West Texas prairie fire under control

■ Related story — 2B

ALBANY (AP) — A massive brush fire that destroyed hundreds of square miles of West Texas prairie land appeared under control late Saturday afternoon, officials said.

For parts of Friday and Saturday, the fire was untamed and seriously threatening the towns of Albany and Moran in Shackelford County and Baird in northern Callahan County, but three tanker airplanes helped contain the massive brush fire Saturday by dropping fire-retardant chemicals.

Sam Logan, public information officer for the Texas Forest Service, said the fires that ravaged much of Shackelford, Callahan and Throckmorton counties since Thursday were under control and the Forest Service was beginning its mop-up operation.

"That'll take about two days," Logan said. But he added, "We'll continue to keep an eye on it, because with the strong winds and low humidity, just a spark could start it up all over again."

Most of the fires appeared to be interior ones expected to burn themselves out, officials said.

"We've pretty well got fire guards around the complete fire. Tonight, we're going to just more or less be running a patrol and mop-up operation," said Pat McKennon, the Baird fire chief. "We will have Forest Service crews out and some local fire units out, just more or less patrolling."

Laureen Chernow, of the governor's emergency management division, estimated Saturday from her state capital office in Austin that about 600,000 acres, or 900 square miles of land, was scorched by the fires in Shackelford, Callahan and Throckmorton counties.

However, that estimate was questioned by others, who said they felt it far too high.

About 70 percent of the total damage was believed to have occurred in Shackelford County, where Joe Fox of the Texas Forest Service said about 265,000 acres of rangeland was burned. About half of Shackelford County's 915 square miles was said to have burned.

Albany has about 2,500 people, Baird about 1,700 and Moran about 350.

Federal officials, at the request of Texas emergency management personnel, approved aid to help reimburse the state for expenses in fighting the fire, which has killed livestock, burned trailer homes and oilfield equipment and closed roads.

"When it was dark, all you could see was orange rolling down the hills," said Phillip Rodriguez, a volunteer firefighter who said he and hundreds of other workers stopped the flames just inside the Baird city limits, near Interstate 20, about 7 a.m. Saturday.

"We fight fires and we wanted to come up and help them out," said Ed Garrett, a volunteer firefighter from McMahan, a community southeast of Lockhart in Central Texas, about 200 miles from Baird. "If we were on fire down there, we would want them to come help us."

Some homes were evacuated Friday night in the Hannersville section of Baird and authorities set up a command post but no dwellings were lost in the community 21 miles east of Abilene, said Callahan County Sheriff's officer Jan Davis. Residents returned to their dwellings Saturday.

But in Albany, 25 miles north, the blaze consumed trailers and oilfield equipment, including oil tanks, in its relentless march eastward, fanned by strong winds.

Winds halt issuance of fire permits

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Permits for grass and trash burning in the city limits will not be issued until high winds and dry conditions that have spawned dozens of West Texas range blazes abate, fire officials say.

"With the wind, and as dry as it is, we are discouraging any burning at all," Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said. "We may not issue any permits until after it rains."

The permits — most of which are issued to homeowners who want to burn off grass before the onset of spring — allow fires only when there is "no wind," Petree said.

Instituting the ban is an added precaution, he said.

A little more than a half-inch of precipitation has been recorded at Midland International Airport since the beginning of the year, according to the National Weather Service.

About 30 of the permits are issued each year, Petree said.

To receive a permit for "open burning," a resident must assure that a working garden hose or fire extinguisher is nearby, agree to call the fire department dispatcher for permission before lighting the fire, and sign an agreement taking responsibility for any fire which may get out of control.

Permits for rubbish fires are "very, very rarely issued," Petree said. Inspectors will not issue a permit to burn grass which is not carefully mowed, according to the city fire codes.

"We never will issue a permit so someone can burn a bunch of weeds in a lot," Petree said.

While open burning with a permit always has been allowed in Midland, the opposite is true in Odessa, according to a fire official there.

"We don't allow it at all," said Odessa Fire Marshal Rick Cates. "We've had numerous incidents in the past where people have burned off their yard, then ended up burning off their fences and their houses."

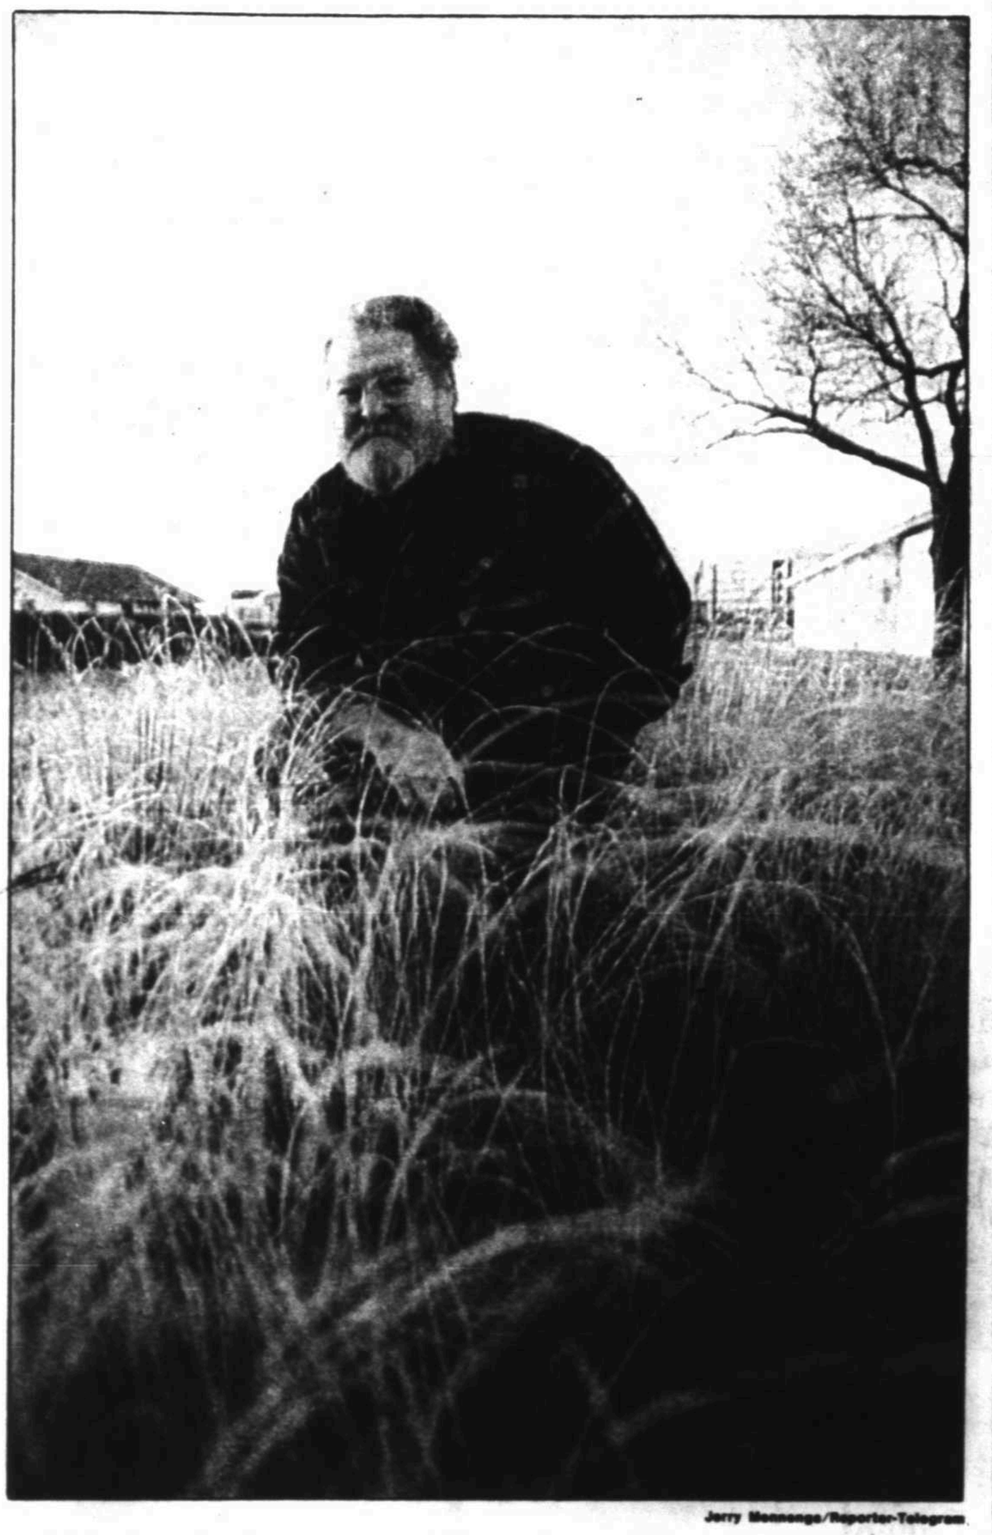

The Midland city requirement that a garden hose be at the ready does not sway Cates.

"You are limited to the amount of fire that can be put out with a garden hose," he said.

Friday's fire in northwest Midland burned two dozen acres of grassland and brush and came within a few yards of a residential area just east of Midland Drive. The fire started on a dirt road "where people had been dropping trash," fire officials said Friday.

Two other types of open burning are allowed within the city limits — but both are rare, Petree said.

Midland engineering consultant J.T. Morgan "raised the roof" with city officials to get tall weeds cut near his West Shandon Avenue home. Now City Hall is trying to clarify policy on weed cutting and thereby avoid fire dangers in the coming spring months.

Resident's anger cools with cutting of weeds

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Midland engineering consultant J.T. Morgan said Friday he thanked city officials when a crew finally cut tall weeds in a vacant lot beside his woodframe home at 417 W. Shandon Ave.

But events over a six-month period that led up to the pleasantry — climaxed by a fire in an empty lot nearby his home — had him hot under the collar and on the phone to City Hall.

"The only thing that solved it was getting on the telephone to the top men and raising hell with them," said Morgan, referring to calls to City Manager Fred Poe and Planning Director Richard Hennessy.

Prior to that, starting last August, Morgan had dealt with a variety of lower officials who were unable to help him.

"It was the lot next to mine that I was concerned with," he said. "That stuff (the weeds) was five feet high and a fire trap."

Finally last month, "I called Poe and Hennessy both and raised the roof," Morgan said. "I said, 'Look, there was a fire across the street this morning, and now I want action.' "

Within the week, crews had cut the weeds next door and in other lots sprinkled throughout the neighborhood.

City code enforcement chief George Wolf said Friday he could understand Morgan's frustration; the resident was the victim of unclear city policy.

Now, prompted by complaints by residents like Morgan, that policy is under review, with the City Council likely to make a final determination in the near future.

The problem with policy in the past was that different landowners had different understandings as to how far they had to cut weeds on vacant lots next to development, Wolf said.

Depending on when they queried City Hall over the years, they might have been directed to cut a 60-, 100-, or 140-foot clearing to combat fire dangers, he said.

"It's been helter-skelter," he said. "There have been several verbal policies."

The problem was compounded when empty landowners would compare notes and find the differences, as occurred in Morgan's case, Wolf said.

The owner of a lot west of Morgan's property had put off cutting his weeds until other lot owners were forced to cut theirs, the code enforcement chief said.

"It's hard to deal with the public when you don't have something concrete," Wolf acknowledged.

What is emerging from code enforcment, planning department and City Council consultations likely will be a resolution of policy that holds landowners must clear areas within 175 feet of development, Wolf said.

Parts of the policy will remain the same as in the past, he said. Specifically, on land where owners fail to cut weeds, city crews will do the job, and forward a bill for their services.

If landowners fail to pay up, the city will slap a lien on the property that will prevent its sale until the bill is paid, Wolf said.

"It really gives us something to work with, and I don't think it's asking too much," said the code enforcement chief.

The resolution is coming none too soon, he added. "We've had a very dry winter, and the spring is about to erupt."

Was Railey's 5-year-old son also attacked?

DALLAS (AP) — Police investigating the choking attack on the wife of former Methodist minister Walker Railey say they also found bruises around the neck of Railey's 5-year-old son, a newspaper reported Saturday.

Police and an investigator of the district attorney's office have questioned Ryan Railey several times about what happened at the family's home the night Margaret "Peggy" Railey was choked nearly to death in the family's garage.

But so far, the boy has refused to discuss specific events, Dallas County Assistant District Attorney Norm Kinne told the Dallas Times Herald.

"They still hold some hope for this boy possibly coming up with something in the future," Kinne said. "But the problem is, it would require a lot of corroboration."

A physician who examined Ryan determined the bruises on his neck were "not consistent with the fall" and of an undetermined nature, said Kinne.

Jackson leads in caucuses; Dole focuses on Illinois

Associated Press

Jesse Jackson easily won the Democratic precinct caucuses Saturday in his native South Carolina, while Sen. Bob Dole went on Illinois television for a half-hour plea for Republican votes in a state where he said he is the underdog.

Jackson took a commanding lead in the caucuses and maintained a better than 2-1 margin over the uncommitted, who represented the second-largest bloc of delegates being elected to county conventions in South Carolina.

With 78 percent of the precincts reporting, Jackson was winning 53 percent of the delegates to the county conventions, while the uncommitted trailed with 20 percent. Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore was in third place with 19 percent and other candidates were far behind.

Dole, who spoke while standing before a portrait of Abraham Lincoln on the site where Lincoln and Stephen Douglas held one of their famous debates, told Illinois voters, "I know I'm the underdog in this race.

"The issues are more important than the odds," Dole said. "I didn't expect this job to be handed to me in the first place."

The Kansas senator, who earlier acknowledged that his presidential campaign is "hanging by our fingernails," invested $100,000 in the broadcast in an attempt to stop the momentum of GOP front-runner, Vice President George Bush.

■ Related stories — 8A

A Chicago Tribune poll published in Sunday editions said Bush was far ahead of Dole while homestate Sen. Paul Simon was leading the Democratic field, followed closely by Jackson.

The newspaper also endorsed Gore in the Democratic contest, passing over native Simon and Jackson, who has made Illinois his adoptive home state.

"I dare George Bush to debate Bob Dole," Dole told a news conference. In originating his broadcast from Knox College in Galesburg, he had picked the time and site to conform to Bush's appearance at the same location, he said.

Gore, whose success in Southern primaries on March 8 catapulted him into contention in the Democratic race, was counting on another boost from South Carolina.

"We have worked very hard in this state and I think we have an opportunity to extremely well here," Gore said during an appearance in Columbia, S.C.

But favored to get a majority of the 44 delegates at stake in South Carolina was Jackson, a native of Greenville.

Jackson trailed Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis by 58 in the latest Associated Press delegate count. Strong showings in South Carolina, where he was born, and Illinois, which he now calls home, could propel Jackson into the delegate lead in the Democratic race.

Appearing at a meeting of the South Carolina Education Association, Jackson said, "I'm delighted to be home again. You taught me. You can have somebody in the White House that you taught."

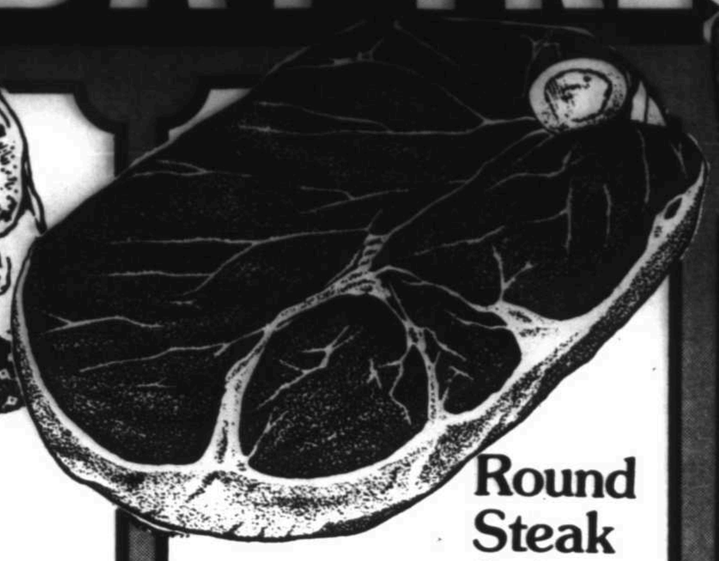

Rival Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri has the support of former Govs. Robert McNair and Richard Riley, and is a strong backer of legislation to limit textile imports, an important issue in South Carolina.

Democrats act against LaRouche supporter

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County Democratic Party leaders adopted rules designed to severely restrict the influence of its chairman-elect, a Lyndon LaRouche supporter, who has filed a lawsuit to retain power.

"This will make sure that no one acts without the approval of the committee," party activist Billie Carr said Friday night after the bylaws vote by the 664-member committee of precinct chairmen.

But Claude Jones, who stunned the party with his victory over incumbent Larry Veselka on Tuesday, said, "I'm very disappointed that they decided to dilute the results of the election. We'll take it to the courts."

As committee members filed into the downtown meeting, Jones distributed a statement pledging to work for party unity and branding his opponents as "elitists."

Jones works for LaRouche, an extremist Democratic presidential candidate whose global conspiracy theories include the charge that British royalty is involved in narcotics trafficking. But Jones said he will support the party's presidential nominee and its other candidates.

Before they become official, the new bylaws — which would expire in 1990, when Jone's two-year term ends — must be approved by party leaders again after the April 12 runoff election. Jones takes office May 2.

Some of the bylaws give new powers to the party secretary. Former party Chairman John Odam said he is considering taking the position at the urging of several party activists.

Other bylaws give all money-spending authority to a steering committee that includes the chairman and the secretary.

Ms. Carr, a member of the Democratic National Committee, said Jones was elected because voters were unaware of his association with LaRouche, whose candidacy is strongly opposed by the national and state party. But Jones said his discussion of the issues, including a proposed quarantine of AIDS patients, "struck a nerve."

Veselka congratulated Jones on his victory but later told the assemblage, "I failed you by not calling on you and running a good campaign."

Veselka, an attorney, said he was involved in a trial in another city just before the election.

Bruce Director, a longtime LaRouche supporter, told Ms. Carr during the meeting that the party was dividing itself by acting against Jones.

"You're helping (Republican) George Bush," Director said.

"At least he's not Hitler," replied Ms. Carr in reference to LaRouche.

Jones' lawsuit, filed Friday afternoon, asks State District Judge Ruby Sondock to block the party from reducing his authority under the state election code.

The judge denied a request for an immediate injunction against the party but set a hearing for April 11, a day before the runoff.

Hightower's conscience called key endorsement

AUSTIN (AP) — In the clear light of hindsight, Jim Hightower could bask in the glow.

The week before Super Tuesday, the Texas agriculture commissioner endorsed Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson. He urged others to do the same, calling it a matter of conscience.

"As hard as I have tried to remain neutral, I was unable to escape the inner voice of integrity saying that Rev. Jesse Jackson is forcefully, proudly and successfully carrying the very populist program that I espouse," Hightower said. "And, if he is standing for my principles, why am I not standing for him?"

So he stood up for Jackson.

Immediately, there were questions of whether the move was political genius or political suicide.

But following Jackson's second-place finish in the Super Tuesday Texas primary, where he earned almost as many national convention delegates as winner Michael Dukakis, Hightower's move was called a key event.

"There was a shift after the endorsement. His had more impact on a candidate than probably anybody else's endorsement. That was probably the most significant event in the last days of the campaign," said George Christian, Austin political consultant and former press secretary to President Lyndon Johnson.

"Hightower gave him a tremendous boost. He put it out as a matter of conscience, I think, challenging the liberals to put their votes where their voices were," Christian said.

The final delegate estimate from the primary balloting showed Dukakis with 44, Jackson with 42, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore with 25 and Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt with eight.

"I think Jesse was truly the big winner," Hightower said of the 20-state Super Tuesday megaprimary. "He won five states and ran second in eight states...I think it's really coming down not to a Dukakis-Gore battle now but a Jackson-Dukakis battle."

In his second term as agriculture commissioner, Hightower is widely considered a likely U.S. Senate candidate in 1990. He has been one of the nation's most visible state agriculture officials.

Hightower helped author farm legislation in Congress. He championed the family farm and remains a a vocal critic of Reagan administration farm policies.

When singer Willie Nelson staged his Farm Aid concert near Austin in 1986, Hightower and Jackson were on stage. He's been profiled on the CBS News program "60 Minutes."

Hightower says his Jackson endorsement has brought both positive and negative responses from Texans.

"Willie Nelson called and said, 'Jesse Jackson not only makes sense, he makes more sense than the rest of them combined,'" Hightower recalled.

But not everyone liked it. Hightower said he got a newspaper clipping about his endorsement in the mail, and scrawled across the top was an unspeakable suggestion.

"The reaction, from the mainline Democratic voter, has generally been solid. The hard-core redneck thing has gotten me some negative stuff," he said.

As he has moved to broaden his support from an essentially black base, Jackson's theme has become not unlike Hightower's own.

"It's a populist message this time, rather than a message of essentially a racial protest," Hightower said, comparing this Jackson campaign to that of 1984.

"It's a message that has broad appeal to the rock core center of the Democratic Party — the old-time dirt farmer, small business person, working family, people who feel left out and not helped by Reaganomics. He is, indeed, cutting across lines. He's a genuine alternative for a lot of people."

Whether the endorsement help or hurt his own political future is an unanswered question, Hightower says.

"The jury's still out on that," he said, laughing. "I was contemplating all of this (before the endorsement). And I finally decided that I wasn't smart enough to figure out whether it was a plus or a minus. So I just did what my heart said."

Counties should have power to regulate colonias, Ortiz says

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — The problem of rural slums known as "colonias" will never be solved until the state gives counties ordinance-making clout, members of a congressional subcommittee said Saturday.

"Congressmen from throughout the nation will not be willing to put money in a bottomless pit," said Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-Corpus Christi, after a hearing on a bill he has proposed for colonia improvements.

Ortiz and other members of the House Subcommittee on Water Resources held a hearing Friday in El Paso.

Witnesses testified that colonias are the result of unscrupulous real estate developers who are able to put in substandard rural subdivisions because counties have little power to prevent them.

Customers are often lured by low down payments and low monthly payments.

"They (Congress) want to be sure that there will be some controls, and we hope that we can work with the Legislature so that they can give the county commissioners enforcement powers and regulation powers. Otherwise, if we do not have this, it's going to be very hard for us to obtain the money," Ortiz said.

Ortiz' bill, HR 3524, known as the Colonia Water and Sewage Act, would provide $25 million in grants and $20 million in low-interest loans for colonia water systems.

About 28,000 people live without clean water in 350 colonias in El Paso County's Lower Valley. Another 70,000 to 100,000 live in colonias in the southern tip of Texas.

Prior to Saturday's hearing, the congressmen visited Cameron Park, a colonia east of Brownsville, and drove down its unpaved streets past plywood and cinder block homes, some of which had outhouses for toilets.

Cameron Park resident Paulo Valero, 68, told the congressmen he has running water, but no sewer service, and that when it rains, children cannot go to school because the roads are impassable.

"These things happen so many times," said 23-year-old Cameron Park resident Antonio Hernandez, referring to the congressional tour. "People come here and they watch and they look and we're still the same."

According to the Texas Water Development Board, "Colonias are primarily residential developments in unincorporated rural areas that are characterized by a high proportion of substandard housing, inadequate roads and drainage and a lack of adequate water and wastewater disposal systems."

Assistant Texas Attorney General Ester Chavez testified, "One of the root causes of these problems is unscrupulous developers who prey on those least able to defend themselves: the working poor. In Texas, these developers target areas beyond the jurisdiction of our towns and cities to set up these subdivisions."

Ms. Chavez, representing Attorney General Jim Mattox, said, "In Texas, we need tougher state laws that will allow us to stop unscrupulous developers who would continue to profit at the expense of our communities."

Rep. Ronald Coleman, D-El Paso, said he would insist on the Legislature strengthening its rural laws to ensure continuing congressional support for aiding colonias.

"We in the federal government shouldn't be put in the position of having to force the state to take that action," Coleman said.

County ordinance proposals in the past have been defeated with the help of the real estate and county government lobbies, Coleman said.

Adolph Thomae Jr., a commissioner for Cameron County, said he and officials from some other counties, however, have fought for broader ordinance power for years.

Amalia Lerma, a leader of Valley Interfaith, a coalition of 36 churches that has helped bring national attention to the colonias, said in an interview that many people take their drinking water from irrigation ditches or shallow wells near septic systems.

Consequently, she said, they often suffer from hepatitis, typhoid, dysentery and leprosy.

Interfaith repeated a plea made by a sister organization on Friday for $500 million in grants and loans for water and sewer systems for the colonias from El Paso to Brownsville.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Breezy conditions, temperatures of near 60 degrees anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Another breezy day fit for playing outdoors should be in store for Midlanders today.

National Weather Service forecasters at Midland International Airport are calling for sunny skies today and a high temperature reading of near 60 degrees. Winds are to be northeasterly at 10 to 20 mph. Tonight is to be clear, with a low near 30 degrees. Monday is to be sunny, with a high near 60 degrees.

Saturday's peak temperature was 62 degrees, and the overnight low was 36 degrees. The record high temperature for March 12 is 88 degrees, set in 1982, and the record low for March 13 is 14 degrees, set in 1932.

STATE

High pressure continued to influence weather across Texas on Saturday. A cold front that Saturday morning was over the extreme eastern part of the state moved later in the day to Louisiana and the northwest Gulf of Mexico.

High level clouds streaked across South Texas. However, skies were clear over most of the state.

Winds statewide were generally north to northwest at 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 25 mph. The Trans-Pecos had west winds at 10 to 25 mph.

Temperatures at mid-afternoon ranged were in the mid—40s in the Panhandle, the 50s and 60s elsewhere in the west and the 60s and 70s for the rest of the state. The state's high at 3 p.m. was 87 at McAllen; the low was 46 at Amarillo.

The National Weather Service said skies on Sunday should be sunny to partly cloudy. Highs Sundwy were expected to range from the middle 40s in the Panhandle to near 80 in South Texas.

NATION

A major blizzard continued blasting the northern Plains today, packing winds of 30 to 50 mph that reduced visibility to near zero and piled up snow in drifts up to 10 feet high.

A band of showers and thunderstorms spawned by the same storm system produced hail the size of golfballs in north-central Texas. The rain extended across central Arkansas and central Illinois into southwest Wisconsin and southeast Minnesota.

Areas hit hard by the blizzard Friday included northeast Colorado, western and north-central Nebraska, western South Dakota and eastern Wyoming. Roads remain closed in many areas. Bitterly cold wind chills of 10 to 25 below zero were common.

Blizzard warnings remained in effect today over much of the eastern Dakotas and western Minnesota.

Winter storm warnings or winter storm watches were up in sections of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan.

On Friday, snow was reported as deep as 31 inches, with snow drifts 5 feet deep in Chadron, Neb. Drifts measured 10 feet in Cody, although only 6 to 7 inches fell. Snowshowers also lingered over the central Rockies.

Strong winds over the northern Plains included gusts to 69 mph at Akron, Colo. Wind gusts over 50 mph were clocked at Rapid city, S.D.; Scottsbluff, Neb.; Limon, Colo.; and Duluth, Minn.

There were numerous reports of large hail across north-central Texas Friday night. Hail the size of golfballs was reported in De Soto and Terrell. In Arkansas, 1-inch hail fell at Burg.

Today's forecast called for snow and strong winds from the Dakotas and Nebraska across the upper Mississippi Valley into upper Michigan; strong winds in Kansas and Oklahoma; snowshowers lingering over the northern and central Rockies and thunderstorms extending from Alabama, Mississippi and northwest Georgia across the Tennessee Valley, the Ohio Valley and the middle Mississippi Valley, with rain reaching into southern Wisconsin, lower Michigan and the lower Great Lakes region.

Highs were expected in the 20s and 30s from the northern and central Rockies across the northern two-thirds of the Plains and the upper Mississippi Valley into upper Michigan, upstate New York and northern New England; and the 70s and 80s from southern Texas across the central Gulf coast states and the southern Atlantic coast states, with a few readings in the 70s across Southern California and southwest Arizona. The rest of the nation will have highs in the 40s, 50s or 60s.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 a.m. EST ranged from 1 degree at Yellowstone Park, Wyo., to 70 degrees at Miami, Key West, Fla., and Brownsville, Texas.

Major snowstorm buries Midwest

Associated Press

A major snowstorm that dumped up to 7 feet of snow shut down travel in the upper Midwest Saturday and whipped up 15-foot waves on Lake Superior, while crews worked to reopen highways across the Plains where hundreds of people had been snowbound for two days.

"It's a little better than yesterday but not much," said Roberta Welsh, Nebraska State Patrol dispatcher at Scottsbluff.

A South Dakota woman was killed Saturday when her car skidded and rolled over on an icy interstate, the state Highway Patrol said.

High school basketball fans spent the night stuck in a Minnesota arena after a regional playoff, and two busloads of Nebraska schoolchildren snowbound at isolated farms got to go home.

Up to 7 feet of snow stranded skiers on Terry Peak in South Dakota's Black Hills and 15-foot drifts were reported near Badlands National Park. In the hard-hit Nebraska Panhandle, 31 inches of snow was reported at Chadron, with 10-foot drifts at Crawford.

The Cheyenne County, Neb., sheriff's department worked through the night and all day Saturday to reach people believed stranded in vehicles in the Sidney area, said dispatcher Harlan Sage.

"We'll be lucky if we don't find someone out in the country ... dead possibly," said Kimball ambulance director Jim O'Brien and Kimball County Sheriff John Thacker Jr. They said the storm was the worst to hit western Nebraska in at least 18 years.

An elderly couple from Springview, Neb., were rescued Saturday by a relative on a snowmobile after spending the night stuck in their pickup, said Keya Paha County Sheriff Gary Sell.

Blowing snow kept visibility down to about one-quarter of a mile around O'Neill, Neb., forcing the town to cancel its annual St. Patrick's Day celebration, said Holt County sheriff's dispatcher Arlene Fox.

More than a foot of snow fell Saturday in sections of northern and central Minnesota, and it was whipped up by 50 mph wind that closed the Duluth airport for six hours. Waves estimated at 15 feet topped some seawalls along Lake Superior, the National Weather Service said.

Hundreds of Hutchinson High School girls' basketball fans, including the school band, were stranded overnight in Mankato, Minn., by snow and zero visibility after a victory in regional playoffs. The seven busloads of fans stayed in Mankato State University's arena while the team got motel rooms. The motel said they checked out Saturday morning.

Up to 10 inches of wet snow was dumped on northern Wisconsin, miring countless vehicles on highways near Lake Superior.

"It looks like everybody's on an ego trip, wanting to see how far they can go" before their cars get stuck, said police Capt. Jerry Moe at Superior, Wis., just across the lake from Duluth.

Snow also fell across northern Michigan. "We're getting a blizzard," said state police Sgt. Larry Brown at St. Ignace at the southeastern tip of the Upper Peninsula.

On Terry Peak in the Black Hills, skiers had been snowbound since Thursday, and Terry Peak Lodge manager Bob Ekeren said 7 feet of snow had fallen by Saturday. "We're out of bread and meat and potatoes. We're making soup."

"There's three, four feet of snow on top of cars. We can't even find them," Ekeren said at the lodge, at an elevation of 6,700 feet.

Crews in Wyoming, Nebraska and South Dakota worked Saturday to reopen roads that had been closed by drifting snow and zero visibility, some since Thursday.

More than 200 miles of Interstate 80 across Wyoming and into western Nebraska reopened Saturday and north-south I-25 was reopened in Wyoming. But many other roads in eastern Wyoming remained closed, the Highway Patrol said.

The reopening of I-80 allowed travel for the first time since Thursday out of Kimball, Neb., where some 700 people had been holed up by Saturday in motels, private homes and the Kimball County Courthouse. "We're getting some people down the road," said Carl Farmer of the sheriff's office.

Conditions in Kimball were "a tad better. We can see across the street but we've got a long ways to go," said a woman who answered the phone at the Kimball civil defense office Saturday morning.

Televised account of attack 'fair,' friends say

DALLAS (AP) — A nationally televised report on former minister Walker Railey and the near-fatal choking of his wife was a fair assessment of the attack, friends and relatives said Saturday.

The report Friday, on ABC News' "20/20", outlined the events surrounding the attack last April 21 on Margaret "Peggy" Railey. Her husband told police he returned home and found his wife lying unconscious on the floor of the garage.

Both Railey's attorney and Dallas County District Assistant District Attorney Norm Kinne identify the former minister as the prime suspect in the attack on Mrs. Railey, but Railey denied involvement. He has refused to cooperate with police and invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination 43 times when questioned by a grand jury.

"The broadcast was what I expected it to be, a very detailed look pointing out all the major portions of this case, both the consistencies and the inconsistencies," said Railey's brother, Gary Railey, from his Indiana home.

"It's been a hard night having to watch the broadcast," Gary Railey said of watching the segment that explained how the criminal investigation into the attack had stalled.

"We thought it went good," said Diane Yarrington, who with her husband, John, has legal custody of Walker and Peggy Railey's two children. "We thought they did a fair job with a sensitive subject."

Entitled "Fall from Grace", the 23-minute segment documented Railey's rise to senior minister of Dallas' First United Methodist Church and eventual flight from Texas to San Francisco, where he currently lives.

Railey leased an apartment with Dallas psychologist Lucy Papillon, who testified before the grand jury that she and Railey had discussed marriage before the attack.

The television program also detailed the former minister's failure to cooperate with authorities, inconsistencies in his alibi for the two hours during which police think his wife had been strangled and the civil suit filed against Railey by his in-laws.

Mrs. Railey remains comatose in a Tyler nursing home.

Officials, before the broadcast, released a five-page suicide note Railey left when he tried to kill himself shortly after his wife's attack. In the note, Railey said he had demons inside him who lured him into doing things he did not want to do.

RAILEY

The newspaper report followed an ABC News "20-20" segment focusing on the April 20 attack that left Mrs. Railey in a coma and the investigation of Railey, former pastor of Dallas' First United Methodist Church.

Before the broadcast, officials released a five-page suicide note Railey left when he tried to kill himself shortly after his wife's attack. In the note, Railey said he had demons inside him who lured him into doing things he did not want to do.

Transcripts of two calls Railey made to a home answering machine on the night of the attack also were released.

Both Railey's attorney and Kinne identify the former minister as the prime suspect in the attack on Mrs. Railey, but Railey denied involvement. He has refused to cooperate with police and invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination 43 times when questioned by a grand jury.

Railey lives in San Francisco, where he leased an apartment with Dallas psychologist Lucy Papillon, who testified before the grand jury that she and Railey had discussed marriage before the attack.

When questioned by investigators, Ryan gave a number of inconsistent accounts about what he may have seen the night his mother was nearly strangled, including one in which he was quoted as saying, "Maybe daddy did it," Kinne said.

Because of the conflicting stories, police and Kinne said the boy's information at this point is of little value.

But the Times Herald reported a source outside the district attorney's office said police still hope to pursue the investigation, focusing on Ryan's account.

Kinne said he sent his own investigator to talk with Ryan — a woman he believes is very good with children.

He said she "got real friendly with him and he was talking to her freely and everything. But whenever she would broach the subject of what happened that night, he would turn it off. And he would turn his back and try to leave the room and just flat wouldn't talk about it.

"I'm not discounting the possibility this boy may have seen something and may at some point in time be able to tell someone what he did in fact see."

Ryan was in his bed when the attack on his mother occurred, his 2 year-old sister was asleep in front of the television.

The children are now under the care of John and Diane Yarrington, who long ago made an agreement with the Raileys to care for one another's children if something should happen. The Yarringtons say Railey maintains periodic telephone contact with them to check on his children.

"A stuttering problem the youngster had long ago recurred when Railey visited his children last Christmas, prompting recommendations against the visits by a psychiatrist.

Mrs. Yarrington says Ryan Railey has not repeated that "Maybe daddy did it" or given another account of what he might have seen the night his mother was attacked.

FIRE

At a 3,000-acre ranch south of Albany, workers were moving about 100 head of cattle away from the blaze while a U.S. Forest Service crew, with three bulldozers, fought the flames, which had rekindled in a pasture.

"We've had about 1,500 acres burned," said Wanda Sims, a part-owner of the Dyer-Sims Ranch. "It looks worse at night because that's when you can see the flames. During the day, the smoke covers everything.

"The night before last, it looked like hot lava moving down the hills," she said, adding a fire burned about 50 acres on the ranch last year.

The blaze began Thursday after a trash fire got out of control.

Firefighting crews arrived Friday from around the state, allowing tired Forest Service crews and volunteers the chance to rest.

"We are trying to survey the burned area from the air because you still can't drive through most of it," said Albany Mayor Wayne Hogan. "We lit backfires last night to protect rural houses just west of the city limits to stop the flames, advancing from the west and northwest."

Numerous firefighters, among hundreds battling the blaze, suffered injuries from smoke inhalation and minor burns, said Tom Millwee of the Division of Emergency Management, Texas Department of Public Safety and governor's office.

In Moran, 16 miles southeast of Albany, Morris Snyder Jr. gazed with neighbors through a smoky haze at a long bluff a few miles away. "I'm kind of worried about that," said the 34-year-old rancher, pointed toward a line of flames moving toward them from the west.

The fire, which cut a 60-mile swath across the prairie, turned scrubland into ashes as far as Snyder and other ranchers could see.

"That durned thing is going to come over that bluff," said Snyder, whose land was at the southern end of the long wall of fire. "We haven't been able to control this. This is the worst anyone living here has seen. It's the worst anyone can remember."

The Federal Emergency Management Agency in Washington approved aid for the blaze in Throckmorton, Jones, Haskell, Callahan and Shackelford counties, said Carl Suchoki, FEMA spokesman in Washington.

"The fire suppression aid gives funding for fighting fires which threaten to become a major disaster," he said.

The blaze covered an area about 60 miles long and 25 miles wide in portions of Callahan, Shackelford and Throckmorton counties, officials said.

"Yesterday, no sooner than you built a fire break, the flames would jump it," Millwee said Saturday morning. "If the winds cooperate, they may get a better handle on the fire."

Gov. Bill Clements dispatched 100 National Guard troops and about 20 volunteer fire departments sent men and equipment to the area after the fire broke out.

The group joined West Texas fire departments and Texas Forest Service firefighters that also responded to the blaze.

YARD

"We will allow the schools to have their bonfires every year — and of course those are attended," he said.

"And at construction sites, we will allow a fire to be built to help keep workers warm."

Unlike bonfires, fires at construction sites do not require a permit, but are closely monitored and have to be kept at least 50 feet from any structure, Petree said.

"Some of the builders try and take advantage of us and burn all of their scraps so they don't have to haul it off," he added.

Cates said he did not know open fires were allowed in Midland, but he heard it is allowed in other Texas cities.

Even with the week's rash of wind-fed fires, the city codes will not have to be altered if authorities decide open burning should be prohibited, Midland's fire marshal said.

"Some cities have done away with burning in the city limits — and we've thought about it," Petree said. "But our codes are so strict anyway, we definitely have control over it.

"With anyone who burns without a permit we are going to roll the trucks, put the fire out and issue a citation."

Open burning is regulated and is safe in Midland, Petree said.

"With the guidelines we have, it is much safer than the way a lot of people light their barbecue pit."

CAMPAIGN

Gore said he too supported the legislation.

Bush crushed his Republican opponents in the South Carolina GOP primary last Saturday.

Simon was banking on Illinois voters in Tuesday's primary to give their home state senator enough support to keep him in the race.

Dukakis, Jackson and Gephardt made forays Saturday into Michigan, where Democrats hold caucuses March 26.

Jackson addressed the graduation at Michigan State Unversity, recalling the tumult of the civil rights movement and calling on graduates to work for more than material wants.

"A generation of young Americans died, sacrificed to keep America better and make America strong," he said. "Your generation must resist the dangerous trend of surrendering to the war of the opiate and the war of selfishness and the war of conceit and use your strength to take the torch another lap in this great struggle."

Dukakis visited the 250-worker Olofsson Corp. plant, which makes exotic, computer-controlled machines, and said the United States needs to re-invest in its industrial base.

Dukakis, seeking Michigan union support against stiff competition from Gephardt and Jackson, said he plans to target his message to working people, teachers, homemakers and professionals.

In Illinois Dukakis began airing a new commercial that appeared to be a veiled attack on Simon who has been saying he thought the Democratic nominee would be chosen at a brokered convention.

The ad did not name Simon, but said some people want to return to "the days when you didn't really pick the presidential nominee. They say you must turn over the power to them to use at a brokered convention ... On Tuesday you can pick the next president. Mike Dukakis is running for president in every state in America."

A Washington Post-ABC News poll published Sunday showed Simon supported by 39 percent of the 540 likely Democratic voters interviewed on Thursday and Friday. Jackson had 32 percent in the poll, followed by Dukakis with 15 percent, Gephardt with 5 percent and Gore with 3 percent. The poll has a margin of error of plus or minus 7 percentage points.

After campaigning in the city's "Greektown" region on Friday night, Dukakis stopped Saturday at an Italian bakery on the city's west side to help bake bread. He offered a modest goal for Illinois.

"If we can get some share of the delegates, I think it would be great," he said.

Bush has repeatedly rejected Dole's debate challenges.

"That ploy has been used before," he said. "Debates are cruel and unusual punishment. We've already had seven of them."

Republican candidate Pat Robertson also was in Illinois and insisted he did not need a victory in the state to remain the race.

"It looks strong for me in the West," he said. If he loses the fight for the GOP nomination, said Robertson "I'll dust myself off and be right back in it in 1992."

Padre prepares for annual rite of spring

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — Thousands of college students and others looking for a huge beach blowout bring the annual rites of spring break to a peak this week.

As many as 75,000 young people are expected to descend upon the island for the week's line-up of people watching, beer guzzling, concerts and general mayhem.

"Basically, the folks of the town of South Padre Island welcome the college students because they mean a lot to us economically," said Dick Bushnell of the South Padre Island Tourist Bureau.

"They spend millions of dollars on lodging, meals, retail sales. They provide jobs for everything from security guards to sales clerks."

Spring break actually began in late February, when several hundred Canadian and midwestern students started arriving during their week off. But this week the student population will reach its peak during "Texas week," when several major universities in the state will be out.

Hotels soon will hit 100 percent occupancy in this town of about 1,000 year-round residents.

During the six-week spring break period lasting until the first week of April, the island expects a total of 250,000 students to have visited.

At the north end of Padre Island in the Corpus Christi-Mustang Island-Aransas Pass area, some 150,000 spring breakers will hit the beaches by mid-April.

Beer companies have set up high profile promotions along the main drag in South Padre Island. The wildest anticipated days of the break period will be Tuesday's Miller beach concert, with performers Eddie Money and the Georgia Satellites; and Thursday's Bud concert, with Richard Marx and Triumph on stage, Bushnell said.

On Monday, a Christian beach concert, dubbed the "Padre's Party," also is planned, featuring Margaret Becker, White Cross, Surfside Witness and Paul Smith.

It is during this week that traffic at times slows to a crawl on the 2.6-mile Queen Isabella Causeway and parking spaces vanish on the resort island.

Spring breakers last week generally congregated near the Hilton, where a local radio station was holding a suntan contest.

"I have met a ton of girls," said sunburned, 20-year-old Brian Casey, who traveled down by bus with a group from Illinois State University. "I had this girl peeling skin off my back last night, rubbing me down with Vaseline and aloe vera."

Eighteen-year-old Sonja Loder, who also traveled down from Illinois, said, "I've never been to the beach before. South Padre seemed to be the place to go."

Mayor Bob Pinkerton said some businesses rely on spring break for more than 35 percent of their annual business.

"Tourism is South Padre Island's only industry," Pinkerton said.

Spring break will mean $7 million to $10 million in business this year for the town, the mayor said.

A pizza restaurant will stay open 24 hours and at peak periods during spring break customers there and some other restaurants can expect to wait hours to eat.

Police have been put on 12-hour shifts, while the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission will be on the lookout for under-age drinkers, and 15 highway patrol units are deployed to cut down on drunken drivers, officials said.

North Texas Methodist delegates back anti-homosexual stance

DALLAS (AP) — A majority of North Texas delegates to the 1988 General Conference of the United Methodist Church favor the church's ban on ordination of homosexuals and prohibition on providing funding to gay advocacy groups.

The Rev. Spurgeon Dunham, editor of The United Methodist Reporter and an elected delegate, said Friday more than 80 percent of the delegates meeting in Dallas favored the existing church's position.

The church prohibits the ordination of avowed, practicing homosexuals and financial support for groups advocating acceptance of homosexuality.

But a minority said they were concerned about the church's position on funding, The Dallas Morning News reported.

The issue of homosexuality has been debated at length in the last three quadrennial meetings of the denomination. Some predict it will be the overriding subject of controversy at the denomination's convention in St. Louis, beginning April 26.

The resolution passed by the North Texas delegates notes that the church has struggled with the issue since 1972 and "has consistently reaffirmed its position that seeks to be compassionate and to affirm high standards of moral behavior for Christians."

The United Methodist Church is divided into 73 areas called annual conferences. Each annual conference elects a slate of ministers and lay people as delegates to the General Conference, the denomination's highest policy-making body.

'Rubber Duckies' get chance to sink or swin with students

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — A company marketing a new brand of condom is aiming its first big marketing campaign at AIDS-wary college students on spring break at Texas beaches.

Steve Finley, an entrepreneur based in Irving, calls his latex product "Rubber Ducky."

Finley said his aim is to make his condoms fashionable with a humorous campaign and colorful packaging.

A new jingle about to hit the beach-area radio stations in Texas, goes, "No need for old embarrassment. It's the right thing to do. Get hip, hip, hip. Rubber Ducky."

Finley's company started selling promotional T-shirts last September, even before he had any condoms on the market.

"To our knowledge, we were the first people to put out a condom T-shirt," Finley said.

"It's extremely well received," said Del Clark, president of Shirts Ahoy Inc., which has stores on South Padre Island. "I think it's bought primarily because the demand's been created for it by clever promotion."

Store displays include giant Rubber Ducky condom boxes.

Finley said he is relying on spring break to introduce the contraceptives to his college-age target market.

"Typically what happens in the young people, is the trends are started at the beaches," Finley said. "If you hit a home run at spring break, it kind of rolls right across the country."

He also plans a major marketing push with college bookstores and drug and grocery retailers.

The 39-year-old Finley, who invented "Burnoff" suntan oil in 1981, said, "The only way you get them to use condoms is to make it cool to use one."

Tarzan fails 'screen test' in courtroom

HOUSTON (AP) — Tarzan has gone to extreme lengths to sniff out hidden drugs, but became sidetracked by the scent of another canine during a courtroom test of his prowess.

Attorneys gathered in State District Judge Woody Densen's court Friday to watch the unusual demonstration dissolve in laughter. Tarzan, a 3-year-old Belgian Malinois, tore into a green suitcase that contained a dog blanket.

Tarzan also "alerted" on a bag belonging to a court reporter but bypassed four times a satchel that contained a cocaine grinder and scale.

"Tarzan failed his screen test," quipped an attorney as a television station filmed the episode.

Tarzan's handler, Houston police officer Doyle Green, blamed the dog's confusion on pressure and a courtroom contaminated by the scent of drugs from previous trials.

Green said Tarzan has discovered $14 million worth of illegal drugs at Hobby Airport over the past 10 months. He said the dog has been 95 percent accurate.

Green and Tarzan were called into court by Terry Collins, the attorney for Kimberly Morgan, who was accused of possessing two grams of cocaine.

Tarzan had identifed the cocaine grinder in one of Ms. Morgan's bags as she was passing through the airport Jan. 27. Prosecutor Chris Flood said police stopped Ms. Morgan, 23, and found the cocaine when they searched her purse.

Collins was attempting to show that the dog is unreliable and that officers had no probable cause to stop Ms. Morgan.

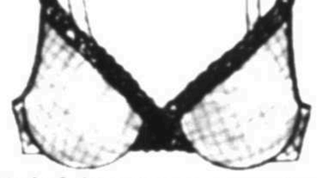

Despite Tarzan's failure at sniffing out the bag containing cocaine, Densen declined to suppress evidence in the case. The judge said Tarzan's record of being 95 percent accurate was enough to sustain the charges.

At one point during the courtroom demonstration, Tarzan tried to get out of the courtroom. Green speculated he wanted to get into the courtroom next door, where State District Judge Ted Poe had 1,888 pounds of marijuana as evidence in a drug trial.

Newspaper's loss turns out to be Joe Bob Briggs' gain

By JAY JORDEN

DALLAS (AP) — With financial success that includes a new cable television contract, an autumn comedy tour and a planned movie, "National Lampoon's Topless Bar," could an observer conclude that Joe Bob Briggs has gone establishment?

"As Joe Bob, I will not do anything that violates my ethical principles. But I will do anything for money," says author John Bloom, who created the rednecked persona that shocked and titillated readers of his nationally distributed drive-in movie reviews.

After six years of the scathingly sexist reviews as the world's only drive-in movie critic, Bloom says his Joe Bob persona has acquired a life of its own.

"I am a lot less schizophrenic because I have totally become Joe Bob," said Bloom, 35, who recently auctioned publishing rights to his third book, tentatively entitled "White Like Me."

But the going was rough for a while. Three years ago, Bloom resigned from the Dallas Times Herald under pressure from the black community after writing his "We Are the Weird" parody of the "We Are The World" song that raised millions of dollars for the African famine relief effort.

He took several months to regroup, occasionally penning columns while pursuing syndicate distribution of his "Joe Bob Goes To The Drive-In" reviews. Creators Syndicate now carries the feature.

These days, Bloom says any target is fair game — except one.

"There are no sacred cows except Wayne Newton," he says. "Don't even think about making a crack about him. He's still the king."

But everything and everybody else beware: Joe Bob has called women bimbos, Hispanics Meskins and blacks Negroes. Some newspapers and their readers have taken offense, and Bloom jokes that his column has run in as many as 50 different versions due to censorship.

Joe Bob, however, is getting less of a rise out of readers these days. Less than 1 percent of his monthly letters now are hate mail, and the misanthropist's writings are even being compared to satirists Jonathan Swift and Ring Lardner.

"I am starting to worry," Bloom said. "As time goes on, it (the column) gets censored less and less.

"There are less and less words considered taboo," he said. "There was a paper that used to routinely censor 'bimbo.' It has a kind of mystique. But there are no raunchy four-letter words in the column."

Bloom says his "White Like Me" book will have lots of the blood, brawls and bimbos that have become part of his one-person genre. It'll be a collection of reprints from his review column, syndicated in about 50 newspapers nationwide.

Bloom's literary agent, Ann Whitley, is not disclosing monetary figures for the third book's publishing rights, auctioned on Jan. 26-27. She says only that Dell Publishing Co. Inc. "bought the book at a higher royalty and higher advance" than other bidders.

Dell also published two earlier books, "Joe Bob Goes to the Drive-In" and "A Guide to Western Civilization, or My Story," an autobiography, after Bloom settled a lawsuit against the Times Herald over rights to Joe Bob's name.

"Two months ago, Tom Wolfe got a $1⅓ million at an auction for a book full of exclamation points," Bloom said. "If 15,000 exclamation points are worth that, then this dribble is worth $3.5 million."

Meanwhile, Bloom says he happily has found that there is life after newspaper work.

"It was the best thing that ever happened to me," said Bloom of his resignation from the Times Herald. "I had gotten into that mindset of thinking that I had to have that weekly paycheck, the security of a daily job, and what I found was it is a lot more fun and a lot more freedom.

"I've done a lot of things I would never have been able to do at the newspaper, including stand-up comedy and putting out at least one book a year. It was a blessing in disguise."

Efforts to end police board called racist

DALLAS (AP) — Minorities say billionaire H. Ross Perot and the Dallas police group he supports are racist because they are trying to do away with a citizens review board formed to examine complaints of police misconduct.

Minority leaders say the efforts of the Dallas Police Association to abolish the Citizen Police Review Board are further polarizing the city already divided along racial lines on police issues.

"In my mind this has nothing to do with race," Perot said. "This has everything to do with constitutional rights."

In a copyright story Saturday, The Dallas Morning News reported that a survey showed most blacks and Hispanics in the city oppose the effort to abolish the board, while whites slightly favor it.

The poll conducted by the News showed 42 percent of those surveyed oppose the board, 41 support it, and 17 percent were undeciced.

But 70 percent of 659 randomly selected Dallas residents said in the telephone survey they are willing to pay higher property taxes for more officers.

The Dallas Police Association gathered signatures on petitions at polling places on Super Tuesday, March 8. The predominantly white group began calling for the termination of the board after the death of Officer Gary McCarthy, who was fatally shot while trying to stop an attempted robbery last month. He was the third officer killed in a six-week period.

The 13-member review board was appointed by the City Council and later given expanded power to issue subpoenas in response to criticism of the department's use of deadly force.

"It is perceived and the perception is real, that it's a black, brown and white issue," said state Rep. Fred Blair, head of a coalition of 30 black business, community, church and elected officials. "I don't see how you could see it as anything else."

According to the News' poll, 64 percent of blacks and 55 percent of Hispanics favor the review panel. About 30 percent of whites favor the board and 54 oppose it. The rest were undecided.

Police will use the petition signatures to force the City Council to call a referendum to dismantle the board.

"The Hispanic community will coalesce with our black brothers and sisters to defeat it (the referendum) if it comes before the voters," said Domingo Garcia, head of a group of Hispanic leaders.

A separate group, the coalition of Hispanic Organizations, representing 27 Hispanic groups, will meet with Perot, who already has held several meetings with the DPA and other officers, said Adelfa Callejo, president.

The referendum also calls for hiring almost 700 more police officers to meet a three-per-1,000 population goal. A majority of council members said they hope to avoid taking the issues to voters but are unsure of their options.

Michael Walton, 38, said he's willing to pay more taxes, "if that's what it takes for us to have more police, that's what we need." Walton, who is black, was a respondent to the News poll which surveyed 241 whites, 211 blacks and 207 Hispanics.

The poll has a margin error of plus or minus 4 percentage points and a margin error of plus or minus 7 points for each racial subset.

Teacher accused of having sex with male student fired

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A school board fired a high school teacher accused of having sexual relations with a student who later committed suicide.

The Northside Independent School District board voted 6-0 Friday to dismiss Clark High School English teacher Lou Ann Hogan, saying her probationary contract was terminated "for immoral action." The firing was made at the end of a public hearing the teacher had requested.

Mrs. Hogan, 24, denied allegations, made in written statements by four high school students, that she had sexual relations with Chad Eugene Cadenhead.

The 17-year-old student killed himself with a shotgun on Jan. 28, but officials have not linked the suicide and alleged sexual incident. The Bexar County district attorney is investigating the allegations against Mrs. Hogan.

"I am disappointed in the results of what happened here," Mrs. Hogan said after the hearing. "We will pursue the legal rights we have."

During the hearing, Clark principal Jerry Daniel said the second-year teacher was honest and received high ratings during her first year of teaching.

Daniel said four male students supplied written statements saying they saw Mrs. Hogan have sexual relations with Cadenhead late last year. The statements did not carry a specific date for the incident, only that it occurred in late November or early December, the principal said.

Mrs. Hogan has filed suit against each of the four boys charging defamation of character, libel and slander.

The boys' lawyer, Robert Thornton, advised them not to make any statements at Thursday's public hearing, because of the suit.

Mrs. Hogan said she met Cadenhead during the 1986-87 school year and met him one time out of school at a fast-food restaurant last November.

At the public hearing, Mrs. Hogan said Cadenhead called her Jan. 15 and said a girl accused him in front of a group of his friends that day of spreading rumors about his relationship with Mrs. Hogan.

"I asked him why he was spreading the rumors and he said he was not," Mrs. Hogan told the board, adding that was the last time she talked to him.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texstar, facing suits over mishap, files for Chapter 11

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Texstar Construction Corp., facing civil lawsuits and federal fines related to a Connecticut construction accident last April that killed 28 people, filed Friday for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy code.

Texstar listed unsecured debts of almost $190 million and assets of about $1.3 million. Continental Lift Slab Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary, also filed for Chapter 11 reorganization, listing unsecured debts of $150,449 and assets of $327,709.

Continental was the primary subcontractor on the L'Ambiance Plaza building project in Bridgeport, Conn. The building, constructed using a lift-slab method, collapsed April 23, 1987 and killed 28 people.

In lift-slab construction, concrete floors are poured in a stack on the ground, then lifted by jacks to their proper height along vertical steel columns.

Last fall, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration slapped Texstar with a $2.57 million fine, which the agency described as its largest penalty ever for violations of federal standards.

Robbery suspect kills self

HOUSTON (AP) — Encircled by police cars, a suspected bank robber fatally shot himself in the head after stepping from his van, authorities said.

"As I was getting out of the (police) vehicle, I heard a shot, turned around and he was falling to the ground," Houston patrolman Bobbie Miller said.

Inside the van, police police found a briefcase that contained $10,550 cash, officials said.

A man who robbed the First Interstate Bank of Texas in Seabrook on Thursday morning got into a van after leaving the bank and was tailed by a bank official, who alerted police by mobile phone.

Three police cars, two from Houston and one from suburban Pasadena, followed the van and finally surrounded it, police said.

The man died about 10 miles from the bank robbery scene, roughly 30 minutes after the holdup took place.

UH to host gas summit

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Houston will host a national conference on natural gas this fall, officials said Friday.

"Natural gas represents the energy future of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Louisiana and New Mexico, and we better start paying attention to our new golden goose," said Railraod Commissioner John Sharp in announcing the meeting.

"This conference will represent the first time that some very diverse groups recognize common interests and begin working together on solutions to national problems," he said.

Bush's sweep cools Democrats' ardor for brokered convention

By DAVID ESPO

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush's apparent lock on the Republican presidential nomination is beginning to cool Democratic excitement over the prospect of a brokered national convention.

Barring a collapse of unimaginable proportions, Bush will spend the final months of the primary season seeking support for the fall campaign from independent voters and potential Democratic converts.

The longer the Democratic nominating war goes on, the better Bush likes it. A Democratic National Convention this summer featuring bloodletting on prime-time TV would suit him just fine.

Democrats know this well, and that may give them an impetus to rally around a candidate sooner rather than later, particularly given Bush's evident vulnerability on the Iran-Contra affair.

No one understands this better than Jimmy Carter. The former president told an audience in Connecticut last week that he emerged from the 1976 and 1980 conventions "weaker than I went in."

He said the Democrats should find a "winning ticket" and unite behind it in Atlanta.

"Why is 51 percent the magic number?" asks New York Gov. Mario Cuomo. "Let's pick the guy who's ahead after California" (the last state to vote in the primary season.)

"If Mike Dukakis has 41 percent (of the delegates), get everybody together in a room and say, 'Jesse (Jackson) Gore, Gephardt, you came close, but Mike's the candidate."

That would avoid what Carter calls the "circus" type of convention that twice nominated him.

Carter's lead over Republican Gerald Ford declined steadily during the 1976 fall campaign, although he won a close call. In 1980, weakened politically, he triumphed over Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in an emotional convention struggle before losing a landslide to Ronald Reagan.

Carter says that this time, he and the 645 so-called Democatic superdelegates, "will have a burning desire to put together a winning ticket" when they convene in Atlanta.

That makes the Senate Democratic caucus, which picks 43 delegates on April 19, and the House Democratic caucus, which picks 210 delegates a day later, as critical as any Democratic primary waged with television advertising, phone banks and direct mail.

The same is true for the 362 members of the Democratic National Committee who are superdelegates, and the 25 governors.

"The key now to this thing ending early is superdelegates," says Robert Beckel, a Democratic campaign consultant not aligned with any of this year's contenders. "They're also the key to not ending it early."

Any candidate who succeeds in picking up a large amount of support from the people selected in those two congressional meetings will be able to send a clear signal to the party that he is the presumptive nominee, even before the primary season ends.

To earn that support, a contender would presumably have to score well in the industrial state contests leading up to the congressional caucuses — Illinois, Michigan, Connecticut, Wisconsin and New York.

Richard Gephardt, the Missouri congressman, already has the support of several dozen House members. He probably could consolidate his strength if he mounted a comeback after his poor Super Tuesday showing. But he if fails to win in Michigan's caucuses March 26, he is a likely dropout, and his supporters are free to go elsewhere.

Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee must show quickly that he can win in the industrial states or he will have little claim on the allegience of Congress members.

Jesse Jackson is in the process of obtaining a large bloc of perhaps 800 delegates, and figures prominently in the brokered convention scenarios that occupy Democratic political insiders.

Jackson takes South Carolina caucuses

Jackson

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Jesse Jackson won easily Saturday in his native South Carolina's Democratic precinct caucuses, giving his already surging campaign a boost just days before the primary in his adopted Illinois.

"Just because you're born in the slum doesn't mean the slum's borne in you," Jackson said in Greenville. "I came home tonight to tell America there is a way out."

With 68 percent of the state's 1,788 precincts reporting, Jackson won 5,075 county convention delegates for 51 percent, followed by uncommitted with 2,016 delegates for 21 percent.

Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. was in third place with 1,858 delegates for 19 percent.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis trailed far behind with 692 county convention delegates for 7 percent, followed by Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt with 209 delegates for 2 percent and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon with just 31 delegates.

"In South Carolina...I want to win another gold medal," Jackson said, noting his strong showing in the Super Tuesday primaries.

"I hope to walk away with the majority," Jackson said. "I should be the favorite son from South Carolina."

Gephardt, who was campaigning in Michigan, congratulated Jackson on his victory, saying "I thought he would do very well there — it's his home state — and he did."

Gore spokesman Fred Martin called his candidate's performance "a strong showing" and added "we expect to pick up a majority of the uncommitted."

Democratic Party officials expected as many as 20,000 voters would participate in the caucuses in which 44 convention delegates were at stake.

During a campaign swing across the state Friday, Jackson predicted he would emerge as the leader in the muddled race for convention delegates once the votes are tallied in South Carolina and Illinois, which holds a primary on Tuesday.

Jackson trails Dukakis but leads Gore in the race for delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Gore has waged an active campaign in the state and a newspaper survey of Democratic Party chairmen statewide found Gore expected to finish second to Jackson.

In the past, South Carolina Democrats have had a penchant for going to the caucuses and voting for uncommitted delegates. Jackson was the top candidate four years ago but a plurality of the delegates remained uncommitted at the precinct level.

This time around, campaign aides for Gephardt and Simon, were asking their supporters to remain uncommitted and work to become delegates at county conventions later in the month.

But Gore urged supporters during a stop in Charleston Friday to stand up for his candidacy and "don't let anyone talk you into being an uncommitted delegate." Dukakis aides wanted voters to commit to him.

