THE JUNCTION EAGLE

Volume 43. Junction, Kimble County, Texas, Thursday, August 12, 1926. Number 17.

BILL BOOSTER SAYS:

GROUND BROKEN FOR JUNCTION'S NEW HOTEL.

Moeller and Weilbacher of San Antonio, were awarded the contract for Junction's new and modern hostelry last week, and the contractors are losing no time in getting the work started, for several truck loads of lumber, tools and other equipment came in Tuesday and actual construction work was started.

Mr. Moeller of the contracting firm, Mr. M. C. Frederick of Adams and Adams, Architects, who drew the plans, Mr. L. R. Dean, construction foreman, and Mr. F. A. Wagner of the San Antonio Sash and Door Company, who will furnish the mill work, were all on the ground Tuesday, staking out the ground to begin excavations for the foundation.

The contract calls for completion in 120 working days. Heating and plumbing contracts were let separately, and to other than the general contractors, Moeller and Weilbacher.

This hostelry, when completed, will be a credit to any town, irrespective of size, for it will be fire-proof and modern in every respect, and one that can cater to and satisfy the most exacting requirements of vacationists who want and demand the best, and are will to pay rates commensurate with the kind of service they desire.

Not only will it take care of the present clientele of the Fritz Hotel, which it will succeed, but will be the means of bringing many hundreds of wealthy city people here, who, in the past wanted to spend the summer here, but were unwilling to come on account of hotel facilities.

This addition to the hotel facilities of Junction will in no way impair the business of the other hotels under the management of Mesdames Motley and Becker. As a matter of fact, the history of establishing such enterprises show that the business of other associated, but smaller hotels, has been increased by the addition of the newer one.

Junction can now boast of good hotel facilities, for the size of the town, and with the completion of this new hosteiry, no town can boast of better facilities in this line.

KERRVILLE TO HAVE S. AND G. CONVENTION.

Kerrville will be host to the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' Association in 1927. The date for next year's convention will be decided upon at a later meeting of the executive committee.

The action of the association i npicking Kerrville had been anticipated. Honoring Captain Charles Schreiner, a patriarch of the wool and mohair industry of Texas, other cities withdrew from the field and Kerrville was awarded the 1927 convention by acclamation last Thursday at Del Rio.

As soon as the date for the 12th annual convention is decided upon, the Kerrville Chamber of Commerce will begin laying plans for the event. A tentative program for the entertainment of the rancher horde next year will be mapped out months ahead of time.

The Del Rio convention was characterized as the largest and greatest since 13 charter members of the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers' gathered in 1915 to organize against thieves. It was estimated that 5,000 visitors attended this year's meet. —Kerrville Mountain Sun.

LONDON BAPTIST REVIVAL

A letter from E. H. Kothman, received Tuesday, states that a Baptist Revival will begin at London on the 17th of this month, which is next Tuesday, and W. H. Sheppard informs us that he had a letter from Rev. Oren C. Reid, stating that he was going to begin a revival there on that date, so while Mr. Kothmann's letter did not state who was to do the preaching, we put the two bits of information together for the statement that Rev. Reid will conduct the services. Everyone is invited to these services and those who know Rev. Reid and have heard him since he entered the ministry, can assure their friends that these services will be well worth attending and that the people of the London community are fortunate in securing the services of Rev. Reid.

EVERYTHING SET FOR FREDERICKSBURG FAIR.

Reports from Fredericksburg predict that the 40th Annual Gillespie County Fair, August 20, 21 and 22, will be the most successful in its history. A grandstand of 3,000 capacity has been built this year at an expense of $10,000, and is said to be the most modern building of its kind in the State.

The entertainment program is interesting and instructive, and will no doubt, please all those who attend the Fair.

Thorough-bred horses from Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico have been in training at the fair grounds for months, and the races promise unusual rivalry.

A ball game will take place every afternoon between the Fredericksburg Giants and a fast visiting team. Polo games are matched for Friday and Sunday, the first and last days of the fair.

The Fredericksburg Concert Band will furnish music, but several large band organizations from other cities have been invited, and are expected to assist in entertaining the Fair visitors.

A grand display of fireworks conducted by an expert from Kansas City will take place every night.

JUNCTION TOURIST CAMP IMPROVEMENTS

J. J. McWright, proprietor of the camp between town and the junction of the rivers, has recently completed some additions to his camp that are very desirable.

The county water works system was installed at the time of the barbecue, the last of June, but the arrangement was only temporary, as it was rushed to completion by Commissioner Hodges, who had the work in charge for the court, in order to take care of the picnic crowd. Mr. McWright has just completed a house for the motor and pump.

Two large bath houses, one for men and one for ladies, who are customers of the camp, will be completed this week. Each of these will be fitted with two water toilets, and two shower baths. All houses or cottages now have screen porches and electric lights in addition to other regular equipment.

The Patterson Street entrance has two gates that are closed at night to prevent traffic through the park that will disturb tourists in the cottages. Graveled roadways are being built as rapidly as possible.

