The truth's out: They'd rather be in Texas

DALLAS (AP) — The stereotyped Texan brags about the superiority and size of the Lone Star State.

Now the federal government has confirmed what many Texans have suspected: More people chose to make Texas home last year than any other state.

The U.S. Census Bureau's most recent count shows Texas passed perennial front-runner California in absolute growth in 1980-81 — the first time the state has outgrown its western rival since 1972.

"If Texas moved ahead, it is much more a statement about Texas than it is about California," said Steve Levy of the Center for Continuing Study of the California Economy. "It must mean that Texas is right up there with California in production of new jobs."

The Census Bureau figures show Texas grew by 445,000 people and California by 425,000. California is still the nation's most populous state with 24.2 million and Texas continues to rank third with 14.8 million, behind New York's 17 million.

Texas took the growth lead even though California continued to experience healthy economic growth and received a large number of East Asian immigrants, the state's population experts say.

Despite record-high housing costs in California, Levy said the state was still benefiting from a "reasonably steady rate of economic growth."

Texas' 27 percent growth rate between 1970 and 1980 outstripped both California and New York, but lagged behind other states, including Nevada, Florida, Arizona and Wyoming.

Experts on national population shifts tend to attribute Texas' recent surge in absolute growth to increased migration from North Central and Northeastern states. But they say they cannot be sure until they determine the extent of the state's natural growth — a figure that is arrived at by subtracting deaths from births.

The experts also point out that natural growth can be a product of migration.

"Some of the births, no doubt, would be by people recently moving to the state, since the ages of most migrants put them in prime reproductive years," said Larry Long of the Census Bureau's Center for Demographic Studies.

Dr. Bernard Weinstein, a professor of economics at the University of Texas at Dallas who was written extensively on migration, estimates that as much as 60 percent of the state's population gain could come from migration.

British troops still pushing to Stanley

By The Associated Press

British troops were driving toward the heavily defended Falkland Islands capital of Stanley today, where the Argentine garrison came under punishing bombardments Sunday from the air and sea. Argentina said its warplanes may have knocked out the aircraft carrier Invincible but Britain denied it.

Britain acknowledged an attack was "attempted" on the 100-ship fleet, but denied any ships were hit. Officials in London said one Argentine Skyhawk was probably shot down by a destroyer.

British military sources said Sunday's bombardment by 4.5-inch naval guns and Harrier jets was the most punishing of the campaign so far and was aimed at softening up the Argentine garrison, estimated at 7,000 troops, defending the Falklands capital.

Argentina said two Harriers were downed by anti-aircraft fire and a third was damaged. The British had no comment on the claim.

An Argentine military communique said Super Etendard fighter bombers carrying Exocet missiles and Skyhawk jets with "high-powered bombs" hit an "aircraft carrier-type ship" and it was put out of action "because of the grave damage it received."

Brig. Gen. Basilio Lami Dozo, member of the ruling junta and air force commander-in-chief, told reporters that pilots said they saw "smoke and flames and internal explosions" aboard the ship. He said "we hope to be able to verify whether it was or was not the Invincible or some other aircraft carrier."

Argentine news agencies said the ship was the Invincible, one of two in the battle group, along with the Hermes. Prince Andrew, second in line to the British throne, is a helicopter pilot aboard the Invincible.

The British Defense Ministry said in a statement: "A number of Argentine naval aircraft attempted to attack the carrier battle group this afternoon. None of the ships was hit. One Skyhawk was believed to be shot down by an escorting destroyer."

Meanwhile, Royal Marines and paratroopers advanced by helicopter to within 22 miles of Stanley in the northern arm of a pincer drive on the capital. The troops reported the capture Saturday of the Douglas and Teal Inlet settlements northwest of Stanley. They said Argentine forces abandoned the outposts, apparently falling back to the defensive lines around the capital.

Advancing from the southwest along the coast are the 600 paratroopers who overran Argentine garrisons at Darwin and Goose Green in a 14-hour battle Friday.

Lead elements of the British assault force are expected to run up against the first line of Argentine defenses around the capital within 24 hours, said British military sources who declined to be identified.

"Stanley is going to be a hard nut to crack," one of the military experts said. "The toughest fighting has yet to come if the Argentines choose to slug it out."

British press reports speculated that the attack could be less than 48 hours away. But military analysts in London said with the British force outnumbered about 2,000 men, the assault may be delayed until assault ships land the 3,000 troops ferried to the war zone by the liner Queen Elizabeth 2.

Levelland home leveled

Neighbors Manuel Martinez, left, and Jerry Flores remove household goods from the debris of a Levelland, Texas, home destroyed in an explosion Saturday. A child was killed and 11 persons were injured when a natural gas line exploded. The home was filled with family members gathered to celebrate Memorial Day weekend.

Explosions traced to uncapped pipe

LEVELLAND, Texas (AP) — Two deadly natural gas explosions in a newly rented house were caused by gas from an uncapped pipe that had not been used in two decades, the owner of the house says.

The fiery blasts destroyed the house, killed a child, and injured 11 people who were spending the Memorial Day weekend together.

Carroll Peck said Sunday he had told his new tenant, Rudy Zamora, that the three-bedroom brick home was all-electric when he rented it.

"I'm at a loss to explain the gas," Peck said. "It's just flabbergasted me."

Zamora, a 28-year-old U.S. Postal Service employee, and his family had moved into the house only two days before the explosion that ripped it apart Saturday, said Baltazar Padilla, who lives next door.

Ten people remained hospitalized Sunday, three of them in critical condition, with burns from the blast in this South Plains city about 30 miles west of Lubbock.

Hospital officials said the burns covered from 6 percent to 50 percent of the victims' bodies.

The dead child was identified as 3-year-old Martin Zamora Jr.

Padilla said workers from Energas Co. had installed a gas meter Wednesday so the Zamoras could hook up their gas range.

"My understanding is that after they installed the meter, they turned on the gas, found a leak and turned it back off," he said. "I don't know if it was turned back on or what.

"The gas lines went to old space heater outlets and into the kitchen, but after they converted to electricity they didn't bother to seal the lines," he said.

He said he had checked the condition of the house because at one time he had been interested in buying it.

Energas Co. officials could not be reached for comment.

Fireman Bill Pharis said investigators discovered the open half-inch gas line when firefighters heard the sound of a leak during a pressure test after the explosions.

Investigators chopped through the kitchen floor near an electric water heater and found that "the cap had been unscrewed. It was just off," he said.

Pharis said officials were unsure how the gas was ignited.

"But anything could have touched it off," he said. "It could have been the water heater turning on, or someone lighting a cigarette or even flipping a light switch."

The force of the 9 a.m. blast hurled some of the victims out of the house and shook homes in a three-block radius, said Assistant Fire Chief Jeff Scott.

"We were still in bed.... We just heard a loud boom. At first I thought it was a bolt of lightning right outside the window, it was so loud. It blew glass all over us," said Padilla, 24.

"We ran outside and the saw the brick home completely blown all out. The walls were all down and people were laying outside," he said.

Witnesses said the first blast lifted the roof off the house and it settled back onto the interior walls that were left standing. Neighbors rushed to pull survivors from the house before a second smaller explosion touched off a large fire inside, Pharis said.

A plate glass window of the house was hurled so forcefully into a car 35 feet away that "if anybody had been sitting in it, he would have been decapitated," Pharis said.

The victims were members of the Paul Leyja family from Frederick, Okla.; the Martin Zamora family from Bay City, Texas; and the Rudy Zamora family from Levelland.

Motel guest dies, others hospitalized in Odessa

ODESSA — One person died and 13 others were hospitalized after being overcome by carbon monoxide poisoning at an Odessa motel Sunday, Odessa police said.

According to Lt. Rusty Baker of the Odessa Police Department, the first call to the emergency medical service was made at 8:40 a.m. in reference to a possible death at the Imperial Motel, 221 W. 2nd St. When medics reached Room 219, they discovered the body of Bernice Connery, 27, of Midlothian.

Ms. Connery was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Jimmy Harris, who immediately ordered an autopsy.

Investigators also discovered a black male who was showing symptoms of dizziness, vomiting, headaches, earaches, intestinal pain and incoherence.

He was taken to Odessa Medical Center where he was listed in critical condition.

At 10:45 a.m., emergency medical service personnel were called back to the Imperial Motel, this time to Room 118. They found three persons exhibiting the same symptoms. They were taken to Odessa Medical Center and police investigators returned to the motel where, after an extensive search, 11 more people were found with the same symptoms.

The cause was determined to be carbon monoxide poisoning due to a faulty vent on the hot water heater at the motel, Lt. Baker said.

After a request by the fire marshal, the manager closed the motel.

Baker said that a total of 16 people were treated and 13 were admitted to Odessa Medical Center. Two persons remain in critical condition, while the others were listed in stable condition early this morning, he said.

The victims range in age from 4 years old to 39.

Man killed in shooting

Charges are expected to be filed Tuesday against a 40-year-old Midland man who turned himself in following the shooting death Sunday night of a 35-year-old Midlander.

According to police, John Postert, 35, of Midland, was pronounced dead at at the scene at about 8 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Bob Pine. Police said Postert was shot several times by an acquaintance of his ex-wife. The shooting occurred in front of De Zavala Elementary School, 1101 South St.

Police said a friend of Postert's ex-wife stopped to talk to her in front of the school. Postert pulled up behind the man's pickup and rammed it with his pickup. Postert then allegedly got out of the truck and grabbed a tire tool, police said.

Postert approached his ex-wife's friend, who then allegedly shot Postert several times with a .45-caliber gun, police said.

The suspect left the scene on foot, but later turned himself in to police.

Pope John Paul II ordains priests during tour of England

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — Pope John Paul II ordained a dozen priests today at a Mass for 200,000 people on the fourth day of his historic British pilgrimage, a day which was to take him later to potential trouble spots in heavily Protestant Scotland.

Police estimated 80,000 of the crowd at Manchester's Heaton Park had camped overnight to see the pontiff, in gold mitre, accept the new priests' vows and urge them not to forget "those who are in need, especially those who are in prison."

Departing from his prepared remarks, John Paul recalled that Christ loved prisoners, too.

"He did not specify whether they were innocent or guilty," the pontiff said. "Remember you represent Christ and no one can be excluded from your ministry."

The throng that waved Polish and papal flags to welcome John Paul was far smaller than expected. Organizers had said they were prepared for up to one million people.

Manchester police reported five arrests but no demonstrations, and the crowd was enthusiastic.

"It's the event of a lifetime," said Peter Dolan, 60, a Manchester businessman. "In my youth, you went to Rome to have an audience with the pope if you could. Now, the pope comes to us."

Earlier today, John Paul continued the ecumenical theme of his British visit by meeting in Manchester with Britain's chief rabbi, Sir Immanuel Jakobovits, and other Jewish leaders.

The Polish-born Pope, who as a student in Krakow helped save Jewish families from the Nazis, greeted the leaders with "Shalom" — Hebrew for "peace" — and said, "I wish to reiterate the full respect of the Christian church to the Jewish people."

Jakobovits told the pontiff, "Your visit to this country, although officially of a pastoral nature, is an historic event of significance far beyond our Catholic friends."

Later in the day, the pope arrived at York where he planned to denounce the "negative phenomena" undermining Christian family life. In a homily prepared for delivery at an open-air prayer service, he specifically attacked the rising divorce rate, the "scourge of abortion" and "the spread of a contraceptive and anti-life mentality."

He urged married couples to make their love "the rock that stands firm in the face of every storm and temptation" and invited them to "renew the promises you first made on your wedding day."

Afterward the pope was to travel to Edinburgh at the beginning of a Scottish swing.

Scotland is a Presbyterian stronghold, and the Rev. Ian Paisley, the Presbyterian militant from Northern Ireland, promised to rally anti-Catholic Scots to protest the pope's visit. But so far Paisley's demonstrations have had no noticeable impact on the enthusiastic greeting accorded the 62-year-old pontiff.

On Sunday, Paisley mustered about 50 Protestants to wave Bibles and yell "anti-Christ" as the pope drove through a slum district of Liverpool. But they were lost amid the 200,000 to 250,000 cheering people who greeted the pope at the airport and lined his route through the city.

Paisley was taken away in a police car "for his own safety," a police spokesman said, and three of his supporters were arrested "offenses to public order."

Liverpool has Britain's largest Catholic community, nearly half the 510,000 population. But the pope also received a prolonged ovation in the city's huge Anglican cathedral where Archbishop Robert Runcie of Canterbury was shouted down in March by militant Protestants angered by his invitation to the pope.

Hot, sunny days will continue

The hot and sunny afternoons of Memorial Day weekend will continue through Tuesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

It will be fair tonight with the lows dropping into the upper 50s. Tuesday's high is expected to reach into the middle 80s.

Tonight's easterly 5-10 mph winds will shift to southeasterly at 10-15 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 96 was five degrees below the record high of 101, set for that date in 1977. The overnight low of 60 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 45, set in 1937.

Weekend shooting incident investigated by local police

Midland police had a busy Memorial Day weekend, investigating a shooting, a stabbing and two rapes.

Fausto Betancourt, 27, of 807½ N. Weatherford, was listed in serious condition in Midland Memorial Hospital this morning following a shooting incident at 5 p.m. Sunday. According to police, the shooting was the result of a domestic disturbance and no charges are expected to be filed in the case.

Fidel Villa, 23, of 1300 Cotton Flat Road, was admitted to MMH after he was stabbed outside a bar at 1:13 a.m. Villa was later released from MMH following treatment. The stabbing occurred after an argument over a long-standing feud, police said. No charges were filed.

According to the Midland County Sheriff's Department, a 20-year-old woman was raped in West Midland County. The rape victim was treated and released at MMH. A suspect has been taken into custody and the investigation is continuing.

In a separate case, sheriff's deputies are investigating the rape of a 13-year-old, who also was treated and released at MMH. Details of that case are not being released, but the investigation is continuing.

TI to give away 50 flights as new service promotion

Texas International Airlines announced today it will give away 50 free round-trip tickets Tuesday from Midland to any of 47 Continental Airlines destinations to people who dress up in a costume depicting where they want to go.

Winners will be determined by a drawing and they may select from any of the cities Continental serves in the mainland U.S or Mexico, reachable from Midland via Texas International to Houston, Denver or El Paso.

The contest is to call attention to TI's "Continental Shuttle," a new service beginning Tuesday that brings together TI and Continental Airlines to provide the easiest and cheapest travel from Lubbock to Los Angeles, Miami, New York, San Francisco and many other U.S. cities.

"Continental Shuttle" will feature fares most often cheaper than those of other airlines, complimentary inflight cocktails and special coordinators to provide personal customer services at Houston, Denver and El Paso to assure that both passengers and baggage reach their destinations on time

Participants in the "Dress for Your Destination" promotion must come to the main lobby, terminal area, of Midland Regional Airport on Tuesday dressed in a costume depicting the city to which they want to travel. They may receive an entry number between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. and the drawing for the 50 seats will be at 1 p.m.

The tickets are good for round-trip travel on a standby, space-available basis through July 31, except during the holiday blackout period of July 2 through 5.

Over 200 traffic deaths reported

By The Associated Press

As of press time, officials had reported at least 213 deaths in Memorial Day weekend traffic accidents on the nation's streets and highways.

The three-day holiday period, marking the start of heavy summer vacation travel with children out of school, opened at 6 p.m. Friday and will end at midnight tonight.

The National Safety Council estimated that between 400 and 500 people would die in traffic-related accidents. There were 378 traffic deaths last Memorial Day.

On a non-holiday weekend this time of year, the council estimated there could be as many as 420 deaths. It varies little from the holiday period because of the general increase in road travel as summer approaches.

Endangered Species Act renewal looks favorable

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Endangered Species Act, subject of bitter debate in past years, is moving toward renewal by Congress this year with few changes and little controversy.

While environmentalists had predicted major battles over industry attempts to weaken the law, committees in both the House and the Senate have approved three-year extensions for the law without major changes. The legislation could be acted upon by the two chambers by the end of June.

"We are a little surprised that the bills...are as good as they are," said Michael J. Bean, an attorney for the Environmental Defense Fund. "Some of the major industry groups had proposed major weakening amendments, but those are not reflected in either the House or the Senate bill."

Bean said environmentalists are "relatively optimistic" of final passage with no major changes in the law, which now is scheduled to expire Sept. 30.

The act's quiet slide through Congress contrasts to its last appearance on Capitol Hill, which came in the wake of the Tellico Dam fiasco. In that dispute, a multimillion-dollar dam project in Tennessee was stopped cold by the presence of a tiny but endangered fish called the snail darter.

The law at that time forbad federal agencies from taking actions that might destroy the habitat of a creature on the endangered species list.

The debacle resulted in Congress' decision in 1978 to create a special panel to review projects and allow the extinction of a species if the cost of preserving it is too high. But it also required federal agencies to work more closely with biologists to prevent threats to endangered species.

Against that background, industry lobbyists said early this year they wanted to narrow the types of species that would be eligible for protection and the degree of that protection. Environmentalists predicted a major battle over the act's renewal.

But the administration was largely silent in the debate, with the Interior and Commerce departments openly disagreeing over how the law should be changed.

And the industry amendments found little support in either the House Merchant Marine Committee or the Senate Environment Committee, with committee aides saying industry lobbyists were unable to come up with examples of any major problems caused by the law in its current form.

The panels instead opted for relatively minor streamlining changes in the law while preserving its basic framework.

Bean, the environmentalist attorney, says the legislation could easily be approved by the full House without a major floor fight. "On the Senate side, there is a somewhat greater probability of a fight," he added. "But I would say that I'm still optimistic that the Senate bill will remain intact."

Martha Pope, a member of the Senate committee staff, noted that, "historically, there always has been" a Senate fight over the act, but none has surfaced yet.

She said one reason might be that both the House and Senate committees attempted to resolve industry complaints over the act's technical requirements.

Both bills make changes to allow quicker access to the committee that reviews endangered species, and quicker decisions by that panel. The committees also removed a contradiction between two sections of the law that industry said sometimes made it imposssible to avoid breaking the law.

Reagan may keep arms limit if Soviets agree

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, back at the White House after a six-day California trip, is preparing to reassure allies that he will observe strategic arms limitation agreements with the Soviet Union if Moscow does likewise.

On the five-hour flight to the nation's capital Sunday, Reagan put the finishing touches on the speech he will deliver today at a Memorial Day observance at Arlington National Cemetery.

There were widely publicized reports last week that Reagan would use the speech to reiterate his intention to abide by the 1972 and 1979 SALT treaties, the latter of which he once called "fatally flawed."

Presidential counselor Edwin Meese III told reporters aboard Air Force One that Reagan would "make a quick point" on the treaties, but not dwell on the subject.

Meese said the speech also would focus on the president's four-nation European trip that begins Wednesday.

The president arrived at his mountaintop ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif., last Wednesday and spent his vacation studying six briefing books in preparation for his European journey, his first as president.

The president's speech culminates a review within the administration that has involved the White House, the Pentagon and the State Department.

Administration and other sources have said that although Reagan intends to announce that he'll abide by the SALT treaties, he may leave some weapons options open. But he wanted to issue a statement on the subject before his talks with European leaders begin, especially to counter concern that the administration is abandoning the restraints the treaties impose on U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons.

The 1972 agreement, which has expired, limited some offensive weapons as well as missile defenses. The 1979 agreement, never ratified by the U.S. Senate, set ceilings on U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, intercontinental ballistic missiles and multiple warheads.

In his presidential campaign, Reagan repeatedly denounced the 1979 accord, saying it was not conducive to arms control and permitted the Soviets to add at least 3,000 nuclear warheads to their inventory while the United States tried to catch up.

