House debates penalties for hiring aliens

Immigration bill sparks opposition

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The House, trying to curb the influx of foreigners sneaking across America's borders in search of work, turned today to the question of whether hiring an illegal alien should be against the law.

At the heart of an immigration control bill before the House is a proposal designed to cut the flow of illegal aliens. For the first time, it would subject employers who hire undocumented workers to penalties — fines or even imprisonment.

Foes of the legislation, primarily Hispanics, argue this will lead to wholesale job discrimination against anyone who looks foreign because employers would be fearful of the sanctions.

The opponents suffered a 291-111 defeat Monday in their attempt to prevent the chamber from even considering the bill, and said they would try to remove the penalties provision from the measure.

As an alternative, they have suggested amendments to beef up enforcement of the labor laws that deal with the minimum wage, maximum hours, child labor and safety and health standards.

"I thought we would do better, frankly," said Rep. Robert Garcia, D-N.Y., chairman of the 11-member Hispanic Caucus, after the vote against pulling the bill from the floor.

He said he and his Hispanic colleagues planned a section-by-section attempt to modify the bill and expected debate to last the entire week.

Under existing law, it is not illegal to hire an undocumented worker and proponents of the bill see that as the magnet that has drawn the estimated 3 million to 6 million illegal aliens to this country.

Under the bill, an employer who knowingly hires an illegal alien would be subject first to a warning and thereafter a fine of $1,000 per employee for the first offense, $2,000 for the second. Subsequent violations could mean a penalty of $3,000 or a year in jail or both.

Organized labor supports the penalties, as does the administration.

"The House acted in the public interest," Attorney General William French Smith said after the vote. "This step is to be applauded by all who favor effective, humane resolution of immigration problems — something this administration proposed three years ago."

Rep. Peter Rodino, D-N.J., warned during the opening debate that "a trade in human cargo" results from the ease with which people can sneak into the country and find jobs.

"We cannot seal our borders," said Rodino, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee. "But failure to pass this legislation sends a signal to smugglers and unscrupulous employers that they can go on with their work."

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., called the entire bill "a step backward. It is not the reform we need. I think we are doing a very racist thing here."

She argued that the bill would penalize dark-skinned aliens, but not Canadians who might be holding jobs Americans want.

Even the bill's supporters acknowledged that it does not offer a perfect solution.

Rep. Daniel Lungren, R-Calif., said it is "the best bill in the circumstances." And Rep. Hamilton Fish Jr., R-N.Y., said that if the problem of the "revolving door on our Southwest border" is not addressed soon, the American people will demand a "repressive" response.

The Senate twice has passed a bill stronger than the House version.

Another controversial subject contained in the House bill provides an amnesty for those who have spent several years in the country. The bill grants legal resident status to illegal aliens who came to this country before Jan. 1, 1982. They would not be eligible for Medicaid, food stamps or other federal financial assistance for five years.

Other provisions include:

—The temporary legal admission of aliens to pick crops, known as "guest workers."

—A new way of handling appeals on matters of exclusion, deportation and political asylym.

—Increasing to $5,000 from the existing $2,000 the fine for falsifcation of immigration documents.

Iran, Iraq accept mediation to curb civilian attacks

The Associated Press

Iran declared a day of mourning today for 44 people reported killed and 250 wounded in the southern town of Dezful. Both Iran and Iraq said they would refrain from further attacks on civilians.

The agreement proposed by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar took effect at Monday evening. It was the first time during the 45-month-old war that Iran had accepted mediation.

But a high-ranking Iranian official said it wouldn't affect the Islamic republic's determination to carry out its war with Iraq on the battlefield.

Foreign ministers of the six-nation Gulf Coordination Council — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman — planned to meet in Taif, Saudi Arabia, today to discuss ways to assure a steady supply of oil for world markets in spite of Iraqi and Iranian attacks on Persian Gulf shipping.

The speaker of Iran's Parliament on Monday rejected any peace negotiations with President Saddam Hussein of Iraq. In speech, he said Iraq's Arab supporters expect their ships to be safe in the Persian Gulf as long as Iraq continues to attack oil tankers bound for Iran.

"Our policy is that all ships must pass safely, or those who are in some way a partner in the war and provide help (to Iraq) should not expect to have security," Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted Hashemi Rafsanjani as saying.

Kuwait blamed Iran for a missile attack Sunday on the Kuwaiti tanker Kazima in the southern reaches of the gulf. It was the 42nd ship damaged in the past four months, according to shipping sources in Bahrain.

Rafsanjani didn't directly confirm that Iran had attacked the ship, but he implied it. "In any case, the ship has been hit and we usually don't announce details in such cases," he was quoted as saying. "The Iraqis hit (ships) there, others do too."

Rescue workers searched through the rubble of 720 shops and houses in Dezful that were blasted by Iraqi missiles, Tehran Radio said today. The death total rose to 44, and the wounded numbered 250, the radio report said.

Baghdad Radio said the attack on the southern Iranian town was in retaliation for two deaths and 12 other casualties caused by Iranian shelling of five Iraqi border cities on Monday.

Iran and Iraq had agreed Sunday to the moratorium on civilian attacks.

Perez de Cuellar, visiting Amman, Jordan, said, "I think wisdom has prevailed and perhaps we can avoid an expansion" of the Iran-Iraq conflict.

But Rafsanjani told newsmen after a meeting of Iran's Supreme Defense Council that Sunday's agreement "has nothing to do with the war itself and there will be no talks on the war, as in the past," IRNA reported.

T.J.'s 'in good health'

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON — T.J. Davis, an infant boy who had only days to live when he arrived at Texas Children's Hospital last February, has gone home "in good health" after an experimental bone marrow transplant apparently gave him the disease-fighting blood cells that nature forgot.

Dr. William T. Shearer, a specialist in immunology, announced Monday that the transplant was a success and that T.J. "has now acquired the lymphocytes and antibodies that fight infection. We can send him home."

T.J., the 11-month-old son of Linda and Terrance Davis of Caldwell, Idaho, suffered from severe combined immune deficiency, a congential defect in which his body could no produce lymphocytes to fight disease. He was brought to Houston on Feb. 1 suffering from a life-threatening infection in his mouth and gum.

Bone marrow, taken from his father and treated to prevent rejection, was transfused into T.J.'s body and Shearer sais the transplanted marrow is now producing lymphocytes sufficient to control infection and disease.

Shearer is the physician who treated Houston's famed "Boy in the Bubble," a SCID victim who died after a similar transplant failed.

"We're really excited," said Davis, T.J.'s father. "Instead of seeing our son deteriorate in front of us, he's getting better and better every day."

The toddler's parents said they planned to live in Houston.

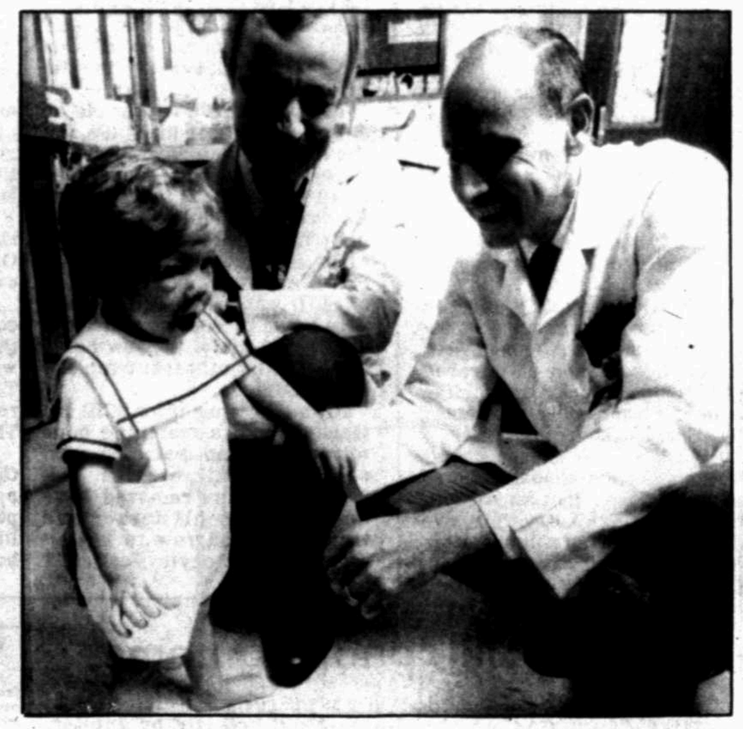

Shearer said the boy will continue to be kept indoors and not allowed to associate with other children for several months because his immunity is still "weak and needs protection." But the doctor said that T.J. will probably develop a fully-active immune system within two years.

"T.J. was on death's door when he came here," said Shearer, because an infection had invaded his mouth and jaw and had penetrated until it was "bordering on the brain." The boy would have died within two weeks, said the physician.

Doctors used antibiotics and shots of gamma globulin to fight the infection until the transplanted marrow could start producing lymphocytes.

"Now he has rid himself of those infections," said Shearer.

Baby-smuggling trial under way

The Associated Press

LAREDO, Texas — A woman accused of smuggling Mexican infants into the United States became "so obsessed with finding babies" that she took shortcuts to avoid the bureaucratic delays of legal adoptions, a posecutor says.

Nelda Karen Colwell, 39, of Layton, Utah, went on trial Monday before U.S. District Judge George P. lazen on charges of smuggling two Mexican babies into the United States for adoption by two Utah couples.

Mrs. Colwell's attorney, George Handy, described her as a "very good person" and a "scapegoat" whose only :ime was that she loved children and wanted to help couples find babies to adopt.

But in his opening statement in the non-jury trial, Assistant U.S. Attorney David Almaraz said Mrs. Colwell was a key figure in a baby-smuggling operation involving three Laredo women dating back to February 1983. All four were indicted April 10.

Mrs. Colwell had arranged the legal adoptions of several Mexican babies through Mexican attorneys, but had to wait lengthy periods while the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service processed the papers, Almaraz said.

"After a while, (she) became so obsessed with trying to find babies that (she) began taking shortcuts" that violated federal laws, Almaraz said.

The three other women — San Juana Martinez-Lopez, Celestina Rios-Rivera and Juanita Melendez-Calderon — last month pleaded guilty to lesser charges of conspiracy to transport illegal aliens and agreed to testify against Mrs. Colwell.

Mrs. Melendez-Calderon also pleaded guilty to falsifying birth records by swearing the two babies were born in Texas.

The government claims the two children were born in a Nuevo Laredo clinic and then smuggled across the border by Mrs. Rios-Rivera and Mrs. Martinez-Lopez. Mrs. Melendez-Calderon, a midwife who worked at the clinic, then falsified the babies' birth certificates, authorities say.

Two adoptive couples from Utah then tranported the infants to their homes, Almaraz said.

Comic strip's 'take off' on logo doesn't amuse Olympic panel

By STEVEN MARK
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — To Berke Breathed, author of the comic strip "Bloom County," naming his strip "the official comic strip of the 1984 Olympic Games" is simply a joke.

But the Los Angeles Olympic Committee is not amused by the strip. Some of the strips over the last two weeks have depicted what Breathed describes as a "bastardized" form of the official logo — the strip's character Bill the Cat appearing inside the "stars in motion" symbol of the Summer Games.

The LAOCC has advised the Washington Post, which syndicates "Bloom County," to stop using the name and logo, said Bob Baum, of the LAOOC's corporate relations office. The LAOOC is also investigating the possibility of suing the Post for copyright and trademark infringement, Baum said today.

Breathed says he sent a check for $2.50 to the LAOCC with a note saying he would use the logo, and when he received no response, he assumed "they were tickled pink."

But Baum says four other cartoon strips asked for permission to use the logo and were turned down. "We don't think it's fair for one to get it when we turned down others," he said.

Post lawyer Bo Jones says no reader would consider Breathed's use of the logo, such as it is, as representing the official sanction of the LAOCC. He added that the Post can do nothing about the strip anyway, since most of those featuring the logo have already run.

Breathed says he won't use the logo after those which currently feature it have been published.

Warm weather is forecast through Wednesday for the eastern half of the county, according to the National Weather Service. Cooler weather from the northern Plains to Minnesota and showers from the southeast Plains to the upper Great Lakes also are expected.

Thunderstorms strafe Midwest

By RON SIRAK
Associated Press Writer

Easterners got a brief break today from a heat wave that has claimed at least 10 lives, while thunderstorms attacked the Midwest with a flurry of tornadoes and heavy rains that wrecked homes and caused flash flooding.

Two people were killed shortly after midnight in South Dakota when a twister ripped a path five miles long and three-fourths of a mile wide in the Rowena and Valley Springs area just east of Sioux Falls.

In Nebraska, several tornadoes late Monday touched down near St. Library, 11 miles north of Grand Island, destroying several buildings, derailing five railroad cars, and leaving the town without power.

"We've got trees down all over and power lines down all over," said a spokeswoman for the Hall County sheriff's department.

Up to 5 inches of rain prompted flood warnings this morning along the Big Sioux River and its tributaries in southeastern South Dakota.

The southern two-thirds of Minnesota and two dozen counties in central and northeast Nebraska were covered by a flood watch.

Two dozen tornadoes touched down Monday in Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa and South Dakota. Thunderstorms packing winds gusting to 90 mph and hail as big as baseballs raked parts of Nebraska.

The Northeast today got a temporary respite from five days of oppressive heat in the mid and upper 90s from Virginia to New England. But forecasters said the mercury will climb back into that range Thursday.

In Baltimore on Monday, the mercury hit 100 degrees at 2 p.m., shattering a mark for the date that was set in 1911. Boston reached a record 98; New York City, Washington, D.C., and Richmond, Va., hit 97; and Atlantic City and Newark, N.J., saw 96.

Marks were also set in Bridgeport, Conn., and Allentown, Pa., where the highs were 93, and in Worcester, Mass., which reached 91.

Four heat-related deaths were reported Monday and three on Sunday in New York City, said Dr. Elliott Gross, the city's chief medical examiner. In Philadelphia, one person died of heat stroke and two of hyperthermia — high body temperature — on Monday, authorities said.

The relentless heat added up to one big headache for utility companies and water departments which struggled to serve millions of consumers desperate for ways to keep cool. Little relief was on the way, forecasters said.

"Temperatures in the Northeast should be in the upper 80s and lower 90s today," said Hugh Crowther of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo. "But this doesn't appear to be a real cooling trend."

The New York State Power Pool, a consortium of eight power plants, logged a record demand for electricity for a single day Monday. Consolidated Edison Co. and Long Island Lighting Co. were ordered to reduce voltage by 5 percent after a generating plant in Newburgh went out of service, but both returned to full operations by 6 p.m.

Record electrical use also was reported by the New England Power Pool, Public Service Electric & Gas Co. in New Jersey and the Potomac Electric Power Co. in Washington.

As a precaution, the power pool linking PSE&G and 10 other utilities in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Washington and parts of Virginia reduced voltage systemwide by 5 percent Monday afternoon, said Art Lenehan, a PSE&G spokesman. The cutback was lifted in about three hours, he said.

Pittsburgh suffered its worst power outage since 1973 when five high-power voltage lines failed Monday afternoon, cutting off electricity to much of downtown. It was not immediately known whether the blackout was linked to heavy consumer demand.

Several East Coast cities declared water emergencies as children tried to escape the heat by opening hydrants.

In Pennsylvania, numerous highways were reported to have buckled from the heat.

"The road expands and it just has nowhere to go, so it goes up," said Lois Morasco of the state Department of Transportation.

Dozens of school districts sent students home early as classrooms became unbearable. In New Castle, Del., temperatures inside classrooms topped 90 degress, school spokeswoman Joyce Theilker said.

While the East broiled, the Midwest battled violent thunderstorms.

A family near Goodland, Kan., escaped injury when they took shelter in their basement shortly before a twister splintered the structure, police dispatcher Roy Russell said.

Numerous farm buldings were destroyed or damaged, but no injuries were reported.

The Kansas City, Mo., area was plagued by rising floodwaters from torrential weekend rains that dropped up to 7 inches of rain, and Gov. John Carlin on Monday declared seven northeastern Kansas counties disaster areas because of the storms.

Warm, windy weather due through Wednesday

From Staff and Wire Reports

Warm and windy weather will continue in the Permian Basin through Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Skies will be fair tonight with a low in the upper 60s. Under sunny skies Wednesday, temperatures are expected to climb into the middle 90s.

Winds will be from the east at 15-20 mph and gusty this evening, decreasing to 10-15 mph later tonight. Wednesday's winds will be from the south at 15-20 mph and gusty.

Monday's high of 89 missed the record high of 104, set in 1959, by 15 degrees. The overnight low of 71 was 16 degrees off of the record low of 55, set in 1979.

STATE

Low clouds covered much of South, Central and North Central Texas before dawn today as an area of light showers dampened southern portions of the state.

High clouds were observed over Northwest Texas. Otherwise, mostly clear skies dominated the state's horizons.

NATION

Violent thunderstorms pounded the Midwest today after hurling two dozen tornadoes across Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa, while Northeast residents were still looking for relief from nearly a week of record-breaking heat.

Near Goodland, Kan., a farm family made it to their basement just in time as a twister turned the house to rubble but injured no one, police said.

Pontiff celebrates Mass in Switzerland

The Associated Press

LUGANO, Switzerland — Pope John Paul II today celebrated an outdoor Mass for 20,000 people in the first eucharistic celebration of his six-day tour of Switzerland.

Two hundred priests assisted the pope at the Mass at Lugano's Cornaredo soccer stadium.

Eight special trains and dozens of buses brought people to the service in this Italian-speaking canton, including many from neighboring Italy. The pontiff was cheered by the flag-waving crowd as he toured the stadium in his bullet-proof "popemobile."

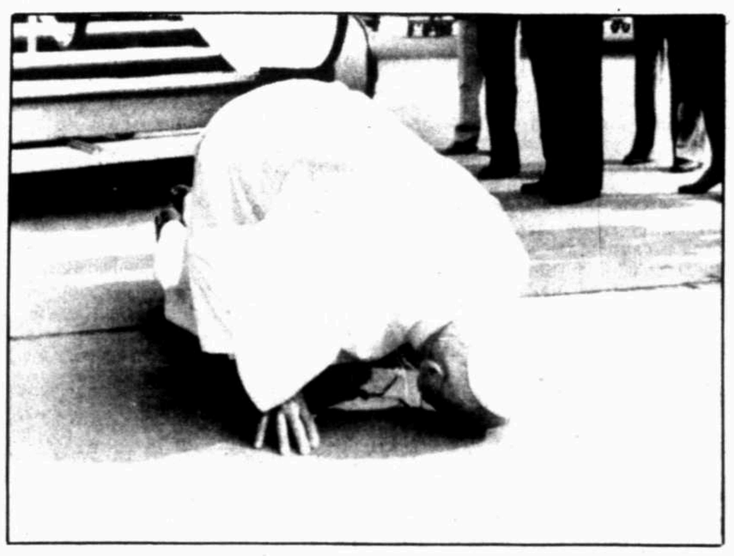

Local officials said attendance was considerably less than expected. The stadium has a capacity of about 30,000. Many people, responding to official appeals to come early because of the security checks, waited for hours in temperatures as high as 82 degrees.

The pope's homily, delivered in Italian, stressed the need to work for Christian unity.

The visit is the first major pastoral mission to this Alpine nation since 1418.The pope, on his 22nd journey abroad during his 4½-year reign, arrived at 8:45 a.m. aboard a special flight at Zurich's Kloten airport.

A delegation led by Bishop Heinrich Schwery, president of the Swiss Bishops' Conference, entered the plane to welcome him and a Swiss military band played.

As John Paul descended from the plane under a bright sun, he knelt in his white cassock to kiss the soil of his host country. Organizers had left a small part of the red-carpeted tarmac uncovered for this act, which he has turned into a tradition.

Kissing Swiss soil upon his arrival today at Zurich is Pope John Paul II, on a six-day visit.

The poep was then greeted by Swiss President Leon Schlumpf and other government and church officials, conversing with them alternately in German and French.

In a brief welcoming address, Schlumpf said the visit was both a religious and diplomatic event, noting that the pope is a head of state.

In his reply, the pope described his visit as "another station on my pilgrimage" to meet with his flock. He also said he was looking forward to meeting with the representatives of other churches, "our separated brothers."

"Great efforts are still needed to overcome the internal and external divisions" of the church, said the pope, who spoke in all four Swiss national languages, German, French, Italian and Romansch.

He said Switzerland was "particularly linked" to the Holy See because of the Swiss Guards who have acted as protectors of the papacy since the 16th century.

After the arrival ceremony, the pontiff flew to Lugano. He was to travel to Geneva later in the day for a meeting with leaders of the World Council of Churches, a group made up of Protestant denominations.

The pope intended to visit Switzerland three years ago, but the trip was postponed when he was shot and wounded by would-be assassin Mehmet Ali Agca on May 13, 1981, in St. Peter's Square.

The Swiss appear to be taking no chances with John Paul's safety. Dogs will search buildings for explosives before he enters, planes will not be permitted to fly below 7,500 feet in the areas he is touring, soldiers will reinforce local police units and metal detectors will screen visitors at all the outdoor sites.

The Swiss trip, named "Open to the Spirit of Christ," will focus attention on the pontiff's calls for further cooperation among Christians in Switzerland, where Protestant-Catholic tensions led to a brief civil war in the 19th century. Some tensions still exist today.

"The pope comes to a country where the division of faith makes itself felt to a specially painful degree," the Swiss Council of Bishops said in a pastoral letter last week.

"Pope John Paul II is aware of this burden of the past. All the more is the unity of Christians at his heart.... But he has never concealed that there remain great obstacles on this road," the bishops said.

John Paul visited Geneva for one day in 1982, at the invitation of the U.N. International Labor Organization. Pope Paul VI had made a similar visit in 1969.

But the last major papal tour of Switzerland occurred in 1418, when Pope Martin V came through the country on his way home from the Council of Constance in Germany, which ended the schism over the issue of papal succession.

Infrared galaxy interests scientists with new data

BALTIMORE (AP) — A distant galaxy glowing with the power of 2 trillion suns but only barely visible by telescope from Earth is a "most remarkable" celestial body because 99 percent of its energy is emitted as heat instead of light, scientists say.

The galaxy, known as ARP 220, is 300 million light years from Earth and was first discovered in 1966, according to scientists attending the annual convention of the American Astronomical Society here.

Although earlier Earth-bound observers had called the galaxy merely "interesting," new data provided by an orbiting infrared telescope launched in 1983 shows it is a rare formation, Dr. B. Thomas Soifer of the California Insitute of Technology told the convention Monday.

Most of ARP 220's energy output is visible only in the infrared part of the spectrum, and it is one of the most luminous infrared galaxies ever discovered, Soifer said. Scientists still aren't sure where the galaxy gets its tremendous power, he said.

"ARP 220 is a most remarkable infrared galaxy because its infrared emission is 100 times more than the Milky Way galaxy," said Dr. Frank J. Low of the University of Arizona. "These (infrared galaxies) are rare objects."

An infrared galaxy emits more energy as heat than as light. The Milky Way, which emits equal amounts of heat and light, is not considered an infrared galaxy.

Low and Soifer, along with seven other scientists, manage the Infrared Astronomical Satellite project, a joint effort by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Netherlands Space Agency and the United Kingdom's Science and Engineering Research Council.

The satellite was launched into a polar orbit by NASA in January 1983 and mapped 98 percent of the sky during a 10-month mission. During that time, the telescope observed about 20,000 galaxies, 2,000 of which are thought to be infrared.

Low said ARP 220 apparently consists of an extraordinarily bright central heat source, which produces the infrared brilliance by heating a surrounding dust cloud.

"Our galaxy is about equally bright, but this galaxy (ARP 220) is not putting out as much (visible) light as infrared heat," Low said.

The galaxy was originally listed in the Atlas of Peculiar Galaxies published in 1966.

"We're still searching for the source (of the heat energy)," Low said. Astronomers have speculated that the phenomenon of infrared galaxies could be caused by colliding galaxies or a black hole at the center of the galaxy, he added.

A black hole is a collapsed star that exerts a gravitational force so great that not even light can escape.

"If these galaxies have massive black holes, the in-falling matter could cause this" release of energy, Low said.

T.J.

The doctor said the boy has received innoculations against tetanus, diphtheria, whooping cough and polio. Such routine childhood shots were impossible earlier because T.J. lacked the ability to generate antibodies against disease.

Shearer said the youngster still faces a long medical regimen. There will be periodic blood tests for at least two years to monitor his immune system. And in six to 12 months T.J. will undergo reconstructive surgery to repair parts of his gum and mouth that have been destroyed by the disease.

T.J., who will be a year old on July 7, was born with SCIDs, but the immune deficiency was not detected until last December when he developed the infection. He was treated at hospitals near his parents' home in Caldwell, Idaho, and at a medical center in Salt Lake City where a diagnosis of SCID was made. The boy was then flown to Houston and Texas Children's, one of the few hospitals in the country that treats the rare condition.

Normal treatment for SCID is a transplant of a matching bone marrow, but no matching marrow was available for T.J. Instead, doctors removed bone marrow from his father and treated the marrow to kill all mature lymphocytes, called T Cells. Two and half ounces of this treated marrow was then injected into T.J.

Success was indicated when lymphocytes were found in T.J.'s blood that matched the genetic pattern of lymphocytes from his father. This showed that the transplant was now growing and producing disease-fighting cells.

Officials said treatment of T.J., who was kept in an isolation room at the hospital, cost $125,000 to $150,000. Part of the cost, said Shearer, is being paid for by the David Fund, a trust established in the name of the "Boy in the Bubble" who died Feb. 22 after spending all but a few days of his 12 years of life in a sterile plastic bubble. David's last name was never announced.

Stories of David's plight triggered an outpouring of donations. The trust was founded to help treat patients such as T.J.

About 100 children are born in the U.S. annually with SCID. Others develop it as a result of cancer or other diseases.

Shearer said T.J.'s disease is congential and there is a chance that a second son of his parents would also have the syndrome. The Davises, he said, have received genetic counseling. They have no other children.

Terrance and Linda Davis said they are making Houston their permanent home and do not now plan to move back to Caldwell, Idaho. Davis works in a warehouse here.

Pioneer 10 still 'phoning home'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four billion miles from Earth, the unmanned spacecraft Pioneer 10 is still sending back signals whose power is reduced by the vast expanses of space to a few thousand-trillionths of a watt.

One year ago, the spacecraft launched in March 1972 became the first man-made object to travel beyond the solar system.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration took note of Wednesday's anniversary, saying Pioneer 10's chief discovery may be that the magnetic field associated with the sun shields even the farthest reaches of the solar system from most cosmic ray particles.

Long behind it is Pioneer's 21-month mission to Jupiter.

It was the first spacecraft to cross the asteroid belt, fly by Jupiter, chart the largest planet's intense radiation belts and measure the mass and density of the four biggest among Jupiter's 13 moons.

Its course will carry it next past Barnard's Star, one of the sun's closest neighbors, in 3.8 light years — 10,507 years. In 32,000 years, it should drift by another star, Ross 248.