The caucuses are the first stage of a three-sage process to select national convention delegates. Voters were to select delegates to the county conventions which in turn selects delegates to the state convention.

The delegates are divided proportionally based on a candidates' showing. But only those candidates with 15 percent of the vote at the state convention are entitled to national convention delegates. Delegates selected Saturday are bound to their candidates through the county and state conventions.

Jake Hill, Gore's assistant campaign coordinator, suggested neither Gephardt nor Simon would be able to round up the 15 percent of votes to allow them to receive any delegates.

The campaigns would ask their people to stay uncommitted in the hopes something could be worked out at the county or state conventions to allow them to secure some delegates, he suggested.

Although the caucuses have been overshadowed by South Carolina's Republican primary and the parade of GOP candidates it attracted, Gephardt, Gore and Jackson all stumped in the state during the past week.

Gephardt had the endorsements of former Govs. Dick Riley and Robert McNair. He promoted his trade policy this week at a campaign stop at a Clearwater textile plant that will be closed next month.

But during the stop, Gephardt said he hoped to get his campaign back on track by winning the Michigan primary March 26.

While Dukakis and Simon both campaigned in the state earlier, neither has returned in recent weeks.

Dole takes 30 minutes of TV time for last stand

Dole

GALESBURG, Ill. (AP) — Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, saying "the issues are more important than the odds," went on television for 30 minutes Saturday in an effort to reverse the decline in his presidential prospects.

"I know I'm the underdog in this race. The issues are more important than the odds...I didn't expect this job to be handed to me in the first place."
— GOP presidential candidate Bob Dole

Standing in front of a portrait of Abraham Lincoln, Dole said, "I know I'm the underdog in this race. The issues are more important than the odds...I didn't expect this job to be handed to me in the first place."

Dole spoke from Alumni Hall at Knox College, the site of the fifth of the seven debates in 1858 between Lincoln and Stephen Douglas during their campaign for the Senate. Dole's address was televised in Illinois.

Vice President George Bush, who has refused to respond to a Dole challenge for a one-on-one debate before the Illinois primary on Tuesday, was the featured speaker at a dinner on the campus shortly after the Dole program aired.

Dole spoke as a new survey said Bush was the choice of 62 percent of likely Republican primary voters. Only 28 percent named Dole as their choice.

"It just seems to me we should have had a debate," said Dole. "My opponent is less than 100 yards away as I speak."

Actually, Bush was not scheduled to arrive until after Dole left.

"Nothing has ever come easy for Bob," said his wife, Elizabeth. "His only inheritance was the love of his parents."

"Ladies and gentlemen, you're going to be voting Tuesday and we want you to know more about Bob Dole's life," she said, introducing a 14-minute segment from a biographical sketch filmed for showing to Dole campaign meetings.

A poll published in the Sunday edition of the Chicago Tribune said the vice president was the choice of 62 percent of Republicans likely to vote in Tuesday's primary. Dole was named by 28 percent and Pat Robertson by 6 percent.

The survey of 504 likely GOP voters was conducted Wednesday and Thursday.

During campaign appearances on Friday, Dole conceded he was "hanging by our fingernails."

The senator, who took a drubbing on Super Tuesday this past week, losing 16 of 16 primaries to Bush, needed a victory in Illinois to maintain any faint hope that he can stage a comeback in the presidential race.

Bush, campaigning in northwest Chicago suburbs, predicted Saturday that victory in the Illinois primary election Tuesday would "cinch the Republican nomination" for him.

The vice president preached GOP unity and all but ignored Dole and Robertson.

"I want to be your president," Bush said to a cheering crowd at St. Viator High School. "I do not want to do it by tearing some other Republican, by weakening the party that needs to be together."

The latest Associated Press delegate count gave Bush 705 and Dole 163. A total of 1,139 delegate votes would be needed at the GOP convention in New Orleans next August to win the presidential nomination.

Larry McCarthy, communications director for the Dole campaign, said $100,000 was spent to purchase one half-hour on Chicago television station WGN and additional time slots Sunday and Monday on other stations around the state. He said the amount also covered the production costs.

Campaign manager William E. Brock said the broadcast would be repeated Sunday on other stations around the state.

Brock also said that contrary to earlier statements from campaign officials, other Dole commercials were running in Illinois.

Earlier in the week, the campaign had said that all commercials in a total buy of $500,000 had been pulled off the air.

Brock said some were pulled off, but others — biographical spots portraying Dole as a strong leader — were continuing to run. He said some commercials were dropped when it was decided to use part of the media budget for the half hour program.

"We need to somehow capture the attention of the Illinois voters," said Dole, who has repeatedly challenged Bush to a one-on-one debate. The vice president brushed off the challenge, saying he already has participated in seven debates and called them "cruel and unusual punishment."

DEA aids South American nations in anti-drug war

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Drug Enforcement Administration, at the invitation of Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador, has been assisting an offensive aimed at South American cocaine-processing facilities and growing areas that was first tried with U.S. military troops amid much controversy in 1986.

Under the initiative, DEA officials say, specially trained U.S. drug agents with the assistance of aircraft from the agency are accompanying Bolivian military forces into the jungles of that country and locating cocaine processing laboratories, which are then dismantled by the troops.

The effort, begun last year, is a continuation and broadening of Operation Blast Furnace in 1986, DEA spokesman Cornelius Dougherty said. In Blast Furnace, 170 U.S. Army personnel raided about 20 drug lab sites in Bolivia. The injection of U.S. troops drew criticism from civil liberties groups concerned about the use of the military to enforce civilian laws.

The new operation doesn't involve U.S. military personnel.

"We're working with the governments in the primary coca-growing countries of Peru and Bolivia, where they are using their troops and we are sending along DEA advisers as intelligence experts," Dougherty said.

The agents have undergone extensive training in weapons, language and jungle survival, in addition to the regular 14 weeks of field training DEA agents take. The jungle survival training is given by the U.S. Army special forces, the Green Berets.

As part of the effort, DEA planes outfitted with sophisticated electronic gear are being used for aerial reconnaissance to identify drug labs.

In Peru, DEA agents began in mid-1987 to help immobilize and disrupt the flow of cocaine products from the principal area of that country where illicit coca is cultivated, the Upper Huallaga Valley. Extensive production of coca paste and cocaine base also takes place there, David L. Westrate, assistant DEA administrator for operations, said in congressional testimony earlier this month.

Partly as a result of the effort, there have been substantial seizures of coca leaves, cocaine base and chemicals used in producing coca paste and base, Westrate said.

Under an agreement made in 1987 with Bolivia, DEA agents helped the government there locate and destroy numerous coca processing facilities. A total of 26 labs for producing coca base or refining it were seized last year in Bolivia, Westrate said.

DEA agents also are taking a more active role in Ecuador, a transit country for large amounts of chemicals used in processing cocaine in other South American countries, DEA officials said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Divine's talent, manner, individuality recalled

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Divine, the outlandish 375-pound cult film star, was eulogized for his talent, gentle manner and individuality during funeral services Saturday that attracted hundreds of fans, friends and colleagues.

"He was a friend, business partner, co-conspirator and actor who could say the words I wrote better than anybody," said John Waters, who directed Divine in such cult classics as "Pink Flamingoes," "Polyester," "Lust in the Dust," and the just-released "Hairspray."

"How many people at age 42 love their job as much as he did? He was happy, talented, successful, and a true original," Water told mourners, some with rainbow-hued hair and others in suits and ties, at a funeral home in this Baltimore suburb.

Divine, a Lutherville, Md., native whose real name was Harris Glenn Milstead, died Monday in his bed at the Hollywood Regency Plaza Hotel in Los Angeles. The Los Angeles County coroner's officer determined he died of an enlarged heart due to obesity. The Friday before his death a doctor had said Divine was in perfect health except for his weight, which had been a problem for the actor all his life.

Divine was known mostly for his outrageous roles as loud and foul-mouthed women in Waters' films, although he also played a male Sidney Greenstreet-type character in the 1985 film "Trouble in Mind."

The Rev. Leland Higginbotham, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church to which the Milstead family belonged, described Divine's youth as an "agonizing period" during which the budding actor "took a painful and circuitous road to find himself and his talents."

Fire forces evacuation

ROCKDALE, Ill. (AP) — A huge chemical fire emitting potentially dangerous fumes forced the evacuation of about 500 residents for a time Saturday as it destroyed a huge warehouse and set fire to two homes.

Ten people including seven firefighters were injured in the fire at the Werco chemical warehouse complex, authorities said.

The evacuees were allowed to return home later in the day but were instructed to boil drinking water into today, said Lynn Behringer, spokeswoman for the Will County Emergency Services and Disaster Agency.

Strong winds blew smoke and sparks directly into the downtown area of Rockdale, a town of about 2,000 residents southwest of Chicago, and exploding chemicals punctuated the flames.

The warehouse complex, which covered several square blocks, stored some 60 kinds of chemicals for various businesses.

Father turns in teen son

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A father whose two teen-age sons joined the racist Skinheads group turned them in to police after one of them confessed to fatally stabbing a homeless black man.

"I can't elaborate on it. But I will say that I did turn them in," Lowell "Bud" McKee told the St. Petersburg Times. "There are more things involved than I can make public."

Scott McKee, 18, and Dean McKee, 16, members of the Skinheads, a group known for its hatred of blacks, Jews and homosexuals, were arrested March 4 and charged with first-degree murder in the December slaying of Isiah Walker, 41.

Americans dying to eat, NCI study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American diet is lousy and people are dying because of it.

That's the conclusion of a long-term study by the National Cancer Institute of what Americans eat and don't eat during a typical day.

"We really need to change the way we eat," said Gladys Block, an NCI scientist and coauthor of a study published this month in the American Journal of Public Health. "I really believe that could make a difference in the amount of cancer we have."

Americans are not eating enough fruits, vegetables, whole-grain breads and high-fiber cereals. They are eating more fat and more salt-cured, nitrite-cured, smoked and pickled meat, all dietary elements that can affect health.

In effect, said Blossom Patterson, a coauthor of the study, Americans are forgetting the lessons they should have learned as children at the family dining table.

"It's not really a new message," said Patterson. "This is the same theme that mothers have been playing for a long, long time. Eat your vegetables and fruits."

And, says the NCI, if you eat like your mommies told you to, you may live a longer time.

The study said that diet is estimated to contribute to about 35 percent of all cancer deaths.

Most infected with virus will get AIDS, ARC, study reveals

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Only a very small number of people carrying the AIDS virus will fail to develop some form of the disease within six years, scientists predicted today.

A study estimates that at least 75 percent of those with the virus will contract AIDS or AIDS-Related Complex in that period.

"The big question still is, 'Will everybody at some point progress (from the virus to AIDS)...or is there a chance that some people will be able to ride it out for 15 years?' " said Paul O'Malley, author of an earlier study on the virus' progression.

Results of the study were published in today's editions of the British Medical Journal.

The researchers at the University of California, San Francisco and other institutions studied 288 men with the virus for three years.

The scientists used five "markers" in the blood to estimate how many would contract AIDS or ARC, a milder form of acquired immune deficiency syndrome which generally develops into active AIDS. The markers included measurements of proteins and cells.

Twenty-two percent of the participants developed AIDS during the three-year period and 19 percent progressed to ARC. Tests on another 24 percent showed abnormalities which the researchers found were highly predictive of AIDS or ARC.

Although that adds up to 65 percent, the researchers extrapolated that at least another 10 percent of people infected with HIV, or human immunodeficiency virus, will develop some form of the disease for a total of 75 percent.

The scientists called the estimate conservative, saying the actual rate of progression may be much higher.

Even the men who had not developed AIDS or ARC after three years showed clear signs of progression toward a worsened condition in their blood markers, the study found.

"HIV infection is much more serious than we thought in the early days," said Andrew Moss, UCSF associate professor of epidemiology and international health at San Francisco General Hospital. "It may take eight or nine years, but eventually the infected person will probably get AIDS.

"What we saw was that the number of those showing no effects from HIV infection is very small," added Moss. "This means that if you are infected with the AIDS virus, you will almost certainly go on to get AIDS," he said.

O'Malley, the director of the city Health Department's AIDS research project, said the new study apparently provides important information for HIV-positive people trying to decide whether to take immediate risks with anti-viral drugs or await advances in treatment.

"As each year progresses we know more, but we still can't fully answer it," said O'Malley. His study, released in February 1987, determined that the risk of developing AIDS increases in the second five years after infection.

Moss and his colleagues in the study are urging the expansion of current trials of antiviral drugs on people who are HIV positive, but do not have symptoms of ARC or AIDS.

"We need to speed up the trials of the current drugs and look for more treatments as well," Moss said.

The national Centers for Disease Control reported this week that 55,167 cases of AIDS have been reported since June 1981 and 30,932 of those people have died.

Former International Herald Tribune editor dies from stroke

Hearst News Service

Murray C. Weiss, who was editor of The International Herald Tribune for 13 years, died Saturday from complications after a stroke at Arlington Hospital in Arlington, Va. He was 64 and lived in Falls Church, Va.

Overseeing the Paris-based International Herald Tribune from 1966 to 1979, Weiss — known as Buddy — helped move the paper from a provincial publication geared toward traveling Americans and the expatriate community to a true world newspaper.

From 1964 to 1966, he was managing editor of The New York Herald Tribune, where he had begun as a copyboy in 1946. His positions there included metropolitan editor, from 1961 to 1963, and before that, night editor on the city desk, rewrite reporter and New York correspondent for the paper's European edition.

Noted black collage artist dies

NEW YORK (AP) — Romare Bearden, a pre-eminent American artist whose collages fashioned stories about the dignity of black people and Southern living, died Saturday. He was 75.

Bearden died about 1 a.m. at New York Hospital of complications from bone cancer, diagnosed two years ago, and a stroke suffered last month, said his manager of 13 years, June Kelly.

Works by Bearden, who was awarded the National Medal of Arts by President Reagan last June, fetched prices at Sotheby's up to $56,000, among the highest prices paid for works by black artists in the United States.

Bearden's work ranged from political cartoons published in 1934 to water colors and eventually the collages. He had one-man shows at the Museum of Modern Art and several top galleries.

He was a lover of jazz who did sets and costumes for the Alvin Ailey Dance Theater, and murals for the Baltimore and Pittsburgh transit systems.

"I think certainly that he's one of the great masters of the 20th century, especially over the last 40 years," said Lowery Sims, associate curator of 20th century art at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Sims said Bearden's work in collages "raised it to such a fine art it's hard to think of any other artist who is so closely associated with that medium."

Bearden, who was born in Charlotte, N.C., grew up in Harlem and in Pittsburgh. He attended Boston University and New York University, majoring in mathematics and planning to become a doctor. He started drawing in college and cartoons published in the Afro American, a weekly, led to his career in art.

He gained prominence in the 1940s after his work was included in a show by black artists in Washington in 1943.

1,100 anti-nuclear protesters arrested at Nevada test site

MERCURY, Nev. (AP) — More than 1,100 anti-nuclear protesters, including actress Teri Garr, actor Robert Blake, disc jockey Casey Kasem and activist Daniel Ellsberg were arrested Saturday at the nation's nuclear testing grounds.

Nye County authorities estimated the crowd of protesters at 3,000, well below the 5,000 to 10,000 organizers predicted would come to the remote site 65 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

Saturday's demonstration, dubbed "Reclaim The Test Site," was part of a 10-day protest at the site through March 20. By late afternoon the number of arrests had reached 1,136 and continued to grow, said Department of Energy spokesman Chris West.

Protesters climbed barbed wire fences surrounding the 1,350-square-mile site, began walking across the desolate desert and were arrested by waiting authorities. Some 300 officers from the Nevada Highway Patrol, Nye County Sheriff's Office and Department of Energy security were on hand.

Miss Garr, Blake, Ellsberg and Kasem were arrested when they stepped across a cattle guard on the road leading to the main entrance of the desert site.

The crowd cheered as each group of protesters stepped across the guard.

Miss Garr was asked if she thought joining the protest would hurt her movie career. "I hope not," she said. "I don't think you have to be a fanatic to think nuclear weapons are going to annihilate the Earth."

Those arrested were placed in two large enclosures, then bused to Tonopah and released, West said. All were cited for misdemeanor trespass. Authorities no longer prosecute misdemeanor arrests for trespassing.

Authorities took extra precautions for the rally, building an 8-foot chain-link enclosure topped with barbed wire to hold detainees.

Americans for Nuclear Testing held a counter-demonstration Saturday, but organizer Peggy Konold said she expected her group to be far outnumbered by the anti-nuclear protesters.

Protests at the site have been common in recent years. Jesse Cocks, an organizer with the American Peace Test, said her organization counted 2,847 trespassing arrests in 1987.

Conservative Judaism says faith not bound to Israel

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK — Conservative Judaism Saturday offered its first comprehensive definition of principles, declaring its faith is linked to Israel, but not bound to it.

Both Israel and the Diaspora, the countries to which the Jews have been dispersed, are partners to "aid and enrich the other in every possible way," the 23,000-word statement said. "Each needs the other."

However, Jewish identity was termed essentially a matter of religion rather than geography.

"Our religion has been land-centered but never land-bound," the document said. "It has been a portable religion so that despite our long exile from our spiritual homeland, we have been able to survive creatively and spiritually.

"We do not believe that Jewish identity can be replaced by Israeli identity, or the ability to speak Hebrew. We are convinced that Jewish religion is essential as a source of ethical and moral values," the authors said.

Some Jews have viewed the Jewish state as the "religious center of world Jewry," the statement said, adding that various Jewish communities have "complementary roles" in maintaining Judaism.

The statement, "Emet Ve-Emunah," Hebrew for "Truth and Faith," was drawn up over 2½ years by a 35-member commission of scholars, rabbis and laity set up in 1985.

Never before in its history has the century-old Conservative movement in this country produced such an overall summation of convictions.

Officials of the Rabbinical Assembly, the rabbinical arm of Conservative Judaism, and its Jewish Theological Seminary hailed the document as "monumental and historic."

It provides a consensus view of the movement's "positions on personal and general questions" affecting Jewish life, said the commission chairman, seminary professor Robert Gordis.

He termed it "a way of life for the Jew today to live in loyalty to the tradition without resigning from the 20th century."

Conservative Judaism is the middle ground between the other two major branches, Reform, which freely adapts Jewish practices to changing times, and Orthodoxy, which sees ritual as commanded by God and thus unchangeable.

Conservatism's statement deals with God, revelation, evil, the Messianic hope, Jewish law, personal practices, the role of women, Israel, social justice, relations with other faiths and meaning of "chosen people."

The widely misunderstood "chosen people" concept often "has been distorted into an expression of moral arrogance."

Instead of implying any innate Jewish superiority, God's choosing of the Jews to reveal his purposes laid on them special obligations and duties as a result of their accepting that role.

"Far from being a license for special privilege, it entailed additional responsibilities not only toward God but to their fellow human beings," the statement said.

"Often, however, they had to pay a bloody price for insisting on this role, enabling them to identify with (the prophet) Isaiah's 'suffering servant' who accepted the blows and contempt of others in order to bring the truth of God to the world."

The statement deplored the rifts that have developed among different branches of Judaism and urged work to overcome them, declaring:

"In the face of unflagging enemies and widespread anti-Semitism, Jewish unity is more vital than ever."

Successful protest signals new era for deaf people

By JILL LAWRENCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — With excitement in his hands rather than voice, Alfred Sonnenstrahl expressed in candid, joyful words the sense of triumph shared by fellow protesters who made themselves heard on the quietest college campus in America.

"I've been on this campus for 30 years now," he said in sign language. "And for the first time in my whole life I feel good about being here. For the first time I feel like a complete person."

The 52-year-old mechanical engineer, a doctoral candidate at Gallaudet University, pointed to the students, staff and faculty who had shut down the school for the deaf last week to protest the appointment of a hearing president.

"Look around," Sonnenstrahl signed. "You see people smiling. They look alive."

The transformation of Gallaudet occurred even before Elisabeth Ann Zinser, who is not deaf and does not know sign language, gave in to mounting pressure for a deaf president and stepped down only days after she was chosen.

There was no mistaking the exhilaration in the brisk air. More than a generation after the civil rights movement began, the time for the deaf was — finally — now.

Even Zinser acknowledged the strength of the movement in a news conference the day she resigned.

The protest, she said, was "a very special moment in time for the deaf community...(that) we could not anticipate."

Twenty years ago, blacks devastated by Martin Luther King Jr.'s murder looted and burned a major commercial strip that is only now being rebuilt. Four blocks away, behind its tall fence, Gallaudet lay isolated and hidden under a thick blanket of silence.

Only in the last few years, with civil rights laws, communications technology and a wave of professional interpreters, has that silence begun to lift. Deaf people say they are more aware of their rights, more self-confident and more assertive. Thus the stage was set for last week's eruption.

The campus crusade drew headlines and "Nightline," the attention of congressmen and presidential candidates, the support of commuters and taxi drivers and contributors across the country, the largess of local corporations who donated food, paint and 50 sheets with which to make banners.

"We have been accepting bowing down for 124 years, maybe longer," said student leader Jerry Covell. "We want to take control of our lives and our futures."

President Lincoln chartered the school 124 years ago. It later was named after Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, a pioneer in deaf education. The nation's only liberal arts school for the deaf, it is described again and again as an intellectual mecca.

So, it's not hard to understand the resentment created by the appointment of a hearing, non-signing president — particularly when there were two deaf finalists for the job, including the university's own dean of arts and sciences.

Jackson should have 'inspirational role'

CLEVELAND (AP) — Jesse Jackson probably won't be on the Democratic ticket in 1988, but he should have some sort of "inspirational role" in a Democratic administration, says former Virginia Gov. Charles S. Robb.

Mecham aides tell of paranoid atmosphere

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Survivors of Gov. Evan Mecham's administration have come forward at his impeachment trial with tales of the chaotic final days when "mistrust bred mistrust" and Mecham believed his enemies were spying on him with laser beams.

A reluctant defense witness, electronics technician Antonio Corio, told how he was sent to the governor's offices in November to check the security system and do a "sweep" to detect electronic bugs and laser beam listening devices.

"They had feelings there were leaks," Corio said. "Information was getting out of the ninth floor somehow."

He said he was reminded that Mecham was publicly embarrassed by reports that he thought laser beam listening devices were being used to spy on him. The governor's office was seeking proof.

"What did you detect?" asked Mecham defense attorney Fred Craft.

"Not a whole lot," Corio said to the lawyer's surprise.

The technician, who had been called to bolster the claim of bugging, refused to cooperate once he was on the stand. He said he knew about laser beam listening devices, but they have to be used at close range.

"Could you detect sounds in the governor's office if you were on the Capitol grounds?" asked Craft.

"I don't think so," said Corio.

As to who might be using such a device, the governor had a prime suspect — Attorney General Robert Corbin. Corbin said the only laser he ever had was a toy he got for Christmas.

Mecham, 63, the first U.S. governor to face an impeachment trial in six decades, is charged with obstructing an investigation by Corbin into an alleged death threat against former Mecham aide Donna Carlson by another Mecham associate, Lee Watkins.

In other impeachment charges, the first-term Republican governor is accused of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan and misusing $80,000 in a state fund by loaning it to his auto dealership. The Arizona Senate is considering the obstruction charge first.

Mecham faces a criminal trial April 21 on the loan charge and a recall election May 17.

The antagonism between Mecham and Corbin surfaced as witnesses from Mecham's inner circle tried to explain why Mecham, faced with a probe by Corbin into the alleged death threat, would have told the state's top lawman, Col. Ralph Milstead: "The attorney general is out to hang me...Don't tell the attorney general anything."

Former Mecham aide Sam Steiger described a feud between Corbin and Mecham that began in the first days of Mecham's term when Corbin advised the governor to eliminate the state's Martin Luther King holiday for state employees. He said it had been illegally declared by Gov. Bruce Babbitt, Mecham's predecessor.

"The governor abided by that decision and took an inordinate public beating over it," Steiger recalled. "I thought the beating should have been shared." But he said Corbin never announced it was his idea.

Steiger acknowledged under cross-examination that, "I would be less than candid if I were to say the governor was a supporter of the (Martin Luther King) holiday."

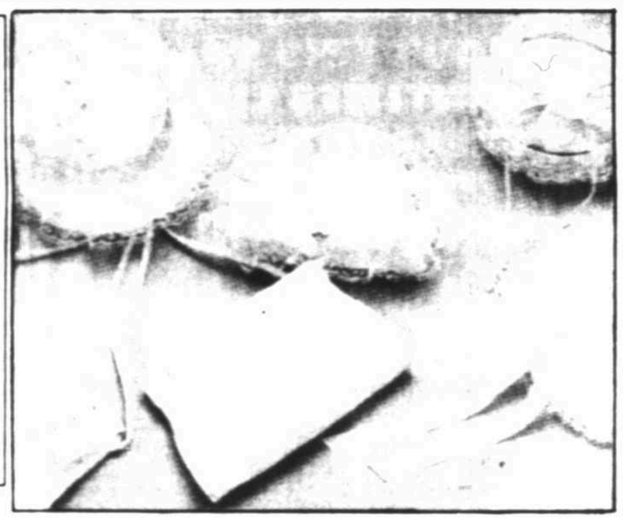

Mecham's other perceived enemy was the news media, and Steiger suggested this led to his downfall.

"He was a man who won election essentially without the press and the (Republican) party," he said.

At least 93 soccer fans die in Nepal stampede

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Thousands of soccer fans Saturday stampeded into locked stadium exits to escape a sudden hailstorm, killing at least 93 in the crush, witnesses and hospital sources said.

Gumball-sized ice pellets rained down on the 30,000 fans watching a match between Nepalese and Bangladeshi teams at the National Stadium. Eyewitnesses said screaming spectators rushed to the stadium's eight exits but found only one open.

Police and hospital sources in the city confirmed more than 70 people, including two police officers, were trampled to death or suffocated. Government television reported 73 people were killed, and witnesses said another 20 bodies left at the stadium were later retrieved by relatives.

More than 100 people were hospitalized with injuries. Hospital sources said 12 were in serious condition. Many more were were treated and released.

At the government-run Bir Hospital near the stadium, Maya Laxmi Vaidya, a white-haired woman clad in a sari, said her 12-year-old grandson was killed in the stampede.

"I've told my family not go out on Saturday. Older people understand this and don't go out," she said.

The day is considered unlucky among Nepal's Hindus. It is named for the planet Saturn, which in Hindu mythology possesses strong negative powers.

The government ordered a judicial commission to investigate the disaster and announced payments of $450 to relatives of the dead and $90 to the injured.

Crowds angered by authorities' failure to open the gates attacked three cars with government license plates outside the stadium with rocks, smashing windshields.

Reporters who arrived at the stadium moments later found it largely deserted. Sandals and shoes littered the ground near the one open gate.

Witnesses said most of the deaths occurred there, as spectators who found other exits locked rushed toward the only outlet.

Ram Bista, a teletype operator who took part in rescue efforts, said spectators who got outside commandeered vehicles to rush victims to hospitals.

"We stopped all buses, all taxis, all rickshaws," he said.

One spectator who demanded anonymity accused police of being "selfish. They took care of themselves and nobody came to help the crowd," he said.

It was Nepal's worst sports-related disaster on record.

The downtown stadium was filled almost to capacity for the final game of a major tournament in Nepal's most popular sport. The Tribhuvan Challenge Shield Cup, named for a former Nepalese king, pitted a team from the National Cigarette Factory against the Mukti Joddha, meaning "Freedom Fighters," from nearby Bangladesh.

Stadium officials said none of the athletes was involved in the stampede or was injured.

Despite sunshine for most of the day, the storm howled through this Himalayan capital at midafternoon, packing winds of more than 50 mph. It uprooted trees throughout Katmandu Valley and temporarily disrupted telex lines.

On Thursday evening, panicked soccer fans in Tripoli, Libya fled knife-wielding ruffians and triggered the collapse of a sports stadium, killing at least 20 people, news reports from Malta and Yugoslavia said.

The reports conflicted with those from the Libyan news agency JANA, which said two people were killed and 16 were hospitalized.

The worst soccer disaster on record took place on May 24, 1964, when rioting left nearly 300 dead and 500 injured after Argentina beat Peru on a last-minute goal in Lima.

South Africa bans group headed by Tutu

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government Saturday banned a church-led opposition group headed by Archbishop Desmond Tutu and said it was a threat to public safety.

Minister of Law and Order Adriaan Vlok said the recently created Committee for the Defense of Democracy was barred from "performing any activities or acts whatsoever."

Police, meanwhile, issued a separate order banning a rally today in Cape Town that was to mark National Detainees Day.

Tutu, who heads the Committee for the Defense of Democracy and who planned to attend the rally, said clergymen instead would hold a church service at St. George's Cathedral in Cape Town. Similar church services are scheduled in four other cities.

"We are dealing with a vicious government that will not tolerate any opposition to its evil and immoral policies," Tutu told a news conference. "They have banned a committee even before it has started operating."

Tutu's group was set up following the government's Feb. 24 crackdown on black-led opposition groups. In that crackdown, the government banned 18 anti-apartheid organizations from participating in politics.

The Committee for the Defense of Democracy is led by several church leaders, including Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, and Allan Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. The clergymen said the group would attempt to take over some the activities previously carried out by the restricted organizations.

However, Vlok's latest order places the same restrictions on Tutu's group as the other anti-apartheid groups.

"Certain clergy are becoming more and more involved in preaching revolution instead of the true Christian message," Vlok said in a statement.

Vlok accused church leaders of promoting the aims of the outlawed African National Congress, which wages a bombing and sabotage campaign in a bid to overthrow the white-led government.

He cited a March 1 broadcast by ANC's Radio Freedom which called for the church in South Africa to take a more active role in opposing the government.

"The ANC is currently waging a desperate attempt to extend the revolutionary onslaught and is aiming this attack more and more at the churches and the whites," Vlok said.

"The church (should) direct itself to the spiritual area and the government can rely on its prayers to solve the difficult political problems in the country," Vlok added.

U.S. official to meet foreign minister

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A senior State Department official will meet South Africa's foreign minister next week at an undisclosed site in Europe to press an American initiative for peace in southern Africa, the State Department said on Saturday.

The session between Chester A. Crocker, the assistant secretary for African affairs, and the South African foreign minister, Roelof F. Botha, comes as Washington has been trying to negotiate a withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola in return for a South African pullout from neighboring South-West Africa, also known as Namibia.

Since Wednesday, a State Department working party has been in Luanda, the Angolan capital, to discuss a timetable for the withdrawal of an estimated 37,000 Cuban troops. The Cubans for the last seven years have supported Marxist Angola in its war against guerrillas of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. The rebel group receives military assistance from both the United States and South Africa.

Next week's meeting "responds to South African requests for authoritative briefings from the United States at a time when there have been important developments in our talks with other parties," said a State Department spokesman, Anita Stockman.

It would be the first high-level meeting between the United States and South Africa in two years and part of a major effort in the final months of the Reagan administration to seek a political settlement in southern Africa. The day of the meeting next week was not specified.

The State Department spokesman said Crocker, who was in Luanda in late January, won agreement from the Angolans and the Cubans that all Cuban troops should be withdrawn as the first step in a complicated formula to bring independence to South-West Africa. The territory is administered by South Africa in violation of a United Nations resolution establishing its independence.

Although South Africa has officially expressed willingness to grant independence to South-West Africa once the Cubans leave Angola, there are still grave doubts whether it actually will, diplomats said.

Iraq says jets hit tanker, Iranian pumping station

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraq said Saturday its jets hit a tanker in the Persian Gulf and an oil pumping station on the Iranian mainland, indicating a return of hostilities to economic targets during a truce in the "war of the cities."

But Iran later accused Iraq of violating the truce by sending a warplane to bomb the town of Gachsaran in southwestern Iran.

Tehran Television, monitored in Cyprus, quoted a spokesman for the War Information Headquarters as saying the plane was "forced to flee under heavy anti-aircraft fire."

He said the aircraft was seen "dropping its bombs out of frustration in a desert area."

The unidentified spokesman said the incident "indicates Iraq wants to continue its acts of mischief, and the Islamic combatants will not remain silent if civilian targets are attacked again." Iraq did not comment on the report.

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, earlier reported that Revolutionary Guards attacked and set ablaze the offshore Al-Amaya radar facility in the northern tip of the gulf Friday night.

Al-Amaya had been transformed by the Iraqis from an oil platform to monitor activity in the gulf. IRNA said surface-to-air and shore-to-sea missile pads on the facility were destroyed in the attack.

The official Iraqi News Agency, also monitored in Cyprus, reported that Iraqi warplanes blasted the Imam Hassan oil pumping station in southwestern Iran Saturday afternoon.

The agency quoted an unidentified Iraqi military spokesman as saying the facility was "totally destroyed."

In an earlier dispatch, Iraq reported to have struck a "very large maritime target" off the Iranian coast Friday night. The attack was not independently verified by gulf-based shipping executives.

INA quoted a military spokesman as saying the Iraqi warplanes scored "an accurate and effective hit" on the vessel, and returned safely.

It quoted a spokesman as saying the raids reflected Iraq's "determination to destroy Iran's economic lifeline and deprive the enemy of revenues employed to finance aggression."

The cease-fire in the "war of the cities" passed the 24-hour mark, with no attacks on each other's capitals or major population centers.

Hundreds of civilian casualties were reported in the unprecedented 12-day duel. Iraq claimed to have hurled 71 long-range missiles into Tehran and two other cities and Iran said it fired 29 missiles at Iraqi cities.

The barrage ended Friday afternoon after Iraq fired eight rockets at Tehran and three at the holy city of Qom, the last one just 16 minutes before the 4 p.m. truce deadline.

Iraq had made its right to fire the last shot a precondition for the truce, on grounds that Iran, the "aggressive party," had triggered the exchange.

Iraq's terms for the cease-fire also stipulated that Tehran not attempt to launch a ground offensive against any Iraqi population centers.

It did not bar either side from continuing to attack military or economically strategic targets.

Ali Ahani, director general of European and American affairs of Iran's Foreign Ministry, speaking in the Hague, Netherlands, said Iran will unleash a new battlefront offensive against Iraq in response to the missile attacks.

"We are going to give a decisive response in the war of the fronts because of this bloodshed," he said, refusing to provide specifics on the offensive.

Baghdad's officially controlled press called the cease-fire a triumph and warned Iran against resuming the bombardment, INA said.

Al-Thawra, voice of Iraq's ruling Arab Baath Socialist Party, said the missile war taught the "charlatans of Iran" a "painful, bitter lesson." It said any Iranian "violation" of the cease-fire "would, for sure, generate a devastating Iraqi reply."

Arab policemen on West Bank resign

JERUSALEM (AP) — Hundreds of Palestinian policemen in the occupied territories resigned Saturday to protest Israeli treatment of Palestinians, prompting fears that other Arab employees of the government also would quit.

Israel radio said close to 450 of the roughly 1,000 Arab police officers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip have quit their jobs in the past two days and more resignations are expected.

Israeli and Palestinian officials said at least 330 had resigned and the resignations would take effect Monday.

Israeli bullets and beatings have killed 87 Palestinians in anti-occupation unrest since Dec. 8.

The resignations began Friday, one day after underground leaders of the disturbances in the occupied territories called on the Arab policemen to resign immediately. Some officers reported that their lives had been threatened.

Israeli warplanes, meanwhile, struck at guerrilla targets east of the port town of Sidon in southern Lebanon, the army command said.

Israel television reported that at least eight people were killed in the air raid, Israel's second this year against Palestinian targets in south Lebanon. Sidon police said at least one guerrilla was killed and eight were wounded.

In the West Bank, Israeli soldiers shot and seriously wounded a Palestinian from the village of Bani Naim, near Hebron, after he threw a hand grenade at them, the army command said. The grenade did not explode.

At Nur el-Shams, near Tulkarem, a 50-year-old woman was wounded when prison service employees opened fire after their bus was stoned.

Thousands of Israeli Peace Now demonstrators gathered in Tel Aviv to urge Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to support a U.S. peace initiative that would allow limited self-rule for the Arabs in the occupied lands.

Peace Now organizers estimated the crowd at 100,000. A reporter for the daily Yediot Ahronot put the figure at 70,000. Police refused to give an estimate.

Israel's right-wing factions have called for a counter-demonstration in the same place on Sunday evening, a few hours before Shamir leaves for a visit to Washington to discuss the plan.

The continuing unrest in the occupied territories appears to be putting a severe strain on Israel's defense forces.

The weekend edition of Yediot Ahronot, the country's largest newspaper, carried at least four ads offering security-related jobs.

One ad sought recruits for a new police anti-terror unit. Another asked for Arab-speaking officers holding the rank of captain or major for "special work involving contact with the local population."

Other ads offered jobs to Arabic language translators along Israel's northern border and civilian guards to protect the Israeli-Egyptian border.

The mass resignation of Palestinian police officers will add a new strain.

Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij said the mass resignations "will vastly affect the process of the courts in the West Bank, and it is a precedent for many more civil servants to resign."

About 18,000 Palestinians work for the military government in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

National police spokesman Adi Gonen warned that the resignations would hurt the Palestinians themselves.

"The (Arab) police were not used for intelligence purposes, to put down protests or for anything political," said Gonen. "If they quit, we will have to reduce police activities and that will affect the quality of Palestinian life."

Panama's politics, power intertwined

By REID G. MILLER

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — When a major international trade fair opened here last week, the welcoming speech to hundreds of foreign buyers and sellers came from a man the government considers a traitor.

Aurelio Barria, the young, energetic owner of an import-export business, took time off from trying to overthrow his country's military regime to tell the exposition delegates of Panama's advantages as a marketplace.

If that had a certain strangeness to it, it only served to underscore the complexity of the crisis in Panama, where politics, power and money are almost inseparable.

"Panama is undergoing what you might call a 'neutron bomb' revolution," said one Western diplomat. "The government's opponents are trying to destroy it without destroying the country, and it's a tricky task."

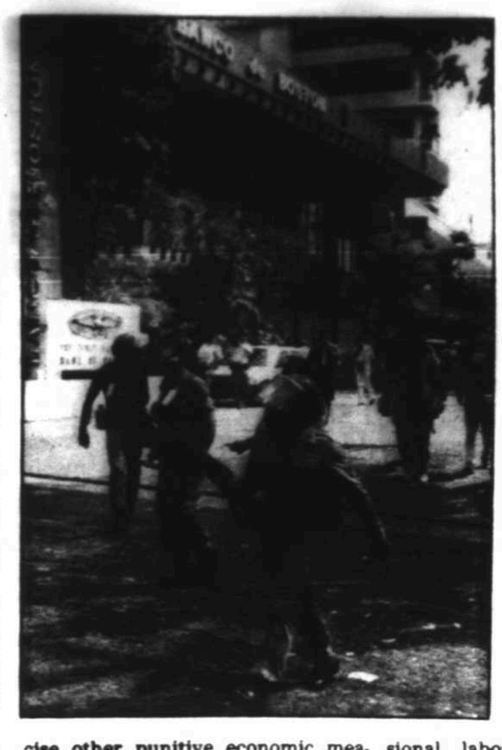

The diplomat was referring not only to the internal opposition but to the United States, where the Reagan administration has been reluctant to impose tougher economic sanctions against Panama despite strong public support for such action.

With only two opposing votes, the U.S. House Thursday called for a prompt, get-tough policy to rid Panama of its military strongman, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. In floor debate, he was described by one representative after another as a thug, a thief, a tyrant and a drug trafficker.

But in announcing new sanctions Friday, President Reagan heeded the advice of his chief of staff, Howard Baker, and his national security adviser, Colin L. Powell, who had been urging a more moderate course.

The president ordered the withholding of Panama Canal fees due the country that amount to about $6.5 million a month, eliminated preferential tariffs on its exports and told customs officials to keep a closer eye out for "drug smugglers and money launderers" from Panama.

But Reagan stopped short of a total trade embargo, which many in Congress had urged, and didn't exercise other punitive economic measures at his disposal. He did say he was prepared to take further steps if Noriega doesn't resign.

Panamanian military riot policemen from the "Doberman" unit patrol the central business district of Panama City. A heavy police presence prevented a major demonstration that had been scheduled Friday, although there were scattered incidents of tear-gassing and blocked streets.

AP Laserphoto

Barria and other anti-Noriega Panamanians are concerned that any drastic measures designed to remove him could wreak havoc on the country, like a harsh chemotherapy treatment that debilitates the patient while attacking his cancer.

"What we want is not to destroy the country, and not even just to get rid of General Noriega, but to end military domination of the civilian government," Barria said recently.

Barria is the president of Panama's Chamber of Commerce, Industry and Agriculture. He was re-elected to a second term late last year while in exile, having fled the country after being charged by the government with sedition.

The treason charge came as a result of his principal occupation since last June, that of a leader of an anti-Noriega coalition of business, professional, labor and political groups known as the National Civic Crusade.

"I haven't really attended to my business in months," said Barria, who returned to Panama in January after being freed on bail. Then he added with a laugh: "Hell, I don't even know if I have one left."

Whatever the status of Barria's business, one of the major props of Panama's economy appears to have suffered irreparable losses in the past nine months of civil turmoil.

"The banking system as it existed...is destroyed," said a source close to Panama's financial community. He, like the diplomat, spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The source said as much as $12 billion has been transferred out of Panama by wary depositors since the Civic Crusade began its effort to oust Noriega last summer with a series of demonstrations. The 118 banks that make this country one of the world's largest offshore banking centers began 1987 with more than $40 billion in deposits.

The amount of money that has fled Panama's banking center cannot be confirmed. The government only will admit a crisis exists — one it blames largely on the United States.

Most of the money deposited in offshore banks in Panama never contributed directly to the nation's economy. It neither was taxed nor used to finance home mortgages, car loans, new businesses or industry or capital improvements.

"It was just there on paper," said the banking industry source. But shuffling that paper did provide employment for about 9,000 people and led to a building boom. In that way, the banking industry contributed, along with real estate, 14.5 percent of the nation's gross national income.

The offshore institutions are branches of major banks from more than 30 countries engaged primarily in the sheltering of funds from Latin American depositors who are weary of political instability in their own countries.

Among the hardest hit banks, when the money began fleeing the country last year, were the 12 institutions owned by Panamanians. Much of the money on deposit in them was transferred either to Panama's international banks or to other countries.

Then, on Feb. 25, the country's civilian, figurehead president, Eric Arturo Delvalle, called for the dismissal of Noriega, who had been indicted by two federal grand juries in Florida almost three weeks earlier on drug trafficking and money laundering charges.

Within hours, Noriega proved who the real boss of Panama is by engineering Delvalle's ouster.

That triggered a new, greater run on the Panamanian banks and they closed four days later, on March 1. Two days after that, the government ordered them to remain closed, admitting that it could not provide enough money to cover anticipated withdrawals. It also closed temporarily the 106 foreign banks.

The banks remain closed, with no sign they will reopen this week. The situation has created chaos for individuals and businesses as well.

Thousands call for resignation of Waldheim

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Thousands of protesters outside the offices of President Kurt Waldheim on Saturday urged him to resign and remembered the victims of Nazism 50 years after Adolf Hitler's troops marched into Austria.

Police estimated about 5,000 people attended despite pouring rain and strong winds. The organizers estimated 10,000.

The demonstration, called by more than a dozen well-known Austrian intellectuals, marked the March 1938 annexation of Austria to Nazi Germany.

One of several banners displayed said, "Memorial year without Waldheim."

Debate has surrounded the former U.N. secretary-general since 1986, when the first revelations surfaced about his service in the German army in the Balkans during World War II.

A panel of historians appointed by the Austrian government issued a report last month that said he was "in close proximity" to some Nazi atrocities, knew they were going on and made no attempt to prevent them.

It also said Waldheim concealed his wartime past and tried to make it seem harmless once he could no longer hide it.

Demonstrators arrived Saturday by bus and train from across Austria. Loudspeakers played a recording of Hitler's speech to cheering masses on the adjoining square on March 15, 1938.

Hundreds of thousand of Austrians welcomed the annexation, known as the Anschluss, but others actively resisted it.

Author Peter Turrini, one of several artists and intellectuals who addressed the crowd, said Austrians had not yet done enough to confront their wartime past.

"There has not yet been one minute of confession," he declared.

Chancellor Franz Vranitzky, speaking at the site of a former prison camp for gypsies, said Austrians "may not behave as (they did) after 1945...when no one asked what happened to the Austrians who left the country in 1938."

At the demonstration before Waldheim's offices, Rosa Jochmann, a former concentration camp inmate and resistance fighter, gave an emotional speech that left many spectators weeping.

She recalled that even people who were not directly responsible for Nazi atrocities "simply walked by" acts of violence.

"It is not true that one should not mourn, one must," she said. "All those who lived through it (the Nazi period) must speak. I will never be silent."

Train derails in Lithuania spilling fuel over railway

MOSCOW (AP) — A speeding freight train derailed near the Baltic port of Klaipeda in Lithuania, breaking open 23 tank cars that spilled fuel over a 1,300-foot stretch of railway, the Tass news agency reported Saturday.

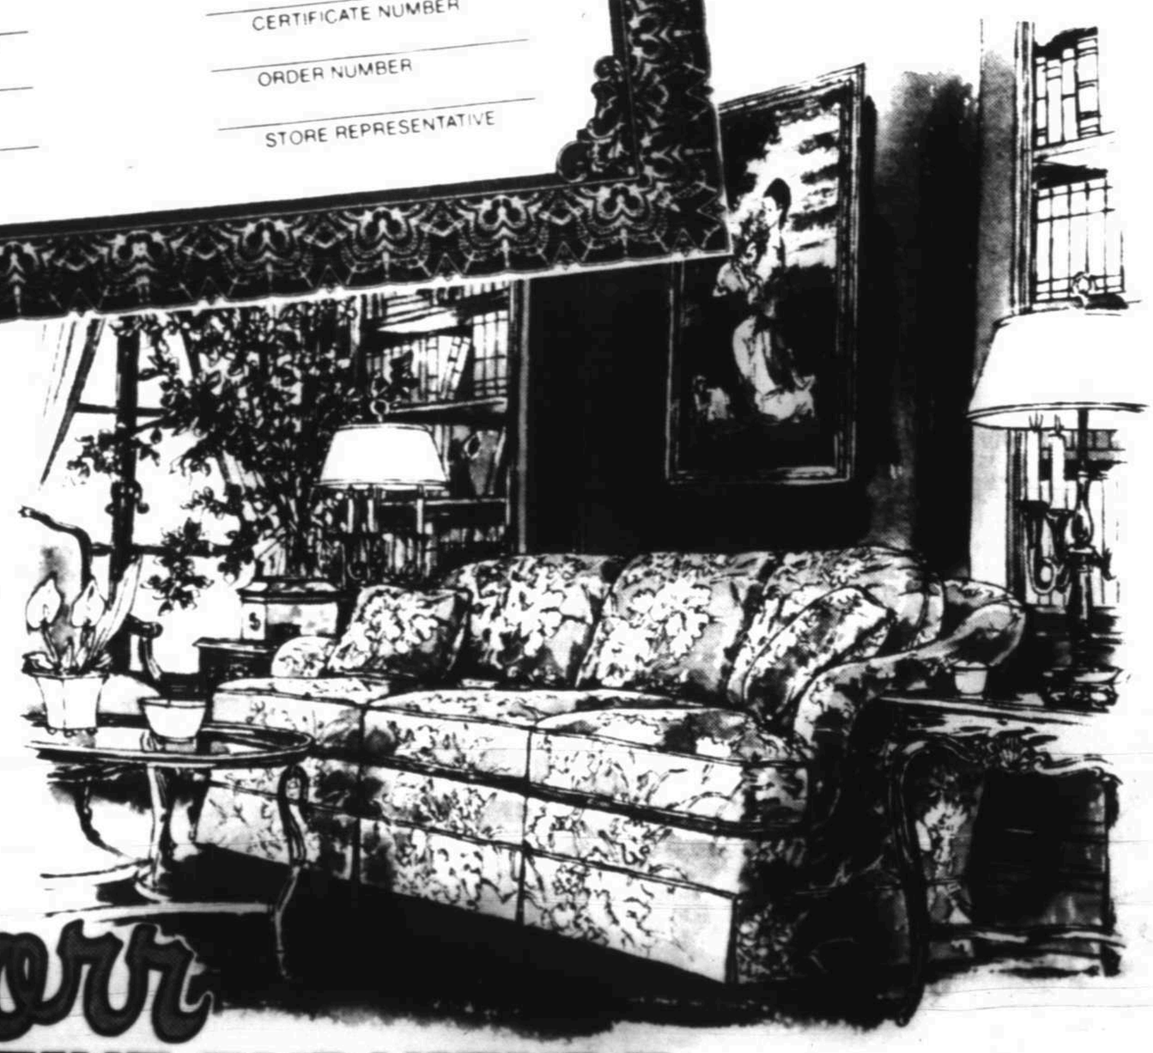

Tass said workers had blocked the flow of oil into the nearby Baltic Sea, but did not make clear whether the spill was contained before some of the oil reached the water.

There was no indication whether there was any permanent environmental damage or whether the accident caused casualties.

Salvadoran rebels may be planning new drive

By JAMES LeMOYNE
New York Times News Service

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — A batch of documents reported to have been captured from Marxist guerrillas here indicate that the rebels are planning a major political and military offensive over the next 10 months, according to Salvadoran officials and several foreign diplomats.

The documents indicate that the rebels of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front still believe they can eventually lead a mass insurrection against the government, a goal they have repeatedly failed to achieve in eight years of war.

The documents, which were given to several reporters by the government, predict that elections in El Salvador and the United States will produce a moment of extreme political vulnerability here in which the rebels will step up their attacks. The documents also say the Central American peace plan now in effect aids the rebels by weakening the Reagan administration's policy in Central America.

The documents say the government will be weakened by political infighting surrounding the coming presidential and legislative elections here, as well as by the presidential election campaign in the United States and the departure of the Reagan administration.

"The unity of the Yankee Congress in relation to aid to El Salvador will only be broken with the strategic advance of the revolutionary movement," one paper states. "The electoral period in the United States is the best moment to favor such a division."

Documents that the government distributes, saying they have been captured, must be read with caution since they could be falsified. But several foreign diplomats, as well as Salvadoran and American officials, say that they believe the documents are authentic.

Army officers said most of the papers were captured last month when the army killed a rebel courier who evidently was carrying them from one rebel commander, Joaquin Villalobos, to another, Fermian Cienfuegos.

The documents include what appears to be a letter from Villalobos to Cienfuegos and seem to summarize the conclusions of a meeting of the rebel general command in January. The documents indicate that the rebels feel they are gaining strength and that they will form new political groups directly under the command of rebel military leaders to exploit the government's willingness to permit rebel political leaders to return to El Salvador under the terms of the Central American peace plan.

The documents state repeatedly that the rebels view the Central American peace plan and negotiations with the government not as a way to reconcile differences but as a way to take power by political means.

"The tendency of the war is to grow stronger and this will be the dominant direction in Central America despite the movement to negotiations," one of the papers states.

The documents appear to corroborate other evidence that the rebels have been able to maintain themselves as a significant military and political force in El Salvador.

In the last year the guerrillas have begun to rebuild their presence in urban trade unions and student groups. They also have stepped up sabotage and appear able to manufacture a significant portion of their own rockets, land mines and mortars. The rebels regularly ambush the army, which has failed to establish a continuing presence in key rebel areas.

Although the army is militarily far more capable than in the past, it appears unable to coordinate with the civilian government to offer a political program that might fundamentally weaken the guerrillas. Several foreign diplomats and military analysts here say the United States will have to maintain at least the present level of military aid to keep the guerrillas at bay.

One memorandum states that the inability of the army and the United States to find a policy capable of defeating the guerrillas outright offers the rebels "objective conditions" for rebuilding their strength and escalating the war.

According to the documents and to several officials who have analyzed them, the Salvadoran guerrillas will step up urban attacks and try to create a new rebel-dominated civilian front organization called "Fire" to lead strikes and building takeovers and challenge the government.

Pro-rebel trade unions and political groups have become far more active in recent weeks in what appears to be a realization of the plans outlined in the documents.

On Thursday a group of pro-rebel labor activists calling themselves the Solidarity Coordinator of the Workers occupied the Ministry of Labor in downtown San Salvador. Army commanders gave the rebel supporters who seized the building 24 hours to leave, and they did so eight hours later.

Rebels claim responsibility for bombs in San Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas claimed responsibility Saturday for detonating two car bombs in a trendy shopping and restaurant area.

"The peace of the rich has ended, the war of the poor has begun," said a communique issued by the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, an alliance of five leftist guerrilla groups that has been fighting to overthrow El Salvador's U.S.-backed government for the past eight years.

Two car bombs went off Friday night in the Pink Zone, a fashionable neighborhood of sidewalk cafes and restaurants. Two people were injured.

The statement said the blasts targeted "those who daily plan the repressive campaign against campesinos, those who fly the helicopters and planes, the diplomats, Marines of the U.S. Embassy, and the demagogues who design electoral campaigns."

The campaigns mentioned referred to legislative and municipal elections scheduled for March 20.

"These individuals have never felt the consequences of misery and exploitation and, being parasites, much less have felt the ravages of the dirty war they impose on the humble people. With this action we intend to make them feel, if only a little, this war they direct comfortably from afar," said the communique.

An anonymous caller told the radio station YSU where to find the communique, and a reporter for the station picked it up.

One of the bombs exploded just a few feet from where leftist guerrillas killed 13 people, among them six Americans, in a machine gun attack in June 1985.

A 12-year-old boy and a middle-aged man were slightly wounded in the first explosion Friday. The other bomb exploded about five minutes later in a parking lot behind a Pizza Hut restaurant, causing no injuries.

An armed forces spokesman consulted by The Associated Press said explosives experts were studying the vehicles' remains.

The conservative daily La Prensa Grafica on Saturday had attributed the blasts to the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

"The object of these actions...is to demonstrate that the terrorists continue attacking the citizenry in an effort to disrupt the elections," said the paper.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Sandinistas, Contras to meet in Nicaragua

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista government announced Saturday it has formally agreed to hold the first cease-fire talks inside Nicaragua with rebel leaders.

It said the talks will be held March 21-23 in the southern frontier post of Sapoa, 90 miles south of Managua.

President Daniel Ortega ordered local civilian and military authorities in the area "to lend all facilities to the delegation of the counterrevolution" to enter and leave the country freely at the Pena Blanca border crossing, according to a statement issued by his office.

The statement said the government would assume all responsibility for the security of the rebel delegation during the negotiations and cross-border traffic would not be affected.

Adolfo Calero, the top political leader of the Nicaraguan Resistance, is expected to head the delegation from the rebels, known as Contras. Nicaraguan Resistance is an umbrella organization of rebel group.

Ortega previously announced that his brother, Defense Minister Humberto Ortega, would lead the government delegation.

The Sapoa meeting also will be the first between the two sides without a mediator.

Afghan leader resigns

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Yunis Khalis, the chief of the seven-party Afghan opposition alliance, resigned Saturday for health reasons, an alliance statement said.

It gave no further details and did not announce a replacement.

The statement said the Hezbi Islami party, which Khalis heads, will remain in the alliance and did not say if Khalis also resigned as party leader.

His resignation came less than a week after another rebel leader quit the alliance over plans to form an interim Afghan government when Soviet troops withdraw from the country.

But Sibghatullah Mojaddedi, head of the National Liberation Front, rejoined the alliance three days after resigning.

Vietnamese see 'Platoon'

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — "Platoon," the critically acclaimed film about America's moral anguish and loss of innocence on Vietnam's battlefields, has been drawing tens of thousands of Vietnamese viewers, according to the official Vietnam News Agency.

People have been flocking to watch the film on video in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon, said a VNA report seen in Bangkok on Saturday.

The agency said "Platoon" was the first U.S. film about the Vietnam war to be screened in Ho Chi Minh City since the communist victory over U.S.-backed South Vietnam in April 1975.

The brief report noted that the film was directed by Oliver Stone, who had fought in Vietnam, and that it received Academy Awards in 1987.

United States Magistrate Darrell Smith, left, and U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton stand at the bench in Midland federal court. Smith will be leaving the federal post he's held for five years.

Judge praises magistrate Smith as he leaves post

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

United States Magistrate Darrell Smith has done an "excellent job" in the almost five years in which he has served in the magistrate's role in Midland, said U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

The 44-year-old Smith is resigning the part-time magistrate's post to devote full-time to the private practice of law. No successor has yet been appointed to the $21,225-a-year job, which carries a four-year term.

"He has handled all of his court trials, as far as I know, properly in dealing in the law, in dealing in the facts," said Bunton, who noted that the judicial system is "much more efficient if you have an efficient magistrate, which we have in Darrell Smith."

Bunton said Smith has been "here and available to law-enforcement people" in carrying out his duties, which range from accepting felony indictments and holding preliminary examinations to setting or denying bail and presiding over civil disputes and misdemeanor cases.

"He has never refused to accept any case that I have referred to him," Bunton said. "He has volunteered to help. He has always been agreeable." Smith, the chief judge said, has "just been a fine judge and a fine man."

Smith, who noted that no person could be "teamed with a better man or better judge" than Bunton, said that "nearly anything" that the federal "judge can do can be done by the magistrate."

But, there are exceptions.

"A magistrate cannot hear felony cases," Smith said. But the magistrate can preside over civil cases if "the parties to a civil trial want the magistrate to hear it," and the federal judge refers it to the magistrate's court.

"Judge Bunton has referred some civil trials here," Smith said.

The magistrate can hear some pretrial motions to help relieve the federal judge of burdensome caseloads. But if the magistrate's rulings are contested, they can be appealed to Bunton to determine whether or not the magistrate has done the "proper thing," Smith said.

A judge such as Bunton, who is appointed for life, is an "Article III judge" who is authorized by Article III of the U.S. Constitution.

Eleonore Dillenburger, a diet clerk at Midland Memorial Hospital, draws rave reviews from her bosses. Mrs. Dillenburger, a West German native and 25-year employee of the hospital, recently was named Employee of the Year.

Longtime MMH diet clerk flattered by recent honors

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Diet clerk Eleonore Dillenburger wept when she learned the newspaper wanted to write a story about her.

She thought she'd been called into the hospital's public relations office Thursday because she was in trouble. She feared she'd lose her recently acquired Employee of the Year award.

"I'm a dull person...really," she claimed in a thick, melodic West German accent.

Not so, counters Midland Memorial Hospital chief administrator Ray Branson who oversees its 850 or so employees.

"Well everybody here is special, but Eleanor was singled out because she has been here for 25 years and has a colorful background," Branson said Friday.

"She came from Germany not able to speak one word of English. She meets and greets everyone with the same positive, outgoing smile. She just has endeared herself to everybody who knows her.

"She's as enthusiastic today as she was 25 years ago. If anything, she's gotten better," the hospital president added.

Mrs. Dillenburger, 60, walks to and from work each day, in snow boots if necessary, whether it's rain, snow, sleet or hail.

Though she's not a driver, she said the time spent walking gives her time to think.

Children from a neighboring elementary school used to try to run her off the road so she stopped riding her bike, she said.

"I was afraid to tell Mr. Branson I only walked five blocks each way or I wouldn't get the award," she mused.

In the 25 years she's worked in the innards of Midland Memorial Hospital's kitchen, she missed nary a day since about 15 years ago, she'll recant.

She came to Texas in the mid-1950s with her husband, a soldier, from Frankfurt, West Germany.

The couple left Big Spring in 1954 in part so she could attend commercial college in Midland.

She planned to continue her career as a key punch clerk.

"But I got here and they all wanted experience, and I thought, 'How could I get experience if they wouldn't hire me?'"

So, instead, she worked a few weeks as a waitress in a drive-in near a dance hall.

Struggling along in life with two children was difficult, she remembered.

A friend helped her get a more permanent job in the kitchen at Midland Memorial Hospital soon thereafter.

Back then, it was a private hospital and not owned by the Midland County Hospital District.

"I was working on the food carts...the big metal carts.... I was delivering or dipping the hot food or pouring the tea...picking up trays and meeting patients," Mrs. Dillenburger remembered.

"I learned to love the hospital and forgot about college."

Enjoyment in life for her comes from serving and pleasing people, she said.

Years ago around Eastertime, when she was more involved with individual patient menus, a young boy who had a hole in his heart was in the hospital, she remembered.

Doctors said he had not long to live, she said.

"I made sure he had special meals and I went to Walgreen's and bought him an Easter Bunny...you know, the kind made of chocolate."

The young boy died shortly after his discharge from the hospital, but she said she remembers him more than any other.

Though she claims the "credit" doesn't belong to her, she says she enjoys it when she happens upon a former patient who says, "I remember you. I stayed in your hospital."

The night in January she won the hospital's 1987 Employee of the Year award, she also was awarded her 25th-year pin.

They are commendations she covets and talks about modestly but frequently.

"I don't have hobbies. I dine with friends and I like to travel," she said.

She goes home to West Germany every two years or so and visits her sister and mother in Killeen.

Co-workers in the diet office at the hospital say its nice to work with Ms. Dillenburger because "she knows everything.

"She's a hard worker and she'll go to the limits to please. She's very concerned about the patients," said Anita Chriesmon, a diet aide.

"I visit with them about their likes and dislikes. I feel like I'm representing our department," Mrs. Dillenburger said.

"I'm not doing it for any honor."

Two-vehicle mishap

Joe Perez of the Midland Police Department investigates a pickup truck-car mishap late Saturday afternoon at Main Street and Noble Avenue in Midland. Jorette J. Land, 61, of Midland was driver of the 1986 two-door Nissan sedan, which collided with the 1985 Ford Ranger pickup truck driven by Robert Eric Lee, 27, of Midland. Lee suffered minor injuries, and Ms. Land was uninjured, according to police. Police officer N. Bryant and Perez investigated the accident, which occurred about 6:25 p.m.

County preparing to construct jail

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County Monday will formally begin preparation for construction of a $3.8 million jail when commissioners review sales of jail bonds and solicit proposals for a project coordinator.

"We'll basically provide the authorization to First RepublicBank to go out with the official statement and solicit bids for the acquisition of those bonds," Commissioner Guy McCrary said. "The paperwork involves an official statement and notice of sale and a list of the prospective bidders."

McCrary said the bids should be opened by March 28, and the actual sale of those bonds should take place by mid April.

Commissioners also are expected to solicit proposals for the appointment of a jail project coordinator "to provide the necessary expertise" once construction of the facility begins.

Ideally, the project coordinator would be a local firm that would have architecture, engineering and contracting experience, McCrary said.

