By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District saw a net gain of 23 students this past week and Ector County reported 112 children left school, marking the highest loss there in a one-week period this academic year.

The weekly enrollment reports — covering Dec. 19 and Jan. 10 — showed Midland ISD enrollment down 192 students compared to the same period last year. Ector County has suffered a loss of 985 students.

Latest figures are expected to be released by both school districts Friday.

Becky Ferguson, coordinator of communications for the Midland ISD, said there are 18,836 students now. Last year at this time, enrollment was 19,028.

Chuck Horning, Ector County ISD communications director, said there are 25,250 students currently enrolled. At this time last year, enrollment topped 26,235.

Peak enrollment for Midland ISD was Sept. 19, 1986, when 19,145 students were enrolled. Last week's enrollment report is down 309 from that number.

Ector County enrollment peaked on Sept. 18, 1986, with 25,680 students — down 430 from last week's report.

Enrollment figures normally fluctuate during school holidays as families move in and out of the community, said Horning. However, the substantial loss this year has raised concern among school officials.

"The 112 is certainly a sign we need to look at," he said.

Horning said officials will look at enrollment during two other critical times this year when the grading period ends and near spring break.

Larry Lusby, director of Midland ISD computer and special services, said the declining enrollments between the two school districts appears to be greater when studied on the basis of numbers alone.

"On a percentage basis it's not that much greater," he said.

MISD gained 26 students at the primary level and nine students at the intermediate level last week. The district lost 18 students from the junior high schools and 23 from its senior high schools.

Enrollment in special education increased by 29 students last week, while the district's pre-kindergarten and Headstart programs showed no change.

Overall, enrollment at the primary level is down 33 students from the same time last year, while intermediate enrollment dropped by 113 students.

Midland, Winkler groundwater sites studied

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

South Midland County and south Winkler County are among 10 Texas locations which state officials say need more study as possible critical groundwater sites.

Originally, 17 locations were chosen by the Texas Water Commission and Water Development Board as possible critical groundwater areas.

Southeast Midland County is being considered because of water level declines from the Edwards-Trinity aquifer and possible contamination by oil field brines, a TWC report said.

At a Sept. 23 hearing in Midland, the commission met public opposition to the proposed designation of sites. Some people who attended the hearing feared a critical groundwater designation could lead to an underground conservation district — and higher taxes.

State Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, who has helped form several water conservation districts, said Wednesday he wasn't surprised the Midland area and the Winkler County area will be studied further as future critical groundwater sites.

"I'm not surprised. As much oil as we have in the Permian Basin, there are some spills and there is some pollution in the Permian Basin," Sims said.

Sims also said water conservation districts allow local people to control their future water resources.

"I fail to see how an underground water district would be adverse. They allow local people to maintain control over their destiny and in most cases very little taxes are paid. Most of them are for the protection of underground water," he said.

While oil field pollution is becoming a problem in the Permian Basin, Sims said, "Aquifers are not in bad shape now, but we cannot afford to let them get into bad shape."

The water commission and development board will form advisory committees among local officials in each area, said Polly Coffin, a TWC spokeswoman.

A report will be prepared by the agencies and the advisory committee on whether a water conservation district should be formed.

Utilities Director John Lowe said he wants to serve on an advisory committee to be set up in the Winkler County area.

Along with leasing water in southern Winkler County, the city of Midland owns about 700,000 acre-feet of water in the northern part of the county know as the T-Bar area.

"The city of Midland does have some major water rights that we have purchased and plan to use for our future and we should have some input in a water conservation district," Lowe said.

If a groundwater conservation district is recommended, public hearings and an election will be held before a final decision is made, Ms. Coffin said.

U.S. officials controlled arms flights, sources say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Reagan administration officials and a CIA officer controlled arms flights to Nicaraguan rebels last year until the operation ended when one of those flights was shot down, according to U.S. government and private sources.

The flights, during a period when Congress had banned U.S. military aid to the rebels, were overseen by Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams, White House aide Lt. Col. Oliver L. North and a CIA officer in charge of covert support for the rebels, said the sources who insisted on anonymity.

North was fired Nov. 25 for his role in allegedly diverting Iranian arms sales profits to aid the Contras. Abrams, assistant for inter-American affairs, remains the State Department's chief official on Central American. The CIA officer belongs to the spy agency's clandestine services, and The Associated Press withheld his name out of concern for his safety.

One private American source in the aid network described the three officials as "a triad" who made all key decisions on the Contras, including distribution of weapons from the purportedly private aid network. A well-placed administration source confirmed that the three officials managed the arms flow to the rebels during 1986.

Another administration official said Abrams participated in decisions about the "private" aid network, but North handled the operation's details, including what to do after the resupply operation was exposed Oct. 5, when a C-123K cargo plane was shot down killing two Americans and leaving Eugene Hasenfus captive. Hasenfus was later released by Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

North, Abrams and the CIA officer served together on a senior interagency group on Nicaragua, the sources said. One source said the "triad" arrangement replaced North's near-singlehanded control over the private aid network during 1985.

Varied events mark King's birthday

ATLANTA (AP) — Martin Luther King Jr., who would have turned 58 today, was remembered on the eve of the federal holiday in his memory by hundreds who packed the church where "the peaceful warrior" began fighting racism.

The bittersweet service Wednesday night at Ebenezer Baptist Church was one of many remembrances this week and next here in King's hometown and across the nation.

Two events are on tap in Midland this weekend in memory of King. The local chapter of the NAACP will present the film, "Brother President: They Story of Dr. Martin Luther King" on Saturday.

There will be three showings — at 2, 6 and 8 p.m. — at Midland Center, 105 N. Main. Tickets are $2 for adults and $1 for children under the age of 12.

On Sunday, the Midland Parks and Recreation Department will host the dedication of Martin Luther King Jr. Park at the corner of North Carver and Hemlock streets.

It is slated for 3 p.m.

In case of inclement weather, the dedication will be held Sunday, Jan. 25, at 3 p.m.

Today is the anniversary of King's birth, but the federal government and some states will observe it as a holiday on Monday. It was first observed last year.

Homeless onlookers cheer as baby born at shelter

The Bright Side

HOUSTON (AP) — A firefighter and paramedic helped deliver a baby boy before about 40 cheering residents who had gathered for breakfast at a shelter for the homeless.

Firefighter David Deschner and paramedic Patrick Thomas aided 38-year-old Cheryl George in delivering the eight-pound boy Wednesday morning at the Star of Hope Family Shelter in Houston.

"We had just gotten her on the stretcher when she suddenly hollered, 'It's coming,'" Deschner said. "We took a look and, sure enough, she was crowning and we could see the little head."

"We knew right away she would never make it to the ambulance," he said.

Donning gloves, Deschner and Thomas knelt alongside the stretcher and went to work while residents who forgot about their breakfast crowded into the hallway, peered over partitions and lifting their children to watch.

"All of a sudden, right before our eyes, there was a little boy," said shelter supervisor Alma Villafranca. "It was really, really a blessing."

The delivery also was quick. About 25 minutes elapsed between the time the ambulance was called and the paramedics wrapped the baby in a blanket.

"The very next contraction did it," Deschner said. "We just told her to push and there was the baby."

Shelter residents who watched the birth applauded and gave a standing ovation.

Ms. George and her son were taken to Jefferson Davis Hospital. Shelter officials said the two can return to the shelter until they can manage on their own.

Prison problems could affect county

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Midland County officials said Wednesday problems of overcrowding could be managed if the state's prison system reaches capacity and refuses new admissions, but said the situation if it lasts is a potential nightmare.

Wednesday, a prison spokesman said the Texas Department of Corrections was 22 inmates short of hitting a federal court-ordered limit of 95 percent capacity. On Monday, the system was just five inmates short, and that day the prison board approved a motion requiring that the doors be shut if that limit is reached.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman said he has been monitoring the situation.

"I can find no authority that would allow the Texas Department of Corrections to refuse to accept prisoners," he said.

Dettman said he read the Prison Management Act of 1983, and found references to inmate capacity and early release of inmates, but found nothing about the refusal of the agency to accept transfer prisoners from the state's 254 counties.

Suspect arrested in 1985 TWA hijacking

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Police have arrested a suspect in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner to Beirut, the Frankfurt prosecutor's office said today. The Lebanese man was carrying what authorities suspected were explosives.

The man was arrested at Frankfurt airport Tuesday after customs police discovered he was carrying "material that could be explosives," Jochen Schroers, a spokesman for Frankfurt prosecutor Hans-Eberhard Klein, told The Associated Press.

Authorities believe the man was preparing a bomb attack, but it is unclear whether the attack was to have been in West Germany, Schroers said.

Police declined to give the suspect's name. He is in investigative custody and has not been formally charged.

The TWA airliner was hijacked June 14, 1985, on a flight from Athens to Rome. It was taken to Beirut, where the hijackers killed a U.S. Navy diver and held 39 other Americans for 17 days before releasing them.

The man arrested Tuesday had flown to Frankfurt from Beirut on Middle East Airlines, Schroers said.

The suspect, who was carrying a forged passport, was identified by fingerprints as one of the hijackers of the TWA plane, security sources said. The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he is believed to belong to a Shiite Moslem group.

Zimmermann said authorities had found "material" on the man that could help in further investigations.

Restaurateur indicted in explosion

FORT WORTH (AP) — A restaurateur has been indicted on charges that he ignited a natural gas explosion in a competitor's eatery that destroyed his own restaurant and more than a quarter of a downtown block.

In an indictment issued Wednesday, federal grand jurors accused Benjamin C. McClelland, 25, co-owner of Casey's Restaurant, of setting off the Dec. 7 blast in the neighboring Santini's Sub Shop.

Authorities have said the explosion was triggered by a disconnected gas line in the sub shop. The blast did about $2.5 million in damage, destroying the two restaurants and four nearby businesses and damaging 37 other downtown businesses.

"They're barking up the wrong tree," McClelland said after learning of the indictment. "It is a complete surprise to me."

Shortly before 5 p.m. Wednesday, McClelland was arrested in his car in west Fort Worth, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Fred Schattman. McClelland faces up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted.

Schattman and investigators declined to discuss the case or a motive. They also declined to say whether there would be more indictments in the case.

"We have said that he caused the explosion, (that) he damaged and destroyed by means of an explosive the building and that Nolan Estes was injured as a result," Schattman said.

Although the indictment makes no reference to natural gas, Schattman said "a deliberate natural gas leak would fall into the definition of an explosive."

Estes, a University of Texas at Austin professor and a former Dallas school superintendent who was a guest at the Worthington Hotel, received leg wounds from flying glass caused by the 3:30 a.m. blast. No one else was hurt.

James D. Woolsey, owner of Santini's, said Wednesday that he suspected the blast was caused by a vengeful competitor.

"It was revenge," Woolsey said. "They went through all kinds of trouble to put me out of business."

Woolsey leased the shop and ran it with his wife, Hisako. He estimates his loss at $30,000.

Woolsey opened Santini's last January after moving from another downtown location. Casey's had been in business for about four months.

Woolsey said McClelland first welcomed him as a neighbor but soon became competitive. He said McClelland often duplicated the Santini's menu and once put a sign in his window that said, "Don't eat at Santini's."

McClelland was to spend the night in Tarrant County Jail and then be taken before U.S. Magistrate Alex McGlinchey today, Schattman said.

Bank teller slams door on would-be robber

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A man attempting to rob a bank hastily retreated to his car when a suspicious teller slammed a door in his face, authorities said.

Two people remained in jail in connection with the attempted robbery of the Southern National Bank in Corpus Christi. Charges will be filed today, police said.

On Tuesday afternoon, a woman working in the main bank area was stopped by a man as she was leaving, police said.

The man grabbed the woman and said, "This is a robbery," according to a police spokesman who asked not to be identified. "He said, 'We're going to go to the bank to get some money,' and then he put a gun to her head."

She told him the vault in the main bank was already locked. The man told her to go to the drive-through bank, according to police.

But the teller at the drive-through door suspected something was wrong and opened the door only far enough to let the woman inside, the spokesman said. She then slammed the door in the man's face, police said.

The man fled to a waiting car that drove away, police said. The two suspects were arrested hours later.

Woman says ex-husband terrorized her

SAN ANGELO (AP) — A 20-year-old San Angelo man was jailed after his ex-wife told police he stripped off her clothes, burned her chest with a cigarette, raped her and threatened to have some of his friends come over and pull out her fingernails.

The man, whose name was withheld to preserve his ex-wife's anonymity, was accused in a formal complaint filed Wednesday with Justice of the Peace Ruth Nicholson of aggravated kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault.

Rolls of masking tape and electrical tape — identical to that with which the victim was bound — were found in his pockets at the time of his arrest about 2 a.m. Wednesday, patrolman Glenn Gesch said.

The woman told police she was terrorized over a three-hour period beginning about 10:30 p.m. Tuesday.

She said her ex-husband was waiting outside her apartment in northwest San Angelo when she arrived with their small child. She allowed him inside after he said he wanted to talk to the child, she said, but once inside he locked the child in a bedroom and began threatening her.

She said he grabbed her by the hair, dragged her into the bathroom and knocked her to the floor. He ordered her to remove all her clothing, she said, then pushed her head into the side of the bathtub and began kicking her in the head and body. Then he threatened to have some of his friends come over and pull her fingernails out, she told officers.

After dragging her into the living room, he began burning her chest with a cigarette, she said. He later forced her into her car and drove away, leaving their child locked up and unattended, she said.

They drove to a residence, where she said she was tied up with tape, arms behind her back, and raped, she told police. Later, her ex-husband took her to another house, where he stopped the vehicle and walked away.

The woman said she drove back to her apartment, got her child and went to the apartment manager's office.

Officer S. Deen Dickson said when he took the woman's complaint a few minutes later, she had a severe bruise under her right eye and minor cuts about the face and neck. Masking tape and electrical tape were wrapped around her neck and wrists, Dickson said.

Another officer arrested the woman's ex-husband a short time later. He had been reported driving at a high rate of speed.

Texas leads Southwest in defense work

DALLAS (AP) — Texas again led the Southwest in the value and number of defense contracts held at the end of 1986 and paced the region's growth in defense awards, officials say.

The region's obligated value of defense contracts rose to a record $19.2 billion at the end of last year, up 19 percent from $16.1 billion at the end of 1985, the Defense Contract Administration Service Region in Dallas reported Wednesday.

Total number of contracts administered increased to 33,007 from 31,010 at the end of 1985. The number of prime contractors in the Southwestern region also rose to 1,914 last year from 1,856 in 1985.

Texas dominated the region's growth in defense contracting, with $13.5 billion in contracts at the end of the year, up from $11.5 billion at the end of 1985. The number of Texas contracts rose slightly to 21,639 from 21,549 a year earlier.

Arizona was the Southwest's second-largest contracting state with $2.6 billion in awards, followed by Arkansas with $1.2 billion, Oklahoma with $795 million, New Mexico with $778.5 million and Louisiana with $92.3 million.

All five states posted gains in number and value of contracts.

Texas Instruments Inc. of Dallas was the region's top defense contractor with $6 billion in contracts. That accounted for almost half of Texas' total.

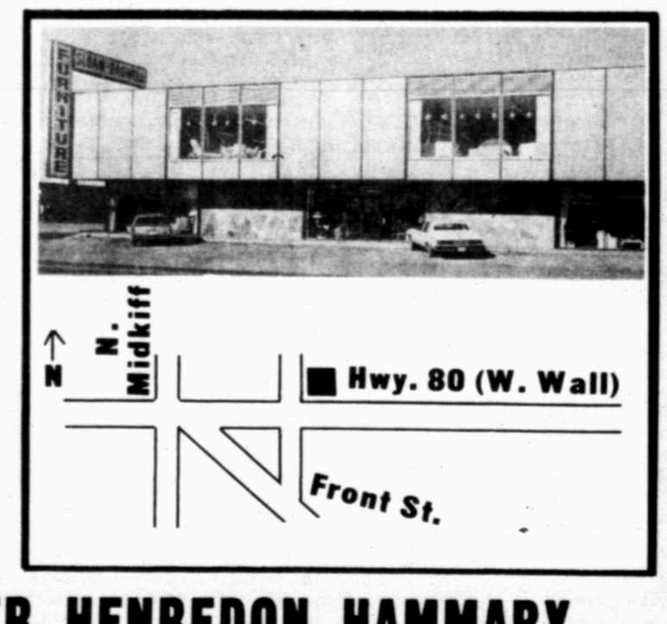

The region's other four top defense companies were Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. in Austin with $1.2 billion in contracts; E-Systems Inc.'s Greenville division with $1.07 billion; General Dynamics Corp. in East Camden, Ark., with $1.02 billion; and Rockwell International Corp. in Richardson with $957 million.

White calls for tax reform, urges support for education reform

By STEVE LEVINE
and JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

White

AUSTIN — With just one week remaining in office, Gov. Mark White Wednesday recommended a tax reform plan and a "modest and minimal" budget that could lead lawmakers out of a projected $5.8 billion deficit.

In his last major speech as governor, White urged legislators to "stand firm" and protect the education reforms that observers touted as the legacy he leaves Texas after four turbulent years in office.

"I go with confidence that the good things we have done will endure," White said in a 35-minute address sprinkled with humor, many of the jokes at his own expense.

The governor, who leaves office when Bill Clements takes the oath at noon Tuesday, stressed the importance of education in diversifying the state's economy away from the last half century's dependence on now-depleting oil and gas resources and in giving youth the skills to stay out of jail.

"Prisons or schools, ultimately that's the choice," White told a joint session of the Legislature. "One produces winners, the other is for losers...I'd rather see Texas spend its money building winners with better schools than have to spend it building bigger prisons for losers."

White endorsed broadening the state's sales tax base to include all goods and services but food and medicine. Reducing the sales tax rate to 3 percent, he said, would "generate sufficient revenues to cover essential services in normal periods of economic growth."

To finance state government while the economy recovers from the current recession, the governor suggested imposing a 2.25-cent surcharge — bringing the total rate to the current 5.25 cents on the dollar — until Aug. 31, 1989. He also recommended that lawmakers extend until 1989 the "temporary" nickel-a-gallon gasoline tax increase enacted last summer.

White's $39.5 billion spending plan for 1988-1989 calls for increases in education, prisons, highways and some social services.

"The unknown quantity is Mr. Clements," said Rep. Jerry Clark, D-Buna. "We'll get a look at that in a few days."

Clements is expected to lay out his fiscal priorities, with strong emphasis on addressing the deficit through budget cuts and bureaucratic reorganization, by the end of the month. Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston and chairman of Clements' task force on the state budget, said Wednesday he was dismayed by White's immediate call for new taxes.

