Egyptian flags fly over Sinai

RAFAH, Sinai (AP) — Egyptian flags suddenly unfurled Saturday over the northern Sinai town of Rafah, bisected by barbed wire into Arab and Jewish halves on the last day of Israel's 15 years of occupation.

Israeli troops patrolled Rafah, paying no attention to the Egyptian flags that technically appeared a day early.

Arab workmen laid bricks and concrete to prepare a pedastal for a 50-foot flagpole where the official flag-raising ceremony will be held Sunday afternoon at the new border terminal two miles east of town.

The Bank of Egypt prepared to open a new branch, the dusty main street was spanned by colorful banners welcoming the return of Egyptian rule, and the red, white and black Egyptian flag snapped in the hot wind above many houses.

Israeli money began to disappear and Egyptian currency was taking over. The Bank of Egypt's Rafah branch manager, Abdel Khader a-Tiyal el-Fadali, cheerfully showed off the attractive, newly furnished offices.

"We will be open for business at noon tomorrow," el-Fadali said; happy that two weeks of frantic work had made the branch ready on time for the return of Egyptian rule.

The manager said some of his staff of 20 came from Cairo but some of the jobs were going to Rafah people. An assistant, Samir Mubarak, was one Rafah native to benefit from the bank's opening, and he said Egypt was preparing jobs for all the Rafah people who previously had worked in Israel.

"And they will earn a lot of money, like in Israel," Mubarak said. "Egypt wants to raise the standard of living here."

Another Rafah resident, Odel el-Shar, said, "The people are very happy. Before this was Egypt and now Egypt comes back." But like many in the town nestled in the Mediterranean coastal sand dunes, he has a problem, for the new border slices Rafah in two.

A concertina-wire fence runs straight through Rafah, climbing up the sides of houses and over rooftops, closing off streets and alleys. El-Shar said he was part of a big family with relatives on both sides. He lives on the Egyptian side but has an orchard on the Israeli-held side.

"Both countries say there will be permits to let us cross, but we don't know when they will be issued," he said.

When the border goes into effect Sunday, roughly 20,000 of Rafah's people will be in Egypt and 60,000 will be in the Israeli-occupied Gaza Strip. Or as the people here say it, there is "Rafah-Egypt" and "Rafah-Palestine."

The human problem of the Rafah border was one that lingered almost unnoticed until the last months before Israel's withdrawal from Sinai, and with other frontier problems and political squabbles it contributed to a souring of the atmosphere between Egypt and Israel.

Saturday was a day that found many Midlanders toiling under a clearing sky to serve their fellow beings in need as the annual Christmas in April program held its one-day effort. The housing repair program involved more than 140 homes this year and attracted outsiders to watch the unique all-volunteer project. See related story and photos, Page 1B.

Council following up water plan

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

With the Colorado River Municipal Water District putting its stamp of approval on the plan to sell water bonds for the city of Midland at its Thursday session, the Midland City Council on Tuesday will take the next step by going through with the legal execution of that agreement.

And city officials may draw up a letter Monday asking the Texas Water Commission to set a public hearing date on its request for a permit to pump treated effluent down to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city. It is for this project that the lion's share of the $23 million in bonds will be sold by CRMWD.

Also at the Tuesday session, the City Council will consider levying an ad valorem tax in connection with that contract.

John Lowe, director of public utilities for Midland, said Saturday he hopes the letter will be drafted Monday. And if the water board won't accept by telephone that it is being mailed and act on it during its Tuesday meeting, Lowe said he may have to hand carry it to Austin.

This request, if approved, would allow the board to set a public hearing for about 45 days after Tuesday's meeting. That time period allows for proper public notification, he explained.

By moving ahead on the hearing, Lowe said it will show the TWC that Midland is working to correct the situation of too much effluent in its holding ponds. Last winter, the city was given 24 months to find another place to put the effleunt other than in holding ponds a few miles southeast of the city. Floyd's land is located near the Glasscock County line.

"We have our sites picked out and we want to get moving on it," Lowe added.

Directors of the CRMWD, at its headquarters in Big Spring, also agreed to issue bonds for water and sewer improvements in Odessa. Combined with Midland's figure, it will give CRMWD more than $50 million in bonds to sell.

Midland's part will consist of about $20 million in one or more increments for the sewage disposal project, according to a CRMWD spokesman. Another $3 million will be designated for specific water and sewer projects. These bonds will be backed by revenues from the improvements, plus general revenues if needed and would not constitute a direct obligation of the CRMWD.

Lowe wasn't sure if the city's watey and sewer rates would be raised to pay for the bonds. But even without the

For some, teaching a difficult choice

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Martin Mogford, Jim Leeper and Roy Dennis have been teachers for the past 18 to 30 years.

It is a career they chose years ago and one in which they said they will remain. Their choices for other employment are limited.

For younger MISD teachers, career choices aren't limited.

"We kind of represent the old-timers," Mogford, a teacher at Alamo Junior High School, said with a smile. "There are not that many of us quitting. Who is going to hire an old man like me?"

"I don't think of quitting now," Leeper, a teacher at Midland High School, said. "But I often doubt the choice that I made. I'm over 50 but my counterpart who is 30 is quitting. He is choosing that other fork in the road."

One of the main reasons teachers are leaving the classrooms is due to low salaries, the three men agreed. Although MISD teachers receive salaries that are 32 percent above the state level, the men said they feel it is insufficient in combating Midland's high cost of living.

At a recent hearing on the MISD faculty salary schedule in which over 200 teachers attended, Mogford, representing the joint salary committee of the Classroom Teachers Association of Midland and the Midland Educators Association, presented three salary requests supported by Midland teachers.

THOSE REQUESTS included all state salary raises to be "passed along intact," continuation of the 32 percent pay above state schedule and reinstatement of the 6.65 percent of Social Security benefits, deleted as of Jan. 1, which are still considered by teachers as "part of our total pay packet."

"It appears that we are paying for a mistake made by the tax appraiser," Mogford said. "Instead of the public having to come up with taxes to pay for it, it came out of the teachers' salaries (in the form of the Social Security payments)."

While many teachers believe that the half of Social Security benefits paid by MISD has been sitting in escrow since Jan. 1, Donald Furgeson, MISD business manager, said Social Security benefits for the remaining seven months of the 1981-92 budget were not budgeted.

"In the 1980-81 budget, after the year had started, there were discrepancies in values," Furgeson said. "They did not have an effect on Social Security. Then when we were working on the 1981-82 budget at this time last year, we lacked quite a bit meeting expenditures with the projected revenue. At the meeting July 1, we were advised to revise the budget so that taxes would not increase.

"At the July 14th meeting we cut expenditures in the budget because we lacked $1,233,000 of having enough projected revenue," Furgeson continued.

The administration deleted 50 percent of supplies, materials and travel, as well as the communications department and some vocational and special education units totaling $455,134.

"About $900,060 was deducted from payroll costs for the last seven months of Social Security benefits," Furgeson explained. "Two years prior to that, we'd given notice we were withdrawing with the teachers' approval. We added $182,124 in sick leave rebates which came to a total of 1,233,000."

FURGESON SAID $1.5 million is usually budgeted for the Social Security program. In the 1981-82 budget, about $600,000 was budgeted for the

Odessan killed by bomb wired to pickup truck

ODESSA — The blast that killed an Odessa man, hurled debris for a 1,000-foot radius and could be heard a mile away was an explosive device that had been wired to the victim's pickup truck, police surmise.

Joe Lee Neal, 47, an area manager for ERCO Petroleum Services of Odessa since February of this year, was dead on arrival at Medical Center Hospital shortly before 8 a.m. Saturday. He and his teen-age daughter had left the house to run an errand about 7:25 a.m., according to police, but the girl had returned to the house to get her forgotten purse when the blast rocked the neighborhood.

The 1982 Ford Blazer was demolished, hurling debris 1,000 feet in every direction and waking people as far as a mile away. The truck had been parked on the lot of the Town & Country Shopping Center just across the street from Neal's residence at 3405 Brentwood Drive.

Police said the device apparently had been placed in the cab or under the hood of the truck. Ordnance experts from Lubbock and Fort Bliss were to arrive Saturday to aid the investigation and an autopsy was ordered by Justice of the Peace Jimmie Harris.

Police had no suspects in custody and no motive was apparent by noon Saturday, according to reports.

Asia's challenge

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

HONG KONG — A three weeks' visit to Asia has strengthened my conviction that this will be a great economic growth area of the future as well as a strong psychological barrier to Soviet imperialistic ambitions to dominate the world.

The mysterious and exotic East of Kipling and Somerset Maugham is all too plainly becoming a dynamic economic threat to the West. No longer the passive rice growers and plantation planters of years past, the free nations along the Pacific rim of the Asian continent — Korea, Taiwan, the Philippines, Malaysia and Singapore — are joining Japan in developing modern electronic and other industries which are going to become increasingly competitive with American and Western European products.

There is no mystery about how this is being achieved. It is being accomplished by strong, business-oriented leadership which keeps taxes low, by the will of a disciplined people to work hard, by their ability to learn industrial skills quickly and, of course, by cheap labor.

It is the latter that is bound to be a matter of growing concern to our own manufacturers who pay much higher wages to maintain the highest standard of living in the world for our workers.

Ralph Pfeiffer, chairman and chief executive officer of the International Business Machines Far East Corp., told the American Chamber of Commerce in Hong Kong this past week that there is no reason why the U.S. cannot remain competitive in areas of critical importance in the ongoing worldwide technological revolution.

He said, however, that American companies should stop complaining and start competing if they want to maintain their hold in critical industries. He recalled seeing a basketball game in which one team kept complaining to the referee about fouls, but lost nevertheless by 30 points.

He thinks that if U.S. companies were to invest wisely and compete vigorously, they would be able to meet the Japanese competition. In fact, he said IBM had successfully increased its market share in Japan last year.

Pfeiffer favors completely free trade, but I feel our industries and workers are entitled to some protection from cheap foreign labor. We should have a flexible tariff system that would regulate prices of imports to a level with the cost of our own products. Then the American consumer could choose between the American and foreign product on the basis of quality and personal taste. Sooner or later, our union workers must show a greater willingness to increase productivity. We have one of the lowest per capita production rates of any of the major industrialized nations.

This has been an interesting and on the whole encouraging visit, especially in Southeast Asia. Talks with the president and foreign minister of the Philippines, the prime ministers of Malaysia and Singapore, the governor of Hong Kong, American ambassadors, Asian bankers, businessmen and astute

Joe Golding wins MISD seat

Joe Golding

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Joe Golding was elected Saturday to Place 6 on the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees in a close run-off election with Charleen Rosebery.

Golding, owner of Golding's and Upstairs Downstairs, won his position with 1,144 votes, a narrow margin of 47 votes over Mrs. Rosebery's 1,097 votes. In the April 3 election, he had received only 15 more votes than Mrs. Rosebery.

"The election came down to the last box," Don Furgeson, MISD business manager, said after the final tally was made Saturday night. "Charleen was ahead by 19 votes until the votes from Senior Citizens Center came in. Joe carried that one pretty heavily."

"We're all excited," Golding said. "I'm very anxiously looking forward to getting on the school board. I hope to continue the very excellent work the school board has been doing and help solve the problems we will be facing."

"I want to congratulate Joe for running a very fine race," Mrs. Rosebery said. "I wish him all the luck and success on the board, where I know he will spend his time and effort well. And I plan to continue my efforts volunteering in the schools."

With only 2,241 votes recorded, roughly 5 percent of the total number of voters registered, Furgeson said the election was down from previous years.

"We usually have about half of what we had in the first election," he explained. "We didn't even have half this time."

The April 3 election drew 5,895 voters to the polls.

"I really want to take the opportunity to thank everyone who worked for me in the race," Golding said. "There is no way I can repay them for what they did. They worked so hard and there is no way we could have made it without them."

Golding will be administered the oath of office during the regular school board meeting Tuesday.

Egypt has grand plans for Sinai

EL-ARISH, Egypt (AP) — Egypt is unveiling ambitious plans to make the Sinai battlefield bloom, but skeptics say there isn't enough money and that they'll be happy if only half the plans are fulfilled.

The new interest in the 23,500 square miles of wasteland that has served Egypt as little more than a war zone appears to be partly the result of 15 years of Israeli occupation and development and partly an extension of Egypt's postwar campaign to make its vast deserts flower.

With the last third of Sinai to be returned by Israel Sunday, the government is promising land reclamation schemes, five acres and a house for every Bedouin, an apartment for every married laborer, three new colleges, new hospitals, schools and cultural centers, telephone connections with the rest of Egypt, and piped-in Nile water for the North Sinai capital of El-Arish.

"WE WANT TO achieve self-sufficiency, especially food security, to secure a minimum acceptable standard of services," said the North Sinai governor, Yousef Sabry Abu Taleb, in a recent interview in his offices here.

With the Sinai a battlefield for the past 30 years, its civilians' needs never were a high priority. Under British rule from 1882 to 1952, the starkly beautiful land of sand plains and granite mountains was valued only as a buffer between Egypt and the Turkish empire.

"It's about time Sinai gets more money to make up for the suffering of its people," said Sohair Gelbana, the North Sinai representative in the Peoples' Assembly, Egypt's legislature.

But she is not optimistic about all the grandiose plans. "We don't have the finances to fulfill these promises," she said in an interview. "It will be good if 50 percent of these plans are put into action."

Development in the Sinai has a long way to go. There is only one telephone connection to Cairo from this palm-studded provincial capital of 80,000 people on the sandy Mediterranean coast. The Israelis ripped out their phone links when they withdrew in May 1979.

Water and housing are in serious shortage for the estimated 180,000 Egyptians living in the Sinai, the majority of whom are Bedouins.

Mrs. Gelbana said all of the 30,000 refugees living in Cairo and the Suez Canal cities would like to return to their homeland. Some have begun building temporary huts on the main road from the canal crossing at Qantara to El-Arish, using iron from Israel's abandoned Bar-Lev line fortifications.

EL-ARISH IS KNOWN for its dates, and the border town of Rafah, 24 miles to the northeast, for its fruits and vegetables, but the big moneymaker for the Sinai is oil.

The Alma oilfields in South Sinai, developed by Israel during the occupation, and offshore wells in the Red Sea and the Gulf of Suez will bring Egypt about $2.5 billion this year.

Abu Taleb said a long-term plan for tourism in the Sinai would be complete by the end of the year. The Egyptians bought from Israel a number of tourist hotels and the scenic highway that links the Israeli port of Eilat with the southern town of Sharm el-Sheikh.

The beaches and crystal-clear waters of the Red Sea have been very popular with Israeli bathers and divers, and Egyptian officials have said they hope to capitalize on this source of foreign income.

The monastery of St. Catherine's, nestled among the 8,000-foot peaks of the south-central Sinai, is also a big attraction.

Transportation from the Nile Valley to the Sinai's towns and sites may be the only aspect of life that immediately improves for the people.

The Sinai now is linked to Egypt by long-wait ferries at Suez, Ismailia, Qantara and Port Said. The new Ahmed Hamdi Tunnel at Suez is now only open two hours daily, but is expected to open fully in the fall.

Egypt wants conciliatory Sinai withdrawal

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — To keep things calm and not irritate the Israelis, Egypt plans low-key celebrations Sunday to mark Israel's withdrawal from the last third of war-conquered Sinai.

"You know that the Israelis are withdrawing — there are some certain sensitivities," Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly told a news conference. "The Egyptians are celebrating and the Israelis are withdrawing. We want to keep all the feelings as cool as possible."

Anwar Sadat, key architect of the peace treaty with Israel, had planned a three-day extravaganza to mark the regaining of Sinai after 15 years of Israeli occupation. But President Hosni Mubarak scaled down the plans within weeks of his precedessor's assassination Oct. 6.

The government-controlled press said Mubarak would lay a wreath at Sadat's tomb at the moment the Egyptian colors are officially raised Sunday in Sinai.

THE FOREIGN PRESS center said the governor of North Sinai would officially raise the Egyptian flag in the border town of Rafah at 1 p.m. — 7 a.m. EDT — and the South Sinai governor would do the same in the town of Sharm el-Sheikh at the same time.

Torch-bearing runners who set out from Cairo Friday were expected in the two towns at the same time, and folk-dancing and other Bedouin ceremonies were expected.

The press said military cadets would parade through the streets of Cairo and other cities, and April 25 would be a national holiday in the future.

"We consider the 25th a very normal day, but it is a very good sign for normalization between the two countries and to strengthen the relations between the two countries," said Aly.

He added the withdrawal "will create a new era in the area devoted to the peace process," and a "good mood" toward normalization in Egypt. He appeared to be trying to allay Israeli fears that normalization will lag after the withdrawal.

Aly said the dispute over a small patch of border land at Taba, south of the Israeli port of Eilat on the Gulf of Aqaba, would be handled on the basis of agreed principles and would not impede the withdrawal.

Court orders bombing suspects arrested

BOLOGNA, Italy (AP) — An appeals court has ordered the arrest of five neo-Fascist suspects in connection with a 1980 Bologna train station bombing that killed 85 people.

The arrest warrants for complicity in mass murder were the first break in the lengthy investigation of Europe's most bloody post-war terrorist attack. They were issued Friday, following the arrest of four other right-wing bombing suspects April 17.

Police arrested dozens of extreme rightist suspects soon after the Aug. 2, 1980 Bologna bomb attack, but all were released because of lack of evidence.

Four of the latest suspects already are jailed on other charges: Francesca Mambro, Sergio Calore, Dario Predetti and Valerio Fioravanti. The fifth, Roberto Femia, is being sought by police.

Prosecutors claim Miss Mambro and Fioravanti were in the train station the morning of the bombing. They suspect that Fioravanti helped prepare the nitroglycerin bomb, which was placed in a suitcase and left in the second-class waiting room.

Calore and Pedretti are suspected of planning and organizing the bombing from their cell in Rome's Rebibbia prison. Femia is suspected of helping carry out the attack.

The charges against Calore and Pedretti are based on the testimony of Piergiorgio Farina, an inmate who shared a cell with them, Italian newspapers said.

U.S. Vice President George Bush plants a tree in Japan's Zojoji temple Saturday. Surrounded by security guards, Bush plants a Japanese Parasol Pine — he wasn't allowed to donate an American tree because of import regulations. After Japan, Bush plans to visit Singapore, Australia and New Zealand.

Bush doesn't fear Chinese reaction

TOKYO (AP) — Vice President George Bush said Saturday the United States would view with "great seriousness" a downgrading of relations by China, but he said Peking's objections to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan pose no major threat to those ties.

The Chinese-American relationship is a "fundamental one" in which each country recognizes its own national interest, Bush told a news conference. It "is not in such a state that it would require a visit to patch things up," he said.

The present itinerary for Bush's two-week Asian tour includes Singapore, Australia and New Zealand.

U.S. officials said privately, however, that the Chinese have invited Bush to visit Peking and and the question of whether he goes or not is largely a "logistical" one.

Bush served a term as the United States' top diplomat in China before full relations were established in early 1979.

He said the Reagan administration views the U.S. relationship with China as "a very, very important one," and "if a visit by the vice president would be productive and useful, we would go the extra miles."

Communist China has objected to U.S. plans to sell some $60 million worth of military spare parts to the rival Nationalist government on Taiwan. They want the Reagan administration to set a deadline for cutting off all defensive arms sales to Taiwan.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Bush told Japan's Prime Minister, Zenko Suzuki, that the United States will not sell advanced fighter jets to Taiwan, but that the spare parts deal was proper under the Taiwan Relations Act that accompanied the establishment of full U.S. ties with Peking.

The Peking government regards Taiwan as an integral part of China subject to rule by the mainland. It objects to the arms sales as delaying reunification.

Bush said there has been no shift under President Reagan in the U.S. policy of dealing with Taiwan on an unofficial basis.

"In all relationships, requirements change as to terms of defense, but this president is not leaving friends in the lurch," he said.

DON HARVEY,
REALTORS

FSBO'S FLOP

The term "FSBO" in real estate jargon refers to a home "For Sale By Owner". The rationale is that the seller will reap more profit by saving the Realtor's commission. Never has this thinking made less sense.

There's a real estate maxim-"If you can't finance it, you can't sell it"-which fits today's market. With prices higher than ever, and mortgage rates up there also, it takes more than a quick tour through the house to close a sale. Today a home sale must be financially structured and realistically priced to fit each individual case. It takes a lot of education in this specialized field, experience, and financial contacts to put a final sale together. A Realtor has these attributes-a FSBO does not.

Worse yet, since most home buyers work through Realtors, FSBO'S limit their potential buyers to bargain-hunters who like to haggle directly with sellers. Most FSBO's fail. And it can be a costly failure considering you are selling probably, the most expensive investment in your life.

Briton presses for U.S. alignment

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration encountered new pressure Saturday to align itself with Great Britain if Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. fails to mediate a peaceful solution to the Falklands crisis.

Denis Healey, deputy leader of the British Labor Party, met with Haig at the State Department and then told reporters that since the choice must soon be made between peace and war in the South Atlantic "the Argentines should be in absolutely no doubt whatever where America will stand if a diplomatic settlement is not now reached."

"America should make it clear, at the very least, that if the present mission does not succeed, then America will follow the lead already given by the European community and the Commonwealth countries in banning imports," he said.

"And I think that the application of a moderate amount of pressure on the Argentine government now could save America the need to apply very much more damaging measures at a later stage," said Healey, the Labor Party's principal spokesman on foreign affairs.

Healey's comments paralleled those made in private by British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym. And they were echoed Saturday by American and British political groups.

"If these efforts prove fruitless, the U.S. government has an obligation to make clear that aggression by mid-level powers is as reprehensible as aggression by great powers," said the Ripon Society, a Washington-based moderate Republican group, and the Bow Group, a British Conservative Party research organization.

To demonstrate support for Britian, "it is vital that the U.S. government follow the lead of the European Community and British Commonwealth in cutting off all Argentine exports to the United States until the crisis is resolved," they said in a joint statement.

The United States has been playing a neutral role in its mediation of the dispute. Haig planned to continue that mediation effort with meetings in the next few days with Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez, who is flying to the United States to ask the Organization of American States to impose sanctions against Britain.

Haig was asked last Wednesday what action the United States would take if negotiations fail. "You would have to put me in an iron boot and start twisting before I answer that question," he told his Capitol Hill audience.

But Britain is a key NATO ally and Haig in private is known to leave little doubt that the United States would join the sanctions already imposed by the European community and the Commonwealth nations if negotiations fail and Argentina remains adamant.

There has been widely voiced concern, however, that if the United States backs Britain against Argentina in a war over the Falklands, it could cause serious and damaging repercussions for U.S. policy throughout Latin America.

But Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, chairman of the Ripon Society, told a news conference that he believes the United States will receive the "great understanding of our Latin friends."

Warmer temperatures to continue

Fair skies with warmer temperatures are expected to continue through Monday.

Midlanders should plan outside activities today with temperatures expected to reach into the low 80s.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the warm trend should continue in the low 80s through Monday.

Tonight is predicted to be fair and mild with the mercury hovering in the upper 40s. Winds should travel west to northwesterly 10-15 mph.

Saturday's high of 75 fell short of the record high of 95 set in 1943 while the overnight low of 46 was seven degrees warmer than the record of 39 set in 1937.

Teachers fight for salaray increases five months of Social Security payments. The remaining seven months, from January through August, were not budgeted.

Many teachers think the district has continued to put its part of the payments into some kind of salary or benefits or that those payments are sitting in escrow. Furgeson said the $900,060 "saved" for the seven months of not making Social Security payments was never even budgeted.

"Though many of us (teachers) are glad to be out (of the Social Security program), we lost a substantial part of our benefits, and, for some, our major form of insurance," Mogford said. "Since these funds were initially designated for teachers, it seems appropriate to return them."

"It creates bad morale if teachers feel they have to pay for the shortfalls of others," Dennis, a teacher at Lee Freshman High School and chairman of the Teachers Communications Committee, said.

Reinstatement of the 6.65 percent of Social Security payments in cash into teachers' paychecks would help beginning teachers by raising the amount of their paychecks, Mogford said. Older teachers who are more concerned about retirement benefits could use the additional money to deposit in another type of retirement program.

"Teachers are chronically trying to combat last year's inflation," Dennis said.

"THE FALLACY OF THAT is we never have caught up since 1976 or 1978," Mogford agreed.

The proposed salary schedule for the 1982-83 school year, recommended by Dr. James H. Mailey, MISD superintendent, and supported by teachers, includes an increase in starting salaries for teachers with a bachelor's degree and no experience from $13,504 to $14,665.

With the reinstatement of the 6.65 percent of Social Security payments, beginning teachers with a bachelor's degree and no experience would receive $15,626.

The approved 1982-83 salary for beginning teachers with a bachelor's degree and no experience in the Andrews Independent School District is $17,973.

Beginning teachers in the MISD who have a master's degree and no experience would receive a salary increase from $14,454 to $15,682 if the recommended salary schedule for 1982-83 is adopted. With reinstatement of the requested Social Security payments, those teachers would receive $16,730. The Andrews school district pays teachers with the same degree and experience $19,111.

Starting salary is important in the recruitment of teachers, Mogford said. The raises during the steps of the salary schedule are important in retaining experienced teachers.

The state salary schedule, which provides a base amount to be paid to teachers, has some inconsistencies, the three teachers said. MISD is currently paying 32 percent above that base.

"But we are tied to the state schedule," Dennis said. "There are several slumps in the schedule, and when they try to correct those slumps, they create other slumps."

"You may say you are paying $5,000 above the base to starting teachers, but after they've been there five years, they may be receiving only $6,000 above the base," Leeper, a teacher at Midland High School, agreed.

"ANY RAISE we ask for should be based on inflation and the years of experience," Dennis said.

If the reinstatement of the 6.65 percent of Social Security is approved by the school board, Leeper said 1982 taxes would increase only three cents to 73 cents per 100 percent valuation.

"That would be the lowest tax rate, with one exception, in five years," Dennis added.

From 1977 through 1980, taxes were based on a 75 percent valuation. Using a 100 percent valuation in the previous years would have had Midland taxpayers paying 87.8 cents in 1977, 90 cents in 1978, 94.5 cents in 1979, 66.8 cents in 1980 and 70 cents in 1981, Dennis said.

"Each cent of tax rate brings in $300,000," Mogford said. "The inflation rate should raise taxes 5.74 cents just to break even. We're only asking for three cents."

With teachers leaving the classrooms in order to work at higher salaries elsewhere, "oldtimers" like Mogford, Leeper and Dennis are worried.

"What is the incentive for getting young people in Midland besides a job?" Mogford asked. As an example, he said that a teacher most likely will continue teaching if she is married to a farmer in a basically farming-oriented community. She is tied to the community because her husband is tied to his land. And in such a situation, there probably aren't many other career choices for that woman, he explained.

"But in places that are progressive and competitive for workers, like Midland, that same competition is involved in the recruitment of teachers," Mogford said.

Although Dr. Duane Moore, MISD director of human resources, said out-of-state recruitment of teachers has been successful, the lack of local applicants worries Mogford, Leeper and Dennis.

WHEN AN ENGLISH teacher resigned in October there were only two applicants for the job, both from out-of-town, Mogford said. The one who accepted the job was already planning to move to Midland because her husband had been transferred here.

Some teachers, who wished to remain unidentified, have expressed a concern about the recruitment of a majority of teachers from northern states. According to these teachers, they are worried about the union-oriented philosophies prominant in northern states. These teachers said they feel there is a need to "maintain a staff who represents the Texas way of life and are compatible with the political philosophy of the area."

When asked about this issue, Mogford said it was a definite possibility but hastened to add that the Texas Constitution forbids teachers to strike.

According to an article in an Abilene newspaper, a phrase has been coined for the estimated 8,000 teachers who quit their jobs when school was let out last summer.

The phrase is "silent strikers."

Palestinian autonomy seems doubtful

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's withdrawal today from the Egyptian Sinai completes the difficult first stage of the 1978 Camp David peace accords, but the second phase, Palestinian autonomy, is proving even more agonizing.

Negotiations to establish some sort of self-government for the 1.3 million Palestinians in Israeli-occupied Arab territories have been stalled for months.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. proposes to break the deadlock by inviting the foreign ministers of both Egypt and Israel to Washington sometime in May, according to informed sources.

While skepticism is widespread that an autonomy agreement will ever be possible — because of the distrust and suspicion that Palestinians and Israelis harbor toward one another — the Reagan administration proposes at least one more all-out effort.

The status of the negotiations has sunk so low that Israeli and Egyptian leaders haven't been able to agree on where to meet, with the Israelis insisting on Jerusalem, and Egypt refusing because of Israel's attempt to annex former Arab East Jerusalem.

The prospect for successful negotiations has been further dimmed by Israel's bombing of Palestinian enclaves in Lebanon last week, and Israel's ouster of three elected mayors of West Bank towns last month.

The mayors were supporters of the Palestinian Liberation Organization and their dismissal resulted in some of the most violent Palestinian protests in years.

Israel, for its part, fears that Egypt will lack an incentive to negotiate meaningfully on Palestinian autonomy once it has the Sinai back. However, President Hosni Mubarak has in recent days reaffirmed his commitment to the Camp David process.

The autonomy talks between Egypt and Israel have been held sporadically since President Reagan took office, and Israeli sources in particular blame this partly on the administration's early focus on U.S. security interests in the Mideast, rather than on the Arabi-Israeli dispute.

Haig earlier this year appointed an aide, Richard Fairbanks, as his special envoy for Mideast negotiations, but diplomatic sources say Fairbanks' inexperience in the region has so far hampered his effectiveness.

The last talks, which proved fruitless, were in Cairo in early March. Subsequent sessions were postponed because of the disagreement over where to hold them.

Egypt has agreed to Haig's proposed Washington meeting, but Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has so far resisted because he feels Jerusalem should not be ignored as an acceptable site for negotiations and none have been held there.

However, Haig is said to be determined to bring the parties together to try to give the talks some new impetus. U.S. sources expect him to make a visit to the region if that would help.

Sol Linowitz, former special Mideast negotiator under President Carter, believes the administration has moved too slowly since taking office on the whole issue of autonomy, losing the momentum achieved during the Carter administration.

"Time is not on the side of peace," he said in an interview Friday. "The situation is a tinder box, and unless it is dealt with promptly and with a real degree of urgency, the situation will deteriorate."

But Linowitz also voiced optimism that agreement will be reached because, he said, it is in the interests of all sides to settle the Palestinian issue and the Camp David accords provide the only existing framework for doing it.

The 1978 Camp David peace accords between Egypt and Israel, and witnessed by the United States, charted a two-stage effort to end decades of Arab-Israeli fighting and transform the region into "a model for coexistence and cooperation among nations."

The first stage was to negotiate a separate Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty and the return of the Israeli-occupied Sinai to Egypt. Today's withdrawal completes this phase.

The second phase is supposed to be a Palestinian autonomy agreement among Israel, Egypt and Jordan, with the United States acting as a full negotiating partner. The agreement is to provide for an elected self-governing authority for the Palestinians on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The authority would govern for a period not to exceed five years, during which additional negotiations would be held to determine the final status of the West Bank and Gaza.

But the problems complicating the autonomy negotiations have been legion. Among them: Israeli objections to allowing the Arab residents of East Jerusalem to vote in autonomy elections, differences between Egypt and Israel on the definition of autonomy, and the extent of powers the authority should have — with Egypt favoring more and Israel favoring less.

In addition, Jordan has steadfastly refused to join the negotiations, and the large majority of the Palestinians, whose cooperation is required to make any autonomy plan successful, has opposed the entire process.

A U.S. official, who requested anonymity, said Israel's refusal to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organization and its inability to find anyone else with influence among the Palestinians to negotiate with is "the bottom line of the problems."

Even if the Egyptians and Israelis work out a plan, he said, "we are a long way from autonomy if we don't have anyone from the Palestinian side" who supports it.

But Linowitz said he thinks there are moderate leaders among the Palestinians who will support a reasonable plan. The important thing, he said, is to get on with the negotiations with strong U.S. backing. If there is going to be any progress under Camp David "it must be this year," he said.

Castro: Cuban model better for Latin America

By GEORGE GEDDA

WASHINGTON — Cuban President Fidel Castro says President Reagan's Caribbean Basin initiative is an attempt to turn that entire region into another Puerto Rico, where American-sponsored development efforts have "failed totally and absolutely."

In a previously unpublished interview on March 26, a partial text of which was released Saturday, Castro said the countries of Central America and the Caribbean would be better off if they followed the Cuban model rather than relying on the Reagan program.

Castro's glowing account of the achievements of his revolution, particularly in health and education, contrasted sharply with Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s statement last week that Cuba is an "economic shambles."

Haig said Cuba's economic problems are such that Castro is "anguishing" over whether he should align himself more with the West at the expense of his close ties with the Soviet Union.

In the interview, Castro indicated his 23-year old experiment has worked quite well.

"Cuba, without any Alliance for Progress, without any Caribbean Basin initiative, has a better social situation than any other country in Latin America," Castro said.

"We have no drugs, we have no gambling, we have no prostitution, we have no beggars, we have no unemployment," he said.

U.S. officials said the latter claim was inaccurate, citing independent sources who contend that 150,000 Cubans are unemployed out of a population of 10 million.

The interview, the first with an American since 1979, was conducted by Randall Robinson, exective director of TransAfrica, a black American group which advocates liberal U.S. policies in Africa and the Caribbean. The interview appeared in the organization's new publication, TransAfrica Forum Issue Brief.

Castro's overall tone toward the United States generally was moderate. He reaffirmed his support for Mexico's efforts to bring the United States and Cuba into a dialogue but said "one would not be able to even dream" about improved relations if the United States were to pursue an "interventionist path" in Central America.

He made no reference to U.S. allegations of Cuban weapons shipments to rebels in El Salvador and elsewhere.

His harshest comments were directed at Reagan's Caribbean Basin plan, which attempts to promote development through trade preferences, investment incentives and economic assistance. His comments indicated an intimate knowledge of details of the program.

Castro was particularly scornful of the administration's initial proposal for $350 million in balance of payments assistance for the region, most of it earmarked for Central America.

"Actually, this amount of resources would not solve the problems of even one country (in the region)," he said.

The program is aimed at assisting more than 30 countries but the problems of Haiti alone could not be solved with an amount 10 times larger than what Reagan has proposed for the entire region, Castro said.

The Alliance for Progress, begun during the Kennedy administration in 1961, was far more ambitious but "no problems have been solved; they have sharpened," Castro said.

City Council to take steps to execute water agreement bond sale, he said the water rates would have to be increased to pay for the higher costs that CRMWD will be charging Midland for its water.

Odessa's rates went up in January, he said, and Midland comes due for its rate hike a year later. "The high cost of power to pump the water is the reason rates are going up so dramatically."

In the case of Odessa, Acting City Manager Chester Nolen said the total bond sale would be an estimated $26 million, of which $10 million would be for water treatment plant additions. Four sewer extension and improvement projects of $4 million each also are contemplated by Odessa. The CRMWD board agreed to be the issuing agency.

In both cases, the cities should save money by not having to provide bond coverage, according to a CRMWD spokesman. Fee for issuing the bonds will be one-half of 1 percent, plus a negligible annual charge for payment of bonds, bookkeeping and other services.

Midland conceivably could be in a position to talk about issuing bonds by June although the timetable could run as late as August. Lowe said the timetable depends upon when the Texas Water Commission issues Midland it's permit.

Odessa's projects haven't been firmed yet, although they are fairly clear, according to the CRMWD spokesman.

The District and Midland will use First Southwest Corporation as fiscal agent.

In other action last week, the CRMWD agreed to pay $4,840 for a 4.84 acre tract near the northwest part of Midland on which the district has a pump station. Until now, the land has been leased.

President P.C. Harbour of Odessa has called a meeting of the Long Range Planning Committee for 10 a.m. Thursday at district headquarters in Big Spring to review unprecedented first quarter demands by cities served by the district.

Pampa woman injured in riding accident

A 23-year-old Pampa woman was reported to be in satisfactory condition in Midland Memorial Hospital late Saturday night after a riding accident at the Horton Ranch in southeast Midland County.

Gail Adams suffered lacerations to the forehead and face with a possible back and skull fracture when, according to the Midland Fire Department, she was thrown from a horse about 5 p.m. Saturday.

Child accidently starts house fire

A fire which apparently was started by a child playing with matches caused heavy damage to a bedroom Saturday morning.

According to the Midland Fire Department, a bedroom and its contents were blazing at 10:45 a.m. Saturday at the home of Connie Hamm, 703 Sprayberry.

Smoke and heat damage occurred throughout the house, but no injuries were reported.

Editor's Report

observers have convinced me that most of the governments and people in this area favor the free world and the free enterprise system.

Communism has made little headway among the masses of Southeast Asia, even though the poverty level is about a tenth of ours. The people seem to understand they have a better chance to move ahead under the capitalist system. They have been appalled by the barbarism of the communists in Vietnam and Cambodia. They fear the growing Soviet naval power, extending from Vladivostok to the Indian Ocean. They want America to maintain a strong naval presence in Asian waters, though with the exception of Philippines President Marcos, none of the Southeast Asian leaders are disposed to make bases available to our 7th Fleet.

However, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), composed of Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and the Philippines, has played an important role in opposing Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia and the Vietnamese communist regime's attempt to dominate Indochina.

ASEAN was established in 1967 to promote economic cooperation among the five nations, but following the North Vietnamese conquest of South Vietnam and the invasion of Cambodia, the regional group became politically active. It succeeded in isolating Vietnam in the United Nations. The man who played a leading role in that move was our good friend Carlos Romulo, foreign minister of the Philippines. Let him tell you the remarkable story, as he related it to us during our recent visit to Manila.

"I am distressed that the West seems to be so very concerned about the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan, but so little concerned about the Vietnamese military occupation of Cambodia," he said. "They are twin problems. Both invasions were in violation of the United Nations Charter. Furthermore, the Vietnamese invaded Cambodia with the full support of the Soviet Union, whose Pacific fleet now has the use of the great naval base that America built at Cam Ranh Bay.

"Vietnam has become a member of the Comecon, the Moscow-controlled international communist organization headquartered in Europe. It is the first time an Asian nation, except for the Soviet puppet state of Mongolia, has become a member of the Comecon. Not even communist China is a member.

"If we allowed the Vietnamese invasion and occupation of Cambodia to go scott free, it would have set a dangerous precedent. They could do the same thing to any of us.

"So we, ASEAN, sponsored resolutions in the United Nations condemning Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia, calling for the withdrawal of its troops and rejecting its efforts to get the puppet regime it installed recognized as the government of Cambodia. The resolutions were approved overwhelmingly, with the non-aligned nations of Europe, Africa and Asia joining in.

"To understand the significance of that you must remember what happened at the meeting of the non-aligned nations in Havana in September, 1979. Those nations made commitments, in effect, to follow the baton of Fidel Castro, who succeeded Tito of Yugoslavia as leader of the non-aligned group. When, a few months later, in December, the Soviets invaded Afghanistan, the non-aligned nations deserted Castro to support a resolution condemning Russia and calling for the withdrawal of its troops. They did the same when we introduced the resolutions to isolate Vietnam. That is something to remember when you look on the United Nations as a useless organization."

To sum up: Asia offers America a great challenge and a great opportunity.

A challenge to our industries to compete with quality products.

A challenge to our workers to increase productivity and a challenge to the union leaders to get in step with our country's interests — not their own.

An opportunity to our country to share in the economic benefit of what is foreseen as the coming Century of the Pacific.

Portrait of potential assassin still sought

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Since the shooting of President Reagan nearly 13 months ago, his young attacker has been under a psychiatric microscope awaiting the day when a jury weighs his sanity and his future.

And now, as the trial for John W. Hinckley Jr. begins on Tuesday, the insights will be shared with a public that has learned little about Hinckley since the first nervous days after the wounding of Reagan, press secretary James Brady, a Secret Service agent and a city police officer.

Hinckley sees himself as "The Lovesick Assassin." To his parents, "John is a sick boy." Federal prosecutors look on him simply as a gunman who "attempted to deprive four people of their lives by shooting them with Devastator bullets."

HIS LAWYERS have conceded in court there is no question that he did the shooting, but they hope to convince the jury in the coming weeks that he was insane and not responsible for his action.

Hinckley

Hinckley's justification for the assassination attempt on March 30 a year ago remains uncontested. The 26-year-old loner, who thinks Reagan "is the best president we've had in this century," shot that president to prove his love for a teen-aged movie star who spurned his advances.

Occasional pre-trial court appearances have yielded no more from him than polite responses of "Yes, sir," and "No, sir." He has revealed a little of himself, in letters to news publications and, as in the above quotation, by answering written questions he had solicited from a magazine. It is known he twice attempted suicide in prison — once with an overdose of tranquilizers and an aspirin substitute and once by hanging — but not why.

One only has to go back a year, to that rainy last Monday of March, when Hinckley sat in his room at the downtown Park Central Hotel and penned a letter to actress Jodie Foster.

"There is a definite possibility that I will be killed in my attempt to get Reagan," he said. "It is for this very reason that I am writing you this letter now. As you well know, I love you very much."

The letter was timed at 12:45 p.m. Shortly after 2, Hinckley was bunched with reporters and onlookers, waiting for the president to emerge after a speech to a labor group.

At 2:27 p.m., as Reagan walked out of the VIP entrance of the Washington Hilton Hotel, six shots rang out in 1.2 seconds. Reagan was hit under the left arm by a bullet that apparently ricocheted off the side of his limousine and passed through the space between the open door and the car body. The slug traveled within an inch of the president's heart and lodged in his left lung.

Secret Service Agent Tim McCarthy was hit in the abdomen; Thomas Delahanty, a Washington police officer, was struck in the back of the neck.

A FOURTH SHOT did the most damage — piercing Brady's brain. He was on the verge of death when he reached the hospital. Even after eight months in the hospital and a series of major operations, Brady remains partly paralyzed, impaired in memory and speech. Delahanty was forced to retire by persistent pain.

Shot five struck the limousine. The sixth lodged in a building across the street.

Hinckley was pinned down and taken into custody. His .22-caliber revolver, a Saturday Night Special, was traced quickly to Rocky's Pawn Shop in Dallas where he had bought it.

It didn't take much longer to trace Hinckley. A portrait emerged:

A rootless drifter reared in privilege, with an overachiever brother and a popular sister; a young man who would spend hours in a series of seedy rented apartments with shades drawn, subsisting on hamburgers and television; a brooder who was caught in an airport screening with cheap handguns he had bought in pawnshops, was relieved of them, and bought some more.

An ineffectual student who spent seven years at Texas Tech University without earning a degree; a cross-country wanderer, one of those people no one ever pays much attention to.

And mostly, a young man who became smitten with Jodie Foster after seeing her portray a 12-year-old prostitute in the 1976 film "Taxi Driver." In that role, Miss Foster — actually 14 at the time — rejects the reform efforts of a psychotic cabbie named Travis Bickle, provoking him to violence.

Hinckley said he identified with Bickle. Newsweek asked him last fall why he bought so many handguns.

"BECAUSE TRAVIS bought so many handguns," Hinckley answered. "Ask him, not me."

He said his favorite scene has Travis and Jodie at breakfast.

Parker

"Their conversation is relevant to me because Travis keeps telling Jodie that he wants to help her escape all of these sordid characters that are ruining her, but she doesn't understand what he is talking about and resists him," Hinckley wrote. "I know exactly how Travis felt."

And, referring to himself as "The Lovesick Assassin," Hinckley wrote Time Magazine:

"We are a historical couple, like Napoleon and Josephine, and a romantic couple like Romeo and Juliet...Of course, on March 30, I made my love known to her in my own unique way."

Twelve jurors and six alternates to be chosen this week in the courtroom of U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker will hear much about Hinckley's obsession. Miss Foster, now 19 and a student at Yale University, has videotaped two hours of testimony, most likely detailing the letters and telephone calls she received from Hinckley.

The defendant is charged with attempting to assassinate the president and four counts of assault with intent to kill — all punishable by life in prison. There are eight lesser counts, including assault with a dangerous weapon.

The chief prosecutor is Roger Adelman, an assistant U.S. attorney. The defense team is headed by Vincent Fuller of the firm headed by famed Washington lawyer Edward Bennett Williams.

John and JoAnn Hinckley of Evergreen, Colo. reportedly are paying a half million dollars for their son's defense. The elder Hinckley owns a prosperous oil exploration firm; his other son, Scott, is president of the company.

Newsweek asked John Hinckley Jr. if a person accused of shooting a political leader in the United States can receive a fair trial.

No, said Hinckley, "the pretrial publicity itself almost guarantees that the jury and public cannot be impartial."

Braniff may cut routes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Braniff Airlines has told the Civil Aeronautics Board it may have to abandon its South American routes by midweek because of cash shortages, board officials said Saturday.

The move could cost the jobs of most of the 400 Braniff employees in Miami, gateway for many of the routes.

Braniff, which lost $160 million last year, asked the board to take immediate action on a proposal that would allow Braniff to lease the routes to Pan American World Airways in exchange for $30 million.

THE AIRLINE, in a petition filed late Friday, said traffic has fallen off on its routes to 11 cities in nine South American countries. Braniff also said it may face a "negative cash position" as early as Tuesday.

"When this happens, Braniff would be forced to shut down its South American operations," the airline said. Braniff lost $15 million on the routes last year.

The board on April 16 said the Pan Am-Braniff leasing proposal is "so complex and contested" that no immediate decision is possible. The board promised hearings on the matter and a decision no sooner than late July.

Spokesman Alan Pollock said Saturday that the board staff will consider the Braniff petition early Monday "to see whether any initial action is necessary."

In Miami, pilot Phil Bradley, a 17-year Braniff veteran, said airline employees were "stunned, flabbergasted, disappointed" at the suddenness of Braniff's move.

"They had a ray of hope that another carrier would come in here, pick up the routes and give them jobs," said Bradley, a spokesman for the Miami-area employees. "I consider this a ploy to ensure that Pan Am gets those routes."

Braniff said it had talked to other airlines but maintained Friday that Pan Am is the only airline that is able to assume all of Braniff's South American routes by midweek, when Braniff says it faces its critical cash problem.

President Reagan, in a letter to the board, urged immediate reconsideration of the Pan Am-Braniff leasing arrangement. In a formal petition, the Transportation Department said delay by the board "runs the risk" of Braniff pulling out of the South American market and the United States losing the routes to a foreign carrier.

Interest rates pique Reagan's interest

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday that "the dike is beginning to go" and interest rates for home mortgages are coming down.

"They're really out there competing," Reagan said of mortgage lenders after reading through the real estate section of The Washington Post.

The president made the observation during an informal chat in his office as he prepared to deliver his weekly five-minute radio address. In the live radio message, Reagan said current interest rates "shouldn't be higher than 10 percent" given the present inflation rate and a fair return on the lender's investment.

He blamed the higher prevailing rates on lenders' fears that inflation "will take off again."

The president cited three instances of sharp reductions in interest rates on new car loans and said, "This could be the start of something big."

But Sen. Alan Cranston of California, who delivered the Democratic response to Reagan's radio talk, blamed the high interest rates on the Federal Reserve Board's tight money policy, which Reagan supports.

And sharing none of the optimism Reagan expressed both privately and publicly, Cranston said, "The harsh reality is that President Ronald Reagan is presiding over the decline of the American republic.

"He's not merely presiding over the decline; he is leading it...not because he wants us to decline, not because it serves some secret purpose, but because it is the inevitable, unavoidable and accelerating consequence of his public policies and his personal philosophy."

A few minutes before Reagan went on the air, he said a few words to give engineers a voice level, enabling them to set their amplifying equipment before he went live. The remarks were recorded by Associated Press Radio, which was receiving the signal.

"My fellow Americans," he said, "I'd like to talk about three items today, beginning with taxes, ending with taxes, and ending with taxes."

"I won't really say that," he assured those in the Oval Office. The three items he actually addressed were tax dodgers, tuition tax credits and interest rates.

"Listen," he continued, "I've got a whole bundle of papers today that I took out of the real estate section of the Post. The dike is beginning to go.

"The interest rates: all the ads — almost all of them...I'm not going to say they're down where they should be, but down, some as low as 10 percent. There's one 7-and something (percent) for a while and then it goes up some, but 12, 13 percent. Y'know they've been running around 17 percent for real estate mortgages. They're really out there competing."

BB gun punishment gets its just rewards

DETROIT (AP) — A man who shot his 9-year-old son with a BB gun for disobedience and taunted the boy with cries of "Pow! Pow!" has been sentenced to 2½ to 10 years in prison.

Arthur V. Thompson, 35, pleaded guilty Friday to a charge of child torture but told the Detroit Recorders Court: "I may have committed an act of child torture, but I am not a child torturer...I'm sorry and I just don't know how it happened."

Jury finds dead man innocent

GREAT FALLS, Mont. (AP) — A jury found a man innocent of drunken driving and guilty of striking other vehicles and fleeing the scene of an accident. Fifteen minutes after judgment, the court discovered that defendant Kermit H. Hines had been dead for nearly two months.

City Judge Robert Tucker called the proceedings "rather bizarre," and said he will reopen the case, dismiss all charges and return to Hines' estate the bond money forfeited when Hines didn't show up for the trial Thursday.

Rumored missile siting announced

DENVER (AP) — Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., says she expects the Pentagon to announce within a few weeks the interim basing of 40 MX missiles in Minuteman silos in Colorado, Wyoming and Nebraska.

Ms. Schroeder said she based her views on conversations she has had with Pentagon officials. She spoke Friday after an Air Force helicopter tour of proposed sites.

Abducted woman, child alive following Friday abduction

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — The abducted wife and 1-year-old daughter of a rural bank manager were found alive Saturday afternoon, said Nancy McGugan, a spokeswoman for the Thurston County Sheriff's Office.

Further details were not immediately available.

The discovery was made after Douglas Patterson, 35, manager of the South Sound National Bank in Grand Mound, pleaded at a news conference for the kidnapper to reopen contact.

"My purpose is to talk to the person I know as 'Dave' about my concern and his concern for the position we are in at this point," he said.

His wife, Connie, 33, daughter, Jana, who celebrated her first birthday Friday, and a second daughter, Julia, 4, were abducted Friday afternoon from their home in Salkum, about 45 miles south of Olympia.

Julia was found Friday night, wandering unharmed at a gravel pit near Interstate 5 near Olympia.

Patterson had talked with the abductor seven or eight times through the night and followed instructions to go to a number of telephone booths in the Olympia area. He lost contact, he said, at about 1:30 a.m. Saturday when he got lost and missed a telephone rendezvous.

He said at the news conference that he was trying to find a way to get "Dave" the money he sought. The amount demanded was not revealed.

The Pattersons have been married 12 years and have five children, all under 11. Three other children were at home during the abduction but were not taken.

Patterson said "Dave" was "a polite person, has good composure, appears to be well educated and seems to have things together. He used no gutter language. He made no threats."

Officials declined to reveal details of the abduction, except to say that Mrs. Patterson and the two children were taken in the family automobile.

The car was found Saturday morning at the Capital Mall Shopping Center in Olympia, FBI agent Allen Whitaker said.

Ohio politician dead

NEWARK, Ohio (AP) — Rep. John M. Ashbrook, an outspoken conservative who represented Ohio in Congress since 1961, died Saturday of massive internal bleeding, a coroner said. Ashbrook was 53.

Licking County Coroner Dr. Robert Raker, who performed an initial autopsy, said a preliminary finding indicated the cause of death was massive hemorrhaging in the stomach and bowels.

Raker said more tests will be performed to determine the cause of the bleeding, with the results expected in about two weeks.

Earlier reports from Dr. Edward Carlin, emergency room physician at Licking Memorial Hospital here, indicated Ashbrook suffered an apparent heart attack at his apartment-office in Johnstown. Ashbrook was pronounced dead at the hospital at 12:28 p.m.

Ashbrook's physician, Dr. Robert Young of Johnstown, said one of the congressman's aides notified him just after 11 a.m. Saturday that Ashbrook had fainted. Young arrived within minutes and said he detected "no productive heartbeat."

Ashbrook was the leading candidate for the Ohio Republican Party's nomination for the U.S. Senate this year.

Ashbrook, who represented Ohio's east-central 17th District, was a staunch conservative.

"John Ashbrook was a man of courage and principle," President Reagan said in a statement. "...His patriotism and deep belief in the greatness of America never wavered, and his articulate and passionate calls for a return to old-fashioned American values earned him the respect of all who knew him."

Massachusetts port finds severe chemical troubles

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — New studies on the toxic PCBs that line the bottom of New Bedford harbor — home to the richest fishing fleet on the East Coast — indicate the contamination is far worse than suspected, officials say.