"It's incumbent on us to assure that we have the proper expertise in preparing the bid package for the design and build proposals and to assure the quality of construction once the work actually begins," he said.

Voters approved $3.8 million in funding in January for the 192-bunk downtown detention center by a 500-vote margin.

The new jail — to be built on the so-called Downtown South Superblock at the intersection of Main Street and Industrial Avenues — was first proposed to ease overcrowding in the existing jail, located on the fifth floor of the county courthouse.

That facility is currently undergoing renovation at a cost of $1.5 million, and the county plans to use its 104 bunks as a holding facility for prisoners awaiting trial once construction is completed later this spring.

GARY OTT

What is going on here? I don't hate women — I love them

Ott

The time has come to clear the air.

First a little background.

Twice in the past few weeks I have been accused of being anti-woman. The first time was at a local nightspot. It was rapidly approaching the midnight hour and I was headed for the men's room. Out of nowhere an arm reached out and grabbed me. A woman said, "You're the creep that writes that repulsive column in the newspaper, aren't you?"

"Why, yes, as a matter of fact, I am," I said in my most polite voice.

"You're a male chauvinistic pig," she snapped.

I thanked her profusely for her observation and continued to the men's room.

Subconsciously, though, I dismissed her accusation. She probably had just misinterpreted something I had written. Those things happen.

The other day, however, it occurred again.

I was part of a news media panel that was meeting with a group of Midland Republican women (I wasn't aware there were any other kind of Midland women) and at the conclusion of our presentation, we fielded questions from the audience. Most of them dealt with the presidential campaign and how the national media is covering it.

At one point, though, the direction shifted.

A woman rose from her seat and said, "From your column, Mr. Ott, it is obvious that you hate women...."

She went on to say something else, but I was too much in shock to remember what it was.

What is going on here, anyway?

I don't hate women. I love women. Women are my life.

For crying out loud, I've been engaged to three of them. I even married one.

In hindsight, I should have remained engaged to that one and married one of the other two, but that's beside the point. We all make mistakes.

The fact is, I don't hate women.

Still, I am concerned about this obvious misconception. And, in an attempt to find out why it exists I have researched several past columns for some clues.

Here are the findings:

OK, it is true that I have mentioned women — and some of their "peculiar" habits — on a number of occasions. But they were all legitimate observations.

For example, I once wondered aloud why it was that women always go to the restroom in pairs when they are at a restaurant and, furthermore, why they stay in there for 45 minutes at a time.

Sorry, women, but I can't back off from that one.

I still think it is weird. What can you possibly do in the restroom for 45 minutes? Is there a beauty salon in there? Do they show uncensored movies? Do male strippers perform?

If so, I could understand.

If not, then women should do like men — slip quietly into the restroom alone, take care of business and get back to the table before the food turns cold. It is really very simple.

Another time, I innocently noted in a column that women are uncanny at making men feel guilty without telling them why. "I don't want to talk about it," is the way they generally put it.

Again, I must stick to my guns.

And, here's the proof. When I was married, my ex-wife came home one day in a brand new car. "Isn't this car beautiful?" she asked.

"Yes, it is," I said.

"Let's buy it," she exclaimed.

I thought she was kidding, so I laughed.

She wasn't kidding, so she cried.

"Why are you crying?" I sympathetically asked, trying to console her by putting my arm around her.

"I don't want to talk about it," she coldly replied, giving me a glare that said I was not to touch her in any way, shape or form.

I immediately felt guilty.

The next day, however, she did resume speaking to me. She informed me that I was a spineless cheapskate who didn't love her.

Following lengthy negotiations, I convinced her I was not cheap and that I did indeed love her. The car was paid for with 48 easy payments.

Now, I ask you. Does that sound like the actions of a male chauvinistic pig?

Course tunes in mariachi music

By GLORIA BIGGER

KINGSVILLE (AP) — On page 183 of Texas A&I's catalog, the university with one of the nation's best science programs lists a one-hour course in experimental joy — mariachi music.

Always opened with a "grito" — a shout — the spirited folk music of Mexico is catching on throughout the United States as pop star Linda Ronstadt's mariachi album climbs the charts.

The colorful music richly layered with brass, strings and voice has been largely ignored by most North American university and college music departments. Only a few, including the University of California at Los Angeles, offer mariachi studies, said Eliseo Torres, vice president for student affairs. But at A&I, which last October was recognized by U.S. News and World Report as having one of the top science departments in America, the mariachi course has been part of the curriculum since 1978 — when mariachi music wasn't popular even in South Texas.

Merced Garcia, a Kingsville mariachi musician, said mariachi music became extremely popular in Mexico in the '30s when a group called Mariachi Vargas, of Tecalitlan, Jalisco, became prominent.

Garcia said the leader, Caspar, wrote many of the mariachi classics, including "La Negra," "El Rey" and "Sabor A Me."

Bands range in size from five musicians to no more than 12. They play violins, trumpets, bass guitar and the vihuela, the small string guitar that originated in the Aztec culture, Ms. Garcia said.

Her band partner, Mary Lou Gonzalez, was among the first mariachi students at A&I.

Ms. Gonzalez said she remembers asking people if they wanted to hear mariachi and the reply would be, "Not really."

But times have changed, she said. "There's a new crowd today, and Linda Ronstadt is helping make this music national."

The A&I course played matchmaker in renewing South Texans' love of mariachi music. It started with scholarly and cultural aims.

Thomas C. Pierson, who was chairman of the music department in 1978, said he proposed the course because there was a void in mariachi studies and materials.

"A lot of mariachi music does not exist in the printed form and students have to listen to the recordings so they can learn the songs."

Pierson said he felt mariachi studies also would recognize the Mexican-American aspect of bicultural South Texas.

Torres and I.Q. Viduarri, now the dean of students, recruited an accomplished mariachi musician, Juan Ortiz, of San Antonio, to start the university course. Ortiz ran the program for a year and a half before returning to San Antonio to resume playing professionally and teaching in the public schools.

When he started the A&I program, there was no shortage of students interested in studying with him. "The students were receptive," Ortiz said.

At A&I, Ortiz soon formed the class band, the Mariachi Javelina, named after the university's mascot.

Trained as a classical musician, Ortiz said he "applied what I learned about classical music to mariachi music because I wanted it to be appreciated. I grew up in an environment where folklorico music was looked down on and mariachi music was cantina music — full of wine, women and song." Ortiz said he wanted a positive image for the music.

Duane Leach, who was A&I president at the time and interested in mariachi music, supported Ortiz's plan with funds for authentic Mexican mariachi uniforms. The elaborate costumes are pattered after the charro, the Mexican cowboy, and are accented with intricate decorative touches called "gala."

Ortiz began hunting performance opportunities for the A&I mariachi band and soon they were playing at high schools, elementary schools and social gatherings.

"Once we played for some Russians at a nearby ranch and they liked it so much we played for four hours," Mary Lou Gonzalez said.

The course and the band "turned out to be a family thing," Ortiz said. "We all became very close. We had the opportunity to travel all over Texas."

Ortiz left a legacy not only at A&I but in South Texas as well. Many of his students, such as Ms. Gonzalez, went on to form their own professional mariachi bands and have nurtured interest in the folk music throughout the region.

Some of Ortiz's students have succeeded in other music careers.

Kingsville native Danny Leal was the lead vocalist of Mariachi Javelina until 1983, when he moved to San Diego, Calif., to pursue a career in opera.

Leal sings with the San Diego Civic Light Opera and plans to try out next fall for opera companies in Vienna and Munich.

He said he gained valuable performance experience with A&I's mariachi band. "I remember singing on the Riverwalk in San Antonio," Leal said. "What fascinated me was one time we could be performing at a formal banquet and another day we would be performing at someone's ranch."

The mariachi course's reputation has become a strong drawing card for the music department.

Two music education students, Terri Hernandez and Chris Castro of Austin, say that's why they're at A&I.

Both are professional mariachi musicians in their spare time, and they're the leaders of the current version of Mariachi Javelina, a 16-student group that meets every Monday night to learn songs and study techniques.

Their supervisor is Randy Flugman, a visiting music professor. He books all their engagements and travels with them.

A native of Oklahoma, Flugman said the extent of his experience with mariachi music had been glimpsing televised performances.

But Mariachi Javelina has changed that, he said. "During the day, I teach them about music theory," then they "teach me about mariachi music."

Javelina members are not paid for their performances, but they accept donations for their band fund. They currently are raising money to buy new costumes, which cost about $500 apiece.

But the money is practicaly incidental. Mariachi musicians simply love their music.

"Mariachi music just lingers on," Ms. Gonzalez said, "and we often when we finish our performances we continue playing — in the parking lot."

Medicine man ministers to Indian inmates

"Mr. Yazzie's visit delights the native brothers immensely. His prayers lift us and help to alleviate the stress and anxiety of being in prison. He is our only contact with the outside world."

— Yocash, a 47-year-old Yakima

EL PASO (AP) — Indians at La Tuna Federal Penitentiary heated rocks for the sweat lodge and said prayers in preparation for the medicine man's visit.

They built a 12-foot-diameter sweat lodge outdoors, between the prison camp and the main building, then purified themselves inside the hut by sweating.

A sweat lodge is a dome-shaped hut made of natural materials that Indians use as a chapel. It's made of twigs and branches that are woven onto a wooden frame and covered with canvas.

The rocks create intense heat, with temperatures reaching as high as 130 degrees.

"The hotter the rocks, the better the prayers," said Leroy Yocash, one of the Indians.

Yocash said healing sometimes take place as a result of the prayers and purification ceremonies in the sweat lodge.

"This is not a sauna. This is something very sacred. Although we are very limited on time, each of us spends up to half an hour in the sweat lodge."

Ben Yazzie, the medicine man, is a 45-year-old Navajo from Crownpoint, N.M. He ministers once a month to 42 Indian inmates at the Anthony penitentiary.

"When I come, we share about the Indian ways and bring news about our people," said Yazzie, a part-time medicine man who paints houses for a living.

Most of the other inmates seek out the prison chaplains for spiritual guidance, but Indian inmates prefer the Indian ways, and would rather wait for Yazzie to help them with their spiritual lives.

The Rev. Sol Codillo, head prison chaplain, said it's his job to ensure that all inmates get to practice their religion. That's why he hired Yazzie.

Congress passed a law in 1978 that mandates freedom of religion for Indians in federal departments, agencies and prisons.

The intent of the law is to preserve Indian traditions and religions, and to permit Indians to express those beliefs.

The law also guarantees access to Indian sites, the use and possession of sacred objects, and the freedom to worship through ceremonial and traditional rites.

La Tuna pays Yazzie $120 once a month for a session that lasts six to seven hours. Yazzie ministers to inmates who come from a dozen different tribes, including Yakimas, Cherokees and Navajos.

Yocash, a 47-year-old Yakima from Washington, is one of the inmates who looks forward to Yazzie's visits.

"Mr. Yazzie's visit delights the native brothers immensely. His prayers lift us and help to alleviate the stress and anxiety of being in prison. He is our only contact with the outside world."

Yocash, who is in prison for violating anti-poaching laws, assists Yazzie with some of the ceremonies.

The highlight of Yazzie's visit is the sweat lodge ceremony.

Inside the sweat lodge, Yazzie said, "We confess, fast and pray. We talk to the wind, to the four directions of the world. We talk about what it means to be Indian."

Yazzie said some Indian inmates want to practice "advanced ceremonies." But his is not possible in most cases because the ceremonies involve visiting sacred Indian sites outside the prison.

A couple of inmates also want access to certain herbs that are used for healing, such as peyote. Peyote is a substance from a Southwest cactus that produces hallucinogenic effects. Peyote is used in some Navajo rituals.

SMITH

Since Smith has held the office, the federal Bail Reform Act has been implemented, allowing magistrates to determine if an accused person is entitled to be released on bail while trial is pending.

The government — the prosecution — may move to detain a defendant without bail on grounds that the defendant is a danger to the community, a flight risk, or if the accused has been charged with a crime involving a controlled substance, such as cocaine, heroin, or marijuana, and punishment for the offense could be more than 10 years imprisonment.

Smith also noted that the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) has been given "an absolutely impossible" job — to patrol the United States-Mexico border to halt the influx of illegal aliens coming into the U.S.

"The large majority of them want to better their lives even if it's a crime to enter, illegally, this country," Smith said. And for the most part, they are neither a flight risk or a danger to the community.

"They wanted back," Smith said. "Experience seems to bear out if the people were taken back for voluntary departure, they will get back here in no time flat."

Many of the aliens are employed in the service industry — from restaurants and laundries to farms and ranches. The United States has granted amnesty to many of the Mexican workers and their families who illegally are in the United States.

"If someone is going to be receiving amnesty in five months," said Smith, "it didn't seem that there was much sense in jailing them, particularly when they were supporting their families, paying taxes and otherwise not violating any laws."

Smith said that he is not sure he fully understands the Legislature's intent in granting amnesty other than to "show some compassion and maybe clean the slate, so that we have a chance to start over."

A judge, Smith reflected, is called upon "only to apply the law and make decisions.

"A judge is not called upon to legislate, but it helps if you understand what was behind the legislation."

Fire-threatened towns share relief

BAIRD (AP) — Residents of three West Texas communities looked forward Saturday night to their first good night's sleep in three days.

Since Thursday morning — when strong, dry winds fanned a prairie fire that blazed across thousands of acres — people in and around the towns of Albany, Moran and Baird had been warned that they might have to evacuate if brush fires continued out of control.

"Everybody's just ready for it to be over," said Bob Hammontree, an Albany grocer.

The blaze began Thursday after a trash fire got out of control in Baird, about 20 miles east of Abilene on Interstate 20.

The fire covered an area about 60 miles long and 25 miles wide in portions of Callahan, Shackelford and Throckmorton counties, officials said, and a 20-mile wide swath of the blaze burned out of control. In Shackelford County alone, about 265,000 acres of rangeland — about half of the entire county — was reported to have burned.

Officials reported late Saturday afternoon that they believed the blaze had finally been brought under control.

The plains on both sides of U.S. 283 between Baird and Albany were scorched black. Smoke continued to smolder late Saturday from small tufts of grass and mesquite wood.

Volunteer firefighters and military personnel who came to fight the blazes were taken to Abilene Saturday night to rest.

"Tonight, we're going to just more or less be running a patrol and mop-up operation," said Pat McKennon, Baird volunteer fire chief.

For much of Friday and Saturday, residents in Baird, Albany and Moran watched fires line the hills outside their small towns.

JAIL

The new jail will be used primary to house prisoners from the city of Midland, other counties, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the U.S. Federal Marshals Service to cover the cost of construction and operations.

Commissioners have said the jail could prove to be a break-even proposition, whereby Midland County would generate enough revenue by leasing space to offset its payments.

Still, the revenue shortfall during the jail's first year in operation could range from $456,191 to $771,441. Financial experts have agreed that those figures for 1989 translate into an ad valorem tax hike of 0.001 cents to 0.018 cents per $100 valuation.

In other words, a property owner whose home is valued at $50,000 could pay about $5.50 extra in taxes during 1989. However, that same property owner's increase would decline to about 50 cents in 1990 should the revenue-generating commitments come to pass.

Ranger honored

Texas Ranger C.J. Havrda has been named the Outstanding Law Enforcement Officer of the Month by the Midland Insurance Underwriters. Havrda began his career in 1969, working in the Highway Patrol Service in Sinton, Rockport and Victoria. In 1981 he went into the Texas Rangers and has been stationed in Midland since that time.

Hispanic vote made difference for Dukakis

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Winning 56 percent of the Hispanic vote in Texas, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis added 12-15 percentage points to his vote total in the state's Super Tuesday presidential primary.

According to pollsters and analysts, the Hispanic vote in Texas was just about the margin of victory for Dukakis over Jesse Jackson, the runnerup.

In Florida on Super Tuesday, Vice President George Bush handily won the Republican primary. And voters with Hispanic backgrounds contributed mightily to the landslide. Bush collected more than 60 percent of the vote in Florida. Hispanics account for about 26 percent of the registered Republicans in the state, and analysts estimate that about 90 percent of those who actually voted cast their ballots for Bush.

Candidates now are acutely aware that voters with Hispanic roots are participating in the electoral process in increasing numbers and their votes may be decisive in close races. They also are aware, however, that Hispanic voters are not a united bloc but instead make decisions based on diverse cultural backgrounds.

In Texas, most Hispanics are Mexican-American by heritage and Democratic in their politics. In Florida, the majority of Hispanics registered to vote are of Cuban descent and overwhelmingly Republican, at least in presidential politics.

In California, where primaries in which significant numbers of convention delegates will be allotted on June 7, more than 20 percent of the voting age population is Hispanic and, as in Texas, the vast majority are from Mexico or of Mexican descent. Analysts say California's registered Hispanics also are, for the most part, Democrats.

Willie Valasquez, director of the Southwest Voter Registration and Education Project, in explaining the difference in party affiliation between Texas and Florida Hispanics, said, "The Mexican Americans in Texas are more of a working class community while the Cubans are part of a special immigration brought about by political considerations when Fidel Castro assumed power in that country."

Santos Rivero, vice chairman of the Republican National Hispanic Assembly, and a Cuban who left his country 30 years ago, echoed Valasquez's view: "The Mexicans came looking for food; we were looking for freedom."

In the wake of Super Tuesday and given the confused state of the Democratic presidential race, the role of Hispanics in that party's California primary is drawing increasing attention.

In a tight contest, the Hispanic vote could make a difference.

Harry Pachon, director of the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials, this week said that each 6 percent of Hispanic voters who go in the direction of one candidate will make a 1 percent difference in that candidate's statewide total.

With one million Hispanic voters expected in the California contest, the candidates already are lining up local elected officials to act as advance troops.

Indeed, both parties are seriously courting Hispanic voters for the general presidential election in the fall.

Polly Baca, vice chair of the Democratic National Committee, who has primary responsibility for state legislators and minority constituencies, said Hispanics this year "are more organized (and) more aware politically than they have ever been."

"Hispanics made historical marks with their significant influence going into the 1984 National Democratic Convention," Baca said.

The former Colorado state senator of Hispanic descent added: "This presidential year will be just as significant if not more so. Hispanics will impact the party's convention in Atlanta this July, and most importantly the November general election, by overwhelming numbers."

On the Republican side, Ernest Olivas, an Austin, Texas, Mexican-American employed in coalition building for the Republican National Committee, said the GOP "will be there, everywhere," bidding for Hispanic votes.

Added Olivas: "We plan to launch as extensive an effort in 1988 as we did in 1984 when between 40 and 44 percent of Hispanic voters nationwide came out for Reagan-Bush."

The analysts cite four states where Hispanic voters could still play a significant role during the remainder of the primary season: Illinois on Tuesday, March 15; California and New Mexico on June 7; and New York on April 19.

In addition, Arizona and Colorado — with a smaller but still significant Hispanic populations — will hold caucuses in April.

Texas, California, Illinois, New Mexico and New York contain about 75 percent of the U.S. Hispanic population, which totals nearly 19 million.

California has 4.5 million voting age Hispanics, or 21.6 percent of the total voting age population; Texas has 2.5 million, or 21.1 percent of the total; New York has 1.4 million, or 10 percent; Illinois has 586,000 or 6.6 percent.

Other states with significant Hispanic voting-age population include Florida, with 907,000, or 9.4 percent; Arizona, with 379,000 or 14.5 percent, and Colorado, with 264,000, or 10.6 percent.

While it is difficult for census takers, election officials and campaign strategists to measure the size of the Hispanic vote — in part because various agencies use different definitions of who is "Hispanic" — more than a dozen experts agreed that the numbers of Hispanic voters are growing and that they are more politically energized than ever before.

The Census Bureau said the number of voting age Hispanics has soared in recent years, from 8.7 million in 1982 to 13 million this year.

Because census takers count illegal Hispanics who are ineligible to vote as well as native or legalized citizens, it is difficult to gauge how many Hispanics actually register to vote and then do so.

In 1972, 44.4 percent of the Hispanic voting age population reported to the Census Bureau that they were registered to vote. The percentage who identified themselves as registered voters had dropped, to 40.1 percent, by 1984, but that was because an influx of alien Hispanics had swelled the total of Hispanics of voting age.

Velasquez cautions that "people tend to lie" when asked whether they are registered or whether they vote. "I wish as many voted as say they did. I can't find those voters when I study precinct by precinct."

Velasquez, whose organization has branches and conducts research in California, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Oklahoma, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, South Dakota and Idaho as well as Texas, agrees that the numbers of Hispanic voters and their significance is increasing.

"Without the Hispanic vote, Dukakis would have dropped 12 to 15 points," said Velasquez, who conducted exit polls in 52 predominantly Hispanic precincts.

Hispanic voters gave Jesse Jackson 21 percent of their vote and helped him take second place in Texas.

Richard Scammon, director of the Elections Research Center in Washington, is convinced that the Hispanic vote is assuming greater importance. "But 80 years ago you could say that of the Polish vote, the German vote or the Jewish vote. In Boston, 150 years ago, you could have said that of the Irish. It is a continuing unfolding of the immigration story."

County Commissioners facing full agenda

From Staff Reports

Midland County Commissioners will meet in regular session at 9 a.m. Monday in the commissioner's courtroom, located on the second floor of the county courthouse.

Commissioners are expected to:

- Discuss a road stabalization project.
- Open bids for an automobile for the constable's office.
- Open bids for annual service of IBM typewriters.
- Open bids for six automobiles for the Narcotics Task Force.
- Review and approve documentation regarding the sale of jail bonds.
- Consider soliciting requests for proposals for a jail project coordinator.
- Discuss personnel in the sheriff's office and jail health care.
- Discuss equipment for the 4-H Horse Club.
- Discuss repricing and contract for a telephone system.
- Hear a report from the Data Processing Department.
- Discuss hiring detention workers.
- Discuss a proposal to form a support organization for a new county library and discuss a proposed change in the Library Advisory Board by-laws.
- Consider final payment on the Culver Youth Home expansion.
- Discuss animal control.

Government to stage wild horse adoptions

HOUSTON (AP) — About 70 wild horses and burros will be up for "adoption" this weekend in Houston, as part of an Interior Department project.

About 6,000 animals are adopted each year under the Interior Department's wild horse adoption program. Most are rounded up on federal land in Wyoming and Nevada to keep populations at manageable levels.

Nathan Skallman, a spokesman for Satellite Adoption Program, said the animals will be offered at Houston's Farm and Ranch club. Most of the horses and burros are under 3 years old, and all are certified healthy, he said.

The horses can be adopted for $125 each and the burros for $75.

Property owners with at least 400 square feet of enclosed pen space or pasture can adopt the animals, so long as the people haven't been convicted of animal cruelty or neglect charges.

The federal government keeps title to the animals for at least a year.

Inspector warns of Midland area mail thefts

From Staff Reports

Mail thieves are at work in Midland, according Postal Inspector Bill Ross.

"We need to heighten neighborhood awareness with respect to losing mail," Ross said. "And, people should try to keep their mail secure as much as possible."

Ross said neighbors should report anyone acting suspiciously, or any suspected theft, to the local police and to Stan Sartain, manager of Customer Services at the Main Post Office. The telephone number is 684-5801.

Ross recommends installing a secure mail box and notifying the post office when leaving town so officials can hold deliveries until the occupant returns.

Thieves have recently taken mail from from local boxes, and in one case, have forged and cashed a check, Ross said. "Not only are they in trouble for postal theft, but also for forgery," he added.

Children have been responsible for some of the mail thefts in the past, Ross said, adding that parents should inform their children of "the private and personal nature of mail matter, the serious consequences which may result from violation of the postal laws and take such action as may be necessary to impress upon them the seriousness of molesting or damaging mail or mail boxes."

"The parents are ultimately responsible for their children's actions," he said.

Mail fraud also has been a problem, Ross said. "All too often complaints are received that someone has ordered merchandise, bought a money order, sent it in, it is cashed, then the company leaves town without providing the merchandise," Ross said. "You need to ask yourself when looking at advertisements, if it sounds too good to be true, then it probably is."

Chain letters can be a problem, too, he noted. "If they contain some kind of a death threat or money making scheme, they are illegal," he said, adding any such letter should be sent or taken to the nearest post office so it can be sent to the Inspection Service.

To injure, tear down, destroy or break open a mail box brings a penalty of a fine of $1,000 and three years in prison. Stealing mail is punishable by a prison term of up to five years and a $2,000 fine, Ross said.

HOW WILL YOU FILE THIS YEAR?

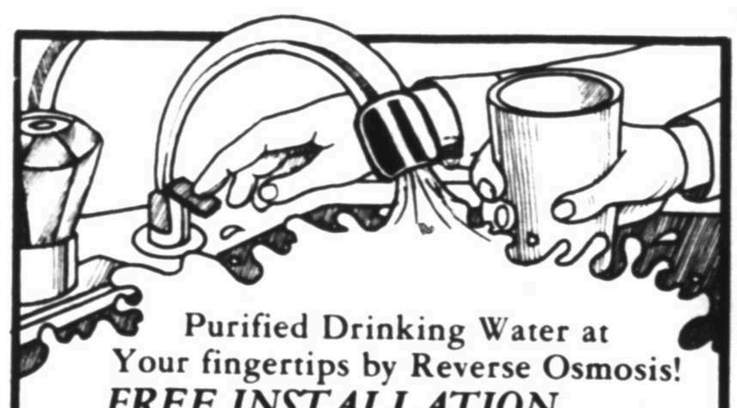

As you start your tax reporting, a basic decision must be made: whether to itemize your expenses or take the standard deduction. Married persons also have to decide whether to file jointly or separately.

Under the new tax law, standard deductions for 1987 tax year have been increased to $2,540 for individuals and $3,760 for couples filing jointly. This is expected to make it easier for more people to take the standard deduction. It's usually wise to total up your deductible expenses and see what's best for you. Homeowners with big mortgage expenses and high tax bills may still find it worthwhile to itemize.

In certain instances, there may be advantages to filing separately -- if, for instance, one partner has high medical expenses that exceed 7½ percent of his or her own adjusted gorss income, but would not meet the floor on their joint income; or if there are casualty losses or miscellaneous expenses that do not exeed the two percent exclusion on a joint return.

Let's pull together again for Jessica

A story that appeared in the Friday edition of The Dallas Morning-News concerning plans to make a movie about the rescue last October of Jessica McClure was, in all honesty, not a realistic account of what is occurring among the little girl's rescuers nor fair to the Midland community as a whole.

Yes, a couple of associations have been formed, each in hopes of negotiating a deal with movie producers who have expressed strong interest in telling the Jessica story and, yes, there are reports of differences of opinion involving members of those two groups. But the claim in The Dallas Morning-News story that "Hollywood came to Midland" and " ... now everybody wants to be a star" simply cannot be substantiated.

It was an unfair depiction of what is happening. There is, after all, only one "star" in the story and that's the little girl who's now known around the world.

Rather, the most accurate response we've seen to the attempt to make a movie about the rescue came Friday from Pete Snelson, spokesman for Jessica's parents, Chip and Cissy McClure, who said:

"If and when a movie is done, they (the McClures) would want the best producer to do the best movie."

That, in itself, would be a tall order as all those who lived through the 58 hours of Jessica's rescue surely realize. It truly was an electric experience — combining back-breaking labor, unrelenting tension, nail-biting hours of waiting and, finally, the moment of achievement millions of people had awaited. And it concentrated worldwide attention on Midland, its values, its character, and its people. The tragic event brought us together in a positive way. Now that character is being questioned, unfairly we believe.

Naturally when this many personalities are involved in an event of this magnitude, there will be differences of opinion about how a movie should tell the story and who should be in the role of producing it. And there will be the potential for friction. In that regard, we urge all the rescuers to work together to smooth out their differences and get on with telling the story in the way it should be told, as it actually happened.

This community pulled together tirelessly to save Jessica's life. It should do the same again to ensure that the best movie possible is produced.

Don't court politics

Early in this century, a widely read political satirist waggishly suggested that U.S. Supreme Court decisions were guided not so much by a study of the Constitution as by a perusal of the national election returns.

If this observation were only minimally true, then Anthony M. Kennedy, the latest appointee to the high court, assumes a difficult role. He takes his seat on the eve of a Presidential election in which anything can happen.

Justice Kennedy joins the court under the hottest glare of publicity ever to harass an appointee. Some of this heat was generated by the fact that he was President Reagan's third choice.

Moreover, Justice Kennedy inherits the pivotal vote once wielded by retired Justice Lewis F. Powell on issues which have left the court — and the country — deeply divided into conservative and liberal factions. Every move that Justice Kennedy makes, therefore, will be subjected to intense scrutiny.

At his swearing-in ceremony, Justice Kennedy affirmed that the Constitution is what makes the U.S. government historically unique and he pledged to honor that document. He should do exactly that instead of trying to appease pressure groups.

Hobby's political fortunes disappear

AUSTIN — Poor Bill Hobby.

In six short months, the lieutenant governor has gone from Texas' strongest public official with the brightest future to an armless and legless political amputee. The change could shift the balance of power among the governor's office, state Senate and House of Representatives next year and have enormous consequences in the critical 1989 legislative session.

Levine

Hobby looked glum, real glum, Super Tuesday night, and with obvious reason. He watched powerlessly as the voters in the 15-county 24th Senate District severed his political right arm.

Fifty-six-point-two percent of the Democratic voters in that Central Texas district that night decided that 16 years of Sen. Grant Jones was enough. His tenure as the powerful chairman of the Senate Finance Committee couldn't overcome the alienation they felt. They chose instead to give the nomination — and, with no Republican in the race, the office — to former state Rep. Temple Dickson of Sweetwater.

Jones, who represented Abilene in the House for eight years before moving to the Senate in 1973, lost to his old House deskmate Dickson for a variety of reasons. One insider in the Dickson campaign lists three:

- He says Dickson "opened a scab" early on by reminding the voters that Jones was an architect of 1987's record $5.7 billion state tax hike and that he had predicted the inevitability of a state income tax.
- He says Dickson hit hard on the Jones-is-out-of-touch-with-his-district theme. The challenger included a picture of Jones' Austin apartment building in a district-wide flyer and forced Jones to campaign hard in the district for the first time since 1972.
- He says Dickson iced the cake with a TV ad Jones calls "a complete distortion." That ad points out that the incumbent supported a controversial new law that permits the state to seize the homestead of Medicaid recipients after they die to recover Medicaid coverage of nursing home care. It didn't point out that every other senator voted for that bill and didn't point out that that section was one small part of the humongous Department of Human Services Sunset bill.

Whatever. Jones lost. While the great mumbler's absence from the Senate may be a victory for reporters in search of an audible quote or for trial lawyers in search of another vote, it's near disaster for Hobby. Since his assension to the chairmanship of the Finance Committee in 1979, Jones has helped Hobby draft and enact the Legislature's most important document: the biennial state appropriations bill.

In and of itself, Hobby can withstand the Jones defeat. But it's not a solitary loss. Just one month earlier, Senate State Affairs Committee Chairman Ray Farabee of Wichita Falls announced his resignation to take a job as legal counsel to the University of Texas System.

If Jones is Hobby's right arm, Farabee is his left one. Together, they shepherded complicated and controversial legislation through the two most powerful committees in the Capitol. Particularly they made sure that Hobby's bills and Hobby's plans made it out of committee.

Finally, add in Hobby's self-inflicted wound. He cut his own political legs out from under himself in July with his announcement that he would run for neither governor nor lieutenant governor in 1990.

All told, the top casualty most likely will be the united front the Senate has displayed against the House and the governors in the recent tumultuous years. With the political strength and lieutenants necessary to enforce order, Hobby brooked little dissent on controversial issues. That unanimity helped Hobby and the Senate win over the sharply divided House and the constitutionally weak governor on the all important issues.

But all that may well change next year as 31 ego-heavy senators seek to carve out their post-Hobby roles in Texas government. With discord in the Senate, the balance of power may well shift toward the House and governor. And that, considering the largely progressive stands Hobby has taken in recent years, could be bad news for Texans.

Poor Bill Hobby. Poor Texas.

U.S. suffering under economic assault

WASHINGTON — The economic tragedy of the 1980s cries out for an inquest. That a catastrophe has occurred, spreading economic devastation and incalculable misery, is hardly subject to dispute. Nor is the cause of our current hardship and future danger difficult to assess. To put it plainly, the United States is losing World War III.

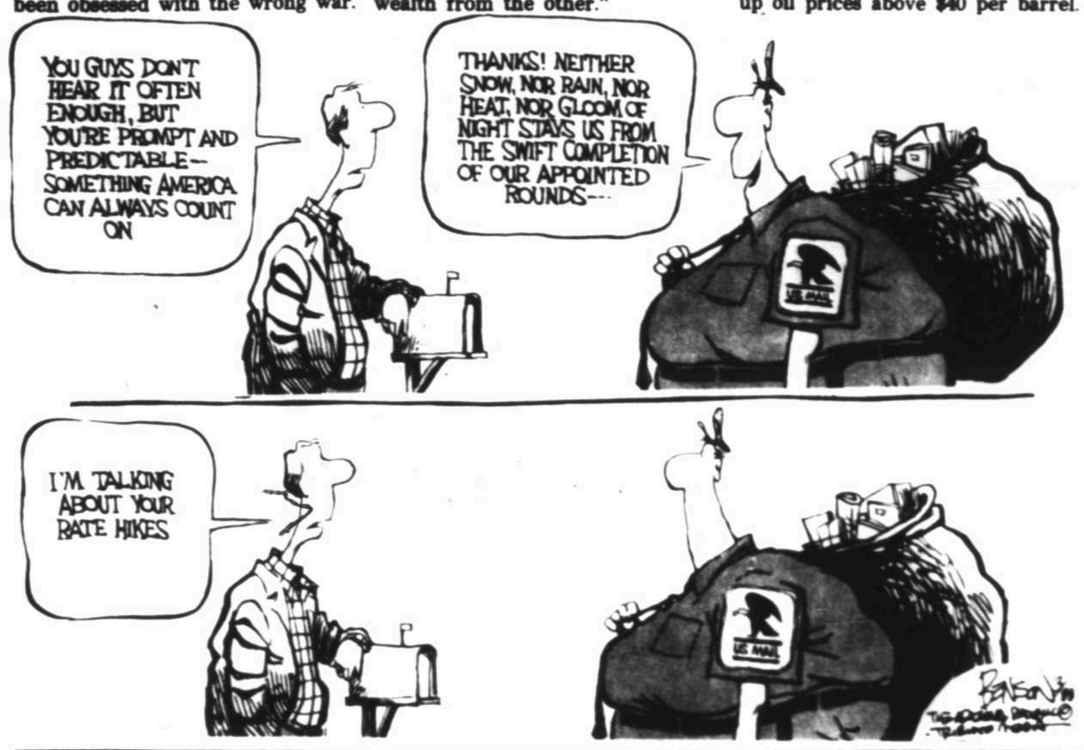

Jack Anderson

For close to half a century, the policy makers in Washington have been obsessed with the wrong war. At a cost of trillions, they have confronted Soviet military power, built up our own armed might and resisted communist political aggression around the world. Yet all the while, they have yielded to economic aggression by Lilliputians.

After all the military expenditures and ideological contentions, the Soviet Union has been brought to terms not by the size of our arsenal, but by its own internal failures. The Kremlin is now pulling back from its foreign adventures and seeking detente with Washington.

The United States has also suffered severe internal damage inflicted by the Lilliputians. Is it overstatement to describe their economic aggression as World War III? Not at all. The Japanese philosopher Honda Rimei in the 18th century defined international trade as "war" in which "each nation seeks to extract wealth from the other."

The Lilliputians have waged a trade war against America that has devastated our steel industry, eroded our automobile industry and destroyed our machine-tool industry. Now our electronics industry is under intense assault. No military attacks have ever resulted in such wreckage.

Who are these vexatious Lilliputians? The first assault on the U.S. money vaults came from oil merchants dressed in Arab burnooses. At one time, the merchants were fearful, weak and helpless. They were powerless before Israel and totally dependent on the United States for defense against the Soviets.

Just 20 years ago, a barrel of crude cost around $3. The wily sheiks, their oil fields bubbling with an overabundance, contrived a "shortage." They tore up existing oil agreements, ignored international law and jacked up oil prices above $40 per barrel.

The reaction in Washington was not to assail the oil cartel, but to support it by declining to rock the boat. The sheiks were at first apprehensive, then astonished, to discover that the United States would not fight back, but would tolerate $44 oil — would beg for it, in fact.

The next Lilliputian offensive came from Japan, a small island nation with sparse natural resources. Just 42 years ago, Japan was defeated, devastated and impoverished. Today the Japanese are producing 10 percent of the world's entire consumer output.

They are wringing wealth from the United States like water from a wet dishrag. Their economic warfare has alarmed the highly secretive National Security Agency, which has intercepted messages concerning their high-level financial transactions and warned the White House that Japan will soon overtake the United States as the world's No. 1 technological power.

The latest Lilliputians to appear ominously on the horizon are small-time drug lords, who have suddenly accrued great wealth and power. They have formed a murderous crime combine, known as the Medellin Cartel, named after the Colombian mountain resort where they hang out.

This cartel supplies 80 percent of the cocaine that is smuggled into the United States. It has become an invisible underworld empire, whose power extends beyond any national boundaries. Its multibillion-dollar operations exceed the annual budgets of most nations.

The Medellin Cartel has corrupted officials and undermined governments from Argentina to the United States. The cartel holds Colombia, Panama and the Bahamas in its grip. Its payroll also includes Cabinet ministers, military commanders, law enforcement officers and judges from Haiti, Honduras and Mexico. It has secret operating agreements with the left-wing governments of Cuba and Suriname.

GEORGE F. WILL

Sgt. Joe Friday wants to help us face facts

WASHINGTON — Exit polling revealed that only 21 percent of the Southerners who voted for Mike Dukakis understood him to be a (shoo the children off to bed; I must use the L-word) liberal. But as a Democratic sage says, voters think two things come from Massachusetts, lobsters and liberals, so Dukakis may be in trouble when voters notice he is not a lobster.

George F. Will

Liberalism (like conservatism, come to think about it) has come to be identified with a certain indifference to reality. So Dukakis' best bet is to stress his serious side. That will require setting aside two themes of his early candidacy.

His candidacy has been based on his identification with "the Massachusetts miracle." No, silly, not Wade Boggs. The supposed miracle is the state's prosperity.

Good governors, he seems to say, can provide prosperity. Given 50 such, we would all be wading around in milk and honey. This is an implied rebuke to the governors (most of them Democrats) of all those states (most states) that are not experiencing "miracles."

Dukakis is in danger of blurring the Democrats' bread-and-butter issue, which is that Republicans are responsible for whatever ails the economy. Now Dukakis is postulating the primacy, or at least the potency, of state governments in delivering prosperity.

Governors can, and perhaps Dukakis did, make a difference in creating a business climate favorable to growth. Competition between states in attracting businesses is a fact of federalism. So it does not discount Dukakis' achievements to say that Massachusetts' prosperity is part of, and not even the most spectacular part of, a regional phenomenon.

He should feel free to promise the moon as President. But it is imprudent of him to say that as governor he personally delivered the moon to Massachusetts.

Another potential problem for Dukakis is that other arrow in his quiver, the one about radically shrinking the deficit by enlarging the IRS enforcement apparatus. The subliminal message of that proposal is that we can cure our fiscal incontinence in a way that will require no one to pay more than their current tax obligation.

This is just another exercise in free-lunchery. As such, it makes for a muzzy Dukakis image.

He has been deftly described (by Joe Klein of New York magazine) as the Sgt. Joe Friday of American politics. Like the detective on the old "Dragnet" television show, Dukakis seems interested only in "the facts, mam." He is not cuddly, but by golly he is (we know because he says so) competent as all get out. But the tax-enforcement proposal matches Reagan and raised him in the panacea department.

The deficit is largely a result of Reagan's panacea, the self-financing tax cut that wasn't — self-financing, that is. The theory was that the cut would be so instantly and powerfully stimulative that economic growth would prevent revenue loss. Thus candidate Reagan said (Flint, Mich., May 17, 1980): "We would use the increased revenues the federal government would get from the tax decrease to build our defense capabilities."

The generic idea behind Republican free-lunchery was — still is? — (in Pat Moynihan's words) "the peculiar proposition that tax cuts, no matter how great, more or less automatically replenish themselves, with no cost to revenue...that any given level of revenue can be obtained at two levels of taxation, one high, one low."

Republican infatuation with this idea produced what Moynihan calls a role reversal. Suddenly Republicans were spouting professors' notions while Democrats grumbled about the inapplicability of airy theories to the real world. That was the Republican contribution to what Moynihan calls "the leakage of reality in American life: our seeming weakness at grasping the probable consequences of what we do or fail to do."

After two terms in opposition, the Democrats' proper role, for which Dukakis sometimes seems to cast himself, is the role of plumber, stopping the leakage. But loose talk about his responsibility for the "Massachusetts miracle" (the economy, not the Red Sox third baseman), and about the tax-enforcement panacea, aggravates the leakage.

There are essentially three ways to win the White House. You can build a broad constituency, brick by brick, over many years. Or you can have a burning issue. Or you can have an enchanting personality (Remember "We like Ike"?)

Dukakis has none of the three. ("We like Mike"?) "Like" is a bit strong for what the voters now feel or what his chilly persona is apt to make them feel. And "we do not find Dukakis altogether disagreeable" is a slogan that somehow lacks zip.

Dukakis can appeal only — "only"? — to the public's sense that some facts need to be faced and that he, Sgt. Friday, will do so. No one ever called Sgt. Friday the L-word.

RUSSELL BAKER

Signing off on a Sunday column says it all

When I told the Editor I just had to get rid of the Sunday Observer, he wept. Blotting his tears, I was touched until he said, "Look, the market's collapsed, I'm under pressure to cut the budget, so there's no way I can raise you more than $2.25 a week."

Russell Baker

The heartless clod. "Don't shed those alligator tears at me," I snarled. "I'm not trying to squeeze a raise out of you. I'm telling you the Sunday Observer is spent, used up, kaput, finished. I'm through."

"Crocodile tears," he interposed. "False tears are crocodile tears, not alligator tears. Also, nobody can snarl a sentence with as few gutterals as the one you just uttered."

"Ever the Editor, aren't you?" I cried.

"And I'm amazed you still use strained expressions like 'he interposed' when you can simply write 'he said.'"

I told him I meant it. No more Sunday Observer.

"O.K.," he said, "I can get you $2.50, but that's tops, so don't think you can keep whining and get me up to $2.75."

"It's all over," I said. "You can offer me $3 a week and the Sunday Observer still won't be brought back to life."

I had dreamed of this moment for almost 15 years, the moment when I would walk into the Editor's office and tell him there would never be another Sunday Observer. I remembered a big shot of years ago at CBS, name of Aubrey, who was said to fire slightly smaller shots by saying "You're finished, Bo," while they were making their presentations, and then when the guy said, "Not quite, Mr. Aubrey, I've still got two more items," Aubrey would say, "I mean you're through, Bo, washed up; clean out your desk."

So I gave it to the Editor, right out of my dreams:

"The Sunday Observer is through. Washed up. His desk cleaned out."

"All right — $2.75," said the editor, "but not one nickel more."

I wanted to cry "You heartless beast!" but stifled the impulse when I realized that it would only make him increase his offer to $2.77½. It would also make me sound like Bette Davis, and he would say: "That gives me a terrific idea! Why not a Sunday Observer on what a Rambo movie would be like if Rambo had been played by Bette Davis instead of Sylvester Stallone?"

So, instead, all I said, sounding like a pretty good John Wayne if I do say so myself was: "Well, Bo, I guess this is goodbye. Maybe we'll run into each other someday in the big press club in the sky."

"My name isn't Bo," he said, adding, "$2.80 — take it or leave it."

That's when I just turned my back to him and walked off into the overset, my heart brimming over with all the things I'd meant to tell him about why I was saying goodbye to the Sunday Observer.

Sardonic, for instance: "Well, Bo, the Sunday Observer first appeared in this space on April Fool's Day of 1973, which means I'll soon have a 15-year-old on my hands if I don't smother it right now. As a man who's already had three 15-year-olds to deal with, I don't propose to put up with a fourth."

Philosophical: "Comes a time in this old life of ours, Bo, when a man ought to know enough to call it quits afore he writes hisself all out and the audience starts asking, 'Why don't they stifle this tiresome old gasbag?'"

Bottom-line-guy analysis: "Fifteen years, more than 700 columns at about 800 words per column, makes about 560,000 words of what was supposed to be inventive prose. Nobody can be that inventive, Bo. If I don't stop trying, my brain will explode or, worse, turn to sponge."

Subtle literary explanation: "Sure, Bo, sure I can go on writing a column in the daily paper for years. But that's because it's written for publication 12 hours later. Anybody can write forever about yesterday's news. Writing for Sunday's, though, that's another ball game because it has to be written three weeks in advance. For two years, the Sunday Observer never referred to "President Nixon" because you couldn't be sure he'd be President three weeks later. So you have to write fiction — and fiction, Bo, is hard, hard, hard."

As I strode toward the horizon, I heard the Editor behind me calling:

"If you're serious about this, use your last piece to tell the readers you're dropping the column and why."

Insulted, "Are you asking me to abandon good taste by talking about myself?" I shouted.

"It'll save me from having to answer a lot of damn fool mail," he yelled.

"Never!" I cried. Then I thought: Why not? Abandoning good taste is one of the things newspapermen do best, and talking about myself is one of my favorite pastimes.

So that's it, I hope.

This is Russell Baker's last "Sunday Observer" column. His regular column will continue to be written for New York Times News Service.

BILL MODISETT

We really need low-key leader who can compromise

Modisett

If Super Tuesday wasn't exactly all you thought it should be, blame our political system. It's the culprit that turns what should be a reasoned approach to determining the best individual to lead the country for the next four years into a madhouse — a "beauty contest," a "horse-race," the bane of existence.

What if we were to do it this way instead? The electorate loves charismatic leaders; orators who can get their blood-pumping and temples sweating with mere words. But what it really needs at this point in history is a low-key leader who can work with international leaders and homegrown members of Congress to mold the future of — you guessed it — the world.

An example: Mikhail Gorbachev has offered a golden opportunity to significantly alter the relationship between the United States and Soviet Union. Gorbachev is no revolutionary; he's not wanting to change the thrust of the Soviet Union, but rather to enhance it via public relations.

In that manner, he's giving the impression of being a sheep in wolf's clothing. He's cagy; he knows you catch more flies with sugar than vinegar. So he's sugar-coating everything.

On another front, conservatives are in a bit of a dither. Ronald Reagan, the great saviour of the conservative cause, is in his final year in the White House and now even the stalwarts must acknowledge however mournfully that even he could not cut out the heart of overspending and put the liberals in their place. So they don't know which way to turn.

Those two examples, and a number more I could cite, cause me to believe that the next president should be a man who can lead the United States much in the same manner in which Gorbachev is leading the Soviet Union. Not in the public relations mold, but rather in the approach of working on a non-confrontational basis to achieve the specified result and on occasion challenging up front old stereotypes about international relations.

Now I'm no fan of Gorbachev, but it seems he has tried to wake up the hierarchy in the Kremlin to the reality that the "old way" hasn't worked and that mindsets need to be changed if the Soviets are to remain competitive in any degree in the world of 1988. He has, in a word, shaken the foundations of communism — and that's not bad from their context or from ours.

We've simply got to b e willing to play the Soviets' game o n the playing field they specify. Or we may wind up finding that th e game has completely changed an d we're still trying to play the old one while they're winning any th e new one.

On the domestic fro nt, the next president needs to be a dept at working inside the bureauc racy and the Congress to obtain th e results he seeks. Ronald Reagan' s presidency has shown that solicitin g the help of the Congress and the public pays handsomely, but confr ontation with Congress is rarely frui tful. For a lot of Americans that thou ght may be a little irritating, but ac commodation is necessary in our hi ghly complex society and a president who is always going his own way may turn around to discover he's leading but nobody is following.

Reagan is a great orator — or "communicator" as the case may be — but Americans don't need an orator now. When he was elected that may be what we needed, since we were coming off Jimmy Carter's term. What we need now is a nuts-and-bolts president who knows how to work within the system to get the job done.

You can bet Gorbachev recognizes that fact and is hoping we don't.

Severely hurt patients get priority treatment

This letter is a reply to Darrell D. Hambright who criticized the waiting period at Midland Memorial Hospital in the Emergency Department on Feb. 21st.

On the particular evening mentioned, the Emergency Department received, almost simultaneously, three critically injured patients from an automobile accident. One adult was severely head-injured and in shock with a lacerated lung, a ruptured diaphragm, and a ruptured spleen. A child was hemorrhaging from a ruptured spleen and also had suffered a small bowel injury. Both of the above patients required emergency surgery. The second adult had multiple fractured ribs overlying his heart, a myocardial contusion, or bruised heart, and a dangerously irregular heartbeat. He also incurred complex, bleeding facial lacerations and required Intensive Care Unit observation. These brief descriptions simply illustrate the extremely urgent and time consuming medical care required by these patients. Simultaneously, we were caring for a patient with chest pain and a suspected heart attack.

In the Emergency Department, patients are necessarily and properly seen in order of the urgency of their medical problems. Patients with life-threatening conditions are treated immediately. Patients with non-life-threatening problems must await their turn. In rare circumstances, such as the above day, our patients have a regrettably long waiting period.

The physicians, nurses, and staff of Midland Memorial Hospital's Emergency Department are committed to providing high quality care to the people of Midland County. To more efficiently manage our increasing patient volume, we are exploring ways to increase the number of Emergency Department exam rooms. We are also developing a more responsive means of providing double physician coverage during periods of increased Emergency Department activity.

Fortunately, days like February 21st are uncommon. When they do occur, be assured that there is ample reason for the wait.

Chip Klunick, M.D.
Co-Director, Emergency Department

Good folks provide solution to problem

Saturday morning, between 9 a.m. and 10 a.m., there was a most commnemdable, heart-warming sight north of the Golf Course and Midkiff intersection. A group of some 12 or more girls (probably between 10 and 12 years old) with reflector vests and three mothers were picking up all kinds of trash.

If only there were more of such good folks! Too bad the always careless, don't care ones are in the big majority and the ones that truly care are sure in the minority.

Windfall Profits Tax endures despite people

A friend of mine in San Antonio called the following to my attention:

Texas has a sitting Vice President, a Speaker of the House of Representatives and Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, a Secretary of the Treasury and a highly articulate and intelligent senator and yet they cannot repeal the Windfall Profits Tax which brings no revenue to the government.

A life would be greater memorial than sculpture

A recent edition of the Reporter-Telegram carried the story of Jim and Joy Cocke's earnest desire to commemorate the "patriotic spirit" of our city during the heart-wrenching rescue of little Jessica. The thought and caring of these two people is commendable, but there is another way to perpetuate the wonderful efforts of our Midlanders.

At this moment, there is a young girl who desperately needs the prayers and contributions of each and every one of us. Heather Prease, only 15 years old, is a victim of Aplastic Anemia, and must have a bone marrow transplant. How can one choose between a piece of sculpture and a human life? What better way to pay tribute to the heart of a city in saving a life than to turn around and help save another one. Nothing is more precious than life.

Vicious dogs should not be running loose!

I am really mad, mad at these big vicious dogs running around loose in our city. Please, please do not let your dog run loose! Did you ever have your beloved little pet attacked by a vicious big dog?

That is exactly what happened to me as I walked my pet, a little Shih Tzu named Jo Chung. Jo Chung and I had walked every day for 10 years and nothing like this had ever happened before.

As we approached the park at Kansas and G streets, a big, vicious, blond dog came bounding out of the park and attacked Jo Chung, grabbing him by the neck. I dared not interfere, I was helpless.

A very brave young man at the park managed to get Jo Chung away from that mad dog and helped me bring my bleeding little pet home. Thanks to the love and attention of my veterinarian, Jo Chung is alive. This could have been your little child or pet: Beware!

I would like to have the name of the young man that so bravely helped me. Maybe he will read this.

Thoughtless act just adds to trashy streets

This letter is for the owner of a late model black Mustang. On March 1st, about 3:30 in the afternoon I was sitting behind you at the intersection of Neely and Midland Drive. You were observed opening the driver's door and placing a large drink cup with straw and half full of ice on the street and then driving off. I am sure that this was a thoughtless act on your part. However, if all of the drivers of all of the autos on Midland Streets did this act of placing trash on the streets once a day we would have close to 20,000 extra pieces of garbage floating around for someone to have to pick up. It would have taken very little effort to leave your trash in your vehicle and discard it at home. Please, everyone, be a little more thoughtful and Help Keep Midland Clean.

PLO's bus attack shows how little it cares about negotiated settlement

Lewis

PARIS — The old children's taunt goes, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words can never hurt me." It applies to Israel, the other way around. It has been the words, and the pictures, of young Palestinians defying the Israeli army after 20 years of occupation, with no end in sight, that are bringing the region to a new sense of urgent crisis.

The Palestinian Liberation Organization's commando attack on a bus in the Negev showed how little it knows about conducting its cause, perhaps even how little it really cares about searching for a settlement. Presumably, the reversion to pointless terrorism was to show that it still has some part to play in channeling the frustration of its people.

Never mind if it strengthens the hand of Israeli hard-liners who are determined never to negotiate "land for peace." Never mind if it reinforces the conviction that only brute might can provide safety within Israel. As long as the PLO can issue boastful communiques and claim that it is leading, it doesn't seem to matter where.

But this is just another incident in the long series that prolongs the painful deadlock. It adds to the difficulties of finding people who can talk about a way out. More and more Israelis were coming to see that it was an illusion to think the status quo could go on indefinately.

It is startling now to hear Israeli doves appealing to the U.S. to pressure their country into seeking peace through compr omise. A.B. Yehoshua, a writer and leader of intellectual protest and a professor at Haifa University, is only one of them. He said this w eek that "If the U.S. really wants p eace, it can put pressure on Israel. It must say that it is not going to let Israel keep the territories."

That is the kind of language that came regularly fron Arabs for nearly 40 years, a lang guage of despair and inability to fa ce the problems. The U.S. can't imp ose a settlement that the people in t he region can live with. It can only h elp them to find an accord if they decide they want it.

Secretary of Sta te George Shultz's plan was a brave b ut probably futile effort to stop th e dithering and oblige moves tow ard a diplomatic confrontation. But Israel is too divided to accept the r isk, and despite its ambiguous words , the PLO hasn't the courage to be left in the rear of its extremists.

Once again, e xtremists on both sides are squeez ing out those who would like to ge t on with life. The Israelis are not leaving themselves people to talk wi th and the Palestinians are becomi ng radicalized.

If it isn't too late, however, the upheaval of Pale stinians in the occupied territories i s creating a new situation that coul d become an opportunity. It strips away the fiction that occupation can go on generation after generation.

Henry Kissin ger has been reported as recomme nding that Israel ban all press and e specially TV cameras from the territ ories, restore order as brutally as nec essary, and then volunteer just wh at land it is willing to cede. On the c ontrary, this approach would only de epen and rigidify the dilemma. To the extent that Israel has suffered — in its own sense of itself and in the outside world — from the way it was putting down unarmed resistance, that is a useful advance toward facing reality.

America can help by making sure the bloody impasse isn't blurred again with polemics and self-delusions. American Jews, in particular, can help by making clear that their support for Israel includes the right to honest criticism, and by listening to those Israelis — apparently a minority, but who can be sure in this time of troubled fear? — who seek security in peace.

There has been so much talk about an international conference and who is to meet with whom to discuss what. These are gimmicks that can be useful in the terribly difficult diplomacy of moving fragmented, frightened and angry societies away from their dead end, assuaging vain politicians.

But they aren't working now. Something else is needed to provide a chance for subtle diplomacy. It is a time when climate and opinion matter, a time when the public in the U.S. and Europe can weigh on the participants, Palestinians as well as Israelis, to see that their hopes have a chance only if they accept the need to share the land.

Too much has been made of the parallels between Israel and South Africa in their domestic travail. Israel is a small country and it is surrounded. It is determined to be a part of the modern, democratic world and it is capable of responding to the simple moral concern of those who wish it well.

The politicians are paralyzed in their wiggles and wangles to avoid facing issues. Now people should speak out on the need to get ahead with making peace.

Super Tuesday provided no real stunning suprises

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Americans are getting a welcome respite this weekend from all the hyperbole and self-generated pressure of the presidential primaries now that Super Tuesday is history. There is more to come, of course, notably the important Illinois balloting this week, but Super Tuesday was the big one for candidates of both parties, the campaign point at which, as the saying goes, the men are separated from the boys.

While this is, in no sense, an attempt to belittle the 1988 Super Tuesday, it must be said that despite all the hoopla, the voting produced no stunning upsets or surprises. The results, in the main, were widely predicted. The day, however, produced some marginal developments which may prove significant, if not in this year's politics, then four years hence.

Taking in, as it did, the presidential nomination preferences of about 40 percent of our states, Super Tuesday obviously provided a consensus of a sizable chunk of America. And that is what makes Vice President George Bush's victory on the Republican side, although anticipated, so impressive in its magnitude. It also proved a terrible blow to Bush's chief adversary, Kansas Sen. Robert Dole.

As last Tuesday's vote approached, the Bush camp, while expressing confidence, cautiously stated it would be happy to capture 400 delegates. He wound up with 578, while Dole, hoping for 100 to 200, could count only 98. It is mystifying how two men equally qualified for the presidency in their own ways could finish so far apart in a sizable section of the country.

While the Republicans, so early in the campaign, appear on the brink of clinching the nomination for Bush, the Democrats, in their traditional fashion, are in a snarl. Super Tuesday gave the party a front-runner in Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, but one who is being seriously challenged — a situation which might conceivably prevail right down to the wire of this summer's national convention.

Nipping at Dukakis' heels are the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who won in five states, and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr., who took six. Both are also fascinating studies.

While many persons look with disfavor on some of the Rev. Jackson's early associations, they are compelled to admit he has come a long way in political sophistication. He has said, and I, for one, believe him, that he is attempting to find a common ground on which he can work with all the elements in his party. That is the name of the political game.

Sen. Gore also demonstrated how fast a candidate can come from behind — with the certain assistance of heavy funding. It will be remembered that Gore disdained the Iowa caucuses as a "roulette game" and declared that those caucuses were no accurate weather vane in the presidential process. That is an opinion with which Sen. Dole, to his dismay, must now agree.

Inasmuch as Super Tuesday was conducted through much of the South, it brought into focus the astounding changes which have taken place in the political environment of that section of the country. Population shifts — the transplantation of many Northerners to Florida and the growth of the Hispanic voice in Texas — have made the South as big a question mark as the American West.

Getting back to the Bush triumph, I was greatly interested in the findings from broadly based exit polls conducted by the media. These tended to prove that while Republicans are convinced Vice President Bush's experience eminently qualifies him for the presidency, they were influenced as well by his long, working partnership with one of the most popular chief executives this country has ever had — Ronald Reagan.

Sen. Dole was often at odds with President Reagan, while Bush's support of White House policies has been unwavering. Most of the voters polled after after leaving their precincts indicated they were happy with the state of the economy and were confident that with Bush at the helm, nobody will be rocking the boat.

No surprise there, either.

Keep Midland Beautiful ready to 'get Glad' in anti-litter effort

From Staff Reports

Glad Wrap and Bags is teaming with Keep Midland Beautiful, formerly Clean Midland, to stage a Glad Bag-A-Thon on Saturday, April 23.

More than 500 volunteers are expected to clean up a winter's worth of litter in Midland beginning at 8:30 a.m. Prizes, donated by local businesses, will be awarded to teams and individuals who participate.

"We're proud to be a Glad Bag-A-Thon city," said Doug Palmer, Glad Bag-A-Thon coordinator. "Midland has already made good progress in the fight against litter. This battle, however, can't be won in a single day, month, or even a year. It's a matter of changing people's attitudes. Our Glad Bag-A-Thon will help illustrate litter's negative effect on the environment, give Midland a chance to clean up our beautiful city and provide volunteers with productive fun."

Hundreds of volunteers from neighborhood organizations, public schools, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, church and civic groups are expected to be involved in the clean-up.

To assist their efforts, Glad Wrap and Bags is supplying thousands of free Hand-le-Tie Trash Bags for the event, painter's caps for participants, posters, banners and other prizes.

Once volunteers collect the litter, the filled trash bags will be taken to Midland High School for transport to proper disposal sites. Facilities for recycling materials will also be available.

Keep Midland Beautiful has issued a "call to action" to all residents to help keep their city and county clean by supporting and joining the project.

For additional information, interested groups or individuals should call 68-CLEAN.

Glad Bag-A-Thons, sponsored in conjunction with Keep America Beautiful, Inc., are being held in 50 cities around the country in April and May.

YMCA offers scuba diving certification

From Staff Reports

The Midland Central YMCA will be offering two evening sessions in scuba diving for open water certification.

The sessions will be headed by Florence S. Hughes, a certified SSI (Scuba Schools International) instructor.

Registration must be made in advance and classes are limited to six students. There must be at least four students for the class to take place.

Classes are to be on Monday and Wednesday, 6:30 to 9 p.m., at the Central YMCA. The student must provide his own mask, fins, snorkal, wet boots and two passport-sized photographs.

Information on the specifications for these items will be provided at the first session.

The classes are $225, which includes all manuals, certification card and other gear necessary.

The first session will meet March 21, 23, 28, 30 and April 4, 6.

Following those classroom and pool lessons, the first session will meet in Balmorhea for its certification dives April 16 and 17.

The second session will meet April 18, 20, 25, 27 and May 2, 4.

Following those classroom and pool lessons, the second session will meet in Balmorhea for its certification dives May 14 and 15.

The student is responsible for the expenses incurred on the Balmorhea trip.

For additional information, call the Central YMCA at 682-2551.

Changes in sentencing promoted

AUSTIN (AP) — Sweeping changes in the amount of prison time a Texas criminal could receive have been recommended by the chairman of the House Select Committee on Sentencing and Recidivism.

Rep. Al Granoff, D-Dallas, also recommended revising the state's probation system in a plan presented during a Friday meeting of the committee, which is to make recommendations to the 1989 Legislature.

The proposed plan, which Granoff stressed was a starting point for debate, would increase the minimum sentence for the most serious crimes but reduce the potential prison time facing many other defendants.

A key part of the proposal would greatly increase the range of options available to judges in trying to control and rehabilitate people on probation.

Judges and probation officers would get more leeway in increasing sanctions against people who violate probation, and more probationers would be under intensive supervision.

The overall effect would be to use prison space more for serious violent offenders, and provide more community-based alternatives for property offenders.

"I think we need a complete overhaul of our criminal justice system," Granoff said.