Barring celestial mishap, Pioneer 10 should just keep on drifting, scientists say, still on its path 5 billion years from now when the sun becomes a red giant and engulfs the Earth.

NASA says Pioneer 10 has transmitted more than 126 million bits of scientific data.

Dallas attorneys show real interest in drunken drivers

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Getting drunken drivers off the road and into recovery programs has become the goal of two Dallas attorneys, themselves recovering alcoholics.

John V. McShane, 40, and Mike Wilson, 39, are practicing what they call "recovery defense."

The lawyers concentrate their practice primarily on alcohol- and drug-related cases stemming from their own experiences. They not only help their clients with legal problems, but lend assistance with the root causes of alcoholism.

"I had the disease, but I never went to jail," McShane said. "I drove drunk hundreds of times. I actually had three different accidents when I was intoxicated."

But the problem, McShane believes, is not the fact that a large number of people drive while intoxicated but "thatwe have at least 20 million untreated alcoholics in this country."

Wilson was a prosecutor with the Dallas County district attorney's office for more than seven years.

"I never understood what's wrong with sending these (DWI offenders) to the penitentiary. The answer is that punishing them for being sick is something everyone ought to recognize as not being right," Wilson said.

The two lawyers put their efforts on clients who exhibit signs of chronic alcoholism, working to convince them they have a problem and to seek treatment.

The treatment encouraged by McShane and Wilson begins with a stay of at least 28 days in an in-patient residential facility. Then comes periodic return visits to the treatment center for counseling, group therapy and participation in support organizations like Alcoholics Anonymous.

The treatment is completed before the client appears in court. McShane and Wilson said the task there is to convince a judge or jury of the nature of the illness, its symptoms, and then present a defendant who has recovered.

Mattox files antitrust suit against four saltwater disposal companies

Jim Mattox

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox has filed a $4.7 million antitrust lawsuit against four companies and five individuals in the saltwater disposal business, and one of the defendants says he has no idea what it's all about.

Mattox said Monday the suit marks the first time in Texas history that an antitrust suit has been filed under Texas law alleging monopolization. He said it also represents one of the first unlawful merger or acquisition cases brought by the state.

The lawsuit, filed in state district court in Austin, names as corporate defendants the Herd Corp., Bryan; SWD Inc., identified as a wholly owned subsidiary of Herd, also at Bryan; Cen-Tex Salt Water Disposal Co., Marshall; and Triple J Investments Inc., Longview.

Mattox said the corporate defendants are in the saltwater disposal business in Burleson County, near Bryan. Saltwater waste is derived from drilling for oil and gas and is disposed of after being separated from the oil and gas.

Individuals named are Marvin Herd and Cliff Ware of Bryan, Grady Staggers of Marshall, John Thomas of Shreveport, La., and Joe Zeutzius III of Victoria.

Told the suit involved an alleged monoply in the Burleson County area, Herd said, "There are 19 wells in the area, and I have three or four. That's a monopoly?"

When Herd learned that the suit was for $4.7 million, he said, "You're kidding. They're out of their cotton-picking mind. They're crazy, absolutely crazy. I can't believe he (Mattox) would do that. I think they should be more careful about what they do before they do something like this."

Mattox's suit alleges that Herd Corp. and SWD has acquired the share capital or assets of Triple J in violation of the 1983 Texas Free Enterprise Act.

It alleges that Herd Corp., SWD, Triple J, Marvin Herd, Ware and Thomas have monopolized the saltwater disposal business in Burleson County and the surrounding area.

The lawsuit says those defendants combined their assets and operations and entered into agreements with vacuum services companies to boycott disposal well companies that refused to combine their assets with those of the defendants. The suit says the same defendants entered into contracts with disposal well companies to boycott saltwater vacuum service companies that refused to enter into exclusive contracts with the defendants.

The suit also alleges a price-fixing conspiracy among defendants.

"Under the Reagan administration in Washington, antitrust enforcement has become increasingly lax at the federal level," Mattox said. "I intend to make sure that Texas does not become a haven for those who would replace our free enterprise system with unfair and anticompetitive business practices."

Asked Herd, "How fast can you countersue?"

'Criminal activity' not evident in death

SAVOY (AP) — An initial investigation into the nursing home death of an elderly woman who died after drinking cleaning fluid — thought to be cranberry juice — shows "no evidence now of criminal activity," officials said.

Dorie Emerson, 83, died Saturday, less than 24 hours after she was spoon-fed two glasses of cleaning solvent with dinner Friday night at the nursing home in Savoy, 65 miles north of Dallas, officials said.

"This may be an accident, or an intent on somebody's part to do bodily harm on an individual," said Bob Elrod, a Texas Department of Health official in Austin monitoring the investigation.

"We do not rule out anything until all facts are in and the results have been reviewed by the appropriate people," said Elrod, administrator of program integrity for the health department.

Fannin County Attorney Dan Meehan said medical examiners in Dallas could have toxicology tests completed by Wednesday.

"There's no evidence now of criminal activity, but I'm not going to close out the investigation until we have a cause of death," Meehan said.

State health officials began conducting interviews and examining records Monday at the Savoy Nursing Home, Elrod said. Six other residents besides Mrs. Emerson reportedly drank the liquid, which nursing home officials say was mistaken for cranberry juice.

Emma Zuver, 57, remained in satisfactory condition at a Denison hospital with second-degree burns to her mouth and throat. A spokeswoman for Texhoma Medical Center said officials were trying to identify the composition of the liquid the woman ingested.

Nursing home administrator Joan Pierce said that other patients suffered no difficulties after drinking the fluid and did not require hospitalization.

She said kitchen remodeling had been "chaotic" and that cranberry juice may have been mixed up with chemicals used by a painting crew. She declined to identify the liquid but called it a "non-toxic, non-corrosive, nonflammable cleaning solution."

An official of Dallas-based Chemco Chemical Co., however, said the liquid is a corrosive alkaline-based chemical.

"If it was taken internally, nondiluted, it could do that (cause burns)," said the company official, who did not want his name used. "If you dilute it down, it's as safe as it could be."

Elrod said that a registered nurse and a health facilities specialist were checking to see if anyone at the home witnessed the incident. He said that the state may withhold the nursing home's Medicaid payments until the investigation is over.

James Roberts, vice president of operations for Savoy Nursing Homes Inc., said an internal investigation showed the death was an "unfortunate accident."

A Dallas County medical examiner's spokesman said a ruling has not been issued in Mrs. Emerson's autopsy. Results of pending "toxicological and microscopic" tests might not be available for several weeks, said Don Kirby, a field agent.

Elrod said a written report could be prepared as early as today. He said the health department will share the information it gathers with Fannin County authorities.

Roberts said the home was cooperating with visiting representatives of the health department's Arlington office. He said health department regulations require nursing homes to keep cleaning substances away from food preparation areas.

Fannin County sheriff's Deputy Jack Robinson said his investigation indicated the poisonings were accidental.

I lease Ol' Reliable so I can relax about repairs.

"The longer I keep this trusty AT&T phone, the smarter I think it is to lease."

Low monthly cost

"For all the great service it gives me, I just pay a little bit every month. And leasing gives me choices. Suppose I redecorated the kitchen and wanted a different color or model. I can swap Ol' Reliable for another color or upgrade to the popular Trimline® or Princess® phones."

Repairs at no extra charge

"But I think I'll keep this one. It's taken its share of tumbles and has come up ringing every time. But that's what's so great about a lease. If it ever needed repair, AT&T takes care of it at no extra charge. All I do is call their toll-free number or take it to one of their Phone Centers."

Leasing means relaxing

"The last thing I want to worry about are my telephones. So I'm sticking with AT&T quality and I'm sticking with my leased phones. That way I can relax!"

Shopper never pays full price

Shirley Shepherd

WACO (AP) — One of the most frightening things Shirley Shepherd can imagine is having to pay full price for something.

But she rarely has to do that.

If she needs a baseball cap, she just sends in UPC (Universal Price Code) labels off 20 cans of spaghetti and meatballs and gets a free cap.

Running low on ice tea? She uses a 50-cent coupon on double-coupon day and gets a family-size box of tea bags for 79 cents.

"I don't buy anything without a coupon, and I never pay more than half price for my groceries," said Ms. Shepherd. "I went shopping at a Temple grocery store and bought $230 worth of groceries for $10. I felt so good about myself."

Ms. Shepherd is a coupon fanatic who prefers to call herself a smart shopper. Over the past seven years, she has compiled an intricate system of filing and cross referencing coupons and refund forms, and she has turned her garage into a library of neatly categorized empty packages and boxes.

Among her necessary equipment is a big purse. "I have to have a big purse. I'll be walking down the street and I might have to stop and pick up a candy wrapper or something — anything that might have a refund on it."

She visits area stores just to take refund slips, and she skims her seven or eight monthly refund guides to check for products that have refunds offers. She mails between 50 and 100 completed forms for cash refunds each week.

"So many people don't use them, and they don't know what they're throwing away. They really, really don't," said Ms. Shepherd, who also spends time raising her 7-year-old twins. "It would be such a good way for low-income people or old people to save money."

But for Ms. Shepherd, her coupon operation has transcended simple financial need. Although it helps pay the bills, it also is an intense hobby.

It takes most of the time she has left after working in the McGregor High School cafeteria. She spends about 30 hours a week in her kitchen clipping new coupons and purging her kitchen table-top files of expired coupons.

"It's just exciting. It's wonderful," she said, grinning devilishly and clinching her fists, as she tends to do when she talks couponing.

"I'd rather be doing this than going out to the lake and swimming or skiing. Oh, every once and a while I'll break away and go fishing — I love fishing."

Mrs. Shepherd, a McGregor native who returned from Gatesville four years ago, said she has always used "cents off" coupons, but it took a thrifty aunt to get her serious about having fun with coupons.

"I didn't care about it before," Ms. Shepherd said. "I said she was crazy. I laughed at her. A lot of the refunds she had I already had, but I'd never gotten around to sending them in.

"She said, 'If you've got the refunds send them in.' I did, and when the money came back, I was tickled. That's what got me started."

Ms. Shepherd shops almost exclusively at stores that have "double-coupon" days, when each coupon is worth double its face value. Often a double value makes the coupon worth more than the item itself, meaning the shopper actually makes money on the purchase.

One of Mrs. Shepherd's best killings came recently during the monthly double value day at a store in McGregor. Armed with a colorful array of coupons, she escaped with $185 worth of groceries for free — and she even earned $27.

Impressed by her own prowess at thriftiness, and wanting to learn more, she began attending coupon-swapping conventions this year. The largest one she went to was the Houston National Refunders convention in April.

"We got there early, but we put a sign up on our door that said, 'Refunders, Want to Trade? Knock.' We had ladies beating our door down," Ms. Shepherd said. "It was non-stop trading for 30 hours after that."

'Miss Republican' inspires other blacks to be members of GOP

DALLAS (AP) — When Vivian T. Starks began her GOP career back in the 1930s, the only other black Republicans in Dallas were her classmate and an old friend of her father's.

But even though the affiliation was unpopular in the black community, her staunch Republican upbringing had taught her that party loyalty was something to defend.

"I've always fought and I am still fighting," said Mrs. Starks, a member of the Dallas Black Republican Council.

Her perseverance over the years has paid off and this summer she will be honored as a member of the host committee for the Republican National Convention.

She calls herself "Miss Republican," a title she said she has earned, especially in Dallas, by being a loyal Republican.

"I was born into a Republican family," Mrs. Starks told The Dallas Times Herald. "It has to do with my bringing up to have this kind of love for the party."

She said her father, Edmond W. Thomas, instilled that party loyalty in his 13 children.

"We in our family were never ashamed to say we were Republicans," she said. "We knew nothing but to vote and vote the Republican ticket."

Mrs. Starks has inspired members of the black community like south Dallas businessman, Hudson Griffin, who has enlisted his neighbors to help in the GOP.

"She's one of the mainstays because she will speak out," said Griffin, owner of a dry-cleaning business.

"Yes, I speak out as Vivian Starks thinks," she said. "Sometimes I'm not right, but I don't compromise until I'm proven wrong."

Mrs. Starks said she still had some complaints with the GOP.

"It should be more open to women in executive positions — local, state and national — and for the blacks, too," she said.

Women will be appointed to executive government positions in the future, she predicted.

"But I want them (women) to get them (positions) not because they are in the minority but because they are qualified for these positions," she said.

Doggett has enough votes to be named winner, spokesman says

AUSTIN (AP) — The recount of the Democratic U.S. Senate runoff has given Lloyd Doggett a 1,015-vote lead so far and a spokesman for the state senator says that might be enough to guarantee victory.

"I think we are in a very strong position," said Paul Begala. "Each county shows little fluctuation. I don't think there could be enough error out there to switch the results."

Doggett's June 2 win by an apparent 467-vote margin was challenged by U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock, the top vote-getter in the May 5 primary. Hance requested and paid for a recount that continued today.

Begala said Doggett led by 1,015 after several counties reported Monday. Craig Tounget, a Hance spokesman, said the Doggett lead was only about 800, but he agreed the margin has been constant for several days.

"There's been no change to speak of," Tounget said Monday. "We picked up 90 earlier today but we lost it again I think."

The Doggett lead was about 800 votes Monday, according to Tounget.

Reports on the county-by-county recount are being monitored by the two campaigns. Democratic Party officials will announce no numbers until the recount is completed.

Lloyd Doggett

Camille Berger, party primary director, said the final recounts are set for Wednesday.

"We'll be going to the state convention with a U.S. Senate nominee," she said.

The State Democratic Convention opens Friday in Houston. Results of the June 2 runoff will be certified by party officials on Thursday.

Recounts have been completed in the urban counties. The Hance camp is now hoping the re-check will discover errors in the smaller counties.

Hance, a conservative, was the top vote-getter in the May 5 primary. Doggett, a liberal, ran second, keeping former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger of New Braunfels out of the runoff.

Hance gave the Texas Democratic Party $28,000 to begin the recount. Party officials have estimated that it could cost the candidate between $50,000 and $70,000 to recount the ballots in all 254 counties as Hance requested.

Early returns on June 2 gave Hance a substantial lead, but as the urban counties reported Doggett pulled even and built the slim margin that apparently gave him the nomination to face Republican U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station in November.

The November winner will replace GOP Sen. John Tower, who is retiring after 23 years in the Senate.

Teen's parents must testify

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge has granted immunity from prosecution to the parents of a teen-ager charged with killing a mail carrier, which will force them to testify before a grand jury, officials said.

David Port, 17, is free on $20,000 bond after being charged with murder in the slaying of Debora Sue Schatz, 23.

Port, a high school junior, is accused of killing Ms. Schatz Thursday as she was delivering mail. Her body was found Saturday in an isolated wooded area in north Houston.

State District Judge William Hatten granted immunity from prosecution to the teen-ager's parents, Bernard and Odette Port, after they cited their Fifth Amendment rights and refused to answer the grand jury's questions.

Prosecutors Brad Beers and Jim Lavine refused to disclose why the parents were subpoenaed or to tell what occurred. Grand jury hearings are secret.

Immunity was granted over the objections of the Ports' lawyer, Jan Fox, who told Hatten that immunity from state prosecution might not guarantee immunity against federal prosecution.

Man sentenced for killing wife

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who admitted killing and beheading his wife after a week of anonymous phone calls to police has been sentenced to a life prison term.

Johnny Grant Jr., 31, was also fined $10,000 Monday for the Oct. 19 murder of Connie Grant, 17.

The couple had been married about three months. A few days after the killing, Grant called police and anonymously gave information about a body in a field, witnesses said.

In subsequent calls, he identified himself and said dogs were playing with a human head in a field near his apartment.

After Grant led police to his wife's body in the field, he admitted the slaying, according to authorities.

In one statement to police, Grant said he accidentally shot his wife. In another statement, he said he shot her after an argument about his two young children from his previous marriage.

Police said Grant told them that after he left his wife's body in the field, he returned to it and detached the head to hide evidence of gun shot wounds. The victim's head was recovered from the San Jacinto River, where Grant said he had dumped it.

Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado greets Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York, chairman of the Democratic Platform Committee, before the panel opened a hearing Monday in Washington. The presidential contender, leadoff witness for two days of hearings, said the party would not deserve to win the White House if its only campaign theme was reversing the Reagan administration budget cuts.

Mondale expected to dominate platform hearings; Hart, Jackson make appeals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson have appealed to Democratic platform writers to produce a document of new directions, but drafting sessions are expected to be dominated by supporters of Walter F. Mondale.

The party's platform committee concludes two months of public hearings today, then gets down to actually framing the proposed platform in a four-day session beginning Sunday.

The 15-member drafting committee will be composed of Mondale, Hart and Jackson supporters in roughly the same ratio in which the three have won delegates.

At latest count, Mondale has 1,988 delegates — more than enough for a first-ballot victory at the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco next month — to 1,228 for Hart and 372 for Jackson.

Mondale didn't appear before the panel; he is continuing his vacation on Long Island.

Hart and Jackson, in back-to-back appearances, gave roughly the same message on Monday to the platform committee.

Hart urged the panel to adopt "new departures."

"If we simply think in terms of our own party's past, we will only repeat our own failures, we will alienate our own voters and we will doom our country as well as our party to continued decline," Hart said.

Jackson told the platform drafters: "Our basic thrust at the convention must go to the issue of not just a new president but a new direction. To have more of the same will not be enough."

Hart, who in the primary campaigns called Mondale a politician of the past, did not mention the former vice president in his testimony, but told the panel: "In 1984, above all years, the Democratic Party must not be a party beholden to old arrangements."

Although party officials had sought to avoid such a confrontation, the drafting sessions that begin Sunday are likely to echo those of 1980, when delegates loyal to President Carter clashed with those backing policies of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

"At least this year, the different sides are talking to each other," said Gene Russell, a spokesman for the Democratic National Committee.

Russell said party officials still have not decided whether the drafting sessions should be held behind closed doors — as they were in 1980 — or opened to the press and public.

At today's session, two contenders who were early dropouts from the 1984 Democratic presidential races — George McGovern of South Dakota and Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio — were scheduled to testify.

In prepared testimony, McGovern focused on defense and national security issues, calling upon the party to "offer a clear alternative to Mr. Reagan's reckless and dangerous acceleration of the arms race and militarization of our foreign policy." McGovern urged an immediate 25 percent reduction in military spending.

Hart made it clear he hasn't foresaken his quest for the White House, frequently using phrases such as "if elected" and "under a Hart administration" in describing actions he would take.

However, Hart also indicated he would not challenge Mondale's delegates, saying, "It is obviously getting very late in the game to substantially rewrite the rules under which it was played."

Mondale calls on Udall for help

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Morris K. Udall stood before the Democratic National Convention and basked in the cheering of the crowd about to pick a presidential candidate. "If this goes on much longer," he said, "I just might accept the nomination."

He did not, and he knew in advance he wouldn't. The year was 1976 and Jimmy Carter already had clinched the nomination.

Udall gracefully acceped defeat and helped unite the party for Carter's successful general election campaign in the fall.

Eight years later, Udall is being asked to serve as mediator between another apparent winner, Walter F. Mondale, and another apparent loser, Gary Hart.

Democratic sources say it was Mondale who called Udall last week and sought his help in forging unity after a long, hard-fought primary campaign. Mondale has enough delegates to win the nomination next month, and although Hart insists he will stay in the race and try to woo uncommitted delegates.

Kathy Bushkin, Hart's press secretary, said the Colorado senator is not using Udall as a model for his own decisions over the next six weeks — he doesn't intend to publicly concede the nomination, for example.

But judging from Hart's own comments, he also has no plans to wage the type of do-or-die convention floor battles that Ronald Reagan led in 1976 at the Republican National Convention, or that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., pursued four years later at the Democratic convention.

In both cases, the divided convention led to a losing general election campaign.

One Democratic aide, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said Hart can use the period between now and the convention to "establish himself as a permanent fixture in the leadership of the party."

But Hart's aides point out the obvious differences between the Colorado senator's 1984 campaign and the one Udall ran eight years ago.

For one thing, Udall failed to win a single primary. Hart won 12 to Mondale's 10.

Udall went to the convention in New York with roughly 350 delegates out of more than 3,000 at the convention. Hart has over 1,200 delegates out of a total of 3,933, and this year, unlike in the past, the delegates are not bound to support any specific candidate.

Baptist admits to keeping 'heresy file'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Baptist conservative leader Paige Patterson says that he has a "heresy file" on professors, pastors and others who he believes vary from traditional Baptist beliefs.

Patterson, president of the Criswell Center for Biblical Studies in Dallas, said the file includes tapes, letters, books, magazines, research papers, news stories and other items, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today.

"We've kept all that against the day when the Southern Baptist Convention decides to say, 'Let's really look at the evidence,'" said Patterson, who is in Kansas City for the Southern Baptist Convention opening today.

Patterson said he began gathering materials before the current five-year theological power struggle broke out between fundamentalists and more liberal members.

Patterson, one of the conservative leaders who announced an effort in 1979 to rid the SBC of liberal tendencies, said he hopes the files will only be used for history and research "but they certainly could be used otherwise."

The Rev. Charles Wade, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Arlington, Texas, said theological orthodoxy is important, but that gathering a file of so-called heretical materials is going too far.

Water sense

An old lament is that while everybody talks about the weather, nobody does anything about it.

In the case of the weather, that course of action is understandable. To date, weather modification techniques — while showing a degree of sophistication — have found only minimal acceptance with the public.

The situation is different with a finite resource — like the water of the vast Ogallala Aquifer, the underground reservoir stretching from below Midland to South Dakota. For decades the aquifer has been supplying water for the vital farming region in America's heartland. Now it's threatened because the water in the sand and gravel beds of the Ogallala is slowly being depleted.

Unlike the adage of the weather, there is something that can be done about the dwindling level of water in the Ogallala. For a number of years suggestions of ways to reduce depletion of the aquifer's waters have been studied. The concern is justifiable. If the aquifer is depleted, it won't only mean the end of America's rich farming region; it also could spell economic catastrope and hunger for thousands of Americans.

Among options being studied are ways to recharge the aquifer and various farming practices that can be adopted in order to maximize water used in irrigation while minimizing evaporation. That was all a part of the discussion in the Ogallala Aquifer Symposium II held in Lubbock recently. That's a necessary discussion because that water needs to last as long as possible. Natural recharge of the aquifer is minimal, scientists say. Others say the aquifer could be mostly depleted by the end of this century.

It's comforting to know, then, that the future of the aquifer is a topic of concern for farmers and scientists alike. It needs to be a topic of concern for a lot of other Americans, too — namely all those individuals responsible for depleting the aquifer.

Certainly the water of the aquifer should be used. Without it, the volume of crops now produced simply couldn't be grown. But extending the life of the aquifer by avoiding wasteful uses of the water is an essentiality.

The future of the Ogallala is the future of a lot of Texans and other Americans. To simply go on draining its water without giving a thought to the future is foolish.

Conservation of the Ogallala's water is of utmost importance. We may not be able to make it rain every time we need the moisture, but we certainly can use the Ogallala's water resources wisely and conservatively.

Another View:

West Bank blindness

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and other leading officials have made welcome and forthright (if overdue) statements condemning lawless actions against Arabs by Jewish settlers in the occupied West Bank. And more than two dozen Israelis recently were indicted on charges relating to terrorism against West Bank Arabs. Unfortunately, few people in the Israeli government are questioning the wisdom of the settlement policy itself.

The West Bank and the Gaza district were seized by Israel in the 1967 war with the Arabs and have been occupied since then. In violation of international law, Israel has moved civilians into both regions and (thanks partly to U.S. foreign aid) has subsidized settlements there. The government intends eventually to incorporate both occupied territories into Israel's proper.

Even if that were not illegal, it would be foolishly dangerous — for Israel. For one thing, the West Bank and Gaza are home to more than 1.2 million Arabs, who have one of the highest birth rates in the world. Incorporating them into Israel would change, perhaps fundamentally, the nature of the Jewish state. It has been estimated that by the year 2000, Jews will be a minority in their own country if the West Bank and Gaza are annexed. In other words, Israel would no longer exist as a Jewish state.

Many Palestinians and Jordanians fear that Israel intends to defuse the so-called Arab population bomb by gradually expelling unwanted Palestinians. If such a policy exists (Israel denies that it does), its economic, political and moral costs would be enormous.

Israeli elections are scheduled for July 23. The opposition Labor Party says it is willing to divide the West Bank with Jordan, retaining only that territory necessary for Israel's security.

But even if Labor comes to power (it is ahead in the polls), it might not be able to work out a happy division of the West Bank. The hawks in the party might balk. And even if they don't, the ever-timid Jordanians, to say nothing of less moderate Arabs, might not be willing to cut a deal.

In spite of those difficulties, Labor is right on its West Bank policy. Israel must be willing to concede territory in exchange for the acceptance and security long sought and deserved from the Arabs. Labor used to have a slogan that summed it up well: "A piece of land for a piece of peace."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 12, the 164th day of 1984. There are 202 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 12, 1776, the state of Virginia adopted a Bill of Rights — the first colonial legislature to do so.

On this date:

In 1775, the American sloop "Amity" captured the British schooner "Margaretta" in the first naval engagement of the American Revolution.

In 1838, the Iowa Territory was organized.

In 1917, the Secret Service extended its protection of the president to his family as well.

In 1939, the Baseball Hall of Fame was established in Cooperstown, N.Y.

In 1963, Mississippi civil rights leader Medgar Evers was shot to death near his home.

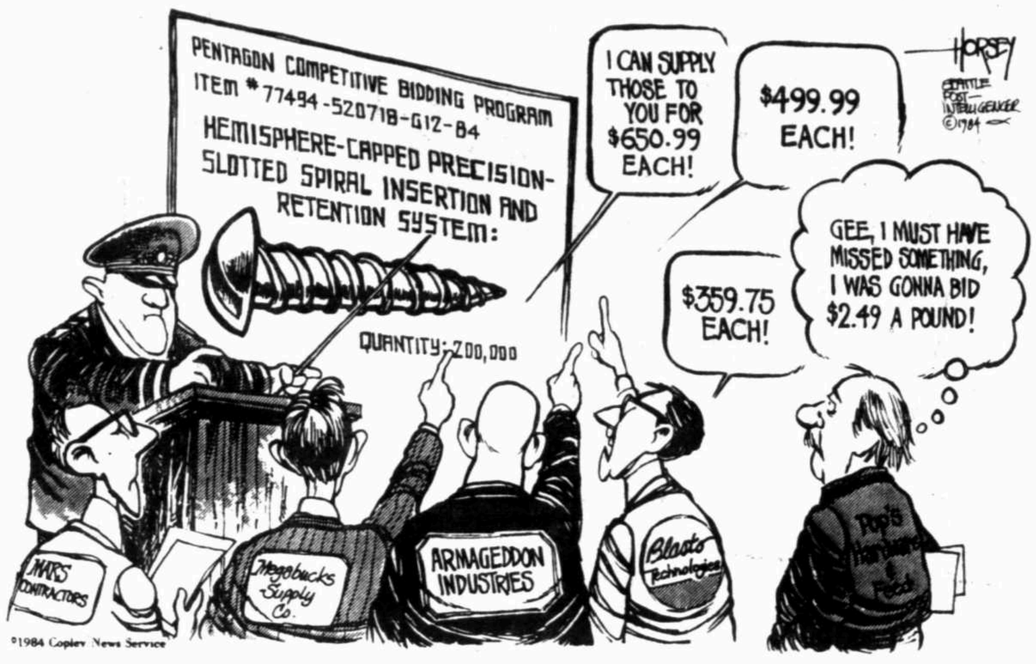

Ten years ago: Crowds of cheering Egyptians greeted President Richard M. Nixon on the first stop of his tour of the Middle East.

