Family cries as nurse convicted of murder

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — The victim's relatives wept with joy as nurse Genene Jones was convicted of murdering an infant girl by fatal injection, and said they'll be back in court to hear whether she gets the maximum sentence of life in prison.

"It's over, it's over," sobbed Petti McClellan, whose 15-month-old daughter, Chelsea, died in September 1982 after receiving what were supposed to be routine immunizations at a Kerrville pediatrician's office. "I'm glad we won. At least now this won't happen to anyone else," Mrs. McClellan said.

Other members of Chelsea's family — including her grandmother, aunts and great-grandmother — hugged and kissed prosecutors following the verdict Wednesday. "Thank you, thank you so much," they said.

"Now maybe my daughter can bury her. She's never, never buried her," said Chelsea's grandmother, Robin Alexander.

The jury will hear testimony today in the punishment phase of the trial.

Jurors deliberated for about three hours Wednesday before agreeing with testimony that showed Chelsea had died of an injection of succinylcholine, a powerful muscle relaxant.

Dr. Kathleen Holland, Ms. Jones' employer, had ordered the nurse to give routine immunizations.

One prosecutor said Ms. Jones had killed Chelsea "for her own enrichment." A witness had testified that Ms. Jones wanted to "find" enough dead children to justify the opening of an intensive care unit for children at Kerrville's hospital.

Six other young patients at Ms. Holland's office suffered mysterious seizures similar to Chelsea's after receiving shots from Ms. Jones, who has two children of her own, and the nurse faces charges of injuring a child in those cases.

She faces a similar charge in San Antonio, where there is an ongoing investigation into deaths at Medical Center Hospital's pediatric intensive care unit, where Ms. Jones worked before coming to Kerrville.

Wednesday's verdict drew tears in the courtroom and cheers from demonstrators outside the courthouse. Ms. Jones' quiet sobs heightened as jurors were individually asked if they thought she was guilty.

Chelsea's mother and father, Reid McClellan, who have no other children, walked to a second-floor veranda and hugged and wept.

As Ms. Jones was led from the courthouse crying, demonstrators carrying signs that read, "Stop the baby killings," screamed at her. "The mothers will never stop crying," one woman shouted.

Throughout the 4½-week trial, defense attorneys argued that tests which discovered succinylcholine in Chelsea's body were inconclusive and that there was no proof Chelsea was anything other than a sick girl who died.

Defense attorney Burt Carnes argued Wednesday that prosecutors were "obsessed" with convicting Ms. Jones and suggested that it was Ms. Holland's "incompetence or wrongdoing" that killed Chelsea and injured the other children.

Carnes said Ms. Jones' only crime was "maybe that she practiced a little medicine without a license."

Ms. Holland, who still runs her Kerrville practice, was in the courtroom much of Wednesday. She faces a $7 million wrongful death suit.

Gemayel decides to accept Saudi withdrawal plan

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon has decided to scrap the U.S.-brokered troop withdrawal pact with Israel and accept a Saudi plan for removal of foreign forces, American officials said in Washington today.

One official said Gemayel communicated his acceptance of the Saudi plan to the U.S. ambassador to Lebanon, Reginald Bartholomew.

There was no public comment from the U.S.-backed government in Lebanon on the word from Washington that Gemayel had given in to opposition demands that the Israeli-Lebanese pact of May 17 be scrapped.

The officials in Washington spoke on condition they not be named.

In Lebanon today, anti-government militiamen captured two Christian strongholds on the coastal highway south of Beirut, broadening an offensive that has shattered the Lebanese army and threatened Gemayel's government.

According to the officials in Washington, the Saudis' eight-point plan has little chance of stopping the warfare in Lebanon and leaving the nation free of occupying forces. One official said the Saudi proposal "was essentially a statement of principles, rather than a plan of action" and noted it would need approval from Syria and its allies in Lebanon.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the Reagan administration had not been asked its position on the plan. "We have problems with a number of elements," he said, without specifying them.

Police said army troops fought off overnight attacks by Druse insurgents on the key hilltop town of Souk el-Gharb, which overlooks the U.S. Marine base at Beirut's airport and is the last position Gemayel's army holds in the central mountains near Beirut.

Druse communiques referred to the action as "routine exchanges of artillery and small arms fire," suggesting there was no full-scale attack on the town.

Druse and Shiite Moslem militiamen have advanced about 14 miles on the southern highway from Beirut. They took the Christian coastal town of Damour and the neighboring hilltop Mishref barracks of the rightist Christian Lebanese Forces militia at about 2 a.m. today, communiques from both sides said.

The Marine base was not affected by today's fighting. Preparations continued for the eventual pullout of the 1,200 Americans based there.

"There was silence overnight," said U.S. Army Maj. Don McClary. "No U.S. ships fired and there were no U.S. planes on military reconnaissance flights."

However, a Beirut radio report monitored later in Jordan said two U.S. warplanes flew over the Beirut area shortly before noon.

Bulldozers at the Marine base were destroying bunkers and filling them with dirt as Navy construction workers loaded supplies onto landing craft that took them to ships offshore in preparation for a final pullout of the American force.

Anti-government militiamen kept their distance from the base and its landing craft strip on the beach just south of the airport as the work progressed.

The Phalange Party, founded and headed by the president's father, Pierre Gemayel, conceded the loss of Mishref — the largest Christian garrison between Beirut and Israel's Awali River defense line in southern Lebanon.

Both sides said Mishref fell without resistance.

The retreat left Christian troops of the Army's 4th Brigade and their Phalangist allies holding only a six-mile strip of the coastal highway between the town of Saadiyat and a checkpoint just north of the Israeli defense line.

Israeli Army Radio, based in Tel Aviv, said Gemayel's palace in the eastern suburb of Baabda was shelled overnight, but there were no reports of damages.

Moslem officers and soldiers of the 4th Brigade retreated to rebel-controlled west Beirut a few hours after Druse militiamen launched a surprise offensive in the Chouf Mountains early Tuesday.

Club 'chutes' for own arena

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

What has 60 legs, 7,000 feet of pipe and chutes? The Midland College Chaparral Rodeo Club and its new rodeo arena, of course.

The club was formed two years ago, and for the past month members have been constructing a 175-by-310 arena in which to practice and hold rodeos. A handful of the club's 30 members turn out each weekend to work on the project.

Designed by faculty advisor Ron Sweatt and the students, the arena is being built with donated materials, volunteer labor and rent-free land. It is about one-quarter finished, Sweatt said. He expects it to be usable by May and completed before fall semester.

In the past students have used a private arena about a mile from the new site, which is located at Saddle Club Ranch Estates northwest of Midland. But Sweatt said they required a facility where they could practice daily.

"Like anything else, if you don't practice you aren't very competitive." It's also a requirement that (National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association) members stage a rodeo once in each two-year period.

— Ron Sweatt, faculty advisor

"Like anything else, if you don't practice you aren't very competitive," he explained. "It's also a requirement that at least once every two years member colleges (of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association) have to put on a rodeo." The first weekend in April MC and Howard College are co-sponsoring a rodeo in Big Spring.

"We really haven't won anything yet, but I would say they are competitive and do have potential," Sweatt said of the club. "Part of the problem is due to a lack of practice facilities. They practice when they can and where they can."

Magnatex, which is developing Saddle Club Ranch Estates, gave the club use of the land in return for allowing homeowners to use the facility. The college has funded $15,000 toward the project, and the club hopes to get additional money through donations and fund raisers.

Sweatt said $12,000 to $14,000 worth of materials has been donated already. MC and Magnatex will share in the cost of bringing utlities to the site, while the developer will do most of the landscaping.

Most regional junior colleges the size of MC do have rodeo arenas, Sweatt maintained.

Officials study cause of nuclear test mishap

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Federal officials say they don't know why an underground nuclear blast collapsed a big chunk of a mountain more than 1,000 feet above, injuring 13 atomic workers who were on the ground, on ladders or in a trailer monitoring the test.

One man was in critical condition today with injuries he suffered when the 60-by-150-foot piece of Rainier Mesa caved in, dropping 10 to 30 feet and swallowing several trailers. Eight workers were hospitalized.

The cave-in Wednesday occurred about three hours after technicians at the government's sprawling Nevada Test Site detonated a nuclear device of "less than 20 kilotons" said Jim Boyer, a spokesman for the U.S. Department of Energy.

He said the blast was considered "very small."

The atom bomb that destroyed Hiroshima in World War II, leaving 130,000 people dead, injured or missing, was 20 kilotons — the equivalent of 20,000 tons of TNT.

"The only thing we can say with certainty is we had a subsidence and a subsidence means that the surface of the earth dropped down over the explosive site," Boyer said.

Greg Cook, another spokesman, said late Wednesday, "We don't have anything on the cause yet. There will be a full investigation."

No radiation leaked from the cave-in or from the test tunnel, Boyer said. The blast went off in a sealed chamber about the height and width of a two-car garage but several times longer, in a tunnel 1,168 feet underground, he said.

The injured workers had returned to the site and were checking data recorded on instruments at ground zero, directly above the point of the blast, said another Energy Department spokesman, David Miller.

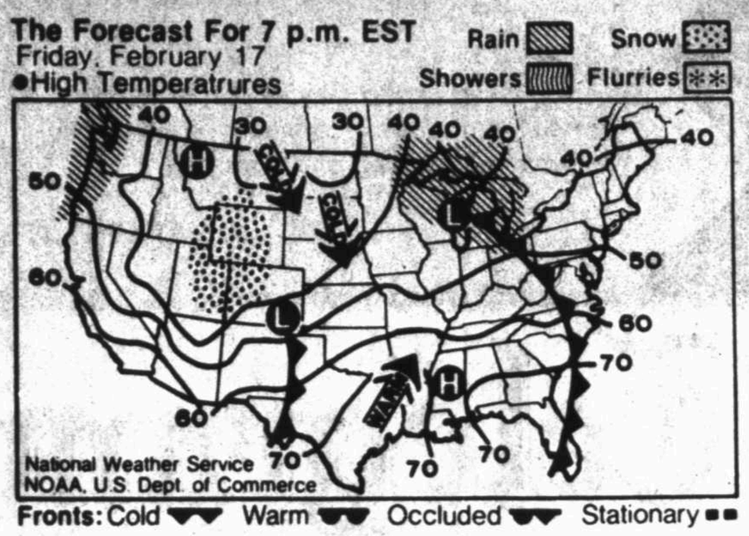
"Some had the ground drop out from under them," Miller said. "Some were shaken off ladders which led to the top of trailers, and one man apparently was still inside a trailer when it toppled over."

"I was learning how to walk on air, but the ground got me instead," one injured worker, describing the accident, said as he arrived on a stretcher into Valley Hospital in Las Vegas. He was taken away before he could give his name.

"Ask the DOE," another injured worker, Liz McDowell, said when asked what happened. She said test site employees signed pacts with the government stipulating that they not talk about their work.

Boyer called the collapse "very unusual." He said the hard-rock area where the blast was detonated, about 90 miles north of Las Vegas, is used only infrequently for nuclear tests.

WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for Friday for the Rockies and rain for parts of Washington, Oregon and the Great Lakes.

Cooling trend expected to warm up into low 60s

A slight cooling trend is in effect, but it should not appreciably alter weather conditions if National Weather Service forecasts hold true.

The low tonight should be in the upper 30s and the high Friday in the lower 60s under partly cloudy skies. Winds should be southeasterly at 5-10 miles per hour tonight and 15-20 miles her hour Friday.

The high Wednesday of 66 was 15 degrees off the alltime record for the date set in 1945, while the low of 29 was mild in comparison to the record 17 of 1936.

No precipitation is forecast. The month's total remains at 0.00 inch and the year's at 0.41 inch.

STATE

Skies were mostly clear across Texas today as a weak cold front pushed its way to the southern tip of the state before dawn.

Low clouds and fog covered the coastal plains from the middle coast near Corpus Christi southward to the Lower Rio Grande Valley. Visibilities were reduced to under three miles in many locales.

Pre-dawn temperatures were in the 20s and 30s across the western half of the state, while readings in the 40s and 50s were noted across the eastern half. Temperatures at 4 a.m. ranged from 23 at Marfa in the mountains of Southwest Texas to 68 at Brownsville in far South Texas.

NATION

Rain dampened the Dakotas, Iowa and Minnesota today while showers and occasional thunderstorms broke over Missouri, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Scattered rain also touched areas from Delaware to central New England, the Pacific Northwest and northern California.

Unseasonably warm weather continued to melt snow and spur runoff that swelled rivers in southern Michigan.

In Monroe, Mich., 12 to 14 blocks of homes have basements flooded with six to 12 inches of water. A private tugboat hired by the city Wednesday broke up half a mile of jammed ice that had forced the Raisin River over its banks.

Child's condition still critical after transplants

By KATHY WILHELM
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH — A 6-year-old girl who received the world's first heart and liver transplant remained in critical condition today, but seemed comfortable and in good spirits, according to her mother.

"She's nodding yes and no to questions," Lois Jones said Wednesday of her daughter, Stormie. "I asked her if she was scared because we had to put on (face) masks, and she nodded yes."

The blonde, brown-eyed girl from Cumby, Texas, received the historic operation Tuesday. Doctors at Children's Hospital said her donated organs appeared to be functioning normally.

"Stormie appears to be following a standard course for both liver transplant patients and heart transplant patients," said Dr. Basil Zitelli, her pediatrician.

"She's breathing on her own, although still attached to a respirator. Her blood pressure is good, and she is being weaned from some of her heart medication," he said.

The hospital said her condition today was critical but stable.

The liver was producing bile, an indication that it was functioning normally, Zitelli said. Stormie faces a critical period within the next week, "when signs of rejection most frequently appear in heart transplant patients," he said.

"I've been up (to see Stormie) three times today," the 27-year-old mother said at a news conference Wednesday afternoon. She was accompanied by her fiance, Donnie Millsap.

"Every time we go up we have to scrub our hands...and put on a mask and cap, so I try not to go up too often. But now that she's nodding and all, I'll be up there more and more," she said.

Stormie has been conscious on-and-off since the 16-hour operation ended at about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, said hospital spokeswoman Sonja Levine.

The heart and liver were removed Monday from Katie Rebstock, 4, of Macedon, N.Y., who died earlier that day following an auto accident. The organs were rushed to Pittsburgh by plane and implanted by two teams of surgeons.

Stormie was born with a rare disease that elevated her blood cholestorol to dangerous levels, damaging both her heart and liver, doctors said. She would have died within a year without the operation.

Shift in Soviet leadership indicated

MOSCOW (AP) — Politburo member Mikhail S. Gorbachev, rumored to have vied with Konstantin U. Chernenko for the Communist Party leadership, played a key role in the meeting that named Chernenko chief and is said to have taken the No. 2 spot in the Kremlin.

Gorbachev's rise was first suggested by the Politburo lineup at the funeral ceremonies for Yuri V. Andropov this week. It seemed to be confirmed by the official brochure on the Communist Party Central Committee plenum that elected Chernenko as general secretary on Monday.

The brochure, obtained by The Associated Press today in advance of its public release, showed that Gorbachev formally closed the meeting "in behalf of the Politburo."

Such a privilege would not have been given to Gorbachev and then confirmed by an official publication unless he had assumed a leading position on the Politburo.

A highly placed Soviet source told a member of a Western delegation who was in Moscow for Andropov's funeral that Gorbachev is the second man in the Politburo behind Chernenko.

In his statement, Gorbachev added a call for party unity that Western analysts saw as a clear public endorsement of Chernenko, aimed at dispelling any notions of rivalry and at rallying Gorbachev's Central Commitee supporters behind Chernenko.

The statement by Gorbachev was not previously reported in the state-run press, which had mentioned only speeches by Chernenko, who opened the plenum, and Premier Nikolai A. Tikhonov, who nominated the new general secretary.

It was not clear why the Gorbachev statement was not published in the official newspapers earlier.

In the official brochure on the November 1982 plenum that named Andropov to replace the late Leonid I. Brezhnev, only Andropov and Chernenko, who nominated Andropov, were listed as speaking.

Gorbachev, who concentrated on agricultural affairs before Andropov's assumption of power, rose under the former KGB chief and was considered by Western observers to be a strong contender to take over the party.

When Chernenko emerged as the new general secretary, there was speculation that Gorbachev had been unable to muster enough support to become general secretary and that Chernenko was the only candidate that could be accepted by both the old Kremlin guard and the younger members of the Politburo.

In his statement, Gorbachev said that at the plenum, "questions of the succession of the leadership were solved with a feeling of major responsibility toward the party and the people."

Gorbachev praised the "unanimous election of comrade Chernenko," and also said the plenum gave "full support" to the policy statements made by Chernenko in his speech.

The 52-year-old party official appeared at Chernenko's side when the Politburo viewed Andropov's body both before and after Chernenko's election.

Soviet sources said last year that Gorbachev was Andropov's chosen successor.

Ministers retired

MOSCOW (AP) — Official reports have disclosed the retirement of two Soviet ministers — including one who left office without the customary official thanks, an indication he may have been forced out in disgrace.

The official news agency Tass reported Wednesday in the Russian-language service that V.M. Blinov, minister of justice in the Russian Federation, the largest of the Soviet Union's 15 republics, had retired.

A spokesman for the ministry told The Associated Press by telephone that Blinov's name was Vladimir. The spokesman, who refused to be identified, would not give any other details.

Western reference books show Blinov became head of the Soviet-Tunisia Friendship Society in 1975 and give his date of birth as July 10, 1922.

By contrast, Pravda announced today the retirement for health reasons of the national minister of industrial construction, Alexander M. Tokarev, and said the Politburo thanked him for his "honest labor."

Tokarev, 62, was appointed in April 1967. He had become a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party in 1966.

Reagan to capitalize on change

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan vowed Wednesday to seek to "take advantage" of new Soviet leader Konstantin Cherenko's desire for better relations with the United States in the hope that the two superpowers can agree to safeguards against the use of nuclear weapons and the escalation of regional conflicts.

Reagan also indicated a willingness to meet Cherenenko at the summit, if they can reach accord on an agenda and demonstrate a willingness to "seriously deal" with important matters that now divide the two nations.

Asked if he felt more "optimistic" since Cherenenko was selected by the Communist Party's Central Committee Monday to succeed the late Yuri Andropov, Reagan replied, "Yes, I do. Yes."

The president, speaking at a White House breakfast session with a group of journalists, appeared buoyed by a half-hour meeting in Moscow Tuesday between Cherenenko and Vice President George Bush, who headed the American delegation to Andropov's funeral. Bush delivered to Cherenenko a personal letter from Reagan.

In that session, according to Reagan, the 72-year-old Soviet leader suggested that "we must both take a part in seeing that regional conflicts did not get out of control, that there should be safeguards against any inadvertent use of nuclear weapons."

"In other words," the president explained, "...his whole tone and his words were such that indicated that he believed that there was an area for us to come to agreement on these things."

While he noted that Cherenenko did not retreat from "basic Soviet positions," Reagan drew a sharply contrasting picture between Cherenenko and Andropov.

Paying tribute to the "new leadership," the president said it is important that there is someone now in control in the Kremlin "who has not gone out on record as making statements that he would then have to retract in order to change a position or moderate his position."

"Yes," he added, "we're going to try and take advantage of this (Cherenenko's attitude) to establish contact, communication on the issues that divide us and see if we can't indicate or prove to them that they would be better off if they joined the family of nations."

Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union have deteriorated badly during Reagan's three years in the White House–a period during which the Kremlin was run first by aged, ailing Leonid Brezhnev and then, after his death, by the terminally ill Andropov.

All nuclear arms negotiations between the two nations were suspended last year when the United States began deploying Pershing II missiles in Europe and the Soviets walked out of talks in Geneva. But Cherenenko comes to power after years of close association with Brezhnev, who met with Presidents Nixon, Ford and Carter during the period of U.S.-Soviet detente, and, therefore, may be more amenable than Andropov negotiations with the United States..

In his speech to the Communist Central Committee Monday, Cherenenko said the Soviet Union does not seek military superiority, but added that "we will not let the military equilibrium that has been chieved to be upset."

Mother calls nurse's conviction 'consolation'

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

GEORGETOWN, Texas — Petti McClellan says she had never been to a courthouse for anything more serious than a marriage license, but she soon became all too familiar with the legal system after a nurse was charged with murdering her 15-month-old daughter.

The mother attended pre-trial hearings and carefully followed the legal intracacies of the case, which culminated Wednesday with nurse Genene Jones being convicted of murder.

Genene Jones

"It's over, it's over," Mrs. McClellan said, sobbing. "I'm glad we won."

Ms. Jones was convicted of injecting young Chelsea McClellan with a powerful muscle relaxant. She also is accused of administering life-threatening injections to six other Kerrville-area children, and one child in nearby Bexar County.

"At least now this won't happen to anyone else," Mrs. McClellan said during jury deliberations. "It's not going to bring Chelsea back, but it is some consolation to know that other parents won't have this happen to them."

Other members of the McClellan family — including Petti's mother, sisters, grandmother and great-grandmother — hugged and kissed prosecutors and said, "Thank you, thank you so much."

"Now my granddaughter will be able to bury Chelsea," said Chelsea's great-grandmother, Hester Turner. "She never really has."

Mrs. McClellan's mother, Robin Alexander, cried as she said that "justice has been done."

But she blamed Bexar County investigators for not investigating sooner a string of suspicious infant deaths at San Antonio's Medical Center Hospital. Ms. Jones worked at the hospital at the time of the unexplained deaths.

"It if had been stopped in San Antonio, it would never have gone to Kerrville," she said. "They were warned about Genene. They didn't pay heed.

"Chelsea would be alive today," Mrs. Alexander said. "That's not being bitter. That's being factual."

Ms. Jones sobbed as deputies escorted her through a throng of news reporters and cameramen into a waiting patrol car, which took her back to the Williamson County Jail.

"That's good. That's what you get," one woman yelled at Ms. Jones.

Another shouted, "The mothers will never stop crying."

The protestors, who carried signs saying, "How many babies have you abused?" and "Stop the baby killings," let out a loud cheer outside the courthouse when they learned of the guilty verdict.

Minutes after the verdict was announced, Petti and Reid McClellan stood locked in an embrace on a second-story courthouse veranda, tears running down both their faces.

Friends said they want to have another child, even if they must adopt.

"All we can do at this point is hope something like this never happens again," Mrs. McClellan said.

Deaf man called for jury duty; Defendant to use blind interpreter

NEW YORK (AP) — A man who is deaf and mute will be allowed to report for jury duty in a criminal case in which the handicapped defendant will have an interpreter because he speaks only Spanish. That interpreter is blind and will have a guide dog in court.

