaton walked one, struck out three and retired 13 in a row before Larry Parrish's seventh-inning double. The 23-year-old left-hander, who didn't become a starter until late last month, has not allowed an earned run in his last 18 innings. Loser Rick Honeycutt, 14-8, gave up 10 singles in 5⅓ innings.

Dickerson gets wish, faces Dallas tonight

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — All-American halfback Eric Dickerson of Southern Methodist watched the Dallas Cowboys for years and adopted them as his favorite professional football team.

If he couldn't play for them, he wanted to play against them.

Tonight, he gets the latter wish as the Los Angeles Rams meet the Cowboys at Anaheim Stadium in a preseason game with a 7 p.m. PDT kickoff.

He's now one of the big reasons the Rams hope to make a turnaround from their 2-7 record of 1982. At 6-foot-3 and 218 pounds, Dickerson was the second chosen in the National Football League draft.

Dickerson saw only limited service on Aug. 6 when the Rams opened their exhibition slate with a 34-20 victory over San Diego. The big halfback had been scheduled to play 40 percent of the time during Rams' possessions, but his back was hurt after he had caught one pass and rushed twice — for two and 21 yards.

Even before the injury was diagnosed as only a bruise, Dickerson said, "I have to play against the Cowboys. Like anyone in Dallas (home of Southern Methodist), the Cowboys were my favorite team and I sure do want to play against them."

Dickerson has been cleared for action although Jewerl Thomas still is listed as the starter and third string Robert Alexander can't be discounted. Alexander scored three touchdowns against the Chargers, twice on runs of 42 and 22 yards, after Dickerson was sidelined.

Dallas opened with a 20-17 victory over the defending AFC Miami Dolphins as rookie running back Chuck McSwain, a fifth-round draft choice, scored two touchdowns.

Cowboys Coach Tom Landry has announced he'll try something new in the contest, making 10 changes in the starting lineup.

Texas Capitol wins state crown

Texas Capitol of Seguin went undefeated in six games to win the 1983 Texas ASA Men's Open Slow-Pitch Championship this weekend at the Hogan Park softball complex.

Texas Capitol powered their way past the Amarillo Champs in the finals of the tournament by a 21-0 score to gain a berth in the National ASA Men's Major Slow-Pitch Tournament to be held Labor Day weekend in Parma, Ohio.

Texas Capitol won the final game on 24 hits and one error against an exhausted Champs' team that gained the finals by winning three consecutive games on Sunday morning. Both Texas Capitol and the Champs advanced into the final game by defeating third place finisher Texas Federal Mortgage of Conroe.

Other teams placing in the three day event were B&I Inspection of Goldsmith and Norton's of Stephenville, finishing fourth and fifth respectively. These two teams along with Amarillo and Conroe will compete in the Regional ASA Slow-Pitch Tournament this Coming weekend in San Antonio.

The final remaining Midland team in the tournament, Stadium Sports Center, settled for seventh place early Sunday morning in a disappointing 11-10 loss to the EPS Raiders of Woodsboro. EPS lost a similiar 7-6 contest to the Amarillo Champs in the following game to finish sixth overall.

Those selected to the All-State team were outfielders Bill Dunson of Stephenville, .765; Scott Woolery of Amarillo, .697; Mark Mendez of Amarillo, .658; and Randy Walraven of Seguin, .608.

Infielders selected were Gary Sims of Goldsmith, .826; Bill Bell of Conroe, .591; Roy Turner of Seguin, .560; and Jim Smith of Seguin, who hit .500 and was brillant on defense throughout the tournament.

The battery consisted of pitcher Donnie Thompson and catcher Mike Brown, both of Midland Stadium Sports. Thompson and Brown hit .714 and .824 respectively.

Most Valuable Player of the tournament went unanimously to pitcher and leadoff hitter Gary Hughes of Seguin. Hughes hit .750 on 19 hits and scored 11 runs in six games.

Quarterbacks come to front

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Archie Manning and Tampa Bay's Jerry Golsteyn took steps to clear up the muddled quarterbacking pictures for their teams in the Bucs' 23-17 victory in a weekend National Football League exhibition game.

Golsteyn turned in another gold-plated, game-winning drive in the final minute to secure Tampa Bay's second straight comeback victory. Jack Thompson, also trying to win the job, ran for one touchdown and passed for another in the first half.

Manning, battling Gifford Nielsen for the starting job, finally ignited the Oilers' offense in the first half, directing the Oilers to a 17-13 lead.

Nielsen had better statistics in the second half but threw two interceptions to Buc safety Donald Dykes in the end zone.

A week ago, Golsteyn led the Bucs on a 20-point fourth quarter that resulted in a 20-17 victory over New Orleans on Bill Capece's field goal with three seconds left in the game.

Saturday it was James Owens' one-yard dive with 57 seconds left after Golsteyn had driven the Bucs 79 yards, highlighted by three straight pass completions.

Tampa Bay coach John McKay was not ready to name a starter, however.

"They both looked excellent," McKay said. "They both came in and got the job done."

Pan Am Games manage to open

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — The opening ceremonies of the IX Pan American Games, smooth and peaceful, have at least temporarily overshadowed the complaints of delayed construction, poor housing and inadequate practice facilities.

A crowd of 28,000 jammed into Olympic Stadium Sunday, including presidents Luis Hererra Campins of Venezuela, Juan Antonio Samaranch of the International Olympic Committee and William E. Simon of the U.S. Olympic Committee, to watch a parade of 5,000 athletes and officials from 36 Western Hemisphere nations.

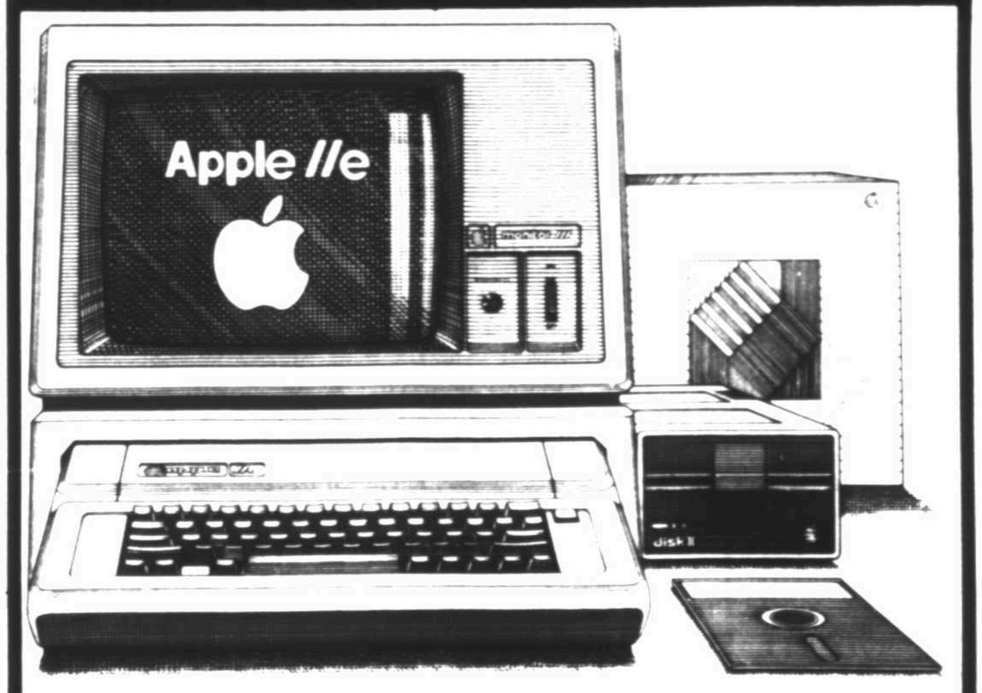

Ten of the games' 22 sports formally opened the competition today. The Americans expect to reap most of their gold medals in swimming and diving, track and field, boxing, shooting and basketball. Canada, Puerto Rico and Cuba figure to offer the strongest threats in the medals' race.

Boxing will begin Tuesday, swimming and diving Wednesday and track and field Tuesday, Aug. 23.

Cocaine questions plague Walsh, Landry

By The Associated Press

It has become an uncomfortable routine in the daily itinerary of a National Football League head coach. First the game questions...then the drug questions...then the denials.

Coach Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers couldn't rehash his team's 17-15 victory with the media Sunday without acknowledging comments attributed to unnamed NFL sources in a published report that as many as 50 percent of NFL players were using cocaine.

Walsh labled the copyright story in Sunday's New York Daily News as "pure unadulterated sensationalism" following the game with the New England Patriots at Candlestick Park.

THE DAILY News story quoted league sources as saying that the 50 percent use cocaine on social occasions and that 20 percent are chemically dependent on the drug.

"If there's any NFL employee involved (as a source for the allegations), he's a disgrace to himself and to the league," said Walsh, whose team was cited by the published report as one of the league's worst offenders, along with the Dallas Cowboys.

The Daily News also reported that NFL security was aware of 34 cases of drug use on the Cowboys. The 49ers may have even a higher number, the story said, citing its sources.

"I don't believe those statements," Coach Tom Landry said at the Cowboys' Thousand Oaks, Calif., training facility during preparations for tonight's preseason game at Los Angeles with the Rams.

NFL's War On Drugs

Five of Landry's star players — Tony Dorsett, Tony Hill, Harvey Martin, Ron Springs and Larry Bethea — have been connected with an ongoing federal-drug investigation.

"Of course, we have a problem, as does the rest of society," Landry pointed out. "We have a more responsible position to clean out house and regain the confidence of the nation that we are clean."

"The common statistic is that 10 percent of the population are chemically abusive," noted Mike Lynn, general manager of the Minnesota Vikings. "We're certainly part of that and probably higher but nowhere near 50 percent. It doesn't surprise me that someone would say it because of all that has come to the public's attention."

A HOST of drug-related football stories have come to the public's attention in recent weeks. Last month four players — Ross Browner and Pete Johnson of the Cincinnati Bengals, E.J. Junior of the St. Louis Cardinals and Greg Stemrick of the New Orleans Saints — were suspended through the first four regular season games by Commissioner Pete Rozelle for involvement with cocaine.

Last Wednesday cornerback Tony Peters of the defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins was charged with conspiring to distribute cocaine in a $115,000 deal.

Other players mentioned in recent non-related drug stories included Rich Upchurch of the Denver Broncos, Clarence Harmon of the Washington Redskins and recently-retired Lemar Parrish. Last year, revelations surfaced regarding admitted coacine use by George Rogers and former NFL player Don Reese.

Then came Sunday's newspaper story. It was impossible for those whose livelihood depends on the growing popularity of pro football to ignore the allegations.

"There's been so much publicity about the subject, it doesn't surprise me that someone would say it. But I don't believe it," Lynn said. "We've done extensive work for the past five years on our team and the percentages are nowhere near that."

Quoting one unnamed source, the Daily News reported, "On the average, there are about 10 players on a team that are hardcore. The numbers are higher than many people would ever imagine."

CLEVELAND BROWNS owner Arthur Modell said he didn't know how extensive cocaine use is in the NFL, but added, "I do know it is a problem. I do share the belief that it is more widespread than people thought."

Bobby Beathard, general manager of the Redskins, said of the report: "That surprises me. I wouldn't think that would be true of our players. I don't know who knows anything anymore. Of course, we were surprised about Tony Peters."

Jay Benoit, spokesman for the NFL Players Association, said he was very surprised at the figures in the story. But he said the NFLPA would have no immediate comment on the report.

Last week when Gene Upshaw, executive director of the players union, was asked in an interview what percentage of players were involved with cocaine, said, "I don't think anyone knows that."

He said, however, players were concerned about the problem. "I get calls all the time from players about what can be done about the it. We're working together to try and solve it. I'm working with the commissioner. The players are working with the commissioner. We have input."

Upshaw, who met with Rozelle last Thursday, said the commissioner's suspension of the four players could help solve the problem. "Now we can point to the players and say, 'This is what will happen — this is what has happened.'"

HE SAID under the collective bargaining agreement the commissioner has absolute authority to deal with the problem because "the integrity of the game is involved ... it's his turf."

Rozelle, who this year has appeared to be more vigilant than in the past regarding admitted drug users, would not give any specific figures, but commenting on the story which appeared in Sunday's editions, he told the Daily News, "You have done your research well."

Bum sees some wins

Maybe enough for Western Division title

ATLANTA (AP) — Bum Phillips foresees the first winning season in the history of the New Orleans Saints, and that might be all it takes to claim the National Football Conference Western Division championship this year.

"There's no reason we shouldn't win more than we lose," Phillips said.

The Saints, who have never seriously threatened to win a title, could become the fourth different team to win the crown in their division in the last five years.

The Los Angeles Rams, who won seven straight division titles beginning with 1973, won their last title in 1979 and then went to Super Bowl XIV as a wild card playoff team in 1980, when the Atlanta Falcons ruled the West. San Francisco used its division crown as a stepping stone to victory in Super Bowl XVI.

There was no division championship awarded in last year's strike-interrupted season, but the Falcons posted the best record, 5-4, and were the only member in the playoffs, losing in the first round at Minnesota.

New Orleans appeared to be on the right track in 1979 when the Saints enjoyed their best season ever, posting an 8-8 record, but they plunged to 1-15 the following season and had a 4-5 record last year.

The 49ers fell to 3-6 last season and the Rams had the worst record in the National Conference, a 2-7 mark.

With the retirement of Bert Jones from the Rams because of a neck injury, it appears that all four teams will be settled at quarterback when the season begins.

Vince Ferragamo, who returned to the Rams from Canada, is firmly entrenched as the starter, with Jeff Kemp as the backup.

Ken Stabler, a crafty veteran, will trigger the Saints' attack. Joe Montana will try to regain the championship touch for the 49ers. Steve Bartkowski will lead the Falcons in a new offense that will call for some roll-out passing, a phase of the game Bartkowski seldom resorted to in the past.

