Talks will continue on controllers strike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government and union negotiators, after meeting for 10 hours Saturday, recessed their talks without reaching an agreement on a way to head off a threatened nationwide strike by air traffic controllers that would ground thousands of flights and snarl air travel for millions of Americans.

The two sides agreed to resume talking at 2 p.m. Sunday, 17 hours before the strike deadline.

Although Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis appeared optimistic that a strike might be averted, Robert Poli, president of the controllers union, told reporters he did not believe any progress had been made during Saturday's day-long negotiations.

Lewis acknowledged the two sides are not in agreement but said he was "hopeful" the differences can be resolved Sunday. Lewis reiterated, however, the administration will not provide money beyond the $40 million package already proposed. That package has been rejected by the union.

Earlier, Poli said, "We're still talking... nothing has broken down." He also saw the possibility of averting a Monday strike if the talks "really become meaningful."

So far, however, he said they had not reached that point.

The two sides met from 10:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. with two hours out for dinner, talking at times directly and at other times through a federal mediator. Lewis said his aim during the day was to "agree in principle tonight" and leave the final contract to negotiating teams later.

Presumably, part of such an agreement in principle would include an assurance that a strike deadline, threatened for 7 a.m. Monday, would be postponed.

Lewis said "we obviously don't want a strike," but he warned that if controllers walk off the job, "we'll come down with the full force of the Justice Department ... we'll start the fines immediately."

White House chief of staff James A. Baker III relayed word on the talks to President Reagan at Camp David. White House spokesman David R. Gergen said Reagan would monitor the talks while he is at the presidential retreat during the weekend.

At the White House, Gergen said Saturday's talks dealt with substance and added: "The strong emphasis right now is doibng everying possible to avert a strike."

But he said the Justice and Transportation Departments are preparing the necessary papers "in the unhappy circumstances" of a strike taking place to seek a court injunction against it. The goal is to have an injunction in place by 7 a.m. Monday, he said.

"In the event of a strike, the number one priority is safety," he said, and not simply keeping the airlines flying.

The resumption of even informal discussions Friday night and again Saturday by Poli, head of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, and negotiators from the Federal Aviation Administration brought a hint that an agreement might be reached to prevent the strike that is predicted would cost the economy $250 million a day and inconvenience millions of travelers.

Ronnie's 'first father...'

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Prss Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twelve weeks after a man tried to kill her husband, Nancy Reagan rejoices in "just having him here. You're grateful for every day. You can't go through something like that without having it change you."

But Father's Day brings gentle memories, too. Like the long drives when Ronald Wilson Reagan would amuse the kids with stories about his life as a horse, or a poodle. Or when he would employ a dad's special magic to relate the conversations buzzing through the roadside telephone lines.

As a father, the president of the United States is one soft touch, the first lady says. By her account, the younger Reagans have always found him generous with his time and money, and especially quick to spoil them with presents.

In Mrs. Reagan's view, the president relates easily to his children: "He's always willing to take time to talk with them, to answer their questions, to explain his position. Our children don't always agree with him on everything political, but he'll spend however long they need discussing things. He never puts them off or gives them short shrift."

When they were small, she recalled, he used to play a game called Submarine. He'd get in the family swimming pool and all the kids would climb on his back, and they'd dive under water together. A former lifeguard, he taught them to dive — from his shoulders.

"And he played a game we called 'Beaver,' " said Mrs. Reagan. "Whenever someone would see an out-of-state license plate, the person who saw it first would yell out, 'Beaver.' Ronnie was very competitive about this. We all were."

In an interview with The Associated Press, Mrs. Reagan revealed her feelings about her own father, Kenneth Robbins. He and her mother separated shortly after her birth, she said. She doesn't think about him on Father's DMSO: Is it a wonder drug?

Solvent turning up in many medicine chests

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

More than a century ago, a by-product of paper milling was discovered to have the ability to penetrate and dissolve almost anything. Today the solvent, Dimethyl Sulfoxide, has become a wonder drug to a cult of suffering individuals.

Over the years, DMSO has been used as a paint thinner, a solvent for epoxy glue, an antifreeze ingredient and even as a coolant and preservative for living tissue and organs.

DMSO is a clear liquid or gel, which may have a garlicy smell and is quickly absorbed from the skin directly into the bloodstream. Because it is absorbed so quickly, other drugs may be mixed with it and used topically, rather than intravenously.

Currently approved for sale as a solvent, DMSO is only designated for medical use in 47 states on dogs, horses and for a bladder inflammation known as interstitial cystistis in humans. Florida, Louisiana and Oregon have state laws allowing further medical use as prescribed by physicians. However, DMSO is believed by followers to cure almost anything — including arthritis, torn ligaments, bursitis, skin growths, skin rashes, burns, tooth aches, infections, spinal cord paralysis, mental retardation and even cancer.

AND JUST LIKE the elixir traveling salesmen sold, DMSO is not approved by the Food and Drug Administration. The FDA cut off studies in 1965 after hearing of one study which caused dogs to grow nearsighted. It wasn't until 1978 that the FDA approved use of DMSO for interstitial cystitis — in a 50 percent dilution.

Permian Basin followers, like others across the United States, believe the FDA is dragging its heels in approving DMSO for medical use because of a strong anti-DMSO faction led by the American Medical Association. In fact, many American physicians do not approve of DMSO.

Dr. B.K. Khandelwal, a Midland physician who treats arthritis patients, said he is opposed to its use for arthritis because of the Arthritis Foundation's stand against it.

"Basically, they say we still don't know enough about it," Dr. Khandelwal said. "We still need to do studies.

"There have been initially some serious side effects reported whenever somebody started using it," he continued. "But, there are not sufficient studies done to decide on a scientific basis."

ALTHOUGH HE did not personally know of any direct side effects from use of DMSO, Dr. Khandelwal said he had been told about a patient developing a severe bone marrow infection from it and another with gastro-intestinal bleeding. "I'm not sure whether it was DMSO or other medications mixed with it (which caused the complications)," he added.

Dr. Khandelwal agreed with the FDA in its hesitancy about DMSO. "I think that's good," he said. "If we keep releasing new drugs, the market will be flooded with untested cures."

The doctor said much of his information about DMSO came from patients. "I have not been using it (on patients) and have no plans to use it," Dr. Khandelwal said. "I cannot recommend it to anyone." However, he has patients who have tried it.

Of those experiencing no bad effects, he said the good effects of DMSO's pain killing ability were "very, very temporary" — about a week. "It gives them a false relief in their minds," he said. "We don't know. It may be damaging their joints, too. They get pain-free and probably move them more than they should and are damaging the joint more."

ONE OF Khandelwal's patients, who preferred to remain anonymous, went to Mexico for DMSO treatments for arthritis.

"I used it for quite a while," the patient said. "In fact, I still have some around here. It gave me some relief with my type of arthritis (a mixture of both rheumatoid arthritis and osteoarthritis). It gave me some relief...but not too much at all."

The patient said the doctors in Mexico, where DMSO is not only legal, but also widely used, would rub the DMSO into the joints, cream the skin and then subject it to a dry heat machine to "drive it into the joints." The patients said the treatments gave him some relief, but after a week the pain would creep back.

After 3½ years of continual suffering, the patient came back to Khandelwal, who said his condition was worse and showed severe deformities. The doctor said he wasn't sure whether DMSO helped or hindered the patient's condition. "It's very difficult to go back and say 100 percent, 'yes, we

Reporter-Telegram making editorial, news changes

Today's edition of The Reporter-Telegram marks the debut of several new features and the inauguration of a new format for parts of the newspaper's editorial and news content.

On the editorial page, Steve Benson, cartoonist of The Arizona Republic and syndicated by The Washington Post Company, joins our present lineup of three other fine editorial cartoonists: Bob Sullivan, Steve Sack and Bob Taylor. Also beginning on the page today is the highly respected syndicated columnist George Will, contributing editor of Newsweek magazine and 1977 Pulitzer Prize winner for distinguished news commentary.

Making its debut today on the Business Page is "Investor's Guide" by Bill Doyle. The column, being inaugurated at the request of a number of Reporter-Telegram readers, will appear on the Business Page each Sunday and elsewhere in the paper Mondays through Thursdays.

Scheduled to begin Monday is another feature, "Doonesbury," one of the country's most popular daily comic strips.

Changes also are being made today in the format of Sections A and B of Sunday editions. In Section A, news from our three principal services, The Associated Press, Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service and Hearst Special News Service as well as our Austin Bureau, will be grouped into State, Nation and World categories.

With exception of local news and features published on the front page, beginning today most local news on Sundays will be found in Section B instead of being published, as before, throughout the newspaper. Local sports, lifestyle, business and oil news will remain in their respective sections, of course. In addition, special photo-feature pages will occasionally be published elsewhere in the Sunday edition when need arises, as today on Page 1G.

Through this organization of local, area, state, national and international news and pictures, we hope to make reading The Reporter-Telegram easier and more enjoyable for our readers.

If you approve of the changes, we hope you'll let us know. And when you disagree with what we do or how we do it, we hope you'll do the same. Your suggestions and criticisms, as well as your approval, always are welcome guidance for The Reporter-Telegram management and staff.

Man held in shooting

Formal charges are expected to be filed Monday on a Midland man held in city jail in connection with the shooting death late Friday of Leon M. Thornton, 60, at his residence at 300 E. Pecan Ave.

Peace Justice Robert Pine returned a ruling of death by homicide.

Thornton was shot twice in the stomach area with a .22-caliber weapon, according to a Midland Police Department detective. The 11:19 p.m. Friday altercation apparently was the result of a domestic quarrel.

The suspect in the shooting walked into the Police Department Saturday morning to turn himself in, said the spokesman. Immediately following the shooting death police officials had been searching for a man wearing a white T-shirt and green shorts.

Reagan back in presidential stride

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

HEARST

NEW YORK — Pesident Reagan was in top form, just 11 weeks after having been badly wounded by an assassin, with a great deal to tell us at his press conference last week. He assured us that he's fully recovered, for which all Americans should be truly grateful.

The president gave a polished performance — some critics called it "accomplished and audacious." At the outset, in a prepared statement, he invoked the mandate given to him by a large majority of us last November. President Reagan thus appealed to the American people, as he has done on other occasions, to apply pressure on Congress to enact both his spending and tax cuts by August.

At this first meeting with the media since the attempt on his life, President Reagan asked directly for voter assistance to get his top-priority domestic program into law. In view of congressional foot-dragging and second guessing, the president was completely right in appealing to the voters who elected him. There already are signs that he will get what he's demanding, after assailing congressional dilly-dallying as "unconscionable."

In an unusual move, the president extended the usual half-hour televised press conference to charge shaggy, experienced House Speaker Thomas P.(Tip) O'Neill with "sheer demagoguery." This was in reply to the speaker's remark that neither the president nor his advisers understand working people.

I was somewhat surprised at Tip's shooting from the hip that way, as only a couple of weeks ago he told fellow Democrats that they better go along with tax and spending cuts.

Editor's Report

He's an old hand and knows better than to think voters' memories are THAT short.

His original outspoken views so enraged many partisan Democrats that Tip, after hearing complaints that he was losing touch with reality and maybe needed a replacement, apparently began to trim his sails. He took up sniping at the Reagan program in a lukewarm manner and

Spring finally over

Summer officially sweeps through the Permian Basin shortly after noon today, and temperatures representative of the season should accompany it.

The high is expected to reach the century mark under fair skies, according to the National Weather Service. Winds are expected to be southerly at 10-20 miles per hour.

The last official day of spring saw the mercury rise to 102 degrees, not quite on the same level as the 107 mark recorded on the same date in 1951. The overnight low of 67 failed to challenge the record low of 53 degrees set in 1973.

No rainfall is expected for the next few days, and the yearly total remains at 6.58 inches.

One cheeseburger, hold the onions?

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — A produce vendor who aroused the ire of neighbors by storing 45,000 pounds of rotting onions in his back yard has been arrested on charges of stealing the onions, police say.

Nezhdet Banushi, 38, who said he hoped to peddle the pungent vegetables to area restaurants, was charged Friday with stealing $9,000 worth of onions from the Commonwealth Fruit and Produce Co. Inc. of Boston, Quincy Police Detective Thomas Healy said Saturday.

Banushi had said he bought the onions for a good price. His neighbors complained the back yard was no place to store 900 bags of onions — especially in 90-degree heat — and said the slowly rotting onions smelled bad.

Day because "I never knew him or considered him to be my father."

Much of her own childhood, she said, was spent living with an aunt and uncle because her mother, an actress, traveled frequently. She only visited her father occasionally.

"I was a little hurt that he wasn't around," she said. "I asked my mother questions. She always tried to be fair and not talk about my father to me. His mother, my grandmother, told me more. I never said anything about him when he was alive. It would have hurt him. But I'm sure he felt badly about it all."

She talked, as well, about the president's handling of one son who embarrassed the admininstration with some business dealings and two daughters whose political views often are at odds with their father's.

Mrs. Reagan said that after Michael, 36, wrote a letter to a military base mentioning his father and soliciting business, "Ronnie told Michael he had made a mistake. I told him he had made a mistake. I don't think (Michael) had thought it through. It's taken (the children) awhile to realize that everything they do now is magnified. That takes adjusting to."

Mrs. Reagan was asked how the president reacted last week when daughter Maureen, 40, took a business trip to Taiwan at the same time Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. was in Peking and when Patti, 28, disagreed publicly with her father by holding a news conference to oppose nuclear energy.

"He's told them that people will try to use them and to be careful of that," Mrs. Reagan said. "It's never entered their minds. For children, it takes a while to realize how much of a spotlight they're in. It's unfair for kids and difficult for them to make their own way."

And slowly, haltingly, Mrs. Reagan described her emotions the day her husband was shot:

"Ronnie was on the stretcher and they were wheeling him to the operating room and we got to the door. I guess I was going right in with him, but someone grasped me gently and said, 'You can't go in.' I kept thinking, 'I have to be strong. I must hold on. I can't let him see me cry.' "

Mrs. Reagan said the March 30 shooting has changed their outlook on life: "You can't go through an experience like that without changing your priorities. You don't get as upset about things that in the long run aren't that important."

This Father's Day, Mrs. Reagan said, she is grateful "just having him here. You're grateful for every day. You can't go through something like that without having it change you...."

"I think it was a miracle that no one was killed. As Cardinal (Terence) Cooke said, 'God was sitting on his shoulder.' Both us believe God has a plan for each of us. And he must have other plans for (my husband.) That is what Ronnie feels strongly."

She and the president planned to spend Father's Day with their son, Ron, and his wife at Camp David, the presidential retreat in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains.

"Ronnie is a sentimental man with his family," she said. "He's touched if they show their affection and respect for him."

Mrs. Reagan expressed exasperation with those who say the Reagans live an expensive lifestyle at a time when her husband is asking many Americans to make financial sacrifices.

"It's not expensive," Mrs. Reagan said. "You economize like everyone else. You don't buy as much as before. I don't buy as many clothes. I never bought as many clothes as people said I did. For (British Prime Minister) Margaret Thatcher's state dinner, I wore a dress that is 17 years old."

Mrs. Reagan said she was annoyed, too, over criticism the administration received when oil executives contributed almost $300,000 to her White House redecorating project shortly after the president decontrolled the price of oil.

"It was unfair to the thousands of people who sent in $5, $25 and $2," Mrs. Reagan said. "Nobody gives them credit. I feel badly for them." (White House records released in March show 240 donors contributed to the redecorating project and that the average donation was $3,427.)

"I've been reading a little about the history of the White House," Mrs. Reagan said, "and I gather any time anyone tries to do something there is a certain amount of criticism."

Mrs. Reagan, who will be 58 next month, was sitting in a small grove of magnolia trees in a secluded corner of the White House gardens. She wore a soft white dress with black polka dots. Big pots of red and pink geraniums banked the flagstone terrace. A waiter in black tie served iced tea.

Though she is an experienced political wife, Mrs. Reagan responds stiffly to reporters' questions. In public, she is not at ease. But in casual conversation, after the microphones are turned off, she laughs spontaneously and tells amusing stories about the family.

"We'd take these long drives to the ranch on weekends and Ronnie would tell the kids he could hear what was going through the telephone wires and he'd make up these imaginary conversations, and they'd be fascinated," Mrs. Reagan recalled.

Mrs. Reagan said also that during these drives, her husband woud entertain the children by making up stories about his previous lives.

"He'd tell them stories by the hour," she said. "Once he was a poodle and he told them all about that life, and once he was a horse."

Mrs. Reagan said that her own mother's frequent absences probably affected the time she spent with her own children when they were younger: "I had a carpool and was on the school board. I ran the hotdog stand at the school fair. My own mother worked until she remarried."

Young Nancy was seven when her mother married Loyal Davis, a prominent Illinois neurosurgeon who later adopted Nancy and whom she considers to be her father.

As a child of divorced parents and married to a divorced man, Nancy Reagan said she and Reagan have always tried to include the children in their activities and that she has tried to treat his children as her own.

"You always try to spend as much time with them as you can," she said. "Part of our courtship was spent with them. They knew me pretty well when we were married.... You try to be friends with them, treat them as your own children with discipline laced with love."

Marriage license refused

SEA GIRT, N.J. (AP) — Frank Lints Jr., 56, says he plans to wed 76-year-old Eleanor Maloney even though local officials have blocked the marriage plans of the two nursing home residents.

The residents of the Crest Manor Rest Center had planned to be married Friday, the day of Mrs. Maloney's 76th birthday. The Manasquan Junior Woman's Club had donated its clubhouse for the ceremony and Manasquan Mayor William Donovan had agreed to officiate.

But Wall Township officials denied their application for a marriage license, demanding that they prove they were legally divorced from earlier spouses.

"But we're not giving up," Lints, who suffers from epilepsy, said Saturday. "The ladies club has promised to help us. They promised we will get married and that it will be a bigger and better ceremony than before."

The couple met about six years ago when they lived in the Amour Hotel in Point Pleasant Beach. Mrs. Maloney, a retired telephone operator, said their friendship grew over the years and continued when they moved to Crest Manor.

Lints said the township told him he lacks proof that he divorced Kathryn J. Dibos around 1954. He said he has not seen her in more than 30 years and that her last name has probably been changed.

"I think she married at least twice after me. They're calling me a bigamist. I guess that makes her a trigamist," he said.

Mrs. Maloney said she must prove she divorced Andrew J. Maloney about 1946 when she lived in Lakewood. Her first husband, Robert S. Lake, died after World War I in a veterans hospital in Bernards Township. She said Maloney died about 1950.

Both said the documents proving their divorces were probably lost when they moved from various residences over the years.

Editor's Report

then levelled the charge that President Reagan didn't understand working folks. Responding to a question, the president observed:

"I'm trying to find out something about his (O'Neill's) boyhood. My family didn't live on the wrong side of the railroad tracks but we lived so close to them we could hear the whistle real loud. And I know very much about the working group. I grew up in poverty and got what education I got all by myself and so forth and I think it is sheer demagoguery to pretend that this economic program which we've submitted is not aimed at helping the great cross-section of people in this country that have been burdened for too long by big government and high taxes."

Speaker O'Neill said later that he had too much respect "for the president as an institution" to call him a demagogue. He added, though, that the honeymoon is over and partisan feuding will now cut through the give-and-take of the domestic programs. The president and the speaker, unquestioned patriots both, have already made up on a personal level because they both know the urgent need to cooperate for the mutual benefit of the country.

In the equally complicated area of foreign affairs, President Reagan, I thought, had quibblers and critics mumbling to themelves. There was the agreement, for instance, for a $3 billion military and economic aid package to Pakistan, designed as a major step to protect the oil-rich Gulf area and Southwest Asia. At virtually the same time, Secretary of State Haig announced in Peking that the U.S. decided in principle to sell arms to the People's Republic of China. These two agreements have already elicited a gusher of threats and warnings of unspecified "consequences" from the Soviet Union, which continues to pressure Poland.

The Pakistan regime, housing hundreds of thousands of refugees from nearby Afghanistan, is in terrible economic shape. It also has provided clandestine assistance to fellow Moslems fighting a guerrilla war against Red army forces that invaded Afghanistan 18 months ago. Fighting rages without let-up inside that brutally torn-up country.

In China, the People's Republic keeps nearly a million Soviet troops tied down on a huge common frontier. The administration just revealed the existence of a joint tracking station in Northern China to monitor Soviet nuclear tests. Militarily, Chinese units are badly equipped with outmoded weapons. Should the Soviets launch an invasion into the Chinese mainland the People's Republic would be compelled to fight an aggressor with guerrilla tactics.

President Reagan declared the U.S. wished to raise the status of China to that of other countries permitted to buy arms from us "but which are not necessarily military allies." Peking's desire to buy isn't expected to be too great in the near future, but it's insurance for China. The Russians see the deal as "warlike." President Reagan asserted that his administration will continue to furnish defensive arms to Taiwan. What's wrong with all that?

In the highly charged fallout over the Israeli raid on a nuclear reactor in Iraq, the president asserted that the "Israelis might have sincerely believed" their action was defensive in nature. While he took a generally cautious line on Middle East policy, President Reagan clearly sympathized with the bombing decision undertaken with U.S.-supplied F-15s and F-16s. I agree with President Reagan's view in this combustible issue. Always remember that Iraq is and has been at war with Israel for 33 years.

Despite arguments that he punish Israel for its audacity, President Reagan endorsed quite a bit of Israel's justification for the raid on Iraq, which it claimed was bent on manufacturing nuclear arms. Having heard assorted arguments from his insiders, the president said thoughtfully — and he chose his words judiciously:

"I do think that one has to recognize that Israel had reason in view of the past history of Iraq, which has never signed a cease-fire, nor recognized Israel as a nation, nor has ever joined in any peace effort...."

In short, President Reagan showed that he has put together an American foreign policy, without regard to whether it upset the Russians on one side, or oil-rich nations on the other.

Friday's U.N. resolution censuring Israel may annoy that small country but the Israelis will surely realize some concession was necessary to our Arab allies in this particular case.

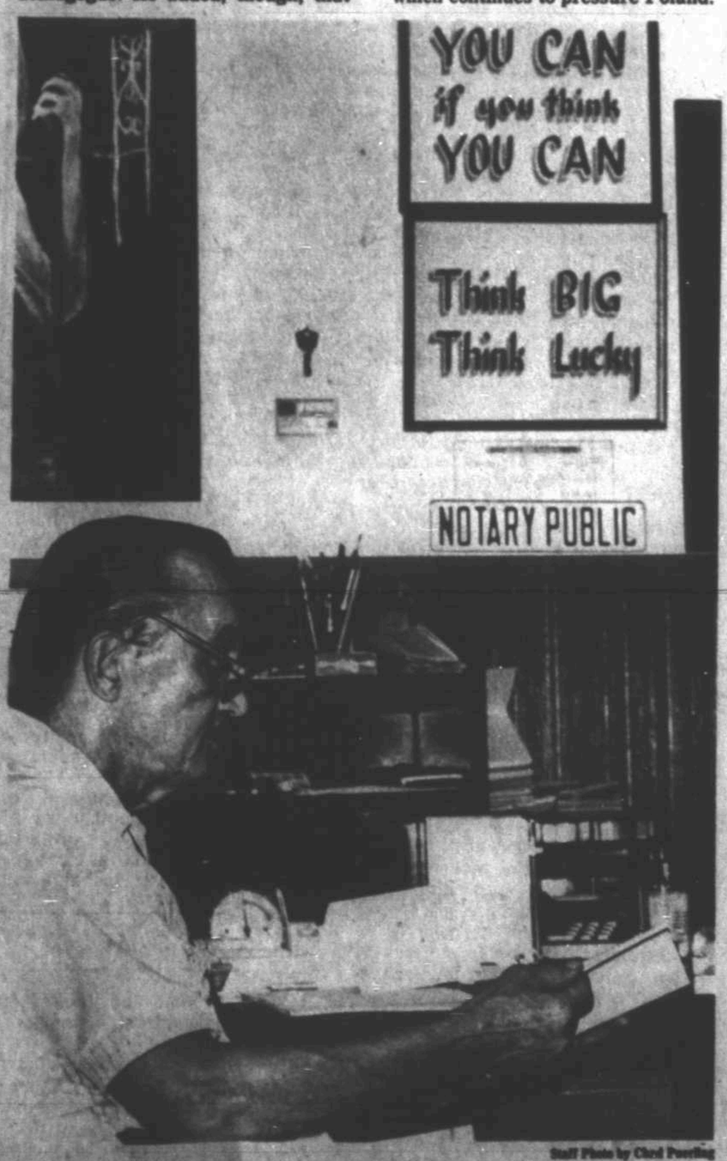

It may come as a shock to some, but to most of us the presidential policies are clear evidence that they're being made in America for what amounts to American enlightened self-interest.

Army commander declared dead

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Army commander Gen. Rafael Hoyos Rubio and 10 others aboard a helicopter missing for two days were declared dead Saturday after the craft's wreckage was found on a mountain in a remote desert area 700 miles north of here.

An army statement said the Soviet-made MI-8 helicopter was spotted on Mogollon Mountain and there were no signs of life. The craft was reported missing Thursday on a flight from Piura, 600 miles north of Lima, to Tumbes, 180 miles farther north.

The deaths of Hoyos and the others were "a big loss for our armed forces and a loss that will be mourned by the government and the people," the statement said. Hoyos was named to the post Dec. 31.

Tony Rogers, owner of Acme Marketing Inc. of Odessa, looks over a booklet of facts on DMSO. Rogers sells a 99.9 percent pure grade of DMSO for $16.95 per bottle. "People are buying it in droves," Rogers said.

could have done something to prevent that.' "

However, the patient still believes DMSO has a place in the U.S. "I would like to see it approved for use here," he said. "I've heard of people using it. It has given me some relief. It dries your skin out and you must use an oil or cream on it, but I haven't heard of anyone who had any other side effects. Well, they say it does give some people skin rashes if they're allergic to it."

RICHARD BLACKWELL of Midland said he got his DMSO from a veterinarian. A former sports referee, Blackwell said, "I have used it in the past; it's been about a year. I usually use it in a case of inflammed tendons and ligaments."

Blackwell said he believed DMSO "uses the blood supply of the body as a healing process. It tends to draw the blood to that affected area much quicker. This helps to cure the problem rather than just relieve it."

However, Blackwell was quick to point out, "It did not cure my heel, but it did relieve it. I don't know how much it did relieve it, but I knew what the doctor would give me: pain pills if it got to hurting and exercises to do to help it heal.

"It's not any cure-all," he said. "But, I never have had any bad effects."

Arlene and Lewis Thomas, who recently moved to Midland from Michigan, also are convinced DMSO has a place in the U.S.

"I THINK IF you're an adult and if you want to take any risk, that's your right," Mrs. Thomas said. "I'd always been interested in it, but I didn't try it until a few months ago after reading an ad in the paper. The one thing, though, that kind of convinced us to use it was that in Europe, they use it on so many things."

They first bought the DMSO from a salesman in Odessa to use on Lewis's hand. "There was a lump on his hand and it kept getting bigger," Mrs. Thomas said. "It was marble-sized and it was painful when he moved his hand."

"It was sore and hard as a rock," said Thomas, a contract welder.

"Over Memorial Day weekend we put it on about four times a day," Mrs. Thomas continued. "And, I'll be darn, in about two or three days, you could see the difference. I think if you use this four to five times a day, it would really help."

After the good results on his hand, Thomas used it on his athlete's foot, which he suffered with for 20 years.

"After one application, his feet don't itch any more," Mrs. Thomas said. "I had a really bad burn here on my hand. I scar very easily, but after I put some DMSO on it, it healed up really fast and you can hardly tell."

THOMAS USED it on a recurring callous as well. "It was a big callous and the DMSO is making it smaller," he said. "I'd had it a long time. I had even gone to a dermatologist and I even had it cut out once. The DMSO just softens it up."

They bought a bottle for friends as well. "He's got a wart on his hand and after the DMSO, layers peel right off," Thomas said. "He didn't think it would work at first — he's not a believer. Now he's using it on a scar that goes across his arm. He got hurt about the middle of April and has used it about a month and the scar's going away."

Tony Rogers, the man who sold the DMSO to the Thomases, has heard stories like this ever since he took on the product.

Owner of Acme Marketing Inc. in Odessa, Rogers sells a 99.9 percent pure grade of DMSO for $16.95 for an 8-ounce glass bottle. "You can't get a better grade," he said.

Adding the solvent this spring to his retail water purifier business, Rogers said, "I'm going stark-raving mad. People are buying it in droves. I've got over 100 back orders.

"I'm selling it as a solvent only," he cautioned. "But, I'm getting miracle cures." People call or come to buy DMSO, he said, and he points out it's only a solvent — but they want it anyway. He said some of his customers who have arthritis have even used the lubricant WD-40 on their joints.

"I'M SELLING it as a solvent, but they're buying it for arthritis. There was this old man who could barely walk," Rogers said, adding the man's knee was swollen and red and he walked with a cane. After the man went home and used only one application of DMSO, Rogers said he came back. "The swelling had gone down and the color was better and he said he threw away his cane."

Rogers, who has used DMSO on his athlete's foot and an itchy ear, also sells two books on DMSO for persons interested in the "miracle cure." "I do sell it as a solvent, but you take it at your own risk," he warns. "I can't tell you if it will help you."

Rogers offers only "glass bottle" DMSO. An excerpt from one of the books Rogers sells warns about the types of bottles.

"The purity of DMSO may be impaired if sterile and hygenic conditions are not maintained in the processing and bottling of DMSO by retail distributors," the book reports. In addition, plastic bottles could cause chemical reactions and contaminate the DMSO product. Glass bottles with polyurethane caps are the best safeguard, according to the book.

Rogers and his customers say the glass-bottled form still smells garlic-like, but there is usually no taste. Other-persons have reported a garlic or oyster taste in their mouths after it comes in contact with their skin.

A MIDLAND distributor of DMSO, Williams Feed sells a 16-ounce plastic bottle for $17.95. "I believe it's sold in different grades," said Lin Boch, manager, adding his product was 99.5 percent pure.

"I sell it as a solvent," he was quick to add. "I do not recommend it for use for arthritis. I've heard some (people) use it on animals and themselves, but not the people I've sold it to."

Boch said Williams Feed has sold DMSO for more than a year. "It sells pretty well," he said. "It seems to turn pretty easy for such an expensive item. I've never had anyone bring it back."

Veterinarians have used DMSO for several years. Vets Phillip Whisnand and Tom Green have used DMSO on their patients for about five years.

"It's an anti-inflammatory agent," Whisnand said. "It's similar to cortisone. It's like some of the end results, but it doesn't have side effects. We can use DMSO just about as often as we like and prolonged use is not a problem like with other drugs."

Whisnand said DMSO could be used only on dogs and horses for such problems as infections, tendon injuries, muscular and skeletal problems and growths. "We use DMSO to take out the swelling.

"A lot of times we don't see instant reactions," Whisnand cautioned. "But, we've never seen bad effects."

To most, yard work is a bothersome chore. But for Ming-Gon Lian of Lubbock, it is a golden opportunity to play with his 2-year-old son, Kuo-Chaing. In their Father's Day weekend wanderings around the back yard, the two found that even a lawn sprinkler can be transformed into a toy to bring father and son together.

Hearing set on redistricting suit

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The new Texas House redistricting plan has been challenged by unhappy state representatives and others who claim it illegally divides at least 24 counties.

A hearing will be held next Friday on a temporary restraining order that prevents state officials from putting the plan into effect until the court contest is settled.

"I kind of figured it (the redisitricting plan) would be tested soon," Speaker Bill Clayton said from his home in Springlake when informed of the filing of the class action suit late Friday..

The suit, filed by three representatives and six inviduals, came a day after it was signed into law by Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements vetoed a similar redistricting plan for the Senate on Thursday, sending that issue to a Legislative Redistricting Board to reshuffle district lines according to the 1980 census.

The congressional redistricting issue was not settled by the recent legislative session and will have top priority in the special session called for July 13. Congressional redistricting cannot be passed on to a redistricting board.

Those filing the suit were Reps. Al Luna, D-Houston; Matt Garcia, D-San Antonio and Bob Valles, D-El Paso, plus Anne Mauzy, wife of Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas; H.G. Wells, Fort Worth; Dwight Christopher, Cherokee County; Seldon Hale, Amarillo; Armando Lopez, Laredo, and Juan Gonzales, Corpus Christi.

George Korbell, director of litigation for the Texas Rural Lega Aid Inc., said the suit seeks a court order declaring the plan unconstitutional and an injunction keeping officials from conducting primary or general elections for House members under the district boundaries created in the plan.

A similar suit after the 1970 census was upheld by the Texas Supreme Court when a redistricting plan set up state representatives' districts that crossed 33 county lines.

Clayton said, however, the state was not under the federal Voting Rights Act in 1970 and federal statutes are involved now.

"I think it's going to be almost impossible not to cut across county lines," Clayton said, adding that the House plan for legislative redistricting is "pretty well substantiated" in terms of population balance.

Luna disagreed, citing his home county as an example.

"It's obvious to me that the (Harris) county line was not cut for the permissable reason — to maintain equality of population and minimum deviation from the standard."

The Houston representative said Harris County could have been split up into 26 districts — all fitting the ideal standard of 95,000 people per district — without cutting across county lines.

"They took 45,000 people out of Harris County," Luna said. "I think the fact that we have the smallest districts as well as the largest in the state shows they were cut off for different reasons. I think that's why the judge issued the temporary restraining order."

Luna said there also were "problems along racial lines" but he did not specify what the problems were and said the suit "didn't speak to that."

Governor signs bill allowing annexation

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements has signed into law several bills by Midland area lawmakers, including a measure by Rep. Jay Gibson, D-Odessa, to allow the Colorado River Municipal Water District to annex additional territory.

Gibson's House Bill 1801 authorizes the district to annex portions of its member cities that have been taken into those cities since the creation of the district.

The bill also expands the district's bonding authority.

The measure becomes effective immediately.

Other measures signed by Clements include:

— HB 1899, by Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, regulating natural and synthetic gas (effective Aug. 31).

— HB 2353, by Rep. Jerry Cockerham of Monahans, anexation of streets, highways and alleys in the City of Wickett (effective immediately).

State Board of Education upholds Canutillo trustees

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Education said Saturday that Canutillo school district trustees were right in firing a superintendent who kept inadequate records on school funds.

The board turned down an appeal by Inez R. Ramirez, who was discharged March 5, 1979. The decision upheld a previous ruling by former State Commissioner of Education Alton O. Bowen.

Bowen's ruling said evidence presented at a hearing showed Ramirez often kept large sums from cafeteria food sales in his office safe. "While held in the central office, travel and other sundry expenses incurred by various school employees would be reimbursed from the fund, bypassing any review of such expenditures by the Board of Trustees," the ruling said.

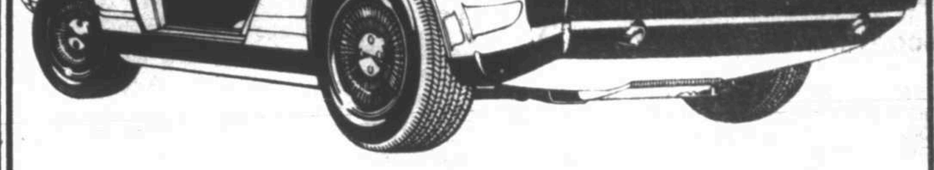

In the 1978-79 school year about $80,000 in surplus cafeteria funds were allowed to accumulate, Bowen's ruling said. "When it was learned that those funds would soon revert to the state, approximately $45,000 of the monies were hurriedly spent on new food service equipment for the cafeteria. The statutory requirement for public bidding was ignored."

Another factor involved in Ramirez's discharge, Bowen said, came when the board learned that a natural gas leak was discovered under a classroom building. The utility company immediately turned off the gas. However, the board was told, someone turned the gas back on at the beginning of each school day and then shut it off after classes were over. When the board learned of the action, Bowen said, the classroom building was immediately closed until repairs could be made.

"It was the opinion of the board that this condition was extremely dangerous to the school children," Bowen said.

Irving couple files $7 million malpractice suit in amputation

DALLAS (AP) — An Irving couple has filed a $7.6 million malpractice suit against five doctors and three hospitals, contending their collective negligence caused a man's leg and hip to be amputated and left him crippled for life.

The suit, filed Friday by Charles Floyd Jones and his wife Jerry Gail, says Jones was admitted into Professional Hospital in Irving in January 1980 for removal of a kidney stone. Nine days later, doctors amputated his left leg at mid-thigh after discovering a blood clot had cut off circulation, the suit states.

Jones lost the rest of his leg and left hip six days later because of continuing circulation problems and concern that Jones was in danger of heart failure, says the suit.

Oklahoma men electrocuted

DALLAS (AP) — Two Oklahoma men were electrocuted when a traffic signal pole they were installing struck an electrical wire, authorities said.

Gerry Pruett, 19, and John Edward Roedel, 28, both of Midwest City, were dead on arrival at a local hospital Friday.

Witnesses told police Pruett was guiding the metal pole onto its base at a North Dallas intersection about 9:30 a.m. when the arm of the pole swung around and touched a power line carrying 7,600 volts.

Roedel got out of the truck to help Pruett, who was knocked "down and away from the pole," when the pole swung around and hit the truck as Roedel leaned on it, said state highway department worker Greg Kuhn.

Texas: It's a deadly place to work, studies say

By ALLEN K. SHORT
Associated Press Writer

Texas, booming darling of the Sunbelt and home of several of the nation's fastest growing cities, is rapidly becoming a deadly place to work.

From the cotton gins of the Texas Panhandle to the oil refineries and skyscrapers of Houston, to the towering grain elevators along the state's gulf coast, Texas workers are dying on the job at a rate nearly three times the national average, state officials say.

"The statistics should shame us all," said Walter G. Martin, director of the state health department's Division of Occupational Safety. In 1980 alone, according to state records, 1,090 Texas workers were killed on the job or died of occupational diseases.

In contrast, California reported 541 on-the-job fatalities last year and New York recorded 813. Both states have larger work forces than Texas, which leads the nation in occupational deaths.

State labor leaders believe part of the problem is lax enforcement of federal worker safety laws by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. OSHA officials deny that, but concede that budget cuts and manpower reductions have left the agency hardpressed to keep up with Texas' booming economy.

Three Texas cities — Dallas, Fort Worth and Houston — were among the nation's top ten construction markets last year, according to the Wall Street financial analyst, Dun & Bradstreet. Moreover, nearly half of all the OSHA safety inspections conducted in the Dallas area are at construction sites, said OSHA's Lloyd Warren.

"I think right now construction and related trades are where we're seeing most of the injuries and deaths," said William Treacy, executive director of the Texas Industrial Accident Board. "There are also a lot of job-related deaths we never hear about, such as in agriculture."

"There are people being shred in cotton gins all the time."

And — at a time when on-the-job deaths are declining elsewhere in America — they're on the increase in Texas, said Martin.

Hard statistics that would pinpoint industries with bad safety records have been difficult to come by since the Texas Legislature, in a cost-cutting move, deleted money from the state budget in 1975 that had been used to provide statistical analyses of the state's occupational injury and deaths totals.

But officials with the U.S. Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics in Dallas agree that Texas has a problem — "a major one," according to BLS statistician Gunnar Engen.

Engen points to the state's bulging file of worker compensation claims as evidence of the problem.

Nearly 400,000 Texans submitted workers' compensation claims last year after being injured on the job. Out of a total workforce of about four million, that means that one of every 10 Texas workers sustains a debilitating job-related injury every year.

"That's way too high," said Martin. Most of the injuries are suffered by workers at companies that employ between 50 and 500 workers, he said — companies that consider themselves too small to hire professional safety engineers.

Many of the state's 400,000 employers are paying a price for their safety records, says the Industrial Accident Board. Nearly half of the 160,000 companies whose accident histories are on file with the board must pay special workers' compensation premiums because their safety records are worse than the national norms for their respective industries.

Texas employers paid $1.2 billion in workers' compensation premiums in 1979, an amount second only to that paid by California employers, said Treacy, the industrial accident board chief. For their money, however, Texas employers provided injured workers with fewer benefits than were disbursed under the California program.

That's because much of what Texas companies paid into the fund was in the form of special premiums based on their higher injury and death rates, Treacy said.

Clements doesn't like way UTPB appropriation made

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Thursday said he was unhappy with several items included in the General Appropriations Bill, including an appropriation for library enhancement at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, but felt that he had no authority to veto the items.

Clements did not like the method lawmakers used to appropriate $50,000 for library enhancement at UT Permian Basin.

"In my opinion, supplemental appropriations for library acquisition should be made through special line items rather than through the diversion of funds allocated through the formula system," Clements said. "I object to this attempt to move funds by rider from one formula line item to another.... I not only maintain that this rider would set a bad precedent, but also that it was constructed in a form designed so as to prevent the exercise of my constitutional veto authority."

Clements also expressed concern over the creation of several new positions within the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, including an assistant county extension agent for Pecos County and an area agricultural engineer for irrigation for West Texas to operate out of Fort Stockton.

"In my judgement, any new positions to be added, maintained or deleted should be a management decision made by the Agricultural Extension Service and not by the Legislature," Clements said.

Craddick's hydrocarbon injection bill signed into law by Texas governor

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements has signed into law two bills by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, including a bill to clarify the Railroad Commision's authority over underground injection of hydrocarbons.

The measure becomes effective immediately.

Clements also signed HB 1349, which amends provisions relating to the regulation of water and creation of water districts.

That bill also takes effect immediately.

Man implicates self in Dallas slayings

DALLAS (AP) — A man charged with two counts of capital murder has implicated himself in the brutal slayings of two North Dallas residents last fall, a police investigator says.

Fletcher Thomas Mann Jr., 20, who is being held in Bullitt County, Ky., on unrelated rape and robbery charges, was questioned by a Dallas investigator about the five-hour ordeal at the Timber Ridge Apartments in North Dallas Sept. 11.

Mann was arraigned Friday on charges stemming from the deaths of 22-year-old Barbara Hoppe and 23-year-old Christopher Bates and the wounding of his roommate, 23-year-old Robert Lee Matzig. Mann is being held under $100,000 bond set by Bullitt County District Judge Fredrick Friske for each of the two counts.

Mann "has been questioned by investigator Jim Gholston at the jail in Kentucky and he has implicated himself in the two Dallas murders," Dallas police Capt. Grant Lappin said Friday. Gholston traveled to Kentucky from Dallas late Thursday.

A second suspect in the slayings was identified late Friday by Matzig, who singled out his photograph from five others, Lappin said. The suspect remains at large.

Two men barged into the North Dallas apartment shared by Matzig and Bates, who were watching a televised football game with Ms. Hoppe.

The roommates were tied with strips of bedsheets while the gunmen raped and molested Ms. Hoppe for about two hours in a bedroom, police said. The woman then was strangled and stabbed twice in the chest.

The men then were driven around Dallas in Matzig's four-wheel drive vehicle and forced to cash checks, police said. About 1 a.m., they were forced out of the vehicle in a vacant field, where Bates was fatally shot in the back of the head. Matzig began to run and was shot in the neck, but crawled to a nearby Bulk Mailing Center where he attracted the attention of U.S. Postal Service security guards.

The assailants had fled, apparently believing Matzig was dead.

Residents oppose use of base as alien detention center

HOUSTON (AP) — About 200 people attended a public hearing Saturday to oppose using Ellington Air Force Base as a detention center for illegal aliens, an idea broached earlier this month by a presidential task force.

"I don't want to see my house robbed or homsexuality brought in here," said Sherry Savaglio, 39, a computer programmer from Pasadena. "If you bring them in here, you're opening a can of worms. I don't want to see my children or my neighbors raped or murdered."

The hearing, called by U.S. Rep. Ron Paul, R-Lake Jackson, follows a draft of a task force report that may be sent to President Reagan.

Ellington, which has served the Texas National Guard and some functions of the Johnson Space Center since the Air Force deactivated it in 1976, is one of five sites mentioned as possible places to detain aliens who enter the United States illegally. The others are in California, Indiana, Alabama and North Carolina.

But White House spokesmen said the detention centers were considered only in the beginning stages of the task force discussions and that they doubted such a recommendation stood a chance of being accepted.

The plan to intercept and detain the aliens was suggested as a means of preventing large influxes of Cuban and Haitian refugees into Florida. Last year, 160,000 came to the United States.

HOUSTON (AP) — Mayor Jim McConn has chosen a Pittsburgh housing official to head Houston's besieged housing rehabilitation program, the Houston Post reported Saturday.

George L. Campbell, who directs housing rehabilitation and new construction for the Pittsburgh Urban Redevelopment Authority, told the Post problems with the Houston program present "a challenge," but said he feels qualified to meet them.

The Post said Department of Housing and Urban Development officials are deciding whether to withdraw more than $2.1 million dollars in federal funds for housing rehabilitation in Houston because problems and delays in the city's program have prevented use of the funds before HUD-imposed spending deadlines.

The Marais des Cygnes River in southeastern Kansas was only slightly above flood stage but overnight and morning rain in southwestern Missouri caused local flooding.

Three tornadoes touched down during the afternoon at Tamarac and Miramar, Fla., and Manning, N.D., but there were no reports of damage or injuries.

Showers and thunderstorms continued over Florida and from the northern and central Atlantic Coast to the central two-thirds of the Plains, and rain was scattered from southern Montana into northwestern Washington.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 54 degrees at Marquette, Mich., and Mullan, Idaho, to 112 degrees at Palm Springs, Calif.

For Sunday, showers and thundershowers were forecast from New England and the northern Atlantic Coast to the eastern Mississippi Valley from Minnesota through Missouri, and over Florida and the eastern Gulf Coast.

Highs near 70 were predicted over northern New England, from the upper Great Lakes into the upper Missouri Valley and over the northern Pacific Coast; around 90 from Maryland across the Tennessee Valley, southern Kansas, Texas coast and central Florida; in the mid to upper 90s over the southern Atlantic coast; near 100 degrees over southwestern Texas, and more than 100 degrees from southern New Mexico through east central and southeastern Calif.

Chapman's defense to center on sanity at time of shooting

By RUTH LANDA
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — While police map out tight courtroom security, prosecutors and defense attorneys for Mark David Chapman say they're ready for a trial that will hinge on whether the 26-year-old former mental patient was sane when he fired four bullets into John Lennon.

Jury selection is scheduled for Monday, but Chapman's attorney has refused to rule out speculation that his client may plead guilty to charges of slaying the 40-year-old former Beatle.

"I don't know and I don't want to speculate," Jonathan Marks said of a news report that Chapman, saying he had instructions from God, has decided to change his plea.

The lawyer said only that he plans to renew his application, denied last week by acting state Supreme Court Justice Dennis Edwards, that Chapman's competency to stand trial be re-evaluated. The prosecution opposes the motion.

"The only issue is his state of mind," Marks asserted. "I'm not disputing that he killed Mr. Lennon ... It was obviously a premeditated act."

Marks acknowledged that "there are many people who believe insane people aren't capable of premeditation." He said his biggest problem at the trial would be "prejudice toward (Chapman) and against the insanity defense. People do not trust doctors."

Lennon, who had spent five years out of the public eye to help raise his young son, Sean, was shot down Dec. 8 outside the Dakota, the Manhattan apartment building where he lived with wife Yoko Ono.

Minutes after the attack, police arrested Chapman, who earlier had gotten Lennon to autograph the cover of his recently released album.

News of the death stunned millions around the world. Fans prayed and sang Beatle tunes outside the Dakota, and at Miss Ono's suggestion, thousands participated in a 10-minute silent tribute to Lennon.

Marks said he expected jury selection to take two weeks. He expressed fears that publicity and emotions about the slaying would pose difficulties in choosing an impartial panel.

Thirteen witnesses are slated to testify for the defense, Marks said. Assistant District Attorney Allen Sullivan plans to present some 35 witnesses, according to Mary deBourbon, spokeswoman for the district attorney's office.

Another witness may be Miss Ono, who was with Lennon when he was shot.

For Chapman to be acquitted, Marks must prove he was "not responsible" for the murder, that he suffered a mental disease or defect which deprived him of the capacity to understand the moral — but not necessarily the legal — wrongfulness of the act.

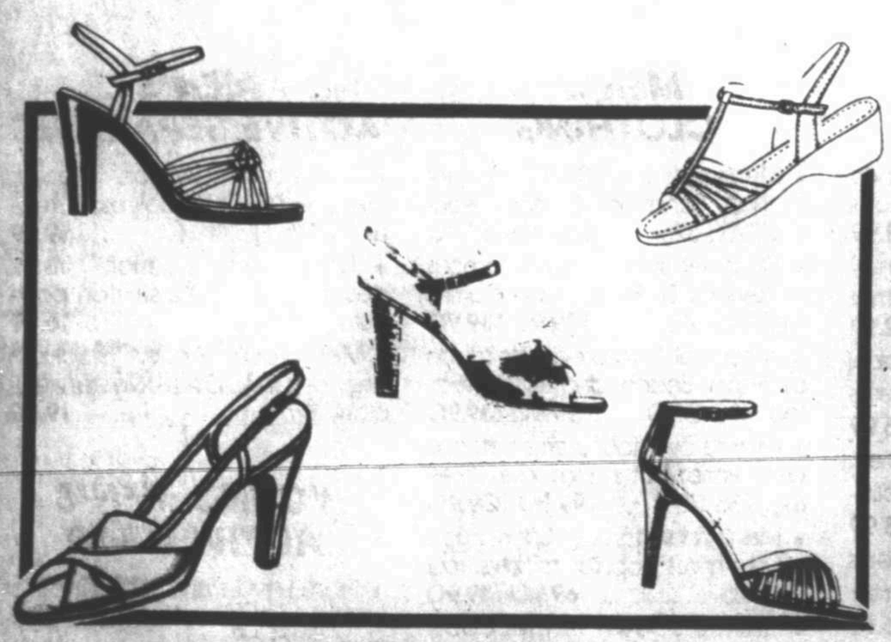

If he is found "not responsible," Chapman could be kept in psychiatric hospitals until he is diagnosed as sane. If convicted of the second-degree murder charge, he could be sent to prison.

Four officers usually are assigned to trials, but 20 more will be on call for the Chapman trial, expected to last seven weeks. All spectators and their bags will be screened.

"Trials like this tend to draw the curious and hopefully the normal, but we can't be sure. We're dealing with John Lennon almost being a cult figure," said William Gallagher, director of administration for the state courts.

Coming vote will tell budget tale

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Much more than an earlier budget fight, the coming showdown over billions of dollars in spending cuts will demonstrate whether President Reagan has a dependable coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats to pass his program of spending and tax cuts in the House.

As Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois is fond of saying, the earlier vote was easy — a contest over a budget outline with non-binding numbers that did not directly affect a single program.

And as Rep. Phil Gramm of Texas, the conservative Democrat most closely associated with the administration's economic program, is fond of saying, this time "we're shooting with real bullets."

Sixty-three Democrats and all 190 Republicans teamed up to give Reagan his largely symbolic early victory. Michel and Gramm concede it will be very difficult to hold to anything like that number this time.

At issue is a package of spending cuts to sharply restrain the growth of federal spending over the next three years. Majority Democrats, working through the committees of the House, have produced a package that will cut more than $37 billion. Reagan and the Republicans complain the Democrats have included several billion dollars in phony cuts and are backing amendments calling for additional reductions of $5.2 billion in 1982 and nearly $20 billion over the next three years.

The fight is over some of the most widely used programs in the country — welfare, food stamps, student loans and Social Security — in which the Republican and Democratic proposals differ.

Participants in these programs live in each of the nation's 435 congressional districts and Democrats are certain to be telling their constituents that they want to balance the budget without making the deeper cuts the Republicans are demanding.

Reagan's argument will be that the reductions are needed to help balance the budget in 1984 and that Congress must live up to the "mandate" delivered in November at the polls.

"Let there be no doubt. We can and will put a stop to this fiscal joyride in Washington," he said Friday as he endorsed the alternative Republican plan.

Despite Reagan's and Gramm's insistence that the GOP plan is bipartisan, some conservative Democrats sound impatient with the proposal.

Reagan won more than 30 votes on the earlier budget contest from the 47-member Conservative Democratic Forum. About half of the members of the group held a stormy private session last week, and one member, Rep. Bo Ginn, D-Ga., estimated afterwards that Reagan might get as few as 10 or 12 votes from the group next time.

"We're still Democrats. I have no interest in joining the Republican Party," he said.

Adding to Reagan's difficulty is the fact that all of the Democrats participated in committee sessions where the cuts were recommended. That means they would be in effect voting against their own work if they were to support the president's package of cuts over the Democratic proposal.

Republicans, too, value the committee system in Congress, and may be less willing to throw out the work of all 15 committees in favor of a plan put together largely by officials at the Office of Management and Budget.

Moreover, some moderate Republicans from the economically-strapped areas of the Northeast and Midwest voted with Reagan in the earlier budget contest, but made it clear they wanted to see some changes as his economic program unfolded.

A main concern of Republican leaders is that Democrats who voted with Reagan last time and want to be able to vote with him in the next fight — over tax cut legislation — might feel they must support their own party's leadership this time on the budget cuts.

Reagan plans extensive effort on budget plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, hoping to win congressional approval of his budget plan on a single ballot, will work extensively this week on his campaign for that plan as well as his effort to reduce taxes.

"The real effort is under way now," David R. Gergen, the presidential assistant for communications, said Saturday.

Reagan spent the weekend at Camp David, Md., and worked on a speech he will give in San Antonio, Texas, Wednesday on his way to a long week nd in Los Angeles and at his ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif.

As of midday Saturday, the president had not heard from House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., about whether the House will vote on individual spending proposals or simply cast one "up or down" vote on the president's entire fiscal 1982 budget request.

On Friday, Reagan endorsed what Gergen described as a bipartisan proposal — although it is being primarily advanced by the Republicans — that would make deeper cuts than the Democratic-controlled House committees proposed in such programs as welfare, subsidized housing, school lunches and student loans.

"There is no question that if the vote is cast for Ronald Reagan's economic program — are you for it or against it — he has a much better chance" of winning, Gergen told reporters Saturday afternoon.

"If there are a series of votes, that raises the spectre of special interests triumphing over general interests," the spokesman said.

Pressed to explain, Gergen said that it would be tougher for a member of the House to vote for a proposed cap on Medicaid spending than for the entire Reagan budget that included such a cap.

"We realize this is going to be probably the toughest fight on the economic package so far," Gergen said.

The budget plans are intended to sharply limit the growth of federal spending over the next three years. Majority Democrats, working through the House committees, have produced a plan to cut more than $37 billion.

Paris won't see its last tango; Council withdraws ordinance

PARIS, Ark. (AP) — They haven't danced the last tango in Paris. The bump isn't banned, waltzing isn't on its way out.

The City Council in this small northwest Arkansas community has withdrawn an April ordinance aimed at banning dancing in local taverns. The controversial proposal had never been enforced.

"No one ever stopped dancing, and no one really thought they would have to stop dancing," said attorney Ernie Witt, who filed a legal challenge of the ordinance on behalf of three local tavern owners and a couple that enjoys dancing.

Witt said Saturday that he was shocked by the council's reversal. When he telephoned tavern owners Carl and Norma Winters with the news, Witt said, "They were raring to go to court.

"They were willing to dance all the way to court," he said.

And it's going to be a long day

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — June 30 is going to be a long day.

Scientists at the National Bureau of Standards here say one second will be added to their atomic clock that Tuesday to keep it in sync with the Earth's rotation.

Atomic clocks used by the Bureau of Standards and other laboratories around the world are much more accurate than the planet's rotation, or solar time, so scientists in 1972 adopted the leap second as a way of keeping the clocks coordinated with the sun.

Teen charged in bombing of car

David L. West was ordered held under $5,000 bond Friday after he was charged with felony criminal use of explosives and falsely reporting a crime. No motive for the incident was disclosed.

West allegedly called police Thursday and told them that an anonymous caller had told him a bomb was wired to his grandfather's car. Police said the bomb, which was detonated at the city dump, was not grounded properly and probably would not have detonated.

Ag employee enters guilty plea

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A former U.S. Agriculture Department official faces up to a year in prison and a $10,000 fine after pleading guilty to charges of trying to pressure employees to contribute to a political campaign.

Kenneth Hatcher, 55, entered the plea Friday in federal court. The former Iowa chief of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service was accused of soliciting contributions for President Carter's re-election campaign.

The 25-year goverment veteran, who has since resigned, pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of indirectly soliciting funds from one employee. Sentencing was set for July 17.

Houston police won't play game

HOUSTON (AP) — It was the fire department versus a team of homosexuals Saturday after members of a Houston police softball team withdrew from a game against members of the city's gay community.

"I was getting calls from all sorts of people telling me it was wrong to play gays and that by playing a softball game with gays we were endorsing their way of life," Jim Hudson, spokesman for the Houston Police Officers Association team, said Friday.

SIGN SEARCHING IS TIME WASTING

After months of searching a young couple saw a "For Sale By Owner" sign walked in, made an offer and purchased the home. It wasn't long before they relized that they not only picked the wrong house, but paid far to much for it.

Talking with their new neighbors they found out that serveral homes that they drove by each day and "loved" actually were for sale. However none of them had For Sale signs in front. This young couple made a common firts home buyer mistake....assuming that a home for sale has to have a sign in the front.

The truth is, many new homes-new listings, soon to be listing or exclusive listings-never get a "For Sale" sign in front of them. Home buying prospects may never see these homes unless they contact a Realtor frist. Time (and gas) are very expensive. Mr. Homebuyer, your frist step should be VIST WITH YOUR Realtor. He or she will show you every thing that's for sale in the area-sign or no sign.

Even Air Force divided on issue

Feud shaping up over bomber decision

By WALTER PINCUS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The pending Reagan administration decision on whether to put all its chips on one new bomber or try to develop two at once has generated a bitter fight inside the Air Force, with Chief of Staff Gen. Lew Allen and his Washington headquarters staff pitted openly against retiring Strategic Air Commander Gen. Richard Ellis and his staff in Omaha.

The disagreements between the generals have gone beyond the bomber issue into such areas as the type of warhead wanted for the new MX missile and who should replace Ellis.

One officer says the men's personalities are so different that they were bound to clash. Allen is the academic; Ellis the gruff, outspoken general on the Curtis LeMay model.

Allen has been lobbying strongly for the two-bomber approach, under which the Air Force would move ahead simultaneously on a new B-1 bomber and a so-called Stealth bomber able to evade detection by radar. Ellis has been pushing for what is now called the one-bomber idea, which is to modernize and make interim use of an existing bomber while moving ahead with Stealth.

Ellis, according to sources, recently asked Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger to name his SAC deputy, Lt. Gen. Lloyd R. Leavitt Jr., as the next head of SAC. Like Ellis, Leavitt is considered outspoken and a hard-charger among Air Force generals.