Earlier this month, in a speech at Eureka College in Illinois, Reagan proposed sharply reducing U.S. and Soviet missile arsenals beginning with a cutback of one-third in missile warheads to equal levels of 5,000 apiece. Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has replied to Reagan's call for negotiations to begin next month, but no date has been set.

Reagan will fly to Paris on Wednesday and then go to Versailles, site of the three-day summit, on Friday. He will travel without one item he was counting on — a congressional budget compromise that would show European leaders that his administration was dealing with economic problems.

Instead, Reagan may have only verbal promises that the United States is determined to limit U.S. budget deficits and reduce high interest rates — both items that industrial nations view as a threat to their own economic health.

The budget compromise broke down last week when the House failed to adopt a budget resolution before leaving for the Memorial Day recess.

Engineer charges reactor workers inexperienced

DALLAS (AP) — Quality controllers responsible for making sure the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant is safely built are too inexperienced to do the job, an engineering consultant warns.

In a report to the plant's owners, nuclear engineer Frederick B. Lobbin of Columbia, Md., said that the quality assurance staff is too small and inexperienced to catch potential safety problems in construction.

In a brief statement, officials of Texas Utilities Co. — whose subsidiaries own the plant — said Lobbin found no "significant breakdown in any portion of the quality assurance program for design and construction of Comanche Peak."

But the quality assurance manager for Texas Utilities Generating Co., the subsidiary responsible for building the plant, said in an internal report obtained by The Dallas Morning News that officials know the staff is inexperienced.

"We have been and continue to be actively recruiting nuclear-experienced individuals with not only design and construction, but also startup and operating backgrounds," manager Dave Chapman said.

He also said 46 site audits are scheduled for this year, compared with 21 last year, and that the nine-member audit staff will be increased to 19 by the end of the year.

The first of two atomic reactors is scheduled for completion in 1984, eight years after construction began.

U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission records show problems with the plant, which is being built about 80 miles southwest of Dallas near Glen Rose.

In 1975, Brown & Root's construction workers blasted away too much rock from the formation that the plant is being built on and the NRC reported that contrary to federal regulations, the company's "inspection procedures relative to quality control activities for the excavations...did not exist."

Last December, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers delayed approval for Brown & Root's construction work after finding problems with the company's quality assurance measures, including unauthorized parts modifications and incomplete record keeping.

Continued torrential rains reported in Hong Kong

HONG KONG (AP) — The torrential rains that killed at least 22 people in Hong Kong over the weekend also hit coastal areas of China's Guangdong province, where flooding earlier this month left 430 dead, Radio Canton reported today.

The provincial broadcast, monitored here, said the heaviest hit areas in Guangdong were Foshan and Chungshan counties near the Portuguese colony of Macao, 40 miles west of Hong Kong.

It said more than 23 inches of rain was reported in some areas between May 29 and 30, flooding nearly 100,000 acres of farmland.

No deaths were reported in Guangdong as a result of the latest storm, the radio said.

Meanwhile, torrential rains continued to lash this British colony for the third straight day, causing landslides and floodings.

The Hong Kong Observatory said today that 23.4 inches of rain fell on the colony in the past 72 hours.

International conflicts to dominate meeting

HAVANA, Cuba (AP) - Two wars, one in the South Atlantic and the other on the Iran-Iraq border, dominate the agenda of the meeting of foreign ministers of the non-aligned movement opening in Havana today.

Israel, South Africa, Afghanistan and economic relations between rich and poor nations, all recently controversial at non-aligned meetings, were also set for discussion during the five-day meeting. Cuban officials said they expect a total of at least 45 foreign ministers here by Wednesday.

They will "review and appraise the international situation" and make preparations for a non-aligned summit, scheduled to be held in Baghdad, Iraq, in September, a conference document says.

Iran's ambassador to the United Nations, Rahaie Khorassani, told The Associated Press his country would ask the foreign ministers to take the summit conference away from Iraq. Hosting the conference would automatically make Iraqi President Saddam Hussein the chairman of the non-aligned movement for the next three years, as Cuba's Fidel Castro became chairman at the 1979 summit here.

Hussein is hated in Iran, which has made his overthrow a precondition for a peaceful end to the war. Khorassani said Iran will argue that Iraq should lose the summit as punishment for its aggression against Iran and because of the security risks involved in holding a summit meeting in "a country under widespread chaos."

Conference sources said Argentina and Cuba would seek a resolution condemning Great Britain for its actions in the Falkland Islands conflict. The proposed resolution would also denounce the United States and the European Economic Community for their support for Britain in the war.

MIA's status finally revealed

MIAMI (AP) — For 16 years, the Rev. Roosevelt Hestle hoped against hope that his son, shot down in action over Vietnam, would someday return home.

Sunday, on the eve of the Memorial Day holiday when the nation honors its dead and missing in battle, the Orlando clergyman learned his son's body had been found and was to be returned to U.S.

"I cried. The tears just flowed. I felt very sad," said Hestle. "I was always hoping that someday he would be found and come home.

"I feel sad not only for myself, but for all the other families that have someone missing in action," said the pastor of the Church of God in the Lake County community of Wildwood.

Air Force Maj. Roosevelt Hestle Jr., then 38, was flying an F-105 fighter jet when he was shot down by Vietnamese gunners in July 1966.

Several days after the plane was knocked out of the air, Air Force officials knocked on the minister's door in Jacksonville, where the family then lived.

"My wife collapsed on the floor," Hestle remembered.

Ella B. Hestle died in September 1976 without ever knowing if her son had survived or died in the crash of his fighter.

"When she was sick, she spoke about him and mentioned his name often," Hestle said. "She passed away before she found out what happened to her oldest child."

The body of the younger Hestle will be returned to the U.S. in a box with those of at least three other American servicemen listed as missing in action, a delegation of war veterans was informed in Hanoi last week. The delegation from the Vietnam Veterans of America arrived in Vietnam last Friday to talk about the estimated 2,500 U.S. servicemen still listed as missing in action.

Denied right to fight, group appreciated at last

NEW YORK (AP) — The Hell Fighters from Harlem are in their 80s now and their country has started to notice them.

Denied the right to fight beside white Americans in World War I, the six surviving members of the 369th Infantry Regiment were honored Sunday at a Memorial Day ceremony in Harlem. The honorees said it was about time.

When the United States denied the regiment combat duty, France welcomed the black soldiers.

Nicknamed the Hell Fighters by the enemy, the unit was cited for bravery 11 times and won the French Croix de Guerre, the highest military honor.

"Our country sold us like slaves to the French," said Dr. Charles Turner, 87. "And we got more medals in our outfit than the whole doggone U.S. contingent put together."

In France, the Hell Fighters were treated "like first-class citizens," Turner said as he posed for photos with French Brig. Gen. Michel de Noray near a banner that read, "Harlem to the Rhine."

De Noray attended the ceremony to reaward the French medal of honor to the remaining soldiers on the 65th anniversary of American involvement in the war. "We thank them again for all they did," he said.

The Hell Fighters was the first Allied Armies regiment to reach the Rhine and the first combat regiment to arrive home and march up Fifth Avenue.

The unit spent 191 days in the trenches, longer than any other American unit, and lost 1,500 soldiers, nearly half its strength, at the battles of Champagne-Marne and Meuse-Argonne.

But it never lost a foot of ground or a single prisoner, and had 171 officers and enlisted men who were individually decorated, according to National Guard historians.

The Hell Fighters worked as stevedores before the French agreed to use them as soldiers, said Lt. Col. Nathaniel James, the regiment's current commander.

"The French, having dealt closely with African soldiers, didn't have the prejudice of Americans," James said.

Cutbacks result in burial donation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Henry Rushing learned that President Reagan's federal cutbacks had sapped money to bury indigent war veterans, he offered $9,000 to help get some of the bodies out of the county morgue.

Rushing

"It was the least I could do," said Rushing, adding that the veterans "fought for me when I was just a baby."

Maj. Robert Kingsbury, director of the county Department of Military and Veterans Affairs, said he appreciated Rushing's donation and two others that followed it: $500 from the Bakersfield Telephone Exchange and $100 from the Glendale Chapter of the Military Order of the Purple Heart.

The donations have paid for 19 burials so far. He said the county has about 35 indigent veterans a year to bury.

But without more help, he says, his agency will face the same problem next year.

The donations came after county coroner's officials complained in January that they had at least six wartime veterans in the morgue awaiting burial. The pileup was caused by the Reagan administration's cutback on Oct. 1 of funeral allowances for penniless veterans.

Kingsbury said those veterans have been buried.

"We're figuring we've got enough to take care of one year," he said. "However, unless action is taken in the Congress of the United States...we don't know what we'll be doing after next October."

The county must bury some 30 or 35 indigent veterans per year, and burial costs run $450 for casket, burial, mortician fees and transportation of each veteran's body, Kingsbury said.

Federal cuts reduced that amount to a total of $150 to buy a plot.

The cuts did not affect veterans who are on disability pension or those who are patients in Veterans Administration hospitals, Kingsbury said.

"We're talking about this group that is not involved in either one of those situations and is totally indigent," he said.

Kingsbury is confident that legislation sponsored by two California Democrats — Sen. Alan Cranston and Rep. Augustus Hawkins — will renew the funding for those veterans.

But if it does not, Rushing, 38, owner of H&H Oil Tool Co. in Santa Paula, says he is ready to make another donation.

"I'd do it again to keep them going until they get it (the federal money) — I'm sure it's going to come back in the budget," he said. "That's the first time I've ever been able to have any say in what the county or government did with my money."

Your horoscope

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, and former U.S. senator, Richard Schweiker shares this birthday with you. Also born on this date: Mormon leader Brigham Young and the late Marilyn Monroe. The year ahead is most promising for those Geminis who are pioneers. Be prepared to try harder, work longer hours and move forward on your own. Your intelligence and communication skills make you both an exciting romantic partner and a successful figure in business. Count your blessings! The financial picture should be much brighter in only a few months. Think about investing in a small business in which you can become personally involved.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): One request is more than enough to get the boss' attention. Let young people assume more responsibility and be supportive of their efforts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You need some time alone to contemplate the future. The handling of a trust should be questioned. When romance is happy, your productivity climbs both at work and home!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You handle pressure in a way that gives you an edge over your competitors. Worrying over romance is self-defeating. Get your emotions under control. Cool heads prevail!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Business takes precedence over your personal plans. The results are gratifying but draining. You receive good news concerning loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Concentrate on creative and artistic endeavors. A pet project gets a helping hand from someone influential. Avoid making too many domestic changes at one time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New friends or surroundings give you a fresh perspective. You may be considering a permanent move to a distant city. Consult mate before going any further.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go over finances with mate or partner. A new approach will insure greater savings. Professional help could boost profits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New people and projects depend on you. The pace at work accelerates. If necessary, go ahead and start legal proceedings. Dress conservatively.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Correct timing is vital at work today. You may have to take several steps backward in order to make a leap forward. A romantic interlude makes you nervous at times.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What you do this morning will affect the outcome of a meeting that takes place later in the week. Express your doubts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep your standards high, but try to hurry a project along at the same time. Meeting deadlines is the key to business success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Read a memo or letter very carefully before trying to answer it. The real message may be written between the lines.

♡AK1095 ◇AQ1076 ♤985
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	1 ♤	Dble	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—It is not our practice to sit for partner's low-level penalty doubles of an overcall when we have opened a distributional hand that included a void in the enemy suit. Therefore, our recommendation is to bid two diamonds. Don't jump shift, because you do not have enough for game unless partner can raise one of your suits voluntarily.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South with 90 on score you hold:
♤KJ1073 ♡1098 ◇43 ♤854
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?

A.—Even though one heart is enough for rubber, it is doubtful that the opponents will let the game go by default. Therefore, we would like to get in a bid while the price is cheap. Bid one spade, even if only to make the opponents think that we might hold something. Two hearts is a close second.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♤83 ◇AJ9 ♤AKQJ10762
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♤	Pass	1 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—You would like to make some forcing bid, but no good one is available. The only solution is to jump to three clubs, even though that is a decided underbid. Technically, that is not forcing, but the bidding is unlikely to die there. It sounds as if partner has quite a good hand because the opponents, despite marked length in the major suits, couldn't interfere at the one-level.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East

What do you bid now?

A.—Even if partner is dead minimum for his response, with your powerhouse the prospects for game somewhere are very bright. Your first duty is to alert partner to your strength. You do so by cue-bidding two spades. That should facilitate getting to the correct game (diamonds, hearts or no trump are all possible), or even to slam if partner has the right cards.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♤AJ3 ♡KJ8 ◇AKQ1095 ♤5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♤

What do you bid now?

A.—By first doubling and then bidding a new suit, partner has shown a strong hand. With 9 points in high cards, you have a much better holding than partner has any right to expect, even though you have a singleton in his suit. We would venture three no trump.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

Woody Gap graduates five

SUCHES, Ga. (AP) — The Woody Gap School's class of '82 didn't elect class officers and they never locked their lockers. With only five students, it wasn't necessary.

"I got all of the personal instruction I needed," said Tim Carlisle, 17.

Glenda Gilreath, 17, the only girl in the senior class, said she saw the school as "family." There are only 99 students total at Woody Gap, the smallest school in Georgia to handle grades one through twelve. She has never attended school anywhere else.

"There are no strangers here, at the school or in the community, unless you count the summer people," she said.

The native stone building housing the Woody Gap School was built by the Civilian Conservation Corps in 1941 in mountainous northwestern Georgia, at the highest elevation for a community in the state.

School principal Jim Colwell said it's "just impractical" to bus the students anywhere else. So they continue to attend Woody Gap from kindergarten through 12th grade.

There are enough seniors to elect class officers, with one student left over to be the student body. But "nobody could see the sense in that," Colwell said.

"There were only two of us in trigonometry," said Carlisle.

Scott Souviron, 18, whose family moved to the mountains from Miami to escape urban crowds, said it was hard to make the adjustment, "especially in trying to find something to do up here."

He said the choice is between hiking or roller skating.

Ellen Burstyn becomes first woman to head Actors' Equity

Burstyn

NEW YORK (AP) — Actors' Equity Association has picked a new president, tagging actress Ellen Burstyn as the first woman to lead the 69-year-old, 30,000-member actors union.

Ms. Burstyn, who won an Oscar for her role in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore" and a Tony for "Same Time, Next Year," defeated actress Lynn Oliver by a vote of 6,112 to 2,131 in the biggest election in the union's history, it was announced Sunday.

She succeeds actor Theodore Bikel, who did not run for reelection after nine years in the post. She says she will battle for a merger with the Screen Actors' Guild and a share of cable television revenue.

Elected in a mail referendum were seven officers and 13 members of the union's governing council.

Mother Teresa

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nobel Peace Prize winner Mother Teresa of Calcutta has accepted an honorary doctor of humanities degree from Georgetown University.

"I am most unworthy of this great honor, but I accept it for the glory of God and in the name of and for the glory of our poor people around the world," she said during commencement exercises Sunday.

The 71-year-old nun told an audience of 9,000 graduates, relatives and friends to "become carriers of God's love."

"The less you have the more you can give. The more you have, the less you can give," she said. "You have received much, but especially you have learned to pray; for the fruit of faith is love and the fruit of love is service."

The diminutive nun was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1979 for her work with the poor of India.

MacRae

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Gordon MacRae, star of the 1955 movie classic "Oklahoma!," was in the audience for the final performance of the Lincoln Community Playhouse production of the still-popular show.

MacRae, now a Lincoln resident, stepped backstage Sunday during vocal warm-ups, signed a few autographs and chatted with cast and crew.

"I want to be honest with you Mr. MacRae. I didn't sleep much last night," said Lincoln attorney James Harris. Harris played the lead role of Curly, the same part MacRae played in the movie version.

MacRae, who also appeared in the 1956 films, "The Best Things in Life Are Free," and "Carousel," says he hopes to resume performing in nightclubs and on TV specials.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Three summers ago, playing the violin was "like a hobby" to Joshua Bell. Now the 14-year-old high school sophomore has a summer full of concert bookings culminating in a September performance with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

He is to be the youngest artist ever to appear with the orchestra during its regular subscription series.

Bell said his attitude toward the instrument changed three summers ago when he attended the Meadowmount School in the Adirondacks in New York, where he spent five hours a day practicing. After that, he says, "I thought maybe I'd pursue violin seriously."

He divided his time between North Bloomington High School and the Indiana University School of Music, and won the Seventeen-General Motors National Concerto Competition on March 1 in Rochester, N.Y.

Bell's summer concert series begins Saturday when he performs Tchaikovsky's violin concerto in D major with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Bell, the son of an Indiana University research psychologist, now practices only four hours daily.

"Sometimes there are other things I'd like to do. I play a lot of sports," he said.

Filipino progeriac dies of stroke before chance to see Disneyland

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Crispin Mitante, his 8-year-old body withered "like an old man's" by an incurable premature aging disease, died today of a stroke, less than a month before he realized his dream of a trip to Disneyland.

The tiny, bald Filipino boy, who weighed 13 pounds and was 2 feet 7 inches tall, died in the charity ward of the suburban Makati Medical Center five days after being admitted with paralysis of the left side of his body, Dr. Lyn Palma-Perez, a pediatrician at the hospital, said.

Crispin, whose widowed mother, Violeta, sells vegetables in a market outside Manila, was one of the world's 20 known victims of progeria, including a dozen in the United States. The disease, believed caused by a genetic disorder, also struck down Crispin's sister, Antonia, when she was 13, Mrs. Mitante said.

Her three other children are all normal and are 13 to 17 years old, she said. The family lives in Canlubang, 35 miles south of Manila.

"I knew what happened to my Antonia," Mrs. Mitante said Sunday as she pressed a wet towel to Crispin's forehead. "That is why I have a feeling he will go the way she went."

Progeria victims usually die in their teens.

"The same process that goes on in the body of an old man took place in the body of Crispin," Dr. Palma-Perez said. "Just like old people, progeria cases have hardened arteries."

She said the cause of death was thrombosis of the right cerebral vessel, meaning a clot blocked a blood vessel to the brain.

Mrs. Mitante said her son's ailment was diagnosed after news stories last year about two other progeria victims, Fransie Geringer of South Africa and Mickey Hayes of the United States, who met in the United States for a trip to Disneyland. Mrs. Mitante said she had been told earlier that malnutrition was responsible for the condition of Crispin and his sister.

The Times Journal said the boy was to have gone to the United States in June to meet eight other progeriacs on a holiday sponsored by the Sunshine Foundation, a Philadelphia charity group that tries to grant the wises of chronically ill youngsters.

Mrs. Mitante said her son had hoped to visit Disneyland, in California, during the trip.

"He wanted to see his favorite comic characters Mickey Mouse and Popeye," she said.

Dr. Palma-Perez said the hospital wanted to perform an autopsy but Crispin's grief-stricken mother refused.

"She told me, 'Crispin's already dead. If you do that you will kill him again,'" the doctor said.

Cliburn Foundation getting new director

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Andrew Raeburn of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra will assume the executive directorshop of the Van Cliburn Foundation, Inc., in early July, foundation officials have announced.

The foundation presents concerts throughout the year, but is best known for the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition.

Raeburn has been artistic administrator for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra since 1979. He was associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for nine years.

"I'm very excited about the appointment and am looking forward to joining the Fort Worth community," Raeburn said. "The people and community are friendly, welcoming and very serious about artistic matters."

He replaces Anthony Phillips, who resigned this spring to become planning and marketing manager of the South Bank Concert Halls in London.