The division has two new coaches this year — John Robinson at Los Angeles and Dan Henning at Atlanta.

Robinson was a highly successful coach in the collegiate ranks at Southern California before replacing Ray Malavasi, and Henning directed the offense for the Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins last year before taking Leeman Bennett's place with the Falcons.

"The nature of the game is that it's aggressive and physical," Henning said. "We want to be as aggressive and physical as we can without causing ourselves to commit errors. In so doing, we will attempt to get all three areas of our football team — offense, defense and special teams — to mesh toward a winning effort."

George Rogers, a former Heisman Trophy winner at South Carolina, figures to be the workhorse at halfback for New Orleans.

Phillips has virtually the same team he had a year ago, having chosen only four players in the draft, but none of them figures to play much.

Defensive coordinator Wade Phillips expects the Saints to show improvement as the players become accustomed to working together. New Orleans was eighth in the league against the pass and 10th against the rush last year.

Atlanta faced the possibility of entering the season without All-Pro tackle Mike Kenn, guard R. C. Thielemann and linebacker Joel Williams, all of whom are holdouts.

The Falcons offense also will feature running back William Andrews and wide receivers Alfred Jenkins and Alfred Jackson.

San Francisco acquired running back Wendell Tyler from the Rams in an effort to improve its running game. The 49ers' defense features cornerback Ronnie Lott and linebacker Fred Dean.

"I think this year we're gonna be more creative," Lott said. "Our offense is always creative, every week. Defensively, we're going to take the same attitude into the game."

The Rams have one of the NFL's most heralded newcomers — running back Eric Dickerson of Southern Methodist, the runnerup to Georgia's Herschel Walker in the Heisman Trophy race last year. Dickerson, the second player chosen in the draft, has been slowed during the preseason by a bruised back.

Defensively, the Rams can count on a trio of veteran standouts in end Jack Youngblood and safeties Nolan Cromwell and Johnnie Johnson.

Schembechler heads his class

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Michigan's Bo Schembechler has won more games than any other active major college football coach while Oklahoma's Barry Switzer has the best winning percentage and Penn State's Joe Paterno is second in both categories, according to an annual listing.

The "Top Twenty Coaches" list shows Schembechler with a record of 171-45-6 for a winning percentage of .784 in 20 seasons as a head coach, six at Miami of Ohio and 14 at Michigan. That percentage, however, is topped by Switzer, Paterno and Nebraska's Tom Osborne.

Switzer, who has been head coach at Oklahoma for 10 years, shows a record of 98-17-3 for a percentage of .843. In 17 seasons, all at Penn State, Paterno is 162-34-1—.825. Osborne has a 98-24-2—.795 mark in 10 seasons at Nebraska.

The "Top Twenty Coaches" list has been compiled annually since 1958 by Elmore "Scoop" Hudgins, who retired June 1 as assistant commissioner for public relations for the Southeastern Conference and last month became publicity director for the Hall of Fame Bowl.

Under Hudgins' formula, he lists the 20 coaches who have won the most games at Division I-A schools and then ranks them in order of winning percentage. The cutoff point for 1983 was 73 victories and there are 21 coaches on the list because Emory Bellard of Mississippi State and Dave McClain of Wisconsin tied at that figure.

Rounding out the top 10 are Dick Crum, North Carolina, 76-28-2—.740; LaVell Edwards, Brigham Young, 94-36-1—.721; Vince Dooley, Georgia, 151-59-6—.713; Bobby Bowden, Florida State, 132-54-0—.710; Lou Holtz, Arkansas, 100-48-5—.670, and Earle Bruce, Ohio State, 84-44-0—.6563.

The second 10 consists of Don James, Washington, 90-47-1—.6558; Frank Burns, Rutgers, 81-44-2—.646; Bill Yeoman, Houston, 144-79-8—.641; Don Nehlen, West Virginia, 77-47-4—.617; Jerry Claiborne, Kentucky, 138-86-6—.613.

Verplank wins LaJet amateur

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Scott Verplank dropped a 20-foot par putt on the 17th hole and held on to edge Oklahoma State University teammate Willie Wood by a stroke Sunday and defend his LaJet amateur golf title at Fairway Oaks Golf & Racquet Club.

Verplank, a sophomore at Oklahoma State, finished the day with an even-par 72 to finish at 277, one under par for the four-day event. Wood made up seven shots on Verplank with a 65, the day's best round.

Another Oklahoma State golfer, Andy Dillard of Tyler, fired a 71 Sunday and finished third at 280. Mike Standly of Abilene was fourth at 281, and Paul Thomas of London, England, and the University of Texas was fifth, another shot back at 282.

Verplank, from Dallas, took a two-stroke lead into the 17th hole, but he knocked his tee shot into the water.

Midland YMCA membership sale is from Monday August 15th through Wednesday August 17th. Three Days Only.

LPGA's old guard falls to youth

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — The old guard and the young lion went face-to-face in the final round of the $180,000 Henredon Classic.

And Patty Sheehan's youth served her quite well.

Sheehan was in the final threesome with LPGA Hall of Fame members JoAnne Carner and Kathy Whitworth. After a temporary setback on the opening hole, Sheehan steamrolled to a 4-shot victory over Carner and first place in the LPGA money list ahead of Carner.

Opening the tournament with a 65, Sheehan closed with a 6-under-par 66 for a 16-under 272. That's one shot less than Hollis Stacy's four-day record total in the Rail Charity Classic in 1977.

"It's probably one of te most satisfying wins I've had besides the LPGA Championship," Sheehan said of her third victory this season. "Playing with the two most famous and the best women golfers in the whole world right now. It was really an honor and a thrill to be able to beat 'em."

Sheehan and Carner were tied at 10-under going into the final round. Carner gained the upper hand with a 12-foot birdie putt at the first green. Disaster followed almost immediately when Carner hit her tee shot on No. 2 into a cedar tree.

After a 2-shot penalty, Carner struggled to a bogey-5 while Sheehan regained the tie by making par.

All three golfers made birdie on the par 3 No.3, but Sheehan continued with birdies at the fourth, sixth and seventh holes. She was within birdie range on the other three holes as well and went out in 4-under 32.

Meanwhile, Carner three-putted on the ninth hole and started the back nine with another bogey. Whitworth bogeyed two holes on the front nine and two more on the back nine. The chase was essentially over.

Carner, who revealed Saturday that someone had bent the shaft on her putter and wedge, finished second at 12-under 276, while Whitworth was third at 7-under 281.

Judy Clark, an early challenger for the lead, and Donna White, a North Carolina native who skipped the tour in 1981 after giving birth to a daughter, tied for fourth at 284.

Charlotte Montgomery, who was 101st on the LPGA money list entering the Henredon, almost doubled her earnings by finishing in a three-way tie for sixth place at 286. It was her best finish to date. Also at 286 were Vicki Fergon and Ayako Okamoto.

Shed little tears for Ben Crenshaw

AN AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLS - To feel sorry for Ben Crenshaw, you must first accept the fact that he is a handsome, talented, rich young man who makes his living at country clubs where he is treated like royalty.

He is famous and fawned over.

Golf is a pampered profession. The working conditions are first class with beautiful people and lush, green outdoor grass as office carpet.

It takes talent and hours of backbending work but once you make the elite f he GA Tour your tastes are permitted to run to the extravagant.

The tour heavyweights get television endorsements and they don't have to purchase many items on the easy installment plan.

Crenshaw is a millionare playing golf; a sport most persons labor hard all week to enjoy maybe once a week.

But money doesn't buy happiness, say some who have it. Wealth just makes unhappiness that much more tolerable.

Crenshaw would trade every penny of his winnings for the goal of his lifetime: Win a major.

And it has become painful watching him try to do so.

It's a decade now of wild drives and final round collapses and second-place finishes in the U.S. Open, British Open, Masters, and PGA.

Just two shots off the pace at Riviera Country Club in the PGA a week ago, Crenshaw crumbled in the clutch again.

As Thomas Boswell of The Washington Post put it: "Crenshaw, who began the day two shots behind (winner Hal) Sutton in second place, disgraced himself with a wild-driving Jungle Ben round of 77 that plummeted him to ninth place."

Harvey Pennick, Crenshaw's lifetime golf tutor, was watching on television in Austin and the scene brought him near tears.

"It (the failure of winning a major) has become a mental thing now," Pennick said. "He just wants it (a major) so much. He has to get into the right mental attitude.

"Someone said the reason for missing short putts is a fear of it. The same thing could be said about the driver off the tee."

Pennick said Crenshaw, who was thought to be the next Jack Nicklaus when he came out of the University of Texas, doesn't need to adjust his swing, just his thinking.

"Golf is maybe 85 to 95 per cent mental," said Pennick, who has also taught Tom Kite and Kathy Whitworth the game at Austin Country Club.

"Ben never missed many fairways in high school and college but now everyone says he needs to shorten his swing.

"All he needs to do is TRUST his swing."

When Crenshaw visits Pennick soon, the old master will remind him that a fellow who has the record for second place finishes in majors is a man named Nicklaus.

He'll tell Crenshaw that a golfer has to be very good to finish in the Top Ten of a major tournament, that the victory will come.

"People put too much pressure on him because they love him so much," said Pennick.

Pennick is probably right.

Everyone pulls hard for Crenshaw because he is a nice young man.His nickname is "Gentle Ben."

The television commentators point out Crenshaw's knowledge of the game's history and say what a good thing for golf it would be if he won.

Other players on the tour root for Crenshaw.

Bruce Lietzke said recently "My goal is to win a major and it would really hurt if I knew I was going to go without one the rest of my career. But it would kill me if I knew Ben Crenshaw wasn't going to win one."

The quest begins again for Crenshaw in The Masters next spring.

Levi takes Buick title

GRAND BLANC, Mich. (AP) — Most golfers on the PGA Tour believe the more they practice, the luckier they get. Wayne Levi, however, is different.

Levi doesn't especially like to play golf; he would rather hang around his upstate New York home with his wife and daughter. He has played in just 15 tournaments this year.

Sunday, however, Levi charged from three strokes off the pace to grab a 1-stroke victory over Isao Aoki and Calvin Peete in the $350,000 Buick Open — earning a check for $63,000 and use of a new car for a year.

"I just sat around the house this summer," Levi said. "I do very little practicing. When I come out, it's my job, and then I work hard at it."

Levi, 30, can back up his brash talk with cold, hard facts. He has, for example, made the cut in all 15 events he has entered.

"Usually, if you don't play, you don't get the consistency," Levi admitted. "But, I played a lot of good, solid rounds.

"You don't see my name much, but the die-hard fans know who I am. I've got a pretty good record."

Indeed, since joining the tour in 1977, Levi has won six tournaments, including two last year. His victory at the Buick increased Levi's career earnings to $787,175.

Economist says foreign debt unmanageable

He contends bankers, politicians misleading public

By ELIOT JANEWAY
Special to
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The West's bankers and politicians are misleading the public with their assurances that the huge load of short-term international debt constitutes a manageable problem. The fact is that much of the interest on these loans cannot be paid, and most of the principal will not be.

The situation is spinning out of control and poses a clear and present danger for the entire international financial system comparable to the one preceding 1929. Only drastic action by Western governments impelled by a realistic sense of urgency will head it off.

The theater provided by the House the week before last, when it narrowly approved a complicated transfusion of up to $8.4 billion for the International Monetary Fund, advertises the problem rather than solves it. A band-aid is being prepared for application with full ceremonial flourish, but the hemorrhage continues.

The proposed $32 billion increase to be raised from all the IMF's members would buy time. But it would also nurture the dangerous illusion that we have time. In fact, it comes too late and offers too little to solve the underlying problem.

New short-term loans to keep interest payments rolling into Western banks will not revive the world economy. They will not start cargos of goods moving between ports, or finance productive new investment. They will only pile debt upon debt, most of it unpayable.

I KNOW I have been described on Wall Street as the "prince of pessimism," but I prefer to describe myself as an "early bird alarmist" — an optimist who believes solutions are possible. But it does not help to promise that the crisis can be handled with business-as-usual methods.

People who do that are not doing simple arithmetic. The debt of developing countries and communist Eastern Europe is now in the neighborhood of $750 billion. At 14 percent, the interest on that float comes to around $105 billion a year. Put another way, bank interest compounded on unrepayable principal will double the debt load in five years, even without adding in the heavy charges and fees that the Western banks have been "persuading" their debtors to accept in the latest rounds of refinancing.

The charade has crossed new frontiers of creative accounting. Banks advance the interest owed them with one hand and take it back with the other. No real money changes hand. It's a numbers game.

The realistic definition of bankruptcy is the point at which a debtor can no longer borrow the interest owed. By that stern test Poland and Brazil already are cold, stone broke. One official default is all it will take to stampede the other busted borrowers into a full-fledged cartel of defaulting debtors.

• • •

What is to be done to stave off catastrophe? The IMF can help, but only in the context of an emergency rescue plan that goes far beyond what government officials have yet been willing to consider.

What is needed is a program big and bold enough to convert the mounting short-term debt of the developing countries and the Soviet bloc into a genuinely manageable structure of medium and long-term debt. The purpose would be to get the creditors in New York off these countries' backs and to free up current cash and permanent capital for trade and investment. This calls for shaking loose the idled dollars accumulated in the Arab sheikdoms and the financial capitals of Asia and Europe.

AN ANALYSIS

Radical as I know this sounds, the present situation also demands massive conversion of interest-bearing Treasury securities into new long-term government bonds bearing no current interest but paying the holders a profit at maturity.

I hold no brief for the developing countries that got themselves into this mess, and certainly not for the Western banks, which, with winks and nods of approval from Washington, were their smug accomplices. Hindsight leaves no doubt that any government official who encouraged the banks to play this reckless game during the past decade violated the spirit and the letter of the banking and securities laws.

ASK ANY COUNTRY bank examiner what he does when he catches a rural banker advancing the interest on a loan to his debtor. The examiner marks the loan bad and makes the bank take a loss. Yet the federal examiners have allowed the puffed-up earnings statements of the international banks.

