Half of Texas' aliens candidates for amnesty

AUSTIN (AP) — Up to half the estimated one million illegal aliens living in Texas could qualify for amnesty under the new immigration law, according to federal officials.

"My guess is that 50 percent would be eligible," said John Abriel, deputy director for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service in San Antonio.

The other half, however, would find it difficult to remain in Texas, Abriel said. Under the new law, employers who knowingly hire illegal aliens are subject to prosecution and fines.

The new law is expected to make sweeping changes in hiring practices for all types of businesses and to create special problems for those businesses that rely on illegal aliens as a plentiful and low-cost source of labor. Undocumented workers are used widely in construction, hotel and food service businesses in the state.

Employers who hired illegal aliens before the law was signed are not subject to fines for those employees.

The key features of the law are amnesty for illegal aliens who have lived in the United States since Jan. 1, 1982, and sanctions against employers of illegal aliens.

Abriel told the Austin American-Statesman that the INS probably will set up "legalization centers" within six months in San Antonio, Austin, Corpus Christi and Laredo to process applications from illegal aliens for temporary legal residency.

Although immigration reform has been debated for years, the quick passage and signing of the law has caught many employers off-guard.

"Right now, we haven't seen a copy of the law, and we are not aware of what legal obligations we have," said Dell Talley, director of Associated General Contractors, an organization representing construction contractors. "We're sitting in limbo until we get additional information."

"There is a general need for education," said Richie Jackson, executive vice presdent of the Texas Restaurant Association. "Employers are concerned about what the law requires and how to ensure they are not out of compliance as far as discrimination." He said the association plans seminars around the state to explain the law to restaurant owners.

Residents want stop signs back

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

After hearing sirens responding to yet another accident in her neighborhood in the early morning hours of Oct. 27, Cynthia Sullivan decided she had had enough.

"We used to have a nice quite little neighborhood. Now everyone is afraid," Ms. Sullivan said.

In July the city removed stop signs at 25 locations and yield signs at 11 locations in Ms. Sullivan's neighborhood south of Missouri Avenue and north of Front Street.

Ms. Sullivan and her neighbors began circulating petitions Monday to get their stop signs back.

After approving stop sign removal from two neighborhoods since July, the City Council will now reevaluate its position at a public hearing at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the council chambers.

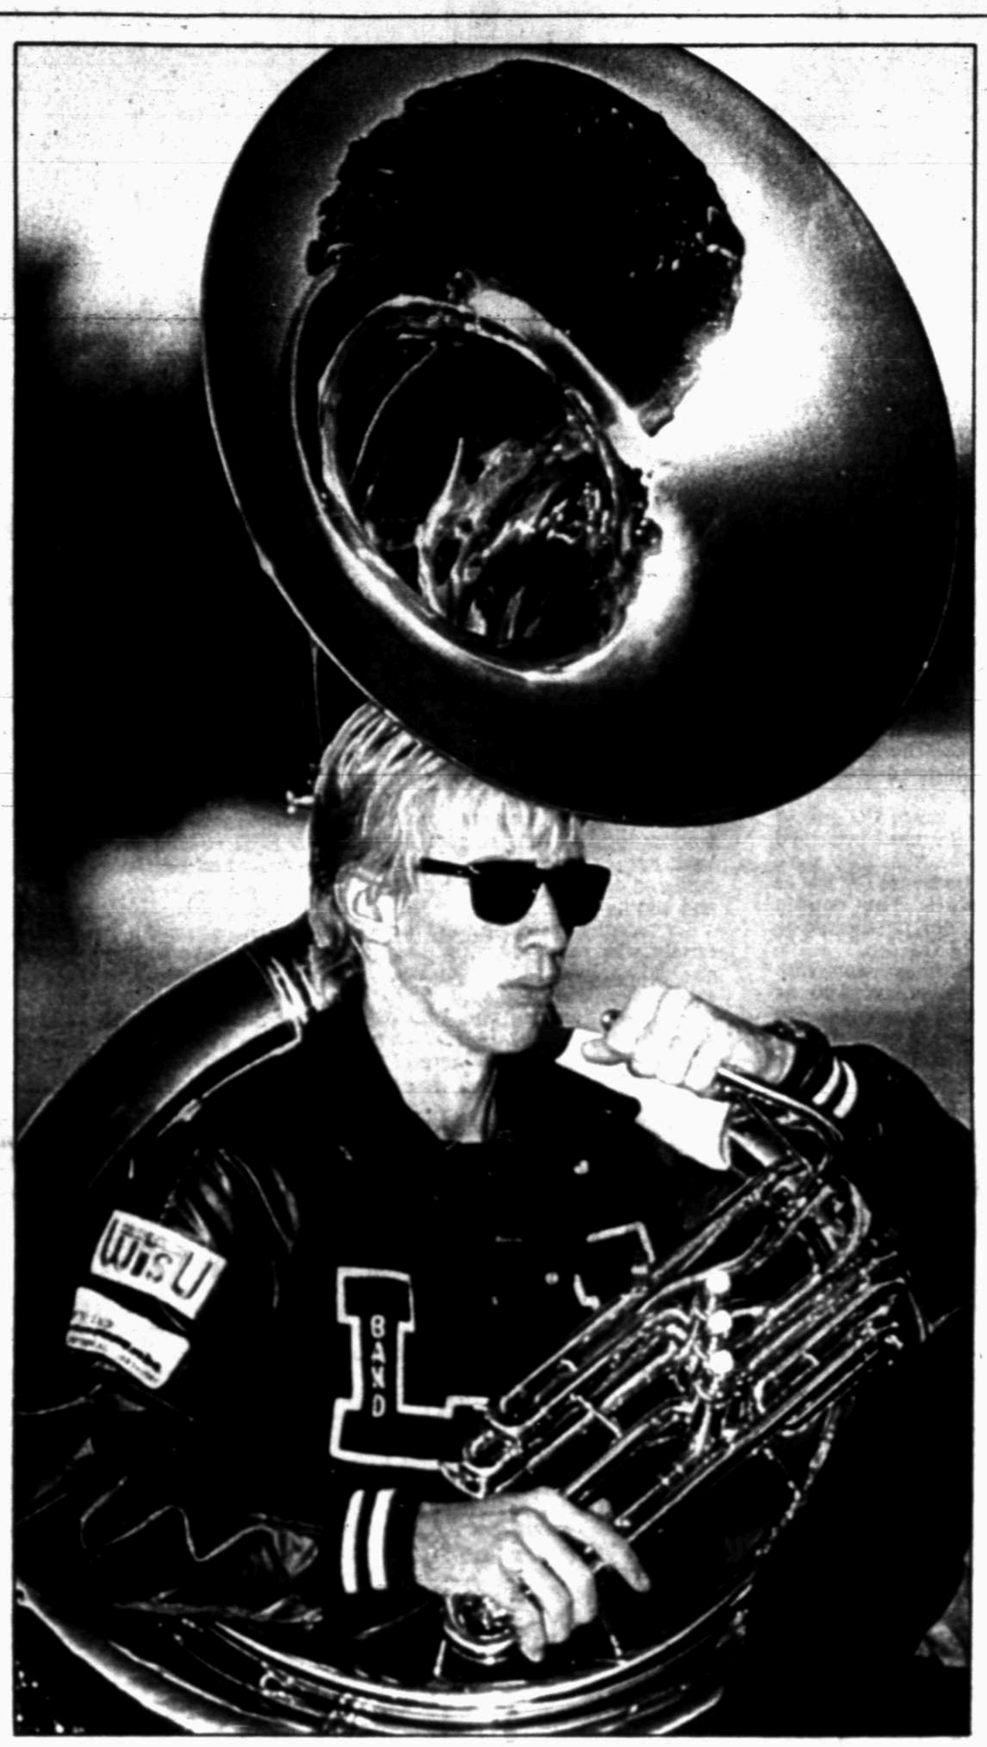

"I'm more or less convinced that maybe we tried to fix something that wasn't broken," said Councillor Kelly Fish.

Smith house-hunting in nation's capital

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Suburban real estate brokers in the Washington, D.C., area must love this time of year when newly elected congressmen converge on the area to find new abodes.

Lamar Smith, the San Antonio Republican who capped a victory Tuesday for the 21st District Congressional seat, is no exception.

Smith's press secretary, David Hawkings, said Smith was leaving for Washington today to begin house-hunting for his family of four.

While most politicians — winners and losers — may still be asleep from Tuesday's grueling election, Hawkings said Smith was getting necessary errands out of the way before beginning in December a "freshman orientation" workshop for first-time congressmen.

After 466 days of campaigning, Smith is still voicing the same concerns which convinced a majority of the voters he was the man for the job.

"When I get to Washington, D.C., in January, I plan to be a congressman who will work equally for the cities of Midland, San Antonio and San Angelo as well as the Hill Country and West Texas.

"Our district and the nation face wonderful opportunities as well as tough challenges," Smith said Thursday.

"When I arrive at the Captiol, we'll still need to find solutions to our nation's energy crisis. We'll still continue the war on drugs and to battle excessive government spending," Smith added.

Smith will be sworn into office on January 6.

Shultz-Chirac talks on terrorism 'frank, friendly'

PARIS (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz traded views on terrorism today with French Premier Jacques Chirac, and Shultz said their frank and critical comments showed the true friendship between their nations.

"It's often remarked (that) frankness and willingness to make critical comments is a mark of real friendship, so we've had a lot of real friendship," Shultz said on emerging from a one-hour meeting with Chirac.

"We reaffirmed our joint determination to stamp out this terrible development," Shultz said of terrorism. "We see this problem the same way."

Shultz met separately with President Francois Mitterrand, a Socialist who has distanced himself slightly from the policies on of Chirac's center-right government on terrorism.

The secretary of state stopped in Paris on his way home from meetings in Vienna, Austria, including talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze that ended in sharp disagreement over arms control.

After leaving Paris, he told reporters aboard his Air Force jet that the policy of not negotiating with terrorists is the "right policy" for the United States, but refused to say if that policy was abandoned in seeking the release of U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Iran claimed Tuesday that former U.S. National Security adviser Robert McFarlane recently led a secret delegation to Iran to seek better relations, and U.S. reports have said the United States and Israel have shippped weapons and military parts to Iran to win the release of hostages.

The White House has not confirmed the reports. Asked about them, Shultz said, "The White House is in charge of the executive branch and they have issued a statement that all statements will be handled by the White House and that's why I cannot comment."

In Paris, he and Chirac refused to reply when asked if they discussed the reported U.S. overtures to Iran.

Asked about whether they discussed the attempted bombing of an Israeli airliner in London, Shultz said in Paris, "I can only speak for myself, but the material developed by the British is unambiguous and convincing and we are interested in the decision that will be made by European countries and we will make our own decisions."

Britain has accused Syria of complicity in the attempted bombing in April of an Israeli jetliner at London's Heathrow Airport, and has asked its allies to take joint action against Syria.

The Washington Times today quoted Chirac as saying he'd been informed by West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher that Syria was not involved in the jetliner bombing attempt.

The newspaper said Chirac made the comments in an interview with editor Arnaud de Borchgrave. It quoted Chirac as saying he was told the incident was an anti-Syrian provocation organized by Israel's Mossad intelligence service and renegade elements in Syrian President Hafez Assad's entourage. The article said the bomb plot was intended to embarrass Assad and bring down his regime.

Chirac's office issued a statement saying, "The interpretation given to what he said in an article appearing today in the Washington Times is without foundation."

De Borchgrave, however, insisted his story was accurate and said he made a tape recording of the 90-minute interview.

France has been criticized in recent weeks for its eagerness to deal with Syria and Iran to win freedom for its hostages in Lebanon and to stop terrorist bombings in Paris.

France recently announced a tentative settlement of its longstanding dispute over a $1 billion loan made by Iran before its 1979 Islamic revolution, and made clear it hoped to see some or all of its hostages freed as a result.

Freed hostage Jacobsen returns home

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Freed hostage David Jacobsen flew to the United States today, returning home to a welcome from President Reagan after 17 months of captivity in Lebanon.

"It's a marvelous morning, and it's wonderful to be going home," he said.

Jacobsen and his family smiled and waved happily to reporters at Rhein-Main Air Base outside Frankfurt before boarding a C-141 Air Force plane for the trip to Washington.

The plane, bound for Andrews Air Force Base outside the capital, took off in heavy fog.

"This is a wonderful morning that I have been waiting for for a long time. I'm going home to the most wonderful country in the world," Jacobsen said in a brief departure statement.

He thanked the German people for their hospitality, and gave a "special thanks" to the staff at the U.S. Air Force Hospital at Wiesbaden.

Jacobsen, his three grown children and their spouses had left the U.S. Air Force hospital and hotel complex in Wiesbaden, near Frankfurt, before dawn.

They rode to the airport in an Air Force bus, escorted by military vehicles with blue lights flashing.

Jacobsen had been undergoing medical examinations and resting at the Wiesbaden hospital since Monday, when he arrived in West Germany a day after his Shiite Moslem captors released him in Lebanon. Doctors said he had no medical problem resulting from his captivity, but advised that he have routine follow-up tests back home in Huntington Beach, Calif.

The White House announced that Reagan and his wife, Nancy, will meet privately with Jacobsen and his family today.

The 55-year-old former director of the American University Hospital in Beirut remained inside the Air Force hospital Thursday, spending the day quietly with his family, and did not speak with reporters. Jacobsen is divorced from the children's mother.

Jacobsen, the director of the American University Hospital in Beirut, was kidnapped in Lebanon on May 28, 1985.

He arrived in Wiesbadaen with Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, who has been working for the release of Americans held capitve in the Middle East.

Waite, special envoy for the Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, returned to London on Wednesday.

Survey reveals 'OK' isn't with most editors

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — A survey of newspaper and magazine editors shows most think "OK" is not OK.

The latest usage survey conducted by Indiana University's journalism school showed 78.4 percent of those responding favored "okay" over "OK" in their stories.

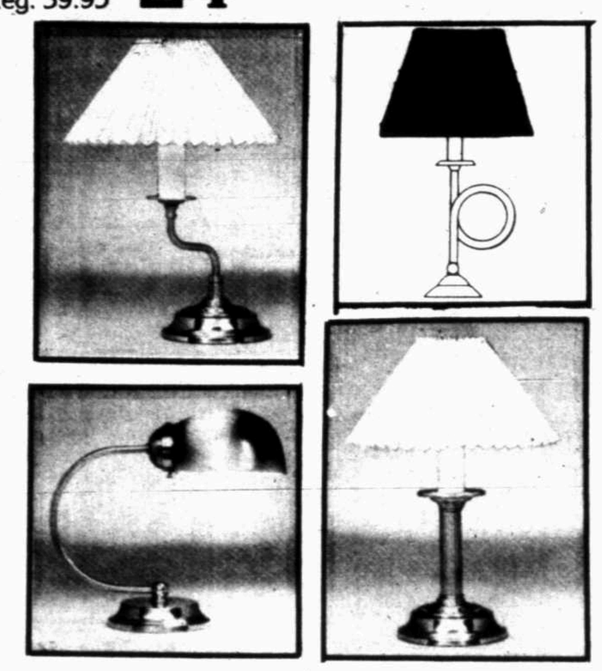

Time magazine said it allows both spellings.

"We use 'OK' as a noun or adjective, 'okay' as a verb," the magazine said in its response. "'He okayed the plan.' 'He gave his OK to the plan.'"

Family to honor 'righteous gentiles'

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

AP Laserphoto

The Razda sisters — Miriam Oginski, left, Zahava Burack and Sarah Weiner — who shared a trench under the floor of a Polish Christian family's storage room with their parents and several others during World War II, will honor the couple who protected them.

NEW YORK (AP) — For 2½ years, a family of Polish Jews hid from the Nazis in a trench the size of two coffins under a Christian couple's home. Again and again, the Jews begged their benefactors: Please poison our bread, please give us a gun to end our misery.

"No," Jozef and Stephania Macugowski told the Radza family. "One day the war will be over. As long as we live, you will live. We will never let you die."

This weekend, the two families will embrace for the first time in more than 40 years. The Polish couple is coming to New York, where Israeli officials will honor them as "righteous among the nations" — gentiles who put their lives on the line for Jews in peril.

"If the Nazis had caught them saving us, they would have killed them before killing us," said Zahava Burack, who was 9 years old when she, her parents and two of her sisters were taken in by the Macugowskis.

One night in 1942, Jews in their town of Nowy Korczyn were told to leave their homes and march to the railroad station for "relocation," the Nazi term for deportation to slave labor and death camps.

Louis Radza, a juice manufacturer, recalled that Jozef Macugowski, an acquaintance, had casually offered his help if needed.

Radza, his wife, Gitla, and daughters Zahava, Miriam and Sarah slipped away from the line and sought refuge with Macugowski. Another daughter, Rita, was separated from the family and boarded the train for the concentration camp.

The Macugowskis never wavered, despite the risk of their own lives, despite Poland's own history of anti-Semitism that made many Poles turn their backs on the Jews.

That night, they and the Radzas dug a trench under the floorboards of a storage room; this ditch, 5 feet wide by 7 feet long by 20 inches deep, was to be the Jews' home for 2½ years, during which time they never stood up, never spoke in voices louder than a whisper and never saw the light of day.

It grew even more crowded. A cousin of the Radzas was thrown off a transport by her doomed family and somehow made it to the Macugowskis. A desperate partisan knocked on the Macugowskis' door. Two others sought refuge.

Eventually, nine people shared the bunker. "Whenever one of us wanted to turn, all of us had to turn. We were like sardines," said Miriam Oginski, another of the sisters.

The Macugowskis told nobody about what they were doing — not their parents, not their brothers and sisters, not their young children. Late at night, they would knock on the floor three times. The floor boards would open, and the Macugowskis would pass down bread and water.

Six months before the end of the war, the Germans informed the Macugowskis that they were taking over the house for use as a headquarters. The couple pleaded that they be allowed to stay, but were refused.

"That night, they came into the storage room and told us what was going to happen. My father took out a prayerbook, and we all said Kaddish," the prayer for the dead, Mrs. Burack said. "We all thanked God that we were going to die. They kissed us goodbye, and we were happy."

But the Macugowskis would not give up. They pleaded again with the Germans, and finally were granted permission to stay on as caretakers.

The Germans, of course, did not know the extent of the caretakers' duties. And they did not know what was below their feet.

With war's end, the floorboards opened for good. Mrs. Burack remembers her first bath ("heaven") and everyone's wobbly legs — Russian soldiers beat her parents because they believed the Jews were drunk, and hiding vodka.

Six months after the war, the family was reunited with Rita; she had survived the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp. The family was among the lucky ones; 90 percent of Poland's 3 million Jews died at the hands of the Germans and their collaborators.

Ultimately, the Radzas all settled around New York — Zahava in Harrison, Sarah Weiner in Wantagh, Miriam in Great Neck, Rita in Brooklyn. The children married, had children and prospered.

Louis and Gitla Radza kept in touch with the Macugowskis until the Radzas' deaths 10 years ago. But in recent years, letters and packages sent to the couple were returned unopened.

Mrs. Burack, active in Jewish causes, asked an official of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai Brith to seek out the Macugowskis when he visited Poland earlier this year.

He found them — their street had been renamed — and Mrs. Burack placed a tearful trans-Atlantic telephone call to the people who had saved her life.

The Macugowskis will be honored, along with Mrs. Burack and her husband, at a dinner of the Friends of the David Yellin Teachers College on Nov. 16.

Traffic engineer Fred McGary said the city is removing stop signs to make people drive more cautiously through the neighborhoods.

In many cases, large white dots were painted in the intersections to warn motorists. However, residents often complained they did know what the dots meant.

By state law, people approaching an intersection without signs must give the right-of-way to persons on their right, McGary said.

"The idea was if you take stop signs down in residential neighborhoods, we would slow people down, and people not belonging in neighborhoods would take arterial routes," he said.

But Ms. Sullivan said, "It's obvious to anyone with any brains, it doesn't make the neighborhood safe."

Since Oct. 3 there have been 11 accidents in Ms. Sullivan's neighborhood. Six were at intersections where signs were taken down and five were at intersections with yield signs.

Further north of this area, three accidents have occurred since 15 stop signs were removed Sept. 11 from a neighborhood bounded by Golf Course Road on the north, Garfield Street on the east, Midkiff Road on the west and Cuthbert Avenue on the south.

All three accidents occurred at intersection where signs were taken out.

"It's only a matter of time until someone gets killed. People are not accustomed to uncontrolled intersections. At what cost do we want to accustom people?" Ms. Sullivan asked.

In theory the stop sign removal seemed good, but in reality it may not be safe, Fish said.

"When public works brought it before us, it's something that sounded good in theory. Yet I think that theory presumes people drive like they do in driving school. That isn't the way people drive," Fish said.

Fish and Councilman Gordon Marcum called for Tuesday's public hearing on the stop sign removal program that planned to go citywide.

"We were going to go through one section at a time through the whole city. We took traffic counts of every street going into neighborhoods," McGary said.

If less than 600 cars a day were recorded, stop signs were removed. If more than 1,200 cars a day were recorded, a stop sign would be left in.

Anything between 600 and 1,200 cars resulted in yield signs being put up.

A neighborhood west of Garfield Street in the Dennis the Menace park area was scheduled to have nine stop signs and 15 yield signs removed, but the council put the decision on hold until after Tuesday's public hearing.

Teen's parents placed in drug program after family reunited

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A teenager who went to police with a stash of drugs she said belonged to her parents says she would do so again, but is happy a judge ordered them into a drug program rather than jail.

"I'm glad they didn't get a hard sentence — jail time," Deanna Young, 14, said Thursday after her parents, Bobby Dale Young and Judith Young, were ordered to take part in a drug diversion program.

Later, she said, "I'm glad I did it and I'd do it again."

Orange County Municipal Judge C. Robert Jameson told the Youngs that if they successfully complete the program, he will consider dropping drug possession charges at a May 8 hearing.

Deanna, then 13, walked into a police station Aug. 13 with a bag that authorities said contained cocaine, marijuana, pills and drug paraphernalia. She decided to go to police after hearing a church lecture on the evils of drug abuse.

The widely publicized incident was followed several other cases in which children turned in their parents.

The Youngs had pleaded innocent and asked to be placed in the program.

"We didn't use drugs," Young, 49, told reporters after Thursday's hearing. "We were never seen using drugs. We were charged with drugs in our house. But because of that, we could have gone to jail for five years."

But Deanna said she had asked her parents to stop using drugs and they said they would, but didn't.

"I didn't know what to do anymore. I took it into my own hands what to do."

Deanna said police promised that her parents wouldn't go to jail and that she would not be removed from her home. But she was placed in a state children's home, where she said she began to question her actions.

The law prohibts employers from discriminating against minorities on the basis of race or national origin, but at the same time requires employers to verify citizenship.

"Employers are caught in the middle as immigration policemen," said Austin immigration lawyer Paul Parsons. "One the one hand, there is a section on discrimination penalties. And on the other hand, they may be sanctioned by fines or imprisonment for not verifying employment authorization for all new employees."

Barbara Hines, also an immigration lawyer in Austin, said employers already may be overreacting to the new law.

"I'm getting clients saying their employers have brought them together and said, 'If you don't have documents, you've got to leave within a certain time,'" Hines said. "Anyone hired before enactment of the law can be kept on indefinitely. The employer is not liable."

Parsons said verification of citizenship imposes equally difficult burdens on employers.

"I think when American businesses find out about all of this, they are going to start a backlash that might led to revocation of sanctions," Parsons said. "I think most small businesses already feel hindered by a lot of bureaucracy, and this will require burdensome record keeping."

Parsons also said he doubts the immigration service will have the resources to enforce the sanctions.

"I think there will be some effectiveness, because a lot of American corporations like to comply with the law," Parsons said. "But other companies probably will continue to employ undocumented aliens, because they absolutely rely on the work force and because immigration will probably not be able to enforce the penalties. It's too big a task."

Abriel said, "We wouldn't focus our attention on individual households that have a maid as opposed to a large manufacturing firm that has a large number of illegal aliens."

How successful the law will be in stemming the flow of illegal aliens is the subject of debate.

"Certainly, it will help," said Duke Austin, an INS spokesman in Washington. "The employer sanctions reduce the magnet that draws people here, and that's going to stop the revolving door."

Educators: Widely used health text should be 'knocked off' state list

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — A widely used high school health textbook should be knocked off the state-approved list because it does not include sex education, State Board of Education members have recommended.

In a 7-3 Thursday vote, the board tentatively backed a critic's call to bar Texas schools from using "Modern Health." A final board vote is set for Saturday.

An official with Holt, Rinehart and Winston, publisher of the book, said the volume does not talk about sex education because many districts prefer it that way.

"There are areas that feel very uncomfortable with blatant sex education," said Dan Franck of New York, a senior editor with the publisher.

But board member Rebecca Canning of Waco said districts should not be allowed to use a health education book that does not include sex education information.

"It is necessary to talk about human reproduction,," she said.

Textbook critic Elizabeth Judge of Houston told the board that "Modern Health" leaves students without crucial information about reproduction and sexually transmitted diseases.

"Students learning about reproduction from 'Modern Health' will not know the male has anything to do with reproduction," she told the board.

The board, sitting as a committee of the whole, recommended approval of four health education books that do include sex education information.

Also Thursday, the board voted to require all high school health textbooks to include a section on AIDS.

"Modern Health" has been the most widely used high school health textbook in Texas for several years, according to Franck.

"We have built our books based on extensive nationwide surveys of what teachers need," Franck told the board, adding his company's book meets all Texas requirements.

But Mrs. Canning said the volume is no longer adequate for a state with major problems with sexually transmitted diseases and school-age pregnancies.

Susan Nation, an Austin teacher and member of the textbook committee that made recommendations to the board, said "Modern Health" was placed on the list because some districts do not want to teach sex education.

"We had feedback from some committee members that a textbook with sex education would not be used," she said.

Vidal Trevino, textbook committee chairman and Laredo ISD superintendent, said "Modern Health" should be left on the list.

"I do not believe it is the responsibility of the state to dictate to 1,100 districts to what extent they will teach sex education," he said.

After the vote, Franck said his company would try to get back on the approved list by offering separate sex education book that can be used in conjunction with "Modern Health."

He said Thursday's vote could prove costly to his firm because $5 million worth of health education textbooks will be purchased by Texas schools.

STATE IN BRIEF

Reeves County case eyed

PECOS (AP) — A special grand jury will convene Saturday to consider allegations that Reeves County election officials and campaign workers intimidated voters, told people how to vote, and committed other violations of state election laws during and before Tuesday's General Election.

District Attorney Jack McGowen called the grand jury session after meeting Wednesday with officials of the Secretary of State's office, he said.

McGowen appealed to anyone with first-hand knowledge of election fraud to appear before the grand jury.