The park is filled to capacity almost every night.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Briggs and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Springfield, all of Dallas, arrived last week for a vacation at the V bar H. ranch. Mr. Briggs was for several years editor of the Semi-Weekly Farm News, and for the past few years has been editor of Farm and Ranch, the South-West's leading farm and ranch publication. Mr. Springfield is a druggist and this is his first trip to the Hill Country. Kimble County and Junction owe a great deal to Mr. Briggs and Col. Frank Holland, owner of Farm and Ranch and Holland's Magazine, for the fine publicity they have given this county, and many hundreds of vacationists have come here as a result of articles which Mr. Briggs wrote and had published in these journals. He is still as enthusiastic about the country as ever, and those who know him and know of the things he has done for this country in the way of boosting and publicity, are mighty glad to see him and his wife and friends here again.

LEMOYNE'S DEBUT.

A cozy place is the Oper Comique. In spite of its tier after tier of galleries and its wide parquet one has the feeling that here are banded together a group of persons who love music for itself alone. Unlike the famous Opera House—or the Academie National de Musique et de Danse—with its magnificent stairway, luxurious loges and gigantic chandelier.

"Every seat is taken, I do believe," I announced to Barrington Pierce, who was seated with me in a box to the right of the stage.

"Yes," he nodded, glancing with approval over the well-filled house, "they come year after year to hear the same operas. They greet them like old friends Then, too, Opera is not a luxury to them, but a necessity like bread and wine. Besides," he continued, "the admission here is quite within reach of all; not more than the movies at home. The other Opera House is quite different. There you sit next to tourists, nouveau riche and others who come merely because they think it is the thing to do, or because they have a new gown to display between the acts as they parade the length of the promenade."

"You've absolutely sized it up," I agreed, nodding my head. "We went the other evening to hear Faust. The production was unusually fine and the ballet especially good, but somehow I felt the lackadaisical way in which it was received. An entrancing Marguerite was Jane Laval and the music in the last act reached an appealing and magnificent climax, but the audience was too effected to show its appreciation by applause."

The occupants of our box included the Lowell DeWights, Barrington Pierce and myself. That afternoon Curtiss received an important cable from the office and as a result he had made an engagement to meet a business associate who had just arrived in Paris and with whom he was to dine. The DeWights were planning to occupy another box with friends, but Lemoyne, insisting that I should be there, asked them to come with us and act as chaperones. She had rare intuition and seemed to sense the fact that Curtiss would never have consented to my going with the young musician alone.

"I can hardly wait to hear Lemoyne; she's bound to be superb!" commented Mr. DeWight who was one of her countless admirers and at the same time one of her staunchest friends.

"How did it happen, so unexpectedly?" I inquired.

"Well," began Barry, "it seems that Mlle Kousnezoff, who is a favorite here, was to have sung the part, but her son was quite ill and she broke the engagement. She's really remarkable, though wellin her forties, she has the figure, voice and personality of a girl in her teens. So you see, Lemoyne will have no easy time filling her place."

"Oh, but you don't doubt for a moment that she will?" I questioned, anxiously scanning his face.

"She can do it. She has the voice and is in splendid condition."

"Despite the cocktails she took in our honor the day we were at your studio for tea?"

"Oh, I doubt if they had anything in them but orange juice. Lemoyne is, first of all, a clever actress, and she pretended to be drinking that day to tease me or rather to make me become alarmed about her voice. But I know Lemoyne," he spoke in lowered tones, "she's acted so much that unless one knows her intimately, one is never certain when she is playing to the audience or when she is being herself."

"But I'm sure she'll make a tremendous hit tonight!" I exclaimed ,going back to the former subject. "Let's pray."

"Your unselfish interest and loyalty for her are unusually fine," he remarked. "You have meant much to Lemoyne and," he caught my gaze and held it unwaveringly with his own, "much to me."

I blushed, for there was sincerity and warmth in his vibrant voice.

"Shhh-shh—" hissed the crowd to the conversationalists, all over the house, and just then the curtains were drawn.

"They demand absolute silence," whispered Mr. DeWight.

Just as Barry had said, the audience was "en rapport" with the singers from the very first note of Massenet's melodious score. The stillness was so marked that one occasionally heard a sigh—the tnierest so intense that it could almost be felt. From the very first I sensed the fact that Lemoyne was not giving her best. She sang superficially without color or allure.

"She'll do better in the next act when she sings 'Adieu, our little table,'" announced Barry, when the curtain went down and the lights flared up. "The first act doesn't really give her a chance."

I was greatly relieved. During the intermission the DeWights began discussing the amazing number of flowers and telegrams that Lemoyne had received, wishing her success.

"By jove! I've done a terrible thing!" said Barrington Pierce. "I forgot to send anything. I get more absent-minded daily, I do believe. But Lemoyne knows it's a stupid failing of mine and will forgive my negligence, I'm sure."