Five years ago: A 26-year-old cyclist, Bryan Allen, flew the man-powered aircraft "Gossamer Albatross" across the English Channel.

One year ago: Actress Norma Shearer died.

Today's birthdays: Banker David Rockefeller is 69. Vice President George Bush is 60. Singer Vic Damone is 56. Actor-singer Jim Nabors is 52.

JACK ANDERSON

Commerce okays parts sales

WASHINGTON — While Iran and Iraq battle over a parched piece of desert, the United States is making plans to defend the Persian Gulf, and the Soviet Union is massing troops near the Iranian border. The world nervously awaits the day of confrontation.

Jack Anderson

For four years, the Iran-Iraq conflict wore acrimoniously on, without either side crossing the invisible tripwire. Then the Iraqis attacked oil tankers in Iranian waters; the Iranians retaliated against tankers elsewhere in the Persian Gulf; the Reagan administration quietly chose sides and ordered a pro-Iraqi "tilt"; and the Soviets began making menacing moves along the Iranian border.

Cables have now gone out from the State Department to U.S. allies around the world, urging them to stop shipping military supplies to Iran. But the message apparently hasn't reached the Commerce Department only eight blocks across town.

The department is staffed with people whose main purpose in life is to promote trade — the tilt toward Iraq, the minacious Soviets and the Ayatollah Khomeini notwithstanding. So the Commerce Department has blithely continued approving sales to Iran.

Strictly speaking, only non-military items have been licensed for shipment. But the Iranians have become adept at transforming plowshares into swords. They have neatly adapted U.S. equipment to military use.

Sources with access to lists of the approved exports told my associate Lucette Lagnado that they include such critical items as spare parts for American-made Boeing 707s. The planes are remnants of happier days when America and Iran were bosom allies. Without replacement parts, most of the planes would be grounded.

As late as 1982, some sales were made directly to the Iranian air force and navy. But for appearances' sake, the spare parts lately have gone to the Iranian national airline. Of course, the 707s are being used as military transports.

MALIGNED MOTHERS: I wrote a Mother's Day column last month defending mothers who would rather raise their children than spend eight hours a day in an office. The media has been portraying these women as if they are deprived or, worse, unfit for a career.

As a typical example, I cited a CBS News report which implied that child rearing isn't chic and that homemaking is a throwback to less enlightened times. Unhappily, my column has had no perceptible effect on the television networks; ABC News is the latest to malign mothers at home.

I have been getting an earful on this subject from my daughter, Cheri Loveless, who is also the mother of five of my grandchildren. As an unpaid volunteer, she helped form a mother's anti-defamation league called "Mothers at Home."

They hold no resentment for mothers who prefer office jobs; they understand that many women must work to put food on the table; they believe women should receive equal pay for equal work. But these mothers also believe that millions of intelligent, competent women are staying home, not because they're unqualified for careers but because they find it more challenging to raise children.

So I was dismayed that ABC News scarcely mentioned the largest women's profession of all — homemakers — in a series on "Women in the '80s." But my daughter Cheri is more articulate on this subject than I am. Here's what she wrote to ABC:

"I know you could not have covered every alternative available to women in a program that totaled less than one hour of air time; however, because the title implied a representative sampling of women, it was insulting to hear motherhood discussed only in passing and mostly by those who are not yet mothers.

"Whether or not it was intended, it clearly gave the message that mothering is no longer an option that smart women are choosing. In fact, it gave the impression that no one is doing it at all anymore unless they are working it into their career plans ....

"I am more and more coming to realize that women in general (whether in the marketplace or at home) do not identify with the various stereotypes presented by the media. It is time the media faced up to this and tried to present an accurate picture."

EVANS & NOVAK

Persian Gulf opportunity arises

WASHINGTON — In a sudden change of fortune in the Persian Gulf war, little Iraq has checkmated giant Iran — offering President Reagan an opportunity to seize the initiative against Moscow by establishing a Saudi-Iraqi-American condominium blunting the fanatical thrust of the Ayatollah Khomeini.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Top administration officials privately report that Iraq has accomplished the seemingly impossible: holding off half a million Iranians, mostly revolutionary guards, massed for many weeks north of Basra. Even if the long-expected attack starts over the presumed opposition of Iran's regular military leadership, predictions here are that it will fail. That would end the ayatollah's exotic vision of sweeping Islam with anti-Western Shiite Moslem passions designed to engulf Israel and the entire Arab world.

That means Khomeini is losing his dangerous gamble to run Uncle Sam out of the Middle East. U.S. strategic cooperation with Saudi Arabia in the air war, part of unusually adept American tactics the past month, is paying big dividends. Despite all its help for Iraq, the Soviet Union has been unable to get any payoff from Baghdad — and will not any time soon.

Reagan's advisers will not predict how long conditions will remain ripe or whether the president will make the right moves, but they are pressing him to move closer to Baghdad — starting with resumption of diplomatic relations. Beyond that is the linking of Iraq's and Saudi Arabia's military power, under U.S. sponsorship, to block Khomeini. To grasp that opportunity, he will have to overcome antipathy for Iraq's dictatorial, fervently anti-Zionist regime.

With Iran's fanatical armies stalled on the edges of the vast Majnoon marshes north of the Gulf city of Basra, Iraq's forces have been mightily strengthened. Soviet late-model tanks and medium-range ground-to-ground missiles will soon be followed by 30-odd French Mirage F-1s, equipped to fire the dread Exocet missile into tankers picking up Iranian oil.

Desperately, but without success, Iran is scouring the world for new arms — any place, in any amount. The sign of Iranian desperation was the secret presence of an Iranian emissary in unfriendly Moscow last week, seeking help from a superpower unlikely to give it.

Iran's dwindling air force, the backbone of which is aging F-4s, learned for the first time last week that it is no match for Saudi Arabia's F-15s, aided by U.S.-manned AWACS radar planes. Oil shipments from Iran to Western buyers and Japan are steadily decreasing under tanker kills by Iraqi aircraft.

Sensing the fact that Iraq is gaining the upper hand, the Soviet Union is attempting a hat trick of its own: break the compact between Syria and Iran; harmonize Syria and Iraq, now implacable enemies, and link a Syria-Iraq alliance to the PLO in a new anti-Israel, anti-American rejectionist bloc. That would deal Moscow its strongest Mideast hand in history.

This is far more unlikely a combination than the goal beckoning Ronald Reagan. Indeed, success of the Kremlin's ambitious plan to ride to power on the backs of Syria, Iraq and the PLO all the way to the borders of Israel seems possible only with unwitting American help: U.S. refusal to deal with Iraq as the formidable power it is becoming.

Evidence of change in Iraq's foreign policy is under close watch here. Baghdad has made new overtures for membership in the Saudi-dominated Gulf Cooperation Council. It has strengthened notoriously bad relations with Egypt, the most powerful Arab ally of the U.S. President Saddam Hussein, the Iraqi strongman, has told foreigners that Reagan stands higher in Iraqi opinion than any recent predecessor. He took major note of Reagan's strong pro-Iraq tilt in his press conference with foreign reporters prior to the London summit.

But Reagan's tilt is not appreciated on Capitol Hill mainly because of apprehension it will hurt Israel, partly out of concern over Iraq's rising power. "A battle-tested Iraq with 27 trained and equipped divisions and growing air force — that is an imposing force," a high administration official told us.

The stakes are high for Reagan and the United States. To walk away from possible new ties to a powerful Iraq that wants them gives the initiative to the Soviet Union. That is why some of the president's top advisers pray that he will cash in on the dramatic changes in the bloody Gulf war before Moscow does.

Soviets planning to win war

I hope we do not have a nuclear war. The same institutions which planned the Bay of Pigs, the Iranian rescue mission and the Vietnam War would be in charge of our side of it. I think they would lose.

Charley Reese

The Defense Department is bloated with civilians. They ought to fire every one of them except for 10 or 15. If Gen. George Marshall could fight a global war with 12 million people under arms with a staff of less than 50 or so civilians I do not see why Caspar Weinberger needs 87,000 civilians to wage peace. That's 87,000 plus in the office of the Secretary of Defense alone. There are more scattered around in other areas of the Defense Departent.

A good argument can be made that as the bureaucracy has grown the defense of the United States has become simultaneously more expensive and more inept.

Defense is a military business and it ought to be left to the military with the chief of staff reporting directly to the President and civilians, like the secretary of defense confined to housekeeping and politicking the Congress.

I don't wish to alarm you but we don't have a strategy for fighting and surviving a nuclear war, much less winning one. As an aside to the anti-nuclear nuts who claim no one can win a nuclear war, you don't know what you're talking about.

Our strategy, if you can call it that, is to deter a nuclear war. Our deterrence used to be based on the certainty of our ability to inflict unacceptable losses on the Soviet Union even after absorbing a first strike. Right now our deterrence is based on the Soviet Union's uncertainty about how much damage we could cause. There's a huge difference.

The difference is the result o the erosion of our nuclear capability and of the increase in the Soviet nuclear capability and strategic defenses.

If you think a strategy for fighting and surviving a nuclear war is unnecessary, let me pose a couple of questions. What if deterrence fails? Two options: surrender or war. What if there is a nuclear war and you don't happen to be at any of the ground zeros? What do you plan to do? Shoot your kids? Watch them starve? Watch them die of radiation sickness?

Sensible governments like Switzerland and Sweden and especially the Soviet Union have thought of those questions and taken steps to prepare for nuclear war.

The United States, thanks to an irresponsible government and nuclear know-nothings, is totally unprepared. Given such a state of unpreparedness, you would think the Congress would at last beef up our deterrence but they are loathe to do even that.

If you think I am being harsh in my judgments you are correct. I am harsh, because the consequences of government blundering are harsh. Life in the real world is not directed by Steven Spielberg. This little dream world we're living in could turn to ash in a matter of seconds.

The Soviets have a strategy, by the way, which was laid out in a military textbook, "Soviet Military Strategy," by Marshall V.D. Sokolovskiy in 1962. The components of the strategy can be summarized thus: (1) take the nuclear offensive; (2) achieve surprise; (3) make a decisive first strike; (4) achieve total defeat with no negotiations; (5) strategic defense must be equal in importance to strategic offense; (6) planning is to be done on a worst case scenario; (7) prepration for nuclear war is the first priority of the entire state; and (8) strategic deception is critical.

Everything the Soviet Union has done since 1962 and is doing today fits precisely into those eight components. If you understand this you can understand why arms control talks are not only useless but insane. You can also understand why the Soviets are so secretive and why their propaganda arms put so much emphasis on preventing the United States from rebuilding its defense forces.

None of this means the Soviet Union wants a nuclear war but it does mean that if one comes, they intend to win it. For a more academic discussion of these issues I refer you to an excellent article by Joseph D. Douglass Jr., scientific advisor to the IRT Corp., in the Fall 1983 issue of "Orbis."

In the meantime you might listen to the presidential candidates to see how what they are saying stacks up against the known facts of Soviet nuclear strategy.

Funds allocated to provide surgery

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Gov. James Thompson says he will allocate $3 million to provide last-resort grants for people who need life-saving surgery if the state Senate approves the measure.

The bill, which has been approved by the House, was introduced by Rep. Judy Baar Topinka after one of her constituents, Lisa Bahnks, said her insurance would not pay for a liver transplant because the surgery was considered experimental. Ms. Bahnks received the transplant after state officials intervened with the insurance company, but died six months later.

If approved, the bill would permit a state grant of up to $200,000 to people who cannot find a funding source and would bar insurance companies from refusing to pay for such operations.

Concrete could be used in space

CHICAGO (AP) — An engineer who is making experimental concrete from 40 grams of moon soil says the sturdy material could be used in building space stations, and its great weight wouldn't matter if it were mixed on the low-gravity moon or in weightless space.

NASA officials said Monday that scientists had agreed to give the sample to T.D. Lin, research engineer with the Portland Cement Association in Skokie.

Lin believes the low-cost space concrete could offer the advantages of heat, resistance, insulation and toughness. Scientists have concentrated on aluminum and fiberglass for proposed space stations because of the huge amount of fuel needed to lift cargo into space.

Trucker helps capture escapee

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A trucker listening to his CB radio helped police nab one of two New York prison escapees during a wrong-way, high-speed chase by parking his rig across the highway, police said.

The trucker, who drove away after the incident and has not been identified, had heard a radio alert Monday and blocked Interstate 275 when he spotted a red car driven by Lewis Van Horn, 30, police said.

Van Horn and Richard Anderson, 29, who had been arrested a few minutes earlier, had escaped from Groveland Correctional Institute in Sonyea, N.Y., on May 22 while serving terms for burglary. Both now face escape and traffic charges in Florida, police said.

Magistrate wears mask at hearing

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — A federal magistrate wore a surgical mask at a hospital-room hearing for a former mental patient who authorities said became a suspect in the planting of 24 pipe bombs in three states when an explosion in his rented car burned him.

Earl Steven Karr, 24, who is recovering in the St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center from injuries suffered in last week's blast, entered no plea at Monday's hearing, U.S. Magistrate Brian Short said. Three prosecutors and a public defender also attended.

Short set bail at $300,000 for Karr, who has been charged with possessing unregistered firearms and is under investigation in the string of bombings which injured five people since early May.

Burger to appear on 'Nightline'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice Warren Burger will appear on an expanded, hour-long broadcast of ABC-TV's "Nightline" June 19 to discuss with host Ted Koppel his views on the nation's prison system.

The interview will be the third granted by Burger since he became the highest ranking U.S. judge 15 years ago. The first was in 1971 and the second was last year on Cable Network News.

His TV appearance will be followed by a Burger speech to a prison reform conference at George Washington University here.

MCI plans to offer cheaper rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — MCI Communications Corp. plans to begin next month to offer customers a long-distance information service costing less than the version provided by American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

MCI founder and Chairman William G. McGowan told telephone executives at a trade conference Monday that the service would begin July 15 and would, like the AT&T version, pay local telephone companies for the long-distance information services of their operators.

McGowan said that MCI's service would operate in a manner similar to that of AT&T's version, which gives regular long-distance callers on its lines two free calls to long-distance information each month. While AT&T charges 50 cents for each additional use of the service, though, MCI will bill its customers 45 cents.

Foreclosures move at slower pace

WASHINGTON (AP) — Home mortgage foreclosures went forward at a slower pace in the first three months of this year than in the final quarter of 1983, and fewer Americans were late in making payments, according to a lenders trade group.

A report from the Mortgage Bankers Association, released Monday, said however that the percentage of homebuyers actually facing foreclosure proceedings moved closer in the first three months of this year to last year's record levels.

The group's executive vice president, Mark J. Reidy, said that "potentially higher mortgage rates and the federal budget deficit represent dark clouds on the horizon." He said it is too early to know "whether those dark clouds bring just an isolated shower or contain something substantially more stormy."

Program to aid Sahara region

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "special action program" to aid impoverished African nation's south of the Sahara is being prepared as an outgrowth of the London economic summit, the World Bank says.

Details of the plan to aid the drought-stricken region will be announced in September at the annual meeting of the bank's development committee and the International Monetary Fund, H. Martin Koelle, deputy director of information, said Monday.

Bank President A.W. Clausen's announcement was prompted by a summit statement by President Reagan and leaders of six other industrial nations, expressing concern about the problems of the region. The bank is owned by 146 countries and is the biggest international source of loans on easy terms for poor countries.

Weinberger, Zhang talks went well

WASHINGTON (AP) — Talks between Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Chinese Defense Minister Zhang Aiping "went extremely well," the Pentagon says.

Defense Department spokesman Michael Burch told reporters Monday, after Weinberger and Zhang had met for much of the morning, that there was "agreement on important matters that we hope will improve the defense capabilities of both countries." It was understood that the Chinese had asked that much of the substance of the talks be kept private.

Pentagon officials who spoke on the condition that they would remain anonymous said some agreements may be announced soon on sales of U.S. weaponry to the Chinese as well as the transfer of military technology and possibly the co-production of military gear.

Wife beaters have low self-esteem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wife beaters have feelings of low self-esteem and sexual inadequacy, according to a St. John's University researcher.

Associate Professor Richard Harris told a meeting of the National Association of Social Workers here that most of the 34 wife-beating men he interviewed in a survey "manifest low self-regard, deny the severity of their injurious behavior" and, among other things, "justify their violent actions by blaming either the woman or stressful living conditions."

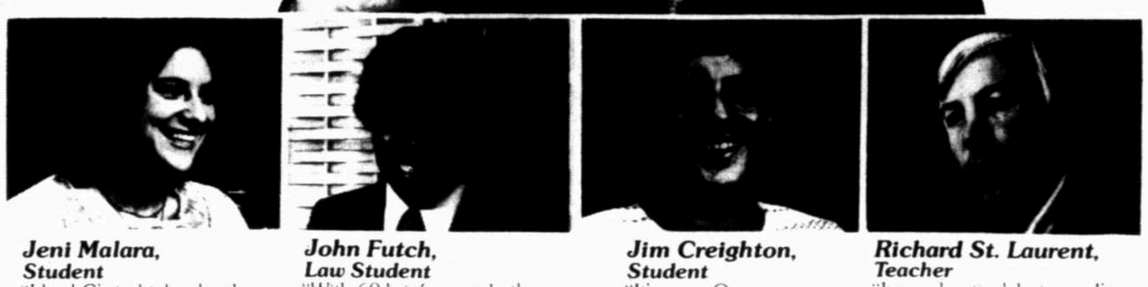

Harris said most of the men admitted directly or indirectly they felt sexually inadequate. He said the middle class wife beater "may actually sympathize with feminist concerns," believing women are exploited but "the exploitive roles have been reversed in his particular relationship." He said blue-collar wife beaters, by contrast, seek to regain "manhood" by controlling partners who refuse "to conform to traditional female tasks."

Indian army crushes mutinies by Sikh soldiers

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The army has crushed mutinies by at least 2,000 Sikh soldiers, killing 46 deserters who were outraged by the government assault on their Golden Temple shrine, military sources said today.

Six mutinies have been reported in eastern, northern and western India since the army assaulted the Golden Temple in Amritsar on June 5.

Military and civilian sources in Amritsar, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the death toll in the temple complex was likely to reach 1,300 and that in the district to hit 2,000.

They also said that more than 6,500 suspected Sikh militants have been arrested in Punjab since last Monday, including 240 people in predawn raids today. The sources said large quantities of weapons had been seized.

WORLD

The government said the attack was necessary because Sikh extremists were using their religion's holiest shrine as a base for terrorist raids that had killed 400 people in the past four months.

The Defense Ministry said a Hindu general, a civilian and one pursuing soldier were killed in gunbattles with the Sikh soldiers who tried to get to Punjab, the location of the 17th century temple.

Military sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said 600 mutineers were arrested, 46 were killed and most of the others surrendered.

"The situation is under control," said a spokesman for the Defense Ministry.

The mutinies were part of widespread Sikh indignation over the battle last Tuesday and Wednesday at the golden-domed temple. Police and army sources said the bodies of more than 1,000 Sikhs and 220 soldiers killed in the attack had been cremated.

The government has acknowledged only 300 to 400 deaths, but has admitted the toll could go higher as more bodies are removed from the temple.

Hundreds of bodies have been cremated but the stench of death pervaded the temple and the walled complex around it, where 3,000 Sikh faithful once lived.

A doctor who headed a post-mortem team said the bodies were burned in batches of 50 to save fuel. He said his group examined 400 corpses from the Golden Temple, including those of 100 women and 15 to 20 children under age 5. He spoke on condition his name not be used.

He said bodies in "the dead house" where examinations took place "were piled up one on top of another in heaps." He claimed that when one person was discovered to be still alive, a soldier shot him to death.

Temple assault alienates most of India's Sikhs

An Analysis

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The army's devastating assault on the sacred Golden Temple in Amritsar has alienated virtually all of India's 13 million Sikhs, triggered riots and mutinies by Sikh soldiers and ruined chances for any quick political settlement to the Punjab crisis.

The attack on the temple complex also has strengthened the movement for Khalistan, a separate Sikh state in Punjab, which previously had been supported only by extremists.

But the major military action ordered June 5 by Prime Minister Indira Gandhi appears to have won widespread approval from India's Hindus, who make up 83 percent of the population and had been prime targets of Sikh terrorists in Punjab.

Officials in Amritsar say as many as 2,000 people, including 200 government troops, may have been killed in the attack.

Curfews have been imposed in Punjab and elsewhere to try to prevent a Sikh backlash and more clashes between Sikhs and Hindus.

Sikhs are demanding President Zail Singh, a Sikh, step down from the position to protest the raid, which they consider sacrilege. He earlier had promised to resign if the army entered the temple.

Angry pilgrims step on his portrait, which is now being used as a doormat at some Sikh shrines, called gurdwaras.

"The unnecessary desecration of the Golden Temple complex has incensed virtually every Sikh in the world and all those in India who are not sycophants and careerists," said Khushwant Singh, a noted writer, historian and spokesman for the Sikh community.

"Mrs. Gandhi has deprived herself of any Sikh of any consequence who can talk to her," said the writer, who returned his national award for literature in protest of the raid and is setting up an independent inquiry committee.

The raid "has caused a great divide between Sikhs and Hindus and it will take a long time for the wounds to heal," Singh told The Associated Press.

Backed by tank and rocket fire, 3,000 troops stormed the temple complex on June 5 and 6. Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, a militant Sikh leader, was killed.

The government said the raid was necessary to clean out 600 terrorists responsible for a reign of terror which had killed hundreds of people in Punjab. Home Secretary M.M.K. Wali claimed the operation had "broken the back of Sikh terrorism."

Mrs. Gandhi's government said there were 300 to 400 people killed in the raid, that the army used restraint and did not damage the temple itself.

Sikh leaders, however, claim as many as 1,000 Sikhs died. They said the temple was pocked with bullet holes and that priceles gems, treasures and relics were destroyed, buried under rubble or looted.

"Bhindranwale had been provoking the government, but to flush out a rat it is not necessary to burn down the entire house," Singh said. He contended the army could have forced the militants out with tear gas, or by cutting off food, water and power.

The temple raid has led to at least two mutinies and desertions by Sikh soldiers, who make up about 9.5 percent of India's armed forces.

Reliable sources with army contacts and the respected Statesman newspaper reported that as many as 600 soldiers deserted on Friday and Sunday in Rajasthan, Bihar and Maharashtra states.

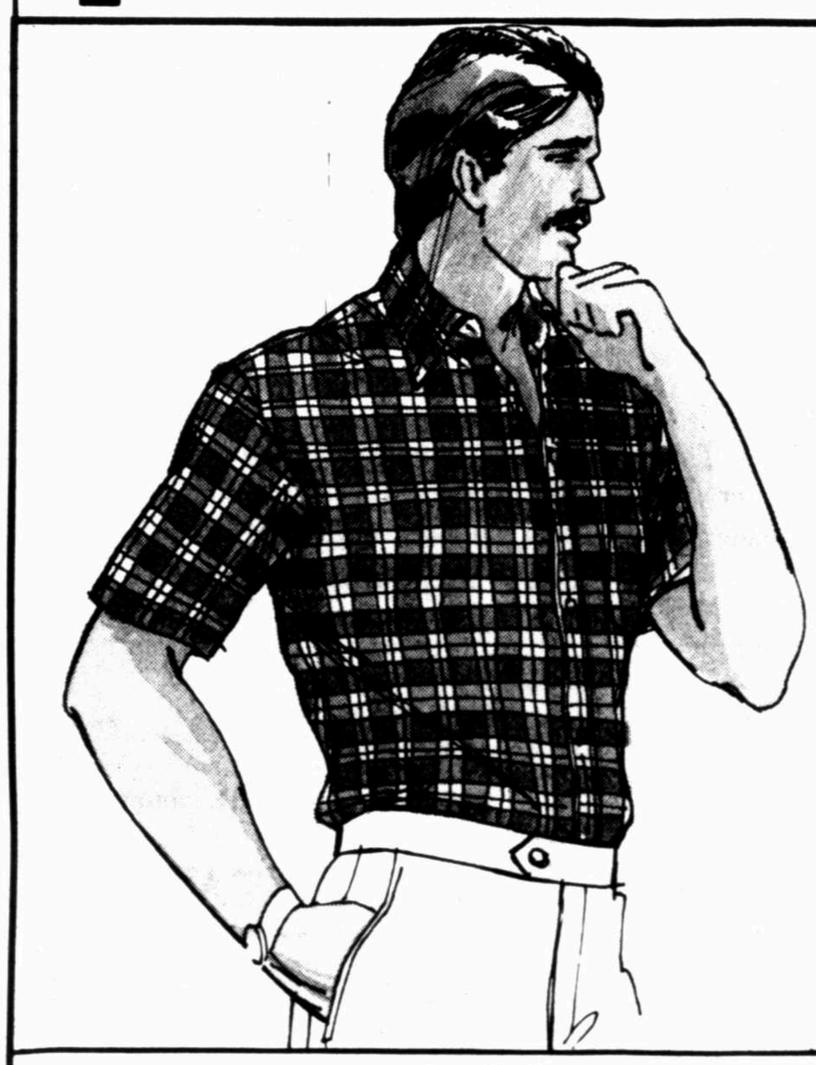

In Bihar, the Statesman said, at least 500 mutinied, killed a Hindu general and hijacked trucks and buses to take them to Punjab to avenge the siege.

The defense ministry played down the reports, saying "a few" Sikh soldiers deserted in Bihar and that Sikh terrorists disguised themselves as soldiers in Rajasthan.

Reliable sources also say there is unrest in the Indian air force.

"There was hardly any sympathy for Bhindranwale among moderate Sikhs," said a senior Hindu journalist in Punjab. "If he had been killed outside the Golden Temple, no one would have shed a tear, but he died in an assault on the temple and that has outraged even moderate Sikhs." The journalist spoke on condition of anonymity.

Lakers-Celts decide NBA

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics have played 104 games this season. The Los Angeles Lakers have played 102. None of that counts anymore.

The National Basketball Association season that began more than seven months ago in mid-fall ends tonight in a late-spring heat wave with the only game that matters.

"One game. We play all year to get here," says Los Angeles' Michael Cooper. "So throw the ball up and let's go for it."

Boston, which never has lost a seventh game of a championship series in six appearances, is host for the winner-take-all finale against Los Angeles, which never has won a seventh game of a championship series in four attempts.

Some Celtics didn't think there'd even be a seventh game.

"We really felt we could finish it today," said Boston's Larry Bird after the Lakers stayed alive by winning Sunday's sixth game, 119-108, in Los Angeles to even the series, 3-3.