Allegations of fraud were made during the weeks preceding the election against workers, poll-watchers and elected officials, according to McGowen.

Deputy shot on routine call

FAIRFIELD (AP) — A 40-year-old Freestone County deputy sheriff was shot while answering a family disturbance call 13 miles east of Fairfield.

Don Nemons of Teague was undergoing surgery at the Navarro County Regional Hosptial in Corsicana after the Thursday shooting.

He was shot in the right abdomen with a .25-caliber automatic pistol, according a Freestone County Sheriff's Department spokesman.

Nemons was anwering a call the sheriff's department received from a 66-year-old Fairfield woman.

The woman's 73-year-old husband reportedly had chased her out of the house threating to beat her, the spokesman said, adding she left to call for help at a neighbor's house.

Dallas PD practices probed

DALLAS (AP) — The City Council has voted to seek a congressional hearing into Dallas Police Department practices and the fatal police shooting of a 70-year-old woman slain after she reported a burglary.

The council voted 8-2 Wednesday to seek the hearing. The vote came one week after the council asked the U.S. Justice Department to investigate.

Officer Mark E. Kraus shot Etta Collins on Oct. 26. Kraus was one of two officers investigating a burglary that Mrs. Collins had reported next door.

Kraus said he fired after Mrs. Collins twice pointed a gun at him. He said he twice identified himself as a police officer and ordered her to drop the gun.

Red River cities sign agreement

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The cities of Wichita Falls and Lawton, Okla., have signed an agreement to share information, manpower and other resources that would benefit both cities.

The agreement was signed Thursday by Wichita Falls Mayor Charles Harper and Lawton Mayor Wayne Gilley. Dignitaries witnessed the signing near the Red River Bridge on Interstate 44 along the Texas-Oklahoma border.

It came about one year after the two cities began discussions on ways to attract new industry to the region.

Officials said areas of mutual cooperation could include joint purchasing, cross-training staffs and sharing statistics.

"This will wind back to city staff for implementation," said Jim Berzina, the Wichita Falls city manager.

Both mayors will name a three-member committee early next week to head the cooperative program, officials said.

Harper said the city councils should strive to meet together at least twice a year.

"We will see things you won't believe," said Harper, who came up with the idea for a joint venture.

Hooper said the partnership should be successful because the two cities are so similar.

Woman in 'overbearing' pursuit of hobby

FORT WORTH (AP)— The wreath hanging outside Yvonne Brant's front door gives only a hint of what's inside.

It's an unassuming grapevine wreath with a single teddy bear decorating it, even though the ribbon does have a few teddy bears sprinkled around.

But walk in the door and you enter a living room of which children's fantasies are made. Teddy bears — hundreds of them — welcome you to the Brant home where Yvonne's hobby has outgrown display shelves and has taken over the living room, the master bedroom and most of the kitchen.

There are bears having tea. There's Big Bear (oh, yes, they all have names) who this day occupied a person-sized rocking chair. There's another sitting in a high chair in the kitchen.

One of Yvonne's favorites, Katie, holds her white stuffed kitten and sits in another chair. Dainty Mary Malise, named for a friend and wearing a green pinafore, tops an end table. Several lounge across the bed in her bedroom. Meanwhile, others perch atop the TV set, fill up bookshelves and rest in corners.

Included are the familiar Paddington bear, Corduroy bear and star of TV commercials, Snuggle bear. Such brand names as Steiff, Bialosky and Gund, recognized by bear fans, count among her collection of 250 stuffed teddy bears, many one-of-a-kind. An additional 85 porcelain bears are scattered about, and that doesn't count the framed photographs, calendars or jewelry, all with the bear motif.

See the family portrait from last Christmas? You can almost see the five Brants among all the bears. Want a cup of coffee? Choose which bear you want on your coffee mug while you get a cookie from the teddy bear cookie jar. Expecting a gift from Yvonne? It won't need a card; it'll be covered in teddy bear wrapping paper.

Come back at Halloween when the bears will sport black-and-orange party hats. At Christmas they'll don scarf sets. For Valentine's Day they'll wear puffy hearts around the neck. And at Easter, eggs will be scattered about for their enjoyment.

Yvonne Brant definitely is preoccupied with teddy bears. But as vices go, it's a rather harmless one that her husband and three sons find, ahem, bearable.

"Everyone thinks it's neat," Mrs. Brant said of her teddy bear fetish. "I haven't had anybody act like I'm out of my gourd."

Sit in the living room as she explains their stories (yes, many of these bears have life stories) and anyone's likely to be bitten by a teddy-bear-collecting bug.

You see, Blossom, who came from rather humble beginnings, was a rather shy teddy bear until she one day received the brand new white dress she now wears. Then with her first new dress she blossomed into a beautiful young bear. Who could resist that? So Yvonne brought her home and even gave her a strand of pearls as a homecoming gift.

Big Bear, as tall as a person, was found in San Antonio and brought back to Fort Worth by car. Strapped into a seat he practically stopped traffic along the highway.

Katie, a white bear dressed in a pink dress with matching bows for her ears, usually is the one favored to go on trips. She sits in the back window and waves at the other cars.

"I love her," Mrs. Brant said, holding her with a mother's affection. "She's like my daughter, since I don't have one."

The obsession with teddy bears began about six years ago, although Mrs. Brant's love affair with them probably was lying dormant much longer.

"When I think back, I guess I've always had that interest in the back of my mind," she said. "I was thinking how important it was that my folks gave each one of my kids a nice bear when they were born."

One teddy bear, the one in the living room with only a single arm, is left from her son Shane's childhood. And even though she doesn't have a bear from her own childhood, she has saved her father's from 1913, the year he was born.

With the purchase of Big Bear and inspired by a friend who also was collecting bears, Mrs. Brant left reason behind and began her overbearing pursuit of her hobby.

"We decided that if she likes them and I like them, then it was OK for us to be spending money on these," she said.

"When I first started, I was just buying anything that made me happy," she said. "Now I'm very picky."

Her favorites are handmade artists' bears, many signed originals. Some were found on a bear-hunting trip she made sans rifle but certainly with credit cards to the Pacific Northwest, her personal choice for bear-hunting expeditions.

She now belongs to Good Bears of the World bear club and receives not only that group's quarterly publication, "Bear Tracks," but also the collector's magazine "Teddy Bear and Friends." Even though she has become a schooled teddy bear collector, every once in a while a bear will get the better of her and she'll buy it against her better judgement.

Sometimes it's the eyes. Sometimes it's a turned-up nose. Recently, a rather plain bear caught her attention.

Mrs. Brant at 43 may be young at heart, but many of these bears are not for kids. Some cost upward of $200 and others, signed by the maker, could never be replaced.

WORLD in brief

Aquino expects no coup

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino said today the Philippine military was on maximum alert, but also said she was confident there would be no coup attempt when she leaves on a state visit to Japan in three days.

"Everytime I plan a trip aboard there is so much talk about a coup. If I believed there would be a coup, I wouldn't leave," she said, adding that she planned to depart for Japan on schedule Monday.

Mrs. Aquino, in a press conference, played down the significance of military alerts, saying they were relatively commonplace. Similar alerts were also in effect before her two previous trips abroad, including a September visit to the United States.

Mrs. Aquino said she conferred Thursday with Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos about coup rumors.

"I made it very clear, and he agreed with me, that definitely we should not allow anything like this to happen," Mrs. Aquino said.

White 'patriot' sentenced

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A white woman who admitted she planted mines in police stations as an African National Congress guerrilla was sentenced Friday to 25 years in prison.

Marion Sparg, 28, a former reporter, told police the mines were aimed at "structures" of apartheid. She said she believed she acted on behalf of most blacks and an increasing number of whites.

She pleaded guilty Monday in Rand Supreme Court to charges of treason and arson and could have received the death sentence. The prosecutor asked for life imprisonment, but her attorney, Jules Browde, asked for mercy, saying his client considered herself a soldier and patriot.

Hasenfus trial extended

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Peoples' Tribunal trying American mercenary Eugene Hasenfus on Thursday extended the trial for four days to let court members visit the site where his aircraft was shot down.

Court president Reynaldo Monterrey also rejected a request by defense attorney Enrique Sotelo Borgen to let Hasenfus' wife, Sally, testify on behalf of her husband. But he said the defense could enter Mrs. Hasenfus' prepared statement in the record as documentary evidence.

"The charges are not against Mrs. Hasenfus and she is not being tried," Monterrey said. "The law says that relatives of defendants cannot be witnesses."

The revolutionary tribunal, comprised of lawyer Monterrey, truck driver Luis Perez Duarte and a laborer, Domingo Matute, had previously refused to let Mrs. Hasenfus submit a statement. On Tuesday, the last day of public hearings, Hasenfus spoke to the court in what his lawyers said was an attempt to gain sympathy.

Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis., was a crew member on a C-123 cargo plane carrying supplies to the U.S.-supported rebels fighting the leftist Sandinista government. He parachuted from the plane after soldiers hit it with a missile on Oct. 5, and was captured the next day. The other three crewmen, including two Americans, were killed in the crash.

Food trucks reach Juba

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A convoy of 15 World Food Program trucks carrying 550 tons of food has reached the southern Sudanese town of Juba, the agency said Thursday.

"This is the first food aid to reach Juba by road since August 27," the Rome-based World Food Program said in a telex to journalists in Nairobi.

During the past two months, the agency has airlifted 275 tons of food to Juba in nine flights. Three other flights brought food to northern Zaire, from where it was trucked into southern Sudan.

The WFP said an additional nine trucks had reached Juba with fuel and some commercial food supplies.

The United Nations agency did not give the date the trucks reached Juba or reveal their routes.

Peru puts off payments

LIMA, Peru (AP) — The government of President Alan Garcia on Thursday again unilaterally put off payments on the $12 billion it owes other nations.

A decree published in the official gazette El Peruano said payments on the public debt would be postponed for three months, until Feb. 4, 1987.

Payments on Peru's $2-billion private foreign debt, which is owed to banks, were not affected by the measure. Garcia told Congress on July 28 that conditions also would be attached to these payments, but he did not elaborate.

Rescue vessels still searching North Sea waters

WORLD

SUMBURGH, Shetland Islands (AP) — Rescue vessels scoured frigid North Sea waters today for survivors of what aviation officials say could be the worst civilian helicopter crash on record. Nineteen people were known dead, and 26 others were missing.

Two people survived the disaster Thursday when the twin-rotor Chinook heading for Sumburgh Airport carrying three crew and 44 oil industry workers from North Sea offshore rigs plunged into the sea and sank in 300 feet of water.

Nineteen bodies were recovered, the Royal Air Force said.

Ian Henderson, director of operations for Shell U.K. Exploration and Production, which operates the rigs, said late Thursday that it was "extremely unlikely" anyone remained alive in the 48-degree water.

Henderson said no casualty list would be released until next of kin were notified. He refused to say whether foreigners were on board.

Six ships and six helicopters searched the crash site two miles south of Sumburgh overnight. A diving support ship was expected to arrive today to try to recover the Chinook 234's cockpit voice recorder, which officials hope will help reveal the cause of the crash.

The Coast Guard said visibility was 12 miles, waves were 12 feet high and winds ranged from 25 to 38 knots when the helicopter went down. It was ferrying oil workers from the Brent offshore field 135 miles northeast of the Shetland Islands to the airport on the southern end of the archipelago.

The pilot, Capt. Pusht Vaid, 45, and 20-year-old Shell technician trainee Eric Morrans were rescued by a Coast Guard helicopter that had taken off from Sumburgh Airport on a training flight minutes before the crash.

Capt. Gordon Mitchell, the Coast Guard pilot, spotted what he thought was a fishing boat or an oil slick. Seconds later, he said, he heard Sumburgh air traffic control telling the Chinook's crew they were too low for radar.

"I went in the direction of what I thought was the oil slick and when I got there I discovered it was the wreck," he said. "As we watched, bits of the debris started coming to the surface, and a couple of survivors appeared."

He said "one was clinging to a bit of wreckage and the other was hanging on to a dinghy."

The survivors were flown to Lerwick, the Shetland capital, and taken to the 10-bed Gilbert Bain Hospital. Spokesman David March said both suffered from hypothermia — a lowering of body temperature — head and shoulder injuries, but were expected to live.

In Parliament, Conservative lawmaker David Howell, a former transport minister, said the high death toll seemed to indicate "an explosion of some kind before the craft hit the water."

But a Coast Guard official in Aberdeen, Scotland, noting that wreckage was confined to a very small area, said he considered it "unlikely that there was an explosion."

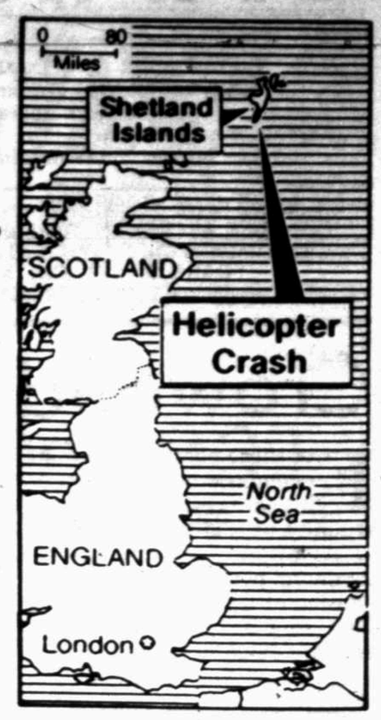

Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, quoted local sources on Shetland as saying none of the lifejackets recovered were inflated.

Henderson said the helicopter made an emergency landing three years ago when its gearbox caught fire, and it was forced to divert to Shetland on a flight in September when a warning light indicated failure in fire equipment.

Muir Parker, chief engineer for British International Helicopter Co., which owned the Chinook, said Thursday's disaster was "totally divorced from the previous incidents."

Aviation Minister Michael Spicer, who flew to the area with Department of Transport investigators, said Thursday night no more passengers would travel on the three remaining Chinook 234s operated by British International Helicopters Co. until the cause of the disaster was determined.

The Montreal-based International Civil Aviation Organization said a death toll of 45 would be the highest ever recorded in the crash of a civilian helicopter.

Crowded skies

For those pilots unfortunate enough to be caught straying into restricted airspace around a busy airport, the Federal Aviation Administration's minimum penalty is a 30-day suspension of the pilot's certificate. That isn't a particularly harsh penalty considering the potentially tragic consequences.

Two months ago, a single-engine plane collided with an Aeromexico DC-9 over Cerritos, Calif., near Los Angeles. The Piper Cherokee's pilot, who had flown without clearance into the terminal control area of Los Angeles International Airport, paid for his mistake with his life. So did 81 other people. That's a costly "mistake" that should never be repeated if it can be avoided.

That is why we commend FAA Administrator Donald Engen for backing 40 recommendations that would improve safety around the nation's 23 busiest airports.

The proposed rules would double the minimum penalty for pilots caught flying through restricted airspace without clearance. Before climbing into the cockpit again, the errant pilots would have to pass a written test to show they understand the rules for flying through an airport's terminal control area.

We hope the FAA's safety proposals survive the public review process they must undergo. The powerful general aviation lobby must not be allowed to block or undermine some of the stricter rules as it has in the past.

We realize that private pilots don't deserve all the blame. In fact, some terminal control areas, such as the one in Los Angeles, are so confusing that they invite unintentional violations. The FAA should do more to educate private pilots and, perhaps, simplify its more complex terminal control areas.

But light-plane enthusiasts also must accept their responsibilities. If they err and collide with a large commercial jetliner, hundreds of lives could be lost.

The FAA, for its part, can do more than propose new rules. It can reduce the chances of a mid-air collision by enforcing its existing regulations and maintaining its air-traffic control system.

Before the Cerritos crash, the FAA disciplined few pilots who violated terminal control areas. Since then, the agency has cited 25 pilots for violations in the Los Angeles area alone. That's good procedure, but it should become standard throughout the nation's busiest airports.

Spurred by the grim Cerritos disaster, the FAA seems to be moving more decisively to make the skies safer. That's the way it should be. Millions of airline passengers are counting on it.

Another View:

Cycles of history

The liberal historian, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., in a new book, "praises President Reagan for understanding what Carter did not: that a president must point the nation in a clear direction and explain to the electorate why his direction is right."

Schlesinger also "would repeal the 22nd Amendment, which limits presidents to two successive terms."

Liberals may shudder at the thought of a third term for President Reagan, which could be well within the realm of possibility but for the 22nd Amendment.

Schlesinger has a keen mind full of provocative thoughts. He won a Pulitzer Prize for history for The Age of Jackson and a Pulitzer Prize for biography for his John F. Kennedy study, A Thousand Days, although some critics found fault with the JFK volume.

In effect, it blamed Kennedy's assassination more on the psychological climate of Dallas than on Lee Harvey Oswald.

Discussing the swing between liberal and conservative trends in American society, Schlesinger thinks each cycle lasts about 30 years. But he "sees signs that this present conservative swing is running its course" and expects the next turn toward liberalism will come in or about 1990.

That seems out of keeping with his 30-year cycle concept, considering that the current conservative trend did not materialize until the late 1970s.

Conservatives and liberals should be able to agree with Schlesinger that Americans should have, in his words, "some analytical sense of what this country has been about, of the available traditions. The sense of the richness of the American past improves the intelligence of the choices we make about the American future. History is to the nation what memory is to the individual. Without memory, the individual would be absolutely rudderless."

It would be hard to disagree with that.

The quotations, taken from Peter S. Prescott's review of Schlesinger's latest book, The Cycles of American History, in a recent issue of Newsweek, are thought-provoking.

One thought that they provoke is this: Are not the freedoms that are the basis of American greatness best guaranteed within the nation by limiting the powers of the U.S. government and best protected from attack from without by keeping U.S. defenses strong?

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Nov. 7, the 311th day of 1986. There are 54 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 7, 1917, Russia's October Revolution took place as Bolshevik forces led by Vladimir Ilyich Lenin overthrew the provisional government of Alexander Kerensky. (It's known as the October Revolution because of the calendar in use in Russia at the time.)

On this date:

In 1874, the Republican Party was first symbolized as an elephant, in a cartoon by Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly.

In 1885, the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed as the last spike was driven at Craigellachie.

In 1916, Republican Jeannette Rankin became the first woman elected to Congress.

In 1918, during World War I, an erroneous report from the United Press that an armistice had been signed set off celebrations across the country.

In 1944, Franklin D. Roosevelt won a fourth term in office, defeating Thomas E. Dewey.

In 1962, Richard M. Nixon, having lost California's gubernatorial race, held what he called his last press conference, telling reporters, "You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore."

In 1972, President Richard M. Nixon was re-elected in a landslide over Democrat George McGovern.

In 1973, Congress overrode President Nixon's veto of the War Powers Act, which limits a chief executive's power to wage war without congressional approval.

Ten years ago: Lebanese President Elias Sarkis urged his countrymen in a speech to lay down their arms and end the bloodshed of the country's civil war.

Five years ago: The Soviet Union celebrated the 64th anniversary of its revolution with a military parade in Moscow, during which Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov declared his country would never allow another to achieve military superiority.

One year ago: Government forces in Colombia retook the Palace of Justice from leftist guerrillas. Ninety-five people, including 11 Supreme Court justices, were killed during the siege.

Today's birthdays: Evangelist Billy Graham is 68. Jazz musician Al Hirt is 64. Opera singer Joan Sutherland is 60. Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., is 56. Singer-songwriter Joni Mitchell is 43. Actress Dana Plato is 22.

Thought for today: "The deepest personal defeat suffered by human beings is constituted by the difference between what one was capable of becoming, and what one has in fact become." — Ashley Montagu, American writer-anthropologist.

JACK ANDERSON

Syrian terrorism confirmed — at last!

WASHINGTON — The United States and the United Kingdom have officially confirmed what we have been reporting for years: that Syria has sponsored international terrorism. Syrian strongman Hafez Assad has been stirring up terrorist attacks against the West for at least four years.

Jack Anderson

There is no question that Syrian troops occupying Lebanon have protected the Iranian Shiites, who have held American and other Western hostages in the Bekaa Valley over the last two years. Not much happens in the Bekaa Valley without the Syrian army's knowledge and consent.

We were the first to disclose — on May 10, 1983 — that the Bekaa Valley terrorists were responsible for the bombing a month earlier of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, which killed 17 Americans.

We cited as the source of our report communications intercepted by the National Security Agency. But regard for national security compelled us to omit the fact that the intercepts had been made in Damascus, where Syrians actively aided the Iranians planning the bombing. (CBS News revealed the Damascus connection in a later report.)

Since that first terrorist incident in the current cycle of anti-American violence, many other Americans have been murdered by Iranian Shiites — with the Syrians' help. All told, we count at least 270 Americans who have died as a result of the unholy Iranian-Syrian alliance. Here is the detailed indictment of this bloody conspiracy at work:

— October 1983 — An Iranian-trained terrorist, with Syrian logistical help, car-bombed the U.S. Marine barracks at Beirut airport, killing 241 Americans.

— September 1984 — Two Americans died in the suicide bombing of the Beirut embassy annex. U.S. intelligence sources are convinced the attack had Syrian support.

— December 1984 — Two Americans were murdered and two others savagely tortured aboard a Kuwaiti airliner hijacked to Tehran. The hijacking was planned and coordinated by the Ayatollah Mohtashani, then Iran's ambassador to Syria. We proved this by quoting word-for-word from a Dec. 4 NSA intercept of a telephone conversation between Mohtashani in Damascus and an Iranian foreign ministry official in Tehran.

— March 1985 — The CIA's Beirut station chief, William Buckley, was flown to Damascus in a Syrian army helicopter. He had been kidnapped by Iranian Shiites a year earlier and hidden, like other American hostages, in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley, where he was subjected to long and brutal torture. (The Syrians may not have known who was aboard their helicopter, since Buckley was disguised as a wounded Iranian soldier.) Anyway, he was transferred to an Iran Air 727 at the Damascus airport and flown to Tehran, where he subsequently died from a heart attack induced by torture and deprivation.

— June 1985 — A U.S. Navy man was murdered during the hijacking of TWA flight 847, which U.S. intelligence sources say was the work of Iranians and Syrians.

— December 1985 — Simultaneous terrorist attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports left six Americans dead. Although Libya helped Abu Nidal's terrorists stage these atrocities, secret intelligence evidence we've seen shows that Iran and Syria were equally to blame. As we reported earlier this year, the two four-man terrorist teams got their training and operational planning in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley.

UNDER THE DOME: The ill-fated American Embassy a-building in Moscow for the past couple of decades continues to fuel a snarling match between State Department officials and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff. At one point in the discussions, the exasperated Senate staffers proposed that all further work on the embassy be halted until the State Department gets its act together. The diplomats chewed this over for a while, then protested that such a move would cost time and money. Responded the committee staff with bitter sarcasm: "It is obvious that speed and economy have not been the hallmarks of this particular project."

MINI-EDITORIAL: The headline was surprising enough: "General salutes whistle blowers." And the story was downright astonishing. Marine Corps Commandant P.X. Kelley actually did have words of praise for those brave souls who expose wrongdoing in the military. But then the general's salute fizzled out in confusion. He blamed the press for discouraging whistle blowers by "drawing and quartering" them and giving them "a black name." We don't know what publications the general reads, or what TV news shows he watches, but we've never heard of whistle blowers being lambasted in the media. It's the Pentagon that has made their lives miserable.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Women in Czechoslovakia are getting mixed signals from their government. On the one hand, they are being encouraged to hold jobs; on the other hand, they are being offered incentives to bear children. Women already make up about half the Czech work force, and they earn the same pay as men do for the same jobs. But while there are professional women and some in managerial positions, sexual equality seems to have gone astray in the government sector. There is only one woman in the Communist Party secretariat — and there are no women ambassadors.

BIBLE VERSE

And it shall be, that every soul that shall not hearken to that prophet, shall be utterly destroyed from among the people. Acts 3:23

RUSSELL BAKER

Suits with oily voices contain real people!

When I was a boy they had live politicians. Yes sir. Human flesh contained inside double-breasted suits. Not like nowadays when all you see is an empty suit on television and hear one of those oily voices trying to tell you there's a man in there.

Russell Baker

You youngsters won't believe this, but I saw Harry Truman, the real article, inside a suit, in the campaign of 1948 when his train stopped at the railroad station.

A railroad station? That was sort of a primitive airport, only you didn't have to take a cab 20 miles out of town to reach it. And it had honest panhandlers too. They didn't brace you for folding money for righteous goodness. No sir. When you gave them two bits you knew it was going to the purchase of a half-pint of muscatel. Where was I?

Yes, Truman. Saw him with my own eyes. He said, "My name's Truman, I'm president of the United States, I'm trying to keep my job and I need your help."

That's right. That's what he said, and don't tell me old age has clouded my mind. That's the way politicians spoke in those days. In English. No kidding. And don't tell me it was because they didn't have any political engineers to tell them not to get caught inside their suits and never, never to speak English.

Because they did so have professional engineers advising and consulting and polling to find out what people wanted to be told and then writing speeches that told it to them.

I remember back in nineteen and fifty something or other when some political geniuses were running a man named Douglas McKay for the U.S. Senate out in Oregon. For his big rally with thousands of people watching they wrote him this long, long speech telling all those people exactly what the polls showed they wanted to hear.

Well, old McKay faithfully read every word of that speech. Took him forever, and when he finished he laid the thing down, looked out over the audience and said, "And now I'd like to say a few words of my own."

In those days, see, not only were there people inside politicians' suits, but if those people didn't have much weight inside the skull, they let you know it.

Not everything about those old-time pols was Jim Dandy, of course. For instance, when they wanted to deceive you about what they meant to do after getting elected, they would make a speech to you. Honest to Betsy. Make a speech! Thirty, forty, fifty minutes of talk, talk, talk, all calculated to fool you about what you'd get if you made the mistake of voting for them.

In those days of course they didn't know that 30 seconds of television could fool more people more thoroughly than 90 minutes of oratory coming from an occupied suit.

After they learned that, you quit seeing politicians in the flesh. Of course they have an excuse. They say it's not safe for the genuine article to appear in public anymore because of so many maniacs wandering the country itching to exercise their constitutional right to bear arms against politicians.

That sounds reasonable enough, but what they don't tell you is that there may not even be any genuine article anymore. That's right. What makes you think there's really somebody there?

You see some home-type movies of the so-called candidate, he's wearing the costume a poll said you wanted him to wear, and he's surrounded by birds like St. Francis or smiling at orphans or doing something else that a poll said you wanted him to do, and you hear the oily voice, the one from the pancake-syrup commercial or the flea-powder commercial, or whichever commercial a poll said you wanted to be reminded of ... Where was I?

Ah yes. Nobody there. Maybe nobody to get into that empty suit after it gets elected. Not like the old days, no sirree. Would you believe I once saw Harry Truman? The real article, too. At the railroad station ... Long, long ago.