Alec Naimen, 27, of Manhattan, will be among the pool of potential jurors appearing in state Supreme Court today for the trial of Hector Guzman, charged in a narcotics sale case. A sign language expert is being hired to assist Naimen.

"If this experiment works out, there will be more handicapped people serving on juries," said Norman Goodman, chief court clerk of Manhattan.

"I think that these people have their rights, they are part of our community and they should be permitted to sit on juries if they want to."

State Supreme Court Justice Budd Goodman, presiding in the case and no relation to the chief clerk, pointed out that "this is not the only unusual aspect of this case."

In addition to the sign language expert — who will cost the city $65 per day — Guzman, who walks with the aid of crutches, will require the assistance of an interpreter because he speaks only Spanish. That interpreter is blind and will be present in court with a guide dog.

U.S. prepares for defeat of Mideast policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — With President Amin Gemayel apparently nearing acceptance of a plan that would abrogate the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal agreement, Reagan administration officials appear to have resigned themselves to the defeat of U.S. policies in Lebanon.

President Reagan, insisting there is still hope, said Wednesday, "As long as there is a chance for peace, we're going to stay" in Lebanon. "That's what our original mission was."

But there were reports early today that Geyamel was leaning toward acceptance of an eight-point Saudi plan that sets as a goal a pullout of all foreign troops from Lebanon, according to U.S. officials who spoke on condition they wouldn't be named.

The plan would include an end to the May 17, 1983 Israeli-Lebanese peace agreement which Syria has maintained must be ended. One U.S. official said the Reagan administration was not taking a stand on the new proposal. "If the Syrians withdraw and Israel's security is protected, it's a pretty good arrangement," the official said.

Another official, however, said Gemayel "may question whether it would be enough" to save his faltering government. "But he has to ask himself, what he is going to gain by abrogation."

The New York Times and The Washington Post reported in today's editions that Gemayel had accepted the Saudi plan, which would still need approval from Syria and its allies in Lebanon. The Post quoted unidentified sources saying that Gemayel informed U.S. Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew of his decision Wednesday.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, in remarks to reporters Wednesday, said, "Those who would dispense with this agreement must bear the responsibility to find alternative formulas for Israeli withdrawal."

Egypt's stance differs

By ROBERT H. REID

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak's talks in Washington this week underscored basic differences over Mideast policy which some Western diplomats fear will strain relations between the United States and one of its closest Arab allies.

The differences center on Egypt's belief that the Palestinian issue — not Syria's role in Lebanon — is the most pressing problem in the Middle East.

Egypt's position regarding the Palestinians and the role of the Palestine Liberation Organization represents a subtle but clear shift from the policy of the late President Anwar Sadat. He considered the PLO "a representative" — but not the only representative — of the Palestinian people.

IN WASHINGTON, Mubarak described the PLO as the "chosen representative" of the Palestinian people and appealed to the United States to open a dialogue with the organization for an overall Arab-Israeli settlement.

Upon his return Wednesday to Cairo, Mubarak told reporters he sensed "no change yet" in American opposition to a dialogue with the PLO during his Washington talks. U.S. officials confirmed their stance was unchanged.

Egyptian newspapers also quoted Mubarak as saying "no nation can speak for the Palestinians" — a clear sign that Cairo supports a PLO role in any future peace talks.

The United States and Israel reject any PLO role until the organization recognizes Israel's right to exist. President Reagan has proposed instead a self-governing Palestinian entity on the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza in association with Jordan but has provided no role for the PLO.

DESPITE Mubarak's continued pledges of support for the Camp David agreements, his remarks in Washington went far beyond the formula for negotiations laid down in the 1978 U.S.-Israeli-Egyptian accord.

Camp David, which also laid the foundations for the 1979 peace treaty with Israel, provided for Egypt and Israel to open negotiations on the future of the Palestinians. The agreement called for Jordan and Palestinian representatives — but not specifically the PLO — to join those talks at a later date.

Egypt's increasingly strong support for the guerrilla organization comes in the wake of PLO chief Yasser Arafat's visit to Cairo last Dec. 22 and the Cairo government's intensified efforts to resume a leading role in Arab diplomatic ranks.

Following his talks in Washington, Mubarak publicly blamed Israel rather than Syria for the turmoil in Lebanon. Mubarak's chief political adviser, Osama el-Baz, told Egyptian newspapers that any Middle East settlement must include the "legitimate security interests" of pro-Soviet Syria.

Shultz backs friendly policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George Shultz, responding to criticism that he is too friendly to South Africa, says a policy of inflexible hostility toward that country could produce racial warfare throughout southern Africa.

The only course consistent with American values is to "engage ourselves as a force for constructive, peaceful change," Shultz said Wednesday night.

"It is not to egg on the forces of polarization, heightening the tensions that could destabilize the entire region. It is not our business to cheer on, from the sidelines, a race war in southern Africa — or to accelerate trends that will bring such a conflict about."

Campaigning to begin soon

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist government says that campaigning for planned 1985 elections will begin in the second week of March and that each political party will receive a $600,000 subsidy.

Carlos Nunez, president of the Council of State, also said Wednesday that the government will consider phasing out a two-year-old state of emergency that restricts freedom of the press and freedom of assembly.

In El Salvador, meanwhile, FBI officials met with high-ranking military officers to discuss formation of a unit to investigate right-wing death squads, whose activities pose a threat to continued U.S. support of the government, a military officer said Wednesday.

Brigades group claims killing

ROME (AP) — A hard-line faction of the leftist Red Brigades has claimed responsibility for the assassination of Leamon R. Hunt, the American head of the multinational force in the Sinai peninsula who was ambushed outside his home.

The terrorists shattered the bulletproof windows of Hunt's car with submachine guns Wednesday night and killed him with shots fired from point-blank range.

The attack was claimed by the Fighting Communist Party, a Red Brigades faction. Police said they considered the claim credible but were still investigating today.

Thatcher responds to charges

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher responded angrily today to new questioning about a $432 million building contract awarded by Oman to a British firm for which her son, Mark, was a representative.

Mrs. Thatcher said in a letter to Peter Shore, a spokesman for the opposition Labor Party, that he did not have a shred of evidence to support his "serious allegations."

The text of her letter was released by her office. It was in reply to a letter Shore sent to her and made public Wednesday.

Bandits fire on Sudan steamer

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Bandits fired on a Nile River passenger steamer towing four barges, injuring 15 passengers and setting a shipment of petroleum products ablaze, the newspaper Al Ayam reported today.

The government-owned newspaper said the petroleum products were aboard the barges and indicated the fire did not spread to the steamer, which was carrying 180 passengers.

Earlier, the British Broadcasting Corp. reported it had received conflicting reports of the incident on Monday. One account said hundreds of people might have been killed. The other said no one died.

Earthquake felt at Acapulco

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The National Seismological Service says a moderate earthquake occurred Wednesday evening in and around the Pacific resort city of Acapulco, but there were no reports of injuries or damage.

The earthquake, measuring 4.4 on the Richter scale, hit at 6.54 p.m. local time (7.54 p.m. EST), the service reported.

No change foreseen

MOSCOW (AP) — New Soviet leader Konstantin U. Chernenko is ready to work with "all states that are prepared to help by practical deeds to lessen international tension" despite pessimism that East-West relations will soon improve, Pravda said today.

The Communist Party daily newspaper laid out a conservative course for the party under its new general secretary in a front-page editorial that set the tone for Chernenko's first months in power.

A similar article appeared in Pravda in November 1982 after the death of Leonid I. Brezhnev and the installation of Yuri V. Andropov as Kremlin leader.

At that time, Western analysts were hopeful that the moderate tones struck by Andropov and his meeting with Vice President George Bush — then the highest-level contact between the superpowers in three years — would promote better Soviet-U.S. relations.

Monitoring South African churches suggested

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — A commission appointed by the white-minority government has concluded that authorities should more closely monitor the anti-apartheid struggle of the South African Council of Churches.

The council is a leading critic of South Africa's race-segregation laws.

The commission's report, released Wednesday after a two-year investigation, recommended a law making it a crime of "economic sabotage" to oppose foreign investment in South Africa.

The council denies it urges companies to pull investments out of South Africa, but acknowledges that it asks foreign nations to apply diplomatic, political and economic pressure to promote reform.

Also, the report said the council should be subject to a 1978 fund-raising act, giving the government instant access to the council's financial books.

The commission complained that the council was increasingly taking up political issues and opting for "revolutionary rather than an evolutionary process" to change laws that deny the black majority equal opportunity with white South africans.

The 451-page study is called "Report of the Commission of Inquiry into South African Council of Churches."

It did not, as the council feared, recommend that foreign contributions to the council be outlawed. Foreign donors are the primary source of council funds.

"Such actions would not terminate the flow of funds from abroad, would be viewed as an unwarranted action by the state against the church and a restraint on religious freedom," the report said.

The council, founded in 1936, began to challenge apartheid in the 1950s. It has 17 member churches and claims to represent 12 million of the nation's 30 million people.

The council's secretary-general, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, called a news conference Wednesday to attack the report's findings and reiterate his position the government "cannot tell churches how to be churches."

"If after two years, all they come up with are these things, then I am very sorry for this country," Tutu said. He challenged the government to press criminal or civil charges.

Rightist leader defeats National Party candidate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A far-right party leader defeated the governing National Party's candidate in a special parliamentary election for a rural district seat, according to results announced today.

Conservative Party candidate Tom Langley won Wednesday's election with 5,836 votes to 5,339 votes for National Party candidate H. Kruger in the Soutpansberg district in northern Transvaal Province, a stronghold of right-wing Afrikaner voters.

The National Party, which controls the white-minorty government, still holds 115 of the 166 elected seats in Parliament. The Conservatives, who split away from the Nationalists 18 months ago to oppose even limited race reforms, rose to 17 seats.

The special election was called to elect a successor to former National Party Manpower Minister Fanie Botha, who resigned in the wake of a financial scandal.

In another election, the Progressive Federal Party, the official opposition in Parliament, retained a seat in Pinetown outside Durban against a strong challenge from the New Republic Party, which has backed the limited reforms proposed by the National Party.

Progessive candidate Roger Burrows won 5,277 votes to 4,397 for Frank Martin of the New Republic Party in balloting called because of the death of a progressive party legislator. The result left the PFP with 26 seats and the NRP with 8.

The Progressive Party has opposed the government initiatives as too little, too late.

McGovern riding new political wave

George McGovern

TAMA, Iowa (AP) — George McGovern is riding a new political wave that isn't likely to get him the Democratic presidential nomination but could go a long way toward erasing any lingering pain from 1972.

His 1984 presidential campaign began with many friends and admirers shaking their heads and saying, "Say it isn't so, George."

But last Saturday in Des Moines, McGovern drew rave reviews for his performance in the Democratic presidential debate and he came up with what might be remembered as the best slogan of the campaign: "Don't throw away your conscience."

He told the debate audience that he was encountering many people who said they agreed with him, but were afraid to throw away their vote on a candidate who could not win.

Suddenly, the man who for the past 12 years was a symbol of division and defeat in his party was attracting new supporters.

McGovern remains one of the longer shots competing for support in Monday's Democratic precinct caucuses.

In a campaign growing increasingly acrimonious, McGovern never speaks ill of his rivals. In fact, he gently chides those who attack front-runner Walter Mondale. McGovern repeatedly reminds Democrats that when he won the presidential nomination in 1972 he was "grievously wounded" by his Democratic opponents.

In a speech at Luther College in Decorah Tuesday, McGovern said, "Unwittingly, my Democratic attackers provided the doubts and smears against me that Richard Nixon and his team exploited in the general election. We should not repeat this mistake in 1984."

Since he appealed to the consciences of voters he has been approached repeatedly by Iowans telling him he was right.

McGovern workers are caught up in a post-debate elation.

"You want to look good, put some money on McGovern in Iowa," said Charlie Herndon, who came to the state from Elizabethtown, N.C., to work in the campaign.

Herndon was one of the anti-war protesters who worked on McGovern's 1972 campaign.

Destroying marijuana no crime

HONOLULU (AP) — A man admitted he was chopping down a crop of marijuana when the police arrived. But he says it was only to make the noisy helicopters go away.

And a judge agreed, finding the defendant innocent of promoting a detrimental drug.

Godfrey W.K. Ching Jr., 32, denied in court Tuesday that the marijuana plants growing near his property belonged to him. But he admitted knowing the illegal drug was being grown there.

When police helicopters began flying over his home, disturbing his wife and awakening his son, Ching borrowed a machete and went out to destroy the marijuana, he said.

Just as he was destroying the plants, police ground crews arrived and arrested Ching in the remote valley in windward Oahu.

Deputy City Prosecutor Matthew Chung argued that Ching was trying to destroy the marijuana to keep it from police.

But Circuit Judge Richard Au said he found Ching's account credible.

Town considers quitting state

BRIMFIELD, Mass. (AP) — This irrepressible western Massachusetts town, which declared its independence from Great Britain two years before the rest of America, is now considering seceding from the state over an unwanted site for treating hazardous wastes.

Selectmen have already decided to propose to voters at an annual town meeting May 14 that a committee study secession.

Two residents, Lawrence Lowenthal and Bradford Powers, have suggested quitting the Commonwealth of Massachusetts "in order to end the long train of abuses to which not only Brimfield, but this portion of the state has been subjected, culminating in the abrogation of home rule through the hazardous-waste facility siting process."

Several years ago the state Legislature passed a law giving a state siting council the right to decide where hazardous-waste facilities should be located. The council then overrode local zoning ordinances, permitting a California company to build a $50 million treatment plant in Brimfield and neighboring West Warren.

Powers, who teaches sociology and anthropology at a junior college, said Wednesday that the waste-site issue brought already-simmering resentment to a head.

Brimfield, which for three weeks each summer becomes an open-air market attracting more than 100,000 people, has that one industry and wants no more. Years ago its 2,400 residents adopted zoning bylaws that limit business and industry.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Merchant Montgomery Ward, Spanish guitarist and composer Andres Segovia and Texas industrialist H.L. Hunt were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: America's foremost contralto, Marian Anderson; actors Alan Bates and Hal Holbrook; author-presidential daughter Margaret Truman. Now is the perfect time to start a new business or partnership. The financial outlook is bright and you find yourself surrounded by talented people. Let your friends play matchmaker if they are so inclined.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Details make or break a financial deal. Put all your cards on the table. Bankers do not like surprises. Use wit to solve a family problem. Romance is everything you have wanted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You make progress in solving a financial or parent-child problem. Only direct questions will elicit the answers you need. Telephone calls are essential to a job hunt.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): When you act with confidence, others want to join you. Try not to appear overanxious concerning a raise or promotion. It would be a big mistake to mix romance with business.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Authorities are lenient if you tell the truth. School becomes easier when you try a new approach to studying. Count on money arriving in time. Romance boosts your spirits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A family or financial problem should take precedence over everything else. Get an independent opinion before making a business commitment. A new romance has you on tenterhooks. Relax and enjoy partner's company!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Success comes to those who actively pursue it. Treat yourself with the same compassion you extend to others. Seize an opportunity to move into the spotlight at place of employment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your co-workers are more congenial today. Seize a chance to display a previously-hidden talent. Group activities prove more pleasurable than solo endeavors. Share expenses if throwing a large party.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stepped-up communications stir your creative juices. Keep your plans flexible enough to accommodate a last-minute request or invitation. An evening social function proves very enlightening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A new project or venture adds excitement to the day. The work will be grueling but well worth your time. Romance sparkles. Avoid being selfish when making weekend plans; consult family members.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Compromise is the key to greater success in business or romance. Conclude negotiations with influential people. A relative or friend pays an unexpected visit. Keep spending within reason when shopping for clothes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A good time to sell real estate or make plans for large property holdings. Take care of all essential tasks before leaving work. Your thoroughness helps you avoid costly mistakes.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not become impatient with those who have less talent or experience. Your efforts pay off in the form of a raise or bonus. Celebrate with your one-and-only tonight.

Miniseries: Good, bad or ugly?

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS' three-part, nine-hour "Master of the Game" can be categorized as the Good, the Bad and the Ugly. The miniseries covers almost 100 years, the last 80 of which are the dregs.

The Good, with picturesque, on-location scenery from Kenya, is Sunday night's first segment. Set in South Africa in the late 19th century, it's an exciting adventure yarn, with prospectors, black hats, revenge, derring-do, horses and a honky-tonk brothel. This is the kind of nostalgic Western the networks don't make anymore.

Ian Charleson, as Jamie McGregor, is a Scotsman seeking a diamond fortune. Naive and trusting, he's duped, cheated and left for dead by the town moguf (Donald Pleasence). Jamie survives, gets rich and sets out to wreak vengeance on the double-dealer and his daughter (Cherie Lunghi).

Part II, Monday night, is bad, as in awful. CBS has ventured slowly into doing miniseries, preferring historical tales like "The Blue and the Gray" and the upcoming "George Washington." This is CBS' biggest foray into trashy novels, and prime time definitely doesn't benefit from another nine hours of mindless wallowing.

In this episode, Jamie's corporate empire has been taken over by his daughter, Kate (Dyan Cannon). Her obsession is to keep the business within the family, and she'll try every underhanded trick to make sure her son (Harry Hamlin) gives up a promising art career for the company.

Tuesday night's final installment reflects "Master of the Game" author Sidney Sheldon's ugly view of mankind. The machinations of the two principal characters make the conniving J.R. of "Dallas" look like an office clerk and Alexis of "Dynasty" a mere flirt. The real game here is mean-spirited people, who infect the miniseries' final three hours.

The most treacherous is Eve Blackwell, Kate's granddaughter and an identical twin. Both the devilish Eve and the angelic Alexandra are played splendidly by Liane Langland. Eve, like her grandmother, will do anything to get what she wants, which, in this case, means inheriting the family business.

Perhaps, one reason why the quality of "Master of the Game" degenerates from good to bad to worse is because two directors and three writers split the work. And, then, the writers were saddled by Sheldon's woefully sudsy book.

The constant theme of "Master of the Game" is that you can control your destiny only by excessively pulling everybody else's strings.

International Popular Bridge Monthly is a very readable bridge magazine published in England and airmailed to the United States ($21 per annum, available from Bridge World Magazine, 39 West 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10025.) This hand is from a running series by David Bird, featuring a cast of characters who play in the African Championship.

The heroes of Bird's series are the Bozwambi team, who were sitting East-West here. Their opponents, who were at the top of the standings, reached four hearts on the auction shown. West led his fourth-best spade. The declarer did not fancy his chances. In addition to the ace and king of trumps, he was gazing at sure losers in spades and clubs.

After some thought, he elected to try a swindle. He won the ace of spades, crossed to the ace of diamonds and tried to get the defenders to crash their trump honors by leading the queen of hearts from the table. But East played low. West won the ace and took his spade trick, and the defenders could not be stopped from getting two more tricks — down one.

In the other room the Bozwambi team reached four hearts without any interference. West found a spade lead and South was faced with the same problem as his counterpart in the other room.

For a moment he, too, was tempted to try to con the opponents into compressing two trump tricks into one. However, further study revealed that there was a legitimate line for his contract. After winning the ace of spades he ran four rounds of diamonds, discarding a spade from dummy.

It made no difference which defender ruffed. If West trumped, he would be doing so with a master; if East ruffed, he would be left with a singleton trump and the ace and king would crash on the first trump lead. No matter what the defenders did, they could not come to more than three tricks.

Sarajevo gold

That old saying "winning isn't everything" is familiar to most Americans; it's been around for years. It seems particularly fitting now that the 1984 Winter Olympics are in full swing in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

A lot of Americans may have adopted that saying as their own during the early days of this year's games. Medals were slim for awhile and gold was nonexistent. But, of course, that has all changed now thanks to some talented athletes.

The saying still applies, though, and we don't say that to take away anything from the fine American athletes in Sarajevo. It applies because, although winning is an element that can never be divorced from competitive sports, the atmosphere surrounding the Olympic Games is so special. It elevates man above the petty differences that arise between people and governments.

That feeling of oneness — the brotherhood of man — has sparkled brilliantly in Sarajevo, just as it has shown during earlier meets. Certainly patriotism is in evidence in Sarajevo; every athlete hopes to win the gold for the glory of his or her country. But the real attraction of the Olympic Games is that they bring men and women together on the field of play to answer basic questions: Who can ski fastest? Who can skate the most perfect pattern? Who can plummet down a tunnel of ice the quickest — and survive?

During the games the athletes lose their identities. No longer are they Americans or Germans or Russians or Swedes even though they are competing for the glory of their respective nations. They are merely men and women meeting on a common field to compete fairly and in an atmosphere of mutual respect. In that way, perhaps they can learn something of their differences — and their similarity. And there they can find the true worth of themselves and mankind. For a few brief days the world appears to push aside its conflicts and to concentrate on the thrill of competition.

That is the real gold at Sarajevo.

Memorable quotes

Some of the more quotable quotations of the past week related to the space shuttle, the defense budget and presidential politics.

Bruce McCandless commented on his spectacular walk in space by referring to the first words spoken by Neil Armstrong when he stepped on the moon in 1969. Said McCandless: "That may have been one small step for Neil but it's a heck of a big leap for me."

Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger talked back to his critics by saying: "Everybody wants a strong defense. Nobody wants a strong defense budget."

Many and varied were the reactions to President Reagan's announcement that he was a candidate for a second term. Many cheered while others jeered, but one of the more interesting remarks came from Senator Bob Dole. He is the gentleman from Kansas ever ready with a quip, and who surely would have dipped his toe into the presidential races in Iowa and New Hampshire if Reagan chose not to run. Quipped Dole after the Reagan announcement: "I've cashed in all my tickets to Iowa and New Hampshire."

On the real estate front, a "Pepper ... and Salt" cartoon in The Wall Street Journal showed a homeowner speaking to his realtor as follows: "Your ad made my house sound so great I've decided not to sell it."

Another View:

Chairman Chernenko

Whether the elevation of Konstantin Chernenko as chairman of the Soviet Communist Party reflects the result of a stalemate between rival factions, the victory of one over another, or merely a decision to install a transitional leader in the Kremlin, it is an appointment with caution written all over it. Chernenko's entire career has been that of party functionary lacking in major experience in foreign policy, economics and administration. As a longtime aide to the late Leonid Brezhnev, who was in power for 18 years, Chernenko was a perennial man-in-waiting.