"Fort Worth deserves extraordinary credit as it has managed to establish and fund a world renowned competition largely unsupported by public funds," Raeburn said.

Rose Kennedy hospitalized for observation, testing

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Rose Kennedy, the 91-year-old matriarch of one of America's most prominent political families, has been admitted to St. John's Hospital for observation and tests, a hospital spokeswoman says.

"She's resting comfortably and remains in stable condition," spokeswoman Ruth Hardy said early today. "They'll be running tests on her over the next couple of days."

Mrs. Kennedy was brought to the hospital Sunday night from her Palm Beach home by family members. "Apparently, she just wasn't feeling well," said Mrs. Hardy.

Mrs. Kennedy was hospitalized last November after complaining of chest pains during Mass at St. Edward's Roman Catholic Church in Palm Beach.

Her physician, Dr. Robert Gerard, said at the time that Mrs. Kennedy was suffering from angina, a condition that can cause pain around the heart when the heart receives too little oxygen.

Mrs. Kennedy is the mother of U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy and of former President John Kennedy and former U.S. Sen. Robert Kennedy, both of whom were assassinated.

University of Georgia student wins Hearst Foundation's writing contest

SAN FRANCISCO — Justin Gillis, a senior at The University of Georgia, was awarded first place in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation's National Writing Championship held here recently.

The write-off was the culmination of the 1981-82 Journalism Awards Program, held under the auspices of the American Association of Schools and Department of Journalism. The contestants were flown to San Francisco to participate in the two-day event which consisted of an interview with Dr. Edward Teller, senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution of War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University, followed by a two-part writing competition based on the interview.

Gillis, who competed against seven other finalists in the event, received a $2,000 scholarship and a Hearst gold medallion.

Placing second was Ron Prichard, a California State University at Long Beach sophomore, who was awarded a $1,500 scholarship and silver medallion.

In the photojournalism championship held May 15, Jeff Wheeler, a junior at the University of Minnesota, took first place in an on-the-spot assignment given to the three highest scoring finalists who had been flown to San Francisco for the event. Wheeler was awarded a $2,000 scholarship and a Hearst gold medallion.

Eternal vigilance

Nothing could be more important this Memorial Day than for each of us to consider how truly fragile is peace and to swear solemnly to uphold peace as far as is humanly possible.

The fact that we live in a violent world, constantly on the brink of all-out warfare could not have been more aptly portrayed than it was recently by Jan Mortenson of Sweden, the United Nations' assistant secretary-general for disarmament.

Mortenson noted, disturbingly, that at least $500 billion is spent a year on weapons, one-fifth of the world's scientists (about 200,000) are involved in military projects, that so far in history about 3½ billion people have lost their lives in some 14,000 wars and that there has been relative peace in only 500 years of the 3,600 years of recorded history.

Those statistics are sobering, to say the least. But statistics aren't needed to assure us of the threat of war that surrounds us. All we need do is look around us: to the Middle East, to Iran, to Afghanistan, to the Falkland Islands, to Russia and to Africa. Literally no land is safe from the ravages of war.

But that is not the purpose of Memorial Day. The purpose, rather, is to take a moment from our busy daily schedules in Midland as in the rest of the nation to pay homage to the thousands of Americans who have laid down their lives so that our way of life might continue.

In 1868 Gen. John A. Logan, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, said: "Let no ravages of time testify to coming generations that we have forgotten as a people the cost of a free and undivided republic." Although the times are different today and the memory of the events of which Gen. Logan spoke following that earlier war have been soothed by the passing of years, the greater meaning of his words remains as valid as it was then.

We must remain eternally vigilant to safeguard the flame of liberty and we must be willing to lay down our lives to that end if necessary. As a people we will pray for peace but recognize we live in a violent world and that violence will consume us if we do not remain brave.

Another View:

Sneaky pay increases

Members of Congress haven't given themselves a pay raise for three years, an admirable example of self-restraint mitigated only by the fact that they have managed to pump up their incomes anyway by means intended to be less visible to the public eye. Last December, for example, Congress voted itself a tax break that, under an Internal Revenue Service ruling, turns out to be worth more than $19,000 a year. For a member with a family of four, that amounts to a 15 percent pay increase. It also amounts to a heap of political trouble.

Public wrath over the size of the congressional tax break and the manner in which it was legislated has led to an explosion of mail, petitions and angry personal denunciations. The revenue service says that it alone has received at least 6,000 letters of objection, more than it has ever received on any single new tax regulation. Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., now says that he will sponsor a bill to repeal the special tax break. With statesmanlike heed to the voice of the people, and in cold fear that voters might strike them dead at the polls if they did otherwise, most members of Congress are likely to support the Long bill.

There was, truth to tell, something faintly devious about the tax-break plan, both in its conception and, in the House at least, in its adoption. Senators, no doubt to their lasting regret, were honest enough to pass the legislation on a recorded vote. In the House, the tax break whizzed through on a voice vote as a rider to a black-lung bill. A lot of congressmen now say they didn't know what they were voting for. But ignorance of the law, as the traffic cops will tell you, is no excuse.

The tax-break legislation says members of Congress are entitled to a per-diem deduction for each "congressional day," with the amount of the deduction to be determined by the revenue service. The service subsequently figured the deduction at $75, the same that government employes who are not based in Washington get when they visit the capital on business. That is supposed to compensate lawmakers for their presumed expenses in maintaining two homes, one in their districts and one in the Washington area. The $75 does not have to be substantiated.

Neither, as it turns out, does the definition of "congressional day." That refers, on its surface, to the time Congress actually spends doing the business of government. In fact, it also includes the numerous four-day weekends that are regularly taken. Last year the House had 262 official congressional days. But, as noted by Fred Wertheimer, the president of Common Cause, it actually met for only 163 days. By the House count of congressional days the tax deduction would be worth $19,650. Subtract the days the House really was not in session, though, and the deduction is worth $7,425 less.

About the same time Congress was voting itself a tax break it was also approving another income-augmentation plan, this one having to do with how much members can accept from special-interest groups for delivering speeches, presiding at the openings of bowling alleys and the like. The Senate, making no bones about it, simply got rid of its earlier-imposed $25,000-a-year ceiling on honoraria. The House merely doubled the amount that its members can accept for each outside appearance, to $2,000, up to a maximum of $18,000 a year. Few in Congress are so modest, so uninfluential or so inept that they will be unable to take full advantage of these moonlighting fees.

At an annual salary of $60,662, plus generous travel, medical and pension benefits, a member of Congress does rather better than the average American, though, given the importance of their jobs, it cannot be said that members are grossly overpaid. Does Congress need and deserve more money? No doubt a case might be made. But that case should be made directly and honestly, and with political courage. Sneaky approaches to bringing in more bucks are undignified. Worse, they get found out.

Defense cost necessitates facing reality

We must face some hard realities. One, neither the present Congress nor the president has the fortitude to make the cuts in social spending that need to be made. Two, that being the case, we cannot afford the defense budget President Reagan says is necessary.

Charley Reese

The president has projected a federal budget of $762 billion for 1983 and $803 billion for 1984 with estimated deficits of $102 billion and $94 billion respectively.

Of this, defense spending authorization totals $214 billion in 1982 and $258 billion in 1983. If we face the reality of the present, poor state of political will and leadership, we have to recognize that these military budgets are going to be cut. The question is how and by what amounts.

Earl C. Ravenel, a professor of international relations at Georgetown University School of Foreign Service, has made an excellent point in a paper published by the Cato Institute (224 Second St., S.E., Washington, D.C.), a libertarian think tank.

Ravenal's point is the soul of truth and logic. The defense budget is produced by the foreign policy and if rational cuts in defense are to be made, then the foreign policy must be changed.

As he explains in his analysis, this is something both liberals and conservatives are reluctant to face. Consequently, both hawks and doves tend to keep the expansive global missions, nitpick the hardware, and complain about the waste.

A second point he makes is that the big costs in the defense budget are not, as liberals like to pretend, either high technology weapons or strategic nuclear forces. On the contrary, they are the very conventional forces the anti-tech crowd supports.

The MX missile and the B-1 bomber, for example, will cost about $9.3 billion in 1983 — about 3.5 percent of the requested defense budget. Strategic nuclear forces, including support, the MX and the B-1, will cost about $54 billion — about 21 percent of the budget. General purpose forces account for the remaining 79 percent — or $204 billion. Ravenal is a former systems analyst in the Pentgon and I'm confident his rough figures are in the ballpark.

What we must do is force the Congress to be honest so that we don't end up with a hollow force — a Navy given worldwide missions but not the ships or manpower to accomplish them, a rapid deployment force with no airlift capability, a European ground army with no reserves or supplies.

Fortunately, Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, is on the right track. He has said if Congress wants to cut defense, it will have to decide which commitments it doesn't want to keep. We should back him in this approach.

It borders on criminal negligence to assign our forces missions and then undercut their ability to accomplish them. In some cases, the Congress has in effect assigned American military men suicide missions by putting them in harm's way, under-trained and under-supplied.

So ingrained in the military mind is the habit of obedience that no high ranking military officer has yet said to the politicians: "Hey, we can't accomplish that mission if you won't give us the tools." Of course if one did, he'd be promptly crucified, which is why we civilians must speak up for our military forces.

Ravenal's solution contains one element I have also advocated and that is abandoning the outdated North Atlantic Treaty Organization which is no longer applicable to the present world condition. Defending Europe costs $129 billion, according to Ravenal, and over the decade to 1992, he estimates the total cost will be $2.25 trillion.

It's time to admit that: (a) we can't afford it; and (b) it's no longer necessary.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Falklands crisis molding strange bedfellows

WASHINGTON — The Falklands crisis has produced some strange crisscrossing of diplomatic wires. Consider this Machiavellian mix-up:

Jack Anderson

1. — Argentina supports the clandestine U.S. effort to undermine the Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

2. — But the United States is backing Britain in the Falklands dispute.

3. — Yet Nicaragua has come out on the side of Argentina against Britain.

4. — Still, the right-wing Argentine junta is dedicated to the proposition that the Sandinista government is a nest of communists that must be destroyed, by military means if necessary.

The incredible fact is that the Argentine government — for all its new public embrace by Nicaragua — has done nothing to halt or even cut back its anti-Sandinista military plotting.

For the past 18 months, a small but important group of Argentine soldiers has been conspiring and collaborating with anti-Sandinista exiles in the southern province of Honduras. The latest count of Argentine military officers in the Honduras hinterland is 50. That's more, not less, than the number who were operating there before the Falklands eruption.

Nor did the Argentine military advisers slip off to Honduras behind the backs of the ruling junta; the clandestine operation in Central America has the blessing of the junta. Sources told my associates Bob Sherman and Dale Van Atta that the Argentine advisers appear to have settled in for the long haul.

The roots of the Argentine enmity for the Sandinistas run deep. They feed on the bad blood between the military leaders and the leftist guerrillas. Their vendetta has turned Argentina into a land of assassinations and kidnappings and fear in the night.

Indeed, one of the principal reasons for the junta's coup in 1976 was the determination to seek out and destroy the underground Montonero movement and People's Revolutionary Army (ERP). The excesses of this "dirty war" have been well-chronicled: thousands of innocent civilians tortured and killed in the frenzied search for communists and sympathizers.

The bloody campaign largely succeeded. The Montoneros and their ERP allies were either killed or driven into exile; some took refuge in Nicaragua.

One Montonero leader, who was implicated in an assassination plot, subsequently became a Nicaraguan government official at Managua's Sandino Airport. (The assassination attempt, incidentally, missed the high Argentine official who had been marked for death and killed his innocent daughter instead.)

The Argentine military considers the leftist exiles still dangerous. They point to the clandestine radio station the Montoneros set up in Costa Rica in 1979, for example. It beamed anti-junta messages throughout Central America and could be heard in Buenos Aires.

"Finally," explained one source, "the Argentines believe the Montoneros and the ERP will be coming back to Argentina some day — this time with logistical support from the Cubans and the Sandinistas."

Footnote: An Argentine Embassy spokesman flatly denied to my reporter Jon Lee Anderson that Argentine mercenaries are operating in Central America. The Nicaraguan government, meanwhile, has continued to support Argentina in the Falklands dispute — albeit stressing that the support is not for the right-wing junta but for the Argentine people.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: Ambassador Max Kampelman, U.S. delegate to the suspended Madrid talks on the 1975 Helsinki human rights accord, predicts a new headache when the talks resume: Rev. Billy Graham's naive statements about religious freedom in the Soviet Union. Graham's gaffe could be "a gift to the Soviet system and a major blow to the cause of human rights and religious liberty," Kampelman wrote in a memo to his staff, adding: "We will have our hands full in Madrid as the Soviets quote his statements back to us."

— Even with a onetime Hollywood star in charge, the White House bureaucracy isn't swept off its feet by celebrities of the silver screen. When Paul Newman arrived for an appointment at the Old Executive Office Building with other members of the advisory board for the Center of Defense Information, he had to show his identity card like everyone else. "Obviously, everyone knew he was Paul Newman," said a member of the group, "but the guards were just following the rules."

— South Africa and the Soviet Union recently arranged a "spy swap" — a Russian military officer captured by the South Africans in return for eight Western intelligence agents. But no Americans were part of the deal, which caught the State Department by surprise. This angers the lawyer for Gary Acker, an American mercenary recruited by the CIA and arrested in Soviet-supported Angola in 1976. State Department officials are "claiming now they weren't involved," complained the attorney, William Wilson, who added bitterly: "If they weren't involved, they should have been." A spokesman insists that they're still working for Acker's release.

INSIDE REPORT:

Weinberger 'disarmed' in budget battle

WASHINGTON — Behind the circus atmosphere of the House budget debate, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger was waging a lonely — and losing — rearguard action to bring President Reagan back to the reality of his original promise to restore American military power.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The treatment of lawyerly, quiet-spoken Cap Weinberger by top White House aides literally disarmed him and the Pentagon, preventing the counterattack they had planned against sundry budget documents drafted for House debate. Every one of these hacked away at defense, but Weinberger was silenced.

Weinberger's custody of Reagan's commitment to rearm in the face of runaway Soviet military spending has never been in question (despite complaints of occasional inattention). He prevailed over Reagan's staff throughout the budget struggles of 1981 and again in early 1982. His defeat now by White House staff chief James Baker III and budget director David Stockman sends a weakened Reagan to the Bonn summit to explain why the U.S. must reduce its "force postures": place some fighting units in mothballs.

For weeks Weinberger was kept in the dark by the back-room Baker-Stockman signal-callers who were warning Reagan he would have to accept substantial defense cuts in his 1983 budget. At the same time, the Baker-Stockman team worked over House Republican leader Bob Michel. They encouraged him to tell the president the same thing: that defense cuts between $5 billion and $10 billion in 1983 outlays were unavoidable.

On May 19 Weinberger made his first move. He called Stockman on the telephone and told him defense cuts of that size were unacceptable. But Stockman insisted Reagan's only course was to "deal with the Democrats" — in other words, retreat. Weinberger argued back: The president should fight any and all reductions under his original military budget and withdraw his support from defense cuts in Sen. Pete Domenici's Senate-approved budget.

But the retreat was advancing. On May 22 Reagan announced his support of the "bipartisan" budget named for Michel and Rep. Delbert Latta. That undercut Weinberger's planned counterattack in the form of a letter to Michel — an undated version of which had been hand-delivered to Michel before Reagan's public endorsement of Michel-Latta.

How could Weinberger attack defense cuts that the president himself was supporting? The answer: by indirection — by focusing his attack on the larger but similar cuts contained in the House Budget Committee's bill, sponsored by Rep. James R. Jones, committee chairman.

The Jones version would have reduced 1983 defense spending by $9 billion, somewhat more than the Michel-Latta version, and 1983-1985 spending authority substantially more than Michel-Latta. So Weinberger's letter, which arrived on the floor only moments before the House started voting on May 25, spelled out the costs of the Jones budget:

— It would "send a clear signal of a lack of resolve to both our allies and adversaries."

— It would require "significant reductions in the force structure, readiness and sustainability of our combat forces."

— Army and Marine ground forces "might have to be reduced by up to two divisions, deployed naval forces reduced by decommissioning up to 36 older ships and Air Force tactical fighter forces reduced by up to five wings."

The Michel-Latta budget, and the higher cuts in the Domenici bill, would force similar — though lesser — reductions across the board in the American defense posture. By the time Congress takes final action on the defense budget, possibly months away, the cuts may be enlarged far beyond Michel-Latta size.

Cap Weinberger, blind-sided by Baker and Stockman, has now made his record. It is a record Ronald Reagan should scrupulously study before he accepts White House staff advice for even deeper defense cuts in the bloody budget struggles still ahead.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, May 31, the 151st day of 1982. There are 214 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 31, 1962, captured World War II Gestapo chief Adolf Eichmann was executed by hanging after an Israeli court rejected his appeal.

On this date:

In 1910, the Union of South Africa was founded.

In 1961, South Africa became an independent republic outside the British Commonwealth.

In 1970, an earthquake hit Peru, leaving more than 66,000 people dead and 20,000 missing.

Ten years ago: President Nixon met with communist officials in Warsaw, Poland.

One year ago: Eight people were killed and about 60 were wounded on a beach in West Beirut as a new round of shelling continued between Lebanese Moslems and Christians.

Beckwith blames powers that were, laxity for rescue mission failure

DALLAS (AP) — The leader of the bungled mission to rescue 52 American hostages in Iran says now that he's sorry he didn't "put his foot down" more often when the mission was planned.

Col. Charles Beckwith, who has come home to Texas after 30 years in the military, blamed the failure of the April 24, 1980 rescue operation on equipment failure, poor planning, and lax security.

The hostages were not released until Jan. 20, 1981.

"You've got to realize there were some very heavy people in Washington who were participating in this, and sometimes we would say 'How about this?' and they wouldn't know what in the hell we were talking about," Beckwith said in an interview in Sunday's Dallas Times Herald "Westward" magazine.

"So we had to sit down and explain things. There were times I had to put my foot down and say, 'If these things do not occur, then me and my guys are not going to go.' I do regret not putting my foot down more often."

The elaborate rescue plan, which involved all four branches of the military, called for Beckwith to lead the commandos who would storm the American embassy in Tehran and free the hostages.

The operation required six helicopters.

Planes from Egypt and choppers from the aircraft carrier Nimitz were to meet Beckwith and his troops in the desert 200 miles southwest of Tehran. While the aircraft waited with their motors running, the soldiers would transfer equipment from the planes to the helicopters.

Beckwith's men would rescue the hostages in Tehran, take them to a nearby stadium to board the helicopters, and fly to the planes waiting in mountains east of Tehran.

The mission ran into trouble soon after the group landed in the desert.

"At the third helicopter, the pilot said, 'The skipper told me to tell you you only have five flyable choppers.' So I asked (Air Force) Col. (James) Kyle to go talk to them, find out what was wrong. He talked for about 10 or 20 minutes and came back and stated: 'They've got trouble in the hydraulic system. They can't fly forward. What do you want to do?'" Beckwith recalled.

"I told Col. Kyle: 'You tell me which one of the planes you want me to put my men on, because we're going home."

After the mission was aborted, eight servicemen were killed when a departing helicopter collided with a transport plane.

"The pilot of the first chopper to arrive said he wanted to top off his tanks before he departed, because he'd been on the ground, with his engines running longer," Beckwith said.

"As he was approaching the C-130 (the transport plane) with the fuel, his rotor struck the 130. There was an explosion and a huge fireball."

With more than two years of hindsight, Beckwith, who now operates an Austin, Texas security firm, blamed the failure on three factors:

"There weren't very many people involved in planning who'd had experience.