"I thought I'd be playing blackjack tonight in Vegas," Celtics' forward Cedric Maxwell said after the loss. "I had all the arrangements made."

The Lakers spoiled those plans.

Tonight, they'll try to become only the fifth team to win an NBA championship series after trailing 3-2 and only the second finalist to knock off Boston, which is 14-1 in title rounds, including 7-0 against the Lakers.

"Everything is there to be had," said Laker Coach Pat Riley.

NBA Championship

"We have a chance to do something that no one else has done — win a world championship in Boston.

"We're going to win this one for Red Auerbach," Riley said of the Celtic president and general manager.

Throughout the series, Los Angeles has relied on missed Celtic shots and its own defensive rebounds to fuel its devastating fastbreak. Boston has done well when it has shot accurately from outside and dominated the offensive boards.

The Celtics, who had the NBA's best regular-season record, have been nearly unbeatable at home. They are 44-9 this season, including 11-1 in the playoffs, on the famed parquet floor beneath the NBA record of 14 championship banners. They are 2-1 here in this final series.

However, nine of the last 11 NBA crowns have been won on the road, including the 1980 title by the Lakers over Philadelphia and the 1981 championship by the Celtics over Houston.

The Lakers, who had the NBA's second-best record this year, won their eighth title, second most in the league, in 1982. But they were swept in four consecutive games by the 76ers in last year's finals.

"We could play in Nome, Alaska," Cooper said. "We could play in the Sahara Desert. It doesn't matter. No matter if it's raining or snowing. It may have been a factor in Game 5, but that kind of stuff isn't a factor in a Game 7."

In high humidity and a courtside temperature of 97 degrees, the Celtics burned the Lakers, 121-103, last Friday night for their second consecutive victory and a 3-2 series lead.

The National Weather Service said the outdoor temperature at gametime tonight, scheduled for 9 p.m. EDT, is expected to be 77 degrees, about 10 degrees less than Friday's tipoff reading. And the humidity should be lower.

"The heat will have no effect," said Los Angeles' James Worthy. "The crowd won't be an advantage. It's what we play for all year. We'll be ready."

Despite the oppressive conditions, the fifth game was Bird's best of the series. He hit 15 of 20 field-goal attempts, grabbed 17 rebounds and scored 34 points, the most by any player in a single game during the series.

But in Game 6, Boston turned away from its most potent weapon in its time of need. Although he scored 26 points, Bird took only 11 shots, his lowest total in 22 playoff games.

"My own teammates just wouldn't give me the ball," he said. "I just wanted the ball in my hands . . . especially when the 11-point lead was going down. I just didn't get the ball enough. I knew I had my game in control.

"Their defense wasn't doing any better today than any other time in the series," added Bird, who averaged 19.5 field-goal attempts per game during the regular season. "I didn't get the ball nearly enough to make things happen. I will in the seventh game."

The Celtics led 84-73 with 4:58 left in the third quarter Sunday. Los Angeles took advantage of poor Boston shooting and rallied in front, but Boston tied the game 93-93 midway through the fourth period. Then, a three-point basket by Byron Scott gave the Lakers the lead for good.

Boston made just 15 field goals in the second half, only five of them in the final 17 minutes.

"I'm not surprised there's going to be a seventh game," said Bird. "I'm just surprised at how it happened."

Injuries could play a role in the deciding contest. Scott Wedman, who scored the winning basket with 14 seconds left in overtime of Boston's 124-121 victory in Game 2, has missed the last two games with a hairline fracture of the leg and is out of tonight's game.

Los Angeles' Bob McAdoo, an excellent outside shooter, has an acute strain of the right achilles tendon and is considered doubtful. Earvin "Magic" Johnson, the Lakers' floor general, is limping slightly with a sore knee.

"Can't worry about it now," he said. "Just gotta gut it out."

So it comes down to a single game in an NBA season of more than one thousand games.

Players on both teams are speaking with optimism.

"We'll make them wish they never took that plane flight to Boston," said Celtic M.L. Carr.

Dodgers nip Cubs, 3-2

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO— The Midland Cubs once again could not provide offensive punch, losing 3-2 to the Dodgers here in Monday Texas League play.

Midland, 18-42, has lost the first three games of the five-game series.

San Antonio's Cecil Espy drove in two runs with an eighth-inning double, then came home with the winning tally on Larry See's single.

Dennis Powell, 5-2, picked up the win for the Dodgers. Midland's Mike Capel, 0-1, was tagged with the loss in relief of starter Doug Potestio. Potestio went into the eighth before tiring, and fanned seven batters.

Powell struck out six before giving way to two Dodger relievers in the ninth. Steve Martin notched his third save of the year and second of the series to preserve the San Antonio victory.

The Cubs' seven-hit attack was evenly balanced with Midland's top seven batters all rapping singles, except for Dan Norman. Norman ripped the Cubs' only extra base hit, a double that made him 1-for-1.

The Dodgers are currently in third in the Texas League West Division with a record of 28-32.

McReynolds theft leads Padres

By Associated Press

The San Diego Padres stole a game from the Atlanta Braves, thanks to a rare steal by Kevin McReynolds.

"I don't run much. I like to pick my spots — but this looked like a good spot to run in," the 205-pound outfielder said after scoring the winning run following a two-out, game-tying hit and a stolen base in the ninth inning.

McReynolds scored on Bobby Brown's single to give the Padres to a 5-4 victory Monday night over the Braves.

Padres Manager Dick Williams admitted that the sight of McReynolds taking off for second base was "a complete surprise to all of us on the bench. But that was the key play of the game."

The Padres have won four games in a row and 14 of their last 17 to move 2½ games ahead of the runner-up Braves in the National League West.

With San Diego trailing 4-3, Graig Nettles opened the Padre ninth with a walk off Pete Falcone, who was replaced by Steve Bedrosian, 4-3.

McReynolds singled home Salazar to tie the game, then stole second to set up Brown's game-winning hit after being told by first base coach Jack Krol that Bedrosian did not have a good move to first.

National League

Dave Dravecky, 3-3, who worked the final inning for the Padres, gained the victory.

Expos 2, Cubs 1

Tim Wallach led off the ninth inning with his ninth home run of the season on the first pitch from Lee Smith to lead Montreal over Chicago.

Smith, 3-4, had put down an Expo rally in the eighth inning in relief of starter Rick Reuschel. Reliever Bob James, 2-3, who pitched two innings, was the winner.

The Expos had tied it 1-1 in the eighth. Reuschel, bidding for his first major-league shutout in five years, took a four-hitter into the inning but left after Tim Raines hit a run-scoring single.

Mets 3, Pirates 1

Dwight Gooden and Jesse Orosco teamed up on a seven-hitter, and Hubie Brooks and Keith Hernandez homered to lead New York over Pittsburgh.

Gooden, 5-3, gave up six hits, struck out six — including five in a row at one point — and walked two before leaving with two out in the eighth. Gooden's performance gave him 93 strikeouts to tie him for the NL lead with Fernando Valenzuela of Los Angeles.

Orosco came on to notch his 12th save after Gooden gave up three straight two-out singles in the eighth, including a run-scoring hit by Lee Mazzilli.

Cardinals 6, Phillies 4

Darrell Porter's two-run double highlighted a four-run third inning as St. Louis beat Philadelphia.

Danny Cox, who had lost seven and had three no-decisions in his last 10 games, earned his third victory with relief help from Bruce Sutter, who earned his 15th save. Marty Bystrom, 2-3, was the loser.

The Cardinals trailed 3-0 when they scored four times in the third, their first runs in 21 2-3 innings.

St. Louis turned four double plays.

Giants 8, Dodgers 4

Chili Davis singled with the bases loaded in the ninth inning to drive in the tying and go-ahead runs and ignite a five-run rally, as San Francisco came from behind to top Los Angeles.

Davis' single off reliever Carlos Diaz gave the Giants a 5-4 lead. One out later, after a walk to Jack Clark, Jeff Leonard hit a sacrifice fly to score another run and Joel Youngblood followed with a two-run single.

Astros 3, Reds 2

Bill Doran singled home Phil Garner from third base with the winning run in the 14th inning, leading Houston over Cincinnati.

Red Sox rally dashes Yankees

By Associated Press

Although behind by three runs in the ninth inning, the Boston Red Sox had a backup plan.

Pinch-hitting reserve Reid Nichols, who hadn't been to the plate since May 19, used a borrowed bat from Rick Miller, another reserve, to swat a three-run homer that capped a six-run rally and lifted the Red Sox to a dramatic 9-6 victory Monday night over the New York Yankees.

"Rick and I did our usual thing in the clubhouse, hitting balls of tape to get ready if we were needed in the late innings, but I only had two bats ready because I haven't been playing much," Nichols said.

Nichols, who explained he shaves the handles of his bats, ran the count to 2-2 and then fouled off four consecutive pitches, breaking his second bat on the last with a foul line drive.

Nichols went to the dugout and was handed one of his own bats. He rejected it, though.

"Rick shaves his bats like I do, so I wanted one of his," Nichols said. "Then I got a fast ball up and over the plate. I was hoping I would just hit the ball. I was so excited I don't think I realized that it had gone out until I was rounding third.

"It was exciting, like the World Series or something the way everyone came running out of our dugout. It's been a while, but I really appreciate the opportunity to go up there."

Bill Buckner had tied the score for Boston with a two-run single off reliever Bob Shirley before Nichols batted for Rich Gedman and drilled a 2-2 pitch into the left field screen for his first homer this season.

A single by Jackie Gutierrez and a walk to Wade Boggs opened the ninth and chased New York's Ray Fontenot, bringing on loser Jay Howell, 1-4. Dwight Evans greeted Hwell with a single, filling the bases.

Jim Rice's single to left scored Gutierrez and Shirley came on. He got Mike Easler to pop up for the second out before Buckner grounded his single.

Mark Clear, 5-0, got the last out in the ninth and picked up the win.

The victory extended Boston's winning streak to four games and gave the Red Sox their 11th victory in 14 starts.

Boston starter Bruce Hurst was tagged for eleven hits, seven of them doubles.

The Yankees took a 3-0 lead in the first, keyed by Toby Harrah's two-out, two-run double.

Rice got one back for the Red Sox with his 11th homer in the bottom of the inning but the Yankees made it 4-1 in the second on an RBI double by Griffey. Boggs' RBI single made it 4-2 in Boston's half of the second.

Gedman pulled Boston to within one with his ninth homer in the fourth, but the Yankees made it 5-3 in the sixth on doubles by O'Berry and Randolph.

American League

Don Baylor's ninth-inning single gave the Yankees their final run.

Tigers 5, Blue Jays 4

Lou Whitaker's two-run homer snapped a 3-3 tie in the fourth inning and pinned a fifth straight defeat on Toronto, extending Detroit's lead over the Blue Jays to eight games.

Whitaker's homer off Luis Leal, 6-1, was his fifth of the season.

Dave Rozema, making just his fourth start of the season, allowed three runs on four hits in his five innings to improve his record to 2-0.

Willie Hernandez pitched 2 1-3 innings for his 10th save.

Dave Collins' three-run homer for Toronto, his second of the season, tied the score 3-3 in the third inning.

Alan Trammell tripled in the first and scored on Kirk Gibson's sacrifice fly. In the second, Darrell Evans singled and John Grubb doubled. Chet Lemon drove Evans home with a sacrifice fly and Ruppert Jones doubled, scoring Grubb.

Orioles 3, Brewers 1

Scott McGregor scattered seven hits and John Lowenstein drove in one run and scored another, leading Baltimore to victory over slumping Milwaukee.

McGregor, 8-4, walked two and struck out five in completing his sixth game in 15 starts.

The Brewers have lost four straight games and nine of their last 11.

The Orioles scored two runs in the fourth with four consecutive hits off Brewers' starter Don Sutton, 3-6.

Wayne Gross doubled to right, and Lowenstein drove him in with a single. Ken Singleton then singled to right and Mike Young's bloop single to left drove in Lowenstein.

Sutton fanned five batters to move into seventh place on the career strikeout list with 3,118, passing Hall of Famer Bob Gibson.

Rangers 6, A's 3

Pete O'Brien smacked a two-run homer in the sixth inning to bring Texas to a comeback victory over Oakland.

O'Brien's home run was his fifth of the season and gave him 10 runs batted in for the four-game series with Oakland. It was his third game-winning RBI in four nights.

Texas starter Mike Mason picked up his third victory of the year against four losses. He went 6 1-3 innings and gave up three runs on eight hits.

Dave Lopes' fifth home run of the season gave the A's a 2-0 lead in the first.

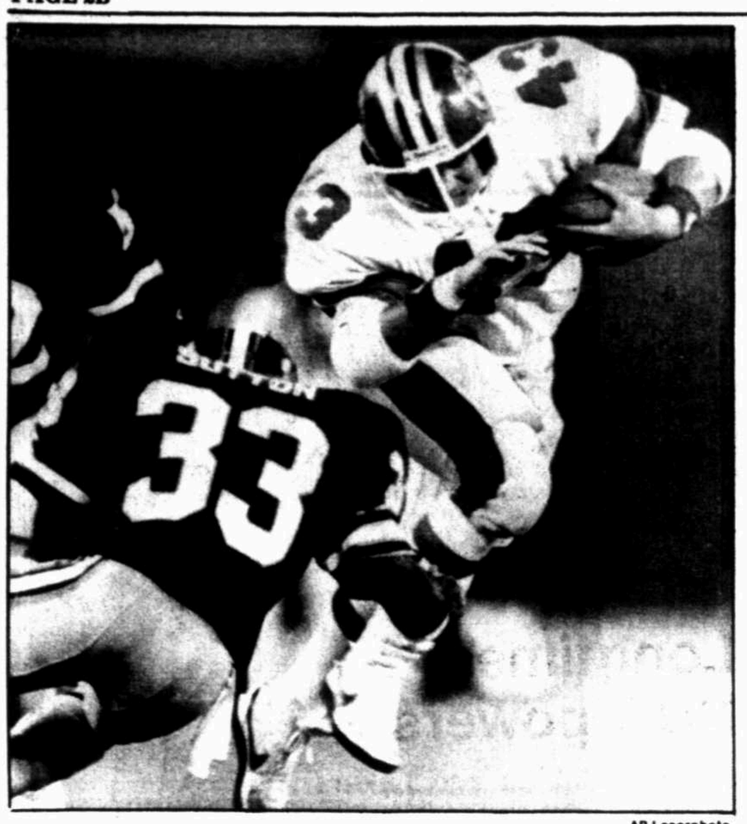

Behind 3-1, Texas pulled to within one in the fifth as Wayne Tolleson walked, stole second and scored on Curtis Wilkerson's single.

Ahead 5-4 after O'Brien's homer, the Rangers got some insurance in the seventh on RBI singles by Larry Parrish and Gary Ward.

Razorbacks defeat China, 77-73

TOKYO (AP) — The University of Arkansas came from behind to beat winless China 77-73 Tuesday for its third straight victory against no defeats in the four-nation Kirin World Basketball Tournament in Sapporo.

In Akita, northern Japan, Yugoslavia, the 1980 Olympic champion, beat Japan's national team 76-66 after leading 46-28 at halftime. It also was Yugoslavia's third straight victory and Japan's third straight defeat.

San Antonio running back Don Roberts steps away from Pittsburgh Mauler Mickey Sutton in Monday's USFL game at Pittsburgh. The Gunslingers won the game 21-3.

Gunslingers shoot down Maulers

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Maulers' misery stretched through another game thanks to what San Antonio quarterback Rick Neuheisel calls his team's "rubber band" defense.

"The defense has probably been the mainstream of our team the entire year," San Antonio quarterback Rick Neuheisel said after throwing a pair of touchdown passes in the Gunslingers' 21-3 victory over the Maulers on Monday night.

"They're called the Rubber Band defense because they bend but they don't break," he said.

Pittsburgh had the ball inside the San Antonio 20-yard line six times, including four times in the second quarter. But the Maulers managed only Eric Schubert's 27-yard field goal in losing for the tenth time in their last 11 games.

"We didn't make a break for ourselves tonight, and we didn't get a break," said Pittsburgh Coach Ellis Rainsberger.

Gunslinger defenders, who had not given up more than 94 yards to a single opposing runner, yielded 123 yards to Walter Holman, who ran for injured Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier.

"They looked rather porous at times, but then when it got down to where it counted, they shut them down," said San Antonio Coach Gil Steinke.

"(We) played a lot of pretty games this year, but lost. And then we play as sloppy as we did and we win," he said. "I'm just glad that we won."

San Antonio's record is now 6-10 after the team started its inaugural USFL season 1-6. The Maulers fell to 3-13.

"Tonight we took a giant step backwards," said Pittsburgh quarterback Tom Rozantz.

Jerry Gordon took a few steps toward the sidelines while defensive back Mark Harper was covering him in the endzone, and twice that made a difference for San Antonio. Gordon caught both of Neuheisel's scoring passes.

"Both of them were pretty much the same thing. I just said run for the back flag, I'm going to throw it there and it'll be waiting for you," he said.

"Rick threw both of them perfectly. It's virtually impossible for a defensive back to stop it when it's thrown right," said Gordon, who had his finest USFL game. He caught five passes for 81 yards.

Neuheisel hit Gordon on a 21-yard scoring pass play to give the Gunslingers a 14-3 lead in the second quarter. Gordon pulled in his second touchdown pass on a 12-yard play early in the fourth quarter.

The Gunslingers went ahead to stay on the first series of the game.

Mark Rush took a reverse handoff on the opening kickoff and returned the ball 55 yards to the Maulers' 45-yard line.

San Antonio scored six plays later on Marcus Bonner's 1-yard touchdown dive to take the lead 7-0.

Eric Schubert kicked his field goal to make it 7-3 after quarterback Tom Rozantz found Jackie Flowers on a 51-yard pass play that put the Maulers on the Gunslingers' 13-yard line.

Holman helped move Pittsburgh 58 yards on the next series, gaining 47 yards on eight carries. But the Gunslingers held at their 13-yard line, where Greg Fields batted down a field goal attempt by Schubert.

Schubert also came up short on a 54-yard field goal attempt that had been set up by Ron Freeman's interception in the closing seconds of the first half.

The Gunslingers choked a Pittsburgh threat late in the fourth quarter when they sacked backup quarterback Glenn Carano and recovered his fumble deep in San Antonio territory.

Henderson gets prison sentence

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson, the flamboyant former linebacker for the Dallas Cowboys, was sentenced to four years and eight months in prison for molesting two teen-age girls, then trying to bribe them not to testify against him.

Henderson, 31, who was sentenced Monday by Superior Court Judge Ernest L. Kelly, pleaded no contest to the charges in April.

A 16-year-old paraplegic testified that Henderson met her and a 17-year-old companion in a liquor store on Nov. 2, 1983, then took them to his apartment, where he assaulted them.

He later gave the girls $500 to either leave the state or change their testimony, prosecutors said.

Henderson, known for his flamboyant style on the field, played for Dallas from 1975 to 1979. He later played with the San Francisco 49ers, the Houston Oilers and the Miami Dolphins.

"I wouldn't be here at all if it weren't for cocaine and alcohol," Henderson said recently.

He said he hoped his experience would be a deterrent to other people who use drugs and alcohol.

He added, in the interview, he wanted to "pay for my mistake, take my punishment and start my life over again."

Henderson could have received a maximum term of 18 years and eight months.

But Kelly, who described the case as "extremely complex," said he imposed the sentence after reading a probation report. The judge noted that he was "inundated" by letters from friends and acquaintances of Henderson.

"I have to call it as I see it and I hope I called it right," Kelly said.

The prosecutor was not pleased by the length of the sentence.

"I felt ... he should have done six years and eight months," Deputy District Attorney Don Davis said.

Arnold Gold, the defense attorney, said the term could have been "a lot worse, and we are delighted that it wasn't."

Correction

In Sunday's results of the ARCO track meet at Memorial Stadium, the girls 200 meter run was won by Tammila Traylor in the Born 1971 or 1972 Division while Jr. Traylor took third in the long jump in the Born 1969-1970 Division. The names were reported as Taylor instead of Traylor. Traci Standifer won the girls 100 meters in the 1971-72 age group in a time of 14 flat, instead of 14.59 as reported.

Mathias still winning

WASHINGTON (AP) — Getting members of Congress to agree on anything is never easy but a former member of the House, Bob Mathias, did earlier this year.

Mathias hosted a clinic at which members of Congress participated to help launch "Sign Up America," a nationwide signature-gathering campaign to show support for the U.S. Olympic team at the Summer Games beginning in July.

A special giant scroll bearing the signatures of millions of Americans will be presented to the U.S. team in Los Angeles. The novel idea is being sponsored by M&M's Chocolate Candies and the U.S. Jaycees. President nd Mrs. Reagan were the first two ıo sign.

Mathias is a two-time winner in the Olympic decathlon, taking the gold in 1948 and 1952.

Tarkanian takes to court against NCAA

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The NCAA "ignored every precept of due process" when they sought a two-year suspension of University of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian in 1977, his attorney charged Monday.

"The NCAA established a terrible precedent of trying the case and then bringing him in to defend himself," Sam Lionel said as the feud between collegiate sports' governing body and the feisty coach moved to a state district court.

Lionel said the NCAA investigative procedures were so vague that Tarkanian could not adequately defend himself against charges of recruiting violations lodged against the Las Vegas school in 1977.

The NCAA placed UNLV's basketball program on probation for two years and ordered the school to suspend Tarkanian for that period of time. Tarkanian obtained a permanent injunction preventing the school from suspending him, and the case has languished in legal limbo until it was revived earlier this year.

The trial will re-establish whether the coach was given due process in the suspension order.

Lionel said he would also introduce testimony that NCAA investigators vowed they would drive Tarkanian out of college basketball.

NCAA attorney Jim McLarney of Kansas City defended the association's investigative procedures and said Tarkanian was given a fair hearing.

McLarney said UNLV was accused in 1977 of 80 violations dating back to 1971. Many of the alleged violations occurred before Tarkanian came to UNLV from Long Beach State in 1973. The university was eventually cited for 38 violations.

McLarney, in an opening statement, said Tarkanian had plenty of opportunity to defend himself.

"UNLV had longer hearings, deliberations and sessions than any other school in NCAA history," McLarney said.

Lionel charged no transcripts were kept of any proceedings involving the university and only some tapes of marginal quality were available for Tarkanian to sift through in seeking out his accusers.

Tarkanian paced the halls during an afternoon break, then took the stand late in the afternoon.

The court recessed Monday before Tarkanian could finish outlining his income.

Shreveport overcomes Jackson in 12 innings, 3-1

By The Associated Press

Bryan Snyder hit a two-run homer in the top of the 12th inning to give Shreveport a 3-1 win over Jackson in Texas League action.

In other games Monday night, San Antonio scored all of its runs in the eighth inning to clip Midland 3-2, Tulsa trounced Arkansas 11-4 and Beaumont edged El Paso 5-3.

Shreveport got the games first run in the fifth inning, when Jessie Reid hit a solo homer.

The Mets' only run came in the bottom of the seventh, when Mark Carreon tripled, then scored on a sacrifice fly by Randy Milligan.

Kurt Mattson, 3-3, was the winning pitcher. Joe Graves, 6-6, was tagged with the loss.

Bob Gergen led Tulsa's attack with three hits, including a solo homer in the third, and drove in four runs. The Drillers put together a five-run rally in the sixth inning, then Whitney Harry added a solo homer in the seventh.

Arkansas scored three runs in the eighth on Gotay Mills' bases-loaded triple.

Tommy Boggs, 1-1, was the winning pitcher. The loser was John Adams, 4-2.

Beaumont used a two-run rally in the eighth to snap a 3-3 tie. James Steels led off with a double, was sacrificed to third by Pat Casey and scored on a single up the middle by Mark Wasinger. Wasinger then scored the insurance run when Gillaspie doubled.

Gillaspie added a two-run homer in the sixth for the Golden Gators.

Tim Cook, 3-0, picked up the win in the relief. Bryan Duquette, 3-3, was the loser for El Paso.

The win boosted Beaumont 2½ games ahead of second-place El Paso in the West Division. Jackson has an eight-game lead over Sherveport in the East.

GINNIE MAE:

14% YIELD*
FROM AN INVESTMENT
AS SOLID AS UNCLE SAM.

Most investments offer either safety or high yield. GNMA's offer both!

"Ginnie Mae" is the nickname we call Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA) Securities. Ginnie Mae certificates are backed by "the full faith and credit of the United States government." You simply buy a share in a specific pool of mortgages, and Uncle Sam guarantees your monthly income of principal and interest.

Consider the strengths of GNMA's: Unusually High Yields. Monthly Income. Outstanding Liquidity.

Your broker at Howard Weil has some creative ideas on how you can use GNMA's to your greatest advantage.

*Corporate bond equivalent yield assuming 100% FHA experience. Yield subject to change without prior notice.

ANYBODY CAN BUY A SAAB.
NOT JUST ANYBODY CAN SELL ONE.

Last year, Saab turned down three times as many dealerships as we accepted.

Some because they didn't have a service department capable of taking care of sophisticated machinery.

Others, because they didn't have the kind of knowledgeable sales staff Saab likes.

And there were a few dealerships that just didn't have the right kind of reputation. Snobby? Maybe.

But one dealership had everything Saab was looking for:

Saab of Midland
3200 N. Big Spring, Midland

Saab hopes you drop by soon. You'll find it's not just another place to buy our car. It's another reason.

THE BETTER HALF

"I do SO have charisma! I just don't like to FLAUNT it!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Wednesday, June 13, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Irish poet-dramatist William Yeats, actor Basil Rathbone and "Hollywood Squares" star Paul Lynde were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: football great Red Grange, actors Richard Thomas and Ben Johnson, "People's Court" producer Ralph Edwards and baseball's Bobby Clark and Ernie Whitt. A period of great growth lies just ahead. Make better use of your special talents. Your faith in a child is justified. Partnerships formed in October should be very profitable. Job conditions improve.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Others may not know what they want. You do! News from loved one sets your mind at ease. Follow a hunch and you can increase your income. Treat partners with kid gloves.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Work and joint financial ventures hum along nicely now. A surprise could create some domestic stress, however. Tact will get you what you want. Heed the advice of a more experienced colleague.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not be misled by appearances; follow your hunches. Family relationships will benefit from more of your attention. A small gift will be well-received. A wonderful day for creative endeavors.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Listen to mate or partner's advice. An out-of-town visit can be very profitable if you meet with an authority figure. Your smart appearance and positive manner serve you well.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You have good news to share with a brother or sister. A windfall or legacy would be involved. A solo endeavor turns into a real bonanza! Family activities hold special appeal tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New ideas could turn an artistic project into a money-making proposition. Member of opposite sex is impressed by your calm reaction to a surprising event. A sports competition enjoys favorable influences.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You feel great relief after reaching a tough decision. Teamwork is the key to success. A change in personnel puts you in line for a promotion or raise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain more facts and figures before making an important presentation. A competitor tries to maneuver you into an embarrassing position. Your quick thinking keeps you from falling into his/her trap.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A teen-ager who asks for advice may really be looking for affection. Your sentimental nature leads you to act on impulse. Someone you thought stern comes over to your side.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your judgment may not be its best today. Consult experts. A business trip should be delayed until more information is available. Entertaining business associates at home works wonders.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not let a lack of self-confidence keep you from accepting a lucrative opportunity. Solo efforts prove very successful. An older person offers excellent advice, but there could be strings attached.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your originality or inventiveness persuades someone influential to open doors for you. A move to another city is possible. Be yourself with a prospective romantic partner.