In the selection of Chernenko, who is 72 years old, to one of the two most powerful jobs in the world, there is also a consistency that has come to be expected of the Soviet collective leadership. Not since Nikita Khrushchev's ouster nearly 20 years ago, has the Kremlin been run with either the adventurous individualism that Khrushchev displayed or with the paranoiac brutality that marked the 29-year reign of Josef Stalin. More than anything else, the Soviet Politburo resembles a secretive, suspicious and eminently cautious board of directors made up of old men who have, in Western jargon, paid their dues.

Assuming that Chernenko's selection as party chairman signals a continuation of that style, it raises the question of whether the heirs of Yuri Andropov have either the temperament or the desire to institute any of the internal reforms that Andropov apparently tried to embrace during his short tenure. If not, the Soviet Union may remain mired in ideologic rigidity, bureaucratic sclerosis and economic stagnation at least until the mantle of leadership passes in the new generation of leaders that is forever being heralded by foreign Kremlinologists but that never seems able to take the lever of power.

Internationally, the pitfalls and opportunities remain the same, and it is hard to see how an apparatus headed by someone of Chernenko's background and age will take any dramatic new directions. Although predictions are always risky, it seems reasonable to assume that, with Yuri Andropov's death and Konstantin Chernenko's accession, the Soviet-American status quo has changed little if at all. Either way, however, the imperative to restore a civilized superpower dialogue, and to move forward on the life-and-death issues dividing the two sides, is as great as ever.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Indian credentials questioned

WASHINGTON — One of the country's most celebrated Indians has fabricated much of the background that made him famous. In fact, some Indian leaders doubt that he is an Indian at all.

Jack Anderson

The name he goes by is Jamake Highwater. He has written several books and academic articles on Indian culture, detailing the pain of his life as an Indian. With his dark hair, sculpted profile and majestic presence, he appears to be the very model of an Indian. And his credentials as an Indian have been accepted without question by TV personality Bill Moyers, Who's Who, The New York Times, The Christian Science Monitor and other leading newspapers.

Highwater has produced recordings and television programs; 30 years ago, he founded a dance troupe in San Francisco. The Corporation for Public Broadcasting has put up $250,000 for a TV show now being produced by his non-profit corporation. CPB and the Public Broadcasting System have offered him $600,000 more if he can find matching funds for another TV production that would cost more than $2 million.

Yet under persistent questioning by my associate Les Whitten, Highwater finally admitted that he has lied repeatedly about many details of his life. Asked why someone of such genuine and extraordinary talent felt he had to concoct a spurious background, Highwater said he felt that doors would not have opened for him if he had relied on his talent alone.

"Society puts certain pressures on people," he explained. At one point, he said, "Maybe I should have been more forthright."

Although he still insists he is an Indian, Highwater has dropped any claim to Indianhood from his approved press release. "I'm not going to say I'm an Indian any more," he told Whitten. "But (expletive deleted), I'm an Indian .... I've taken a lot of (expletive deleted) being an Indian." He has also made a pile of money as an Indian.

Here are the highlights, culled from various sources:

— Highwater gave Who's Who his birthdate as Feb. 14, 1942. But when confronted with an old newspaper clipping that named him as founder of a professional dance company in San Francisco in 1954 — when he would have been 12 — he said he had guessed at his birthdate, and could be as much as 10 years off.

— His place of birth has been listed variously as Los Angeles, Canada, South Dakota, Montana and Normandy, France — though he said he was misquoted on the last site. Told that the place he gave Who's Who — Glacier County, Mont. — has no record of his birth, Highwater said he picked it "right off the top of my head."

— He has claimed a bachelor's and master's degree from the University of California at Berkeley, and a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. In fact, he admitted he never got any such degrees.

— Highwater claims his mother was a Blackfeet and his father a Cherokee. But beyond an affidavit in 1974 from his adoptive mother and another from his foster sister, attesting their belief that he is an Indian, he has no proof. He is not on the official Blackfeet tribal rolls, and such respected Indian leaders as Vine DeLoria Jr. and Hank Adams say flatly that Highwater is not an Indian.

— Highwater's father was either an "illustrious motion picture director," an "alcoholic stunt man" or a rodeo clown, and died when the boy was 7 (or 9 or 10 or 13). His mother, according to Highwater's promotional materials and published interviews, either married a rich man or was destitute — or wasn't a Blackfeet at all, but a Cherokee who ran away at 15 to marry a Greek-born circus aerialist.

— He has claimed fluency in 11 languages — including Nahuatl, the Aztec tongue. Yet when questioned in rudimentary French, German and Italian — three of his supposed languages — he could reply only in bad French and finally admitted that he speaks only English fluently.

Footnote: One of Highwater's proudest moments, he said, came in 1979 when Ed Calf Rope, a Blackfeet elder, conferred on him the name Piitai Sahkomaapii, or Eagle Son. Highwater said the name's ceremonial meaning is "He soars highest and catches many truths, which he carries to many lands."

INTELLIGENCE DIGEST: The Israelis are preparing to pull back their forces to stronger defensive positions in southern Lebanon. But they'll leave behind Lebanese guerrilla units, which they're now arming and training.

— West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl has decided to go ahead with the sale of arms to Saudi Arabia. When a delegation of Jews protested, he told them not to worry. "The Saudis don't know how to use the equipment," he assured the delegation.

GEORGE F. WILL

Hollings presents alternative

WASHINGTON — From the moment Howard Baker called President Reagan's combination of tax cuts and defense increases a "riverboat gamble," the gambling motif has figured prominantly in discussion of economic policy. Speaking of Reagan's policy of hoping the recovery can survive at least several years of inaction on the deficits, Felix Rohatyn, the investment banker, says: "There is a level of risk in business that is unacceptable, and that is called 'betting the company.' We're in the process of betting the company." And now Democrats can campaign on the question: "Do you really want to play Reagan roulette?"

George F. Will

If Democrats have enough cleverness to bait a hook with, they will say: "Reagan said in the State of the Union address that government's share of GNP 'is more than we can afford.' But the Great Communicator won't communicate anything specific about what he plans to cut. Discretionary domestic spending could be abolished without balancing the budget, so his opposition to new taxes and his silence about spending cuts speak clearly: A vote for Reagan is a vote to cut middle-class entitlements, especially Social Security and Medicare."

However, most Democrats have an almost majestic incapacity for sensible analysis. Today they are misjudging Reagan's strengths and weaknesses.

His strength is not that he is a great communicator. He is not. He is terrific at making people feel good about themselves and their country. That talent is necessary for any President — necessary, but not sufficient. A great communicator communicates ideas as well as moods, including complicated and sometimes distressing ideas.

Reagan has an important case to make for his most misunderstood redirection of national policy — his restoration of civil-rights values and rejection of "race-conscious remedies" for government-approved minorities. But he has left the making of his case to other officials, who have been drowned out by social-policy entrepreneurs who want to dominate a federal civil-rights industry dispensing ethnic entitlements. Similarly, he has a much better case to make than he has made concerning arms control.

Reagan's real strength is his persona: He is seen as manly, standing for clear values. But the way he is standing regarding deficits may worsen his real weakness. Democrats mistakenly think his principal weakness is the perception that he is "unfair" or bellicose. Actually, his most serious potential weakness is the suspicion that he is on automatic pilot, navigating by ideology rather than reality, closed to evidence and unwilling to communicate unpleasant news or decisions.

If he gets past Nov. 6 by just praising Uncle Sam's posture ("standing tall") and promising anti-deficit specifics in December, he will begin his lame-duck term without any mandate. But he may be, if not safe, at least less vulnerable than he could be, because Democrats are overlooking the candidate who most advantageously compares and contrasts with Reagan.

This candidate has, as Reagan does, the bearing, the aura of a President. He, however, has an edge, a bite that Reagan lacks and that the public may soon feel these times demand. He is the no-more-Mr.-Nice-Guy candidate.

He is the Democrat least vulnerable to the three perceptions most injurious to Democrats — that they are careless about defense, incapable of saying "no," and insincere when worrying about deficits. He has a proposal for freezing the budget, a proposal that is somewhat theatrical but has the virtue of offending almost everybody simultaneously. And, perhaps most important, he has a theory — one that can give Democrats an energizing interpretation of Reaganism. This candidate says:

"Reagan likes his deficit." It is the club to break the spirit of Democrats. Soon it will be so large all arguments will be about how, not whether, to cut domestic programs. This candidate says Reagan so loves deficits that his new budget proposes $81 billion in spending increases. (This candidate's math is playful: He counts not only a $48 billion defense increase, but also $6 billion in "tax spending" because Reagan opposes repeal of indexation of income-tax brackets, and $7 billion for cost-of-living increases for entitlements — most of which this candidate would freeze — and $20 billion for new interest on the deficit Reagan accepts.)

This candidate is wrong to see the deficits as part of Reagan's master plan for persecuting Democrats. In the life of a society, it usually is a mistake to postulate mind as an explanation for anything that can be explained as a product of accidents, indecision or failures of nerve.

But this candidate's theory can give Democrats a sense of strategic purpose that could make believable their denunciations of deficits. That is why, were I Reagan, the candidate I would least like to have harrying me is the pro-defense, balanced-budget liberal who is somewhat ornery: Fritz Hollings.

Excitement's 'on ice' at Sarajevo!

"Hey kids, the Winter Olympics from Sarajevo are on."

"We don't want to see the Winter Olympics."

"What kind of talk is that? ABC paid $105 million to bring you 63 1/2 hours of pure sport. Stop doing your homework and sit in front of this set."

"Aw, Dad. All they do is show people pushing turnip carts down cobblestone streets, and sheep in snowdrifts, and they keep going back to the 1980 American-Soviet hockey game."

Art Buchwald

"That's not ABC's fault. A lot of events had to be postponed, and it isn't easy to fill all that time. Hey, look, there's the inside of a Sarajevo restaurant with people eating real Slavic sausage and grape leaves. You don't see that on TV every night."

"Can we go back to our school work now?"

"Aren't you interested in how the American hockey team does?"

"We know how they did."

"How would you know that?"

"It's already been announced on NBC, CBS, PBS, Metromedia, CNN, and every radio station in the country. They even broke into 'Casablanca' this afternoon with a Special Bulletin."

"I think it's unfair for the other networks to announce the results of the Olympics before ABC has a chance to show them on television."

"Maybe they do it so we won't watch the Olympics, but their shows instead," one youngster suggested.

"That's a rotten way for another network to behave. I'll bet if CBS had the rights to the Winter Olympics ABC would never do it to them."

"Why not?"

"Because Sam Donaldson is too nice a guy. Look, kids, they're having a blizzard on the screen. I'll bet none of you have ever seen a blizzard in Yugoslavia."

"I have to study for a math test."

"You can always study for a math test. But you'll have to wait four years to see another Winter Olympics."

"It's boring. The East Germans and the Soviets keep winning all the gold medals."

"That's because they're professionals. They practice for four years. Our kids don't get to see snow except during their spring college breaks. Here comes the women's luge competition. This should be pretty exciting."

"It's boring."

"It isn't boring. It just looks boring. Do you realize those sleds go 75 miles an hour?"

"If you've seen one East German woman lie down on a luge, you've seen them all."

"Wait a minute. They're going to go to a Sarajevo discotheque after the commercial. I'll bet you kids never knew Yugoslavia had discotheques."

"I've got to write a paper on Paul Volcker."

"Paul Volcker can wait. You're going to stay here and watch the Olympics whether you want to or not. The cross-country skiing is coming up very soon and it's an educational experience I don't want any of you to miss."

"I'd rather do a paper on the Federal Reserve Bank."

"That's out of the question. Look, there's a wonderful shot of the Yugoslav Army removing snow from the downhill race finish line. Now they're doing it in instant replay. Don't tell me you've seen that before."

"I think I'll go to bed. Wake me up if an American does anything interesting."

"I'm disgusted with all of you. You have no sense of history. Do you realize World War I started in Sarajevo?"

"What has that got to do with watching Commies win gold medals at the Winter Olympics?"

"If you hang around just a little longer, I'm sure Jim McKay will tell us."

Union members voting on contract

By The Associated Press

A week-long strike by Philadelphia dockworkers "should be over" with a tentative contract settlement, a union spokesman says, while members of a holdout union in Baltimore joined others in returning to work. No progress was reported in Boston.

Locals of the International Longeshoremen's Association settled with Philadelphia shippers Wednesday on a health care clause, and 2,500 union members were voting today on the contract.

A Baltimore port official said terminals there were "back in business" Wednesday after a federal judge barred the biggest union from staging a wildcat walkout. In Boston, striking dockworkers scheduled more contract talks today.

Fugitive had been in city since Feb. 1

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — South Africa's most wanted fugitive, a former police captain who died in a struggle with an officer here, had been in the city at least since Feb. 1, authorities say.

Police on Wednesday said fingerprints confirmed that the man gunned down in a residential neighborhood two nights earlier was bank robber Andre Stander, 36.

Stander, who police said rented an apartment in Fort Lauderdale on Feb. 2, was a rising star in the South African police when he was convicted in 1980. He and two fellow prison escapees were suspected in about 20 bank holdups in that country in the past four months.

Charges may be dropped against sect

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Six members of a religious sect accused in a bloody shootout with deputies "ought to be tried," a judge says, but he plans to dismiss the charges because a state-county dispute held up money for the defendants' legal fees.

Superior Court Judge Thomas Meehan released jurors Wednesday and said he'd probably let the defendants go on Friday. They were charged in a 1982 confrontation in which a deputy fatally shot two members of the Christ Miracle Healing Center and Church, in Miracle Valley.

Cochise County officials said they couldn't afford public defenders for the six and asked the Legislature for a loan. But state Senate leaders balked at a $500,000 loan bill, saying the county had not proven its case and should use money designated for other uses.

Men to be tried for killing witness

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge ordered two men to be tried in the bus-stop killing of a female witness whose death ended a separate murder case against one of the men's brothers.

Municipal Court Judge Xenophon F. Lang on Wednesday set a March 1 Superior Court trial date for Thomas "Pete" Jackson, 44, and Kent Christon, 22, in the death last Nov. 2 of Demetria Wallace, 19.

Prosecutors contend the two shot Ms. Wallace because she was to testify five days later against Christon's twin, Grant. Charges that Grant Christon killed a cab driver were dropped after Ms. Wallace, the key witness, was gunned down.

Cities lose congressman's support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cities have lost a key congressman's support for legislation that would allow cities to collect a 5 percent franchise fee from cable television systems.

Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., chairman of the House communications committee, on Wednesday proposed instead that city governments be allowed to collect a franchise fee totaling no more than 4 percent of a cable operator's annual gross revenues.

Of that 4 percent, he added, no more than 3 percent could be used by the city to support a local regulatory office to oversee the cable system. The remaining 1 percent should be set aside for the production of local public access programming, he suggested.

Official to be sentenced for bribes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former Energy Department official will be sentenced April 5 for taking $30,000 in bribes for internal agency papers which were part of a criminal investigation of alleged illegal oil deals.

Shelley Robert Kolbert, 42, of Washington, pleaded guilty Wednesday to bribery and income tax evasion before U.S. District Court Judge Thomas P. Jackson. Kolbert could be sentenced to 15 years imprisonment and a $90,000 fine on the bribery charges and one year in prison and $25,000 on the tax charge.

Government prosecutors said the oil deals involved Tulsa, Okla., businessman Robert Sutton, who allegedly netted $1 billion in illegal profits.

ACLU suing National Security Agency

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Civil Liberties Union is suing the National Security Agency to open to the public the papers of cryptologist William F. Friedman, who retired from the NSA in the mid 1950s.

The lawsuit was filed in U.S. District Court on behalf of six library and history associations and researcher Jay Peterzell. Friedman's papers are filed at a library on the campus of Virginia Military Institute in Lexington.

In the suit, the ACLU said Friedman intended that his collection should be available to scholars, researchers and the public.

February tax returns down sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service says it isn't concerned that the number of federal income tax returns filed through the first week of February was down sharply from the same period a year ago.

Through Feb. 3, the IRS had received 1.46 million returns, compared with 2.26 million through Feb. 4, 1983. The IRS issued 539,000 refunds totaling $273 million, down from 1.28 million refunds totaling $798 million in 1983. The average refund dropped to $507 from $622.

"January is never a representative month," IRS spokesman Larry Batdorf said Wednesday. "Sometimes it starts off heavy and then drops off; sometimes the opposite occurs. You can't really gauge by the early returns."

AT&T competitors facing fee hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Companies competing with American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for long-distance phone calls are facing an estimated 45 percent increase this spring in the fees they pay for local phone connections, an industry official says.

"Based on this FCC order, we are projecting an increase of about 45 percent over what we pay now; from $235 per line per month to somewhere between $335 and $355 per line," Gary Tobin, a spokesman for MCI Communications, said Wednesday.

Male orangutan unmasked as she

CHICAGO (AP) — Eric the orangutan fooled just about everybody at the Lincoln Park Zoo for more than six years, but the truth emerged when the ape did something only a female could do: Eric had a baby.

Eric, now known as Erica, was unmasked on Saturday after a visitor to the zoo noticed the 88-pound, red-haired ape nursing a newborn orangutan.

The visitor told head ape keeper Jim Higgins, who quickly examined the only known female ape to be a likely candidate for motherhood. But Higgins found nothing — until he checked Eric.

"When I came in and they told me about Eric, I couldn't stop laughing," said Karen Buckley, another ape keeper. "One man told me the zoo didn't know what it was doing, and I said, 'Whaddya mean we don't know what we're doing? We're so good we're breeding the males.'"

Zoo officials said the gender goof could have been more embarrassing had it not been discovered over the weekend. The zoo recently made arrangements to send the 10-year-old Eric to China, where "he" was to have been mated to a female orangutan.

"We have pleasant egg on our faces," said Marc Rosenthal, the zoo's curator of mammals on Tuesday. "We're really happy with the birth. Of course, if we'd sent (Eric) to China, we would have been a little bit more embarrassed."

Zoo officials said the mixup was understandable. Orangutans, an endangered species native to the South Pacific islands of Borneo and Sumatra, frequently have small genitals covered with long hair, making it difficult to distinguish male from female.

The pregnancy wasn't noticed by zookeepers because orangutans generally have ample bellies, Ms. Buckley said.

Eric was identified as a male in 1977, when the animal had cataract surgery in a zoo hospital. The operation was performed by Dr. Eric Maschgan, who was the zoo's veterinarian. Eric was named after Maschgan.

Rosenthal said a similar incident occurred in the 1960s, when a gorilla thought to be a male was shipped to a German zoo for mating. A few days later, a cable arrived from German zookeepers asking why they'd been sent a female gorilla.

"This is not the first time it has happened," Rosenthal said. "And I'm sure it won't be the last."

Eric, now known as Erica, rests with her newborn Wednesday morning at Chicago's Lincoln Park Zoo. Until Saturday, when a zoo visior informed keepers of the newborn's arrival, zoo officials had thought the 10-year-old orangutan was a male.

Anthony launches voting drive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Raising a table knife over a huge birthday cake, Susan B. Anthony intoned a wish and a prayer: "Happy Birthday to you, Susan, and may your spirit continue in every one of the women here today."

Susan B. Anthony, the leading suffragist, would have been 164 on Wednesday. Her grandniece, also named Susan B. Anthony, had come from Florida to launch a non-partisan women voter registration drive.

"I didn't know her, but I feel as if I know her," said the frail-looking woman wrapped in a red cape similar to the one her great-aunt often wore. "I was brought up in her ambience. I ate off her table until three years ago when I gave it to the Smithsonian."

Ms. Anthony, 67, was born 10 years after her famous relative died. Her grandfather was the suffragist's youngest brother.

"My father's sister Lucy was a tremendous feminist and crusader. My brother, my sister and myself have been up to our necks in causes," she says. "My father was more interested in the theater. It was my non-Anthony mother who saw to it that her first daughter would be named Susan B."

Ms. Anthony said her own first cause was the Spanish Civil War in 1938. A recovered alcoholic and a Roman Catholic convert, she has given "700,000 miles of lectures in the last seven years" on alcoholism, feminism and religious mysicism. She also founded a group of religious leftists called "Socially Concerned Contemplatives."

Ms. Anthony's seven published books include an autobiography called "The Ghost In My Life." A biography of her famous great-aunt went by the boards after a year of research when she realized she couldn't separate herself from her subject — "the emotional connection was too strong."

Officials seek maker of bogus certificates

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Immigration officials are seeking the manufacturer of bogus birth certificates being sold from California to Tennessee by at least 40 "street vendors" including four women indicted this week on charges of conspiring to sell phony identification papers.

The women, indicted Wednesday, are part of a multi-state fraud ring that operates as far south as Jalisco, Mexico, authorities said.

Maria A. Zamora, Francisca Sylvia Rodriguez and Maria del Rosario Villarreal face federal charges of conspiring to possess and sell false identification documents and evidence of U.S. citizenship.

Ms. Rodriguez and Ms. Villarreal are from Rio Grande City and Ms. Zamora is a resident of Mission.

The fourth woman listed on the indictment, Lydia Richmond, is currently serving three years in the Federal Correctional Institution at Fort Worth on a postal fraud conviction.

Ms. Richmond was convicted of providing false letters of employment to aid people in obtaining unemployment benefits, according to prison spokeswoman Charlotte Barron.

Authorities said Ms. Richmond, operating out of jail, was a key figure in the birth certificate scheme.

J.L. O'Bryant, assistant director of investigation for the INS in Harlingen, said the indictments followed a year-long investigation dubbed "Operation Starr, because the majority of the documents were Starr County birth registration certificates."

Authorites expect to make at least three more arrests, but have not yet located the manufacturer of the documents who is thought to be working in Texas.

Last January, INS officials searched Ms. Zamora's home and found 165 identification items including counterfeit birth certificates and phony voter registration cards, O'Bryant said.

He said phony papers were sold for an average of $2,000 each to adult illegal aliens who used them to obtain social security cards, U.S. passports and welfare benefits.

"We intercepted documents produced by this ring from Chula Vista, Calif., to Oak Ridge, Tenn.," O'Bryant said.

Immigration officials have arrested more than 40 illegal aliens who tried to use the phony papers. It is not known how many people successfully used the bogus birth certificates.

'Bubble boy' suffering from bleeding

HOUSTON (AP) — Drugs being used to treat David, the 12-year-old "bubble boy," indicate he is in danger from symptoms brought on by an operation intended to give him immunity to illness, an expert on the procedure says.

The boy, whose system has been attacked by cells from transplanted bone marrow, continued to suffer from internal bleeding Wednesday, Dr. William Shearer said in a statement.

"He still has some diarrhea but nausea and vomiting have stopped," Shearer said. "His fever is somewhat lower and there is some gastro-intestinal bleeding."