"Operation security wasn't maintained. Certain things like codebooks were lost and then found by my guys.

"I was told not to worry about the maintenance of the choppers aboard the carriers; that was someone else's responsibility. Well, that's ludicrous," he said.

Houston legislator feels Congress should concentrate on cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston, feels that when Congress returns this week in another attempt to approve a federal budget for 1983, it will concentrate more on spending cuts than it did last week.

Archer is one of the leading advocates for such an approach. He argued in vain for the proposition of Rep. John Rousselot, R-Calif., that would have balanced the budget immediately by freezing all federal salaries and programs at current levels and raising taxes by $20 billion.

"The overriding problem with the nation's economy today is high interest rates, and the only way to reduce the interest rates is to cut the deficit," Archer said.

RECOGNIZING THE FIERCE opposition of the House's liberal bloc to the spending cuts Rousselot suggests, Archer doesn't envision the Congress voting for any 1983 budget that would balance the budget immediately.

But he does feel his colleagues will agree to hold the line on the rapid growth of the entitlement programs, and he says that will result in a significant slash in the deficit.

The three budget plans that drew the most support last week all would have resulted in a deficit of more than $100 billion for 1983, and Archer said passage of any of them would have sent the wrong kind of signal to the nation's financial leaders.

"We must come up with a budget that will cut the deficit considerably below $100 billion," Archer said. He found encouragement in remarks early Friday morning by House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., and House Budget Committee chairman Jim Jones, D-Okla., after lawmakers had refused to pass any budget.

Both leaders indicated a more conservative approach would be needed this week in the new attempt to pass a budget.

As in 1981, conservative Democratic "Boll Weevils" from Texas sided with Republicans most of the time in last week's budget battle.

An exception was Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, who supported Rousselot's balanced budget plan but voted against the six other proposals that came before the House.

Hance was the Democratic sponsor of President Reagan's tax legislation last year. But he had left some clues that he was only lukewarm for the compromise that Boll Weevils worked out with Republicans, particularly the concessions that were made to preserve money in some of the social programs to keep moderate Republican "Gypsy Moths" in camp.

When Boll Weevils called a news conference week before last to announce their support for the compromise, several Texans were there, but not Hance.

ASKED IF HANCE WAS with the Boll Weevils on the legislation, their chairman, Rep. Charlie Stenholm, D-Stamford, had suggested that reporters ask Hance about that. But Rep. Phil Gramm, D-College Station, added: "Hance and I have never been on opposite sides of a budget vote."

Unlike last year, the Boll Weevils weren't the only Democrats who refused to vote for the plan offered by Jones and backed by party leaders. Black congressmen, including Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Houston, complained that the leadership gave little consideration to the views of the black caucus and helped defeat Jones' proposal.

However, several Democrats, including Boll Weevil Jack Hightower of Vernon, voted for the Jones proposition after the Republican plan was beaten.

"When it became clear the House might not pass any budget at all, I decided that however imperfect, the Jones proposal should then be supported because of the potentially disastrous implications of the House failing to decide on a budget for 1983," Hightower said.

"I did not favor the Jones version originally because I thought it cut the rate of defense increase too much, and it went too far in raising tax revenue at a time when we should be reducing the tax load on the American people."

Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, supported the Democratic position throughout the budget debate. He has supported increases in funding for social programs, suggesting that money be saved by cutting out what he views as widespread waste and mismanagement.

AN EXAMPLE IS A study by the General Accounting Office, at Brooks' request, that concluded the Department of Commerce could save $24.6 million in the cost of acquiring computers for two of its agencies.

The National Bureau of Standards and the Environmental Research Laboratories had asked for $65.7 million for computers.

Brooks, chairman of the House Government Operations Committee, said the GAO recommended that the agencies cancel plans for separate procurements and share a large-scale scientifically oriented computer in a department-wide data center.

Officials of the agencies have agreed with the proposal and plan to modify their procurements accordingly, Brooks said in a letter to Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige.

"These are substantial savings, particularly in view of the current budgetary problems," Brooks told Baldrige. He urged the secretary to act promptly on the GAO recommendations.

Rep. Jim Collins, D-Dallas, is seeking to force House consideration of an anti-busing bill that the House passed almost a year ago.

Superiority main thrust of plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major goal of the Reagan administration's defense strategy is convincing the Soviets they cannot win a nuclear war with the United States, the Defense Department's top policy planner says.

U.S. leaders are trying to "disabuse" their Soviet counterparts of any such war-winning ideas by building a missile and bomber force that would be assured of surviving an attempted Soviet knock-out blow and then retaliate even at heavily-protected Soviet targets.

The U.S. strategy was outlined in an interview Sunday with Dr. Fred C. Ikle, undersecretary of defense for policy.

Ikle said the ability to successfully counterattack has been a major part of the administration's nuclear weapons policy since President Reagan took office more than a year ago.

The policy was restated recently in secret new strategic guidance given to the the armed services as they prepare the fiscal 1984 budget that goes to Congress next January.

Ikle stressed that the Reagan administration rejects the notion that a nuclear war is winnable but he said that Soviet military writings and preparation suggest the Soviets harbor such illusions.

"The sole idea of our program is to make nuclear deterrents more stable and to make clear to Soviet planners that they could not win a war even with a quick strike," he said.

In order to reduce the chance of early use of nuclear weapons, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says the United States is trying to build up conventional military forces to offset a Soviet advantage in those areas.

Weinberger also wants to strengthen conventional forces to implement another major goal of Reagan policy — enabling the United States to launch a conventional counter-offensive in other areas in the event the Soviets attack Western Europe.

The strategy would force Soviet military planners to take into account possible counter-threats to their flanks elsewhere, making them pause before launching an offensive against Western Europe.

Some analysts are concerned that a confrontation in Europe could escalate from limited-range nuclear weapons to the unleashing of strategic weapons and a global nuclear exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union.

"None of our planning is in any way aimed at winning a nuclear war. If it were, we would be spending about 10 times as much on nuclear war than we are now," Ikle said.

Nuclear weapons account for about 15 percent of the U.S. military budget.

Ikle said that assuring that the U.S. strategic nuclear force would survive a massive surprise attack would move the United States away from what he described as a "dangerous hair-trigger situation." By that, he said he meant that a survivable force would relieve the president from having to make a swift decision whether to order American missiles and bombers to be launched.

The present vulnerability of the 1,052 U.S. inter-continental ballistic missiles to possible destruction in a surprise attack has prompted some military strategists to suggest the United States should have a "launch on warning" policy.

Spy book material said to come from CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The editor of a controversial Cold War espionage bestseller, "The Penkovsky Papers," now acknowledges that he obtained the basic materials for the book from the CIA.

At the same time, editor Frank Gibney contends that the papers ascribed to spy Oleg V. Penkovsky were fully authentic, and he denies that their disclosure was part of "some behind-the-scenes CIA publishing project or plot."

Gibney's statements came in the preface to a new paperback edition of the Penkovsky book, which had provoked angry denunciations from the Kremlin — as well as skepticism among Western Soviet-watchers — when it was originally published in 1965.

Penkovsky was a colonel in the GRU, the Soviet military espionage apparatus, who served as an agent for U.S. and British intelligence during a 16-month period in 1961-62. He was arrested by the Soviet KGB security police in October 1962 and executed the next year after a Moscow trial.

At his trial, Penkovsky confessed to secretly passing to the West more than 5,000 microfilmed pages of highly classified documents on Soviet weaponry, military strategy, political intentions and espionage operations.

"The Penkovsky Papers" combined relatively dry, expository material with a series of personal observations harshly critical of the Soviet system and Kremlin leadership.

For example, Penkovsky was quoted as declaring that then-Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev headed "a government of adventurers. They are demagogues and liars, covering themselves with the banner of the struggle for peace...I know that the leaders of our Soviet state are the willing provocateurs of an atomic war."

In 1976, a Senate Intelligence Committee report said "The Penkovsky Papers" was a CIA book published "for operational reasons." The committee said, "The book was prepared and written by witting agency assets who drew on actual case materials."

Among many scenes indicating the far-reaching effects of continued fighting between Iran and Iraq is this view of the slogan-covered main mosque at Khorramshahr, Iran, after heavy fighting. Date of the recently released photo is unknown.

Tankers warned away from oil terminal

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraq is warning foreign tankers to stay away from Iran's oil terminal on Kharg Island in the Persian Gulf, which it says has become a target of Iraqi bombers.

The Iraqis, trying to stem a tide of recent Iranian victories, said in a communique Sunday they had scored "effective hits" at the Kharg Island terminal and at a refinery in Tabriz, Iran's northernmost city.

Iran's war communique Sunday said the two sides exchanged artillery fire across the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway, Iraq's only access to the Persian Gulf. Kharg Island is near the mouth of the waterway.

Iran said it shot down one Iraqi jet in a dogfight over Abadan, the major Iranian city in the oil terminal area.

Neither side reported any major action by ground troops.

Meanwhile, diplomatic concern about the war was growing. Members of the United Nations Security Council scheduled private consulations today on ways to resolve it peacefully.

Saudi Arabia and five other Arab nations in the gulf region were meeting in Riyadh to take a collective stand on the turn of the war tide in Iran's favor.

Arab Moslem Iraq called on all fellow Arab nations to break ties with Persian Moslem Iran. It cited Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's recent statement that Israel sold $27 million worth of arms to Iran as "evidence of the alliance between Tehran and Tel Aviv."

The official Iraqi news agency reported Iraqi President Saddam Hussein wound up five days of morale-boosting talks and meetings with troops and generals at the front Sunday.

It quoted Hussein as saying that Iran's recent retaking of the city of Khorramshahr "warrants an upgraded preparedness to fight the enemy and defeat his aggressive intentions on the southern front as well as all other areas of operation."

Since Khorramshahr's conquest, Iranian leaders have been insisting on the removal of Hussein from power as a precondition for negotiations to end the war. They also have threatened to march on Baghdad in order to topple or capture him.

Polish men favor freedom for internees

PIEKARY SLASKIE, Poland, (AP) — Two hundred thousand Polish men turned a traditional Catholic pilgrimage into a political statement, cheering a bishop's call for freedom for activists interned under martial law.

In the biggest gathering since martial law was declared last Dec. 13, the men, mostly coal miners, came to this small, sooty Silesian town Sunday in an annual rite of homage to the Virgin Mary.

Piekary Slaskie is not far from the Wujek coal mine, where at least seven miners were killed in December as soldiers crushed the most determined resistance to martial law by supporters of the suspended independent union Solidarity.

Archbishop Herbert Bednorz of the nearby city of Katowice told the crowd that Pope John Paul II on his next visit to Poland "would like to visit all the internment camps." But the archbishop said the pontiff would prefer that his visit to the camps would not be necessary because of the release of the internees.

The miners cheered, and cheered again when Bednorz said: "Social justice should receive more respect in Poland so that no wrong or evil will be done to people as is being done now. The thoughtless dismissals from work, new internments and new arrests must stop."

Bednorz said he met with the pope at the Vatican last week and gave him a wooden cross carved by an internee at the Uherce camp near the Soviet border. During the meeting, they apparently discussed the possibility of the pope visiting his homeland later this year.

Prior to martial law, the pope had planned to visit Poland for the Aug. 26 celebration of the 600th anniversary of the Black Madonna of Czestochowa, an icon of the Virgin Mary which Poles believe helped repulse an invading army and preserve Poland's independence in medieval times.

When martial law was declared, the pope's plans were put in abeyance, and church officials said he probably would not come as long as martial law was in force. Archbishop Josef Glemp, the Polish primate who attended the ceremony Sunday, has said that the anniversary is a year-long event, and the pope could come any time during the year.

Church sources said Sunday that Bednorz's statement may indicate that the Polish bishops are trying to encourage the pope to come rather than that he has decided to make the visit despite martial law.

The pope himself, speaking to Britons of Polish descent in London Sunday, did not mention the visit to his homeland. He said Poles living abroad should speak out in favor of Poland "as it must be."

Mrs. Walesa to visit her husband

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Danuta Walesa and two of her seven children headed for southeast Poland today on the first leg of a 500 mile trip to see her husband, Solidarity union chief Lech Walesa, at the new place where he is being held by the martial law regime.

Mrs. Walesa, who stopped in Warsaw on the way to Przemysl, a small Polish city on the Soviet border, said she still has no idea exactly where her husband is being held.

"The only thing I know is that I'm supposed to go to Przemysl. I haven't the slightest idea where they will take me from there," Mrs. Walesa told The Associated Press.

Walesa and other union leaders have been held since the start of martial law last December 13, when the independent union was suspended. Polish authorities moved Walesa from a Warsaw suburb to a new location in southeast Poland on May 10, according to several sources.

Deputy Premier Jerzy Ozdowski confirmed for the first time officially Sunday that Walesa was in southern Poland.

In an interview with the U.S. Cable News Network, Ozdowski said Walesa will "return to a normal life" in Gdansk soon.

Asked if she knew about Ozdowski's statement, Mrs. Walesa said, "I haven't heard it, but I do wish it was true."

Mrs. Walesa said she was taking the couple's youngest daughter Maria Victoria, and three-year-old Magda Walesa to see their father but did not know how long they would stay with him.

"I will stay as long as they let me," said Mrs. Walesa, who has seen her husband six times since his internment.

Sen. Baker carries message to China

PEKING (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee has arrived in China, bearing a personal message from President Reagan to the Chinese leadership.

Baker made no statement when he arrived Sunday at Peking's airport, and there was no indication of what Reagan's message contained. Diplomatic sources say he will meet with Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping and other leaders during his visit.

Baker arrived in China at the same time that Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., was visiting Taiwan. Goldwater has publicly assured the people of Taiwan of the U.S. commitment to the island, which China considers a breakaway province.

Baker has said he plans to discuss the Senate's views on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, which have been a particularly contentious problem in U.S.-China relations.

Baker's arrival also coincided with Chinese observance of the first anniversary of the death of Soong Ching-ling, widow of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, considered to be modern China's founding father.

Sun led the 1911 revolution that overthrew the Manchu dynasty and established the first Chinese republic. He is revered for that both in China and on Taiwan.

Chinese leaders used the occasion of the anniversary to renew their offer to Taiwan of peaceful reunification. The government said residents of the island were free to visit the mainland to pay their respects.

Taiwan has rejected the previous overtures from the mainland as "sugar-coated poison."

Art weavings from — Al Maghrib Al Aqsa

Story by Georgia Temple
Photos by Paul Gilbert

Morocco, known in the Moslem world as Al Maghrib Al Aqsa — the Far West, is situated on the northwestern tip of the African continent.

Its coastline faces the Mediterranean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean, with its southern border disappearing into the Sahara Desert. Crossing the country from the northwest to the southeast are three mountain ranges — the Middle Atlas, the High Atlas and the Anti Atlas.

The first two are the homes of the nomadic Berber tribesmen, the earliest known inhabitants of the western Mediterranean coast of Africa. Although the Berbers origin is unknown, it is estimated that the tribes lived in this region as early as 2000 B.C.

Since approximately 600 B.C., Carthaginians, Romans, Vandals, Byzantines, Arabs, Turks, Spaniards and Frenchmen have ruled all or portions of Morocco until the country gained its independence in 1956.

Of the invaders, the Arabs have had the greatest influence on the Berbers, instilling in most the Moslem faith.

In the 600s, the Arabs began invading North Africa. In the 700s, the Berbers helped the Arabs conquer the Iberian Peninsula, now Spain and Portugal.

The conquerors came to be called Moors.

In 1060, the Moorish Empire was united under Berber chieftain Yusuf Ibn-Tashfin. Another Berber, Abd-el-Mumin, seized control of the empire in 1147.

The Berbers name comes from the Latin word barbari — the name given in Roman times to peoples who lived at the fringes of the Roman Empire, however, the Berbers refer to themselves as Imazighen — free and noble spirit. This name, it is said, was given to them by the ancient Phoenicians, whose alphabet formed the basis for all Western alphabets.

Although Morocco has been conquered and ruled by numerous nations in its history, the Berbers have not. The lifestyle of these nomadic Atlas Mountain tribes has remained virtually untouched by outsiders. In the past, not many ventured into the rugged Atlas Mountain regions because most of those who did never returned.

The Berbers' "free and noble" spirit is very evident today in the bold handwoven rugs, tents, saddlebags, shawls, belts, blankets and pillows created by the tribes' married women. Women take great pride in their ability to weave as it is one of the major requirements for marriage in a Berber tribe.

Although many Moroccan weavings are drawn from patterns passed down through the centuries, those woven by the Berbers, for the most part, are done so from the weaver's heart, with the works representing that particular woman's view of her life and her world.

Since the Berbers have no written language, their weavings have become their alphabet, with each woven symbol relating a specific message.

