Stone returns from 'quite useful' talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. special envoy Richard Stone, who met with a Salvadoran rebel leader in Colombia, held hour-long talks with Nicaragua's leftist leaders Monday and then returned to Washington, ending his 10-day tour.

Arriving at Andrews Air Force Base near Washington after a late-night flight, Stone described his trip as "quite useful" and said he expected to meet with Henry A. Kissinger, the former secretary of state who is chairman of President Reagan's commission on Central America. He declined to comment on his talks in Nicaragua.

During his brief stopover in Managua he conferred with Daniel Ortega, head of the ruling Sandinista junta, and Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto.

D'Escoto and Stone both called the talks "useful."

Moments after Stone's departure, Ortega met with Yuri Joachim, a diplomat from the Soviet Embassy. In a broadcast on state radio, Ortega thanked the Soviet Union for the support he said it has given to the Sandinista government and regional peace efforts.

Stone, speaking with reporters before boarding an executive jet for the flight to Washington, said, "We held lengthy discussions with useful and positive results."

"I cannot give more details about what I spoke about with Mr. Ortega because they were confidential talks," he said.

Stone's first meeting with a representative of the Salvadoran rebels occurred Sunday in Bogota when he conferred for two hours with Ruben Zamora. More meetings between the U.S. envoy and Salvadoran rebels appeared in prospect.

Stone said when he left Bogota Monday that he was going to Nicaragua "to see if there is a chance of decreasing tension in the area." He said Nicaragua's Sandinista government invited him to discuss the tension along its border with Honduras.

Thousands of Nicaraguan exiles who took refuge in Honduras after the overthrow of the late President Anastasio Somoza in July 1979 are fighting a guerrilla war in northern Nicaragua. Nicaragua claims they are armed and trained by the United States. Nicaragua and Honduras also have been exchanging charges of border violations.

Zamora, a director of the Salvadoran Democratic Revolutionary Front, spoke with reporters after his meeting with Stone and called for a "plenary meeting" that would include representatives of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front. It is a coalition of five guerrilla groups fighting the U.S.-backed Salvadoran government while the Democratic Revolutionary Front is the rebels' political organization.

"There may be other contacts," said State Department spokesman John Hughes in Washington.

FBI examining practices of Metro Bank

By LESLIE HAINES
Business-Energy Writer

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is taking a close look at the banking practices of Metro Bank, the Midland bank which was declared insolvent and closed last week.

The FBI confirmed today local agents have been conducting an investigation concerning possible violations of federal banking law at Metro Bank. The agency is looking at possible internal and external bank fraud violations.

A spokesman in the Midland FBI office confirmed the investigation is taking place but would not say for how long agents have been looking at the bank's records.

He said former Metro Bank officials asked the FBI to begin the investigation.

The spokesman would not say whether any indictments were forth coming.

"We don't know much yet. There are a lot of records to go through," he said. "You're dealing with a lot of documents and audit trails. At this point, we don't know what we have or don't have."

The agent said the FBI proves innocence as well as guilt, depending upon an investigation's outcome.

In going through the often complex records associated with bank business, the FBI has been working in cooperation with federal banking authorities.

Last week, representatives from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) were at Metro Bank examining the bank's records. The bank was closed by the State Banking Commission because of an unusually high amount of non-performing loans. The FDIC was then named receiver for the failing institution July 29.

The bank re-opened Monday under new ownership and a new name, Mid-Cities National Bank. A group of five bankers from the Texas Panhandle bought the bank over the weekend.

The FDIC assumed the bank's nonperforming loans, giving the bank a fresh start.

As a matter of routine when a bank fails, the FDIC conducts an investigation into the cause of the failure, said FDIC spokesman Alan Whitney Monday.

If any liability for the bank's failure could be pinned on former Metro Bank directors or officers, it would be pursued through civil suits, Whitney said.

An officer of Metro Bank who is now with Mid-Cities National said he thought the investigation was probably a routine matter. "I would assume that would be required when a bank fails," said Brooks Akins, executive vice president of Mid-Cities. Akins held the same position at Metro Bank.

The FBI is looking at possible violations in Metro Bank internally, from all employees "from the janitor on up to the highest levels," the agent said. The agency is also investigating external fraud possibilities — that a bank customer may have defrauded the bank in some way.

Libyan planes increase bombings in Chad

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — Libyan warplanes intensified their bombing of Faya-Largeau today, killing many civilians and combatants and destroying large parts of the oasis town, Foreign Minister Idriss Miskine said.

"What is taking place is a genocide," Miskine said. He did not give a casualty count and said he based his claims on radio communications with the government-held town of 10,000 in northwest Chad.

The Libyan pilots were taking advantage of the knowledge that "we lack anti-aircraft defenses," Miskine said.

In Paris, the Libyan Embassy issued a statement denying it was a belligerent in the battle for Faya-Largeau and calling the fighting an "internal conflict between opposing Chadian factions for power in N'Djamena."

The statement urged the combatants to "resolve their problems themselves without any foreign influence or intervention."

Also today, a group of doctors and other international workers known as Doctors Without Frontiers arrived in N'Djamena from Faya-Largeau. Among them was Marc Frohardt, of Colorado Springs, Colo. Rebels had held the group and charged Frohardt with being an American spy.

Information Minister Soumailla Mahamat said the forces of President Hissene Habre were chasing Libyan-backed rebels of former President Goukouni Oueddei.

El Salvadoran leftists smuggle fewer weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leftist Salvadoran guerrillas, apparently finding themselves with more guns than fighters, are no longer smuggling significant quantities of weapons from Nicaragua, U.S. officials say.

Administration and congressional officials, familiar with recent intelligence reports on the weapons flow, say ammunition, medicine and communications gear are now the principal supplies being brought into El Salvador through the Nicaraguan infiltration routes.

The officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the guerrillas appear to have more than enough guns in El Salvador to arm their estimated 6,000 fighters and are able to re-supply by capturing weapons from government soldiers and by buying guns on the international black market.

Some officials also credited the drop-off of weapons shipments over the past several months to U.S. pressure against the leftist Nicaraguan government to stop the arms trafficking and U.S. interdiction efforts.

The officials said some of the communications equipment being smuggled from Nicaragua is superior to what the Salvadoran army uses and much of it is manufactured in Japan.

But officials said the guerrillas' electronic gear is not all Japanese. They said a raid on a guerrilla "safe house" inside El Salvador found it equipped with a U.S.-made Apple home computer.

President Reagan has long cited the flow of Soviet-bloc weapons through Nicaragua to leftist guerrilla groups as the chief reason for unrest in the region.

But in recent days, the Nicaraguan government and Cuban President Fidel Castro have expressed willingness to negotiate a halt to arms shipments and the withdrawal of military advisers from neighboring nations.

Leaders of the so-called Contadora group — Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama — also have proposed elimination of cross-border arms shipments in their attempt to mediate peace in the region. Last week, Reagan endorsed their efforts, saying it was critical to achieve "the verifiable withdrawal of all foreign military and security advisers and a certifiable freeze on the acquistion of offensive armaments."

Power source again attacked by guerrillas

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftists blacked out one-third of El Salvador by dynamiting power lines, marking the 27th major guerrilla attack on the nation's power grid this year, military sources report.

The attack occurred Monday when rebels struck power lines in San Vicente, blacking out four eastern provinces. The sabotage is part of the rebel campaign to wreck the economy and topple the U.S.-backed rightist government.

The Defense Ministry reported one member of a civil defense patrol was killed and nine others wounded Monday in a guerrilla ambush near San Juan Nonualco, 33 miles southeast of the capital.

A military report said troops from the local army garrison pursued the guerrillas but there was no immediate word on rebel casualties.

In another development Monday, the newspaper El Mundo reported guerrillas attacked the town of El Triunfo, 74 miles east of San Salvador along the Pan-American highway, the nation's main east-west road.

The paper quoted military sources as saying the town was surrounded by rebels but gave no further details.

The report could not be independently confirmed because phone lines to the area, in Usulutan province, were down.

Military sources in the eastern city of San Miguel said guerrillas and troops clashed north of the town of Moncagua, about six miles east of El Triunfo, but no casualties were reported.

Fighting was also reported around the town of Monte San Juan, about 22 miles east of San Salvador. Military sources in the capital said about 100 soldiers were involved, but refused to give furthern details.

The reports of fighting follow recent army claims that it had gained the momentum in the civil war and had rebels on the run.

Liver and onions have ghostly smell

LAMPASAS, Texas (AP) — The pungent aroma of frying liver and onions once wafted gently through the high-ceilinged rooms of a 100-year-old Lampasas home — not because the dish was favored by the current residents, but because it apparently was a favorite of a former resident, now long dead.

This mysterious aroma occurred only on Friday nights in the magnificent Greek Revival house built in 1883 for then-Lampasas County Judge W.P. Beall, say O.S. Bradley and his wife, Wanda, who are restoring the home.

The Bradleys are not too disturbed to realize that Adelaide Higdon, a resident of the house for 56 years, may be more than a figment of their imaginations. In fact, they've had enough clues to conclude Adelaide is more substantial.

At first, the Bradleys were delighted to share their gracious, spacious home with the unseen spirit. But delight turned to disgust when they learned more of the ghost's earthly existence.

When the Bradleys first bought the home in 1981, and after researching its history, Mrs. Bradley "thought of Adelaide so much I confided in her as we began the changes."

In "talking" to Adelaide, Mrs. Bradley gave progress reports on the restoration projects under way, pointing out how the garden was faring and just sort of assuring Adelaide her house was in good hands.

It was after this ritual began that the aroma of liver and onions was noticed. At first, the source was a puzzle. But it soon became clear the smell was in the house, and then the Bradleys noted it only occurred on Friday evenings.

As Friday nights — and the liver and onions aroma — continued, the Bradleys speculated "this must have been the usual Friday evening dish" prepared by their invisible former occupant they choose to believe is Adelaide. It was getting to be a common occurrence, and no one thought too much about it. Then one night another strange event took place.

Thundershowers dampen nation

By The Associated Press

Broad bands of scattered showers and thundershowers stretched early today from the Dakotas across western Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Rain and a few thunderstorms also reached from the northern Atlantic Coast across the lower two-thirds of the Appalachians, and from Georgia and Florida along the Gulf Coast to southeast Texas.

The rain was especially heavy in Baton Rouge, La., where 3½ inches fell in the six hours ending at 3 a.m. EDT.

Thunderstorms were forecast for later today from the Carolinas across Florida, from Georgia through Louisiana and the southern Texas coast, and over northern New England, northwest Minnesota and from Utah and eastern Nevada through the northern half of Arizona. Showers also were expected over coastal Washington.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 53 degrees at Meacham, Ore. and Quillayute, Wash., to 85 degrees at Phoenix, Ariz.

Ghostly gourmet haunts old house

The Bradleys had gone to bed and both were sleeping soundly. "All of a sudden, Brad bolted straight up, then woke me and asked if I had heard the door slamming right by our heads," Mrs. Bradley recalled.

The house and their bedroom were checked — but nothing was found that could have been connected to a vigorously slamming door.

Mrs. Bradley usually puts in the earplug to her radio and drifts off to soothing music that only she can hear. So she hadn't heard anything that night. "We just sort of forgot about it," she said, "until we were showing a workman through the house. Looking at the blueprints of the original structure, he said, 'Did you know there used to be a doorway right where your bed is?'"

Later, the Bradleys found a picture of the handsome, stern-looking Adelaide, with her haughty high cheekbones, and gave her a place of honor in their parlor.

Long-time residents of Lampasas have filled in the blanks as to Adelaide and her husband. "We were told they owned a department store here for many years and they made frequent trips to New York and Paris, buying the latest fashions for the store," Mrs. Bradley said. "Some of the furnishings and columns in the house were brought here from France by them." The Higdons also entertained lavishly and by all accounts were a generous host and hostess, they were told.

But along with all of these stories attesting to the Higdons' cultural endeavors and social graces, the Bradleys also found out that Adelaide was a troubled person and that the former residents "fought like cats and dogs, and we understand she broke all the china by throwing plates at him. When I found this out — and that she was considered to be a very mean woman by people whose relatives remembered her — I quit talking to her," Mrs. Bradley said.

"Now we don't smell liver and onions any more."

Straightening a portrait in her Lampasas, Texas, home is Wanda Bradley. She and her husband, O.S. Bradley, are restoring a house built in 1883. They claim the odor of cooking liver and onions mysteriously drifted through the house on Friday evenings until Mrs. Bradley learned more about the home's first residents. Women maintain anti-arms vigil

ROMULUS, N.Y. (AP) — Nearly 2,000 women who marched on the Seneca Arms Depot remained in the area today pledging to keep up their civil disobedience "until there are no nuclear weapons left on this planet."

About 210 women were arrested Monday when the protesters, demanding a halt to U.S. plans to deploy cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe this year, walked two miles to the arsenal and scaled its 6-foot fence in small groups.

As more than 200 counter-demonstrators jeered, military police calmly waited for the women to climb down from the fence before restraining them with plastic handcuffs and leading them to nearby vans for fingerprints and photographs.

Most were released after being issued warning letters, although repeat offenders were given tickets ordering them to appear before a federal magistrate on trespassing charges, depot spokesman Robert Zemanek said.

"There is no end of it until there are no nuclear weapons on this planet. This is not a one-day event," Toni Fitzpatrick, of New York City, said after her release with a warning not to jump the fence again.

Zemanek said he expected more arrests today.

The women, who decorated a 200-yard stretch of the depot's fence with cattails, family snapshots, pillowcase banners, paper cutouts of nuclear missiles, multi-colored yarn and crepe paper, claim the facility is a storage site for nuclear weapons.

Chanting "be gentle to our sisters" during a march on Seneca Army Depot by members of Womens Peace Encampment are marchers Barbara Nowak, left, and Amy Waldman. The cry arose as fellow marchers were arrested.

The Army refuses to confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons at the Seneca depot or at any other site.

The protest drew women from Maine to California as well as female lawmakers from Australia and West Germany and observers from Italy, Great Britain, Japan, Canada and El Salvador.

The arrests began Monday morning when 13 women were seized near the depot airfield after planting a pine tree and sunflower seeds. "The message we are giving is that we are peace-loving women," Connie McKenna, a spokeswoman for the demonstrators, had said earlier.

The two-mile march from Sampson State Park to the depot took three hours Monday as participants were halted repeatedly while authorities checked security arrangements.

Gov. Mario Cuomo ordered 125 state troopers to the scene and canceled a trip to the National Governors Association conference in Portland, Maine, to stay close to the situation. "We ... had women saying they feared their lives were in danger," Cuomo said.

Authorities had feared violence partly because of an incident Saturday where a shouting match between marching demonstrators and a group of townspeople led to 55 arrests — including two townspeople — in nearby Waterloo.

Sheriff's deputies from 10 counties averted a clash Monday by forming a line between the marchers and angry Seneca County residents who waved American flags and jeered, calling the women "communists" and "lesbians."

Monday's march was the largest event yet for the Women's Encampment for a Future of Peace and Justice, which opened July 4 on a 52-acre farm flanking the 11,000-acre depot.

The camp was inspired by the two-year vigil of British women at the Greenham Common U.S. Air Force base near London, a planned site for American cruise missiles. Several women from Greenham Common joined the march.

A smattering of men brought up the rear of Monday's march and several more attended to child care, food preparation and parking for the marchers.

The women have made it clear that they want the camp and its actions to be mainly the work of women, led by women. They have asked women who come to do so without their male relatives and friends.

Senators want freeze bill on floor

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate backers of a nuclear weapons freeze are pushing to get a bill supporting their cause out of committee and onto the Senate floor, though their urging may mean it will go there without recommendation for approval.

A vote on the bill was scheduled for today at a meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee called by a majority of the members over the objections of Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., the chairman.

Seven of the eight Democrats on the 17-member panel are freeze supporters, and a Democratic source said Monday he was "reasonably confident" they would get the votes of the necessary two other senators.

This source said the freeze supporters would try first for a motion to send the freeze resolution to the floor with a recommendation that the Republican-controlled Senate adopt it. The House, dominated by Democrats, has already passed the measure.

A Republican source said it was "unclear" whether such a motion could win approval, but "it seems to be the conventional wisdom that they don't have the votes."

The sources, aides to senators on the committee, spoke on condition they not be named.

Chaplain Morrison, a legislative organizer for the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign, said, "I will be pleasantly surprised if any Republicans do join us to vote for the nuclear freeze resolution."