Federal and state officials say the harbor contains one of the nation's worst concentrations of the suspected carcinogen. Gov. Edward King is expected to issue an executive order this week calling for a full state investigation of the PCB problem and potential cleanup options.

"My people say to me, 'The harbor's so clean looking. Why are we worried?'" said state Rep. Roger Goyette, D-New Bedford, who heads a harbor cleanup committee.

"How do you convince people that something you can't see, can't smell, can kill them? And these new tests show we've got one of the worst problems in the world."

THE UNSEEN hazard is a chemical family called polychlorinated biphenyls — PCBs — once used an an electrical coolant. About 100 tons of PCBs cling to the bottom of New Bedford Harbor, slowly moving into the food chain and possibly migrating out to sea toward Buzzard's Bay, the waters of Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard and the rich fishing areas of the Georges Bank.

PCBs, manufactured from 1929 until a U.S. ban in 1977, are resistent to acids, bases and other chemical agents, making them ideal as cooling agents for transformers and capacitators, but a nightmare for the environment because they won't go away except through high-temperature incineration.

Fishing in New Bedford's inner harbor has been banned since 1979 due to the contamination.

Three new studies released within the last month showed the contamination is far more serious than previously suspected:

—Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute found PCB levels in harbor mussels of 22 parts per million, compared with 0.4 to 8 parts in another well-known PCB "hot spot," the San Pedro section of Los Angeles Harbor. John Farrington of Woods Hole said the New Bedford reading is the highest on the East or West coasts since the "mussel watch" began in 1975, and is one of the highest in the world.

—The Massachusetts Department of Public Health found that nine people exposed to PCBs at work had blood and urine readings averaging 126 parts per billion. There is no federal safety level for PCBs in blood, but federal officials say 99 percent of the country's population has PCB levels below 30 parts per billion.

—The same department found that four children in Fairhaven who lived or played near a park within a few hundred yards of the harbor have developed leukemia. A town Fairhaven's size — about 16,000 — normally could expect one leukemia case per decade. Three additional cases have been found in surrounding towns, and two of the youngsters frequently played in the park. The state began an investigation last week to look for a possible link to the PCBs.

TWO NEW BEDFORD companies, Aerovox Industries Inc. and Cornell-Dubilier Electronics, used PCBs extensively in their electrical manufacturing for more than 30 years, according to state officials. They say the companies dumped tons of the chemical waste into the Acushnet River, which feeds into the harbor. That was before environmental laws were tightened; the dumping was not illegal.

Several calls by The Associated Press to both companies went unanswered.

Aerovox and Cornell-Dubilier have been named in two suits by fishermen, who seek $45 million in damages on grounds that the PCB discharges have damaged the lobster industry.

Scientists have found that even at low levels, PCBs accumulate in human and animal tissue and cause birth defects, gastric disorders, tumors and liver problems in laboratory animals. PCBs are detectable in human mothers' milk.

The estimated cost of cleaning up the harbor continues to mount. State officials pegged the bill at more than $50 million in 1980, a consulting firm last July said it would take $130 million to remove 90 percent and Goyette now puts the latest estimate at $200 million.

California, Arkansas areas eligible for disaster funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan declared parts of California and Arkansas disaster areas Saturday to enable residents in those states to qualify for federal relief funds.

The president's action was prompted by severe storms and tornadoes that struck in Arkansas on April 2 and a firestorm that swept through a residential neighborhood of Anaheim in southern California on Wednesday.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency said the declaration will make it possible to provide mobile homes to tornado victims in Arkansas, and temporary housing, loans and grants to the homeless in Anaheim.

An estimated 1,500 people lost their homes when fire destroyed a square mile of apartment complexes in Anaheim in Orange County, Calif. No one was killed in the blaze, which began when two power lines brushed together in high winds and ignited a dry palm tree.

Agency spokesman Bob Blair said money from the president's Disaster Relief Fund would be used to provide temporary housing for the Anaheim homeless, loans by the Small Business Administration to over uninsured losses in private homes and businesses, and maximum $5,000 grants to families not aided by state or local programs.

Traditionally, the average grant is about $2,500, with the agency paying 75 percent and the state, 25 percent. SBA loans are repayable.

Disillusion with Reaganomics behind party quitters?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wisconsin Gov. Lee S. Dreyfus is the fifth Midwest Republican to announce that he would not seek re-election, a development that Democrats say reflects public disenchantment with President Reagan's economic policies.

"It's not a coincidence," said Ann Lewis, political director for the Democratic National Committee. "Our greatest target of opportunity is in the Midwest."

Ms. Lewis' partisan assessment of the situation places President Reagan's economic policies at the core of the retirement decisions by the five Republicans.

From an equally partisan viewpoint, Republican Party Chairman Richard Richards said, "I would not read into it (the retirements) any foreboding for the Republican Party...I don't think they left because they were worried about the future."

But he acknowledged that the departure of incumbents would make it "a little bit harder" for the party to retain control of those governorships.

Dreyfus on Friday announced his decision to retire after a single four-year term. "We choose to return to private life," he said.

Republican Gov. Albert Quie of Minnesota also is bowing out after four years.

But Republican Govs. Robert Ray of Iowa and William Milliken of Michigan had far greater longevity. Each will retire in January after 14 years in office.

The fifth Republican, James Rhodes of Ohio, barred from seeking a third consecutive term as governor, has held that office for 16 of the last 20 years.

It was widely thought that Rhodes would challenge Democratic Sen. Howard Metzenbaum in November. Instead, the governor chose to bow out of elective politics.

Of the 50 state governors, 27 are Democrats and 23 Republicans. Thirty-six governorships will be contested this year. Twenty are now held by Democrats and 16 by Republicans.

Of the five GOP governors not seeking re-election, three are from states with severe economic problems and the other two were early advocates of Reagan's economic program and tried to implement it on the state level.

Department of Labor figures for February showed Michigan with an unemployment rate of 16.1 percent, Ohio at 12.2 and Iowa at 10.2. The unemployment rate for Wisconsin was 9.5 percent and for Minnesota it was 7.7 — the only one of the five that was below the national average.

Ironically, it was the GOP governor of Minnesota who was in the most obvious political trouble. Quie took office in 1978 and reduced state taxes and cut social programs. So far, the result has been a budget deficit of $700 million and growing public disenchantment.

Quie was under strong Republican pressure to retire when he announced his decision to devote more time "to God and my family."

Dreyfus also cut taxes and the state budget and ended with a budget deficit. He took office four years ago critical of his Democratic predecessors for allowing a $900 million surplus to accumulate in the state treasury.

Rhodes is a contentious partisan who has been involved in elective politics in Ohio for a generation. Many observers were surprised by his decision not to challenge Metzenbaum or even run for his old job of state auditor.

"I have every intention of staying deeply involved in the affairs of Ohio's government," said the 72-year-old governor.

In the cases of Ray and Milliken, both men were regarded as retaining a popularity that placed them "above politics."

"I would like to try new things," said Ray, a moderate who was never in favor with the Reagan White House.

Milliken was the only one who cited the economy in announcing his retirement.

"Michigan's economic problems in these extraordinary times are too serious to have a governor unable to devote his full energies to them, a governor suspected of putting political self-interest ahead of public interest, a governor preoccupied with months of campaigning," he said.

El Paso policemen, border patrolmen team up

By STEVE BREWER

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Illegal aliens and lawbreakers are being double-teamed by beat cops and federal agents.

El Paso police and U.S. Border Patrol officers have been paired into foot patrol teams and are walking beats in the busy downtown area. Officials say the patrols are having a chilling effect on downtown crime.

"For March, as compared to March 1981, we had a 32 percent reduction in reported crimes in the downtown area (during daylight hours)," said acting Border Patrol Chief Dale Cozart. "We don't claim credit for all of that, but we think the foot patrols have been a big factor."

The patrols are unique because they team Border Patrol officers with local police and because the border officers are walking a city beat rather than the normal patrolling by car or helicopter.

"Of course, the El Paso sector itself is unique..." Cozart said. "It's the only place along the border that has such a large population and large residential and business areas right on the border."

El Paso, with a population of more than 400,000 people, is separated from Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, by the Rio Grande. Juarez boasts nearly 1 million residents and the cities are so interrelated that Cozart refers to them as an "international metroplex."

The downtown areas of the two cities are pressed against the river directly across from one another, making it easy for illegal aliens to cross from one to another simply by wading across the river or walking across on stones. Once across, the alien simply blends into the crowds that keep downtown El Paso bustling.

Cozart said many of the crimes in the downtown area are committed by illegal aliens who can easily escape across the border. Capt. Bill Long of the El Paso Police Department said downtown is the city's highest crime area.

"Foot patrol arrests way more than car patrols," Long said. "With seven officers on the street, we're arresting nine to 10 people a day. And that's not counting the Border Patrol guy who might be picking up illegal aliens."

Cozart said the seven border patrolmen on the beats apprehended more than 2,200 illegal aliens since the program began in early February.

Although the combined program has been under way for less than three months, foot patrols downtown are not new, Long said.

In the 1970s, the police department kept as many as 30 officers on downtown beats thanks to a federal grant. But the money eventually ran out and the city couldn't afford to keep them going.

"It got skinnier and skinnier until we ended up with four or five officers on the street," Long said. "We just didn't have enough men. We had to do away with the foot patrol section.

"Immediately after we did away with it, we had a different type of crime in the downtown area. We started having aggravated robberies in downtown businesses — robberies at gunpoint. In downtown during the day, we usually didn't have that type of crime. People will tolerate some things, but that type of thing is not tolerable."

The Downtown Merchants Association demanded that the foot patrols be resumed.

Last November, the merchants convinced City Council to continue the patrols during the December holiday season when business — and traffic across the border — is at its peak.

State Senate District 25	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	How do you evaluate this area of government as contributing to the improvement of Midland County? (100 words)	What improvements would you recommend to achieve greater efficiency and/or effectiveness in the services of this area of government? (100 words)
Ernest Angelo (R)	Petroleum Engineer, Lousiaina State University, West Texas resident 26 years. Self employed. Life-long interest and involvement in government and politics. Mayor ofMidland four terms, 1972-80. Currently Republican National Committeeman for Texas. Former member Board of Directors Midland United Way, Chamber of Commerce, Boys' Club and Human Relations Council. Currently Board Member Midland Industrial Foundation and Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Texas College and University System.	The Texas Senate is a very important legislaitve body. There are only 31 members, giving an individual wide opportunity for leadetship. Acts of State government constantly impact Midland County either by direct effect of State laws or by neglect of State responsibilities. I believe that an effective and dedicated State Senator, who is committedto understanding the concerns and needss of the people of his District can materially benefit the District and the State, even when the District covers 38 counties as it does in our case. Leadershup ability will be the key to success. Without it, little can be accomplished.	A basic change in attitude is essential. Government, cannot solve all of our problems. Greater individual repsonsibility must be achieved. The rate of increase in spending must be slowed by bringng sound buisness and accounting practices to State governemt. Governor Clements has achieved a reversal in the trend as has President Reagan, proving it can be done. All of the god intentions in the world will not help if we bankrupt the system. Texas has always had a superior economic climate to encourage the private sector. That attitude has to be preserved and strengthened.
Bill Sims (D)	Worked in every county in district on water conservation/quality protection, environmental/farm/ranch problems, rural/urban youth programs (church, YMCA, 4-H, FFA), oil-related problems, on committees of West Tex. Chamber of Commerce, local Chamber, Methodist Church, COG, and at least 10 statewide committees. For 16 years worked directly with Texas Legislature, state/federal agencies and U.S. Congress. Past two years worked with over 100 local, state and national organizations on problems affecting 25th District.	The Texas Senate has a very great impact on Midland County. All appointment to State boards must be approved by the Senate. Almost every law passed by the Senate will have some direct or indirect effect on the local citizens. Some of the most important areas of concern would be public education, law enforcement, highway funding, public utilities, regulation of the petroleum industry and use of water.	I think the Texas Senate has been doing the job it is supposed to do. By election of qualified members the people of this state can insure that we have a free, democratic government that is based on the will of the people.

State Representative District 76	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	How do you evaluate this area of government as contributing to the improvement of Midland County? (100 words)	What improvements would you recommend to achieve greater efficiency and/or effectiveness in the services of this area of government? (100 words)
Tom Craddick (R)	Midland resident 30 years; attended Midland schools; received BBA and MBA from Texas Tech University in Finance. Married, two children, Christi and Tommy. Sales representative Midland Mud, Inc.; owner of Craddick Properties. Presently serving seventh term in State Legislature. Currently Chairman of House Natural Resources Committee; member of Energy Committee; Representative to National Conference of State Legislatures. Appointed by Speaker to represent Texas at numerous conferences concerning oil and gas regulation and other natural resources.	It is the State's responsibility to work with and help the County in serving the people.	The State had to pass a budget that will hold down on State spending and to integrate more cost control into government operations.

County Judge 238 District Court	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Vann Culp (D)	The experience of having served as judge of the 238th District Court since 1977. During the 21 years prior to assuming the bench I primarily handled the trial of all types of cases in the State and Federal courts.	Other than matters of experience, qualifications and dedication to the office, there are very few issues involved in the race for District Judge. The encouragement of members of the Bar Association, law enforcement officials, other citizens is probably one of the reasons that I decided to seek re-election.	The continued fair, impartial and speedy administration of justice.

County Judge 318 District Court	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Barbara Culver (R)	My professional experience includes having served as Judge of this Court since 1978, fifteen years as Midland County Judge and 10 years as a practicing attorney.	There are challenges in this office. As the population increases, so does the caseload. Working with the attorneys to get their cases to trial promptly is a rewarding part of this office.	It is my hope tht the 318 District Court is provided with a courtroom and adequate office space for conferences and the court staff when expansion of the courthouse takes place.

Judge — County Court at Law	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Willie B. DuBose	BBA Baylor University, LLB Baylor Law School, County Attorney, Midland County 1967-71, Judge, County Court at Law 1978 to present.	I know of no particular issues involved in judicial elections other than qualifications and experience. I believe that I am qualified by my legal background and training and that I have the experience to serve the citizens of Midland County.	I hope to be able to continue to keep abreast of the cases filed and to keep this court serving the citizens of the county.

County Clerk	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Rosenelle Cherry (D)	2 years College in Business Administration and 34 years experience in the County Clerk's Office.	Being County Clerk is a very rewarding position and I take great pride in serving the citizens of Midland County.	The goals that I hope to accomplish are to continue to give the citizens of Midland County the same type of service that they have received in the years past when Midland was a very small town.

District Clerk	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Madge Wallis (D)	Twelve years experience in the District Clerk's office, eight years as District Clerk. Business experience fifteen years as owner and manager. Education — Business College. Concerned and responsible in religious, community and civic activities.	During my terms of office we have maintained an ongoing program of reorganization and modernization. Consequently we have been able to handle a tremendous increase in work load and stay within the budget. Some of our innovations have reduced work time for the office by as much as 60%. Other revisions have eliminated the need for additional employees. I would like to continue to serve the people of Midland for another term and see to fruition the programs that have been innovated and that are now being planned.	To continue to render competent, capable, courteous, and reliable service to the people of Midland County.
Pat Cobb (R)	My experience has been in both public and private sectors of business. I am a certified legal assistant with 14 years legal experience. 8½ years as legal secretary to the district attorney and 2½ years administrative secretary to Sheriff and 3 years in private law practice. I was office manager for 2½ years for a local accounting firm. I attend Midland College in the evenings and am working toward a degree in Management.	This office should be reorganized in order to more efficiently accommodate the needs of Midland County citizens in their dealings with our three district courts. The standards and procedures of this office should be raised and performed as those of other cities of comparable population and size as that of Midland.	To train personnel with specialized duties to expedite the procedures of this office.
Vivian Wood (R)	I worked in the District Clerk's Office here in Midland County as Lead Deputy Clerk and Executive Secretary for the Seventh Administrative Judicial District. I have worked in the business world most of my adult life and attended Business College and Junior College after High School. I feel my experience in the Clerk's Office qualifies me for this position.	The office is being run as it was decades ago. Management has been unable to properly serve the increase in the work load occasioned by additional courts. This is evidenced by a high turnover in personnel and too many errors. Good businesslike management needs to be brought to the office to improve the efficiency and thus save taxpayer dollars.	Our Court system is the basis for our freedom and as taxpayers we deserve to have it operate effectively and efficiently. I plan to reorganize this office and it will operate more efficiently and better serve our three District Courts and the people of Midland County.

Justice of the Peace Precint 1, Place 1	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Robert H. Pine (D)	Midland County resident since 1947. Owned and operated Pine office equipment until 3 years ago. I have worked hard as your Justice of the Peace and feel that I deserve your vote and support. Have attended Texas A&M, Lamar University and Southwest State University for in-service Training Programs for 16 years. On Board of Directors of Council on Alcoholism and other Civic Activities. Past President of Downtown Lions Club.	I was asked to seek appointment to this office when my good friend David M. Ellis died, by friends that felt that I would be fair and operate the office as I have tried to do for the past 17 years.	I hope to continue the work that I have been doing to the best of my ability.
Bob J. Coonce (R)	The following serves to qualify me for the office of Justice of the Peace: I have worked as a law enforcement officer, attended seminars in Criminology and Illegal Search and Seizure, public relations seminars conducted by the University of Texas, Church work, worked with young people, and volunteer for the American Heart Association.	The Judiciary Department of government is of primary importance to citizens seeking fair, impartial judgement, either civil or criminal. Convenience and ready access to a competent court must be guaranteed to each citizen. The office of Justice of the Peace is but one link in the Judiciary chain charged with the responsibility to assure due process of the law, protecting the rights of citizens, victims and those accused.	I hope to accomplish the following: A continuing study of moderm methods of operation; putting into practice those which are realistic, economical and time-saving; around-the-clock availability, prompt, fair and courteous treatment of one and all; full cooperation with all law enforcement agencies and branches of government.

County Attorney	What qualifies you for this position?-Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Scott Henderson (R)	NO RESPONSE	NO RESPONSE	NO RESPONSE

County Treasurer	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What issues prompted you to run? (100 words)	What immediate goals do you hope to accomplish in this office? (100 words)
Dee Thompson (D)	More than twenty-three years experience in this office plus twenty years experience in office management, bookkeeping, insurance, real estate and all phases of business procedure.	There are no great issues involved in the office of County Treasurer, since it is not an administrative nor a policy making office. It is a position of trust calling for a person who is capable, honest and experienced. I enjoy my work very much and feel honored to serve Midland Countyin this position.	To continue the same courteous and efficient service to the employees of Midland County and to the citizens of Midland County that this office has provided in the past.

County Judge	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experience, community service, etc. (75 words)	What immediate goals would you expect to accomplish during your term in office? (100 words)	What do you feel are the most important issues facing the Commissioners' Court during your term? (100 words)
William B. Ahders (R)	I am qualified for the postition by experience; 4 years as County Judge, 11 years as Municipal Judge, and 18 years as Special Agent for the FBI; and by education having received a BBA and Juris Doctorate degrees from the University of Montana.	My goals in office are to continue to maintain the highest judicial standards in County Court; to solve the effluent problems we have in Midland and Monahans Draw; to up-grade the "window pane" area of South Midland to urban standards and to attract and keep the high quality peronnel needed to provide services to a burgeoning population.	The main issue faced by Midland County government is whether or not we dedicate ourselves to meet the problems of growth with long term solutions or use patchwork remedies until we are overwhelmed. I shall continue my efforts to anticipate our future problems and to arrive at solutions before they become critical.
County Commissioner Precinct 4	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experiences, community service, etc. (75 words)	What immediate goals would you expect to accomplish during your term in office? (100 words)	What do you feel are the most important issues facing the Commissioners' Court during your term? (100 words)
Winfree L. Brown (R)	BBA Degree in Personnel Management and I am in my 12th year as a County Commissioner. I have been active in various community service programs. I have also attended numerous seminars related to county government and its operations.	I hope to get certain legislation passed by the Texas Legislature granting the Commissioners Courts ordinance-making powers to properly regulate subdivision growth, drainage and sanitation so as to protect the rural resident.	Courthouse expansion to alleviate crowded conditions in the courthouse offices and in the jail. Alternate funding for courthouse operations other than the ad valorem taxes. Sewage waste water disposition.
County Commissioner Precinct 2	What qualifies you for this position? Include education, business and professional experiences, community service, etc. (75 words)	What immediate goals would you expect to accomplish during your term in office? (100 words)	What do you feel are the most important issues facing the Commissioners' Court during your term? (100 words)
Charles R. Welch (D)	Experience in serving as your county commssioner qualifies me to seek another term in this office. I understand how to operate our county government in an economical manner, and will continue to see that we receive full value for every dollar spent.	My goal is to provide the best county government at the least possible cost to the taxpayer. We need to keep pace with demands created by our current growth, and to encourage new industry to locate in our county.	We are now working in the North Loop road around Midland; expansion of the county library; and planning adequate space for the tax office and other court house functions, with more parking for the public. We need to continue to improve our law enforcement and upgrade our county roads.
C. Wallace Craig (R)	B.S. degree (Economics), Univ. of Missouri. Petroleum marketer for 30 years, including 5 years as president of local oil firm dealing with the public, corporate budgets and personnel. Six years on Midland School Board (President, 1 year). Member, Midland Alliance. Elder, First Presbyterian Church. Director, Midland County Appraisal District. Director, Chamber of Commerce. Member, Midland Industrial Foundation. Director, Rotary Club. Midland resident, 21 years. Desire to work for betterment of entire community.	To fairly and impartially represent all residents of Precinct 2. Work for ever-improving relations among all members of the Commissioner's Court. Use my best efforts to develop greater cooperation between all of the governing bodies of the community without breaking my pledge to represent the residents of Precinct 2 with integrity, fairness and understanding. Direct particular attention to the needs and problems of all County employees with the aim of making the County a better place to work. Totally involve myself in finding solutions to problems (present and future) facing the Commissioner's court.	The sewage waste disposal problem with Ector County and the disposal of Midland's effluent water. Courthouse expansion. Library relocation. The growth of the entire community and the pressures this growth will place on Midland County to provide additional services and to assure orderly growth for the protection and well-being of everyone in the County. Problems must be anticipated before they occur in order to deal with them carefully and thoughtfully so that the best interests of everyone will be considered and protected as solutions are found and decisions made.
Carma Durham (R)	I have a high school education and I have owned and operated my own business and have held management positions for others. I have bookkeeping experience and I am a notary public.	I feel like the most important goal for me to accomplish during the next four years is a clean, fair, honest and upfront goverment in our county 365 days a year and to keep taxes at a minimum. The effluent water of Monahans Draw must have immediate attention so as not to contaminate our wells abd drinking water in Midland County.	The most important issues facing the Commissioners' Court during the next term are the effluent water, the courthouse expansion, and the county library. If we must expand the courthouse, let's expand and build in a manner as not to impose a tax burden on the people of Midland County every eight to ten years. Let's not throw away the taxpayerers' money on obsolete county equipment.

Cement finishers union goes on strike

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A strike by the local cement finishers union has halted work on about two dozen construction projects in the Central Texas area, according to officials for the Austin chapter of the Associated General Contractors.

Jerry Winn, chairman of the labor committee for the contractors, said the cement finishers began picketing about 20 job sites in Austin on Monday, and carpenters, bricklayers, equipment operators, laborers and iron workers also went off the job.

The cement finishers' contract expired March 31.

According to contractors, among the construction projects affected are an addition to Brackenridge Hospital and the University of Texas business administration building.

Dead teen-ager's parents sue dentist

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The parents of a teen-ager who died after being anesthesized for oral surgery last year have sued the dentist for malpractice.

Bhushan D. and Sudesh Bajaj of Arlington also have asked a state district judge to find unconstitutional the state's $500,000 limit in malpractice suits. The suit, which charges Dr. Ed Menton with gross negligence, says they are seeking damages "substantially in excess" of the limit.

Vikram Bajaj, 18, died July 6 in an Arlington hospital after suffering respiratory and cardiac arrest in Menton's office. The youth had been anesthesized for removal of four wisdom teeth.

The suit claims Menton failed to "properly...observe and monitor" the teen-ager's vital signs, resulting in oxygen deprivation and "massive...and irreversible brain damage."

Menton could not be reached for comment.

Man donates heavily to Armstrong

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — More than one-third of the money for Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong's campaign for governor has come from one man — Clinton Manges, a rancher-banker-oilman from Freer.

Manges has contributed $270,000 to Armstrong's campaign, and campaign manager Lefty Morris said he expects to receive "some more."

The largest single contribution from Manges was a $195,000 check written almost two weeks ago to cover the cost of Armstrong's final 10 days of television advertising, the Austin American-Statesman said.

"The question is whether Bob is a man of integrity and whether he can handle that kind of contribution in a manner that won't end up hurting the public," Morris said. "There's no question about his integrity, and Clint knows that."

Morris said he is convinced that Manges' motive is nothing more than "to root for the underdog."

Mexico may buy nuclear project share

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The City Council will discuss hiring an Austin woman who is a close friend of Mexico's president Jose Lopez Portillo to see whether Mexico is interested in buying the city's 16 percent share of the South Texas Nuclear Project.

Curtis Weeks, public information officer for the Travis County Sheriff's Department, and his wife, Cristina Weeks, have asked the council to hire Mrs. Weeks to negotiate with Mexican officials.

Weeks said his wife was born in Mexico and has been there for two months on a special project that requires her to work two days each week with Lopez Portillo.

Austin voters authorized the council in a November election to sell the city's 16 percent interest in the nuclear project.

Ron Hauber of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's international programs office in Bethesda, Md., said he does not know of anything prohibiting the sale of electricity from the plant to Mexico.

Strangler's sanity to be tested

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecutors and defense attorneys say they have agreed to send the man accused of strangling theater director Iris Siff to a state hospital for a 30-day psychiatric examination.

Clifford X. Phillips, also known as Abdullah Bashir, has pleaded innocent to a capital murder charge in the Jan. 12 slaying of Mrs. Siff, director of the Alley Theater.

Assistant District Attorney George Lambright said defense attorneys Robert R. Scott and Ronald Mock agreed Friday to the state's motion to have Phillips examined at Rusk State Hospital.

Voters have opportunity to clean house

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texans unsatisfied with their elected officials get a chance to do some spring cleaning Saturday in the Democratic and Republican primaries.

The long Democratic ballot includes six candidates for governor, an indicted state treasurer, a comptroller recently treated for alcoholism, and a good ole boy agriculture commissioner who says his opponent is backed by "socialistic punks."

Republican Gov. Bill Clements' only opponent on the much shorter GOP ballot is a former San Antonio insuranceman who might spend election night in jail.

Nominees will be picked Saturday for the top seven state executive jobs, one U.S. senator, 27 U.S. representatives, one railroad commissioner, six state appeals court judges and the entire 181-member state Legislature.

Attorney General Mark White, Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple and Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong are the top contenders for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. White and Temple, perceiving themselves as the leaders, have tossed verbal dirt clods at each other, while Armstrong, largely ignored by his opponents, has developed a solid statewide organization.

Also seeking the Democratic nomination are Don Beagle of Nederland, David Young of Dallas and Ray Mayo of San Juan.

Clements only opponent in the Republican primary is Lowell "Duke" Embs, who has alternately campaigned in a 1967 Lincoln convertible and fended off legal challenges of his sanity. He has been cited for contempt of court.

The Senate race is for the seat now held by Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, who faces token opposition from political unknown Joe Sullivan, a San Antonio college professor.

On the GOP side, state Sen. Walter Mengden of Houston and U.S. Rep. Jim Collins of Dallas are trying to out-conservative each other. Both have portrayed Bentsen as a wild-spending liberal. Don Richardson of San Antonio is the third GOP candidate.

Longtime Democratic Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby is a heavy favorite for his party's nomination over retired Austin businessman Troy Skates. A Hobby victory would set up a big-bucks November battle against former Secretary of State George Strake, unopposed for the Republican nomination.

Political observers are predicting a June 5 runoff to determine the Democratic nominee for attorney general. The field includes former U.S. Attorney John Hannah of Tyler, U.S. Rep. Jim Mattox of Dallas, former state Sen. Max Sherman of Amarillo and state Sen. Jack Ogg of Houston.

The winner faces state Sen. Bill Meier of Euless in November. Meier, a former Democrat, is unopposed on the Republican ballot.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, confident of winning the Democratic nomination, has run a low-profile campaign, despite some nasty allegations by other candidates. Bullock is challenged by Robert C. Calvert, a retired Hurst businessman who is not the late Robert S. Calvert, the comptroller before Bullock, nor Robert W. Calvert, former chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court.

The GOP comptroller race includes former Travis County Sheriff Raymond Frank and state Sen. Mike Richards of Houston. Frank called Bullock a "public drunk." Bullock underwent treatment for alcoholism last year.

Democratic Treasurer Warren G. Harding had no opposition until the final weeks before the filing deadline, when word spread of a grand jury investigation of Harding, drawing three Democrats and one Republican into the race.

Harding, under indictment for allegedly using state employees for political work, faces former Travis County Commissioner Ann Richards, former state Rep. Lane Denton of Waco and Austin businessman John Cutright.

Austin businessman Millard Neptune, a man with a name almost good enough to succeed Harding — who succeeded Jesse James — is seeking the GOP nomination.

Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown, who has built a reputation for folksy after-dinner speeches, is being challenged by Jim Hightower, a former Texas Observer editor who lost a 1980 bid for the Railroad Commission.

Brown says Hightower's campaign is backed by "socialistic punks up East." Hightower says Brown has done little to help family farmers in Texas.

Waller farmer Donald Hebert is unopposed for the GOP nomination for agriculture commissioner.

There's also a good chance of a June 5 runoff in the Democratic primary for land commissioner. The candidates are state Sen. Pete Snelson of Midland, state Rep. Dan Kubiak of Rockdale, former state Democratic Party Director Garry Mauro and Paducah rancher George Fore.

GOP candidates for land commissioner are former Hondo Mayor Woody Glasscock, Bryan businessman Al Gutierrez and Austin oilman-rancher Andrew Jackson.

Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent is challenged on the Democratic side by Ralph Pacheco, a railroad worker in Austin. John Henderson of Austin, who lost previously in an attempt to win a commission seat, is unopposed in the Republican primary.

As usual, the court races have sparked much interest among lawyers, but aroused little voter excitement. Democrat Jack Pope is not seeking re-election to the Supreme Court. Democrats seeking the job are John Barron of Bryan and Ted Oobertson of Dallas. John Bates of Waco is the only GOP candidate.

Incumbent Democrat James Denton also is running for re-election to the Supreme Court. He is challenged by State District Judge Bill Kilgarlin of Houston. There is no GOP candidate.

Charles Barrow, another Democratic incumbent on the high court, is opposed by former El Paso County Judge Woodrow Wilson Bean, a Democrat. No Republicans filed for the seat.

John Onion, the Democratic presiding judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals, has no opponents.

Incumbent Carl Dally, a Democrat, is opposed for renomination by Charles Campbell Jr., of Austin, John Humphreys of Dallas and William Phillips of Killeen. No Republicans are running.

Judge Truman Roberts' decision not to seek re-election to the criminal appeals court attracted five Democrats and a Republican to the race. The Democrats are State District Judge William Black of Belton; Charles Miller, a Dallas county judge; Roy Rawls and Andrew Shuval of Austin; and Mel Bruder of Dallas. The lone Republican is Ray Moses of Houston.

Consumer agency alive, kicking

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Carter appointee to the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Saturday the federal regulatory agency is "alive and kicking" despite Reagan administration budget cuts that have stripped it of 300 employees.

Vice chairman Stuart Statler said Congress had extended the life of the agency for two years, although Reagan budget director David Stockman had urged that it be abolished.

Statler's talk was sponsored by the Consumer Law Section of the State Bar of Texas.

President Carter appointed him to a seven-year term on the commission in August 1979. He is former legal counsel to Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill.

Statler said the commission "was hit harder (by budget cuts) than any other regulatory agency in government" and lost 300 of its 900 employees.

He said it might be merged with another agency or become a department in the executive office.

In 14 years in Washington, Statler said, "I've never seen the impact on regulatory agencies that this administration is having."

"We're a watchdog, yes, but we're somewhat of a tattered, limping watchdog," he said.

In response to a question, Statler said neither public sentiment against government regulation nor industry had the most effect on the agency's funding.

He said he thought the Reagan administration had misread the "mandate" from 1980 election results. "There was not a groundswell for regulatory reform when Reagan took office," he said.

The commission was activated in 1973 to establish safety standards for consumer products, which, Statler said, kill 30,000 people a year, cause 33 million injuries and cost the American public more than $10 billion.

"Too much of corporate America is either unwilling or unable to satisfactorily regulate itself," Statler said.

Woman dies in bus crash

ELGIN, Texas (AP) — A charter bus carrying members of a Houston garden club to a luncheon in Austin overturned near here Saturday, killing one person and injuring the other 20 aboard, authorities said.

The injured were taken to Brackenridge Hospital in Austin, said Larry Todd, spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The department withheld the dead woman's identity until relatives could be notified.

Injuries included "broken bones, cardiac complications, chest and back injuries and head lacerations. They range from minor to serious but not life-threatening," Todd said.

The bus skidded on U.S. 290 about three miles east of here and landed on its side in a ditch, Todd said.

Miriam Doby, owner of Astro City Tours in Houston, said bus driver Pat Hartley told her "she had been driving between 40 and 50 miles an hour when she hit a mud puddle" and the bus skidded.

"She said she stayed with it and tried to steer with the swerve. I'm not sure where they landed. She said they were all muddy," Mrs. Doby said.

The bus driver, who was not seriously hurt, said it was raining when the accident occurred about 11 a.m.

In many instances, before new could be brought in or stuck on, the old had to be scraped away or pulled off as this group discovers with the roofing.

For the good of all

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." — Jesus of Nazareth, c. 30 a.d. (Matthew 25:40)

To the multitudes who worked throughout the day Saturday to help those less materially blessed than they — as well as to the elderly recipients of their kindness — Christmas in April came to be just that: A mass exalting Christ through serving their fellow human beings in need.

When the sun had sunk beneath the western horizon, 144 homes of the poor and elderly in Midland had been renovated or, in many cases, simply made liveable for the first time in many long, hard years. And throughout it all, there seemed to be a unifying spirit of love and caring that transcended a mere community project.

"It's a God-sent blessing to old people," said 74-year-old Corine Hays, who watched as volunteers from First National Bank repaired her decaying home at 1120 E. Cuthbert. She has lived alone since losing her husband in 1948, and subsists entirely on Social Security and welfare.

"I think it is one of the most wonderful things that's ever happened. All good and perfect gifts come from above. I don't know what people would do if it wasn't for Christmas in April."

BUT THE WARM feelings that surged through her were matched, if not exceeded, by those of the hundreds of volunteers who gave of their time and energy to help others.

"It's really a privilege, in a lot of ways, to do," said the Rev. Joseph Schley Jr., rector at St. Nicholas Episcopal Church, whose congregation repaired the home of Janice Richardson at 609 S. Carver. "This is carrying out Matthew, Chapter 25, living it out, prayer in action. Jesus tells about the Kingdom of God, and those who will (inherit it). He tells them, 'You fed me when I was hungry; you gave me drink when I was thirsty.' And when they asked them when they did all these things, He tells them that when they did it to the least of 'these my brethren, they did it unto me.' "

St. Nicholas Episcopal Church began its day of work by a solemn observance of the One in whom such service is centered. "We had a mass, a eucharist," said The Rev. Schley, "and my prayer was that we would help those that are not as well off as we to retain their dignity, and that we would remember that despite the (scarcity) of their possessions, we are not better than those we are privileged to serve."

The members of Good Shepard Lutheran Church who worked on the home of Tom Ed Wells at 1710 E. Texas were there, they said, for the most important of all reasons.

— "The Lord," Ted Novak said simply.

GOOD SHEPARD pastor Dennis Belter, who spent the better part of the day re-roofing the Wells home, agreed that church members found all the motivation they needed from their faith.

"The motivation is not only community pride, but love for our fellow man based on what our Savior taught us," he said. "He taught us how to live."

Among those who responded en masse to the needs of the less fortunate was Midland Bible Church, which sent 56 members to repair the home of Jim Hall at 402 S. Webster.

"I did it because I enjoy doing things for other people," said Robin Newsome. "God has richly blessed us and I feel a responsibility to help others who are not as blessed materially."

"We're trying to follow the commands of Christ in the Bible: Helping the poor, those who have needs," said Bruce Robinson. "It's a great cause. People have great needs."

Midland Bible Church pastor Phillip Feist says the decision to sponsor the repair of a home was a "very spontaneous thing. I was preaching a sermon on the nature of God's giving grace and the implications that has for mutual respect," he said. "Someone suggested we practically apply that through Christmas in April, and 56 people signed up for it."

FEIST SAID Christians, especially, are charged with a responsibility above and beyond that spawned by mere community pride.

"There is a difference," he said. "We've experienced something freely given to us by way of love and life, and we take a great deal of pleasure in sharing that with others. We feel our spiritual perception makes us different in the community, and we should show that."

The home of Ruth Shaw at 103 N. Jefferson rose again under the enthusiasm of the youth of First United Methodist Church, as 18 youngsters found that teamwork and helping others left a warmth within.

"I like helping people out; it's fun," said 14-year-old Camille Bales.

"It makes me feel good inside," added Dani Dyer, 14.

And to First UMC youth director D.A. Harral, who supervised the repair project, the motivation for devoting his time and energy to Christmas in April lay in his faith.

"It's part of the overall picture of the church," he said. "There's service, worship, study, fellowship and fun, and this falls under service. This is the fourth year we've done this."

Like many other recipients of the kindness that swept through Midland Saturday, Estelene McKenzie of 301 S. Jefferson was almost without words to express her emotions as she watched volunteers from D&W Roofing and First Baptist Church paint and re-roof her home.

"I never could've paid for all the things they've done," said the 61-year-old, who has lived in the modest residence since 1946. "I'd be in debt the rest of my life. It's wonderful."

As Dean Olson scraped the exterior of the house to prepare it for painting, he reflected on why he was prompted to volunteer his time.

"IT'S JUST TO GET out and help people," he said. "We're doing this through the church, and rather than getting out and preaching Christ, we're practicing it. Plus, we're doing what we can to make our city look better."

Christmas in April attracted such notoriety Saturday that not only were a representative from President Reagan's volunteers in action task force and such media as Christian Science Monitor and America Illustrated at the scene, but also a senior editor of Reader's Digest.

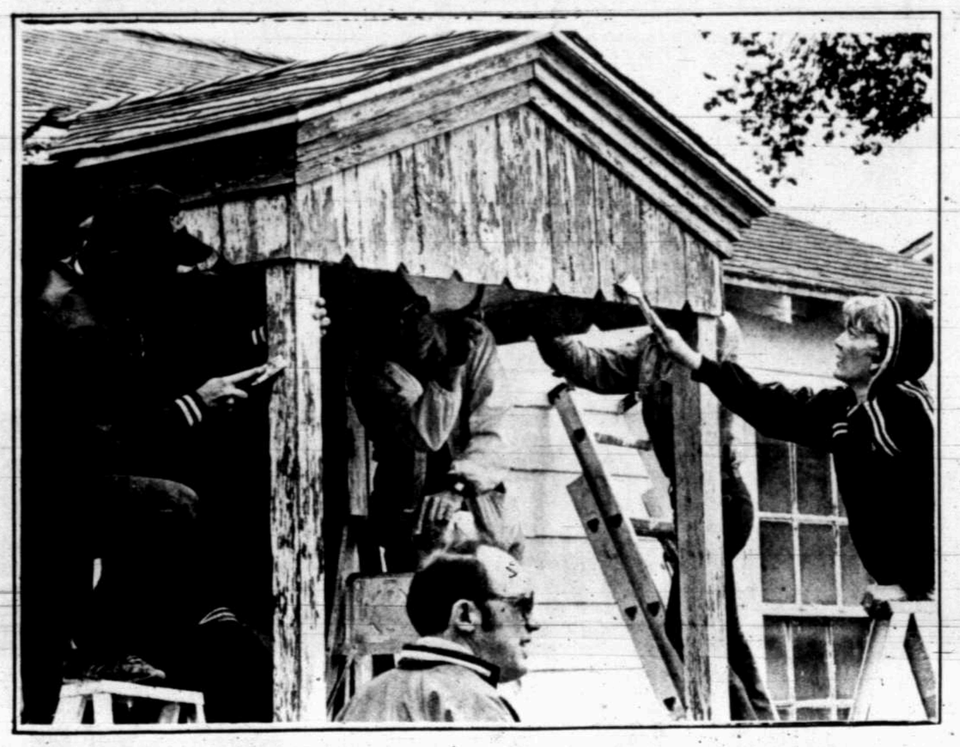
"We're doing a series (for the August issue) on voluntarism around the country," explained Trevor Armbrister of the Digest's Washington bureau. "I was at the White House when Bobby Trimble received his voluntarism award, and Christmas in April struck our editors as being the kind of effort worth looking into, and possibly duplicating elsewhere...I think it's good; it's certainly worth emulating elsewhere. It seems to be working without any government assistance at any level."

The 144 homeowners who received assistance Saturday doubtless would agree, for it was the combined efforts of people — young and old, rich and poor — that made Christmas in April a reality for them.

"It's nice to be around people like that," reflected 75-year-old E. Sparks of 602 N. Lee, as a score of persons from Trinity Presbyterian repaired the home he and his wife have lived in for more than 40 years.

He glanced at the Christian volunteers atop his home, listened to the thud of hammer against nail, and his voiced dropped to a reverent whisper as he summed up the feelings of many with one brief comment:

"The Lord's got some grand people."



Members of St. Nicholas Episcopal Church scrape away old paint from the house of Janice Richardson, 609 S. Carver.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

City Council

Midland City Council will continue its search for architects in the first step to implement a $7 million bond issue passed April 3 when the panel meets at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

At 10:15 a.m., the council will consider selection of architects for expanding City hall and building two fire substations.

Where to locate those two substations will be the subject of another item on the agenda. The sites that have been mentioned involves one in northwest Midland and another in northeast Midland, both north of Loop 250 to serve the tracts of land that have been annexed in the past two years.

Two ordinances that were passed recently and regulated recreational activities for one group and parking habits of another will be taken under consideration again.

Listed for discussion is the freight loading zone ordinanee. Recently, it was amended to allow merchants three permits, the first one costing $25, the second one $50 and the third $100. In addition, the ordinance limited the permits to large vehicles which had the name of the company on both sides. Although a public hearing was held on the ordinance and no one appeared to protest, a petition has been sent to the City Council that lists signatures of various businessmen who oppose the ruling.

The second ordinance that was passed after public hearings regulated the uses of Wadley-Barron Park. It limited activities at the lake to two days a month and only to non-profit organizations.

The council is slated to consider extending a lease with Kruger Jewelry, the Texas Municipal League insurance program, amending the water and sewer rate ordinance, giving First National Bank more loading zone permits and items in connection with the annual Trinity Fair and Carnival.

After delaying action at the April 13 meeting, the council will consider a resolution to authorize the engineering firm of Black & Veatch to secure aerial and topographic mapping services in connection with the effluent disposal project. That project involves piping treated sewage to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city.

Planning and zoning items should constitute most of the afternoon with public hearings scheduled from 1:35 to 4:30 p.m.

County Commissioners

Sheriff Dallas Smith may consume the largest share of Midland County Commissioners time Monday when the panel meets for a regular session at 9 a.m. on the second floor of the County Courthouse.

Smith is listed on the agenda to discuss overtime for the sheriff's department, a county patrol and county-sentenced inmates for work details.

Developments should take up another considerable portion of the commissioners time. Listed for discussion are El Rancho Park, Southern Meadows Addition, Windmill Estates and Ridge Heights Annex Section II. In addition, commissioners will look at a subdivision ordinance.

Beverly Acker will discuss liability insurance for foster parents.

The court will consider approving an emergency ambulance contract with the city of Midland and will discuss bids on the old county barn on Front Street.

Delinquent taxpayers may find themselves paying more than expected if the commissioners adopt a resolution that would impose a 15 percent penalty against them.

Commissioners will consider authorizing the county auditor to advertise for bids for a metal building on county property bounded by Front, Pecos, B and Washington streets and also will discuss purchasing a tractor for the cemetery.

Reports from commissioners will include Win Brown, annex; C. DeWayne Davis, library; Brown, purchasing; Brown and Durward Wright, county barn; and Charlie Welch and Davis, museum.

Requesting use of the County Exhibit Building will be Midland County Livestock Association and Laura Nedela.

MISD Board of Trustees

The results of Saturday's school board election will be canvassed and Joe Golding, the new school board member, will be sworn in during the regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the administration building, 702 N. N St.

Final plans and specifications for the addition to Midland Freshman High School and the call for bids for the construction are expected to be approved.

Also expected to see action on the agenda are consideration of names for the new elementary school, renewal of an agreement with Northwest Baptist Church to use Goddard Junior High School facilities for church services, transfer requests from persons residing outside the school district and approval of change orders for the Northwest and De Zavala elementary schools.

Trustees will accept gifts from De Zavala Elementary PTA, West Elementary PTA and the Midland High School Band Booster Club.

Approval is expected to be given to the adoption of instructional materials for the bilingual kindergarten program.

Consideration of the 1982-83 school year faculty salary schedule will be considered by trustees.

A presentation of the results of a survey "Operation Feedback" will be given by the City Council PTA and residents adjacent to the Ector County Line also will address the board.

Other items on the agenda include the call for bids for teaching supplies and portable buildings.

Trustees are expected to meet in an executive session regarding a personnel matter and a real estate matter.

Veterans to meet Monday

The Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans Inc., will meet at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the community room of the Commercial Bank & Trust.

The Brotherhood, a non-profit corporation dedicated to veterans helping veterans, meets monthly to assist victims of Agent Orange.

Roger and Marsha Stinson, who began the Midland chapter, recently have expanded the chapter in the Odessa area.

Stinson is a victim of the chemical defoliant, Agent Orange, used in Vietnam. He said the April meeting will include plans for the chapter's first public event, a celebration of patriotism to be held May 15.

Within the air operation room, Civil Air Patrol officers study the mission status board during a practice search and rescue mission last week in Odessa. From left are Capt. If practice makes perfect, Texas Wing well on way

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

A week ago, it was practice for the Texas Wing of the Civil Air Patrol gathered at Schleymeyer Field in Odessa.

Saturday, it was real as one aircraft from Midland and two from Odessa flew air search and rescue missions in the rugged Guadalupe Mountains area of West Texas for an airplane and four passengers overdue in Central Texas from its last known location — Deming, N.M.

Exactly seven days before, 138 senior members and 24 cadets from 34 CAP units throughout the state participated in a wind-blown practice Search and Rescue — a SAR. Some 43 aircraft flew grid patterns in four directions from Odessa, searching for previously planted emergency locator transmitters, known to pilots simply as ELTs.

Additionally, practice was gained by ground teams, which were charged with the responsibility of searching out the location of the signals emitted by an ELT and administering first-aid to any survivors.

At the end of the wind-delayed SAR maneuvers, which included 238.65 flying hours, Lt. Col. Jon R. McMurtry, United States Air Force-CAP liaison officer, gave the Texas wing a rating of "very good."

That practice stood them in good stead Saturday, as Midland pilot Herald Beaty and fellow CAP major Dan Secker searched the high mountain passes of Texas' highest peaks and the white-splashed salt beds at their base for some sign of the missing aircraft.

Participating in the SAR mission Saturday from the Odessa squadron were Capt. Richard Pulley, Capt. Lee Ragan, Lt. Dan Williams, Lt. Lee Miller and Mjr. Steve Howard.

Identification of the missing aircraft, which was en route to Texas from California, was being withheld pending further search, according to local CAP public affairs officer Robin Matthews.

Working on the mission were one aircraft from Midland, two from Odessa, four from El Paso, three from Lubbock and one from Amarillo. Another was to come from Amarillo, giving 12 planes to start the search mission at daylight today, said Matthews.

Two pilots from the Crusaders Squadron of Civil Air Patrol in Grand Prairie conduct a pre-flight inspection prior to a practice search and rescue mission over terrain near Odessa. Squadrons from throughout the state participated in the exercise.

State Treasurer ready to 'run on his record'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

It's a political maxim that every incumbent runs on his record — and that's exactly what State Treasurer Warren G. Harding is doing.

During a Midland visit Friday, Harding produced figures showing that when he entered office in October 1977, 80 percent of the state's money was invested and drawing interest — compared to 99.3 percent today: a cool $2.6 billion that earned $306 million during 1981.

Harding

The most the state had ever gleaned before was $98 million, according to Harding.

"There's been no state tax increase since 1971," said the man who was appointed to the $56,000 post by then-Gov. Dolph Briscoe in 1977 and won it by election a year later. "I believe my management of the office was instrumental in that.

"I'm proud of the fact that we were able to make good investments of hard-earned taxpayers' dollars. Texas has earned more during my tenure than in all its previous administrations."

Responding to an opponent's charge that he operates in the "green eyeshade" era of state government and that his department could be more efficient if it were possessed of a recommended new computer, Harding says he saved upwards of $2 million by not purchasing a new one. Instead, he merely updated the hardware.

"It's a solid, modern computer and we'll use it as long as we can," said Harding, who is under indictment for misusing state funds by enlisting two members of his clericl staff as aides in his campaign. "I want to be frugal with the taxpayers' money."

Harding claims the indictment is political in nature: "They can't beat me on my record. That's the reason for the charges. People can see through them, though."

Harding isn't the only one who thinks politics generated the indictment. He carries several editorial endorsements from newspapers across the state — including the Dallas Times Herald, which said March 25:

"The Travis County Grand Jury has produced an indictment against Mr. Harding that is about as weighty as the paper on which it is written."

Indeed, the original indictment was faulty and had to be redrawn. One result is that court hearings had to be rescheduled until after the May 1 primary.

Another campaign charge is that some of the banks used as depositories by the state are undercollateralized, to which Harding says: "That's not true. We may get an abundance of money in on a given day. If we leave it in the vault, we lose interest. So we send it to various banks and then notify them they must raise their collateral. It may be two or three days before the process can be completed, but the money has earned interest during that time."

Prior to state office, Harding, a 61-year-old native of Collin County, was Dallas County Treasurer for 26 years and once was lauded by the late Lyndon B. Johnson for "outstanding public service in county government."

"I'm very proud of my record," Harding said. "I stand on it. It's like the Rock of Gibraltar."

Director finds United Way challenging

Staff Photo by Brian Hendershot

"I see people as people. That's important. A woman has qualities unique to women which can be effective in working as an administrator. I've always been independent."

— Sarah Smith

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Sarah Smith is one of those people who never say die.

She loves a challenge.

And as a local leader of one of the nation's largest volunteer organizations, Ms. Smith is certainly getting a challenge.

Her work as executive director of the United Way of Midland Inc., includes responsibility for total administration of the organization's functions in management, fund raising, allocations, short and long range planning and supervising a support staff.

It may sound like a lot of administrative doubletalk, but for Ms. Smith, whose goal is to be one of the top women in the United Way within 10 years, it's her life.

She takes her position very seriously, and with good reason. Before she decided to become a professional in the United Way, she was one of the top three volunteer campaign chairmen who raised over $2 million.

Midlander in Profile

However, Ms. Smith said it's important not to lose the proper perspective. Because she began as a volunteer, worked her way up as a campaign chairman and then became an executive director, it was important to continue her volunteer work.

"I keep active as a volunteer to keep in perspective the needs of volunteers," she said.

One of her personal goals is to "find ways to bring organizers together for the betterment of the community."

Ms. Smith is a strong supporter of volunteerism. She said volunteerism is one reason our democratic society is healthy.

In most other sectors, Ms. Smith said,you cannot influence directly, but in volunteerism you can exert an influence, especially in Midland.

In the three years Ms. Smith has been United Way's director, her accomplishments have included reorganization through long range planning to bring in several new agencies, moving Midland's small United Way to one that's comprehensive in its approach.

"I'm a planner. I like to lay things out," she said.

Currently, she is involved in a private sector initiative established by President Reagan.

The task force for the initiative will identify existing examples of successful private and public partnerships, encourage more creative use of leadership, management expertise and volunteer work, and pinpoint government obstacles to private initiatives.

A transplant from upstate New York, Ms. Smith says Midland is a "super community with an unselfishness and a deep committment for others."

She lived in Binghamton, N.Y., where she had been a Broome County United Way staff member since 1975, working as campaign director. Before that, she worked as a volunteer campaign chairman in 1975 and as a campaign vice chairman in 1974.