Allen and his officers strongly opposed Leavitt, and pushed instead for Gen. Bennie Davis, chief of the Air Force Training Command. Like Allen, Davis is soft-spoken and less of an activist commander. More important in Allen's terms, Davis favors the B-1/Stealth, two-bomber approach.

Davis' name was sent to President Reagan more than a week ago, and the White House announced his appointment Friday. Air Force sources said it appears that Leavitt, Ellis' protege, will retire before the end of the year.

Allen and Ellis have also been fighting over the next warhead for the MX intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM). Allen believes the existing Mark 12-A warhead, with its 340 kilotons of explosive power (more than 25 times as powerful as the Hiroshima bomb), would be good enough for the MX. Ellis wants a newer, bigger 500-kiloton warhead that is still being designed.

When a lobbyist for General Electric Co., which builds the Mark 12-A, got the House Armed Services Committee to add $47.5 million for the warhead to the fiscal 1982 defense authorization bill, Air Force headquarters went along with the idea while Ellis argued to have it cut out.

The internal Air Force battling, however, has been at its most intense over the bomber issue. It got so heated in recent weeks that Weinberger's office ordered both sides to stop meeting on Capitol Hill or calling members to get their views across.

Ellis opposed former president Jimmy Carter's decision to cancel the B-1, saying that because the United States was becoming vulnerable to Soviet ICBMs, the best fix to the looming warhead gap was production of a stretch FB-111 bomber.

When Reagan was elected on a platform that criticized the B-1 decision and called for "accelerated development and deployment of a new manned strategic penetrating bomber," Ellis proposed his FB-111 idea as the interim answer while research went on for an advanced penetrating bomber along Stealth lines.

Allen and his staff, however, quickly moved toward immediate production of the B-1 while continuing research on Stealth. Their notion was that any breakthroughs could be added to later B-1 production models.

Ellis, however, criticized that approach, telling questioners that he was afraid so much money would be spent on the B-1 that the Air Force would never get to the Stealth bomber.

As both officers pressed their cases, it became clear there could be no reconciliation.

When the Air Force chief of staff's two-bomber decision went to Weinberger last month, he first learned that his SAC commander disagreed with that approach.

According to congressional sources, Weinberger's staff also found important differences over the likely cost figures and operational dates for the aircraft involved.

For example, the Air Force, these sources said, told Weinberger that the Stealth aircraft could not be available until the early 1990s. Ellis reportedly had been saying that if the Pentagon dropped the B-1 and focused on Stealth, it could have the first of the new bombers by 1988.

To sort out what was true, Weinberger last month called in the two manufacturing teams that are competing for the big Stealth development contract — four of the nation's top six aircraft manufacturers.

Lockheed has designed a fighter-sized Stealth and has teamed with Rockwell to bring it into fruition.

Northrop also has worked on a Stealth design and has joined with Boeing on the project.

House panel opposes sale of jets to Taiwan

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a bipartisan appeal, the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asia has told President Reagan that selling advanced FX combat jets to Taiwan would be a mistake and could seriously aggravate U.S. relations with Peking.

A letter to Reagan released Saturday, signed by all eight members of the subcommittee, also recommended that any U.S. sales of lethal military equipment to the People's Republic of China should be approached "with the greatest caution."

The letter was delivered to the White House Friday, after Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. completed several days of talks in Peking. During aig's visit, the Reagan administration announced that it was clearing the way for possible weapons sales to China.

Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House panel, said he hopes that "the unanimous and bipartisan conclusions reached by the subcommittee onthese critica questions will figure significantly in whatever final decisions the administration makes."

The subcommittee recently held a series of hearings, with witnesses including State Department and Defense Intelligence Agecy officils.

Each of the witnesses testifying, the panel said in its letter to Reagan, "agreed that military tensions in the Taiwan Straits were at an all-time low. There was also a clear consensus that the PRC had no present or immediately foreseeable intention of trying to resolve the Taiwan problem by force."

The subcommittee members told Reagan that after carefully considering Taiwan's military situation, "we have come to the conclusion that it would be a mistake to sell the FX or any other advanced combat aircraft to Taiwan, at this time."

The letter noted that the F-5E, currently the mainstay of Taiwan's air force, is "technically superior" to any Chinese combat plane. It said the United States should extend its existing agreement with Taiwan for coproduction of F-5Es.

Selling the more sophisticated FX to Taiwan, the letter said, "would seem to make even less sense politically than it does militarily." Such a move could "unnecessarily provoke" Peking and impair U.S.-China ties aimed at countering Soviet expansionism, it said.

The subcommittee said it supports a policy of aiding China's military posture by "making available nonlethal equipment and dual-use technology on a selected basis."

"We would recommend, however, that any arms sales relationship with the PRC be approached with the greatest caution," the panel told Reagan.

Considering China's limited hard-currency reserves and massive military needs, it said, "a decision to sell Peking either lethal American weaponry, or the technology to produce it, would do relatively little to significantly enhance the military capacities of the PRC's armed forces, but might well be seen as particularly provocative by the Soviet Union."

Also signing the letter to Reagan were Reps. Mervyn Dymally, D-Calif.; Andy Ireland, D-Fla.; Tom Lantos, D-Calif.; David Bowen, D-Miss.; Joel Pritchard, R-Wash.; Robert Dornan, R-Calif.; and Jim Leach, R-Iowa.

Submarine in port ahead of schedule

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — The Trident submarine Ohio, escorted by four tugs, returned to its home base a few hours ahead of schedule Saturday afternoon following its first round of sea trials.

The 560-foot-long sub docked at its berth at the Electric Boat shipyard on the Thames River about 3:30 p.m. after three days in the North Atlantic during which one mechanical problem reportedly was encountered and solved.

As the tug moved slowly up the river, 15 to 20 small pleasure craft clustered around it and followed it up the river. About two dozen sailors and others stood on the deck of the sub.

About 150 people gathered at Eastern Point Beach and about 50 at Avery Point at the mouth of the river to greet the submarine.

Some carried signs welcoming the sub back, and no anti-war demonstrators were seen.

On Wednesday, supporters outnumbered protesters when the Ohio, described as a floating missile launching platform, begin its maiden voyage.

During the voyage, the Ohio underwent several tests, reportedly including full-power operation of its 90,000-horsepower nuclear reactor.

The submarine, first of its class and the largest ever built in the United States, was designed to carry 24 missiles, each of which can carry eight nuclear warheads.

Bell says agreement near on college segregation issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary T.H. Bell said Saturday he has reached a "near formal settlement" with the University of North Carolina in a long-standing dispute over allegations that there are lingering vestiges of segregation in the state's four-year colleges.

Eight other states face similar government charges.

The North Carolina settlement, if finalized as expected, would put a halt to a year-old Education Department administrative hearing in which the state was threatened with a cutoff of $90 million in federal aid to its 16-college university system.

The government dropped its previous demands that UNC eliminate program duplication between some neighboring predominantly white and predominantly black institutions. Instead, it accepted a commitment from the state to bolster its five traditionally black colleges with 29 new undergraduate and graduate programs by the end of 1986.

The pact also sets a goal of increasing black student enrollment at the predominantly white institutions from the current 7.4 percent to 11.2 percent by the 1986-87 academic year, and boosting white enrollment at the black colleges from 11.2 percent to 15 percent.

Bell told reporters he reopened negotiations with UNC soon after taking office in January. He said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., was instrumental in getting state education officials back to the bargaining table.

Bell emphasized in a statement released to reporters that "these numerical goals are set with the clear understanding that failure to meet them is not automatically to be deemed failure to comply with the agreement."

He said economic or demographic conditions "might cause changes which the state could not be expected to predict with exactitude. This flexibility on the goals will ensure that they are not interpreted as rigid quotas at some time in the future."

While Bell was briefing reporters, UNC President William Friday called the Education Department to report that his 32-member board of governors had voted unanimously to accept the settlement.

But it is still tentative because the Education Department is operating under a federal court order that requires it to give the NAACP Legal Defense Fund 72 hours' notice of any proposed settlement.

In Chapel Hill, UNC Board Chairman John R. Jordan said: "North Carolina will now control the destiny of its own university. That's what this lawsuit was all about."

The government first asked North Carolina and other Southern states in February 1970 to submit plans to speed desegregation of their colleges, which once were segregated by law. The NAACP Legal Defense Fund sued the old Department of Health, Education and Welfare in October 1970 to press for enforcement, and has won several victories in court over the decade directing the government to get broader desegregation plans.

HEW accepted a UNC desegregation plan in 1974 but was forced by court order to renegotiate it. Then-HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. rejected a UNC plan in February 1978, tentatively accepted one in May 1978, but rejected it again in January 1979 and threatened a funds cutoff. That led to the administrative law proceeding, which Bell said has produced "15,000 pages of testimony and which is still not near completion. We desire to bring the controversy to an end."

Bell said, "In the North Carolina case, the rights of all students are ensured within the framework of the law and the Constitution. The state will control the destiny of its own distinguished and respected university. We will monitor progress under the agreement. However, the state will retain control of its academic affairs."

Haig raises possibility of giving economic assistance to Vietnam

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. raised the possibility of aid to Hanoi Saturday if the Vietnamese attend a U.N. conference on Cambodia in New York next month.

He suggested that if Vietnam withdraws its 200,000 troops from Cambodia, one of the aims of the July 13 conference, the United States might support international economic assistance to the Hanoi government.

Haig also said that while the Reagan administration has cleared the way for selling weapons to China, China may not want any arms.

On another topic, Haig pledged the United States "will maintain and strengthen" its military capability in the Pacific region to confront a Soviet military buildup.

IN MOSCOW, the official Soviet news agency Tass said that China "armed to the teeth with U.S. made weapons will pose a threat to neighboring countries."

It said Haig "trails a cloud of poisonous militarist frenzy" during his current tour of Asia, and accused China and the United States of "teaming up" to support various counter-revolutionary forces fighting "legitimate governments" in Cambodia and Afghanistan.

Haig made his remarks in a speech and a news conference here held in connection with a meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, a regional grouping including Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, and Thailand.

Vietnam has already said it will not attend the New York conference on Cambodia but the Reagan administration and ASEAN are clearly using a carrot-and-stick approach to try to attract Hanoi to the conference table.

HAIG SAID in his speech that the United States will not recognize Hanoi and it will oppose economic assistance to Vietnam as long as its troops are in Cambodia.

"We will continue to question seriously any economic assistance to Vietnam — whatever the source — so long as Vietnam continues to squander its scarce resources for aggressive purposes," he said.

Implicit in his statement was the suggestion that if Vietnam does withdraw from Cambodia, the United States might support economic aid for Vietnam by such international institutions as the World Bank or U.N. agencies, funded largely by U.S. dollars.

"Only Vietnam can ends its isolation," Haig said, "and attendance at the international conference could signal Hanoi's interest to do so."

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Haig said he will attend the conference, which 62 nations reportedly have decided to attend.

"The greatest threat to the interest, prosperity and well-being of the peoples of Southeast Asia are the policies of Vietnam," he said.

But he also lambasted Soviet involvement in the region, especially through its activites in support of Vietnam and the facility it maintains at Cam Ranh Bay.

"Let there be no doubt that the United States will maintain and strengthen its own military capability in the Pacific and Asia as a contribution to the security of the area in the face of the Soviet military buildup," Haig said.

He said, "The United States under President Reagan is determined to challenge balatant illegal Soviet interventionism wherever it occurs."

Pope undergoing further tests

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II, looking thin and pale, unexpectedly returned to the hospital Saturday and began undergoing a full body scan in an effort to determine the cause of a persistent fever that has slowed his recovery from last month's assassination attempt, the Vatican said.

Dr. Emilio Tresalti, chief medical officer at the Gemelli Hopital, told reporters the 61-year-old pope's life was not in danger, but refused to characterize his condition.

He said the fever may come from an infection, but it was not certain. He refused to say how high the fever was.

The pope rode to the hospital in his black convertible Mercedes limousine. He stood up in the back seat, blessed and waved to a group of well-wishers and journalists, and walked into the hospital wearing his white robes.

Doctors began the full body scan using an axial-tomography test shortly after John Paul entered the hospital around 5 p.m., said Dr. Francesco Crucitti, one of the pope's physicians.

In an axial-tomography test, also known as a tac test, doctors move a machine down the body from the neck to the feet. The machine produces electonic color pictures of cross sections of the body that would reveal any irregularities.

"We can't say anything until we make the tests," said Dr. Corrado Manni, another attending physician.

Black journalists detained

Agence France-Presse

JOHANNESBURG — South African authorities have detained two black journalists and searched the house of another in what appears to be another crackdown on the black-oriented press and the black journalists union, the Media Workers Association of South Africa.

The latest arrests came Saturday at dawn, when police detained Zwelakhe Sisulu, former president of MWASA and former news editor of the black-oriented Sunday Post, and Wantu Zentile, president of the Congress of South African Students.

Kremlin levels blast at Poland

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin declared Saturday that Poland's Communist Party leaders are unable to handle the political crisis in the neighboring Warsaw Pact state and announced it was time to "pull Poland out of a catastrophical situation."

Leonid M. Zamyatin, chief spokesman of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee, proclaimed in a nationally televised speech that Poland's crisis had gone beyond the "economic field."

"Now the political state as well as the ideological state of the country are in crisis," he charged. "The time has come to be active in order to pull Poland out of a catastrophical situation."

Zamyatin said the Polish unrest — which took another turn Saturday when political activists said they would stage nationwide protests for "prisoners of conscience" — has the Polish and Soviet citizenry demanding a Kremlin explanation on why firmer steps have not been taken to control it.

His comments constituted the Kremlin's harshest attack on Warsaw since the 140-member Polish Central Committee was warned 10 days ago it was running short of time to correct the situation.

That warning was delivered by letter from the Soviet Central Committee.

Left unsaid then and again Saturday was what the Soviets would do if the Polish leadership does not take strong measures in the next few weeks to roll back the liberalizations that have swept Poland since last summer's labor strikes.

The Polish Communist Party is to convene an extraordinary congress next month. Delegates, being elected now in grassroots meetings of the rank-and-file, are expected to ratify the reforms.

The Soviet warning 10 days ago criticized Polish party leader Stanislaw Kania and pro-Kremlin hardliners tried to remove him. Kania survived the attempt to oust him but acknowledged the Soviets were justified in their concern.

Western analysts in Moscow have said the Kremlin may be considering mobilization of the Red Army and other Warsaw Pact troops in Poland before the Polish party congress convenes in July.

The 1968 Soviet-led military intervention in Czechoslovakia came immediately prior to a congress in Prague at which liberalizations here were expcted to be formally ratified.

Zamyatin said letters are pouring into Moscow from Poland as well as Soviet citizens. The writers ask "why the Polish leadership cannot in this struggle fight back in such a way to strengthen the position of socialism and return the country to a normal way of life," he said in the half-hour discussion on Poland.

He quoted a Polish writer as saying "Events of recent months are nothing but a struggle for power, a struggle of socialism against the forces in the country who would like to create a capitalist system and who are hostile to socialist countries.

Israel may not have destroyed uranium

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent
Hearst Special News Service

PARIS — Western diplomats have reported from Baghdad that Israeli planes failed to destroy the enriched uranium which was to have been used in Iraq's controversial reactor because it was not at the reactor site.

This appears to confirm earlier indications that Iraqi officials had hidden the vital nuclear fuel, not against the possibility of an Israeli attack, but to avoid international control over it.

The Baghdad report suggests that the International Atomic Energy Authority may not have been telling the truth. After the June 7 Israeli air raid, it claimed the Iraqi government had been extending full cooperation to the agency's supervision of its nuclear activities.

But in a Paris dispatch as early as last Oct. 14, The Hearst Newspapers reported that the Iraqis had moved the nuclear fuel from the reactor site to an unknown hiding place and were refusing to provide information on its whereabouts to either the international atomic energy body or the French government whose technicians have been in charge of building the reactor. The Iraqi action followed a September air attack on the nuclear plant by unidentified aircraft, believed to be Iranian or, possibly, Israeli.

Little more than a month later, the Baghdad government informed the Vienna-based international agency that, because of its state of war with Iran, the agreed-to controls on its nuclear activities no longer were applicable. Under the agreements signed with the agency and France, the Iraqis were within their rights in doing this. It was a legal loophole that had not been foreseen and one which has since been skirted over by those who have condemned Israel's attack this month.

French nuclear scientists who oppose their government's collaboration with Iraq were the source of the original report about the uranium's disappearance. The same informants now claim Iraq has been secretly buying stocks of uranium from a variety of sources. So much so, that neither Paris nor the international agency was able to keep tabs on how much.

Informants here suspect that the international agency's senior officials have put on a brave face, pretending to a far greater amount of information and control over what the Iraqis were doing than they actually had because they feared weakening their organization's prestige.

Hunger strikers hospitalized

Agence France-Presse

WARSAW, Poland — Three dissidents on a hunger strike in Katowice since the first of the month were admitted to hospital here Saturday after giving up their protest "at the request of the church," Independent Union sources said.

Maria Moszczulska, wife of the president of the banned Independent Poland Federation, Leszek Moczulski, Albin Bialon and Krystian Roczniok were declared in "serious" condition.

They had previously issued a joint statement saying that as of Saturday they would also refuse all medical assistance.

The three, plus a fourth dissident, Tadeusz Kicki, who was taken to hospital on June 13, were demanding the pardon of the brothers Jerzy and Ryszard Kowalczyk, sentenced to 25 years in jail in 1972 for a bomb attack that caused no injuries.

Union sources said the three dissidents agreed to resume eating and enter the hospital during the night, after the secretary of the Polish Bishop's Congress, Monsignor Bronislaw Babrowski, pledged that the church would look into the Kowalczyk case "most thoroughly."

The state council, Poland's collective presidency, discussed the case Friday but simply referred it to a "competent committee."

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP) — An estimated 60,000 protesters marched through this northern port city Saturday calling for an end to the arms race.

CHEDDAR Though Cheddar Cheese was originally made in Cheddar, England, it is now as American as apple pie. Imagine, apple pie served with a snappy, aged cheddar melted on the top crust. The sharp, piquant cheddar zing and the smooth sweetness of apples.

BLUE Made according to an art discovered in France, blue-green mold is carefully nurtured to grow in semi-soft wheels of cheese. Out of the cool, humid, cave-like rooms comes a blue-veined, sharp, pungent cheese.

SWISS —(Domestic or Imported) Originated in Switzerland, Swiss is a most difficult cheese to make. The holes, or eyes, assure that the flavor is just right! Swiss is truly "The King of Cheese." With a mild, nut-like flavor, it seems to complement everything.

MONTEREY JACK Monterey Jack Cheese is as smooth as the gently rolling hills of its Monterey County, California birthplace. Yet, it has a distinctive, mild flavor that can make an undistinguished omelet a work of art.

MUENSTER German origin. Similar to Brick Cheese. Semi-soft smooth with mellow flavor. Some has orange colored rind.

30 killed in Tehran fighting; President remains in hiding

By SCHEHEREZADE FARAMARZI
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Thousands of Iranians battled on Tehran's main streets with guns, iron bars, clubs and rocks Saturday after Parliament began debate on impeaching President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who has disappeared. Hospitals reported 10 dead and 70 wounded, but witnesses estimated up to 30 killed and 200 injured.

Iran's Revolutionary Guards declared a 24-hour "full red alert" to put down what the official Pars news agency called a "revolt." It said "counter-revolutionaries" supporting Bani-Sadr were trying to destroy the Islamic revolutionary regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

Bani-Sadr was reported moving from one hideout to another in the capital to avert arrest by Revolutionary Guards.

A WITNESS in Tehran contacted by The Associated Press from Beirut said three leftist pro-Bani-Sadr groups began demonstrating in various sections of the Iranian capital about 4 p.m. and that the clashes continued on a sporadic basis for four hours.

The witness, who declined to be identified, said pro-clergy hardliners numbering about 3,000 and armed with clubs, iron bars, and stones, battled an equally large group of leftists marching near the main throughfares of Mossadegh and Fatemi streets.

He said Revolutionary Guards, an irregular force loyal to Khomeini, joined the melee on the side of the pro-clergy hardliners and opened fire with hand-held weapons on the leftists, who were also armed and shot back.

The witness said that the Revolutionary Guards fired tear gas in an effort to disperse the demonstrators, identified as members of the Mujahedeen Khalq, Ranjar, or Maoists, Fedayeen guerrillas and its offshoot Peykar. The groups have rallied behind the president, who is in hiding.

HE SAID BOTH sides barricaded themselves behind cars and buses that had been abandoned in the middle of the streets or parked along the curbs. He said some car windows were broken out by the demonstrators while others were shattered by gunfire.

The confrontation tapered off after the tear gas was fired. But clashes elsewhere in the city were reported continuing into the night, although less intense than the afternoon battles.

A statement from the Revolutionary Guards broadcast by Tehran Radio said a 24-hour alert had been declared. It accused the Mujahedeen Khalq, or leftist people's guerrillas, of joining "other counter-revolutionary groups...to counter Islam and the Koran in an armed manner."

Observers in Tehran have been expecting anti-government riots if Bani-Sadr's impeachment process got under way because the president and his supporters have no other outlet for protest.

Egyptian asks OAU to condemn Israel's attack

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Egypt, in one of its harshest attacks on Israel since the Camp David peace pact, called Saturday on the Organization of African Unity to condemn the Israeli attack on Iraq's nuclear plant.

A 1,200-word resolution submitted by Egyptian Foreign Minister Butros Ghali also accused Israel of "procrastination" in Mideast peace efforts and of expansionism.

The other North African Arab countries submitted a similar text to the OAU ministerial council, but their proposed resolution also urged the council to condemn the U.S.-sponsored Camp David peace agreement between Egypt and Israel signed in 1979.

U.S. settlers decide to leave Israel

Agence France-Presse

TEL AVIV — Sixteen immigrant families from the United States who settled in Sde Nitzan Cooperative Village in the northern Negev Desert have decided to return home because of anti-American hostility from other settlers, Israeli Radio said Saturday.

The newcomers, former university teachers and businessmen who immigrated to Israel to live off the land, were told by indignant fellow settlers that the village was fast becoming "a New York neighborhood," the radio said.

Klansmen convicted in plan to oust Dominican leaders

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Ku Klux Klan leader Stephen Donald Black and another Klansman were convicted Saturday of taking part in a scheme to overthrow the island government of Dominica. Jurors acquitted a third defendant.

The verdict came after more than 12 hours of deliberations over two days in U.S. District Court.

The seven-woman, five-man panel convicted Black, 27, of Birmingham, Ala., national grand dragon of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and longtime active Klansman Joe Daniel Hawkins, 37, of Jackson, Miss., on two of the seven counts in their indictment.

Black and Hawkins were found guilty of illegally conspiring to overthrow the Caribbean island, and of violating the Neutrality Act by planning an armed expedition against a friendly nation.

They face a maximum penalty of eight years in prison and $13,000 in fines.

Both Black and Hawkins said they plan to appeal the convictions, and all three defendants revealed a sense of camaraderie with others involved in the plot.

"We won one. Mike's loose," Hawkins said in a reference to Norris.

"But I feel bad about the guys still in jail," he added, referring to others who pleaded guilty. "We have a great bunch of guys."

"It certainly isn't over yet," Black said. "It is my personal belief the Neutrality Act is unconstitutional. It is vague and I thnk the United States government has been violating it for years."

Norris said he was disappointed his two co-defendants were convicted.

"I always felt I was innocent, but I felt they were, too," he said.

Black and Hawkins were acquitted on five other counts of federal weapons violations. More than 30 high-power firearms and a gift-wrapped box of dynamite were seized when federal agents broke up the scheme.

British defense secretary to meet with Weinberger

LONDON (AP) — Amid controversy over reported plans to cut the British navy's budget, Defense Secretary John Nott unexpectedly flew to Washington Saturday for talks with his U.S. counterpart, Caspar Weinberger.

British reports said Nott has begun a campaign to reassure the United States and other North Atlantic Treaty Organization members that coming changes in Britain's defense structure will not damage the alliance.

Keith Speed was dismissed from his post as navy minister last month for talking about the unpublished plans, which reportedly call for about half of the navy's 63 surface warships to be scrapped in order to pay for American Trident nuclear missiles to arm British submarines.

A British Defense Ministry spokesman said Nott was making an informal visit to Washington to discuss plans for the future as a part of regular NATO exchanges.

Thanks to a recent judicial decree, some 1,500 state prisoners will be released from prison and sent to halfway houses throughout the state. Some are expected be sent to Permian Place, a halfway house in Odessa.

Getting out getting easier

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Some 1,500 state convicts didn't need the wings of angels to get out of prison. All it took was a federal judge's decision that sleeping two and three to a cell constitutes cruel and unusual punishment.

The judicial decree was rendered by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice April 20. It set Aug. 1 as the deadline for alleviating what Justice called "disgraceful overcrowding" in the state's 14-unit prison system, which is headquatered at Huntsville.

Among efforts to comply with the court order is an accelerated early release program that will ultimately see 1,500 prisoners sent to so-called halfway houses across the state, where they'll spend up to six months making the adjustment to everyday life.

SO FAR, according to Cecil Simpson, assistant director of institutional services for the state parole board, 440 inmates have been freed under the program, with July 1 pegged as the target date for release of the remaining 1,060 prisoners.

Basic eligibility requirements are threefold: only non-violent inmates are considered; they must have been up for parole review at least twice in the past; and they cannot have had more than two previous convictions that led to prison confinement.

To date, 1,355 prisoners have made the eligibility list, and parole officials have been scouring the state looking for halfway houses to accommodate them.

"The majority of the inmates are serving fairly short sentences — mostly for property crimes like theft and burglary," said Simpson. "There are some DWIs, too. Their stay in halfway houses will average 90 days, but some might be there as long as six months."

SPECIAL COUNSELING for alcohol or drug problems may be required when warranted, and the inmates will be under direct supervision by a parole officer — both in the halfway house and after they leave it.

The halfway houses are governed by written contracts with the state and federal governments and are subject to routine audits and inspections, according to Simpson. The cost of keeping a prisoner in a typical halfway house averages $20 a day, while the cost of confinement in Texas prisons comes to $8.50 per day.

Federal penitentiaries are considered country clubs in comparison to state prisons, and the overall average Uncle Sam spends on an inmate per day is $39.65, say the government's latest figures.

While life in a halfway house is undeniably better than living behind bars, it's by no means a picnic. Says Mike Williams of the Permian Place Community Program in Odessa:

"It's a restricted environment. We know their whereabouts at all times, and they're under round-the-clock supervision. Yes, they can visit family and friends. But they must return to the center at night.

"WE HELP THEM make the transition to civilian life. They have to adjust to jobs and finances. And one of the first steps we take is getting their families off welfare."

Permian Place opened in 1975. It's a private, profit-making organization owned by Mike and Bob Williams, and is the only halfway house between here and El Paso.

The early release program will add eight to 10 new ex-convicts to the center and bring it close to its capacity of 26 residents. According to Mike Williams, only two men have been returned to prison in the past two years because of parole violations.

One factor in that low recidivism is employment. "Odessa has a very good job picture," said Williams. "Employers are very understanding. They're almost knocking on our doors. A parolee can usually get a job without even leaving the center."

IN ADDITION TO releasing 1,500 inmates before they'd normally get out, prison officials are consigning still another 1,500 to tents on the grounds at Huntsville and building new cellblocks throughout the system.

The eight-man Army tents are draped across wooden frames. They have wood floors and provide 64 square feet of room per inmate.

That compares to a total of 45 square feet of space shared by as many as three convicts prior to Judge Justice's order to end "triple celling" in a prison system whose ranks have swollen from 12,215 in 1968 to more than 30,000 today.

By reducing the number of prisoners and expanding the space in which the others are confined, officials say they're not only complying with a court order. They're also relieving tensions that can lead to riots like the one that devastated the New Mexico state prison a year ago.

Bell calling on customers, employees

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Southwestern Bell calls it only a 15.8 percent increase in total revenues.

The public calls it highway robbery.

Last week, Bell officials presented their newest rate increase proposal to the Public Utilities Commission for its consideration and recommendations. Before the PUC holds hearings on Bell's largest rate hike request in its history — $469.8 million — telephone officials have started trying to sell it to the public.

Last week, Bell officials from Dallas and St. Louis traveled to major Texas cities, holding seminars for media representatives and telephone employees. Such a meeting for the Permian Basin area was held in Lubbock with Paul Roth of Dallas, vice president of revenues and public affairs; Mac Geschwind of St. Louis, SW Bell assistant treasurer; and George McElroy of Dallas, district staff supervisor of rate administration.

Roth focused the reasons for the higher rates on inflation, a need for a larger rate of return on profits to attract and keep investors, and to meet competition head-on.

In opening the seminar, Roth stated that "the phone company is impacted by inflation: employee salaries, postage, utilities, expenses are going up. We've faced the inability to keep up with inflation. And that is compounded in Texas by its tremendous growth."

THE COMPANY'S 1981 construction bill is tabbed at $1.4 billion, and not every penny is coming from monthly service charges, according to Roth. He conceded that local rates have gone up in past years, "but much less than the consumer price index. In Texas, the cost of local telephone service over the past four years has risen 7 percent, while the consumer price index has jumped 46 percent."

Under the proposal, a customer in Midland who has one rotary dial phone will see his access line charge increase by 91 percent from $5.95 a month up to $11.40 a month. Then comes the $1.25 phone rental charge to make the basic bill $12.65.

In Roth's eyes, growth in Texas "is an obligation and a mandate to provide phone service to people who come here. We welcome all the growth we can get so long as we can afford it."

The $469.8 million is the "level we need to do the job right to be able to plan for growth. So far, we've been able to get by." Without this rate increase, Roth charged, "we'll fall behind."

Money to supply the demands of that growth must come from somewhere, and in the past it has been investors. But Roth said the low rate of return on their Bell investments is causing some to pull out, leaving Bell with no money.

Geschwind said that at the end of March, SW Bell was making only 8½ percent return while the PUC ruled 10.82 percent would be admissible. "We feel we should get 12.7 percent."

WHEN THE PUC studies Bell's case this time, the telephone officials said they hope the commission will approve a higher rate of return. They cited a recent case in which the Federal Communications Commission ruled the return should be 12.7 percent.

The treasurer and vice president acknowledged that Southwestern Bell, and its mother company, American Telegraph & Telegraph, reported record profits last year. "But the $6 billion reported by AT&T was not enough to attract new investors to the business. It took $50 billion in investments from the stockholders to make that $6 billion."

Geschwind contended that with today's inflation, "record profits don't mean anything at all. You (pointing to the news media) have probably never made as much money as you are now."

While profits have set records, so have expenses, he added. "People can go any other place and invest their money. Our stock used to sell for $64 a share, now it's down to $45. It's dropped because people are going elsewhere."

SW Bell's profit in 1980 amounted to $1 billion, but that ranked the southern phone system third from the bottom in this country, Geschwind said. "SW Bell is one of the poorest earning companies in the Bell system."

If Bell can't get the dollars to serve the customer, ultimately the customer loses, he added.

In answering the FCC's orders to become a more competitive — rather than monopolistic — company, SW Bell's rate proposal includes higher charges for installation. The lesser charges, officials claim, have been picked up for years in the rates paid by all customers.

These unrecovered costs, Roth explained, were achieved through de-

Blacks still feel free to celebrate

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

The last sun of spring set orange and swollen amid Juneteenth activities in Midland Saturday, but it was the dawning of a new era 118 years ago that kept the celebration alive well into the night.

"All persons held as slaves within any State...shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free," wrote Abraham Lincoln in the Emancipation Proclamation Sept. 22, 1862. The historic edict led to the establishment Dec. 18, 1865, of the 13th Amendment to the Constitution, which abolished slavery and made freedom a way of life for everyone living in the United States.

This underlying sense of freedom and hope was evident in the Juneteenth events sponsored by Tall City Lions Club as several hundred persons gathered to mingle with friends, listen to gospel and disco music, and partake of the delicacies offered by concession stands.

The sandy turf of the half-block area soon became etched with footprints — adults' entwined with children's as though a symbolic reminder of the common heritage that spawned an esprit de corps throughout the crowd.

"Say, is everything all right?" cried the disc jockey above the strains of music. He stood swaying to the beat before a microphone on the Parks and Recreation Department's "Show Mobile."

The children flocked near the stage, quaffing cola or burying their faces in watermelon. Others were drawn to the washer pitching concession, as they tried their luck at ringing the elusive $10 bill that tempted them from the middle of a table filled with nickles, dimes, quarters.

One little girl, no more than 3, seemed more interested in the red snowcone that exhibited its own elusiveness. The stiff southern breeze that caught her braids played equal havoc with her cone, toppling it to the dirt. She planted a tiny, angry foot on it, grinding ice into sand, and decided on an alternate method of consuming the next one — fistful at a time, leaving her chin and face dripping red.

"I think we've had a pretty good time," reflected Tall City Lions President L.S. Littlejohn, hunkering on the steps of a building from which the odor of barbecue filtered. "We had a good parade this morning, better than last year's."

The parade began at Nobles Avenue and Lamesa Road, and wound southward along Lamesa, Front Avenue, Lee St. and Indiana before culminating at celebration headquarters.

Later in the day persons listened to gospel and spiritual music during a program which emphasized the role religion and religious leaders portrayed in the black movement. It seemed an appropriate activity for the celebration, as Lincoln had written in closing the Emancipation Proclomation, "Upon this act...I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God."

Persons also took the opportunity to re-examine their heritage, as a special Lions Club exhibit detailed black history and the struggle for equality that gripped generations past.

Juneteenth activities will continue at 305 S. Stonewall St. this afternoon, as a live band is expected to perform, while barbecue, popcorn, cake, cola and beer will be available.

If the $469.8 million rate request announced last week by Southwestern Bell is approved by the Public Utilities Commission, the basic bill for a family with one rotary dial telephone would shoot up from $5.45 to $12.65 per month.

Bell plugging rate hike request

preciation and gave the semblance of a "free lunch" for the installation rates. That will be no more — the public will pay higher installation and monthly charges.

By March 1982, the FCC has ruled the Bell system should have separated itself from the company which makes the equipment, which is Western Electric. Geschwind said customers won't go to a Bell telephone office for a phone, but to a phone equipment store or even a Radio Shack to purchase a telephone. The phone rental charge will be dropped from the phone bill, and the other company will bill for that equipment.

"THIS WILL CAUSE each entity to stand more on its own," rather than having one system's profits cover the deficits in another, the vice president explained.

By pulling out the equipment section and making other changes required by the FCC, the accounting switches will be costly, the officials noted.

Texas isn't the only state in the union to be slapped with a rate increase. Every state in the country is wrapped up in various stages of rate proposals. And that includes every state in the SW Bell system.

The case in Kansas was decided with Bell getting $29 million out of $57 million requested. Other states include Missouri, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Roth noted that the Texas PUC has yet to grant Bell what it wanted. In 1976, Bell asked for $298.3 million and received $57.8 million; in 1978, Bell wanted $214.3 million and got $124.5 million; it 1979, it was $138.8 million granted instead of $243 million requested; and in 1980 Bell asked for $326.3 million and received $114.2 million.

The PUC has a mind of its own, Roth said in referring to its decisions. "They have a very good staff; some are real experts in telecommunications." However, Roth denied that the phone company pads its figures to allow for PUC's reductions. "What we file is not more than what we need; we must document it all before the PUC."

In the past when SW Bell has filed a rate increase with the PUC, the cities leave it up to the commission to make a decision. City Manager James Brown said it is too costly for the city to hire an attorney, a tax expert and rate specialist to study the case and serve as intervenors at the hearing. An option would be for numerous cities to ask the Texas Municipal League to intervene on their behalf.

Under Bell's plan, the charge for a business phone on a one-access line will jump from $15.45 a month to $29.65 a month. Multiply that by the number of lines in an office and add on the phone rental charge, and the increase is substantial.

ASKED IF THOSE rates are passed on to customers in the form of higher prices on products, Gerschwind acknowledged that theory proves true. "That's what you call spiraling inflation."

And the city manager pointed out that it's the taxpayer who pays twice — for his residential service and for that at City Hall.

After hearing criticism that the higher rates may force low-income persons and senior citizens on fixed incomes to give up their phones, the Bell officials said they hoped it didn't reach that point.

"I hope $5 won't be enough to make people abandon their phone service," said Roth. To help with low-income persons, he pointed to a proposed four-element measuring service plan in which the basic charge would be $5.40 a month in Midland. Every local call would be billed based on the distance, the duration and time of day it is placed.

For someone who doesn't use the telephone much, this would be a cheaper route than the $11.40, Roth said.

"But we recognize at some point people may have to disconnect their phone if it gets too high," the vice president added.

But last week's announcement of the proposed rates already has started some people to thinking how to cut back.

One Midlander said he had two telephones in his house and one will be coming out. "I'm taking it down to the phone company and telling them to take if off my bill. And I know I'll be cutting down on long distance calling."

Gerschwind contended the annual rate fight isn't a barrel of fun.

"We're not looking for reasons to raise the rates," he said. "Believe me, this is not a whole lot of fun."

Midland's 'exponential' amazes Bell officials

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Exponential.

In the dictionary used by Southwestern Bell Telephone management, this $100 word means that growth doesn't occur at a steady pace, but multiplies many times. An increase in some aspect of the city will double the growth of another business, going on to quadruple it in another area.

In the case of Midland, though, even "exponential" might be a mild term. A better word for the growth could be "explosive."

When Bell filed its proposed rate increase with Public Utilities Commission last week, they listed the phenomenal growth in Texas as one reason a 91 percent hike in basic residential line charges is needed.

Midland certainly wasn't left off the list of cities in Texas where growth is exceeding Bell's forecasts. In fact, it was the first city shown in a videotape filmed last month that was produced to show the company's employees.

Two local Bell Telephone managers reiterated their problems with Midland's growth, specifically in the area of business phones and switching systems.

Clay Coty, who is district manager of business installation and maintenance, explained that "the telecommunications business is an extremely complicated and technical business" and it's no simple matter to fill openings in this field.

Most of the people in the installation and maintenance area are "employees who work for us 25 to 40 years and retire with us. It takes a long time to build a telephone man. They must be competent in all types of situations."

When Coty talks of "bringing on a force" to meet the demands, it's not something happens happen overnight.

"It's a while before a person is competent," said Coty. "When you pick up new people you have to 'grow' these people" to the point they are competent enough to handle all types of jobs.

The demand for business installations in Midland has jumped 15 to 20 percent in the first quarter of 1981 over the same period in 1980, said Coty. Bell Telephone considers a healthy growth to be 5 to 6 percent and 10 percent "surprising. But with 15 to 20 percent, it's very significant in that everything increases exponentially."

And, he noted, the major high-rise office buildings under construction won't be wired for telephone service until later this year, meaning an even heavier demand on his installers.

"Exponential" fits into the picture when businesses move out of their existing buildings into the new structures. Persons who take over the old buildings want the offices remodeled and that means more work for the phone company, he explained.

Last year, Coty had 16 installation technicians on his staff. This year, he's upped it by 50 percent to 24 full-time persons in Midland and has brought in another seven from nearby towns who have experience and can help with the load.

To bring someone in "cold" and get him or her trained to the point they are at least 80 percent competent takes three years of schooling and work. "It takes 11 weeks of formal classroom training spread over three years," he said.

Getting to the point of being 100 percent competent "takes 30 years and several gray hairs," Coty laughed.

"Exponential" again crawls into the picture when Coty talked of the growth being "capital intensive. More business means more materials and the materials we use are very expensive."

Dave Kibler, district manager of network maintenance, has seen his workload jump three-fold in two years.

In 1979, Bell installers "terminated" 2,000 new customers, or completed hooking them up into the phone system, according to Kibler who oversees the switching equipment in the 915 area.

In 1980, the figure had jumped to 4,000 terminations. And at the rate of intallations this year, the final number should be 6,000, he said.

This growth, according to Kibler, creates two things: It places an increasing demand on the machines to handle more calls, and the number of calls already has jumped 22 percent this year; and creates an increasing demand to terminate new customers.

"To meet this demand, you have to add additional equipment," he said."Growth is accelerating so rapidly, it is becoming more difficult all the time to meet the demand."

Looking ahead, Coty doesn't believe the growth will slow down in Midland. "I'm told we're going to have as much office space in Midland in three years as Fort Worth has now. That means we've got to grow a force similar to the size of the one in Fort Worth."

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Council to consider Airport Master Plan

Midland City Council could go one step further toward deciding how much expansion should be done at Midland Regional Airport when the panel meets at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

The council will consider the Regional Airport Master Plan, which was presented by the engineering firm of Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc., a few weeks ago. The plan outlined three phases of expansion with the final to be completed about the year 2000. Total cost of the package was $55 million.

After studying the Master Plan, the council will consider a resolution authorizing a contract with Parkhill, Smith & Cooper for certain engineering services at the airport.

The council is expected to get started on construction of a new municipal court building by approving plans and specifications for the structure and authorizing the city to advertise for bids. The new court will be located across Texas Street from the Public Safety Building, where it now is housed. Money for the building is coming from Revenue Sharing.

Revising the Airport Plannning and Development Board and redefining its duties will be undertaken by the council.

A contract with the Midland County Tax Appraisal District to assess and collect taxes for the city will be eyed by the council. According to state law, the tax appraisal district will be formed to handle all assessing and collecting of taxes for the various government entities.

A piece of land south of the city limits was purchased recently from Sam Conner and the council will advertise for bids for installation of an underground line to pump effluent onto the farm land and discuss purchasing additional irrigation equipment. The tract is located adjacent to the city's effluent holding ponds. To take up some of the overflow, the city has been irrigating nearby alfalfa with the treated sewage.

In other action, the council will consider establishing a continuous left-turn lane on A Street from north of Illinois to south of Wall Avenue, award a bid for a generator for the Emergency Operating Center, alter the meter cost and time limits on metered parking spaces downtown, and execute a contract with Midland Sports, Inc., for an additional three years at Cubs Stadium.

Because some residents in the north part of Midland that was annexed last year had raised questions about street addresses, the council at 4 p.m. will hold a hearing to consider changing the addresses along Solomon Lane and Carol Lane between A Street and State Highway 349.

County Commissioner's Court

The Midland County Commissioners' Court, which last February appointed a blue-ribbon committee to recommend building expansion proposals for county government, is to hear the committee's two-fold report in the commissioners' 10 a.m. Monday meeting in the courthouse.

The ad hoc committee, headed up by Midland lawyer John Hyde, last Thursday voted to recommend two proposals to the commissioners to solve the county's need for more space.

—Raze the downtown courthouse, and in its stead, build a multi-story city-county government building.

—Or, build a multi-story wrap-around building replete with automobile parking and offices on the west, north and east sides of the five-story courthouse.

The ad hoc committee did not discuss financing.

The committee concept was unanimously approved by the commissioners on Feb. 9, and appointments to the committee were made Feb. 23.

"I think this (committee) is essential to get citizen input to share the responsibility with us," Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis had said in endorsing the committee.

In recent years, the Commissioners' Court has considered and labored over building a Courthouse Annex about that segment of Baird Street between Texas and Illinois avenues two blocks east of the downtown courthouse. In considering the plan, the commissioners contemplated the selling of the old two-story Courthouse Annex at 218 W. Illinois Ave. and using funds from that sale to complement financing of the proposed annex. The existing annex is the former Superior Oil Co. building, which the county purchased in 1964 for $125,000.

Serving on the ad hoc committee were Hyde, chairman, and members Tom Reynolds, Gregory Wright, Reagan Legg, Roy Graham, Clark Moreland, Freddie Nelms, Charles Priddy and Bill Heck.

In other business, the commissioners on Monday are to:

—Consider a report from the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission on the 1980 data from the U.S. Bureau of the Census for redistricting the four commissioners' precincts.

Postal Service lists passport guidelines

For future travelers to foreign countries, the U.S. Postal Service has announced several guidelines for obtaining a passport.

The applicant must have a certified copy of his birth certificate on which the seal can be felt. A "Certification of Birth" issued by the hospital where the applicant is born is not deemed acceptable as evidence of citzenship.

The post office suggests applicants check their birth certificates in advance of their departure date at the Passport Application Acceptance Facilities, located at the Main Post Office, room 114 or the District Clerk's office in the County Court House.

Birth certificates which were sufficient for entrance into school, the military service or were acceptable for Social Security benefits may not be acceptable for a passport. Furthermore, some documents which state "can be used to obtain passport" are not acceptable.

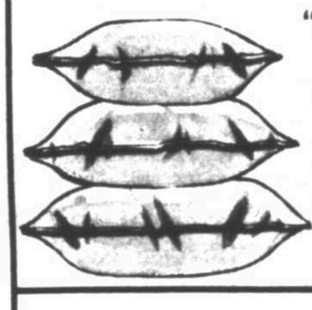

In obtaining a passport, two pictures also are required. These must be recent pictures of a specific size and on a specific type of paper. Black and white pictures are acceptable and must be made by a commercial photographer who knows the required specificaions.

Pictures must by 2 inches by 2 inches. If pictures do not meet this standard, they must be trimmed to the exact size.

Five weeks is currently required for passport applications to be processed.

Odessa man arrested in connection with accidents

An Odessa man was taken into custody by Midland Police Saturday night in connection with two traffic accidents, one of them reportedly a hit and run.

Formal charges of DWI are expected to be filed later.

A Midland driver reported to police officials early Saturday night that her vehicle was victimized by a hit and run in the 2500 block of West Front Ave. The car which fled the scene was described as a 1974 Pontiac LeMans.

At 8:05 p.m. a 1974 Pontiac Lemans was involved in a collision at 4604 Thomason with a legally parked car owned by Shirley Fox, according to investigating officers.

Grass fire doused easily

Midland Fire Department battled a grass fire Saturday afternoon near Warfield Truckstop at FM 1788 and Interstate 20.

Two trucks and four firemen were summoned to the scene at 1:44 p.m. and spent less than 13 minutes in extinguishing the blaze, according to an MFD report.

Two teenagers drown

MEXIA, Texas (AP) — At least two of three teenagers who had been arrested during a "Juneteenth" celebration died when one of them jumped from a sheriff's boat, causing it to overturn in a lake near this Central Texas town, officials said Saturday.

Deputy Dave Gillian said the bodies of Carl Baker, 19, and Anthony Freeman, 18, both of Mexia and described by relatives as life-long friends, were found in Lake Mexia Saturday.

The third man, Steve Booker, a Dallas man who had lived in Mexia and was friend of the two victims, remained unaccounted for Saturday, deputies said.

Although law officers continued to drag the lake after the first two bodies had been recovered, officials said Booker may have been able to swim to shore and escape in the nearby woods.

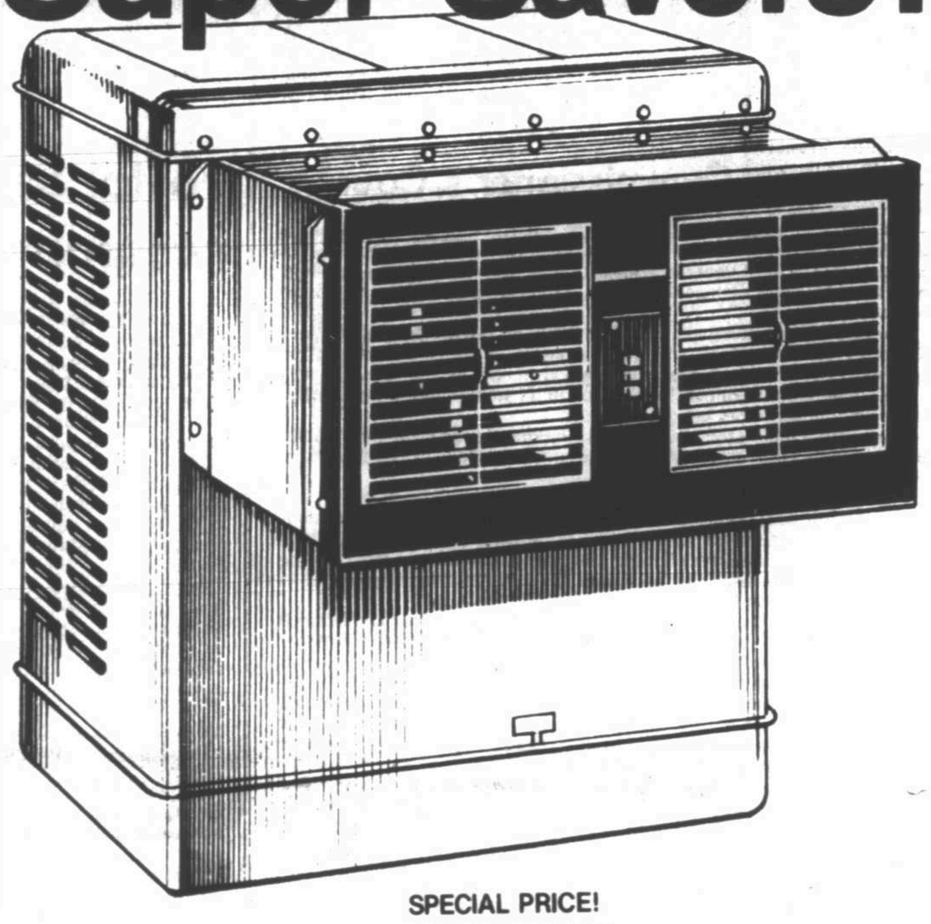

Limestone County Deputy Lee Turrubiarte said Saturday that Deputies Kenneth Archie and Kenny Elliot were taking the three men across the lake by boat when the mishap occurred about 11 p.m. Friday.

He said Booker apparently jumped from the boat when it was about 75 yards from shore near a bridge, and the two deputies jumped in after him, capsizing the boat.

He said witnesses at the scene told officers Booker fled into the woods.

'Those were the days' for work (and play) in baseball league

"They (Monarchs) traveled all around. They beat us bad. We were just a group of amateurs, and they were full-blown professionals."
— Bennie Harrison

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

"Those were the days, my friend," goes the nostalgic song. And so, those good old days did end for many.

For sure.

Just as sure, there's this fellow, Bennie Harrison, who has a "good old day" everyday and works like the dickens making each day worthwhile.

That's his nature.

He chaws on cigars, rarely smokes them.

And, while he was preparing barbecue for the Juneteenth celebration this weekend, Harrison talked in bits and pieces about those memorable days when he played and managed semi-professional baseball in Midland.

WE PLAYED everywhere (in the Southwest)," said Harrison, even as he was chomping on the cigar and, while his sidekick, Lester Davis, was trimming the cabrito and beef barbecue at the Tall City Lions Club Den, which was the headquarters for Midland's Juneteenth — the Texas version of Emancipation Day — this weekend.

Harrison, who must have felt "at home" on first base, was player-manager for the Midland Black Indians baseball team from 1948 to 1953.

"We had a winning season every season," he boasted. That's the way it was.

"We played Kermit all the time," Harrison said. "They had good teams in the oil fields."

The Kermit Yellow Jackets and the Jal Tigers were two of the few "white" teams the Indians went up against.

Mostly, the Indians played other black teams, such as the San Angelo Sheepherders, the Big Spring Steers, the Pecos Eagles, the Odessa Oilers and others buried in memories and in the unwritten pages of black history.

"Some of them other teams had whites on them," he said.

Harrison joined the baseball team in 1947, when it was called the Midland Skyscrapers, owned and managed by Marshall King. Back then, Midland and its pioneer skyscraper, The Petroleum Building, was the Tall City.

Harrison fondly remembers meeting Ernie Banks, the shortstop and first baseman who became known as "Mr. Cub" when he played for the Chicago Cubs.

And, just for fun, Harrison teamed up with "boys all around" to form an all-star team and played the Kansas City Monarchs at San Angelo. Cool Papa Bell was the Monarchs' famed centerfielder.

"They traveled all around," Harrison said of the black Monarchs, whom he called "barnstormers."

"Aw," he said, "they beat us bad. We were just a group of amateurs, and they were full-blown professionals."

THE INDIANS played here and there.

"We didn't have no schedule made out," said the personable Harrison.

Harrison has lost most all of his uniforms, gloves, bats, shoes and memorabilia throughout the years and to the Little League, which he coached for 16 years after he "quit playing. I gave all my gloves and shoes and everything else away."

What he does have, aside from his memories, which don't seem to give him the blues, are a couple of photographs in the Lions Den. He's pictured with Marshall King and teammates Gene Grant, Frank Blaylock, A.L. Brown, Yancey Batie, Perry Lampkin, James Marshall, George Black, an Odessa fellow named "Soap," Johnny Henderson, who was the "utility man," and another fellow, "Stoney, and John Hall.

Hall was the team's pitcher.

"Yeah, he was one of the best," Harrison said of Hall. "He was like Satchel Paige." Paige was a black pitcher who played on touring Negro teams and teams in the Negro minor league before blacks broke into the major league. He was named to the National Baseball Hall of Fame.

In another photograph, Harrison is pictured with Louis Richardson, W.A. Moseley and Gene Grant.

NATURALLY, baseball wasn't — and isn't — Harrison's sole reason for being alive. He worked, worked, worked and, just as he does today, is still a workhorse honestly working and toiling.

Midlander in Profile

"He's busy all the time," said his wife, Willie Mae, who hails from Roxton in Northeast Texas. "He works all the time."

Occasionally, he does find respite.

"He goes to church some time," said the missus, "but he plays more golf."

And he earns his livelihood by being the bellhop at the Midland Hilton and by working as a handyman for Barbara Faye Cowden of the ranching clan.

Years ago, he was a cleaning man for Excel-Sure Cleaners in downtown Midland, drove a taxi cab "off and on" for 22 years, and "ran a grocery store out in the flats for 14 years."

"I'm a jack of all trades."

Before Harrison settled down in Midland in the late 1930s, he was graduated from high school in Bryan in 1934.

For awhile, he drove a car for hire. He fondly recalls those days.

"I was chauffeuring for a white guy named Roberts. He was a button salesman.

"He wouldn't drive more than 40 miles an hour," Harrison said in bemusement of the salesman, who reasoned, "'If we don't get there one day, we'll get there the next.'"

As chauffeur, Harrison earned $8 a week, and "I had to pay my own expenses. But I enjoyed it — lots of experience. I had to sleep in the car lots of nights."

He gave up that life, though, climbed aboard a locomotive passenger train, and set out for West Texas and Midland.

Harrison lives today like he lived in the past: busily and with sense and purpose.

"Yeah," he said, "I always keep busy."

Harry Schroeder and Midlander Kelly Moore look over photos from Miss Moore's visit to the Schroeder household in Germany last summer as a foreign exchange student. Schroeder returned the favor by visiting Midland after a tour through the United States. He will be returning to Germany today.

German man visits Midland girl

By DORIAN MARTIN
Staff Writer

The travels of Harry Schroeder were similar to those of any tourist in a foreign country. However, his trip had one difference — it included a stop in Midland to visit Kelly Moore, a foreign exchange student who lived with the Schroeder family in Germany last summer.

Miss Moore joined the Schroeders in Celle, West Germany, last summer. "It was with Youth for Understanding," she explained. She stayed in Europe for nine weeks and described it as "a most enjoyable time."

Initially, there was a language barrier. "When they picked me up at the train station, I could count and say hello and goodbye in German, and that was about all," she recalled. She still is taking lessons. "It's a hard language, but I'm learning it."

After arriving in Celle, the Schroeders took Kelly to Italy, via Switzerland and Austria.

The experience with her German family was unique. "It's not like being a tourist. I lived with them," she explained. "You learn to adapt to their lives."

This included taking showers only twice a week as well as learning a new way to hold a fork and knife, which the Midlander found "so much more sensible."

She found many differences in European life. "One of the major ones is whenever you meet someone, you hold out your hand and greet them," Miss Moore said. The food was good too — she gained 17 pounds during her stay.

Schroeder is finding that American people and food are different, too. "The first difference is the food and the restaurants are very, very different, and secondly, everybody in America is on a first-name basis. The people in the states are more open" and nicer to foreigners.

On his return trip, his suitcase will be full. "He's carrying a lot more than he came with," said Lee Bondurant, a family friend who served as an interpreter. Besides the souveniers, Schroeder will be leaving America with a lot of memories.

Schroeder explained that many Germans think most Americans are millionaires or gangsters, but he now knows that it is not so.

He rented a car to see the U.S., combing the western part of the country, seeing the Grand Canyon, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, Sacramento and San Francisco.

He is amazed at how inexpensive American products are, noting that gas in Germany costs well over $3 a gallon. German food also is more expensive.

While in San Antonio, Schroeder came face to face with a tarantula and, while camping in the Hill Country, he found a swarm of spiders underneath a picnic table.

In Midland he witnessed his first baseball game, receiving an autographed ball from the Midland Cubs as well as an ovation from the spectators.

Schroeder's visit with Miss Moore and her family has given him a broader taste of American life. He has learned to "kicker dance," donning the traditional western garb. He has tasted whiskey and margaritas, as well as barbecue, Mexican food and chocolate chip cookies.

He's also tried ice in his drinks — another new experience for him — as well as a glass of water with his meals.

Convenience stores have bewildered Schroeder, as has American television. TV programs in Germany do not start until 5 p.m. and are, for the most part, commercial free.

Schroeder returned to Germany last week to his wife, three daughters and two grandsons. He plans to house another exchange student, adding that as a result of Miss Moore's stay, "We had a good time and became good friends."

He hopes someday to retire in America so he can show his wife, Christa, the country.

And Kelly also hopes to resume her travels. She wants to take a bicycle-tour through Europe sometime soon.

Many lawyers shelve idea of using library

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Midland County Law Library is about as popular with lawyers as dull scalpels are to surgeons.

Under the circumstances, they had rather not bother with it.

The library, relegated to the basement of the courthouse in 1977, is in cramped quarters in the rear of Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield's office.

The 5,000-plus volumes are stashed, as if in storage, where license plates and records used to be stored en masse. Some still are.

"It's a nightmare; it stinks," said District Attorney Vern Martin, whose staff uses the basement library despite its inconvenience. His office is on the fourth floor.

"It's incredible," the DA said of the library. "Ask the judges."

Martin figures that library use has waned, since the books were moved out of reasonable reach four years ago.

The library was shifted to the basement from the fourth floor to make compacted space for 318th State District Courtroom and for Judge Joseph Mims. Judge Mims, who has since retired and who was succeeded in 1978 by former County Judge Barbara Culver, and his courtroom and chambers were moved down the fourth-floor hallway to make way for the 238th State District Courtroom and its first judge, Vann Culp, in 1977.

THE LAW LIBRARY was displaced due to lack of space. It had been adjacent to the District Attorney's Office.

Once again, the law library came under attack, when the Midland County Commissioners' blue-ribbon ad hoc committee on county government expansion last week reviewed the increasingly cramped courthouse.

Committee chairman John Hyde had asked County Attorney Robert Rendall to consider turning the courthouse strictly into what its name implies: a house solely for the courts and adjunct functions, namely that of the county and district judges, prosecutors, county and district clerks and their staffs.