The extra charges levied by the banks on their customers is another matter. No usurer in a Charles Dickens novel would have dared charge his customers for the cost of high-powered lawyers and accountants brought in to rewrite old loans — and then bill them for compound interest to boot. It is fortunate that the House's IMF legislation would put a stop to this malpractice.

Meanwhile, the banks themselves are in jeopardy. Citicorp, for example, attributed 22 percent of its earnings last year to Brazil, a country's whose debt has risen from $56 billion to $90 billion in the past year.

The position of the U.S. banks, strained though they are, looks comfortable alongside that of European, Japanese and Canadian banks. True, guarantees by European governments cover some of the losses. But this only adds to the charade. Polish debt to Western banks fell by $1 billion in the first quarter of 1983. But the decline was not a result of debt repayment. It simply resulted from the transfer of the Polish debt from the banks to government insurance agencies such as West Germany's Hermes, France's Coface and the U.S.' Commodity Credit Corp.

THE LIQUIDITY CRUNCH crippling debtor nations is choking the flow of exports from industrial countries to the Third World. In 1982, the imports of developing nations declined by $42 billion. Nothing like these declines have been seen since the 1930s. The industrial countries really have been buying their exports to the Third World and the Soviet bloc through their own banking systems. But the ability of the banking system to support trade is nearly exhausted.

The Bank for International Settlements in Basel has just reported that private bank lending to developing countries fell from an annual average quarterly level of $16.5 billion in 1981 to almost nothing in the first quarter of 1983. Mexico has just earned a gold star from Wall Street for making an interest payment. But Mexico is in even in worse shape than other countries, such as Poland, which have taken a hard line with their foreign creditors in an attempt to ease the lot of their people and stave off political unrest. Mexico, Hungary, Yugoslavia and some other countries have imposed virtual embargos on imports, yet that cannot continue for long without serious repercussions.

The bad-debt problem is also dragging down the prices of commodities that developing countries must sell to survive. This is prolonging and deepening the worldwide slump, spreading it to the former boom area of the Pacific Basin and delaying any restoration of credit-financed commerce anywhere in the Third World. When cash runs out, countries are forced to barter the commodities they cannot sell. This results in lower prices and less cash to commodity sellers to pay for the things they need.

The ultimatum served on Brazil last June by the Bank for International Settlements for a petty-cash $400 million back-interest bill has made the crisis official. Brazil last week reached a tentative agreement with the IMF that could take some of the near-term pressure off, but Brazil's difficulties in borrowing its current deficiency, despite austerity measures, confirms the need for action.

Nevertheless, the illusion persists in Congress that the U.S. contribution to the IMF by itself will revive trade. America is not conditioned to anticipate its recurring crisis, but it is now on notice that a financial Pearl Harbor could threaten it if it does not act.

• • •

The most comprehensive, common sense idea advanced so far has come from Britain's Lord Harold Lever, former Cabinet minister and respected financier. In Lever's view, the world is suffering from a "liquidity problem, not a solvency crisis." The debtors, he says, will be able to service their loans if given some breathing room. But the situation is "deteriorating alarmingly."

Lever would set up a central international agency, made up of all the various national agencies that now insure, or grant credits for, their countries' export business, such as the U.S. Export-Import Bank.

These agencies now provide credits that enable foreigners to buy equipment and goods produced by home industry. The Lever plan would authorize the export and credit agencies to insure and guarantee foreign loans for broader purposes. Meanwhile, the central coordinating agency would monitor the trade flows, relying heavily on the advice of the IMF. Lending would be limited — and tied into carefully monitored economic adjustment programs. The borrowers would, in turn, have a basis for securing future financing because of the guarantees and monitoring programs. This would open the way to the industrial countries to resume lending to the Third World.

Lever reasons that "world trade can flourish only if the public authorities provide insurance for export credit on a very substantial scale" — even in good times. His proposed remedy to the present hard times calls for making sure that new guaranteed loans would be only for productive purposes calculated to earn enough to keep interest payments current. He estimates that $40 billion to $60 billion of new insured credit would be needed in the first year or two, and could be easily raised through the private credit markets because of the guarantee provisions.

ONE HOPEFUL BYPRODUCT of his plan is that the international monitoring system he proposes would put a stop to unproductive borrowing that in the past has "financed wars, ludicrous levels of armaments purchases and economic megalomania of all kinds."

The disadvantage of the plan is that the government export agencies involved are fierce competitors that have intensified their rivalries into a trade and currency war. Lever acknowledges that the turbulence in the exchange and credit markets, accentuated by the pressure building in each economy to increase exports, is not promising for cooperative action.

This drawback argues for giving top priority to moves Washington can make on its own, without the drum and bugle fanfare of any more Williamsburg summits.

• • •

The first move must be to convert as much as possible of the astronomical overhang of short-term Treasury debt held abroad into some other form. This would help reduce interest rates — essential for the financial solvency of Third World countries — and it would free up vast sums of money, now being squandered in interest payments on this government debt, for redirection to the international rescue effort proposed by Lever.

I recognize that it may seem unrealistic at first blush to ask professional investors to trade in high-yielding, readily marketable Treasury securities for new issues of non-marketable Treasury paper paying no interest at all.

Why would foreign banks, wealthy Arab investors and others want to cooperate? In the first place, those who purchased the new, no-interest securities would be guaranteed a profit when the notes matured, just as holders of old-time savings bonds were when they bought $25 bonds for $18.75. Foreign investors last year purchased billons of dollars worth of "zero coupon" bonds issued by private corporations whose credit standing is not as good as that of the U.S. government.

These investors showed they were willing to defer receiving current interest for the sake of taking future profits. Moreover, foreigners have another compelling reason for cooperating: not to do so puts the whole financial system at risk.

BUT THE U.S. Treasury has nonetheless continued to bleed itself and batter the markets by saturating them with interest-bearing securities. This is just postponing what must be done eventually to convert the short-term debt into medium and long-term instruments that can be used to finance productive investment.

My proposal would insulate governmental dollar holders abroad from the risk of losses in the roller-coaster bond markets. Moreover, it would feed the insatiable appetite of foreign investors abroad for dollars, or dollar-dominated securities. Any dollars the Treasury can save on short-term interest payments in this emergency will not only bring interest down for everybody, but it will free money now being wasted for recycling into the productive long-term investment needed to revive the Third World as a solvent, working partner that the industrial world cannot prosper without.

Moreover, the expedient I am proposing would give America an edge in the competition to sell to the Third World, once we bring it out of the financial intensive care unit.

Dimension debate may soon be pointless

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

AN ANALYSIS

DENVER — If you believe bankers, trade association officials and state regulators, you may conclude that the Denver-based Dimension Financial Corp. is a sleeping monster.

But Dimension officials may persuade you that members of the highly unusual alliance of critics are doing little more than selfishly protecting their own turf — and profit.

Either way you may wonder whether the debate itself isn't an anachronism.

The Office of the Comptoller of the Currency held five days of hearings in New York and Denver last week on the applications by Dimension for national charters for 31 banks in 25 states. Additional written arguments may be presented until Sept. 16, and no decisions are expected until next year.

In the end, the acrimonious and often self-contradictory testimony may prove to be moot because bills are pending in Congress that may change the banking rules.

THE QUESTION IS the decades-long argument over interstate banking. It pits the Federal Reserve Board's authority against that of the comptroller and would buck the ultimate decision, if opponents have their way, to the Congress.

Dimension Financial's Hutchinson, Kan.-led organizers say that their plan is not a bank holding company because the banks woould not engage in commercial lending. Opponents charge that Dimension's plan is a way of sneaking around the Douglas Amendment of the Bank Holding Company Act, which generally prohibits bank holding companies from acquiring banks across state lines, and the McFadden Act, which prohibits interstate banking.

It may be possible to settle the debate within current or proposed laws, but that may not matter.

As William E. Gibson, senior vice president of the giant Republic Bank Corp. of Dallas, the nation's 21st largest banking institution, noted last week at the Denver hearings, non-bank banks are "nothing new ... it is the magnitude of the 31 applications.

"Market forces are clearly changing the structure of banking in the financial services industry," said Gibson, who opposed the Dimension applications, but candidly admitted that Republic Bank and every other major bank in the country would like the same authority.

THE NATION'S largest insurance company, Prudential, owns one of the nation's largest brokerages, Prudential-Bache, and is buying the Capital City Bank in Hapeville, Ga. Merrill Lynch has applied for a bank charter in New Jersey. BankAmerica Corp., the country's largest bank holding company, has acquired Schwab, the nation's largest discount brokerage. Citicorp, the second largest, bought a California savings and loan association. Sears Roebuck's stated goal is to become the nation's financial supermarket.

What it boils down to is that deregulation of financial institutions has galloped into the 1980s a lot faster — and taken a much more diverse path — than many in the banking fraternity and in the Congress expected.

Apparently, many thought "deregulation" would remove the onerous Regulation Q, which permits savings and loan associations to pay 2 percent more on basic savings instruments as well as free banks to compete in other services, such as insurance and the securities industry. Today it is called "deregulation of products."

Instead, competitors have charged in from all quarters, and attention has shifted from Regulation Q to Regulation Y, a section of the Bank Holding Company Act that defines a commercial loan. And the comptoller and the Fed have declared moratoriums on non-banks to catch their regulatory breath.

In the meantime, the Federal Reserve Board opened for comment until Aug. 1 an expanded definition of commercial lending, which includes investment instruments that banks customarily use to manage their balance sheets, such as banks' certificates of deposit. If the Fed enters that definition in the Federal Register, it presumably will make it more difficult for a holding company to avoid being a "bank" holding company.

CRITICS OF THE comptroller's office charge that the current comptroller, Todd Conover, is usurping the Fed's exclusive right to determine what is or is not a bank holding company.

Bills are pending in Congress that would redefine a bank as any institution eligible for Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. insurance, which would surely throw such companies as Dimension under the Bank Holding Company Act umbrella.

Throughout the hearings, inconsistencies abounded on both sides.

The bankers alternately characterized Dimension as potentially devastating to their industry and their communities or doomed to failure because of faulty economic projections and the inability to make commercial loans.

Dimension never drove home why they think that they will be better than the nation's existing banks and their presentation of economic data seemed naive and flawed compared to traditional bank economic feasibility studies.

THE BANKING FRATERNITY is a close knit group, often characterized by in-fighting. But they are old hands at regulatory hearings and lobbying Congress. While no one expects the Dimension proposal to produce a blizzard of letters to Washington like the anti-tax deduction campaign generated earlier this year, the bankers themselves can produce a mini-blizzard.

And the unusual alliance of bankers, state regulators and even a consumer advocate group also have charged that Dimension would defy the law, as defined in the Community Reinvestment Act, by ignoring low- and moderate-income customers.

Also at issue is the dual banking system — the right of states to guide their own banking destinies. Even there, cracks are widening. Some states have passed reciprocal laws, inviting out-of-state bank holding companies into their states. In New England a regional reciprocity experiment is under way as a common defense against the big money center banks of New York.

Interstate deposits have been a reality since the mid-'60s when national advertising campaigns drew "hot money," rate-sensitive funds, from across the country in unprecedented millions of dollars.

But now, as one Dimension opponent put it, "Everyone and his brother wants to get into banking today, but ... they don't want to abide by the present rules."

Privacy fears of electronic banking

- ☐ Electronic funds transfer [EFT] makes it easier to collect, organize, store and access larger amounts of data
- ☐ More data are machine readable and machine-processable, making them easier to manipulate
- ☐ EFT requires less time to record and to extract data, making it possible to know the location of a person who has used an automated teller machine or details of a transaction
- ☐ Some systems use account numbers, driver's license numbers or Social Security numbers, leading to the possibility of many sources of information about a person being found and integrated
- ☐ Relatively few people would need to cooperate or conspire in order to violate privacy
- ☐ Individual data can be organized and analyzed from many areas
- ☐ The inner workings of EFT systems are invisible to customers who have no way of knowing what information they contain, who is using it and for what purposes

Average gasoline prices up, down

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg, saying motorists almost "can't win for losing," has reported they're paying a bit more at the pump even though wholesale prices have dipped.

The average U.S. price for a gallon of gas last week was $1.25.27, up eight-hundredths of a cent from July 22, the publisher of the weekly Lundberg Letter said Sunday.

In the same period, wholesale prices fell 0.45 of a cent per gallon, and new state gasoline taxes added 0.26 of a cent per gallon to the price of gas nationwide.

All those figures mean the average dealer pocketed 0.27 of a cent per gallon more than three weeks earlier, Lundberg said.

"The price of gas has fallen, but on average the price at the pump has increased," he said. "You might almost say the motorist can't win for losing."

Dealers who took a lower profit margin in past months as gas costs rose are apparently compensating now, Lundberg said.

Overall dealer markup is still far below January 1983's 11.4 cents per gallon, since many dealers were reluctant to raise prices to correspond to increased taxes. Lundberg said that on average, dealers were keeping just under 9 cents for every gallon sold last week.

Since the federal gas tax went up 5 cents per gallon April 1, state and local gas taxes have been raised in 24 states, adding 1.2 cents to the average gallon's price.

Lundberg said the federal hike produced surprisingly little criticism from consumers and "a historically unprecedented wave of 'me-too-ism' among state tax collectors.... The other 26 states are certain to add their increases too."

Federal gas-tax revenues targeted for road repairs typically pay for 85 percent of the work, Lundberg said, with the states chipping in the rest of the money.

The greater federal tax thus meant more dollars for road work, but also created a need for additional state matching highway funds.

Summer months have traditionally been times of high auto use and consequently higher profits for dealers. But this summer, for the third straight year, fewer than expected drivers have taken to the road.

"The oil industry has not prepared itself psychologically for the big disappointments of (the three summer sales periods)," Lundberg said. "Dealers are desperately hanging on to their markup."