Sources said some Republicans might be willing, however, to support a move to send the measure to the full Senate without any recommendation or with a recommendation that it be rejected.

The resolution, passed by the House in May, calls for a mutual and verifiable freeze of Soviet and U.S. nuclear weapons.

All of the Democrats on the Senate committee except Sen. Edward Zorinsky of Nebraska voted for the freeze last year.

All eight Democrats and Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., chairman of the panel's arms control subcommittee, wrote to Percy last week demanding today's meeting.

Percy had objected to calling such a session, saying he wanted to consider the freeze along with other arms control resolutions at a meeting Sept. 20.

Under the committee's rules, a meeting is mandatory if demanded by a majority of the members.

Pressler said he is opposed to the freeze resolution as it stands but signed the letter because of impatience with the administration over arms control.

Pressler favors a proposed nuclear "build down," in which two warheads would be removed from nuclear arsenals for each one added.

The administration has said it is interested in this concept, but Pressler said administration officials have failed to develop a specific bargaining position incorporating it.

A source said that after signing the letter to Percy, Pressler wrote to President Reagan asking for a response on the build-down question by today. He said Pressler might vote to send the freeze to the floor if the response satisfied him.

Pressler said Monday night he had not received a response to his letter. He said he understood that William Clark, the president's national security adviser, had been about to sign one earlier in the evening saying a build-down proposal would be presented by Sept. 15, but decided not to.

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., has said that although she does not support the freeze resolution, she would be willing to send it to the floor without a recommendation.

Lebanese villagers protest claims of Israeli takeover

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli forces said they evicted rightist Christian militiamen from a southern Lebanon barracks today, but a militia spokesman said the Christians still occupied the garrison, ringed by Israeli troops.

Reports of the eviction touched off angry protests by thousands of villagers who burned old car tires, tolled church bells, held mass prayer services and decreed a general strike, reports from the area said.

Beirut radios claimed the Israelis bashed some protesters with rifle butts to stop them from storming the Kfar Falous barracks six miles east of the port of Sidon. The state radio said three women were injured in scattered protests.

It also claimed Israeli forces besieged Christian militia barracks in the southern districts of Jezzine, Zahrani and Nabatiyeh in addition to Kfar Falous. But militia officials in Beirut said they had no such information.

It was one of the most serious confrontations between the Israelis and Lebanese rightist Christians, who backed Israel's invasion 14 months ago to destroy the Palestine Liberation Organization but have grown increasingly hostile because of Israeli intervention in Lebanon's sectarian feuds.

The barracks, a two-story stone villa six miles east of the port of Sidon, belonged to the Lebanese Forces militia dominated by President Amin Gemayel's rightist Phalange Party.

The Israeli army ordered it closed last Thursday, charging its militiamen failed to coordinate with Israeli occupation forces in southern Lebanon.

An Israeli army spokesman in Yarze, a Beirut suburb, said Israeli soldeirs moved in and closed the Kfar Falous base after its militia commander defied the Israeli order to shut down the barracks.

"There was no violence," said the spokesman, who declined to be named.

But a spokesman for the Lebanese Forces, Fadi Hayek, said the militiamen "are still inside and in control of the barracks."

Hayek said Israeli officers and militia officials were meeting inside the barracks, surrounded by Israeli troops. He said 20,000 Lebanese villagers rallied outside to demand Israel rescind the eviction order.

The Phalangist-run Voice of Lebanon radio said 10 Israeli armored personnel carriers ringed and took over the Kfar Falous barracks, prompting church meetings and tire-burnings that closed roads to traffic and forced a suspension of year-end exams in all schools in Christian areas of the south.

Israel's army radio said the move to enforce the eviction order followed heightened tensions between Lebanese Forces militiamen and Shiite Moslem residents in the area. Phalangist militiamen were harassing Shiites and kidnapping some of them, the Israeli broadcast said.

Clore waives appeal in death

HOUSTON (AP) — Attorneys say Billy Ray Clore will not appeal his attempted murder conviction in the death of his father.

Clore, 26, was found guilty and assessed a three-year probated sentence on July 18.

In a waiver of appeal filed Monday, Clore asked that his sentence begin Aug. 12, the day he is to be sentenced by state District Judge Ted Poe.

On the same day Clore is to be sentenced he is scheduled to appear before County Court-at-Law Judge Sherman Ross in connection with a misdemeanor marijuana possession charge.

Clore was arrested on the marijuana possession charge two days after he was sentenced on the attempted murder conviction. Police claim a small portion of marijuana was found in his pickup truck.

Accused killer issues warning

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — A sheriff says Henry Lee Lucas, a wandering handyman who has claimed responsibility for about 100 slayings, has issued a warning to women — don't hitchhike.

Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell, who drove Lucas from Montague to Georgetown for his arraignment today on a murder charge, said Lucas talked fervently during the trip about the dangers faced by women hitchhikers.

"He did make a statement that he wanted to caution all female hitchhikers to stay home," Boutwell told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "He said if they don't have the money to leave home, don't go. He talks like he wants to spread the word far and wide.

Ruling delayed on testimonies

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has refused to rule immediately on whether Dallas Cowboys Harvey Martin and Tony Hill must testify in the trial of a Brazilian native charged in an alleged cocaine importation scheme.

U.S. District Judge Robert Porter heard pleas Monday from attorneys representing the two players, who are seeking to quash subpoenas issued by a defense lawyer for Lauriberto Ignacio.

Porter withheld a ruling until after he has heard some of the testimony in the case, which was scheduled to begin today.

Renovation planned at Dyess

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — The Air Force plans to spend $70 million in construction and renovation of facilities to house the B-1 bomber at Dyess Air Force Base, military officials say.

The commander of a special B-1 advance team will arrive here and begin preparations later this month, the Air Force said Monday.

Dyess is scheduled to take delivery of its first B-1 bomber in mid-1985 and reach initial operational capability with a full squadron of 16 bombers in the fall of 1986.

High levels of lead found in soil

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Preliminary test results of soil and water samples at Port Drum Co. refurbishing plant showed high concentrations of lead in soil lining a drainage ditch, health officials said.

City Health Department Administrator Carl Clark said Monday that the official results should be released by the Texas Department of Health in Austin later this week.

The federal Enviromental Protection Agency found high levels of lead in the ditch three years ago but failed to follow up with plans to instruct the company to clean up the area , Clark said.

Man pleads guilty to shootings

HOUSTON (AP) — Charles Edwin Swallow, who pleaded guilty to three shooting deaths and the attempted murder of a 16-year-old girl, will be sentenced Sept. 19, prosecutors say.

Afterward, authorities plan to take Swallow back to South Dakota to face two capital murder charges.

Swallow, who is accused in connection with the deaths of five people in two states, was charged in the March 3, 1981, shooting deaths of Frankie Frasure, William Gunn and Roger Terry. He also was charged with the attempted murder of a 16-year-old girl.

Peso, U.S. recession blamed for bad times along border

By GARDNER SELBY
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Brownsville and El Paso citizens Monday blamed the double-whammy of a devalued peso and the employment-draining U.S. recession for increasing despair along the Rio Grande.

Four witnesses urged a congressional subcommittee to encourage economic cooperation with Mexico, build more bridges across the border, and supplement state funds for schooling children of undocumented workers.

"To tell you the truth, things are so bad that we're really contemplating sending bottled sunshine to the rest of the country," said Cameron County Judge Moises Vela. "We've got an abundance of that."

With unemployment in Brownsville-Harlingen-San Benito at 16.1 percent, sales tax receipts tumbling 39 percent from July 1982, hospitals shutting doors to indigent clients, and shrimpers blocked from fishing inside the 200-mile limit off Mexico, Vela said, "Hopefully, you gentleman will never see the need for bridges for military purposes."

Vela joined the other panelists, two bank executives and El Paso County Judge Pat O'Rourke, in asking the Joint Economic Committee subcommittee, chaired by Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, to advocate an administration-backed immigration package approved by the Senate and awaiting full House consideration.

The package would provide permanent residence status to undocumented workers in the United States before Jan. 1, 1977 and temporary status to those arrived before Jan. 1, 1980. It would also levy fines of $1,000 and more against employers who knowingly hire undocumented workers.

Although Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Mission, and San Antonio Rep. Henry Gonzalez, a Democrat, oppose the bill, the panelists testified that any legislation aimed at controlling the flow of illegal aliens would be an improvement over the status quo.

As for overall recovery, "We arg.optimistic looking five and 10 years into the future," testified Robert Duffey, chairman of Texas Commerce Bank in Brownsville.

But looking at the unstable peso and resulting economic shakiness across the border, Texas Commerce Bank plans to keep its $100 million in available loans inside bank vaults, Duffey said.

ABC copies British

NEW YORK (AP) — Producers of "Reggie," new tonight on ABC, took the characters and their peculiar habits, not to mention several jokes and at least one scene, from the British-made original, "The Fall and Rise of Reginald Perrin." But somehow, that doesn't make the new show as amusing as the old one.

Indeed, take away the laugh track, and you're left with barely a chuckle in the first episode of "Reggie." Dry wit and some raunchy silliness have given way, in the trans-Atlantic crossing, to sexual innuendo and slapstick.

"The Fall and Rise of Reginald Perrin," introduced by the British Broadcasting Corp. nearly a decade ago, is the story of a middle-aged suburbanite who escapes the frustrations of a boring job with flights of fantasy.

Reggie Potter, in the ABC show, seems pretty much the same guy, though troubled in his new, American incarnation by an obsession with sex. "I'd rather be a love machine," he moans when his wife Elizabeth calls him a "warm, sensitive man."

Richard Mulligan, an Emmy-winner from ABC's discontinued "Soap," takes the part created by Leonard Rossiter in the British show, and he's not bad. Trouble is, he's not really funny, either.

Barbara Barrie plays Elizabeth. Jean Smart is Reggie's secretary, Joan, and Chip Zien his boss, C.J.

In the premiere episode of "Reginald Perrin" — the English series can be seen now on some public TV stations — our hero is just beginning to lose interest in his job at Sunshine Desserts, and that's a problem because the company is about to introduce a new, natural-fruit flavor ice cream.

In the first installment of "Reggie," on ABC, the same character, working at the same place — now called Funtime — has just discovered a new interest in life — son Mark's girlfriend, Debra.

Not much else is novel. Some of the jokes are the same, and part of a scene has been pilfered from the prototype — the one where Reggie visits the company sawbones to find out what's wrong. It's sex, of course.

"Reginald Perrin" is not without its faults. There is a tendency to repeat a joke once too often. It's funny the first time, for instance, when Elizabeth picks a piece of a lint off of Reggie's shoulder.

Aces were made to capture kings. Unless, of course, they have a more important duty to fulfill.

North did not have quite enough to jump raise his partner's suit, so he temporized with two clubs and then raised at his next turn. South had more than enough to proceed to game.

The play was soon over. West led a low spade and declarer captured East's king with the ace. He drew trumps in two rounds and then tried the club finesse. East won the king and returned a spade to his partner's queen. The diamond shift was glaringly obvious, and the defenders took two tricks in that suit for a one-trick set.

Declarer should have taken some time to study the hand before playing to the first trick. Since he could discard two diamonds from his hand on dummy's clubs, he should have realized that his contract was safe as long as West could not regain the lead — he would lose no more than one trick in each suit if the club finesse were to fail.

Equally obvious was the fact that the only suit in which West could regain the lead was spades. And declarer could prevent that by simply allowing East to win the first spade trick with the king.

The rest would have been plain sailing. Declarer could win any return, draw trumps and then take the club finesse. Even though that lost, the king of diamonds was safe from attack and the game was secure.

Volcker's power

One word from Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker — promising not to slaughter the recovery with high interest rates — sent bulls stampeding, with the Dow Jones climbing 30 points in one day. It was an enjoyable, but in some ways chilling, demonstration of the power Volcker and a small group of men have over a $3 trillion economy. "Such is the breath of kings," Shakespeare wrote, and Shakespeare never even heard of the Federal Reserve Board.

Given the Volcker rally, and the Commerce Department's estimate of 8.8 percent growth in the second quarter, a new task emerges. Now the Fed must turn from the problem of ending stagnation to that of maintaining growth. The last two months on Wall Street illustrate how it can hamper that process — and how it can help.

For weeks, estimates showed the money supply growing well above its targeted rate. If money supply figures mean what they're supposed to, that meant a danger of inflation. That meant the Fed would have to clamp down. That meant higher interest rates. And that possibility had the market cowering.

Yet clearly, Wall Street was reacting not so much to the money figures as to the Fed's likely reaction. Commodity prices remained steady and falling; if investors actually expected inflation, they would have been buying into gold, oil, and other stores of value.

If the growth in the money supply doesn't mean higher prices, what does it mean? Mainly, it means Americans — and Europeans, Japanese, and Arabs — have been moving dollars from overseas accounts and Middle East oil wells, where they sat throughout the 1970s, back into U.S. stocks, savings accounts, and so on. For technical reasons, this shows up as an increase in the money supply, a rough monetarist translation for, "the sky is falling." Far from pointing to inflation, though, this movement demonstrates people's confidence that inflation is over.

The Federal Reserve no longer explicitly conducts policy by those money figures, but neither has it explicitly rejected them. There remain powerful money-supply watchers in the administration and the financial press who demand at least token attention. By playing the monetary field, Mr. Volcker keeps everyone guessing, and thus maintains maximum room for maneuver.

Keeping everybody guessing, unfortunately, keeps investors guessing, too. If the money supply grows 20 percent, but the price of gold falls $50, what will the Fed do? No one knows. Hence, interest rates will continue to be set unnecessarily high to compensate for the risk of lending, borrowing, and just plain holding U.S. dollars. And the bulls on Wall Street will continue to stumble, on occasion, as they try to figure out which cape to charge.

A stated Fed plan to, say, keep the price of gold at $425, would diminish that uncertainty, and thus promote growth. Even without such a long-term policy, though, the economy should coast along nicely — provided Mr. Volcker continues to pay attention to the right signals, in his own strange and mysterious way. Meanwhile, we have nothing to fear from growth but fear of growth itself.

Another View:

Money for jobs

Should the United States provide any money to help developing countries reschedule the debts they ran up over their heads, when federal spending is being cut for vital human services at home? When more than 10 million Americans are unemployed, should U.S. taxpayers bail out the international banks that imprudently allowed the countries to amass those huge debts?

Those are the kind of rhetorical questions being asked by opponents of a bill, approved by the Senate and now before the House, to increase by $8.4 billion the American contribution to the International Monetary Fund.

The short answer is one word: jobs.

If the debtor countries can't pay their bills, they can't buy American products, and some of them — Brazil, Mexico and Venezuela, to mention three of the biggest debtors — are very good customers indeed. As for the banks, maybe they could handle the losses if the debts had to be repudiated by one or several countries. But maybe not. Anything that jeopardizes the interdependent world financial system jeopardizes the American economy, and that also means jobs.

The American economy depends on a prosperous foreign trade. The 126-nation IMF is an absolutely vital agency in maintaining the stability of the world financial system. The United States isn't the only country being asked to increase its contribution — a loan, by the way, not a gift. Other industrialized countries also are expected to kick in, and they will, but they cannot be expected to do it without the United States.

The debtor countries are not entirely to blame for the fix they're in. The origin of the debt crisis goes back to 1973, when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries began driving up the price of oil. That was especially costly to the developing countries. Inflation of the 1970s, spurred by OPEC, made things worse. So have America's high interest rates, which have run up the costs of carrying the debts.

The banks, too, are not entirely to blame. They could have been more careful about whom they lent to and how much, but they were encouraged by the American and other Western governments to help developing countries to pay their bills for the oil they needed to keep their economies going. If the banks misjudged the growing financial crisis, then and later, they had plenty of official company.

In short, it's easy to look for scapegoats, and profligate foreigners and international bankers are convenient targets, but that doesn't solve problems. The problem now is to get by a financial crunch and keep the world from sinking into a recession that would have serious adverse effects on the American economy. Pledging American funds to help the IMF do its job is the responsible way to begin.

WASHINGTON — Republican members of the House are properly outraged over alterations of official hearing transcripts that put words in their mouths and made them look foolish.

Jack Anderson

Not that tampering with the official record is anything new on Capitol Hill; it's just that the alterations are customarily made by the congressmen themselves. Impromptu remarks that might make them look like ignoramuses are routinely excised.

Any inquiry into the metamorphosis, which changes verbal clubfoots into gazelles, would reveal that a legislator, after participating in debate, can go back to his office, send for the transcript and revise it at his leisure — here, changing "no" to "maybe"; there, adding a literary curlicue or reversing a bogus argument.