"I think it'd end up being so confusing," Rendall said of dividing up records and of removing non-judicial records from the courthouse.

Suddenly, the law library sneaked into the exchange.

"That doesn't take care of the County Law Library, which is almost useless," said Hyde, a lawyer who has had occasion to use the library.

A third attorney, Reagan Legg, assaulted the library.

"I can't find them (books), and if I find them, I can't reach them," he lamented.

The virtual rat hole that is the law library is so cramped and narrow-aisled that 6-foot-9 Midland attorney Al Walvoord can't "fold" himself down far enough to reach a bottom-shelf book.

"I don't mean to criticize the commissioners," said Legg, "but it (the law library) is supposed to be a useable thing, and it isn't."

THERE'S MORE criticism coming.

The tax assessor-collector would like to get rid of the books, so that her office can have more storage space or convert the space to more work area.

"It's not used very much," Ms. Shuffield said of the law library. "It's used some.

"I don't have anything to do with that thing," she said. "I refuse to. People can walk in and walk out. It's useless; no one maintains it. Some big, fat attorney who has a weight problem can't use it."

WOODY LEVERETT, who has no weight problem, has some trouble using the library to the fullest. He's an assistant county attorney and is the official law librarian when time allows.

One aisle is so narrow that Leverett has to turn sideways to enter it.

"I call this the Bob Parks Memorial Aisle," Leverett mused. "He couldn't get down the aisle. He was pretty hefty."

There's room for the library in the hallways, but the temptation of thievery within the profession might be heightened.

"There's a lot of volumes missing," said the pseudo-librarian. "I'm not accusing lawyers of being theives."

A hallway is no place for library, anyway. Besides, it would point to cramped quarters and would make for easy picking by book borrowers and takers.

Offices of Justices of the Peace Bob Pine and Charlie Sprayberry and Constable Tom McGinnis are full and have no space for books and shelves.

Sheriff Dallas Smith and his help haven't space for law books, though the sheriff wants his deputies to know the law better than any jailhouse lawyer.

The first-floor dual office of County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry is already short of space. PBX operators June Davis and Sonya Scholl are crowded in.

The second-floor already has more functions and people than it has space. It's home base for Commissioners Durward Wright, Charlie Welch, C. DeWayne Davis and Win Brown; County Judge Bill Ahders and County Court-at-Law Judge Willie DuBose and their staff, namely legal secretary June Ocker; County Attorney Robert Rendall and staff; Treasurer Dee Thompson and Auditor Johnnie Thompson and their staffs, and County Attorney Investigator Charlie Jones.

The third floor has fewer offices and bustling people, but is equally cramped. District Clerk Madge Wallis has more people than desks and is sighing for more room. Judge Pat Baskin of the 142nd State District Court has adequate chambers and courtroom with an ample spectators' gallery. His court reporter, Jerry Lancaster, is getting boxed in by sophisticated equipment, and Baskin's secretary, Barbara Wade, is officing in a witness room until her office can be carved out of a niche in the clerk's office.

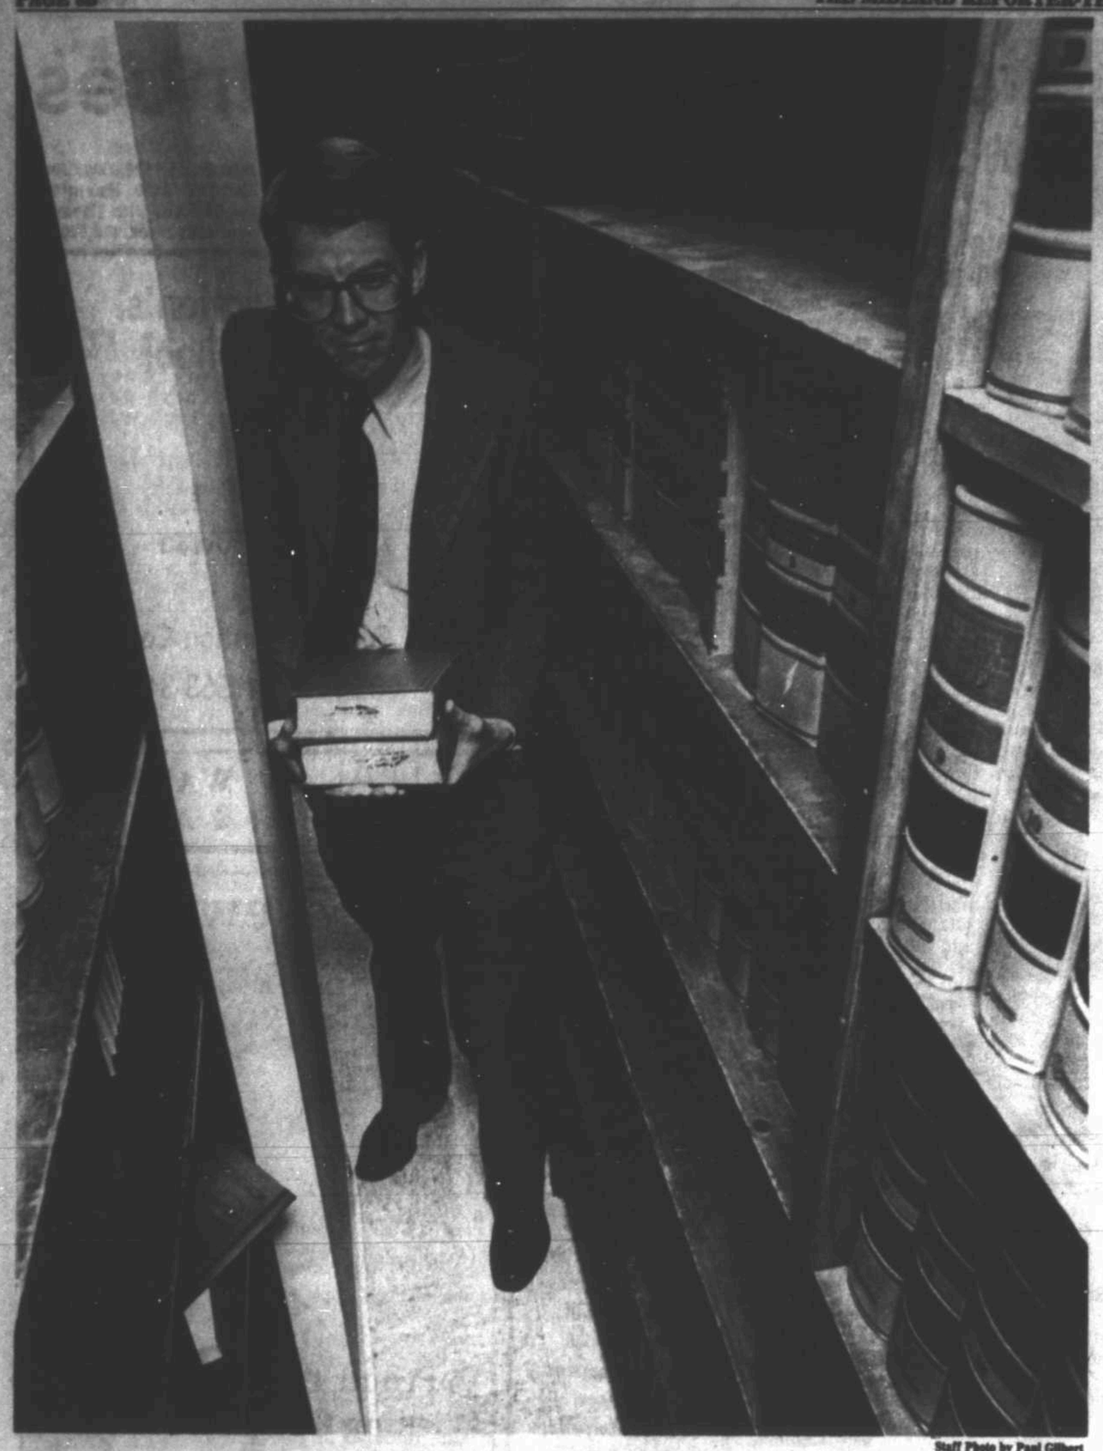

The fourth floor, where the hectic level rates with the second floor, is vitually busting out. District Attorney Martin has far more assistants prosecutors (four) and more investigators (two) and aides (five) than he has room. Judge Barbara Culver of the 318th State District Court has an extremely heavy and busy docket and a courtroom so confining that it barely has room for witnesses. Her court reporter, Mickey Chamberlin, has about as much working space as the judges.

Judge Vann Culp of the 238th State District Court has far more room, as does his court reporter, Jerry Shortes. But they haven't space for a law library.

Then, there's the sheriff's jail on the fifth floor.

But the sheriff's doesn't want books up there. Prisoners might get too many ideas.

The library becomes a trapped-in outcast.

The Midland County Law Library puts the squeeze on Woody Leverett, and he's supposed to take care of it. Leverett, an assistant county attorney and keeper of the county's law books, laments the situation: more books than room.

Champ chosen

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Racing fans, take note — there's a new name in the World Champion Armadillo record books.

"Greased Lightning," a rookie to the World Champion Armadillo Race here, zipped down the 40-foot grass track in three seconds flat Saturday, shattering the old world mark of 3.5 seconds and defeating "Adversary Roadomontade," the title holder for the past three years.

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) — A Southern Pacific rail line was reopened Saturday after 20 cars of a 93-car freight train derailed Friday, sending empty tanker and container units sprawling along both sides of the track.

Thirteen of the cars were empty, a Southern Pacific spokesman said. Five contained liquified petroleum gas and one was loaded with the chemical dichloroaniline.

Bart said there were no injuries and no reports of leaks from the cars carrying liquids. Most of the cars remained upright after leaving the track, he said.

The train was en route from Pine Bluff, Ark. to Houston and was six miles south of Nacogdoches when the derailment occured about 2:03 p.m. Friday.

Thrills, boredom fill 'Oasis Project'

David Stuart Arthur
Sword and Stone Press
Venice, California
Fiction

This book deals with the future via its author, David Stuart Arthur, a graduate of Southern Methodist University in Dallas with a degree in finance and economics and a master's in fine arts. A Texan by birth who was raised in Dallas, Arthur requested various Texas publications to review his first novel.

Currently living and working in Los Angeles as a television and screen writer-producer, Arthur's previous writing has been in the area of feature films and television. This may explain the book's dangling conclusion, which leaves the door open for a sequel.

The first chapter — six pages — of David Stuart Arthur's novel yanks the reader into the book's action. From that point the book vascillates between enticing and boring the reader.

WHILE PARTS of the book are well written, other passages are stilted, wordy and leave the reader with the feeling the author is writing about something he does not know and understand from the inside out, but rather has a cursory knowledge of.

"He followed a graceful staircase up through an arched entrance onto a partially covered terrace which opened onto the water. The moon painted the sea dramatically with a wide swatch of pale yellow across the firmament. Gas torches flickered in the sea breeze and blue spotlights bathed free-form flying buttresses which supported a crown of superstructure surrounding the terrace and a lush garden situated in its center, where brightly colored tropical birds cawed irreverently from the limbs of banana and palmetto trees."

It reminds this reviewer of the statement "simple is best." Too much leaves the reader with nothing.

AND, OF COURSE, all of the characters in this suspense novel are bigger than life. There's the Mexican beauty, Mercedes, whose "body sparkled in the sunlight, shimmering with a million diamond water droplets," the first time deep cover CIA operative and assasin Roger Davis saw her on the Mexican beach. "She was more beautiful than he had imagined."

He in turn was viewed by her as "very handsome, she thought, and his blond hair attracted her. His eyes were the bluest she could remember seeing, and she found it hard to resist staring into them, searching for hidden secrets. Only the faint scar beneath his right eye troubled her, but in some strange way it was also exciting. It gave him an air of mystery."

Central in the book is the 42nd president of the United States, Eldon Parker, "a 49-year-old self-made millionaire...who had clawed his way out of the black dust of the coal mines of Tennessee to the executive suite of his own mining conglomerate which by the recession of 1985 included 24 working mines, 15 successful joint ventures in the oil-rich offshore fields of Louisiana and Texas, 200 coal cars on the Burlington Northern Railroad, and a half ownership in a hotel in Northport Beach, Calif., as well as sizable investments in commodities and stocks."

In a description of himself, Parker states, "Life is not a spectator sport. The fact that I'm a millionaire is due to my own efforts, and my ability to make myself more valuable, more productive. I didn't get rich by demanding the same salary for less work, or more salary for the same amount of work. I got rich by working harder, longer, and better than everyone else; by risking everything I had to move up so that I was worth more and earned more."

THE OASIS Project is his idea. In the beginning, he has only a very select few that genuinely know what the project is. And the dogma he preaches to his nation and those who work for him, is not all it appears to be.

Aleksay Kurochkin, KGB security chief Vladmir Markelov's star prodigy, plods relentlessly in pursuit of Davis, who has violated the Soviet's security inside Russia, until he uncovers the meaning of the Oasis Project.

Although the theories, bigger than life characters and lack of in-depth character development are all reminiscent of Ayn Rand's "Atlas Shrugged," this book has an additional twist.

Parker is not all he appears to be and his project is not all he espouses it is. Enough said.

The book is not a bad first attempt by an artist, neither is it a great one. It falls somewhere in the gray area between mediocre and acceptable. Arthur has none of the subtle finesse of suspense writer John Le Carre, not to mention the ability to develop characters and suspense the way Le Carre does.

ARTHUR SPENT three years researching present technologies and programs under development on NASA's drawing boards — winged space flight, laser weaponry, nuclear powered rocket thrusters, etc. His scientific projections are based upon carrying these projects to the limit.

In the process, it is a shame he didn't spend time learning how to write minus the heavy hand, overblown phrase and cliche expression. However, it seems highly probable the book will eventually be presented to the public in movie form (which is where the money is anyway). It's depth is just right for the screen — all flash and fluff and not much substance.

To secure a copy of the book, contact Sword and Stone Press, P.O. Box 9428, Venice, Calif., or call 1-213-822-8033. Listed price for the hardback is $12.95.

Hollywood hit hard by labor strike

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The threat of the fourth film-TV strike in less than a year has dried up production funds, fueled a 50 percent unemployment rate in many unions and taken millions of dollars out of the Hollywood economy.

Even if the Directors Guild of America does not walk out on July 1, the effects of what would be a total shutdown of the industry already are being felt from union halls to executive suites.

"THE PRODUCING community is pretty much at a standstill," said Louis S. Steinberg, executive vice president of the Los Angeles Film Development Committee. He noted that filming at Los Angeles locations — a slow period even in normal years — is down 66 percent from normal.

"If the directors go out it will be traumatic. It will paralyze the industry," he said, adding that 25,000 workers — as high as 50 percent in many behind-the-scenes job categories — already have been laid off because of the threatened directors' walkout and the current strike by the Writers Guild of America.

WITH DIRECTORS vowing to strike over residuals for made-for-pay-TV programs — the same issue that caused walkouts last year by actors and musicians and now the writers — cameras have virtually stopped rolling here.

"There are no starts now," Steinberg said Friday in an interview.

Producers said the film and television community lost $40 million a week last year when the actors and musicians strikes delayed or canceled a number of feature films and delayed the fall TV season.

"You could probably triple that (in a directors strike) because the actors strike related only to prime time programming," Steinberg said.

STEINBERG SAID the impact of a strike by the 6,400-member Directors Guild would be far worse than the strikes by actors and musicians because the union includes stage managers and associate directors.

"When the actors went out it only affected prime time (TV) programming, not commercials or industrial films, or talk or variety shows," he said. "If the directors go and they carry with them the stage managers and associate directors it's going to carry with it everything across the board. And that's just not in Hollywood, that's all across the country. There'll be nothing but reruns."

As of early June, box-office receipts were down nearly 10 percent from the same period 12 months ago — also an off year for movie attendance.

"It comes at a very bad time. Just the very prospect of having a production delay when there are 20 percent interest rates has scared off a lot of people," Ellington said.

Ellington noted that CFI had seen an increase in business recently as Hollywood has been gripped by a "hurry up and finish what you can" fever while the strike deadline nears with little progress being reported at the bargaining table.

Federal mediator Timothy O'Sullivan said Friday he would step into directors negotiations by the end of this week if a settlement was not near. The writers talks are broken off indefinitely, he said.

But Ellington said that even with a quick settlement, damage already has been done. "Under any circumstances there will be a slow period in July because so many majors and independents (producers) have cut off their planning," he said.

That translates to lost jobs. Ellington said CFI laid off 20 percent of its work force during the actors strike. Some unions had as high as 80 percent unemployment at the peak of that 10-week walkout.

Unemployment lines have lengthened, said a state official who noted that although entertainment workers are not yet making the kind of run on the unemployment offices they did during the actors strike, the impact of the directors threat is apparent.

"Normally our claims load does decline rather substantially in the summer," said Ray McFarland, state employment program manager in North Hollywood. "The decline (this summer) was much less than it usually is."

Steinberg, whose committee oversees all still and motion picture filming in Los Angeles, estimated that each company spends $30,000-$40,000 a day during location shooting.

Texxas World Music Festival to be held in Astrodome

HOUSTON — Tickets to the 4th annual Texxas World Music Festival have sold faster for this year's show than for the other three. Perhaps the reason is more than the line-up of stars — comfort.

Instead of being held in the mid of summer at the Cotton Bowl in Dallas, this year's Texxas Jam will be held indoors, beginning at 3 p.m. July 18 at the Astrodome in Houston.

Headlining the show will be REO Speedwagon, Heart, Foghat, Blue Oyster Cult and the Rockets. Tickets may be purchased locally at Music Haul.

Since the Astrodome only handles 55,000, whereas the Cotton Bowl accommodated 80,000, it is recommended that those interested in attending not wait until the last minute to purchase tickets.

Along with the Texxas Jam, the concert portion of the festival, the TWMF '81 will feature the Rock 'n' Roll Supermarket, a two-day extravaganza of rock 'n' roll related exhibitions and activities. The supermarket will be open from 2 p.m. Friday till 2 a.m. Saturday and from 10 a.m. Saturday till 2 a.m. Sunday in the Astrohall which adjoins the Astrodome. Admission is free Saturday to ticket holders and a passout system between the Astrohall and Astrodome allows access to and from the supermarket all day.

Archeologists find 'Raiders' hard to swallow

By LAURINDA KEYS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In "Raiders of the Lost Ark," this summer's expected blockbuster movie, archaeologists are searching for the lost Ark of the Covenant, which, according to the Bible, was a gold-covered receptacle which contained the 10 Commandments engraved in stone by the hand of God.

Stories of the ark, based on biblical accounts, refer to its strange powers — bringing success to those who are entitled to its protection, and bringing death to those who touch or handle it wrongly.

In the movie, the ark was supposedly carried away from Jerusalem by invading Egyptians and hidden in the ancient North African city of Tanis.

But biblical archaeologists find that scenario unlikely. The ark, built about 1300 B.C., was carried around by the Israelites in a portable tabernacle, until Solomon built the first temple in Jerusalem, giving it a permanent home.

MOST BIBLICAL EXPERTS believe it was the Babylonians, not the Egyptians, who carried away the ark as plunder, along with the tablets of law that Moses received from God on Mount Sinai, when they took the Israelites captive in 586 B.C. and destroyed Solomon's temple.

In the book of Ezra in the Old Trestament, there is an account of the Israelites returning to Jerusalem to rebuild their temple. The book says they were allowed to take with them their temple vessels. But there is never again any mention of the Ark of the Covenant and its precious contents.

"The prospect is that the Babylonians stripped the precious metal from it, or just held it in their collection," said Gerald Larue, professor of biblical history and archaeology at the University of Southern California.

There are legends that the prophet Jeremiah hid the ark in the limestone caves around Jerusalem, and this is where William LaSor, professor emeritus of the Old Testament at Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, thinks it is most likely to have been hidden.

"SINCE THE SIX-DAY War, the Israelis have done a lot of excavation and have gotten down to what used to be the city of David," he said. "It's quite exciting. But if the ark was hidden down there, in a cave in the temple area, it would now be under the Moslem shrine (the Dome of the Rock), and you can't take a bunch of Jewish archaeologists in there to dig."

And, anyway, he said, finding it would be unlikely.

"The very nature of the ark itself, made of wood, manufactured in the 14th century B.C., would not lend a great deal of credence to the idea that it was preserved all that time," he said, "but the discovery of the Dead Sea scrolls changed our ideas of what is possible."

An exact description of what the ark looked like is contained in the book of Exodus, Chapter 25. It was about four feet long, three feet deep, and two feet wide, made of acacia wood, covered inside and out with gold, and topped by a cover with engraved winged angels at either end.

In any case, it's improbable that the ark would have been taken to Egypt, said LaSor.

JEWS WOULDN'T HAVE fled to Tanis, which, according to their tradition, is one of the store cities they built during their years of slavery. Also, if the Jewish priests were trying to hide their precious objects from the enemy, they wouldn't take it that far to hide it, LaSor said.

"I don't think any archaeologist seriously considers finding it," said LaSor. "But there's always the happenstance that if things are buried properly, in the right kind of soil, they could survive. I had a letter in my nut file for a long time from a man who worked out from a secret code exactly where the ark was hidden. He said it was in a cave near Jerusalem."

He noted, "The legends that it was hidden and preserved grew out of the idea that sacred objects cannot be destroyed, although they are."

"Jews still conceive of there being a covenant between God and the Jews," said Rabbi Ben Zion Bergman, professor of Old Testament at the University of Judaism. "The ark was a receptacle. It had sanctity because of that which was stored therein. The holiness is within. It is the word of God that is sacred. The ark of the covenant does not represent the covenant. It housed the tablets which were the expression of the covenant."

INSTRUCTIONS ON HOW to carry the ark — with specially made wooden staves — what the priests were to wear when they came near it, and how it was to be kept behind a curtain of the tabernacle in the "Holy of Holies," has fueled the speculation, as evidenced in the movie, that the ark might have had special powers which were dangerous to those who didn't know how to handle it.

Bergman said this speculation is based on two stories in the Bible. One is in the first book of Samuel, Chapter 4, when the ark is taken into battle, and the battle is lost.

Fox back in hospital

NEW WESTMINSTER, British Columbia (AP) — Terry Fox, a cancer victim whose show of courage has helped raise more than $24 million to aid research in the disease, was back in the hospital Saturday.

The 22-year-old Fox was in stable but serious condition after being admitted to the hospital Friday. He has been undergoing interferon treatment since February.

More than four years ago, Fox's right leg was amputated in an effort to block his primary bone cancer. Last year, he attempted to run across Canada on his artificial leg to raise money for cancer research, but was forced to halt when it was discovered the cancer had spread to his lungs.

Since beginning interferon treatment, which touched off an allergy that caused fluid to accumulate around his heart, Fox has undergone surgery and had the fluid drained off.

Gandhis to attend royal wedding

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The guests at Prince Charles's wedding to Lady Diana Spencer will include Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and her son, Rajiv, sources close to the Gandhi family said Saturday.

Gandhi, a 36-year-old former airline pilot, received Charles at Delhi Airport last November when the Prince of Wales arrived on an official tour of India. The two, who share an interest in flying, reportedly hit it off.

The prime minister's son, under pressure from his mother and supporters of his late brother, has gone into politics since the death of Sanjay Gandhi in a stunt plane crash a year ago.

FBI boss wants waiting period

DELAWARE, Ohio (AP) — FBI Director William H. Webster doesn't object to ownership of handguns, but believes it's a "sad reflection on our times" that so many Americans feel the need to.

Webster was in this community last week to deliver the commencement address at Ohio Wesleyan University, where his daughter is enrolled.

He recommended "vigorous enforcement" of gun laws now on the books, and said he thinks there is some merit to proposals that a waiting period be imposed for those who want to buy guns.

"It takes us presently too long to run a name check or fingerprint check — fingerprint checks are now running 25 days, which is much too long," he said. "But a waiting period would at least provide some opportunity and that's been suggested in a number of places."

Kriesky released from Vienna hospital

VIENNA (AP) — Austria's head of state was released from a hospital Saturday, but the head of the country's government will be hospitalized a while longer, doctors say.

Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, 70, was in good condition on his release from Rudolf Hospital,but has been urged to stay at home for at least another week, said Dr. Anton Neumayr

Preident Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, who was hospitalized Tuesday with problems resulting from shrapnel wounds received during World War II, won't be released until early next week, the Austrian news agency reported.

Kreisky was taken to the hospital Monday when a sharp rise in blood pressure caused lung congestion and severe breathing problems.

Singer Dobie Gray fails breath test

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Dobie Gray was arrested Saturday on a charge of driving under the influence of alcohol near the famed Music Row, police said.

Officers said Gray, 40, of Nashville, registered .15 on a breath alcohol test. A reading of .10 is considered legally intoxicated.

Gray is best known for pop hits such as "Drift Away," "Loving Arms," "The In Crowd" and "Look at Me."

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — This is the summer of the special effects, and that worries Ray Harryhausen, distinguished practitioner of that magical science.

"Clash of the Titans," for which Harryhausen provided a menagerie of mythological creatures, is joining other warm-weather attractions featuring visual wizardry: "Raiders of the Lost Ark," "Outland," "Dragonslayer," "Superman II," etc.

"I'm worried about all this concentration on special effects," admits Harryhausen. "It breeds the seeds of its own destruction.

"The problem is over-exposure and too much concentration on effects for the sake of effects. I'm also concerned about the large amount of publicity about how effects are accomplished. I have been noted for my closed-mouth attitude. I've always reasoned that when a magician explains how he saws a woman in half, the illusion is destroyed.

"THE THING THAT started me in the business was the first 'King Kong.' I had to learn how those tricks were done, and by the time I did, I was hooked. That same wonderment that I felt about 'King Kong' is important to the enjoyment of films of fantasy today.

Then why does he submit to interviews? "Because if I don't talk about the picture, it might not get talked about."

Ray Harryhausen is not exactly a marquee name, but he is lionized at conventions of fans of science fiction movies. His career dates back to the 1949 "Mighty Joe Young," which won him an Oscar for his animation of a junior King Kong. With the 1955 "It Came from Beneath the Sea," Harryhausen began his long association with producer Charles Schneer.

FOR THE PAST 20 years, Schneer and Harryhausen have worked in Europe, creating such fantasies as "Mysterious Island," "Jason and the Argonauts," "The Golden Voyage of Sinbad" and "Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger." A native Californian, Harryhausen lives in London with his English wife.

Harryhausen's particular magic is the animation of three-dimensional figures. He doesn't like to call it animation, because that sounds like cartoon work. After such tags as "dynamation" and "dynarama," he now favors "kinetic sculpture." By any name it is tedious, exacting work, photogrphed oneframe at a time -- and there are 24 frames per movie second.

"Clash of the Titans," which MGM is releasing via United Artists, is the most ambitious chneer-Haryhausen film so far--a $16-million adventure with Laurence Olivier as Zeus, Claire Bloom as Hera, Maggie Smith as Thetis and Ursula Andress typecast as Aphrodite. Among the mortals, Harry Hamlin stars as Perseus.

ANOTHER MAJOR CAST member was Medusa, the snake-coiffed lady who was Harryhausen's biggest headache.

"Cellini had sculpted her as a normal woman with snakes on her head," cited Harryhausen. "That wasn't enough for us; we had to use our imaginations to create someone more dramatic. After all, if Medusa had the power to turn people to stone, she had to look horrendous.

TV station selling time to all takers

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — The devil may have less control over gospel TV station WHKY in Hickory than other, more secular, stations, but the programming includes a regular feature on witchcraft and mildly pornographic films from Europe.

The schedule also inclues local news, wrestling, and other forms of entertainment — and its preachers are legion.

Hickory's religious television station reaches out every night to a loyal audience composed primarily of blue-collar workers and the elderly.

"Good, bad or indifferent, it is what we set out to do," said Tom Long, the station manager at WHKY. "That's what we're here for — to let people do their thing."

There are more than 36 religious programs on Channel 14 in any given week, but the $165 fee for a half-hour of prime time lures performers of different persuasions.

A self-proclaimed witch named Joann Denton of Morganton began a show not long ago on UFOs, the Bermuda Triangle and psychic phenomena.

Long said the films are edited, but enough skin remains to keep heathens interested.

Old-time religion, however, remains the mainstay of WHKY, and the faithful include viewers who otherwise would not be able to attend church.

Baptist Choir meeting

The 1981 Texas Baptist All-State Youth Choir and band is meeting at Hardin—Simmons University at Abilene Monday through June 28. During that time, the group will give two West Texas concerts, one at 8 p.m. Saturday at Abilene Civic Center and the other June 28 at 3 p.m. at the Amphitheater at Palo Duro Canyon.

Midland representatives in the group include Ben Cox of Crestview Baptist Church, and Matt Carr and Tammira Madison, both of Fannin Terrace Baptist Church.

The concerts are free, however, a fee of $2 per car and $6 per bus is charged by the park board for entrance into Palo Duro Canyon.

Indian sculpture returns

SANTA FE, N.M. — A 7-foot bronze Indian "Offering the Sacred Pipe," by Allen C. Houser, is back in front of the entrance to the Wheelwright Museum of the American Indian on loan for the summer. The museum is looking for private and public funds to support its purchase.

The statue is one in a series of three that were cast by Houser. The first statue to be cast in the series has found as its permanent home the Museum of the Southwest in Midland, Texas. The statue became a part of the Midland museum's collection in 1980 following a Houser exhibition in October at the museum. The $55,000 price was paid by an anonymous doner.

Houser is one of a handful of internationally acclaimed contemporary American Indian artists. He has been the recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship, the Palmes de Academigues and the 1980 New Mexico Governor's Award for Excellence in thhe Arts. He is a long time resident of Santa Fe and a former instructor at the Institute of American Indian Arts.

Farmer's cash receipts were stable in 1980

COLLEGE STATION — While the 1980 drought devastated crop yields in Texas, cash receipts remained generally stable due to higher prices.

Estimates by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service indicate crop cash receipts at $3.8 billion, which is down only slightly from 1979. Total receipts from all agricultural commodities in 1980 are pegged at $10.1 billion, which just about matches the previous year's yield.

"These cash receipts, however, don't show the severity of damage that production levels under went or the squeeze on net income," says Dr. Carl Anderson, TAEX economist.

"Drought and higher production costs have placed serious financial hardships on many farmers," he said. "Young farmers and those depending heavily on credit for capital are under considerable financial strain. Record-high interest rates have added to the burden."

Hot, dry conditions severely damaged crop production and caused subsequent price increases, according to Anderson.

"Prices went up because of the small amount of crops that were available after the summer," he said.

Despite weather problems, last year's crop receipts should have an agri-business impact of about $16 billion on the Texas economy. Cotton's contribution was $1.4 billion, and the bulk of Texas cotton receipts came from the South Plains, which rung up $665 million on the cash registers.

Wheat and grain sorghum ran a close race for second place among crop sales at about $450 million each.

Grading formula disappoints farmers

LUBBOCK — Officials of Plains Cotton Growers Inc. of Lubbock have characterized the U.S. Department of Agriculture's latest formula to figure micronaire discounts for the 1981 government loan schedule as "by far the best of the three alternatives offered in USDA's Federal Register notice and therefore the best we could have hoped for."

The formula used for grade and staple discounts, however, was called "the worse of the three alternatives and a bitter disappointment to us."

The three options considered by USDA included averaging last year's loan discount with the eight-month August-March average of spot market quotations and using (1) a 5-to-1 (loan discount to market quotations) weighting; (2) 3-to-1 weighting or (3) a simple 1-to-1 average.

"Almost incredibly, USDA decided to use the 5-to-1 weighting for micronaire, which is what we had argued for, but went to the simple 1-to-1 average for grade and staple," said PCG Excutive Vice President Donald Johnson.

With the 5-to-1 formula, discounts on low-mike cotton in 1981 will be greater than in 1980, but the increase will be from 75 points ($3.60 per bale) to 365 points ($17.52 per bale).

Cotton making good growth in area

AUSTIN — Cotton, blessed by seasonal rains and sunny weather, is making "good" growth in the West Texas area, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Hail-damage cotton has been replanted.

Good yields were reported from small-grain crops. Cabbage and onion were being harvested in Pecos County.

Cotton insect seminar set for Friday

By CHARLES GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

A Cotton Insect Seminar has been scheduled for Friday, June 26 for Midland County cotton producers. The meeting will be held at the Valley View Community Center (located on FM 1213) and will begin at 11:45 a.m. with a Bar-B-Que luncheon, courtesy of First National Bank of Midland.

Following lunch, instruction will be given in identification of insects, both beneficial and harmful, field monitoring techniques and control practices. Instruction will be by slide and lecture presentation and field training.

Instructors will include David Foster, County Entomologist supervising the Integrated Pest Management program for Midland-Martin-Howard counties; Charles Neeb, Area Extension Entomologist for the 19-county Extension District 6; Barney Ross, priva te entomologist; Jim Murray, Abbott Laboratories; and Jerry Bomfaulk, Sandos Corp.

I'd like to urge every cotton grower to attend this seminar so that we can all update ad sharpen our skills in monitoring insect problems and work together in preventing losses like we suffered last season.

The goal of the Midland County Pest Management Association is to minimize crop loss to insect pests by employing cultural, natural, biological and selective chemical controls based on accurate field monitoring and knowledge of insect biology.

A few days of 100 plus degree weather with dry wind last week brought a step-up of inquiry concerning scorching and browning of turf, ornamental and garden plants. This kind of stress points up the need of gardeners to understand proper watering practices.

Just what constitutes proper watering for grass, trees, shrubs and gardens is sometimes hard to "get a hadle on". There are some basic factors to consider;

First, we need to consider the water-holding capacity of a typical sandy loam soil. We can expect this type of soil to hold about 1 inch of available water per foot of depth. This is only about ¼ yo ½ of the storage capacity of a clay soil. This means that Midland soils will run out of moisture much sooner than clay soils and need water more often during periods of high plant usage.

This brings us to the second factor — water use rates of plants. The typical range of water use of 0.1 to 0.3 inch per day in moderate weather (below 100 degrees with some humidity and minimal wind) but can range as high as .45 to .50 inch per day when temperatures soar over 100 and winds are high and dry. Water is lost by transpiration through plant leaves and evaporation from the soil.

One of the common mistakes in watering is failure to know how many actual inches of water or galons being applied. All too often the gardener "measures" water by how long the sprinklers or hose is allowed to run in one spot. We need to know how deep the moisture is reaching.

There are many automatic sprinkler systems installed in lawns in Midland. Many of these are programmed to operate as short as 10 to 15 minute intervals each night. All too often, this results in only 1/10 to 2/10 inches of water will penetrate only 1 to 2 inches of soil. If the soil has been wet deeply early by rainfal or longer watering this may keeep the lawn looking nice in mild spring weather. But when the temperatures soar and plant water use and evaporation kicks up to near 5/10 inch per day a deficit will result rapidly and the turn will scorch and brown quickly.

Every homeowner needs to determine how much water in inches is being applied during a given int4rval by his sprinkler system. This is as simple as setting out some cans and msuring with a ruler.

Other factors that determine water needs and interval are soil depth, amount of organic matter in the soil, use of muching to conserve moisture and type of plants and stage of growth.

The successful gardener will learn how to evaluate all the factors and determine how best to water for his particular situation.

Team to visit Europe

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A special team boosting the export of Texas mohair leaves Sunday for Eastern Europe, Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said Saturday.

"The team will call on spinners and buyers in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland and East Germany as well as some of our older established markets in England and Spain," said Brown. "One of the most important stops will be in Portugal, which is progressing rapidly toward development of its own textile industry."

Members of the team included Fred Campbell, executive director of the Mohair Council of America and the Texas Mohair Producers Board; Ben Baisden, marketing director of the Texas Department of Agriculture; Dr. Joe David Ross, a Sonora mohair producer and secreteary-treasurer of the Texas Wool and Mohair Warehouse Association.

They will return July 10.

Burns still leads U.S. Open after escape act

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — George Burns, in position to win the gaudiest prize in golf, has at last one thing going for him, and one big, big lesson to learn in Sunday's final round of the chase for the 81st United States Open Championship.

"I'm a great one for momentum," Burns said Saturday after a magnificent escape act, aided and abetted by a critical ruling, enabled him to overcome the varied disasters that struck down golf's greatest players and staked him to a 3-shot lead.

"I got it going last week," with his strongest showing of the year, a fifth place in the Westchester Classic.

And the momentum has continued this week with three consecutive rounds in the 60's, the latest a hard-won, 2-under-par 68 on the nerve-wracking, 6,528-yard Merion Golf Club course.

"I never expected to shoot those rounds here," Burns said. "This is a big surprise to me."

He didn't really expect to play too well. It's not his favorite golf tournament. And it's not his favorite golf course.

He's been openly, surprisingly critical of the sponsoring U.S. Golf Association and said, before the tournament started, he was playing "only because I need the money.

"I don't particularly like the guys that run it and I don't particularly like what they do to the golf courses.

"I don't particularly like the limelight and all the bull that goes with it," he said.

Much of his displeasure goes back to his amateur days, and a bitter dispute he had with U.S.G.A. officials during the Walker Cup matches.

"I worked myself into a frenzy," he said and later was forced to write letters of apology.

"It weighed on me for two or three years," he said. His displeaure with the U.S.G.A., which is concerned primarily with the amateur game, was a key factor in his decision to turn pro at the relatively late age of 25.

"I had planned on remaining an amateur. That was a key factor in the decision to turn pro," he said.

His brilliant amateur record performance did not carry over into the pro ranks. Burns has won but one individual title in his six years of PGA Tour activity. He's been in position many times before and let them get away.

He's very much aware of the problem and the lesson he has to learn.

He's three shots in front. But should he falter, should he provide an opening, at least three men are poised and ready to make a move at him: steady David Graham; wiry, tough-minded Bill Rogers; and the greatest player of them all, Jack Nicklaus.

"I'll just try to keep the ball in play," said Graham, a former PGA champion. "Four steady rounds usually win the Open."

He was second alone with a round of par-70 and a 206 total.

"There's no pressure on me," said Rogers, winner of the Heritage Classic earlier this year and one of golf's more accurate players. "I've got nothing to lose."

He was at 207 after a 69.

"On Open courses," said Nicklaus, the defending champion who has been there so often before, "several shots can change hands very quickly."

He was tied at 208, five shots off the pace, with Chi Chi Rodriguez and John Schroeder.

Nicklaus had a 71 that included a double bogey on the 14th hole. ChiChi closed up with a 67 and Schroeder had a 69.

The only others under par were Ben Crenshaw, first-round leader Jim Thorpe, former American amateur champ John Cook and Tommy Valentine. Crenshaw tied the competitive course record for Merion with a 64, the lowest score ever shot in the third round of a U.S. Open. Thorpe matched par-70, Cook had a 71 and Valentine, who said he's only trying to finish in the top 16 and win a trip to the Masters, had a 72.

He'd birdied two holes in a row, missing a hole in one by a couple of inches, and was within two strokes of the lead when he fell back with the double bogey on the 14th. He drove into the rough, missed the green short and right, had a difficult lie and pitched poorly from there, then three-putted, missing a 6-foot second putt.

"I suffered the consequnces of trying to make up for a bad shot," he said.

"For two days I've had it in shape and let it get away," said Nicklaus, who also took a double bogey in the second round. But others had even sadder stories.

Within the space of 10 minutes, Masters champion Tom Watson, Australian Greg Norman and Bill Kratzert, all among the leaders, suffered triple bogeys and disappeared from contention.

George Burns wears a grin as he marches the Merion golf course during the U.S. Open golf tournament. He's leading by three strokes, so the grin is deserved.

Can Bjorn Borg win sixth straight?

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — They used to say the Wimbledon Tennis Championships never changed. Only the champions differed from year to year.

This year something has happened. Crowds arriving at the All-England Club for the start of the big tournament Monday will find some of the old familiar sights gone.

The club has spent $5.5 million on a new restaurant and resting rooms for the players, extensions to No. 1 Court and other improvements.

Gone is the famous ivy-framed flashing scoreboard, where the progress of the Center Court match was given point by point and where thousands gathered in unwieldy crowds.

Of course, it's not really true that the champions always change. The men's champion has been the same the last five years.

BJORN BORG, the mighty Swede, is going for his sixth straight title. The bookies rate him such a strong favorite that you cannot get better odds than 4 to 5 on, and that makes a bet hardly worthwhile.

John McEnroe, seeded No. 2, and Jimmy Connors, No. 3, will tell you it's time Borg's reign was ended.

But after his victory in the French Open two weeks ago, his sixth in Paris, there is not much reason to believe that he is faltering.

Last year McEnroe took him to five sets in the Wimbledon final and had him on tenterhooks by winning one of the all-time dramatic tiebreakers in the fourth set. In the 1979 final Roscoe Tanner lasted five sets and came even closer to toppling him.

But Borg, just 25, still rules. His phenomenal mental stamina has yet to let him down. The Wimbledon crowds have come to expect that he will continue finding reserves of energy to win the last few big points.

For the first time in years the women's champion is not defending. Evonne Goolagong, who beat Chris Evert Lloyd in last year's final, had a baby boy recently.

That leaves Lloyd as the top seed and the bookies' favorite at odds of 9 to 4. She won Wimbledon in 1974 and 1976 but has since scored most of her major successes on slower courts. Her loss to 19-year-old Czech Hana Mandlikova at Paris ended a 64-match clay-court winning streak. After the French, she pulled out of a grass-court tournament at Surbiton with an injured knee.

BORG MISSED several weeks of tennis earlier this year because of shoulder trouble. He came back a month ago, went straight into the French Open and retained his title on the slow, killing clay surface of Roland Garros. A couple of marathon rallies there can take as much out of a man as a whole set on the grass at Wimbledon.

Given good weather, more than 30,000 people are expected to swarm onto the grounds each day. The renovations, undertaken just after last year's championship, are expected to ease some of the congestion.

Air Chief Marshal Sir Brian Burnett, chairman of the club, showed off the new amenities including what he called "the paymaster's office." That is where the players will collect their prize money.

Wimbledon will pay out a total of $757,000 this year, including $43,000 to the winning man and $38,800 to the women's champion.

Borg has not played in public since the French Open. He passes up the warm-up grass court tournaments in England and practices in private.

Connors does the same. McEnroe tuned up by competing in the Stella Artois tournament at London's Queen's Club and won it for the third year in a row.

South captures 2-1 win

HOUSTON (AP) — A sacrifice fly by Mark Anderson of Houston Scarborough in the eighth inning and 13 strikeouts by four South pitchers helped the South All-Stars to a 2-1 victory over the North Saturday in the Texas High School Baseball Coaches Association all-state game.

The South took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when all-state shortstop Craig Smajstrla of Pearland walked, went to second on a groundout by Uvalde's H.T. Langford and scored on a single by Jose Jimenez of Houston Lamar.

The North collected only four hits in the game, including three in the first inning and one in the fifth when a single by Dallas Thomas Jefferson's Jeff Tousa scored Philip Taylor from second base.

Neri Pena of Edinburg singled to open the eighth inning for the South, stole second and took third on a single by Corpus Christi Moody's Benny Mota before scoring the game-winning run on Anderson's sacrifice fly.

Crenshaw is back in hunt

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — "It added up to 64 but it didn't feel like it," Ben Crenshaw said Saturday after shooting a course record-tying 64 to move into contention for the U.S. Open Golf Championship.

"I hit some good shots but I hit some poor shots, too," he continued. "It always seems that's the case when you shoot an exceptionally low round."

The young Texan's 6-under-par effort over the tight 6,528-yard Merion Golf Club gave him a 54-hole total of 209 going into Sunday's climactic round.

A former college champion who was hailed a possible Hogan successor when he turned pro in 1973, the personable, 29-year-old native of Austin, Texas, had 12 one-putt greens, sinking three from 25 feet and another from 30 in an amazing exhibition.

"My confidence was really shaken after I shot that 75 Friday," he said. "When I bogeyed the first hole today, I felt miserable. Then I got my putting touch back.

"With the overnight rains the greens were like pound cake — soft and perfect with good speed. All you had to do was read them correctly."

Crenshaw had eight birdies and two bogeys.

A student of golf history and architecture, Crenshaw said that giving Merion such a beating was like beating a close friend.

Baseball strike completes Week One

By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

After nine days and 114 canceled games, the two sides in the major league baseball strike seem as far apart as ever on the question of compensation for a team losing a top-notch free agent.

And management's first-day statement that games were being canceled "until further notice" has taken on an ominous air with the abrupt breakoff of negotiations.

"What I see here is a waiting game — a long waiting game," federal mealtor Kenneth Moffett said Friday in announcing that talks had ended and no new ones were planned.

As the sport's first mid-season strike rolled up records for games wiped out with every day missed, the players were losing an estimated $575,000 a day in salaries and the owners an estimated $1 million a day in gate and concession receipts.

If the strike is still on when the 153rd game is missed Wednesday, the owners will begin collecting $100,000 a game from a $50 million strike insurance fund. The players receive no strike benefits.

There was an element of intrigue as the strike went through its first full week — a mini-uprising by three owners apparently upset by the lack of movement in the talks.

Owners Edward Bennett Williams of Baltimore, Eddie Chiles of Texas and George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees met with Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn Tuesday to try to gain more of a say in management's bargaining position.

The palace revolt failed, however, when Steinbrenner issued a statement in support of the management negotiators and their spokesman, Ray Grebey.

As the strike stretched on, fans went looking for ways to quench their thirst for the summer game and voicing frustration about the walkout.

"I think going on strike is stupid," said 13-year-old Stephen Rhodes. "They hire these guys as lawyers and stuff, to try to work out their problems, and they go on strike. Why hire the lawyers if they can't do the job for ya?"

"Couldn't you hear me sobbing?" said Neil Heffernan, the owner of a souvenir shop near Tiger Stadium in Detroit.

In at least two cases, fans went to court to try to end the strike, and one even said he was forming a union of fans.

"What I hope to do eventually is assert our rights to strike occasionally," said David H. Kubert, a Philadelphia attorney.

In Muscatine, Iowa, another kind of strike began in protest to the players' walkout. Rob Graham, news director at radio station KWPC, embarked on a hunger strike, vowing now to eat until the major leaguers were back playing ball.

"I've been meaning to lose some weight for a while and now I have a cause," said the 215-pound Graham, a 26-year-old bachelor.

Most radio stations which normally carried big-league ball switched to play-by-play of their major league teams' farm clubs, with some even sending their broadcasting crews to air the games. Several TV stations also began carrying minor league contests.

In newspapers, coverage included day-by-day reports on the strike as well as several unusual features. Reprints of old game stories and box-scores sprouted, and computer-inspired "Fantasy Baseball" games gave the reader a taste of what might have been.

Even the managers got into the act. Whitey Herzog of the St. Louis Cradinals played a tabletop card game of baseball in which his team defeated the San Diego Padres 4-1.

There was still plenty of baseball around. High school championship and college all-star games took over Yankee Stadium. Minor leagues played their usual schedules. Sandlots were as crowded as ever, with one slow-pitch softball league in Cincinnati getting a boost when Philadelphia first baseman Pete Rose took part in a charity game and getting an infield single.

"I'm too old to worry about boating and that kind of stuff," the 40-year-old Rose said of the strike activities of some other players. "I want to play baseball. Everybody does."

But the strike, which started June 12 and had wiped out 114 games through Saturday, was not giving Rose or the other 649 players a chance to perform in their usual domain.

The stalemate, as it has been for the last 1½ years, was over the issue of free-agent compensation.

The owners, represented by the Players Relations Committee, want a major league roster player as well as an amateur draft pick as compensation for losing a "ranking" free agent.

The players, represented by the Major League Players Association, say the owners' plan would take away freedom of movement they won in previous negotiations and court cases.

As an alternative, the players have proposed a pool of major league talent into which clubs losing free agents could dip for compensation. The owners, however, have rejected the players' plan to have all teams contribute to the pool and are sticking with the program they unilaterally implemented last Feb. 19.

"As long as that proposal remains on the table, we will remain on strike," Mark Belanger, the Baltimore Orioles' shortstop and player representative, said Friday.

Unitas, addressing an audience here, cited the attempt to move the Oakland Raiders to Los Angeles and the movement of top players to Canada for lucrative contracts as examples.

He said he wasn't surprised by players such as Vince Ferragamo jumping to the Canadian Football League.

"Not in this day and time," the Pro Football Hall of Fame member said. "The owners talk about loyalty and the players talk about loyalty, but there isn't any at either end.

"You can't blame Vince Ferragamo for going up there and making a million dollars. When the time comes that you can't perform as well as you once did, it's bye-bye. They forget about you. A lot of owners talk loyalty and they are the first ones to turn around and not be loyal."

Unitas, 48, ended his playing career in 1973 after 17 years with the Colts and one with the San Diego Chargers.

Cubs destroy Diablos' hope

EL PASO — After wallowing through a poor first half, The Midland Cubs gained a little self respect in the last week of Texas League play by knocking El Paso out of a first-half title with a wild 12-8 slugfest over the Diablos here Saturday.

El Paso opened the six-games series with the Cubs holding a 1½ game lead over San Antonio. The way the Cubs were playing on the road it didn't appear the Diablos would have any trouble holding onto the lead. But, the Cubs came alive to win their only road series of the year, four games to two. San Antonio, despite getting beat Saturday, takes the first-half crown over El Paso thanks to the work of the Cubs.

Midland scored four runs in the seventh, three unearned, to break open a 3-3 tie to take the win.

The Cubs scored in the first when Craig Kornfeld tripled and scored on a wild pitch by Chick Valley. Midland added two more in the second on Fritz Connally's two-run homer run.

Johnny Evans' sixteen homer of the season pulled the Diablos to within one in the second. Doug Loman tied the scored in the third when he rocked Mike King for a solo homer.

Gonzalez wins fight

MARACAIBO, Venezuela (AP) — Venezuelan flyweight Betulio Gonzalez scored a controversial last-round knockout victory Saturday over Peter Mathebula of South Africa in a 10-round fight between two former world champions.

The fight seemed even through 10 often emotionless rounds.

With 35 seconds to go in the fight, Mathebula suddenly turned his back to Gonzalez and walked away from him to his own corner. The referee, Victor Julio Patino, a Venezuelan, quickly raised Gonzalez's hand, making him a knockout Victor.

Mathebula angrily protested claiming he thought he heard the bell indicating the end of the round and of the fight.

Vigneron sets vault record

MACON, France (AP) — Thierry Vigneron of France broke the 19-foot barrier for the first time in the pole vault Saturday, clearing 19-0¼ in an international jumping competition.

The former record of 18-11½ was set by Wladislaw Kozakiewicz of Poland at the Moscow Olympic Games, July 30, 1980.

American LL hopefuls ready for city tourney

The American Little League City Championship baseball tournament begins a week long run at the North Central League diamonds near Lee High School at 6 p.m. Monday with two first round games.

The tournament will feature five teams shooting for the city championship in the double elimination affair.

All games will be played daily at 6 p.m. The tournament could end Friday if one team goes through the tournament without a loss. The tourney could be extended to Saturday if both teams in the finals each have one loss.

The tournament opens Monday with Western taking on North Central an the "A" Field while Eastern meets Tower on the "B" diamond. Mid City gets the first round bye and will not have to play until Tuesday.

The game between Western and North Central will be a key contest since the winner will get the second round bye and will not have to play again until Wednesday. The loser of that game, however, will meet the loser of the Eastern-Tower matchup on Tuesday in a survival battle. Mid City will take on the Eastern-Tower winner on Tuesday also.

The manager for Mid City's entry is Donny Thompson while the coach is Jimmy Mowles. Western is managed by Warner Pyle and the coach is Mike Hughes. Jack Watters is manager of Tower with Bob Garrett the coach, and host North Central is managed by John Logi with Steve Werner the coach. No information was available on the Eastern coaches.

The National Little League title was decided Thursday on the same diamonds. North Central won that title with a victory over Western in the finals.

Foyt draws pole for Pocono

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Three-time winner A.J. Foyt drew the pole position out of a hat Saturday for the United States Auto Club Van Scoy Diamond Mine 500-mile race at Pocono International Speedway.

Foyt, a seven-time USAC champion who has won three of the 10 previous 500-mile Indianapolis car races here, drew from a hat after rain forced the cancellation of practice and qualifying sessions Saturday.

A 90-minute practice session was set for 8:30 a.m. Sunday, with the 500-mile race scheduled to start at 12:30 p.m.

Foyt will drive a car he purchased following the Indianapolis 500 last month.

Outsider Marinca romps at Ruidoso

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (AP) — Marinca, a 9-1 outsider with Kenny Roller up, got an early jump and won Saturday's first division of the seven-furlong Lincoln County Claiming Stakes at Ruidoso Downs horse race track.

The gelding opened a four-length lead down the backstretch of the race, which carried a purse of $5,117.

At the turn for home, Marinca remained unchallenged and coasted to the wire and hit the tape 3¾ lengths ahead of Rusty Rene. The winning time was 1:29 2-5.

Marinca returned $19.40 to win, $6.80 to place and $5.20 to show.

The Lincoln County Claiming Stakes drew 20 takers and had to be split into two divisions. The second division was taken by Windy's Gift, an 8-1 shot handled by John Arteaga.

Windy's Gift made his best move after the turn for home and won by daylight in 1:30 2-5. The winner returned $18.40, $10.40 and $5.80.

Bradley, Sheehan falter as Carner makes move

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Defending champion JoAnne Carner took the second-round lead in the $125,000 Lady Keystone Open Golf Tournament Saturday with a 3-under-par 69 for a 36-hole total of 137.

Her 7-under-par score was two strokes ahead of Pat Bradley and Patty Sheehan, the first-day co-leaders, and Marlene Floyd.

Bradley and Sheehan, who were 6-under-par after the first round, each had 1-over-par 73s on the 6,388-yard west course at the Hershey Country Club. Floyd shot even par to remain 5-under.

Betsy King also shot even par and was three strokes behind Carner.

The best round of the day was recorded by Jo Ann Washam, whose 5-under 67 put her 2-under after 36 holes. Washam finished play just as a steady rain started to fall.

"The rain made the course play much longer than it did Friday," said Carner. "I didn't think I would ever get a birdie."

Carner, who parred 15 holes, took the lead with birdies on the 474-yard, par-5 16th hole and the 156-yard, par-3 17th.

On the 16th hole, Carner put her second shot on the green and two-putted. She dropped a six-iron to within four feet of the cup on the 17th to set up her other birdie.

After Carner hit her second shot short on the 410-yard final hole, she salvaged par by chipping an eight-iron to within two feet of the hole.

The 54-hole tournament is scheduled to conclude today. The top prize in the event is $18,750.

NFL players watching baseball strike

READING, Pa. (AP) — National Football League players considering a walkout of their own in 1982 are looking closely at the outcome of the major league baseball strike, Wally Henry of the Philadelphia Eagles said Saturday.

"If the baseball strike goes over well, it'll be better for us," Henry told a luncheon meeting of the Pennsylvania Associated Press Managing Editors Association.

A football strike, although still in the talking stages, "is a possibility. It's serious, real serious," he said.

Football players are fighting for better salaries, especially for average players who have been in the league for years, Henry said.

Carl Lewis enhances chances at sprint-long jump double

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Carl Lewis was on the verge of the first sprint-long jump double in 45 years in the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday night after winning the 100-meter dash in 10.13 seconds and soaring 28 feet, 3½ inches in his first long jump attempt.

No athlete has won the sprint-long jump combination since the great Jesse Owens in 1936. But the sensational Lewis was halfway there after beating an elite field in the 100.

Among those who trailed Lewis, of the University of Houston, across the finish line were 1980 champion Stanley Floyd, 10.21, Southeastern Conference champion Mel Lattany, 10.21, and 1979 winner James Sanford, 10.22.

Also in the race, but trailing badly, were two-time Olympian Harvey Glance and 1976 Olympian Steve Riddick.

In the long jump, Lewis' performance during the trials put him far ahead of the field and he passed his next two attempts in order to concentrate on the 100. But after the sprint, he returned to the long jump area for his final three opportunities.

Moses, unbeaten in the 400 intermediate hurdles since August 26, 1977, won his semifinal heat in a relatively slow 51.8 in advancing to Sunday night's final. During Moses's long streak, 62 of his victories have been finals and the other six in preliminaries, heats or semifinals.

Moses was not happy with the 100 degree heat that basked Hughes Stadium.

"I could feel the heat of the track step by step," he said. "This weather was way too hot for me. It will hurt me to run hard in the final because when I run hard I put too much pressure on the track with my feet and that is what causes them to get hot.

Owners near payday as players continue baseball strike

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Thirteen more major league games were cancelled Saturday because of the baseball strike, pushing the total number of games lost for the nine days since June 12 when the players walked off the job to 114.

That is just 39 short of the 153-game deductable needed to trigger management's $50 million insurance policy. That plateau will be reached next Wednesday and thereafter each club will receive approximately $100,000 per cancelled playing date.

Teams have already been receiving benefits from a mutual assistance fund with assets reported at about $20 million. That money was accumulated over the past two years under direction of the Player Relations Committee, bargaining arm of the 26 owners.

The insurance policy, purchased at a premium of $2 million, will provide income for the owners through early August and, based on the total absence of any progress at the bargaining table last week, there is every reason to expect the strike to still be going on then.

Federal Mediator Kenneth Moffett seemed annoyed at the stalemated situation and said he would not call the two sides back into negotiations until there was some indication of a willingness by one or the other to move on the issue of free agent compensation, the lone issue on the table.

Moffett said he had reason to believe before Friday's negotiating session that there might be some progress. "Obviously, that fell through," Moffett said after a joint session lasted only 10 minutes in what Baltimore's Mark Belanger described as a "sullen" atmosphere.

So Moffett returned to Washington to mediate negotiations in the air traffic controllers' strike threatened for Monday, saying he would remain in touch over the weekend with both sides in the baseball walkout. But he made it clear that negotiations would not resume routinely.

"It's futile and stupid going through the charade of getting together on a regular basis with no movement," Moffett said.

A committee of five players — Belanger, Bob Boone of Philadelphia Rusty Staub of the New York Mets, Montreal's Steve Rogers and Tom Seaver of the Cincinnati Reds — has been representing the union in negotiations with Ray Grebey, director of the Player Relations Committee.

The players seemed angry and frustrated following Friday's session, apparently tired of having their ideas dismissed by management negotiators.

The union has proposed a player pool formula to supply professional compensation to teams losing ranking free agents. All teams would contribute players to the pool with selections carrying price tags from $30,000 to $60,000, depending on team standings. The owners have rejected that plan because it would draw compensation players from all teams, not just the ones participating in the re-entry draft and signing free agents.

Grebey seemed to signal a hardening of the management position when he said "the conditions placed on an acceptable resolution of the issues (by the players) are insurmountable."

Moffett holds hot potatoes

WAHINGTON (AP) The proletariat of the baseball parks are on strike this summer weekend and the traffic cops of the skies might join them, so it's understandable if Ken Moffett is feeling some pressure.