Concern grows over Fed's constitutionality

Question: Can the Congress delegate its constitutional power to declare war? If the answer — as one might think — is no, then the Federal Reserve Act may be unconstitutional.

The unthinkable is actually happening: The venerable central bank, which is what the Federal Reserve actually is, is finally again being publicly questioned by responsible critics.

Charley Reese

The National Conference of State Legislatures, for example, recently passed a resolution which says in part: "Testimony at these hearings has raised questions of the constitutionality of the Fed, and has brought to light fundamental flaws in the present debt-money system causing the system to malfunction... be it resolved that the NCSL expresses deep concern over fundamental causes of economic instability and urges congressional action toward monetary reform..."

The question arises because of Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution. Section 8 outlines the powers of Congress. Number 5 says: "To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standards of weights and measures."

If you interpret "coin" to mean creating and issuing money, then Congress no longer does that. The Federal Reserve does. When the U.S. government needs more money than it collects, it prints U.S. bonds. The Fed writes a check for the amount of the bonds and takes possession of them. Where does the Fed get its money? It creates it.

The creators of America's central bank created a complex system, some say deliberately. In essence, the board of governors — men appointed by the president to 14-year terms — are a government agency, though not in the clear-cut sense of say, the Federal Communications Commission. The 12 Federal Reserve Banks, however, are not government. They are privately owned by the commercial banks in their district.

The basic mechanism by which money is injected into the American economy is in the form of commercial bank loans at interest. As these loans are repaid, the money is extinguished. The Fed, in theory, tries to keep enough money in the economy to serve it but not too much or too little. Its record in this respect is quite spotty.

The group that makes these money supply decisions is called the Federal Open Market Committee. It consists of the seven members of the governing board plus the president of the New York bank and the presidents of four of the other 11 banks. Thus, five of the 12 members are private citizens.

Sen. Jack Melcher, D-Mont., just challenged the constitutionality of this aspect of the Fed but lost in a U.S. District Court. The decision, if appealed, may not be upheld.

The Supreme Court ruling on the Gramm-Rudman Act indicated that the high court does not believe Congress may delegate its powers to another branch of government. That decision has also raised questions in some minds about the Federal Reserve.

No group in these United States has more clout than the banking lobby and it generally resists strenuously any criticism of the Fed. For a long time, about the only criticism of the Fed came from the fringe groups who imagine it to be part of some giant conspiracy, which is nonsense.

The Fed is just a central bank, patterned pretty much after the European central banks. There are valid arguments for and against such a system and this debate has raged off and on in the United States since the very beginning of the country.

I'm just happy to see it brought to the surface where sensible, responsible people can take a hard look at it and debate the issue honestly. People should be just as wary of those who try to squash debate on the Federal Reserve as they are of those who speak darkly of conspiracies. If there's nothing wrong with the system, its proponents shouldn't fear a debate.

Three-month-long murder investigation 'active'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland police are still investigating the murder of a 29-year-old Midland man more than three months ago, who apparently died following a drug deal, investigators said.

Det. Sgt. B.G. Johnson, who said he is still investigating the case "actively," said several dozen tips about the death of Perry Raymond Guthrie have been received, and he said police have several "prime" suspects in the case.

"There is no new information. The case is still under investigation," he said.

Johnson said after the case was a Crime Stoppers "Crime of the Week" feature the week of Aug. 4 in area newspapers and television stations, "20 or 30 tips" were received.

"Most of the tips referred to the same people, people we have been investigating from the beginning," Johnson said. He described the persons involved as "business acquaintances."

Johnson said Guthrie, a former school bus driver for the Midland Independent School District, was an alleged dealer, primarily of cocaine and marijuana.

His nude body was found early July 11 by two girls riding horseback in a pasture just east of Fairgrounds Rd., behind the Rebel Lee Stables. At the time he was living by himself at a nearby trailer park.

Police searched the area where the body was found, and found a bloody shirt, car keys belonging to Guthrie, and a pocket knife. Signs of an apparent struggle were also found in at least two areas that were searched by authorities.

In a subsequent search, Guthrie's walking cane, pants, and several torn, bloodied $100 bills were found. Johnson said speculation is that the money belonged to the victim.

According to an autopsy, Guthrie was killed at least two days before the body, bloated from the heat, was found.

Johnson declined to say how many suspects there are in the case, but he did say the suspects are not in Midland, but their whereabouts are known.

"With other information and further investigation, we hope to be able to (go to the grand jury)," Johnson said. "I feel that we will eventually get enough. We are working on it."

West Texas 4-H'ers honored at banquet

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

4-H, the youth program that is associated with wholesomeness and character building in both rural and urban settings, will honor 22 of its West Texas members this Saturday in a 4-H Gold Star Award banquet in Midland.

The Gold Star is presented to boys and girls, age 14 or older, who have demonstrated outstanding qualities and carried out projects in 4-H Club activities.

Among those to be honored in the 6 p.m. Saturday affair in the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland are Midland County 4-H'ers Kelie Jones and Shannon Bray.

Featured speaker at the event will be State Sen. Bill Sims, a West Texas rancher.

The 4-H program is centered around the family, the community, the country, and God.

"We're a family group," said Marian Farr, Midland County Texas Agricultural Extension Service agent for home economics. "So, that's one drawing part about 4-H. It's something the whole family can do and do together." What became 4-H originated in the farm community in the 1890s and early 1900s to teach farm children useful skills, such as raising vegetables, canning, testing soil, raising livestock, record keeping, budgeting, time management and discipline.

In the years since, 4-H has expanded to serve interests of urban youths as well as those on the farm and ranch. (The four Hs in 4-H represents head, heart, hands and health.) 4-H programs include food and nutrition, clothing, leadership training, horsemanship, horticulture, resource development, child development, entomology, livestock nurturing, photography, wildlife management, and aerospace.

Groundwork is under way to start an in-town 4-H Club. Currently, there are four Midland County 4-H Clubs: Valley View, Greenwood, Shooting Sports and Horse.

Rather than focusing just on home economics, girls are "going the livestock route," just as boys increasingly are studying foods and nutrition and, to some extent, clothing, Ms. Farr said.

"As county agents," said Ms. Farr, "every opportunity that we have to offer leadership for 4-H'ers, we give it to them."

She said that 4-H is "civic- and community-minded." In that respect, the program tries to teach youths "the responsibilities of living in the community."

"They need to give, and they need to partake."

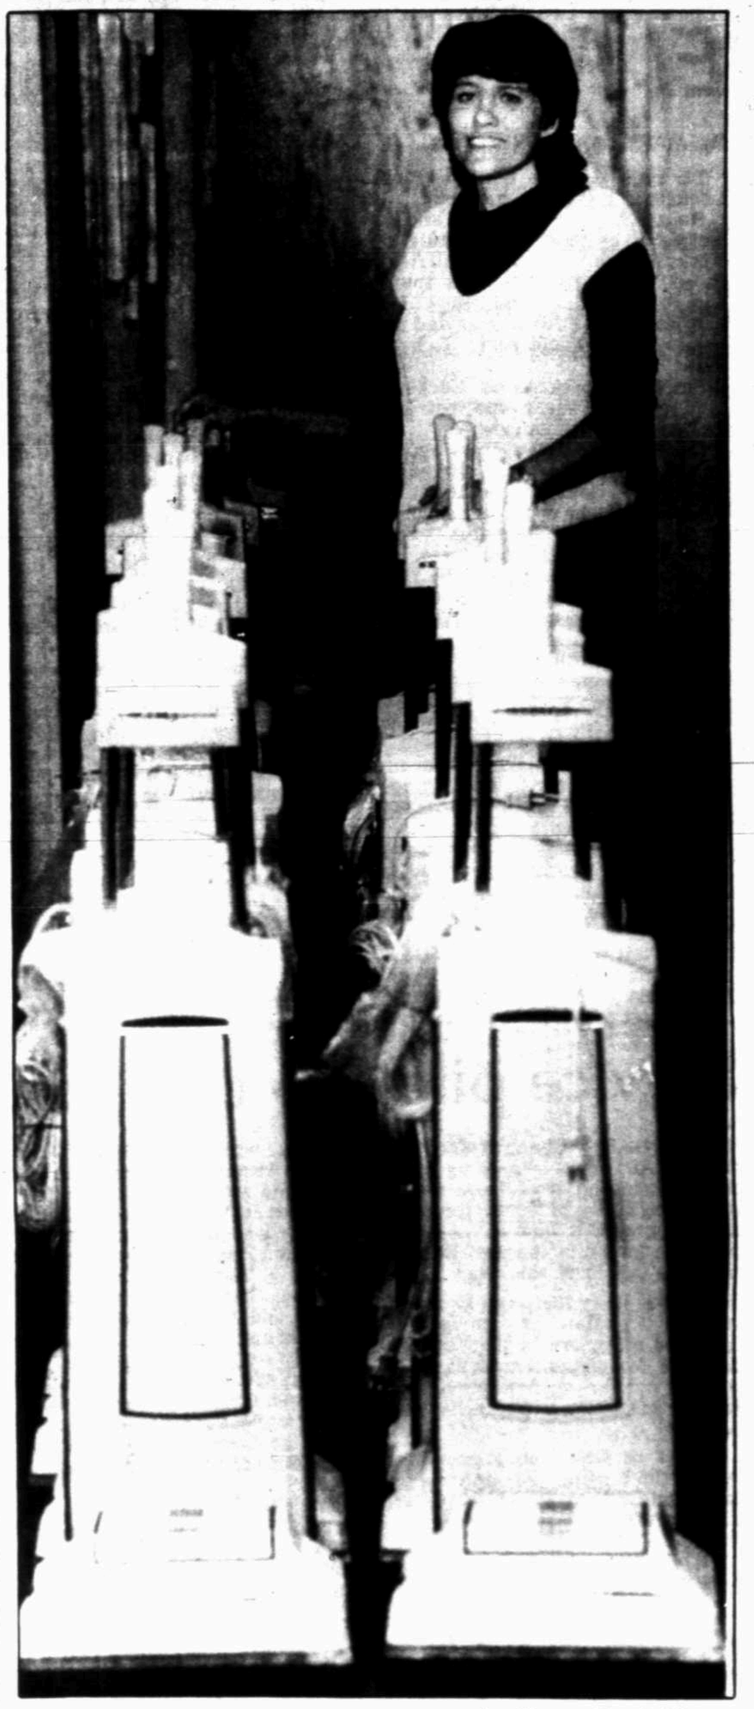

For example, 4-H'ers donate homebaked breads to nursing homes and to the Meals-On-Wheels program. They also deliver canned goods, other foods and toys to the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

"We do fun things in the summer," Ms. Farr noted. "We try to have cook-outs — in a good, ol' family-related, atmosphere."

County Agent Jill Pronger noted that one of the most encouraging aspects of the 4-H program is the growing self-esteem and wholesome attitudes among 4-H members.

The 22 youths who will be recognized Saturday night include Rebecca Harrison from Andrews County; Michael Geisendorff from Crane County; Vickie Reagor and Trebie West from Crockett County; Shanna Ward and George Hennig from Ector County; Jennifer Hecker, Kimberly Fierst and Richard Aten from El Paso County; Michele Pechacek and Tavie Carol Murphy from Glasscock County; Tonya Rock and Ricky Hope from Howard County; Kelie Jones and Shannon Bray from Midland County; Joe Sullivan from Pecos County; Stacey Mitchell from Terrell County; Duane Mitchell and Doug Braden from Upton County; Sherry Redmon from Ward County, and Stephanie Barsch and Rick Babb from Winkler County.

4-H'er Jennifer Dryden, 16, past Gold Star recipient, said that the 4-H program has enhanced her life in areas such as self-discipline and leadership.

Christmas cards made by, benefit children with cancer

From Staff Reports

HOUSTON — Christmas cards designed by children with cancer are now on sale in cities around Texas and by mail order across the country.

This year marks the 13th annual sales campaign for the holiday cards designed by the children undergoing cancer treatment at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston.

The sale of a record 2.5 million cards in 1985 resulted in proceeds totaling approximately $440,000 for pediatric programs. Now, for the first time, funding generated by the 1986 card sales will benefit both pediatric and adult cancer patients at M.D. Anderson hospital.

"For years the proceeds have added programs and activities to meet the social and recreational needs of our young patients," Karen Harrison, pediatric Christmas card project coordinator said.

"This year we are looking at the same needs of our adult patients. With a successful sales campaign this season, we will announce the continuation of the children's activities and the introduction of some new adult programs in the future," Ms. Harrison said.

"More than half of the children treated here win their battles with cancer," Dr. Jan van Eys, head of M.D. Anderson's pediatrics division said. "We are seeing great progress in childhood cancers these days. The five-year survival rate for all types of pediatric cancers is approaching 60 percent," Dr. van Eys said.

Among the many established programs designed for young people is the hospital's overnight summer camp, Camp Star Trails, attended by more than 120 young cancer patients and their siblings in August. The Christmas card scholarship program sent 20 current and former pediatric patients to college this fall on $2,500 and $1,500 scholarships.

In addition, the annual Christmas card sales continue to pay for children's art supplies, salaries for two child life workers and a Spanish translator, weekly parties and special outings, among other activities not included in the hospital's budget.

"It's vitally important to see these programs continue for all of our patients, especially during these times of economic restraint in Texas," Page Lawson, director of volunteer services at M.D. Anderson Hospital said.

"This is a public service project that truly serves the people of Texas and people from around the country and around the world, who come to M.D. Anderson for medical care," Ms. Lawson said.

This year's card selection features seven new holiday designs and one new note card design for use throughout the year. These cards come in packages of 20, one design per package, $7 each. Two new deluxe limited designs are featured in larger sizes with foil-flapped envelopes. Packages of 10 are $10 each, one design per package.

Another new offering is the Collector's Edition package of assorted popular designs from previous years. Eighteen holiday cards and two note cards per package are $7 each. And for the first time, holiday gift tags are available in packages of 10 for $2.

Those interested in supporting the Pediatric Christmas Card Project can request mail order information by calling toll-free 1-800-231-1580.

Singers commute eastward for annual Sacred Harp singing

LITTLE HOPE (AP) — Singers drove hundreds of miles to sit in rough-hewn pine pews and participate in an annual Sacred Harp singing in this East Texas community 15 miles east of Lufkin.

"This is the oldest form of gospel music in the United States," Frank Price, a biology professor at the University of Houston, said.

"It originated in the Appalachian region and moved across the South. There's a song in this book, 'Green Fields,' that was the favorite of Abraham Lincoln and his family."

The singing is held each year at the Little Hope Primitive Baptist Church on the Saturday before the first Sunday in November.

Price, whose father was a song leader in the Church of Christ denomination, first learned the music 40 years ago. The Prices bring their family up to Little Hope each year for the singing. Their sons, Wade and Carey, are two of the youngest song leaders.

Traditionally, Sacred Harp songs are sung twice. The first time, the congregation sings the notes in a chorus of fas, sols, las and mis. Then the song is sung with the lyrics.

"Sacred Harp is dying out," Price said. "You don't see many young people here."

One of the singers, Lewis Smith, said he thinks the music originated in England and Ireland and had survived in the rural South in Baptist, Methodist and Christian churches.

He pointed out the shaped notes in a hymnal, "The B.F. White Sacred Harp."

"The mi is a diamond; the fa is a triangle, sol is round and la is square," he said. "Each part just sings the notes: fa, sol, la, mi."

Burl Russell of Austonio said musical instruments are never used.

"I don't know if I can explain it, but you need to remember they didn't have any musical instruments in the country churches in those days so they just used their voices. You'd key it the same way as you would on a piano, only you just don't have the piano."

A.R. Cathey of Tyler keyed the music at the singing. Cathey, a veteran of many singings at Old Union, gave the song leaders instructions about "birds' eyes" — or rest stops — and other musical notations.

"I could use a pitch pipe to key them if I had a pipe with me," he said. "I just done this so long I can get by without one."

Several of the singers said Sacred Harp used to be taught by traveling teachers who conducted two-week schools at country churches.

Some of the music is airy, and others are mournful.

Aunt Lillie Russell, 92, told the singers she wanted to hear No. 215. The congregation, most of whom were older men and women, responded with a song to the young. "Young people all, attention give, And hear what I do say: I want your soul with Christ to live, In everlasting day."

"It's beautiful music," one of Mrs. Russell's nephews said. "It's just a shame it's dying out."

"I don't know if I can explain it, but you need to remember they didn't have any musical instruments in the country churches in those days so they just used their voices. You'd key it the same way as you would on a piano, only you just don't have the piano."

Vietnam vets to reunite

McKINNEY (AP) — Organizers hope to draw at least 100,000 Vietnam veterans and family members to a giant rally and counseling session next spring in Dallas.

Stan Hall, one of the organizers of Nam Fest '87, said the City of Dallas has issued a permit for the nationwide reunion May 15-17 in the Trinity River flood plain.

"We hope to get all veterans and their families to come together and help them deal with whatever problems are left from the war," Hall said. "We want to help alleviate their feelings of guilt and depression, to deal with their past and bury the ghosts. We want to more or less welcome them back with open arms."

Hall said plans for the rally are not complete.

But he hopes to have counselors there for veterans and their families. Hall also plans to invite experts to conduct panel discussions on the war, its causes and effects. He said Veterans Adminstration officials will explain delayed stress syndrome and will talk about Agent Orange, a chemical that was sprayed in Vietnam and is linked to diseases contracted by Vietnam veterans.

Hall also hopes to line up rock bands to play music popular in the 1960s. He also plans to invite politicians from the war era.

Hall said he and co-organizer Holly Peer are looking for donations and corporate sponsors for the event.

The 36-year-old Hall served three years in Vietnam and Thailand.

"The average age of the soldiers was 19, and for a 19-year-old to be taken off the street and stuck in a rice paddy and told to kill and die for their country, it's culture shock, to say the least."

United Way distributes Electrolux donation

From Staff Reports

Thirteen Midland charities are 24 vacuum cleaners richer today after a donation by the Electrolux Corporation. United Way Midland is coordinating the distribution.

Electrolux, a subsidiary of Sara Lee Corporation, contributed 20,000 upright vacuum cleaners to charities across the nation. The gift was valued at over $40 million.

"Not-for-profit organizations are looking for ways to improve and increase services to their communities. Electrolux Corporation recognizes that its quality products can contribute to that effort," Dennis J. Johnson, Electrolux president said.

Lael Cordes-Pitts of Casa de Amigos said, "Our building is used as a neighborhood community center with over 200 people per day using the facilities. The cleaning aspect is crucial after such hectic days. The donations of these vacuums will allow us to keep our facilities in good condition for our neighbors."

Gifts-in-Kind Inc., is the organization coordinating the nationwide distribution. The national program works to improve the efficiency of and to expand the capacity to provide voluntary services by encouraging in-kind donations as a supplement to financial support.

Midland United Way recipients include the YMCA Afterschool Program, YMCA Community Services Branch, Citywide Community Services, Community and Senior Services, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Midland Association for Retarded Citizens, Housing Authority of Midland, High Sky Children's Ranch, Salvation Army Day Care, Developmental Disability Center, Cerebral Palsy Center, Casa de Amigos and Midland Youth Centers.

El Paso doll house maker is big man in small world

By MARY MARGARET DAVIS

EL PASO (AP) — Clinton "Bud" Luckett is a giant in his field.

He is more than 60 feet tall and he weighs many tons. The building he works in is the size of a football field, its ceiling as high as a water tower and the carpeting 6 feet thick. His eyeglasses are 8 feet across and his handkerchief would cover a circus tent.

But that's because, in Luckett's field, one inch equals one foot: The six-footer is a miniaturist.

Luckett retired two years ago as senior vice president in charge of the International Department at MBank. Today he operates a small — by the real world's standards — specialty shop, Luckett Miniatures.

"After I retired, I spent the first year building a doll house for my granddaughter," he said. "When it ws finished, their mother — my daughter — told me her house wasn't big enough for the doll house, so I sold it for $3,000.

"Then last year, I decided to go into the miniature business — selling doll house kits or making them up for customers. I try to stock things from all over the world — anything that hobbyist might want."

It's a good thing no one made Luckett a bet two years ago that he couldn't just one doll house. After that first one, he found he was hooked.

If Luckett were building full-sized houses, his "construction jobs" during the last yar would add up to one of the best years in the industry's history. His work time approximates full-scale projects: a month for each of the eight or nine houses completed during that time.

Luckett's large hands become amazingly deft when he puts in light bulbs that are no larger than a child's fingernail or fits dressers with microscopic hinges and drawer pulls.

Shingles go on a house roof one at a time, a tedious job. But, to Luckett's relief, brick exterior walls come with the bricks already laid and hardwood floors are made in sheets, not individual boards.

Nevertheless, he has had to become a jack of all trades. Besides doing electrical and carpentry work and cabinetmaking, he had to tecah himself upholstering, to cover tiny wing chairs in velvet, and stonecutting, to fit a thin, thin slice of marble onto Queen Anne legs to make a coffee table.

For upwardly mobile homeowners, Luckett carries exquisite reproductions of 18th century peices originally designed by Chippendale, Sheraton, Adam and Hepplewhite. He stocks and makes frames for minute oil paintings and for elegant fired enamels done by his sister, Dinny Breese.

An El Paso needlecrafter supplies him with oriental rugs, done in petit point needlpoint. One such rug in a 9-by-12-inch size, finished from a $25 kit, sells for $165.

Luckett has a $300 sterling silver tea set and matching $62 candlesticks, replicas of 18th century museum pieces. A group of minute-but-perfect Meissen porcelain figurines by Goebel range in price from $65-80.

One corner of the store is a lumber yard-building supply store. In stock are flooring, wallpaper, electical materials and light fixtures, shingles and lumber. Another corner is a furniture store, with carpeting, lamps, telephones and other accessories and plastic or wooden furniture in kit or finished form.

Unfinished, a colonial bonnet-topped highboy is $19.95; completed, it sells for $75.

There's real wicker furniture for lounging on the veranda by Scarlett O'Hara and Rhett Butler and all their friends from "Gone With the Wind," a set of to-scale dolls handmade of porcelain by El Pasoan Dee Bryan.

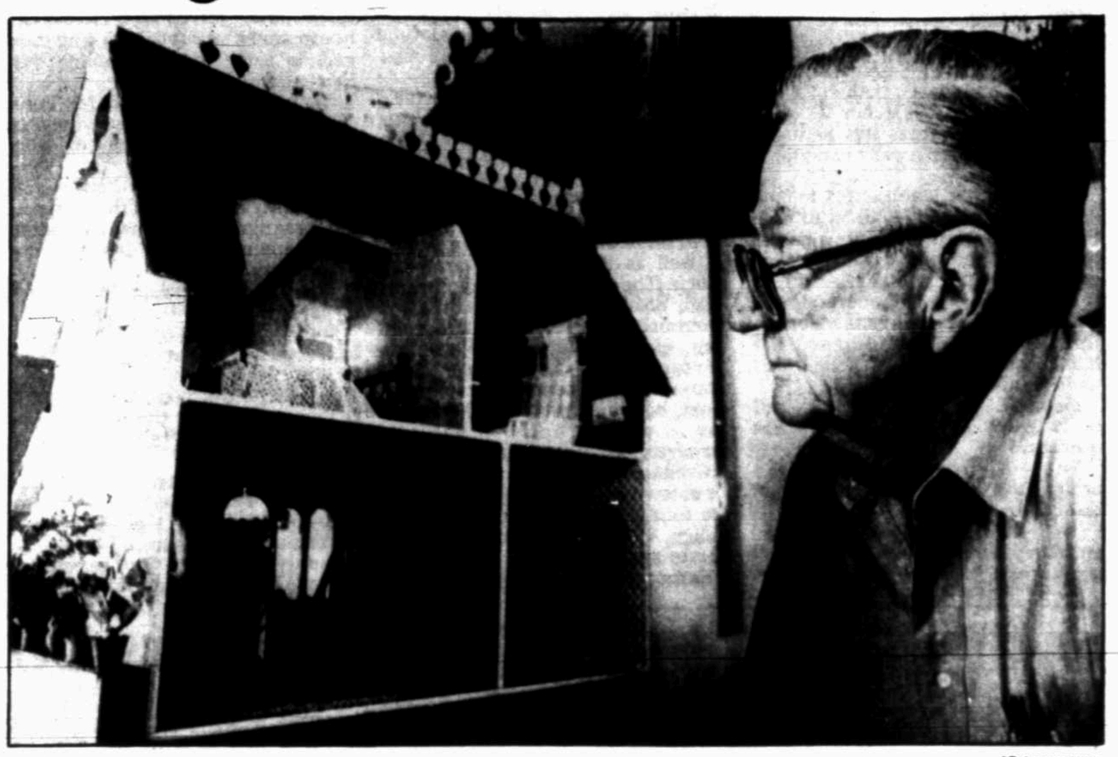

Luckett sells house kits ranging in price from $15.95 for a house that is all one large room to $300 for an elaborate mansion with many chambers.

Here and there around the sales room stand completed houses — Swiss chalets, Southern plantations, Victorians, colonials.

"Doll house people don't seem to like contemporary architecture," he said.

Many of Luckett's houses have blue ribbons and rosettes attached, attesting to the builder's excellence as proclaimed at exhibitions such as the Assistance League of El Paso's annual Miniature World.

Periodically, Luckett reducs prices on his complete models, "so I can sell those and build some more," he said.

Service pilots to compete in Air Meet

AUSTIN (AP) — Flying at 600 mph, dodging Air Force jets along a 10 minute course in West Texas while attempting to log in targets for optical photographs is what U.S. service pilots are facing in the first Reconnaissance Air Meet this week.

Four U.S. Navy fliers and two F-14 Tomcats that flew combat against Libya last spring are participating in the RAM '86 competition along with Marine and Royal Australian Air Force crews at Bergstrom Air Force Base.

"All of us flew combat missions against the Libyans. We flew every day," said Lt. Dave Parsons, a radar intercept officer or backseater in the two-man F-14s of VF-102.

VF-102 was one of the F-14 squadrons aboard the aircraft carrier America, which steamed off the North African coast during the engagements with Libyan air and naval forces in March and April.

"Every one of our aircraft had eight (air to air) missiles on it, but none of us shot at anything," Parsons said. "The Libyans were flying MiG-23s and MiG25s. They'd play a lot of cat-and-mouse games with us, but they wouldn't engage."

During the competition, the pilots fly at about 500 feet trying to sight targets while Air Force F-15 Eagles harass the fliers through the course in the Santiago Mountains south of Alpine.

Competition rules call for no combact to suit the unarmed RF-4C Phantom flown by Air Force reconnaissance crews, so fliers cannot fight the Eagles and must manuever around them.

"We're a fighter squadron, and that's our primary job so we'd like to turn and engage before going back to taking our pictures — but we're not allowed to do that," said Lt. Chuck Hunter, a VF-102 squadron pilot.