"We really don't have a logical system, and the criminals know we don't have a logical system. There are a lot of crimes because the criminals know the system is a mess," he said.

His proposal would change the current three-tier set of felonies into a five-tier system.

A first-degree felony, including crimes ranging from murder to burglary of a residence, currently has a range of punishment from five years to life in prison.

A third-degree felony, which includes involuntary manslaughter and burglary of a vehicle, has a range of two to 10 years in prison.

Proposed changes would include turning most third-degree felonies into fifth-degree crimes, with a punishment range of one to five years. The most serious crimes under the proposed system would have a range of 20 to 60 years.

Granoff also proposed increasing fines for most crimes, with provisions that they be based on ability to pay. He recommended allowing the seizure of property of those who refuse to pay fines.

The probation proposal would require that all probationers begin their term under intensive supervision. It would allow a judge to release the offender from probation at any time during the term, if the probationer was abiding by the rules.

Jaycees to honor young farmer

The Midland Jaycees will honor the area's Outstanding Young Farmer Friday on Farmer Appreciation Day.

The award will be presented at a noon luncheon Friday to be held in the Midland Center, 105 N. Main. Cost will be $6, payable at the door.

Luis Mata, district supervisor of the Texas Department of Agriculture, will deliver a brief speech, entitled, "The Right to Know."

The recipient must be between the ages of 21 and 40, not turning 41 before Jan. 1, 1989. Fifty percent or more of his income must come from farming and/or ranching.

Selection will be based on the progress since entering agriculture, his soil and water conservation practices and contributions to the area, state and nation.

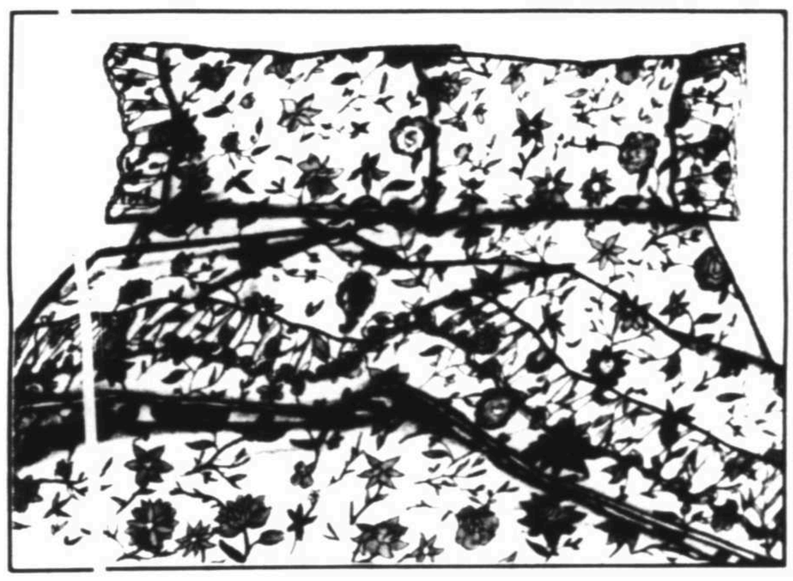

The Outstanding Young Farmer program has been conducted nationally by the United States Jaycees for the past 33 years. The program is designed to promote a better understanding of the problems and achievements of farmers and ranchers in America.

This is the third year for the Midland Jaycees to present the award being sponsored nationally by Deere and Company, manufacturers of John Deere farm implements and equipment and locally by dealer Cave-Bowlin, Inc., Midland Co-Op, Clayton Williams Jr. Companies, Midland Farm Bureau and Midland Sixty-Six Oil Co. Inc.

Local teams in academic decathlon

Academic Decathlon Teams from Midland and Lee High Schools competed in The Texas Academic Decathlon held recently in Lubbock.

Lee finished third in the event, while Midland High finished eighth.

Odessa High won first place in the Top Overall Team category, with Permian High garnering second place.

Medal winners for Midland High included: Trish Humes, bronze medal varsity division — economics, and Lori McWilliams, gold medal varsity division — essay.

Members of the Midland High Team are Lorrie Wilson, Lori McWilliams, Trish Humes, Joe Smith, Sara Melba Candice White, Reagan Whitting, Paul Coody and Nikki Howard.

Medal winners from Lee High included: Will Reinert, silver medal varsity division — math, Richard Chen, silver medal scholastic division — math, bronze medal scholastic division — essay, Kevin Appling, gold medal honors division — science, bronze medal honors division — economics, Jennifer Downward, gold medal honors division — essay, bronze medal honors division — social science, Steve Welborn, gold medal scholastic division — math, Staci Glenn, bronze medal honors division — essay, silver medal honors division — economics, Leslie Cathey, silver medal varsity division — essay.

Members of the Lee High School Team are Will Reinert, Richard Chen, Kevin Appling, Jennifer Downward, Steve Welborn, Staci Glenn, Leslie Cathey, Debbie del Llano, Tamala Davis, Lisa Schwamkrug, and David Sites.

Students from 17 West Texas high schools competed in the competition. Hosted by Lubbock Independent School District, about 150 people attended the final phase of the competition at Estacado High School.

The final phase was a Super Quiz with questions and timed answers on the history of flight. The 10-event decathlon is a step on the way to scholarships and further competition at state and national levels.

Each school competing has nine members who make up A, B and C teams. The top two scores from each of the 10 events in which the teams compete are used to tally final scores. The tests are taken from information found in World Book Encyclopedia, and involve written essays, interviews, impromptu speeches and the quiz.

Training for the decathlon requires dedication and a willingness by students to study many extra hours. They need to be competitive and willing to sacrifice to succeed in the competition. Good academic background and test-taking ability are other prerequisites necessary in the decathlon.

A free seminar for employees is being held on Saturday, March 26, at Midland College. It's designed to help both employed and unemployed workers learn more about their rights, opportunities, benefits, and services available.

The workshop will be from 9 a.m.-12 noon in Room 104 of the Occupational-Technical Building. Sponsors are the Midland Economic Development Center and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council's Employment and Training Program.

To register, or learn more about the workshop, call the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, the Midland Chamber of Commerce, or the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. You can call Midland College, 685-4657, when it reopens.

Two events are booked into Chaparral Center this week. The Fraternal Order of Eagles is presenting Circus Gatti for two performances on Monday, one at 4 p.m. and another at 7 p.m.

Booked in very quickly was a rock concert by BTO, with "The Guess Who." For you older folks (of which I'm one) the latter isn't a question, but a group. The concert is slated for Saturday, March 19, at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets for the concert are $10.50 each, with no reserved seating.

The tickets may be purchased at Chap Center or Endless Horizons.

Larry Griffin, instructor in English and poetry, attended the Texas Cowboy Poetry Gathering at Sul Ross last weekend. He's also going to attend the Philological Association of Louisiana meeting in New Orleans to read selections from his latest poetry manuscript One Earth, One Moon: Poems of the Territory, and to present his new short story "The Two-Pfenning Yellow Rose," which has been accepted for publication.

Griffin utilizes a drawing of the griffin, that mythical monster with the head and wings of an eagle on the body of a lion, on his informal letterhead, along with Webster's definition of the critter.

Youths nominated to service academies

From Staff Reports

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Houston, announced this week he has nominated two Midland-area residents to the United States's service academies.

They are:

— Keith Macaulay Beck of Midland to the U.S. Naval Academy. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Barry N. Beck, 4309 Arroyo Drive, and is a student at Midland High School.

— Roberto Loya Martinez of Kermit to the U.S. Military Academy. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Martinez, 119 West Campbell, and a student at Kermit High School.

"Service in our country's armed forces is an honorable calling, and students who train in our nation's military academies for officer's rank are among our brightest and best," Bentsen said.

"The people of Kermit and Midland can be proud of their nominees for appointments to our nation's service academies," he added.

Bentsen can fill one appointment this year to the U.S. Air Force Academy, U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, U.S. Military Academy and U.S. Naval Academy.

Up to 10 nominations are made for each appointment.

Officials at the academies make the final selections.

"Candidates not chosen as principal nominees are placed in a pool of qualified alternates and can be appointed, according to merit, to bring the academies to authorized strength," according to a press release distributed by Bentsen's Washington office.

Bentsen chose the Midland-area residents from a field of more than 1,500 young Texans seeking nominations to the Class of 1992 at the U.S. service academies.

Smoking declines

According to figures released June 7, 1984, by The National Center for Disease Control, the number of U.S. smokers declined from 42 percent to 33 percent between 1963 and 1978.

Midland College represented at communications seminar

From Staff Reports

Tyler Tindall of Midland College was among 50 college and public school administrators and teachers, state legislators and leaders of educational organizations in Texas participating in a symposium sponsored by Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos.

The symposium, "Communication Issues in Educational Settings," was designed to increase awareness of issues in speech communication education across the state, provide an opportunity for dialogue between college and public school administrators and teachers concerning communication problems in educational settings and generate new ideas for instructional techniques to enhance speech communication education.

Five task forces included in the symposium were Administrator-Teacher Communication, Communication and Basic Skills, Student Motivation, Speech Communication Curriculum and Community-School Communication.

Tindall was facilitator for the task force on Community-School Communication.

Owners of small businesses urged to attend upcoming clinic at MC

From Staff Reports

A two-night Small Business Clinic at Midland College on "Financial Management" begins Monday, March 21. It's the second of three clinics scheduled to assist owners and managers of small businesses.

This session will meet March 21 and 28 from 7-9 p.m. in Room 106 of the Allison Fine Arts Building.

There will be instruction on setting up a good bookkeeping system, tax planning, budgeting, knowing when to see an accountant, refinancing and restructuring of debt.

The computer lab will be available for those wishing to work with contract bidding software.

The fee is $10 for the two nights. Those wishing to register should obtain an enrollment form from the Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, Midland College, Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Midland Chamber of Commerce or the Small Business Administration. Enrollments also will be accepted at the door.

The third clinic is scheduled for April 11, 18, and 25 on Marketing.

Houston mayor appoints Lanier as Metro chairman

HOUSTON (AP) — Robert C. Lanier, former chairman of the Texas Highway Commission, said he has agreed to serve as Houston Metropolitan Transit Authority chairman.

Lanier was offered the post by Mayor Kathy Whitmire earlier this week. The mayor appoints five members of the nine-member board and also can designate the chairman.

Lanier said Friday his chief priority will be to move toward implementation of Metro's $2.57 billion long-range plan that includes a rail system.

"My notion afer getting my feet on the ground is to head into getting this plan done. I'd like to see construction start as quickly as possible," Lanier said.

Clintine Cashion, an aide to Mrs. Whitmire, confirmed Lanier is the mayor's choice to replace outgoing MTA Chairman John J. King, whose term expires March 26.

King has told the mayor he did not want to be reappointed to the board.

Ms. Cashion said Mrs. Whitmire will submit Lanier's nomination to the City Council for confirmation next week. A council vote probably will come this month.

Lanier was one of the key players last year in building a consensus in the business community for Metro's $2.57 billion long-range plan. The plan, which includes massive street improvements, transitway development, bus replacement and rail development, won voter approval on Jan. 16.

In working for that consensus, Lanier pushed for using revenues from Metro's one percent sales tax for major road and street improvements, since there are more taxpayers who use the major thoroughfares than ride buses.

Metro's plan earmarks 25 percent of Metro's sales tax revenues, about $560 million over 13 years, to street and road projects.

Lanier served as chairman of the highway commission for four years after being coaxed out of semi-retirement in 1983 by then Gov. Mark White.

More than 142 students, displaying 118 projects, in grades 3-6 from Midland's 22 elementary schools participated in the fifth annual fair.

High school students from each secondary school displayed projects at the district fair. The seven secondary schools filled eighteen tables with exhibits and working demonstrations.

The purpose of the fair was threefold; to stimulate in young people an active interest in science; to provide an educational experience through exposure to the judges and the public; and to give the public a chance to experience some of the products of MISD classroom instruction.

The students were to select an area of interest, state a hypothesis and design an experiment to prove the hypothesis.

The projects were designed and constructed by the students.

Judging was based on the use of the scientific method to prove the hypothesis, evidence of research and experimental records, and the student interviews.

UNICEF envoy Audrey Hepburn to visit famine-ravaged Ethiopia

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Actress Audrey Hepburn will trek to famine-ravaged regions of Ethiopia to survey conditions there as she carries out her duties as a newly appointed UNICEF special ambassador.

The United Nations said Miss Hepburn will leave Monday on the four-day visit, which will include stops at relief and rehabilitation centers in the hardest-hit provinces of Tigray and Eritrea. The trip ends Thursday at development projects in central Shoa province, according to UNICEF.

Total and near-total crop failures last year threaten an estimated 7 million people with famine in northern Ethiopia, where fighting between rebels and the nation's Marxist government has hampered relief efforts.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A country music buff is hoping readers will go gaga over his new book featuring baby pictures of more than 150 country music stars, including Glen Campbell, Willie Nelson, Naomi and Wynonna Judd, Dolly Parton, Ronnie Milsap and the Oak Ridge Boys.

Paul Randall, a radio personality, gathered the photos for his book, "Baby Photos of the Country Stars," which also includes current pictures of the performers and trivia questions about their careers.

Randall is a former publicist for RCA Records in Nashville and has written two previous books, "Facts, Fallacies and Folklore" and "Country Music Quizzes."

ATLANTA (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter is joining health officials in a campaign to eradicate guinea worm disease, a crippling parasitic affliction that plagues millions of Africans and Asians.

Carter will travel to Africa this week on a six-day, three-nation visit to bolster efforts to wipe out the guinea worm, which strikes 10 million people a year in developing countries.

The World Health Organization voted in 1986 to make guinea worm disease the next target for global eradication, following the successful eradication of smallpox 11 years ago.

Traveling with Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, will be Carter Presidential Center Executive Director William Foege, who led the smallpox effort while at the Centers for Disease Control. Also in the party will be several staff members from the center and Global 2000, a policy institute under the auspices of the Carter Center.

Guinea worms can grow to lengths of nearly 3 feet inside the body. They do not themselves cause a fatal disease, but the painful sores created when they break through skin can be crippling. Their larvae are spread through contaminated drinking water.

Fighting the disease involves improvements in water supply, which can be costly for developing countries.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The image of country music singer Loretta Lynn, "the coal miner's daughter," now has been immortalized in oil as well as celluloid.

Artist Wayne Hart has finished the first two of six oil paintings of the singer. One, entitled "The Beginning of the Legend," depicts the singer holding a rose. The second, called "Memories of a Coal Miner's Daughter," shows a coal car and its track.

The remaining four will be completed during the next two years, said Miss Lynn, who was born and raised in Kentucky mining area.

Her autobiography was made into a 1980 movie, "Coal Miner's Daughter," starring Sissy Spacek, who won an Academy Award as best actress. Miss Lynn's hits include "When the Tingle Becomes a Chill" and "You're Looking at Country."

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnamese Premier Pham Hung, who helped direct the defeat of the United States in the Vietnam War, died Thursday of a heart attack at age 75.

Hung was a member of the "old guard," a small group of revolutionaries who took up radical politics in their teens. After the French defeat at Dien Bien Phu in 1954, Hung rose rapidly in party and government ranks.

He served in key roles in the 1960-75 war against the U.S.-backed government of South Vietnam, including being named the political commissar of the Ho Chi Minh Campaign, the final North Vietnamese offensive that climaxed with the capture of Saigon in April 1975.

In 1986 he moved up to the No. 2 slot in the party Politburo. In 1987, he was replaced as interior minister in a major government reshuffle, but that June, he was named to replace Pham Van Dong, who had been premier since 1955.

SEATTLE (AP) — The Rev. Jamie Mock-Robbins, an early leader in the sanctuary movement to aid Central American refugees, died Thursday at age 32.

Mock-Robbins, co-pastor of University Baptist Church, had been battling cancer since October.

In 1982, his church became the first in the Pacfic Northwest to declare itself a sanctuary for refugees fleeing persecution in Central America. About 50 refugees have been sheltered at the church.

Mock-Robbins also was known in Central America, where he spent much of the past four years working with schools and churches. He organized relief in 1986 for victims of the San Salvador earthquake, which left about 1,000 people dead and hundreds of thousands injured and homeless.

• • •

LA MESA, Calif. (AP) — Richard Croxton Adams, who helped make life easier for painters when he invented the paint roller 48 years ago, died Wednesday at age 76.

Adams, a descendant of Presidents John Adams and John Quincy Adams, suffered a stroke last week, family members said.

An engineer, industrialist and civic leader, Adams held the first patent on the paint roller. He developed it in his basement workshop in 1940 while working for Sherwin-Williams Paint Co. The invention was spurred by a shortage of paint brushes caused by World War II.

WARWICK, R.I. (AP) — Steve Mills, one of the last of the great vaudeville comedians who worked with the Shubert organization in the 1930s and 1940s, died Wednesday at age 92.

Mills, who last appeared on stage in 1977 in the show "This Was Burlesque," began his career at 14, when he played Amateur Night with Fred Allen and Benny Rubin in his home town of Boston. In 1924, he performed in Billy Gilbert's "Whiz Bang Babies" and was lead comedian for the first time in 1926 in "Miss Tabasco." After signing with the Shubert organization in the early 1930s, Mills appeared in "Three Little Girls," "No, No, Nannette" and "Prince of Pilsen."

Immigration law's effects still a mystery

By PETER APPLEBOME
New York Times News Service

HOUSTON — It was called a corpse that would not die, the immigration legislation that finally became law in 1986 after a year-to-year congressional marathon.

Sixteen months later, as the nation enters the final two months of the largest amnesty program for illegal aliens in history, it is clear that the marathon has only begun. Born in tortuous compromise, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 remains a patchwork and its long-term effects remain an utter mystery.

Critics and proponents agree the law's effectiveness will be dictated by economics, politics and enforcement decisions in the United States and by the political and economic stability of Latin America. With so many variables, the critics say, the law may eventually become almost irrelevant. Even supporters say any expectations of a quick immigration fix are wildly inappropriate.

"The immigration law isn't a Cadillac, but at least it's a car," said Patrick Burns, assistant director of the Federation for American Immigration Reform, which advocates generally restrictive policies. Just as illegal immigration rose over 20 years, he said, "it will take time for us to regain control of our borders."

The law attempts to curb illegal immigration while offering amnesty to aliens who have lived here long enough to develop a stake in the United States — those who can prove residence since Jan. 1, 1982. It includes penalties for employers of illegal aliens and stepped-up border enforcement.

The amnesty program has been more successful than some critics expected; they give the immigration service high marks for overcoming many aliens' historic fear of all the works and ways of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Still, turnout is well below expectations. The INS planned for 2 million general amnesty applicants, perhaps as many as 3.9 million; officials now say they expect about 1.35 million by the May 4 deadline.

There are no reliable figures for the illegal population — estimates range from 3 million to well over 5 million — so it's impossible to be sure what percentage of eligible aliens have applied. But because of the restricted eligibility period, it is clear the law will not come close to removing the illegal subclass from the nation's workforce. Some demographers estimate that for every illegal alien who wins amnesty, two will stay illegal.

Even as some aliens come from the shadows, the effect will be a more desperate, exploitable alien subculture, critics say.

"The potential is they will become a new underclass," said Cecilia Munoz, project director for the legalization program of Catholic Charities in Chicago. "They will not go home because this is their home. If they came from Mexico because there is no work in Mexico, there still is no work in Mexico."

Besides, critics say it is folly to believe unilateral reforms will deter people fleeing widespread poverty in Latin America, and war in several nations.

"The law deals with some of the pull factors; it does not deal with the push factors," said Roberta Johnson, an immigration caseworker with Catholic Charities in Dallas.

Border Patrol figures show a dramatic drop in apprehensions of aliens along the nation's southern border since the law went into effect.

But a study of the law's first year by David S. North for the Center for Immigration Studies found the impact diminished with time. In the first two months of this year, 210,352 illegal entrants were caught, against 190,833 in the same period last year.

There are even fewer ways to assess the success of the employer sanctions. Analysts say there seems to be a good deal of voluntary compliance thus far. But similar programs have had mixed results in other countries, with some relative successes and numerous failures.

Already there are proposals to alter the law. Congress will soon consider extending the amnesty period for a year to increase turnout. Some have called for expanding the applicant pool to include people who came after Jan. 1, 1982.

Dr. David Reimers, a history professor at New York University who specializes in immigration, said the United States has shown the ability to alter its immigration flow drastically in the past when it saw a need.

Two hitchhikers freed in probe of killings

HOPE, Ark. (AP) — One of two men freed after being arrested during an investigation of four slayings said he was afraid he would die or be imprisoned.

Thomas A. Dickens, 27, of Stockton, Calif., and Harley Leon Brown, 20, of Clinton, Ind., were arrested Wednesday at Muskogee, Okla., because they matched descriptions of suspects in the slayings of Kenneth Olden, 34, of Saratoga, Ark., and three people in Texas.

The two men had been held in the Hempstead County Jail at Hope, and were released Friday after passing lie detector tests. Their hair samples and fingerprints also did not match those held as evidence by police, according to Prosecuting Attorney Jim Hudson Jr.

Hudson said a Missouri man who reported having a run-in with the apparent killers the night of the Arkansas murder was unable Friday to identify the two men in custody as the men he clashed with earlier in the week.

Hudson declined to comment on whether authorities have leads on other suspects, but said no other suspects were in custody.

"We were picked up for something we didn't do," Brown said Saturday. "They actually scared me. I thought I was going to die or they were going to put me in the penitentiary."

Dickens said "I don't have any hard feelings about it. We fit the description. What can you do?"

"These guys are clean, but the investigation is still going on," said Hudson. "It's just as much a part of our job to let the innocent go."

The men, meeting with reporters after being released, said they were unemployed construction workers who met about three weeks ago at Dallas and were hitchhiking to Terre Haute, Ind., to look for work. They said they had heard about the slayings about an hour and a half before they were arrested.

The state gave the two men bus tickets to continue to Terre Haute, where Brown's mother lives.

"I just want to hug my mother," Brown said.

Chuck Honey, of Prescott, one of their court-appointed attorneys, said he advised the men of their right to file a civil rights suit, but "I think they're just glad to get away."

Dickens said he wouldn't sue.

The slayings that led to the arrest of the two men began Monday morning when the body of Deana Andrews Woodard, 23, was found in her mobile home near Gainesville on Monday. A bloody hatchet was found nearby.

Ms. Woodward's car was stolen and driven 50 miles southeast to Farmersville, Texas. There, Cecil Floyd Morrison, 85, and his son, Cecil Leonard Morrison, 65, were beaten with a tire tool and a club. The elder Morrison was also shot in the back of the head and his son had been shot in the face. Both men were killed.

A truck belonging to the younger Morrison was taken and driven 200 miles to Arkansas where Olden was killed and his car stolen.

Morrison's pickup truck was found later in Lake Millwood in southwestern Arkansas, and officers said a presciption of Ms. Woodard's was found in the vehicle.

Olden's body was dumped along a road after he had been shot three times. His car was found later Tuesday in a lake near Marietta, Okla.

Farmworkers' president Chavez attends hotel union rally

EL PASO (AP) — United Farmworkers President Cesar Chavez told hotel workers at a rally Friday night they will beat a union decertification vote.

Chavez, who gained notoriety by organizing grape-pickers and other farmworkers, said the Airport Hilton will lose respect, and with it, business, if Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Local 628 loses a decertification vote March 22.

But he said decertification won't happen if union members make sure they vote.

"We will always fight and we will always win," he told about 120 union members at a rally near the hotel. "We are sure of victory. The cause at the Hilton, the cause of the campesinos, all are about the rights of the workers."

About two-thirds of the hotel's roughly 150 employees are union supporters, officials said. The Hilton is the only unionized hotel in El Paso and one of two in the state.

Chavez and the unionists marched two blocks to the hotel and deposited mock ballots in a large box across the street from the hotel lobby as a show of solidarity. They carried signs bearing messages such as, "We're Voting Yes" and "Hilton Pay Us!"

Most of the hotel workers earn little over the minimum wage, union officials said.

Figures showing drop in drug abuse called misleading

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Recently released federal figures showing a sudden drop in drug abuse among young people are misleading and erroneous, a White House drug-abuse consultant said.

"What we are seeing on the streets and on police blotters is far different," Flavia Walton said Friday at a drug-abuse conference here.

"Most of the data (in the federal figures) is based on surveys of high school seniors, and it misses the dropouts," said Walton, drug-prevention specialist for the White House Conference for a Drug Free America.

Walton said high school dropouts were among the most susceptible to drug addiction.

She said dropouts were not included in the 1987 high school senior survey done by the National Institute of Drug Abuse. It revealed drops of 4 percent in marijuana use and 2 percent in cocaine use among 12th-graders during the past two years.

U.S. Attorney Helen Eversberg, another featured speaker at the conference, said substance abuse has touched everyone — including herself.

"My own mother, who was 48 when she died, experienced difficulty with alcohol and pills," she said in an interview. "She was a loving, brilliant woman and the wife of a doctor."

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1988 Regional Spelling Bee March 26 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

am-ne´zhə

amnesia — (noun) When someone has a severe loss of memory, he or she is said to have "amnesia." The word comes from the ancient Greek "a" meaning "not," and "mnasthai," meaning "to remember." Amnesia may result from physical damage to the brain through injury or sickness, or from psychological causes, such as a person subconsciously erasing a terrible event from memory. If you are in a spelling bee and forget a word you know well, you might be suffering from temporary "amnesia."

NEWSPAPER CARRIERS

Well, there's Cooper, then all the rest

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Sports Writer

The 1988 District 4-5A baseball race looks a little like the Republican race for the presidency: There's a frontrunner. And then there's everybody else.

If teams were candidates, Abilene Cooper would be George Bush. The returning state 5A champions are the clear choice of all the coaches in the district to again take top league honors. But this year there are several teams that could run hot on the heels of Cooper.

Midland High and Abilene High are both improved and Permian, despite losing some experience at key positions, always lingers on the horizon.

MIDLAND HIGH BULLDOGS

Playing consistent, error free baseball is the key for the Bulldogs if they hope to improve on last season's 13-14 overall record. Although they were hampered by miscues in a loss to Lubbock Monterey last week, Coach Tim Whalen sights his defense as the district's best.

The Bulldogs hit .305 as a team in 1987, fourth best in the league. Midland's early season troubles have been found thus far in the team's performance at the plate.

Whalen hopes centerfielder Tony Perez can repeat the success he had at the plate in 1987 when he hit .432, fourth best at season's end. MHS will probably again be subject to a power outage. The team clubbed only eight home runs in '87, with only four in the 12 game district schedule.

1987 Numbers: 13-14 overall, 6-6 in district, tie for third, six games out of first.

This season's strengths: Pitching, defense, some depth.

Weaknesses: speed, hitting.

Starting pitchers: Eric Boyt, Sr., RHP; Joe Rendon, Sr., RHP; Kevin Rychell, Jr., RHP; Sam Sowders, Sr., RHP.

Probable defensive starters: Scott Mowles, senior, C; Kyle Lusby, Sr., or David Danley, Sr., 1B; Jason Stone, Soph., 2B; Dorey Thompson, Jr., Rendon or Boyt, 3B; Jamie Surratt, Sr. SS; Russell Page, Kevin Rychell or Thompson, LF/RF; Tony Perez, Jr., CF.

Lady Horns win sixth SWC title

DALLAS (AP) — Doreatha Conwell scored 24 points and was chosen the tournament's outstanding player as Texas routed Texas Tech 88-61 in the final of the Southwest Conference Post-Season Classic Saturday.

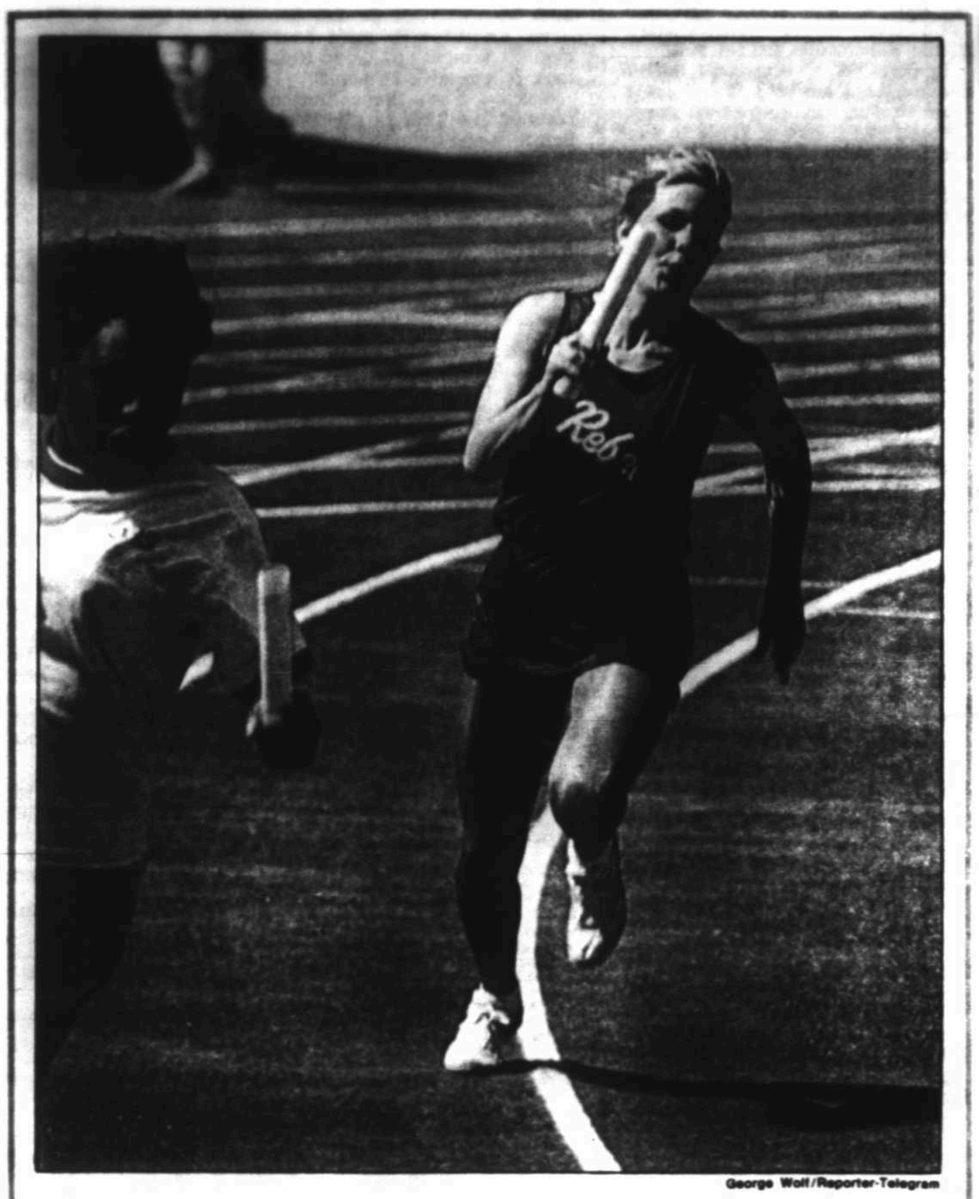

The Lady Longhorns won their sixth consecutive SWC title and an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament, improving to 17-0 in the conference and 30-2 overall.

With the win, Texas Coach Jody Conradt notched her 500th collegiate win, becoming only the second women's basketball coach to reach that milestone. Bob Spencer of Fresno State won his 500th earlier this month.

Tech ended its season at 11-8 in the SWC and 17-13 overall.

Beverly Williams had 19, C.J. Jones had 18, Yulonda Wimbish added 10 and Ellen Bayer came off the bench to score 10.

Stacey Siebert and Ware each had 12 points for the Raiders, and Darla Isaacks had 10 off the bench.

Midland Lee's Carrie Roach rounds the first turn in the girls 400-meter relay during the West Texas Relays at Odessa Saturday.

Mojo rules WT Relays

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — If Old Mojo, whoever that really is, had been kinder to Odessa Permian on Friday night, Odessa Permian would have won three titles at the West Texas Relays Saturday at Ratliff Stadium.

But don't spill any tears for Permian. It won the girls division and 3A division, but came up less than 11 points short of winning the 5A division after losing its sprint relay team to disqualification in the prelims Friday.

That left the door open for San Angelo to end the two-week victory streak of the Panthers as the Bobcats won by a 79-68.6 point margin.

We can all be thankful, however. If Permian had won the 5A division, next year the Panthers would figure out a way to enter the 4A division. That title this year went back to Lubbock Estacado, who outdistanced townmate Lubbock Dunbar by a 115-105 margin.

MIDLAND LEE finished fourth with 48 points and that was about as good as could be hoped for with Jimmy Fennell missing the meet due to an injured thigh. Midland High ended with 26.6 points with only Olan Burnett placing fifth in the 400 and the 400 relay gaining a fourth on Saturday.

Lee couldn't find the gold, but placed second four times. David Parkerson was second in the 1600, Marcus Strambler second in the 300 hurdles, Joel Van Cott tied for second in the pole vault and the sprint relay was also second. None of the above turned in season bests.

"We're so young that we really are hurting when we don't have Fennell," said Lee coach Eddie Woiski. "Parkerson was the only senior we had competing and I was proud of his effort."

THE 5A division was not top quality this year. The high winds that plagued qualifying Friday, was near normal for this time of year on Saturday, but still only one record was broken in the division as El Paso's Gilbert Contreras turned in a 1:52.03 in the 800 to break his own record set last year.

San Angelo used the same formula it had last year to defend its crown. The Bobcats won only one event (Darrell Abbe in the discus), but pointed in almost every event.

The only local winners came from the Lee and MHS girls, but that wasn't enough for a team title run.

Baylor, SMU reach finals

DALLAS (AP) — Robert McLemore's 15-foot jump shot with 2:11 to play gave Baylor a 74-73 victory over the Arkansas Razorbacks on Saturday night, sending the second-seeded Bears into the championship game of the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic.

SWC

Baylor, 23-9, will meet Southern Methodist University, 26-6, the regular-season champion, at 3 p.m. today. Earlier Saturday night, SMU routed Houston 98-76 to earn the other berth in the finals.

Arkansas, 21-8, the tournament's No. 3 seed, had a chance to win the game on Ron Huery's long jumper with 10 seconds to play but the shot was too long. Andrew Lang rebounded but traveled before he could get a shot off.

Tim Scott hit three 3-point baskets in the final 6:37 to keep the Hogs in the game, but missed a vital free throw on the front end of a one-and-one with 1:59 to go. Scott finished with 16 points.

Michael Hobbs scored 21 points to lead Baylor, which is going into the tournament finals for only the second time. It's Baylor's winningest season in 40 years.

Arkansas's full-court press bothered Baylor at the outset of the game and the Hogs quickly built a 16-6 lead.

Baylor battled back and took the lead, but Huery hit a 3-point basket, a free throw, and a two-point shot to give Arkansas a 45-41 halftime lead.

Huery had 17 points in the first half while Middleton contributed 11 for the Bears, who outshot Arkansas 62 per cent to 58 per cent.

Huery finished with 19 points for the Hogs.

SMU 98, Houston 76

DALLAS — Southern Methodist hit 10 of its first 12 shots Saturday on sharpshooting by Eric Longino and Kato Armstrong to roll into its first Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic finals.

Top-seeded SMU, which won its first regular season title since 1967, increased its record to 26-6.

The Mustangs built a 25-6 lead before the stunned Cougars knew what hit them.

Houston spent the rest of the first half getting back into the game. Rolando Ferreira scored 16 points on 8 of 11 shots as the Cougars trailed 42-29 at halftime. He finished with 26 for the game.

SMU had six players in double figures, led by Todd Alexander with 18. Armstrong had 17, Carlton McKinney 16, Longino with 14, Terry Thomas 13 and Glenn Puddy with 12.

NC State's Avie Lester outjumps Duke's Alaa Abelnaby in ACC semifinal Saturday.

Arizona, UNC, Duke, Oklahoma, Syracuse reach finals

From Wire Reports

Arizona defeated Stanford 97-83 with a career-high 32 points from Sean Elliott and tied UCLA's 15-year-old conference record for most victories in a season Saturday in the semifinals of the Pacific-10 tournament.

The victory sent No. 3 Arizona into today's conference final with a 30-2 record and also avenged an earlier loss to Stanford that put the lone blemish on Arizona's Pac-10 record. The last 30-game winner in the Pac-10 was UCLA's 1972-73 undefeated team.

CONFERENCE TOURNAMENTS

Big East

Villanova 72, No. 5 Pitt 69

Mark Plansky hit a 3-pointer with 58 seconds to play, giving Villanova, 21-11, its upset of Pittsburgh, 23-9, and sending the Wildcats into Sunday's Big East final against 13th-ranked Syracuse.

No. 13 Syracuse 68, Seton Hall 63

Syracuse, 24-8, took its first lead since 2-0 on a driving layup by Sherman Douglas with 4:06 to play and held on to beat Seton Hall, 21-12, in the other Big East semifinal. Douglas tied the score 57-57 with two free throws, then hit the layup to put the Orangemen up 59-57.

Big Eight

No. 4 Oklahoma 102, Missouri 99

Stacy King gave Oklahoma a 100-96 lead with 31 seconds left when he converted a three-point play, and the Sooners held off a furious Missouri rally to advance to the final of the Big Eight. King finished with 35 points for Oklahoma, 29-3.

Missouri trailed by as many as 16 points before cutting Oklahoma's lead to 97-96. Trailing 101-97, Missouri had a driving layup by Lynn Hardy disallowed by a charging call, and Oklahoma held on to win.

Kansas St. 69, Kansas 54

Kansas State took a 23-8 lead and coasted over Kansas in the other Big Eight semifinal. Mitch Richmond had eight of his team's first 15 points and finished with 21. Danny Manning scored 18 for the Jayhawks.

Southeastern

No. 6 Kentucky 86, LSU 80

Freshman Eric Manuel hit two key free throws with 33 seconds left, giving Kentucky, 24-8, an 84-80 lead, and the Wildcats beat Louisiana State 86-80 in the SEC semifinals.

Georgia 72, Florida 70

Patrick Hamilton's 3-pointer with 19 seconds left, leading Georgia over Florida in the other SEC semifinal. Hamilton's shot gave Georgia a 70-67 lead.

The game was less than four minutes old and Florida led 9-3 when Florida's Ronnie Montgomery and Georgia's Alec Kessler got into a fight. Both players were ejected.

Atlantic Coast

No. 8 Duke 73, No. 11 N.C. State 71

Danny Ferry hit a one-handed shot in the lane with 1:45 to play, breaking a 71-71 tie, and Duke, 23-6, held on to beat North Carolina State, 24-7, advancing to Sunday's ACC final against North Carolina.

Duke, 23-6, led 53-43 on Alaa Abdelnaby's hook with 13:20 left, but N.C. State went on a 17-7 run to tie the score 60-60 with 8:30 to play.

No. 9 UNC 74, Maryland 64

North Carolina, seeking its first conference title in six years, got 19 points from J.R. Reid and beat Maryland. Scott Williams had 17 points for the Tar Heels, 25-6.

Four Tall City swimmers make state

From Staff Reports

Four swimmers from Midland High and Lee will travel to Austin in two weeks for the state swim meet, following regional tournament action Saturday in Lubbock.

Midland High's Michaela Hasek was crowned regional champion in both the 200-meter Individual Medley and 100-meter Backstroke. In the 200 IM, Hasek finished with a time of 2:14.18. She finished the backstroke with a time of 1:01.81.

Midland's Matt Seay will also qualify for the state meet, after swimming the breaststroke in 1:00.20. Seay also swam the 200 IM in 2:01.72.

From Lee, Stephanie Reed won the regional title in both the 200- and 500-meter freestyle. In the 200, her time was 2:02.26; in the 500, she swam a 5:27.43.

Ann Sullivan, also of Lee, will represent the team in the diving competition. Sullivan racked up 317.30 points, good for second place in the contest.

For the second year in a row, Midland tied for the regional team title in girls competition. Both MHS and Amarillo High girls finished with 37 points.

In girls team totals, Lee finished sixth with 19 points.

For the boys, Amarillo High won with 54 points; Midland was fifth with 21 and Lee was seventh with 18 points.

Other regional qualifiers from Midland and Lee, their events, times and finishes were:

MIDLAND

The girl's Medley Relay team of Michaela Hasek, Laura Morris, Meredith Secker and Alyssa Archer finished third with a time of 2:02.52.

The girl's 400 Freestyle Relay team, composed of Archer, Morris, Francis Allen and Meredith Secor finished with a time of 4:00.69.

Archer also finished sixth in the 200 Freestyle with a time of 2:09.62.

Holly Schmidt finished sixth with 170.50 points in diving competition.

Meredith Secor was runner-up in the 100 Freestyle with a time of 57.87.

The boy's freestyle relay team placed fourth with a time of 3:30.06. The relay team is made up by Peter Zubiate, Trey Smith, Mark Houston and Matt Seay.

Houston also placed fourth in the 100-meter Butterfly, with a time of 56.94.

LEE

The boys 200 Medley Relay team of James Day, Eric Davis, Matt Stelling and Cody Allice finished second in 1:43.81.

The boys freestyle relay team of Day, Allice, Davis and Steve Ochsner placed fifth with a 3:30.18.

Matt Stelling also finished third in the 500 Freestyle with a 5:05.91.

Sam Houston defeats Dunbar

AUSTIN (AP) — Kethus Hanks poured in 32 points Saturday night as Houston Sam Houston stormed from behind to beat Fort Worth Dunbar, 73-68, for the Class 5A Texas schoolboy basketball championship.

UIL

The decision compounded Dunbar's years of frustration at the state meet. It was the Flying Wildcats' seventh trip to Austin without a first place trophy. Dunbar also finished second in 1977 and 1979.

Sam Houston won the title in its first appearance and finished the season with a 34-5 record.

Dunbar led 64-56 with only 5:25 left in the game. But after a timeout, Sam Houston outscored Dunbar 17-4 the rest of the way.

Hanks, a 6-2 senior, had 10 of the 17 points. He got scoring help from Jodie Arthur, who had 17, and from 6-11 Gerry Holmes, who added 11. Hanks and Holmes each had 13 rebounds.

For Dunbar, which finished the season with a 38-4 record, Randy Williams scored 26 points and Gary Collier 20.

The victory margin for Sam Houston came on 3-point shots from outside and on free throws.

Sam Houston made 11 of 24 shots from outside 19 feet 9 inches, while Dunbar connected on only 5 of 21 of its 3-point attempts.

RELAYS

Midland High's Tracy Parker threw a 30-4½ to win the shot put, an amazing feat, considering this was her first meet of the year.

"That is three or four feet better than she has ever done," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "That is even farther that Chandra Govan ever threw the shot and she ranked eighth in the state last year. This came as a shock to all of us."

Lee won the 800 relay with a fine final leg by Carrie Roach that brought the Rebels from second to first in 1:47.14. Roach also made a run at the 100 title, but finished second. But that was also the first time she has competed in that event this year. She normally competes in the 200. Lee also got a second in the sprint relay with Roach at the anchor.

"The girls we have try hard, but we need some more quality," said Lee coach Janice Baulch. "Carrie is a strong runner and she really helps us in the relays."

Lubbock Coronado's Debra Tinnell set the only girls record wth a 2:16.79 in the 800. That was a great race since El Paso Bowie's Patty Avila had a 2:21.70 that also broke the old mark.

The Permian girls won the title without winning an event Saturday, but the Mojo girls were also deep in most events.

Big Spring's two-week victory streak was also broken by the two Lubbock schools in 4A. One Steer victory came from Brian Mayfield in the high jump with a 6-6. He tried to break his own division record of 6-8½, but failed. Big Spring's Ben Gonzales won for the third week in a row in the 1600 with a 4:38.50.

Two division records fell in 4A as Estacado's Ronald Collins set a now 200 standard with a 21.77 and Dunbar's Craig Ross set a division mark in the 300 hurdles with a 38.82.

In Class 3A, Greenwood's Randy Donnell kept Merkel's Brit Pursley from stealing the entire oval show. Donnell had a leap of 21-5¼ to win the long jump. That beat Pursley and kept him from being the meet's only four-event winner. Pursley had a 21-4. That was also the only Greenwood victory of the day.

Stanton didn't win an event, but Anthony Inman was close with a second place in the 300 hurdles to Wylie's Mike Chapman by a narrow one-hundredth of a second. Stanton's Eddie Jordan was third in the 100.

UIL

Sam Houston hit 14 of 16 from the charity stripe, with Hanks a perfect 11-of-11 on his attempts. Dunbar converted on only 7 of 20 free throws.

Derrick Daniels, the second leading scorer for Dunbar during the season, had only five points but was credited with 12 assists — a category in which his coaches claim he holds the national record.

Dunbar Coach Robert Hughes, who has more than 800 career victories despite never having won a state championship, said: "We played horrible. I'm surprised they didn't take us by more."

Lincoln 66, Hirschi 59

AUSTIN — Bryan Sallier, a 6-foot-8 senior, jammed in 22 points Saturday as Port Arthur Lincoln won its fourth schoolboy basketball title in four trips to the state tournament by beating Wichita Falls Hirschi 66-59 in Class 4A.

Lincoln Coach James Gamble, who has been at Lincoln 26 years, announced after the game that he was retiring from coaching.

"Because of my age and my health, I don't feel like I can give basketball my full attention anymore," said Gamble, 52.

"It's tougher for me to get ready after every game," he said. "I need to be home at 4 o'clock. I would have retired after this game even if we had gotten beat by 100 points."

Sallier, a 250-pounder who is considered a top college propsect in football as well as basketball, had 18 rebounds and blocked several Hirschi shots.

Lincoln won the 5A championship in 1981 captured 4A titles in 1984 and 1986. It has never lost a state tournament game.

Lincoln, using 10 players, went ahead 36-35 midway through the third quarter and lead the rest of the game. Hirschi closed to 57-54 in the last period but Sallier scored on a layup and Lincoln stretched its winning margin to seven points.

Derrick Turner scored 14 points and Brandon Tyler 11 for Lincoln, which had a 29-4 season record. All four losses were to 5A teams.

Reggie Flenoy led Hirschi with 18 points and Derrick Glasker tallied 16 in Hirschi's first tournament appearance. The Huskies finished with a 25-9 record.

Sweeny 59, West Oso 50

AUSTIN — Benford Williams scored 24 points Saturday as Sweeny won its second straight Class 3A state title with a 59-50 victory over superquick Corpus Christi West Oso.

The championship was Sweeny's fourth in seven tournament trips, beginning in 1946.

Williams, a 6-foot-5 senior who has signed a scholarship with the University of Texas, led a Sweeny surge to break a 48-48 tie.

Williams scored on a 4-foot field goal and added a free throw and a 10-footer with 2:14 left in the game to clinch the victory.

His game-high 24 points gave him a two-game total of 60.

Paducah 99, Big Sandy 61

AUSTIN — Bryan Barnes scored 34 points Saturday as Paducah defended its Class A state basketball championship with a record-breaking 99-61 victory over Livingston Big Sandy.

Big Spring leads 2-4A golf after first round

ANDREWS — Jeff Rhodes of Big Spring fired a 67 here Saturday to help propel the Big Spring Steers to the District 2-4A boys golf lead in the first district meet of the year.

Big Spring ended the day with a 305 team score and host Andrews is close behind at 309 and Snyder stands at 311. Big Spring's No. 2 team owns a 318 and Sweetwater stands at 321.

Rhodes' effort puts him in the lead for district medalist honors and he has a big lead over Snyder's Marc Queen and Sweetwater's Michael Torres, who both fired a 73.

This meet was the first of five District 2-4A meets. The top two teams and top two individuals advance to the Region I meet at the completion of the five rounds.

Big Spring will host the next round on March 26.

Sherrill, miffed at UT cow-towing, pulls Ags out of SWC network

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Texas A&M Athletic Director Jackie Sherrill, miffed by what he calls "preferential" treatment for rival University of Texas, announced on Saturday that the Aggies are leaving the Southwest Conference radio network.

Coach Sherrill said he didn't believe there was any way the SWC could stop him and said he didn't believe the league "would go to court."

The Aggies have already received a bid for their own network that would triple what they are being paid by Host Communications, The Associated Press has learned.

Sherrill said A&M would have been willing to stay in the network if the league re-distributed radio revenues on an equal share to each school. But he said this apparently isn't going to happen.

He said Host Communications had given Texas special treatment with statewide talk shows for Longhorn Coach David McWilliams. He said Host does all the printing for Texas' game programs.

"We have a major problem of why Texas A&M is not as valuable," Sherrill said. "It gives a school a distinct advantage to have a coaches talk show.

"Money is not the issue. I applaud (Texas Athletic Director) DeLoss Dodds for the good job he has done in getting the package for Texas put together. Call-in talk shows have a mushroom effect for schools in recruiting. We (A&M) asked to be involved and it hasn't happened so we will pursue our own radio position."

Sherrill said A&M is legally in the clear because it did not sign an extension to the SWC contract which covers the conference radio network.

"We have no animosity or conflict towards anyone but we have no alternative but to seek our own radio network," Sherrill said.

A&M was expected to be paid some $130,000 for its 1987 radio contract. Host Communications gets 30 per cent of the SWC profits with the conference schools getting the other 70 per cent after expenses.

Dodds left Saturday's meeting of SWC athletic directors without commenting. Asked if he wished to do so, Dodds answered "no."

Jim Host, president of Host Communications, also left the meeting without comment.

SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby said he thought the SWC radio package "can survive with eight members."

Jacoby said the SWC Compliance Committee would consider A&M's threat "to see if the issues can be resolved without formal action."

Asked if he thought A&M might be expelled from the SWC for its actions, Jacoby said, "I don't envision that happening."

The SWC's contract with Host Communications, a Kentucky-based company, expires at the end of the

What do Steve Stallings, John Harris, Ralph Edwards, John Bednarski and Bob Jones have in common? At one time, each of these men could claim to be the area's fastest runner. Advancing careers have caused most of these runners to leave town creating an opening at the front of the race pack.

The Permian Basin Road Runners Club attempted to determine the best runners last year with their championship series but the age group winners were those who ran every race and, in most cases, were clearly not the fastest.

MIDLAND firefighter Dave Felice would probably be the fastest but he seldom races. Stacy Sutter, who won the Midland Mile and Run After the Women last year, is back in town but is not sure how long she will stay.

Brian Bonner, a 31-year-old engineer with Texas Instruments, has probably taken over the chase for the top. Bonner led most of the way in last year's MRT Half Marathon, only to be kicked out by Bob Jones in the last quarter mile.

Bonner has won both of the local races this year, winning the I Love To Run 5K in 16:56 and the Go For The Gold 5K in 16:44. In both cases, Bonner defeated second-place finisher Dave Moore. Moore, however, defeated Bonner in last year's Chili Pot Trot and at the White Rock Marathon in Dallas.

WHO'S the best? If we knew the answer to that, we probably wouldn't run the race.

Bonner usually runs interval workouts Saturdays at 9 a.m. at the Lee High track if there is not a local race. He has volunteered to help or run with any runners who want to improve their speed through interval training.

The racing schedule moves to Odessa for the next two months starting with Saturday's West Texas Relays 5,000 Meter Classic. The race is held at Ratliff Stadium and circles around the area and then finishes on the track. Race director Joe Tighe did an excellent job with last year's event and promises even better things this year. The race is included in the 1988 PBRRC Race Championship Series.

ALSO INCLUDED in the series will be the Jackrabbit Run to be held at Odessa College on Apr. 9. In the last few years, the reputation of this race has suffered due to inaccurate courses. This was corrected by Neil Carman last year by certifying the course with the Athletics Congress.

Runners will get a special treat on April 15 when former Olympian Jeff Galloway comes to Odessa for the Run Around The Globe. Galloway, author of a best-selling running book, will speak at a dinner on Friday which will be followed by a 5K and a 15K on Saturday, Apr. 16.

MIDLAND finally gets into the act on May 14 with the Run For The Arts. Race director Berry Simpson always does a great job on this 5K race.

The highlight of the spring is the eighth annual Tall Town 10,000 to be held May 21. The race is the oldest in town and the largest of the spring. Last year's event raised over $15,000 for the Palmer Drug Abuse program. The certified 10K course winds through Polo Park and Saddle Club South and delivers many PR's each year.

Runners will get a chance to help a worthy cause by in the March of Dimes 10 Mile Run/Walk Apr. 23. Participants will be asked to get pledges for their mileage and contribute the money to the March of Dimes. The 7:30 a.m. run begins and ends at Claydesta National Bank. Walkers will begin at 9 a.m.

The Permian Basin Road Runners Club is accepting applications for scholarships to be awarded at the Tall Town 10,000. Applicants must be graduating seniors from an area high school and must be active in track or cross country. Contact Alex Rose at 694-4271.

Midland Christian scores 44 points

From Staff Reports

GRANDFALLS — Midland Christian competed in the Gusher Relays here Saturday with the Mustang girls scoring 44 points and the boys 28 points.

Midland Christian didn't win an event, but Diane Womack and Kristi Jackson both had second place finishes.

Womack had the fastest qualifying time in the 200, but was injured in the 100 and had to exit the final event.

Midland Christian will go to a meet in Grady next Saturday.

OFFICIAL RULES

OYSTER EVENTS. Since the dawn of time oysters have given the world athletic competition unmatched by pie, watermelon, or hotdog eating contests. These tasty little morsels of seafood delight are somewhat more difficult to digest in oysterlympic competition. Competitors must first "shuck" the oyster (oysters on the whole) then and only then can the little critters be eaten, unless of course you prefer your oysters extra, extra crunchy. Shucking knives and protective gloves will be provided, and complimentary beer, wine, softdrinks, malox, or pepto bismol will be available for contestants. Remember, the relay requires 4 oyster loving competitors who don't care whether they see this event again or not. Oyster Sprint - 4 entries per team, 2 each night of prelim's. Oyster Relay - 1 (4 man) entry per team. This event will be run in heats. Oyster Marathon - 2 entries per team, 1 each night of prelim's.

SHRIMP EVENTS. Shrimp spend their short lives bathing in warm shallow waters preparing themselves for the ultimate sacrifice. Like lambs to the slaughter untold millions are devoured each year. However, these hapless creatures of the sea are usually served without their protective outer shell. In oysterlympic competition, the crustaceans must first be peeled, undressed, flayed, de-shelled, call it what you will, before they are consumed. In competition as stiff as this there won't be a lot of time for lemon or cocktail sauce, so "down the hatch" and hope for a gold! Whether the sprint or relay, the shrimp events are guaranteed to be as exciting as they are appetizing. Shrimp Sprint - 4 entries per team, 2 each night of prelim's. Shrimp Relay - 1 (4-man) entry per team. This event will be run in heats. Shrimp Marathon - 2 entries per team, 1 each night of prelim's.

CRAWFISH EVENTS. Not much is known about this obscure sport. The IOC (International Oysterlympic Committee) however, has sanctioned this event for those competitors who lack cast iron constitutions necessary for other events of the games. Crawfish, the freshwater cousin to the shrimp are commonly found gracing the plates of restaurants throughout the world, but in oysterlympic competition the miniature lobsters are saved from a fate greater than or equal to death. More exciting than summer olympic decathlon, and more savage than winter olympic hockey, the 100 meter Crawfish Sprint is destined to become one of the games more intense, if not confused events. Although a laugher, the scoring demands close attention from all the teams. 100 Meter Crawfish Sprint - 2 entries per team, 1 each night of prelim's.

OYSTER SPRINT
Teams are allowed 4 entries, 2 each night of the preliminaries. This is a timed event with points awarded to teams for places 1st - 10th in preliminaries and 1st - 5th in the medal round finals. Contestant must shuck and eat 1 dozen raw oysters.

4X OYSTER RELAY
Teams are allowed 1 entry, 4 contestants per relay team. Event is run same as the sprint with each competitor shucking and eating 1 dozen oysters. This is a timed event with points awarded to teams for places 1st - 5th in both the preliminaries and the medal round finals.

OYSTER MARATHON
Teams are allowed 2 entries, 1 each night of the preliminaries. In this event the marathoner will attempt to shuck and eat as many oysters as possible in 5 minutes. Points are awarded to teams for places 1st - 10th in prelims and 1st - 5th in the medal round.

SHRIMP SPRINT
Teams are allowed 4 entries, 2 each night of the preliminaries. This is a timed event with points awarded to teams for places 1st - 10th in preliminaries and 1st - 5th in the medal round finals. Contestant must peel and eat 1 dozen shrimp.

4X SHRIMP RELAY
Teams are allowed 1 entry, 4 contestants per relay team. Event is run same as the sprint with each competitor peeling and eating 1 dozen shrimp. This is a timed event with points awarded to teams for places 1st - 5th in both the preliminaries or the medal round finals.

1K SHRIMP MARATHON (1 kilogram - Approx. 2lbs. Shrimp)
Teams are allowed 2 entries, 1 each night of the preliminaries. In this event the marathoner will attempt to peel and eat as many shrimp as possible in 5 minutes. Points are awarded to teams for places 1st - 10th in prelims and 1st - 5th in the medal round.

100 METER CRAWFISH SPRINT
Teams are allowed 2 entries, 1 each night of the preliminaries. This is a timed event with points awarded to teams for places 1st - 10th in preliminaries and 1st - 5th in the medal round finals. Rules are TBA.

JIM MURRAY

Guerrero changes his tune

Murray

VERO BEACH, Fla. — The verb to describe Pete Guerrero is swagger. Pete probably never said "Excuse me" in his life. Pete is the original "Get out of my face!" guy. Pete doesn't see any reason to apologize for anything he might do or has done. Being Pete Guerrero means never having to say you're sorry.

You couldn't call Pete cocky. He passed that stage long ago. Even arrogant is inadequate.

Pete doesn't like to be told what to do. Like, play third base. Particularly after he has batted .338, second in the league; hit 27 home runs, most on the team; got 184 hits, second in the league, and scored and batted in 89 runs.

Pete figures when a man puts up numbers like that, he tells you where he wants to play. And when. You let some humpty who bunts for a hit play third base, not Pete Guerrero. Third base is not a superstar position. Pete is a superstar and don't you forget it.

There is also the consideration that the last time Pete played that position, there was blood all over the infield. It was a horror story.

Before he could switch back to the outfield in June, Pete had —count 'em — four whole home runs. He had 18 runs batted in and was batting in the lower reaches of the .200s.

AFTER SWITCHING back to the outfield, he swatted 29 home runs, he drove in 66 runs and batted .348 the rest of the way. In fact, he celebrated his return to God's country — left field — by hitting 15 home runs that month, more than anybody in history save for a couple of guys named Ruth and Maris.

You would think, in the light of this, that the Dodgers would ask Pete Guerrero to take out the garbage or do windows before they would think of asking him to play third base again.

The trouble is, the Dodgers have more outfielders than Maine has rocks or NBC vice presidents. There's standing room only in left field. It used to be said of the Dodgers when they were in Brooklyn that it was the only town in the big leagues that didn't have its own newspaper, railroad station — or left fielder. Now, the Dodgers have nothing but left fielders. They have cornered the market on them.

What they don't have is a third baseman.

The proposition is very simple. If Pete Guerrero can, or will, play third base, the Dodgers can get all of their left fielders in the game. They can put one of them on first base and the rest of them can choose up sides for the outfield positions. This gets five very big bats in the game: Kirk Gibson's, Mike Marshall's, John Shelby's, Mike Davis' — and Pete's.

It's tempting from the Dodgers' point of view.

But none of these other guys has ever batted .338 in a full season in the majors. In fact, none of them has even batted .300. None of them has hit more than 30 home runs in a year.

DO YOU ASK the star to play the faithful old Indian companion or family retainer? Is he supposed to fall on the grenade? Does he give himself up for the good of the regiment? Does he go to the guillotine saying, "It's a far, far better thing I do than I have ever done"?

You get the feeling Pete is not good at the martyr's role, either. What was it Gen. Patton said? "The art of war is not dying for your country. It's getting some other poor s.o.b.? to die for his."

Pete Guerrero might say "Amen!" Pete is nobody's sacrificial lamb. Pete is very much his own man. His name, Guerrero, means warrior in Spanish and it's not hard to picture Pete with a knife in his teeth and murder in his heart, trying to get somebody else to die for his country.

He played third base Tuesday for the first time in several years. No one got hurt. Pete handled two not-very-difficult chances afield, got a hit, and, in the locker room afterward, he didn't bust up any furniture or throw cold cuts around the shower, or yell, "Play me in the outfield or trade me!"

But neither did he sound like Nathan Hale.

"I play where they tell me," he kept repeating stubbornly as reporters crowded around. "I only work here. They pay me every second Tuesday. The man whose name is signed to the checks is the man who tells you what to do. They pay me, I don't pay them."

WAS HE reconciled to the switch? Would it be permanent?

Pete shrugged. "I dunno. I bring two gloves to camp — a first-baseman's and a third-baseman's."

Which would he rather do?

"If I play first base, then they got to do something with those four outfielders. If I play third base, I make all those infielders unhappy."

Will it make Pete Guerrero unhappy? After all, it did the last time.

"The last time, I was making a lot of errors. But the team was losing, too. They had to do something.

"Hey!" suggests Pete. "There's a lot of time before we break camp. I've played every position on a ball club except shortstop and pitcher. Maybe they'll ask me to pitch."

ESPN revs up motors for NCAA '500'

By RICK WARNER
AP Sports Writer

Anchoring ESPN's fast-paced coverage of the NCAA basketball tournament is a little like driving a race car.

"You've got to be ready to switch gears at a moment's notice," said Bob Ley, who will share the hosting duties with John Saunders. "It keeps you on your toes."

Starting next Thursday at noon EST, ESPN will televise 20 first-round games in 45½ hours. In addition, the cable network will provide live "cut-ins" from other opening-round games being played at the same time.

"We try to stay on top of everything that's happening," Ley said. "It's an incredible logistical and editorial challenge."

Ley and Saunders will be joined by Dick Vitale, the garrulous guru of college basketball analysts.

"I know Dick gets on some people's nerves, but really he's a great guy," Ley said. "We get along fine. We're just a couple of short white guys from New Jersey who love basketball."

Last year, Vitale promised to stand on his head in the ESPN studio if Austin Peay upset Illinois in the opening round. When Illinois lost, he kept his promise. During the offseason, Vitale repeated the stunt during a banquet at Austin Peay.

"I have a picture of it," ESPN spokesman Mike Soltys said. "He's standing on his head, but his lips are still moving. Dick never stops talking."

This year's tournament doesn't have a clear-cut favorite.