This year's shows like old shows

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There's this new show about a talking car, named Mr. Model T, who says funny things like "Ooga! Ooga!" and gets into lots of scrapes and works on the side as a private eye with a handsome but mysterious model named Pierce Arrow.

We're only kidding, folks, but that gives you some idea of what the fall television season holds in store.

ABC's got a show called "Streethawk" about a motorcycle that goes 400 miles an hour. This crime-fighting machine is almost as smart as "Airwolf," although it doesn't hover as well, except when it hits a bump at top speed.

Television is a medium of illusion, and the biggest one of all is that each year's new crop of shows seems to be worse than what has gone before. It would be hard to equal some of the clinkers of the past, although this past year, "Mama Malone" came close.

So, the new shows from ABC, CBS and NBC probably are no better, and no worse, than anything seen before. Indeed, a lot of them resemble shows seen before.

NBC's "Highway to Heaven," about a probationary angel trying to win his wings by performing good deeds on Earth, has a familiar ring. The difference, and it's a critical difference, is Michael Landon. If anybody can make sentiment and schmaltz palatable, it's Landon.

"Hot Pursuit," also NBC's, is a variation of "The Fugitive." Here, a husband and wife are on the lam, from the cops and a would-be assassin. The wife is a test car driver.

There's an abundance of detective shows, most of them with cute twists:

—Lynda Carter and Loni Anderson take over the detective agency left to them by their late husband (for one of the two, ex-husband) in NBC's "Partners in Crime."

—Jon-Erik Hexum and Jennifer O'Neill pose as fashion photographer and model to put out fires in the world's hot spots in CBS' "Cover Up."

—NBC's "Hunter" is about "a pair of unorthodox undercover detectives... trying to stay out of hot water at headquarters." At last, something different.

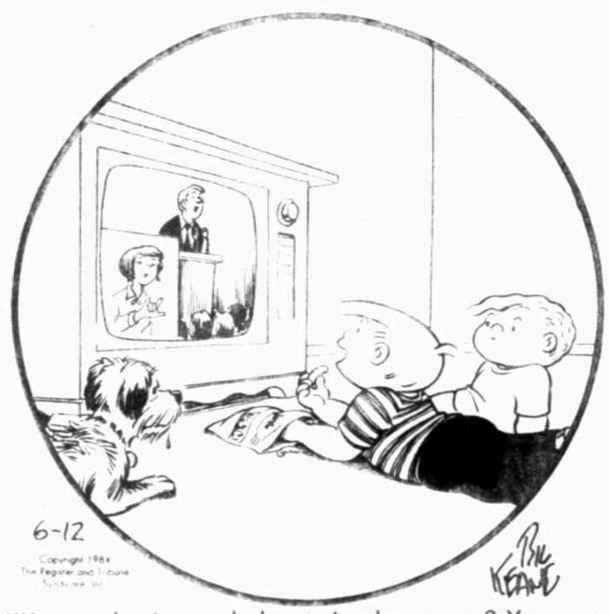

ABC continues to find variations on "The Love Boat" and "Fantasy Island" theme. "Paper Dolls" is about the "fast-paced, dazzling world of fashion." All that's gold is in "Glitter," the magazine (and show) that tells all. There's also "Finder of Lost Loves," in which Tony Franciosa is a cupid who tracks down the love from your past. Count on Aaron Spelling and Douglas Cramer to make this work.

The way to handle a particular suit combination could vary, depending on communication between declarer's hand and dummy. This example is typical.

After South opened with a demand bid, North correctly set the suit immediately rather than bid one of his four-card suits. South launched into Blackwood and boldly went to a grand slam as soon as he established that his partner held an ace and a king. He chose to play the suit slam in case he needed a club ruff for his 13th trick.

West led a club. Declarer won in hand and laid down the king of trumps. When West failed to follow, declarer had no way to pick up the jack of trumps, so he ended up down one.

South knew enough to make the correct play had there been only one entry to the table. Then, playing the king of trumps before crossing to the ace would allow him to pick up the suit if it split 4-1—that break is more likely than 5-0.

As the cards lie, however, declarer has a heart entry to the board as well as the ace of spades. Now correct technique in the trump suit is to cross to the ace at trick two. If both defenders follow, declarer continues with a trump to the king. If trumps are 3-2, declarer can claim; if West shows out, declarer can get back to dummy with a high heart to take a finesse for the jack of trumps.

On the actual hand, West shows out on the first spade. Declarer wins and takes a trump finesse, then crosses back to the board in hearts to take a second trump finesse. Now his grand slam is assured.

Disney Productions halts trading in stock

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Walt Disney Productions, faced with a hostile takeover offer led by financier Saul Steinberg, today halted trading in its stock pending a special board of directors meeting.

Erwin Okun, vice president of corporate communications at Disney, said the company's board would meet today but gave no indication of what would be discussed. He said an announcement would be released after the meeting.

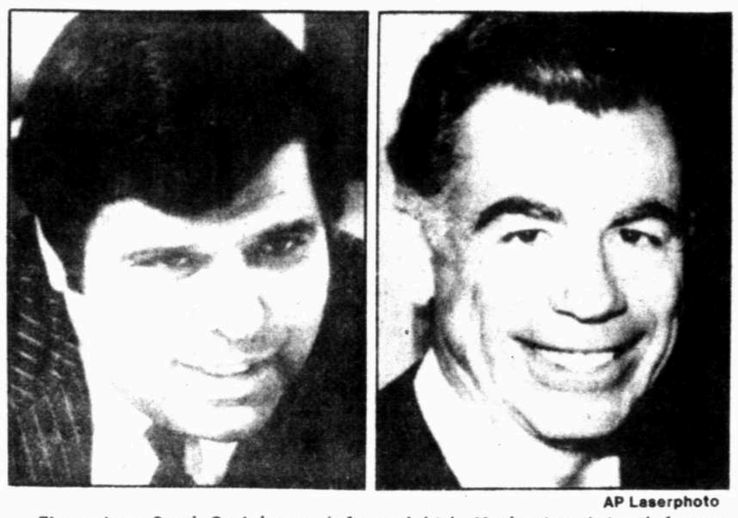

Disney's stock closed Friday at $5.12½ a share.

Steinberg joined forces last week with financier Kirk Kerkorian, who has controlled MGM for 15 years.

Steinberg, Disney's largest shareholder with 11.1 percent of the company's stock, on Friday confronted Disney with two options:

—A hostile $1.26 billion takeover bid for 49 percent of the company at $67.50 a share.

—A $2.76 billion tender offer for the entire company at $72.50 a share if Disney directors endorse the offer, cancel a recently announced purchase of Gibson Greetings Inc. of Cincinnati and pledge to make no further transactions that would dilute Steinberg's holdings.

Stock market plunges in fear of credit crunch

By The Associated Press

The stock market suffered its sharpest drop in more than five weeks as a possible credit crunch later this year fueled Wall Street's fears of higher interest rates.

Adding to the concerns was a government report Monday that business executives plan to push their spending for expansion and modernization to a record $309 billion this year, a yearly gain of 14.8 percent that would be the biggest in nearly two decades.

That could mean brisk borrowing ahead. And analysts said there were widespread expectations that the Federal Reserve would follow a relatively restrictive credit policy in the next few months, trying to counter concerns of a revival of inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 15.64 to 1,115.61, for its biggest single-day loss since it dropped 16.22 on May 4.

Capital spending last year actually declined 3.9 percent, after adjusting for inflation, despite the relatively robust recovery from the 1981-82 recession. But if that decline showed skepticism about the recovery, a Commerce Department report covering April and May surveys seemed to dispel any remaining doubts.

Similar surveys taken last November and December showed executives were planning this year to raise capital spending by 9.4 percent after inflation, and surveys in January and February showed plans for an increase of 12 percent.

In other economic developments Monday:

—Average weekly earnings of full-time job holders rose 5.4 percent in the first quarter of 1984 from a year earlier, eclipsing the pace of inflation, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. "Usual weekly earnings" of individual job-holders averaged $325 in the first quarter, the bureau reported.

—Fewer Americans were late in making home loan payments in the first three months of this year than in the final quarter of 1983, and lenders started foreclosure at a slower pace, a lenders' trade group said. However, the Mortgage Bankers Association of America's report also indicated the percentage of home buyers actually facing foreclosure rose closer to the record level of early last year.

Pickens predicts more oil mergers, acquisitions

LONDON (AP) — T. Boone Pickens Jr., chairman of Mesa Petroleum Co., said Monday there are "great potential values" within the oil industry and predicted more mergers and acquisitions in the United States.

Pickens, addressing an industry seminar, said that U.S. and British oil companies that are not replacing their domestic reserves of oil and natural gas "will either have to find ways to compensate shareholders or they will find themselves being taken over by stronger managements."

And he said that acquisitions probably are the most prudent course at present for an oil company seeking reserves because current world oil prices do not justify costly and risky exploration and development of marginal oil fields.

"Great potential values exist within the industry. And as long as that exists, I believe we'll see more merger and acquisition activity. All they're waiting for is a catalyst," Pickens said.

He said that many oil companies currently are valued in the stock markets at well below their asset values, including Exxon Corp., Mobil Corp., Texaco Inc., Standard Oil Co. of California, and Unocal Corp.

But he declined to indicate which companies he believed represent such values and did not discuss Mesa's plans.

Earlier this year, Pickens led a group of investors that unsuccessfully sought control of Gulf Corp. Although Standard Oil Co. of California emerged the victor, paying a record $13.3 billion for Gulf, Mesa turned an estimated pretax profit of $500 million on its Gulf shares.

Community Bank breaks ground for new building

Officers, directors and guests gathered Monday at the corner of Florida and Terrell as Community National Bank broke ground for Midland's first and only southside bank.

Chamber of Commerce Manager, Grant Billingsley, called the new bank "an example for the Southwest," while City Councilman, Gordon Marcum, said it was a long time coming, and was a "credit to the community."

Bank Chairman, Ken Peeler, said the new bank was above all expectations, having achieved a growth of 700 percent ahead of projections for the first quarter.

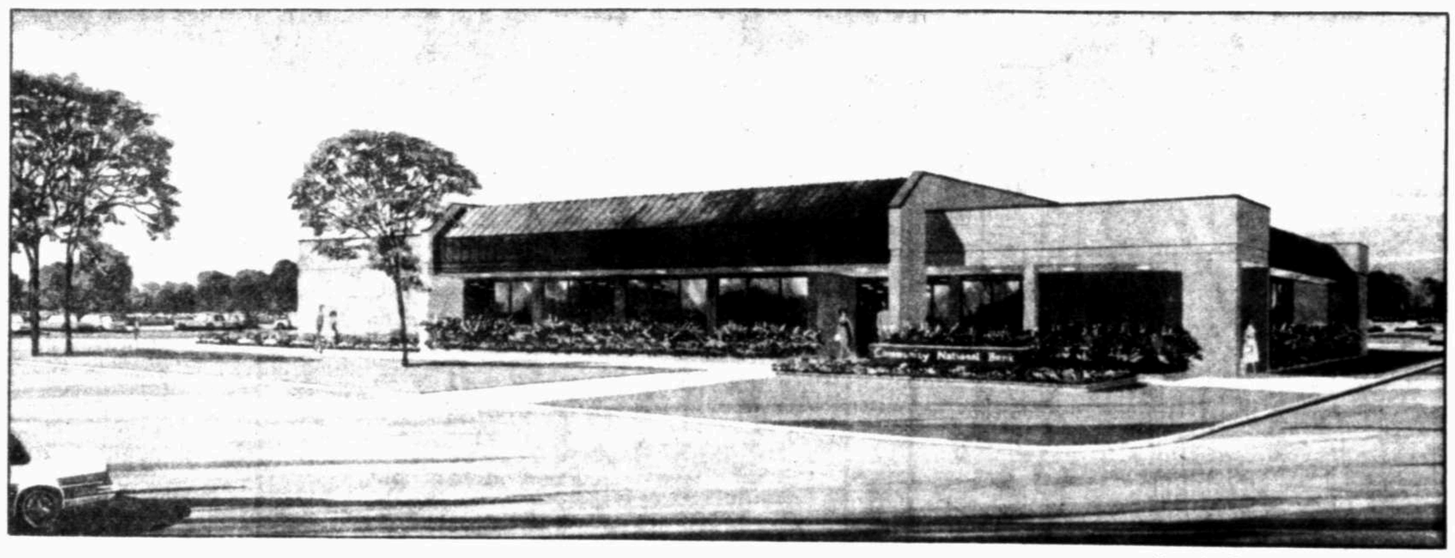

"We hope to continue our growth," said Peeler,"and to be able to move South Midland in a better direction."

Community National Bank was opened its doors to Midland depositors January 3rd of this year in a temporary facility at the cornor of Florida and Terrell. The new facility will be built adjacent to the temporary building.

It will offer safety deposit boxes as well as drive-up windows for commercial and noncommercial accounts, and full lobby service.

President Bob Gribble pointed out that Community National Bank was designed with the community in mind and would offer a community room for use during and after hours for the local groups and their activities.

Since opening in January, Community Bank has exceeded $12 million in deposits and has over 1,500 depositors.

One killed, one hurt in rig mishap

SEMINOLE, Texas (AP) — A 27-year-old man was killed at a drilling site and another man remained hospitalized today after a piece of heavy equipment broke loose and went out of control, officials said.

Clarence Patrick "Pat" Brady of Lovington, N.M., was killed Saturday when he was struck by heavy equipment on the drilling platform of the Cactus Drilling Co. rig four miles northwest of Seminole.

Another Lovington man, 22-year-old James Peppin, remained hospitalized Monday following the accident, the official said.

Brady was pronounced dead at the site at 4:15 p.m. Saturday by peace justice Mary Parrot of Seminole.

Cliff West, director of emergency medical services for the City of Seminole, said Brady sustained a broken neck, severe head injuries and resulting blood loss.

The other man was taken to a Seminole hospital and then transferred to Hobbs Memorial Hospital, where he was listed in stable condition with a lower back injury, a spokeswoman said.

West said four people were at the rig at the time of the accident.

Officials said a chain connected to heavy tongs broke, and the equipment apparently went out of control. Tongs are used for connecting or disconnecting drilling pipe.

Brady's body was taken to Singleton Funeral Home in Seminole.

Midland job prospects good

Employment prospects in the Midland area for the next three months are excellent, according to the quarterly Employment Outlook survey conducted by Manpower Inc., the world's largest temporary help service.

Pam Phillips, manager of Manpower's Midland office, said, "Among local employers interviewed, 40 percent said they would increase staff during the third quarter. None plan decreases, while 60 percent anticipate continuing at present levels."

The local outlook is significantly better than the national average as reflected by the survey. Nationally, 31 percent of more than 11000 employers contacted plan to add staff. Only six percent forecast decreases.

The survey here continues the trend of last quarter when 37 percent planned increases and none anticipated employment drops. For July, August and September of last year, 20 percent reported higher employment expectations and seven percent were expecting the reduce employees.

Gasoline prices dip across nation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite the summer increase in driving and hostilities in the Persian Gulf, gasoline prices across the nation have dipped this month, an industry observer says.

According to analyst Dan Lundberg's most recent survey of 18,000 service stations, gas prices dropped .18 cents in the last 2 weeks at the retail level and .64 cents at wholesale.

The June average for all grades of gasoline, including taxes, is $1.20, compared to $1.21 in May, he said.

Even though the Gulf war between Iran and Irag is heating up, gasoline tank operators are drawing down stocks and "working the bottoms of their tanks" because they believe supplies will remain stable, said Lundberg.

ARCO to honor area employees

ODESSA — ARCO Oil & Gas Co. will honor Permian District employees and their guests with a dinner in Odessa Thursday, June 14, for compiling one million safe work hours, announced Clarence E. Cardwell Jr., vice president.

The dinner will begin at 7 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Loop 338 Convention Center in Odessa.

Employees invited to the Odessa Dinner live in several area cities, including Andrews, Big Spring, Coahoma, Colorado City, Crane, Fort Stockton, Grandfalls, Imperial, Kermit, Midland, Monahans, Odessa, Pecos, Penwell, Sweetwater and Wink.

Dinners honoring employees who live outside this area will be held at San Angelo, June 19, and Denver City, June 21.

No. 24-ZG extends production in Fasken (Penn) field

Two 100 barrel wildcats finaled

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Two Lea County wildcats have been finaled in the 100 barrel range.

RONADERO CO. INC., has completed its No.1 Rob-Clay State flowing 106 bopd, 11 Mcfd, and no water on a 8/64 in. choke.

The well was completed through perforations at 11,188 ft. to 11,204 ft. after being drilled to 11,210 and plugged back to 11,205.

The well is located 660 from south and 330 from east lines of 23,T-12-S,32e.

HARVEY E. YATES, Roswell, has completed its Young Deep 3 Federal No.4 pumping 98 bopd of 35.5 API, 97 Mcfd., and no water on a 24 hour test. Gas, oil ratio was990:1.

It was completed in the Bone Springs in perforated intervals from 8,611 ft. to 8,884 ft. following treatment with 2,500 gal. acid, and fracture with 60,000 gal. fluid and 120,000 lb. 20/40 sand, and 104 tons of carbon dioxide.

Formation tops were set at: Rustler 1,262 ft.; Cowden Anhydrite 2,358 ft., Yates 2,724 ft.; Seven Rivers 3,150 ft.; Bowers 3,620; Queen 3,886 ft.; Penrose 4,138 ft.; Grayburg 4,424; San Andres 4,758 ft.; Delaware 5,418; Bone Springs 6,098.First Bones Springs stringer was established at 7,898 ft., the second at 8,548 ft., the third at 9,204 ft.

The well is located 1,200 ft. from south and 1,650 from east lines of 3, T-18-S, 32e.

Significant Extension in Fasken (Penn) field

DAVID & INEZ G. FASKEN, Midland, has added a significant extension to the Fasken Penn field 15 miles north of Odessa.

The No.24 ZG, nearly surrounded by Amoco production, extends the pay slightly westward. It completed flowing 244 bopd 39.2 API and 325 Mcfd with no water on a 16/64 in. choke.

The well is a continuation of efforts began about two years ago to develop the field. The operator is now in the process of defining the limits of the field. and is drilling a well approximately every 35 days.

Glasscock wildcat finaled

BADGER OIL CORP., Lafayette, La., has completed its No. 1 Garden Spot as a Wolfcamp discovery pumping 19 bopd of 45.6 API and 12 Mcfd with no bwpd.

The well was completed in perforations from 7,900-7,930 ft. after being drilled to 8100 ft. and plugged back to 8,042 ft. Formation tops in the discovery well were established as 3,980 ft. at the top of the Clearfork; 7,498 for the Dean; 7,468 at the Wolfcamp and 7,860 on the Wolfcamp Reef.

The well is located 467 from north, 1,980 from east lines of Section 8, Block 34, T-4-S, T&P survey, 4 miles sw Garden City.

Getty completes Yoakum County wildcat

GETTY OIL CO., Levelland, has completed its No. 1 Dessie Sawyer as a Devonian oil discovery pumping 20 bopd of 35.9 API with 960 bwpd.

The discovery well was completed through perforatins at 11,511 to 11,523 ft. after being drilled to 11,572 ft. and plugged back to 11,523 ft.

Formation tops were: Wolfcamp, 9,050 ft.; Mississippian, 10,880 ft.; Silurian/Devonian 11,500 ft.

Wildcat re-entry set for Runnels County

MHF OPERATING CO., San Angelo, will re-enter the No. 5 Palmer a former Jennings oil producer in the Ballinger field, three miles west of Ballinger.

The operator will plug back to 4,230 feet for a wildcat test.

The well is located 957 ft. from the southeast and 3,450 ft. from the northeast lines of Section 418, August Kleinecke survey, Abstract 335.

Field activity report

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO., Odessa, has plugged 21 Toborg wells in the Toborg field in Pecos County. The wells were shallow production from 394 ft. to 590 ft. in the confines of the Yates field. The shallow wells are rumored to have been the result of casing leaks in the initial drilling of the Yates field.

EXXON CORP. has scheduled 11 new wells in the Fullerton field in Andrews County. Depth on the wells is reported at 7,400 ft.

CHEVRON USA INC. will drill nine new wells in the Westbrook field in Mitchell County. Well depth on all nine wells is listed at 3,300 ft.

A.K. GUTHRIE OPERATING CO., Big Spring, will drill nine new wells in the Howard-Glasscock field in Howard County. All wells are scheduled to be drilled at depths ranging from 2,500 to 3,200 ft.

Four new wildcats set

GULF OIL CORP., Midland, will drill the No. 213 P.J. Lea et al in Crane County as a wildcat test at 7,900 ft. and as a field well in the Lea South field at 8,400 ft. in the Connell and 6,100 ft. in the Devonian.

Location is 2,200 ft. from north and 780 from west lines of Section 47, Block 32, PSL survey, 13 miles northwest of Crane.

HCW EXPLORATION INC., Midland, has scheduled a wildcat in the Spraberry trend in Martin County. The No.1 Casey is located 467 ft. from the north and 660 ft. from the ease of Section 35, Block 35, T-2-N, T&P survey, 11 miles north/northeast of Stanton.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

HNG to remain independent firm

HOUSTON — Rumors linking Houston Natural Gas Corp. in business combination with any other company are totally unfounded, the company has anounced. As previously announced, HNG intends to remain an independent company and concentrate its activities in its core business of natural gas transmission and oil and gas exploration and production.

Fair Trade in Steel Act a necessity

WASHINGTON — Imports are the main cause of the steel industry's deepest crisis since the 1930s, and the steel import problem grows steadily worse, Donald H. Trautlein, chairman of the American Iron and Steel Institute has told a hearing of the International Trade Subcomittee of the Senate Finance Committee.

Trautlein, chairman of Bethlehem Steel Corp., led a panel of four industry executives who told the Senate panel that passage of the Fair Trade in Steel Act, now before both the Senate and the House, which would limit imports to 15 percent of the domestic steel market, is an urgent necessity.

Boycotts approved by union board

DENVER — Boycotts against the Sun Oil Co. and Texaco have been announced by the oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union (OCAW).

The OCAW Presient Joseph Misbrener said the boycott has been approved by the union's executive board because of strikes by oil workers against the two companies.

Oil, gas drilling permits down for week

DENVER — A total of 1,582 permits to drill wells for oil and gas were issued in the United States during the week ended June 1, reports Petroleum Information Corp.

The total was lower than the 2,216 permits issued the previous week. The decrease is partly a result of the four-day work week in observance of Memorial Day. It was higher than the same week one year ago, also a four-day work week, when 1,394 permits to drill were issued.

New field wildcat permits totaled 169 for the week, compared with 144 permits one year ago.

The weekly total brings to 41,920 the cumultive total of permits issued in the U.S. during 1984. That is an increase of 7.0 percent from the previous year.

Valex Petroleum to sell preferred stock

DENVER — Valex Petroleum Inc. has anounced that it has agreed to sell $12,150,000 of 11 percent convertible preferred stock to American Cometra, Inc. nd a subsidiary of Lambert Brussels Corp. The proceeds will be used to discharge Valex's bank debt and to provide funds for development drilling in the company's California and Kansas properties and for new exploratory activities.

American Cometra is a wholly owned subsidiary of Cometra Oil Co., a Belgian-basd publicly owned oil company which has interests in production in the U.S., Zaire and indonesia. The largest shareholder in both Cometra Oil Co. and Lambert Brussels Corp. is Groupe Bruxelles Lambert S.A., a multinationa concern with extensive industrial and financial holdings.

Park plans proposed for Ector

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County's parks aren't out of the woods yet.

Hopes of transferring the county park system to the city of Odessa received a jolt as City Council wasted little time Monday in discounting the county's proposal.

The fate of the financially strapped department remains in question, as Council members Melissa Hirsch and Nicky Sheets were chosen by the City Council to resume negotiations with the county.

Although the city paid little heed to the county's proposal, continued interest was indicated by two possible alternative plans presented during the morning work session.

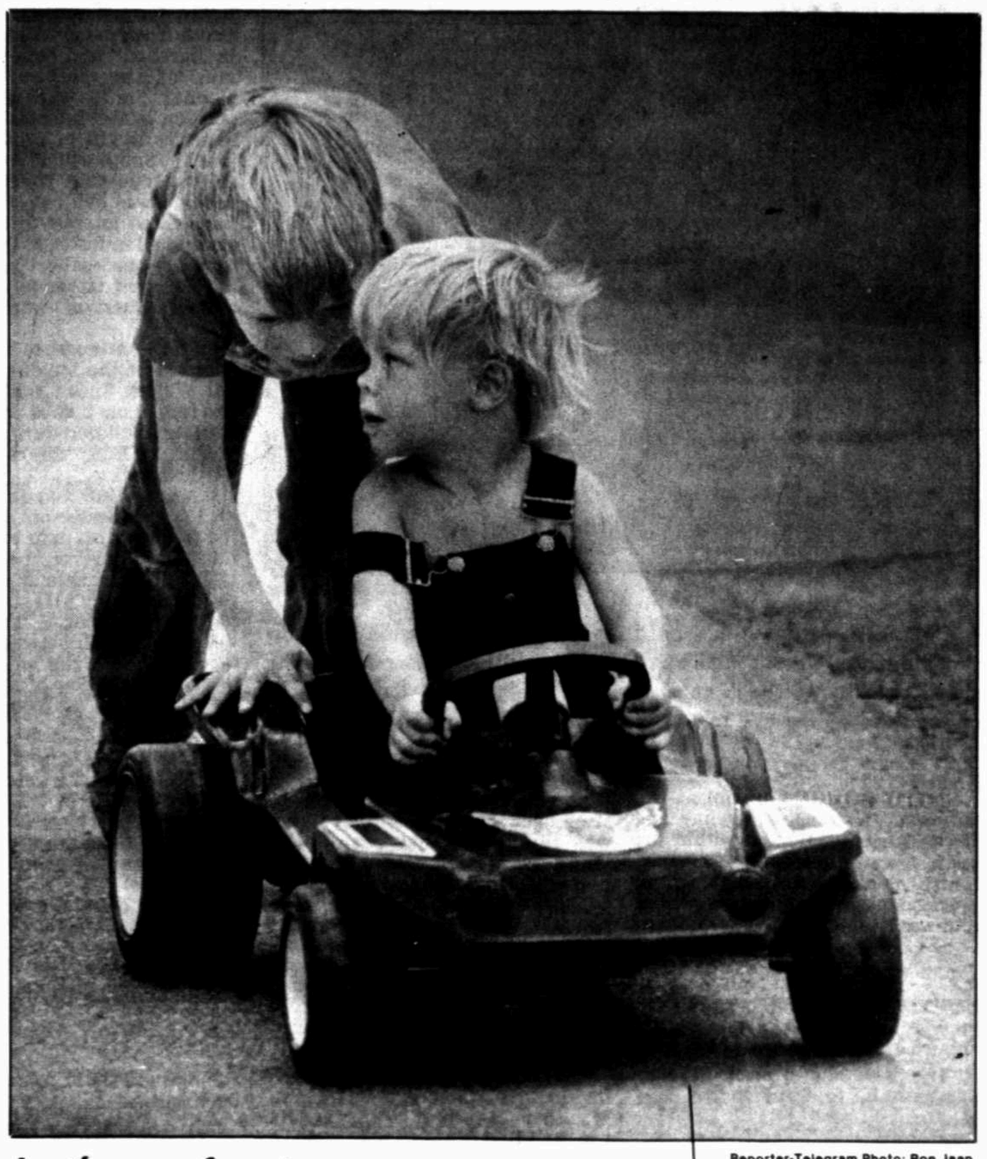

Neither would transfer responsibility for the entire system's operation to the city as did the county's proposal.