"We're back to tax first and then cuts," said Toomey, who maintained that White's early call for higher taxes during last summer's special sessions crippled attempts to impose deep spending reductions.

Senate Finance Committee Chairman Grant Jones, D-Temple, said he expects lawmakers to strongly consider broadening the sales tax base. "Whether we'll go that far, I don't know," Jones said of White's suggestions.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said "it's way too early" to predict just what legislators will do by the time the 70th Legislature adjourns June 1. "The process has to work, that's why we have committees, that's the reason the reason we designate certain jurisdiction to those committees and we'll have to wait for those committees to report back to us before we make any final conclusions," Lewis said.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen and chairman of the House tax writing committee, said he believes Clements expects the House to concentrate on cuts first. "But I'll be real surprised if Governor Clements doesn't come down with a real firm plan and also talk taxes," Schlueter said.

Lawmakers say history will be kind to White

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers predict history will be kind to lame duck Gov. Mark White, although voters booted him from office.

White drew standing ovations from the Legislature before and after his Wednesday farewell speech to a joint session. Legislators said it was a good speech, but some said it was too late.

"If he had made that type of speech in the campaign he might well have been re-elected," said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Temple.

Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, said it was easy for White to offer a detailed plan for economic recovery, including a major overhaul of the Texas tax system.

"It's always good to be able to throw the ball on Monday morning," Stiles said. "I'm not being derogatory about that, but the simple fact is there would have been a different speech if he had won re-election."

"I'm not sure you would have had the up-front talk about tax increases. You would have had more talk about efficiency measures," Stiles said.

White, a Democrat, was beaten in March by Republican Bill Clements, who takes office Tuesday.

Some lawmakers said White's decisiveness in the economic plan he offered Wednesday — which will be largely ignored by lawmakers — was overdue.

Rep. Edmund Kuempel, R-Seguin, said, "He did care for the people, but sometimes he did not make the cold, hard decision when it first popped up. I think this is what the people were upset about."

"He did not have a sense of purpose independent of what the polls showed," said Rep. Brad Wright, R-Houston, adding that he has heard from Democratic lawmakers who were "not enthusiastic" about White.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said White made "an excellent speech."

"I think his legacy will be he worked hard, he tried hard, he had commitments and convictions he implemented and tried to carry out," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

Rep. Steve Carriker, D-Roby, said history's view of White will be similar to its view of a recent president.

"It will probably be a lot of the same things history will eventually say about Jimmy Carter — a very decent person, fairly competent, largely a victim of circumstances of the time. And it would have taken a politician of incredible stature to overcome the circumstances," Carriker said.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, said, "I think they are going to say he took a lot of important issues for Texas by the horns."

STATE IN BRIEF

Jet lands with one engine

HOUSTON (AP) — A Delta flight from Dallas to Houston landed using one engine at Intercontinental Airport after requesting an emergency landing, officials said.

There were no injuries on Flight 572, a DC-9 that carried 93 passengers and crew members on Wednesday, said Bill Ainsworth, spokesman for the Houston Department of Aviation.

"It landed without incident," he said. "It was handled well."

The pilot radioed to air controllers that one engine had shut down about 15 miles from the Houston airport and asked to land immediately, Ainsworth said.

Steel company lays off

WACO (AP) — More than 200 of the 250 workers at Waco's Central Texas Iron Works will be laid off over the next several weeks, officials said Wednesday.

The layoffs stem from reduced demand for the company's products, officials said. The plant is one of the major structural steel fabricators for oil refineries and petrochemical plants.

"Unfortunately, there are no major new refineries or petrochemical plants being built in the United States now, and it appears that none will be built in the next few years," the company said in a release.

The layoffs begin Friday, but there is no schedule on when the layoffs will be completed.

Escapee held in slayings

VAN HORN (AP) — A Michigan prison escapee is being held in Culberson County Jail in lieu of $200,000 bond on charges of capital murder in the slayings of two people in Pecos and Jeff Davis counties, authorities said.

William Day, 35, was charged in connection with the killing Monday of 53-year-old Stanley Robertson of Valentine, and the Jan. 6 abduction-murder of a Fort Stockton bar owner, Billie Taylor.

"He has been formally charged with capital murder in Jeff Davis County and In Pecos County," a Jeff Davis Sheriff's Department spokeswoman said Wednesday. "Bond of $100,000 was set in each case."

Harvey Adams, Jeff Davis County sheriff, said Robertson, the truck's owner, was found dead in his home about 35 miles from Van Horn.

Day also is suspected in an assault and robbery at a liquor store in Van Horn.

Lawmaker has surgery

AMARILLO (AP) — State Sen. Bill Sarpalius was in satisfactory condition at a Panhandle hospital after undergoing a six-hour operation.

A statement released Wednesday said doctors removed a loose bone fragment near the lawmaker's spinal cord after finding a piece on the front side of the senator's spine. Doctors also took a bone chip from Sarpalius' hip and fused it with a damaged vertebra. The fusion surgery was the second performed this month on Sarpalius.

He was expected to remain in intensive care for two to three days and continue recuperating at the hospital another two weeks.

Yuli Vorontsov, the new Soviet delegation head, greeted U.S. chief negotiator Max Kampelman in front of his residence at the Soviet mission compound at 1 p.m.

The two men, who were meeting for the first time, greeted each other warmly by shaking hands, smiling and slapping each other on the back as snow fell.

The two negotiators declined to answer reporters' questions.

The official Soviet news agency Tass today quoted Vorontsov as saying in an interview that the Soviets see their principal task as making progress in the 22-month-old arms talks.

He said the two sides should proceed from the understandings reached at the U.S.-Soviet summit last October in Iceland, and that his side would seek to make the Geneva talks "concrete" and "constructive," according to the report in Moscow.

U.S. spokesman Terry Shroeder said Kampelman accepted Vorontsov's luncheon invitation "as a courtesy." Shroeder said he had no details on what meetings would be scheduled after the luncheon.

Vorontsov told reporters Wednesday upon arriving in Geneva that he hoped this round of talks would be successful, but refused to say if he was carrying any new proposals.

But Soviet Ambassador Yuri V. Dubinin told a news conference in Washington on Wednesday that it is up to the United States to respond to existing Soviet offers.

Similarly, Kampelman said Wednesday that the United States already has proposals on the table that address areas of agreement between the two sides, and said referring to the Soviets, "The next significant move must come from them."

Vorontsov's predecessor, Viktor Karpov, said in an interview published Wednesday in the Washington Post that he expects no progress in the new because Kampelman plans to wait for the Soviets to make concessions rather than offering them himself.

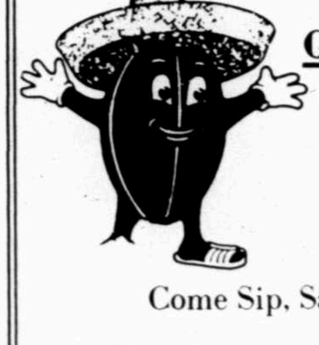

Karpov heads the arms control desk at the Foreign Ministry, a lower rank than Vorontsov, who is a first secretary to Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

Karpov was quoted as saying that Vorontsov's appointment was intended to prompt the United States to replace Kampelman with a top State Department official. Dubinin, however, said the Kremlin was not trying to hurt Kampelman.

Kampelman was promoted Monday to the post of State Department counselor in a move the U.S. administration said was not linked to the Soviet shuffle. Kampelman's appointment must be approved by the Senate.

It was not clear what impact the wrangling over the status of the delegations would have on the talks, which have been bogged down from the start by disagreement over U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative research for a space-based missile defense, popularly called "Star Wars."

The Soviet Union has insisted the United States limit its research and has made agreement in other areas conditional on compliance with the request.

KING

U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett was scheduled to teach an elementary school class today on King's achievements, then speak at the King Center for Nonviolent Social Change. Gov. Joe Frank Harris also planned a tribute to the Baptist minister who won the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize.

King was assassinated in 1968 as he stood on a motel balcony in Memphis, Tenn. His daughter, Yolanda King, was to attend a musical tribute to her father there tonight.

In the 2½-hour ceremony Wednesday night at Ebenezer Baptist, ministers remembered King and spoke of the need to keep working for his dream of peace and justice achieved through non-violence.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Joseph L. Roberts Jr., welcomed the congregation to the place "where the peaceful warrior began his battle" and spoke against bloodshed.

The Rev. Timothy McDonald of Atlanta's First Iconium Baptist Church painted a bleak picture of America.

"The truth has been gagged," McDonald said. "Righteousness has been locked up. ... The Statue of Liberty has blown out her torch and sat down.

"I wish we could allow Dr. King to rest in peace. But as long as racism is alive, Martin, you cannot rest.

"They thought they could kill the dream if they killed the dreamer. But the dream is alive and well."

The Rev. John Fife, pastor of the Sanctuary Movement Southside Presbyterian Church of Tucson, Ariz., said King's example helped his congregation decide to provide sanctuary to Central American refugees.

"History will look back and say Martin Luther King became the Martin Luther of the new Reformation," said Fife, who is on five years' probation for illegally harboring refugees and was in Atlanta by special legal permission.

The minister also apologized for Arizona Gov. Evan Mecham's cancellation Monday of Jan. 19 as the state's King holiday.

Mecham, a Republican, rescinded the order of his Democratic predecessor, Bruce Babbitt, making the day a holiday. The governor said Babbitt was "pandering to blacks" and lacked the authority to issue the order.

Other scheduled observances today included the unveiling of a King bust at Rhode Island's Statehouse, the naming of a plaza for King in Omaha, Neb., and a speech in Little Rock, Ark., by Lottie Shackelford, the city's first black female mayor.

In Mississippi, the state House was expected to consider a bill making Monday a holiday honoring King. Like many Southern states, Mississippi honors Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee on Jan. 19, his birthday.

In other King observances Wednesday, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which King founded, and the National Conference of Christians and Jews held interfaith prayer breakfasts in Los Angeles.

Lone Ranger retrieves stolen guns

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — The Lone Ranger retrieved his stolen guns and silver bullets, then rode off in a cloud of dust with a hearty "Hi Ho Silver!"

The horse was absent; actor Clayton Moore was in a Mercedes, Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. John Flaherty said.

But the dust was real.

"The wind cooperated," said Flaherty, who heads the detective bureau at the Malibu sheriff's station, where Moore picked up the weapons Wednesday. "As he left our parking lot a huge cloud of dust did go up in the air, and he did yell 'Hi Ho Silver!' as he left."

And the masked man left a familiar calling card.

"I have in my hand here one bullet, silver, .45 Colt," said Flaherty, 44, who grew up with the old "Lone Ranger" radio and television series.

"It has on the base of it 'The Lone Ranger.' I'm thinking about making it part of a pen set for my desk."

He said the bullet is solid silver in a casing that contains a dummy firing cap and no powder.

Houston police and the Texas Rangers are investigating who took Moore's suitcase after it was checked through a Continental Airlines ticket counter on Christmas Eve at Houston's airport, Flaherty said. The bag vanished somewhere between the counter and the plane Moore took to Los Angeles.

Two costumes, including a neckerchief with silver clasp, remain missing. The guns, bullets and belts are worth "somewhere in the neighborhood of $12,000," Flaherty said.

The pistols were bought by a Texas collector who didn't realize the items were reported missing, attorney Lum Hawthorn of Beaumont, Texas, said Tuesday.

The gear was returned by the collector, who did not want to be identified.

Conviction unlikely in Clements bugging

AUSTIN (AP) — Although the FBI has developed a considerable amount of circumstantial evidence, authorities do not believe they could win a conviction in the bugging of a campaign office of Gov.-elect Bill Clements, the Austin American-Statesman reported today.

Officially, the FBI says its investigation remains active. Technically, the bureau will keep the case open until the statute of limitations — five years — expires, or until someone is indicted and tried.

Privately, the newspaper said, federal authorities acknowledge that their investigation became stymied before the Nov. 4 election and they don't expect the case to be solved.

Both the case agent, Austin FBI Agent Greg Rampton, and Helen Eversberg, the U.S attorney for the Western District, declined comment.

But the Statesman said sources who wished to remain unidentified indicated Eversberg's office, whose staff last year presented evidence to an Austin grand jury, decided that they did not have a case they could win shortly before the election in which Clements defeated Gov. Mark White.

While the extent of evidence presented to the grand jury is not known, sources said that authorities subpoenaed financial and other records of a Fort Worth security firm hired to do an electronic sweep of the Austin offices of Clements aide Karl Rove.

The bug was found in Rove's suite of offices the night of Oct. 5 by two private investigators from Knight Diversified Services Inc.

Days before the election and three weeks into the investigation, Eversberg said federal authorities no longer suspected that the device was placed by political operatives from either campaign.

At the time of her announcement, Eversberg declined to say whom, if anybody, the FBI suspected, or what evidence was presented to the grand jury, whose deliberations are secret.

But sources inside and outside the investigation confirmed that the inquiry had narrowed to the two private detectives who reported finding the device in Rove's office hidden behind a framed needlepoint of an elephant, the GOP mascot.

One of those detectives, Bruce Wayne Scott, later told the "American-Statesman" that he had voluntarily taken an FBI-administered polygraph examination. He said he was told by federal officials that the results of the polygraph were satisfactory.

The other detective, Gary L. Morphew, the security firm's founding partner and operations manager, refused to take a polygraph, noting that he was under neither legal nor moral obligation to do so.

Neither was available for comment Wednesday.

According to sources, the federal investigators discovered that:

— Morphew did not inform Scott of the nature of the job until they were en route to Austin the morning of the bug's discovery. It is unclear why Scott was chosen for the operation, since he had no previous experience in electronic bug sweeps.

— The black, matchbox-sized transmitter was found by the private detectives within minutes after they began an electronic sweep of Rove's private office.

Investigators found that the bug was discovered with the use of a hand-held device known as a "hound-dog." Those familiar with the device say its range is limited and that its operation is simplistic.

"You almost have to be within inches (of the hidden bug) before the hound dog will work," said a private investigator familiar with the device.

Earlier that day, the men conducted a sweep for bugs at Clements' statewide headquarters in downtown Austin. They found nothing.

It was initially reported that the bug's power source, a battery, was low, indicating the bug had been in place and operating for a while.

SCHOOLS

There are 183 students less in the junior high schools compared to the same time last year, but 114 more students in the senior high schools.

Pre-kindergarten showed an overall increase of 52 students, but special education and Headstart reported enrollment declines of 26 and three students, respectively.

State funding for Texas school districts is based on Average Daily Attendance during the months of October and March.

To encourage attendance last fall, both Midland and Ector County ISDs offered students incentives, including cash and other prizes.

WATER

Along with a southeast portion of Midland County, other areas proposed for study are the northeastern two-thirds of Upton County excluding McCamey, the northwestern third of Reagan County and a small strip in southwestern Sterling County near the Sterling and Lacy creeks.

Portions of Ector and Glasscock counties, originally proposed for study were removed. A portion of Hudspeth county also was removed.

However, Ms. Coffin said the areas eliminated from the study will continue to be monitored and if conditions change they could be included in future studies.

An area originally proposed around the Loving and Winkler counties has been reduced to contain south Winkler county, a portion of southwest Loving county, central Ward county, most of Reeves county, and a small northwest section of Pecos County.

Is Chinese party committee meeting?

PEKING (AP) — Officials said Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang was too ill to attend a scheduled banquet today, as a convergence of buses outside the Great Hall of the People fueled rumors of a party meeting inside to discuss his ouster.

The party Foreign Affairs Liaison Office had no comment when asked if a Central Committee or Politburo meeting was going on in the hall, where major party meetings usually take place.

East European sources had said the Politburo or Central Committee would convene today.

There was speculation the party would move to oust party chief Hu, 72, who has not been seen in public since Dec. 28, and would formalize a crackdown on pro-Western intellectuals blamed for recent student pro-democracy demonstrations.

Deng met today with Finnish Communist Party leader Arvo Aalto, and told him China will remove all obstacles to socialist development, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

It quoted Deng as saying there is an ideological trend toward "bourgeois liberalization," a phrase used to describe anti-socialist, anti-party sentiments.

PRISON

"Also, under the code of criminal procedure, when an inmate is convicted he will be transferred to the department of corrections," Dettman said. "It is the court's order, and if it is not followed someone is going to be in contempt."

The Prison Management Act was passed by the 68th Legislature two years after Federal Judge William Wayne Justice ordered the state to curb overcrowding of the 38,000 inmate system. Under provisions of the act, if the capacity of the department reaches 95 percent, certain inmates automatically receive credit for 30 days served, which speeds paroles.

In 1983, Jim Estelle, who was TDC director then, refused all new inmate admissions, and in one case, an inmate was left by a county sheriff on state property, handcuffed to a fence.

Dettman said the scenario if TDC refuses new admissions is unclear.

"The law provides for two means (for transferring county prisoners to the state)," he said. "One is for TDC to send the buses out to pick up prisoners, or in the alternative the sheriff would take them down there (to Huntsville). This is only conjecture, but I assume the sheriff would take them down there and depending on the response we received we would move on from there."

Dettman said because the law requires transfer to the state, Midland County could not solve the problem simply by transferring its overflow inmates to another county's facility.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said he spoke two months ago with outgoing TDC Director O.L. "Lane" McCotter, who told him inmate capacity constantly hovers near 95 percent.

"He told us then that they had been above 94 percent capacity since he has been there," Painter said. "And I know personally for the last two or three years it has been that way."

Painter said TDC officials normally would send a teletype to the counties if inmates will not be accepted. But he said if that happened, he would take prisoners to Huntsville anyway.

Painter said the county jail is under a remedial order from the Texas Commission on Jail Standards not to exceed a population of 85 inmates. He said the daily inmate count averages 80.

In 1986, the county transferred 254 prisoners to TDC, up from 184 in 1985, he said.

"If I am getting close to a weekend, and my jail is getting full, and I have four or five TDC prisoners, I am going to send the prisoners on down," he said. "If it is for a month, we are going to be really hurting, because then you are talking about 15 or 20 prisoners."

TDC uses a network of chain buses that circulate around the state and pick up county prisoners. The bus stops once a month in Midland.

Painter said the Prison Management Act is not good for Texans.

"It was done for budget reasons, to appease the state and it has done nothing but hurt the people of Texas," he said. "It increases the chances that (an inmate) will get out and commit the same crime or a worse crime, and it is not fair to the people of Texas."

RAVENNA, Texas (AP) — Overlooking 40 acres of woods and meadows from a hill near here, "Tom" sits at a table in a quiet building, painting a wooden tool box.

Beside him is Michelle Owen, a Valley Creek special education teacher and art therapist at the d'paul Learning Center. She is using art to stimulate creativity and improve functional skills through less-traditional therapy.