He predicted dealers would gradually be forced to pass along their wholesale savings to customers and said the decline should be particularly evident in the weeks following Labor Day, when car use plummets.

The increased dealer profit margin came mainly from such grades as premium unleaded, which increased 0.17 of a cent a gallon to $1.33.67 since July 22.

Dealers held steady on the "bargain grades," regular leaded and unleaded gas at self-service pumps, Lundberg said. Regular leaded moved up a bare hundredth of a cent per gallon to $1.15.62 while regular unleaded remained the same at $1.22.67.

"What that means is there is a national reluctance to fool around with the big price leaders," Lundberg said.

Despite painful lesson S&Ls make long loans

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

An Analysis

"The things which hurt, instruct," said Benjamin Franklin, and it looks like one of history's most painful lessons is already being forgotten.

The nation's savings & loans, which flirted with de facto default last year because of portfolios loaded with 30-year, fixed interest rate mortgage loans, are back at it: Flush with funds, and newly armed with flexible rate loans, they're once again — you guessed it — making 30-year fixed-rate loans.

As interviews reveal, this may be one reason the S&L stocks are getting pounded in the current market: Investors fear that if interest rates keep rising, the S&Ls will be right back in the soup.

In the early 1980s, the thrifts were disconsolate: Their long-time strategy of borrowing short and lending long — which the regulators had forced on them — had backfired. They found they had to pay 18 percent and more for short-term funds to keep operating. Meanwhile, 30-year mortgages at 6 percent — drawn up many years earlier — were killing them.

Thus, regulators and legislators provided them with all kinds of adjustable-rate mortgages. What happened? Short rates plummeted, and suddenly there was another wide gap between short and long rates. Like a dried-out drunk grasping the jug anew, the S&Ls went right back on the fixed-rate sauce. In the third quarter of 1982, when very few mortgages were being drawn up, variable-rate mortgages were 48 percent of loans closed. In this year's second quarter, as lending volume zoomed, it dropped to 30 percent.

"As long as the yield curve remains positive (long rates are higher than short rates), this shift toward fixed-rate mortgages in S&L portfolios will boost the profitability of these institutions. However, this strategy could backfire if short rates rise faster than mortgage rates, as has been the case recently," said Robert A. Schwartz of Wall Street's Merrill Lynch.

"We're still very much concerned that the S&Ls haven't quite learned the lesson of the past. Some seem to be making fixed-rate mortgages for competitive reasons — because the guy down the street is doing it," said Matthew A. Troxell of Wall Street's A.G. Becker Paribas.

Ah, rejoin the S&Ls, this time it's different: Now we're selling those fixed-rate mortgages in the secondary market. If interest rates rise, somebody else is stuck with them. Really? "They tell us, 'We can sell them.' But they might not be able to sell them," said Troxell. When interest rates are rising, as they have been doing for three months now, there are fewer suckers out there.

And that's one reason S&L stocks are now getting creamed. Up until just recently, the S&L stocks had risen "more than five times faster than the market" (as measured by the Standard & Poor's 400), said Robert G. Hottensen, Jr., of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs. But in the past few weeks, the stocks have dropped 10 to 20 percent, and if interest rates keep rising, they will probably drop more, said Hottensen.

A.G. Becker has an index of S&L stocks. In August of last year, before interest rates plunged, the index languished at 76. On May 10 it hit 292. Now it's at 210. Earlier this year, almost every S&L mutual that changed to stock ownership saw its stock rise after the initial offering. "But the last six have all dropped after the offering," said Becker's Robert Chaut.

In theory, S&L stocks should have become less interest rate-sensitive with deregulation and the onset of flexible-rate mortgages, but in reality, the market's perception hasn't changed: "Obviously, it's interest rates hurting the stocks now," said Chaut.

A.G. Becker's distinguished economist, Richard Hoey, believes that a year from now, interest rates will be down by at least half a percentage point. For now, S&L stocks may be captive to "investor expectations" about interest rates, said Chaut. But long range, he believes there are still good buys.

Foreign investors drive up dollar's value; Analysts say it's sign of a long-term trend

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign investors, dashing after U.S. currency in recent weeks, have driven the dollar's value to record heights while turning the obscure world of foreign exchange into a front-page story.

But analysts say the foreigners are only following a longer trend: investing in America in times of uncertainty.

"These people see the United States as a safe haven for their money," said David Ernst, vice president of Evans Economics in Washington.

Buying American, whether dollars or a company's stock, is "only logical," he said, for a Brazilian businessman fearing currency devaluation by his own government, for a Frenchman upset about new taxes on wealth, for other Europeans concerned about financial implications of tensions with the Soviet Union or for a wealthy Saudi wondering about the stability of his government.

There is clearly "a vague but strong feeling of general U.S. stability" overseas, agreed C. Fred Bergsten, who handled international issues in former President Carter's Treasury Department. And that feeling is an obvious factor in attracting investment, said Bergsten, who is director of the private Institute for International Economics in Washington.

Some congressmen have complained in recent years that foreigners are buying up too much American land, business and bank deposits. But the amounts are still tiny in comparison with domestic totals, and Reagan administration officials have said they welcome the investment that swells the U.S. economy.

As for the rush for dollars, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan has argued that the recent lure has been America's strong and stable economy — not the high interest rates noted by most private economists.

"A nation's currency is a reflection of a nation's economic policy and the state of its economy," he said in late May.

Private analysts tend to say the main reason for the rise of the dollar is the high rate of interest foreign investors can get in the United States. Not only does the gap between the interest investors can make in the United States and elsewhere attract money to American banks, but it also lifts yields on the many international investments denominated in dollars.

However, high U.S. rates are also widely seen as a main threat to the nation's own economic recovery.

And other details underlying the general U.S. attractiveness can sometimes seem to be pulling in opposite directions.

"It's peculiar," said Bergsten, pointing out that when the dollar increases in value in comparison with other nations' currencies, the gain actually makes it more expensive for people in those nations to invest in a U.S. company. Their yen or pesos or deutschemarks just don't go as far, a problem that also has badly hurt American exports.

"The U.S. is the attraction more than the (strong) dollar," he said.

Foreign investment figures are not yet available for the past few months, the period when the soaring dollar has become most noticeable. But Bergsten said that the investment trend was of longer standing, that "it's not a new flood."

In March, the Federal Reserve Board reported, there was a sharp 3.8 percent increase in U.S. banks' liabilities to foreigners, a category that includes various types of foreign deposits. But the figure declined 2.3 percent in April. And the gain so far this year is at an annual rate of about 5 percent, well under increases of 10 percent in 1980, 19 percent in 1981 and 20 percent in 1982.

The Commerce Department reported last August that direct foreign investment in the United States, including purchases of companies' stock, jumped a record 31 percent in 1981. Figures for 1982 are due later this month.

Still, money spent by foreigners to buy or start U.S. companies dropped 63 percent in 1982 from the record level it reached in 1981, Commerce reported in late June. And the drop was partly due to the fact that "the dollar's appreciation increased the cost in foreign currency of a given dollar amount of U.S. assets," the report said.

Bergsten said the dollar's ascent should eventually slow and then its value should begin to decline at least somewhat under the weight of a record foreign trade deficit expected to reach $70 billion to $80 billion this year.

Ernst agreed, and he questioned whether investors on dollar sprees "are really wise" in light of the U.S. banking system's well-publicized exposure in loans to developing nations in South America and elsewhere.

He suggested the price of gold — now moving down as the dollar rises — will begin to recover if an international banking crisis should develop. Gold, with worldwide attractiveness based on centuries of tradition, is often seen as an even safer haven than the safest national economy in times of real distress.

Stores shelving more new things

Hearst Feature Service

If the economy were measured by the number of new products on the market, the first half of 1983 would be rated a roaring recovery.

New Product News, a monthly newsletter published by Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, the New York ad agency, reported 876 new products on store shelves nationwide during the first six months. That's 28 percent more than the 684 new products in the same period last year.

New merchandise didn't decline during the 1982 recession, although it increased by only 0.3 percent in the six-month period that year. There were 682 new products in the first half of 1981 and 638 in the same 1980 period.

Despite the large numbers, most new products are imitations or slight variations of existing merchandise. Only a few are innovations.

For example this year, Ortho Care in Atlanta introduced Braces Brite Brushing Gel, a toothpaste for people who wear braces. Cosrich Co. in Perth Amboy, N.J., is marketing Soap Opera Soaps, bars bearing the names and logos of ABC daytime serials.

DFS officials speculate that companies, faced with increasing competition, are churning out new products in an attempt to hold on to their share of the market.

"Perhaps the key question is how are all these new cans, cartons, bottles, jars, etc., going to fit in the stores," suggests newsletter edito Martin Friedman.

Among new products this year, the number of sauces and spices, soups and low-calorie foods and beverages showed marked increases, while cosmetics, paper products and tobacco products declined.

Cowboy John Denman and "Turkey" are silhouetted against the morning sky on the Scharbauer Ranch north of Midland. At 81, Denman still puts in many 12-hour days.

Cowpuncher

It wasn't too dadgum long ago that trail herds — complete with chuckwagons — passed near the city on their way to market.

In the early 1920s, for instance, John Denman helped punch 500 head north to Lubbock from a ranch south of Midland.

The 135-mile trek took about 20 days to complete, along what is now Texas Highway 349.

"It was an old dirt lane at the time. We called it Boilerwell Road," said the 81-year-old cowboy who still puts in a full day as a troubleshooter for the Scharbauer Cattle Co.

"You only made eight to 10 miles a day 'cause you had to graze 'em, you see. It rained a lot, too. I remember that."

Denman grew up on a small ranch in Madison County and also remembers seeing Midland for the first time in 1924.

"When I came here, Midland County had a little over 5,000 people. The old Bankhead Highway (now Wall Avenue) was the only paved road at the time — that I know of. It wasn't six months an' I knew everybody an' his dog.

"North Big Spring Street was pasture, all open country. I come downtown now and get lost sometimes. A vacant lot one day is a bloomin' office building the next."

Denman has cowboyed most of his life and spent 17 years working for the Cowden family prior to joining the Scharbauers in the early 1950s. Come Christmas Day, he'll have been married 50 years.

To the same woman?

"Yep. I can't seem to git ahead of the old gal. She cooked for the hands on both ranches.

"We live in town now. It's OK. I'm off working a lot and don't stay there much. Marie likes it. Ranch life is pretty hard sometimes and she never learned to drive."

Despite a lifetime spent tending cattle and listening to the wind swish through the mesquite, Denman has been a place or two in his day.

In 1926 he and a friend jumped into a horseless carriage and tooled merrily across the West, with stops in California, Utah, Wyoming and Idaho:

While horses are still used somewhat on ranches today, they've pretty much been usurped by cattle trucks and air-conditioned pickups.

"I've seen a lotta changes," Denman says in his chuckling, easygoing way. "There are no more trail drives. I miss 'em — especially that old chuckwagon cookin'. And the dadgum pickup has ruined the cowboy, made him soft.

"There used to be cowboys in town that you could hire by the day. You can't find experienced ranch hands anymore."

Another thing that's changed are the hours. Instead of putting in 16 and 18-hour days like he did 50 years ago, Denman now only works 12 to 14 hours a day, six days a week.

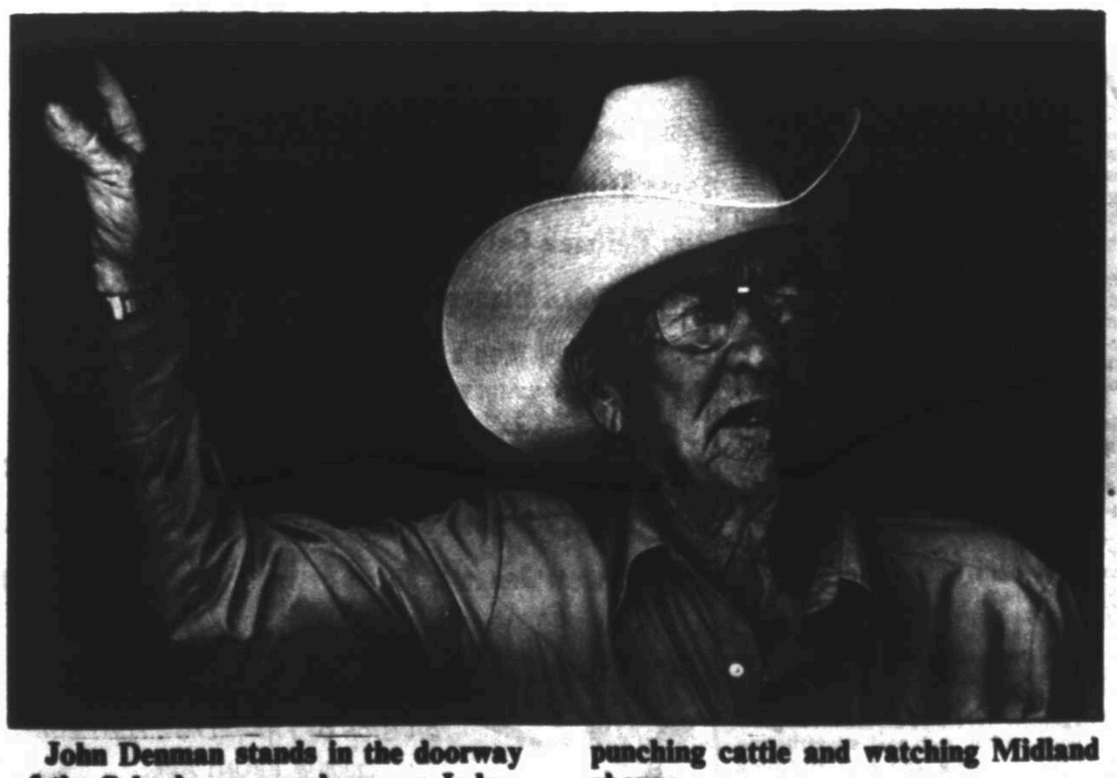

"I'd go crazy if I couldn't work," he said. "I like to work. But if I didn't think I was earnin' my keep, I'd quit. They gave me a raise this year, so I must be doin' somethin' right. The Scharbauers are good people to work for. We're just one big family.