Where the county would have had the city take over management of parks in and outside Odessa's limits, the city proposals call for a 50-50 split on only the parks inside city limits after five years. (The county would be left to maintain parks outside Odessa, but in Ector County).

The city's more moderate proposal would otherwise be similar to the county's. Both would have decreased the county's financial responsibility by 10 percent over five years, until the costs of operation were evenly divided.

Even more favorable to the city would be its second alternative proposal, which would adjust the base amount from which the financial breakdown would be determined each year. The other two transfer proposals would set the annual expenditures based on the amount budgeted for operation during the first year of the agreement.

Appraisal Board tries to appease homeowners

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Dora Reynolds was vocal about her displeasure with the reappraised value on her house.

She's afraid taxes might outstrip her income.

Jack Mogle tried to soothe her.

"That your valuation is up from last year doesn't necessarily mean your taxes will be up," Mogle, a member of Midland County Appraisal Review Board and a Realtor, told Mrs. Reynolds on Monday, the first day the Review Board met on 1984 values.

The five-member board will meet weekdays in the Midland County Appraisal District headquarters in Dellwood Mall through mid-July or as long as taxpayers contest 1984 values on their property.

Chief Appraiser Roland Wilkinson's staff this year finished the first re-appraisal of real and personal properties in four years.

Mogle told Mrs. Reynolds that increased valuations normally mean a higher tax base and a resultant decrease in the tax rate, which is the crucial factor in taxation.

THE SIX TAXING entities will be setting tax rates for their respective jurisdictions in August.

"We don't set the taxes or the tax rate," James Rhotenberry, board chairman, told Mrs. Reynolds.

But she said her taxes might be "more than I can possibly squeeze out of my Social Security. They raise my taxes the same as they do a million-dollar man."

Mogle suggested that Mrs. Reynolds, a 75-year-old widow, might attend the budget hearings of the county's six taxing entities: city of Midland, Midland County, Midland and Greenwood public schools, Midland College and the Midland County Hospital District.

Mogle even wrote the script for Mrs. Reynolds:

"LOOK,' " he suggested she tell the boards, " 'I'm on a fixed income. Let's hold the line on the budget.' "

Mrs. Reynolds said she has supported community improvements, such as those connected with the public schools, and has "too much pride for someone to help me...

"I'll manage somehow," she said. "I'll pay it (taxes)."

Mogle also noted that August will be the time "to complain" to the governing boards. That's when the boards will be setting tax rates, which Wilkinson predicts will drop due to the increase in overall valuations.

"We ensure that everybody in the county is taxed equally," Rhotenberry said.

But on her pleas to get a reduction on the appraised value of her house, Mrs. Reynolds got no satisfaction. Her house, valued in 1980 at $32,000, this year was appraised at $51,000, a 37.25 percent increase.

"I don't know whether you did help me or didn't help me. I definitely don't agree with it," she told Mogle. "I'm not happy with it."

Odessan files libel suit stemming from crash stories

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Dallas Morning News, the Associated Press, the San Angelo Standard-Times and the Lubbock Avalanche Journal are being sued for more than $4 million by an Odessa man, who charges the defendants libeled him in an article following the KOSA-TV plane crash.

Floyd Anthony James of Odessa claims that the three newspapers and the wire service published articles falsely implying he was a Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) official and indicating that he said "an FAA investigation indicated the twin-engine Beechcraft 100 Turbo Prop's landing gear was 'in the up position and locked.' " James lost his authorization with the FAA to conduct flight safety programs and administer flight and written tests to prospective pilots after the articles appeared.

He claims the articles were "erroneous, inaccurate, negligent and irresponsible."

The articles James takes issue with ran one day after a story in the Nov. 27 edition of the Odessa American which "states expressly that (James) was not involved with the official investigation of the aforesaid plane crash and clearly indicates (James) was merely responding to hypothetical questions posed by the interviewer."

The Nov. 26, 1983 crash of the KOSA-TV airplane at Midland Regional Airport claimed the lives of six people. James claims the stories ran in Midland, Ector and other near-by counties as well as "the entire state of Texas, and possibly the United States of America."

The petition calls for at least $1 million in general damages and $3 million in exemplary damages, and other costs of the court.

James' petition claims the articles "have injured and will continue to injure the reputation of the plaintiff, expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, cause him extreme financial injury and damage to his personal and professional reputation."

He also claimed that the newspapers and wire service "failed to maintain strict accuracy" in their articles because "of the greed-motivated desire to give their publication the appearance of containing original information rather than information which had simply been plagarized from another."

Does moon affect human behavior?

Not all Midlanders agree with this ancient theory

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

"Lunatic," which means moonstruck, comes from the Latin word "luna," meaning moon. Since early times man has associated strange behavior with full moons.

But do modern-day authorities believe in this ancient theory? For each Midlander who swears full moons affect people in mysterious ways, another can be found who scoffs at the idea.

Lt. Earl Luckey of the Midland Police Department has been in law enforcement for 27 years and is convinced the department has many more cases than usual on nights of full moons.

"I know we do. That's when you have your violent crimes, crimes of passion, murders.

"I think anybody who is weak it affects," he continued. Arnold L. Lieber, M.D., a Miami pshychiatrist who wrote "The Lunar Effect," agreed. Lieber said the adverse affects of a full moon are especially evident among alcoholics, drug addicts, those with criminal tendencies and the mentally unstable.

He believes that a lunar cycle that affects tides can also affect a human being consisting of 80 percent water.

Luckey could not produce statistics to back his beliefs, but Katrina Neagle, spokesperson for Midland Memorial Hospital, said she looked into the concept when she first started working at the hospital. After noticing suicide attempts and complaints of migraine headaches seemed to come in streaks, she researched several years of hospital records to find a connection with the moon.

"There really wasn't any pattern, and I was so disappointed because I was certain there would be," she said. Ms.Neagle added, however, that she had not checked into incidents of assault or violence.

Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith is also unconvinced that the moon affects human behavior. "My personal opinion is that a full moon as such simply creates better visability at night. Maybe that's a factor. Otherwise I doubt if there's much of a relationship."

Smith also said statistics were not easily accessible.

Irene Clause, director of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, supports the full-moon theory. "I can't give you any statistics. I can tell you that, yes, we always have more people on a full moon. Always. I keep track of when the full moons are and we gear up for it because we know it's going to happen."

Nan Gordan, Midland Rape Crisis Center, isn't so sure. "When I talk to the police officers, they really believe in it. I don't know whether to believe in it or not."

After checking dates when rape victims called the hotline, she said she didn't see a correlation between busy nights and full moons. But, she explained, the majority of rape victims do not call immediately after the incident.

"I think I can say there may be some relationship," said Steve Thomas, who teaches behavioral science at Midland College. Thomas is a former clinic director at Odessa Mental Health Center. "We always noticed during full moons that crisis intervention hotline calls would go up and the types of crises people experienced seemed to be more intense during the full moon."

But Ken Wolf, program director for the Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation, which also operates a suicide hotline, disputes that statement. "I don't know of any relationship at all. I haven't looked at statistics, but other people before me have."

Bob Cox, who teaches psychiatric nursing at Midland College, added, "Most people who work in these areas say there are more admissions to psychiatric hospitals and things like that, but statistics don't seem to support that."

So the question remains: Is the fault in our stars or in ourselves?

Childhood memories unlocked by return to home town

Not much had changed in the small gathering of homes and businesses since I was a child.

The school where I learned my ABCs and experienced the pains of childish romances was still there. So was the Baptist Church. And the Methodist Church. And the swimming pool. And the Buckhorn.

They all unlocked memories I had stored away for 20 years.

The fast-paced turmoil of the spring season — those endless days of mechanically writing one story after another — had ended. I was pondering what the next chapter of my life would be when someone asked where I came from and how I got to this point. I couldn't answer. I had forgotten.

I hadn't been to Goldsmith in ages, although it's only a few miles down the road. I spent the first 11 years of my life there, and it was curiosity as to how it looked today compared to the way I remembered it that drove me there.

My dad worked for one of those black-gold companies and my entire youth was spent in various "camps." They were minute smudges of civilization on an horizon of emptiness.

Each camp looked like a residential street picked up by a tornado and dropped intact into the middle of a flat prairie. The houses were alike: white asbestos fronts melding into the next. The streets were lined with trees, and the company built parks with tennis courts.

The workers had poured in from around the country after World War II, and these camps served as a melting pot. Situated in out-of-the-way places, the "camp" people became a miniature community. They substituted for the missing family units and some became closer than their own brothers and sisters.

The adults seemed to be of a similar age range — child-bearing. And that's what the women did while the men worked. There were children of all ages romping up and down the streets, and we never lacked for playmates.

My earliest memories go back to pre-school days. There were no day care centers. We spent the morning playing with other kids, ate lunch, took a nap and then hit the yards again to see who was outside for a game of cowboys and Indians.

Then came school. My mother dropped me off the first day at the brick building and from then on (for 12 years) I rode the bus. The only highlight out of that sweltering day was getting my diploma for completing the first day and urging me to complete the next 12 years.

The school is still there, but not quite as I remembered it. Something about the front of it was different.

And the Baptist Church looked like it had grown. I remember the first Sunday they opened a new addition. We began referring to the various sections as "The Old Part" and "The New Part." There were some pleasant summers of Vacation Bible School (refreshments were the best part with cherry Kool-Aid).

I also spent a few hours at the Methodist Church each week, but not for religion. Although there were times I thought I was being sent there for punishment, it was only for piano lessons and music theory. The teacher was good; my fingers weren't.

I couldn't believe the Buckhorn was still standing amid the rubble of other long forgotten buildings. It was a local drinking spot back then and, from the number of pickups parked around it, apparently still is.

My favorite place looked the same: The swimming pool and community house and park with its tall trees. Each summer my mother dragged her three offspring out of bed to stand shivering in the early morning wetness of a cold concrete pool. My mother, meanwhile, sweated on the bleachers and praised us when we had mastered a difficult stroke, like floating. It never took me long to adjust to the water. I splashed around to earn my turtle, frog and fish badges, which were sewn to my swimsuits.

There were Brownie and Girl Scout meetings at the community house and sometimes outside cookouts with hot dogs and s'mores melting onto the grass.

I drove up and down the few streets and was surprised at how the town looked. Drilling equipment was piled up; old buildings were falling down. It was a classless society back then, and maybe that was good for a child. I never knew I was in a different class than others.

I didn't find the answer to what might come next for me. Goldsmith was only a chapter in my life, and I have no intention of living it again.

Besides, I don't like to read books more than once.

Furniture store in Marshall legacy of its founder

MARSHALL (AP) — One of Marshall's most historically significant landmarks is not identified by a historical marker, is not listed on the state historical society's register and is not included in any known tourist guides, maps or scenic tours of the Marshall area.

It does, however, still sell some of the area's best furniture.

Located in downtown Marshall at the southeast corner of Washington Avenue and Rusk Street, Smith Furniture Co. is the legacy of its former owner and proprietor, the late Edward Noonan Smith, who built it in 1910 with handmade bricks.

The building was known as the E.N Smith block and rightfully so, for in many ways, the large, handsome edifice reflected its founder's colorful style, ambitious spirit and successful presence in Marshall.

HOWEVER, LIKE his furniture company, Smith's self-made career had to start from scratch.

Born April 19, 1885 in Somerset, Ky., Smith lost two fathers to violent deaths before he was a year old. According to Smith's eldest son Wesley, young Edward's natural father died in a mining explosion before he was born and his new stepfather died on the railroad before the child's first birthday.

Reared on his grandparents' 70-acre farm near Somerset, Smith got as far as the seventh grade in school before he and his mother, Nannie E. Lynch, moved to Longview in 1898.

Two years later, they moved to Marshall where the widow Lynch managed the old Capitol Hotel, which was at Bolivar and East Houston street off the southeast corner of the courthouse square.

A couple of years later, she quit the hotel and ran a boarding house on Bolivar Street, which catered to railroad engineers.

It was during those years that young E.N. Smith began his long road to success as a peddler, going door to door, selling what he could from a valise carpet bag.

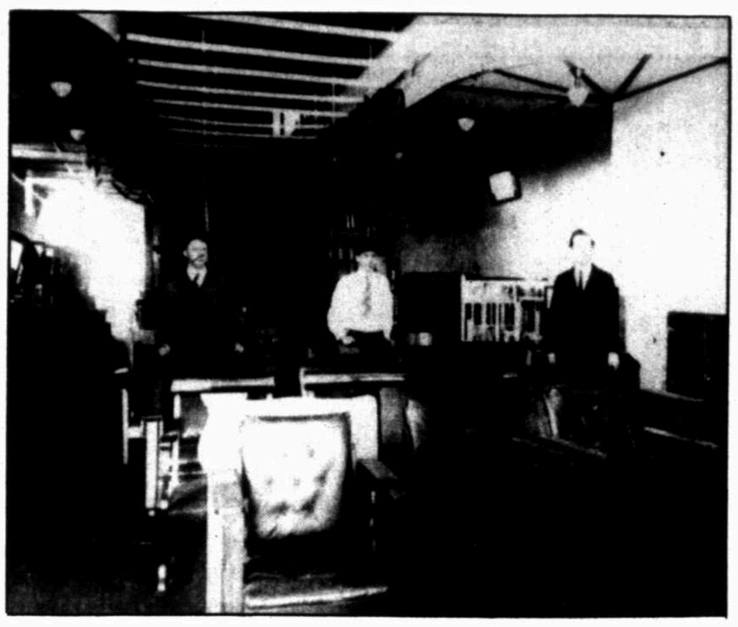

"HE WAS A peddling jewelry, eye glasses, watches and small carpets or throw rugs," Wesley Smith said. "After a while, he bought a horse and buckboard and got to be pretty well known in Harrison County."

The sales experience he received from those years of peddling, together with the business contacts and money he made doing it, led Smith to open the first automobile dealership in Marshall — selling Hudsons and Cadillacs — around the turn of the century.

"He did not own the first car, but he sold the first car in Marshall," recalls Wesley. "It was about 1906 and I think it was a Maxwell."

According to Ann Woods, sales manager at Smith Furniture Co., E.N. Smith also brought the first gasoline-powered Cadillac to the Marshall area. Unfortunately, there wasn't any gasoline around at the time.

Ms. Woods said the car was shipped in by rail, but the shippers forgot to include a barrel of gasoline or gas can. Thus it happened that the first Cadillac to roll into Marshall had to be pushed all the way from the train depot to the lot, she said.

SMITH BOUGHT his lot at the corner of Washington Avenue and Rusk Street in 1910 and within the year, began construction of E.N. Smith block, contracting for the bricks from a local maker whose kiln was located near Wiley College.

An editorial printed in the News Messenger shortly after the building was completed that year hailed Smith as "a well-known Marshall property owner who has succeeded by his own efforts...a young man, full of vigor, determination and laudable ambition."

The editorial also noted that Smith's construction of the E.N. Smith block demonstrated his "faith in Marshall" and concluded, "It is men of the timber of Edward Noonan Smith who (w)in in high position in the financial world, and it needs no gift of prophecy to tell that Mr. Smith will do so."

How true that forecast was to become was evidenced by Smith's foresighted interest in the budding gas and oil industry at that time. His sons say the earliest records they have of their father buying mineral rights in Harrison County are dated 1914.

Smith continued to sell automobiles out of the building until 1916, but Wesley Smith said his father also rented out a good portion of the two-story building during that time, so that by 1915, "the rent had paid for the building."

It was in 1916 that Smith gave up his Cadillac dealership and changed the sign over his door to Smith Furniture Co. However, it was not until 1929 that he remodelled the building to make the fullest use of its immense interior — knocking out the dividing wall between the furniture showroom and what had been the rented portion of the structure and expanding his company to fill the building.

NEVERTHELESS, SMITH never lost his love of the automobile, said Wesley. 'He really believed in the automobile. He thought automobiles did more to change this country than airplanes or telephones or anything."

According to Wesley, E.N. was something of a daredevil in his day, but even he had limits. "When he was young, he did things like race outboard motors," Wesley said. "At one point in time, he built a homemade, customized race car in his basement. It took him two years to build and the first time he took it out, he took it up to 90 mph and it scared him so bad that he sold it the next day. That was 1919 and he thought that was too fast."

Consequently, E.N. Smith took to more leisurely and profitable uses of his cars. Looking over several old, faded photographs of his father at the wheel of his favorite Maxwell, posing with carloads of pretty young ladies and well-dressed couples, Wesley recalled, "He used to take folks — mostly couples — out courting to Scottsville and back for $10 on Sundays. He said he sometimes made eight or nine trips back and forth on a Sunday."

Smith was also a big hunting and fishing enthusiast and spent a lot of time on Caddo Lade, Wesley said.

E.N. married Bessie Edmondson, a bookkeeper in his furniture store, in 1928, just before the onset of the Great Depression, but even as the rest of the world plunged into hard times, Smith continued to prosper, due to his gas and oil investments.

"HE GOT TO be a fairly good-sized independent in the '30s and '40s," Wesley said. "He operated (oil) leases all over East Texas...By the end of World War II, he was a millionaire."

Despite his many financial successes, Smith continued to run his furniture company himself until he died in March 1981 at the age of 95.

Board member Ed Vogler suggested she tell the taxing boards "to quit spending money."

"I'm too old," she replied, "to start telling people what to do."

JOHN CLENNEY, at 69, isn't. He suggested that the appraised value of a lot next to his house at 1111 E. Magnolia Ave. was over-valued.

"They raised it 400 percent (from $900 to $3,600). It doesn't amount to very much," he said moments before he met with the board. "I think it's worth less now than it was then."

Clenney told the board he consulted with a real estate office about his lot. A representative told him that a sale price of $1,000 to $1,500 " 'would be a big price if you could find a buyer. Property is not selling at all in that (east) part of town.'

"I know it's not much," said Clenney, who noted that he "can't do very much with that limited (Social Security) income. I don't think it's right at all. I don't think it's fair."

The Review Board unanimously agreed to drop the appraised valuation to $1,350 — from 40 cents to 15 cents a square foot.

"Do you think that's fair?" Mogle asked.

"Yes, I do," said Clenney.

"We'll have to apply that (formula) to the whole area," said the chief appraiser.

Another homeowner, Pat Fletcher, told the board an unimproved lot he owns in the Alamo Heights Addition was appraised at $600 in 1976, $6,000 in 1980 and almost $9,000 in 1984.

"The value is too high," he said. "There's nothing here at all but mesquite. It's just a dead, dormant (and entrapped) area."

"It has value," Mogle said.

"The only value it has is if someone wants it," replied Fletcher.

The board dropped the appraised value to $3,600.

NOT ALL WHO sought relief were appeased. Anita Faubion of 311 Mariana Ave. told the Review Board that she and her husband, Charles, "are going to put it (the house) on the market" after the board made adjustments and corrections and dropped the appraised value from $84,000 to $70,880 — still higher than she thought reasonable.

"It will not sell for that," she said.

Review Board member Sara Carr Newsom, a real estate broker, said the re-set value seemed "very reasonable" to her.

Mrs. Faubion said she and her husband had paid $11,500 for the property 10 years ago and had added a swimming pool and a garage.

"We thought we could live here for the rest of our lives," Mrs. Faubion said. "But now, at this rate, we won't be able to afford to."

Ginger Chick, who now lives in Hobbs, N.M., contested the $60,000 on a house which she and her husband, Daniel, bought from her parents "at a stated value of $50,000."

"THE HOUSE (at 407 W. Dengar Ave.) is the best house on the block...in a higher lower-middle class area," she said. "We've kept it up." Value of the house, built by her father in 1948 and moved to the Dengar Avenue location in 1959, and land was set at $51,430 by the board. The house is 11 years older than the date the appraiser had used in computing its value.

Another taxpayer, O.C. Boswell of 1713 Princeton Ave., complained about the $53,030 value set on his house.

"You didn't go up on that when I was working, but when I went on Social Security (the value increased)," he said.

The Review Board affirmed the appraised value of the house.

The Review Board tabled any decision on setting a new value on E.B. White Jr.'s house at 905 Douglas Ave. In a prepared letter to the board, White said the appaiser did not take into account the "general deterioration of the immediate area." The house was appraised at $102,650.

Prior to scheduling a meeting with the appraisal board, Wilkinson is asking the property owners first to meet with an appraiser to settle the dispute. Should that fail, the taxpayer may request an appointment before the Review Board.

"In any reappraisal of over 105,000 properties, there will be some errors," he noted. However, Wilkinson estimated the percentage of error to be "way less than one-half of 1 percent."

Protests may be filed as late as July 16.

The appraisal district based appraised values on more than 2,000 sales in Midland County, made market-proven adjustments and applied local building construction costs and depreciation schedules to properties.

"Taxpayers contesting values will be required to furnish this type of evidence," Wilkinson said, "before serious consideration may be given to reducing valuation."

Gold lured Aussies

When gold was discovered in California in 1848, Australians were among the first to join the rush, and in the following three years some 7,000 Australians and New Zealanders migrated to California.

Bentsen: Democrats need to be more united

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, who says he's not interested in being the Democratic vice presidential nominee, believes the Democrats are "in the process of forming a firing squad in a circle."

Bentsen, who spoke Monday to the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association meeting, said the party should become more united as the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco draws near.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said that if the general elections were held today, the Republicans would probably end up victorious because the current rivalry between the Democratic presidential contenders has left the party divided.

"The Democrats are in the process of forming a firing squad in a circle," he told reporters.

Bentsen was questioned about reports that he would be a possible running mate on the Democratic ticket.

"Let me tell you this, the Democratic Party can do worse. And they probably will," he said.

Bentsen, a frequently mentioned possible choice for the post, later told reporters that "it's not going to happen. I'm happy doing what I'm doing," he said.

Bentsen instead predicted that U.S. Sen. Gary Hart will be the Democratic vice presidential choice, with the presidential nomination already "sewn up" by former Vice President Walter Mondale.

Bentsen predicted that 1984 "will be a good year tax-wise for TIPRO." But he warned the oilmen their industry may be an easy target of a new federal tax bill he said may crop up in 1985.

Crime Stoppers seeks burglaries' information

Midland Crime Stoppers is seeking information on several business burglaries which have occurred in Midland County.

In May of this year, investigators with the Midland County Sheriff's Department discovered that burglars had entered Rig Services Inc., by removing screws and bending the exterior sheet metal wall. The burglars then removed blank payroll checks in the name of Rig Services Inc., which are now being forged and cashed at local stores in Midland, Odessa, Ft. Stockton and Lubbock. The burglars also took a Smith Corona Coronomatic typewriter and a Paymaster check printer.

Several other burglaries have been reported where the burglars entered the same way, although no property has been taken. Investigators believe the same persons are responsible for several burglaries in Midland.

If you have information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the persons responsible, Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward this week only.

Crime Stoppers will also pay cash rewards for information on other felony crimes.

PARKS

A major stumbling block in the negotiations will likely be which entity picks up the tab for new equipment needed to keep the parks maintained. (Of 42 parks in the system, 27 reportedly are within city limits).

Assistant City Manager Chester Nolen said that more than $300,000 would need to be spent during the next year to upgrade the county's equipment. The entire department has suffered in the aftermath of budget cuts of more than $500,000 made by Ector County Commissioners from what had originally been a budget of more than $2 million.

The bulk of the parks budget cuts were made in November as county commissioners sliced $1.5 million to avoid projected deficit spending and replenish cash reserves reduced by large cash expenditures. More jobs and funds were lost after voters approved the tax rollback, costing the county another $880,000.

With the reduced funding, the parks department's operations have been depleted. "A lot of this equipment is outdated. A lot of it is sitting idle," said Nolen.

There was also some question by Nolen on the need for 11 supervisors to manage the work of 16 underlings. "Possibly, the system might be a little top heavy," he said.

Using the current cost per acre in Midland for the city to maintain its system as a measuring stick, Nolen estimated another $441,000 would be needed annually to keep the parklands in shape.

While there was some doubt by council members on the advisability of taking on the troubled department, City Manager John Harrison said " I think there is a basis for further negotiations."

But Harrison added he was not advocating the transfer, noting "We have enough headaches now."

Aside from its financial problems, the county may be faced with a dilemma as the Mission Dorado area — in the city of Odessa, but Midland County — develops a need for parks. It is doubtful Ector County Commissioners would approve parks for use by residents of Midland County, while the city might.

The city will be operating parks "in the immediate future," said Harrison, as a $261,000 grant is expected to be approved soon for a park in the southern part of the county on Monahan's Draw. He also noted that city residents have the greatest interest in the continued operation of the parks system, so the city government should see to the system's continued development.

The city was facing economic hard times in 1936 when it relinquished its parks to the county. Since that time, Ector County has flourished until its recent difficulties.

It appears management of the system may again fall to the city, which apparently now is more stable financially. "Times change. Circumstances change," said Harrison. "We might oughta get down the road with it."

Neighbors help victims of fire

From Staff Reports

"It's something you don't see very often," Fire Chief James Roberts said of the neighbors who pitched in to salvage the uninsured belongings of a family whose rented house at 2404 Northtown Court was virtually destroyed in a Monday afternoon fire that left one firefighter hospitalized.

Fireman Dave McClure was in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning and was expected to be released sometime today. McClure suffered heat exhaustion and smoke inhalation.

The W.O. Mathis family was not at home when the blaze of undetermined origin broke out about 2 p.m. Six fire department units responded to the call and used 15,000 gallons of water extinguishing the fire. Firemen remained on the scene more than four hours.

Roberts said about 20 to 25 neighbors gathered and began cleaning the family's household and belongings as they were carried from the house. "A lot of it that was saved wouldn't have been otherwise," he added. "It makes you feel good."

Odessan treated for stab wounds

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — An Odessa woman was treated for stab wounds and released from a local hospital after an early-morning fight with a female friend, police said.