But a few weeks ago, Reps. Judd Gregg, R-N.H., and John Hiler, R-Ind., were horrified to discover that some unflattering transcript changes had been made in their remarks at a hearing on environmental matters.

While most of the changes merely polished up the congressmen's grammar, some were clearly done with mischievous intent. The House Ethics Committee was assigned to find the guilty party.

In their zeal to pump "Altergate" into a full-blown scandal that might embarrass the Democrats and share headlines with the purloined Jimmy Carter briefing book foofaraw, Gregg and Hiler charged that similar alterations had been made in the transcripts of still other hearings on the manipulation of the silver market in 1980.

"We have definite documentation that those transcripts were dramatically altered..." cried Gregg in high dudgeon on the House floor.

However, he told us, "We are not pushing that one now."

He has admitted to us that neither he nor his staff had bothered to check the original transcript against the "dramatically altered" printed version before he made his charge. He based his melodramatic accusation on a comparison between a colloquy that appeared in a Barron's magazine editorial and the final printed hearing record.

We did the checking that Gregg should have done. The testimony in question — a colloquy between the late Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., and Commodity Futures Trading Commissioner Read P. Dunn, a Democrat — took up roughly a page in the printed record.

Out of the 308 words in the original transcript, exactly six were changed; three words were added. None of the alterations was significant, much less dramatic.

Gregg, meanwhile, is not shy about revising his own remarks when they make him look silly. At a hearing last March on bank regulation, for example, he declared profoundly: "As we were talking before, it used to be you had to audit three times out of every two years the bank and the comptroller's office." Afterward, he discreetly deleted this puzzling remark along with 22 other changes.

INSIDE RUSSIA: Like the hidden side of the moon, the Soviet side of the earth is sheathed in shadows. Occasionally I try to penetrate the darkness and report what is happening in Kremlinland. From classified intelligence reports, here's what life is like for the workers in Yuri Andropov's "workers paradise":

— Andropov blames Russia's nagging economic ills not on the communist system that caused them but upon the laziness of the workers. He has dispatched police to collar absentee workers in the nation's shops, bathhouses and theaters. He has succeeded merely in adding to the red tape that already entangles them. Now the workers produce elaborate, documented, formal excuses to justify their absences from work. Or if they are refused time off, they simply loaf on the job.

— The Soviet system cannot meet its production goals without slave labor. An estimated 4 million prisoners, both criminal and political, have been herded into work camps and are forced to do hard labor. Any obstinate worker or political dissident can wind up on the slave-labor force for the least offense. Here are a few typical sentences: one year for "parasitism"; three years for anti-Soviet slander; seven years for anti-Soviet agitation.

— As my own small way of focusing attention on Soviet persecution, I rate the leading imprisoned dissidents. Soviet Martyr No. 1 is Yuri Orlov, who dared to monitor the Kremlin's compliance with the human rights accords that it accepted. He's now in a work camp where, in desperation, he went on a hunger strike on July 10. Soviet Martyr No. 2 is Anatoly Shcharansky, whose crime was to ask to leave the country. His wife was allowed to leave, but he was cruelly detained and imprisoned. Soviet Martyr No. 3 is the distinguished physicist Andrei Sakharov who has been offered university posts in Austria and Norway. But the Soviets have banished him to a lonely and wasteful exile.

INSIDE REPORT:

War's tide turns in Salvador

SAN VICENTE, El Salvador — The sudden reversal of tide in the Salvadoran war, giving rise at the U.S. Embassy to extravagant hopes for victory by year's end, is led by transfer of San Vicente province from guerrilla domination to government control.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The 5,500 troops of the government's "peace force" that poured into this long-neglected province June 10 have chased out most Marxist guerrillas. What's more important, the government is committed to stay — reopening schools, rebuilding agriculture, training Civil Defense militiamen and promising permanent protection for the people.

Combined with military successes elsewhere, the San Vicente offensive cut through the gloom that began building last winter. Although U.S. military officers, mindful of Vietnam's foolish flights of optimism, are cautious, other senior American officials believe the guerrillas might be penned into remote mountainous areas by the end of 1983. That would effectively end the war — without negotiations, without American troops, without radical social change.

The new mood immediately follows guerrilla victories this past winter and early spring, when the military initiative was in Marxist hands as at no previous time. The abrupt turn of the tide leads to suspicions the guerrillas are playing possum, perhaps as part of Nicaragua's peace offensive. But that theory is belied by recent guerrilla casualties (perhaps 300 killed the past six weeks), including a withdrawal from Guazapa, in the neighboring province, only after bloody fighting.

The change is in the Salvadoran army, which at long last has left its barracks. The turning point came April 18 when Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia, a favorite of since-replaced U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton because of fervent support for land reform, was ousted as minister of defense by a restive officer corps. His successor, Gen. Carlos Eugenio Vides Casanova, purged Garcia's cronies and got officers out of the country club and into the countryside.

Although fighting was much heavier at Guazapa, San Vicente has been the new effort's showcase. Uncontested rebel control over the province ended as some 2,000 guerrillas, bowing to irresistible force displayed in a few skirmishes, abandoned comfortable base camps and headed for mountain country along the Honduran border.

An estimated 200 remain. "They'll have to live the hard life of a guerrilla now," Lt. Col. Peter Stankovich, the operation's senior U.S. trainer, told us. Although embassy officials were alarmed when guerrillas this week ambushed a mess truck outside San Vicente, Stankovich regarded it as a favorable indicator of short enemy rations.

Stressing social welfare activities, both U.S. and Salvadoran officers here talk about "putting the focus on the people instead of the guerrillas" — rhetoric uneasily reminiscent of Vietnamese "pacification." In truth, Salvadoran guerrillas offer little to compete for hearts and minds. We saw in San Vicente a ruined province left behind by departing insurgents: blown power grids, fallow fields, closed schools, displaced persons and depopulated towns (San Lorenzo, once the home of 10,000 people, is down to 500 families).

The mountain town of San Sebastian had seen no government troops until they arrived at the beginning of July. This was the village where guerrillas a few months ago abducted 200 townspeople awaiting a soccer match. At the same soccer field Tuesday, we watched 33 Civil Defense recruits drilled under the supervision of U.S. Army trainers.

Salvadoran Civil Defense forces frequently have brutalized the villagers they were supposed to protect. Following national orders, Maj. Juan Pablo Ticas told the recruits at the soccer field: "If there's any of you who don't believe that the mission you have is to serve the people, now is the time to leave. I repeat: We haven't come here to be a load on this town." Whatever deviations there will be, El Salvador's official policy is no longer to frighten its people away from the communists.

Some 1,500 men in this province are awaiting Civil Defense openings for an unpaid job with, at best, an old uniform scrounged from the army. Several recruits at the soccer field wore civilian clothes ("reminds me of the Spirit of '76," cracked a U.S. Army captain), symbolizing a war fought on the cheap. The San Vicente artillery park includes 30-year-old Yugoslav mortars and generally looks like a military museum exhibit. Most U.S. M-16 rifles supplied the army are old models. Worst of all, the congressional limit of 55 on American trainers is painfully low.

Feminist effort seeks impossible

It sure was a disgusting sight to see those Democrats out in San Antonio recently trying to see who could out grovel whom before 1,000 hard-eyed feminists.

Charley Reese

Fritz Mondale, Fritz Hollings, John Glenn, Alan Cranston and Gary Hart presented a sorry spectacle of men with no backbone and very little concept of American government.

Anybody who says he's going to use the office of the presidency and federal aid to bludgeon the states into ratifying the Equal Rights Amendment is not fit to be president. The Constitution does not authorize a president to do that.

The way I figure it, if a candidate is not man enough to stand up to special interests, then he darned sure doesn't have the backbone to stand up to the Soviets. Just based on their San Antonio performance, I wouldn't vote for any of these turkeys unless the alternative is even more disgusting, which it may well be, given the sorry state of leadership in both parties these days.

These Democrats do not yet seem to realize that special interest organizations represent only themselves and their narrow, bigoted views. They do not seem to realize that what the American people are hungry for is a leader with integrity and common sense who will address the problems facing the majority of Americans.

Feminists are so irrational and intolerant that they make a man consider that maybe it was a mistake to allow women to vote. It certainly was in their case. Fortunately, the great majority of American women bear no resemblance whatsoever to the militant feminists which is why the Equal Rights Amendment was not ratified in the first place.

Feminist cannot understand the difference between justice which all women deserve and equivalency which women cannot achieve for the simple reason that Mother Nature designed men and women differently.

Women are structurally weaker than men. If you take a normal boy and a normal girl and submit them to the same regimen of exercise and diet, the male will develop a stronger, faster body. The only way you can alter this fact is to inject the female with male hormones.

In order to appease the feminists and graduate women from the service academies, the academies have to practice a double standard and require less of the women than they do of the men. Women can't do those jobs which require the strength and stamina of a male which is why they are no good at heavy construction, combat or football.

What the feminists want to do, and it's evidence of their irrationality, is erase this difference with the Equal Rights Amendment which would mandate not justice, but that men and women be treated as if they were interchangeable which they are not and never will be.

Women even think differently than men, more intuitively and less logically, and you feminists needn't write me any nasty letters complaining about this because it is based on scientific research conducted by women.

What the country needs is fewer feminists and more men who have some backbone and do not cringe and fawn over a small minority of harpies.

nation in brief

Employee charged in rapes, murders

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A kitchen worker at a nursing home has been charged with raping and murdering two of seven women who died at the home since January, police say.

Anthony Joyner, 24, who had worked at the Kearsley Home of Christ Church Hospital for 2½ years, was ordered held without bail Monday on charges arising from the July 19 deaths of Mildred Alston, 79, and Eugenia Borda, 90. Both victims were asphyxiated and sexually assaulted, according to a coroner's report.

Woman poisons self, daughter

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — A 28-year-old woman who killed herself and her 11-month-old daughter with poisoned ice cream had left at least 10 notes saying she would take the lives of herself and her two children, police say.

Chanchal Agrawal and her daughter, Nisha, died Sunday after they ate ice cream laced with potassium cyanide. The woman's son, Neeraj, 2, was also fed the ice cream but survived and was in satisfactory condition Monday at St. Elizabeth Hospital in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Agrawal's husband, who teaches at Purdue University, was not home when the ice cream was eaten Saturday night, police said.

Judge bars Bible classes in school

BRISTOL, Va. (AP) — A federal judge has barred private Bible classes in public schools but left the door open for Bible instruction controlled by the school district.

U.S. District Judge Jackson L. Kiser, who on Monday filed a ruling barring the classes taught by the group Bible Teaching in Private Schools, said the Bible was proper material for instruction "taught objectively."

City Councilman Sam Crockett and his wife had sued, contending the classes violated the constitutional separation of church and state. The classes in Bristol public schools were voluntary but were attended by most pupils.

New York homeless sent next door

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — A pledge by New York City not to send any more homeless people to northern New Jersey hotels without warning has not satisfied New Jersey officials, who want to know when New York will take back the 300 families already here.

Robert Jorgen, director of crisis intervention services for New York City, said Monday it was impossible to give a timetable. The city began sending homeless to New Jersey hotels in February because it lacks enough low-income apartments or cheap hotel rooms.

Man hit by lightning annoyed at revival

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A man struck by lightning says he thought he was dead and experienced a pleasant floating sensation — and was annoyed at first when doctors revived him.

"I know this sounds weird, but I could see myself in the ambulance and them giving me electric shocks to start my heart," said John Loughry, 29, of Akron. "I thought, 'What... are they doing? Why don't they leave me dead? I feel good.'"

Loughry and James Richardson, also 29, of Barberton, were fishing July 23 from a boat on the Berlin Reservoir in Mahoning County when it began to rain. They went ashore and under a tree for shelter.

Loughry said he remembers telling Richardson that the worst place to be during a storm was under a tree. Moments later, lightning struck.

Both were knocked unconscious by the bolt. Richardson quickly recovered, but was disoriented. Loughry had stopped breathing.

Campers found the two men and administered cardiopulmonary resuscitation to Loughry until police, park rangers and paramedics arrived.

"After I got hit, I don't remember what happened until they had me in the emergency vehicle," Loughry said. "The funny part was that at the time I was dead, I didn't mind. I was floating around, having a good time."

Doctors at a local hospital later told Loughry they feared he might have suffered brain damage because his brain had been without oxygen for several minutes.

"I flipped them out when I could talk in the emergency room," Loughry said. "They kept saying, 'We can't believe you're alive.'"

Loughry, who is at home recuperating, said he still feels sore and tired.

"I feel like someone put a rope around my neck and dragged me down a rocky road for a hundred miles," he said.

Loughry also said that the next time he sees lightning, "I'm heading for the basement."

Governors criticize tax cuts, defense spending

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Democratic governors railed at the Reagan administration's plan for tax cuts and defense spending, saying the economic strategy has "failed to produce anything other than a $200 billion deficit and an artificially strong dollar."

A letter by Nebraska Gov. Bob Kerrey, signed Monday by five other Democrats at the National Governors' Association convention, criticized Vice President George Bush, who at the meeting's opening session Sunday argued against increased taxes.

In today's final session, the governors were to consider several recession-inspired measures ranging from help for the homeless to better protection for the jobless that will put them at odds with President Reagan in the 1984 election year.

Gov. James Thompson of Illinois, a Republican, was to be elected as association chairman today.

Kerrey's letter to Bush said Reagan's economy plan has "failed to produce anything other than a $200 billion deficit and an artificially strong dollar which is liquidating our first line of defense — our industrial and agricultural production capacity.

"We are weary of self-serving statements calling for reduced spending and taxes without public-serving statements of how to accomplish these things," the letter said.

Bush had told the governors the answer to deficits "cannot possibly be to raise taxes and spend money just as this recovery is gathering strength."

The letter also rapped Bush's comments on Central America, calling them "wholly political, remarkably misleading and dangerous for those of us who, like you, believe in pursuing a goal of peace."

Bush told the governors the administration is "trying to build governments (in Central America) with ballots."

Signing the letter with Kerrey were Govs. Rudy Perpich of Minnesota, Tony Earl of Wisconsin, Toney Anaya of New Mexico, Bill Clinton of Arkansas and Richard Lamm of Colorado. Kerry said he hoped for more signatures before the convention ends.

Economist Alan Greenspan told the governors on Monday the economic recovery would slow down "at a very dramatic rate" next year and won't perk up again until after the presidential election.

Greenspan, who was chief economic adviser to former President Ford, said it will be months before the economic recovery sends significant revenues into their state budgets.

A pre-conference poll of 30 governors by The Associated Press also found most governors saying the recovery is only trickling down to them.

Greenspan called for an economic summit conference after the 1984 elections to make some tough political decisions to revive the recovery.

Greenspan's suggestions of what should be done at that time match recommendations already made by the governors: reduce the federal deficit, control entitlement programs such as Social Security and Medicare and tighten Pentagon spending controls.

Baby born in tavern

CHICAGO (AP) — The birth of a 6-pound, 15-ounce baby girl at a tavern was met by applause.

The 27-year-ild mother "came in and said she was going to have her baby," said Charmaine Anderson, 25, a customer at the Octagon Pub, who aided in the Sunday night delivery.

The woman, whose identity has not been revealed, had been admitted to the labor room at Columbus Hospital, but left for an unknown reason.

She then walked the few blocks to the Octagon and calmly asked Ms. Anderson to accompany her to the women's room because she was about to give birth.

In the meantime, bartender John Brusic called police, who told him they were trying to find the woman. Sgt. John McDonnell said that when police arrived, "she was already delivering."

Government frees more violators of martial law

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist government says it has freed nearly 1,000 more martial-law violators than originally reported, and it thanked the West for agreeing to talks aimed at rescheduling Poland's massive debt.

The state-run news agency PAP, in a report Monday night, said about 1,800 people have benefited from the post-martial law amnesty program, not 800 as first announced. The agency gave no reason for the additional releases and did not elaborate on who was freed.

PAP also welcomed an agreement reached "in principle" by Western governments and banks on opening negotiations to reschedule repayments on the $25 billion Poland owes them. The government has been pressing for a delay in repayments because it needs cash to buy raw materials and spare parts.

The Communists formally ended martial law July 22 after 19 months, but tightened censorship, stiffened penalties for dissidents and instituted other powers to crush opposition by the banned Solidarity labor movement. No major Solidarity figures imprisoned in the crackdown were released in the amnesty. In Gdansk, where the independent union was formed three years ago, its leader Lech Walesa returned to work at the Lenin shipyard Monday after a month-long vacation, displaying the outlawed Solidarity emblem on his T-shirt.