"I've made a good livin' and never been sick a day in my life. I've been in the hospital a couple times, though. I once got kicked by a colt. It splintered my pelvic bone. And I had a cataract operation four or five years ago."

Denman doesn't cotton much to things like movies and television. Outside of the news, weather and an occasional game show, TV isn't a factor in his life. As for movies:

"I've seen five in my life. The last time I went to a picture show was 35 years ago. You take those western movies, they're about as far from real life as can be.

"Sure, I'd be a cowboy again. I figure a fella who's lived as long as I have and who's had good health shouldn't change occupations."

John Denman stands in the doorway of the Scharbauer warehouse on Industrial Avenue and recalls a lifetime spent punching cattle and watching Midland change.

Pallbearers were Wendle Womack, Gene Madry, Jerry Ervin, Donnie Bailey, Wesley Settles and Jackie Havercroft.

Wynnewood Hills... an integrated neighborhood for wealthy class

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboy tight end Pettis Norman says it looked like there would be an exodus of white people when he and other wealthy blacks began moving into Wynnewood Hills in southwest Dallas during the early 1970's.

"When I first moved in there, 'For Sale' signs just started popping up," said Norman, 44, who moved into his custom-built 4,500-square-foot home in 1972.

But the anticipated white flight fizzled and today, U.S. Census figures show 59 percent of the residents — who are mostly business executives and professionals — are black and 41 percent white.

"I think it's a fine example of an integrated community," said Joe D. Denton, 58, chairman of the board of RepublicBank-Oak Cliff, who has lived in his six-bedroom home in Wynnewood Hills for 12 years.

"When 'white flight' hit the area in the 1970s, we stayed," he said. "In fact, we've run into a few who wonder if they shouldn't try to come back."

Real estate agents agree that the only color that matters in Wynnewood Hills is dollar-bill green.

"Now everyone gets along very well," Norman said. "And it's nice to know a Joe Denton isn't afraid to live next to a black doctor, and a black doctor isn't afraid to live next to a Joe Denton."

A home in Wynnewood Hills ranges in size from 2,500 to 10,000 square feet and can cost $100,000 to $450,000.

"When you live in that addition, you have arrived," said real estate agent Al Herron, president of the Dallas Black Chamber of Commerce.

The neighborhood was inhabited by wealthy, white Oak Cliff business leaders when it was established 27 years ago. One of its selling points was the proximity of its homes to the Oak Cliff Country Club.

That country club now represents the only flaw in the apparent racial harmony.

"A white neighbor said to me when you lived next to the club's golf course, you got an automatic membership to the club," said one black Wynnewood Hills homeowner, who lives next to the club's golf course. "But since blacks moved in, he said, that doesn't happen."

Jim Shirley, general manager of the country club, said there are no black members, but said there is no unwritten rule against them.

Denton, a club member, said, "If I were black, I would certainly wonder about it. But it's just one of those things that if you get one negative vote you can't get in. It's a private club."

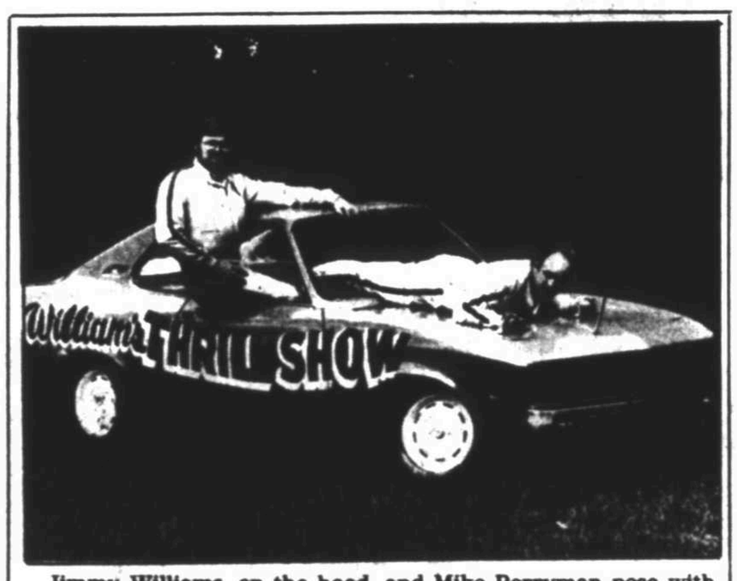

Norman says he plans to try to break tradition and will ask a club member to recommend him.

But Wynnewood Hills is filled with people who live in the community because they like their neighbors, the quiet, the trees and the lack of traffic that plagues trendy North Dallas and residents of other suburbs who must drive into Dallas.

"Look, I could have lived anywhere I wanted," Denton said, "— Highland Park, DeSoto, Duncanville — but we chose here."

Wanda N. Caldwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R.D. Caldwell, is the recipient of a $5,000 Carr Academic Scholarship to attend graduate school at Angelo State University, where she plans to earn a master's degree in business administration. She received a bachelor's degree in business administration from ASU in May.

Jimmy Williams, on the hood, and Mike Perryman pose with the car they hope to drive through a tunnel of fire. The two are part of a Lufkin, Texas stunt team who want to construct a 20 ft. tunnel of plywood, douse it with gasoline and drive through it with Jimmy Williams spread-eagled on the hood.

Deadly poisons found in treatments for illness

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — Mexican-Americans are taking such deadly poisons as lead, mercury or laundry bluing as folk remedies to treat an illness unique to their culture, says a professor studying the health threat.

Dr. Bob Trotter, associate professor of anthropology at Edinburg's Pan American University, is surveying Mexican-Americans in Texas, New Mexico and Arizona to learn more about the illness and its remedies.

Trotter said more than 105 treatments are known for "empacho," a blockage of the intestine caused by a ball of undigested food in the stomach. It is not found in medical texts, he said.

Trotter described the illness as a "culture-bound syndrome" because it is found in one culture but not others. It is believed to be caused by such things as eating uncooked food like tortillas, eating bananas late at night or being forced to eat something one doesn't like, he said.

"We have no evidence of a ball of food sitting in their stomach," Trotter said. "Whether or not the illness is real, it has very, very real consequences when it is treated.

"In English it would be a combination of indigestion and constipation, although they treat both separately," he said.

Common folk remedies include stomach massages with olive oil or a raw egg, herb teas and laxatives.

Among the top 15 treatments those surveyed listed for empacho, however, are folk remedies known as "greta" and "azarcon," yellow and bright orange powders that contain about 90 percent lead.

Other poisonous treatments include swallowing mercury or laundry bluing, which can contain toxic aniline dye, Trotter said.

Lead poisoning can cause mental retardation, anemia, kidney failure and death by brain swelling, Trotter said.

Trotter began his survey in May, after he learned greta was in use in the Rio Grande Valley.

A year earlier, two cases of lead poisoning attributed to the products were diagnosed in Los Angeles and Greeley, Colo., Trotter said.

The discovery of greta in Texas led to a state Health Department recall of the product from grocery store and herb shop shelves. Information also went out to clinics describing the use of the products, Trotter said.

More than 2,000 households were surveyed in questionaires sent to 30 migrant and public health clinics in the three states, he said.

Preliminary results show that, in some communities, more than half the households treating empacho use greta or azarcon.

"I was surprised at what percentage of households actually use these products ... some far away from the border," Trotter said. "That's a serious problem that needs to be dealt with."

In Laredo and Albuquerque, N.M., about 18 percent of those treating empacho used greta or azarcon, Trotter said.

'Political backer won contract over low bid'

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Southern University changed the specifications on a bid for artificial turf and awarded the $1.3 million contract to a political supporter of Attorney General Jim Mattox after Mattox called a school official, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Three university officials told the newspaper they changed the specifications on a bid they had accepted in March after the attorney general challenged the specifications.

Mattox called university legal counsel Theadore Andrews and "apparently raised questions as to whether we had behaved improperly in awarding the contract," said TSU President Leonard Spearman.

The newspaper, in a copyright story Sunday, said the contract was switched from a St. Louis manufacturer to SuperTurf International Inc., a Garland-based company whose president, N.W. Paschal, is a longtime Mattox supporter and who once was a client of Mattox's former law firm.

Volunteers needed to help at Republican convention

DALLAS (AP) — If you can drive, sew or throw a party you could join the 10,000 to 20,000 volunteers local planners are seeking to help out with a few odd jobs during next summer's Republican national convention.

Fred Meyer, chairman of the Republican Host Committee, says he wants delegates to get to know Dallas and hopes to arrange private parties in Dallasites' homes. He said he hopes each delegate and alternate attends at least one private party.

Volunteers also will be asked to staff information booths at the 125 hotels and motels where delegates will stay to tell them where to find souvenirs, local cuisine, and tourist attractions such as Southfork, the ranch used for location shooting of the "Dallas" television show, Meyer said.

Meyer, who is also the Dallas County GOP chairman, said his committee expects to need between 10,000 and 20,000 volunteers with a wide assortment of talents.

The committee is seeking drivers whose whereabouts will be monitored by data-processing equipment to be set up at host committee headquarters, which have yet to be rented.

Linda Perryman, executive director of the nonpartisan Dallas Welcoming Committee, says her group will need about 1,500 volunteers to help the thousands of print and broadcast journalists who will cover the Aug. 20-23 convention, and to aid dignitaries besides the delegates.

She said her group is seeking mostly volunteers with public relations experience to act as hosts in media hospitality rooms, but also wants to have some specialists, such as seamstresses, on call for emergencies.

Lufkin stunt drivers strive for danger

LUFKIN (AP) — Jimmy Williams has a unique goal he hopes to accomplish sometime in the near future — he wants to ride on the hood of his car through a tunnel of fire.

The obvious question here is simple. Why?

"It's never been done," Williams said. "That's the only reason."

Williams is part of a four-man Lufkin stunt team known as the "Williams Thrill Show" made up of Williams, his father, Yank Williams, Mike Perryman and J.C. Coleman. All take the stunt team very seriously.

"We all realize that we really have to get serious when we are about to perform a stunt that could endanger one of our lives," Jimmy Williams said. "The thing that would give us the most satisfaction, the thing we really want to do, is pull off the tunnel stunt."

The "tunnel stunt" Williams refers to will call for him and his team to construct a plywood tunnel 20 feet long, complete with walls on both sides and a roof. Then the tunnel will be doused with 20 gallons of diesel fuel and 10 gallons of gasoline and set on fire. Williams will ride on the hood of his car, while his father drives him through it.

Williams said a similar trick was filmed by a crew from the ABC-TV program, "That's Incredible," when a man attempted the stunt on a motorcycle.

"He actually made it through the tunnel, but for some reason, he decided to turn around and ride back through it a second time," Williams said. "When he did, he got some pretty severe burns on 90 percent of his body."

Williams said he has contacted the producers of the show, but they were not interested because of the serious risk involved.

"We called and asked them to film us doing the stunt, but after what happened, they told us they didn't want to have anything to do with any stunts that involved fire," Williams said.

Williams said he has studied the stunt and feels that he can successfully complete it.

"The way I figure it, we would only be inside the tunnel for about four seconds, but if we are in there any longer than that, we've got problems," Williams said. "It's about 500 degrees inside, so it's kind of a like opening a hot oven door and sticking your head inside."

Williams got his start in the stunt business watching his father, who spent time racing sprint and stock cars professionally.

"He did a lot of stunt driving, so it really comes naturally to us, and Mike's father (the late Tom Perryman) drove together with him, so we've got some background in it," Williams said.

Williams is no stranger to playing with fire, as his stunt team makes driving through an 8-foot-high wall of fire a regular part of their show. But despite that, he's still somewhat apprehensive before he attempts the stunt.

Marijuana pollen detected in air

AUSTIN (AP) — Weekly pollution tests taken last month in the Austin area showed marijuana pollen in the air, a medical technician at the Southwest Austin Allergy Clinic says.

Marijuana pollen also was detected in the Austin area in 1982, but that was not surprising, because law enforcement officers located and destroyed several marijuana patches in neighboring Bastrop County during the year, said Carole Gunter, 52.

One marijuana patch covered three acres and had plants up to 20 feet high, Bastrop County Sheriff Tommy Mosely said.

Industrial electricity sales to utility growing

HOUSTON (AP) — Electricity generated as an industrial by-product is being sold to Houston Lighting & Power Co. and in an amount that exceeds the power the utility will receive from its share of the South Texas Nuclear Project.

The procedure is called "cogeneration," and it refers to the generation of electricity from steam used for other purposes, such as refining or manufacture of chemicals.

"The idea is to heat the water once to make electricity and widgits," said HL&P spokesman Graham Painter.

Federal law requires the utility to purchase the power and to buy it at a rate equal to the most expensive electricity generated by HL&P. But HL&P officials and a spokesman for the Public Utility Commission say the procedure still benefits ratepayers as well as the utility and the companies.

John Bickham, manager of cogeneration for HL&P, says companies which generate lectricity with surplus steam can reap "fantastic profits" because they are paid for the fuel HL&P does not have to burn. And in the future, HL&P will also apparently pay for the cost of the plants it does not have to build.

"This extra charge will have to be adequate or the whole process will be in trouble," said Dow Chemical Co. spokesman Clarence Barras.

Dow Chemical Co. in Freeport and Diamond Shamrock Corp. in Deer Park are two of the companies selling power to HL&P. However, officials of both companies disagree with Bickham that the profits are fantastic.

"On a percent basis (the profit) is less than our normal profits," Barras says.

Payments for fuel not used and plants not built are called avoided costs" and are required by federal legislation, which Bickham says is stimulating construction of generating plants by companies outside the utility business.

HL&P has also signed new contracts with two other companies Bickham declined to identify.

Colleges filling gap with 'forgiveness loans'

DALLAS (AP) — Several Texas colleges trying to lure students into education careers have been trading tuition grants for promises to teach math and science in the state's public schools.

