Corporate economists predict recession

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The nation's economy is likely to suffer a recession beginning sometime next year, brought on by soaring federal budget deficits, high interest rates and further deterioration in foreign trade, economists for major corporations predicted today.

The National Association of Business Economists said a survey of its members found basic agreement that the economy will move ahead at a moderately good clip this year with inflation remaining under control.

But the economists predicted that things would turn sour next year. A majority, 52 percent, expect the next recession will begin in 1986, with only 17 percent of those surveyed predicting that the current growth will last into 1987 or beyond.

These expectations were a good deal more pessimistic than the Reagan administration, which in its forecasts has predicted steady growth through 1990.

Huge federal budget deficits are cited most often by the economists as the main reason they believe the current recovery will be shorter than the average of 46 months.

Other problems the economists believed would short-circuit the recovery were high interest rates and the country's record trade deficits.

"It is clear that the basic problem is the budget deficit. That is the thing we have to change in order to improve the outlook for interest rates and the trade deficit."

— Ben Laden, business economist

"It is clear that the basic problem is the budget deficit. That is the thing we have to change in order to improve the outlook for interest rates and the trade deficit," said Ben Laden, president of the association and chief economist at the investment firm of T. Rowe Price Associates.

The economists forecast the budget deficit this year would hit a record $210 billion, declining only slightly to $200 billion in the 1986 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

"To fight the deficit, 63 percent of those polled support the concept of a freeze on government expenditures, but more than half doubt that it will be enacted," Laden said.

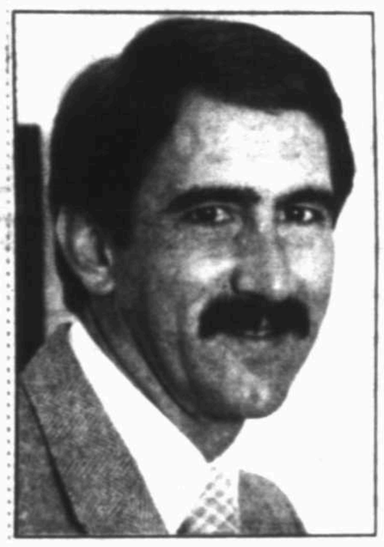

A smaller majority, 54 percent, voiced support for a tax increase to help trim the deficit, something President Reagan has vowed to oppose.

The business economists expressed support for the Reagan administration's proposal to simplify the tax code by eliminating various deductions while lowering tax rates.

A majority, 57 percent, said they favored the concept, but support dwindled when the economists were asked to endorse separately the various business and individual tax deductions that would be affected by the plan.

Only about one-fourth of the economists favored eliminating the investment tax credit and accelerated depreciation allowances, two big business tax breaks. About the same number supported doing away with personal deductions for state and local taxes and limiting charitable deductions. Limiting deductions for interest payments drew the most support — 49 percent.

United Way of Midland names executive director

Bob Smith

From Staff Reports

The United Way of Midland has appointed Bob Smith, associate general director of the Metropolitan YMCA in Midland, as its new executive director.

Smith replaces Robert Cornelius, who left in November to join a United Way in Lincoln, Neb.

"I feel really fantastic about it," said Smith as he began his new duties today.

"We're delighted to have him on board," said Thomas J. Madonna, 1985 campaign chairman. "This culminates a long search."

Smith's planning experience was a factor in his selection, according to United Way Vice President Louan Rogers.

"His experience at the YMCA is very transferable," she said. "He's been very successful, and will use those skills at the United Way."

Smith agrees that planning will be an important part of his new job.

"The United Way in Midland is in the midst of a transition (from being primarily concerned with raising funds) to a full-service United Way," he said. The United Way "will help plan for the future instead of just reacting year to year to the fund-raising needs."

Smith, 38, is a New Mexico native who has 15 years of experience with various YMCAs, spending the last five years in Midland. He graduated from the University of New Mexico in 1968 with a degree in health and physical education.

The YMCA experience has ably prepared him for the United Way, according to Smith.

"The YMCAs have been almost like the Sears Roebuck of service agencies," he said. Like the United Way with its 22 associated agencies, "The YMCA has its fingers in everything."

'Sexual blackmail' alleged in Norwegian espionage trial

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

OSLO, Norway — The chief prosecutor said today that former diplomat Arne Treholt told of being sexually blackmailed into providing nuclear and other military secrets from Norway and NATO to agents of the Soviet Union.

Treholt told interrogators he attended a private party in Moscow in 1975 which turned into an "orgy," prosecutor Lars Qvigstad said, and later he was confronted with photographs by a Soviet agent who proceeded to quiz him on his access to secret material.

In his first presentation in the opening sessions of Treholt's espionage trial today, Qvigstad outlined years of a long series of contacts after 1975 between Treholt and Soviet agents.

He said many details of Treholt's work for the Soviet Union were too sensitive to be disclosed in open court. Treholt was accused of providing the Soviets with a staggering array of secrets, including NATO nuclear strategies.

Qvigstad described exchanges of documents in Oslo and New York restaurants, in the delegates' lounge and library of the United Nations, and in a jogging park near the Norwegian capital.

Treholt, a former Foreign Ministry spokesman, had earlier in the day stood in the courtroom dock and denied he violated Norwegian security laws.

■ Trial highlights NATO status — Page 2A

His denial constituted a plea of innocent to the charges.

Treholt was accused of giving Soviet agents details of Norwegian and North Atlantic Treaty Organization air defense and warning systems, as well as reports on the defense of Norway's remote border with the Soviet Union.

He also was accused of revealing Western intelligence on the Middle East and Afghanistan to Iraq and the Soviets, and disclosing contents of talks with Henry Kissinger, Helmut Schmidt and other ranking Western officials in a 10-year espionage career.

The charges, made public for the first time today, were included in a 15-page list read at the opening of Treholt's trial in Oslo.

The personable and polished Treholt, 42, once considered one of the country's fastest rising diplomats, denied the charges. "I never revealed anything referring to the security of the country in the points referred to in the indictment," he said, standing calmly at an oaken witness dock, holding the court microphone in one hand.

The former diplomat stood calmly for 30 minutes while the charges against him were read. While he waited, he swayed back and forth, crossing his arms or putting his hands in the pockets of his three-piece gray suit.

Treholt has been in custody since his arrest at Oslo's airport on Jan. 20, 1984. Police said he was preparing to leave Norway with 66 NATO and other documents he planned to give Soviet agents in Vienna.

Treholt was charged with violations of both civilian and military security laws which could bring up him up to 20 years in prison.

Norwegian newspapers have quoted him as saying in a letter smuggled out of prison that he was not a spy but an "unorthodox diplomat" trying to improve Soviet understanding of Norwegian national interests.

Among the items Treholt was charged with passing to either the Soviet Union or Iraq were:

–NATO strategies regarding the use of nuclear weapons, including the point at which they might be introduced into an East-West military conflict.

–Details of Norway's land, sea and air defenses in the Arctic Norwegian-Soviet border area, which constitutes NATO's northern flank.

–Secret information on Norway's arrangements to pre-positioned military supplies for use by NATO if they had to be called for help in an international crisis.

–Details of the organization and operation of Norwegian military intelligence and its targets.

Mexican police may have aided in escape of kidnapping suspect

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mexican police aided the escape of an alleged marijuana grower believed to have been involved in the kidnapping of a U.S. drug agent, the head of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration charges.

DEA Administrator Francis M. Mullen Jr. said Sunday that Rafael Caro-Quintero, "one of those whom we suspect, one of those traffickers involved in the kidnapping," boarded a plane in Guadalajara late Saturday despite attempts by Mexican judicial police to detain him with a warrant.

"We have now learned he had as protection members of the (Mexican) Department of Federal Security," Mullen said, referring to the Mexican equivalent of the FBI. "We have an ... element of the police letting this individual go. ..."

Mullen, appearing on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley," said Caro-Quintero, who was believed to have left Mexico, was "responsible for the plantation where 3,500 tons of marijuana were located in Mexico. This concerns us, and we wonder why he was allowed to leave."

Caro-Quintero was wanted for questioning regarding Enrique Camarena Salazar, a DEA agent abducted at gunpoint Feb. 7 in Guadalajara. The lack of arrests in the case has caused friction between U.S. and Mexican officials.

In a case similar to Caro-Quintero, DEA agents lost track of alleged cocaine kingpin Juan Matta Ballesteros this month in Mexico City when a Mexican police official delayed his arrest, Newsweek reported Sunday.

The DEA notified Mexican officials of the whereabouts of Ballesteros on Feb. 14, but two days later, Manuel Ibarra Herrera, head of the Mexican Federal Judicial Police, personally delayed the raid for nearly a day, the magazine said.

By the time the police arrived, Matta had vanished, Newsweek said.

A DEA spokesman, Robert Feldkamp, could not be reached immediately for comment on the Newsweek report. Telephone calls to Feldkamp's home went unanswered Sunday evening.

Mullen continued his criticism of Mexican law enforcement officials for their response to the kidnapping of Camarena, whose fate remains unknown.

"I believe they're actively searching for him now," Mullen said. "I do not believe that they were doing so at the outset. ... It's my belief that this case should have been solved and should be solved."

Mullen said the slow start of the investigation by Mexican authorities gave major suspects "adequate time to depart the area." He also criticized a Mexican judicial order that barred police from questioning about 25 drug kingpins.

Asked whether he thought there was a coverup in the case, he replied: "I won't go so far as to say coverup, but there may be some complicity at the lower levels of law enforcement."

Mullen defended the car-by-car searches U.S. Customs officials began at border crossings following the kidnapping.

Hatfield meets with nation's governors

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — The Republican chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee told the nation's governors today that the Pentagon must be included in any budget freeze proposal.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon said the budget offered by President Reagan 'does not deal with the problem."

Hatfield met with the governors shortly before the state executives were scheduled to meet with Reagan at the White House.

"We have to look at what happens if we exempt the military from this kind of freeze." said Hatfield. " ... we aren't going to come close" to the savings that are needed to substantially reduce record budget deficits.

Hatfield had a largely sympathetic audience. The executive committee of the National Governors Association voted Sunday to endorse a budget freeze that would include military spending.

The same resolution also contained a victory for Reagan as the governors voted for the first time to support a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution.

In the nation's capital for their annual three-day winter meeting, the governors' agenda today included a White House session with the president.

In advance of today's meeting, Reagan hosted a formal White House dinner for the governors Sunday night and told them: "Today the people no longer look to Washington as the Emerald City with magic solutions to every problem.

"I can tell you, it's more like the Twilight Zone than the Land of Oz," Reagan said.

Gov. John Carlin, a Kansas Democrat who is chairman of the National Governors Association, told reporters he doubted defense spending would be discussed during the White House meeting.

He said the meeting would concentrate on the economic problems facing farmers and administration proposals to cut the federal share of Medicaid as well as administration claims that the states have financial surpluses and don't need federal help.

The executive committee of the governors association approved on Sunday a proposal to support a constitutional amendment that would require a balanced federal budget and that also would give the president authority to veto individual items in appropriations bills.

Reagan repeatedly has called for approval of both constitutional changes as essential parts of what he describes as an effort to end "50 years of government living beyond its means."

Before it can become official policy of the governors association, the proposal endorsing the constitutional changes must be approved on Tuesday by the full group, which is dominated by the Democrats who hold 34 of the 50 state governorships.

The same resolution that supported the balanced budget amendment also called for a spending freeze during the next fiscal year in which the Pentagon would be restricted the same as most domestic programs.

Noting that defense spending has doubled since Reagan took office, the resolution said that "some slowing of this rate is appropriate to maintain cost effectiveness in weapons systems and other procurement."

Included in the freeze would be cost of living adjustments for federal programs including Social Security. As originally drafted, the proposal exempted Social Security, but the executive committee voted to drop that exemption.

In another potential conflict with the president, the resolution also cited the possibility that after the budget has been cut, a tax increase still might be needed to further reduce defecits.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., met with the governors on Sunday and told them "if you're hopeful for new taxes, don't be too hopeful."

Gov. George Sinner of North Dakota, a newly elected Democrat, called the president's refusal to consider taxes as a means of helping reduce budget deficits "a hell of a way to run a railroad. ... We have to say loud and clear, Mr. President, you're dead wrong."

White, Nigh say 'flat tax' could shut down drillers

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Texas Gov. Mark White and Oklahoma Gov. George Nigh said today that a proposed "flat tax" would put independent oil drillers out of business and return the country to the shortages and long gasoline lines of 12 years ago.

The Treasury Department has proposed an across-the-board reduction in the tax rate coupled with elimination of many deductions.

White and Nigh, both Democrats, said elimination of deductions for capitol investment would result in a dramatic reduction in oil and gas exploration and drilling by domestic companies.

Incentives have brought the country away from foreign oil dependence and built up reserves, White said.

"If you change that policy, what happens? Immediately you lose those reserves that are being built up through drilling activity and you also have gas lines, you'll also have shortages of natural gas during high peak use when you have cold temperatures in the Northeast," White said.

"And then we will be back saying 'What happened? What happened?' Well, I'll tell you what happened. It was that day they announced this plan. That's when it began."

Nigh said the two would try to ask President Reagan what his position is when the governors attending a national conference here go to the White House today.

"We need to know what the president's position is," Nigh said. "Anybody on my staff who advocated something and then said it wasn't necessarily the chief executive's position wouldn't be on my staff."

Both said even proposing the "flat tax" has already had a "chilling effect" on the oil industry.

At Sunday's meeting of southern governors, White criticized the military for not devoting more resources to apprehension of drug smugglers.

Meese finally sworn in after year-long struggle

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Edwin Meese III was sworn in today as attorney general, his year-long struggle to become the nation's chief law enforcement officer finally at an end.

President Reagan and Meese's wife, Ursula, attended the brief, informal ceremony at the White House, according to White House assistant press secretary Robin Gray. Vice President George Bush, Reagan chief of staff Donald T. Regan and other staff members also attended, Gray said.

The oath of office was administered in the Oval Office by Daniel J. Marks, the deputy executive clerk of the White House. Reporters were not permitted to attend.

Following his approval by the Senate on Saturday, Meese said he bears no grudges over his long struggle for the Cabinet post and is promising "fair, compassionate and forward-looking" policies at the Justice Department.

Meese, 53, said he intends to work with members of Congress "in a spirit of reasonableness and common effort to secure the best system of justice for the country."

Accompanied by his wife and daughter Dana, 18, Meese beamed jubilantly Saturday as he talked with reporters at the White House following his confirmation by the Senate on a 63-31 vote.

His enthusiasm for the new job was not diminished by the fact it took him 13 months to get there, Meese said, declaring:

"I am not bitter at all. I think politics played a very big part in what took place, but that's all behind us now. Right now, I'm just glad it's over."

A ceremonial swearing-in, with Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren E. Burger likely to preside, will be conducted within a couple weeks, aide Bruce Chapman said. He added that Meese "will be in between this place (the White House) and that place (the Justice Department) in the meantime."

Meese becomes the nation's 75th attorney general, succeeding William French Smith, 67, who held the post during Reagan's first term and who has returned to his private law practice in Los Angeles.

Meese said Reagan, who was spending the weekend at his Camp David, Md., mountaintop retreat, "congratulated me and said it had been a long time and appreciated the fact that we had held up."

Meese surmounted allegations that he helped obtain government jobs for friends who loaned him money and that he improperly accepted a promotion to colonel in the Army Reserve and a $10,000 payment from a presidential transition fund.

"I think that a lot of people had questions," he said. "We answered all those questions."

Meese will find many items awaiting his attention at the department, including top staff appointments and decisions on more than a hundred vacant federal judgeships.

He also will have to decide whether the department will seek to reopen dozens of affirmative-action court cases in view of a Supreme Court decision last June, which the Reagan administration has interpreted as placing strict limitations on the ability of judges to impose mandatory hiring quotas.

The new attorney general must also select a successor for J. Paul McGrath, assistant attorney general in charge of the Antitrust Division, who is leaving.

The way was cleared for Meese's confirmation Saturday when Farm Belt Democrats negotiated a compromise with the Senate Republican leadership on how to proceed with emergency farm legislation, ending a four-day filibuster.

All the votes against Meese came from Democrats, although 15 members of that party voted for him.

The 31 negative votes were the most cast against a Cabinet nominee in 14 years.

DEA reported tightening security

BOSTON (AP) — Drug Enforcement Agency officials tightened security about the time of reports that a Colombian hit squad was after federal investigators, a spokesman has told a local radio station.

Robert Feldkamp, DEA spokesman in Washington, D.C., said Sunday on radio station WEEI that the agency tightened security at all its installations several weeks ago in response to threats.

"We have, as we've said the last several weeks, a good intelligence, some of it originating in Colombia and some of it confirmed by sources in the United States, that such threats are viable given the recent cocaine bust in the Boston area," he said.

But Feldkamp would not elaborate.

The Boston Herald reported that the main target of the assassins was Robert Stutman, special agent in charge of DEA operations in New England.

Stutman has refused to comment on the reports, but the newspaper said he was flanked by bodyguards when he spoke to a meeting last week.

Jack Cloherty, spokesman for the FBI's Boston office, said the DEA has not notified him of any hit squads operating in the region. He said the FBI is not providing additional protection for DEA agents.

"We do not get involved, sad to say, until after the fact," he said.

WCVB-TV, citing unidentified "highly placed sources," said Friday that the hit squad arrived in Boston two weeks ago, financed by South American cocaine barons seeking revenge for the agency's intense efforts to stem the drug trade.

Also preparing him for his new position has been his wife Sue's experience as a social worker, Smith said.

Smith is looking forward to working with the United Way of Midland's volunteer leadership, which he said "is the best I've ever seen anywhere."

In Vietnam or New York City, Westmoreland still general

By MARVIN LEIBSTONE
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — It was 1965 and General Westmoreland, looking sharp and crisp in his fatigues, asked, "Do they understand our tactics?" We were discussing South Vietnamese troops.

I was an infantry officer, beat up from operations in the Central Highlands, recuperating at Quang Trung Training Center.

Westmoreland was my commander. He visited his officers and men regularly. We stood in a clearing watching South Vietnamese recruits crawl under barbed wire.

Senior officers feared a lieutenant might say that things were not well, so they stood close to us. I told Westmoreland the Vietnamese were learning.

The night before, there were desertions and Viet Cong penetrations because some of the soldiers fell asleep.

One did not bring such matters before generals unless they asked. We exchanged salutes and he departed for a helicopter.

The event was among several encounters with Westmoreland. The last was in New York City, two hours after his trial against CBS ended.

We met on Fifth Avenue, near 50th Street and walked east. I congratulated him on his decision to end the trial. I asked if he was dissatisfied with the outcome.

"I am not dissatisfied," he said. Then he characterized the other side, speaking slowly and with assurance. "I never believed that the press was, in general, malicious toward me or should be restrained from writing how they see things."

His style and bearing were still a general's, controlled without being brittle, the pace brisk. He looked tired but not wasted. There were no signs of defeat in the eyes.

Defeat neutralizes or draws the eyes inward; they see yet they do not. Westmoreland's eyes were piercing. The trial was over but the man was engaged, sorting it out, drawing conclusions.

Westmoreland on the subject of intent: "I wanted it known that I served my country loyally, while commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam."

On whether his point was made during the 18-week trial: "I believe that my reputation is no longer tarnished as a result of my case against CBS."

What are we to make of this general? On the plus side, taking CBS or any institution on in court, takes courage. Westmoreland surely has that. Bowing out the way he did showed that he is also a person of dignity.

Was he seeking revenge? "I believe that the media is capable of policing its own act," he told me. Those are not spiteful words.

But generals and the conduct of wars need policing, too.

During the Vietnam war, General Westmoreland was observed as a man driving others to do the undesirable. He used the cliches of generalship to inspire the troops.

For example, I recall his welcome-to-the-war speech to U.S. advisers in 1964.

Those of us about to go to the battlefield listened to him compare our role in Vietnam to that of the French general, the marquis d' Lafayette, who rushed from Europe to aid George Washington. Because of our participation, Westmoreland said, democracy would survive in Southeast Asia.

That evening, officers ending their tour told us horror stories of Vietnamese corruption and the insensitivity of the leadership. One said, "The nearest thing resembling democracy in Asia is Japan, over 1,000 miles away."

I saw Westmoreland two months later at Tan Canh, near Dakto airfield.

We were back from search and destroy missions. The general arrived to commend our actions. I stood beside an American colonel and another lieutenant. Westmoreland spoke eloquently, citing our courage and integrity.

Not long before, the colonel and I were in a helicopter, returning from a firefight. Some of us had carried the wounded on board under Viet Cong fire. The colonel, however, waited in safety for his bodyguards to escort him to the helicopter.

In the Huey, the colonel said he would put me in for a bronze star for valor if I would write something suggesting he also deserved to win a medal.

I did not respond and the matter was forgotten. I watched Westmoreland shake the colonel's hand, pin a combat infantryman's badge on his chest, then salute him.

Westmoreland visited Pleiku weeks later and spoke to U.S. personnel in II Corps. It was the Lafayette speech again. After, he spent time with the Vietnamese II Corps commander and senior advisers, then flew to Saigon.

He emphasized body counts, my boss told me. From then on, Vietnamese commanders reported increases in Viet Cong dead. Westmoreland wanted some sort of proof, so Vietnamese officers began cutting ears from the dead.

Some cut the right and left ear from a single body and counted them as two kills.

It was about then America's involvement in Vietnam succumbed to the belief that war could be quantified, that all we needed was to count the right beans. How many hits? How many dead? How many on our side, how many on theirs? Westmoreland, fascinated with ex-Defense Secretary Robert McNamara's computerized management, became a bean counter. Then everybody counted.

Numbers meant you won or lost. It was best to have higher numbers on our side, lower figures on theirs. There is a strong case that Westmoreland's emphasis on data and reporting caused officers to lean toward the less believable yet possible, if such would be evidence of success.

More than one battalion commander has admitted to that error. It is even possible that Westmoreland himself leaned that way.

That two decades later Westmoreland landed across bad numbers as if on pungi stakes is no irony.

All this demonstrates that gaps existed in Vietnam between how Westmoreland preferred reality, the way it was reported and the way things really were.

By no means, however, is CBS made pure by Westmoreland's actions in Vietnam. The "Sixty Minutes" piece may or not have been a case of "selective disclosure" intended to hang a man but it could be taken that way and has earned the tag of sloppy reporting.

Vietnam spoiled retirement for Westmoreland. "Sixty Minutes" must have offended his sense of self and career. A John F. Kennedy favorite, Gen. Maxwell Taylor, had pushed his career along and President Johnson had him thinking of post-war glory. Westmoreland probably thought he might be president. He did talk about running for the Senate.

Before agreeing to be interviewed by Mike Wallace, Westmoreland should have asked enough fellow officers a question about American media similar to the one he asked me in Vietnam years earlier, "Do they understand our tactics?"

Westmoreland's personal and professional world are the same. Few can go from high school to a military academy and more than 30 years' service without that happening. Some corners of that world require he maintain a particular image, even if made of plaster.

He could not stand by and do nothing, once the CBS program was aired.

One can't dislike the general for shouldering the responsibilities of complex command, or for fighting the ghosts and windmills of his later life, anymore than one could hate Don Quixote. In the end, we do not exile such men.

NATO status has part in Norwegian spy story

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The espionage trial of Arne Treholt, a former diplomat accused of giving secrets to the Soviets, draws attention to Norway's special status as a NATO member bordering Russia.

To answer Soviet objections to its membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Norway has vowed it would never permit foreign military bases on its territory as long as it was not under attack or the threat of attack.

Norway, however, lets its allies keep weapons, ammunition and other supplies ready for allied troops and ships, just in case. But such arsenals are not permitted near its Soviet border, a remote and little-visited 118-miles strip of land that hooks over the top of Finland, well above the Arctic Circle.

The Norwegian government also bans nuclear weapons from its territory in peacetime but claims solid public support for its NATO membership.

The U.S. Marine Corps is permitted to store store howitzers, jeeps, trucks, fuel, ammunition and other supplies in central Norway.

North of Norway's border area is the strategic Barents Sea, which Soviet ships sail on their way to the Atlantic.

An unarmed Soviet target missile that apparently went astray during exercises in the Barents Sea in December, flew over Norway's remote frontier before crashing into a frozen Finnish lake.

Treholt's alleged espionage activities for the Soviet Union include a period in 1974-1976 when he was an aide in sea law talks between the Soviet Union and Norway. The talks involved the sensitive northern reaches and Barents Sea.

Norway was occupied by Nazi Germany during World War II. After the war, it attempted to organize a defense arrangement among the Scandinavian countries.In 1949, after the effort failed, Norway joined NATO, despite warnings from the Soviet Unon.

Turkey, which belongs to NATO, also has a border with the Soviet Union.

West Germany borders two Soviet bloc nations, East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Police step up patrols at clinics after bombing

MESQUITE (AP) — Police have no suspects in the arson blaze that caused more than $1 million damage to an abortion clinic in this Dallas suburb.

But in the wake of that fire, Dallas police are stepping up patrols at local abortion clinics in an effort to avoid possible violence.

Officials of Dallas-area abortion clinics said they fear more violence at their centers because people arrested for attacking clinics are often repeat violators.

"All those arrested have been charged with multiple acts," said Glenna Halvorson-Boyd, president of the National Abortion Federation and an administrator at Dallas' Fairmont Center.

"There hasn't been any isolated attacks," she said. "You must predict further violence."

Deputy Police Chief George Reed said authorities were also concerned about more violence and had ordered increased patrols of Dallas clinics.

"When there's been one, there's always a possibility of another," he said.

Police said Sunday they have no suspects in the blaze that destroyed the Women's Clinic of Mesquite Inc. and nine other offices in the one-story building in this Dallas suburb.

Arson was ruled in the multimillion-dollar blaze, which was reported at about 10:30 p.m. Friday. Investigators say they believe the fire was the work of an anti-abortionist.

Officials said the clinic had received several threatening phone calls in recent months, and anti-abortion groups regularly picketed against abortion outside in the last seven or eight months.

About 250 protesters demonstrated again Saturday near the rubble.

"A window was broken out in the clinic, and a flammable liquid was either thrown through the window or spread by someone who climbed through the window," said Cummins Beaty, assistant special agent in charge of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

People on both sides of the abortion issue condemned the violence at the Mesquite clinic.

"Our organization has made its stance on that type of activity abundantly clear, and that is we just absolutely condemn it," said Bill Price, president of Texas Right to Life of Dallas.

The fire was the first act of violence reported against an abortion clinic since Jan. 1, when a Washington, D.C., facility was bombed.

"We don't know of any specific threats against this particular one," said fire Capt. Robert Lovell said of the Mesquite clinic. "But a lot of these are chains and there have been threats nationwide against them."

The ATF began investigating the fire as part of its ongoing inquiry of bombings, fires and threats against abortion clinics nationwide.

'Cobra kisser' teaches snake safety

OGLESBY (AP) — Butch Heffelfinger wears a permanent scar from a cobra bite he got during a snake show several years ago, but that hasn't swayed him from kissing cobras on the head and lecturing about snake safety.

Heffelfinger and his snakes are participating in the annual Oglesby Rattlesnake Hunt and Flea Market.

"I was like 99 percent of the general public," said Heffelfinger Saturday after kissing another cobra at the rattlesnake hunt. "I was totally ignorant about snakes. It was like, 'If you see a snake, kill it.' That's wrong."

At all demonstrations by Heffelfinger and his 10-year-old club, the aim is not only to amaze crowds but to chisel away at myths about snakes.

One of the things they tell their audiences is that in the majority of biting cases, it's not the snake's fault.

"We don't hold it against the snake," said Allen Strahan, spokesman for the Heart of Texas Snake Handlers, who participated in the annual program. "It's not their fault that we get bitten."

All but two of the handlers in the club have been bitten by poisonous snakes, officials said. One veteran handler was bitten last year by a rattlesnake. One of his fingers was amputed and he lost the use of two others.

Most cobra bite victims don't survive the ordeal, officials said.

Central Texas residents have been hunting rattlesnakes in this community near Waco for the past three weeks to enter in the show, sponsored by the Oglesby Lion's Club.

More than 200 snakes — including a record 68-incher — were brought to the Senior Citizens' Center for the show Saturday morning. But most of the snakes in the pit were brought by the handlers.

"We don't hold it against the snake. It's not their fault that we get bitten."

One handler sat in the pit, festooned with rattlesnakes by his colleagues.

Three of the handlers were recently invited to perform on a nationally televised program in Italy about snakebite treatment and fear of snakes.

Border returning to normal after relaxation of searches

HOUSTON (AP) — Agents along the U.S.-Mexico border say things should return to normal by tonight after the relaxation of vehicle searches that bogged down traffic for the last two weeks and angered Mexican officials.

The search of cars entering the United States from Mexico began Feb. 15 after a U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency official was allegedly kidnapped at gunpoint in Guadalajara, Mexico.

American officials said they hoped the searches would turn up clues to the disappearance of Enrique Camarena Salazar.

Mexican officials complained that the huge traffic jams created by the searches cut the number of tourists visiting the Mexican border towns and caused businesses to sustain heavy financial losses.