Though he can correctly spell words of more than six syllables, 21-year-old Tom can't remember where he left the palette he washed in the kitchen 30 seconds ago.

Injured in a a motorcycle accident at age 16, Tom is typical of many brain-trauma victims. His long-term memory is intact, but he has virtually no short-term memory. After years of acute medical and psychiatric aid, his parents turned to the d'paul Learning Center for help.

Opened Nov. 30, d'paul treats patients with serious head injuries and tries to bring them back into society.

"We aid and assist our clients back into a normal living environment, to help them become as independent as possible," said program director Keith Gant.

The center was begun by Paul Cotten Jr., a Frisco businessman who was reared in Sherman. Dr. Sam Roberts, a Dallas neuropsychologist and clinic director, designed the innovative program used by the center's six staff members to aid brain-trauma patients. Two patients are at the facility here; the building can accommodate six.

The remote, rural setting helps clients "get back to nature," and allows activities like gardening and hikes in the woods.

"We want them to feel like they're not in a hospital," Gant said. "We want them to have open space and freedom."

Patients take part in all of the center's activities, from cooking meals to doing laundry. "We keep them busy from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m.," Gant said.

The day includes therapy, fun and work, while evenings often feature a high school basketball game, bowling or a local play.

The only television set is attached to a computer, which runs educational programs.

The computer sits on a table near the tool box Tom is painting. The center will buy Tom's handiwork when he's finished, teaching Tom the value of work and how to handle money.

When "Dan" finishes the chicken coop he's building in the barn, the center will buy laying hens to place in the coop. Later, the center will buy the eggs.

Everything done at the center, Gant explained, is designed to make patients think. "We don't want them to sit and become vegetables," Gant said. "We keep them active and we make them learn."

Like other patients, Tom helps at meals. But the affable, blond-haired man is learning at the same time. He wants to cook a spaghetti dinner for his family during a visit home.

In his hand is an ordered list of how to prepare the meal. Among the instructions: count the number of people eating; set the table; boil water.

The clients sleep in rooms similiar to college dormitory rooms. Each room has two beds, two closets, a dresser and a bathroom. The patients make their beds and keep the rooms neat. Alarms on the doors and windows alert a staff member, on duty around the clock, if a client leaves his room.

Along with the staff, Tom and Dan eat meals in the main building and go to Bonham to do laundry.

Expansion plans include a wilderness cabin for weekend campouts, an activities deck, and more rooms for clients. The center already boasts a wilderness hiking and jogging trail, as well as a fishing pond.

In addition to providing entertainment, the cabin will be used as therapy. "If we're having a difficult time with a client that we can't resolve, he'll either go to the wilderness cabin with his counselor or go fishing until he calms down," the program director said.

Patients, Gant said, are referred to the center by doctors, hospital rehabilitation centers and insurance companies. Insurers generally pay the cost of the program, which Gant declined to disclose.

Brain-trauma victims like Dan and Tom often end up in institutions for the mentally or emotionally disturbed, Gant said.

"Putting them (patients) in an environment like this makes a drastic change in them," he said.

"It's a long rehabilitative process," often taking months or years, he said.

Spotters yearn to view eagles

LAKE BUCHANAN, Texas (AP) — Once a year, volunteers at Lake Buchanan gather to seek a closer look at the bald eagles who have made their winter homes in the rocky cliffs that line the lake's canyons.

At the annual Lake Buchanan bald eagle census last Saturday, volunteers again tried for a glimpse of the nation's most prestigous bird. Organizers say the event reflects a new appreciation of the eagles at Lake Buchanan and the effort to learn more about them.

Originally the birds were hardly noticed by the fishermen and farmers that noticed them soaring above the rocky canyons. But it wasn't long before the chamber of commerce spotted an opportunity.

Last year 35,000 visitors traveled the Vanishing Texas River Cruise tour boat which travels the rocky canyons that have become home to the birds.

Some 500 to 600 of the birds winter along the banks of Texas lakes before returning to northern nesting sites in March, said journalist Charles Tischler, who has studied the Lake Buchanan eagles since 1979.

Searchers in one of the boats in said they watched an eagle soar to the lake's surface and snatch a fish from the water with its talons.

The largest number of eagles, seven, was spotted by observers in a boat that went through the canyon where the lake narrows and the distinction between lake and river bluffs.

As a boat approached Garrett Island, one of the nine volunteer spotters called out, "eagle?" Eighteen eyes warmed to the sight of what appeared to be two young American bald eagles perched at the top of trees on the island.

After some discussion, it was established that the birds young eagles. Their behavior and mottled white markings signified their youth. As the young birds approach their fifth year, their brown head feathers will turn white.

At the end of the day the searchers spotted two adult eagles. Expanding their wings to their full 6-foot wingspan, appearing suspended in air, the birds seemed to own the sky.

Lake swallows cars, horses

PECOS, Texas (AP) — What treasures lie at the bottom — the real bottom — of Mosquito Lake?

The shallow swamp southeast of Pecos has been the scene of many a youthful romp over the past half-century at least, according to local residents.

The lake's current name arrives from the fact that it is known as a breeding-ground for mosquitoes, notes Pecos native Bill Oglesby. It once was called the "Salt Flats," and, before that, "Joplin Lake," Oglesby says.

Frank Joplin, 84, recalls the lake — which he says covers about a section and a half — was there when his father bought part of it from the state in 1909.

During that first summer, Joplin said, "We paddled around on it in number three tubs."

He pointed out that the lake is only about 2½ feet deep at its deepest point and the major portion of it is only six to 12 inches deep, "but there's quicksand in there."

One day in 1918, when Joplin was 16, he and a friend were returning home by horseback from the Randall Ranch, now part of the Louis Robertson Ranch. "We headed across the lake on our way home because it was a shortcut," he recalled.

At the time, the lake was dry because of an extended drought. Joplin knew how treacherous it still could be. "I told my friend not to ride over the powder-puff looking areas, because that's where the quicksand was, but to ride on the dark areas around them."

His friend failed to heed the warning and suddenly his horse was foundering in a quicksand pit. "The horse's hind legs were in up to his belly," Joplin said.

"His front feet were on the solid part and he was lunging to get out."

His friend hopped off his horse, and Joplin threw his lariat around the horn and cantle of the partly submerged saddle and pulled the horse out. He said he made his friend walk the rest of the way home.

Before Interstate 20 was built, Joplin said, the lake's water would either drain off into the Pecos River or evaporate, leaving the lake dry much of the time. "I've seen airplanes land and take off on it when it was dry," he said.

Youths also used to race their cars over it, he recalled. "In fact, one fellow's Model T Ford is still down there," he said.

Marijuana found in samples from crew of Conrail train

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal investigators, after finding evidence of marijuana in both the engineer and brakeman of the Conrail locomotive that collided with an Amtrak train near Baltimore, are trying to determine whether drug use affected the crew's performance.

The Federal Railroad Administration revealed Wednesday that tests on blood and urine samples from both Conrail crewmembers showed marijuana, although officials said the tests could not determine whether the two were impaired at the time of the Jan. 4 accident in which 16 people were killed and 175 injured.

Sources close to the investigation, however, suggested the levels of marijuana revealed in the tests appeared to be of "a sufficient amount" to reflect possible chronic or recent use of the drug.

A National Transportation Safety Board spokeswoman, Rachel Halterman, said the agency would not comment on the test results, but The Washington Post quoted a drug expert as saying the marijuana levels were three to four times higher than standards used by transportation companies for the amount that impairs behavior.

Dr. Robert L. DuPont, the former head of the National Institute for Drug Abuse, was quoted as saying the levels indicate the men had used the drug either the day of the crash or the day before.

The railroad agency said the findings "do not constitute an allegation of fault or determination of probable cause" and will be used only as part of the overall investigation into the collision.

The urine and blood samples were taken within hours after the accident from Richard Gates, the Conrail engineer, and Edward Cromwell, the brakeman. The tests were performed by the Civil Aeromedical Institute in Oklahoma City.

Motor vehicle officials in Maryland, meanwhile, confirmed that Gates, 32, a Conrail employee for 11 years, has had at least eight highway speeding violations in the last 15 years and was arrested Dec. 5 for failing to stop for a road signal and drunken driving.

Tests on tissue samples from the Amtrak engineer, Jerome Evans, who was killed in the accident, showed no evidence of either alcohol or drug use, the federal agency said. All the results were turned over to the National Transportation Safety Board, where officials declined to comment.

Regardless of whether or not a direct link ever is established between the marijuana findings and the accident, the test results are likely to increase pressure in Congress for broader drug and alcohol testing in the railroad industry.

Federal requirements for testing when drug or alcohol use is suspected were imposed a year ago and remain in effect despite court challenges from rail labor unions. Some safety advocates have called for random testing.

Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., chairman of the Transportation appropriations subcommittee, called the drug test results "very distressing" and suggested Wednesday night that Congress "consider very seriously" broader testing requirements for workers involved in train operations.

Lautenberg already has planned hearings into the Amtrak accident and other rail safety issues, as has Rep. James Florio, D-N.J., chairman of the surface transportation panel of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

According to the Federal Railroad Administration, the drug and alcohol tests showed marijuana in the blood and urine samples taken from Gates about 2½ hours after the accident and from similar samples taken from Cromwell about 9½ hours after the collision.

The engineer is the primary operator of the locomotive, but investigators have said the brakeman under federal regulations is required to assist in observing and verbally calling out speed signals along the route.

The NTSB investigation into the accident has focused in recent days on Gates and Cromwell because their locomotive appears to have gone at excessive speed through at least two signals — one ordering it to stop — despite no evidence so far of mechanical failings in either the locomotive or the track signal system.

Gates, who was uninjured in the accident, has told investigators he noticed the stop signal when approaching the track intersection where the two trains collided, but couldn't bring his locomotive, which was pulling two other locomotives but no cars, to a safe halt. It skidded past the signal and onto the main track into the path of the speeding passenger train.

NTSB tests earlier this week showed a wayside stop signal should have been visible to the Conrail crew for about a mile prior to the intersection, giving them plenty of time to stop safely, and that even if that signal was not noticed the crew should have been warned by a backup signal inside the cab, according to investigators.

Hinckley left hospital on pass, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A mental hospital gave would-be presidential assassin John W. Hinckley Jr. a 12-hour pass for a holiday meeting with his parents last month, despite objections by the Secret Service.

The Secret Service, notified about a week before the Dec. 28 pass was issued, consulted U.S. Attorney Joseph E. diGenova but found it could not block the decision by the St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, Secret Service spokesman Richard Adams said Wednesday.

"This was a decision made by the hospital. It was a medical decision they made over our objections," Adams said. "Our evaluation of Mr. Hinckley hasn't changed. We still feel him to be a threat to our protectees."

Hinckley, 31, has been confined in the federal institution since being found innocent by reason of insanity in the March 30, 1981, shooting of President Reagan.

Reagan was vacationing at his California ranch when Hinckley, accompanied by a hospital escort, met his parents, Jack and Jo Ann Hinckley, at a center in Reston, Va., run by Prison Fellowship Ministries.

DiGenova, in a statement Wednesday, said Hinckley was released under a federal statute that places the decision in the hands of the hospital administrator and does not require court permission.

"If there had been a request for the court's permission, we would have opposed release because we do not believe that anyone who tries to nullify a national election with a bullet deserves the privilege of moving freely in a civilized society," diGenova said.

"We were aware of his release and we were aware of all his movements," Adams said.

He said Hinckley spent the entire furlough, issued from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., at the DeMoss House, a training center for prison volunteers and guest home run by the ministries about 20 miles from the capital.

Gordon D. Loux, president of the ministries, said, "Because of our personal friendship with the Hinckleys, my wife and I hosted a private luncheon for the Hinckley family."

He would not elaborate on the visit except to say, "The Hinckley family is a very loving family...At Christmas time, it's always good for families to get together."

Roman Popaduik, a spokesman for the White House, declined to comment on Hinckley's release. A telephone message left for hospital officials was not returned Wednesday.

In the assassination attempt, Hinckley shot Reagan, White House Press Secretary James S. Brady, a Secret Service agent and a District of Columbia police officer outside a Washington hotel. Brady, who suffered a head wound, never recovered enough to return to work full time.

Hinckley has been held in a maximum security ward since June 1982.

Audi announces recall of 5000s

DETROIT (AP) — Audi of America Inc. today annouced the recall of all Audi 5000 models with automatic transmissions, including those involved in a federal investigation into sudden acceleration which allegedly has resulted in at least four deaths.

"This is a total recall," said spokesman Joesph Bennett from company headquarters in Troy, a Detroit suburb. "If it's an Audi 5000 with an automatic transmission it is involved in this."

The recall covers some 250,000 cars.

Last year, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration launched a formal investigation into Audi 5000 models after receiving nearly 400 complaints that the cars suddenly accelerated from standstill to full power, mostly when drivers tried to shift transmissions into park.

NHTSA said at that time that four people had been killed and at least 175 had been injured in accidents stemming from sudden acceleration.

Audi, a subsidiary of Volkswagen of America Inc., announced a voluntary program last July to install a shift locking device designed to eliminate sudden acceleration. At that time, the company denied that the cars, which sell for about $20,000 apiece, had a safety-related problem.

Catholic professor ends efforts to teach at CU

WASHINGTON (AP) — Suspended theology professor Charles Curran today ended his efforts to teach at Catholic University of America this semester, saying that to keep pushing could hurt his students and Catholic education in general.

But Curran, a priest, said he would continue his fight for eventual reinstatement.

The university on Wednesday, just before the beginning of the school's spring term today, canceled the three courses he normally teaches.

Curran said today that if he conducted the classes anyway while appealing the suspension, as he had said earlier he would do, students would not know whether they eventually would get credit.

In addition, Curran provided copies of a letter to him in which the university's chancellor, Archbishop James Hickey of Washington, threatened to invoke a Roman Catholic canon law provision that Curran said could spread the controversy to other Catholic institutions.

The provision states: "It is necessary that those who teach theological disciplines in any institute of higher studies have a mandate from the competent ecclesiastical authority."

Curran's suspension, announced Monday, was not based on that canon but on a ruling in his specific case last summer by the Vatican, which pronounced him unfit to teach as a Catholic theologian because of his dissenting views on issues of sexual ethics.

That pronouncement was important in Curran's case because Catholic University, the only Vatican-chartered university in this country, requires a church-sponsored "canonical mission" — or theologian's license — for teachers in its theology department.

Similar requirements do not exist at independent Catholic universities, such as Notre Dame, Georgetown and others, and the canon law cited by Hickey has not been invoked at any U.S. school.

Curran's comments were included in a letter to Hickey that he released today.

Curran said Monday that Hickey lacked authority for a total suspension, and he said he would teach his courses anyway.

On Wednesday, however, the chairman of the theology department, the Rev. David Power, said the three courses had been canceled "by executive order of the academic authorities."

"This order has been given without prejudice to further discussions regarding Father Curran's status" or to the outcome of hearings on the situation by a faculty investigative committee, Power said in a brief statement.

New Yorker staff asks new editor to withdraw

NEW YORK (AP) — Some 170 writers and other employees of the New Yorker have asked the magazine's newly appointed editor to withdraw, saying William Shawn's replacement should not come from outside.

"It is our strange but powerfully held conviction that only an editor who has been a longstanding member of the staff will have a reasonable chance of assuring our continuity, cohesion and independence," said the letter to Robert Gottlieb, whose appointment was announced Monday, and magazine owner S.I. Newhouse Jr.

The letter is signed by such New Yorker staffers and contributors as Roger Angell, Jonathan Schell, E.J. Kahn Jr., Lillian Ross, Ann Beatty, Peter DeVries and Donald Barthelme. Also signing it was reclusive writer J.D. Salinger, author of "The Catcher in the Rye," a former contributor who has not published any writings in decades.

Gottlieb, in response, told the staff that he would not pull out.

"Of course, I understand the feelings you express in your letter and can even sympathize with them," he said in a statement.

"And I also appreciate the fact that your resistance to my coming is not personal. But I do plan to take up this new job as soon as is convenient and practical, and can only add that I'm looking forward to knowing and working with you all."

Newhouse said Monday that Shawn, the magazine's editor of 35 years, had decided to retire on March 1.

According to the letter, however, Shawn told staffers Tuesday that "he had not planned to retire on March 1, and that the appointment of an editor not heretofore affiliated with the magazine had halted the orderly process...of providing the magazine with a new editor from within its present ranks."

Koch: Appointment sets bad precedent

NEW YORK (AP) — The appointment of a special prosecutor to investigate a white mob attack on three black men that left one of them dead may set a bad precedent, Mayor Edward I. Koch says.

"People are going to say, 'My case is just as important as that case. Why can't you have a special prosecutor?' " Koch said Wednesday.

Charles J. Hynes, state special prosecutor for the city's criminal justice system, was named by Gov. Mario Cuomo on Tuesday to investigate the Dec. 20 attack.

The two survivors had refused to cooperate with the Queens district attorney's investigation of the incident, in which Michael Griffith was struck by a car and killed as he fled the attack in the Howard Beach neighborhood.

The survivors intend to cooperate with the special prosecutor, according to C. Vernon Mason, one of their lawyers. He said he also was speaking for the other survivor's lawyer, Alton Maddox.

Murder charges against Jon Lester and Scott Kern, both 17, and Jason Ladone, 16, were dropped because one survivor would not appear at a court hearing. They remain charged with reckless endangerment.

The appointment of the special prosecutor was announced at the end of a six-hour meeting with black leaders who endorsed the move.

Black leaders who joined Mason at a news conference outlined plans for a citywide display of mourning Jan. 21 for Griffith.

The day also would be marked by a black boycott of white-owned businesses and a march to Koch's home, the leaders said.

"We are planning a spring offensive against racism with our brothers and sisters throughout the country who are experiencing racist violence," said Lisa Williamson of the National African Youth Student Alliance.

"We recognize that Governor Cuomo is responding to the pressure from the black community and he can be certain that there will be more pressure and greater expectations," she said.

Mason asserted that by naming Hynes, Cuomo was giving "official recognition that racism is part and parcel of the criminal justice system and of New York City and New York state."

INS to set up alien-processing centers

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — To process illegal aliens seeking legal status under amnesty provisions of the new immigration law, special centers will be established, federal immigration officials say.

Immigration and Naturalization Service officials met Wednesday with a wide range of community representatives in a day-long conference, seeking suggestions on forming regulations to implement all provisions of the law.

In addition, J.D. Jondall, chief of the U.S. Border Patrol's Tucson sector, said at a news conference at least three permanent checkpoints will be established on Arizona highways as part of an enforcement campaign against drug-smuggling and illegal aliens under the new law.

Jondall said a permanent checkpoint will be established within a year along Interstate 19 near Nogales, with similar stops planned later on at least two other highways in the state.