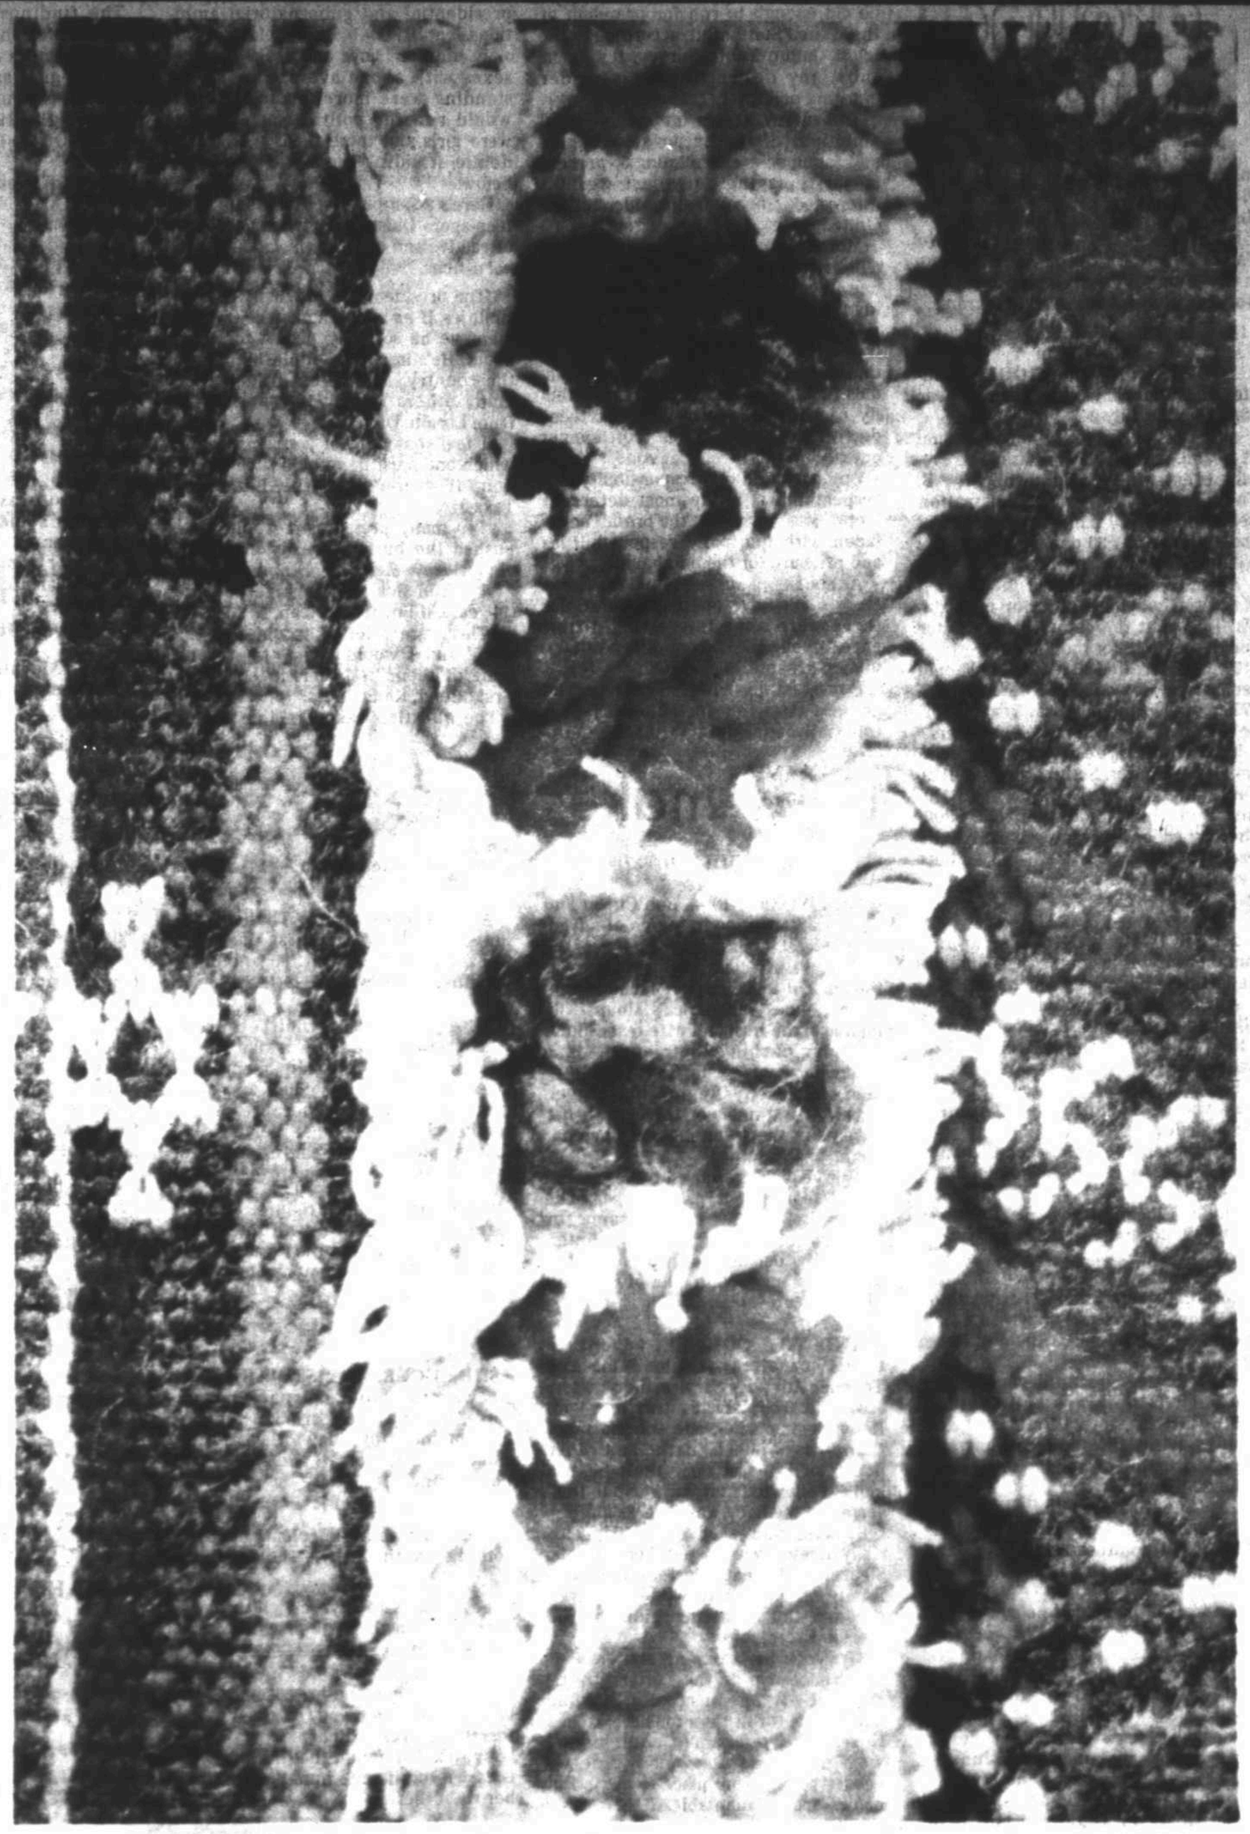
As is true of the textiles created by the Indian tribes of North America, the styles, techniques, colors and symbols in Berber weavings differ vastly from tribe to tribe.

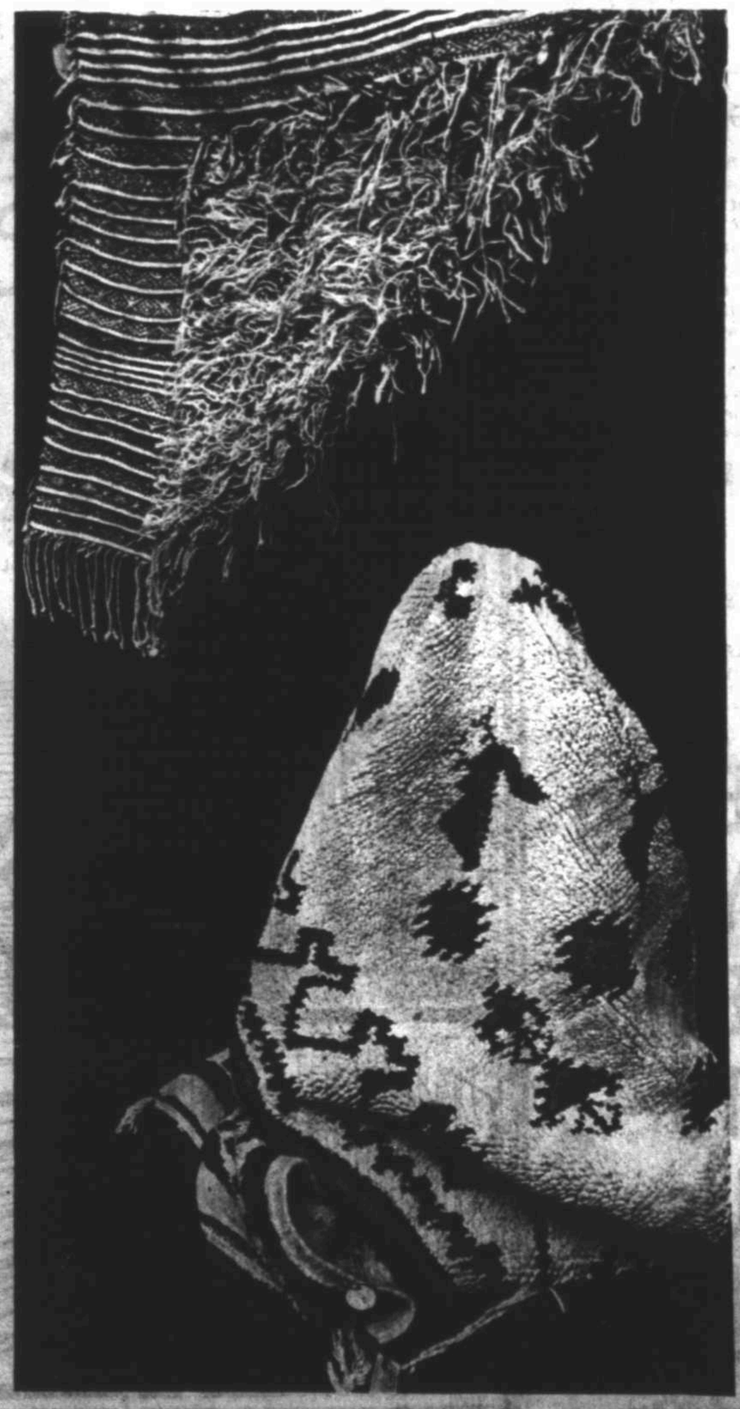
Rugs from the Middle Atlas region, where winters are harsh and cold, have a thick, rough texture, while those from the High Atlas, especially those made by Glaoua tribes, are smaller and have a very fine texture. Glaoua weavers, known to have the finest wool in a country famous for producing some of the world's highest quality wool, usually incorporate a thick pile weave with a flat one.

The Azrou Berbers of the Middle Atlas Mountains weave intricate flat rugs with many stars incorporated into each one. Since the loom they use is only about five feet high, often the completed section of the rug is rolled around a log for years while it is being finished.

Despite the fact that many Berber and Moroccan weavings are considered to be museum quality works, little is known about them in the United States.

It is ironic that the United States has its longest unbroken treaty relationship with Morocco, one which dates back to the Treaty of Peace and Friendship signed in 1787 by George Washington and Sultan Mohammed III of Morocco, yet knows so little about the country, its people, its culture or its art work.





In 1981, The Textile Museum of Washington, D.C., with the cooperation of the Moroccan government, opened a major exhibit of significant Moroccan weavings. The exhibition pieces came from private collections in the United States as well as Moroccan museums. Among the private collectors whose works were featured was Alf Taylor, a native Texan and self-taught expert on Berber tribal rugs and weavings. A showing and sale of weavings he has purchased on his trips into the Atlas Mountains is currently on display through June 10 at the Hanging Tree Gallery, San Miguel Square. The 60-some rugs include those woven by the Berbers and Saharan Nomads, such as, the Zemmour rug at the top of the page, the Beni Quarian snow cape hanging on the wall, right, and, above, the Tazenakht rug. Many Berbers use a fork-looking tool, above, to pound the wool.

If nominated, I will not run...

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — By the year 2,000, many of today's teen-agers will be old enough to run for president of the United States. But, according to the latest Gallup Youth Survey, few teens show any desire to even consider entering politics.

The survey looked into the political ambitions of the nation's teen-agers and found an overwhelming 86 percent majority saying they just weren't interested in becoming president of the United States.

Moreover, only one in four indicated a desire to be governor of his state, and one in three was interested in becoming mayor of his town or city.

What makes the presidency so unattractive to teens? Some observers feel that the Watergate and Abscam scandals have so damaged the respectability of high political office that teens don't find it an honorable profession ot enter.

But, we found that responsibility, not respectability, is the most deterrent factor. Most teens feel the presidency is laden with too many responsibilities and pressure for them to handle.

Although our survey found that most teens don't have political aspirations, there were some interesting differences among teens from different population groups.

For example, being mayor has the greatest attraction for all teens, but is especially appealing to black youngsters; as many as 49 percent of black teens said they would like to be mayor, compared to 28 percent whites. Similarly, more blacks than whites have presidential and gubernatorial ambitions.

In addition, boys and teens of both sexes with above average academic standing were more apt to say they would run for political office than were girls and those teens whose academic standing is only average or below.

Here's a sampling of comments from teen-agers illustrating what they find attractive and unattractive about political office:

"The president has too many responsibilities. If he makes a mistake in judgment he ha so many people to worry about. He's in charge of all the lives in the country, and he ha influence on many others lives." (16-year-old girl from Lorain, Ohio.)

"I feel that I'm not a strong leader, which one must be to hold such a position." (17-year-old boy from Little Elm, Texas)

"Too many pressures. I would have pushed the button already!" (17-year-old girl from Memphis, Tenn.)

"I would liek the prestige power." (14-year-old boy from Olean, N.Y.)

"There are a lot of troubles in the world and I would like to try to end some of them." (17-year-old boy from Great Bend, Kan.)

The question asked in the survey were:

"Would you like to be president of the United States?"

"...governor of this state?"

"...mayor of this town-city?"

The findings reported today are based on telephone interviews with a representative cross section of 1,010 boys and girls, ages 13 through 18, conducted in November 1981.

Changes in lives of nuns

By MARIAN J. MEYERS
Hearst Feature Service

The lives of nuns have been radically changed by the Second Vatican Council, which liberalized the church's teachings with sweeping liturgical reforms.

The council also called for reforms within religious orders. Nuns simplified, or did away with their habits. Suddenly, there were more options and ministries available to them.

But Vatican II's opening of church doors to the lay community coincided with a decrease in the number of women and men entering religious life. When the decline started in 1965, there were 179,954 nuns in the United States, according to Robert Wonderly, information officer for the U.S. Catholic Conference. The 1981 figure is 122,653.

"There's a lot of speculation about the reason," notes Sister Carol Ann Jokerst, executive director of the Religious Formation Conference. The decrease has been attributed to death and aging, as well as to more people leaving orders and fewer entering, Sister Jokerst says.

The decrease has left the Roman Catholic Church without enough nuns to staff its schools, hospitals and other ministries.

Baby makes three on adventure road

By HEIDI NOLTE

NEW YORK (AP) — Bob Citron and Barbara Sleeper go in search of adventure at least eight months each year.

Veteran travelers to such places as the ancient Incan city of Machu Picchu in the Andes and Africa's Mount Kilimanjaro, the husband-wife team didn't consider curbing their expeditions when along came baby Kelly Regine.

In fact, Kelly Regine has logged nearly 70,000 miles of travel with her parents in the seven months since her birth.

"We've always enjoyed traveling and we do plenty of it," Ms. Sleeper, who prefers to use her maiden name for professional reasons, said in an interview. "We decided to incorporate her into our plans — with a lot of responsibility."

AND THE COUPLE, adventure travel consultants to the Samsonite Traveler Advisory Service, didn't waste any time. They started traveling with Kelly Regine when she was no more than 3 days old, to parks and other points of interest near their Seattle home. Following that was a trip to Denver when the baby was 4 weeks old.

But the first real adventure trip with Kelly Regine was to test her out, Ms. Sleeper said. That trip took the small family on a five-day wilderness trek through the isolated regions of the Florida Everglades.

"We took her camping and on a 10-mile canoe trip on the Turner River," she said. "It was more of a learning experience for us than for her. We had to see what equipment and clothing we'd need, and how much time we needed to get from place to place. But babies are so adaptable if their basic needs are met."

And the trip proved to the couple that traveling with an infant could be both enjoyable and rewarding.

"We enjoyed it so much because she enjoys the stimulation," Ms. Sleeper said.

A three-week trip to Thailand followed. The trio headed for the mountains, where they learned about the primitive tribes who lived there.

"Everyone raised their eyebrows when we said we were taking her to Thailand, but the Asian people just loved her," she said. "She's an entree into any civilization because people really relate to babies. We've found that people are so friendly because of her.

"Of course, it does require a lot of extra energy to travel with the baby," Ms. Sleeper said, "but the success of the trip is really dependent on how well you plan."

SHE SUGGESTS LIST-MAKING as the way to avoid overpacking, or worse, leaving out a crucial item. "I think of the baby's day-to-day routine and write a list of all the things we should bring."

"Make sure you bring plenty of spare clothing for the baby," she suggests.

"The trick is in layered clothing — depending on the type of climate you will be entering.

"I also recommend breastfeeding the baby. If you don't, you're forced to use formula mixes which may make the baby sick. I've found that her behavior is easier and if she's hungry I can feed her right there.

"There are also little considerations such as trying to plan the trip or departure around your child's normal sleeping time. This will make it easier on you."

The only main problem arose when the family returned home and had to settle back into the home routine, she said.

"She was used to having us around 24 hours a day. You have so much physical contact with the baby while traveling, and when you go home and have to attend to other business, they sense the withdrawal. She had a hard time with that. It usually takes three days to get back to normal.

"But traveling with an infant is special because it helps freeze in time a certain developmental stage of the baby. You are constantly taking photographs, which helps to intensify that special time in her development."

THE NEXT ADVENTURE in store for the family is a trip to India, where they will travel through Kashmir to live on a house boat on the Dahl Lake.

DEAR ABBY

National agency enlists parents in the fight against drugs

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I want to save other parents the heartache we felt when we discovered our sons were using marijuana and other drugs.

After many months of blaming ourselves, blaming others and searching for help, we heard about the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth — an organization founded, directed and administered by parents to educate and assist parents in the prevention and intervention of drug use. It helped us immediately. We received reliable up-to-date educational materials. We obtained a Parent Group Starter Kit, which told us how to form a parent support group. With this information, we were able to begin helping our family focus on the CAUSE of our problem — drugs! Not only are our sons now drug-free, but my husband and I have been able to help hundreds of other parents recognize the signs and realize that they, too, must take positive steps to help their children.

It is important for ALL parents to know that their children will be faced with pressure to use drugs. (Our boys tell us that over 60 percent of students at their schools "do drugs.") The average beginning age is 11 1/2 years.

I pray that you will print this soon. — CAROLYN B., SILVER SPRING, MD.

DEAR CAROLYN: I've checked out the agency you recommend and have found it to be tops. It has agreed to respond to every request for information promptly.

Parents wanting information or support should contact the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth, P.O. Box 722, Silver Spring, Md. 20901.

DEAR ABBY: "Tens" (really beautiful women) have a problem I call "the curse of excessive beauty." Because of this, they are unapproachable by potential mates because everyone assumes that all such beauties are already spoken for.

This assumption, which is valid about 98 percent of the time, coupled with the male's natural fear of rejection 99 percent of the time, causes a lot of people to miss the boat.

When a beautiful woman is newly divorced or has just broken up with her last love and is not involved with anyone but would like to be, she has a problem.

My solution: Let her wear some kind of identifying symbol — a "sitting duck" perhaps — as an ornament on a charm bracelet, a necklace, a brooch, or even a T-shirt to signal to all male animals that the lady is at least approachable. — HERB IN HOUSTON

DEAR HERB: Nice try, but somehow I can't see a "10" wearing a "sitting duck" T-shirt to signal her availability. All she has to do to telegraph her interest is make eye contact and smile.

DEAR ABBY: I am newly married and expecting a baby. My problem is that my in-laws have two dogs that are like part of their family. These dogs are infested with fleas. I'm sure the fleas are in the carpet, so it's a year-round problem. Please understand, my in-laws aren't dirty or anything like that, but their dogs have fleas. (Can fleas hurt a baby or cause disease?)

The flea bites cause itchy red bumps on me, but I suppose they're not too serious. It's funny, but my husband isn't affected by flea bites the way I am.

How do I bring this up without sounding picky or neurotic? I don't want to hurt my in-laws, as they are super people and I love them very much. — NEEDS ADVICE

DEAR NEEDS: Fleas CAN be serious. They can also be eradicated. And if your in-laws are really "super" people, they will consult a vet about how to keep their dogs flea-free forever.

American consumers with different needs demand variety

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Once upon a time, there was living room furniture, bedroom furniture and dining-room furniture. Everybody knew which was which and there was no confusion about what went where.

Oh, perhaps there were also desks and bookcases to go in the library or "den" as some called it, and some comfortable pieces for the porch. But anything too outre which couldn't be quickly classified was probably something you didn't need anyway.

Try walking into a furniture store today and dividing up the merchandise by the old classifications. You'll soon give up the task as a hopeless case. Where would you place the etageres? The bars? The armoires that can be used for clothing storage or home-entertainment components? What about the sleep sofa that flips into a king-size bed.

Life at home is both simpler and more complicated then it used to be. For many — perhaps a majority soon — the old idea of a single-family home in the suburbs is an irrelevant solution to a problem they don't think they have

The new American consumer is a career girl in Dallas; a childless couple in Seattle; a bachelor in his first "pad" in New York; a houseful of roommates who work in the same office in Los Angeles, or a couple of seniors in an adult community in New Jersey.

THESE HOME FURNISHINGS consumers are represented in many attributes and attitudes. But one thing about most of them is that their lives are non-traditional. They may share the same holidays and associations as the rest of the country. But when they go shopping for home furnishings, they are a different breed. These new consumers with different needs are giving rise to new categories of furniture, according to some retailers and manufacturers.