Last week, Mexico's ambassador to the United States, Jorge Espinosa de los Reyes, delivered a note to U.S. officials expressing "deep concern" by the Mexican government over the inspections.

Charles Conroy, public affairs director for the customs region that includes Texas, New Mexico and Arizona, said Sunday that operations along the entire 1,760-mile U.S.-Mexico border should return to normal by tonight.

"The U.S. Customs Service will begin returning gradually to a more normal operation (Sunday)" Conroy said. "We will still be keeping alert for information on the missing DEA agent."

Conroy said orders to relax the searches came from customs headquarters in Washington early Sunday morning.

West Texas town readies for vote on alcohol sales

SILVERTON (AP) — When the work day is done in Silverton these days, farmers and merchants often meet at Jerry's malt shop to drink coffee and talk about booze.

Residents are discussing whether or not the town should go wet in the first election on alcohol sales since the 1930s.

Although there are several clubs in the area that sell alcohol by the drink, the March 5 vote in Precinct 1 of Briscoe County will ask voters whether or not packaged alcoholic beverages should be sold for off-premises consumption.

"I think it will be a horse race," one farmer who supports the measure said.

The election was called by the Briscoe County Commission after a petition containing 242 names was presented earlier this month — the percentage of active registered voters required by the state election code.

"Nazareth gets the money, Tulia gets the cans, and Silverton gets the drunks," said one supporter.

Youth goes on trial in mail carrier's murder

NEW BRAUNFELS (AP) — An 18-year-old youth, whose parents were jailed for several months after refusing to cooperate in a grand jury investigation, is expected to go on trial today on charges he killed a female postal carrier.

David Port is charged with murder in the June 7, 1984, shooting death of Debora Sue Schatz.

Ms. Schatz, 23, disappeared while delivering mail in the affluent Houston neighborhood where Port lived with his parents. Her body was found two days later in a remote area northwest of Houston.

Port, if convicted, faces up to life in prison.

Mail, bloodstains, bullet holes and a collection of weapons were found in the Port home after Ms. Schatz's body was found, investigators said.

Odette Port, the defendant's stepmother, was the first to arrive home after the slaying, authorities said. Port's father, Bernard Port, turned over to police a .22-caliber pistol he found in his son's room, police said.

The couple were jailed after repeatedly refusing to testify before a grand jury investigating the slaying. Their son, in the meantime, was freed on $20,000 bond shortly after his arrest.

After two months in jail, Bernard Port finally agreed to testify and was released. Mrs. Port spent four-and-one-half months in jail. She was released Jan. 30.

The elder Ports were never accused of any wrongdoing in Ms. Schatz's death.

Fear of AIDS more widespread than AIDS itself

HOUSTON (AP) — Only 5 to 10 percent of people exposed to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome actually contract the disease, said a researcher for the federal Centers for Disease Control.

The public's fear of AIDS is actually more prevalent than the disease itself, said Dr. James W. Curran, director of the federal center's infectious diseases division in Atlanta.

The Centers for Disease Control defines AIDS as a breakdown in the body's immune system, which fights germs and parasites that can cause infections. Curran said most AIDS patients die within three years of contracting the disease.

AIDS is fairly uncommon and occurs in 1.4 of every 100,000 people, Curran told physcians and health care experts at an AIDS symposium here Saturday..

He said researchers believe AIDS is caused by a virus called the T-cell lymphotrophic Type III, but said only 5 to 10 percent of people exposed to the virus contract the disease.

"We know now that this virus is more common than AIDS itself," Curran said.

Dr. Guy Newell, chairman of the cancer prevention department at M.D. Anderson Hospital in Houston, agreed with Curran that AIDS is not easily transmitted from one person to another.

"There is no evidence that it is passed through casual contact," Newell said.

Curran said 8,500 cases of AIDs have been reported in the United States so far, and 4,100 of those patients have died. Another 2,000 cases have probably been diagnosed but not reported, he said.

Curran said AIDS is mostly likely to strike homosexual and bisexual men. Some studies show the disease occurs in 200 of every 100,000 men in these high risk groups and most AIDS patients are in their 20s and 30s, he said.

"That is twice as high as the heart attack death rate for men in this age group," Curran said.

Curran said almost 72 percent of AIDS cases in the United States and 96 percent of the Houston cases occur in homosexual or bisexual men. Seventeen percent of U.S. cases occur in people who take drugs intravenously.

People who do not belong to these high risk groups have only a "negligible" chance of contracting the disease, he said.

Suspect confesses to plotting murder

NATION

SAN FRANCISCO – A suspect in the murder of journalist Henry Liu has told a U.S. investigator that he was a Taiwanese spy and that he plotted the killing with top Taiwanese intelligence officials, The Hearst Newspapers have learned.

Chen Chi-li, who the FBI says is chief of a Taiwanese crime syndicate, admitted to investigators last month that he repeatedly discussed the plot with Vice Admiral Wang Hsi-ling, head of the Taiwanese Defense Ministry's Intelligence Bureau, according to U.S. officials.

Investigators involved with the Liu case would only talk with The Hearst Newspapers if their names were not used.

Rumors that Chen worked with Taiwanese intelligence officials o plot the murder have laced the case for months. This is the first time U.S. officials have confirmed that Chen named the agents as co-conspirators.

Wang was placed under military arrest in Taipei in January for possible involvement in the Liu killing. He is the former chief of Taiwan's spy operations in the United States and has been a long-time personal aide to the family of President Chiang Ching-kuo, according to a U.S. government expert on China.

Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, said that if the Taiwan government was indeed involved in Liu's murder, as Chen's statement indicates, it could hold "explosive ramifications" for U.S.-Taiwan relations. They include possible cuts in U.S. arms sales to Taiwan or reducing the number of unofficial Taiwan representatives allowed in the United States.

"It's extraordinary, the possibility that a foreign government may have sanctioned the murder of an American citizen," said Leach. Leach is a member of the subcommittee on Asian and Pacific affairs, which held hearings this month on the killing.

Jeff Yao of the Coordination Council for North American Affairs, which unofficially represents Taiwan here, declined comment.

David Dean, a spokesman for the American Institute in Taiwan, the United States' informal representative to Taiwan, also denied comment. (Formal diplomatic ties between the two countries were severed in 1979 when the United States recognized China.)

Liu, 52, a naturalized-Chinese investigative journalist who wrote critically of the Taiwan regime, was shot to death Oct. 15 in his Daly City, Calif., garage.

The FBI and Daly City police in a November press conference named four Taiwanese men as suspects. The FBI said they are members of the Bamboo Gang, a 10,000- to 40,000-member syndicate that operates gambling, extortion and prostitution rings in Taiwan and to a limited extent in the United States.

One suspected gunman, Tung Kuei-sen, 32, is reported to be in the Philippines. David Yu, 28, a San Gabriel, Calif., businessman, was arrested in November on suspicion of being an accomplice but was released for insufficient evidence.

San Mateo County, Calif., murder warrants have been issued for the other two suspects: Chen, 40, believed to be the "mastermind," and Wu Tun, 38, the other alleged gunman.

Chen and Wu were arrested in Taiwan in November during a crack down on street gangs. They confessed their role in the killing to U.S. investigators who later interviewed them in Taiwan, where they remain in custody.

Taiwan authorities in January placed Adm. Wang and two of his deputies, Chen Hu-men and Hu Yi min, under military arrest for possible involvement in the case. Taiwan has denied that Liu's murder was an official act.

Wang in the late 1970s was Taiwan's top military representative in Washington and head of his country's extensive intelligence network here, according to a federal source. He was privately blamed by U.S. officials for obtaining and leaking secret U.S. military plans in 1979, the Washington Post has reported.

The FBI and Daly City police still are investigating the case. U.S. sources close to the Liu case have confirmed information garnered from interviews and from Chinese-language newspaper reports. They confirm the following account: Chen told U.S. investigators that his relationship with the Taiwanese intelligence community began as early as 1981. That was when Taiwan intelligence officials recruited Chen and his gang to gather information on the Taiwan independence movement, various groups that oppose the government.

In July 1984, Adm. Wang, chief of the Defense Ministry's Intelligence Bureau, met Chen at a party at the home of a well-known Taiwanese movie director. The admiral asked Chen to use the Bamboo Gang to spy on communist Chinese activities in the United States and Hong Kong, where the gang has extensive contacts.

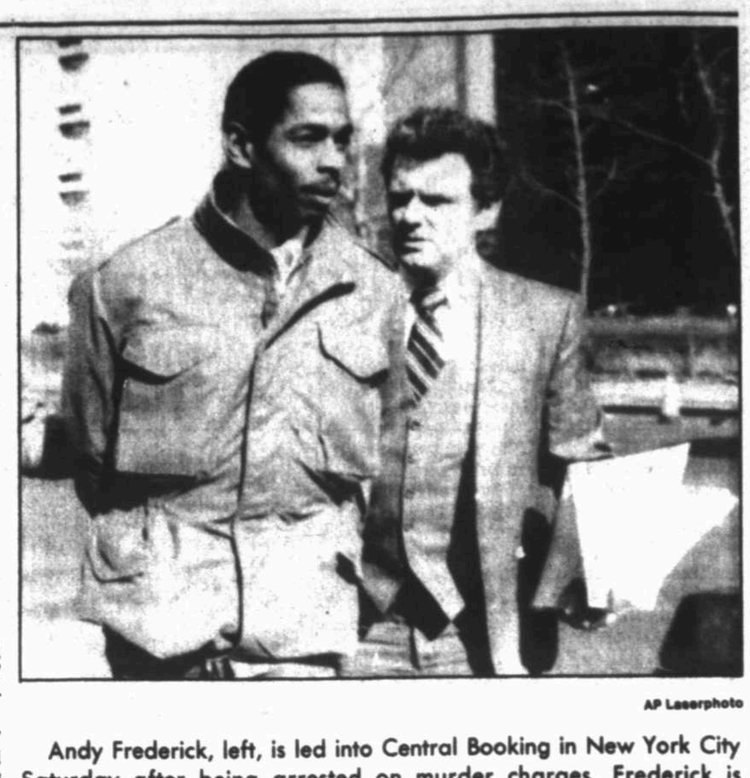

Chen agreed. He received special training in codes and communications from Taiwan intelligence agents.

Chen said he and the admiral planned Liu's murder in a series of meetings between July and September, according to one U.S. official.

Taiwanese officials privately admitted that Chen and the admiral met at parties and that Chen was asked to spy on communist China, a source said. However, the Taiwanese authorities deny that the admiral told Chen to kill the writer, the source said.

Chen told U.S. investigators that he became involved in the plot against Liu out of patriotic duty and said he believed that because Liu wrote critically about Taiwan and its president, he hurt the entire island nation.

Chen arrived in Los Angeles on Sept. 14. The U.S. officials said he and the other suspects in early October traveled to San Francisco where they rented a room and a car.

Andy Frederick, left, is led into Central Booking in New York City Saturday after being arrested on murder charges. Frederick is suspected of fatally stabbing one of two men he tried to stop from stealing candy bars from a subway newsstand.

Goetz defends man accused in slaying

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City is "sick from one end to another" and residents should be armed, subway gunman Bernhard Goetz said after he attended the arraignment of a man charged with the fatal stabbing of a man authorities say tried to steal candy from a subway vendor.

Goetz said he showed up Sunday at the arraignment of Andrew Frederick because he believed Frederick acted in self defense after he was attacked with a bottle.

"I told him the people were on his side ... everything's going to be all right," Goetz said later in a television interview.

Frederick, 24, of New York City, is charged with second-degree murder. He was released Sunday on his own recognizance.

Frederick intervened Thursday when two men tried to steal candy from a subway newsstand, police said. He reportedly told the men to quit stealing, got into a dispute and stabbed Felix McCord, 28, after McCord struck him with a bottle, police said.

Goetz, who Dec. 22 shot four black youths in a subway, said in an interview Sunday night with WNEW-TV that he went up to Frederick after the hearing and told him that "I knew what he was going through."

"I think the public should relate to this man," Goetz said. "I think there should be more of this."

Goetz claimed the four youths accosted him and asked for $5. He shot two of them in the back, and one remains in a coma and paralyzed. He was indicted on weapons violations, but not with assault or attempted murder.

Goetz, who has received considerable public support, said he doubted a grand jury would indict Frederick, "but if they do, I don't see how a jury possibly can convict him."

The Congress of Racial Equality retained attorneys for Frederick.CORE spokesman Roy Innis said he was "certain the grand jury will be as sympathetic with Andy Frederick as they have been with Bernhard Goetz."

In an interview published in today's Daily News, Goetz said, "The city has a real problem. The city is sick from one end to another. There are a lot of real moral and social problems here."

He echoed an Innis recommendation that more citizens be allowed to carry guns and be trained in their use.

"The training is very important," Goetz said. "You've got to teach them all the aspects of handling a gun, not just how to shoot it.

"You've got to teach them how to get the gun out quickly. You can't have a guy fumbling with a weapon, trying to get it out of his pocket and dropping it. Crimes happen too quickly for that."

Goetz and Innis tried Sunday to attend a wake for a taxi driver shot to death in his cab, but were turned away at the funeral home door.

W.F. Smith leaves Washington behind

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — To the end, William French Smith, a patrician who quietly presided over a legal revolution, remained an enigma to all but a few of the troops he commanded at the Justice Department — even though he had been attorney general longer than all but nine men in history.

The mystery about Smith is this: Will history judge him the author or merely the caretaker of a sweeping redirection of the government's legal policies and practices?

That question was on many minds as a select 225 present and former Justice officials bade him farewell Friday afternoon.

"He turned out pretty well after all, didn't he?" asked one now-departed prosecutor, who like many of the others would speak candidly only if they were not identified.

"I don't understand this 'society lawyer' tag," said a close aide. "He's better informed on more issues here than anyone else. I guess only the heads of divisions or bureaus really got to see that."

Said a senior career lawyer who has seen 10 attorneys general come and go: "My division did better under Smith than ever before. But I still don't know whether to credit him or his deputy."

Although this lawyer is among the top 60 officials in a 60,000-employee department, he had only two working meetings with Smith in more than four years.

Only a very narrow circle got to see this very private attorney general at work.

In farewell, they assembled in a place that had seen history made. In this room, Robert F. Kennedy presided over a different era of change, putting the department on the side of civil rights protesters and forcing the FBI to battle organized crime.

Whatever the questions about Smith, his tenure produced more sweeping changes at Justice even than Kennedy's, many of them long sought by conservatives:

—The toughest federal criminal law revisions in two decades, abolishing parole, restricting bail, empowering the government to seize the multi-million-dollar assets of drug dealers.

—The break-up of AT&T, the largest corporate divestiture in world history.

—The argument, for the first time since the Supreme Court outlawed segregated schools in 1954, by the Justice Department that it's legal to resegregate public schools when trying to end some busing plans.

—The reversal of the use by four previous administrations of hiring goals to remedy job discrimination.

—A wholesale relaxation of anti-merger rules in keeping with Smith's dictum, "Bigness is not necessarily badness." This reversed a view held by policymakers since the Clayton Act of 1914.

—The "discovery" of Sandra Day O'Connor whom Smith persuaded President Reagan to nominate in fulfillment of Reagan's pledge to name a woman justice of the Supreme Court. In this, Smith prevailed over his eventual successor, Edwin A. Meese III, who supported a man for the job.

—Bringing the FBI into drug enforcement, a move previous administrations wanted to do, but couldn't.

—Revision of the 100-year-old law forbidding the military from enforcing civilian laws. This change, identified by Smith's Democratic predecessor as the department's most urgent need, allows the use of military ships and planes to chase track drug runners.

—A 60 percent increase in the Justice budget while other federal domestic agencies absorbed the sharpest budget cuts in history.

In all, a remarkable record for a man who came to town known only as "Ronald Reagan's personal attorney."

He arrived as thoroughly a novice as the citizen-senator Mr. Smith played by Jimmy Stewart in the movie.

In his first month, Smith confided that he was awed by the department's scope. He said he hadn't realized that the 11,000-person Immigration Service would be under his command until he noticed the words "Department of Justice" on the seal at a Mexico border crossing a short time before.

On his last day, Smith thanked a standing-room crowd of department employees in the Great Hall, the place where the nation once watched on television as Elliot Richardson said farewell after being fired in Watergate's Saturday Night Massacre.

These were career employees mostly and they had seen Smith bring an unaccustomed pomp to ceremonies in the austere, imposing hall: military color guards and bands that some thought inappropriate in a civilian agency.

After Smith's previous ceremonies here, one could hear scarcasm about this remote, wealthy corporate lawyer and presidential confidant who seemed a fixture on the capital's party circuit when he wasn't traveling abroad at taxpayer expense.

"Let me know when you hear of the first party Smith misses," a career prosecutor once told a reporter here.

But Friday there was no color guard, no band and no introduction. Just the white-haired, 67-year-old attorney general on stage alone, speaking with feeling about his debt to each component of the department. "The men and women of the Department of Justice represent the finest force for good that can be found anywhere," he said.

No muttered wisecracks, this time; instead, a standing ovation.

Upstairs later, top officials, past and present, were still trying to get a fix on the full contribution of William French Smith.

A former personal assistant: "His greatest contribution will be the quality of the people he brought in, people like Ed Schmults," who served as deputy attorney general for three years. In the press, Schmults, not Smith, often was credited with the department's successes.

But Schmults, who flew back from Connecticut for the ceremony, called that view "flat wrong."

"No matter how good the people below are, the man at the top has to have it, because he has to go to the White House and make it stick," Schmults said. "Bill could really do that."

"Some people say attorneys general shouldn't be friends of the president, but if the friend is honest and has integrity like Bill Smith, that's exactly the kind of attorney general you want."

One of the department's top dozen officials, who has worked for more than one attorney general: "We subordinates would come up with ideas and tell him how they could be done and defended, but he made all the choices. The idea that we would go out without his approval and do something and tell him later is a common misperception in this town. On the rare occasion when he read first in the newspapers about a significant brief filed without his knowledge or approval, you'd hear about it in no uncertain terms."

"There were perhaps more parties and more trips than an attorney general would want to project, and he paid a price for that. But you have to admire his principles: he wasn't going to change his style because he thought the press was overemphasizing those things."

The departing Smith, asked what he would miss most, said the people: "There are better than average people up and down the building."

If so, why did he stay so isolated, so unlike Robert Kennedy who roamed the halls regularly? "A walk down the halls is a luxury," Smith replied. "So much goes on here, you have to force it."

But the man who visited every continent but Antarctica at taxpayer expense accepted good-naturedly a joke gift from his aides: an international airline travel guide.

Even aides who defended the trips acknowledged he was tight with his own money — "four-foot deep pockets and three-foot-long arms" in the words of an FBI agent who had guarded this multimillionaire.

All told, there were nine foreign trips, all but one in government jets, and 23 first-class flights to his home state of California on government business, including what one aide called "the regular Christmas-time speech."

When it came time to go home, Smith and his wife paid for their own plane tickets.

These were coach tickets.

Sunday morning, Osbia Hicks, who directed the attorney general's mail, messenger and kitchen staff, readied the fifth floor corner office for the 75th attorney general, Meese. "Smith was nicer to us than any of the others I've seen in my nine years," Hicks said.

Audit questions validity of shipyard's gifts

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) — The 30-year plaques for retirees were OK, but the $1,400 model submarine with cribbage board was a bit much, say auditors who checked on $152,000 worth of gifts manufactured in one year at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard.

A Navy audit for the year ending in March 1984 showed the shipyard manufactured 1,971 gifts for retirees, VIPs and others, with several items drawing questions from the auditors.

Among the questioned items was a 24-inch submarine model with a cribbage board in the missile section, a wooden replica of the USS Long Beach that cost at least $1,300 to make and a $1,200 metal nameplate emblazoned with the logo of the yard's shipfitter's shop.

There was also a seven-foot silhouette of the Boeing Co. hydrofoil High Point, which cost $750 to make.

Those four gifts "appeared excessive," the auditors said, and may not be legal under the Employees Incentive Awards Act and Navy policies, which say that the only awards that can be given are lapel pins, plaques and certificates.

The law and Navy policies say taxpayer money cannot be used for anything that could be construed as a personal gift, said shipyard spokesman Bruce Andrae.

Most of the gifts were legitimate metal and wood plaques given to retiring civilian workers at the shipyard that employs 12,300 civilians. Those plaques are valued at less than $100 each.

The Seattle Times obtained a copy of the audit, published in October, through a Freedom of Information Act request.

Andrae said the shipyard agrees with the auditors that there were not enough internal controls to ensure that only authorized plaques and presentation items were manufactured in the many metal-and wood-working shops at the huge yard.

The shipyard kept no central records on who was making the awards and how much they cost, Andrae said. New rules are being drafted, and in the interim, only two shipyard officials are authorized to approve the making of awards.

"My feeling about it was that there were a couple of cases where guys used poor judgment," said Commodore Roger B. Horne Jr., commander of the shipyard when the gifts were made.

Horne is now assigned to the Pentagon.

The recipients of the questioned gifts will not be required to return the models, Andrae said.

NYHD: Agent Orange not responsible for deaths

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A study of the causes of deaths of Vietnam veterans and those who did not serve there showed no evidence that any were killed by Agent Orange, a researcher said.

The state Health Department study compared the causes of death for 1,496 New York veterans, 555 of whom served in Vietnam, and found no significant difference between the two, researcher Andrew Reilly said Sunday.

Reilly said deaths tied to the defoliant, which contains dioxin, may take a long time to develop. A 20-year study released by the Air Force this month also found no differences in death rates between Vietnam veterans and others.

Sex rap filed mistakenly

MIAMI (AP) — A sexual battery charge against a 12-year-old boy who had intercourse with a consenting 10-year-old girl was filed mistakenly and will be dropped if the boy gets counseling, a prosecutor and defense attorney say.

The charge will be dropped Tuesday, when the boy was scheduled to appear for trial in juvenile court, said public defender Robin Faber. Roberta Fox, the girl's attorney, said she had not been told whether a lewd and lascivious behavior charge against her client would be dropped.

Assistant State Attorney Leon Botkin said the charges had been filed because of a breakdown in communication between his office and police.

Man not Hall of Famer

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A 37-year-old man intended to "take quite a few things" from the Basketball Hall of Fame before officers answering an alarm caught him with a large number of plastic bags, police said.

Andrew G. McCrea of Peabody was arrested without resistance Saturday on charges of breaking and entering, larceny in the nighttime and possession of burglary tools, said police Detective Lt. Elmer McMahon.

McCrea had former Boston Celtic Bill Russell's game shirt, No. 6, and was cutting a Wilt Chamberlain jersey from a mannequin when police arrived at the hall on the Springfield College campus, McMahon said.

UAW, GE end strike

EVENDALE, Ohio (AP) — General Electric Co. and a United Auto Workers local have agreed to end a nine-day strike at an aircraft engine plant that started over objections to the company's subcontracting policies, officials say.

The 4,400 members of UAW Local 647 were to return to the late shift Sunday night at the suburban Cincinnati area's largest employer, said GE spokesman Bill Black. No details of the agreement reached Saturday were disclosed.

"We've got an understanding," said Local 647 President William Adams.

Officials seek new trial

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Authorities say they will decide by late next week whether to seek a second child molestation trial after jurors deadlocked in the case of a homosexual man who adopted a teen-age boy in 1982 and ran a foster home.

The deadlock and mistrial Friday shows "the district attorney does not have sufficient evidence" to convict David L. Frater, 31, of having sex with a 15-year-old runaway boy, said defense attorney Roger Martin.

Frater says the youth who made the charges last summer violated a house rule established by the county and threatened to "get" his license when Frater tried to enforce it.

Minister donates savings

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A retired Atlanta minister and his wife, who met on a blind date 50 years ago at Yale University, have donated $1 million to establish Yale Divinity School's first new chair in 42 years.

John Edward Lantz, 74, a 1938 graduate of the divinity school, said he hopes the gift of his and Ruth Cox Lantz' life savings will "help us all to speak together on a higher basis."

The endowed chair will be used to help a professor foster more effective communication of the Christian gospel. Divinity school director of development Frank Mullen said it would not be filled until after 1988.

Thief steals McNuggets

FULLERTON, Calif. (AP) — Sheila Friend's dog won't get her bag of leftover Chicken McNuggets, because a bandit took them at gunpoint and made a clean getaway, police said.

The bandit thought he had a bag containing McDonald's restaurant cash receipts, police Lt. Ronald Kazzor explained. Ms. Friend, 50, is assistant manager of a McDonald's franchise here.

There were two similar bags on the seat of Ms. Friend's car, which the gunman commandeered Saturday. The bandit, described as being in his 20s, grabbed the wrong bag when he abandoned the car, and officers found the cash when they retrieved the auto, Kazzor said.

"I rolled in tears thinking of the look on that guy's face when he opened the bag," Kazzor said.

Arizona project to pump late this year

N.Y. Times News Service

DENVER — Late this year the big pumps of the Central Arizona Project will start to spin, sending a river of water over mountain and desert to Phoenix. With the first rush of water, a new age in the long history of the Colorado River's nurturing of the dry Southwest will begin, and the states in its basin are already scrambling to meet the change.

The project will give Arizona the water it has long been entitled to by law but could not use until the construction of the multibillion-dollar network of pumps, dams and canals. In the meantime, Arizona's share of the lower Colorado's water has been taken by Southern California farms and cities, and their impending loss of water has prompted an innovative search for new sources.

A Colorado company, for example, has proposed selling water from the upper reaches of the river to San Diego. Elsewhere, the growing shortage of cheap water has set off similar bidding among cities and utilities, angering farmers who fear that the rising cost of water, which they need for irrigation, will force them out of business. And environmentalists are looking for ways to turn water shortages into opportunities to restrain growth in the West.

The Central Arizona Project, or CAP, is not the only reason for this chain of events, but it has become a symbol of the changes in the West's approach to its most valuable resource. "As soon as you get into a water shortage, people start looking around for new sources, and the CAP has certainly done that," said Lawrence R. Michaels, general manager of the San Diego County Water Authority.

Arizona will start by drawing about 600,000 acre-feet of water a year from the Colorado. (An acre-foot is the amount of water it takes to cover one acre to a depth of one foot, or about 325,000 gallons.) The state is entitled to take 2.8 million acre-feet, which is now going to California under the "use it or lose it" water law that prevails in the Western states. If the owners cannot use their rightful share, the law says, the water may be taken by those who can.

San Diego County stands to lose the most when the Central Arizona Project gets started. It uses 300,000 to 500,000 acre-feet of water a year, while it is entitled to only 165,000. The county, whose water is supplied by the Metropolitan Water District, is not in immediate danger because the spring runoff from the Rocky Mountains into the Colorado has been plentiful recently and reservoirs are full. But with two or three dry years and with the Central Arizona Project on time, the water district estimates that its 1.5 million-acre-foot system would be short by a third in 1990 and by a half in the year 2000.

"If the Met is short, we really live a disaster," Michaels said, referring to the water district. "We have to look for other ways to get water, so when someone like Galloway shows up at our door we can't afford to say, 'Ah, we don't think this can be done.'"

The Galloway Group Ltd. is a consortium of northwestern Colorado developers who approached San Diego with a controversial proposition. The developers propose to impound water behind dams in northern Colorado and then "lease" it, at the rate of about 50,000 acre-feet a year, to San Diego for 20 years. The water, which would be released into the river system, would be privately owned.

The plan turns on a finer point of Western law, which holds that the first person to put a source of water to good use may continue to do so. This "right of prior appropriation" does not care how far from the source the owner is.