At least four schools hoping to solve a critical shortage in math and science teachers have turned to the Carl B. and Florence E. King Foundation in Dallas for money to fund the so-called "forgiveness loans" to students.

In all, 80 grants will be made available over the next four years through Texas A&M University, the University of Dallas, Texas Women's University and Texas Wesleyan College.

Each school will receive five $2,000 awards per year, which they will offer to education students specializing in math or physical sciences. When the students finish the degree, they will repay the grant by teaching in Texas' public schools.

One year of aid will be "forgiven" for each year of teaching.

Critics say such aid has proven ineffective in other fields. But supporters say it is one of the few ways to encourage bright students to pursue education rather than business careers.

And Lori Hawkins, 1980 salutatorian in her senior class at Mineral Wells, says that she is studying education at Texas Wesleyan in Fort Worth because of a "forgiveness loan."

"If it were not for the grant," she said. "I might not be able to go to TWC."

A Texas Education Agency study projected that enrollment increases and teacher retirements will create nearly 500 openings in math instruction every year for the next decade, but only 20 math teachers were certified in the state last year.

TEA issued 551 emergency certificates last year and expects to give out a similar number this fall.

Private funding for forgiveness grants appears to be part of a national trend as companies recognize deficiencies in math and science instruction, officials say.

The Digital Equipment Corp., for example, offers 14 months free graduate tuition, well-paid stints in student teaching and semester-long jobs with the company to students making a three-year commitment.

Gypsies now try to blend in American mainstream

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

HARTFORD, Conn. — Sometime in the early 1950s, the gypsies in New England seemed to vanish from the Earth, like mist in a warm sun.

You used to see them camped along roadsides or peering out storefront windows beckoning to strangers to come in and have their fortunes told — but no more.

Some have been seen since then, as when hundreds of would suddenly appear to stand vigil over a dying gypsy in a hospital, but those occasions were few and far between.

Rumors had it the gypsies moved to a warmer climate or to a part of the country where they were unknown to law enforcement authorities.

But the truth is they never went anywhere.

They are still here, in even greater numbers than before. Some estimates range from 20,000 to 25,000 in New England, maybe 1 million or more in the country.

BUT YOU DON'T SEE them because most went underground to escape what they claim has been an unparalleled prejudice against gypsies in this country, more than that suffered by Jews, blacks or Hispanics.

Two decades ago it was not uncommon for local police, particularly in Connecticut and Massachusetts, to escort gypsy caravans out of town on any complaint.

In the mid-1960s, the Hartford City Council passed a resolution outlawing character readings, a euphemism for old-fashioned gypsy fortunetelling, despite warnings that it was unconstitutional. As a consequence, about a dozen gypsy fortunetelling establishments were closed by police.

It was for reasons like this that the gypsies discarded their singular dress — the bandanas, gold jewelry and billowing skirts — stopped speaking that unwritten language called Romany except to each other, and moved into big city ghettos where they could blend in.

"When we wore the gypsy clothes, he'd go into a store and immediately the store detectives would follow us around. So we got smart. Now we dress just like any other Americans," said John Tene, 36, the great grandson of a man reputed to have been the "king of the gypsies."

Fortune-teller Lisa Nicholas reads palms and tarot cards in her Malden, Massachusetts, shop, a trade she learned from her mother. Like many others of the 20,000 to 25,000 gypsies in New England, however, she does not advertise she is a gypsy for fear prejudice against gypsies will harm her business.

TENE, WHO RUNS A self-help program for gypsies in the Boston area, knows firsthand the suffering his people have gone through.

The taunt he heard as a child growing up in a Newark, N.J., ghetto, "dirty, filthy gypsy," still rings in Tene's ears three decades later.

Ask him if it is true that gypsies steal and the short, wiry man with the coal-black hair goes into a tirade. His dark eyes go wild, his arms flail and he jumps around like a puppet.

"All-righty. Some gypsies steal. Some Italians steal, some blacks steal, but it's not right to say they all steal," he sputtered. "I had this American kid come up to me once and say, 'Hey brother, I'm a gypsy, too.' I look at him and I tell him he's not a gypsy. He says, 'I'm a gypsy. I steal.' And I say to him, 'No. You're not a gypsy. You're a thief.'"

Tene, who wears a gold earring in the shape of a wagon wheel, is an angry man. His whole life is dedicated to changing the image of the gypsy, but too often, he says, it's like spitting into the wind.

How do you confront this bigotry, he asked, when the English slang for getting cheated (gypped) comes from the word gypsy and appears in every standard dictionary?

"When a gypsy kid grows up, all he hears is that gypsies rob and steal. So what do a lot of them do? They rob. What do you expect?" asked Tene's stepmother, Lena Tene.

GYPSIES ARE NOTORIOUS for con games, sometimes bilking people out of thousands of dollars, but John Tene said this is not true of his people in general.

"Same as the Italians. Just because some are part of the Mafia doesn't mean they all are," he said.

The same thoughts are shared by gypsy John Mitchell, who has spent most of his life traveling from coast to coast.

"We're being a little persecuted because we're gypsies. I'm not saying that all gypsies are good. We have some that are pretty bad," said Mitchell, who admitted he is a little embarrassed to tell anyone he is a gypsy.

Rarely, Tene said, are gypsies involved in crimes of violence, drugs or prostitution.

However, he acknowledged that there are cases of petty larcenies.

"I can remember my grandmother saying, 'Gypsies steal with their hands. Americans steal with pens.'"

Even the word 'gypsy' irritates these people who migrated from India more than 1,000 years ago and have been forced to stay on the move ever since. They were called gypsies long ago in the mistaken belief they were from Egypt. Rom is what they call themselves, a derivative of the Hindu word Dom, which means nomad. According to Tene, the Rom use the word gypsy only to communicate with other Americans who know them by no other name.

"Some people think you're a gypsy if you run away with a circus. You have to be born a gypsy," Tene said.

IN NEW ENGLAND, the largest number of gypsies today are in the greater Boston area. Although there are no reliable census figures, estimates range from 3,000 to 4,000. The number, Tene said, doubles in the spring and summer. Many gypsies leave New England in the winter for California and Florida because they cannot afford to heat their apartments.

Because of their wariness of the "gadjo," their term for all non-gypsies, much of their life is shrouded in secrecy.

But several studies done in the Boston area on gypsies, including one by the community Affairs Department of the Boston Globe, show some startling statistics, most of which were verified by Tene's organization, Romania of Massachusetts:

— Illiteracy is nearly 100 percent.

— About half the gypsy population is school age, but fewer than 100 attend public schools.

— Most gypsies have never seen a doctor or dentist except in extreme emergencies.

— Few gypsy women receive prenatal care.

— The infant mortality rate among gypsies is 25 percent to 35 percent.

— Only a handful of gypsy men and women hold full-time jobs. The women sell flowers or tell fortunes. Gypsy men work mostly at odd jobs, auto body repair and driveway refinishing. Because most of the men are illiterate and have no steady employment history, it is difficult for them now to get full-time jobs.

DEL MONTE INTRODUCES NEW LABEL

Del Monte Corp. will be introducing only the sixth label design in the 91-year history of its flagship brand beginning in May.

SAN FRANCISCO— The history of the Del Monte shield, one of the most recognized trademarks in the world, is intertwined with the development of California's food processing industry.

In the 1880s, dozens of fledgling California canners were vying for an emerging canned foods market, selling a dizzying assortment of brand names. An Oakland-based firm, Tillman & Bendel, supplied a special blend of coffee for the prestigious Hotel Del Monte in Monterrey, Calif.

When Fred Tillman founded the Oakland Preserving Company in 1891, he decided to use the Del Monte name on his premium-quality canned fruits.

Those early Del Monte labels featured a drawing of the Hotel Del Monte on the entire back panel to ensure that consumers wouldn't miss the connection with the posh resort.

When a group of 18 companies combined in 1899 to form the California Fruit Canners Association, the new organization adopted Del Monte as its premier brand. It was one of the few concessions to corporate solidarity following the merger.

The Del Monte shield — with its Old English lettering and ornately drawn red shield — made its debut in 1909 when the entire Del Monte label was redesigned. Gone was the drawing of the hotel, replaced by highly stylized artwork of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Although CFCA chose Del Monte as its featured brand, it was by no means its only brand. The company's trade brochure from 1915 lists more than 50 Del Monte products but also boasts of the company's 72 other "leading brands."

In 1916, CFA merged with three other firms to form California Packing Corporation. The Del Monte label was redone shortly thereafter, emerging with an oval shield and an appetizing drawing of the appropriate product on the label.

With its new graphics, the Del Monte label was ready for California Packers' number-one objective — established a national market for a single brand of canned fruits and vegetables and build that market through the new medium of mass advertising. The Del Monte label was about to become a part of Americana.

In 1917, the Saturday Evening Post carried a full-page ad over the signature of California Packing Corporation. It said, simply, "California's finest fruits and vegetables are packed under the Del Monte brand." This was the start of an advertising campaign that would make Del Monte one of the best-known brand names in the world.

That label design endured basically intact until 1936. By then Del Monte was by far the leading brand of canned fruits and vegetables, as much a part of the average American's diet as any brand.

In 1936, the company introduced label modification to the grocery industry and consumers. In place of drawings were full-color photographs of the actual product.

But most important, the back panel now contained information designed to help consumers know what was inside the can. A peach label, for example, noted that there were "approx. 8 to 11" pieces of large fruit inside, packed in heavy syrup with a total weight of one pound, 13 ounces. And comparative information on other can sizes and product styles was also included.

Except for minor changes made during WWII—such as eliminating certain inks needed for the war effort—the 1936 label remained basically intact until 1966. In that year, that label design now on grocers' shelves was introduced featuring a bold horizontal line dividing the label into two main parts — a green background with the shield and a product photograph.

California Packing Corporation, recognizing the dominance of the Del Monte Monte brand, in 1967 changed its name to Del Monte Corporation.

The brand that Fred Tillman started was now the name of one of the largest food processors in the world.

Although the 1966 front panel graphics did not change until Del Monte's new label program was finalized this year, the back panel underwent a radical transformation in 1972.

Del Monte became the first major food processor to include comprehensive nutritional labeling. No longer would consumers be in the dark about the nutritional breakout of foods. On the back of each can was percent of protein, carbohydrate and fat along with vitamin and mineral content.

The company added another line to the pacesetting nutritional panel in 1982. In recognition of the growing concern about sodium, Del Monte with its 1982 pack began listing sodium content on all Del Monte-brand products with a nutritional label. The new labels that will be phased in between mid-1983 and the end of 1984 are the sixth major modification in the evolution of the Del Monte label.

Chinese look now fits smaller room

Copley News Service

Q: I have always enjoyed Oriental designs in furnishings and have collected some Asian accessories.

I'm now in the market for furniture and wonder if one must have large quarters to accommodate Chinese pieces or if some would look well in a medium-sized apartment? — T.B.N.

A: You can create an Far East feeling in small quarters with scaled-down Chinese furniture such as dining room sets or a slightly traditional sofa and lots of Oriental furniture.

It is true that much Chinese furniture of the past was of a large scale but reproductions are taking into consideration our small spaces.

One imaginative interior designer demonstrated creativity in constructing a soffit in a living-dining combination room. Inside one section was a china cabinet. Next in an adjoining alcove was a sofa, allowing every inch of space to be used yet giving some definition to the two areas of dining and sitting.

The designer established the Oriental feeling with a silk screen of a Chinese figure, a Japanese screen, Chinese red laquered walls and a dining set with an Oriental hint.

Space is not the determining factor but how the space is used determines the overall effect.

CNS Photo

A soffit creates an enclosure in this living-dining room to separate a china cabinet and sofa. The room, though small, is dramatic, partly through red lacquered walls, down-sized Chinese-inspired furniture and Oriental accessories.

Q: We are moving into a new home with a living room slightly larger than our apartment's living room. We have a beige sofa, a cream-colored chair and a dark brown one.

Our pride and joy is a new, modern painting in brilliant lines of red, blue, yellow, green, pink, turquoise and black.

We have a beige rug which was just the right size for our room in the apartment. But now it is only postage-stamp size in our new home.

What kind of floor covering should be purchased? — W.B.

A: If you like the overall effect of the beige, why not carpet your new living room in beige and do something exciting with the wall color — such as paint one wall with your special painting and another a color different from two other walls.

Q: My bathroom has the ugliest tile I have ever seen. The entire bathroom is light orchid with black trim — from floor to ceiling. The floor has tiny white tiles.

I want very much to remodel and take out all the tile. But I don't think I can afford to do that for several years.

What can I do in the meantime to cut down on the hideous look? I don't want to paint the tile because I have heard horror stories on trying to paint tile. — P.B.

A: Usually old bathrooms have wooden baseboards and ceiling cornices. If you do, you're in luck.

Attach a small curtain rod to the cornice at the ceiling. Buy adequate fabric to shir on the rod (sheeting might work well by removing the hems and restitching a smaller hem). Slip the curtain rod through the top and bottom hems of the fabric and attach the bottom curtain rod to the baseboard to hold the fabric taunt.

DEAR ABBY

Gifts undelivered

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just got a telephone call from a relative (I won't say how close) who lives less than five miles from me. She said, in a very huffy tone, "When are you coming to pick up your Christmas presents?" (This is the third time she's called about this.)

Abby, correct me if I am wrong, but aren't people supposed to deliver their own Christmas presents?

I might add, this relative has a car and is not handicapped in any way, shape or form.

I am so angry I can hardly write this. How should I handle it? — BOILING OVER

DEAR BOILING: You are obviously too intimidated to ask this relative to please deliver them, so before the hot summer ends, take a ride, cool off, and pick up your Christmas presents.

DEAR ABBY: This has been bugging me for years. It's the way people always greet you with, "How are you?" Then they zoom right by without even waiting for an answer. If they aren't interested in how a person is, why do they ask? Why not just say "Hello"?