Hunter said a nice thing about flying out of Bergstrom is not having the 60,000-pound airplane flung off the runway by a steam catapult as VF-102 crews are used to doing on an aircraft carrier.

"The cat stroke is very violent. We go from zero to 200 mph in two seconds," Hunter said. "Our takeoffs here are pretty leisurely."

The RAM competition is expected to become an biennial event.

"The Navy will be back," Hunter said.

Crime Stoppers statistics optimistic

From Staff Reports

Ten suspects were arrested and 65 offenses, including more than 30 burglaries, were cleared by authorities, according to Midland Crime Stoppers statistics for October, released today.

According to the report, information developed through the program resulted in three arrests on burglary charges.

But Sgt. Milton O'Bryant with Crime Stoppers said those three arrests and other information led to the clearance of 18 vehicle burglaries and 16 building burglaries.

"We got lucky," O'Bryant said. "What happened was some of the people arrested for burglary confessed to a bunch of other cases."

O'Bryant said the 65 cleared offenses doubles those in a normal month, in which 15-30 offenses are cleared.

According to the report, 23 code numbers were issued to callers, and rewards totaling $1,680 were paid during the month. More than $26,000 in stolen property, including $6,190 in narcotics, were recovered. Aside from the burglaries, 12 forgery cases, five narcotic cases, and one theft case were also cleared, and one fugitive was arrested.

Bad milk 'not shipped to area'

From Staff Reports

Bacteria-infested milk processed in the Borden Inc., plant in Houston was not shipped to any grocers in the Midland-Odessa area, a Texas Department of Health official said.

The Borden milk distributed locally is either from the Borden plants in Lubbock or Abilene, Linda Wyatt, TDH director of environmental and consumer health protection said from Lubbock.

"A great deal of the milk in Midland is produced by the Gandy Co. Midland doesn't get much Borden milk," Ms. Wyatt said.

A Borden milk plant was temporarily closed in Houston after listeria monocytogenes bacteria were found in a pint of milk on Oct. 8 and traces were found in subsequent inspections, prompting the plant to close Oct. 29, the plant's general manager said.

The bacteria causes a disease called listeriosis which is transmitted to humans by direct contact with infected animals, by inhalation of dust or contact with sewage or soil contaminated with the organism, a TDH official said.

The plant's general manager said the Houston branch will be reopened after its ventilation and flooring are remodeled.

EARNEST KIKER

Pecan shows are educational, competitive

In the 1870's the first pecan show in Texas was held. The exact date has been lost in history, but we do know that Mr. E.E. Risien conducted the contest in San Saba. The original Mother San Saba won the prize and was thus identified by Risien for future propagation.

The annual county pecan show concept was initiated in 1952 with four central Texas counties participating. Last year over 100 counties participated in 70 local shows across the state. Winning county entries go on to one of three Regional Pecan Shows in December. Regional winners will be judged at a state show in 1987.

County and regional pecan shows are a window on the Texas pecan industry. They demonstrate the superior quality of Texas pecans and play a major role in the evaluation of new pecan varieties. The 1986 Midland County Pecan Show has been scheduled for Nov. 30, Dec. 1 and 2, in the Dellwood Mall. The Regional Show for our area will be Dec. 10-12 in San Angelo.

Pecan shows are truly educational events in addition to being competitive. Growers get an opportunity to see how their entries compare with other pecans of the same variety. Proper management throughout the growing season shows up dramatically at a pecan show. Pecan producers, whether one tree or 1000 trees, can measure the success of their management program by the way their entries compare with others. Poor irrigation, lack of zinc, improper insect control and disease prevention inadequacies can be pinpointed and corrected in subsequent growing seasons.

Pecan entries are judged in a very objective manner. Each entry is weighed twice to determine the size of pecans (number per pound) and what percentage of the pecan is actually edible kernel. Kernel appearance is important. The brighter and lighter the golden brown of the kernel, the better. A heavy, well filled kernel is much more desirable than a hollow one. Pecans in the shell that are clean, not discolored and free of insect damage are also important.

Here are some guidelines for selecting pecans for the county pecan show:

— Participants are limited to one entry of each named variety they grow. Growers may enter as many seedlings, known hybrids or natives as they wish.

— The exhibitor must be the grower.

— A minimum of 40 pecans are necessary for each entry. This minimum sample of 40 should represent the variety and be uniform in size and shell color. Mixed samples (more than one variety in an entry) will be disqualified.

— The grower may wish to select the heaviest pecans by weighing individual nuts.

— A varietal entry may be composed of nuts from more than one tree. For example: If the grower has 10 Choctaw trees, each tree could contribute nuts to the grower's one Choctaw entry.

— Nuts should be without insect and disease damage.

— Discolored shells and kernels may result from peeling pecans from the shucks too early.

— Pecans exhibited must be from the 1986 crop.

— Pecans are judged on the basis of size (number per pound), appearance and shell color. Kernel quality is equally important and is based on the percent kernel, color, general appearance, texture, solidness and taste.

If you plan to enter the 1986 Midland County Pecan Show here are the location points where you may leave your entries:

By 5 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 29 — Charlie Green residence, Cotton Flat & County Road 125; Frank Mills residence, 26 Perrie Lane (Ridge Heights Addition); LaCasa Verde Nursery, 2615 N. Midland Drive or Black Hawk Electrical Supply, 905 S. Garfield.

By 1 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 29 — Village Barber Shop, 2-B Meta Drive.

By 5 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 26 — County Extension Office, 2445 E. Highway 80.

If you have any question regarding the Midland County Pecan Show please call the Extension Office at 687-1351.

Farm groups differ on effects of Democratic takeover of Senate

AGRICULTURE

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two powerful farm groups differ on whether the Democratic takeover of the Senate will mean serious moves to overhaul federal commodity programs designed last year by Congress to help wean producers from government supports.

Robert J. Mullins, chief lobbyist for the National Farmers Union, says the Senate's 55-45 Democratic majority will bring "a change in atmosphere" for farm legislation when Congress convenes in January.

"They're going to be much more receptive to some changes for farm policy, rather than just cutting price — which we expect the administration to propose again," Mullins said Wednesday in an interview. "I would think that some supply-management ideas would probably get a better hearing."

But John Lewis of the American Farm Bureau Federation's Washington office said there was "no clear mandate" in Tuesday's voting. "I don't think there'll be significant changes" in U.S. farm programs, he said.

The federation supported the administration's drive on Capitol Hill last year for "market-oriented" programs aimed at reducing commodity price supports so that U.S. wheat, corn and other crops would be more competitive in world trade.

Farm exports are at a nine-year low and are cited as a major reason for depressed prices and sagging farm income.

Next in line to succeed Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., as chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee is Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt.

Lewis said Leahy would maintain a strong voice for dairy farmers as chairman, as Helms has for tobacco. Mostly, however, Lewis said he thought Leahy would not interfere in committee development of other programs.

"I don't see any evidence of a real farm revolt, except in the two Dakotas," Lewis said, referring to the defeat of Republican incumbents, Sens. Mark Andrews of North Dakota and James Abdnor of South Dakota. "I certainly don't see it as a mandate for Senator Harkin's mandatory control legislation."

Before adjourning this fall, a dozen Senate and House Democrats, including Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, unveiled a plan to move away from the "misguided conception" of the 1985 law toward supply management of U.S. crop production, including increases in federal price supports.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng contends that despite the record subsidy costs of the current programs the 1985 law should be given a chance to restore U.S. competitiveness in the global export market. Some fine-tuning, however, might be needed, he said.

Orville L. Freeman, president of the non-profit, privately supported Agriculture Council of America, said he thinks Congress will embark on "an enhanced export drive" and will recognize a need to use more effectively the provisions of the 1985 law, including the Food for Peace allocation of U.S. commodities.

Freeman was secretary of agriculture in the Kennedy-Johnson era of the 1960s. As head of the council, Freeman is committed to strengthening the U.S. farm export position.

Crop harvesting touch and go

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Crop harvesting operations continue to be touch and go for Texas farmers.

Scattered rains early in the week once again put the damper on crop harvesting in western areas, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Farmers in the Panhandle and South Plains need open weather to finish harvesting sorghum, peanuts, soybeans and sugar beets and to start harvesting cotton. Cotton harvesting, however, won't get into full swing until after a killing freeze, and the average date for that to happen is at hand.

Most of the cotton crop also remains to be harvested in the Rolling Plains, Far West and West Central Texas. Rains also continued to delay peanut harvesting in west central, central and coastal areas and soybean harvesting along the Upper Coast, Carpenter said.

Harvesting of sugar beets, greens, cucumbers, peppers, tomatoes, oranges and grapefruit continued in the Rio Grande Valley, along with some planting of winter vegetables. Winter vegetable planting also continued in the Winter Garden area of Southwest Texas.

Deer season opens Saturday, Nov. 8, and hunters are hopeful of a good harvest. Deer are in good condition over most of the state due to an abundance of forage and browse brought on by summer and fall rains, Carpenter noted.

Harvesting of a below normal pecan crop continues throughout the state although nuts are of good to excellent quality.

Livestock and range conditions are in excellent shape with the winter season approaching, Carpenter said. A lot of heavy calves are moving to market and will be put to wheat and oat pastures for fall and winter grazing.

Most wheat and oat plantings are off to a good start due to favorable soil moisture conditions. However, extended rainy weather has eased planting delays in some areas, particularly in the Rolling Plains and North Central Texas.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions:

FAR WEST: Cotton harvesting is under way in a few locations; crop prospects generally are fair to poor due to adverse weather conditions. Pastures and ranges continue to make excellent progress, and livestock are in good condition.

WEST CENTRAL: Weather conditions have been good for small grain growth but not for crop harvesting. Wet fields are continuing to hamper peanut harvesting while most cotton farmers are awaiting a killing freeze to prepare their crop for harvesting. Livestock are in excellent shape, with light calves and lambs being put on small grains. Deer season starts Saturday and ranchers are ready for the influx of hunters.

RICHARD MINZENMAYER

Proper attention to detail nets higher harvested yield

A poor rob of harvesting cotton can ruin a producer's best efforts in trying to grow a quality cotton crop. Proper attention to harvesting details can result in an increased harvested yield, improved lint quality and help control overwintering insects.

A producer should check the harvest efficiency of his cotton stripper. Overall harvesting efficiency is the percent of the crop that reaches the stripper basket. Preharvest losses are those locks of cotton that fall to the ground before the harvester passes. The remaining cotton that does not reach the basket is stripper inefficiency-losses relating to imperfect machine harvesting.

Brush strippers are capable, under ideal conditions, of harvesting 98 percent or more of the open cotton. If a machine strips less than 95 percent of the total yield, the cause of the excessive losses should be determined.

Set the header height just low enough to go under the low bolls of cotton. If a finger header is being used, adjust the header tilt to maintain the same finger header at both ends. If a brush header is being used, adjust the height of each row unit individually with its control knob. Running the header too low will cause excessive amounts of dirt and trash to be taken into the machine and may lower the grade of cotton. Running the header too high or high on one end will leave excessive amounts of cotton in the field. With a stripper, the plant lifters and stripping rolls should be adjusted to pick up a minimum of trash from the ground and a minimum of bark and branches from the plants.

As the green boll box is emptied the first time note the percentage of open cotton in the green boll pile. Excessive open bolls may indicate the need for increased air velocity. Also check in the trailer from the first basket dumped for evidence of green bolls in the cotton. These will show up either as whole bolls or wet knots in the cotton. If any are found it indicates the air velocity separating chamber is too great and the fan speed should be decreased.

Green bolls in seed cotton result in decreased lint quality, lower grade, staple and mic. Green bolls in the field are excellent overwintering sites for insects, particularly the pink bollworm. Therefore, the boll box should be emptied in the turnrow, not in the field, and the bolls should be picked up and destroyed following harvest.

While the engine is stopped, clean the air inlet screen on the fan. Allowing lint, leaf trash, etc., to build up on the inlet screen will restrict the air flow through the separating chamber and cause a drop in harvest efficiency. A nylon brush or a cloth rag does a suitable job of cleaning.

A well-maintained, carefully operated stripper helps reduce trash and moisture in seed cotton. Worn machine parts should be replaced and all adjustments should be set to factory specifications. If these precautions are observed, the machine can be kept in trouble-free operation throughout the season, taking greatest advantage of available good weather.

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

All job options challenging

By JIM MAY

DEAR COPING: It has gotten to the point that all I seem to do is apply for jobs outside my area of expertise. I've written lots of letters, but I get very few positive responses. I know you keep talking about how important it is to keep my options open, but I am truly relieved when I don't get an interview for something outside of my field. — WHAT NEXT?

DEAR WHAT NEXT: It's just a hunch, but you may be conveying to those potential employers what your real feelings are about those positions you are not interested in.

I share your concerns about moving into areas outside of your area of expertise. You may want to consider other options within your area of expertise, such as accepting a lower-paying position within your area.

These days of course you have to convince the employer you really want that job. You may also want to consider moving to stay in your field, or taking an overseas assignment.

All options are challenging. Good luck.

DEAR COPING: Can I walk away from my house mortgage? Will they do anything to me? — R.R.

DEAR R.R.: Unfortunately, I know nothing about the legal implications of your question, so I strongly recommend you ask an attorney.

I also know nothing about your present situation. As a general observation, I encourage you to discuss your situation with your mortgage company as soon as possible.

There may or may not be some options available to you from their perspective, but you should consider meeting with them to present your situation. They know how tough things are these days.

DEAR COPING: Whenever I go for an inteview, I get extremely nervous. It has been a long, long time since I had to look for a job. I have handled difficult situations in my jobs in the past, on both sides of the desk, but this looking for a job is a new experience. I am certain that my edginess shows. Any suggestions? — LP.

DEAR LP: Yes. First of all — practice, practice, practice.

Begin with the basics. Find out pertinent information on the firm and organization you are interviewing with. This can be accomplished through annual reports (for public stock companies) and personal inquiry of friends and acquaintances who know the firm or someone who works there.

Once this is completed, you should generate some questions to ask the interviewer at the appropriate time.

Next you should practice the interview. What kind of questions are they likely to ask you? Practice answering those questions and notice how they respond to your answers. A poor answer repeated is still a poor answer.

In terms of your specific interview, ask a friend, preferably one in management, to interview you. Video tape the interview. Then play back the tape and critically observe your performance — and it is a performance. Remember you are trying to impress your future employer.

It often helps to have someone review your tape with you (wives are good reviewers, but we are poor advice takers). Look at everything critically: how you are dressed, how you sit, your gestures, your answers (too slow? too fast?).

I know this sounds artificial, but in the short space of an interview, you must convince someone you are the one for the job. You must learn to make the most of that time. Your real abilities will show when you get the job.

DEAR COPING: I recently applied for a job I was overqualified for and did not get hired. I may have sounded too desperate, but I offered to work for much less than I should for a contracted period of time, just to have a steady income. After I left I felt disgusted with myself, like I sold myself out. I will never do that again. What is wrong with employers when they don't know a good deal when they see it? — FGG

DEAR FGG: I asked your question to several businessman and received somewhat varied responses.

Those with larger firms indicated it was just a matter of company policy to not "make deals." They commented on such matters as salary grades and position guidelines. One did note, however, that he would not hire someone who was overqualified for a position as they would wind up resenting the employer and the firm in the long run.

Independent businessmen indicated they had no hard and fast rules, but that it would depend on the person, the job and their feeling for the future of the position.

So while it must have been a bad experience for you, it may not have been directed at you personally. You might consider keeping that approach as an option, but to a carefully selected target employer.

Speechwriter 'can' relieve fear

Hearst News Service

What frightens Americans more than anything? What do they fear more than snakes and spiders? More than falling, flying and dying?

Jeff Cook says the No. 1 American phobia is the fear of having to give a speech. Cook should know. By profession, he's a speechwriter, in his words, "a kind of literary valet." He's worked for senators, governors and company executives.

Now, Cook has launched a second career as an inventor of an item that he thinks is the answer to the No. 1 fear: speeches that are literally in a can. The canned speeches poke fun at the pompous, boring talks some speechmakers deliver. Inside a second tin can with its tear-off top are three items: a brief, amusing script; a polyester carnation designed as a boutonniere, and a card that reads "applause."

Cook's Original Canned Speech — a registered trademark — comes in 19 varieties. Some sample lines:

■ 40th birthday: "I'm reminded of the great pianist Oscar Levant who once said: 'Beneath this flabby exterior lies an enormous lack of character.' "

■ All Purpose No. 1: "Things are never as bad as they could be. For example, instead of being up here giving a speech, I could be having a root canal operation."

■ Expectant Mama: "If one more matron in the supermarket says, 'When are you due, dear?' I'll scream."

■ Convention keynote: "Together we must go forward. I know you'll understand what I mean when I say the future is now, the past is prologue, the bar is open."

The idea for canned speeches floated into Cook's head in 1985.

"I was soaking in the bathtub after work, disgruntled and fed up with the speech I was writing that day," he explains. He asked himself, why not have some fun and produce canned parodies? He enlisted his next-door neighbor, a commercial artist.

"He just laughed," Cook recalls.

Cook's entry into the fad gift market has been an education. He's still trying to locate 18,000 polyester flowers that are lost somewhere between Seattle and Hong Kong. And he's laboring to produce enough canned speeches for the holiday trade.

College students changing minds about ideal careers

Copley News Service

College students are changing their ideas about which careers are ideal.

For example, fewer students are plugging into computer careers, and the number of engineering degrees are dropping. But getting a teaching credential seems to be tops.

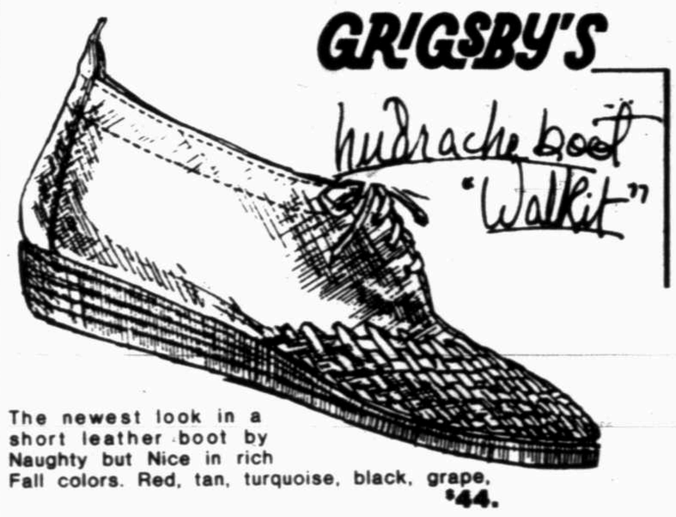

These are just a few results of a recent survey of more than 280,000 college students.

Dr. Kenneth Green, one of the men behind these findings, says while the average student may have changed his thoughts about what careers are hot, one thing has remained constant.

Students still base their career choices on the biggest motivator — money.

According to Green, teachers are getting paid better these days: the average salary starts at about $20,000.

DEAR ABBY

Hairdresser's attitude upsets customer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Recently my hairdresser had a birthday. She received many cards with checks, which she displayed so her customers could not miss seeing them. (I had given her a nice card without a check.) I took her display as a hint for clients who may have forgotten, or didn't know it was her birthday. Since then I noticed a definite coolness toward me.

It started me to thinking: Why should hairdressers always be on the receiving end of the goodies? What do their clients get besides a raise in prices and a lot of waiting while they work in extra customers on the regulars' time?

A really smart hairdresser would keep track of her customers' birthdays and give each one a complimentary shampoo and set, then when her birthday came around, all her clients would reciprocate with a nice check or gift that would more than equal the price of a shampoo and set.

If you use this, sign me ... SATURDAY STANDING APPOINTMENT

DEAR STANDING: At the risk of sounding like a broken record: Gifts are never mandatory. Also, many hairdressers give as much as they get, so don't tar them all with the same brush — no pun intended.

DEAR ABBY: I read with great interest your letter regarding the policy of banks in Washington state concerning "dormant" accounts. They're lucky. Here in Texas, an inactive account is considered "dormant" after three years. Then the bank makes no effort to notify the customer either by phone or mail.

My two children's savings accounts were declared dormant by a local bank, and the first notice I had of it was when I received the quarterly bank statements showing a zero balance. When I asked the people at the bank if an error had been made, they said "No," and explained that the money had been sent to the state — that they did not have time to try to contact people and that they just published a list of names in the local newspaper in hopes that we would see our name there. They gave me a form to fill out and send to the state to reclaim the money. It was a typical government form — long and very tedious.

I told them that I felt that it was their responsibility to do this since they had not made any effort to contact me. The least they could have done was to have a message printed at the bottom of my children's statements the previous quarter telling me what was going to happen if some activity was not generated in the accounts. Apparently the state does not want people contacted. A banker friend of mine says that this practice puts millions of dollars into the state treasury. Get my drift? — J.W. (TRICKED IN TEXAS)

DEAR J.W.: Yup.

DEAR ABBY: You asked readers to send in their "family codes" to let families know of their whereabouts during World War II.

You may want to go to your public library and check out a copy of "The Codebreakers" by David Kahn (Macmillan, 1967). Chapter 16 deals with several examples of just these types of codes.

First, you will likely enjoy Kahn's delightful accounts of chicanery vs. censorship. Second, "The Codebreakers" has been read by many, and it would be interesting to see if any of your readers had submitted an anecdote from Chapter 16 of that book and tried to pass it off as their own. — NEW JERSEY READER

DEAR READER: Thus far, I've had no repeats.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THE D'S IN WHITE PLAINS, N.Y.: If you want a baby only because:

1. You think it will "save" your marriage.
2. All your friends have one.
3. Your parents are hounding you to give them grandchildren.
4. You want someone to take care of you in your old age.
5. Susie wants a baby brother (or sister).
6. You want to be "fulfilled" as a woman — or "prove" you are a man.
7. You're trying for a girl (or boy) this time.

DON'T!

Distilled water linked to eye infection

United Press International

The use of distilled water to clean contact lenses has been linked to a painful eye infection that can cause blindness, according to researchers at the Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville.

The infection, acanthamoeba keratitis, is caused by airborne amoeba that can settle into jugs of distilled water, the researchers reported recently. Some contact lens wearers use distilled water to make their own saline solution.

If caught early enough, the infection can be treated with antibiotics, said researcher Dr. Karla J. Johns. But sufferers could go blind if the amoeba — passed from the distilled water to the cornea — are left to grow in the eye.

Johns said the condition is difficult to diagnose because the only way to identify the amoeba is to grow a culture from a tear drop of a suspected victim. Symptoms of the infection include cloudy vision and eye pain.

She said contact lens wearers can avoid the infection by using commercially prepared chemical solutions to clean their contact lenses.

Discarding useless items dangerous practice

By ERMA BOMBECK

Maybe you heard. I cleaned my closet last weekend. I know, I've done it before, but never have I been so ruthless ... so unfeeling ... so merciless in my attack.

I struck down size 10 skirts in their prime ... torched shoes with 5-inch heels ... stuffed hats that still fit in a Goodwill dumpster!

I was proudly surveying all the bare hangers dangling from empty rods when my daughter said, "What's in these boxes?"

"They're filled with material I've cut off my coats and dresses that were too long."

She opened the box with row upon row of two to five inches of hems rolled into a ball. "Why are you saving them?" she asked.

"You really don't know, do you?" I smiled.

"No, tell me."

"You would never understand for the same reason you would never comprehend why I am saving these cartons of discarded shoulder pads."

"Try me."

"It's Bombeck's Law. The more absurd the item, the more likely you are to need it the day after you throw it away. Remember all those plastic butter containers I saved? I must have had five or 10 years of them tucked away. Then one day your father threw them out. The very next day, I got a call from a Scout leader who needed them for a seedling project."

"Wasn't she the weird woman who also took all of your toilet tissue tubes?"

"Which is why I'm stockpiling them again."

At one time I too was innocent like my daughter. I thought saving tissue paper that came in boxes was stupid. Then one day I threw away enough old tissue to gift wrap the Sears building. Within the week, I was ironing pieces of tissue jammed in my shoes to line a box.

You think nothing is going to come from all those little extra buttons that come with blouses and match absolutely nothing, but I defy you to throw one away.

Through the years, I have learned that clothes, hats and shoes come and go. They can be thrown away and nothing will happen. But the very moment you pitch an entire drawer of nylon pantyhose with holes in the feet will be the day they turn into heirlooms and are sought after by collectors all over the world.

At least my closet looks great. I hardly notice the five shopping bags of old Christmas cards and two garbage bags of pine cones.

Dollar unchanged

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was little changed today as European currency markets awaited publication of U.S. unemployment figures later in the day. Gold gained in Hong Kong and was mixed in Europe.

Dealers said an improvement in the U.S. jobless figure for October could boost the dollar, but markets were expecting it to be unchanged at 7 percent.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell to a closing 163.30 yen from Thursday's 163.45. Later, in London, it was quoted at 163.13 yen.

The dollar rose 1.85 yen this week, after gaining 0.45 yen last week. Its recent advance followed reports of U.S.-Japanese agreement that the dollar has fallen far enough since September 1985, when it was trading at 242 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Thursday:

—2.0635 West German marks, up from 2.0610

—1.7200 Swiss francs, down from 1.7220

—6.7325 French francs, unchanged

—2.3320 Dutch guilders, unchanged

—1,425.50 Italian lire, up from 1,422.50

—1.3884 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3867

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $409.35 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $408.50. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $408.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $408.95, up from $408.00 late Thursday.

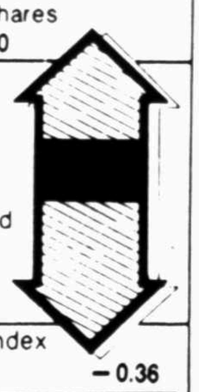

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $5.63 to close at a bid $408.65.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.72 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $5.65.

U.S. unemployment rate stays steady at 7 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy created about 300,000 to 350,000 jobs last month, just enough to keep up with a growing labor force and hold the nation's unemployment at 7.0 percent, the government announced today.

The Labor Department said its monthly household survey showed a job growth of 349,000 after seasonal adjustments, offsetting an identical decline in September.

But the labor force grew by 360,000 last month, the first increase since June. In the last year, 2 million people have joined the labor force in search of work, nearly 75 percent of whom were women.

In a separate survey of business payrolls, employers reported adding 298,000 jobs in October, 175,000 of them in business and hospital services and in retail trade.

But the household survey said that most of the job growth — 228,000 — was in part-time work.

Addressing the small growth in full-time jobs, the commissioner of labor statistics, Janet L. Norwood, told a congressional committee today that 5.8 million Americans who had sought full-time work had to settle for part-time employment last month.

She called that "a rather high number for this stage of a recovery."