Harold Ezell, INS western regional commissioner, told reporters the INS will be able to regain control of America's borders and have "the strength to preserve the immigration system" because of the law, which President Reagan signed Nov. 6.

The law grants legal status to eligible aliens who have been in this country since before Jan. 1, 1982. It also imposes sanctions on employers knowingly hiring illegal aliens.

Officials said the law will establish 108 new, separate INS offices nationwide, including four in Arizona, just for processing applications of aliens seeking legal status under its amnesty provisions.

There will be offices in Phoenix, Tucson, Willcox and Yuma, and a mobile unit, said Ruth Anne Myers, Phoenix INS district director.

Ezell said the agency would be working with local, state and county governments and volunteer agencies that want to set up their own facilities to help people apply. Applications will not be taken before May, he added, and those applying will be asked to prove continuous residence. Documentation may include rent receipts, baptism records, children's birth certificates, pay stubs and affidavits from clergymen or employers, officials said.

Some students troubled by arms dealer's gift

WASHINGTON (AP) — The $5 million gift that Adnan Khashoggi pledged to The American University in 1984 is troubling some students and faculty members who disapprove of the Saudi's involvement with arms trading and the Iran case.

But Richard Berendzen, president of the 94-year-old school, and others defend the gift, which is being used to build what they say is a much-needed $14 million sports and convention center that will bear Khashoggi's name.

"He's been one of the best donors we have had," Berendzen said. Despite reports that Khashoggi has encountered a financial crunch recently, Berendzen said the payments have been made promptly. Khashoggi is considered one of the world's richest men.

Echoing the sentiments of some of the school's 12,500 students, Kat Hurst, 21, a senior from Bethesda, Md., said, "I just happen to feel that the university should not be accepting money from an arms dealer."

Khashoggi gave the private university the money for the Adnan Khashoggi Sports and Convocation Center shortly after the school invited him to join the school's board of trustees.

In a Nov. 2, 1984 interview with university's student newspaper, The Eagle, Khashoggi said he donated the money because he was impressed with the "caliber of people" at the school, including Berendzen, with whom he had developed a social relationship.

'Vice' advice: Get a shave

That's the word from Mr. 9 o'clock shadow, Don Johnson, who was asked at an HBO news conference what he thinks about all these guys dressing like he does on "Miami Vice."

"That part of it I find a little disconcerting," Johnson said Wednesday. "And, quite frankly, a lot of 'em should shave."

Johnson spoke by way of a video and telephone hookup from Miami to television critics in Los Angeles who had screened his hour-long video "Heartbeat." It premieres this weekend on HBO.

Later, in a telephone interview from his trailer on the set of "Miami Vice," Johnson talked about why he chose to play a documentary filmmaker in the video.

The character faces mortality after an encounter with hostile fire in a Latin American country and reevaluates his life in a series of often surreal episodes.

"Psychologically it worked as a catalyst to move the viewer into the mind's eye," he said.

Controllers hid evidence

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Air traffic controllers at a major radar center turned off crucial equipment, falsified evidence and lied in attempts to conceal three incidents that could have resulted in plane collisions, according to a report published today.

The Federal Aviation Administration eventually blamed controller error for each of the incidents, which occurred within nine days last February, the Orange County Register said in a copyright story.

An FAA official wrote in documents obtained by the newspaper that the actions of one controller "resulted in potential danger to, or loss of, life."

The controllers were not identified in the documents. All were based at the Air Route Traffic Control Center in Palmdale, 60 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

Victims identified, police say

SUITLAND, Md. (AP) — Investigators have ended a search of a wooded area just outside Washington, D.C., where five young black women were found dead in recent weeks. Police said they appeared to be victims of one killer.

"Now that we've got identities, things are rolling," said Robert Law, a spokesman for the Prince George's County police department. "We're talking to people and finding out where they were last seen, who they were with, and where they were going.

"The further we get into the investigation, it appears to be the work of one person," Law said.

"We know that there are a lot of similarities as to the way the women were murdered and the bodies were positioned when they were abandoned," said Maj. James Ross.

Marine suspected of espionage may be withholding information

Lonetree

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Marine sergeant suspected of espionage while working as a guard at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow has undergone at least one lie-detector test and appears to be holding back some information, Pentagon sources say.

"There seem to be some gaps in his story that the investigators can't explain as yet," said one official, referring to Marine Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree. "He's been given a polygraph test. We think he's holding back on some stuff."

The sources, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, also disclosed a female KGB agent with whom Lonetree became involved in Moscow had worked at the U.S. Embassy as a translator.

"She's been fingered, so to speak," one official said.

"We know what her responsibilities were and that's all part of the damage assessment," added another.

Sources told The Associated Press last Saturday the 25-year-old Lonetree became involved in a sexual relationship with the woman while stationed in Moscow between September 1984 and March 1986. Lonetree later was transferred to the U.S. Embassy in Vienna, where he came forward voluntarily, disclosed the affair and acknowledged having passed secrets to the woman, the sources said.

He was arrested in mid-December in Vienna and then transported to the Marine base at Quantico, Va., on Dec. 31, where he remains in custody.

The sources claimed Lonetree had become the subject of some suspicion before last month, but acknowledged he came forward and disclosed his activities.

According to Lt. Col. John Shotwell, a Marine Corps spokesman, Lonetree will remain under detention pending the outcome of an investigation and hearing in early February to determine charges.

ABC-TV's "World News Tonight" on Wednesday, citing unnamed government sources, said Lonetree delivered names of Soviet citizens on the CIA payroll in Moscow to the KGB.

"Also, Lonetree has told military investigators that he gave away information about the embassy building itself, its espionage safeguards and its vulnerabilities," ABC said.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley on Wednesday said the department, in conjunction with other federal agencies, has begun an assessment of what damage may have been done to U.S. intelligence operations at the embassies.

Neither the State Department nor the Pentagon has commented publicly on what materials or secrets might have been passed to the KGB by Lonetree, beyond a statement by Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger that the harm was potentially serious.

Pentagon sources said Wednesday the verdict was still out "on whether he's a big fish," explaining investigators had determined Lonetree did not have access himself to safes housing sensitive information.

"He was responsible for ensuring the security of the building and the office spaces within," said one official. "In that connection, he had to check all the offices and was supposed to look for documents left out inadvertently.

"He didn't know any combinations to the safes. But there was a female agent who did seduce and turn him."

The sources contacted by The Associated Press contradicted recent reports by the Washington Times and CBS that Lonetree helped KGB agents gain entrance to the embassies in Moscow and Vienna and also helped place listening "bugs" in the offices of senior diplomats.

"All the security breaches we've found occurred in Moscow, not Vienna," asserted one official.

Court rules tenants can sue public housing agencies

WASHINGTON (AP) — People who live in low-income public housing do not have to wait for the federal government to act against abuses but can sue public housing authorities.

The Supreme Court opened the way for such lawsuits in a 5-4 ruling on a Roanoke, Va., case. The decision opens federal courthouse doors to the 3 million tenants who live in 1.2 million public housing units owned by more than 3,000 local public housing authorities.

In other decisions Wednesday, the court:

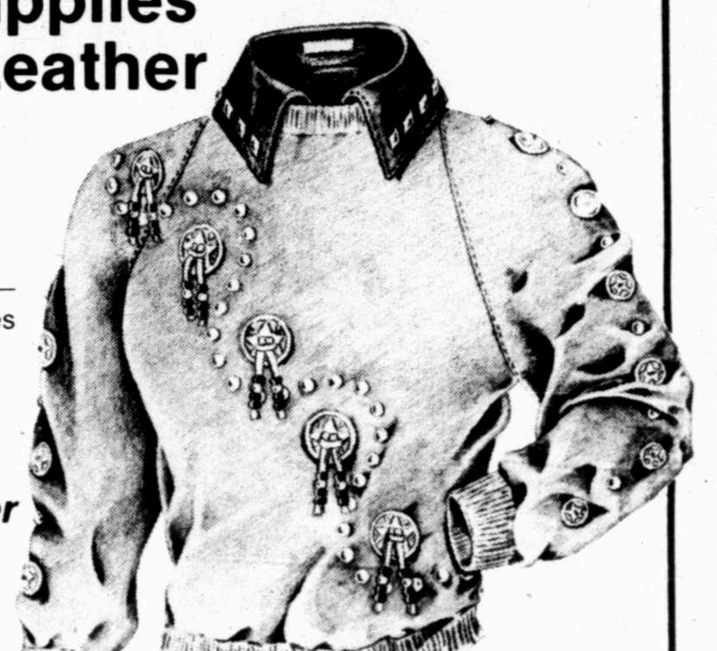

—Allowed national banks to establish discount securities brokerage outlets wherever they want.

—Gave police officers more leeway to search the vehicles of arrested suspects without first obtaining court warrants.

—Declined to consider an important confrontation between President Reagan and Congress over the so-called presidential pocket veto. The justices, 6-2, said the case is moot because the basis for the controversy — a 1983 bill linking military aid to El Salvador with human rights progress — is no longer in effect.

Justice Byron R. White wrote for the court in the public housing case that nothing in federal law bars private enforcement lawsuits.

Teamsters deny ordering members to set fire; More suspects sought

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Teamsters officials denied ordering union members to set fire to the Dupont Plaza Hotel as authorities said they were looking for more possible suspects in the New Year's Eve inferno that killed 96 people.

Two Teamsters members, a busboy and a maintenance worker, have been charged in the fire. Court documents said both men gave confessions to the FBI.

Federal investigators who spoke on condition of anonymity said Wednesday that the man charged with setting the fire, Hector Escudero Aponte, implicated others in the case.

"Arrest warrants, no. But we're looking for others," said one investigator. "If we have probable cause, we will make an arrest." He refused to say how many people were implicated.

Another investigator said, "We're trying to find everyone who was involved. If it was two people we want them both; if it was 10 people we want all 10."

Officials of the Teamsters union, which represents 250 Dupont Plaza employees, called a news conference Wednesday to reiterate that the union did not direct members to take violent action.

The union had rejected a hotel contract offer just before the fire broke out at about 3:20 on Dec. 31, and planned to strike at midnight.

"The Teamsters did not advise, incite nor induce any of its affiliated workers to set the hotel on fire nor to commit any crime at the hotel," said local president Rene Rodriguez.

"The charges against Teamster member Hector Escudero Aponte do not infer that anyone in the union conspired with him to provoke this unfortunate incident," he said. "I condemn the deed."

He added, however, "I cannot say no other union members were involved."

Officials have not accused the union leadership of involvement. But attention has focused on the union since investigators ruled more than a week ago that the fire was deliberately set, and Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon said labor unrest was a possible motive.

Escudero Aponte, a 10-year hotel employee, was charged with arson in federal court Tuesday and with 96 counts of first-degree murder, arson and destruction of property in San Juan District Court.

Armando Jimenez Rivera, a 28-year-old bus boy, was arraigned Wednesday in U.S. District Court on charges of arson and aiding and abetting Escudero Aponte.

Commonwealth charges against Jimenez Rivera, an 11-year employee of the hotel, were under review, said Justice Department spokesman Eric Landron.

Almost half of SS recipients want medical costs covered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 40 percent of the people receiving Social Security would be willing to take a cut in benefits to assure all medical costs would be paid for the elderly, according to a survey of the elderly issued today.

The findings come as Congress prepares to consider a plan to insure the elderly against catastrophic illness by increasing Medicare premiums by about $5 a month, far less than the Social Security reductions of $20 to $30 a month envisioned in the survey questions.

Roughly four in 10 of the 2,314 people over 65 questioned also said they would be willing to accept Social Security cuts to guarantee that nursing home costs would be paid for the elderly, that home health services be provided so they could continue living at home and that no elderly person would live in poverty.

"We find it remarkable that so many elderly Americans agree to accept such trade-offs," said the report by Louis Harris and Associates.

"This is especially so in light of the more limited interest shown in some of the other measures for aiding the elderly that were explored in this survey" — such as renting out a room, using their houses to get cash through so-called reverse mortgage home equity loans or doing volunteer work to build up credits for their own future needs.

"But some of the other measures are rather new and unfamiliar to the public," the survey noted. "The results in the case of Social Security may reflect the elderly public's greater familiarity with the Social Security system...their longstanding trust in it, and their willingness to use it or extend it or revise it in order to solve remaining unmet needs of other elderly citizens."

The survey, which was issued at a news conference, was done for The Commonwealth Fund's Commission on Elderly People Living Alone. The Commonwealth Fund is a national philanthropic foundation created in 1918 to identify long-term health care needs.

The telephone interviews were conducted from last June 11-July 31 after "tens of thousands of households" were screened to assure a representative random sampling. "In all...a sampling effort equivalent to more than 35 separate normal Harris national polls was required," the report said. It claimed to have a 2 percent margin of error.

Although the survey was aimed largely at developing information on the more than 8 million elderly Americans living along, many of the results — such as the willingness to trade Social Security benefits for increased health care — applied to the elderly population as a whole.

In addition to the 40 percent who said they would make such swaps, roughly 20 percent choose the "depends or not sure" response. Only 40 percent said flatly they would not be willing.

None injured in Montreal consulate fire

WORLD

MONTREAL (AP) — A blaze engulfed the Soviet consulate Wednesday, but diplomats kept firemen outside for 15 minutes while they grabbed documents and tried to put out the fire with extinguishers and buckets of snow, witnesses and fire officials said.

No injuries were reported but the consulate was seriously damaged. Firemen evacuated nearby buildings and blocked off several streets as the fire burned out of control for three hours. The cause was not determined.

At the height of the fire, flames shot from the roof and smoke billowed from windows on the top two floors of the building on Avenue du Musee, a quiet street lined with old mansions and an art museum on the southern slope of Mount Royal, central hill that gives Montreal its name.

Noel Huard, a 26-year-old laborer working near the consulate, told reporters: "I saw smoke coming out of the second floor window at about 11 a.m. Then people began to run in and out of the consulate, gathering buckets of snow to put the fire out."

Another witness, Debbie Middleton, who lives across the street, said firemen had trouble convincing the Soviets to let them inside.

"Then the firemen started breaking glass and the Russians started to get out," she said.

Fire Chief Yvon Bineault said a dozen employees were destroying documents when he finally got inside the building, and they refused to leave.

"We spoke to them in French, English and Russian, but they just sat there and looked," he said.

Soviet Embassy spokesman Igor Lobanov defended the decision to protect documents before letting firemen combat the flames.

"It's quite legitimate to take proper measures to save these documents. Every diplomatic mission has this prime purpose," Lobanov told The Associated Press.

He said officials later let firefighters inside the building and "we are thankful to them for their help."

The incident was almost identical to a fire that destroyed the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa on Jan. 1, 1956. Canada's External Affairs Department said that on both occasions Soviet officials had the diplomatic right to refuse entry to firemen.

European nations dig through snow

LONDON (AP) — Governments across Europe mobilized thousands of soldiers to rescue stranded travelers and shovel snow as much of the continent remained paralyzed by frigid temperatures blamed for more than 170 deaths this month.

Hungry wolf packs were seen scavenging near isolated villages in Czechoslovakia, Soviet tanks pulled drivers from 6-foot-high snowdrifts and 28 members of an Austrian military band suffered frostbite after playing outdoors.

Travelers in Britain were urged to stay home because some roads and rail lines were buried under snow. In France, nine airports were closed and others reported delays. Churches were opened to shelter the homeless.

Five airports in Italy also were closed due to snow or ice, and driving was impossible on many northern roads. Heavy rain fell in the south, and a Dutch freighter with a crew of seven was missing in the storm off the southeast coast of Sardinia.

The British Meteorological Office said there was no end in sight to the bitter cold. Record lows have been reported throughout Europe since the cold spell began last Friday, including a low Monday in London of 18 degrees, the coldest since record-keeping began in 1940.

Reports from Associated Press bureaus put the total of weather-related deaths in Europe, excluding Poland and the Soviet Union, at 65 since Friday.

Poland and the Soviet Union, which only issued reports for all of January, said the total in the two countries since Jan. 1 stands at 108 — 77 deaths in the Soviet Union and 31 in Poland.

London's Daily Telegraph newspaper said today that Soviet tanks based in Hungary plowed through deep snow to rescue motorists, mostly Austrians and West Germans, after their cars ran into snowdrifts en route to Budapest.

"We had no fuel left and had given up hope when we heard a noise like thunder," the newspaper quoted an Austrian motorist as saying.

"It was a Soviet tank that came charging through the 2-meter-high (6-foot) snowdrift. They smashed into our car before they came to a stop but at least we were save."

The newspaper quoted the motorists as saying they had feared death as winds reached 62 mph and temperatures fell to minus 4 degrees.

The Czechoslovak newspaper Rude Pravo said hungry wolf packs have been driven by the bitter cold to scavenge near isolated communities in search of food, including cattle and geese.

In Britain, Royal Air Force helicopters on Wednesday flew nine pregnant women to hospitals. One woman, who was in advanced labor, was airlifted from a highway in Norfolk when her ambulance was caught behind a snowplow that failed to break through drifts. Eighteen inches of snow had fallen in the area.

Army personnel carriers ferried food and relief supplies to snowbound towns and coastal islands in Kent in southeastern England. In London, government buildings and churches were opened to house the homeless.

Many British roads and rail links were impassable. A notice at London's Charing Cross railroad station, which operates commuter lines to the southeast, warned travelers: "There is very little chance of anyone reaching their intended destination and even less chance of them getting back again. Anyone who does insist on traveling does so entirely at their own risk."

In France, Premier Jacques Chirac called in nearly 2,000 soldiers to help clear streets in Paris after the capital was blanketed by 5½ inches of snow, the fourth largest accumulation on record.

Paris, which usually gets only a dusting, has just two snowplows and city workers began working with shovels and wheelbarrows to clear thoroughfares.

The Champs Elysees was nearly deserted Wednesday, although one diehard Parisian was seen picking her way through snowpiles in pumps.

Several subway stations and churches were opened to house the city's estimated 15,000 homeless as the nighttime temperature dropped to 17 degrees.

At least nine airports remained closed and train service, almost completely re-established after a four-week strike, was plagued by new delays.

In Hungary, about 3,000 soldiers were called in to assist 10,000 road workers and 2,500 railroad employees clear snow from roads and tracks.

Prison problem

Mention the name of U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice in criminal justice circles and you're liable to get a variety of responses — ranging from guffaws to growls. He's not exactly the type of jurist who evokes a well-deserved yawn.

The judge has been a thorn in the side of numerous county and state officials for years, most notably of late by holding the Texas Department of Corrections in contempt for not living up to agreements to improve prison conditions. The judge gave the department a March 31st deadline to meet the conditions or begin sustaining heavy fines — possibly as high as $800,000 a day.