If a single descriptive word could be chosen to characterize the new market, that word would probably be informal. The concept contains the idea of rooms that are used interchangeably for all the activities of living, of furniture that is in no particular style, but instead is geared to function as seating or storage or surface in any room where the need for the function exists.

The new informal furniture is unlikely to be authentic anything. Instead, it may "borrow" design elements from one or more cultural traditions.

Some companies have switched their product lines to cater to the new consumers. Other firms have been set up just to cater to them. The furniture they are producing to meet the new needs includes multi-use storage pieces such as armoires and wall systems, combination game and dining tables, chairs on casters for easy mobility, sofas that convert to beds and rolling carts for a variety of uses, including meal serving wherever convenient.

An example of a company formed to cater to the market is Stavoak. The 2½-year-old firm is a subsidiary of Jack Daniels Distilleries.

"Ninety percent of our furniture is made of barrelwood. We were giving them away and we decided that we should recycle the wood into furniture," explained Largin Grover, assistant manager of the furniture operation.

THE PRODUCTS, DESIGNED by O. B. Solie, are geared to appeal to the customer for informal furniture who company executives believed might find whiskey barrel furniture a good idea.

Trend Line is an example of an older firm that recently began catering to the new consumer. Bill Hairston, its president, says less space is a part of the new consumer equation. The new consumers have gotten accustomed to smaller quarters than Americans usually consider desirable. If they are young, they haven't been around long enough to acquire traditional housing. If they are older, they may have moved from larger quarters.

With less horizontal space, they have to look to the vertical dimension. So they appreciate the value of modular stacking storage units and wall systems.

"These consumers are not buying pieces of furniture. They are buying atmosphere, comfort, beauty and retreat," said Hairston.

"The fact is that many Americans will never buy a piece of formal dining-room or living-room furniture," says Sherwood Smith, president of Sherwood Furniture, producer of foam seating and sleeping furniture. Perhaps they haven't the money. Perhaps they haven't the space. Or maybe they simply don't see why they should, when the new pieces suit all their needs so well.

Defeating depression

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Depression is certainly a de-beautifying condition. It robs us of our looks, health and motivation.

Freud said depression is anger turned inward, but psychologists today differ in their opinions.

Some say it's caused by a chemical imbalance which numbs the brain's pleasure center; others attribute it to "wrong" behavior; and still others say it results from harboring negative thoughts and images.

I have researched this subject extensively (much of it through personal experience!) and although I don't presume to have all the answers, I've gained some insights that may be helpful.

1. Try to clearly identify the cause(s) of your depression, but don't be alarmed if you can't. Sometimes depression seems totally irrational.

2. Ask yourself if there's anything you can do to relieve it or if there's anything about yourself or in your life that should be changed. If the depression comes from a problem that seems unsolvable, can you let go of it for a while? Get involved with other things? Trust?

3. Eliminate salt and sugar. (This is difficult for me because when I'm depressed I crave both.) Under certain conditions salt and sugar can intensify depression. To minimize fluid retention and hormonal imbalances, drink plenty of water, take vitamins C and B, eat small amounts of protein-rich foods as well as fresh fruits and vegetables throughout the day.

4. A frequent cause of depression is unidentified fear. Remember: The antidote for fear is love. Displace your fears by engaging in activities involving fun, laughter and caring.

5. Talk about your depression with a trusted friend or family member. Do not discuss it with someone who is insensitive to your needs. You will not benefit from condemnation, long lectures, or the guilt that comes from being told you have nothing to be depressed about.

6. Don't allow yourself to become a chronic complainer or a seeker of sympathy.

Floyd believes Memorial win will help his attitude

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Ray Floyd believes his Memorial golf tournament victory may have his attitude moving in the right direction.

"You get down on yourself," he said Sunday after his 16th professional career triumph, built on a two-shot margin.

"You're playing well, but not performing. You get in a rut. When you're playing badly, everything upsets you. When you're playing good, you're bubbly," said Floyd. "I've played what I thought were good rounds of golf and I couldn't put a number on the board."

The 39-year-old veteran of two decades on the Tour was in such a bubbly mood he bought two cases of champagne for the media from his winner's check of $63,000.

"It was a very emotional win for me," he said before a toast with Jack Nicklaus, the tournament's host.

"I'm delighted to see any great player win this tournament. Raymond's record speaks for itself," Nicklaus said of Floyd's first victory this year.

HIS 72-HOLE total of 281 was one stroke shy of David Graham's tournament record and marked the first time he had finished higher than eighth on the difficult 7,116-yard Muirfield Village layout.

"I was very much in control. I think that's why I was successful this time," he said.

Floyd, a former PGA and Masters winner, moved into the lead to stay with a 20-foot downhill birdie putt on the 14th hole.

He followed with another birdie two holes later, for a two-shot lead that runnersup Gil Morgan, Roger Maltbie, Peter Jacobsen and Wayne Levi could not overcome.

Maltbie and Morgan started the cloudy, windy day tied for the lead. But they closed with 2-over-par 74s playing in the last threesome with Floyd.

Levi finished with a 70 and Jacobsen matched par of 72 to tie Maltbie and Morgan at 283, 5-under-par.

The four players, tying for second place, picked up checks for $23,100 each.

BRUCE LIETZKE and Dan Pohl shared sixth at 284. Jay Haas, Scott Simpson and Tom Purtzer eighth at 285. Nicklaus was in a cluster of five players at 286 on the course that he designed.

Tom Watson, second on the current money list, closed with 70-287. Masters champion Craig Stadler, No 1 in 1982 winnings, had 76-296.

For Maltbie, it was a bitter disappointment. He had posted a Memorial record of 10-under-par 134 and was six shots ahead at the midway point.

"It was the week that was almost was," he said. "I thought I would win the tournament. I didn't give myself many birdie chances today though."

Rosario stops Viruet, nears shot at crown

By JIM HUNTER
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Undefeated Edwin Rosario moved closer to a title bout Sunday, stopping Edwin Viruet at 1:37 of the third round in their nationally televised junior welterweight fight.

The fight had been scheduled for 10 rounds at the Aladdin Hotel.

The 19-year-old Rosario, now 25-0 with 24 knockouts, halted his 31-year-old opponent for the first time in Viruet's career with a right to the jaw.

Viruet, 133½, fell to the floor, got up at the count of eight, but began wandering around the ring. Referee Harry Krause then stopped the fight.

Rosario, 134, from Puerto Rico, knocked down Viruet in the second round with a straight right to the side of the head. Viruet, from Jersey City, N.J., was up at the count of three and was pummelled the remaining 15 seconds of the round.

Rosario, ranked No. 2 by the World Boxing Council and No. 4 by the World Boxing Association, is a contender for the WBC 130-pound crown, won Saturday by Rafael "Bazooka" Limon.

Viruet now has a 35-5-2 record in his professional career that dates to 1969. The WBC's No. 10-ranked lightweight went 15 rounds with Roberto Duran in a lightweight title bout in 1977 and holds a draw in a title bout with current WBC junior welterweight champion Saul Mamby.

Gordon Johncock wins close Indy.

Frenzied 500 finish

Johncock staves off Mears

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The tower at the head of the track ticked off the laps as the brave men who pilot racing cars at blurring speeds zoomed around the oval, setting the stage for the closest, most dramatic finish in the history of the Indianapolis 500.

With a dozen laps to go Sunday, Gordon Johncock's Wildcat Cosworth was leading the race and Rick Mears, driving a Penske Ford, was chasing him. The difference between the two cars was 12 seconds and 350,000 frenzied fans, their cheers almost drowned out by the ear-splitting sounds of the engines, were about to witness Johncock survive the most exciting stretch duel in the 66 years that cars have been hurtling around this storied course.

It takes 200 trips around the 2.5-mile Indy track to finish this gruelling test of man and machine and at 190 laps, Mears, operating the fastest car in the field, had Johncock in his sights, trailing the leader by 10 seconds.

Mears had qualified his car at an astounding 207.044 mph, and now, driving with what the auto racing fraternity calls "pedal to metal," he made his move, slicing the distance between them as the tower ticked off the laps.

JOHNCOCK worried about those crucial final dozen laps.

"I wondered if I might blow a tire or run out of fuel, or some other crazy thing like has happened so many times in the past," he said. "As long as I kept running, I was all right. I knew I had to run all out."

He had finished in the top 10 in this test four straight times and had won it in 1973 in a rain-shortened race, getting the news while his car sat in the pits, waiting for a rainstorm to pass. This time, though, Johncock would have to earn his victory on the track, fighting off a frantic stretch drive by Mears.

At 192 laps, the gap was 8.5 seconds. At 193, it was 6.5. At 194, it was 6. At 195, it was 5.

As each lap was completed, Mears kept creeping closer and closer to Johncock, the Penske Ford responding majestically to its driver's demands.

"I was trying everything I could think of," said Mears, "but he had a lot better straightaway speed. I could catch him in the corners but I couldn't hold it."

Johncock, who had battled so hard to get in front, was not surrendering to the pressure Mears applied.

"No way I was going to back off," he said.

SO THE two-car duel continued as the laps on the tower fell one by one. At 196 laps, the gap was 3 seconds. At 197, it was 1.67. At 198, it was .56.

By now, the crowd was on its feet, howling at the sight of these two magnificent drivers dueling for the most prestigious title in their sport, battling man-to-man with the miles running out on them.

As they crossed the row of bricks that marks the start-finish line at Indy for the last time, they were just about parallel. The race would be decided in the final lap — 2.5 pulsating miles, one more trip around the oval that has recorded its share of heartaches and thrills in its storied history. This was going to be one to remember — the 45-year-old Johncock, one of seven drivers who have accounted for 14 victories in the last 16 Indys, against the 30-year-old Mears, who won here in 1979 in only his second try.

"I really didn't know where he was," Johncock confessed. "I couldn't see him in my mirror. I didn't know if he was behind me or to the side of me."

Kelley's triple gives Cubs split

Mike Kelley's two-run triple with one out in the sixth inning was the big blow in a three-run rally that gave the Midland Cubs an 8-5 win over the Arkansas Travelers and a split with the St. Louis Cardinal farmhands in Sunday's Texas League doubleheader at Cubs Stadium Sunday.

The Cubs lost the first game, 9-7, a contest in which they battled from behind to tie at 5-5 after five. It then slipped away when the Travelers rallied for four in the sixth, although Arkansas' winning pitcher Jeff Keener, 4-1, had to survive back-to-back homers by Mike Diaz and Carlos Lezcano in the seventh.

But it was the second game that saved the night for Midland and gave the Cubs the edge 4-3 in the rain-abused series which saw the teams play three straight doubleheaders.

AND THE nightcap didn't start all that encouragingly for Midland starter Carlos Gil, who must have wondered if anyone was on his side. Arkansas jumped to a 3-0 lead in the first when the Cubs committed four errors and failed to make plays on two other balls that could have been handled.

Joe Carter, who had hit his sixth homer of the season in the first game, powered his fourth of the series with Henry Cotto, on base after singling, in the bottom of the first to trim the Travs' lead to 3-2.

Jim Aducci followed a single by Andy Van Slyke with his sixth homer of the year and second of the night to give Arkansas starter Mark Riggins, who brought a 5-1 record into the game, a 5-2 lead after three.

BUT THE resillient Cubs were far from through. After Cotto singled up the middle in the fifth, Kelley came up with the big hit in a three-run rally, although it didn't go nearly as far as his triple an inning later.

"Whenever a third baseman plays back like that," he said, "I've got to lay it down." This time he did, perfectly for a base hit that set up run-scoring singles by Carter and Diaz and a run-producing double by Lezcano.

Of his game winner in the sixth, which came after Don Hyman walked and Cotto was safe on an error, the 5-9 outfielder from Starkville, Miss., said, "I knew he didn't want to walk me with Joe (Carter) coming up so I was looking for the fast ball and that's what I got."

Carter then grounded to short to plate Mike for his fourth rbi of the game.

LATER JOE, Chicago's No. 1 draft pick out of Wichita State last June, sat in a corner counting his home run money, $145 worth, and commented on what has been a big series for him. "I'm seeing the ball good and getting my rbis...with guys like Cotto and Kelley batting in front of me and always on base, that helps a lot."

Carter's only complaint was that he has been hitting into too many double plays, "And that's because Mike isn't taking out anybody at second. I take that back, there was a 5-2 second baseman he really busted up."

Kelley has his average over .300 now, but confesses, "I'm not hitting the ball as solidly as when I was batting .250. The difference is that some clinkers are beginning to fall."

Meanwhile, Lezcano didn't have a bad night for a guy who professes to be in a slump, two doubles, a homer and single. "I hadn't been swinging good the last few games, but tonight it felt better...It (the second game) was a good one to win. We had a bad first inning, but settled won. That seems to be our pattern. Even when we get behind, we are always in the game."

Kenneth Pryce picked up the night-cap win, relieving Gil with runners on first and third in the fifth and getting a snappy double play ball to end the inning. After that he yielded a two-out single to Tom Nieto in the sixth, a skipper down the left field line and Kelley threw the runner out at second as he

Chicks Etta Wind wins Ruidoso's Kansas Futurity

RUIDOSO DOWNS (AP) — The filly Chicks Etta Wind is no longer an unknown in quarter horse racing circles.

The 2-year-old filly captured the first jewel of quarter horse racing's version of the Triple Crown with an impressive victory Sunday in the $768,040 Kansas Futurity at Ruidoso Downs.

Chicks Etta Wind went into the 350-yard race with only two previous victories and earnings of less than $1,600. She emerged with the first place payoff of $254,092.

Owned by Gordon G. Francis of Yokon, Okla., Chicks Etta Wind wore down another filly, Call Me Favorite, to take the biggest win in her brief career. Prior to being shipped to Ruidoso Downs, Chicks Etta Wind had campaigned on the small, obscure Texas quarter horse tracks, where she won only one of her first five races.

The Kansas Futurity is the first leg of the three major races for 2-year-olds at the southern New Mexico track. The gross purse of the race, which included two consolation races, totaled $768,040. The purse in Sunday's finals was $593,645.

Ridden by 17-year-old Rudy Bustamante and trained by the jockey's father, Johnny Bustamante, Chicks Etta Wind spotted Call Me Favorite the early lead, then put on a stinging finishing kick to hit the wire in front.

Call Me Favorite, ridden by veteran quarter horse jockey Jerry Nicodemus and owned by Clarence Scharbauer Jr., of Midland, Texas, held on for second and earned $106,062. Native Time, another filly, finished third and picked up $49,597 for owner Barbara A. Smith of Lewisville, Texas.

Rudy Bustamante, who has been riding for two years, said the filly ran a near flawless race.

"She's a real nervous filly, but she didn't leap out of the gate like she usually does," said the young jockey. "I thought we were on the lead just about from the start. Then I just sat there — she was running so easily we just sailed in."

Johnny Bustamante said Chicks Etta Chick will now be pointed for the Rainbow Futurity in July and the $2.5 million All-American Futurity in September.

76ers square playoffs

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers preached what they practiced and as a result are tied at one victory each with the Los Angeles Lakers in the National Basketball Association championship playoff.

The 76ers, led by the irrepressible Julius "Dr. J." Erving, snapped a 12-game Lakers' winning streak — a record nine in this year's playoffs — with a 110-94 triumph Sunday.

The loss also ended Los Angeles' NBA mark of consecutive playoff victories on the road — dating to 1980 — at seven.

The best-of-seven-game series now shifts to Los Angeles for Games 3 and 4 Tuesday and Thursday nights, with the fifth game scheduled here next Sunday.

"We worked hard the last two days in practice on stopping their trap plays and we did," said 76ers' coach Billy Cunningham.

Erving, who scored 24 points, grabbed 14 rebounds and handed out three assists, agreed with his coach.

"We learned (in practice) how to deal with their traps.

"We exposed them in the first half, and forced adjustments," Erving said.

"We have taught ourselves how to beat the Lakers"

The Lakers' traps consist of double-teaming the ball. It forces the opposition into turnovers and keys the L.A. fastbreak.

Philadelphia shut the trap doors by spreading around the court and making quick passes, then patiently waiting for the open shot.

It bordered on a zone offense.

The 76ers took the lead at 10-9 and never trailed. They opened a 34-26 first quarter lead, and upped it to 57-44 at halftime.

They led by 11 at halftime in the first game and by 15 with 5:59 left in the third period before falling apart as the Lakers outscored them 40-9 and took a 16 point lead.

Not Sunday.

The Lakers never got closer than six in the third period, and eight in the final quarter. The Sixers had a 19-10 spurt in the third as Andrew Toney hit five of seven for 10 of his 12 points.

Toney also contributed 11 assists in the game.

The Lakers scored six straight points to make it, 98-90, with 6:30 remaining as the sellout crowd of 18,364 stirred uneasily.

But the 76ers went on a 12-4 spurt to keep the game in hand.

In addition to Erving, the 76ers got 19 points and eight assists from Maurice Cheeks, and 12 points from Caldwell Jones, Bobby Jones and Richardson had 10 each.

Another Sixers' standout was seldom used center Earl Cureton, who played 15 minutes in relief of foul-plagued Caldwell Jones and Darryl Dawkins.

Cureton contributed eight rebounds, five on the offensive boards, and scored six points.

Pileup ousts Foyt, Andretti

It hardly mattered. Johncock knew Mears was close enough to take the race he had been favored to win. He knew he would have to hold that Penske Ford off in that last lap.

As the white flag signaling the final lap was displayed, the two cars were virtually side by side. Now they flew into the first turn and Johncock pulled in front ever so slightly and the cars went hurtling toward the second corner.

Into the backstretch, Mears stayed right on Johncock's tail. The duel stayed that close around the third and fourth turns and into the final straightaway. And they crossed the finish line that way, separated by 16 one-hundredths of a second, a blink of the eye worth about $300,000 to Johncock.

"One more lap and it could have been sixteen-hundredths of a second the other way," said a disappointed Mears, who led for 71 of the 200 laps.

JOHNCOCK, who led 54 laps, had moved in front with 100 miles to go and then got an important edge on Mears when both cars made their last pit stop to fuel up for the final, fateful duel. Mears pulled in at 184 laps but got caught behind rookie Herm Johnson's car and took 20 seconds in the pits — far too long. Johncock, who went in at 185 laps, needed only 13 seconds for that final stop.

"I got behind a slower car as I pulled into the pits for the last time," Mears said. "He should have pulled to the side and kept the middle lane open. But he stayed in the middle and I hit him."

The collision was minor — not enough to damage either car — but enough to delay Mears and, he said, cost him crucial time.

"That could have given me another three or four seconds," Mears said. "If I had another three or four seconds, we could have caught Gordy."

Mears also was involved in the most frightening moment of the race, a crackup which occurred before the event ever began. It eliminated four cars on the pace lap and delayed the start of the race by some 45 minutes.

Mears, who captured the pole position on the first day of qualifying, was setting the pace as the cars approached the start. Then Kevin Cogan, his Penske teammate who was driving alongside Mears in the front row, veered only yards from the starting line, derailing A.J. Foyt, who was racing at Indy for the 25th time, and bouncing back across the track and taking 1969 winner Mario Andretti with him.

Mears was blamed by some drivers who said he had brought the field to a start too slowly. Mears explained that race officials had cautioned the drivers, "not to speed up, then slow down and speed up again .. There are some people who have to blame somebody for everything."