He told ABC television he intends to meet with the union's underground and plot new strategies to revive the union despite government warnings. "That is my duty," he said.

He also said the post-martial law measures enacted to stifle dissent "make things worse."

Walesa claimed the government has thrown Poland backward to what he described as the bleak days when the East bloc lived under feared Soviet dictator Josef Stalin, who died in 1953. Walesa said "that is a bad thing."

The 39-year-old electrician did not disclose what plans the union underground has for Aug. 31, the third anniversary of the accords that led to the formation of Solidarity as the first union in the East bloc free of Communist control. Last year widespread protests erupted on the anniversary and riot squads killed five people.

In Warsaw, thousands of Poles filed past graves Monday to mark the 39th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising in which an estimated 200,000 people died fighting Nazi invaders.

No incidents were reported during the anniversary, which for many Poles has become a symbol of resentment not only against German occupation forces but against the Soviet army which occupied Poland after World War II.

Sri Lankan government lifts curfew

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The government lifted a two-day nationwide curfew to let people buy food, at soaring prices, following a week of ethnic violence that has left more than 200 people dead.

Douglas Liyanage, secretary of the Ministry of State, said Monday that arrest warrants were issued for "a number" of members of the Communist Party and two other banned leftist parties, the Janatha Vimukthi Peramus and Nova Sana Samaj. He refused to say how many were picked up.

Officials have indicated they believe the three parties caused the violence between minority Tamils and majority Sinhalese by taking advantage of Sinhalese anger over the killing of 13 soldiers July 23. Tamils were blamed for the killings.

The government appears to believe leftists aim to wreck the economy and overthrow President Junius Jayewardene's conservative government. The Communists have one seat in the 168-member Parliament and the other two parties have none.

Cabinet ministers say there is evidence "foreign elements" masterminded the alleged plot. The Colombo Sun in an editorial Monday called for the closing of all Soviet bloc embassies.

Government officials estimate 50,000 people were left homeless by arson in the past week, and some 150,000 jobs have been lost because of arson and looting at 17 major factories and thousands of small businesses.

When the curfew was lifted for nine hours Monday, the streets quickly filled with people and there were long lines throughout the market area, particularly at government cooperatives where most staple foods are distributed.

There were no reports of food shortages, although the cost of many items had soared from pre-riot prices. No violence was reported during the nine hours and officials promised to lift the curfew for 10 hours today.

"The cost of living has gone up 300 to 400 percent," said one shopper as independent merchants were charging 26 cents for a coconut that cost 4 cents before the riots — and $7.90 for a pound of fresh tuna.

Liyanage said there was plenty of food in warehouses and the only problem was getting it to stores. People complained about not getting all they wanted, but they said no one would go hungry.

A vendor, selling tuna fish, sets up his shop on the street in front of a burned out building in the small town of Dehiwala, Sri Lanka. He is now charging five times the regular price as residents rush to stock up following a 48 hour curfew over weekend.

In New Delhi, India, Sri Lankan Foreign Minister A.C.S. Hameed told Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Monday that "the law and order situation is steadily improving" in his island nation, just off Indian's southeastern coast. Some politicians in the southernmost Indian state of Tamil Nadu have demanded India intervene to protect the Tamils.

Mrs. Gandhi authorized central government offices to show sympathy for the Tamil victims by closing today and government owned airlines suspended flights to Madras and other airports in Tamil Nadu.

The 14-hour general strike brought life to a standstill throughout the state, which has a large Tamil population. Officials said the state's power, water and milk supplies would remain unaffected and radio and telegraph offices remained open.

At least 100 demonstrations protesting the killings were reported throughout Tamil Nadu on Monday, including one in Madras where female medical students caried human skulls from laboratories.

Demonstrators disrupted some train service in the state. Police said a man in Madurai, 252 miles south of Madras, poured kerosene over his body and burned himself to death in protest.

The Tamil ambush that sparked the rioting was blamed on the movement for a separate state for the Tamil minority in northern Sri Lanka. The Parliament is expected to adopt a constitutional amendment Thursday banning separatist political activity.

The target is the Tamil United Liberation Front, the biggest opposition party. It has 16 seats to 143 for Jayewardene's United National Party. The 16 Tamil members would be required to swear that they do not advocate a separate state in order to remain active in politics.

Liyanage announced a broadening of censorship to include "other materials" — presumably photographs — in addition to news reports. He said the use of cameras was restricted and journalists during the curfew hours could only travel between their hotels and the Ministry of Information.

Diplomats still keep slaves, says former official

LONDON (AP) — Some diplomats keep slaves at their residences in Western countries and escape prosecution by claiming diplomatic immunity, a former official of Britain's Anti-Slavery Society contends.

Patrick Montgomery, who retired as secretary of the organization in 1980 but remains a member of the society, said during an interview Monday with The Associated Press that slaves are kept for sex and for domestic work.

He said cases had been reported in recent years from Washington, New York, Geneva and London. He said most of the slaves are Asian but declined to reveal the nationality of the diplomats allegedly involved.

In a letter published in the London Times last Saturday as part of a running debate in the newspaper about breaches of diplomatic conduct, Montgomery wrote:"Slave owning became illegal in England in 1772. Yet twice in recent years I have been given first-hand evidence of slave-owning by persons of diplomatic status living or staying in London..."

"In one case, the matron of a well-known clinic was required to allow a patient to have his slave sleeping across his doorway. Believing that the slave was about to break down for lack of rest, the matron offered to provide a relief. 'She stays here at my pleasure,' was the reply."

Montgomery, who did not identify the clinic, added in the letter: "In an adjacent street a girl emerged briefly from a diplomat's flat (apartment) to seize an opportunity to show to the wife of a friend of mine bite marks on her arm and a brand mark on the crown of her head.

"She was on several occasions seen being dragged out screaming to be lent to the diplomat's men friends. The police declined to take action. My friend protested and the diplomat moved...

"The incidence of this abuse...is not uncommon in capital cities. The most effective remedy is probably to inform immediately a television company that is able and willing to publicize it."

Montgomery, 70, told The Associated Press that in most instances the slaves are confined to embassy grounds.

He said that in some instances where complaints were made to the U.S. State Department and the British Foreign Office, the situation was "cured discreetly" by the diplomats involved.

In some cases where charges were brought against diplomats allegedly keeping slaves, they claimed diplomatic immunity but shipped the slaves home, he said.

The independently funded Anti-Slavery Society was founded in 1839, six years after the death of William Wilberforce, the British legislator and anti-slavery campaigner who sponsored a parliamentary bill that abolished slave trading by Britain in 1807.

Although slave-owning became illegal in England in 1772, slavery was not abolished throughout the British empire until 1833, one month after the death of Wilberforce.

Slavery has been outlawed in Western countries but reportedly still continues in some parts of the world. The society, set up to combat slavery throughout the world, is linked with the United Nations and provides regular reports on slavery and practices such as exploitation through economic bondage.

Arthritis forces retirement of doctor who performed first heart transplant

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Dr. Christiaan Barnard, who performed the first human heart transplant 15 years ago, is retiring at the age of 60 because arthritis has impaired the use of his hands.

His retirement was announced Monday by P.J. Loubser, a provincial health official, who said Barnard's "brilliance as a cardiac surgeon and his pioneering work in this sphere led to the amazing and dramatic first human heart transplant which shook the whole world."

Loubser said Barnard asked to take early retirement as chief specialist in the heart surgery department at Cape Town's Groote Schuur Hospital, a government hospital.

Peru seeks help in fighting terrorism

LIMA, Peru (AP) — President Fernando Belaunde Terry says his government will try to recruit foreign advisers to help security forces combat left-wing terrorism.

"We are not looking for agreements with other governments, but for support from people who are familiar with the problem, no matter what their nationality," Belaunde said Monday.

Second Vice President Javier Alva said the search for advisers would take place "in democratic countries" that have controlled terrorism. Diplomatic sources said there already are Argentine and Israeli advisers in Peru, and Percovich said police have been trained in Italy, West Germany and Israel.

Nuclear safety committee formed

MOSCOW (AP) — Yevgeny Kulov, a physicist and engineer, will head a new committee to oversee job safety in the Soviet nuclear power industry, according to the official Tass news agency.

Kulov, whose appointment was announced Monday, has been deputy minister of medium machine building since 1982, according to Tass.

The committee's formation was announced July 19 — one of several developments indicating government concern about the nuclear industry's safety.

Oil exporters consider organizing

PUERTO LA CRUZ, Venezuela (AP) — The energy ministers of Venezuela, Mexico, Ecuador and Trinidad-Tobago are considering creation of a Latin American organization of oil exporting countries.

Humberto Calderon Berti of Venezuela, Francisco Labastidas of Mexico, Gustavo Galindo of Ecuador and Patrick Manning of Trinidad-Tobago discussed the proposal Monday, according to a spokesman, and will try to reach a preliminary agreement to set up the Organization of Latin American Petroleum Exporting Countries or OLAPEC.

The four countries produce about 5 million barrels of oil daily. The United States is the major market for the four nations' oil exports.

Typhoon aftermath kills 103

PEKING (AP) — Floods, thunderstorms and collapsing houses resulting from a major typhoon have killed at least 103 people in south China's Guangdong province, the China News Service reports.

Provincial newspapers reported two other people were killed in neighboring Fujian province when the typhoon hit last week with winds of more than 75 miles an hour.

The China News Service said 440 people had been injured in Guangdong. It said more than 40,000 acres of farmland was flooded.

Twenty people die in collision

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Twenty people were killed and about 50 injured when a passenger bus collided head on with a truck.

The crash occurred Monday some 45 miles west of Dhaka as the bus was headed to the town of Mymensingh.

Quake shakes Taiwan

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A strong earthquake shook southern and eastern Taiwan today, the Central Weather Bureau reported. There were no immediate reports of casualties or damage.

A bureau spokesman said the quake registered 6.3 on the Richter scale and was centered at sea 50 miles southeast of Hengchun, a fishing village 250 miles south of Taipei.

The Richter scale is a measurement of ground motion as recorded on seismographs.

Boston Red Sox manager Ralph Houk kicks his hat after arguing with home plate umpire Mike Reilly about a call at home plate Monday. Houk was ejected and Milwaukee beat the Red Sox, 6-2.

Can Kuhn follow himself?

Baseball being held hostage by question

NEW YORK (AP) — The first item on the agenda for this summer's annual meeting of baseball owners is the question of who will succeed Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

It might as well be the only item on the agenda.

"Everything is being held hostage to the commissioner question," says Oakland A's owner Roy Eisenhardt. "Until that's resolved, nobody is going to give any attention to other matters."

These summer meetings, coming one year after the fate of Kuhn's re-election bid more or less was resolved, could represent the commissioner's final chance to succeed himself.

Baseball's owners met in San Diego last summer, but when it became clear that Kuhn could not gain the necessary three-quarters majority for re-election, his supporters put off a vote until Nov. 1.

THAT VOTE finally came in Chicago. There were three dissenting votes in the 14-member American League and five no-votes in the 12-member National League. Kuhn had fallen two votes short in the NL.

The possibility still remains, however, that the owners could vote on Kuhn one more time during the summer meetings this Wednesday and Thursday in Boston.

Kuhn was quoted Monday as saying Baseball's Executive Council has worked out a procedure for him to continue in his job, but he refused to predict an actual vote would keep him there. There also were conflicting reports Monday night that a secret vote already had been taken on the issue.

"I have discussed the possibility with the Council," Kuhn was quoted as saying in today's New York Times. "But there has been no resolution of it, and I want to stop there in mentioning it."

ABC Sports quoted an unidentified owner as saying that a secret vote already was taken to retain the commissioner. But RKO Sports quoted Kuhn supporter Jerry Reinsdorf, chairman of the board of the Chicago White Sox and a member of the Council, as saying no vote had been taken.

"There's no procedure for voting him out of office," Eisenhardt said. "There's only a procedure for electing and re-electing a commissioner. There's no rule saying that a commissioner, having failed in re-election in that one meeting we had, is no longer eligible to be re-elected."

Even Kuhn's most ardent supporters, however, admit the chances are slim at this point that Kuhn will succeed himself.

"He has the same support he had, but the opposition is also the same," San Diego Padres President Ballard Smith said.

Kuhn supporters, including Smith, have held several meetings among themselves and with opponents of the commissioner aimed at getting Kuhn re-elected. These have failed to change any of the dissenting votes.

Last November, the telling no-votes in the National League came from August Busch Jr. of the St. Louis Cardinals, Nelson Doubleday of the New York Mets, John McMullen of the Houston Astros, Ted Turner of the Atlanta Braves and James R. Williams of the Cincinnati Reds.

In December at the owners' annual Winter Meetings in Honolulu, an eight-member committee, headed by Milwaukee Brewers owner Bud Selig, was named to begin the process of finding a new commissioner.

Although Selig's committee has been sworn to silence, the names of four possible successors have surfaced.

The first was former Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon, now head of the U.S. Olympic Committee. Another Olympic-type on the list reportedly is Peter Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

Jack Valenti, former baseball television executive and now president of the Motion Picture Association of America, and Yale University President Dr. A. Bartlett Giamatti also have been mentioned.

The problem is all four of these men reportedly have said they weren't interested.

The most prominent baseball name mentioned has been that of John McHale, Montreal Expos president, but he turned down the job last November in Chicago.

THE ONLY announced candidate has been Hall of Famer Henry Aaron, but his candidacy has not been considered realistic.

"I don't know who the candidates are, and I don't think I want to know," Eisenhardt said. "I think I can say this for Bud (Selig), though. They have several viable candidates."

Eisenhardt said he could see the logic to the secrecy.

"All these men have viable jobs. If they say no, they don't want it, they take themselves out of consideration," Eisenhardt said. "If they say yes or maybe, they become lame ducks (at their present jobs)."

"Suppose they come up with three people," Eisenhardt speculated. "How do you vote on any of them, or decide which ones to vote on? What if they come up with the name Jane Glockenspiel? Do we vote? I don't know if I want to vote on a candidate sight unseen."

Kuhn's term ends officially Aug. 13. Baseball would like to find a commissioner on or before that date.

Luzinski is one-man wrecking crew

By The Associated Press

Greg Luzinski was virtually a bull in a china shop against the New York Yankees.

Hitting two of the longest and loudest home runs ever seen at Chicago's Comiskey Park, the player known as "The Bull" was a one-man wrecking crew Monday night in pacing the White Sox to a 4-1 victory over the Yankees.

"I've never hit one as high or as far as the first one," said Luzinski of his two-run shot in the first inning that landed on the roof in left field, a drive of more than 475 feet. "If the ball hadn't hit the light tower it would have sailed over the roof."

Luzinski's second home run, his 20th of the year, landed in the upper deck in the third inning. Once again, it came with a man on base.

"He pitched me away the first time and then tried to come inside but got too much of the plate," said Luzinski of Yankee rookie Ray Fontenot. "It proves you can hit 'em far even with two strikes on you. I saw his (Fontenot's) reaction when he let go of the pitch on the second one, which really was a better ball for me to hit."

Both of Luzinski's blows came with Tom Paciorek on base. Only 22 balls have been hit on or over the roof in the 73-year history of Comiskey Park and Luzinski became the first Sox player to do it twice. He also accomplished the feat last June 26 against Minnesota. Jimmy Foxx and Ted Williams were the only other players to hit balls on or over the roof twice.

Floyd Bannister pitched a five-hitter for the White Sox, giving up the Yankees' only run on Dave Winfield's 18th homer of the season in the seventh inning.

Indians 6, Blue Jays 0

In Toronto, Len Barker shackled Toronto on three hits and Mike Hargrove drove in two runs with one of six Cleveland doubles as the Indians beat the Blue Jays. The victory was the second straight for the Indians under new manager Pat Corrales, who replaced the fired Mike Ferraro on Sunday.

The Cleveland right-hander struck out nine and walked three, while improving his record to 8-11.

Barker, who carried a personal two-game losing streak and a 5.53 earned run average into the game, said he has pitched well in recent outings.

"I've got myself back together, I've got my rhythm, I'm throwing the ball over the plate for strikes and I've had good velocity the last few times out," said Barker. "Unfortunately, I should have found it a month ago."

Brewers 6, Red Sox 2

In Boston, Robin Yount broke a tie with a sacrifice fly and Milwaukee added three more runs in a decisive sixth inning for a victory over the Red Sox despite four hits by AL batting leader Wade Boggs.