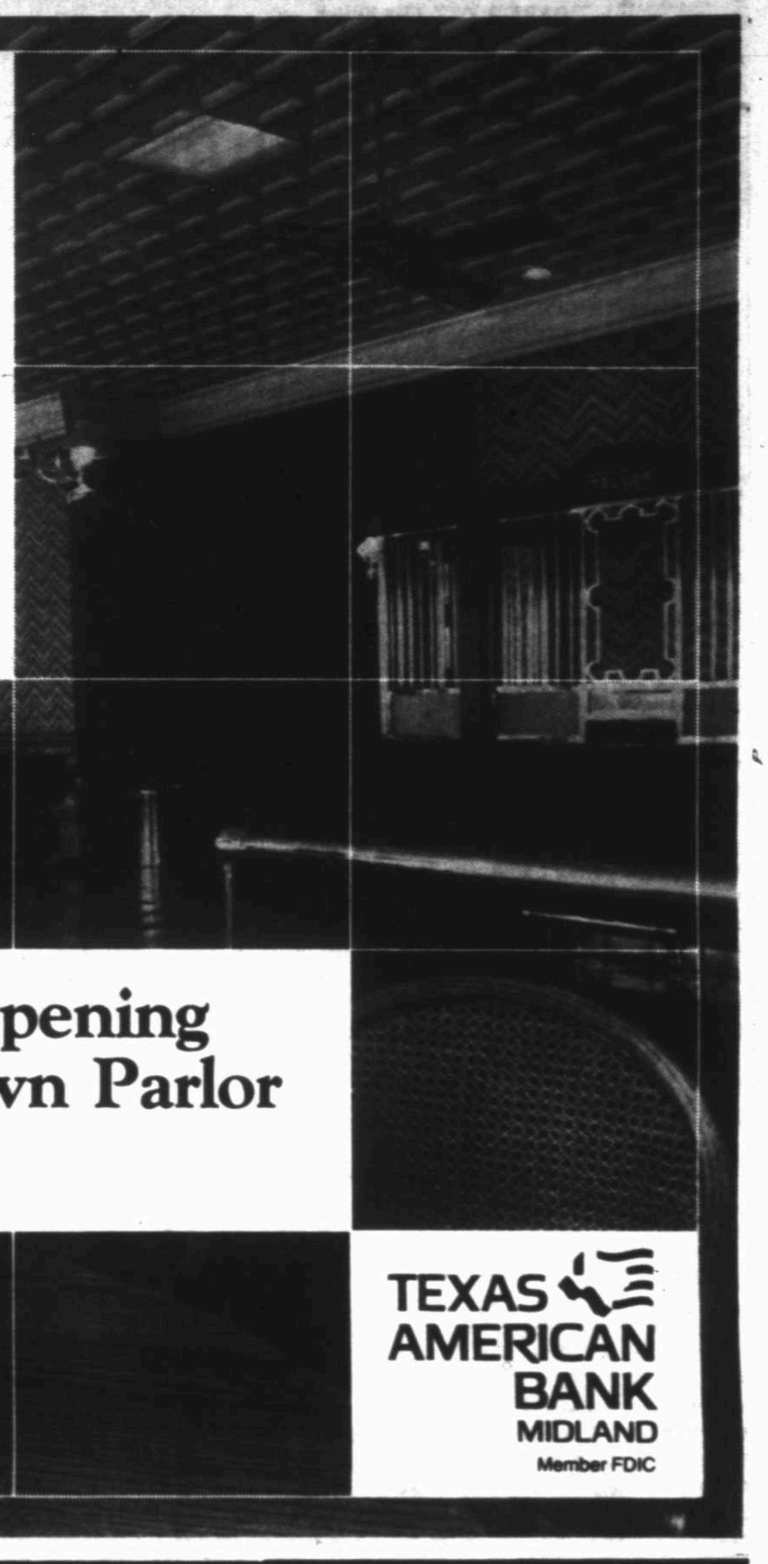

The Galloway Group's proposal has attracted diverse support. Conservationists like the idea of landowners selling their water to cities downstream, because the higher costs might hinder development. In this, they agree with some conservative economists who argue that water should be treated like any other commodity and sold to the highest bidder.

St. Paul's High bridge comes tumbling down

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — St. Paul's High Bridge, closed last year, "came atumblin' down" into the Mississippi River under the watchful eyes of demolition experts and a crowd of 25,000 spectators.

Eighty pounds of explosives were set off along the bridge, bringing down the 96-year-old structure shortly after 4 p.m. Sunday. The demolition has been set for noon, and there was no official explanation for the delay.

Thousands of people lined the banks and bluffs of the river and nearby bridges at Wabasha and Robert streets in downtown St. Paul.

The Minnesota Department of Transportation closed the rusty bridge last July after deciding it was unsafe for travel.

Construction of a new High Bridge will begin in about five months. It is expected to be completed in the fall of 1987 at a cost of $19.8 million.

Houston may not exactly be Paris or London or any one of a number of cities worldwide known as tourist attractions, but the little gem on the Texas Gulf Coast certainly doesn't deserve the reputation a national real estate company says it has in other cities.

Arthur J. Mirante, president of Cushman & Wakefield, says Houston has the detractive image of a city in which traffic congestion is a way of life and polluted air is a byproduct of the oil industry.

Okay. We'll admit that Houston has its share of problems (and what city of any respectable size doesn't?), but it seems a little harsh to hang a tag on Houston that reads: "Houston, ugliest city in the U.S."

Last time we visited in Houston, traffic wasn't exactly fun, summertime temperatures were sweltering and the Astros lost, as usual. But in what city of Houston's population can one expect to not find those problems on a fairly consistent basis? And there were good points. Houston has a great night life, plenty of tourist attractions and a healthy local economy.

After all, does Los Angeles with its smog or New York City with its aloofness or Chicago with its crime really have anything to brag about?

For a number of years, Houston has led Texas cities in attracting business and industry to the Lone Star State. It also has been one of the hotspots in the Southwest at attracting new, major industry. That benefits all Texans regardless where they live.

Maybe Mirante is correct in asserting that others throughout the nation have the wrong impression of Houston. He suggested the city should emphasize strong points like Houston's low rent and land costs, and high quality of labor.

After all, big cities don't come without their share of problems. So Houston can smile — even though the traffic truly can be murder.

Syria's role as 'hero'

Warm words are flowing from Washington to Damascus to thank the Syrians for their part in the freeing of Jeremy Levin, the American journalist held captive nearly a year in Lebanon by the terrorist group Islamic Jihad. Officials have it in mind that four other American citizens are still hostages and that the Syrians may yet be helpful in securing their release. The government of Hafez Assad has used the occasion to present itself to the United States in the winning role of humanitarian and enemy of terrorism.

All right: the United States needs the help of many other governments in protecting its citizens on foreign soil. But let's not get carried away by the fantasy of Syrian-American brotherhood in the cause of anti-terrorism. At some point, it would be interesting to know how it was that Islamic Jihad long managed to hold Mr. Levin — and manages still perhaps to hold the four other Americans — behind Syrian lines in a part of Lebanon that Syrian troops have occupied almost 10 years. Not so many months ago the United States was openly accusing Syria of responsibility in terrorist acts directed against American forces in Lebanon. This is not even to mention the ruthless violence the Syrian government has used against its own citizens at home.

The Jordanians and some PLO elements seem to be moving now toward a new round of Arab-Israeli negotiations. Whether they arrive depends, in one indelicate but essential particular, on whether the principals avoid being killed by the Syrian government or its Palestinian clients. The Syrians, distrusting the current odds, refuse to sit down with the Israelis and negotiate. They fear, however, that a Jordanian-Palestinian combination will sit down, leaving Damascus out in the cold. Assassination is a standard Syrian-favored tactic to help keep that from happening.

How, then, should the United States deal with Syria? The country has an undeniable importance in its region, as it demonstrated anew by killing the Lebanese-Israeli withdrawal accord of 1983. It has the Soviet backing to make it a significant military power and the means to stay engaged in the political maneuvers of the Arab world. American diplomats now indicate — wisely — a readiness to take Syria into direct account. At the least, its interest in spoiling the initiatives of others must be blunted. This appears to be one basis of Washington's rather exuberant praise of Syria in Levin's release. It will help to keep in mind, however, that the Syrians play a hard game.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Feb. 25, the 56th day of 1985. There are 309 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On February 25, 1913, the 16th Amendment to the Constitution was declared in effect, giving Congress the power to levy and collect income taxes.

On this date:

In 1570, Pope Pius V excommunicated England's Queen Elizabeth I.

In 1793, the various department heads of the U.S. government met with President George Washington at his home for the first "cabinet" meeting on record.

In 1836, inventor Samuel Colt patented his revolver.

In 1870, Hiram R. Revels, a Republican from Mississippi, became the first black to serve in the U.S. Senate. He was sworn in to serve out the unexpired term of Jefferson Davis.

In 1933, the first U.S. aircraft carrier, the Ranger, was launched.

In 1948, Communists seized power in Czechoslovakia.

In 1956, Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev harshly criticized the late dictator Josef Stalin in a speech before a Communist Party congress in Moscow.

In 1964, Cassius Clay, who later changed his name to Muhammad Ali, became world heavyweight boxing champion by defeating Sonny Liston in Miami Beach.

In 1983, the body of playwright Tennessee Williams was found in a New York City hotel.

Ten years ago: President Gerald R. Ford and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger issued separate statements warning Cambodia would fall to Communist-led insurgents without aid from Congress.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter honored the U.S. Winter Olympics team in ceremonies at the White House.

One year ago: The first full combat unit of the U.S. Marine force in Lebanon withdrew to ships offshore.

Today's birthdays: Actor Jim Backus is 72. Author Anthony Burgess is 68. Tennis player Bobby Riggs is 67. Career diplomat Philip Habib is 65. Writer-producer Larry Gelbart is 57. Musician Tommy Newsom is 56. Singer Faron Young is 53. Actor Tom Courtenay and CBS newscaster Bob Schieffer are 48. Rock singer George Harrison is 42.

Thought for today: "Time is the longest distance between two places." — Tennessee Williams (1911-1983).

JACK ANDERSON

FBI 'shielded' Donovan case

WASHINGTON — The FBI has hidden behind technicalities in the Freedom of Information Act to protect itself from disclosing information that might suggest the G-men were less than aggressive in their pursuit of allegations against Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan.

Jack Anderson

The information deleted by the FBI from its FOIA disclosure later became part of the basis for Donovan's indictment for grand larceny and filing false statements.

How do I know what the FBI deleted from the document that I obtained under the information act? My associate Tony Capaccio got an unadulterated copy of the document from another source.

The blacked-out information constituted seven lines of an FBI teletype dated Jan. 10, 1981. The teletype was from the FBI's New York office, which had been assigned to work on the background check of Secretary-designate Donovan.

The heart of the Senate Labor Committee's concern over Donovan's appointment was the suspicion that Donovan's Schiavone Construction Corp. had embarrassingly close ties to a subcontractor, Jopel Contracting and Trucking, which was allegedly mobster-controlled.

The portions of the teletype that were not deleted by the FBI are embarrassing enough to the bureau. They show that the links between Donovan's company and the allegedly mob-dominated firm were a lot tighter than the Senate committee had been led to believe by the FBI. The links surfaced during 1,500 hours of secretly taped conversations of Jopel officials in 1979 during an undercover operation known as TUMCOM.

The New York FBI office's review of Jopel's principal owner, William P. Masselli, "revealed that (he) maintained a very close relationship with the Schiavone Construction Corp. and its management officials," New York wired Washington. "This relationship included social engagements and frequent business contacts," the teletype added.

Yet 17 days later, testifying before the Senate committee, the Washington FBI official in charge of the Donovan background investigation said there had been "some contact" between Schiavone and Jopel executives, "but nothing I would consider to be significant."

The committee as a whole was never shown the incriminating teletype. The deleted portion of the teletype detailed more evidence from the TUMCOM tapes of the closeness of the Schiavone-Jopel connection. It said:

"Business agreements included preferential treatment on subcontracting projects, financing of equipment for Masselli to lease back (to) Schiavone, and numerous, possibly fraudulent schemes to raise federally required minority participation levels on urban mass-transit projects."

It was these allegations, based on the tapes, that led to Donovan's and Masselli's indictment by a New York state grand jury last October.

The FBI, in its freedom-of-information release, also deleted the teletype's statement that "several recorded conversations indicate that Jopel was never a bonded construction company, but utilized Schiavone's bonding to cover this (federal) requirement."

Despite its possession of this potentially incriminating evidence, the FBI apparently never followed up on it — and didn't tell the Senate Labor Committee about it.

The grand jury charged that Donovan, Masselli and eigth other company officials conspired to pass off Jopel as a legitimate minority-owned company to fulfill federal equal-opportunity requirements for a $186 million subway construction contract. The indictment charges that Jopel was only a paper "front."

Footnote: The FBI justified the deletion of the seven teletype lines on the basis that the information involved a current case.

MAKING A KILLING: The federal government gives indirect aid and comfort to the National Rifle Association, which spends considerable sums each year to lobby against gun-control legislation.

Because the NRA is the only "official" gun group in the country, most federal lawmen are dues-paying members. The government doesn't pay its employees' $15-a-year dues, but it encourages gun-toting lawmen to join the organization.

For example, Customs Service officers who want to get on the agency's pistol team had to enter at least three NRA target-shooting matches last year. Final selection for the official Customs Service pistol team depends in part on the scores the agents made in the NRA matches, as well as on their NRA membership status.

GRADE-SCHOOL GUERRILLA: One of the Afghan guerrillas who have been touring the United States is Ahmad Naseem. He is 7 years old.

Ahmad, who lost four fingers in a Soviet helicopter-gunship attack on his village square, said he has seen children being thrown from Soviet choppers.

Ahmad said he had come to the United States seeking weapons to fight "the Russians." Asked if he could handle a rifle, the boy replied: "Of course. You just aim and fire."

EVANS & NOVAK

Reagan vetoes Yalta plans

WASHINGTON — President Reagan personally vetoed a State Department effort to convert the Feb. 5 anniversary of the 1945 Yalta conference from the perfect time to recall broken Soviet promises into a time for praising the wartime union between the U.S. and the Soviets.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

In a decision that shocked some White House insiders, the State Department had planned to recall the glories of wartime unity with the Soviets, with a statement to be read routinely by spokesman Bernard Kalb. When Reagan heard about it, he moved the anniversary statement from Foggy Bottom to the White House and ordered Kalb to be replaced by — Ronald Reagan himself.

The major change was what was said. Instead of emphasizing wartime camaraderie, Reagan's statement spoke of the "dividing line between repression and freedom" across Central Europe imposed by Soviet refusal to hold the free elections it pledged at Yalta. Reagan said the importance of the Yalta anniversary is that "the freedom of Europe is unfinished business."

NO MORE 'CONTRAS'

In working with the White House to build public support for anti-communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, conservative activist Lewis Lehrman issued this edict to President Reagan's speechwriters: stop describing "freedom fighters" as "contras."

Lehrman's Citizens for America (CFA), a grassroots lobbying organization, is taking on the anti-Sandinista campaign as its major effort. Some 20 guerrilla fighters are being brought to the U.S. to campaign for their cause in nearly 200 congressional districts. But Lehrman insisted that the pejorative phrase "contras" be dropped from administration language. The president's radio speech of Feb. 16 repeatedly described the guerrillas as "freedom fighters."

A footnote: Lehrman's principal ally in the Nicaraguan campaign is CIA Director William Casey. Although the Central Intelligence Agency is supposed to be divorced from partisan politics, the manager of Reagan's 1980 campaign has taken an intense interest in the CFA.

WARNING FROM CAPITOL HILL

An unpublicized warning has gone to the White House from Senate conservatives that President Reagan's imminent nomination of Assistant Secretary of State Rick Burt to succeed Arthur Burns as U.S. ambassador to West Germany may be held hostage to the expected nomination of Rozanne Ridgway as his successor.

Ridgway is a respected Foreign Service officer and presently ambassador to East Germany, but her strong advocacy of detente with Moscow and arms control as practiced during the Carter administration makes her unacceptable to Reaganite conservatives. Even worse to them, she was counselor to Carter's Secretary of State Edmund Muskie — a policymaking job that accentuates her non-Reaganite credentials.

The job of assistant secretary for Europe that Burt will give up is an important policymaking post. Senate Republican conservatives want assurances that Burt will be replaced by a conservative. Insiders told us that Secretary of State Shultz, whose choice of Ridgway reflects Foreign Service advice, is hoping her sex will help her get confirmed on the theory that voting against a woman would be hard.

FEUDING AT FED

Relations between the newest member of the Federal Reserve Board, Martha Seger, and Chairman Paul Volcker have soured so badly that she told friends she felt like going back to teach college in Michigan.

Seger, President Reagan's second appointment to the central bank's seven-member board, has dissented from Volcker's austerity policies. In return, Federal Reserve bureaucrats grumble that she publicly displays too much dirty laundry.

Seger's friends charge that life has been made uncomfortable for her by Volcker, even to the point of slowing down her travel and expense accounts. If so, the pressure may have worked. Seger's profile has lowered considerably.

MARIO AND LEE

Gov. Mario Cuomo dined privately in Manhattan Thursday night with Chrysler head Lee Iacocca in what could be the beginning of an important Democratic political alliance.

The two men do not know each other well, but have expressed mutual admiration. Iacocca asked to see the governor on last week's trip to New York. In return, Cuomo has invited the auto tycoon and his fiancee for dinner at the governor's mansion in Albany sometime soon.

Cuomo liked Iacocca's best-selling memoirs and reread portions of the book in preparation for Thursday night's dinner. Iacocca privately has sworn off any ambitions for elective office but suggested he was interested in Cuomo for president in 1988.

CHARLEY REESE

Proxmire deserves own award

Sen. William D. Proxmire, D-Wis., wants to ban the sale of Krugerrands. These are one-ounce gold coins produced by South Africa and purchased usually by people for investment purposes.

Proxmire's bill is a good example of legislative silliness and a waste of the taxpayers' time and money. As far as harming American investors, it doesn't matter. There are Mexican, Austrian and Canadian gold coins on the market.

What makes Proxmire's bill so silly is that it won't hurt South Africa either. There is a market for X-amount of gold coins. Take Krugerrands out of the picture and the market will switch to Mexican, Canadian or Austrian. None of those countries, however, has enough gold to mint enough additional coins to replace the Krugerrands. They will have to buy more gold bullion. They will buy it, of course, from the world's largest producer of gold — South Africa. People in the business tell me that South Africa realizes more profit from the sale of gold in bullion form than it does from coins. Hence, if Proxmire's aim is to slap South Africa, he's missed.

Charley Reese

As a moral gesture, it also misses. Proxmire like most American hypocrites is demonstrating that he is against apartheid — racial segregation — but he is for human slavery. It's okay with Proxmire if you buy Soviet vodka, Red Chinese textiles, Polish hams, Bulgarian typewriters, Iranian oil, etc. All of those products, by the way, compete with American products. Krugerrands don't since the U.S. doesn't mint gold coins.

It will cost a lot of time and money to pass Proxmire's bill. It would be better for us taxpayers if Proxmire would just hop a cab over to the South African Embassy and get himself arrested. That way he could publicize his displeasure with that government's internal affairs without tying up the Senate at a time the Senate has more important things to do.

I don't like apartheid either. There are a lot of things foreign governments do which I don't like and that's why I'm staying in the United States and loving every minute of it.

And it's because I love the United States so much that I get annoyed when politicians like Proxmire allow political opportunism to harm the interests of the United States.

Morality aside — and I've already shown Proxmire isn't interested in basing U.S. foreign policy on moral principles — the United States has a very important strategic interest in South Africa being controlled by a pro-United States government.

South Africa is the main source of a number of vital, strategic minerals without which we could not maintain our military and economic power. It also sits on one of the world's choke-points of ocean trade. Officials of the Soviet Union have publicly stated that one of the Soviet Union's main strategic goals to control South Africa is both for its minerals and for its location.

The tier of countries to the north of South Africa — Mozambique, Zimbabwe, and Angola — are already under communist influence. The black nationalists which Proxmire and other Americans are supporting are also under the influence of the Soviet Union and controlled by African Marxists.

The black nationalists which are anti-communist and pro-Western are the ones who are seeking a peaceful resolution of South Africa's racial problems and they have spoken out, again and again, against economic sanctions like Proxmire is proposing.

Proxmire has what he calls a Golden Fleece Award for wasteful government projects. He deserves the Shoot America in the Foot Award.

Meeting with pope 'possible' while Gromyko in Italy

By KEVIN COSTELLOE
Associated Press Writer

ROME — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko today took his campaign against NATO's nuclear missiles and the Reagan administration's "Star Wars" plans to Italy, where he may meet with Pope John Paul II.

Italian Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti greeted Gromyko at Leonardo da Vinci airport upon his arrival from Moscow. Gromyko was driven from the airport to the Soviet Embassy and did not make any public statement.

Gromyko was making his first official visit to Western Europe — apart from attending international conferences — since the start of installation in late 1983 of U.S.-built missiles in Italy, West Germany and Britain to counter Soviet rockets in Eastern Europe.

A meeting between Gromyko and the Polish-born pope was "possible," said the Vatican, which declined to confirm media reports that a session was scheduled.

Italian authorities have stepped up security around Soviet facilities in Rome for the four-day visit. Gromyko goes to Spain on Thursday.

Gromyko has been one of the Kremlin's most vocal opponents of plans to strengthen the arsenal of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization with 572 medium-range cruise and Pershing 2 missiles.

He also has been voicing Kremlin objections to Reagan's defense spaceweapons research, dubbed Star Wars, for which the United States has been recruiting support among its allies.

"In particular, the problems of nuclear disarmament and those sparked by the American Star Wars plan" are among the items to be discussed during Gromyko's trip, Italy's leading newspaper, Corriere della Sera, said on Sunday.

Gromyko was scheduled to meet with Socialist Premier Bettino Craxi on Tuesday and with President Sandro Pertini on Wednesday.

Italy has stood firmly by its commitment to install 112 nuclear-tipped medium-range cruise missiles in Comiso, Sicily.

"The installation of the Euromissiles represents a first concrete but rather limited response to Soviet superiority," Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini told Parliament last April.

NATO confirmed in November that 16 cruise missiles had been installed in Italy, 45 Pershing 2 missiles in West Germany and 32 cruise missiles in Britain.

U.S. and Soviet negotiators are scheduled to resume arms talks in Geneva, Switzerland, on March 12. The Soviets walked away from the bargaining table in November 1983.

Italy's Foreign Ministry has said "all peace-loving nations" will have to contribute to the successs of the negotiations.

The Vatican says the resumption of talks "opens paths of reasonable hope."

Gromyko met with Pope Paul VI on five separate occasions and with John Paul once before this trip, on Jan. 24, 1979, for one hour and 45 minutes, in one of the longest encounters between a pontiff and a statesman in many years.

Pope John Paul II frequently speaks out in favor of nuclear arms control.

An Italian judge in October indicted three Bulgarians for complicity in the May 13, 1981, assassination attempt against the pope after a prosecutor said that Bulgaria, possibly with Soviet support, masterminded the shooting by Mehmet Ali Agca, a Turk now in an Italian prison.

The prosecutor speculated that the plot was designed to stop social unrest in Poland.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Blast kills French miners

FORBACH, France (AP) — An explosion more than a half-mile underground rocked a coal mine at Forbach in the Lorraine region of eastern France today, company officials said. At least two miners were killed, 16 were missing and 12 were injured.

It was not immediately known how many miners were working at the Houilleres du Bassin de Lorraine mine when the explosion occurred at about 7:30 a.m.

Company officials confirmed the figure of two dead and said that 16 more had not been accounted for.

Reports indicated five injured miners were taken to the nearby St. Barbe Hospital and seven others were treated at the mine's infirmary.

Adjoining pits were being evacuated, and two lanes of a nearby superhighway were closed to aid the evacuation, a company spokesman said.

Witness fears reprisals

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — A woman who saw a Mexican customs agent gunned down in an ambush says she lives in fear of his reprisals from his assassins.

"I'm nervous," Maria Angelica Castro Ortega said. "These are people who have no heart, and we made the error of seeing this."

Meanwhile, State Judicial Police say they have no leads in the killing of Luis Jordan Castillo, who was shot to death as he drove to work Friday morning.

Ms. Castro said Castillo's killers can easily find her because a Juarez newspaper published her address.

Peace plan encumbered?

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel believes the call by Jordan and the PLO for a "comprehensive peace" is encumbered with too many conditions, but some Israelis are encouraged that the Arabs seem to be moving in the right direction.

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Sunday that the Feb. 11 accord between King Hussein and Chairman Yasser Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization was not an opening toward peace. He said the elements in the five-point document were "unacceptable."

But Abba Eban, chairman of Parliament's the powerful foreign affairs and security committee, said the development, though inadequate, was worth watching.

Moslem factions fight

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Rival Shiite Moslem militias traded gunfire and grenades in five poor neighborhoods of Beirut early today in what was apparently the first armed clash between a pro-Iranian group and the mainline Amal militia.

Meanwhile, Druse militiamen traded artillery fire with government soldiers around a strategic mountain town near Beirut, and fought Christian militiamen in hill country south of the capital.

The Druse fought soldiers around the mountaintop town of Souk el-Gharb southeast of Beirut from midnight to daybreak, when heavy rains forced a cease fire, police said. Druse and Christians also fought artillery battles in the Kharroub region about 19 miles south of Beirut, they said. There was no immediate word on casualties.

The battles ended a two-week lull in fighting among Lebanon's sectarian militias.

Hotel in Manila burns

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A fire broke out in the upper floors of a six-story hotel in the city's tourist district early today, forcing some guests to shinny down four floors on an electrical wire to reach safety.

The blaze at the 21-room Iseya Hotel broke out at 12:21 a.m. and burned for an hour through the hotel's fourth, fifth and sixth floors before firemen put it out.

Thirty fire trucks rushed to the hotel, which is one block from the U.S. Embassy.

Sweden holds exercise

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Neutral Sweden completed the first week of its largest military exercise since World War II with an international audience flown in from the 35-nation Stockholm Security Conference.

The Vastgrans, or West Border, exercise involving 22,000 army and air force personnel will continue until March 5 in Varmland province near the Norwegian border.

"The purpose of a big exercise like this one is to test the whole system, to find out where the faults are," the Swedish news agency TT quoted supreme commander Lennart Ljung as saying.

In-vitro twins delivered

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — A 29-year-old woman has given birth to what Australian doctors said today were the world's first authenticated frozen embryo twins, and mother and children are all doing well.

The in-vitro fertilization team at Queen Victoria Medical Center said the twin girls were delivered by Caesarean section last Friday to a Melbourne woman whose name was not released to protect her privacy.

The world's first frozen embryo baby from an egg that had been fertilized in a laboratory and stored in deep freeze was born at the Melbourne hospital last March after being thawed and implanted in a womb.

Chernenko television appearance doesn't dispel questions on health

Casting his ballot in the parliamentary election Sunday is Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko.

Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Konstantin U. Chernenko has appeared in public after being out of sight for two months, but his faltering manner and the way Soviet television managed his appearance did little to dispel doubts about his health.

Carefully edited television footage less than two minutes in length was aired Sunday on Soviet television. It showed Chernenko, 73, sitting, standing and murmuring a few words as he voted in an election for the Parliament of the Russian Republic.

Western diplomats said they doubted Chernenko voted at a regular polling place.

In contrast, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said to be the second-leading figure in the ruling Politburo, appeared smiling and confident as he and his family voted at a polling place crowded with Western reporters.

Gorbachev turned to the cameras several times during his visit to the polling place, and posed with his granddaughter as she stuffed his ballot into the box.

Soviet newspapers today carried photographs showing Chernenko and Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov, close-up, dropping their ballots into boxes. The newspapers noted Chernenko's election address had said the elections to the "organs of Soviet power are a direct and visual expression of the political will of the people."

In his television appearance, Chernenko, dressed in a blue suit, was first shown sitting at a desk with an election official handing him his ballot papers and Politburo member and Moscow Communist Party chief Viktor V. Grishin among a handful of officials looking on. Chernenko was not shown signing a register or marking his ballots.

The camera then panned to a cluster of Soviet photographers across the small room, which was adorned with a large bust of Lenin surrounded by potted plants.

The next shot of Chernenko showed him standing behind a ballot box. He dropped in his vote, then received three bunches of flowers from Grishin and two officials and could be heard saying "thank you" and wishing the bystanders "happy holiday."

The film ended with Chernenko declaring "good" as he waved weakly at the photographers.

Western diplomats, who spoke on condition they not be identified, suggested Chernenko's surprise television appearance was staged to show the leader without straining his evidently poor health.

He is said to suffer from emphysema, a lung ailment that makes breathing difficult and can cause heart strain.

Diplomats said the telecast at least showed Chernenko was capable of speaking, sitting and standing, and ended rumors that a stroke had left him unable to talk.

Cool days forecast for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cooler temperatures have been forecast for the Midland area through Tuesday as the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport expects fair skies and lows in the middle 30s tonight to become partly cloudy with highs near 60 Tuesday.

Winds will be from the southwest at 5 to 10 mph tonight, increasing from the north at 10 to 15 mph late tonight. Tuesday's winds will be from the northeast at 10 to 20 mph.

Sunday's high of 54 was 20 degrees below the record set in 1956. This morning's low was 24 degrees above the record of 11 set in 1960.

STATE

A high-pressure ridge stalled over most of the Lone Star State brought rainfall to southeast sections of Texas and upper coastal waters, while isolated showers dampened the lower Rio Grande Valley today.

Clouds lingered across the eastern half of the state as a low-pressure area developed in Northwest Texas. Skies were fair in western sections. Very heavy thunderstorms developed over Galveston Island and offshore into the Gulf of Mexico.

Low temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s, with a few readings in the 50s along the lower Gulf coast and deep South Texas. Extremes ranged from 30 at Guadalupe Pass to 55 at McAllen.

NATION

Unseasonably high temperatures warmed the East today, while rain was widespread east of the Mississippi River and cold, wet and windy weather hit Montana and the Dakotas.

Rain and scattered thundershowers reached from southeast Texas across the central Gulf Coast and from northern Georgia to the western Carolinas.

Rainshowers were scattered over much of New England while northern Maine had freezing rain, sleet and snow.

There were unseasonably high temperatures from central New England across the southern two-thirds of the Atlantic Coast.

Shortly after midnight, the temperature in Atlantic City, N.J., was 68 degrees, a record for the date, breaking the 65-degree mark set in 1976.

Flood warnings were issued for western New York, northeastern Pennsylvania, northern Ohio and northeastern Indiana. Ice jams caused river flooding on the Winooski River of Richmond, Vt., and Oklahoma reported flooding.

Rain and snow were scattered over parts of Montana, Wyoming and the Dakotas. Cold, wet and windy conditions prompted stockmens' advisories in southeast Montana, southwest North Dakota and northwest South Dakota.