She also commented that "almost all of the job gains occurred among women and teen-agers, a good deal of it in part-time jobs."

Altogether, 110,240,000 people were on the job last month, more than 20 million of them part-time workers. The working total represents 60.8 percent of the adult population, down 0.1 percentage point from the August record of 60.9 percent.

The 298,000 increase in payroll workers was more than twice the average monthly gain of the previous five months. Mining, the oil and gas industry and manufacturing employment all rose slightly in October after falling a total 350,000 since the first of the year.

Manufacturing employment rose by 27,000, oil and gas by 1,000 and mining by 2,000.

The unemployment rate for adult men held at 6.2 percent, the level it has maintained for four of the last five months and the same rate as in October 1985.

Joblessness among adult women has fallen from 6.4 percent to 6.1 percent in the last year.

For other population groups, the Bureau of Labor Statistics gave these October unemployment calculations:

—Whites, 6.0 percent, unchanged.

—Blacks, 14.4 percent, down from 14.8 in September.

—Hispanics, 10.5 percent, down from 11.1.

—Teen-agers, 17.6 percent, down from 18.7.

—Black teen-agers, 34.8 percent, down from 38.3.

On the eve of the government's announcement, private economists said the jobless rate would remain stuck in the 7 percent range in the coming months despite recent improvements in trade and a tax-avoidance consumer and business buying spree.

Narriman Behravesh of Wharton Econometrics in Philadelphia said there may be some improvement in the unemployment totals the rest of this year, but not much and not lasting.

"The economy is not going gangbusters," he said. "There is a fair amount of encouraging news. The statistics suggest we are beginning to see a turnaround in trade in manufacturing.

"But early in 1987, the economy is going to be a little weak because the tax bill socks it to both consumers and businesses and the (effects from) the rate cuts won't show up until later," Behravesh added.

"The economy is going to be benefiting in the fourth quarter from the tax-reform measures.

Hispanic chamber elects new officers

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Still in an election mood after national, state and local elections, the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce voted on a new slate of officers at Thursday's meeting and named Sam Flores president for 1987.

Flores, a loan officer at RepublicBank First National Midland, will be joined by Felipe Morales as first vice president. Attorney Richard Alvarado was named second vice president, and Lydia Loya was reelected treasurer. The secretary will be Marta Reyes and parliamentarian will be Enrique Farias.

Board members Robbyne Fuller, Celia Morales, Ciro Sanchez and Manuel Sanchez will be joined by Jose Cuevas Jr., David Diaz, Charles Spence and Larry Carrasco. At least 180 ballots were cast in the election.

Outgoing president Roger Robles announced that the new officers, who take office in January, will serve until September. "We're trying to coincide with the state organization (TAMACC), which elects officers in September," he explained. The chamber will hold an installation banquet in March, and it was announced that Judge Roy Barrera, who ran for state Attorney General, will be the speaker.

Prior to the election, Robles gave a report on the TAMACC quarterly meeting in San Marcos. According to Robles, a topic of great concern to the representatives of the Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce was the immigration bill, which President Reagan signed into law Thursday morning. The bill, he said, "placed a burden on the employer, who faces a fine and breaking the law if he hires an illegal alien. As a result, he might be skeptical and hesitant to hire someone who might be in this country illegally. It means we (as Hispanics) may have to continuously prove we're U.S. citizens." He added that the association will watch to see that the new law isn't used as an excuse for discrimination.

He said another topic of discussion was the Hispanic dropout problem, which TAMACC and Southwestern Bell are concerned with. "You might wonder why the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce is concerned about the dropout rate. These are future businesspersons and professions that will not be there because they dropped out of school. We hope that one of the ways we can fight the problem is with the role model program, which we hope to get underway next year."

Guest speaker for the evening was John Schmidt, president of the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin. He gave an overview of the BBB's job and the way it operated as well as some tips on avoiding unethical or illegal business schemes.

In other business, City Councilwoman Oralia Corrales presented Joe Cuevas Jr. a citation honoring him for being named TAMACC's state businessman of the year. Also mentioned were the chamber's upcoming golf tournament and next month's Christmas dance.

Latest bank failures tie 1985 record, indicate problems in some sectors

WASHINGTON (AP) — The record-tying number of bank failures this year is an indication of problems in several sectors of the American economy, a government official says.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. closed four banks Thursday, increasing the number of 1986 bank failures to 120, FDIC spokesman Bill Olcheski said. That matched the total for 1985, which was a post-Depression high.

The closings, said another FDIC spokesman, Alan Whitney, generally are "a reflection of continuing problems in certain sections of the economy, mainly agriculture, energy and real estate."

FDIC officials have predicted that as many as 160 banks could either fail or need government assistance by the end of the year. Of the 120 failures this year, 53 were agricultural banks, the FDIC said. In addition to the 120 outright failures, three other banks would have failed without FDIC assistance, according to Olcheski.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. is the agency that insures deposits of up to $100,000 for about 15,000 member commercial and savings banks around the country.

In Missouri, two banks both owned by First Midwest Bancorp Inc. of St. Joseph were declared insolvent Thursday. The First Stock Yards Bank of St. Joseph, with assets of $29.1 million, and the Home Bank in nearby Savannah, with assets of $38.5 million, will reopen Friday as branches of two separate St. Joseph banks.

The Citizens State Bank of Donna, Texas, had assets of $27.8 million when it was closed Thursday, and officials say it also will reopen Friday as its deposit liabilities are assumed by another bank.

The First National Bank & Trust Co. of Enid, Okla., which had assets of $91.2 million, also was closed Thursday. The FDIC said it will pay off insured depositors in the failed bank because no bids were received from potential buyers.

Fort Worth company determined not to be behind times

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Executives at Ben E. Keith Co. say they're determined that their 80-year-old Fort Worth company won't be left behind in the 1980s.

So they've changed the way the company operates.

Since 1906, folks have thought of fresh produce or beer when they think of the Keith Co.

The company still has the nation's largest Anheuser-Busch distributorship, a legacy of the foresight of late founder Ben E. Keith's pursuit of an Anheuser-Busch near-beer distributorship during Prohibition.

And its separately operated food division still moves enough produce to require that at least half of the 550,000 square feet of space in its nine warehouses in Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas be refrigerated.

But where produce — "Fresh, From Keith's" — was close to 100 percent of the food service business two decades ago, it now is down to 28 percent.

And where at least 75 percent of Keith's sales two decades ago were to grocery stores, it now is down to less than 5 percent.

Fort Worth-based Keith's food sales have risen from $50 million in 1980 to an expected $170 million this year. The growth has been almost exclusively as a wholesaler of dry and canned food items to restaurants, hospitals, schools and other institutions.

Moving away from grocery stores to institutional food servers has, in the words of Keith's Food Service President Ronnie Wallace, put the company on the right side of the 1980s lifestyle.

"The working wife has been our biggest ally," said the 40-year-old Wallace. "One of every three meals today is eaten away from home. Restaurant sales have become the biggest growth area in food service."

And since many 1980s-style restaurants have salad bars, there is still profit potential in that old slogan "Fresh From Keith's" that adorns the company's headquarters building on the east edge of downtown Fort Worth.

The shift away from supermarkets was dictated at least partly by the changing realities of that industry.

"By the mid-1970s, it was obvious that the grocery business was coming under the domination of a few large chains, and those chains had their own produce warehouses," Wallace said. "The mom-and-pop stores that had been the backbone of our business were becoming fewer and fewer."

Wallace, an all-district quarterback from Arlington Heights High School in 1964, joined Keith as a management trainee after graduation from Texas Christian University in 1970.

"I started in the warehouse," he said. "It was a little strange, telling my friends I had this big new management job and then having them see me wearing Levis and carrying bananas."

After tours as a salesman in Big Spring, a buyer for the Fort Worth branch and manager of the Abilene warehouse, Wallace came into the headquarters office in 1980 and was made general manager of the food division two years later. He became the architect of the switch in sales focus from supermarkets to restaurants.

Because the big fast-food chains have their won wholesale distribution systems, Keith aimed itself toward what Wallace calls the "tablecloth restaurant'" end of the market.

To that end, it maneuvered to catch the burgeoning seafood market.

"Seafood is the hottest, most popular product today," Wallace said. "Beef sales are strong, but they aren't growing anywhere near the rate of seafood."

Among the six acquisitions Keith has made since the end of 1984 are Monroe Frozen Food Co. of Shreveport, La., a frozen seafood company, and Mid-South Seafood Co. of Little Rock. Keith's purchase of Mid-South became effective last month.

Mid-South deals in fresh seafood, either trucked from the Gulf Coast or flown in from New England.

The advent of regular jet service means that a cod or swordfish caught in the North Atlantic can be delivered to an airport in Arkansas or Texas the next day. Restaurants have responded to the demands of diet-conscious consumers by expanding their seafood offerings.

"Keith markets the product much the same way we do and has some of the same kinds of ideas we have," said Don Thomas, founder and former owner of Mid-South, who will continue to manage the company. Mid-South distrubutes fresh fish to restaurants, including the Red Lobster chain, plus some grocery stores.

The other four acquisitions were smaller food wholesalers in Little Rock and Oklahoma City, expanding Keith's reach in the northern half of Texas, parts of eastern New Mexico, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

Local operators final successful test

From Staff Reports

The Keystone South field of Winkler County gained a new Lower Clearfork Lime producer as Midland operators HORST & McKNIGHT, Inc. completed a well in the field.

According to Tom McKnight, the well was drilled to test the feasibility of infill drilling in the field on a 20 acre pattern. He said the test was "highly successful," noting that original reservoir pressure was encountered. He added that there are now tentative plans to drill six wells in the field during the first quarter of 1987.

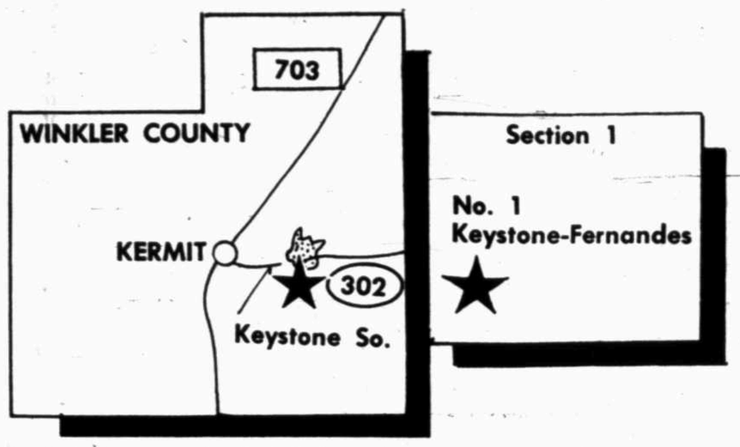

On potential test, the No. 1 Keystone-Fernandes flowed 280 barrels of 40.1 gravity crude, 210 Mcfd and 35 barrels of water on a 24/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 220 psi. Production is from perforations 6,466 to 6,605 ft., which had been acidized with 5,600 gallons of 15 percent acid.

Drilled to 6,720 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 6,639 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,982 ft., include the San Andres at 4,100 ft., Glorieta at 5,660, Tubb at 6,110, and the Lower Clearfork Lime at 6,460 ft. Pay was topped at 6,460 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from west and 990 ft. from south lines of Section 1, Block B-6, PSL survey, seven miles east of Kermit.

The well is located 467 ft. from an abandoned producer. The Keystone South field was previously drilled on a 40 acre pattern, according to McKnight.

Lea County field gains 266 barrel producer

BTA OIL PRODUCERS has added an Abo producer to the Double A field of Lea County, N.M. with completion of the No. 1 Turner "B".

The well was tested to pump 266 barrels of crude, 203 Mcfd and 36 barrels of water from perforations 9,263 to 9,326 ft.

Total depth was 9,991 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set. The well was plugged back to 9,835 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from north and 2,310 ft. from east lines of Section 21, T17s, R36e.

Conoco finals Penn well in Andrews field

A new Pennsylvanian producer has been added to the University Block 9 field of Andrews County.

CONOCO, INC. finaled the No. 1 J.E. Parker "D" to pump 163 barrels of 36.7 gravity crude, 180 Mcfd and 25 barrels of water from perforations 8,968 to 9,144 ft. The interval was acidized with 4,800 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid. Gas-oil ratio is 1,104:1.

Drilled to 9,300 ft., the well was plugged back to 9,246 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 9,296 ft.

The well topped the Wolfcamp Reef at 8,604 ft. and Pennsylvanian at 8,870 ft. on ground elevation of 3,184 ft. Pay was topped at 8,968 ft.

Location is 240 ft. from north and 10,454 ft. from east lines of Section 111, Block D, Harbolis survey, five miles south of Andrews.

Queen producer tests to pump 144 barrels

ARCO OIL & GAS CO. has added to Queen production in the Langlie Mattix field of Lea County with completion of the No. 68 Seven Rivers Queen Unit.

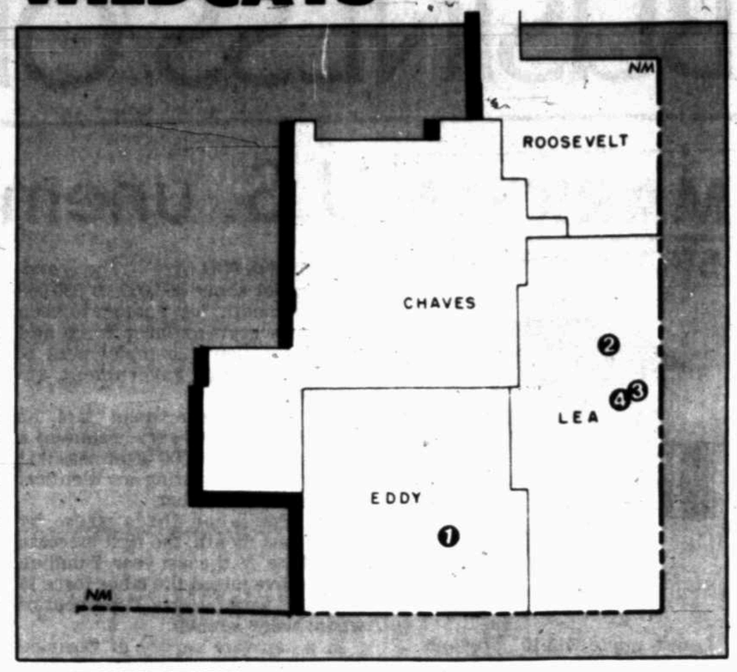

The well was potentialed to pump 144 barrels of 37.6 gravity crude, 144 Mcfd and 113 barrels of water from perforations 3,854 to 3,797 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,000 gallons of acid and fractured with 30,000 gallons of frac and 99,500 lbs. sand. Gas-oil ratio is 972:1.

Drilled to 3,865 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 3,815 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,485.4 ft., include the Salt at 2,885 ft., Yates at 3,055, Seven Rivers at 3,255, and the Queen at 3,618 ft. Pay was topped at 3,654 ft.

The Sulele South-1 discovery flowed 2,735 barrels a day of high-quality crude oil from a Cretaceous dolomite reservoir below 7,200 feet. The well was drilled to a total depth of 8,399 feet in 106 feet of water.

The Block 2 find is three miles northeast of the Tubarao Field, discovered in December 1984 and one mile southeast of the Sulele oil strike.

The test flowed 7.3 million cubic feet of gas per day on a 26/64-inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,067 psi. The High Island A-129 No. 1 well, a half mile southwest, discovered gas zones but was not tested.

The well is located 70 miles southeast of Galveston in 90 feet of water.

Experts fear contamination of Keechi dome formation

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — Experts have told a legislative subcommittee that geological faults and uncharted oil drilling in the Keechi salt dome could lead to contaminated groundwater.

Wendel Reiser, a geology consultant owning property near the salt dome, testified at a subcommittee meeting there are "simply too many unknowns" about the Keechi for it to be used for the storage of hazardous wastes.

"The evidence includes cracks on the surface, faulting and lost circulation in the sub-surface," Reiser said. "Further, man's activities have added more uncertainties."

More than 200 people packed the Palestine City Council chambers Saturday for the Texas House Environmental Affairs sub-committee hearing. Many of them sported red ribbons identifying them as opponents to the TEXSTOR company's hazardous waste storage plan.

Factors such as undocumented drill holes, faults and impure salt are all criteria "characteristic of a bad dome," University of Texas Bureau of Economic Geology representative Steve Seni said.

Seni said further testing would be required to determine if the Keechi salt dome has any of these problems.

TEXSTOR, a Houston-based company, announced plans in September to locate a hazardous waste storage facility 6½ miles northwest of Palestine.

That action prompted State Rep. Cliff Johnson, D-Palestine, to organize the subcommittee hearing that included State Rep. D. Barry Connelly, R-Houston, and State Rep. Ed R. Watson, D-Deer Park.

TEXSTOR project manager Keith Price said the company has "no internal doubts" about the safety of the waste material once it is solidified and deposited in the dome.

Authorities studied the Keechi and other local salt domes in the late 70s as potential nuclear waste depositories. The proposal was later abandoned by the Department of Energy, which judged the Keechi too small for the project.

"Toxic wastes could escape by way of faults, fracture and many of the old wells," Reiser said. "I believe we are asking for trouble, maybe disaster, if you deposit into the Keechi dome."

Among the 14 catagories of wastes in the proposal were polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), pesticides, acid solutions, asbestos, arsenic, refinery waste and heavy metals.

The Texas Water Commission will solicit public input in permit hearings on TEXSTOR's pending application.

Texaco names new chief executive

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Texaco Inc., the nation's third-largest oil company, has announced that James W. Kinnear would succeed John K. McKinley as chief executive at the end of the year.

But Kinnear, who is 58 years old and has been vice chairman for the last three years, will apparently share considerable power with Texaco's president, Alfred C. DeCrane Jr., his rival in the race for the top spot. Texaco said that DeCrane, 55, would take the title of chairman when McKinley retired on Dec. 31.

Kinnear said in an interview that, as president and chief executive, he would have ultimate responsibility for the company's operations. But he added that he and DeCrane had worked closely together for many years and would continue to do so. DeCrane said he would preside over board meetings.

The unusual arrangement was viewed by Texaco executives as an attempt to reward both men and maintain management continuity, while avoiding the ambiguity and uncertainty that might have accompanied a co-chief executive position.

The two executives face a number of difficult issues as they prepare to take charge of the White Plains-based company. A potentially crippling $11 billion damage judgment awarded by a Texas court last year continues to hang over Texaco in its legal battle with the Pennzoil Co. Analysts said Texaco would continue to face problems replenishing its oil reserves at an affordable rate in coming years and like other major oil companies would have to cope with volatility in the price of oil.

The announcement signals the end of McKinley's six-year tenure at the head of Texaco. It laid to rest rumors that Texaco might allow McKinley, 66, a sometimes autocratic engineer who has been with the company for 45 years, to stay on until the Texaco-Pennzoil case was resolved, or that the company might go outside to find its next leader.

Wall Street analysts said that, the Pennzoil case aside, Texaco still faced major problems replenishing its oil reserves. "It's a company in rapid liquidation," said Brian Jacoboski, an analyst at Paine Webber. "Texaco would have to spend several times its annual cash flow to replace its production."

In recent years, Kinnear has had responsibility for Texaco's domestic operations, while DeCrane has overseen the international portion of the business. DeCrane said no decision had been made on a division of responsibilities once the management changes took effect.

Kinnear is married and the father of four children. He is a graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy and served on an aircraft carrier during the Korean War before joining Texaco in 1954.

BEHIND

Fort Worth headquarters. The big computer then spits out manifests for truckloads at all nine warehouses.

Beginning at 6 p.m. and continuing through midnight, workers load specified amounts of 4,500 produce and dry grocery items into Keith's 190-truck fleet. In an average delivery day, which begins before sunup, Keith will move 42,500 cases of food to customers.

The computer makes the process smoother but doesn't eliminate the tension.

"This is such a split-second kind of operation," says Wallace. "Food distribution is one of those kinds of industries that generates a lot of ulcers."

Now that Keith is competing in the packaged and canned good business ("We carry 20 different kinds of canned green beans," Wallace says), its background in the produce industry stands it in good stead.

"Produce has to turn in and out of the warehouses quickly because of the spoilage problem," Wallace explains. "So you learn how to move things quickly and efficiently. You don't have to be quite as good if you're moving dry, boxed products that have a shelf life of several weeks or months. So that is an advantage for us."

One customer is Walter Kaufman, head chef at Swiss House restaurant in Fort Worth. Kaufman gets a daily delivery from Keith.

"In my business, the ultimate embarrassment is to not have an item," said the chef. "If I run out of something, I can call the Keith salesman and and he will personally deliver it for me. That is extremely important. I don't have to make excuses to my customers."

A produce customer, Paul Freeman of the Bay Street Restaurant division of Steak n' Ale Restaurants, said, "Keith is as good as they come in produce delivery."

Keith has 80,000-square-foot warehouses in both Fort Worth and Dallas.

Although exact comparisons are unavailable, Keith is considered an equal in the Fort Worth-Dallas wholesale food market with Fleming Co. (owner of the former Waples-Platter Co. and its White Swan division) and with Sysco Corp. Both those are national corportations several times the size of Keith.

In 1985, Keith was ranked 17th in size among wholesale food distributors by industry publications. The privately held firm does not reveal profit figures, but Wallace said "last year was the best in our history."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

All funds must 'price' shares at 4 p.m. Eastern

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I was invested in a regular mutual fund and a money market mutual fund, both in the same group of funds and which allow exchanges free of charge.

I wanted out of the regular mutual fund. From reading its prospectus, I knew I had to redeem my shares by mail and the fund could take seven days to redeem, which it did. The share value dropped during that seven-day period and I lost some money.

Wouldn't it have been smarter for me to switch from the regular mutual fund into the money market mutual fund and then write a check on my money market mutual fund account? That would have eliminated the seven-day wait for redemption. I thought of this "after the deed was done."

A. Let's back up, a bit. Unless that mutual fund organization fractured the rules to a fare-thee-well, there was no seven-day delay in redemption of your shares. More likely, you misunderstood what happened.

Doyle

Every mutual fund is required, by the Investment Company Act of 1940, to redeem its shares at the next value established after a proper redemption request is received. All funds must "price" their shares at 4 P.M., eastern time, every business day. Some do it more frequently.

Then, the proceeds of the redemption must be paid within seven days. That's another requirement of the '40 Act.

Assuming things were handled correctly, your shares were redeemed at the price established the day your letter reached the fund — the next business day, at the latest. You didn't get a lower price to which the shares dropped during the following seven days.

Of course, you're correct in your reasoning that the money would have been available to you sooner if you had used that fund organization's "exchange privilege." By doing that, you would have redeemed the shares in the regular mutual fund and switched the proceeds immediately into the money market mutual fund on which you can write checks. But the same amount of money would have been involved.

Q. My first husband and I owned mutual fund shares in his name and my name, "as joint tenants." After our divorce, he received and cashed the dividend checks. Now, he has liquidated all the shares. Was it legitimate for him to do this, without my consent?

A. No, on both counts.

As is the case with individual stocks, dividend checks on jointly owned mutual fund shares come with an "and" between the names. Both owners are required to endorse the checks before they can be cashed.

Sometimes, one of the joint owners will endorse dividend checks for deposit in a joint account of both owners. There's nothing wrong with that. But it's clear that's not what your ex-hubby did.

And proper requests to redeem jointly owned mutual fund shares have to be authorized by both owners.

Q. I am in general agreement with your statements about the market values of bonds and of shares of mutual funds holding bonds going down when interest rates go up. I witnessed the per share value of my "income" mutual fund drop 10 percent, as the result of a 1 percent rise in interest rates.

Considering my experience, isn't it true that the change in value of bonds and shares of mutual funds with bond portfolios can be proportionately larger than the change in interest rates?

A. Absolutely. It has never been stated in this space that bond and bond mutual fund share values rise or fall in an exactly reverse proportion to the change in interest rates.

A relatively small increase in interest rates can send the market values of bonds and bond mutual funds down sharply. Conversely, a modest decrease in interest rates can result in a bond market rally, lifting the values of mutual funds holding bonds as investments.

Mongrel turns canine hero

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A mongrel named Pee Wee Corn earned the title of canine hero by taking on a rattlesnake to protect his owner.

Pee Wee was named the first member of the New Mexico Pet Hall of Fame by the state Veterinary Medical Association meeting.

The dog is owned by Roswell-area ranchers Hub and Sheila Corn.

Hub Corn said Pee Wee didn't hesitate last summer when Mrs. Corn and her sister nearly stepped on a rattlesnake while on a walk.

"Pee Wee grabbed the snake and shook it," Corn said. "He was struck three times in the right shoulder before he turned the snake loose."

The small dog survived the bites, but might have learned something.

Midland Lee's high flying Rebels are ranked No. 5 in the state, have top-seeded bi-district playoff berth in hand and own an unblemished 8-0 record. And they have problems aplenty going into today's 8 p.m. District 4-5A finale with Abilene High at Memorial Stadium.

Out of the lineup tonight is starting quarterback Rodney Johnson. Out is starting halfback Joe Woodard. Out is starting linebacker Mike Acosta. And Abilene High coach Larry Pullin is asking an all out effort from his War Birds as they vie for a winning season at 6-4.

Johnson (elbow injury) and Woodard (shoulder injury) both were hurt late in the game last week against San Angelo. Acosta is sitting out for the second week in a row with an arm injury. Plus the remaining Rebels are battered and bruised from two straight weeks of beating on state ranked teams.

THIS WOULD be a horror story unfolding for most coaches, but Lee head football coach Earl Miller is charging full steam ahead.

"We've got three key players out and I don't know if we can take up the slack, but we could make excuses all day and still have to play this game," said Miller. "And it's not like we don't have any incentive for the game. We've got an opportunity to put a little piece of Rebel history together by becoming the first Lee team to finish regular season play undefeated and I don't think the kids want to share the title with San Angelo or Permian. The state ranking thing means very little to us, but the other two things mean a lot. The kids still want that district bell to come to Lee without any other claims on it."

In realistic terms, Lee has nothing to lose tonight in terms of making its fourth consecutive trip to the state playoffs. Lee will face either Amarillo High or Amarillo Tascosa next week in the bi-district playoff round. Those two teams meet tonight in Amarillo.

"We can't afford to pump our kids up too high for Abilene because we've got to get up every single week from here on-out. It's nice to know that you don't have to win this week and that you can work on getting some kids well. We're hopeful that all three starters will be back for the playoffs," said Miller.

The Eagles, too, have incentive for the game since this is their last trip to the gridiron this season under first year head coach Pullin. He

OC, SPC, HC post victories

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Midland College Chaparrals opened the 1986-87 basketball season with a bang Thursday night, posting a record tying 115-63 victory over Grayson County in the first round of the Chaparral Classic.