Justice's contempt citation coupled with Department of Corrections' plans to halt inmate admissions when the prison population reaches a court-ordered level certainly should give state legislators reason to spend a few sleepless nights pondering the situation here at the beginning of the 70th Texas Legislature. After all, it falls to them to find — and fund — the solution or solutions to the state's prison dilemma.

One of those possibilities might be a system of regional detention facilities as discussed by Dallas Mayor Starke Taylor's Criminal Justice Task Force or as advocated by newly-elected Midland County Commissioner Guy McCrary. Their proposals and others undoubtedly would require much more research, but could prove beneficial. Such a system might not only give the prison system a better capability to handle its own population, but also give counties such as Midland needed relief to move out county inmates who have already been sentenced, thus freeing needed jail space.

Gov.-elect Bill Clements met with Justice last week and assured the judge he is willing to tackle the prison reform issue if the judge will give the state the time it needs to make the necessary changes. Such a move certainly would be a step in the right direction, although the eventual resolution of the problem is likely to be neither quick in coming nor inexpensive.

But under the state and federal court orders it faces, the Department of Corrections has to begin speeding inmate releases when its population reaches 38,333 or 95% of its capacity. Earlier this week it needed only five more inmates to reach that level. And it certainly accomplishes nothing worthwhile to prolong that revolving door policy — plus adding to the cost with court fines.

In his meeting with Justice, Gov.-elect Clements exhibited good faith in indicating he's willing to work to resolve the prison dilemma and, in so doing, to enhance the quality of criminal justice in the state. That may only be a start on a long road, but it at least indicates that the situation can be resolved.

That's something the people of Texas want and deserve.

LETTERS

Don't promote, teach!

The question has been raised as to why we have so many college students today who are incapable of reading at that level. The cause is twofold.

The primary reason was the introduction of the "look-and-say" method of "reading" some 50 years ago, replacing the time-proven phonics method. The look-and-say method of progressive education trains children to memorize the shapes and meaning of new words. Since the outward shapes of words vary, as does the memory capability of individuals, they then proceed to skip over the difficult, the unfamiliar, the nondistinctive words. Many of these individuals have lifelong reading troubles. They just haven't been taught HOW to read.

The second reason that there are so many poor readers in college goes back to our elementary and secondary school policies of social promotion. Too many educators believe that it is reprehensible to retain children in a grade just because they haven't learned the material or skill, or because they don't perform to level. Then the taxpayer is soaked to provide remedial education in junior high school for these kids whom the "teachers" haven't taught.

And then, guess what? They're "promoted" to high school, where they are put into more remedial classes, again at taxpayer expense.

Now we are saddled with an open-admissions policy at many colleges and junior colleges, along with more taxpayer-supported remedial programs.

The two reasons for having functional illiterates in college is 1) that they are not taught to read in our present-day school system, and 2) we allow the uneducated to "progress" to higher levels for which they are not qualified.

The solutions? Replace the ineffectual, counterproductive look-and-say method of reading with phonics methods, those used successfully by parents and schools for centuries; and do NOT promote the unfit, the unlettered, the untaught. It isn't fair to the child, to the higher-level teachers, to the other children, to the taxpayers.

MISD policy at limit

I wonder how much hypocrisy the people of Midland will continue to endure. The new MISD alcohol, drug, and tobacco policy might just be pushing the limit.

Just think: A student can now be punished for drinking wine during communion services at his/her own church. After all, wine is an alcoholic beverage.

What will be next? Shouldn't the schools also punish those students who are under 17 and view an "R" rated movie without the presence of a parent or guardian? Of course, this would also mean reprimands for those under 17 who rent "R" rated movies or view them on cable programming.

Fortunately, there is a solution for the current policy which can be accomplished in four steps.

Number 1: Let the teachers of Midland do their jobs and educate the students. They are not babysitters and they are not police officers.

Number 3: Make parents take responsibility for their children's behavior. It seems that more and more parental responsibilities have fallen into the hands of the school board because some parents cannot handle their duties.

Number 4: Distribute copies of George Orwell's "1984" to the members of the MISD school board.

Take a lesson from the Highland Park school district in Dallas and realize your mistake, MISD. Otherwise, the people of Midland should start becoming familiar with the term "class action suit."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

Twenty years ago, on Jan. 15, 1967, the Green Bay Packers of the National Football League defeated the Kansas City Chiefs of the American Football League 35-10 in the first Super Bowl, played at Memorial Coliseum in Los Angeles.

Although the game was shown on both CBS and NBC, no videotape of either broadcast is known to have survived.

On this date:

In 1777, the people of New Connecticut declared their independence. The tiny republic later became the state of Vermont.

In 1870, the Democratic Party was represented as a donkey for the first time in a cartoon by Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly.

In 1943, work was completed on the Pentagon, headquarters of the U.S. Department of Defense.

SBA lobbyist's actions under scrutiny

WASHINGTON — Allegations that the Small Business Administration's chief congressional lobbyist may have broken the law have been referred to the U.S. attorney for possible presentation to a grand jury.

Jack Anderson

The referral was made by the agency's own inspector general after an investigation into complaints about the way a demolition team of high-level SBA officials tried to get Congress to approve President Reagan's plan to dissolve the agency. The campaign failed; Congress kept SBA intact.

Sources told our associate Stewart Harris that the inspector general looked into the possibility that Richard Nelson, SBA's top Capitol Hill lobbyist, broke the law in an effort to help his superiors cause the agency to self-destruct. The sources declined to give specific details of the possible violations for fear of jeopardizing future investigations.

In addition to Nelson's role in the suicide mission, the inspector general examined the legality of an SBA pamphlet, "The Future of the SBA," which argued how easy it would be to dissolve the agency and turn its remaining functions over to the Commerce Department.

Also mentioned in the inspector general's report were acting administrator Charles Heatherly and communications director Richard Utley, who with Nelson spearheaded the lobbying campaign with Congress.

SBA employees, both current and former, blame the three officials for low morale within the agency. On his first day in charge — April 1, 1986 — Heatherly fired the regional SBA administrators in Boston, Philadelphia, Dallas, Denver and San Francisco; the Chicago director was fired the next day.

The Senate Committee on Small Business, a staunch advocate of SBA's continued existence, has been denied a copy of the closely held inspector general's report. A congressional source told us the committee expects to receive a copy once the federal prosecutor decides whether to pursue the allegations against Nelson.

Last May the committee, then chaired by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., asked the comptroller general to investigate the possibility that Heatherly and his cohorts had violated federal law in expenditures made during their kamikaze attack on the SBA.

As we first disclosed, the comptroller general cleared Heatherly and other agency officials of all but one charge. According to the comptroller, SBA officials violated a federal ban on the use of appropriated funds for "publicity and propaganda" when they prepared editorials for use by newspapers favorable to Reagan's plan to scuttle the SBA.

"The editorials," the comptroller concluded, "are misleading as to their origin and reasonably constitute 'propaganda' within the common understanding of that term."

The comptroller did not refer his findings to the federal prosecutor, because of "the difficulty in determining the exact amount expended illegally as well as the identity of any particular voucher involved" in the production of the pamphlet.

"We recommend, however, that the administrator of the SBA take action to ensure that future violations do not occur," the comptroller added.

Footnote: Nelson said he had not heard of the investigation, and said the inspector general didn't interview him. The U.S. attorney's office would neither confirm nor deny that it is studying the inspector general's report. Acting inspector general Raymond Bandolph did not return repeated telephone calls.

NO FARE: The hordes of Afghan refugees who have fled their embattled homeland and taken refuge in next-door Pakistan have caused resentment among the natives. Not only are the newcomers getting aid from the United States and other countries, which the Pakistanis envy, but the Afghans are taking jobs away from their reluctant hosts. Many of the refugee entrepreneurs are professional bus and truck drivers who escaped in their vehicles and are now plying their trade in Pakistan, to the intense disgruntlement of local teamsters.

WATCH ON WASTE: Commerce Department employees spent a total of 18,000 staff days on improper personal telephone calls in 1985, according to the department's inspector general. This cost the taxpayers an estimated $3 million. "Over the years, a permissive attitude has developed that allows, if not encourages, (telephone) abuse," the inspector general noted. "Practices that are strictly forbidden by the regulations have become, in some employees' minds, a right." Most of the personal calls were to family members but many were to banks, horoscope services and dial-a-porn numbers.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Can we be dreaming? The U.S. Postal Service says postage rates won't be going up this year. "We are confident," said Postmaster General Preston Tisch, "that our customers can expect stable rates throughout 1987." Not only that, but "we're far, far away from a decision" on whether it'll cost more to mail a letter in 1988, Tisch said. The reason for this breathtaking news is that the Postal Service actually turned a modest profit last year: $304.6 million on a gross of $31 billion. Sincere congratulations.

BIBLE VERSE

Being therefore justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Rom. 5:1

GEORGE F. WILL

Wandering cardinal's visit shook Vatican

WASHINGTON — The Jews are, it seems, John Cardinal O'Connor's cross to bear, so to speak. They do not understand how grateful they should be for how grateful he feels toward them. They did not comprehend the "tremendous compliment" — his words — he was paying them when he said the Holocaust "may be an enormous gift that Judaism has given the world."

George F. Will

Jews probably feel that in that case it was better to receive than to give. Not being steeped in what O'Connor calls his "theology of suffering" (suffering they understand; the theological coating of it is opaque), Jews may wonder if the slaughter of six million Catholics would be interpreted as an enormous gift to the world. Even if the "theology of suffering" makes sense to people within the closed circle of such theorizing, surely the cardinal should understand how offensive it sounds to persons who are outside that circle and who once were within the barbed wire of Auschwitz.

New York's wandering cardinal has called for creation of a Palestinian homeland. He has not said where; he is not a detail man. He says he "can't talk intelligently about diplomatic relations," but he says that making peace in the Middle East is part of his vocation.

Israel invited O'Connor, and on the eve of his visit the Vatican ordered him to cancel appointments he had made to meet with Israeli officials in their Jerusalem offices. Instead, he met the prime minister and president in their Jerusalem homes. But the president's home is in the building with his office. O'Connor said he "would be terribly disturbed if I were visiting an office."

The 19-year division of Jerusalem was an accident of the 1948 armistice in the Arab war to strangle the state of Israel in its cradle. It has now been more than 19 years since the eastern portion of Jerusalem was liberated from Jordanian occupation.

During Jordanian occupation, when Jewish gravestones were used to pave roads, Christian churches were not allowed to renovate or buy property. Only since 1967 has there been free access to religious sites.

Most nations, including the United States, do not recognize Israeli sovereignty over all of Jerusalem, yet they extend full diplomatic recognition to Israel. The Vatican has never given Israel diplomatic recognition. Behind that fact, and beneath the comic casuistry about when-is-an-office-not-an-office, lurks something sinister.

It is reasonable to suspect that the Vatican is discomfited by the regathering of the Jewish people in their own state. The fact of Israel, without reference to the question of Jerusalem, challenges the hoary myth of Jewish "punishment" for "rejecting" Jesus.

The Vatican favors some "internationalizing" of Jerusalem. It is not clear what that means. God may be in the details; the Vatican is not into details.

Actually, Vatican preferences are simply uninteresting. The Vatican should be told that Jerusalem is none of its business. The Vatican lost whatever moral standing it had on the issue when, in 1982, the Pope received Yasser Arafat, head of a terrorist organization that denies Israel's right to exist.

The fact that Pope Paul VI received Israel's Prime Minister Meir and Pope John Paul II received Prime Minister Peres testifies only to Vatican realism: The Vatican recognizes that Israel exists. The rest of Vatican policy suggests that the Vatican resents that existence.

O'Connor says he does not "know what the Church did or did not do" during the Holocaust. He has a duty to know. The most charitable description of what the Church did is damning enough: The Vatican thought it could husband its moral authority by remaining neutral, which meant keeping quiet. But Vatican power in politics inheres in words and gestures. Regarding Israel, Vatican gestures are loudly wrong.

It is an American scandal that the U.S. Embassy is not in Jerusalem. Today the U.S. government stands convicted of cringing appeasement of Iran, a nation implacably hostile to American values. Now would be a good time for the U.S. government to stop appeasing Arab opinion about Jerusalem. It is time to move the U.S. Embassy not just to Jerusalem but to the eastern portion that was liberated in 1967 and has now been well-governed by Israel longer than it was occupied by Jordan. Moving the Embassy would end the pretense that the unity of Israel's capital is negotiable, and would underscore the perversity of Vatican policy.

O'Connor said that Jewish criticism endangers the "fruits" (unspecified) of his trip and "makes it difficult for me to move further toward peace." Perhaps that was just an example of the now commonplace megalomania of the contemporary cleric who thinks solutions to problems elude secular leaders because secular leaders lack the clerics' ...what? Certainly not humility.

The main fault here is not with the cardinal but with the political policy of the church of which he is a mere prince. Israelis have heard his alibi before: He was only obeying orders.

ART BUCHWALD

When simplicity's the name, IRS not in game!

I picked up my 1040 form at the IRS the other day and couldn't believe how complicated the instructions were.

"I thought you people were going to simplify things under the new tax reform bill."

Art Buchwald

The man behind the counter said, "Who told you that?"

"You did. You said you wanted to make life easier for the little taxpayer who bore the largest burden of financing the nation's debt."

"If we said that, we lied. In order to have a tough country, you have to have a tough tax return."

"I don't want you to make it too simple," I said. "But this is ridiculous. Neither Price nor Waterhouse can figure it out."

"Oh yes they can, but it takes a little ingenuity. Everyone thinks he can get from column 1 to column 7 without going through column b. It can't be done. You have to approach it like Rubik's Cube and then you can get the solution."

"Why did you make it so difficult in the first place?"

"Because too many people solved the 1985 form and it teed us off. We were getting refund requests from every state in the union. We believe we have taken out the glitches, and with luck not more than 1 percent of the population will get it right the first time around."

"What you are doing is encouraging people to make mistakes. Doesn't that bother you?"

"Not if the taxpayer is willing to pay for them. The reason the IRS makes its instructions so difficult is we want everyone to realize that paying taxes is a very serious matter and not a game for amateurs. We think our 1986 form does the job."

"Can't you at least give us some hints as to what figures go on what lines?"

"That would be cheating," he said.

"How can we be cheating when we want to pay you what we owe you? All we're looking for is guidance."

"That's the rub, son. If we tell you, we'll have to tell the next fellow, and pretty soon everyone will know how to fill out the IRS form. By adding mystery we can slow down the rate of returns so we can process them one at a time."

"Someone said you people work secretly for H & R Block, and that's why you won't simplify your returns."

"That's a lie, boy," he said angrily. "If we worked for Block we would have eliminated the short tax form years ago. The IRS works for the people. If you can't follow our instructions, there is nothing we can do about it."

"Suppose I forget to subtract line 34 b from 34 c on line 35 — what will you do to me?"

"If it's an honest mistake, we'll take your house away. But if it's intentional, we'll have to resort to more serious action."

"How serious can you get?"

"Serious enough so that you'll be in the hands of one of our computers. You've never seen an IRS computer at work. It can add, subtract and countermand, all at the same time, and also send your refund check to Nome, Alaska. Once your return goes through our computer the game is over for you and anyone you love."

"What happens if I get lucky and fill out the form correctly?"

"Then Ed McMahon will stay at your house for a week."

Aborigines won't be celebrating bicentennial of Australian settlement

By RICHARD BILL

ALICE SPRINGS, Australia (AP) — Although they have lived in Australia for at least 40,000 years, the aborigines are not likely to play a major role in next year's celebrations marking the nation's 200th anniversary as a British convict settlement.

For one thing, they number only about half what they were when the white men came in 1788. For another, said Fay Nelson of the Department of Aboriginal Affairs, they have little cause to celebrate.

"European occupation of Australia has devastated the aboriginal people and their culture," Ms. Nelson, an aborigine, said in an interview. "The aborigines are exiles in their own country."

Even though the government has set aside land for them, "a lot of aboriginal people feel their land was simply stolen from them," she said.

She added that while most aborigines will find little to attract them in the 1988 celebations, "inevitably there will be some who say, 'OK, at least let's see what we can get out of it.' "

Of the $130 million the bicentennial is expected to cost, $1.6 million has been set aside for aboriginal events.

It has been estimated that before colonization aborigines spoke about 260 distinct languages, with numerous dialects. Most of these are close to extinction and well over 50 have become extinct, anthropologists say.

Now numbering 160,000, aborigines account for 1 percent of Australia's 16 million population, or half their estimated total when Australia was colonized.

Anthropologists say Australia's indigenous natives have the longest continuous culture in the world but their roots are lost in the legend of the "dreamtime," as aborigines refer to their earliest beginnings.

British colonization brought disease that wiped out thousands of aborigines. Others were hunted like animals for sport, according to historical records.

Some people say the outlook is so grim for aborigines that even the boomerang, their traditional hunting weapon, will soon be a collector's item.

"Their culture is dying out," said Roy Frost, who travels countrywide buying aboriginal artifacts for his store in Alice Springs. "The stuff I'm selling now won't be available in two years.

Australia today is one of the world's most multiracial societies with more than 20 percent of the population made up of people born elsewhere. But aborigines remain economically and socially disadvantaged, despite millions of dollars each year in government grants.

In 1986, funding to aboriginal communities totaled $150 million, on top of $216 million for projects started by the Department of Aboriginal Affairs.

A 1981 census found 60 percent of aborigines were jobless in contrast to a a national unemployment rate of 8 percent.

Their earning capacity was shown to be half the national family average of about $8,000 while 2.5 percent had completed higher education against the 16 percent national total.

Life expectancy, according to the Health Commission of New South Wales state, also is low. From birth, an aborigine can expect to live to 52, or 20 years less than an Australian of European descent.

A changing diet coupled with "desperate alcoholism" were found to be major factors for ill-health and short life spans, the Health Commission said.

Among the young, sniffing gasoline is becoming a major social problem. In recent months, some 200 children have been treated in Alice Springs for detoxification from breathing fumes from cans of gasoline slung around their necks.

The federal government is pouring money into aboriginal communities for education and other programs, but few aborigines manage to join the mainsteam of modern Australia.

The country's first aboriginal judge, for example, was appointed just last year.

However, aborigines have done well with land rights. They own 12.24 percent of Australia — 363,063 square miles, about the size of Texas and New Mexico combined.

It has caused a white backlash, particularly in the Northern Territory, where aborigines, accounting for 24 percent of the 150,000 population, own 37 percent of the land and have claims pending to 14 percent more.

"We have two laws in this country, one for the aborigines and one for white Australians," complained the Northern Territory's deputy minister, Barry Coulter.