Charlie Moore and Ted Simmons had three hits and Paul Molitor and Ben Oglivie two apiece in the Brewers' 14-hit attack.

Boggs had a single and a double against Milwaukee starter Chuck Porter, and a double and single off reliever Tom Tellmann. The doubles were Boggs' 34th and 35th, tops in the AL and helped raise his average to .379.

Porter, 3-5, who gave way to Tellman after five innings, earned the victory. Tellman went on to earn his eighth save.

Angels 12-0, Twins 6-7

In Minneapolis, Steve Lubratich knocked in four runs to lead California over Minnesota in the first game of a doubleheader. Mike Witt, 5-8, earned the victory, giving up 12 hits, striking out five and walking four in notching his first complete game of the season.

Rick Lysander, making his first start in the major leagues, survived 11 hits and rookie center fielder Darrell Brown went 4-for-4 as the Twins tripped the Angels in the second game.

Lysander 3-9, making his first start in the nightcap after 48 relief appearances, all in relief, struck out five and walked three in pitching the Twins' first shutout of the year.

Tigers 3, Royals 2

In Detroit, Lance Parrish's tie-breaking solo home run in the eighth boosted Detroit over Kansas City. With the score tied 2-2 in the eighth, Parrish hit a two-out shot into the lower left field seats at Tiger Stadium, his 15th homer of the season, on a 1-0 pitch off Kansas City reliever Don Hood, 2-2.

Detroit reliever Aurelio Lopez,7-4, who came on to start the eighth inning in relief of Larry Pashnick, gained the victory, the fourth for the Tigers in their five-game series with the Royals.

A's 4, Mariners 3

Dave Lopes walked with two out and the bases loaded in the ninth inning to boost the A's to victory. Seattle relief ace Bill Caudill walked Lopes on a 3-1 pitch.

Oakland's Rickey Henderson stole three bases.

Revival costs Astros, Cubs

By The Associated Press

Bobby Brown is back in the major leagues and celebrating in style. Steve Carlton is back on the beam and the Phillies are celebrating "Lefty's" revival.

Brown was recalled from Las Vegas of the Pacific Coast League over the weekend when San Diego first baseman Steve Garvey injured his thumb. In his first game with the Padres, the one-time member of the Met, Yankee, Blue Jay and Mariner organizations homered, singled and scored three times.

He followed that performance with another sensational game. His three-run homer in the 10th inning lifted the Padres over Houston 7-4 Monday night. Earlier, Brown had singled twice, walked and stolen a base.

Carlton, meanwhile, tied the National League high for the season with 12 strikeouts in five-hitting the Cubs 2-1. It was the four-time Cy Young Award winner's first victory since July 4 and boosted him to 9-11 for the year.

Luis Salazar led off the Padres' 10th with a single to left-center off Bill Dawley, 5-4, and was sacrificed to second. Ruppert Jones was intentionally walked and, one out later, Brown belted a 1-0 pitch over the right field fence to win it.

"I just hope to do whatever I can," said Brown, who was picked up by the Padres farm team after the Mariners cut him in the spring. "If I fit into their plans, great, but if they want to trade me, it's their choice. I'm just gonna go play baseball and enjoy it.

"I'm just so happy to be up here. I was looking for something I could hit hard. He came in on me and I hit it good.

"I was hoping it would go, so I just started running. When he got to the fence, I thought he would catch it.

"I'm unconscious. I'm just trying to do what I can do."

National League

Added Padres Manager Dick Williams: "I think he's really anxious to prove himself. Brown has really been a shot in the arm for us."

Terry Puhl and Ray Knight homered for Houston, while Juan Bonilla had a San Diego home run.

Phillies 2, Cubs 1

Carlton passed the 10-victory mark for his 16th consecutive season to boost the Phils within a half-game of first-place Pittsburgh in the East. A lesson with Philadelphia pitching coach Claude Osteen made the difference for Carlton, who has won only three of his last 15 games.

"He's been working on a couple of little things with Claude and apparently it's worked out," Manager Paul Owens said.

"He also was throwing like a shot putter. You can't get anything on the ball that way," Osteen said.

Greg Gross had a double and two singles, scored the first run and batted in the game-winner with a seventh-inning single.

Former Midland Cub Joe Carter got his first major league hit in the second inning and drove in the Cubs' only run. He was 0-for-7 going into the game against Carlton. Carter is now has one hit in 10 official trips to the plate this year.

Braves 8, Giants 3

Andy McGaffigan had no trouble with any Atlanta batters until facing Chris Chambliss with one out in the fifth. Chambliss sent a shot over the fence for a two-run homer.

Rafael Ramirez and Bob Horner also homered for the Braves, who opened a 6½-game lead over the Dodgers in the West.

"We don't really pay attention to that," said Chambliss. "He was pitching a fine game, but we're a strong hitting club, and we expect to hit every day."

Brett Butler capped a four-run seventh inning with a bases-loaded triple for Atlanta.

Glenn Hubbard drove in the other run for Atlanta.

Reds 4, Dodgers 2

Cincinnati's Dan Driessen knew what to look for when he batted in the 10th inning against Los Angeles left-hander Steve Howe.

"Howe throws hard, and his ball moves in on left-handed batters," said Driessen . "I knew he would try to jam me and the pitch I hit, I was strong enough to push it over the shortstop's head."

Driessen's bloop single scored Eddie Milner from second base and the Reds went on to a 4-2 victory over the Dodgers.

"Driessen hadn't looked that great," said Cincinnati Manager Russ Nixon, "but he got enough of that one and it was well placed."

Bob Welch, 8-11, who walked Milner to lead off the inning, absorbed the loss. Ben Hayes, 2-2, the third Cincinnati pitcher, earned the victory.

After Welch walked Milner, Tom Niedenfuer took over. Dave Concepcion sacrificed and Niedenfuer then walked Gary Redus.

Steve Howe took the mound and Driessen singled to bring home Milner with the tie-breaking run. After Cesar Cedeno pooped out, Nick Esasky singled home Redus with the Reds' second run of the inning.

The loss was the fifth in six games for the reeling Dodgers, dropping them 6½ games behind Atlanta in the National League West.

Rick Monday cracked his sixth home run in the first inning to give Los Angeles a 1-0 lead. Cincinnati tied the score in the third on successive doubles by Milner and Concepcion.

Los Angeles broke the tie in the sixth when Monday singled with one out, Dusty Baker walked and Pedro Guerrero doubled off the left field wall to score Monday.

New Oiler plan confuses safety

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — For 98 consecutive starting assignments Houston Oiler free safety Mike Reinfeldt knew exactly what to do.

But now Reinfeldt, who has started every game for the Oilers since being acquired on waivers from the Oakland Raiders in 1976, suddenly finds everything changed — including his supporting cast in the defensive secondary.

"The previous system we'd had for seven or eight years and I knew everything about it," Reinfeldt said. "Now I'll be learning as everybody else is learning."

Off-season arrests of the other three members of the starting secondary on drugs and alcohol charges, resulted in a youth movement by Oiler management.

To further complicate the picture, the Oilers hired Chuck Studley from the San Francisco 49ers to take charge of the tattered Oiler defense. Studley kept the 3-4 alignment but junked everything else and is installing a new, more complicated scheme.

"They just keep throwing it at us so that it's almost more information than we can assimilate," Reinfeldt said. "Right now, we can't see through the fog, we're not sure of a few things and we're confusing a few of the coverages.

"It's tough when you put in all new coverages, all new reads all new terminology. I don't think you can expect players just to pick it up in five days."

Cornerbacks J.C. Wilson and Greg Stemrick were arrested at a Houston lounge and charged with drugs and alcohol violations. Strong safety Vernon Perry was charged in Jackson, Miss. with drug and liquor law violations.

Stemrick has been waived and Wilson and Perry are facing strong challenges in training camp from the newcomers.

Reinfeldt did not enjoy the off-season because of the secondary's notoriety.

"I went underground," Reinfeldt said. "I didn't go anywhere, I didn't make any public appearances. I didn't tell anybody I played football. I just hoped that the season could get started again and we could play football and have fun.

"Obviously there is no place in pro football for drugs and I just hope it doesn't happen to anyone on this team again."

'Don't dump Bowie' move is on

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. — Jocko Conlan said he'd like to buy a half-page space in all the nation's major newspapers for a eulogy to baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

"Integrity — you can't buy integrity — or genuine love for the game," said the colorful 83-year-old former umpire, whose career reached back to the reign of Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis.

George Kell found it hard to believe that club owners would want to replace a man who has presided over the game's phenomenal growth.

Duke Snider said he thought it would be hard to find a man as capable as the present commissioner and Bill Terry expressed the opinion that Kuhn, with a shaky start, had grown in his 14 years in office and should be more qalified than ever to hold the job.

A strong "Don't Dump Bowie" movement surfaced during the Hall of Fame induction ceremonies here over the weekend — either spontaneously or by design — and increased the uncertainty of the scheduled changing of the guard this week in Boston.

"What they are doing to this man is terrible," said the stocky, outspoken Conlan, who delivered the most impassioned plea at the exclusive Hall of Fame dinner Sunday night.

"Bowie Kuhn is the best commissioner we've ever had and I've served under them all. He is smart. He is honest. He has a great feel for the game dating back to when he was scoreboard boy at Griffith Stadium in Washington."

The Kuhn accolades may have fallen on the deaf ears of that militant segment of owners determined to put a new man in the office. A screening committee is supposed to present names of prospective successors at the Boston meetings.

Kuhn's second seven-year contract expires Aug. 12 and he technically already has been fired, failing to win enough votes for reelection.

Word spreading through the baseball world is that no strong, viable and acceptable candidate has been produced and baseball may face a period of headlessness until the fragmented owners, all protecting varied private interests, can reach accord.

Kuhn has insisted he will not serve as an interim commissioner. But he has allowed reports to circulate that he wouldn't be averse to a shorter term — possibly two or three years.

This has raised conjecture in many knowledgeable quarters that the commissioner might escape the fail of the axe, if only briefly.

The search committee reportedly has come up with a grab-bag of possibilities ranging from movie czar Jack Valenti to U.S. Olympic head Bill Simon and the president of Yale University, Dr. A. Bartlett Giamatti.

Baseball personalities mentioned are John McHale, president of the Montreal Expos, and Hank Peters, general manager of the Baltimore Orioles.

Kuhn's fate appears in the hands of influential St. Louis Cardinal owner Augie Busch, said to conrol part of the National League voting bloc that axed Bowie in the first place.

"I've written a lot of letters to Busch," said former Commissioner A.B. (Happy) Chandler, one of Kuhn's most strident boosters. "He hasn't answered a one. I'm not sure he's reading my mail."

That doesn't bode well for Bowie.

"Kuhn didn't know much baseball at first — he was a lawyer — and I think he made some bad decisions along the way," said Terry, the former first base star and manager of the New York Giants and a Hall of Famer.

"But I think he's learned a lot. He should be a better commissioner."

Earnings match inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bureau of Labor Statistics says workers' earnings stayed about even with inflation for the 12 months ending June 30.

Average weekly earnings of full-time wage and salary workers reached $320 in the second quarter, a 3.9 percent rise from the same period a year ago, the bureau reported Monday.

Inflation was rising at an annual rate of 3.9 percent from the second quarter of 1982 through June 30, 1983, the bureau said.

The average "usual median earnings" of families with one or more wage and salary workers went up to $471 a week in the second quarter, a rise of 3.5 percent.

The bureau defines "usual median earnings" as the amount of money a worker ordinarily receives in a given week before deductions are taken out of his paycheck. This includes any overtime pay, commissions or tips.

Some 62 million families were included in the quarterly earnings survey, and the number of families with no wage earners totaled 12.7 million, up about a half million from a year earlier.

"This increase was considerably smaller than the one recorded between the first quarters of 1982 and 1983, reflecting the improvement in the nation's unemployment situation," the report said.

National civilian joblessness hit a post-Depression peak of 10.8 percent of the labor force in December, with more than 12 million people out of work. That rate has receded to 10 percent, and many economists say they feel unemployment in July will drop below double-digit levels. The Labor Department will release last month's unemployment figures Friday.

In its report Monday, the bureau said the average weekly earnings of full-time male workers totaled $383, while the figure for women was $253. In other words, women earned only about two-thirds as much as men, although the disparity was 1 percent narrower than in the second quarter of last year.

The bureau said families with more than one wage earner in the household comprised 51.3 percent of all families with wage and salary workers. The average weekly earnings of families with two wage earners, at $626, was roughly double the figure for single wage earner families.

Families with the highest average weekly earnings — $854 — were those in which both the husband and wife and some other household member worked.

White families continued to have higher average weekly earnings than either black or Hispanic families, due in part to the fact that a larger proportion of black and Hispanic families had only one wage earner. The average weekly earnings of white families totaled $488, compared to $341 for black families and $369 for Hispanic families.

House natural gas bill said to be 'best'

By SARAH MCCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The compromise natural gas bill approved by a House subcommittee "is the best bill we could posibly have obtained," agreed two Texas congressmen, a Republican and a Democrat, who have spent long hours working on the bill in recent months.

Rep. Jack Fields (R—Conroe) and Rep. Ralph Hall (D—Rockwall) say the compromise approved by the House Energy and Commerce fossil fuels subcommittee on Friday has some provisions that will be pleasing to Texas producers. But the two men would not predict whether the bill will be approved by the full committee.

In fact, both men, along with Rep. Tom Loeffler (R—Hunt), who also has spent much time working to get a gas decontrol bill approved in Congress, are pessimistic about the bill's chances in the parent committee chaired by Rep. John Dingell (D—Mich.) a strong opponent of decontrol of "old gas."

In conversations with Dingell in recent weeks on the compromise proposal, Hall said Dingell would say "I am the chairman and I will be fair."

The bill cleared the subcommittee by vote of 10 to 9 but already there are reports that two members of the subcommittee plan to switch their votes and vote against the compromise in full committee.

"The bill helps producers and consumers," said Hall. "In fact, both sides can live with it. It helps everybody...At worst, it is a vehicle for decontrol.

"The bill does not abrogate contracts. It is a benefit to producers. When the market is allowed to take over as it could do in this bill, the price would go down, I believe, as it did when oil was deregulated," Hall said.

Speaking of what might happen in the full committee, Hall said "there will be the continuing battle between the producing states and those north of the snowline. They buy gas today cheaper than we can buy our own gas in Texas. The price of their gas will probably not go down much but our prices in Texas for consumers will go down."

Fields, one of the most knowledgable men in Congress on natural gas, said the "bill has some good things in it for Texas. For one, intrastate pipelines will have access to out-of-state gas from other states' reservoirs or the outer continental shelf or from 'old' or 104 gas.

"Two, our bill repeals the Industrial Fuel Use act, put in during the Carter administration, which required industry to shift to coal. We don't want that," he said. "The bill eliminates the authority to re-impose controls."

Fields pointed out that "contracts on imports of foreign gas will be cancelled after nine months if they are not equal to an average of contracts in this country."

But he added that "this bill protects the sanctity of contracts. Marketing out, which I think is unfair, is not allowed in our bill."

Loeffler was delighted that the new bill does not allow for contract abrogation. He was glad also that the bill increases the price of "old" gas if it comes from a reservoir from which it was produced by "enhanced recovery" methods. But he is not all sure how the 70-page bill will fare in the full committee.

Blowout injures 13

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — Thirteen workers on a North Sea oil rig were injured by an explosion and fire sparked by a drill hitting a pocket of gas, a British Petroleum spokesman said today.

The fire, caused by an explosion Monday night, was extinguished early today, and an emergency support vessel remained at the scene spraying water on the BP rig to cool it down.

Twelve of the injured men were in satisfactory condition, recovering from burns at Aberdeen Royal Infirmary, while the 13th victim was treated and released.

The platform is in the Forties oil field about 110 miles off this east Scottish oil and fishing port.

The spokesman said helicopters flew the 13 injured men to Aberdeen and took 71 other crewmen off the platform to other nearby installations.

A BP spokesman said the explosion was the result of a "gas kick" as the drill descended into the seabed.

"We understand the drill went through a shallow gas-sand source which released unexpected pressurized gas," the spokesman said.

The spokesman said oil production on the platform, known as the Forties Delta, had been shut down.

O&G export rule changes suggested

NEW YORK (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige have recommended relaxing controls on the export of oil and gas equipment to the Soviet Union, The New York Times reported today.