"Women often forgive the lack of attention, but it hurts just the same," I replied, lowering my voice. I knew Lemoyne's admiration for him, and I felt sad to think Barry had neglected her on her night of nights. Once again the curtain was drawn and revealed Manon and her dashing Chevalier in the happy atmosphere of their little home. Manon has heard that her husband is about to be seized and is under great emotinal stress when she begins to sing farewell to the little table and to her cozy surroundings which have been filled with unspeakable bliss.

"Now, now!" whispered Barry, leaning forward, and at the same time keeping time with her forefinger to the melancholy tune. Again, however, I was conscious of the lack of some vital quality in the singer's voice. I had seldom heard the aria before without being moved to tears. It is true that the technical part of the work was well done, the notes were brilliant and like icicles, were sharp and crystal clear. But the thing that makes the role of Manon so appealing and touches the heart of the simple working-man, is the sympathy created for the innocent girl-wife. It was plain to see that Lemoyne had failed to produce the desired effect.

"Great Scott!" murmured Barry; something's wrong with Lemoyne; I never heard her do anything as poorly as that. She simply sang the words and kept time to the music; that's not enough. She won't even get by if she doesn't wake up to the part!"

Suddenly I had an idea. I had been thinking over what he had said about forgetting to remember Lemoyne with a greeting of flowers or even a note. I knew how this neglect would sub-consciously enter Lemoyne's very being and unfit her for the tremendous emotional task.

"Listen, Barry," I said, "will you do something for me?"

"You have only to ask, ma cherie," he replied with an eager light in his luminous eyes.

"All right. Good! Go back stage—find Lemoyne—speak to her—tell her we're all with her—make her understand that you are too, that it means everything to you, whether she puts it over or not tonight. Please, Barry," as he hesitated, "you've got to. It's only right."

With a nod of his head and a quick apology to the DeWights, he left the box. There was more than the usual pause between the second and third acts. The audience began to grow restless; from one of the upper galleries someone hissed. Then a cat-call unmistakably on the air! In a few moments the theatre was charged with unrest, someone began stamping their feet and the noise reverberated throughout the entire house. I began to grow more and more nervous. What could be going on behind the scenes? I began to regret the fact that I had interfered, for it was possible that the interview with Barry had only served to make matters worse. I squirmed uneasily in my seat.

MAKING WRAPPERS FOR PECAN BUDS.

Newly set pecan buds require protection from air and moisture. Common beeswax and old cloth of thin texture are the only materials necessary and both should be clean. The cloth may be old domestic, such as worn bed sheets, old shirts or thin underwear made of cotton. New, strong or thick cloth is less suitable. In making ready, the cloth is first torn into strips six inches or more in width and not above twenty inches in length. Unless one has some idea of length when expressed in terms of inches, a rule or yard-stick should be used for measurement. If the beeswax is not free from dirt and trash, it is well worth while to melt and strain it through some of the old cloth. If the wax is clean, the next thing is to make terms with the wife for the use of the kitchen, thecook-stove and a square bake-pan. None of the strips of cloth you have torn up should be wider than the long way of the bake-pan, for if they are, the dipping of them into the melted beeswax will be less handy.

While the beeswax is melting all doors and windows of the kitchen should be closed, for unless the kitchen is made quite warm, the wax will not drip out o fthe cloths sufficiently for convenient use when it is made up into wrappers. Again, if the strips of cloth are of greater length than twenty inches, the wax will not drip out sufficiently, but the cloth will be too heavily coated with it at the lower end of the strips. The same result will occur if people are opening doors and passing through the kitchen continually while the cloths are being dipped in the melted beeswax. As a final preparation, a string is stretched across the corner of the room nearest the stove and some newspapers spread under it for reasons that will appear later. When your cloths are cleared of ravelings and hung on the back of a chair near the stove, you are ready for business.

Your beeswax when melted, is kept piping hot, but not scorching, and your oblong quares of cloth are dipped into it one at a time as the upper ends are held between thumbs and fingers of both hands. By moving the cloths back and forth as they are let down into the bake-pan, the hot wax strikes as far upward as comfort to the finger tips will permit. The strip of cloth is then lifted and held immediately over the pan so that the surplus wax will drip back into it. The next thing is to hang the dipped squares on the string across the corner and within arm's reach of the stove. The newspapers immediately below will protect the floor from such drops of wax as may fall after the cloths are hung on the string, and afford further protection from the complaints of the wife,—for these would surely come if her kitchen floor were messed up with the wax from dripping cloths. As the cloths cool, they may be moved to the back of another convenient chair so as to make room for other cloths on the string until the job is finished; after this, they may be put away and made up into wrappers as needed later.

If the interested reader gets the meaning of these suggestions, it is to enable him to do the work himself and do it right. Any rough edges may be removed by tearing off a very narrow strip as the first move in making the oblong squares into wrappers. After this, they may be torn into strips varying from an inch and a half in width, the long way of the cloth so as to cover wounds made when setting the buds on stocks of varying sizes. These strips are then folded back and forth, keeping the edges even into little blocks an inch and a half to two inches in length. With a leather punch, round eyelets are made in the folded blocks a little nearer one end than the other, and half-way between the sides of the blocks. This eyelet is then enlarged by passing the blade of the budding knife through it, the long way of the block. This makes the eyelet large enough for buds of any size to project through it and the wrapper will completely cover the wound made in putting on the bud as directed in a previous article. Wrappers so made, protect the buds and may be carried in a pocket of the worm-apron. This makes them handy, and in ordinary weather conditions good savings may be had from buds with such coverings.