WORLD in brief

Filipino military rushes more troops to island

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military rushed more troops to Mindanao Island today after Moslem rebels killed five people and injured at least 24 in a series of attacks to protest government talks with a rival group.

A government negotiator, meanwhile, expressed hope for a quick breakthrough in talks being held today with Communists waging a separate rebellion.

Military chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos said that "the government is in full control" in the four provinces of central Mindanao where the attacks took place Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Under the present circumstances, my order is for the military to clamp down on any show of force that endangers the lives and property of the people," Ramos told reporters in Zamboanga City on Mindanao.

Mexico plans clean-up

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government unveiled a list of 100 steps it promised to take to clean up the nation's environment, from the badly contaminated air in Mexico City to the dirty bays at some of its famous resorts.

Manuel Camacho Solis, secretary of urban development and ecology, announced the measures Tuesday during a meeting of the government's National Ecology Commission. President Miguel de la Madrid attended the session.

Camacho Solis said the program could not be put off any longer.

"Certainly," he said, "it is an ambitious proposal but the country's ecological problem requires many decisions in order to do the things that are necessary when they are necessary: This is it."

Waite is 'encouraged'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite said he was greatly encouraged by meetings with Lebanese militia and religious leaders as he works for the release of foreign hostages.

He also urged Westerners to take "extreme precautions" when entering Moslem west Beirut because of the danger of being kidnapped.

Since Waite arrived Monday in Beirut, two more foreigners have been kidnapped: a Saudi Arabian Embassy employee and a French journalist. No group claimed responsibility for the abductions, which brought to 18 the number of foreigners missing in Lebanon.

Waite, a layman and personal emissary of Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, told a news conference Wednesday that he was "greatly encouraged by the support that has been expressed for my humanitarian mission here. I've received a great deal of support and understanding."

"I have every reason to believe that good progress is being made," Waite said, stressing that he was "not going to be specific about certain plans, but there are plans."

There was no word yet whether Waite had established contact with any group holding hostages.

Congressman see Hall

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Four Republican congressmen brought Sam Nesley Hall, an American accused by the Nicaraguan government of spying, a message from his family and said he asked for a Bible and a toothbrush.

The legislators spoke with Hall during a two-day trip to Nicaragua to talk with Sandinista and opposition leaders. After the meetings, they said they believed U.S. aid to Contra rebels fighting the government was justified.

"The situation seems worse than before," Rep. Frank Wolf of Virginia, told a news conference Wednesday. "I saw people very depressed by what is occurring and that reinforces my position that the aid to the rebels should continue to put pressure on the Sandinistas to change the direction they are taking."

Temporary visa granted

QUEBEC (AP) — A doctor said Wednesday that Soviet authorities have granted a temporary exit visa to cancer patient Inna Kitrosskaya, allowing her to leave Moscow for treatment in the United States.

Cancer specialist Gerald Batist said he spoke to Mrs. Kitrosskaya and her husband, Naum Meiman, by telephone late Tuesday, and that Mrs. Kitrossakaya is expected to arrive in Washington for treatment at the Georgetown University Medical Center by the end of the week.

There was no immediate confirmation of the report from either Moscow or Washington.

Afghanistan's government says cease-fire seems to be holding

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The Afghan government said today its unilateral cease-fire appeared to be holding on the first day. One official told a crowd about rebel threats to break the truce and solicited shouts of "respond, respond."

In Pakistan, guerrilla leaders said there had been no change in their rejection of the Communist government's cease-fire offer and that their forces were conducting normal military activities. Some groups said they planned to step up operations in the nearly 9-year-old insurgency.

An Afghan army official, who only identified himself as Col. Fakri, said all Afghan troops had been pulled back to their permanent bases and there were no reports of fighting.

It was not clear whether the estimated 115,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan were observing the cease-fire.

Moscow-based reporters flown into Kabul for a government-sponsored visit saw soldiers out in force on the streets of the capital. No fighting could be heard in the capital today.

Afghan leader Najibullah has said the truce would remain in effect for six months if the guerrillas agree not to fight.

However, the seven major rebels groups have rejected the government offer, saying they would only accept a truce after the Communist government was toppled and all Soviet troops have withdrawn.

In Kabul, Abdul Arhim Nortef, leader of the National Fatherland Front, addressed about 200 delegates at a congress.

Noting that a guerrilla group in the southeastern Khost province had announced it would not observe the cease-fire, he shouted: "What should we do? Allow them to go on or give them the proper reply?"

The delegates shouted back: "Respond, respond."

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Crane, Upton, Andrews, Gaines, Martin, Howard, Borden, Dawson, Glasscock and Reagan counties: Tonight, cloudy with lows in the mid 30s. Wind southwest 5 to 15 mph. Friday, a 20 percent chance of rain, possibly mixed with snow in the mountains. Colder with highs in the mid 40s. Wind northwest 10 to 15 mph.

Freezing rain, snow possible

From Staff and Wire Reports

Very cold temperatures and a chance of freezing rain mixed with snow are in the Midland-Odessa forecast for tonight and Friday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. There is a 20 percent chance of precipitation through Friday. No significant accumulations of snow are expected.

The overnight low is expected to be in the upper teens, and Friday's high should reach only into the upper 20s, according to the NWS forecast. Winds will be out of the northeast at 10-20 mph tonight, decreasing to 10-15 mph on Friday.

Thursday's high was only nine degrees below the record high of 79 set for that date in 1953. Today's 28-degree low, recorded at 6 a.m., was 22 degrees above the record low set in 1972.

STATE

Clouds and fogginess blanketed almost the entire state this morning as a cold front slowly plodded across Texas and sent temperatures into a downward skid.

To the east of the front, which stretched from Fort Worth to Midland, dense and patchy fog reduced visibility in parts of North and South Texas, and the National Weather Service posted a travelers advisory for some of the area.

Also, some drizzle fell on the middle coastal plain.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 50s to the south and east of the cold front and in the 20s and 30s to the north of the front. Also, readings in the 30s were observed in the higher elevations of the Trans-Pecos.

The 4 a.m. extremes were 28 degrees at Amarillo and 59 degrees at Brownsville.

The forecast calls for cloudy skies and colder temperatures through Friday with a chance of rain, sleet or snow in many areas. Overnight lows should dip as far as near 10 in the Panhandle but into the 20s and 30s elsewhere.

Daytime highs should range from the middle teens in the Panhandle to near 60 in deep South Texas.

NATION

An arctic front chilled the northern Plains and Rockies, sending temperatures tumbling and pushing wind chills down to minus 50 degrees today.

Rain spread from the Florida Panhandle to Alabama, western Georgia, the southern and central Appalachians and the upper Ohio Valley. Light rain lingered from Mississippi across Tennessee into the lower Ohio Valley.

Chlorine leak

Two Midland firefighters, above, work to disperse fumes at the scene of a chlorine leak Wednesday at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center. According to reports, 35 to 40 people were evacuated from the building about 4:30 p.m. when a 150-pound cylinder containing chlorine began to leak. There were no injuries reported. A group of swimmers evacuated from the building, below, watch the scene from across the street. According to fire officials, the leak was caused by a malfunction in the cylinder's regulator.

Cement plant hearings to be in Midland

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Attorney Joe Nuessle isn't counting on stopping construction of a cement batch plant in his Midland County neighborhood during upcoming Texas Air Control Board hearings that were moved from Austin to Midland Wednesday.

Nuessle, who retired as Midland city attorney two years ago, said that he and other residents have a greater chance of blocking plant construction during subsequent appeals to a Travis County district court.

The Air Control Board executive director scheduled a pre-hearing conference on the plant for 7 p.m. January 21 at Scharbauer Elementary School, control board Hearing Examiner John Worley said Wednesday. Actual hearings on the plant also will take place in Midland, he said.

"I wouldn't presume to speak for the executive director, but my guess is it (the move) is because of the extraordinary public interest in this," explained Worley.

Troy Vines, Inc., a Midland cement company, has applied for a permit to build the plant near the intersection of State Highway 158 and County Road 1248 North, about a mile west of the city limits.

Residents in the area have said they oppose the plant because of dust emissions that they believe will adversely affect their health, livestock, vegetation and property.

Worley said he received 24 requests for "party status" in the case that were filed by a Jan. 12 deadline. The status, if granted, would allow the parties to call and cross-examine witnesses, make legal motions and enter objections.

Many of those requests came from residents or landowners of the area who attended a Jan. 5 community meeting to organize opposition to the plant.

Also included among those requesting party status are the City of Midland and the Midland Independent School District, whose governing bodies went on record against the plant during meetings Wednesday.

City officials are concerned the plant could slow development in the area, which is set for annexation and residential use zoning in the proposed city master plan. Officials also are concerned that emissions from the plant could create fog that would hamper aircraft landing at Midland Regional Airport.

Bill Jackson, president of the MISD Board of Trustrees, has said the school district is concerned that students at the Scharbauer school might be affected by emissions from the plant. In addition, the plant would be located within a half mile of two future MISD schools that the district plans to construct if development continues in the area.

In appearances before MISD trustees and at the Jan. 5 meeting of residents, Jody Vines, son of Troy Vines, has said that the company has no intention to harm residents and children in the area.

"We really feel that if we were endangering lives we wouldn't put it there," the younger Vines told trustees Wednesday.

Hearing Examiner Worley said that during the Jan. 21 pre-hearing he would consider preliminary motions in the case, including requests filed by Nuessle, MISD and the City of Midland to reschedule for a later date the Feb. 2 full hearing.

Worley said he also would establish the parties for the case during the Jan. 21 pre-hearing. Because of potential disorganization that could come with 24 separate designated parties, he may rule to consolidate the cases of some of the parties, he said.

At issue during the hearings is "whether or not under the law this proposed concrete batch plant will be exempt under Standard Exemption No. 93," said Worley.

He explained that the plant would be "presumed to be an insignificant source of air contaminents" if Troy Vines, Inc. uses emission containment technology set out in Air Control Board regulations.

Those regulations call for use of a filter in storage silos, sprinkling with water of stockpiles to control dust emissions, immediate clean-up of spillage of cement and fly ash, and use of a layer of wet sand on top of loads carried in open vehicles, among other requirements.

Nuessle said that by concentrating on the company's capacity to meet regulations, the Air Control Board is not addressing issues that concern residents most.

"The truth of the matter is that they take too narrow a view of it, and that's one of our big contentions," Nuessle said. "Equally important is the effect on the quality of life.

"We're fully congnizant that there will be contamination that is just impossible to control all the time," said Nuessle, who added that he and his wife moved to the area five years ago partly for cleaner air conditions that would not stimulate their allergies.

"I think the chances of winning it before the board are slim, but I think that chances of winning it before a court are much better," he said, referring to appeals that would be filed in a Travis County district court should the air control board find against the residents.

Rash breaks out in schools, day care center

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

An outbreak of a rash in day care centers and schools has left children looking "slapped" and parents confused.

Called "Fifth Disease," the viral infection manifests itself into a red, lacy-looking rash that appears under the skin, said MISD nurse Ruth Mitchell.

"It's called the slapped cheek syndrome because usually their cheeks look slapped," Ms. Mitchell said of the children — primarily toddlers through third graders — who contract the disease.

The Texas Department of Health and the Midland City-County Health Department said the disease is not reportable — no formal numbers are kept.

However, one Midland day care center owner said almost half of her children have it and the MISD is sending out a communique to all principals next week regarding Fifth Disease.

"It's terrible. When I first got it (in her day care center) I got spastic...you don't know what the children have," day care owner Irene Sanders said.

Her experience with Fifth Disease, which began for her before Christmas, has been one of differing opinions, angry parents and evasiveness from local health departments, she said.

Ms. Mitchell said the rash carries with it fever and itching in some cases.

Maryland robbery suspect held in Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A Maryland man suspected of the armed robbery of three savings institutions in Odessa and the San Antonio suburb of Helotes today was being held in the federal unit of the Midland City Jail.

The man, 36-year-old Shelby David Shifflett, was arrested by FBI special agents, Odessa detectives and SWAT (special weapons and tactics) members "without incident" in his Sahara Motel room in Odessa on Wednesday morning, according to Raymond Yelchak, FBI special agent in charge of the agency's El Paso Division.

Yelchak said Shifflett was "believed to be armed and dangerous."

Shifflett on mid-afternoon Wednesday appeared before U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith who read the defendant his rights and then sent him to jail. Shifflett is to re-appear before Smith at 10 a.m. Friday for the setting of bail. Currently, Smith said that Shifflett is being held without bail on grounds that he is considered a flight risk

CRMWD will be reducing water rates to member cities in 1987

From Staff Reports

The Colorado River Municipal Water District is reducing water rates to its member cities in 1987 even though it is about to embark on the Stacy Reservoir, the most expensive project in its history.

Under terms of a rate schedule determined Wednesday by CRMWD directors, Odessa's calculated rate will be 6.04 cents per thousand gallons less than its calculated rate in 1986.

Big Spring's reduction on the same basis will be 1 cent, Snyder's will be 2.03 cents less.

Odessa's calculated rate will be 69.39 cents per 1,000 gallons, Big Spring 53.80 cents and Snyder 44.30 cents.

The Big Spring and Snyder reductions are less pronounced because in 1986 deliveries to them rose as a percentage of the total volume delivered, while Odessa's share of the fixed monthly charge drops by 3.13 percent of total fixed charges, while Big Spring increases 2.10 percent and Snyder gains 1.03 percent.

The district's rates are based on fixed charges (for operations and debt service) plus cost of delivering the water, whatever volume each city uses.

The reduction for 1987 was accomplished when CRMWD board members elected to apply $1,400,000 of non-municipal revenues to soften rates to its customers.

That was $200,000 more than last year and was possible by the need to divert less revenues to debt service because a substantial cost under-run on the Beals Creek quality enhancement project permitted a substantial transfer from it to the interest and sinking fund.

Had the board held to last year's level of only $1,200,000 applied to rate modification, Odessa would pay 2.32 cents more per 1,000 gallons of water in 1987 than calculated for 1986, Big Spring .11 of a cent and Snyder 1.67 cents more.

All other rates of the district are tied to one of the three member cities (Odessa, Big Spring and Snyder).

Midland's rate is Odessa's rate for the previous year, plus a 3.227 cents catch-up surcharge. Thus, Midland's 1987 rate will rise because Odessa's actual 1986 rate was up substantially.

In 1988 Midland will benefit from this year's Odessa rate reduction.

Odessa's fixed monthly charge for 1987 will be $228,208 and its estimated 1987 consumption is 6.9 billion gallons; Big Spring's is $80,872 and its estimated consumption 2.75 billion gallons; and Snyder's $39,544 and an estimated consumption of 1.28 billion gallons.

Odessa is projecting it will use 100 million gallons less than its 1986 estimate, Big Spring 150 million gallons less and Snyder 80 million gallons more.

Because consumption by member cities was considerably less than was estimated for 1986, Odessa's actual rate per 1,000 gallons last year was 80.45 cents, Big Spring's 58.31 cents and Snyder's 51.31 cents.

If 1987 consumption lives up to expectations of the cities, the effect will be a savings of 11.37 cents per 1,000 gallons for Odessa over the actual 1986 rate; 4.51 cents less for Big Spring and 7.01 cents less for Snyder.

Vocalist Lee Greenwood will perform with symphony tonight

From Staff Reports

Grammy award winner Lee Greenwood and his "Trick Band" will join the Midland-Odessa Symphony in concert at 8 p.m. today at Odessa's Ector County Coliseum.

Five times voted America's Favorite Male Vocalist, Greenwood began playing professionally in his mid-teens, but his ascent to star status did not begin until nearly 20 years later with his 1981 release of "It Turns Me Inside Out." This debut single remained on the Billboard Country Music Charts for 22 consecutive weeks.

His second album, "Somebody's Gonna Love You," earned "gold" status and included the hit "God Bless the USA." He received the "Song of the Year Award" from the Country Music Association for that composition.

In addition to other awards, Greenwood was voted Male Vocalist of the Year by the Country Music Association (in both 1983 and 1984), The Music City News Cover Awards, NARAS (the Grammy), The Academy of Country Music, and The Cash Box Programmer's Choice Awards.

Lee Greenwood

Commenting on his career, Greenwood says, "You've got to have it together as a performer, or your career will have no momentum. In all those years in Vegas, the one thing that has really paid off for me is that I learned how to perform. I enjoy being on stage and making people happy."

His performance with the Midland-Odessa Symphony marks his first performance with a symphony orchestra, according to Connie Linsler of MOSC. The program will include a short portion with the Symphony and will then feature Greenwood and "Trick Band." Members of the band include Harry Robinson, lead guitar; Nick Uhrig, rhythm guitar; Paul Uhrig, bass guitar; Mickey Olsen, keyboards; Gene Lorenzo, piano; Laddie Cain, guitar, keyboard, vocals; and Greenwood's brother, Marc Greenwood, drums.

Tickets for the performance are $12, all reserved seating, and may be purchased at the door.

'Getting life in order' to meet one's Maker lifelong task

Todd

"Getting your life in order" is a lifelong task. It ends not until "the end," and you and I are laid to rest in the grave or converted to ashes and blessed in the urn or spread over a patch of God's Earth.

Today, we are somewhere between that earthy finality and the Hereafter and are commanded to go on living.

Sounds good to me.

For more years than my alleged 39, my life has been in relative disorder. And for sometime, I've been trying to rack it into order. I've been turning the crank and spinning the prop, and the old engine just sputters and coughs and occasionally "catches on" and makes a few revolutions and revs up.

Before my life is over, I expected to be in decent order and to have "my things" of a material nature arranged in some sort of fashion but spiced with a fair — tolerable — amount of clutter.

I wasn't born to live the life of a filing cabinet.

And I don't suppose I was born just to die in such a fashion that my heirs, cats included, could go through my things in a prearranged orderly way and discard and keep with hassle. Any order, I've decided, should be for the living and for the carrying out of a fulfilled life.

And what about laying up stores of goods and "things" in this life? It's a good idea for comfort's sake and for elusive security. We all desire security and perhaps suffer from the Cinderella complex; we expect something or someone — Prince Charming or Lady Luck — to bail us out of our travail, woes and a maze of insecurities. No deal. The utter truth, it seems to me, is that only you and God can do that. That's the way it is; we live within ourselves and no where else. No one person is going to "fix" you or me.

Weep.

Increasingly, me thinks, Americans are worrying themselves to discontent and illness over retirement.

"Will there be enough money?"

I try not to be too concerned about it, though, admittedly, I'm putting aside nickels, dimes and dollars just in case I live beyond three score and ten — long enough to retire from the work-a-day world.

I have no idea if I will.

