Traffic Deaths Increase In 1962 On Texas Roads

AUSTIN — The official Texas traffic "death book" for 1962 was closed Friday with 2,421 entries in the motorcade column — an increase of 107 deaths or five per cent over 1961, it was announced today by Col. Homer Garrison Jr., director of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

He said that in spite of the fact that travel increased four per cent in 1962, the 107 additional motorcades raised the death rate per hundred million miles from 4.8 in 1961 — the lowest in history — to 4.9 in 1962.

Garrison said the upward trend in traffic fatalities began in the summer of 1962 and is continuing into 1963 at an even greater rate. During the first 11 weeks of this year, there were 43 or 13 per cent more deaths than during the same period of 1962. So far in 1963, 364 deaths have been reported.

"This trend is especially alarming because nearly as many traffic deaths have occurred in Texas so far this year as compared with the same period of 1956, when an all-time high of 2,611 motorcades were recorded," he said.

"Unless this trend is halted, Texas could well be headed for a new traffic death record — the most deadly year ever on our streets and highways. We can ill afford this tragic and needless loss of life. Traffic accidents are caused by a disregard of traffic laws and ordinances and it is essential that the public support our enforcement officers and the courts in controlling the violators.

"In the meantime, every driver should take cognizance of the current dangerous trend