"If Dr. Naismith came back to life, he couldn't pick the winner," Ley said. "Anybody who makes predictions is crazy. There's just too many good teams out there."

Sportscaster Jim Lampley has added another job to his lengthy resume.

Lampley has signed a two-year contract with Home Box Office, for whom he will cover boxing and tennis. He already is a local sports anchor in Los Angeles, sports reporter on two CBS morning programs and NFL play-by-play announcer. Until last month, he also hosted a daily radio show.

Lampley, who resigned from ABC last July, makes his HBO debut March 20 at the Mike Tyson-Tony Tubbs heavyweight title fight in Japan.

ABC will present a college basketball slam dunk contest Sunday.

Division I schools were invited to submit tapes of outstanding dunks performed during games this season. Analysts Dick Vitale, Cheryl Miller and Joe B. Hall then selected their top 10 dunks, which will be shown during halftime of ABC's regional telecasts Sunday.

The judges will pick a winner based on creativity, difficult, athletic ability and dramatic impact. The champion dunker will receive a commemorative award.

"Make That Spare," the popular bowling series that aired in the early 1960s, is being revived by ABC.

A special edition of the program will be shown Saturday, prior to ABC's coverage of the PBA National Championhip from Toledo, Ohio. Pro bowlers Earl Anthony, Brian Voss and Walter Ray Williams Jr. will compete for a total of $50,000.

ESPN will begin televising Ivy League football games this year.

The network will show a total of 19 games over the next three seasons, including at least six in 1988. Trans World International will produce the telecasts in association with ESPN. TWI has produced Ivy League football for PBS the last four seasons.

Expos 9, Orioles 3

MIAMI (AP) — Andres Galarraga hit two of the Expos' six home runs to lift Montreal to a 9-3 exhibition victory over the Baltimore Orioles at Joe Robbie Stadium Saturday night.

Bulldogs sweep Caveman tourney

From Staff Reports

The Midland High Bulldogs experienced nothing but success in the two-day Carlsbad, N.M. baseball tournament.

With three wins and no losses in the tourney for the Bulldogs, the icing on the cake came Saturday night when Midland defeated Carlsbad 5-4 in extra innings.

Eric Boyt, who pitched in relief for the Bulldogs, proved his worth at the plate also. The 5-11 senior hit a sacrifice fly to right, scoring Tony Perez from third, representing the go-ahead run in the top of the ninth.

Joe Rendon picked up the win for the Bulldogs.

Midland was down by as much as 4-1 as late as the fourth inning, but managed to fight back, picking up one run in the fifth and two more to tie it in the top half of the seventh.

Midland also defeated Lee High, 8-1, in Saturday morning action, and opened the tourney with an explosive 19-4 talley against Fort Stockton.

Named to the All-Tournament team, from the Midland Bulldogs, were David Danley, Joe Rendon, Eric Boyt, Tony Perez and Jamie Surratt.

For Lee, Blaine McInally, Durian Jenkins and Michael Pearson received all-tournament honors.

Lee finished the three game set winning two and dropping one, the only loss coming against Midland High. The Rebels' two victories came with a 3-2 victory over Carlsbad and a 9-3 decision over Fort Stockton.

In the win over Carlsbad, Jenkins threw a complete game for the Rebs, surrendering just one earned run in the seven inning contest.

Lee's Blaine McInally, Chad Brooks and Cregg McGaha each went 1-for-3; Greg Garrett had one hit in two official trips to the plate.

Carlsbad's Rolando Rubio was the losing pitcher. Rubio pitched six innings, allowing three runs on four hits. Only one of the Lee runs was earned, as the Carlsbad team was tagged with five errors in the game.

Lee opens District 4-5A action Tuesday, hosting Midland High. Gametime is set for 4 p.m.

Angelo State loses again

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo. (AP) — South Dakota State used 62 percent shooting to build an 18-point lead at halftime en route to an 87-84 victory Saturday night over Angelo State for third place in the NCAA Division II South Central Region tournament.

Craig Jenkins scored 21 points for South Dakota State, with three teammates adding 15 apiece for the balanced Jackrabbits. Junior Jim Howard sparked Angelo State's unsuccessful comeback in the final half, finishing with a game-high 32 points.

After South Dakota State built a 57-39 lead at halftime, Angelo State closed to 79-76 late in the game but was unable to get closer. The outcome left South Dakota State with a 21-9 record as Angelo State wound up 21-11.

Four tie in Spring Fling

From Staff Reports

Four teams tied for second place in the Annual Spring Fling six man scramble golf tournament held Saturday at Mission Country Club.

The team consisting of Jim Sumner, Larry Nunez, Doug Stewart, Mickey Wilson, Billy Carson and L.G. Young shot a 55, or 17 under par to capture first place in the scramble.

Second-place honors went to Brent Womack, Bobby Woods, Corky Allen, Willie Taylor, Scooter Parks and Ronnie Broderick. Together, the six men won a scorecard playoff to break the four-way tie for second. All four teams that placed second shot 56.

The following teams, and their members, are the remaining second-place finishers before the tiebreaker:

Don Hembree, Gene Perry, Ed Theis, Wayne Feller, Ron Rumple and Jon Cranford;

Jim Nelson, Marshall Nelson, Phil Clark, Rodney Hurt, Vince Vines and Ross Wortham; Kenn Hill, Buddy Ryals, Kelly Cooke, Bill Bowers, Justin Johnson and Blake Yager.

Finishing in fourth place, and shooting a 57, was the team consisting of Brett Smith, John Bettis, Glen Ellis, Craig Campbell, Dave Griffin and Scott Lovett.

Russian wins pro net title

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Andrei Chesnokov became the first Soviet to win a men's professional tennis tournament in the United States since 1974 when he beat Miloslav Mecir 7-6 (8-6), 6-1 in Saturday's finals of the Du Pont Classic.

"(This is) big success for me," said Chesnokov, unseeded and ranked 29th in the world. "I'm so happy. I can't believe I win such big tournament."

Chesnokov pocketed $59,000 from the $415,000 purse.

Mecir, the only seeded player to reach the semifinals in the 32-man field, netted a backhand when he led 5-4, 40-30 in the first set. The Czechoslovakian wasted two more set points on unforced errors in the tiebreaker.

"I couldn't finish the games," said Mecir, seeded second and ranked No. 7 in the world.

123 captures MCC 2 best-ball

From Staff Reports

Lloyd Innerarity, Ed Innerarity, Jack Huff and Chris Huff combined for a 123 Saturday to win Midland Country Club's Two Best-Ball of Foursome tournament.

One of the tournament highlights came from Decker Dawson, who recorded a hole-in-one during tournament play. Dawson used a seven-wood to ace the No. 3 159-yard hole.

Beginner's luck pays

LAKE BELTON, Texas (AP) — Royce Smith's beginner's luck claimed the Big Bass prize Saturday in the second Jimmy Atkinson Memorial Bass Tournament at Lake Belton, while Jay Johnson and Buster Morrell of Austin won the team championship.

For Smith, who is from Springtown, it was his first bass tournament. With the aide of teammate Joe Tex of Phoenix, Ariz. he landed a 6.13 pound largemouth. It was the only fish all day that weighed in at more than five pounds.

Texas-San Antonio wins TAAC basketball tournament

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Frank Hampton scored 18 points, including the go-ahead basket in overtime, as Texas-San Antonio beat Georgia Southern 76-69 Saturday to win the Trans America Athletic Conference tournament.

The victory gave the Roadrunners an automatic bid to make their first appearance in the NCAA tournament.

Maybe Don King should set pairings

Battles

They make the NCAA basketball pairings today and somehow, the way things have been going this year, one wonders if the matchups shouldn't be accompanied by weigh-ins.

Arnie Ferrin is in charge of the selection committee, but the suspicion is that it should be Don King.

The NCAA Final Four usually is held in places like Freedom Hall, the Hoosier Dome, Kemper Arena, the Carrier Dome in Syracuse. Perhaps they should consider Madison Square Garden or, better still, a Las Vegas parking lot.

If King were in charge, there would be some changes made and rules set to keep games under control. Coaches also would have to be licensed cut men. And the free-for-all brawl would be a thing of the past.

KING, I'm sure, would require any player leaving the bench to join the hostilities to touch a teammate to become eligible. The teammate, of course, would be required to leave the floor.

Instead of refs, officials, licensed by the State Athletic Commission, would stand back and let the flailers have at it, stepping in only when the player on the floor is being stomped upon with glee by his opponent.

In case you hadn't noticed, the NCAA is almost as concerned with fighting as it is with the pairings as this year's post-season jousting, excuse the term, please, approaches.

FISTICUFFS and unruly behaviour are running rampant in basketball. The Big East deservedly has earned its reputation as a brawlers' league, but even the Ivy League, where they should know better, has succumbed to baser impulses.

As playoff time approached, they had to break up a brawl at Yale when the the Elis squabbled with Penn. When Quakers lose their composure, you've got to admit sportsmanship has come to a fine pass.

Fighting is not confined to college basketball. The cagers are only copying what they see going on in other sports, and not very well.

Most basketball throw punches like girls used to throw a baseball. As fighters, they rank up there with baseball players, in most instances.

It's the exceptions that hurt.

Of course, it all stems from National Hockey League, where owners and officials consider fighting good box office.

Look, sometime, at the penalties called in overtime. It always says "Penalties-None." The only officials consider overtime just that and refuse to interfere. If it gets bad, there's always the coroner.

The NFL has adopted the same attitude. The method of condoning Pier Six behavior, and you see it in every game, is to severely admonish the guilty parties and declare offsetting penalties. Translated: hear no evil, see no evil...what evil?

There is talk of steps to curb uncontrolled temper outbursts, but that's all it is....talk.

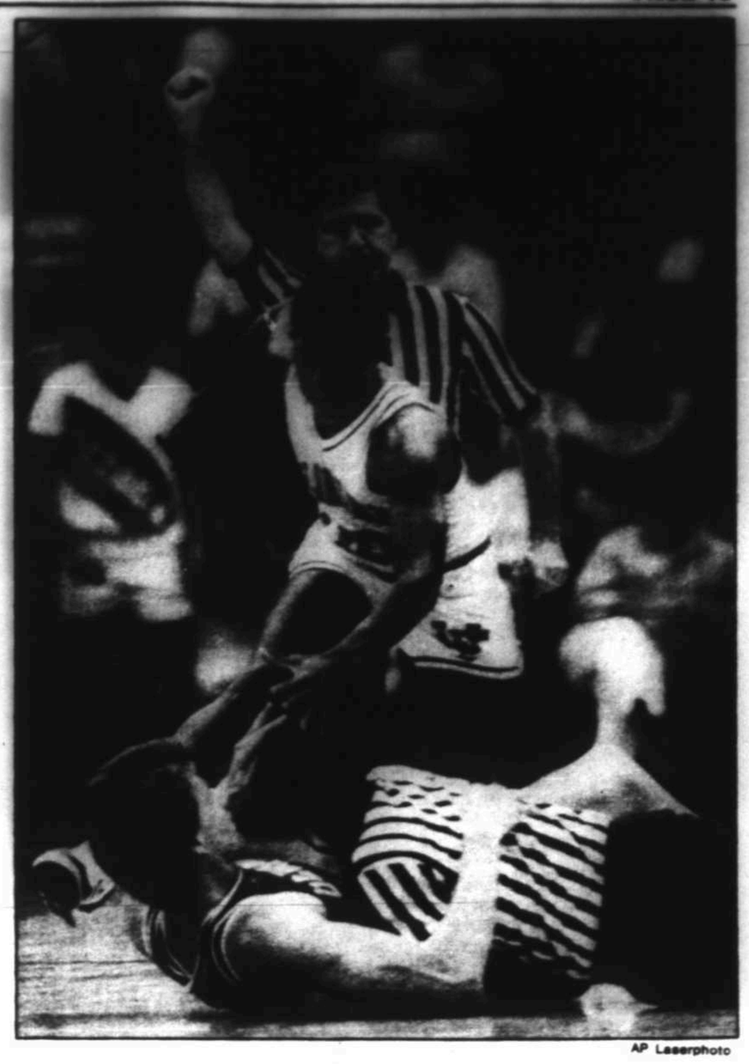

It used to be that unsportsmanlike conduct, and that didn't necessarily include fighting, in football was a half-the-distance to the goal line penalty and prompt expulsion.

A player being caught a couple of times also faced expulsion from the sport by the coach who couldn't afford such generous gifts to the opposition.

A return to stern measures would quickly cut down on the outbreaks of arena violence. But don't expect anything that severe.

The NHL has proven that fighting is good box office, even if it is to the detriment of the game, and, of course, box office is what it's all about today.

Tuning up for NCAAs

Georgia's Alec Kessler is wrestled to floor by official while Florida's Ronnie Montgomery flails away at anything that moves in SEC tournament preliminary bouts at Baton Rouge Saturday.

The unwanted child grows up

Now everybody loves it

By MALCOLM MORAN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — We will hear about The Road to Kansas City until we have memorized every turn. Late Sunday afternoon, the selection and seeding of the 64 teams for the 50th NCAA tournament, a process that once consisted of a few telephone calls, will again be presented live on network television. The information will be placed in brackets to be instantly and passionately analyzed. The brackets will be used to help produce America's stamp of significance, the office pool.

And then dozens of young people will create the plot for the nation's most recently embraced major sporting event. Forty-nine years ago, the first tournament, a hastily arranged creation of the National Association of Basketball Coaches, lost $2,531. Soon, the NCAA assumed the debt and responsibility for the second championship. "When they took it from the NABC," said Howard Hobson, 84, the coach of the 1939 Oregon team, the first NCAA champions, "it was the greatest investment in the history of the world."

The 49 tournaments have produced gross receipts of $270,253,387. The NCAA expects gross revenue of more than $66 million for its 50th tournament, more than 85 percent of which will come from television. In the first year of a three-year contract for $166 million with the CBS network, the four schools that reach the national semifinals April 2 will each receive $1,153,700.

THAT SUCCESSFUL investment is a product of the interest, developed over decades and shrewdly capitalized on in recent years.

From the most distant seats of the domed stadiums that have become necessary in an attempt to satisfy the demand, 7-footers may appear the size of insects. But through the lenses of the television cameras, they are bared to their shirts and shorts, and occasionally, to their souls.

Theirs is an event that has struggled to survive the effects of a world war, two point-shaving scandals, violations that have voided the participation of teams up to a second-place finisher, and the competition of a once more popular and prestigious National Invitation Tournament. Drug testing was instituted for the 1987 championship, and this year, for the first time since 1971, participants are being asked to sign affidavits that indicate they have not contracted with an agent. With fighting a more persistent problem this season, the NCAA last week set a new policy that would subject players to immediate suspensions for fights during tournament play.

UTAH'S UTES, the 1944 champions, were a sudden replacement for an Arkansas team that was in an automobile accident. The development of the dominant big man, as George Mikan of DePaul and Bob Kurland of Oklahoma A&M, took place in the first decade. The arrival during the 1950s of Bill Russell of San Francisco, Wilt Chamberlain of Kansas, Elgin Baylor of Seattle and Oscar Robertson of Cincinnati, outstanding black players, changed the way the game was played.

North Carolina's 1957 Tar Heels survived the six overtime periods in little more than 24 hours that preserved an undefeated season, overcame Chamberlain and Kansas by a point in the final, and won the championship. Texas Western's 1966 championship was earned when the predominantly black Miners defeated an all-white Kentucky team and ended Adolph Rupp's hope for a fifth title.

UCLA became a four-letter word to opposing coaches and players when Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was known as Lew Alcindor, Bill Walton's red hair grew longer, and the Bruins won 10 championships in 12 seasons from 1964 through 1975. Houston's Phi Slama Jama, the most famous pseudo-fraternal campus organization in the nation five springs ago, created a reputation, and lost the 1983 championship to North Carolina State on a dunk.

AND EVEN in hindsight, there has been the unthinkable: North Carolina's Tommy Kearns, all of 5 feet 10 inches, was sent in for the center jump against Chamberlain. Twenty-seven years later, in a more sober Carolina moment during a 1984 regional semifinal, Dan Dakich, a reliable, resourceful, but hardly spectacular Indiana player, successfully limited Michael Jordan in a Hoosier victory over the Tar Heels. In 1977, Marquette's Al McGuire, the wise guy from New York, cried real tears. And in 1985, Villanova's Wildcats spoke to each other about playing the perfect game, and then made 78.6 percent of their shots in the triumph over Georgetown and Patrick Ewing.

Not so long ago, such moments were secrets of a cult following that obtained its information through small syndicated television networks or radio broadcasts picked up in automobiles. The 1946 championship at Madison Square Garden was telecast locally for the first time, but for the 21 tournaments through 1959, the NCAA lists a television revenue figure of zero.

Ed Fiori comes out of the sand on the 18th hole of Honda golf at Coral Springs, Fla.

Birdie on 18th gives Sindelar stroke edge

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

CORAL SPRINGS, Fla. — Joey Sindelar, who has a string of 11 consecutive sub-par rounds on the PGA Tour, sank an 8-foot birdie putt at the 18th hole on Saturday, and a few minutes later was in the lead by one shot after three rounds of the Honda Classic.

Sindelar came off the Tournament Players Club at Eagle Trace still a shot off the pace. But when Ken Brown, the lanky Englishman from Harpenden, bogeyed both the 16th and 17th holes a few minutes later, Sindelar had the lead.

That birdie at the final hole topped off a round of four-under-par 68 for Sindelar, who had a 54-hole total of 10-under 206. Brown, one of the tour's best putters, scored a 70 for 207.

Ray Floyd sank some lengthy putts and also putted out of the 17th bunker with a spectacular shot to save par so he tied Sandy Lyle, Ed Fiori, and Tommy Nakajima of Japan at 208.

"I'M YOUR basic par-eagle-double-bogey golfer," Sindelar said. "But now it's fun. I'm just not trying to change my stroke while I'm out on the course playing. That's no good."

The lengthy 18th hole is a par-4 of 470 yards. It played with a strong crosswind, left to right. Sindelar hit a 165-yard 7-iron that came to rest just pin high and 8 feet left of the cup.

The day began with six golfers tied for the lead: Brown, Nakajima, Fiori, Jodie Mudd, Dan Forsman, and Fred Wadsworth. Sindelar was a shot behind them after two rounds.

Mudd was still in the hunt at 209, three shots back of the lead after three rounds. But Forsman and Wadsworth had their troubles and shot 77 and 80, respectively, to fall well behind.

Floyd, the 22-time winner on Tour with four major titles to his credit, shot a 68 on Saturday with five birdie putts ranging from 18 to 25 feet. But his bunker putt to help get par was the shot of the day in this third round.

After hitting a tee shot too far at the par-3 17th hole, Floyd's ball came to rest on the back, downhill slope of the rear bunker. He had a shot he said was too difficult for a sand wedge. He said he could not get close to the pin tucked back near that sand.

So Floyd took his putter, to the surprise of everyone, including his wife.

As he was about to make the shot, his son Ray Jr., said to Floyd's wife, Maria, "Mommy, Daddy has a putter."

She said, "You sure?"

"Yes," Ray Jr. said.

"He's gone out of his mind," Maria said.

FLOYD stroked the ball across 20 feet of sand, up and over the front lip of the bunker and onto the green. The ball rolled gently to a stop 2 feet from the hole.

Sindelar, the 29-year-old from New York, has made only two bogeys in the first three rounds of this tournament in extending his string of sub-par rounds.

Brown seemed to have the third-round lead all to himself before his drive at the par-4 16th went off line and plugged just below the edge of a fairway bunker. All he could do was blast free to the fairway and accept bogey 5 as the result.

Then he hit far right and behind the 17th green and had to take bogey 4, giving away the lead in the process.

Utah continues domination in skiing

RIKERT, Vt. (AP) — Utah continued its dominance of college skiing Saturday with two second-place finishes in the cross country relays that clinched its third straight NCAA Ski Championship.

Utah began the day with a 23-point lead over Vermont and finished with 651 points to 614 for the Catamounts, who were relegated to another second-place finish.

The Utes have won six times in the past eight years, while Vermont has placed second seven times since 1980, when it won the national title.

"Right now, it looks like Utah has the gold mine and we have the silver mine," Vermont ski director Chip LaCasse said.

Vermont entered the cross country events with a chance of ending years of frustration. It had one of its best showings ever in Friday's slalom races, with Dean Keller and Gabriella Hamberg taking first place.

But that opportunity evaporated early Saturday when Bruce Likly tripped over a pole while trying to take the lead on the first leg of the men's opening relay. He fell back to last place and the Catamounts never threatened again.

Utah finished the three-leg, 10-kilometer race in 1 hour, 11 minutes, 15 seconds, three seconds behind Colorado. Wyoming finished 3rd, St. Lawrence 4th, Vermont 5th, New Mexico 6th, Alaska-Anchorage 7th and Dartmouth 8th.

The Utes amassed 79 points, while Vermont compiled 58.

Vermont's powerful women won the 3-leg, 5K event, in 41.03. But Utah, which came in second, had only to finish higher than eighth to clinch the national title.

"The key to this meet was consistency," LaCasse said. "Utah was consistent, we weren't."

Utah won the title without winning an event while Vermont won four. That's because points are determined by the top three finishers for each school, and a school gets no points if it doesn't have three finishers.

Colorado's victory in the men's relay and fourth-place finish in the women's boosted the Buffalos past Dartmouth and Wyoming into third place overall, with 515.5 points.

Wyoming finished fourth overall with 506 points. Dartmouth was fifth with 495 points.

Sabitini defeats Chris Evert

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Gabriela Sabatini beat Chris Evert for the first time and top-ranked Steffi Graf won a third-set tiebreaker to beat Pam Shriver in Saturday's semifinals of the Virginia Slims of Florida tournament.

The fourth-seeded Sabatini, 17, won 6-1, 7-5. Evert, seeded second and ranked third in the world, had beaten Sabatini in their five previous meetings dating back to 1985.

Sabatini, ranked fifth, has now beaten everyone ranked above her except Graf, her opponent in Sunday's finals.

Graf needed two hours, 50 minutes to beat the third-seeded Shriver, 6-4, 4-6, 7-6 (7-5). Graf dodged a match point in the 10th game of the third set with a backhand volley.

"In a way I feel lucky to win," the West German said. "But at match point down I took a risk to come in and I made a tough volley. It gave me new confidence."

Graf rallied from a 3-4 deficit in the tiebreaker with a pair of passing shots and a volley placement to lead 6-4.

4-5A

Whalen's district outlook: "Cooper is very, very good. I would think we'd be in the upper part of it. We can get to a point where we can compete with them. Abilene High, Lee, Permian are all going to be good. Odessa High's got a lot of question marks."

Etc ... The Bulldogs have nine returning lettermen and five returning starters (Perez, Boyt, Mowles, Surratt, Lusby) ... Tony Perez is a returning All-District centerfielder.

MIDLAND LEE REBELS

Lee head coach Ernie Johnson is looked upon with great respect by his fellow 4-5A mentors. One coach termed Johnson, "one of the best baseball coaches in the state." Another said that because of Johnson, Lee will always be a contender.

In order for Lee to contend, though, they must overcome a glaring weakness at pitcher. Johnson said that, "without a doubt," pitching is the team's biggest "if."

1987 Numbers: 10-14, 6-6, tied for third, six games out of first.

This year's strengths: speed, good arms, defense.

Weakness: Pitching.

Starting pitchers: Durian Jenkins, Sr., RHP; Michael Pearson, Sr., RHP.

Probable defensive starters: Greg Garrett, Jr., C; Cregg McGaha, Sr., 1B; Dudley Jordan, Sr., 2B; Paul Bacon, Sr., 3B; Jenkins or Kemp Laidley, Sr., SS; Robin Pyle, Sr., LF; Laidley or Blaine Mcinally, Jr., CF; Chad Brooks, Sr., RF.

Johnson's district outlook: "Last year I upset a lot of people by saying that Cooper shouldn't lose a ball game. I really feel about the same way this year. They've got a great nucleus of players back. They're the team to beat. Midland High could give Cooper a bad time." After Cooper and MHS, Johnson sees the remainder of the district as Abilene High, Lee, San Angelo, Permian and Odessa.

Etc ... Johnson is entering his 27th year as head coach of Lee baseball, the only coach the school has ever had ... last year's 10-14 finish was worst in school history ... Lee has five returning startes (Jenkins, Pyle, Jordon, Bacon, Laidley).

ODESSA HIGH BRONCHOS

1987 Numbers: 8-13, 2-10, seventh place, eight games out of first.

This year's strengths: shortstop, infield.

Weakness: Outfield.

Starting Pitchers: Jesse Paz, Jr., RHP; Alex Spencer, Sr., RHP; Gilbert Anaya, Sr., LHP.

Probable starters: Mario Morales, Jr., C; Shawn Rodriguez, Jr., 1B; Cesar Curillo, Sr., 2B; Brad Elder, Sr., 3B; Alex Spencer, Sr., SS; James Villaloboe, Soph., LF; Jesse Paz, Jr., CF.

Coach Milton Thompson's district outlook: "Cooper, without a doubt. Maybe Midland or Permian and I hope we fit in there in the top half."

Etc ... The Bronchos have only two returning starters ... Thompson is entering his second year as head coach.

ODESSA PERMIAN PANTHERS

1987 Numbers: 20-5, 9-3, second place, three games out. Made it to post-season action as runner-up team from district.

This year's strengths: Attitude, teamwork, defense.

Weakness: Lack of experience.

Starting pitchers: Charles Carlson, Jr., RHP; Mike Morgan, Jr., RHP.

Defensive starters: Stan Wilkins, Jr., or James Smith, Sr., C; Shawn Almond, Jr., or Chad Bell, Sr., 1B; Scott Hubert, Sr., 2B; Brian Murray, Jr., or Terry Beasley, Sr., 3B; Arturo Ontiveros, Jr., SS; Charles Carlson or Mike Morgan, LF; Mike Winchell, Jr., CF; Rhett Hostenbach, Sr., RF.

Highly's district outlook: "I think it'll be tighter than most people think. I don't think Cooper is playing up to the level they expect at this time. Midland High has done extremely well. How would I position ourselves? That's an 'if,' but I'm eternally optimistic."

Etc ... Only two lettermen return for Permian ... Highly coached at Kermit from 1977-87 before landing the head baseball position at Permian.

ABILENE COOPER COUGARS

1987 Numbers: 29-2, 12-0, first place, returning state 5A champions.

This year's strengths: Overall offense, returning experience.

Weaknesses: Defense, no proven No. 2 starter, third base.

Starting pitchers: Scott Malone, Jr., RHP; Jason Satre, Sr., RHP; Lance Grider, Jr., RHP.

Defensive starters: Kyle Heller, Jr., C; Malone or Scotty Pugh, Jr., 1B; Blaine Frazier, Jr., or Ramon Moreno, Sr., 2B; Mark McAdams, Sr., 3B; Jason Marshall, Sr., SS; Satre, RF; Pugh or Moreno, CF; Phil Carpenter, LF.

District Outlook: Cooper should repeat, with Midland High and Abilene High battling for second. Head coach Andy Malone also feels Lee has an outside shot.

Etc ... The Cougars have five returning starters ... Scott Malone is a returning All-District pitcher ... Scotty Pugh was a member of the 5A All-State team at first base in '87 and Jason Marshall missed being selected at SS by one vote.

ABILENE HIGH EAGLES

1987 Numbers: 8-14, 3-9, sixth place, nine games out of first.

This year's strengths: pitching, defense.

Weakness: Youth

Starting pitchers: Jeff Reese, Sr., LHP; Matt Shurwood, Jr., RHP.

Defensive starters: Colby Wright, Sr., or Michael Ortiz, Jr., C; Reese or Lance Finley, Jr., 1B; Cory Gonzales, Jr., 2B; Todd Self, Jr., 3B; Trey Forkerway, Jr., SS; Tony Herrera, Sr., LF; Michael Riley, Sr., or Steve Ezzell, Jr., CF; Kyle Smiley, Sr., RF.

Asst. Coach Dale Ammons' district outlook: "Cooper definitely is a favorite. Midland High has a good ball club back. Permian's tough. I think we'll probably surprise some people. I look for us to be a contender."

Etc ... Virtually the entire Eagle squad is up from junior variety last year ... Six seniors are on the team, but none start ... Forkerway is a returning All-District second team SS.

SAN ANGELO BOBCATS

1987 Numbers: 10-13, 4-8, fifth place, eight games out of first.

This year's strengths: Defense.

Weaknesses: Pitching, lack of varsity experience.

Starting pitchers: Tom Englert, Jr., RHP; Manuel Grimaldo, Jr., RHP.

Defensive starters: Alan Faulkner, Sr., C; Englert or Stacy Bates, Sr., 1B; Ricky Delacruz, Sr., 2B; John Montgomery, Jr., 3B; Chad Backer, Sr., LF; Shane Bruton, Sr., CF; Mike Emmons, Jr., RF.

Coach Rex Scofield's district outlook: "Cooper's got a lot of players back. They're not beating people by 10 runs anymore, though. Abilene's going to be real good and I think Midland High is real good. Midland Lee has Ernie ... I always pick them because of him."

Etc ... The four juniors Scofield will start are all in their first year of varsity experience.

Ewing's 21 paces Knicks over Jazz

NEW YORK (AP) — Gerald Wilkins scored 22 points and Patrick Ewing 21 as the New York Knicks defeated the Utah Jazz 108-105 Saturday night despite blowing all but one of a 22-point third-quarter lead.

Mark Jackson added 18 points and 11 assists for the Knicks, who have won 14 of their last 15 games at Madison Square Garden. Karl Malone had 31 points and 15 rebounds and Thurl Bailey scored 24 points for Utah, which lost for only the second time in eight games.

The victory enabled the Knicks to break a third-place tie with idle Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division. They also pulled within one game of Washington in the race for the eighth and final playoff berth in the Eastern Conference.

Pistons 104, Cavaliers 100

PONTIAC, Mich. — Isiah Thomas scored four points in the final 1:46 and made a crucial steal with nine seconds left to lead the Detroit Pistons to a club record-tying 15th straight home-court NBA victory.

Brad Daugherty scored 24 points, including 16 in the second half, for Cleveland, which has lost eight of its last 11 games. The Pistons opened a three-game lead over second-place Atlanta in the Central Division.

Detroit, which has won 10 of its last 12 games overall, began its home winning streak with a 97-93 victory over Cleveland on Jan. 15. The Pistons previously won 15 straight home games from Jan. 15-March 4, 1986.

Bulls 112, Spurs 92

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan scored 13 of his 28 points in the third quarter as Chicago handed San Antonio its sixth straight loss.

The Spurs, who wasted 29 points by Walter Berry, have lost eight straight and 12 of their last 13 road games. The Bulls have won four straight at home and are 24-9 at Chicago Stadium.

Metro Athletic

Louisville 89, S. Carolina 57

LaBradford Smith scored 21 points and Herbert Crook had 14 as Louisville defeated South Carolina easily in the semifinals of the Metro tournament.

Memphis St. 81, Florida St. 74

Dwight Boyd and Steve Ballard had 179 points apiece as Memphis State held off Florida State in the other Metro semifinal, earning a title shot against Louisville.

ECAC North Atlantic

Boston U. 79, Niagara 68

Tony DaCosta scored a career-high 26 points to lead Boston University over Niagara 79-68 in the title game of the conference tournament.

PCAA

Utah St. 86, UC Irvine 79

Kevin Nixon scored 19 points and Utah State beat UC-Irvine to win the championship of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association.

REGULAR SEASON

No. 2 Purdue 93, Minnesota 66

Big Ten champion Purdue got 17 points from Troy Lewis and outscored Minnesota 19-4 over the final five minutes to finish the season with a school-record 27 victories.

No. 10 Michigan 95, Ohio St. 76

Glen Rice scored 29 points and Michigan ended its regular season by beating Ohio State.

Indiana 116, No. 15 Iowa 89

Keith Smart scored a career-high 32 points as Indiana ended its season with an Assembly Hall record for points in its third highest-scoring game ever.

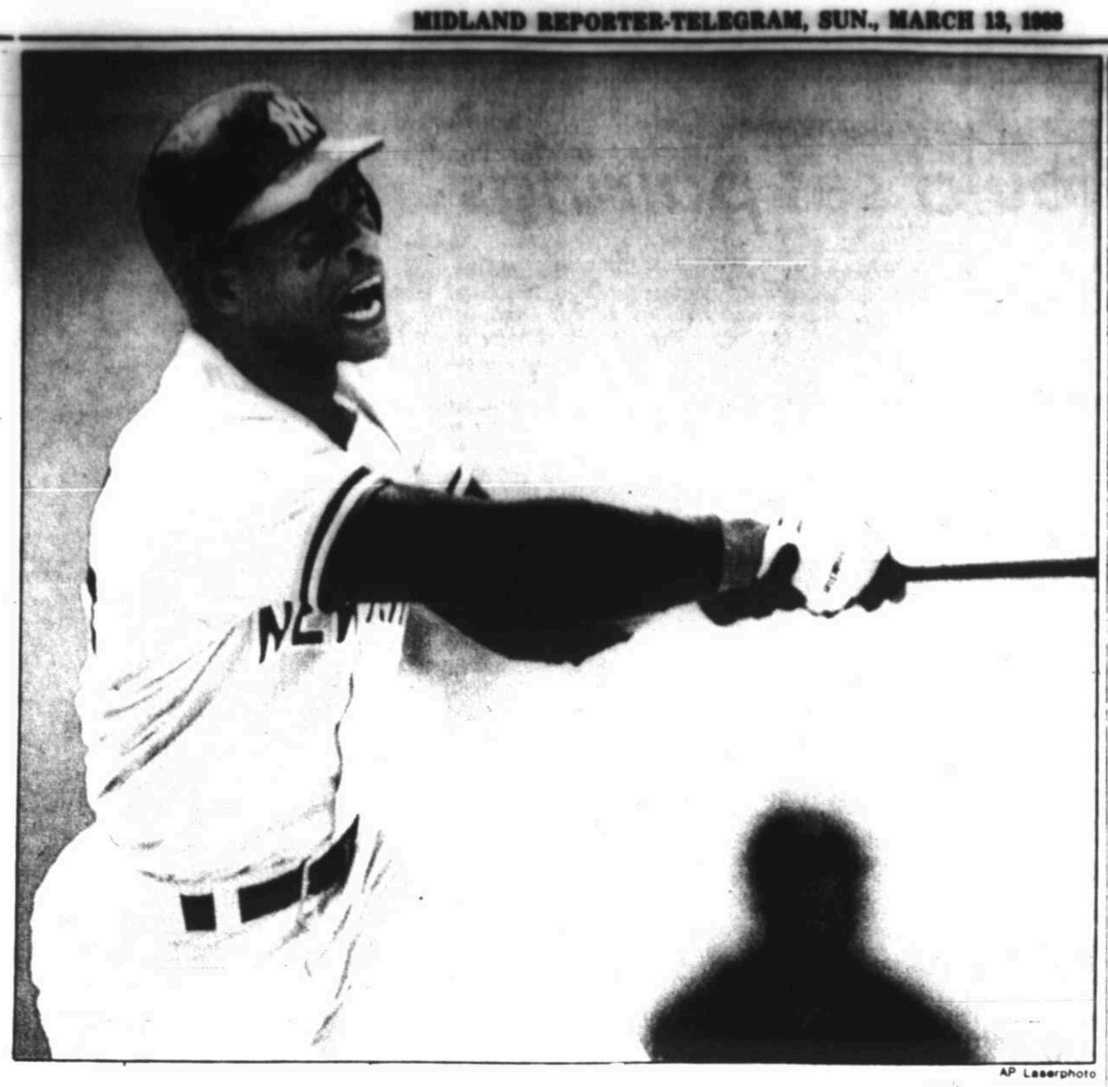

Indiana ended 19-9 and is hoping for an at-large bid in order to defend its NCAA title.

NY Mets' Eslter heats up

Associated Press

After a cold start, New York Mets rookie Kevin Elster is heating up in Florida.

Elster, who is slated to be the Mets regular shortstop this season, went hitless in his first 12 at-bats in spring training. But he now has two home runs in his last two games.

The latest was a two-run shot that sparked the Mets to a 13-4 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies Saturday.

"I better stop it or you guys will start to expect this from me all the time," said Elster, who is trying to fill the hole created when the Mets traded Rafael Santana to the New York Yankees.

Mark Carreon, Andre David, Lee Mazzilli and Howard Johnson also hit home runs for the Mets, who pounded out 16 hits against Philadelphia.

Elster's first hit this spring was a solo homer in Friday's victory over Montreal.

"I've finally relaxed," he said. "No doubt, I was pressing. I needed that first hit."

Ron Darling was the winning pitcher, scattering three hits and giving up one run over four innings.

Astros 13, Red Sox 3

Kevin Bass had three hits and Jim Pankovits drove in four runs, sparking a 19-hit attack for Houston.

Bass hit a homer in the sixth, while Pankovits drove in his runs with a single and a double. The Red Sox scored on Jim Rice's second-inning homer against winner Mike Scott and Angel Gonzalez's two-run double in the eighth.

Dodgers 2, Braves 0

Franklin Stubbs drove in two runs with a double and four Los Angeles pitchers combined for a three-hit shutout.

Winning pitcher Orel Hershiser went four innings, giving up three hits, walking one and striking out one. Jesse Orosco, Ramon Martinez and Mike Hartley also contributed to the shutout.

Blue Jays 4, Rangers 2

Rookie Pat Borders' two-run double in the eighth inning provided the winning margin for the Blue Jays.

Rick Leach's bases-loaded sacrifice fly had tied the score 2-2 with one out in the Toronto eighth. Border then drove Mitch Williams' second pitch into right-center to score Phil Campusano and Lloyd Moseby.

Toronto starter Mike Flanagan yielded two singles in four innings. Bob Shirley, who pitched out of a bases-loaded jam in the eighth inning, picked up the victory.

Reds 9, Tigers 5

Cincinnati's Eric Davis hit a towering two-run homer and Detroit rookie Richard Carter allowed two runs to score on wild pitches.

With the score tied 5-5 in the Cincinnati sixth, Nick Esasky walked and moved up on Eddie Milner's single and a throwing error by Detroit right fielder Luis Salazar. Esasky scored on Carter's first wild pitch, breaking the tie, and Milner scored on another wild pitch.

Carter pitched for the Tigers' farmclub at Lakeland of the Class A Florida State League last season.

Yankees 8, Twins 4

Claudell Washington's two-run homer highlighted a four-run first inning for the Yankees.

Washington's homer came off Twins starter Bert Blyleven, who gave up four runs in 1 2-3 innings before leaving the game with a pulled right hamstring. The Yankees had a total of 14 hits off four Twins pitchers.

Rick Rhoden, who gave up three earned runs on seven hits over the first three innings, was the winner. Blyleven took the loss.

White Sox 3, Pirates 1

The White Sox were led by pitcher Rick Horton and center fielder Lance Johnson, both acquired from St. Louis in an offseason trade.

Johnson drove in the go-ahead run with a fifth-inning bunt off Miguel Garcia, and added an RBI infield single in the seventh. Horton pitched three shutout innings, running his string of scoreless frames to eight this spring.

"I've always wanted to do well in the spring," said Horton, expected to be Chicago's starter on opening day. "I think it's dangerous to say this doesn't count or this doesn't matter because I want to work on something. You should always want to do well."

Athletics (ss) 9, Indians (ss) 5

Athletics (ss) 6, Indians (ss) 5

Mickey Tettleton and Dave Henderson homered during a five-run ninth inning to power Oakland over Cleveland at Tucson.

The game was one of two split-squad contests between the teams. In Phoenix, Oakland scored six runs in the ninth inning off Doug Jones to beat the Indians 6-5.

Cubs 5, Brewers 3

Ryne Sandberg tripled, singled, drove in two runs and scored another to lead Chicago.

Sandberg, who had been out of action with a stomach virus, drove in the Cubs' first run with a triple and then scored to tie the score at 2-2 against Teddy Higuera in the third inning.

All three Brewers runs came on solo homers, two by Robin Yount and one by Paul Molitor.

Royals 6, Cardinals 3

Danny Tartabull had three singles, drove in a run and scored a run as the Royals downed the Cardinals.

The Royals' 11-hit attack also included two singles and an RBI by rookie outfielder Gary Thurman and an RBI triple by George Brett in the first inning.

The Royals stole four bases, including Kurt Stillwell's steal of home in the second inning.

Wyoming tops UTEP to win WAC tourney

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Eric Leckner scored 22 points, including four during a Wyoming run late in the game, and the 14th-ranked Cowboys won their second straight Western Athletic Conference tournament title Saturday night with a 79-75 victory over Texas-El Paso.

The Cowboys, 26-5 and winners of nine straight games, receive an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. It's the most victories for a Wyoming team since the 1951-52 team, which was 28-7.

Short-handed Texas-El Paso, 23-9, which upset No. 17 Brigham Young Friday night, was in the game until the end. The Miners, playing with two starters sidelined and with only three players on the bench, led 58-56 on a basket by Wayne Campbell with 8:37 remaining.

However, the Cowboys, playing in their third straight conference championship game, scored nine straight points to take a 65-58 led on Leckner's turn-around jumper with 4:01 left.

Leckner started the run by scoring with 8:21 left, tying the score at 58. Fennis Dembo, who finished with 18, scored a basket and free throw during the run.

Texas-El Paso led briefly early in the game after scoring three straight baskets, two by Chris Sandle. UTEP's Tim Hardaway finished with 20, Campbell had 18 and Sandle finished with 17.

The Cowboys broke a 22-all tie when Sean Dent stole the ball and scored with 4:25 left in the half.

Wyoming, which made the NCAA tournament's final 16 last year, went on to outscore the Miners 10-6 the rest of the half, with Leckner getting seven points and Reggie Fox scoring on a 3-point goal at the buzzer, giving the Cowboys a 34-28 halftime lead.

TOURNEY—

BUT SIGNIFICANT structural changes had already been made beginning in 1951, the year a point-shaving scandal ruined the memory of a City College championship and ended Madison Square Garden's role as the site of the final game. The field was doubled to 16 teams, including automatic bids for the champions of 10 conferences.

Walter Byers, who was executive director of the NCAA from 1951 until last year, has said that Homer Cooke, who began the organization's statistical service, had suggested the concept of the automatic bid. But Wayne Duke, the commissioner of the Big Ten Conference, who then worked in the NCAA office, said Byers turned the idea into reality.

"That was a cornerstone of the success of the tournament," said Duke, who served as chairman of the tournament committee from 1978 through 1981. "It provided a solid basis for the tournament. It wasn't designed to knock the NIT out of the blocks, as people in the East were inclined to believe in those days. Walter wanted the major conferences to support the tournament. Walter is clearly the architect of the tournament."

INTO ITS third decade, the tournament faced a major perception problem. Carolina's victory over Chamberlain in 1957 was observed by the most intense coverage the tournament had known: a television network of 11 stations, a 73-station radio network in 11 states, and 64 newspaper reporters. Eddie Einhorn, now the president of the Chicago White Sox but then a senior who broadcast games for the campus station at the University of Pennsylvania, gave live reports that night in Kansas City. He spent several years trying to understand the regulations involving broadcast rights.

"They talked to all the networks," Einhorn said. "Nobody wanted it. It was considered a regional sport."

That was before Einhorn paid $27,000 for the right to syndicate the telecast of a 1968 intersectional game he called a "gimmick": UCLA, with a 47-game winning streak, against Houston before a crowd of 52,693 at the Astrodome. "The biggest thing I had in my favor was UCLA's streak," Einhorn said. "Those are the games that got the people's attention, and got the attention of the networks."

The next year, NBC paid $547,500 for television rights and net income exceeded $1,000,000 for the first time. By 1973, Scott's committee moved the championship game from Saturday afternoon to Monday night — prime time — and the television payoff exceeded $1 million. The final was seen by an audience of 39 million.

THEN CHANGES came swiftly. A 32-team tournament, in 1975, allowed conference members other than champions to receive invitations over the objections of the UCLA athletic director, J.D. Morgan. The field grew to 40 in 1979 and 48 in 1980. In 1981, teams were moved to regions outside their geographical area to balance the strength of the field. CBS won the rights in 1982 with a three-year contract worth $48 million. The bracket then grew to 52 teams in 1983, and 64 in 1985.

What was once that little cult event now sometimes runs beyond 1 a.m. in the East. The final game is an impossible ticket when held in a conventional arena, and establishes a champion that has recently redefined the term. In this decade, 11 of the 32 teams to reach a national semifinal have entered that game with eight or more losses. The eight champions in the 1980's have averaged six defeats. Of the first 38 champions, only one — Kentucky's Fiddlin' Five in 1958 — lost six times. The 10 UCLA champions lost a total of 10 games.

"I like the conference champions," Wooden said. "I think you determine the strongest team in the conference, with a conference schedule when you play home and home with every opponent, every year. I don't see: 'Well, let's give them another chance. Let's give a second, third, fourth, in some cases fifth team another chance.' Maybe it's a great thing to give people extra chances, but I think they've had a chance in the conference schedule through the year. That's a chance. They've had a good chance."

More opportunities have created more interest, which has generated more income. Forty-two years after Utah's bizarre opportunity led to Arnie Ferrin's being named the outstanding player at the end of his freshman season, Ferrin, as a member of the tournament committee, was assigned to the University of Louisville team on the night the Cardinals defeated Duke for the championship. That night, two years ago, Pervis Ellison became the first freshman to be named outstanding player since Arnie Ferrin.

Ferrin, now the chairman of the committee that will make its announcement Sunday, remembers seeing that same blank look after the initial happiness.

English Tudor Home

This week's featured home is highlighted by an English Tudor design that has four bedrooms, three baths and two living areas. One of the unique arrangements of the home are two sequestered bedroom areas that would be ideal for many families. This home is located in Green Tree Country Club Estates.

A beautiful oval inlay of leaded glass highlights the entrance to the home. A spacious formal dining room focuses on a large window that overlooks the landscaped front yard. The window is designed with leaded glass in a diamond pattern and the opposite wall has is highlighted by a jade green wallcovering with peach and wedgwood blue accents.

The foyer leads into a formal living room that focuses on a corner fireplace. This room has a cathedral ceiling and one wall looks out onto the backyard. Paneled doors with glass windows separate this room from the adjacent den, which makes this home ideal for members to be able to entertain their own friends.

The den area is fashionably decorated in a neutral grass-cloth wallpaper and a peach colored carpet. This room which is perfect as a family television room, has a large wet bar area that is spacious enough for seating. Parquet flooring surrounds the wet bar and French doors lead onto the backyard patio area.

The breakfast area and kitchen are located off the den area and formal dining room. A blue floral wallpaper only begins to highlight this lovely area. The kitchen features stained cabinets and includes the latest appliances. These appliances include a Jenn-aire cooktop, a Hotpoint dishwasher and self-cleaning oven, a Compactall trash compactor and a Sharp microwave. The kitchen window overlooks the front yard area and this kitchen also has a breakfast bar.

A blue floral wallpaper only begins to highlight the breakfast room. This lovely area features a wall of windows and makes this room a sunny retreat any morning of the year.

A hall which is adjacent to the breakfast area, leads to two sequestered bedrooms. One bedroom features a rust colored wall and the other is highlighted by a wedgwood blue wall. Both rooms have large walk-in closets and ceiling fans. These rooms also share a large hall bath that includes two sinks and a tub shower with a glass doors.

To the left of the entry, two other bedroom are located. The first bedroom could be used as a guest room and has a private access to a hall bath. This bath is conveniently located to the formal living area and could also be used as a powder room.

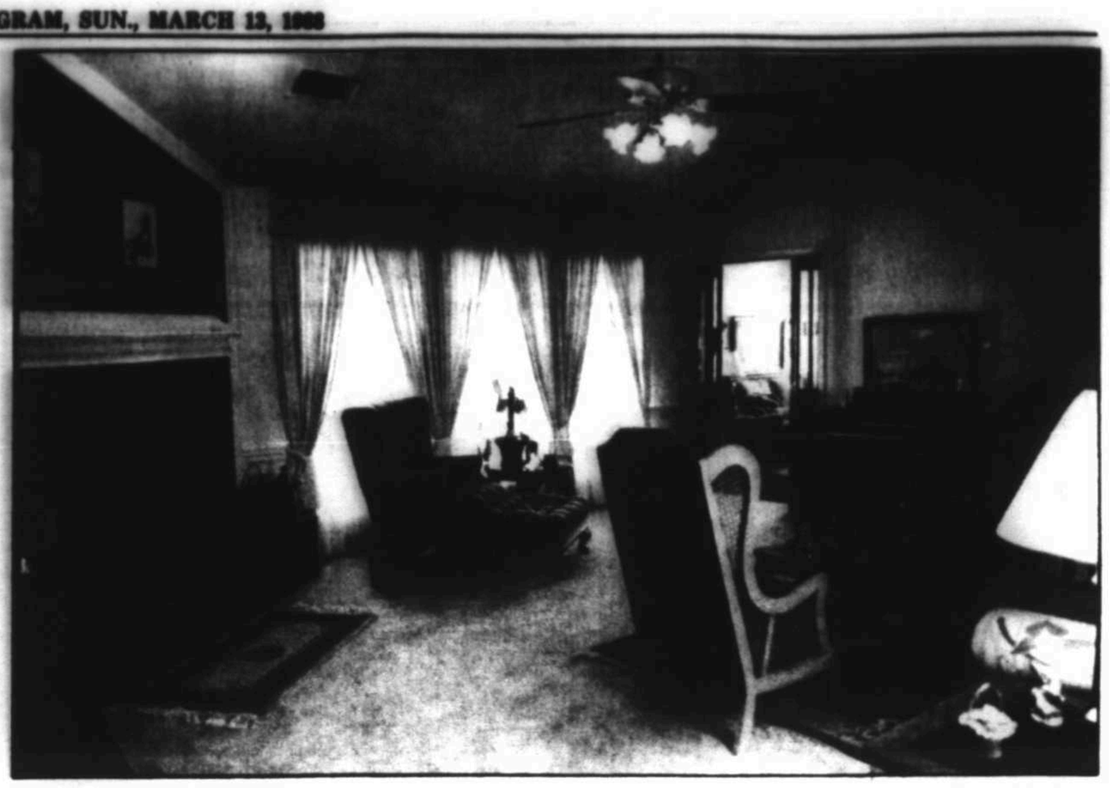

The master bedroom is sequestered from the rest of the home and is spacious enough to include a sitting area in front of a bay window. This room is decorated with vanilla carpeting and pale peach walls. A cathedral ceiling helps expand the airy feeling of this room.

The master bath is truly one of the main attractions of the home. This bath focuses on an over-sized jacuzzi tub that features two stained glass windows. These windows have a lovely tulip motif that enhances the tulip pattern of the wallpaper. This bath would be the perfect place to relax at the end of the day.

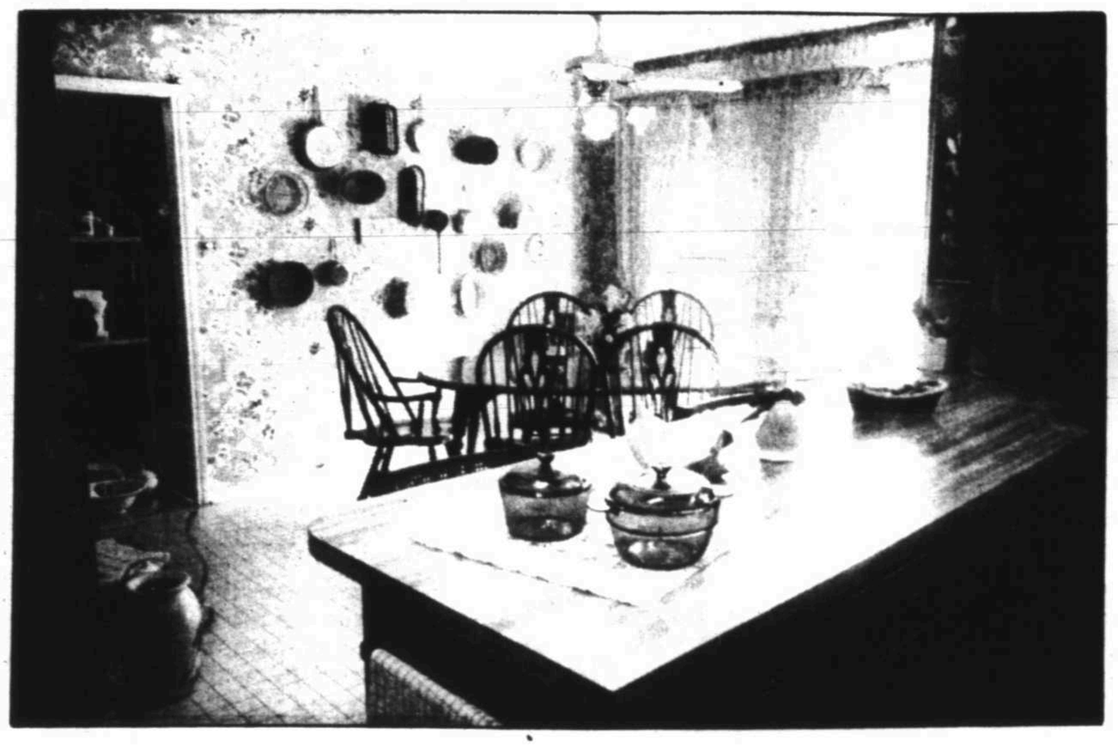

The bath has also been designed to accommodate the homeowner's individual needs. One sink has been designed taller for a man and the other cabinet has a vanity area for the lady of the home. The other features of the bath are a large stall shower, a wall of cabinets with drawers for storage and two separate, large walk-in closets.

The other amenities of the home include a utility room with sink, seven energy-efficient fans, attractive wallcovering through out the home, a two car garage with openers and a sprinkler system.

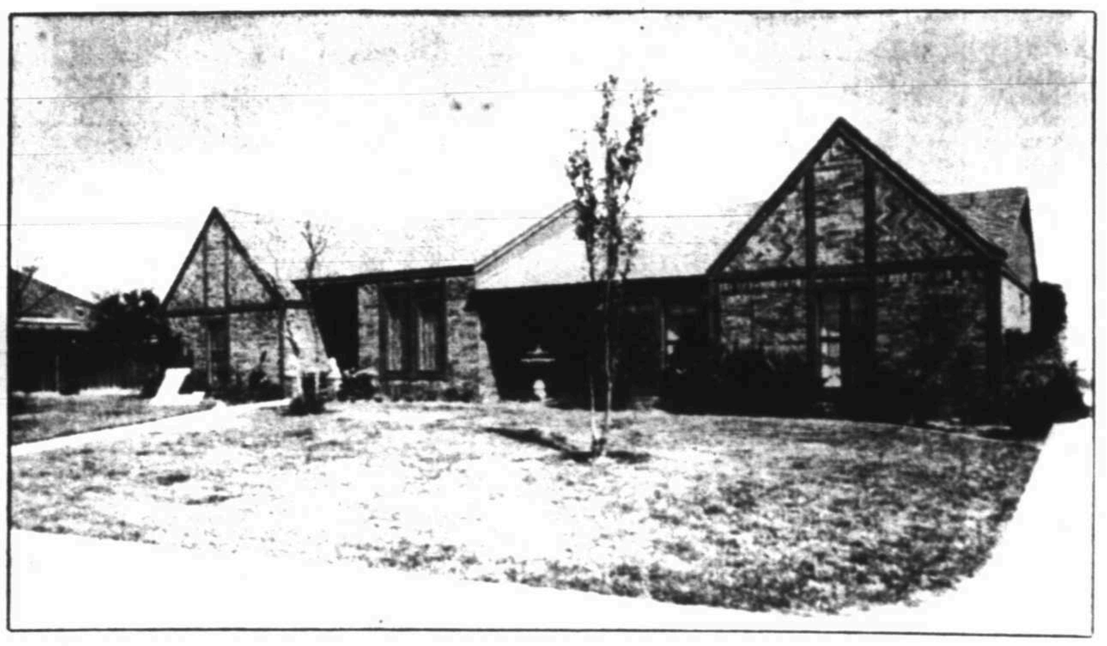

This lovely home contains approximately 2,800 square feet and is being offered by The Carriage Company, Realtors for $186,000.

The formal living room focuses on a corner fireplace. The walls in this lovely room are painted in a pale peach with white accenting the molding.

The breakfast area affords a wonderful place for a family to gather. The kitchen features stained cabinets and the sunny breakfast room is highlighted by a floral wallpaper. Two bedrooms, that share a hall bath, are located off the breakfast area.

This attractive home features an English tudor design and is landscaped with oak trees and beautiful flower beds. The home also has a fenced in backyard.

Don Harvey associate feels that being transferred adds to employee's stature

Helen Mason

When a corporation transfers an employee from one city to another, the employee usually interprets that as a step upward on the corporate ladder. "Otherwise," the reasoning might be, "I would have been left where I am, or replaced in the destination area by a local applicant. Relocation is just too costly unless the company has plans for me in the future."

Generally, this has been the attitude of a great many corporate transferees, according to research conducted by Homequity, Inc., of Wilton, Connecticut, the nation's oldest and largest relocation management firm.

"Carry that thinking a step further," said Helen Mason, an associate of Don Harvey, Realtors in Midland, "and it logically leads to a feeling of great stature for the employee, especially, as is frequently the case, when there is a promotion involved. The employee now feels more important in the company and, therefore, will be more important in the new community than he/she would have been before the promotion."

To herald this increased stature, a more expensive automobile or membership in a country club may be a logical course of action, the research shows. But the one most prevalent trend is to select a larger home.

Linda Alt, manager of market research for Homequity, said that the average size of American homes has increased nearly 19 percent since 1972. "Eighteen years ago," said Alt, "the average size of a home in America was approximately 1,600 square feet. This increased to nearly 1,900 square feet last year."

The number of bedrooms has remained about the same, according to Ms. Mason–a minimum of three, with a preference for four or more. "Actually," said Ms. Mason, the additional space is going into larger kitchens and bathrooms, and for larger family rooms.

"It seems that size, not price, is a more important consideration in the buying decision," Ms. Mason said, "because during that same period, the price of single family homes has nearly tripled, and larger houses cost more."

The research shows that in 1972, just over seven percent of new homes were 2,300 square feet or larger. Last year this figured jumped to nearly 19 percent.

"One of the most obvious ways to announce to the world that, 'I'm on my way up,'" said Alt, "is to let our homes do the talking for us. That is what we are seeing now.

Don Harvey, Realtors is a member of the Homequity Relocation Centers (HRC), a national network of some 300 independently owned real estate firms comprising more than 30,000 sales agents serving some 300 major markets across America.

Chaparral, Realtors are a diversified, full-service real estate company

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

The associates of Chaparral, Realtors are constantly striving to be a diversified, full-service real estate company that is continually broadening their scope to better serve the public, said David Pine, president.

Pine

"We are not just a real estate firm, but a full service company that has grown into different areas due to the public's needs," Pine explained. "In eight years, Chaparral has grown into a company with 21 sales associates and recently we implemented a Leasing Department."

After moving to the Colonnade at Polo Park about nine months ago, Pine was contacted by the property owners about becoming the leasing managers. "First Texas Savings contacted us because we are on-site tenants," Pine explained. "We felt that we could do a better job because of our enthusiasm for this property and its location. Chaparral has also enlisted the aid of other Midland Realtors to help us find quality tenants."

In Chaparral's proposal, Pine gave an estimated quota of leasing 20,000 square feet and they are currently in negotiations for double that amount. Pine feels that Chaparral would not have been as successful in finding these businesses without the help of the present Colonnade tenants as well as the other real estate firms in Midland.

"As the leasing agent, we are not trying to fill these spaces on a temporary basis. The companies we are negotiating with will commit to a three to five year lease. We know that you negotiate differently in Midland than you do in Dallas. People in Midland like to get to the bottom line fast and we are also being realistic about our prices," Pine said.

Pine feels that the new tenants of the Colonnade at Polo Park will benefit greatly because they can deal directly with the management instead of having to deal with a third party or an out-of-town firm. Neill Moore, who is in charge of the Commercial Departments, is assisting Pine with the Rental Department.

"I feel that this location will benefit any business that is located here. A City of Midland traffic survey that was conducted in 1986 showed that the intersection of Garfield and Loop 250 had in excess of 32,000 vehicles per day. This shopping center also has easy access to other adjoining streets," Pine explained.

Pine went on to add that it was a difficult decision for Chaparral to make about relocating. It was also a brave move for them because they are the only real estate firm that is located north of Loop 250. "We are very proud of our new offices and each of our real estate agents have their own private office which we feel makes clients more at ease when negotiating contracts," said Pine.

"I feel very positive about the Midland economy and the retail business. Chaparral should be able to make a formal announcement very soon concerning the new business that we have been in negotiation with," Pine concluded.

The associates at Chaparral, Realtors demonstrate in many ways that they are a full-service real estate company who are always trying to do the best professional job possible. With their enthusiasm for finding quality tenants for the Colonnade at Polo Park, they are demonstrating another way in which they are committed to Midland.

Bathrooms have become new focus of home remodeling

The bathroom has become the newest focus in home remodeling. Today's home owners are paying more attention to the bathroom–replacing outdated fixtures, utilizing wasted space and enhancing or remodeling the entire decor. Increasingly, home owners on the lookout for ways to save on costs and time do the remodeling themselves.

With this increased consumer interest, manufacturers of plumbing products have introduced fixtures and components to meet the needs if these "do-it-yourselfers." Among the most popular are new lines of vinyl tubs, wall surrounds, showers and toilets, which are lightweight, durable and easy to install. Available through most home centers, vinyl fixtures have a high luster finish, resist mildew, don't chip or peel and are easy to maintain.

When planning your bathroom remodeling project, take into account the existing space and dimensions, location of plumbing lines and final layout of fixtures.

For example, you can investigate the benefits of low-cost single-piece vinyl tubs. They are available in a wide array of colors and styles and are light enough for one person to handle and install.

Easy to install–requiring only a hammer, level, six-foot measuring tape, drill, screwdriver and caulk–tubs made of vinyl can be attached directly to the studs behind the dry wall or over tile walls and floors.

Vinyl wall surrounds, which come in three or four pieces, are also lightweight, easy to install and available in coordinating colors to enhance the look of your bathroom. These wall systems can be installed quickly, using panel adhesive to secure them to dry wall or tile, you'll save time and money on remodeling projects while creating a functional, east-to-maintain bath enclosure. Available in many colors from various manufacturers, wall surrounds can add sparkle to any bathroom.

Vinyl showers molded with the look of ceramic tile have a glossy finish, yet, unlike tile, doesn't peel, crack, chip or "spiderweb." Easy to install and maintain, vinyl showers snap together and are sealed with vinyl adhesive. The remodeling job can be completed in a day.