My Granddad lived to 97 years and had a grand old life. He put aside those nickels, dime and dollars and "played" the stock market more for fun than for profit. Fact is, though, the more profit he made, the more fun he had. But looking at his lifestyle, you'd never know he made a dime on a dollar.

Why buy anything new when the old is comfortable and does just fine?

Granddad adhered to the old philosophies — from daily thrift to high morality — and cared not what his neighbors did or thought. Status appealed not to him.

But let me tell you this: His life was in order. He lived fully each day and gave no thought of death tomorrow.

Greenlee was born on Feb. 17, 1919, in Hasse and was married to Edna Jewel Celum on Nov. 27, 1946, in Monahans.

He was the manager of the Jal Country Club, was U.S. Navy veteran, and was a member of Calvary Baptist Church, the Monahans Masonic Lodge No. 952, and the Jal Chamber of Commerce. He had moved to Jal from Monahans 24 years ago.

Survivors include his wife; two daughters, Kathy Allen of Midland and Carola Williams of Corpus Christi; his mother, Marie Greenlee of Houston; three brothers, Neil Greenlee of Granbury and Howard Greenlee and Bob Greenlee, both of Arlington; two sisters, Cora Mae Vienneau and Donna Faye Williamson, both of Houston, and two grandchildren.

Education commission disagrees on affect of proposed realignment

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Members of the Select Committee on Higher Education disagreed Wednesday over whether a controversial provision to realign state universities under five governing boards would endanger the package of recommendations the task force is preparing.

Bill Parsley of Lubbock warned that the proposal to reduce the number of university governing boards from 15 to five will generate most of the heat from the report.

The plan would keep the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in the current UT System.

"There is so much opposition...that it could very well detract from the good things we have in here (the report)," he said as the committee finished going over the final draft of the report Wednesday afternoon.

Parsley, a former Texas Tech official, said legislators he has talked to are happy with much of the draft report, the product of 15 months of study, but he said the realignment "could very well destroy a lot of the good work that we have done."

Larry Temple, select committee chairman and chairman of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, said the committee's role is to determine what ought to be done, regardless of the political implications.

Temple added that he plans to present the entire proposal to the Legislature and lobby with the rest of the committee for its approval. "Our job won't be done until the Legislature acts on our recommendations," he said.

The coordinating board, which Temple heads, already has the authority to order reviews of doctoral programs, with the goal of getting rid of overlapping doctoral programs in the next five years. The review would start with universities that have a single doctoral program.

Port Arthur Sen. Carl Parker, Senate Education Committee chairman and a member of the select committee, was absent Wednesday as the committee reviewed the wording of portions of the final draft, but he has expressed doubt that the Legislature will adopt the committee's recommended changes in governing boards.

Ector panel expected to OK proposed guidelines for parolee detention centers

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Planning and Zoning Commission members today were expected to approve a proposed ordinance that would set guidelines for parolee detention centers within the Odessa city limits.

If approved by the city council, the ordinance would clear the way for an Odessa couple to apply for a permit to establish and operate a halfway house for state prison system parolees at the old Sands Motel, 1401 E. 2nd St.

The proposal has drawn objections from Sam Gonzalez, owner of Manuel's Mexican restaurant, 1404 E. 2nd St. Gonzalez, who is chairman of the city Planning and Zoning Commission, has indicated he plans to vote on the proposed ordinance.

Gonzalez contends that, while he is directly involved in opposing establishment of the facility across the street from his restaurant, his vote will not represent a conflict of interest because the proposed ordinance will affect the entire city and must be approved by the city council to become law.

The facility to house prison parolees proposed by Walter and Jaye Young has drawn objections not only from Gonzalez but also from residents of homes in the area, who contend establishment of such a facility might adversely impact on their property values.

As Gonzalez sees it, the question of conflict of interest could be legitimately raised when, and if, the proposed ordinance is approved by council members, becomes law, and then the Youngs return to the Planning and Zoning Commission for approval of their proposal under the new guidelines.

The proposed ordinance to be considered by commission members during their meeting beginning at 10 a.m. today sets specific guidelines for halfway house-detention centers, such as the one proposed by the Youngs.

Applicants, under the proposed ordinance, would be required to obtain "a specific use permit" for a detention facility that would be allowed only in districts zoned light or heavy industrial, light or heavy commercial. The draft ordinance also would require such facilities have no fewer than 10 public parking spaces, plus one space for each employee.

The proposed ordinance additionally stipulates halfway house-dentention centers be located no closer together than one mile and be at least 500 feet from the nearest single-family or multi-family dwelling units or any home for the elderly.

LHS students taking semester exams

and SHANNON FOX

Welcome back Rebs. We hope everyone had a safe and enjoyable holiday.

Can you believe we are getting ready to ring out the old semester and ring in the new? This week has been spent on semester exams and we only have one more day to go. Here is what Friday will look like in Dixie Land:

— First period semester exam: 8:05-10 a.m.

— Third period semester exam: 10:05-noon.

— "0" hour and make-up exams: 1:05-3 p.m.

• • •

Attention band and orchestra students: Do not forget on Friday and Saturday the All-Region Orchestra Clinic and Concert will be held at MHS and the All-City Band Clinic will be held at LHS Auditorium and Band Hall.

• • •

The students of Lee High would would like to take this opportunity to thank Henry Kitzman for all of his hard work and most of all for all of his caring while acting as our principal this past spring and fall semester.

• • •

Congratulations are in order for six of our Rebel Choir members. This past Saturday at Permian High School these students participated in the All-State audition.

Of these six, four were selected to be All-Staters.

This is the highest a student can achieve in his particular field. This marks the first time in the history of Lee that four choir students have been selected to be All-State winners in the same year.

Last week the Rebel Lee Court was announced for the 1986-87 school year.

Gina Adams, Stephanie Wolski, Dena Baker, Michelle Lant, Cari Chadwick, Roz Edan, Darla Hatch, Mike Acosta, Mark Breeding, Jeff Burchard, Jack Chase, Jeff Yanko, Rodney Johnson and Anthony Pertile.

The event is slated for 7:30 p.m. Feb. 8.

• • •

District action is in full swing now for Lee High School basketball teams. The boys team is off to a good start with a 2-1 record. On Saturday, the Rebels have a non-district game against Plainview.

They are open this Friday.

Midlander charged in wife's shooting

Police Roundup

From Staff Reports

A 49-year-old Midland man is free on a $5,000 personal recognizance bond after he was charged with aggravated assault following a shooting incident Wednesday afternoon that injured his wife.

According to reports, witnesses told police they saw Levi Green and his wife Linda, 30, arguing near a residence in the 2400 block of East California Avenue about 3 p.m. Police said the woman allegedly shot at him several times with a pistol, but missed. Witnesses told police he then went to his truck, produced a .22 caliber rifle, and shot the woman several times.

He then jumped into his truck and sped off, police said.

This morning, Ms. Green was listed in satisfactory condition with a gunshot wound to the abdomen, according to a spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Shortly before 4 p.m., the vehicle Green allegedly drove off in was found abandoned, and he was arrested in the 1200 block of East Pecan minutes later, police said.

Police said they did not know the motive for the shooting.

In other reports, police are investigating the burglary of a residence in the 1000 block of Waverly Drive. According to reports, a ladies' ring valued at $500, a 20-gauge shotgun valued at $350, a necklace valued at $25 were among the items reported stolen.

Reports said the burglary occurred between 1 p.m. and 5:35 p.m.

Police are also investigating the burglary of a residence in the 600 block of South Webster. Police said two gold chains valued at $330, a watch valued at $200, and a class ring valued at $50 were reported stolen. The burglary occurred between 7:30 a.m. and 1:35 p.m., reports said.

The Midland County Sheriff's office is investigating the theft of stereo equipment valued at $300 from a residence. According to reports, a turntable, cassette deck, and receiver were stolen from a residence on County Road 116 West east of CR 1260 after someone broke a window near the front door. Reports said the burglary occurred between 9:15 a.m. and 1 p.m.

House members OK Speaker Lewis' rules

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Unlike during House Speaker Gib Lewis' first two sessions in charge, representatives Wednesday routinely approved his 1987-1988 House rules, with the speaker's archcritic deciding not to fight.

Rep. Paul Moreno, D-El Paso, has led the fight in previous years against Lewis' House rules, which Moreno contends give the speaker and his team too much power. While the other 149 members voted Monday to keep Lewis as speaker, Moreno officially abstained from the vote to signal his protest.

"The rules are written up as a convenience factor so the speaker can pass the appropriations bill and the tax bill because he has it stacked," Moreno charged. "We have no democracy here."

Moreno, who is confined to a wheelchair, said he has the flu and was too weak to go to the back microphone and fight against the rules Wednesday. Part of Moreno's animosity toward Lewis and the House system stems from a weak seniority system, which Moreno says the leadership uses to keep him off the budget-writing Appropriations Committee. Moreno is starting his 19th year in the House and is not a committee chairman.

Lewis and his predecessor, former Speaker Billy Clayton, have said their House rules encourage government by consensus and make it difficult for members to bring legislation to floor that does not have a chance of passage. The speaker selects all committee chairmen and at least half of the committee members. Some slots on all the committees except Appropriations are reserved for members with more seniority.

The rules adopted Wednesday are basically the same as the previous session. The Law Enforcement Committee will be broken up into two committees — one handling prisons and youth dentention centers, the other handling public safety. Members also agreed that any bill that dedicates money for a specific program must have two-thirds approval.

Members also suspended the constitutional rule that prohibits the House from acting on legislation in the first 60 days unless the governor declares it an emergency item. The House also adopted its internal operating budget for the session, with no increase from the 1983 and 1985 sessions' budgets.

RASH

"There are no known after-effects. That's the reason we don't get too excited...the child gets over it," the MISD nurse said.

After an incubation period of four to 14 days, the child will commonly break out in a rash mostly on the face, back and stomach, but sometimes on the arms and legs, Ms. Mitchell explained.

A memo issued by the health department said fever occurs in 15 to 30 percent of the patients.

The memo goes on to say there are three stages of Fifth Disease, an initial facial rash which is intensely red; one to four days later a lace-like rash will appear on the arms, trunk, buttocks and thighs.

The third stage lasts for one to three weeks. In this stage, the rash can recur for up to one to three weeks depending on environmental changes such as exposure to sunlight and temperature.

Ron Hunt, MISD nursing supervisor, said the disease doesn't seem to be in epidemic proportions and basically just in kindergarten through third graders.

Sandy Piper, medical records clerk at Midland's health department, said she remembers about 25 cases being reported.

Ms. Sanders said about 35 of her 80 wards have come down with Fifth Disease.

Ms. Mitchell said there is no firm MISD policy on the disease.

"It depends on the child. If he has a fever or if they are itching badly, it's probably better to stay at home."

Ms. Sanders said she permits the children who have Fifth Disease to return to her day care center if a doctor writes a note to that effect.

"I don't think any fluids or aspirin will help. If they do have itching, they should use soda baths or some topical solution to relieve it," Ms. Mitchell said.

Fifth disease got its name because it has been termed the fifth childhood disease — behind measles, chicken pox, mumps and whooping cough, Ms. Sanders said.

OC has record high enrollment

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Regular spring enrollment at Odessa College ended Monday with a new record set.

According to Retha Lindsey, director of news and information, 3,891 students, 966 more than last year, signed up for classes. The previous high registration year was 1984 when 3,449 students registered for classes at OC.

Ms. Lindsey attributed increased registrations to extra scholarships being offered during the 40th anniversary year at OC and to the area's depressed economy.

Late registration for the spring session will continue until Jan. 23. Students registering late are allowed to enter classes after they start but are not excused from work missed before the student's first day of class.

Shifflett was indicted in San Antonio on Dec. 3 for the armed robbery of the San Antonio Savings Association in Helotes on Nov. 17. The FBI said that $7,000 was taken in that robbery.

In addition, Shifflett is suspected of holding up two financial institutions in Odessa on Dec. 19 and again on Jan. 9. In those robberies, $1,186 was taken in the holdup of the Odessa Savings Association on Dec. 19, and $3,900 was taken in the robbery of the Andrews Savings Association on Jan. 9.

The FBI had traced Shifflett to Odessa after a Bandera County woman with whom Shifflett had lived and had an apparent falling out with told lawmen that Shifflett had telephoned her from Odessa on Tuesday and mentioned that he had "pulled two or three robberies out where he was" and that he had marijuana and cocaine and was drunk.

In warrants issued for Shifflett's arrest, the FBI had expected to find a blue-steel revolver, a .45-caliber automatic handgun and a machinegun in Shifflett's possession. However, Shifflett supposedly had brandished only a dark toy pistol when he allegedly committed the three armed robberies.

Should Shifflett be convicted of the three holdups, he could be sentenced to a maximum of 65 years in prison.

Garbage man quits hauling trash to write Utah book

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — For Steve Warren, leaving the backbreaking work of hoisting overflowing garbage cans to write his first book and start a publishing company wasn't as great a leap as he'd figured.

With publication of "Drat! Mythed Again: Second Thoughts on Utah," Warren left behind a 640-home refuse route to clamp the lid of truth on a host of apocryphal tales about the state that many take for gospel.

But the garbageman turned author says he doesn't feel he's strayed too far afield.

"A couple times I was off with a sore back and felt if I continued collecting garbage for too much longer, I'd be off a much longer time," he recalls. "It's not too big a transition from being a garbageman to being an author."

In April, Warren, a 38-year-old journalism graduate of Brigham Young University, quit his sanitation job to devote full attention to writing and running his suburban West Valley City Altair Publishing Co.

Altair's only release to date is Warren's paperback. So far, about 500 copies have been sold — enough to allow Warren to breathe a bit more easily about his plunge into the world of literature, which he had experienced before only through occasional free-lance articles.

"It's looking as though we will be able to stay with this full time," he says. Warren can also take some fiscal comfort in the part-time job his wife, Ja Niece, holds at a hospital blood bank laboratory.

"Drat! Mythed Again" debunks myriad myths, some more than a century old, that have been woven by time into Utah's historical and cultural fabric. His work covers a wide range, from local history and politics to the role of pioneers and the Mormon Church in shaping the state.

One of the first myths Warren attacks is the idea, accepted unquestioningly by many Utahns, that Mormon pioneers came to the Great Basin in 1847 and turned a barren desert wilderness into a fertile Eden through hard work and miracles.

In fact, Warren points out in quoting no less an authority than Mormon Church President Wilford Woodruff, the region that first met pioneer eyes was a "vast, rich fertile valley...a glorious valley abounding with the best fresh water springs, riverlets, creeks, brooks and rivers...the grandest and most sublime scenery that could be obtained on the globe."

Still, Warren, an active church member, emphasizes he doesn't want to convey the idea that Utah's Mormon forebears simply flopped down under shady fruit-laden trees when they arrived in the Salt Lake Valley.

"In leaving Missouri and Illinois, they were really in desperate circumstances," he says. "They may have settled in a fertile area, but they still didn't have much and had to work hard to do what they did."

Warren's book also pokes fun at the idea that Utahns, 70 percent of whom are on Mormon Church membership rolls, follow the political advice of the faith's leaders like a flock of vacuous sheep.

"There is a certain resentment when church leaders try to influence members," Warren says. "Church members have a strong sense of separation of church and state."

In another chapter, Warren exposes the myth that Utahns provided an example for the nation during the Great Depression by using church welfare programs to minimize the state's reliance on federal aid.

That account, pointed to with pride by many residents of the Beehive State, "was largely a fantasy," Warren writes.

Actually, statistics show Utah ranked in the top 10 in virtually every category of federal relief spending during the Depression. By the end of June, 1933, Warren says, "Utah ranked fourth in the percentage of families on federal relief. Only South Dakota, Arizona and Florida had a higher proportion of their population on welfare."

Warren is already researching a second book, a more practical work aimed at helping high school seniors make the transition to college. He is also interested in publishing a Utah encyclopedia.

Most music sold rock, figures show

Hearst News Service

Are you a typical record buyer? According to figures recently released by the Recording Industry Association of America, 43 percent of the pre-recorded music sold in 1985 could be classified as "rock;" 17 percent was "pop;" 10 percent "black" or "dance;" 10 percent "country;" 5 percent "classical;" 4 percent "gospel;" 3 percent "jazz;" and 8 percent "other."

The largest single demographic category of record buyers was the age group 35 and older (26 percent), followed by 15- to 19-year-olds (25 percent). Caucasians purchased 82.2 percent of pre-recorded music.

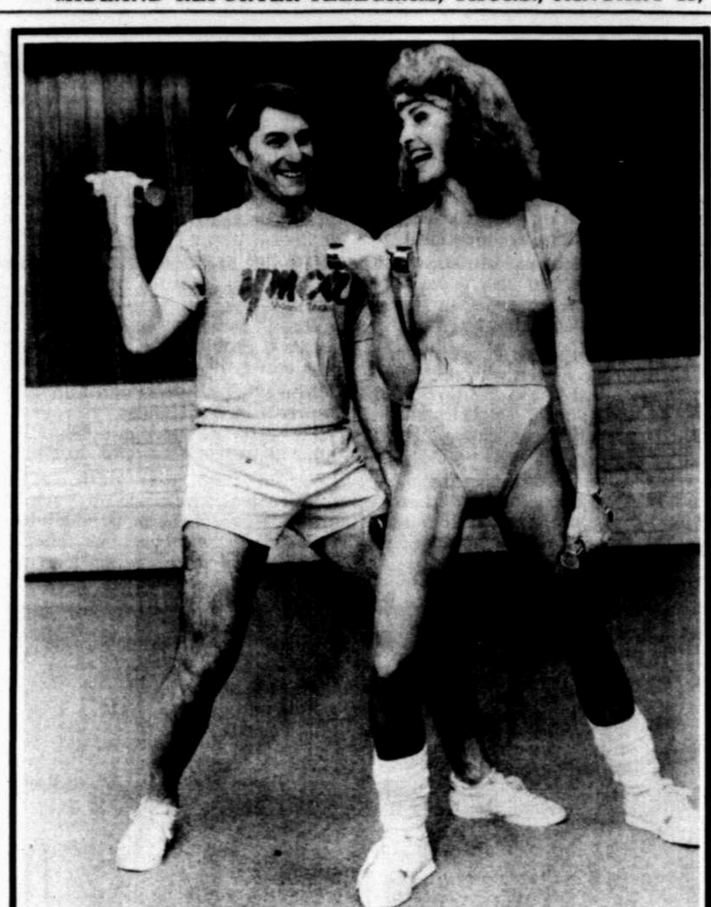

Billboard reports a survey of 300 male and female heads of households who reside in the Nashville area, polled by Shockley Research Inc. The median respondent was 43 years old, and with an annual household income of $31,432.