He said the boy is "better in general." Shearer said the boy will continue for several weeks to be treated with corticosteroids.

Dr. Joel Rappaport, clinical director of the bone marrow transplant program at Boston's Brigham and Women's Hospital, said in a telephone interview Wednesday that corticosteroids generally are reserved for fairly severe cases of graft-vs.-host disease.

Doctors implanted 1⅔ ounces of specially treated bone marrow into David's bloodstream Oct. 20. But antibodies contained in the donor marrow have attacked the boy's system in a reaction known as graft-vs.-host disease.

"The acute form (of graft-vs.-host disease) is staged from zero to four," he said. "The higher the stage, the more serious the problem."

He said corticosteroids are generally used "in a high grade-two, a three and a four."

Between 25 and 50 percent of patients with cases that severe die, Rappaport said.

Susannah Moore Griffin, a spokeswoman for the Baylor College of Medicine, said doctors stopped bleeding from an ulcer in David's gastro-intestinal tract. But the boy was still bleeding internally and doctors were unable to find that source, she said.

The boy, whose last name never has been disclosed, had spent his entire life until last week inside a series of sterile room-size plastic bubbles.

He was removed because doctors were unable to treat him properly for vomiting and diarrhea. David is now in a specially renovated two-room suite at Texas Children's Hospital.

He continues to get blood transfusions "as necessary," Mrs. Griffin said, and is still being fed intravenously.

"There are two reasons why IV feeding was done," she said. "One is because of vomiting and diarrhea. A lot of the nutrients he's taking in were lost. Also, the IV feeding bypasses the digestive system so it won't disturb the ulcer."

Despite the illness, David sleeps through the night, is able to walk around and look outside through a window in his room, Mrs. Griffin said.

"He is talking. I know he's been watching television," she said. "His mother has been in the room with him. I believe he has talked to some of his schoolmates over the phone."

David, who is in the sixth grade, has attended classes through use of a telephone hookup to his room at home.

Autry wants execution televised

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — James David Autry says officials should televise his execution, set March 14, if they really want to scare others out of committing crimes.

Autry, a 29-year-old who came within half an hour of being put to death Oct. 4, told Houston station KHOU-TV Wednesday the public doesn't understand what executions are all about.

"It's not real — all that real — to the public if they don't see an execution," Autry said. "If they're serious about using the death penalty as a deterrent, they should let the public see it."

He said he wants appeals efforts on his behalf stopped. His mother, Shirley Stucker of Florence, Colo., is working to have the death sentence commuted to life in prison.

Autry still maintains he is innocent of the 1980 shooting death of Shirley Drouet, a clerk at a convenience store in Port Arthur.

But he said he is sorry about her death.

"I pray to be forgiven," he said. "All I could say is I'm sorry."

Autry contends his companion, John Alton Sandifer, fired the shots which killed Mrs. Drouet, former priest Joseph Broussard, and left Greek sailor Anthanasios Svarnas with brain damage.

Sandifer was originally charged with capital murder in the episode, but the count was dropped when he pleaded guilty to an unrelated burglary. Sandifer has been released on parole.

Autry's execution was halted in the last hour Oct. 4 by Supreme Court Justice Byron White.

White said he wanted to give the court a chance to consider arguments in a similar case, where defense lawyers contended their client should not be punished with death if other defendants had received less severe penalties for the same crime.

Houston to manage station

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's Johnson Space Center has beaten out eight other centers for a chance to manage NASA's space station program, officials said.

The final choice, which came down to the Houston operation and the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., was announced Wednesday by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"We've actually had fair advance notice that this was going to happen, but until we saw it in writing, I couldn't assume," Gerald D. Griffin, director of the Houston center, said in an interview. "The biggest fact is that we're on a course here for another decade for strong development to keep JSC on top of the technology edge in space."

Griffin said he was told of the selection in a letter from NASA Director James Beggs.

"I'm feeling very good about it all," Griffin said. "Everybody down here is very excited. Now we realize we've got the big challenge and now we've got to go to work and make it happen."

The Houston center, which has trained America's astronauts since the infancy of the manned space program in the early 1960s, was among eight centers considered for the space station mission.

Beggs said the Johnson Space Center would be forming a "program office" to coordinate engineering, business management, logistical operations and vendors which would supply the station.

President Reagan called for the construction of a station in his State of the Union address last month. NASA spokesman Dave Alter in Houston said it was likely the station could be in space in 1991 or 1992.

Griffin said the selection likely would raise the employment level at the center by 50 to 150 people.

"It's hard to say," he said. "The station in and of itself is not going to cause a large personnel growth.

"The biggest impact is continuity and stability it gives to our planning and to our workforce, which always has responded to a challenge in a superb way. When you lay another challenge out there, it gives us the ability to retain our workforce and attract new people."

Griffin said work already has begun on selecting a program manager.

"I've been talking with a number of people here and at headquarters (in Washington)," he said. "We're narrowing that list today."

U.S. finally wins Alpine skiing gold medal

Johnson outruns Mueller, Steiner for first place

AP Laserphoto

Holly Beth Flanders of Deerfield, N.H., is in the air as she speeds down the course on Mt. Jahorina Wednesday shortly after the start of the women's downhill. However, the race was cancelled for the day and competition was rescheduled for today.

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia (AP) — Downhill skier Bill Johnson won America's first Alpine skiing Olympic gold medal ever today, giving the U.S. team its second gold of the Games and the uplift it needed from one of its worst medals showings in 20 years.

The hockey team is out of contention. Two top women's figure skaters were all but eliminated from medal chances in the compulsory round. The speed skaters who so dominated four years ago haven't won a medal.

But then came the 23-year-old Johnson from Van Nuys, Calif., and his sizzling one minute, 45.59-second tear down the side of a mountain here.

He outran Europe's best downhillers, including silver medalist Peter Mueller of Switzerland, Austrian bronze winner Anton Steiner and 1976 downhill champion Franz Klammer of Austria, who finished 10th.

It was only a few weeks ago that he became the first American man to win a World Cup race, a performance that brought a sullen look from Klammer.

Johnson had taken European ground. And today he took the gold.

It was the first time a member of the U.S. men's team had finished better than 5th place in an Olympic downhill.

Johnson, recognized as one of the best "gliders" on the World Cup circuit, trailed Mueller through the intermediate clocking on the Mount Bjelasnica course, but made up the time on the bottom third, which is flatter and better suited to his specialty.

THE BEST U.S. hopes now stand with the individual figure skaters.

With only the men's individual figures medals still to be handed out today, the United States was tied with Switzerland for sixth place overall in the medals tally. Both countries have two gold and two silver medals. The leaders are the Soviet Union with 20 medals (three gold), East Germany with 19 (seven gold) and Finland with 10 overall (two gold).

On Mount Jahorina today, Michela Figini of Switzerland won the women's downhill, followed by teammate Maria Walliser in second.

Olga Charvatova of Czechoslovakia prevented a Swiss sweep by edging Ariane Ehrat out of the bronze. The best American finisher was Holly Flanders of Deerfield, N.H., in 16th.

Going into the men's race, with less than four days remaining in the 14th Winter Olympics, the United States had just three medals – one gold and two silver – after 27 events, and was tied for sixth place with West Germany, Canada and Czechoslovakia. The Germans and Canadians had two gold to the Americans' one.

SCOTT HAMILTON and Rosalynn Sumners, the men's and women's figure skating leaders, are in position to give the United States its first sweep of the two events since 1956 when Hayes Alan Jenkins and Tenley Albright did it.

Hamilton could finish fifth in tonight's free skating program and still win a gold medal.

"If I go out relaxed and ski the way I know I can ski on this course, there's no doubt I can win," Johnson said before the race.

The U.S. women skiers managed a 1-2 finish in the giant slalom on Monday, but could not keep up with the Europeans today on Mount Jahorina.

Figini won the race in one minute, 13.36 seconds, just .05 seconds faster than Walliser. Charvatova clocked 1:13.53 to take the bronze by .42 seconds.

Gaetan Boucher today became the first double gold medalist in Canadian history by edging two Soviets to win the men's 1,500-meter speed skating. His time was 1:58.36, nearly three seconds slower than the Olympic record set by American Eric Heiden in 1980.

And a Swedish relay team anchored by 15-kilometer gold medalist Gunde Svan won the gold medal in the 4X10 cross-country ski race in 1:55:06.3. That was 10.2 seconds ahead of the second place Soviets and a minute, 25.1 seconds ahead of the Finnish team, which won the bronze.

MEANWHILE, WEDNESDAY was a day the U.S. hockey team and American figure skaters Elaine Zayak and young Tiffany Chin would rather forget.

A 3-3 tie with Finland, on a goal with 21 seconds left, saddled the U.S. team with its worst hockey finish since the Winter Olympics were founded in 1924. Just 1-2-2 in round-robin play, the Americans meet Poland, 1-4, Friday in a match for seventh place.

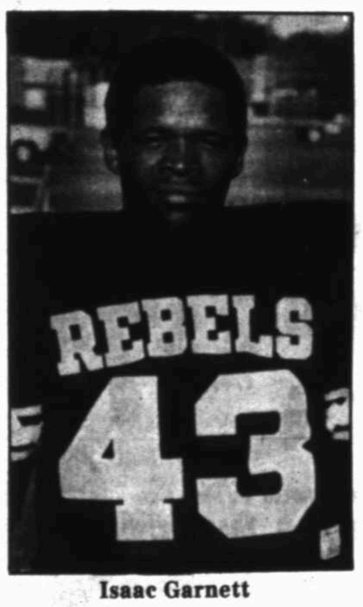
Lee holds final celebration for 1983 football team

Garnett named most valuable player on offense, Johnson on defense



Isaac Garnett

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee held its final celebration for 1983's "New Tradition" Rebels at the Midland Civic Center Wednesday night with the annual football banquet.

It was a time to remember Lee's most successful year on the gridiron. A berth in the state finals, a 13-3 season record, two victories over Odessa Permian and the 55 seniors who graced that squad.

It was a time of coming together once again. Spike Dykes, who resigned as Lee's head coach in December for a coaching position at Texas Tech, was there. So was new head coach Jack Tayrien and former head coach Gil Bartosh, who is now Midland's athletic director.

And so were the Midland Lee Rebels, and ultimately, this was for them and the memories they gave us.

IT WAS a time to give out awards for outstanding performances, and you can bet that the choices were hard to make when this team was a success from start to finish.

It came as little surprise that fullback Isaac Garnett, who gained 1,994 yards rushing in 16 games to win All-State honors, was named as Lee's most valuable offensive player in 1983. All-State linebacker Michael Johnson got the honor on the defensive side of the football and both are rejoining Dykes after signing football scholarships recently with Texas Tech.

Johnson was also named as the most outstanding linebacker while Garnett was also voted by team members as the top offensive back.

But there were other awards of importance as glory was shared in "New Tradition" flavor.

Andre Mayfield, another All-State choice, was named as the top secondary player and defensive end Nicky Tomlin was voted as the top defensive lineman. On the offensive side, center Allen Bell was voted as the top lineman while Willie Long took top receiver honors. Gordon Norris was named as the best special team player.

TWO OTHER coveted awards were shared by three special Rebels.

The Lena Douglas Award, which is named after a former Lee teacher, goes annually to the player with the highest grade point average. This year the honor went to Rob Walker, who has posted a 4.143 grade point average in his high school career, ranking 10th in a class of 525 students.

The Bob Dillon Award, given in memory of the former Reporter-Telegram sports writer, was shared by two players from the 1983 squad. The fighting spirit award went offensively to lineman Ronnie McReynolds and defensively to linebacker Scott Hicks.

Special awards were also given to members of the community for tireless support of the team in 1983. Dr. Thurston Dean and Dr. Donald Floyd were presented with special plaques for their service this year and Bob Walker, president of the Lee Booster Club, was also given a plague for his work.

Dave Griffin of the Midland Chamber of Commerce presented Lee High with a plaque containing all the names of the Lee players, coaches and trainers as a reminder of the outstanding football season.

DYKES WAS given a picture of a hand holding high a Lee football helmet to remember the season and Scotty Alcorn, who served as master of ceremonies, presented the school with a picture of a Lee crowd waving a sea of Rebel flags.

Bill Sarpolius, a state senator from Amarillo, was the guest speaker for the night.

Every Lee player was given a medallion for having played in a state championship game.

"It's only a small token, but this is something you can remember all your lives," Dykes told his team. "We've gone through something that we will never forget."

Flu bug wrecking havoc on MHS, Lee swimmers

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

The flu bug that has gripped students at Midland's two high schools thus far in 1984 has found a home among Lee and Midland High swimmers, too. When the District 4-5A swim meet opens Friday at Mabee Memorial pool, both squads will likely approach things differently.

Meet favorite Midland High, fortunately, has been absent from competition since last month's MHS Invitational. The 'Dogs are just now returning to full strength.

Lee, however, has been hard hit by the virus, and Reb coach Charles Guthrie has his fingers crossed regarding his team's showing.

"We've been hit real hard," said Guthrie. "I was even out all last week with it. We've been missing practices, then when they get back they have to take make-up tests, so they miss more practices. It's been pretty hectic."

Still, the Rebs hope to make a run of things with the few on hand. "Midland's going to be the team, and San Angelo," Guthrie says of the field's best. "Cooper will be right along with them.

"We'll try to do the best we can in the medley relay," he continued, "We've got a good shot in the girls 500 free, 200 free and 100 free. Keith (Cox) stands a good chance of winning the district in diving, though he's been ill too. He's practiced two days in the last three weeks, and he's missed our last two meets. He looked good before he got sick."

In the 200 individual medley, Guthrie has to wait until Friday to determine his team's chances, because they ride on Caroline Reed.

"She's been quite ill and won't get back into the water until the meet," said Guthrie. "We'll just have to wait and see."

AT MIDLAND High, coach Jesse Marsh has a schedule break to thank for MHS's recovery rate. Since the Invitational, the Bulldog swimmers have battled flu and illness, but haven't had the continued drain of competition to add to the miseries.

"We were hoping the layoff would be a very positive thing," said Marsh, "But everybody except for three boys was sick. It tore us up. We were ready, then the flu bug hit everybody."

As a consequence, MHS has not had as much preparatory time in the water as Marsh envisioned. However, at least MHS was getting healthy instead of running its resistance further down. "If they were going to get sick, they did it at the right time," said Marsh. "They have all their background training in."

As usual, the 'Dogs are loaded. MHS swimmers are expected to be factors in most events, and the squad boasts the best freestyler in the league in junior Andrew Jordan.

In addition, MHS expects to hear from divers Brian Ameel and Doc White. Indeed, with Cox of Lee involved, the Tall City could be in for a diving sweep. Unfortunately, the diving competition is being held at Odessa Permian High School.

AS OF late Wednesday, the COM Mabee pool had a broken pump, and the meet had a possibilty of moving entirely to Permian High. But as things stand at press time, preliminary events will begin Friday at 1 p.m. Diving will commence two hours after the end of the prelims. Saturday's finals start at 2 p.m.

McEnroe defeats Wilander

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Fiery American John McEnroe celebrated his 25th birthday in grand style here Thursday night, beating Sweden's Mats Wilander to move closer to the final of the $400,000 Akai Gold Challenge tennis tournament.

At the Sydney Entertainment Centre, McEnroe shut the brilliant Swede out of the match, winning 6-1, 6-2, 6-2 in 88 minutes.

It was the first time the pair have met in Australia since Wilander upset McEnroe in the Australian Open in Melbourne last December.

"I don't think I have ever seen him play better, and I had nothing tonight to really trouble him," Wilander said.

McEnroe's win, following his easy victory over Argentinian Guillermo Vilas Wednesday night, has almost certainly assured him of a spot in the final, to be played Saturday night.

"I feel I'm playing as well now as I have ever played, but I know I can get better," McEnroe said. "I think the next three years could be my best."

In a complete reversal of the famous 6½-hour Davis Cup clash between the two in St. Louis two years ago, McEnroe was always in control. He broke the Swede twice in the opening set.

Chaps need win streak for automatic berth

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If Midland College is to gain one of the two automatic berths in the Region V tournament in early March, the Chaps are faced with the virtual necessity of winning their final five in a row, starting with New Mexico Military Institute 8 p.m. today in the Langford Chaparral Center.

The Chaps turned in one of their better performances of the season with an 88-63 rout of New Mexico Junior College at the Center Monday, but as MC heads into the stretch run of the season, Coach Jerry Stone is down to 10 able-bodied hands. Jeff Hurd left the squad last week.

That isn't necessarily fatal. MC won a national championship two years ago with only eight players after the havoc wrought at midterm.

GOING INTO tonight's game, MC finds itself in a three-way tie for fifth place in the Western Junior College Conference standings. After Monday's 73-72 loss to Western Texas College, Howard College is a league-leading, but mortal, 11-2. Odessa College and South Plains, both 9-4, are two games back with MC, Amarllo and Western tiedwith five setbacks, three games off the pace.

New Mexico Military Insitute (4-20 and 0-13) is out of the running for anything automatic, but the Broncos will qualify for the post-season tournament amongst the eight also-rans for the final two spots in Regional. The eight-team field will be completed by four entries from the Northern Conference.

The Broncos, despite their lowly standing, have two of the top scorers in the league in Billy Rodriquez, 21.5, who leads the WJCC and Ralph Raby, 15.2 average, just behind the 16.2 by Midland's 6-9 Teviin Binns.

Gretzky returns; Oilers snap skid

By The Associated Press

Wayne Gretzky is back and the Edmonton Oilers have returned to the win column.

Gretzky, returning from an injury that sidelined him for six games, had two goals and two assists as he broke a record for shorthanded goals to lead the Oilers to a 7-4 victory Wednesday night over the Winnipeg Jets.

The Oilers snapped a five-game losing streak and, as a team, broke a National Hockey League record for shorthanded goals in one season.

Gretzky' shorthanded goal in the third period was his 11th of the season, breaking a record he shared with Marcel Dionne of the Los Angeles Kings.

In other games Wednesday night, it was the New York Rangers 3, New York Islanders 2; Buffalo 7, Boston 4; Minnesota 3, Toronto 1; St. Louis 4, Detroit 3; and Chicago 5, Quebec 2.

Gretzky, who has 63 goals and 94 assists for a league-leading 157 points, had missed Edmonton's last six games with a bruised shoulder he reinjured in the NHL All-Star Game Jan. 31. The Oilers, who have the NHL's best record, won their first game without Gretzky but lost the next five.

NHL

"It was a good rest for me and a good break and maybe in the long run it will pay off for me," Gretzky said. "I just did my thing, did my job and got banged a few times, but my shoulder didn't bother me at all. I was a little tired, but there was no pain at all."

The Oilers broke the NHL record for shorthanded goals in the second period, when Mark Messier scored their 26th of the season to eclipse the mark the Boston Bruins set during the 1970-71 season.

Paul Coffey added two goals for Edmonton, while Kevin McClelland and Jari Kurri also scored. Kurri returned after missing 16 of the Oilers' last 17 games.

Lucien DeBlois, Paul MacLean, Dale Hawerchuk and Scott Arniel each scored for the Jets, who have lost all six of their games against the Oilers this season.

Rangers 3, Islanders 2

Nick Fotiu's goal broke a 2-2 tie at 13:08 of the third period, lifting the host Rangers over the Islanders and into sole possession of first place in the Patrick Division.

Fotiu, with one hand on his stick and Islanders defenseman Denis Potvin draped over his shoulder, swept the puck from behind the net and backhanded it past goalie Roland Melanson to move the Rangers two points ahead of the four-time Stanley Cup champion Islanders. The two rivals meet again Saturday night at the Islanders' home ice.

Mike Bossy returned to play with the Islanders, but saw limited action after missing six games with an injured right knee.

Sabres 7, Bruins 4

Right wing Real Cloutier scored two of Buffalo's four power-play goals to lead the Sabres over Boston and increase their first-place lead over the Bruins in the Adams Division to five points.

It marked the first time this season the Sabres scored four power-play goals in one game. Coming into the game, the Bruins had one of the top penalty killing units in the league, keeping the other team from scoring in 84 percent of their shorthanded situations.

North Stars 3, Maple Leafs 1

Dennis Maruk scored two power-play goals as the Minnesota North Stars ended the host Toronto Maple Leafs' four-game winning streak. Brian Bellows scored a shorthanded goal in the second period as the North Stars boosted their Norris Division-leading record to 30-23-5.

Maruk scored the only goal of the first period and Bellows gave the North Stars a 2-0 lead eight minutes into the second period.

Blues 4, Red Wings 3

Dave Pichette, playing his first game since coming to St. Louis in a trade last week, assisted on every goal and goalie Mike Liut turned away 42 of 45 shots as the Blues recorded a road victory.

Two straight power-play goals in the second period — one by Brian Sutter and the other by Joe Mullen — gave the Blues a 4-2 lead before Detroit's Ivan Boldirev scored his 22nd goal on a power play at 17:58. Liut turned aside 12 shots in the third period.

Black Hawks 5, Nordiques 2

Denis Savard reached the 30-goal plateau for the third straight season, scoring twice in the second period as the host Black Hawks broke a five-game winless streak.

Savard, who has lead the Black Hawks in scoring the past three years, uncorked a 45-footer on a power play to give Chicago a 4-1 lead. Three minutes later, he nailed a 35-footer. Keith Brown assisted on both goals.

BYU's Young receives O'Brien best quarterback award

FORT WORTH (AP) — Brigham Young University quarterback Steve Young has received the Davey O'Brien award, given annually to the country's best quarrterback.

Young received the award, named in honor of the quarterback who led Texas Christian to the 1938 national championship, at a dinner Wednesday night.

After starting his collegiate career as an eighth-string quarterback, Young is now pondering offers from the Cincinatti Bengals of the National Football League and United States Football League's Los Angeles Express.

Young, of Greenwich, Conn., was recruited from Greenwhich High, where he was a veer option quarterback known more as a runner than a passer. When BYU came to him, it was as a defensive back.

"I was by no means a blue-chipper. I didn't blow anybody away with my arm," Young told the Fort Worth Star Telegram in an earlier interview.

When Young got to campus in 1981, it was as the Cougars' eighth-string quarterback and he found his way to the junior varsity team, where he played well, but not well enough to impress head coach LaVell Edwards.

"When he was a freshman, we were kicking it around. There was a period of time when we considered using him in the secondary," recalled Dick Felt, Edwards' assistant coach and defensive coordinator.

Shortly afterward, Ted Tollner walked by and felt Young's arm. Tollner, now head coach at Southern Cal, was then Brigham Young's newly hired offensive coordinator.