Foyt repaired his car and returned to the race with the crowd roaring for the sentimental favorite. The four-time champion gave them more to cheer for when he dashed in front and held the lead for the first 22 laps of the race, setting a blistering pace of 194.342 on the first tour of the oval.

But his car was giving him trouble and after eight pit stops, the veteran was forced out after 95 laps. "The handling was very poor all day," he said.

Foyt tried hard to stay in the chase, pitting time and again and once even trying to make some emergency repairs himself on the transmission before taking off his crash helmet and gloves and walking away from his car.

Would he be back next year?

"I imagine so," said the man who has driven more miles at Indy than anyone in history.

During the race, there were a number of other crashes. Danny Ongais, seriously injured in an accident last year, walked away from another on Turn 2 along with Jerry Sneva. Tony Bettenhausen crashed on the main stretch and Danny Sullivan also wound up in a wreck. By the time the race ended, only eight of the original 33 starters were still running.

Johncock's winning average speed was 162.029 mph, the second-fastest Indy ever and just a few ticks off the record 162.962 by the late Mark Donohue in 1972. Mears was exactly three-thousands of a second slower at 162.026. Pancho Carter finished third at 161.327, and Tom Sneva, who led for 29 laps, finished fourth at 160.668.

Cards rally to dump Padres, 6-5

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Dan Iorg says that "calm, cool and collected" is not a description that can always be applied to the St. Louis Cardinals.

On Sunday, it certainly would have seemed out of place.

The Cardinals, shut out for eight innings, had to score three runs in the bottom of the ninth and three more with two out in the 10th inning to beat the San Diego Padres 6-5.

Yet, Iorg said the three adjectives could have been applied to him when he entered the game in the 10th as a pinch hitter with runners on first and second and two out. Two runs already had crossed the plate, tying the score 5-5 when Iorg, a lefty hitter, came up as the first hitter against right-hander Floyd Chiffer.

"I was calm. I was probably the calmest player out there," Iorg said. "When somebody else is up there, I'm really nervous ..."

Iorg picked on a 1-1 delivery that he sent into center field for the game-winning single, and the Cards won for the fifth time in their past six games.

Tim Lollar, a rookie, and Gary Lucas were working on a four-hit shutout when St. Louis came to bat in the ninth, trailing 3-0. Lonnie Smith smacked an RBI double, another run scored on a ground ball and David Green forged the tie with a sacrifice fly.

In the top of the 10th, San Diego scored a pair on pinch-hitter Joe Lefebvre's double and a ground ball.

"What I didn't want to have happen eventually did," San Diego Manager Dick Williams said. "I didn't want to face Iorg with a right-handed pitcher. I stayed away from it for two innings, but my pitcher (Lucas) couldn't get anybody out."

The Cardinals started their decisive rally when George Hendrick singled. Smith doubled in Hendrick, and Mike Ramsey singled home Smith. After Lucas hit a batter, Chiffer came on to face Iorg.

Bruce Sutter, 3-1, was the winner despite allowing the two runs in the 10th.

Dodgers 7, Cubs 0

Fernando Valenzuela tossed his first shutout of the year, scattering eight hits. Valenzuela, 7-4, struck out a season-high nine batters and got home-run support from Pedro Guerrero, who hit his 10th, and Steve Garvey, who blasted No. 3.

Valenzuela also drove in a run in the fourth to give the Dodgers a 2-0 lead against Cubs right-hander Ferguson Jenkins, 3-6.

Chicago mounted its only threat in the first when the Cubs had runners on first and third with one out, but Keith Moreland grounded into a double play.

Reds 7, Expos 3

Mike Vail, Eddie Milner and Ron Oester homered to help the Cincinnati Reds snap Montreal's eight-game winning streak. Oester hit a solo homer in the third inning, Vail had a three-run shot in the seventh and Milner added a two-run homer in the eighth.

Montreal led 3-1, aided by Al Oliver's two-run homer, until Cincinnati scored four runs in the seventh. Dave Concepcion's RBI single preceded Vail's homer.

Bob Shirley, 2-2, got the victory despite pitching only one-third of an inning in relief of Frank Pastore, and Charlie Leibrandt hurled three hitless innings for his first save.

Mets 9, Astros 5

George Foster banged his first home run at Shea Stadium since April 18, and New York pounded out 14 hits to win the final game of its three-game series with Houston. Hubie Brooks had four of the Mets' hits.

New York led 7-0 after two innings, scoring four in the first, two on Foster's sixth homer off Bob Knepper, who got just two outs in the game. The Mets added three more in the second as Brooks tripled.

Mike Scott, 4-4, gave way to Neil Allen after 6⅓ innings, and the Mets reliever posted his 13th save of the year.

Ball bounces right for Yankees in 8-6 victory over Twins

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

The New York Yankees are getting all the good bounces these days — and the Minnesota Twins the bad ones.

"We're playing well. We're just not getting the breaks," said Minnesota Manager Billy Gardner after Sunday's 8-6 loss to the Yankees in 10 innings.

The latest bounce that broke the Twins' backs came in the eighth inning of the game at the Hubert H. Metrodome. The Twins had battled back from an early 6-0 deficit to pull within a run.

Facing Goose Gossage, the Yankees' top reliever, Gary Gaetti walked and Larry Milbourne singled. Then Gary Ward hit a ball into the right field corner that appeared likely to clear the bases.

But the ball bounced off the artificial turf and over the wall for a ground-rule double, allowing only one run to score. The Yankees got out of the inning, then won it in the 10th on Willie Randolph's run-scoring single and Oscar Gamble's RBI double.

"When things are going bad, nothing seems to work," said Gardner, whose Twins have lost 11 straight games and 16 of their last 17.

The Twins also had another chance to score after loading the bases one inning earlier, but Yankee first baseman John Mayberry made a saving catch of a liner by Randy Johnson, diving to his right and coming up with the ball.

It was the fourth straight time the Twins had lost either in the ninth or 10th inning. They've been victimized by late-game lightning by the Yankees three straight times.

"I like the ballclub to get used to winning like that," said Yankee Manager Gene Michael. "It gives us an edge. It helps."

After a slow start this year, the defending American League champions have won nine of their last 10 contests and are four games over .500.

Indians 4, White Sox 2

Andre Thornton hit a three-run homer and Toby Harrah added a solo shot to support Len Barker's nine-hit pitching and spark Cleveland over Chicago. It was the Indians' seventh straight victory.

Thornton hit his third-inning blast off White Sox starter Dennis Lamp, 4-1, to boost his AL RBI lead to 44. The homer was his 13th.

Harrah's seventh-inning homer, also off Lamp, was his 10th and enabled him to raise his batting average to .389. Barker, 6-2, struck out 10 and walked two to record his third complete game.

"Andy is doing it," Harrah said of Thornton, the slugging designated hitter who had missed most of the previous two seasons with injuries. "He's been outstanding as the number four hitter."

Brewers 7, Angels 3

Cecil Cooper capped a four-run rally with a two-run homer in the fifth inning to spark Milwaukee over California.

The Brewers erased a 3-0 deficit after getting just one hit through four innings off right-hander Bruce Kison, 4-1. Mark Brouhard doubled, took third on a single by Jim Gantner and scored on another double by Marshall Edwards. Roy Howell's sacrifice fly scored Gantner before Cooper slammed his sixth homer of the season, giving Milwaukee a 4-3 edge.

The Angels' runs off Jim Slaton, 4-1, came on Fred Lynn's solo homer in the second inning, his second, and a two-run blast in the fourth by Doug DeCinces, his sixth.

Blue Jays 6, Orioles 0

Rookie Jim Gott and Roy Lee Jackson combined on a one-hitter and Damaso Garcia knocked in two runs, leading Toronto over Baltimore.

Gott, 2-1, fanned six batters and allowed only a fifth-inning single by Rick Dempsey before being lifted with a stiff right shoulder after issuing his fourth walk, to leadoff batter Terry Crowley in the seventh. Jackson, making his 17th appearance in Toronto's 46th game, recorded his fourth save. Jim Palmer, 2-3, was the loser.

Rangers 8, Royals 1

Doc Medich scattered six hits and Billy Sample hit two home runs to lead Texas over Kansas City. Medich, 3-5, walked two and struck out two for his first complete game of the year.

The Rangers took charge early, moving to a 4-0 lead after three innings. Sample hit his first homer of the season leading off the first inning, then slugged his second in the eighth to cap the Rangers' scoring.

Tigers 5-3, A's 2-10

Alan Trammell broke a 1-1 tie with a two-run single in the fourth inning, sending Detroit over Oakland in the first game of their doubleheader. The Tigers managed only five hits altogether, but Oakland helped them with 10 walks.

Rickey Henderson stole four bases, raising his season total to 49 in 49 games, smashed three hits and drove in three runs to pace Oakland's second-game victory.

Mariners 2, Red Sox 1

Richie Zisk and Gary Gray delivered run-scoring doubles after two were out in the ninth inning as Seattle rallied to beat Boston.

Boston's John Tudor, 4-3, walked leadoff batter Bobby Brown in the ninth, but was one out away from shutting out the Mariners when Zisk doubled home the tying run. Gray then belted reliever Mark Clear's first pitch for the game-winning hit.

The Red Sox had held a 1-0 lead by virtue of Jim Rice's first-inning single.

Cubs split doubleheader to edge Arkansas, 4-3 tried for the double with second baseman Javier Fierro making a diving tag. And when Greg Guin opened the seventh with a single, he was quickly wiped out in a double play.

BRUINS BREWIN'S—The Cubs are off tonight and Tuesday before opening a five-game series at Amarillo. They return home next Monday to face San Antonio...GM Bill Schammel says Cub paid attendance is down 226 over last year, but actual attendance is up 1,166, which is good, considering that the Cubs have suffered six rainouts, compared to one at a similar stage last year...In the opener, Barry Sayler flied to left and the ball dropped in for a hit when Kelley never saw the ball. "Early in the game, the stands are empty and with a righthanded batter up, the sun glares off the empty seats. It's hard to pick up a the ball's flight and that's what happened to me. Everybody was yelling at me, trying to help, but I just didn't know where it was."...Fierro went into the held behind second to throw out Jose Gonzalez at first with a whirling throw in the third...

Cub fans support no lights

CHICAGO (AP) — "Save A Great Tradition," said the signs that appeared in Wrigley Field on Saturday as residents of the community surrounding the oldest National League ballpark continued a drive to prevent the installation of lights.

Signs in brilliant orange lettering on a yellow background carried slogans including "Support Day Baseball," "Baseball, Sunshine and the Cubs" and "No Lights."

Wrigley Field is the only major league baseball park without lights. Tribune Co. purchased the team from William Wrigley nearly a year ago and the new management has indicated that lights and night baseball are part of future plans.

The ballpark is located on the city's North Side in a neighborhood where residents are opposed to night baseball.

The Illinois House recently passed a bill that prohibits excessive noise in the neighborhood after 10 p.m., including crowd noise, organ music and public address announcements. The bill now is before the Illinois Senate.

Moderate summer oil price increase projected

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices will rise moderately this summer as oil companies cautiously weigh the effects of price increases, an oil industry analyst says.

Dan Lundberg, publisher of the weekly Lundberg Letter, said consumers will notice prices rising as the summer driving season increases demand slightly.

He also suggested self-service stations will lead the way in price increases, just as they did with price cuts.

But, according to Lundberg's newsletter published Friday, gasoline should be plentiful and stable supplies should ensure no sharp increases.

Lundberg said that despite a predicted increase in summer gas usage, overall gasoline demand should decline in 1982 for the fourth consecutive year. He cited an Independent Petroleum Association of America projection that gasoline demand will fall 2.1 percent in 1982 from the previous year.

According to Lundberg, the price edge in diesel fuel over gasoline may be returning for the summer driving season.

In May, he said, diesel was still 6.4 cents a gallon more expensive than regular on the average, but 0.4 cents a gallon cheaper than unleaded. He said a diesel fuel price edge might improve sales of diesel cars and reduce gasoline demand even further.

Wharton predicts economy may collapse due to oil debts

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The mounting debt for oil purchases in many nations, coupled with U.S. trade deficits, could lead to a collapse of the world economy in the coming decade, according to a study published here.

Such a collapse could result in restructuring the world's economy, with regional trading relationships springing up to replace today's global marketplace, according to the study in the spring issue of the Wharton Magazine.

"As oil import bills grow, international debt burdens grow and the financial system becomes more unstable," authors Richard Drobnick and Selwyn Enzer wrote in the magazine, which is published by the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School.

Developing countries owed an estimated $530 billion in 1981, much of that for imported oil and most of it "unrepayable," according to the authors, who work for the Twenty Year Forecast Project at the University of Southern California's Center for Futures Research.

In addition, the authors say, "The United States has contributed to the unstable state of international financial affairs by dramatically expanding the international money supply" and running up a cumulative trade deficit in the 1970s of about $140 billion.

"This 'easy money' policy ... promoted the international inflationary spiral and permitted the debt buildup that presently threatens the viability of the international financial system," the article says.

The authors contend that neither Arab nations nor the world's lending institutions can continuously advance large financial credits to oil importers.

"Such an untenable situation is likely to lead to cancellation or repudiation of debts, reduced sales of Arabian petroleum, or, possibly, military conflict," the study says.

If financial instability leads to economic collapse, the authors say it could spell the end of global trading patterns and give rise to regional trade relationships between manufacturing countries and neighbors rich in oil or natural resources.

Natural trade partners would be the United States, Mexico and Canada; China and Japan; Western Europe and African or Arab states; and the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe and Arab countries, the study says.

Other possible consequences include a collapse of OPEC, principally due to the increased energy independence of the United States; increased OPEC investment in underdeveloped nations to reduce the mounting oil debt; or possible military intervention in the oil-producing nations by industrial powers to establish international control of oil fields, the study says.

The authors say major upheavals can be avoided if the United States ends its deficit spending and high inflation and by an international agreement to reduce the oil debt, possibly writing it off in what they call an "equitable" manner.

"This cooperation will be very difficult to achieve because all the necessary remedies are known to harm important stakeholders in the near term," the authors say. "If, however, the major trading nations cannot cooperate successfully, the problems plaguing the international system will still be resolved, quite possibly by a cataclysmic breakdown of the existing system."

Oil bartering helps spur Iranian economy

By SCHEHEREZADE FARAMARZI

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's government, looking for a quick fix to rescue its war-shattered economy, has signed a series of barter agreements in which Iranian oil is exchanged at reduced prices for imported goods.

The deals conceal the real price of oil Iran is offering to countries such as Syria, Turkey, Greece, Pakistan, Uruguay and Nicaragua.

Western diplomats say Iran has sold its oil for as little as $25 a barrel under these deals, or about $9 a barrel less than mandated under the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' current pricing system.

"You could say they are horse trading and they are pretty good at it," a Turkish businessman, who does business in Tehran, said recently.

IRAN, WHICH has been at war with Iraq for nearly two years, has been exchanging its oil for petrochemicals, phosphates, meat, coffee, sugar, cigarettes, grain, rice, livestock and steel products. The cost of importing those products had been draining Iran's dwindling foreign exchange reserves before the barter agreements began early this year.

One Middle East oil expert, who declined to be identified, described the barter deals as a temporary expedient that was "risky" in the long run because the oil markets are improving and prices are heading upward.

While many other oil-exporting countries are having trouble marketing their oil because of the current oversupply on world markets, Iran has boosted its production to perhaps 2 million barrels daily — almost double the 1 million barrels a day of six months ago, the oil expert said.

That higher production — which would exceed Iran's OPEC-mandated output quota of 1.2 million barrels daily — and the discount pricing have angered some of Iran's fellow cartel members. At OPEC's recent meeting in Quito, Ecuador, the Iranian delegation said it was verbally attacked by Saudi Arabia for violating the quota system and for discounting its oil.

Iranian officials contend they did not make the barter deals as a means of selling oil cheap.

"WE STRONGLY deny that we are selling oil at less than OPEC prices because we accept the conditions of OPEC," of which Iran is a member, Iranian oil ministry spokesman Ali Honardoost said in a telephone interview.

Honardoost, who declined to say what Iran's current oil production was "because of the state of war we are in," described the new trade agreements as "a bank procedure and we don't pay cash."

A lack of foreign exchange has been a major problem for Iran in paying its import bills — $1.5 billion monthly for food alone. Iran's currency reserves have dwindled to an estimated $1 billion from $14 billion before the war started in September 1980.

As the oil-revenue surplus accumulated during the reign of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi has dried up, the revolutionary government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has tightened control over the economy by taking such actions as nationalizing industries and the banking system.

A bill pending before the Majlis, or parliament, would nationalize foreign trade as well.

IRAN AGREED in March to sell Syria 65 million barrels of oil a year for $2.21 billion, or $34 dollars a barrel. But economic experts note that Iran gave Syria 7.5 million barrels free of charge, effectively discounting the oil to $32 a barrel.

The apparent purpose was to keep Syrian President Hafez Assad's government from being dependent on either Iraq or conservative Arab oil producers such as Saudi Arabia. Syria has supported Iran in its war with Iraq.

In exchange for the oil, Syria agreed to sell Iran phosphates, barley, glass, lentils and other goods. But one Western economist noted that Syria's total exports in 1980 amounted to only slightly more than $2 billion, indicating that Iran had extended long-term credit to the Syrians in exchange for political support.

According to the official Iranian news agency, Iran also struck a bargain with Pakistan in May calling for Iran to provide 10,000 barrels of crude oil a day in exchange for textiles, chickens, rice, iron, steel, fertilizer, sugar, meat, fish, raisins, saffron and zinc from the neighboring Islamic republic.

The stop-gap solution to the foreign exchange and import problems have apparently won a reprieve for the sagging Iranian economy even though travelers say that Iranian housewives still must stand in long lines for basic foodstuffs such as meat and eggs and that rationing of fuel and other basics continues.

"THREE WAS a significant drop in the national income (about 40 percent from the $56 million of 1978, the last year of the shah's reign) and a very high inflation rate of 40 percent in 1979," says Marwann Iskandar, a respected Middle East economist in Beirut. "And the situation became very serious after the United States froze Iranian assets following the seizure of the American hostages which led the Iranians to face an acute shortage of foreign exchange."

But, Iskandar notes, oil prices rose by 130 percent between 1978 and 1980, bringing in sorely needed revenues.

And Iran's situation has been helped by another factor, he adds. The war has resulted in vast destruction of Iran's oil installations and drained off resources for weapons purchases, but it also has limited consumer demands, he says.

"Very liitle consumption is required because people are living through war conditions and do not have the same needs," he says. "They are willing to settle for much less."

Interior secretary's war on wilderness attacked

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written by The Wilderness Society. Although in news form, it seems a commentary in disguise. It is presented here so oil news readers may consider "the other side" of the story.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Just three months after Interior Secretary James Watt held himself up to the nation as a "protector" of America's wilderness, the Interior Department has given the go-ahead for oil and gas drilling in one of the nation's largest and most pristine wildlands near Jackson Hole, Wyo., according to William A. Turnage, executive director of The Wilderness Society.

Turnage attacked as "yet another shot in Watt's war on wilderness" the issuance last week of a permit to Getty Oil Company for exploratory drilling in the Gros Ventre wilderness, which the forest Service recommended to Congress for addition to the National Wilderness Preservation System. Gros Ventre, in the Bridger Teton national Forest, also was highlighted last fall in a public television documentary on Secretary Watt's wilderness policy. "Secretary Watt had it within his power to stop drilling in the Gros Ventre but he either didn't try or didn't care. So much for his guise as a protector of wilderness," Turnage declared.