The record MC tied was for largest margin of victory, 52, to match the effort the Chaps made against a hapless St. Phillips team in the '82-83 tournament.

However, the final margin is hard to believe after seeing the first half of play. At one point Grayson was down by 20, 43-23 with 5:43 left in the half before rallying to cut the margin to 49-41 at the break.

Kevin Goosby sparked the attack with the only Viking three-point efforts of the night over the next four and a half minutes. His third shot from bonus land brought the Vikings to within six, 47-41 before Chap Mookie Blaylock closed the scoring with a pair of free throws.

IN OTHER tournament action, Odessa College opened the tournament with a 75-71 victory over Cisco Junior College and was followed by Howard College's 95-90 win over Garden City (Kansas) Community College, the Chaps' romp and South Plains sneaking by Barton County (Kansas), 78-76.

"What happened was the game started out too easy for us," said MC head coach Jerry Stone. "We got those outside shots against their zone defense and we didn't worry too much about getting inside or about rebounding and by halftime it caught up with us."

The Vikings made it a closer game to start the second half when Eric Kelly hit a 10-footer to cut the score to 49-43 but, after an exchange of buckets, the Chaps left Grayson far behind.

Blaylock sparked the explosion with two quick layups and a 15-foot jumper for a 57-45 lead. Billy Ray Smith added a basket from short range and Lincoln Minor hit a free throw and 18-footer for a 62-45 edge.

Kelly and Carl Green added 10-footers to get back to 62-49, but the Chaps took another run for a 73-49 advantage and never looked back.

AT FIRST it seemed like the three-pointer from 19-feet-9 was going to be the Chap attack all night with Todd Duncan, Minor and Blaylock loading up and letting fly in the first nine minutes of the game.

The three connected on 5-of-6 three-point attempts with Duncan and Blaylock getting to lead the Chaps to a 29-15 lead. Duncan hit the only other bombs for the Chaps, collecting two more in the second half of play.

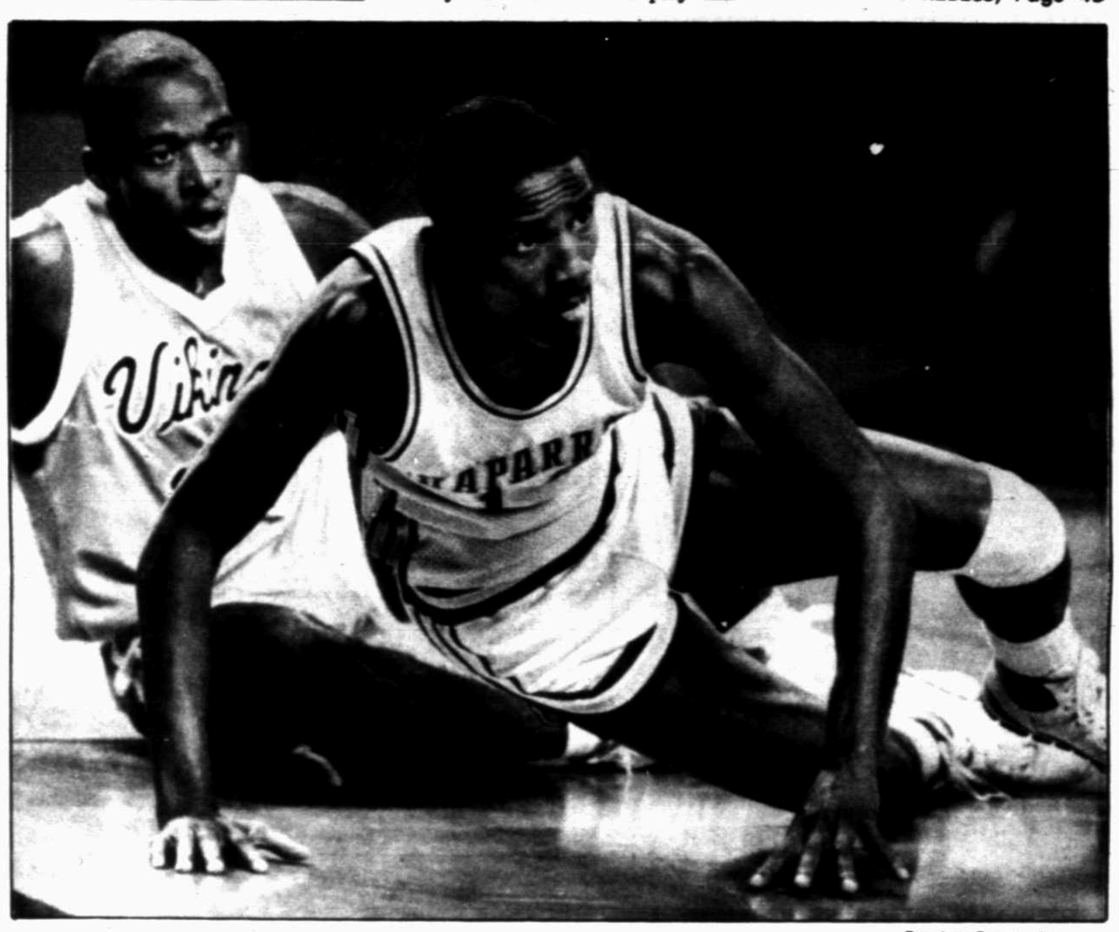

The three-pointer is in its first year of nationwide use and is drawing comments, especially with the shortness of the bonus distance, which circles the court no wider than the distance from the top of the key, an area where outside shots are usually taken anyway.

Among the new rule's detractors is Stone, who said, "I'm not crazy about it but we've got people who can shoot it. The idea was to get into man-to-man play to keep people from jamming up the lanes. I don't think it's necessary in junior college because they don't jam the lanes much anyway."

The reason JUCO ball has the new rule is because the NCAA has also adopted its use.

With the help of the three-pointer, the Chaps had six players in double figures led by Blaylock's 25-point effort. Duncan followed with 18, Minor 15, Alex Stanwood 14, Herman Henry 12 and Smith 10. For the Vikings, Keith Watkins had 12 and Goosby 11.

Golden Sandies expel MHS in state volleyball play

From Staff Reports

AMARILLO - Midland High's voyage into the state's volleyball playoffs was a brief one, lasting only Thursday night with one date in the Amarillo High gym and a long bus ride from the Tall City.

The Golden Sandies of AHS, now 31-1 on the season, advanced to the area playoffs with a firm 15-7, 15-3 bi-district win over the Bulldogs before an estimated crowd of 1,000 in Sandie gym.

It wasn't easy sledding for Amarillo in the early going as Bulldog Amy Cumings made several kills, causing the Sandies to commit unforced errors.

"We were kind of tense at first," said Amarillo's Kristi Gray. "They kept on making substitutes and that slowed us down. We like to play at a faster pace."

From the outset, both sides traded points evenly until Kristin Doores and Mindy Bennett hit back-to-back kills to help the Sandies escape from a 3-2 deficit to a 7-3 advantage.

Midland cut the lead to 10-5 at one point on two winning serves by Melinda Carrasco, but then 5-foot-11 sophomore Heather Williams began to take charge for the Sandies with three consecutive spike points.

"They (AHS) ran their offense beautifully," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "Of course, we gave them a chance to do it. We gave them a lot of free balls on top of the net. You just don't give a team like that a chance to captalize on your mistakes."

Pittman said playing in front of the Sandies' large home crowd didn't effect the Bulldogs' play.

"We've played well before with big crowds, but knowing my team as I do, I didn't think the crowd bothered us. These girls are really on or really off.

"I feel we are capable of playing much better than we did. That's not to take anything away from the Sandies, though, because they are an outstanding team."

In the second game, Midland High fell behind quickly at 2-0. A Cumings' kill did pull the Bulldogs to within 3-2, but Doores re-ignited the AHS offense with two consecutive spikes before Drusilla Wyatt made a side out kill for Midland.

"We wanted to go out hitting and it worked good," said a pleased AHS coach Kim Hudson. "Heather (Williams) came off the bench and id an excellent job. When you have somebody like her who can come in and do so well, that's just an extra bonus."

With the Sandies up 5-2, Bennett and Hart each had kills off five running serving points by Doores as AHS ran to an unbelieveably fast 10-2 margin. The Bulldogs cut the margin to 10-3 on a Cumings' spike, but the Bulldogs never answered again.

"We missed too many serves, which we knew we couldn't do," said Pittman. "We started well in the first game, but got stuck in one rotation and I think they scored eight points on service receive."

At 14-3 Doores and Williams blocked a kill attempt off a Liz Nolan serve to give the Sandies match point.

Pick one: Black or Orange?

Midland High's Bulldogs will be shooting for a winning record tonight in Abilene against Cooper and Midland Lee could become the first undefeated Rebel team in regular season history at home against Abilene High, but the real unfinished business in District 4-5A is taking place 20 miles to the west where Odessa Permian is taking on San Angelo.

Permian owns a 7-1 record. San Angelo is 8-1. And one of them will be playing their last game of the season tonight while the other will search for playoff glory to make up for a loss to Lee.

This is a horror story that will produce villians and heroes that will be talked about for the next 10 years. Angry Orange or Mojo Black? That's the real question this week. You can expect about 20,000 on hand to see the question answered.

This game has a famaliar and unfamaliar theme going for it. Permian is rarely in this kind of situation. The Panthers had won a record six consecutive 4-5A titles going into this year and playing for second best is about as strange as an Edgar Allen Poe poem.

San Angelo, on the other hand, has seen this all before, being the bridesmaid and never the bride over the past three years. I wonder if that's ticking in the back of the minds of the guys wearing the Orange hats?

How would you like to put a team on the field with Permian after Mojo has had a week to mull over a rare loss? Who can even remember when Permian lost two games in a row? I'm sure it's happened, but it was so long ago that Alexander The Great probably doesn't remember.

This game has to be like a High Noon shootout at midnight. There are no ticks left on the clock in this one. Both teams are frustrated over the events of the past two weeks. And there are two coaches under a tremendous amount of pressure.

Gary Gaines is in his first year at Permian and one good way to get off on a bad foot in Odessa is by failing to make the playoffs. That's the least expected of any Permian coach. The last time Permian failed to make the playoffs was in 1979, and they would have been in it then if the current two-teams-from-each-district rule had been in effect. A Permian team not in the playoffs is a bit like Morganna without her 49ers.

Jimmie Keeling would like to shake his third place blues. That's where his Bobcats have finished each of the last three years. He took San Angelo into the playoffs in 1982, but it was his coin flipping ability that broke a four-way logjam for second place with Odessa High, Midland High and Lee. Bobcat fans want the streak broken.

So far, this corner has a 40-5 record picking games involving 4-5A teams and here's how it will all end tonight:

Odessa Permian 21, San Angelo 14: The Panthers "Crow" over the Bobcats, who again will hold the distinction of being the best 8-2 team in the state not to make the playoffs. It must be noted, however, that both of these teams could be very strong playoff units. Some consolation for the loser, huh.

Midland Lee 23, Abilene High 7: Lee has injury problems, but "Unclean 30" member Jack Chase insists that no one knows the hearts of these guys. So, Unclean becomes a Clean 9-0, a historic first for the Rebels.

Midland High 18, Abilene Cooper 12: The Bulldogs find a final two-week silver lining to hang up the headgear. Watch for senior Anthony Adkison to leave with a bang.

Colorful foilage and Maryland football

Weddings sometimes take you to unusual places in unlikely seasons, like Arizona in August and Maryland in October.

When it comes to rapid fire weddings, the addition of daughters to the family is especially gratifying at times like these.

Such sojourns afford an opportunity to compare the frenzy of fall football color to the frenzy of fall foilage in Maryland.

For example, West Texas is in the throes of the annual autumnal Odessa Permian-Midland Lee-San Angelo madness. Football fever runs rampant and West Texans look to the gridiron for their riot of color rather than the leaves.

Make no mistake, however, football is big in Maryland. So is lacrosse.

In WT, some towns lock up on Friday night when the team is on the road.

In Maryland, more games are played on Saturday afternoon in "stadiums" without lights and with bleachers that to a Texan might look more suitable for a junior high game.

UNLIKE TEXAS, there's nothing sacred about Friday nights in Maryland. A newspaper in Annapolis announced on a Wednesday that the games of the local high schools would be moved, that weekend, from Friday to Thursday night. It seems Friday night had already been spoken for...there was a PTA meeting scheduled.

The paper also noted that it marked the second time this season game night had to be changed. The other occasion involved religious holidays.

Somehow one can't picture that happening in Texas where arranging schedules is taken more seriously. Conflicts are anticipated before hand and the PTA wouldn't dream of going head-to-head with Friday night. Of course, if TV enters into the picture, that's another story.

There is more college football played in the Baltimore-Washington, D.C., area than in the entire state of Texas and perhaps Oklahoma combined. Of course , the population ratio is a factor, which probably also explains the popularity of lacrosse, soccer, cross-country, field hockey and a myriad of minor sports.

DESPITE THE profusion of college teams, there is a dramatic difference in the level of competition.

A tour of the Naval Academy grounds between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. is an eye opener. The athletic fields which serve as the buffer between the Severn River and campus core are a beehive of every activity from football, soccer and lacrosse to seven or eight-man crews working out on the river. Only at Lejeune Hall, where a couple of swimmers took liesurely laps, was there a lack of activity, but then these guys probably work out at 5 a.m. for a couple of hours.

Competition is conducted at several levels in all sports at the Academy. That's why when a couple of Midshipmen in football togs crossed the road from the practice field and headed for the gym, it was assumed that No. 64 and 69 were members of the 150-pound team. In the East there is, or was, intercollegiate competition at the 150-pound level.

Even in full gear, they looked they might have trouble making 150. As one who wages a constant battle against the scales, I was envious.

After what happened the following weekend against Penn, it may be that the 150-pound program has been discontinued after all.

Maybe all of this explains some of the college studies in futility. Morgan State was working on a 27-game losing streak at the time, Bowie State was pushing 20 losses in a row and Western Maryland hadn't won in a couple of years.

BUT THERE'S more to the Cheasapeake state than streaking-in-the-wrong direction football teams. You can't beat the crabcakes at historic Middleton's or Riordan's dockside in Annapolis, and in Baltimore you can buy a Sunday Sun for a $1, no digging into the pocket for tribute to the state.

AND WHILE we haven't seen them all, but we've always considered Vermont's state capitol as the most beautiful, Annapolis wins for picturesque setting. None can equal the Maryland unique statehouse, the hub to which narrow streets lead.

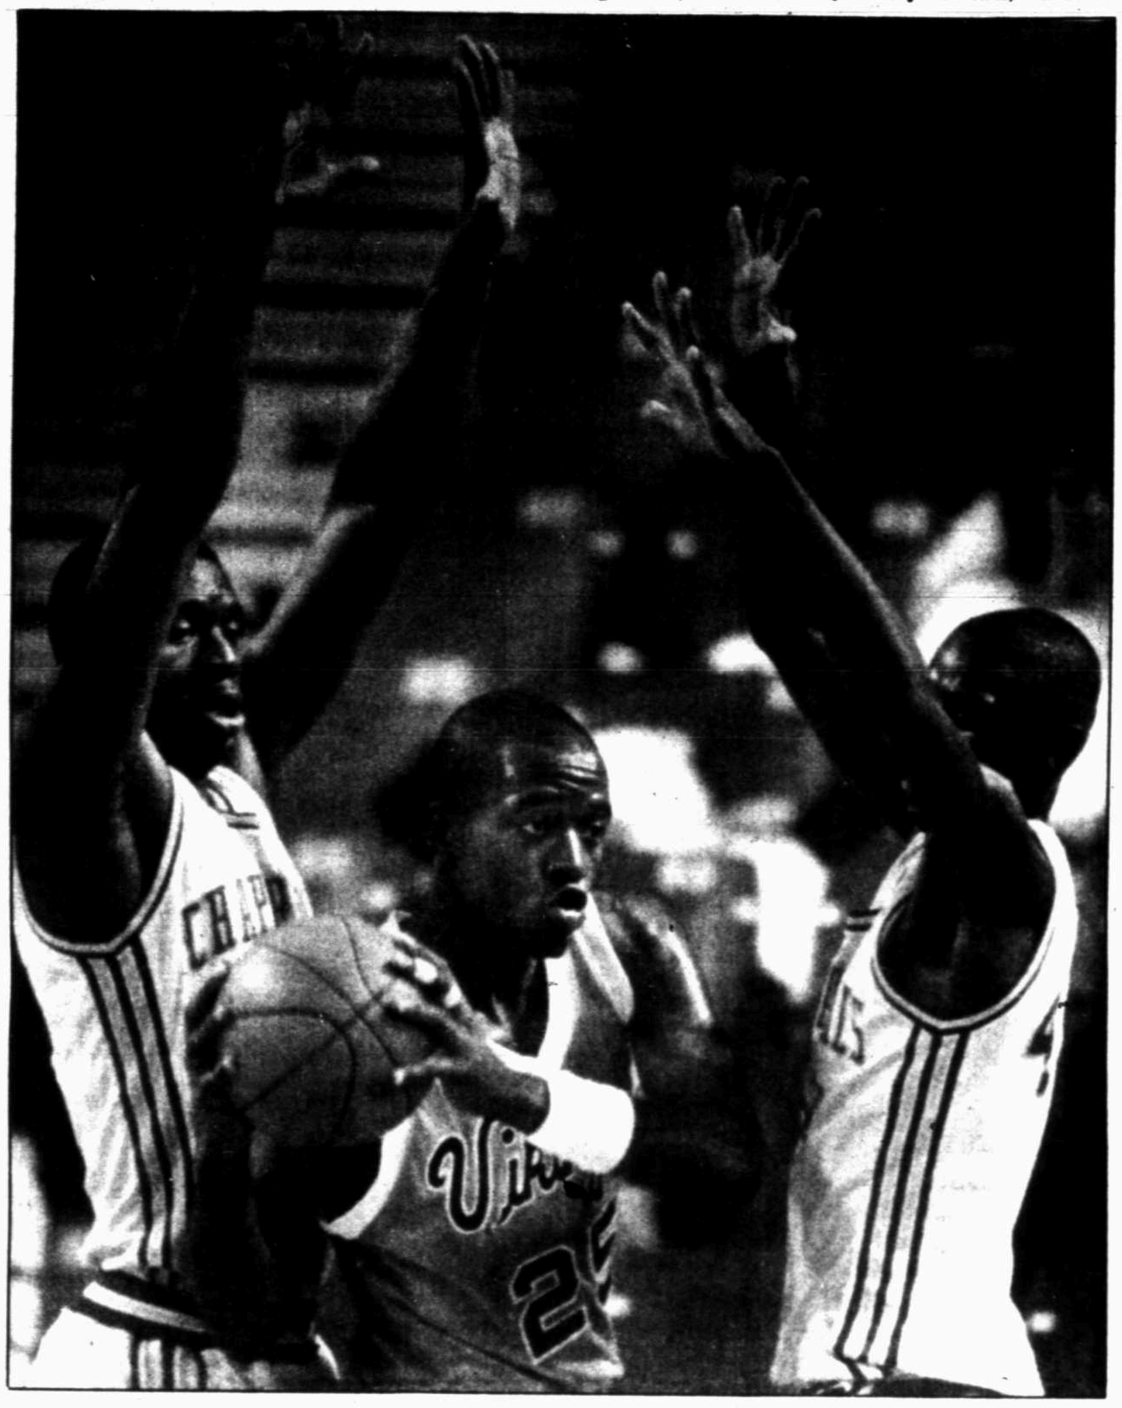

And if you are going to Georgetown to savor the historic restoration, be sure to skip Frederick, Md., unless you want a letdown.

Of course, there's one thing that spoils it all...wall-to-wall people. One guy works in Gaithersburg, 25 miles away on the Beltway. He leaves for work before 7 a.m. and returns sometime after 7 p.m. of bumper-to-bumper traffic, and barely finishes supper in time for 10:30 p.m. hockey practice.

Coming back from Gettysburg, Pa., one evening, the party congratulated itself on its good fortune, arriving in the Beltway traffic well after 7 p.m., when rush hour traffic in any reasonable city-even Dallas- has long since dissipated.

CLASSIC

BARTON COUNTY had two chances at victory in the final seven seconds of play but couldn't find the range on three-point attempts by Todd Robins and Marty Griffey, with Griffey's shot coming at the buzzer.

It was the closest contest of the night and victory was within either team's range the whole distance.

The South Plains Texas were led by Lorne Joshua and Darryl Knight with 24 and 21 point efforts while Barton countered with Jerry Johnson's 17 and Brett Coffey's 12.

For Odessa College, which held a 46-39 halftime lead, Gene Edwards and Troy Bell were top guns with 16 and 14 points respectfully while Cisco was paced by George Westbrook's 17 and Mike Knorr's 14.

Howard College, a 39-36 leader at halftime, had three players break 20, led by Sam Williams' 22 points and the "Black Jack" efforts of Dennis Rhodes and Kevin Bradsher. Horace Chaney led the way for Garden City while Derrick Harris was the third player in the game to post a 21-point effort.

Today, the tournament resumed with loser's bracket play at 3 p.m. with Cisco facing Barton County. Garden City and Grayson meet at 5 p.m. followed by winner's brack games between Howard College and Midland College at 7 p.m. and Odessa College and South Plains at 9 p.m.

The final two games could give a view into the future as each of the winners is from the Western Junior College Athletic Conference and will be meeting at least two more times down the line.

Injury to Pitt's Congemi leaves Hurricane confused

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

What a guy. Miami Coach Jimmy Johnson. Not only does he have the No. 1-ranked college football team in the nation but he also has compassion.

No one, you see, feels worse than Johnson about the season-ending back injury Pitt quarterback John Congemi suffered last week against Syracuse.

Is Congemi some distant relative of Johnson's? Nope.

Is Congemi a leftover from Johnson's days (1977-78) as Pitt's defensive coordinator. No way.

The problem for Johnson and his staff is that "we don't know what type of offense to prepare for or what quarterback to prepare for" when the Hurricanes visit Pitt on Saturday. "We've got to keep things very basic in our defensive scheme and be prepared for almost anything."

Johnson isn't the only one with problems. The oddsmakers listed Miami as a 16-point favorite but took the game off the board — no college boards? — when they learned about Congemi's injury.

Unfortunately, peerless prognosticators can't do that. The pick is . . . Miami 35-13.

Last week's prediction record was 37-right — including Mississippi over LSU and two other Upset Specials — and 14 wrong for a percentage of .725; for the season, 328-124-7—.726. Against the point spread, last week's mark was 19-18-1—.514; for the year, 150-150-5—.500.

Maryland at No. 2 Penn State (favored by 18): If Maryland's backs could run as fast as Coach Bobby Ross did chasing the referee last week the Terps might be better than 4-4 . . . Penn State 38-14.

No. 3 Michigan (by 31) at Purdue: "I guarantee you when we go down to Purdue we're going to be one nervous team," says Bo Schembechler. "We've lost three times down there." . . . M-M-M-Michigan 56-7.

Missouri at No. 4 Oklahoma (by 42): The Sooners will be looking past Mizzou. They have to beat Colorado and Nebraska if they want to go back to the Orange Bowl . . . Oklahoma 42-3.

California at No. 5 Arizona State (by 27): "We can still win it," says ASU Coach John Cooper. He means the national championship, not just the Pac-10 . . . Arizona State 35-7.

College Picks

No. 18 LSU at No. 6 Alabama (by 9½): The Bengals may have been looking ahead just a tad when they lost to Ole Miss . . . Alabama 24-13.

No. 7 Nebraska (by 27) at Iowa State: Jim Criner won't call time out with five seconds left to rub it in this week . . . Nebraska 38-7.

Cincinnati at No. 9 Auburn (by 27): ABC is televising this game because of its commitment to show a certain number of independent schools like Cincinnati . . . Auburn 37-14.

No. 10 Arkansas at Baylor (by 3½): The oddsmakers must figure 7-1 Arkansas is looking ahead to Texas A&M. They know 5-3 Baylor isn't looking ahead to Rice . . . Arkansas 28-24.

Northwestern at No. 11 Ohio State (by 31): Earle Bruce says Northwestern "is not a bad football team." That must be why the Wildcats lost to 1-6 Purdue . . . Ohio State 49-0.

Stanford at No. 12 UCLA (by 13): If UCLA loses and Arizona State wins, ASU goes to the Rose Bowl . . . UCLA 27-20.

No. 13 Washington (by 22) at Oregon State: The Beavers have enough problems without playing UCLA and the Huskies back-to-back . . . Washington 41-7.

No. 15 North Carolina State (by 8) at Virginia: The clock strikes midnight for Cinderella . Upset Special of the Week . . . Virginia 21-20.

No. 16 Iowa (by 17) at Illinois: These rivals were trounced, respectively, last week by Ohio State and Michigan . . . Iowa 24-17.

No. 17 Arizona (by 10) at Washington State: Since they upset Southern Cal, the Cougars have been trampled by UCLA and Stanford . . . Arizona 28-14.

No. 19 Georgia (by 1) vs. Florida at Jacksonville: The Gators can forget about a bowl bid if they drop this one . . . Florida 21-17.

North Carolina at No. 20 Clemson (by 7): The loser blows its shot at the Atlantic Coast Conference crown . . . Clemson 24-20.

Air Force (by 8½) at Army: War of the wishbones. Second Upset Special . . . Army 24-21.

Tulsa (by 6) at New Mexico: The Golden Hurricane looks ahead to Miami. Fourth Upset Special . . . New Mexico 31-27.

Greenwood, Andrews seek consolation wins

From Staff Reports

A pair of area teams play out the string tonight as the 1986 season draws to a close.

Greenwood will try for its second District 4-3A win of the season tonight when it hosts Clint in a 7:30 p.m. game, and Andrews is hoping it can derail the Sweetwater Mustangs' charge toward the Class 4A playoffs in the Mustang Bowl.

Andrews, which still has one more game left after tonight, is trying to salvage respectability from a disappointing season. The Mustangs, 3-3, 3-5, can still finish at .500 for the season and take a respectable district record into the winter months.

To do it, they will have to knock off defending state champion Sweetwater and new playoff member Big Spring in successive weeks. A tall order for any 4A football team.

Sweetwater, with wins in its next two games, will nudge a hopeful Monahans from the playoff picture. Needless to say, the Loboes are cheering for a Mustang upset tonight.

In Greenwood, the Rangers have had a rough time in their first year in Class 3A after spending just two years in 2A. Maurice Hodges' first year has been a struggle, but each year the Rangers should become more competitive as the transition into larger classification eases.

Knicks ease pressure

Associated Press

The pressure was building on the New York Knicks.

They had lost their first four games of the season. There was talk the team had no intensity. There were rumors that Coach Hubie Brown's job was in jeopardy.

The Knicks needed a win, any kind of win. They got one Thursday night against another one of the NBA's poorer outfits, the Sacramento Kings, 106-95.