His job is to get the ballplayers back to work and to keep the air traffic controllers in their towers.

Moffett, 49, is acting director of the Federal Mediation and Concilation Service. As top mediator, he fields the hottest potatoes in labor-management disputes.

But he's been reconciling the unreconcilable for 20 years, and if he's under pressure now he isn't showing it. Under-fire cool is his professional mien. Even when the going gets roughest, he says, his heart thumps a lackadaisical 51 beats per minute, far slower than most people's.

In an interview this week, his collar was open and his long legs sprawled across a table. Occasionally, he excused himself to take a phone call from a baseball mogul or a congressman. Conducting such behind-the-scenes soundings is a chief part of his job.

He is so unruffable, Moffett says, that sometimes during a heated bargaining session one of the participants accuses him of lethargy bordering on indifference. That goes with the territory, too, he says: one of his roles is lightning rod.

One reason he can be relaxed, he says — and this might sound like heresy — is that he thinks there are worse things in the world than strikes.

An economic situation that forbade them from occuring would be worse, he says. Strikes, he argues, are the price of economic democracy.

For all that, he hates to see them occur in disputes he has been mediating.

"You feel rotten," he says. "You always think there must have been something I did wrong. Unless you're totally without a conscience, you always wind up blaming yourself."

Moffett has no bag of tricks. His key technique is to listen hard for the nuances by which each party signals its minimum demands.

Then he plays what he calls "what if." Knowing one side's bottom line, he goes to the other side, and asks: "What if they offered this?"

It sounds simple, but it doesn't work if both sides don't trust the mediator to keep their secrets.

"Ken has their trust," says labor lawyer David Vaughn, a former colleague. "Mediating is very much a listening game, and he's a skilled listener. He's far more than just a shoulder to cry on. He knows how to get inside the parties' heads.

"Ken knows that no matter what, you can't get excited. If you do, you become part of the problem. He's very good about being very calm under a lot of pressure. He's a real deadpan."

Leonard, Hearns seek titles

HOUSTON (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns, headed for a big-money fall showdown, will fight in the Astrodome Thursday night — Leonard as a challenger to unbeaten Ayub Kalule and Hearns in a title defense against a opponent who has a ranking, but a mediocre record.

Leonard, the World Boxing Council welterweight champion, will attempt to win the World Boxing Association junior middleweight title from Kalule in the closed-circuit television show.

Hearns, who has scored 29 knockouts in winning all 31 of his pro fights, will defend the World Boxing Association welterweight title against Pablo Baez, a Dominican living in Los Angeles. He recently was given the WBA's No. 9 ranking despite a record of 14-8-2, with 13 knockouts.

Leonard's bid against the left-handed Kalule, who is 36-0-0, with 18 knockouts, is a test to see how the 147-pound division champion handles extra weight. A good performance by Leonard at 154 pounds could mean he would campaign for the middleweight (160-pound limit) title in the not-to-distant future. Marvin Hagler holds the middleweight championship, the only undisputed one in boxing.

But first there is the showdown with Hearns, and Mike Trainer, Leonard's attorney, has let it be known that Sugar Ray will fight the 6-foot-1 Hearns only in the 147-pound division. A fighter no longer can hold more than one title at a time, as Henry Armstrong did when he was featherweight, lightweight and welterweight champion in 1938.

The purses for a Leonard-Hearns bout should at least equal the paydays for the second Leonard-Duran fight, when Leonard got $7 million and won the WBC welterweight title back from Duran, who got $8 million. Leonard's purse was $9.5 million when he lost to Duran in Montreal.

Boxing's richest current champion won't exactly fight for pocket money in the Astrodome, He will get $2.5 million, while Kalule, an Ugandan living in Denmark, will get $150,000 plus money from advertising on his trunks and on the ring posts. Hearns will get $500,000 and Baez $50,000.

In what is being billed as a special 10-round bout, Jose "Pipino" Cuevas of Mexico, who lost the WBA welterweight title on a two-round knockout by Hearns, will fight Jorgen Hansen of Denmark, the European welter champion.

Florida St. wins AIAW golf

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Barbara Bunkowsky's even-par 74 helped Florida State capture the Association of Intercollegiate Athletic for Women's national golf championship Saturday by 3 shots over favored Georgia.

The Lady Bulldogs did claim the individual championship, however, when Terri Moody edged Patti Rizzo of Miami by 2 shots in a three-hole playoff.

Both Moody and Rizzo finished regulation play with 296 totals on the 6,044-yard, par-74 University of Georgia course.

Arguello defeats Watt for WBC lightweight title

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — Alexis Arguello of Nicaragua won the World Boxing Council lightweight title by outpointing defending champion Jim Watt of Scotland over 15 rounds at Wembley Arena Saturday night.

Arguello, who now lives in Miami, completely dominated the fight and put Watt down for a count of eight in the seventh round.

He became the sixth boxer in history to win a world title in three different weight divisions. He previously was featherweight and junior lightweight champion.

The judges' decision was unanimous.

Robert Desgain of Belgium scored it 147-143 for Arguello, Dick Young of the United States had it 147-137 and Kurt Hallbach of West Germany also scored it 147-143.

Watt, 32, had held the title for more than two years. He had successfully defended on four occasions but was fighting outside his native Glasgow for the first time in three years.

Arguello, a master technician, found no problem in coping with Watt's southpaw style and now has won a remarkable 15 out of 16 title fights.

Watt, his face a crimson mess at the end, was cheered on by 3,000 Scottish fans in a disappointing crowd of 7,000.

He fought gamely to the end but was outclassed by the crisper punching and skillful combinations of the Latin American.

Kuhn might as well have bullseye target on forehead

An AP Sports Analysis
By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Bowie Kuhn could paint a bullseye on his forehead and not be any more inviting a target than he has become lately.

He is one of those people who is easily recognizable. At 6-foot-5, he stands out in a crowd, a tall, stately man wearing wire-rimmed glasses that give him a scholarly look.

He is a high-profile personality, and with baseball in the second week of an unprecedented mid-season strike, plenty of people are taking potshots at the man who is the titular head of the national pastime.

Last week, three owners huddled with Kuhn, urging him to start some movement toward settling the strike. There have been reports that George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees, Edward Bennett Williams of the Baltimore Orioles and Eddie Chiles of the Texas Rangers, even suggested that the commissioner's job might be at stake if this sorry affair drags on much longer.

Chiles was quoted as saying to the commissioner, "I've got hired hands working for me and when they don't do the job they're fired. You're a hired hand."

That may be exactly the problem for Kuhn. He is, after all, nothing more than an employee of the 26 club owners, hardly an impartial figure in the strike scenario. He often tries to tread a middle road, but the players association always views his role with suspicion.

For the commissioner's part, the job threats are empty ones. He has been a Wall Street attorney and could slip back to those roots with very little trouble. "Quite frankly," Kuhn has said, "I don't need this job."

He has had the post for 12½ years, succeeding Gen. William Eckert on Feb. 4, 1969 when he was 42 years old. Kuhn was drafted for the commissioner's post while serving as National League attorney.

Interestingly, the current NL attorney, Louis Hoynes, made important points for himself earlier this month when he argued and won baseball's case against the National Labor Relations Board in federal court before Judge Henry Werker. The NLRB wanted an injunction to rescind baseball's free agent compensation plan and delay any possible strike for one year. The labor board has filed charges of unfair labor practices against baseball because negotiators have steadfastly refused to open their books, while at the same time some club owners and Kuhn have painted a dreary financial picture of the game.

But part of Hoynes' trial strategy described Kuhn as having no significance in the negotiations with the players and diminished the commissioner's importance as a spokesman for the game.

Kuhn is serving his second term as commissioner and his contract extends until Aug. 1, 1983. Under its terms, however, the owners must inform him from six to 15 months before its expiration of their intentions to rehire him or to find a new man for the job. That means Kuhn's notification period runs from next May until February 1983.

If Kuhn's job actually was threatened by Steinbrenner, Williams and Chiles last week, there is a good deal of irony involved. In 1975, the commissioner survived a threat to his employment which was led in large measure by the same three clubs. Steinbrenner was serving a Kuhn-imposed suspension from baseball at the time but was believed to be involved along with Jerold Hoffberger of the Orioles and Brad Corbett of the Rangers.

The crisis occurred at the All Star break in Milwaukee with Oakland's Charles O. Finley, a longtime Kuhn adversary, spearheading the movement against the commissioner. Only an overnight delay in the final vote won by longtime Kuhn ally Walter O'Malley of the Los Angeles Dodgers gave the commissioner's forces enough time to marshal support for him and save his job.

The opposition then was clearly defined. Finley had clashed frequently with Kuhn over the operation of the Oakland club. Steinbrenner was angry over his suspension which followed his conviction for making illegal campaign contributions during the Watergate era. Hoffberger claimed the commissioner had interfered in the proposed sale of the Orioles. Corbett reportedly felt simply that baseball need a more colorful leader than Kuhn.

Conditions in baseball have changed drastically since Kuhn's 1975 crisis. Free agency has revolutionized the economics of the game. Twelve teams have been sold since then, including Seattle, one of two new clubs added to the major leagues in the the most recent expansion. It is hard to determine just who Kuhn's allies and enemies would be in any new showdown.

When reports circulated last week that Kuhn might be in jeopardy again, baseball's executive council issued a statement of support for the commissioner.

Still, there appear to be pockets of unhappiness among the current crop of owners, disturbed by the strike which has interrupted their season. They could be looking for a target and Kuhn is a convenient, inviting one. The testimony before Werker was hardly encouraging for the commissioner, who was turned into something of a straw man by Hoynes' case.

Strike could help Zimmer keep job

DALLAS (AP) — The longer the baseball strike lasts the better chance Don Zimmer has of being the Texas Ranger manager next year.

They've played a cold brand of hardball at Arlington Stadium under owners Bob Short and Brad Corbett, who went through 11 managers in eight years.

Corbett set the franchise record with five managers in one year in 1977.

Now, the 50-year-old Zimmer, the rotund, crew-cut man the Boston Red Sox fans loved to boo, is getting a one-year make-good shot from new owner Eddie Chiles, who is trying to bring some stability to the organization.

The man who hired Zimmer, Executive Vice President for Baseball Operations Eddie Robinson, has looked on anxiously as the Rangers got off to their best start in their nine-year history.

The Rangers were 33-22 when the strike was called, 1½ games behind Oakland in the American League West.

Zimmer used the bench and bullpen effectively. He turned the Rangers into the best hitting and fielding team in the league through what would have been the first one-third of the season.

The Rangers' .284 team batting average was best in the AL and their fielding percentage of .986 tied with Detroit for the top spot. Texas' designated hitters were stroking the ball at a .325 pace, best in the league.

Jenkins had the worst earned run average on the team (5.26) and was 4-5. Matlack had a 4.00 ERA with a 3-5 record.

Zimmer solved the Ranger fielding problems by going with Mario Mendoza at shortstop and giving first base to Pat Putnam, who had a good hit and gruesome glove reputation.

When injuries struck the Rangers, Zimmer's bench came through. Bill Stein hit .441 while playing third base for Buddy Bell. Mike Wagner hit .345 subbing for Mendoza. And Leon Roberts hit .323 playing left field for Billy Sample.

Of course, Robinson must share the spotlight because he was smart enough in the off-season to trade Seattle for Mendoza, Roberts and pitcher Rick Honeycutt (6-1). And he got Wagner from Detroit.

But who would have suffered if Zimmer's moves on the field had failed?

In Texas, the manager's head always has rolled when things were dicey.

Also, if Robinson had been as smart as Billy Martin and sent the team to camp early, a la the Oakland A's, things could have been different. The A's pitchers were ready for a torrid start. Oakland anticipated a strike. Texas didn't.

Zimmer has received no assurances he will be back next year.

But not even the Texas Rangers would dare fire a manager who has produced like he has.

Would they?

Brock to join Chisox radio team

CHICAGO (AP) — Lou Brock, who stole a record 938 bases and batted .302 during his major league career, will join the Chicago White Sox's broadcasting team once the baseball strike is over.

"We feel very fortunate," said Einhorn. "We said we had been planning to enlarge our announcing team and this seemed a good time to do it."

Brock will appear only on television and will team with play-by-play announcer Harry Caray. Jimmy Piersall, who had been paired with Caray, will team with Joe O'Connell, while Rich King will continue as the swing man.

"This gives us two expert analysts and two top play-by-play men," said Einhorn.

Austin defeats Jaeger in battle of teenagers

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Tracy Austin blitzed Andrea Jaeger 6-3, 6-4 Saturday in a teenage battle for the singles title of the $125,000 BMW women's grass court tennis championships, a stagesetter for Wimbledon.

Austin, 18, took 1 hour, 13 minutes to defeat Jaeger, a 16-year-old schoolgirl from Lincolnshire, Ill., and retain the title.

Austin, who did not drop a set in six matches the tournament, said the win confirmed in her own mind that she had made a complete recovery from the sciatic nerve injury that kept her out of action for nearly five months.

She had played only six competitive matches since January before this tournament, but she was in brilliant form throughout the week.

"It is certainly a good way to go into Wimbledon," said Austin, of Rolling Hills, Calif. "I've proved I'm mentally tough and physically strong for six days in a row."

Jaeger, who had excelled herself in beating two-time Wimbledon champion Martina Navratilova in Friday's semifinals, was unable to raise her game again and made too many unforced errors.

Top-seeded Austin was far more consistent from the baseline and controlled the pattern of the match, although in the second set Jaeger clawed her way back from 0-4 to 4-4.

"I just didn"t play 100 per cent," Jaeger said. "I think I went for a little too much. I went for too many winners when I was out of position and made stypid mistakes."

Jaeger appeared to have Austin worried at 4-4, when she won the eighth game on a disputed line call.

Completely out of character, Austin argued with the umpire and accused of him of only overruling in her opponent's favor.

Tanner falls in net finals

BRISTOL, England (AP) — Mark Edmondson of Australia served in great style Saturday and defeated Roscoe Tanner 6-3, 5-7, 6-4 in the final of the Lambert and Butler grass courts tennis tournament.

The American lefthander suffered a blow to his prestige two days before the start of Wimbledon, where he is the No. 8 seed. Edmondson is not seeded.

But there was no doubt about the result Saturday. The 26-year-old Australian outserved Tanner and outvolleyed him in winning $15,000.

Tanner, known for his big serve, said: "I don"t think I played that badly, but all credit to Mark. He was simply in great form."

Edmondson ran through the first set in 24 minutes, dropping only six points in his five service games.

He might have won in straight sets, because Tanner struggled to hold on to his first three service games in the second. But the American weathered the storm and got his only service break of the match in the 12th game to level at one-set each.

Are sports fishermen really perverts?

KENNY REDIN'S
Fin & Feather

Are sports fishermen perverts? Is sport fishing evil?

Unfortunatley, as we mentioned in our last column, there are thousands of school children across the United States who would answer yes to those questions if they had read and believed the anti-fishing propaganda that has been widely distributed to students in our nation's elementry schools.

EXAMPLE: "When a fish is caught on a cruel hook, he tries desperately to get away. He is fighting for his life. Is it sporting for a big human being to laugh and call that fun?"

So reads a statement printed by KIND in our last column where we described KIND's function as being an organization here on this earth. In addition, the pamphlet urges its young readers to encourage adults to stop fishing. And it goes on to say, "When we find ways of having fun that do not cause pain and death to any other living thing, we'll all be happier."

Partially because of such misinformation, Congress is currently considering bills S. 546 and H.R. 2250 which, if passed, would help crush an anti-fishing movement directed at U.S. school children. Among the most outspoken advocates of the proposed legislation is Ray Scott, president of the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society, a national fishing organization with 385,000 dues-paying members.

"UNTIL NOW, fishermen haven't had an effective way to combat fanatics who seek to destroy sportsfishing," says Scott. "As a result, many of our youngsters, especially those in lower grades, have been brainwashed into believing that fishing is wrong, even sinful. We adults should be ashamed we have permitted that to happen. It won't continue, though, if Congress acts favorable on the Dingell-Johnson expansion bills. But I hate to think of the image that school children will have of sportfishing if the bills do not pass."

Since 1950, fishermen have been paying 10 percent excise taxe on purchases of rods, reels, lures and creels. Under the expansion, anglers would pay 10 percent on virtually all tackle items, and three percent on depth-finders, certain boats, outboard motors and boat trailers. The tax money collected by the federal government — an estimated $8 to $100 million — would be channeled to the states and used exclusively for much-needed fisheries and improvements projects — stocking, reservoir construction, boat ramp construction and maintenance, research and pollution control.

"The list of taxable items must be enlarged," says Scott. "Otherwise, we won't be able to adequately sustain our fisheries resource or provide safe boating access to our waters. The fishermen — the guys who will foot the bill — are for the expansion, and so are President Reagan, Vice-President Bush and Interior Secretary Watt."

ONE OF the bill's most important provisions allows states to allocate up to 10 percent of their D-J money for youth-oriented "aquatic education" programs. Subjects covered will include species identification, water conservation, preservation of fisheries resource and basic fishing techniques.

"Children will then be exposed to the truth about fishing," says Scott. "They will learn to appreciate its joys; they will learn that fishing isn't sinful; that it isn't cruel; that people who fish aren't preverts. Passage of the D-J expansion bills would mean defeat for the anti-fishing crowd who are on record as being against the propagation of a specie for what they call 'sporting slaughter.'"

Besides the anti-fishermen, other opponents of the D-J expansion include the National Marine Manufacturers Association and the American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers Association. The latter two groups are fighting passage of the bills, says Scott, "because they're more interested in short-term profits than in the future welfare of fishing or the long-term recreational pleasures of fishermen. They're so shortsighted that they're willing to sacrifice fishing merely to gain a few immediate dollars. They're simply greedy!

"As far as I'm concerned, these two groups have jumped — perhaps unknowingly — right into bed with the anti-fishermen, the same people who are trying to poison our children's minds against the sport, and the same people have been successful in hampering dove hunting and deer hunting in several states. Can you imagine that the boating and fishing industry aligned with the anti-fishermen? It's sad. Actually it's criminal.

"But I'm convinced," continues Scott, "That the D-J expansion will pass if America's fishermen and boaters write their congressmen and express their strong support of the measure. That's something we owe to ourselves and our children."

Earthworm most popular fishing bait

There are wild worms and tame worms, worms big enough to entice lunker bass, and worms dainty enough to tempt blue gills and perch.

"I don't care if you fish for catfish, white perch, bass, whatever ... nothing beats these critters. I mean worms are the No. 1 bait," said Ron M. Manning, owner of Jackson Wholesale Bait Co. in Jackson, Miss.

When they are available, worms dug out of the fisherman's garden "would be the best. They'd be the freshest," said Jim Anderson of Anderson Wholesale Bait Co. in Buford, Ga.

Those worms would be ideal for pan fish fishing, he said.

"But for larger fish, you need a larger worm. And nobody had domesticated these larger worms such as the Canadian nightcrawler. Those are what you need for bass, catfish or trout," Anderson said.

Manning, an avowed worm fisherman, said the best fishing worm for most uses is the hybrid redworm.

"They come from breeders and farms. They're hybridized to make sure they jump around on the hook. It's big business, and it's only for fishin'," he said.

Just be sure, he said, to hook them so they can wiggle.

Many hybrid redworms are toughened by training, he said.

Worm farmers "put them in a mixture of peat moss, any variety of sphagnum-type peat moss to fatten them and roughen them up. Sometimes there's sawdust mixed in, anything harder than their normal environment of dirt and clay," Manning explained.

"By crawling through that they tend to get a little tougher and are better fish bait because they last longer on the hook."

Redworms also are gathered by "grunting" them out of the ground, Anderson said.

To "grunt" worms, "take an old stake, about 18 inches long, and drive it into the ground 8 to 10 inches. Then take an old, dull handsaw or a leaf from a leaf spring (from a car's suspension) and rub it over one corner. It will actually grunt and the worms will come out of their holes," he said.

Other worms gathered from the wild include the Canadian nightcrawler, found primarily in Canada, Ohio and North Carolina.

Good pickers working when the temperature and moisture are right, can make up to $250 a night collecting these large worms.

The Canadian nightcrawler makes especially valuable bait because it can be kept refrigerated for several months, provided it's fed regularly and its peat moss bedding is changed every three weeks.

Most other worms can't make it two weeks after they are picked from the ground.

Anderson and Manning agreed that worm raising is not for the average person, despite some sales claims. Worm beds must be kept properly moist and lighted, properly cooled and turned. The worms must be fed regularly.

But a small bed, Anderson said, can be valuable to a parent and child who go fishing together. It can be the child's job to take care of the worm bed.

Try cockroach for catching crappie

Copley News Service

It's difficult to work up much enthusiasm for cockroaches, even though the swift little pests probably are the No. 1 bait for crappie.

The trick is to find a fisherman with the courage to put his hand in a cockroach bait box and extract a live, squirming roach.

And nobody who catches crappie with cockroaches will ever admit that they trapped their bait at home. It's always in an abandoned shed somewhere or on a garbage heap.

The lore of fishing takes specific note of cockroaches, listing them No. 1 among panfish baits. The suggestion is offered that the roaches should be hooked only with "light wire worm hooks" because they are quick to succumb if impaled roughly on a thick hook and, of course, they reach their maximum usefulness as bait only when most alive and vigorously kicking.

How is a fisherman to catch a roach?

Fisherman's Encyclopedia offers this: Hollow out a loaf of bread and bait it with bacon drippings and sugar. Leave it in the back yard overnight. Any roaches around, they'll assemble.

A plane piloted by Ralph Neal, 50, of San Luis Obispo, Nev., hangs from electric powerlines Friday near Las Vegas. It took rescue workers five hours to extract Neal from the stranded aircraft.

Pilot rescued from plane

BULLHEAD CITY, Ariz. (AP) — For five hours, Ralph Neal was as 'cool as a cucumber." But he collapsed when rescuers finally got him out of his small plane, which was tangled in 230,000-volt electric transmission lines 95 feet over a small canyon, officials say.

The 50-year-old student pilot from San Luis Obispo, Calif., received only a scratch on the arm in the incident Friday, which ended when authorities built a makeshift road to within cherry-picker distance of the suspended aircraft.

Neal "missed death in four or five different ways," said Chief Deputy Sandy Green of the Mohave County Sheriff's Department. "I don't know why he didn't fry."

The impact of the crash knocked out electricity for an hour in nearby Kingman, authorities said. One man was arrested on charges of breaking into a pharmacy during the blackout.

Neal, who works for River Realty Real Estate here, said he would not comment on the incident until he has talked with Federal Aviation Administration officials.

Bullhead City Fire Chief Larry Adams said Neal was on a solo flight from Bullhead City to Flagstaff and back when the Cessna 190 single-engine plane, owned by Aeromed Flying School here, got entangled in the transmission lines Thursday night.

"On his approach to the Bullhead airport, he tangled in power lines two miles off the end of the runway shortly before 10 p.m.," Adams'said. "He was in radio contact with the airport, but it still took us 45 minutes to find the plane.

"The plane was just hanging up there by one wheel," said Adams, one of the first to arrive at the crash site, in a desert area two miles north of the airport and a mile north of Davis Dam. "We looked in the manuals, and there weren't any instructions on how to handle that."

House subcommittee urges caution in Chinese arms sales

By LEE LESCAZE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A House subcommittee has unanimously urged President Reagan not to sell Taiwan the FX or any other advanced combat aircraft now and to approach arm sales to China "with the greatest caution."

The letter, signed by all eight subcommittee members and delivered to the White House Friday, was written after a series of subcommittee hearings that explored U.S. policy toward China and Taiwan.

The Reagan administration is reviewing the U.S.-Taiwan strategic relationship. Reagan has indicated in the past that he might look favorably on upgrading Taiwan's Air Force with a new generation of aircraft to supplement the F5E, currently Taiwan's main combat plane.

"After the most careful consideration of the military threat to Taiwan, and the relative balance of power between (China) and Taiwan, during which we had a particularly useful hearing in executive session by the leading analysts of these precise questions from the intelligence community, we have come to the conclusion that it would be a misstake to sell the FX, or any other advanced combat aircraft to Taiwan, at this time," the letter said.

It added that every witness who testified "agreed that military tensions in the Taiwan straits were at an all-time low."

Two killed in Syrian shelling

By KATE DORIAN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian shelling of Lebanese Christian strongholds in Beirut and the eastern city of Zahle killed two people Saturday and wounded several others, police said.

The renewed shelling undermined a cease-fire between the Syrian troops and Christian militias worked out on June 9 by mediators from the 20-nation Arab League.

Police said one person was killed and 11 others were wounded in Christian-populated East Beirut, while one person was killed in Zahle, 30 miles east of the capital.

The latest round of violence started April 1 with heavy artillery and rocket duels between Syrian troops and Christian militias dominated by the conservative Phalange party.

Syria has an estimated 22,000 troops stationed in Lebanon under an Arab League mandate to police the 1975-76 civil war armistice. The Christians claim the Syrians have become an occupation army bent on destroying them because of Israel's close support of the Phalange.

Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopters in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley on April 28 to protect the Christians. The Syrians retaliated by deploying anti-aircraft missiles in the area the next day. Israel has threatened to attack the area unless the missiles are withdrawn.

President Reagan's envoy, Philip C. Habib, met with Saudi Arabian officials in Jidda Saturday about ways to defuse the missile crisis, but no details were announced. The Saudis help bankroll the Syrians.

Habib flew to Saudi Arabia on Friday from Tel Aviv, where Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told reporters the U.S. envoy's 10-day-old mediation effort had achieved "no results" so far.

In Damascus, the official Syrian newspaper Tishrin accused the Reagan administration of undermining Habib's mediation by favoring Israel. It said Washington was "not allowing Habib to maneuver and consequently his mission was paralyzed from the start."

Habib's first round of Middle East shuttle diplomacy last May has been widely credited with averting open war between Syria and Israel. But his efforts to bring Israel and the Arab states closer together was thrown off course June 7 when Israeli jets destroyed Iraq's nuclear reactor.

Arab outrage over the Israeli attack has been unanimous. Official newspapers in Kuwait, Jordan and the Persian Gulf state of Qatar all expressed disappointment over what they called a "weak resolution" by the U.N. Security Council Friday condemning the attack.

Egypt, which has signed a peace treaty with Israel, called on the Organization of African Unity Saturday to condemn aggressive acts by Israel, such as the reactor raid, and to demand "a system of inspection of Israeli nuclear activities."

The proposal was in a resolution submitted to the OAU ministerial council in Nairobi, Kenya. It bitterly attacked Israel for its alleged "procrastination" in the Middle East peace process, expansionism and acts of aggression against Arab countries including Lebanon.

QUILTING

Story by Nancy Lord

Photos by Chad Puerling

Quilting, a hobby and art form which has been practiced for thousands of years, seems to be making a big comeback in America today.

A quilt is a bedcovering made up of three layers — a decorative top sheet, a middle layer of fluffy filling and a backing or lining layer. Properly done, these layers should be secured with lines of running stitches in various designs called quilting.

Tools used in this hobby include quilting thread and needles, patterns and fabrics. The actual quilting is done by stretching the fabric across a quilting frame or a lap hoop, which resembles a large embroidery hoop.

Since the United States bicentennial, quilting has become more popular, according to Jean Roberts, founder of the Midland Quilter's Guild.

She believes that one reason for the surge in popularity of this beautiful and practical hobby is that many people have grown tired of knitting, crocheting and needlepoint and want to find a different way to express their creativity.

Mrs. Roberts, who teaches quilting classes at the Needle Nook in Midland, got the group started in October of 1979. She says she left flyers at the various fabric stores in Midland inviting persons interested in quilting to attend an organizing meeting.

About 20 persons showed up for that first meeting, and the guild was formed.

Since that time the club's membership has grown to some 50 persons. The guild is divided into two groups, one of which meets in the afternoon and the other at night. This way, those who work or have other obligations during the day may also join.

Each group meets once a month, and dues are $5 per year.

"It's really just now gotten off the ground," Mrs. Roberts notes. She said many of the people who join don't know very much about quilting.

The purpose of the guild, according to Mrs. Roberts, is to meet other quilters, to promote quilting and quilting activities and to share different techniques.

Members of the group are different ages and have various backgrounds. "All walks of life are represented," says Pat Houck, president of the evening group.

They also have various reasons for joining. One member, Barbara Long, says she had a lot of sewing scraps she wanted to use up and she thought quilting would be a way to put them to good use. "I really enjoy it," she notes.

"I've always loved quilts," Maribelle Wald explains. She says she particularly likes the feel of a quilt.

Elsie Dean says she became interested in quilting while sitting with her mother while she was in the hospital and needed something to occupy her time. She had never quilted before she joined the group about a year ago, but since that time she has pieced together six quilts.

"It's just something I had always wanted to do," explains Kathy Michelson, one of the younger members of the group.

Mrs. Michelson has been instrumental in organizing a quilt exhibit at the Museum of the Southwest entitled "History of American Quilts." The exhibit will begin Aug. 20 and continue through Nov. 29 and will feature quilts from various museums and private collections, as well as a few local exhibitors.

STRING QUILTING — This variation consists of long, narrow scraps of fabric sewn together on a foundation of fabric or paper, after which they are cut into various designs.

APPLIQUE — This is a needle art form that allows the quilter to decorate quilts by sewing on various shapes and scenes.

CRAZY QUILTING — Patchwork pieces of random size, shape and color are sewn together with no particular pattern. These quilts are then embroidered with various designs.

In addition to bedcovers, Mrs. Roberts says that quilted clothing is also popular.

"It takes a long time to make a bed quilt, but you can whip clothing up in no time," she notes. She also points out that you have to invite people into your home to show off a bed quilt, but you can show off clothing just by wearing them.

Tools of the trade include scissors, quilting thread and needles, pins, patterns and fabric.

Barbara Long uses a lap hoop.

Very small stitches are required to connect pieces properly.

Newlyweds opt for traditional homes

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Not many brides and grooms are writing their own wedding service these days. Rustic weddings on mountaintops or meadows with both bride and groom sporting the same long hairdo, popular in the 1970s, are also out of favor.

Being outrageous during and after the ceremony is out of fashion, according to a sampling of expert opinion. Instead, tradition is back where weddings are concerned.

It is reflected in the fact that marriages are steadily increasing and are expected to continue to rise through at least 1983. It is also seen in a rise in the number of formal weddings, say caterers and others who serve the bridal market.

Couples are going traditional when it comes to choosing some of their home furnishings, as well. Although not always recognized as such, the bridal market IS a home furnishings market.

Of the estimated $12.5 billion in sales that weddings are said to generate each year, more than half (51.5 percent) goes for home furnishings and household equipment, says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's Magazine.

According to a home furnishings trade publication, the bridal market accounts for 50 percent of dinnerware sales, 48 percent of sterling sales and 40 percent of glassware sales.

Ms. Tober and others report a growing interest in bridal registries at gift and department stores, after a decline during the 1970s.

These registers enable a couple to record their choices for china, silver flatware and crystal and other household needs and to avoid duplication in gifts.

"Just about every major store in the country has one or is trying to figure out how to implement a bridal registry," said E. T. Catlett, Jr., president of Royal Doulton of America. Some stores that did not have bridal registers have added them, and others that did have them have improved and expanded them, he explained.

The register formerly concentrated mainly on the couple's choice of luxury tableware. Today, items such as sheets and towels, blankets, pots and pans, small electric appliances and other household necessities and luxuries are equally prominent on register lists. Brides and grooms (or more traditionally brides and their mothers) tend to have longer lists today after meeting with the store's bridal consultant, added Catlett.

The tabletop industry keeps close tabs on style preferences of brides, since a goodly portion of luxury items for the table are sold to this market. (Royal Doulton, for example, estimates that 50 percent of its American sales go to the bridal market.)

Brides have always been conservative in taste where china patterns are concerned, noted John Bellak, Royal Doulton's managing director. Brides are careful to choose something safe that will be usable over a long period of time, said Bellak.

But interest in elegant and formal tableware seems to be on the increase. The best-selling pattern at Lenox, for example, is a very traditional Victorian style that dates from 1919, said Bob Sullivan, vice president of Lenox China-Crystal, Inc.

In crystal, the idea of one over-size wine glass suitable for all occasions, popularized in the 1970s, has given way to a desire for at least three sizes — the water goblet, the wine glass and the champagne-sherbert. Most brides choose at least these three sizes.

Since sociologists tell us that life is getting more informal, why should there be a return to formality in articles of tableware?

Catlett and Bellak of Royal Doulton put it down to growth of interest in the home. "People are more interested and more sophisticated about wine, gourmet foods and entertaining. This has raised the level of interest and taste of many consumers," said Catlett.

Like the rest of the population, brides are more sophisticated, better educated, more affluent and better traveled than once was the case. Many plan to continue working after marriage.

Since statistics indicate — and experts confirm — that the bridal market is eager to embrace the finest products the home furnishings industry has for sale, consumers can expect to see continued growth of such products aimed at today's brides and grooms.

Rags to riches

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Raggedy Ann doll was first manufactured by a New York bookseller as a means to promote Raggedy Ann books. Before long the customers wanted the dolls more than the books, reported Museum Magazine.

Today, Raggedy Ann can be found at the free Indianapolis Children's Museum, housed humbly among an extensive exhibit of other dolls, some dating back 150 years.

Bat business

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — To produce wood bats for amateur players, a leading manufacturer takes about eight seconds. For major-league players requiring custom design and hand crafting, it takes about 20 minutes to transform a billet of ash into a bat.

WASHINGTON — If there's one subject parents find tougher to talk with their kids about than sex, says family therapist Audrey Bridgeforth-Chapman, it's death.

"People put off talking about death until it happens," she says. "But then there's so much emotion involved, it's even harder to discuss."

(One reason death is rarely discussed with children is because "adults themselves have problems dealing with it, probably because it puts us in touch with something no one wants to think about — the fact that each of us will die.

"We buy life insurance, but hope never to use it. We sit in church and say we want to be nearer God, but add silently, 'Please, not me right now.' So we're reluctant, or affraid, or uncertain of what to say to our kids."

But there's no way, says Chapman, to avoid the subject, "particularly in the black community. There's a high rate of homicide amongst blacks — people are familiar with the phenomenon of black-on-black crime."

(There has been a "marked increase" in the number of black suicides over the past 10 years, according to Dr. Jay Chunn, dean of the Howard University School of Social Work, who calls the problem an "epidemic" among black youth and young adults.)

"And then there's Atlanta," says Chapman. "It's created an atmosphere of fear across the nation among all black families. Many parents say, 'I don't know what to say or do for my children; they no longer feel safe anywhere.' Many are just as frightened as their children."

Chapman sees these reactions to death frequently in her work as a community mental health therapist with the Howard University Counseling Service, where she specializes in the concerns of adolescents.

Three years ago she prepared a "mini-conference" on discussing death with children at the request of parents and teachers who said the subject was "coming up frequently in the classroom."

She is now working on a model program for counseling bereaved families and community members in Atlanta. "Atlanta raises anxieties that need to be discussed," she says. "It's painful, but the best way to help people is to talk about it.

"You don't want to paralize or overwhelm your child, but you can ask — with compassion and openess — 'How does it make you feel?' You want children to know that the family, the commuity and the police are going to do whatever they can to protect them 8 including having rules about knowing where they are at all times.

"But it's not wise to say," 'It's not going to happen to you,' because that's not something you can guarantee. You want to help children put it in perspective...so they understand this isn't something than happens 365 days a year."

The best way to talk to children about death, says Chapman, is "beforehand, when it comes up naturally." Logical times are when a pet dies or when a character in a book or TV show or movie dies.

"You can even have a little funeral for pets, so the child know how it's done." While she doesn't advise conducting funerals after the demise of every bug or turtle, "I don't think it hurts to have it one time."

"Death is a part of life, so it's pointless — or harmful — to ignore it. It's part of a child's development, too, to have that fear of scarey things — monsters and ghosts and death." These fears, usually apparent around age 4 or 5, decrease in adolescence.

The "biggest mistake" people make, says Chapman, "is not talking about death in an honest manner. One mother told her child that the grandfather went to sleep when he died. Then she got concerned when the child began having trouble sleeping."

When a parent refuses to dicuss death honestly, a child often makes up an explanation. 'Even if you don't tell the child what's going on, he or she is going to sense that something's happening. There are a lot of phone calls, and their parents are talking in whispers."

From the bits and pieces of information children overhear, they may create a distorted fantasy. Children — because of their egocentric view — may, for example, conclude that they are responsible for the unusual behavior, and-or the death.

"As with sex," says Chapman, "it's not necessary to give a child a long, involved explanation. Just answer simply, as best you can, keeping in mind the age of the child. Obviously a 5-year-old will understand on a different level than a 15-year old."

Parents, she says, often don't understand the several psychological stages the bereaved — adults and children — go through.

"The first is denial. As with any kind of loss — of a job, divorce, getting robbed — the first impulse is to say, 'No, it didn't happen."

Then comes anger or depression, often displaced on an unrelated person or thing. "Someone at work who's usually cool may snap at you because they're really upset about their loss."

Next is guilt, which often includes a bargaining process — particulalry if someone is dying. "It's the desire to promise 'I'll do anything you want Lord, if you spare this person.'"

Last comes acceptance. To get to this point, Chapman believes crying is necessary: "I hink it cleanses the soul." Attending the funeal can be helpful "becuse it makes you admit the fact that the person's gone, and begins to take you through the grief process."

Children from "a mature 4-or 5-year-old and up," she says, "could probably handle a funeral and should take part. The parent should describe a funeral a little bit, and ask the child if they want to go. But don't force them if they don't want to go."

Someone who doesn't work through each "grief stage," she says, may get stuck in one — which can cause psychological problems. A child stuck in the depressed stage could get rashes or start bedwetting.

"All members of the deceased person's family will be experiencing these phases, so the adults will also need to ventilate their feelings. Sometimes parents need to admit their own uneasiness, an say, 'Mom and Dad are upset now, too."

"They may need to go ask for help first, so they can become comfortable enough to assist their children. It's important for people to know there are supports out there, and they are in no way inadequate if they want to seek help from a professional source."

Stichery witchery: Jeans that grow with you

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

Ever heard of expandable jeans? Not a bad idea.

Dear Betty: When my sister was pregnant, she had a pair of marvelous maternity jeans which had an adjustable front panel similar to the Navy's 13-button pants. I have searched for a pattern and in ready-to-wear -- to no avail.

Women who are pregnant now grew up in jeans and hate to part with them for the duration of their pregnancy. Seems to me that some manufacturer could have a good selling item in these!

If any of your readers has a pattern, or knows where I can buy the slide closures, I'd appreciate hearing from them. -- Lucy Mickelson, Missoula, Mont.

I did not find the "pregnant" jeans pattern for you, Lucy, but did locate a couple that might be convertible. Check out Simplicity's 9835 and Butterick's 3344.

Each of these patterns shows a double-closed front panel which would be easy to modify for a "growing" figure.

Dear Betty: Can you tell me how to properly use a border print? Skirt patterns, even straight ones, are curved at the bottom and at the waist. The same for patterns beginning at the shoulder. If the piece is cut straight, it is shorter at the sides when hemmed.

I have several lovely prints I'd like to use. Would appreciate any help you can give me. -- Marian Johnson, Hawthorne, Calif.

Each of the major pattern books shows several patterns featuring border prints. These patterns are cut with a straight edge so that the border can be shown to advantage. Also, these patterns give yardage for border print and regular print lay-outs -- a tremendous help.

Don't think just of skirts when you think of border prints ... try these popular prints in little jackets, vests, dresses, sundresses and other pretty fashions. You will find patterns for these in the books.

Businesswomen to attend annual state convention

Delegates and District Eight winners from the Uptown Midland chapter of Business and Professional Women's Club will be attending the group's State Federation's annual convention in Dallas Friday through Sunday.

Janet Scott, local and district Individual Development Program (IDP) winner, will vie for the state title and a chance to advance to national competition in San Francisco in July.

Miss Scott, who is the investor relations program coordinator for Petroleum Explorations and Development, Inc., will deliver a required five-minute prepared speech entitled "Economics and Politics: Immutable Mix." She will also take a mandatory written examination concerning B&PW history, current events and women's legislation.

Competing in the state "Young Career Woman" (YCW) contest will be Katie Dennedy, local and district winner of the award. She is employed as a systems engineer with IBM and is an honor graduate of the University of New Mexico.

Judging for this contest will be based on resume, personal interview and a round-table discussion.

Local delegates elected to attend the convention to be held at the Dallas Loews Anatole include Karne Clark-Nickel, chapter president; Pam Feist, first vice president and incoming president; Jan Foust, foundation chairman; Lola Igou, women's seminar co-chairman; Diane Newland, director and past president of the chapter and Kathy Peters, 1979-80 District Eight director.

Marion Kimberly is also a state delegate and will serve as coordinator of the IDP speak-off and a breakfast workshop entitled "Group Dynamics." Another delegate, Marjory Straughan, serves on the State YCW program and will assist in a workshop. Miss Scott and Miss Dennedy will also serve as delegates.

The local chapter swept awards in membership, YCW and program categories last year at the state competition. Entries this year include "Membership," Karen Jones, chairman; "YCW," Jana Lloyd Cox, chairman and "Youth Conference and Nike Program," Miss Dennedy, chairman.

B&PW is the oldest and largest organization of working women in the country and membership is open to all women actively engaged in business or the profession, said a group spokesman. Interested persons should contact Sam Guyton, membership chairman, at 683-5591 or 682-4582.

Grandfather hasn't outgrown electric toy trains

By JOHN PLATERO
AP Writer

NORTH MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Using the same care as a father holding a newborn son, Roy Bell picked up his model electric train and praised its mint condition.

It's the exact train some grandfathers may have had if they were youngsters in 1915, when this Lionel train came on the market. Bell remembers them well because he's a 70-year-old grandfather who never grew too old for toy trains.

"Look at that. That's the original paint and those are the original wheels," remarked Bell, who says he's a dealer — not a collector.

"You can't be both," he said with a twang he hasn't lost from his Chattanooga, Tenn. childhood. "A customer gets his mouth all watered up to buy one of your trains and then you decide you don't want to sell it."

Bell has an extensive mail-order business dealing in antique miniature cars, trucks and other vehicles. His customers are in every state of the Union, much of Europe and as far away as Australia.

But he advertises little about his antique train business because he's already accepted by most collectors around the world as an expert in that hobby.

So much, in fact, that he's been consulted in law suits involving design infringements by competing companies.

And if any serious collector needs a certain part for an antique engine, tender or car, he should know that Bell probably has it among the more than $100,000 inventory he keeps on hand. After all, there aren't many antique train dealers in business.

For this working retiree, his love for model trains began when he was 7 years old and his parents gave him a windup set for Christmas.

"An electric train was a status symbol in those days," he recalled. "The rich kids on the other side of the tracks got those," he added, unaware of his pun.

Bell admitted the hobby isn't for kids, because antique model trains, which were first manufactured around 1897, are expensive.

He doesn't like to quote prices on his stock because he's found that collectors usually will offer more than he would ask. He does admit he'll sell his 1915 train — an engine and three cars — for $850. However, he's sold some for a lot more.

Speedy fingers earn typing award

BALTIMORE (AP) — When Gloria Schweigman entered Staff Builders' World's Fastest Typing Contest last year, she went home with just a special T-shirt.

This year the Baltimore woman received not only the title of World's Fastest Typist, but also a grand prize of $1,000, an electronic typewriter and a first-place trophy. In the national contest, co-sponsored by Olivetti, her net winning speed was 114.6 words per minute.

Ms. Schweigman, who is in the word processing department of the Maryland Casualty Co., credits her early piano training for much of her skill on the typewriter.

Retaining employees

CHICAGO (AP) — Although raising an employee's salary is a major reason why he'll remain with your company instead of going elsewhere, there are also many other factors influencing him to stay, reports an executive recruiting firm.

According to Terry D. Parenti, of Parenti and Jacobs, Inc. here, companies which utilize an executive's skills to the fullest, give their executives decision-making roles, permit their executives creative freedom and give their people recognition when they achieve something for the firm, will in the long run have less executive turnover.

Carnations from hem tape

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

At first glance, you may not be able to visualize the flower-making potential of hem binding tape. In reality, however, you can make beautiful carnations from lace tapes available at the dime store.

Hem tapes, laces and trimmings are actually superb materials for floral craft projects. Because the edges of trims are finished, instead of frayed and raw-looking, the resulting flower has neat, clean outlines.

Hem tapes also speed up the flower-making process considerably. In other words, don't be surprised if your first carnation is ready instantly.

MATERIALS: Lace hem binding, about 1.5 inches wide, 20-gauge floral wire, green floral tape, needle and thread, scissors and ruler.

PREPARATION: 1. Cut wire into 24-inch lengths. 2. Straighten wires as much as possible. 3. Fold wires in half.

SEWING: 1. Cut four 8-inch strips of lace. 2. Snip one end of each strip diagonally. 3. Sew gathering stitches near the longest edge of each strip.

MAKING THE FLOWERS: 1. Slip folded wire over one strip of lace, about one-half inch from straight end. 2. Pull ends of thread to gather ribbon. 3. While holding the gathered lace with one hand, pull wire down with the other hand. 4. Tighten threads and tie threads together.

ASSEMBLY: 1. Join all four stem wires together. 2. Wind tape around the flower's base, completely covering all threads. (Note: To make floral tape stick, it is necessary to stretch the tape before wrapping.) 3. Cover stem wires completely. Add more tape if needed to strengthen stem.

Book details tactics on how to sell yourself

Joe Girard, labeled the world's greatest salesman by the Guinness Book of Records and author of "How to Sell Yourself," says we are selling from the time we are born.

He offers these tenents of the trade:

— Sell yourself on you. You are what you think you are. You are the No. 1 person in your life. If you don't believe you're No. 1, no one else will.

— Most people don't have a destination and don't organize their time. Don't try to work in four areas at once. Have one goal and focus on it.

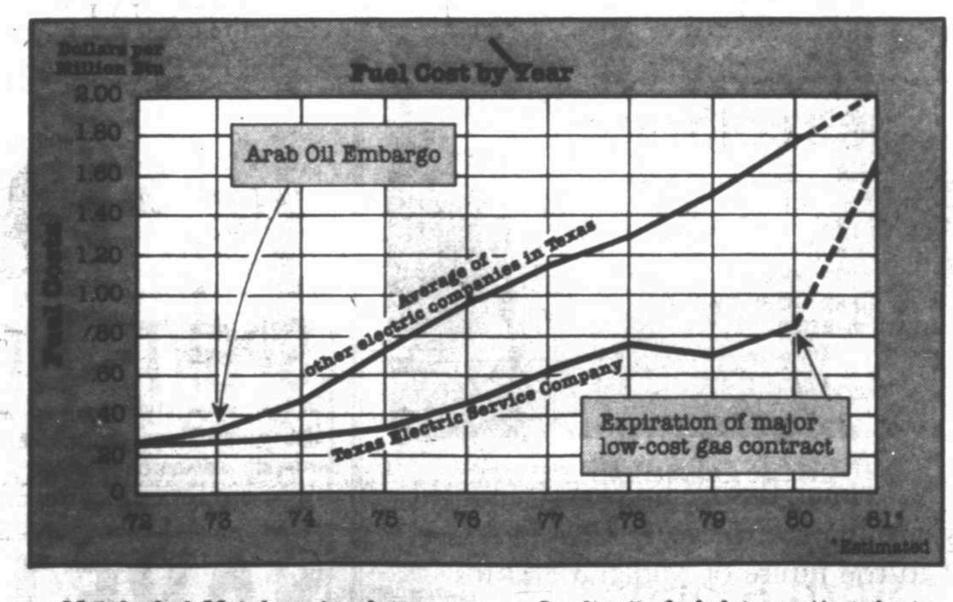

— Don't let other people control your life.

— Concentrate on one step at a time. If you want to climb a mountain, don't look up and see how big it is, concentrate on the first 6 inches. After you've negotiated that, think about the next 6 inches. (Girard's motto, which he has printed on his business cards is: "The elevator to success is out of order, you have to take the stairs one step at a time.")

— The single reason why people fail to sell themselves is failure to communicate. Part of communication is listening, by maintaining eye contact, avoiding sound and sight distractions, and not interrupting.

— Smile. And share only your positive thoughts.

Why has the cost of electricity increased so much?

Mainly, fuel. Mainly, natural gas. We still have to use it to make more than half your electricity. Our fuel bill in 1980 was $198,900,000*; our estimate for 1981 is $450,000,000.

As the graph shows, Texas Electric's customers paid much lower fuel costs on their electric bills throughout the '70s. But now our biggest contract for low-cost gas has expired, and we have to pay the going rate.

Our lignite-fueled generating plants (and our nuclear plant in the future) will help protect our customers from rising gas prices.

CINDY SAYS:
Being overweight most of my life I used to dream of how I would look were I thin. Well, my dream came true when I decided on Pat Walker's.

I had tried different fad diets and was able to lose weight but never inches. In using the Pat Walker's exercise unit I lost 11 inches the first week. Altogether now I have lost over 79 inches and went from a size 18 dress to a size five.

I ate the foods I liked on the program and still lost weight. I learned how to combine my foods, never got bored with menus and I even ate good desserts!

The greatest thing is how I now feel about myself . . . I bought myself a swim suit and now lounge around the pool with confidence. Shopping is no longer an embarrassment since there is a variety of clothes from which to select my new size.

Old farmhouse restored

SAMPLES MANOR, Md. (AP) — John Brown's body has long been a-mould'ring in the grave, but the old farmhouse where he plotted his raid on a federal arsenal has been given a new lease on life.

Deep in the hills of Western Maryland, the Brown house, where the abolitionist and his men prepared for the Oct. 16, 1859 raid at nearby Harpers Ferry, W.Va., has undergone extensive restoration.

Present-day owners South T. Lynn Sr. and Harold M. Keshishian spent about eight years researching and authenticating the house, having it designated a national historic landmark and accomplishing the actual restoration.

The exterior work now is complete, and a dedication ceremony for the house was held not long ago.

"This was the staging area," said Lynn of the newly whitewashed cabin, adding that Brown "brought in 21 men and hid them all up in the attic."

The attic, where Brown's men spent about three months waiting for the raid to come off, measures about 16 by 23 feet. One floor down is the room where it is believed Brown, who leased the farmhouse under the Historical accounts indicate Brown came to what was then called the Kennedy farmhouse to further his aim of seizing the government arsenal and rifle factory in Harpers Ferry. After that, he planned to free the slaves, arm them with the captured weapons and establish a non-slave state.

Although the group succeeded in capturing the arsenal, they were trapped there and two days later, on Oct. 18, captured. Brown was tried, convicted of treason and hanged on Dec 2.

Cost analysis

DENVER (AP) — The cost for oil and gas drilling land in the U.S. has skyrocketed. One example is the Overthrust Belt, a very active exploration area in Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

"In 1975, you would pay maybe one dollar an acre for good acreage in the Overthrust Belt," says Bill Coleman, land manager for Aminoil USA in the Rocky Mountain District.

I'll be danged

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Why does a television news anchorman here or in Atlanta or Boston sound the same as counterparts in other U.S. cities? Because regional accents hinder careers and broadcasters want to be as universal as possible, with the ability to move anywhere in the country, reported a network executive.

Broadcasters who twang, drawl or have local accents are generally out of luck, if they ever want to move away from their region.

Copley News Service

Q. My friend's physician said that diet soda pop should only be used by diabetics. I thought it was also to be used by people who don't want all those calories. Are diet and regular soda pop equal so far as being bad for ones health? — A.G., Elkhart, Ind.

A. My opinion is that diet sodas are not a necessity for diabetics or non-diabetics. Neither diet sodas nor regular sugar-sweetened pop drinks are "good" for one's health, since they contribute nothing of value other than the water they contain.

Regular sodas are known to contribute to tooth decay and add extra calories to the already high-calorie American diet. Even the individual who needs extra calories, would benefit more by drinking something nutritious, such as fruit juice or milk.

The sugar-free diet sodas are sweetened with saccharin, which is currently under attack as a suspected cancer-causing agent. My vote is to drink good fresh water and skip both the diet and regular sodas.

Q. I am 72, and was recently diagnosed as having chronic aggressive hepatitis.

Please tell me about this condition, i.e., its treatment methods and duration of condition. — D.W., Columbus, Ohio

A. Hepatitis is a general term that describes a diseased state of the liver. Hepatitis may be due to a variety of disparate causes ranging from the commonly encountered drugs, alcohol, the antihypertensive agent methyldopa and the anesthetic halothane, as well as a variety of infectious agents. Medical science has identified numerous viruses which may cause hepatitis. The most frequently incriminated are referred to as types A, B, and non-A, non-B.

Most people who develop hepatitis, from whatever cause, go on to healing. Occasionally, however, a chronic inflammatory state intervenes.

There are two general categories of chronic liver inflammatory disease: chronic persistent hepatitis and chronic active (aggressive) hepatitis. Chronic persistent hepatitis has a good prognosis with healing occurring after many months and, less frequently, years. Chronic active hepatitis is suspected when symptoms persist for several months after the acute episode.

U.S. shoemakers battle foreign competition

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

McSHERRYSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Ten miles from where Brig. Gen. George Custer's troops met Confederate forces in the Battle of Gettysburg, the Sylvania Shoe Manufacturing Corp. is waging a war of its own.

Like other American shoemakers, Sylvania is locked in mortal combat with legions of foreign manufacturers for survival in the $17 billion-a-year U.S. shoe market.

"The imports ... are killing us," said manufacturing vice president W. Ray Recard Jr., adding that few days pass when a saleman doesn't bring back a new low-cost imported shoe and ask if Sylvania can match its price.

Partly due to import pressure, the number of American shoemaking companies has dropped by half — to about 300 — in the last two decades.

Sylvania began feeling the pinch of import competition in the 1960s when low-priced shoes from Europe began trickling into this country. The trickle rose to a torrent in the '70s as shoes from Korea, Taiwan, Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore, the Philippines and Eastern Europe made major inroads.

The American Footwear Industries Association says foreign-made shoes, which held 4.3 percent of the U.S. market in 1960, claimed 49 percent two decades later — costing 13,000 American jobs in the last four years alone.

"It's a very difficult situation, and the U.S. manufacturers have got to be creative," said Michael Levine, a Sylvania engineer.

Sylvania, a closely held corporation founded 35 years ago, says it is battling imports on several fronts — by increasing labor productivity, modernizing its plants and marketing aggressively.

The company's big push for modernization to hold off the imports began about about 15 years ago, said Recard.

Since that time, productivity per worker has increased more than 40 percent, he said. The time it takes to produce an average order, transforming uncut piles of leather into cases of shoes ready for shipment, has fallen from six weeks to three weeks, he said.

Sylvania has invested in automatic stitching machines, transporters that allow seamstresses to remain seated while work comes to them and to carry half-finished shoes from machine to machine, an automatic materials handling system to expedite shipping and handling and a centralized warehouse.

Recard said during the last five years, Sylvania invested $2.5 million to upgrade and modernize its five plants in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

Meanwhile, the industry has been waging a political war. After four years of quotas on shoes from two tough competitors — South Korea and Taiwan — American shoemakers are asking President Reagan to extend the import protection, to give them more time to put their house in order.

Foreign makers, domestic importers and some U.S. retailers oppose the trade barriers as harmful to American consumers.

Sylvania makes casual shoes for men, women and children for such well-known retailers as Sears Roebuck and Co., Thom McAn, J.C. Penney and Kinney. It is a middle-sized company with annual sales of about $35 million.

Although imports have caused production to level off in recent years, Sylvania has enjoyed continuous growth since its inception, said president Allan Pearlstein, who credits the company's insistence on low overhead, good sales and efficient manufacturing.

"Innovative management, that has a lot to do with the reason we're still here today," said his son, Bob Pearlstein, a Sylvania sales officer.

Sylvania reflects what the U.S. International Trade Commission, which recommends possible quotas to the president, says has been a real effort by U.S. manufacturers to adjust to intense foreign competition during the years of import protection.

The ITC, in a recent report to President Reagan, said U.S. shoemakers have substantially increased investments in plants and equipment, and the investments are only now beginning to pay off.

At Sylvania, Recard pointed proudly to a computerized stitching machine that can do 1,250 stitches a minute, guided by a cassette that tells it the precise pattern for a certain shoe style and size.

He noted the "lasting" of a shoe, in which the upper portion is attached to the "last," or foundation, once required 12 manufacturing steps and has been reduced through modernization to four.

But labor costs are the key to the import problem, said Allan Pearlstein.

"There's no way that we can compete with the No. 1 Asian countries where their (wage) scales are as low as one-tenth of ours," he said.

Pearlstein said the outlook is bleak for U.S. producers unless the government stems the imports. He believes quotas will have to be permanent.

"The same investments are being made over there," he said of the foreign producers. "They have the same technology we do. You combine that with extremely low labor costs, and there's no way we can compete."

Although it found the U.S. industry is still "by no means healthy," the ITC last month recommended that an "orderly marketing agreement" with South Korea be allowed to expire as scheduled on June 30.

The commission urged President Reagan to extend for three years an agreement with Taiwan.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Helpful hints on cookouts

DEAR HELOISE:

Most of you have probably heard about the garbage can cookouts where you place potatoes, carrots, onions, etc., along with some flavorful smoked meat in a clean garbage can and simmer over a slow open fire until tender.

Great fun... great eating... but not so much fun when it's time to remove those goodies from the deep can. A gal could fall in or get burned down there...

Well, don't fight it! Join the NNG (nylon net gang). Buy several yards of the white net, or whatever amount you need. (It's very inexpensive). Stitch into bags the size of your choosing.

When ready for the cookout, fill with the food, close with a twist tie, and throw them in to cook.

For serving, simply straighten a coat hanger, leaving the curved hook intact, and fish the goodies out.

If you make small bags for individual servings, straighten several hangers and let each guest serve himself. Now, just sit back and enjoy the party.

These bags can be washed and used over and over. — Carole Taylor

U-m-m-m-m, sounds delicious! And, deliciously simple. Thanks for a super nylon-net hint! — Hugs, Heloise

PUDDING FUDGE BARS

Dear Heloise: To make homemade frozen fudge bars, use a package of chocolate pudding and cook according to the directions on the box. Cool, then pour into molds and freeze.

Easy to fix and a delicious snack. — Reader

FOR THE LUNCH BOX

Dear Heloise: A lunch-carrying hint for those who do dirty, hot work...

At night, fold a kitchen towel to fit the lunch box, wet it, put it neatly into a plastic bag secure the opening with a rubber band or twistie, then place it in the freezer.

The next morning after packing the lunch, place a double layer of dry paper towels on top of the food to absorb any moisture, then the plastic bag with the frozen towel. In very warm climates, wrap the bag in aluminum foil to provide more insulation.

By lunch time, the food is still cool and you have a damp towel to wipe face and hands on. — B. Van Fleet

FREEZING PEACHES

Dear Heloise: When preparing fresh peaches for the freezer or for canning, wash them well, then save the peelings.