However, now she considers herself a Midlander. She said Midland has helped her find her personal and professional strengths.

Volunteerism was the beginning of her business career and it also brought her to Midland.

She explained a personal assessment of where she wanted to be professionally prompted her to apply for the executive director position in April 1979. In July 1979 she was hired in Midland.

Her typical day begins about 4:30 a.m.

But, this is not United Way time or volunteer time. It's Sarah Smith's time. She's a runner.

"That's when I'm doing my sorting out," Ms. Smith said, referring to the five or six miles she jogs every day.

The rest of the day may be spent around a table brainstorming or out in the community visiting ministers of the local churches.

Being a woman has not been a drawback for her, she said.

Loeffler wants river status changed

WASHINGTON — Congressman Tom Loeffler introduced legislation Wednesday to repeal the Wild and Scenic River designation on a 127-mile stretch of the Rio Grande River downstream from the Big Bend National Park.

Under the Loeffler proposal, the part of the Rio Grande now under the auspices of the National Park Service would be restored to its previous status.

Loeffler, who has opposed the inclusion of the Rio Grande in the Wild and Scenic Rivers System since its designation in 1978, said the unique characteristics of the river as an international boundary does not lend itself to federal management efforts.

The Rio Grande is one of the largest free-flowing rivers in Texas.

"In its zeal to protect the natural resources of the river, the Federal government overlooked the best conservationists around — the West Texas farmer and rancher," Loeffler said. "Those who live by and with the river have demonstrated over the years a caring and careful stewardship of the land and waters of West Texas and I am eager to return the Rio Grande to their capable hands."

Loeffler said he had delayed repeal legislation while efforts to work out a river management plan acceptable to both the National Park Service and the landowners was negotiated. A general management plan approved last November calls for limited development along the river, no further land acquisition and cooperation with landowners to promote recreational activities on the river and preservation of the environment for present and future generations.

"Efforts to strike a bargain in the mamgement plan were generally successful. However, I feel ultimate repeal is the only real solution," Loeffler said. "Now is the time to pursue this goal and return management to the local level."

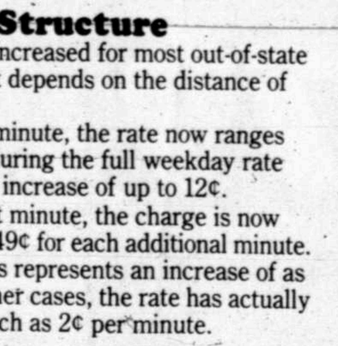
Important News About Long Distance Calls.

A Bigger Discount and Other Rate Changes.

An increase in the discount for out-of-state calls and other changes in long distance rates are now in effect.

These changes apply to many Bell System long distance services used at home and at work. Approval was given by the Federal Communications Commission, effective April 2.

Bigger Evening Discount



Now you'll save 40% off the full weekday rate, instead of 35%, when you make out-of-state calls between 5 p.m. and 11 p.m., Sunday through Friday. The larger discount applies whether or not you use operator assistance.

You'll still save 60% during the week from 11 p.m. to 8 a.m. and all day Saturday and on Sunday until 5 p.m.

To help you remember the discount periods, keep this schedule handy.

Dial-Direct Rate Periods for Interstate Long Distance Calls

Mon. Tues. Wed. Thurs. Fri.	Sat.	Sun.
Weekday full rate Mon.-Fri., 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Evening 40% discount Sun.-Fri., 5 p.m. to 11 p.m.		Eve. 40%
Nights & Weekends 60% discount Every night after 11 p.m., all day Sat. to 5 p.m. Sun.

New Rate Structure

Rates have been increased for most out-of-state calls. The amount depends on the distance of the call.

For the first minute, the rate now ranges from 32¢ to 74¢ during the full weekday rate period. This is an increase of up to 12¢.

After the first minute, the charge is now between 16¢ and 49¢ for each additional minute. In some cases, this represents an increase of as much as 7¢. In other cases, the rate has actually dropped by as much as 2¢ per minute.

One Minute Minimum

There's no longer a three-minute minimum for operator-assisted calls. So now, if you talk for only one minute, you pay for only one minute. This applies whether you dial the call yourself or use an operator.

Rate-Period-Specific Billing

If you start your out-of-state call during one rate period and finish the call in another, you'll be billed at the rates that apply for each period.

Here's how it works. If you begin a ten minute call at 10:58 p.m., you will be billed for two minutes at the 40% discount rate and for eight minutes at the 60% discount rate.

Under the old structure, you were billed for the whole call at the rate in effect when you began the call.

Lower Calling Card Rates

If you dial your own Calling Card (formerly known as Credit Card) calls, the price is now less than you pay for other operator-handled calls.

Added Charges for Extra Services

There's a service charge added to the full weekday rate or discount period for each call which requires operator assistance. It applies no matter when you call or how long you talk. For example, the rate for a five minute collect call from Houston to St. Louis during the 60% discount period would be $.93 for the call plus $1.55 for operator handling.

Here's a list of the service charges.

Service Charges*

	0-10 miles	11-22 miles	23 miles & up
Customer-dialed Calling Card	$ .60	$ .80	$1.05
Operator Station (such as collect, coin, and third-number-billed calls	.75	1.10	1.55
Person-to-Person	3.00	3.00	3.00

*Evening and night/weekend discounts do not apply to service charges. The discounts do apply to the rates charged for the conversation portion of the call.

Conference Calls

The service charge for conference calls is now $3.00 for each connection. So if the operator connects your call to someone in New York and someone else in San Francisco at the same time, the service charge would be $6.00. Add another person in Detroit, and the total service charge would be $9.00. This charge is in addition to the rates charged for the conversation portions of each connection.

Holiday Discounts

There's good news for holiday callers. A 40% discount is in effect between 8 a.m. and 11 p.m. on these holidays: New Year's Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day.

When these holidays fall on Saturday or Sunday, the weekend discount of 60% will apply until 5 p.m. Sunday. If any of these holidays falls on a weekend but is legally celebrated on another day, the 40% discount will not apply between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. of the legally celebrated day.

WATS and Private Line Services

Wide Area Telecommunications Service rates have been increased by 4.1%. Most Private Line service rates (for alarm systems, teletypes, and so forth) have gone up 1.6%.

Rubey hopes to realize his political dream in race for 25th District State Senate seat

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

W.B. "Bill" Rubey, 41, of Kendalia, has always wanted to be the state senator from the 25th District, which includes Midland. When incumbent W.E. "Pete" Snelson decided to bow out this year and go after the land commissioners race, Rubey decided to go after his dream.

Passing through Midland Friday afternoon, Rubey said he announced his candidacy last January in Del Rio, although he didn't file until the last day. He is opposing San Angeloan Bill Sims in the Democratic primary. Alone on the Republican ticket is Ernest Angelo Jr. of Midland.

Spurring him on were what he sees as major issues facing the state in the next decade — water, energy, education, transportation.

"Coming up in January is the new federalism. How are we going to pay for things?" he said.

"We have to look at teachers salaries" and what education programs should be scrapped or saved. "We need to raise the salaries for teachers and the question is where does that money come from."

He also advocated state funds for the 17 colleges not covered under the University Permanent Fund.

Water in West Texas may boil down to a fight over whether or not it should be used for oil production or agricultural purposes, said Rubey. "It will be a great battle out here" on that issue, he added.

The 25th State Senatorial District will experience a 50 percent increase in population by the year 2000, the real estate man predicted. "You can't import water here. Those schemes are dead. We'll have to use the water we have here now."

Looking at these issues, Rubey believes there will be some trade-offs, such as with fresh water and oil production.

"We have to learn how to live with our resources here without looking to Washington to solve our problems," he added.

Citing his opposition to any new taxes, Rubey said he realizes that the money had to come from somewhere. Instead of the 4-cents a gallon tax on gasoline, he claimed it should be up to 16 cents a gallon to keep up with highway growth and maintenance.

"It would kill us out here in West Texas if the highways start deteriorating," he added.

The year 2000 is just around the corner, said Rubey, "and I want to be a part of what happens in the next 20 years in this state."

Although he's never run for an office before, Rubey said he has assisted in raising funds for other candidates and planning campaigns.

Better Business Bureau local advocate of consumers' rights

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

National Consumers Week begins today, and one of the most helpful agencies to Midland consumers is the Better Business Bureau.

The Midland BBB, which has a staff of four and serves 16 counties, was established in 1963 when the business community saw a need to organize one, according to Linda Truitt, acting president.

The Council of Better Business Bureau, located in Washington, D.C., assisted with the organizaton. Each local bureau is put on probation for one year, and is then made a part of the system if their program proves satisfatory, Ms. Truitt explained. At present, there are 150 BBBs operating in the nation.

"Each bureau is independently operated," Ms. Truitt said. "There are no national funds and the local business community supports it by paying dues to be a member."

If a member changes its transactions to an "unethical" way, it is asked to leave the organization, she said.

"OUR FUNCTION is to promote ethical business practices and because of that we do have standards for our members," she added.

The Midland BBB, located in the Midland Regional Airport building, provides services in several major areas, all free to the public.

Inquiries concerning businesses and charitable solicitations are answered with reports that the bureau collects in files. "If you call for information on a company that you are going to deal with, whether local or national, we can provide information on it," she said. "If, for example, you want to order something in the mail from a company in New York, we can call the New York bureau to find out about the firm."

She added that the agency does not advise the consumer whether or not to order the product. Instead, they can provide information about that company which could help the consumer make his decision.

Charitable solicitations can also be checked by the BBB. There are no city ordinances in Midland which require those soliciting money to fill out a form for approval as there are in major cities, such as Dallas. "People can solicit for any amount they want without control," she said. "So we try to watch them.

"A lot of them are phony," she added. "Some of that money is just going into their pockets."

One of the areas in which BBB is often associated is complaint handling. All complaints must be submitted in writing before the agency can act on them, she said.

"MANY TIMES A PERSON will call on the phone with a complaint. We do a lot of counseling on the phone to screen the legitimate complaints," she said. "We don't want to bother a business if the complaint isn't legitimate."

When a legitimate complaint is received, the BBB sends a copy to the business in question and asks them to reply. The next step depends on how the business responds.

Many companies will thank the agency for pointing it out to them and take care of it, she said. Others become angry and some don't respond at all.

"Information on how they respond is put in the business' file," Ms. Truitt said.

"If the business is defensive and we can't work between the company and the customer, we go to the arbitration program," she said.

The arbitration program acts as a court system. Thirteen people are trained to act as arbitrators in the Permian Basin area, she said. Both of the parties sign an agreement before beginning the program saying they will abide by the arbitrator's decision, which he must make within 10 days following the hearing.

The arbitrator has a right to ask for expert testimony and, unlike the court system, can call for an inspection.

In a case that will be held in early May, Ms. Truitt said the complaining party bought a pre-fabricated home. Their complaint is that the wood was bad, pieces didn't fit and they had to buy extra supplies and improve the wood in order to build their house. They are asking the company to pay for those extra costs.

The company refused and the parties decided to enter the arbitration program. The arbitrator called for an inspection before holding a hearing with both parties.

"This way the arbitrator has a chance to go out and look at it where in a court the judge cannot do that," she said.

"Most of the cases are settled through mediation," she said, adding that in the past two years only six cases of arbitration have been handled.

"Another area we try to get involved with, but don't have enough staff here to do, is in advertising review," she said.

"BBB BEGAN IN the early 1900s specifically for advertising review. At that time, one out of every four advertisments was completely fraudulent."

She said that people in the advertising business were concerned and formed "vigilante committees" to help local businesses do a more truthful job in advertising. Those committees enlarged to form the first BBB.

"If someone is advertising in a way that we feel is misleading to the public, we contact them," Ms. Truitt said. The BBB publishes a book on advertising standards as well as booklets which are sent to companies to make them more aware of proper advertising standards. "They are not laws," she explained, "they are ethical standards."

However, Ms. Truitt said that the BBB often works with law enforcement agencies. When calls started coming into the office about a photography company that was setting up in motel rooms and grocery stores, taking money and never producing any photographs, she said they told people to write down all of the information they could and the BBB sent it to the attorney general.

One of the main pitches Midlanders fall for is solicitations from people who say they are representing a major gas or oil company.

"IT'S AMAZING to me how many of these businessmen will sit there and rely only on what these people tell them," she said. "They'll call us and say 'I just signed a check, do you know anything about this organization?'

"Each (Better Business) bureau is independently operated. There are no national funds and the local business community supports it by paying dues to be a member."

— Linda Truitt

"A lot of these salesmen use big-time names," she continued, citing Exxon, City Services, Phillips, Gulf and Mobile as a few that are constantly used. "The thing is these companies wouldn't allow that type of dealings."

Usually, the addresses and phone numbers on the business cards are those of an answering service, she said. Many of the office addresses listed on the cards turn out to have been leased for a month or a week to someone using a false name.

"If it is a legitimate solicitation, they won't mind you checking on them," she said. "If they are not, they'll be heading for the nearest door."

Due to cuts in federal programs made by the Reagan administration, Ms. Truitt said she thinks BBB will play an important role in the future.

"In the past, the federal government has put out lots of consumer protection information," she said. "Because of the expenses, everyone is cutting back on these areas.

"The responsibility is going to be placed on the business community for self-regulation. It is a very good opportunity for the business community."

According to Ms. Truitt, businesses in the past have asked the federal government to allow them to take care of regulation on a local basis.

"But if the businesses don't support any type of organization, such as ours, that is in the self-regulation business, then the government will have to come back in and take over," she said.

"There have got to be some standards and discipline to make sure businesses will follow them," she added. "We hope to take over that job. But we need the support of the business community."

Publications on wastewater treatment in reference area at public library

Several publications dealing with wastewater treatment alternatives including use of effluent for agricultural irrigation have been placed by the city of Midland in the reference department at Midland County Public Library.

Placed on loan by the city, the studies and publications include a "Feasibility Study for Wastewater Treatment," a consultant's report prepared for J. "Timber" Floyd and the city of Midland which documents research on the viability of farming various crops utilizing effluent irrigation.

The Agro-City study focuses on the Floyd Ranch in southeast Midland County and includes analyses of potential crops and their nitrogen uptake, economics, site characteristics, state and federal regulations, engineering and farming alternatives and monitoring recommendations.

Also available is a similar Agro-City report, "Land Treatment of Municipal Wastewater," the findings of a study commissioned by the city of Arlington in its consideration of land application as a treatment alternative.

Several publications prepared by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency also are available, including "Sewage Disposal on Agricultural Soils: Chemical & Microbiological Implications," "An Approach for Comparing Health Risks of Wastewater Treatment Alternatives," "Wastewater: Is Muskegon County's Solution Your Solution?" and "A History of Land Application as a Treatment Alternative."

"Citizen Handbook on Land Treatment," prepared by the Pennsylvania State University Institute on State and Regional Affairs, also is a part of the reference file.

The publications will be available for use in the library throughout May.

The County Library, 301 W. Missouri Ave., is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

'Sly-Fox' example of Elizabethan bawdy humor

Those greedy-hearted hoarders of gold, silver or currency be advised — Foxwell J. Sly, alias Sly Fox, alias Volpone, is alive and well in Midland, Texas. And he's waiting for you.

With outstretched palms and golden smile, he'll have you eagerly giving him all you have and then some. Of course, there's a catch. You think you're getting it back many times multiplied. He knows better.

He may be seen through May 1 busily peddling his wares in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Billed as an adult comedy farce, Larry Gelbart's adaptation of Ben Jonson's "Volpone" aptly titled "Sly Fox," does not break with the Elizabethan's style of bawdy humor. It does not contain unnecessary profanity, if it contains any at all, but rather plays on words, ranging from the merely suggestive to the blatently obvious. It is good crude drilled for all it's worth.

Midland Community Theatre's cast of despicables includes Len Caryl as Sly; Tim Feltch as Simon Able, Sly's able assistant; Ann Perkins, Jay Scheumack and Mark Wilkins, as Sly's servants; Corby Considine as Lawyer Craven, "a thieving lawyer who keeps 10 percent for himself when he tells you the time;" John Phillips as Jethro Crouch, who "loves to look at dying men;" Glen Thomason as Abner Truckle, an accountant who Sly describes as "a man whose sincerity is apparent. It's written on both his faces."

Also, Toni Botary as Mrs. Truckle, whose jealous husband has gone so far as to make her wear "chasity boots;" Trudie Thomason as Miss Fancy, "a pleasure engineer;" Beau Poteet as Crouch's servant; Joe Craig as Captain Crouch; John Salisbury as the lecherous Chief of Police; Jason Lyons as the policeman and baliff; John L. Fox as the court clerk; and Bill Shaner as Judge Bastardson, described by Craven as "A baptist of the first water. A man with the strength of countless convictions," who begins by saying "By the power of God invested directly in me, this court is now in session," and is quick to point out to those in court, "I decide who hangs by what around here."

The production is directed by Don Bachmann, the theater's executive director.

Cast members carry their respective roles well. Notable moments occur when Crouch and Miss Fancy get together for a chat and Fox (John L.) the court clerk steals the court room scene, playing the straight man.

At times, Craig's portrayal of Crouch's Navy son is overdone and a little overblown. He still seems a little tense onstage.

Otherwise, the cast seems to be having as good a time as the audience. The fast scene Thursday was played a little fast, perhaps because cast members had not settled down after the quick paced-tempo of the court room scene. Caryl, who does an excellent job of portraying the dauntless con artist, almost throws away one of the play's best lines — his final statement.

Several cast members dropped lines, but the uptake recovery was quick. Of note Thursday was Thomason's portrayal of Truckle. Thomason, a last minute substitution for the part when the original cast member was transferred out of town, did a fine job and he was carrying a script.

The set was attractively done. The color tones were pleasing to the eye and the set worked well, with set changes done with a minimum of difficulty.

All of the characters were suitably attired, with Miss Fancy's dress perhaps drawing the most attention. Then again, maybe it wasn't her dress.

A delicately intricate play, Jonson's "Volpone" was written with ingenious nuances using the English language in a more recondite manner than Gelbart. However, much of Jonson's work would be abstrusely understood by modern audiences, whereas, Gelbart's is not. In writing "Sly Fox," Gelbart remained true to Jonson's intent. And as Jonson stated in the prologue to "Volpone:"

"Now luck yet send us, and a little wit
Will serve to make our play a hit;
According to the palates of the season,
Here is rhyme not empty of reason.
This we bid to credit from our poet,
Whose true scope, if you would know it,
In all his poems still hath been this measure,
To mix profit with your pleasure."

Sylvia: I always wanted to sing

One of her idols in the country music field was Patsy Kline. She would spend hours listening and practicing her style. Her rendition of Miss Kline's "Crazy," opened her first Nashville door.

"I've got plenty of determination," Sylvia Kirby Allen said in a brief interview before her Wednesday night Midland Stardust performance. A relative newcomer on the country music scene, Ms. Allen performs under the single name of Sylvia.

"My determination and my positive attitude have got me where I am now. I always wanted to be a singer."

The question for Sylvia was how to get there.

A native of Kokomo, Ind., which is not far from the home of the Little Nashville Opry, Sylvia began attending performances there and drawing portraits of the artists. Her drawings opened the backstage doors for her.

"I used that as a vehicle to get backstage and see the artists. I did a portrait of Barbara Mandrell that she uses on backstage passes and all her stationary," Sylvia said.

SHE WENT to Nashville immediately following her high school graduation. Equipped with an a cappella demo tape, Sylvia knocked on doors.

It was then, when Glenn Keener handed her a guitar and asked her to sing, that she performed "Crazy" Sylvia-style. Keener called producer and publisher Tom Collins who listened to her and said he would call if he ever needed a female singer for demos. She left, knowing the chances of her hearing from him were slim.

Four months later, in January of 1976, she walked back into Collins' office telling them she had moved to Nashville and wanted a job. Collins hired her as a secretary.

During the next 4½ years, Sylvia occupied her time studying hit singles and singing background vocals for singers like Barbara Mandrell and Janie Fricke. She auditioned for Dave & Sugar when Jackie Franz left the group. Although she wasn't picked, through the audition she came to the attention of Jerry Bradley, RCA's Nashville chief, and singer Charlie Pride.

"The first shows I ever did onstage were fronting for Charlie Pride," Sylvia said.

She was finally signed by RCA in September of 1979, thus beginning to make her dream come true.

AFTER A disappointing start with "You Don't Miss a Thing," which "everybody kinda missed," her third single — "Tumbleweed" — "got everything moving in the fall of '80. My first top 10, "Drifter," went to No. 1 in April of '80." Her next single, "Nobody," will be released this May followed by another album, "Just Sylvia."

This year, she has been nominated by the Academy of Country Music for the female vocalist of the year award.

"I was so determined, I was real positive," Sylvia said. "I'm not saying you don't have to have talent, you do. You need individuality so your voice stands out on the radio so people don't have to ponder, 'Who's that?'"

With that it was time for her to be onstage for the first of two hour performances.

Clad in blue leotards, ballerina-style shoes, bright white mini-length belled pantaloons, another shade of blue body shirt, with blue sparkle barrettes in her hair, Sylvia mounted the stage.

The costume was designed to make her audiences remember her. She wants to leave her stamp of individualjty behind. It was certainly a get-up not soon forgotton; however, it made her look more like a fugitive from a Woody Allen movie than a country singer.

OF COURSE, when one really listens to the songs she has recorded, complete with disco beat, she doesn't sing like a country singer.

Among the numbers she sang Wednesday night were two by her idol — Patsy Kline. She really shouldn't have. Miss Kline had a tremendous natural voice; Sylvia does not.

What she does have, besides the pretty face, is a positive attitude, coupled with the desire to be onstage and a long suit in determination. Although she claims that her great desire in life is to be a singer, it really isn't. Her determination is to be a star.

Too often, there's a vast difference. One which may not be as easily distinguishable on tape or on a record as it is in a live performance. Unfortunately, many stars who are passed off as singers are created in recording studios.

She has the volume, but not the control, nor the depth. Her voice displays no natural singing ability. She could learn how to use what she has, plus how to sing from her diaphragm rather than through her nose, by taking singing lessons, which this reviewer would highly recommend if Sylvia wants to be a singer.

The audience loved her.

As for this reviewer, the house band was by far the better act of the night. As is so often the case, house bands are taken for granted. Pepper Martin, who as one fan put it, "Has been here ever since I got here, which was some time ago," still puts on a good show. He and those who work with him have competent singing voices and they play country.

A Review

Sylvia talks about her drive and determination before her Wednesday night Midland Stardust performance. During her two sets, she performed her own songs, including "Drifter," "Rainbow Rider," "Tumbleweed" and "The Matador," as well as singing those recorded by other artists.

'Krull' latest fantasy film

IVER HEATH, England (AP) — Space invaders with neon spears menace a fairy tale kingdom created at Europe's largest movie studio for Columbia Pictures' $20-million-plus fantasy film, "Krull."

Since late January, a medieval castle, emerald-encrusted cave and other manmade wonders have emerged at the 10 stages "Krull" occupies at Pinewood Studios, 20 miles outside London.

The cavernous "007" stage, where James Bond sequences are shot, is now a vast swampland dotted with some 450 trees, mostly gathered from burned forests in the Buckinghamshire countryside. Fog produced by vaporizing vegetable oil enhances the eerie effect.

Special-effects supervisor Derek Meddings, winner of a 1979 Academy Award for his work on "Superman," has invented ways for horses of unearthly speed to make fire, men to turn into fish and a prince to retrieve a magic weapon from boiling lava.

He also says he has created a monstrous crystal spider that will jolt audiences like the great white shark in "Jaws."

Meddings' tricks, and the lush sets by production designer Stephen Grimes, embellish a Stanford Sherman screenplay that attempts to encompass the past, present and future.

Hideous slayers with neon spears attack the planet Krull (which rhymes with hole) just as Prince Colwyn (Ken Marshall) is about to marry the beautiful Princess Lyssa (Lysette Anthony) at the White Castle.

'Deathtrap' keeps you guessing until end

After their recent collaboration on the hard-hitting film, "Prince of the City," Jay Presson-Allen and Sidney Lumet have gone for a definite change of pace in "Deathtrap," a mystery thriller. Adapted from Ira Levin's stageplay which has been running on Broadway since 1978, "Deathtrap" is the kind of who-dun-it that keeps you guessing until the final moment, with more "who's doing in whom, when and how" than deserves to be in just one script.

"Deathtrap" begins following the successful opening night of Sidney Bruhl's latest play. Sidney (Michael Caine) goes home to his highly-strung wife (Dyan Cannon), who has been popping pills because of her heart condition while he was away at the opening. Sidney tells her that even though he can not seem to write a good play, one of the students from a seminar he taught has sent him a manuscript and that it is very good, probably hit material — bound to make a fortune on Broadway.

With a little reflection upon his own bank balance, Sidney decides to do away with his protege (Christopher Reeve) and take credit for the manuscript. From there begins a tale of many and elaborate turns as the actors try to weave their way through Lumet's cumbersome direction and an overpacked Presson-Allen screenplay.

Christopher Reeve is especially victimized by the mismatched camera angles and action, and he towers over the set. In other matching scenes, Reeve and Caine are forced into mirror versions of a circular waltz with the camera — all too distracting to fulfill the purpose of movement or exposition on the closed set.

But perhaps the most curious bit of direction is of Dyan Cannon as Sidney's wife. She is so neurotic as to have us guessing at what could have attracted Sidney in the first place, and what kept him from doing her in sooner.

We learn later that Sidney, by way of his gifted student, has come to terms with his homosexuality, and that is offered as a possible explanation to Sidney's sudden change of heart. Though curiously enough the conversion is not quite believeable for what affection we see between the two men is perfunctory and stilted.

One delight is the Bruhl's neighbor, a Dutch psychic. A jogger, she wears sweat clothes and iridescent dots on her hat so she can be seen in the dark (something that doesn't work later in the film) and she is just inaccurate enough in her predictions that she adds another layer to the intricate plot. As the wacky psychic, Irene Worth dominates every scene she is in and brings a much-needed controlled energy to the effort.

Caine's performance is something of a blend of his previous characters, the bisexual husband in "California Suite," and the mystery-solver in "Sleuth." But he was better served in those than in "Deathtrap," where he stumbles around the set, trying to disguise — until the final scene — his considerable weight gain.

If everybody loves a mystery, as the saying goes, there is plenty here to love, enough creaking stairs, lightning and thunder, people on the outside trying to get in and instruments of death for two movies. And if the actors seem to get manipulated by it all, it may be as much a matter of genre as direction, since any good murder-mystery has to be slightly out of control to add that needed element of danger.

Rated PG, "Deathtrap" contains adult situations and violence which are essential to the plot.

Ambassador to Mexico's wife stars in soap opera

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — What is the ambassador's wife doing in a soap opera?

When the ambassador is John Gavin, President Reagan's envoy to Mexico and his wife is the beautiful actress-singer Constance Towers, she is doing what comes naturally. She stars as Clarissa McCandless, member of a powerful Washington family, in "Capitol," the new CBS daytime serial that made its debut in a nightime hour March 26.

"Capitol," which also stars Carolyn Jones, Ed Nelson, Rory Calhoun and a cadre of newcomers, is the most ambitious soaper in years. It is the project of John Conboy, the man who gave you "The Young and the Restless." The show is being taped at CBS Television City after 10 days of location work in Washington, D.C., and Maryland.

"Clarissa is a fitness nut, and I had to do a running scene in Washington," Miss Towers said. "When I left for the location it was raining. When I arrived it started to hail. As I started the scene, sleet was falling, and by the time I finished it was snowing. I felt like a mailman."

Towers

Indeed, the regimen of a daytime serial calls for discipline, and Miss Towers will appear on "Capitol" at least twice a week, perhaps more often. How can she manage that and still be wife of the ambassador to Mexico?

"Mexico City is only two and a half hours away by plane," she replied. "I can leave Los Angeles at nine and be at the embassy by midnight.

"John is happy when I'm happy. He loves to see me work, as long as we don't compete in what we do. And that has never happened."

Both had been married before. They have managed to make their marriage work despite careers that often separated them; for two years Miss Towers toured with Yul Brynner in "The King and I." Gavin's appointment as ambassador added new complications to their marriage.

"It has been a challenge for John and a challenge for me, too," she said. "As the ambassador's wife I'm involved in community work, I act as my husband's hostess and I'm concerned with the other embassy women. Any social occasion can be challenging; it's important to keep your best foot forward."

Although she has spoken Spanish for 20 years, she admitted that she still has to work at it. All of the embassy staff speak it, and she tries to make Gavin speak to her in Spanish, especially gossip, which sometimes is untranslatable. She added: "I first realized my Spanish had improved when a lady asked me a question at a state dinner. I didn't understand her, and I asked her to repeat the question. Only then did I realize she was speaking English."

The statuesque blonde from Whitefish, Mont., has had a varied career: night-club singing, film debut opposite William Holden and John Wayne in "The Horse Soldiers," on Broadway in "Show Boat" and other musicals, and touring in "The Sound of Music," "Mame," "Oklahoma," etc.

Soap operas are nothing new to her.

"Ten years ago I appeared in 'Love is a Many-Splendored Thing' for six months," she said. "I thought it was a great experience. Once you know the character, the dialogue comes easy, and you can enjoy it. You have to enjoy what you're doing when you work that hard."

Don Rickles' sarcastic humor started as defense mechanism

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Don Rickles, king of the zingers, turning soft?

Com' on, hockey puck, get serious!

"I guess as I grow a little older, I find myself growing a little more reserved," Rickles admitted, almost apologetically, in a recent interview.

"My dream is someday being able to walk away from this business and have security for me and my family. I find leisure life and travel and being home most enjoyable. Show business is not my life to the point that I would miss it all that much."

On stage he makes a mockery of the title "Mr. Warmth." Off-stage, he makes the tag believable.

There are chinks in the vitriolic armor in which he has clothed himself since the mid-40s. Originally, the caustic coating was designed to fend off the barbs of rowdy sailors who wanted anything but comedy at a Washington, D.C., strip joint where he was emceeing in 1948.

He says his sarcastic approach on stage is a defense mechanism because he failed miserably at being the salesman his father wanted him to be and because "I could never really tell a joke."

The late Max Rickles was one of the best insurance salesmen in Jackson Heights, L.I., and hoped son Don would follow suit. No luck.

"The only policy I ever sold was to my uncle, who was passing away in my arms," Rickles laughs.

Then there was a stint at selling makeup door-to-door in Jackson Heights — working with crews who received their supplies from a car trunk.

"I'd ring the doorbell, say 'I'm from so-and-so, wanna see my makeup?' They'd say 'Get outta here.' I got to the point where I thought 'Get outta here' was the name of the makeup."

Taking his father's sense of humor and mother Etta's flare for the stage, Rickles opted for show business instead of sales.

For years he was a well-kept secret in the entertainment industry, with only his peers recognizing his quick wit.

"I found that this sarcastic attitude sort of developed a character," Rickles recalled. "It took a long time for people to accept that. In the early years, a lot of people would walk out of the audience. Today they expect it of me."

If he thought the Washington, D.C., Navy was a rough audience, he had a surprise waiting for him in the Las Vegas lounges a decade later.

"Working the lounges was a tough, tough way to go," he said, his mind drifting back to another era. "You really had to work to win them over in those days. And I followed a guy by the name of Louie Prima. Louie was like World War II when he got through."

Scale insects common in Texas

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Scale insects are common pests of ornamentals and several species can occur on West Texas landscape plants. Gardeners often have difficulty controlling scale insects for three basic reasons:

(1) They do not become aware of the scale infestation until it is quite extensive and branches or twigs begin to turn yellow and die back (2) insecticide sprays are not effective unless they are applied at the time when scales are in the "crawler" stage, or that stage just after egg hatch when they are very tiny or mite-like and wandering about the plant, (3) insecticide spray applications must cover the entire plant (both sides of all leaves and branches) to the point of spray runoff.

Therefore, when routine plant inspection to identify scale insect problems early, proper timing of insecticide applications, and thorough spray coverage you can expect successful scale insect control.

Mature scales are usually found firmly attached to branches or foliage and never move. Scale insects kill or weaken the host plant by sucking plant sap through piercing-sucking mouthparts which are inserted into the plant.

While there are hundreds of scale insects which have been described in the U.S. from many hosts, some common scale insects on ornamentals in West Texas include:

Cottony Cushion Scale — Large (up to ¼ inch), elongate cottony white and fluted egg sac protrudes from under the rear of the mature female's body. Mature scales usually found on the twigs, small crawlers move to foliage and along twigs. Commonly attacks boxwood, Pittosporum, pecan, apple, pear, oak and willow.

Euonymous Scales — Elongate, brownish-grey scales and elongate white scales on foliage and twigs. Very heavy infestations can kill branches or whole plants. Commonly attacks euonymus japonica, boxwood, ligustrum and Ilex spp.

Calico, Kermes, Lecanium and Tortoise Scales. Scales large (up to ¼ inch), yellowish to brownish scales with or without various mottled patterns. Usually hemispherical in shape so as to look like little turtles lined up along twigs. Commonly infests oaks, evergreens, pyracantha.

Mealy bugs — Whitish, waxy or "mealy" appearance of oval, soft-bodied, scale-like insects. Closely related to scales but are not true scales. Commonly attacked hosts: Pittosporum, Ficus, oleander and Taxus. More common on foliage plants and flowers indoors than on outdoor ornamentals.

Scale insects and mealybugs can be controlled on ornamentals outdoors either with a dormant oil spray or with summer insecticide sprays. For dormant oil sprays, apply either "superior" (100 second) or "summer" grade (70 second) oil just before new growth begins in the spring and when temperatures get above 45 degrees F.

Sprays containing acephate (Orthene), Metasystox-R, dimethoate (Cygon, expecially effective for euonymus scale), malathion, diazinon or chlorpyrifos (Dursban) are effective and labeled for some or all types of scale control. Consult the product label for dilution and application directions. Enhanced scale control is often achieved when a "summer" or "superior" grade spray oil is added to the insecticide spray mixture at half the labeled rate. Read the insecticide label to be sure this practice is not prohibited, and avoid spray oil use during the summer when temperatures are over 90-95 degrees.

Oil and insecticide combinations may increase the chance of spray burn on plants especially under hot and dry summer conditions. Spray two to four times at seven to 10 day intervals as soon as crawlers appear. No matter which spray schedule you follow, thorough coverage of the tree or shrub is essential.

Some systemic insecticides (e.g. dimethoate or Cygon, and Disyston) can be applied to the soil, out to the drip line of the plant. They are then taken up through the root system and the scales are killed when they feed on the insecticide laden plant sap. Systemics may not give adequate control of those scales which are feeding along the twigs of trees and shrubs.

Mealy bugs and scales can be controlled on houseplants by swabbing exposed insects with a diluted soap solution (e.g., mild dishwashing detergent) or regular rubbing alcohol. Sprays or dips of malathion, diazinon or acephate (Orthene) will control scales on houseplants. Be sure to obtain thorough coverage of the plant (e.g., by dipping).

Contact insecticides (e.g., aerosols containing pyrethrins, resmethrin or SBP-1382) are available for use on houseplants, but they have little or no residual activity. Reapply at one to three day intervals until control is achieved. Hold any aerosol at least 12 inches from the plant when spraying. Finally, Disyston granules are also available for scale control on houseplants, but be sure to follow all label precautions when usng this systemic insecticide.

Grange still undergoing time of change

AGRICULTURE

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Grange originally was an organization of farmers set up to promote agriculture in the nation after the Civil War. What's happened to the fraternity as America becomes more industrialized, more urban? Here's a look at the group's problem — and promise.

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

FREEDOM, Maine (AP) — Lona Ingraham baked a creamed onions casserole, Mattie Hotham a crockpot of yellow-eyed beans. Viola Greeley brought blueberry cake and molded salad.

"Grange members do like to eat," says Florence Overlock, helping out on the old 10-burner stove as other women trooped in with more desserts and hot dishes.

There's always plenty of food and lots of good conversation at potluck supper at Dinigo Grange, No. 98.

IT WAS A GOOD turnout that night, a special occasion marking the visit of officers from the State Grange, and 45 people sat shoulder to shoulder on the dining room benches, swapping stories or catching up on news from neighboring towns.

But most of those at the supper, and the business meeting that followed, were middle-aged and older, a worry to members who wonder if the Grange can still attract younger people to its ranks.

"It's too bad there aren't many more young people who want to join," says Mattie Hothan, lamenting that the younger generation seems to find the Grange unexciting. "You know the young people today," she says.

For more than a century, the nation's rural virtues have been embodied in the Grange, a fraternal order rooted in agriculture and the timeless patterns of country life. It's conservative and patriotic, reflecting the outlook of a sturdy yeomanry that long ago outnumbered the nation's city folk.

BUT TIMES have changed. There are fewer farmers, and the Grange has dropped in membership. Now, there is talk of a resurgence, prompted by changes in America's values and a revival of rural life.

In 1981 Maine recorded its first increase in Grange membership in nearly three decades, a gain of 34 members over the previous year. "It was small, but at least it was an increase," says State Master James E. Shores.

Membership in the State Grange has dropped from an all-time high of 63,000 in the early 1950s to its current level of 18,200. The trend is similar nationwide. Membership hit the 1 million mark around 1880, and numbered 700,000 three decades ago before dropping to around 450,000, where it has remained roughly the same for the past 10 years.

"In the Vietnam era, people were antisocial. They didn't want to join anything, they didn't want to belong to anything. Now, there seems to be a greater interest in community and family," says Shores.

Shores, one of the state leaders visiting the Grange hall in Freedom, says that the order traditionally does well in hard economic times when lack of money forces people to give up more expensive pleasures for the simpler ones.

LEADERS ALSO see cause for optimism in demographic trends showing a movement away from the cities and back to rural areas. While the 1980 census showed nearly all of Maine's large cities losing population, some of the most dramatic gains were recorded in small towns.

In Freedom, for example, the population went from 373 in 1970 to 453 a decade later. But there has been no letup in the decline in family farms, and more townspeople make their living in the mills and offices of Waterville than by tending dairy herds or raising chickens.

"When the Grange started, it was strictly agriculture. Now it's the fraternal aspects that keep it together. It's not just farmers now. There aren't enough of them left," says Shores.

The Grange, known formally as the Order of the Patrons of Husbandry, traces its origins to 1867. Its founding father was Oliver Hudson Kelley, who came up with the idea of a fraternal organization, made up of farmers, that would promote agriculture and help heal the scars caused by the Civil War.

THE ORDER spread quickly, especially in the Midwest where it won importance by championing the cause of farmers against monopolistic railroads that hauled their grain to market.

Today's Grange is strongest in the Pacific Northwet and the Northeast. Among the 42 states where the Grange is active, Washington has the largest membership, followed by California, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York and Oregon. Maine, which Shores says used to be known as "the Gibraltar of the Grange," ranks No. 7.

The Grange hall itself has long been a familiar part of the rural landscape, a small town community center that gets pressed into service for town meetings, 4-H gatherings, church functions and family receptions.

Midland High third baseman Daniel Castaneda has his eyes on Abilene High's Scott Hamilton as Hamilton dives into third. The play was set up when MHS second baseman Faustino Granado muffed a grounder that allowed Rick Womble to reach first. Granado recovered and threw to Castaneda, who put the tag on Hamilton in 5-5A game Friday at Memorial diamond.

Williams picks on 5-5A hurlers

Midland High's Mark Williams is beginning to be a pain-in-the-neck for District 5-5A pitchers.

Tuesday against Big Spring, he came to the plate as a pinch hitter in the sixth inning and ended Moe Rubio's hopes of a no-hit shutout with a double to right field. Saturday, he knocked Abilene High's Jay Tindall off the mound in the third when he punched an outside pitch over the right field fence for a two-run home run.

And he thought he was a pull hitter.

"It felt really good," said the right-handed Bulldog senior about his round-tripper. "I was kind of surprised because it was an opposite field hit. I usually pull down the left field line. It was an outside pitch and I put it over the right field fence."

WILLIAMS DIDN'T quit with the homer either. In his next appearance at the plate he drilled a shot down the third base line off reliever David Flores that Eagle third baseman Bobby Romero was able to knock down but not quite handle, and then he gave Jeff Waits (AHS' second reliever) the scare of his life in the sixth when he took a two-out, bases-loaded full count pitch and drilled it to deep left field where Dee Eubank hauled it in with only three feet to spare to end the inning.

"Three more feet and I would have had a grand slam too," said Williams. "It sure would have been pretty if that one went out, a home run and a grand slam in the same game. You couldn't beat it."

Williams wasn't the only one with a strong performance for the Bulldogs. Hipolito Zarate went 2-for-3 for an RBI and on defense caught a pop fly that would have dropped in for an RBI single in the second inning if he hadn't slid under it.

Joel De La Garza, 1-for-3 at the plate, had a similar catch in the first to end the inning; Tim Davis hit a double and single in four trips for one RBI; Faustino Granado made up for an error that allowed Rick Womble to reach first on a grounder when he threw out Scott Hamilton at third when he tried to stretch the miscue into an extra base; and Daniel Castaneda (2-for-3 with a double) and Jim Gunnels fielded bases loaded grounders in the seventh inning and threw the runners out at home to help reliever Wes Davis record a 7-5 save for starter Billy Miles.

MILES, WHO went six innings before getting into serious trouble in the seventh, recorded the victory to up his record to 5-1 in 5-5A play and 8-4 overall while Tindall was credited with the loss and fell to 6-1 in league play. It was Davis' second save of the season.

Miles got himself into minor troubles in the first, second, and fourth innings, but was able to rely on the Bulldog defense to help him pitch his way out of trouble. But not in the seventh.

Though the defense was still there, Miles had, as they say, lost his stuff. He gave up a single to Shane Gravens and then loaded the bases with back-to-back walks by Pat Sigala and Eubank. With three long outs to go and MHS holding a 7-2 lead, Coach Tim Whalen decided to go with Davis, his short reliever.

THE FIRST batter he faced took him to a full count before connecting for a single to left field that scored Gravens. Davis got Womble to hit a grounder to Castaneda who threw to Tim Davis to force out Sigala and followed with Bobby Romero's grounder to Gunnels who got Eubank on the force out at home. Abilene designated hitter Stan Standard pulled his team to within two runs when he connected for a two-RBI double scoring Hamilton and Womble before Davis got Tindall (replaced Waits in the seventh but didn't pitch again) to hit a grounder to Jose Carrasco who forced out Standard at second to end the game.

"I thought Wes did real good," said Whalen. "That was a real tough situation to come in on with the bases loaded. He got a couple of pitches up and they hit the, but he's going to do that because he's pitched so little.

"We played good defense," added Whalen. "Everytime when we win it comes down to the same thing, good defense."

The victory upped the Bulldog's record to 2-1 in the 5-5A and to 11-11 overall while Abilene fell to 1-2 and 16-7.

Cooper sends Lee Rebels reeling, 12-4

ABILENE — Four runs in the first inning and five in the third set up a 12-4 Abilene Cooper victory over Midland Lee in a battle for first place in the second half standings of District 5-5A here Saturday.

Trailing 9-0 in the top of the fourth and with two outs, Lee's Monty Chastain drove in Scott Carrell with a double to center field before Cooper could end the inning. The Rebels added a second run in the fifth when Bart Ryan reached first on an error by Cougar catcher Chuck Cathey and scored on Barry Blackwell's double to right field to trail by a 9-2 count.

IN THE bottom of the fifth, the Rebels lost more ground than they had gained in their previous two at bats as Cooper scored its final runs of the game for a 12-2 lead.

Lee's final tallies of the game came in the top of the seventh. With one out, Ryan singled to right and was forced out on Blackwell's grounder. Chris Parker connected for a ground rule double which sent Blackwell to third. Carrell brought them both home with a single to left-center, but it was no where near enough for the Rebels as the Cougars posted the victory.

The win left Cooper in a tie for first place with Big Spring (first half co-champion along with Abilene High) with 3-0 records while Midland Lee dropped into a tie for third with Midland High at 2-1.

Chuck Cathey led the Cougar hitting attack with a 3-for-3 performance while Billy Mitchell, Jeff Blackburn and Robert Wagstaff each added two hits. Carrell and Chastain led the Rebels with two hits each.

MITCHELL WENT the distance for Cooper to claim the victory for a 7-3 season record (4-1 in district) while Kerry Robertson suffered the loss and fell to 1-1 (both decisions from 5-5A play). Bryan Willis and Craig Ray each pitched in relief for Lee.

On Tuesday, the Rebels conclude their out-of-town season (they are the visiting team in the finale against Midland High on May 8) against a red hot Big Spring team. The Steers have won nine consecutive 5-5A games, their only loss dating back to March 23 against Abilene High in the district season opener.

Rockets have one more shot

SEATTLE (AP) — In the climb toward the National Basketball Association championship, it will be Seattle or Houston left on the ladder Sunday.

The winner of the NBA Western Conference three-game series goes on to face Midwest Division champion San Antonio in a best-of-seven matchup. The other team packs up and goes home.

The final, tie-breaking game between the SuperSonics and Rockets will be played Sunday in the Seattle Coliseum, where the SuperSonics stunned the Rockets 102-87 in the series' first game.

Houston came back to crush Seattle 91-70 in the second game, played Friday night in Houston, while Seattle set a record — the fewest points scored in NBA playoff game history.

Houston's Moses Malone figures he knows the key to Seattle play.

"We know that Gus Williams is the spark for them," Malone said. "If we stop him, we stop the spark. When he gets started, they all get started. When he gets the ball where he wants its, he's hard to stop."

Sonic Coach Lenny Wilkens said Seattle must force Houston to take poor shots and to create turnovers in order to win the best-of-three miniseries and advance in the playoffs.

"Sunday we've got to come out and execute our offense," said Seattle's James Donaldson. "More than their defense, our offense just fell apart."

"You can say it in a few words — our bad shooting and their good defense," said guard Gus Williams. "You have to give them some credit. But everyone must remember that these two games are past history. It's all on the line Sunday."

Rockets Coach Del Harris said that to beat Seattle, "It boils down to ohree things — solid defense, hard rebounding and moving the ball unselfishly on offense. Our task will be to keep them out of their running game and to move the ball around until we finally get that open man. Then, we are hard to beat."

Harris said the Rockets caught Seattle on a bad night Friday and didn't anticipate an easy third game for either team.

"It's going to be a great ballgame," he said. "We'll have to come up with a great effort. There really isn't any magic formula to beating Seattle. You just have to play fundamental hard-nosed defense, go to the boards hard and move the ball around."

The Sonics put themselves in the hole from the start Friday night with poor shooting, though the Rockets didn't hit much better. Houston shot 42 percent for the game and the Sonics hit only 35 percent.

"If you had told me before the game that Houston would score only 91 points, I would have said we had a good chance to win the game," said Seattle center Jack Sikma. "It was just bad shooting. I just hope it's not contagious."

Jackson win makes history

LUBBOCK — Midland High's Lydia Jackson became the first Tall City girl ever to qualify for the state girls track meet by winning the 100 meter dash here Saturday in a time of 12.07 in the Region I girls meet.

In winning the event, Jackson avenged her only loss of the season by beating out Ollie Shead of Palo Duro.

MHS coach Brenda Mitchell wasn't surprised by Jackson's performance. "Any sophomore who can make it to state has to be a real fine athelete," she said.

Jackson also anchored the 400 meter relay team with teammates Demetra Fort, Shelia Christian and Arlene Adams which finished third with a 48.9 clocking.

Mitchell was pleased with the sprint relay team's performance. "Our relay team ran as well as they could," she said. "There were some really fast times in the sprint relay.

"However, Lydia's time was not her best of the year. She had an 11.98 last week in a region qualifiers meet. So I think she can do even better."

Fort had a hard time in the triple jump competition as she failed to qualify for the finals. "I was really disappointed for Fort. She only had one jump and it wasn't good enough to qualify. On her other two attempts she scratched once and fell the other time," Mitchell said.

The 800 meter relay team of Penny Griffin, Jackson, Virgie Cooks and Adams failed to qualify for the finals when they dropped the baton in their trial heat on Friday in the preliminaries.

"We were right in the middle of a fast heat when we dropped the baton. I was really disappointed," Mitchell said.

Midland Lee's Felicia Farias placed fourth in the high jump with a leap of 5-2 to miss her state bid. Amarillo High's Lori Bolk won the high jump with a 5-5.

Lois Hall, Lee's only other Region I entry, finished fourth in her heat in the 400 meters Friday and failed to qualify for the region finals.

Carla Jackson of Big Spring was a triple winner as she won the 200 meters (24.73), long jump (19-1½), and set a meet record in the triple jump with a 37-7¼. Carla Sheldon of Cooper was the only other 5-5A representative to qualify for the state meet as she finished second in the long jump (18-11¾).

Amarillo High ran away with the team title with 96 points compared to Temple's 49. Big Spring finished third with 48 and MHS tallied 22 points for a ninth place finish.

The state meet will be run in two weeks in Austin.

Suns send Denver from playoffs

DENVER (AP) — Walter Davis and Dennis Johnson combined for 56 points and converted some crucial free throws down the stretch to lead the Phoenix Suns to a 124-119 victory over Denver Saturday night in the deciding game of a best-of-three National Basketball Association playoff series.

Phoenix now advances to the Western Conference semifinals against the Los Angeles Lakers. That best-of-seven series will begin Tuesday night in Los Angeles.

Phoenix outscored Denver 36-25 in the third quarter, including nine straight points that helped move the Suns to a 102-95 advantage after three periods.

But after a Phoenix basket by Kyle Macy to open the final quarter, Denver put together a nine-point run of its own to draw into a 104-104 tie with 8:47 remaining.

Browns shower dollars on Cousineau

CLEVELAND (AP) — Seven years ago, Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell gave Tom Cousineau an award for being the best high school football player in the city. Saturday, Modell made Cousineau the highest-paid player in Browns' history.

In a complex deal involving three National Football League teams, Cousineau wound up with a five-year Cleveland contract estimated to be worth about $2.5 million.

The 24-year-old linebacker spent the past three years with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League. Montreal had outbid the Buffalo Bills for Cousineau's services in 1979 after the Bills made him the No. 1 college player chosen in the NFL draft that year.

"Buffalo tied my hands when I was drafted, because Montreal's offer was significantly more," Cousineau said. "We really didn't have a choice. Buffalo knew what the offer was, and if they had matched it, I would have gone there. It wasn't a personality thing."

BUT AFTER three years in Canada, Cousineau decided to try the NFL.

"It was not an easy decision to go to Canada," he said. "I was raised on American football. I didn't know the names of the teams when I got up there. I didn't know the rules. But financially, I had to do it."

Cousineau said serious financial problems in the Monreal franchise contributed to his decision to return to the United States.

"The situation (in Montreal) has deteriorated," he said. "They have some problems. It's just not the place to be right now."

After notifying the NFL of his intention to play in the United States, Cousineau was wooed by the Houston Oilers, with whom he signed an offer sheet. Buffalo had the right to match the Oilers' offer and did — but only after Modell and Bills owner Ralph Wilson had agreed upon a trade that would send Cousineau to Cleveland in exchange for several draft choices, including a 1983 No. 1 pick.

"Houston playing in our division (the American Conference Central) did play a role in our determination to go after Tom with aggressiveness," Modell said. "We didn't want to see him go to Houston. I very rarely want to give up a No. 1 pick, but he is definitely worth the price tag."

Modell and Cousineau's agent, Jimmy Walsh, would not discuss the amount of money involved or other specifics of Cousineau's contract.

The Browns dropped to 5-11 last season after winning the division with an 11-5 record a year earlier. They hoped the acquisition of Cousineau, along with a strong draft this week, would help plug their leaky defense. The Browns have the third pick in the first round of the draft.

Cousineau, a former standout at Ohio State, was Montreal's rookie of the year in 1979, and in 1980 he was named outstanding defensive player in the CFL's Eastern Division. He missed most of last season due to a dislocated elbow.

HIS COACH at Montreal, Joe Scanella, previously was hired to coach Cleveland's running backs this season.

"Playing linebacker in the CFL is very difficult because of the use of so many multiple formations, plus free motion," said Cleveland Coach Sam Rutigliano. "Tom's not likely to be surprised by anything he sees in the NFL."

Rutigliano would not specify how he intended to use Cousineau, who has played mostly as a middle linebacker. However, it's likely the 6-3, 231-pounder will be moved to outside linebacker in place of Don Goode, joining Clay Matthews, Dick Ambrose and Robert L. Jackson on Cleveland's linebacking corps.

"It (the addition of Cousineau) is going to give us the opportunity to solve some problems we've been dealing with for four years, especially on the defensive side," Rutigliano said. "As you know, we're picking third (in the draft). Whoever we choose, we're going to come out with a fine player. We could become a dominant team defensively. We could get rich fast."

