Flag-waving hands celebrate Fourth at second ranch rodeo

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Old Glory waved brilliantly from flagstaffs in Midland on America's Independence Day.

Meanwhile, cowboys were taming cattle and kicking up dust, as flags unfurled in the wind; chuckwagon cooks were simmering fruit cobbler and cooking their main food fare — from son-of-gun stew to chicken-fried steak — at the second rendition of the Midland Ranch Rodeo.

"We just decided to protest" in a patriotic spirit, said Newnie W. Ellis, who pitched a tent where he and his flag-waving hands were encouraging rodeo fans to plug the United States flag.

With enthusiasm, men and women signed petitions to show support for the flag and particularly for President George Bush's proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit its desecration.

Names of the 716 people who signed the petition, which suggests that the majority of the Supreme Court "mis-interpreted the intent of the Constitution as proclaimed by our founding fathers," are to be dispatched to local Rep. Lamar Smith.

If that "fellow that burned the flag" and ultimately brought the flag-burning issue to the Supreme Court can protest, Ellis said, then so can those who support honoring the nation's banner.

"You can do what you want to with the flag," Ellis noted of the court's decision. "You can spit on it, you can tread on it, you can burn it, or you can love it and wave it," said Ellis, a Midland undertaker and ranch rodeo supporter.

North's sentence carries no jail time

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North today drew a three-year suspended prison term and a $150,000 fine for his role in the Iran-Contra affair. "You're not the fall guy," the judge said in sentencing the former White House aide.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell placed the former National Security Council assistant on two years' probation and ordered him to perform 1,200 hours of community service administering a new program to help inner-city youth avoid involvement in drugs.

Gesell cited North's distinguished career as a Marine officer before he became a staff member at the White House during the Reagan administration.

He told North that during the Iran-Contra affair "I don't think you were a leader at all." He said North was "really a low-level subordinate who was carrying out the instructions of a few cynical superiors."

North, who has said he will appeal his conviction on three counts, had faced a maximum of 10 years' imprisonment and fines totaling $750,000.

In pre-sentencing remarks, North denied the prosecution's contention that he lacked remorse, saying, "I grieve for what has happened."

Speaking in a soft voice, North said he had served his country for 20 years. "I would never knowingly do anything to hurt it or its institutions. I have made many mistakes. I have been convicted of serious crimes," he said.

Pronouncing sentence, Gesell told North:

"Along the way you came to accept the view that Congress couldn't be trusted ... that the fate of the country could be left to a small inside group not elected that was free to act as they chose while publicly professing to act differently."

But Gesell said that even though North was following orders, "you're not the fall guy for this tragic breach of the public trust."

Abortion proponents planning state-by-state legislative effort

WASHINGTON (AP) — Activists planning a state-by-state legislative campaign for abortion rights say they have little hope that a deeply divided Supreme Court will protect their interests.

"We will do everything we can to make this the issue of the coming elections," said Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women. "We will seek to build a political army all across the country."

The aim, she said Tuesday, is to convince legislators they will pay a heavy price for supporting anti-abortion laws.

The high court's willingness to scrap the constitutional right to abortion it established 16 years ago appears now to hinge precariously on the vote of Sandra Day O'Connor, the only woman in the nation's history to serve as a Supreme Court justice.

Abortion rights groups say they have little reason to hope she will vote to bar states from enacting tougher and tougher laws to limit abortions.

"She never met a regulation she doesn't like," said Sarah Weddington, the lawyer who successfully argued the 1973 case of Roe vs. Wade that legalized abortion.

"We can't look to the courts for our protection on this any more," said Patricia Ireland of the National Organization for Women.

Those assessments were prompted by the high court's ruling Monday that barely stopped short of letting states outlaw abortions.

In a series of 5-4 votes, the justices ended their 1988-89 term by removing some of the shackles that barred states from regulating most abortions for 16 years. In its next term beginning in October, the court could give states even broader power.

The court agreed to study three new abortion disputes, giving it a new opportunity to overturn Roe vs. Wade in 1990.

"There is no longer a majority on the court to support Roe," said Janet Benshoof of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Abortion opponents happily agreed.

"Roe's days are numbered," said Randall Terry of Operation Rescue.

Abortion-rights activists march, protest, burn flags

Associated Press

Abortion-rights activists clashed with police in Boston and burned a flag-draped effigy of a justice in Atlanta during demonstrations against the U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing states to restrict abortion.

Pro-choice protesters who burned an American flag in Minneapolis were attacked by three waiters from a topless bar. One man was arrested and several protesters suffered bruises and abrasions, police said.

On a day when Americans celebrated their liberty, thousands of people in at least eight cities heard July Fourth calls to safeguard abortion rights.

Counterdemonstrations were held in two cities, but the anti-abortionists were vastly outnumbered. The rallies came two days after the high court upheld a Missouri law imposing restrictions on abortion, inviting other states to do the same.

"The most fundamental liberty is the right to control our own bodies," Massachusetts Rep. Susan D. Schur told more than 3,000 people at a rally in front of the Statehouse in Boston. "For if we have not the ability to control our own bodies, we are no more than slaves."

Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy also denounced the ruling, and abortion rights groups announced a statewide campaign to vote anti-abortion lawmakers out of office in the 1990 elections.

"Vote with your heart, your head and your stomach," Schur said. "Vote as if your life depends on it."

Protesters waved American flags, held signs with slogans including "My rights have been raped," and chanted "Just Say No!" to the Supreme Court decision.

Demonstrators scuffled with police trying to clear the crowd and two people were arrested, including one on charges of assaulting an officer, police said. Police also blocked about 300 protesters who tried to broadcast their message to tens of thousands of people gathered for the annual Boston Pops concert and fireworks display along the Charles River.

In Indianapolis, speakers told about 350 demonstrators to fight backers of anti-abortion legislation expected in the 1990 General Assembly as a result of the Supreme Court decision.

Rains move into mid-Atlantic region

Associated Press

Heavy rains moved into the Middle Atlantic States today after triggering flash floods in the Appalachians that forced the evacuation of hundreds of campers in North Carolina.

The remains of Tropical Storm Allison, which have dumped rain on parts of the South for more than a week, left a trail of flood damage from the Tennessee Valley to southeast Texas.

One woman was washed away and presumed dead after Wilson's Creek overflowed its banks in the Pisgah National Forest in western North Carolina. That raised the death toll since Allison sloshed ashore in Texas a week ago to 14, including five in Mississippi, four in Texas, three in Louisiana and a previous death Monday in North Carolina.

"It was unbelievable how many people were up there camping in all the bad weather," said Caldwell County firefighter Rusty Dellinger.

Workers rescued about 30 backpackers and hikers stranded by the creek's swirling waters by Tuesday evening, and rescuers searched for others stranded in the rain-soaked Blue Ridge Mountains.

"I'm a nervous wreck. I've got to get out of here," said Elaine Self, 28. "It's my first time camping here. I'm never coming back."

"I think it's the worst it's been here since the flood of 1940," said Tom Huskins Jr., general manager of the Grandfather Mountain resort in Avery County, where more than 6 inches of rain fell in 24 hours through Tuesday afternoon.

Avery County Sheriff Clinton Phillips said officials ordered the evacuation Tuesday morning of about 400 people because of fears a 32-foot concrete-and-earth dam across Land Harbor Lake would give way. State inspectors proclaimed the dam safe, but deputies continued to monitor it.

More than 1½ inches of rain have fallen since Monday, and the National Weather Service said up to 2 inches more was likely, with up to 4 inches in some areas.

About 60 people returned to their homes Tuesday in Spring City, Tenn., one day after nearly 5 inches of rain forced their evacuation from the farming community north of Chattanooga. It was the third time in three weeks floods had forced evacuations in the area.

"We're kind of getting tired of it," said Gene Wright, director of the Rhea County Emergency Management Agency.

Wright said 400 homes, 21 businesses and seven cars and trucks were damaged by floodwaters that stood up to four feet deep before beginning to recede early Tuesday.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 70 and winds will be from the southeast at 5-10 mph.

Thursday is expected to be sunny and continued very warm with the high in the mid-90s and winds from the southeast at 10-15 mph.

STATE

Isolated evening thunderstorms are possible tonight in South Texas, East Texas, the Big Bend area and extreme West Texas.

Forecasts are calling for clear to partly cloudy skies through Thursday over most of the state.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s in the Panhandle and the mountains of Southwest Texas and in the 70s over the rest of the state. A few readings in South Texas and along the coast may be around the 80-degree mark.

Highs Thursday will be mostly in the 90s, ranging from the 80s along the immediate coast to near 105 in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

A ridge of surface high pressure across the central United States kept skies clear over most of Texas.

A few showers and thunderstorms were reported during the pre-dawn hours offshore along the upper Texas coast.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the Panhandle, South Plains and Davis Mountains to the lower 80s in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 63 at Dalhart to 82 at Laredo.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 67 at Amarillo, 73 at Wichita Falls, 77 at Fort Worth, 75 at Waco and Austin, 76 at San Antonio, 75 at Houston and Corpus Christi, 77 at Brownsville, 66 at San Angelo, 68 at Lubbock, 71 at Midland and 75 at El Paso.

NATION

Rain brought flash flood warnings in eight eastern states today, and the West prepared for another scorcher after Independence Day heat that set records from North Dakota to California.

Showers and thunderstorms drenched much of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts Tuesday, flooding roads and swelling rivers and streams.

Hamilton County, Tenn., was pelted with 1.35 inches of rain in 40 minutes; 1½ inches of rain fell in two hours in New Paris, Pa.; 6¼ inches poured down on Grandfather Mountain in North Carolina in a 24-hour period.

Flash flood watches were in effect this morning for parts of North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Lakes and rivers continued to flood in Louisiana because of heavy rains during the past week. Four feet of water covered about five miles of Highway 9, which was closed between Campti and Creston.

A large upper-level high pressure system brought record heat from the upper Mississippi Valley across the Plains to California.

STORMS

Tuesday's storms dumped about 2¾ inches of rain in the Chattanooga area, and more thunderstorms were expected through the weekend.

The Tennessee Valley Authority reported that June's big rainfall produced the highest runoff into the region's streams in 114 years of record keeping — 4.10 inches.

More rain fell Tuesday on Mississippi, where some cotton and soybean crops have been ruined and two counties were declared disaster areas.

In Texas, an estimated 500 residents in low-lying areas of Liberty County, northeast of Houston, remained out of their flooded homes Tuesday because of Allison's heavy rains.

Allison caused an estimated $1 billion in damage in Texas alone, officials have said.

In Dallas, an estimated 9,000 homes were still without electricity in the wake of a storm that swept the city Sunday night with winds up to 90 mph.

About 700 homes have flooded in Louisiana in the last week and a half as Allison dumped more than two feet of rain in places, authorities estimated.

Officials in Winn Parish continued to watch a small earthen dam weakened by the storm and waters continued to rise in flooded neighborhoods of Rapides Parish.

"Water is rising about 12 inches in a 24-hour time frame," said Bill Godron, Alexandria-Rapides Parish Civil Defense director.

"Of course this is all contingent on no more rainfall," Godron said. "We're supposed to have more rain through Friday."

China says corruption cases broken

BEIJING (AP) — China today announced a crackdown on corrupt local officials and said it has solved the capital's biggest fraud case.

The moves were the government's latest attempt to deal with some of the complaints that fueled the pro-democracy movement.

The government also promised leniency toward Chinese students who held protests in the United States to condemn the crackdown on the movement.

Also today, the State Tourism Bureau ordered major hotels in Beijing that receive Cable News Network and the American Forces Radio and Television Service to shut down reception of the broadcasts, hotel officials said.

Tourism officials were not immediately available for comment, and the city Foreign Affairs Office said it did not know of any such order.

In another development, Chinese soldiers confiscated film from Japanese tourists affiliated with the Japan Socialist Party after they took pictures from buses of Tiananmen Square, an action forbidden under martial law.

The soldiers boarded three of the four buses and asked people who took pictures of the square to hand over their film, said Hideo Tarumi of the Japanese Embassy's consular section. Less than 10 people complied, said Tarumi, who added that the embassy considered the incident over and "not a big deal."

Official Chinese media today reported arrests, confessions and trials of officials who defrauded their work units and took bribes.

The stories drove home the theme that the ruling Communist Party is involved in a major effort to root out corruption.

Rampant official corruption has been a focus of popular anger. Calls to eliminate it were common among pro-democracy protesters whose seven-week movement was crushed June 4 when troops drove them from Tiananmen Square.

Chinese media said nearly 100 soldiers and police died in the crackdown and that thousands were injured, while about 100 civilians died and nearly 1,000 were injured. Chinese witnesses and Western intelligence sources said the death toll may have been as high as 3,000.

A wave of arrests of pro-democracy activists followed the crackdown, along with the suppression of the free exchange of ideas.

The corruption cases reported today included what the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily called the biggest fraud case in the Chinese capital since the founding of communist China 40 years ago.

The paper announced the trial of six people charged with defrauding the Chinese Academy of Sciences Microelectronics Center out of $105,000. The paper did not indicate when the trial began or whether a verdict was reached.

Communist Party chiefs in Henan province and the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region announced anti-corruption steps Monday "as part of an effort to respond to the central government's call on construction of an honest and clean government organ to win the trust of the people," a Xinhua report said.

In Henan, government-run companies will be screened by the end of August and anyone engaging in profiteering or blackmail will be sternly punished, Xinhua said.

NORTH

The judge told North that "I believe you still lack a full understanding of how the public service has been tarnished" by his activities. But Gesell added, "Jail would only harden your misconceptions."

Gesell also barred North from holding federal office.

North and his attorney urged the judge to consider the suffering the former presidential aide has already endured because of extensive publicity surrounding the case and the continued threat of assassination by a terrorist group led by Abu Nidal.

"I ask only that you consider these things when you weigh the sentence," North said. Noting the disruption of his family's life, North asked that "you be lenient so that they may have a chance to rebuild their lives."

North remained at the defense table for a few minutes after Gesell concluded the sentencing. He then walked over to his wife, Betsy, who was sitting in the front row, kissed her on the cheek and whispered in her ear. The two then smiled broadly.

The 45-year-old retired Marine lieutenant colonel was found guilty May 4 of aiding and abetting the obstruction of Congress by helping write a false chronology of a 1985 arms shipment to Iran. He also was convicted of destroying sensitive government documents and accepting a $13,800 home security system from arms dealer Richard V. Secord.

Gesell imposed a three-year suspended sentence for North's conviction of aiding and abetting the obstruction of Congress by helping create a false chronology of U.S.-Iran arms sales. The judge placed him on two years' probation for the offense and fined him $100,000.

For destroying or altering government documents about the Iran-Contra affair, North was given a two-year suspended sentence and fined $35,000. He also received a one-year suspended sentence and fined $15,000 for illegally accepting a home-security system from arms dealer Richard V. Secord, an Iran-Contra co-defendant.

In describing the community service he ordered, the judge said he hoped North would become "conscious of certain values you and your associates appear to have overlooked in the elite isolation of the White House."

Gesell said the community service would take advantage of North's considerable administrative and organizational skills. He directed that North perform 800 hours on the project the first year and 400 during the second year of the probationary period.

North testified at his trial that he had acted at the direction of his superiors, including then-President Reagan. Defense attorney Brendan V. Sullivan Jr. argued against imprisoning his client.

But independent prosecutor Lawrence E. Walsh recommended a prison term for North, arguing in court pleadings that the former National Security Council aide lied at his trial and has shown no remorse for his crimes.

The defense team led by Sullivan said in court papers that the prosecution's request for imprisonment "demonstrates that it will stop at nothing in its effort to crush Oliver North."

The defense said Walsh had not presented "a shred of support" to the accusation that North lied to win acquittal of a charge he pocketed $4,300 in travelers' checks entrusted to him by Contra leader Adolfo Calero.

FOURTH

Ellis and his employees were giving away miniature flags to those who signed the petition.

Next to Ellis was his sidekick, Bill Jackson, who was promoting the rodeo and flag-waving rights.

"There are not many places you can go in this day and time without paying a lot of money," Jackson said in bragging about the economy of the Ranch Rodeo. "And this is good, clean, family entertainment."

"When we went off to war," Jackson said, "we fought for things like this."

Ellis took a kindly penetrating look at his friend.

"What war were you in?" Ellis asked Jackson.

"The Cold War."

Among the supporters of the flag was Midlander Steve Foy, who, in addition to boosting the flag, was carrying his 4-year-old son Parker about the rodeo grounds.

"I think it was a travesty," Foy, a 32-year-old landman, said of the Supreme Court's majority opinion. "To me, burning the flag is a whole lot worse than (public) nudity. People died for that flag and what it represents. I don't know of anybody that has gone to war for the right to go naked. They are offending my rights when burn the flag."

Across the way from the rodeo arena, Midland County Sheriff's deputies Sgt. Bill Stone and Investigator Gary McLaughlin were waving the flag while they were sitting astride their mounts.

"I like the old saying: 'Either love America or leave it,'" McLaughlin said.

"Wave that flag," exhorted Stone.

Stone volunteered to be at the Ranch Rodeo, since he is drawn to "the old-timey ways of living — the ways of the cowboys.

"My heroes have always been cowboys — in films and out in the open," Stone said.

Meanwhile, camp cooks were stirring their dinner fare for a chuck-wagon cook-off over the coals of burning mesquite and in the shade of lean-tos. And the working cowboys from eight Midland-based ranches were trying their skills at wild-cow milking, calf branding, team penning and ribbon roping.

Old-time chuck-wagon cook Guy Lee was stirring about Midland rancher Ralph Powell's campfire site in readying a dinner of ribs and beef brisket, son-of-gun stew, pinto beans, pea salad, Spanish rice, camp bread and peach-and-cherry cobbler.

Lee, who lives and ranches near Marathon, was at the Ranch Rodeo to defend his 1988 title as the top camp cook at the event.

Though the folks gathering about his campsite were tossing heavy compliments about his cooking, Lee noted that "most cowboys will complain (about the cook's food) just to gripe. They don't mean it."

And Lee has a remedy for bellyachers: "It's not compulsory to eat."

For a spell, Lee ambled around in search of a can-opener, so that he could prepare his peach-cherry cobbler. His camp hand, Joe Carr, had misplaced the good one.

Carr came up with an opener, and they made do.

But despite his efforts, Lee's chuck-wagon fare got beat out by Debbie Windham's dinner, which she, Prudie Kiehne and Janie Belew prepared in blackened cast-iron pans and ovens.

"We are the only ones here who did hire a cook," said Mrs. Windham, wife of Midland rancher Kennard Windham. "We are excited that we won." She and her hands prepared chicken-fried steaks and the trimmings — beans, potatoes, sour-dough bread and blackberry and peach cobbler made from fresh fruit.

"On the trail when they were driving cattle, they (the old cowboys) would use whatever kind of fruit they could find" to make cobbler, Mrs. Windham said. "I think that's the secret of any good cobbler — using fresh fruit. It worked for us."

And the secret of coming out top in the dusty rodeo events was, in part, due to the "luck" of the draw, noted Scott Welch, captain of the winning E Ranch team. Eight ranch teams competed in the five rodeo events.

Windham's U Ranch team came in first place in the 1988 Ranch Rodeo events but didn't do so well this year.

"Everybody on my team, at sometime in the past, worked cattle on horseback," said Welch, who noted that "whoever is the luckiest is the winner, probably."

The day's fare — from flag waving to rodeoing — turned out just fine.

"I sure thought it was all right," said Bobby Matthews, foreman for the Lazy Z Ranch. "Everybody here had lots of fun. It looked like it went awfully smooth, and everybody enjoyed it."

ABORTION

O'Connor is one of five justices who have expressed hostility to the 1973 ruling. In 1983 she said its central premise — permitting greater state control as a woman's pregnancy proceeds — has "no justification in the law or logic."

But if the 16-year-old structure is tottering, O'Connor has not yet announced a willingness to topple it.

The time is not ripe to discard it, she said, choosing instead to uphold Missouri regulations limiting abortion rights on narrower grounds.

She voted, for example, to let states require various medical tests to determine whether a fetus at least 20 weeks old is "viable" or capable of surviving outside the womb.

The court's 1973 ruling allowed states to make it a crime to abort a viable fetus — but the justices then drew the viability line at 24 weeks.

The tests ordered by Missouri "are to be performed when viability is possible," O'Connor said.

That could add $150 or more to the cost of an abortion. But, O'Connor said, that "does not impose an undue burden on a woman's abortion decision."

Justice Antonin Scalia's separate concurring opinion expressed frustration with the caution of his fellow conservatives on the court.

"It thus appears that the mansion of constitutionalized abortion law, constructed overnight in Roe vs. Wade, must be disassembled doorjamb by doorjamb and never entirely brought down, no matter how wrong it may be," Scalia wrote.

Others on the court surely ready to dismantle the 16-year-old ruling are Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White and Anthony M. Kennedy.

The addition of Kennedy to the court last year has shifted the balance of power on abortion and other issues as well.

Kennedy, O'Connor and Scalia are appointees of former President Reagan, who also elevated Rehnquist to chief justice to lead the swing to conservatism. White, named by former President Kennedy, votes with them on many key cases.

PROTESTS

"You take our rights, you lose your jobs," said Melinda Rider, executive director of the Indiana Pro-Choice Action League.