Barely cover them with water, then simmer until tender. Mash with a potato masher, then sweeten to taste.

These make great fried pies and are delicious when spread on buttered toast. The best part is that nothing is wasted of the peach except the stone. — Hazel

SIGNAL FOR KIDS

Dear Heloise: Get the kids indoors at night without disturbing the neighborhood with yelling...

Have a talk with the kids first to get your signals straight. Then, turn the porch light on while they are playing outside. When you want them to come in, flash the light off and on for a few seconds.

They will soon "tune in" to this message and you will save your lungs and also your legs, perhaps. — B.V.F.

SLIVERS GO CAMPING

Dear Heloise: Another use for soap slivers... send one along with each member of the family when he or she goes to the restroom at a campsite.

Eliminates the possibility of losing a whole bar of soap and the next camper who uses the restroom will appreciate the dab of soap to wash his hands also.

Using this idea, should you forget your soap entirely, another friendly camper may have left a dab for you. — L.O.

+ + +Send your favorite camping-out hint to Heloise care of this newspaper. She can't answer your letter personally but will share, through her column, any ideas that are great outdoors.

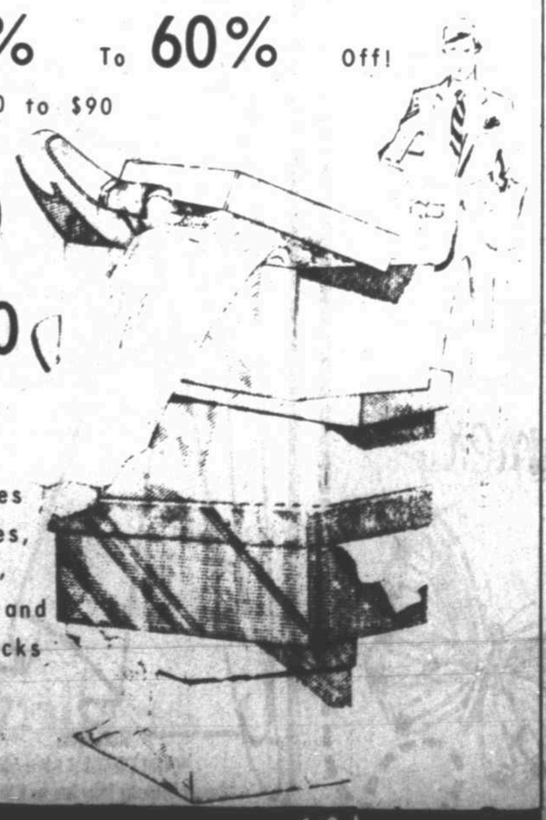

How to sink your compost heap

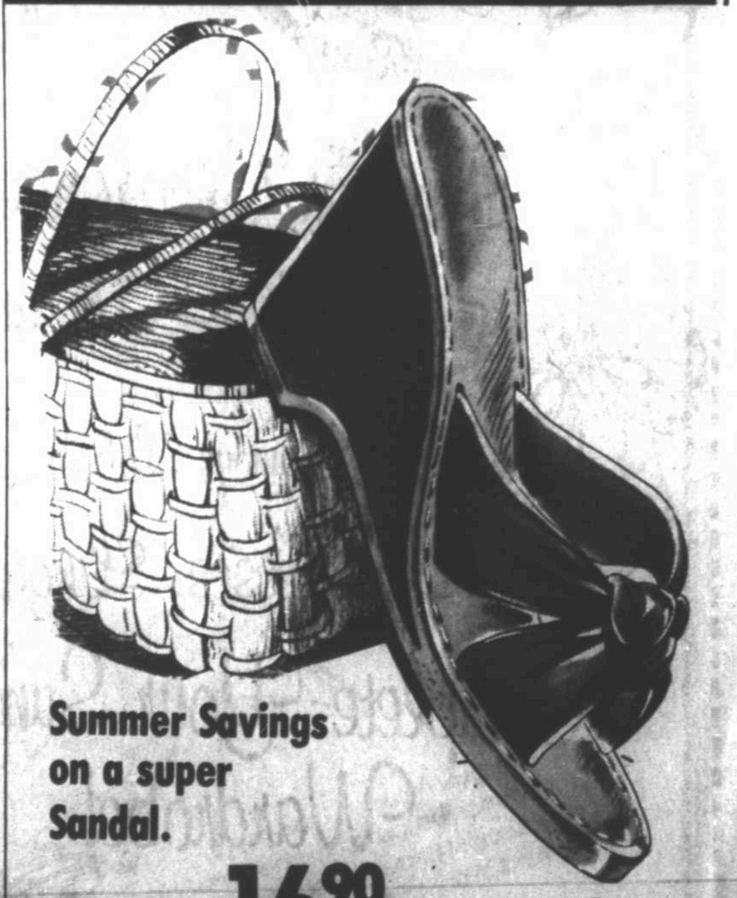

By AL CARRELL

I once offered a free sheet on how to make a compost heap in your yard. This allows you to take lots of organic waste material and convert it into food for your garden or plants. L.S.H. didn't like the idea of an enclosure in his yard, and so he designed a simple but effective sunken compost heap. The only bad part was all the digging. He buried a plastic garbage can almost all the way into the ground. Then he drilled a number of holes in the bottom of the can for drainage. The sunken compost heap did the job with only a small part showing. He also installed a plastic pipe in the center of the composting material which had holes for aeration. If you missed the free sheet on composting, please include a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request here at the paper.

Kerosene out of reach

The feasible substitute for firewood for cooking and heating in wood-short countries is kerosene. But the 177 percent increase in petroleum prices in the last five years has put kerosene even further out of reach of the world's poor than it already was.

Man claims colorblindness basis of job discrimination

By JOANN RODGERS
Science Writer
Hearst Special News Service

For 23-year-old Jeff Kerr and thousands like him, color -blindness is costing them the jobs they've always wanted.

Kerr, a college graduate and star athlete from Woolwich, Maine, has launched a one-man campaign to reverse what he calls "discrimination" by the military and law enforcement agencies against victims of inherited color blindness.

Jeff has written to President Reagan, Defense Secretary Weinberger, the secretaries of the Army, Air Force and Navy, three military chiefs of staff, Senator William S. Cohen (R-Maine), the FBI and sheriff's departments coast-to-coast.

"I am trying to alert them all to the fact that they are overlooking a manpower pool of millions of men because of outmoded requirements for color vision that exclude us from pilot training, submarine duty, police jobs and numerous other critical skills," he says. "They're taking away my chance to do the work that means more to me than anything else."

A contact lens, called X-Chrom, developed by a Massachusetts optometrist more than a decade ago, has made color blindness a potentially correctable defect for a large number of the eight million American men who have it. About 500,000 women also have some form of color deficiency.

When wearing the red-colored lens (only one is necessary), Jeff and others are able to pass standard color vision tests. Studies conducted by military eye specialists found that the X-Chrom lens (named after the X-chromosome in heredity) improved color vision in half of all subjects tested.

Roderick J. Keener, one of the military optometrists who tested the lens at Letterman Army Medical Center in San Francisco in the mid-'70's, says more than 85 percent of color blind males could be helped by the lens "and a significant percentage could be improved enough to go into flight training and other occupations that demand high level color perception."

Color vision defects pose restrictions for more than 150,000 military personnel, according to Keener, keeping them from jobs as pilots, harbor craft operators, drivers, special forces applicants and military academy candidates.

Victims of red-green color blindness, the most common form of this inherited defect, cannot discriminate between the two colors of the spectrum. In most cases, they see red or green only weakly.

The X-Chrom lens, developed by Dr. Harry Zeltzer, does not cure the defect, but when placed in front of one eye, improves discrimination up to 80 percent.

According to Keener, subjects with the most severe color vision defects "show the greatest improvement" on three separate color chart tests while wearing the hard plastic contact lens.

The only problems for lens wearers are getting used to the feel of it and some reduction in light adaptation at night, which makes them feel as if they are wearing sunglasses after dark.

"For many of the eight million Americans who are color defective, the problem is not a serious handicap," notes Keener, who is now in private practice in Walnut Creek, California. "But for those who wish greater color appreciation and for those requiring good color vission in their occupations, the X-Chrom is a good treatment."

So far, Jeff Kerr has not found the military or law enforcement agencies willing to agree with him and Dr. Keener. He has been unable to land a job of his choice.

The Army says it will send his case to a medical review board. The Navy responded that because of "high g (gravity) forces" in its aircraft, neither lenses or glasses were permitted.

Senator Cohen promised to bring the issue to a defense department legislative liaison officer. And Lt. Col. Larry Jecha, chief of the Air Force's medical division and air crew standards office, offered little hope.

Jecha said only 5 percent of the pilot applicants have color vision defects and most of those can qualify anyway because their defect is so mild.

Because the X-Chrom lens could help only a few and because contact lenses could cause problems in flight (by slipping or irritating the eye), the Air Force finds no need to change its policy against lenses or glasses.

Jeff Kerr says he won't give up.

"I feel so strongly about this issue," he wrote Defense Secretary Weinberger, "because a close relative recently retired after a distinguished career as a military pilot and he is color blind.

"Like two family friends, one a general and the other a Navy flight surgeon, he had to cheat his way into flying by memorizing the color test charts.

Library of Congress accustomed to frivolous questions, demands

By ROBERT ESTILL
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — What is the life span of an unfed flea? Did George Washington die of syphilis? How big was William Howard Taft's bathtub?

Strange questions? Yes. But the Library of Congress is accustomed to dealing with both the esoteric and the routine in fielding the more than 1 million queries it receives annually from the general public or local librarians searching for answers to questions posed by their users.

Frivolous questions? Possibly. But the library does not make value judgments on a questioner's need to know. It tries to come up with the answer, according to Elizabeth Stroup, director of general reference for one of the oldest and largest libraries in the world.

The library does not attempt to determine if the person who asked about the unfed flea's life span — 32 days, incidentally — was trying to settle a bar bet or attempting to rid one's home or pet of the pests.

Nor did the library ask the reason behind the presidential questions.

Did the "Father of Our Country" die of syphilis?

"As a matter of fact, probably not," Stroup said. "But because it was before the age of bacteriological techniques, you cannot be sure. He probably had a strep infection and was weakened by being bled."

As for the oversize bathtub used by the nation's most portly president — Taft was 6 feet tall and weighed 332 pounds — library researchers found a photograph showing it was large enough that four of the workmen who installed it could sit comfortably in it.

"One of the things I feel strongly is that there is no information need that a user has that should not be responded to," Stroup said.

"No question is too 'off-the-wall.' We do not judge the need or motive. Probably 80 to 90 percent of the information is really important and crucial to the user. Some are off-the-wall and are bets and stuff like that. But ours is not to reason why."

The library and its purpose have grown as the need for information has expanded. Established in 1800, its original purpose was to serve as a small library for Congress.

Serving Congress is still its primary purpose. In addition to the general reference section, there is a law library and a separate Congressional Research Service with an annual budget of $30 million and a staff of 850 which handles about 340,000 queries a year from lawmakers and their staffs, prepares and updates three- to 10-page issue briefs and has a "mini-supermarket" of information kits on 144 subjects ranging from abortion to welfare that are used to answer questions for lawmakers, staffs and constituents.

But the public section also is increasing. Last year, the general reference section handled about 1.28 million inquiries, up from about a million a year earlier. About a third of the questions are handled by telephone, a little over a third in person and the remainder by correspondence. The front line is the staff of six people who answer the telephones 78 hours a week, supported by 100 to 150 other staff members in various sections.

"We really are a library of secondary or last resort," Stroup said. "We do not try to replace the local public library because they can do a much better and much faster service for a lot of reference questions. But we are here to back them up or for people who are not able to get information at the local level. ... My guess is that well over half of the questions we get could be answered more quickly at the local library. ... "

Father of the groom is often overlooked

EDITOR'S NOTE — The author of this piece has kindly been invited to attend his son's wedding, provided someone has thought to save him a seat.

By SID MOODY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

The merry, nuptial month of June 'tis the season to discard outworn artifacts: the Christmas wreath, the snowblower that never would start anyway, and the father of the groom.

The last mentioned is the afterthought of The Great American Betrothal, as out of place as a third horn on a Viking's helmet. He is at best a gofer: for ice cubes downtown or a tottering great aunt at the airport.

His counterpart, the father of the bride, gets to give her away while everyone sniffles at his sacrifice. The respective mothers splurge on new dresses, never looked lovelier and make all the ceremonial photographs. The flower girl is adorable.

The father of the groom is lucky to get the last, limp carnation for his button hole provided he still has one, the groom having stripped his closet bare.

We have mother-in-law jokes ad tedium. Father-in-law jokes? The very idea is to laugh.

He is a spear carrier without a point.

He may attend the reception but will be banished at its climax to stand guard over the wedding presents.

Back in the prudish days of yore when a live-in meant an upstairs maid, the groom's father discreetly made himself available for consultation in the nuptial arts. In honor of the occasion he might even have offered his son his first martini as they talked it over man, finally, to man. This was a tribal, but necessary, rite.

Consider a lady I recently met at a party who confided that her parents had passed their wedding night in complete ignorance of what was expected of them. They spent the next day at the library reading up on conjugality. Their first child was born nine months plus a day after the wedding.

This, however, is 1981. Today Dad could probably learn more from Junior about the mysteries of life.

If he is a Swell Dad and the IRS didn't get there first, the groom's father might chip in for the obligatory jewelry. But he is apt to find himself walking for two weeks because his car is on a honeymoon.

His role, then, is economic, like turnstiles.

Just how economic I was in total ignorance of until one day last winter. Evie, purveyor of the best cooking and best gossip in the community, called in the interest of her two favorite pursuits to ask where the rehearsal dinner was being held and what it would consist of. I said I had no idea. Ask Irv, the father of the bride. That was his department.

Evie set me straight on that one, and a trip to the library confirmed it. The conjugal book says right there that the groom's parents give the rehearsal dinner. Mother never told me.

Whether anyone needs a rehearsal in this laid back epoch when couples say "we did" instead of "we do" is another consideration. But at least I will know half the guests at my own party, a first.

There is something about a wedding that brings families together. All of them. My wife's cousin from Honolulu who hasn't been East in 30 years is showing up. So is an uncle from Vermont who is passing up his 55th reunion at Princeton to attend. (I once saw an infirm Old Tiger at his 55th show up in an ambulance with three nurses all the way from Boston. Whether the intravenous in his arm was pumpng gin I neve determined.)

The guest list multiplies like hamsters, as the groom's father's wife seeks to avoid any hurt feelings. To a nonpartisan eye she seems to believe imminent famine is stalking the land.

After joining with Irv in a toast to all those who couldn't make it, the groom's father huddles with the headwaiter to demand a recount. He then helps locate a few lost coats and sinks back into obscurity. He may be designated to claim the first dance with the minister's wife at the reception but otherwise is as useless as the vermiform appendix.

From then on, however, things begin to look up. Should he survive hot flashes and Social Security cutbacks, he may live to reappear as the grandfather of the groom.

At this point he will receive a measure of respect due his age. He may even counsel the new father of the groom on the lessons of anonymity.

Then he might order his nurse to go easy on the tonic water in his I.V.

For now, however, the father of the groom's participation in the ceremony is to zip up his wife and get her to the church on time.

He may enter the building behind her if the ushers recognize him and if they are, his having shod his son, letting people in churches these days with bare feet.

Here are some facts and myths about vitamins

You can eat a diet that has enough calories to meet you nutritional needs and still be undernourished.

That could happen if your diet is short of the vitamins needed to transform foods into energy. This was discovered when sailors developed scurvy on long cruises because they were not getting any vitamin C.

But scurvy and other diseases caused by vitamin deficiencies are no longer common, because even those on a limited budget can get foods that contain the vitamins they need.

To learn more about the two types of vitamins, their sources and their recommended daily allowances, send for a copy of the Food and Drug Administration factsheet, "Some Facts and Myths About Vitamins." It's free from Consumer Information Center, Dept. 552J, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

There are two kinds of vitamins, one type that you need to take every day and one type that the body stores. Most vitamins are the water soluble kind you need each day. If you take more than you need of these, your body gets rid of the excess. The B vitamins, for example, are water soluble. They are found in meats, green vegetables and grains. Vitamin C, another water soluble vitamin, promotes tissue growth and repair. You can get vitamin C from salads, oranges, potatoes and other vegetables.

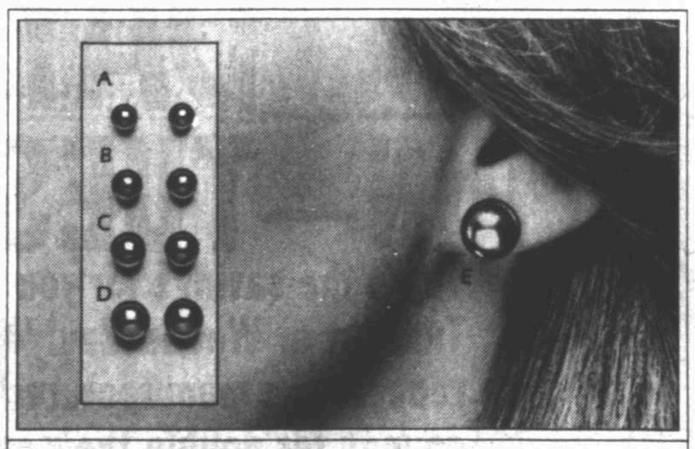

There are just four oil soluble vitamins — vitamins A, D, E and K. If you take more of these vitamins than you need, your body stores the excess. In most cases this is a real nutrition plus because you can go for some time with out replenishing your supply. Only infrequently does it cause problems. For example, if you take too much vitamin D, it can cause nausea, weight loss and can even lead to high blood pressure. You get vitamin D from the sun, milk and margarine. Vitamins A, E and K are found in eggs, spinach and vegetable oils.

A common myth about vitamins is that organic or natural vitamins are nutritionally superior to synthetic vitamins. Actually, as far as scientists know, the body cannot tell the difference between the two, and gets the same benefits from vitamins from either source.

So eat a well-balanced diet of fresh fruits and vegetables; whole grain and enriched breads; meats, poultry or fish and milk products every day. If you eat a wide variety of foods, you should get all the vitamins your body needs to stay healthy.

Courtesy of Los Angeles Times

Raspberry: Dessert favorite

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

As the blackberry passes its June peak in most of America, that dusty red delight, the raspberry, approaches its prime a month later.

When I was a boy, this silky fruit grew wild all over Long Island and we used to bring home basketfuls to eat dusted with powdered sugar and topped with cream. Hardly a diet dish, but at that age who cares?

Years later I discovered more sophisticated dishes like raspberries with creme de cassis, but I still preferred them fresh. If you want something a little fancier, however, one of the tastiest desserts I have had is a Danish pudding with the tongue-twisting name Rodgrod Med Flode. It is a blend of pureed raspberries and strawberries cooked and sweetened, then topped with slivered almonds and light cream.

The raspberry grew wild in the Old World for centuries and was a favorite in many lands. It was not cultivated until the 16th century, when European agronomists decided to try to improve upon nature.

Cultivation spread to America around 1800 when growers began breeding the fruit in Philadelphia.

The raspberries we see are usually a dull red, but there are purple, black and amber versions, and I'm told that those grown in Asia range in color from orange to lavender.

Raspberries flourish in the mountains from Georgia to Pennsylvania and in regions from Maine to the Dakotas.

The red raspberry is a native of our northern states while a darker version is found farther south, succeeding better in that climate.

Unfortunately the price of raspberries has soared in recent years, but there are sales at the supermarkets, if you have a craving for a pie or pudding.

Abortion: Pregnancy main issue in political drama

By DIANE KIESEL
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Two scenes in the abortion drama played simultaneously on Capitol Hill recently.

In the first, famed Nobel Prize-winning missionary Mother Teresa stood in her white habit and gray shawl to tell a pro-family group that abortion destroyed the image of God in the world. The crowd of several hundred included priests wearing in their black lapels the red rose that has come to symbolize opposition to abortion.

As Mother Teresa spoke, a family-planning group on the other side of the Capitol was telling a House health subcommittee that more unwanted births and abortions are likely to occur among poor women and teen-agers if the Reagan administration was successful in cutting family-planning funds.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the subcommittee, said "new Victorians" in Congress and the administration want to eliminate family-planning services and ban abortion, and seem determined to deny the reality of contemporary sexual practices, particularly among the young.

Prior to 1973, the abortion drama rarely played at all on Capitol Hill. Several states began legalizing — or at least liberalizing — abortion laws after 1967. This led to the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision that said a woman had the legal right to choose an abortion, and the battle began.

Subsequently those opposed to abortions have successfully lobbied to have federal funding for them eliminated in most cases, and say they will not stop until they have amended the U.S. Constitution to outlaw abortion altogether.

Meanwhile, about 1.5 million U.S. women and girls were estimated to have had abortions in 1979, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute, an affiliate of Planned Parenthood, which favors freedom of choice.

Today the issue is the most volatile and divisive on Capitol Hill. Many of the intensive lobbying tactics learned during the controversy over the Vietnam War have been employed again, said American Enterprise Institute political scientist Norman Ornstein.

The anti-abortion groups, or "pro-life" as they call themselves, argue that life begins at conception and that abortion is killing a living human. The pro-abortion forces — or "pro-choice," as they refer to themselves — say women have the right to control their own reproductive processes.

There seems to be no middle ground.

"Abortion," Ornstein said, "has affected Congress more than any other issue. It has changed the atmosphere of politics. When you get beyond economics, the key issue is abortion, no question about it.

"It's the issue people fear the most. It's the biggest pain" for the legislators.

Although Congress at present seems more concerned with the budget and taxes than with social issues like abortion, most observers agree that once economic legislation is out of the way, abortion will be on the tip of everyone's tongue and in the back of every politician's mind as he or she approaches the 1982 elections.

Although in poll after poll most Americans continue to favor the right to choose abortion, right-to-life forces are well organized, highly political, and take credit for helping to defeat several of the nation's most liberal senators in the 1980 elections.

As a result, the pro-life forces have started to win some key battles they never were able to win in the past.

For the first time since Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., first began attaching anti-abortion riders to appropriations bills in the House in 1976, the Senate recently voted to bar federal Medicaid funds for abortions except to save the life of the mother. Previously the Senate had added rape and incest as qualifiers for federally funded abortions.

During the vote, which was 52-43 in favor of the tougher restrictions, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., had warned his colleagues that they would be "attentively watched" by abortion opponents.

Right-to-life groups also seem to have new momentum in pushing for measures that call for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion, declare life to exist from the moment of conception, and bar lower federal courts from intervening in abortion cases.

A man considered to be Helms' protege, Sen. John East, R-N.C., chairman of the Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on separation of powers, has held several days of hearings on a controversial Helms proposal, known as "the Human Life Bill," that would declare life exists from the moment the female ovum is fertilized by a male spermatozoon.(more)

The bill would let states set abortion policy and bar federal courts lower than the U.S. Supreme Court from entering abortion cases.

Pro-abortion groups argue that the legislation would mean a ban on contraceptive devices that prevent implantation of the fertilized egg in the mother's placental wall, such as the intrauterine device (IUD) and the "morning-after" pill.

The Helms proposal has sharply divided the anti-abortion groups. Most of them fear the bill will divert congressional attention from their ultimate goal: a right-to-life constitutional amendment.

Anti-abortion groups face other problems as well. Pro-choice forces now feel threatened and are working harder for their cause. Planned Parenthood, for example, has just opened a new four-member lobbying office here, and pro-choice groups, like the pro-life groups, plan to increase political spending in the next election.

One anti-abortion group, the National Pro-Life Political Action Committee, came under fire from pro-life stalwarts Hyde and Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah — both members of the PAC's advisory committee — for targeting some of their pro-abortion colleagues for defeat in the 1982 legislative election.

Peter Gemma, executive director of the group that plans to spend $400,000 defeating those members of Congress, said the pro-life legislators may not like the group's tactics because they have to "shake hands and see these guys every day" — but they still will work for the group's goal: to stop abortion.

"The anti-abortion movement seems to be developing its own problems right now," said Senate Democractic Whip Alan Cranston, D-Calif., a pro-choice legislator.

Cranston said that even though pro-life forces have the support of a majority of senators now, these senators also have added responsibilities because they are the majority. They also do not agree on whether to push for an amendment or support the Human Life Bill, he said.

"The inevitable thing has happened," Cranston said. "Having responsibility in their hands, they can no longer just criticize (and now) they can't agree on the plan."

ICE CREAM COLORS TO COOL YOUR SUMMER
Mint cream, peach parfait, lemon sherbet, grape ice--the lovely pastels that took a back seat to the bolder colors for several seasons--have returned to accompany the ultra-femine styles.
The delectable ice cream colors blend beautifully in the romantic new fashions. Lace and ruffles peek out from undere the tailored suit. Fabric is softer--sheer or silky. The higher necklines predominate.
Jewelry fashions follow the trend. The newest designs are simple and delicate. Rings and earrings are dainty twists and curls of gold, accented with pastel gemstones, such as lavender amethyst, watery blue aquamarine, pale pink tourmaline and fresh green peridot. Pendants hang slightly lower to fit over lacy ties and silky bows, but the chains are light and airy. Small diamonds are everywhere--adding flash to the curve of a gold wire or brilliantly defining the outline of a colored gem.
The jewelry ensemble is back. Danity clusters of sapphires, garnets, opals and other birthstones hang suspended from fine gold chains. Such a suite of colorful jewelry can add life to the most basic outfit.

Artificial bricks don't have to look phony

By AL CARRELL

Maybe you have a den or breakfast nook or rec room that you always thought would look better with a brick wall. The big problem with adding a brick wall, however, is the weight of the bricks, which would probably cause that part of the house to sag. Don't worry though. There are artificial bricks that are very lightweight. I know that most of the old artificial bricks looked just that, phony. Things have changed. Several makers of artifical bricks now have very real looking creations. Not only do these fakes offer no weight problems, they are very easy for even the rank amateur to apply and come with good instructions for installation.

There are several manufacturers of these brick look-alikes, so there is a good selection of types and colors of bricks. Some of the systems have "L"-shaped pieces for corners. If you'll be going around corners, this is a big advantage. Those types that don't offer the corner pieces suggest that you miter edges and make your own corner pieces. This isn't a difficult thing to do, but doesn't look as authentic as with the corner pieces.

After you've decided on the brand and the color, it's an easy thing to figure out how many bricks to buy. It's strictly a matter of square footage because the manufacturer will show the approximate coverage per package. Figuring the number of corner pieces you'll need is also a snap. Remember that the joints have to be added into the figuring. Most dealers can help you to figure how much to buy. Be sure also that this isn't the last of your pattern available, you could end up with just about a square foot too few bricks.

The mastic that holds the bricks in place also comes in several different colors, all of which look like mortar. How much mastic you buy is also governed by the square footage of the wall.

With the purchases made, you're ready to prepare the wall. These bricks will go on just about any surface, but it must be clean, sound and dry. Wallpaper is an exception. It should be stripped. A porous surface should be sealed, and a slick surface should be scuff sanded. In cleaning, pay particular attention to wax or grease on the walls. In a kitchen, airborne grease from cooking has to be removed.

Remember that you can close or open the joints to end up with an even course of bricks. It's best to figure this out ahead of time. Figure the number needed along each horizontal row plus how many rows. About ⅜ inch is a good mortar joint to strive for. A stick cut to the size of the mortar joints will be a very helpful tool.

The actual application should be done according to the manufacturer's directions. Generally I have found that it's best to start at the top and apply enough mastic to accommodate two courses of bricks. At the same time, it's a good idea to go all the way down to the floor on one side with a strip of mastic wide enough for only one brick. For half bricks, I've found a hacksaw and miter box ideal for cutting. This takes only a few seconds.

A wide putty knife spreads the mastic, and it need only be thick enough to cover the old surface. With most types, I have found it's also best to lightly butter the back of each brick as it's installed. Then you press it in place, and then wiggle it slightly to set it. Use the stick you cut to check the mortar joints as you go. You can use a string stretched across the wall to use as a guide to get all courses level. On a long wall, I think this is a must, but for short walls, you can often eyeball it.

After working the first two courses and all the edge bricks along one wall, you can work your way down doing only a couple of courses at a time.

Step back often to be sure the courses are level, and also check the joints often. You can smooth the mastic to make the joints shape up by using your finger.

Many artificial bricks require a sealer to be applied after your job is done.

Bricks and stone are available for inside or outside and can be used for lots of decorative chores.

Working women oppose diluting government's affirmitive action

By DON WATERS
- Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A national organization of female office workers today began a drive to counter efforts by the Reagan administration, business and some congressional Republicans to dilute the government's affirmative action activities.

The campaign was announced by Karen Nussbaum, executive director of the 12,000-member organization Working Women. The group released a 14-page study intended to refute arguments that affirmative action is not needed because job discrimination is no longer a problem and that equal opportunity programs are ineffective and too costly.

"We are here today to condemn the effort under way to gut affirmative action; to present evidence that affirmative action is effective, viable and necessary, and to make clear that working women are prepared to fight very hard to defend our rights," Ms. Nussbaum said at a news conference.

The statistics-laden report, which drew on a variety of studies, said discrimination "is still alive and well in the vast majority of American corporations."

A higher percentage of women work as clerical or service workers, the lowest paying occupations, than 20 years ago, while the percentage of women in management positions has increased by only a little more than 1 percent in the same period, it said.

For example, the report said, the number of bank tellers who are women increased from 73.6 percent to 92.9 percent in the past decade. It said the tellers' job has become a largely dead-end position instead of a step on the banking career ladder.

Nonetheless, the study said, affirmative action programs work when they are applied. The report said Cleveland's five largest banks increased their number of women in management positions from 17.6 percent in 1970 to 31.6 percent in 1979 because of an equal opportunity drive.

The report also said the number of women coal miners rose from zero before 1973 to 3,295 at the end of 1980.

The report said federal and industrial studies do not support contentions by opponents of affirmative action that the programs are too costly to business and the government.

Citing a Business Roundtable study, the report said three of the nation's largest banks — Citicorp and Chase Manhattan of New York and Continental Illinois of Chicago — spent an average of only 0.01 percent of their gross revenues in 1977 on affirmative action, less than the annual salaries of their chief executives.

The report said the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs spent only $50.6 million in the last fiscal year to oversee equal opportunity programs by 350,000 companies employing nearly 40 million persons, an expenditure of $1.26 for each employee covered.

If the Labor Department believes that affirmative action is imposing an unfair regulatory burden on business, it can take several positive steps, the report said. Among them are targeting growing industries for special enforcement, moving against industries as a whole to reduce competitive disadvantages that individual companies might suffer, and simplifying reporting procedures.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to this man for six years and I don't think he loves me anymore. I came home early from work one morning and I found my husband and this woman together. She was wearing my best nightgown. I lost my temper and tore into her, until the police came and broke it up. They took her away to the emergency hospital to repair some cuts and bruises I had given her, as she was in a pretty bad way.

The next day when I was straightening up the house I found all her underwear on top of the TV. I still have it. What should I do with her underwear? — BERNICE

DEAR BERNICE: Hang on to it. She may be back.

DEAR ABBY: I am enclosing an article that I cut out of your column in the Portland Oregonian I don't know how many years ago. Twenty, maybe. As you can see, it is yellowed with age and falling apart. I am 81 years old and live alone. My children live close by and are very good to me. How I wish all older people would try to follow what this article says! Please print it again. Thank you. — DAISY S., PORTLAND

DEAR DAISY: With pleasure: PRAYER FOR THE AGED

"Lord, Thou knowest better than I know myself that I am growing older, and will some day be old.

"Keep me from getting talkative, and particularly from the fatal habit of thinking I must say something on every occasion.

"Release me from craving to try to straighten out everybody's affairs.

"Keep my mind free from the recital of endless details — give me wings to get to the point.

"I ask for grace enough to listen to the tales of others' pains. Help me to endure them with patience.

"But seal my lips on my own aches and pains — they are increasing and my love of rehearsing them is becoming sweeter as the years go by.

"Teach me the glorious lesson that occasionally it is possible that I may be mistaken.

"Keep me reasonably sweet; I do not want to be a saint — some of them are so hard to live with — but a sour old person is one of the crowning works of the devil.

"Make me thoughtful, but not moody; helpful, but not bossy. With my vast store of wisdom, it seems a pity not to use it all — but Thou knowest, Lord, that I want a few friends at the end." — AUTHOR UNKNOWN

Gold, glitter highlight 1982 fashion

By MARYLOU LUTHER
(c) 1981, The Los Angeles Times

In Italy, it's the Shogun special, featuring a fall lineup of samurai pants, obis and coolie jackets, with an occasional kimono thrown in for good measure.

In London, the royal romance sparks a rash of romantically regal clothes, including court gowns with trains, and crowns for the hair.

In Paris, a lot of designers lose their heads over Marie Antoinette and the Three Musketeers.

Throughout the world of fashion, the woman of '82 is perceived as rich, regal and romantic. A million-dollar baby. A child of the recession ready to repress the depression in a successsion of one extravagant outfit after another.

In this embarrassment of riches, even the poorest of the new fall heroines — Ralph Lauren's Pocahontas — is an Indian princesss who wears a four-figure beaded jacket and a squaw dresss made of real 100 percent suede, not the fake stuff.

The new global fashion givens seem to be gold and glitter. Giorgio Armani gives us gold satin samurai pants. Calvin Klein offers metallic lames in ikat prints. Zandra Rhodes poufs out her gold lame court gowns with pleated panniers. Gianni Versace celebrates the Renaissance in gilt-edged pantaloons and lavish embroideries. Karl Lagerfeld of Chloe gives us gold fencing mask, gold gloves, gold belts, gold collars and gold facings on skirts, pants and jackets. And Claude Montana leads the French rush to recover old royalty by re-creating the court life of Francis I, complete with gold-trimmed black knickers, lace-embroidered velvet capes and satin dresses propped with farthingales.

Yes, there is a lot of gilding of lilies. The point, it would seem, is to exaggerate the fact that simple, functional sportswear is no longer king of the hill, 24 hours a day.

Many of the new clothes are, indeed, based on some of the most famous names in history. The shapes are generally fuller, softer, looser and longer than the clothes we are wearing right now. They have a dashing, swashbuckling, buccaneer-like air to them. And they often combine heroines and periods with whimsical abandon. Perry Ellis, for instance, likes the mix of English Renaissance, Swiss guards, French Gothic and Errol Flynn-Hollywood.

And it works.

Layering is definitely back, and the requisite top layer with leading designers everywhere is the oblong shawl, usually worn over the left shoulder, not wrapped around both shoulders.

A typical fall pile-on inlcudes shawl over cape over jacket over vest over sweater over blouse. Many designers subscribe to the skirt-over-pants look. and Valentino pioneers the pants-over-pants look. His new mid-calf pants — shown in everything from gray flannel and leather to velvet — are telescoped over under-pants of contrasting fabrics.

Valentino's gray flannel pants, for instance, look as if they are layered over another pair of darker gray flannel or charcoal-gray velvet pants about 2 inches longer than the outer pair. The ones that peep out from under are really mere appendages sewn near the pant's hems, but they give an effect of double pants.

While designers pooh-pooh the importance of length, the longer, mid-calf skirt is definitely a reality at such important design centers as Chloe, Calvin Klein, Ellis, Montana, Versace, Sonia Rykiel and Jean Muir. There are still minis at Jungle Jap, Issey Miyake and Betsey Johnson. There are still above-the-knee skirts at Chloe and Valentino. And there are a lot of mid-knee to top-of-the-knee skirts at Yves Saint Laurent. But the new direction would seem to be south of the knee. That is unless you're going to buy a pair of pants.

Above-the-knee culottes and pantskirts are shown at many houses, as are Bermudas and Jamaicas. In Italy, the pants of record are jodhpurs — pioneered by Versace — and the curvy culottes from Armani. Throughout the world of fashion there are Renaissance pantaloons, Chinese coolie pants, Turkish harems, Japanese samurai pants with wide, wide legs, English riding pants and American pedal pushers. The boot is worn with all. And the boot range includes Robin Hood ankle boots, riding boots, crushed Three Musketeers boots, majorette boots and knee-high boots. Most are set on medium to low heels.

If there is a single item that most typifies the fashion season ahead it is the cape. Marie Antoinette's cape. D'Artagnan's cape. Robin Hood's cape. Eliziabeth I's cape. It's the mantle of fashion authority for fall. And it personifies the Three R's of the season: Rich, Regal, Romantic.

No more 'typical' grandparents

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — There's no such thing as a typical grandparent, says a social work specialist at Syracuse University, who notes that — unlike a century ago — many grandparents lead active lives of their own.

Darrell Slover, associate professor of social work, says the closeness among different generations that marked many families in past years was dictated by economic necessity. Today, families are more financially secure and have a greater number of options. So, he says, the role of grandparent has become quite diverse.

"Each grandparent and each grandchild does it in his or her own way," he says. "For some, it's a fairly active and quite satisfying role. For others, it's a, fairly distant role, an inactive role. Each grandparent finds his or her own way of dealing with it."

Slover says people are becoming grandparents at a younger age than in the past. Many have their first grandchild in their mid-40s.

Drilling mud

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — Some $320,000 was saved in drilling eight oil wells here by utilizing mud additives. Wells averaged 8,000 feet deep.

Drilling mud lubricates and cools drill bits, cakes up and prevents well walls from caving in. It also carries rock fragments to the surface.

The time required to drill each well was reduced by four days. "At $10,000 per day, total rig time saved for the eight wells amounted to roughly $320,000," said Robert F. Wally, service engineer of Drilling Specialities.

Fathers are like lights in the refrigerator: You can't tell what they do once the door is shut

By ERMA BOMBECK

When I was a little kid, a father was like the light in the refrigerator. Every house had one, but no one really knew what either of them did once the door was shut.

My dad left the house every morning and always seemed glad to see everyone at night.

He opened the jar of pickles when no one else could.

He was the only one in the house who wasn't afraid to go in the basement by himself.

He cut himself shaving, but no one kissed it or got excited about it. It was understood whenever it rained, he got the car and brought it around to the door. When anyone was sick, he went out to get the prescription filled.

He kept busy enough. He set mousetraps. He cut back the roses so the thorns wouldn't clip you when you came to the front door. He oiled my skates and they went faster. When I got my bike, he ran alongside me for at least a thousand miles until I got the hang of it.

He signed all my report cards. He put me to bed early. He took a lot of pictures, but was never in them. He tightened up mother's sagging clothesline every week or so.

I was afraid of everyone else's father, but not my own. Once I made him tea. It was only sugar water, but he sat on a small chair and said it was delicious. He looked very uncomfortable.

Once I went fishing with him in a rowboat. I threw huge rocks in the water and he threatened to throw me overboard. I wasn't sure he wouldn't, so I looked him in the eye for a whole year. I finally decided he was bluffing and threw in one more. He was a bad poker player.

Whenever I played house, the mother doll had a lot to do. I never knew what to do with the daddy doll, so I had him say, "I'm going off to work now," and threw him under the bed.

When I was nine years old, my father didn't get up one morning and go to work. He went to the hospital and died the next day.

There were a lot of people in the house who brought all kinds of good food and cakes. We never had so much company before.

I went to my room and felt under the bed for the father doll. When I found him, I dusted him off and put him on my bed.

Combining strawberries and peaches to make jam

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

There's a time of year, speaking from a country-wide point of view, when it's perfect to pair two of summer's loveliest fruits — fresh strawberries and fresh peaches. At the end of June, strawberries are in their last peak month of supply; at the beginning of July, peaches start their first peak period of supply.

Grab the chance then, if you like, to serve the fruits in combination in compotes, salads, ice creams, sherbets, ices, puddings and pies. You may also want to preserve them: to put them together in a jam for use in later months and to give as gifts at holiday time.

STRAWBERRY-PEACH JAM

1 quart (about) fully ripe strawberries
1½ pounds (about) fully ripe peaches
2 tablespoons lemon juice
One 1¾-ounce package fruit pectin
6 cups sugar

Rinse and hull strawberries. Thoroughly crush, one layer at a time — there should be about 2¼ cups; turn into a 6- or 8-quart saucepot. Peel and pit peaches. Cup very fine — there should be about 2 cups; add to the strawberries. (There may be a little more or less of either fruit, but use a total of 4¼ cups.) Add lemon juice. Stir in pectin. Over high heat, stirring constantly, bring the mixture to a full boil. Immediately add sugar; stirring constantly, bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute. Remove from heat and, with a large metal spoon, skim off foam. Quickly ladle into hot 8-ounce jars, filling to within ¼ inch of tops; cover with hot lids and screw bands on tightly. Process in a boiling water bath for 5 minutes. Makes about 7 eight-ounce jars.

Note: Here's how to process in a water bath. Place jars on rack in a canner or large saucepot of boiling water that covers jars by 1 or 2 inches. Cover canner and bring water to a boil; boil for 5 minutes. (as Strawberry-Peach Jam recipe directs). Remove jars from canner. Let stand to cool. Check seals. Jar lids should remain slightly concave when pressed. Remove bands and store in a cool dry place.

Douce says Americans are ready to kick the OPEC habit

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — William C. Douce says American people are ready to kick the OPEC habit if current signs are any indication.

The president and chief executive officer of Phillips Petroleum Co. says a fundamental shift is occuring in the energy use patterns of consuming nations, particularly in the United States.

"The full impact of this shift on world oil economics has not yet been fully realized, although the OPEC ministers meeting in Geneva last month began to come to grips with this new reality," he said.

Douce said U.S. imports of crude oil and refined oil products in April fell to their lowest level since 1973.

The nation imported 5.4 million barrels of oil a day in April, a decline of more than 22 percen from April last year.

"This is a continuation of a trend which began to take hold last year when our country experienced the largest year-to-year decline in oil use in history," Douce said.

"As a result, we were able to cut our oil imports by nearly 20 percent compared to 1979."

Douce said the reduced consumption stems from several factors:

- A steady switch from oil to coal in electrical generation.
- More efficient use of energy in both the industrial and public sectors.
- Reduced driving and the increased use of smaller cars in the United States, with domestid gasoline consumption in March declining to 6 million barrels daily, the lowest point since 1971.
- Generally depressed economic conditions which have limited energy use.

Douce said that although some of of the factors, such as sluggish economic conditions, may be viewed as short term, there is evidence the general trend toward reduced energy consumpion will become more pronounced in the years ahead.

He said Phillips, in 1980, cut its energy usage by the equivalent of 1.6 million barrels of oil.

"New energy conserving capital projects costing $19 million were approved last year, brining our total investment in energy conservation to more than $200 million," he said.

The American Petroleum Institute reported this month that the refining sector of the industry achieved energy savings of 19.4 percent in 1980 compared with a 1972 base period. It said its survey required by the Department of Energy involved energy utilization by 61 companies that account for 93 percent of the operable refining capacity in the United States and Puerto Rico.

Douce said there is no question that reducing the present level of petroleum consumption is in the nation's best interests.

"One major effect will be reduced inflationary pressures since the price of energy is one of the root sources of the increased costs of goods and services throughout our society," he said in his monthly "Philnews" report to active and retired Phillips employees.

"A period of stable oil prices would materially benefit the U.S. economy which is now struggling to get back on its feet after suffering through double digit inflation, lagging production and the energy stocks of the past decade. To the average consumer, stable oil prices through the next 12 months would mean increased purchasing power in the range of $4 billion to $5 billion."

Douce said consumers will be the long-term winners even though reduced consumption will cause short-term problems for oil companies such as high inventories, reduced refinery capacity, and lower profit margins.

"Ultimately, the free marketplace will give the best buy to the customer in the form of adequate supplies at competitive prices," he said.

He said the conservation effort being made by the public is being matched by a companion effort by the oil industry that has launched the most aggressive exploration and development program in its history.

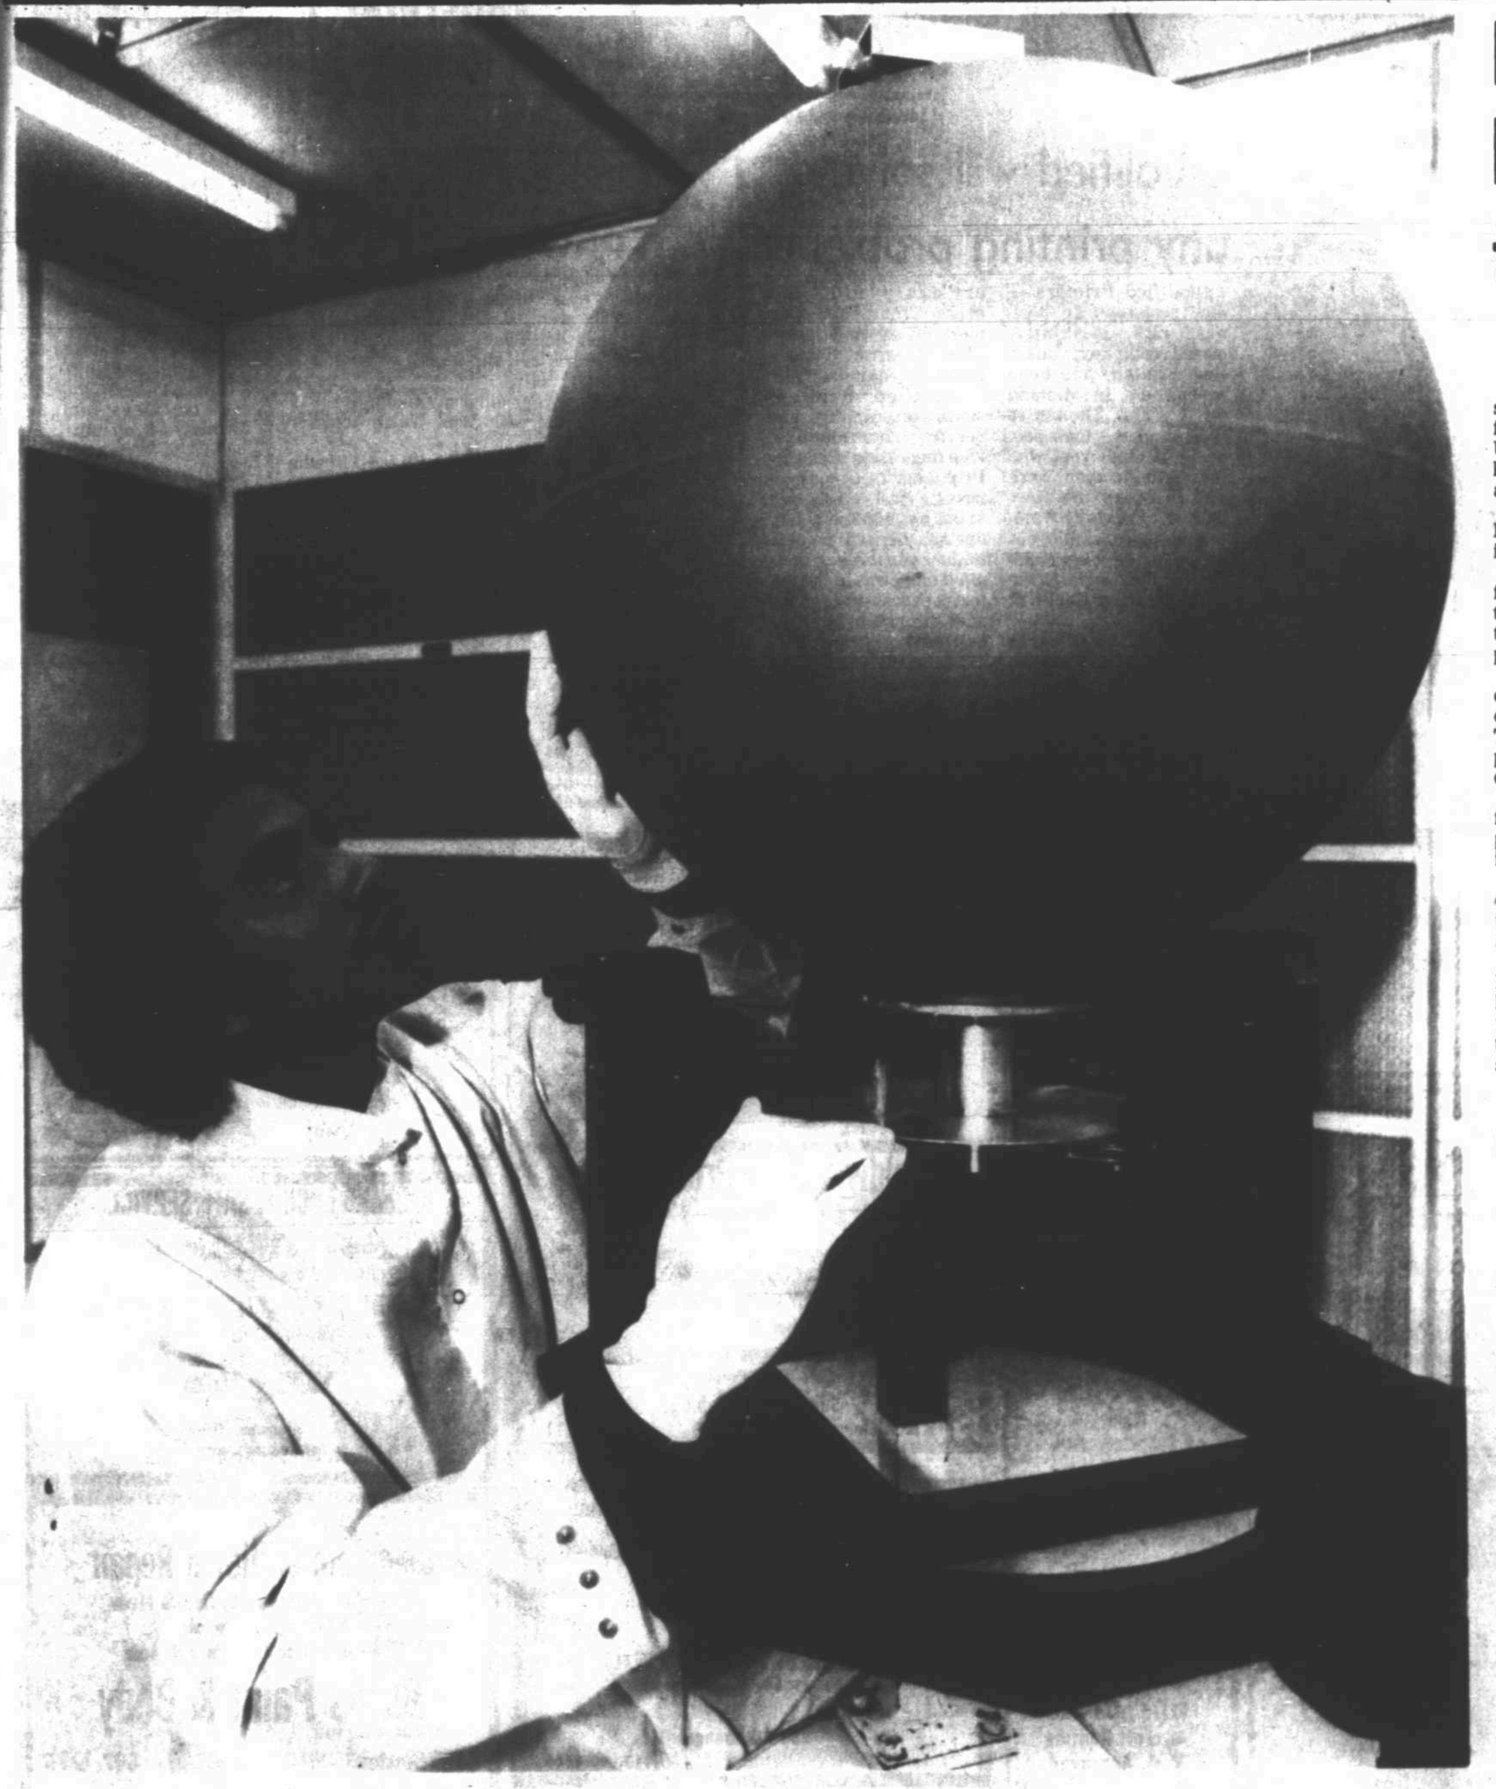

"This effort is paying off," he said.

"The year-to-year decline in crude oil production in the lower 48 states was reduced by two-thirds in 1980, from 300,000 barrels a day to 100,000 barrels a day."

But, he added, even with an aggressive exploration program, the decline in reserves will not be stemmed immediately.

"It will take several years to feel the full effect of the current program because of the time required to bring new discoveries into production," Douce said.

"Continued energy conservation plus an increasingly vigorous domestic exploration and production program could well reduce oil imports by 1990 by as much as 50 percent below the 1979 level. There's no question we have our work cut out for us, but if the current signs are any indication, the American people are ready to kick the OPEC habit."

This titanium tank, when paired with another, will contain enough fuel power to power a satellite for ten years. Zerry Holton of the Defense and Space Systems Group of TRW Inc. in Redondo Beach, Calif. inspects one of the two hydrazine propellant tanks which will be intalled in a telecommunication satellite. Fuel from these tanks will power thrusters which will maintain the satellite's balance while in orbit. The .070-inch-thick titanium tanks are the largest hydrazine tanks in the world.

Diesel smuggling is becoming problem for U.S. Customs

By SUSAN STOLER
Associated Press Writer

HIDALGO, Texas (AP) — The smuggling of cheap Mexican diesel fuel for high resale profits in the United States has become a growing headache for U.S. Customs officials and state revenue collectors.

"It's driving us up the wall," said Henry Posio, chief Customs Service investigator in Brownsville.

Diesel costs $1.20 a gallon at American pumps but sells for a mere 17 cents a gallon across the Rio Grande. The Mexican government keeps the price low by subsidizing production costs of its oil monopoly, Pemex.

It doesn't take much arithmetic to figure a smuggler can turn a hefty profit on 100 gallons of diesel by selling it for 90 cents a gallon.

Enterprising smugglers use almost every method imaginable, Posio said, to sneak the fuel past both Mexican and American customs agents.

"You get shrimp boats going into Mexican waters, buying it and offloading it to other boats," he said. "Mexican trucks come in, declare their diesel is for road use but then sell it from their trucks."

One man was arrested last year for smuggling 7,000 gallons of diesel in a waterbed loading on his pickup truck. Customs inspectors got suspicious when they saw him make 37 trips across the Brownsville-Matamoros bridge with the waterbed.

The state of Texas is losing $5 million to $6 million annually in unpaid state diesel taxes, said Tony Proffitt of the state comptroller's office in Austin.

The federal government requires licenses for diesel sellers and taxes the fuel at 4 cents a gallon. Customs agents said they generally don't worry about people bringing in large quantities for their own use, such as businessmen with diesel-powered fleets.

"The demand for diesel vehicles here is much greater than further north and it's because of the 17-cent price," Posio said.

Mexican diesel has its drawbacks, as many car owners have discovered.

"It's a lower quality fuel and they don't put an additive in," said Don Cunningham, customers investigator in McAllen. "You can get a paraffin build up."

Dozens of cars, trucks and buses on both sides of the border stalled in February 1980 when paraffin from a bad batch of Mexican diesel clogged fuel systems. Repairs to clean out fuel lines ran up to $100.

The wax normally is removed or neutralized in the refining process.

The hazard has not deterred diesel sales to Americans. Their runs across the border led the Mexican government, anxious to preserve supplies for its citizens, to limit sales to cars with American plates to 100 pesos ($4) or about 28 gallons.

The result, Proffitt said, is that more smugglers are using Mexican nationals as haulers to fill up tanks and drive to storage facilities in the United States.

Diesel, unlike gasoline, is relatively safe to handle and has been found stored in old barns and garages, as well as storage tanks.

The organized diesel smuggling rings, Proffitt said, involve the haulers, a middle man who stores the fuel, and the ultimate boss who profits on its sale.

"Sometimes they go directly to dealers, saying 'I got some diesel I can pass off real cheap.' The stations are not aware of where it is coming from," he said.

Others will visit truck stops, offering 90-cent a gallon diesel to truckers and then pumping it on he parking lot.

"The hobby smuggler does it periodically when he needs a few bucks. They'll take the back seat out of a car and put in a tank and sell the stuff to a contracter who will pay for it at 70 cents a gallon," he said.

State investigators recently spent a week along the border trying to crack a ring they believe is operating at El Paso, Laredo and here. Diesel was being brought across from Mexico in pickup trucks and taken to a small tank farm near here.

Proffitt said no one has been charged although several Mexican nationals were warned against hauling the fuel for resale.

"Some of them have been very cooperative in explaining their role," he said.

State prosecutors in Austin and El Paso will handle criminal cases expected to arise from the investigation.

France has invested heavily to be nuclear exporter

By PAUL TREUTHARDT
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — France has invested long and heavily to become an exporter of nuclear technology, but three of its major projects have struck economic or political obstacles.

France's sale of the Osirak nuclear research reactor to Iraq — the facility bombed by Israeli jets June 7 — had raised concerns internationally about its potential for making nuclear bomb material.

But similar concerns arose, particularly in Washington, over a contract to sell a sophisticated nuclear fuel reprocessing plant to Pakistan. Such a plant can extract plutonium, the prime material for an atomic bomb, from used reactor fuel.

The Pakistan project finally ground to a halt because the French came to believe there was no legitimate civilian need for the plant, and Pakistan objected to French decisions to strengthen safeguard clauses in the contract.

France's Atomic Energy Commission (CEA) was founded by Gen. Charles de Gaulle in 1945 and set about finding uranium reserves both in France and in French-speaking Africa. With de Gaulle's drive for total independence, France developed nuclear weapons and nuclear power technology based on its own resources, including an electricity-generating reactor using natural uranium.

But by 1969 the CEA found that France "risked being technologically isolated and seeing its export prospects blocked" because most other countries were opting for American power-plant technology.

The French power-plant design was dropped in favor of licensing agreements to adopt American technology. Ten years later, France's sole nuclear power plant company, Framatome, was technologically strong enough to end its licensing agreement with Westinghouse and become a full partner of the American company.

France also is developing a breeder reactor, which eventually could produce more nuclear fuel than it consumes, including plutonium. As president, Jimmy Carter stopped breeder development in the United States, but the French are building a 1,000-megawatt breeder plant with cooperation from Italy and West Germany. It could be a prototype for future exports and is thought to be leading U.S. technology.

France's successful export deals have been contracts with South Africa, Egypt and South Korea.

In each case it sold two 900-to-1,000-megawatt electricity plants, with a price tag of about $1 billion per plant.

The South African deal aroused some domestic and foreign criticism because of suspicions about that white minority-ruled nation's desire to acquire nuclear weapons, but has not been a subject of contention for some years now.

Where France lost out was in China and Iran.

China in 1978 started negotiations to buy two of the standard 900-megawatt, $1-billion systems. But a year later, visiting Industry Minister Andre Giraud was told China was reluctantly abandoning the project. The Chinese, in a new mood of economic realism, said they could not afford it. They also said they were concerned about the Three Mile Island incident in the United States.