There have been times when I would like to tell somebody how I really am, but I never get the chance because nobody waits for an answer.

I work in an office, and this morning when I came to work, a man yelled from across the room, "Hi, Lea, how are you?" Did he actually expect me to yell across the room, "Well, not too good; my hemorrhoids are killing me!"

I hope you don't think I'm a fool for bringing this up, but I feel better getting it off my chest. Am I alone in this annoyance, or are there others out there who feel as I do? — LEA (MY REAL NAME)

DEAR LEA: Face it, when most people ask, "How are you?" they don't want an organ recital. A "Fine, thanks," will suffice. And sit on the "facts" until you see your physician.

New surgical method siphons cellulite away

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The latest Franco-American alliance aims to conquer cellulite — one name for localized fat deposits that are the despair of U.S. women with "saddle bags" and of French femmes in culottes de cheval. It can rarely be dieted or exercised away, but now apparently it can be surgically loosened and siphoned away.

The procedure, called Lipolysis (lipe-o-lis-sis), was developed in France by Dr. Yves-Gerard Illouz and introduced to this country by Dr. Norman Martin of Beverly Hills, who studied with and continues to work with the Paris surgeon.

"Dr. Illouz has done more than 3,500 Lipolysis operations, and I have done more than 1,300," said Martin, who calls the procedure "the greatest advance in plastic surgery in the last 10 years."

Martin, 48, has practiced medicine for 23 years and specializes in cosmetic plastic surgery after extensive training in otolaryngology (ear, nose and throat), cardiovascular surgery and neurontology (study of equilibrium). He is not certified by the American Board of Plastic Surgery nor a member of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons. Some members of that group have criticized the Lipolysis technique.

"Many of those doctors," said Martin, "are now rushing to study this technique. Three hundred doctors took an April course in Los Angeles." A panel on suction lipectomy, a version of the fat removal involving scraping, attracted an overflow crowd at a society convention last fall.

The Southern California surgeon said that Illouz developed the Lipolysis procedure in 1977 and used it first on thighs, hips, buttocks, abdomen, under the chin, knees and ankles, mostly for female patients, and, for men, rolls of fat at the side of the waist and fatty breasts.

"Working together, the two of us have expanded treatment areas to include the upper arms, inner thighs, the fat in front and behind the armpit, the waist and certain back areas for women, and, for men, the rare fat on the abdomen.

This is his description of the technique: "There is a local or general anesthetic, depending on the area involved. Then the area of the fat deposit is injected with a weak salt-water solution. The fat absorbs the excess water and swells to resemble a ripe piece of fruit. A small incision, less than one-half inch in length, is made near the fat lump.

"The surgeon inserts a small blunt cannula. This is a hollow metal tube with a hole near the outer end, to which plastic tubing is attached. The tubing is connected to a suction machine. The surgeon maneuvers the cannula — remember there are no sharp edges, nothing to cut or scrape — around the fat area, sculpting it. This is the most important difference in Lipolysis and other procedures.

"Fat, which has a lower tensile strength than blood vessels or nerves, is sucked out. Injection of the saline solution has made it more fluid. The large center portion of fat is suctioned out, but a blanket of fat is left just under the skin. We never take more than six pounds at one place."

There is almost immediate skin contraction, Martin said. Nerves are upset in some cases, and about 50 percent of the patients experience numbness for a few weeks, particularly in the thigh area, as well as some swelling. "Neither Dr. Illouz nor I have had a case of permanent numbness."

The small incision is frequently made in a fold of skin, and leaves no unsightly scar. Some surgery techniques of the past left scars.

Healing times are different for different areas of the body; age, weight and tissue condition are factors. "Healing of the hips and buttocks can require as little as two weeks; the thighs, one to three months. The ankles are the most difficult because the drainage has to go uphill. They stay swollen longer and can require as much as six months to heal."

Martin stressed that Lipolysis should be the last choice. "Everything else should be tried before this. Most fat can be lost by diet and exercise. Lipoysis is for the individual of relatively normal weight who has localized areas of fatty deposits that don't respond to diet and exercise. And it should be considered if this cellulite bothers the individual.

Patients of the physician require a hospital stay, usually 24 hours, for such body areas as thighs and hips. Office treatment is often possible for double chin or upper arm areas.

Fast action saves lives

Act Fast.

More than ever before, this is what people should do if they suspect they're having a heart attack.

Quick action could result in reduced heart damage or a saved life. Studies show that revolutionary methods of treating heart-attack victims can even stop an attack in progress.

So says Dr. Harold Dodge, professor of medicine at the University of Washington School of Medicine and director of the UW's Cardiovascular Research and Training Center.

Dodge says evidence indicates that the enzyme streptokinase, if given soon enough, can reduce permanent heart damage and save lives.

Doctors at University Hospital and other medical centers around the country are applying streptikonase directly to the blood clot that is causing a heart attack by blocking a coronary artery.

By dissolving the clot, streptikonase permits blood to resume flowing to the heart muscle. Those tissues will die if deprived of blood for too long, and the greater the amount of tissue damage, the more likely it is that the victim will die or suffer impaired heart function.

Dodge says there are more exciting things to come – safer and more effective anti-clotting drugs and quicker ways to administer them, mainly by injection instead of using a catheter tube run into the heart through an artery.

As for atherosclerosis, the disease that is the underlying cause of most heart attacks, scientists are continuing their search for ways to correct and prevent it, Dodge says.

Atherosclerosis is a narrowing of the arteries caused by a build-up of fatty deposits. The deposits seem to encourage the formation of blood clots, which can completely block an already narrowed coronary artery.

At the UW, says Dodge, a study will soon begin to determine whether the narrowing process can be stopped or reversed by using drugs that are now available.

Chilean official hints at possible elections

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Bowing to pressure for democratic liberalization, President Augusto Pinochet's new cabinet chief has promised congressional elections "much sooner" than 1990, as originally planned.

The announcement by Interior Minister Sergio Onofre Jarpa, in an interview published Sunday by the newspaper Mercurio, was the first hint of Pinochet's promised program for a transition to democratic rule.

It was published as mourners buried most of the 24 slum dwellers shot dead Thursday and Friday during two nights of demonstrations to back demands by the Democratic Alliance of major political parties that Pinochet resign.

Police fired tear gas at rock-hurling youths at three cemeteries Saturday and two on Sunday, arresting 34 mourners of the shooting victims.

The monthly "Days of National Protest" by hundreds of thousands of Chileans have posed the first serious challenge to Pinochet's authoritarian rule since the armed forces seized power in 1973.

He has lost considerable civilian support because of his regime's handling of a severe recession that hit Chile after voters approved a 1980 constitution enabling him to stay in power at least until 1989.

The charter calls for the four-man military junta to name a president to an eight year term in 1989, subject to approval by a voter referendum, and for election of a two-house congress the following year.

In the meantime, Pinochet's appointed Council of State is to draft laws permitting political parties to become legal again and regulating elections. The government has been criticized for not expediting the end of the political "recess" imposed at the time of the coup.

"I think the implementation of these political laws is going to start much sooner than was foreseen," Jarpa said in the interview. "I cannot say when, but before 1990 we are going to have an elected congress."

He said the Council of State, after consulting political leaders of its own choosing, will set an earlier date for congressional elections and put the proposal to voters in the form of a constitutional amendment.

But the plan was unlikely to win adherants in the Democratic Alliance, a group of party leaders from the right to the socialist left. They gathered Aug. 7 to announce a demand for Pinochet's departure, 18-month provisional regime to organize free elections of a president and congress.

Gabriel Valdes, Christian Democratic leader of the Democratic Alliance, said at a news conference last week it was "inconceivable" that the opposition would accept any plan allowing Pinochet to stay in power to 1989.

Polish police scatter demonstrators

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Riot police brandishing clubs scattered more than 2,000 Poles screaming "Solidarity!" as they held the first demonstration for the outlawed union since the Communist government ended martial law last month.

The marchers were routed Sunday after they left a church Mass and approached the Lenin Shipyards, birthplace of the union. The demonstration was seen as a prelude to what the union's underground hopes will be a nationwide show of support on Aug. 31, the third anniversary of Solidarity's birth.

Solidarity founder Lech Walesa attended the Mass with the protesters but was not among the marchers. He joined about 5,000 worshipers in singing Polish patriotic hymns.

Chanting "Solidarity!" "Lech Walesa!" "Greetings to the Underground!" and "No freedom without Solidarity!" the workers marched to a monument outside the shipyard gates.The monument was erected in December 1980 to scores of workers who died in a 1970 clash with security forces.

The marchers formed outside St. Brygida's Roman Catholic Church, where the Rev. Henryk Jankowski urged Walesa and other worshipers to "be courageous, brothers."

"It is not enough to have trade unions which are just (government) partners on paper, transmitting instructions," Jankowski said, alluding to the new, state-run unions authorities imposed in Solidarity's stead.

Mixing with other Sunday strollers, the supporters marched down the grassy boulevard leading to the monument, 50 yards from the main shipyard gate.

A convoy of trucks pulled from a side street and dozens of riot police, many wearing helmets and carrying clubs and shields, reinforced the thin line of blue-clad regular police stationed at the monument.

The demonstrators broke and ran at the sight of the police, who temporarily sealed off the area, blocking many people trying to approach the monument to lay flowers.

The police used no force, but Western reporters saw them detain about a dozen people, including an NBC-TV crew released without charge within two hours. Such detentions are not unusual, and typically entail identity checks.

By evening, the streets of this Baltic seaport were quiet and the streets were crowded with tourists and strollers enjoying the cool air.

Sunday's brief demonstration was the first since martial law was lifted July 22. The government suspended Solidarity when martial law was imposed on Dec. 13, 1981, and later banned the independent union.

Solidarity's five-member underground Temporary Coordinating Commission is urging memorial Catholic Masses and a boycott of public transport for two hours during afternoon rush-hour on Aug. 31, a Wednesday.

In addition, a previously unheard-of group called the Secret Commission of Solidarity in the Gdansk Shipyards circulated a leaflet over the weekend telling Communist authorities to negotiate with Walesa on revival of free trade unions or face a work slowdown starting Aug. 23.

The government has rejected Walesa as a bargaining partner, but the 39-year-old Lenin Shipyard electrician told reporters Sunday he supported the threat of a slowdown.

"If it comes from the workers, it must be right," said Walesa. "I always support the shipyard workers because I am one of them."

Christians, Druse continue shelling, killing three

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christian and Druse militiamen shelled each other's positions in the central mountains early today, and police said at least three people were killed and six wounded.

Shells hit towns and villages in the Druse sections of the Aley and Chouf mountains as well as Christian areas including those on Beirut's outskirts, causing heavy property damage, police said.

The warring militias accused each other of starting the shooting in the latest round of hostilities that erupted Saturday night and persisted until a new cease-fire took hold today.

On Sunday, security forces accused Syrian gunners in the central mountains of joining the Druse barrage that sent shells slamming into Beirut's Christian areas, including those where the presidential palace and U.S. ambassador's residence are located. Neither was reported hit and there were no casualties.

That shelling came hours after U.S. presidential envoy Robert C. McFarlane said in a radio broadcast that the United States would stand by Lebanon in seeking to rid the country of foreign forces "because it is the right thing to do."

McFarlane's remarks followed two meetings with Foreign Minister Elie Salem in which the discussions were said to focus on the battles between government troops and Druse fighters.

In Israel, Prime Minister Menachem Begin accused Syria on Sunday of blocking withdrawal of all foreign armies from Lebanon by refusing to accept the Lebanese-Israeli troop-withdrawal agreement reached three months ago but never implemented. Syria claims the agreement threatens its security by allowing Israeli forces to patrol southern Lebanon.

Syrian President Hafez Assad, in an interview printed Sunday in the Washington Post, restated his country's claim that it will never honor the agreement and that Israeli forces must withdraw unconditionally.

"It is a mistake for anyone to believe or to think that we will ever leave Lebanon as a morsel which is easy for the Israelis to swallow," he was quoted as saying.

Israel has an estimated 28,000 soldiers in Lebanon, Syria has 50,000 and the Palestine Liberation Organization a 12,000-15,000-strong force.

Indian military airlifts food to villagers isolated by floods

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Air force, army and navy units are airlifting food and providing boats to marooned villagers in several states because of monsoon floods that have killed at least 111 people in a week.

The deaths included 79 in Maharashtra state and Bombay, in west central India, 31 in the southeastern coast state of Andhra Pradesh and one in Goa, 300 miles southeast of Bombay, news reports of the flooding said Sunday.

The rains sent the Godavari River, which flows from Maharashtra to Andhra Pradesh, to record levels, forcing 30,000 people to flee from one district alone, and marooning 65 villages, the United News of India reported.

Cosmonauts detach satellite

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Soviet cosmonauts spending their eighth week in space have detached the unmanned satellite Cosmos 1443 from their orbiting Salyut 7 station and sent it spinning into space, the official news agency Tass said.

Vladimir Lyakhov and Alexander Alexandrov conducted the "undocking and departure" of the unmanned craft Sunday and reported that systems aboard the remaining complex of the Salyut 7 space station and the Soyuz T-9 that took them aloft June 27 were "working normally," Tass said.

It did not say if the jettisoned satellite would have any further use but did not detail any further space program for the craft, which docked with Salyut 7 on March 10.

Mexico distributes new coins

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government begins distributing newly minted 50 centavo coins today, equal to half of one peso, worth about three-tenths of a cent and able to buy practically nothing.

The Bank of Mexico, the country's central bank, says they are made of stainless steel and will last much longer than the copper-nickel alloy coins currently in circulation.

Congress ordered them minted by a law passed Dec. 21, 1981, when 50 centavos would buy a box of matches or a piece of flavored candy. Now, with 100 percent annual inflation and successive devaluations, a box of matches costs five pesos and a piece of candy 1.50 pesos.

After a severe recession that began last year because of falling oil prices, the peso's value dropped from 26 to around 150 to the dollar.