Today's forecast called for snow from the northern Rockies across the Dakotas and northern Minnesota and scattered over northern New England.

Warm spell continues; Flooding stretches from Oklahoma to Vermont

By MARK BERNS
Associated Press Writer

Rivers and streams remained over their banks from Oklahoma to Vermont today and warm-temperature records continued to melt after floods forced hundreds of people from their homes and caused millions of dollars in damage.

Parts of Montana, Wyoming and the Dakotas were buffeted today by rain and snow, and winds gusted to near 60 mph between Cheyenne and Laramie, Wyo.

Flood warnings continued today across western New York, northwestern Pennsylvania, northern Ohio and northeastern Indiana. Ice jams caused flooding on the Winooski River of Richmond, Vt., and floods continued in Oklahoma.

The temperature early today at Atlantic City, N.J., was 68 degrees, 3 degrees above the 1976 record for the date.

A weekend of unseasonably warm weather sent snow-swollen rivers to flood levels in Oklahoma, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Vermont.

High water took at least three lives in Indiana and Missouri, but flood waters were receding by late Sunday in most areas, officials said. Dense fog in Michigan was blamed for five deaths in traffic and plane crashes.

"We're hurting quite drastically, but we're busy digging out," said Mayor Bob Kehler of Skiatook, Okla., where flood damage was estimated at more than $1 million after Bird Creek overflowed. "Floors buckled, sheetrock is falling; it's a state of mass confusion around here right now."

Temperatures on the East Coast were summer-like Sunday. Roanoke, Va., and Worcester, Mass., had their warmest February days ever at 80 and 71 degrees, respectively. Record highs for the day fell in 27 cities and for the month in 12 of those, the National Weather Service said.

An estimated 100,000 people surged into Central Park in New York City on Sunday as the mercury climbed to 75 degrees, 10 degrees above the previous record for the date set in 1971.

Flooding in north-central Indiana, especially along the Wabash River, "will be the worst it's been in 20 to 30 years," weather service hydrologist Albert Shipe said Sunday."In portions of the northern part of the state, it will be worse than it was in 1982," he said, referring to heavy floods that inundated Fort Wayne and other areas.

"The situation in Fort Wayne is approaching the serious or critical stage," Shipe said. Officials called for volunteers to fill 70,000 sandbags, said Fort Wayne public information director Angela Boerger.

The Mississinewa River at Marion, Ind., matched the 27-year-old record crest of 14.9 feet Sunday morning and was still rising, and some people left low-lying homes. In Michigan, the St. Joseph River was expected to crest later this week near 16 feet at Niles, where the record is 15.5 feet.

The River Raisin in southeastern Michigan was subsiding today after it burst through an earthen support.

Chaps-Wranglers: biggest in years

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College has never sold out Langford Chaparral Center. But at 8 tonight, against Odessa College, could come close.

The arena seats 5,000 and Chaparral and Wrangler fans could make a sellout a reality.

Not since Midland College and Western Texas College battled for the conference and regional titles at the Center back in 1979-80 has a Western Junior College Athletic Conference contest here been fraught with as much meaning. We won't even mention emotion—Midland vs. Odessa, it comes with the franchise.

WTC was on its way to a 35-0 season and a national junior college championship back in 1979-80, and Midland was the stumbling block. Coach Nolan Richardson took that Western team with him to Tulsa the next year and won the NIT.

If anything, tonight's game is even more appealing from a fan standpoint. It's not only Midland vs. Odessa, but for first place. What's more each team has won a decision this year.

MIDLAND is 14-2 in WJCAC play and a game back is OC at 13-3. Both are headed for the Region V tournament and all that is left is to settle the titlist. A win tonight would enable Coach Archie Meyers' Wranglers to pull into a tie for first and leave Midland to end the season with a road game against Western Texas while OC faces Clarendon.

Midland defeated WTC, 96-87, here and Odessa beat Western with a basket at the buzzer a couple of weeks ago.

In two previous meetings, MC won 66-61 in the finals of the Chaparral Classic early in the season. At Odessa last month, the Wranglers won 61-55 in the game that counted in the standings.

WJCAC Shootout

TOM BOLDEN and Eric Chinn scored 14 each and Mark Benoit another 12 for Odessa in the first WJCAC meeting. Six-nine Teviin Binns scored 17, but didn't get that many opportunities, making seven of only 10 shots from the field as OC concentrated on stopping the rangy New Yorker.

The big difference was at the line where MC was 3-for-3 while OC was 13-of-23.

Coach Jerry Stone is getting more production from his bench now than he did then. For example, Tony Wright committed two personals and took one shot in the first game. Pookey Wigington picked up four personals and took only two shots. Ricky Grace didn't even play.

With 6-5 sophomore Lawrence Chumbley out with a knee injury, Monday against Frank Phillips, Stone used Wright, Eddie Frazier and Derrick Lewis to support Binns on the boards.

"Odessa has a good team," says Stone and Archie (former MC assistant Archie Meyers) will have them ready. I just hope we get the support out of our home crowd that we got over in Odessa." For that one, OC's 1,400-seat gym was SRO.

CHAPSTYQUES—Tonight's game marks the final home appearance for Zeak Williams, Vernon Coleman, Chuckie Graves, Binns and Chumbley...Binns, averaging is averaging over 22 points a game. Puntus Wilson set the Chap season record with a 23.3 average in 1981-82 and Robert Tate's 22.5 in 1979-80 is next...Other records within reach: Coleman is hitting 80 per cent of his free throws. Henry White's 82 is the best...Wright is over 60 per cent from the field but it will take an unerring eye to match Raleigh Freeman's 71.7 in 1979-80...Halftime prizes will include a scramble for dollards, a shot at 900 gallons of gasoline and use of a Pontiac Fiero for three months for some lucky fan...For parking tonight, come early. The south and east sides of the Chap Center parking lot are the last to fill up....

The first 1,000 in attendance tonight get a team picture of Chaps. Two lined Chaps jackets will be given away and a Coaches-Media game will precede the main event and tip off at 6 p.m.

NMMI removed itself from the one-two finish picture by losing to Clarendon Thursday. the Cadets enter the last week at 11-5...

Kelly steals Flutie's show

Associated Press

USFL

All the pre-game hype and hoopla was directed at the rookie quarterback with the million-dollar contract, a Heisman Trophy winner with virtually no preparation. While Doug Flutie was struggling in his professional debut, the USFL 's resident star passer was picking up where he left off last season.

Jim Kelly, the USFL's Most Valuable Player in 1984 when he threw for 44 touchdowns, began the '85 campaign in style Sunday with five scoring tosses and an American professional record 574 yards passing in leading the Houston Gamblers to a stunning 34-33 comeback victory over the Los Angeles Express before a crowd of 18,828. The Gamblers trailed 33-13 in the final quarter.

"I've been in some comebacks before but never anything like that," said Kelly. "Pulling out that win was the best feeling I ever had in my life."

Kelly completed 35 of 54 passes and threw for three touchdowns in the last 10 minutes. He hit Ricky Sanders with a 39-yard TD pass with 1:18 remaining and Toni Fritsch's conversion was decisive.

ELSEWHERE on opening day of the USFL's third season, Flutie got off to a horrible start and his late recovery wasn't enough as the Birmingham Stallions beat the New Jersey Generals 38-28 before 34,785. The Oakland Invaders downed the Denver Gold 31-10, the Jacksonville Bulls surprised the Baltimore Stars — who won the title while playing in Philadelphia last year — 22-14 and the Arizona Outlaws took the Portland Breakers 9-7.

On Saturday, the Tampa Bay Bandits routed the Orlando Renegades 35-7 before 45,045 in Tampa. Tonight, Memphis is at San Antonio.

Kelly wasn't taking all the credit for Houston's rally, which also included a 52-yard pass to Richard Johnson and a 20-yarder to Vince Courville.

"My offensive linemen gave me protection that was unbelievable," he said. "Our receivers did a heck of a job; they held onto the ball well and ran some great patterns."

Stallions 38, Generals 28

Flutie, fresh from Boston College, where he set NCAA passing marks, looked anything but ready for the pro ranks as he misfired on his first nine passes, with two being intercepted. It wasn't until late in the third quarter that the $7 million QB collected his first completion, a 6-yard pass to Clarence Collins.

By then, Birmingham had built a 31-7 lead behind quarterback Cliff Stoudt, who finished hitting 21-for-33 for 220 yards and three scores. He also ran nine times for 65 yards.

Invaders 31, Gold 10

At Oakland, before 23,622, Bobby Hebert — who came to the Invaders when the team merged with the Michigan Panthers — hit four touchdown passes. Hebert connected with Anthony Carter on a 50-yard TD pass on the first play of the fourth quarter to snap a 10-10 tie. A pair of interceptions by Derrick Martin led to two more scores.

The Oakland defense held Denver QB Vince Evans to 14-for-45 for 150 yards and stole three passes.

Bulls 22, Stars 14

Host Jacksonville was led by placekicker Brian Franco's USFL record-tying five field goals — including 51 and 50-yarders — in beating the '84 USFL titlists. The Bulls lost starting QB Brian Sipe in the first quarter with a shoulder separation.

Baltimore moved within eight points with a minute to go as Tim Riordan hit Herbert Harris with a 3-yard scoring toss and connected with Willie Collier for a 2-point conversion. The Stars then recovered an onside kick but could not move the ball.

The game drew 51,045, the largest crowd of the weekend.

Outlaws 9, Breakers 7

Luis Zendejas, the brother of the Express' Tony, kicked three field goals. His 43-yarder with 6:33 remaining provided the winning points at Tempe, Ariz., and was set up by a Carl Allen interception. The game was seen by 20,321.

The Breakers, who played in Boston two years ago and New Orleans last season, got their only points on Marcus Dupree's 11-yard touchdown run. But Dupree, who had 69 yards rushing in 17 carries, was taken from the field on a stretcher with a knee injury.

Dr. Jim Schader, the Breakers' team physician, said Dupree suffered a torn lateral collateral ligament in his left knee and a possible torn anterior cruciate ligament.

Tech, Ponies battle for first place

Associated Press

Texas Tech will have to beat Southern Methodist the hard way in their Southwest Conference basketball leadership showdown on Wednesday night.

SMU is 15-0 at home in Moody Coliseum this season.

SMU beat the Texas Longhorns 64-60 Saturday, bringing the school a record number of home victories.

Texas Tech stayed tied for the SWC lead with a 58-50 victory over the Texas Aggies in Lubbock.

SMU and Tech each have 10-4 records. Tech upset the Mustangs by a point in an earlier meeting in Lubbock.

Rice's 71-68 upset of Arkansas on Sunday also made the Owls' game against Baylor in Waco on Wednesday night an important one. Rice and Baylor are tied for the eighth and last place in the post-season SWC tournament.

Baylor gave outgoing Coach Jim Haller his 100th victory, an 88-84 victory Saturday night over the Houston Cougars.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss said the free throw shooting won the game for the Mustangs.

SMU hit 13 straight free throws in the second half.

Ninth ranked SMU is 21-6 overall and 10-4 in league play while Texas dropped to 14-11 and 7-8.

Texas Tech is 10-4 and 18-7.

TED BATTLES

The Hit-and-Run sign is on

In a blink...how much more did Cubs second baseman Ryne Sandberg make last year than third baseman Ron Cey?...

It's a good thing Larry Bird was playing basketball and not running track when he passed up a chance for a record quadruple (double figures in points, assists, rebounds and steals) the other night. That's the sort of thing Carl Lewis gets in trouble over with press and fans....

Bet you can't name Doug Flutie's back up on the New Jersey Generals...

Former Tampa Bay Coach John McKay got off pretty light for "letting" the opposition score a touchdown so one of his players could go after an NFL record. Still, how thoughtful. Still, if it had been a player, wouldn't they have been called it "fixing" the score?

A $5,000 fine? Wasn't Paul Hornung suspended for a year for betting on a game? He wasn't even manipulating the score. But perhaps that would be one way to discourage betting on point spreads, unless, of course, you had inside dope on when some coach was going to be seized by a whim of generosity.

Tailback James Wilder, who was given the opportunity to go after the Eric Dickerson single-season total yardage record by McKay, didn't get it and didn't want it. "I didn't like it at all. If I have to set a record that way, I don't want it." At least there's integrity left among the players...

Houston Madison ranks No. 5 nationally in the high school basketball prep rankings. Apparently, however, the toughest high school competition is in the Baltimore area. Baltimore Dunbar is ranked No. 1, Hyattsville, Md., DeMatha No. 4, Washington, D.C., All Saints No. 6, Washington, D.C., Spingam, No. 7; and Baltimore Cardinal Gibbons No. 17...

Baseball's oft-broken Bob Horner looked up at the sign outside the first of his new restaurants in Shelby, N.C., and noticed the faceless player swinging at a pitch. "If that's supposed to be me," said Horner, "where's the cast?"...

I STILL can't get over it. And why were they using a gun to signal the end of the game in the first place? That went out of date with the 1930 football movies.Nobody loses basketball games that way any more...

And speaking of weekend playoffs. I can't believe Lubbock Monterey scoring 103 points against anybody. That's not the Monterey I know. If that 103-99 score against Abilene doesn't impress you, look at it this way, if it had been an NBA game, the Plainsmen-Eagles still would have had 16 minutes left to play...

Toughest basketball conference? The Big East is tougher at the top and the Atlantic Coast Conference is tougher at the bottom. Only the NCAAs will tell for sure...

Because of stiffer admission requirements, Wisconsin and Northwestern aren't competitive in Big 10 basketball. So what's Northwestern doing beating Iowa by 20 points. Isn't anybody going to investigate the Wildcats?...

Coach Jim Haller's gamble on a seven-foot basketball player who couldn't make it at Cleveland State really backfired. The Baylor cage coach apparently used bad judgement all around. As one fan wondered, "Gee, if the Baylor coach is giving a bench-warmer money to pay for his car, what are they doing at schools that are winning?"...

Former Chicago Cub Billy Williams batted .290 in 18 seasons and Lou Brock hit .293 in 19 seasons, most of which were with the St. Louis Cardinals. So how come, Brock is in the Hall of Fame and Williams isn't it? Maybe because Brock set a base-stealing record and had 312 more hits than Billy. Still, Williams hit 277 more home runs, outproduced Brock in runs by more than 300 and home runs by 277...

Quickie answers: Cey made $500,000 in attendance bonuses alone to Sanddberg's $425,000 total....And the Generals' backup quarterback, former Red Raider Ron Reeves...

Jim Haller hollers his team to 100th victory.

Fans bellow for Haller

Ousted coach wins 100th game

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

WACO (AP) - They wore black arm bands and "I love Jimmy" T-shirts.

They put up signs and gave him a standing ovation.

In the end, they gave him "goosebumps."

Some 6,000 fans showed up to support resigning Coach Jim Haller and the Baylor basketball team on Saturday night.

The team responded with an 88-84 Southwest Conference victory over the Houston Cougars.

Ironically, it was Haller's 100th collegiate victory.

"Somebody will inherit a great basketball team," said Haller. "We had five freshmen in there at the end. They showed a lot of character. They fought their guts out."

Haller was given a standing ovation which the coach said "gave me goosbumps."

Players hugged Haller after the game and fans stopped by to shake his hand.

"I've had hundreds of telephone calls, telegrams, and letters," Haller said before the game. "It's been very touching."

Haller said that 99 percent of the response has been favorable.

Haller's resignation was accepted by the Baylor administration on Friday after he admitted he had given a $172 check to a player for a car payment in violation of school and NCAA rules. The player, John Wheeler, taped a conversation in which Haller made mention of the check. It was made public by a Dallas television station.

"I was wrong in what I did," Haller said, but added that "all I was trying to do was help the kid (Wheeler). He wasn't going to start for Baylor or bring us a national championship."

Horns rally to beat Sun Devils

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Dennis Cook slammed a home run leading off the 10th inning to give Texas a 6-5 win over Arizona State here Sunday night and a sweep of a three-game, non-conference baseball series.

Cook's homer, his first of the season, came off Sun Devil reliever Charles Scott (0-2) and gave the win to Longhorn reliever Lanny Hengst (1-0).

Texas rallied to tie the nationally televised game at 5-5 on three ninth-inning runs with two outs as Rusty Richards ripped an RBI double and David Denny hit a two-run homer, his second of the year, on a 3-and-2 count.

Arizona State scored three times in the third inning to take a 5-1 lead on a George Lopez RBI double and Rick Morris' two-run single.

The Sun Devils led 2-1 on Todd Brown's sacrifice fly in the first inning and Mike Devereaux's run-producing groundout in the second, offsetting the Longhorns' first-inning run on an error.

Doug Hodo had an RBI single in the Texas sixth to make it 5-2.

The Longhorns, now 7-2, won the first two games of the series at Packard Stadium — 13-7 in 14 innings Friday night and 9-5 Saturday.

Keith Hernandez...

Civil War buff in flannels

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
New York Times News Service

"People have sent me bullets, books by the groves, coins from the Civil War. Mostly, though, it's books. I come home from a road trip and there's usually eight books waiting for me."

WEST POINT, N.Y. — So many years have gone by, but Keith Hernandez can still remember those deliciously warm afternoons in the summer. The image is indelible: A youngster at a playground, swinging a bat and playing a game that would eventually make him one of the most talented baseball players in the big leagues.

But there's an equally strong image: The day Hernandez's older brother Gary brought home a pictorial history of the Civil War. "That hooked me," he said.

Ever since then, Hernandez, the Met first baseman, has been a student of history. On cross-country plane rides, in hotel rooms after games, on leisurely afternoons at home, he is occupied by books. Always history books.

Thursday, Hernandez relived some of it personally. At the invitation of the history department at the United States Military Academy, Hernandez sat in on a class about the Civil War, toured the hallowed grounds of West Point, met a few players from the Army baseball team and spoke at a formal dinner attended by officers and guests of the history department.

The highlight? "The history class," he said later. "I could have sat in on that class for hours. They discussed some things I wasn't familiar with, and they went into minute details about a lot of things."

HERNANDEZ was first approached about a visit to West Point when the Mets played an exhibition game against Army last summer. In September, he received an invitation. "I've been anxious to come since then," he said.

Hernandez has established a reputation as something of a Civil War buff. Although he's not a collector of war memorabilia, fans have given him a number of collectibles. "One guy from Gettysburg came to the ball park and brought me a sword," he said. "People have sent me bullets, books by the groves, coins from the Civil War. Mostly, though, it's books. I come home from a road trip and there's usually eight books waiting for me."

In a sense, the books came to life here. Guided by Capt. William Betson of the history department, Hernandez visited Trophy Point, where canons and mortars from previous wars are on display; stopped at Battle Monument, honoring dead from the regular army who fought in the Civil War; touched the guns that supposedly fired the first and last shots of the Civil War, and stopped at statues that stand in tribute to MacArthur, Eisenhower and Patton, all West Point graduates.

Clearly, this is not typical fare for a professional athlete in the offseason. But Hernandez, who never attended college and turned down scholarship offers from Navy and Air Force, said the image isn't quite accurate.

"Athletes aren't all brawn," he said. "There's a lot of brain. You'll find today's athletes are better educated and more aware of things. I've got a high school education — that's all. But I consider myself well-read in history, and I think of myself as being self-taught."

HERNANDEZ recalls vividly reading all three volumes of the book "Lee's Lieutenants," when he was about 20, then devouring a biography of Robert E. Lee, the commander of the Confederate army. That was another four volumes.

"I just picked up one book, read it and went on to the next," he said. "I couldn't put it down.

"What interested me about the Civil War," he said, "is that it threw us right into the Industrial Revolution, which changed the face of the entire country. But it was also the only war fought on our own soil, and it was brother versus brother, the issue of slavery.

"For four years," he recalled, "I read nothing but books about the Civil War. Then I got sick of it."

Hernandez said he expanded his reading to books about other wars. He recently read one text about Gen. Douglas MacArthur and just finished another about the Korean War. He made one tour stop Thursday at the West Point book store, picking up four history books to read at the Mets' spring training camp at St. Petersburg, Fla., where he will report next week.

"I never used to be a bookworm," he said, "and I don't consider myself one now. But there's a lot of time for reading during the season. After night games, I don't go to bed until 2 in the morning. I usually read."

In the Civil War class, taught by Capt. Timothy Bosse to a group of 10 attentive cadets, Hernandez listened quietly as the students discussed the early shaping of the conflict between the North and the South. Later, Hernandez said he hadn't been in a classroom since he was 17 years old. He's 31 now.

YES, HE said, he thinks about one day attending college. "I have plans to go back," he said. "But obviously, I made the right decision to play baseball. One day, I'll be in a position to take classes, and I'll take a few. But not to get a degree."

The kinds of classes? "History," he said. "It shapes the world as it is today. World War II did; it changed the world order. I love reading about people like Abraham Lincoln, Lee, MacArthur.

"I'm glad I came here," he said. "I wasn't disappointed."

No rocker for Kareem

Associated Press

NBA

As far as Magic Johnson is concerned, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is nowhere close to being ready to retire. "He can play as long as he wants to and do what he wants to," Johnson said Sunday after Abdul-Jabbar scored 39 points, one short of his season high, to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 119-114 ictory over the New York Knicks. "He's in great condition and has a super attitude."

Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's oldest player at age 37, was expected to retire after this season until he signed a one-year contract extension. On Sunday, he looked anything but ready for a rocking chair as he poured in 29 points after halftime.

"Obviously, we went to him in the second half," said Johnson, who had 19 points and 15 assists. "When the big man gets going, then everyone gets going. He makes everybody play better.

Despite Abdul-Jabbar's heroics and New York's 19-38 record, the Knicks kept the game close thanks to the efforts of Bernard King, Darrell Walker and their pressure defense.

"Their press gave us trouble until we slowed it down and went to Kareem," Laker Coach Pat Riley said. "That was the turning point."

"New York came at us with their defense and played a great game, but we were able to match their effort," said Abdul-Jabbar, who hit 16 of his 22 field-goal attempts and also had 10 rebounds. "When they started to press, we weren't able to get inside. Then, we adjusted and I got my shot."

King, the NBA's scoring leader, matched Abdul-Jabbar with 39 points, while Walker had 24 points, nine rebounds and eight assists.

Celtics 113, Pacers 100

Larry Bird scored 45 points and Robert Parish led a decisive spurt in the second quarter that carried Boston past Indiana.

The Pacers trailed by two points with 8:21 left in the first half before Parish, who finished with 19 points and 17 rebounds, scored nine points in a 17-6 run that gave the Celtics a 53-44 lead. In the second half, Boston stretched its advantage to as much as 88-64 before the Pacers rallied to cut the deficit to 102-96 with 2:55 to go in the game.

76ers 117, Jazz 106

Julius Erving scored 31 points and triggered a run of 10 straight Philadelphia points at the end of the game against Utah.

Darrell Griffith, who led all scorers with 35 points, gave Utah a 106-107 lead with a free throw with 1:10 remaining. Then Erving's layup started the 10-0 run with 56 seconds to go, giving the 76ers the lead for good.

Trail Blazers 137, Spurs 121

Clyde Drexler had 37 points, 10 rebounds and nine assists, and teammate Jim Paxson added 35 points as Portland raced past San Antonio.

Drexler scored 19 points in the first quarter to help the Trail Blazers take a 36-25 lead. They went on to lead by as many as 22 points in the third quarter before a 17-4 streak pulled the Spurs within 97-88.

Nuggets 117, Suns 107

Alex English scored 32 points and Denver rallied from 19 points behind in the second half to beat Phoenix and extend its Midwest Division lead to 2½ games over Houston.

SuperSonics 108, Clippers 102

Gerald Henderson scored six points down the stretch as host Seattle handed the Clippers their 19th straight road loss. Los Angeles led 93-91 with 5:23 to go, then Tim McCormick hit a basket and Henderson put the Sonics ahead to staay on a fast-break layup.

Alcott posts 22nd career victory

LPGA Tucson

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — While Amy Alcott isn't in the habit of chewing nails, the thought of it spurred her toward a 22nd career LPGA victory.

Alcott got off to a sluggish start in Sunday's final round of the $175,000 LPGA Circle K Tucson Open golf tournament. By the sixth hole she began talkng to herself.

"I told myself, 'Get tough. Let's eat nails. Go!,'" Alcott said. "Sometimes you live up that, and sometimes you don't. I figure you only come this way once, so let's rip it. Go for it."

The 10-year pro proceeded to birdie the seventh, eighth and ninth holes and then sink a 12-foot eagle putt on the last hole to beat out Betsy King by a single stroke.

Alcott, who celebrated her 29th birthday Friday, tied the tournament's low round with a 5-under-67 and a 9-under-par 279 total on the par 72, 6,212-yard Randolph Golf Course.

King, the tournament's 54-hole leader, just missed an eagle putt herself on the final hole and settled for a round of 69 and a 280 total.

Hollis Stacy, who missed the cut here last year, and Pat Bradley finished at 283 — four shots back. Both Stacy and Bradley posted 2-under 70s Sunday.

Lightheavyweight champion Michael Spinks makes short work of challenger David Sears in title bout.

Spinks looks to big guys

From Wire Reports

BOXING—Michael Spinks, 26-0 after kayoing David Sears, has talked for sometime about bidding for the heavyweight championship, and his defense of the light heavyweight title Saturday did nothing to change his mind. "Things aren't looking too good for me as a light heavyweight, and before I get out I'd like to win the heavyweight championship." Spinks' brother, Leon, won and lost the heavyweight title in fights against Muhammad Ali in 1978...

British heavyweight champion David Pearce, been banned for nearly a year on medical grounds, hopes that a doctor's report will help him regain his license on March 13. The British Boxing Board of Control deferred a decision on Pearce's fitness to fight until he has proved that he has no sign of brain damage. He was banned by the BBBC after a brain scan revealed evidence of an abnormality following a loss to Lucien Rodriquez of France...

BASEBALL—Toby Harrah arrived at the Yankees' Fort Lauderdale, Fla., training camp ready to switch to the outfield. Harrah was invited to camp early to take a shot at becoming a left fielder, a position he has not played as a major leaguer. An trade with Pittsburgh that sent Dale Berra to the Yankees for Steve Kemp has locked Harrah out at third base where Manager Yogi Berra plans to platoon his son, Dale, and Mike Pagliarulo...

FOOTBALL—Harry User, USFL commissioner, reiterated the league's intention to switch to a fall schedule in 1986 even though it has yet to come up with a network TV contract for autumn play. But Usher said that decision could be reconsidered if the television problem isn't resolved. The USFL currently has a contract with ABC that brings it an estimated $14 million a year, and a $70 million, four-year deal with the ESPN cable network that can be transferred to the fall... Both CBS and NBC have said flatly they aren't interested in televising the USFL in the fall...

TRACK— Olympic champion Dietmar Mogenburg of West Germany set the world indoor best in the men's high jump, clearing 7 feet, 10 inches at Cologne...

BOWLING BEAT

Theobald has the hot hand

RANDY ISENBERG

Bill Theobald's 259-740 in the Keglers Mixed League lead bowling in Midland. Theobald is currently averaging 210 in the league conducted at Regal Lanes. Leaguemate Phil White rolled a 279-705.

Sonny Poole, who rolled a 300 at Air Park in 1978, was enjoying a 600 binge that has raised his Tuesday Nite Mixed average to 193. He recently broke his 600 string with a 712 series highlighted by a 278, closely followed by another 700.

Among the women bowlers, Monica Elger continued demonstrating her bowling ability with a 279 in the His N Hers Mixed on Feb. 4. On Jan., 30, she rolled a 218-644 and has also had a 221-620. Paula Bayley just missed a 600, hitting a 220 game for a 599.

Sandy Crenshaw is continuing her fine year, averaging 184, the second series, 223-202-604.

Jim Haller hollers his team to 100th victory.

Fans bellow for Haller

Ousted coach wins 100th game

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

WACO (AP) - They wore black arm bands and "I love Jimmy" T-shirts.

They put up signs and gave him a standing ovation.

In the end, they gave him "goosebumps."

Some 6,000 fans showed up to support resigning Coach Jim Haller and the Baylor basketball team on Saturday night.

The team responded with an 88-84 Southwest Conference victory over the Houston Cougars.

Ironically, it was Haller's 100th collegiate victory.

"Somebody will inherit a great basketball team," said Haller. "We had five freshmen in there at the end. They showed a lot of character. They fought their guts out."

Haller was given a standing ovation which the coach said "gave me goosbumps."

Players hugged Haller after the game and fans stopped by to shake his hand.

"I've had hundreds of telephone calls, telegrams, and letters," Haller said before the game. "It's been very touching."

Haller said that 99 percent of the response has been favorable.

Haller's resignation was accepted by the Baylor administration on Friday after he admitted he had given a $172 check to a player for a car payment in violation of school and NCAA rules. The player, John Wheeler, taped a conversation in which Haller made mention of the check. It was made public by a Dallas television station.

"I was wrong in what I did," Haller said, but added that "all I was trying to do was help the kid (Wheeler). He wasn't going to start for Baylor or bring us a national championship."

Horns rally to beat Sun Devils

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Dennis Cook slammed a home run leading off the 10th inning to give Texas a 6-5 win over Arizona State here Sunday night and a sweep of a three-game, non-conference baseball series.