Work was actually in progress in Iran on two plants ordered by the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, who was looking to a future when oil would be too valuable to burn for electricity. But as the anti-shah revolution gained momentum, payments were halted and the work stopped.

The new regime of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini condemned the project as grandiose and unnecessary, and canceled it.

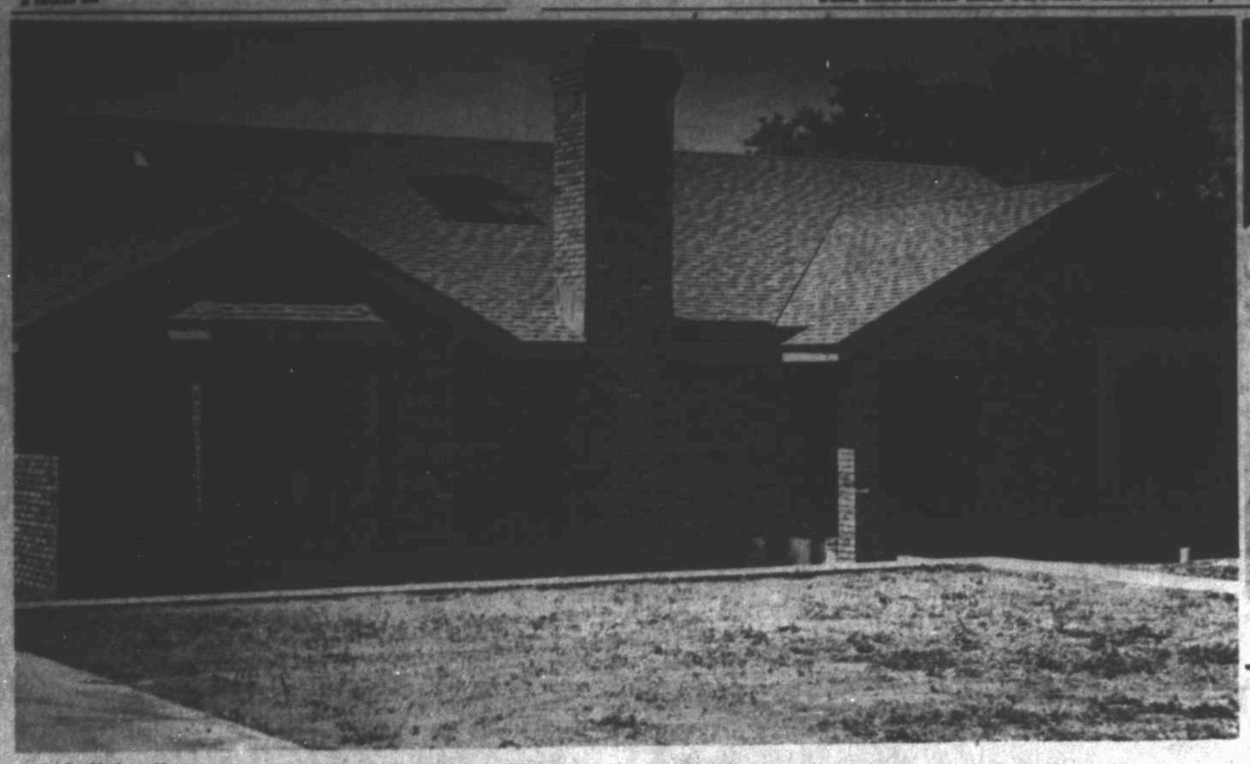

Iran also had provided $1 billion to France to invest in the Eurodif plant, a gaseous diffusion factory to make enriched uranium for reactors, including those in Iran. Negotiations are continuing about Iran's participation in Eurodif.

Under France's deal with Iraq, it supplied the Iraqis with two research reactors and their fuel, and was to help train oundreds of Arab technicians.

It was a unique venture that stirred heated opposition at home and abroad, being seen as a trade-off for guarantees of Iraqi oil supplies.

Defending the deal, the government of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing noted that Iraq had signed the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and said regular inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the presence of French technicians on the site made misuse of the plant to make nuclear weapons fuel impossible.

As criticism grew, France revealed it was developing a low-enriched fuel that could not in any way be used for weapons, as could the highly enriched uranium being provided to Iraq.

State animal chosen

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Illinois has a state tree, flower and bird — all chosen by children. Now, thanks again to the kids, Illinois is about to name its official state animal: the White-tailed deer.

Dog back home after absence

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Velma Welch didn't know what to make of the scratching sound at her door, so she went to shoo the animal away.

After all, her dog, Tony, had been missing nearly three years, and she wasn't expecting to see her again.

Tony, a German shepherd, had been with the Welches a year when she disappeared July 1, 1978.

"She looked real healthy and was wagging her tail furiously," Mrs. Welch said. "Whoever had her must have taken real good care of her, and she was well-fed."

75 degrees suggested

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements on Thursday recommended setting air conditioner thermostats at 75 degrees in state office buildings this summer to save energy and reduce utility bills.

Clements issued an "official memorandum" that also advised agency directors to use their discretion on possibly observing a "no coat, no tie dress code" from July 1 to Sept. 7.

The governor said between the temperatures of 72 to 78 degrees raising thermostat settings one degree can result in an estimated 4 percent savings in energy use.

Filter system approved for TMI cleanup

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has approved use of a filtration system to treat 700,000 gallons of highly radioactive water at the damaged Three Mile Island power plant.

Plant officials said the decontamination, a step toward the plant's ultimate cleanup, could begin in about three weeks.

The Submerged Demineralizer System (SDS) will use an ion exchange process to remove radioactive particles from the water and place them in resins, the NRC said.

Permission to use the system was granted in a letter delivered Thursday from the NRC's program director, Bernard Snyder, to Gale Hovey, vice-president of Metropolitan Edison Co., the plant operator.

"This order is effective immediately and requires that you shall promptly commence and complete processing," the letter said.

The system will be used on highly contaminated water lying eight-feet deep in the reactor building basement and in the reactor cooling system itself. The water collected at the plant during the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident on March 28, 1979.

The system would also be used on less-contaminated water now stored in tanks at the plant auxiliary building.

The system can be started in about three weeks and treatment of highly contaminated water can take place about one month after that, said Lake Barrett, the NRC's top on-site official.

After being treated, the water would be sent through another filtration system to remove most of the remaining contaminants, the NRC said.

Present plans call for the purified water to remain on Three Mile Island. However, the NRC could decide in the future to remove it.

The U.S. Department of Energy has agreed to remove the radioactive resins.

BP's $1.2 billion stock offering biggest ever in Britian or U.S.

LONDON (AP) — British Petroleum Co. Ltd. went to its shareholders for $1.2 billion of new capital Thursday, setting a record for a new stock offering by a British or American company.

By the end of the day in London, merchant bankers acting for the giant oil company said underwriters reported virtually all the 226.86 million new shares were sold. BP boosted the popularity of the new stock by offering it to its stockholders below the current market value.

The company, which is partly owned by the British government, said it needed the cash infusion to finance "significant new investment" at a time when its profits have been cut by the world oil glut, recession and increased taxes on its North Sea and Alaska oil holdings.

BP, the world's sixth-largest industrial company, reported earlier that its earnings in the first quarter fell to $790 million, a 21 percent drop from profits of $1 billion a year earlier.

"Our oil business may well not grow in the future as it did in the past but significant new investment will be needed particularly in exploration and production and also in more sophisticated refinery equipment," the company's directors said in a statement Thursday.

The money will be used to develop new oil fields and finance future investment in natural gas, minerals, coal, food and other fields, BP said.

The previous record for the sale of new shares by a British company was $408 million in 1976 by Imperial Chemical Industries. Last week, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. set a record for American companies by raising $1.006 billion in a new stock issue.

BP sold the 226.86 million new shares at 2.75 pounds, or about $5.50, per share. BP is traded on the New York Stock Exchange as well, with one depository receipt equaling four shares.

Stockholders were offered one new share for every seven held, with 1.25 pounds per share due initially and the balance due on Dec. 2. The stockholders also were able to buy one other share for every nine held at a price of 2.90 pounds, with the extra money going to the Treasury and the Bank of England.

The offer sent the price of BP stock down sharply on the London Stock Exchange, at one point falling 26 pence before closing down 18 at 3.30 pounds, or about $6.60. On the New York Stock Exchange, BP depository receipts closed at $26, down $1.875.

No decision on oil price, production changes made

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, has not changed the policies that helped to bring on the current world oil glut, the country's oil minister said Thursday.

Asked if there was to be any change in Saudi production or prices, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani replied, "There is no decision on that yet."

Yamani made the comment after a meeting of OPEC's long-term strategy committee, which apparently made no major decisions.

Saudi Arabia charges $32 a barrel for most of its oil and has been producing about 10 million barrels a day. There has been speculation it might reduce production to keep prices in the spot market from falling below $32, the lowest price charged by any member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The New York Daily News, quoting unnamed "sources close to Mideast oil developments," reported Thursday the Saudis have cut production to 9.3 million barrels a day, but oil company officials said they knew of no such developments.

"We have received no such notification," said a source at the Arabian American Oil Co., the consortium of four American oil companies that produces most Saudi oil. Two companies that are members of Aramco also said they had not heard of such an action.

A New York-based official at one of the companies, who also asked not to be named, pointed to Yamani's comment. "I'd be surprised if he'd make such a comment like that if they were doing something to production. He doesn't want to make himself look like a fool," he said.

Yamani said the two-day meeting of the stategy committee had "provided a better understanding of the present situation which will definitely have an impact on our strategy,

The company has recently placed participations in prospects with oil industry venturers totaling approximately $1,700,000.

These two offerings plus additional prospects the company plans to acquire during the balance of the year will provide MDI with a drilling budget of some $6,000,000 to $6,500,000 for 1981.

MDI began drilling in early June on the first prospects which included 18 initial wells ranging from 1,800 feet to 12,600 feet in Texas and south Louisiana.

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has submitted two grant applications to the Federal Railroad Administration for a total of $3.48 million to rehabilitate 37.5 miles of railroad track in the Texas Panhandle.

The first application is for $1.19 million to rehabilitate 13.4 miles of tract between Etter and Sunray. However, the application is conditional to on the purchase of track by TeCe Corp. from the trustee of the Rock Island rail line, which went bankrupt and is being liquidated.

Michael Calhoun, director of the Transportation Division's Rail Planning Section, told the Commission that TeCe acquisition of the former Rock Island line will restore vital rail service to an important wheat producing area in the Panhandle.

Nine grain elevators, which had been shipping approximately 425,000 tons of wheat each year by rail, have been without rail service for a year as a result of the Rock Island problem, he said. Consequently, Calhoun explained, the elevators are having to pay higher trucking costs to move wheat. Two elevators will close if the line is permanently abandoned, he added.

Other commodities shipped over the line were petroleum products, carbon black, anhydrous ammonia and livestock feedstuff.

TeCe is negotiating the purchase of a total of 74 miles of former Rock Island tract beteen Etter and Hitchland, but not enough grant money is available to allow the Commission to assist in the rehabilitation of the entire length, Calhoun said.

Therefore, he added, the TeCe application is limited to the cost of fixing the 13.4 mile portion of the line on which 70 percent of the line's traffic begins or ends.

The second application is for $2.29 million to rehabilitate 24.1 miles of tract between Dublin and Gorman now operated by Texas Central Railroad.

Calhoun advised that Texas Central does not now have adequate financial reserves to fully rehabilitate the line, and continued delay of maintenace could result in abandonment.

He said the los of rail service by Texas Central would cause 135 persons near Gorman to lose their jobs, as one firm would be forced out of business and another would have to cut production of 50 percent. Twelve other shippers on the line would have to pay greatly increased transportation costs, making their businesses non-competitive in the marketplace.

Half of the peanut crop grown in Texas and Oklahoma is processed thrugh facilities on the Texas Central line, Calhoun said.

The Local Rail Service Assistance Act of 1978 allows federal financial assistance for rehabilitating certain rail lines. Under the rail assistance program, each state is required to designate a state agency to prepare and implement a state rail plan. The Railroad Commission, the agency given the responsibility by the governor, completed the Texas State Rail Plan in 1979 and it was approved by the Federal Railroad Administration.

The Act requires each state's plan to focus on light-density brance lines that are being abandoned or are in danger of abandonment. Once the plan is approved by the FRA, the state is eligible to apply for federal grant funds to upgrade the endangered lines.

The grant applications forwarded by the Commission mark the third and fourth rehabilitation projects proposed by the Commssion since it submitted the Texas Rail plan. the first project, a $1.7 million rehabilitation of the Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad Company's (MKT) Wichita Falls-Burkburnett line, began in late 1979 and was completed in October 1980. The second project, now underway, is a $2.6 million upgrade of the MKT's line between Dallas and Carrollton. Benefits from these projects to Texas shippers and consumers are estimated to be $11.4 million.

World oil prices continuing to fall

By FLOYD NORRIS
AP Business Writer

World oil prices have dropped below the $32 level charged by Saudi Arabia, and oil exporters are beginning to fear that the oil glut the Saudis helped to bring on may last for years.

If so, the March peak of U.S. gasoline prices at an average $1.37 a gallon could prove to be the highest price of this year or next.

Humberto Calderon Berti, the Venezuelan oil minister, called on OPEC members this week to freeze prices until at least the end of 1983, and maybe 1984. The cartel has already voted to freeze prices this year.

Calderon Berti said he fears that the near tripling of oil prices in 1979 and 1980 permanently changed the world energy situation by bringing on increased conservation and the rapid switch to coal for electricity generation.

"We must make an effort to preserve our share of the (energy) market," he said after a meeting of the long-term strategy committee of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Saudi Arabia helped to bring on the glut by producing almost 10 million barrels of oil a day, 40 percent of all OPEC production, and charging $32 a barrel, less than any of its OPEC colleagues.

The Saudis have insisted that they will not change policy until other members of OPEC make at least small cuts in prices, which range up to $41 a barrel. But Saudi oil is now being traded on spot markets for as little as $31.50 a barrel, a fact that analysts think surprised even the Saudis. The spot price covers oil not sold under long-term contract.

"The Saudis may have no more than four to six weeks to reduce production," Edward Yardeni, the chief economist of E.F. Hutton & Co., the Wall Street firm, said Friday. "After that, they may no longer be able to control the glut they helped create."

The official price cuts sought by the Saudis are proving difficult to obtain. So far, such countries as Nigeria, Libya and Algeria have refused to cut prices even though their sales are down sharply. "Reducing prices is very difficult for political reasons," Calderon Berti said in an interview. "It just won't prove to be possible."

Conoco rejects $2 billion offer for a quarter of its stock

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Conoco Inc., the nation's ninth-largest oil company, said Friday it has rejected a proposal by "a major foreign corporation" to buy about a quarter of its stock for as much as $2 billion.

The Stamford-based company also said it is engaged in preliminay discussions "with a major corporation looking toward a merger with Conoco."

Neither the foreign bidder nor the potential merger partner were identified.

Conoco said the foreign bidder made two proposals.

In one deal, valued at about $1.7 billion, the company would buy 15.9 million shares of stock directly from Conoco at $75 a share, and another 9.6 million shares in the open market.

Under the other proposal, with a $2.002 billion price tag, the foreign company would buy 28.6 million shares directly from Conoco at $70 a share.

Conoco disclosed the offer after the close of trading on the New York Stock Exchange. In trading Friday, Conoco rose $1.75 a share to close at $56.25.

If Conoco accepted either of its offers, the foreign corporation proposed, it would agree not to purchase any additional shares of Conoco for 15 years if such a purchase would boost its share of voting stock to more than 25 percent, the oil company said.

The foreign corporation also said it would agree not to seek or join in seeking control of Conoco during the next 15 years, Conoco said.

"After extensive consideration, Conoco's board of directors determined not to accept either proposal," the company said.

Three UT departments to receive $285,000

AUSTIN — Three departments in the University of Texas at Austin College of Engineering will share $285,000 in grants the Sun Company will contribute to the University over the next five years, Dr. Earnest Gloyna, engineering dean, has announced.

The grants from the Dallas-based company are part of its program to help selected univeristies developm and retain faculty members in key scientific disciplines.

The UT recipients are the Departments of Petroleum Engineering ($200,000), Chemical Engineering ($55,000) and Mechanical Engineering ($30,000).

"With the growing demand for technical graduates in the energy industry, Sun has a commitment to the dedicated educators who train our future employees," said Sue Trolinger, Sun's recruiting representative. UT graduates "are continually among industry's most productive ad innovative employees," she said.

The grants stipulate that the $285,000 be used as salary supplements, awards and assistance to professors; endowment of a chair in one of the three departments, or as financial assistance to qualified students seeking advanced degrees for teaching careers.

Water, dirty oil spell big trouble for diesel

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

Diesel fuel often has water in it, and water can foul the injection system of an engine. Bob Mueller, senior automotive engineering consultant for the Auto Club of Southern California in Los Angeles, said the problem is more likely to occur in Mexico.

He recommends use of an auxiliary fuel filter-water separating device and regular monitoring of the water content.

Depending on what kind of filter you use, water content can be determined visually or mechanically. For details, check the instructions on the filter or discuss with the person who installs the device.

Mueller also suggested owners of diesel cars use the exact kind of oil listed in the owner's manual.

Brazil's alcohol-powered automobile boom is stalling

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A program to ease Brazil's energy crunch with alcohol-powered automobiles has gone into a stall. Some drivers are going back to gasoline, claiming the alcohol cars don't run as well, and others have stopped buying them.

Sales of alcohol cars have evaporated from 42,000 in January to only 12,000 in May, while gasoline-powered vehicles sales have remained at a constant 30,000 units a month.

The turnaround caught multinational automakers Volkswagen, General Motors, Ford and Fiat completely by surprise. In January they were demanding government permission to produce some 700,000 alcohol cars in 1981 — double the quota set under the government's national alcohol program.

But now they are sitting on thousands of unsold alcohol-powered passenger vehicles.

The sudden disenchantment with alcohol has been attributed to consumer doubts about its economic advantages, its poor performance and fears that alcohol fuel supplies may suddenly dry up.

"We're all disgusted," said Sao Paulo taxi cooperative director Valdemar Goncalves de Brito. Taxi drivers in that industrial city are switching their engines back to gasoline so quickly that the alcohol-powered cab fleet has dropped from 60 percent of the total to only 10 percent in six months.

De Brito says drivers complain alcohol vehicles are impossible to start in cold weather, refuse to climb hills, need frequent repairs and get poor fuel mileage. He claims the life expectancy of an alcohol motor is only 72,000 miles, as opposed to 240,000 miles for gasoline engines.

The increasing resistance to alcohol comes despite government subsidies to keep the pump price no higher than 65 percent of gasoline, and looser credit for alcohol-car buyers. Brazil has vigorously pushed alcohol, produced from locally grown sugar cane, to end its dependence on foreign oil, which accounts for 80 percent of the nation's daily petroleum consumption.

But consumers contend that since all-alcohol cars were introduced publically in 1980, the rewards of having them have disappeared.

De Brito says a recent disproportionately high price hike for alcohol — 32 percent, compared to 10 percent for gasoline — has raised costs past the break-even point. Gasoline now sells here at the equivalent of $2.84 a gallon, while alcohol sells from $1.81. Taxi drivers say the difference fails to compensate for alcohol's 40 percent poorer mileage.

A Rio de Janeiro Volkswagen auto dealer, Frank Darzi, blames the drastic sales dropoff on "the increasing fear that there could be a shortage of alcohol." He notes that Brazil's alcohol production fell 67 percent in April.

To stretch alcohol supplies, the government began diluting the fuel with gasoline. At the same time, it lowered the percentage of alcohol mixed with all Brazilian gasoline sold at the pump. Prior to that step, 20 percent alcohol was mixed in to form "gasohol" fuel. That figure is now down to 12 percent, and it could drop to zero.

One cause of the shortage may be the volatile international sugar market, which registered high prices last year after half a decade in the doldrums.

According to Sao Paulo State Agricultural official Vasco Maroni, sugar cane growers can get a 40 percent better return by exporting sugar than by converting it to alcohol and selling it domestically. And even alcohol itself is a booming export — Brazil has sold about six percent of its national production to other nations to take advantage of the $70 a barrel international price.

The price of sugar has dropped in recent months, but cane planters now say that the government's alcohol production figures for the next five years are unrealistically high. One spokesman for the Copersucar Co., Brazil's largest alcohol producer, recently said that even "optimistically" the country would be able to reach only 80 percent of its 1985 production target of 2.8 billion gallons.

At least publicly, the automakers are still sold on alcohol. General Motors spokesman Antonio Romeu Neto blames the sales plunge on temporary credit problems, and the end of what he calls "the emotional phase" of alcohol vehicle sales.

The country's vice president, Aureliano Chaves, has publicly dismissed the shortage fears, assuring the nation that "the alcohol program is still viable."

But alcohol expert Jaime Rotstein, who sits on the energy committee of the Rio Commercial Association, says he thinks the alcohol program is on the way out — at least for passenger cars.

Says Rotstein, a longtime proponent of alcohol fuel, "Everybody knows the alcohol program has been a relative success in Brazil, but that doesn't mean it has been a real success." Rotstein predicts that in five years alcohol will be limited to trucks and buses, which he feels can genuinely benefit from the fuel's advantages.

When asked what will become of those who bought alcohol cars over the past year, Rotstein shrugs and says, "Someone always suffers when policy changes have to be made."

Attorney claims hearing misused

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The Oklahoma Securities Commission used a civil hearing to try to build a criminal case against Shawnee entrepeneur Coy Denton Everett, one of Everett's attorneys has ableged.

Gene Howard, a Tulsa attorney, on Friday said he will advise Everett to avoid similar hearings in the future.

Everett plans to contest a contempt citation issued at the hearing on grounds he received no official notice of a court order freezing his assetts, Howard said.

Everett and Howard were absent from the Thursday hearing before Oklahoma County District Judge John Amick, who heard testimony from Oklahoma Securities Commission officials concerning alleged sale of unregistered securities in a $15 million oil investment project.

"If my understanding is correct, it appears the whole thing was directed to try and use a civil proceeding to build a criminal case for the Securities Commission," Howard said.

"That is not the place to do that, and I will not get Coy involved in hearings like that. The Securities Commission is trying to maximize their visibility and to degrade my client.

"If there is something the Securities Commission believes warrants criminal charges, then they should file them," Howard said.

Amick ruled Thursday Everett had sold unregistered securities, comingled inetors' and personal funds, and used money from new investors to pay old investors.

"The hearing was to consider the injunction on the assets, and we felt there was no reason for us to be there," Howard said.

"After filing for reorganization, we have no control of the assets. They are controlled now by the bankruptcy trustee," he said.

Amick also held Everett and Farmers and Merchants Bank in Tecumseh in indirect contempt for violating a May 21 restraining order freezing all financial tansactions concerning Everett.

"We have never seen a copy of the state's restraining order, so we don't at this point even know what we are supposed to be complying with," Howard said.

Tom Weichbrodt, securities commission attorney, said the commission "put on evidence to prove the necessity of continuing the restraining order, and if that looks bad for Coy Everett then that's the way it is, because those are the facts."

"If Coy or his attorney had been at the hearing and agreed — like the other defendants — to continue the order, then I wouldn't have had to present the evidence," Weichbrodt said.

TVA manager resigns for Texas utility job

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Jerrold G. Dewease, a top Tennessee Valley Authority nuclear power manager, is leaving the federal agency for a job with a Texas utility, TVA announced Friday.

Dewease, who is assistant director of TVA's nuclear power division, is accepting a position as vice president for nuclear operations with the Houston Lighting and Power Co.

Dewease, 42, is the third high-ranking TVA power official to depart the agency since October. Jerre Wilson, deputy power manager, left in April to join a Knoxville energy firm and Jack R. Calhoun, TVA's director of nuclear power, departed in October to take an executive position with Pennsylvania Power and Light Co.

Hugh Parris, TVA's manager of power, said Dewease's departure illustrates the difficulty of keeping top managers who can earn higher salaries in private industry.

Dewease holds an electrical engineering degree from Christian Brothers College in Memphis and did graduate work in engineering at Memphis State University.

He went to work as an electrical engineer at the Allen steam plant in Memphis in 1960 when the plant was operated by the Memphis Light, Gas and Water division. Dewease became a TVA employee in 1965 when the Allen plant became part of the TVA system under a lease agreement with the city of Memphis.

Creditors approve plan

By The Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Unsecured creditors of bankrupt Commonwealth Oil Refining Co. have approved a controversial plan that company officials say will help get Corco out of bankruptcy this summer.

After a federal court hearing Thursday in San Antonio, U.S. District Judge Joseph C. Elliott ruled the creditors had accepted the plan.

Transocean Gulf Oil Co. and the Securities and Exchange Commission have filed objections to confirmation of the plan.

Under the plan, unsecured creditors would receive 35 percent of their allowed claims in cash, 40 percent in a choice of two new debentures, and the rest in common stock and warrants.

Gulf, Corco's largest unsecured creditor with claims of about $32.5 million, withheld its vote, which is tantamount to rejecting the plan. Exxon International Co., with claims of $9.2 million, approved it.

The company has about $98 million in claims against it. Approximately 91 percent of the pre-bankruptcy unsecured creditors voted for the plan.

Corco Chairman Donald D. McCurig said he believes Corco will come out of bankruptcy by the end of July.

Phoenix Resources hires bank to dispose of company or assets

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Independent oil and gas firm Phoenix Resources Co. has retained an investment banking firm, Morgan Stanley & Co., to help in disposing of the company or its assets.

A decision about the disposition is not expected to be made before Phoenix's July 15 annual stockholders' meeting, officials said Friday.

Phoenix also announced an apparently significant natural gas discovery has been made in Duval County, Texas.

The well, drilled late last year, recently was tested through perforations between 15,068 and 15,134 feet, and flowed natural gas at 9.65 million cubic feet per day. Wellhead flowing pressure was 10,555 pounds per square inch.

James Kishpaugh, Phoenix president, said the company's interest in the well would be 28 percent after the operator recovers drilling, completing and operating costs, an amount expected to exceed $5 million.

He added that Phoenix probably would not receive any revenue from the well before 1982. The company does not have any additional land in the area.

Is it economical to switch from gas to diesel?

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

"The diesel engine is named for Rudolf Diesel, the German engineer who invented it. Diesel built his first engine in 1893. It exploded and almost killed him, but it proved that fuel could be ignited without a spark." – World Book

Your diesel has come a long way, Rudolf.

You will find the engine available in cars as small as the Volkswagen Rabbit and as large as a big Cadillac or Oldsmobile.

Now, Mr. Diesel, if only you were around to answer the question: Should my next car be a diesel or a plain-Jane gas sucker?

Anyone asking that question should carefully consider the advantages and disadvantages of the diesel. Following areopinions and facts gleaned from people who know diesels best, mechanics, diesel outfitters and automobile club engineers.

They even use different fuels -- an oil for diesels and volatile gasoline for the others.

Simply put, the gasoline engine uses an electrical system that sends electricity to spark plugs. The spark makes a gasoline mixture inside the engine explode. The zillions of little blasts make the pistons go and it's all geared up so you can drive a car.

The diesel engine doesn't even have a spark plug. It relies upon high pressure to compress an oil mixture. If squeezed enough, the fuel gets so hot it explodes. (RememberRudolf.)

That pressure is contained in a sturdy engine, and only recently were engineers able to come up with a small engine that could handle such pressure. In the past, the tough engines were associated with locomotives and dinosaur-size trucks that go HONK in the night.

The diesel engine is more durable and more efficient than a gas burner. You can get up to 30 miles a gallon in a big Oldsmobile.

So the advantages of the diesel are: The engine is tough and long-lasting.

It uses a safe non-flammable fuel that costs less to produce. Hence, diesel fuel is cheaper than gasoline.

Diesels don't have tune-ups. That is, you don't have to change spark plugs, points, distributors, condensers and stuff because they don't exist.

The engine is more efficient. It gets more work out of each gallon of fuel. That means more miles per gallon.

Because diesel fuel is non-flammable, it is safe to store. That means you can either replace a small tank with a larger one or you can safely add tanks to the car to increase driving range. You can increase tank capacity for $175 to $300.

Japanese complain about import competition

By HIDESUKE NAGASHIMA
Copley News Service

TOKYO — In an ironic turn of events, the Japanese are complaining about "unfair" import competition from the United States.

The Japanese, who have been embroiled in a series of trade disputes with the United States for allegedly dumping everything from textiles to home electronics to cars, now charge the United States is shipping too much aluminum to Japan and is hurting the local aluminum industry.

The industry, hard hit by surging low-cost imports, is agitating for "voluntary restraints" on U.S. shipments. The imports are more than 20 percent cheaper than Japanese products, thanks to lower energy costs in the United States.

The industry is indeed in deep trouble. Production by smelters is at a record low, with 20,000 workers thrown out of jobs in recent years, and there is talk of "restructuring" the whole industry through a major reduction in Japan's aluminum smelting capacity.

Despite mounting protectionist demands from both labor and management of the aluminum industry, the Japanese government is unlikely to make any complaints to Washington, fearing a protectionist backlash from the United States. Anyhow, as an advocate of free trade, Japan is in no position to make such protests.

"We have a situation reverse to the car trade issue with the United States," Yoshimasa Matsunaga, president of the Japan Aluminum Association, said recently.

"As far as aluminum is concerned, the Americans have been covering slumping domestic sales with mass shipments to Japan. Growing U.S. imports threaten to force Japanese smelters out of the market."

The labor and management of the aluminum industry are both appealing for restrictions on U.S. shipments.

The Japan Aluminum Association, an industry trade group, in February asked the Japanese government to consult with Washington on the issue, and the All-Japan Federation of Aluminum Workers Union in April sent a delegation to the United States to make direct appeals to industry and labor leaders.

The delegation, headed by Hitoshi Namikawa, met with officials of the Aluminum Association in Washington and the United Steelworkers of America in Pittsburgh, which represents steelworkers and aluminum industry employees.

The group did not contact the U.S. government on individual aluminum companies.

"We got a sympathetic hearing," says Namikawa. "The Americans understood our position, I think, though they were unable to promise any specific action to ease our problem."

A survey by the Japan Aluminum Association shows Japan's aluminum imports from the United States last year tripled from the previous year to 306,880 tons, accounting for 36 percent of total imports. The average U.S. market share in Japan in 1975-79 was only 7.7 percent.

About one half of U.S. aluminum export shipments were headed for Japan, according to the association.

The Japanese aluminum processing industry turned to imports because they were much cheaper than local products.

The official Japanese aluminum price is 488,000 yen (about $2,200) per ton, while the import price for U.S. aluminum, including the duty, is about 380,000 yen ($1,700).

The price gap is ascribed to the much higher cost of electric power in Japan — mostly generated by oil-burning power stations — in the wake of a series of OPEC oil price hikes.

The power cost accounts for 30 to 40 percent of the Japanese aluminum smelting cost.

Facing a severe sales slump, the Japanese aluminum industry has cut back production to an annual rate of some 900,000 tons, far below the present production capacity of 1.1 million tons. The industry is in the midst of its second major crisis since the oil shortages of 1973-74, which caused a sharp rise in the production cost.

Texas' bright glow

Recently a copy of State Comptroller Bob Bullock's analysis of Texas' economic health, "Why Texas Is Growing," came to our attention. The report reaffirms our belief in the financial security of the state and details, to a large extent, the reasons for the state's success.

In the introduction to his report, Bullock notes that "in the past decade, while other regional economies bowed to the effects of inflation and recession, rising prices and falling expectations, the Texas economy easily outperformed all rivals."

The report goes on to note that Newsweek "called Texas an 'economic superstate' and with good reason. Texas has become the nation's strongest regional economy, a title earned in the Seventies and retained in the Eighties."

Between 1970 and 1980, Texas' population grew by some three million people. That population explosion, the report notes, "has sharply increased the number of Texans working and looking for work." Yet most of those new workers were able to find employment in Texas. During 1980, Texas' jobless rate ranked 10th lowest in the United States.

The business climate in Texas, as evidenced by the data in Bullock's report, remains exceptionally good. The state's business and industrial sector grows, the comptroller notes, because Texas can offer low taxes and a responsible approach to financing state services. As examples, he cites the following facts:

— Texas has one of the lowest tax burdens nationally and levies neither personal nor corporate income taxes.

— Texas adopted a "pay-as-you-go" approach to financing state government 40 years before California's Proposition 13 made fiscal responsibility fashionable.

— No major state tax was increased during the last eight years of the Seventies.

Other factors, too, make Texas extremely attractive to people and businesses. On the average, the residents of the state enjoy a relatively low cost of living, a growing market, available energy and an exceptional quality of life.

Furthermore, statistics from the U.S. Department of Commerce show that, based on 1979 information, Texas' per capita state tax burden was bettered only by three states — New Hampshire, South Dakota and Tennessee.

Neither has state spending increased too rapidly for the Texas economy. Between 1975 and 1980 state revenue grew from $5.7 billion to just under $10.7 billion, while expenditures grew from from $5.4 billion to $10.2 billion. And the state has been able to operate on its revenue without a major tax increase, runaway spending or reliance on debt financing.

Texas' fiscal picture is an attractive one, signaling continued growth and stability for all of the state's cities. Midland is a good example of that Texas vitality, with bank deposits at an all-time high, construction under way on numerous additional multi-story buildings and housing projects, and a rapidly-growing populace.

Midland's success is indicative of Texas' success. The future is bright!

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Supporting tyranny undermining U.S. ethics

WASHINGTON — If there is one emotional spring that runs deepest in the hearts of the American people, it is their sympathy for the downtrodden. This is a nation of refugees, the home of the oppressed and the derelict who came here to escape tyranny — the "huddled masses, yearning to breathe free."

Jack Anderson

They raised up a mighty nation, which has a historic commitment to champion human rights throughout the world. Yet today, the United States finds itself in awkward alliance with dictators who are estranged from the people they rule.

There are those in Washington who put geopolitics and commercial interests ahead of concern for the suffering of defenseless people. Indeed, some of our leaders are actively developing a camaraderie with strutting, conniving despots who hold their nations in cruel subjugation.

At the White House level, all presidents have espoused human rights. But not all presidents have put their rhetoric into action. Jimmy Carter made human rights the heart of his foreign policy, but, in the implementation, he was selective and ineffective. He was given more to pious pronouncements and sanctimonious scoldings.

Ronald Reagan, speaking spontaneously from the heart, promised to use the presidency as a pulpit from which to "point the finger of shame" at the persecution of people anywhere, everywhere. Persecution, the president said, "is a matter to be on the negotiating table, or the United States does not belong at that table." Yet his eloquence has gone largely ignored by the people he has put in charge of foreign policy.

For reasons of supposed global strategy, the Statue of Liberty has been asked to hold in her embrace tyrants, oppressors, torturers, even mass murderers. This has produced a succession of follies and tragedies, with a terrible human toll. Here is the record, as compiled by my associate Lucette Lagnado:

— In Cambodia, the barbarous Pol Pot embarked on a rampage of genocide unmatched since Adolf Hitler was on the loose. Yet Jimmy Carter, for all his breastbeating over human rights, twice voted in the United Nations to support the Pol Pot regime. Ronald Reagan, though walking on tiptoe, still remains in Pol Pot's corner.

— In El Salvador, the moderate junta has been unable or unwilling to stop government troops from shooting and shelling innocent civilians. Assault and pillage have become the army's way of life. Impartial observers have called it "a bloodbath." Yet the Reagan administration has sent armaments to El Salvador and military advisers to instruct the troops how to use the new weapons.

— The Chilean secret police carried out a brutal assassination in downtown Washington. Yet the dictatorship has refused to extradite the culprits who presumably are needed at home to repress the populace. This hasn't stopped Washington notables from attending diplomatic soirees given by the Chilean ambassador. Meanwhile, the Reagan administration has lifted the sanctions on Export-Import Bank loans to Chile and has invited the Chileans to join the U.S. Navy in naval maneuvers.

— In the Soviet Union, a massive crackdown has been reported on political dissidents. Professionals, artists and minorities have been singled out for retribution. The violence in Afghanistan also goes on unabated, with a weekly slaughter that is chronicled in intelligence reports. Yet for reasons both commercial and political, the Reagan administration has ended the grain embargo and is preparing for business-as-usual with the Russians. This news has had a devastating effect, according to intelligence reports, on the morale of the Afghan resistance fighters.

— In Pakistan, dictator Mohammed Zia ul-Haq is desperately trying to save his shaky regime by purging the opposition. More than 1,000 political dissidents have been arrested since the first of the year. Nevertheless, the Reagan administration is preparing a huge military-economic aid package for gift-wrapping.

— For a generation, the United States has sought to rally the civilized world against terrorism. The State Department has accused four nations of harboring and abetting terrorists: Libya, Iraq, Syria and South Yemen. Yet, President Carter invited Libyan diplomats into the oval office after the intercession of his brother, Billy. Although President Reagan has now ordered the Libyans out of the country, his administration has agreed to sell Boeing 747s and 727s to Iraq. These can be converted into military transports.

— South Africa has perpetuated harsh racial policies, the most recent manifestations being a raid against blacks in Mozambique and the shutdown of two black newspapers. Yet various spokesmen have declared it is the intention of the Reagan administration to improve relations with South Africa.

— There have been arbitrary arrests and mysterious disappearances among critics of the military regime in Argentina. The respected Amnesty International has disputed reports that the disappearances have ended. The Reagan administration, nevertheless, has offered to lift the ban on U.S. aid.

— In Guatemala, government troops have attacked villages, shooting wildly, rounding up the villagers and massacring them in cold blood. Yet the Reagan administration wants to give the army $3.1 million worth of trucks and jeeps.

— Uncle Sam has carried on a shabby flirtation with other dictators around the world. Inevitably, this will alienate the people who, if past patterns hold true, will overthrow the hated dictators and turn against the United States.

President Reagan is a good-hearted man who is grieved by human suffering. But to stop the oppression, he favors a "quiet diplomacy" that has become so quiet it has encouraged the oppressors.

GEORGE F. WILL

Moynihan's Czech gold bill needs a slight improvement

WASHINGTON — Now comes what surely will be the final installment in the long-running but little-noticed story of the Czechoslovakian gold, a drama that asks the question: Is even Pat Moynihan a tad soft on Czechoslovakia?

George F. Will

In 1948 the Communists seized power in Prague and expropriated all property owned in Czechoslovakia by U.S. citizens. Communism always is theft, but this theft involved a peculiar problem. There was in the United States nearly 9 tons of gold belonging to Czechoslovakia. It was part of the gold captured by the U.S. Army when the Third Reich collapsed, and was awarded to Czechoslovakia by an international commission. In response to Czechoslovakia's expropriations, President Truman blocked the gold.

In 1958 a U.S. government agency placed a $113.64 million value on U.S. citizens' claims against Czechoslovakia. The U.S. seized and sold steel mill equipment belonging to Czechoslovakians and distributed the proceeds ($8.5 million) to claimants, leaving a balance owed of $105 million. Today, many claimants are elderly and in need; others have died without receiving justice.

In 1974, Czechoslovakia had the effrontery to offer $20.5 million to settle the $105 million debt — plus any unadjudicated claims by any other U.S. citizens — the $20.5 million was to be paid over 12 years, and without interest. The State Department, full of the spirit of detente, thought that offer was dandy.

Congress objected and stipulated by statute that the gold must be held until a settlement is approved by Congress. The Senate Finance Committee said: "The United States simply cannot afford to proclaim...that expropriations of U.S. properties will quickly be forgotten if the taking nation ultimately offers a relative pittance in return."

Patience is a virtue but not as practiced by the State Department. It has been negotiating, intermittently, since the year the Boston Braves won the pennant.

For 33 years Czechoslovakia has had the constant and cost-free use of American assets. Evidently the State Department did not negotiate at all between 1974 and 1980. But in 1980 Sen. Moynihan became, as he is wont to do, aroused.

He proposed legislation to give Czechoslovakia 60 days to reach a settlement agreeable to Congress. After the deadline, the gold would be sold, the proceeds would be invested, and the yield distributed until all claims had been paid. Then the invested principal would be given to Czechoslovakia.

Twice last year the State Department urged Congress not to pass Moynihan's bill because serious negotiations were supposedly at hand. A year later we are, of course, no closer to an acceptable settlement than we were 33 years ago. Czechoslovakia's intransigence persists, in spite of the determined diplomacy of the State Department's most recent negotiator, Ambassador Rozanne Ridgeway.

The Senate Finance Committee has unanimously approved an identical Moynihan bill. The House version seems to be sailing toward passage. The State Department says it will decide by June 30 whether to support it. Surely only a sinister force could cause Al Haig to oppose it.

It should, however, be improved. Homer nods and even Moynihan errs. He has been exemplary on this issue, but he should toughen the terms. Our relations with Czechoslovakia can hardly get worse while Czechoslovakia is serving as the Soviet Union's surrogate bully regarding Poland. So let's try a little linkage.

The bill should stipulate that the sum owed is not $105 million. The value of the property should be calculated in 1948 dollars, then recalculated allowing for 33 years of compounded inflation, with 33 years of compounded interest added on. Then a fee should be added to reimburse the U.S. government for its time, and labor.

Furthermore, the bill should stipulate that the invested funds from the sale of the gold must remain invested until they have generated enough interest to reimburse all those who left property in Czeckoslovakia when they fled to freedom in 1968.

And even when all such claims have been paid, the invested funds should remain invested until the President certifies that Czechoslovakia is in complete compliance with the Helsinki Agreements, of which it is signatory. That means freedom to travel, free access to communications, and general freedom from repression, for the Charter 77 dissidents, and all other Czechs.

Given this requirement, the invested funds would remain invested here for a while. So the Moynihan bill should stipulate that the yield from the investment shall be divided between the Czech-language division of Radio Free Europe, and endowing a chair at Georgetown University. It shall be the Jeane Kirkpatrick Chair for the Study of the Distinction between Totalitarian (such as the Czech) and the Authoritarian Regimes.

BIBLE VERSE

Whosoever shall humble himself shall be exalted. Matt. 23: 12

ART BUCHWALD

Billy Martin hasn't even kicked yet!

A lady called me up the other day and said, "I've been reading the newspapers and watching television, and what I want to know is, does the baseball strike mean the end of the world?"

Art Buchwald

I felt I couldn't lie to her. "For some people it does, but my information is that others will survive it, though nobody knows what shape they'll be in."

"Why," she persisted, "is baseball so important to the United States?"

"Because," I told her, "it's the American pastime. Since we play it, and hardly anyone else does, it makes us different from any other country on the face of the globe. God has blessed our people with the ability to hit and field a little ball over a vast area, guarded by some of the highest-paid men in sports. When American men refuse to play the game, the entire world could read this as a sign of this country's lack of resolution and fortitude."

"Are you saying," she wanted to know, "that a baseball strike could encourage aggression and adventurism by the other side?"

"Everything is done by signals nowadays. How the other side reads our signals could affect their future behavior. The fact that we, at the moment, have no capacity to complete a double play, or even sacrifice a man who is on first base, could be read by our critics as a signal that this country is so involved in domestic strife that it could not deal with any mischief abroad. On the other hand, the situation could be interpreted as one of strength. It shows that we have the ability to defend ourselves despite the fact that there is no one guarding home plate."

I didn't want to frighten the lady, but apparently I had. "Why doesn't the president of the United States step in and settle the strike if our national security is at stake?" she demanded.

"This has been suggested by one of the owners," I told her. "But so far, the president doesn't want to interfere in the negotiations because if he failed at this stage there would be no place for both sides to go. The president of the United States must not squander this power until all hope is lost. That is the reason he did not get involved in the recent coal strike which tied up the Eastern part of the country."

"But isn't a baseball strike much more serious to the nation than a coal strike?" she asked.

"To some people it is — mostly the owners. But there are others in this country who are not baseball fans and couldn't care less."

"They can't be Americans."

"I'm sorry to say they are. Some are football fans. Others prefer to watch basketball, and many would rather play a sport of their own. It is this apathy that made the strike possible in the first place and could slow down a fast and just settlement."

"How can a sport that only requires nine men to each side affect so many people in the nation?"

"Because most American men were raised on baseball. When they became too old to play it, they preferred to watch other, more talented people compete on television during the long hot summer months. When you take away baseball from their screens, you create an entertainment void in this country that can't be measured. There are just so many times any human being can watch a rerun of 'MASH.' If the strike goes on much longer no one knows what could happen in the city streets this July."

The lady said, "The strike is only a week old, and my husband is starting to act strangely already. Is there anything I can tell him that will give him hope?"

"Tell him that Washington is watching the situation very carefully, and the president is being informed of the negotiations on the hour. Congressional leaders are also being briefed, and the White House situation room is in direct contact with the Chicago Cubs."

"If there is no settlement soon, will the president call out the National Guard?"

"Only if Billy Martin starts kicking dirt at the federal negotiators."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Republicans in Texas were doing a bit of celebrating last week.

For one thing, it was the 20th anniversary of John Tower's service in the U.S. Senate — a place he wasn't expected to go, and where he wasn't expected to stay.

For another, Sen. Bill Meier, D-Euless, became Sen. Bill Meier, R-Euless, the third incumbent legislator to convert — or defect, depending on one's party affiliation — to the GOP since the last election.

Reps. Ray Keller, Dallas, and George Pierce, San Antonio, announced last month they were moving over to the Republican ticket.

Meier's move was watched with considerable interest by a lot of political hopefuls, and not just because of the arguments about switching to, or signing up with, the Republicans.

Fort Worth Rep. Gib Lewis, the heir apparent to the speakership being vacated by Bill Clayton, has been reported to be eyeing the prospects of a Senate race should Meier exit.

And Meier has indicated that he is exiting the Senate — at least as a senator.

He will decide later, he reports, on whether he'll make a race for Congress — or attempt to return to the Senate, to preside over it as the lieutenant governor.

Lewis' exit from the House would create a lively race for the speaker's post, with several members already having made it clear that they're ready and willing to take up the effort if Lewis chooses to abandon it.

But if Meier decides to make a run at the lieutenant governor's post, he'll be coming up against incumbent Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who announced last year that he would be running again in 1982 — timing that announcement, it was felt, to discourage any senators who might have ambitions to better themselves from deciding to launch campaigns while the Legislature was in session.

Hobby also reported at that time that he'd been told Clayton might have some ambitions regarding a switch in which part of the Legislature over which to preside.

If Hobby, who won the office for the first time in 1972, wins again, he will have held the post a record 14 years at the end of his next term.

Currently, the record is 11 years, held by Ben Ramsey.

The office of lieutenant governor is a rather curious — and powerful — one.

It has been suggested, at times, that the office is really more powerful than that of the governor, who must rely more on persuasion and charm than any constitutionally granted power.

Over the years, Hobby has grown accustomed to the exercise of that power, which he exercises in an almost offhanded manner, with a gentlemanly rap of the gavel (compared to the John Henry-esque smiting of Clayton across the Rotunda).

Hobby generally has steered clear of major controversies in his handling of the Senate, although his role in prompting the 1979 flight of the "Killer Bee" senators in a dispute over a presidential preference primary measure showed that Hobby isn't adverse to taking a hand in political disputes.

And the subsequent handling of events showed Hobby also can close up political wounds without greatly visible scars.

All in all, Hobby's service has been low-key and smoothly running.

He's made few noticeable enemies, and appears to have gathered a large group of friends among the folks that Meier would have to appeal to have any reasonable chance of ousting the incumbent.

Sen. Peyton McKnight, D-Tyler, also had been the subject of speculation earlier as a possible opponent to Hobby; McKnight recently was volunteered by Comptroller Bob Bullock as an opponent to Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements, Hobby and Clayton have had fewer major disagreements on policy matters than might be expected, or at least have had relatively few which have come to public attention, perhaps because all three are in the Texas political mainstream.

Hobby has been irked at times by some of Clements' proposals, managing to dismiss them, without actually saying so, as matters which were being advanced by an impatient juvenile who perhaps meant well but just wasn't experienced enough to understand why his ides wouldn't work.

In the past, Republicans haven't appeared particularly interested in running against Hobby — but then, 20 years ago, Republican statewide candidates were all Don Quixote figures — a bit funny, a bit pathetic, and more than a bit laughable.

Tower's election gave the GOP hope that that could be changed — and while change was a long time coming, it appears that change is now at hand.

That's the reason that Meier's decision on a political race as a Republican isn't just a choice of whether he wants to be broiled, roasted or fricasseed.

And that's why the GOP is keeping those party hats handy.

NICK THIMMESCH

Baseball, all-American sport subject to all-American greed

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — Just when my Chicago Cubs win three straight, this baseball strike has to start. After reading all the lawyers' stuff about the owners and players fighting over the free-agent compensation plan, and how each side claims it is going to the poorhouse if it gives in, I am sore enough to say, why not tell the players to get back on the field, or we'll hire replacements?

This republic is afflicted with a greed which reaches into baseball like everything else. If there's one charge the Communists can level against us, it's that our country, with its bottom line-buck mentality, is getting greedier by the day.

In recent years, it's been "me first" or "get out of my way, or I'll kill you!" It's in every aspect of our life, and no wonder the Moral Majority is cashing in.

It's hard for me to cry for the players when they average $180,000 a year for nine months' work. How can a David Winfield get paid $1.5 million a year, when the greatest of them all, Babe Ruth, got $80,000 which in today's money, still wouldn't be more than $250,000? How can Reggie Jackson of the Yankees get paid more for making commercials for candy bars and shaving lotion than he does on the ball field, where his salary is $550,000 a year?

For generations, baseball players were abused by tight-wad owners, and left without financial futures. Today, the financial contest is to see which side can loot the other the most. The owners, with their $50 million strike insurance, and $11 million strike fund, feel they can wait out the ballplayers, who lose only as much salary daily as the average American stiff makes in six months.

As Bill Veeck, one of baseball's best, says: "I don't mind the high price of stardom. I just don't like the high price of mediocrity."

So I say hire anybody who wants to play. Grab minor leaguers, sandlot stars, Latins, Asians, good players who quit. That's what happened in World War II when clubs mustered 4-F's, foreigners and old-timers to keep the national pastime going. The American people enjoyed that brand of ball because it was better than nothing, which is what we're getting now.

The St. Louis Browns won the pennant in 1945 with a one-armed player named Pete Gray who caught fly balls with his glove, tossed the ball in the air, flipped the glove off, caught the ball and threw it — all at once. He got big cheers. As the Allies got ready for D-Day, the Senators recruited one Eddie Boland who was playing for the New York City Department of Sanitation team. He hit .271 for Washington that season. Babe Herman, who starred for the Dodgers in the '20s, came out of retirement and, at age 42, rejoined the Brooklyn bunch as a player in 1945. Estel Crabtree, another vintage performer, came back to play outfield for the Cardinals. In war-time 1944, the American League home-run king was the Yankees' Nick Etten, who hit a paltry 22 homers. But it was baseball.

Back in 1912, the Detroit Tigers struck because the American League president suspended Ty Cobb after he climbed into the stands and punched a fan. The Tigers, scheduled to play in Philadelphia, faced a $5,000 fine if they didn't appear, so the management, with the help of the Athletics' Connie Mack, fielded a representative "Tiger" team consisting of sandlotters, coachies and a Roman Catholic priest. Thus baseball continued through its first strike, with the Athletics winning 24-2.

In 1947, when St. Louis Cardinal players threatened to strike because they didn't like the idea of playing against a Negro, Jackie Robinson of the Dodgers, owner Sam Breadon, no NAACP member, ordered them to play ball or else. So did National League President Ford Frick, who threatened to suspend any player who struck, "even if it means wrecking the league. This is the United States of America, and one player has as much right to play as another."

Well, we need a little of that spirit now. Sure, we are excited by stars like Reggie Jackson, David Winfield and Mike Schmidt. If they were replaced by unknowns, we would miss these celebrities of the game. But without baseball, these gentlemen would earn one-tenth of what they do now, and they should remember that.

Language: Is it or isn't it real communication?

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

The art of conversation isn't always to say what you mean. At least not outright.

The more circuitous route is tempting. It may become somewhat amusing or quite tiring. It may be diplomatic or belaboring. If language is precise and specific, it has triumphed.

Here's a delightful old saying which Earl Booker dragged out of the attic: "He knew me before I knew myself." The speaker was a babe and knew nothing at the time in reference.

The twist in language becomes bumper stickers and slogans in vogue: "I don't give in to anything...but temptation."

Philosophers have written tomes on language, on its theory and what it is perceived to be. On a good day, language communicates, but is communication always language?

One perspective which Voltaire held on language might be a message to some orators, politicians, diplomats, a friend or thine own self. It goes thusly:

That's his thought.

George Orwell conducted this experiment on the inverse: "If thought corrupts language, language can also corrupt thought."

Marshall McLuhan, who massaged words, also struck out at them: "Language — a form of organized stutter."

The "you-know" phase has winged the language and crippled it. Robert Nordell put it this way: "If only everyone talked the way we do in my household. I mean...if only everyone...like...talked...you know...the way we do...right? It would be so much...like...easier...you know...understand...right?"

No, but yes, you know.

Language, at last, is most intriguing; it is a marvel. And, said wordscholar Edwin Newman, the written and spoken language must be properly used from day to day and from generation to generation to convey ideas and impressions even if they are intended to be vague and cryptic or clear and precise.

The scholarly approach to language is to be derided.

"If you scoff at language study...," reasoned Mario Pei, "how, save in terms of language, will you scoff?"

Good show there.

To The Editor:

Hats off to Mayor G. Thane Akins for proclaiming the 21-day period from Flag Day (June 14) through July 4 as a period "to honor America!" As I drove through various neighborhoods in Midland last Sunday, June 14, Flay Day, I was so distressed as I saw no more than two flags flying. I wanted to get out of my car and run down the street shouting..."It's Flag Day...doesn't anyone know or care?," I commented to my family who was in the car that our American patriotism seems to be a thing of the past.

A day or so later, my family and I were visiting a friend in the hospital. Our two little girls were waiting downstairs for us when they noticed a First Baptist Church program lying on the floor and they proceeded to pick it up. As we got off of the elevator, they came running..."Look, Mom, someone honored FLAG DAY...you'll love this!" I was elated as I looked over their shoulders and began to read the program. How great Thou art is what I have to say for Dr. Daniel Vestal of the First Baptist Church, as he entitled his Sunday Morning Worship program The Church in Celebration of Flag Day...the Processional began with "The Star Spangled Banner," followed by the hymn, "America, the Beautiful"...then a procession of the flags, followed by the patriotic song, "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." What a beautiful and heart-warming service it must have been.

I wish we ALL could have been there! Thank you, Dr. Vestal, for this beautiful service...if only more of us would shout about our wonderful country in public gatherings or in our homes by flying our good 'ole American flag. Flag-waving has always been a way of the American people to show their emotion for the greatest country in the world. Let me urge all Midland citizens to get your flag out of the closet or BUY one if you don't have one! We fly ours EVERY day at our house, but if that is too much for you, please remember to fly it on the special days of our great nation. July 4th is just around the corner...get prepared today...let's make our community "unique" in flag-waving as it is in everything else!

Remember when

To The Editor:

Remember when we had cable television that worked?

Remember when they offered 24 hour service for repair?

Remember when all of the telephones at TCTV were not busy?

Remember when you had Home Box Office?

Remember when you had cable at least one out of four weekends?

Thank goodness I still have an antenna connected to my system for coverage during the cable blackouts. I do wonder who pays the theatre ticket cost for others when they have no weekend television and have to send the youngsters out for entertainment.

In my wildest dreams I wish I could own a monopoly that didn't work and be able to charge customers for services not provided. Jerry Falwell will never have to bring his anti-television campaign to Midland as we don't have the problem of bad television in the city most of the time.

More about Bear

To The Editor:

This letter is in regard to your article last Sunday about a dog named Bear. I knew the dog named Bear and his owner Robert. Many times as Bear would get out and end up at Animal Control I would urge Robert to have Bear neutered. It wouldn't have cost any more to have him neutered, than one fine to get Bear back.

We must remember all animals are going to follow their instinct. They don't stop and think of how many unwanted animals there are already in this world. I feel the highest fence cannot contain an animal wanting to mate and the lowest fence will contain a happy contented well cared for neutered animal. I know Robert cared about Bear, but Bear fits the same pattern of so many unwanted animals. A cute little puppy that grows up into a big uncontrollable animal. I own five animals. They are all neutered. They are very enjoyable, and they have no desire to roam.

Dalton Byerley at animal control is an animal lover. It hurts him and his staff to have to destroy so many animals a month, but we should be thankful that someone who does care for animals does this job. It can never be easy but it can be easier on the animals to be put down by a kind caring hand not a brutal uncaring hand.

The battle plan

To The Editor:

Ronald Reagan's landslide victory was really something. But take a closer look at the ones who occupied a close position around the president-elect. There was David Rockefeller's Trilateral Commission, the New York Times, Washington Post, Los Angeles Times, ABC, CBS and NBC News.

This group of internationalists has developed a battle plan that is close to being finalized...victory over the new president, America, and you and me.

Since Ronald Reagan was elected, the Trilateral Commission continues to dictate our foreign policy.

Now how did it happen that Ronald Reagan was elected president by attacking every point of Henry Kissinger's foreign policy position? Ronald Reagan was against Henry Kissinger's plan to give away the Panama Canal, Mr. Reagan was against Kissinger's strategic Arms Limitation Treaty that would give the Soviet Union nuclear excellence over America. And now Henry Kissinger is a "trusted advisor," even going on a secret mission to the Mid East for Reagan.

This must be considered the first important victory of the Trilateralists over the Reagan administration, but you can be sure it won't be the last.

We did it!

To The Editor:

The Tall City has done it again! Last Spring when the Lee High School Chorale was invited to attend the International Youth and Music Festival in Vienna, Austria, we asked for your help. Midlanders responded with typical generosity. Our participation in the festival is now a reality.

Members of the Chorale and Booster Club have worked hard on a variety of projects, but we could not have raised the enormous amount of funds needed without community support for our money raising projects and donations. We are proud and happy to announce that we have reached that ambitious goal.

To show our appreciation to the many people who have helped make the Vienna dream come true, the chorale will present a Vienna preview concert. The concert will be held in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College at 7:30 p.m. on June 30. A reception will follow.

When we depart for Vienna on July 8, we will leave knowing that we represent and have the support of this region and especially those of you who have given us your time, talent and money. Thank you's cannot adequately express our appreciation for your endorsement of a program to broaden the artisitic, cultural and educational growth of an excellent group of young adults. Nevertheless, "Thank you, Midland."

Thanks, teachers

To The Editor:

To the teachers of Midland Public Schools:

Our son has just completed his senior year, twelve years of schooling in our public school system.