The recommendation was made in a joint options paper submitted to President Reagan at the end of last week, the Times said.

It was the second step within a week toward possibly easing trade relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. Last Thursday, officials announced a new long-term agreement under which the Soviets agreed to increase annual purchases of American grain by 50 percent for the next five years.

Defense Secretary Secretary Caspar Weinberger opposed the Shultz-Baldrige proposal, but Reagan was expected to accept it, at least in part, the Times reported.

Controls on the export of oil and gas equipment were imposed by President Carter in July 1978 in response to the jailing of Soviet dissents Anatoly Shcharansky and Alexander Ginzburg. The controls were tightened and grain sales were curtailed in January 1980 in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Last summer, Reagan expanded the controls to include European companies that manufactured the equipment under American license and sold it to the Russians. Those sanctions were lifted in November.

The Times said the options paper proposed two main courses: Lifting the oil and gas controls completely or dismantling them, partly by eliminating sanctions on the sale of pipelayers.

State Department spokesman Anita Stockman told The Associated Press she was unaware of any such development. "I haven't heard anything about it," she said. Commerce Department spokesman B. Jay Cooper's response was, "All I can say is no comment."

FROM FAT TO FANTASTIC IN 10 DAYS!

U.S. Government Grants a Patent for a New Product From Japan That Lets You Burn Off Body Fat 24 Hours a Day, . . .Every Single Day!!!

Have you heard about the latest discovery in the war against fat? It is absolutely amazing. In fact, it's just about the only thing on the market that lets you lose weight without going on a painful diet!

That's right! Believe it or not, this incredible new discovery lets you eat any kind of food you enjoy (not just starches!) and still lose all the weight you want! It's called Glucomannan or "Konjac" Mannan.

This amazing weight-loss formula is so unique it has actually been awarded two U.S. Patents. The patents are #3,973,008, #3,856,945 and together these patents explain how it can help you lose weight incredibly fast.

Our marketing name for this wonderful new discovery is MANNAN-TRIM. Here's how it works—all you do is take two MANNAN-TRIM tablets with water about 30 minutes before each meal. This will give you a natural feeling of fullness before you even pick up your fork. Not only that, after you start to eat, this remarkable product will surround much of the fat, protein and carbohydrate calories you have eaten. And give you an immediate start on a brand new slender body!

How much can you lose? Frankly, we don't know. The truth is it all depends on how much excess weight you now have, and your metabolism. All you have to do is follow the simple directions that are included with every package of this powerful new fat fighter. Remember this weight-loss formula is an extremely fast and effective means to conquer obesity. It causes you to lower calorie intake which is essential to the rapid reduction of body fat and weight.

what you want them to be? Of course the amount you lose depends on you. However, there is no reason why you shouldn't lose all your excess weight in record time.

Now, at last, you can do it. You really can. And best of all, thanks to this incredible miracle you can do it and still eat until you feel satisfied. No need to suffer while you lose; no need to exercise; no need to feel deprived and no need to feel guilty!

Also, you should know that this product is 100% safe. It contains no drugs whatsoever and it was first checked out by members of the JMA (Japanese Medical Association) and then, later, it was awarded the two aforementioned patents by the United States Patent authorities!

But the most amazing thing of all is how fast this new product works! It actually gives you the ability to:

"MELT DOWN POUNDS LIKE FIRE MELTS DOWN ICE!"

Think about it! Wouldn't it be wonderful to stop depriving yourself and start losing weight? Wouldn't it be wonderful to feel like you ate like a football player and look like a model? Wouldn't it be great to have your stomach feel like you feasted and your waistline look like you fasted?

If you really care about your appearance and your health, please don't mess around with drugs or painful diets! Do yourself a great favor and try this remarkable weapon. It is probably the only way in the world to lose weight and still enjoy the foods you love. It is safe, effective and, according to some people, it's just plain magic!

BEFORE

AFTER (ONLY 10 DAYS LATER!)

This is Christi Dean. After using this new Anti-fat weapon for only 10 days, Christi has secured a job at a fitness salon and is actively pursuing a modeling career. Now at last you, too, can fit into this picture and experience your very own success story.

Yes, it's true! With this amazing NEW ANTI-FAT WEAPON you either lose your excess body fat or you get double your money back, and. . . There Are No Exceptions

Of course, when you lose a significant amount of excess weight it is also quite natural that you will lose a significant amount of excess inches! Just imagine. How would you look if you could carve away up to:

6 inches off your hips!
and up to
3 inches off your thighs!
and up to
4 inches off your buttocks!
and up to
6 inches off your waistline!

Therefore, since this powerful new fat fighting weapon is perfectly safe, why not use it continuously until your measurements are just

As a matter of fact, it is so effective, it is actually being sold with an iron-clad unconditional DOUBLE your money back guarantee. The guarantee is simple. Sport of horse training demonstrated with flair

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

The rider and horse are one, flowing from one graceful movement into the next with apparent effortlessness.

That is the object of dressage, the harmonious development of the physique and ability of the horse. Dressage is a French word meaning training. This classical method originated centuries ago with the Greeks.

The ancient approach to horse training was demonstrated Saturday and Sunday at the Sixth Annual West Texas Dressage at Midland Polo Grounds.

A benefit for outreach projects of the Episcopal Churchwomen of the Holy Trinity Church, the two-day event was sponsored by the West Texas Dressage and Combined Training Association and the church. The show attracted 58 participants and horses from throughout the Southwest.

Riders and their horses, including Bay Rum, Cajun Tom, Totally Awesome, Tickle Britches, Misdamenor and Candid Camera, came from all over Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and from as far as Ohio.

Dressage has been passed on through generations of riding masters who trained horses for royalty who needed swift and able cavalry for battle.

Cavalry has been replaced by the automobile but dressage lives on because horse fanciers want to mold the horse into his best possible self, said Mrs. Julie Kittrell, chairman of this year's dressage.

Classes from training level through fourth level plus one international level of competition, Prix St. Georges, were offered at the show.

Dressage is growing in popularity in Texas, said Mrs. Kittrell, who has been involved with the training method for six years. "When I came to Midland in 1977 it seemed like I was the only one riding English. Dressage has really taken off."

Mrs. Kittrell, who grew up on a ranch riding her father's cow horses, finds dressage a continual challenge. "It's like golf, you're in competition with yourself rather than other people. You try to improve your score."

The Midland woman, who owns four horses and trains and teaches riding lessons, said, "I enjoy being able to get my horse to respond to me in a relaxed manner and do difficult things such as moving from a trot to a canter (moderate gallop), in a smooth forward transition without the horse getting nervous or upset."

Mrs. Kittrell rode her horse, Bo Leo, in two events, equitation and Prix St. Georges.

The art of dressage, she said, is training the horse and rider to move as one entity. "The horse is obedient and totally submissive to the rider in a relaxed manner.

"It looks as though the horse just wants to do what he is doing rather than the rider directing him."

Although dressage looks easy and relaxed, there is a lot of hard work behind it, she said. Mrs. Kittrell estimated she spends a minimum of 12 hours a week on training alone for Bo Leo.

While it is a demanding sport, the horsewoman said she finds the sport rewarding. "There is something about a horse. You have a physical communication with it you can't have with a tennis racquet. A horse always forgives you and responds to you in a positive way. It's good for your insides."

Hepatitis on the increase

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

She felt a little nauseous, but didn't think much about it. Four days later, she began experiencing the chills and fever.

She thought it was just a summer cold or, when the diarrhea set in, the flu.

About two weeks later, she noticed her eyes were turning yellow, her urine was dark and her stool was light.

She kept putting it off until, following an evening of bowling, her temperature shot back up to 102 degrees.

She went to Westwood Medical Clinic and was diagnosed as having Hepatitis A, or viral hepatitis.

"We're seeing quite a few cases here," said Dr. Rosie Yalia at the clinic. "All together, I've seen about five cases. But talking around, hepatitis seems to be going around."

With symptoms similar to the flu, many people may think they are coming down with a summer bug. The accompanying loss of energy may be attributed to the heat.

Dr. Ted Banach, at Midland Minor Emergency Clinic, said he has seen about six cases of viral hepatitis in the last three or four months. Permian Emergency Service reported no recent cases.

Nonetheless, the physicians said persons should be aware they might have viral hepatitis - especially because of Midland's close proximity to the Mexican border.

When Banach worked in the Rio Grande Valley, he said viral hepatitis was common. "It's because of the sanitation," he said.

"Once one gets it, it just spreads," Dr. Yalia said.

While vomiting and nausea are more common than diarrhea, Dr. Yalia said the aches and pains are similar to those of the flu. Until jaundice sets in, a person may be unaware he or she has viral hepatitis. Tenderness in the region of the liver also is a symptom of the infection.

According to Carmen Edwards, employee health nurse at Midland Memorial Hospital, the virus is transmitted through fecal-oral contact — not through dirty needles.

The incubation period, from the time a person is exposed to viral hepatitis Type A to when he becomes ill, is usually 28 to 30 days. However, it can range from 15 to 50 days, she said.

Usually, a person may infect another during the latter half of incubation through a few days after jaundice sets in. Anicteric hepatitis, a mild hepatitis commonly seen in young children, does not include jaundice as a symptom.

"The worst part is usually over in a week to 10 days," Banach said, adding the yellow-tinge to the skin can last a couple of weeks.

There is no treatment, according to Dr. Yalia. Most patients are asked to get plenty of rest and eat a diet high in protein.

"Also, we ask them to stay at home and not go about infecting other people," she said, adding follow-up checkups are necessary to make sure no complications develop.

Gamma globulin shots are recommended for those coming into close, personal contact with someone diagnosed as having viral hepatitis.

"All it does is give extra immunities," Dr. Yalia said. "It's like putting more soldiers into your body to fight it."

But Banach stressed the shots aren't necessary for those who have casual contact with someone who is infected.

"You don't have to get a shot because someone shook your hand or something," he said.

College costs may increase

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Worried about having to stretch the same dollars for college a little further this fall? The good news is, you may not have to at Midland College.

While nationwide the average cost of living at home and attending a community college has increased 8 percent, anticipated cost of commuting to MC this year is the same as last year, according to financial aids director Bill Burns.

"We have not increased (cost estimates) this year, mainly due to the economy," he said. "Rent is cheaper now, and we really had an inflated rate to start with." The financial aids department has projected the total cost of attending MC this year will be $2,853, compared to a national average of $3,400.

Now for the bad news. Students taking upper level courses at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin can expect to pay 21.5 percent more than last year. One of the reasons is a 10 percent increase in on-campus housing.

Convicted murderer baptized under armed guard in church

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

"I've got 28 years and I need somebody with me and only God can be the one," said convicted murderer Ross Ellis Jones Sr. Monday morning just before being baptized under armed guard at Lee Street Church of Christ.

Jones, 54, was convicted July 14 of the murder of Glynn Stokes, 33, just outside Jones Hotel.

"We pray a spiritual blessing on this young man, that his life would be changed and be a blessing to the church of our Lord Jesus Christ," prayed pastor L. H. Alexander during the baptismal service.

Captain Bennie Cureton of Midland County Sheriff's Department, who escorted Jones to the church from Midland County Jail, said the baptism was the third such of a prisoner this year.

"This is the first year we've ever started doing it," said Cureton. "We tell the ministers that we want (the prisoners) to be really sure, that they have to talk to them a long time."

Jones' baptism came at the hands of his onetime father-in-law Raymond Bowers Sr. of 405 S. Webster.

"I've been ministering to him all along, even before this murder happened, and as this happened it was brought to his mind that (baptism) is what he needed to do," said Bowers.

Ten days ago Bowers baptized Jones' son Ross Jones Jr., who received 12 years' imprisonment in connection with Stokes' death.

"I tried to teach them jail is not made for righteous people; it's made for the unrighteous," said Bowers.

Jones Sr. said it was a quest for "peace" that led him to make the spiritual commitment.

Souzan: A foreign student always on my mind

The last time I saw Souzan was nine years ago. It was the day before college graduation and she was leaving to spend the day with a friend.

Her flashing smile and "goodby" were the culmination of a nine-month friendship that started in August at New Mexico State University.

I had moved into my dorm room early to spend time with returning friends. For two or three days I was alone. Then one night I walked in late and stumbled into some boxes, but no one was in sight.

The next day I met the elusive owner of those boxes — a foreign student from Tehran, Iran, with the name of Souzan.

She was about 5-foot-2 and had shoulder-length black hair that swung as she walked; a wide, shining smile and dark sparkling eyes. And she laughed a lot.

It was our senior year. She had grown her own circle of friends and I had mine. Our friendship was one based on confidences — we shared thoughts we would not tell our other friends.

SHE HAD AN unusual way of speaking and writing, and was only beginning to master the English language.

Souzan didn't talk much about her family. She had an older brother who received a master's degree in math that December and left for a job on the East Coast. There was at least one sister and an extended family of cousins and a grandmother — a woman who was an expert in the ancient art of lacemaking, she said.

Souzan never said what her father did but she once showed me a snapshot of a distinguished, white-haired gentleman dressed in a three-piece gray pinstriped suit.

Souzan might not have made it to the States had not her father helped. "In our country," she explained, "everyone is drafted at the age of 18. I had just finished high school and wanted badly to come to the States."

Women who were drafted often were sent into villages as teachers. "You don't realize what they are like," Souzan said of living conditions. "They are just so, so bad."

Souzan was crying one day over the possibility of being drafted. "My father said, 'Don't worry. I'll fix it.' " A few days later he appeared with a new birth certificate showing her to be 21, not 18.

WITH AN "OLDER" outlook, she came to NMSU that fall, knowing little English. Somehow she obtained an old car and a driver's license and it bought us some fun. One Sunday evening three of us went out to eat with Souzan doing the driving and it was obvious she had not had much practice. We wound up going the wrong way down a one-way street.

Souzan dated several guys, but no one consistently. There was one from her junior year that she talked about a lot. He had taken the senior year off to work.

One night we both found ourselves in the room studying. Souzan was unusually quiet and then she began talking.

"You remember Mark?" she asked. I did. A phone call a few days before had informed her Mark was killed in an automobile accident the previous weekend. Sitting on the floor, her tears began flowing. Her friends had not understood, Souzan said, and she had been spending every night in the room by herself.

Souzan was proud of her country. "It's Persia," she said, making sure no one confused Iran with Iraq. "We are not like those people. We don't want to be confused with them."

As graduation neared, her parents came to the U.S. for a tour and visit with her brother. Souzan was excited about seeing her family — she had not been home in two years. Instead of graduation exercises, she opted to spend the day with friends before boarding a plane.

WE WROTE FOR two years afterward. She had different jobs, most of them involving her use of the English language. But as her letters showed, she never had completely mastered it.

"My job was very exciting in the beging, but it is getting boring, so I am hopping to change it as soon as I get a chance," she wrote in late 1975.

Souzan's letters were filled with her latest happenings, bits of advice and notes of optimism.

On Feb. 2, 1976, she said of my new job: "El Paso is a city with more excitment and more elagable young man and more than all "more to do."

I expressed my doubts in a letter about her unusual address and she replied, "I know my address is wierd, but this is realy my address, after all did not I receive your letter?" Her address had read: last house on the left, down two streets and up a road.

Her letters always mentioned the newest men in her life, but not one really pleased her. "I have meet some guys but I can not make out, what I should think of them, they are so misterious sometimes. So I still fell lonely sometimes. But we have to hope for the brighter future, right."

Despite being at home, Souzan missed her friends in the States. She often talked of returning for a visit. "I sure wish you were here to talk to you too," she wrote in November 1975. Then in February: "Do you remember the Indan flower pot you gave me, I just love it and I have some prety flowers in it all time, and when ere I see it I remember you."

HER LAST LETTER came in April 1976. I left El Paso and we lost track of each other. When the Shah left and the revolutionaries took over, Souzan stayed on my mind.

In today's Iran, Souzan would not be accepted. When women were ordered to wear the black chadoor I laughed as I recalled Souzan's dress habits. She would bounce around campus in her halter tops, short shorts and Dr. Scholl sandals. During the winter it was jeans and sweaters.

Souzan's family was too westernized for the Ayatollah Khomeini's beliefs, and I often wonder what happened to her after the shah left.

Souzan's fate is like an unfinished chapter in my life; I can't seem to get her off my mind.

I hope her outlook on life is the same as it was in this letter:

"Try to keep yourself buzy and happy, because everything would past."

'Sexist' book criticized, algebra book praised

By JACK KEEVER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Three educators and a father with three children in public school say an algebra textbook proposed for statewide use is working wonders in the classroom.