Counter caters to elderly

PEKING (AP) — A Canton department store has set up a special counter where elderly residents can take a chair, sip tea and select everything from hearing aids to pipes, China's official news agency Xinhua reports.

The counter also sells clothing in traditional southern Chinese styles, shoes, eyeglasses, walking sticks and soap made from a Qing Dynasty (1644-1911) court formula, the agency said Sunday.

Pryor sues ex-employer

PEKIN, Ill. (AP) — Comedian Richard Pryor says he answered a former employer's call for help by loaning him $50,000, but his only repayment has been a broken promise that the money would be used to bail the man's son out of jail.

In court documents in a recent lawsuit by Pryor, the 42-year-old comic said he made an "oral agreement" with Henry Nesbit to loan the money only for bond for Nesbit's son, who was jailed on a still-pending murder charge.

The suit, filed in Pekin, contends that Nesbit, for whom Pryor once worked in his hometown of Peoria, used $20,000 to pay attorneys' fees and court costs, rather than bail.

A hearing today will decide whether an injunction will be granted preventing Nesbit and his son from spending the remaining $30,000. The suit also asks for $20,000 in damages.

Nesbit declined to comment on the suit.

BOSTON (AP) — John F. Kennedy Jr., son of the late president, is headed from a search for pirate gold to an underdeveloped Indian village to learn about problems in the Third World.

John F. Kennedy

Kennedy, 22, has spent much of the summer aboard the research vessel Vast Explorer II anchored in 20 feet of water off Wellfleet, Mass., looking for the booty of legendary buccaneer Black Sam Bellamy.

Eighteenth century accounts say the ship, which sank in 1717, was carrying the modern equivalent of up to $200 million.

As part of a 15-person crew hunting for the treasure, Kennedy has been sleeping over many nights in a cramped four-bunk room in the research ship. But he asks in this week's issue of People magazine, "How often do you get to do something like dive a shipwreck?"

He says he will leave the expedition this fall to take up study of Third World problems at the University of New Delhi, and later he'll work in an underdeveloped Indian village.

W. Wilson Goode

SEABOARD, N.C. (AP) — Philadelphia mayoral candidate W. Wilson Goode got a big reception on a return to his hometown, where he marched in a parade and entertained the crowd by playing "Three Blind Mice" on a xylophone-like instrument.

Goode, the Democratic nominee, hopes to be elected Philadelphia's first black mayor in November.

He frequently stepped out of the line of a welcome-back parade Saturday to greet the 400 people who turned out in this northeastern North Carolina town of 687. His rendition of "Three Blind Mice" was on an instrument he called "the bells."

The 44-year-old son of a Northampton County sharecropper moved north with his family when he was 15. He told the crowd, "I believe I am where I am because of my humble beginnings here."

John Y. Brown

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Gov. John Y. Brown Jr., who underwent open-heart surgery nearly two months ago, is well enough to go on national TV later this week, and a producer says he hopes Brown will "talk about his whole experience."

Brown, 49, will appear Friday on ABC's "Good Morning America" with his wife, Phyllis George Brown, who has hosted the show in the past, says John Goodman, an associate producer of the show.

Inaccurate connections made by newspapers

ATLANTA (AP) — Articles published last year in The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution "inaccurately connected a rare and fatal blood disease to radiation from the Savannah River Plant," the newspapers say.

The newspapers published a series of articles last summer reporting abnormally high rates of a blood disease in the area surrounding the weapons material-producing nuclear plant in Aiken, S.C.

In a front-page article in their combined editions, the newspapers said Sunday: "In fact there appears to be no evidence that the disease, polycythemia vera, is caused by radiation, according to leading medical authorities."

The newspapers also reported: "In recent interviews by The Journal and Constitution, five of eight physicians who were quoted last year said they specifically pointed out to reporters who wrote the series that some of their patients suffered from secondary polycythemia, which is not fatal, and not polycythemia vera, which is."

"These patients, however, were counted as having the more serious disease. The articles also failed to specify a time frame for the 25 cases, which occurred over a period of years and in fact fell within national norms."

The Associated Press and other news organizations carried articles quoting the Atlanta newspapers' reports.

"I had calls from colleagues throughout the country," said W.C. Reinig, superintendent of the health protection department for E.I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. Inc., which operates the Savannah River Plant for the federal government.

"People in the Midwest, even in Germany were becoming disturbed that they might become victims of this disease because they worked at nuclear plants," Reinig told the The Journal and Constitution.

Jim Minter, the newspapers' editor, was quoted in the article as saying editors renewed the investigation of the disease when "contradictions began to turn up" following the publication of last year's articles.

"We discovered that our reporters obviously had confused statistics and scientific data. We did not ask enough questions when the series was being prepared, and we failed to seek and report the opinions of experts who disagreed with the articles," Minter said.

"We also failed to report that one of the reporters' principal sources was a doctor who had surrendered his medical license and served time for a drug conviction," the editor said.

When 'Father Knows Best' ended, 'everything finished'

DENVER (AP) — The little pigtailed daughter on TV's "Father Knows Best" says she fell from grace in real life — from celebrity to drugs, welfare, even prison — before she found faith and the courage to teach others by example.

For 6½ years until 1960 Lauren Chapin played Kathy Anderson, the most innocent adolescent character on the series about American suburban life in the innocent 1950s.

"When 'Father Knows Best' finished, everything finished," she recalled recently. "I couldn't get a job. I'd been typecast as Kathy Anderson. The more I didn't work, the more my mother drank and the more belligerent I became. I started running away from home. I became an incorrigible child."

Drugs followed, and casual lovers, Haight-Ashbury, fast company, eight miscarriages, welfare, declining health, a mental hospital, prison.

She tells this story brightly, in detail, with a preacher's lift of voice. Because at 38, Lauren Chapin is on the gospel circuit.

"Millions of people grew up with Kathy Anderson. She represented something they didn't have in their own home. For men, I was a girl friend. For women, I was their perfect little sister. And when they hear my story, when they hear a part of me went down to the bottom, they realize that Lauren Chapin is not Kathy Anderson."

The pressure to live up to her character, she says, did its share of damage.

"My mother always made me dress like Kathy Anderson. She would never let me look like Lauren Chapin," she said. "She'd always put those pigtails on and bobby socks. I'd take off my socks and roll up my jeans. I'd say I want to be me, but my mom would say, 'How could you shame me like that? You can't be you. You've got to be Kathy Anderson.'"

After "Father Knows Best," she said, her relations with her parents worsened.

She ran away, quit high school and married a classmate. She withdrew several thousand dollars from a savings account "and blew it in eight months." The marriage ended.

Snowmobiles make big splash

ZELIENOPLE, Pa. (AP) — On a sun-splashed mid-August afternoon ideal for backyard picnics and treks to the pool, a group of winter enthusiasts revved up their snowmobiles to race across a lake.

"We get the itch, I guess. We get to thinking snow," said Jerry Mueller, past president of the Pennsylvania Snowseekers Snowmobile Club, which held its sixth annual "watercross" Sunday.

"It's something to do. You got to do your thing," he said.

About 3,000 spectactors ringed McCommins Lake, about 50 miles north of Pittsburgh, to watch 100 participants fire up their machines, roar down a grassy runway and skim across watery courses ranging from 150 to 400 feet long.

The machines hydroplane on their own momentum, but a motor-driven track that drives them on the snow also propels them on the water — as long as they have enough power.

"There is no secret. You just go," said Rick Lamey, 20, of Chippewa Township, riding in his first race.

The crowd cheered the life-jacketed riders who made the shore-to-shore trip successfully, but sentiments were clearly with the 13-foot-deep lake. And the water claimed its share of riders.

"The people come to see us sink," said race director John Elliott, 37. "It's something to do in the summertime. You can't do much else with snowmobiles this time of year. We want to do something with them besides wax them."

Snowmobiles, which cost up to $5,000, are equipped with a kill switch that cuts the engine. When riders get that sinking feeling, they're supposed to hit the switch to prevent the engine from sucking in water as the machine sinks.

Workmen move one of the bells of the Old North Church in Boston Sunday. The bells, the oldest church bells in the United States, had been repaired and were returned to their place in the steeple of the church.

Historic bells to ring from Boston church

BOSTON (AP) — The nation's oldest set of bells — newly renovated — will sound once again at the historic Old North Church, where they were rung two centuries ago by a young Paul Revere.

The eight bells, cast in England in 1744 and installed in the church in 1745, were taken down in March so the frames and fittings could be repaired.

They will ring again Sept. 3 in honor of the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Paris, which ended the Revolutionary War. The bells rang for the original occasion, and their peal will kick off a nationwide bell-ringing celebration.

To the crack of muskets and the tweet of fifes, the bells were returned Sunday to the church steeple where the signal flashed that "the British are coming."

Marchers in tricorner hats and colonial costumes and a fife and drum corps joined a more contemporary U.S. Army band from Fort Devens and a shiny, fire-engine-red crane in a parade winding from the Museum of Science to the church in the North End.

The bell had been on exhibit at the museum while undergoing the repairs.

Hundreds of people jammed the narrow street in front of the Espiscopal church to watch the bells — the largest weighing 1,500 pounds — being raised to the belfry 160 feet high.

Revere, at age 15 in 1750, was one of the church's first bell ringers. The bells hung silent most of this century because of a lack of bell ringers until 1975 when a course at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology helped revive the practice.

It was from the church that the famous "one if by land, two if by sea" signal was sent on April 18, 1775, when Revere and William Dawes started their historic ride to warn the rebel militia that "the British are coming" as a prelude to the first battles of the Revolution at Lexington and Concord.

The cost of restoring the copper and tin bells comes to $350,000, officials say. The church has begun a $100,000 campaign to pay for part of the renovation, and members of the Associated General Contractors of Massachusetts have donated $250,000 in goods and services, association president Donald Moscone said.

U.S. authorities still want to talk with diplomat's son

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reagan administration officials say their attempts to talk with a Soviet diplomat's son who may want to defect has created a "very difficult" diplomatic standoff, but insist it's a question of human rights.

"I think that's a perfectly appropriate demand," United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick said Sunday of U.S. attempts to talk with 16-year-old Andrei Berezhkov about a letter he allegedly wrote to President Reagan seeking to stay in the United States.

Asked if too much was being made of the case, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said: "I don't think one makes too much out of the freedom and well-being of a person, and I think that's true of the sons of Soviet diplomats in the United States or of American diplomats anyplace else."

Attempts to interview the son of Soviet Embassy First Secretary Valentin Berezhkov have been rebuffed by Soviet officials, who last weekend said, "We regard this attempt of the American authorities as unprecedented and a gross violation of international law."

"We are waiting for permission of the State Department for the family to leave the country," an embassy official who refused to identify himself said Sunday.

"It is a very difficult situation," presidential counselor Edwin Meese III said Sunday. "It is a diplomatic situation, but it is also a very human situation...I think it is just one of those things that we are just following at the present time trying to see what the next move will be," Meese said.

Meese said officials want to determine the "real intentions" of the teen-ager, who reportedly sent Reagan a letter last week stating: "I hate my country and its rules and I love your country. I want to stay here."

On Sunday, FBI agents continued to watch vehicles entering and leaving the Soviet compound in Northwest Washington and at the suburban Bethesda, Md., apartment complex where the Berezhkov family lives, according to a U.S. official who spoke only on condition he not be further identified.

The U.S. official said, however, that the FBI stakeout was less obtrusive than on Saturday, when agents peered into the windows of automobiles.

"We have no power to go into the embassy property and interview him. I think if they try to move him out of the country, then we would see about what could be done," Meese said. "The right people are watching this and we just have to leave it in their hands."

Although the teen-ager's whereabouts have not been disclosed, Meese and Larry Speakes, deputy White House press secretary, said U.S. officials have accepted Soviet statements that young Berezhkov is still in the United States.

Meese, appearing on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley," was asked how long the stalemate could continue.

"It remains to be seen," he replied. "It is a delicate and sensitive situation, as you can imagine. We are trying to handle it. Our State Department, the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the other agencies are trying to handle it in the best way possible."

Speakes said the United States has been "perfectly legitimate" in its actions regarding the youth, whose father also serves as liaison to a Soviet think-tank, the Institute for the United States and Canada.

"We are continuing to pursue it with contacts with the Soviets," Speakes said aboard Air Force One as Reagan was flying to La Paz, Mexico, to meet with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid.

These anglers don't care about fortunate fish which got away

SEATTLE (AP) — Two anglers cast their lines into Puget Sound and pulled out a fortune — specially tagged salmon worth $500,000 apiece in an auto parts company's Million Dollar Fish Derby.

Larry Pease, 65, of Seattle, and Phil A. Reilly, 67, of Bainbridge Island each caught the valuable fish Sunday in the derby sponsored by Schuck's auto parts. They will split the $1 million prize.

Five tagged salmon had been released in Puget Sound for the 12-hour derby, the third year for the event.

Pease caught his 3-pound salmon a little more than an hour after the derby opened at 6 a.m., and Reilly caught his shortly after noon.

"My God, Mardi, it's got a green tag on it" Pease recalled telling his wife when he pulled the salmon from water near the Ballard area of Seattle. He is a retired Boeing engineer.

Reilly, a retired advertising executive, was fishing with his brother-in-law, Wally Reid, when he caught a 4-pound salmon near the Vashon Island ferry pier.

INTRODUCING THE CAR THAT WILL MAKE ALL CARS PERFORM BETTER.

AutoWeek called it "The finest quality car available." Car and Driver used the seldom-used words "magnificent," "lovely." "New levels of refinement," agrees Autocar.

Just what new car are they referring to? The BMW 318i. A sports sedan whose engineering is so technologically advanced, we fully expect it to inspire the next generation of "technological breakthroughs" in competitive models.

For a thorough evaluation of the sports sedan that will send the automotive community scurrying back to their drawing boards, contact us for a test drive of the BMW 318i.