There are other modes of protecting buds, but the plan here outlined is simple, inexpensive and within the reach of every citizen interested in pecan propagation. The details of their preparation may seem numerous, but that is because the reader is unacquainted with the work. There are just as many details in planting corn or cotton and the neglect of any of them would be equally hurtful. With the help of this article and those preceding it giving instructions for maturing budwood and putting on patch buds, the inexperienced beginner is prepared to go to work and finally mature as a seasoned operator.—Charles L. Edwards, in Farm and Ranch.

CAUSE OF CRIME

(By Wesley Peacock, Ph. B.)

The American Humane Association tried to prevent the electrocution of Tex, the man-killing elephant, in Ada, Oklahoma, who had been condemned to die for having killed nine people. The society did not protest against his being put to death, but against the cruel manner of the death.

Tex was an Asiatic elephant, and not African. The former differs in shape, size, and temperament markedly from the latter, but he is most familiar and most popular because of his gentleness, and docility, being employed for centuries as a beast of carriage as well as in circuses.

The African elephant, however, has never been domesticated, unless he may have been employed in battle by the Carthagenians against the Romans. In physical conformation he is the opposite of the Asiatic beast, being higher behind than before, and having larger ears and tusks, and being considered the most dangerous wild animal in Africa, dreaded by the hunters more than the lion. Every boy should read a most fascinating story of animal life entitled "The Elephant Remembers."

The elephant and the whale are the tw oonly animals whose brains exceed man's in weight and bulk. He is considered the most intelligent of the lower animals, except the four anthropoid apes, and by the Hindoos he is believed to retain a great deal of the wisdom of the past ages.

The elephant is a creature of habits. If properly trained, he is the most loyal and abject slave to his master; but if subjected to cruel treatment, or if deprived of his master, he may be "queered" by the loss of his acquired habits. He may then kill his keeper because he has forgotten his habits, which are his law; and, knowing no law, he becomes an outlaw. He then continues a career of killing because he doesn't know what else to do. He just can not make new social adjustments.

By queering an animal is meant disturbing his emotional life. Animals and people are born with the same instincts, to which are attached nearly the same emotions, as fear, anger, love and revenge. Cast iron will break before it will bend, because it has not been tempered. Queer a rabbit and you can pick him up. Cats and snakes charms birds by queering them—taking advantage of the instinct of curiosity.

When people are queered they become unsocial. They may become murderers, without conscience, killing because they have run wild and "gone bad." They become outlaws because they recognize no law, because they have forgotten the law. When a minister called on a boy murderer just before his execution in Sing Sing, the boy asked him: "What about the God-stuff?" He had been queered.

NEW JUNCTION HOTEL

The above is the original draft of the new Junction Hotel, construction work on which was begun Tuesday of this week. On account of some of the original subscribers' failure to pay in their subscriptions, it was necessary to reduce the size. The picture above, while too small to do justice to the beautifully designed building, shows the building as it will look when finally completed. The present contract calls for the construction of the left wing and center section.

The plans have been drawn and construction will be done with a view to completing the originally drawn plans in the future, but the right wing is omitted in the present contract.

J. E. Taylor, expert Ford mechanic, for the past three years with the Cross Plains Motor Company, Ford dealers, arrived in Junction last week to accept a position with the Loeffler Motor Company, local Ford dealers. His family will likely be here within the next few days. Mr. Taylor has had seven years experience as a Ford mechanic and two years as a Ford salesman. He is foreman of the Loeffler Motor Company shop, and with his wide experience in all makes of cars, but especially with Fords, will be a valuable addition to the force of this local firm. His family has been coming here for several summers to spend their vacations, and we hope they will like to live here as well as they like to visit.

Features You Expect to Find Onlyin High Priced Cars.

First and foremost of the quality features that have been responsible for Chevrolet's sensational march to world leadership is the famous Chevrolet valve-in-head motor. A motor so smooth and so powerful that it is a revelation in low-priced car performance.

A rugged frame of heavy pressed steel, channel section, with four rigid cross members to prevent weaving—assures basic strength and sturdiness. A modern, three-speed transmission—easy acting clutch and positive brakes—foot acceleration and foot rest, semi-reversible worm and gear type steering mechanism—all assure driving safety and driving ease.

And so it goes—feature after feature; dry disc clutch, large quick-acting brakes, Remy system of lighting, starting and ignition, Harrison radiator, semi-elliptic springs, Duco finish, and in addition, on all closed models, Fisher Bodies, VV one-piece windshield with automatic wiper, rear vision mirror, Ternstedt rotary type window regulators—all these features serve to establish in an owner's mind a firm conviction that he has made the greatest dollar-for-dollar investment in the world.