The author himself, John Saxon, appeared before the State Textbook Committee on Monday to tout his book, which he said already is being used in California, Colorado, South Carolina and other states.

The 27-member committee switched its attention today to a showdown on world history textbooks between People for the American Way and textbook critics Mel and Norma Gabler of Longview.

The committee is reviewing $36.3 million in proposed texts for Texas, which is the single largest purchaser of textbooks in the nation. Replacements for books already adopted, Braille books, and freight and other costs will raise the total textbook bill to $65.5 million.

American Way, a national anti-censorship group, lobbied successfully during the 1983 Legislature for a bill to allow people to testify in favor of — as well as against — textbooks proposed for adoption.

Without the law, witnesses probably would have been prohibited from appearing on behalf of such books as Saxon's algebra text.

Houston real estate broker Gerald Robbins, the father of three, said, "Scholarly research and the enormous variety of extremely positive test results have shown the Saxon format is virtually the Salk vaccine for math education."

Saxon, a retired Air Force colonel who teaches at an Oklahoma City junior college, told the committee he is preparing a special math text for Texas, and he added, "I'll put anything in it you want."

Sister Mary Magdalene Baca, a math teacher at Alamo High School in Amarillo, said the Saxon text is so good, "I don't even hear the normal complaints which accompany homework assignments."

Another teacher, Jane Andrajack of Sherman, said she had one class use a "popular, state-approved text" for algebra and another class of equal-ability students use the Saxon text, which is not in regular use in Texas schools.

She said on one 30-problem test, "Saxon" students averaged 21.26 correct answers, and the other students averaged 9.36. On a 168-problem test, "Saxon" students got 69 percent correct, the other students 55 percent.

Michael Metke of Texas State Technical Institute at Harlingen said students using the Saxon book had raised their algebra competency levels by three years within six months.

Asked later in an interview what was so unique about his textbook, Saxon said, "Algebra is not difficult, it is different."

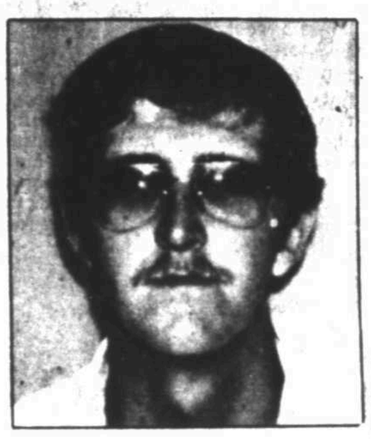
Autopsy ordered

Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry has ordered an autopsy in the death of Midland County deputy sheriff John Lightfoot.

Lightfoot, 24, of 2433 Whitmire Drive, suffered an apparent heart attack while getting ready for work shortly after 7 a.m. today, according to Sheriff Dallas Smith. He was pronounced dead at Midland Memorial Hospital at 8:50 a.m. .

Lightfoot joined the sheriff's department in June of 1982 and had worked as a jailer and criminal investigator prior to being transferred to the patrol division.

"He was a young man who was doing a good job," said Smith. "We've had several letters from the public praising his work. We will miss him, both as an officer and a friend."



John Lightfoot

Lightfoot was married and had three children. Funeral arrangements are incomplete.

Infant deaths investigated

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The prosecutor heading an investigation into suspicious infant deaths at a San Antonio hospital is traveling thousands of miles to interview doctors and nurses involved in an earlier internal probe, the San Antonio Light reported today.

Nick Rothe, Bexar County's chief deputy district attorney, is traveling to Toronto, Boston and Philadelphia to meet with medical experts, the newspaper said.

District Attorney Sam Millsap has refused to confirm Rothe's whereabouts.

A Bexar County grand jury is investigating a string of infant deaths at the pediatric intensive care unit of Medical Center Hospital from 1978 to early 1982.

Rothe's first stop was believed to be with pediatric intensive care unit specialist Dr. A.W. Conn at Toronto's Hospital for Sick Children, the Light said.

In January 1982, Conn organized a group of pediatric medical specialists to examine Medical Center's unit and later said he never received indications of anything more serious than "growing pains."

Hospital officials have confirmed Conn's investigation was the second in-house look at the unit prompted by the unexplained deaths of infants being treated there.

A vocational nurse has been indicted in nearby Kerr County on charges she injected seven children with a powerful muscle relaxant, causing one death.

Nurse Genene Jones, 33, worked at Medical Center during the four-year period being investigated, but has denied any wrongdoing.

A pre-trial hearing for Ms. Jones has been set for Wednesday morning in Kerrville.

Ms. Jones' attorneys have filed a batch of motions, including one to dismiss the indictments against the nurse and another to move the trial out of Kerrville.

The trial has been set for Sept. 6, but defense attorneys have indicated they would seek a delay from State District Judge Murray Jordan.

College costs not increasing here

The director of financial aids at UTPB said total costs estimates for an on-campus resident are $4,600 this year, compared to $3,785 last year.

Total costs include tuition, fees, room and board, books, supplies, transportation and personal expenses.

The College Board, a national nonprofit educational association, reports the average total cost of attending college this year has increased 10 percent for students who live on campus, just slightly below the 11 percent increases which occurred the previous two years.

The figures are from the board's annual survey of colleges which obtains information on attendance costs from more than 3,200 colleges and universities across the nation.

According to the survey, average college costs to on-campus students at four-year public universities will be $4,721, up 7 percent from last year. Commuter students will pay an average of $3,797 at those same schools, 8 percent more than in 1982-83.

Resident students at two-year public colleges will pay about $3,868 this fall, and commuters $3,400. The average cost of attending a four-year private college will be $8,440 for residents, up 11 percent from last year, and $7,314 for off-campus students.

Although the rate of increase has run ahead of inflation for the second consecutive year, according to the report, college costs during the preceding decade rose at a slower rate than the cost of living reflected in the Consumer Price Index.

School officials estimate a full time student at MC will spend between $200 and $250 per semester on tuition, books and fees. Tuition is $4 per credit with a minimum fee of $25. MC has not increased tuition and fees from spring semester, even though nationwide those charges are up 9 percent.

Tuition at UTPB is also $4 per credit with a $50 minimum, plus a $4 per credit general fee, a $10 general deposit and additional charges for parking and lab fees. The only change from spring semester is an increase in the student service charge from $2.50 to $4.50 per credit.

When the cost of attending a two-year public college is broken down, an average of $621 a year is spent on tuition and fees. Roughly $300 is spent on books and supplies and another $700 on personal expenses. A commuter can expect to pay about $716 in transportation costs, while that figure is reduced to $383 for residents. However, room and board for those living on campus averages $1,871, while commuters pay only $1,057.

Horse training demonstrated

Mrs. Kittrell's husband, Paul, has come to share his wife's love of horses. The retired oilman co-chaired the dressage event. "She's the colonel and I'm the corporal," Kittrell said.

"I keep the animals apart and keep the show running," he laughed. His job is to make sure rules and regulations are followed and to provide a good environment for riders. This means preventing distractions such as keeping dogs out of the ring and silencing a car horn which blared for several minutes.

Kittrell appreciates the discipline exhibited by the horses in dressage. "If the horse and rider are trained well, it's a beautiful thing to see. It's not a very good spectator sport, but it's a beautiful sport for participants.

"It's the most disciplined and cerebral riding there is. If you train a horse in the dressage method, you end up with a polished horse that can accomplish anything. The formality may be a little forbidding in West Texas, but it gives a oneness to the activity."

The event is a formal one with riders clad in black velvet riding caps and jackets. This gives the sport "an aura of wealth" said Kittrell. "Most riders are middle class people. This is their boat."

Dressage has been an equestrian event in the Olympics since the early 1900s, he said.

The show manager gives dressage high marks because there are no politics involved in judging, he said.

Judges evaluate each horse in each event based on brilliance, correctness of movements, suppleness and submissiveness. At the end of each class, the judge doesn't know what score he has given the horse. Judging is almost all numbers, he said. "There are no politics here.

"I have never heard any competitor complain about a judge's score."

The judges of the event were Lt. Col. Hans Moeller of Los Altos, Calif. and Elizabeth F. Searle of San Juan Bautista, Calif. A career army officer in Austria, Moeller immigrated to the United States 30 years ago. He is founding advisor of the California Dressage Society and a founding director of the American Dressage Institute.

Ms. Searle won the National Dressage Championship in 1963 and founded the American Vaulting Association.

Trip stirs protests from Rice graduates

HOUSTON (AP) — Flyers from the Rice University Alumni Association offer adventure in South Africa — but does not note that country's policy of total racial segregation.

"We'll do Johannesburg, the Blue Train, Capetown, diamond and gold mines; beautiful flowers in season; Zululand; animals at Mala-Mala, and Durban."

But the flyer failed to mention that under South Africa's racially segregated government, black alumni might not be so welcome.

Alumni Association officials acknowledge as much, and at least one outraged black alumnus and two other former students have taken vocal exception to next year's planned trip.

"I cannot imagine how anyone could cruise merrily about the countryside, tossing money into the treasury of the only regime left on Earth which officially declares the vast majority of its people to be non-citizens," alumnus Glenn Cooper of Chicago wrote the Alumni Association.

Bari Watkins, a 1969 Rice graduate who until last week was working at Northwestern University in Chicago, wrote that a similar trip planned by Northwestern two years ago drew such protest from students, faculty and alumni that the university had to back out.

"To put it mildly, all hell broke loose," she said.

Kathryn Duffie, executive director of the Rice Alumni Association, acknowledged officials "knew we were going to stir up some people who won't be happy." But she said alumni reaction has been overwhelmingly favorable.

"We're not going for any political reasons," she said. "We're simply doing this as an educational experience."

White designates today as Hospital Auxiliary Day

AUSTIN — Governor Mark White designated today as Hospital Auxiliary Day and next week as Junior Volunteer Week in Texas.

"Volunteers do not wear a price tag; their price tag is contributions to the community, thereby enriching life in the community and assisting hospitals," the governor said.

Of the junior volunteers, White said: "Our future citizens, ranging in ages 14-18, are a special group giving of their time and talents freely to hospitals throughout the state each summer. The purpose of this program is to promote and encourage their interest in health careers in addition to improving life in their respective communities."

Statewide, 323 auxiliaries contributed 3,674,000 hours of service to hospitals; $5 million in cash/equipment; and 767 scholarships worth $600,000.

"We acknowledge with pride the generous contributions of hospital auxiliaries whose gratification comes not from monetary compensation but rather from the genuine satisfaction of knowing they have helped others in need," White said.

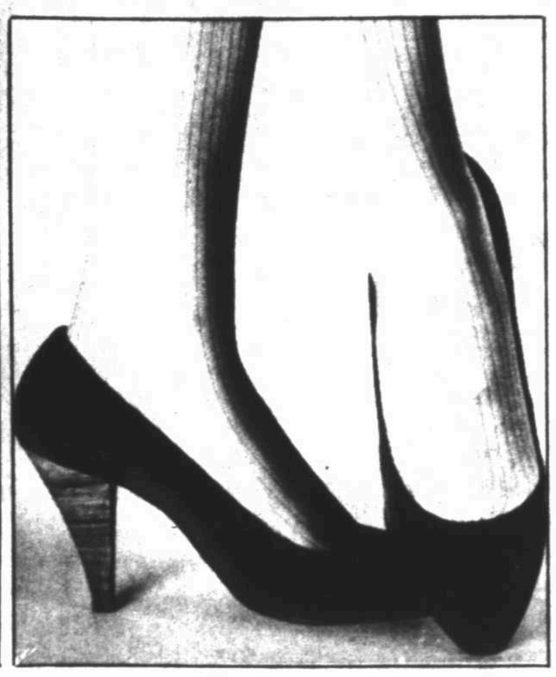
The soft split suede short bootie features fullness around the top to allow ease in tucking in pant legs. Raw, stacked low heel and ridged sole make walking a pleasure.



The classic plain pump in velvety suede with a walled toe, also featured this fall, is ready for fashionable take-off on a slender stacked heel.

Children's shoe fit important

Most people don't realize that the bone and muscle structure of a foot continue to develop for a full 20 years after birth, warns a guide published by the J.C. Penney Consumer Information Service.

Since children's feet are actively growing, shoes that fit them poorly can cause corns, bunions and even permanent damage and misshape feet. The more flexible structure of a child's foot allows it to sueeze into a shoe that is several sizes too small without much discomfort. Don't count on your child to tell you whether or not a shoe fits.

It doesn't pay to economize with hand-me-downs. Every foot adapts to a shoe in its own way and the inside of every shoe is molded accordingly. A used shoe may force your child's foot into an unnatural shape.

The familiar measuring devices check foot length twice. First, check from heel to the ball of the foot, then check from the heel to the end of the longest toe.

Each length is translated into a shoe size and it is not unusual for the two to be different. If this happens, have your child try on the larger size. Width is measured next. The process is then repeated for the other foot, since each foot may be a different size. Again, if that's the case, thry the larger size.

There will probably be several styles to choose from and each will fit differently. Watch as the shoe is put on. With the help of a shoe horn, the shoe should slide on easily, but not look big. Before your child stands up, check length, width and toe height.

Have the child walk around in the shoe. Feel the ball of the foot. It should fit into the widest part of the shoe. Be sure the foot foesn't slip forward or backwards. The heel should be snug and the ankle bone should not touch the top of the shoe.

Shoe facts to know before buying

Most children outgrow shoes before they wear them out.

Average Rate of Growth

Age	One Size Change In
up to 2 years	3 months
2 to 5 years	4 months
6 to 12 years	6 months

These are all average rates. But don't be surprised if your child goes eight months without changing size and suddenly needs new shoes again two months later. Since growth patterns are inconsistent, it's important to check your child's shoe size at least every 2 to 3 months. Check size also if there are any signs of discomfort.

Shoe Size Record

Keep a record of when you last checked your child's shoe size. Note fitting problems and how you solved them.

Date	Shoe Size	Style	Fitting Problem

These are signs that shoes are too small or don't fit properly.

Check the shoes for:
- heavy wear along edge of sole or heel
- bulging or twisting of upper part of shoe over the sole
- toe imprints in shoe linings

When shoes are first removed, check for:
- corns, calluses or blisters
- redness or pressure spots
- toes that are turned up or pushed out of shape

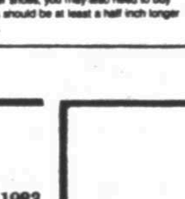
Another sign of uncomfortable shoes:
- if your child kicks them off every chance he/she gets

If the ankles roll in excessively or he/she walks with toes turned in or out, check with a doctor — special exercises or prescription shoes may be necessary.

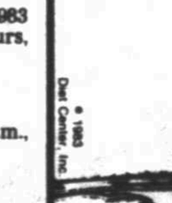
Activity Shoes
Should be sturdy but flexible. Look for soles at least ¼ to ⅜ inch thick to absorb the daily pounding of running and walking.

Sneakers or Athletic Shoes
Fine for healthy feet. Have your child try them on with same socks he/she will wear. Be sure any arch support is in correct place on foot.

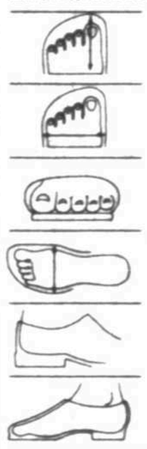
Dress Shoes
Best worn for limited periods of time. Many styles tend to be stiff and have thin soles that don't provide much protection.



Sandals
Look for adjustable straps, and make sure buckles don't press into foot. Closed backs give more support. Sandals can be deceptive — be sure size is large enough.



Don't judge the fit of a child's shoe by adult standards. Children's shoes are designed differently, with a lot of toe room in front and a heel that's narrowed for good support. Look for these indicators of good fit:



Length
Should have ½ to ¾ inch of space between end of longest toe and tip of shoe.

Width
All toes should rest on the sole of the shoe. You should be able to pinch a small crease in the leather.

Toe Height
Child should be able to wiggle toes up and down. No toe impressions should be visible on top of shoe.

Ball of Foot
Ball of foot should fit widest part of shoe.

Heel
Should fit snugly to give support, yet be flexible enough to allow foot to turn and move.

Ankle Bone
Bone should clear top of shoe when child walks and stands.

Check Socks, too

When you buy bigger shoes, you may also need to buy bigger socks. Socks should be at least a half inch longer than the longest toe.

Walking Fit

Watch your child walk in the shoes.
- He/she should look comfortable and walk naturally.
- Be sure feet don't slide forward, and tops of shoes don't gap.