Cook's homer, his first of the season, came off Sun Devil reliever Charles Scott (0-2) and gave the win to Longhorn reliever Lanny Hengst (1-0).

Texas rallied to tie the nationally televised game at 5-5 on three ninth-inning runs with two outs as Rusty Richards ripped an RBI double and David Denny hit a two-run homer, his second of the year, on a 3-and-2 count.

Arizona State scored three times in the third inning to take a 5-1 lead on a George Lopez RBI double and Rick Morris' two-run single.

The Sun Devils led 2-1 on Todd Brown's sacrifice fly in the first inning and Mike Devereaux's run-producing groundout in the second, offsetting the Longhorns' first-inning run on an error.

Doug Hodo had an RBI single in the Texas sixth to make it 5-2.

The Longhorns, now 7-2, won the first two games of the series at Packard Stadium — 13-7 in 14 innings Friday night and 9-5 Saturday.

Keith Hernandez...

Civil War buff in flannels

By MICHAEL MARTINEZ
New York Times News Service

"People have sent me bullets, books by the groves, coins from the Civil War. Mostly, though, it's books. I come home from a road trip and there's usually eight books waiting for me."

WEST POINT, N.Y. — So many years have gone by, but Keith Hernandez can still remember those deliciously warm afternoons in the summer. The image is indelible: A youngster at a playground, swinging a bat and playing a game that would eventually make him one of the most talented baseball players in the big leagues.

But there's an equally strong image: The day Hernandez's older brother Gary brought home a pictorial history of the Civil War. "That hooked me," he said.

Ever since then, Hernandez, the Met first baseman, has been a student of history. On cross-country plane rides, in hotel rooms after games, on leisurely afternoons at home, he is occupied by books. Always history books.

Thursday, Hernandez relived some of it personally. At the invitation of the history department at the United States Military Academy, Hernandez sat in on a class about the Civil War, toured the hallowed grounds of West Point, met a few players from the Army baseball team and spoke at a formal dinner attended by officers and guests of the history department.

The highlight? "The history class," he said later. "I could have sat in on that class for hours. They discussed some things I wasn't familiar with, and they went into minute details about a lot of things."

HERNANDEZ was first approached about a visit to West Point when the Mets played an exhibition game against Army last summer. In September, he received an invitation. "I've been anxious to come since then," he said.

Hernandez has established a reputation as something of a Civil War buff. Although he's not a collector of war memorabilia, fans have given him a number of collectibles. "One guy from Gettysburg came to the ball park and brought me a sword," he said. "People have sent me bullets, books by the groves, coins from the Civil War. Mostly, though, it's books. I come home from a road trip and there's usually eight books waiting for me."

In a sense, the books came to life here. Guided by Capt. William Betson of the history department, Hernandez visited Trophy Point, where canons and mortars from previous wars are on display; stopped at Battle Monument, honoring dead from the regular army who fought in the Civil War; touched the guns that supposedly fired the first and last shots of the Civil War, and stopped at statues that stand in tribute to MacArthur, Eisenhower and Patton, all West Point graduates.

Clearly, this is not typical fare for a professional athlete in the offseason. But Hernandez, who never attended college and turned down scholarship offers from Navy and Air Force, said the image isn't quite accurate.

"Athletes aren't all brawn," he said. "There's a lot of brain. You'll find today's athletes are better educated and more aware of things. I've got a high school education — that's all. But I consider myself well-read in history, and I think of myself as being self-taught."

HERNANDEZ recalls vividly reading all three volumes of the book "Lee's Lieutenants," when he was about 20, then devouring a biography of Robert E. Lee, the commander of the Confederate army. That was another four volumes.

"I just picked up one book, read it and went on to the next," he said. "I couldn't put it down.

"What interested me about the Civil War," he said, "is that it threw us right into the Industrial Revolution, which changed the face of the entire country. But it was also the only war fought on our own soil, and it was brother versus brother, the issue of slavery.

"For four years," he recalled, "I read nothing but books about the Civil War. Then I got sick of it."

Hernandez said he expanded his reading to books about other wars. He recently read one text about Gen. Douglas MacArthur and just finished another about the Korean War. He made one tour stop Thursday at the West Point book store, picking up four history books to read at the Mets' spring training camp at St. Petersburg, Fla., where he will report next week.

"I never used to be a bookworm," he said, "and I don't consider myself one now. But there's a lot of time for reading during the season. After night games, I don't go to bed until 2 in the morning. I usually read."

In the Civil War class, taught by Capt. Timothy Bosse to a group of 10 attentive cadets, Hernandez listened quietly as the students discussed the early shaping of the conflict between the North and the South. Later, Hernandez said he hadn't been in a classroom since he was 17 years old. He's 31 now.

YES, HE said, he thinks about one day attending college. "I have plans to go back," he said. "But obviously, I made the right decision to play baseball. One day, I'll be in a position to take classes, and I'll take a few. But not to get a degree."

The kinds of classes? "History," he said. "It shapes the world as it is today. World War II did; it changed the world order. I love reading about people like Abraham Lincoln, Lee, MacArthur.

"I'm glad I came here," he said. "I wasn't disappointed."

No rocker for Kareem

Associated Press

NBA

As far as Magic Johnson is concerned, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is nowhere close to being ready to retire. "He can play as long as he wants to and do what he wants to," Johnson said Sunday after Abdul-Jabbar scored 39 points, one short of his season high, to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 119-114 ictory over the New York Knicks. "He's in great condition and has a super attitude."

Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's oldest player at age 37, was expected to retire after this season until he signed a one-year contract extension. On Sunday, he looked anything but ready for a rocking chair as he poured in 29 points after halftime.

"Obviously, we went to him in the second half," said Johnson, who had 19 points and 15 assists. "When the big man gets going, then everyone gets going. He makes everybody play better.

Despite Abdul-Jabbar's heroics and New York's 19-38 record, the Knicks kept the game close thanks to the efforts of Bernard King, Darrell Walker and their pressure defense.

"Their press gave us trouble until we slowed it down and went to Kareem," Laker Coach Pat Riley said. "That was the turning point."

"New York came at us with their defense and played a great game, but we were able to match their effort," said Abdul-Jabbar, who hit 16 of his 22 field-goal attempts and also had 10 rebounds. "When they started to press, we weren't able to get inside. Then, we adjusted and I got my shot."

King, the NBA's scoring leader, matched Abdul-Jabbar with 39 points, while Walker had 24 points, nine rebounds and eight assists.

Celtics 113, Pacers 100

Larry Bird scored 45 points and Robert Parish led a decisive spurt in the second quarter that carried Boston past Indiana.

The Pacers trailed by two points with 8:21 left in the first half before Parish, who finished with 19 points and 17 rebounds, scored nine points in a 17-6 run that gave the Celtics a 53-44 lead. In the second half, Boston stretched its advantage to as much as 88-64 before the Pacers rallied to cut the deficit to 102-96 with 2:55 to go in the game.

Julius Erving scored 31 points and triggered a run of 10 straight Philadelphia points at the end of the game against Utah.

Darrell Griffith, who led all scorers with 35 points, gave Utah a 106-107 lead with a free throw with 1:10 remaining. Then Erving's layup started the 10-0 run with 56 seconds to go, giving the 76ers the lead for good.

Trail Blazers 137, Spurs 121

Clyde Drexler had 37 points, 10 rebounds and nine assists, and teammate Jim Paxson added 35 points as Portland raced past San Antonio.

Drexler scored 19 points in the first quarter to help the Trail Blazers take a 36-25 lead. They went on to lead by as many as 22 points in the third quarter before a 17-4 streak pulled the Spurs within 97-88.

Nuggets 117, Suns 107

Alex English scored 32 points and Denver rallied from 19 points behind in the second half to beat Phoenix and extend its Midwest Division lead to 2½ games over Houston.

SuperSonics 108, Clippers 102

Gerald Henderson scored six points down the stretch as host Seattle handed the Clippers their 19th straight road loss. Los Angeles led 93-91 with 5:23 to go, then Tim McCormick hit a basket and Henderson put the Sonics ahead to staay on a fast-break layup.

Alcott posts 22nd career victory

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — While Amy Alcott isn't in the habit of chewing nails, the thought of it spurred her toward a 22nd career LPGA victory.

Alcott got off to a sluggish start in Sunday's final round of the $175,000 LPGA Circle K Tucson Open golf tournament. By the sixth hole she began talkng to herself.

"I told myself, 'Get tough. Let's eat nails. Go!,'" Alcott said. "Sometimes you live up that, and sometimes you don't. I figure you only come this way once, so let's rip it. Go for it."

LPGA Tucson

The 10-year pro proceeded to birdie the seventh, eighth and ninth holes and then sink a 12-foot eagle putt on the last hole to beat out Betsy King by a single stroke.

Alcott, who celebrated her 29th birthday Friday, tied the tournament's low round with a 5-under-67 and a 9-under-par 279 total on the par 72, 6,212-yard Randolph Golf Course.

King, the tournament's 54-hole leader, just missed an eagle putt herself on the final hole and settled for a round of 69 and a 280 total.

Hollis Stacy, who missed the cut here last year, and Pat Bradley finished at 283 — four shots back. Both Stacy and Bradley posted 2-under 70s Sunday.

Lights Out

Lightheavyweight champion Michael Spinks makes short work of challenger David Sears in title bout.

Spinks looks to big guys

From Wire Reports

BOXING—Michael Spinks, 26-0 after kayoing David Sears, has talked for sometime about bidding for the heavyweight championship, and his defense of the light heavyweight title Saturday did nothing to change his mind. "Things aren't looking too good for me as a light heavyweight, and before I get out I'd like to win the heavyweight championship." Spinks' brother, Leon, won and lost the heavyweight title in fights against Muhammad Ali in 1978...

British heavyweight champion David Pearce, been banned for nearly a year on medical grounds, hopes that a doctor's report will help him regain his license on March 13. The British Boxing Board of Control deferred a decision on Pearce's fitness to fight until he has proved that he has no sign of brain damage. He was banned by the BBBC after a brain scan revealed evidence of an abnormality following a loss to Lucien Rodriquez of France...

BASEBALL—Toby Harrah arrived at the Yankees' Fort Lauderdale, Fla., training camp ready to switch to the outfield. Harrah was invited to camp early to take a shot at becoming a left fielder, a position he has not played as a major leaguer. An trade with Pittsburgh that sent Dale Berra to the Yankees for Steve Kemp has locked Harrah out at third base where Manager Yogi Berra plans to platoon his son, Dale, and Mike Pagliarulo...

FOOTBALL—Harry User, USFL commissioner, reiterated the league's intention to switch to a fall schedule in 1986 even though it has yet to come up with a network TV contract for autumn play. But Usher said that decision could be reconsidered if the television problem isn't resolved. The USFL currently has a contract with ABC that brings it an estimated $14 million a year, and a $70 million, four-year deal with the ESPN cable network that can be transferred to the fall... Both CBS and NBC have said flatly they aren't interested in televising the USFL in the fall...

TRACK— Olympic champion Dietmar Mogenburg of West Germany set the world indoor best in the men's high jump, clearing 7 feet, 10 inches at Cologne...

Knight blames eruption on season-long frustration

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana basketball Coach Bobby Knight, ejected with three technical fouls after angrily hurling a chair across the court during a game against Purdue, indicated Sunday that his eruption stemmed from a season-long frustration with Big Ten Conference officials.

"I think sometimes you get in a situation where you obviously, probably let some frustrations go out, and maybe you shouldn't have ... probably I shouldn't have, but I did," Knight said on his weekly television show.

"I'm not going to dwell on that. We'll just go from here insofar as yesterday's (Saturday's) situation is concerned," he said. "Incidents are precipitated. It's not just the incident that needs to be looked at, but it has also got to be taken into consideration what precipitates the incident."

UNIVERSITY officials have refused to comment on Knight's latest outburst. Knight, coach of the United States' gold-medal winning team in last year's Olympic Games, had been reprimanded by the Big Ten last fall for missing the conference's annual preseason coaches' meeting, and Athletic Director Ralph Floyd said he has been asked by Indiana President John Ryan to prepare "an immediate report to send to the conference commissioner."

Saturday, with Indiana trailing Purdue 11-6 five minutes into the game, Knight protested a foul called on the Hoosiers' Marty Simmons. Then, as the Boilermakers inbounded the ball, a foul was called on Indiana's Daryl Thomas and Knight was given the first technical for swearing at an official. He then picked up the chair and threw it across the court, producing the second technical.

He continued shouting at the officials and was ejected with his third technical foul.

The incident was the latest in a series for the controversial Knight, who earlier this season kept all but one of his starters, center Uwe Blab, on the bench, as the Hoosiers lost to Illinois. Knight later dismissed one of those starters, Mike Giomi, from the team for "academic reasons," although he was still eligible by NCAA and Big Ten standards.

Giomi later said he was dismissed for cutting classes in violation of Knight's standard.

IN 1979, Knight was coach of the United States team in the Pan American Games at San Juan, Puerto Rico, when he became involved in a scuffle with a policeman. He was tried in absentia when he refused to report for his trial.

On his TV show Sunday, Knight told WTTV's Chuck Marlowe, "I've been very upset with the officiating all year long, Chuck. I don't think that's any secret to anybody."

"I had the most disappointing session I've ever had with a person in athletics when I had a session in Chicago with the Big Ten supervisor of officials. His attitude, his approach to it, just left me almost thinking that it is an absolutely hopeless situation that we have. I've never been more disgusted with something.

"This was a couple of weeks ago," Knight continued. "The conference office is very much aware of my feelings, because they happened to be there at the same time."

The 72-63 loss to Purdue was Indiana's fifth defeat at Assembly Hall this season, the most in Knight's 14 years as coach, and dropped the Hoosiers to 6-8 in the Big Ten and 14-10 overall with four games left. Indiana never has had a losing record under Knight.

"I think a problem we have is there is so much involved in both college football and basketball now in preseason evaluation of teams by people that in almost all cases aren't really qualified to evaluate teams," added Knight, whose Hoosiers were ranked fourth in the nation at the start of the season.

"Expectations ... not just among fans, but expectations or thoughts develop among players," Knight said. "It's hard for me to tell you, as a player, that we're not as good as these people say we are. We've got a fine line to walk.

"PEOPLE, particularly in the league, have just adopted a very physical approach toward us. They've come at us. They've really gone at Steve Alford very hard," Knight said of his sophomore guard, a member of the Olympic gold medal team. "They've concentrated great efforts on Steve. And in Steve's behalf, here's a kid 6-1, 160 pounds and not real quick and it's tough for him. He's having a tough time.

"We haven't had the kind of play inside defensively or on the boards that can enable us to play against teams that do have strength. What I think we have to have, more than anything else, is a combination of improvement with both quickness and strength. Or we don't get any better," Knight said.

Hoosier players support volatile coach, but...

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Indiana University basketball players generally supported a chair-throwing incident by their coach, Bobby Knight, but Purdue's Steve Reid, who got six technical foul shots from the outburst, said he "was shocked."

"That's about as simple as I can put it. I've never seen anything like this happen before," said Reid. "I was going up to the free throw line and a chair went by. I didn't know what to do."

Knight hurled the chair across the court after getting one technical for protesting an official's call five minutes into Saturday's Big Ten Conference game. He then was hit with the second technical and then ejected with a third technical foul after continuing to argue with the officials.

Purdue, leading 11-6 at the time, built the lead to 14-6 as Reid hit three of the six foul shots. The Boilermakers went on to beat the Hoosiers 72-63 as assistant coach Jim Crews took over on the Indiana bench.

"I think it was a thing to inspire us and fire us up," said Indiana freshman Kreigh Smith.

SOPHOMORE DARYL Thomas, who was called for the foul that triggered Knight's first technical, said, "It's not something that we were really expecting to happen, but then again we really don't know what to expect."

Dan Dakich, noting chants of "Bobby, Bobby" by the Assembly Hall crowd as Knight left the floor, said, "The people were great. It seems a lot of people were really down on us. The fans came out and they were really outstanding. I just wish we were as good as they were. I've seen a lot of things in my four years here but I haven't seen that one."

"He did what he thought was right. You people (the press) don't see what goes on in practice and all the letters (of support)," Dakich said.

PURDUE'S James Bullock said, "I don't know what he (Knight) is doing. He's a tough coach and I think (Purdue's) Gene Keady is a tough coach, too. But, he (Knight) gets a little frantic at times. Throwing chairs at a college basketball game is a little too far."

Purdue's Todd Mitchell, who led the Boilermakers with a career-high 21 points, said, "I think Coach Knight did it to get his team fired up. After the incident, we just wanted to beat them worse. I don't think he should be suspended. I know Coach Knight had a reason for doing it. If that's what he wants to do to get his team fired up, that's all right with me."

But Keady said the technicals also inspired Purdue.

"We wanted to beat them by 30 points," he said. "I don't remember anything like it. He coaches his way and I my way."

Red Sox catchers show power

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Veteran catcher Rich Gedman and rookie receiver Marc Sullivan found home run range with shots over the wall in batting practice Sunday in featuring the Boston Red Sox's third workout at Chain O'Lakes Park.

Gedman, who recently signed a contract for nearly $400,000 for the 1985 season, picked up where he left off last year, when he hit .269 with 24 homers and 72 runs batted in.

He belted a couple of shots off the screen above the wall in right and drilled line drives in batting practice against coaches Walt Hriniak and Tony Torchia.

Sullivan, who hit only .204 but had 15 homers and 63 RBI at Pawtucket of the International League last year, also was impressive in batting against the two coaches.

While his father, Haywood, co-owner of the Red Sox, watched from a vantage point down the right-field line, young Sullivan lined a couple of 350-foot shots off the screen in left. He hit the ball solidly to all fields.

KISSIMMEE, Fla.— Astros pitcher Joe Sambito, 32, hopes to make a comeback. "This year, I want to be better. I want to be close to where I was before," said Sambito, who between 1977 and 1981 won 30 games and saved 67 others for the Astros.

Sambito was pitching in St. Louis in April 1982 when a ligament in his left elbow was torn and a bone was chipped. In July, doctors removed a tendon from his right leg and placed it in the injured elbow. But they also had to sever the nerves in his hand.

In 1982, he had two more operations to remove scar tissue from his elbow.

Sambito spent about three weeks pitching in a minor league in Tucson, then returned to the Astros mound in May 1984.

TAMPA, Fla. — Agent Tom Reich said advised Cincinnati Reds outfielder Cesar Cedeno to plead no contest to a charge of driving while intoxicated in order to put the matter behind him.

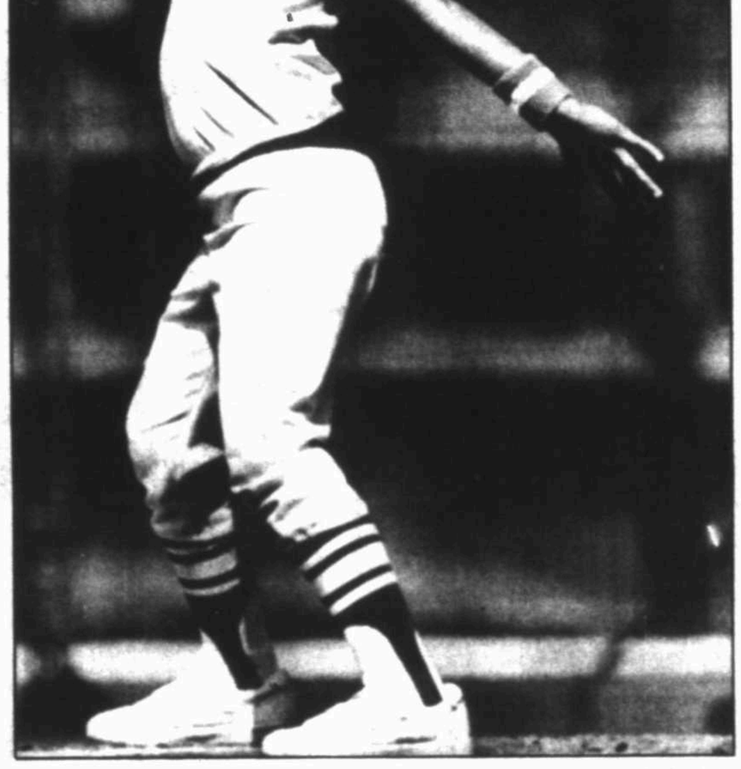

Cedeno entered the plea in Houston Friday. He was fined $400 and ordered to pay $7,000 for damages when he wrecked his car Jan. 23 on a residential Houston street. Cedeno also got a suspended 120-day sentence and was put on two years' probation. Cedeno had asserted he wasn't drunk when his car hit a tree. No one was seriously injured in the accident, but Cedeno was charged with driving while intoxicated.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Sid Fernandez, who won four of his first five decisions for the New York Mets last season and then finished at 6-6, claimed Sunday that the weight he lost over the winter will help prove "I'm better than a .500 pitcher."

Fernandez, a native of Honolulu, Hawaii, who came to the Mets in a December deal with the Los Angeles Dodgers for Bob Bailor and Carlos Diaz, has slimmed down to 217 pounds. He left New York last October a robust 236.

Fernandez lost weight, he says, by eliminating red meat from his menu along with snacks and sweets. He switched instead to more chicken, fish and vegetables, and fruit for a snack.

TAMPA, Fla. — Outfielder Eric Davis was out of uniform Sunday, but that didn't bother Cincinnati Reds Player-manager Pete Rose. Davis reported for spring training Sunday, three days before the rest of the squad is expected. In his eagerness to get a start, he grabbed a helmet and bat and walked up to the plate wearing sweat pants to take some swings against Reds pitchers, who started workouts last week.

Shocked McCumber wins

Doral-Eastern

MIAMI (AP) — A palm tree, a couple of rumors, a lost ball that wasn't lost and some moments of sheer panic all had roles in the bizarre wind-up of Mark McCumber's victory in the Doral-Eastern Open golf tournament.

"I was in a state of shock. I lost control," McCumber said of a few frantic moments Sunday when it appeared, or was rumored, that his tee shot on the 18th hole had lodged in a palm tree.

"It was a very scary moment. I didn't want the tournament to get away from me on some freaky thing," McCumber said after he had outlasted Jack Nicklaus, Tom Kite — and the rumors — for a one-shot decision in one of the more unusual finishes the PGA Tour has produced in recent years.

McCumber won, collecting $72,000 from the total purse of $400,000, on a 284 total composed of rounds of 70, 71, 72 and 71. As testimony to the severity of the winds, it was the highest winning total in the 24-year history of the tournament, the highest winning score on the Tour in at least two seasons and the first time in at least five years that a tournament had been won by a man who failed to shoot in the 60s.

Kite was second alone at 285.

Nicklaus, with a closing 74 that included bogeys on two of his last three holes, tied Roger Maltbie for third at 287, one under par. Maltbie had a 70 despite a bogey-double bogey finish.

Earnhardt wins 400 hard way

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — "That's just racing," Dale Earnhardt said of the two bumps he gave Tim Richmond in assuming the lead for good in the $264,000 Miller High Life 400 NASCAR Grand National stock car race.

"I had to make something happen because he wasn't going to let me by," said Earnhardt, who averaged 67.945 mph in Sunday's race. "He (Richmond) would have done the same thing if he was in my position."

Earnhardt, who collected $33,625 for the win over the Richmond Fairgrounds .542-mile oval, broke past Richmond on a restart after a caution on lap 380 of the 400-lap event and outran Geoff Bodine and Darrell Waltrip for the victory.

Richmond 400

"I got good traction on the restart," said Earnhardt. "He (Richmond) wanted the low groove and I wanted the low groove, but I got there a little faster."

Earnhardt, who started fourth in a Chevrolet, ran among the leaders most of the day. He went to the front for the first time on lap 289, when he went past Richmond with an outside move.

He stretched his lead to nearly a half lap until a caution flag came out on lap 364. Earnhardt and most of the other leaders pitted for tires but Richmond stayed out and regained the lead.

Midland's Bobby Hillin took 11th place, following up his ninth place finish of last week at Daytona.

Flyers close in on Caps

Associated Press

By the way they were talking, you would think the Philadelphia Flyers were struggling at home. Instead, the Flyers concluded a perfect six-game homestand Sunday night with a 4-1 decision over the Calgary Flames. Yet they were looking forward to hitting the road.

"I'm certainly looking forward to going on the road," said Flyers goalie Pelle Lindbergh, who had 31 saves and was credited by both coaches as being the difference in the National Hockey League contest. "It's easier to concentrate and there aren't as many distractions."

The Flyers moved within two points of first-place Washington in the Patrick Division as Brian Propp, Dave Poulin and Rich Sutter each had a goal and an assist. The victory was the 700th in franchise history, making the Flyers the first expansion team to reach that number.

Dollar still booming

LONDON (AP) — The dollar boomed again on world money exchanges early today, shattering records against a string of currencies and helping knock nearly $11 an ounce off the price of gold in Zurich.

The dollar's surge — it has now set records on 15 of 17 business days this month — followed President Reagan's ruling out last Friday of large-scale American intervention to curb the stampeding greenback.

Speaking after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met with him to urge such action, Reagan said it was up to European governments to help their own currencies by eliminating "rigidities" in their economies.

All-time dollar highs were set against the British pound, French franc and Italian lire, among others. The U.S. currency also reached a 13-year high of over 3.40 West German marks and hit levels not seen in 13 years against the Dutch guilder and in 10 years against the Swiss franc.

"Bankers Set for Dollar Onslaught," read a headline in The Times of London.

"It has become clear the American administration is not prepared to be party to the kind of substantial intervention that might turn one of the dollar's pauses into a sharp decline," The Times observed.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar paused only briefly amid rumors of dollar sales by the Bank of Japan.

By the end of the day's trading, it was up again — for the fifth straight session — at 263.05 yen, compared with 262.35 yen Friday. Later, in Europe, the dollar was at 262.90 yen.

When trading opened in London, the British pound lost nearly a cent, plummeting to $1.0633, compared with $1.0730 Friday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:

-3.4142 West German marks, up from 3.3900.

-2.8830 Swiss francs, up from 2.8560.

--10.4760 French francs, up from 10.3550.

-3.8570 Dutch guilders, up from 3.8390.

-2,116.50 Italian lire, up from 2,111.00.

--1.3965 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3870.

Gold prices got similar rough treatment from the strong dollar, dealers said.

In Zurich, Europe's largest gold market, the bid price at noon was $287.75 an ounce, down from $298.50 late Friday.

Icahn may be discussing takeover with Pennzoil

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Carl C. Icahn, the New York multimillionaire who is trying to take over the Phillips Petroleum Co., is negotiating with one or more companies seeking to "become involved, deeply involved" in buying Phillips, Wall Street sources said Sunday.

The most likely candidate, these sources said, is the Pennzoil Co., a big Houston-based oil producer. But it is still too early, they said, to tell whether any kind of agreement can be reached.

Discussions were said to center on the possibility of becoming a partner with Icahn or even of buying all of Phillips.

Icahn, who already owns 5 percent of Phillips, has offered $60 a share in cash for enough additional stock to give him half the company. He is offering $50 a share in securities for the rest. He has raised $1.5 billion toward the cash portion of his offer but needs $2.7 billion more to finance the deal, which Phillips maintains he will not be able to raise.

Neither J. Hugh Liedtke, the chairman of Pennzoil, nor Icahn would comment Sunday on the reported negotiations, but industry sources said they had heard that the Tulsa-born Liedtke, or representatives for Liedtke, had approached Icahn over the weekend to find out whether there was some way he could get involved in the Phillips situation.

Oil analysts said Liedtke had access to at least $2.5 billion in credit lines and other funds that could enable him to bid for Phillips. Last year he almost succeeded in taking over the Getty Oil Company by joining with Gordon Getty, its biggest stockholder. Liedtke lost out at the last minute, however, when Texaco Inc. outbid him. He has been searching ever since for a new opportunity to buy a major American oil company.

Talks with Icahn are understood to have begun soon after 3,500 Phillips stockholders met Friday at the company's headquarters in Bartlesville, Okla., to vote on whether to approve a company-sponsored recapitalization plan.

The plan, which has been widely criticized by major Phillips stockholders, would put control of the company into employees' hands and would give shareholders a package of stock and bonds that Phillips values at $53 a share but that Wall Street analysts value at much less.

Phillips stock, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, closed Friday at $48.75, up 87.5 cents.

After a 90-minute discussion of the plan, William C. Douce, chairman of Phillips, announced Friday that the meeting would be recessed until the following day to permit a final tabulation of the voting. He said the polls would remain open while the ballot counting continued.

Icahn then rushed to the Federal District Court in Tulsa to challenge the decision to keep the polls open and to try to impound any ballots that stockholders voted after the Friday meeting ended.

Albert Edelman, a New York lawyer who as a Phillips stockholder has been suing the company to enjoin the voting, asked a Delaware Chancery Court to cancel any ballots voted after the Friday meeting.

Hearings on two lawsuits protesting the delay are expected to be held early this week.

On Friday evening, Phillips announced that the Saturday session would last only long enough for the company to say the meeting would reconvene at 2 p.m. Wednesday. Douce rejected a request from a lawyer for Icahn to close the polls, but he agreed to keep the later ballots segregated to help the courts deal with the situation.