Even NFL hopefuls have their agents

SAN DIEGO (AP) — There will be more longshots than sure things when the 26 National Football League teams conduct their annual draft of college talent Tuesday and Wednesday. Wherever they are picked, however, it's a good bet the players will have agents with them when contract talks begin.

"It's an oddity to talk to any players directly, including free agents," said John Sanders, general manager of the San Diego Chargers. "In the past 10 years, we've had maybe three players who went on their own. They had agents when they came into the league, but they decided to handle their business affairs on their own."

"We have a saying in our business for potential clients," said Ernie Wright, a former NFL lineman who is now a player agent. "If you're negotiating for yourself, you've got a fool for a client."

Among the players Wright is representing this year is Rocky Klever, the all-time rushing leader at the University of Montana but an unknown quantity in the draft.

Unwilling to risk a possibly lucrative pro contract, Klever signed with Wright's Professional Sports Management, Inc., in March — long before he knew how high he'd be drafted. The fee — 5 percent of whatever NFL contract he lands.

The proliferation of player agents started with the enormous salaries won in the bidding war of the 1960s between the NFL and American Football League, said Sanders.

"When I first started handling contracts for the (Los Angeles) Rams in the mid-60s, I can't remember dealing with an agent," he said.

Wright, an offensive tackle, hasn't forgotten his first professional contract session — his own.

Lured by both the Rams in the NFL and the Chargers in the old AFL, the former Ohio State standout flew to Los Angeles with a salary figure in mind.

"Jim Parker, who was one of the best linemen in the NFL at the time, had signed for $8,500 and this was a couple years after that. I thought if I could get that, it would be a lot of money," said Wright, who spent 13 seasons with the Chargers and Cincinnati Bengals.

"When my wife and I arrived, we were given four crisp $20 bills and taken out on the town. The next day I met with the Chargers' management: Sid Gillman, Don Klosterman and Al Davis. After talking for a couple OF minutes, Sid finally says, 'What do you have in mind for a salary?'

Atnipp wins consolation

LUBBOCK — Vee Ann Atnipp won her consolation tennis match against Karen Shelby of Amarillo here Saturday, 6-2, 6-4, to become the Region I alternate to the state finals.

In Friday's action the Midland High senior drew a bye in the first round and beat Mayela Rivera of El Paso Ysleta in the quarterfinals, before losing to Sandra Torres of El Paso Irvin 3-6, 6-4, 4-6 in the semifinals.

Atnipp, who had severly twisted her ankle two weeks before regionals, said the injury didn't bother her much. "It put me about a half step off." she said.

In an attempt to disguise her injury, Atnipp had both ankles taped. "I was hoping no one could tell which one was hurt." she said.

Atnipp's only chance of making the state finals rest on the slim chance that one of the finalist from Region I cannot participate in the meet to be held in Austin May 7-8.

El Paso players captured the two state berths after an all El Paso final in the singles. Torres, who knocked Atnipp out of the state trip, fell to El Paso High's Janet Sterling, 6-1, 6-3.

Angell, Bramlett win

WACO, Texas (AP) — Russ Angell and Midland's Jeff Bramlett defeated Stephen F. Austin's Jack Sheehy and Steve Riza 7-5, 6-3 as Southwest Texas claimed its third straight Lone Star Conference tennis championship Saturday.

But the league planned to wait until Tuesday to declare a 1982 singles champion.

Liz Alvarado of Midland College shows the form that helped her capture the No. 1 women's singles title in the WJCAC tournament Saturday at Midland College. The MC women won the conference team crown also.

MC, NMMI win WJCAC net titles

The Midland College women and the New Mexico Military Institute men put the final touches on the Western Junior College Athletic Conference tennis championship with victories in the final conference tournament of the year at Midland College Saturday.

The Chaparral women easily won the women's division with nine points while NMMI was a distant second with four. NMMI took the men's division with 12 points while MC was second with 10. The Region V tournament will be held at MC next weekend with the top two earning berths in the national JC tournament.

MC captured victories in both of the No. 1 singles battles with Liz Alvarado defeating former All-American Yousho Yoshida of NMMI, 6-2, 3-6, 6-4, while Tony Macken beat NMMI's Shorchi Horiuchi, 6-4, 5-7, 6-2.

In the No. 2 singles, MC's Jody Wertenberger whipped NMMI's April Webb, 6-3, 6-4 in the finals while MC's Barry King won a 6-2, 6-4 match over NMMI's Ben Sparkman for another MC sweep.

In the No. 3 singles, NMMI's Kerri Healey handed the MC women its only loss in 10 matches with a 6-4, 7-6 win over Karen Mannheimer. In the men's No. 3 singles, Carlos Vargas of NMMI won a 3-6, 6-2, 6-3 match over MC's Luis Zavala.

In the No. 4 singles, MC's Kym Somerville defeated Odessa College's Elsa Roman, 6-0, 6-2, in the finals while NMMI's George Cordoba took a 6-4, 6-4 win over South Plains' Jeff Porter.

NMMI's Tolito Gonzales took the men's No. 5 singles title with a 7-6, 3-6, 6-4 win over MC's Andre Peters while Krishan Wickorsinge of NMMI took the No. 6 title with a 6-2, 6-0 win over OC's Steve Lyle.

The MC women also won the No. 2 doubles title with Wertenberger and Sommerville teaming for a 4-6, 6-4, 6-2 win over South Plains' Tammy Merrifield and Brenda Bewley. The No. 1 doubles was not complete in a match between OC and NMMI teams, but that match will have no bearing on the final standings.

The MC men took two doubles crowns with Macken and Zavala defeating Sparkman and Derek Crosser of NMMI, 7-6, 2-6, 6-1, in the No. 1 finals. The No. 2 crown went to Monty Saul and King of MC with a 6-4, 6-4 win over Frank Karam and Rick Cargill of South Plains. OC's Bill Afford and Lyle took the No. 3 crown with a 6-2, 6-0 win over NMMI's Cordoba and Gonzales.

In a sports oddity, the conference titles have no bearing on the Region V tournament where all the players will be eligible again next week. Only the Region V meet is where national berths are earned.

Midland wrecks Amarillo Sox, 8-4

AMARILLO — Maybe all the Midland Cubs needed was a few rainouts at home to get them back on track because here Friday night Midland ran to an 8-4 victory over the Amarillo Gold Sox in a Texas League outing.

The victory, the fifth for the Cubs, was the fourth of the year against Amarillo in six outings. Carlos Gill went six innings to even his record at 1-1 and Jim Gerlach picked up his second save of the year in relief.

The Cubs bombed loser Bill Long for six runs in the third inning as Fritz Connally keyed the rally with a bases loaded single, which scored two runs. Mike Kelly and Joe Carter also had RBIs in the inning.

The big frame wiped out a 2-0 lead Amarillo had posted with two unearned runs off Gill in the second. In fact, three of the four runs were unearned for Amarillo as the recent layoff did seem to hurt the Cubs in the field. Midland committed four errors in the game.

The only earned run for Amarillo came in the fifth off Gill when Brian Greer got an RBI double.

Midland scored two insurance runs in the fifth when Carter was hit in the face with a pitch that took him out of the game and Carmello Martinez followed with a double to set up Connally's two-run double. Connally had a great night at the plate, going 3-for-5 with 4 RBI.

Midland left eight runners on base, but Amarillo stranded 10. However, the Cubs got eight runs on 13 hits.

The Cubs and Gold Sox go again today with a 2 p.m. contest with Tom Spino (0-1) on the mound for Midland against Bob Macias (0-2).

Raiders sweep Hogs in twinbill

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Texas Tech pitcher Keith Wood scattered eight hits in the first game and the Red Raiders outslugged Arkansas in the second to take a Southwest Conference baseball doubleheader from the Razorbacks Saturday.

Tech won the first game, 4-3, and the nightcap 11-8 and that was the only SWC action Saturday as all other games fell to rain.

Rams pull upset over favored ACU

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Chandler Pruitt set a meet record in the 5,000-meter run and also took first in the 1,500-meter run Saturday as Angelo State won the 49th Annual Lone Star Conference track and field meet, dethroning Abilene Christian for the first time since 1977.

Pruitt ran the 5,000-meter in 14:55.99 and the 1,500-meter in 3:55.64.

Steve Parker of Abilene Christian set a meet record of 14.12 in the 110-meter high hurdles and won the 400-meter intermediate hurdles with 52.95. He also ran a leg on the Wildcat 400-meter relay team, which set a meet record with a 40.0.

Abilene Christian's Billy Olson, the American outdoor record-holder in the pole vault with 18-8 3/4, clinched his fourth LSC title. He stopped at 15-0 because of the soggy conditions at the Mance Junior High School field.

Big Spring, Cooper hold 5-5A's second half lead

Two of three teams remained on top of the District 5-5A second half baseball standings Saturday while the other dropped into a tie for third.

Big Spring, a first half co-champion along with Abilene High, posted a 9-4 victory over Odessa Permian Saturday to remain on top with Abilene Cooper, a 12-4 winner over Midland Lee. Both teams are unbeaten at 3-0.

Midland High, 2-1, dimmed Abilene High's hopes of a second half title by handing the Eagles, 1-2, a 7-5 loss and San Angelo recorded its first second half victory by blanking winless Odessa High 6-0.

Adam Rodriquez went four innings for Big Spring to record the victory with Pete Valenzuela pitching in relief while Bruce Hollander suffered the loss. Craig Steen and Kevin Timmons also saw action for the Panthers.

Big Spring jumped out to a 9-0 lead with two runs in each of the first and second innings and the final five in the third. Permian came alive in the fourth to score three and added its final tally in the fifth.

Stace Gaddy led Mojo's come back attempt with a two-run home run in the fourth.

San Angelo scored two runs in the first and second inning against Odessa High and added one in the fifth and sixth while pitcher Zeke Barron hurled a three-hit shutout at Odessa High.

The win was the first of the second half race for the Bobcats, 1-2, while OHS fell to 0-3 and have lost all 10 of its 5-5A games so far this season.

Coles sinks five birdies

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Tour veteran Janet Coles fired five birdies to take the lead in the rain-interrupted second round of the $150,000 Orlando Lady Classic Saturday, but the leader in the clubhouse after the full 36 holes was second-year pro Chris Johnson.

Coles was 7 under par after 14 holes and was to complete her round early Sunday along with 20 others unable to finish because of rain and darkness.

First-round leader Kathy Postlewait remained at 6 under par after 14 holes.

Johnson, still looking for her first victory, shot a 4-under-par 68 to go with her opening 73 for a 141 total over the rain-swept 6,106-yard Rio Pinar Country Club course. This put Johnson at 1-under with one round to go in the 54-hole event.

Postlewait and Coles were in the same final threesome and had to call it a day after completing only 14 holes. It took them five hours to get that far after two rain delays earlier in the day.

Coles, a one-time winner in her six years on the women's tour, started the day at 2-under, 4 shots behind Postlewait. But while they matched birdies for awhile, Postlewait had a double-bogey on the par-3 fourth hole and a bogey on the 12th to slip one behind Coles.

The two leaders and 19 others who teed off late Saturday will have to take up where they left off early Sunday before beginning the final 18 later in the day.

Hoch likes his golf in rain

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Scott Hoch birdied three of four holes immediately after the rains came and slogged into a one-stroke lead Saturday in the uncompleted second round of the weather-disrupted $400,000 USF&G-New Orleans Open Golf Tournament that now is set for a Monday finish.

Hoch, 26, a runner-up at Doral this year and seeking his first PGA Tour title, finished two rounds over the rain-soaked Lakewood Country Club course at 136, 8 under par.

It appeared his score would stand up as the lead even though 30 players were stranded by the afternoon rains that flooded the course and extended the tournament's schedule an extra day.

Of those still on the course when play was held up, Steve Melnyk was in the best position. He was 4 under par for the tournament with three holes to play. He and the other 29 who were stopped by the flooded conditions were scheduled to come back Sunday morning to complete their rounds—weather permitting.

And it seemed unlikely the weather would permit. The forecast called for an 80 percent chance of rain continuing Sunday on the course that was saturated by earlier showers that washed out Thursday's play and threw the tournament schedule into disarray.

The completion of the second round now is set to start at 7:30 a.m. Sunday. When all players have completed their rounds, the field will be cut to the low 60 scorers and the third round will begin about 9:30 a.m. The final round now is set for Monday.

While officials were juggling the tournament format, Jack Nicklaus made preparations to return home to Florida.

Nicklaus, who missed the cut in two of his last three starts, again seemed unlikely to have qualified for the final two rounds.

Nicklaus bogeyed his final hole in a driving rain, finishing off a 4-over-par 76 that left him at 147. The cut figure will not be determined until all rounds have been completed, but it appeared highly unlikely Nicklaus would qualify.

"Not at 147," he said.

"I didn't play all that badly," he said. "I'm not unhappy with the way I'm playing. It's just the putting. I had one 3-putt and one 1-putt. You can't score with one 1-putt."

Bob Shearer, the soft-spoken Australian who held the first round lead, managed a 71 and was one off the pace at 137. He was followed by Tom Jenkins, who birdied three of his last four holes for a 69 and a 138 total.

The group at 139 included Larry Ziegler, Gary Koch and Lon Hinkle, who has been out of action with a shoulder injury for about three months. Ziegler had a second round 71, Koch 68 and Hinkle 69.

Burleson is now 7-footer

RANKIN — Greenwood's Stuart Burleson set the District 7-A track meet on fire here Saturday, qualifying for the Region I meet in two weeks in three events, but his leap of seven-feet in the high jump was what had heads turning.

Rankin qualified five individuals and two relays for the region meet while Greenwood has four individuals with Carl Longley added in the pole vault with a 12-6.

Rankin won five events. Terry Turner won the 200 meters with a 23.12 while Dennis Black won the 400 meters with a 50.43 and placed second in the long jump with a 20-4½. Frank Quiroz won the 1600 with a 4:57.71 and the Red Devils won the sprint relay with a 44.63 and the 1600 relay with a 3:28.45.

Sam Sneed gets ready to catch his ball from partner Don January Saturday after sinking a birdie putt in the Legends of Golf Tournament. Sneed and January own a commanding eight-stroke lead heading into today's final round.

Sneed, January post a 60

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Sam Snead and Don January charged through the cold and mist with a 10-under par 60 Saturday to take a commanding 8-shot shot lead in the rich Liberty Mutual Legends of Golf Tournament.

The 69-year-old Snead and the 52-year-old January posted a 36-hole best- ball total of 122 which was 18-under par over soggy Onion Creek Golf Club.

The tournament was shortened to 54-holes after Thursday's round was cancelled by heavy rain.

Bob Toski and Japan's Chin-Sei-Ha maneuvered into second place tie with Julius Boros and Miller Barber with an 8-under par 62 for a 10-under par 130 thanks to six birdies by the red-hot Toski, regarded at the premier teaching pro in the game.

Boros and Barber birdied the last four holes for a 5-under par 65 and 130.

Total prize money is $450,000 with the winners splitting a hefty $100,000. Toski's career earnings were only $101,253.

With heavy overnight rains turning portions of the course into a quagmire, the players were allowed to lift and clean the ball even in the rough. The slow greens allowed them to bang their putts hard at the hole.

Snead, who won this tournament five years ago with Gardner Dickinson, had six birdies, including a 35-footer from off the green on No. 12.

January-Snead went out in 31 and came home in 29.

Defending champions Gene Littler and Bob Rosburg, just a shot back when play started on the damp, 55-degree day struggled to a 2-under par 68 and were 9 shots back.

Snead and January finished second in this tournament two years ago, blowing a big lead on the final day. They were eighth in 1981.

January said "Sam just played great. I'm just trying to get out of his way."

Rick Mears blows away record

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Defending national champion Rick Mears blew away the track qualifying record at Atlanta International Raceway Saturday, winning the pole position for the Indy car half of the Stroh's Twin 200s.

Mears, who won Indy car season opener last month at Phoenix, Ariz., burned up the 1.522-mile, high-banked asphalt oval at an average speed of 204.463 mph.

That was well above the all-time track qualifying mark of 203.121 mph, set in another Indy car by Bobby Unser in 1979.

Mears, driving a Penske PC-10, roared to a 203.121 lap on the first of his two qualifying trips around the quick oval.

That first lap was good enough to dislodge Mario Andretti, whose 201.864 lap in a Wildcat was the fastest of the early qualifiers, from the top spot. His second lap simply nailed down the pole and raised the new record a bit higher.

In all, five cars went over the 200 mph mark.

Starting the second row in Sunday's second race, following the 200-mile opener featuring American Speed Association stock cars, will be Mears' teammate Kevin Cogan, 201.360, and Tom Sneva, 200.725 in a March.

In row three will be Al Unser, 200.314 in the Midland Longhorn owned by Bobby Hillin, and Andretti's teammate Gordon Johncock, 198.601 in a Wildcat.

Johnny Rutherford, driving the Midland entry of Jim Hall, will be in the eighth position after posting a speed of 197.962. In a short race such as this, the Chaparral team appears to be in trouble.

Do pros regard Allen as No. 1?

As Heisman Trophy winner, Marcus Allen was ajudged the No. 1 college football player in the nation. But will he be the No. 1 player picked in this week's National Football League draft?

There seems to be some hesitancy about Allen's pro football future.

After Charles White and Ricky Bell, the tendency is to be skeptical of USC tailbacks as pros. None has lived up to the standard established by O.J. Simpson and the suspicion is that the Trojan tailbacks get too much credit for what the Trojan line accomplishes.

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

Simpson of course was a graceful, fluid, elusive roadrunner, who could make a lineman look like an Anthony Munoz. White, Bell and Allen were cut out of a different mold. In comparison to O.J., they were steady, durable plodders.

IN ANY case, the according to some pro scouts, Allen not only will not be a No. 1 choice, it's conceivable he might not even go in the first round, although that seems far-fetched. The publicity value alone of the Heisman should guarantee a round one pick.

A team like the New England Patriots can ill afford to squander a No. 1 pick, so the reasoning goes, on an Allen, when their needs are so much greater in other areas. What's the point of having an Allen, if there's no one to clear the way for him?

One booster of Allen is Notre Dame Coach Gerry Faust, who when in Midland a couple of months ago to sign Midland High tight end Wally Kleine, declared that he felt Allen was a legitimate first round pick.

"WE STOPPED Marcus about as effectively as anyone did all season," Faust said, "but I still think he will make a good pro player. The thing about Allen is that he can do so many things. He can catch the ball out of the backfield and, above all, he is durable."

As we recall, Marcus also did the blocking for White back in his freshman and sophomore seasons. In fact, it was at Lubbock against Texas Tech when White, then a senior, suffered an injury and Marcus had his first big game as a running back.

So Allen may not go No. 1 and he may not be another O.J. as a record-setting ground gainer in the NFL, but then offense isn't a one-way street for him either.

SPUD WEBB has signed a letter of intent to play basketball with North Texas State, but the question remains as to whether he will play for the Eagles next year.

The fact that he has signed is not an ironclad pledge to play for North Texas State. The 5-6 point guard who meant so much to Midland College's National Junior College championship last year still has the option of playing another year at MC, if he so decides.

Theories circulating are that Spud's signing was a tactical ploy to keep the recruiters off his back. Others are that he really hasn't made up his mind for sure.

If Spud returns to MC and becomes the Chaparrals' third straight NJCAA All-America, as many people suspect he will, he might have as many options open next season as Puntus Wilson, who is still trying to make up his mind.

So keep your fingers crossed, MC's 5-8 i.e. point guard just might return to help the Chaparrals make it two national titles in a row. And maybe we coax Jerry Stone down from the Hodge carillon tower.

Larry Pashnick, a rookie for the Detroit Tigers, picked up his first major league victory Saturday by defeating the New York Yankees with this tongue-in-cheek form.

Tiger homer binge mauls Yankees, 7-2

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Herndon blasted a three-run homer, and Kirk Gibson and Jerry Turner added solo shots as Detroit downed the New York Yankees 7-2 Saturday, giving the Tigers their eighth straight victory and rookie Larry Pashnick his first major-league win.

Herndon's homer gave Detroit its 5-2 margin in the sixth after Gibson had walked and Richie Hebner rapped a broken-bat single off starter and loser Doyle Alexander.

Alexander was making his first appearance after returning to new York from San Francisco in a spring-training trade. Left-hander Shane Rawley relieved him to start the seventh, and George Frazier pitched the ninth, yielding an RBI double to John Wockenfuss and a run-scoring single by Chet Lemon.

Vuckovich nails Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Pete Vuckovich hurled a three-hitter and Roy Howell slugged a two-run homer to lead the Milwaukee Brewers to a 4-1 victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday night.

Howell hit his first homer of the season in the second inning, straight into a 20-mile-per-hour wind blowing in from right field, with Ted Simmons on first via a single.

Vuckovich, 2-2, struck out seven and walked three in pitching his first complete game of the season. The only hits off Vuckovich were singles by Lee Mazzilli in the first inning, Buddy Bell in the sixth and an RBI single by Pat Putnam in the ninth.

Vuckovich outshone Texas starter Dave Schmidt, 0-1, who gave up 10 hits in 8 1-3 innings.

The Brewers added two runs in the ninth on an RBI single by Gorman Thomas that scored Simmons for the second time in the game and a sacrifice fly by Robin Yount.

Cecil Cooper had three hits for the Brewers.

Birds end losing streak

BALTIMORE (AP) — Eddie Murray's second home run of the game, a three-run shot in the seventh inning, gave the Baltimore Orioles a 7-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox Saturday night and snapped a nine-game losing streak.

Murray, who leads the American League with a .519 average and 1.000 slugging percentage, has hit safely in 17 consecutive games dating back to last year and has 15 runs batted in for the season. It was the fourth time the switch-hitter had connected from both sides of the plate in the same game.

Al Bumbry's third hit of the game, a single off reliever Kevin Hickey, 1-1, launched the winning rally. After Rich Dauer was retired for the second out, Lamarr Hoyt replaced Hickey.

Yaz paces Bosox win

TORONTO (AP) — Boston's elder statesman, Carl Yastrzemski, capped a five-run fifth inning with a three-run homer, and the Red Sox withstood a late Toronto rally to defeat the Blue Jays 8-7 Saturday.

Glenn Hoffman ignited the big inning with a single to center against Toronto starter Dave Stieb, 0-2, and moved to third on Rick Miller's single. Gary Allenson chased Hoffman home with a double that scored Hoffman and sent Miller to third.

Jerry Remy's double to left scored Miller, and Allenson went to third. After Dwight Evans grounded out, Allenson was tagged out at the plate when Jim Rice hit into a fielder's choice.

Yastrzemski then followed with his fourth homer of the season and 430th of his major league career, a line drive smash over the fence in right field, to give Boston a 6-0 lead.

KC spanks Cleveland

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Paul Splittorff and Dan Quisenberry combined on a five-hitter and John Wathan smashed two key hits Saturday night, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 5-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Splittorff, making his first start at home, held the Indians hitless until Bake McBride led off the fifth with an infield single. Quisenberry relieved the veteran left-hander with two outs in the seventh and earned his fifth save.

Cardinals run string to 12

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The free-swinging St. Louis Cardinals continue to take the season one game at a time, and that suits former Phillies Lonnie Smith and Dane Iorg.

Smith drove in two insurance runs with an eighth-inning single and Iorg went 4-for-4 to lead the Cardinals to their 12th straight triumph, a 7-4 victory over Philadelphia on Saturday.

"I like to play against the Phillies," said Iorg, who made his major league debut with Philadelphia in 1977 before being traded to St. Louis the same year. "I like to beat them."

Smith, traded to the Cardinals in the off-season, said he may have been trying too hard against his former teammates.

"I had been looking for too perfect a pitch in my first four at-bats. But that last time up, I was able to think the ball over the middle for two runs," said Smith, who had three RBI.

St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said the Cardinals were unconcerned about prolonging their victory string. "Nobody's thinking about the streak. We're not doing anything different. We're just taking them one at a time."

Philadelphia Manager Pat Corrales, whose team slipped to 3-11, was quiet after the game. "You saw it," he said. "We threw it away."

The Cardinals snapped a 4-4 tie in the eighth inning with three runs off reliever Ed Farmer, 0-1. With one out, Iorg reached on an infield hit. Pinch-runner David Green stole second and, after Ken Oberkfell was intentionally walked, Ozzie Smith singled to load the bases.

Orlando Sanchez, pinch-hitting for reliever Doug Bair, 1-0, drove in one run with a ground out. Lonnie Smith then singled in Oberkfell and Ozzie Smith.

The St. Louis rally spoiled a fine hitting effort by Philadelphia catcher Bo Diaz, who knocked in all four Philadelphia runs with two homers and two doubles. He had staked Philadelphia to a 2-0 lead in the second. He followed a single by Garry Maddox with his third homer of the year, off St. Louis starter Joaquin Andujar.

Diaz led off the fourth with another towering homer to left, and he doubled in Matthews in the sixth.

The Cardinals, closing in on the team's record 14-game winning streak set in 1935, scored in the fifth on singles by Iorg, Oberkfell and Lonnie Smith. Iorg and Oberkfell singled in runs in the sixth.

The Cardinals made it 4-4 in the seventh when Tito Landrum, pinch-running for pinch-hitter Steve Braun, scored from first when third baseman Ivan DeJesus fielded a Keith Hernandez grounder but threw wildly past first.

St. Louis reliever Bruce Sutter pitched the final two innings and earned his sixth save.

Padres nip Braves again

ATLANTA (AP) — A two-run throwing error by pitcher Rick Camp allowed San Diego to score the go-ahead runs as the Padres downed the Atlanta Braves 6-4 for their 10th straight victory Saturday night.

The Padres, trailing 4-2, took the lead with a four-run eighth inning rally off Atlanta's two star relievers, Gene Garber and Camp.

Broderick Perkins drew a one-out walk and pinch-hitter Randy Bass was hit by a pitch and then yielded to pinch-runner Dave Edwards.

Gene Richards singled to left, scoring Perkins, and Juan Bonilla follwed with a bad-hop single past short that scored Edwards and tied the game at 4-4. Richards reached third and Bonilla second on the throw to the plate and Garry Templeton was walked intentionally, loading the bases.

Ruppert Jones then hit a high chopper to Camp, who threw into the dirt past the plate, allowing both Richards and Bonilla to score.

The 10th consecutive victory tied a club record for San Diego set in 1978.

It was the third loss in a row for the Braves, who had opened the season with 13 consecutive victories.

Parker sinks Cubs, 8-5

CHICAGO (AP) — Dave Parker's run-scoring double keyed a two-run seventh inning that helped Pittsburgh overcome a five-run deficit, and Don Robinson pitched the Pirates to a 8-5 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Saturday.

The Pirates broke through for three runs in the fifth, added another in the sixth on Dale Berra's first homer and finally went ahead in the seventh.

Robinson worked 6 2-3 innings in relief of Ross Baumgarten, giving up three hits for his first victory this year. He also went 3-for-4 at the plate and drove in a pair of insurance runs in the ninth with a single.

Robinson gave up Keith Moreland's homer in the third and did not allow another hit until Larry Bowa doubled with one out in the seventh. Cubs reliever Randy Martz, 0-2, was tagged with the loss.

Johnny Ray opened the Pirates seventh with a single and scored on Parker's double. Parker scored the go-ahead run on Jason Thompson's single.

The Pirates loaded the bases in the fifth on singles by Berra and Robinson and a walk to Omar Moreno. Berra scored as Ray grounded out, Robinson scored on Parker's sacrifice fly and Moreno came home on a single by Thompson.

The Cubs broke on top with five runs in the third. Gary Woods and Bowa singled, and Bump Wills drew a base-filling walk. Ryne Sandberg doubled in two runs, and, after another run scored on an error by first baseman Thompson on a pickoff throw, Moreland capped the rally with a two-run homer, his sixth.

Puleo blanks Expos, 1-0

MONTREAL (AP) — John Stearns drove in a run with a seventh-inning double, and Charlie Puleo combined with two relivers on a four-hit shutout as the New York Mets beat the Montreal Expos 1-0 Saturday.

Mets right-hander Neil Allen earned his fifth save by working out of a one-out, bases-loaded jam in the eighth inning.

Stearns' drive down the left-field line off loser Ray Burris, 0-3, drove in Gary Rajsich, who had doubled off the right-field wall. The hits were the third and fourth off Burris, who previously had not allowed a baserunner to reach second.

Puleo, 2-1, overcame early control problems — he walked six — and surrendered only three hits until he was replaced by Falcone in the seventh.

Reds shade Astros, 3-2

HOUSTON (AP) — Dave Concepcion and Johnny Bench drove home first-inning runs with a double and single to lead the Cincinnati Reds to a 3-2 victory over the Houston Astros Saturday night.

The Reds jumped on Astros starter Bob Knepper, 1-2, for all three runs while Frank Pastore, 2-1, was shutting out the Astros through the first five innings.

Ed Milner led off Cincinnati's first inning with a strikeout and Ron Oester singled prior to the consecutive RBI hits by Concepcion and Bench. Former Astros center fielder Cesar Cedeno then hit into a double play to end the inning.

The Astros also ended the next two innings with double plays before the Reds pushed across their third run in the fourth on Mike Vail's single after Cedeno had doubled to center field.

Pastore allowed only three hits and did not permit a Houston baserunner past first base until the fifth inning when he lost his shutout. Denny Walling's doubled to the warning track in right field, went to third on Terry Puhl's fly ball and scored on Ray Knight's sacrifice fly to Cedeno in center field.

The second Houston run came home on Alan Ashby's RBI single in the ninth off reliever Bob Shirley. Tom Hume came in to get the last three outs and post his fourth save.

After yielding Vail's run-scoring single in the fourth inning, Knepper retired the next 10 Cincinnati batters in order before he was lifted for a pinch-hitter in the seventh inning.

Gibson throws a tantrum

NEW YORK (AP) — Detroit Tigers center fielder Kirk Gibson threw a brief tantrum when he was lifted in the middle of the seventh inning of a 7-2 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday, then quickly patched up any feud he might have had with Manager Sparky Anderson.

Gibson misplayed two balls to center field and was removed in the bottom of the seventh by Anderson. As Gibson entered the dugout, he slammed his sunglasses against the wall and stormed down the runway into the locker room.

It appeared initially that Gibson had been taken out for his fielding, but Anderson said later that Gibson had injured his left calf muscle.

"I don't like the way it happened," Gibson said. He said he was embarrassed when he was lifted in front of 25,585 spectators in mid-inning. "It never happened to me before."

"I've never showed up a player in my career," Anderson told reporters later. "I don't do that. You guys are trying to make a big thing out of this. That's what New York is all about, rumors. And I don't need that. I could care less what you write."

In the bottom of the seventh, with one out and the Tigers leading 5-1, Willie Randolph lined what looked like a single to center, but it scooted past Gibson for a triple.

"I thought I had a chance to catch the ball," Gibson said. "When I saw I couldn't, I just stopped dead in my tracks. It just got by me."

Anglers are Lake Guererro, Mexico, may catch larger fish in a few years if the 221 Florida largemouth brood bass from Texas develop as anticipated. The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department recently delivered the fish, up to two pounds in size, to the Tamauluipas hatchery and when they left Huntsville, they were almost ready to spawn.

The infushion of fast-growing fish should result in trophy bass in about five years. Presently, the average size is less than three pounds.

Guererro is probably one of the world's finest producing bass fisheries and has yielded thousands of bass to visiting anglers over the last 10 years. But in the last four or five years the size of Guererro bass has dropped off and the trophy catch is a rarity.

Florida bass should thrive at Guerrero. Climate, water conditions and vegetation are similar to that of Florida lakes.

THE TWPWD announced that five public reservoirs in Texas produced 12-pound plus largemouth bass with Houston County Lake near Crockett supplying a 12 1/2 pounder. Others producing 12 pounders or better are Monticello, Welsh, Calaveras, Fayette County and Livingston. The current record from Lake Echo near Athens is 15-8 by John Alexander, Richardson, Feb. 1981.

The Houston County catch was no fluke. Ten and 11 pounders also have been taken in recent weeks.

"Most of the really large bass are caught from mid-January through mid-March," says Bob Kemp, TPWD director of fisheries, "so I don't expect to see a new state record until then."

Biologists examining the 12-pounders report they were either Florida strain or hybrid crosses between Floridas and native largemouths.

Calaveras has established a reputation as a trophy lake, but Lake Braunig may vie for the limelight. Biologists surveying the lake recently netted largemouths going 10-4, 10-3, 9-8, 9-6, 9-5 and 7-10. Also netted were striped white bass hybrids at 9-11, 9-7, 9-6, 6-14.

A number of five to eight pound redfish were netted along with some smaller redfish, stocked last spring. Braunig, like Calaveras, is an electric power plant cooling reservoir which suports good populations of forage species as well as sport fish.

Behringer Shows 'em in tourney

OSAGE BEACH, Mo. (AP) — Randy Behringer of Waco, Texas, reeled in three bass totaling 10 pounds, 13 ounces Friday to win the Missouri Invitational national professional bass tournament.

Behringer's catch boosted his three-day total to 41 pounds, 9 ounces, which narrowly defeated the 40 pounds, 6 ounces caught by second-place finisher Ricky Clunn of Montgomery, Texas.

Jimmy Crisp of Seymour, Mo., was third with 39 pounds, 13 ounces, followed by Basil Bacon of Springfield, Mo., with 37 pounds, 14 ounces, and Kelous Kizer of Greenwood, Ind., with 37 pounds, 11 ounces.

Behringer, a 36-year-old insurance agent, received $5,000 in cash and a $7,000 bass boat for winning the tournament at Lake of the Ozarks.

Okay, what's most deadly fish in world?

BY ROD N. REELE

What is the most deadly fish in the world? The barracuda...the piranha...or how about the great white shark? A scuba diver wouldn't want to be locked in a sunken submarine with any one of them, but...

...The most terrifying fish, according to the current Sports Afield, is the Candiru, a three-inch long South American catfish with a slender body and sharp erectile spines.

What makes the fish so horrible is its nasty habit of attacking unsuspecting swimmers in a most unpleasant way. Should a bather seek "total relief" in warm candiru waters, the catfish will detect the indelicacy and swim upstream, invading the bather's, er, relieving mechanism. At that point, the candiru flares its spines, making withdrawal of the small fish painful if not possible.

AND DOWN at Lake Spence, the great White Bass were terrorizing anglers with their vicious unpremeditated attacks on dangling fishing lines. Almost as bad were the crappie , striped bass and black bass.

Among sportsmen reporting attacks were Mike McPherson and Robert DeLogarza, 22 channel cats enraged at worms; Dennis Duff and John LaForge, two channel cats and an unruly mob of 48 crappie going to one pound. All of Midland. Jim Gotcher, Odessa, managed to beat off eight black bass to three pounds after an attack on his purple worm and black lizzard. Lloyd Coe, Midland, was victim of a seven-striper. All anglers are advised to keep a loose paddle in their boats in case of sudden assault...

New fight rages over fish-rich Big Horn

By NORM CLARKE

FORT SMITH, Mont. (AP) — For the past 10 years, the Big Horn River has been a battleground over fishing and hunting rights. By edict of the Crow tribe, non-Indians were barred from the river, which is on reservation land.

Reopened late last year by a U.S. Supreme Court decision, the Big Horn River today is coursing toward a new place in history. Veteran outdoorsmen say it ranks among the nation's prime trout streams and waterfowl havens.

"It's the finest big-fish stream in the U.S.," said Ralph Stewart, manager of the Big Horn River Guide Co., as he pointed a jet boat upstream on a cool, clear spring day.

The countryside seems unchanged from a century ago, when Gen. Armstrong Custer's troops fell to Sioux forces 20 miles away on the Little Big Horn.

Backdropped against the snow-covered Big Horn Mountains, hundreds of wild ducks burst from the water into flight. A herd of horses nervously watches on the snow-patched river bank. To the left, a bald eagle, missing no moving thing, sits atop a tall, bare cottonwood tree.

Amid talk of lunker trout, Stewart's associate, Jim Pickens, the boat pilot and longtime guide, expertly gunned the craft toward a favorite hole.

"Jim knows more about this river than any man. He was one of the first to fish it," said Stewart, 51, a native of Lovell, Wyo.

The river's greatness, Pickens said, is due to the Yellowtail Dam, a hydroelectric project built in the mid-1960s for energy and flood control.

Because of the steady release of warm water through the dam, the 75-mile river never freezes, making it a year-around haven for fish and waterfowl.

"Before the dam was built, the Big Horn was just a muddy mess, with nothing but carp, suckers and sturgeon," said Pickens, 41, a real estate agent in Billings, 70 miles away. "The dam cleared it up."

Trout thrive on the river's high mineral content and moss rich with "every kind of critter there is," including freshwater shrimp, Pickens said.

"There are 30-pounders in here," said Stewart, who a month earlier caught the fish of his life, a 12-pound rainbow.

The largest trout ever taken from the Big Horn, Pickens said, was a 16-pounder, but most average between four and five pounds.

A few minutes later, Stewart hauled in a five-pound rainbow near a beaver lodge, but promptely turned it loose.

"The good Lord gave me my one big fish," he said. "I'll never keep another one."

Timber wolves bring howl from environmentalists

By BILL WERONKA

GRAND RAPIDS, Minn. (AP) — Feelings run to extremes about Minnesota's 1,200 timber wolves. Environmentalists want to protect them at all costs, while farmers and hunters want them destroyed.

"The wolf has survived in spite of man and some people resent that. They resent their independence," said Karlyn Berg, known to some as the "Wolf Lady" for her efforts to protect the animals.

"What good are the wolves?" counters Clarence Priem, a farmer from Big Fork who has lost cows to wolves. "Why would anybody think they're going to run out? We had a bounty on them and they didn't run out. It's just a shame when a farmer can't protect his own cattle."

In 1981, 38 Minnesota farms had verified wolf kills, losing six cows, 55 calves, 242 sheep, 725 turkey, 10 geese, eight goats, one pig, 100 guinea hens and four dogs. The state compensated farmers for part of their losses.

Bounties were paid until 1965, and hunting continued after that. By the mid 1970s, the population had dropped to a few hundred animals. In 1973, the federal Endangered Species Act gave wolves full protection.

The state is trying to assume wolf control from the federal government and wants a limited harvest of 50 animals a year. Mech estimates that 250 wolves a year are killed illegally. Berg said she will go to court to fight state takeover of wolf protection.

Hunters maintain the wolf is depleting the population of whitetail deer in Minnesota.

Todd Fuller, a state wildlife biologist who has done studies on the purported depletion, says wolves kill about 15 to 20 deer each, or about 22,000 animals per year. Legal hunters take about 100,000 deer a year; poachers kill another 100,000.

Myths about the wolf die hard, said Steve Fritts, a federal wildlife biologist in Grand Rapids who has made a career of studying Canis lupus — the gray timber wolf.

'Candid camera' tells all on Louisiana's drivers

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Intoxicated drivers in Louisiana's capital city are likely to end up on TV — and it's almost always a costly appearance.

Police in Baton Rouge are using two $38,000 vans equipped with videotape machines in their war against drunken drivers.

"It's the old idea that one picture is worth a thousand words — and it works," said Sgt. Herman Legier. "From the minute you are advised of your rights to the actual issuing of the ticket, it's on film."

The department bought the vans last May with the help of a state grant after city court judges suggested the idea. The vans, outfitted like mobile TV studios, are called out for about half of the city's 300 drunken driving cases each month.

Each van contains breath-alcohol testing devices.

"We give the suspect field body tests — make him touch the tip of his nose with the tip of his finger, pick up some coins, stand on one foot and walk heel to toe. All that is filmed," said Legier.

But reciting the alphabet is probably the most telling evidence.

"That's the killer. You get people who tell you they have a college education and sure they can recite their ABCs, but when they get down to the O-P-Q-R they get stopped and confused. They know they've been had then," he said.

Under Louisiana law, drunken driving suspects can refuse to take the field tests, but they lose their license automatically for six months. Refusal is a gamble that there will be no evidence to get a conviction.

But with videotapes, fewer cases reach court, police say. When defendants see them, they either plead guilty — or their lawyers tell them they're sunk.

"If the guy is stinko and still goes to court, it's usually because he's buying time to pick up the money to pay the fine," said Legier.

High school student advises peers against drinking, driving

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — High school senior Kevin Tunell has a message for young people who think it's OK to drink and drive: It isn't, so don't.

"Alcohol doesn't get you anywhere," he says. "It only gets you in trouble."

Who is Kevin Tunell and why is he on the soap box?

He is a student at Lake Braddock Secondary School. He is also a convicted felon. His soap box is his sentence.

"I wouldn't like anybody here to have to go through what I've had to go through," he told his classmates recently.

Tunell was convicted in February of manslaughter and drunken driving in a New Year's Eve accident. He got cuts and bruises in the head-on collision. Eighteen-year-old Susan M. Herzog, the other driver, died instantly.

In this case, as in many cases, Tunell had had too much to drink — five or six glasses of champagne at a party — and refused to surrender his car keys when friends told him he shouldn't drive home.

But the sentence imposed by Judge Michael J. Valentine of the Fairfax County Juvenile Court was unusual.

The judge took away Tunell's driver's license and put him on probation until his 21st birthday. He also ordered the young man, who was 17 at the time of the accident, to spend a year lecturing to community groups on the dangers of drunken driving.

Under Virginia law, Tunell could have been sentenced to one year in jail. Miss Herzog's father, Louis, who has filed a $1.5 million lawsuit against the young man, complained that Tunell got off lightly.

But the judge noted that with credit for good behavior and the state's probation requirements, Tunell could have been free in four months if a standard punishment had been imposed.

DWI: So common, it's almost accepted

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

How many auto accidents do we hear about that are blamed on drunken drivers? Think about it.

It seems every time someone is in a serious accident, it's because someone was driving drunk. Came barreling through a red light. Crossed the center line. Couldn't stop.

It's so common we almost take it for granted. An act of fate, like getting hit by lightning. Accidents, injury and death caused by drunken driving sometimes seem a price of modern motor travel.

But across the country, people are saying they are not willing to accept that price. They are no longer willing to be lightning rods.

AMERICANS ARE DOING something about drunken driving.

They are pushing and prodding legislators, writing letters to editors and speaking before school and civic groups on the horrors of drunken driving. Police, prosecutors and judges find themselves under new pressures to crack down.

In the last year, 22 states have enacted new drunken driving laws, and tougher measures were proposed in 26 legislatures this year, an Associated Press survey found. They are making it easier to arrest, convict and jail drunken drivers.

President Reagan has appointed a national commission to study the problem, and Congress is thinking about a computerized national driver's register so repeat offenders can't avoid stiffer penalties by moving to other states.

The federal legislation would require first offenders to do 80 hours of community service and make second offenders spend 10 days in jail.

"For too long, drunk driving has been socially acceptable and even condoned as part of our American 'macho' image," says the sponsor, Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., who has had two staff members killed in drunken driving accidents.

MACHO, INDEED. Ninety percent of those arrested for drunken driving are men.

"We are talking about a crime that kills more than homicides, a crime that injures more people and more seriously than those who commit assaults with deadly weapons, a crime that does more property damage than the forgers, burglars and robbers all added together," says Candy Lightner, whose 13-year-old daughter was killed by a drunken driver two years ago.

After learning that the driver who killed her daughter had been arrested several times previously for drunken driving, Mrs. Lightner founded Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD) in her home in Fair Oaks, Calif.

Today, chapters of MADD and a group known as Reduce Impaired Drivers (RID) are in the vangard of the movement against drunken drivers.

About 26,000 Americans — one of every two people killed on U.S. roadways — die each year in accidents involving one or more drunken drivers. One million more people are seriously injured or crippled. Property losses run into the billions of dollars.

"Drunk driving is probably the most important public health problem facing our nation," says Vincent L. Tofany, president of the National Safety Council.

THERE ARE MORE than 1.2 million arrests each year for drunken driving: Johnny Carson and F. Lee Bailey on the same recent weekend in California; 41,000 in tiny Vermont last year; 31,000 in Florida the last six months. Bailey was acquitted last week after a jury trial. Carson's case is still pending. He has pleaded innocent.

But the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says that for every drunken driver who is arrested, 2,000 others are not. One of every 10 drivers on any given Friday or Saturday night is drunk, the government says.

And it gets worse. The chances of going to jail or paying a fine are even less than the chance of being arrested.

In Oklahoma City last October charges were reduced or dismissed for 170 of the 175 people arrested for drunken driving, a study showed. Of 7,802 people arrested for driving while intoxicated in San Antonio from 1978 to 1980, only 14 were convicted of felony offenses — this in a city where last year at least 78 traffic deaths were due to drunken driving.

In 46 states, the legal blood-alcohol limit for drivers is 0.10 percent, but a study in Georgia says the average person arrested has a level of 0.17 percent, the equivalent of eight drinks for a 180-pound man in an hour.

THE SAME STUDY showed that people arrested for drunken driving the first time admit to doing it at least 15 times before.

Yet 24 states do not even prohibit drinking while driving. In Lafayette, La., there's a drive-in bar called the Daquiri Factory, where motorists pull up, grab a drink through the window and roar off without leaving the car. A house specialty is Jungle Juice, made with vodka and 190-proof grain alcohol.

The AP survey showed a wide diversity in state penalties for drunken driving. In Kentucky and Virginia, the maximum penalty is a $500 fine and a six-month license suspension; even if the judge wants to, first offenders cannot be sent to jail. In Massachusetts, however, you face up to two years in jail, a one-year license suspension and a $1,000 fine.

Indiana's maximum for the first offense is a year on probation, a two-year license suspension and a $5,000 fine, while Wisconsin has a maximum six-month license suspension, a $300 fine and no jail time.

Several states have mandatory minimum sentences — a day in Arizona and Washington, two days in California and Iowa, three days in Ohio, 10 days in Oklahoma — but MADD and RID say prosecutors routinely take pleabargains to lesser charges, and judges routinely substitute attendance at alcohol abuse classes for jail time.

Some states now are considering what Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown calls a "slammer bill," requiring everyone convicted of drunken driving to spend a day or two or three in jail. Including first offenders, no exceptions.

AT THE SAME TIME, states are trying to make it easier to make arrests.

In Illinois, a new law has reduced the amount of time it takes police to make a drunken driving arrest, and arrests have gone up.

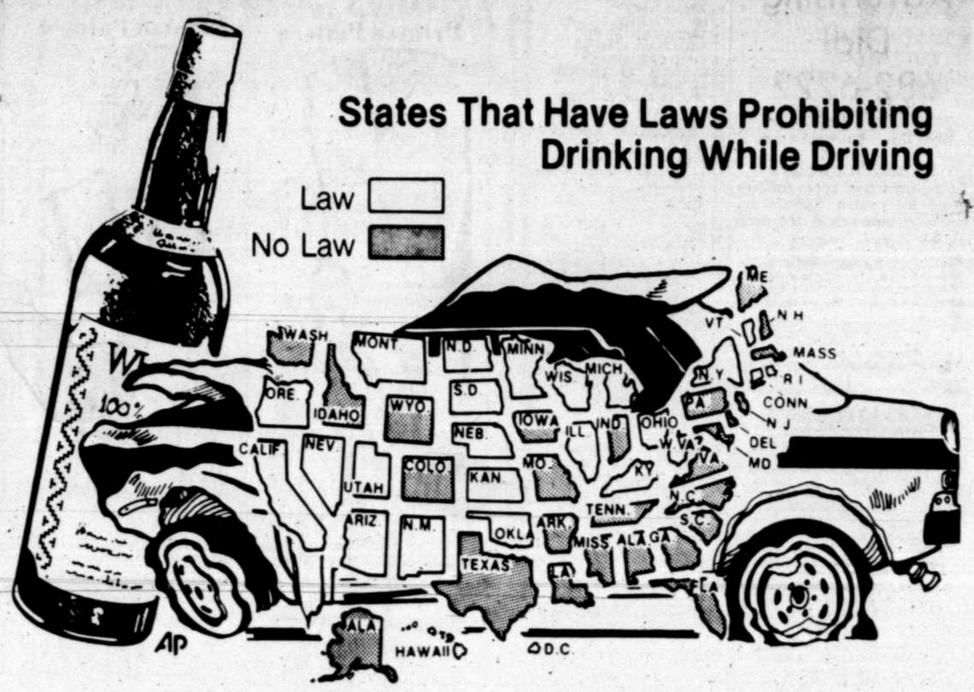
"Previously, a drunken driving arrest took four hours," Larry Layman, a Peoria, Ill., officer says. "Now we can do it in as little as 30 minutes, so we're more willing to make arrests."

In Tonawanda, N.Y., a suburb of Buffalo, authorities are setting up midnight roadblocks at busy intersections and stopping every car to look for drunken drivers. The first night, they stopped 60 cars and made six arrests.

In New Jersey, 75 towns videotape people arrested for drunken driving as they try to perform simple agility tests like walking a straight line or touching their noses.

If necessary, the tapes are introduced in court, but authorities say most defendants plead guilty after they have sobered up and viewed the tapes. In several communities, conviction rates have risen to more than 90 percent.

"He can refuse to do the physical or chemical tests, but he still has to sit there before the camera," says Ralph Tyson, the city prosecutor in Baton Rouge, La., where a special police van serves as a drunken driver taping studio. "If he falls on his face it is still on video tape. And we have had some do that."



San Antonio conviction record poor

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — You can drive home skunk drunk, get stopped by the police and the odds are about 15-1 that you won't be convicted of driving while intoxicated, a misdemeanor on first offense, in San Antonio.

The odds of a felony indictment for a second offense are about 500-1 in the nation's 10th largest city. And then the chance of a conviction is remote.

"I do not believe any city, town, hamlet or burg in the U.S.A. could have a more pitiful record for enforcement of drunk driving laws than our own," says City Councilman Van Archer, who asked for a court inquiry.

From 1978 to 1980, there were 7,802 arrests for drunken driving in this city of 785,410 residents, says Archer, and they resulted in just 14 indictments for felony DWI.

This in a city where 156 people were killed in traffic accidents last year, and alcohol was a factor at least 50 percent of the time. The percentage could be higher, says traffic analyst Fernando Flores. Twenty-six fatalities were hit-run accidents — and only two of those cases were solved.

"Why should San Antonio be the one city in Texas that either can't or won't do anything to stop this terrible situation?" asks Archer.

The answer, say police, prosecutors and judges, is the system.

It begins with discouraged arresting officers, says Capt. Randall Gilmore, head of the state Department of Public Safety in this region, and it circles back to sympathetic juries, says Bexar County Court-at-Law Judge Fred Biery.

First, it takes two hours to arrest a drunken driver, take him to jail, complete necessary tests and paperwork and get back on patrol, says Gilmore.

In a recent police study of 149 randomly selected cases, 106 resulted in reduced charges, deferred adjudication or dismissal, with 36 cases still pending. There were seven DWI convictions — one a felony.

So when faced with a drunk, "The troopers say, 'to heck with it, nothing is ever going to come of it,' and file a public intoxication charge and get back on the road and do their job," says Gilmore.

Without first offense misdemeanor convictions, there are very few felony convictions for second-time offenders. And, to complicate matters, District Attorney Bill White notes that deferred adjudication sentences, which leave defendants with clean records, and probation are not regarded as "final convictions" under the law.

"We're in the prosecuting business, not in the sentencing business," says White.

Which brings the issue to the courts and Judge Biery. He says there's no room in the jails for all the offenders — and the public's record when it comes to drunken driving does not encourage a punitive hand.

*The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12.5% for 90% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six-month Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5% rounded to the highest 1/8 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on GPAM mortgages are graduated so as to increase 7.50% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.25% ON 90% LOANS.

Growing up at High Sky Girls Ranch

Sue Powell at 6 years of age. "This picture was taken just four months after I arrived at the ranch."

"That's Breck Gifford and me at 11 years of age," said Sue. Breck's parents were parents parents at the time and had provided their son with an old tractor that had the blade removed. "We used to ride everywhere on that thing."

Sue's sister, Rose, poses with her during Christmas at the ranch in 1977. Sue is 12 years old here. She has been at the ranch for five years.

"This is my 14th birthday," says Sue. "I got a diamond ring from my sister Rose. At one time or another, all of my three sisters lived at High Sky. Nearly all of them are in the Fort Worth area now."

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

Since its beginning in 1963, High Sky Girls Ranch has been dedicated to the task of caring for girls who need a home. In the past 19 years, more than 350 girls have resided here. Girls at the ranch live in one of the cottage units. The cottages are designed to provide comfortable homelike atmosphere for the girls and the homeparent couple, who supervise the day-to-day activities.