"To tell you the truth, I was selfish," Tollner said. "I saw that release and those quick feet and I knew we had to have him on offense."

Ewing helps Georgetown avenge loss to Villanova

College Basketball

By The Associated Press

Patrick Ewing collected 18 points and eight rebounds as Georgetown avenged one of only two defeats this season with its 59-46 triumph over Villanova. The victory was the 22nd for Georgetown, which lost to the Wildcats by two points in double overtime the first time they met this season.

Georgetown Coach John Thompson stuck with Ewing, even though the 7-foot center had two early fouls and got a third with time running out in the first half.

"My assistants wanted me to take Ewing out when he got his third, but I wanted to go with him," Thompson said. "I thought about it, but decided to stay with him. I like him much better on the floor than by my side."

Freshman Dallas Comegys came off the bench to score a career-high 32 points, powering DePaul past Loyola, 93-77. Tyrone Corbin added 18 points, Kenny Patterson had 15 and Kevin Holmes netted 12 as the Blue Demons raised their record to 19-1.

"Obviously, he's the player I thought he was," Loyola Coach Gene Sullivan said of Comegys. "He has talent and he showed it tonight. We just couldn't handle him."

Keith Lee scored 23 points and grabbed 13 rebounds to lead Memphis State over Florida State, 75-67. Lee hit a field goal and four free throws in the final four minutes of the game to help Memphis State break a 63-63 tie and stop a Florida State comeback.

Tim McCalister hit a pair of free throws with 31 seconds left to boost Oklahoma over Oklahoma State, 57-55. Oklahoma All-American Wayman Tisdale preserved the victory with eight seconds left when he blocked a jump shot by Oklahoma State's Joe Atkinson.

Second Ten

Danny Young and Kenny Green led a second-half surge to pace Wake Forest past Clemson, 68-57. Wake Forest led 47-46 with 11:27 left before erupting on a six-point spurt with 8:52 remaining as Young scored four of the points. Clemson got to within 58-53 with 2:45 left on Murray Jarman's free throw, but could get no closer.

Mark Alarie and David Henderson each scored 18 points to help Duke defeat Stetson, 80-69. Johnny Dawkins and Tommy Amaker each had 13 points, while Dan Meagher added 12 in a balanced offensive drive which gave Duke its 20th win of the season.

Others

In other action, Ernie Myers scored 32 points to lead North Carolina State over Northeastern 77-74; John Williams tallied 24 points to lead Tulane to a 51-40 victory over the University of Cincinnati; Roland Brooks hit a 20-foot jump shot at the buzzer as Minnesota pulled out a 68-67 win over Wisconsin; Leonard Hayes scored 18 points and Darren Rowe sank two free throws with 44 seconds to play to lead St. Peter's (N.J.) to a 45-42 victory over Fordham; Keith Taylor's 15 points paced Bowling Green over Western Michigan 71-53, and Eddie Williams scored 16 points to lead Connecticut over Seton Hall 79-57.

Also, Missouri held high-scoring forward Barry Stevens to just five points to post a 64-61 victory over Iowa State behind Malcom Thomas' 13 points; Perry Young scored 26 points and keyed a 13-0 second half run as Virginia Tech built a 12-point lead with 5:26 remaining and held on to defeat Virginia 56-54; Jon Koncak and Larry Davis led a strong inside game that enabled Southern Methodist to beat Baylor 74-57 for the Mustangs' first 20-win season since 1967; Carl Henry's basket with 18 seconds remaining lifted Kansas past Nebraska 67-66, and Carlton Cooper scored 17 second-half points to lead Texas to a 61-57 victory over Rice.

Victory over Baylor gives SMU first 20-win season since 1967

SWC

By The Associated Press

Southern Methodist Coach Dave Bliss says his Mustangs were able to post the school's first 20-win season since 1967 by playing "one game at a time."

Center Jon Koncak and forward Larry Davis led an overpowering inside game and propelled the Mustangs to a 74-57 win over Baylor Wednesday night before a home crowd in Dallas.

The win moved the Mustangs to 20-6 for the year and 8-4 in Southwest Conference play. The last time SMU won 20 games was when the Mustangs won the third of three straight SWC championships under Coach E.O. "Doc" Hayes.

In other SWC clashes Wednesday night, 14th-ranked Arkansas beat Texas Christian 55-48 and Texas downed Rice 61-57.

"It's nice to win 20 games. When you start one, 20 seems an eternity away," Bliss said. "But that's one of the good things about this team. They have taken them one game at a time and that's why we won 20. I think winning 20 games is the goal of every basketball team."

The victory also pulled SMU to within percentage points of third-place Texas Tech in the SWC race.

Baylor led 23-22 with six minutes to play in the first half but SMU outscored the Bears 33-12 over the next 16 minutes. The Mustangs ran off a 16-6 spurt for a 38-29 halftime lead.

Davis, who had his first 20-point performance of the season, and the 7-foot Koncak then scored all but four points in a 17-6 blitz over the first 10 minutes of the second half as the Mustangs built up a 55-35 lead that wrapped up the triumph.

"It was about time, I've been waiting for a game like this for some time, where everything would fall in place," said Davis, who had eight rebounds and two assists to go with his points.

Koncak finished with 16 points and forward Carl Wright 15 for SMU.

Michael Tate led Baylor, which fell into the league cellar with a 1-10 mark, with 12 points. The Bears are 5-17 for the season.

TCU led Arkansas by as many as six points in the first half and enjoyed a three-point lead at intermission — but the Razorbacks outscored the Horned Frogs by 7-1 to start the second half and later pulled away from a 37-37 tie by going on a 12-1 streak.

Senior guard Alvin Robertson led the Razorbacks with 27 points, including eight straight tallies in the second half.

Arkansas improved its record to 20-4 and 10-1, one game behind the league-leading Houston Cougars.

TCU, led by junior guard Tracy Mitchell's 17 points, fell to 9-14 and 2-10.

Carlton Cooper scored 17 second-half points, including three slam dunks, to lead Texas. Rice led for almost two-thirds of the game, before Cooper tied it up with 13:30 remaining.

Cooper had 20 points for the night. Tony Barnett scored 19 points for the Owls.

Mavs stun Sixers in 2OT

NBA

By The Associated Press

Together, Dick Motta and the Dallas Mavericks are reaching milestones.

Motta coached his 650th victory as the Mavericks defeated the Philadelphia 76ers 119-116 in double overtime Wednesday night for their first victory over the defending National Basketball Association champions in the franchise's three-year history.

"The atmosphere was almost playoff type. It was a sellout and we were playing the world champions. The win couldn't have come against a better club. This win should help the franchise," Motta said. "I'm tickled to death with the result."

Meanwhile, the Chicago Bulls traded Reggie Theus to the Kansas City Kings Wednesday for center Steve Johnson and three second-round draft choices. Theus, a two-time All-Star guard in his sixth year, has spent most of this season on the bench after Chicago Coach Kevin Loughery complained of his lack of defensive play.

The Mavericks blew a 14-point lead in the fourth quarter and played in overtime without their star, Mark Aguirre, who fouled out in the first overtime after scoring 33 points.

But Brad Davis, Rolando Blackman and Pat Cummings sank crucial free throws in the final minute of the second overtime to give Dallas its first victory over Philadelphia in seven tries.

The 76ers lost their eight game in 11 outings, playing once again without center Moses Malone, who has a sprained ankle. The 76ers finished the game without Julius Erving, who fouled out early in the second overtime.

Blackman finished with 26 points for the Mavericks while Andrew Toney had 29 for the 76ers. Regulation play ended with the score tied 100-all as Bobby Jones' tipped in Toney's missed shot with two seconds to play. Davis' layup with eight seconds to play tied the game 108-108 at the end of the first overtime.

Spurs 114, Nets 108

The San Antonio Spurs have not had that much success on the road — until recently, that is.

The Spurs, who lost 22 of their first 24 away games, won their fourth straight road game Wednesday night as Mike Mitchell scored 30 points and George Gervin added 23 against New Jersey.

"When we went on this trip we just wanted to go out and have some fun," said Mitchell, who scored 20 points in the first half on 10-of-11 shooting from the field. "We've been playing like a team that has nothing to lose."

Bucks 107, Pacers 91

Milwaukee moved into first place in the Central Division by one-half game over Detroit with its victory at Indiana.

Sidney Moncrief scored 24 points and Marques Johnson added 17 as the Bucks pulled away in the fourth quarter.

Cavaliers 104, Suns 90

John Bagley came off the bench to score 21 of his 26 points in the second half as the host Cavaliers won their fifth straight game and eighth of the nine they have played since the All-Star break.

Forward Phil Hubbard added 25 points as Cleveland won without its two starting forwards. Lonnie Shelton was suspended for two games after a fight Tuesday night with New Jersey's Buck Williams and Cliff Robinson missed his second straight game because of bronchitis.

Sonics 116, Bullets 99

The SuperSonics won their 11th straight at home and snapped a three-game losing streak as reserve guard Fred Brown sank four jumpers in a fourth-quarter surge. The Bullets have lost 12 of their last 13 road games.

Tom Chambers led Seattle with 28 points and Jack Sikma added 22 as the SuperSonics boosted their record to 27-23.

Reagan denies deficits caused Wall Street's slump

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan denied Wednesday that his administration's historically high budget deficits were the cause of the recent slump on Wall Street, that they were keeping interest rates high or that they threatened the current economic recovery.

He was pessimistic about the future of his much-ballyhooed bipartisan deficit-reduction talks, blaming the Democrats for delaying any serious talks, but was optimistic about the health of the economy and discounted the 100-point fall in the stock market last week as evidence of new anxiety about the deficits.

The stock market is "several hundred points higher than it was three years ago when we came here," Reagan said.

Asked if he agreed with business leaders and his own economic advisors that deficits posed a serious threat to the recovery this year, Reagan replied "No, I don't. But that doesn't mean that I don't take the debt seriously. I've been out preaching on the mashed potatoes circuit for the last quarter of a century about the deficit spending that has been a policy of the Democratic party for half-a-century now..."

Reagan inherited deficits from President Carter that approached $40 billion. Now, they exceed $190 billion and the Congressional Budget Office warns that they will surpass $300 billion by 1988 if Reagan's policies are not changed.

Although Reagan's budget negotiators last week submitted a secret proposal outlining $44.6 billion in new tax revenues, along with a similar sized list of spending cuts, Reagan denied that tax increases would solve the deficit dilemma.

He said he favored simplifying the tax system, not so much to close loopholes but to catch tax cheaters which he said was a prime way to "sizably decrease the so-called deficits."

In what could be a theme not just for his reelection campaign but for a second term, Reagan indicated that the soaring deficits crystallize the crossroads facing the country: the need to reduce the role of government at all levels.

He continually deflected questions about potential damage being done by the budget deficits by reaching back into his decades-old storehouse of criticisms about budget deficits and big government.

What's wrong today is not the massive, $200 billion in budget deficits, in themselves, Reagan said. "The deficit is the result of what is basically wrong, and that is that the federal government, or government in general in this country, is taking too big a share out of the private sector, and there must be a way for us to bring this down."

When asked about the link between budget deficits and uncommonly high interest rates, Reagan contended there was no link.

"I think interest rates will come down when the money lenders are convinced that the threat of rolling back into inflation again is gone," he said.

In another interview, a top administration aide also was pessimistic about the bipartisan budget talks and the prospect for any deficit-reduction package passing Congress this year.

The administration has no commitment to supporting tax increases — even those identical to the $44 billion proposed for the bi-partisan budget talks — if they are passed by the Senate Finance Committee or the House Ways and Means Committee without massive spending cuts.

The United States, who in 1962 was the leader in world steel production has lost the lead and, American companies have been forced to cutback on their facilities, as U.S. Steel did in December.

Efforts to restrict foreign steel imports jeopardizing mergers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The steel industry's successful campaign to win quotas and restraints on foreign imports played a key role in the government's decision to block a major domestic steel merger and may jeopardize the prospects for another.

"They can't have it both ways. They can't have both protectionism in the U.S. market and then expect to be judged on merger questions as if they operated in a free world market," said William F. Baxter, a Stanford University law professor who until two months ago served as the Reagan administration's antitrust chief.

As head of the Justice Department's antitrust division, Baxter wrote the new merger guidelines under which his successor, Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath, moved Wednesday to block the proposed $770 million merger between LTV Corp. and Republic Steel Corp. The deal would have produced the nation's second largest steelmaker. U.S. Steel is the largest.

McGrath explained that foreign competition could not be used to justify the deal, particularly because there are a variety of import quota and voluntary restraints on steel imports from Europe and Japan — restraints which the U.S. steel industry itself campaigned for.

He said if the merger were approved and U.S. steelmakers used the resulting increased concentration of ownership here to collude on a steel price increase, these restraints would prevent foreign steelmakers from sending in enough low-cost steel to drive the prices back to fair market values.

McGrath's explanation also cast considerable doubt on whether he will approve the proposed $575 million merger between U.S. Steel and National Steel, the nation's seventh largest producer. Although he said he had not decided yet, he said the same factors would be involved and "to the extent that this (decision) might give some learning as to other mergers, so be it."

Based on what he had heard of McGrath's decision, Baxter said in an interview, "It seems sensible to me, and the considerations to which he referred are all considerations that were worrying me" in his early analysis of the deal before he left the government.

In a joint statement, LTV, which owns the nation's No. 3 steel producer Jones & Laughlin, and Republic, the nation's No. 4 steelmaker, said they were "surprised and deeply disappointed" by the decision.

They said they would initiate further talks with Justice "to explore whether we can resolve our differences," but McGrath indicated it would take a substantial change before he would drop the government's intention to sue to block the deal.

The companies criticized McGrath for not giving greater weight to the imports of steel from the European Economic Community and Japan, saying "to ignore that substantial tonnage is to ignore reality."

But McGrath said, "Under the merger guidelines, foreign competitors are relevant if they may step in and in effect help to control the market where domestic producers are raising prices. We concluded on the basis of everything we know that at least over the short-run foreseeable future, the EEC production and the Japanese production are not available to play that role."

He added that, even counting all the foreign imports, the increase in concentration of ownership was larger than allowed by department guidelines and was probably large enough to raise the threat of collusion on prices in the steel industry.

"The American steel industry is in a state of crisis," McGrath said. "It has a very difficult time competing in the world market. I am totally unconvinced, however, that revitalizing the steel industry requires the proposed merger."

McGrath said modernization and restructuring of the U.S. steel industry is urgently needed to salvage its competitive position in the world and he offered to provide antitrust guidance to U.S. steel companies to help with that process.

Among the options he named as more likely to win approval from his division were joint coal and ore supply deals between companies, swapping or consolidation of plants, and exchanges of semi-finished products.

Baxter also said U.S. steelmakers "should look very carefully at different structural solutions to their problems that don't involve corporate mergers."

Boone Pickens would replace Gulf chairman

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — T. Boone Pickens Jr. says if his investor group wins control of Gulf Oil Corp., it would replace Gulf Chairman James E. Lee at the annual stockholders' meeting in May.

Pickens, chairman of Mesa Petroleum Co., Amarillo, is leading a group of investors trying to gain control of Gulf. His group wants to force Gulf to manage assets to better benefit stockholders.

He claimed executives at several big oil companies are directing their companies as professional managers, not for the good of the stockholders.

"Shareholders are beginning to see that caretaker managements with little stock ownership are more interested in empire-building than shareholder value," Pickens, an Oklahoma State University graduate, told a group at an OSU public policy forum in Stillwater Tuesday night.

Some 53 million shares of Gulf stock have been traded since Dec. 2.

"Every share of stock that trades is a vote against Gulf management," he said.

The stock, traded two months ago at $37, is now at $57. He said he values the company stock at $109 per share.

Pickens said at Gulf the top three officers of the company own less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the outstanding shares.

Gulf management "seems to be spending a lot of time and money working against their shareholders. The recent proxy fight, which was designed to take away shareholder rights, cost about $10 million.

"They hired private detectives to follow Mesa people. They tried to pressure our banks so that they would not provide financing for us to buy Gulf shares. They lobbied in Washington to get more taxes placed on royalty trusts.

"Over the last five years," he said, "Gulf has spent $15.6 billion, but only 40 percent of that went to domestic oil and gas exploration and development. The other 60 percent went to foreign activities, downstream operations and non-energy related ventures.

Man jailed in Exxon station bomb threat

DALLAS (AP) — A Fort Worth man remained jailed Wednesday on charges he violated his parole by planting bombs at area service stations last year in an attempt to extort money from Exxon.

Federal agents arrested 40-year-old Paul Douglas Methven Tuesday morning in Fort Worth, where he worked as sales supervisor for a construction firm, authorities said.

Methven was arrested on a U.S. Parole Commission warrant accusing him of violating his parole on a Georgia conviction.

The warrant charges him with violating his parole by conspiring to commit extortion, conspiring to manufacture and possess destructive devices and conspiring to destroy property by means of a destructive device in connection with the Exxon bombings, U.S. Marshal Clint Peoples said.

The warrant also accuses Methven of "associating with known criminals."

Methven was paroled Aug. 17, 1982 from a six-year, three-month federal prison sentence he received in Georgia for conspiring to commit extortion through the U.S. mail and for unlawful possession of unregistered firearms, Peoples said.

"He is not being arrested specifically for the Exxon incidents," said Richard Garner, assistant special agent in charge of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms office in Dallas. "He was arrested for violating his federal parole."

Federal authorities need less evidence to prove a parole violation than to obtain a conviction for a crime in federal court, a federal agent who asked not to be named told The Dallas Morning News.

Last April 15, a bomb exploded in a trash can at a Grand Prairie Exxon station after the oil company received an extortion threat. Police were looking for the bomb when it went off. A note found at the station demanded the delivery of 250 gold Krugerrands to the caller.

New housing construction surges

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction of new homes, recovering from an unusually cold December, surged 15 percent in January to the highest level in five years, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that work on new houses in January was started at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.92 million units, the best showing since December 1978 when construction starts were at an annual rate of 2 million units.

The January increase was the largest since a 19.2 percent increase in November 1982, when the housing industry was pulling out of the recession.

The healthy showing for housing starts was just the latest optimistic report on business activity in January, indicating that earlier fears of a major economic slowdown were misplaced.

Those fears had been fueled with the report last month that housing starts had declined sharply in December. The department revised the extent of the decline slightly today to a seasonally adjusted 5.7 percent drop from November. Analysts attributed the fall-off to the unusually cold weather which gripped most of the country.

The improvement in the January housing picture came primarily from construction of single-family homes, which were up 22.7 percent. Apartment construction of two to four units was up a slight 0.8 percent while constuction of larger apartments rose 3.5 percent.

Even with the December decline, new housing construction for all of 1983 was 60 percent above the recession-depressed levels of 1982, when construction hit a 36-year low.

In all, 1.7 million units were started in 1983 and despite the strong January showing, most analysts expect that 1984 will not show much improvement from that figure because of the constraints of relatively high interest rates.

American Express introduces new card

NEW YORK (AP) — American Express Co. announced a new premium "Platinum Card" on Wednesday that will be offered to affluent customers who have been charging $10,000 or more a year on their green or gold cards.

The card will cost $250 a year, the company said, and will give the traveling cardholder access to 25 private clubs in the United States and abroad and will allow holders to cash checks for up to $10,000.

American Express' green card currently costs $35 a year; the gold card is $50.

The company said the new card is designed for a "specific group of people who travel and entertain extensively."

American Express said the platinum card will be offered selectively to about 500,000 of the current 11 million domestic holders of American Express green and gold cards.

Reagan downplays rumors of recession

By The Associated Press

After a modest slowing in December, the economy is showing new signs of vigor, and President Reagan and some economists are downplaying recent predictions that a recession is coming.

The latest indication of the economy's continuing growth was the government's report Wednesday that industrial production rose 1.1 percent in January. The increase was almost double the 0.6 percent rise reported for December.

The president said Wednesday the projected $180 billion federal budget deficit for the current fiscal year does not pose a serious threat to the economic recovery.

Reagan also said the contention by many private economists that the deficit is helping support the current high level of interest rates "I think is wrong."

The president predicted that interest rates would drop "when the money lenders are convinced that the threat of rolling back into inflation again is gone."

Government and private economists echoed Reagan's optimism.

"The fears we heard recently over the continued expansion were greatly exaggerated because the economy is continuing to grow at a very healthy pace," said Robert Ortner, chief economist for the Commerce Department.

In Philadelphia, Kenneth Mayland, chief economist at First Pennsylvania Bank, said he believed the recovery was only at "puberty in terms of its maturity."

Mayland said it was "terribly premature to talk of recessions. The party is just getting good. Why remove the punch bowl?"

Although few economists are predicting a recession for this year, some have suggested recently that the federal government's continuing large borrowing could force up interest rates soon, thus pinching the economic recovery.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker told Congress earlier this month that if the budget problem was not handled prudently, a new recession could result. Neither said he expected that to happen, and Volcker insisted that the near-term economic outlook was bright.

In its report on industrial production for January, the Federal Reserve Board said the increase was the 14th in as many months. The production gains were "sizable and widespread," the report said.

In a separate report Wednesday, the Commerce Department said business inventories rose 0.4 percent in December while sales advanced by a much brisker 2.4 percent, leaving stocks at a record low. The measure of time it would take to use available stocks fell to 1.31 months, lower than the old record of 1.34 months set in November.

In other economic developments Wednesday:

—The Justice Department said it will sue if necessary to block the proposed $770 million merger of LTV Corp. and Republic Steel Corp. into the nation's second-largest steelmaker. Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath said the proposal runs too great a risk of domestic collusion to raise steel prices. The two companies said they were "surprised and deeply disappointed" at the decision, saying imports are causing great damage to the domestic steel industry and a merger would enable them to compete more effectively.

—A Wall Street legend ended when the common stock of the "old" American Telephone & Telegraph Co., for decades dubbed the investment of widows and orphans because of its bedrock reputation for security and steady dividends, was traded for the last time on the New York Stock Exchange. America's most widely held stock ended its era with a 25-cent decline, to $63.50 a share, in NYSE composite trading, and closed where it often had in the past, atop the NYSE's most-active list as more than 3 million shares changed hands.

Reserve asks banks to stop holding checks before credit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board is asking banks and other financial institutions to consider easing their policies of holding customers' checks as long as two weeks before crediting accounts.

At the least, Fed members said Wednesday that banks could be encouraged to disclose publicly their policies and to consider whether there is really a need for lengthy holds on Social Security or other government checks.

The action came amid talk of congressional action. Several senators, including Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., have said they will press for legislation on the issue unless the Federal Reserve takes some action.