If you want to replace a shower or add one to your bath without extensive wall reconstruction, consider one-piece shower panel systems featuring tub and shower faucets and molded shelves. They are easy to install and usually come with step-by-step illustrated instructions.

Replacing faucets can be a nightmare for the do-it-yourselfer consumer. However, washerless, "no-tools" hookup faucets are available in a wide range of styles and finishes for trouble-free faucet replacement. These faucets are easy to install–you don't even need pliers or wrenches. With no threading or soldering involved, the faucet connects easily to copper and iron tubing. You need only snap it in place.

Sold through plumbing-supply contractors, one-piece water closets contained in vinyl housing have also become popular in bathroom remodeling. Leading manufacturers use vinyl for their toilets. It is durable, resists chipping and cracking, doesn't sweat like conventional ceramic toilets and is less expensive. The toilet's glossy finish is stain-resistant and easy to clean.

Experts give explaination of real estate jargon

What's in a name? Not much – that is if you're looking at real estate. Although there are several different types of properties on the market today, there are many more names to describe them. For example, Webster's defines "condominium" as "a building or complex in which tenants hold full title to units and joint ownership of common ground." Ask a marketing representative what he or she calls this type of dwelling, however, and you are likely to hear such various terms as patio home, villa, townhouse, junior executive studio, court home, garden home or conversion unit.

According to an article in the Los Angeles Times, there is essentially little difference among these residences other than the names. "Nothing wrong now with the word 'condominium,'" the article states, "but hungry developers, zealous advertising representatives and inventive publicity agents coined other euphemisms when the condo market went sour a few years ago."

Jay Shackford, staff vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, explains the phenomenon this way: "Housing terms grow out of tradition, something that the industry just accepts..."

Thus, if you are having problems deciding what to call a real estate tab that includes several types of these dwellings, maybe condominium is the safest bet.

Langston Realtors talk about...

Home Buyers' Fair announced

Langston

Langston Realtors, in conjunction with Claydesta Mortgage Bankers, will present Midland's first Home Buyers' Fair Saturday and Sunday, April 16-17, in the Claydesta Atrium.

Q. What is a Home Buyers' Fair?

A. It is a fair designed for potential or "just thinking" home buyers as well as for home owners. Over 200 homes will be exhibited in one place, a sort of one-stop shopping opportunity to inform interested persons about the residential market, values, mortgages and other topics pertinent to home owners or potential home owners.

Q. Who attends a Home Buyers' Fair?

A. Anyone interested in homes! Potential buyers can, in a relaxed atmosphere, find out about styles, costs, amenities, neighborhoods, what is on the market, mortgages, etc. Potential sellers can, in a very short period of time, learn what their competition may be and what their home may sell for. The information available at the Fair is especially valuable to first time home buyers or to anyone thinking of "buying up".

Q. How many homes will be displayed?

A. Over 200 homes can be seen in a very short period of time through large color photographs, accompanied by descriptive "hand outs" on each property. Langston associates will also be available to answer questions, to offer additional information on properties, and to take an interested party to personally view any of the homes. In one or two hours a person could become very knowledgeable about the entire residential market in Midland.

Q. Will I learn how much house I can afford?

A. Yes! Claydesta Mortgage Bankers personnel will be on hand to "prequalify" everyone who wants to know what size mortgage they can obtain and what price home this will buy. Claydesta staff will also advise Fair participants on closing costs, on refinancing possibilities, and on which mortgage program may be best to meet a buyer's budget or financial situation. So many new programs are available in today's market that even we in the real estate sales profession find it difficult to keep up with all the changes and developments in home financing. We welcome a mortgage banker's assistance and counseling for our buyers.

Q. What else is planned for the Fair?

A. Many seminars on topics of interest to buyers, owners and "someday" buyers are already planned for the Fair. Suzanne Smith of Claydesta Mortgage Bankers will offer tips and advice designed especially for first time home buyers. Associates from The Design Guild will demonstrate how "high cost-high fashion" interiors can be copied for a fraction of the expense, and Susie Wilmeth of Tom's Tree House will talk on landscaping; show a slide presentation on the difference it makes in the appearance of a home and will give suggestions for hardy, easy-care planting especially suitable for our area. In another seminar she will show how to put and care for "color" in your yard or terrace. "How to Buy a Foreclosure" promises to be one of the more challenging seminars to be presented at the Fair.

Q. We've been thinking of selling; can we get our home in the Home Buyers' Fair?

A. If you are considering selling, we can think of no better marketing exposure for your home than that of the two day Fair. Any Langston associate will be glad to meet with you, do a free market analysis of your property, then, if you do decide to sell, to list your home for presentation in the Fair.

Q. The Fair sounds like fun! Can the whole family come?

A. We hope they do! There will be free balloons, Coco-Colas and popcorn for everyone - contests for the children, plus all the great information. Hours are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday and from noon to 5 p.m. on Sunday.

Joanne Langston is the president/broker of Langston Realtors, one of the city's largest real estate firms, with 41 sales associates serving Midland for 23 years.

Benefit of real estate tax changes explained

McDonald

The dust has settled on new tax legislation which addresses concerns arising from the 1986 Tax Reform Act, and one of the winners was real estate. This legislation, designed to raise $9 billion in fiscal 1988 and $14 billion in fiscal 1989, was part of a comprehensive budget package which gained Congressional approval shortly before Christmas.

Although the bill does include a cap on the home mortgage deductions, commercial real estate will benefit from the repeal of the complicated non-dealer installment sales rules and from the defeat of a proposal which would have limited the use of tax-deferred like-kind exchanges.

The new legislation changes back to the pre-1986 installment-sales rules, specifically by repealing the "proportionate disallowanced rule" for those persons who do not buy and sell real estate for a living, and reinstating the old rules for taxing installment sales gains.

There is an exception for non-dealers who provide more than $5 million of financing, whereby they owe interest on deferred installment-sale gain which is a result of more than $5 million in seller financing. If this applies to you, you are advised to talk with your accountant or tax advisor.

While the repeal of the installment-sales rules was the first substantial change to the 1986 tax act, commercial real estate investors will also bebefit from the absence of legislation which would have ended the deferral of tax liability on gain from like-kind exchanges of real property. With this provision intact, investors can continue to do exchanging of properties when other forms of sale would have been impossible because of the tax consequences.

The legislation setting a $1 million cap on the amount of home mortgage principal for which interest payments are deductible begins wiuth the 1988 tax year. This cap applies to mortgage debt, acquired after October 13, 1987, and used to acquire, construct or improve a first or second home.

Realtors opposed this cap on mortgage interest deductibility since they felt it could be easily lowered later to a level which could effect many homeowners and that it was a symbol of their commitment to reduce the budget deficit.

The new tax legislation also allows home owners to take deductions for interest payments on as much as $100,000 in home-equity loans where the proceeds of the loan are used for consumer items. Home-equity loans may not become prevelant in Texas, however, because the Homestead Act makes them unenforceable.

Darrell McDonald is president of the Midland Board of Realtors.

Give your kitchen a quick facelift with new, attractive vinyl flooring

If you're looking for an inexpensive way to give your kitchen a fresh, contemporary look, vinyl flooring is a wise choice.

Since World War II, vinyl has revolutionized the flooring industry, as affordable tiles and sheet rolls have become available to the average consumer in an ever-growing range of colors and styles.

The dull hardwood and linoleum floors of a generation ago have been decoratively replaced by the mass-production of vinyl flooring. In fact, linoleum, which is not water-resistant, is no longer manufactured in the United States.

Many manufacturers of vinyl flooring offer a wide variety of vinyl patterns, ranging from wood-grain look-alikes to intricate mosiac designs.

Vinyl floor coverings are attractive, water-resistant and easy-to-maintain. Since most homeowners have little time to spend on clean-up, vinyl flooring is often preferred because marks and spills can be wiped away with ease. Another important feature of vinyl flooring is the fact that many surfaces do not require waxing.

If you're the do-it-yourselfer type, installing a vinyl kitchen floor on a free weekend could be well worth the effort. All that is needed are a few tools from your neighborhood hardware store and a little elbow grease. And, the manufacturer's instructions should be carefully followed, of course.

In addition to kitchen applications, vinyl flooring can also be an attractive design component for entryways, family rooms, bathrooms, sun porches or living/dining areas. For more information on products that best suit your needs, visit any floor covering dealer for expert advice.

If you're looking for an inexpensive way to give your kitchen a fresh, contemporaty look, vinyl flooring is a wise choice. The no-wax flooring has a high gloss finish and brilliant pearlescent beauty.

Vinyl floor coverings are attractive, water-resistant and easy to maintain. Manufacturers offer a wide variety of patterns, ranging from wood-grain look-alikes to intricate mosiac patterns.

The Super Handyman

By Al Carrell

Q. We are going to finish our basement and want to put down a subfloor. Although we have had no excessive moisture problems, are there any special precautions we should take?

A. A subfloor is a good idea for lots of reasons, but the first one that comes to mind is having warm feet.

Sweep the floor clean of all dirt and dust. You should then apply a sealer over the surface of the floor. The best way to do this is with a paint roller on a long handle.

The next layer should be a sheet of 6-mil polyethylene. Overlap and tape the seams together to cover the entire floor.

Over this layer snap chalk lines every 16 inches. These are your guidelines for gluing down sleepers. You can use 1x2's which work just fine, but some folks prefer 1x4's. Whichever you use, make sure it's pressure-treated lumber. Use your caulking gun to lay down beads of mastic over the chalk lines. Put the 1x2 sleepers over the mastic, leaving half-inch gaps between the ends where the boards meet. Drive concrete nails into these sleepers every two feet or so.

The last layer should be the plywood. I recommend using ¾" thick plywood. You should leave about ⅛" gap between sheets to allow for expansion and buckling, and leave a little extra room at the outside walls. This should be a good subfloor for just about any type of flooring you would want.

Q: I tore my vacuum cleaner bag; that is, the outer bag that's made of cloth. I have had trouble finding another one. What kind of tape will hold the bag closed until I get a new one? So far I haven't found any tape that will stay on.

A. I'd try an iron-patch, the kind you use on kids' denims. These are easily applied and stay on great. It might not look that bad either, in case you have a mother-in-law who pries into everything.

• • •

Q: A guest dropped a bowl of melted butter on my dining room carpet. How in the world can I get this up?

A. There are a couple of things to try. The first is to cover the mess completely with a solid layer of cornmeal. Let it sit on the stain overnight and then vacuum it up. Repeat this until you have absorbed all you can. Finish up with some dry-cleaning fluid, but try it first on a hidden area to be sure it won't affect the color.

• • •

Q: The glass on our windows has a residue that I'm sure is caused by water from the sprinkling system. The residue is a sort of whitish powdery cake that sticks to the glass. I've tried everything to remove it but to no avail. Do you have any last-ditch methods before I replace all the panes?

A: You are right that the sprinkler system is the probable cause of your window woes. It's probably mineral deposits in the water.

Household ammonia straight from the bottle will usually do the job. Lime dissolving products could also work. If you've tried these, here's my "big guns" method. Use very fine steel wool (000 or 0000) and ammonia. Just dip the steel wool into a dish of ammonia and start to rub over the rough residue. With a lot of elbow grease, the glass should come clean.

Once the job is done, clean with a solution of a half cup of kerosene per gallon of warm water. Dry and shine with wadded newspapers. The thin film left by the kerosene will retard the future collection of the mineral deposits.

• • •

Once the temperatures start to rise and outdoor projects become fun again, you'll probably want to do some painting. But painting outside on the patio or in the garage has a couple of drawbacks, namely, overspray and dust. These drawbacks can be eliminated by making yourself a painting booth. One of your local appliance dealers should be able to provide you with a large, empty box of corrugated cardboard. The box needs to be large enough to completely cover the piece you want to paint. Cut one of the large sides out, but make sure the others are all taped closed. To help keep dust out, tape a plastic dry-cleaning bag up over the open side to protect the piece while it is drying. Spray as much of the piece as you can without turning it and then lower the plastic bag to keep it dust-free. After one side is dry, turn the piece and spray the rest of it.

• • •

SUPER HINT — Before painting outdoors, wait until the nighttime temperatures have warmed up to at least 40 degrees. This should mean that daytime temperatures will be between 60 and 80 degrees, which is the optimum temperature for painting. Be patient and the job will go smoother.

• • •

Q: Some dreadful pranksters wrote on our sidewalks with black spray paint. How can I remove this mess?

A. I'd try a paint and varnish remover. One type lets you use a blast of water from the hose to remove the stripper after it's dissolved the paint.

About real estate with Don Campbell

What's worse than having the tax collector snapping at our heels? Just possibly when he's NOT snapping at our heels.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: The local bank sold my mortgage years ago to an out-of-state mortgage firm. When I pay it off, how can I be assured that tax bills will then come directly to me, and not to the mortgagee? Also, how can I be assured of the Federal Housing Administration refund when the mortgage is paid off? Mr. V.B., Las Vegas, Nevada

ANSWER: The safest way to make the transition from the lender handling the taxes to you handling them — once the mortgage is paid off — is to go to your county assessor when that happy day comes and make sure that his records reflect the new shift in responsibility.

The FHA refund to which you make reference is a frequently overlooked aspect of the Federal Housing Administration-backed mortgage — the amount that the home buyer pays for mortgage insurance premiums (known as the MIP) and which protects the lender from default on the part of the buyer. A hefty portion of these premiums are due the buyer in the form of a refund when he sells, refinances or (as in your case) pays the house off, free and clear. The refund is a fairly high percentage of the premiums paid because the FHA's loss experience on defaults is so low. At present the FHA has a list of about 65,000 former home buyers who are due refunds totalling about $50 million.

The normal procedure for claiming the refund is to go to your mortgage holder, once the house is paid off, and get a refund application form from him which is dutifully sent off to Washington. Actually, the mortgage holder is supposed to call your attention to this refund once you've paid it off, but it's frequently forgotten.

Since your lender is located out of state, the possibility of such a reminder from him is pretty slim so if I were you I would go to my local HUD office (the office of Housing and Urban Development, the administrator for FHA affairs) and pick up the application form, myself. It's a very simple form to fill out so don't be hoodwinked by the sharpies out there who will volunteer to do it for you for a hefty fee.

How much you'll get back will depend on such factors as the size of the mortgage and how long you paid on it. If could be a few hundred to a couple of thousand dollars.

DEAR MR. CAMPBELL: My married daughter lives in the Southwest and she and her husband are considering buying a lot with two mobile homes on it (one, in which they would live, has two bedrooms and the one with one bedroom is rented for $300 a month). The two bedroom is a 1986 model and the other is older. The price is $65,000, which seems high to me. Do you agree? And don't mobile home depreciate in value? Mrs. K.F.C., Mansfield, Ohio

ANSWER: You can't really generalize about prices for mobile homes any more than you can about conventionl single family residences. Local prevailing prices call the tune on what's "fair" and what isn't. Assuming that the $65,000 prices is for both of the homes and that the smaller and older one is renting for $300 a month, it doesn't sound that much out of line to me.

Do mobile homes depreciate quickly? I bounced this off a couple of brokers who have handled mobile home resales and for attractive ones sitting on permanent-type foundations there doesn't seem to be much, if any, basis for the fast depreciation charge. There is, however, the general feeling that mobile homes will move in tandem with the character of the mobile home park in which they are located. If the park is well maintained and well located it's obviously a big plus. But, if the park itself is going to pot, the individual mobile homes will reflect this deterioration more than a conventional home might when one or two other homes on the same block start going to seed.

Choices that Work

When you're ready for a new business environment, you have to make some serious decisions. Location, size, amenities, cost. These are all factors that can make what seems like a simple move a complex process.

The professional choice.

At Mike Lewis & Associates we're dedicated to helping your organization make the best move possible. Our knowledgeable staff can guide you through today's complicated leasing market, finding the best property for your company's needs.

The economical choice.

Once we've found the perfect property we go to work on perhaps the most important aspect of your move: the bottom line. At Mike Lewis & Associates we do our best to design lease terms to fit your needs. We're committed to helping you acquire the most efficient and practical space available.

The responsive choice.

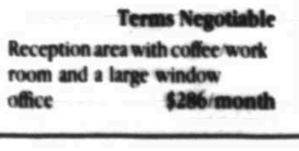

From professional architectural space planning to helpful hints on relocation, Mike Lewis & Associates is ready to make your move as smooth as possible. And after you're settled, our professional management team is there to help with any problems or needs you may have.

If you're in the market for professional office or retail space, choose Mike Lewis & Associates. It's one of the best choices you'll ever make.

TIEBREAKERS

"Your tie can make or break your image."

For more fashion tips, look for the special Spring and Summer Fashion Section in next Sunday's Midland Reporter-Telegram.

A well-dressed man just naturally seems to attract attention and his tie can make or break his image.

Remember how painstakingly Richard Gere (in the movie American Gigolo) selected his wardrobe for an evening out. He tossed one pressed shirt after another onto his bed along with a matching designer tie for each. Then he carefully selected his attire. And when he was dressed ... well, let's just say he definitely attracted attention.

Granted, most men do not have the array of shirts and ties that a movie wardrobe department can provide, but a carefully selected wardrobe can create a special style that could be a "tiebreaker" in a business deal.

For spring, men will have a variety of new colors and accessories to choose from. Designers are offering brightly colored ties in a myriad of patterns and colors: polka dots of all sizes, large and small squares and exuberant abstract patterns.

Some tie designs even resemble 20th century paintings. For example, Brian Bubb, designer for Perry Ellis Menswear, was inspired by the works of artist Juan Gris. Bubb created ties with brightly colored, sensuous patterns of an abstract painting by Gris.

But, according to Tim O'Connor, manager of S&Q Clothiers, men in West Texas are more likely to be seen in some of the new fashion colors such as teal, jade and purple.

"Ties and shirts are picking up the accent colors in the newer suits," O'Connor said. "The pretty colors will be brighter and (tie) patterns will be bolder."

O'Connor added that the power tie is no longer yellow. For spring and summer fashion, the power tie is pink.

Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Men's Wear, agreed that fashion colors will be a part of men's spring wardrobes, but added that the basic colors such as navy, red, burgundy, brown and yellow will still be popular.

Bartus said tie designs will feature more patterns than last season. Geometric prints and paisley will be good choices for the spring.

TO GO along with the new fashion color-ties will be fashion-color shirts to match, O'Connor said. Shirts with stripes also will be popular, "but the white shirt is still good for business," he added. "When in doubt, put on white."

Shirts of 100 percent cotton are picking up in sales, according to Bartus, and he believes the yellow shirt will be one of the more popular colors for the season.

Both men agreed that, in general, collars will be designed with a wider spread this season.

"In shirts, the collars will have a slight spread as opposed to the button-downs or pointed collars we've been seeing," O'Connor said.

Because of the wider spread collars, "We will see more Windsor and half-Windsor (knots for ties) coming into play," Bartus said.

Naturally, a man's shirt, tie and suit should go well together, but each piece should also should fit the style and personality of the individual wearing them. If possible, it is best to buy the suit first, then the tie and then select a shirt to go with them. It also is important to pay attention to stylish detail — shirt collars and ties are details that can make or break a man's image and should not be casually selected. (That's why Gere took so much effort in selecting his attire.)

When chosen wisely, a tie can bring color to the face, style and class to the suit, and individuality to the executive work "uniform."

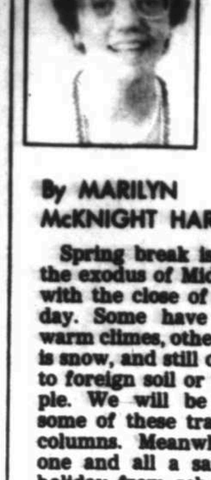

Face shape, neck-length and overall body size and height should be considered when choosing shirt collars, since a collar can enhance or balance particular features.

A man with a thin, long face can balance his look with a collar of medium or wide spread. These collars come in curved or straight styles, both appropriate for dressier suits or jackets. A wider Windsor or half-Windsor knotted tie works best with this style of collar and also enhances a narrow face.

For men with wide, round faces, a medium-to-long point, narrow spread collar is best with a standard four-in-hand knotted tie.

Small-framed men should choose small to medium-size collars and narrower ties with small knots.

Spring break is upon us, and the exodus of Midlanders began with the close of school on Friday. Some have departed for warm climes, others where there is snow, and still others on tours to foreign soil or to the Big Apple. We will be reporting on some of these travels in future columns. Meanwhile, we wish one and all a safe and happy holiday from school and work!

'TIS THE SEASON for senior parties, and among the latest was a skating party Monday evening at K C's Nutty Roller to honor 26 graduates-to-be at Midland and Lee High Schools.

The host couples were Kay and Don Bishop, Susan and Ron Britton, Elizabeth and Bryon Greaves, Anne and Jack Herbig, Laura and David Morrow, Marilee and Ed Runyan and Kay and George Smith.

Some 400 guests were invited to share in the evening's fun.

The honorees were Macey Bray, Christi Craddick, Lance Cunningham, Jenni Davis, Shelley Davis, Degen Donnelly, Clint Hamilton, Elizabeth Hickman, Mark Hubbard, Greg Kassanoff, Stephen Lintzen, Tammy Morris, Lori Pollard.

Also Danny Secker, Brian Semple, Randy Simon, Jeff Somers, Alyssa Treadway, Steven Trigger, Bradley Waller, Stirling Warren, Laura Weyman, Leslie Whitsit, Lorrie Wilson, Stephen Wilson and Steven Young.

HONORING MIDLAND HIGH SENIOR Heather Reynolds, a "Sundaes on Saturday" party was held last weekend in the Garden Room of Midland Country Club. The hostess was Carolyn (Mrs. James) Fitz-Gerald.

Some 40 guests attended, including Heather's mother, Barbara (Mrs. Jim) Reynolds.

The festive spring decorations in shades of pink and green featured floral centerpieces with graduation dolls.

Heather plans to attend the University of Oklahoma and major in business finance or computer science.

THE TEMPO PICKS UP as the wedding date approaches for Ann Grimes and Tom Nelson III of Austin.

A round of parties began last weekend with a Mexican dinner at La Bodega Restaurant on Friday evening. Hosts and hostesses were Cynthia and Brian McLaughlin, Courtney and Chris Renaud, Wes Wallace, Robert Montgomery and Ann's brother, Link Grimes.

The home of Flo (Mrs. Max) Curry was the setting for a Christmas ornament shower on Saturday morning. Flo's daughter, Angela (Mrs. Greg) Spencer, was the co-hostess.

A cocktail party was given Saturday evening at the home of Ann's aunt and uncle, Frances and Jack Matthews. Also hosting the party were Patti and Watson LaForce, Naomi and Henry Tillett and Eloise and Bob Davenport.

Ann, the daughter of longtime Midlanders Sarah and David Grimes, and her fiance are to be married April 16 in the First Presbyterian Church.

SPRING BRIDE-ELECT, Caroline Richardson, was honored with a display shower recently in the home of Gail (Mrs. Gary) Gilliland.

Caroline and Todd Bailey are planning an April 2 wedding in Boerne.

Co-hostesses for the party were Jean (Mrs. Bill) Griffin, Janell (Mrs. Bill) Pendleton, Ardis (Mrs. Wendell) Smith, Jerry (Mrs. Mickey) Cappadonna and Ann (Mrs. Ray) Bailey.

Among the 45 guests were Caroline's mother, Tiene Richardson of San Antonio and formerly of Midland, and Todd's mother, Becky Riff, also of San Antonio.

The bride was reared in Midland, where she graduated from Lee High School.

IT WAS MY FAMILY'S privilege to attend a performance of "The Music Man" at Odessa's Globe Theatre last weekend. Our hosts were Jean and Darold Hobbs of Odessa and formerly of Midland, whose 16-year-old daughter, Jennifer, played one of the River City townspeople.

Looking over the program, we found it was sprinkled with familiar names.

Midlandars involved were Dr. Charlotte Whitaker, the show's musical director and pianist, and cast members Marilyn and Neal Allen, Frances Heltzel and Tim Rosborough.

The Odessa cast members who have appeared before Midland Community Theatre audiences in recent years included Scooter Tilley of Summer Mummers fame, Buster Tieman from "Greater Tuna," Bill Weir from "The Last Meeting of the Knights of the White Magnolia," and Dominic Lopez, who portrayed Jesus Christ in "Godspell."

Long, pointed collars or wide ties overwhelm a small frame.

Medium to large collars and medium knotted ties work best for large-framed men. The smaller collars and knots appear too dainty for larger men.

Lower-banded collars work best for men with short necks, while higher-banded shirt collars are best for long-necked men. The lower collar will visually lengthen a shorter neck by not hitting right at the top of the neck. The higher-banded collar works well for a long neck because it won't expose too much, therefore avoiding an awkward appearance.

Both wide-faced and thin-faced men should avoid very thin or very wide knots, which accentuate any proportion problems by either repeating the line or offering too extreme a contrast.

Shirt size is another important factor in selecting shirt collars. If a collar is too tight, it is uncomfortable and appears untidy. When buttoned, the collar should form an inverted V, with the edge of the collar meeting at the throat. A tie should be long enough to touch the top of the man's belt line when knotted. Make sure the dimple crease of a knotted tie is in the center of the knot.

The necktie as we know it today was first worn in the 1870s, but originated in the neck cloths that men folded and wrapped around their necks, with ribbon tied over them to hold the ends in place. In the 1700s, men wore a whalebone stock. They fastened it in back with a strap or buckle, and tied it in front with a bow or knot.

The cravats of the 1600s and 1700s were often frilly and lace-trimmed. But by the mid-1800s, narrow string ties, knotted bow ties, and ascot ties had replaced the more elaborate cravat. Around 1870, the wider four-in-hand became popular for general wear, the white bow tie for evening wear, the black string tie for formal wear, and the soft Windsor tie for sportswear. In the 1900s, the formal black bow ties appeared, and more conservative men usually wore black string ties. Striped neckties also became popular.

Three knot types suitable for collar spreads

Spring fashion for men will offer a variety of new colors in ties and shirts. But the "old stand-bys" will still offer stylish alternatives.

According to Carole Jackson, author of "Color for Men," there are eight basic types of tie patterns — solid, rep (striped), foulard (Ivy League), club, plaid, geometric, dots and paisley — that each create an image.

■ Solid ties are very versatile. They can be bold or conservative and go well with solid units, patterned jackets and all shirts. Solid dark silk ties display a look of elegance, while casual wools and knits add color to a man's wardrobe with out being busy.

Some solids have a pattern, such as a red-on-red stripe. These are considered solids as long as the pattern is subtle.

■ Reps, or striped ties, are based on regimental patterns, according to Jackson. These days any diagonal stripe is called a "rep." This type of tie is considered the classic American business tie. Stripes can vary from thin to a mix of thick and thin to wide.

The width of stripe worn should be based on the man's body proportions and personality, and should blend with the tone of the suit.

■ Club ties generally are considered to be sporty, but also can be conservative. They have a solid background decorated with a regular pattern of "club-like" motifs — such as heraldic shields, sporting insignia or animals. The pattern should be small, subtle, and not instantly recognizable, Jackson said, adding that a tie with big, bold figures on it is not a club tie.

■ Plaid ties usually are considered casual. For the winter season, plaid ties of heavy wool are appropriate and accessorize tweeds and muted herringbone coats or suits nicely. But plaid ties should not be worn with pin striped suits or the more sleek worsteds.

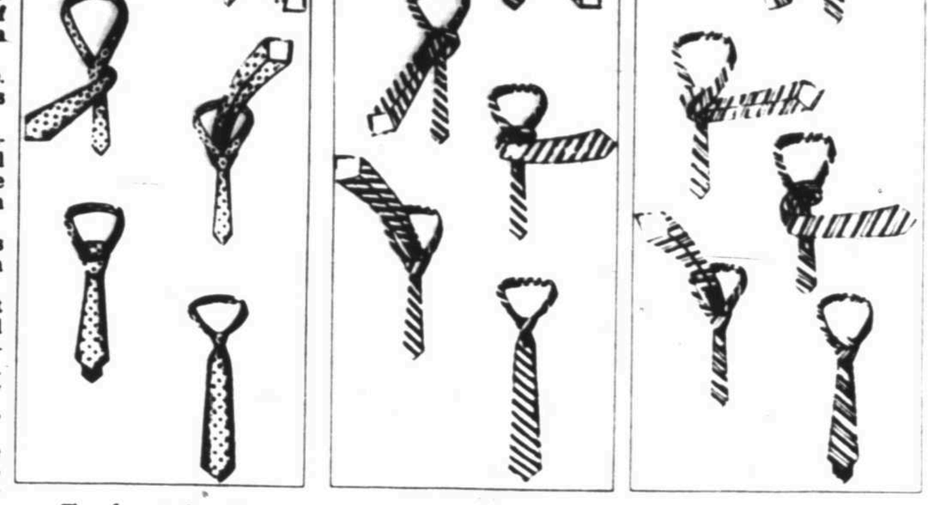

Plaid ties go well with flannel suits, and when made of linen or cotton, blend well with summer suits as well. Just remember to avoid garnish or loud plaids at any time of year.

■ Geometric ties cover everything from the enlarged diamond pattern that is similar to an Ivy League tie, to crisscrossed or vertical stripped patterns.

The large diamond shapes are more casual than the smaller versions, but either brings a pleasing angularity to an appearance — particularity useful for the large man.

■ Dots range from polka-dots to pin-dots. Traditionally a very elegant tie, the polka dot, is almost as versatile as a solid tie. Very small pin dots are more formal, and are used for evening wear or with more elegant business suits for special occasions.

■ Paisley ties are useful because they combine so many colors that mix and match well. In stronger colors, they are too sporty for a business look. But when the colors and fabric are restrained, paisley ties are elegant and dressy.

The four-in-hand | The half-Windsor | The Windsor

HOW THE tie is worn is as important as the tie itself. There are three basic knots; the four-in-hand, the half-Windsor and the Windsor. Each one is suitable with different shirt collars and overall body proportions.

■ The four-in-hand knot is a longish knot and is proportioned for the button-down collar or the standard collar of average spread.

■ The half-Windsor is more triangular, also proportioned for the standard collar, but fits nicely in a slightly wider collar spread as well.

■ The Windsor knot is wide and triangular, and is specifically for European spread collar or any shirt collar with a wide spread collar.

The tie knot should lie comfortably between the collar points with no gaps on either side and without pinching or crowding.

Knits form classic spring look of elegance

Copley News Service

Knits challenge woven fabrics for comfort and elegance. The traditional wool gabardine is yielding to belted cardigans, knitted suits and lightweight sweaters. For a classic look wear a long cardigan with a straight knit skirt; accent with a wide reptile belt. (Always wear a slip with knits to minimize body cling.) Avoid blouses that tie at the neck — the look is passe. Instead, choose blouses with collars that are button-down or rounded and soft, or simple shells. Or wear a bandeau and a scarf insert.

Postsurgical 'shakes' studied

By ROBERT P. STUDER
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

It's a common symptom. Nearly half of the 25 million patients who undergo surgery every year experience the postoperative shakes, the uncontrollable, often violent, shivering that sometimes can even rattle the entire hospital bed.

It's a phenomenon that can have dangerous implications, because it increases the patient's metabolic rate, heart rate and blood pressure at a delicate time.

The shaking, which typically lasts 15 minutes, can pull apart incisions and damage delicate surgical repairs. It also can be painfully uncomfortable because it jiggles the newly sewn incisions. It can even damage the teeth.

For more than 35 years, physicians have blamed lowered body temperature for the shaking, and have treated the symptom with that cause in mind. Now, a study at the University of California at San Francisco and at the University of Minnesota has shown that these postoperative tremors do not result from decreased body temperature at all, but from differences in the way anesthetics affect the spinal cord and the brain. The findings, say anesthesiologists involved in the study, could have major implications for how postsurgical tremors are treated.

"We now know that a very dramatic side effect of surgery has been misinterpreted for more than 35 years," says anesthesiologist Daniel I. Sessler, M.D., an assistant professor of anesthesia at UC San Francisco, and a leader of the study team.

The often severe shaking, which occurs with nearly all general anesthetics used in surgery today, he said, "can be very dramatic. Some patients literally shake the bed. It has been mistaken for a seizure."

Since they first were described in medical journals in 1950, postsurgical tremors have been assumed to be shivering — a normal response to an unavoidable drop in body temperature during surgery, the study points out.

"It was a reasonable theory, but unsupported by fact," Sessler said. "People have been trying to do something about postsurgical tremors for years, but generally without success because they have been treating it as a thermo-regulatory problem."

Instead, he and his colleagues have discovered that the anesthetic wears off in the spine while the brain is still asleep — creating, in essence, a condition where the spine is chemically disconnected from the brain. This, he said, leads to abnormal reflexes usually seen only in people with a severed spine.

Details of the study were reported to the International Anesthesia Research Society and will be published in the organization's journal, Anesthesiology, later this year.

Warming the skin quickly, with infrared heat lamps, as patients first begin to awaken from anesthesia, has proved to be a generally satisfactory way to offset the shaking, the study reports. However, the most common treatment — covering patients once shaking has started — seems to be much less successful, he said. Drug therapies also have been less effective.

In their studies, the UC San Francisco and University of Minnesota teams found that the postsurgical tremors did not resemble normal shivering and were not related to body temperature. Instead, they were identical to a condition called clonus — an abnormal spinal reflex action of people who have a severed spinal cord.

The shaking is initiated by the spinal cord as a reflex muscle action that becomes continual because the brain cannot shut it off. The shaking results from rhythmic, rapid alternating muscle contraction and relaxation.

Sessler said that the team's findings may promote development of anesthetics that have less effect on temperature regulation. Keeping surgical patients warm would be easier if patients "helped" by decreasing blood flow to the skin, thus decreasing heat loss.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Pension plans support some retirees

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Pension and Social Security benefits provide a substantial portion of many retirees' incomes. When an employee has a pension plan, the rate of income depends on the person work, how much was earned and the date of retirement.

In the United States, more than 60 percent of workers over 25 years of age are covered by a pension plan. However, these plans vary greatly. Some are funded solely by the employer, others by a combination of the employer and employee.

Pension plans are available in two basic types: defined contribution and defined benefit.

In a defined contribution plan, the employer invests a fixed amount each year for the employee. When the employee retires, the money in his account is used to purchase an annuity. The amount of annuity depends on how well the pension dollars have been invested. A profit-sharing plan is a typical defined contribution plan.

The defined benefit plan is the more common pension plan. The employer provides the employee a specified benefit with the money up front. The amount is often based on a percentage of the employee's pre-retirement pay.

When dealing with pension benefits, these are some questions to consider:

- How old do you have to be and how long do you have to be on the job before you are eligible for participation? If you change jobs when you are close to retirement, will you be eligible for pension coverage at all?
- How long before you are vested in your company's plan?
- How is the amount of pension calculated? For the most protection against inflation, pension formula should be based on your last few years of earnings.
- If you work beyond age 65 or retire early, what effect does this have on your plan? In some companies, employees are offered incentives to retire early while others are penalized. Other companies may freeze benefits at age 65 even though the employee continues to work past that age.
- Once payment is begun, will your pension benefits ever increase? Will Social Security benefits have a lowering effect upon your pension payment?
- In trying to establish your monthly income in retirement, what are the pay-out options of your plan? Most plans pay on a monthly basis; however, some do pay a lump sum distribution. The retiree should consider how much monthly income is needed. If you are dependent upon monthly payments for regular income, the choice might be to accept monthly checks that will be guaranteed for your lifetime. Otherwise, without other sources of income, you may run out of money.
- What are your choices under monthly payout provisions? A joint and survivor annuity providing regular payments to your spouse after your death is now automatic under pension laws, unless you and your spouse, in writing, choose a different option. With this annuity, the worker receives a reduced amount during his lifetime so benefits can continue to be paid to the surviving spouse.

Like Social Security benefits, the amount of revenue you anticipate from your pension plan is vital in planning retirement budget. Financial planning will prevent unwanted, needless, negative, change-of-lifestyle surprises as you retire.

Cats, dogs retire in style in Netherlands

By PAUL VERSCHUUR

WASSENAAR, Netherlands (AP) — A unique pet retirement home here is giving a carefree old age to canines and felines whose owners can no longer care for them.

The pet pensioners home run by the National Animal Care Foundation provides loving care for up to 50 dogs and 20 cats, who are looked after until they die.

It also provides their owners with peace of mind and an opportunity to visit their animal companions.

"The main target group is (elderly) people who go to a retirement home" where their often-aged pets can't accompany them, said foundation director Jaap Boersma, who runs the pet home in this affluent suburb of The Hague.

The foundation gears its pet refuge to dogs and cats who risk being left out in the cold when their owners become too old or infirm to look after them.

Taken to a public pound they would be put to death unless adopted within a short time.

The National Animal Care Foundation is a private charity started in 1928 by two ladies-in-waiting to the late Queen Wilhelmina, who died in 1962.

More than one in four people in this pet-loving nation of 14.6 million has a cat or dog, and humane treatment of animals — whether they be farm animals, pets or wild creatures — is a strong tradition.

In 1985, Boersma opened his dog retirement home, known as the Senior Club, as an annex to the 17th-century farmhouse where the foundation already operated a short-term boarding pound, an international transport service for pets whose owners go abroad, and a pet hospital complete with ambulance service.

Last October, Boersma added the Council of State for cats. The feline facility takes its tongue-in-cheek name from the nation's highest and most venerable administrative court.

Instead of confining dogs to individual cages, Boersma keeps his Senior Club residents in compounds for up to 10 dogs each to encourage their pack instinct.

Among them are two Dalmatians, a dachshund, a Pekinese and dozens of mongrels.

"We are using the only thing that a dog still has in common with the wolf that he descended from," Boersma told The Associated Press.

To ease their own adjustment to life without their owners, the Council of State cats live in a 13- by 17-foot room decorated like a living room with an ancient sofa, a low table and an out-of-order television set.

"It's quite comparable to a retirement home for humans ... You've got the same diseases, arthritis, worn hip joints, you name it," Boersma said, as he stroked a placid, three-legged cat that responded with a happy purr.

Retiring a pet to the Senior Club or Council of State costs owners $2.65 a day, but most of the costs are offset with charitable contributions.

The foundation encourages animal lovers to "adopt" a retired dog or cat with a $26.50 annual donation.

Although the foundation will provide transport for elderly owners too infirm to come on their own to see pets, visits are rare, according to Boersma, with many owners unable to cope with having to say goodbye again to their animals.

One who does visit is 73-year-old Jan de Graaff, a retired meter reader who makes the 90-minute bus-and-train trip from the nearby city of Delft every week.

"Once you've got a dog, you're hooked," said de Graaff as he stroked the thick, white fur of Freddy, the 11-year-old Samoyed he adopted after his own dog, Nestor, died at the Senior Club last year.

"It was a tragedy that he (Nestor) had to leave the house," de Graaff said, adding that after three bouts of pneumonia, he could no longer take the 12-year-old male mongrel for his daily walks.

Women's book written about aging

Hearst News Service

The nationwide study showing aspirin's role in reducing heart attack risks for men caused an adrenaline hike in at least two women.

"It's the typical study — white males only," said Paula Brown Doress, co-author with Diana Laskin Siegal of "Ourselves, Growing Older." This 500-page resource book is the second generation of the Boston Women's Health Book Collective landmark "Our Bodies, Ourselves."

" 'Ourselves, Growing Older,' " said Siegal, "is a protest to the kind of male tunnel research. The baby boomer women are moving into middle-age and they and older women have special concerns about health and lifestyle in the second half of their lives."

"The topic of women and aging is of vital concern to the more than 40 million American women who are 40 and older," said the authors of the new book. Its predecessor has sold millions of copies in 11 languages since its 1973 publication.

The chief reason the authors criticize the focus of large studies on male heart attack rates is females heart attack rates.

"Heart disease is the leading cause of death of women over 60 today, and women who have heart attacks are more likely to die from them than men," Doress said. "Women are also more likely than men to have strokes. We can no longer afford to ignore the impact of heart disease on women's health. More research is needed on women and heart disease."

The theme of "Ourselves, Growing Older," subtitled "Women Aging with Knowledge and Power," recalls the first book. As women age, the authors and their 45 contributors emphasize, they must demand the same kind of control of their health care as they did a generation ago of their reproductive rights.

"Women at midlife tend not to be taken seriously," Siegal said. "Everything is blamed on the menopause. A woman is likely to be given hormones or tranquilizers by her doctor when she could have a disease. And at the same time, menopause is a greatly neglected research area."

"Ourselves, Growing Older" covers health habits, diet, exercise, birth control for women in midlife, menopause, relationships, housing, retirement, money and caregiving as well as major medical problems from arthritis to memory lapse and loss. There is a comprehensive resource list.

"Women over 65 are twice as likely to be poor as men," Doress noted. "Shelter, fuel, food and how to pay for them all figure in a woman's health. At midlife, we can begin to make changes in order to avoid the isolation, poverty and ill health that mar the later years of many older women."

Doress, 49, was a founding member of the health collective 18 years ago, first as a young mother, then as a social and political activist.

"Our discussions on women and the control of our bodies caused us to decide we needed a course on bodies. The first book evolved from that. The first version was a stapled newsletter in 1970. The book, 'Our Bodies, Ourselves,' appeared in 1973, then the updated edition in 1985."

Siegal, 56, whose background is in public health, coordinated the new chapter, "Women Growing Older," in the 1985 edition.

"Health is so much more than the medical aspect," Siegal said. "It involves relationships and where and how we live. There is a more holistic aspect."

The authors found that the younger among the 40-plus group were concerned about their looks.

"Older women have come to terms with their looks," Siegal said. "Their standard of beauty differs. The older woman is more concerned with health and her ability to work."

Doress pointed to the special stress facing the midlife or older woman from discrimination in the workplace, the problem of caring for an elderly parent, bereavement, housing, medical costs.

"Growing older in a society that has few respected roles for elders can bring a multiplicity of stressful experiences. We have to try to balance what we can do as individuals and what we can do with political action by acting with other women."

The involvement of Doress and Siegal has been long and intense, and the mountain of material collected has been donated to the library maintained by the Boston Women's Health Book Collective. Information is available from it by mail (47 Nichols Ave., Watertown, Mass., 02172).

Keepsake doll dressed in gown identical to bride's

NORTH BRANCH, Minn. (AP) — Darlene Studer went to London to visit — not the queen, but the Duchess of York.

Studer, who runs Heirlooms for Brides out of her North Branch home, for the past eight years has been dressing dolls in formal attire designed identical to gowns worn by brides who are to receive the special gifts.

Several celebrities have Studer's dolls among their wedding keepsakes, including Sarah Ferguson, Duchess of York and wife of England's Prince Andrew.

"The doll involved 100 hours of labor with 6,350 pearls and hand-sewn beads and sequins and also included a specially designed ring, tiara, jewelry and bouquet," said Studer.

In June, Studer received a letter from Buckingham Palace: "Her Royal Highness would be delighted to receive the doll you have made."

Studer and her husband, Del, immediately made plans for the trip to London in late September.

"I did not get to meet the duchess," she said, "as they were leaving on state business the next morning and were very busy with wardrobe fittings. My husband and I were invited into the palace and he took a photo after I assembled the doll. The lady-in-waiting told me it would be put in a showcase right there in Buckingham Palace."

Studer has been featured in Modern Bride magazine and in the "Life in America" segment of a recent issue of Star magazine. She also has appeared on local and national television shows.

When Studer read about the forthcoming marriage of Maria Shriver and actor Arnold Schwarzenegger, she decided to make a doll for the bride. With attire accurate in every detail, the doll went to Shriver at the CBS Morning News show, where she was then the anchorwoman.

Shriver called to thank Studer and inquired about ordering a doll for a friend.

"I was kind of hoping the friend was Caroline Kennedy, who was planning to marry Edwin Schlossberg a short time later," Studer said. She was right. Shriver ordered a bridal doll for her cousin Caroline.

Could she design the gown from a sketch? She could, and did.

"I had 48 hours to get it done and in the mail in time for Caroline to receive it on her wedding day," Studer said.

Kennedy's gown featured shamrocks appliqued over the dropped-waist torso, sleeves, train and a headpiece.

"Luckily, I happened to have a yard of lace with four-leaf clovers," Studer said. "I had to cut a leaf off each clover and sew them on. Then I ran out of lace and had to run to the Twin Cities, but the store no longer carried that pattern, so I had to take five-leaf clovers and do more snipping."

The train on the doll gown extended 50 inches and was "a tough job," as was duplicating pearl and diamond drop earrings, plus orchids and stephanotis for the bouquet, Studer said.

Of course, most of her dolls are dressed for non-celebrity brides.

Studer's work started with the marriage of one of her daughters about eight years ago.

"I had made her wedding gown, so I decided to use the fabric that was left to make a replica to dress a doll. A local bank was sponsoring a doll contest, so I entered it and won the grand prize. I did the same thing when my second daughter was married and won the grand prize again," she said.

After that, Studer entered a bridesmaid doll and again was judged the top winner. In fact, she took top honors in that contest for eight straight years.

Opportunities, activities for meeting men abound

Associated Press

Meeting new men means acting fast — and she who hesitates will miss out.

Opportunities for meeting men abound, according to an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, but a woman has to know how to take advantage of them. Here are some suggestions?

■ Make it a rule never to turn down an invitation to do something in favor of staying home and doing nothing.

■ The more women friends you make, the more men you will meet. Women have brothers, former boyfriends, co-workers.

■ Plan solo vacations that are activity-oriented. Go to tennis camp, sign up for a scuba-diving trip, take a white-water trip down the Snake River. If you are up to it, go for helicopter skiing or sign up for Outward Bound. The more daring the activity, the higher the ratio of men to women.

■ Make an effort to look good, even if you're just going to the laundromat or library. You don't have to dress up but be sure your jeans are figure flattering. Do wear makeup.

■ Nurture your married friends, a rich source of potential dates. Forget foolish pride and tell them you'd like to meet some new men.

■ Get a dog and walk it often. Dog-walking men are as proud of their pets as new fathers are of their babies and will respond favorably to any comments you might make about their animals' sparkling personalities or lustrous coats.

■ Go to local boat or auto shows. People eyeballing the catamarans or BMWs are likely to be male and just possibly prosperous enough to buy those high-priced toys.

■ Borrow a friend's child and go the zoo. Keep your eyes open for divorced daddies on their weekend visitation forays. When you spot one who seems appealing and has an agreeable child about the same age as your charge, initiate a conversation.

■ Choose a night course where you'll learn something to jack up your self-esteem — conversational French, perhaps — or one where you'll make new friends, male and female. Stay away from courses in which you have no interest except that they attract a lot of male students — that approach rarely is successful.

■ In the supermarket, maneuver toward a man whose cart holds one bottle of Mexican beer, one frozen dinner and one quart of ice cream. He's almost sure to be single.

■ Take a Saturday job as a sales-girl in a top men's store. When a nice-looking man comes in, find out if he's available by asking questions such as, "Does your wife like you in blue?" Then be very helpful.

■ Learn the art of subtle eye-contact. No brazen staring, please. Use a come-hither look that darts out from under briefly lowered lids. Be on the alert for a responsive look from him.

Stop viewing men as prey. Men are just people, not potential husbands. Hope for the best with each one you meet but expect no more than a short, pleasant conversation.

When you are relaxed, everyone around will be, too, advised Cosmopolitan, and no one is more appealing than a person who makes others feel at ease.

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of The Midland Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Romance breakup can be traumatic

Doctor's book a how-to manual for making marriage work

By MAUREEN DOWNEY
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — The popular theme in self-help books during the past five years has been how to land a man.

With a presumption of success, the focus has shifted to how to keep him once you persuade him that commitment is not a fatal disease.

The message is being spread that monogamy is back, resurrected in part by a fear of AIDS and the realization that the single life isn't all wine coolers in the Jacuzzi and weekend trips to the mountains.

Newsweek magazine, which last year gave a cover to the bleak marital odds for professional women, devoted its Aug. 24 cover to the resurgence of marriage and the increased effort by couples to stay together.

Offered as evidence was the slight decline in U.S. marital breakups in 1986 — although the country still retains the world's highest divorce rate.

Whether this trend is substantive remains to be seen. But there is a rush on to provide field manuals to navigate women through the mine fields of marriage.

The latest strategy is from radio psychiatrist David Viscott, an on-air analyst for the ABC Talkradio Network and host of a soon-to-be-syndicated TV advice show. The program, "Getting in Touch," premiered Sept. 20.

"I think it's finally hitting home to the world that it's no longer safe to have casual sex," said Viscott, 49, a graduate of Dartmouth College and Tufts Medical School. "People in relationships are saying, 'I know I am safe here. Is it worth it to move to strange territory where the price may be my life?' "

Due out, Viscott's new book, "I Love You, Let's Work It Out" (Simon and Schuster, $17.95), contains all the requisite case histories of wedded bliss gone awry.

There's Chet, who's always talking about his life, and his suffering wife, Pauline, who can't get him to listen to how awful her day was.

Then there's Marcia, an actual caller to Viscott's radio show, who develops a backache whenever she's around her husband. She has endured it for 18 years, partly because it has kept her sex life to a minimum.

One of Viscott's recommendations is that couples maintain separate diaries, in which each disagreement would be accorded its own page. After several weeks, the couple should review this inventory to determine what goes wrong, when and under what circumstances.

Viscott deals with the topics that couples argue about most: money, sex, careers and family and children. On finances, Viscott says both partners should have an equal voice, explaining that problems develop when there is not enough money or when one person controls the purse strings.

A chapter is given to cheating in marriages, which Viscott defines broadly as "investing in another person the emotional and sexual energy that should properly be focused on your partner."

But Viscott does not advise honesty unless some reform is planned.

"It is not a good idea to tell your partner to relieve your guilt without any intention of changing your behavior," he says.

As a realist, Viscott also includes chapters on forgiving and on separating if the problems cannot be resolved. "Why should you dump yourself in the toilet?" he asks. "Life is to have a good time in."

Married to his second wife, designer Katharine Random, for almost five years, Viscott said he believes in marriage. "I believe in family, coming home and having meals together, breeding dogs, looking for antiques together - all of that."

Besides his radio and TV shows, Viscott maintains a small private psychiatric practice and directs the 3-year-old Viscott Institute for Natural Therapy in Sherman Oaks, Calif.

He plans to launch "Feelings" magazine next spring to deal with such issues as telling a child about death and overcoming anxiety at work. He is also the creator of a line of greeting cards called "In Touch."

And if all that isn't enough communicating for any one person, Viscott chartered the Love Boat for a November cruise to Acapulco, Mexico, in which he plans to lead 600 paying passengers on a "journey of self-discovery."

Retired 'Top Gun' says hit movie revived interest in aviation

By TOM BURGESS
Copley News Service

The image of the dashing, flamboyant Navy pilot is back.

And for retired Rear Adm. Al Newman, the top aviator at the Miramar Naval Air Station, it doesn't matter that it was a movie — "Top Gun" — that heralded the resurgence of interest in and pride among the Navy's elite corps of aviators.

"The movie 'Top Gun' has done miraculous things for naval aviation," said Newman, 54, who retired Nov. 1 as commander of the Naval Air Station at Miramar in San Diego, closing out a 32-year career in the Navy. Miramar is the home of Top Gun, the Navy Fighter Weapons School.

"Last year (1986), was the 75th anniversary of naval aviation. As far as the media and the public were concerned, after 'Top Gun' premiered, it might as well have been the first year," Newman said, reflecting on his 26 months as the top officer at Miramar and on his Navy career.

When "Top Gun," the story of a highly skilled and handsome F-14 Tomcat pilot, was released in the summer of 1986, "suddenly, we were discovered," Newman recalled.

The film attracted millions of moviegoers, who watched flight sequences of real F-14 Navy Tomcats dueling in mock dogfights photographed over parts of Southern California.

THE MOVIE was filled with acrobatic flying scenes showing the film's hero pulling the plane's control stick back to send the 62-foot-long, 70,000-pound, twin-tailed fighter screaming straight up, powered by the F-14's two flaming turbofan engines.

"Since the movie, everybody wants to take a picture, write an article, fly an airplane. It has a positive effect on pilots," Newman said.

Navy recruiters continue to report that the movie remains responsible, in part, for better-quality aviation cadets joining the service.

Although the movie was important to Miramar, Newman remembered that he faced a challenge when he assumed command of the air station on Sept 1, 1985, on the heels of a scandal.

Newman relieved Rear Adm. Thomas Cassidy Jr., who had been embroiled in a Pentagon investigation of defense contract mismanagement and the overpricing of airplane parts.

Cassidy was the most senior of three Miramar officers who were ordered relieved of command in June 1985 by Navy Secretary John Lehman after a series of revelations about overpricing. In one instance, it was shown that Navy officials at Miramar authorized payment of $650 for aircraft ashtrays.

It was later disclosed by Adm. James Watkins, chief of naval operations, that such overpricing of parts had occurred throughout the Navy.

Although Cassidy was reinstated following the Pentagon investigation, Newman shortly thereafter took over command.

As the air station's new commander, Newman set out to reform and reorganize supply procedures on the base.

NEWMAN RECENTLY reflected on his command and the men and women who served under him.

"Nothing makes you better than experience," said Newman, who earned his commission in 1955 in the Naval Aviation Cadet program, following undergraduate work at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Experience is what Miramar pilots need, he said. "Top Gun pilots are not very experienced, but they have some fleet experience and they've risen to the top. Somebody, in any organization, is going to be a star. These guys are stars, such as on a football or baseball team. And they'll get better."

But he especially praised the air crews of the E-2C Hawkeyes. These are not the sleek fighter planes of "Top Gun" fame, but rather the bulky propeller-driven planes with large rotating radar dishes atop their fuselages.

The Hawkeye serves as an aircraft carrier's eye-in-the-sky. It constantly sends information, from enemy positions to intelligence data, to the carrier and to the fighters already aloft.

"The air crews of the Hawkeyes don't go out and shoot down airplanes, they don't do loops, the neat things that the fighter pilots do. They have to take great personal pride in what they do," Newman said.

"A battle group commander never wants to be without an E-2C up and flying, could never go to war without one and can't really use the F-14 effectively without the E-2C."

Newman knows about what's needed in combat.

He flew 250 combat missions in the Vietnam War during four aircraft carrier assignments and commanded Fighter Squadrons 96 and 21.

"Flying combat missions reorders your priorities," said Newman, who began his flying career in the F-J3 Fury, a carrier-based fighter.

WHEN A surface-to-air missile is launched and it heads toward your airplane, "it's quite a thrill. It was exciting. It wasn't scary, more apprehensive."

CNS Photo

Retired Rear Adm. Al Newman

He remembered that during the air war over Southeast Asia, most Navy pilots could avoid surface-to-air missiles by maneuvering their F-4 Phantom fighter jet, the front-line Navy fighter of the Vietnam War.

But seeing the missile was the trick.

"Once, I didn't see a SAM launched at me. It was called out by a wingman," said Newman, who paused, thought carefully about his response, and said, "Well, I found it quick. It's always the launch that you don't see that kills you."

Marine drill instructors don't dare laugh

Life with 'moonheads' inspires silent mirth

By R.H. GROWALD
Copley News Service

Marine boot camp lasts 11 weeks. The recruit does, too, most of the time. It is hell on their drill instructors.

"We want to laugh. But we can't. Not in front of the moonheads," says Staff Sgt. Kent Haynes, a DI.

Haynes and three other DIs sit in the Marine Corps Recruit Depot headquarters in San Diego. They discuss life with the recruits.

Gunnery Sgt. George Cervantes, Staff Sgt. Arther Jordan, Staff Sgt. Roy Evans and Haynes do not noticeably resemble Godzilla.

Or Doctor Death.

Or Hurricane Camille.

Or the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

A recruit may not agree. It is understandable. DIs are seen differently by moonheads.

The DIs, and others who laugh out loud, say a recruit is a moonhead because within an hour of arrival at the depot, the recruit's head is shaved.

The moonhead pays $1.60 for the initiation rite. Then things get more physical.

Haynes says one must not guffaw when the moonheads have their first hygiene inspection.

The recruits are the future of the corps, says Cervantes. The DIs' job is not only to instill discipline, says Haynes, but also to oversee their health.

SO ONCE a day, after a session on the griddle (the drill practice ground) or even after a 40-pound pack march through the glories of Camp Pendleton, the recruits strip to shower shoes and underpants.

"And, sure enough, one or two moonheads has his skivvies on backward," says Haynes. "Damned tough not to laugh."

Haynes says he was looking for foot blisters during a hygiene inspection in the itchier reaches of Camp Pendleton. One of the moonheads standing at attention kept twitching.

"Lock it up!" said Haynes, using Marine talk for the civilian phrase, "Stand still."

CNS Graphic

The recruit kept twitching.

"Stand still!" said Haynes, using civilian talk for the Marine phrase, "Lock it up."

The recruit replied each time with the moonhead's standard, "Sir, yes, sir!"

"Sir, yes, sir!" forms most of a recruit's vocabulary.

But still the moonhead twitched.

Haynes asked the Westerner — the San Diego depot handles all Marine recruits from west of the Mississippi plus Michigan and Illinois; the depot at Parris Island, S.C., God bless them, gets the Yankees and Johnny Rebs — to explain the twitching.

"Sir, there are ants on the private's body and they are consuming him, sir!" said the twitcher.

Looking closer, Haynes counted more than 100 ants on the recruit.

Pleased with the moonhead's attempt to stand still, Haynes sent the fellow off to wash.

"Hard not to laugh," he says. He laughs.

JORDAN SAYS the DIs also must not laugh when the recruits are told on arrival to surrender "contraband" — booze, brass knuckles, dice, etc.

Evans says he never will forget the time a recruit, a minute before surrendering to the barber, asked if he could keep his hair blower.

Jordan says one may speak forcefully, even loudly, even with gestures, when a recruit marches oddly. But do not laugh.

"Like the recruit who did not swing his arms when marching. He kept his arms stuck to his sides.

"Several times I mentioned it. But he kept his arms at his sides. I suggested a human being just naturally swings his arms with walking," says Jordan.

"Sir, nobody in my family does, sir!" said the recruit.

Jordan said then perhaps his family was judged a bit eccentric in their town.

"Sir, everybody in my home town walks without swinging their arms, sir!" said the recruit.

The sergeants laugh.

Evans says a DI never laughs when, as happened, a recruit hid in the depot fence bushes for two days because he was being asked to do things his mother always had done for him.

The sergeant says mama's darlings and street toughs tend to merge into one type during the 11 weeks. "They all have moonheads, little green T-shirts and utility trousers.

"The lions become lambs. And the lambs become lions," says Evans. The sergeants say the lion tamers' lot is not all laughter.

One of the obstacles is a rope hanging from a 50-foot tower. The DIs encourage, rather heatedly, each recruit to jump through an opening in the tower floor — called the Hell Hole — and slide down the rope.

HAYNES REMEMBERS a recruit who would rather not, sir, no, sir, jump into the Hell Hole. Haynes kind of insisted. Still the recruit demurred.

Finally, Haynes used scientific explanation. "All you have to do is drop," he said.

The recruit leaped. But he got his rope holds wrong. He was more dropping than sliding.

Haynes jumped forward and caught the falling recruit. A DI pointed out to the recruit that Haynes had just saved his life.

"Sir, yes, sir!" said the recruit.

"I'll never forget his eyes," says Haynes. "Big as saucers."

Why do the sergeants volunteer to be DIs? A DI does all a recruit does. And more.

A recruit is given 20 minutes to eat. The DI usually spends the 20 minutes skipping the food. He is making sure the recruits eat properly.

"Being a DI is every Marine's dream. I want to be part of the elite," says Haynes.

"Being a DI is not a power trip," says Evans. "The recruits are the future of the corps. It's like having children."

Jordan says being a DI is a professional challenge to the DI. "A man must have challenge. The faster I run, the faster I get it over with," he says.

"The Marines are my life," says Cervantes. "To lead Marines is a great thing. The recruits? Without Marines, a leader is nothing."

Almost half of pregnant Navy women unmarried

WASHINGTON (AP) — A study by a Navy nurse suggests that a remarkably high percentage of the female sailors who become pregnant are unmarried, raising questions about the service's assimilation of women.

The study, conducted by Cmdr. Judy J. Glenn, a nurse in the obstetrics and gynecology department of the San Diego Naval Hospital, found that 41 percent of the enlisted women who became pregnant during a recent 10-month period were single at the time.

The study focused on 789 active-duty women who registered for prenatal care at the San Diego facility from July 1986 through May 1987. Of that total, 323 or 40.9 percent said they were not married.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, 17 percent of American women giving birth during the year ending in June 1986 were unmarried. Of those women aged 18 to 24, the rate was higher — 29.9 percent — but still substantially below the rate in the Navy study.

The San Diego study also found that most of the single pregnant women were young and in low-paying ranks, that 60 percent were white and 27 percent black, and that only 17 percent had been trying to become pregnant.

The study further discovered that a large majority of the single pregnant women — 69 percent — decided to remain in the Navy rather than choose an option to resign.

Such findings raise questions about the Navy's provision of sex education to female sailors; its ability or willingness to provide the types of services needed by young, single parents; and the impact of pregnancy and single parenthood on combat readiness.

Such issues apparently are considered so touchy by the Navy that it initially refused to release Glenn's study, even though a report on her work had appeared in the independent weekly paper "Navy Times."

After two days of prodding, the Navy finally released the study along with a prepared statement noting the work was part of "a local health care initiative."

The Navy's hesitancy to release the study comes amid promises by its civilian leader, Secretary James H. Webb, to expand job opportunities for women and to crack down on sexual harassment. It also comes as a special panel created by Webb is reporting new anecdotal evidence that Navy commanders are frustrated over the service's pregnancy rate.

"Unit commanders have expressed the opinion that an effective and ongoing education program regarding sex, pregnancy and responsible parenthood would contribute to a reduction in the Navy's pregnancy rate," it said.

Glenn agreed on the need for additional support services.

"We blame the women when they get pregnant, but we don't do enough to help them not get pregnant," she said.

St. Patrick's Day — Ireland's greatest national holiday and holy day — is a special day set aside when everyone can bask in the luck of the Irish. Although this day is primarily a religious observance honoring St. Patrick, Irish people also consider it a celebration of the pleasures of good fellowship and conviviality.

But you don't have to be Irish to raise your glass and toast someone on St. Patrick's Day. In fact, you don't even have to wait for St. Patrick's Day to give a toast. Toasts are appropriate at banquets, weddings or any gathering where people assemble to celebrate the guest or guests of honor.