Goals of cottage living include the following: to provide for each girl the love and understanding of a family, the security and stabiliy of a Christian home environment and the opportunity to learn the essentials for living a happy successful adult life.

The professional child-care staff at the ranch strives to provide a quality program of care to effectively meet each girl's individual needs in all areas of life.

The ranch is supported totally through individuals gifts, donations and the annual Crystal Ball. Plans are underway to expand the facilities to care for a total of 56 girls. There are currently 29 living at the ranch.

Sue Powell has been a resident at High Sky Girls Ranch for about 12 years.

"That's longer than any of the other girls," she says. There's only one other that's been here nearly that long and that's only been for eight years."

Sue was one of four sisters who were brought to the ranch in 1970. There was a total of seven children in her family.

"My parents had divorced and my mother couldn't support all of us," she remembers. "I was too young then to understand. When I got a little older, I felt really rejected. But I understand things better now. This is the only way we would have been able to get a good education.

"And after 11 years here, I have to say it's home. It's a home away from home."

She says that the ranch has changed a lot, both in appearance and personality, over the years.

"When I first came here, I lived in Cottage One and my other sisters were in Cottage Two. But we had certain times we could visit each other, watch tv, and do other stuff.

"After Mr. Miller, the director, left, then can Mr. Daniels. He lived in the director's house which was built by the Eagles.

"Then came the tennis courts, the basketballl court, volleyball court, baseball diamond and the park. I remember the park was donated by a lady. All of the girls here helped plant the grass in the park—it was in the summertime."

"Then came the next director, David Maley," remembers Sue. "He was the first director who wouldn't let us call him Mister. Everybody at the ranch really loved him. He made a lot of good chances, like the commissary, the tool shop and more houses. He also allowed the girls more freedom than they had ever had."

There were about 30 girls at the Ranch 11 years ago, and the number hasn't fluctuated much since then. "But now that the new houses have been built, it will get larger," she says.

"The ranch has really done good," she says. "It's really growing.

Her life is no different, really, than most 16-year olds, she believes.

"Every Monday through Friday, I get ready for school in the morning. The senior cottage residents don't ride the bus like the other girls do. Driving the station wagonis a responsibility we learn.

"If anyone needs it, she takes the car after telling the house mother. We run errands and provide transportation for the young girls —to and from ballgames, to and from school, stuff like that."

"We're always on the go," said Sue. "But each of us here take turns doing jobs in the house according to a chart that Mrs. Ruff sets up.

"Mrs. Ruff—our home parent—is great. She has been at the ranch five years. She came out here after her husband died. It's her home and she runs it that way. We have a curfew on weekends for 1 p.m. that's only for girls in the Senior House. On weekdays, we're usually in bed at 10:30 or 11 p.m."

Sue likes the idea of the Senior House. "It teaches girls how to deal with money, how to learn responsibility and how to prepare for when they leave the ranch," she said.

She will graduate from Lee High School in 1983. Right now, she's looking for a part-time job so that she can work and go to summer school at the same time.

"A lot of people usually leave at 18 years of age. As long as you're in college or working, you can stay here. After the girl graduates, she pays a small fee to stay here.

"It's not all fun, though," she said. "We have our ups and downs just like real sisters. It's comfortable for me now, but it's been hard for me to adjust at different stages.

"But there's always someone to talk to—the girls, the home parent, Jackie Carter (current director).

"And I have friends outside of the ranch, former residents of the ranch. It always helps to have a friend who has lived here, who knows how it is and what it's like."

Sue has fun with a favorite "friend" at the ranch.

She said that the way of life has changed a lot. Surprisingly, she thinks it could be a little stricter. "The freedom we have acquired over the years is nice, but some of the girls can't handle it," she said.

"Through the ranch, I have learned how to adapt to change," she added. "It is constantly changing out here—a lot of the house parents have come and gone, other people have come and gone—but some of my friends aren't used to change.

"The ranch has helped me to grow up. I think I grew up too fast, but I hope I can help the younger ones here.

Leaving tots home alone is dangerous

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, PH.D.
Copley News Service

Q. I'm ready to climb the wall because I'm so worried about something. Maybe you'll tell me it's not my business, and you may be right.

It just doesn't make any sense to me that my next-door neighbor has a habit that I think is so dangerous. She frequently leaves her 2-year-old little girl alone at home while she goes shopping. It may not be for a long period of time, and the yard the child is in has a high fence and a gate with a firm latch that can't be reached.

This neighbor is a good friend of mine, so I've told her directly how I feel, but it makes no differeence. She goes right on with this practice. So what do I do? What would you do?

A. Leaving a young child alone at home is always a questionable thing to do. Children can often find a way out of the best protected yard. Delivery people might come by and leave the gate open and strangers may hover around.

Why doesn't she take her little girl with her? It could be a good experience and a chance for some mother-child communication. Or, how about a baby sitter? The expense is small when one thinks of the potential dangers.

You might share my response with your neighbor. It is a plea for common sense to add to yours.

Q. I just had such a pleasant experience visiting my son's classroom. He is in the sixth grade, and has a male teacher who treats the children like adults.

It was so refreshing to walk into that quiet room, see this teacher at his desk lecturing to them from apparently well-prepared notes, and watching the children taking down what he tells them. It was a history lecture, and they were getting a lot of information.

I wish more teachers would use practice like this instead of taking such pride in noisy activities from which the children learn so little. Don't you wish the same thing?

A. Well, yes — and then again, no. Not all lectures, even at higher educational levels, are necessarily good learning experiences. Nor are all so-called activity programs non-productive. The "noise" that may accompany them isn't always a limitation on the learning process.

Learning to listen and to take notes are sound educational involvements, and for children to acquire them during the elementary school years is worthwhile, especially as a basis for later learning. However, the values will depend on the content of that listening, the accuracy of the student notes and the use to which they are put.

Helping hands

NEW YORK (AP) — The Girl Scouts of Greater New York are getting a handout — from celebrities in the entertainment, political, cultural and sports worlds.

Through a campaign called "Give A Hand to the Girl Scouts," flesh-colored plaster casts are made of the handprints of prominent women and men and will be auctioned off April 27 with the proceeds going to the scouts.

Some of more than 100 notables who already have lent a hand are actresses Karen Black, Maureen O'Hara, Sandy Dennis and Polly Bergen.

The "casting call" requires the celebrities to immerse their hands palms down in a wet plaster concoction that dries almost immediately.

The handprints can be displayed on a table or hung on a wall. The fund-raising project is underwritten by Dermassage, and the plaster technique perfected by Ruth Katz, a crafts authority, takes only 15 seconds to harden.

Spanish art

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The exhibition "Painting in Spain 1650-1700" is on view at the Princeton University Art Museum through June 20.

The show consists of some 50 paintings, drawn from public and private collections in the United States, Puerto Rico and Canada, which focus on the late Baroque period in Spain.

Truth in advertising

Members of the Better Business Bureau network are laughing about the reply of an Oklahoma City car dealer to a challenge of his claim that a used car was "driven less than 4,000 miles." In a spirit of cooperation, the dealer, when confronted with a 54,000-mile odometer reading and verification of that figure by the previous owner, yelled to his used car sales manager, "Hey, Bill, turn back the odometer on that Chevy to less than 4,000 miles. We don't want no misrepresentation in our advertising."

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Use aluminum foil, iron to remove old shelf paper

DEAR HELOISE:

We have just become new homeowners and have the misfortune of having kitchen cabinet shelves that were covered with some smelly, stained, adhesive-backed paper that it refuses to budge.

I tried peeling it and scraping it off and all I got for my efforts were broken fingernails and frazzled nerves.

I then remembered reading in your column that if the paper was softened, it would peel off more readily. So, I got out my dry iron and the aluminum foil and tried it.

It worked!

Use a small piece of foil and set the iron on a low temperature and do a small section at a time. You have to move quickly, for if the paper cools, it again becomes difficult to remove.

Repeat this process until the shelves are free of the paper.

When I did mine, I wiped the shelves down with some scented cleaner to eliminate any odors.

My shelves look great now and smell fresh. — Mrs. Jennie Oberhofer

+++

If any glue residue remains, coat the shelves with a pre-wash stain spray. Let it soak for a few minutes then rub with a dry cloth. The glue should roll right up. Thanks for a good hint. — Heloise

PAINT FREE HANDS

Dear Heloise: Hate to have your hands covered with paint — which is so hard to remove — after you've painted a room?

Before you begin, rub a small amount of petroleum jelly on your hands. Makes getting the paint off your skin easier and is faster as well. — Majorie Naines

SOFTER SUGAR

Dear Heloise: To keep brown sugar from becoming hardened, place it in the freezer.

About an hour before using take it out and allow it to thaw. it will be soft and very easy to work with. — Mrs. Don Mathews

STICKY FINGERS

Dear Heloise: We like sweet potatoes, but I always dreaded to peel them, because my hands would get so sticky.

One day, after completing this chore, I poured a little oil on my fingers and rubbed it over all the sticky places, then I poured a bit of detergent on my hands and rubbed them together and rinsed them well under running water.

To my surprise it worked! All the sticky feeling was gone. — Florence Abel

DRAWER ODOR

Dear Heloise: I've discovered how to rid old furniture drawers of that terrible odor that sometime seems to develop. Put scented candles (unlit, of course) in the drawers.

The odor disappears and the faint fragrance of the unlighted candles pervades. From time to time I replace the candles in the furniture with new ones.

I don't know if the candle wax absorbs the smell or the fragrance just infiltrates the wood, but the combination works. — Gladys Heaton

NYLON NET POMPONS

Dear Heloise: Make pompons from colored nylon net to decorate the car used in weddings.

Neither sunshine nor rain causes the "flowers" to wilt. — Dorothea Koral

Decorating a narrow, awkward room

Copley News Service

Q. Our living room is long and narrow. I have been trying to figure out how to arrange furniture and what kind of furniture to buy to create a seating area that is relaxing.

Because the walls are angular and the room is narrow with a high ceiling, I am wondering if paint or wallpaper would be better. — L.K.Y.

A. Designer Barbara Mode achieved a pleasant result decorating the interior of a town house that had been divided into apartments. Some of her advice may be useful to you. She also was working with a narrow room with one additional difficulty — a fireplace that was angled across one corner.

To create comfortable seating, Mode arranged L-shaped seating opposite the angled fireplace so the fireplace formed the focal point in the room. Backing one leg of the seating, she placed a handsome rosewood table with two ottomas that fit under the table when not in use.

To dramatize the fireplace and disguise its awkward architectural lines, she covered the fireplace wall in a reflective foil. Another wall was covered in a slightly different but similar foil pattern to enhance the reflective quality.

To lower the ceiling, Mode painted it a dark tone. Light colored capret and other walls in light colors of paint provided a contrast with the dark tones of the seating, the dark wood tones of the table and dark Naugahyde upholstery over ottoman and table legs and storage cabinet.

Q. We have just moved into a new home. The dining room overlooking a garden is wallpapered in a pattern that has a pale green background and very subtle blue stripe. I can't bring myself to remove the paper because it is in such good condition. How might I add more life to this room?

My furniture for this room is natural rattan. I need to change the cushions because they are old and soiled. — P.K.

A. You could have springtime all year around by choosing a fabric with a light green background and sprays of blue, yellow, rose and purple flowers to create lavish, flowing tieback curtains for the windows.

Buy extra yardage for reupholstering your dining chair cushions or choose a contrasting color taken from one of the flowers in the print. For example, a rose and white tiny check would be pleasing and would not compete with the floral at your windows or the stripe on your walls.

Q. I live in a modern condo but like traditional furnishings.

My master bedroom has a cherry four-poster bed with crocheted canopy and a quilt rather than a bedspread. I have a Queen Anne dresser and small upholstered chair.

What should I do to the walls to give a softer feeling? Now they are plain and off-white and just too stark. My colors are plum, dusty rose, off-white and green. — A.C.

A. Why not add stock molding to your walls to create a chair rail. Paint the upper part of the wall a dusty rose and the lower portion off-white. Or even pale green below and another shade from your color scheme above. This will provide a traditional background at little cost.

Foil wallpaper covering the angular fireplace wall, a dark ceiling and modular seating wrapped down one wall and jutting out into the room help to disguise the narrowness of this room and its awkward architectural lines. Naughahyde covers the cabinet at left as well as console table legs and ottomans.

H. Hudson and the bay

English navigator-explorer Henry Hudson entered the bay later named after him in 1610, during his fourth and last voyage seeking a northwest passage to China. Hudson explored the bay's eastern shore from August to September in his 55-ton ship, the Discovery, and wintered in James Bay. The crew mutinied when supplies ran short, and Hudson, his son, and loyal crew members were set adrift in open boats June 22, 1611. Nothing is known of their fate.

Seeing beauty in others makes us more attractive

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Seeing and acknowledging the beauty (positive qualities) in others will make us more attractive. I call it the "mirror principle."

When we view another person in a favorable light, that person automatically reflects back a positive image of us. This reflection, then, improves our inner image — which in turn enhances the outer image that the world sees.

The mirror principle works because of the fact that it's hard to feel negatively toward someone who obviously appreciates us. Or, as the psychologists say, "We like those who reward us and we dislike those who punish us."

My teen-age daughter, Dana, found this principle applicable in her life. As an assistant in a health club one summer she had a terrible time getting along with her boss, the manager of the club.

"He's mean, Mom," she used to say. "He makes my job so unpleasant. He finds fault with everything I do and never compliments me no matter how well I do. I'm afraid to tell him how I feel, and I just don't think I can stand it much longer!"

We talked about seeing the beauty in people, and Dana decided to give it a try. Her report wasn't long in coming.

"Mr. Wilson's changed, Mom," she announced one day. "We're really starting to get along. Yesterday he told me what a good job I'm doing — and even asked me if I'd work for him again next summer. You know, he's really nice underneath that gruff exterior."

William James said, "The deepest principle of human nature is the craving to be appreciated."

Appreciation can take many forms. Sincere praise, doing something special for someone else, and simply taking care of ourselves and our possessions are examples. Active appreciation accomplishes the following:

1. Helps us enjoy our lives more fully.
2. Releases resentment, self-pity, envy, and other emotions that hold us in negative circumstances.
3. Focuses attention upon the good in our lives, thereby attracting more good.
4. Brings out the best in other people.
5. Brings out the best in us.

Dear Trisha: I would give compliments more often, but when I do I become painfully aware of my own inadequacies. How would you answer this? — T.W.

Dear T.W.: A trap we may fall into when noting someone else's attributes is to devalue our own: "Jane's so pretty and I'm so plain by comparison."

To avoid this trap learn to appreciate your own unique qualities. Instead of the above you might say, "Jane is very pretty (or talented, smart, whatever); I am beautiful in an entirely different way." Then note your good features and attributes as well as any potential you see that can be developed.

Concentrate not on society's standards; instead develop your own special beauty.

And last, never hesitate to give sincere compliments. Rather than diminishing your self-esteem, this practice will enhance it.

Please send your questions about beauty to Trisha Yeager, P.O. Box 1017, Novato, CA 94948. Questions of general interest will be answered in this column. Volume of mail prohibits individual replies.

British slavery abolished in 1834

Slavery was abolished in all British possessions in 1834, more than 30 years before the United States enacted similar legislation. The opening of the West Indies and the southern states had made slave trading in the New World a lucrative enterprise. Slaves weren't emancipated in the U.S. until after the 1865 Union victory over Confederate forces in the Civil War.

AT WIT'S END

On teens, no two things work at once

BY ERMA BOMBECK

A woman in Illinois has a son who is "into weight lifting." She has noted that the stronger the muscles become in his upper arms, the weaker the muscles become in his fingers.

In other words, the boy can press his own weight, but he can't turn off a water faucet.

The answer is a simple one. Teenagers develop only one part of their bodies at a time. If they're making good grades, don't expect them to pick up their room. If you want them to have eight hours sleep a night, they can't handle the garbage. If you want the truth out of them, don't push them to turn off the lights in their room.

If you want logic, you should have raised collies.

We have all lived through the years of parental innocence. I had a son who played basketball four hours a day. The muscles in his legs looked like a bas-relief map of Brazil. Those legs carried him back and forth on that gym floor a hundred times a day. The walking muscles that would transport him home on foot have not developed today.

I had another child who talked on the phone so much we all chipped in and bought her a tongue transplant for her 16th birthday. She could not have formed the words "thank you" had she been given Erik Estrada.

To understand teenagers, you must understand their anatomy. No two things work at the same time.

On the eve of their 16th birthday, their hands will form little fists in anticipation of car keys which dangle from them every minute.

These same fingers cannot replace a towel on a rack.

The eyes that develop X-ray vision to see a piece of pound cake wrapped in aluminum foil in the back of the refrigerator will not see a dog that is tunneling under the door in an effort to relieve himself.

By the time a teenager is 17, there are few things that are "operational." The hearing is gone. The voice is never heard. There is no sign he or she recognizes anyone. The muscles throughout the body are a mass of inertia.

The only thing that really works is the mind. It accelerates to age 35 and holds there until he or she is 35. Then it goes back down to age 17.

Turnabout

LONDON (AP) — Charles Darwin died 100 years ago.

The famed author of "The Origin of Species" was not always honored. His father thought Charles was in danger of becoming a disgrace to his family.

Darwin did many chemistry expefiments in his home laboratory. This earned him the nickname "Gas" and a public rebuke from his headmaster for wasting time, it was reported by Roger Bingham in a science magazine.

Even Darwin modestly recalls his schooldays by saying, "I was very ordinary, rather below the common standard in intellect."

Anschutz named

NEW YORK (AP) — Philip F. Anschutz has been elected to the board of trustees of the American Museum of Natural History.

Anschutz is president and founder of Anschutz Corp., a Denver-based oil company.

New dean

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Alfred E. Hammer has been named the new dean of the Art School of the University of Hartford.

Hammer now is director of Pacific Northwest College of Art in Portland, Ore. His new appointment becomes effective July 1.

Smith River guide Darol Damm plays a steelhead trout in crystal clear California stream that is heaven for fishermen.

Smith River is 'heaven' for fishermen

By EARL GUSTKEY
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SMITH RIVER, Calif. — At noon, a cold breeze began blowing up the Smith River. The overcast sky seemed to be descending to the tops of the redwood, fir, birch, alder and cedar forest on both sides of the river.

"I think we'll get back before we get wet," said Darol Damm, who was taking two steelhead fishermen on a 10-mile drift trip down the Smith in his motorless 16-foot boat.

The 45-mile-long Smith cuts through some of California's wettest forests before finally tumbling into the gravel bars and driftwood piles at its Pacific mouth, four miles south of the California-Oregon line. For steelhead fishermen, the trick is to arrive at the Smith shortly after one of the area's frequent winter storms.

TRAVEL

"The problem with the Smith," Damm said, "is that it's too clear. Look down into this pool. It's 30 feet deep and you can count every rock. Steelhead are easily spooked in water this clear. So you need to fish with a little finesse. In turbid water, I'd use bright-colored Hot Shot lures and heavier line, but today we'll use salmon roe, eight-pound-test line and some long casts. Even the sight of the boat will spook 'em."

The Smith. A day's drift trip down this northernmost of California's North Coast rivers is an experience in quiet solitude. The Smith, in remote Del Norte County, is undammed and has been relatively unscathed by human development. There are stretches where you see only the sky, the forest and clear water rolling over streambed gravel. Between storms, the Smith is so clear the effect can be dizzying — the water seems like a sheet of cellophane sliding over the gravel.

On a cold day, drifting by some of the old riverside homes and cabins, the aroma of chimney smoke is delicious, almost intoxicating.

For winter-run steelhead fishermen, this quiet, clear river is a special place. Because the river is short with a rapid elevation loss, it flushes quickly following a storm ahd has good fishing earlier than other North Coast rivers.

And it is famous for producing fish both big and strong. Both anglers and Department of Fish and Game biologists say that the biggest steelhead caught in California come from the Smith.

"We can have great steelhead fishing here two days after flood stage," Damm said. "One day last year the river came up nine feet in four hours. But it can go down that fast, too."

Damm's boat drifted under the iron Hiouchi Bridge. He spotted something on some rocks on the north bank and rowed closer. It was the carcass of a 20- to 25-pound salmon or steelhead.

Damm: "No tellin' what's been working him over — bears, coons, or gulls."

The boat drifted slowly over one of the Smith's premier fishing spots — the Early Hole.

"This is the deepest hole in the Smith, 60 feet," Damm said. "During salmon runs the big kings keg up (rest) in here. Sometimes there'll be a dozen boats here and people casting off those rocks. Some poachers set a net here a couple of years ago and when a game warden hauled it out, it had four dead kings in it over 50 pounds each."

Just past the Early Hole, near the south bank, one of Damm's fishermen spotted some fish in a shallow pool just beyond a riffle.

"Look, there's two steel head," he said.

Looking, Damm said: "Two, hell! There's 12 or 15 in there!"

The boat had drifted just past the fish. Grabbing the oars, Damm rowed hard against the current to a point 40 feet above the motionless, two-foot-long, dark shapes resting in the shade of a streamside willow.

An angler made two casts, 30 feet from the fish. As the roe drifted by they seemed to move sluggishly away. Two more casts. They bolted. "I think they saw the boat," Damm said. "Ore maybe they heard us. That's why I carpeted the bottom of this boat, to muffle sound. This is going to be tough today. Feel tht water. It's almost freezing. This is snow runoff. That's why we need rain. Rain will warm the water, make the fish more active, and silt in the water will reduce visibility.

"By the way, that's typical where we saw those steelhead — under a willow. They do that so eagles and ospreys can't see them."

As the boat drifted by a rocky beach where a half dozen teen-agers were preparing to fish from shore, Damm grimaced.

"That's something we hate to see," he said. "In the summer, when the river is low, whole families come in and catch limits (10 fish) of what they think are 'trout' — little eight and 10-inchers. Well, they aren't trout, they're steelhead and salmon smolts. If they put 'em back, they'd come back as 15-pound fish in a few years.

"We'd like to see the Department of Fish and Game go down to a three-fish summer limit here."

The boat was now about five miles from the Highway 101 bridge. The air grew colder, but the fishermen were warmed by Damm's hissing, portable propane heater.

Lunch time: slices of smoked elk, cheese and apricot brandy. Damm is a year-around outdoorsman — a salmon and steelhead guide, a deer-hunting guide and a woodsman when the huntin' and fishin' slacks off.

"I work part of the year for the Arcata Lubmer co.," he said. "They let me guide deer hunters on their land. I shot this elk near the Snake River in Idaho. He was a six-pointer. I had to pack out 260 pounds of meat eight miles.

Visit the 1982 Knoxville World's Fair

By BILL FREDDE
Special to
The Reporter-Telegram

Would you like to relive those exciting fun-filled days and nights you spent soaking up the glitter and entertainment you enjoyed during San Antonio's 1968 World's Fair?

Well between May 1 and Oct. 31, you can relive those enjoyable times — but you'll have to journey to Knoxville, Tenn., home of the 1982 World's Fair.

The Knoxville World's Fair is the first World's Fair to be held anywhere in the world since 1975 and man and nature have combined forces to create one of the largest and finest World's Fair sites in history.

With energy as its timely theme, the 1982 World's Fair will be the place to see the world of tomorrow, today.

But a World's Fair is more than that.

The history of World's Fairs is a history of history-in-the-making. Rich in innovation, ideas and the triumph of the human mind and spirit, every World's Fair has given the world a remarkably accurate glimpse of the future.

In fact, there is nothing as unique as a World's Fair for combining the marvels and thrills of tomorrow with the rich heritage of yesterday — all wrapped up in a whirlwind of good old (and new) fashioned fun.

A World's Fair is a time machine, affording the visitor a vivid look into the future.

All through the years, each World's Fair has put an indelible stamp on history and the 1982 World's Fair in Knoxville — with energy as its theme — promises to be one of the most important and influential fairs in recent times.

Foreign nations from every continent will be represented, and in terms of international exhibitry, it is the largest sanctioned World's Fair to be held in the United States in more than 40 years.

Among the countries taking part are Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the Hungarian People's Republic, Italy, Japan, the Republic of Korea, Mexico, Panama, the People's Republic of China, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, and the European Community, including Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, Ireland, Luxemburg and Greece.

Among the American corporations planning exciting presentations at the fair are a number of gas, petroleum and electric companies, plus the big energy users from Greyhound to Delta Airlines, from General Electric to Ford. One business participant has become deeply involved out of local pride — Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., the food company. They have made a major commitment to the success of the fair. Not only have they set up the Gatorade Sports Hall of Fame in the Technology and Life Style Centerd, they have taken over two whole acres of the 73-acre fairgrounds on which to create the Stokely-Van Camp Folklife Festival. With three performance stages, this entertainment center will provide a continuous round of events never before brought together in one place to depict the life and culture of the Southern Appalachian region of the U.S. There will be fiddling contests, gospel singers, country and western music, bluegrass and ballads, story tellers, clog dancers and nightly dancing for all with callers for circle and square dances. Skilled craftsmen will demonstrate weaving, wood carving, basket making, blacksmithing, quilting, chair caning and the crafting of rag dolls and musical instruments.

For those who seek other forms of amusement, there is more than enough from which to choose.

"Headliner" entertainment including Bob Hope, Bill Cosby and Johnny Cash, Broadway shows, world-renowned orchestras, and ballet and opera companies will showcase their very special kind of energy 12 hours a day, every day of the six-month international exposition, on a variety of stages and in the Tennessee State Amphitheatre (capacity 2,500), created especially for the 1982 World's Fair.

Nightly fireworks spectaculars, parades, strolling entertainers, theme characters and instrumental groups will all add to the color and excitement every day.

One of the largest ferris wheels in the world will be at the Knoxville fair along with a new kind of roller coaster, never befoe seen in the U.S., that travels at a high speed. Many other new and popular adventures will be on site, including the latest electronic games and amusements.

The fair's mile-long promenade is lined with flags of the participating nations and dominated by the 266-foot Sunsphere.

The spectacular Sunsphere is the theme structure for the fair. It is a structure of lacy metal, topped by a giant globe enrolled in glass manufactured with genuine 24-karat gold dust. The energy-efficient gold-tinted glass will give the sphere a distinctive glow visible for miles. Inside the sphere is a two-level restaurant and three observation decks affording a commanding view of the 73-acre, mile-long fair site.

In general, the Fair architecture is "futuristic" with the $20.8 million U.S. Pavilion being the centerpiece. Rising above a man-made lake in the center of the exhibitin grounds it is an architectural wonder and energy showcase with an abundance of awesome and dazzling demonstrations and entertainment. The cantilevered structure rises dramatically six stories into the air, and is crowned by a 5,000-square-foot solar collector running the entire length of the pavilion, powering the building's air conditioning and hot water system.

Inside — a plethora of advanced scientific, electronic and technological miracles.

Nearby, a reflection of the past in the L&N Station, one of 12 turn-of-the-century and Victorian structures that have been restored and incorporated into the fair's mosaic. The L&N Station will house a railway-themed restaurant and boutiques; the L&N Depot will become an international art museum; and an 1868 foundry has been transformed into an authentic German Festhaus; and a candy factory, built in the early 1900's will become an international emporium of restaurants, snack bars and shops.

There are 50 restaurants in all, serving foods from around the world. Authentic international gift items and souvenirs will be sold on site.

Dancing fountains, the meandering Tennessee River, a giant "Family Funfair," a manmade seven-acre lake...man and nature have combined forces to create one of the finest World's Fair sites in history.

A 70-foot-high aerial gondola and a chairlift will whisk visitors around the site, and riverboats will ply the Tennessee River bordering the fair site.

And the energies of thousands of people from countries around the world will serve to create what has already been forecast as one of the world's greatest World's Fairs.

One-day admission to the fair is $9.95 for adults, $9.25 for those over 55, and $8.25 for children 4-11. Children under four are admitted free. Two-day admission is $15.95.

A special bonus for fair visitors are the numerous tourist attractions already long established in the Knoxville area. First among these is the Great Smokey Mountain National Park, long the most visited of all the scenic reserves in the national park system, which is less than an hour's drive from the fair. Other nearby attractions and special points of interest within easy driving distance of Knoxville are Oak Ridge — home of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory; Chattanooga — see the famous Chattanooga Choo-Choo and historic Lookout Mountain and Nashville — home of the famed Grand Ole Opry and Opryland Theme Park.

Caribbean cruising: You will learn to love this boat

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

This is it. The lap of luxury. The epitome of ecstasy. The height of hedonism.

This is Caribbean cruising. The lure of exotic ports, the luxury of a floating resort and the convenience of a preplanned and prepaid vacation have made cruising the hottest item in the vacation industry. And it has all been boosted by the aura of romance spread by the popular "Love Boat" TV show.

What can a potential passenger expect on a cruise? Expect to be pampered a lot, eat a lot, relax a lot and stay up late.

Nearly all ships plying the warm waters of the Caribbean offer this kind of experience. But some do a better job than others. Some of the ships are huge, with a thousand passengers or more, making it easy to get lost in the crowd. Others, such as the World Renaissance operated by Costa Cruises, are smaller and more intimate.

Some are made for those who like the quiet serenity of long, sunny days at sea with nothing to do but relax. Others make a point of stopping at as many exotic ports as possible, giving passengers an international smorgasbord of experiences.

THE WORLD RENAISSANCE, for instance, starts in San Juan, Puerto Rico, then sails to the half-Dutch, half-French island of St. Martin, followed by the purely French island of Martinique. Then in succession are the English islands of Barbados and Antigua, the lush tropical beauty of St. Lucia and the crystal-clear waters of the Virgin Islands.

After passengers settle down in their compact cabins aboard ship and take a quick spin around deck to check out their home for the week, the first thing they will likely do is head for the dining room for the first of what seems like an endless round of meals.

The menu reads like a gourmet's guide, but don't be afraid to ask the waiter what each item is lest you end up with snails instead of ravioli. A typical evening meal consists of juice, several appetizers, pasta, several soups, three or four meats or fish entrees, at least three different vegetables and potatoes, rolls and a variety of desserts.

If you can't decide which entree to take, go ahead and have both the fish and the steak. It's all right. And if the desserts look good, go ahead and have two (or even three). It's all included in the price. Besides, almost everyone else is doing the same thing.

Meals start early with coffee on deck at sunrise, followed by a sit-down breakfast in the dining room, a buffet breakfast on deck or a continental breakfast in your cabin. Bouillon is served mid-morning on deck, followed by lunch that almost rivals dinner for its variety of delicious choices.

Cookies and coffee on deck in the afternoon are followed by dinner and the fabulous midnight buffet on deck.

Passengers nearly always rave about the food on board, and well they should, because it is prepared by European chefs who have a flair for the dramatic, which can be seen in the parade of waiters filing into a darkened dining room with flaming baked alaskas.

If passengers can ever get out of the dining room, they have a whole new world of experiences waiting for them. They wake up in a different port every day.

The morning is spent exploring the island. One day they may visit St. Pierre on Martinique, called the Pompeii of the Caribbean because it was destroyed by a volcano nearly 80 years ago. Or they may board a schooner and sail along the tropical coast of St. Lucia to a hidden cove for sunbathing and swimming.

Another excursion may take them to a coral reef for snorkeling in the crystal-clear water, or to an abandoned fort overlooking a picturesque harbor. Or maybe to the great house of a once flourishing sugar plantation.

AFTER LUNCH, THERE is shopping in town or luxuriating around one of the two pools on board the Renaissance. For those who must keep busy, there are shuffleboard, craft classes, card games, movies in the theater or reading in the library. Or there is just lying in the warm tropical sun, with a cool drink nearby.

Life aboard ship goes into high gear after sundown. The steel drum band on deck during the afternoon gives way to a dance band in the Grand Salon. International talent performs throughout the night, starting with a mini-show between the first and second dinner seatings, followed by a full-scale revue later at night.

There are showgirls in flashy, feathery costumes and daring Argentine gauchos with drums beating and boleros flying. Or listen to a soft ballad by a duo from England or a stunning soloist from the States.

In the Cafe de Paris nightclub, there is live entertainment and disco 'til long after midnight. Throw in other activities such as a folkloric show in Martinique, bingo, gambling in the casino, horse racing, first-run movies, dancing and more, and there is enough to keep even the most energetic traveler busy. Then after a few hours sleep, it's up to start the cycle all over again.

To avoid any last minute surprises, here are a few things potential passengers may not discover about cruising from watching "The Love Boat." First, the television set doesn't roll like a cruise ship does.

For those unsure of their sea legs, a cruise such as on the World Renaissance is best because it spends most of its time in port. Most sailing is done at night while passengers are asleep. Many cruises leaving from Florida spend several days at sea and must cross the rough Atlantic current to get to their island destinations and back.

Also, the spacious cabins and wide corridors are only found on the Hollywood set. Most cabins are compact, especially in the lower price brackets. But with the constant round of activities aboard ship, most people don't spend much time in their cabins anyway.

Cruises are touted as a bargain because nearly everything is included and vacationers know up-front what they are paying. They get a room for seven nights, all meals and snacks, entertainment and transportation between islands. In this sense it is a bargain, because it would be much more expensive if someone were to purchase these items separately. But there are extra costs.

Wine and liquor are extra, as are shore excursions, personal items and souvenirs. Airfare and transfers to the dock may be extra, but most cruise lines such as Costa offer money-saving air-sea programs to cut down this expense. Tips are another expense that hits the last day of the cruise.

One thing is the same as the television show: the fun and romance awaiting travelers on an ocean cruise.

Authors give tips for traveling by train

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Smart travelers who go by train take two small bags, instead of a single huge one.

Easier to carry and store when traveling and they can be fitted into any railroad station locker.

That's a helpful hint from the American authors of a book that combines a world guide and train timetable.

Their annual "Eurail Guide," just out, contains an introductory 45 pages on how to get around on the world's railroads with the least fuss and bother. Such as where to buy tickets in advance, where the bargains are, when to go and even how not to miss the train.

For example, make sure you have the right train station as 74 European cities have two or more. London has eight.

This year's specialty in the guide is a list of low-priced tickets and discounts, allowing travel at $5.40 to $10.80 a day, in 38 popular countries.

The guide was only 96 pages when Kathryn Saltzman Muileman and Marvin L. Saltzman first published it in 1971. The latest, the 12th edition, has 816 pages.

Subtitled "How to travel Europe and all the world by train," the guide describes every rail trip in 115 countries that the authors say a tourist might want to take.

The heart of the book is a collection of 628 one-day excursions in Europe from 151 base cities, giving suggestions for seeing more that many travelers would not have thought about.

If you are staying in Rome, for instance, the guide sets out the details of how to make round trips in a day to Naples, Anzio, Assisi, Florence, Orvieto, Perugia, Pescara, Pisa, Pompeii, Spoleto and Siena, with train times, where to change trains and what to see when you get there.

The authors' advice is first-hand because they have done it themselves, including the world's longest train ride, from Lisbon on the Atlantic coast of Portugal, 5,300 miles across Europe and Siberia, to Khabarovsk near the Sea of Japan.

The train was only two hours 25 minutes late on its schedule of 218 hours, 19 minutes, when they went in 1973. They report hearing that the on-board service is not so good lately.

The guide describes the 286 "most scenic train rides in the world," departure and arrival times for more than 9,000 train trips, notable scenery on the route and what to see in 738 cities

Play therapy helps children deal with death of loved ones

By PEGGY SAND

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — It is a warm, rambling frame house on Salem's State Street that draws these children — infants and teen-agers, the financially comfortable and the struggling.

These are children united by premature and harsh encounters with death. They are children who have terminal illnesses, children who have seen their fathers murder their mothers, children who have watched their brothers and sisters drown.

Their experiences are grim, but Child in Crisis at the State Street house is a haven designed to help these youngsters move forward. It has served more than 250 families in its three years of operation.

When Mary Kay Smith (not her real name), 6, came to Child in Crisis, she had seen more death in six months than many adults experience in a lifetime.

Her parents had recently separated and she lived with her mother, her grandparents, an aunt and several pets. Within six months, Mary Kay's grandparents, aunt and all her pets died in separate incidents.

The confused child rebelled, lashing out at any authority, and was referred to Child in Crisis by school officials.

"She wanted to beat up her universe. She thought 'it's not fair,' and she was right, it was not fair," her therapist, Kathleen Smith, recalled.

Through months of play therapy, Miss Smith worked with Mary Kay to unleash her anger, primarily through role-playing. Finally a breakthrough came as Mary Kay invented a complicated imaginary game with wild ponies.

When the mother pony died, she was able to finally express grief and tell the pony she would always love it and care for its baby.

Play therapy is the core of the Child in Crisis program, and it is used with children as old as 15. The comfortable, paneled, orange-carpeted playroom is filled with toys, tumbling mats, dress-up clothes and the ever-reassuring baby bottles.

"Kids have always fantasized and really developed play as their own therapy," said therapist Cheri Lovre.

It especially works with younger children who can't communicate their sorrow. One 3-year-old child was referred after his father killed himself with a gun.

The boy found a doll that had a hole in its head when its hair was removed. He played exclusively with that doll, but when he finally fantasized that the doll had been shot and killed, he was able to let go of his own grief and put it aside, Ms. Lovre said.

Child in Crisis is not a program that provides answers about death. Rather, the therapists try to help children accept their grief and their gamut of emotions, which run from guilt to anger, so they can move on with life.

It especially does not try to present any religious interpretations.

"If a child says what is heaven like, we say, 'What do you think heaven is like?'" said Ms. Lovre. One child drew a picture about heaven as Taco Time, a fast-food business, she said.

Director Louisa Silva, a Salem physician, said a key thing that parents should remember when dealing with the death of a child or spouse was not to overlook their surviving children.

Ban not affected trade

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Western Europe's ban on Argentine imports as a gesture of support for Britain in the Falkland Islands crisis is having little or no effect on trade with Argentina.

American critics of the U.S. government's attitude in the Falklands crisis have unfavorably compared Washington's failure to impose economic sanctions on Argentina — only U.S. arms shipments have been banned — to the European Economic Community's stalwart support for the British.

But experts here say that for the time being at least the Europeans' support costs them nothing.

Knowledgeable international trade specialists here and in West Germany explained that although the embargo has been officially imposed until mid-May, current contracts with Argentina are being fulfilled.

The result, they said, is that "not a single purchase has been or is likely to be cancelled or even impeded."

Maxime Averty, a French trade consultant who specializes in the Latin American market, explained, "The embargo is for one month. Importers are assuming the crisis will be over by the time the present European community directive expires. So negotiations with Argentine firms are proceeding on that basis. Everything already in the works is going ahead as if nothing has happened."

He said that was why the European governments acted with unexpected alacrity last week to impose an import ban. They knew it was likely to entail little real economic sacrifice.

Argentina's exports to the 10 EEC countries run to more than $2 billion annually and represent about one-fifth of its total sales abroad. But in some sectors the exports are more vital to the buyers than to the Argentinians.

Italy's shoe industry, a major segment of its economy, is largely dependent on Argentine leather. West Germany imports large quantities of Argentine beef and would in the medium term be hard-pressed to find a substitute supplier.

The European boycott is likely to be made even more illusory by the difficulties of enforcing it if the crisis becomes prolonged.

As a practical matter, experts here said that preventing its circumvention, whether it is enforced by individual governments or by the EEC Commission, could prove next to impossible. They predict it will be evaded either by direct defiance — with governments turning a blind eye to violations — or through the familiar tactic of forged documents of origin which is nothing new here.

Informants here believe the EEC's gesture of solidarity with the British was partly motivated by an expectation that Britain would reciprocate by showing greater willingness to yield ground on major points of contention within the community, like EEC agricultural prices and the community budget.

CONSUMER TIPS

Important to be knowledgeable before purchasing art

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin, Inc.

As you stand looking at a painting you like, but that is more than you can afford to pay, you rationalize that at least the painting would be a good investment. A distant voice tells you that art only appreciates in value, so you have nothing to lose. Like any investment though, art can fluctuate in value, so before you invest get the facts.

According to Nelda Lee of Nelda Lee, Inc. (an art appraising firm and art dealership), paintings bought in motel rooms during a starving artist sale or art gallery closeout are not investment quality. For this type of promotion one artist may have painted and signed the same picture many times. Most investment quality art starts with a prize tag of $1,000 for a living artist and $2,000 for a deceased artist.

It is important to be knowledgeable about art before attempting to buy art for investment purposes states Ms. Lee. Knowledge can be obtained by taking an art appreciation course at a local college, reading art appreciation text books, and visiting fine art museums.

It is also important to know what an art appraiser looks for when judging the value of a painting. The reputation of the artist is the most important factor in determining the price of a painting. While prices for works created by living artists tend to fluctuate greatly, the prices for the art of deceased artists is much more stable.

Other factors that determine the price are the physical condition of the painting, the price history, the subject matter and the type of materials used.

According to Ms. Lee, certain types of subjects are going to appraise for less, such as violent scenes and landscapes, while paintings that include people will sell for more money. Also, the type of paints used will affect the price. As an example, oil paintings usually sell for more than watercolors.

Restoration of an oil painting that has been properly done increases the value of the work. An appraiser will also check the past price history before determining the market value of the painting. The painting may have sold for much more on the East Coast than on the West Coast.

If after doing your homework you feel ready to take the plunge, the next step is to locate a reputable art dealer.

An art dealer will be able to work with you in locating the type of investment quality art that interests you in a price range you can afford.

Ms. Lee advises that once a painting is bought the owner usually must keep it at least 2 to 3 years before a profit can be realized. It also takes time to sell paintings, therefore don't invest in art if there is a chance you will need the money.

Finding An Appraiser

As with most objects that are considered investments, you can have the artwork you are considering buying or selling appraised. An appraiser will establish a fair market value for the painting using the criteria discussed above.

Since there are no laws determining an appraisers' qualifications, look for an appraiser that is a member of the American Society of Appraisers (ASA).

Members have passed intensive written and oral examinations and are obligated to follow a strict Code of Ethics.

For instance, ASA takes the position it is unprofessional and unethical for the appraiser to contract to do work for a fixed percentage of the amount of value, or of the estimated cost (as the cast may be) which he or she determines at the conclusion of the assignment.

You also need to investigate the reputation of the appraiser and ask for documented proof of the person's qualifications. After obtaining this information, ASA suggests you conduct a personal interview to determine how the appraiser's experience and knowledge or expertice relates to the particular assignment that you are proposing.

As with any investment there are no guarantees money will be made, therefore only spend money you can afford to lose. If done with care and caution, monetary rewards can be reaped by investing in art as well as the pleasure it brings just from having it to look at.

Intelligence shows Iranian luminaries on the take

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Even before the late Shah of Iran fell from power, U.S. intelligence agents had evidence that the ayatollahs and mullahs plotting revolution were financially corrupt, but American officials failed to put the information to effective use.

Ironically, this failure has been freshly spotlighted by the Iranian revolutionaries' publication of documents seized in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran when it was overrun.

Embassy reports cited evidence that several luminaries of the Islamic movement were on the take from the shah's officials or from foreign commercial sources. Others were known, according to the U.S. documents, to have acquired personal fortunes large enough for them to have secret foreign bank accounts.

NONE OF THE information is, strictly speaking, new. As long ago as January 1979, U.S. intelligence experts in Western Europe had learned that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, then conducting his political asault on the shah's regime from his exile in France, controlled a fortune estimated at between $75 and $80 million, obtained from a variety of sources.

At the time, the U.S. agents told journalists that one of the hidden reasons behind the religious leaders' move to overthrow the shah was their anger at his efforts to restrict their wealth and, in particular, limit their authority to levy profitable "tithes" on the Moslem faithful.

It now appears from the information on file at the U.S. Embassy that their peculations were well-documented. For example, a 1978 memorandum alleged that Ayatollah Shariat-Madari, now in disgrace but a key figure then, was on the payroll of an American soft drink company, to promote its product among his followers.

The documents strongly hint that Ayatollah Muhammed Behesti, probably the number two man of the Islamic regime until he was assassinated last year, was a handsomely paid informer for the U.S., the Russians, and possibly other governments. He was also known to possess a foreign bank account, though his, unlike those of some of his colleagues, was in Cologne rather than Zurich.

U.S. INTELLIGENCE agents seem to have had firm evidence that several top religious figures were diverting substantial sums belonging to Islamic charitable foundations to their own use and had done so for years.

All this information appears to have been forwarded to Washington where it was filed away, unused. Arguably, it could have provided value counter-propaganda at a time that Khomeini and the religious movement were successfully whipping up support among Western liberals by their denunciations of the venality of the shah's regime and especially of members of his family.

If the reports had been published, they would have made clear that in a society like Iran's corruption was not confined to one side.

This wasn't done, possibly because of a belief such accusations would have been widely dismissed as CIA fabrications. But it is more likely that the Carter administration, already in disarray over Iran, feared the disclosures would further alienate the ayatollahs with whom it had decided desperately to try to make friends.

POSITIVE THINKING

Secret of self-confidence: Spiritually-oriented attitude

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

I was shaking hands with a lot of people on the stage of a civic auditorium where I had just concluded a speech. This one man just stood to one side waiting. Not until everybody else had gone did he approach me. "Can I talk with you a minute?" he asked.

"Sure," I said. And as there were no chairs we walked backstage and sat down on a pile of lumber.

"I don't belong to the convention," the man explained. "I just happened to learn you were to talk on how to think positively, so I crashed the meeting. I'm embarrassed to be taking your time but frankly I'm desperate. You see I am in this city for the biggest deal of my life coming up tomorrow morning. If I fail, that's the end of the road for me."

"Now look, my friend," I said, "don't be so dramatic. Let's hope you do carry this business deal off, but if you don't — then tomorrow is always another day."

"Oh, but this is my one big opportunity!" he insisted. "You mustn't take it so lightly."

"You're too tense, too rigid," I continued. "In such a state you cannot be in full possession of your faculties for business negotiations. Cool the anxiety. Relax. The world is not going to end if you don't put the deal over. Don't get so worked up."

He heaved a deep sigh and said, "One thing I sure would like to know is why I always feel so inadequate. I've been this way all my life. How can I have more confidence?"

"As I see it," I replied, "you should have two kinds of help. You should have counseling to help you learn more about how your inferiority feelings first developed. Once you get a better understanding of that they won't bother you so much. By spiritual thought-conditioning you can eventually overcome them altogether. But that is for long-term action. You also need some first-aid spiritual treatment to supply confidence for the present emergency — your business deal tomorrow morning.

"So here is the first-aid treatment right now. Let's stand up, because a slumped body interferes with spiritual thinking. Now," I said, "repeat after me these words: 'If God be for us, who can be against us?'" He repeated them. "Have you heard that before?" I asked. "It's from the Bible." No, he never had. "Don't you read the Bible?" He shook his head. "Well, do these words make sense to you?"

"Yes, they do."

"All right. Now take out the 'us' and substitute 'me.' Say, 'If God be for me, who can be against me?'"

I got him to repeat it several times. I wrote it out for him on a card. I told him, "Now keep thinking that great thought. Think it on your way from here to your hotel. Think it as you lie down to sleep. And when you get up tomorrow morning, again affirm: 'If God be for me, who can be against me?' Then go to your appointment with your mind relaxed and tell your prospect honestly why you think what you have to offer is something he needs."

I noticed he was standing erect. His face had brightened up. He drew a deep breath and said, "Okay, doctor, okay." Then I felt sure he was in good enough shape for the next day. And the outcome proved that he was.

Later he did get counseling and through it came further relief from his old inadequacy feelings. And in time he completely changed his thinking, thereby becoming a confident and dynamic person.

In overcoming deeply ingrained inadequacy feelings counseling can be important in removing psychological barriers. But basically the secret of self-confidence is to attain a spiritually oriented mental attitude. To really feel confident always and in all circumstances hold the thought that through God's help and guidance you can handle things. You can become a confident person.

Paleobotanist discovers millions-year-old plants

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Identifying from fossils varieties of plants that grew millions of years ago and provided food for the dinosaurs of that era is just one of the challenges facing Dr. William Tidwell in his work.

Tidwell is a paleobotanist at Brigham Young University — a field of research almost as rare as the plants these scientists search for. There are only 40 or 50 known paleobotanists in the United States.

In his laboratory, Tidwell has thousands of pounds of rocks which, on closer inspection, reveal the branches and leaves of some of the world's oldest plants.

One of the prizes in Tidwell's collection is a 35-million-year-old sample of a Joshua tree found on a plateau in northwest Nevada. Only after a painstaking study of the fossil's complex stem structure did he realize that it is an ancient relative of the modern-day Joshuas in our semi-arid deserts.

Prior to his find, the oldest Joshua tree sample found was only 10,000 years old, Tidwell says.

"It gives us an idea that they were much older than we previously thought," he says. "Now we need to see if we can make a connecting link between these fossils and those of the recent period."

Tidwell has taken other fossil plant samples from the vicinity of his Joshua discovery and hopes to piece together information about what the area may have looked like millions of years ago.

"It's challenging because you don't have the entire plant to work with. You have to play detective to relate these fossils to modern plants."

Ancient Joshuas were larger in size than those growing today and Tidwell speculates that the environment may have been damper.

"We haven't determined that yet, but that's my guess," he adds.

Correct identification of a fossil plant may sound easy but many of the plant varieties which existed millions of years ago had appearances quite different from plants growing today, he points out.

"It's challenging because you don't have the entire plant to work with. You have to play detective to relate these fossils to modern plants."

One of his discoveries was a 135-million-year-old Tempskya fern in growth position.

"There's nothing like Tempskya, living or dead," he says. "When I say dead, I mean we haven't been able to find another fossil like it before that period and there hasn't been another plant like it since."

The fern is made up of a bundle of tightly grouped branches that, from the exterior of the plant, look like a regular tree trunk. When Tidwell examined a cross-section of the plant, he discovered that the center section was filled with roots.

"That's why we call it a false trunk, because it looks like a stem, but it's made up of many stems with spaces in between which are filled with roots," he says.

By studying how these ferns grew, Tidwell hopes to determine what the leaves attached to these Tempskya looked like.

The central Utah desert around Moab is a gold mine for plant fossils because a variety of geologic periods are exposed. Other places rich in plant fossils are areas in Wyoming, California, Idaho, Oregon and Colorado.

Doolittle's raid: Pearl Harbor attack in reverse

By RICHARD PYLE

TOKYO (AP) — They bored in above the waves, skimming past startled fishermen, crossed the coast at Cape Inubo, 50 miles northeast of Tokyo, and swung left. Farmers in the paddies looked up and waved as they passed overhead.

In Japan, it was blossom time. People were in the streets. Military planes were simulating battles over Tokyo, practicing for ceremonies dedicating a new shrine to war dead and the Emperor's birthday.

Suddenly, the city lay in the noonday haze before Lt. Col. Jimmy Doolittle and his 79 raiders. Bomb-bay doors creaked open, and the planes gained sudden speed as their deadly loads fell away from 1,500 feet. Flashes and billows of smoke erupted in the industrial area near Tokyo harbor.

The date was April 18, 1942, and Allied fortunes were at their lowest ebb in the Pacific. The U.S. Pacific Fleet was still recovering from Pearl Harbor. Malaya and Britain's "Fortress Singapore" had collapsed.

Days earlier, U.S.-Filipino forces had abandoned Bataan, some escaping to the island bastion of Corregidor in Manila Bay. With the Dutch East Indies falling to Japan's attacks, invasion of Australia could not be ruled out.

IT WAS A warm, spring Saturday in Japan. A full-scale air raid drill had been held that morning. Fire brigades rolled out their equipment, and barrage balloons floated over the bay east of the capital. By noon, the drill was over.

Into this scene came Doolittle's raiders, hastily trained in secret to fly 16 medium bombers on the war's first air raid against the Japanese home islands.

Tactically, it was Pearl Harbor-in-reverse: An American raid launched from an aircraft carrier, wholly dependent on surprise. But the odds were great. Twin-engine craft the size of the Army Air Corps' B-25 Mitchells had never flown off a carrier in combat, and little was known of Japan's air defenses.

After the attack, racing across Japan and skirting the mountains, the raiders headed for a safe haven in China, another 1,000 to 1,500 miles west. Needing every drop of fuel, a few would not make it. That most did was later called "a miracle."

The B-25s had been modified to carry extra fuel in huge rubber tanks and jerry cans. It meant sacrificing some firepower, however, and black-painted broomsticks jutted from the planes' unprotected tails to discourage attacks.

DOOLITTLE'S PLAN called for 10 raiders to hit Tokyo, two to hit nearby Yokohama, and one each to attack the Yokosuka naval base and the cities of Nagoya, Kobe and Osaka.