There are many faces I see, as I reminisce of these years. Some of these faces I never met personally, but of them, I know which ones are truly teachers of students. They love teaching their subject matter, they love their students, and they are the ones who go the "extra mile," the "extra smile," and the "extra hello," that makes the difference. I would personally like to write each and everyone of them this thank-you, but that is impossible.

These teachers are worthy of being called, "teacher," and justly so. There reward is in feeling a sense of accomplishment and warmth as they do the things teachers do.

To the many teachers that have these qualities, that have guided our son through these twelve years, I want to quote our son in giving tribute to them.

"The teacher makes the difference."

Thank you teachers.

The "White Paper" containing the material justifying our intervention into El Salvador has been discredited by that subversive, left-wing rag of the ultra-liberal fringe — the Wall Street Journal.

I started wondering about the White Paper when it made the all-time best-seller list for fiction, beating out "Rumpelstiltskin" by two points.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

IRAs can be set up in many places

By BILL DOYLE

Q. The company my husband works for is doing away with its pension plan. As a result, my husband will receive his pension money in a lump sum. He plans to "roll over" this money into an individual retirement account (IRA) and is considering doing it with either an insurance company or a bank.

Aren't there any other places he could have an IRA?

A. There are lots. Banks and savings and loan associations (S&Ls) have captured the biggest share of IRA business. But IRAs can be set up with any organizations which have been approved as IRA custodians by the Internal Revenue Service.

Doyle

These include insurance companies, mutual funds and many brokerage firms. With a "self-directed" IRA at a brokerage house, your husband could pick his own stocks, bonds or almost anything else into which he wants to put his retirement money.

If your husband decides on a bank or S&L, make sure he picks one that puts IRA money into high-interest 182-day savings certificates — not the lower-yielding certificates some banks and S&Ls use for IRAs.

With an insurance company, your husband could choose either an annuity or an endowment policy — both of which usually have high costs or low yields.

The commission costs on mutual funds can also be hefty, unless he goes into a "no-load" fund, which does not charge a commission. Almost all money market mutual funds are no-load. Because of that feature and the high yields they have been producing lately, the money funds are becoming increasingly popular as IRA investments.

Assuming that the lump sum your husband receives represents money his employer contributed to a "tax-qualified retirement plan" — and no money your husband put in — it can be put into a rollover IRA, tax-free. He won't have to start paying income tax on that money, until he withdaws it — usually after final retirement, when he should be in a lower tax bracket.

Q. You told a reader who lives on Social Security and a small pension to "throw away and forget" a newsletter urging people to keep gold in a Swiss account.

Well, a book I just read recommends that people with low incomes open accounts in Swiss francs in banks in Switzerland. One such bank will accept as little as $200, in U.S. dollars.

Seems like a good opportunity to me. Or, should I stick with my good old credit union here?

A. If you want to "play" the foreign currency exchange market, go ahead and send some of your money to the Alps. But, first, look at the record.

In 1980, the value of the Swiss franc declined 12 percent against the U.S. dollar. So far this year, it has dropped another 14 percent.

So, if you have sent $200 in dollars to a Swiss franc account at the beginning of last year and wanted to get dollars back now, you would receive slightly less than $150.

In some other recent years, however, the Swiss franc has increased in value against the U.S. dollar — sometimes dramatically.

It's possible to make money in the foreign exchange market, by moving into and out of Swiss francs or other foreign currencies at the "right times." Few people have that ability.

Q. In the annual and quarterly reports of corporations, I notice that some refer to the owners of their stock as "stockholders." Some use the word "shareholder." Still others call them "shareowners."

Is there an explanation for this usage of different words?

A. Not really. They all mean the same thing. The "holders" of share of stock in a corporaion are the "owners" of the company.

I've seen annual and quarterly reports addressed to "dear fellow owners." Same thing.

MR. DOYLE welcomes written questions, but he will be able to provide answers only through the column.

Midland's pistol packers practice for perfection

Text and Photos By Paul Gilbert

The sport of target shooting has come a long ways from a .22 and an empty bottle on a post.

It's now called Practical Pistol Shooting and enthusiasts say it's one of the fastest growing sports in the country.

A group of about 80 Permian Basin residents recently gathered for the Midland Shooters Association's second Practical Pistol Shooting meet at the club's rifle-pistol range south of town on FM 1213.

PPS involves target shooting for accuracy over a course of targets, with the added element of timing. Time, accuracy and safety are the three most important elements of the sport. If, during the course of a meet, a contestant points his or gun at the crowd, drops the gun or the gun accidentally discharges, he or she is immediately disqualified.

A descendant of the Practical Pistol Courses used by law enforcement agencies, PPS is designed to be a fun way to sharpen shooting skills, while also training the shooter how to handle a stress situation. Stress is artificial in this instance, created by pitting shooters against the clock and each other in competition.

Courses vary from meet to meet, but they usually involve an obstacle course and timed fire and progressive fire events.

This particular meet involved an obstacle course, where contestants were given 40 seconds to run a course that involved striking or knocking over strategically-placed targets.

A timed fire event required 18 shots in 18 seconds from 15 yards away. The progressive fire course required hitting two targets three times each from 40 yards in eight seconds, 20 yards in six seconds and seven yards in four seconds.

The final event featured five metal targets that shooters had to knock over in 18 seconds from a prone position.

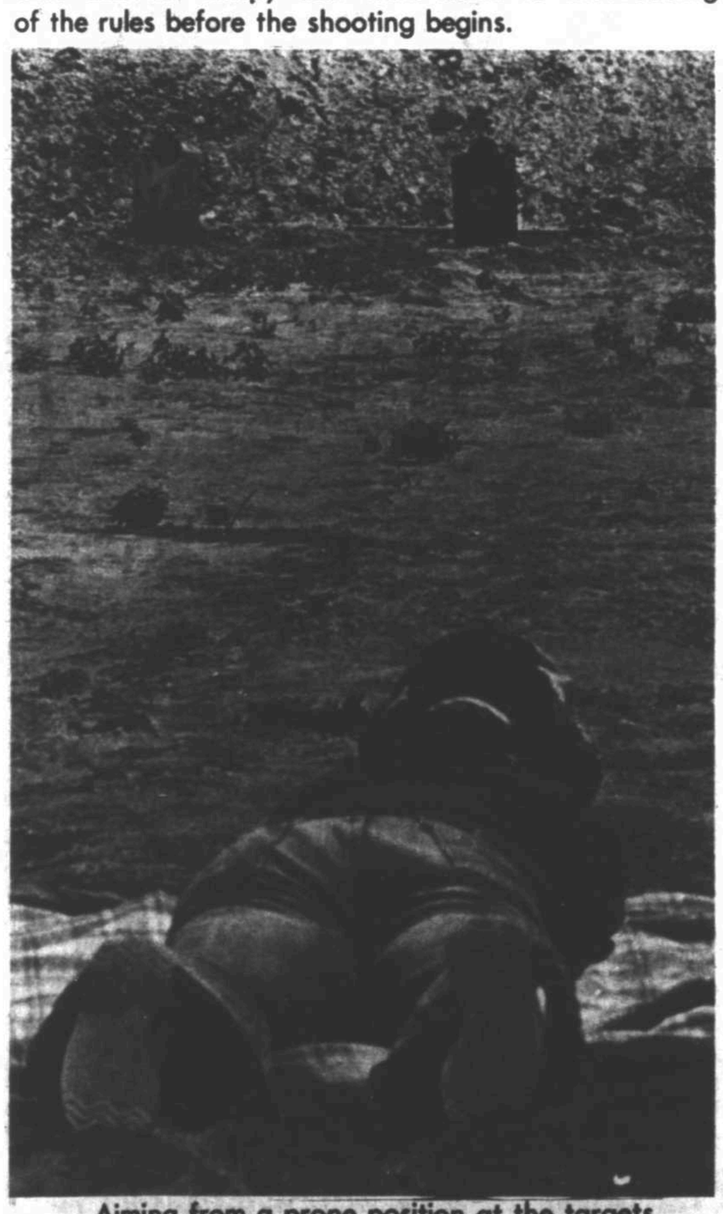

Points are awarded for "hits" and contestants are divided into novice, marksman, sharpshooter and master. Some groups are subdivided into revolvers and automatics.

Equipment varies, with some contestants spending a lot of money on special guns, holsters and ammunition, but many use a box stock pistol with custom sights or grips.

The most commonly used pistol is the Colt military .45-caliber automatic. Revolvers have a faithful following, but the automatics dominate the sport due to ease in reloading and rapid-fire shooting.

Anyone interested in joining the group should contact Richard Johnson at 682-2327 or 563-3661 for additional information.

Meets are held the second Sunday of every month beginning at 10 a.m. There is an entry fee of $5 for members and $7 for non-members.

CONSUMER TIPS

Beware of fraudulent mail-order companies

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau
of the Permian Basin, Inc.

As summer approaches, many homeowners turn their attention to making their yards beautiful and green.

Since there are many reliable suppliers with satisfied customers, buying plants and trees by mail is one popular and established way. But the staff at the Better Business Bureau warns consumers to be on guard against fraudulent mail-order companies who are interested in another type of greenery — their customers' money.

Beware of the company that makes grossly exaggerated claims about its products. If, for example, the promotional material promises trees that "grow 20 feet in one year" or "supply bushels of fruit from summer to fall," watch out. If it claims that its plants "will grow and survive anywhere in the U.S.," "are resistant to insects, disease and damage from wind or ice," or "need no care," beware.

Another technique of unscrupulous sellers is the creation of exotic names for plants. In many cases, these are common plants with fancy descriptions and inflated prices. For example, a tree described as "The Silver Acer" may be sold in a local nursery under its actual name, the silver maple. The Federal Trade Commission requires that when a nursery product has a generally recognized and well-established common name, that name must be used in all advertisements.

As with any purchase, and especially with mail-order items that can't be fully examined first, if a claim sounds too good to be true, it often isn't.

The matter of guarantees also is an important point with mail-order plants. Before making a purchase, learn exactly what is guaranteed and for how long, and what special conditions are involved. Some mail-order firms use a "satisfaction on arrival" guarantee. The FTC warns, though, that much nursery stock is shipped while dormant and the average purchaser can't determine the health of dormant plants.

It is inevitable that some plants or trees will be damaged in the shipping process. Reliable companies understand this and have a systematic, responsive procedure for replacement. But with all too many fly-by-night nurseries, getting in touch or obtaining a refund can be difficult, if not impossible.

Another costly scheme of deceptive mail-order plant companies is the work-at-home opportunity. The typical offer promises quick profits for growing plants at home and selling them back to the company. The investment can be between $3,000 and $6,000 for the greenhouse, equipment, starter plants, soil and fertilizer, but the profits are usually non-existent.

This scheme has preyed upon the retired and elderly, who could use the promised income but ill-afford the loss. While the promoter may sign a contract agreeing to buy back the plants, the transaction is usually subject to the promoter's approval of the grown plants. It is easy for the unscrupulous company to reject them and keep the total investment.

These deceptive mail-order firms generally rely on their sales income for the money to buy back plants. BBB records show that one such company has gone bankrupt after selling the supplies around the country, leaving the investors in the lurch.

Whether buying plants or investing in an at-home business, consider the facts carefully before going ahead. Contact the BBB at 563-1880 to obtain a reliability report on a company. If there are questions or problems later, it's important that the company still be around and willing to stand behind its product. The cautious plant or tree buyer who investigates before investing won't "see red" instead of green.

Democrats pressing for anti-crime legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Getting the jump on Republicans, Senate Democrats are pressing for quick floor votes on a package of anti-crime legislation that would create a Cabinet-level narcotics control office with power to enlist the CIA in the battle against illicit drugs.

The Senate Democratic caucus agreed Thursday to support the package, and the bulk of it is being introduced as amendments to the Justice Department spending authorization bill already on the floor for debate.

That means a vote on at least some of the amendments could come within days.

Of the 18 amendments, one stands out as a relatively fresh proposal, likely to arouse controversy because it would concentrate such broad powers in the hands of one person.

That amendment would create an Office of National and International Narcotics Control with a director and deputy director to be appointed by the president, subject to Senate confirmation. The appointments would be for six-year terms.

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware said the only other presidential appointee with such broad authority is the director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Biden and Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, chief architects of the package, contend that government narcotics efforts must be controlled by a single office with the clout to force cooperation among the several rival agencies carrying on different aspects of the work.

The Drug Enforcement Administration, the Customs Service, the Internal Revenue Service, the FBI, and the State Department's Bureau of International Narcotics Matters all are involved in one way or another in narcotics cases, although DEA bears the primary responsibility.

Nunn said the Democrats are taking no position on whether DEA should be merged with another agency. Attorney General William French Smith says he is considering such a move but will make no decision until he hears the recommendations of his task force on violent crime.

The Democratic proposal represents the first formal attempt to employ the CIA's intelligence-gathering apparatus to detect multinational smuggling operations.

"The CIA has not believed the drug problem happens on their watch," Biden complained as he joined Democratic Leader Robert Byrd, Nunn and seven other senators in explaining the proposal at a news conference.

Byrd said there were no dissenting votes as the Democratic caucus adopted the anti-crime package in a closed session. But Biden noted, "No every senator agreed to every single aspect of the package but every senator agreed with the thrust of it."

Other amendments would:

—Make it easier for the government to seize the assets of defendants convicted in narcotics and organized crime cases.

—Establish limited federal jurisdiction in murder-for-hire cases.

—Allow federal judges to consider the risk of danger to the community in deciding whether to release a defendant on bail.

—Require federal judges to consider a defendant's financial status in setting the amount of money bail.

The 21-story, seven-ton "Great American Flag" is unfurled in Central Park in New York. The event was an attempt to spur donations needed to hang the flag from the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge in New York. The flag, made of reinforced polyester, is about two football fields long. Each star is 13 feet in diameter and the stripes are 16 feet wide. It will cost an estimated $650,000 to hang the flag from the bridge which links Brooklyn and Staten Island. The white dots on the flag are actually air vent holes to prevent the flag from tearing.

Giant American Flag unfurled in Central Park

NEW YORK (AP) — When the seven-ton Great American Flag was unfurled, it covered two acres of Central Park. Its backers are trying to raise enough money to get it into the air.

The giant version of Old Glory is designed to be hung from the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge at the entrance to New York Harbor, but $650,000 is needed to to provide special rigging for the display.

Made of reinforced polyester, the huge flag measures 410-by-211 feet and is equal in height to a 21-story building. Each star is 13 feet in diameter and the stripes are 16 feet wide.

The flag was made to replace one that the wind ripped to shreds shortly after it was raised during the city's bicentennial celebration.

It took 400 volunteers some two hours to unfurl it Thursday in the park, where actress Elizabeth Taylor joined the onlookers.

Plans delayed to recover items aboard sunken liner

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Oilman Jack Grimm has been forced to delay plans to recover millions of dollars in jewels or other major artifacts from the sunken wreckage of the Titanic, the Abilene Reporter-News reported today.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said plans to enter the vessel and recover items from the ship have been postponed because of the unavailability of either of the two submersibles he had planned to use to enter the ship during the 19-day expedition departing July 3 from Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Grimm announced plans last fall to use the Seacopter — a cross between a helicopter and submarine that resembles a mosquito, developed by Coral Gables, Fla., inventor Fred Koehler Jr. — in his search for the ship's treasures.

Koehler, however, issued a challenge in February and said he would try to beat Grimm to the Titanic by using his Seacopter, capable of diving to depths of 20,000 feet and narrow enough to navigate the ship's halls.

"It's not part of our expedition," Grimm said recently. "Mr. Koehler decided he was going to put his own group together."

Since the Titanic is lying in international waters, there is nothing to stop Koehler from salvaging the wreckage if he arrives there first, Grimm said. "Anyone else has that same right ... providing they can find it," he said.

Grimm had also planned to use the Aluminaut, the largest deep diving submersible, to reach the Titanic where it rests 12,000 feet below the surface of the North Atlantic Ocean, but its owners will not allow its use before the sunken ship is actually located.

"Mr. (J. Louis) Reynolds, chairman of Reynolds Aluminum, didn't want to reactivate it until we had found the wreck," Grimm told the newspaper.

Fourteen possible resting sites were found during last summer's search of a 15-mile by 20-mile area where the Titanic struck an iceberg off the coast of New Foundland and sank April 15, 1912, while on her maiden voyage from England to New York, Grimm said.

"We're going straight to the search area, to each of the different targets and pull the sonar and magnetometer sleds over each target at close range," Grimm said. "The first one that shows to be the hull of a ship, we'll map it in detail."

The sonar sled was used in last year's search to pick up shapes on the ocean floor via acoustic signals, and the magnetometer will detect the presence of metal, such as that found in the hull of a ship, he said.

Grimm and his 38 crew members will do their searching this summer from aboard Texas A&M University's research vessel the Gyre. Last year the crew, minus Grimm, searched from the 175-foot ship the H.J.W. Fay.

The change was made, Grimm said, because "The Gyre is a research vessel, it was built to do this kind of work. The Fay was just a charter ship that we got at the last minute because it was the only ship available last year."

Halifax will be the site of the expedition launch this year because "we're that (much) closer to the site by leaving from Halifax and that's what's important, to get as much time at sea," Grimm said.

Last summer's trip departed from Port Everglades, Fla., and docked at Commonwealth Pier in Boston.

The same scientists will take part in this year's expedition, he said. William B.F. Ryan of Columbia University and Fred N. Spiess of the University of California will lead the scientific efforts, as they did last year, along with Ellen Herron of Columbia, to determine which of the targets is the Titanic, Grimm said.

Once the crew finds what it believes to be the Titanic, plans are to map the location and drag the area with a drag bucket in an attempt to collect artifacts and debris from the ship to support its identification, Grimm said.

"We hope to bring back some artifacts from the Titanic this summer and I hope to put them on display in Abilene as soon as we get back," he said.

Cameras will be lowered to the wreckage to determine the feasibility of returning later with a submersible to scavenge to ship's insides, Grimm said.

Agents sue Nevada paper alleging libel

HOUSTON (AP) — Two government agents accused in a series of articles published last year by the Las Vegas, Nev., Sun of framing a man later convicted of drug-smuggling conspiracy have filed a $130 million libel suit against the daily newspaper.

The suit was filed in federal court Thursday by Jerry Medford, regional director of the U.S. Customs Patrol in New Orleans, and retired agent Sam Schwartz of San Antonio. The action was based on a seven-part series of articles written last year by the Sun's city editor, Gary Thompson.

The newspaper articles named in the lawsuit outline an alleged government scheme to steal five tons of silver from Edson Whipple of Beatty, Nev., and frame him on charges of conspiring to smuggle marijuana.

It said Medford and Schwartz participated in the alleged scheme.

The articles described Whipple, 56, as an importer of precious metals and said he unjustly served five years in the federal penitentiary for drug-smuggling conspiracy after his conviction in Philadelphia Dec. 3, 1971.

Thompson, reached by telephone in Las Vegas, said, "We're looking foward to proving our position in court and are confident that any court proceeding would prove the veracity of the series."

She's barred from living with any man

SAGINAW, Mich. (AP) — It's not unusual for judges to forbid defendants on probation from associating with certain people.

But a Saginaw County Circuit judge may have broken new legal ground when he barred a woman who killed her boyfriend from living with another man for five years without the court's permission.

Judith E. Miller, 37, had been charged with second-degree murder in the fatal shooting of 24-year-old Richard Collins on Jan. 27, 1980. She pleaded guilty to manslaughter and could have faced up to 15 years in jail.

In pre-sentence hearings, the judge heard testimony suggesting Collins frequently had beaten Ms. Miller, including the night she shot him three times with a small-caliber handgun.

Her lawyer, Barbara Klimaszewski, also presented testimony from social workers and counselers who said Ms. Miller suffered from "the battered-woman syndrome" and was prone to relationships that might include physical abuse.

Judge Gary R. McDonald sentenced her May 21, specifying she was not to leave Saginaw County or the state, was not to move in with a man without first formally petitioning the court for permission and was to undergo extensive counseling at her own expense.

Probation officers will visit her at home at least once a month to monitor her performance, Carl R. Schultz, probation supervisor in the Saginaw County Corrections Department, said Thursday.

Ms. Miller agreed to the terms and was allowed to go free.

Saginaw County Prosecutor Chief Assistant Prosecutor Patrick Meter said Thursday that "many probation orders specify that the defendants may not associate with certain people or types of people. This particular condition is unique, to my knowledge."

"I'd guess she's pleased that she's not going to jail," Schultz added.

Neither she nor her lawyer would talk to reporters.

McDonald said Thursday he wouldn't discuss specific cases, but explained that his No. 1 priority in determining sentences is to make sure a person who would be destructive to society is removed from it. "When they're not (destructive to society), I look for alternatives," he said.

However, during her sentencing hearing, the judge told her, "I am depending on you. You have slipped in the past. There is no question that you took a life. That isn't something you are going to forget. Don't take two lives."

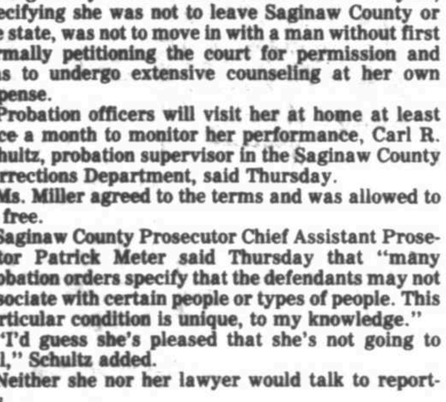

Doctor's license taken

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Dr. Harvey Knight Jackson, 73, Amarillo, was barred from pracice Thursay by the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners.

The board said Jackson's license was revoked on the grounds that his widespread prescribing of potent painkiller drugs constituted "professional or dishonorable conduct likely to deceive or defraud the public."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Low-tar cigarette not proven 'safe'

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is meant by a low-tar cigarette, and what benefit would a smoker derive from switching to it from a high-tar cigarette? I've tried to quit smoking several times without success, and I'm beginning to accept the fact that I'll continue to smoke even though I'm well aware of the risks connected with the habit. Maybe it's a flaw in my character, or maybe I just don't have enough willpower. In any event, I would like to minimize the risks. Is there any evidence that low-tar cigarettes are the answer? — Terry

Dear Terry: While it would appear, at least superficially, that low-tar cigarettes should pose less of a health hazard than high-tar cigarettes, many scientists who have studied the subject do not feel there is sufficient evidence for them to come to any conclusion about their safety.

The tobacco industry defines a low-tar cigarette as one that contains less than 15 milligrams. Apparently many smokers believe it prudent to switch to these cigarettes since they have become quite popular and now account for almost half of all cigarette sales. In view of this, Dr. Julius B. Richmond, the former surgeon general, arranged a symposium on the subject to which a number of scientists were invited. In general, they concluded that not enough is known about the health effects of low-tar cigarettes to warrant recommending them as a safer alternative for smokers.

One of the physicians attending the symposium, Dr. Lawrence Longo of Loma Linda University, reported that there is no proof that smoking cigarettes with a reduced tar content lessens the risks of smoking during pregnancy and in relation to infant health. To promote low-tar cigarettes on the basis of their safety, he says, would be deceptive.

Another participant in the meeting, Dr. Willima P. Castelli, medical director of the Framingham Heart Study, pointed out that the promotion of low-tar cigarettes might prompt some smokers to continue their habit, or, in the case of nonsmokers, might encourage them to start. Most of the scientists emphasized the lack of data showing any association between the use of low-tar cigarettes and the incidence of disease.

One workshop dealt with possible changes in the behavior patterns of smokers who switch to low-tar cigarettes. It was suggested that these smokers might begin to consume more cigarettes in an unconscious effort to compensate for the reduced tar and nicotine. If this were the case, the use of low-tar cigarettes could prove to be even more hazardous than conventional cigarettes since smokers would become increasingly exposed to other potentially harmful substances.

For example, several studies have shown that carbon monoxide is associated with fetal hypoxia (a deficiency of oxygen) in pregnant women who smoke. When you consider that these women also have a 30 to 70 percent greater risk of spontaneous abortion and a 36 to 47 percent greater risk of premature delivery, the idea of a "safe" cigarette becomes a little ludicrous.

I hope you will reconsider your decision to switch rather than fight. Switching to low-tar cigarettes is of dubious value; but fighting the smoking habit can have significant positive results.

Many Japanese find relief in form of cancer vaccine

By KEISUKE MATSUO
Kyodo - Copley News Service

TOKYO — In 1943 Dr. Chisato Maruyama had an inspiration about a vaccine to treat cancer.

Returning home from visiting a Tokyo tuberculosis sanatorium, he suddenly realized that TB patients and lepers never seemed to be bothered with cancer of any kind.

In his laboratory, he cultured human TB bacteria, killed them with heat and extracted from the dead germs what he claimed was a non-toxic vaccine that stimulated natural body resistance to the spread of cancerous cells.

Since 1964 the Maruyama vaccine has been given to more than 133,000 patients, including cancer sufferers in some 53 countries.

Clinical reports have piled up of the relief, the longer survival and even the complete cure of patients, including some near death (it came too late for movie idol Steve McQueen, who died of lung cancer in 1980 after receiving the vaccine in a Mexican hospital last year).

But the Nippon Medical College Hospital in Tokyo, where Maruyama works as director of the Vaccinotherapy Research Institute, remains the only place in the world where the vaccine is available. And it reports being swamped with 400 to 600 applications daily for supplies of the vaccine. The whole operation, however, is entirely unofficial — for the Japanese government has yet to give its approval.

After five years of agonizingly slow study, a subcommittee on anti-malignant tumor drugs is finally to give a ruling on July 10. If it gives approval, the ministry says the vaccine can begin to be commercially produced and marketed within three months.

It was back in November 1976 that the Zeria Pharmaceutical Co. of Tokyo applied for government permission to produce the vaccine.

Usually the process of recognizing a new drug takes 18 months to two years.

Professor Iwao Kato, a bacterial infection specialist and leading supporter of the Maruyama vaccine, says medical authorities here probably would not have ignored the drug for so long "if it had been developed in America."

Other critics of the government foot-dragging suspect collusion between the Health and Welfare Ministry and the giant Japanese pharmaceutical manufacturers who are making big profits from existing cancer drugs.

Others have speculated that the trouble lies with the fact that the developer of the new cancer treatment is a graduate of a private medical college — whereas Japanese tend to show greater respect for the products of government-run schools.

In recent years there have been many public complaints of a rot in the nation's health system — typified by extreme jealousy between rival schools, outdated teacher-student cliques, the worship of money and power (leading to a number of scandals involving would-be medical and dental students bribing their way into prestigious medical schools), and massive profit-making by pharmaceutical manufacturers.

Heat stroke could be avoided: CDC

ATLANTA (AP) — Heat stroke, which strikes hardest at the old, poor or black, is primarily an urban illness and can be curbed by architecture designed to keep air moving, the national Centers for Disease Control said.

In the second part of a three-part heat stroke study, the CDC focused on why some people are more susceptible to heat illness than others.

The first part of the study, released in March, found that old people, blacks and the poor were hardest hit by the record-setting heat wave of 1980. The third part, a nationwide study of heat wave mortality, is still under way.

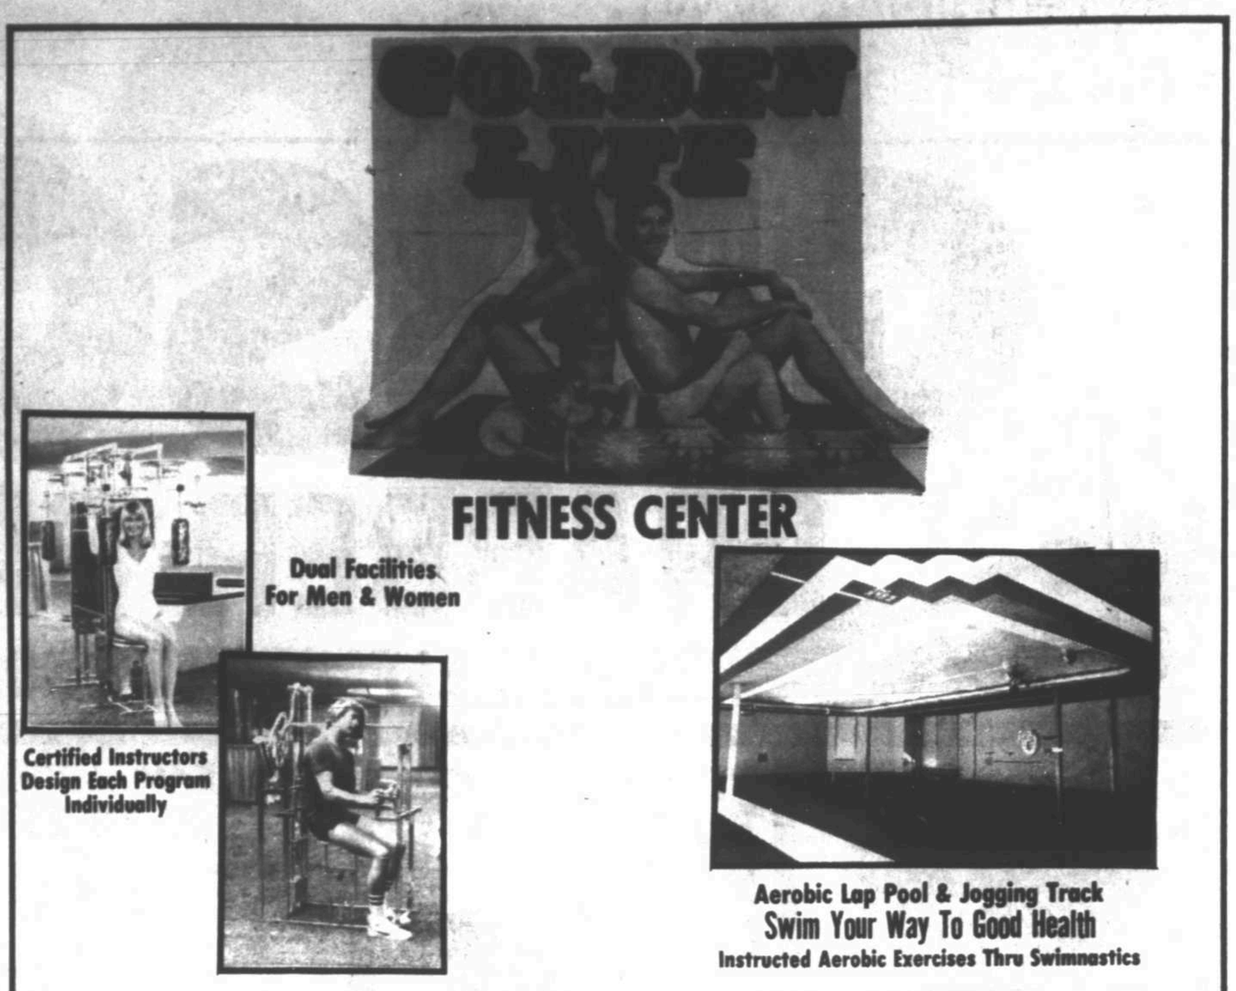

The second part, released today in the CDC's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, noted some other groups at risk and included some factors that contributed to their illness.

The CDC said an estimated 1,265 people died due to last summer's heat wave, compared with a yearly average of 200 heat-related deaths.

Many of the 1980 deaths occurred in St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo., and the CDC and local health officials conducted the study there. The center said 784 deaths and severe illnesses were caused by the heat wave in those two cities.

The study found heat stroke rates in people 65 years old or older were 12 to 13 times the rates in the remainder of the population.

Poor people and blacks also had high rates of heat stroke, as did alcoholics, people with mental illness and people who could not take care of themselves. Certain antipsychotic drugs also contributed to heat stroke risk.

Few remaining WWI veterans feel forgotten

By PAUL TURNER
The Arizona Daily Star

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The forgotten men still remember, sharing a recollection of a time that will soon be the exclusive property of history texts, faded photographs and passed-down stories.

They are the one-in-nine Americans still around who fought in the "war to end all wars."

Now in their 80s, they were once the strapping young Yanks packed off to a warring Europe by President Woodrow Wilson in the hope of making the world safe for democracy.

Now they are like George Gloeckner: tufts of white hair sticking out from under his cap, his cane by his side, staring past a glass of beer to scenes played out more than 60 years ago.

"We're the forgotten ones," Gloeckner said. "Ask any school kid about the first World War and they'll say, 'What are you talking about?'"

He and about 75 World War I veterans from Arizona met here recently to conduct organizational business and listen to stories like Otto Haack's description of Chicago's South Side back before the Roaring '20s were born.

"I could go out with my girlfriend and walk around the park and never worry about getting attacked," he recalled.

But the circle is growing smaller.

When he was just a boy in Maine, Aurin Ripley — a Mesa man with trench warfare tucked in his memory — watched Civil War veterans march by once a year in a commemorative parade. But as the years piled up on them, the old soldiers had to begin riding down the parade route in wagons.

"We're getting to be that way now," he said. "You can't depend on life much after 85."

Another former Doughboy, as they were called when Uncle Sam looked down from recruitment posters and announced that he wanted them, said he came to the convention knowing full well that some of his friends from the previous year's affair wouldn't be there.

"We're dropping like flies," he said matter-of-factly.

Vietnam veterans may run into a similar time warp around the year 2030. And perhaps they will be heard to echo the enduring complaint of World War I vets like 85-year-old Tucsonan Roman Koelsch: "We never did get a pension."

Still, the slow-moving elderly men with thick glasses and hearing aids are not just a scattered collection of national antiques. They don't just sit around and sing "Over There," and blame their coughs on German poison gas.

Having participated in the world's first truly mechanized war, images of the fighting that raged until November 1918 are only a daydream away.

"It's still very vivid," said an 83-year-old vet who saw duty in the slaughtering fields of France. "It gets stamped in your mind."

Turtle soup

A fish store in Alton, Ill., bought these two giant alligator snapping turtles from a southeast Missouri trapper for display, but they may be more trouble than they're worth. State conservation officials say they are too rare to be trapped and that it would be illegal to bring them across state lines. The turtles weigh 126 and 122 pounds respectively.

'Guest Worker' Plan faces new opposition

With BOB TIEUEL

"Guest Worker" Plan Faces Black and Brown Opposition — Under the 'guest worker' plan outlined by the present national administration, 50,000 Mexicans would be permitted to enter the United States to search for employment. The United States ended its previous guest worker program, known as the bracero program in 1964, after protests from American labor and social welfare groups. Since then, millions of Mexicans are thought to have entered the United States illegally looking for work, and the Reagan administration has been under pressure to deal with the immigration problem. Another plan is to grant amnesty to some three million illegal Mexican aliens already in the U.S.

Recently eight labor, Hispanic, religious and civil rights groups held a news conference in Washington to say that they opposed the idea of a guest worker program. "We urge the president to reconsider," said Howard D. Samuel, president of the industrial union department of the AFL-CIO. Antonio Hernandez of the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund, said temporary worker programs were a "form of legalized slavery."

It is expected that Attorney General William French Smith will submit a series of proposals dealing with the immigration issue soon. Monsignor George Higgins of Catholic University said the guest worker program is desired only by a few major growers and would help neither the United States nor the Mexican government.

U.S. Rep. Edward Roybal, D-California noted there is 10.2 unemployment among Hispanics and more than 13 percent among blacks in the United States, the two ethnic groups with the most to lose by a proposed program to allow 500,000 to 750,000 Mexican 'guest workers' in the U.S. The NAACP said in a statement that it believes "the question had been settled in the early 1960s when the Congress decided not to extend the notorious bracero program which brought from 400,000 to a half million illegal aliens each year."

United Negro College Fund Sets Goal-After conducting the two most sucessful fund-raising campaigns in its history, the UNCF which helps support 41 private, predominantly black colleges, has established a record $21 million goal for its 1981 campaign. The UNCF's annual campaign met its 1980 goal of $19 million, an increase of $2.8 million over 1979. The money was distributed to UNCF's 41 member institutions to help meet budgetary needs for scholarships, textbooks, faculty salaries and general maintenance. Simultaneously, the college fund's Capital Resources Development program, the most ambitious drive for capital funds ever launched on behalf of black higher education, concluded its three-year drive with over $60 million of gifts and pledges.

RECENT GREAT QUOTES: "The shame is not merely that 1,404,000 of this nation's white teen-agers and 381,000 of its black teen agers (17.2 percent of the whites and 36.1 of the blacks) are jobless. The tragedy is that many of them will become the perpetrators of crime; they will never be a meaningful part of this country's economy; and their children also are likely to become the welfare recipients, the users of food stamps and Medicaid. It is a pity that in this richest of all nations, 5,292,000 families should live in poverty and the future offers them little other than want and dependency, because they are caught in never-opening traps." End of quote from Carl Rowan in Dallas A.M. News.

"EQUAL OPPORTUNITY? Minorities Are in Short Supply in U.S. Newsrooms" reads headline in Wall Street Journal. Slightly more than 8% of the Journal's 280 newsroom professionals are members of racial minorties. 45,500 daily newspaper journalists in the country are members of a minority group. Almost half the minority journalists work for big-circulation, big city newspapers, rather than the smaller papers that offer most of the jobs, the report added.

Heredity factors seen in tendency toward arthritis

ATLANTA (AP) — Like blue eyes, big ears and good teeth, the tendency to get arthritis may be inherited, according to the Arthritis Foundation.

"Scientists have discovered genetic markers which are associated with certain types of arthritis, such as rheumatoid arthritis, lupus and spinal arthritis," says Dr. Frederic C. McDuffie, the Arthritis Foundation's senior vice president for medical affairs.

"Having one of these markers doesn't necessarily mean you will develop a disease, but it does mean you have a special susceptibility to certain types of arthritis."

Genetic studies, he added, are one of the most promising areas of current arthritis research. Understanding the connection between these inherited factors and the onset of arthritis could enable physicians to screen people for the disease tendency and to possibly prevent its occurrence.

"We do not yet know why some people with the markers get a form of arthritis and others don't," McDuffie says.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Monday, June 22, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Kris Kristofferson and author Anne Morrow Lindbergh share this birthday with you. Family affairs take on increased importance in the months just ahead. Enduring emotional commitments are within reach and romance is both exciting and deeply rewarding. Set yourself some definite goals and you will go far towards reaching them! Employment conditions improve, and so does the financial picture.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A new job may not be the answer to financial woes. Self-improvement activities can lead to increased earnings, however. Be more tactful with mate or partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Act swiftly and your finances will show definite signs of improvement. You and romantic partner may have to smooth out a difficult personal problem. Be more affectionate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Several new options come your way. You will have to be decisive if you are to make real progress where career, finances are concerned. Variety is what you now seek.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be on the lookout for an opportunity to increase your savings. Working overtime will improve your chances for a promotion. Keep your business and personal life completely separate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Domestic life could interfere with business today. A friend or relative may provide part of the answer to a tricky problem. Look for new ways to economize at home, office.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Concentration requires self-discipline. A speculative venture could net you additional income. Follow a hunch or tip you receive from an expert. A social event may prove disappointing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Handle large sums of money with caution. Do not rely on your intuition! A charitable act will boost your standing in the community. Set aside more time for loved one.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make good use of your overseas contacts. Someone influential admires your style. Do not hesitate to ask important questions. You may be able to get off work early this afternoon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You should be feeling rested and ready to go today. Money matters are beginning to work in your favor. You get a unique opportunity to advance several personal goals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The personal side of your life may cut into your work schedule today. Organize your commitments so that you do not jeopardize your job. Refuse to give into whims.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If shopping today, visit stores you do not usually frequent. You could receive a surprise. Some financial pressures may be relieved now. Romantic interlude is rewarding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not try to force the issue if mate opposes some of your plans. Instead, use diplomacy! Someone may attempt to pressure you at place of employment. Keep your temper.

Foot-and-mouth vaccine will help other work

By W.E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new genetically engineered vaccine against a major type of foot-and-mouth disease should speed similar work on human disease vaccines, developers say.

The U.S. Agriculture Department announced Thursday that researchers with Genentech Inc., with the help of government scientists and facilities, had developed the vaccine to prevent foot-and-mouth disease in animals.

This is the first vaccine, for animals or man, developed with gene-manipulating techniques, said Agriculture Secretary John R. Block.

Gary Hooper, marketing manager for Genentech, a San Francisco-based research company specializing in genetic work, said the development was just the beginning.

"This is a major advance in vaccine work," Hooper said in a telephone interview. "It shows you can develop an effective vaccine using these techniques."

Hooper said the animal disease work brings the promise of human disease vaccines closer to reality. Vaccines against certain diseases that are hard to make in large quantities can be mass produced using organisms "programmed" to do so, he added.

Genentech developed the vaccine under contract from International Minerals and Chemical Corp., which will market the agent worldwide and share the proceeds with Genentech, Hooper said.

Foot-and-mouth disease is so contagious that federal law prohibits even doing research on it in the continental United States. So Genentech used the Agriculture Department's Plum Island Animal Disease Center, located more than a mile off the coast of Long Island, N.Y.

The scientists took the disease virus and used cutting chemicals to remove the genes responsible for making one of the proteins that cover it.

This protein can stimulate immunity without causing the disease itself. The genes were transplanted into bacteria which then produced the vaccine protein in quantity.

Hooper said the next steps in the foot-and-mouth work are to test the vaccine's long-term effectiveness and to develop it into a type useful against all strains of the disease.

Foot-and-mouth disease is one of the world's most serious animal diseases, primarily affecting cloven-footed animals such as cattle and swine. Infection in humans is rare.

The deadly viral disease has been eradicated in such major livestock areas as North America, Australia and New Zealand through killing off diseased animals. But it is a major problem in some sections of Europe, Asia, Africa, Central America and South America.

There are three major groups of foot-and-mouth disease — classified A, O and C — each of which includes several strains of virus.

Hooper said the new vaccine is effective against some, and possibly all, strains of the A group. Further study may make it possible to combine this vaccine with others effective against the other types, he said.

Existing vaccines against foot-and-mouth disease have several drawbacks that the new agent corrects. The new vaccine does not require refrigeration as the old ones do, making them hard to maintain in out-of-the-way places.

The biggest advantage of the new vaccine is that it will not infect inoculated animals.

By CRAIG MACDONAL
Copley News Service

It's easy to pick Joe Perrone out of a line-up. He's the one with a smile on his face.

Perrone has been in danger all his life – and survived. But now he's got something to smile about.

"It's a new life. I'm finally living again," said the new clerk-typist who spent the three previous decades working as a cop in the worst part of New York's Bronx.

His 41st Precinct was nicknamed "Fort Apache" and Paul Newman recently starred in a movie about the horrors that go on in the South Bronx every day. The nickname came about because ghetto residents sometimes stormed the police station trying to free prisoners.

BODIES STUFFED in trunks. Cobblestones thrown from rooftops. Firebombings as frequent as sunrises. Roaches and rats scurrying around in the building where he worked.

Perrone has left it all behind.

Gladly. He doesn't miss a thing. Last year, the man who worked his way up from a patrolman in 1951 to $3,400 a month as a lieutenant, left his native New York for San Clemente, Calif. He had visited his sister there on Christmas in 1979. Seeing the warm weather instead of snow, the attractive environment in contrast to the ghetto, it wasn't hard for him to make up his mind.

"The difference was like night and day," said the fit and personable 54-year-old, whose brother was an installer for New York Telephone.

FOLLOWING HIS brother's advice, Perrone applied for work with Pacific Telephone last December. The employment office receptionist said she couldn't believe it when the Paul Newman look-alike said he was interested in becoming a clerk-typist.

"I didn't want to have anything to do with security. I didn't want to supervise (he was in charge of more than 100 officers before). I didn't want to be surprised by falling cobblestones. I wanted a complete change. I wanted to be treated like a human being," he said.

Perrone sought and got a 9-to-5 job, with weekends off. Now, instead of running a check on a car license plate, he uses a similar visual display terminal to check telephone numbers.

The first male clerk at PT and T's Laguna Hills (Calif.) Service Order Center types from 50 to 75 orders a day.

"I love being able to go home each night and not bring the job with me," he said.

During his last week as a police officer, Perrone said he began to wonder if he was ever going to reach retirement. A cobblestone tossed from the roof of a five-story tenement building exploded near his feet. A man fire-bombed the residence of a woman, causing a fire that killed 25 people. On one of his final nights, Perrone went into the field responding to reports of a bar fight, a family feud and a holdup.

"EACH INVOLVED guns and I had gone into the field without a bullet-proof vest," he recalled. "I returned to the station house and donned the vest. There wasn't another shooting that night!"

The only calls he responds to now are regarding someone's telephone order.

"I like my new beat," Perrone said. "The action's all in front of me where I can see it."

Entomologist John M. Owens holds an insecticide spayer and a handful of dead cockroaches to illustrate that the insects can be contained. Owens, a Texas A&M urban entomologist, is spending three weeks in a Dallas housing project battling a bad case of insect infestation.

Entomologist employs arsenal against roaches

DALLAS (AP) — We're living in an age of insects, an Aggie entomologist says, but that doesn't mean you have to let cockroaches eat you out of house, home and postage stamps, even though the flat brown bugs will eat just about anything.

John Owens, who works for the Dallas office of Texas A&M Agricultural Extension Service, claims the common German cockroach can be controlled.

To prove his point, he's taken a $4,000 grant from some chemical companies and applied that, boric acid and a kind of insect "nerve gas" to a demonstration of roach-killing in an Oak Lawn housing project.

"It takes a lot of organizing," he said, because there's more — much more — to roaches than meets the eye.

"If they have 25 cockroaches that are visible to us, then they have a significant situation," Owens said. "Research shows that a visual count shows only 15 percent of the cockroaches present."

Cockroaches are not simply "disgusting," they are also hazardous to your health, Owens said, since the insect's habits are far from sanitary.

They eat, he said, "the fallout from every human activity: everything. That's flecks of skin, hair, the crumbs we leave behind when we watch Johnny Carson, drops of beer on the kitchen floor, all things that fall from above they'll eat," including the glue on the backs of postage stamps.

They are lazy, spending "three-fourths of a 24-hour period just hanging around," and not in the cleanest places. In the cracks and crevices, they pick up the bacteria that causes diarrhea, flu and salmonella — food poisoning.

You can use this vanity against them by dusting their hideouts with boric acid, which they will walk in and then lick off their feet "like a kitty cat." The acid — a stomach poison to man, beast and insect — is one of the most effective weapons in the fight against the roach, Owens says.

Old-fashioned cleanliness is also part of his arsenal, but hand-to-roach combat and the one-shot deal isn't.

"If you see one moving across the floor, yeah, you can drown him in Raid, but it won't do much to affect the population," said Owens.

"Cockroaches evolved on the earth, oh, 250 million to 300 million years ago," he said. "They're so adaptable that we can't expect to eliminate them."

"We're in the age of the insects as far as animal life goes," he said. "The insects are a very dominant group. I wouldn't go so far as to say that in a nuclear war we'd leave only a legacy of cockroaches, but they have a very good chance."

She's good news for friendly birds

She said she wants to read gentler stories, so she called the Anderson Independent newspaper this week with one — about two wrens who built a nest in a fernpot hanging outside her home.

"I'm not trying to get my name in the papers," Mrs. Bibeau said. "I just think it would be good to show something not hateful or heartwrenching for a change.

"I'm not criticizing the paper, you understand. I just think it's crazy all these county officials acting like children — who wants to read about that?"

Mrs. Bibeau and her husband, Frank, built their home on Broadway Lake six years ago. She loves to garden and designed her front yard as a haven for birds, with feeders, a bird bath and plenty of humus around the garden where fat worms wriggle.

"I told my husband, 'Frank, they're building a nest out there in that pot.' I was going to tear it out, but I didn't have the heart," said the 70-year-old woman. "They worked on it all day; first the momma would come, then the papa."

They used "little bits and pieces of waste from the gutter," Mrs. Bibeau said. Now the mother wren is sitting on several eggs.

She said she guards her gardens from rogue birds like the bluejay or the black-feathered grackle. But she loves the pair of wrens, and she says she is going to protect the nest until the eggs hatch.

Government defends El Salvador report

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department is defending its white paper on alleged Soviet-bloc support for rebels in El Salvador, calling published criticisms of the report largely "inaccurate."

A 14-page statement issued Thursday by the department said "the few points of misstated detail or ambiguous formulations that have been correctly identified (in the news reports) do not in any way change the conclusions of the report."

"There has been no attempt to misinterpret the evidence or mislead the public," the statement declared.

THE EVIDENCE and conclusions of the white paper, issued Feb. 23 to back up President Reagan's support for El Salvador's junta, were challenged in articles last week in the Wall Street Journal and the Washington Post.

The Post said the white paper "contains factual errors, misleading statements and unresolved ambiguities that raise questions about the administration's interpretation of participation by communist countries in the Salvadoran civil war."

The white paper cited "definitive" evidence that the Soviet Union, Cuba and other communist countries had conspired to send 800 tons of weapons to leftist rebels in El Salvador. But the Wall Street Journal said the State Department attributed some documents to guerrilla leaders who didn't write them, guessed at arms shipment statistics and placed in the report data which cannot be found in the documents.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT, in its rebuttal Thursday, said it never said the 19 captured guerrilla documents released with the eight-page report were the entire body of evidence supporting its conclusion of massive Soviet-bloc involvement.

On the possible misidentification of authors of guerrilla documents, the department said, "the specific identity of the author ... is irrelevant to the evidence in the document."

Body found near Bastrop

BASTROP, Texas (AP) — The body of Walter Jones, 81, was found Thursday in his home at Center Union, a small community near Bastrop and southeast of Austin.

The two-bedroom house had been ransacked.

Jones had lived alone in the remote area since the death of his wife last January. Neighbors said he might have been killed by someone who had heard rumors hew kept large sums of money hidden in the house.

George the Snake helps cure fear of reptiles

By TIM BOVEE
Associated Press Writer

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Irrational fear of snakes is no Freudian hang-up. The phobia can be cured, a University of Oklahoma psychologist says, in two hours, with a 90 percent chance of success.

David Mitchell, clinical psychologist at the university's counseling center, says he has, with a little help from George, treated people with a disabling fear of reptiles.

As part of the treatment, people who fear snakes so much that they cannot raise their eyes from the ground to watch a country sunset, must reach out their hands and touch George, a 42-inch yellow rat snake who lives in a blue-and-white cut-off milk carton in Mitchell's office.

SIGMUND FREUD treated fear of snakes as a symptom of deeper psychological conflict, Mitchell says. Using Freudian techniques, it might take a psychiatrist two years or more to reach the root of the patient's problem, and even then, the chance of success was only 33 percent.

But Mitchell and other cognitive behavioralists believe snake phobia is something you learn, not a symbol of inner problems. "It can be conceptualized alone as a singularly learned thing," Mitchell says. "That's why it is easy to treat. It's not associated with learning, or sex, or other problems of life. One of my jobs is helping them understand the simplicity of their problem."

Ironically, the irrational fear of snakes is strengthened by a rational fact: unlike the imagined terrors of childhood, poisonous snakes exist.

"NORMALLY WE become afraid of bogymen, or ghosts, or Satan," Mitchell says. "We test out that fear and find there is nothing to be afraid of. In the case of snakes, there is a secondary reinforcement which keeps the fear going. The person interprets that 'my fear protects me, because I've never been bitten by snakes. So it's good to have this fear.'"

Mitchell estimates 5 percent of all Americans have an extreme fear of snakes, and the phobia can narrow their lives.

A father: "I'm missing out on a lot of things. My children want me to take them fishing."

A mother, who moved to Oklahoma from the north, where there are fewer snakes, and thus less snake phobia: "I've been in Oklahoma three months and I haven't seen it yet. I'm always looking at the ground watching for snakes."

"I've had people say they can't read a magazine because there

Mitchell's treatment combines fact and imagination. Learning that snakes "can't jump across the room and get you" helps lessen the fear, he says.

THROUGH A TECHNIQUE called "flood therapy," Mitchell has his "clients" — a term he prefers to the disease-related "patient" — close their eyes as he leads them through their imagined fears.

"You're on a camping trip, and there's a snake on the ground, and he strikes. Then they open their eyes aand find out nothing has happened."

In the third phase of Mitchell's counselling, which "seems to be the most powerful," an individual who is deathly afraid of snakes touches Mitchell's yellow rat snake. It's a gradual process, Mitchell says.

At first, the client wears a heavy protective glove as he approaches the snake. Then he switches to progressively lighter gloves until he touches the snake while wearing thin surgical gloves, which provide almost no protection, Mitchell says.

At that point, the client's real fear of snakes as a dangerous reptile remain, but his imagined fears, of snakes as a kind of bogeyman, are gone.

Big jackpots renew slots' popularity

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The lowly slot machine, once considered the near-exclusive province of little old ladies and tourists clad in Bermuda shorts, has emerged as a big money-maker for Nevada gambling halls. And at a number of resorts slot machines promise instant wealth to lucky players.

Slots, which once fed nicely on nickels, dimes and quarters, have more voracious appetites these days and now swallow silver dollars and, at some resorts, tokens worth $5 and more. The dollar slots are located in "carousels," circular or oval groupings of a half-dozen of the big machines that dot casinos' floors.

The bigger appetites have brought bigger payoffs, and huge slot jackpots are offered and sometimes won at dozens of clubs. Two — the Flamingo Hilton and its sister Las Vegas Hilton — have paid out $7,777,407 to 35 winners since their "Pot Of Gold" slot machines were installed three years ago.

The biggest slot take recorded up until then, $355,000, was paid April 18 at the Flamingo Hilton to Lawrence Balentine, 61, of Monterey Park, Calif.

POSITIVE THINKING

Practice the peacefulness of creative quietness

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Ever had the urge to get away from it all to some peaceful place? There is so much frantic activity nowadays, such rapid change, such alot of fast-breaking news that the thought of escape from tension really appeals.

Fortunately there is a remedy. You can learn to relax and get calm right where you are. I first realized this years ago when I was in Atlantic City to make a convention speech. It was during a hectic period in my own schedule.

Standing at the window of my hotel room I was looking at the sea. The sky was overcast with drifting clouds. Small waves moved evenly in ceaseless rhythm toward the shore, where they washed gently onto the soft sand. Sea gulls slowly climbed the air and then slid gracefully down wind. The peacefulness of the scene inducted a strange quiet, soothing my tense mind.

I closed my eyes and thereupon noticed that I could visualize the scene in detail. It was just as vivid with the eyes closed as when actually gazing at it. Then what was to stop me, I thought, from re-experiencing this peace at will even though physically removed?

From then on I developed the practice of remembered peacefulness, pausing now and then during a strenuous day to contemplate memory pictures of calming scenes. It is a handy way to get quick relief from tension. Even a couple minutes of the practice can be wonderfully quieting and refreshing.

The peace of nature can also be used as a means of taking off into a deeper, inner quiet, one that brings some good insights. The Japanesse, for example, have gardens specifically designed for this. A very famous ancient one is the Stone Garden of Kyoto, which is five centuries old and is visited each year by thousands of people from all over Japan as well as by travelers from other lands. I have been there many times and found it a healing experience.

The garden is small in area and there is not a single tree or shrub. It contains nothing but sand and rock. The sand is flat and smooth, evenly raked in parallel lines. And in this sand are 15 stones of varying size and shapes, clustering irregularly in five groups.

It is said that these stones represent the problems of human life. They are placed in such a way that you cannot see all of them from any one spot in the garden. The idea is that the mind is incapable of grasping all the basic human problems at one time.

The Stone Garden is intended as a place for meditation. You are supposed to sit still, get yourself thoroughly relaxed and let your attention focus upon these simplicities of sand and stones. Apparently the effect on many persons is a compelling sense of peace and harmony. I know it so affects me.

All races and civilizations have had thinkers and creative leaders who stressed the value of deep inner quiet. It is the goal of various techniques of meditation practiced by Hindu yogis. Christian mystics sometimes call it "entering the silence." Quakers refer to it as "peace at the center."

Anyone can tap this source of strength and inspiration. You do not have to go to a peace-centered garden. All you need is any secluded place where you can get yourself physically at ease and then fill your mind with some peace-inducing thoughts. A few such thoughts that I have found helpful are, "Be still and know that I am God," or "Peace I give unto you." I also like a poem by Robert W. Service:

"I've stood in some mighty mouthed hollow
That's plumb-full of hush to the brim;
I've watched the big husky sun wallow
In crimson and gold, and grow dim,
Till the moon set pearly peaks gleaming,
And the stars tumble out, neck and crop;
And I thought that I surely was dreaming,
With the peace of the world piled on top."*

We cannot escape the turmoil of our day and age. It is our world just as it is and we have to live in it. But we cannot keep emotionally healthy and creative without cultivating inner peace. So take time to practice creative quietness.

Trucker awarded medal of honor

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A trucker's courage inpulling another driver from the burning cab of a truck seconds before its fuel tank blew up has led him to become the eighth person ever to be awarded the Presidential Medal of Honor.

J.V. Calvert of Fort Worth was given the award by a representative of the U.S. Transporation Department at the opening of the Texas Motor Transportation Association convention Wednesday.

Canada 12th nation to join 1982 World's Fair roster

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Backers of the 1982 World's Fair say Canada has become the 12th country to promise to participate in the energy-theme exposition.

The fair will be on a 70-acre tract between downtown and the University of Tennessee campus. It is to open next May and run through October. Promoters expect 11 million people to attend the event.

Mark McGuigan, Canada's external affairs minister, announced in Ottawa that his nation would participate. Plans for Canada's exhibit aren't complete, but it will probably cover about 20,000 square feet, officials said.

S.H. Roberts Jr., 1982 World's Fair president, said the 113,000 square feet of international exhibit space is more than was available at fairs in Seattle, Wash.; San Antonio, Texas; or Spokane, Wash.

Confirmed fair participants, in addition to the United States and Canada, are France, Italy, Australia, West Germany, the United Kingdom, Japan, Mexico, Saudi Arabia, and the 10-member European Economic Community.

Several other nations, including the People's Republic of China and the Soviet Union, are negotiating with fair officials to sponsor exhibits.

June's home is house and a half

By JIM D. VOWELL
Architect

BWE-421 is a story and a half plan with a total of 2,200 square feet of living area. The 606 square feet on the upper floor may be left incomplete and finished as the family grows. The high pitched roof, dormer window on the rear and redwood timber trim create an English-style country home.

The design and room arrangements are conservative. The first floor, with a spacious entry, has two bedrooms and two baths on one side of the stair well. The open stair and the fireplace wall are the main features of the family room.

The front kitchen has a generous amount of cabinets and the refrigerator, cooktop and oven are in the brick wall that divides the kitchen and dining room from the family room.

The utility area contains broom and pantry cabinets and space for washer, dryer and freezer. The large two-car garage has enclosed storage with doors that may be locked.

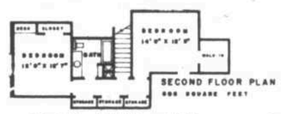

The sleeping area upstairs is completely private and has natural light from the windows in the rear dormer and the gables at each end. Each bedroom has exceptionally large closets open directly into the hallway that connects the two bedrooms with the bath. Additional storage may be provided by flooring the attic area.