When you buy a car—any make of car—it is always greatly to your advantage to buy from a local, reliable dealer, who makes a specialty of that particular brand of car, who knows the mechanism of that car thoroughly, and who carries parts and has facilities for giving you the future service you have a right to expect.

When you buy a STAR Car—and our advertising has shown the superiority of this make—it is even more to your advantage to buy from a dealer, rather than an agent.

We are the authorized dealers for STAR Cars—maintain a special service department for these cars, have mechanics who for several years have been specializing in the mechanical details of this car, and we carry a complete line of repair parts. In other words, we maintain a COMPLETE STAR CAR SALES AND SERVICE for our customers and our interest in your purchase does not end with the sale.

These are only a few of the many reasons why you should buy your STAR Car from us. Let us talk it over with you—or better still, let us demonstrate the superiority of our cars as well as our service.

Banner Wheat County.

Floyd County, Floydada the county site, in the Plains Country of Texas, is again claiming the championship for wheat growing. In 1924, the county marketed 1,879,988 bushels of wheat, and has this year shipped, or has on hand awaiting cars, more than 2,000,000 bushels. Not many years ago that county was mapped as an arid desert. Now it supports a large population and Homer Steen's splendid newspaper, The Hesperian, which will have something to brag about until another county beats it growing wheat.

Headlight Law Impotent.

Representative Williamson, of Bexas County, who "daddied" the Texas headlight law, says that it is an "il-begotten thing" without the necessary enforcement provisions, and that unless the next legislature provides for a State patrol to enforce the law, he will seek its repeal. The law seemed reasonably effective early in the year, when car owners had to have headlights tested and adjusted as a prerequisite to securing 1926 license tags, but the headlights soon got out of adjustment on many cars, and glaring lights are now almost as much in evidence as before the law was passed. The driver of a car is the last person to discover that its lights are out of focus, although it may be very evident to everyone he meets.

Wanting Cotton Pickers.

All parts of Texas south of San Antonio is now trying to get enough cotton pickers to get the crop gathered as quickly as possible. Appeals are being made to other parts of the State, but as pickers will soon be needed all through Texas, cotton growing sections are slow to advise laborers to go to South Texas, even though the crops there may be a few weeks earlier. Efforts will be made to get help from Mexico, and these, if secured, will be encouraged to follow the opening of the new crop on through Central and North Texas. No laborer in good health need be idle in Texas for the next six months, for the fields everywhere are inviting all who will work.

Guadalupe Power Plant.

Work is to begin immediately on a dam in the Guadalupe river four miles below Seguin and another midway between Seguin and New Braunfels, and on a third twelve miles below New Braunfels, to be used in operating a 10,000 horse power hydro-electric plant at Seguin. The cost will be $2,000,000. The company that is financing the construction has already contracted for the sale of all the power it can produce. Thus, is Texas development going forward.

Landmark Hotel Must Go.

The Nimitz Hotel at Fredericksburg, built in 1852, and known to almost every person who has traveled much in Texas, is to be torn away to make room for a modern $125,000 hotel building. The Nimitz is the oldest hotel in the State, perhaps, and has been conducted all the while, by the father first, and then by the son. It yet proudly exhibits the bed used by Robert E. Lee, when he was stationed in Texas, before he resigned from the United States army to enter the Confederate service. Many will regret the passing of the old Nimitz, but it is the order of progress that the old must in time pass away to make place for the new.

Boosting Alpine Country.

One of the most persuasive publications this writer has seen in a long while is "The Big Bend Resources Edition" of the Alpine Avalanche. It makes a fellow want to trek for that section at once to see and enjoy the many good things of which the Avalanche tells so interestingly. The people out in that country ought to be proud of that paper.

Speaking of Alpine, it seems to me to be a big mistake to move Sul Ross State Teachers' College, even if the attendance is as yet lower than was expected. It is growing; that country is developing rapidly; its wonderful climate is fast becoming better known; the college has a well equipped plant, and in a few years it will be over-crowded with students from all over Texas. If necessary, the teaching force should be cut down to meet present demands, but the school should be maintained where it is. Texas is filling up and Sul Ross will grow.

Office Seeks the Man.

This column carefully avoided politics, but there can be nothing amiss in the statement that in one case at least the office sought the man. S. M. N. Marrs, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, did not make a speech during the campaign, and wrote but few letters. He merely submitted his official record and left the people to decide as to his re-election. The vote that he received was nearly 50,000 in excess of that of both of his opponents. It must be gratifying indeed, to receive such an endorsement from an appreciative public.

Grain Yield Large.

According to Victor Schoffelmayer, the well-known agricultural editor of the Dallas News, the wheat yield of Texas this year is estimated at 34,000,000, and the oats production is around 84,000,000 bushels. Wheat is selling at from $1.25 to $1.35 a bushel and oats from 20 to 35 cents. This means about $70,000,000 to $75,000,000 of garnered wealth to Texas from its grain crops alone. Yet there are some Texas farmers who think of these as negligible crops, hardly worth the attention of those who look to cotton as the great money crop. Gradually Texans are learning that diversified farming is safe farming.