Cheryl Dearing Deaton was wounded several times in the back and suffered smaller cuts to her wrist, arm and shoulder after an argument with a friend in a parking lot at the Antlers Motel, 1102 W. 2nd St., at about 1:30 a.m.

Ms. Deaton told police she and her friend "had been feuding all week." No charges have been made, and the suspect's name was not released.

Police Round-up

In other police reports, a 7-Eleven convenience store at 3527 Oakwood was robbed early this morning by an unknown male who escaped with about $34.

The man walked into the store at 4:30 a.m. wearing a white T-shirt over his head with holes cut out for his eyes, according to 7-Eleven employee John Fierro. Showing Fierro a gun, the suspect ordered him to empty the cash register into a white plastic 7-Eleven bag. After handing over the money, Fierro was ordered to walk outside to the gas pumps, at which point the suspect escaped down an alley west of the store.

The suspect was reported as wearing faded blue jeans, a white baseball T-shirt with red sleeves, and black leather gloves.

A suit in contrasting patterns of wool with long jacket is featured in Herrera's collection.

'Tried and true' styles updated

NEW YORK (AP) — Designers Mary McFadden and Carolina Herrera offered few new styles in their fall collections, apparently preferring to introduce variations on past tried-and-true themes.

This is not to say that either was dull, since the fabrics and embroidered detail in both collections kept them from being repetitious.

The Herrera silhouette remained unchanged: sleek, sophisticated and form-fitting, wonderful for those completely devoid of bumps and bulges.

Likewise, Ms. McFadden stuck to her Grecian-styled mari pleated gowns and dresses, accented gold braided ropes and detailed crewel work.

Mrs. Herrera basically takes one style — long sleeves puffed at the shoulder with inverted pleats and lots of back kick pleats — and uses it again and again in blouses, jackets, coats, skirts, and eveningwear.

Contrast colors are big in the Herrera collection for fall and stand out in a trio of two-tone plum, periwinkle and moss jersey dresses teamed with matching fur-trimmed wool coats. Dyed beaver and fox trim in the same colors were nice additions to a simple coat design.

The collection was brightened by the use of paisleys and tiger prints in elegant cocktail and evening designs.

The paisleys were a knockout in a lush burnt sienna and gold lame embroidered tunics worn over gray velvet trousers and back-slit skirts and the tiger print perky in a purple and black silk cocktail dress accented with a black velvet hip wrap.

Herrera evening wear was sedately elegant in one-shouldered, back sculpted, and strapless black velvet gowns sporting royal blue, emerald and sienna bodices, dripping in sequined detail.

Traditional black and white was exquisitely used in a cocktail-length "theatre suit" that sported a deep V-cut gown with velvet shoulder train and a black and white satin houndstooth jacket.

Sleek gowns were also offered in emerald and aubergine velvet teamed with short, sequined tafetta jackets. The emerald gown was stunning with a silver "shattered crystal" design embroidered on a matching satin jacket.

Taffeta and satin embroidered gowns were also the highlight of Ms. McFadden's collection, along with her signature mari designs, gowns filled with tiny columns of permanent pleats.

A claret collection of mari-pleated gowns in strapless, Grecian draped and one-shouldered styles were accented with jeweled insets, sequins, and gold braided ropes that hung from the bodice. Other mari gowns were teemed with sequined-studded tunic tops in rose, violet and forest green.

Particularly pretty and feminine was a black mari gown with contrasting white balloon sleeves and gold woven shoulder braids, which looked like something Robin Hood's Maid Marion might wear.

As a change from the mari, Ms. McFadden offered a unique black chiffon gown with velvet stripes in a soft combination of rose, chocolate brown and sea green. The gown had a back drape and was accented by a single black tassel.

Also nice was the taffeta collection which sported double-flounce, bubble skirts and was nicest in a black-tinged claret skirt teamed with a gold leaf-printed brocade jacket. The taffeta skirt was also shown in white a black mari pleated bodice, trimmed in a thin gold-braided ropes at the waist.

Ms. McFadden, who likes to mix heavy textured fabrics with airy chiffons, was less successful when teaming mari pleats in somber fall colors with chiffon harem pants, sporting prints in dull rose, lilac and cocoa.

One such offering was a busy, plum pleated tunic worn over a cocoa-and-rose printed chiffon harem pants.

For daytime, Ms. McFadden offered few titillating styles: ottoman box coats with leaf-patterned blouses and straight skirts, and chemise-styled dresses with gold embroidered trim.

She even dragged out several navy pleated and garnet brocade knicker outfits, in style several seasons ago.

But Ms. McFadden has never been known for her casual outfits since mari pleats are a bit ostentatious in the daylight.

Even wrinkles can't take popularity out of linen

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Everyone has an opinion on linen.

"I hate the wrinkles," says one model, turning up her nose.

"Yes, it looks creased — but that doesn't mean it looks sloppy," Harry Banks, president of the leading linen import company, says.

"Only customers who understand linen can appreciate it. It drives everyone else crazy," concedes Margaret Ussery, a sportswear buyer.

Linen, a product of the flax plant and the oldest known textile fiber, has been around for 6,000 years.

This spring, after creeping back into our wardrobes slowly for years, thanks to designers including Ralph Lauren, Calvin Klein and Gene Ewing, linen has been rediscovered by almost everyone. And, like it or not, linen proves once again that neither wrinkles, cost nor even polyester can keep a good fabric down.

Banks, president of Hamilton Adams linen importer, says that linen imports have "doubled in the last two years. Nineteen eighty-two was a good year, 1983 was 50 percent better and in 1984, there's no way we can buy enough linen to meet the demand. There's not enough linen in the world to meet the demand."

So, what is so great about linen? It may not be crisp, but it is comfortable, and to Gene Ewing of Bis, its popularity represents a "liberation" for fashion-conscious women of all ages.

"I think it's a much more informal way of life," the designer says, "and it starts in the mind. It's an attitude."

But what about the wrinkles? For years, Americans wanted to look pressed. There still are many women who will wear linen only when they will be standing up all night.

To this, Ewing asks incredulously, "Where did we get all this starch in this country? The Pilgrims — did they do it?"

Many of her designs — easy styles in neutrals, pastels and, for spring-summer, bright shocker colors like hot pink and lime green — are made of Polish linen, which she calls "the most beautifully structured linen for the price in the world."

Polish linen is coarser and slightly less expensive than Belgian linen or Irish linen, which is the most expensive, but, like all those fabrics, it takes dye beautifully.

One of her more recent innovations was the creation of "wrinkled linen" — a process that was developed "at the laundry" to crease the cloth from the outset.

That gives purpose to the wrinkles, but, as Margaret Ussery points out, linen's wearability comes from the very fact that it creases.

"The wrinkles show that a garment is pure linen," she says. If it stayed perfectly crisp and stiff, "it wouldn't be functional."

Linen is costly, primarily because it is so hard to produce. It takes seven days of soaking in especially pure water before flax plants disgorge their fibers.

Linen breathes, absorbing moisture and drying faster than any other fabric. That is the reason we have been using linen handkerchiefs for hundreds of years, and it also is the reason linen is so cool in the summer.

Another linen bonus is durability.

Linen is the strongest naturally occurring cellulose fiber, three times as strong as cotton. Its only rival in strength is silk.

But if you would like your linen blouse to last one lifetime, proper care is essential.

Ussery recommends "dry cleaning, only." Banks says, "Dry clean it, or wash it in the warm cycle and line dry. But don't boil it; that's for tablecloths."

Big, baggy and blustery is the shape of things to come if fashion designer Willi Smith has his way, judging from a recent fall fashion in New York.

Fashion may famish

'Ridiculously practical' steps in

NEW YORK (AP) — Big. Baggy. Blustery. Just when it appeared fashion was moving toward more feminine, flirty looks, New York's top designers are serving up the three B's for fall and winter.

Williwear, the regular opener for New York's whirlwind two weeks of fashion shows, was its usual jarring self Monday as designer Willi Smith presented what he called his "Sub-Urban" look.

Ear-smashing music and strange videos introduced even stranger fashions. Bold color combinations, mixed patterns, complicated cuts and exaggerated shapes are Smith's look for fall.

Versions of the look will be offered by most fashion houses this season. Expect huge greatcoats, baggy pants, haphazard hemlines and oversized vests, the legacy of the now-waning Japanese influence on fashion.

Smith has been doing bagginess for several seasons, and it doesn't really improve with repetition. However, it's always interesting to see his presentation.

Segments of the collection were introjuced by video non-sequiturs, a film of a woman doing her laundry at a laundromat or one of an old plane piloted by a woman whose flying goggles and scarf were reminiscent of a World War I flying ace.

These distractions puzzled, more than enlightened, the elbow-to-elbow audience.

But for rainy days, Williwear offered a collection of cheery raincoats in pastel pinks or yellows. They fell nearly to the ankle, with great squared side pockets that reappeared on almost every coat in the collection.

Smith continues to favor the cowl neck for sweaters, but showed a new fascination with the standard ribbed sweater, shown for men and women in nubby flecked navy or brown with long, exaggerated sleeves or dropped shoulders.

This neo-preppie top was beautifully paired with Smith's two most successful skirts, a simple tweed circle skirt or a slimmed-down straight skirt with twin front and back double pleats.

For outerwear, Smith showed houndstooth greatcoats in startling pink or mustard and gray. Slits up the back allowed free movement. A big shawl collar and rolled cuffs gave this look a bold aggressiveness that had added impact with big striped pants and vests.

Smith's favorite winter fabrics was a raw nubby wool that looked warm but scratchy. Vests were voluminous and bag-ladyish with square pockets, asymmetrical front and back and odd flaps that sprang out of nowhere.

Then there were the baggy jumpsuits in stripes or rough tweeds with double-breasted coat treatment at the neckline and baggy pants nipped just above the ankle with side button and pleat.

The only redeeming feature of such bagginess is practicality. For those prone to weight problems, an extra 50 pounds here or there easily could be accommodated.

The climax of a show in fashion parlance is the "bride," the best creations the designer has been saving for last. Here, loudspeakers blared a jarring rock variation on "The Wedding March" as the models stepped out in sheared and long-haired rabbit coats dyed lavender, pink and vanilla.

As the models danced around looking like overgrown Easter bunnies, Smith appeared on stage. On his T-shirt was written "Ridiculously Practical," a statement that could be applied to the bunnysuits only if the sentiment was reversed.

Runners advised to work up slow sweat

Started a running program? Or maybe thinking about starting one but haven't become motivated yet?

"As with many parts of life, motivation is the key to success in running," said Sharon Barbano, national class distance runner and author of "The Women's 10K Running Guide from L'eggs."

"Beginners should work their way gradually into a running program to keep their frustration low and their enthusiasm high," she said.

"Running should be a way to relax and should not become another stress in your life," she added. "If you feel tired on a day that you've planned a hard run, run easier and shorten the distance. Sometimes it helps to vary your pace and style to fit your mood."

Other running tips from Ms. Barbano include:

— Take a different route. Allow the luxury of stopping along the way to savor new surroundings.

— Run with a friend. Support from friends helps keep runners going.

— Take a few days off. A short break from running can help renew interest in the activity.

Future may bring surprising styles

Copley News Service

It's the year 2001 and you need something to wear. What will it be?

A spray-on peel-off latex bodysuit — or an electric coat with a temperature control?

How about a limited edition paper dress, painted and signed by an outstanding artist, or an inexpensive disposable dress you pull from a tube?

Or would you prefer stepping into a booth for a few seconds and letting a computer design a garment to suit your body measurements, occupation and environment?

That's what some of today's top fashion designers think we'll be doing or wearing 17 years from now. Their predictions, and some of the reasons behind them, are presented in an intriguing and colorful book, "Fashion: 2001," by Lucille Khornak of New York, a former model who became a photographer and then an author. Here are some additional findings from the book:

— Zandra Rhodes believes that men and women will color their hair increasingly as a way of camouflaging age. Hers is usually pink or green.

— Donna Karan and Louis Dell'Olio, designers of the Anne Klein line, think "you'll take something, wrap it around yourself and you're dressed. It's a question of how you put it together."

— Oleg Cassini sees a gown "which conceals and reveals a body in top form physically, the only jewelry being a hammered copper half-moon necklace built into the dress, all inspired by the purity of ancient Greece."

— Willi Smith thinks everybody will wear a solar belt pack on a "base garment" ordered from a computer. This base garment can be colored with crayons or painted.

— Jean Claude Caumont believes we'll be wearing "a T-shirt (which takes the place of a double-breasted jacket) and a pair of jeans."

DEAR ABBY

Parents' move would raise daughter's rent

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I are very depressed because of our daughter and son-in-law, who are tenants in the two-family house we share.

We have decided to move to Arizona because I've just retired and we want to get away from the cold New England winters. Neither my wife nor I is in the best of health.

I told them I am going to sell the house and buy a home in Arizona. I offered to pay them for the wall-to-wall carpeting and other improvements they put into the house.

Well, my Dear Abby, you would not believe the way they took this news! They are upset because they will have to pay higher rent somewhere else, and they haven't spoken to us since.

Do you think we should stay in Connecticut because of them? They both have civil service jobs and are not hurting financially. — RETIRED

DEAR RETIRED: Don't give your selfish daughter and her equally selfish husband a second thought. Head for Arizona with no apologies, and happy retirement.

DEAR ABBY: Sue (not her real name) and I are engaged to be married. We've gone together for nearly two years and are both in our mid-20s. The other night she said she would like to get me high on pot just to see how it would affect me. I have never even tried pot and I told Sue I had no desire to.

She said she had smoked it occasionally with the guy she went with before she met me, and when she was high on pot, the sex was really terrific — not that she didn't enjoy sex with me, but it was incredible with pot!

I told her I didn't care to smoke pot, and if she did, she had the wrong guy. Abby, Sue had never mentioned pot before, and her sudden interest in it worries me. What do you make of this? And what should I do? — BEWILDERED

DEAR BEWILDERED: Initiate an honest, open discussion with Sue, making it crystal clear that you're not interested in smoking pot.

As Sue said, it may enhance the sexual experience, but hear this: Studies done with male laboratory animals show that the principal chemical in marijuana (THC) lowers the level of testosterone, the principal male sex hormone, decreases sperm count and causes abnormalities in the sperm.

Also, one of the most widely accepted misconceptions about marijuana is that it is not physically or psychologically addictive. Not true. It is.

I don't mean to preach, but people who start using drugs rarely have a prayer.

DEAR ABBY: Re "One Man's Opinion," the man who refused to hire anyone with a beard or droopy mustache:

Listen to this one: My grandson teaches in a Texas high school. Just before Christmas vacation he started to grow a mustache. The principal called him into his office and said, "Mark (not his real name), you know we must be an example to these young kids, so when you return from your vacation I don't want to see any mustache."

Most of the male teachers in that school either smoke or chew snuff. They also murder the King's English with "I seen," "He don't," "Have went," "Me and Joe did this or that," but not a word has ever been said to these teachers concerning their grammar.

AT WIT'S END

Scales can change weight more than diets

By ERMA BOMBECK

Do you remember where you were and what you were doing the day you climbed onto a bathroom scale and it weighed you at what you wanted to weigh?

Most of us do. It's hard to describe the exhilaration of that moment when you look down through your feet and find a number that looks like a golf score instead of a bowling score.

And who among us cannot recall the disappointment when, minutes later, we step on another scale and realize that if that figure is true, we should be an 85-foot redwood.

Oh, sure, a nation can put a man on the moon, but they can't come up with a standardized scale. If men and women in space weren't weightless, we'd have had one 30 years ago.

Frankly, I'm sick of the emotional yo-yo I experience with each and every scale I climb upon. One moment, I'm manic; the next, depressive.

The scales in doctor's offices are the worst. I have never been on one in my life that didn't add eight pounds or so to the weight I know I am. They are regulated before they leave the manufacturer in the doctor's favor to fit his standard prescription to "lose a few pounds and you'll feel better."

I once tested these scales to see if I could effect any change. I removed my shoes, skirt, handbag, earrings and a large wad of chewing gum from my mouth. That little sucker didn't budge so much as an ounce. Now you explain that!

I went right home from the office only to discover I had lost eight pounds by riding 30 blocks in my car. Does that tell you something?

I think if we really want to get a scale that is universal, we should shop a bit. It's too important to trust to the government.

Frankly, I lean toward a scale in a home I visited in Florida belonging to one Shirley Stilzer. It nestled in a pillow on the floor of her guest bathroom. Years had rusted the bottom out of it and mildew had created beads of condensation inside the dial, making it virtually impossible to read the numbers.

There wasn't a person who used the bathroom who did not emerge with a smile on their lips and a song in their hearts.

I should like to propose that Shirley Stilzer's scale be named the official Olympic scale and be distributed throughout the world.

Someone has to set the standards. Why not Shirley?

'Pearls of wisdom' offered shoppers

Hearst Feature Service

Robert Bridge has scattered pearls of wisdom everywhere since becoming Jewelers of America president and chairman of its fashion committee last year. And pearls are something Bridge likes to talk about as fashion rediscovers this most classic and versatile jewelry. Once reserved for evenings and weddings, pearls now suit one's daily dress.

Rolling a long strand of creamy pearls against the fabric of his navy blazer, Bridge says a good strand winks and blinks at you. Then pearl-buyer Joyce Hoadley holds the strand straight in front of her to see if the pearls are matched in size and well-strung.

Of course, it's possible to buy imitation "pearls" for $10 and up, but the eye can tell the difference. Looking into a real pearl, one can see a solid center with a lighter exterior shell, Bridge says. Real pearls feel gritty against teeth. Simulated pearls are smooth. Real pearls, say others, increase in luster when worn.

Real pearls will never again cost less than they do now, Bridge says. The only fine gem that is organic, not mineral, pearls grow in oysters underwater, as every schoolchild knows. Polluted seas, red tides and warmer ocean currents inpede their growth. This is true even though all pearls today are cultured by pearl "farmers." Natural pearls are no longer profitable to reap by sending divers into the deep.

The ideal pearl necklace would be a long strand of cultured pearls with invisible clasps at several points along its length, Bridge says. Such a strand can be shaped into many different styles such as a dog collar, a choker or a bib.

The four important traditional lengths are: the choker, 14 to 15 inches long; the princess, 18 inches; the matinee, 22 to 23 inches, and the opera, 30 to 36 inches. The dog collar is several strands fitting closely around the neck. The bib is multiple strands, each shorter than the one below it.

Individual pearl sizes range from 1 to 14 millimeters in diameter, of graduated pearls or uniform sizes.

Since they are formed over a three- to five-year period by oysters secreting nacre to coat irritating particles implanted in their shells, no pearl can be machine-perfect round, Bridge says.

The Sewing Machine Supply Company carries Viking and New Home machines

The Sewing Machine Supply Company carries both Viking and New Home sewing machines. The Viking machines are made in Sweden by the Husqvarna Company. The Japan based company of Janomeo manufactures the New Home machines.

The Viking machines are self lubricating and 100% jam free. They also come with a 25 year limited warrantee. Models are available from the very simple to the most complete sewing center imaginable. Straight stitching and zig-zag machines are the basic models while the more complex offers computerized monograming and writing.

The New Homes offers many of the same features including the limited 25 year warrantee. Many people think that the New Home is a new machine but in actuality they have been around since 1860. Their new model, the New Home 6000, can write in block or script, has a variety of computerized button holes and is great for crafts.

They also have the new Viking 980 machine. This machine writes, thinks and has a programable buttonholer. It is definately a machine that must be seen to be appreciated.

Russell and Catherine Claggett, the owners, usually also have used machines available if you prefer. You would be suprised at all of the wonderful things an older machine can do with just a few attachments. Some of the attachments available are a ruffler, buttonholer, a rolled hem foot, a zig-zagger and a bais binder.

Besides sewing machines, Sewing Machine Supply Company also carries all wood cabinets and sewing tables. Other accessories that are available are sewing chairs, scissors (electric and manual), Steamstress II iron, Grabbit magnetic pin cushion, sewing lamps, needles and bobbins. They also carry Singer's Easy Mender and the Patch-A-Matic as seen on televsion. These are both on sale for 20% off right now.As Catherine Claggett put it, "If it is for a sewing, we probably have it."

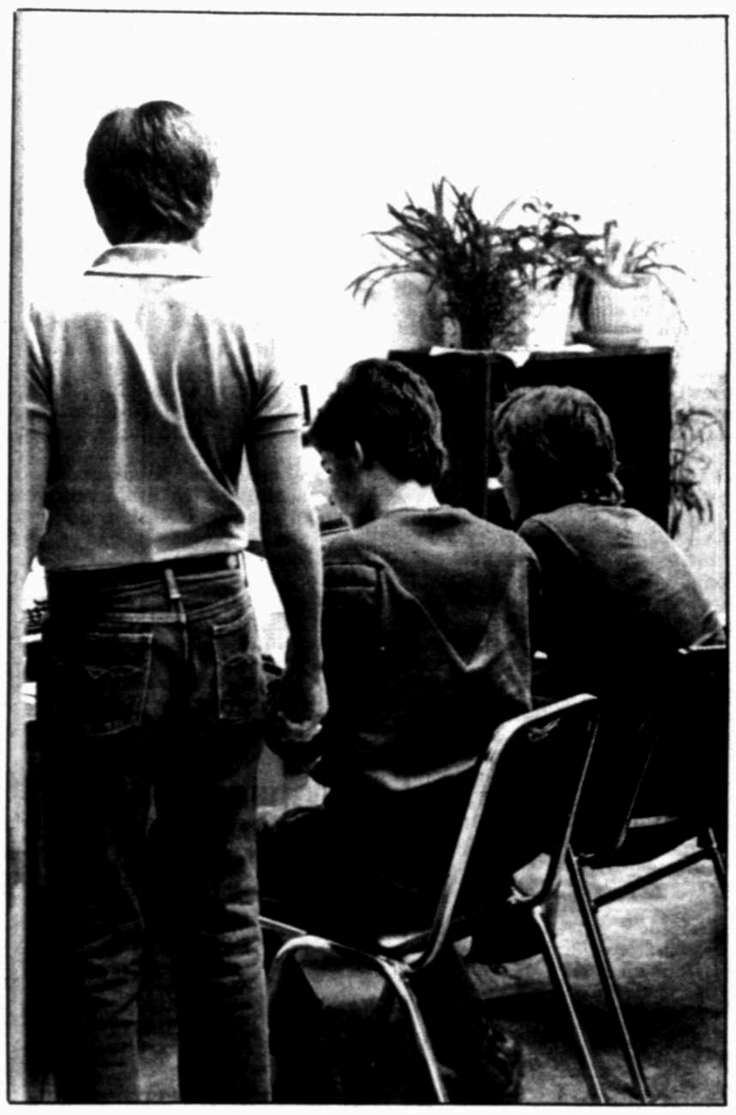

Russell Claggett does all of the repairs that are brought in to the shop. He can repair all makes of machines including Singer. While most companies send their machines away to be fixed, like Singer who sends all of their repairs t El Paso, at the Sewing Machine Supply Company all of the machines are repaire-don the premises. You can usually expect to get your machine back in a week.

If you are interested in one of the more complex machines but aren't sure if you would ever be able to learn how to use it on your own, relax- they offer instructions with the more expensive machines.

Some financing is available through Beneficial Financing. They also accept Mastercard and Visa. If you prefer, you can even use their convenient lay-away plan.

Stop by the Village Shopping Center and see what all the Sewing Machine Supply Company has to offer.

The Sewing Machine Supply Company is a home owned and operated business to serve you better. They have both new and used machines. Permian Basin High School offer Summer Session

Do you have a student who would like to work ahead so that he or she could possibly graduate early? Maybe you have a student that has fallen behind a little and needs some help to catch up. If you child fits into either of these catagories, Permian Basin High School could be your answer.

Permian Basin High School is the only accredited private school in Midland that is offering a Summer Session.

Summer Session began June 11th but you can enroll through the end of this week. For more information on enrollment call the school.

Summertime is also a good time to "check out" the school. The Summer Session allows a chance for the students and parents to view the school and see how it operates. Many students take summer classes at Permian Basin High School and like it so well they decide to finish their high school education there.

Summer Session has a full selection of courses available. A student can take up to one credit in any subject.

Summer Session is held five days a week, Monday through Friday. According to Glen Walton, administrator, it is a "very intensive and fast paced program. It is an excellent way to catch up or work ahead."

Permian Basin High School is a fully accredited high school. They offer an excellent alternative to public education.

To graduate from P.B.H.S. a student is required to accumulate 16 credits. Those credits are made up of 4 years of english, 3 years of math, 3 years of social studies, 2 years of a foreign language and electives from the above subjects as well as computer courses.

If Permian Basin High School sounds like a school that you are interested in finding out more about or that you would like you child to attend, contact Glen Walton or Beverly O'Rear. The school office hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the phone number is 683-4448.

Mexican government says it will lower some prices

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government says it will lower the price of beans and telephone calls and will freeze natural gas and electricity prices in an effort to offset the effects of inflation.

The Treasury Department said Monday the measures will cost the government about $39 million in lost revenues.

Residential gas and electric rates had been scheduled to increase on July 1. But they will be frozen until the end of the year, the department said, while phone rates will decline by 10 percent.

State-run grocery stores also will sell beans, a Mexican staple, at a 20 percent discount, according to the announcement.

Banco de Mexico, the national bank, announced last week that inflation was 25.8 percent in the first five months of the year, and labor union leaders claim the the rate is much higher than the official figures show.

Communist chief mourned

ROME (AP) — Nearly a thousand Italians carrying red flags emblazoned with yellow hammers and sickles held an overnight vigil outside the Communist Party headquarters today in a tribute to the late party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer.

Berlinguer died Monday at age 62.

Thunderous applause and shouts of "Enrico! Enrico!" broke out as the hearse carrying Berlinguer's body arrived at the flood-lit building near Rome's central Piazza Venezia.

Thousands of young party members raised their arms in a salute to Berlinguer as eight pallbearers carried the coffin into a reception room where it will remain until his funeral in Rome on Wednesday.

Berlinguer, an architect of Europe's modern, independent Communist movement, led the largest Communist party in the West for 12 years.

Soviets honor Andropov

MOSCOW (AP) — A bronze plaque commemorating the late Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov was unveiled at a rainswept 30-minute ceremony by Communist Party officials.

Policemen cordoned off a 200-yard area on Kutuzovsky Prospekt, one of the city's main thoroughfares, for the low-key occasion on Monday. About 300 invited people stood in the wind and rain clutching red carnations as Communist Party officials gave speeches in memory of Andropov.

The plaque is on a large building where Andropov is said to have maintained an apartment. It also bears a plaque commemorating Andropov's predecessor, Leonid I. Brezhnev on its walls.

Argentina appeals to IMF for lower rates

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Argentina has appealed to the International Monetary Fund for lower interest rates and extended terms to help it repay a $43.6 billion foreign debt, but it said it must reject demands to avoid raising workers' wages.

"The Argentine Republic will honor its tradition of complying with all its obligations, but this does not mean the adoption of measures that condition its sovereignty in the management of its internal problems," said the letter sent Monday to the IMF in Washington.