More than 200 demonstrators outside the Maryland State House in Annapolis also were urged to begin lobbying for the 1990 state elections to preserve abortion rights. A few anti-abortion activists approached the rostrum and interrupted the rally briefly before police escorted them away.

In Atlanta, about 450 abortion-rights advocates marched to the Capitol, where protesters placed a handful of coat hangers on the statue of former Gov. Eugene Talmadge.

As the rally was ending, a small group of marchers set afire an effigy of a Supreme Court justice wrapped in a flag. An unidentified man tried to stop the flag-burning, shouting "This is Nazism," but was pushed back.

The flag-burning in Minneapolis occurred as about 150 abortion rights demonstrators rallied outside the federal building.

When a small group of protesters began burning a flag, three waiters from the Solid Gold nightclub ran across the street and attacked them, said police watch commander Ed Scott. One of the waiters was arrested for disorderly conduct.

In Pittsburgh, an estimated 400 abortion rights advocates in front of the federal building were challenged by half as many anti-abortion demonstrators who gathered across the street singing "God Bless America."

"Let the babies live!" the Rev. Keith Tucci, an Operation Rescue leader, yelled through a bullhorn.

There were no arrests or altercations, although each side tried at times to out-shout the other and police had to keep anti-abortion protesters from mixing with their opponents.

Among the youngest pickets was 3-year-old Jennette Maddock, who held a sign that read, "Mommy had a choice — why can't I?"

First women complete state shock camp prison program

By ELIZABETH EDWARDSEN

SUMMIT, N.Y. (AP) — Felicita Rodriguez is ready to start her life over.

"I have a future in front of me," said the 24-year-old resident of New York City's lower East Side. "A better future."

That future includes a high school equivalency degree, a job and the chance to raise her two young children properly. Rodriguez said it won't include using or selling drugs, which is what got her into trouble in the first place.

It also got her into state prison.

"This inmate thinks she can do it," she said. "I know I'm special now."

Rodriguez and 14 other women this month became the first female platoon to complete New York state's shock incarceration program. About 1,400 of the state's 40,000 prison inmates are women.

While doing their six months at the shock camp, the women followed an intense regime of military drills, manual labor, exercise, remedial education and drug and alcohol counseling. They lost weight, gained some self-respect — and won their freedom earlier than they would have in a traditional prison.

They opted into the program, trading a tough six months in an environment very much like a Marine boot camp for a shorter prison term.

First-time, non-violent offenders sentenced to three years or less in prison who complete the shock program are immediately eligible for parole. That means they can cut up to 2½ years off their minimum prison time.

That's good news for the state, whose prisons are so overcrowded that officials recently decided to start housing inmates in prison gymnasiums. And it's very good news for inmates who want to go home early.

"I'm going home and growing my hair," said Christine Conti, a cocaine dealer, as she stuffed her possessions in a paper bag and prepared for a ride home to New Jersey. The women in shock camp don't have to shave their heads as closely as the male inmates, but their hair is cut to about collar length.

Conti, 25, said most of the other shock inmates "thought I was crazy" because she liked the running and the strenuous exercise that begins every day at 5:30 a.m. But other aspects of the military life didn't sit as well.

"The worst part is the mess hall," she said. "I like to talk when I eat ... You can't talk. You can't even look."

Sherrell Radcliffe, 26, of Rochester, couldn't wait to get out of the fatigues she'd been wearing for six months. "I keep looking at what everyone else is wearing," she said of inmates' friends and relatives at graduation.

Superintendent Rosetta Burke said the military basis of the shock program teaches the inmates responsibility, discipline and respect, traits most had "very little grounding" in before.

Conti said drug counseling helped her get over a cocaine addiction. Before shock camp, she said, "I wouldn't have told you I was a drug addict. They taught me how to open up and deal with my problem."

Other programs taught her she didn't "always have to say something about everything.

"When I first came in here, I was trying to tell the lady how to run the community meeting. That's how I was. I wouldn't listen to anybody."

The women who completed shock camp this month were effusive in praising the program and thanking the staff. That may be because the program is voluntary.

Inmates who don't like it can transfer back to a regular prison and their longer sentences. Troublemakers are sent back.

The platoon of 15 started out with 25 women six months ago, most of them convicted of drug charges. One woman owes a month because she was hospitalized during her shock term. Another left for medical reasons. Five were kicked out because of disciplinary problems.

Inmates like the three who chose to go back to prison "can't take it any more," said Burke. "They don't like getting yelled at. They don't like getting up in the morning. They don't like the responsibility.

"We don't let them off the hook."

While all of the graduating platoon spoke sincerely of new, brighter futures, the odds are that a few of them will get in trouble again. Shock inmates have a 17 percent to 19 percent recidivism rate, Burke said. However, the average prison inmate return rate is 25 percent.

That improvement — and the millions the state can save through shorter prison terms — has prompted Gov. Mario Cuomo to propose raising the current 26-year age cap for shock camp to 29. The shock programs operated by a growing number of states — Louisiana and Mississippi also have graduated classes of women — have attracted the attention of national drug policy chief William Bennett, who is interested in it for federal prisons.

Several of the women leaving the camp about 50 miles west of Albany cried as they said their goodbyes to each other and to their guards.

Man returns home on Fourth of July

NATION

Abe Stolar, 77, hugs his wife, Gita Rozovskaya, after they arrived at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport Tuesday. Stolar, who was raised on Chicago's northwest side, returned to the United States for the first time since he went to the Soviet Union with his family more than half a century ago.

CHICAGO (AP) — Abe Stolar used to lie awake homesick in his Moscow bed, imagining smelling the flowers of a Chicago rose garden and hearing the roar of the elevated trains.

Now, after 58 years in exile, he can do it in person.

Stolar returned to the city of his childhood on the Fourth of July, a fitting day to mark his long but victorious fight for freedom.

"I really can't find words," the 77-year-old man with wispy white hair and sparkling brown eyes told well-wishers and reporters as he stepped off a plane at O'Hare International Airport.

"It's overwhelming," said Stolar, who was accompanied by his Soviet-born wife, Gita Rozovskaya.

"God bless you all. It's wonderful to be here," he said.

Stolar was traveling from Israel, where he emigrated earlier this year after a 14½-year fight to leave the Soviet Union.

His immediate plans are to get reacquainted with his home town and to tour the United States, taking in some baseball, junk food and other all-American fare.

Today, he planned a walking tour of his childhood neighborhood, Humboldt Park, a thriving ethnic European enclave when he left but now infested with street gangs and graffiti.

He also plans to go to Wrigley Field for tonight's game between the Cubs and the San Diego Padres.

Stolar was to be accompanied by Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who helped secure his release from the Soviet Union.

Simon was on hand for the emotional welcome at the airport, where he presented Stolar with a bouquet of red roses, a U.S. flag and a T-shirt bearing the name "Chicago."

The senator called Stolar "a real hero, a guy who has stood up for freedom."

Stolar, whose Russian-Jewish parents immigrated to America in 1910, was raised on the Northwest Side. But the family returned to their homeland in 1931 during the Great Depression, believing that the Bolshevik Revolution had created a workers' paradise.

It turned out to be more of a nightmare for the family.

Stolar's father died in the Stalinist purges, and his mother and sister were sent to camps in Siberia.

Stolar, just 19 when he arrived in the Soviet Union, served in the Red Army during World War II. He was wounded by a German hand grenade and lost the sight in one eye.

He then worked as a translator and announcer for Radio Moscow, married and had a son. But in a country where Jews have long been harassed, he felt isolated. And in the early 1970s, Stolar wanted out.

Promises that he could leave were repeatedly broken by Soviet officials, who refused to let Stolar's whole family leave.

"I was an alien there for all the 58 years I was there," Stolar said. "It was a crime they didn't let me out."

Simon met Stolar during a trip to Moscow in 1980, and contacted Soviet officials and U.S. diplomats in efforts to secure Stolar's release.

Freedom didn't come until March, when Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev allowed Stolar, his wife, son, daughter-in-law and two grandchildren to leave for Israel.

"What can I say, really?" Stolar asked Tuesday, expressing gratitude to Simon and the media for publicizing his plight. "I can't say anything but thank you, thank you, thank you!"

Stolar used to love to walk the downtown streets, taking peeks inside the lobbies of the grand hotels. His dream of one day staying in the fancy, 3,000-room Stevens Hotel has come true.

From the airport, he went to the hotel, now the Chicago Hilton and Towers, which is putting up the Stolars in its 23rd-floor Chicago Suite.

No special menu is planned during Stolar's week-long stay — he's "a junk-food junkie" who likes hamburgers and hot dogs, said assistant manager Peter Borup.

Other stops on the Stolars' 12-city U.S. tour include Anchorage, Alaska, and Miami. The trip ends Aug. 13 in Los Angeles.

Their visit was arranged and financed by Chicago Action for Soviet Jewry.

Homeless shelter shows its spirit

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For 8-year-old Nicholas Naudain, marching in a Fourth of July parade was fun but exhausting even though the route was only around the rooftop garden of the city's only emergency shelter for families.

"My feet are tired," he said after the festivities began Tuesday atop Raphael House in the rundown Tenderloin neighborhood.

But he quickly added that the event was not boring.

In another Independence Day celebration, volunteers distributed soup, carrot cake and more than 100 watermelons to homeless people in a makeshift campground in front of City Hall.

About 125 people turned out for the Raphael House party, which included balloons, streamers and a 20-member marching band. Flags waved, cymbals crashed and batons twirled as the parade began. A flag-raising ceremony followed, and then everyone joined in for a spirited rendition of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

"They usually go all out on celebrations, they really do," said Nicholas' mother, Terry Naudain, 34, who is staying at the shelter for the second time since 1982.

After marching in the parade as part of a cardboard fire engine, Nicholas summed up the meaning of Independence Day.

Student compares Boston Massacre to Tiananmen

BOSTON (AP) — A fugitive Chinese student leader stood on the spot where British troops opened fire on American civilians at the dawn of the American Revolution and compared that Boston Massacre to events in Tiananmen Square.

Shen

Both, said Shen Tong, marked the beginning of a nation's struggle for independence.

Shen, a 20-year-old Beijing University biology student, escaped from China while on the government's "most wanted" list.

As part of their traditional Independence Day celebrations, the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts invited Shen and other Chinese students to set a floral Goddess of Democracy in front of the Old State House.

The statue, created of plastic foam covered with white flowers, was a replica of the one Chinese students erected in Tiananmen Square.

Standing among the uniformed Artillery members, Shen read his own declaration of independence.

"On this spot ... British troops opened fire on peaceful citizens," Shen said. "People died. People were hurt. But it sparked the American struggle for independence.

"Exactly one month ago in my country, troops controlled by the Li Peng regime opened fire on a peaceful civilian protest. I do not believe that the Tiananmen Square massacre was the end of the democracy movement in China.

"It was the beginning — a beginning that will lead to a new China, a China governed by the people and for the people."

Elsewhere, seven Chinese students at the University of Tulsa announced at a flag-raising ceremony they want political asylum in the United States.

"We feel very strongly, if we go back — this year, next year or any year — we really face big danger," said Guohua Zheng, a 25-year-old graduate student in petroleum engineering at the Oklahoma school. The Immigration and Naturalization Service had no immediate comment.

In Boston, the Chinese students were a new twist on the traditional Fourth of July celebrations by the artillery company, a militia founded in 1638.

The Old State House was erected in 1713 as the seat of the British colonial government. On March 5, 1770, five unarmed Americans were killed there while demonstrating against the British. Six years later, the artillery company's Thomas Crafts read the Declaration of Independence from the balcony of the Old State House.

Tuesday, Lt. Col. Joseph A. Milano read the declaration. The artillery company, joined by several other militias in colonial-era costumes, then held a moment of silence for those who died in Tiananmen Square and for American servicemen who died in wars.

Milano said he personally paid for the statue but declined to say how much in cost. "Just say it was about a dollar for every flower and there weren't less than 2,000," he said.

Milano said he has visited China three times since 1983 and decided to invite the Chinese to take part in the American ceremony because he was moved by the historical similarities.

"It was American patriots at that time and now it's a very similar thing," Milano said. "We brought China to Boston."

Shen, who will not say how he escaped from China, used the ceremony to protest the presumed arrest of a friend, student Wang Dan.

Shen made it clear he is not advocating the armed revolt embraced by the American colonists.

"For a thousand years in China, it's always been one dynasty changing into another dynasty, one violence into another violence," Shen said. "This movement is different. It is non-violent."

Medals for sailors are long overdue

Unspeakable torments were suffered by the 82 men of the U.S.S. Pueblo as prisoners of North Korea after the Navy surveillance ship was seized by that country in international waters on Jan. 23, 1968. Incredibly, echoes of that ordeal extended for the ship's officers and crewmen to last summer.

Some 320 people were summoned to the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego, Calif. to receive a new medal honoring former prisoners of war. But the men of the Pueblo were not invited. Defense Department attorneys explained that, because a truce was in effect when the ship was seized, they were classified by the Defense Department as "detainees," not prisoners of war.

Although this was technically true, the Pentagon on reflection determined that withholding the medal from the Pueblo was wrong and, in fact, indefensible.

The stated motives for not honoring the Pueblo men were widely questioned, in fact, by those who recalled that a Navy board of inquiry had recommended that Cmdr. Lloyd M. Bucher, commanding officer of the Pueblo, be court-martialed for surrendering the ship without a fight. Moreover, some crew members had publicly "confessed" to espionage, although they used slang and hand signals to dilute the propaganda value of their statements.

Withholding the medals was being construed as a latter-day judgment on the Pueblo's travail — circumstances that should have been laid to rest long ago.

More to the point was that all of the Pueblo men were in the service of their country; their lives were on the line during the attack upon them and during 11 months of brutal imprisonment. Also, all of those who were wounded were awarded the Purple Heart, a combat medal.

Not surprisingly, the veterans who received the new Prisoner of War Medal last summer were deeply offended at the slight to the officers and crew of the Pueblo. Several openly protested that these men had suffered more than most. One recipient threatened to "turn in" his Silver Star medal if the injustice were not corrected.

We are glad the Navy and the Defense Department have concluded after careful thought that those who were held prisoner after the Pueblo's capture "meet the spirit and intent of POW medal criteria." They do indeed.

Standards of decency

Granted, the young and the mentally impaired can, and do, commit monstrous crimes. One of the cases before the Supreme Court this week (June 29) was a case in point.

In 1979, John Paul Penry, a man with the IQ of a 6-year-old, raped, beat and stabbed a young housewife in Texas. Before she died, she identified Penry, who later confessed to the crime.

Six-year-olds — and 16-year-olds — have been known to commit ghastly murders. The question the court had before it this week was whether the state has a right to execute a person of limited mental capacity — limited because of youth or impairment or both.

In two separate 5-4 decisions, the court said yes. Putting the retarded to death for crimes committed is not "categorically prohibited." And, there is nothing "cruel and unusual" about executing a person who was as young as 16 when he or she committed a crime.

Those are troubling decisions, so troubling they should prompt corollary questions: Can we fairly say of anyone only 16 years old that his life is so devoid of possibility, so totally beyond redemption, as to be deserving of death at the hands of the state? Can we fairly say that an adult with the mental capacity of a 6-year-old, a person with little if any comprehension of the enormity of his crime, deserves to be strapped onto a gurney and injected with a lethal substance while a few chosen onlookers watch the final throes of death?

This week's decisions align us with Pakistan, Bangladesh, Rwanda and Barbados — the only countries in the world, according to an Amnesty International report, that have executed people in the past decade who committed crimes while under age 18.

Such shameful company makes it more difficult for this nation to serve, as it has in the past, as a beacon of enlightenment and compassion.

Justice Antonin Scalia, who voted with the majority, made a point of noting that the decision does not imply that individual justices endorse the execution of the young or the mentally impaired. As he explained it, the court was guided by "evolving standards of decency" in American society. Scalia argued that since many states continue to permit the executions of juvenile killers in extreme cases, "a national consensus" has apparently not developed that the practice is cruel and unusual.

Many states, of course, do not permit such executions. We are left to wonder how many states it takes to constitute "a national consensus" — and, ultimately, why a numbers game matters when controversial constitutional issues are to be decided. To exercise judgment on such issues is the Supreme Court's often painful duty.

The court could have played a catalytic role by ruling that the execution of juveniles and the retarded is indeed "cruel and unusual." But the court left it to the states and to Congress to reconsider the hard questions about such executions: Are they anything more than acts of vengeance under the law? Do they serve society in any way?

It's difficult to see how the answer to either question can be anything but no.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, July 5, the 186th day of 1989. There are 179 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 5, 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed into law the National Labor Relations Act, which provided for a National Labor Relations Board and authorized labor to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining.

On this date:

In 1801, American naval hero David G. Farragut was born in Knoxville, Tenn.

In 1810, showman Phineas T. Barnum was born in Bethel, Conn.

In 1811, Venezuela became the first South American country to declare its independence from Spain.

In 1830, the French occupied the North African city of Algiers.

In 1865, William Booth founded the Salvation Army in London.

In 1940, during World War II, diplomatic relations were broken between Britain and the Vichy government in France.

In 1946, the bikini, designed by Louis Reard, made its debut at a fashion show in Paris.

In 1947, Larry Doby signed a contract with the Cleveland Indians, becoming the first black player in baseball's American League.

In 1948, Britain's National Health Service Act, which provides free government-financed medical and dental care, went into effect.

In 1950, Private Kenneth Shadrick of Skin Fork, W.Va., became the first U.S. fatality in the Korean War.

Congressman fights identity problem

WASHINGTON — Rep. Tom Luken, D-Ohio, suffers from an identity crisis that could prove politically fatal. For weeks, the press and the public have been confusing the seven-term congressman with Republican congressman Donald "Buz" Lukens, a fellow Ohioan tarnished by a sex scandal.

Jack Anderson

Donald Lukens was convicted recently of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He faces up to a six-month jail sentence for contributing to the girl's unruliness and delinquency by plying her with alcohol, paying her taxi fare to his apartment and participating in sexual relations.

Tom Luken has felt the lash of misdirected public outrage. Word has not reached all corners of Luken's conservative southwest Ohio district that he is not the one responsible for corrupting the morals of a minor. So the former U.S. district attorney and Cincinnati mayor finds himself sweating out one of the oddest political battles he ever expected to undertake: setting his name straight.

"Maybe some in the area have seen it, and it's been embedded in their minds and may never be erased," Luken told our reporter Scott Sleek.

Luken has been following the trail of misinformation with mixed results. He said that not a day passes without an erroneous media report, a newspaper photo of him misidentified as Donald Lukens or a call from an indignant constituent. The task is only complicated by the fact that the two men serve neighboring districts.

The flap has spilled over into Luken's personal life. Luken related a story about his 11 year-old grandson who was recently taken to the hospital after a knee injury in a soccer game. A nurse in the ambulance was noting the boy's vital statistics when she asked him his name.

"Luken, without an 's'," he replied sternly. "And for the record, I'm a Democrat and you can write that down, too."

One of Luken's daughters was chagrined to find friends offering condolences for a crime her father never committed. And Luken's son, Charlie, the current mayor of Cincinnati, is dreading the problems that await him should he seek statewide office.

Luken himself has been on the receiving end of good-natured joking by his House colleagues.

POLITICAL SCORECARD — The disarray among Democrats on Capitol Hill is now spreading throughout the party. The resignation of two top Democratic leaders in the House have focused public attention on improprieties in Congress, which is controlled by the Democrats. At the same time, the latest polls show that President Bush's popularity is soaring.

Our sources believe that Republican officials are taking advantage of the public disenchantment with the Democrats. In some states the Republicans are quietly recruiting new voters. A spot check indicates that Republicans are outregistering Democrats as much as two to one. In Tallahassee, Fla., the party leaders sent invitations to 20,000 registered Democrats to switch parties. More than 1,400 Democrats signed up as Republicans. Meanwhile, the appeal by party leaders to stop the slugfest has fallen flat. Both parties are gearing up for a protracted, ugly and bitter congressional elections campaign in 1990.

Popcorn popper's OK, but contract's better!

This is what is going on today in the world of merchandising. Take a department store — any department store.

"Sir, I'm interested in this electric popcorn maker. Is it any good?"

"'Good' is not the word for it. This machine is the best that money can buy. It pops corn light and fluffy without ever missing a single kernel. We've been carrying this model for three years and nobody has ever brought one back."

Art Buchwald

"In that case, let me have one."

"Yes, sir. That will be $49.99. Did you want a service contract to go with it?"

"I thought you said that it was a wonderful popcorn maker. Why do I need a service contract?"

"You never know what will happen when you leave the store. A mail truck could run over it, or some child on a skateboard could knock you down in the parking lot. The cost is only $190 and it's good for 18 months."

"That's outrageous. What about the warranty?"

"The warranty only helps if something happens to the popcorn maker while it is being used on a nuclear submarine."

"You have to be kidding."

"It also guarantees the machine for parts and labor if it breaks down in the Amazon rain forest. Sir, it's none of my business, but you would be much better off with a service contract. With this contract, a company representative will fly from Asia on the same day to fix your machine."

"But you told me yourself that no customer has ever brought back one of these popcorn makers."

"That's because they all had service contracts. If they didn't, the machines wouldn't last 48 hours. We're already doing you a favor by letting you purchase a contract from us."

"Can the store make money on these contracts?"

"Not with the popcorn machine. May I see your driver's license?"

"It seems to me that if the appliance sells for $49.99, the service agreement shouldn't cost $190."