Manufacturing Increases.

For the information of those who think that but little is being done in Texas in the way of manufacturing, attention os called to a report issued by the Dallas Chamber of Commerce showing that the manufacturing output of Dallas has increased from $15,000,000, twenty years ago, to $200,000,000 a year, at the present time. Perhaps Houston could make as good showing. Throughout the State interest in manufacturing has grown as the surplus money is needed to carry on the commerce of the country.

Texas' First Woman Senator.

When the newly elected legislature convenes, Senator Margie E. Neal, of Carthage, will be among the number, the first woman in Texas to be honored by a seat in the Senate. Senator Neal has all the qualifications for the position and will be a credit to her district and the State. She has been a teacher, an editor, a stateswoman, a democratic leader, and a member of the board of the State Teachers' Colleges. She has traveled extensively and is a close observer. She has always been a student. She has sufficient wealth to be independent of the temptations that sometimes beset legislators, and the integrity to look upon them with contempt. She has well matured views on public questions and knows how to present them. Texas is fortunate.

The East Texas Chamber of Commerce, with headquarters at Longview, is making an intensive study to decide the lines along which its major activities shall be conducted. Without being asked, I am going to suggest these: Intelligent crop diversification; marketing; manufacturing, including preservation of truck and dairy products; education; road building; improvement of homes; and last, but not least, publicity, publicity, publicity.

Mr. Bierschwale informs us that Kimble County is turning special attention upon the road form Harper to Junction, and for securing designation as a State highway. The project is being looked upon favorably and the road will be opened up soon. The Commissioners' Court will meet at Junction Monday and the matter will be brought up for action. Everyone is optomistic over possible results of this meeting. Let's show our Junction neighbors that we are ready to co-operate with any decision they make toward building that highway. —Harper Herald.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

(By E. R. Waite)

That the best merchandise won't sell well unless it is well advertised.

That the sooner occasional advertisers start continuous advertising the sooner they will have a better paying business.

That quality is what makes a big appeal to the public. No use advertising any other kind.

That continuous advetising is proof that the advertisers will keep faith with their customers.

That the Nation's leading business concerns are building good will by continuous advertising of quality.

That advertising creates a worth while reputation for any business because it gives the buyer a real guarantee of quolity and service.

That continuously advertised products are popular because they have all the qualities that are claimed for them.

The buyers who set up a loud wail about getting substitutes for quality are the ones who never read the advertisements before they buy.

It is just as easy to buy well advertised lines and be satisfied as it is to buy non-advertiesd lines and have grief and trouble

J. MARVIN HUNTER DISCOVERS RELICS.

J. Marvin Hunter, prominent Texas historian, and editor of the Bandera New Era and the Frontier Times, was a fraternal caller at our office Monday. Mr. Hunter was just returning from an excursion into the territory adjacent to Junction, and bro't back with him a pocket-full of relics of some former civilization. These he dpg from a hill near London, which hill Mr. Hunter is convinced is a mound. He showed us several fragments of clay tablets, with some kind of symbols or figures on them, and also several similarly formed pieces of glass, some of which have symbols in them.—Hill View Times.

THE HARD LUCK GUY.

A lot of us think fate unkind, but we ought to be happy when we think about a fellow in Galveston who had a trial the other day on a charge of distributing objectionable circulars in the Island City. The defendant was a ku-kluxer, and the jury who heard his case included five Catholics and a Jew. The only remarkable part of the story is that the jury could not agree, and another trial will be necesstry.—Brownwood Bulletin.

REAL ROAD BOND ISSUE IS LOST.

Real County voters turned down the proposed $50,000 road bond issue in Saturday's election. Totals: For bond issue, 181; against, 254.

The Commissioners' Court is to be asked to order another election at an early date.—Camp Wood Crony.

The William Goat was conspicuous at Del Rio last week, and sold for as much as $300 at the big sales conducted there. Del Rio was host to the sheep and goat raisers association in connection with the sales. The editor had an especial invitation to be present, a ticket to the attractions and quarters at the home of a friend. Del Rio is a coming city of West Texas.—Lockhart Register.

Paul H. Martin, who took goats to the Burnet County Fair last week made almost a clean sweep of the winnings. He won two grand champions, six firsts, two seconds and three thirds. He states that he had numerous prospective buyers and that he feels that his trip to the Burnet County Fair was a profitable one. He also speaks highly of the courtesy that he received at the hands of the Burnet County people.—Menard Messenger.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY MOVES SOUTHWARD

The Lowell Manufacturing Company, of Lowell, Massachusetts, on the vote of its stockholders, is liquidating. This company, once one of the strong est in the textile industry, has found that it cannot compete with the textile mills located in the South where the cotton grows. Eventually the cotton textile industry will be found entirely in the South so far as this country is concerned.