Foreign bankers, diplomats and newspapers said the letter of intent was unprecedented in that it had not been approved by the IMF negotiators who spent nearly a month in Buenos Aires talking with Economy Minister Bernardo Grinspun and his aides.

IMF approval of Argentina's economic recovery plan is considered a requirement for obtaining a $1.6 billion loan to cover interest payments and for renegotiating the debt terms with about 320 private foreign banks.

In the 20-page letter sent Monday to IMF director Jacques de Larossiere, the government said it would use some of its trade surplus to repay the debt.

"There is no confrontation with creditors nor with the IMF," Grinspun told a news conference. He refused to confirm reports that IMF negotiators did not approve the government's economic strategy.

A reported sticking point has been Argentina's reluctance to sharply reduce its public spending and lower its budget deficit to help fight inflation, which was 568 percent over the last 12 months.

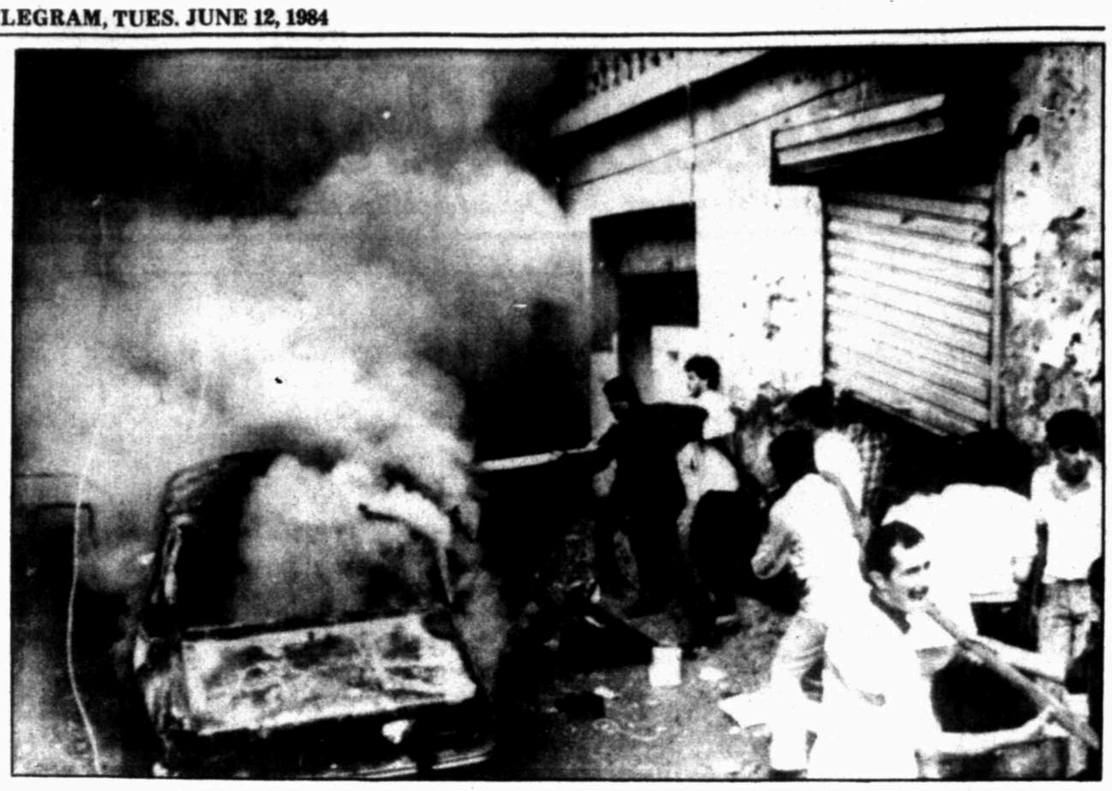

"Consolidation of democracy," the letter said, "depends in large part on the reply the economy can provide to legitimate claims by different social groups."

Grinspun said the letter confirms "economic objectives previously announced" by President Raul Alfonsin, who took office on Dec. 10, ending more than seven years of military rule.

It emphasized that the debt, third largest in Latin America behind those of Brazil and Mexico, was inherited from Argentina's former military rulers and was "incurred through application of an authoritarian and arbitrary economic policy, in which the creditors had an active participation, without any benefit for the Argentine people."

The letter, signed by Grinspun, said: "The question is not refusal to pay, but rather doing so under the most adequate conditions for fulfillment of objectives of an orderly economy, growth and social peace, consecrated recently by the vote of the country's citizens."

The government requested "significant reduction" of interest and banking commissions applied to the foreign debt in compensation for recent increases in international interest rates, which it called "excessive and arbitrary.

Firemen, aided by civilians, try to extinguish burning cars in west Beirut during shelling exchanges between Christian east and mostly Moslem west Beirut on Monday. At least 84 people were killed and more than 200 were wounded.

Coalition government goes before Lebanese body for confidence vote

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami's coalition government went before Parliament today for a crucial vote of confidence following 12 hours of shelling that police said killed 84 people and wounded 216 in and around the capital.

Seventy-one of Parliament's 90 members showed up for the session in the no man's land between Christian east and Moslem west Beirut.

The legislators planned to vote on the government's program for ending the nine-year civil war, if speakers finished their addresses by the afternoon. Otherwise, the vote would be taken on Wednesday.

About 60 rounds of machine gun fire cracked in the distance shortly before Speaker Kamel Assad opened the session at 11:10 a.m. Later, the city echoed with loud blasts that police said were rocket-propelled grenades fired in the air for the funerals of some of the victims of Monday's bombardment.

The six-week-old Karami government needs a majority vote of the attending parliamentarians to be formally installed.

The Cabinet includes four leaders of the nation's principal warring factions, but only one showed up for the session, following the worst bombardment of residential neighborhoods in four months.

Pierre Gemayel, the father of President Amin Gemayel and leader of the rightist Christian Phalange Party, joined Karami and four other ministers on the government bench shortly after the session opened.

Absent were Finance Minister Camille Chamoun, a former president and head of the Christian Lebanese Front coalition; Public Works Minister Walid Jumblatt of the Druse and Shiite Moslem militia commander Nabih Berri, the minister for Southern Lebanon.

A statement by Christian Lebanese Forces accused Berri of ordering his gunners to unleash multiple rocket launchers Monday as part of a drive to "dictate his will on other sects."

Berri had earlier said the Lebanese Forces command was responsible for the shelling, charging that the Gemayels were unable to rein in the pro-Israeli Christian fighters.

Most shops in east and west Beirut as well as the Christian port of Jounieh north of the capital were closed today. Shopowners were protesting the day of bombardment that was called "black Monday" by Beirut's French-language independent newspaper L'Orient le Jour.

The shelling began before a Parliament session started around noon Monday. It went on intermittently during the debate and escalated into random bombardment of neighborhoods after the legislators adjourned in the afternoon.

Mortars, 155mm howitzer shells and hundreds of Soviet-made Grad rockets, launched from truck-mounted multiple launchers, rained on both sectors of the capital, the suburbs and Jounieh.

The bombardment began easing an hour before dark, but continued in sporadic bursts through much of the night.

Police said that one Lebanese soldier was killed. The rest of the dead were civilians, including three firefighters, nine civil defense rescuers and a photographer for the English-language independent Beirut newspaper, The Daily Star.

Hospitals in both sectors of the capital appealed for blood donations to cope with the casualties. Police said 19 of the 216 wounded were in grave condition.

Police had no breakdown of casualties along sectarian lines. But the leftist newspaper As-Safir said 85 percent of the casualties occurred in west Beirut and its Shiite southern suburbs.

Several apartment buildings were burned, along with hundreds of cars. Christian and Moslem militia gunners accused each other of using incendiary bombs.

Residents of highrise apartment buildings and thousands of families in neighborhoods close to the demarcation line spent the night huddled in basements and bomb shelters despite a decrease in bombardment around 9 p.m. Monday.

U.N. chief gets lukewarm welcome from Israelis

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar received a lukewarm welcome today in Israel, a day after King Hussein of Jordan endorsed a proposed international peace conference on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"It would be dishonest of me if I were to disguise the fact that here in Israel there exists a sense of discontent and disillusionment" with the United Nations, Israel's Foreign Ministry director-general, David Kimche, told Perez de Cuellar at Ben Gurion International Airport.

"Issues concerning Israel and the region are so often dealt with in a manner that we consider to have been unjust to say the least," Kimche added.

Perez de Cuellar, who planned to meet Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir today, said he hoped to reach "some constructive, positive, just steps in order to improve the present situation for the benefit of your country, the area and the world."

Shamir has said the only role he sees for the United Nations in Lebanon is placement of the U.N. peace-keeping troops as a buffer between Israeli and Syrian positions in East Lebanon. Perez de Cuellar has rejected that option.

Perez de Cuellar met with Hussein on Monday to discuss the possibility of peace negotiations under United Nations auspices.

The Jordanian news agency quoted the U.N. chief as saying "the participation of the Palestinians is indispensable" in any peace negotiations. And Perez de Cuellar told reporters he would meet with Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat in the near future, possibly in Geneva, Switzerland.

Hussein, long an ally of the United States, earlier told The Associated Press that America had disqualified itself as a peacemaker in the Middle East because of its strategic alliance with Israel.

Infant mortality rate up in U.S.S.R.

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Rising infant mortality rates, lower life expectancy for men and chronic shortages of medical supplies are among the evidence that Soviet medicine lags behind other developed nations, researchers say.

The Soviet Union "is the first among the developed nations of the world to experience a sustained reversal of the normal downward trend in infant mortality," Dr. Murray Feshbach and Dr. Christopher Davis concluded in a study for the U.S. Census Bureau.

"Clearly, something is amiss in the Soviet health-care system," said Feshbach, who examined Soviet medicine both for the Census Bureau and as a senior research scholar at the Center for Population Studies at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C.

Feshbach and other medical experts were interviewed by The (Toledo) Blade for a series of articles published this week.

Bus-Bench Breakers sit out popular, amusing 'dance'

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Rabbinical students who just wanted to bum cigarettes from passers-by have perfected a new form of break-dancing guaranteed not to break a sweat: break-sitting.

For the past week, the yarmulke-clad Bus-Bench Breakers have been amusing spectators as they cross and uncross their legs in unison while sitting on a bus bench.

They perform the "single," the "double," and the "fake," in which they uncross a leg, then immediately recross it.

Their most complex move so far is the "domino," in which Fred Frankel, 18, Meshulam Lisker, 21, and Michael Chanales, 23, achieve a cascade effect reminiscent of Radio City Music Hall's Rockettes.

Frankel occasionally livens up the show by jumping up from the bench and doing cartwheels and flips in the street.

"We're thinking of making a video and putting it on MTV," Lisker joked.

The group — all students at the Talmudical Institute of Upstate New York in Rochester — had a fourth member, Maurice LaBrie, 21, but he had to return to the Rabbinical Seminary of America in New York City.

Chanales said break-sitting started when the four students went outside for a smoke, got tired and sat down on the bench. They hoped they could bum cigarettes if they put on a good show.

Villechaize, Hustler settle defamation suit

H. Villechaize

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Herve Villechaize has reached an out-of-court settlement with Hustler magazine in a $3 million defamation lawsuit he filed over a cartoon story depicting his "Fantasy Island" character as sex-crazed deviant, an attorney says.

Alan Isaacman, the magazine's attorney, said Monday that Hustler will print a statement in its September issue noting that the February 1980 cartoon was not intended as an attack on the 3-foot-11-inch actor.

Villechaize, who played Tattoo in the TV series from 1978 to 1983, will receive no money from Hustler, Isaacman said.

"Our defense throughout this entire case has been that the story was not about Mr. Villechaize personally, that it was meant as a parody of the television show," Isaacman said.

The Hustler cartoon portrayed the actor "in a context of perversity and as a sexual deviant...engaged in acts of homosexuality, bestiality and sodomy," the suit alleged.

Chris Jacobs, Villechaize's attorney, refused Monday to comment on details of the settlement.

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Thomas "Hollywood" Henderson, the flamboyant former linebacker for the Dallas Cowboys, has been sentenced to four years and eight months in prison for molesting two teen-age girls, then trying to bribe them not to testify against him.

Henderson, 31, who was sentenced Monday by Superior Court Judge Ernest L. Kelly, pleaded no contest to the charges in April.

A 16-year-old paraplegic testified that Henderson met her and a 17-year-old companion in a liquor store on Nov. 2, 1983, then took them to his apartment, where he assaulted them.

He later gave the girls $500 to either leave the state or change their testimony, prosecutors said.

Henderson, known for his flamboyant style on the field, played for Dallas from 1975 to 1979. He later played with the San Francisco 49ers, the Houston Oilers and the Miami Dolphins.

"I wouldn't be here at all if it weren't for cocaine and alcohol," Henderson said recently.

Jamie Wyeth

NEW YORK (AP) — Portrait artist Jamie Wyeth says being the son of artist Andrew Wyeth has one major disadvantage: The critics are too hard on him.

"There is a certain baggage that comes with the name. When I had my first show, the critics' dynastic resentment almost totally distracted them from my work," the younger Wyeth said in interview in the July issue of House & Garden magazine.

"Perhaps if I had made a more radical break with my father's style, they would have approved more. But frankly, all that stuff — constant comparisions, publicity, imitators and detractors — either stays outside your studio door, or it cripples you."

Jamie Wyeth told the magazine he was trained by his father, much as Andrew Wyeth was trained by his father, illustrator N.C. Wyeth.

Prince Andrew

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew, dubbed "Randy Andy" by the British press for his well-publicized love affairs, successfully landed a Lynx helicopter dubbed the "Brazen Hussy" on the deck of his new ship, the HMS Brazen.

Andrew, a 24-year-old lieutenant in the Royal Navy and a veteran of the Falkland Islands war with Argentina, had to circle for about 15 minutes Monday because the 3,556-ton frigate was late for the rendezvous in Plymouth Sound.

But after a few low passes, he made a near-perfect landing in the center of the flight deck.

"You were late," he told news photographers on board the ship to chronicle the event. "Why weren't you here on time? I was."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mortimer B. Zuckerman, a real estate developer and owner of The Atlantic Monthly, will add U.S. News and World Report magazine to his holdings if the news weekly's employee-owners approve his $168,510,000 offer.

If the sale goes through this fall as expected, each share of employee stock will be worth $3,000, creating some instant millionaires among longtime employees.

Under the agreement, which involves a merger between U.S. News and a new company to be formed by Zuckerman, the surviving company will issue $25 million in 5 percent notes, payable in installments over 15 years, settling the company's liabilities from an existing deferred compensation plan.

Carnegie Hero Fund honors 21 individuals

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — Joe Delaney was a hero on the football field as a running back for the Kansas City Chiefs. He was proclaimed a hero again when he died trying to save two boys from drowning in a Louisiana pond.

Now, he has been named a hero by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission, joining 20 other Americans and Canadians who were recognized for their good deeds Monday. Six died in the performance of their acts.

Delaney, 24, died June 29, 1983, trying to save Lanser Perkins and Harry Holland Jr., both of 11, after he spotted them foundering in a pond in Monroe, La.

Delaney, who lived in nearby Haughton, failed to surface after diving into the pond after the two boys. All three drowned.

The recognition, which includes a $2,500 cash award and a medal, brings to 6,823 the number of heroes honored by the commission since it was established by industrialist Andrew Carnegie in 1904.

Others honored are:

— John H. Ayer, 34, of Miami, Fla., who rescued a 19-year-old motorist from a crowd of angry onlookers after she was involved in a traffic accident in the Miami suburb of Goulds Sept. 17, 1983.

— Steven W. Blake, 33, of Springville, Ind., who rescued a woman from a man who stabbed her in Bloomington, Ind., on June 14, 1982.

— Robert J. Collette, 32; John D. White, 31; and James W. Donovan, 33, all of Riverview, New Brunswick, Canada, who saved three children from drowning in a river on April 25, 1981.

— The late Janet L.F. De Katt, 12, of Leslie, Mich., who died trying to save another girl from a fire last July 8.

— The late Bernardino Flores Jr., 20, of Abilene, Texas, who died trying to save a boy from drowning in Lake Fort Phantom Hill on June 2, 1983.

— The late Martin L. Hoffman, 29, of Pittsburgh, who died trying to save two children from being struck by a falling tree in Humble, Texas, Aug. 20.

— Bryan L. Jarrard, 13, of Wellsville, Ohio, who saved a boy from drowning in the Ohio River Sept. 29.

— J. Paul Newton, 38, of Jefferson, Md., who saved a woman from an oncoming train in Silver Spring, Md., on March 12, 1982.

— Micheal A. Oliver, 23, of Cordele, Ga., who saved three children from their burning home on Jan. 19, 1983.

— Randolph S. Olmstead, 36, of Wappapello, Mo., who saved a man from exploding fireworks July 3.

— The late Leroy E. Panzer, 63, of Pasadena, Texas, who died trying to save two oys from drowning in the Trinity Rive Aug. 7.

— Robert A. Pulido, 13, of Houston, Texas, who saved a boy from drowning in Pinehurst, Texas, on April 3, 1983.

— George W. Quarm, 32, of Cary, Miss., who saved a girl from drowning in Lake Washington, Miss., Dec. 25.

— The late Joel V. Quintanilla, 56, of Austin, Texas, who saved a man from a burning apartment on Feb. 6, 1983. He died a year later.

— Jesus A. Sanchez, 15, of Fort Worth, Texas, who saved an infant from a burning house July 1.

— The late Kenneth Sepulveda, 18, of Brooklyn, N.Y., who died saving two girls from gunshots Oct. 28.

— Joseph R. Waskin, 47, of New Castle, Pa., who saved a co-worker from a steam-line rupture at a power plant on March 19, 1982.

— Eddie L. Watson, 31, of Clay City, Ky., a celebral palsy victim, who saved a girl from being hit by a truck July 25.

Child should see doctor

Dear Dr. Solomon: My child has an allergy and as a result, he breathes through his mouth. Is this something he will outgrow? — Mrs. W.K., San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Mrs. K.: The fact that your child breathes through his mouth should be brought to the attention of your pediatrician or family physician. I would not wait until such time as your child might outgrow it.

One of the possible complications of mouth breathing is the development of dental abnormalities that may cause problems in later life. I strongly recommend the ounce of prevention in this particular situation.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every once in a while I hear about college students who have an outbreak of measles. I know you can't get measles from studying too much, and from what I see some college students don't study at all. So why do they seem to get measles so often? — Burt, Norfolk, Va.

Dear Burt: I assume that today's college students are as conscientious as their parents and grandparents were, but I agree that studying is not a risk factor for measles. The fact is that many college students did not get natural measles in the late 60s because of decreasing transmission. Furthermore, many college students were not vaccinated against measles during the first few years after licensure, and most colleges do not require immunization for admission. These factors probably account for the occasional outbreaks of measles among college students that we read about.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know it is not unusual for a 71-year-old man who smokes to have a heart attack. My father had one, but the strange part was that he never even knew he was having one. What I mean is that he hardly had any pain. Is it possible that my father has lost some of his sensitivity to pain that other people have? — Greg, Dover, N.J.

Dear Greg: An older person who has a myocardial infarction may experience very little pain and, in some cases, may have no pain at all.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that women with sickle cell disease lose more blood during their periods than other women do? — Ms. E.W., The Bronx, N.Y.

Dear Ms. W.: According to Dr. Joy H. Samuels-Reid of the Howard University Center for Sickle Cell Disease in Washington, D.C., women with sickle cell disease tend to experience a shorter menstrual cycle but more days of menstrual flow per cycle than do other women. Therefore, they have more cycles per year and more blood loss per cycle.

A Meridian Hotel employee fluffs up the pillows on an elegant sectional couch in the San Francisco hotel's presidential suite Monday. The $1,500-per-night suite will be occupied by Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale during the Democratic National Convention in July.

Mondale suite 'presidential'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — If his hotel room for the Democratic National Convention is any indication, Walter Mondale has the party's presidential nomination in his hip pocket.

The former vice president will be lodged in one of the new Hotel Meridien's "presidential" suites about a block from the convention center when the Democrats meet July 16-19.

Rival Gary Hart will stay in the St. Francis Hotel. While his abode may be posh, he won't be in the hotel's $1,300-a-night Presidential Suite, says Don Blum, in charge of public relations for the hotel.

And there's no presidential suite for the Rev. Jesse Jackson, either. Jackson, who has collected the third highest number of delegates, will get "luxury" accommodations at the Hyatt Union Square, where his entourage has reserved 80 rooms.

About 30,000 convention visitors are expected in San Francisco for the convention, and the San Francisco Convention and Visitors Bureau has lined up some 20,000 rooms in 146 hotels in San Francisco and neighboring cities.

Visitors will pay prices ranging from $52.50 at the Mark Twain Hotel, home for the Mississippi delegation, to $1,500 a night for the penthouses at the San Francisco Hilton, where leaders of the Communications Workers of America and the AFL-CIO are expected to hold court.

The penthouses are atop a 19-story main structure linked at three levels to a newer 46-story tower. As the convention's hotel headquarters, the Hilton will shelter mostly news and labor organizations.

An enormous 45,000 square feet of ballroom and exhibit space at the Hilton have been turned into work space for news personnel.

Of the hotel's 1,700 rooms, 400 are committed to members of 95 news organizations, 70 will go to the CWA and 150 are reserved for the AFL-CIO. Representatives of the National Organization for Women and the American Federation of Teachers also will hang their hats there, as will the National Education Association and other national and labor groups.

The 600-room Meridien where Mondale will stay has two presidential suites.

"We are going to kiddingly call one the 'vice presidential' suite," said Dan Brown, director of sales.

The more elaborate of the two has a stereo, video recorder, gold-plated sinks, a Jacuzzi and a "somewhat oriental theme," said Steve Pipes, room division manager.

The 35-story hotel was opened Oct. 1, 1983, with 676 rooms and suites, 600 of which are reserved for the convention. Generally, they range from $110 for a standard single to $180 for a deluxe double.

Hart has 10 suites to choose from at the St. Francis. Among his options are the State Suite for $1,500 nightly; the Dan London Suite for $1,200 a night, where President Reagan stayed during Queen Elizabeth's visit to California; or the comparably priced City Club or Chairman's Suite.

Delegates from Ohio and Kansas will stay at the Hyatt Union Square. All general manager Volker Westphal would say about Jackson's accommodations there was that the candidate is "staying in one of our luxury suites."

Elsewhere in the city, scores of hotels have contracted with the San Francisco Convention and Visitors Bureau to play host to the throng of convention-goers.

There will be 12,000 journalists from 1,200 news organizations, 5,200 delegates and their alternates and 10,000 to 12,000 guests and affiliated members.

Hotel operators say they've done little to add to their staffs to handle the crowd, but some will establish added security.

Among the biggest problems will be the crush of people going in and out of hotels near the convention center.

Mondale's hotel, just a block from the site of the convention at Moscone Center, may attract huge crowds using restaurants, phones and hoping to get a glimpse of the candidate, said David Mayer, who became director of security at the Meridien after 30 years with the San Francisco Police Department.

The 74-year-old Manx Hotel a half-block from Union Square has 14 rooms for the Virgin Island delegation. Most of the remaining 111 convention-reserved rooms are for the news media, including National Public Radio.

Across San Francisco Bay in Berkeley and Oakland, a hotel and bed-and-breakfast inn had almost no requests for rooms during the convention.

"I don't think people realize how close they are in time (from San Francisco)," said front desk clerk Bill Gregg at the Jack London Inn in Oakland.

Little progress made on reducing federal deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' effort to make a "down payment" this year on enormous federal budget deficits is almost stalemated.

With partisan pressures from upcoming elections mounting, differences between key portions of deficit-reduction plans passed by the House and Senate earlier this spring still remain unresolved.

In April, the Democrat-controlled House passed a $182.4 billion deficit-reduction plan. On May 18, the Republican-controlled Senate passed a $140.1 billion package supported by President Reagan.

Both plans combine tax increases with curbs on military and domestic spending in an effort to trim federal red ink, projected to total $600 billion over the next three years.

While slight progress was made last week in resolving some of the differences between relatively non-controversial items in the tax portions of the deficit-reduction plans, virtually no action has been taken on the spending provisions that are supposed to account for two-thirds of the final compromise.

Negotiators from each chamber were meeting today to begin discussing the volatile issue of Medicare spending reductions in each measure.

"Time is running out," said Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

Leaders from both houses of Congress agree that if action is to be taken this year, it must come before the House and Senate recess at the end of this month for the Democratic National Convention.

After that, Democrats and Republicans are likely to be more intent on using the House and Senate to showcase partisan arguments for the fall presidential and congressional elections than concentrate on legislation.

Overall, about 90 House members and more than 30 senators representing 12 House committees and six Senate committees are supposed to be working in a dozen subgroups to come up with the various pieces of the deficit-reduction legislation.

However, the umbrella group of members from the House and Senate Budget committees who must work out a spending blueprint for Congress have yet to meet face-to-face and neither side is talking optimistically of getting together.

Asked Monday if that group will meet, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, replied, "I doubt it."

"If we have to we will" convene without the Senate Republicans, said Jones, who would chair the umbrella group.

The problems go beyond the numbers contained in each plan.

Supreme Court plans broader examination of exclusionary rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, having chipped away at the "exclusionary rule," now plans a much broader examination of the principle which bans illegally obtained evidence from criminal trials.

The justices are expected to announce by July, and perhaps earlier, whether illegal evidence should be allowed if authorities unwittingly made a technical mistake in uncovering it.

On Monday, they decided that such evidence could be presented to a jury if a judge decided that it was inevitable that police would have discovered the evidence by other legitimate means.

It was the first time the court has relaxed the exclusionary rule and some critics are saying the decision could lead to further weakening of the 70-year-old safeguard against unlawful police conduct.

The decision expected next month will stem from two cases involving mistakes by magistrates who issued search warrants to police.

In one case, the lower court refused to allow as evidence drugs seized in a 1981 Burbank, Calif. narcotics investigation on grounds that the magistrate issued a search warrant without receiving "probable cause" from the police.

The other case surrounds an improperly written warrant approved by a magistrate in the investigation in Boston of a 1979 murder.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger has been criticizing the exclusionary rule for 20 years, denouncing it as a punishment to society and protection to criminals.

In reaction to the decision on Monday, Barry Lynn of the American Civil Liberties Union in Washington said, "Any decision that permits unlawfully obtained evidence to be used in a criminal trial is really an indication to law enforcement officials around the country not to know what the law is and not be too careful in protecting the rights of all Americans."

David Crump of the Legal Foundation of America applauded the decision and said it could foreshadow bigger changes.

"It's one more piece of evidence that the court is moving toward" revision of the exclusionary rule, he said.

However, the ruling merely placed the court's stamp of approval on a practice that most state and federal appeals courts have been using for years.

By a 7-2 vote, the court reinstated the murder conviction of Robert Anthony Williams in the 1968 killing in Iowa of 10-year-old Pamela Powers.

A federal appeals court had thrown out Williams' conviction after ruling that police used illegal tactics in persuading him to lead them to the 10-year-old girl's body.

He was convicted and sentenced to life in prison, but in 1977 the Supreme Court ordered a