THE HOLIDAY became associated with drinking because St. Patrick taught his countrymen the art of distillation, according to "Celebrations: The Complete Book of American Holidays" by Robert J. Myers. Poteen, the one-time traditional drink on St. Patrick's Day in Ireland, was said to have been named for St. Patrick.

However, Myers wrote, "In truth, St. Patrick and his followers kept a strict abstinence from alcohol. His celebrating compatriots of today can be said to be spiritual in a more earthly way, their spirits being more potable than prayerful."

Americans and Irish still celebrate St. Patrick's Day by drinking to the patron saint's health. But in recent times, glasses are filled with green beer rather than poteen and revelers who catch the Irish spirit may find themselves called upon to give a toast.

Toasting seems to bring out the poetry and wittiness in everyone, and toasters often find themselves in the company of such notable poets as Shakespeare, Byron and Tennyson. Drinking a toast perpetuates a custom that had its origins in the days of the ancient Greeks and Romans. They solemized their drinking by offering "healths" to their gods and to the dead. Drinking to living persons soon was added and became customary as well.

AMONG THE GOTHS, personal toasts were also practiced. Their greeting in drinking was "Hail." The Anglo-Saxons had a variant of this in their "Waes hael," meaning, "Be of good health." From this term came the American version "wassail" used to describe festive drinking.

Strictly speaking, the word "toast" as related to drinking did not arise until the 17th century in England and was related to the practice of putting a bit of toasted bread into a drink. The bread was intended to add flavor in the way an olive is added to a martini. In time the word toast referred to drinking to someone's health. In England, a toast was observed from bended knee and the Scotch offered toasts with one foot on the table and the other on the chair.

Modern-day toasts are limited to reciting the toast and raising the glass to the "toastee" or touching glasses. At weddings the bride and groom often face each other and intertwine forearms while drinking.

WORDS SPOKEN during toasts run the gamut from the sentimental to the silly, but no matter how formal the occasion, toasts usually offer some wit. Obviously, the toast offered should fit the occasion in both mood and language.

At formal banquets the designated toastmaster is the person who offers the toasts and calls upon others to make toasts. Rules of etiquette for toasting are offered in "Toasts for All Occasions" edited by Lewis C. Henry.

Henry writes, "In offering the toast, the toastmaster rises, lifts his glass and proposes the toasts. He may request the guests rise with him in drinking the toast. The person to whom the toast is made remains seated and does not drink with the others. After the drink, he rises and thanks them briefly. He does not respond with a speech unless he is asked to do so."

The best advice when offering a toast, according to Henry, is to not get carried away. Toastmasters are advised to follow the "Three Be's" of public speaking: "Begin, Be Brief, Be seated."

Toasts for different occasions follow:

■ To the old , long life and treasure
To the young, all life and pleasure. — Ben Johnson

■ To all the luck in the world, and may it all be mine.

Celebrations planned

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Irish eyes will be smiling Thursday when millions of people in Ireland and America celebrate St. Patrick's Day. Thousands of people will line the streets in cities across America to watch St. Patrick's Day parades. Several celebrations planned for Midlanders follow:

■ Ricky McClellan, manager of Harrigan's, said green beer and margaritas will be served in honor of St. Patrick's Day.

"My wife and I are going to decorate the restaurant and we plan to have a miniature party," McClellan said.

The manager said that giving toasts in a public restaurant has become a rarity, but for special occasions, especially New Year's, toasts are still popular.

■ Eric Axelson, manager of the Wall Street Bar and Grill, said "We don't usually do anything special for St. Patrick's Day, except speak with an accent."

■ Steve Korff, general manager of Bennigan's said "We own St. Patrick's Day in the Permian Basin."

Korff said the restaurant is having its annual Clover Hunt with shamrocks hidden around the inside of the restaurant for customers to find. "The Clover Hunt is like a lottery game, but everyone is a winner," he said. Prizes for the Clover Hunt will include T-shirts, buttons and tankards.

Korff said green beer and Irish whiskey will be available, with some drinks being sold in souvenir mugs. Irish music will be played and Korff said the only Irish tradition Bennignan's won't observe will be the serving of corn beef and cabbage. "Corn beef and cabbage haven't gone over well in the Permian Basin," he said.

The general manager said he and his bartender have plenty of toasts to give when the occasion arises. "In fact," he said, "we have toasts and sayings on wall hangings and artwork everywhere in the restaurant."

One of Korff's favorite toasts is the traditional "Here's to dying and getting to heaven a half an hour before the devil knows you're dead."

DEAR ABBY

Dirty words tarnish silver screen for fans

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the lady who dislikes dirty jokes reminded me of something that has been bothering me for quite a while. Writing to you about it may not accomplish anything, but at least I'll get it off my chest.

I have been an avid movie fan for almost 50 years. For many years, my husband and I went to a movie once a week. During World War II, we went to two movies a week.

In recent years, we go to two — maybe three — movies a year. Why don't we go more often? Because the language in most movies today is just plain vulgar! Abby, nudity I can take — but the foul language is disgusting.

I'm no prude. I sometimes resort to swearing myself, but to sit for two hours and listen to nothing but "s—" an "f—" in every other sentence is not my idea of entertainment.

I suppose because the young moviemakers use that kind of language in their everyday conversation, they think everybody else does. Well, everybody else doesn't!

This is especially frustrating for us because we live within walking distance of a theater with 10 screens — and we can't find a clean one to go to. — FORMER MOVIE FAN, ARROYO GRANDE, CALIF.

DEAR FORMER FAN: Amen, sister!

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating a 67-year-old widower for more than five years. I am 65. He says he loves me and will marry me under his conditions — his conditions meaning that he is free to continue to date other ladies. (His term is to "service" them!)

What do you think of this? I don't care for those conditions at all. On the plus side, he is very good to me financially and otherwise.

He says he loves me and that I am No. 1. His theory is that when one is old, exclusivity isn't important. Help me decide, please. — B.J. IN TEXAS

DEAR B.J.: Marry him? I wouldn't even date him. A woman, regardless of her age, who sleeps with a man who knowingly "services" other women should be examined after every contact with the "servicer" — and the examination should include her head.

He may be clean as a whistle, but how about some of his lady friends who may have slept with a man who slept with Lord knows who!

DEAR ABBY: I am a 63-year-old woman who hasn't had sex in 15 years. My husband was in the garage today, and I asked him how he would like to go to bed, but he decided that it was time to smash the beer cans.

What can I do at this age? Any suggestions? — NEGLECTED IN SANTA ANA

DEAR NEGLECTED: Help him smash the beer cans, then tell him what "ales" you. If that doesn't work, take your problem out of the garage to a family counselor. You may be sadder — bud-weiser.

DEAR ABBY: Believe it or not, I cannot find this information anywhere, so I am turning to you. What are the seven deadly sins? — DUMB DORA IN ALBANY, N.Y.

DEAR DORA: Anger, avarice, envy, gluttony, pride, lust and sloth.

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling included).

Lively drinkers, diners abound in Dublin

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

Now that the pound vs. dollar ratio has made England one of the most expensive places to visit, we suggest vacationing in Ireland, where the economic bite is not as sharp. And if you've never been to Dublin, you're in for a delightful surprise.

This gracious city is replete with beautiful Georgian architecture, majestic squares, lovely parks and a population whose lilting tongue will keep you smiling perpetually.

Downtown Dublin is incredibly compact and begs the visitor to amble through its streets as a pedestrian.

You can wander through exquisite Merrion Square before taking a stroll in St. Stephen's Green, and then you meander through the elegant buildings of Trinity College to awesome Dublin Castle.

From all of this walking about, you're bound to get some hunger pangs, and the good news is that Dublin has some wonderful restaurants. A visit late last year allowed us to sample the following.

■ GREY DOOR (Telephone: 76-32-86).

This has to be one of the most foreign places in town since the chefs turn out elegant Russian and Finnish dishes.

The setting feels like a private club, and we enjoyed Finnish salmon baked in a flaky crust, shashlik of lamb, chicken stuffed with kasha and a delicate Finnish dessert cream studded with the Finnish equivalent of lingonberries.

■ LORD EDWARD (Telephone: 75-25-57).

When you're in the vicinity of Christchurch Cathedral, you are only a few steps away from this marvelous seafood emporium. If lobster is in season, try it with a lovely mousseline sauce.

Dublin Bay prawns are offered in a variety of styles — our favorite was baked with cheese. They also do excellent turbot that's grilled to a turn. The entrees outshine the desserts.

■ BERKELEY COURT (Telephone: 60-17-11).

Although many consider this deluxe establishment to be the capital's best hotel, they don't often speak of the very special dining room filled with beautiful antiques.

Superb game dishes with fine fresh vegetable accompaniments will make a memorable meal.

■ KING SITRIC (Telephone: 32-52-35).

Overlooking Dublin Bay, this cozy place specializes in grilled salmon and sole along with some prizewinning game bird entrees.

We tried snipe that tasted similar to mallard duck — tasty but a tad gamey. The trifle is worth saving some room for.

■ ERNIE'S (Telephone: 69-33-00).

Chef Ernie Evans is probably the most acclaimed white toque wearer in Ireland.

He does produce wonders with braised prawns in a shallot sauce, silver salmon in a court bouillon and the best stuffed sole ever. Start your meal with his ethereal periwinkles vinaigrette.

■ CASPER & GIUMBINI'S DRINK AND FOOD EMPORIUM (Telephone: 77-51-22).

One of the most fun-filled spots in town since you always can count on a lively crowd drinking and eating excessively. We actually got some authentic Irish stew that was much better than the varieties served stateside. They proudly serve over 70 labels of international beers, but if you're in the restaurant's mood, you'll stick to Guinness on draft.

■ KILKENNY KITCHEN (Telephone: 77-70-66).

Although it's self-serve, you end up getting one of the best breakfasts around. Thick rashers of Irish bacon, eggs poached in rounds of soda bread, succulent Irish sausages and homemade preserves will make your morning meal twinkle.

■ RUSSELL ROOM (Westbury Hotel) (Telephone: 79-11-22).

In our opinion, this jewel of a room serves the nicest tea we've ever had in Ireland. There are mounds of clotted cream to spread on sugar buns and toasted crumpets.

Besides a panoply of gorgeous pastries, you also can get savory items like potted shrimp and anchovy toast to work up your thirst for more tea.

■ CELTIC MEWS (Telephone: 76-07-96).

Held in high esteem by the locals, you will be sure to find most of the Irish theatrical crowd here, as well as a smattering of politicians.

We loved the roast grouse and a perfectly grilled sea trout. Probably one of the most congenial places in Dublin.

■ COFFERS (Telephone: 71-57-40).

Right near the theater district, this is a great choice for a pre-theater dinner before repairing to the Abbey or elsewhere. Steaks are the pride here, and they're darn good — although Irish beef tastes different from ours. Quite inexpensive and very popular.

■ RESTAURANT PATRICK GUILBAURD (Telephone: 76-41-92).

This is where the yuppies of Dublin gather. And if you can get past all the preening and staring of the stylishly dressed clientele, you might enjoy the French nouvelle cuisine.

Wonderful terrines made of vegetables, duck in cassis and plum tarts all add up to an enthralling dining experience.

Scenery on Irish coast surprising

By KIT SNEDAKER
Copley News Service

Ireland of the thousand welcomes has almost the same number of surprises.

Palm trees, for heaven's sake, in sheltered areas on Dingle Peninsula where the movie "Ryan's Daughter" was filmed, and so many cherry blossoms in April, it was a wonder the island wasn't overwhelmed by Japanese tourists in an orgy of cherry-blossom viewing. And beds of tulips everywhere making great splashes of yellow and red. And green — someone counted 40 different shades. I can't argue with that.

Remember, this island should be cold as a glacier. It's north of Newfoundland. Only the Gulf Stream keeps it warm. A pleasant surprise is the absence of green hats, leprechauns and professional Irishmen, three things I generally avoid. Perhaps they were there, but Ireland is so accommodating, it is anything you want it to be, and I wanted to taste real Irish food, visit old castles and feel as though I were inside James Joyce's "Ulysses" in Dublin.

I did not want to kiss the Blarney Stone. Not a single Irishman I asked had kissed the Blarney Stone, either. The Irish make such music of the English language, I couldn't top them if I swallowed the Blarney Stone.

Take the maitre d' at the Westbury Court Hotel in Dublin, for instance. When I came in alone and said, "One," he didn't look perplexed — as some maitre d's do — and lead me to a table by the kitchen door (which I always refuse).

"It's just your good self, then, is it?" His question was rhetorical; he headed for the center of the room, and I stumbled after him, grinning like a fool.

IN BETWEEN ARRIVAL and departure, Ireland was a series of just such large and small epiphanies.

A pub stop was part of each day. I concluded it's part of each Irishman's life. Even at the end of Dingle Peninsula, which looks like the end of the world and the chasm beneath, there was a pub down the road.

And the food? Breakfast is Ireland's shining meal, everywhere. Brown bread, brown scones or Irish soda bread, porridge, Irish bacon (more like Canadian bacon) and fresh eggs with steaming India tea or coffee and fresh orange juice — that's a power start.

Lunch and dinner menus were pretty much alike, melon in port, smoked salmon pate for starters. Lots of seafood, mussels and prawns, crab and salmon, trout, black sole and occasionally great beef or veal, but never pork.

Theodorea FitzGibbon, Ireland's leading food writer, told me the Irish won't choose pork on a menu because they believe it isn't what the gentry eats. It's poor man's food. Upscale taste runs to beef, salmon and veal.

Almost every place had a dessert cart with a trifle, cheesecake, diced fruit (called fruit salad) and a gateau, usually chocolate. Cake is called by its French name so universally that I even saw a box of "Gateau Cake Mix" in a grocery store.

NOUVELLE CUISINE is a receding novelty. The Park Hotel in Kenmare, magnificent, old, stately, has all the things that make a hotel interesting, including a menu with "seaurchin" sauce — that's certainly nouvelle. It's comforting to find a flaw in a place of such understated elegance. A splendid meringue swan floating on a sea of raspberry sauce from the hotel's dessert cart more than made up for a mere misspelling.

That hotel had more antiques per square inch than a museum. I made bold to turn over a plate on an antique sewing table in my room and read — Dresden.

"Don't guests walk off with some of the smaller things?" I asked Francis Brennan, the managing director.

"No," he replied, "the place isn't conducive to it."

Dublin does not disappoint fans of the late James Joyce. Even though Joyce's Martello Tower (described in the opening chapter of "Ulysses") was closed and the curator out of town, I took a shot of the outside and had tea in Bewley's Oriental Cafeteria, unchanged, it seemed, since Joyce ate there.

TRINITY COLLEGE looks as it did in Joyce's day, and any fan can buy "Joyce's Dublin" with pictures of Dave Boyle's "moral pub," Martello Tower, the beach where Joyce swam, the Strand, Sandymount and 7 Eccles St. (Bloom's house) and wander around town running into the sights and sounds of both "Ulysses" and "Finnegan's Wake."

If I were to pick one place that says "Dublin," though, it would be Merrion Square. Georgian row houses mark its boundaries, every front door identical except for color, each topped by a fanlight.

Joyce's books didn't make Dublin an international city, they only documented it.

Handel conducted the first performance of his "Messiah" here in 1724 at the Musick Hall on Fishable Street. This is the city of Synge, George Bernard Shaw, William Butler Yeats and the famous Abbey Theater. It's also the town that gave birth to the Republic of Ireland. Bullet holes from the Easter Rising of 1916 still dimple the downtown General Post Office.

Ruined castles dot the sea side of the highway, small towns on both sides, until Derry.

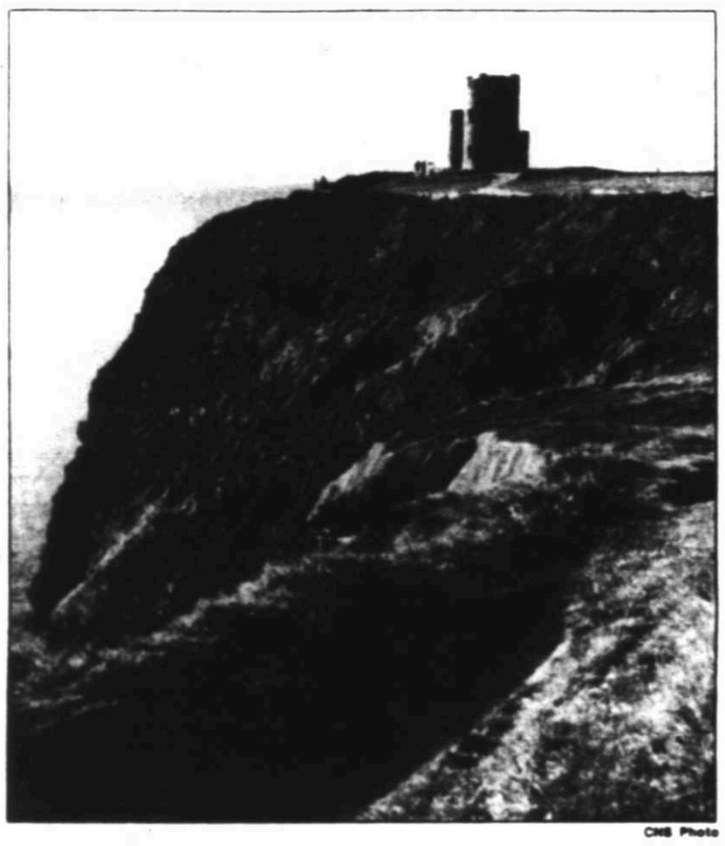

Call it Londonderry if you favor the Protestants (two-thirds of the population of Northern Ireland) or Derry if not. That was its official name until London funds helped rebuild it and the grateful town fathers added London to its name. They dropped it several years ago, but Protestants didn't.

Brown soda bread is stellar here, eaten in front of a small fire with homemade soup and a scoop of trifle for dessert.

By the time I reached Galway, I had circled the whole country, been welcomed thousands of times, surprised and delighted in equal proportion. No one gave me a short answer. No one was rude. Irish pronounce Ireland "Our-land," almost singing it.

I have a lasting memory of an old woman who joined me for a cup of tea in the Galway bus station waiting room. We exchanged home towns and somehow California was mentioned. "There, we've said it three times." She drew in a breath. "Make a wish. Wish for a safe journey."

Not me. I wished myself back next April for a thousand more welcomes.

TOASTS

■ Here's to the bride and bridegroom: We'll ask success in our prayers, and through life's dark shadows and sunshine, that good luck may ever be theirs.

■ Here's to champagne, the drink divine that makes us forget our troubles; it's made of a dollar's worth of wine, and four dollars worth of bubbles.

■ To the land we love and the "love" we "land."

■ Let us have wine and women, mirth and laughter, sermons and soda-water the day after. — Bryon

■ Saint Patick was a gentleman, who thro' strategy and stealth, drove all the snakes from Ireland — here's a bumper to his health. But not too many bumpers, lest we lose ourselves, and then, forget the good Saint Patrick, and see the snakes again.

■ I used to know a clever toast, but, pshaw! I cannot think it — so fill your glass to Anything, and, bless your souls, I'll drink it. — Wallace Irving.

■ I thank you for your welcome which was cordial, And your cordial which was welcome.

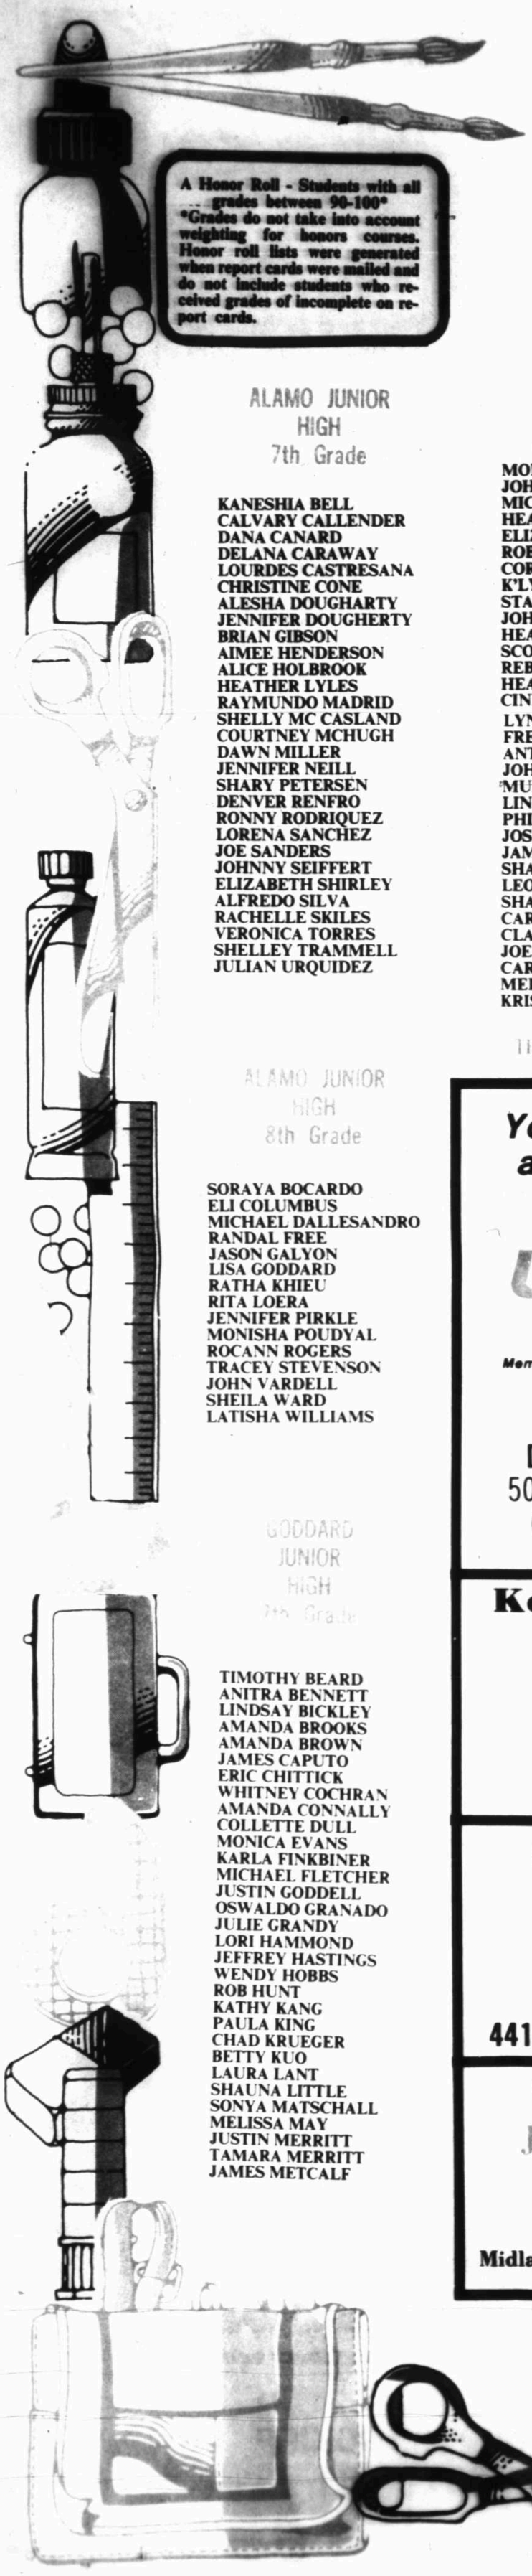

■ Here's to the ships of our navy, and the ladies of our land; may the first be ever well rigged, and the latter well manned.

■ Here's to a lady from Guam, who said, "Now the ocean's so calm, I will swim, for a lark." She encountered a shark. Let us now sing the 90th Psalm.

■ When climbing the Hill of Prosperity, may we neer meet a friend coming down.

■ Here's champagne to our real friends, and real pain to our sham friends. May we ever be able to serve a friend and noble enough to conceal it.

Dubliners celebrate millennium this year

Copley News Service

DUBLIN, Ireland — Three young Dubliners sit at a tiny table in a side-street pub, mulling a piece of startling and absurd news.

One taps her cigarette and shakes her head. Another sits with his mouth slightly open, neglecting, in his disbelief, to draw on his pint. And the third just throws back his head and laughs.

They have just been told that in many U.S. cities, a house built in the 1930s could qualify for listing in the historical register. Ha!

Their city, you see, is celebrating its millennium this year — 1,000 years of invasions and revolts and cultural advances and social tragedies and great literature and wet weather.

Wet weather — like today's. Now you are outside, under a gray Irish sky that hangs overhead like a rain-soaked newspaper. You pick your way through hordes of wool-wrapped, rosy-cheeked Dubliners, knowing that their parents lived here, and their parents' parents lived here and so on.

You pass the great stone pillars of the old General Post Office, the same post office that was barricaded during the potato famine in 1848, the same post office that was appropriated as headquarters for the Easter Uprising of 1916.

You cross the gray and venerable river Liffey on O'Connell Bridge, and soon you're standing before the gates of Trinity College, founded in 1591. History — and wool-wrapped, rosy-cheeked Dubliners — everywhere.

This city may be younger than the Egyptian pyramids and Stonehenge and Rome, but it is older than the Magna Carta and the "Canterbury Tales" and the Protestant Reformation. As urban peoples go, these Dubliners have seniority — and this is their year to see if they can make it pay.

"I wouldn't like to live anywhere other than Dublin, to tell you the truth. There's just an atmosphere," says Joe Herron, 42 years a Dubliner and 21 years a Dublin taxi driver.

But there are other, less poetic features that figure in Dublin's social and physical landscape. The bombing and shooting in Northern Ireland is but 120 miles away, for one thing, and unemployment has been running above 15 percent for years.

Many of the city's brightest young people are forced to leave home for England or Australia or the United States to get decent jobs. And among those who stay, says Herron, "there are a lot of unemployed around here who have no intention of working."

Still, there's no denying the effect of a rolling green field and a 700-year-old stone marker on an American tourist whose Constitution only just entered its third century.

The millennium marks the date upon which the Vikings were chased off and Dublin fell into Irish hands for good.

There was just this small problem with history and finding the proper event to celebrate.

Historians generally agree the first settlement here was on the south bank of the River Liffey and that it was established by Scandinavian Norsemen (Vikings) in A.D. 841. The area became a busy trading center — and a frequent target for raids by the Irish kings whose Celtic tribes had been on the island for centuries.

In 981, Irish king Mael Sechnaill II and his troops overran the city and demanded a ransom of 2,000 cattle. In 988, he made another raid and, prevailing after a 20-day siege, imposed a tax of 1 ounce of gold on every tenement in town.

Then Mael Sechnaill cut a deal with Sitric Silkenbeard, the Viking ruler of Dublin, accepted the Norsemen as allies and promptly suffered several defeats at the hands of Brian Boru, the high king of Ireland.

In 999, at the Battle of Glen Mama, Brian Boru and his soldiers took their turn at sacking Dublin. In 1014, Brian Boru and his troops prevailed in the Battle of Clontarf — which many historians have named as the confrontation that essentially ended Viking dominance in eastern Ireland.

But in 1015, Mael Sechnaill was back and sacking the town again, and then in 1029 someone got ahold of Sitric Silkenbeard's son and extorted 1,200 cows and 120 horses. And even the millennium celebration's promoters acknowledge that the Vikings held control of Dublin, if not the surrounding areas, for another 150 years.

St. Patrick's Day celebrations will swell to fill a week: an international mile race, a traditional music festival and a parade whose television rights have already been sold to "Good Morning America." In May comes the city's first international piano competition; in June, a two-week literary festival; in July, a millennium birthday party; in November, an American college football game between Boston College and West Point.

Until this year, the city's biggest promotion was probably the James Joyce Centennial in 1982, when Dublin overlooked the author's oft-written contempt for Ireland and the fact that he emigrated to the European mainland in his early 20s — and celebrated the 100th anniversary of his birth.

That celebration drew several hundred scholars and several thousand literary pilgrims over the year.

The goals for the millennium are far more ambitious. If all goes as planned, the campaign will boost the city's tourist income by 15 percent, pushing total annual tourist spending over $200 million.

AT WIT'S END

Keeping medical records results in parade of forms

BY ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Mother fell off a ladder a few weeks ago and as she was lying on the garage floor suffering from a compressed fracture, my father went for the phone to dial for an ambulance.

"Get my purse," yelled my mother, "and make sure you get the company where we have full coverage."

This is the elderly couple of the '80s. They speak fluent insurancese. Their billfolds hold more phone numbers than the Yellow Pages. They use a copier more than the microwave. They have their own filing cabinet bulging with forms of illnesses past.

They also have a picture of David Horowitz in the hallway. He's their patron saint.

They didn't used to be so together. There was a time when they went to the doctor's office or hospital, received treatment, signed a few papers and were free to go.

Today, it's a ticker-tape parade of forms to even get in. Getting out is another story. It's a lot like resigning from a book club. You're not out of it until the computer SAYS you're out of it.

My brother-in-law was threatened with legal action if he did not fill out and return a stack of claim forms or remit payment in five days. The postman would had to have been Shirley MacLaine. He had been deceased for three months.

The only real thing that people know about insurance forms is that they outlast the illness and oftentimes the patient. When my father became ill last May, he went to the hospital and Mother went "corporate." Every day she dressed for success and opened up her kitchen office for business. There were forms for the prescription services for his medication ... forms for doctors and labs. Forms for the hospital, the ambulance, the emergency services, and forms for consultants ... some of whom they actually knew by name or face.

Death by intimidation became a possibility when checks and forms passed one another in the mails. She picked up an entirely new vocabulary of "benefits denied," "additional forms for your personal files at extra charge" and "direct billing preferred."

Everyone tries ... the bookkeepers in doctors' offices ... the claims experts ... the patient. But somehow the system has become a monster unleashed by computers.

The system has produced a new disease on our horizon: Insurance Dermatitis. It's an allergy of sorts resulting from direct contact with forms (usually in triplicate) that causes people to break out in a rash, put off surgery, walk around with broken legs, and consult Reader's Digest instead of a doctor.

All I know is there was a smile on Mother's face as she lay on a hard board, flat on her back, fighting muscle spasms.

"What's so funny?" I asked.

"It's your father's turn to fill out all those forms."

Erma Bombeck is columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

BUSINESS/OIL

To waive or not to waive is question for car renters

Does waiver protect or cost consumer?

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

You fly to Dallas, rent a Ford to drive down town and take care of a day's business. On the way you are broadsided. You may have just bought yourself a Ford and more.

It all depends on whether or not you purchased a collision damage waiver or opted to save a few dollars. By the same token, you may have needlessly purchased a CDW, if you are already covered for rental cars on your personal or company automobile insurance. The whole subject of collision damage waivers is getting to be a controversial and complicated issue for the car rental industrty — and for those who rent vehicles.

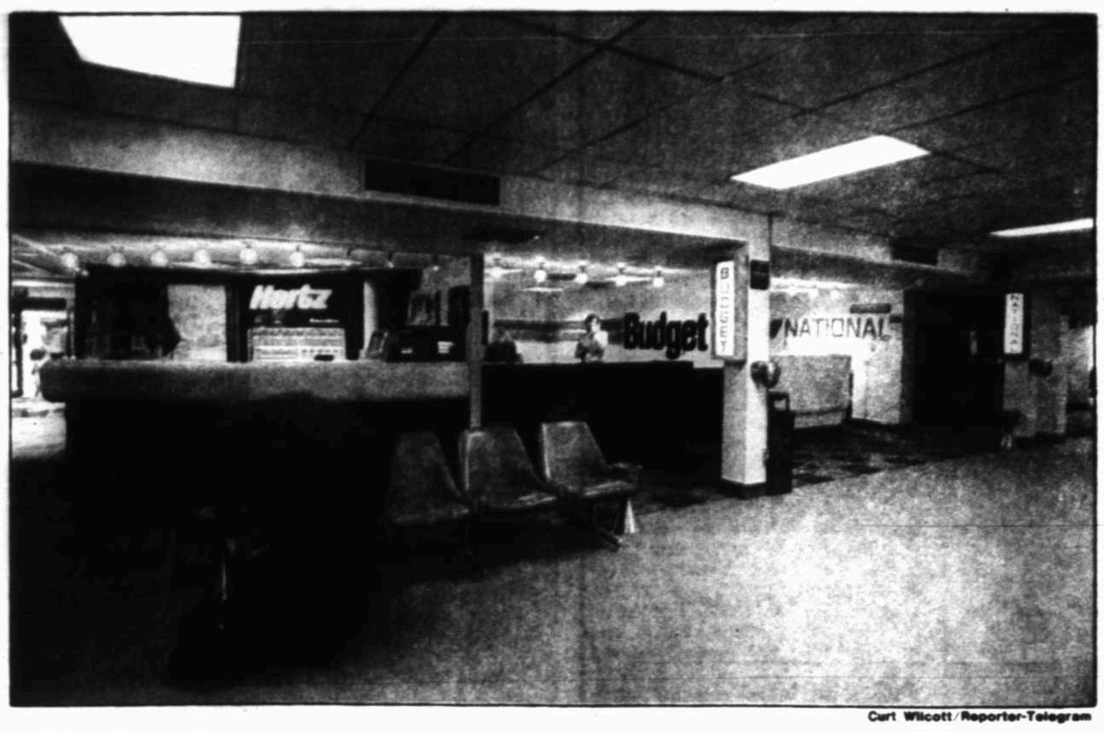

Car rental agencies, such as Hertz, Avis, Budget and Dollar, all offer waivers ranging from $5 to $9.95 daily. For that extra charge, the renter is relieved of all responsibility if the car is damaged or destroyed. Without the waiver, the renter is financially responsible for repairing the damage or replacing the car, and perhaps will be charged for "loss of use" as well.

"The waiver is not insurance," stressed Howard Barbee, manager of the Avis agency at Midland International. "It's merely a waiver of our contractual right to collect damages."

Or is it insurance? The insurance industry thinks it is, and states including Texas may eventually have to get into the disagreement.

In New York late last year, a judge ruled that a CDW does not constitute insurance under that state's Insurance Law. However, an opinion issued to the Superintendent of Insurance by the New York Attorney General stated that the CDW was insurance, and that car rental firms were engaging in the insurance business without being licensed.

In addition, the National Insurance Consumer Organization estimates that 60 percent of car owners carry collision insurance that covers rental cars, meaning many car rental customers pay for something they don't need.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

The collision damage waiver is the center of a brewing controversy between car rental agencies and insurers. Some say it's a protectant, others say it's an unnecessary expense.

Don Vandivort, manager of the National car rental agency at Midland International responded: "We have expenses and losses that someone will have to pay, whether it's a select few or the whole." He predicted that, in the near future, legislation will abolish the CDW. "Then, we'll have to make up our losses, either by raising rental rates or some other way." He said that currently the income from the sale of waivers is about even with the losses for damage and replacement.

Local car rental managers estimated that 35 to 40 percent of customers accept the waiver, and that most who decline it are covered by corporate insurance. The individuals who decline it either have personal insurance that covers rental cars, or are willing to take the risk.

He added that "scare tactics" employed by some agencies has helped generate the controversy. "I've heard stories in the industry — particularly around Florida, of the clerk telling the customer who declines a waiver that his credit card better be good to the limit. It's scare tactics like that that's giving this a bad name."

The managers of the local rental agencies contacted all agreed that it was up to the individual to decide if the CDW was an unnecessary expense or well worth the money.

The agencies suggested that the waiver was a very good idea for the renter who couldn't afford to pay for damages or replace a car, and for those who rent luxury cars such as Lincoln Continentals.

They stressed that they try to make clear to their customers what the CDW does, what the renter's responsibilities are with and without the waiver, and that it is optional.

The bottom line, it was agreed, was that the best way to eliminate unnecessary expenses with a rental car is for the customer to know beforehand exactly what his insurance policy covers, or what damages he could pay if necessary.

As Barbee with Avis pointed out, "It's better to have an informed customer than a surprised customer."

Majors plan expanded exploration efforts

Executives not distracted by short-term

By MATTHEW L. WALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The price of oil has fallen by a sharp $3 a barrel in recent weeks and some analysts predict that it could go lower by summer.

But the major American oil companies, believing that the price drop is transitory, are significantly increasing their spending to find new oil and gas.

Industry executives are not distracted by the short term. They believe that crude oil supplies will significantly tighten by the early 1990's. To produce oil then, however, they have to find it now. Typically it takes five to 10 years from the time oil is discovered until it can be produced. "Before you can get the stuff into a tank, it's five or six years," said Lawrence G. Rawl, chairman and chief executive of the Exxon Corp.

Moreover, many American oil companies believe that increasing world demand, combined with declining production in such important areas as the United States and the North Sea, will give OPEC the power by the 1990's to raise prices.

"There is a feeling that the direction of prices will be improving as we move into the 1990's," said Lodwrick Cook, chairman of the Atlantic Richfield Co., generally known as ARCO.

In addition, their success in finding oil around the world at a relatively low cost has encouraged some oil companies to increase their exploration efforts. Amoco found 30 percent more oil and gas in 1987 than it produced. Texaco, habitually a loser in the struggle to replace production with new oil resources, boasted that in 1987 it found 70 percent as much oil and gas as it pumped, compared with 46 percent in 1986.

Drilling costs have plunged in the last few years, making more projects economically viable, even at relatively modest oil prices.

"A lot of things that were economic at $22 a barrel gradually have gotten economic at $18," said David E. Quady, manager of strategic planning at the Chevron Corp., which is lifting its overall capital spending by 10 percent, to $3.2 billion, this year.

However, reflecting how oil is becoming increasingly more difficult and more costly to find in the United States, the big American oil companies are increasing the portion of their total expenditures earmarked for foreign exploration. The companies are looking for oil in such proven areas as the North Sea and offshore Indonesia. But they are also looking in new areas. The Mobil Corp. recently started exploring in Argentina and Zambia.

A survey by the Oil & Gas Journal last month found that companies plan to spend $14.36 billion this year searching for new oil in the United States, including Alaska, up 15.7 percent from last year. Companies plan to spend $4.88 billion on foreign exploration, up 35.9 percent. The amount earmarked for foreign exploration accounts for 25.4 percent of the total exploration budget, up from 20.9 percent in 1986 and 22.4 percent in 1987.

The oil companies plan to increase their total capital expenditures in the United States and abroad — including spending on exploration and production, refining, marketing, pipelines and other expenses — by 13 percent, marking the first increase in seven years.

Chili powder vendors turn up heat on spice business

By JENNIFER DIXON

FORT WORTH (AP) — Pendery's taste merchants have been selling spices by the pinch or the barrel since the business was founded by a man whose silk tophat was shot off his head when he stepped off a stagecoach from Cincinnati in 1870.

"Fort Worth was pretty wild, pretty rough and ready," says the great-granddaughter of DeWitt Clinton Pendery, Mary Pendery Haggarty. "It took a lot of courage and conviction for him to stay."

He stuck around, though, and went into business with relatives at Pendery's grocery store.

By 1890 he was in business on his own, founding the Mexican Chili Supply Co. to provide seasonings and chili peppers to the Mexican migrants who were passing through on their way north or settling in Fort Worth.

He advertised his spices and seasonings on stagecoaches and touted the medicinal benefits of the forerunner of today's chili powder, calling it chiltomaltne, Mrs. Haggarty said.

Yuppie scoreboard: Cats in; Dogs gone

By SHARON BENOIT

BUSINESS TRENDS

By the turn of the century, cats, not dogs, will be known as Man's Best Friend, and those soft, furry kitties, sitting on the regal throne, will be dining on gourmet chow fit for yuppie puppies. That's the word from experts who chart the U.S. pet products category.

This twist of fate for canine cuties is being dictated by a slight decrease in dog ownership and sagging dog food sales, which reportedly have been sagging since 1982. It also hinges on increased cat food sales because of fast growth in cat population.

In the past five years alone, the cat population has risen by more than 27 percent. And, as the U.S. ages and continues to live in smaller spaces, cats will become the more popular pet.

According to Research Alert, a biweekly report on consumer marketing studies, the increased popularity of cats does not bode well for the pet food industry, which relies predominantly on sales of dog food.

For instance, dog food accounts for 60 percent of all pet food sales. Since cats eat far less than dogs do, a shift to a nation of cat owners cuts down considerably on pet food sales.

In an effort to beat the slump in dog food sales, pet food manufacturers have begun to offer premium and super-premium foods and are marketing them through pet food stores, veterinarians and health food stores, the latter of which is one of the most popular places to shop for specialty items these days. These are all sales avenues known to normally be taken by smaller pet food and specialty manufacturers.

In addition to this new marketing tactic, pet food retailers are focusing on pet accessories rather than on food. While pet owners today tend to view their pets as luxuries, Research Alert says that industry experts believe pet owners are developing an increasingly emotional bond with their pets. As a result of this, pet owners are now more inclined to purchase seemingly unnecessary accessories for their beloved pets.

Can the Aggies turn water into gasoline?

Pitts

"Yessir, folks step right up and get Dr. Blastoff's amazing energy pills. Just fill your gasoline tank with water, pop in one of these miraculous pills and off you go!..."

Jesus turned the water into wine, and from the very first day gasoline engines were put into automobiles, the dreamers, schemers and hucksters have not stopped looking for a way to turn abundant, inexpensive water into an automobile fuel.

Wild as it seems, that dream continues, even today — at Texas A&M University. Now, the Aggies unabashedly claim they can indeed turn water into a transportation fuel just as efficient as gasoline, and have converted three vehicles to prove it.

Moreover, the Aggies claim they've gone one better and produced a fuel that burns absolutely clean, giving off only pure water as emissions.

No, it's not a steam engine! — for those who may feel an Aggie joke brewing.

If you haven't already guessed, the fuel is ordinary hydrogen, one of the most abundant elements in the world. And there is little that is new or magical about this element, which is the burning part of hydrocarbons. In fact the only drawback is that it costs $2 a gallon.

Shelved along with the other high-cost exotic fuel forms when cheap oil prices came around, hydrogen is no longer the buzz word in energy circles it was when oil was heading toward $50.

But now, perhaps due to the danger of growing imports, declining U.S. production and the threat to Middle East supply routes, hydrogen as a fuel option is once again getting attention, albeit very little.

To keep the hydrogen option alive, Congress recently appropriated a paltry $2.4 million to be spread among hydrogen research centers at Texas A&M University, University of Hawaii, University of Miami and the Florida Solar Energy Center. Hydrogen proponents are not knocking it, however, because it's the most attention the fuel has gotten in many months.

"Don't count hydrogen out; its day will come, and perhaps sooner than expected," says William Craven, manager of the Center for Electrochemical Systems & Hydrogen Research at Texas A&M.

"All we need to do to make hydrogen a viable fuel is find an inexpensive way to separate the H_2 (hydrogen) out of H_2O, and we are getting closer to that event each year," boasts Craven, whose hydrogen research center is one of the stars among the school's research programs.

Technology is not the problem says Craven: "There is nothing mysterious about hydrogen. We know everything there is to know about making it, transporting it and using it. It is the most widely used feedstock today, being utilized in the production of ammonia, petroleum products, gum, hydrogenated fats and other chemicals. The problem is capital cost."

Craven says hydrogen, which is manufactured by passing an electrical current through water to free hydrogen, will become a viable fuel economically the moment a photovoltaic system is developed that can produce a kilowatt of electricity for $200.

The cost is $500 per kilowatt now, but less than ten years ago it was $10,000 per kilowatt. "You can see the progress we're making. Electrochemical researchers tell us the breakthrough will be any day, but they have been saying that for years," says Craven.

Electricity must be super cheap, as Craven explains, because it takes energy to produce energy and the best one can hope for in producing hydrogen is a one-for-one exchange. That is: one unit of electrical energy is expended to produce one unit of hydrogen. If the cost of the unit of electrical energy is the same cost as

U.S., Basin rig counts back track

From Staff Reports

Both the Permian Basin and U.S. rig counts gave up gains made last week, according to Baker Hughes, Inc. of Houston.

The company said that the U.S. count fell five to 978, while the Permian Basin count slipped six to 139.

Lea County continued to be the most active county in the Permian Basin, with 19 rigs. Next was Ector County with 14 rigs and Gaines County with 12. Midland County had no rigs running this week.

Rig utilization for both the U.S. and the Permian Basin were opposite of the rig count, with both showing a slight increase. The U.S. percentage rose from 23.3 percent to 23.4 percent, and the Basin percentage of available rigs being utilized rose from 26.8 percent to 27.6 percent.

Among the major oil producing states, Oklahoma gained seven rigs this week, Wyoming gained five, while Colorado, New Mexico and Ohio increased by two each.

The rig count in Michigan dropped by one, while California, Kansas, and Louisiana each lost three. Texas and Pennsylvania each lost four rigs and Wyoming's rig count dropped by five.

API FACTS

According to the American Petroleum Institute, the U.S. petroleum industry group, imports continued to stream into the U.S. during January.

■ U.S. petroleum imports of crude and products were 6.97 million barrels daily, up from 6.09 million barrels daily in January 1987.

■ Imports in January as a percentage of total U.S. petroleum deliveries was 39.8 percent. Imports as a percentage for January 1987 were 37.2 percent.

■ In November 1987, the three leading suppliers of crude and products to the U.S. were Canada, which supplied 5.1 percent of U.S. supplies, Venezuela with 4.6 percent, and Saudi Arabia with 3.9 percent of U.S. supplies.

■ For the first 10 months of 1987, the U.S. imported 832,000 barrels daily of crude and products from Canada, 777,000 barrels daily from Venezuela, and 738,000 barrels daily from Saudi Arabia, the top three suppliers to the U.S.

■ Persian Gulf petroleum reperesented 17.4 percent of total U.S. petroleum imports in November, up from 14.9 percent in November 1986.

■ The amount of crude oil exported by Persian Gulf countries in December totaled about 10.6 million barrels daily, of which about 7.2 million barrels daily passed through the Strait of Hormuz. Non-communist world production of petroleum, including the U.S., totaled 44.9 million barrels daily in December.

■ The average OPEC price for a barrel of crude oil in February was $16.05.

■ The average refiner acquisition cost for a barrel of U.S. crude oil was $17.91.

■ U.S. crude oil production in January was 8,134,000 barrels daily, down from 8,447,000 barrels daily in January 1987. U.S. natural gas liquids production in January was 1,661,000 barrels daily, up from 1,592,000 barrels daily for the same month last year.

■ U.S. natural gas marketed production was 46.6 billion cubic feet daily in November; marketed natural gas production in November 1986 was 47.7 billion cubic feet daily.

■ U.S. deliveries from primary storge of motor gasoline in January was 6.75 million barrels daily, up from 6.47 million barrels daily for the same month last year.

■ U.S. deliveries from primary storage of distillate fuel oil — home heating and diesel — in January was 3.7 million barrels daily. For January 1987, delivery totaled 3.26 million barrels daily.

Basin indicators lose some ground

From Staff Reports

January oil and gas indicators compiled by ClayDesta National Bank show that the Permian Basin oil industry is seeing a slow recovery — if a little shaky — from the plunge in oil prices that occurred in 1986. Most indicators slipped for the month, but were above year-ago levels.

The indicators show that drilling applications were down 18 percent from December, but up 16 percent from last year. Similarly, the number of rigs running fell 20 percent from December but were up 19 percent from the same time in 1986.

Completions were up 18 percent for the month, and a sharp 78 percent over year ago, and footage drilled jumped 56 percent for the month, 59 percent from year ago levels.

Oil production was off 4 percent for both the month and the year, while gas production was down 5 percent for the month but up 6 percent for the year.

Prices gave some ground, with oil on the spot market going for 9 per cent less than last month and 7 percent on the year. Gas prices dropped 3 percent for the month and 6 percent from the same month last year.

Oil revenue was off 9 percent, but up 23 percent from year ago levels, and gas revenue was down 4 percent for the month and 6 percent for the year.

Gas oversupply dampens deep drilling

From Staff Reports

With the oversupply of natural gas, it was not surprising that drilling below 15,000 ft. continued to be on the skids, noted Petroleum Information in its overview of 1987.

The company said that at the end of 1987, only 266 wells with official 1987 completion dates had bottomed at 15,000 ft. or below. The peak year for deep well completions was 1982, when there were 1,350 such wells. Of that total, 347 were new field wildcats. In 1987, only 71 deep completions were wildcats.

Pemex lowers crude prices to Far East

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government oil monopoly Pemex announced a 45 cent reduction in prices to Far East customers during February, "as a result of the tendency to reduce observed in the international market."

A brief statement carried by local newspapers said the price of light Isthmus crude was set at $15.48 per barrel ad heavy Maya crude as $12.38 per barrel for Far East customers during the previous month.

Japan is Mexico's third largest customer after the United States and Spain.

Pemex said Japan maintains a contract to purchase 180,000 barrels daily and accounts for 16 percent of Mexican exports.

'King' Solomon mines musical fortune

Czar builds 'Tower'ing record empire

By STEVE GEISSINGER

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Multimillionaire Russell Solomon says you don't have to climb mountains for adventure, just try building an international empire of retail stores like Tower Records.

His tireless expansion of the chain has been so packed with unseen risks that he was threatened three years ago with prison in England when he unwittingly kept his new music outlet in London's Piccadilly Circus open on Sundays, in violation of labor-oriented laws that regulate store hours.

British officials sent "a high court writ and said either you close or go to jail, so we closed on Sundays," Solomon said as he lounged in the sleek headquarters of his company, which had sales of $330 million-plus last year and employs 3,200 people.

The 62-year-old record czar with longish white hair and a full beard, whom the media has dubbed "King" Solomon, started out selling records in his father's Sacramento drugstore in 1962.

His international chain now has 53 record stores with a sales volume that makes it second in the world, behind Musicland. Together with book, videotape and art stores, his outlets total more than 100.

But don't look for Solomon on television shows celebrating lifestyles of the wealthy and well-known.

He dressed for the office one recent day as if he might be headed outside for yard work, says he doesn't care about collecting boats, planes or cars, and lives in a condominium because he hasn't found time in the last three years to break ground on a house he plans to have built.

"I guess you could say I'm wealthy, but I don't have the trappings of a multimillionaire," he said. Then a smile flashes across his bespectacled face that's somehow reminiscent of a professor, and he added, "I get to drive a Mercedes."

Solomon has been separated from his wife, Doris, for 14 years. His son, Michael, an attorney, works at Tower Records.

Solomon describes his company variously as his hobby, his challenge, his passion.

"It sometimes is very adventuresome when you go to another country and start up a company from scratch and finance it yourself, not knowing anything about what you're going to run into in that country, about the customs you're going to have to learn, the people you're going to have to deal with, the real estate customs, the government customs, your customers," he said.

"It's like climbing up a mountain. It's a little bit dangerous to do, a lot dangerous. But risk is part of the adventure."

Tower Records has outlets throughout the West Coast, in Hawaii, in many of the nation's major cities — including Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, New Orleans — and in Japan and England.

Solomon has opened talks with intermediaries in hopes of establishing a store in Moscow.

"We'd love to have a store or a relationship to export music there," and not just because it would be a new market, he said. "Everything isn't necessarily motivated by profits. It would be an interesting cultural advance."

Culture is important to him. He collects art and listens to jazz, classical and country music.

"The record business is a hell of a business to be in because it keeps you very contemporary," he said. "You have a direct communication with contemporary ideas. Music ideas specifically, but along with the music ideas, all the other ideas of contemporary pop thought and contemporary cultural thought go with it."

Solomon says he got into the business when he was too young to know any better: "I was only 16."

After selling records out of his father's Sacramento drugstore, Solomon, in 1952, bought the record section of the store from his father, Clayton, and started distributing records to discount outlets.

He went broke in 1960, but with borrowed money, formed Tower Records a few days later. He reopened in the drugstore, located in the Tower Theater building, then a short time later opened another store in Sacramento.

The first milestone came in 1968, when he opened his first out-of-town outlet in San Francisco, which was the largest record store in the nation at the time.

"In 1968 in San Francisco, it was right at the point of the flower children, that whole acid rock kind of thing," and Tower Records rode that wave of popular music, he says.

The success in San Francisco led to the second milestone, opening of a store in Los Angeles, which attracted the attention of the entertainment industry.

Solomon says the growth of Tower Records has been aided by direct ordering between individual stores and manufacturers without the common practice of central ordering, warehousing, and distribution. The employees who do the ordering are often young and have fine-tuned musical tastes.

Tower was the first to keep its stores open long hours, seven days a week. The outlets also stock virtually every record title, both popular and classic; and order plenty of the best-selling items, which they try to sell at lower prices than anyone else.

And the chain is staying current by stocking the latest technological developments, such as compact disks.

After more than four decades in a business, most people in their 60s would probably be thinking of retirement. But not Solomon.

"What would I do if I retire?" he asks. "I was reading about George Burns the other day. He's 92 and he hasn't retired."

Who can you believe?

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market crash of last October obliterated faith in the usual economic forecasting tools, leaving forecasters thrashing about in the debris.

They're still at it, wondering if the economic signals mean what they used to mean. Does a red light mean "stop," or could it possibly mean "go."

The usual tools and instruments, such as the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, proved of little value in foretelling the earthquake in securities markets, and so the question now is whether they can be relied upon at all.

Immediately after the crash almost every popular forecaster went with his or her emotions and lowered estimates for economic activity. It was a safe bet, they reasoned, because crashes always led to recessions.

The recession didn't come, however. Impossible to comprehend then, and still hard to believe, so-called consumer confidence appeared not to be as badly damaged as they had thought. People still bought. Companies still hired.

Gradually, the forecasters became brave again. Before the end of the year the mass of them had raised their estimates again, not as high as before but enough to push the likelihood of recession further back into 1988.

They were on safe ground, because such "forecasts" weren't forecasts at all but recognition of what already had occurred. Car sales were strong, people continued to take out credit and consumer confidence had resumed rising.

By January the evidence was sufficient for most of the breed to stick their necks out and declare that the chances of recession were growing remote. Still, they said, it would be a very dull economy in 1988, with little expansion.

No sooner had they braved the fates and showed their courage than they were shocked again. Having recovered from their own shock, economic historians declared in retrospect that the fourth quarter had been stronger than realized.

Now, the sturdy crew of forecasters was confronted with a dilemma: If the economy was stronger than had been realized before, perhaps it might be stronger in the future than had been forecast. Who could be certain?

Indeed, nobody could be certain. What could you believe? If you couldn't believe the measurements of what had occurred in the past you really couldn't understand the present and that left you without a stick to measure the future.

In such a predicament it is a wise forecaster who uses both hands, one to point gamely to the future and the other to wave a warning that "if on the other hand ..." It was a time for hedging.

The hedge was this: The economy would grow, but sluggishly. The consumer would spend, but cautiously. Couples would buy homes, but carefully. Cars would sell, but slowly. Credit would expand, but barely.

Now the hedge needs clipping.

There are signs the economy is expanding smartly, as indicated by a surge in job creation and a jobless rate that fell in February to just 5.7 percent, the lowest since July 1979. The use of credit is strong. Car sales rose so sharply in late February that even manufacturers and dealers were surprised.

The evidence of economic strength piling up recently makes it necessary for forecasters to forecast more often, just to keep their revisions ahead of the event.

Slipping sales overrun Banana Republic

By LAWRENCE M. FISHER
New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The Gap Inc. says it will scale back expansion of its trendy Banana Republic Travel & Safari Clothing Co.

The Gap, which this week announced its second consecutive quarter of declining earnings, does not break out division sales figures, but it said that while comparable store sales had continued to rise for Gap and Gapkids outlets, sales at Banana Republic had declined.

Analysts said Banana Republic was suffering from increased competition and from the aging of the Indiana Jones look on which it has capitalized. While the slowdown of expansion does not signal the imminent end of the chain, a changing market will force Banana Republic to subtly alter its product line and perhaps close some outlets, these analysts said.

"You can get a perfectly serviceable safari jacket at Macy's for $45, and you can get it in a department with a palm tree," said Edward Weller, an analyst with Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, referring to Banana Republic's fanciful decor, which includes touches like imitation elephant-tusk door handles and real jeeps and bush planes.

Weller said safari clothing was "plainly a tired look that needs to be refreshed," but added that Banana Republic was "still doing $600 a square foot" in sales, a very healthy level.

"We are re-evaluating the Banana Republic strategy," Donald G. Fisher, the Gap's chairman and chief executive, said in a statement. "Our previous 1988 expansion plans for Banana Republic have been decreased from 25 to 15 new stores, while we examine all areas of Banana Republic operations and merchandising."

As of Jan. 30 there were 92 Banana Republics, up from 65 a year earlier. The Gap acquired Banana Republic, which then consisted of two stores and a catalogue operation, in 1983 from Melvin Ziegler, a former newspaper reporter, and his wife, Patricia, a former illustrator.

Ziegler, who remains president of Banana Republic, has spent the last nine months bringing out a travel magazine called Trips under the company logotype. Telephone calls to him were not returned, and Gap executives declined to comment beyond their printed statement.

The Gap said widespread discounting and slower consumer spending led to lower-than-expected earnings for the company in both the fourth quarter and the fiscal year ended Jan. 30. For the quarter, the Gap reported net income of $21.7 million, or 61 cents a share, down 23 percent from $28.2 million, or 80 cents a share, in the comparable period a year ago. Revenues rose 20 percent, to $359.6 million, from $298.5 million a year earlier.

For the year, the Gap reported net income of $89.6 million, or $1.95 a share, up 2 percent from $88.1 million, or $1.93 a share, in 1987. Revenues rose 25.2 percent to $1.06 billion, from $848 million in the previous year. Profit margins declined in all divisions in the year and the quarter.

"Our prospects for 1988 will depend on an improved retailing climate and the effectiveness of our own merchandising decisions," Fisher said. "We anticipate a difficult first quarter of the year in light of the significant uncertainties which are facing us."

Apparel industry analysts said the khaki slacks and simple cotton dresses that typify Banana Republic's offerings were a kind of timeless merchandise that would remain a viable business for a long time. And Banana Republic, which occupies choice retail locations in cities across the country, has fulfilled Ziegler's ambition of becoming the Brooks Brothers of this market, they said.

But growing demand for dressier clothing means the boom times are over unless Banana Republic can shift its styles upward, said Harry Bernard, a partner in Colton Bernard Inc., an apparel-industry consultant in San Francisco.

Noting that Italian designers and the "fresh-faced American look" of Polo by Ralph Lauren are big now with younger people, Bernard said, "The junior customer is becoming much more sophisticated."

Revitalized department stores, which typically contain several specialty outlets under one roof, are stealing the trend-setting role from retailers like the Gap and the Limited, Bernard said.

While the travel magazine and book publishing plans have diverted Ziegler, these could be important elements in "developing a franchise that is travel-related," Weller of Montgomery Securities added.

Space firms gain credibility despite fiscal pains

By RICHARD W. STEVENSON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Maxime A. Faget, a leading figure in the development of NASA's manned space program, now runs a six-year-old company called Space Industries. He and his colleagues at the Houston-based concern think they can build and operate a small, low-cost space station that would be rented to commercial and government researchers.

Improbable as the idea might sound, Faget has lined up major corporate partners and generated support in Congress and the White House.

George Koopman is a former movie-stunt coordinator and maker of military training films who is now president of the two-and-a-half-year-old American Rocket Co., of Camarillo, Calif. He and his associates, none of whom have NASA experience, have more doubters than dollars. But working with an innovative design and some Apple computers, they are successfully test firing low-cost rocket engines that they hope will make money ferrying small satellites and other payloads into orbit.

Faget and Koopman are two of the most prominent of a new breed of entrepreneurs who share the dream of doing business in space. Within that nascent industry, spirits are running high that government and commercial users are on the verge of making the first deals that would give small private companies a key role in space transportation and research.

But before the dream can become reality, analysts say, Faget, Koopman, and their associates must do more than prove they have the right technological stuff. They must convince the world that they can handle the down-to-earth business tasks of developing financing, customers and credibility.

Their credibility by all accounts is improving, but financing remains a major question. Indeed, Amroc, as Koopman's company is commonly known, almost collapsed in the wake of the Oct. 19 stock market plunge when its biggest investors backed out of financing commitments. Only the sudden emergence of a new backer in early December has enabled the company to keep operating.

The cash crunch could not have come at a worse time: Amroc was within weeks of signing a contract to carry research payloads for the Defense Department's Strategic Defense Initiative program on two suborbital test flights scheduled for this year. The contract negotiations are on hold at least until Amroc can regain its financial footing, Koopman said.

Some experts think that the half dozen or so entrepreneurial space companies face a problem even more fundamental than short-term financing. They question whether any significant demand for commercial access to space will materialize soon. "I'm not aware of any market for these smaller guys," said John E. Pike, a space analyst at the Federation of American Scientists, a private policy group.

Pike said there probably will not be enough satellite launches in the next several years to support small rocket companies like Amroc. And the kinds of materials-processing research that would be most likely to use a small space station, he added, will still not be advanced enough in the early 1990s, when the Space Industries station is scheduled to go into orbit, to become a major customer.

Like some other space experts, Pike also questions the depth of the support in Congress and the Reagan administration for the space station. He wonders whether the current interest is merely a reflection of continued unhappiness with NASA, which is fighting hard to avoid having its space station program further scaled back. Support for Space Industries, Pike said, "is really a result of clever lobbying and the politics of the space station, rather than the intrinsic potential of the proposal."

Amroc and Space Industries officials are convinced that a market will emerge. However, they admit that they will have to rely mainly on the government for business until corporations and other private users develop the necessary technology in the mid- to late 1990s. "We are betting a lot that there will be a commercial, non-government user base," said David H. Langstaff, the chief financial officer of Space Industries.