Because Phillips has refused to close the polls, Wall Street analysts inferred that the company still did not have enough votes to approve the recapitalization plan. It needs approval by 51 percent of the 154.6 million shares outstanding. Analysts noted, however, that Phillips had set a definite date (Wednesday) for the meeting to resume, a possible sign that by then it would be in a position to certify the vote. Icahn is thought to be protesting the extra time because he fears Phillips will pick up additional votes.

If the recapitalization plan is approved, Icahn is expected to withdraw his tender offer, but his plans after that are unclear. If the recapitalization plan is defeated, Douce said as late as last Friday that Phillips "would address the whole situation again." He maintained, however, that "no approach had been made to me or anyone" to buy the company.

Even so, Wall Street analysts have long speculated that some major oil company, including Exxon, Unocal, Royal Dutch-Shell, Atlantic Richfield and Pennzoil, might be interested.

TRC predicts doubling of Texas strip mines

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission says that the mining industry is preparing plans to double the number of lignite strip mines in the state within the next few years.

"The information we are getting shows that we are about to be inundated with mining applications," Jerry Hill, director of the division of surface mining and reclamation of the Texas Railroad Commission, said Sunday.

The commission staff has been told that the mining industry plans to file permit applications for 16 new mines in 12 counties in Texas this year, Hill said.

He said nine more requests should be filed this year for renewals of existing permits. Currently, 16 lignite mines operate in the state. The commission regulates lignite and other strip mining operations.

The applications, if granted, would increase land under permit from 105,000 acres to nearly 190,000 acres. Only part of the land under permit actually would be mined.

Hill said companies last year companies filed requests for three lignite mining permits and no renewals. He said applications are normally filed about two years before full-scale operation is to begin.

Lignite is a low-quality coal used primarily to fuel electric power plants. The mineral is found in Texas in two belts running generally from the northeast to the southwest.

Industry experts have predicted a boom in Texas because lignite is in plentiful supply and is easily accessible in parts of the state. It is considered a cheaper fuel than natural gas and oil.

"The economy is picking up and the utilities will be looking more and more to lignite to meet the expected growth in demand for power," Hill told the Austin American Statesman.

He said two major applications should be filed this year are from the Texas Utilities system, the biggest lignite miner and user in the state. One operation for 22,000 acres is planned for Robertson County. The second, planned for 10,000 acres in Rusk County, is to eventually cover 26,000 acres.

Other major applications expected this year are for mines in Milam, Grimes, and Atascosa counties. The Shell Mining Co. is expected to file an application for mining 7,000 acres in Milam County, Hill said.

The Texas Municipal Power Agency is expected to seek a permit for a mine on 6,700 acres in Grimes County, and the San Miguel Electric Cooperative Inc. has plans for a new mine on 6,500 acres in Atascosa County, Hill said.

An unidentified company plans to seek a permit for 13,000 acres near Calvert in Robertson County, he said.

Airline could pay $20 million in bankruptcy proceedings

Continental reports first profit in five years in 1984

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines, which filed for court protection from its creditors almost 18 months ago, is expected to spend two-thirds of its 1984 net profits on bankruptcy proceedings, a Houston newspaper reported.

The airline spent about $15 million in federal bankruptcy court last year and a current trial involving the acquisition of new aircraft is expected to cost the airline another $5 million, according to a story published Sunday in the Houston Chronicle.

Continental filed for protection from its creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code in September 1983. The airline reported a $30 million net profit in 1984, its first profit in five years.

The projected $20 million expense figure is about two-thirds of Continental's operating profits for last year and is more than twice the amount Braniff Inc. spent during its 21-month reorganization proceedings.

The carrier is entitled to file a final plan by April 13 to reorganize its debts unless the court extends the deadline or allows creditors to file a plan.

"We are working as quickly as we can to file a plan of reorganization," Continental spokesman Mike Cinelli said. "We hope to have it filed by midsummer."

Houston has only two bankruptcy judges, so the court proceedings have become almost as lengthy as they are expensive and complicated.

U.S. District Judge Glover Roberts of Biloxi, Miss., was called in to help with the massive case. Since then, Continental's expenses mounted with the costs of shuttling between Houston and Biloxi.

Earlier this month, the New York law firm Weil Gotshal & Manges, which is preparing Continental's reorganization plan, opened a Houston office with two local attorneys as partners.

Last year, Weil Gotshal charged the airline court-approved fees and expenses of $879,941.93.

Continental's lead counsel in the bankruptcy proceedings, Sheinfeld, Maley & Kay, last year had fees and expenses approved by the court that totaled more than $1.2 million.

Arthur Anderson & Co., another prominent accounting firm, charged Continental $2 million in 1983 and 1984 for the bankruptcy petition, according to documents kept by a group of Continental's unsecured creditors.

In March 1984, the Houston law firm Foreman & Dyess dissolved, and several of its commercial attorneys formed the firm of Dotson, Babcock & Scofield, which represents Continental's unsecured creditors.

The carrier also was billed $3.7 million by Washington law firm Akin Bump Strauss Hauer & Feld to defend Continental against its union employees in litigation.

During a recent proceeding concerning fees approved in the case, Roberts said, "I'm extremely sensitive to the dollars going out here. I'm cognizant of the fact that the debtor has to write the check for it."

"Everyone's in this boat together, and it's time to paddle in the same direction," Glover told attorneys for the airline and its creditors.

But some attorneys and accountants say Continental's old financial woes have made the airline one of their biggest customers.

Bruce J. Ruzinsky, an attorney with Dotson Babcock, said Continental's fees are "a very large billing" for the new firm. As of Dec. 4, up to $808,948.03 of Dotson Babcock's fees and expenses were court-approved in the case.

Carbide head says he will fight law suits

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Union Carbide Corp. will "fight right to the end" any legal attempts to prove the company negligent in the Bhopal, India, disaster that left more than 2,000 people dead, the chairman says.

A negotiated settlement would avoid years of tangled court proceedings, and the chemical giant has no intention of ducking responsibility to the victims, said company chairman Warren Anderson.

U.S. lawyers have filed billions of dollars in lawsuits against Union Carbide on behalf of victims of the Dec. 3 methyl isocyanate leak in Bhopal, many of them claiming the company was negligent.

"We've said right from the start that the proper answer for the people if you have any compassion for them at all is not to go through a litigation of liability," Anderson said in an interview published in the Charleston Sunday Gazette-Mail.

"I'll accept my responsibility," he said. "I don't know of any tort kind of issue, class-action issue, that wasn't solved by compensation arrived at through a compromise, sooner or later. So why wait for later?"

Anderson said Union Carbide will not brook an attempt to make it appear that it was negligent.

"We will fight right to the end. When somebody tries to say we sent over less than the best technology we have, we will fight for the competence of Indians," he said. "They've demonstrated competence. They're in the space age. They're in the nuclear age. They're very capable people."

Some of the suits contend that Union Carbide installed inferior equipment at the Bhopal plant in comparison with technology used at Institute.

Anderson, who was in Charleston last week to address his company's Kanawha Valley employees, also said he doesn't believe the cases should be handled in U.S. courts at all. Many have been consolidated in federal court in New York.

NACE sets next meeting

The March meeting of the Permian Basin National Association of Corrosion Engineers (NACE) will be March 5 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa of Midland.

The speaker will be Ira Krams with Solarex Corp. Krams is a registered Professional Engineer, has a U.S. patent on the solar module, and has been associated with Solarex for three years.

Krams topic will be "Solar Energy in the Oil and Gas Industry".

Cocktails will be served at 6:30 p.m., with dinner to follow at 7:00 p.m.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market lapsed into a broad decline today, weighed down by interest-rate worries.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 6.18 points last week, dropped another 5.52 to 1,270.32 by noon-time today on Wall Street.

Losers held a 3-1 lead over gainers in the mid-day tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

In the credit markets this morning, interest rates on short-term Treasury bills were mixed, while rates on long-term government bonds rose slightly.

Eastman Kodak climbed ¾ to 69. The company said it formed a new division to produce and market electronic components.

Precious-metals issues tumbled as the price of gold continued its recent slide. Homestake Mining fell 1⅜ to 20¾; ASA Ltd. 2 to 45⅛; Dome Mines ⅝ to 7⅛, and Campbell Red Lake ⅞ to 15¾.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .57 to 103.44. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 2.17 at 223.93.

Volume on the Big Board came to 39.96 million shares at noon-time, against 42.57 million at the same point Friday.

BUSINESS MIRROR

IRA savings can be tapped for short-term cash reserves

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — When savers contribute money to individual retirement accounts, they generally think of the money as locked up until they reach retirement age.

They have duly noted all the admonitions that it can't be withdrawn without a penalty before they reach age 59½, unless they die or are permanently disabled before then.

Even taking out a loan using IRA funds as collateral is considered a distribution, subjecting the amount involved to regular income taxes and the 10 percent penalty tax.

But while that rule is true in general, experts in personal finance point out, it provides for an important exception that can allow you to tap your IRA savings for short periods of time. This loophole, they point out, can be especially useful in emergencies.

Once a year, you are permitted to "roll over" an existing IRA. This differs significantly from an IRA transfer, in which your money is directly handed over by one trustee to another.

"With a rollover you can receive the money yourself," points out the U.S. League of Savings Institutions. "And you have 60 days to invest the money in another IRA."

During that two-month span, you are free to do whatever you wish with the money.

Prentice-Hall, publisher of tax information, provides a hypothetical example of how this grace period can come in handy:

"Smith, age 40, has an IRA of $5,000. Smith gets hit with a $5,000 medical emergency and does not have the cash at hand to pay the bill.

"Smith has a $10,000 government bond maturing in 45 days, but he can't wait that long. Reimbursement from Smith's medical insurance will be only partial and, most likely, slow in coming."

Smith has several options open to him in this case. He could, for instance, borrow $5,000 somewhere, being careful not to pledge his IRA nest egg as collateral (the government bond would presumably serve the same purpose nicely). But of course, the loan would cost him interest.

He could seek out a broker or banker and sell the government bond before it matures. This tactic, however, might well mean that he would have to pay a commission and accept a lower price than the bond's value at maturity.

Thus, he might consider withdrawing the $5,000 from his IRA and paying the medical bill. When the government bond matures, he will still have time to use part of the proceeds from it to set up a new IRA.

As crisp and clean as it may sound, there are some potential pitfalls involved in this kind of deal.

Smith, in the example above, must take care to see that he stays within the 60-day limit. The Internal Revenue Service won't listen sympathetically to tales later on of how he was so preoccupied with other things that he forgot and let the deadline pass.

Furthermore, while the money isn't invested in an IRA, it can't perform its normal function of generating earnings that compound tax-free. It is conceivable, for instance, that shares of a mutual fund in which the original IRA was invested could soar in value just after the money is withdrawn.

Financial advisers say that savers ideally should dip into their IRAs this way only when they have a pressing need for the money, are sure of being able to put an equal amount back into a new IRA within 60 days, and have a pretty good idea of where they will establish the new account.

Still, it is worthwhile to be aware that you can take "frozen" IRA savings and thaw them out every once in a while without getting burned.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Subordinated contracts prove very worthwhile

By BILL DOYLE

Q. For the past eight or nine months I have been getting literature through the mail from an equipment leasing company that sells six-month "subordinated thrift certificates" paying 13.5 percent annual interest. Are these good investments? Are they as safe as bank certificates of deposit? Is the interest they pay tax free?

A. First off, let's explain how an equipment leasing company operates. In order to buy or rent the equipment it leases out, that type of corporation has to have money.

When the company doesn't have enough cash or credit on hand, it might borrow what it needs. One method of borrowing is through the sale of securities to the public.

Subordinated thrift certificates are debt securities. When you buy one of those certificates, the leasing company promises to pay you the stated amount of interest for the term of the certificate and to pay the certificate's face amount at maturity — six months, in this case.

If the company has no financial problems, you collect your interest and get back the money you loaned. Assuming that happens, you have made a good investment.

However, there's no way in the world an equipment leasing company's debt securities can be counted as safe as bank CDs. CDs are covered by federal deposit insurance. Corporate debt securities are not and have varying degrees of risk.

How much risk? That depends on the financial condition of each company.

Those thrift certificates are "subordinated." That means the company has other debt securities "senior" to the certificates. If the company goes bankrupt, the senior securities would have to be paid off before the subordinated certificates get a dime.

Interest from those thrift certificates, along with interest from all corporate debt securities, is not tax free. It is subject to income tax.

***

Q. Last year, I bought a five-year certificate of deposit on which the interest is to be compounded and accumulated until maturity. No interest was paid to me last year. No interest was set aside for my benefit in any way.

Should the bank that issued the certificate have reported taxable interest to the Internal Revenue Service?

A. Of course! A bank or any other payer of interest or dividends is required to report that payment. The bank sent you a Form 1099, listing the amount of interest that accrued on your CD last year. A copy went to the IRS.

You say "no interest was paid" to you. The interest was credited to your account. To use your words, it was "set aside for your benefit."

You're required to report that interest on your 1984 income tax return. If you don't, you can expect to hear from the revenooers.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Tonsilitis more severe than common cold

Dear Dr. Solomon: On occasion, one or another of my children gets a cold with a sore throat. Recently one of our youngsters had a real bad sore throat, and our pediatrician said she had tonisillitis. What's the difference between tonsillitis and an ordinary sore throat? — Mrs. E.D., Richmond, Va.

Dear Mrs. D.: A youngster who has a sore throat that is due to a cold may have other symptoms, such as a cough, a runny nose and muscle aches. A youngster who has tonsillitis is a sicker patient. He or she may have severe throat pain and may run a much higher fever.

Tonsillitis in a young child can produce fever that is high enough to result in convulsions. In addition, the child may find it difficult to take food, liquids and oral medication. In general, the common sore throat is not an indication for surgery; whether tonsillitis is an indication for surgery depends upon how often it occurs and how severe it is.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have heard of hypnosis being used to get people to stop smoking and to lose weight. I've even heard of it being used during childbirth. But now all I hear is that it is being used on people who has been badly burned. Would you please explain what hypnosis is supposed to accomplish for these people? — Ralph, Falls Church, Va.

Dear Ralph: A report from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia suggests that hypnosis may encourage the release of accumulated fluids in burn patients, and thereby reduce the extent of their injuries. In one study, hypnotized patients were found to eliminate more fluid through urination than did a control group of patients who were not hypnotized.

Burn patients are subject to leakage of fluids from blood vessels into surrounding tissue, and this causes additional damage. By helping patients release accumulated fluids, hypnosis may help reduce the extent of the damage.

Dear Dr. Solomon: First I heard about Olympic athletes using steroids, then I heard about college students who were using steroids, and now I've heard about high school students who are using steroids. Are these steroids really as bad as some people say they are? If they are, some of the high school students I know are going to be in plenty of trouble before they are much older. — Gerald, Washington, D.C.

Dear Gerald: Athletes who use anabolic steroids are flirting with disaster. A review of the literature has revealed a number of cases of liver cancer in people who used these steroids. Athletes should realize that there are more important thing in life than their performance on the field.

For Pamela, Duluth, Minnesota: I cannot disagree with your statement that in the past, X-ray treatments were used for conditions that did not warrant such treatment. Today we know considerably more about both the benefits and risk of radiation therapy, and it is now being used primarily in the treatment of malignant diseases.

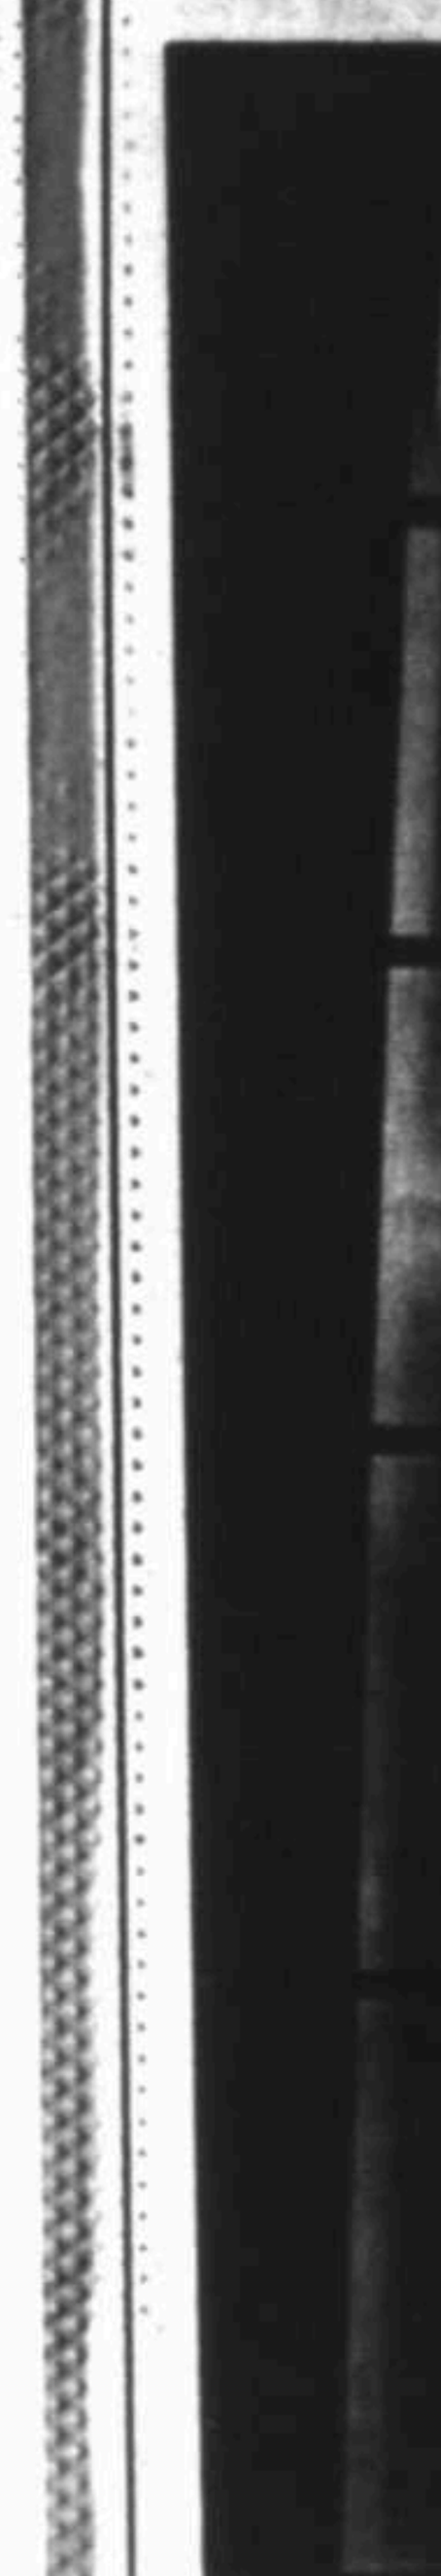

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am an insulin-dependent diabetic and I am doing fairly well on regular insulin. Would there be any advantage if I were to switch over to human insulin? — Reggie, San Antonio, Tx

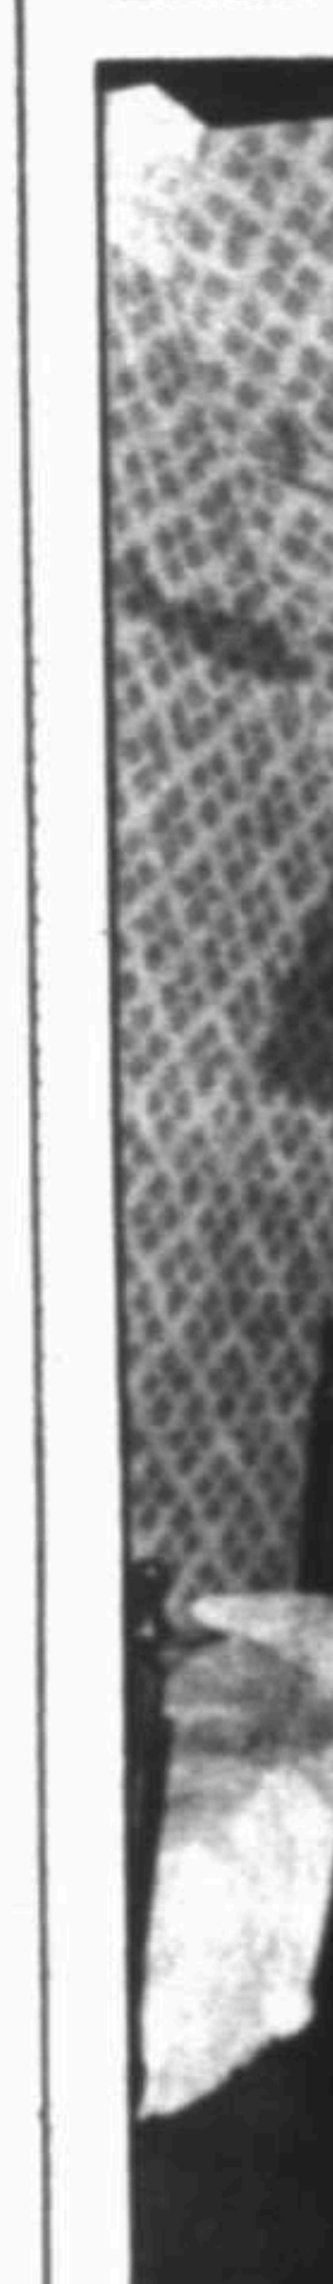

Dear Reggie: If you are doing well on the older insulin preparations, I don't see what advantage there would be in switching to human insulin. However, human insulin may be of some advantage in other patients, such as those who develop diabetes during pregnancy, or those who require the use of insulin during surgery.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine is quite a bit overweight, and she says it is because she has a lazy thyroid. When I asked her if her doctor told her this, she said that he didn't exactly say so but that is what she understood. Is this possible? — Ms. B.P., Orlando, Fla.

Dear Ms. P.: A deficiency in thyroid activity (hypothyroidism) generally is not a cause of obesity. In the first place, many of these patients are not very interested in eating and therefore do not eat very much. In addition, some have an impaired sense of taste and smell, and this, of course, affects their appetite.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Peter Pan prepares to leave for Never-Never Land.

Peter Pan (Renee Spicer) demonstrates flying for the Darling children in Midland Community Theatre's production of the J.M. Barrie classic. The musical is set to close March 23.

Flying high

The call of constant adventure, eternal youth and life in Never-Never Land, a place where dreams are born and time is never planned, has beckoned children of all ages since 1904 when Scottish playwright and novelist Sir James Matthew Barrie wrote "Peter Pan." Since then, countless youngsters have anticipated Peter and Tinker Bell's flight through their window and their subsequent escape together.

No production of "Peter Pan" is complete without flying.

In today's world, Peter Foy, founder of Foy Inventerprises Inc., has an almost exclusive hold on fairy dust, the essential ingredient as all Peter Pan fans know, for flying.

Thus, before Midland Community Theatre opened its production, executive director Don Bachmann contacted Foy at his home base, Las Vegas, which is for many an American version of Never-Never Land.

Foy Inventerprises, which holds the patent on the flying equipment responsible for Mary Martin's successful flying on Broadway in 1954 and, in the 1980s, Sandy Duncan's Broadway run and national tour, sent Joe McGeough to Midland to train the cast members here.

"Everybody's dream is to fly and a lot of these younger kids who fly in the show are really taken by it," says McGeough.

"A couple of them are scared at first; they're not really sure whether they have a fear of heights or they're just afraid of the flying in general because they are flying in a confined area within the nursery and then later on the nursery breaks away and they do the big flight to Never-Never Land."

Even those who may have been frightened at first, McGeough says, "Once they've been up there a little bit and have overcome their surroundings, they really enjoy it."

When the play was first produced, child labor laws in England made the use of a boy as Peter Pan prohibitive. The tradition developed, following the successful portrayals of Peter by Eva La Gallienne, British stage, and Maude Adams, American stage, that Peter's role be played by a woman.

Although others in the cast, the Darling children — Wendy, Michael, John and later Jane (Wendy's daughter), fly, most of the flying is done by Peter.

In addition to flying Miss Duncan during the national tour, McGeough has traveled all over the country training Peters in professional and amateur theaters as well as in high schools and junior highs. The demand has increased since the rights for "Peter Pan" were released when the national tours closed, and, in 1984, Foy Inventerprises worked with 100 productions of the play.

McGeough has found that, once children become used to being airborne, it is often easier for them to appear to be performing without effort than it is for adult females playing the role of Peter.

"Sometimes the adult woman has to do a little bit more acting than the kids do in their flying," he says.

Part of this may be due to the fact that to fly is to be very sore, not just for a couple of days but for an extended period of time.

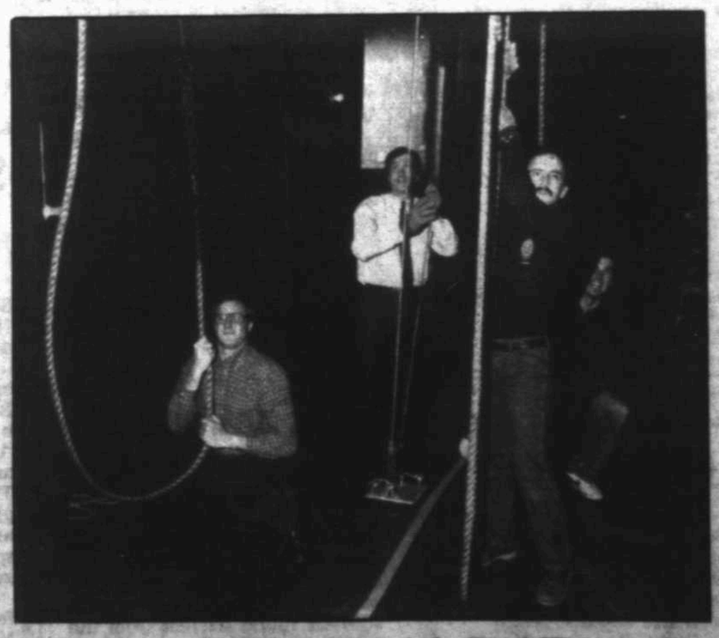

Teaching flying requires that McGeough instruct thespians in how to move in the air.

"Flying, to make it really work, it's almost like a dance," he says. "We've got the operators off in the wings who are looking on stage through different sections of the scenery, and the performer who's on the end of the wire.

Please see FLYING, Page2C

Don Bachmann helps Ms. Spicer tighten the straps on her harness while the handlers check the wire.

Backstage, handlers, from left, Fred Wagner, Joe Golding, Paul Talbot and Brian Schwanitz, coordinate flying onstage by watching what's happening through the scrim-covered cutout in the set.

Iranian, Iraqi share dorm room

Doraid Hana, left, of Baghdad, Iraq, and Kevin Stouse of Esfhan, Iran, share a dorm room at Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls. While Iran and Iraq are locked in a bitter struggle on the other side of the world, these two natives of those countries are coexisting peacefully.

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — While the neighboring countries of Iran and Iraq are locked in a bitter struggle on the other side of the world, two natives of those countries are coexisting peacefully at Midwestern State University.

But more than sharing the same campus, they have gone a step further and share the same living area.

Kevin Stouse, 22, of Esfhan, Iran, and Doraid Hana, 21, of Baghdad, Iraq, have been roommates at MSU's Pierce Hall since fall.

"It sounds strange to some people when they first hear it, but the anger between the two countries is not between the people. It's between the governments," said Stouse, who came to the United State in 1979.

Hana agreed.

"Iraq is considered an Arabian country, so the people are really the same. It is the governments that get involved in the war. Lots of people in my country refused to go to the war," said Hana, a resident of the United States since 1981.

Although they have different opinions about their own countries, the two said they share feelings about the war.

"We share the same view about the war. I don't agree with what my country does," Stouse said.

"Iran claims Iraq started the war, and Iraq claims Iran started the war. I agree with my country, and I really like my government. But I don't like the war," said Hana.

While Hana intends to return to his country to pursue a career in radiology, Stouse cannot return.

"I can't go back because I'm a minority in my country. People of my religion are treated like the Jews were with Hitler," said Stouse, a Bahai.

"We weren't being treated well, even with the Shah, but now people of the Bahai religion are being tortured and killed. It is almost impossible for them to live there," he said. "My family — the way they live is totally different because they are not Moslems."

Stouse said he came to the United States to further his education after the revolution closed Iranian schools.

Hana, who also came to the United States to further his education, said minorities are treated well in Iraq.

"I'm a minority in my country because I'm a Catholic Christian. We are treated very well," he said.

Both said they have never argued about the war, but have "kidded around."

"Sometimes he calls me an Arab," Hana said.

The two have managed to get along so well, they said they may continue to room together. Both plan to live in Arlington.

Stouse, who plans to graduate in May, said he will attend graduate school at the University of Texas at Arlington, and Hana said he will intern at an Arlington hospital.

"We both hate the present Iranian government," said Hanna. "That government damages his social life, and it damages my country's economic life."

Midland man arrested for burglary of store

From Staff Reports

A 20-year-old Midland man was in custody this morning in connection with the early morning burglary of a southside convenience store.

Officers responded to an alarm at Freddie's Instant Shopping, 1301 E. Front St., about 1 a.m. A window valued at $350 was broken and police canines were sent in to search the building.