Although each crew had a specific target — factory, refinery, steel mill, dock area or power plant — the airmen who took off from the USS Hornet, 600 miles east of Tokyo, neither hoped nor expected to inflict serious damage.

What Doolittle and his superiors wanted was a psychological victory to give Allied morale a much-needed lift, while rattling the confidence of Tokyo's war leaders who had publicly promised that Japan would not be attacked.

The Americans hoped to get within 400 miles of Tokyo before launching, but the Japanese learned of the task force's existence — first from intercepted radio traffic, then from picket ships posted in an arc 600 to 700 miles out.

Although the Imperial Navy organized forces to find the enemy, Japanese strategists were certain that U.S. carrier planes could not attack from more than 300 miles out. Thus they did not expect a raid for at least another day.

But Admiral William Halsey, the U.S. task force commander, realized he had been discovered, and ordered the B-25s launched shortly after dawn April 18, rather than later that day.

IT MEANT bombing in daylight, and it reduced chances for the planes to reach areas of China controlled by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's forces. But it kept the vital element of surprise, and the raiders caught the Japanese so much off guard that damage from ground fire and interceptors was minor.

At 12:30 p.m., Kay Tateishi, an Associated Press newsman who then worked for Japan's official Domei News Agency, was standing on a railroad platform in central Tokyo when he saw "a couple of unfamiliar planes, flying low."

"It looked like some daring maneuver," he recalls. "A commuter nearby said, 'It looks real, doesn't it, just like foreign aircraft breaking through Japanese air defenses. I guess the Imperial forces want to impress the people that they are fully prepared.' Then the planes released a couple of bombs that scared everyone. Someone shouted, 'Hey, that's real enemy bombing!'"

Although most of the crews reported hitting their assigned targets, the Japanese accused the Americans of striking schools and other civilian areas and said 50 people were killed or wounded. The newspaper Asahi Shimbun called it "an inhuman, insatiable, indiscriminate bombing attack on the sly."

In a radio broadcast, the army claimed nine raiders shot down, and added: "Damage to our side appears to be slight. The Imperial household is safe."

IN A 1964 book, "Doolittle's Tokyo Raiders," historian Carroll V. Glines quoted Joseph C. Grew, the U.S. Ambassador to Japan who, along with some other Americans, was still to be repatriated, as describing the raid in his diary.

"We were all very happy and proud in the embassy," Grew wrote, "and the British told us later that they drank toasts all day to the American fliers."

All 16 of the planes were lost, as the crews bailed out or crash-landed in Chinese territory — except one that flew to Vladivostok, U.S.S.R., where the crew was interned for almost a year. Three crewmen were killed in landing, eight were taken prisoner and three of those were executed at Shanghai.

According to Glines, Japanese leaders moved swiftly to downgrade the raid's importance in the public mind. Needing evidence of raiders being shot down, they ordered troops in China to find a wrecked plane. At the dedication of the Yasukuni shrine to war dead a week later, on April 25, bits of wreckage and a parachute were displayed, their U.S. markings clearly visible.

"It took some time for the significance of the raid to sink into the minds of the Japanese," Glines wrote. "The psychological effect was a creeping, insidious realization that, in spite of the propaganda to the contrary, the confidence of the people was severely shaken."

Japanese officers disagreed as to whether the planes could have come from a carrier, from the Aleutians, the Asian mainland, even Midway Island in mid-Pacific.

Sirhan hearing to air

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Videotape of the Sirhan Sirhan's parole hearing next week will be made available for television broadcast because of a ruling Friday by a Superior Court judge.

The decision marks the first time a parole hearing will be taped for viewing by the general public.

Sirhan, 38, convicted of the 1968 assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, goes before the state Board of Prison Terms on Monday at Soledad prison. Officials will decide whether his scheduled 1984 parole should be canceled.

Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge John Cole issued the ruling following a suit filed by NBC seeking to obtain video coverage of the parole proceedings.

Cole's ruling requires the Board of Prison Terms to allow an NBC technician and videotaping equipment into a prison press room to serve as a "pool" for television outlets that wish to use the tape for their news programs.

List not 'brillient'

SALIDA, Colo. (AP) — It was a "feable" attempt at compiling a word list for a spelling bee, and it turned out not to be so "humerous" to the supposedly "brillient" teachers.

Jerry Parsons, the principal of Avery Elementary School here, says some of his teachers were told to come up with a list of words for a bee and the words feeble, humorous and brilliant came out wrong.

The teachers also spelled "formerly" as "formorly" and "bookkeeping" as "bookeeping," he said.

"There's no real excuse for the misspellings," Parsons said. "I don't know what to say."

The misspelled words on the list were spotted by students and parents and weren't used in the bee held last week at schools in the western Colorado district.

Making mannequins

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

The cost of everything is going up these days, from sports cars to peanut butter. Hunting and finding bargains has become a national pasttime, clipping coupons a way of life.

Finding ways to cut expenses can be a matter of survival for many retail businesses. One way some of these businesses have found to cut expenses is finding alternatives to the expensive, life-sized, plaster mannequins used in displays.

Carole McCarter, instructor for fashion classes at both Midland College and Odessa College, teaches her students how to make a type of mannequin that is soft, life-sized and much less expensive than the traditional mannequin. She said plaster mannequins can cost up to $2500 each. "That's why the market for these (new mannequins) is soaring now."

The mannequins are made of cloth and stuffed like rag dolls, but are made primarily for display purposes. Mrs. McCarter said these new mannequins are often made with muslin, but "to save costs for the student coming to school we use two pair of leotards or pantyhose." The mannequins are then stuffed with poly-cotton —"it's better to use the type that's rolled instead of foam chips, which make a body that looks like celluloid."

The students who are making the mannequins have the choice of what size and type to make, how to dress the mannequin, and what the facial features should be. They can paint facial features or they can stitch them with needle and thread.

Clair Thevenaz, a student in Mrs. McCarter's class at Midland College, has made three mannequins of varying sizes. She said one is "about the size of an eight-year-old girl. It took a good week to make her — I worked at night. She wears a child's size seven or eight dress." Another of her mannequins is dressed in the "preppy" style, and the third is the size of a toddler child.

The students said the average time to make one mannequin is about one week.

Mrs. McCarter said that this is a six-month course that they have completed in about one month.

The class has also been designing window displays for different retail businesses in Midland, including a men's clothing store, a women's clothing store and a specialty shop. They hope to be able to use some of the mannequins they have made in some of their window displays.

"It takes about an hour from the time they walk into a store to the time they walk out, and they change the whole window," said Mrs. McCarter.

"I'm trying to have them do the different parts of a store," she said. "Decorating the ledges above the clothes racks is the next thing. This will be challenging because two-thirds of the problem with ledges is that you look at it from one point, but it's done from another point."

"One of the reasons we go into window design is that it's easy to talk about it, but it's not easy to get into it," she said.

Mrs. McCarter stressed that practical experience and classroom knowledge are both important to have in order to get the most out of any career.

Several of the students in Mrs. McCarter's class have already had some retailing experience in their business backgrounds at some point in their lives, and many plan to go into fashion merchandizing.

It's deja vu for menswear in '82

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

The word from the menswear industry for spring is, hold onto your hat. And your jackets, suits, slacks and ties.

Hold onto your paycheck, too, if you're looking for something new and revolutionary. Because what we have here is deja vu, 1981 revisited. That ballyhooed trip back to traditional classicism — or was it classic traditionalism? — a couple years ago now is in full swing. For spring.

Just add a few dusty and desert hues to your butter yellows, pastel pinks and baby blues. Make sure you've got a few colorfully striped and patterned shirts, complemented by solid-color wool or cotton ties.

And bring out the white pants and shoes. Just don't resurrect that awful, shiny, wide white belt to go with them. This is, after all, not 1972.

The flares are off the pants, replaced in some cases by pleats for the more adventurous, and the heels on the footwear are a lot more down to earth than a decade ago. No, this isn't '72, but only the most discerning eye can distinguish it from '81.

Menswear retailers are not, to be sure, trying to sell men on a new look. What they're talking about, as winter melts into spring, is a new attitude.

"Buying something new gives your wardrobe a little punch and gives you a fresh feeling for spring," is the way Jim Newcomb, corporate division director for The Highlander, puts it.

"Getting into the lighter colors after wearing the darker winter suits gives you renewed vitality."

Among the predominant spring colors will be mauve, pinks, eggplants and dusty subtle colors, adding to the pastels and ice-cream shades that gave last year's designs a breath of spring.

Natural fabrics and blends are bigger than ever. The 100 percent polyester look is 100 percent dead, buried in a double-knit graveyard.

"Designers feel men will prefer softer fabrics this spring, even if they need more care," points out Gloria Tomita, fashion director for forward-looking International Male.

"The high-tech look, with its bright colors and polyester fabrics, has reached its peak," observed Tomita. "Spring will see a softening of colors — dusty, desert colors will be popular — and fabrics. Everybody's working in cottons this year."

The nautical look makes its biggest splash in stores, in everything from deck shoes in a variety of shades to shorts in a variety of cuts and lengths.

Another trend shoppers may note is the modification of the so-called European cut. Whereas it once meant a trimmer, more tapered shape, it has little to distinguish it from the domestic mainstream these days.

Often, the European stylings may be bulkier, although suits and coats with the Pierre Cardin label continue to accent a trimmer silhouette.

"For jackets, a universal shoulder has taken form as the difference between the American soft shoulder and the more tailored European look becomes less distinct," explained Burton Ruby, chairman of Jaymar-Ruby, a major menswear manufacturer.

Hats and caps should be in greater supply, either complementing the nautical look or reinforcing the popularity of Indiana Jones in "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

Jones' basic fedora with a turned-down, 2½-inch brim will come in a variety of colors, both for dressy and casual wear.

Madras — a cloth rooted in the ancient costumes of southern India — will continue to spring into the color scene, especially in sport coats and shirts.

The madras plaids will be softened by pastels such as aqua, pink, lime and teal.

Designers are also pushing seersucker into the forefront. This crinkled, lightweight fabric can be found in traditional stripings as well as softly shaded patterns.

Look for the usual proliferation of short-sleeved, knitted shirts, polo style, with the distinctive emblems. The traditional solids are updated in a number of contrasting collar treatments.

Cotton sweaters are more mainstream than ever because of their comfort and versatility. They had their impact in the fall, often substituting for a vest to complement a suit. And they'll be around this spring, shielding the brisk spring winds over a variety of knitted polo tops.

Solids, stripes, argyles and cables provide plenty of variety. And for a new feel there's a soft Orlon acrylic fabric suggesting the elegance of cashmere.

But, for the most part, it's all old hat. So hang onto your wardrobe. It's not ready for the Goodwill bag yet.

Is it antique or junque

Dear Mr. McCollam: The interior of these vases is white porcelain. The exterior is a combination of rough and smooth pottery with what appears to be cloisonne. They are 9 inches high.

I would appreciate learning your opinion of these vases and want to thank you for the enjoyment we get in reading your column. -- J.R.B., Merritt Island, Fla.

Dear J.R.B.: Your description and the picture you sent suggest that these are "Tree Bark Cloisonne," a form of Totei (ceramic body cloisonne) made in Japan.

They probably were made around 1900 and might be worth $500 to $600 for the pair.

Dear Mr. McCollam: This wall clock has a solid walnut case and the letter "A" in a square within a diamond on the glass door. It is an 8-day, hour and a half-hour strike and keeps excellent time.

What can you tell me about the maker, its vintage and value? — C.B., Irvine, Calif.

Dear C.B.: This is an Ansonia Octagon Drop clock made in the late 19th century and would sell in the $300 to $400 range.

It was made in Ansonia, Conn., by Anson B. Phelps.

This'll keep you in stitches

By BETTY W. KINSER

Who is the beginning seamstress? She can be young, old, or in between. She can be tall, short, thin or round. She can be a full-time housewife and mother, or split her time for a career. The beginning seamstress can be anyone.

Have you considered learning to sew? (One look at the prices of ready-to-wear can erase any doubts!) If so, this column — and the ones to follow — are for you. We want to get you started, make it easier for you, spur you on.

Learn the stitches.

BASTING — a temporary stitching used to hold things in place until you can make the permanent stitching. Basting is used to hold a garment together for fitting, to hold a collar in place for stitching, to keep hems in line while you do the hand sewing, to match plaids — and many other jobs. For basting, use a long machine stitch and a slightly loose upper tension. To remove basting, clip upper thread every five or six stitches and pull gently on the bobbin thread.

STAY-STITCHING — a permanent stitching used to stabilize curved areas. Stay-stitching is made around necklines, along curved princess seam edges, along curved top edge of skirts, etc. For stay-stitching, use a small machine stitch just inside the seamline. Always sticth with the grain of your fabric. The pattern instruction sheet will show you which direction to go.

EASE STITCHING — stitching used to "draw up" one area to fit another area not quite as large. Ease stitching is used on back shoulder of bodice to make it fit front shoulder; along elbow area of sleeve seam and along sleeve cap; and many other places. For ease stitching, use a stitch slightly longer than your construction stitch.

REINFORCEMENT STITCHING — tiny stitches used to secure a certain point. Use reinforcement stitches at corners that must be clipped into, along the underarm curve of kimonotype sleeves, and other "stress" areas. Reinforcement stitches should be tiny and secure, but should not cause puckering.

Questions may be addressed to Mrs. Betty Kinser, Ragtime Sewing Shoppe, 1305 W. 40 Highway, Blue Springs, MO 64015.

The 1981 Parade of Homes, which was held in December 1981, netted $8,000 for Christmas in April.

"It is our hope that we can double that amount from the first Parade of Homes," states Hail. "We have a beautiful showcase of the finest new construction in the Permian Basin which will feature the energy efficient homes on a smaller scale. These homes will have less room, but will still be elegant living at its best in Midland," the parade chairman noted.

Tabor Construction's parade house was selected by most viewers in last year's parade as one of their favorites. This year's entry will not disappoint your expectations in an on going Tabor tradition of excellence. Tabor's contemporary style is well exhibited in this unique California contemporary home.

The house features three bedrooms, two full baths, one large living area, wet bar and a formal dining room, with a custom built-in hutch. Custom built in ash cabinets with the latest in kitchen appliances make the kitchen one of the selling features to the housewife. Adjacent to the kitchen, is the breakfast area over looking a private, landscaped court yard.

The sequestered master bedroom offers a spacious bathroom, with his and her's vanities and closets. Each of the other bedrooms also include their own built-in study desk with book shelves.

A vaulted stained cedar ceiling accents the large family room. The fireplace is a work of masonry skill that can be considered the focal point of the family room.

A large landscaped atrium surrounded by the formal dining room, family room, entry and master bedroom, attributes largely to the indirect lighting and open feeling of the house.

The atrium and family room both over look a beautiful redwood deck embracing a large spa supplied by Desert Pools of Midland, Inc. A cedar privacy fence surrounding the spa and a cedar lattice patio cover contribute to the beauty and privacy of this entertainment center.

The decor will be co-ordinated by I. J. Tabor Interiors. For the duration of the parade, the house will be completely furnished with furniture, window coverings and all the accessories to give that warm "homey" atmosphere.

French designer unveils spring-summer collection

By NATALIE BEST

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. — Paris fashion designer Louis Feraud has unveiled his exciting '82 spring-summer collection at this desert oasis — the only place outside Paris where the elaborate haute couture gowns and dresses will be shown.

Viewed by an exclusive gathering at the Indian Wells Country Club to benefit the Eisenhower Medical Center, the collection emphasized ornate trims, new hem lengths on old standards from short miniskirted chemises to mid-calf-length ball gowns, and a most sophisticated use of patterned silks — from street wear to caftans.

The Eiffel Tower collection which featured 20 exclusive designs normally seen only through the Feraud salon in Paris and ranging in price from $10,000 to $25,000 per creation also included the Pret-A-Porter collection — or ready-to-wear sportswear, suits and dresses which sell for $450 to $950, outside Paris from London to Los Angeles.

"For me," says Feraud, a top Parisian designer for over 25 years, "it is most important to design clothes for women that they can wear more than one season. I like to design clothes that women will feel comfortable in."

The classic designer believes trends are contrived for notice at the expense of beauty. Thus, the collections are infinitely feminine and flattering to the female form ... not too tight, not too loose.

Caftans — in all lengths — were a highlight from pure silk, knee-length caftans over tight-legged pants to flowing gowns that reached ankle length or longer.

Calling this a season of muted colors, Feraud offered a gown of soft lilac blue accented with a plume of matching egret feathers dropping from the shoulder and a ribbon of sequins cascading from the bodice in a swirl over the flared skirt.

Feraud's daytime dresses were a combination of structured simplicity with a dash of elaborate trim such as sequinned collars or bordered hems. Stripes and polka dots were shown in navy and white and black and white. Some were accented with thin gold belts — good with everything for summer. Others had contrasting belts and hats in raspberry and other bright colors. White or off-white classic box coats and matching brimmed hats set off many an afternoon dress.

Silk dresses with reverse-patterned jackets were shown in shades of blue, mauve, pinks and other pastels for the day-into-evening wear.

The little black knickered jumpsuit — often with spaghetti straps — has replaced the little basic black dress. Fuller black pants reaching to mid-thigh length are good after 5 p.m. Both black silk crepe basics offer the alternative of soft jackets, such as black polka dots on white dotted swiss. Also, knickers, harem pants and culottes were shown with matching and contrasting frilly blouses. And two-tone khaki shirts, over shorts or culottes offered a smart sports look.

Memories of Sophia Loren, a favorite client of Feraud, were brought to mind when the beaded, ruffled, feathered, shimmering haute couture gowns were revealed. They were intricate, sophisticated and glamorous.

One silk square-on-square patterned formal had a matching chiffon boa trimmed in egret. Feraud's mannequin, blonde Marijke Kinley, wore an avian-inspired gown that received a standing ovation. A far cry from his usually understated gowns, the show-stopper was a creation of heavily sequinned shoulders and sleeves and layers of egret feathers pointing vertically over a light sprinkling of metallic sequins on the balance of the crepe chiffon float dress. The birdlike effect continued in the subtle peahen colors highlighted by the glitter and shimmer. The one-of-a-kind gown moved easily and caught all the lights of the runway.

Feraud gave the premiere showing for his close friends Capt. and Mrs. Harry Hoyt, owners of Cabale Cachet of the desert.

McFarland 'pinned' by alumnae sorority

Midland Alpha Chi Omega Alumnae Club met for a luncheon at Midland Country Club to honor a 50-year member, Naomi McFarland and a visiting national officer, Pat Nunley, who is district alumnae chairman.

Mrs. McFarland was born and raised in Independence, Kan. She attended the University of Kansas where she pledged Alpha Chi Omega and majored in home economics. She was initiated into the national sorority Feb. 27, 1932, and served as treasurer and house manager before her graduation in 1935.

She married Forrest McFarland in 1935 and moved to Midland. Except for a brief period of time, the McFarlands have resided in Midland. They are the parents of a daughter, Linda McFarland Cole, and two sons, Ed and Dick. They are the grandparents of five children. Daughter Linda and granddaughter Traci Cole are both members of Alpha Chi Omega from the chapter at The University of Texas.

Naomi McFarland was instrumental in organizing the Midland Alumnae Club which was chartered Oct. 12, 1950. Since that time, she has served the local group in numerous officer positions. In 1961, she began serving Alpha Chi Omega as a national officer. She was the province president of district 14 for two years. She also served two years as a committee member of the National Academic and Standards Committee and as chairman of that committee for a one year term.

Mrs. Nunley, district alumnae chairman who resides in Lubbock, performed the official pinning ceremony which was attended by Midland alumnae, Mrs. McFarland's daughter and several out of town guests.

Using existing storage space efficiently

By DENIECE SCHOFIELD
Copley News Service

Did you know that about 10 percent of the space in your home is used for storage? That means if you have 2,000 square feet in your home, you need 200 square feet of storage space availabile to you.

How does your storage space stack up? (No pun intended.)

Many of us complain that we do not have enough room for storage. More than likely, we either have too many things or we have not used our existing space efficiently.

Before adding any new storage areas to your home, be sure that you have eliminated unnecessary belongings. Organize the space you have before undertaking any major projects.

Remember the housewife's law — junk expands to fill the space available, plus one room. More storage space may just give you more space in which to be disorganized.

We are all bound to some degree by the architecture of our homes. Thus, when a particular kitchen utensil seems best suited to drawer storage but you have no drawer space, you must start using your imagination.

There are only four storage alternatives. You can either hang things up, store them in a drawer, on a shelf or put them on the floor. So, if drawers are not readily available, ask yourself if the item can be hung, put on a shelf or stored on the floor in some fashion.

Consider the alternatives to come up with a workable, efficient solution.

Alternative No. 1: Hanging.

Here you have a variety of possibilities. Kitchen utensils are easily adaptable to hanging. Most restaurant kitchens store things in this manner so it must be an efficient method.

Items can be hung on pegboard or out of sight on the inside of cupboard doors. Hang most frequently used items near your mixing center and save steps in preparing meals.

In the kitchen and bathroom, look up under your sinks. There is a lot of wasted space up there! Stock pails or ice cream buckets with "extras" or seldom used items and hang them on a nail. They're up out of sight, out of your way and still accessible when you need them.

Many commercial products are designed to help you hang anything from paper bags to the ironing board. Even metal parts cabinets (the kind with all the drawers) can be hung up. If you're unaware of the products availabl walk through the ho sewares and hardwa departments in yo favorite stores. Acquai yourself with the varie of storage helpers you c purchse.

Bats, rackets and oth sports equipment can hung on pegboard secured between tw closely placed nail Stored in this fashio they are safe, visible, easy to find and easy to replace after use.

Here are a few other hanging ideas:

Hang a shoe bag to hold things like vacuum attachments. These pocketed type bags can also hold cleaning supplies, sewing items and any number of things. (Even shoes!)

Cup hooks screwed onto the bottom rod of a wooden coat hanger can hold many items.

Hang a chain around a hanger and attach shower curtain hooks every few links and you've got instant hanging storage.

Sew cafe curtain rings to the backs of stuffed animals and hang them up and out of the way. Or, hang a hammock made of fishnet or fabric and you've got a cozy little bed for the animals to rest in.

Tension rods provide easy hanging storage. Put one up in the doorway while you're ironing and you have a convenient, temporary place to hang pressed clothes. Tension rods can also be used to hold rolls of wrapping paper.

This is just the tip of the iceberg, and we've only discussed hanging! You see how your creative imagination can help with your storage problems.

Learn new solutions to old storage problems. Send for Mrs. Schofield's book, "Confessions of an Organized Housewife." Send $5.95 plus $1 postage and handling to Deniece Schofield, P.O. Box 492, Bountiful, UT 84010.

Three awards given on National Secretaries Day

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

A special day honoring secretaries and their bosses was highlighted with a barbecue luncheon hosted by the Permian Basin Chapter, Professional Secretaries International and the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Named as 1982 Secretary of the Year by the Professional Secretaries group was Joyce Lovett.

For the first time in the organization's 22-year history, a woman was selected Boss of the Year. She is Rosemary Graves.

Presented the Energy Secretary of the Year award by the Petroleum Association was Margaret S. Woods of Monahans.

Mrs. Lovett is secretary-treasurer at Hanson Corp. In addition to several volunteer activities, she is second vice president of the Texas State Association of Parliamentarians; vice president of the Permian Basin Unit of the National Association of Parliamentarians; parliamentarian of the PSI organization; communication chairman of the Texas Tech Dad's Association; and education chairman for the Desk & Derrick Club.

Mrs. Graves is vice president of Safety International Co. She is on the advisory board for the Association for Retarded Citizens; has held several offices in the Opti-Mrs. organization; and worked as a leader in Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts.

Mrs. Graves has worked since the age of 13, working through high school and college. In 1959, she married and in 1963, with her husband, she formed a business at home. Today, the business has grown to international proportions, with offices and salesmen located throughout the United States.

Safety International Co. is a full service company dealing in anything to do with safety.

Mrs. Woods, employed by Wood, McShane and Thams, which also has offices in Midland, has worked for the company for 17 years, including being receptionist, secretary, analyst, conomist, handling RRC, DOE and FERC reports, bank deposits, check writing, itinerary preparer, reservations make, note take and more.

She and her husband have adopted two sons and helped form an Episcopal Church in their town. They have been active in 4-H and involved in MH-Mr. She is also involved in Desk and Derrick; National Strippers Well Association; Permian Basin Petroleum Museum; Business and Professional Women's Club; and the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Faye Hawkins was master of ceremonies for the luncheon program. Presenting the awards were Mrs. Hawkins, Bernold M. Hanson, 1981 Boss of the Year; and Richard S. Gaddy, who established the Energy Secretary award.

"Secretaries are the backbone of any business," said John Slyker, who was featured speaker. He is a member of the board of directors for Toastmasters International.

"They are many things, he said. For example, weight lifters. I know many secretaries ho have to carry their bosses during the day.

They also have to be human computers."

Slyker said that the prime movers behind the history of successful businesses are secretaries. "And they have to put up with a lot."

He challenged the secretaries present to take charge of their careers.

"The key to taking charge is building self-confidence," he said. "You are better than you are—you must understand this to take charge of you life," he added.

"Confidence and self-image are connected. Self-image is how you imagine yourself to be, and not how you are or how you want to be."

Slyker said that we limited ourselves by how we think of ouselves.

"If you gell yourself that you're a slow reader, you will be. If you say you can't remember names, then you won't. If you believe you can't meet people, then you won't be able to do so. If you say you can't make ameeting on time, then you probably won't.

"You are limiting yourselves."

He advised his listeners to break this limitation for personal growth.

Other words of advice:

- Aim high.
- Have someplace to go.
- Be ready and be open to opportunity.
- Take risks to improve.
- Seek a brighter world to expand.

Swimsuits have come a long way since 1913

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Back around 1913, Jantzen's swimsuits for women, created of wool and carefully covering a great portion of skin, weighed about 8 pounds. That didn't count the matching wool knee socks and bathing cap the woman also donned to take a dip.

Today, a woman can slide into a skimp of spandex that weighs less than 4 ounces and covers only the bare essentials.

Technological advances in the fabrics industry, starting in the 1950s, revolutionized swimsuit fashion.

Earlier swimsuits had been made of wool and cotton. Then nylon and other quick-drying synthetics emerged, increasing the versatility of swimwear. Today Lycra, a fabric with incredible give and take, is used for swimsuits.

Jantzen Inc., which as late as 1917 sold only 50 dozen swimsuits annually, moved toward the water in 1913 when members of the Portland Rowing Club approached the Portland Knitting Co. to make a pair of rib-stitch trunks for wear during the rainy winter.

The suit, tested in the YMCA pool and the Willamette River, proved popular. It was a turning point in the fortunes of the Portland Knitting Co., the predecessor of Jantzen.

Style was not a consideration in the earliest days of bathing. Modesty alone dictated the fashions that women wore into the water.

Indeed, in the earliest days of bathing or swimming, as we know it now, young ladies at Brighton, England, a spot made popular by the then Prince of Wales, moved into the ocean completely encased in a wicker vehicle drawn by a donkey.

Once the vehicle was pulled waist-high into the sea, the women emerged — somehow through the floor of the vehicle — to "bathe." And heaven help the woman who displayed too much leg while she was emerging.

A favorite bathing dress of the 1850s consisted of long drawers confined at the ankle and a long dress belted at the waist. By 1880 women were beginning to show ankles — even knees — although their bathing costumes were complete with heavy black stockings and a ruffled cap.

By 1900, women were starting to learn to swim. They needed more comfort and began to discard the skirt. The sailor look was popular and considered daring. Black stockings were still in evidence.

In 1910 it took Annette Kellerman, Australian swimming champion, to really change swim fashions for women. She broke the water in a form-fitting, neck-to-ankle outfit.

From then on there was no stopping women when it came to the water. In 1921, a brief Jantzen swimsuit appeared and, legend has it, changed bathing to swimming. It was a sleek tank suit, like the one worn in the company's red diving girl emblem, used in a sensational — for the times — newspaper advertisement.

Costumes got skimpier and skimpier through the years. Two-piece suits appeared in the late '30s, the strapless suit in the '40s and the bikini in the '50s.

There is no one set style now, said Rosemary Huserik, Jantzen fashion coordinator. It's a "give me a selection to choose from, and I'll make my own style" world now, she said.

Study shows mothers pass on their immunity

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Mothers exposed before pregnancy to a common germ called the cytomegalovirus pass on immunity that protects their newborn children from rare but devastating complications of this infection, a study shows.

The cytomegalovirus is extremely common, and most adults have had it, even though it usually does not make them sick. However, if a baby is born with this infection, it sometimes causes retardation and other problems.

Doctors from the University of Alabama Medical School in Birmingham found that if a mother has already had the virus before pregnancy, she shares her immunity with her child. Even if the baby has the infection at birth, he will probably not be noticeably ill from it.

However, if the mother catches the virus for the first time while she is pregnant, her baby may become seriously ill.

Since poor people are more likely to have had the virus, the doctors said the complications in the newborn are most likely to strike affluent women.

The cytomegalovirus is the leading cause of newborn viral infection, and it occurs in about 1 percent of all births.

The study, directed by Dr. Sergio Stagno, was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The study shows that even if women catch the virus for the first time during pregnancy, chances are slim it will harm their newborn. However, Stagno said some women are so afraid of producing an abnormal child that they have an abortion if they contract the virus during pregnancy.

After an initial infection, the germ can remain dormant in the body and flare up later during pregnancy.

The doctors surveyed 2,698 women with middle and upper incomes and 1,014 with low incomes. Fifty-five percent of the affluent women had had the viral infection before pregnancy, compared with 82 percent of the poor future mothers.

Blood tests showed that 32 babies — 16 from each group — were born with the viral infection. But none of those delivered by women who had previously had the infection were sick enough to show any symptoms.

The doctors combined these 32 cases with 28 others identified at other prenatal clinics. Of these 60 babies, 33 were born to mothers who had first-time viral infections. Five of them were sick enough to require treatment. One eventually died, and another was retarded.

Of the 27 whose mothers had the infection before pregnancy, none showed any signs of sickness.

The doctors calculated that if a woman has never had the virus, there is a 1 percent risk that she will get it during pregnancy. And if she catches it, there is a 50 percent chance that she will infect her fetus. But among those infected, there is only a 10 percent risk the baby will show disease symptoms.

The body pays a high price for a bad habit!
There are myths about the use of tobacco and there are facts.
While commercialized aspects of tobacco associates it with a more masculine or feminine look of symbolic stature, the truth about tobacco is that the body pays a high price for a bad habit.
Many studies have indicated that one cigarette reduces the life of a habitual smoker by ten (10) minutes. That is an alarming fact!
Every time a person smokes a cigarette, his thinking process slows down, his teeth become more discolored, irritation of the gums and throat increases and the possibility of heart and circulation diseases become more prominent.
The potential of lung cancer is also increased, and fingernails become stained. With every cigarette, physical endurance and ability decreases.
The use of tobacco is the single most cause of death in the world today. Yet, it is extremely difficult for an individual to quit smoking.
This is where we can help!
Through the procedure of hypnosis, we have helped hundreds of people stop smoking. We can also help you.

Child abuse — hidden tragedy

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

"In 1980, 110 children in Texas died from abuse and neglect," said Mary Lee Johns, director of children and youth services program for the Texas Conference of Churches.

"Nationally 50 percent of the children who die are under the age of six. A large percentage are infants and toddlers," she said. "Eight to 12 percent of the child population of the state of Texas will at some time be abused or neglected."

The Texas Conference of Churches had scheduled a workshop on April 2 in Midland to help churches and clergymen respond more effectively to the problem of child abuse and neglect. Due to a lack of response, the workshop was canceled.

"There is still a tendency in many people to perceive that child abuse is not a problem," said Ms. Johns. "In a study done by the governor's office, 23 percent of the people who responded said they thought child abuse is not a problem in Texas."

"A study conducted the Sam Houston State University estimates that between 283,000 and 400,000 Texas children are at risk of being abused and neglected," she said.

Abuse to a child can be in many forms, including physical abuse, emotional abuse, verbal abuse and sexual abuse. The severity of the abuse often depends on the age of the child. "One of the things people don't realize that is physically abusive is shaking a child. In a very young child, that can be physically abusive," said Ms. Johns. "The same degree of force applied to an eight-year-old isn't going to do the same amount of damage as it will to the body of an 18-month-old baby."

MOLLY WHITTINGTON, program director for Protective Services for Children, Region 12, Department of Human Resources, said, "A lot of people who think of children chronically being neglected think of the ghetto, but don't think of it as happening in their particular circle of acquaintances. We in the business know that is a myth. Child abuse can happen in any group or any area."

"Our working, general definition of physical abuse is 'the non-accidental injury of a child by a parent or care-taker'," she said.

According to Mrs. Whittington, Protective Services, Region 12, which covers the 17-county Permian Basin area, had approximately 686 cases of child abuse or neglect in February, 1982, including both new referrals and cases already in the caseloads. Approximately 1500 children were involved. In 1981, it averaged serving about 639 families a month, with an average of 1400 children.

After Protective Services has received the referrals and determined if child abuse is actually occuring, Mrs. Whittington said the caseworkers begin working with the families to help them overcome whatever is causing the parents to abuse their children.

"The family is so important to a child — even after the worst abuse you can imagine — those are his parents and they are terribly important to him," she said. "We usually have about 5 percent of our cases going to court and children being removed from their families. Some are in foster homes, some have been adopted, some are in child care group facilities. A few may go back to their parents on a trial basis."

ABUSIVE FAMILIES TEND TO MOVE from place to place a great deal, Mrs. Whittington said. "One of the general characteristics of an abusive and neglectful family is that they are a disorganized family. Usually there are a multitude of problems, and usually the abuse or neglect is a symptom of an underlying problem. And one characteristic of this disorganization is the attempt to 'go somewhere else and it will be better'."

The economic boom in the Permian Basin, which has caused many new people to move to the area, has also caused some community problems, such as a severe housing shortage and a high cost of living. "When you are cramped in a small living space, such as a motel room, and the cost of living is high, and you have NO support system (because family and friends are far away), you sometimes beat your kids," said Mrs. Whittington.

"There is no one cause of a parent abusing or neglecting a child," she said. "The more severe the injury, usually the more severe the potential problem."

No one knows exactly how many children are victims of child abuse, because many cases are never reported. "We only know of the cases that some concerned person in the community has reported to us," Mrs. Whittington said.

THE TEXAS FAMILY CODE, Title II, Chapter 34, Section 34.01, states that anyone who has reason to believe that any child has been or will be physically abused or neglected is mandated to report that situation to the Department of Human Resources or the local law enforcement agency. "Our investigations are strictly for the protection of the child," said Mrs. Whittington. "We don't file any criminal charges. On occasion things happen to children that also violate criminal codes — in that case the sheriff's department or the police will also be investigating the case, but in a different area."

She added that the code is an attempt to keep Texas children safe, but is not intended to be used as a weapon between people who are angry at each other. "The code is clear that if you report child abuse or neglect in bad faith, you can be held liable," she said.

"Abusive parents or chronically neglectful parents are not monsters — only a very small percent are actually mentallly ill," said Mrs. Whittington. "Most are just people who don't know how to cope with parenting, or just with stress. Many of our abusive or chronically neglectful parents are still very much like children themselves — impulsive, not understanding of children, still trying to fill their own unfilled needs."

"We usually tend to parent the way we were parented," she said, "unless we make an effort to learn another way. Often abusive parents were abused children. We spend a lot of time teaching them how to be a parent, because a lot of people have children, but they aren't parents."

"Every parent, at one time or another, could be a potential child abuser," Mrs. Whittington said, "because children are sometimes very difficult to deal with. Fortunately, most parents don't."

"The more people who know (of the extent of child abuse and ways parents and children can be helped), the better off the community will be, because children belong to everyone," she said.

DAVID HICKMAN, JOHN YOUNG AND KAY MALEY, counselors with Family Services of Midland, work with many people, including members of abusive families.

"Most parents at one point or another have felt like abusing their children or have become dangerously close to it," said Young. "Abusive parents are those that have stepped over that line. They don't have to be monsters or mentally ill."

He also said the idea that abusive parents cannot love their children is not true. "Abusive parents generally love their children. I think of love as having two sides — the sweet, gushing part you see in pictures, and the intentionally responsible part. Abusive families usually don't have both sides of love."

"The abusive family is often socially isolated," said Young, "and often without any real human contact of close friends or family they can really talk to. Social isolation coupled with lack of real human contact, and you can be alone in a roomful of people."

"Usually self-esteem has gotten pretty low in an abusive family — they are discounting their strengths," said Hickman.

Low self-esteem in women at home, who may be losing contact with society, often causes mothers to abuse their children, Ms. Maley said.

"Because a lot of people were abused as children doesn't mean that all who were abused now abuse their children," said Young.

"Most parents are the best parents they know how to be, given the situation they are in," said Young. He listed four job-related situations that might cause parents to abuse their children:

1. An unemployed father caring for children at home.
2. A working mother with job and domestic duties that cause job overload.
3. A husband who works so long and hard at his job that he neglects his wife.
4. Parents who bring job-related tensions and attitudes home.

Other situations that Young said might cause parents to abuse their children are:

1. Marriage difficulties that end up being taken out on the kids.
2. Socialization process — role modeling that says hitting people is all right.
3. Children who are running wild, who don't know enough about their limits or boundaries, and who go too far.

HICKMAN SAID EMOTIONAL ABUSE of a child is "more difficult to spot. It's a lot easier to deny." He said some kinds of emotional abuse of a child include being overly critical of the child, and having no involvement at all with the child. "Constant criticism is the main one — the child's self-esteem goes way down, making it hard for him or her to be approving of others, and the cycle starts."

The counselors said each family is different, so the therapy used is an individualized program to suit each family.

"It varies for each family and situation," said Young. "I would try to get the whole family in because there will be a lot of family dynamics going."

"Even abusive families have a lot of strengths going — resources, skills," he said. "I want to pick up on what they have going for them, inside and outside the family."

"You have to let them know you think they are basically OK people," Young said. Many abusive parents don't like the fact they have to be abusive, but they don't know any other way to be, he added.

In working with abusive parents, Hickman said the counselors try to teach them certain skills in order to help them stop abusing their children. Some of these skills include the following:

1. Teaching parenting skills to help them see the alternatives to abusing their children.
2. Teaching communication skills. Sometimes a parent will keep anger in until it all comes out at once. If they can express anger verbally, children might not be abused.
3. Teaching stress management. Sometimes that includes working on a marriage relationship so they can use each other as strengths.

The counselors said that sometimes they must take on the role of parent figure to parents who are abusive to their children.

"There are some rules for getting along with peole," said Hickman. "We are trying to find the reasons for people becoming dysfunctional. It's not normal for people to beat their kids."

"You do what you can do to make them feel good about themselves," said Ms. Maley. "People have to change themselves."

"I'm not going to make major changes in families," said Hickman. "If I can put a little chink in that cycle, I feel I've done a lot."

Reviving the legacy of the buffalo soldiers

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
AP Writer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Indians dubbed them "buffalo soldiers" as tribute to their fierce prowess in battle.

And when she was young, Patricia Erisman heard of their exploits from her grandmother.

She heard how these doggedly loyal soldiers safeguarded the volatile Mexican border in the last days of the old West, how they shielded settlers from marauding Indians and how they blazed trails through rugged, uncharted territory.

"I didn't know in all her stories that the men she was talking about were black men," Mrs. Erisman said. "It didn't matter to her."

But it matters to Burl Washington, a 31-year-old artist who believes history has shortchanged the buffalo soldiers.

Washington has started a series of 18 watercolors depicting the dress and advemtures of the black soldiers who served in the 9th and 10th Regiments of the U.S. Cavalry. He expects to finish the series in the next two years, and hopes it will peel off the whitewash of the folklore of the frontier.

"People today know mainly what they read or what they see on TV," he said. "John Wayne's riding to the rescue, and you don't see any blacks behind him."

Western artist Frederick Remington once rode and camped out with the 10th, and wrote of their dedication and loyalty. Historians record that the black regiments had a lower rate of desertion than their white counterparts.

The Llano Estacado Museum in Plainview is studded with artifacts from the heyday of the buffalo soldiers. The museum's curator, Eddie Guffee, has set up an exhibit on the black soldiers.

"Every kid growing up is wild about the cavalry and John Wayne movies," Guffee said. "In 1962, when I was what I called fort-hopping — going from one army post to another — I located another post in the Trans Pecos region that had been virtually untouched since the buffalo soldiers left."

That post was Pena Colorado, near Alpine. But the black soldiers also were stationed at Fort Concho, near San Angelo, and Forts Davis and Stockton in West Texas. They served from Texas' Big Bend area to the plains of South Dakota.

"I don't recall ever seeing an article in an old newspaper about the black 9th and 10th cavalry," Guffee said. "The white troops took credit for their work. The frontline troops, the troops that got the miserable jobs like picking up the dead, were always black.

"People coming in to see the exhibit say, 'What are you doing with black soldiers?' I point out that every campaign in this area was headed or participated in by a black soldier," he said.

Washington has focused his series on 1866 to 1901, trying to capture such intricate details as the corncob pipes the blacks fashioned to the Civil War weapons they were furnished.

A mutual friend introduced him to Mrs. Erisman, a Fort Worth resident whose great-grandfather — John Sylvanus Loud — was a white officer in the 9th regiment from about 1868 to 1890.

Mrs. Erisman's grandmother, Dorothy Helena Loud, left the legacy of a detailed scrapbook.

"They were extremely good soldiers. They were probably the best because they started with nothing. It's funny to me because I grew up knowing it (that many soldiers were black), and people just don't seem to know."

Tad Tuleja makes compilation of famous fallacies

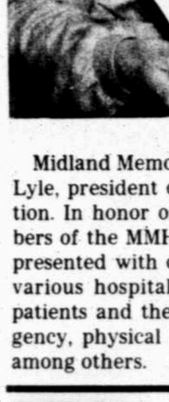
Hearst Feature Service

The painting we call "Whistler's Mother," is in reality titled "Arrangement in Grey and Black No. 1." Calling it "Whistler's Mother" is more descriptive than fallacious.

Popular opinion is clearly off base in many of the notions to which we cling. So we learn in "Fabulous Fallacies," by Tad Tuleja, (Harmony Books, $6.95) more a compilation of interesting items than a listing of actual fallacies.

Tuleja said he started with 400 or 500 items which he narrowed to 300. "I had to throw out things I couldn't track down," he said. Pulling cards from his pocket, he showed an investigator's enthusiasm as he rattled off facts he's collected.

"Fallacies" is clear and concise, and Tuleja's comments are funny and right on the button.



DEAR ABBY

Millionaire's cash flow is strictly one-way

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: There's a man in our club who has so much money, I'm sure he doesn't even know how much he has. He's considered high society and nobody would dare say anything to him about this bad habit he has, but I think it's time somebody did.

He never has any money. When he needs cash for a tip or a caddy or whatever, he'll turn to whoever is standing near him and say, "Anybody got $10 — or $20?" This happens all the time.

The funny part of it is the way everybody fights to accommodate him. You'd think it was an honor to give this millionaire money.

Far as I know, he's never made any attempt to pay anybody back. I gave him $20 once, and that was the end of it.

My question: Should I remind him that he owes me $20? — P.O.'D IN PALM SPRINGS

DEAR P.O.'D: Go ahead. And when you do, he'll probably turn to somebody else and say, "Anybody got $20?"

DEAR ABBY: My husband died suddenly of a massive heart attack three weeks ago. He was only 49 and was never sick a day in his life. It was a terrible blow to me and our four children.

Last week my daughter, who just turned 18, came to me and said she wanted to get married to the boy she has been going with for nearly two years.

I never knew marriage was on her mind and thought maybe she missed her dad and wanted to get married so she would have someone to lean on. Then she told me she HAD to get married! (The baby is due in six months.) I am in shock over this. I like the boy, but he's only 19 and going to college.

They have to get married as soon as possible, but I wonder what kind of wedding I should put on in view of the circumstances. She wants a church wedding. — DOUBLE TROUBLE

DEAR DOUBLE: Talk to your clergyman and let him guide you. Your daughter can have a lovely church wedding, but since you are in mourning and she is pregnant, hold it down to a quiet, dignified family affair with only very close friends.

FOCUS: Clayton Williams Jr.

A many-talented man enjoying life to the fullest

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Local oilman, rancher and commercial developer Clayton Williams Jr. grasps life with both hands, much the way he would a Brangus calf, and wrests from it all he can.

He does this with skill, daring and what he acknowledges as "being in the right place at the right time."

Not a little humor is thrown in, for good measure. Williams closely monitors his many business interests, but, he's probably the last person to take himself too seriously.

While he admits to being flattered by the media attention he's received in the past couple years, he says, "I think because I'm kind of a character; because I'm outspoken, I've had more attention than I'm due.

"There's a lot of other people I think they should be talking to. I do think this; I think a person who has benefitted by the freedom we have has a duty, frankly, to stand up and say his piece."

Williams takes this seriously, speaking to students at Texas A & M and Texas Tech, for example, about the free enterprise system.

Clayton Williams Jr.

THE 50-YEAR-OLD entrepreneur calls himself a "Fort Stockton boy deep down," in spite of having lived in Midland for many years.

He is well known in the Texas energy industry for the Williams Companies, and among Texas Aggies as an A & M Outstanding Alumni and benefactor. He is also the proud owner of an award-winning, registered Brangus herd.

More recently, Williams is putting his stamp on the city with his newest project, Claydesta Plaza, a 175-acre office complex in north Midland.

An outdoorsy man, Williams loves the ranching part of his busy life the most, although he's definitely enthusiastic about everything he does. He owns an irrigated alfalfa farm in the valley where he grew up, near Fort Stockton; and six ranches, one in Wyoming and five in Texas. For the last two years, buyers from all over the nation have made his annual Brangus sale, in August, the highest paying production sale of any breed in the United States.

During Easter week, Williams' family branded 1,600 calves.

"You sit around the desk most of the time and then try to go be a working man for a week and it's pretty hard on you. It's so good for you, though, and so satisfying. I've got a good cow operation, and a good crew of cowboys."

WILLIAMS' INTEREST in the ranch and farm stems from his boyhood in Fort Stockton, where his father was a rancher. "I worked. I was proud to work. I started in third grade, painting the feed troughs red — got red all over me as well.

"And I learned to work with men at an early age, mostly Mexican people. I speak fluent Spanish (and I speak oil field)," he said laughing.

In the 1950s, when West Texas suffered a severe drought, Williams' father sold the ranch and leased out the family farm.

At first, Williams believed his plan to be a cowboy was thus "thwarted," in his words, and upon graduation from A & M in 1954, he sold life insurance.

After "drifting into the oil business," Williams bought back most of the family land.

"I'm very satisfied with that. It's staying with the continuity of life, and it's still one of the most important things to me, to be farming back in the valley where I grew up."

FOR WILLIAMS, a physical man, farming and ranching aren't enough, however. An avid hunter, he and his wife, Modesta, have bagged big game all over the world, specializing in large-horned sheep.

"My Dad didn't hunt, but a lot of drives in life are from what you didn't have, and so I always wanted to hunt. I love to be out."

Williams relishes the action, which he says enables him to work that much harder the rest of the year.

"It's very primitive, it's very strenuous. I get off for 20 days, and let some Indian or Mongol walk my tail off, and I realize I'm not much. No booze, a lot of exercise, no tension."

Often when he gets out of tune with life, he retreats back to the land at Fort Stockton, to get in touch with himself, he says. Working with his hands, or getting thrown from a horse, brings him back to reality, to something more tangible than all the paperwork associated with his oil business.

WILLIAMS WANTS his five children to know what is real as well.

Although they've been born to wealth, he wants them to learn to work and seek the satisfaction that comes from having achieved.

"The love (of the land) will come or not come, but my children work. They worked the whole time during branding, and they're becoming proud of themselves as workers. It's very important, particularly for substantial people, to teach their children to work."

Of his six year-old daughter, who helped her daddy with the spring round-up, he says proudly, "She's proud of herself. She's sunburned, but now she's a cowgirl."

Can a young person starting out accomplish what Williams and others his age have? "I would say yes, if they have some luck, a lot of hard work, and part of it is being in the right place at the right time. The most important thing I tell them is not to quit.

" When you get knocked around, which, incidentally, never seems to end, you've just got to get up off the floor and keep trying."

HE BELIEVES he's been helpful in motivating younger people, but the extent of his influence stops there, he says.

He thought about entering politics once, but soon dropped that idea.

"I ran for president of the Jaycees in Fort Stockton once and got beat two to one," he said laughing. "I support conservative candidates, but I'm not a politician — I'm too blunt."

Williams' management philosophy is to hire good people, give them a part of the action, and then let them go. There's too much going on for him to oversee his 17 companies daily; he troubleshoots instead.

"We've got a very keen group of guys and gals in our operation. (They) are very much a part of the overall operation." The key people, who head each of the various oil, gas, pipeline, real estate and ranching companies, own a net profits part of the business.

"My people consider it their company, not my company. If they make me money, they make themselves money."

"I just go to where there's problems. If they see me coming, they know there's trouble, except for at the farm or ranch, where I go because I love it."

WITH CLAYDESTA, the office and retail plaza now under construction in north Midland, Williams is going in a new direction.

"It's a natural," he says, to have a place where a person can park, get a haircut, eat, and do his business and banking, in one convenient area.

Not a real estate operator, Williams says he was "just looking for a place to grow, and one thing led to another. I wanted some room, like downtown used to be, with space and trees and parking."

Included in the vast project is the new Claydesta National Bank. "I've been sitting on the other side of the table for a long time," Williams said, laughing, "but I had no idea of starting a bank per se."

Capitalized with $4 million, the bank "will probably never be large enough to service my companies' credit demands," but will serve the tenants who locate at the plaza.

Those tenants will include several retail businesses, all the Williams Companies, the West Texas headquarters for Gulf Oil, Cities Service Company, and Southland Royalty.

BY THE END of 1983, almost 6,000 people will be working at Claydesta and the adjacent Petroleum Center office development, Williams said.

"Midland is in the first quarter of its growth, if you will, like a football game just after the kickoff," Williams said. With the Claydesta project, he's betting there will be sustained growth for many years to come.

"We've really enjoyed Midland — it's a very keen, dynamic, young town."

From where he sits, life looks satisfying to Williams. "I've done pretty good, but it's not hard to find someone who's done better. I'm kind of satisfied where I am. I've got a good family, a good wife. I paid the interest on my note at the bank last month.

"I'm very fortunate to have been able to do a lot of things I wanted to do."

30 petroleum associations to lobby in Washington

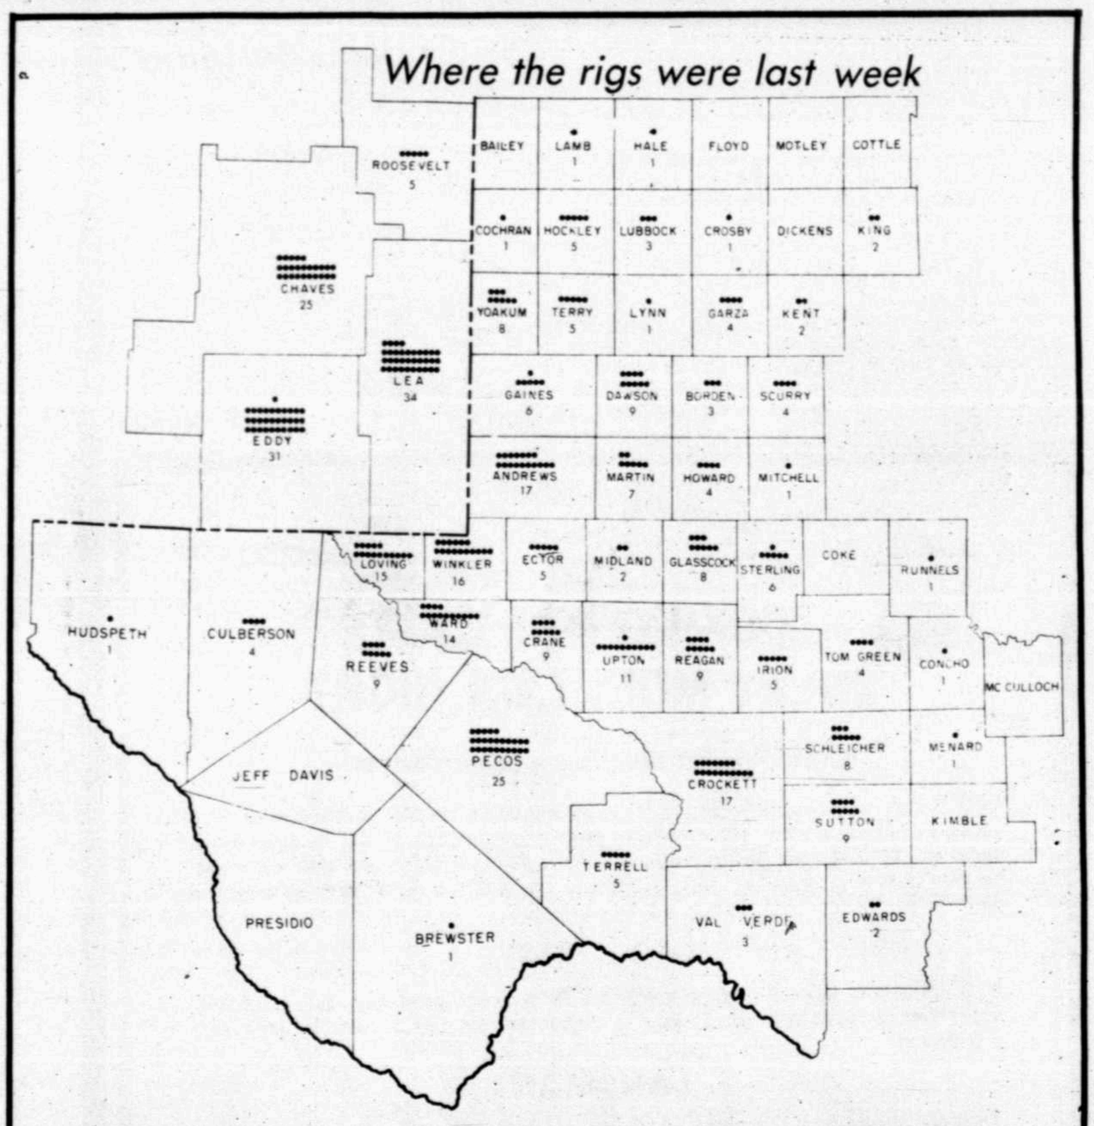
Representatives of some 30 independent petroleum associations, including PBPA, will meet in Washington the week of April 26th to lobby congress against any tax changes that would harm the domestic petroleum industry.