"I guess you've never seen the inside of a popcorn maker. It's a mess. It wouldn't be worth our while to sell a contract for less."

"Does every item in this department come with a service contract?"

"Everything but Mr. Massey, the manager, over there. Nobody will take one on him."

"All right, give me a service agreement on the popper. Now it's my understanding that if anything goes wrong with it, I can have it fixed."

"In a jiffy. Just air freight it to the factory in Taiwan and they will repair it for you at no charge whatsoever."

"I feel better knowing that there is someone out there if I need him."

"If, for any reason, it is not repaired to your satisfaction, may I suggest that you buy this Electrolux vacuum cleaner to sweep up all the popcorn kernels from the floor."

"How much is that?" I asked.

"It costs $470, not including the insurance policy in case the popcorn stops up the nozzle of the cleaner."

U.S. shouldn't be soft on Chinese repression

PARIS — There are valid grounds for debate on how far the United States and allies should go in response to China's brutal new policy of repression.

Sheer indignation is natural, but emotion alone is a poor base for complex international decisions.

Flora Lewis

The argument over sanctions confuses rather than clarifies. It makes the issue reprisal, which is not the point.

The purpose is to exert all possible influence to make China's leaders see the great cost to their own hopes for modernization that they are now imposing on themselves and their nation.

The new party leader, Jiang Zemin, has pledged to inflict "severe punishment without an iota of mercy" on those involved in what Beijing officially labels "the counterrevolutionary rebellion" attempting to "install capitalism in China and make it dependent on certain foreign countries."

But Beijing has also said it wants to continue policies of "openness" and "economic reform."

The answer is that if China wants partners, it has to take their interests and their views into account. This is not "interference" or "retribution."

Expression of moral outrage and disgust is the right of individuals who cherish human and democratic values, and even the duty of every government that represents them.

It is bad enough that opinion is suppressed in China. There is no reason for the West to speak softly for fear of provocation. Congress was right in its unanimous condemnation.

If anything, world reaction does seem to have persuaded Chinese authorities to stop the obscene trumpeting of executions and, just possibly, not to go on killing.

Deng Xiaoping would not have been able to lead China out of its monstrous Cultural Revolution had the death rule been applied when he was disgraced, twice, under Mao. What new extraordinary leaders have now disappeared forever?

Beyond that, it must be made clear that even strictly economic relations require confidence and respect.

Deng may be thinking of Lenin's famous saying that "the capitalists will sell you the rope to hang them with." He forgets they still want the deal to promise reward.

The European Community has gone beyond the United States in showing that the West cannot have confidence in promise of reform and peaceful intentions from a regime behaving as Beijing is doing.

It has announced "postponement" of new economic and technical cooperation projects, credit insurance and World Bank loans.

The Community is China's largest trading partner after Japan. This will hurt China's capacity to import.

Beijing's leaders claim they are producing the "stability" needed for economic development. "Stability" based on the gun offers no sound investment. If business executives still want to bet, at the least there should be no tax-supported guarantees.

President Bush is right to insist that precise measures need careful consideration.

They should be well aimed to have maximum impact on the regime and the least extra distress for the people.

They should be tied to specific demands so compliance can be monitored and relief granted when appropriate.

Above all, they should not cut communication, as withdrawing diplomats would do, because the point is not to isolate China but to define the basis for pursuing its interests in the world.

But Bush has been too reticent in identifying suitable moves.

No American interest is served in helping Beijing make its crackdown effective.

The Soviet reaction is intriguing. Officially it is cautious, avoiding judgment, not only on events in China but also on Western sanctions.

But Andrei Grachev, deputy head of the Central Committee's International Department, said there's "diversity of opinion" in the Soviet Union. "Government policy is not identical with public opinion."

He was speaking at a news conference here before Mikhail Gorbachev's visit next week.

Evgeny Ambartsumov, member of the delegation and department chief of the Institute for the Economy of the World Socialist System, put the difference bluntly.

"We can't be neutral. We have to show we side with the students because we recognize our own past in what happened there. We don't want it to be our future."

Russians too are looking to see the effects of what pro-Gorbachev officials consider Deng's inexplicable aberration from the needs of reform.

How the trading world deals with China will weigh on their own expectations at moments of critical decision.

The U.S. cannot be the laggard in leaving the illusion that repression pays.

Two youths make a hasty retreat from their Hacienda Heights rooftop Monday as a firestorm roared through the Los Angeles suburb, leveling at least 13 homes, damaging eight others and forcing the evacuation of at least 600 people.

Residents of scorched neighborhood return

HACIENDA HEIGHTS, Calif. (AP) — Residents returned to their canyon neighborhood, thankful that a wind-whipped fire that leveled 13 homes and caused an estimated $4.3 million in damage wasn't more devastating.

Firefighters declared the blaze contained Tuesday afternoon after completing a line around the smoldering hills, said Los Angeles County Fire Department spokesman Joe Silva.

But as firefighters were released from that blaze, about 200 others were dispatched to the San Bernardino National Forest to battle a 150-acre blaze in Santa Ana Canyon, 70 miles east of Los Angeles. Smaller fires flared throughout the region, but were quickly controlled.

Elsewhere, crews battled forest and brush fires in mostly remote areas of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico, where a large fire threatened an endangered type of trout.

In Hacienda Heights, most of the firefighters who had battled the flames since Monday were released, but 100 remained to hold the containment lines on the 1,500-acre blaze.

Residents whose houses were passed over by flames hopscotching through the neighborhood Monday returned to their homes to protect them from looters. Silva said four people were arrested for looting late Monday.

"I cannot believe they would want to take more from people who already have lost almost everything," he said.

Among those returning to the affluent area was George Podunovich, dug a shovel into what remained of his house.

"My birth certificate, my diploma," he said. "All my records — they're gone."

Tammy Wigington lost a redwood deck and hot tub in the fire, though her home was spared.

"We were going to have a barbecue," she said. "But I guess we already had one."

Also returning was Paul Lukather, who was grateful to discover that his two-story Spanish-style house was untouched by flames.

"I walked up here with a neighbor," said Lukather. "We couldn't wait to find out if we had lost our homes."

Flames fanned by erratic winds came within 20 yards of the house and later consumed a small detached recreation room nearby, he said.

Bennett backs drug testing for doctors, lawyers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctors and lawyers may not be scoring crack in the ghettoes, but some of them are using drugs illegally, and drug czar William J. Bennett says they'd better get control of their professions.

"These are people who make a lot of money, who exercise a lot of influence in society," Bennett said in an interview. "They're role models. Doctors and lawyers, they have a special kind of status. One stands for health, one stands for lawfulness. There's no good excuse here."

Bennett said he wants law firms and hospitals to conduct drug testing if management thinks an abuse problem might exist. He said he plans to include such a suggestion in his national drug strategy, due in early September.

About one-third of the physicians who lose their licenses are tossed out of the profession because of illegal use of drugs, according to one official. Both the American Medical Association and the American Bar Association run programs for their drug- and alcohol-impaired colleagues.

Dr. Bryant Galusha of the Fort Worth-based Federation of State Medical Boards estimated that at least 35 percent of the medical disciplinary actions reported are related directly or indirectly to controlled substances. The vast majority of the cases involve a doctor's personal drug abuse, he said.

In 1986, Galusha said, the federation was notified of 2,302 disciplinary actions against physicians nationwide. Of those, 458 resulted in license revocation, 528 in suspension and 335 in probation, he said.

ABA officials said they had no similar records on lawyers in trouble.

Bennett, who held separate meetings recently with ABA President Robert Raven and the AMA's chief executive officer, Dr. James H. Sammons, said such professionals should meet the same standards he's trying to set for athletes: "One strike you're in trouble, and two strikes you're out."

"If you're serious about this thing, you don't just go battering down doors in the inner cities," said Bennett, director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy. "To those who have been given much, much is expected."

The ABA and the AMA are voluntary organizations that do not have the power to discipline their members by lifting credentials, and neither Raven nor Sammons indicated he would advocate Bennett's "two strikes you're out" policy.

Instead, they espoused treatment for drug abusers. Keeping records on those who seek help for such problems might make them hesitant to seek treatment, they added.

While heads of some law firms might be considering drug testing, Raven said he doesn't believe it's necessary, especially in the larger firms.

"You have people watching each other," Raven said. "If a person has a serious problem, either in alcoholism or in drugs, that's going to be reflected in their work, their attendance, their punctuality, everything else."

However, Dr. Dorynne Czechowicz of the National Institute on Drug Abuse said even people who are trained to discover such problems have a difficult time recognizing drug or alcohol abuse by patients.

The key problem for the legal profession is whether an attorney's drug use is causing a client to be neglected or a case mishandled, Raven said.

"In many states now, they have procedures where they can move in and protect the client, and that's very important," he said. At the same time, he said, concern for a client's welfare might hinder immediate action against the attorney.

Galusha said medical boards have been criticized for not revoking more doctors' licenses because of incompetency. But he said the boards, faced with extreme legal hurdles to prove incompetency, often will target the physician's use of controlled substances as an easier way to revoke the license.

"The public must come first, not the physician," he said.

The extent of drug abuse among professionals is unclear. Surveys by the NIDA check whether respondents are employed, but not what jobs they have.

Boeing delayed OSHA inspections

SEATTLE (HNS) — Federal safety inspectors at Boeing's Developmental Center were refused entry to top-secret areas by the Air Force, causing a two-week delay that workers say was used to clean shop before the inspection.

A similar inspection at the Lockheed Aeronautical Systems plant in Burbank, Calif., earlier this year resulted in penalties of $1.49 million for safety violations against Lockheed. The Lockheed fine was the largest OSHA fine in California history and the ninth-largest in the nation.

Boeing's Developmental Center, a site for work on the B-2 stealth bomber, currently is under scrutiny by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration and by state officials for possible health and safety violations.

OSHA officials acknowledge they did not gain complete access to classified areas for at least two weeks after their May 18 request to inspect the plant because the Air Force would not accept the security credentials of the federal inspectors.

During the interim, workers say, they cleaned shop areas after Boeing supervisors told them the housecleaning was to satisfy OSHA.

"The walls were wiped down, new tops were put on the tables — it was nothing like our normal working conditions," said one classified worker, who asked not to be named.

Reagan thrown from horse in 'private rodeo'

SIERRA VISTA, Ariz. (AP) — Former President Reagan was recuperating today from scrapes and bruises after being thrown by a bucking horse during what he called "my own private rodeo."

The 78-year-old Reagan was flown to Fort Huachuca's Raymond W. Bliss Army Community Hospital after the spill at a ranch in the northern Mexico state of Sonora, said his spokesman, Mark Weinberg.

After four hours of treatment, Reagan returned to the ranch, where he has been vacationing since Saturday, officials said.

Although Reagan did not suffer any serious injury, doctors suggested he stay at the hospital overnight, officials said.

Reagan declined, so doctors assigned the hospital's chief nurse, Lt. Col. Paul Farineau, to accompany Reagan back to the ranch that's owned by William Wilson, a friend and former U.S. ambassador to the Vatican.

The former president plans to celebrate his wife's birthday there on Thursday before returning to his Los Angeles home at the end of the week, Weinberg said.

AP

Capt. Juan Lopez, a U.S. Army doctor who examined Reagan, said he planned a follow-up check today in Mexico.

Lopez said he told Reagan to stay away from stressful exercise for the rest of the week.

While at the hospital, Reagan made jokes and did not complain of any pain, Lopez said.

The spill occurred Tuesday morning.

"The horse Reagan was riding bucked wildly several times on a rocky downhill slope and eventually stumbled," Weinberg said.

The spokesman said Reagan is "an excellent rider and he held on quite a while." He said Reagan joked that the accident was "my own private rodeo." In a telephone interview from Los Angeles, the spokesman said that he didn't know if the horse suffered any injuries.

Lt. Gen. Thurmond D. Rodgers, ranking officer at Fort Huachuca, said Reagan told him to " 'make sure people know that I was thrown from the horse. I did not fall.' "

A U.S. Army helicopter flew Reagan to Fort Huachuca from the ranch near Cananea, Mexico, said Maj. Dennis Seely, a base spokesman.

Bakkers' aides' trial to focus on high living

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Allegations of high living in the inner sanctum of the PTL ministry are expected to be the focus of the federal tax-evasion trial of two former aides to evangelist Jim Bakker.

Brothers David and James Taggart go on trial today accused of diverting about $1.1 million in PTL money to pay their personal expenses, including $55,000 for items at the exclusive Cartier jewelry store in New York.

A federal grand jury indicted the brothers in December on charges they failed to pay $494,000 in income taxes from 1983 to 1987. The indictment came out the same day that PTL founder Bakker and his former top aide, Richard Dortch, were indicted on charges of mail and wire fraud.

Bakker and Dortch's trial on charges of diverting more than $4 million of PTL money to their own use and conspiring to defraud PTL contributors is scheduled to open Aug. 28 in Charlotte. However, a hearing was scheduled today to decide whether to move their trial because of extensive publicity.

U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor wanted to conduct the hearing behind closed doors, but several news organizations appealed his decision. On June 27, a three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond ruled the hearing should be open.

Dortch also is trying to get a separate trial. Taylor may rule on that motion today.

The witness list in the Taggart trial looks like a "Who's Who" of TV evangelism. The prosecution may call evangelists Jerry Falwell, John Wesley Fletcher, Rex Humbard and Rex Humbard Jr.

Defense attorney Ben Cotten's witnesses could include Bakker's daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, and former PTL board member, the Rev. Aimee Cortese.

Cotten has said the lifestyles of the Taggarts and their relationship with Bakker would be the focus of the case.

"If I were the government, I would try to stress that these people live high on the hog, and now it's time to pay the piper," he said.

Cotten insisted his clients are innocent.

"There never was an intent to do anything," he said. "There's no question some taxes may be owed. The question is how and why that came about. That's what this case is going to be about."

The defendants were known for their extravagant purchases. The Taggarts bought a $660,000 condo on Fifth Avenue in New York and a $317,000 home in southeast Charlotte. In 1986, they gave each other Jaguars as Christmas presents at a cost of nearly $90,000.

Prosecutors allege that David Taggart, 32, who was Bakker's personal aide, and his 35-year-old brother, James, PTL's former interior decorator, used PTL credit cards to get large cash advances and used blank PTL checks to pay American Express bills.

NATION IN BRIEF

Bush returns to White House, ending vacation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush returned to the White House today to work on pre-summit briefings following five exercise-filled days that his wife said were not exactly restful, "but a lot of fun."

From his vacation home in Kennebunkport, Maine, Tuesday, Bush placed a call to former President Reagan, who was slightly scraped and bruised when thrown from a horse in Mexico earlier in the day.

First lady Barbara Bush told reporters today that the president could not reach Reagan directly by telephone, but sent best wishes to him through security personnel and Reagan messaged him back.

Mrs. Bush also disclosed that the five-day Fourth of July vacation at last produced a successful presidential fishing excursion.

After four days with nary a bite, Bush caught five bluefish on Tuesday, she said, holding her hands about 18 inches apart to indicate their size.

The president, who spent his vacation in an almost non-stop whirl of tennis, golf, running, boating and swimming, hosted 70 people for dinner one night, including extended family and local friends, the first lady said.

Suspended priest not sorry

WASHINGTON (AP) — A suspended Roman Catholic priest says he'll continue leading his unsanctioned African American Catholic Congregation, contending that Washington's archbishop "has failed to deal with racism" within the church.

The Rev. George A. Stallings is forbidden to preach, celebrate Mass or administer any of the Roman Catholic Church's sacraments including baptism, weddings or Holy Communion, church spokeswoman Eileen Marks said Tuesday.

The suspension was imposed by Cardinal James Hickey, archbishop of the Washington diocese.

But Stallings said Tuesday he will continue to hold Sunday services for his new congregation, adding, "The suspension only affects my duties with the Roman Catholic Church."

"The cardinal has failed to deal with racism in the Catholic Church and hasn't responded to issues I have brought to his attention," he said in an interview with WHUR radio.

Egyptian aid questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Not a single family benefited during the first 10 years of a $134 million U.S.-Egyptian program to provide housing for low-income people near Cairo, according to the Agency for International Development.

A new report to Congress by AID Inspector General Herbert L. Beckington complains about U.S. aid operations in Egypt. At $2.3 billion a year, Egypt gets more U.S. aid than any country except Israel.

The project begun in 1978 at Helwan, about 18 miles south of Cairo, was to cost $160 million, shared equally by the two governments. By March 31, 1988, the United States had spent $71 million and Egypt $63 million and not one family had occupied an apartment, the report said.

John Riddle, a spokesman for the agency, said that since Beckington's report was written, 205 families have moved into 158 apartment units. The project had been planned to include 4,000 units.

The United States will stop paying money into the project after Sept. 30, Riddle said.

The AID report said questionable management decisions were responsible for problems in the housing project. There were disputes about who would be eligible to get a house.

Balcony collapse injures 8

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 20-foot-high wooden balcony collapsed during a Fourth of July party, injuring eight people, including a woman who was impaled on a sprinkler pipe, authorities said.

The woman, who was extricated after 30 minutes, and another woman suffered critical injuries and were flown to UCLA Medical Center by helicopter, said Fire Department spokesman Jim Williamson.

Five others suffered minor injuries and were taken to hospitals. One person refused treatment.

Vietnam veterans scuffle with flag-burning protesters

AP Laserphoto

Harry Wright, left, of Concho Valley Vietnam Veterans, has a heated discussion with Bill, right, who wouldn't give his last name, and who wanted to burn the flag. The veterans walked from San Angelo to the Captiol to protest cuts in veterans benefits, while the other group came to protest U.S. foreign policy.

Associated Press

Flag waving and festivals were sprinkled with fireworks and fisticuffs during Texas Fourth of July gatherings that sometimes turned violent.

A flag burning protest on the State Capitol steps became a fist fight, a South Texas concert and fajita cookoff turned into a massive shoving match, and rock-throwing youths forced about 70 Fort Worth police to retreat.

But in other parts of the state, other Texans enjoyed a much more serene holiday, with parades or fireworks spectaculars or family barbecues.

The Austin disturbance came at noon Tuesday when a group of protestors burned an American flag on the Capitol steps. A group of Vietnam War veterans watching the protest confronted the flag-burners and a row began.

"These veterans got mad and exchanged some fisticuffs with the group," said police Lt. B. Gregory, who would not give his first name. "But nobody was arrested." And no one was seriously injured, he added.

In Dallas, a flag burning of another kind was held. Veterans held a flag retirement ceremony in which they burned flags that had become tattered and worn.

The ceremony was planned before a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that permitted flag burning as a form of protest.

But, he added, "in light of the concerns of flag burning in the last few weeks, we wanted to let people know that the flag can be burned in an honorable and respectful way."

Authorities in Mission could not say how many were injured when youths began crowding into each other Monday night at a concert and fajita cookoff on Mayberry Street. The crush resulted in those nearest the stage being pushed into a fence barricade, slightly injuring a number of concert-goers.

At least six people suffered stab wounds and 20 arrests were made at the Houston Freedom Festival where an estimated 500,000 people gathered for the daylong festival.

The arrests included one for possessing a pistol and two for allegedly jumping on a pair of police dive team members in Buffalo Bayou and trying to to drown one of them, police said.

Numerous fights also were reported at the festival, police said.

The Jefferson Starship, Kirk Whalum and the Bugs Bunny Revue were among holiday performers at the festival, which ended with a 35-minute fireworks display.

About 70 Fort Worth police officers had to retreat when hundreds of youths began throwing rocks and bottles at them in the Como neighborhood about 11:30 p.m. Monday.

It was the fourth consecutive year that violence had broken out on the eve of Independence Day in the Fort Worth neighborhood.

Fire officials early Tuesday were bracing themselves for the annual spate of fireworks-related accidents, but what may have been the strangest one of the year occurred Monday night. Six people were injured, three seriously, when fireworks ignited in their car.

Authorities said the six people had purchased fireworks in Ellis County and were taking them back home, when one man lit fireworks in the car while driving through south Dallas.

"They had everything, bottle rockets, flares, star clusters, Roman candles, you name it," said Dallas police Sgt. Walt Elsey. "Apparently, they decided to light one and were going to throw it out of the car, but it fell back into the sack, and that's when all heck broke loose inside that car."

The barest of holiday celebrations was in Aubrey City where a resort of nudists were having their 14th annual beauty show and Independence Day celebration. A resort official said they were celebrating the right not to wear clothes — and avoiding fireworks.

In Grapevine, a traditional Fourth celebration had to be moved to a convention center because recent rain had made things much too muddy at the city's Oak Grove Park. Organizers feared they would have to spend too much time towing away cars following the watermelon-eating contests and ice cream crank-off.

Heavy rain during the last two months also resulted in three other lakes being closed besides Grapevine Lake. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers also closed facilities on Lewisville, Benbrook, Lavon lakes.

In some Dallas city parks such as Samuell-Grand and White Rock Lake, holiday picknickers were munching on snacks amid trees snapped in half by a storm with 90 mph winds that swept through on Sunday.

At least 10,000 still did not have power Wednesday night after the Sunday night storm cut electricity to about 100,000 utility customers.

At Chandler, residents were raising money from holiday activities to renovate a downtown building into a town library.

After an antique car show and a carnival, there were fireworks at Tyler's Rose Stadium.

The city of Henderson sponsored a miniature golf tournament.