What made the Knicks' victory extra special was where it came. Because of annual commitments to the National Horse Show, Madison Square Garden is usually booked up for much of the early part of November.

In Brown's four years with the Knicks, the team had been 0-20 in those season-opening Western games until winning in Sacramento.

Clippers 104, Rockets 97

Larry Drew scored six of his 25 points in the last three minutes, helping Los Angeles win in Houston.

Akeem Olajuwon scored 31 points for Houston, which had won its first two games of the season. Olajuwon made three baskets that pulled the Rockets within 98-95 with 1:18 left.

Mavericks 147, SuperSonics 124

Reserve Al Wood scored 25 points and Mark Aguirre had 24 as Dallas beat host Seattle. The Mavericks raced to an 18-6 lead and shot 14 for 18 from the floor in the first quarter, leading 44-27 at the end of the period. Rolando Blackman scored 18 points as Dallas had eight players in double figures.

Xavier McDaniel scored 18 for the host SuperSonics.

Nuggets 135, Jazz 121

Alex English scored 36 points, Darrell Walker added 24 and Lafayette Lever had a triple-double as Denver beat Utah.

would like to see his team go out with a big bang.

"We've come to the realization that we're not going to be in the playoffs and we know what Lee has riding on the game, but this is a big one for us," said Pullin. "We were 1-4 at one point in the season and now are 5-4. We've improved a great deal over the year and I've told our kids that if we beat Lee, that accomplishment would be recognized throughout the state. I expect our seniors to play with a lot of pride."

JUNIOR QUARTERBACK Geoff Rich will again be called on to replace Johnson. Rich has started two games for the Rebels, guiding them to victory both times against Odessa High and Abilene Cooper and has shown the ability to pass.

Woodard is Lee's second leading rusher this year with 471 yards and seven touchdowns, but Lee is deep in the running back department with leading ground gainer Dennis Sterling (531 yards) and Durian Jenkins (224). Fullback Waymon Goodley is getting better every week and has 410 yards rushing.

Acosta will be missed at linebacker where the Rebels don't have a lot of depth, but Omar Mendoza did a great fill-in job last week in San Angelo.

"We'll have to have a super effort against Lee," says Pullin. "Lee is definitely one of the best teams in the state and I feel like they will go a long way in the playoffs. They have a great offense, but they play such good defense, and in my opinion, that's why they are where they are now. You have to play good defense to win in this district."

The Eagles have offensive weapons to throw at Lee. Three-year starter Junior Bell, a 210-pound fullback, is the second leading rusher in the league with 838 yards. He has a slight chance at becoming the league's second 1,000-yard rusher. Permian's Shawn Crow already has 1,243 yards rushing.

EAGLE QUARTERBACK Jon Davis, a junior, is one of the best in the league behind a huge offensive line and is second in 4-5A total offense, averaging 120.6 yards per game rushing and passing. He likes to throw to Bell out of the backfield and to split end John Jones, who has caught 12 passes this year for 255 yards and three touchdowns.

Defensively, the Eagles have some active linebackers, headed by 210-pound Chad Mayberry in the middle.

"Abilene High is larger than San Angelo if you can believe that," said Miller. "I'm very impressed with Davis at quarterback and we've seen enough of Bell the past two years to know he's a great back. They are big at linebacker and comparable to San Angelo in that department. I guarantee you that Abilene poses some problems for us. I just hope the weather is good because they could dominate us with their size on a muddy field."

Opening of White-Tail deer season time-honored tradition

By RAY SASSER

FREER (AP) — The town of Freer is a dusty little place, a brush-country dot on the map about 100 miles south of San Antonio in Duval County.

Unemployment runs through this part of the state like an August brush fire, and drought is almost as certain as death and taxes.

But for Freer and a hundred other rural Texas towns, fortunately, there is some relief at the opening of white-tailed deer season Saturday, Lone Star deer season being a tradition that, for many, transcends Christmas, Thanksgiving and the Fourth of July.

"When deer season finally arrives, everybody around here is smiling," says Leonel Garza, a Freer businessman who used the appeal of the whitetail to parlay a pair of dusty gas pumps and a grease rack into a multifaceted business called "Muy Grande Village."

MUY GRANDE is , of course, Spanish for "very big," and in the language of Texas deer hunting it is synonymous with trophy whitetail buck. Garza's Muy Grande Contest began in 1965 and has grown to become one of the state's largest deer contests.

"I started the contest because I had a service station and nobody would trade with me," says Garza. "That first year I gave my personal wristwatch to the hunter who brought in the biggest buck."

OUTDOORS

Last year, the Muy Grande contest had 5,113 entries and offered about $10,000 in merchandise prizes. "It gets bigger every year," Garza says. "Freer, like much of Texas, is having hard times. Unemployment is 22 to 30 percent. The whole town of Freer benefits from deer hunting."

IN SEGUIN, between Austin and San Antonio, the town's hunting festivities are rightly called "Buck Fever Night."

"We've always gotten involved in projects for golf, football, soccer, and all the various other sports," says Tuddy Deitz of Seguin's ABC Bank, the sponsors of Buck Fever Night. "Last year we decided to sponsor something for the hunters and it has far surpassed anything else we've ever done.

"The response was so great we couldn't fit everybody into the (700-seat) coliseum, so we had Buck Fever on two succesive nights this year and drew about 1,200 people."

Buck fever was a mysterious, if not well-timed malady. Its symptoms were even serious enough to keep workers off their jobs in the days when the season opened the same date every year, which was usually a work day. Rural schools often scheduled holidays for opening day.

IN THE late 1960s, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission succumbed to pressure to set the opening of deer season — and most other hunting seasons — on Saturdays.

"Deer hunting really is a Texas tradition," says Horace Gore, the homespun leader of TP&W's white-tailed deer program. "It's also a big business. Texas A&M did a study a couple of years ago that indicated deer hunters spend about $100 million per year in lease fees alone. Add up all the other expenses involved in hunting, and deer hunters probably put $250 million or so per year, cash money, into the Texas economy."

Unlike many other states that have open lands on which sportmen can hunt for free, virtually all the quality Texas deer range is private property.

State law says the game belongs to the people of Texas but the division of land is considerably less equitable. What most Texas hunters wind up doing is paying a lease fee, or trespass fee, to hunt their deer on someone else's property. That fee may range from $100 to several thousand dollars.

"About 50 percent of the Texas white-tailed deer occur in Central Texas," says Gore.

By Jeane Dixon
Saturday, November 8, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Fears over depleted funds will prove groundless -- a mirage created by someone who wants to divert your attention from work. A period of solitude helps you get back on track. Communication between partners improves. Your personal fortunes receive a welcome boost. Careful budgeting helps you build up cash reserves. Romance moves up on your priority list. Be available to look after friends who are in need.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Singer Patti Page, Cincinnati Reds pitcher John Denny, actor Alain Delon, actress Esther Rolle, actor Norman Lloyd of "St. Elsewhere," the incomparable Katharine Hepburn, singer Bonnie Raitt, "60 Minutes" correspondent Morley Safer, football coach Paul Wiggin, "Gone With the Wind" author Margaret Mitchell.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A former love could reappear without warning. Go slow. Listen to the judgment of an older family member. Make intelligent concessions on family finances.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your chances for success improve when you follow your own instincts. Certain people who have been in your life for a long time may no longer stimulate you. Widen your social circle.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take one step at a time. Family members want fewer promises and more action. Travel will bring better results later on.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be overly sensitive right now. Keep your enthusiasm alive. Your sense of humor is a tremendous asset. Always focus on the positive!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You could be the person of the hour. Share the spotlight with those closest to your heart. Back up your assertions with facts. Contact relatives at a distance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your subconscious works in your favor today. Visit an ailing friend or family member. Your kindness will be richly rewarded. Decide what you really want before making a romantic commitment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The things you say and do now could open some previously closed doors. Pursue your personal goals with greater zeal. Avoid getting involved in a family conflict.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make a special effort to get more exercise and fresh air. Partner may not be ready to give in to your wishes. Showing more affection will work wonders.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone may try to shake your wonderful optimism. A romantic rejection no longer hurts as much. Others turn to you for advice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your popularity has never been greater! Favors are granted by someone you can trust. Forget past grievances. A new alliance looks very promising.

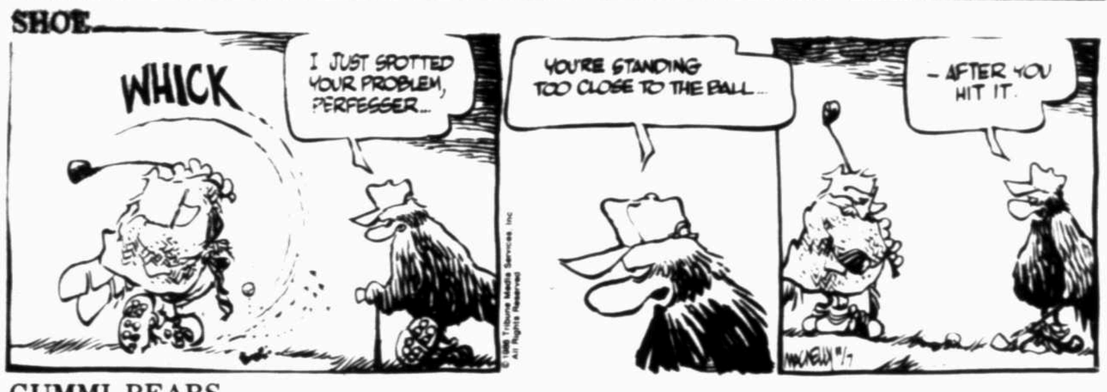

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your mate intervenes, and you feel a great sense of relief. Talk about your personal philosophy. Keep a low profile at a social event.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Review decisions that may have been made too quickly. Get involved all the way. Take stock of your own emotional needs.

Two top international teams, Austria and France, were recently invited to Norway to compete with local teams in a sponsored tournament. French internationalist Christian Mari won the Brilliancy Prize for this effort against one of the Norwegian teams.

With three-card support for his partner's suit, South might have done better to raise spades rather than bid no trump at his second turn. However, he was concerned about protecting his diamond holding from a possibly fatal lead through. As a result, his side ended in the second-best contract on the given distribution.

The normal lead against a no trump game is fourth-best from your longest and strongest suit. However, here the bidding suggested that, if given the opportunity, declarer might be able to run nine fast tricks. So Mari, sitting West, decided that he had to attack. As his opening lead, he selected the ace of hearts.

When dummy appeared there was no problem in finding the winning continuation. Mari shifted promptly to ace, queen and another club, and the defenders reeled in the first five tricks.

There is another case where it is not right to lead fourth-best. Assume one of your opponents has opened with a preempt and his partner has bid three no trump. You can assume that declarer has seven tricks in his side's long suit, and if you give away a trick on opening lead you might not get another chance. It is usually correct to lead a high honor to get a look at dummy and partner's signal to help plan the defense.

McAuliffe tombstone erected

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — "S. Christa McAuliffe. Wife. Mother. Teacher. Pioneer Woman. Crew member, Space Shuttle Challenger. America's first ordinary citizen to venture toward space."

So begins the inscription on the black stone that now marks the grave of the Concord High School teacher who died in the Challenger explosion.

McAuliffe, 37, who won a nationwide competition in 1985 to become the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's teacher in space, was buried May 1, three months after the blast.

Until Wednesday, no tombstone marked the grave.

The marker, seven feet long and three feet high, was made in Vermont from African marble.

President and Mrs. Reagan sent a large wreath of green foliage with red, white and blue flowers. The wreath was placed on a stand next to the headstone, which also features the symbol of NASA's Teacher in Space program, a torch with the shuttle ascending toward the stars.

The inscription, written by McAuliffe's husband, Steven, continues:

"She helped people. She laughed. She loved and is loved. She appreciated the world's natural beauty. She was curious and sought to learn who we are and what the universe is about. She relied on her own judgment and moral courage to do right.

"She cared about the suffering of her fellow man. She tried to protect our spaceship Earth. She taught her children to do the same."

There are two other tributes to McAuliffe in Concord. A small stone outside Concord High reads, "I touch the future...I teach." In White Park, near the McAuliffe home, seven trees were planted to commmemorate the seven crew members.

The city also will receive a Concord city flag that McAuliffe took with her on the shuttle flight. The flag was recovered by NASA from shuttle debris.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church President Ezra Taft Benson was in satisfactory condition today, recuperating from heart surgery to implant a pacemaker, a church spokesman said.

Benson, 87, was admitted to LDS Hospital on Thursday, just four days shy of his first anniversary as leader of the 6 million member Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, said Jerry Cahill.

Benson, a former U.S. secretary of agriculture, was expected to remain hospitalized for two days, and continue his recuperation at home for several more days before resuming normal activities, Cahill said.

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Cosby Show," a ratings hit the first time around, will also make a bundle in syndication, as WOR-TV will pay an estimated $22.75 million for 3½ years of reruns.

Pat A. Servodidio, president of the WOR-TV's parent company, RKO Television, would not say exactly how much RKO agreed to pay to become the first station to buy syndicated episodes of the show.

"What I can tell you is it was offered at a record price, so it was purchased at a record price," he said Thursday.

Viacom Enterprises had offered "Cosby" at $125,000 per week for 3½ years, which translates into $182,000 per episode. The previous record syndication price for a 30-minute comedy was "Cheers," at $85,000 per episode.

NEW YORK (AP) — Joseph Pulitzer Jr. said Thursday that he is retiring from the Pulitzer Prize Board after 31 years as its chairman.

The announcement was made by Columbia University, which administers the prizes awarded in journalism, drama, letters and music.

In a letter to Michael Sovern, president of Columbia University, Pulitzer said he would recommend that Sovern become chairman pro tem of the board until a permanent successor is found. The recommendation will be considered by the board at its regular meeting Nov. 21.

Pulitzer, 73, said in his letter that he stepped down March 31 as editor and publisher of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch "in an orderly transition toward retirement."

NEW YORK (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan received a standing ovation and a $50,000 award for her crusade against drug abuse, but asked that the money go to the cause.

Mrs. Reagan was one of the first nine people to receive awards from the Charles A. Dana Foundation for their work in health and education. She asked that her $50,000 honorarium be used as seed money for the Nancy Reagan Drug Abuse Fund.

"We have to do everything in our power to stop the flow of drugs into this country," the first lady said Thursday. "We must have adequate treatment centers for those seeking to overcome their addictions. But most of all, we must educate people to the threat that drugs pose."

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Glenn Ford says a summons from Lord Mountbatten that turned into a chat about Shirley MacLain cost him Joan Crawford's friendship.

It happened when he and Crawford, whom he was dating, were in line to meet the queen of England, the 70-year-old movie star said in an interview to be published in Sunday's Parade magazine.

Mountbatten motioned for Ford to leave the line.

"I said to Joan, 'That's Lord Mountbatten. He wants to talk to me.'"

Through clenched teeth, Miss Crawford said, "Don't you leave my side!" Ford recalled.

"Well, after two or three minutes of Mountbatten standing there waiting for me, I said, 'I'm sorry Joan,' and stepped out of the line."

Mountbatten took him aside for a drink and asked Ford about a movie he'd made with Miss MacLaine, with whom England's great military hero apparently was smitten.

When their conversation ended, the hall was deserted.

"I tried to call Joan to explain, but she never spoke to me again," Ford said.

Seven institutions to participate in dating of Shroud of Turin

By LEE DYE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Seven research institutions around the world, including three in the United States, will participate in an unprecedented project next year that should precisely date the Shroud of Turin and possibly end a centuries-old controversy.

The shroud, which many believe to have been the burial cloth for Jesus Christ, shows the image of a man who died by crucifixion.

In 1978, the shroud was the subject of a wide range of scientific studies, many of them based on chemical analyses. But those studies, designed merely to determine the authenticity of the image, failed to turn up evidence that would disprove the authenticity.

And until now, the Vatican has resisted pressure to determine the age of the shroud through radiocarbon dating because the technique would have destroyed much of the shroud. But that danger has been lessened with the development of new techniques that can yield reliable results from only a tiny fragment of the shroud.

The test, long awaited by scientists and religious leaders alike, could prove that the artifact is far too young to have been the burial cloth.

However, even if the results show that the shroud dates back to the time of Christ, it will not prove that it was indeed the burial cloth, or that the image on the 14-feet-by-4-feet piece of linen is that of Jesus.

Thus, seven labs are in the position of being able to prove a negative, but not a positive. The results are expected to be announced in early 1988.

"What will come out of our effort will be the age of the cloth," said Douglas Donahue, a nuclear physicist at the University of Arizona, one of the participating institutions.

The others are Oxford, Rochester (N.Y.) and Zurich universities, and the Centre pour Faibles Radioactivites in France, Harwell in the United Kingdom and the Brookhaven National Laboratory in New York.

Until a few years ago, even radiocarbon techniques would have destroyed much of the shroud because samples to be dated must first be burned so that the carbon can be extracted. And that required large samples in order to determine the ratio between carbon 14 and other carbon isotopes, one of nature's most reliable time clocks.

But a new technology has evolved, using a nuclear accelerator to bombard a sample with a beam of cesium ions, giving the carbon atoms a negative charge so that they can be collected with an electric field. The carbon atoms are then fired through the accelerator and into a target of argon atoms. That gives the carbon 14 atoms a positive charge. They, in turn, can be drawn off with a magnet from the other negatively charged carbon isotopes.

In nature, carbon 14 is created when nitrogen atoms in the atmosphere are struck by cosmic rays from outer space. The carbon 14 becomes part of the carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which is taken up by all living things.

As long as the animal or plant remains alive, the percentage of carbon 14 in its tissues remains constant, but upon death it no longer takes up carbon dioxide, and the various types of carbon isotopes decay at different rates. Thus the percentage of carbon 14 reveals the time at which the plant or animal ceased taking up carbon dioxide.

The Shroud of Turin is made of linen, and the ratio of carbon 14 to carbon 12 and 13 — which are carbon atoms of a different weight, called isotopes — will tell scientists when the plant fibers were turned into cloth.

The task will be especially difficult because only about one out of every trillion carbon isotopes is carbon 14.

"It's like if you had an acre of blue marbles, three feet deep, with one red marble mixed in with the blues," said Paul E. Damon, a University of Arizona geochemist and principal coinvestigator with the university's Laboratory of Isotope Geochemistry. "Your job would be to find the red marble."

The University of Arizona's accelerator was completed in February of 1982, and it immediately proved its value by showing that two skulls found in California were far younger than scientists had believed, thus saving anthropologists the trouble of trying to explain how humans could have been in California 30,000 years before Homo sapiens appeared in the Old World.

Prison letter reveals hundreds of Nicaraguans subjected to torture

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — A letter smuggled from a Sandinista prison says hundreds of Nicaraguans who served in the National Guard of the deposed Somoza dictatorship are being subjected to physical and psychological torture.

Nicaraguan Embassy minister-counselor Fransisco Campbell called the allegations in the letter "blatantly false. We view it as just another attempt to discredit the government of Nicaragua."

Claiming that the charges are unsubstantiated, Campbell said no "serious newspaper" should publish a story based on the document's contents.

The authenticity of the letter, which concludes with a plea to the Western world to "help us get justice," could not be verified independently.

The letter, purportedly written by one of the inmates at the penitentiary, located 30 miles east of Managua, said the former guardsmen "have been beaten and chained in damp, dark isolated parts of the prison."

The inmates also have been victims of "selected torture," such as rationing of water and food, exposure to the elements and sexual abuse, as well as deprivation of sleep, medical attention and adequate hygiene, the letter said.

Examples of psychological torture, it said, include simulated executions and "systematic solitary confinement in punishment cells."

The letter, which was unsigned, was turned over to reporters by Woody Jenkins, a Democratic member of the Louisiana legislature and chairman of Friends of the Americas, a private organization that provides assistance to needy Latin Americans.

He said the organization is nonpolitical and he emphatically denied a published report suggesting the group has ties with Nicaraguan rebels. Any such affiliation, he said, would put at risk the lives of the organization's personnel. The group receives no U.S. government assistance, he said.

Jenkins went to Nicaragua at the invitation of CEPAD, described as a Nicaraguan Christian organization that is friendly to the Sandinista government. He was accompanied by Carmen Winkler, a Friends of the Americas representative in Honduras, and Stan Patrick of the United Church of Christ in New Orleans.

In a telephone interview Thursday from Baton Rouge, Jenkins said the letter was slipped to the delegation by a prisoner during a visit to the Jorge Navarro Penitentiary in Tipitapa, which includes a section housing former national guardsmen. The inmates in that section are referred to as "unrepentent" because they have refused to embrace the Sandinista revolution.

In a separate telephone interview from her home in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Mrs. Winkler confirmed Jenkins' account of the delegation's prison visit. She said one of the prison guards described the inmate who turned over the letter as "crazy."

But, she said, "I don't believe anybody would give you a paper like that and endanger himself if (the accusations) weren't true."

Jenkins said he could not confirm whether the charges were true, adding that the conditions at the prison can only be determined through an independent investigation. The letter was handwritten in Spanish and appeared to be the work of an educated person.

The prison director, Jenkins said, told the delegation there were about 200 "unrepentent" former guardsmen confined to the institution. Jenkins said his own estimate was between 800 and 1,000, while the letter put the figure at 1,200.

Clues sought in collision of Piper with Pan Am jet

By PAT LEISNER

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Investigators today were studying the wreckage of a demolished twin-engine plane for clues to why its experienced pilot landed it on a fog-shrouded taxiway and was killed in a collision with a Pan Am jet.

William S. Bain, a 21-year veteran airlines pilot, may have been making his second attempt at landing Thursday morning at Tampa International Airport when his Piper Apache crashed into the Pan Am World Airways Boeing 727 with 23 people aboard, National Transportation Safety Board investigators said.

Three minor injuries were reported among those on the jetliner.

"It is my understanding that a first approach was made, but it has not been verified," said NTSB spokesman Joseph Hall, adding that he would not speculate on whether the pilot had been waved off or decided not to land.

Ground-level fog had cut visibility to one-sixteenth of a mile, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Roger Myers in Atlanta.

Bain, 56, landed his plane on a taxiway, apparently mistaking it for a parallel runway about 400 feet away, officials said. The 727 was moving along the taxiway as it awaited takeoff clearance.

One of two engines on Bain's plane ripped into the nose of the jetliner and was left embedded there as the small plane slid clear of the jet and burst into flames.

"I was sitting down relaxing, getting ready to read the paper, and this ball of fire screamed alongside," said Joseph Martini, a passenger on the Pan Am plane. "What an experience. I can tell you I was shaking."

"The (Pan Am) pilot shouted something like 'Prepare to evacuate,' and about two seconds later he said 'Evacuate,'" said another passenger, Bill Moore. "When we got off the airplane you could see there was another airplane laying back there in rubble, burning real bad."

The charred wreckage of the small plane came to a halt 30 yards behind the jet.

The investigation would focus on weather conditions, the operations of both planes, air traffic control operations and the airworthiness of the Piper, NTSB officials said. It could be 10 months before a final report is issued, said NTSB spokesman Joseph Nall.

"We have not determined how many controllers were involved in talking to the two planes," Nall said. The investigative team arrived from Washington about seven hours after the crash.

Investigators planned to interview the Pan Am crew today, he said.

Bain was on his way to work when he was killed. The Fort Myers resident, who regularly commuted to work by plane, had an impeccable flight record with Eastern, said Glenn Parsons, a spokesman for the Miami-based carrier.

The veteran DC-9 pilot was to pilot Eastern Flight 164 from Tampa to Newark, N.J., which was scheduled to depart at 8:05 a.m., nearly an hour after the accident, Parsons said.

Pan Am Flight 301, with 17 passsenges and a crew of six, was bound for Miami. Three people were slightly hurt after evacuating by escape chutes, Pan Am spokesman Armand Arel said. He credited the jet's pilot, Capt. Edwin Lunsford of New Smyrna Beach, with trying to take evasive action by turning the jet to the right.

On a warm afternoon early in May, special agents from the United States Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management raided 17 homes and trading posts in Colorado and Utah, and seized 325 American Indian artifacts that they insisted had been stolen from archaeological sites on public lands in southeastern Utah.

Word of the raids traveled like wildfire through the dry brush country of the Southwest. It ignited the tempers of dealers and collectors, some of whom claimed that they had dug up the pieces on private property.

"The agents are assuming that the artifacts were taken illegally from public lands; I question their evidence," said Forrest Fenn, owner of Fenn Galleries in Santa Fe, N.M., which deals in Southwestern art.

Nevertheless, the looting of archaeological sites in the Southwest is hardly an isolated, random occurrence, despite the punishment for dealing in artifacts stolen from public lands: a fine of up to $250,000 and two years in jail, if the artifacts are proved to be worth $5,000 or more. Indeed, pothunting, once a recreational pastime in which families ventured into winding canyons and wilderness areas in search of a colorful artifact, is now an organized, surreptitious business made up not only of individuals out for a quick buck, but also of a sophisticated chain of professional diggers, buyers and sellers.

Looters work in bands in remote areas, sometimes with heavy equipment, and under cover of darkness.

"They can be pretty tough, and some pack in guns," says Gayle Sawyer, a special agent for the BLM in New Mexico. "I've seen sites which have literally been bulldozed. It's a multimillion-dollar business for sure; one site alone that covers a half-acre can yield 300 or 400 prehistoric pots, some of which might be worth $5,000 or $7,000 apiece, once they're taken out of the area."

THE ARTIFACTS usually leave the digging sites in the backs of pickup trucks. They are sold locally, either to collectors or to middlemen who, in turn, jack up the prices and sell them to private collectors in New York, Europe or Japan.

J.J. Brody, a professor of art history at the University of New Mexico, points out that Mimbres pots, which are renowned for their unusual geometric and figurative designs and which were used as mortuary offerings and buried with the deceased, have sold for as much as $20,000 by the time they reached their final destination.

Reactions to the government raids, which took place simultaneously in several areas, was fierce. The raids "rubbed a stick in the open sore of the cultural values of southern Utah," said Winston Hurst, curator of the Edge of the Cedars Museum in Blanding, Utah. "This is Sagebrush Rebellion country out here; people don't like it when the government marches into their homes like cavalry."

But officials and archaeologists felt they had little choice but to take drastic action. The looting problem has gotten much worse in recent years. Uranium mining, a major industry in southeastern Utah and southwestern Colorado, has been depressed for several years, and many people have been put out of work.

"It's hard economic times, and some people have taken to the canyons and to the hills in search of valuable artifacts," says Bruce Louthan, a BLM archaeologist in Moab, Utah. "They have to eat, so in some respects, you can't really blame them."

The diggers are also spurred by the fact that American Indian art has become very fashionable among collectors. Not long ago, for example, a 19th century Navajo chief's blanket sold for $115,000 at Sotheby's in New York.