According to reports, the man was coaxed down from a walk-in cooler by police, who then arrested him for burglary. Two cigarette lighters identified by Fernando Calderon, owner of the store, were found on the suspect, who gave police an address in the 1300 block of East Cuthbert Avenue, reports said.

The theft of a $5,000 gold nugget bracelet was among burglary and theft complaints filed with city police during the weekend.

Ann Golden of Corpus Christi told police she had placed the bracelet Sunday on a dresser in Apartment No. 5 at Quail Run Apartments, 3101 N. Midland Drive. When she returned later that day, the bracelet was missing.

Dorothy Strickland, 4723 Leisure, reported the theft of a $2,000 white gold and diamond ring from her aunt, Gladys McBride, 2911 W. Kansas Ave. No. 7. According to reports, the ring was taken between 5 and 7 p.m. Feb. 9.

Stayner Dugan, 1900 Sparks, told police two shotguns, a rifle and a pistol were stolen from his residence between 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 2 a.m. Sunday. According to reports, the guns were valued at $1,209.

Larry Sanchez, 1902 Hudson, reported his home was burglarized Saturday afternoon and a $600 video cassette recorder and a $300 cable television converter box were stolen.

Entry was gained by breaking out a window, valued at $150, and reaching through to unlock a door, according to reports.

Alvia William States of Abilene told police his 1982 Cadillac El Dorado was burglarized sometime Saturday night while it was parked at a motel at 4300 W. Highway 80. Taken from the locked vehicle were assorted clothing and items valued at $935, reports said.

A $500 electric router was reported stolen from an empty residence at 4909 Island Drive between 5 p.m. Saturday and 12:30 p.m. Sunday. John William Lupardos, 4405 Parkhurst, told police entry was gained by kicking in the front door, valued at $300.

A $700 guitar and a $90 case owned by Bobby Westbrook, 2700 N. Midland Drive, Apt. 209, were reported stolen between 9:30 p.m. Saturday and 3 a.m. Sunday, according to police reports.

Sherry Decker, 1223 Century, reported the theft of a purse containing $500 in cash and a $200 watch from the front seat of her 1972 Oldsmobile Delta 88, parked in front of her residence Saturday afternoon. Total loss was placed at $750, reports said.

R.N. Watson, 1614 Shell, reported $700 worth of tools, wading shoes and fishing equipment were stolen from his 1984 Chevrolet Suburban between 8 p.m. and midnight Friday while it was parked in the driveway of his residence.

According to reports, Watson said the vehicle was locked but there were no signs of forced entry.

Mattox commercial bribery trial resumes

AUSTIN (AP) — The prosecution's commercial bribery case against Attorney General Jim Mattox — a complex action full of lawyers, legal jargon and money — resumes today in Travis County district court.

In two weeks of testimony, jurors have heard a tangled story involving a billion-dollar oil lease case, $300 million in public bond issues, taped telephone calls and a threat allegedly made by the state's highest law enforcement officer.

Mattox, 41, was charged with the felony in 1983 under a seldom-used statute. If convicted, he could face up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

He is accused of threatening to destroy the lucrative bond business of the high-powered Houston law firm Fulbright & Jaworski unless one of its lawyers quit trying to question his sister, Janice Mattox, in an unrelated case.

Mattox has said the disagreement was only "a spittin' contest between lawyers," and steadfastly maintains his innocence. But Fulbright & Jaworski lawyers Wiley Caldwell and Thomas McDade have testified that they believed Mattox meant to ruin their bond business.

During the trial, which is expected to last two more weeks, prosecutors have led the four-man, eight-woman jury through a complicated chain of events that occurred in the spring of 1983. The events culminated in phone calls from Mattox to Caldwell, Fulbright & Jaworski's top bond lawyer.

Caldwell, a soft-spoken, balding, bookish man testified that Mattox told him he would "go to war" with the Houston firm, that he wanted Caldwell to "muzzle McDade" and that he would withhold approval of $300 milion-plus in public bonds the firm had pending in the attorney general's office. Under state law, the attorney general must approve such bonds before sale.

What led to those calls, Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle maintains, was another case — one involving oil.

That was a lawsuit wealthy South Texas rancher and oilman Clinton Manges filed against the Mobil Oil Corp.

Manges charged that Mobil had violated the terms of its lease on some 65,000 acres of his land. The state, which shares in oil revenue and is represented by the attorney general, joined the suit on Manges' side.

Fulbright & Jaworski's McDade represented Mobil. He quickly sought to have state District Judge Ruben Garcia of Laredo removed from hearing the suit. Garcia had received a campaign contribution from a Manges-financed politcal action committee. Mattox also got campaign money from Manges, proseuctors said.

In the move to disqualify Garcia, McDade wanted to question the attorney general's sister — Dallas lawyer Janice Mattox — about a $125,000 loan she and another brother, Jerry Mattox, received from a Seattle bank with which Manges was doing business.

Prosecutors said Mattox grew irate over the treatment of his family, phoned Caldwell at Fulbright & Jaworski and sought to have him intervene.

Con artists take San Antonio student for $4,000

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police say con artists are taking local residents for large sums of money through card games and other scams.

At least four people recently have reported being victimized by a card game called three-card scam, including a university student who lost more than $4,000, said Detective David Benfer.

And a number of thefts through pigeon-drop scams also have been reported, Benfer said.

"Lately we have had a rash of cons," Benfer told the San Antonio Light. "Just remember, if it seems too good to be true, it is."

Benfer said the student from the University of Texas at San Antonio pulled his car over Friday afternoon at a Loop 410 intersection to give a hitchhiker a ride.

The student was unable to find the hitchhiker's address, so the two drove to a nearby motel where a second con man soon joined them, the detective said.

The second man then suggested to the student that they cheat the hitchhiker out of money by playing cards with him. The trio played games of three-card monte, in which a person must pick out a certain card from three face-down cards that have been mixed up.

After winning several games, the student decided to withdraw his savings from an account, Benfer said.

He said a third man, claiming to be manager of the hotel, then entered the room and said he would hold the money. Benfer said the "manager" left with the other two con men, saying they would get more money, and never returned.

"I had planned on buying a car with that money," the student said. "I didn't think the guys were a scam until the last minute and they had just walked around the corner. It was a heartbreak.

"I'll never get taken again," he said. "I learned a lot."

Detectives said the three-card monte scam is only one of several circulating in the city.

Women mayors emerging as leaders in Texas towns

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — In three booming communities located in the heart of Texas, a trio of women has emerged as leaders with more than aggressive personalities in common — all are feisty, outspoken and city mayors.

Barbara Tieken of New Braunfels, Betty Jean Jones of Seguin and Emmie Craddock of San Marcos also are former educators and concerned about their communities.

For the three cities located between Austin and San Antonio, women mayors are still a new phenomenon, although women have aspired to the mayor's seat in major cities.

Houston currently has one. And Chicago and San Antonio had female mayors at one time.

But there are differences. Tieken, a 46-year-old former schoolteacher and the second female mayor of New Braunfels, campaigned for continuation of the community's "quality of life" in her bids for office.

"The lady is gracious, very intelligent and probably the best politican I've met in my life," New Braunfels lawyer J.C. Reagan, who was defeated when he opposed her re-election, said.

Ms. Tieken wants continued growth for New Braunfels to be planned expansion. She said she believes in minimal government interference, and is generally supported by city council members.

Opponents, however, called her a "professional liberal" with a penchant for free spending.

Ms. Jones, 55, also a former schoolteacher, is a Seguin native who believes that rampant growth for her agricultural community is unavoidable.

Ms. Jones believes that development in San Antonio and Bexar County, especially in eastern sections, will give Seguin an economic shot in the arm. But she said this means her city desperately needs to upgrade sewer and other city services — and that will cost taxpayers.

"You can't provide 1985 services with a 1948 tax rate," she said.

Unlike her New Braunfels counterpart, she frequently is opposed by council members. Political observers claimed some object to the participation of women in politics.

Ms. Craddock, 69, a former Navy officer who taught history at Southwest Texas State University for nearly 30 years, presides over a relatively harmonious council made up largely of people associated with the university.

FLYING

"The guys in the wings can be doing the greatest job in the world, getting her right in the right spots for the landings, but if the person on the end of the wire is having a bad day, it can really look terrible.

"It really has to all come together for the performance. It's got to look effortless, it's got to look smooth, it's got to be in time with the music. If anything's off, it makes the audience feel uncomfortable. If that happens, we're not doing our job."

Although Foy Inventerprises is also responsible for the motor-controlled butterflies in the Ice Capades, in stage productions such as "Peter Pan" the company prefers to use a manually operated system, which is controlled by handlers pulling on ropes.

"If you have a motor that will only take certain commands from a person pushing a button, sometimes, with everything you have onstage, it gets a little bit dangerous," McGeough says. "And you're working in confined spaces.

"It's much more spontaneous to have someone on the end of a rope pulling than it is to be pushing a button because you never know what the motor's going to do. You more or less know what the human being's going to do." And, he adds, "It makes it a little bit more enjoyable to watch."

McGeough, who worked on rock shows and for the Ice Capades before he joined Foy Inventerprises, has flown himself.

"During the national tour when you had a birthday, you had the option to fly after the show or between shows on a matinee day. Everybody would come up with their cameras and take pictures," McGeough says. Laughing, he adds, "We flew Nana one time in the dog costume."

He also remembers a time during rehearsals for the gala opening of Wolftrap's 1981 season, when "we flew Michael up Wendy's dress. If that had happened that night (for the opening), it would have been nerve-racking."

No such problem arose when McGeough flew. When he talks about the experience of flying, he smiles.

"It's a neat feeling, it really is. You can understand the way it all works when you get up there and you start swinging back and forth. You really let loose; it really does feel like you're flying."

He knows having had the actual experience has helped him in training others. He enjoys both and, of all the things he's done for a living, he likes teaching people to fly the best.

"Everybody looks to the flying in 'Peter Pan,' so you can't let them down," he says. "It's pretty rewarding when you can get people up and flying, and when it all comes together, it's a good feeling."

Police not expected to add to charges against man

From Staff Reports

Midland police say they are not expecting to charge a man who barricaded himself in a house Saturday when police tried to serve him with six felony warrants, but his wife is expected to be charged with hindering apprehension.

Larry Dunn, 42, and Anna Dunn, 27, were arrested at 12:30 a.m. Sunday after police SWAT teams surrounded the house and snipers were positioned on rooftops nearby for a two-hour wait.

The two barricaded themselves inside the house at 4209 Pleasant Drive after police tried to serve six felony warrants out of Wichita Falls on Dunn, according to a police spokesman.

The warrants included delivery of narcotics and one charge of possession of narcotics, said Lt. Hank Norton. Bail was set for five of the charges at $5,000 each. No bail was set on one charge, Norton said.

The couple is believed to have been staying with a friend at the house, according to Norton. The owner of the house was not present during the incident.

The two were taken to Midland County Jail Sunday, where they remained this morning. According to Norton, Ms. Dunn is expected to be arraigned later today on charges of hindering apprehension, a Class A misdemeanor.

"I don't expect them to bring anything else down on him," Norton said of additional charges against Dunn.

Sheriff's officers probe felonies

From Staff Reports

Officers with the Midland County Sheriff's Office were investigating five felonies reported during the weekend.

Bill Sparkman, 2816 Moss, told officers Arc Securities Corp., No. 20 Berry Road, was burglarized between Feb. 14 and Feb. 18. According to reports, checks which are now being cashed were stolen. The offense is listed as a felony burglary and a felony forgery. There are no suspects at this time, a spokesman for the Criminal Investigation Division said.

Henry M. Williams reported two felony thefts at a drill site in east Midland County Friday night. More than $750 worth of oil field equipment was taken from the C.A. McClintock No. 32, on East County Road 160. Another $750 worth of equipment was stolen from the nearby C.A. McClintock No. 22, reports said.

Dennis Ringener of Stanton told investigators more than $750 worth of criminal mischief was done between Feb. 14 and Feb. 15 at County Road 1027, three miles south of FM 307. According to reports, someone opened a valve on a tank and 352 gallons of crude oil were lost.

Odessa woman injured in mishap

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 23-year-old Odessa woman was listed in stable condition this morning after a one-car accident Sunday night during which her jeep was airborne for about 90 feet.

Dana Frances Henry, 23, Odessa, was in the intensive care unit of Medical Center Hospital this morning. According to police reports, the Jeep CJ-7 she was driving flipped as it approached the intersection of North Grandview and Yukon about 8:10 p.m. Sunday.

After impact, the jeep left the pavement for about 90 feet before coming to rest. Ms. Henry was ejected after the first impact and was found six feet from the vehicle, according to reports.

The northbound vehicle reportedly swerved as it approached the intersection and flipped when Ms. Henry attempted to regain control.

Grammy awards should be smashing

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Cyndi Lauper, the orange-haired princess of pop, Tina Turner, sexy and triumphant in a smashing career revival, and Prince, androgynous and enigmatic, are up for the music world's top honors at Tuesday's 27th annual Grammy Awards.

John Denver will be the host of the three-hour show from the Shrine Auditorium (CBS, 8 p.m. EST), which will feature performances by Miss Turner, Prince, Chaka Khan, Hank Williams Jr., Miss Lauper and others. Celebrity presenters include Neil Diamond, Diana Ross and Placido Domingo.

Miss Lauper had a rare sweep in last month's Grammy nominations, scoring in the "Big Four" categories of best album, record and song of the year and best new artist. The last artist to be nominated for all four prizes and win was Christopher Cross in 1980.

Miss Lauper's album, "She's So Unusual," has sold 4 million copies and generated five hit singles, including "Girls Just Want to Have Fun." It has been nominated for best female pop vocal and record of the year.

Miss Lauper won two trophies last month at the American Music Awards, where she performed on a stage set she designed. At the Grammy show, she will sing "Time After Time."

With her Betty Boop voice and thrift-shop fashions, Miss Lauper's first single, "Girls Just Want to Have Fun," had the tone and delivery of a novelty song. But such songs as "Money Changes Everything" and "Time After Time" established her as a serious artist, despite her skirt waving, set-trashing antics.

Prince, the 26-year-old superstar from Minneapolis whose sweaty concert hysterics contrast with a fervent offstage privacy, has four nominations with his group, the Revolution, including album of the year for "Purple Rain." The soundtrack from that hit movie has sold 9 million copies.

"Purple Rain" also was nominated for best rock group performance, best film score recording and producer of the year.

Prince also has a best rhythym and blues song nomination for writing the Chaka Khan hit, "I Feel for You."

His protege, Sheila E., is nominated for best new artist.

Prince and the Revolution are scheduled to perform "Baby I'm a Star" on the awards show. At the American Music Awards last month, Prince won three trophies and electrified the audience with a performance of "Purple Rain."

The diminutive rocker also raised eyebrows by bringing gargantuan bodyguard "Big Chick" Huntsberry onstage. In addition, his representatives told people sitting near the artist and his band not to touch or acknowledge them "in any way."

Miss Turner, 43, wanted to see what she could do on her own when she recorded "Private Dancer," nominated for album of the year. Her first hits with former husband Ike were released in 1960.

Before the turnaround album of 1984, she was best remembered as Ike's shimmy dancing vocal partner. They won a Grammy for their version of "Proud Mary."

Miss Turner also has Grammy nominations for best record of the year and best female pop vocal for "What's Love Got to Do With It."

Two other "Private Dancer" tracks, "Better Be Good to Me" and "Let's Stay Together," are nominated for best female vocal in the rock and rhythm and blues categories.

"What's Love Got to Do With It?" also earned a song of the year nomination for composers Graham Lyle and Terry Britten.

Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA" and Lionel Richie's "Can't Slow Down" complete the album of the year nominees.

Also in the record of the year category are Springsteen's "Dancing in the Dark" and "The Heart of Rock & Roll" by Huey Lewis and the News.

Nominated for song of the year are Phil Collins for "Against All Odds"; Richie for "Hello"; Stevie Wonder for "I Just Called to Say I Love You"; Miss Lauper and Rob Hyman for "Time After Time"; and Lyle and Britten for "What's Love Got to Do With It."

Besides Miss Lauper and Sheila E., best new artist candidates are the British rock group Frankie Goes to Hollywood; pop singer Corey Hart; and the Judds, a mother and daughter country duo.

Few people outside the recording industry have heard of David Foster, but the producer garnered six nominations, the most for this year's awards ceremony. Included were nods for producing and arranging voices and instruments for the Chicago hit, "Hard Habit to Break," which also was nominated for record of the year.

Winners in 67 categories will be revealed Tuesday, but only about 16 categories will be presented on the telecast. The rest will be given beforehand.

The show also will include a special presentation of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences' Lifetime Achievement Award to conductor-composer Leonard Bernstein.

And four stars whose wizardry on electronic keyboards has changed the recording business will be featured performing a special medley: Stevie Wonder, Herbie Hancock, Thomas Dolby and Howard Jones.

REO Speedwagon turning its wheels

ENTERTAINMENT

By MARY CAMPBELL

Walking, on their way to an interview in New York, Kevin Cronin and Gary Richrath of REO Speedwagon are recognized by a pretzel vendor.

"I feel like a celebrity now," Cronin says, smiling as he tells about it.

Of course REO Sweedwagon reached celebrity status long ago. You could put it at about 1977. They'd made six albums then, all for Epic. The first, for this band which started in Champaign, Ill., was in 1972.

Since, there have been seven more, all on Epic. "Hi Infidelity" in 1980 was the biggest. "Good Trouble," the followup in 1982, was "merely" as big as prior albums.

Currently, "Wheels Are Turnin'" hit No. 22 on the best-selling album chart of Feb. 16. The second single released from the album, "Can't Fight This Feeling," was No. 14 on that date's best-selling chart. Both were climbing.

REO Speedwagon is on a tour that began in November and goes on "indefinitely," Cronin says. Cronin, a Chicagoan who became REO Speedwagon vocalist after the first album, left in 1974. When he discovered that he didn't want a solo singing career and neither did the public, he returned in 1975.

The first single released from the album was "I Dowanna Know." Richrath says, "I think it only got about top 30 or so. To us it was a great record. We put out a rocker first because we are a live rock 'n' roll band; we wanted to re-establish that."

Cronin says, "We had a neat video for it. And it reminded us of our old bar band days, up-tempo, boogie, chugging, rock 'n' roll kind of stuff. We tried a wah wah pedal; it gets a great response live."

"You know, our audiences are interesting. They're a partying kind of rock 'n' roll audience. But they get as crazy over the slow, romantic ballads as they do over the rock 'n' roll songs. I used to think we had to play fast, loud and hard all the time.

"I had a song, 'Time for Me To Fly,' on the 'You Can Tune a Piano but You Can't Tune a Fish' album. One of our producers turned that down for our 1976 'REO' album. It ended up a couple of years later on 'Tuna a.' He told me it was a crummy song; it only had three chords; it was too slow. It wasn't a REO Speedwagon song.

"I started thinking, 'I like this song. If somebody writes it who is in REO Speedwagon, how can it be not a REO Speedwagon song?

"The sound of a band has to come from the band itself."

"That's when we decided to fire our producer and start producing ourselves. There's a million ways you can play any song. One way seems to us the way the song wants to be."

The first album the group produced itself was a live album, in 1977, "You Get What You Pay For." It was the group's first gold album.

For "You Can Tune a Piano" in 1978, Cronin says, "We had a bunch of songs, 'Roll with the Changes,' 'Time for Me To Fly,' 'Blazing Your Own Trail Again,' 'Sing To Me,' and we were cocky about it. Basically what we said was, 'I'm not going to let you have these songs on a record unless we produce them ourselves. Too many good songs in the past have come out sounding like bad records.'"

Song written on paper sack hits bigtime

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — It was penned on a paper sack in the Gulf of Mexico and has been performed for American troops in Beirut and at a gala for President Reagan.

And it is as popular at weddings as it is at athletic events.

Songwriter Larry Henley's "Wind Beneath My Wings" has been recorded by dozens of artists and is a moving, sensitive song of a selfless, supportive lover who is also a hero.

"I look at it now and it doesn't seem to belong to me," said the 44-year-old Henley in an interview. "It belongs to the world. I'm in awe of it just like everyone else."

Lou Rawls performed "Wind Beneath My Wings" in January on live network television during a pre-inaugural gala for Reagan. Ann Jillian sang the song on Bob Hope's TV special for American troops in Beirut. It also has been sung at military funerals.

Gary Morris had a country music version of the hit in the United States. Lee Greenwood's version was the biggest hit in Europe. Others who have recorded "Wind Beneath My Wings" include Rawls, B.J. Thomas, Gladys Knight, Sheena Easton, Willie Nelson and Roger Whitaker.

Dolly Parton tried to record it, but was so emotionally overcome by the tune she couldn't stop crying.

"She never did finish it," said Henley. "I don't think the definitive version has been done yet. I hear rumors that maybe Barbra Streisand or Jennifer Holliday might do it."

The song began as a poem Henley wrote around 1966. Then in June 1981, he turned the poem into a song in about 15 minutes.

"I had it in my head," Henley recalled. "I went out on a yacht in the Gulf of Mexico (off Corpus Christi, Texas) and wrote it down on a paper sack."

Jeff Silbar co-wrote the song, primarily the melody. Henley's lyrics were inspired by an ex-wife he had been married to for about 2½ years.

"She was touched by it," he said, adding that she is engaged or possibly remarried by now.

He believes the song is so appealing because "it's honest and tender."

"It's a man reaching out for a woman — praise a woman rarely gets from a man. It's something a man should have said long ago," he said.

"When you open your heart for the whole world, it's kind of embarrassing in a way. It's like standing in front of the world with your clothes off."

Henley is probably best known as the lead singer for the Newbeats. His falsetto voice was heard on such songs of the '60s as "Bread and Butter."

He was lead singer for the trio, from the early 1960s until they disbanded in 1972. Besides "Bread and Butter," he joined them on other hits, includinger "Everything's Alright" (1964), "Break Away" (1965), "The Birds Are for the Bees" (1965) and "Run Baby Run" (1965).

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, February 26, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Changes at place of employment will work to your advantage. You gain new privileges and responsibilities. A family struggle comes to a head in April. Keep your dignity and you can withstand any challenge. An ill-fated romance comes to an end. You could find the happiness you seek in the arms of a long-time friend. Pay more attention to financial security. Any opportunities you let slip away now will not return. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: country singer Johnny Cash, Jackie Gleason, Tony Randall, Robert Alda, Oakland A's rookie Stan Kyles, actress Madeleine Carroll, Betty Hutton, rock 'n' roll's Fats Domino.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Things may not be what they appear on the surface. Be alert to secret alliances and behind-the-scenes activities. Sprucing up your property increases its real estate value.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Diplomacy can work wonders today. A Virgo joins you in a new partnership. Your skill at mediating domestic disputes is put to the test. Avoid getting caught in the middle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Mind your own business and things will go fine today. Discuss investment plans with experts. Increase your insurance coverage as your family grows. Loved ones are counting on you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Important news arrives in the morning mail; act quickly to beat out the competition. Home life has its ups and downs. Be patient. Count to 10 when tempted to say something negative.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take the middle road if a dispute arises at home or work. A financial discussion could turn into an argument unless you are diplomatic. A close associate supports your goals.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The emphasis today is on letting things develop at their own pace. The balance of power between you and your spouse or business partner has been restored. Tread lightly when making requests.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Travel is best postponed. Reschedule a trip for next month. An argument could arise with romantic partner later today. The best solution is a compromise. Avoid hurling accusations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A financial situation turns out differently than expected. You are surprised when a Pisces comes to your rescue. Share your true feelings with mate. He/she understands more than you think.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your keen business sense helps you win an important decision. Higher-ups are impressed by your shrewdness. Keep a tight grip on your wallet. Someone may want something for nothing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep in touch with those who have supported and encouraged you in the past. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. A romance with a Virgo is a happy experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are able to handle insurance and investment matters with greater efficiency now. Family relationships become more rewarding. Trust your intuition where romance is concerned. Forget past grievances or doubts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Untried activities and ventures occupy your thoughts. Hang on tight to your assets. Romance will be exciting if you make the first move. Invite someone to attend a special event as your date.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠ 74 ♡AQ982 ◇93 ♣Q1065
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	2 ◇
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—In terms of high cards, you do not have much more than a minimum. However, your double fit gives your hand great trick-taking possibilities. You do not have enough to bid game on your own, but you should certainly issue an invitation by raising to three hearts.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A73 ♡AQJ106 ◇AJ5 ♣84
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—This is one of those hands where you simply have no good rebid. A jump to three spade with only three-card support is too aggressive, and a jump to three hearts on a five-card suit could result in your getting to game in the wrong major suit. Since a change of suit by opener could suggest extra values, we would opt for two diamonds. Partner's next bid should leave you excellently placed to plot the rest of the auction.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8763 ♡A85 ◇Q762 ♣K5
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dble	Pass	1 ♠
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—By first doubling and then raising your suit, partner is showing a hand worth 16-18 points in support of spades. Were it not for the fact that your king of clubs is under the opening bidder, your hand would warrant going to game. It still merits one effort, and the logical bid is two no trump.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♡QJ6 ◇A53 ♠AKQJ873
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	3 NT	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—We would not fault you if you chose to bid five clubs — those honors are not to be sneered at and you should be a favorite for 11 tricks. However, at no trump you will be delivering to partner eight sure tricks and he surely can make one trick before the enemy collects five. We would pass.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K7632 ♡Q85 ◇KQ1092
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Even though you are a passed hand and partner has opened in third seat, your hand offers slam possibilities. To convey that message, make a jump shift of three diamonds — by a passed hand a jump shift is a one-round force. A jump to four spades is woefully inadequate.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠542 ♡863 ◇J109754 ♣9
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	Dble	Pass	1 ◇
2 ♠	Dble	Pass	?

A.—First, you must realize that, since you have already taken a bid, partner's double of two clubs is for penalties. Then you must see that your hand is totally unsuited to defense no matter what the vulnerability — you do not have the vestige of a defensive trick. Bid two diamonds.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Prince keeps private life secret while rocketing to fame

By JEFF BAENEN

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — He was named after his father's jazz group. His mom called him Skipper, while members of his band know him as The Kid. He's short, but a good basketball player. And his favorite color is purple.

That's most of what's known about Prince, the Minneapolis-born rock superstar who has kept his private life a secret while rocketing to fame as a top-selling and flamboyant musician known for his sexually explicit lyrics.

Born Prince Roger Nelson, the 26-year-old singer stopped giving interviews about two years ago and his friends and family are reluctant to discuss the reclusive star, who lives in a purple ranch-style house in suburban Chanhassen.

"Prince even keeps his activities secret from us," said a spokesman for the rock star, who spoke on condition his name not be used.

In fact, it's not guaranteed that Prince will appear at Tuesday's Grammy Awards ceremony in Los Angeles. He is nominated for five Grammys, including album of the year, best rock group performance, best film score recording, producer of the year and best rhythm-and-blues song.

Despite the secrecy, Prince and his band, the Revolution, have become one of the hottest acts on the rock circuit. His movie debut, "Purple Rain," was an instant smash last summer, the soundtrack album was the biggest-selling record of 1984 with nearly 12 million in sales worldwide, and his current concert tour has sold out virtually every stop.

"My feeling is that the success of this album ... is just the prelude to whatever's going to come next," the spokesman said.

Prince's first album, "For You," with Prince playing all the instruments, was released in 1978 when he was 20. Subsequent albums — "Dirty Mind," "Controversy" and "1999" — won critical acclaim.

"I think his music has been changing," the spokesman said. "His main concern is being true to his own emotions, being honest with his audience. As he's grown, the music has changed.

"In 'Dirty Mind,' he was concerned with sexuality and sexual oppression, which he was very opposed to. And 'Purple Rain' seemed to be a film about resolving problems with your parents.

"I don't think it involved a toning-down."

His earlier albums were marked by sexually explicit lyrics, which caused some religious leaders to complain after Gov. Rudy Perpich declared "Prince Days" last Christmas week during five shows at the St. Paul Civic Center, where concertgoers donated 50,000 pounds of canned food for the needy.

Prince missed a performance with a number of other rock stars for a "USA for Africa" benefit to aid famine victims, but is donating a single, "Tears in Your Eyes," written for the benefit album.

In the early 1980s, the doe-eyed Prince took to the stage dressed in a trenchcoat, bikini underwear and leg warmers. He later adopted an Edwardian look, wearing purple-spangled coats and ruffled shirts.

He was born June 7, 1958, to John and Mattie Nelson.

Yeager would rather be fishing than making ads

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Retired Brig. Gen. Chuck Yeager, the first person to break the sound barrier, would rather be hunting and fishing than filming TV commercials and posing for newspaper ads, but he says it still "isn't work."

Yeager

Yeager, a native of nearby Hamlin who was portrayed in the recent movie "The Right Stuff," said over the weekend that he turns down "100 requests a month" to do commercials, in part because he does not want to make advertising a full-time occupation.

"I still fly and don't want to change my life," he said.

"He's a pleasure to work with," said Stephen Morris of Ad-Mark, the agency coordinating savings and loan commercials Yeager was filming. "He's a true West Virginian, real easygoing. And he's a real professional."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Broadway veterans Nell Carter and Dolph Sweet put that experience to good use as they and the cast and crew of "Gimme a Break" performed the first live TV situation comedy in nearly 30 years.