Percentage depletion, intangible drilling costs, last year's changes in the windfall profits tax, an oil import fee, and a BTU tax on all energy will all be candidates for change in order to bring in more money to the Federal Treasury, many observers have long predicted that the oil industry would have to help bail out the free-spending liberals in congress and that may very well be what happens.

The price for a barrel of crude oil has just about leveled off and, in some cases, has started to creep back up. This also means that gasoline prices may have bottomed out and could be on the way up as well. The average price for a gallon of regular last week was $1.18.

And, a bill has been introduced in the Senate to abolish the synthetic fuels corporation. The original bill authorized the Federal Government to guarantee loans or provide supports to synfuels projects. Up to $88 billion dollars in credit could be available in the program. So far, 17 billion dollars have been made available for current projects.

Where the rigs were last week



Basin rig count declines

The Permian Basin rotary rig count fell last week to 373, according to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. The county dropped 12 from the 385 total of the previous week.

The figure for April 9 was 368. April 1, it was 390.

One year ago the count for the area covered by the map was 403.

Oil and gas drilling in Texas during the first quarter of 1982 was up 20 percent compared to the same period last year, according to statistics compiled by the Railroad Commission's Oil and Gas Division.

Total completions stood at 6,111 for the first three months of 1982, compared to 4,955 completions in the first quarter of 1981. Total new holes drilled, including oil and gas wells and dry holes, were 7,496 this year, compared to 5,957 new holes for the first quarter of 1981.

In the completions category, oil discovery wells were down 30 percent for the period with 129 this year compared to 184 in 1981.

First quarter 1982 gas completions were up both discovery and existing field wells. Discovery well completions rose 25 percent, standing at 385 this year compared to 287 last year.

Midland fine art investments steady

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

As the economy slackens and the value of many securities and investment metals declines, fine art is holding its own as an investment nationwide. What about the fine art market in Midland?

While local buyers don't always choose art strictly for investment purposes, sales here are stable, especially for the finer, more expensive pieces. Gallery owners report sales of less expensive art have dropped slightly.

In the words of one local gallery owner, Midland buyers have lots of art savvy. Many of them ask for specific artists by name, and these artists tend to be not only popular, but produce investment-quality art.

"As the economy gets tighter, people are more and more investment-minded. The tighter the money gets, the larger the individual sales are," said Carol Swain of the Hanging Tree Gallery.

"Fewer people are buying, but sales tell me that Midland people are sharp," she said. "They're not just buying it to hang on the wall. They are aware of what fine art is and they are wanting full value for their dollar."

At the same time, Swain and other art gallery owners say they like to think their customers are buying art mainly for its aesthetic value, to enrich their daily living, whether it be in the home or office.

"Art can appreciate, but do buy it for enjoyment right now," advised one gallery owner. "If five, ten, fifteen years from now, it's worth more, then that's your good fortune."

Midland gallery owners, interior decorators and others who work with fine art disagree on what constitutes investment art. Some say it's art worth at least $3,500; others say it's more, even up to the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Swain said the average appreciation, "lumping in the very good with the mediocre," is about 25 percent annually, although some pieces can appreciate up to 400 or 500 percent.

"It's hard to define investment art," said Van Van Wie, owner of the Decorating Center. "Some think it's buying a Norman Rockwell," while others think it's buying what they like.

Everyone agrees that if any piece of art appreciates, it can be considered an investment. But it seems the old maxim, beauty is in the eye of the beholder, is still true.

Gallery owners stressed that a piece's true value depends on the artist and the opinion of the buyer toward the piece.

Investment art is defined as art which, when and if it appreciates in dollar value, has appreciated enough to keep up with inflation. If a piece costing $100 today is worth $1,100 in ten years, what has really been gained?

As one dealer pointed out, there is usually a broker's fee, both when a person buys and then later sells a piece of art, so the appreciated value must be able to cover those fees.

"If you can back up and say you tied up some of your money, but kept up with inflation and are able to overcome the two broker's fees, and the profit compares with what you could've made in another investment area — then it's been an investment piece of art."

Art is such an intangible, subjective thing that it's difficult to put a price on it. "It's a personal thing, it has to do with personal taste," said interior designer J. David Porras. "Fine pictures or fine paintings are not disposable. They're something you buy and live with for the rest of your life. It has to be pleasing to you, and something you get something out of, mentally, when you look at it."

Porras and other Midland decorators said most of their clients buy art for its aesthetic appeal rather than for investment purposes, although Midlanders have bought art as an investment in the past.

Porras defined investment art as art worth upwards of $100,000. "We're not talking about a $5,000 painting.

"Twenty years ago there was a lot of investment art on Midland's walls. Today it's down in the vault," because of Midland's harsh, dry climate and the threat of theft, he said.

"It's a very good investment if the quality is good to begin with."

Many variables contribute to a piece's initial value, beyond the buyer's personal opinion. The reputation and skill of the artist are probably the most important factors. If he is known nationally and has works hanging in major private, corporate or museum collections, his work rises in value.

"It's contingent on the artist's reputation and his past record of sale," said Swain. "So many people paint, but not everyone is a noted painter. A lot depends on how the product is marketed, too. An investment piece of art should be by someone known not only in the Permian Basin, but nationally.

"If it's by a local person who shows only locally, the chances of appreciation are pretty much nil."

This is not always the case, however. Some local artists have developed into investment quality artists over the years.

Van Wie cited the example of George Kovach, who some 15 years ago was an Odessa policeman whose paintings sold for about $50 or $60. At a recent art auction for charity held in Odessa, one of his paintings brought $9,000. Many of his pieces are now worth thousands of dollars, she said.

In general, art has to be scarce to be valuable, as far as investments go. The art market is variable just like the stock market, said one gallery owner, and it, too, follows the laws of supply and demand.

If an artist is overly productive, thereby making each piece worth a bit less, he has less chance of being known for investment-quality art.

This is particularly true of bronzes, which are normally offered in editions of 15 or more, and for limited edition prints of serigraphs and lithographs, which may be offered in editions of 100, 250, 500 or more.

Artists' proofs cost the most and would appreciate faster than limited edition proofs. The more prints in the edition, the less each one is likely to be worth, although it depends on the artist.

Which type of art appreciates fastest, one-of-a-kind paintings, bronzes or limited edition prints?

"It ultimately depends on the artist, but a painting would generally appreciate more," Swain said.

Since the art market is such an emotional, subjective, speculative one, most people who have fine art in their homes or offices are reluctant to part with it.

The bottom line for many art owners is that, after several years, they will not sell their art, even though it may have appreciated and would be considered an investment, because they have loved it and are comfortable with it.

Device developed for speech impaired individuals

LUBBOCK — Texas Instruments has developed Vocaid, a new device to aid a special segment of the population, speech-impaired individuals. The lowest cost instrument on the market to utilize computer-synthesized speech, Vocaid provides new capabilities for the speech-impaired to communicate in words and phrases.

The hand-held Vocaid measures approximately 10.5 inches by 14 inches with a thickness of 1.5 inches, presenting a 36-square touch panel to the user. Each square is connected to a pressure-sensitive switch that activates a circuit to produce a letter, number, word, or phrase. By merely pressing the appropriate square, the user generates, in human-quality speech, the idea he or she wants to communicate.

The $150 suggested retail price for Vocaid includes the basic unit and four changeable overlays with leisure, bedside, telephone, and alpha-numeric vocabularies. The overlays are held in place by a detachable square plastic frame that has a raised grid guide and that lock-snaps on to the unit.

The bedside overlay begins with "I would like to ...", and can be followed by "have medical help", "use the bathroom", "read", "write", "bathe", or any one of a complete series of messages. In addition, the bedside overlay is used to relate medical information, such as "I am..." followed by "in pain", "dizzy", or other messages.

Activating the phrases, "I am using an artificial voice with a limited vocabulary", allows the speech-impaired to communicate using the telephone overlay. The user can ask the listener to "please explain", or tell a caller, "I'll take a message." More important, the telephone overlay allows the individual to relate his need for specific emergency attention by announcing "Help! Fire Emergency", "Help! Medical Emergency", or Help! Police Emergency."

The alpha-numeric overlay, third in the group, contains the letters of the alphabet and the numbers one through nine (the letter "O" is also used as the zero). With this overlay, the individual can spell out a message not contained on one of the other overlays. Each overlay, except the alpha-numeric, contains the message, "Please ignore last remark", which serves as a correction phrase if the wrong message is activated.

The leisure overlay is designed for playing games, such as bridge or chess. A touch to one block in the grid activates the phrase,"I would like to play..." This phrase can then be followed by any of a series that will complete the message, such as "a board game", "checkers", or dominoes." Other messages available on this overlay include "What's the score?", "Good play", "My play", and even "Oh-oh" when the game gets tough!

The phrases programmed into Vocaid were chosen from among the many that speech-impaired individuals suggested as those most necessary on a daily basis. The Vocaid overlays are made of Stacon, a special plastic that resists wrinkling and tearing. The back of each overlay contains a blank outline, allowing the user to put in his own system of symbols, such as photos, Blissymbolics, or Rebus symbols.

Texas Instruments offers several accessories for Vocaid, including an a.c. adapter to use in place of the two "D" alkaline cells that are the unit's normal power source. An amplifier is also available to control Vocaid's volume.

Vocaid is the result of advanced microcomputer technology, using a unique integrated circuit that talks with natural inflection. The speech circuit is essentially an electronic model of the human vocal tract. Just as human speech is created by air impulses passing through the vocal cords and the vocal tract, synthetic speech is generated by processing electronic impulses through a rapidly changing electronic filter. The result is synthetically-produced speech that sounds very much like speech heard over the telephone.

Business often loses legislative battles by default

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Have you ever wanted to testify before a city, county, state or federal legislative body and then chickened out?

If you have, you are among a great number of U.S. businessmen who, fearful of being made appear to be stupid or of getting hostile treatment, shy away from appearing at hearings — often to the detriment of their cause.

"All too often business has lost in legislative halls by default," claims Wilfred H. Hall, owner of Acorn Consultants of Portsmouth, N.H., in the April issue of "Petroleum Marketing Management" magazine. He adds, "failure of businessmen to appear concerning proposed legislation is usually interpreted to mean there are no adverse effects on you or your industry."

Hall suggests to a prospective witness that he ought to be prepared to be interrupted and should not take it as a personal insult when committee members talk among themselves, eat, read or suddenly disappear from the hearing room.

The author says that once the businessman decides to testify he ought to prepare a written statement which clearly identifies his views, presents the case briefly and logically and underlines key points at the closing.

The businessmen's conduct at the hearing? For one, he ought to get there early. He should be properly dressed, appear unperturbed even if he feels the committee is biased against him, stand or sit erect when testifying, and not allow himself to be rushed or be bothered by extraneous noise. At the end, he ought to agree to answer questions.

The do's and don'ts in handling questions? Don't get emotional, cute or frivolous or bluff. Think before you speak, keep answers brief and — most of all — do not downgrade the opposition.

"Politics is an accommodation," Hall says. "Friends and foes get together in compromise to pass legislation. This doesn't mean you should abandon your principles, it's just conveying a feeling that you do not consider your word immutable."

DISLOCATED WORKERS

When the market for buggywhips went out, it never came back. The factories producing buggywhips went out of business years ago. But a lot of other industries are now folding, leaving behind close to 500,000 dislocated workers.

According to the Labor Department's latest figures, nearly all the 280,000 persons added to its jobless rolls in March were "job losers" — people laid off or "permanently terminated" by plant closings, business failures and the like. The layoffs were not limited to long-depressed industries such as autos, steel and construction.

Because of plant shutdowns and permanent mass layoffs caused by import competition or technological obsolesence, the dislocated worker often has no hope of getting a new job.

According to economist Michael C. Barth, the problem is pressing. "Dislocated workers," Barth writes in the latest issue of "The Institute for Socioeconomic Studies," "typically are union members, accustomed to relatively high wages and fringe benefits, male and older than the average worker, and often family heads who do not seek assistance until they have drawn down their savings."

The workers, he says, have little experience with social service programs and less inclination to use them lest they participate in a system that helps the "welfare types" they have criticized.

What should be done to help these workers? Barth suggests the federal government ought to send a government agent to any plant that is to be closed to establish a labor-management-public committee in the plant to help find jobs for those asking for help.

A similar program in Canada places about 70 percent of dislocated workers at a cost of about $93 per person. Canadian law requires that companies notify authorities as soon as they determine to close a facility. The early warning ensures enough time to launch a serious placement and retraining drive.

UNEMPLOYMENT BACKLASH

Rising unemployment threatens to cause not only economic but also political trouble for the Reagan administration. A third dimension of layoffs is their sociological impact.

As the jobless rolls grow in this recession, falling income-tax receipts and rising spending for unemployment insurance and welfare payments are jeopardizing Reagan's budget balancing effort. With nearly 9.9 million Americans looking out for work — not including 1.3 million other "discouraged workers" who have given up looking for work — worried Republicans are lowering their expectations for the 1982 congressional elections. They now concede they will lose some of the blue-collar support they won last year, notably in the Northeast and Midwest.

The socioeconomic impact? Since World War II, economic factors, especially unemployment, have been shown to account for up to 90 percent of the variances in criminal statistics. Recent data from Dr. Harvey Brenner, the leading researcher in this field, indicate that for every percentage point increase in the unemployment rate we can expect increases on the order of: 8.7 for narcotics arrests, 2.2 percent for burglary, 5.7 percent for robbery, 6 percent for embezzlement and 3.8 for homicide.

Dr. Brenner says the suicide rate is so closely linked to unemployment that it can actually be used as an economic indicator. "The power of loss of employment is such that a very sizable number of persons are willing to destroy themselves rather than bear the shame and humiliation of dealing with the consequences of loss of job and income," Brenner adds.

The destruction has many other faces: mental hospital admissions increase, as do pathological drinking, divorce, separation, illegitimate births, and stress-related disorders such as heart disease.

UNION "GIVE BACKS"

We are beginning to get mixed signals about the effects of union "givebacks" which appear to have become the order of the day in the current round of labor negotiations in America's troubled industries.

"Organized labor has become more interested in job security than in higher wages and benefits," claims Alexander B. Trowbridge, president of the National Association of Manufacturers. In a recent speech to Utica, N.Y. business leaders, Trowbridge insisted that "there has been a major shift in the bargaining objectives of some American unions recently because of the recession, foreign competition, automation, the legislative outlook and inflation."

But in an article in the current issue of AFL-CIO's "American Federationist" magazine, the union claims that "bargaining between unions and employers in the remainder of 1982 will not only be heavy, but it will also be hard."

"This is because a few private-sector employers in certain industries, emboldened by government union-busting tactics and harried — or professing to be harried — by recession, have become more strident in demanding employee givebacks," claims Stephen Dohrmann, the union's economist.

The third view is from A.H Raskin who warns that "unless union concessions are accompanied by a fundamental shift away from mistrust toward more cooperative day-to-day relations in office and factory . . . success in reining-in the pace of wage inflation may well be negated by in-shop sabotage."

"Smoldering labor-management animosity," writes Raskin in the current issue of the Institute for Socioeconomic Studies "Journal," can yet ignite "quickie strikes over trivial grievances that could exact a price far in excess of any seeming moderation at the bargaining table."

An associate director of the National News Council, Raskin contends that the only effective defense against the sabotage threat will be to find means to assure that giveback concessions also soften antagonisms characterizing labor-management relations at least since the 1930s.

Management can encourage this, he says, by committing itself to the "principle of equality of sacrifice" under which any surrender of benefits by the union rank-and-file would be matched by company enforced cuts in compensation at all white collar and supervisory levels up to chairman of the board.

FORT WORTH (SWN) — American Quasar Petroleum Co. has announced plans to form a property acquisition and income program to be marketed through selected brokers/dealers.

Recent developments in both the economic and hydrocarbon sectors have created a favorable climate for prudent property acquisitions.

American Quasar believes its recently announced joint venture exploration agreement with The Standard Oil Company (Ohio) and increasing cash flow from operations have reduced the need for capital normally provided by limited partnerships.

At the same time American Quasar's wholly owned subsidiary, Can-Am Drilling Programs, Inc., announced that after the close of its 1982-1 exploratory and development drilling program on April 30, it would discontinue sales of public drilling programs unless future economic and market conditions dictate otherwise.

NEW YORK — Unemployment: the worst is yet to come. Much economic bad news is already out, says Merrill Lynch, but the jobless rate may peak around 9.5 percent by mid-year. Conservation, recyclying proposals introduced

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Both the Texas Department of Health and the Department of Water Resources are moving forward with proposals to encourage resource conservation and recycling in Texas.

DWR will hold a hearing at 9 a.m. May 7 in Austin on a proposed recycling rule as part of its industrial solid waste disposl regulations.

The proposed rule provides that the executive director of DWR amy exempt, or conditionally exempt, wastes to be beneficially used, recycled or reclaimed.

DWR attorney Thomas G. Mason says the rule is "an attempt to encourage recycling and reuse of materials."

A firm would apply for an exemption, with the executive director to consider the physical and chemical characteristics of the waste, risks of over-accummulation, risks of exposure to workers and the environment, and similar maters.

The regional director of the Environmental Protection Agency would be notified of proposed exemption, Mason says.

Mason also reports DWR has received "rather scattered" comments, mainly from industry representatives, on the proposed rule.

Meanwhile, the Resource Recovery Advisory Council of TDH has reviewed its charge and existing state policies regarding resource recovery, and has asked the TDH staff to assist in preparing a proposal for consideration at a June 4 session.

Jack C. Carmichael, chief of the Bureau of Solid Waste Management, says the council has made some decisions on what is to be included the draft of a "very, very tentative bill format" for review at the June meeting.

The draft will "really be a policy paper," Carmichael says.

Among the things to considered are constraints in current law which would interfere with implementation of a resource recovery program, and whether local governments need additional authority for such programs.

One such issue is that of long-term contracts by cities, Carmichael reports.

Another mater to be looked at is whether cities have the ability to do "turnkey" recycling projects as opposed to low-bid authority.

The council also will consider any restrictions on the formation of solid waste resource recovery districts, and whether such districts should be able to issue revenue or general obligation bonds.

One specific question is on the formation of such districts by two cities, and whether those cities "should have power to control the waste stream," Carmichael says.

Also to be examined is whether there should be financial assistance for regional and local planning for resource recovery.

The council, Carmichael says, feels there should be some type of State assistance for feasibility studies, to finance the "front-end" of such studies — but not the studies themselves.

The council has asked the TDH staff to study other areas, such as beverage container deposits, use of recycled oil, requiring use in some instances of recycled materials, and the legality of providing financial incentives for use of recycled materials.

Recommendations by the Office of the Consumer Credit Commissioner regarding proposed rules for debt collection practices by consumer landers should be presented to the State Finance Commission at the SFC's May 11 meeting, OCCC Commissioner Sam Kelley says.

Attorneys for the Soncumers Union and Legal Aid Society of Central Texas filed an application with the OCCC for such rules last September, alleging that a "pervasive pattern" of abuse in collection practices exists in the consumer finance industry.

A hearing on the proposals was held March 16, with 30 days allowed for additional comments on the proposals.

Adoption of any rules will be a decision to be made by the SFC, Kelley notes.

The May 11 SFC meeting also is to consider items including the budget for the Department of Banking and various rule charges for that agency.

The Governor's Task Force on Work-Related Accidents has asked the State Board of Insurance to assist in providing information on job-related deaths and injuries gathered in conjunction with worker's conpensation insurance.

SBI notes that Texas is one of only three states in the U.S. in which worker's compensation coverage isn't mandatory, but says estimates by the Industrial Accident Board indicate 75 per cent of all employers in Texas do have coverage.

SBI also notes that in 1980, the 262 companies writing worker's compensation insurance in Texas wrote $1.396 billion worth of premiums.

The governor's task force has been charged with finding ways of reducing work-related accidents — something members of the panel note could help to reduce the cost of worker's compensation coverage.

Jackson finals Crockett discovery

Jackson Exploration, Inc., has completed Perner Well No. 2-X as a Devonian gas and a Wolfcamp oil dual completion in section 34, block 2, I&GN survey, Crockett County.

Devonian perforations, between 9,479 feet to 9,789 feet, provided a calculated absolute open flow potential of 4,300,000 cubic feet of gas per day, while Wolfcamp perforations, 6,472 feet to 6,490 feet, produced 45 barrels of oil and 31,000 cubic feet of gas daily. The Wolfcamp zone is an apparent new field discovery, since the nearest Wolfcamp production is more than 10 miles away.

Jackson's Perner Well No. 3 in section 22, block NN-2, Hornbuckle survey, also was completed for a calculated absolute flow of 3,200,000 cubic feet of gas per day from the Devonian pay.

These two wells are the seventh and eighth completions in the Dudley East prospect which was discovered by Jackson's Perner Well No. 1 in December 1980. Nine more drilling loations on company acreage are planned within the next 18 months. The Dudley East field is approximately 23 miles southwest of Ozona.

••••

SAN ANGELO — Tucker Drilling Company recently reported the discovery of a new oil field on the South Jasper Prospect in Winkler County, Texas.

The Hogg No. 1 well flowed 528 barrels of oil plus 658,000 cubic feet of gas per dayfrom perforations between 9,789 to 9,795 feet in the Devonian formation.

••••

DALLAS (SWN) — Dorchester Gas Corporation has announced an important oil discovery in Glasscock County.

The Berry 20, Well No. 1 flowed 301 barrels of 54.3gravity oil per day with 185,000 cubic feet of gas per day from Fusselman perforations between 11,094 and 11,100 feet.

••••

Tipperary Corporation today reported a gas discovery in Calhoun County, Texas. The No. 1 State 255 flowed 1.4 million cubic feet of gas with 14 barrels of condensate per day through a 14/64-inch choke with 1,414 psi tubing pressure. The calculated open flow was 20 million cubic feet of gas per day. Production was through perforations from 8,532 to 8,535 feet in a Melbourne Frio sand formation.

The company has a 10 percent interest in the discovery well and the 2,300 acres surrounding the well.

••••

Ike Lovelady Inc. has announced two recent discoveries.

The Powell "3" well No. 1, Glasscock County had an initial potential test of 295 barrels of 58 gravity oil and 744,000 cubic feet of gas per day through Fusselman perforations.

The No. 1 Hillger swabbed a total of 516 barrels of 29 gravity oil in two days of swab testing an open hole section from 2,964 to 3,058 feet.

••••

HOUSTON — Moran Energy Inc. has successfully completed its Hagen No. 1 well approximately six miles west of the town of Gage in Ellis County, Okla.

The well tested at the rate of 1.35 million cubic feet of gas per day through Lower Morrow perforations between9,345 to 9,563 feet.

••••

AMARILLO — Diamond Shamrock Corporation recently announced that oil and gas production has begun from a jointly owned offshore platform in the Gulf of Mexico, off the Louisiana coast.

Current production from the south leg of Main pass Blocks 72/74-C platform is 15 million cubic feet of natural gas and 3,000 barrels of oil and condensate per day from six completed wells. The completions range in depth from 6,000 feet to 10,300 feet. The south leg of the platform will have ultimate production of 30 million cubic feet of gas and 3,500 barrels of oil and condensate per day from nine completed wells.

The main Pass 72/74-C platform is one of three jointly owned platforms that have been installed to develop and produce oil and gas from the blocks. Platform "A" began producing oil and gas in 1979 and is currently producing 63 million cubic feet of gas and 2,300 barrels of oil and condensate daily from eight completed wells. Initial oil and gas production from the south leg of the "B" platform is expected to begin in November 1982 from 12 completed wells.

••••

DENVER — Forest Oil Corporation, as operator, announced recently a gas discovery on its North Thibodaux Prospect, the J.B. Levert No. 1, in LaFourche Parish, La. The discovery well is located in section 45, township 14 south, range 16 east approximately one quarter mile north of the city of Thibodaux on a 3,757 acre block (FOC net 840 acres).

During a completion test, the well flowed at rates as high as 10,200 MCF of gas and 580 barrels of condensate per day.

••••

HOUSTON — The Cotton Petroleum Corporation No. 1 Sarver, a field wildcat well at Leleux Field in Vermilion Parish, La., has tested at a flow rate of one million cubic feet of gas and 600 barrels of 40-degree oil per day.

Cotton Petroleum is the Tulsa-based oil and gas exploration, development and production subsidiary of United Energy Resources, Inc.

The well was perforated between 15,730 and 15,735 feet in the Oligocene Marginulina texana sand zone.

An offset well is planned to confirm the discovery zone and test the potential of the Bolivina mexicana sand zone at an estimated depth of 18,500 feet.

••••

Banner Petroleum of Houston, has announced the discovery of a Lower Miocene field in St. Martin Parish, La.

The discovery well, the Jeanerette Lumber & Shingle No. 2, was drilled to a total depth of 18,825 feet.

The well flowed at a stabilized daily rate of 3.4 million cubic feet and 74 barrels of condensate.

••••

DALLAS (SWN) — Dorchester Gas Corporation reported it has an interest in the recently announced gas discovery on the Dimmits Island prospect in Nueces County.

The State Tract 94 Well No. 1, located in the Corpus Christi Bay, tested two zones in the Middle Frio "J" Sands formation. From perforations in the upper zone from 10,248 to 10,258 feet and in the lower zone from 10,749 to 10,754, the well flowed at a combined rate of 4.2 million cubic feet per day of natural gas and an undetermined amount of condensate.

The well contains two additional potentially productive zones which have not yet been tested. Plans for additional wells on the 2748 gross acres in the prospect have not yet been finalized.

Drilling increased in 1981

WASHINGTON — The number of oil wells drilled in the United States increased last year by 39.4 percent over the previous year, while natural gas wells went up 13.8 percent, the American Petroleum Institute reports.

The API's Quarterly Review of Drilling Statistics showed that the 1981 total for oil wells was 37,671 (27,026 in 1980), and for natural gas wells was 17,894 (15,730). Dry holes totaled 22,973 (18,089).

The total number of wells completed (excluding service wells, stratographic & core tests) during 1981 was 78,538 as compared to 60,845 during 1980. Footage drilled rose from 284,460,979 feet to 361,406,520 feet, an increase of 27 percent.

Of the wells drilled, 15,168 were exploratory, up 27.3 percent over the 1980 figure of 11,916. The breakdown for exploratory wells was: oil 2,219 (1,605) up 38.3 percent; natural gas 2,366 (1,969) up 20.2 percent; and dry holes 10,583 (8,342) up 26.9 percent.

Exploratory footage totaled 89,087,222 feet, as compared to 69,948,320 feet during 1980, an increase of 127.4 percent.

The depth of the average exploratory oil well was 5,979 feet as against 5,787 in 1980. The average gas well was 6,648 feet in 1981, as compared to 6,974 the previous year.

RRC adopts amendments changing spacing rule

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission have adopted amendments changing the statewide spacing rule affecting salt dome oil and gas fields. The amendments allow administrative approval of applications by the Oil and Gas Division for classifications of salt dome fields, reducing the processing time for this designation.

An operator may request a public hearing if an application is not approved administratively.

Under the amended rule, application for salt dome field classification must include geological evidence of certain characteristics. Certification that notice has been given to operators in the surrounding areas must also be included in the application.

Special rules for this type of field were adopted because wells drilled in these formations are usually completed in separate, individual reservoirs. Therefore, it is unlikely that any well will affect the reservoir of another well and spacing requirements are unnecessary. In fields where many wells are drilled into the same reservoir, spacing requirements insure equitable distribution of the hydrocarbons among the mineral lease owners.

The amendments were published in the Texas Register in November of 1981 and comments were received for 30 days. Comments received generally supported the amendments and minor changes were made as a results of the response.

Water is the future

Regardless of who is elected this year to Texas' top political office, that individual will face what is shaping up as the most critical issue to face the Lone Star State in a number of years: The availability of water.

A rapidly expanding population is placing tremendous demands on the state's already strained water resources. And estimates cited this week by Gov. Bill Clements on a swing through Midland indicate the state's population will increase by 50 percent — from the current 14 million up to 21 million people — by the year 2000.

Last November Texas voters turned down a constitutional amendment proposal that would have financed major new projects to help provide for the state's future water needs. And Gov. Clements noted during his Midland stopover this week that the decision on the amendment was in part due to the belief on the part of some Texans that the state's water problem is limited to West Texas or some other particular area of the state.

But the water situation really will affect every Texan in the coming decade. If any one part of Texas suffers from a lack of water, the entire state's economy will mirror that suffering. Water is crucial to agriculture and ranching, but it's also necessary in much of manufacturing and throughout industry.

Since the defeat of the water amendment, a water task force and natural resources committee has been working to draw up another proposal, a long-range plan for dealing with the state's future water needs. Such a plan will be vital for meeting the water demands expected during the next couple of decades in Texas. Clements says the plan will be proposed to the 1983 session of the Texas Legislature and that he is confident it will be adopted.

The water issue in Texas, although hotly debated each time a water proposal is brought up, cuts across all political boundaries because water is vital to life and extremely important to most of the state's industry. Even with approval of a state water plan in the 1983 session, it would be literally years before Texans would see any of the projects included in the legislation.

Texas is at a turning point in its history. The Lone Star State can move forward, in the future, with the approval of projects necessary for providing the water the future will demand. Or the state can suffer through a water inadequacy that will strangle the economy and cut short the growth trend Texas is only now entering.

Water is the future in Texas. All of Texas — East Texas, West Texas, the High Plains, the Gulf Coast, Houston and Midland. The sooner we all realize that and begin making preparations for our future, the better off we'll all be.

Army's shaping up

It seems only yesterday that congressmen and generals were bemoaning the low caliber of recruits and re-enlistees in the Army. Ingelligence scores were low and getting lower, and many poorly educated recruits were incapable of operating sophisticated weapons and equipment needed in today's military services. Add to that reports of widespread drug use and rising crime within the ranks and the picture was a gloomy one indeed.

None of those problems has disappeared, but it seems that things are at least beginning to move in the other direction. In a recent report to Congress, the Pentagon said the situation is so improved that the Army has been able for the first time in many years to raise its standards, allowing it to weed out "marginal performers (and) unsuitables." More specifically, high school graduates now make up more than 80 percent of new enlistees, far exceeding the 65 percent mandated by Congress. Reenlistments, which fell as low as 15 percent of those eligible in the late 1970s, were up to 66.7 percent last year. As a result, the Army has already reduced its recruitment quota for 1982.

The recession obviously has something to do with this, as do the higher pay and bonuses offered in recent years to attract and keep the best available talent. A massive media campaign, emphasizing the opportunities in a wide range of highly skilled fields, must also be having an impact. And economic hard times and an international political climate generally perceived as increasingly dangerous, together with a slow receding of memories of Vietnam, seem to be combining to make the wearing of a uniform respectable again.

Whatever the causes, it is encouraging that the military seems to be getting a grip on its personnel problems. Whether that trend will continue into better times remains to be seen; even if it does, there remains some strong arguments in favor of some form of universal national service: It is both more reliable and more equitable. But as long as the all-volunteer force remains, upgrading the skills and wages of our soldiers are clearly important factors in keeping the right people in uniform.

Another View:

Oil reserve filling

After delaying six years, the United States has given itself a bit of breathing room in the event that all foreign oil is cut off from this country.

One-third of the oil, or 250 million barrels, that is to be stored in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve (SPR), finally is in place.

At present import levels, that amount of oil represents about a 50-day supply if all foreign supplies that averaged five million barrels a day in January and February, were cut off. That amount in storage could last nearly three months since a more likely cutoff would involve only members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Last year the Reagan administration opened the spigot and added 335,000 barrels a day to the SPR, tripling the dribbling fill rate during the Carter administration. That fully accelerated pace cannot be continued longer since available storage space in the existing salt domes has run out and smaller caverns are being prepared.

This year's fill rate is expected to be about 185,000 barrels daily. The White House says this is adequate to meet the country's security needs. There is still a long way to go. The plan calls for another 500 million barrels of oil to be stored in caverns by 1990 as a cushion in case of a repeat of the 1973-74 embargo.

Some members in Congress are trying to stampede the administration into leasing unused oil tankers and building huge above-ground storage facilities. The administration has rejected the pleas, pointing to the high cost of that approach in a period of budgetary restraints.

The price is high already without further expenditures. By the time the program is to be completed in another eight years, the cost is expected to exceed $30 billion.

Storage is moving ahead at its best pace since the reserve was created in December 1975. Capitol Hill should have asserted its displeasure during the foot-dragging in the project's early years. Now Congress should stand back and let the oil continue flowing unobstructed into the SPR.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Indian tribe suffers under Sandinistas

WASHINGTON — As one of the harshest critics of the late Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza, I feel no qualms about faulting his supposedly democratic successors for the same violations of decency that led me to criticize his oppressive regime.

Unfortunately, the Sandinista rebels who succeeded in overthrowing Somoza's brutal regime have not lived up to their claims of being humane champions of the long-downtrodden Nicaraguan people. In their own way, the Sandinistas have proven to be as cruel toward at least one segment of the Nicaraguan population as Somoza ever was.

The victims are the primitive Miskito Indians, who have the misfortune to live in the northern part of Nicaragua, along the border with Honduras.

All the Miskito Indians wanted was to be left alone, to live their lives out in peace and security. But like the European Jews of a generation ago, the Miskitos resented the government's apparent determination to destroy their ancient culture.

The Miskitos' punishment for this understandable reluctance to embrace an entirely new way of life has not — so far — included concentration camps and gas chambers.

Intelligence reports chronicle the killing of dozens of Indians, the imprisonment of hundreds more and the forced relocation of thousands in an obvious effort by the Sandinista regime to achieve a "final solution" to the Miskito problem.

Somoza did not single out the Miskitos for harassment. He was primarily interested in extracting Nicaragua's wealth for his own purposes, and the land occupied by the primitive Miskito tribesmen had little that Somoza considered worth stealing.

But from the very beginning of the Sandinistas' successful revolution in 1979, the Miskitos resisted the Marxist-oriented government's threat to their life style. They resented the leftist ideology, and such possibly well-intentioned programs as literacy classes. To the simple tribesmen, this all seemed like a deliberate effort to stamp out their culture. It probably was much the same feeling experienced by our own Indians when the U.S. government decided to "civilize" them for their own good.

Like any insecure revolutionary regime, the Sandinistas viewed the Miskitos' resistance to directives from the central government as evidence of rebellion, or even loyalty to ex-Somoza forces in exile. The Indians' location — in the northeast corner of Nicaragua near the Honduran border, across which many of Somoza's defeated national guard troops had fled to safety — made them naturally suspect to Sandinista leaders of paranoid inclinations.

Occasional outbreaks of violence, perhaps fueled by the Somozan exiles, led the Sandinistas to consider the Miskitos as a threat to the revolutionary regime. Their suspicions of the Indian tribesmen became a self-fulfilling prophecy. Miskito leaders were imprisoned beginning in early 1981.

Then, last December, the Managua regime apparently decided to get really tough. Claiming that they were putting down "counter-revolutionaries," the Sandinistas moved in.

At least 100, and probably more, Miskitos were killed as the Sandinistas tried to settle the Indian problem for good. "The situation on the east coast is rapidly deteriorating," according to one State Department cable. One source went so far as to say that the Sandinistas "are bent on wiping out the Miskitos, many of whom have fled to Honduras or Costa Rica to escape reported massacres."

Another source considered reliable by the State Department said that "early in January, bodies began floating downriver" past one Miskito village. "He (the source) also told of a rumor that the FSLN (Sandinistas) had rounded up a group of males, lined them up on a barge on the river, shot them and allowed them to float downriver," the report said. "He could not personally verify the reasons for the deaths, but he personally observed the bodies floating in the river."

The secret cable also told of this episode:

"(Sandinistas) entered the town of Sandy Bay, via foot and boat, to round up suspected members of a counter-revolutionary group ... The Sandinistas herded most of the population to the town square, forcing them one by one to enter the Moravian church. Inside, each was shown a list of names and asked if he knew anyone on the list. Although the names of most of the men of Sandy Bay appeared on the list, none claimed to know anyone on the list."

After holding 40 men in the church overnight, the Sandinistas took them to another town, Puerto Cabezas. That same night, the Sandinistas reportedly torched a small house believed to be a hangout for counter-revolutionaries. Most of the Sandy Bay villagers fled.

Other reports include stories of Miskitos who barely escaped with their lives while fellow villagers were shot down by the Sandinistas. One Indian leader has produced a list of more than 250 Miskitos known to have been killed, and thousands more who cannot be accounted for.

The number of Miskitos reported killed may be small, but there are only 100,000 members of the tribe in the first place. And criticism of President Reagan's allusion to the Miskito situation, while failing to speak out against Indian repression in Brazil, Chile, Paraguay and Guatemala, has a certain validity. But it does not excuse the Sandinistas regime's genocidal action against the Miskitos.

Footnote: A spokesman for the Nicaraguan regime denied to my associate Dale Van Atta that a single Miskito had been killed by the government. The few who have been killed, he said, were victims of counter-revolutionary forces based in Honduras.

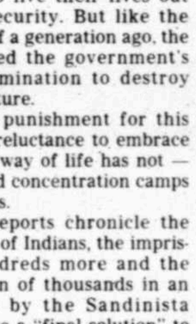
GEORGE F. WILL

Naval forces play key role in relations

WASHINGTON — It has been said that the dust from exploded beliefs makes a fine sunset. One result of the Falklands episode may be a fine sunset from exploded beliefs about military, especially naval, forces.



George F. Will

In 1919 people were shocked by the title of a book: "The First World War." Fifty-three years and at least as many wars later, it is widely and strangely believed that "force settles nothing" — although since 1919 force has settled the fates of Hitler, South Vietnam and many other things. Force — Argentina's use of it, Britain's threat or use of it — will settle the Falklands' fate, one way or another.

Old attitudes and supremacies have vanished. (Communique to the admiralty, 1915: "We shelled the Turks from 9 to 11: and then, being Sunday, had Divine Services.") Britain can not recapture the islands by amphibious landings. A force coming ashore should have a four-to-one advantage over the force on shore. Britain's force would be at best one-fourth that of Argentina's.

The Argentine force can not be starved out. Lamb three meals a day is tiresome, but war is hell. So is stalemate in winter at a latitude comparable to northern Newfoundland. Britain's fleet is arriving as winter is arriving, and winter means 80-knot winds and 40-foot seas.

But Britain has nuclear submarines. Such weapons have never been used in war, so few people know how excellent they are. Those who know are those who use them 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, in undersea operations shadowing and being shadowed by Soviet submarines. They are so fast and quiet and superbly equipped that Britain's could confine Argentina's navy to port, or the seabed. The mere announcement of a blockade would cause maritime insurers to suspend policies on ships entering the area. Commercial traffic would stop; grain once destined for Russia might rot on the docks.

This is a moment to explode the belief that the use of naval forces for political objectives — "gunboat diplomacy" is the preferred epithet — is an anachronism. And it is time for renewed appreciation of the role of naval forces in the U.S.-Soviet balance.

The Soviet navy is quantitatively superior and is gaining qualitatively, but you do not accurately gauge a navy's adequacy by comparing it side-by-side with an adversary's navy. You measure a navy against its mission, as defined by geopolitics, including treaties.

The Soviet Union spans the Eurasian landmass, and is contiguous with its principal "allies." The United States is an "island nation" whose trade and alliances reach across water, on which the United States must be able to project force.

Navy forces must be designed for survival — for winning a fight, if necessary — in high-threat areas. Such areas are increasing; the Straits of Florida is one.

The Soviets have placed in Cuba its most advanced surface ships, diesel submarines, and Mig-13s. If war began in Europe, more than half the men and materiel to resupply U.S. forces would have to pass from Gulf ports through the Straits of Florida, or elsewhere through the Caribbean, within range of the formidable interdiction forces based in Cuba. Furthermore, key East Coast naval facilities — Charleston, S.C., Mayport near Jacksonville, Fla., and Kings Bay, the new Trident base in south Georgia — can be blocked by diesel submarines operating from Cuba.

In the Mediterranean, Libya's Khadafy has more than 300 of the finest French and Soviet aircraft. U.S. oil imports come through a "tanker pipeline" from the Persian Gulf-Indian Ocean area.

Furthermore, the Navy has less need than the other services have to simulate war. Its submarines maneuver constantly against Soviet submarines. Soviet surface ships operate a few hundred yards from U.S. maneuvers, and U.S. ships are similarly assertive around Soviet maneuvers.

The Navy is, rightfully, the biggest beneficiary of the president's rearmament plans. Its budget is doing well in Congress, not because Congress enjoys spending for military procurement, but because there is no blinking this fact: the Navy — the number of ships and the number of carriers — has been cut in half in the last 12 years, and now is inadequate for U.S. commitments.

The United States has treaty commitments to more than 40 partners, touching every ocean. The commitments can not be fulfilled with today's fleet of fewer than 500 ships. As John Lehman, secretary of the Navy, says of these commitments: "We (in the administration) didn't go looking for them. They were handed to us as the law of the land."

ART BUCHWALD

Government's riffing alters job hopes

Riffing, or what is known in the government parlance as "reduction in force," is taking its toll on Washington. By law those with seniority cannot be fired from a department if there is another job available, even if it is a much lower one. The person has to be kept on for two years before he can be let go. Many overqualified people are taking menial jobs just so they can stay in the government and collect their pensions, or hope that someone will put them back where they belong.

Art Buchwald

One of these happens to be Delbeck, who has a Ph.D. in geology, and formerly worked with the U.S. Geographical Survey Department studying moon rocks.

I went to see Delbeck out in Reston, Virginia. Instead of being directed to his laboratory I was told I would find him in the mail room.

"Dr. Delbeck, what are you doing here?" I asked him.

"Sorting mail. It was the only job open when we had our last riff."

"What a comedown!"

"It's actually not a bad job as soon as you learn the alphabet. You see, you ignore the first name and only look at the initial of the last name. Then you put the letter in the box corresponding to the letter on the envelope. When I get the letters all sorted out, I give them to Dr. Fromm and he marks the rooms on them."

"Dr. Fromm?"

"Yes, he used to head the mineral exploration division, and he's a whiz at knowing room numbers without having to look them up in the directory."

"What happens after Dr. Fromm puts the room numbers on them?"

"Then Dr. Lasker takes them and puts them in a supermarket basket and delivers them to the various offices."

"What did Dr. Lasker do before he took that job?"

"He was in charge of studying earthquake faults around the world. He was working on a new way of predicting them in advance, until the OMB decided it was a waste of money."

"He must be very bitter."

"He was until the head of the mail room explained to him that delivering people's mail on time was just as important as figuring where the next earthquake would take place. Sometimes while Lasker is waiting for us to sort out the mail he sneaks off in a corner with his calculator and predicts earthquakes just for the hell of it. But he has to be careful no one sees him, because there's talk they may lay off someone in the mail room and he has less seniority than Dr. Fromm and I do."

"Do you ever examine moon rocks anymore?"

"No, but if it's a light day I might take out my microscope and analyze what kind of ink they used to print a postage stamp. I like to keep my hand in just in case something opens upstairs."

"I can't believe the government would be so stupid as to allow three scientists like yourselves to work in a mail room."

"We're lucky. Dr. Ridgewell, who was just about to figure out a way of measuring ultraviolet rays by a laser beam, is now operating a paper-shredding machine in the boiler room. She was riffed out of a Nobel Prize."

The head of the mail room came over to us. "Delbeck, go down to the cafeteria and bring me up a coffee and a Danish."

"Yes, sir," Dr. Delbeck said. "Cream and sugar?"

"You know I take it black, dummy," the head said as he walked away.

"Do you let him talk to you like that?"

"As long as they pay us $50,000 a year, what choice do I have? Look, I'm not going to stay in the mail room forever. Dr. Billington, who discovered titanium deposits on the ocean floor in the Gulf of Mexico, is retiring in a couple of months, and when he leaves he's going to recommend me for his job."

"What does he do now?"

"He works in the motor pool as a night watchman."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, April 25, the 115th day of 1982. There are 250 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 25, 1898, the United States declared war on Spain.

On this date:

In 1945, delegates of 45 nations met in San Francisco to organize the United Nations.

In 1971, a Soviet spaceship landed safely after docking with an orbiting space laboratory.

In 1973, the United States set up talks between Henry Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho in Paris aimed at achieving "strict implementation" of the Vietnam war ceasefire.

And in 1980, President Carter announced an attempt to free 52 American hostages in Iran a day earlier had ended in failure, with eight American soldiers killed in the effort.

SPEAKING OUT

'Secondary' necessities also need development

By WAYNE J. KOHOUT

Wayne J. Kohout is director of Midland's parks and recreation department. He has been a resident of Midland for seven years.

We are finally "getting a handle" on meeting our necessities: water and sewage facilities, hospitals, schools, streets, fire and police protection, housing, employment. Yet our "grip is slipping" on providing for that "after work" or "secondary" necessity — public recreation.

When we want to participate, but can't because facilities are too crowded or completely lacking, we're frustrated. When those of us who are participating must do so at times of day and night and under circumstances detrimental to our family life or job, we're stressed. When we seek the beauty of nature, but find homely surroundings and worn facilities, we're disappointed.

Midland has a complete cross-section of citizens — rich and poor, white and minority, young and old. Midland has no suburbs to share in providing the "public amenities of life." Midland is in the midst of a harsh terrain, miles from lakes, forests, rivers and mountains. Therefore, we must rely on our own resources to provide recreational opportunities. We must try even harder than most cities to provide places of natural beauty and places for recreation.

And compounding our situation is the impact of 22,000 additional people in the past 10 years. This alone means providing a full range of park and recreational facilities that a town of 22,000 people would need. This we haven't done.

Consequently, our city is behind in providing the public recreational and park needs of its citizens, toddlers through senior citizens, and our city is woefully lacking in providing certain costly and hard-to-find-a-place-for sports facilities.

Just what is needed? Look around for yourself. Ask your husband or wife, your kids, your neighbors and friends. This is what you'll probably hear:

— More lighted softball fields.
— More lighted football fields.
— More tot-lots and good playgrounds.
— Prettier and better landscaped parks.
— Lighted soccer fields.
— Signed bicycle routes throughout the city.
— Community play-field parks for sports complexes, with paved parking, play areas, restrooms.
— Neighborhood parks within new residential areas.
— More lighted tennis courts at existing complexes.
— A nature and outdoor learning center.
— Safe pathways in parks to jog or walk along.
— A completed 36-hole public golf course.
— Large group picnic pavilions for church, company and organizational gatherings.
— A public recreation center with gym and handball/racquetball courts.
— Well maintained roads and parking lots to serve our large parks.
— A park patrol to enforce park ordinances and make parks safe.

Realizing these needs, the City Council has been joined by the leaders of our many civic, service and youth organizations, as well as our City Council, in actively seeking ways to resolve the situation. They realize that basically jobs and good salaries attract people to Midland, but it is the 'quality-of-life' attributes that our city has to offer that keep people here, that promotes community pride, and that makes our city a really 'good place to live.'

Fine arts, museums, performing arts, national and local youth organizations, churches, civic and service organizations and clubs for all interests and vocations — each contributes to the enrichment of life, to the enjoyment of living in a wholesome, gracious and stimulating community.

And underlying all these are the public parks and recreational facilities. Provided by the entire community, for the entire community, these public parks and facilities serve as sites for buildings and programs of many of the aforementioned organizations, clubs and associations.

So how about helping ourselves, our families, our neighbors, in making our city a better place to live?

Why should we help?

— New areas of town need new park sites — you must continue to acquire them as an investment in the future. Without the site, you'll never have the facilties.

— Reserve park sites must be developed in a timely fashion, just as streets are paved and schools are built, to serve the needs of each neighborhood as it comes into existence.

— Established parks and facilities have to be maintained. They must also be refurbished, changed to meet the changing neighborhoods they serve.

How can we help?

— Let your city and organizational leaders know what you need. Contact your city councilmen, your parks and recreation commissioners.

— Help support the efforts of organizations striving to provide facilities and programs, by giving of your money, time or services as a coach, instructor or officer.

— Get informed, express your opinion, vote, get involved.

What's our parks and recreation department and commission doing to help? They're trying to obtain meaningful amounts of money for facilities from:

— Publicly endorsed bond issues.
— Short-term increases in their share of the city budget.
— Matching grants from state programs.
— Contributions of funds and materials from businesses, service organizations and individuals.

For a growing city like ours, a parks and recreation department must commit itself to a campaign with three fronts — 1) acquisition, 2) development and 3) maintenance — all with equal fervor. Likewise, we, as citizens of our growing city, must commit ourselves to the responsibility of a balanced city growth and development.

So let's work together and help provide better public parks and recreation — for others, for our families and even for ourselves! Simply for the fun of it!

Farmers' complaints have grain of truth

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Farmers, argued Daniel Webster, are "the founders of human civilization."

Unfortunately, farmers (like the rest of civilization) are having their problems these days.

Not that that's anything new for farmers, who have sung for years about being the man who "lives on credit till the fall. With the interest rates so high, it's a wonder he don't die...."

There's more truth than poetry to that complaint, argues Robert L. Parker, Paris, chairman of the Governor's Task Force on Agricultural Development.

"Agriculture in Texas, and throughout the country, is in bad shape," the feed mill operator says.

Most of the producers are recovering less than their costs of production, Parker says, "and you know that can go on just so long."

That problem isn't new either, Parker admits, but he thinks the situation is more critical than in the past because of current economic conditions.

"I doubt," Parker says, "farmers and ranchers have the staying power they once had...expenses are higher, and they're cash expenses. You just can't 'live on the farm' as you used to...."

Because of the capital-intensive nature of agriculture, high interest rates are hurting farmers badly, Parker says. "Banks," he notes, "have a habit of wanting to be paid on time."

The task force Parker heads has just begun its study, and Parker says he doesn't have any ready answers for what can be done — particularly at the state level — to help agriculture.

The panel has identified seven "critical issues" to be studied by committees:

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Water, energy, capital, production efficiency, transportation, marketing and land (including soil and water conservation).

Not listed as an issue, but a major concern none the less, is selling an increasingly urban population on the need to help agriculture.

Farmers and ranchers are a decided minority in Texas, although their political power — thanks to long-established farm organizations and sympathetic legislators — has remained significant.

And agriculture remains very important to Texas, despite the state's increasingly urbanized, industrialized nature.

Texas is third nationally in total agricultural production, and represents a $33 billion a year industry — and one-fifth of the state's gross production.

But since 1981, reports Texas Agricultural Extension Service Director Neville Clark, farm prices have dropped 14 percent.

Farm income, Clark says, has dropped 60 percent since 1979 — while costs have continued to rise.