There is another textile industry that is yet strong in the Northern States—the making of yarns and cloth from wool. It is not probable that this industry will move South to the extent that the cotton industry has moved because a great deal of the wool is produced in Northern and New England States, but there is no good reason why the South should have to send North fo rall its woolen goods. Here in Texas where the production of wool and mohair leads the Nation there is not a complete mill. There is room for mills manufacturing yarns, blankets and a number of other articles from the raw material produced in the Southwest. We should not be forced to sell all our wool and mohair to mills located in other States and then reship the finished product,

The hill country of Texas, where the sheep and goat industry thrives, has many miles of live streams which could provide the necessary power for the manufacture of our raw material into the finished products for ouw own consumption and for export.—Farm and Ranch.

THE U.G & S.R.A MEETS IN ROCKPRINGS NEXT.

In a meeting that is reported to have been rather stormy at times, Rocksprings won out in the contest for the place of meeting for next year, of the United Goat and Sheep Raisers' Association, at Camp Wood last Tuesday night.

The meeting was held in the Camp Wood Baptist Church, and such a crowd was present that not much more than half of the people could get in.

The meeting was presided over by J. L. Gulley, of Uvalde, president of the association.

The secretary read the minutes of last meeting.

The business of electing officers for the ensuing year was proceeded with, and F. O. Landrum of Laguna was elected president of the United Goat and Sheep Raisers' Association. Dr. W. W. Nipper of Brackettville, was elected vice-president, T. O. Smith of Rio Frio was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

After considerable discussion it was decided to exclude sheep and make the organization exclusively for Angoras, and in line with this, a committee was appointed to decide upon a change of name of the organization.

The question of a meeting place for the association next year was discussed with Rocksprings and Uvalde as the contenders. Rocksprings was placed in nomination by M. D. Taylor, of Vance; and Uvalde in nomination by Ed Robbins of Camp Wood. Then they began counting the votes, and it was found that Rocksprings had 128 and Uvalde 24. It was then suggested that the selection of Rocksprings be made unanimous, and this was done.

After the adoption of some resolutions, which may appear in the paper next week, the meeting adjourned.

There is a great deal of satisfaction locally, over the fact that Rocksprings is to entertain the convention, and show and sale next year. The Hub of the Angora industry of the United States can be depended upon to do the right thing, and the citizens here have already begun to discuss what they are going to do when the association meets here next year.—Edwards County Leader.

Two years ago the people of Texas voted against Ku Kluxism. This year they voted against Fergusonism. It is an "against" vote all the time. The question is, when will Texas people take a stand for some constructive program. This objective mood is holding the State back and keeping it down in the eyes of the world. No man and no nation has ever been great in the objective mood What Texas needs is a constructive, building program. It will be a great day for the Lone Star State when the people discard the so-called statemen whose chief ability is to break down what the others have done. Yes, it will be a great day for the great Southwest when Texas people call to leadership men who can forward the strongest program of constructive development. There is no wonder that we are behind in educational, industrial and economic development. Texas needs builders.—San Saba News.

A BRIDGE LUNCHEON

Mrs. French Murphey of Nacogdoches was complimented Tuesday with a bridge luncheon of artistic appointment, having Mrs. Charlie Henderson as hostess, at her pretty country home.

Brilliant-hued xenias and lovly pot plants were placed at advantage points about the reception and dining room, making a most attractive summertime setting for the players.

The large dining table, where covers had been laid for eleven guests, was centered by a hand painted wicker basket filled with colored xenias. A smaller basket holding three tinted linen handkerchiefs woven into shapes of roses, was placed at the cover of the honoree. Mrs. Carol Black of Naples, was also presented a deck of cards as a gift.

The place cards were little hand painted nymphs which added much to the attractiveness of the table.

A most delicious four-course luncheon was served, after which bridge was the diversion.

A GARDEN TEA.

Mrs. R. H. P. Wright and Mrs. C. R. Stevenson were joint hostesses Friday afternoon at a charming Garden Tea from 5 to 7 o'clock, given on the pretty lawn at the home of Mrs. Stevenson, to honor Mrs. French Murphey of Nacogdoches, Texas.

Mesdames French Murphey, W. Holtzer, E. R. Borden, R. H. P. Wright and C. R. Stevenson, in the receiving line, and Mrs. Pierce Hoggett presided at the register, there being over fifty who registered throughtout the afternoon.

The table was most inviting in the ornamentation of summer flowers and bon bon dishes of nuts, mints, and other candies. The pink tinted princess tapers that were graced with bows of pink tule stood in silver candelabra at either side of the large silver basket that held the colored flowers.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Rev. Dekle and family are camping on the San Saba this week while attending the Baptist encampment. The pastor was at home for services, returning to Menard Monday. He states that the Baptists, gathered from all part of the State, are having a great encampment at Menard and he and his family, as well as many others from here who are attending the meeting, are enjoying themselves, as well as getting a great deal of good from the courses offered by able instructors, lecturers and preachers.

Before leaving Monday, Rev. Dekle requested that announcement be made that he will preach at the Baptist Church here both morning and evening, Sunday, August 15th., and that all other services of the day will be ehld as usual.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to thank all those who supported me in the recent primary and to state that I appreciate very highly your interest in me. While I was not elected, I enjoyed meeting all the people of the county, and have no ill will towards any one.