Fires damage mobile home, store

From Staff Reports

No injuries were reported in two fires that broke out early today, one in a vacant mobile home and the other in a supermarket, the Midland Fire Department reported.

The mobile home fire broke out about 2:40 a.m. near the intersection of FM 715 and County Road 145 near the Valley View community. Eight firefighters were dispatched to the blaze, which started near a joint bathroom-kitchen area, Fire Inspector Emmett Roch said.

The owner of the home was at work at the time of the fire. Roch said the cause of the fire today still was under investigation.

At about 1:50 a.m., nine firefighters were dispatched to Tommy's Supermarket, 1806 S. Rankin Highway, according to reports. When firefighters arrived, they found the rear part of the store blazing.

The fire started in a firewood bin, and damaged a storage building near the back of the structure, Assistant Fire Marshal Lon Dominguez said.

Over the holiday weekend, Midland city and Greenwood and Northeast Midland County volunteer firefighters responded to nearly 200 fires related to fireworks use. In one period late Tuesday, city firefighters received 136 calls about reported fires, according to reports.

Official: UTD not ready to expand

RICHARDSON (AP) — A University of Texas at Dallas administrator says the Richardson school is not prepared for four-year status and that it will take time to elevate it to a place among the nation's elite higher learning centers.

A bill approved by the Texas Legislature to expand the upper-level university to a four-year program is ready to be signed by Gov. Bill Clements. The change would become official with his signature and later approval by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board.

UTD Administrator Claude Rupert calls what lies ahead "an Everest climb."

"It's a long way up, and there's a lot of treacherous ground to cover," said Rupert, an associate to the vice president for academic affairs.

Just getting the school ready for the addition of freshman and sophomore classes will be difficult, if the measure is approved.

Rupert said the school lacks sufficient laboratories for more lower-level biology and chemistry classes. The library also would have to be enlarged to accommodate 5,000 more undergraduate students, he said.

Brandley's supporters stage protest

CONROE (AP) — Supporters of accused killer Clarence Lee Brandley held a Fourth of July protest to blast justice that they say has yet to be fairly applied to the condemned man and other blacks in America.

About 150 supporters, known as the Coalition to Free Clarence Brandley, marched a few blocks from a park to the courthouse Tuesday afternoon shouting chants of "Free Clarence Brandley" and "No Justice, No Peace." The rally is one of many held since Brandley has been on death row.

Brandley was convicted of capital murder for the rape-slaying of 16-year-old Cheryl Dee Fergeson of Bellville, who was slain while attending a 1980 volleyball tournament at Conroe High School, where Brandley worked as a janitor.

Defense attorneys have argued that Brandley, a black man, was the victim of a racially biased investigation in Montgomery County. Miss Fergeson was white.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin heard arguments in the case in January to decide whether Brandley should be granted a third trial.

The court, however, has not issued a decision.

"The Court of Criminal Appeals went home for vacation on June 30. Clarence Brandley doesn't have a vacation," The Rev. J. Don Boney of Houston said during a Tuesday rally on the steps of the Montgomery County Courthouse.

Boney, of Houston, said it is difficult for blacks to celebrate the Fourth of July holiday because they do not have complete independence.

"How dare anyone ask us to celebrate something we don't have," he said.

Added Brandley's brother, the Rev. Ozell Brandley, "While we celebrate independence we have people like my brother on death row for something he didn't do. Clarence Brandley is a vet and yet the same country he fought for has imprisoned him."

A mannequin dressed in an Army uniform was propped up on the steps of the courthouse and a woman dressed as Uncle Sam pretended to try to set Brandley on fire with a torch.

"The Conroe courthouse is the site of injustice," said Ozell Brandley, who wore a T-shirt saying "Justice Delayed is Justice Denied." He added that 12 blacks were lynched and others hung outside the courthouse many years ago.

The first Montgomery County trial for Brandley ended in a hung jury. He was convicted by an all-white jury in a second trial.

In October 1987, a state district judge who conducted a hearing in the case recommended to the Court of Criminal Appeals that Brandley be granted a third trial and that it be held outside Montgomery County.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texas prison escapee captured in Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Authorities say they are holding a Texas man who escaped from a halfway house and was recaptured late Monday after his car crashed while being chased by police.

Authorities said Johnny Deakins, 31, who had been released from the Texas Corrections Department to a halfway house in Bridgeport, Texas, on June 16, was arrested after the accident and, is being held at the Cleveland County Jail in Norman on complaints of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and attempting to elude police.

Authorities said the car Deakins was driving had been reported stolen in Arlington, Texas.

The chase began after Moore police received a complaint from a clerk at a gas station who said a man appeared to be intoxicated when he bought gas.

Moore police officer Larry Love said the vehicle was later spotted by Moore police, who pursued the car north on Interstate 35 when it didn't stop.

Oklahoma City police joined in the chase before it ended in the crash, Love said.

Love said Deakins refused medical attention.

He said Texas corrections officials said Deakins, who was jailed for unauthorized use of an automobile, was accounted for at the center until about noon Monday, when he secured a two-hour pass to go to a grocery store.

College sale delayed

DALLAS (AP) — A Sri Lankan woman who posted $75,000 in jewels as a deposit to buy Bishop College has been granted a one-month extension to close the $10 million deal.

Raoul Smyth, an attorney for a trustee overseeing federal bankruptcy proceedings involving Bishop College, said Sujatha Nadarajah requested a delay until Aug. 2 because she was traveling in her native country and could not return to meet the Tuesday deadline.

She agreed to increase her earnest money to $100,000 and boost the purchase price by $50,000 in exchange for the delay, Smyth told The Dallas Morning News.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert C. McGuire approved the sale of the school to Ms. Nadarajah, who has said she wants to open a university for international students on the Oak Cliff campus.

McGuire said told The Associated Press that he did not want to comment on the case Tuesday because it is still in the process of being settled.

Bishop College was founded in 1881, but closed last August under the weight of massive debts.

Four people hurt in fire

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Four people were injured in a fire at an apartment complex that a witness blamed on children playing with fireworks, authorities say.

Arson investigators, however, said Tuesday night's fire at Sunrise Apartments was still under investigation.

The fire destroyed two apartments and damaged two others, causing an estimated $75,000 damage to the building alone, according to District Fire Chief Karl Traeger.

Two of the victims were taken to St. Luke's Hospital where a spokesman would not release any information about the victims. Tammie Sutton, 31, was reported in fair condition early today at Medical Center Hospital. No information could be released about the other victim being treated at Medical Center Hospital, a spokesman said.

Duane Adams, 25, said that some children had been shooting fireworks at his apartment building several times before the fire erupted late Tuesday.

Killer's execution date set

BEAUMONT (AP) — Convicted killer Walter Bell has been given an execution date of Aug. 8 by a state criminal district judge.

Larry Gist ordered that Bell be executed Aug. 8.

Bell was sentenced to die in December 1974 for killing of Irene Chisum of Port Arthur, but the conviction was commuted in 1984. He also was convicted of killing Mrs. Chisum's husband, Fred Chisum.

Security guard posted on street near Treaty Oak to direct traffic

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — So many of the curious and sympathetic have come to see the ailing Treaty Oak that authorities posted a security guard on the street near the tree to direct traffic.

Some of the well-wishers continue to leave gifts, either as a symbolic gesture of support or with the fervent belief that they can somehow effect a change.

Among the items left recently are get-well cards, chicken broth, a copy of Joyce Kilmer's "Trees" poem and a pair of steel-tipped, black leather shoes.

Estimated to be about 500 years old, Treaty Oak was poisoned in what police describe as a ritual act. Paul Stedman Cullen, 45, of Elroy has been charged with felony criminal mischief in connection with the poisoning.

Authorities are using a number of methods to try to save the tree, that will include spreading a thin compost mixture of sewage sludge called "Dillo Dirt."

Officials announced over the holiday weekend that all soil tainted by the poisonous herbicide dumped around the tree had been replaced.

Dirt containing the herbicide Velpar was replaced Monday morning with 22 cubic yards of donated planting soil, said city forester John Giedraitis.

"We are out of danger as far as soil contamination goes," said Giedraitis. "What we don't know about is the level of contamination within the tissue of the tree."

Also on Monday, workers dug holes to hold 65-foot-tall poles that will support tall shade screens on three sides of the oak.

Officials want to relieve summer stress on the 65-foot-tall tree as it continues to grow new sets of leaves. When the project is completed Friday, about half the morning and late-afternoon sun will be screened out.

An irrigation system that releases a shower of spring water from high in the tree's branches every half hour was activated during the weekend.

Prosecutor, judge may testify in custody case

HOUSTON (AP) — A prosecutor and judge may testify in a custody case against a woman whose first son died after her live-in boyfriend suffocated the toddler with pepper.

Harris County authorities are asking that permanent custody of Patty Hoy's 6-month-old son be given to a relative of the baby's father.

Ms. Hoy, 23, on parole from her five-year sentence in the death of her first son, has a new boyfriend and a new baby boy, born last December. The infant was removed from Ms. Hoy in March and is living with relatives, said Assistant District Attorney Karen McAshan.

State District Judge Robert Baum has scheduled a trial for today.

Neither Ms. Hoy nor her new boyfriend, who fathered the child, are charged with any criminal offense and the baby was not injured. But Ms. McAshan said the baby is "in the middle of a feud between the mother and boyfriend and in danger because of their actions."

Ms. McAshan said she is not seeking the termination of Ms. Hoy's parental rights but is asking that custody be given to the relative.

Assistant District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal, who prosecuted Ms. Hoy previously, said he wants to testify in the custody case against her. State District Judge Michael McSpadden, who presided over the trial, also may testify against Ms. Hoy.

At the end of her 1987 trial, McSpadden chastised Ms. Hoy for being more concerned about her former boyfriend, Raymond Coffey, than about her 2-year-old son, Christopher Kalmbach. Evidence showed the Ms. Hoy knew Coffey had been abusing Christopher.

Plain yogurt great cooking ingredient for calorie-cutters

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

I love sweetened, fruit-flavored yogurt for breakfast, served over sliced fresh fruit and sprinkled with granola. Yum! Other times, I combine it in my blender with a ripe banana for a quick breakfast "smoothie."

Some people like the tangy flavor of unsweetened yogurt, and prefer to eat it plain. And while I like mine sweet and fruity, I have found that plain yogurt makes a great cooking ingredient.

In many recipes, you can substitute plain yogurt for sour cream or mayonnaise to cut down on calories and cholesterol. Yogurt is much lower in fat, it's a good source of protein, and it provides B vitamins and potassium, too.

A cup of sour cream weighs in at a hefty 450 calories, while the same amount of plain yogurt packs only about 150. (But remember that sweetened, fruit-flavored yogurt will be higher in calories than plain.)

A potato has only about as many calories as an apple of the same size — so potatoes themselves aren't as fattening as you might think. Instead, it's the traditional garnishes — butter and sour cream — that drive the calorie count up. If you're counting calories, spoon plain yogurt over that baked potato instead of sour cream. And serve yogurt, instead of butter, over steamed green vegetables.

Try blending plain yogurt into oil-and-vinegar-based salad dressings, to make a creamy dressing without adding a lot of calories. Or set out a small bowl of plain yogurt, as they do in India, to serve as a cool, mild counterpoint to spicier dishes.

Yogurt is one of the richest natural sources of bone-building calcium — one 8-ounce container of plain yogurt contains more calcium than an 8-ounce glass of milk — and even those who have difficulty digesting milk products can usually tolerate yogurt. So when you eat yogurt you're doing your bones a favor, as well as your figure!

(Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens.)

CASSIE'S YOGURT-MASHED POTATOES

2 medium potatoes, peeled and uniformly diced
¼ cup water
½ cup plain, unflavored yogurt
1 tablespoon butter or margarine (optional)
¼ teaspoon each salt and pepper

Yields 4 to 6 servings.

Combine potatoes and water in 2-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cover and microwave 8 to 12 minutes, stirring every 4 minutes, until potatoes are tender. Let stand, covered, 5 minutes. Add all remaining ingredients and mash well.

SPINACH ISTANBUL

1 large bunch fresh spinach
1 clove garlic, halved
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 green onions
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
½ cup chopped sweet red pepper
½ cup plain, unflavored yogurt
½ teaspoon crumbled dried mint leaves
¼ teaspoon crumbled dried tarragon
Dash each salt and pepper
1 small tomato, cut in wedges
¼ cup broken walnuts or pecans

Remove stems from spinach and rinse leaves thoroughly in several changes of water; do not pat dry. Place in 1½-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cover and microwave 1 to 1½ minutes, or just until spinach begins to wilt. Turn into colander to drain.

Rub wooden salad bowl with garlic; discard garlic. Transfer spinach leaves to salad bowl and set aside.

Measure oil into same casserole spinach was cooked in. Wash and trim green onions; chop white part and add to casserole along with mushrooms and chopped red pepper. Cover and microwave 2 to 4 minutes, or until vegetables are just tender, stirring once. Stir in yogurt, mint, tarragon, salt and pepper.

Pour mixture over spinach leaves, tossing gently. Slice green part of green onions and sprinkle over top. Garnish with tomato wedges and broken nuts.

BEEF STROGANOFF

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 small onion, chopped
1 pound boneless breakfast steak, cut into thin strips
2 cups sliced fresh mushrooms
1 clove garlic, minced
½ cup water
1 beef bouillon cube or 1 teaspoon beef bouillon granules
2 tablespoons flour
1 tablespoon minced fresh parsley
¼ teaspoon dried dill weed
¼ teaspoon pepper
¾ cup plain, unflavored yogurt

Place butter in oblong 13x9x2-inch glass baking dish. Add onion and microwave, uncovered, 2 to 3 minutes, stirring after 1 minute, until onion is tender. Add beef, mushrooms and garlic and microwave 7 to 11 minutes longer, until beef is cooked and mushrooms are tender, stirring every 4 minutes. Set aside.

In 2-cup glass measure combine water and bouillon. Microwave, uncovered, 1 minute, then stir to dissolve bouillon. Sprinkle flour over beef; toss. Add bouillon mixture and seasonings; stir well. Microwave, uncovered, 2 to 4 minutes, to thicken sauce. Blend in yogurt and let stand, uncovered, 3 minutes before serving.

Garnish with fresh parsley sprigs and serve over noodles or hot fluffy rice.

Beef tips for healthy eating given

Associated Press

The flavor and nutritional benefits of beef outweigh any concern you may have about fat and cholesterol. Keep these tips in mind for eating beef wisely:

- Keep portion size reasonable; a 3-ounce serving (4 ounces uncooked) is ample. That's about the size of a deck of cards.
- Choose a lean cut, such as top round steak, and trim away all fat from the edges.
- Cook the meat by a method that adds no fat; broiling actually melts fat and lets it drain away.
- Avoid high-fat gravy and sauces.

We've combined all those hints in this robust recipe.

SHERRY-MARINATED STEAKS

1 pound beef top round steak, cut ¾-inch thick
¼ cup sliced green onion
1 clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon pepper
½ cup dry sherry
1 2½-ounce jar sliced mushrooms, drained
1 tablespoon snipped parsley
2 teaspoons cornstarch
¼ teaspoon instant beef bouillon granules

Trim separable fat from meat. Cut meat into 4 pieces and place in a plastic bag. Set bag in deep bowl. Add onion, garlic, pepper and sherry to bag. Close bag tightly and turn to coat meat. Marinate in refrigerator for 8 to 24 hours, turning bag once or twice.

Drain steaks well, reserving marinade. Place on an unheated rack in a broiler pan. Broil 3 inches from the heat for 5 minutes. Using tongs, turn steaks; broil 5 to 6 minutes more or until desired doneness.

Meanwhile, for sauce, add enough water to reserved marinade to measure 1 cup. In a small saucepan combine marinade, mushrooms, parsley, cornstarch and bouillon granules. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly; cook and stir 2 minutes more. Place steaks on hot platter. Spoon sauce over steaks. Makes 4 servings.

Pocket meal takes advantage of summer produce

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

This meal-in-a-sandwich takes advantage of summer produce: the dewiest cucumbers, the crispiest peppers and the juiciest tomatoes.

Fresh herbs are more plentiful now, too, and add a fillip of flavor.

The meal takes just minutes to prepare and barely heats up the kitchen.

But perhaps the nicest surprise is that it is low in calories.

Using ground turkey instead of beef cuts down on both calories and fat.

In keeping with the healthful theme, try some lemon sorbet for dessert. It is a refreshing conclusion to a meal on a hot summer evening.

POCKET SANDWICHES
1½ pounds ground turkey
1 large onion, chopped
1 large clove garlic, minced, or 1 teaspoon minced garlic in oil
2 large red or yellow peppers or one of each, chopped
1 tablespoon fresh oregano leaves or 1 teaspoon crushed, dried oregano
1 tablespoon fresh thyme leaves or 1 teaspoon crushed, dried thyme
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
4 tablespoons red-wine vinegar
4 large whole-wheat pitas
2 large ripe tomatoes, sliced
8 scallions, sliced thin

Heat nonstick skillet and saut'e turkey, breaking it up as you stir, until meat begins to brown.

Add onion, garlic, peppers, oregano, thyme and pepper. Cook over medium heat until onion softens.

Add vinegar and cook quickly to reduce liquid. Adjust seasonings.

Toast the pitas and cut in half.

Either serve the meat topped with cucumbers and yogurt salad (see recipe).

Also try tomatoes and scallions on the side, or spoon some of the meat mixture into a pita half, add a tomato slice and scallions and serve the cucumber salad on the side.

Yield: 4 servings.

CUCUMBERS WITH YOGURT
1 cup low-fat or nonfat plain yogurt
½ teaspoon ground cumin
4 small Kirby cucumbers, sliced thin

Mix yogurt with cumin and stir in cucumbers. Serve with pocket sandwiches.

Yield: 4 servings.

Summer drinks, fruity, colorful

NEW YORK (AP) — From the Baja Bullet to The Hollywood, summer drinks are taking on unusual colors, shapes and flavors.

"People are always looking for new, trendy drinks, especially in the summer," says Stephen Boyd, bartender at Bay Street in the Hamptons, a summer hot spot for New Yorkers. "There's a constant demand for bartender creativity."

This summer, bartenders are mixing fruit juices, liqueurs and liquors — with winning results.

The Baja Beach Club in Chicago is doing a booming business with the fizzy Baja Bullet. In Coconut Grove, Fla., the Who's Special? is flavored with melon, blackberry, banana, cranberry and pineapple. From Cricket's in Boston: a vodka, raspberry and pineapple-flavored concoction called The Hollywood.

According to industry figures, vodka accounts for more than a 20 percent share of the distilled spirit market, and is particularly popular during the summer months.

"Vodka is the fastest-growing spirit in the industry," says Edward Minning, president of Monsieur Henri Wines, importer of Stolichnaya.

Since vodka has no taste, bartenders can mix it with virtually anything — even fruit-flavored gelatins. The Blue Star in New York City serves Jello Shots, made with strawberry, orange and lime-flavored gelatins and vodka, and served in miniature paper cups.

Says Johnny Burke, bartender at Fulton Street Cafe at New York City's South Street Seaport, "Martinis are making a big comeback this summer."

Mike McSweeney of Fynn's in Boston agrees. "The trend in drinking this summer is toward the more traditional drinks. The way to go is the dry Stoli Martini. We like to call it the Sahara."

He adds, "When we're making the Stoli martini, about the closest we let the vermouth get to our Stoli is 10 feet away — on the bar shelf. This is a martini for the purist."

Fruit toppings offer pizza fans their 'just desserts'

By NATALIE HAUGHTON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — For sensational, show-stopping summer desserts, consider dessert pizzas or calzones.

Designed to take advantage of the glorious crop of summer fruits, they're not only fun to create but wonderful to serve and eat. (Listen to the oohs and ahs when you present one of them). They're chic conversation pieces to end a summer meal in style.

There's no limit to the combinations you can create. Mix and match the crusts, toppings and fresh fruits to suit your taste.

Start with the crust — use a buttery homemade cookie dough, a brownie base, frozen puff-pastry sheets, a cream-cheese dough, store-bought cookie dough (which comes in a roll in the refrigerated deli section of the supermarket) or whatever else strikes your fancy.

While regular pizza dough is also a possibility, in keeping with dessert in the truest sense and for best results, we opted for a more refined base.

Pie crust seems like a natural for a dessert pizza crust, but when we experimented with it, we found it less than desirable.

Whatever you use, be sure to bake the crust and cool it prior to adding any one of our topping choices.

Toppings include a cream-cheese mixture, a chocolate truffle combination, a white chocolate and cream cheese mixture, and a lemon curd mixture.

All go together in a jiffy and will keep the kitchen cool because no cooking is required.

After spreading the topping of choice on the cool crust and arranging the desired fruits in an attractive, decorative pattern over all, be sure to refrigerate the pizza for three to four hours to allow it to set up.

If desired, glaze the fruit by brushing with a little heated apricot or raspberry jam.

While any of the crusts can be prepared a day in advance of serving, our kitchen tests concluded that the pizzas are best served on the same day prepared, when the fruits look their best.

The idea for a dessert calzone came from a daily special spotted recently on the menu at Market City Cafe in Pasadena, Calif.

According to kitchen manager Richard Brown, the idea was developed at the suggestion of the restaurant's owner.

Although Market City Cafe uses pizza dough, we adapted the recipe and used frozen puff-pastry dough, with excellent results.