"THERE'S BEEN a trend toward ever-higher values in rare, American Indian arts and artifacts during the last 20 years," says Roland Force, director of the Museum of the American Indian in New York. "The demand has gone up considerably."

The looting problem goes much deeper than the missing artifacts themselves. Since few of the looters are experienced archaeologists, many of them destroy valuable historic clues as they dig.

"The damage done to these sites is permanent," says Thomas Merlan, Historic Preservation Officer for New Mexico. "You can restore the contour of strip-mined land, but you can never bring back an archaeological site."

Merlan says that broken potsherds and ancient arrowheads are probably scattered among as many as 350,000 sites in New Mexico, although only 55,000 have been identified. Of those, Merlan says, as many as 90 percent have been disturbed or vandalized to some degree. "The business of looting is rampant and extensive in New Mexico because looters realize that there's a large profit to be made," he says. "Because of it New Mexico is losing its principal resource, its cultural heritage."

The Archaeological Resources Protection Act, passed in 1979, mandates that people convicted of removing artifacts from federal lands can face jail sentences and steep fines, but many feel that the full weight of the law is rarely brought down on those indicted. There are only a limited number of government agents, who must patrol millions of acres of federal lands.

And once an artifact is removed, it is hard to prove that it came from public lands. Artifacts found on private property are fair game for legal trading.

In New Mexico, there are two agents responsible for 11 million acres of BLM land, while six agents are responsible for the combined 22 million acres of Forest Service land in Arizona and New Mexico.

"WE DON'T have enough manpower, and lots of these sites are in remote areas, which take time to get to," says Manuel Martinez, a special agent for the Forest Service in Albuquerque. "And then we have to be able to prove that the artifacts were indeed taken from public land," he adds.

The Forest Service, often responding to tips, has made 40 arrests in Arizona and New Mexico since 1979. But only one has resulted in a jail sentence. In Utah, where there has been a rash of looting activity in recent years, not a single jail sentence has been handed down.

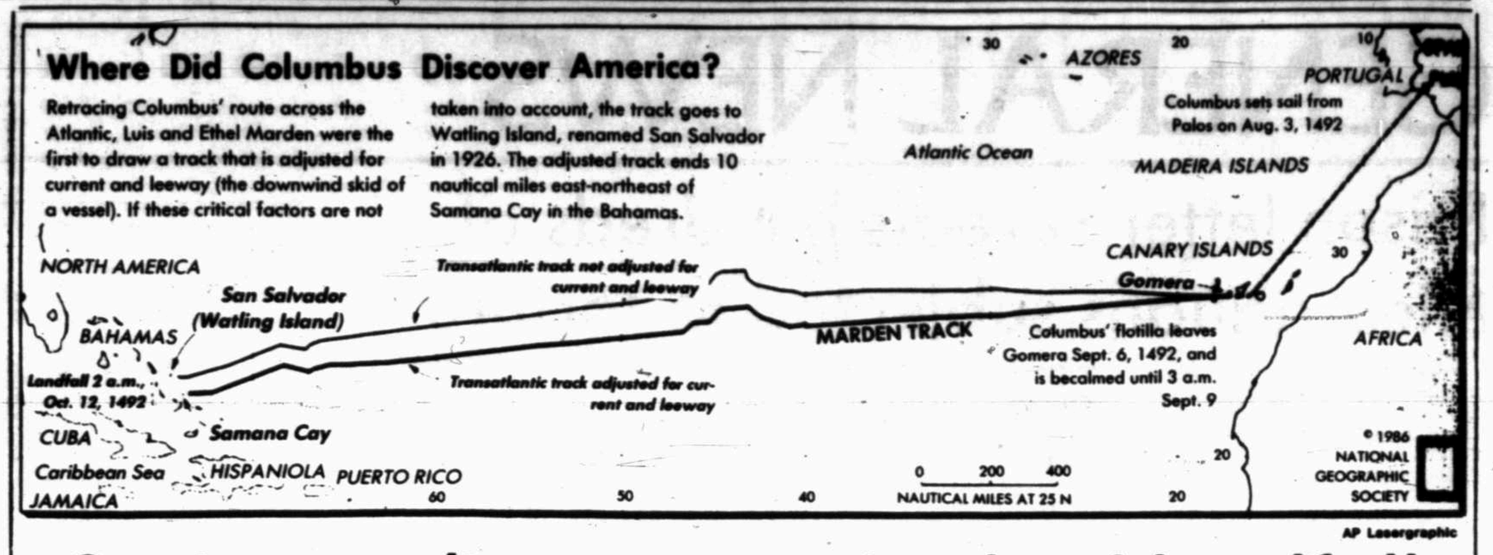

"Since the act came into being, no one has done time in Utah for looting; there's been no deterrence from the courts," says Bruce Lubeck, assistant U.S. attorney in Utah. "Part of the problem is that many of the judges don't feel that looting is such a big deal. They don't understand why taking pots off the land is so important."

Experts say that it is almost impossible to quantify the number of artifacts that disappear each year, mainly because no one has cataloged all of the archaeological sites. In San Juan County, an area in southeastern Utah roughly the size of Connecticut, archaeologists have recorded more than 7,000 sites, and that is probably only 5 percent of the sites there, says Louthan, the archaeologist.

Among the most prized Indian artifacts from the Southwest are prehistoric Anasazi baskets, made from yucca and willow fibers, and Mimbres pottery, which date from roughly 950 A.D. to 1200 A.D., and were produced by the Mimbreno Indians who lived along the Mimbres river and its tributaries in southwestern New Mexico.

Archaeologists say that the intricate, painted designs on the pots are important clues about an ancient culture that left behind no written record.

"MOST OF the Mimbres sites that we know of have been heavily pothunted," says Brody, the art history professor. "If anything, the situation is worse now than it was before; there's a big market for these pots among dealers and collectors in cities like L.A., Chicago and New York."

Society rediscovers Columbus' landfall

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON — When Christopher Columbus arrived in the New World some 500 years ago, he landed on a tiny island in the Bahamas 65 miles from the one usually credited with this historic event, the National Geographic Society announced recently.

Capping a five-year investigation that involved recalculating the route of the voyage across the Atlantic and retranslating old Spanish documents, the magazine said Columbus' first steps in the New World were on Samana Cay.

The narrow, 9-mile-long island in the far eastern Bahamas is 65 miles southeast of Watling Island, which for decades has been the most widely accepted place for Columbus' discovery of America on Oct. 12, 1492.

"We believe we have solved, after five centuries, one of the grandest of all geographic mysteries," Joseph Judge, a senior associate editor of the society's magazine who led the effort, writes in the November issue.

The society said a chain of evidence assembled by Judge and colleagues leads only to Samana Cay as site of the historic landfall, which Columbus dubbed San Salvador.

No fewer than nine islands in the area have been proposed as site of Columbus' first landfall, and Samana Cay previously was advocated by Gustavus V. Fox in 1882.

However, debate all but ended in 1942 when Samuel Eliot Morison, noted nautical historian from Harvard and biographer of Columbus, declared that the site was Watling Island, which had been renamed San Salvador in 1926, the society said.

The latest investigation involved commissioning a new translation of pertinent parts of a summary of Columbus' lost log written by a 16th century priest-historian named Bartolome de las Casas. The original log has not been seen since it was sent to Queen Isabella on the explorer's return to Spain in 1493.

Historian Eugene Lyons, an expert on old Spanish documents, extracted nautical references and quotations attributed to Columbus from the work and these translations became a key part of the investigators' work.

The magazine used specially commissioned computer programs to electronically backtrack the five locations Columbus' ships visited before going on to Cuba.

"Computers are great navigators," said Judge, who originated the idea of using 20th century technologies to retrace the New World voyage. Using the explorer's own bearings and distances, the calculations also led back to Samana, he said.

Members of the team made several trips to Samana, long dismissed as having no history of habitation, and found archeological evidence of 10 Lucayan Indian sites that existed there 500 or more years ago.

The society said this is proof of the existence of the Indians Columbus saw when he landed, and whom he described as "naked as their mother bore them."

Judge explored the island and said he saw every geological feature noted in the log, including a large reef encircling the island, a lake in the center, a peninsula with a narrow neck and a big harbor.

The log material contributed to drawing a new transatlantic track of the 33-day voyage of Columbus' ships — the Santa Maria, the Pinta and the Nina — from Spain's Canary Islands. And the new path led to a spot 10 nautical miles east-northeast of Samana, the society said.

The society said the new route is the first based on the log and the first to be adjusted for ocean current and leeway, the slow drift of a ship caused by winds pushing against its hull and other structures.

The route, calculated by Luis Marden, former chief of the society's foreign editorial staff, and his wife, Ethel Marden, a mathematician, also took into account a new finding about the length of a Spanish sea league of the time.

The Mardens, and another authority they consulted, found old manuals which showed that a league was defined as 2.82 nautical miles instead of 3.18 miles, as was previously believed.

A nautical mile equals about 1.15 statute miles.

Researchers reveal 'mystery' of Etruscans

By DON SCHANCHE
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

TARQUINIA, Italy — Fresh discoveries near this hilltop town and elsewhere in western Italy are helping to lift a veil of mystery from the ancient Etruscans, the enigmatic people who taught the French how to make wine, the Romans how to build roads and bridges and the rest of Europe how to write and thereby become civilized.

For more than 2,000 years, so little was known about the elusive people who made a rich civilization in Italy from about 1000 B.C. to the 1st century B.C. — for much of that time, the earliest Romans were still tending sheep — that they were treated by many scholars as a historic aberration.

Their language was considered an impenetrable mystery, their daily lives a historical blank. Because the remains of their obviously opulent civilization consisted almost solely of tombs and funerary artifacts, they were thought to have been more absorbed by death than by life.

Pictures in their tombs and on their pottery depicted happy-go-lucky games and feasts along with some of the most gruesome scenes of death and torture in ancient history, leading some scholars to dismiss them as frivolous but bloodthirsty numbskulls. Until a flood of new finds and new information began in the 1960s, that view was shared by many.

But during the last two decades, the rapid pace of new archaeological and linguistic finds that one specialist says are coming "almost weekly" has vastly expanded the experts' understanding of a people who were refined and sophisticated and who, under Phoenician and Greek tutelage, sowed the seeds of European civilization — and apparently had a lot of fun doing it.

IN THE FIRST six months of this year alone, archaeologists have found the remains of two Etruscan cities, one of them only a stone's throw from the Leaning Tower of Pisa and the other near Bolsena, north of Rome.

Neither has been excavated yet, but each is expected to yield major insights into the daily lives of a people who archaeologists now see as among the ancient world's greatest engineers and city planners, according to Ludovico Magrini, editor of the Rome-based journal Archaeologia, which focuses on Etruscan discoveries.

Another fresh find, in May, was a tomb carved into the rock beneath a modern highway in Tarquinia, one of the great cities of antiquity, overlooking the Tyrrhenian Sea. Prof. Paola Pelagatti, director of Rome's treasured Etruscan museum, the Villa Giulia, says that the find, already known as the Blue Demon tomb because of its wall decorations, may be the most important painted tomb discovered in the last two decades.

The demons appear in a wall painting of the netherworld opposite another wall painting that depicts a triumphal parade and adjoining a third that shows a traditional Etruscan banquet, with men and women happily wining and dining together while reclining on couches.

DATING FROM the 5th century B.C., it is the oldest of thousands of Etruscan tombs to show underworld demons and the only one to depict Charon, the mythological Greek spirit, ferrying souls across the river Styx in his canoe-like boat. The tomb thereby underscores the importance of Greek mythology to Etruscan religious practices.

Like most other Etruscan discoveries, one made a few months ago at the ancient town of Ceri, north of Rome near Cerveteri, was almost accidental. Volunteer diggers from the mostly amateur Gruppo Archaeologico Romano, a club of ancient history buffs, were excavating a long-known Etruscan highway that was constructed centuries before any roads led to Rome.

In the course of their labors, they found 30 previously untouched tombs. None was richly painted or treasure laden, but together they did yield almost 300 vases and pieces of bronze that will add to the knowledge of the people who made them, Magrini said.

Discoveries are coming at such a fast pace that specialists "stand more of a chance of learning of a new find from the newspaper than from a book," marveled Larissa Bonfante, professor of classics at New York University and an internationally known expert on the Etruscan language.

Although the growing number of archaeological finds has been vital in lifting the veil from the once dimly seen Etruscans, the experts say that patient scholarship, including painstaking re-examination of ancient Greek and Roman texts as well as of the long-dead civilization's own skimpy writings, has been just as important.

The result has been an increasingly well rounded knowledge of 900 years of Etruscan history, according to Bonfante.

"THE PROBLEM with studying them is that there is no Etruscan literature," she said in a recent interview in Rome. "What we know has had to be 'read' from their remains — tombs, monuments, artworks and mostly epigraphic inscriptions. Greek and Roman historians like Livy and Dionysius wrote about them, but by then Etruscan civilization was fading into history, and a lot of what they wrote was misleading and inaccurate."

The people of Etruria, as the Romans called the region between the Tiber and the Arno rivers where they lived, adopted a modified Greek alphabet and learned to write soon after their first contact with the Greeks, according to Bonfante and other experts.

Bonfante and her father, the noted linguistic specialist Giuliano Bonfante, have examined German, English, Norwegian, Danish and Swedish runes inscribed in the Etruscan alphabet.

"They introduced into Europe the art of writing, and thereby the beginning of the civilization we know," the Bonfantes wrote in their 1983 book, "The Etruscan Language."

Both scoff good-naturedly at the longstanding public perception of the Etruscan language as a "mystery" tongue that remains "undeciphered."

"The 'mystery' of Etruscan, like that of the Great Pyramids, holds a fatal fascination for crackpots convinced that they can decipher the language, crack the code and find the key," writes the elder Bonfante.

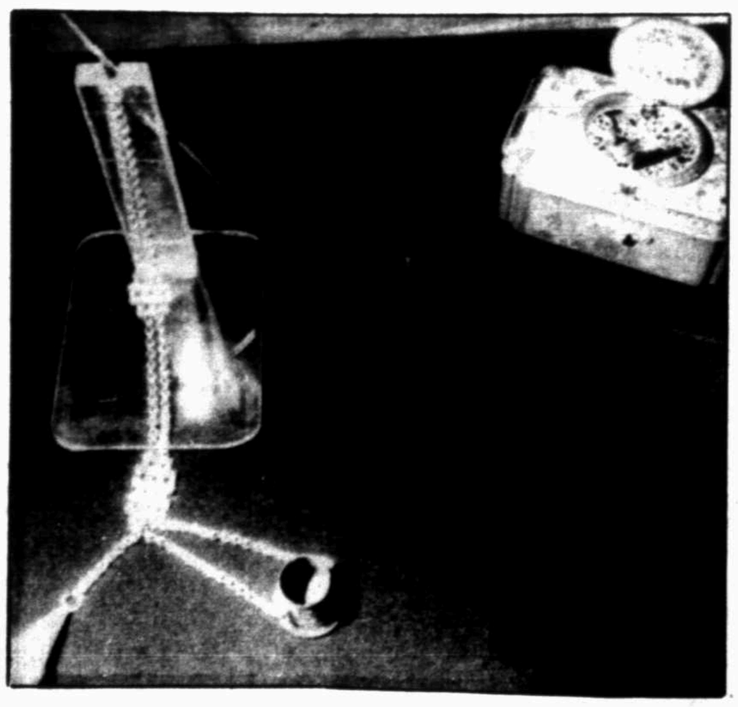

But there is no mystery; the alphabet has been clear and readable for almost 2,700 years. The problem is that there isn't much Etruscan still around to read, and so knowledge of the Etruscan vocabulary is very limited.

ALTHOUGH PAGAN priests in early Christian Rome preserved the language for ritual use until at least A.D. 408 — its last recorded use — there are virtually no traces of the linen books for which the Etruscans were famous, nor of any lengthy texts. Time has obliterated them, and the Greeks and Romans made no copies for today's scholars to study.

That last recorded use of Etruscan was when Pope Innocent I called upon the still-active pagan soothsayers of Rome to stir up some lightning that would scare off Alaric, the barbaric king of the Visigoths. Alaric sacked the city anyway.

The lengthiest single example of Etruscan writing, 1,200 readable words, came through the ages like most other relics of the ancient people — by accident. The mummy of a young Egyptian or Greek woman, taken from Alexandria, Egypt, to Zagreb by a Croatian traveler in the 19th century, was found to have been wrapped in linen that proved to be strips from an Etruscan religious scroll. Experts think that an Etruscan, perhaps a priest, died in Egypt, or discarded one of his books there, and the cloth was subsequently used to wrap an Egyptian corpse.

But the text is entirely taken up with repetitious religious ritual, so it is not very revealing and provides little to expand the experts' sparse Etruscan vocabulary. Despite years of study, only about 250 everyday words of the language are known.

Egypt's royal jewels glitter in new museum

BY DALIA BALIGH

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt (AP) — Hidden since Gamal Abdel Nasser's revolution 34 years ago, Egypt's royal jewels — glittering reminders of the opulence of its modern monarchs — are now on public display in this Mediterranean port.

The pieces are from the Mohammed Ali dynasty, which reigned from 1805 until Nasser ousted King Farouk on July 26, 1952.

Included in a preliminary exhibit of 415 of the 1,950 items on display here permanently is a baby's platinum rattle in the shape of the royal crown, inlaid with diamonds, emeralds and sapphires and containing gold balls inside.

About 2,000 other pieces remain sealed in a vault pending further checks and investigation.

The pieces on preliminary display rest on black velvet inside glass cabinets at the 67-year-old palace that belonged to Princess Fatma al-Zahraa. The permanent exhibition was opened to the public after President Hosni Mubarak inaugurated it in August.

The royal jewels were confiscated by Nasser's military junta and stored in huge steel safes in presidential palaces and then moved to underground vaults of the Central Bank in Cairo.

The best of the jewels were sold in three major auctions organized by Sotheby's of London in 1953-59, with the money going to the Egyptian treasury.

The articles not sent to auction were handed over to an Egyptian committee for an inventory and safekeeping.

Stories have appeared from time to time of alleged theft and fraud involving some of those pieces. Several previous attempts to put them on public display failed because of pending court cases and investigations.

Ibrahim el-Nawawy, chairman of the museums section of the government's Antiquities Authority, said that state attorneys started in 1973 to investigate and clear the 1,950 items for exhibition here.

El-Nawawy said he could not give an estimate of the intrinsic value of the collection beyond saying it was in the millions of pounds. The official rate of the Egyptian pound is 75 cents.

"The stones and workmanship are worth a fortune, and their historic value makes them priceless," Ahmed Kadry, chairman of the Antiquities Authority, told The Associated Press.

Among other items on display are gold tea and coffee sets, decorated with enamel and precious stones; a snuff box made of gold and encrusted with 440 diamonds that belonged to Mohammed Ali; a collection of gold watches belonging to Khedive Ismail, and numerous gold and platinum candy boxes, paper weights and jewelry cases.

Several diamond-studded platinum tiaras worn by queens and princesses, including King Farouk's mother Nazli and his stepmother Chevikar, also are on display. French, Italian and Egyptian workmanship produced brilliant sets of necklaces, earrings, bracelets, rings and even belt buckles sparkling with precious stones.

A major security operation was mounted in early July to move the jewels from the Central Bank in Cairo to Alexandria. The government insured the jewels for $22.5 million during the 130-mile road trip.

El-Nawawy said that display of the remaining 2,000 pieces is awaiting further investigation or the resolution of lawsuits.

One pending court case involves the ownership of a tray given by the Empress Eugenie of France to Khedive Ismail when the empress attended the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869. The tray, made of gold and studded with diamonds, is believed to be worth at least $11 million, according to el-Nawawy.

He said that in some instances precious stones had been replaced by fakes and in others items were stolen and dropped from the official inventory.

Numerous security measures have been taken at Fatma al-Zahraa's palace, including alarm systems that are set off by vibrations or movement, 24-hour closed-circuit television surveillance, armed guards and police-dog units.

Mohammed Ali, founder of the royal dynasty, was an Albanian officer in the Turkish army who became ruler of Egypt in 1805. He is credited with modernizing Egypt after hundreds of years of isolation under Ottoman rule.

Among his successors was Khedive Ismail (1863-1879) whose extravagance bankrupted Egypt and and forced him to sell shares in the Suez Canal to Britain.

Farouk was the last of the line to reign. He died in exile in Rome in 1965. Nasser died in 1970.

Waldheim had direct role in deportations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The German army unit with which Kurt Waldheim served during World War II was directly involved in the deportation of 68,000 Yugoslav civilians to concentration camps, The Washington Post reported today.

The newspaper, citing captured Nazi documents, said the quartermaster of the Wehrmacht's Combat Group West Bosnia was assigned the duty of setting up collection points and transporting the prisoners to camps.

Waldheim, the former secretary general of the United Nations who now is president of Austria, admitted through a spokesman last month that he was "assigned as a special missions staff officer to the quartermaster" of the Combat Group West Bosnia.

Waldheim had denied for months previously that he was involved in the Yugoslav operation.

The Waldheim spokesman, Gerold Christian, has said Waldheim "had the duties of a supply officer" but was not involved in any fighting.

The documents, which the Post said were in the U.S. National Archives, do not mention Waldheim. The newspaper said it found no evidence that Waldheim was personally involved in the deportations.

In 1942, the Germans decided to pacify the mountainous Kozara region of western Yugoslavia. In June of that year, 33,000 German troops surrounded the area, which was home to more than 80,000 inhabitants, including 3,500 armed partisans who opposed the Nazis.

By the time the 45-day operation was over, 68,000 people were sent to concentration camps, with many of them dying on long marches to their destinations. At the camps, 23,000 children under the age of 14 were separated from their parents and sent to special camps, where 11,000 of them died of starvation and disease.

In addition, more than 130 villages were burnt to the ground, historians say.

The Post said a June 2, 1942, document issued by a Col. Munckel, the quartermaster for the commanding Nazi general in Belgrade, said prisoner deportations should be carried out by the Combat Group West Bosnia's quartermaster department.

It said the combat group should reach "an agreement with the government" of the Nazi puppet government of Croatia regarding deportations, the newspaper said. It added that "should a deportation of prisoners to a Croatian camp not be possible or advisable, the prisoners are to be sent to Belgrade."

On June 5, the newspaper said, Munckel changed his order with a new document. It said that instead of working with the Croatians, "deportation of prisoners to Croatian concentration camps is to be handled by the Combat Group itself."

When the operation was over, the Post said, Gen. Friedrich von Stahl, the German commander at Kozara, wrote in an order, "The enemy has been annihilated or captured, and the entire population of the encircled area have been removed, thus effecting a thorough pacification of the territory."

Veto of clean water bill stirs Democrats

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new Democratic-controlled Congress will follow up President Reagan's post-election veto of clean water legislation by sending the same or a stiffer bill to his desk next year, environmental leaders in both parties predict.

"The president could have avoided a confrontation with the new Congress. Now he has one," Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan said Thursday after Reagan vetoed an $18 billion extension of the Clean Water Act of 1972.

Moynihan, D-N.Y., will be chairman of the water pollution subcommittee of the Senate Environment Committee when Congress reconvenes in January with Democrats in control of both houses as a result of Tuesday's elections.

Sen. Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., the outgoing chairman of the Senate Environment Committee, said, "The president was obviously acting on very bad advice. If he was dissatisifed with the cost, then he should wait to see what the Democratic Congress comes up with next year."

Sen. Quentin Burdick, D-N.D., the incoming chairman of the environment panel, said, "As far as I'm concerned, the clean water bill should be introduced on the very first day of the session and reported out of my committee at its first business meeting. This compromise package was supported unanimously by the Republican Senate and the Democratic House. I see no reason why that support will not continue."

Rep. James Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the House Public Works Committee, said he would "introduce the clean water bill as passed, word for word, on the first day of the new Congress."

Reagan had proposed a $6 billion program to continue federal grants to states for sewage and waste water treatment plants for three years and then turn the problem over to state and local governments to handle.

The bill approved by Congress provided $9.6 billion for grants through 1994 and added another $8.4 billion for states to set up a revolving fund to aid communities after the federal money ran out.

"Unfortunately, this bill so far exceeds acceptable levels of intended budgetary commitments that I must withhold my approval," the president said in a memorandum explaining his veto. "My administration will work closely with the next Congress to pass acceptable legislation."

The president killed the bill with a pocket veto, the procedure used when Congress is not in session, so his action is not subject to being overriden by the lawmakers, even though both Houses approved the measure without dissent last month.

It was his third veto in three days, starting on the day of the election in which Democrats regained control of the Senate.

On Tuesday the president disapproved an authorization bill for the National Transportation Safety Board, saying among other things that it called for 20 percent more spending than projected in his budget for the 1988 and 1989 fiscal years.

NATION IN BRIEF

Census Bureau seeks help from nation's cities, towns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau is launching an effort to enlist the help of the nation's cities and towns in conducting the next national head count.

The census is scheduled for April 1, 1990, but preparations have been under way for several years, with some test counts already having been conducted.

The latest step is a letter from Census Director John G. Keane to officials of the nation's 39,000 cities, counties and towns seeking their participation in a local review program.

As part of the program, the Census Bureau will send each local government a set of block maps and housing unit counts for those blocks in 1989. Local officials will be asked to confirm or correct the counts using local tax records, utility hookups and occupancy and demolition permits.

Women's memorial OK'd

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed legislation authorizing a memorial on federal land in or near Washington to honor women who have served in the U.S. armed forces.

The measure, signed Thursday, authorizes the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation to establish the memorial.

Narcotics conference set

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will confer with 21 American diplomats, many of them stationed in drug-producing countries, during a conference on narcotics next week at the White House.

The meeting, next Wednesday and Thursday, "will provide the president with an opportunity to update the ambassadors about our domestic efforts to combat narcotics and will give the ambassadors an opportunity to tell the president about progress and problems in international narcotics control," Albert R. Brashear, a deputy press secretary, said Thursday.

Brashear said the invited ambassadors are accredited to countries concerned about narcotics abuse and where drug production, trafficking and consumption have become, or could become, a serious problem.

Soviets to be replaced

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Los Angeles company won a $10 million contract to provide Americans to replace Soviet employees at U.S. missions in Moscow and Leningrad, the State Department has announced.

Over the next five years, Pacific Architects and Engineers Inc., will be the primary supplier of drivers, laborers, mechanics and other support workers for the missions, whose Soviet labor force has been withdrawn, State Department spokesman Pete Martinez said Thursday.

Employees must be approved by the department's health and diplomatic security offices before they can go to Moscow. The first workers may arrive in early December, Martinez said.

Pacific Architects and Engineers, which has already provided Americans to work in the Moscow embassy, has about 4,500 employees doing such work around the world, said Michael Gulino, the company's Washington representative.