Thanking you again, I am,
Very sincerely,

LOOT!

II. Captain Kidd Turns Pirate

WHEN on one fine spring morning in the year 1696 Capt. William Kidd set sail for New York, bearing a commission from the king of England to suppress piracy in the East Indies, and wherever else such unlawful doings flourished, there was not a man of the 100 aboard the galley Adventure but that greeted with a cheer the prospect before him—the certainty of fame and fortune. Lucky for them that they could not look forward into the future and see the end—their leader and nine of his men in chains in the Newgate jail, on trial for their lives in historic Old Bailey and writhing in the clutch of the hemp around their throats on Execution dock on the bank of the Thames!

The Adventure touched at the Madeira islands, crawled south along the east coast of Africa, rounded the Cape of Good Hope, ran up to Madagascar, where the captain watered and victualed his ship and then continued on towards India. In the meantime a plague had broken out aboard ship, and at the rate men were dying and being tumbled overboard, it began to look as though the Adventure would have not a fighting man left before ever a pirate ship was sighted. More than that, the captain showed no inclination to get at the business in hand. Here he was near the haunts of the buccaneers, but he made no move to carry out his orders.

Instead, he sailed aimlessly up and down the coast of India until there arose loud murmurs among his crew at his indecision and inactivity. Then the captain made his decision, but what force influenced him to it no one can tell. At the port of Babb's Key, in the Gulf of Eden, a fleet of fourteen ships, known as the Mocha fleet, was being loaded with a rich freight for the ports of India. Fearful of pirates the fleet set out with a convoy of Dutch and British ships.

One sweltering day Captain Kidd swung the bow of the Adventure around sharply. Indecision and inactivity was over. William Kidd had made his decision. "We're off to Babb's Key, my lads," he shouted. "We'll ballast this ship with gold and silver and precious stones from Mocha fleet." William Kidd, the hunter of pirates, had turned pirate himself. Did his crew protest at this change of their status? Let the cheer which burst from their throats at his announcement answer that!

HOME WATER SYSTEM.

One of the most complete, as well as the most convenient, home water supply systems ever seen in Junction, is being installed at the home of the local manager of the West Texas Utilities Company, H. Pippin.

This system, which takes up a floor space of about two feet square, consists of a pressure tank, motor and pump in one compact frame casting, and the connections and regulators.

With a motor of one-fourth horse power capacity, it will be possible to pump water from the well, recently drilled, which is 100 feet deep, and to keep a supply on hand at all times, without the use of a storage tank, because of the automatic features of the motor and pump. The pressure is automatically kept at 40 pounds, and when it drops below this, the motor starts and the pressure goes back up. The automatic features are similar to these used in the Frigidaire systems, and a supply of water is maintained with heavy pressure with a very little attention.

The plants range in price from $125.00, up, and the cost of operating on electric current will run only a few cents a week for the average family water supply.

This machine is creating quite a bit of interest on the part of people living here in town, accessible to the cheap current, in view of the fact that the present town water supply has been found unsafe for drinking purposes, and should this condition continue to exist, many will want to provide their own systems of water supply for safe drinking purposes.

The little plant will be ready for use within a few days and may be seen by any one who cares to drive to the residence on the lot next to the sub-station.

Junction Hardware Company, local Ford dealers, report the sale of the following, since the sales list was printed a few weeks ago: Trucks to W. W. Jackson and Arthur Simon; Touring cars to August Bruns, E. O. Dunbar, W. B. Buster and Thomas Wilson; Coupe to H. G. Perry and Roadster to H. H. Farmer, Bob Bissett and Doug Jarvis.

The recently opeed O.S.T. Cafe was closed this week on account of Mr. DeLong's health and the fixtures and other equipment were being sold by him.

Packers in Demand

High wages are paid to experts employed in packing women's trunks. Both in Paris and London, but especially in the French capital, this has become a regular profession, and probably seven out of ten wealthy women who buy wardrobes in Paris employ a professional packer, who may be supplied either by the modiste or the hotel.

More than a million pounds of tea are required to supply the daily drink of the people of Great Britain.

Good Will is Earned--- Not Bought!

To know that the above statement is true of any business is in itself an inspiration to apply the Golden Rule in every transaction.

It is more pleasant to deal with a customer, whose confidence we hold, than to deal with a customer who feels that in order to secure value received for his money, he must "match wits" with us. Our customers don't have to "watch" us when making a purchase.

All prices are marked in plain figures and goods are sold to every customer at the figures marked, insuring that every customer pays exactly the same for the same article.

We are more concerned with the permanent good will of our customers than the profit of a few cents or a few dollars, gained on one sale. We feel that the good will that we have established with our customers in our many years of business here is a greater asset than all the merchandise in our shelves and warerooms

We invite you to our places of business and to become one of our customers, and assure you a fair, square deal at all times, as the Golden Rule is, and should be applied in business.

You are always welcome at our places of business, whether you want to buy anything or not.