"We did it!" Miss Carter yelled at the end of the show Saturday night. An audience packed with friends, relatives and NBC executives applauded the cast and crew for several minutes.

The half-hour comedy, which is usually taped on Tuesday nights, went live across most of the country and was taped for broadcast three hours later on the West Coast.

"NBC called and asked us if we'd do it," said Rod Parker, the show's co-executive producer with director Hal Cooper. "We said, 'Yeah, it'd be fun.' Not every week, thank you."

It's not that producers were worried the actors would flub their lines.

Mostly, they were hoping the audience wouldn't find the gags too funny — or not amusing at all.

"The audience laughter usually takes up about two to three minutes of air time," Parker said. "But if the audience really thinks it's funny, it can go for as much as four minutes.

"Going live with a sitcom isn't the same as doing a variety show live. You can't add or take out a number or a scene to make it come out on time. You've got to tell the story."

But the performances — by audience and actors — were flawless.

HONOLULU (AP) — Actor Tom Selleck received plaques from the state and city proclaiming "Tom Selleck Day" as he was given the Variety Club of Hawaii's Heart of Show Business award for raising funds for children's charities.

"I thank Variety Clubs for giving me the opportunity to help, and for the wonderful work they do with handicapped and disadvantaged kids," the star of television's "Magnum, P.I." said Sunday.

Selleck was given the awards at a luncheon attended by more than 1,000 people who paid up to $100 each.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Author James Baldwin, honored as part of Black History Month, says life in the ghetto hasn't changed much from 25 years ago when he warned of "The Fire Next Time" that became the race riots of the '60s.

"Life in the inner city is still so claustrophobic — the unemployed, the addicts, the bored and frustrated continue to prey on each other, striking out for attention," the 60-year-old author said Sunday. "Los Angeles is no different. We just can't seem to stop it."

Baldwin, whose works include "Go Tell It on the Mountain," "If Beale Street Could Talk," and "The Fire Next Time," was honored at A.C. Bilbrew Library.

"It's no different today than it was 25 years ago," said the Harlem-born author once billed by his publisher as "America's angry young man."

Too many youths choose guns as a way out of the ghetto, Baldwin said. "What they don't understand is a gun will only get you as far as the nearest street corner. Instead of guns, it has to be books."

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Violinist and composer Efrem Zimbalist Sr., the father of actor Efrem Zimbalist Jr. and grandfather of actress Stephanie Zimbalist, has died after a long bout with cancer. He was 95.

Zimbalist, who had moved to Reno in 1970, died Friday at his home, said Washoe County coroner's transcriber Judy Kohler.

The Russian-born musician earned a reputation as a violin soloist in Europe before he emigrated to the United States in 1911. He made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra that year, playing the first American performance of Alexander Glazunov's "Concerto in A Minor."

In 1941, he was appointed director of the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, serving in that post until 1968.

He was also a composer of operas, musical comedy and concertos.

Born April 21, 1889, in Rostov, Russia, he studied violin with his father, an orchestral musician, and at the St. Petersburg Conservatory.

High Sky announces new directors

Jackie Carter has been named executive director of High Sky Girls Ranch and Joan Nobles has been named associate director of development, the board of directors has announced.

Mrs. Carter began working at High Sky as a social worker in 1979 and became the home's program director in 1981. A former teacher at Midland High School, she attended Graceland College in Lanoni, Iowa and in 1966 she was graduated from North Texas State University with a bachelor of arts degree. She received her masters degree in counseling from the University of Texas at the Permian Basin in 1982.

Mrs. Nobles was the founder and first chairman of the board of High Sky. She is the mother of Joe Nobles, Jane Arrott and Gerald Nobles Jr., who serves as chairman of the board for High Sky.

Artists transforming old clothing into paper by hand

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Lois Shelly sweeps her hand through a tub of bright red slush, pulling out a screen covered with soggy red lumps, once old clothing, that is soon to be paper.

The simple-looking process is a rags to riches story of turning castaside clothes into fiber which is reformed into paper, a current favorite activity of Ohio artists.

Ms. Shelly, an artist-in-residence at Toledo's Crosby Gardens park and art complex, turns cotton pulp into rough sheets of textured paper that are combined with such things as string and feathers, dried flowers and fabric to create multimedia artwork. On her desk are sheets of stationery made of straw and cedar, willow and cattails — samples sent by other papermakers.

Both types of paper are examples of what Ms. Shelly sees as a revival of interest in the art — or craft, depending on viewpoint — of papermaking.

"It's not new. It's always been around, but it's just been noticed again," she said of the process of beating fibers, swelling them with water, and pressing and drying them into a paper felt for use in art, bookmaking or as a surface for painting in oil, pastels or other media.

Before 1970, the only people making paper by hand were a scattering of bookmakers who made limited editions on paper they formed themselves, said Kathryn Clark. She claims to have prompted the resurgence of the art in the Midwest at the Brookston, Ind., studio she owns with her husband, Howard.

The studio, called Twin Rocker, is known for its technical expertise in making fine paper exactly to standards for use in other types of artwork, Ms. Shelly said, noting that interest in such materials probably kept its popularity growing throughout the 1970s and into the 1980s.

What she has seen in the last few years, however, is the growth of paper art on a different level.

Paper now is used by many teachers to introduce art to young students, and Ms. Shelly frequently gets calls from fabric artists or sculptors who want to dabble in paper.

"The craft is very flexible and expandable — 3-year-olds can do it with great success," Ms. Shelly said, putting the soggy red sheets between felt layers in a giant sandwich that was to be pressed and dried, then formed into valentines.

And as it becomes more accepted, it apparently becomes more marketable as art, said Ken Emerick of the Arts Council of Ohio. He had no statistics on paper art sales but said people who work in the medium tell him they are finding it easier to sell their products.

But Mrs. Clark believes the art form could die if it becomes too much the realm of artists who aren't devoting all their efforts to papermaking. Such a trend could overwhelm the public with an impression of handmade paper as a material in itself and ignore it as a material for other types of artists.

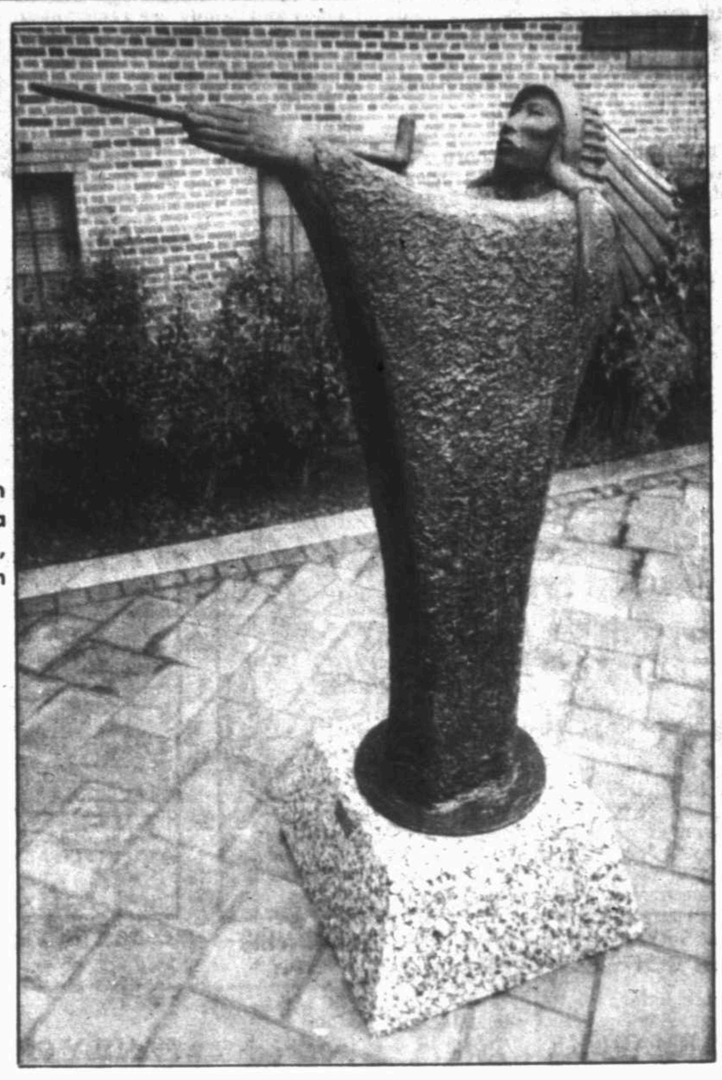

"Machine-made paper is boring, boring, boring."

Bronze donated to U.S. United Nations mission

A duplicate of a bronze sculpture housed in the Musuem of the Southwest has been presented to the United States Mission to the United Nations.

Internationally known sculptor Allan Houser donated one of three existing copies of his "Offering of the Sacred Pipe" to the U.S. mission as a symbol of world peace. The third copy of the piece is in the Wheelwright Museum in Santa Fe, N.M.

The bronze will be unveiled in a special ceremony Wednesday at 799 United Nations Plaza in New York City, and remain there on permanent display.

Houser, an Apache Indian, lives in Santa Fe. Funds for the Museum of the Southwest's "Offering of the Sacred Pipe" sculpture, which stnds outside the museum, were given by Mr. and Mrs. W.D. Kennedy of Midland.

Kimberly Sue Donnell

Donnell chosen beauty pageant finalist

Kimberly Sue Donnell, 16, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James P. Donnell of Midland, has been named a finalist in the 1985 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager pageant March 29-31 at Midland Center.

This contest is the official regional pageant to the 14th annual Miss Texas National Teen-Ager pageant June 7-9 at Texas Christian University.

Winner of the West Texas pageant will receive a $500 cash award, a full four-year tuition scholarship to Oklahoma City University, a $2,400 scholarship to Wayland Baptist University in Plainview and other prizes.

Contestants will be judged on scholastic achievement and leadership, poise and personality and appearance. There will be no swimsuit competition.

Talent or an oral essay on "What's Right About America" will be given.

Kimberly Koonce of Midland, 1984 Miss West Texas National Teen-Ager, will crown the winner of the 1985 contest.

The newly-crowned West Texas winner, along with the first and second runners-up, will attend the state pageant in Fort Worth.

Miss Donnell will be sponsored by DCS, Harris Ranch Co. and Big 3 Tire Inc. Her hobbies include listening to music, playing basketball, band, flags and talking.

DEAR ABBY

President Reagan supporting March of Dimes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Although I've enjoyed your column for many years and consider myself a fan, I haven't often had the occasion to sit down and pen a "Dear Abby" letter of my own. But like most of your readers, I have some hope I'll see my message in print anyway.

As a result of your plea in a recent column, I received an avalanche of birthday greetings. I deeply appreciate this outpouring of friendship and good will. The response by your readers to your request was truly heartwarming, and I hope they'll understand why I cannot possibly thank them all individually for helping make this Feb. 6 especially memorable. Please pass on to your readers my gratitude for their many cards and kind words.

I am also grateful to you for taking the opportunity to encourage public support for the important work of the March of Dimes. As you know, January 1985 was March of Dimes Birth Defects Prevention Month. In honor of this observance, I urged all Americans to support the efforts of this organization in the battle against birth defects. The response to this call — especially as shown by the mail we received at the White House — has been truly outstanding.

Although we cannot acknowledge the many writers who sent contributions to the White House for the March of Dimes, I want you and them to know that we have turned over their donations to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation for use in its research program.

Your readers can best help the March of Dimes in the future by sending donations directly to: March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation, P.O. Box 2000, White Plains, N.Y. 10602. This will alleviate any delay in those contributions reaching the March of Dimes, and it will also solve the tremendous logistical problems that arise when monetary items of any kind are sent to my attention at the White House. Your readers' cooperation in this request will make my staff much happier, and it will also allow the March of Dimes to get to work immediately on the vital activities your readers are supporting.

Thanks again for all the birthday greetings, and God bless you and your many readers. Sincerely, RONALD REAGAN

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Thank you for your gracious letter. The March of Dimes is profoundly grateful to you for making this year's March of Dimes the most successful since its goal has been the prevention of birth defects — our nation's No. 1 child health problem.

DEAR ABBY: I feel great! I sent a check to the president for the March of Dimes. I didn't send a dollar, I sent five — one for me, and four more for others who can't afford to. — PAULA K., ODESSA, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: After reading how the March of Dimes began, I sat down and wrote a check for $3 ($1 for each of my healthy sons), and I was amazed at the feeling it gave me. Thanks for helping a wonderful cause. — ELAINE, PHOENIX

DEAR ABBY: I'm 82 now, but I remember when Eddie Cantor asked people to send a dime to President Franklin Roosevelt for the March of Dimes in honor of his birthday. I sent my dime — in those days all it took was a 2-cent postage stamp.

I sent a dollar to President Reagan for his birthday as you suggested. — GRETA IN LONG BEACH

DEAR ABBY: I sent a dollar to President Reagan for his birthday in honor of the March of Dimes. Did you? — JUNE IN BURNHAM, MAINE

DEAR JUNE: No, but thanks for reminding me.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

'Flowerspeak' nominated universal language

By ELVIN MCDONALD

A few summers ago "Valley Girl" captured the air waves; Jeannene, my college junior, and I heard it at least hourly as we drove and radioed our way across America, from home in New York City to the very place in southern California where "Valleyspeak" originates. To honor February's celebrations of St. Valentine and, distinguished presidents' birthdays; and especially for the reader whose letter follows, I propose we adopt Flowerspeak as the universal language of peace.

"To Whom It May Concern:" the letter begins, addressed to no one in particular at King Features Syndicate in New York. Considering what follows, the lonely author can take heart already: An individual in a big organization read the mail, "listened" to what was said and took appropriate action, which was to forward the letter to me.

"I'm dying for someone to talk to about my plants," the letter continues, "but nobody wants to hear. Why can't there be a club in town where you could just go and be with other gardeners, people who'd really understand the importance of a staghorn fern that is growing extremely well, or who'd give sound advice if its frondiers — fronds and antlers, you know — drooped inexplicably."

With wit and vocabulary like that, nothing should stand in the way of this reader, however lonely. I think she did the right, or write, thing, expressing her feelings. There are garden clubs within miles and only an hour or so down or rather up the road, and in Denver is a world class botanical garden where plant people of all persuasions meet regularly.

The way to get over loneliness is to reach out, to circulate. And this can be done with hardly any money and certainly without wheels. For my plan only paper, envelopes, stamps and something to write with are needed.

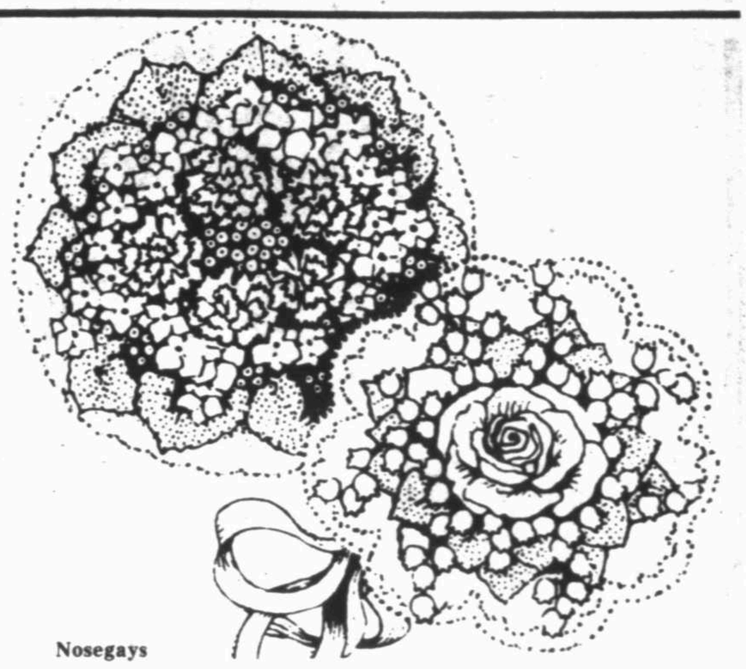

Now you are ready to join a correspondence club comprised of other individuals as passionate about indoor gardening as you are. They will likely be far-flung — from Seattle to Tucson, to Waco, Memphis, Tampa, up to Raleigh and thence Chicago. By some miracle one might even be a neighbor.

Another name for what I propose is round robin, a friendly, logical, and legal pursuit having nothing to do with notorious — and illegal — "chain" letters. The advantage of exchanging written plant lore is that you can read and respond at your convenience, the same as others in the group. Often when people seem disinterested in what we have to say it is because the time is not right for them to listen.

Most national plant societies sponsor round robins. My gardening pal Peg Spaete runs several — you might say a flock — with occasional openings in established robins and new groups always in the process of forming. There are beginners and pros; generosity prevails.

If you wish to participate in such a round robin, write of your chief plant interest and send, with a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope to Peg Spaete, 27821 S.E. Sun Ray Dr., Boring, Ore. 97009.

Customers drawn by unusual name

SEBRING, Fla. (AP) — Outside of this Bible Belt community of central Florida, there can't be many other places where a local preacher is apt to say to friends, "Let's go to the cathouse."

Surprising as it may seem, the suggestion is common among residents here either to raise the eyebrows of strait-laced neighbors and unknowing out-of-towners or simply to enjoy country cooking.

"I wouldn't change the name for anything," says Betty Reaves, who, with her husband Joe, purchased the Cathouse Restaurant almost a year ago.

"It's the uniqueness of the name," explains Mrs. Reaves, discussing its vernacular connotation of a house of ill repute and the thousands of ceramic cats for which the restaurant is named.

Admittedly, the Reaves thrive on the furtive glances of first-time customers who hesitantly enter the eating place, but soon become interested in the estimated 4,000 figurines displayed on shelves, in showcases and hanging on walls.

Reaves, a swimming pool contractor and investment broker, says most of the feline statuettes are antique and many are gifts from customers the restaurant has had since it first opened in 1975.

The Cathouse Restaurant was started by the late Norman Peck and Charlie Cox, who showed cats competitively.

Clyde Norris has been a faithful customer since 1975 and has a mirthful collection of anecdotes concerning his favorite eating place.

Norris' ex-wife once worked here. He delights in telling friends, "My wife used to work at the Cathouse."

Alma Lloyd has been a regular for years and recently donated three cats to the restaurant's collection.

"I've had a ball with this place," she says with a laugh. "I tell relatives when they get here, 'Let's go to the Cathouse.'"

Dozens of church and religious groups meet here socially or in the private dining room called "The Persian Room" located near the restroom area appropriately marked "Sandbox." Inside, two doors are labeled "Pussy Cats" and "Tomcats."

Most customers are senior citizens, part of the city's 6,000 to 8,000 permanent residents. That doubles during the winter tourist season, particularly in March when the city hosts a week of auto racing.

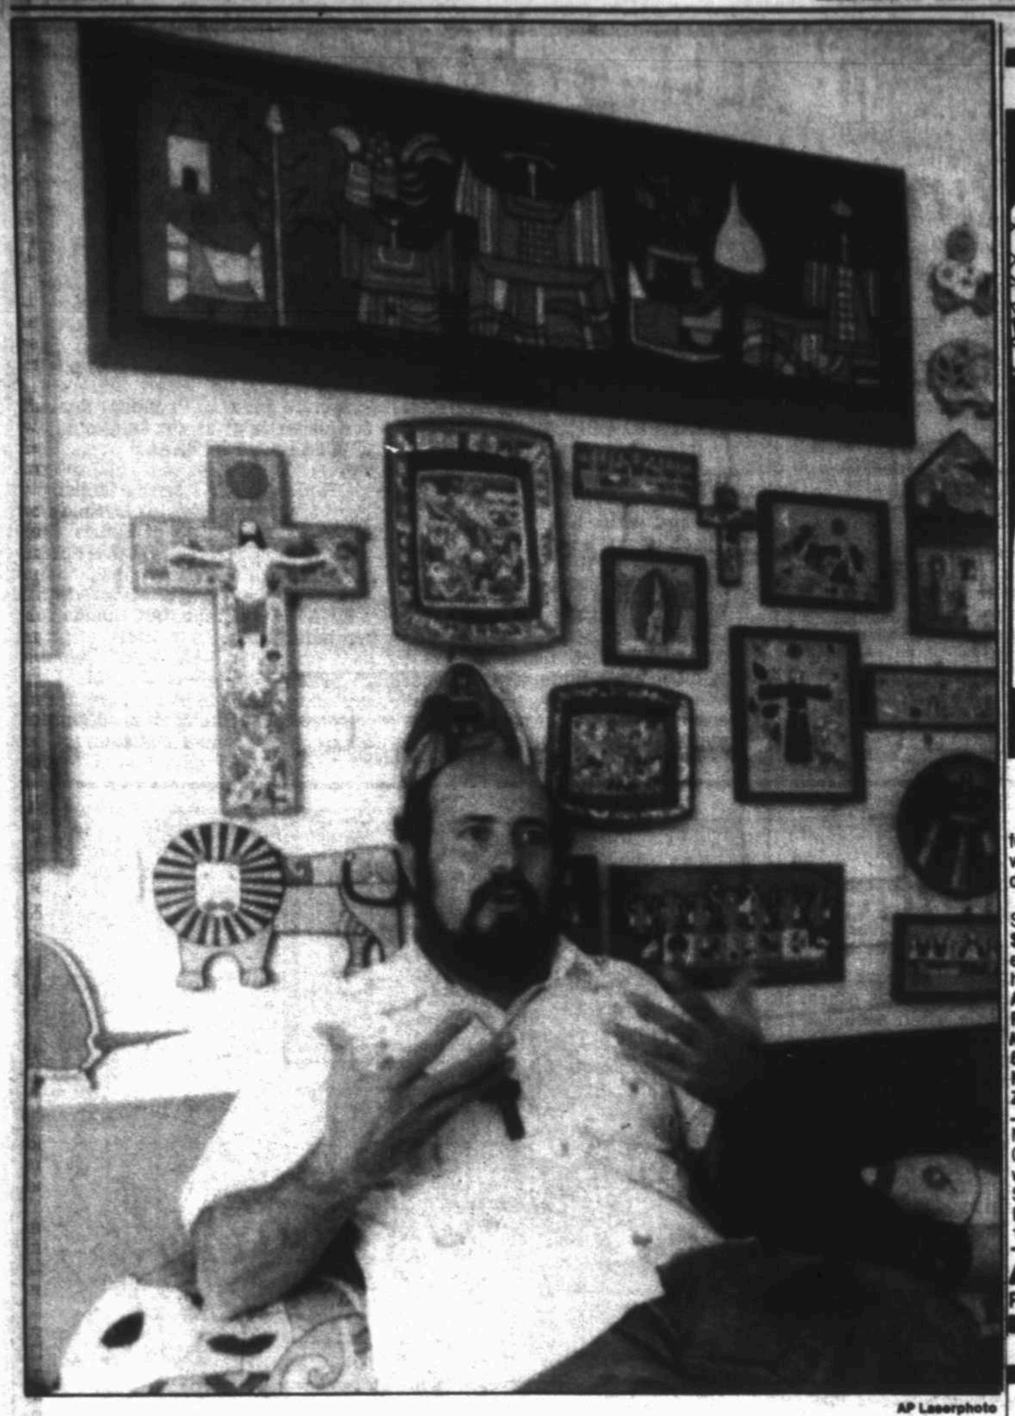

Available at the Cathouse are T-shirts, bumper stickers, coffee mugs and other souvenirs emblazoned with the restaurant's name. "I'm selling three gross a month on the T-shirts," Reaves says.

Sitting amid his paintings is Fernando Llort, El Salvador's most popular artist.

Artist's faith in people gives Salvadorans hope

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

LA PALMA, El Salvador — Fernando Llort is a painter of tranquil village scenes and doves of peace, a non-violent man in a tiny country convulsed by political hatreds and civil war.

He is an artist who believes that by releasing the untapped creativity of El Salvador's country-folk he can serve his nation better than ideologues of either the right or the left.

Llort has put his faith in the common people of the countryside in this mountaintop town 50 miles north of the capital, in an area controlled by leftist guerrillas.

Two artisan cooperatives and 20 workshops organized by Llort are thriving in the midst of a five-year-old war that has left other small towns deserted and created 500,000 refugees.

The artisan enterprises produce some of the most vibrant folk art in Central America and employ more than 3,000 people out of a population of 15,000 in La Palma and outlying hamlets.

The distinctive La Palma style is seen in primitive scenes on leather and wood, in embroidered textiles and on the polished surface of copinol seeds, which Llort discovered were excellent for exquisite miniatures.

"I want the world to know that there is much that can be done with the peasants of El Salvador without leading them to violence, that justice can be achieved without ideology," Llort said in an interview.

In 1972, Llort, then freshly back from art schools in France and the United States, moved to La Palma with a handful of other young artists. He says he and his friends had experienced a "spiritual" awakening and were seeking a quiet spot where they could develop their art.

"I was looking for my identity as a Salvadoran, an identity which I carry in my blood and which no school gave me," the 35-year-old Llort said.

He found it in La Palma, in its small church on the plaza, in the bracing mountain air, in the town's winding cobblestone streets and modest adobe homes, in the superb view of El Salvador spread out below the pine-cloaked mountain.

"Our doors were always open, and we began discovering marvelous designs in the children and women and men who came to our house out of curiosity to draw," he said. "They were spontaneous in their colors and style. I had my European formation, but I respected them and had great faith in their potential."

Soon, hundreds of people were producing brightly painted handicrafts. Llort, who says he "wasn't interested in being a businessman or becoming rich in La Palma," decided to help them form a cooperative to market their folk art.

He named the first cooperative "La Semilla de Dios" — The Seed of God — because he considered the copinol seed a gift from the Almighty and because "it was a miracle to see, where once people had no jobs, almost the whole town was working in this."

Llort has become El Salvador's most popular artist, whether in oil paintings or other art forms. One widely sold poster, done in simple lines, shows the heads of two men attempting a dialogue while an olive branch sprouts and a dove flies above.

"People in this country are fed up with cruelty and violence, and that feeling is stronger than any political position or ideology," he said. "We didn't know what war was. After so many years of insecurity, of cruelty, of blood, what everyone wants now, more than anything, is peace."

Balding with a black beard, Llort wore a white guayabera shirt embroidered in brilliant colors and a three-inch wooden cross on a chain around his neck when he received a visitor recently.

La Palma has not escaped the war, and Llort has felt its impact directly.

In late 1980 he and his family had to leave La Palma after anonymous death threats were made against his wife, who is from the town, and their three small children. In 1982 they were spending the Christmas holidays with his wife's family when the army attacked rebels who held the town. His children saw their grandfather killed by a stray bullet.

La Palma is less violent these days. Guerrillas often send in patrols, but the army generally stays out of the town.

Guerrilla sabotage of power lines, however, frequently blacks out La Palma, hindering production of crafts. Both rebels and soldiers force townspeople to give them rides down the mountain, exposing them to the danger of hostile fire along the road.

But La Palma has survived, and that's more than can be said of some towns. It was the site of the first round of peace talks Oct. 15 between rebels and the government.

LLort visits the town every month or so to advise the artisans and suggest designs. They also visit him in San Salvador, where he lives in a split-level home on a hillside, amid his paintings.

Priest ministers to war orphans

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

ZARAGOZA, El Salvador — The 221 homeless boys and girls at the Rev. Ken Myers' orphanage are accustomed to violent death. But they still become uneasy at the sight of a gun.

"The kids are frightened of anyone who has a gun," says Myers, a 43-year-old Roman Catholic priest from Cleveland who came to El Salvador as a missionary in 1974, five years before civil war erupted.

"Even when the U.S. Embassy people come, vans arrive beforehand with guys carrying guns. The kids always come up and ask me if they're friends of mine. They want to know that it's OK they're here."

Most of the children are from war-torn rural areas. In a dirty war involving soldiers, leftist guerrillas and clandestine death squads, some of the children have seen their mothers or fathers murdered, and others have watched as parents were dragged from their homes, never to be seen again.

"They killed my mother. Fifteen men, I saw them do it," says 7-year-old Quique, his large brown eyes growing wet. "A nun from the school brought me here."

In August 1980, with tens of thousands of people swelling refugee camps, Myers brought 10 war-orphaned children to his parish in this hill town. He put them up at a church annex he had used for adult education classes until the streets became too dangerous for people to attend night classes.

Myers thought his role as a surrogate parent would be brief, but soon the building was overflowing, and he began seeking money to open an orphanage on the edge of town. Two years ago he moved his brood into the new facilities and has been expanding ever since.

The orphanage consists of school buildings, the best health clinic for miles around and 15 concrete-block homes. The buildings dot lush green hills outside Zaragoza, a small town of whitewashed adobe houses 12 miles south of San Salvador, the capital.

The money for construction came from three $60,000 grants obtained by Myers in the United States and West Germany.

"When it comes to getting money for those kids, the guy is a real mover," an American living in San Salvador says in admiration.

With a staff of 30, the orphanage's school goes through the 10th grade and provides classes for 900 students, including children from the town of Zaragoza. It also has workshops in carpentry, welding and tailoring.

Myers believes it is important that the orphans help out at the "Children's Village," as the shelter is called, to give themselves a sense of pride.