Turnage described the drilling as "a long shot with disastrous consequences." Pointing out that the area is thought to contain only about 100 billion cubic feet of natural gas, or the equivalent of 16 million barrels of oil, Turnage declared, "We have abundant natural gas and that small amount of oil would last the nation less than 24 hours."

Moreover, he said, the chances of making a significant discovery are virtually nil. Turnage, pointed out that more than 130 wells have been drilled in the Bridger Teton National Forest, with only one successful find of natural gas and none of oil.

In its final Environmental Impact Statement, the Forest Service conceded that it is "very unlikely" that Getty would find a large field and that "at best" the Bear Thrust reserves would be "low to moderate".

Referring to Watt's February 21 appearance on "Meet the Press," when he said wilderness areas" are special lands and should be preserved in a natural state" and unveiled his so-called wilderness protection legislation, Turnage said" for the first time since that television charade Secretary Watt had a chance to protect one of the rarest wilderness areas in the United States and what did he do? He did nothing, and as a result the integrity and irreplaceable values of the Gros Ventre wilderness have been put on the block in exchange for less than a days's supply of oil or natural gas — and if no gas or oil are found, the drilling and destruction will have been for nothing."

The permit to drill in the Bear Thrust unit of the Gros Ventre was issued by the Bureau of Land Management on a lease held by Getty Oil since 1969, prior to the Forest Service's recommendation that the area be designated as part of the nation's wilderness system. The 290,000-area, one of the largest undesignated wilderness in the lower 48 states, has traditionally been managed to retain its wilderness characteristics over the years. A similar lease held by a refinery association for the nearby Cache Creek area of the national forest was dropped by the refinery last year in the face of public and political pressure.

"There were several major points at which Secretary Watt could have acted to protect this wilderness from oil and gas development," Turnage said," and instead he either allowed or directed that the permit to drill be processed and approved." he said avenues open to Watt were:

— Negotiations with Getty, as was done at Cache Creek, to withdraw the lease.

— A proposal for the federal government to buy back the lease rights from Getty or trade with Getty for equivalent lease rights on other federal lands.

— Moreover, Turnage charged, between two alternatives for access into Bear Thrust for the drilling — less-damaging helicopter access or extremely damagings road construction — the Interior Department chose "the worst" by giving Getty authory Aproposal for the federal government to buy back the lease rights from Getty or trade with Getty for equivalent lease rights on other federal lands.

Moreover, Turnage charged, between two alternatives for access into Bear Thrust for the drilling — less-damaging helicopter access or extremely damaging road construction — the Interior Department chose "the worst" by giving Getty authority to build a 6-mile access road through the Little Granite watershed, also part of gthe wilderness area.

'Recession-proof' Texas feeling 'joblessness' pinch

HOUSTON (AP) — Southeast Texas residents have been gouged by the recession and joined the ranks of the unemployed in higher numbers, despite the strength of the petrochemical industry and the jobs that industry provided.

Texas Employment Commission figures show most of the 15 counties surrounding Houston have unemployment above levels recorded in April 1981.

Fort Bend County's unemployment rate stands at 3.3 percent — double the number out of work a year ago. Washington County, with only 309 people of its 10,718-member force out of work, has seen the unemployment rate triple in 12 months.

But the figures offer little solace to the 15,050 people out of work in the Beaumont area, which includes Jefferson, Orange and Hardin counties.

Four years ago economists predicted the area — buoyed by the petrochemical industry — would boast the nation's best job market in the 1980s.

Hardest hit by the economic downturn is Orange County, where unemployment last month soared to 12.1 percent, above the state average of 6.5 percent and the 9.2 percent national average.

"I don't expect it to get better," said Charlean Jackson, employment commission district director in Beaumont. "People have thought of Texas and the petrochemical industry as recession proof. Well, we're seeing that they are not."

The petrochemical industry — once the area's greatest strength — has become one of its weaknesses, Ms. Jackson said.

Demand for petroleum and petroleum-based products has dropped. Refineries and chemical plants have cut back production and construction of new facilities.

Drilling equipment manufacturers are less work. Shipyards specializing in offshore drilling equipment are scaling back and most other segments of the area's economy are suffering.

In the past, Ms. Jackson said, "a machinist could always have his pick of jobs. Now he can't get them. That's a little scary."

In the past 12 months, unemployment in Galveston County has climbed from 6.4 percent to 8.9 percent.

The rate had reached 10.6 percent in March. But Mary Martin, director of the employment commission's Galveston branch, said two condominum projects increased jobs and other projects, including proposed beachfront hotels, are "on the drawing boards."

Ms. Martin said the Galveston area also is startingg to feel the effects of a slowdown in offshore oil drilling and playoffs in shipbuilding and repair industries.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Money supply and interest rates

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I'm sure many people are as confused as I am by reports in newspapers and on television concerning the "money supply" and interest rates. When the money supply goes up, the papers and TV report that interest rates are expected to rise. When the money supply goes down, they report interest rates are expected to drop.

This sounds crazy to me. When the money supply increases, that means there's more available for lending and interest rates should go down. Conversely, when the money supply decreases, interest rates should go up. Am I wrong?

A. Nope. You put your finger on what is basically the old rule of supply and demand. With money, supply is the number of dollars available and demand is the interest rate on loans.

So, absent of any other factor, an increase in the money supply should result in lower interest rates and vice versa. However, letters to this corner over the years indicate many readers overlook a factor that greatly influences interest rates.

That factor is the Federal Reserve System. In its job of administering the nation's monetary policy, the "Fed" attempts to control the amount of money available to banks for lending.

When the money supply takes a big jump, the Fed usually tightens its reins on bank loans. That results in higher interest rates. And, if the money supply decreases, the Fed usually loosens bank credit.

Every newspaper story I have ever read about the money supply has mentioned what the Fed is expected to do, in reaction to the increase or decrease in the money supply numbers.

TV reports are often something else. After all, it's pretty difficult to provide a complete story on a reasonably complicated financial subject in the 30 seconds or so typically allotted on the tube.

•

Q. Can you tell me how the Federal Reserve System increases and decreases the amount of money banks have available for loans.

A. The Fed does it through three basic methods.

First off, banks are required to put aside as "reserves" part of their deposits. Those reserves cannot be put out as loans. By changing the percentage of deposits banks have to keep as "reserve requirements," the Fed can curb or spur banks' lending ability.

An increase in the reserve requirement means a bank has less money to lend. A decrease frees up money to be put out on loan.

Second, the Fed lends money to banks and charges interest at the "discount rate." By raising the discount rate, the Fed makes borrowing by banks more expensive. A reduction in the discount rate encourages bank borrowing from the Fed.

However, the Fed's third and most important control is through it's "open market operations." That is the buying and selling of securities — mostly U.S. government debt obligations.

When the Fed sells securities, it collects checkbook money. That money is no longer available for lending purposes, because it is transferred from banks to the Fed. When the Fed buys securities, it pays the banks with checkbook money. That increase the money banks have available to put out on loans.

Q. The government and various economists say people should save and invest more, to pep up the economy. Does this mean just putting your money in banks and savings and loan associations is good for the economy?

A. Even though it's not just as simple as that, the answer is "yes." Money you put in a bank or S&L enables that depository institution to makes loans. When borrowed money is used for such purposes as expanding a business or building a house, it creates jobs. That is good for the nation's economy — and all of us.

Dead whale found in bay; Skeleton will go to museum

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The skeleton of a rare 24-foot Minke whale found dead in San Diego Bay will be donated to a museum in Los Angeles or San Diego, says a spokesman for the National Marine Fisheries Service.

A salvage team carved up the three to four-ton animal Sunday, a day after it was found floating near a pier where aircraft carriers moor.

A marine biologist theorized the whale was struck by a large ship and dragged into the bay.

The smallest of the great whales, the Minke, a member of the baleen family, is one of the world's most heavily harvested species. They are common to many parts of the world but seldom sighted.

"It's the first Minke we've seen — dead or alive — in Southern California in the last 10 to 15 years," said Bill Perrin, a marine biologist who helped tow the whale ashore at the Coast Guard's air station landing.

"We didn't want to see it go to waste," Perrin said. He said the skeleton probably will go to a museum in Los Angeles or San Diego.

Using a whaler's standard gear — a flensing iron and blubber hook — two marine biologists removed strips of blubber from the carcass Sunday.

Dark gray with white bands on its flippers, the Minke whale, also known as the little pike, is a popular protein source in Japan. Oil is made from its blubber and the rest is used for dogfood.

Infrequently, a migrating gray whale, California's official state mammal, meanders into San Diego Bay's by accident. Last year, a cow and her calf created a stir when spotted by dozens of tourists on an excursion boat.

"It's very, very unusual to get any this far into the harbor. They are usually spotted and diverted," said Dan Smutz, a Coast Guard spokesman.

"I would guess it was hit by a good-sized ship and carried in," said Larry Hansen, 32, who heads the marine fisheries salvage program. A smaller vessel would have been damaged had it struck the whale, he said.

Four years ago, on the coast of Point Loma, Hansen found the remains of a giant gray whale that had rammed a destroyer head-on and was cleaved in half.

Marion looks 'bombed' in tornado aftermath

MARION, Ill. (AP) — Severe thunderstorms flinging hail and rain sent new funnel clouds dancing over this community as workers plowed through tons of debris from a tornado that killed at least 10 and left Marion looking "as if it had been bombed."

None of the funnel clouds sighted Sunday touched down, but the hail and rain forced rescue workers to seek shelter temporarily, delaying the search for more victims.

The tornado Saturday afternoon left more than 100 injured in this southern Illinois community. At least 44 people remained hospitalized Sunday.

Hospital officials said at least 65 additional people sought treatment for injuries, mostly puncture wounds, received while combing the wreckage Sunday.

Officials said the death toll may rise as workers lift piles of twisted steel, glass and concrete.

Scores of homes and more than 100 apartments were destroyed. Officials estimated 75 businesses in the tornado's 15-mile-long path also were destroyed.

Gov. James R. Thompson gave an initial damage assessment of $100 million. Thompson said at a news conference Sunday that he had talked to President Reagan and would ask the federal government to declare Williamson County a major disaster area.

The state already has declared it a disaster area.

State Sen. Gene Johns, D-Marion, who toured the destruction with Thompson, said the damage will further erode Marion's faltering economy.

"A lot of people are going to be out of work or out of business. It's going to be a real economic plunge," Johns predicted.

Tom Kirby, owner of the Village Squire men's clothing store in one of three flattened shopping centers, salvaged most of his inventory. "I may have to pitch a tent (to reopen)," he said, "but I cannot afford to be closed. Have you checked the economy lately?"

An 8:30 p.m. curfew was imposed for the second consecutive night to curb looting. City streets again were patrolled by National Guard troops and state police, as well as volunteers from several other jurisdictions.

"We stopped it (looting) before it got started," said Ron Swafford, assistant police chief in the community of about 13,000.

"The townspeople are taking it pretty well. We've set up emergency housing in several churches," he said.

E. Erie Jones, director of the Illinois Emergency Services and Disaster Agency, said records of past tornado fatalities were not immediately available, but that Saturday's twister was "the worst tornado he's ever seen," according to an emergency services spokesman.

"He does not remember one with this many fatalities in the last 20 or 30 years," said spokesman Chuck Jones.

He said a tornado normally moves along the ground at about 40 mph, but the one that hit Marion moved slower, giving residents time to take cover.

"We have some reports that, toward the end, this one was almost stationary. That's a unique twist...and it enabled the people to take protective action," Jones said.

"How do you describe this?" asked an Illinois Department of Criminal Investigations officer, who asked not to be identified. "It looks as if it (Marion) had been bombed."

Weather wouldn't indicate beginning of summer season

By The Associated Press

Churning skies left 15-foot snow drifts in Montana, dumped nearly an inch of rain in five minutes in Ohio and sent rescue workers scurrying back to storm cellars in tornado-ravaged Marion, Ill., as the death toll from Memorial Day weekend storms rose to at least 16.

"A lot of people are going to be out of work or out of business," said state Sen. Gene Johns of Marion. The tornado, which killed at least 10 and destroyed 75 businesses Saturday as it cut a 15-mile path of destruction, caused an estimated $100 million in damage.

"It's going to be a real economic plunge," said Johns, a Democrat.

At least 1,000 people were left homeless, more than 100 were injured and an undetermined number were still missing Sunday.

Severe thunderstorms and funnel cloud sightings Sunday interrupted workers plowing through tons of debris, but the tornadoes did not touch down.

In Montana, snowplows broke through drifts Sunday to end the isolation of Lewiston and Stanford, which had been cut off by a 15-inch snowfall. The National Weather Service warned of flooding when temperatures reached 60 degrees.

The heaviest rain was recorded in Ohio, where .83 of an inch fell in five minutes in Columbus on Saturday, breaking a record there of .67 of an inch in one hour set in 1897.

Flooding was also reported in West Virginia, where bridges were washed out by 4.25 inches of rain. Hundreds of residents of Kanawha and Fayette counties in the central part of the state fled their homes.

Meanwhile, nearly 400,000 people flocked to Los Angeles County beaches on Sunday to enjoy the first clear day of the Memorial Day weekend.

The forecast for today called for more sun in the West and rain in the East and Midwest.

Illinois Gov. James R. Thompson, who gave the $100 million damage estimate for the Marion tornado, asked President Reagan to declare Williamson County a major disaster area.

E. Erie Jones, director of the Illinois Emergency Services and Disaster Agency, said the slow movement of the tornado may have saved lives. "Typically a tornado travels along the ground at about 40 mph," Jones said. "But we have some reports that, toward the end, this one was almost stationary."

In Stanford, Mont., Sheriff Dennis Stokes said 100 motorists were stranded by the snowstorm that moved into the state Friday but were able to get out Sunday in the wake of snowplows.

The weather service said residents of Belt, Mont., were watching the rising waters of Belt Creek, preparing to evacuate if necesary. The storm was blamed for the death of a woman whose truck was hit by a train near Great Falls during the snowstorm on Friday.

In Ohio, winds of up to 76 mph Saturday did an estimated $500,000 damage to Port Columbus International Airport and damaged nearby homes.

"It lifted the roof off one house and completely lifted up a cement-block, two-car garage," said Fire Chief Robert Stormont of Pairie Township which surrounds the airport. "It picked up the garage about 50 feet in the air and it crumbled when it was set down in the back yard."

About 28,000 Ohio residents were without electricity Sunday.

The rains in West Virginia washed out bridges and stranded 13 Boy Scouts in Nicholas County. The scouts camped along Anglins Creek were on the highest ground available and only 1 foot above the flood waters when they were rescued by workers from three nearby fire departments. Firefighters also rescued another man.

"We had to rescue one fellow out of a tree," said East Bank Fire Chief Terry Kirk. "Evidently, he tried to cross the water in his car, and it stalled, and the tree was the first thing he could grab."

In Oklahoma, rescue workers blew up a logjam on the rain-swollen Canadian River, trying to find the body of a 12-year-old boy lost in a canoe accident. The Oklahoma City Police Department said the body had not been found.

Two tornadoes touched down in the western part of Oklahoma Sunday, but no damage was reported. Winds up to 74 mph were recorded. Three people were found dead in a mobile home southeast of Oklahoma City on Saturday after lightning struck.

In Colorado, thunderstorms dumped five inches of rain in a few hours Saturday, sending the Republican River into the town of Wray in the northeastern part of the state. Police reported 2 feet of water in the streets. Lightning killed one man in a Denver park.

Three arrested in bomb planting

LOS ANGELES (AP) — FBI agents arrested three Armenians after police dismantled a bomb near an Air Canada freight terminal at the Los Angeles International Airport.

The arrests Sunday came after FBI agents, who had been monitoring the Armenians, saw the bomb being placed in front of some glass doors at the terminal shortly before 3 a.m., said FBI special agent Edgar Best.

The FBI and police and sheriff's deputies had been investigating the Armenians in connection with a series of bombings over the past four months, Best said.

He speculated the airport bomb was in retaliation for recent Canadian government searches and arrests of Armenians suspected of terrorist activities.

FBI agents immediately notified the police bomb squad, which then had only 15 minutes to defuse the explosive.

Within a few hours, the three people were arrested in the San Fernando Valley and Glendale, Best said.

He identified the them as Hratch Kozibioukian, 30; his wife, Stranouehe, 21; and Varant Berkev Chirinian, 28. All are resident aliens, he said.

They were booked for investigation of attempting to damage a building with explosives, unlawful possession of a destructive device and conspiracy. They could face prison terms of up to 20 years. Arraignment was set before a federal magistrate Tuesday.

Agents also searched the Woodland Hills Jewelry Exchange in Woodland Hills, in which he said the Kozibioukians have an "interest," and a Van Nuys house where the couple was arrested.

The FBI has conducted a joint investigation with the Los Angeles police and sheriff's departments into a string of bombings since 1980 against foreign diplomatic and commercial enterprises, Best said.

He said the Armenian Secret Army for Liberation of Armenia, a terrorist organization based in Beirut, Lebanon, took credit for the bombings. But he added that those arrested Sunday were not necessarily members of the group.

Armenians have been linked to an assassination and several bombings in Southern California in the past two years, most prominently the Jan. 28, 1982, assassination of Turkish Consul General Kemal Arikan on a West Los Angeles street.

A group calling itself the Justice Commandos for the Armenian Genocide claimed responsibility. An Armenian immigrant, Harry Sassounian, 19, has pleaded innocent to charges he murdered the 54-year-old diplomat.

Police have asked the international police agency Interpol to help locate another Armenian immigrant, Krikor Saliba, 21, who also is wanted for questioning in the murder.

Sassounian's brother, Harout, 21, has pleaded innocent to charges he firebombed Arikan's expensive Bel-Air home in October 1980.

Elsewhere, the Justice Commandos claimed credit for the May 4, 1982, shooting of Orhan Gunduz, the acting Turkish Consul General in Boston.

The Turkish-American Association claims that Armenian terrorists also were responsible for other bombings in Southern California.

GM to add workers to Kansas City plant

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — About 1,900 General Motors Corp. employees will return to work Tuesday as the Fairfax assembly plant resumes full production on a second shift, officials said.

James Farmer, a spokesman for GM, said the shift — which begins at 6 a.m. — was eliminated in August 1980 because of a slump in big car sales. At that time, the company was making large-size Buicks, Oldsmobiles and Pontiacs.

Farmer said Friday that customers once again are showing an interest in large and medium-sized cars, an encouraging sign to GM officials.

"May was a pretty good month in the auto industry. There's a pretty positive outlook on new car sales," he said.

Workers who return Tuesday will include former Fairfax plant employees and other employees who have been laid off from GM's Leeds assembly plant in Kansas City.

Farmer said it was unlikely most of the employees would return to the same job they had before they were laid off.

He said by the time the plant reaches full production June 11, workers on each of the two shifts at the plant should be manufacturing 50 cars an hour or 400 vehicles a day.

The Fairfax plant, which makes a variety of models, is the sole producer in the United States of Buick, Oldsmobile and Chevrolet station wagons and the Chevrolet Caprice.

Cuba visitors return to face questions

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Twenty-four bass anglers who traveled to Cuba after their fishing trip was banned by the U.S. Treasury Department were welcomed home by federal agents seeking answers about their journey.

U.S. Customs officials quizzed the fishermen, some of whom travelled with their wives, shortly after they arrived at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport Sunday afternoon.

The government claims the fishermen were flown to Cuba May 23, eight days after unrestricted travel to the Communist-ruled island ended when a currency flow ban was imposed by the Reagan administration under the federal "trading with the enemy" act.

"What we're doing here is an investigation," said Robert Guthrie, criminal investigations supervisor for the Customs service. But Guthrie refused to say who or what was being investigated.