In actual practice, many banks allow customers immediate or nearly immediate access to money the customers deposit in their accounts by check. However, the banks retain the right not to do so and sometimes exercise that right, citing concerns that a customer's check might eventually "bounce," or be returned for lack of funds.

During the float period, the banks can and do make money on the depositor's funds by investing them elsewhere, a fact that has drawn criticism in Senate hearings. However, the Federal Reserve governors did not criticize that practice.

Federal Reserve officials will try within the next month to agree on details of a policy statement with the U.S. comptroller of the currency and officials of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the National Credit Union Administration.

Dollar retreats on foreign markets

LONDON (AP) — The dollar retreated further on foreign exchange markets early today despite positive U.S. economic reports. The value of gold bullion declined in thin trading.

The U.S. currency, which fell sharply in Europe Wednesday before turning mixed later in New York, opened lower against all other major currencies except the Canadian dollar.

West German traders said the market was ignoring Wednesday's reports of a 2.2 percent rise in U.S. retail sales in January, a 1.1 percent jump in U.S. industrial production last month and a boom in auto sales during early February.

The traders said, however, that the dollar appeared to be steadying at its lower level.

The West German mark, which hit a 10-year low against the dollar in January, has been the main beneficiary of the dollar's recent slide, dealers said. In early Frankfurt trading, the dollar fell to 2.6725 marks, from 2.6905 marks Wednesday.

Other midmorning dollar rates compared with late Wednesday included:

—2.2025 Swiss francs, down from 2.20875.

—8.24325 French francs, down from 8.2950.

—3.0240 Dutch guilders, down from 3.0380.

—1,655.50 Italian lire, down from 1,663.25.

—1.24615 Canadian dollars, up from 1.24555.

The British pound edged up to $1.4435 from $1.4430.

Earlier in Tokyo, the dollar closed at 233.20 Japanese yen, down from 233.63 yen.

Gold bullion opened lower in Europe. Prices later recovered somewhat in slack trading but remained below Wednesday's rate.

London's five main bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $383.10 an ounce, down from $385 Wednesday. In Zurich, gold was bid at $383, down 75 cents.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold shed $1.57 to close at $383.52.

Silver bullion was bid in London at $9.15 an ounce, off 3 cents from late Wednesday.

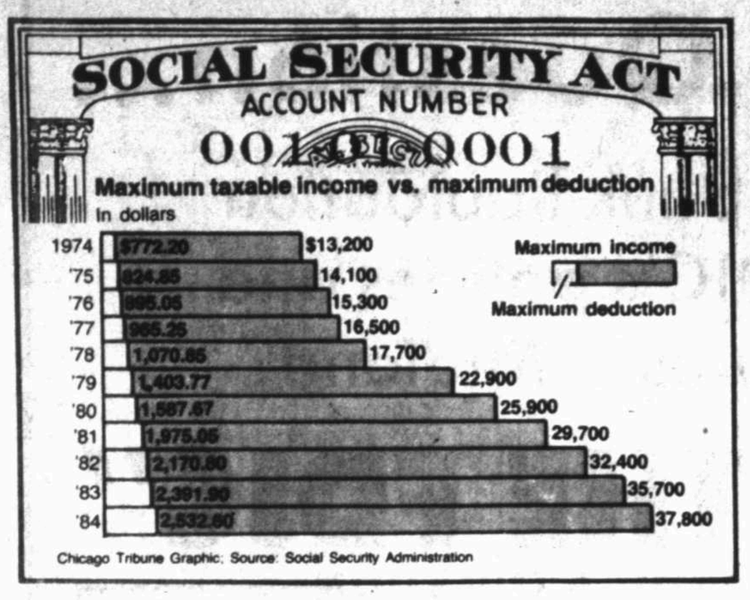
Businessmen want more cuts in Social Security funds



WASHINGTON (AP) — A business leaders' group says there is "very little margin of safety" in Social Security's trust funds and urges lawmakers to trim more benefits and speed up the shift to a later retirement age.

A subcommittee of an influential business group, the Committee for Economic Development, made those recommendations Wednesday in a report titled, "Social Security: From Crisis to Crisis?"

The report drew a sharp retort from Robert M. Ball, a former Social Security commissioner and member of the National Commission on Social Security Reform, which fashioned the package of $166 billion in tax hikes and benefit cuts enacted last spring to bail out the system.

Ball called the suggestions "quite irresponsible.... It would take a major recession between now and 1988 to cause even a small problem. Beginning in 1988, we can expect very large surpluses."

Ball said the business group appeared to be "looking for any excuse to push their proposals for further benefit cuts."

The group includes 200 top business executives and several college presidents. The Social Security report was prepared by its 15-member program committee headed by William F. May, dean of New York University's School of Business Administration and former chairman of American Can Co.

Kenneth McLennan, the group's vice president and director of industrial studies, said in an interview that it is not realistic to expect Congress to cut Social Security before this fall's elections, "but I think that if you want to solve the deficit in 1986-87, you're going to have to look at Social Security."

McLennan said, "We're not criticizing the commission. We think they did an admirable job of trying to get consensus. But ... it has not solved the problem, certainly in the long run and probably not even by the end of the decade."

The report said the four economic scenarios used by Social Security's trustees are all "relatively optimistic" and there is "very little margin of safety" for the system to weather another major recession in this decade.

The report called for pushing the retirement age up from 65 to 68 by the year 2000. Last year's rescue bill will gradually raise the age to 67, but the move would not start until 2000 and would not be complete until 2027. The business group said that "is too little, too late."

Instead of matching the annual rise in the Consumer Price Index, benefit increases should be limited "perhaps to 60 to 80 percent of the increase," or, as an alternative, initial benefits should be awarded under a somewhat less generous formula, the report said.

Both the Reagan administration and Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress have said Social Security is off limits now for budget cuts. Medicare, funded primarily by Social Security's payroll tax, is facing its own financial crisis over the next decade, and Congress may address its problems next year.

The report noted that Social Security's old age and disability funds are expected to have a reserve level of only about 15 percent over the next several years — barely enough to pay two months' benefits. The system operates primarily on a pay-as-you-go basis, with payroll taxes coming in each month and going out immediately to the 36.2 million beneficiaries.

The report said, "It is irresponsible for policy makers to consider as acceptable a contingency fund equal to only two months of benefit payments."

Analyst says auto industry 'maintaining momentum'

By EDWARD MILLER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers say early February sales were the best in five years, and an analyst says the report shows the industry is "maintaining the momentum" of its recovery.

The six major U.S. car manufacturers reported figures Tuesday that put early February sales at their highest point since 1979. The sales 32.5 percent higher than in the same period last year.

Joseph Phillippi, an auto industry analyst for Dean Witter Reynolds in New York, said the figures for the first 10-day selling period of the month were "a little slower" than in January. But he said the carmakers were "at least maintaining the momentum they began in late November" following the end of the four-year U.S. car sales slump.

"When you look at the daily selling rate, that alone is encouraging," Phillippi said.

In the 10 days, the six major manufacturers sold 181,694 cars, up 32.5 percent from the 137,098 sold in the period a year ago. The period had nine selling days, so the daily selling rate worked out to 20,188, the best since the rate of 23,341 in early February 1979.

Ford Motor Co. led the way with a sales increase of 65.5 percent in the Feb. 1-10 period compared with the period a year ago.

Chrysler Corp. sales were up 35.1 percent. General Motors Corp. sales were up 18.9 percent. That put sales for the Big Three at 32 percent above last year.

David Healy, who analyzes the auto industry for the New York firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said: "These (10-day) numbers bounce around quite a bit. But, on the whole, this was a good performance."

For the year, 765,123 U.S.-made cars were sold in America, up 39.1 percent from the 549,971 sold by Feb. 10, 1983.

Importers report their sales only once a month, so their market share cannot be computed in the 10-day periods.

GM said it sold 99,353 cars in the Feb. 1-10 period, compared with 83,544 a year earlier. For 1984 so far, GM sales were 444,032, up 31.4 percent over 338,014 of a year ago.

Ford said it sold 51,166 cars in the United States in the early February period, compared with 30,925 in that period last year. For the year, Ford put its sales at 190,388, up 55.1 percent over the 122,714 sold through that date in 1983.

Chrysler said it sold 22,772 cars in the 10-day period compared with 16,846 last year. For the year, Chrysler reported its sales at 92,163, up 44.1 percent over 63,951 by Feb. 10, 1983.

American Motors Corp. said it sold an estimated 4,600 cars in the period this year, up 9.5 percent over the 4,200 sold last year. For the year, AMC has sold 18,871 U.S.-made cars in the United States, up 3.8 percent over the same time last year.

Volkswagen of America said that for the 10-day period it sold 1,329 Rabbits made at its Westmoreland, Pa., factory, down 17.6 percent from the 1,563 sold in the period a year earlier. VW's year-to-date sales were up over 1983, however. The company sold 8,548 Rabbits, up 19.9 percent from 7,127 in 1983.

Honda of America Manufacturing Inc. said it sold 2,474 Marysville, Ohio-built Accord subcompact cars in the period and 11,121 for the year. Percentage comparisons cannot be computed because Honda did not report 10-day sales in the opening six months of production in Ohio.

An agent behind the wheel of a Border Patrol vehicle will be an increasingly familiar scene if Congress beefs up the Border Patrol by one-third.

Border Patrol may be beefed up

Influx of illegal aliens to area decreases

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

A proposed increase in Border Patrol manpower now before Congress would be a tremendous asset in controlling the flood of illegal aliens if it were passed, says Marfa Border Patrol Sector Chief Hugh Rushton.

Midland falls within the jurisdiction of the Marfa Sector.

Nationwide, the proposal in President Reagan's 1985 budget would add 850 border patrolmen and provide an increase in support personnel such as detention officers and investigators.

"Eight hundred fifty new agents would be a tremendous increase for us because we only have about 2,500 in the entire United States," said Rushton, contacted at sector headquarters in Marfa. "It's a step in the right direction — there's no doubt about that. When you consider that the Border Patrol is probably the size of the police department of Houston, it gives you an understanding of how massive this problem is. And although we have got more sophisticated equipment now enabling us to do a better job than ever before, we're still very short of manpower."

Rushton said Border Patrol officials "have every reason to believe that it will pass. If it does, then we will enter into an accelerated hiring posture. The bulk of them will be assigned to Chula Vista, Calif., and the El Paso sectors."

"We're certain to apprehend more aliens with the increase in manpower and that's one of the priorities of the service. We want to stop them here at the border if we possibly can."

— Hugh Rushton, Marfa Border Patrol Sector Chief

The Marfa Sector force, down right now to 104 agents but which normally has 125 agents, probably would not be beefed up appreciably, as the rugged terrain of the Big Bend area is in itself a deterrent.

"There will be a significant increase of manpower in Del Rio and Laredo and to some extent in McAllen — a little less in McAllen and even less in the Marfa Sector. Right now the Marfa Sector is pretty well in control of our territory. We're not having a great influx anywhere along the 365 miles of our border. We pretty well have that under control and are able to concentrate on the northern part of the sector."

However, with an increase in manpower making the El Paso and Del Rio sectors more efficient, more and more aliens likely would begin seeking to cross the Marfa Sector.

"We're certain to apprehend more aliens with the increase in manpower," said Rushton, "and that's one of the priorities of the service. We want to stop them here at the border if we possibly can."

The sector chief said most apprehended illegal aliens who are released across from Presidio in Ojinaga are observed to continue on into Mexico's interior in lieu of reentering.

"I would estimate that 98 percent go on into the interior," he said. "Occasionally, we do have a few turn around and try to make it back across into our country. But they'd have to walk for three days just to be out of our reach."

Also before Congress is a bill which would make it a crime for an employer knowingly to hire an illegal alien. That proposal long has been touted by officials of the Border Patrol as possibly the most important step on halting the deluge of illegal aliens.

"That bill, I believe, would be beneficial in being a deterrent," said Rushton. "It would eliminate the magnet of jobs. And in my opinion, that's what it's going to take: A many-faceted approach to our immigration problem to solve it...There's no doubt that Congress is aware of the problem facing the country and is very anxious to do something about it."

While during the oil boom of the early 1980s many illegal aliens and smuggling rings aimed for the Tall City, such is not the case now.

"Just two years ago, most all the smuggling through here was going to Midland-Odessa, but now the majority of smuggling in our sector is headed toward Dallas," said the chief. "Right now the Big Bend National Park area is our most prolific area of alien smuggling through our sector. We have made several significant (arrests) out of that area, one of which was just sentenced to 10 years. It has had a deterrent effect already on the alien smuggling. We have seen a decline of activity from that area."

Rushton said National Park Service personnel "are certainly aware of the problem they are facing and we are receiving the utmost cooperation from them."

Apprehensions in the Marfa sector are down slightly this year compared to the same period last year.

"We're just passing through the slowest period traditionally — November, December, January," said Rushton. "It should start increasing this month. We'll probably be able to make more apprehensions from the first of March until the end of the fiscal year in October."

Group wants to end cities' feud

ODESSA (AP) — They are billed as the twin cities of West Texas. And their names often are slurred together to imply they are one in the same. But as long-time residents know, Midland and Odessa, despite their physical proximity, are as far apart as two cities can be.

For years, the two have bickered over almost every issue that has confronted them — which city should get a college, which city's name should grace the airport terminal, which city is a nicer place to live.

The list of arguments seems endless, as does the haggling.

And while most residents are used to the battle, one group believes it is time to put an end to the Midland-Odessa feud.

"We are overly competing for industry because of the animosity between the two towns," said Bob Russell, president and general manager of KOZA radio in Odessa. "The two towns' attitudes toward one another is turning some industries off and it's a problem now that we realize we have to diversify our economy."

Russell is a member of the Permian Basin Media Coalition, a group of media executives who want to see the cities united.

"If we don't try to get it together, get these two cities working together, it'll never get together and that can only hurt us both," Russell said. "That's why we decided to do something."

After the oil industry bottomed out and the First National Bank of Midland was declared insolvent, the media coalition formed the Bridge Company to come up with a plan to "bridge the gap" between Midland and Odessa, Russell said.

Beginning this month, the company hopes the distance between Midland and Odessa will become shorter thanks to an advertising campaign being launched to improve relations between the two cities.

More than $1 million in advertising time, space and services has been donated by area newspapers and radio and television stations.

The campaign's main target will be erasing long-standing perceptions people have of the two cities, Russell said.

"This problem has been around for a long time and we've got to make people see that some of these attitudes are not right," he said.

A survey conducted for the Bridge Company by Marketing Research Consultants Inc. of Odessa showed most residents define each city with long-standing generalizations, according to MRC President Peggy Petton.

"The people we surveyed generally said Midland was the white-collar, wealthy community, while Odessa was the blue-collar area," Ms. Petton said. "That's an old stereotype that people have just held on to for years."

One woman from Odessa, who asked that her name not be used, said, "Everybody knows that Midland is a snob's town. They all (in Midland) own the oil wells and we (in Odessa) just work on them. Midland always has been richer and it's gotten so bad that if you're from Odessa, you really don't care a bit for Midland and vice versa."

But according to Ms. Petton's poll, many residents, almost 50 percent of those surveyed, believe it is time to forget.

George Irish, publisher of the Midland Reporter-Telegram and a coalition member, said many people are supporting the advertising campaign.

Seminar dispels myths linked to sexual assault

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The stranger in the overcoat handing out candy in the schoolyard is not responsible for the 60,000-100,000 children abused nationally each year, according to estimates from the American Humane Society and the National Coalition Against Child Sexual Abuse.

In more than 75 percent of all child sexual assault cases, the assailant is known to the family.

"So many people still think it's the crazy guy on the street," said Vicki Webb, Midland Rape Crisis Center assistant director. "A lot of people just don't believe it's someone they know.

"And if the offender is a family member, that's even more difficult to treat."

According to statistics from "Surviving Sexual Assault," a book compiled for the Los Angeles Commission on Assault Against Women, 75-85 percent of the sexual assaults involve an assailant who is known to the child or family and about 60 percent of the incidents occur in the child's or attacker's home.

Of the 91 sexual assault cases worked by the Midland Rape Crisis Center last year, more than half involved children under the age of 17.

Ms. Webb recently joined about 350 other rape crisis center counselors, social workers, clergymen, law enforcement officers and child psychologists at a seminar on child sexual abuse in Arlington.

Sponsored by the Arlington division of the Texas Department of Health and the Tarrant County Women's Center, the seminar focused on myths of child sexual assaults, ways in which children are coerced into the sexual relationships and how to counsel them with their feelings of fright, guilt and depression.

State Senate hopeful touts libertarianism's virtures

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Libertarianism.

The Statue of Liberty is its symbol.

A return to personal freedoms as they are outlined in the U.S. Constitution is its platform.

Limiting government's control on people's lives is its principle aim.

An infant next to the Grand Old and Democratic Parties, libertarianism is growing in popularity all over the country. The Ector County Independent Libertarian Party and state Senate hopeful Ronald Holder are promoting its virtues across the Permian Basin.

Holder offers libertarianism as an alternative to the two-party system, in which Democratic and Republican candidates often spin rhetoric to the point the difference between the two is barely distinguishable.

"They (Democrats and Republicans) both feel they should take the wealth and redistribute it," he said, the difference being that GOP politicos favor returning the wealth to big business and Democrats to the common working man.

Holder insisted the party's beliefs could be summed up in two statements "We feel like the individual person should have control over their individual destiny," he said. "The government's function is to pass the laws enacted by the majority of the people and not control the majority of the people."

Holder's campaign for the 28th Texas Senatorial District (14 counties including Ector, but not Midland) is his second, having run for city council in 1977 before he joined the libertarians.

Not alone in carrying his party's word to the electorate, he will be joined by 60 libertarians seeking office in Texas.

Holder estimated that more than 100 voters are registered as libertarians in the Permian Basin. While support is growing, the party candidate for governor failed to garner the two percent of the 1982 gubernatorial vote necessary to keep it on the 1984 ballot. Another petition drive will be run, just as in 1982, to get the party listed on this year's forms.

"That's why I'm running, to let people know there's a third party," said Holder, "and that it's a party of principles."

He attacked politicians for "getting by making false campaign promises," suggesting that "the campaign rhetoric has turned everybody off on politics."

Based on individual freedoms and the constitution, there is still the misconception that libertarians are liberals. "There's nothing radical about it," he said, "We're the most conservative people in the world."

Holder explained that libertarians are the enemies of mushrooming bureaucracies that drain much of the funding aimed at programs before the funds reach their destination. Between 30-40 percent of federal funds appropriated for a service reach their destination and 14 percent of every meal served in the U.S. was funded by the government in 1983, he said.

"Lawmakers are too easily influenced by special interests to enact laws to protect that special interest," he said. "My special interest is the general public. The general public wants less government and more freedom."

Three cats, their owner have much in common

I have three cats. I love them all. But one has my heart and soul all tucked away. His name is Flippye. He's a darling. He's as precious as any sweetheart any poet ever wrote about or any crooner ever sang to.

We're both romantics.

Bright-eyed Flippye came into my life a year or so ago. I selected him from a litter nursed by Robb and Jean Satterfield's mother cat. She was a stray who adopted the Satterfields, a gracious couple. I got Flippye's name from Robb's nickname; he's a pilot who, when he's not flying straight and level, flips around a lot but with utmost precision.

The other cats are Fella I and Fella II. Their former names were Nip and Tuck, but, since I couldn't tell who was who, I just renamed them Fellas. They are the children of Mis, a hissing, smokey gray tiger-striped wildcat of a cat who left home after her children were pretty well grown. She never returned. About the time she vamoosed, another son, Big Foot, left for adventure and romance. He was my favorite of Mis' litter; he never returned.

Fella I and Fella II came under my care after another divorce. (They'll wear you out.) She — the ex-spouse — said she wanted the two brother cats, and she was welcome to them; they were "hers" anyway. They were aloof when it came to me, since I openly favored their other brother, Big Foot, and I somewhat slighted them. But after the marriage was no more, I got custody of the two cats; that wasn't supposed to happen, but it did. Flippye came along later.

SO NOW, THERE'S just the four of us. We're reasonably harmonious and have much in common. We're discerning and prefer the finer things in life, such as good food, literature, company and the gals. When it comes to women, we just look, imagine, savor and hug and kiss if it's opportune; at least, I do. We've got a pack, adopted from an abandoned sub-group, called The SSC Club — for Sober, Single and Celibate. As far as I know, we've all honored the club's principles. The Fellas and young Flippye don't "cat around" any more since the veterinarian fixed them. He's not about to touch me.

Like Eskimo lovers, Flippye and I rub noses. He nudges right up to me when we're sleeping together. Fella I and Fella II sometime join in. Most often, though, they sleep and nap on the typewriter, the swivel chair, the pianoforte or couch.

They're all quite accomplished pianists. Dolores, my delectable piano teacher, hasn't heard them play yet, but it wouldn't take much imagination for her to assume they might be more advanced than I. But they have the advantage. They have all day to practice and study music while I'm at work to earn money to pay for their housing and victuals. Besides, they have four paws, and I'm not nearly as deft with my two hands as they are with their feet.

Fellas I and II roam the neighborhood quite a bit. Flippye is not so venturesome, but he explores. I don't know what they're looking for. But they seem to enjoy the search.

When they're just waiting around, they like the safety of Scout, my 1966 International Harvester friend, who (not which) is in disrepair due to neglect and worn-out parts. He'll be running up and down the roads one of these days.

WHEN I'M at home, the cats enjoy the freedom of running in and out of the house. They like to nibble or take a nap and head out again. Sometimes, they just sleep and dream, I suppose.

The Fellas and Flippye occasionally groom one another; it's a joyful sight. Sometimes they hiss, squall and slap at one another. They have their "human" attributes and failings. They purr a lot, too.

Like the televised cat Morris, they're finicky at the supper table. Because I allow it, I suppose, they prefer canned food and distilled water. Their favorite treat is 9-Lives chicken & cheese dinner. They relish that stuff like a ravenously hungry dog. There's a lot of smacking at meal time. They also like Tender Vittles fairly well and will eat the more expensive dried food if there are no acceptable alternatives, including grasshoppers, cicadas, mice and, I have reason to believe, Little Bit, my friendly gerbil who disappeared from his cage sometime ago. As does their keeper, they all like Haagen-Dazs ice cream, especially the honey vanilla flavor. They're not allowed refined sugar, but they can have blueberries and extra honey on their dessert. They decline the fruit.