Over the long run, Clark warns, unstable prices and income, coupled with rising costs, is likely to force more and more farmers and ranchers out of agriculture.

Farmers and ranchers don't need to be told that — but that message may need to get to folks who aren't directly involved in agriculture.

It won't be farmers and ranchers, for example, who will be the deciding factor in the race for Texas agriculture commissioner, and both Commissioner Regan Brown and his Democratic primary challenger Jim Hightower have been wooing the urban voters.

But the race for agriculture commissioner may not be the most important one for agriculture.

Farmers and ranchers are likely to need quite a few friends in the Legislature in 1983 (just as they have in past sessions), and more of those members will be coming from urban constituencies.

Recent legislatures have looked favorably on many initiatives intended to help agriculture — for example, taxing agricultural land on its productivity, rather than on its market value.

And last year, lawmakers passed a law amending the property tax code to provide an exemption for "implements of farming and ranching" owened and used in the production of farm and ranch products.

Unfortunately, says Attorney General Mark White, the law didn't remove dollar limitations on such exemptions, and didn't exempt real property improvements as some farmers and ranchers had expected.

So it will be no surprise to see representatives of agricultural groups back at the Capitol in January to argue with lawmakers for some more changes to help Texas agriculture.

Agriculture, these days, is a business — and a big business — but it isn't "just like any other business."

Webster was correct in pointing to the basic importance of agriculture — since, to quote the old song again, "the farmer is the man who feeds them all."

Letters may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must bear the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

For valid reasons, at the discretion of the editor, the name will be withheld but must be included in the original letter.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved.

Letters must be received by noon Thursday for Sunday publication. If necessary, the latest received may be held for publication the following Tuesday or Thursday.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

Crank letter

To The Editor:

Some kind soul was thoughtful enough to send me a clipping from your April 4, 1982, edition entitled "Letters To The Editor." Said clipping was a very derogatory letter against Trans-Central Airline from a Mr. Daniel DeG. Strong.

I am surprised that The Midland Reporter-Telegram would print such a crank letter without a thorough check of the situation, which would have shown that Trans-Central Airline is a commuter air carrier serving Midland with hitherto unavailable service and operating new 19 passenger, fast, turbo-prop equipment that has an excellent safety record. True, our planes do not have restrooms, nor do the several hundred other Metros being operated by many other commuter carriers throughout the world. We offer fast, comfortable and safe transportation to destinations not served by the large regional carriers flying the big jets, and we serve the public need in a very necessary way.

The city of Midland and the Airport Board welcomed us with open arms and encouraged our arrival because of this need. Many, many, Midland passengers have expressed their thanks and satisfaction with our service even though our planes do not have all of the amenities of the large jets.

Trans-Central Airlines is growing and we will soon be able to service Midland with larger equipment, but in the meantime we believe an apology is in order from your paper for printing Mr. DeG. Strong's uncalled for letter of abuse written because he is personally mad at the "powers-that-be" regarding an incident involving his own plane.

Chairman of the Board

Wake up, citizens

To The Editor:

Racism is alive and well in Midland, Texas. Wake up "Black Citizens."

1. Why is all of the progress occuring in north and west Midland? Is south and east Midland not a part of Midland, Texas?

2. Why are all of our dollars being taken out of the community and none put back in to benefit the "Black Community" and its people?

3. Why isn't "McKinzies Supermarket" overflowing with customers?

4. Why are there no outspoken "Black Political" groups?

5. Where are the Black banks, Black savings and loans, Black boutiques, Black book stores, Black theaters, Black shoe stores, a first rate hotel?

6. Where are the "Black Leaders" that our youth can see as role models? Where is the Black media?

7. Why are we as "Black American Citizens" not doing more?

8. Why won't we get together and build?

9. Why do we pull so hard against each other? United we stand, divided we fall.

None of us have made it until all of us have made it. Don't be lulled into a false sense of security. Clout is loving, caring and helping each other. We must care about all the "Blocks," not just the "Block" we live on.

Twisted truth

To The Editor:

The inaccurate statements made by Karen Davis and reported in the April 17th Reporter-Telegram need a reply.

The lead quotation, "This country was never founded with religion and politics to be separated," is not true. The framers of our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution specified that our democratic government not be one which could be operated from one particular religious perspective. Examples of the tyranny which the wedding of government and a single religious interpretation can be found throughout human history. Government-backed religious intolerance has led to the exile and even the death of many who held views different from the state religion. I cite the persecution of the Christians by the Roman Empire as one such instance.

Secondly, to suggest that the "several different denominations" during the colonizing of this continent "didn't have the petty bickering...like we sometimes do today" is also historically inaccurate. The attempts of the Puritans to purge their society of anyone who thought differently than they did is just one example.

I agree that our government needs to refocus its ethical eye and its members review our various religious teachings. But to suggest that our democratic government should be exclusively influenced by one interpretation of Christianity does not return us to any original intent of the framers of our government, but belies every intent they had. And their intent to keep institutional religion and government separate in no way precludes the presence of God. To say that God is absent from anywhere indicates the human placing of certain limitations on the Divine Spirit.

It appears to me that Mrs. Davis falls victim to the very accusation she makes of historians in her attempt to "try to twist truth about the heroics of our forefathers" in an attempt to support her own parochial version of history and the human condition.

Time to write

To The Editor:

Now is the time for all people to write their congressmen, whether Demos or GOP.

A) By any and all means bring the troups home. Russia's natural gas sale will handle NATO and all Europe. The troups are of no value now.

B) Kill — Bury the Hatch effort to regulate families. Such proposals have no place in the Congress. That senator is way-out!

C) Kill — Bury the Helms' effort of prayer in schools. Prayer cannot be legislated anywhere! Is Senator Helms worried about student behavior? Then kill this time movement and stop school buses. Let each school board take care of its own schools.

D) Vote to repeal this special $75 per day tax break to congressmen. It violates concept and fact of government of people, for people and especially by people.

E) This is in fact treason, unless we the people, citizens of this government notify the IRS that we too will take $75 per day deduction for every day Congress is in session.

A shameful deed for the president to seek to get the Congress to violate our Constitution with tax breaks to special school students. He swore to uphold the Constitution. Write him.

Child abuse

To The Editor:

Did you know that according to the laws of our state, child abuse is only the physical abuse of a child. If a parent kicks his child out at the age of 15, if the child finds refuge with anyone, the welfare workers will refuse help to the child. The moral or mental effects to that child are not considered by the local authorities. I think we need to have enforceable laws to make parents more responsible to their children.

When a parent does not assume his responsibility, all society has to pay. We know of a 15-year-old sleeping in fields, while his parents live in a four bedroom house with no children in it. The welfare department is aware of this, but refuses to do anything about it. We need more enforceable laws to make parents such as these take care of their own.

Reese fan

To The Editor:

I have been a faithful reader of the Charley Reese column for a long time.

I am very disappointed and saddened to observe that you are gradually eliminating him in favor of Art Buchwald — whose "tongue-in-check" remarks I do not admire.

Charley Reese is one of the few writers from the moderate or conservative point of view and I think he deserves equal time with the liberals. The American people deserve both points of view.

Consistent grades

To The Editor:

The Midland School District is the only system I know of where the valedictorian and salutatorian are not automatically the top two academically rated students.

In Midland the valedictorians and salutatorians are chosen by an exam. The student who has taken all honors courses and consistantly made top grades over the whole four years of high school can, and frequently does, lose the top honor recognition and the scholarships that go with it, to someone who has overall lower grades but one good day on the tests. Consistant excellence is beaten out by a "flash in the pan." The hare does beat the tortoise.

No wonder many of the honor students lose interest in trying to maintain a top grade point — the test makes it just not worth the long sustained effort. University admissions' officers across the state and country find it hard to understand how a student can graduate with the highest grade point in the class, but not be the valedictorian. Shame on Midland for not honoring consistant academic excellence.

The lump sum

To The Editor:

Your editorial in the April 6, 1982 issue, made me angry, to say the least, because you stated that 31,943 registered voters "chose" not to vote.

I cannot speak for the other 31,942 people who did not vote, but I was very ill the night before, and even more so on Saturday, April 3, and Sunday April 4. It is just now that I have recovered.

I do not see how you, who may not known any of the thousands who "chose" not to vote, could lump them all together, and indict the entire group.

So what's with you, Mr. Editor?

We would like to take this opportunity to thank you for all of the help and support you gave us during this past basketball season.

Going to the National Junior College Tournament in Hutchinson and winning the championship, was an incredible experience for all of us — one we will always remember and cherish.

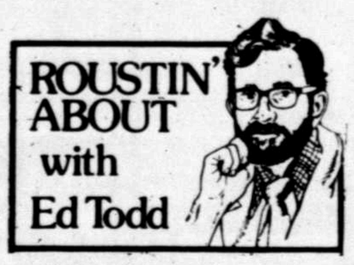
Election-day air filled philosophical gesturings



Elections are coming up again. And, again, most eligible voters will stay in and hold back as if the black plague would zap them were they to breathe election-day air.

Well, pooh, pooh, pooh.

Your one vote doesn't count for much, uh, and less than nothing, which is to say meaningless in the philosophical sense, if it's blindly cast. But, as your one-plus-one mathematics will tell you, enough ones added together will mount up. Many an election, including some local ones, have been decided, as it turned out, by a few or relatively few votes.

But if you don't care who's elected to what office and how the people's choice governs, then you just stay home and, if you care enough to grumble later about it, curse those nitwit "privileged" citizens who trudged to the polls and put the wrong — the worst possible choice — candidate in office.

You, who stayed at home and passively passed on the responsibility to others, can gloat like a fat oaf over your brillance in not acting like a democratic fool by going to the polls and voting in the wrong candidate. Those voters do that most every time and don't need your interference. Right? Ah, yes, the majority loses again by default by not voting.

One point, it seems, in voting is not necessarily to get in Mr., Miss, Ms. or Mrs. Perfect every time. That doesn't happen; man-made perfection has been in abeyance for a long, long time. To cast a ballot means making a choice — to vote for, against or not at all.

Your act of voting, too, presumes that your choice of a candidate is based on more than how the sound of the candidate's name strikes you or with what you associate the "political animal." It means you have formed some intelligent opinion or impression of the candidate by hearsay or meeting the candidate or listening to and observing the candidate. If your political choice is elected, you can try to match his or her in-office actions with pre-election promises and innuendoes and see if the "people's choice" deserves the gallows or the podium.

The most important aspect of your "bothering" to get informed — or misinformed — about the candidates and the issues is simply your initial involvement in the community and in the political strata. Action on your part and in the community's and your behalf will lead to more interest in and involvement in the community.

Flat rate income tax has liberal, conservative support

By GRACE-MARIE ARNETT
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader was seated across the table from conservative economist Arthur Laffer during a small dinner party recently at an exclusive Washington club.

Nader seemed more absorbed with the Chardonnay and fresh asparagus than with the dinner conversation until Laffer floated his idea of throwing out the current complex income tax code and replacing it with a simple flat rate system.

"I've been advocating that for 10 years," Nader chimed in. "Our present tax system is a monstrosity."

The liberal Nader and the conservative Laffer found they agreed the 6,000 pages of tax loopholes Congress has created over the past 70 years are eroding the nation's productivity and capital base and should be replaced with a simpler, fairer system with real incentives for economic growth.

Even in Congress, party lines blur and political philosophy seems irrelevant as bi-partisan support grows for a flat rate income tax that would eliminate all tax loopholes and result in mail clerks and millionaires paying about the same percentage of their income in taxes.

Reps. Leon Panetta, a California Democrat, and Philip Crane, an Illinois Republican, disagree on many economic and social issues, yet each has introduced his own version of a bill advocating a flat rate income tax.

While the current progressive income tax code is supposed to result in the poor paying less and the rich paying more taxes, Panetta says it doesn't work that way.

"The average taxpayer is presented with a jungle of deductions," Panetta said in an interview. "If he can afford to hire an accountant and if he has enough extra cash to make some investments, he might get through the maze to take advantage of the loopholes.

"The problem is of the middle class can't do that so they wind up paying the majority of taxes while millionaires pay less than their share," Panetta said.

Laffer argues that millionaires would be willing to pay a bigger tax bill if they didn't have to divert so much of their income into race horses and railroad cars as shelters and could spend and invest the earnings in more productive activity. The economy would be the net beneficiary, he argues.

Internal Revenue Service figures show those in the 50 percent income tax bracket rarely send half their income to Washington. Of the nearly 94 million tax returns filed last year, only 550,000 reported adjusted gross income of over $100,000. And less than 15 percent of the total taxes paid by individuals came from citizens making over $100,000.

"The poor are exempt from taxes at one end of the scale," Crane says, "and the rich are virtually exempt because of the loopholes at the other end.

"It should come as no surprise that the middle class is hammered with the bulk of the tax burden," he said.

The flat rate income tax would mean that everyone would pay the same percentage of his or her income to the government. No deductions for mortgate interest, no deductions for charity or medical expenses and no tax credits for home insulation. Most plans, however, do allow a sizeable personal deduction to protect the very poor from paying a relatively large tax bill.

Virtually all proponents of a flat rate tax say the flat rate should allow the federal government to collect about as much revenue as it does now. Panetta says the rate will have to be 19 percent; Crane says 10 percent.

"The Bible notes that man owes a tithe of his earnings to God," Crane says, paraphrasing Jesus Christ. "Caesar should ask for no more."

Congress passed the first income tax law on October 13, 1913. "And everytime we try to change it or correct it, we throw another monkey wrench into the economy," Panetta said.

"After my six years in Congress, I don't believe it is possible to make the system fair the way it is set up. We're just going to have to throw out the whole thing and start over."

Jay Angoff, tax expert for Nader's Congress Watch, agrees. "Everytime they try to reform the code, they open up even more loopholes, making an even bigger mess," he said. "Whenever they try to take one step forward, they wind up taking 20 back."

Nobel Prize winning economist Milton Friedman has proposed a flat rate tax, as has former Treasury Secretary William Simon. Alvin Rabushka and Robert E. Hall, scholar's with Stanford University's Hoover Institute, have done the economics on the plan and conclude: "A flat rate of 11 percent on all personal income would bring in about as much revenue as the current 14 to 70 percent scale with its thousands of loopholes." In addition, they propose a flat 19 percent tax for business with no deductions of any kind permitted.

While the idea has the support of conservatives and liberals, economists and politicians, it has one enormous problem: special interest constituencies.

"And probabaly the biggest special interest constituency would be the middle class that wants to protect its mortgage interest deduction," Panetta said. He said the public would have to be educated to realize that even without this deduction, their final tax bill would likely be lower.

"I would imagine the wealthy would wind up paying a bigger share of the nation's tax bill," Laffer said, "and they would be glad to do it if they could forget about the crazy quilt of tax shelters and do what they want to with their money."

If the wealthy pay more and the overall tax burden remains constant, then the middle class could pay less.

Crane said after he introduced his 10 percent flat rate tax, he immediately started getting pressure from churches and charitable organizations worried they wouldn't get any contributions if people couldn't deduct the gift from their taxes.

"I told them history shows we are the most generous nation in the world when it comes to giving," Crane said. "Look at the 19th century when thousands of hospitals, schools and cultural institutions were built, all with private contributions and all before there even was an income tax to deduct the gifts from."

Supporters of a revised tax system also say Congress should stop using the tax code to make social policy changes but should directly fund social programs if they are needed.

"Instead of the tax code being a way of just raising revenue, it has become a vehicle for implementing social policies," Panetta said. "If they try to give someone a new program through tax breaks, it looks like it's free because the government isn't directly sending a check to anyone. But it costs us the same in lost revenues, nonetheless."

Perhaps the most recent example of this is the "safe harbor leasing" tax breaks Congress approved last year. While corporate lobbyists convinced Congress failing companies needed capital, politicans said it was impossible for Washington to actually send businesses a check. Instead, they created a tax break for companies to buy and sell tax breaks from each other, with the government coming out on the short end of the revenue stick.

A tax expert on Conress' Joint Committee on Taxation says one of the biggest obstacles to a flat rate income tax likely would be the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Senate Finance committee that write tax laws.

"Those guys' whole ego is tied up in their intricate knowledge of the tax code," he said. "If you rip it away and make taxes simple, there's nothing for them to do and they've lost all their power."

Nonetheless, seven members of the Ways and Means Committee, both Democrats and Republicans, have introduced a bill to study the concept of a flat rate. Led by Rep. Kent Hance, D-Tex., the group says the effort may "represent the embryonic stage of the most significant change in our nation's tax laws since the first income tax was adopted in 1913."

Both Crane and Panetta independently gave the same answer when asked when flat rate taxes might become a reality: "Within the decade," they said.

Futures markets — grain may have period of doldrums

By HELEN L. CALL
Copley News Service

If things would just settle down and stay that way, everything would be all right. That's the commodities markets that Lee Banks is talking about.

Banks is director of research for the brokerage firm of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Dallas, Texas.

In a telephone interview, Banks said the grain markets, in particular, may be doing just that — settling in for a long period of the doldrums.

Nothing new about that, said Banks. "Wheat stayed at about the same levels for years — in 1967, '68 and '69."

What happened then is what is happening now. A mountain of surplus is on hand, Banks said, and it can take years to get the surplus worked out of the system.

This time the grain markets have been heading down ever since December 1980. Banks thinks grain prices may have hit a plateau where they could settle in for a long time.

"There are huge supplies and carryovers," he said. "There also is a great lack of demand, which may keep prices in equilibrium at about their present level."

Banks said, "In the long run, this will be good for the stock market and for the economy. They like things to be stable. Then it is easier to be more accurate in predictions, and that rinspiresp confidence."

A brighter area in the futures markets is the meat complex. "There are fewer cattle and hogs than there have been for years. That is one of the reasons for the grain surplus.

"Both hogs and cattle are in major bull markets. We expect that to continue into the summer."

The United States is the world's major agricultural exporter and the poor economic conditions everywhere have hurt demand. Usually, this country exports half of what it grows, but that has not been true for the past year.

"Other countries have more economic problems than we have," said Banks. "Also, the strong dollar means that our grains are more costly to foreigners, and the demand is smaller."

Metals are still in major down trends, in spite of recent rallies, said Banks. "The lack of housing, auto sales, OPEC threats or wars keep metals prices down."

Copper, however, could be a buy at the right level. "Anybody who bought copper in the last year and a half has had a loss. It is better to wait until it definitely is on the way up." Banks said he would be a buyer after copper hits 75 cents, which his technical work indicates would mean it was in a definite ruptrendp.

The fact that the price of copper has been below the cost of production for some time does not mean any change is inevitable, he said. "The mines may find that it is cheaper to keep operating than to shut down so they keep on adding to the supplies that hold the price down."

Interest rates indicate that the economy is slowing down enough and the interest rate is high enough to bring about some slack in the demand for money, Banks said. He expects rates to drop more slowly and steadily than they did two years ago when they went from 21 percent to 12 percent in a short time.

Less rvolatilityp is good, Banks said. "If the people of the world see our interest rates are more stable, it will make them feel better about things. Confidence plays a big part in the market."

Sohio down; Indiana Standard up

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

Standard Oil Co. (Indiana), the nation's fifth-largest oil company, said first-quarter profits rose 25 percent from the depressed levels of a year earlier. Standard Oil Co. (Ohio) said its earnings fell 13 percent.

Indiana Standard, which sells its oil products under the name Amoco, attributed its improved earnings Thursday to eliminating the huge loss it incurred in last year's first quarter on oil refining and marketing operations.

Standard of Ohio, the biggest producer of American oil, said it was hurt by lower prices and smaller production volumes of its Alaska crude. The company suffered a $42.3 million loss from its metals mining business.

Indiana Standard, based in Chicago, said net income climbed to $470 million,or $1.60 a share, from $377 million, or $1.29 a share, in the year-earlier period. Revenue fell 8 percent to $7.2 billion from $7.9 billion.

Cleveland-based Standard of Ohio said its profits fell to $454.7 million, or $1.85 a share, from $520.4 million, or $2.12 a share, in last year's first quarter. Revenue fell to $3.1 billion from $3.2 billion.

The two companies were the first of the big oil concerns to report earnings for the first quarter. Industry analysts expect the major international companies to show year-to-year declines averaging at least 20 percent as a result of weak demand for petroleum and falling crude prices.

Standard of Ohio and Indiana Standard, as mainly domestic operators, were expected to show flat or slightly improved results because they weren't hurt by the hawkish pricing policies of Saudi Arabia and other foreign producers.

John E. Swearington, chairman of Indiana Standard, said the company was hurt by lower prices for its crude oil and weak demand for products in Europe. He said full-year profits are expected to be lower than 1981 results.

While the company earned only $13 million from its U.S. refining and marketing operations, that was a major improvement from last year's first quarter when it reported a loss of $179 million in that segment. The improvement was tied mainly to lower crude acquisition costs this year.

Its overseas marketing and refining business lost $46 million compared with a loss of $29 million a year earlier. Worldwide sales of refined products fell 12 percent.

Aminoil discovery completed

HOUSTON (SWN) — Aminoil USA, Inc. has discovered significant quantities of natural gas during the drilling of a wildcat well in South Texas.

Tests conducted at the Guerra No. 1 well, located in Duval County, produced at a rate of six million cubic feet per day of natural gas.

The well's maximum flow rate is estimated at 10 million cubic feet per day.

Drilling of the Guerra well began Oct. 15, 1981. The well was successfully tested in the Wilcox Sand formation between 10,656 feet and 10,676 feet. It was drilled to a depth of 12,722 feet.

Free trade zones are as old as foreign trade

By A. KENT MacDOUGALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Free trade zones are nearly as old as foreign trade itself.

The ancient Carthaginians, Greeks and Romans all built thriving maritime empires partly by providing traders safe passage and duty-free storage for their cargoes in Mediterranean ports.

More than a thousand years later, duty-free ports in both northern and southern Europe sped the transition from feudalism to mercantilism by easing trade between the Baltic and Mediterranean seas and between Europe and the Middle and Far East. Free ports included Hamburg in Germany, Marseilles in France and Genoa in Italy.

When independent city-states with free ports were absorbed into sovereign nations, the new national governments typically reduced the free ports to free trade zones occupying just a part of each port. Many of these zones thrive to this day. For example, Hamburg's free trade zone, occupying 15 percent of its port area, employs 18,000 workers in warehousing and manufacturing.

The most notable free ports still in existence are Singapore, Hong Kong and Macau.

Despite their long history of providing duty-free transit and storage, free trade zones began to play a significant role in manufacturing only in the 1960s. Ireland pioneered by establishing a zone at Shannon Airport in 1959 to maintain employment when the airport's position as a refueling stop on trans-Atlantic flights was undermined by the advent of longer-range jet aircraft.

Lured by tax concessions, low wages and government-financed training facilities, nearly 100 companies employ 8,000 workers at Shannon today, turning out products ranging from fur hats and ladies' knitwear to pharmaceuticals, semiconductors and industrial diamonds. The 35 or so U.S. firms at Shannon include General Electric Co., Westinghouse Electric Corp., Beatrice Foods Co. and Jonathan Logan Inc.

Multinational corporations with worldwide purchasing, production and marketing operations sparked the spread of Shannon-style export-processing zones to the Third World. Today, 200 of the 300 free trade zones outside the United States are in Latin America, Asia and Africa.

Multinational corporations use zones in underdeveloped countries mostly for labor-intensive assembly. They ship raw materials and component parts to the zones for fabrication by low-wage, non-union workers. Then they export the finished or semi-finished products without paying customs duties or taxes on profits.

Mexico has an export-processing zone along the U.S. border that extends in places as far south as Guadalajara. About 136,000 workers, mostly young women paid 71 cents to 99 cents an hour, are employed in 600 maquiladora (assembly) plants in the zone. Nearly 10,000 workers assemble television components for Zenith Radio Corp. alone.

10 member states of OECD pass U.S. in annual per capita income

By DON COOK
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

PARIS — Ten member states of the 23-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development have passed the United States in annual per capita income, according to the latest compilation of OECD statistics.

Nevertheless, the purchasing power of the per capita annual income in the United States — $11,360 in 1981 — is the highest in the OECD — higher, even, than of Switzerland's $15,920 average income per year. A large share of the high incomes earned in Europe is skimmed off by taxes and social security charges, and the basic cost of living is uniformly higher in these other top-income nations than in the United States.

Therefore, although the United States is now almost half-way down the list of OECD countries in average annual earnings, Americans still enjoy higher real living standards than any other people.

After Switzerland at the top of the per-capita income list are: Sweden, $14,760; Norway, $14,020; West Germany, $13,310; Denmark, $12,950; Luxembourg, $12,570; Iceland, $12,410; France, $12,140; The Netherlands, $11,850, and Belgium, $11,820.

The lowest per capita income among the OECD members is in Turkey, where the average is only $1,170 per year.

The biggest meat-eaters are the French and New Zealanders, who consume an average of 78 grams (2.75 ounces) of animal protein per day per person. The U.S. figure is 74 grams, with Australia next at 71 grams. Japan is next to the bottom with 37 grams and Turkey is last at 24 grams.

On the other hand, Japan built more dwellings than any other country — 14.7 per thousand inhabitants, and Greece was second with 14.2. The United States was well down the list, with only 6.6 dwelling per thousand inhabitants constructed in 1981.

In energy consumption, tiny Luxembourg leads everybody with 10.3 tons of oil equivalent per person. The little duchy has a population of only 365,000, but it has a lot of energy-intensive industry, including a major steel works. Canada is the next biggest energy consumer with 9.29 tons of oil equivalent per person, and the United States is third with 7.95.

Sweden has more telephones per thousand inhabitants than any other nation in the world — 796. The United States has 789, and Switzerland is third with 727.

Iceland has the lowest infant mortality rate in the world, only 5.4 deaths per thousand live births in the first year of infancy. The figure for the United States is 12.6 and Portugal is the worst off, with 26 infant deaths per thousand.

In education, the United States has 75 percent of its children in the 15-19 age bracket in full-time school enrollment, followed by Japan with 71.4 percent and Switzerland at 70 percent. The United States also has by far the highest number of television sets per thousand inhabitants — 635, followed by Canada with 466. The British have the most sets per person in Europe, with 394 sets per thousand population, followed by Sweden, Denmark and West Germany.

The West Germans continue to hold by far the greatest official gold and dollar currency reserves in the world — just under $41 billion worth, compared to $25 billion in the United States.

$31.8 million sent to cities for April

AUSTIN — State Comptroller Bob Bullock recently sent checks totaling $31.8 million to 962 cities as their share of the one-percent city sales tax for April.

"Total payments we have sent to these cities so far this year are running more than 19 percent ahead of last year, which means sales of taxable merchandise in these cities are running that much more than 1981," Bullock said.

Midland received $597,504.89 as compared to $408,113.81 received in April 1981.

Houston received the biggest check, $7 million, up 27.9 percent from the April 1981 check.

Dallas received $3.8 million compared to $2.7 million last April. San Antonio received $1.6 million, compared with $1.2 million last April.

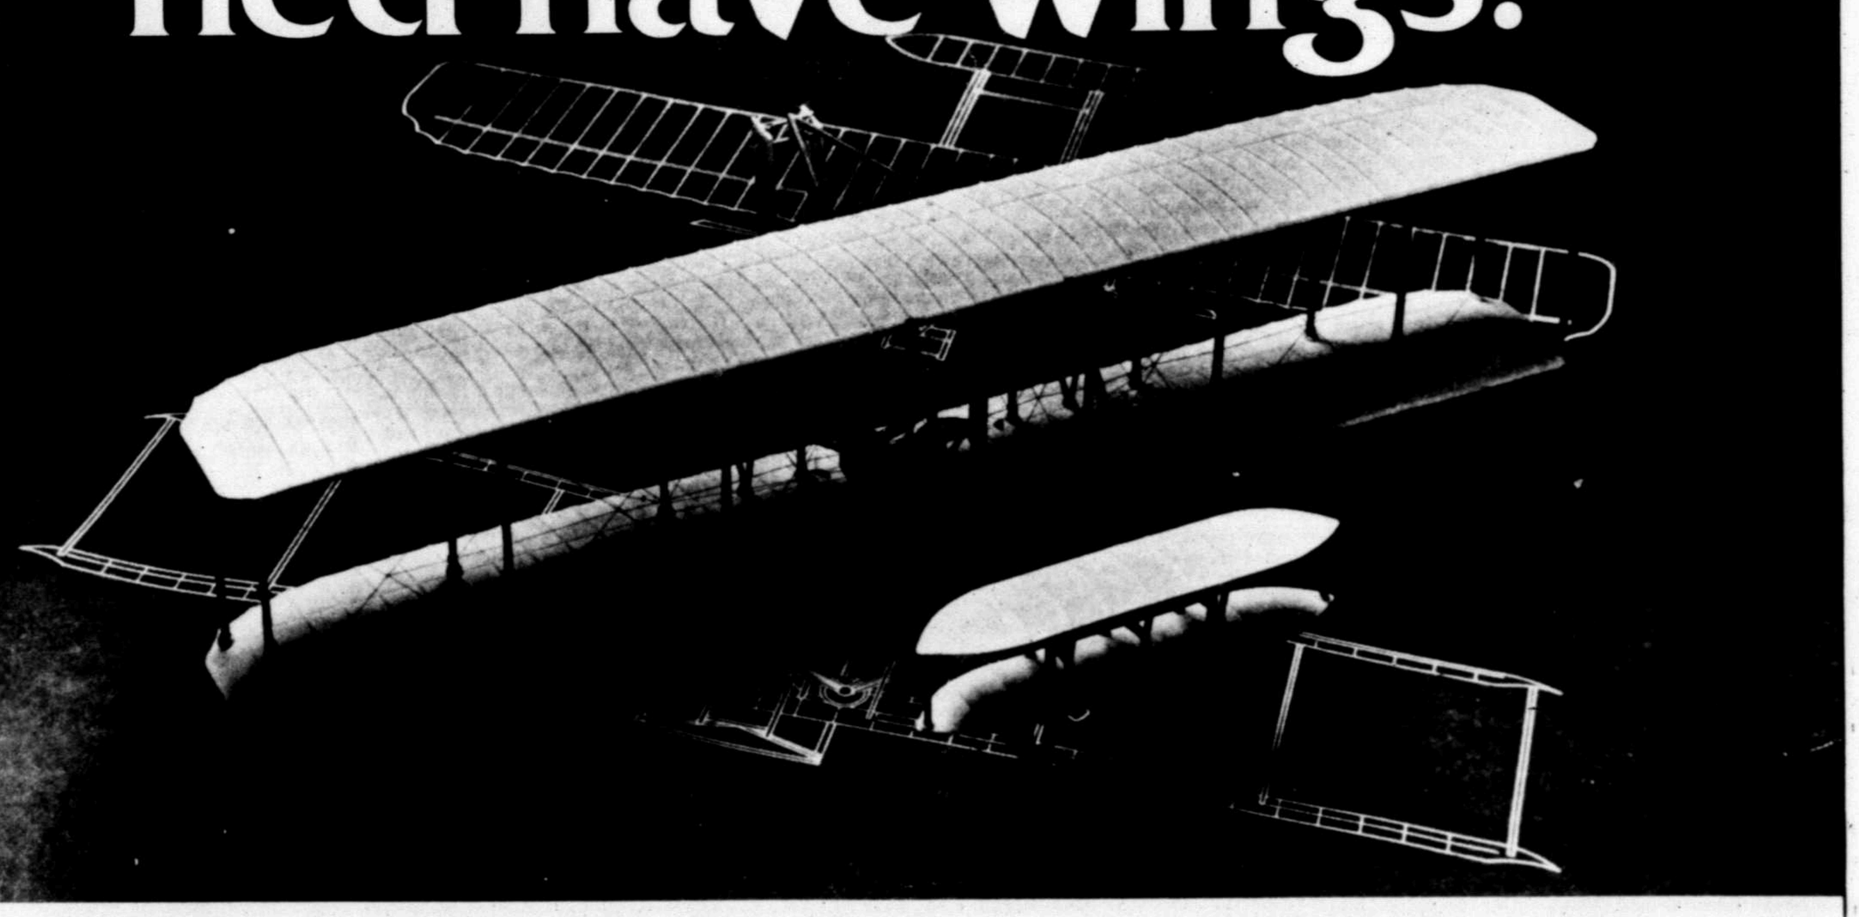
The City of Fort Worth got a check For $1.1 million, up 37.9 percent from April of last year.

Austin's check was for $1 million, compared to $878,000 last April and El Paso received $809,000, up 38.1 percent from the $586,000 check that city received last April.

In the fast-growing City of Bryan, where this year's total received is running 42 percent ahead of last year's total, the city received $149,000 compared with $92,000 last April.

The city sales taxes are collected along with the state sales tax by merchants and businesses and rebated monthly to the cities in which they are collected by Comptroller.

"If man were meant to fly, he'd have wings!"



Wrong.

Orville and Wilbur Wright understood how to combine imagination with the scientific method. Their experiment at Kitty Hawk was the inevitable conclusion of their hard work, and mankind's irresistible urge to fly. Wilbur recognized it then, "The age of flight has come at last." The rest is history.

Success in today's business environment requires more than just applying the scientific method. It takes the spark of imagination.

Some travelers are big 'winners' in airline wars

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Melissa Maguire, a college senior with little money to spare, can afford to be a jet-setter of sorts these days, flying home to suburban New Jersey or to glittering New York for a quick weekend with family and friends.

America's latest air war — a classic battle between an airline giant and a spunky new carrier — allows Miss Maguire to skip from afternoon classes at Pittsburgh's Carnegie-Mellon University to Newark, N.J., in time for Friday night dinner.

Her cost is an hour's flying time and only $23.

"It's like getting on a bus," Miss Maguire, 22, said as she swung up her lime duffle bag and khaki knapsack at Greater Pittsburgh International Airport recently.

"You can carry on your baggage, pay on the plane and there's no hassles at the airports," she said. "If these flights continue, I'll be going home pretty often."

THOUSANDS OF OCCASIONAL and veteran air travelers are seeking out a handful of new airlines for cheap, no-frills flights to such desirable destinations as New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Miami and San Francisco.

Congressional deregulation of airlines in 1978 has hatched a flock of hustling new carriers, including Midway Airlines of Chicago, Peoples Express of Newark, N.J., and the latest entry, Pacific Express of Chico, Calif. Several more have been approved and are seeking financing.

The new airlines have become more than an annoyance for established carriers. As no-frill airlines fly the most lucrative routes, the major carriers have been moving to stamp out the competitive brush fires with their own cut-rate fares.

THE BIG AIRLINES often take losses to maintain market dominance, according to industry experts.

"Nobody charges a $19 fare by himself for more than a day or two," says William Jackman of the Air Transport Association of America, the airlines' trade group. "Because of the competitive nature of this industry, the major airlines must cut their fares or lose customers. They're unwilling to give away any share of their markets."

Established USAir and upstart People Express have begun the industry's latest aerial dogfight, a fare war between between Pittsburgh and the New York area.

People Express recently announced $23 one-way fares on six weekend flights between Pittsburgh and Newark, a 20-minute bus ride from midtown Manhattan.

USAir, which had been charging $109.50 one-way for the same run, matched the fare on 12 weekend flights and two weeknight flights. It also offered $49 fares on 11 more weekend flights to New York's LaGuardia and Kennedy International airports. Pan American World Airways then got in the act, announcing it would offer introductory $19 fares on some seats when it begins service between Pittsburgh and New York on Sunday. The low fare will be good until May 25.

MISS MAGUIRE, for example, could have grabbed the New York-bound Greyhound for 7½ numbing hours on the turnpikes. The 386-mile round-trip, including still more buses to and from her home in Short Hills, N.J., would have cost more than $110 round-trip.

Or she could have boarded Amtrak's "Broadway Limited" for a $120 round-trip that takes about the same time. Hitching rides with strangers or friends would have been much cheaper, but no faster.

Instead, Miss Maguire spent part of a recent Friday evening with a romantic novel and a Boeing 737 jetliner.

People Express and USAir already have dueled in Indianapolis, Norfolk, Va., Columbus, Ohio, and Buffalo, N.Y.

In Buffalo, the air war has dropped the one-way fare to Newark to just $19 — low enough to catch the notice of Louis Magnano, president of Buffalo's Blue Bird coach lines.

"People these days are going to New York for no reason," Magnano said. "It's the 'in' thing to do, the prices are right and why not?"

Magnano insisted the low airline fares create a new interest in traveling, even by bus. Airline overbooking has resulted in more bus charters, he said.

Interstate bus companies generally have not suffered from the air wars, says Neil Boggs, spokesman for the American Bus Association of Washington, D.C.

"There has been no appreciable impact on our business," says Greyhoud Lines' Linda Klein.

MOST BUS PATRONS ride an average of 160 miles, while most air travelers fly an average of 900 miles, Boggs says. "The airlines are providing transportation to people who would be riding an airplane anyway," he says.

Boggs recently skipped the bus and flew cut-rate Texas International from Baltimore to Albuquerque, N.M., for $196 round-trip. Bus fare is $198 round-trip and "supersaver" air fare is about $400 round-trip.

However, the plane is hurting the train. Amtrak spokeswoman Diane Elliott says low airfares helped cut train ridership 9.8 percent last year in the Northeast Corridor between Boston and Washington.

Elsewhere, especially in the West, Amtrak ridership held its own despite a 10 percent cutback in service, she says.

"We can't match their fares, especially when you consider the time factors involved," Ms. Elliott says. "When their fares rise up to be competitive, we are beginning to win back the business. The average businessman is taking the train again."

Amtrak is fighting back in the Northeast with more advertising and new, high-speed trains between downtowns, she says.

OTHER CASUALTIES include travel agents, who are finding it hard to squeeze a profit from commissions writing cut-rate airline tickets.

"Where we used to make $17 on a ticket to New York, we're making only $4 now," says Ed Siegel of Pittsburgh's Forbes Travel. "We have to write four tickets to make up the money. We hope the volume increases."

Low-cost airlines seem to be attracting travelers who would normally drive or take a bus, not necessarily veteran air travelers expecting a free drink, dinner and a pillow, says Paul Bessell, vice president of the American Society of Travel Agents in New York.

"The whole thing is pretty much designed to be a bus that flies," Bessell says. "They're not looking for passengers wanting all the conveniences that most passengers are used to."

Sons and daughters like Miss Maguire flying home for college or off to a fun weekend tend to be less concerned about frills. Backpacks are common luggage aboard the cut-rates.

Business people, on expense accounts and so less concerned about ticket costs, are more inclined to favor pampering for the big meeting at their destination, according to industry officials.

But some major companies, such as U.S. Steel Corp., are encouraging executives to fly at the lower rates.

"We use economy class for all flights in the United States," a U.S. Steel spokesman says. "We also, wherever possible, use the new low fares."

The cut-rate airlines are flying loads comparable with the bigger carriers. Jackman says an average of 57.2 percent of the industry's airline seats were filled last year.

MIDWAY, THE FIRST cut-rate airline born of deregulation, filled 52.6 percent of its 12 jets linking Chicago's close-in Midway airport with 13 cities in March.

People Express, flying to 10 cities from an old terminal at Newark International Airport, reported 64 percent capacity on its 17 jets in March.

People Express has reported losses in its first year of operation, which executives say was expected. Midway, however, posted a profit of $7.6 million last year, its second full year of operation.

The newest such airline is Pacific Express, which began flights Jan. 27 with five jetliners between San Franciso, Los Angeles, Oakland, San Jose, Portland, Ore., and Boise, Idaho.

The standard fare between San Francisco and Los Angeles was $39 and $69. Pacific Express charges $29.

Cut-rate flyers get what they pay for, of course.

Aboard People Express, passengers are expected to stow their own luggage in cabin compartments. Checked luggage carries a $3 surcharge.

REGULAR AIRPORT GATES are sometimes avoided. At Newark, passengers may be issued umbrellas for a dash to an old-fashioned staircase pushed up to the plane.

People Express passengers may reserve their seats by telephone, but are issued their tickets en route. They may pay with cash, credit card or even personal check. Soft drinks cost 50 cents, beer and snacks are $1 and mixed drinks are $2.

Despite cutbacks, Jackson still PUSHing

By SUSAN J. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — In 1975, a charismatic black Baptist minister began touring the nation's high schools, preaching not about fire and brimstone, but report cards, study hours and extra effort.

"It is a sin to do less than your best," he admonished students who gathered to hear him.

"Your mind is a pearl," he declared. "You can learn anything in the world."

It was the start of civil rights leader the Rev. Jesse Jackson's crusade to turn America's run-down, violence-ridden, vandalized and demoralized inner-city schools into born-again places to learn.

Jackson said he was alarmed that minority youngsters did so poorly in school, and he warned of a future without jobs or hope for those who did not start hitting the books.

HE HAD A SIMPLE ANSWER: daily study hours, parental involvement in education, teacher dedication, and especially self-respect for minority students.

"I am somebody!" he led students in chanting. "Respect me! Protect me! Never neglect me!"

Jackson called his program Push for Excellence, and it quickly attracted a following. School districts rushed to enroll or copy it. The media gave it widespread attention. Money followed.

Joseph Califano, then secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, committed $3 million starting in 1978. The Ford Foundation gave $475,600 plus a $750,000 loan that later was forgiven. School boards and other groups poured in thousands of dollars.

"We are delighted...because Jesse Jackson is probably onto something. He thinks there's no substitute for hitting the books," the Washington Star said in an editorial.

BUT FOUR YEARS and at least $8.4 million in public and private funding later, the enthusiasm has waned.

At least 24 school districts embraced the program, but half have abandoned it — for lack of money, results, or, in one case, possibly disenchantment with Jackson's politics. The U.S. Education Department says there will be no more federal grants for the Chicago-based organization.

Push-Excel ran aground on a difficult mission — transforming a noble idea into measurable results. There were just too many problems with overtime, busing and budgets. And, some say, too little planning and direction.

"The initial expectation that through the dynamism and charisma of Reverend Jackson transformation of inner-city schools would occur has not been met," the National Institute of Education, an arm of the Education Department, said in a report last year.

"Jesse Jackson had a new approach on how to inspire students to study. What was lacking was a new approach on how to make it stick," said James Taylor, associate superintendent of schools in Los Angeles, where the board spent $640,000 over two years before abandoning the program.

Even Mary Berry, an assistant secretary of education during the Carter administration and now president of Push-Excel, acknowleges the program encountered problems that weren't anticipated in the heady early days.

"I've been discouraged," she said. "I've learned a lot of things from this."

PUSH-EXCEL IS ONE of many programs begun by Jackson, whose endeavors have ranged from a controversial mission to the Mideast and meeting with Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat to negotiations about minority business opportunities with Coca-Cola.

A colleague of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Jackson broke away from the Southern Christian Leadership Conference after King's death and started Operation PUSH (People United to Save Humanity) in 1971.

Operation PUSH was to press for more economic and political power for blacks. But by 1975, Jackson says, he realized that if blacks were to achieve power, they would have to start doing well in school.

"I saw that black youth were spending three hours a day practicing sports with the radio, television and record player turned off, but they did not do the same thing with their schoolwork," he said.

Jackson was equally alarmed at the rate of teen-age pregnancy and drug abuse among minority youth.

ALREADY ON the national lecture circuit, he began talking about problems he saw. Soon he was leading students in cheers of "Up with hope, down with dope," and had an educational program going.

"The night he came to our town, it was like a church service," recalled William A. Johnson, president of the Rochester, N.Y., Urban League. "We got pledges galore signed that night."

Jackson asked students to pledge to study two hours a day. Parents were asked to pledge to monitor study hours, see that their children went to school and to meet with their teachers to discuss their progress. Teachers were asked to pledge to provide an atmosphere of strict discipline and expectation that students could and would perform well.

The goal was "to re-energize inner-city schools into places where both academic and moral excellence could flourish," Push-Excel said in a 1978 request for federal funding.

THE FIRST PUSH-EXCEL program began in 10 Chicago high schools in 1976. It featured student and parent clubs, tutoring and honor awards for academic achievement.

By 1978, the program had spread to four additional cities — Los Angeles, New Orleans, Kansas City, and Shaker Heights, Ohio — and more were trying to get Jackson to kick off their program with one of his rallies.

Students pledged support in such cities as Louisville, Ky.. Shreveport, La., Philadelphia, Galveston, Texas, Buffalo, N.Y., Essex County, N.J., Indianapolis, Chattanooga, Tenn., Denver, Anderson, Ind., and Tacoma and Seattle, Wash.

Initial reports were good.

"Violence and vandalism has decreased in most schools and attendance has increased," said a report prepared for the Ford Foundation and the Chicago Community Trust following studies at three Chicago schools in 1978-79.

And good results continue in some cities.

IN CHATTANOOGA, where 3,500 students are involved, officials credit the program with improving the atmosphere at six junior and senior high schools. Two elementary schools were added this year.

"Attendance has improved at all six of the schools we have worked with during the two years," said coordinator Malcolm Walker.

"The attitudes of students have changed," he added. "Students are more aware of learning, of their purpose for being in school. We notice more school pride. Students are being more respectful to their teachers, just generally, more serious about school."

Program director Wendell Morgan said one reason Chattanooga's program has been successful is community support. The program, which costs about $300,000 annually, has been funded equally by the federal Education Department, private contributions and the city school system.

BUT OTHER CITIES have lost their enthusiasm.

"We got a lot of interest out of it at the time," said Taylor of the Los Angeles schools. "If you're asking: 'Has it borne long-range results?' No, I can't say that."

There was little direction from the national Push-Excel office in Chicago, and support eventually fizzled, he said. "If a program is to excel, it needs more than rhetoric," said Taylor.

IN ROCHESTER, where local contributions amounted to $150,000 over two years, Johnson also said there wasn't enough follow-up.

"I just don't think this thing can operate. Jesse Jackson has unparalleled ability to motivate youngsters, but the motivation dissipated when he left town," Johnson said.

Similar criticism was contained in studies by the American Institutes for Research, which evaluated the program for the Education Department.

"At the sites (studied) there is still a preponderance of one-shot activities with no explicit rationale," the institutes said in a report last year. "The existing programs can be criticized on grounds that they do not implement the rhetoric that first attracted support to Push-Excel."

The report suggested that Jackson develop a written guide to help school districts implement the program. Push-Excel did so, but the researchers said the guide "does not take the sites further than they have already gone on their own, taking Rev. Jackson's basic prescriptions as their guide."

Jackson doesn't think he should be blamed for local programs that failed.

"I came not as an educator, but a preacher," he said. "The program was meant to be a partnership. Push-Excel was to do the inspiring part, and they (the teachers, students and parents) would do the rest.

"If Billy Graham comes to town, people don't accuse him the next week of being inadequate because the local pastor didn't follow through on the newly converted souls," Jackson said.

IN LOS ANGELES, he said, a desegregation controversy so paralyzed the school district that it was impossible to get and keep broad-based support.

In Rochester, he said, some teachers were unwilling to give extra time to tutor students because it wasn't in their contract. That was a common problem, he said. "There are teachers who come to school as late as they can, and leave as early as they can. When they're at school they're sitting on their can."

Raids into Angola possible

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — South African troops may launch deeper raids into Angola to prevent black nationalist guerrillas from attacking white farm areas in South-West Africa, Defense Minister Magnus Malan said.

While Malan spoke in Parliament, South African troops Thursday were pursuing guerrillas of the South-West African People's Organization following one of its deepest drives into the South African-ruled territory. South African units regularly cross into Angola in "hot pursuit" operations against SWAPO.

"With this type of action by SWAPO we will have to look at the matter in a fresh light," Malan said. "We may have to have deeper pre-emptive raids into Angola." He did not elaborate.

Students injured in protests

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — Forty-three students were injured and 200 arrested in two days of violent demonstrations protesting the current level of government funding for the state university, authorities said.

Classes were suspended indefinitely and the police announced that all those detained Wednesday and Thursday would be prosecuted for disturbing the peace, assaulting law enforcement officers and blocking traffic.

Students arrested

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Four college students have been arrested for burning an American flag and scattering dissident leaflets on a campus 50 miles east of here, a local newspaper reported today.

The daily Joong-Ang Ilbo said three others were being sought by police for distributing underground sheets Thursday at Kangwon National University, Chunchon. The handbills attacked the U.S. and South Korean governments, and defended the March 18 burning of the U.S. Cultural Center in the southern city of Pusan.

New rape laws to be amended

OTTAWA (AP) — A bill overhauling Canada's rape laws will be amended to allow married women to press sexual assault charges against their husbands, Justice Minister Jean Chretien said.

"Spouses are not the personal property to be treated as the other spouse sees fit," Chretien said Thursday. "The criminal code must not continue to deny persons equal protection because of their marital status."

However, the minister told a Parliamentary committee that he rejected a request from women's groups to prohibit questions about a victim's sex life at rape trials. Such a ban, he said, would prevent a fair trial.

Arraignment expected

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — A Hungarian native receiving treatment for phlebitis at a federal prison hospital in Springfield, Mo., faces arraignment on spy charges when he returns here in about three weeks.

Otto Attilla Gilbert was indicted by a federal grand jury, accused of trying to buy classified military documents and films from a U.S. warrant officer.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Contraceptives often not used

Dear Dr. Solomon: I keep reading about the large number of teenagers who become pregnant. I've heard that in some cities there are more babies born to unmarried girls than to married women. Contraceptives work for me and my husband, why don't they work for them? — Mrs. V.L., Tulsa

Dear Mrs. L.: Apparently it is not so much a case of contraceptives not working, but of not being used. Dr. Janet B. Hardy, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore, has reported that contraceptives work remarkably well for teenagers who use them; the trouble is that not all of them do.

A study by Johns Hopkins researchers has shown that more than 60 percent of sexually active teenagers who did not use contraceptives became pregnant, compared with 14 percent of those who did. Moreover, among the unmarried teenagers who were pregnant for the first time, about four out of five did not intend to become pregnant, but only about one out of three used contraceptives regularly.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I don't hear very much about interferon any more. Can you tell me the latest news about using it to treat cancer, or is it another Laetrile? Has it been tried on people yet, or only on animals? — Mike, Jackson, Miss.

Dear Mike: Interferon is not another Laetrile, but its true potential is still unknown. Dr. Thomas C. Merigan, of the Stanford University School of Medicine, says that interferon definitely has an effect on tumors, but an assessment of its real value requires further study.

Interferon has been shown to shrink tumors and lymph nodes in some patients with metastatic cancer, but its long-term effects are not known. One positive sign is that side effects from its use have so far been minimal. However, prolonged use may reveal side effects that are not now apparent.

In general, I suppose "hopeful" is as good a word as any to describe the present attitude towards interferon.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A speaker at our PTA meeting last night gave a talk about the dangers of smoking. He mentioned "gas exchange" several times, but did not explain what it was. Can you clarify? — Myra, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Myra: Gas exchange refers to the job performed by the lungs in providing the body with oxygen and removing carbon dioxide. I assume the speaker was making the point that smoking can have an adverse effect on the ability of the lungs to do their job.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father went to his doctor who told him he has emphysema. He was then sent to another doctor who says he has chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. Are they the same thing? — Walt, Rockville, Md.

Dear Walt: Emphysema and chronic bronchitis are included in the disease category called chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). In other words, emphysema is one of two conditions that comprise COPD.

Relation between teen moms, higher SIDS rate needs study

CHICAGO (AP) — Further study is needed to learn why children born to teen-age mothers are the most likely to die of sudden infant death syndrome, an unexplained disease that kills thousands of babies each year.

A new study, reported in today's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, says mothers age 14 to 16 face the highest risk of losing their children to the syndrome, also known as crib death.

The rate of the disease — which kills about 8,000 infants a year in the United States — appears to level off after mothers pass their mid-20s, said Dr. Donald Peterson, one of the study's authors.

The study suggests more research should be done on the extent to which established risk factors — poverty, crowded housing, smoking during pregnancy — contribute to the high rates of the disease among children of adolescent mothers.

Young mothers with many children are likely to be poor and live in inadequate conditions, Peterson said. "This needs to be studied in relation to maternal age," he said.

Also, nutrition in adolescents and its importance during pregnancy should be further investigated, the study said.

Peterson said his study confirms earlier research showing adolescent mothers are in the high-risk group. He said his study, which included 431 incidents of the syndrome from 1969 through 1980 in Washington state, was more comprehensive than previous research.

Peterson also said his study showed the chances of sudden death occurring increase as women bear more children, so a first-born child would be least likely to die of the disease.

Babies who die from the syndrome are often found dead in their cribs with no prior known medical problems.

Peterson said there is no explanation for the deaths — which are most common in infants about 3 months old and can occur in children older than 1 year.