The fully guaranteed construction drawings of this home may be ordered as indicated, and three plan books covering houses of many sizes and designs are also available.

THE STORY BEHIND THE STORIES YOU READ ABOUT CELEBRITIES

By Josie

Q. We heard that Paul McCartney was divorcing his wife, Linda. Why? S. Carroll, Pinson, Ala.

A. By our last report, the McCartney marriage was still strong — Paul cherishes his rural home life with the wife and kids.

Q. I know Dan Aykroyd wanted to be in movies, but "The Blues Brothers" was awful. Is he brave enough to try another film? J. Brendon, Montgomery, Ala.

A. Yes, he and Blues Brother John Belushi are going to star in a non-musical film, "Neighbors," which started shooting in New York in April. Their co-star is Cathy Moriarty, an Oscar nominee last year for "Raging Bull."

Q. Donald Sutherland has always struck me as being a little strange. Is he? S. Joice, Metairie, La.

A. He does have an unusual personality. He's been known for a rather unconventional sense of humor and is adamant about not allowing others to smoke anywhere near him. He's also a firm believer in magic.

UPDATE: For all the Bob Marley fans who wrote in to correct our item about the late reggae superstar, our column had already gone to press when he died of cancer. It was too late to pull the question from the pages so it did appear that our information was faulty. Until just a few weeks before his death, reports of his condition were positive and he was planning to resume performing. Reggae fans around the world will miss the work of this fine singer and songwriter.

Anything you'd like to know about prominent personalities? Write: Josie, SUNDAY WOMAN magazine, 235 E. 45th Street, New York, N.Y. 10017. Sorry, we can't answer any letters individually.

Q. I saw a picture of Linda Lavin and her husband, Ron Leibman, in a magazine recently. I thought they had broken up. Did they? P. Shenson, Evanston Ill.

A. It must have been an old picture. The relationship of Lavin-Leibman is now firmly in the divorce courts.

Q. I read that Warren Beatty was going to do a commercial. Is that true? S. Leach, Encino, Calif.

A. Yes he is, but American viewers won't see it. Beatty is going to do a spot for Nissan Motors in Japan. The Japanese public loves American movie stars and the Japanese companies reflect it by paying the stars much more money than they could get here. Another major star, Paul Newman, recently filmed an ad there for Folger's coffee.

Q. Whenever you read anything about Reggie Jackson's lifestyle, they always mention something about his many expensive cars. Does he have a lot of them? K. Tallarico, Baltimore, Md.

A. Indeed, he does. Jackson's interest in cars goes back to high school hot rods and, to this day, he collects Hot Rod magazine, and designs and builds custom cars at his home in Oakland, Calif. He's planning a new home in Carmel with a 15-car garage. Seems he's planning company for his current car, a Rolls-Royce Silver Cloud Corniche.

thread around the ring finger, and children were taught the anatomy of the genitals at school. Like many other socialist communities of that era, Modern Times was based on the ideas of French philosopher Charles Fourier.

Most unique among Fourier's notions was that everyone was entitled to sexual happiness. Reasoning that people are most productive when they are loved, he advised that each community select a group of especially lusty men and women who would then distribute ecstasy to all in need. Outside of having access to the services of these gifted few, everyone else was to be left to his or her own devices. Homosexuality, promiscuity, polygamy, monogamy, even celibacy — all were permitted. The only forbidden act was rape. Fourier's ideas were destroyed by disputes among his followers and outside persecution. Of the 40 communities based on his principles launched during the 1840s, only one outlasted the decade.

Prostitution, which had never really ceased to flourish, reached a new high. Hotel rooms which couples could rent by-the-hour were popular and abortionists were easy to find. Speaking of the era, Mae West recalled how she lost her virginity at the age of 13 in the vestibule of her parents' Brooklyn home: "Even at that time (1895) a girl felt like it was old-fashioned not to do it, that she was doing it to be modern." Advance gusts such as these signaled the coming whirlwind of the 20th century, when the flapper would blow into town.

THE NEW HEDONISM

The advances of feminism went hand in hand with the loosening of prim and proper morals. In 1920, women won the vote, but they made other gains which were never entered in the statutes. For example, a girl could smoke a cigarette and wear pants or short skirts without being arrested: she could also date without a chaperone and, more important, with war-boom jobs finally opening to women, she could pay her own way. The '20s woman demanded two rights: time and opportunity to experiment before settling down to have a family and sexual satisfaction both before and after marriage. Statistics garnered by Kinsey and others indicate that many got what they wanted.

Information about contraception finally reached the general public. Margaret Sanger, who coined the phrase "birth control" in a 1914 lecture, opened the first legal birth-control clinic (in Brooklyn) two years later, after many arrests. Within the next 20 years over 300 such centers had opened and millions were reaping their benefits.

By 1930 the per capita number of illegitimate and abandoned children had dropped sharply in spite of a significant increase in extra- and premarital sex, while prostitutes suffered their first economic slump in centuries.

Meanwhile, from across the ocean, disciples of Sigmund Freud and Havelock Ellis spread the word that sex could not be separated from a happy emotional life, and Marie Stopes's best-selling "Married Love," 1918, told adult readers how to achieve satisfaction. Henry Ford and his motoring machines took romance out of the crowded parlor and into the privacy of woods and back streets. On the silver screen, sex appeal was personified in the diminutive, ravenously sensuous, Clara Bow. Many pubescent girls took to calling Rudolph Valentino their "boy chum," and the most popular movies were blushingly romantic, often featuring sheiks and harem girls. The cinema conveniently put its customers in a dark, cozy spot so they could practice up on what they were learning.

In the forefront of the New Hedonism were the literati who settled in New York's Greenwich Village about 1910 and ushered in the Roaring '20s. Edna St. Vincent Millay wrote unashamedly intimate and beautifully lyrical poetry and Mable Dodge established a salon where the cognoscenti gabbed about psychoanalysis, cubist painting, and the latest smuggled-in installment of James Joyce's X-rated masterpiece, "Ulysses."

As the decade progressed, however, the Village scene grew less sedate, broadening to include speakeasies and all-night parties, which attracted bell-bottomed, fringe-skirted interlopers from uptown. By then, "What ever canards the scandal mongers had spread... were true, though less than the truth in full," noted Brooks Atkinson in his memoirs, "East of the Hudson." "In an obscure night club thrust in a cellar under the elevated... dusky wenches sang 'I Got That Thing' all night long and performed lascivious dances for a dollar."

More sexual relations did not always mean better ones, however, and many men paid the new equality only lip service. Often a girl who'd passed through a series of affairs was badmouthed later and shunned by her former friends as "fast." Hypocrisy had not exactly succumbed to sudden death. A generation raised on notions of strict chastity was expected, to handle a staggering variety of sexual options with finesse. The result, just as it has been in our own era, was confusion, especially among young women pressured to "put out" what they'd been so carefully taught to contain.

A great-aunt of mine recalls how in her youth girls were made to feel hopelessly old-fashioned if they didn't do at least a little heavy necking on every date. And a 74-year-old neighbor remembers that the typical '20s lady-killer would first spout Freud to a girl and then proceed to warn that unconscious frustration was sure to make her pimply, neurotic, and fat. Recalling his own courting days in the mid-'20s, the late cartoonist Al Capp said, "The whole point was to have sex but never to admit to your partner that you'd had it. You just didn't admit it."

Though not always as relaxed about sex as they pretended, people were more informed about it than ever before. A decade after Marie Stope's book was published, Dr. Theodor H. van de Velde came out with "Ideal Marriage," which remained the state-of-the-art manual until the 1960s. Practice, especially with such a good guide, should have led to better if not perfect sex, but data show that the progress people made was, at best, uneven.

The Kinsey survey revealed that before 1920 the average sex act took place in the missionary position, and though 94 percent of women who came of age after that tried other positions, the increase in orgasmic women was much smaller: only from 10 to 15 percent. "Frigidity" soon replaced "hysteria" as the universal women's complaint.

Americans still had a long way to go in realizing their full sexual potential but by 1935 they had come quite some distance by even discussing orgasms at all. Grandma and Grandpa may not have touched every base in the "Kama Sutra", but they'd taken their first giant step. ■

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—We have no problem in our game with the Stayman Convention when partner opens the bidding with one no trump. But there is considerable disagreement about what constitutes a Stayman inquiry for the major suits after the opponents open the bidding and partner overcalls one no trump. Some say that it should still be two clubs. Others argue in favor of a cue-bid of the opponent's suit. Can you give us some help?—L. Solomon, New Haven, Conn.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—There are some players, not too many, who do play that two clubs is still the way to check on major suits. If you want to use that method, go ahead.

There is one slight drawback to that method. Once there has been an opening bid and a no trump overcall by your side, chances of making game are not bright. Thus, over partner's no trump overcall, it makes sense to retain the natural meaning of two clubs — a long club suit and a weak hand. If you want to hear about a major suit, you cue-bid the enemy suit.

There is only one case where the cue-bid might result in a higher contract than if you used two clubs as Stayman. That is where the opponent opened the bidding with one spade and partner overcalled with one no trump. Now you will have to use a cue-bid of two spades as your Stayman inquiry, which forces the auction to the three-level if partner has hearts. On all other hands, however, you will be able to get partner to show his major suit at the two-level and still have two clubs at your disposal as a natural bid.

The latter method has been endorsed by this department over the years, and we see no reason to change now.

Q.—In several columns over the past few years you have advised us that new rubber bridge laws are imminent. How long is "imminent" in your language?—B. Jackson, Cincinnati, Ohio

A.—It is not my language that should be held in question, but the authorities whose task it was to revise the Laws!

However, I can now report that changes in the Laws of Contract Bridge were approved at the end of last year, and that a new edition of the Laws book is expected late this month. We will announce it in these columns as soon as we know the date.

From what we understand, the most significant alteration is in the penalty for a revoke—from two tricks to one in most cases—which has been revised to agree with the revoke law in duplicate bridge. There are also a number of less revolutionary changes. As soon as we have had the opportunity to study the official revisions, we will report on them.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Charles Goren and Omar Sharif personally cannot undertake to answer all questions submitted.

SEX in Centuries Past

Is there really nothing new in the romance department? From Pocahontas to the swinging 60s, Americans have been enjoying and recording their love lives. Here, a short history of love in the U.S.A

By Gary Selden

The sexual freedom Americans have enjoyed since the mid-60s makes many people think of our earlier history as one long Dark Age of smothered passions. And to some extent they are correct. From the days of the Puritans right up to the 50s, the United States deserved its reputation as the most uptight, repressed, and possibly boring land on earth. The stuffiest Victorian visitors tittered to learn that the word leg could not be uttered in polite company, even when used to refer to the leg of a piano.

Some couples carried this uptightness to an extreme.Consider the frustration of the 18 pairs described in Dr. Robert Dickinson's "A Thousand Marriages" (1931), who remained virgins for years because the partners neither knew how to copulate nor were bold enough to learn through trying.

Not all were so inhibited, however, and in spite of widespread inhibitions a few brave souls did openly pursue sexual happiness, no matter what their neighbors said. There also existed a large "silent majority" of millions of hypocrites who knew sex could be fun and slyly practiced what they were afraid to preach. Generally, a man's indiscretions were easily overlooked while the double standard enforced sterner strictures for women. Nevertheless, the good old days weren't quite as bad as they're cracked up to be.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

The Indians were baffled by the fuss the colonists raised over sex. White folks professed outrage at any sign of passion, yet the men, at least, talked constantly about it.Missionaries tried to end the natives' immorality by getting them to take fewer baths and wear more clothes, a suggestion sensibly discarded by the red man. As one native American told a colonist, her people "had rather go naked than be lousie."

Innocent of all bodily shame, the Indians considered sex an important but matter-of-fact part of life, like food or sleep. Premarital intercourse was an essential part of growing up. In fact, in a world only sparsely settled by tepees, a girl who had proven her fertility was usually more sought after than a virgin.

Small wonder that Indian sexual customs amazed the whites. Although the few colonists who kept diaries rarely wrote about sex, Jamestown's Captain John Smith did record, with awed appreciation, the Indian custom of providing honored male visitors with a woman to share his bed.

THE JOY OF BUNDLING

Despite their lackluster reputation, the Puritans actually overestimated the power of sex, devoting a furious energy to fighting its compelling attractions. Even the smallest lapse was sternly punished — in 1656, for example, Boston's Captain Kemble was arrested for "lewdness" when he kissed his wife in public on the Sabbath, after three years away at sea. That floggings and even an occasional execution could not prevent adultery or premarital "incontinence" at Plymouth Plantation seemed to the Puritans confirmation of what they'd always suspected — that there was no way to beat the devil after all.

After a while, however, the desperate need for new hands to clear the wilderness led to a greater tolerance of rambunctious studs and willing wenches. The custom of bundling was New England's first move toward greater sexual freedom. A fully dressed couple would get into bed and proceed to embrace and caress each other across a "bundling board," put up as a barrier between them. The custom was naively defended (even by some churchmen) as a way for chaste young men and women to get to know each other. The Puritans also insisted the custom was practical — it warded off frostbite and saved fuel during the harsh New England winters — and other people besides courting couples, house guests and family, for example, also shared bed and board.

In actuality, though, bundling involved far more than keeping warm; for the young it was often the last step before betrothal. The astonishing number of illegitimate children (a fifth of all births, by some estimates) indicates how frequently young lovers leapt the fence.

REVOLUTION AND RIBALDRY

The half-century from about 1760 to 1810, though tame by modern standards, was more relaxed than the Puritanism that came before or the Victorianism, which followed. Like all wars, the Revolution encouraged a to-the-winds attitude toward romance, even though most of the citizenry professed a solid-oak moral code.

The war also greatly increased opportunities for the working girl. Both armies depended heavily on camp followers, not only for sexual refreshment but also for nursing services and supply runs of food and rum. The number of prostitutes grew from one woman for every 10 men at the war's start to about one for every five by the end.

Of the famous men of this era, we know of at least one whose private life was peppered with indiscretions. Thomas Jefferson had a lifelong affair with his mulatto servant Sally Hemings, punctuated by a torrid but traumatic liaison with Maria Cosway, wife of artist Richard Cosway, who painted erotic miniatures on snuffbox lids. We're less well informed about the intimate lives of more ordinary folks.

We do know that courtship did not necessarily lead to the altar, however, since the law — and many husbands — still considered a wife little more than a servant. Many women postponed the vows as long as possible or took advantage of Philadelphia's relatively easy divorce laws to rectify a mistake. Many a girl was seduced, then left pregnant, and abandoned; but this condition didn't lead to the ostracism which occurred in later decades. If she wished, the young woman could unburden herself by farming out the child as an apprentice after its first birthday.

PRUDERY AND (FALSE) PIETY

The great American cover-up really didn't begin until about 1821, when Massachusetts publisher Peter Homes was convicted of smut peddling for printing "Fanny Hill." No one knows exactly why, but this event seemed to launch a country-wide conspiracy of silence about sex.

This was the era when Greek statues grew fig leaves overnight and girls were taught not to cross their legs. Men blushed and fell silent when their wives entered the drawing room. The stifling atmosphere of the civilized East was a major reason why men left for the frontier.

As repression intensified, an epidemic of evangelism spread. If people were denied the catharsis of sex, they made up for it through orgies of guilt. By flickering torchlight, circuit-riding preachers scourged their self-abasing congregations with fire-and-brimstone speeches. Like a bacchanalia without the wine, the scene released so many suppressed passions that "camp meeting baby" became a popular synonym for "love child," and one observer remarked, "More souls were conceived than saved." As Memphis lawyer James D. Davis noted in the 1820s: "For a mile or more around a camp meeting the woods seem alive with people; every tree or bush has its group or couple while hundreds of others in pairs are seen prowling around in search of some cozy spot."

FREE LOVE FOR ALL

Meanwhile, other more forthright sects were trying to bring sex out from behind the bushes. Some of these radicals had begun to espouse a new doctrine called "free love." They saw eroticism as a healthy human impulse to be spared the interference of both church and state.

One of the first and most celebrated of the libertarian communes was the one at New Harmony, Ind., founded by Robert Owen in 1825. Owen's love-crazed group mushroomed so fast that the master had to make a special trip to France to buy birth-control devices.

A former New Harmony resident, Josiah Warren, soon founded Modern Times, an even more revolutionary community situated on Long Island. Here nudity was optional, marriages were made and dissolved by tying and untying a red

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

At MC, it's sign-up time again

By H.A. TUCK
Public Relations Director
Midland College

Halfway through the first summer session, it's already time to pre-register for the second summer term. Pre-registration opens Monday and continues through July 7 for students who plan to attend classes during the second summer term.

Prospective students may pre-register in the Office of Student Services, Administration Building, between 7 a.m. and 8:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Midland College will be closed on Monday, July 6 as its Independence Day holiday. The first summer session ends on July 7, registration for the second summer session is July 8, and classes start again on July 9. The second summer term ends on August 13.

I had thought we were finished with fowl stories, but there is one more to be related.

Seems John Hohenberger, director of maintenance, found a carrier pigeon walking through the Science Building courtyard and picked it up. The bird was banded and belonged to a man from Odessa. John called the bird's owner and found that the bird had been shipped to El Paso and released for a flight home. However, when the bird lowered its landing gear as it neared Odessa, it apparently was blown off course by strong winds and eventually landed on the MC campus. The owner came over to retrieve the young pigeon, who will likely be given another chance to work on its landing approaches before being converted to squab pie.

●

A Midlander, who thought I was libeling graphic arts instructor Bob King about his photos last week, called Bob in Oklahoma City to tell him that. Bob, who got more kick than anyone else about his elusive owl pictures, is one of the finest photo technicians I know and I certainly wouldn't want anyone to think otherwise.

●

Congratulations to Harold Partin and Ellen Gonzales for winning the mixed doubles scramble ping-pong championship recently. The event, which forms teams from among faculty and staff on a blind draw basis, has become a summer highlight among employees.

●

The MC coaches have been busily recruiting players for next fall during the past couple of months. Golf coaches Delnor Poss and Susan Holland have most of their players lined up, while new MC tennis coach, Dr. Leon Dulin, is getting some recruits interested in MC. Brian Gilley signed a number of tennis recruits before he left. Basketball coach Jerry Stone already has announced a number of players, with severl more yet to be signed.

Sitting smugly on the sideline watching the coaches at work is Betty Murrah, physical education instructor and cheerleader sponsor, who has already finished her recruiting for the year. She'll have her people in action later this summer at a cheerleading school in Dallas.

Recruiting isn't limited just to the coaches, however. Administrators are interviewing and sometimes signing new instructors for the faculty. There are a number of faculty vacancies, due to resignations and expansion of instructional programs. The toughest positions to fill are those in the technical program areas — such as welding, auto technology, electronics, computer science, and petroleum technology — since qualified instructors for these programs are in high demand by other schools and by industry.

●

MC has another shortage. That's in housing for out-of-town students who plan to attend MC. The Dean of Students is trying to locate persons in the community who have furnished rooms, efficiencies, or garage apartments to rent. Almost all these students are on academic scholarships or work-study grants. However, since MC doesn't have any on-campus student housing, they need to find local housing. If you have something that a student could rent this fall, please call the Dean of Students' office at 684-7851, extension 227.

The Secret Everyone Knows

By Cathleen Brooks

She never wanted to admit her family's terrible secret — but she finally had to. Here is a young woman's touching story, written for children who may be suffering the anguish of growing up with alcoholic parents

I want to tell you a secret. It's something I tried to hide — even from myself — for many years because I thought it was so awful and dirty. I decided no one should ever find out about it. But when I look back at it now, I realize it was never much of a secret. Lots of people must have known all along. It's the type of thing people know without you telling them. Probably for every four or five kids I knew, there was one who had the same problem I had. But I didn't know that then.

Now I see the only real secret was how I felt inside: scared and miserable and a little sick all the time. I am writing this because you might have the same secret. If so, it will help to learn that you're not alone — and that your secret is not really dirty at all. You can stop being so scared and miserable if you do a very simple thing: share your secret. Let me tell you mine.

My mother is an alcoholic. So is my father. Today I can say that word without feeling sick to my stomach. It was not always that way. When I was 8, a girlfriend told me her mother said my parents were alcoholics. I hated that word. It was filthy and disgusting. It was for old men curled up on sidewalks and women who hung around sleazy bars. My parents were not like that! I never spoke to that girlfriend again. I did not want to know anything about alcoholism and tried my best to put the word out of my mind.

But I could not deny that something was terribly wrong in our house. It was a nice house and my dad had a good job. But there was horrible yelling late at night in my parents' bedroom. Sometimes my parents acted very strangely and embarrassed us kids in public. There were nights when they forgot about dinner until it was too late to eat.

We had to be really quiet around the house, especially in the afternoons when mom was in bed with some illness that never seemed to go away. I told my friends they couldn't come play at my house because my mom was dying. Actually I was just ashamed of what went on there. As I got older, my lies became more outrageous. I said I was an orphan. Or with other kids, I'd make up fabulous stories about how rich and famous my father was. I guess I lied because I hated the truth about my life.

I had the strange feeling that somehow it was my fault that my parents seemed so unhappy. I tried to please them by bringing home good report cards. They didn't seem to notice. I felt frightened a lot because I never knew whether my parents would be in a good "mood" or a bad one. Sometimes, everything would be fine and then suddenly one of them would blow up for no reason. I thought that if I worked harder around the house and was careful not to upset them, things would get better.

Well, nothing got better. Gradually, I began to admit to myself — and only to myself — that all the sadness and yelling and the sick feelings I had inside were somehow connected to the fact that my parents drank so much. I didn't realize this until I was in junior high school. I wasn't stupid. I just really didn't want to believe that there was something seriously wrong with my parents. I loved them and wanted to believe that one day we could be the nice family I had created in my lies and dreams.

But I had started to feel that I hated them sometimes. I was sick of being punished when I hadn't done anything wrong. I began to resent them for not doing their share of work around the house. I got grumpy about all the responsibilities I had when other kids had more time to play. My mom and dad forgot promises. They sometimes said things that weren't true — including some really rotten things about me. I wondered why they lied like that. I wondered if maybe I was crazy. Most of all, I wondered why my parents were never there when I needed them. They were always busy, sick or asleep.

My mom and I started arguing constantly. She just didn't make any sense, but she was my mother so I had to obey her. I tried to get back at her by being as mean as I could be. I tried to see how much I could get away with when she was too drunk to notice. I hated myself for being so nasty, but I couldn't seem to stop.

I felt so alone, but I thought no one could understand. I still didn't like the idea of talking behind my parents' backs. I had been taught to respect adults, especially my parents. And I thought it would be wrong to mention their drinking outside the family. The strange thing is my brothers and sisters and I never talked about it among ourselves either. We always said daddy was "tired" when he passed out in the living room and mommy was "sick" when she didn't get out of bed for days.

Once, though, I remember one of my sisters was having a terrible fight with my parents and she called them "alcoholics." My father slapped her and said, "Don't ever use that word again in this house." I remember I agreed with him silently. After all, it was a dirty word.

When I was 15, my mother was sent to a mental hospital. By then, I knew what was happening and why. But no one in the family mentioned alcoholism when they talked about what was wrong with my mother. They called it "exhaustion" or a "nervous breakdown." It was as if there was some crazy, unspoken rule against discussing the thing that was making all of us so miserable. The craziest thing is, we all obeyed the rule.

When mom came home from the hospital, she was different. She told me she had decided to quit drinking and she was going to attend Alcoholics Anonymous (A.A.) meetings. For the first time in my life, I could talk to one of my parents. It was fantastic.

By this time, the older kids had gone off to college or to get married, leaving just my little brother and me at home. I wanted to be with my mother every second. We talked a lot about my dad. He was still drinking and resented my mother being involved with A.A.

Six months after my mom quit drinking, our family moved across the country. Both my mom and I were lonely in our new town. I thought she was my only real friend. One day I came home upset about my new school and walked in to talk to her. We kids of alcoholics usually know instantly if our parents have been drinking. And I knew — just by the expression on her face, the silly half-smile, the shaky way she said hello — I knew the stuff in her glass was booze, not soda. I grabbed it from her and threw it out.

I had never been so angry in my life. I wanted to hit her, but all I could do was scream and cry. I felt that my last hope had just disappeared. I knew enough about alcoholism by then to know that first drink would be the beginning of more hell... and the end of the closeness she and I had found.

When my father came home that night, my mother drunkenly told him how "disrespectful" I had been. My father stormed into my room. I'll never forget his words. "You are a child," he said. "We are adults. Don't you ever try to tell us how to run our lives again."

That night my brother and I sat in my room. It was the first time we had ever talked to each other like friends. I told him what had happened that day and I said, "From now on, we have to stick together because we're all we've got." At least we were sharing our women are those that anticipate and deal with weight gain and that set up a "buddy system" for mutual support during and after treatment.

Other methods that have worked for some include hypnosis and acupuncture. There's also a new nicotine gum, which will be available by prescription next year. It satisfies the smoker's nicotine craving until he or she has been weaned away from cigarettes.

NEW LUNG-CANCER DETECTION TEST

A new technique, developed by a team of Johns Hopkins radiologists, can determine quickly, inexpensively, and painlessly whether a growth in the lung is benign or malignant.

The technique, using an advanced CT (computed tomography) scanner, has a high degree of accuracy, provides a fast diagnosis, and avoids hospitalization. The scanner records numerically the differences in density of suspected tissue. High density means the growth contains calcium (which may be the remains of an old infection or lesion) and is benign. Low density means there is a strong likelihood the growth is malignant.

A CT study of a lung nodule can be done on an outpatient basis and costs about $130. If the tissue is found to be benign, no further tests are necessary.

Until now, standard detection methods included a needle biopsy, costing about $165 (plus much additional expense if the lung collapsed), or bronchoscopy — the insertion into the lung of a fiberoptical tube that could examine and remove tissue — costing about $600 and requiring two days in the hospital. When a growth could not be reached with a needle or a tube, a third method, thoractomy (open chest surgery) was performed. This entailed about 10 days of hospitalization, general anesthesia, and surgeon's fees and could cost the patient more than $4,000.

At the present time the simple CT scan test is performed only at Johns Hopkins, but it is expected to be available at medical centers around the country in the near future.

Dear Doctor...

Do you have a health question for Dr. Petrek? Write to: Dear Doctor, SUNDAY WOMAN, 235 E. 45th St., N.Y., N.Y., 10017. No letters can be answered individually.

My niece is married to a lovely man who has just received a spinal cord injury in a car accident and may be paralyzed permantly from the waist down. I know that it is none of my business, but do you think this young woman can expect to have a normal sex life with her husband?

Paula

Dear Paula: In many cases, men with spinal cord injuries can continue to have intercourse and even father children. However, psychological effects of the injuries may be more likely to break up the marriage than impaired sexual function. A recent study from the Wisconsin V.A. Hospital showed that in 333 marriages where the husband sustained a spinal cord injury, nearly a third were divorced within six years. However this rate is roughly comparable to that for the U.S. population as a whole.

It is difficult to predict if a man with a spinal cord injury will be able to have children. Many of them can because the nerves which control sexual function are different from those controlling the legs.(Spinal cord injuries in women of childbearing age almost never interfere with the ablility to conceive and bring a pregnancy to term.)

Motor vehicle accidents account for almost one-half of the spinal cord injuries per year. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has shown, with lifelike dummies in simulated crashes, that large numbers of spinal cord injuries can be prevented with seat and chest belts.

Two-thirds of such victims in this country are 30 years old or younger. And as many as 10,000 people will sustain spinal cord injuries this year alone, adding to the approximately 200,000 Americans who have suffered this type of injury to date.

My 12-year-old stepson always seems depressed. This worries me because his mother has been hospitalized several times for mental depression. He has trouble sleeping and rarely sleeps for more than six hours. He is underweight and never seems hungry. Is it possible for children to become depressed in the same way as adults?

Patricia

Dear Patricia: Until recently, doctors didn't think that true depressive illness occured in children. Most pediatricians and psychiatrists thought that pre-adolescents lacked the intellectual and emotional reponses that lead to depression. In the past 10 years, however, doctors have concluded that childhood depression does exist and may even be responsible for behavior disorders.

The main question is how one can distinguish between a child who is depressed and a child who is merely unhappy. Most youngsters can become unhappy at almost any time and for almost any reason. It is probably best to reserve the term "depressed" for children who develop at least four of the nine symptoms listed below (for children under six, at least three of the first four):

1. Loss of interest or pleasure in almost all usual activities.
2. Poor appetite with significant weight loss (or failure to make expected weight gains).
3. Trouble sleeping or too much time spent sleeping.
4. Hyperactivity or, more likely, decreased activity.
5. A loss of interest in school and recreational activities.
6. Loss of energy and frequent fatigue.
7. Expresses feelings of worthlessness or excessive guilt and self-hatred.
8. Difficulty concentrating.
9. Recurrent thoughts of death and suicide.

My doctor used to prescribe amphetamines when I wanted to lose weight. About three years ago he said he could no longer prescribe them because of new drug laws. I am a normal homemaker and mother, not a junkie. Why can't I use these pills under my doctor's supervision?

Rhonda

Dear Rhonda: You are much better off without the use of diet pills. First of all, the medical profession and Food and Drug Administration have concluded after extensive studies that amphetamines are not only useless in weight control programs but may also be harmful in many cases. Also, amphetamines are a major cause of serious drug abuse problems in the United States.

Amphetamines are only helpful in rare cases such as adults suffering from narcolepsy and with some forms of hyperactivity in children.■

Secondhand Smoke

The flight from New York to London was just getting ready for takeoff, when a commotion delayed its departure. Two passengers who were traveling together, both non-smokers, were told they would have to sit in the smoking section because there were no seats left in the no-smoking section. Insisting that having to inhale smoke from other people's cigarettes is not only unpleasant but unhealthy, the two refused to take their seats until other passengers volunteered to change places with them.

Incidents such as this one have become more common in recent years as concern grows that cigarette smoke may be harmful to non-smokers as well as to smokers. Strong evidence to support this view came just a few months ago with the publication of a 14-year study conducted at Tokyo's National Cancer Center Research Institute. The study, which followed more than 91,000 non-smoking women whose husbands smoked, found a surprisingly high incidence of death from lung cancer in the wives. It also showed that the more cigarettes the husbands smoked, the more likely their wives were to develop lung cancer.

This study was the first, but not the only one, to link passive smoking with a disease as deadly as lung cancer. And evidence has been accumulating for some time that secondhand smoke may cause a number of other health problems in non-smokers. Here's what medical researchers have already discovered.

The smoke from your husband's cigarette may be giving you lung cancer!

THE RISKS OF "PASSIVE" SMOKING

Of all the victims of secondhand smoke, the most vulnerable is the unborn child. Women who smoke during pregnancy have a significantly higher incidence of miscarriages and stillbirths. Babies born to mothers who smoked during pregnancy have lower birth weights and tend to develop more slowly, both physically and mentally, during childhood.

In homes where one or both parents smoke, babies are more prone to bronchitis and pneumonia, and children develop more respiratory illnesses. Other medical studies have linked secondhand smoke to a variety of ailments in non-smoking adults — damage to the small airways in the lungs, severe headaches, allergic coughing and sneezing, and extreme eye irritation. Anyone with asthma, emphysema, or heart disease is particularly bothered by smoke irritants.

One study conducted last year at the University of California reported that the results of lung function tests on non-smokers who worked in smoky areas were not much different from those for people who smoked up to 10 cigarettes a day.

PASSIVE SMOKING AND LUNG CANCER

When it comes to singling out passive smoking as a cause of lung cancer, health experts are divided. Some feel that years of exposure to the toxic substances, including carcinogens, contained in secondhand smoke may be a cause of lung cancer in non-smokers. But a leading authority on smoking and health, Dr. Gio Gori, vice president of the Franklin Research Center, feels that under normal circumstances a passive smoker does not inhale enough smoke to develop serious health problems.

PROTECTION FOR NON-SMOKERS

Non-smoking travelers on U.S. airlines are protected by a Civil Aeronautics Board regulation requiring that an airline provide a seat in the no-smoking section to any passenger who requests it, even if the section has to be expanded to accommodate that passenger. Foreign carriers also have separate smoking and no-smoking sections, but if a passenger arrives after all the seats in the no-smoking section have been assigned, the airline is under no obligation to expand it.

In this country, efforts to limit smoking in public places now include statutes that ban or limit smoking in certain public places — in elevators, theaters, libraries, museums, hospitals, schools, stores and restaurants, and on trains and intercity buses. Many businesses also restrict smoking to designated areas on their premises.

DOUBTS ABOUT LOW-TAR CIGARETTES

As for smokers who have tried to reduce their own risk by switching to low-tar, low-nicotine cigarettes, the latest surgeon general's report has disturbing news. Studies show that low-tar cigarettes give smokers only small protection against lung cancer (the reduction in risk is minimal compared to quitting entirely) and have had no effect at all in reducing emphysema, heart disease, and the complications of pregnancy. What's more, warns the surgeon general, smokers who switch to what they think is a less hazardous cigarette may actually increase their hazard if they compensate by smoking more cigarettes or inhaling more deeply.

Other safety questions are being asked about the additives put into low-tar cigarettes to replace the flavor lost by reducing tar and nicotine. Some of these substances when burned may produce carcinogens that are just as harmful as tar and nicotine. None of these substances has yet been tested.

It should be noted that low-tar cigarettes do have defenders, if only for negative reasons:

Among them Dr. Gio Gori and Lawrence Garfinkel of the American Cancer Society. They maintain that while there's no such thing as a safe cigarette, the lower the tar and nicotine, the lower the risk. They point out that the low-tar cigarettes cited in the surgeon general's report (cigarettes containing 17.6 mgs. of tar or slightly less) cannot be compared to some of today's brands, which contain much lower levels — from 0.1 mg. to 10 mgs. tar. Future studies, they say, may show that these very-low-tar brands are less harmful than those previously called low-tar. Dr. Gori says smokers who switch to low-tar brands may find it easier to cut down from stronger to milder cigarettes in gradual stages.

WOMEN AND SMOKING

Unfortunately the increased use of low-tar cigarettes does not change the gloomy new statistics on women smokers. The surgeon general's report and other recent medical research find that women are smoking in greater numbers than ever and that lung cancer in women is rising so fast that by the mid or late 1980s it is likely to overtake breast cancer as the No. 1 killer of women.

HELP FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO STOP

Of the millions of Americans who have already quit smoking, most have stopped on their own. But it often takes more than one attempt to shake the habit permanently, and sometimes people need outside help.

There are many antismoking clinics throughout the country (see box) that conduct group-therapy sessions and have had some success in getting smokers to quit, but their methods vary. Some treatment centers believe in gradual tapering off; some favor quitting "cold turkey"; some use aversion techniques, which involve overdosing the smoker with smoke until cigarettes become repulsive, or giving the smoker an electric shock with each puff, or a substance that produces nausea or a bad taste when smoking.

sadness with each other and that felt better.

But I was wrong about one thing. We weren't really alone at all. There were plenty of people who could have helped — if we had only asked. We didn't know then that we had no reason to feel ashamed or guilty about our parents' alcoholism. It wasn't our fault that they drank... and it really wasn't their fault either. They were sick with the disease of alcoholism. They did not mean to hurt us.

Despite everything, I still loved my parents very much. If I hadn't, the whole thing would not have hurt so much. When I went away to college, I worried about them all the time. I was constantly afraid they would die.

Just before I graduated from college, I got bad news from home. My dad had lost his job. Next I heard that he had gone into a severe depression, then gotten terribly sick and nearly died in the hospital. The only thing that wasn't mentioned was the cause of his depression and his sickness: advanced alcoholism. It was still a dirty, unspoken word in our family!

To get another job, my dad and mom had to move back across the country again. I had my own job by then and I only saw them once or twice a year. Each time they were drunk and sicker than the time before. I still did not like to bring my friends to their home, but on one trip, I brought my boyfriend to meet my parents. I was so humiliated and horrified at what he saw during that visit! I made the decision that I would never allow myself to be hurt that way again.

Without knowing it, I was probably doing the best thing I could have done. I was beginning to "let go" of my parents emotionally. I stopped thinking and worrying about them all the time. I was finally giving up on the idea that I could save them, control them or make them quit drinking.

At the age of 22, I had finally decided to stop letting my parents' alcoholism — my "dirty secret" — ruin my life.

Unfortunately, by then, I had another problem that was about to ruin my life: my own alcoholism.

How did you react when you read that last sentence? Did you think I had to be stupid to become an alcoholic after watching my parents drink all those years? Did you wonder how somebody could be an alcoholic at 22? Or maybe you're just confused about why — and how — I'm writing this if I'm just another drunk.

Maybe this would be a good time to clear up some misunderstandings about alcoholism. It is not a dirty secret. It is a very common disease, like diabetes. It can affect people of all ages, but it does get worse the longer you have it, if you keep drinking. There is no cure for it, but you can recover from it by not drinking anymore. That sounds simple, but for an alcoholic it is the hardest thing in the world to do.

Alcoholics drink too much — not because they are bad people, or because they hate their children or because they are stupid. They drink because they have an illness that makes their bodies and minds crave alcohol. The strange thing about alcoholism is that people who have it desperately want to believe that there is nothing wrong with their drinking. That is why parents will sometimes become furious if their children mention alcoholism or ask them why they drink so much. Denial — refusing to admit that there is anything wrong — is a major symptom of alcoholism.

And now I'm going to say something that might sound strange to you. Every person in an alcoholic's family suffers from the disease, even without ever taking a drink. Just living in an alcoholic's home — the type of home where fear and anger and shame are everyday facts of life — this alone can make a person feel sick. Your emotions and feelings can get so confused and miserable that you can develop unhealthy ways of thinking and acting. Sometimes these feelings can make your body feel sick, too, with stomachaches, headaches or other physical troubles. Most of all, living with an alcoholic parent can cause you to feel lousy about yourself and this can lead to serious trouble.

For me, it led to becoming an alcoholic. But that didn't happen overnight. The trouble started inside of me when I was very young — long before I admitted anything was wrong.

Remember how I said I hated even the word alcoholism and never wanted to talk to anyone about my parents' drinking or my own feelings? Well, I was doing the same thing my parents were doing: I was playing the game of denial.

Even as a little kid, I wanted to believe I had everything under control. I even thought I could control my parents' drinking by watching how much they drank. I tried to make everything run smoothly in the house so they wouldn't have to drink. I didn't know then that no one can control an alcoholic's drinking — including the alcoholic. I thought my parents needed me to take care of them and make sure they didn't hurt themselves. I was trying to be my parents' parent! But I was still a kid and I needed someone to hold me when I felt hurt.

When I was still in grade school, I tried to impress my friends by shoplifting. I stole from my parents, too. Maybe I was trying to get them to "give" me something (like love and attention) and since booze made them unable to do that, I decided to take things from them.

I also stole sleeping pills and tranquilizers from the medicine cabinet. Like a lot of alcoholics, my mom was hooked on those, too. She never seemed to miss them so I stole enough for me and my friends. I thought getting high on pills made me look cool.

When I was 11, I tried drinking. The stuff tasted terrible and burned my throat. But I liked the feeling it gave me. It made me feel giddy and grown-up. I thought I was more popular with the other kids when I drank. I certainly never imagined that I could become an alcoholic. I had sworn never to be like my parents. I didn't think my drinking was anything like my parents' drinking. They seemed miserable when they drank. I thought I was having fun.

This story is for, and about, children whose parents have drinking problems. But there are no age limits set by the word "children." I am one of those children and I am 26. Other children may be middle-aged and have children of their own! We all share some common feelings and problems. We can help ourselves and each other by talking about them.

About 20 million children and teenagers in the United States today are suffering the pain of feeling alone, feeling to blame and feeling helpless and hopeless about their parents' drinking.

Are you one of them? The answer to that question does not depend on whether your mother or father thinks that she or he has a drinking problem. That's not the point. The important thing is how you feel and what you can do about that.

So first, check to see whether any of these feelings sound familiar:

1. Do you worry about your mom's or dad's drinking?

2. Do you sometimes feel that you are the reason your parent drinks so much?

3. Are you ashamed to have your friends come to your house and are you finding more and more excuses to stay away from home?

4. Do you sometimes feel that you hate your parents when they are drinking and then feel guilty for hating them?

5. Have you been watching how much your parent drinks?

6. Do you try to make your parents happy so they won't get upset and drink more?

7. Do you feel you can't talk about the drinking in your home — or even how you feel inside?

8. Do you sometimes drink or take drugs to forget about things at home?

9. Do you feel if your parents really loved you they wouldn't drink so much?

10. Do you sometimes wish you had never been born?

No matter how many of your answers were "yes," there's really just one more, very important question you need to ask yourself: Do you want to start feeling better? If so, reading this will help. I have written it because, at one time, I would have answered "yes" to every one of those questions.

Lots of people — most in fact — are able to drink and it never becomes a problem.

Yet, an awful lot of children of alcoholics try to find answers and comfort in booze. Experts say kids with family histories have a much higher risk of eventually becoming alcoholics themselves.

There is no reason to think you will become an alcoholic just because your parent is one. But whether or not we decide to drink, we kids of alcoholics need to take a good look at what is going on around us and inside of us and ask for help when we need it.

KINDNESS FOR CURLS

To dry curls without blowing away the bounce, Clairol has designed a Quartz Dryer that combines heat with a gentle air flow in a light, compact unit for hand styling. Available in August, the new dryer will retail at $36.99.

SUMMER HAIR CARE FROM THE NEAR EAST

Shampoo frequently with a mild shampoo to avoid the dull, straggly and limp look that summer dust and pollutants can cause.

The juice of one lemon squeezed onto the hair, combed through, then dried in the sun will give you a headful of shimmering highlights... naturally.

Oily hair should be dried in the sun after shampoos. The heat of the sun dries excess oils and leaves hair more manageable.

LANCOME'S COLOR MAGIC

When does any woman look better than at the moment when the sun touches the horizon, bathing her face in rich color tones suffused with gold? Lancome recreates that moment with Twilight, a collection of spectacular peaches, fiery pinks and warm golds. OPIUM'S BROTHER SCENT

Yves St. Laurent's "Kouros" (which means young demigod) had its inception in Greece. St. Laurent was so inspired by the colors of sea and sky — the luminous quality of the air, and the beauty of ancient Greek sculpture — that he wanted to recreate the feel of Greece in a new fragrance. Kouros has a more complicated blend of scents than most men's products, including rose, vanilla, patchouli and tarragon, and comes as an eau de toilette, after-shave lotion, shaving foam, deodorant and soap. With prices ranging from $20-$50, it is among the highest priced men's fragrances on the market.

EXCEPTIONAL SKIN CARE

Revlon has a new beauty cream and lotion out: European Collagen Complex. Developed in Europe, where women traditionally get the best in skin care, and presented in this country in February, the product was tested on women in Paris, Copenhagen, Rome, Geneva, London and Brussels. It has been described as beautifully effective, without being greasy; smooth, soft, and glowing. Revlon's ECC Exceptional Beauty Cream is available in 1 1/8 oz. jars for $6.50 and in 3 oz. jars for $9.50. The lotion comes in 1 7/8 oz. bottles for $6.50 and a 4 oz. size at $9.50.

water
1¼ cups milk
1 3½- or 3¾-ounce package instant vanilla pudding mix
1 cup heavy or whipping cream
1 teaspoon almond extract
1 pint blueberries

ABOUT 3 HOURS BEFORE SERVING OR EARLY IN DAY:

Preheat oven to 325F. In large bowl with wooden spoon, stir cake mix with amount of water and eggs as label directs until just mixed. Then with same spoon, beat mixture 450 strokes. (Using mixer will increase volume slightly and may cause batter to run over pan when baking.) Pour batter into a Bundt pan pan or 9" by 9" baking pan. Bake 50 minutes to 1 hour until toothpick inserted in center of cake comes out clean. Cool cake in pan 15 minutes; invert cake onto wire rack to cool completely.

When cake is cool, in large bowl with mixer at low speed, beat milk and instant vanilla pudding mix until thickened, about 2 minutes. In small bowl, with mixer at medium speed, beat cream until stiff peaks form. Gently fold whipped cream and almond extract into pudding mixture.

Place cake, indented-side up, on dessert plate (if cake is baked in 9" by 9" baking pan, place cake top-side up). Spoon cream mixture onto top of cake; refrigerate until slightly firm, about 30 minutes. Pat blueberries on cream mixture. Refrigerate. Makes 10 servings.

3. In large bowl with wooden spoon or mixer at medium speed, beat 1½ quarts vanilla ice cream until very soft and of thick-batter consistency but still frozen; stir in 2 cups walnut mixture.

4. Spoon some of vanilla ice-cream mixture into tube pan to make 1-inch layer. Top with half of raspberry, orange and pistachio balls, alternating them in pan. Spoon remaining vanilla ice-cream mixture over balls. Return pan to freezer.

ABOUT 2 HOURS BEFORE SERVING:

PLANTS IN THE HOME

By ELVIN McDONALD

Q. How come my wax begonias have long, straggly stems with dead leaves at the bottom and pale small blooms at the top? A year ago when I bought them for my window boxes in the shade they were sturdy, compact bushes covered with bright flowers, each an inch across.

A. A facelift is what your begonias need! Cut back all stems to two inches and repot, first crumbling away half or more of the old soil and trimming off a third or so of the longest roots. Use a mix of equal parts soil, peat moss and sand or perlite. Set to grow in as much light as possible; take care to keep the soil moist, never soggy or bone-dry.

This measure may seem drastic but it is actually the easiest way to rejuvenate these everbloomers. Allow about four weeks of good growing weather for new basal growth to produce a vigorous, attractive, flower-covered specimen. It's hard to resist rooting all the tip cuttings one removes when pruning back a Begonia semperflorens; unfortunately they tend not to branch. Of course, you could also start over with seeds or seedlings and compost the ones that seem bloomed-out.

Any plant that blooms all the time needs one season out of four to recuperate. Give it some fresh soil, perhaps a larger pot, prune the roots and tops. Often this treatment is preceded by a three-month period of reduced light, cooler temperatures (or extremely hot, as the case may be), less water and no fertilizer.

Wax begonias, geraniums and African violets bloom all year in my apartment garden, some in sunny windows, others in shelf gardens illuminated entirely by ordinary fluorescent tubes. Such eager growers just naturally require more grooming than the leafy likes of aspidistra and dracaena — but get in the habit of keeping dead leaves and flowers picked from your plants and I guarantee you'll feel better. No matter whether I'm up or down, there's something so calming about working with plants that even a few minutes spent looking after their needs invariably improves my state of mind.

Q. I've had a magnificent Kafir lily for six years. The past three it has blossomed with the flowers at the base of the foliage. What happened to the stalk of the flower?

A. My clivia did the same thing so I put it in a dark closet for ten days until the stalk grew up several inches, "stretching" for light. More recently I asked a leading authority on this and other amaryllids. He says it is a genetic weakness and that in his breeding work, if a seedling flowers without a good stem, he discards it.

However, I'm not convinced this is necessarily true; your clivia makes a good case in point since it first bloomed several years with a proper stalk. At least where our clivias are concerned I have a notion the problem lies in erratic temperatures and watering practices during the lean season of semidormancy required before blooming.

For 12 million viewers, Anthony Geary and Genie Francis of General Hospital are the Rhett and Scarlett of daytime TV. But life as soap opera stars, they say, can be anything but bubbly

Luke & Laura

LUKE

By Jane Ardmore

Luke Spencer is a street person, a survivor at anyone's expense, a guy with a shady background who can be shrewd, nasty and outrageous. He's capable of outbursts of violence and moments of extreme tenderness and posesses a heart that is easily touched by beautiful women. He certainly can't be described as classically handsome but millions of female viewers agree that he's the sexiest man on daytime TV. As the fictional Luke, scoundrel-hero of the daytime drama "General Hospital," actor Anthony Geary has created a complex character that is suprisingly different from his own personality.

Tony Geary is a gentle, sensitive, intelligent, and extremely shy man who came to Hollywood at 18, straight from the University of Utah, where he'd been studying theater on a Presidential Award Scholarship. Now 33, he thinks the choice of acting as a career grew partly out of his Mormon upbringing.

"The Mormon Church is very involved in the performing arts," Tony Geary says with a shy smile. "In fact, my first stage appearance was as Mr. Sandman when I was 6."

Growing up in Coalville, Utah (population: 800) also fueled his interest in performing. "That was a very small town," says Tony. "I was totally involved in fantasy. There was only one theatre in Coalville — The Loma. They ran one feature every week, usually a very old one. I saw them all. I was also a TV baby. I couldn't (and still can't) sleep without the television on. Show business had to be my life!"

It was quite a jump from Mr. Sandman to being handpicked by veteran actor Jack Albertson to portray his son in the play "The Subject Was Roses." Jack not only chose Tony for the part, he lured him away from school to go on the road with the play — an auspicious beginning for someone with no professional experience. Tony was 17 at the time, had never been out of Utah without his parents, and hadn't strayed far from the little mountain community of Coalville except to attend the university. Jack Albertson eventually became Tony's mentor and substitute father figure.

When "The Subject Was Roses" opened at the Huntington Hartford Theatre in Los Angeles, Tony Geary saw his name on the marquee and, he says, "I knew I'd never go back to Coalville." The reviews were excellent and he was signed by Jack Albertson's agent. Casting calls came for films but he didn't work for two years because, "I was shy, retiring and naive, not in the least prepared to sell myself. What I did was return to the stage and spend time in summer stock.

"To survive in this business, an actor must learn to live with rejection constantly, and no matter what anyone says, you take it personally. In a way I'm lucky. Had I been totally secure and able to sell myself, able to handle those interviews for parts, I might have become the boy-next-door and been stuck forever with that juvenile image. Once I got over being the young actor, I began to understand the game of interviewing."

And he began to get work in television — but not the kinds of roles he preferred. "I was constantly playing drug addicts, crazies and murderers," Tony remembers. "Jack Albertson had said to me once, 'Tony, I have the feeling you're going to play a lot of heavies in your life. Just remember when you do those roles, that the scariest, most threatening people are not the ones who would twirl their moustaches. They're the ones who believe with all their hearts and souls that they are doing the right thing.' "

Jack Albertson's prescient advice was valuable to the novice actor. Tony Geary was, for some years, cast as every possible neurotic character. His first appearance on television was in the series "Dan August," as a placard-carrying hippie who yelled at the president, "Legalize marijuana, and I'll vote for you." He was on "Room 222," "Streets of San Francisco," "All in the Family" and 50 other prime-time television shows. Once, when he called home, he asked his grandmother if she'd seen him in his latest show. "Honey," she replied, "I couldn't watch you slash someone's throat one more time."

When in 1979, he became Luke Spencer on "General Hospital" and his life changed. "It's great to be in a hit," he says. "I've closed a lot of theaters in my comparatively short career, and I was fairly anonymous on screen."

"General Hospital," because of the stormy relationship between Luke and his love, Laura, played by Genie Francis, began to attract an enormous following among students. Fan mail came pouring in and Tony enlisted help from his family in answering it. "My sister handles the mail and sends packets of letters she wants me to see personally. It's amazing how involved people can get and how hungry they are for more."

When his star started rising, requests for press interviews and talk shows increased — appearances that were not easy for the introverted Mr. Geary. "I found that the easiest thing for me to do in an interview was to be Luke," says Tony. "For the past two years I've spent more time as Luke than I have as Tony. He's a very specific facet of my life and personality. I found that I could talk to people and, when I was having trouble, Luke could talk. He's a bit abrasive. That was lovely because after a short time, I found I didn't need him any more."

There are, in fact, some aspects of Luke's life that Tony believes he couldn't have handled if put in the same situation. One example was a controversial rape scene during an episode of "GH," in which Luke took his desire for Laura too far. "The scene took place in a disco," Tony explains. "It was late at night, Luke was drunk and he confessed his love to Laura. He begged her to leave with him, she refused and he pleaded wth her just to dance wth him. It just went too far. When it was over, he crumpled to the floor. I believe if I had been in Luke's place, I might easily have walked into the next room and put a gun to my head. He had defiled, with an act of violence, the only pure thing he had ever touched."

He seems to enjoy his popularity with soap opera addicts, but when it comes to real friends, he's something of a loner. "A lot of friendships have bitten the dust in the last two years," Tony says, "mostly because my time is so short and they don't understand that. People who care about me understand my life, but there's not really time to foster new relationships or nurture old ones."

With one succinct statement, Tony defines his existence. "I'm not here on earth to win a Nobel prize or to make babies; I'm here to work as an actor." And that's precisely what he is doing.■

LAURA

She's been a murderer, an adultress, and a runaway. She married her childhood sweetheart, fell in love with a man who raped her and then got involved in an underworld plot with jewel thieves — all in front of 12 million people. As Laura Baldwin on ABC's "General Hospital," 19-year-old actress Genie Francis grew up with the trials and schemes of her soap opera character. At the age of 14, Genie joined the show and five years later she is being hailed by fans and critics as the new princess of daytime TV.

Twenty-four hours after filming an episode of "General Hospital" in which heartthrob Luke Spencer confessed his love to Laura Baldwin and asked her to marry him — a plot twist that will undoubtedly boost the show's already staggering ratings — Genie Francis sits down to discuss how little she has in common with her onscreen character.

"I'm not in the least like Laura," says Genie, with a glowing smile. "Laura is very much the passive female. She'll sit and wait for the phone to ring. I won't."

Laura passive? Isn't this the character who, at the age of 16, murdered her lover when he confessed he was dating her mother? "True," says Genie with giggle, "but Laura is someone who lets things happen rather than initiating them. Her mom (played by Denise Alexander) took the rap on that shooting, then eventually Laura had to come around to admitting it. It was awful! Every day for a year, I'd have to say, 'What if I have to go to reform school?' "

During that period, Genie says, her "story line" as Laura reached a dead end. Her character was put on "probation" for a year, meaning that if the writers couldn't come up with something interesting to keep viewers tuning in to see what happened to Laura Baldwin, she would be written out. The writers hit the jackpot.

"My part on 'General Hospital' zoomed to a high point when Laura got raped by Luke Spencer," says Genie. "She's been in love with Luke ever since."

The controversial rape-seduction scene between Luke and Laura happened last summer — when vacationing teen-agers were tuning in to soaps — and the ratings soared. It proved to be a turning point for "General Hospital" and for Genie Francis.

"They were looking for a story line for me," says Genie, "but I'm grateful to Gloria Monty (the producer) for the good taste with which the story of Luke and Laura was developed."

The producers and sponsors wanted a teenage audience for "General Hospital" and they got it. Within a year, the show was at the top of the all-important ratings, where it has remained. Fan mail from high school and college students floods in to Genie and her co-star Tony Geary.

"Soap operas are addictive," Genie explains. "They deal with human relationships and the characters become very real to the viewer. There's always a cliffhanger luring you to tune back in."

Laura Baldwin's life has taken dramatic twists and turns since she joined the cast of characters on "GH" in 1977 but most of Genie Francis' life has been centered around one thing — acting.

As the daughter of veteran actor Ivor Francis, Genie remembers sitting in her father's lap helping him study lines from a script. "We'd be reading along," she remembers, "and he'd say, 'Now underline all the operative words.' Those are the words you emphasize in a sentence. That's how I learned. Acting's been a part of my soul from the beginning. My first acting job was on 'Family' when I was in the ninth grade. I went up to the director and told him, 'This is my first job, but if you'll just be patient, I know I can do it.' "

Three months later she was on "GH." Her role as Laura was small at that time. Laura was a quiet girl and Genie had only about nine pages of dialogue a day and appeared on two episodes per week. She continued her education with a private tutor on the set and was allowed a certain number of working hours each day. When she turned 18, the tutoring ended, the restrictions were lifted and now Genie is seen on almost every episode, sometimes learning 40 pages of dialogue a day.

She admits being a little bitter about starting her career so early. "I had to sacrifice my childhood to get where I am today. My growing up and schooling took place here on the set. My best friends are all adults and the few dates I've had have been with actors considerably older than I." But she insists that no one pushed her into a career. Her mother, Rosemary, a former actress and model, and her father did not want their little girl to be a professional actress at such a young age but have been supportive in her choice to continue acting.

"I've grown up on the show and all my friends have been over and above 30," says Genie. "So at 15 and 16, I was lonely. I wasn't always able to fit into their world, but I couldn't fit into my own either. I couldn't go back to high school. I was terribly, terribly lonely, but I never thought of quitting.

"For a while, I was bitter about missing out on things, but then I had to stop and think about it honestly. I talked to my mom and dad and then I remember going to someone's 'Sweet 16' party. I came home very early, and Dad said, 'I thought you went to a party?' And I said, 'I got bored.' 'You see,' my dad said, 'you haven't missed anything after all.' "

Now Genie is thinking of branching out a little. "I'm very interested in psychology," she says. "I especially love children and the field of special education. I took a class last semester at Los Angeles City College and would like to continue, but our shooting schedule is too rough right now. I'm also interested in journalism and in directing. I've always liked writing, and being a reporter on a news station would be something I'd really like to do."

But acting is her first love. When she first started on "General Hospital," she attended an acting class taught by her father at UCLA. There was one day when, to her dismay, Genie discovered she couldn't cry on cue. "What's the matter?" she asked her father. "I've always been able to cry just by thinking of something sad." Her dad explained that this was the reason for acting classes. "You're learning to deal with an instrument," he explained. "You touch the instrument as you would a piano, but it's not always in tune." Now she can cry on demand — and soap opera acting calls for frequent teary breakdowns.

She made another big transition recently when she moved into her own condominium in Los Angeles. (She also has a house in the mountains for weekends.)

"I didn't move away for any reason other than that I needed more privacy," Genie explains. "My parents live in a small house and I've got two brothers, Ivor and Kenny. I wanted peace and quiet and the only thing I could do at home was go to my room and put on earphones. I needed space."

How long will Genie stay with the show? As long as she's happy, she says, she'll keep doing it. But she has a contract clause that would get her out of "GH" with six weeks' notice. That would happen if she was offered a a meaty part in a film — something she's anxious to do. Her agent is carefully helping her build a strong acting career and she might even leave "GH" for awhile, do films or other television shows and then return to the soap. As one of the hottest young actresses today, the options are just opening up for her.

A letter recently came to Genie from a student at Princeton. "Your life (as Laura)," it read, "makes my life at Princeton bearable." Obviously the chaotic goings on surrounding Luke and Laura make even harried college students aware that things could be worse. But life couldn't be better for Genie Francis.

This summer's plot lines for Luke and Laura promise to be as hot as ever and, if Genie has her way, "passive" Laura will start showing some signs of maturity.

"I'm much stronger than Laura," she emphasizes. "Not that I'm hard or cold — actually I'm more vulnerable — but I've learned not to get hurt and Laura hasn't. I don't really agree with some of the things she does. Sometimes, I'd like to tell Luke to drop dead! I think she should have more spunk." As lovely Laura's alter ego, Genie Francis has spunk to spare.■