The filling is a wonderful combination of ricotta cheese, powdered sugar, vanilla, whipping cream, chocolate chips and sliced strawberries.

Once baked, the restaurant serves its version sprinkled with powdered sugar and topped with strawberry sauce.

With the dessert calzone gaining popularity, it has been added to the regular dessert menu, Brown said. The restaurant version, which serves two, is $6.

Another great dessert calzone, a takeoff on the fruit-and-cheese dessert theme, is our simple and fabulous-tasting rendition that is quickly whipped together.

It features a frozen puff-pastry sheet, thawed and trimmed to a 9-inch circle; cut-up Brie cheese; and sliced fresh fruit (peaches and strawberries were wonderful).

Each of these dessert creations will serve four. If you're entertaining, it's possible to prepare and refrigerate them an hour or two before baking.

Simply pop them into the oven when you sit down to dinner, and they'll be ready to serve warm for dessert.

CHOCOLATE-CREAM CHEESE TOPPED PIZZA

½ cup semisweet chocolate pieces, melted
1 package (8 ounces) cream cheese, softened
¼ cup brown sugar, packed
½ teaspoon vanilla
Grated peel of 1 orange (optional)
¼ cup whipping cream
Baked dessert pizza crust of choice: Buttery Cookie Pizza Crust, Brownie Pizza Crust OR Puff Pastry Pizza Crust (recipes follow)
Assorted fresh fruit as desired

Beat melted chocolate into cream cheese until well mixed. Beat in brown sugar, vanilla, orange peel and whipping cream until light and fluffy. Refrigerate until mixture is partially thickened. Spread evenly over cool dessert crust of choice. Top attractively with sliced OR cut-up fresh fruit. Refrigerate until chocolate is set. To serve, cut into wedges. Makes 10 or more servings.

BUTTERY COOKIE PIZZA CRUST

1 cup flour
2 tablespoons sugar
½ cup (1 stick) butter, cold and cut into 16 pieces
1 egg

In food processor fitted with metal blade, combine flour, sugar and butter. Pulse with on/off motion for 10 seconds total, until mixture resembles fine crumbs. Add egg and process until mixture forms ball.

On lightly floured surface, roll dough to 13- to 14-inch diameter circle. Fold dough in half and ease into 12-inch ungreased pizza pan. Unfold. Fold edges under to form border, trimming as necessary. Prick bottom and sides of crust (about ½-inch apart) with fork.

Line pastry shell with foil and fill with dried beans or pie weights. Bake in preheated 400-degree oven 15 minutes; remove from oven and remove foil and beans. Return crust to oven and bake 3 to 4 minutes longer or until light golden. Cool. Then cover with topping and fruits of your choice. Makes 1 (12-inch) crust.

BROWNIE PIZZA CRUST

2 squares (1 ounce EACH) unsweetened chocolate
½ cup (1 stick) butter
2 eggs
1 cup sugar
1½ teaspoons vanilla
½ cup flour

In a saucepan, combine chocolate and butter. Heat over low heat until melted and smooth, stirring occasionally. Remove from heat. Beat in eggs, sugar and vanilla until thoroughly blended. Stir in flour, blending well. Spread evenly in buttered 12-inch round pizza pan.

Bake in preheated 350-degree oven 10 to 12 minutes. Brownie crust should be moist. Do not overbake. Cool. Cover with topping and fruits of your choice. Makes 1 (12-inch) crust.

PUFF PASTRY PIZZA CRUST

1 sheet frozen puff pastry (½ of a 17 1/4-ounce package), thawed
Egg wash (1 egg, beaten) (optional)

Unfold pastry sheet and roll out on a lightly floured surface to fit into a 12-inch round pizza pan. Transfer pastry round to ungreased pan and press pastry up sides of pan. Prick with fork. Brush evenly with egg wash.

Bake in preheated 400-degree oven 12 to 15 minutes, until golden. Cool. Cover with topping and fruits of your choice. Makes 1 (11- to 12-inch) crust.

NOTE: Crust will shrink from edges slightly.

RICOTTA-CHOCOLATE FRUIT CALZONE

1 cup ricotta cheese
½ cup powdered sugar
¾ teaspoon vanilla
2 to 3 tablespoons whipping cream
¾ cup miniature semisweet chocolate pieces
2 packages (17¼ ounces EACH) frozen puff pastry (4 sheets), thawed
16 fresh strawberries, washed, hulled and sliced
Egg wash (1 egg, beaten)

Beat together ricotta cheese, powdered sugar, vanilla and whipping cream until light and almost smooth. Stir in chocolate pieces.

Unfold puff pastry sheets on lightly floured pastry cloth and trim corners of each to make a 9- to 9½-inch round. Place two rounds on each of two baking sheets. Spoon ¼ of ricotta filling mixture on one half of each pastry round to within 1-inch of edges. Top each with 4 strawberries, sliced.

With pastry brush or fingers spread egg wash around edges of pastry. Fold over pastry to make half moon shape, pinching edges to seal. Brush top of calzones with egg wash.

Bake in preheated 400-degree oven 15 to 16 minutes or until golden. Sprinkle tops with additional powdered sugar, if desired. Makes 4 calzones, enough for 12 to 16 servings.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter thinks deception safer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a bone to pick with you. A young woman who had been previously divorced wrote to say that she was anticipating a second marriage. She said her fiance knew about her divorce, but he asked her not to disclose this fact to his parents. Because of this, you told her you thought her fiance was "adolescent."

Abby, before judging the young man, you should have considered that there may have been other facts of which you were not aware.

When I first started dating, my father forbade me to date anybody in whose family there had been a divorce. As you can guess, that eliminated a lot of boys.

When I went away to college, I fell in love with Steve. He told me that his favorite aunt had been married briefly when she was 17, and then divorced before marrying a very fine man. When it came time for Steve to meet my parents, I asked him not to tell my dad that his favorite aunt had been divorced, so of course he never did.

Steve and I have been happily married for 15 years. My father died last year, and at his funeral I confessed to my mother that Steve's favorite aunt had been divorced, but I never told Dad. Mom said she thought I had acted wisely because if Dad had known, it would have completely changed his opinion of Steve. Then Mom confided that during all the years she and Dad were married, she had kept from Dad the fact that her own brother had been married and divorced!

I'm glad my husband didn't judge me as an "adolescent" for trying to spare Steve and me the anguish my father would have caused us had he known the truth about Steve's favorite aunt. — HAPPILY MARRIED

DEAR HAPPILY MARRIED: If, as your mother stated, your father's opinion of Steve would have been "completely changed" had he known that Steve's favorite aunt had been divorced, it doesn't say much for your father. (Since when is a person responsible for the deeds of his relatives?)

It's also interesting that your mother, during all the years of her marriage, kept from your father the fact that her brother had been divorced. (Why, pray tell, should one's divorce be regarded as a dark and dirty secret?)

There is nothing wrong with revealing the truth. Hiding it is deceitful, and therefore shameful.

DEAR ABBY: My fiance and I are getting married this fall, and we are having a problem with the guest list.

My fiance plans on inviting his boss and his boss's wife. I plan on inviting a very good friend of my family's who is also married. We just learned that my fiance's boss is married to our friend's ex-wife, and these two women do not get along with each other at all!

How do we keep from hurting any feelings and keep everybody happy? — AN ALBANY COINCIDENCE

DEAR COINCIDENCE: Invite whomever you want, and if two of the guests do not like each other, it will be their problem — not yours. Of course, if you are having a sit-down wedding dinner, seat these two women as far from each other as possible.

DEAR ABBY: I desperately need your help with this problem. A family member was recently hospitalized. She had a heart attack and two strokes the same day, and was placed in the intensive care unit with a "No Visitors" sign prominently displayed on her door.

Abby, that sign might as well not have been there. Friends and relatives opened the door to her room, tiptoed over to her bed, pulled up a chair, and sat by her bedside wanting to hold her hand and spend a few minutes with her. Don't they realize how much energy it takes for a critically ill person to acknowledge them and thank them for coming?

Please print this. We are exhausted keeping visitors away and the nurses are too busy to act as watchdogs. Thank you. — WORN OUT

DEAR WORN OUT: Your problem is one that family members and hospital personnel struggle with constantly. But just on the off chance that someone will read this and take it to heart, here's your letter.

Now, here's a message from a registered nurse in Adams, Mass.:

DEAR ABBY: Please do us nurses a big favor and print the following words of advice for folks who visit patients in hospitals:

1. Beds are for patients — not for visitors to sit or lie on. (I have had to change entire beds because visitors sprawled out on an empty bed and got it dirty and messed up.) Ask for a chair. The nurse will be happy to find one for you.

2. Please observe visiting hours. Do not come early and stay late. Our patients need their rest.

3. Please respect the hospital's smoking regulations. Smoke only where smoking is permissible.

4. Please respect patients' prescribed routine and diet. Sneaking in food, alcohol, cigarettes, etc. could sabotage their recovery. Never give a patient anything to eat or drink without clearing it with the nurse.

5. Please do not ask the nurse to take your blood pressure. Nurses are paid to take care of the patients. — MASSACHUSETTS NURSE

Chris Evert...a scare against Laura Golarsa.

Evert faces Graf in semis

By ROBIN FINN
N.Y. Times News Service

WIMBLEDON, England — Chris Evert has been waiting to make her final curtsy on a peerless career. Her husband, Andy Mill, has looked her in the eye and told her the right time is now.

But Evert has wanted to control the setting of her exit, and not until she arrived at Wimbledon for the 18th time had she thought she was ready to begin viewing her tournaments as if she might never see them again.

TUESDAY, toiling on Court 1 against Laura Golarsa, an unknown 22-year-old from Italy, the 34-year-old Evert claimed the first set, disintegrated in the second and then scared herself into a 6-3, 2-6, 7-5 victory.

Her comeback was spectacular.

Trailing by 3-5 and 2 points from elimination in the third set, she began to terrorize Golarsa, who had terrorized her with a barrage of angled volleys, with her series of bold passing shots.

Evert's sudden about-face, she said, was created not to make the present a more pleasant place but for posterity.

"In the third set I thought, this isn't the way I would like to go out of the tournament if it would be my last tournament, which it probably would be," said Evert.

EVERT'S comeback sent her into the semifinals Thursday against Steffi Graf, who has defeated Evert the last seven times they have met.

Graf improved her record in Grand Slam quarterfinals to 12-1 with a 7-5, 6-1 victory over Arantxa Sanchez Vicario of Spain, the 17-year-old who stunned Graf last month in a three-set finale at the French Open.

Earlier, Martina Navratilova easily dismissed Gretchen Magers, 6-1, 6-2, to move into the other semifinal.

• She will meet Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden, who defeated Ros Fairbank of South Africa, 7-5, 7-5.

Golarsa was 2 points from the biggest victory of her life, and from an unsentimental upset of a favored player, when Evert sprinted across the back of the court and whipped away one of her classic two-handed backhand passing shots as she was about to tumble into the sidelines.

Golarsa was astonished; Evert was renewed.

At courtside, Navratilova shrieked for her old friend and rival.

"That running backhand down the line, it was such an accurate shot and I was just about out of the court," said Evert. "That was the biggest point in the whole match. That was the moment that I was inspired. That was the shot that put me back in contention."

EVERT broke Golarsa to edge closer at 4-5 and then held her serve for 5-5 when Golarsa, after earning deuce with the same persistent attack of Evert's shots that had turned the match in her favor, overhit an approach shot and then sailed a lob long as well.

"With Evert, even if you have match point, if she is at her last Wimbledon she'll try anything," said Golarsa.

Finally, after watching Golarsa chase down and ambush nearly every shot she tried to hit from her, Evert began to hit the ball right at her opponent on one point and than whisk a passing shot by her on the next.

Browning flirts with perfecto

PHILADELPHIA — Tom Browning,7-6, came within three outs of becoming the first major leaguer to pitch two perfect games before Dickie Thon doubled leading off the ninth inning as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Philadelphia Phillies 2-1 Tuesday night.

Thon hit a drive to right-center field that went to the wall for a two-base hit. One out later, Steve Jeltz got a pinch single to score Thon and chase Browning. John Franco got the last two outs for his 22nd save.

Browning pitched a perfect game last Sept. 16 at Riverfront Stadium against Los Angeles.

The Reds scored two runs in the first off Terry Mulholland, 1-3, on RBIs by Kal Daniels and Paul O'Neill.

Astros 10, Mets 3

HOUSTON — Mike Scot, 14-4, became the major league's first 14 game-winner this season and Houston scored eight runs in the first inning off Bob Ojeda as the Astros beat New York.

Scott won for the eighth time in his last nine decisions and it's the earliest in his career that he has won 14 games. Juan Agosto got the final three outs, striking out the side.

Terry Puhl led the Astros' attack with a single, double, triple in three at-bats and three RBIs.

Cubs 5, Padres 1

CHICAGO — Andre Dawson had three hits, drove in one run and scored another, leading Mike Bielecki, 7-4, and Chicago past San Diego.

Bielecki left because of a bruised hip sustained when he was hit by Tony Gwynn's line drive in the third inning.

The victory ended a streak of six straight home losses for the Cubs.

Pirates 5, Giants 3

PITTSBURGH — Jose Lind and R.J. Reynolds drove in two runs each in Pittsburgh's four-run fifth inning as the Pirates beat San Francisco for their sixth victory in eight games.

The loss sliced the Giants' lead over second-place Houston to 1½ games in the NL West.

Randy Kramer, 3-4, allowed two runs in five innings to win his second consecutive start and beat former Pirate Don Robinson, who lost his second in a row after winning four straight.

Cardinals 2, Dodgers 1

ST. LOUIS — Joe Magrane, 8-6, pitched a five-hitter for his third straight victory, leading St. Louis past Los Angeles.

The Cardinals scored two runs in the first inning off Fernando Valenzuela, 4-7. Jose Oquendo followed Vince Coleman's double and 44th consecutive successful stolen base with a sacrifice fly. Ozzie Smith then doubled and scored on Pedro Guerrero's single. The Cards are 21-11 in games Guerrero has an RBI this season.

Stanton's Stallings takes first

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

In a scene that evoked memories of old Western movies where the young upstart shoots down the seasoned gunfighter, Jeremy Stallings of Stanton outkicked Ken Woody of Midland to win the men's elite division of the Midland Mile Tuesday in downtown Midland.

Stallings, who hasn't yet set foot in a high school classroom, sprinted hard the last 100 yards to finish in 5:03, while Woody, a 32-year-old veteran of the local road running scene who wouldn't be out of place on the set of thirtysomething, clocked a 5:06 on the out-and-back course.

Other winners Tuesday included Dave Wright, men's open; Tania Castillejos, women's open; Eric Timmons, children's race; Norm Frable, walkers; and Jeni Winegarner, women's elite.

Stallings, a freshman-to-be at Stanton High School, has a personal best mile of 4:43, but a week at basketball camp may have taken its toll, he said.

"I didn't run all week."

Despite the lack of track time, Stallings stayed with Woody for the length of the course before putting on a ferocious finishing kick one block from the finish.

"I knew it would come down to a kick," he said.

The next local running event is the Women's Distance Festival July 15, featuring five-kilometer and mile runs for women only; a men's 5K and a children's race.

All hell breaks loose as Midland Angel and Wichita Wrangler players celebrate July Fourth with a mid-game free-for-all Tuesday night. Later, there also post-game fireworks.

ANGELS HAVE IT ALL

Ejections, riot, fireworks on 4th

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Despite ejections, fights and big innings, one thing remained constant in the Wichita Wranglers' 9-1 win over the Midland Angels in the finale of a six-game series Tuesday night — Rich Holsman.

The Wrangler rookie left-hander had a couple of long breaks, but managed to maintain his composure well enough to twirl a complete game six-hitter. Holsman said the secret was to stay aloof from the conflicts that culminated in the ejection of public address announcer Barry Sykes (related story, 3C) and Midland manager Max Oliveras in the second inning and the removal of six players in the eighth inning after a bench-clearing brawl triggered by a tag play at first base.

"I just tried to pitch every inning the same," he said. "I've pitched against these guys five times now, but I put it all together tonight."

HOLSMAN simply shrugged off the battles. "That's normal for baseball."

The Wranglers snapped Midland's six-game winning streak with Tuesday's win.

Holsman's mastery was so complete that no Angel baserunners reached third base after the first inning, and the hosts were unable to hit safely more than once in any one inning.

Meanwhile, Holsman's Wrangler teammates gave him all the runs he would need with a two-run homer by Warren Newson and a solo shot by Kevin Garner in the top of the first.

The Angels got their only run in the bottom of the first on a double by Chris Graves and consecutive groundouts by Scott Cerny and Mark Howie. But the Wranglers added two runs in the fourth, one in the fifth, two in the seventh and one in the eighth to out it away.

DAVE HOLLINS drove in the Wranglers' last run with a bouncer down the first-base line that Midland reliever Luis Merejo handled unassisted. It's how Merejo handled it that Hollins took offense to.

After the Angel reliever tagged Hollins in the face, the latter charged Merejo. Both players were ultmately ejected along with Angels Vinicio Cedeno and Steve DeAngelis and Wranglers Jim Lewis and Doug Brocail.

Torres lowers boom on Tyson

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Tyson says Jose Torres is "worse than a murderer," for writing a biography of Tyson that the heavyweight champion enjoyed brutalizing women.

Tyson is quoted as saying in the book that his best punch was one with which he hit his former wife, Robin Givens.

In a taped interview to be aired Wednesday on the syndicated television show "A Current Affair," Tyson says he has turned his life around and would like to re-marry and have children. He denounces Torres, the former light-heavyweight champion and once his close associate as "a traitor."

In the book, "Fire and Fear," Torres quotes Tyson as saying of Givens:

"She really offended me and I went 'bam.' She flew backwards, hitting every wall in the apartment. That was the best punch I've ever thrown in my entire life."

"Perhaps there are some people who want to believe it but it's absurd," he said in the interview. "I mean, can anybody be all this? Nobody ever saw me out on the street battering a woman or cursing a woman or doing anything like that.

"As for Torres, it's like the jealous woman syndrome. You get a lot of fur coats and jewelry and you get spoiled and then it's bye-bye. I think it was Shakespeare who said 'I love the act of treason but I hate a traitor' and that's my comment on Jose Torres — a traitor who is worse than a murderer, worse than a rapist....

"It's mind boggling. You look at this guy and he's your friend and he's hugging you and he tells you how much he loves you and he'll die for you, and 'my family is your family, but I have to make some money so I'm going to cut your throat out and leave you to bleed to death."

1952 — Maureen Connolly wins her first of three straight women's singles title at Wimbledon by defeating Louise Brough 6-4, 6-3.

1968 — The Philadelphia 76ers trade Wilt Chamberlain, basketball's greatest offensive player, to the Los Angeles Lakers for three players — Darrell Imhoff, Archie Clark and Jerry Chambers — and an undisclosed amount of cash after they were unable to sign him to a contract. The 7-foot-1 center, playing nine years in the league, was the only player to score more then 25,000 points up to that point.

Nasty as an Angel, Merejo is refreshing change of pace

Battles

One of the nasty things about Midland Angels' relief pitcher Luis Merejo is his wicked sidearm delivery. It comes at the batter out of the third baseman's shirt. And when the shirt is a home white, .300 hitters turn a sick green.

One of the most refreshing things about Merejo is that he didn't bat an eye when he saw the University of New Jersey t-shirt. Some people have been so cruel as to accuse the wearer of perpetrating uncertainty.

"Hey, Battles, is that where Rosie Ruiz went to college?"

BUT LUIS looked and almost nodded approval and it was gratifying. He didn't ask a stupid question such as "Where is it? I live in Ridgewood, N.J., and I never heard of it."

I'm sure, Merejo would have said, "Good school, I might have gone there after Morris County Community College, if I hadn't signed with California."

But before he could say anything, he was asked how come, when he threw across the Hudson River to New York City, he came by way of Cape May?

"I used to throw overhand like everybody else, but then my coach in junior college noticed I dropped my arm once in a while and came sidearm with good results. He suggested I throw that way all the time. I don't throw quite as fast." No, but the results are what may get him to some major league bullpen a few years hence.

LOOKING back at the t-shirt, Merejo noted, "The private schools can go anywhere they want and so they are recruiting all the athletes. That's making it tough on New Jersey's public schools."

That explains basketball powerhouses like Princeton and Seton Hall, which rank just below Jersey City St. Anthony's, the nation's No. 1 high school team last year.

Asked about the rumor that St. Anthony's beat Seton Hall in a preseason scrimmage, Merejo couldn't confirm it.

ANOTHER pleasant surprise came when Tommy Tom Thompson, the coach of the UNJ Rovin' Rakes football team dropped by the office on the way back from a whirlwind New Mexico recruiting trip to Kingston, White Oaks, Magdallena, and Hillsboro

He just wanted to express appreciation for assistance in spreading the fame of UNJ by such avid boosters as Ed Todd.

He also wanted to extend an invitation to the author, Todd and MRT publisher Charlie Spence, always looking for a new adventuresome challenge, to accompany him and some of his freshman football prospects on a mountain-climbing expedition to western Delaware later this month.

"We like to find out what these kids are made of and this is one way to do it," said the one-time great Rake .

"We go in by camel the first half day and then begin the actual ascent using llamas and wetback Serpas, who come over for the summer climbing season, to pack the equipment and supplies for the exhausting climb to the base camp before the dash to the top.