FELLA I IS SEDATE. He's either like Rodin's The Thinker or the fat ol' owl. He stretches and curls around a lot and but doesn't say much. He's not a conversationalist, but I can tell he's thinking. He generally prefers the wooden swivel chair. He doesn't stir much except to go outside and sojourn. With his paunchy build, he'd look good in a three-piece gray flannel suit, chomping on a cigar and discussing the stock market and oil prices.

Fella II is the skittish one; he's hyper and is somewhat neurotic. Were he not fixed, I suspect he'd be the Don Juan of the Todd cat clan. I can see mischievousness and his mother's wildness in his eyes, but his desire to be a fighting tomcat is kaputt. He'd look good in a trenchcoat and at a poker table. He curls up a good deal on the typewriter.

Flippye has that collegiate look. For now, he'd go for a nice cashmere sweater and books on philosophy for his own edification and to impress the girls. He's a handsome rascal and a charmer; he's white-and-tan and is heavy on the long fur. I'm sure he'll hold paws and will be affectionate since he's the sensitive, sensuous sort. But he'll not be getting into any serious amorous relationships. When he gets older, he likely will be sporting a walking cane just for the classy look. Flippye prefers the piano and couch for napping and reflecting, though the piano seems to be the cats' common post. They all like it.

The cats are dear darlings. If they're outside when I come home in the car or on the bicycle, they're on the lookout most of the time. Sometimes, they're still searching for the truth and the meaning of life in the empirical world. It's a break from their scientific and academic pursuits in their little ivory tower called home.

They are really neat people, and I'm proud to call them my friends.

Couple has six 'biological' children, adopts 11 more

AP Laserphoto

Naurice and Sandra Harvey sit around the dinner table in their Livingston home with some of their 19 children — six are their "biological" children; the rest are adopted.

LIVINGSTON (AP) — An ornamental wooden plaque on the wall of Naurice and Sandra Harvey's home tells quite a bit about why the couple has 19 children.

The plaque says: "Love spoken here."

Except for one girl and what the Harveys prefer to call their six "biological" children, the couple brought into their home and hearts older children taken from parents because of abuse or other reasons.

The Harveys had six of their own children when they adopted Becky on her birthday, six years ago on Christmas. Then Sarah was born to them in April 1979, and the family stayed at eight children for a while.

Later they adopted a brother and sister, and then two more.

On Christmas 1982, they adopted seven more children, all brothers and sisters.

But visitors to the Harvey household wouldn't have to wait until Christmas to be infected with the warmth that fills the cheery place.

Mrs. Harvey, 40, recently was busy baking 20 dozen peanut butter cookies when she counted off the children and where they are.

"There's Sara and Darla and Mercy at home all day," she says, "and Johnny is in kindergarten half a day...Oh my goodness, it's time to pick him up."

Kimberly, the oldest "biological" daughter, volunteers to pick up Johnny.

The Harveys refer to the children born of their marriage as "biological" instead of calling them "our own."

"All of these children are our own," Sandra says.

"Bill, Tommy, Troy, Jenny, Franklin, Timmy, Danny and Becky are in elementary school. Albert, Todd and Tammy are in junior high. Joyce and Shelly are in high school. Kim and Casey are married."

Casey, the oldest son, is married with two children and works and attends Southwestern Bible College in Waxahachie. Shelly, a senior vocational education student, is learning to be a legal secretary.

Harvey, fortunately, is a building contractor, carpenter, and general handyman. He doubled the size of their house, doing most of the work himself.

"I did all the electrical and plumbing work, as well as the carpentry," Harvey, 42, said.

The house increased in size from three bedrooms and two baths to eight large bedrooms and four baths. The larger house also has a large kitchen, two dens, living room and dining room, complete with a homemade, 12-foot table fitted with two 12-foot benches.

The couple puts food on the table and clothes on the children by planning menus wisely, buying in quantity and accepting still good-looking but outgrown clothing for the little ones.

"Friends bring over a sack of clothing," Mrs. Harvey said. "I go through what they bring, pick out what we can use, and pass on what we can't."

Their trips to the grocery store are guaranteed to attract attention. They buy for an entire month, spending about $800. They patronize a store that doesn't sack or carry out the groceries, and in fact, leaves some items in the cases. They buy many items by the case.

The couple cooks in mess-hall-sized pots and pans given to them by a friend who got them from a restaurant that closed. Meals take place without fuss, and the children eat what's on their plate or do without.

When it's time for dinner, Mrs. Harvey goes to the door and blows a whistle twice.

Harvey came from a family of nine children, and his wife was one of four. Mrs. Harvey had another reason to help children who need parents. In her childhood, she lived in several foster homes.

The couple lived next door to each other in Texas City when he was in high school and she was in junior high. They married three months after he was graduated from high school, she from junior high, and after he had gotten a job on a dredge. He stayed with the dredging company three years, then went into constuction and headed for Alaska for a 10-year stay. Then they moved to Livingston in Southeast Texas.

"Alaska isn't a good place to raise children," Harvey said.

The Harveys started adopting children almost by chance. They were visiting a friend at a hospital in Livingston that Christmas six years ago when a 15-year-old girl delivered a child she couldn't keep.

The child was Becky.

"In this day and age, we have very few rights when you get right down to it," said Holder, pointing to politicians using executive sessions and other laws to keep information from the public.

"It's to the point that people are so alienated from each other because they depend on the government for everything," he said. Rather than provider, Holder said government should act as "overseer and enforcer" of the U.S. and not the world.

"I don't think you can buy friends," he said about foreign aid. Programs in other countries experience the same problems with actually putting funds to use that occurs in America, he said, suggesting that charity groups can better serve the needy.

"If we didn't have to pay all the taxes we have to pay, we would have more money to contribute to charities or the church of your choice," said the 33-year-old Odessan.

Holder favors ending traditional taxes and social security, leaving individuals to take care of themselves and "use taxes" to maintain services. "By taxing people, you're stealing their hard-earned money."

"Most Texans are libertarians," he said, "They just don't know the philosophy."

Libertarians do not except matching funding from the government for political campaigns, though 1980 presidential candidate Ed Clark collected more than $2 million privately for his cause.

"When you get to the point that you are perpetuating political careers with tax dollars, what's the incentive for cutting any deficits," he said, "The deficit spending is what keeps these people in these high dollars."

Holder does not expect the country to become libertarian overnight, predicting it will take 30-40 years.

"We know none of this will be done suddenly," he said, "It comes when people realize they're going to have to be responsible for their own freedom."

"The personal freedom also comes with the responsibility for that freedom," he said, adding social programs and unemployment would be eliminated in the libertarian scheme, with each individual responsible for his lot in life.

Admitting "I don't have all the answers," Holder said "I do know what we're doing is not going to work."

"If you let the free-market system work, it will," said Holder in championing libertarian politics.

"Everybody wants a certain amount of control. It's not supposed to control industry, it's to protect the citizens."

Officers unearth man's body

AMES (AP) — Liberty County officers who found one body after hearing rumors of a double slaying were still digging in a wooded area in search of a second victim.

Three officers continued to dig Wednesday about 3½ miles northeast of Ames, where they had unearthed one partially decomposed body, Sheriff C.L. "Buck" Eckols said.

"We are working on the assumption that our information is going to hold up — there will be a second body at that site or nearby," Eckols said.

Eckols said officers began the search after hearing rumors from Ames residents that two men were slain and buried in the area.

The body found Saturday was believed to have been a 6-foot-3-inch red-haired man in his 20s, Eckols said. He said a driver's license found on the body belonged to a man who is still living.

Eckols said investigators think the two men were killed in the woods last June and that the second man killed may have helped killers bury the first man.

"After they buried the first body, they shot their helper and buried him to get rid of any witnesses," Eckols said.

Group wants to end cities' feud

"I think they (supporters) realize the future of the Permian Basin is much brighter with these two cities working together."

Irish pointed out that oil, the mainstay of Midland and Odessa for decades, "won't always be here for everyone. We've got to get the economy going in other directions and only through cooperation can we do that."

Resentment in the two communities is high, Russell said.

"Some of these fights are so petty," he said. "They stem from the people in one city thinking the other city is getting everything. It goes back a long time. Many of the ideas were promoted by local politicians, such as the airport or the college."

The airport and the college are two of the more memorable battle grounds for the cities in recent years.

When the University of Texas decided to build a campus in West Texas, both Midland and Odessa vied for it. Odessa won.

But Midland reportedly retaliated by stripping Odessa's name off the airport terminal the two cities share. Once the Midland-Odessa Air Terminal, today it is simply the Midland Air Terminal.

"It's the same old issues that people are remembering today," Russell said. "People haven't forgotten."

One theme being considered to kick off the year-long promotion is "declaration of interdependency," said Ms. Petton.

"The two cities may only be 20 miles apart, but they're dependent on each other," Russell said.

Ironically, one of the ways in which children are forced into some of these relationships is similar to a method with which the Rape Crisis Center plans to counsel the young victims — through art.

Especially in child sex rings, the children are drawn into the relationship by showing them pornographic material and indicating that because adults perform these acts, it's acceptable for children, Ms. Webb said.

The use of art as therapy was discussed during the seminar and the Midland center plans on implementing it as soon as it is necessary.

"We do the crisis intervention right when we get the call," she said. "We'll talk to them and get the information and see how they're doing. If they need more help, we'll refer them to others."

But if the volunteer counselors can help then or during follow-ups, it may be with the use of crayons and paper.

"If a child is told to draw a person and he or she draws the sexual parts, then they've been exposed because normally they just won't draw those," she said, citing a few examples. "If they draw children with no hands, it shows they feel helpless.

"If we have them draw their nightmares, it makes it easier for us to talk to them. And if they draw someone without eyes, they are saying, 'How could I have been tricked?'

"If they block out the face or color over it, they have really low self-esteem. And when they start getting back to where they should be, they'll draw little things like a belt (on the person), which means security."

Because a child molester rarely is caught in the act, the sexual assault is usually uncovered in one of two ways, Ms. Webb said.

"There is the purposeful disclosure, where the child tells for a reason. They may get to the age where they know it's not an appropriate behavior, to protect a sibling or when they're angry at the abuser — maybe he won't let them take the car.

"The accidental disclosure occurs when there is a witness, disease, pregnancy or the child begins to act out sexually."

If the assault is revealed because the child is angry at the abuser, he or she often won't be believed by one of his or her parents. "They'll just think they're saying it because they're mad," Ms. Webb said.

But one of the myths listed in "Surviving Sexual Assault," states, "children make up stories to get back at someone or to gain attention."

The reality, according to the book, is "Children rarely lie about sexual assault.

Odessa officers receive 'disciplinary action'

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Three sergeants of the Odessa Police Department "have received disciplinary action" following an internal investigation by the department, Lt. Rusty Baker said today.

Sgts. Jon Hubbs, Kevin Jones and Gene Jackson, on administrative leave since the week of Jan. 24, "received disciplinary action by the adminstration of the Odessa Police Department." Baker would not say what discipline the sergeants received.

An internal investigation, which began Jan. 24, had been based on the complaint of an "individual," said the release read by Baker. He would not say whether the individual had been an Odessa police officer.

"Based upon the complaint, the department conducted a broad-based investigation concerning areas that no formal complaint had been received, but to evaluate the activities of that shift as a whole," said Baker. He would not elaborate on which shift was involved or the scope of the investigation.

The release continued that "many members of the media had speculated that the complaints involved sexual assault, sexual discrimination, racial discrimination and so forth and so forth."

"This investigation has found that none of those allegations were true. Nor has there been any criminal acts involving members of that shift," said the release.

Violations of the Code of Conduct did occur in the areas of:

—professional conduct.

—personal bearing.

—responsibilities of a police officer.

"This is all I can say about it, sir," said Baker, the department's communication officer, "I have strict orders not to answer any questions."

The Reporter-Telegram reported the investigation after confirming its existence with Chief Alan Stewart Jan. 30. No release had been made of the investigation prior to Stewart's confirmation and he refused to elaborate on the investigation at that time.

He did explain that administrative leave was not a formal disciplinary action, so wages were not withheld during the investigatinon. Baker did not say whether the sergeants were receiving pay or had been reinstated by the force.

Computer program donations surpass $60,000

As of this week, Midland public schools have received more than half the private donations needed to match a $100,000 grant from an anonymous local foundation. The grant and matching funds will go toward expansion and development of the district's comprehensive computer program, which is designed to expose every student to computers beginning in elementary school.

To date, the district has received contributions and pledges of more than $60,000. Taking the campaign over the half-way hump were recent contributions of $5,000 from Texas Electric Service Co., $10,000 from Mr. and Mrs. Jack E. Brown and $5,000 from Elcor Corp.

Other contributions include $10,000 from from Mr. and Mrs. Deane H. Stoltz, $10,000 from the Fasken Foundation, $5,000 from Mr. ad Mrs. Earle M. Craig Jr., $5,000 from Getty Oil Co., $5,000 from Sun Exploration and Production, $3,500 from Republic Bank First National, $1,000 from Lynn D. Durham and $1,000 from Drilco.

The anonymous $100,000 grant, made in 1983, must be matched with non-tax revenues during this school year. Dollars not matched will be forfeited.

The contributions will enable school officials to implement the computer program much sooner than would have been possible through the yearly budgeting process.

Women's alleged abductor arrested

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police Wednesday afternoon arrested the Odessa man sought in the Jan. 16 kidnapping of three women from a local bar. He is in Ector County Jail, with total bond set at $150,000.

Dennis Lee Johnson, 26, was arraigned by Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore Wednesday on one count of first-degree aggravated kidnapping and two counts of second-degree aggravated kidnapping, with bond set at $60,000 for each charge.

Johnson was arrested at an Odessa home at 12:05 p.m., Wednesday by two Odessa Police Department detectives. A Crime Stoppers informant furnished information that led police to a picture of Johnson which they used to get the three Odessa women to identify the suspect from a line-up.

The man allegedly abducted the three women in their car from the parking lot of the Shampoux Lounge. A boyfriend of the girls was also abducted while the suspect was holding the three woman at their apartment.

One girl escaped as the group was heading back to the girls' car. The man was released on the outskirts of town and the two girls later dropped off near a downtown business where they called police. No one was injured and the car was found at the lounge.

What's a blimp weigh?

How much do you think a Goodyear blimp weighs? It depends whether it's inflated or deflated. The Enterprise, based at Pompano Beach, Fla., deflated, has a combined weight of envelope (bag) and gondola — about 9,000 pounds. Inflated, the Enterprise is lighter than air and weighs nothing.

Stiff, not sticky, not so tricky

By LINDA ANDERSON

No doubt about it, West Texas is WINDY! If we could only figure out a way to power our cars with wind, we would all be rich — but in the meantime most of us just need to figure out a way to keep our hair in place.

Hairspray has been available for a long time, but hasn't necessarily been perfected. What we wanted was a firm but flexible hold, especially during the breezy spring. What we usually got was either a stiff hold that tended to flake all over our clothes or a sticky hold that attracted dirt and was impossible to comb through.

For advice on hairspray I went to an expert.

Chuck Wilcox is a professional Midland hairdresser at Headhunters. He is a board member of the Texas Hairdressers and Cosmotologists Association and is president of the local chapter of THCA.

Wilcox advises to look for hairsprays that do not contain fluorocarbons. "Those are the things that pollute the air," he said.

The two sprays he recommends most highly — Redkin Climatress and Fix-E (by Mastey from Paris, France) — are available only through dealers, distributors or salons. But several of the other sprays he suggested are sold in supermarkets or drug stores: Tresemme ("a good spray"), Rave, Alberto VO5 and Style.

He advised against hairsprays with lacquer. "A lot of lacquers have plastic in them, which causes dryness of the hair and limits flexibility."

Other drawbacks of a spray made with lacquer that Wilcox warned against were dryness of the scalp, spray build-up, loosening of permanents and discoloration of dyes or tints.

"A lot of people don't know how to use sprays. You don't have to get right up to the hair. If it's sprayed too close you'll get 'dew-drops,' which will go to the scalp and cause flaking. Hold the hairspray can at least 1/2-arm's length away from the head — about two feet," he said.

"A lot of sprays will say 'non-sticky,' but a lot depends on the application. Spray can be a big benefit as long as it's put on right."

We tested these hairsprays for holding power, price and advertising claims: (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

— Tresemme from Alberto-Culver Co. cost $2.89 for a 16-oz. can.

— Alberto VO5 (regular) from Alberto-Culver Co. cost $3.07 for an 11-oz. can.

— Rave (extra hold) from Chesebrough-Pond Inc. cost $1.99 for a 7-oz. can.

— Style I (from La Maur Inc.) with "Hair Holding Index: 100" (whatever that means). The 8-oz. can cost $2.17.

An "expert" who tested actual use of the products is one of my daughters. A seventh-grader at a Midland junior high school, she is the resident hair and fashion expert at our house.

Two adults — next-door neighbors — also good-naturedly agreed to help us test these products.

My oldest daughter and I helped with the product-testing, but because both of us have long, straight and heavy hair, we aren't accustomed to using hairspray.

The teen-age tester was very definite in her opinion — Style I. She said the product gives a light hold, not a stiff one, and works just fine. She said the other three brands were "pretty good," but her favorite was Style I. (Style has other formulas: Style II, Style III and Style IV, all of which are supposed to meet a different hair need. I guess the bigger the number, the harder the hold.)

The two adults had mixed opinions. He liked Rave and didn't like Tresemme, while she liked Tresemme and didn't like Rave. They agreed on Albeto VO5 as their second choice and Style I as their third. She also thought Tresemme was "great" as a setting lotion when she rolled her hair.

One of the adult testers pointed out that even though these sprays are supposed to be "crystal clear," they all caused a film on her glasses when she sprayed her hair.

Hairspray won't perform miracles: Don't expect it to keep hairstyles in shape during snow or sleet or rain or gloom of night. But used the way it was designed, hairspray can be an aid in keeping hair in style.

Sewing book author conducts seminars

From Staff Reports

A sewing seminar, conducted by a woman whose training began at 20th Century Fox studios in the Marilyn Monroe era, will be offered in Midland this evening, and two additional seminars on Saturday.

Clotilde Yurick, co-author of "Sew Smart," offers a catalogue for "hard-to-find" notions, has appeared on national television and is known in the world of her craft as a clothing specialist.

Her seminars are designed to teach seamstresses how to achieve expensive looks with minimal investment, tailoring techniques and how to work with expensive fabrics.

She began her sewing career in California working in a large but informal wardrobe room at 20th Centruy Fox where stars such as Marilyn Monroe, Mitzi Gaynor and Joseph Cotton were fitted.

She expanded her career by operating a boutique in Beverly Hills and later, taught sewing in a tailoring shop in Los Angeles.

While her own wardrobe is geared to the demands of traveling, she considers a basic everyday wardrobe consists of navy and black skirts, jackets in beige or toast and an array of blouses to complete the mix-or-match effect. She considers cost per waring of making or buying clothes important. Of her ultra suede skirts, though the initial cost may be $70, because of the garments durability and flexiblity, she estimates a cost of 10 cents per wearing.

Clotilde now spends 40 weeks out of the year traveling throughout the country to conduct her seminars.

This evening's seminar, "Ultra Suede," from 7-9 p.m. will highlight detailed instructions for working with suede and similar synthetic fabrics, designed to give seamstresses confidence in cutting such fabrics. Registration will be available while seating permits.

Two seminars Saturday are "The $500 Look," from 9 a.m.-12 noon and "Tailoring," from 1-4 p.m. The first three-hour saminar will provide fabric and pattern tips, the correct way to set in sleeves, zipper application, construction and shaping of collars, interfacing and other ideas.

The afternoon seminar will offer custom and speed methods of tailoring such as applying interfacing, twill tape, making bound buttholes, adjusting sleeve cap ease, sleeve head application, lining and hem techniques.

The seminars, sponsored by the Midland County Extension Service, are $15 each and will be presented at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, 4300 W. Highway 80.

Office color important

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — The proper use of colors in an office can help encourage productivity.

Ann Haight, textile and surface materials manager for Steelcase Inc., a maker of office furniture, says, "It's more important where the color appears and how much of it is used, than whether it is red, yellow or blue.

"Just as an environment of totally neutral shades can contribute to office worker boredom, too much color adds to a feeling of over-stimulation, which can also cause fatigue."

Romance novels suffer shakedown

Copley News Service

Can it be that there's too much romance? Is love becoming passe? Are we becoming blase over those tender stories of boy meets girl?

Not in real life, surely, but in the romance paperback market there's a real shakedown coming and Silhouette, one of the giants in this particular market, isn't about to sit back on its hearts and flowers.

According to Karen Solem, vice president and editor in chief of Silhouette, reader surveys and market research have shown there's a need for more spiritually oriented novels in the romance field.

Thus, Silhouette recently released its first "Inspirations" novel.

Interviewed recently, Solem said the new line of romances will offer all the qualities of the other lines — boy meets girl, conflict, resolution and a happy ending, but with a more definite emphasis on the spiritual side.

"Gallup Polls support the concept of a nationwide return to more commitment to religion and faith in a higher power and to traditional family values," Solem said. "These novels (there will be four initial Inspirations releases) are oriented toward family reading. Our surveys show that women want their teenage childen and husbands to be as interested in reading them as they are." She said the age range aimed for will be 18 to 49.

"We had a trend a couple of years ago away from the purely romantic to the more sexually explicit. The racier novels are still doing well, but we see a need for a new approach to the sweeter story."

Asked for an example, Solem gave the following capsule version of "Heart Song" by Debbie Macomber:

"This is the romance of a heroine who has to believe in herself and stick by her belief in God. She is a young nurse and the story's hero is a patient in the hospital where she works. The story centers on her convincing him of her love and trust in his goodness. He has to make peace with God before he can believe in her, himself or anything else."

It wouldn't be fair to give away the ending, but you probably can guess in about 10 seconds how it all turns out.

"There is a great deal more demand now for good writing style and professionalism," Solem said.

"We don't want any wimpy heroines in any of our romance lines. The struggle is not to find a man to take care of all her problems, but rather how to cope and find a meaningful family life while working at a job and doing all the sorts of things real people do."

Solem said the first Christian-oriented romances (they are non-denominational but evangelical in tone) will be in the same bookstores, markets and drugstores where others in the line are found, but there also may be an entrance into religious bookstores.

"There's one absolute essential for those writing these books; they must have made their own commitment to faith. This is nothing that can be faked and the reader wants values expressed honestly," Solem said.

As for the general health of romance paperbacks, it's in a state of transition.

DEAR ABBY

Sex loses spark for mom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am so glad I can write this because I certainly wouldn't be able to talk to anyone about it. I am 38 and had five babies in five years. The youngest is 8 months old. My husband and I have always had a wonderful sex life. My problem is I don't feel anything anymore.