Don't forget: A shoe that fits properly never has to be "broken in."

'20s step boldly into the '80s

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Somehow it seems as if the spectator shoe came right out of an F. Scott Fitzgerald novel. Although Jordan Baker wasn't wearing spectators in "The Great Gatsby" when Nick Carraway speculated about her appearance, nevertheless, the description fits:

"I noticed that she wore her evening dress, all her dresses, like sports clothes — there was a jauntiness about her movements as if she had first learned to walk upon golf courses on clean crisp mornings."

If the mood and description seem to fit, it is probably because the spectator shoe was born in the Jazz Age that Fitzgerald chronicled so well, and his characters were just the sort to have sported the fashion.

"The spectator was first seen in 1923," says Andrea Rosen, fashion director of the Footwear Council located in New York City, some 20 miles and now light-years away from the island of West Egg, where the Gatsby novel took place.

"The 1920s were the first time women were showing their legs. It was a very popular shoe and got its name because it was worn with clothing where one watched sports rather than participated," Rosen continues. "It probably would have been a sport like a cricket match, something with Anglo-Saxon overtones. The spectator was a very preppy look, a very clean-cut look.

"Then later in the '30s and '40s it was a great favorite, set on a Cuban heel, about 2 inches high and quite thick, which was comfortable for walking around and standing at sporting events."

And now, half a century later, the spectator is back in all its splendor.

CNS Photo

The sand and sea of Manhatten Beach in Los Angeles provide a backdrop for the classic spectator pump, created by Palter.

The spectator has never really disappeared from the fashion scene, but why the sudden rejuvenation by so many designers and manufacturers?

"I think the look is in because of the tremendous resurgence of interest in suits," says Rosen. "Spectators look wonderful because they are so crisp and work with tailored clothing so well.

Elegance forecasted for men's fashion

Copley News Service

PHILADELPHIA — It looks as though men are moving into an era of unabashed elegance in dressing for both business and leisure.

After a six-day marathon viewing of what's best and brightest for fall from leading menswear designers, the look might be described as clean-cut, with innovative fabrics giving richness to suits, sports coats, slacks and the ever-popular sweater knits.

More than 30 big-name designers showed up at the Franklin Plaza Hotel to give fashion writers from around the country a look at everything from ski wear to tuxedos. Sponsor was the Men's Fashion Association, and its fashion director, Chip Tolbert, had a few prophecies to make about the shape of the season to come.

Brown in all its variations will come back as a leading color in every shade and in everything from the pin-striped, double-breasted suit to tweed sports coats, the latter another important trend. Pale tone suits will appeal to the Eastern man for early fall and to those on the West Coast for year-round wear.

Tolbert said the conservative man will find wide choices in understated check or classic herringbone sports coats, which will look new when worn with pale flannel or deep-tone corduroy slacks. The more innovative man will show up in bold plaids and color-flecked tweeds made to be mixed with one of the trendy sweater vests, either in pullover or cardigan styles.

A boon to the Southern California man will be the lighter weight suitings being used, combined with careful tailoring to give a crisp look. The double-breasted model is back again and, Tolbert said, gaining in popularity, but slowly. (Several men in the audience said they felt it could only be worn well by very tall, very thin men. It also has the disadvantage of not lending itself to being unbuttoned, which most men prefer, particularly when seated.)

In all suits, the center vent is still favored by most men, but there is an increase in both the side-vented and unvented models.

A fashion trend which does appeal to most men is the return of the turtleneck sweater. It was shown in several variations, always with sports coats or more casual corduroy or leather jackets and sometimes with a center zipper.

Although only those who travel to colder climates may take advantage of them, the new collection of outercoats is smashing, particularly when teamed with soft-brimmed hats, leather gloves and patterned mufflers.

One which brought gasps of appreciation from the audience was a raglan-shouldered, two-button greatcoat done in pure camel hair and collared in Canadian fisher. All that for a mere $3,000 puts it in a class for the man who's not on his way up, but already perched on the pinnacle.

More affordable were coats shown with the raglan sleeve in fly-front styles, weatherproof loden cloths, novelty pea coats and walking coats. All-weather coats included fiber-filled canvas with multiple zippers and a handsome glazed cotton trench coat with padded shoulders and a zip-in red liner for chilly days.

The overview also emphasized the continuing importance of formal wear for evening — credited to the Reagan administration's penchant for black-tie, white-tie parties. The range is dizzying, veering as it does from the handsomely traditional satin-piped black jacket and pants to a boldly striped double-breasted jacket worn over black leather slacks.

Gray pinwale corduroy was shown for the younger man, and there were luxurious velvets and black wools shot with gold Lurex thread. The collar to wear this fall is the wing and the built-in, non-slip cummerbund promises to make formality more comfortable.

Of the dozens of lines shown, a new one which will be introduced by J.C. Penney for fall is from award-winning designer Lee Wright.

In an interview, Wright said he believes good clothing can be affordable, well-tailored and clean and classic. "Men want long-term wardrobe-building, and that's what my collection will offer." There are trim worsted wool two-piece suits, cotton sweaters and button-down sport shirts included in the group. Sports coats are gently shaded and teamed with darker shirts, and there is a wide use of wool, cotton and silk in the moderately-priced items.

DEAR ABBY

Question not easy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Some years back you published a letter from a young boy who asked, "If God is good, why did he let my little brother die?"

Please try to find it. I need it now to explain to my grandchildren why God took their baby sister. Thank you. – M.C.H. IN ROANOKE, VA.

DEAR M.C.H.: Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: My Sunday school teacher says that God is everywhere. Please put this letter in the paper and maybe he will see it.

"Dear God: Why did you let my brother die? When he was hit by the car, my mother prayed to you to let him live, but you wouldn't. My little brother was only 2 years old and he couldn't have sinned so bad that you had to punish him that way.

"Everyone says you are good and can do anything you want to do. You could have saved my little brother, but you let him die. You broke my mother's heart. How can I love you? – PETER"

DEAR PETER: Your question is one that has troubled religious men for thousands of years. One great thinker wrote a book about it. It is called "Job" and is part of the Bible.

It says that the suffering of innocent people is something we cannot understand. But this much is sure: Death is not a punishment. It is one of life's mysteries. Speak to your minister, Peter. Communicate with God by praying, and he will help you in your search for wisdom and goodness and help make your mother happy again.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't throw this away thinking I am some kind of nut. I'm a fairly intelligent, 24-year-old guy. I'm straight, nice-looking and not a creep, but I'm still a virgin. I am not looking to get married, but I would like a little action.

My friends tell me to go to clubs and bars and find a one-night stand. Abby, I must have gone to 100 of them but no luck. Maybe I'm too polite or too honest. I could never flat out ask a girl to go to bed with me. And telling a girl I "loved" her just to get what I want seems too cheap and deceitful.

What am I doing wrong? Don't give me a lecture about right and wrong. I know the difference. All I want is a sure thing. Nothing serious or permanent – just a one-night stand. Thank you. – HARD UP IN HAMILTON, OHIO

DEAR HARD UP: Know thyself. You seem to be a decent, caring guy – too nice to love 'em and leave 'em. What you really want is a nice girl – not a one-night stand.

DEAR ABBY: "Shortchanged in Iowa City" is only partly liberated. She's the woman who makes a little more money than her boyfriend and pays for dinner half the time. Good! But her problem was that when she gives the money to her boyfriend, he keeps the change after paying the bill.

The solution is simple: Hand the money to the waiter yourself and get your own change back. Why should your boyfriend handle your money if YOU are paying for dinner?

I make four times the salary my husband does. For 10 years I've paid for most of our meals out. If a waiter hands the bill to my husband, he openly passes the bill to me. My husband doesn't care. I don't care. The waiter doesn't care.

What's the fuss, "Shortchanged"? It's YOUR money. You might as well hand it to the waiter yourself. Problem solved. – ST. LOUIS SISTER

(Problems? Everybody has them. What are yours? Write to Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Bette Midler leaves hospital to recover

Bette Midler

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Bette Midler was getting so much attention in the hospital that it ruined her rest, so "the Divine Miss M" has gone into seclusion to recover from exhaustion, her manager says.

The raucous pop singer, whose slogan is "trash with flash," collapsed off stage last week during a concert in Pontiac, Mich.

"She's just in seclusion and resting comfortably, but her doctor says she ought to rest for at least this week," her manager, Ramon Hervey, said Monday. He said Ms. Midler is not hospitalized, but declined to say where she is "for security purposes."

"When she was in the hospital in Detroit, so many people called that it interfered with her rest," he said.

Ms. Midler, in her 30s, canceled a concert in Minneapolis last Friday on doctors' advice. Hervey said she hopes to make her concerts scheduled in Denver this weekend.

She's tired after being "on and off the road since this time last year," Hervey said. "She performed through March, then went into the studio to finish her new album, 'No Frills,' which should be out next week."

Ms. Midler also just completed a children's fantasy book, "The Saga of Baby Divine," due out in September, Hervey said.

M. Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has suffered damage to her right eye and will be examined by an eye specialist Wednesday to determine if she needs laser surgery.

Dr. John Henderson, Mrs. Thatcher's physician since 1979, said the 57-year-old Conservative leader has suffered slight damage to the retina, the light-sensitive coating at the back of the eye where the optic nerve terminates.

Mrs. Thatcher first complained of pain in her eye July 31 after attending a garden party given by Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace, according to a spokesman who declined to be identified.

At first the prime minister thought the problem was caused by an airborne particle, but when it persisted, she saw Henderson.

He said she has canceled all but essential engagements for the rest of this week because of the ailment.

"She is going to be seen by an eye surgeon on Wednesday. We will know then what, if anything, will be needed to be done," Henderson said.

He added that "hopefully it will be nothing" and that rest and a cutback on reading will heal the damage without surgery.

Henderson said the damage involved a slight lifting of a small portion of the retina and described the operation that may be required as a "sort of glueing-on process."

The surgery would involve using high-intensity laser light to fuse the damaged tissue, he said.

LONDON (AP) — The Duchess of Kent, wife of Queen ELizabeth II's cousin the Duke of Kent, just wanted to "get away from it all," and she chose Canada for a two-week vacation.

The 50-year-old duchess flew with her 13-year-old son, Lord Nicholas of Kent, to Montreal on Monday.

"We are going on holiday, just the two of us together, away from it all," said the duchess as she left London's Heathrow Airport.

In April, after an operation to remove an ovarian cyst, the duchess canceled all public engagements for two months. Her spokesman said her convalescence was taking longer than expected.

"I'm feeling fine," she said Monday as she boarded a British Airways flight.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Byron Janis, the first American concert pianist to tour the Soviet Union, says he dislikes the distinctions made between "popular music" and "classical music."

Janis visits Philadelphia tonight for one of a series of U.S. concerts celebrating the 40th year of his career. He shared a few observations on his music.

"The Rachmaninoff second piano concerto is probably the most popular selection in the world. And Chopin accounts for more sales of sheet music than any one else."

"Let some more years go by, and we'll see what music is still around," he added. "If what is called popular music lasts as long as Chopin has, well, maybe we'll call it classical music by then, too."

Janis, now 55, was 15 when he made his debut with Toscanini's NBC Symphony Orchestra in 1943.

Treat hamstring tear with ice, heat

Dear Dr. Solomon: I pulled a hamstring while running a couple of weeks ago and it is still bothering me. When can I expect it to get better and what can I do to help it get better? — Cappy, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Cappy: Although many people, like yourself, refer to the injury as a hamstring pull, what you apparently have is a hamstring tear. Regardless of what you call it, treatment depends on the severity of the injury.

Dr. Barton Nisonson, of Lenox Hill Hospital in New York City, recommends the use of ice for the first 24 to 48 hours in order to reduce swelling and bleeding. Starting with the third day, the application of heat should lessen inflammation and relieve pain. You may also find that whirlpool and ultrasound treatment is helpful in relieving pain.

A mild tear may cause some discomfort for about 10 days to two weeks, and your activity should be restricted during this period to give the injury time to heal. Continued use of an injured hamstring will simply delay healing.

If the tear is severe, the patient may have to use crutches for two to three weeks. Taping the thigh from the knee to the groin may provide additional protection. Rehabilitation should begin after about three to four weeks when some healing has occurred.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My 4-year-old daughter got into a bottle of aspirin and swallowed some. I did not know how many were in the bottle or how many she had taken but I could see the powder on her lips. I took her to a doctor and he said he did not feel that she had swallowed very many and that there was nothing to worry about. How can you tell if a child has had too many aspirin and when the child should be seen by a doctor? Should I have waited a while before taking her to the doctor? — Mrs. L.D., New York City

Dear Mrs. D.: I believe you acted wisely in having your daughter seen by a physician. An overdose of aspirin in a child is a medical emergency and you had no way of knowing how many tablets she had swallowed. In such circumstances, it is always better to be safe than sorry.

Some of the signs of overdose in a child include behavior changes, severe fatigue and unusually fast or deep breathing.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a person is on chemotherapy and becomes nauseous and medicine doesn't help him, is there anything else that can be done that will help get him to eat again? — Benjy, Sarasota, Fla.

Dear Benjy: Dr. William Reed, a professor of psychology at the University of Illinois, says that self-hypnosis and relaxation therapy may be of some help in overcoming the nausea that often accompanies chemotherapy. Techniques of this kind are now being used in hospitals throughout the country.

For Nora, Morgantown, W. Va.: Sleepwalking is not a rare occurrence in children five to 12 years of age. There is usually only one incident a night and it my last from a few seconds to minutes.

Ship embarks on pole-to-pole exploration

The U.S. Geological Survey research vessel Samuel P. Lee, steams out to sea from San Francisco Bay, embarking on a one-year, 40,000-mile pole-to-pole cruise. The $12 million project, called Operation Deep Sweep, will explore for energy resources and strategic minerals in the Pacific Basin.

ABOARD THE SAMUEL P. LEE (AP) — A ship brimming with high-tech electronic hardware has set sail on a $12 million pole-to-pole voyage of discovery to explore seabed geology and the energy and mineral potential beneath the Pacific.

The 208-foot Samuel P. Lee began the first leg of its trip Monday, leaving its home port of Redwood City near San Francisco, bound for Alaska.

The U.S. Geological Survey project, dubbed "Operation Deep Sweep," is expected to produce a wealth of information of interest to scientists, the petroleum industry and Pacific Basin countries that could profit from off-shore riches.

Its meandering itinerary will cover 40,000 miles and 13 research projects from the Chukchi Sea off Alaska to McMurdo Sound in Antarctica, from the Fiji Islands to Papua New Guinea. During the year-long voyage, more than 100 scientists will collect data and conduct experiments.

Alive with chirping electronic signals and thudding air guns aimed at the seabed — even in San Francisco Bay — the Lee tracks the ocean floor and its sub-bottom structures around the clock.

The sounds reflected back are recorded by thousands of microphones inside a 2-mile cable length known as a "seismic streamer" trailing the vessel 40 feet below the surface.

The crew also will fire more than 1,000 "sonobuoys" that parachute into the water, erect an antenna, fire sound at the sea floor and transmit the reflected sound back to the ship.

Fed into a computer, the sounds produce a profile of the seabed sediments and the rock strata below.

"You get layers, like looking at a slice of cake," said H. Gary Greene, program coordinator, during a demonstration cruise before the ship left.

Half the work will involve "remote" underwater exploration with sound; the other half will be the collection of samples with dredges or corers, he estimated.

This arsenal of equipment will examine underwater earthquake faults near the Aleutian Islands and submarine volcanoes in the mid-Pacific. The scientists also will try to gauge petroleum reserves of areas like the Bering and Chukchi seas and the Lord Howe Rise east of Australia, Vanuatu and the Solomons.

Pieces of crust retrieved in previous random samplings near Samoa have contained 2 percent cobalt, the richest known source of the metallic chemical used to make steel, the geological survey said.

"One seamount (undersea volcano) could supply the U.S. with cobalt worth billons of dollars for three to four years," said James Hein, chief scientist for one of the cobalt dredging operations. The United States now imports all its cobalt, which is chiefly used in alloys for jet engines and gas turbines.

Funds for the $12 million project come largely from government agencies, but the Circum-Pacific Council for Energy and Mineral Resources hopes to underwrite the Antarctic portion of the voyage with contributions from industry.

The council, part of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, believes the seabed beneath Antarctic waters "will prove very valuable in the future," says its founder and chairman, Michel T. Halbouty, a Texas oil man.