It's a tough climb, but once you reach the pinnacle, it's worth it. You can look down and the view into the Delaware Water Gap is something you wouldn't believe even if you saw it."

Tommy Tom left his card in case any WT footballers would like to make inquiries: His office is in the Agra Coliseum, University Gardens, Compost, N.J., 100007.

There's nothing like real people to restore one's faith.

FIGHT

Merejo admitted tagging Hollins where it may have not felt good, but insisted that the play called for such a tag.

"I went to tag him and he brought his left arm up," the recently-activated reliever said. "If I would have went for the back, he would have beat me to the bag."

HOLLINS wasn't buying Merejo's explanation.

"It was intentional, blatant, flagrant, pre-planned — say whatever you want," Hollins said.

Nobody on either team thought the incident was a byproduct of a hard-fought series played in blistering heat.

"We usually get along really well with them," Hollins said. "You could tell a lot of guys didn't want to go onto the field."

Midland pitching coach Gary Ruby, who managed the last eight innings for the Angels, agreed.

"I don't think it had anything to do with the series," Ruby said. "Nobody's thrown at anybody.

"Really, this whole thing was the result of two guys with short fuses."

HALO HOOPS: The Angels hogged Texas League Player and Pitcher of the Week honors recently. Shortstop Gary DiSarcina earned player honors by hitting .542 with five RBI. DiSarcina entered Wednesday's game ranked sixth in TL batting with a .316 average.

Right-handed pitcher David Martinez earned top pitching honors by winning both his starts with a 2.57 earned run average.

The Angels are off today, but Martinez takes the mound Thursday in the opener of a five-game series in Jackson

Nuggets to face top Europeans

ROME (AP) — The Denver Nuggets of the NBA will face three of the best European basketball teams in the third edition of the McDonald's open tournament scheduled in Rome Oct. 20-22.

The Nuggets will be compete against Italian champion Philips Milan, European champion Yugoplastica Split of Yugoslavia and Spain's Barcelona.

Steve Mills, director of NBA's special events, said Tuesday the tournament will combine European and U.S. rules.

There will be four periods of 12 minutes, according to the U.S. style. Zone defense, practiced in Europe, will be allowed.

Leon Wandel, a top ranking official of the European Basketball Federation, said the cooperation between NBA and European teams in the organization of the McDonald's open is aimed at "promoting basketball of the 21st century and at unifying the rules."

THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Venture into the unknown and you will do very nicely. You could solve a mystery that has haunted you since childhood. A close relationship could become a battleground unless you agree on some ground rules. The possibilities for romance and fulfillment are tremendous if you approach things with an open mind. Let go of outdated ideas, unrealistic expectations.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: "Hunter" star Fred Dryer, model-actress Shelley Hack, American naval legend John Paul Jones, former first lady Nancy Reagan, actresses Allyce Beasley and Janet Leigh, actor Ned Beatty, football Hall of Famer Otto Graham, TV mogul Merv Griffin, singer Della Reese, actor Sylvester Stallone, artist James Wyeth.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Brace yourself for a stiff test in the marketplace or classroom. Persistence will pay off handsomely. Make the most of a social opportunity that could mean new financial gains. Showcase your special talents.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may feel like bucking the odds. Put your best foot forward. Fight through obstacles rather than turning back. A romantic encounter will prove memorable. Avoid confiding too much too soon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ability to concentrate improves once you settle a domestic matter. Haul out the welcome wagon for new neighbors. Your gracious hospitality could win you a friend for life. Listen attentively.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Spontaneous gestures will work best in fanning the flames of romance. Focus on possible social conquests and material gains when making a business choice today. Influential people open new doors.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Staying power is the key to landing a better job or leadership post. You are going to end up in hot water if you act self-centered. Reach out to a group that feels neglected.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You could be moving into a place where the action is right now. Think about the possible consequences of a romance with an associate or the boss. Protect your reputation from gossips.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you don't mind some uncertainty, go ahead and tackle an intriguing problem. The results will be better if you don't take yourself too seriously. Seek constructive suggestions from co-workers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Try not to take on a stranger's headaches. You already have enough on your plate. Someone will find you extremely attractive this evening. Pursue romance if so inclined. Lasting alliances are favored.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are on the ball today. Others will have difficulty getting anything past you. An excellent time to start a diet or other health program. Self-restraint seems easier now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Try not to take on responsibilities that others can handle better. Call a friend living at a distance if you have an exciting idea to share. A trip turns into a real adventure.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Spending more quality time with children will improve family life. Be prepared to accept some impulse-buying by a loved one. Unmet needs can lead to defiant behavior. Be a good listener.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): This is no time to take unnecessary financial risks. Practical tasks go smoothly if you use your ingenuity. Romance becomes more exciting than in the recent past. Choose your confidants with care.

The inexperienced player goes for every finesse in sight. The hallmark of the expert is that he tries to avoid relying on a finesse, if possible.

When he learned his partner had an unbalanced hand with three-card heart support—and shortness in spades, South wisely elected to play in four hearts rather than three no trump. The former rated to have a far greater chance of success.

West led the top of his spade sequence, and declarer ruffed. The ace and king of diamonds were cashed, followed by a diamond, carefully ruffed with the seven. West overruffed with the king and unwisely continued spades, again ruffed in dummy. A fourth diamond was ruffed with the nine, establishing the 13th diamond on the table. A trump to the queen and ace left declarer in control. Declarer won the spade return with his ace, cashed the jack of trumps and, leaving the master trump out, he crossed to the ace of clubs to discard a club on the fifth diamond. The defenders could take their high trump whenever they wished, but that would be the third and last trick for the defense. Declarer lost only three trump tricks.

Note the care declarer exercised in reeling in his contract. He ruffed spades while retaining the ace in his hand to control the suit. And he prudently ruffed the first diamond with the seven, and not with the two, to protect against a 4–2 break.

Cher breaks up with Camilletti

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Actress-singer Cher said her latest hit song, "We All Sleep Alone," has more meaning now that she and Rob Camilletti have split.

Now Cher, once married to Sonny Bono, has turned to another music man.

Cher flew to Columbus on Sunday and had dinner with Bon Jovi guitarist Richie Sambora, who was in town for a concert at nearby Buckeye Lake Music Center. She skipped the show and opted for a private dinner afterward with Sambora at a restaurant on the city's north side.

Cher walked unnoticed through the airport and Sambora whisked her away in a stretch limousine to the restaurant, which was opened Sunday especially for the couple.

HOUSTON (AP) — The producer of the film "The Thin Blue Line" is "hurt and upset" that the man whose murder conviction was thrown out after it was questioned in the movie is suing him for rights to his life story.

Randall Dale Adams' lawsuit, filed two weeks ago, claims producer Errol Morris lost his rights to Adams' life story in December 1988, when he failed to exercise a two-year option purchased from Adams for $10 in December 1986.

"Morris left $10 in Adams' commissary account in jail," Randy Schaffer, Adams' lawyer, said late Tuesday. "A carton of cigarettes was what that amounted to."

Adams was convicted of murdering a Dallas policeman and served 12 years in prison before an appeals court overturned the conviction. The court acted after the release of the movie, in which another inmate all but confessed to the slaying. Adams was freed in March, and prosecutors declined to retry him.

"I worked very, very hard for a number of years to see that justice was done in this case and to see that Randall Adams walked out of prison," Morris said.

The producer said his profits from the film, which was not widely distributed, were "nil" and added that he is still paying off debts from the movie.

Morris said he is willing to renegotiate the rights to Adams' story. "There is a desire on my part to settle this quickly and without acrimony," he said.

Schaffer said Morris doesn't seem to be the problem in current negotiations aimed at given Adams clear title to any future rights to his story. He said Morris had sold all rights he owned, including those of Adams' to Mirimax Productions Co., also listed as a defendant in the lawsuit.

"We just want to clear up who owns the rights," Schaffer said.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Former Gov. John Y. Brown Jr. has been hospitalized after suffering chest pains.

Brown, 55, was undergoing tests at Humana Hospital-Audubon, hospital spokeswoman Denise Damron said Tuesday. He was accompanied by his wife, Phyllis George Brown, when he entered the hospital.

Pat Mulloy, Brown's lawyer, said Brown checked into a hospital in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., late Friday and was flown to Louisville on Tuesday morning.

Brown, governor from 1979 to 1983, underwent triple bypass heart surgery at the end of his term and developed serious lung complications.

He withdrew from his race against Walter Huddleston for the U.S. Senate in 1984 because of doctors' orders.

Brown also had surgery to replace his hip in 1986, a side effect of treatment from his heart surgery.

His wife is the former host of the "CBS Morning News."

NEW YORK (AP) — A police ban on fireworks at the annual Fourth of July block party thrown by reputed mobster John Gotti failed to dampen the spirits of thousands of revelers — or keep the nighttime skies dark.

Gotti has thrown an Independence Day bash for some 20 years at the site of his hangout, the Bergin Hunt and Fish Club, and ended the party with a blaze of pyrotechnics.

A warning from the local police precinct failed to stop the show last year, and Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward vowed his department wouldn't be embarrassed again.

But Tuesday night, the presence of scores of police failed to stop men on rooftops from sending off rockets to the cheers of crowds on the streets. Shortly before, taunts of "Pigs go home" and "We want the works" were heard.

Police, who had told the party's organizers fireworks would be illegal without a permit, said the rocket-throwers apparently were mavericks. They issued one summons for possession of illegal fireworks but made no arrests.

Officers lined barricades on each side of the block and closed off streets for four blocks in every direction, except to cars driven by local residents.

"Gotti! Gotti! Gotti!" the crowd cheered as their host, the 48-year-old reputed head of the Gambino crime family, emerged briefly from the club that authorities call his headquarters.

Gotti is under indictment in the attempted murder of a union leader. But grateful locals had no trouble downing his hamburgers, grilled under the supervision of two of the host's brothers.

"He's got a good heart," said Sal Ceffali, who attended with his wife and two grandsons. "He takes care of people in the community," added his wife, Sally. "You're not afraid to walk around at night."

PARIS (AP) — Nazi collaborator Jean Leguay, who allegedly helped organize the roundup of 12,884 Jews deported from France to concentration camps, died Saturday in a Paris hospital at age 79.

Leguay was a senior police official in the Vichy government, which collaborated with the Nazis during their Wold War II occupation of France.

In 1979, he was charged for crimes against humanity for his role in the July 1942 roundup of the Jews. A second set of charges, filed in 1986, involved the deportation of 444 Jews from Paris in August 1942. Neither set of charges ever came to trial.

BECKLEY, W.Va. (AP) — Former West Virginia Gov. Okey L. Patteson died Monday after a short illness at age 90.

Patteson was a double amputee, having lost both legs as a result of a hunting accident in 1932. He wore artificial legs.

Patteson grew up in Mount Hope, where he served in a number of local elective posts. The Democrat moved into statewide politics by managing the successful 1944 gubernatorial campaign of Clarence W. Meadows, then served as Meadows' executive assistant until he resigned in 1948 to run for governor himself.

West Virginia governors could not succeed themselves at the time, and Patteson left office in 1953. He later was general manager of the West Virginia Turnpike Commission and a member of the Board of Regents of the state's universities and colleges.

'Living museum' maps tides of Boston immigration

By LESLIE DREYFOUS

BOSTON (AP) — Last week, Buddhist monks and the elders of the Cambodian community came to bless a wobbly, two-story house. They squatted on a mat in the living room and while incense burned, they chanted.

But the "house" was really an exhibit at the Boston Children's Museum and a crowd was watching the opening of the last phase of "From Time to Time: Celebrating 75 Years at Our House."

The exhibit, a realistic-looking two-story house built in a high-ceilinged part of the museum, has during the past nine months been the "home" to four families portrayed by actors representing the city's shifting immigrant tides over the last seven decades.

The latest to move in last week is a Cambodian family, the Soks, played by Cambodian-American actors.

Before the Soks, whose fictional biography has them as refugees who arrived in America in 1981, there were actors portraying the Robinsons, a black family who moved into the "neighborhood" during the 1960s.

Before that, other actors from the City Stage Company portrayed the Gutermans, Jewish immigrants who lived in the house in the 1940s and 1950s, and the Fitzgeralds, a boisterous Irish clan that first inhabited the home in 1913.

"We're trying to make Irish families, Jewish families — all the different ethnicities — familiar," said Dorothy Merrill, who helped develop the project. "We want to make the arena comfortable for the kids so they can ask questions and better understand lives different from their own."

Wander through the plywood home and you're drawn in. The same Oriental hall rugs that the Fitzgeralds once trod now wind upstairs toward two bedrooms where 10 of 11 Sok family members sleep and share a single bathroom.

In place of the Gutermans' Victrola is a VCR showing tapes of festivals and dances that have been sent to area Cambodians from the folks back home.

"It's a way for the kids in America to stay in touch with their Cambodian culture," said museum spokeswoman Gail Eaton.

It's also a way for natives of this country to get in touch with unfamiliar cultures. The $120,000 exhibit, which its creators believe is the first of its kind, has drawn thousands of kids into the day-to-day experiences of generations past.

The actors in each "family" have been provided with fictional biographies, historical background and other information so they can answer visitors' questions as if they really were the persons they were portraying.

"I try to get the kids to respond, to learn about my culture," said Virak Ui, the 16-year-old Cambodian-born actor who's playing the part of the Sok family's teenage son, Thy Sok. His older sister plays the mother.

"Visitors really get a look inside the lives," Merrill said. "The Robinsons had problems with Boston's (segregated) schols and Mrs. Guterman talks to people about how hard it is to keep kosher. She thinks of herself as a modern woman and isn't real interested in sending her kids to Hebrew school."

Kids seem to become more tolerant toward people different from themselves after they've seen the cupboards stocked with foods similar to those they eat and a bulletin board displaying family photos not altogether unlike those on their own refrigerator at home, Merrill said.

Brian Viens, 13, said a Cambodian family lives down the block from his family.

"My brother said he saw them once burning a flag," the teen-ager said, sprawling in 8-year-old "Rathsan Sok's" upstairs room. "I don't know if it's true now. They have beds the same as mine."

Some of the children weaving in and out among the simply furnished rooms pause for a moment, ponder over the Buddhist shrine or the slippers placed carefully in a pocketed bag by "family members" who have left home for the day.

Others just like the fun of it all.

"Yeah, this stuff is interesting, but the thing I really liked was all the old baseball cards that other family had," 14-year-old Mark Chace said, recalling his visit to the Gutermans' home three months ago. "They were great."

Virak Ui, a 16-year-old actor from Hyde Park, Mass., acts right at home in the two-story Cambodian exhibit at the Children's Museum in Boston. He plays one of 11 members of the fictional Sok family who represent the latest wave of immigrants to the New England city.

Ragpicking proves to be harsh life for thousands of young Indians

By VIJAY JOSHI

Ragpicking pays more than any other form of child labor in India where every third child works, said Vidyaben Shah, president of the Indian Council for Child Welfare, a voluntary organization with offices in each of India's 25 states.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Every day 12-year-old Shashi Bushan Das starts out at dawn with a burlap sack over his bony shoulder. At the end of the day, the sack is bulging with trash and if he's lucky he has earned the equivalent of $1.

Shashi is a ragpicker, one of the tens of thousands of children in New Delhi who scrounge through garbage bins, gutters and waste dumps.

Trash dealers buy what they find — paper, plastic shopping bags, parts of automobiles, and pieces of brass and tin.

The children start out at 5 a.m. and work in pairs until noon, when they stop for their first meal of the day.

A survey published by Praveen Nangia, a social scientist and expert on child labor, says 80 percent of these children live alone and sleep on sidewalks in the summer and in government-run shelters during the winter.

"By the time these children, who are aged between 5 and 15, reach the junk dealer their sacks weigh nearly 10 to 15 kilograms (22 to 33 pounds)," the survey said.

Dreary as it may seem, ragpicking is one of the more lucrative forms of child labor in India today. An expert picker may earn up to $1 a day. The daily per capita income of India is 66 cents.

"There is lot of money in garbage," said Gerry J. Pinto of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), who works on the organization's program for destitute children in India.

Ragpicking pays more than any other form of child labor in India where every third child works, said Vidyaben Shah, president of the Indian Council for Child Welfare, a voluntary organization with offices in each of India's 25 states.

No official estimates are available on the number of ragpickers in India. Pinto puts the figure at 50,000 but adds he could be wide off the mark.

Pinto said that although a law regulates working conditions for child laborers in most industries, none covers ragpickers, "who are doing a very legitimate service to the city."

"Most of these children are runaways, forced to flee homes in villages because of poverty or family breakups and now fighting for survival in the towns," he said.

"Ragpicking is the easiest thing to do when a child lands up in the city. You don't need any skills, you don't need licenses and you can go into business directly after gettng down from the bus or train."

Shashi operates in areas around the railroad station, which was the first landmark he saw on arriving eight months ago.

Shashi said he ran away from his remote village in the eastern state of Bihar after he got into altercation with his schoolmaster.

"He deliberately failed me in exams even though I had studied well. And then my father beat me up so I ran away," said Shashi.

"These children poke their hands in garbage dumps where dirty pigs and dogs nuzzle for food. They live in garbage, sleep in garbage and wake up in garbage," said Ms. Shah.

Astronomers say studying universe's mysteries often raises more questions

By MATT MYGATT

PLAINS OF SAN AUGUSTIN, N.M. (AP) — Astronomers often see themselves as caretakers of mankind's sense of wonder.

"We kind of hold on to a sense of wonder about the universe that we can share with people," says Aileen O'Donoghue, a physics professor at St. Lawrence University.

Marveling at the mysteries of the universe many times raises new puzzles to solve.

"We look at a problem and we think we understand it, then we look at it in more detail and the more we look the less we understand it," says Chris Carilli, a student from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who recently completed his doctorate at the Very Large Array radio telescope, a system of 27 giant dish antennae that collect radio waves from the farthest reaches of the universe.

Arnold Rots, a staff astronomer at the VLA, agrees.

"You usually go in to try to solve a problem," says Rots. "You may or may not solve it, but something else crops up."

"That's what they call discovery," Carilli says.

But why pump money into solving problems that don't necessarily cure diseases or put more bread on the table?

"The justification for putting money into continuous wondering is that it's part of our culture," says Rots. "If you give it up, you give up part of our culture."

And space is like a big laboratory for those wondrous experiments, he says.

"If man is not curious anymore about his surroundings and the world he lives in, then the future will look rather bleak," Rots says. "And part of that world is the universe."

Sometimes astronomy-related technology makes it to other fields — imaging used by the VLA to study celestial objects is similar to CAT scan images used in hospitals, O'Donoghue says.

"But when doing basic research, you don't always know what might come out of it," says O'Donoghue, who recently completed her doctorate at the VLA 52 miles west of Socorro.

"Someone once said, 'How do you know the worth of a newborn child,'" she says.

Carl Bignell, an astronomer and operations division chief at the VLA, says some scientists like to mull problems on a global scale, while others would rather contribute bits and pieces to a wider body of knowledge.

"If I were looking for a more dramatic impact on mankind, I'd probably get into another subject," he says.

Most astronomers are intrigued by the nature of a problem and try to understand it the best they can, Bignell says.

"You almost live in your own world in a way," he says.

Carilli says the answers to little problems are needed to answer big questions.

O'Donoghue says working on difficult problems makes it hard to go to bed at night, but makes it worth getting up in the morning.

"You always have a problem you're working on — like mental hard candy that's rolling around in your head," she says.

Voyager 2 will soon be converging on Neptune

By LEE SIEGEL

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Twelve years, three planets and 4.4 billion miles after leaving Earth, Voyager 2 is converging on Neptune, a swirling, blue-green planet with a backward moon, for the last stop on an extraordinary tour.

"The solar system is our neighborhood, and we're getting to the end of the neighborhood," said Norm Haynes, Voyager project manager at the National Aeronautics and Space Admnistration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Voyager 2 already has detected a dark spot on Neptune that may be a giant storm like Jupiter's Great Red Spot. As it nears the planet, the probe will search for undiscovered moons and partial rings. And at 9 p.m. PDT on Aug. 24, Voyager will swoop within 3,000 miles of Neptune's north pole cloudtops — the closest of its close encounters and the first spacecraft to visit the planet.

It will be 2.75 billion miles from Earth after traveling 4.43 billion miles along its curving path. The information it sends back at the speed of light will take four hours and six minutes to arrive.

Five hours after the closest encounter, Voyager will fly within 25,000 miles of the backwards-orbiting moon, Triton. The other known moon is Nereid.

Voyager 1 and 2, laden with TV cameras and an array of sensors, were launched from Cape Canaveral in 1977. They visited Jupiter in 1979 and Saturn in 1980 and 1981, respectively. Voyager 2 reached Uranus in 1986. Voyager 1 now is heading toward interstellar space.

Voyager 1 and 2 returned 65,000 photographs of Jupiter, Saturn and their moons and rings. Voyager 2 sent back 8,000 pictures of Uranus and its moons, and will take another 8,000 of Neptune.

At a cost Haynes pegged at $865 million through the Neptune encounter, the Voyagers "returned more new knowledge about the outer planets...than existed in all of the preceding history of astronomy," according to NASA.

Neptune, discovered in 1846, is 30,700 miles in diameter — six times Earth's size and the fourth largest planet after Jupiter, Saturn and Uranus. A Neptunian year lasts 165 Earth years, and a day lasts 17 to 18 Earth hours — a detail Voyager may pinpoint. Neptune usually is the eighth planet, but because of Pluto's elongated orbit Neptune will be the ninth and outermost until 2007.