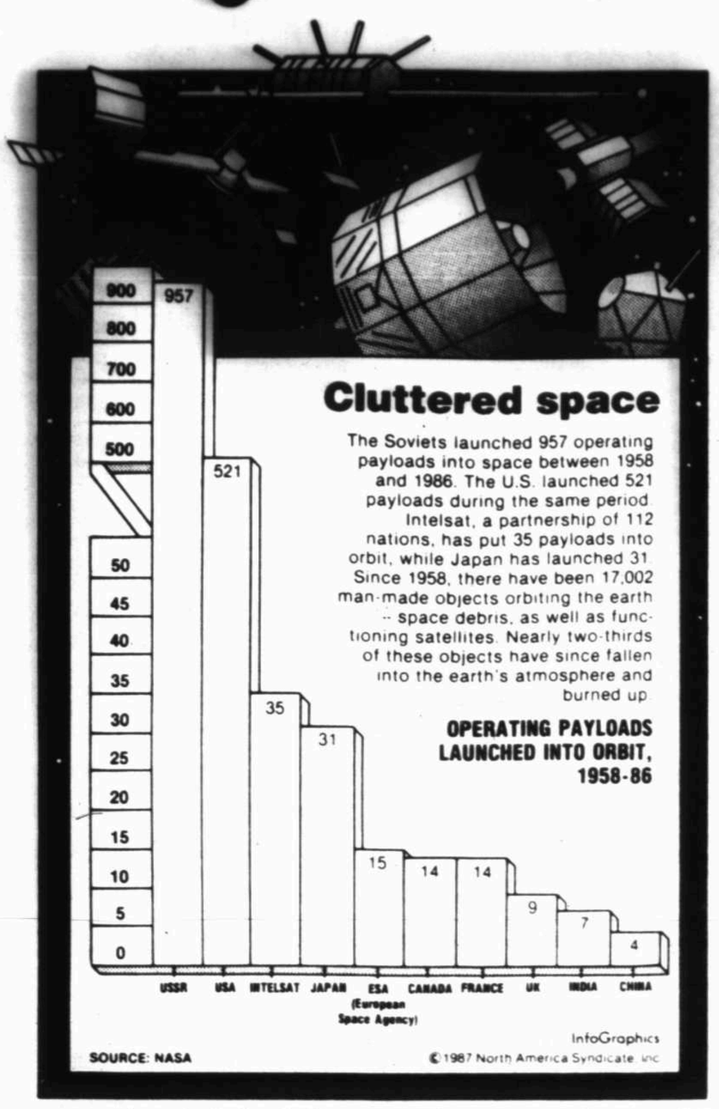

Just as technologies like nuclear power and computers evolved from government-dominated operations to private industries, so will the field of space, Faget and Koopman maintain. They see themselves playing a role in that transition.

If nothing else, their timing is good. In the two years since the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger, the national policy of commercializing space with private companies has gained momentum. The most notable step was Reagan's 1986 decision to transfer from NASA to private industry the business of launching commercial satellites.

Already, large aerospace companies — including the Martin Marietta Corp., the McDonnell Douglas Corp., and the General Dynamics Corp. — are selling commercial satellite flights on big rockets they originally built for the military.

Meanwhile, some scientists and corporations eager to resume space research in materials processing and other commercially promising fields — as well as military agencies that need to do space testing or deploy other hardware in orbit — continue to fret over new delays in the resumption of shuttle flights. Those delays increase the likelihood that NASA's planned space station will not be ready for nearly a decade.

Faget and Koopman say they can offer alternatives. Even so, they and others acknowledge that commercialization has proved slower and more difficult than anticipated.

Texas company ready for space commercialization

HOUSTON (NYT) — If any company has positioned itself well for the commercialization of space, it is Space Industries.

For six years, the company has honed its concept of an orbiting industrial park, a no-frills platform where researchers could leave experiments and manufacturing projects that would be visited at regular intervals by astronauts from the space shuttle. And for six years, it has parlayed small lobbying and financial victories into slightly bigger victories. Each step was carefully planned to add to the company's credibility with its individual and corporate investors.

"The thing we had to do is take it one step at a time," said Maxime A. Faget, the company's chief executive and a founder. "We've had some times when things didn't look too attractive, but we always seem to come up with the investor confidence and investor quality we need at the time."

The biggest step in the company's development may have been an agreement that it signed with NASA in 1985. The agreement provided for the company's Industrial Space Facility, as the small station is known, to be deployed by the shuttle, and for NASA to defer charging Space Industries for the flight and for two subsequent deployments of supply modules.

"That was one of our turning points," Faget said. The publicity from the agreement attracted the attention of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., which was interested in getting a toehold in the space business. The companies were nearing an agreement to become partners in building the facility when the Challenger shuttle exploded early in 1986. The deal was put on hold for six months while both sides reassessed the prospects for space activity, and it was finally signed in September of that year.

In a stroke of the pen, Space Industries had acquired a partner with deep pockets and a wealth of engineering and manufacturing expertise. "It had a very positive effect on our marketing and on our credibility with NASA," Faget said.

The deal also helped Space Industries pursue two more transactions last year. One was an agreement to bring a division of the Boeing Co. into the partnership to design and build the docking mechanism to link the space shuttle to the facility.

The other was the joint acquisition with Westinghouse of Astrotech Space Operations, a division of the Astrotech International Corp., for $11 million. Astrotech prepares satellites for launching. The companies hope it will do the same for their station and serve as the station's flight control center.

Altogether, Space Industries and its partners have invested $30 million in the project. Getting the 35-foot-long canister-like facility into orbit will cost an estimated $600 million.

Space Industries' latest triumphs are widely credited to Joseph P. Allen, a former astronaut who has been the company's chief lobbyist since 1985. He helped persuade Congress last month to authorize NASA to spend $25 million to work with the company on arranging the industrial facility's deployment by the shuttle in 1991.

Then he helped the company win a fierce battle within the White House, where NASA argued against the company's project, saying it would only divert funds from the space agency's plans to complete a permanently manned outpost in space by 1997.

Amroc: Fun place saved by funds

CAMARILLO, Calif. — The American Rocket Co. has always been a fun kind of place. In one of his previous professional incarnations, George Koopman, Amroc's president, designed the spectacular stunt and car-chase scenes in the movie "The Blues Brothers." And when it came to naming Amroc's first two test engines, they naturally became Jake and Elwood, after the movie's title characters.

But it was no fun around Amroc in the days after the stock market crash last fall. "Our burn rate on money was starting to go up sharply," Koopman said.

There was not much to burn. Within a few weeks, almost nothing was left in the bank, and the company had to lay off most of its 85-man work force, although many continued to work without pay.

Then, within eight days in early December, Koopman stumbled upon and came to an agreement with an individual willing to back the company with a lot of cash. Koopman declined to name the investor but described him as "an honest-to-God angel."

Newspapers Dominate Coupon Advertising More Than 4-to-1

The dominance of newspaper readership is primarily responsible for the success of coupons as a "dynamic and effective business tool" for marketing packaged goods. All coupons work and work well . . . within newspapers.

• Newspapers handled 80% of ALL 1985 coupons
• 80% of ALL U.S. families now use coupons
• $10,000/$35,000 income households use coupons most
• Consumers redeemed $6.5 billion with 1985 coupons
• Full page ads lead in coupon redemptions
• 2,000 firms use coupons as their key promotion

SPICE

She claims he invented chili powder, and today the business sells six blends — by the ounce or the 240-pound barrel — and more than 160 other herbs, spices or blends mixed on the premises from top-secret recipes.

Mrs. Haggarty took over the business from her father, Clinton Pendery, grandson of the founder, and is the first woman in charge in its 118-year, four-generation history.

The business, which is going back to the name Pendery's, has long relied on word-of-mouth advertising, but now is working on a catalog to expand its mail-order business.

The company already does 30 percent of its business through mail-order, said manager Bill Stephenson.

"We're not trying to cash in on the mail-order buying boom, but we feel we have a lot to offer customers and we hope to take advantage of that," he said.

The company buys its herbs and spices from importers and parcels them out into plastic bags by the gram for saffron, the most expensive item carried, or by the ounce for most other goods. Restaurants often buy by the barrel, he said: A customer in Wisconsin buys 10 barrels of chili mix at a time.

The company does its best volume business in chili mixes, but also sells bay leaves from Turkey, cinnamon and cumin from India, cloves from Brazil, basil from Egypt and Paprika from Hungary, Spain and the United States.

MEETINGS

Business cycles, goals topics for accountants

The Petroleum Accounts Society of the Permian Basin will meet Wednesday at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The technical session, presented by M.J. Wylie, financial service specialist with Merrill Lynch, will begin at 5:30 p.m. Wylie will discuss the concepts of business cycles, and their risks-rewards relationships.

Following dinner, the speaker will be Alfred N. "Buzzy" Green, financial consultant for Merrill Lunch, who will speak on setting goals and their progressive accomplishment.

Measurement group to host Houston speaker

Lou Cox of Daniel Industries in Houston will be the guest speaker at the Tuesday meeting of the Permian Basin Measurement Society. Scheduled for the Ramada Hotel, the meeting will begin with social hour at 6 p.m. and dinner at 7 p.m.

Cox will discuss "BTU Measurement Utilizing Online Chromatograph."

Personnel Association sets March meeting

The Permian Basin Personnel Association have scheduled their March meeting for Tuesday, March 22 at the Ramada Hotel, beginning at noon.

Guest speaker Bob Buford of Towers, Perrin, Forester & Crosby will discuss "Incentive Compensation."

Reservations should be made at the MBank personnel office no later than this Friday.

WTGS hosts slide presentation on Ireland

In honor of St. Patrick's Day and Dublin's 1,000th anniversary, the West Texas Geological Society will host a slideshow travelogue of Ireland, Thursday at Ranchland Hills Country Club. Social hour begins at 6:30 p.m. with dinner at 7 p.m.

The presentation will be given by Jim Flis, a geophysicist with Chevron's West Texas production division. He and his family lived in Dublin from 1981 to 1984 when he worked for Gulf Oil (Ireland).

Cost of the evening will be $10, and reservations can be made by phoning 683-1573.

Marketing subject of Odessa teleconference

Odessa College, the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce and UTPB Small Business Development Center are co-sponsoring a teleconference entitled "Money Making Marketing: Finding the People Who Need What You're Selling and Making Sure They Buy It."

The teleconference will be Saturday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Odessa College's Electronics Technology Building, Room 119. Fee — including a brown bag lunch and materials, is $55 if registered before 5 p.m. Thursday, $65 afterwards, and $25 for students.

This workshop features nationally syndicated columnist Dr. Jeffrey Lant, author of Money Making Marketing.

Natural gas vehicles topic for SIPES

Rogers

Charles Rogers, president of Midwestern Resources Inc., will be the featured speaker at the Wednesday monthly meeting of Society of Independent Professional Earth Scientists.

Rogers will be speaking on the feasibility of natural gas as a transportation fuel. Rogers says natural gas burned in automobiles and trucks in place of gasoline could back out several million barrels of imported oil daily and revitalize the domestic oil industry by increasing demand for natural gas.

The SIPES luncheon will begin at noon Wednesday at Midland Country Club.

FOREIGN OPPORTUNITIES

Information about the following international contracting opportunities can be obtained through the Center for Energy & Economic Diversification at 367-2370 or 563-2400, ext. 2370.

The center will assist interested businesses in obtaining project profiles from the Overseas Private Investment Corp.

Mauritius — An equity investment is sought to establish facilities for diamond cutting and polishing. Feasibility study is available.

Haiti — Project sponsor seeks technical assistance and equipment in order to process reconstituted milk for domestic sale.

Uganda — Sponsor seeks a joint venture partner for farm production of horticultural and root crops. Plans to establish export quality products and roots such as ginger and chili.

Yugoslavia — Sponsor seeks joint venture partner for the production and marketing of protective and decorative concrete coverings, putties and plasters for internal walls and ceilings, cement adhesives for tiles/ceramics and exterior wall waterproofing.

Rawl of Exxon told securities analysts this week that he expected oil prices to average about $18 a barrel into the early 1990's. Like many other oil executives, Rawl expects prices to begin a steady rise then as crude oil supplies become tighter.

Exxon plans to spend $6.5 billion on worldwide exploration this year, a $1.2 billion increase from 1987.

Most executives and analysts expect price volatility in the short term. Paul Mlotok, an analyst at Salomon Brothers, said this week that he expected the price of West Texas Intermediate, the American benchmark crude, to exceed $20 a barrel sometime in the second half of this year.

In trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the price of West Texas Intermediate for delivery next month topped $16 a barrel.

Analysts attributed the rise to a report in The New York Times that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries was studying a plan to reduce its oil production by 5 percent. The price of West Texas Intermediate was $18.87 at the beginning of last December and had fallen as low as $15.45 early this week.

The increases in exploration expenditures, analysts point out, are from a very low base. Total capital outlays, including those for exploration, peaked in 1981 at $82.9 billion and declined almost 68 percent by 1987, according Oil & Gas Journal figures.

But the drop in the amount of work done has not been as severe as the fall-off in spending, because costs have fallen. According to Donald K. McIvor, an Exxon senior vice president, drilling a well in the United States "costs 60 to 70 percent of what you would have done it for in the early 1980's." Such costs as designing and building offshore platforms and conducting seismic surveys have also declined, he said.

This drop, analysts point out, mean that some projects that were once uneconomic at $28 a barrel at the beginning of 1986 may be feasible again if prices return to $18 or $20.

Companies often adjust their spending plans, even for long-term projects, because of changes in market conditions. Even so, a survey by Salomon Brothers in January found that "a majority of companies indicated that a drop to $15 a barrel early in 1988 would have little effect on the expenditures, provided the price recovers by midyear." The major oil companies have longer-term goals, the investment banking firm said, noting also that some of the activity was aimed at finding gas, not oil.

Despite their increased spending at home, oil executives are pessimistic that they can reverse the sliding production of crude oil in the United States. Output fell 4.5 percent last year, to the lowest level in a decade, according to the American Petroleum Institute. Production at the giant Prudhoe Bay field in Alaska's North Slope is expected to begin declining within the next few years.

The United States Geological Survey, an agency of the Interior Department, Thursday cut its estimate of the amount of oil and gas remaining to be discovered in this country by 40 percent. While the oil industry questioned the accuracy of the Geological Survey's estimate, industry executives have grown increasingly pessimistic about the chances of finding substantial new domestic reserves.

Meanwhile, experts note that although OPEC's share of all exports has plunged, to less than 50 percent today from 74.1 percent in 1974, its share of world reserves has not declined.

"Some time in the 1990's, almost all the world's spare capacity will lie in a very few countries, and then the price will rise," said McIvor of Exxon.

OPEC members have the capacity to produce between 27 million and 28 million barrels a day, according to Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates.

Currently the world market is having trouble absorbing OPEC's production of 17 million to 18 million barrels a day. But aside from OPEC's 10 million barrels a day of surplus capacity, there is only a half million barrels a day of surplus capacity in the world, Yergin said.

However, Yergin disagrees with industry executives' views, and he questions when OPEC's power to dictate prices will return. "Demand is going up, but so is the non-OPEC supply," Yergin said. The American industry, he added, has tended to underestimate the resilience of the non-OPEC supply. "Almost everbody would say" that demand will one day substantially exceed the non-OPEC supply, Yergin said. "The question is when does it happen — the early 90's, the mid-90's or at the end of the decade?"

Not all experts agree that OPEC will be able to constrict supply and raise prices even if it comes to control a much larger fraction of the world's spare capacity.

"The Arabs, if they feel they are in a monopolistic situation, will tend to raise the price of oil," said David T. Mizrahi, editor of the MidEast Report, a newsletter published in New York. "But that also will depend on the Arabs' need for hard currency. If they are in dire need of hard currency, they will pump oil no matter what."

Among those with little restraint, he predicted, would be Iran and Iraq, now in their eighth year of war and pumping about 4.7 million barrels a day between them. "You can imagine what they will produce when they need that money for reconstruction," he said. "They can easily double that."

PETS

These unnecessary items range from perfumes and T-shirts to ear muffs and fur-covered pillows.

The pet food market is really no different from the people-food market in terms of promotional messages. Pet foods are now being advertised for nutritional and caloric value, as well as good taste. Pet shops also account for most for a large percentage of the sales of accessories. Pet food market observers expect future growth of the pet accessories market in supermarkets as well.

In terms of share of market, pet shops account for 33 percent of accessory sales; food stores, 29 percent; department or variety stores, 18 percent; discount stores, 9 percent; drug stores, 7 percent; kennels and grooming shops, 2 percent; and other, 2 percent.

Pet food sales, on the other hand, are another story. Ten years ago, consumers couldn't buy pet food outside of supermarkets and pet food stores. Since the advent of giant discount houses, such as Price Club, in the early '80s, more pet food is purchased in warehouse clubs (about 90 percent) than any other outlet, including supermarkets and pet shops. Today, only 3 percent of all pet food is sold in grocery stores.

Claudia Reich, pet food buyer at El Monte, Calif.-based Vons Grocery Co., agreed with Research Alert's report about this volatile pet food category. Says Reich: "Cat food is growing, both in dried and canned categories. Most of the growth is the ultrapremium brands of cat food rather than the maintenance or premium brands."

On dogs, well, Reich says they are in the dog house when it comes to sales. Dog food sales have been flat for the past year or so, but it's still a major portion of the pet food market.

Dick Curd, spokesman for Los Angeles-based Carnation Corp., says his company is taking the premium gourmet pet food craze seriously. In fact, Curd revealed Carnation's plans to roll out a new dog food, called "Grand Gourmet," nationally. It's too soon to discuss sales figures, but projections are quite substantial, says Curd.

This new dog food uses a patented technique. Instead of the traditional loaf of mashed food, the meat comes in randomly sized strips. Curd claims this is a first advancement for the dog food industry since the loaf.

That's not all; it also smells good, according to Curd. "We use the finest ingredients so we can position this product to yuppies. Everyone wants to feed their pets the best food around. Best dog food translates to good-smelling dog food as well. People are concerned about nutrition for their families, and that includes the pets."

Curd says it's not at all unusual to see shoppers reading the labels of dog or cat food to see exactly what the pet food maker is throwing together to nurture their beloved animal.

"Pets are very important in the family unit," stated Curd. "Their nutritional needs are just as important as ours."

A trendsetter, Carnation introduced its popular "Fancy Feast" premium gourmet cat food in 1982. "Fancy Feast" is available in 3-ounce cans that have a nifty pop-up lid. "Fancy Feast is still doing very well," claims Curd. "Carnation wanted to appeal to the upscale, busy professional pet lover... and we have had success with the concept."

Margie Wood, manager/owner of Woody's Pet Centers in West Los Angeles, also sees cats gaining on dogs in the popularity corner. "Cats are more in demand because of the increasing number of people who live in multiunit housing," explained Wood. "Right now, few of these units allow dogs."

Wood says the most popular cat breeds are Persians, Himalayans and Abyssinians, all ranging in price from $500-$600.

Popular dog breeds these days include cocker spaniels, dachshunds, chow-chows and Shin Tzu. Other popular pet items range from reptiles, rabbits and tarantulas.

Wood sells about a dozen of tarantulas per week at $20 apiece. Her iguanas are very popular, too.

As for accessories skyrocketing? Well, Wood gets a lot of imported accessories from Taiwan, Hong Kong and the Philippines. "These are all countries willing to do more research and development than the U.S.," she explained.

"They're keeping the prices of these goods from going up," pointed out Wood. "They produce the same quality products for the same price as American goods, too."

Wood wouldn't recommend getting into the pet food industry right now. Even though she's been in the business for 20 years, she feels it is confining and demands endless hard work. "This business is labor-intensive, so it's not as profitable as people think," stated Wood.

The way Wood figures it, as long as people have pets, she'll have a pet store to help them out. Problem is, she's exhausted. "If the store opens at 10 a.m., I have to begin setting up at 6 a.m.," she stated. "It's just not a pretty picture right now."

Unfortunately, this "doggone" picture won't be getting any brighter for four-legged canines in the near future, either.

PITTS

the unit of hydrogen energy, nothing is gained. The research aim is to produce electricity at a cost lower than the price of hydrogen.

"Oil is still beating hydrogen hands down economically because the energy expended to drill one oil well can give you a return of 100, 1,000 or 100,000 units of energy on your energy investment," Craven informed.

He notes that oil will continue to beat hydrogen because the indirect costs of burning polluting hydrocarbons as opposed to clean-burning hydrogen is not factored into the economics.

"If the costs to the environment and health were factored in, gasoline would cost $7 a gallon," says Craven.

To put hydrogen on an economic parity with gasoline, Craven sees only two options for producing cheap electricity: photovoltaic cells, which use the sun's free energy to produce electricity, and nuclear energy.

He says nuclear energy, before the cost skyrocketed, had once been considered as a means of producing hydrogen. He thinks nuclear reactors could be built offshore on oil-type platforms exclusively for the purpose of producing hydrogen from seawater.

Craven said the politics of building nuclear reactors in the midst of population centers had driven the cost of nuclear energy sky high, but building reactors a long distance offshore on the continental shelf and within the 200 mile limit might eliminate some of the environmental concerns and much of the politics.

He thinks the nation is definitely headed toward a dual fuel transportation system and that hydrogen will eventually be one of the fuels with perhaps compressed natural gas (CNG) filling the gap until hydrogen comes on line.

"It may take a fuel like CNG to pave the way for hydrogen," said Craven.

Meet nine important reasons why Texas business is moving to Texas Commerce.

"Our board of directors is a key factor behind the strength, stability and service of Texas Commerce Bank-Midland."

Ed Jones, President

In a time when a great many Midland banks are feeling the pinch of the state-wide economic decline, Texas Commerce has been moving from strength to strength. Ed Jones explains why.

"People today expect a lot from their bank. They don't want to take chances, especially if they're in business. They want the confidence of knowing that their bank is ready to give them the kind of service they need to make their business grow. They want bankers who understand their needs. Bankers who can and do respond quickly to requests - say, for credit or cash management.

"It all comes down to three words. Strength, stability and service. That's what people want. And that's what they get when they move to Texas Commerce. The strength and stability of one of the oldest banking organizations in Texas. And the service of a team of bankers who really care.

"I think our board of directors is a direct reflection of Midland's attitude. One that says, 'No matter how tough things get, this city is going to succeed.' It's all about hard work and a commitment to the community. And that attitude is paying off. Because Texas business is moving to Texas Commerce. Every day.

"If you're looking for more in a bank, call me at Texas Commerce today. Phone 687-0691. You'll see just how successful Midland business can be. When it moves to Texas Commerce."

Students learn all about Mozart

Kay Miller's sixth graders at South Elementary School whirl and twirl while performing the minuet, an 18th century dance popular when Mozart was alive.

South Elementary School sixth graders have been studying a revolutionary figure — Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

Although dead before his 36th birthday, Mozart left a legacy of 600 works for future generations. The sacrifice behind creating that legacy has been the topic of discussion in Kay Miller's classes.

The event which inspired the section on Mozart was Texas Opera Theater's production of "Amadeus Conducts Mozart," a musical exploration of the life and work of the famous composer.

TOT's public performance in Midland and its presentation for MISD sixth graders were made possible through Midland Opera Theater, which is bringing TOT's production of "Lucia di Lammermoor" to Midland High School at 8 p.m. Tuesday (for information call 684-4101). The student matinee was underwritten by the Chevron Fund.

In preparation for the matinee, students in Ms. Miller's classes traveled back to the 18th century and viewed Mozart's life and work in conjunction with world events happening at the time.

"When you take children to an event like that, you need to really go deep with them in their preparation," says Ms. Miller, who teaches music and theater arts. "If you don't, you get a group of children who sit there, hear the music, watch the action on the stage, but it goes right over their head; it will have no emotional impact on them.

"We went into depth with Mozart, and the kids learned things they had never learned before about him. The preparation materials that I received from our fine arts coordinator were excellent."

The classes spent "a great deal" of time discussing the overall world situation when Mozart was alive.

"I tried to make them understand that musicians, artists and dramatists are all influenced by their surroundings. I wanted them to try to determine what made Mozart so different.

"Even as we view him today, even after seeing the movie 'Amadeus,' he comes across as a really different person. I think we have to look at what was going on in history at the time."

Ms. Miller began by dividing her classes into small groups which were assigned a specific European country to explore economically, militarily and socially during the time when Mozart lived. Born Jan. 27, 1756, Mozart died Dec. 5, 1791. Thus, Ms. Miller's classes looked at the years 1750 through 1800.

"They were amazed when we came back to pull it all together that the same thing was going on every place," Ms. Miller says. "There was a real upheaval in society. France was at war — pre-French revolutionary times. Wars were going on in Germany. England was fighting the Colonies and there were other places where the British Empire was being threatened. There was the industrial revolution going on in England."

Ms. Miller remembers as a child being amazed at how someone as talented as Mozart could have died a pauper. "As a child I couldn't understand that. I think these kids had the same question."

Most composers worked for a specific noble family or ruler, Ms. Miller says. "They wrote strictly for that family, and they were told what to write.

"Mozart rebelled. He went out on his own and set himself up to do contract work."

Ms. Miller's students responded to this concept.

"The kids really got into this. They thought he really had some guts, and he did. He was a real forerunner in this area."

After we went to the performance, I had them come back and do a real specific evaluation. I'm always interested in what their feelings are."

Most of the reaction was "extremely positive.

"They loved the actual performance. I had instructed them to look for all the things we look for in dramatics — how well prepared were they, did they know what they were doing, did they keep the audience involved, what stage presence did they have?"

Her students' reactions were, she says, "More than I ever expected. Opera can be such a negative to kids, but they were just delighted with it, and that's good."

Young artists

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Hopes, dreams and hard work brought 65 young musicians to town this winter to compete in the 26th annual National Young Artists Competition. The prize? The opportunity to perform with a symphony orchestra. Four captured that prize.

"We tried something a little bit different in that we only selected one finalist from each category within each division," says Raye Ann Embrey, chairman of the 1988 NYAC, hosted by the Midland Symphony Guild.

Edith Chen, Alyssa Park, Robert Rose and Kirk Whipple return March 22 and 24 to perform with the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra.

The March 22 performance will be at 8 p.m. at Lee High School and the March 24 concert will be held at 8 p.m. at Odessa's Bonham Junior High. Tickets are available at Texas American Bank, Midland, and MBank, Odessa. To charge tickets by phone or for more information call the symphony concert line, 563-5269.

Contestants represented 35 secondary schools, colleges, universities, conservatories and institutes of music from 17 states.

The competition is somewhat unique in that it offers recognition in a variety of musical disciplines rather than being limited to a single instrument or groups of musicians. Piano, strings and winds categories were available for both secondary and college divisions and a voice category was offered at the college level.

"I thought it was interesting that the judges chose two high school students to return," Mrs. Embrey says. "There were only three competing in the finals, and the judges are only required to choose one and they chose two. One young lady is only 14, and from what I just picked up from the judges they really were impressed with her." Ms. Embrey was referring to Miss Park, who plays the violin.

A resident of Lexington, Ky., Miss Park has studied at the University of Louisville, the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and the Aspen Music School. Her professional debut was with the Cincinnati Chamber Orchestra at the age of 11. Since then, she has played with the Louisville Orchestra, the Lexington Philharmonic, the Warren Chamber Orchestra, the Chamber Circle at CCM and the Spokane Symphony Orchestra.

Guess Who, BTO coming to town

Temple

Teen-age rock'n'rollers be alerted. "You Ain't Seen Nothing Yet." Guess Who's going to be reminiscing memories Saturday at Midland's Chaparral Center for the second annual class reunion. Sharing equal billing is BTO (Bachmann Turner Overdrive). I suspect most of the crowd will be engaging in the "remember whens," including yours truly.

Those under 18 may be surprised to discover many over-the-hill adults (anyone 30 or over), most of whom are — I hesitate to say such a shocking thing — parents, often with teenagers, know how to rock'n'roll and were engaging in the practice before you youngsters were even a dream on the horizon of life.

Just hearing the title of The Guess Who's "American Woman" or BTO's "Takin' Care of Business" makes my body shake and I'm ready to move into overdrive. I'm sure I'm not alone. I can't imagine anyone who enjoyed rock in the '60s and '70s who knows about the concert and is going to be in town, not being at Chaparral Center.

After hearing so many '80s rock bands, where the whine coming off the synthesized equipment overshadows the music which in turn drowns out the words to the songs, I'm eager to hear some of what I call body-moving, danceable rock'n'roll.

No one can guarantee that the two groups will sound the same as they did when they were at the pinnacle of success. Too many miles and changes in players have occurred to do that. However, I talked with Tim Bachman of BTO the other day and he says the players are "fabulous musicians and nice people."

Current BTO members are Randy Murray, lead guitar and vocals; Dave Reimer, bass and vocals; drummer Vince Ditrich, the newest member; and Tim Bachman.

In 1965, The Guess Who made its first tour of the United States on the strength of a record called "Shakin All Over." The group went on to put such classics as "These Eyes," "American Woman" and "No Time" on the charts, becoming the first Canadian rock band to achieve major success in this country.

Original members included Burton Cummings, now a solo act; Randy Bachman (Tim's oldest brother) and drummer Garry Peterson, who later joined BTO; and Chad Allen, who played with Brave Belt, the forerunner of BTO with members Randy Bachman and C.F. Turner. Current members are Jim Kale, the original bass player and a founding member; Peterson, who rejoined in November of 1986; Kenneth Carter, vocals; Dale Russell, guitar and vocals; and Mike Hanford, keyboards and vocals.

Original members of Bachman Turner Overdrive (BTO was easier to remember and easier for DJ's to say so it stuck) were Randy Bachman, C.F. Turner, Rob Bachman (Tim's youngest brother), and Tim. Serving as manager was Gary Bachman, the second oldest brother who left music to pursue a successful career in real estate.

BTO became No. 1 in the world selling over 30 million records from 1973 to 1977 and topping the charts with their top selling singles — "Blue Collar," "Gimme Your Money Please," "Hold Back the Water," "Let It Ride," "Takin' Care of Business," "Roll on Down the Highway," "Rock is my Life," "Four Wheel Drive," "Lookin' Out for Number One" and "You Ain't Seen Nothing Yet."

Tim says BTO will play "all the major hits that were on the radio, all the major album songs. I think everybody should be pretty satisfied."

Not only does this concert provide those who as children lived through the beginnings of rock'n'roll the opportunity to spend an evening remembering when, it gives the younger rock concert going generation the chance to hear songs live that are played as rock classics on radio. What rock 'n'roll fan could ask for anything more?

Another event which carried Midlanders back in time was the latest Midland-Odessa Symphony Pops, aptly titled "The Big Band Sound."

The performance, which featured soprano Terry Hawkins as soloist, included, among many others, the Duke Ellington Suite — "Take the A Train," "I've Got it Bad" and "Perdido;" "In the Mood;" "Tea for Two and Two for Tea;" "Singing in the Rain;" and "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

Obviously an orchestra has more strings and less brass players, thus some of the selections didn't have as much of a brass sound as they would if they were performed by a big band (such as the Glenn Miller Orchestra which played here recently).

The only jarring element of the show could be attributed to bad acoustics in the hall or a problem with the sound system when Ms. Hawkins sang. Her voice sounded much smoother and less harsh from the foyer.

Although both shows closed with Ms. Hawkins singing "Good Night Sweetheart," Odessa fans had an added treat. Following the closing number, the symphony played about four dance selections for those who wanted to stay and dance.

At times during the concert, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, artistic director of the organization and conductor of the symphony, asked those who wanted to to get up and dance. It wasn't a lazy crowd. The area for dancing looked comfortably crowded.

Saturday a week ago, a performing arm of the Midland-Odessa symphony, the Thouvenel String Quartet, performed an evening of Beethoven at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. The concert, which included Beethoven's Quartet in G Major, opus 18, No. 2 and Quartet in C sharp minor, Opus 131, was sponsored by the Lynn D. Durham Family in memory of Fredda Turner Durham.

The Thouvenel's playing of the Quartet in C sharp minor deservedly brought the audience to its feet. The encore selection, a Chinese piece (loosely translated to be "Reflection of the Moon Over Two Springs"), was absolutely lovely. The piece and the understood execution of it evoked the desire to cry.

Earlier that same evening, the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library was filled to capacity with those attending the 10th annual Contemporary Western Art Show and Sale, the fourth largest western art show in the United States. The exhibit, which will remain through the end of the month at the library, features 150 miniature works created by 51 contemporary western artists.

Many sold during the sale. The event, which was deemed successful, represents the library's major fund raiser for the year.

The show has a Southwestern flavor and includes impressionistic pieces as well as those considered to be traditional western art. Hours for seeing the exhibit are Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m.

Georgia Todd Temple is entertainment writer for the Reporter-Telegram.

Guess who's coming to town?

The Guess Who and BTO (Bachman Turner Overdrive) play an 8 p.m. concert at Midland's Chaparral Center for the second annual Class Reunion Concert. Tickets, priced at $10.50, may be purchased at Chaparral Center and Endless Horizons, Midland and Odessa.

In a review, the Cincinnati Enquirer says Miss Park, "displayed a sweet tone, a smooth bow and terrific poise."

Miss Park performed Wieniawski's Concerto No. 1, F# minor for the NYAC finals. When she returns to play with the symphony, she will perform Sarasate's "Carmen Fantasy."

The other high school finalist is Miss Chen,17.

"The other young lady — a comment the judges made when they came out was they could not believe that a high school student was even going to attempt the Rachmaninoff concerto that she was going to play because it is among the most difficult in the piano repertoire," Mrs. Embrey says.

"I know they thought she might not be powerful enough, but I think she demonstrated she was. She broke a string during her performance and didn't look up, she didn't even bauble, she didn't act like anything had happened. They had to haul the piano backstage and work on it while the next contestants were performing to get it ready for the next piano contestants."

Miss Chen, who lives in Los Angeles and is a student at Los Angeles County High School for the Arts received first place in the 1983 Music Teachers National Association Junior Baldwin Keyboard Achievement Award. In 1986, she won first place in the MTNA High School Piano Audition, first in the Bullock National Piano Competition and grand prize in the International Piano Recording Competition.

She will perform Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No.3, Opus 30, which she played for the NYAC finals.

"Rob Rose played the alto sax," Mrs. Embrey says. "I don't know if other people are very familiar with hearing that in a concert situation, I think of that as being jazz-oriented. He played a very contemporary concerto, which is still the kind of piece that is in many symphony orchestra repertoires. I think it's something the public will enjoy hearing; it's really different."

Rose, 20, who also plays the piano and clarinet, is attending North Texas State University. He is from Richardson and has studied with Debra Ritchmeyer Truax, Michael Adamik, Cynthia Sikes and Thomas Beers. His future goals include teaching college saxophone and performing with major orchestras.

His previous honors include, first place in the Dallas Symphonic Festival, first place in the McCarty Young Artists Competition, first place in the High School Wind Division National Young Artists Competition and winning the title of Outstanding Performer at the Texas State Solo Contest.

Rose will perform the work he played for the NYAC finals, Ibert's "Concerto de Camera."

"The other young man, pianist Kirk Whipple, probably was the most seasoned performer of any of them," Mrs. Embrey says. "He was very much at ease on the stage and really had a professional manner about him."

A resident of Santa Rosa, Calif., Whipple is attending Santa Rosa Junior College. Whipple, 25, also sings and plays percussion instruments.

His previous honors include, first place in the 1978 Redwood Empire Etude Contest and first place in the 1980 Chico Concerto Competition, both in California. His future goals include performing his original music for solo piano and orchestra.

Whipple will perform the work he played for the NYAC finals, Prokofiev's Concerto No. 3, Third Movement.

The competition, sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., first began in 1962 when Dr. Lara Hoggard, then music director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, envisioned a competition that would allow talented young musicians, high school and college age, to compete for recognition and for cash awards. Through his efforts and those of the symphony guilds in Midland and Odessa, the competition has experienced steady growth and is now one of the largest and most prestigious events of its kind in the United States.

Judges for this year's event were Robert Baustian, former conductor of the Santa Fe Opera; James Bonn, piano faculty of the University of Southern California and a recording artist; Erick Friedman, distinguished concert violinist and Artist-in-Residence at the Meadows School, Southern Methodist University, Dallas; Jerome Hines, world-renowned bass with the Metropolitan Opera; and Charles Webb, dean of the School of Music, Indiana University.

"The judges couldn't have been nicer," Mrs. Embrey says. "They gave us a lot of help. They felt that our competition was very well organized, and they work in a lot of competitions all over the country."

MOZART

Ms. Miller says one specific question on the evaluation after they saw the performance, was "How could Mozart be defined as a revolutionary figure, he wasn't a soldier?"

When she read the comments written by her classes, she felt her time had been well spent. One student's comments sums up the majority of responses. The student wrote, "Though it meant he would stay poor, he demanded his own independence. The rest of the world was at war and he was too — in his own way."

"I wanted the children to realize he was doing in music what the other revolutionary figures were doing in their fields," Ms. Miller says. "'I will be independent, I will write the music I want to write.' It makes Mozart's music mean more to the kids."

'Last Emperor' slice of history

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

At long last, "The Last Emperor," released nationally in November, has arrived in Midland. One of five Oscar nominees for best picture, Bernardo Bertolucci's epic of the turmoil in China as seen through the eyes of the last Manchu emperor is a visual tour de force with captivating cinematography. The script, however, (written with Mark Peploe) is less successful.

The opening moments of a trainload of war criminals arriving in 1950 China has a subtle impact when one of the passengers who gets off appears to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. A well-dressed Chinese man, peering through spectacles, is a passive foil against the tableau of military Chinese announcing: "War criminals must proceed to the main waiting room. Those caught talking will be severely punished." While the prisoners are being registered, several of them bow to the subdued gentleman. He escapes to the bathroom and it comes as no surprise when he attempts suicide.

The mysterious gentleman is Pu Yi (John "Year of the Dragon" Lone), the former emperor of China. As he approaches death his mind flashes back into his earliest memories. From this point on the film jumps awkwardly forward and back in its attempt to account for more than 50 years of the emperor's sheltered life behind the walls of Beijing's Forbidden City.

Some of the best moments involve Pu Yi as a precocious 3-year-old (played with aplomb by Richard Vuu), who is summoned by the empress to become emperor.

Vuu is fun to watch, as any 3-year-old thrust into the midst of staid pageantry would be. The details which Yi's keepers used in the grooming of the emperor — his immediate separation from his mother, who he doesn't see for seven years; and the wetnurse he is given and later separated from — add interest. But even more fascinating are the social aspects of Yi's life, which aren't explored enough. "When I'm naughty, someone else must be punished," he explains at one point during his adolescence.

Peter O'Toole appears as Reginald Fleming Johnston, the tutor selected for Yi. His performance is understated due to mundane dialogue, and his most interesting argument with Yi, concerns the difference between skirts and kilts. "If you cannot say what you mean, than you cannot mean what you say," Fleming says.

"I'm an emperor, I'm not allowed to mean what I say — I'm told what to say," Yi retorts, revealing that he has somewhat of an inkling of his infectiveness as a ruler.

Crowned emperor in 1908 at age of 3, Yi was soon shorn of any real power at the age of 6 when China became a republic. He later became a puppet emperor for the Japanese, and was forced to live as a Maoist gardener in the city he once ruled until he died in 1967. Yi was less a tragic hero than a historic footnote. He was a passive incident in history, a virtual calm empty center of a political storm brewing beyond the walls of the Forbidden City.

The small flashes of cultural detail — Pu Yi's mother stepping on the back of a servant to mount a horse, three women walking around begging while their necks are clasped in the same stocks — add a foreign fascination to the film.

Not an in-depth psychological portrait, but a view of a man who went through a great adventure in history — from "son of heaven" to communist citizen — "The Last Emperor" is more a slice of history than a slice of life.

Unfortunately, the audience is forced to share Yi's severely limited experience of the world, and visually entertaining as it is, "The Last Emperor" is confusing due to shaky transitions.

One such transition concerns Fleming's arrival to the Forbidden City. He is outside the gates, trapped in the center of an angry, chanting mob confronting armed guards. The tension mounts as the groups confront each other. Then the scene abruptly changes to one of Fleming inside the gates of the Forbidden City. How did he get in unscathed? Was there bloodshed? Did the angry, chanting mod just disperse? Why was this scene set up to end so anti-climatically?

The restrained drama and confusing transitions may not arouse any emotions in the audience more than to pique one's interest enough to send them searching for "From Emperor to Citizen," Pu Yi's autobiography, the basis of the film. The film is historically rich, and visually arresting, but anticlimactic in its subtle portrayal of China's turmoil.

"The Last Emperor," has been rated PG-13 ("Special Parental Guidance for Those Younger Than 13"), includes some scenes of violence, nudity and sexual escapades.

The correct management of a suit combination, considered in isolation, might not be the right way to play it in context of the whole hand. For instance, if you consider the spade and diamond holdings on this hand, the only way to avoid a loser in either suit is to take the finesse. Yet, if you take the whole hand into account, the play of the two suits is interrelated. You don't know how to tackle one unless you've already solved your problem in the other.

North-South reached six diamonds after a "modern" auction. North's bid of two hearts was "fourth-suit forcing." When it elicited the information that South had at least 10 cards in the minor suits, North decided that his support and outside controls merited a gamble on slam.

West led a heart, and declarer ruffed in hand to create an entry for the trump finesse. Unfortunately, West showed out on the lead of the queen of diamonds. Catastrophically, declarer now had to lose two trump tricks and his slam.

Declarer was a step ahead of himself. He could not know how to play the trump suit unless he knew whether or not he had a spade trick to lose. At trick two, declarer should have run the jack of spades. When that held, declarer could see he had no loser in the side suits, since one spade could be discarded on the ace of hearts. Therefore, he could afford a safety play in trumps. He should lead a low trump to the ace. If West follows, any 3-1 trump break guarantees the slam; if West shows out, declarer can lead trumps twice toward the Q-J in his hand, again limiting his trump losers to one. And if West has all the missing trumps, there is nothing declarer can do about it.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, MARCH 14, 1988

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make a special effort to get your financial affairs in order. Stock tips are worth further investigation. Others look to you for leadership. Set a good example. Romance takes on a rosy glow.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Consider all your options before committing yourself either verbally or in writing. Legal advice is a good investment. You may decide to pursue romance despite a warning. Avoid going overboard.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are on a better wavelength with your loved ones now. Carry on the good work begun by another family member. You and mate become even closer. A letter brings new hope.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Influential person offers excellent advice. Use your time well. A great day to launch new projects. Renovating your home increases its market value. Romance sizzles. Do not neglect your work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The emphasis now is on learning new skills. Traditional values are a source of strength. Making intelligent concessions will strengthen a parent-child relationship. Be conciliatory. Avoid issuing ultimatums.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Use tact when talking with sensitive people. Family pressures begin to ease. Be a leader, not a follower. Explore "far-out" ideas before making a financial investment. Domestic ties deepen. Be affectionate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Certain people may judge you by your material possessions. Become a mediator if the situation demands it. An older person is counting on your support. A friend gives you a helping hand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Something jolts you out of a rut. Replace bad habits with good ones. You can start a new career or job with great confidence. True love is expressed in an unusual way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Diplomacy helps you avoid a clash of wills. Seek financial assistance from an old friend. A social gathering provides you with a perfect opportunity to meet someone influential. Be gracious.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Try to stay out of "high-pressure" situations today. Someone who flatters you could have ulterior motives. Guard your reputation and resources. Complete old projects and meet all deadlines on time.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New career advances come with very little effort on your part. Authority figure has your best interests at heart. Patience and diplomacy help you resolve a serious difference of opinion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Tackle routine tasks today and discuss your financial future with mate or partner. Use extra caution if negotiating secret deals. A windfall is possible if you play your cards right.

Knox Music Competition held at MC

From Staff Reports

A total of 314 students entered the annual Knox Music Competition, sponsored by the Midland Music Teachers Association, recently held at Midland College's Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

Students from Midland, Andrews, Odessa, Snyder, San Angelo, Stanton and Hobbs, N.M., entered the piano, voice and string categories.

First place winners were Michelle Banta, Laura Bedford, Andy Bianchi, Bevie Blair, Kevin Bowles, Megan Bray, Jeremy Brown, Sara Caldwell, Kasi Campbell, Amy Chandler, Kelli Clanton, Emily Conine, Anna Crowe, Jennifer Davis, Shil Dunn, Natalie Evans, Nicholas Evans, Brandi Falk, Keni Falk, Ashley Gilliam, Afton Hales, Andrea Helm, Kasey Hicks, Trena Ivy, John Sikes Johnson, George kirkland, Jennifer Knight, Jenna Krueger, Brooke Kubena, Brian Lasley, Carla Lathan, Cole Latimer, Julie Legleu, Brad Leshnower, Cristy McBride, Brent McCartney, Megan McClay, Julie Miley, Adrienne Moose, Kimberly Nguyen, Holly Pennock, Carrie Perkins, Jennifer Rendon, Laura Richling, Chari Rigtrup, Anna Rowland, Debbie Rowland, Kevin Ripple, Catherine Ryan, Frances Smight, Bill Thomas, Leighana Thornton, Jessica Whitt, Becky Wischkaemper, Kay Wischkaemper and Christopher Wood.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Bunny Breakfast planned

Midland Northside Lions club, with the cooperation of Midland Park Mall, Luca Pizza and Fuddrucker's, is sponsoring a Bunny Breakfast to greet the Easter Bunny beginning at 8:30 a.m. Saturday.

The pancake breakfast will be served in the Food Court at the mall. Proceeds go to the West Texas Juvenile Diabetics Foundation and Texas Lions Camp.

Children of all ages will be able to meet with the Easter Bunny and be entertained by Esteem Machine, a Midland teen repertory theater group. Tickets for the meal are on sale now for $3 in the office at the mall, from any member of Northside Lions Club and from members of the West Texas Chapter of Juvenile Diabetics Foundation.

A limited number of seats will be available at the door. Seating is limited.

Clowning workshop slated

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum is offering two morning workshops and a children's film festival each afternoon during Odessa's spring break.

Clowning Around runs March 28-31. In this workshop children will learn to be a clown as they discover how to make a clown face, how to juggle and acting techniques appropriate to clowning around. The workshop will be offered to those in grades 1-3 from 10:45 to 11:45 a.m. and for those in greades 4-6 from 9:30-10:30 a.m.

A MOSIAC Workshop will be offered for those young artists who want to create their own art work. Projects will include printmaking, collages, designing tiles and making a tissue paper stained glass window. MOSIACS will be offered for students in grades 1-3 from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. and for those in grades 4-6 from 10:45 to 11:45 a.m.

Tuition for each four-day workshop is $7.50 for non-members and $5 for members. This cost includes all supplies. Class size is limited. for more information call the museum, 1-332-7123.

The museum will show "Ghostbusters" March 28, "Mary Poppins" March 29, "Star Trek IV" March 30 and "Apple Dumpling Gang" March 31. Suggested donation is $1 for the film festival and showtime for each movie is 1:30 p.m. Groups must call to make reservations.

Wagner opera to air

Richard Wagner's "Die Walkure," the second of the four operas of the "Ring" cycle, will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan at 12:30 p.m. Saturday Eastern Time, 90 minutes earlier than usual, over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network. It will be heard locally over radio station KWMJ, 103.3 FM.

Singing principal roles will be Hildegard Behrens as Brunnhilde, Leonie Rysanek as Sieglinde, Waltraud Meier in her Met debut as Fricka, Peter Hofmann as Siegmund, Theo Adam as Wotan and Aage Haugland as Hunding.

James Levine will conduct. Announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

Bosecker paintings at bank

Selected oil paintings by Midlander Ramah Bosecker are on display in the lobby of First Republic-Bank Midland this month.

Ms. Bosecker has maintained a working studio in downtown Midlnad for 3½ years. She has studied with various nationally recognized artists over the past 20 years. Among these are Henry Henche, Frank Mason, Al "Chip" Chadbourn, Vliden Stiha, Ted Goerschner, Ted Seth Jacobs and Ann Templeton. She is currently studying with Pam Price at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

"Because the greatest part of our lives is made up of small, seemingly insignificant events and objects, I choose to depict simple objects and brief moments in time in my work," Ms. Bosecker says. "I do this to remind myself, and hopefully my viewer, of the beauty in those everyday objects and moments. I hope my viewer feels the excitement that I feel as light falls across the subject. And I hope they enjoy, as I do, the pleasure of seeing one clear, clean color against another."

Group plays for teachers

The Lone Star Brass Quintet performed to a crowd of about 300 musicians, music instructors and music administrators last month at the Texas Music Education Association's convention in San Antonio.

The quintet, the resident brass quintet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., was invited to perform at the statewide convention. Their program included "The King's Fanfare" by Josquin des Pres, Fugue in G Minor (The Little) by J.S. Bach, the 1982 Mini Overture by Witold Lutoslawsk, "Le Carnaval de Venise" by J.B. Arban, Brandenburg Suite (III. Allegro assai) by J.S. Bach, selections from "Porgy and Bess" by George Gershwin and "That's a Plenty" by Lew Pollack.

The next area performances of the quintet will be April 5 at First United Methodist Church, Odessa, and April 7 at First Presbyterian Church, Midland. These spring concerts will feature the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, directed by Eugene Pierce.

Both free programs are open to the public. For more information about the quintet call Beth Self, 563-0921.

TOT to stage 'Lucia'

Texas Opera Theater's production of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" will be presented at Midland High School at 8 p.m. Tuesday.

The Midland performance, which will be sung in English, is sponsored by Midland Opera Theater.

The opera is based on Sir Walter Scott's Waverley Novel "The Bride of Lammermoor."

Written as fiction, "The Bride of Lammermoor" was based on a true story told to Scott by his mother.

For more information on the opera and the slide preview history of the opera being presented by Ann Thompson of Houston at 3 p.m. today in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium at Midland College call 694-4101.

Tickets for the opera presentation are priced at $12 for adults and $10 for students and senior citizens.

Western art exhibited

"West by Southwest" is on display at Gallery 1114, 1114 N. Big Spring St.

The exhibit includes work by five artists from Arizona and New Mexico. The artists are Ceana Boltz of Santa Fe, Marie Fuertsch and David William Heil of Albuquerque, Marie Langston of Tucson and Mary Sweet of Tijeras, N.M.

Gallery hours are Wednesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. For more information call 685-9944.

Jazz Classic dates set

The dates for the 12th annual Midland Jazz Classic are Oct. 6-9 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Each year this event brings 20 nationally known professional jazz performers to town for four nights. Musicians performing for the event include Paul Smith, Ralph Sutton and Buddy Weed, piano; Dan Barrett, Carl Fontana and George Masso, trombone; John Clayton, Milt Hinton and Jack Lesberg (also musical director), bass; Ed Polcer, Clark Terry and Snooky Young, trumpet; Jake Hanna, Gus Johnson and Oliver Jackson, drums; Phil Bodner, Kenny Davern, Scott Hamilton and Flip Phillips, reeds; and Howard Alden, guitar.

No single admission tickets are sold at the door, but tickets are now available for the entire series of concerts. For more information call 683-5208 or 694-2136.

Early news scheduled

KTPX/KWAB-TV has announced the addition of the Permian Basin's only local early morning newscast.

Channel 9 News Today will air weekdays at 6 a.m. and will include news, weather and sports. Channel 9 news reporter Juli Sheils has been named anchor of the program.

"We are pleased to provide viewers with news and information in an additional time period," says Dan Robbins, general manager. "While we accommodate the people who are unable to watch our evening news, we will also report the news first on the events that happened overnight."

NBC's "Business This Week" will air weekdays at 5:30 a.m., prior to the local telecast, signing KTPX/KWAB on the air 30 minutes earlier than other local stations.

Photos accepted for contest

Works by local photographer John A. LaCaze Jr. have been accepted for exhibition in the National Aperature 3 photography competition sponsored by the Associated Artists of Winston-Salem, N.C.

The competition was jurored by Emmit Gowin, professor of photography, Princeton University; and Helen Gee, founder of the Limelight Gallery, Washington D.C. Images selected for exhibition were chosen from more than 2,000 submitted from every state in the Union as well as Europe, South America and Asia.

LaCaze is self-taught and works primarily in bicck and white. He has particular interests in infrared film, alternative photographic process and toned or hand colored prints.

MAA Spring Show to start

The Midland Arts Association Spring Show will be held in the Stables Gallery at the Museum of the Southwest, 1505 W. Missouri Ave., Tuesday through April 24.

A reception and awards presentation will be held at the museum at 6:30 p.m. Friday.

Judge for the show was Paul Milosevich.

A Brown Bag lecture will be held at the museum April 6 and 13 from noon to 1 p.m. The lectures will consist of artists' inspirations and will be given by the winners of the show.

The reception and awards presentation and the Brown Bag lectures are open to the public. For more information call Mavis Murphy, 682-7270.

Drawing classes to be held

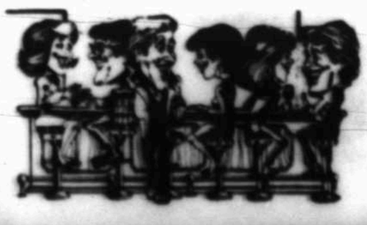

ODESSA — A series of art classes entitled "Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain" will be held from 1 to 4 p.m. for seven consecutive Saturdays beginning March 19 at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

Based on the success of the same class offered to youngsters last fall, the current sessions are tailored for adults.

"Both classes are based on the very popular and thoroughly researches book of the same name by Betty Edwards," says a news release from the institute.

Tuition is $10 per-person. Enrollment is limited so early registration is encouraged.

Queen Mary can still carry travelers in luxury

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

The Queen is as beautiful as ever.

Despite her age of more than 50 years, and despite having been in retirement for the last 20 years, the Queen Mary is still ruler of the seas.

When she was launched in 1936, the RMS Queen Mary was the largest, fastest, and most luxurious ocean liner ever built. She was an awe-inspiring sight as she sailed down the River Clyde in Scotland.

No expense had been spared in her construction. There were two indoor swimming pools, including one in a two-story room with mother-of-pearl ceiling. Fifty-six kinds of wood were used for paneling and trim throughout the ship — one variety from each country in the British Empire. (All but seven of the varieties of trees used for the wood are now extinct.)

She is taller than Niagara Falls and twice as long as the Washington Monument is tall. Her deck space is equal to a football field, and the main foyer is large enough to hold the three Columbus ships that sailed to the New World.

This greatest of ocean liners crossed the Atlantic between England and America 1,000 times, and carried more than 2 million passengers, including 765,000 GIs as the Gray Ghost during World War II.

Much hoopla has come with the launching of the current crop of new super cruise ships, each claiming to be bigger, better and more elegant than the last.

The most recent launching has been the Sovereign of the Seas, a giant cruise ship that set sail out of Miami starting in January. Her public relations people are touting her as the biggest cruise ship afloat, and brag about her measurements.

But they conveniently forget the Queen Mary, the Grand Dame of the seas.

The traditional measure of a ship's size is its gross tonnage. The Queen Mary weighs in at 81,237 tons, dwarfing the Sovereign's 74,000 tons. The next largest ship is the Norway, at 70,000 tons.

The Queen is longer, at 1,020 feet, compared to 880 feet long for the Sovereign. And the Queen is 10 feet taller, at 181 feet. The Sovereign can carry up to 2,600 passengers when all berths are filled, compared to 2,000 passengers on the Queen Mary, meaning that more people have less space on board the Sovereign than aboard the Queen Mary.

The Queen Mary is still afloat, and still carries passengers, although admittedly they don't go far. The ocean liner is permanently berthed at Long Beach, Calif., and their journey is restricted to the rise and fall of the tides in the harbor.

Passengers can view the Queen either on a tour of the mighty ship, or as guests at the Queen Mary Hotel. All of the first-class cabins, and a few second- and third-class cabins (which have been combined to make larger rooms), have been restored and opened to guest occupancy at the 390-room hotel.

The staterooms are unique, much larger than most cabins aboard today's cruise ships. Dark wood paneling covers the walls in most of the cabins and most of the original furniture remains.

These rooms have seen the likes of Winston Churchill, Dwight D. Eisenhower, Fred Astaire, Lionel Barrymore, Joe E. Brown, Eddie Cantor, Greta Garbo, Bob Hope, Liberace, Laurel and Hardy and David Niven.

The bathrooms are the originals, too. Most have large bathtubs with faucets for hot and cold fresh water and hot and cold salt water. Passengers reportedly were told that bathing in salt water was therapeutic; but in actuality, the ship's owners only wanted to save precious fresh water on long voyages.

Most of the rooms are outside cabins, complete with portholes. Those on the starboard (right) side look out over a forest of bobbing sailboat masts in the harbor, while those to port face Londontowne, an old-English-style shopping complex.

The entire ship is done in original art deco style, with its streamlined curves and ornate artwork. The Observation Bar overlooking the bow is perhaps the most ornate and beautiful of the public rooms aboard ship, and still serves its original purpose.

Besides the bar, the ship has a host of other restaurants, unfortunately not in their original quarters. While some boast excellent cuisine, such as Sir Winston's overlooking the bay from astern, others serve only hamburgers and ice cream.

The most beautiful rooms now serve as hotel banquet halls. But they can be seen most of the time on tours of the ship.

The most magnificent of these public rooms is the Queen's First Class Dining Room. Even today, it is the largest room ever built aboard a passenger ship. The room rises three decks high, supported by huge wood-paneled columns. It was 143 feet long and 110 feet wide, nearly every inch paneled in exotic woods. It was here that the first-class passengers, decked out in tuxedos and long dresses, enjoyed sumptuous seven-course feasts in one leisurely seating.

The First Class Lounge is nearly as spectacular, rising two decks high and featuring marble fireplaces and gold-and-silver-emblazoned artwork. The second- and third-class passengers, on the other hand, had to put up with smaller and much less elegant public and private rooms.

There are several ways to tour the Queen Mary. The Shipwalk Tour is a self-guided tour of all of the main decks and cabins of the ship, while the Captain's Tour takes visitors behind the scenes to rooms not open to the self-guided tours. Both are worthwhile.

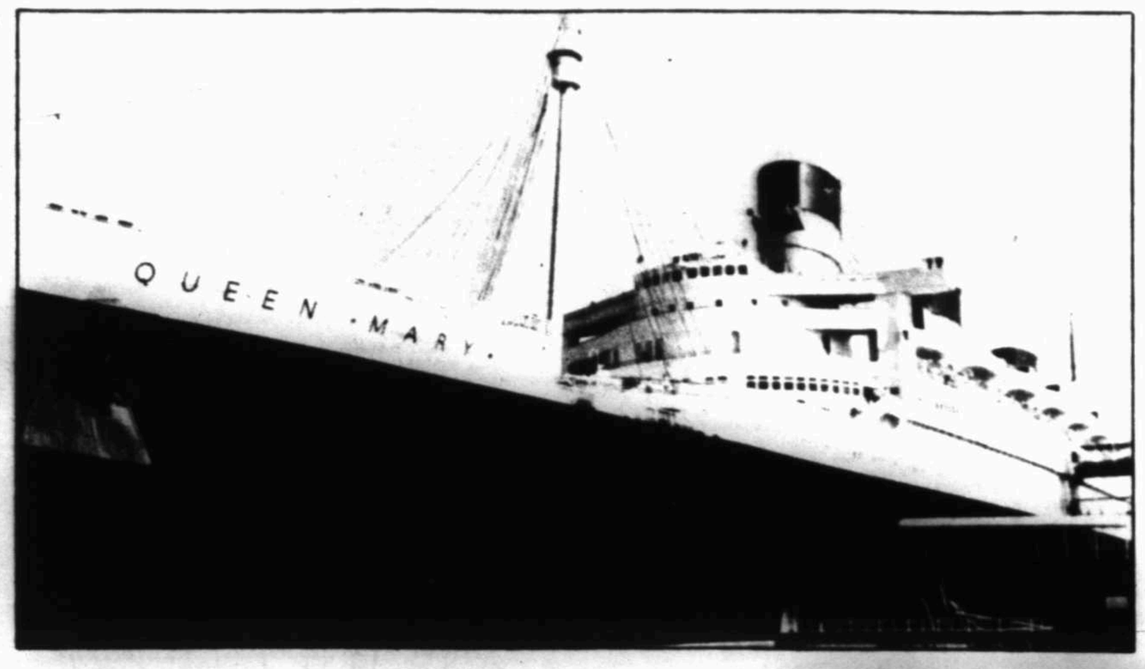

The Shipwalk Tour begins with a slide presentation on the Queen, then heads down to the engine room, where the giant turbines once generated 160,000 horsepower to drive the ship at 33 knots. Of course, fuel economy was not great — 13 feet per gallon.

The tour continues through more machinery rooms to the stern, where one of the giant 35-ton propellers can be seen underwater. From here, the tour heads topside, where visitors can stroll the wide teakwood decks and hang over the railing, gazing at the ocean.

The tour includes exhibits showing the gymnasium, crew's quarters, children's playroom, radio room, staterooms, wheelhouse and dining room layouts, although usually not in their original locations.

The behind-the-scenes Captain's Tour shows second- and third-class lounges and dining rooms, the first-class indoor swimming pool and the boiler rooms.

Adjacent to the Queen Mary is the Spruce Goose, the dream child of eccentric millionaire Howard Hughes. The plane, the largest ever built and made entirely of wood, flew only once.

The majestic Queen Mary, now serving as a hotel and tourist attraction in Long Beach, Calif., is the largest ocean liner afloat.

New ships mean fares competitive

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

If you never have been on a cruise, this might be the best year yet to try one. Ten new ships are coming into service in the course of the year and the field is so competitive for your discretionary dollars that it is truly a buyer's market.

The new ships offer everything from two-day samples of life at sea to round-the-world expeditions in 80 or more days and the prices range from bargain to royally extravagant.

First to enter the lists is the new Sovereign of the Seas — not only newest — but biggest with a capacity for over 2,000 passengers. Based in Miami, the Sovereign, of Royal Caribbean Lines, will make seven-day circuits of the eastern Caribbean, all served up with classic Royal Caribbean style. Prices are very good as management attempts to establish a passenger list that will repeat year after year.

One of my favorite holiday destinations is Alaska — the season runs from late May to September but now is a good time to plan as several cruise lines are offering special discounts for early booking.

Both Princess Cruises and Holland America have absolutely super packages that include several days cruising the Inside Passage combined with a few days inland — to give you the opportunity to see even more of this magnificent state.

The rail trip on the McKinley Explorer was an outstanding highlight of an all-too-brief sojourn in Alaska last year and I am not the only one who looks forward to a return trip. Twenty-three ships ply the Inside Passage on a regular summer schedule — each offering a slightly different version of the trip — all worth checking.

The Alaska cruises frequently begin or end at Vancouver and that puts you back in one of the most beautiful areas of the whole North American continent. Western Canada is in a class by itself when it comes to magnificent scenery and the opportunities for active vacations are endless.

The fishing — both lake and sea — is fine. (I will never stop bragging about the two 20-pound salmon I landed last summer, even though my grandchildren look skeptical when I talk about it. My theory is, if I can do that — anyone can and it's one of the most exhilarating experiences ever.)

Trips through the Canadian Rockies are readily available by car, bus or train and the whole area offers excellent accommodations — notable among them the lodge at Lake Louise and the Chateau at Banff.

Albuquerque Hilton has floors for women, executives

In the Albuquerque Hilton there are no men's rooms on the 10th floor because the hotel has reserved the entire floor for women. By the end of this month, the 11th and 12th floors will be reserved for traveling executives. Rooms for women will have bathrooms equipped with electric curling irons, hair dryers and makeup mirrors. The floor will also have its own concierge and a lounge overlooking the Sandia Mountains. For reservations and more information call 800-445-8667.