I enjoy the intimacy and affection of just holding each other before and after, but as far as the actual act is concerned, I feel nothing. No excitement, no climax — nothing!

It's not my husband. He's as good as ever. I have never told him; he's such a dear sweet man, it would hurt him if he thought he wasn't satisfying me. What is wrong with me?

I suppose I should talk to my doctor about this, but if I can't even talk to my husband, how can I talk to a doctor? I went once, but when I got into his office I told him I just wanted my blood pressure checked. What should I do? — EMBARRASSED IN ALBANY, N.Y.

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Doctors are trained to put the embarrassed patient at ease. But if you can't talk to your doctor, talk to his nurse, and ask her to tell him.

My medical expert says that having had five babies in five years may have caused a temporary absence of sensitivity that will return in time, but the probability of a psychological involvement, which is treatable, is great. So don't accept this condition as permanent and hopeless. An honest dialogue with your husband as well as professionals is imperative, but start with your physician.

DEAR ABBY: I am 49 and "Harry" is 50. Harry's wife ("Sylvia") died two years ago. My husband has been dead a year. While our spouses were living we were a friendly foursome. As fate would have it, after I became a widow, Harry and I fell in love and now plan to marry. I'm selling my condo and will move into Harry's lovely home.

There is a problem that must be faced, but it hasn't even been mentioned. When Harry married Sylvia, her mother, "Mrs. B.," who was then a young widow, moved in with Sylvia and Harry and has lived there ever since. Mrs. B. practically raised Sylvia's two daughters, who are now married. She's a lovely woman and I have nothing against her, but now that I am marrying Harry, I don't think she should live with us, do you? She's 70, not hurting financially, and she's in good health. Harry has not brought up the subject, and I don't think it's my place to bring it up. How should this be handled? — TOUCHY SUBJECT

DEAR TOUCHY: I understand your feelings and agree it's inappropriate for Mrs. B. to live with you and Harry. Since Harry has not mentioned the subject to you, I think you should mention it to him.

DEAR ABBY: I tried a suggestion someone sent in to solve the problem of a neighbor's dog who barked continuously. I am a night nurse who had been bothered by the yapping of the neighbors' dog while the owners were at work all day. I made a tape recording of the barking dog, then I played it under the dog owners' window while they were trying to sleep.

The policeman who came to my door told me that my actions were in violation of the law more so than the dog's, because I had intelligence and knew that my actions were wrong; the dog did not. Then he gave me a citation for disturbing the peace. Thanks for nothing.

AT WIT'S END

Movie magic inescapable

By ERMA BOMBECK

There used to be a joke about laugh tracks that some of them were so old that all the people laughing on them were dead. I forgave them for dying, but I could never forgive them for laughing themselves into a hernia when Laverne rubbed cooking oil all over Shirley's body. That should have been in their contract.

Thanks to the magic of films, I don't think anyone in Hollywood dies anymore. They just go into reruns and live forever. With the demands of the three networks, independent affiliates, PBS and all the cable programming, there are at least 135 movies starting in this country every 15 seconds.

I'm talking old movies.

I saw Tarzan the other night in a movie so old he thought because a papaya was soft, it was a girl. Another night, I watched a silent film in which Dorothy Gish was wearing the same dress I bought last week. I saw a Western so old no one even bothered to notice that the Indians had vaccinations and capped teeth and the women settlers wore living bras that lifted and separated.

The point is all these movies are having an effect on our lifestyle. I have no taste. I watch anything that moves. Recently, when I went on a book tour, I got up one morning to watch Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery. I promised myself when it was over, I'd take my shower and put on my face in preparation for an appearance on the Donahue show.

I was about to leave the room when Eleanor Parker, Patricia Neal and some other woman appeared in a movie where all three of them had given up a baby for adoption and a child having the same birthdate was in a plane crash and the adoptive parents were killed. The three mothers went to the bottom of the mountain to wait out the rescue of the child, not knowing which one was the natural mother.

What would you have done? Been on time for the Donahue show or seen which mother had actually given birth to the child?

On New Year's Eve, I said to my husband, "We've got to get away from this TV set and all of these movies. We're living in a tinsel world that is unreal. Life is not like a movie set and endings aren't always happy with the music coming up. The real world is out there!" (I pointed to the door.)

We went to a New Year's Eve party and they had rented a movie for the evening.

Getting hooked on all these movies is a national problem. Phil realized that when I apologized to him. He's up on those sort of things.

Shopping for Christmas toys starts

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Stephenia Pellegrino, 24, is on the biggest shopping spree of her life.

On a visit here from her home in Sacramento, Calif., she is spending nearly $200,000 on dolls, stuffed animals and other toys.

Pellegrino is one of 13,000 buyers from department stores, toy stores, discount houses and wholesalers from around the country attending the 81st Annual American International Toy Fair, which opened Monday.

The show, traditionally the retail industry's first look at toys that will go on sale before the next Christmas, features products from 850 manufacturers that account for 90 percent of toy sales in the United States.

Pellegrino is a buyer for Weinstocks department stores in Northern California, Nevada and Utah.

After a slow start, 1983 turned into a banner year for the toy industry, with $10.4 billion in retail sales, a 15 percent increase over 1982. And officials are hoping that new toys will keep the sales growing this year.

Among the new items are a variety of robot toys, smaller, "pocket-sized" Cabbage Patch kids, 60 new kinds of Strawberry Shortcake dolls and baby Muppets.

The full-size Cabbage Patch kids, which proved to be the runaway hit last Christmas, will have their own accessories and sportswear this year, according to manufacturer Coleco Industries Inc.

Other manufacturers are featuring computers for preschoolers, two-foot-tall robots with 150-word vocabularies and celebrity dolls such as Miss America and the pop-rock group Menudo.

Just about every major toy company has decided that 1984 is the year of the robot. Ideal Toy Corp., a division of New York-based CBS Inc., is showing its Robo Force, which consists of six "good" mechanical men who battle four "bad" robots. The force also includes the robots' own air-powered vehicles and a fortress.

What caught Pellegrino's eye at the Effanbee exhibit was a doll dressed to look like Judy Garland as Dorothy in "The Wizard of Oz," and a Louis Armstrong doll in a dinner jacket, holding a white handkerchief and a trumpet. Both dolls are 15 1-2 inches tall and retail for about $60 each.

"Celebrity dolls are hot items," Pellegrino said. "Many of the 'kids' buying these dolls will have gray hair."

Predicting consumer buying patterns in toys becomes difficult so early in the year because about 70 percent of all toy sales are made during the Christmas shopping season. In effect, buyers are guessing now what will be popular in 10 months.

Disease studied

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A possible new form of life — called a prion — may be the cause of Alzheimer's disease and other degenerative neurological illnesses.

A research project, headed by Dr. Stanley B. Prusiner at the University of California-San Francisco supported by R.J. Reynolds indicates prions show similarities to formations of abnormal compounds found in the brains of victims of Alzheimer's disease.

The illness leads to degeneration of the nervous system and mental deterioration.

Prusiner says if further research establishes that prions — composed of protein and infectious material — cause the disease then it is important to realize the disease is not contagious by contact.

Romantic actor still married to same woman

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Paul Henreid is best remembered in the movie, "Now Voyager," as the super-suave lover who lighted two cigarettes — one for himself and one for the soulful Bette Davis.

But there was much more to Henreid, as can be gleaned from his new autobiography, "Ladies Man."

He is an Austrian of titled birth who defied the Nazis, who wanted him to become a German film star. At the height of his Hollywood career, he found himself blacklisted because of a protest trip to Washington. Though known as a romantic star, he has remained married to the same woman for 47 years.

He was born Paul Von Hernried in Trieste, Italy. As a young man, he shocked his family because he wanted to become an actor.

The book quotes his Uncle Otto: "Acting and syphilis are on the same rung of the social ladder."

A popular actor in the Viennese theater by the mid-30s, Henreid was offered a contract with the giant UFA studio in Berlin. As he was about to sign the contract, he noticed a clause requiring him to join the National Socialist Actors Guild of Germany.

"I will not become a Nazi," the actor said in the book. "I have nothing to do with politics. I'm an actor, not a propagandist."

His action put him in disrepute with the Nazis, and Henreid left for England after Adolf Hitler took over Austria.

Henreid starred in "Victoria Regina" on the British stage and appeared in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips" with Robert Donat and Greer Garson. He moved to New York and Hollywood despite a warning from Miss Garson.

"We have all the leading men we need, excellent English, French and American actors. I don't see any chance for you," the book quotes Miss Garson as saying.

Henreid proved her wrong, establishing himself as a top star with "Now Voyager." The cigarette bit was his idea, a trick he had learned in a touring car without a lighter: The passenger would light two cigarettes and pass one to the driver.

Henreid, who simplified his name for U.S. marquees, went on to play Ingrid Bergman's husband in "Casablanca." It was originally scheduled as a B picture to star Ann Sheridan and Ronald Reagan.

ENTERTAINMENT

He played opposite Maureen O'Hara in "The Spanish Main," Olivia De Havilland and Ida Lupino in "Devotion" and Katharine Hepburn in "Song of Love."

At the height of his career, Henreid was persuaded by director John Huston to join a contingent of stars on a junket to Washington to protest claims that Hollywood was infested by communists. The adventure went badly, and Humphrey Bogart, among others, tried to disassociate himself.

Henreid notes in his book that Bogart, Groucho Marx and Frank Sinatra weren't blacklisted because all had studio contracts. Henreid had just left Warner Bros., and had declined a contract with MGM.

"I had made the bad mistake of becoming independent — and obviously an example," he says in the book.

The blacklist lasted five years, and by the time he was again employable, his vogue had past. But there was a bright side: The drought had forced Henreid to turn to directing, which he enjoyed much more.

He has directed such features as "Dead Ringer" with Miss Davis, as well as hundreds of TV shows, including "Maverick," "The Big Valley" and "Wagon Train."

Now 76, Henreid has retired from films and lives in Pacific Palisades with his wife, Lisl. One of his confessions in "Ladies Man" is that he had no affairs with his leading ladies.

Celebration of Arts auditions to be held at Theatre Midland

Auditions for performing artists for Midland's first annual Celebration of the Arts, set for May 11-19, will be Saturday and Feb. 25 in the rehearsal room at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Performers were asked to fill out an application and return it to the Midland Arts Assembly, Midland's umbrella organization for the arts, no later than Feb. 10.

Those who did not submit an application may have a chance to audition.

If they have the time, the committee will audition persons who haven't submitted applications, according to Trina Conly, auditions committee chairman. These people should appear at the theater at 1 p.m. Saturday and also Feb. 25, said Mrs. Conly.

"Both mornings are jammed up."

So far, applications have been received from 63 artists.

The audition schedule is:

—Dancers, Saturday at 9 a.m.;

—Instrumentalists, Saturday at 1 p.m.;

—Singers, Feb. 25 at 9 a.m.;

—All others, including those who could not audition Saturday, Feb. 25 at 1 p.m.

Judges are Nancy Cook, committee chairman for dancers; Maria Mata, committee chairman for singers; George Conly, committee chairman for instrumentalists; and Dr. Bob Vogel, committee chairman for gymnastics, magic and other events.

"I frankly think we'll work all day and all night," Mrs. Conly said.

The Celebration of the Arts, designed to recognize local performing and visual artists, is sponsored by Midland Arts Assembly. Activities each day of the week will focus on a different Midland cultural organization.

May 19 will mark the culmination of the week-long event. From 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. food, art and entertainment will be presented at the Downtown Park and Midland Center. Performing artists will be onstage throughout that day and during the lunch hour May 11-18. The noon concerts are co-sponsored by the Midland Parks and Recreation Department and will be held at the Downtown Park.

All performing acts suitable for family entertainment — pantomimists, jugglers, dancers, musicians, bands, clowns, square dancers, break dancers, tap dancers, magicians and singers — are welcome. Each will perform for 20 to 30 minutes.

For more information call Norma Webb, executive director of the MAA, 687-1149.

Evening events planned for May 11-18 include a concert by Bobby Short, a nationally-known entertainer, and performances by, among others, Midland Community Theatre, Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Permian Civic Ballet and Midland Community Concerts.

The Celebration is open to the public and many community volunteers are needed to ensure its success. Those interested in doing so are asked to contact Mrs. Webb.

Quartet puts 'Bodies and Souls' together

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Manhattan Transfer is a quartet, two men, two women, singing four-part harmony, based on the two tenors and two altos in the saxophone section of the Count Basie Band.

The approach is proving a success. Manhattan Transfer toured the last five months of 1983, in the United States, the Orient, Australia and New Zealand, ending with a New Year's Eve show at Radio City Music Hall in New York.

During the tour, an album came out, "Bodies and Souls," the group's seventh on Atlantic.

"We did 23 concerts in five weeks in Japan, 10 concerts in Australia and two in New Zealand and sold out 33 of the 35," says group founder Tim Hauser. "We taped one of the concerts in Tokyo on a multi-track machine. It came out great. We might do a live album. We did 'Manhattan Transfer Live' from a 1978 concert in London.

"There's no rhyme or reason to where we get the stuff we sing. We do contemporary, new lyrics to jazz instrumentals, obscure rhythm 'n' blues and standards. If we like what we hear, we don't care where it comes from.

"Janis (Siegel) heard 'Birdland' by Joe Zawinal on a Weather Report album and liked it. We had commissioned Eddie Jefferson to write lyrics. After he was murdered, his wife couldn't find the manuscript. We assume it was lost or never written down. He'd told us he was coming along with the lyrics and we would be pleased.

"Jon Hendricks called me up and said he understood we were interested in 'Birdland.' He said he'd written words for the Swingle Singers but they'd never done it. He came over to a rehearsal that day and that's how we met him."

The latest album has a number of new songs. "Spice of Life," the first single, is by Rod Temperton, who writes for Michael Jackson. "Down South Camp Meeting," however, is a 1940s Fletcher Henderson instrumental with lyrics by Hendricks. The original clarinet solo was by Benny Goodman. This one is by Cheryl Bentyne of Manhattan Transfer.

Hauser is very interested in the history of popular music. Four-part vocal harmony was big in quartets who sang with swing bands, he says, but it faded from the 1950s on. Lately he has been researching swing bands which had gospel-singer vocalists.

"Our influences are rhythm 'n' blues and jazz," he says. "We don't do fusion. That didn't evolve, like bebop did. It was contrived by record companies to encourage jazz artists to play rock 'n' roll rhythm."

Hauser started thinking about a four-part harmony vocal group in 1967.

"I started the first Manhattan Transfer in 1969," he recalls. "It went until April 1972. I had left six months before. We started with the Jim Croce songbook. He and I had been college classmates at Villanova University. The others were interested in singing country rock and Memphis rhythm 'n' blues. I didn't want to do that."

The new Manhattan Transfer started in 1972, with Hauser, Alan Paul, Miss Siegel and Laurel Masse. In 1978 Miss Masse was in an automobile accident. When the casts came off the following spring, she decided to leave the group. Miss Bentyne replaced her.

"We started working on a couple of big band tunes, experimenting, because that's basically where our sound came from," Hauser says.

"After our first album came out in 1976, we got a CBS-TV miniseries, summer replacement show. It was a double-edged sword. We came off looking like nice cute kids around the corner camping it up. It increased the awareness of Manhattan Transfer. But when recording artists get on TV, their records stop selling."

Movie town lacks theaters

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — You can make a movie in Beautiful Downtown Burbank but you can't sit down and watch one.

Indoors, that is.

Burbank, a major movie-making center, does not have a single movie theater, although it does have several drive-in screens.

Actor in conservative role turns down political request

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael J. Fox, who stars as conservative Alex P. Keaton on NBC's "Family Ties," got a flattering invitation the other day from a conservative source that he had to turn down.

Fox, who's been labeled a young William F. Buckley, Jr., after the conservative writer and editor, because of his TV character, was asked by the Reagan Committee for Re-Election to be a celebrity spokesman.

Fox, while flattered, said no thanks.

"I'm a Canadian citizen, and I feel it would not be right to be involved in American politics," he said.

Taylor completes rehabilitation

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor has completed drug dependency treatments in California and is spending "a few days resting" in Mexico, her fiance says.

"All I can say is that Miss Taylor came here to rest and recover," lawyer Victor Gonzalez Luna said Wednesday in a telephone interview. He said the actress arrived Tuesday afternoon from Los Angeles, where she had been in a program to overcome a dependency on prescribed medications.

Gonzalez Luna declined to speak about their marriage plans. The couple's engagement was announced last summer.

The actress is resting at a farm owned by Gonzalez Luna near Lake Chapala, a tourist area just south of Guadalajara that is especially popular among American retired people.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Indian guru Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh is one step closer to permanent U.S. residency.

Rajneesh has been granted "third preference immigration status" as a "religious teacher-leader," said Robert Krueger, director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Portland office.

In making the announcement Wedneday, Krueger said the action does not give permanent residency to the 52-year-old guru, who lives with about 1,200 followers in the central Oregon town of Rajneeshpuram. But the status is a prerequisite of permanent residency, he added.

Rajneesh came to the United States in the summer of 1981 on a tourist visa for medical treatment for asthma, diabetes and a slipped disc. He settled in Oregon and his followers purchased a ranch and incorporated the city of Rajneeshpuram.

In December 1982, the government denied his petition for immigration preference on grounds that he could not be a teacher because he has taken a vow of public silence. But INS now has reversed its decision on appeal.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — "That's it?" comedian Joan Rivers asked as she was presented with an inscribed gold pot, the symbol of Hasty Pudding Theatricals at Harvard.

Her performance of mock disbelief while being honored Wednesday as the 189-year-old dramatic club's "1984 Woman of the Year" brought a roar of laughter from the audience, which earlier had seen dozens of Harvard men shed tweed blazers and prance about in grass skirts.

Members of Hasty Pudding Theatricals performed selections from an all-male song-and-dance revue called "Jungle Belles."

Asked what she thought about all the men who were dressed as women, the 48-year-old Miss Rivers replied, "Nothing. I'm from California."

The award is presented annually to a male and a female who have made an "impressive contribution" to entertainment. Actor Sean Connery gets his Hasty Pudding "Man of the Year" award next week.

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — More than 100,000 letters addressed to evangelist Oral Roberts never got to him, and a post office worker is suspected of pocketing at least $250,000 in cash donations many of the letters contained, authorities say.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ben Baker said Wednesday the employee in downtown Tulsa allegedly stashed thousands of envelopes in a commercial mini-storage unit starting in late 1982.

He was being questioned Wednesday but had not been charged.

Baker said a "fluke discovery" led investigators to the storage unit. An employee of a storage business reported to police over the weekend that locks on several units had been broken.

As police arrived, a woman found a letter addressed to Roberts outside one of the units. When she opened the door, she discovered postal trays containing 69,600 pieces of mail, Baker said.

LONDON (AP) — Irish singer Gilbert O'Sullivan, who won an estimated $10.5 million from his former manager in a London court in 1982, will actually end up with "substantially less," defense lawyers say.

During a 10-day hearing in the Court of Appeals which ended Tuesday, O'Sullivan, whose hit songs included "Clare," "Alone Again, Naturally" and "Nothing Rhymed," was awarded the copyright on all his songs. He also was granted the master tapes of his records and a share of his earnings between 1970 and 1978.

But in a partial victory for the defense, Lord Justice Dunn ruled that the singer's former manager, Gordon Mills, was entitled to reasonable payment for his promoting and managing work.

A spokesman for Mills' company, Management Agency and Music, said Wednesday that O'Sullivan will get no more than $4.2 million in the final settlement.

Ethel Merman dies

Ethel Merman

LOS ANGELES — When you think of Ethel Merman, you think first of the voice — the clarion call of the American musical. But Merman, who died yesterday at the age of 76, had a voice that was more than a voice. It was an inspiration to composers; it was a siren song to audiences, who would come to see Merman in almost anything. And, most important, it was an essential building block: Over 30 crucial years, Merman, more than any other performer, and more than a lot of composers, lyricists and librettists, made over the musical.

Who else could have starred in a loony farce like Cole Porter's 1939 "Dubarry Was a Lady" (about a washroom attendant who dreams he's in 17th-century France) and also have been perfectly cast as the obsessive, megalomaniacal Rose in 1959's "Gypsy," a gritty, realistic account of life in the show-biz dumps? Only Merman. There have been precious few lasting women stars over the years on Broadway — Mary Martin and Gertrude Lawrence and Merman make up the trio most people think of. Martin and Lawrence had range of a sort (Lawrence did a lot of non-musicals, and Martin played Peter Pan as Mary Martin, but she really flew). Merman didn't seem to have what we usually define as range — she always seemed like Merman. But she created her own definition, simply by having a voice that every composer on Broadway wanted to create for. Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, George Gershwin, and, finally, Jule Styne all wrote brilliant songs for Merman. And all of them seemed to be concerned with mating their style to her own, and making something new. From "Anything Goes" to "Annie Get Your Gun" to "Gypsy," Merman didn't just appear in shows, she participated in the creation of landmarks.

Musical stars back when Merman began were dainty, innocent, and apt to be clothed in Alice Blue Gowns. By the time Merman appeared in "Annie Get Your Gun," Berlin could have his hero declaring that:

"The girl that I marry
Will have to be
As sweet and as pink
As a nursery"

Everybody in the audience knew that he would end up with Merman instead. Soft and pink as a nursery just didn't cut it on Broadway any more.

She was that American girl — neither a holdover from the European operettas that gave birth to the musical, nor a tawdry girl-for-sale type from burlesque and vaudeville that made it into something new. She turned up in the late '20s, just when the musical was starting to find its own voice, just when composers like Porter, Gershwin, Richard Rodgers, and Berlin were hitting their stride.

A woman only slightly younger than Merman once waited for her after a benefit performance at a charity ball, and clasped her hand as she stepped off the stage.

"I just want you to know," the woman told Merman, "that over all these years you've made my life 20 percent happier than it would have been otherwise." For Merman, there were tens of thousands of theatergoers who could have said the same thing. But beyond that there are the songwriters, whose art was shaped by Merman, and the librettists who found their heroine in her, not to mention the commerce of Broadway itself, which often survived on Merman shows in dim seasons. The business and the art of the Broadway musical were buoyed up by that voice, and although the voice is now officially silent (except for a couple of brief movie appearances we hadn't heard from it in more than a decade) it is well to remember that Merman did a great deal more than sing for us. For more than three decades, she told us in musical comedy terms just how to live, how to love and how to fight for everything we, as a noisy, pragmatic and indefatigably sunny nation, wanted.