Scientists expect Voyager to discover at least 10 small moons, said deputy project scientist Ellis Miner.

Some moons may confine or shepherd the 5- to 12-mile-wide incomplete rings, called "ring arcs," orbiting Neptune, said physicist Ed Stone, NASA's Voyager project scientist and a vice president at California Institute of Technology.

Voyager also may discover dust bands and 50 to 100 partial rings in addition to the three to six arcs scientists believe they detected from Earth, Stone added. The partial rings, possibly made of dust and pebbles, most likely are debris from the collision of a comet and an ancient moon, he said.

Voyager should be some 33,400 miles above Neptune's clouds when it crosses the ring region, so it is unlikely to be destroyed by an unseen arc, he said.

The probe also will study Neptune's weather. Scientists believe the 6,200-mile-wide dark spot it found probably is similar to Earth's hurricanes or Jupiter's Great Red Spot. The source of the internal heat driving Neptune's storms is a mystery; Earth's comes decaying radioactive material in rocks.

AP Laserphoto

Norm Haynes is Voyager project manager at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif. Twelve years, three planets and 4.4 billion miles after leaving Earth, Voyager 2 is converging on Neptune.

Neptune is pale blue-green because methane, or natural gas, in its mostly hydrogen-helium atmosphere absorbs red light. Scientists suspect that a third of the way toward the planet's center the atmosphere becomes a superhot slurry of hot water and rock, so Neptune — like neighboring Uranus — probably lacks a distinct sky-sea boundary, Stone said.

Despite any internal heat, Neptune receives 900 times less sunlight than Earth, so the temperature at the top of its atmosphere is 350 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, about the same as on Triton, Stone said.

Scientists believe Triton — 1,400 to 2,240 miles wide, roughly the size of Earth's moon — will be the most fascinating part of Voyager's flyby.

When a planet and its moons form from a spinning disk of gas and solid material, the moons should orbit in the direction the planet rotates. Triton's reverse orbit suggests it once orbited the sun like a comet or a planet but collided with a moon to form a new backwards-moving satellite, Stone said.

Triton probably is cold and geologically inactive, with an icy mantle over a rocky core. But it once may have had a molten interior that created ridges, valleys, cliffs, canyons and volcanoes that Voyager might photograph.

Observations from Earth indicate Triton's atmosphere contains methane and nitrogen. Sunlight likely converts methane into complex hydrocarbons, creating a transparent reddish-orange photochemical haze, Stone said. The hydrocarbons may form heavier particles, coating the surface with frozen sludge.

Could the organic chemicals have allowed life to develop on Triton?

"The temperature is very, very cold, so I think it's unlikely," he said.

Scientists believe Triton has extreme seasons because its orbit around Neptune is highly inclined: One pole faces the sun for 82 years and the other remains in darkness. This may mean Triton's atmosphere gets thinner and thicker as methane-nitrogen icecaps cover one pole, then the other.

Researchers discarded the theory that Triton has liquid nitrogen oceans, but puddles or lakes are possible, along with fields of nitrogen ice crystals, Stone said.

Nereid, about 190 to 620 miles wide, has a very elongated elliptical orbit. Caltech astrophysicist Peter Goldreich speculates Nereid once had a circular orbit that was disturbed by gravity from Triton or a large passing object.

If Voyager confirms that Neptune has a magnetic field, the planet also may have an aurora like Earth's, and a mysterious ultraviolet "electroglow." A magnetic field should trap a radiation belt around Neptune similar to Earth's Van Allen belts. Jupiter's radiation belts damaged some of Voyager's equipment; Haynes doubts similar problems at Neptune.

Voyager 2 has worked 12 years with only relatively minor failures, although it contains electronics equal to 10,000 television sets, he said.

Interest may dip below 10 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — With growing fears of a possible recession, the Federal Reserve is likely to further loosen credit policy and drive a variety of consumer and business loan rates lower, many private economists predict.

Analysts believe fixed-rate mortgage loans will soon dip below 10 percent and other consumer loans will drop by one-half percentage point before the summer is over as the central bank struggles to keep the aging economic recovery alive.

"The Fed has a plate full of statistics suggesting that a wise insurance policy against a recession would be to make another easing move," said Robert Dederick, chief economist of Northern Trust Co. of Chicago.

The forecasts of a looser credit policy came as Fed officials gathered for the start today of two important days of closed-door meetings to map monetary strategy for the rest of the year.

Decisions made by the Federal Open Market Committee, composed of members of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington and five of the 12 regional Fed bank presidents, will not be revealed until July 20 when Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan delivers the central bank's midyear policy update to Congress.

The Fed in March 1988 launched a credit-tightening effort which drove interest rates up by 3 full percentage points in an effort to dampen growing inflationary pressures by reducing borrowing demands.

But last month, in a major policy shift, the central bank sent a key interest rate, the federal funds rate, down by 0.25 percentage point to around 9.50 percent. The funds rate is the interest that banks charge each other for overnight loans.

Many private economists believe the Fed will decide to lower the funds rate by another 0.25 percentage point in July. Similar small declines would be likely in the following months if the economic statistics show that the early-year spurt in inflation is moderating and the economy is remaining sluggish, the economists say.

The central bank has been struggling to engineer a "soft landing" where growth slows enough to dampen inflation but without causing a recession.

Last week's big drop in the stock market was blamed on growing fears that the country is headed for a downturn later this year, based on statistics showing weak consumer spending and a big slump in factory orders.

"The economy is slowing more rapidly than expected and underlies the need for the Fed to act promptly to ease monetary policy," said Jerry Jasinowski, chief economist of the National Association of Manufacturers. "Failure to act soon may turn the soft landing into a recession."

Lawrence Chimerine, senior economic adviser at the WEFA Group, an economic consulting firm, said, "The Fed cannot ignore the various signs showing we have a very sluggish economy."

"Clearly, the risk of a recession is higher but my guess is that the Fed believes we can get by without one" through gradual moves to lower rates, Chimerine said.

Mortgage rates are already falling. Fixed-rate mortgages, which peaked at 11.24 percent in late March, dropped to a nationwide average of 10.07 percent last week, according to a survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

David Wyss, chief financial economist at DRI-McGraw Hill, another forecasting firm, predicted that 30-year mortgages will soon fall below 10 percent and decline to around 9.5 percent by September.

Other economists forecast a further one-half percentage point drop in banks' prime lending rate which was cut to 11 percent in early June, its first reduction in more than a year.

The prime rate is traditionally considered a benchmark for business loans, but it now influences a variety of consumer loans, including home equity loans.

Various economists said while they are looking for further signs of easing credit from the Fed, they do not expect anything as dramatic as a cut in the Fed's discount rate, the interest it charges to make direct loans to financial institutions.

Dollar goes lower, Gold higher

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar recovered somewhat in European dealings early today after plunging earlier amid profit-taking in Asian markets. Gold prices were higher.

Dealers said the dollar dropped in Asian trading as dealers continued to take profits in dollar-yen trading, but buying interest in the European markets was limited and the dollar regained ground despite speculation that the U.S. Federal Reserve will lower interest rates as soon as Thursday.

Dealers said activity was moderately active after Tuesday's light trading during the Fourth of July holiday.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell 0.75 Japanese yen to a closing 140.20 yen. Later, in London, it eased further to 140.05 yen.

Other late dollar rates in Europe compared with late Tuesday:

—1.9110 West German marks, down from 1.9220

—1.6395 Swiss francs, down from 1.6527

—6.4845 French francs, down from 6.5375

—2.1502 Dutch guilders, down from 2.1710

—1,383.50 Italian lire, down from 1,393.50

—1.1915 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1935

In London, the British pound rose to $1.60, up from $1.5870 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at $379.40 a troy ounce, up from $376.50 bid late Tuesday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $378.40.

In Zurich, the late bid price was $378.75, up from $376.50 bid late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.02 to close at $379.33.

Silver bullion rose in London to $5.25 a troy ounce, up from $5.24 bid late Tuesday.

First City may acquire FDIC stake

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — The First City Bancorporation of Texas said Tuesday that it had begun talks about how it or other investors could acquire the 18 percent stake in its equity that has been held by government regulators since the banking company was recapitalized a year ago.

Abboud

"There is at least an equal possibility that a third party, or third parties," will buy the stake held by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., said James E. Day, a spokesman for First City. The current value of the stake is $96.5 million.

The announcement came less than a week after First City lost a bid to acquire a network of 20 banks in Texas formerly owned by Mcorp. Regulators chose the Banc One Corp. of Columbus, Ohio, to acquire the former Mcorp banks, rejecting four other bidders besides First City.

That outcome was a setback for A. Robert Abboud, First City's chairman and the former chairman of the First Chicago Corp.

Most of the assets acquired by Banc One are in the Dallas area, where First City's share of loans and deposits lags behind that of several rivals, and Abboud feels that First City's operations could support a larger asset base.

First City, with $12.7 billion in assets, will rank No. 3 in the state, behind NCNB Texas and Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc., after Banc One sheds about $4 billion in troubled loans in the former Mcorp units. The former Mcorp network had $13.1 billion in assets at the end of March.

Argentina broke?

N.Y. Times News Service

BUENOS AIRES — President-elect Carlos Saul Menem will probably find few if any dollars in the central bank to use in Argentina's trade and other international business when he takes office Saturday.

He said recently that the central bank had only $140 million, not enough to last until he assumes power. Little new money is coming in from exporters because of bottlenecks in the economy and uncertainty caused by hyperinflation thought to be exceeding 100 percent a month.

Private economists say the government is "semi-insolvent" and could quickly become completely so. The economy is like that of a country coming out of a war, some economists say. The central bank recently announced that it would refuse almost any request to transfer more than $1,000 in hard currency.

Faced with this situation, Menem appears to have abandoned, at least for now, the traditional populist policies of his Justicialist Party, known informally as the Peronist movement for its founder, Juan D. Peron.

Instead, he is warning Argentina's 32 million people of tougher times ahead and making appointments and plans that promise low budget deficits and free-market orthodoxy.

He is clearly trying to regain the confidence of international lenders, but his associates see little prospect of immediate help from abroad.

Guido di Tella, a Peronist economist who is Menem's nominee as ambassador to Washington, said the appointment of market-oriented economic liberals to important government posts carried "great internal cost" for his party but was being done "so that people outside will believe me."

The outgoing government of Raul Alfonsin halted interest payments on the long-term portion of the $60 billion foreign debt more than a year ago. Potential foreign lenders have generally indicated that they will not get involved with Argentina again until major economic adjustments are made by the new government, particularly in reducing the budget deficit and increasing tax collections.

With real wages and production already falling at a dizzying pace, two leading industrial or-

A name you can 'bank' on

By RICHARD W. STEVENSON
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Even the healthiest savings and loan companies acknowledge that they have a bit of an image problem these days, as the industry continues to suffer widespread failures and record withdrawals.

As a result, many institutions are adopting marketing strategies that include advertising campaigns stressing safety, some of which are drawing criticism from regulators for suggesting that competitors are unsafe.

And an increasing number are dropping "savings and loan" in favor of something stronger, more solid, more appealing.

"Bank," for example.

A number of savings institutions made the switch several years ago, including the First Nationwide Bank, a subsidiary of the Ford Motor Co., and the Great Western Bank, a unit of the Great Western Financial Corp.

But in the last year the trend accelerated as scores of savings and loan associations, seeking to link themselves in the public mind with the relatively stable commercial banking business, formally added

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Mexican crude up $3.05 a barrel

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Export prices of Mexican crude oil rose by an average of $3.05 a barrel in the six-month period ending June 30 compared to Dec. 1, sharply boosting the country's earnings over projected levels, the government news agency Notimex reported Tuesday.

Notimex cited preliminary figures of a report to be released later by the state petroleum monopoly Pemex showing that Mexico's earnings from crude oil exceeded by $1.35 million the $2.34 million originally projected, even though it reduced exports by 5 percent April 1.

The earnings of Petroleos Mexicanos, S.A., as the company is formally called, totalled $3.69 million in the six-month period ending June 30, Notimex said.

The average price for the three types of oil exported — heavy Maya, light Isthmus and ultra-light Olmec — was $16.45 a barrel during the six-month period, or $6.45 a barrel more than originally projected, Notimex said.

Exports dropped from 1.322 million barrels a day at an average of $14.69 a barrel on Jan. 30 to 1.269 million barrels a day at an average of $16.92 a barrel.

On April 1, Mexico slashed its export platform by 5 percent for three months, then extended it for another six months, in line with agreements with the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and other independent producers to buttress world prices.

Notimex said Mexico is currently exporting crude to 22 countries, with 57 percent going to the United States, 14.7 percent to Spain, and 12.9 percent to the Far East, mainly Japan.

Pemex's Isthmus crude to the American continent on June 30 sold for $18.03, Maya for $15.39 a barrel and Olmec $20 a barrel. To Europe, Isthmus sold at $16.65 a barrel and Maya at $13.40 a barrel, and to the Far East Isthmus sold for $15.75 a barrel and Maya at $13.06 a barrel.

The company said Tuesday average prices on exports to the Far East fell in June.

Light Isthmus crude sold for an average $16.04 a barrel, down 21 cents from May. The heavy Maya grade crude dropped 16 cents to $13.39 a barrel, Pemex said.

Average prices for the month for other regions were not announced.

Senator says oil fines not leveled

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. Sen. Bob Graham charged Tuesday that the federal government has failed to levy civil fines for 16,000 environmental and safety violations on oil-drilling platforms in the past six years.

The violations found by the Interior Department ranged from failure to test critical safety valves to less dangerous cases involving safety or work conditions, but all were left unpunished, the senator said.

Graham, who along with the rest of the Florida congressional delegation is battling plans to lease offshore tracts for oil exploration, said the enforcement record undermines assurances that drilling activities will be closely monitored.

"Enforcement has just collapsed," said the Miami Lakes Democrat. "It's part of a pattern which we've seen in ship transport of petroleum from Alaska to Rhode Island ... in which promises of high standards and safety regulation have been shattered."

Civil penalties took effect in 1980 under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act and over the first three years resulted in 32 fines ranging from $1,000 to $173,000.

But a Louisiana federal court ruled in May 1983 that regulators had to give more notice before levying fines, and the department abandoned the program.

"Apparently the Department of the Interior accepted that one case, did not appeal it, did not revise its regulations, and did not come to Congress to ask for new legislation," Graham said. "It has now for better than five years effectively given up enforcement."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Wash sales' can spell investor trouble

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. What is a wash sale? Here is why I ask. I informed my tax preparer that I had sold shares of a mutual fund and purchased shares of another mutual fund the same day. Both funds are administered by the same management company.

The tax preparer asked, "Was this a wash sale?" I said, "No." Was I correct?

A. Yes. You have no problem.

A wash occurs when you sell one security at a lower price than you paid for it and purchase the same security or "substantially identical" security within 30 days before or after the sale. When you do that, the Internal Revenue Service disallows your capital loss and you can't take it on your income tax return.

You cashed in shares of one fund. You don't "sell" mutual fund shares. You redeem them by turning them back to the fund and receive the redemption price in effect at that time. For tax purposes, however, that's counted as a sale. Then you bought shares of a different fund.

Even though both funds are in the same management group, their shares are different securities. Each mutual fund is a separate company. Their shares do not fall within the definition of being substantially identical.

Q. Exactly what makes two securities substantially identical?

A. There's no exact answer. Many taxpayers have gone to the mat with the IRS on that one, with the courts making determinations based on the circumstances of particular cases.

For example: you can sell Chrysler Corp. common stock at a loss and buy General Motors common stock within the 61-day period — 30 before and 30 after the sale — without running afoul of the wash sale rule. Or you can sell a company's common stock at a loss and buy its preferred stock or bonds.

But you could be tripped up by selling a losing stock and purchasing options or warrants that give you the right to buy shares of the stock you sold. That gets hairy and the wash sale rule applies when the relative values and price changes of what you sold and what you bought are similar.

Things get more complicated with bonds and other debt securities. You're home free if you sell, say, 9 percent bonds issued by Company A and buy Company B's 9 percent bonds. And you can sell Company A's 9 percent bonds and purchase Company A's 8.5 percent bonds.

But bonds of the same issuer generally are counted as substantially identical if they pay the same rate of interest. The fact that they bear different issue dates and pay interest at different times will not absolve bonds from the wash sale rule.

However, differences of more than three years in maturity dates of very long-term bonds of the same issuer sometimes can get you out of wash sale difficulty.

Q. I am a widow in my middle 70s. For 1988, I paid approximately $1,200 tax on my income — all from my teacher's retirement checks and interest from two certificates of deposit.

Looking at my records, I find that all five of the $10,000 CDs I now have at a local bank will mature in 1990. I dread to think what the total tax, including the new catastrophic Medicare tax, will be.

Is there any way I can delay paying income tax on some of the CD interest?

A. Sorry, no. Unless you want to get in trouble with the IRS, you cannot try to postpone the tax bite on that interest. Your bank will send both you and the IRS copies of Form 1099, showing the amount of interest.

I have to assume those five CDs were issued this year with maturities of one year or less and have provisions for large penalties for early withdrawal. If they are longer term CDs, you were required to report the interest that accumulates each year and pay income tax on your annual returns.

Doyle welcomes written questions, but he can provide answers only through the column.

"bank" or "savings bank" to their names without changing anything fundamental about their business.

And congressional legislation to reform and rescue the savings industry, at a cost of at least $157 billion over the next decade, is giving that trend a new push.

Federal regulations allow the use of "bank" by savings and loans as long as the institutions include in their formal title an indication that they are a federal savings bank or a federal savings and loan association.

In practice, most companies fulfill that requirement by using the abbreviations FSB or FSLA in small type. For example, Tremont Federal Savings & Loan in New York changed its name last October to City and Suburban FSB.

The recently relabeled institutions include Glendale Federal Savings & Loan of Glendale, Calif., which in May became Glendale Federal Bank. Citizens Federal Savings & Loan of Miami recently completed a changeover to Citizens Federal Bank. Great American First Savings of San Diego became Great American Bank. Atlantic Federal Savings & Loan of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was transformed into BankAtlantic. And Winchester Federal Savings and Loan of Winchester, Ky., became Winchester Federal Savings Bank.

The renamed institutions say their main goal is to tell customers that they now offer a variety of services beyond traditional deposit-taking and mortgage lending, including consumer loans, checking accounts and investment services, and that the distinctions among banks, savings institutions and other financial companies are blurring.

"We want to make it as easy as possible to communicate to the consumer what we are and what we do, and 'bank' is the right modifier," said Kent Pelz, vice president and director of advertising for California Federal Bank, a subsidiary of Calfed Inc. Until last month it was called California Federal Savings and Loan.

Industry executives and analysts acknowledge that "bank" carries with it a more solid image than "savings and loan." And they say that a weak or unsafe image is a serious bottom-line concern because it forces most savings and loans to pay more for deposits than their commercial bank competitors.

"They want to distance themselves from their industry," said Terry S. Utterback, a financial services marketing consultant in Woodland Hills, Calif. "If they can change their names and not disclose that they are S&L's, they will do it. They want to sound, look and walk like a bank."

The trend has met with some muted protest from commercial banks, which fear that any confusion over what is a bank and what is a savings institution can only hurt them.

"It's truly frustrating to bankers, but at this point it's too late to turn back the clock," said Mary-Liz Meany, a spokeswoman for the American Bankers Association.

L. William Seidman, the chairman of the FDIC, said last week that bids from First City and NCNB Texas were handicapped in the competition because the agency was an investor in the banking companies.

Day said First City had not decided whether it would offer to acquire Texas American Bancshares, based in Fort Worth, and the National Bancshares Corp. of Texas, based in San Antonio.

Regulators are auctioning the troubled banking organizations, with a total of $6 billion in assets, as a package in a process that has lasted more than a year.

Day also said First City had no interest at this point in acquiring any of the more than 100 troubled savings institutions in Texas. He said FDIC officials rebuffed earlier attempts by First City to negotiate the sale of its holdings in the banking company.

ganizations have warned that the absence of hard currency for items such as imported components, shipping expenses and export insurance could soon paralyze Argentine industry.

Although statisticians are hard put to keep up with the rapid decline, industrial production is thought to have fallen by 15 percent in May and even more in June. Purchasing power is about half what it was 18 months ago.

The export picture, for both agriculture and industry, could brighten if some order could be achieved. Exporters say substantial amounts of grain and other farm products are waiting to be sold. Also, export figures for 1988 and the first quarter of 1989 show that Argentine industry, long accustomed to producing for the protected internal market, is finally finding markets abroad.

Despite the government's desperate finances, billions of dollars remain in private hands, suggesting that investment money would be available inside Argentina if stability and confidence were restored. According to most estimates, about $5 billion is in private cash savings or bank accounts in neighboring Uruguay. Argentines also have many times that amount in longer-term investments abroad.

The buying of dollars on the black market continues. One official of the incoming government said $5 million may have been carried to Uruguay by Argentines during one recent week end.

Menem, whose inauguration was advanced by five months in the hope that the new government could get a grip on the economy, has been organizing his economic team and re leasing bits and pieces of his plans.

His nominee for secretary of planning, Moises Ikonicoff, said in a recent interview that in Argentina "society functions without the state, the economy without money, and the juridical system without norms."

He added, "The only alternative to change is the abyss."

Menem has said that to free oil for export he intends to raise gasoline prices, which are now less than a dime a liter (about 40 cents a gallon), to a level as high as any in the world. People who cannot afford the higher price will have to buy bicycles, he said.

Solidarity legislators claim their seats

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Taking seats beside their former Communist jailers in the new parliament, Solidarity legislators savored the historic moment and immediately took the government to task for mishandling the economy.

Not only did the free trade union movement claim the spoils of its June election victory on Tuesday. It also saw the discredited government of Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski formally resign.

In his first speech as a deputy, Solidarity veteran Jacek Kuron lashed into Rakowski for helping precipitate an economic crisis in which the government's "chaotic policy caused only social unrest."

Rakowski looked on uncomfortably from a balcony.

Kuron, who spent nine years in jail for opposition activities, noted that Communist authorities refrained from increasing prices during the election campaign, then ordered price rises after the humiliating electoral defeat.

Despite running uncontested, Rakowski and other key members of the ruling Communist coalition were denied seats in the new parliament.

In the June balloting, Solidarity-backed candidates won all but one of the races the opposition was allowed to contest. Theirs became the first opposition movement to enter an East bloc parliament since the postwar Communist takeover.

"There were two great moments in my life — the August 1980 agreements (that created Solidarity) and today," said Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who did not run for office but sat in places of honor with Communist leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

With the economy in shambles, many analysts say, the same government that crushed Solidarity with martial law 7½ years ago had few options but that which it chose — reinstating the union in April and trying to work with it.

Shortages in basic commodities are worse than ever, inflation is averaging 100 percent per year and servicing the $39 billion foreign debt is becoming more problematic.

Price increases in the last two weeks alone raised the cost of sugar, cigarettes, alcohol, gasoline, refrigerators and washing machines.

The value of the dollar, Poland's most valued currency, fluctuated wildly before stabilizing after the government announced a month-long wage and price freeze as of July 1.

In postwar Poland, government-mandated price increases have touched off labor unrest that has toppled regimes and, last August, led authorities to agree to negotiate Solidarity's reinstatement.

Unclear now is whether Solidarity will help the government by assuming part of the responsibility for seeking a way out of the economic crisis.

The union is asking Western leaders for $10 billion in new aid that would allow Poland to continue on its path of reform — encouraging free market mechanisms and closing money-losing industries — without labor turmoil.

On Tuesday, Rakowski's Cabinet formally submitted its resignation to the Sejm, or lower house of parliament, which now counts 161 Solidarity deputies among its 460 members. The new Senate, where Solidarity won 99 of 100 seats, later convened.

Walesa had a place of honor at the front of the Sejm for the opening session. Sitting a few yards away was Jaruzelski.

When the Senate met, the two sat side-by-side at the front of the chamber and seemed to joke with one another.

But as leaders of the two chambers were elected and sworn in, an intense political struggle persisted over who they will elect as president when they meet in joint session. That election may not take place until after President Bush visits next week.

Jaruzelski said Friday that he did not want the post and recommended Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, but Jaruzelski was believed to be reconsidering at the urging of some party members.

Belgium voices criticism about crash of MiG

MOSCOW (AP) — Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov had no explanation today for why Warsaw Pact defense forces failed to detect and shoot down a runaway MiG-23 jet fighter that crashed into a house in Belgium, killing a man.

Also today, West Germany, the Netherlands and Belgium said the Soviet Union should have notified them when the plane entered their airspace.

In an interview with Tass, Yazov said investigators were en route to Kolobrzeg airfield in Poland to find out why the MiG's pilot bailed out after takeoff on a training mission, leaving the jet to fly pilotless for 560 miles.

From Poland, the investigators will fly to the crash site and discuss compensation for the death and damages with Belgian officials, the official news agency said.

"It is difficult to say why it was not shot down, why it was not detected," Yazov said. "A large-scale investigation should be carried out."

The defense minister said he believed an engine malfunction immediately after takeoff on the training flight prompted the pilot to eject.

"As the pilot himself explained, the afterburner spontaneously switched off during the takeoff and the plane began to decelerate," Yazov said. "Following thebail-out, a sufficient thrust, in all probability, developed and the plane continued its flight."

The MiG-23 flew over some of Western Europe's most densely populated regions and crashed just miles from a cluster of cities along the French-Belgian border.

Philippine democracy facing criticism

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Industrial nations are pledging billions to save this nation's "fragile" democracy. But Philippine democracy is under siege not only by armed opponents but by forces of mismanagement and corruption.

Delegates from 25 countries and international organizations, meeting in Tokyo, pledged $3.5 billion for 1989 to be channeled into the Philippines Multilateral Aid Initiative, a U.S.-initiated plan to revive an economy devastated by 20 years of misrule under ousted President Ferdinand Marcos.

The figure could reach about $14 billion by 1992. President Bush has asked Congress for an additional $200 million in annual aid over the next five years as the American contribution.

But Western diplomats believe President Corazon Aquino's government must tackle formidable problems if the money is to be effective.

These include an ill-disciplined military, a cumbersome, inefficient bureaucracy, ineffective courts, and a burgeoning population that threatens economic gains.

Western and Filipino experts give the administration high marks for restoring business confidence, liberalizing imports, disbanding state monopolies and removing the tax-exempt status from government enterprises.

But critics fault Mrs. Aquino for failing to display the vigorous leadership necessary to exploit the opportunities that Filipinos enjoyed after toppling the Marcos administration in February 1986.

Western diplomats say the government has been unable to spend between $2 and $4 billion in foreign aid because of inefficiency and bottlenecks in the bureaucracy.

"There are a number of favorable trends," said one Western diplomat, on condition of anonymity. "But they've got a long way to go. The system is fragile."

Abroad, much attention has focused on the communist New People's Army, the rural-based, 23,000-strong force that has waged a 20-year insurgency to establish a Marxist state.

Rebels operate in 65 of the 73 provinces and have killed up to 65 policemen and soldiers in the Manila area this year.

But the most serious armed threats have come not from the insurgents but from disaffected members of the military, who have launched six coup attempts against Mrs. Aquino's government.

Analysts believe the insurgency persists in part because most Filipinos have not benefited from the promise of economic and social justice.

About half the country's 58 million people live below the government's definition of poverty — on less than the equivalent of $150 a month for a family of six.

Unemployment declined from 9 percent in 1987 to 8.5 percent last year, but government figures show that one-third of the labor force worked less than 40 hours a week.

While most Filipinos struggle economically, there are widespread rumors of official corruption. True or not, they create the perception that a privileged few benefit from the new administration.

Last year, Mrs. Aquino promised that at least one well-known public figure would be charged with corruption. The promise remains unfulfilled.

Experts say a major factor holding down living standards is the lack of an effective population control program, a sensitive issue in a Roman Catholic country.

The Asian Development Bank has warned that economic gains in the Philippines ae threatened by "a continuing rapid growth in the labor force."

The population is growing at about 2.5 percent annually. That means 750,000 new jobs must be created each year.

In a study, the bank also faulted the administration for the slow pace of land reform, aimed at redistributing property to 3 million landless peasants.

The year-old program has virtually ground to a halt because of scandals in the Department of Agrarian Reform. After delaying for weeks, Mrs. Aquino recently replaced her land reform secretary because he authorized purchase of property at grossly inflated prices.

Public disaffection is also growing over a feared breakdown in law and order in Manila after a spate of almost daily police killings and spectacular bank robberies.

Coupled with this is a growing feeling that with a backlog of 300,000 cases in the court system, Filipinos cannot rely on the justice system to protect their rights.

The government blames communist rebels for most of the police killings. But last month, Defense Secretary Fidel Ramos acknowledged widespread criminality in military ranks.

Manila newspapers, quoting unnamed intelligence sources, said many of the bank robberies in Manila are carried out by 10 gangs of soldiers and former soldiers, who are shielded from arrest by their officers.

Few blame Mrs. Aquino personally. But even supporters believe that she must shake off her relaxed, detached style.

"The president must now scratch off her slow, gradualist, evolutionary style," wrote her former spokesman, Teodoro Benigno.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Likud ministers seek showdown

JERUSALEM (AP) — Hard-line Cabinet ministers in Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's Likud bloc have demanded a showdown with their leader, refusing to compromise in their effort to bury his peace initiative.

The rebel ministers have demanded that the Likud Central Committee vote today on amendments to the peace plan that would make it virtually unacceptable to potential Palestinian bargaining partners.

Shamir's adviser Yossi Ahimeir said his boss agreed to bring the proposals before the 2,600-member governing body of the right-wing party, but added that the vote would mainly be aimed at embarrasssing the 73-year-old premier.

"The plan is unshakeable, no political body can change or limit it because it has been approved by the government," Ahimeir told The Associated Press. "This is a purely political strife and we will overcome it."

But Israeli newspaper editorials said a vote against Shamir would severely limit the prime minister's ability to garner world support for his plan. Shamir has also threatened to resign if the party votes against the plan.

Gorbachev in France

PARIS (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, beginning the second day of his visit to France, laid a wreath today on the tomb of France's unknown soldier beneath the Arc de Triomphe.

The ceremony followed a speech Tuesday night in which the Soviet leader called for a united Europe and declared his readiness to defend human rights.

Soviet and French flags fluttered along the avenue des Champs-Elysees to the arch begun by the Emperor Napoleon in 1806 to celebrate his military victories — but completed long after Napoleon's failed invasion of Russia.

In a toast at a state dinner Tuesday night, Gorbachev referred to Bonaparte's 1812 march on Moscow, which he traced to a turning aside from the ideals of the French Revolution whose bicentennial is being celebrated this year. Gorbachev called anew for building a united Europe, for moving beyond the East-West schism that grew from the Cold War.

Namibians tell of torture

OSERI KARI CAMP, Namibia (AP) — Some of the 150 people freed by Namibia's guerrilla movement after years of imprisonment said many of their fellow prisoners were tortured and beaten to death.

Returning home on Tuesday, the freed detainees told of beatings and of being held in underground pits in neighboring Angola.

They said they were among thousands of dissidents imprisoned by the South-West Africa People's Organization during its guerrilla war for independence from South Africa.

Dozens, perhaps hundreds, of SWAPO members accused of spying for South Africa were killed at SWAPO prison camps, the ex-prisoners said.

Sudan amnesty offered

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — In a second peace overture since seizing power last week, the military junta led by Lt. Gen. Omar Hassan Ahmed el-Bashir has decreed a one-month unilateral cease-fire in the war with southern rebels.

The junta Tuesday night proposed a general amnesty for all Sudanese who have taken up arms against the government since May 1983, when the rebellion led by turncoat army Col. John Garang began in three southern provinces.

The proposed amnesty in effect would cover the 50,000-60,000 rebels of Garang's Sudan People's Liberation Army.

The junta's actions stretched the cessation of hostilities in the southern regions of Upper Nile, Bahr el-Ghazal and Equatoria into a third month.

Both sides stilled their guns in May and June in response to a unilateral cease-fire proposed by Garang to allow the United Nations to move 120,000 tons of relief supplies to the south to ward off famine this summer.

The new unilateral cease-fire, which took effect Tuesday, and the proposed amnesty were announced in separate statements from the Command Council of the National Salvation Revolution.

The 15-member council overthrew the civilian government of Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi Friday in an apparently bloodless coup.

China fighting floods

BEIJING (AP) — A week of flooding in coastal and southern China has claimed more than 100 lives, left tens of thousands of people homeless and caused dikes along major rivers to burst, official reports said today.

The flooding across five provinces has destroyed thousands of homes, the China Daily newspaper said, adding that 44 people had died in Jiangxi province.

The People's Daily said 31 people were killed and 73 injured in coastal Zhejiang since torrential rains began falling June 27.

Areas of western Zhejiang have received between 12 and 20 inches, and rain was continuing, the paper said.

Earlier reports said 28 people were killed in southeastern China's Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and three people died in Qinghai province, a normally arid region of northwestern China.

Heavy rains and flooding also have hit Fujian province. State television has shown people wading through waist-high water.

Most of the flooded areas were hit last year by severe drought.

Phone numbers growing

TOKYO (AP) — Move over, Paris. Tokyo will join you in the ranks of cities with eight-digit phone numbers.

Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp. said Tuesday that the change from seven-digit phone numbers in Tokyo will take place Jan. 1, 1991. Subscribers will add a 3 at the beginning of their seven-digit numbers.

The national telephone utility said a shortage of exchange numbers began showing up in 1981 as demand increased for facsimile and microcomputer communications on top of demand for regular telephone lines.

Some eight-digit phone numbers were given to pocket pagers in 1987, and in 1988 some new subscribers for regular phones received eight-digit numbers, NTT said, but by early 1991 the shortage will be acute.

Unlike in France, which has had eight-digit local phone numbers throughout the country for several years, the change in Japan will affect only phone numbers in Tokyo, a city of 12 million people.

Guerrilla posts bombed

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Afghan jet fighters bombed guerrilla positions outside the capital today, a day after the government claimed the resistance was preparing to mount major assaults on Kabul and other cities.

Diplomatic sources and witnesses said the dawn air strikes were the most intensive in weeks, but there was no immediate report of casualties.

Suspected Moslem insurgents, battling to overthrow the Soviet-backed government in Kabul, also fired rockets today, including one that struck a residential district about a half-mile from the Hotel Intercontinental, witnesses said.

'Disappeared' alive

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — A human rights leader says many of the Mexico's disappeared people are still alive, the government news agency Notimex reported.

Rosario Ibarra de Piedra, leader of the Committee for the Politically Disappeared, or Eureka, said Tuesday that families of the disappeared would present Interior Secretary Fernando Gutierrez Barrios with evidence showing that their relatives are alive.

She said she had 100 witnesses who had seen several of the disappeared alive.

About 1,000 people are jailed in Mexico for political reasons and about 500 are missing, she says.

Soviets bid farewell to Gromyko, known as Kremlin's 'Mr. Nyet'

MOSCOW (AP) — Hundreds of people filed past the flower-adorned open casket of Andrei A. Gromyko today to bid farewell to the man who steered Soviet diplomacy through the Cold War and detente.

Diplomats and commoners lined the sidewalk for several blocks under gray skies as they waited to enter the turquoise-colored Central Soviet Army House in north Moscow.

A black-and-white portrait of Gromyko, featuring the dour face that earned him the nickname "Grim Grom," hung at the entrance.

Because Gromyko held no public office when he died, he received a private funeral, but the official media gave accolades to the man who served as foreign minister for 28 years and retired gracefully from the presidency nine months ago when Mikhail S. Gorbachev eased him out of power.

Gromyko died Sunday at age 79.

"His name is connected with the huge successes of Soviet foreign policy, directed at the relaxation of international tension and consolidation of world peace," Vitaly I. Vorotnikov, premier of the Russian federation, told 300 mourners at Novodevichy Cemetery before Gromyko was buried.

Vorotnikov, a member of the ruling Politburo, was the most senior Soviet official at the 15-minute ceremony.

Gorbachev and Eduard A. Shevardnadze, who suceeded Gromyko as foreign minister, were on an official visit to France.

As a drizzle wet mourners, Gromyko was buried among the ornate graves of the Soviet elite at Novodevichy, the most prestigious Soviet resting place after Red Square. A military honor guard fired a salute as workers shoveled soil over his red and black coffin.

Gromyko's son, Anatoly — who followed in his father's foreign policy footsteps and heads a Kremlin think tank on African affairs — shook his head solemnly as he held the hand of his veiled, weeping mother, Lydia.

Prominent Soviet writers, actors, cosmonauts and political and military figures are buried in Novodevichy. Buried there are such Soviet leaders as Nikita S. Khrushchev, Nikolai A. Bulganin and Vyacheslav M. Molotov.

As he lay in state earlier, Gromyko's body was surrounded by his 29 medals displayed on red cushions. Among the awards were Hero of Socialist Labor and the country's highest civilian honor, the Order of Lenin, which he received six times.

The cause of Gromyko's death was not announced, but a Soviet source said today he had been hospitalized for three weeks and died when his aorta burst. He had been diagnosed as having circulatory problems five years ago, the source said on condition of anonymity.

Gromyko became foreign minister after serving as ambassador to the United States during World War II, to the United Nations and to Britain in a half-century of public service.

He was a fixture in world diplomacy for decades, helping forge the Alliance that won World War II, joining in founding the United Nations and participating in superpower talks that shaped the modern world.

But when Gorbachev rose to power in March 1985, he eased Gromyko out of the ruling elite, steering Kremlin foreign policy toward a new, nonconfrontational approach.

Some Soviets have said Gromyko shared the blame for foreign policy mistakes, such as the 1979 Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. The confrontational approach he represented was reflected in another nickname, "Mr. Nyet."

Those attending the funeral echoed the reserved respect.

"He represented old times," said navy officer Andrei N. Pochtarev. "Now we must have a new approach. Times have changed."

Andrei Gromyko, 1909 - 1989

WILLIAM MOORE, et al. v. EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, et al.
No. 88-034911, 295th JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION AND PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

TO ALL PRESENT OR FORMER EMPLOYEES OF THE REXENE CORPORATION, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, REXENE PRODUCTS COMPANY, A DELAWARE CORPORATION, (FORMERLY KNOWN AS EL PASO PRODUCTS COMPANY, INCLUDING ITS PREDECESSOR, A TEXAS CORPORATION), OR ANY OF THEIR DIRECT OR INDIRECT SUBSIDIARIES (COLLECTIVELY, THE "COMPANY") WHOSE DESIGNATED EMPLOYMENT LEVEL AT ANY TIME FROM JANUARY 1, 1984 THROUGH APRIL 13, 1988, INCLUSIVE, WAS GRADE 9 OR BELOW (THE "CLASS");

Your rights may be affected by a lawsuit pending in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, William Moore, et al. v. El Paso Products Company, et al., Civil Action No. 88-034911 (the "Class Action Lawsuit"), and a proposed settlement of the Class Action Lawsuit. The three named plaintiffs, Messrs. William Moore, Michael Gibson and Richard Siler, are the designated Class Representatives (the "Class Representatives"). Class Counsel are Ronald G. Franklin and Gregory N. Jones of Hill, Parker, Franklin, Cardwell & Jones of Houston, Texas, and Jacks C. Nickens and Justin M. Campbell III of Miller, Bristow & Brown also of Houston, Texas (the "Class Counsel"). The Class Representatives, Class Counsel and all but two of the Defendants have agreed to the proposed settlement, and they recommend that all Class members accept the proposed settlement.

William Moore, Michael Gibson, and Richard Siler commenced the Class Action lawsuit on behalf of themselves and the other members of the Class on June 16, 1988. The defendants are Rexene Corporation, El Paso Products Company (now known as Rexene Products Company), Ellen W. Noel as Independent Executrix of the Estate of W. D. Noel, deceased, O. R. Clements, John B. Mason, Bobby E. Seltz, Val G. Bennett, Patrick E. Munn, Andrew J. Smith, Werner F. Goeckel, Miller C. Hawkins, and Fred S. Valles. The plaintiffs allege that the individual defendants, on behalf of themselves and the Company, in an effort to induce the Class to contribute their labor to the Company and join them in the struggle to save the Company, promised the Class stock ownership in the Company. The Class alleges that the defendants misrepresented their intent, failed to satisfy their promises, and made other fraudulent misrepresentations and omissions through which they obtained the benefits of the Class' commitment to the Company and profited at the expense of the Class.

Defendants deny the Class's allegations of wrongdoing in all respects. They deny having made any misrepresentations or material omissions, and they affirmatively contend that the Company was employee-owned and that they satisfied any obligations to the employees by establishing a Stock Bonus Plan pursuant to which all participants shared in the ownership of the Company.

On June 8, 1989, the Court determined that this lawsuit should be maintained as a class action on behalf of all present and former employees of the Rexene Corporation, Rexene Products Company, formerly known as El Paso Products Company (including its predecessor, a Texas corporation) or any of their direct or indirect subsidiaries whose designated employment level at any time from January 1, 1984 through April 13, 1988, inclusive, was grade 9 or below. The court has preliminarily approved a settlement between the Class and the settling defendants. If you are a member of the Class, you may be entitled to a portion of the Settlement Fund. Also, if you are a member of the Class, you have the right to exclude yourself from the Class or to object to the settlement. In either event, you will be required to mail certain information to the Committee of Counsel.

Persons who have been identified as possible members of the Class are being advised by mail of their rights with respect to the lawsuit. This Notice is being published because some Class members may not receive the mailed notice either because they have not been identified as members of the Class or the mailing information is inaccurate or otherwise incorrect. If you are (or may be) a member of the Class but do not receive individual notice of your rights by June 30, 1989, you should notify immediately the Committee of Counsel, Rexene Products Company Litigation, P.O. Box 53353, Houston, Texas 77010, giving your correct name, telephone number, current address and social security number. You will then be mailed a more detailed explanation of your rights in this litigation and be placed on the mailing list for any future notifications regarding this suit.

A hearing for final approval of the settlement is scheduled in the 295th Judicial District Court of Harris County, Texas, on August 2, 1989, 8:00 a.m. If you have not received notice by mail, you should notify the Committee of Counsel immediately at the address listed above. To exclude yourself from the Class or object to the settlement, you must do so in writing and mail your exclusion request or objection to the Committee of Counsel postmarked no later than July 26, 1989, or you may forfeit and lose forever valuable rights.