Of the entire group, which ranges upward from 18 years old, the favorite category was "country/pop," preferred by 18 percent, followed by "easy listening," "rock" and "semi-classical and classical," all at about 14 percent to 15 percent each. "Pop" was preferred by only 7 percent, as was "religious/gospel." Only 5 percent of the Nashville household heads claim to prefer jazz.

Those who wonder what music falls into each category might be helped by recent ads for the Columbia Record Club, where prospective members are asked to select from among "Hard Rock" (David Lee Roth, Genesis); "Heavy Metal" (Quiet Riot, Ratt, Ozzy Osbourne); "Soft Rock" (Madonna, Huey Lewis & the News); "Black Music" (Luther Vandross, Janet Jackson); "Pop" (Barbra Streisand, Neil Diamond); and "Easy Listening" (The Mantovani Orchestra, Frank Sinatra).

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Henry Winkler spends so much time behind the camera these days that one of the few places you'll see him is on the annual "Weekend With the Stars Telethon for Cerebral Palsy."

"The Fonz," as he was known for 11 years on "Happy Days," lately has been working as a producer and director.

Winkler and his partner John Rich produce ABC's "MacGyver," developed the short-lived series "Mr. Sunshine" and have several other projects in the works.

For eight of the last nine years, Winkler has been on the screen for the cerebral palsy telethon. This year's 21-hour event will be carried Saturday and Sunday on 83 stations.

The telethon, which raised $18.5 million last year, also features John Ritter and his wife, Nancy Morgan, and Nancy Dussault in Los Angeles, with Wayne Newton, Dennis James and Florence Henderson in New York.

Winkler hasn't appeared in a movie since "Night Shift ' five years ago, and his run on "Happy Days" ended in 1984.

"I haven't thought about acting in three years," he said. "I'm a character actor. I'm not a leading man. I guess a part will come along.

"I'm not consciously moving away from acting. It's weird, but it's happening. I have nothing to do with it. I would like to become a good director."

Winkler, a vision of casualness in a four-day beard and a dark green sweater, said he did not think his acting career had been hurt by playing the Fonz.

"The Fonz helped me in my whole life," he said. "I can't think of one negative. I have lived the most incredible life and partly because I was fortunate enough to be picked to play the Fonz."

Winkler became involved with the cerebral palsy telethon while he was still playing the ducktailed, leather-jacketed Arthur Fonzarelli. His wife, Stacey, was his co-host the first year, but Winkler said she was uncomfortable in front of the camera. Ms. Dussault has been his co-host since then.

Mrs. Winkler is now a commissioner overseeing the city's Department of Children's Services, and both Winklers are heavily involved in various events and services for children.

"I spend most of my time working on child abuse and neglect," said Winkler, who is a spokesman for United Friends of the Children.

"John and I work four hours on and four hours off on the telethon," he said. "By the time your four hours are up you drag out and get some rest. Then you come back in and by the time you're in the makeup room the adrenalin gets going. We've been lucky. Every year we've raised more and more money. One thing we do is explain where the money goes so that people aren't sending it in blindly."

In the years he's been on the show Winkler has followed the progress of a youth named Craig Clifton. "He's an incredible guy," he said. "He's now in college, but it was once thought he wouldn't have any kind of quality life. He's won gold medals in the Special Olympics and he drives a car.

"I remember another young man who learned to use a typewriter. He became a sports analyst. The thing about cerebral palsy is that it affects the muscles, not the brain. So there's a person and a personality inside that needs to be nurtured even though he can't walk or talk."

"Smokey Mountain Christmas" was the first movie Winkler directed, and he got the job because its star, Dolly Parton, thought he would work well with children.

"Sometimes I think I get along better with children than adults," he said. "All you have to do is be honest and they respond to you. When we started rehearsal I didn't go to the script immediately. I made them into a family and assigned them to look after each other and be responsible for their behavior."

Although he's executive producer of "MacGyver" he hasn't assigned himself to direct any of the episodes.

"Nor will I," he said. "If I don't come in on time and on budget I certainly can't yell at anyone else for not coming in on time and on budget."

Compact disc players: Research before buying

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

The quality of music produced by a state-of-the-art compact disc player hooked up to high quality components and speakers may surpass the sound produced by stereo record players. But before rushing to replace your existing system with a new compact disc system, the Better Business Bureau recommends that you consider the following:

- Only a small portion of music available on records is currently available on discs.
- Discs generally cost more than records.
- If you hook up a compact disc player to your existing system, the sound may only be marginally better and it might, under high volume use, damage your speakers.

It now seems likely that within a few years the selection of compact disc music will rival that now available on records. However, due to the newness of compact discs, the manufacturers are presently offering contemporary popular and classical music before turning to reissues of the great recordings of the past. This will change as more people buy compact disc players.

The improved sound of discs over records stems from the way the sound is stored. A record "stores" music in hairline-sized grooves which vary in depth and width as the sound changes. The groove is "read" by a needle, which rides in and eventually wears down the groove.

A compact disc contains no grooves, but rather millions of bits of computer information, which is "read" by a laser beam that never physically touches the disc. Therefore, a disc, if used and stored properly, can last forever.

When shopping for a disc player consider such options as remote control (wired or wireless), programmability (which permits the playing of songs in a sequence other than that in which they are recorded), music search functions and automatic disc changers. Be sure to compare warranties.

DEAR ABBY

Army to lingerie-loving private: Can we talk?

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABIGAIL VAN BUREN: This is in reference to the letter from "Private Person," who described himself as a slim, trim, 26-year-old, happily married man who is now serving in the U.S. Army. His problem was that he enjoyed wearing women's underwear. You advised the private to keep the matter private.

To enlighten yourself regarding the military and what it can do for those who find themselves burdened with a desire to wear women's underwear, you should call the military's installation hospital and speak to the psychiatrist about the medical and psychiatric assistance that this man is entitled to gratis.

But now that you have already advised the soldier to keep his problem hidden, perhaps you should learn what might happen to such soldiers if they continue to hide such aberrations. Then your advice to others in similar circumstances might change, as it should, in order to be correct. — JAY M. HAMILTON, LIEUTENANT COLONEL, U.S. ARMY (RET.), GRANT'S PASS, ORE.

DEAR ABBY: "Private Person" wrote to you about being in the Army — and wanting to wear women's undergarments. You advised him that the two just wouldn't fit together.

When I was with the Navy SEAL Team in Vietnam, we ALL wore panty hose. We were out in the muck of the swamps and jungle for days on end, and the nylon really cut down on the friction, which could otherwise rub us raw. An added plus was that removal of the panty hose also removed many of the leeches that invariably clung to us — sometimes more than 100 per man!

It was always an amazing sight before every mission to see Navy commandos all camouflaged and painted green and black, struggling to get their hairy muscular bodies into the panty hose. But it worked! Sign me ... EX-PANTY HOSE WEARER AND DAMNED GLAD OF IT

P.S. Many of our wives and girlfriends reported embarrassing moments when shopping in San Diego stores for dozens of size XL and XXL panty hose. (We didn't have the nerve to go buy them ourselves.) — JERRY J. FLETCHER, LA JOLLA, CALIF.

DEAR JERRY: The things I learn while writing this column! You Navy commandos wore panty hose openly, out of necessity, but the aforementioned Army private wore women's lingerie for kicks, which is quite another matter.

Cross-dressing is nothing new; it's been with us for centuries. It's a compulsion — not something that requires "curing," unless, of course, it creates marital or martial problems.

DEAR ABBY: When a person says to you, "If you have no place else to go for Thanksgiving, you are welcome to join us," would you call that an invitation or an insult? — WONDERING IN ST. PETERSBURG

DEAR WONDERING: It was, no doubt, intended as an invitation, but it could have been more graciously extended.

Consumer magazine tests 18 garage-door openers

By WILLIAM R. GREER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — If it weren't for labor-saving devices like stereo-record changers, electric toothbrushes and automatic transmissions, some people probably would not get up in the morning. Just try telling someone that they not only have to drive their car in 10-degree weather, but they also have to stand outside and close the garage door before they do it.

That is why the invention of the garage-door opener, though it is not much to look at, has become so appreciated and why even slight innovations in function are noticed. When Consumer Reports, the product-testing magazine, examined the latest garage-door openers in 1985, it found that the 18 models it tested worked well. The only way to distinguish them wereby what the magazine called "small advantages" and "small inconveniences." Top ratings went to the Norelco Genie.

The Genie garage-door openers are now sold under the Philips Home Products label. Norelco and Philips Home Products are divisions of North American Philips, a subsidiary of the Dutch electronics giant, N.V. Philips. Last summer, Philips introduced a model that, depending on how many of eight optional attachments a homeowner buys, will turn on lights and appliances inside a house, beep and flash to warn that the door is moving up or down, tell those inside the house when the door is open or closed, and block all remote controls from operating the door when a homeowner leaves on vacation.

To meet Underwriters Laboratories standards, all garage-door openers must automatically reverse if the door hits something while descending.

But all require at least two pounds of pressure to reverse them. The Genie has an attachment that allows it to be stopped and reversed when an infrared beam is broken.

Plastic storm windows way to reduce heating costs

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

If you're looking for a way to reduce winter heating costs without a big investment, interior plastic storm windows may be the answer. Windows make up aproximately 5-25 percent of the exterior wall area in most homes.

Since single- and double-glazed windows have a low insulation value, the amount of heat loss through them can be significant. For older homes, a new aluminum and glass storm window may cost $35 to $45.

Although storm windows can be a good long-term investment for the house, the same amount of energy can be saved by seasonal use of an interior plastic storm window you can install yourself. The procedure involves applying double-stick tape to the window trim or wall to hold the plastic in place. Then press a slight oversized piece of plastic against the tape without stretching.

Use a hair dryer to heat the plastic and cause it to shrink. The heat-shrinking eliminates all the wrinkles and leaves a clear, taut, interior storm window that can be removed in the spring.

It typically costs $1-$2 per window to install plastic storm windows, and kits which will cover one to five windows are available at home improvement centers.

The interior plastic windows have an advantage over placing plastic on the outside since they eliminate the cost for nails and the nail holes that are left on the house.

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

All my life I thought hamburgers were a Texas invention. Imagine my surprise a few years ago when I began to hear people raving about "wonderful" White Castle hamburgers, from the chain of the same name, located mostly in the North and Midwest.

For a long time now I have been wanting to try one of these paragons of hamburger wonderfullness, but have not been able to — after all, who wants to drive to Ohio just for a hamburger? But recently when I found boxes of White Castle hamburgers in a local supermarket's freezer section, I couldn't resist buying one.

We tested these hamburgers for taste, price and advertising accuracy. All the tasters this time were teens or adults, because none of the small children were remotely interested in taking even a tiny bite.

According to label information, each 15-ounce box contains "White Castle 10 fully cooked frozen hamburger sandwiches" — which is a good indication of their size. In fact, each sandwich seemed to be made with a sliver of meat (and, at least on one occasion, a sliver of bone) and one of those already-cooked dinner rolls for sale at bread stores.

The 10-hamburger box cost $4.99, which means each burger cost about 50 cents. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

They are easy enough to fix — to heat in a conventional oven, you have to thaw the burgers, sprinkle or spray a little water on them (that's what it says), wrap in foil and heat for 10-15 minutes. If using a microwave oven, you just heat the burgers for 30-60 seconds per burger. (Of course, every oven is different, so cooking times may vary a little bit.)

Label advertising claims White Castle burgers have "the taste some people just won't live without!" It also urges customers to "buy 'em by the 'Sack.' " Well, they are small — maybe a whole sackful is how much you need to make a meal.

The tasters were divided — some hated the hamburgers, some loved them. Warmed up exactly the way they are packaged, the burgers are bland — just meat, bun and a touch of onion. Dressed up with pizza sauce and mozerella cheese, however, they are delicious.

Maybe that's the attraction — these small, bland and greasy hamburgers are perfect for being "improved" with cheese, sauces, vegetables and seasonings of various kinds. You can have exactly the taste you want, without too much expense. But "as is" from the box, the sandwiches are nothing to rave about.

Advertising claims the chain was "established in 1921." You'd think those northerners would have learned about lettuce, tomatoes and mustard by now.

Brewing coffee, tea with hot tap water may be harmful

WATERLOO, Ontario (AP) — Using hot tap water to speed the making of coffee or tea is not merely a matter of impairing flavor.

It may also impair health, according to the Canadian Water Quality Association.

"Water, especially when it is acidic, absorbs lead, cadmium and other harmful-to-health elements from plumbing pipes," the association says. "Hot water absorbs these elements at a much faster rate than cold water."

It recommends always using cold water for any cooking purpose. It says even cold water should be allowed to run in the morning long enough to flush away harmful elements it may have picked up in the pipes overnight.

Dollar still falling

LONDON (AP) — The dollar retreated further against European currencies today as a long-awaited technical recovery failed to materialize. Gold also fell back slightly in Europe after a sharp jump Wednesday.

The dollar lost nearly two more centimes against the Swiss francs, and was down 11 lire against the Italian lira, while the British pound topped $1.50 level for the first time since Sept. 4.

Dealers said they were awaiting a dollar rebound from its recent steep falls, possibly the coming long weekend in the United States that will close markets there.

In Tokyo, markets were closed for a public holiday. In London, the yen was quoted at 153.25 yen, compared with a closing price in Tokyo Wednesday of 153.23.

—1.5388 Swiss francs, down from 1.5562

—6.1275 French francs, down from 6.1775

—2.0665 Dutch guilders, down from 2.0775

—1,305.50 Italian lire, down from 1,316.75

—1.3618 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3663

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.5030, compared with $1.4985 Wednesday.

Gold lost $2 to $4 an ounce after gaining strongly the day before in response to the dollar's fall.

It opened in London at a bid price of $415.65 a troy ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $417.50. At mid-morning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $415.00.

In Zurich, the bid price was $414.50, down from $418.50 late Wednesday.

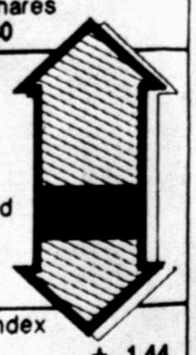

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 97 cents to close at a bid $415.76.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.57 a troy ounce, down from Wednesday's $5.60.

Oil imports hit highest level since 1980 last year

WASHINGTON (AP) — Stimulated by falling prices, U.S. oil imports last year rose to their highest level since 1980, an oil industry trade group said Wednesday.

U.S. users brought in an average of 6 million barrels a day of crude oil and refined products from overseas suppliers, up 22 percent from the 4.9 million barrels a day imported in 1985, the American Petroleum Institute reported in a year-end statistical review.

That gave imports a 35 percent share of the market for the year as a whole and 39 percent in December.

The total of 2.2 billion barrels imported during 1986 was the most in any year since 2.5 billion barrels were shipped to the United States in 1980, when the import market share was 40 percent.

In December 1985, crude oil sold for about $28. Just after that, Saudi Arabia doubled its production to 4.4 million barrels a day and the price fell to below $10 in July.

Since then, members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have agreed to restrict production enough to hold the price at $18. Current prices are fluctuating around $19 under the influence of a severe cold snap in Europe.

Edward Murphy, API's director of financial analysis and statistics, said the institute had estimated that five years of $20 oil would reduce U.S. production by 1.5 million barrels a day from the 1985 figure of 9 million barrels a day; five years of $15 oil would trim output by 2.7 million barrels a day and $28 oil would mean crude output would remain stable.

"The experience to date is roughly consistent with that," Murphy said.

Total U.S. petroleum demand expanded 4.8 percent during the year as the transportation and utility sectors increased usage sharply.

Domestic crude oil production fell from a daily average of 9 million barrels a day to 8.7 million barrels during 1986. But the decline continued throughout the year, and December's average production of 8.3 million barrels was 7.7 percent below the 9 million barrels recorded in December 1985.

U.S. crude oil production costs are far higher than most of the world's. Low prices not only lead to idle exploration rigs but also to abandoned producing wells, frequently when the next maintenance expenses must be made.

While some economic sectors clearly benefited from low oil prices, most forecasters seem to have underestimated the speed at which the oil sector would be hurt and to have overestimated the spread of benefits elsewhere, said Michael Canes, a vice president of the institute.

"A lot of people did forecast a jump in (gross national product). ... I saw estimates on the order of 1 percent over what we would otherwise have had," he said. "It's not clear that happened."

Although final figures aren't in yet, Commerce Department analysts estimate that gross national product — the total of all goods and services sold in the economy — grew by 2.7 percent in 1986.

Cold weather heats up oil prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices moved higher, bolstered by continuing indications that OPEC may find more support from outside the cartel for its plan to prop up the market.

Continued record low temperatures in Europe, and predictions of a cold snap soon in the Northeast and Midwest of the United States also helped strengthen prices on Wednesday, market participants said.

The rally in oil prices "is not going to be relieved until the cold wave in Europe breaks," said John O'Dea, the manager of international energy futures for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. in New York.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for February delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude grade, closed at $19.13 a barrel, up from Tuesday's close of $18.89 and well above the roughly $15-per-barrel before the December meeting of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

But traders and analysts said prices got a fresh boost Wednesday from recent developments indicating that some non-OPEC producers may cooperate with the cartel in an effort to support prices.

On Wednesday, for example, Egyptian Oil Minister Abdel-Hadi Kandil vowed that Egypt, which is not a member of the cartel, would do its part by maintaining reduced output levels.

Retailers see 4.4 percent surge in December

January car sales plunge 38.4 percent from 1986 levels

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

The nation's automakers, whose surging year-end sales helped spur a 4.4 percent rise in December retail sales, saw their fortunes turn around early this month as new car sales dropped sharply from the same period last year.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that retail sales rose in December on the basis of a 16.2 percent increase in car sales and a spurt of last-minute Christmas shopping.

But with many car purchases out of the way, the major automakers' sales dropped 38.4 percent from Jan. 1-10 compared to the first 10 days of 1986. Passenger and light-duty truck sales also fell 24.5 percent.

Sales were down without exception for automakers. They also were down for truckmakers except American Motors Corp., which was buoyed by sales of its ever-popular Jeeps.

The automakers said they had sold 107,735 cars, compared with 174,954 in the year-ago period. The five domestic truckmakers sold 51,524 light trucks, down from 68,279 in early January 1986.

Auto sales moved at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 5.3 million vehicles, well below the normal rate of 7.7 million vehicles a year.

Analysts attributed the activity in the nation's auto showrooms to buyers moving up purchases to take advantage of the sales tax deduction that expired Dec. 31.

New car owners can expect to pay higher prices for gasoline, as oil prices on the New York Mercantile Exchange continued to climb. The February contract for West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark crude oil, closed at $19.13 a barrel, up from $18.89 on Tuesday.

Indications that OPEC may find more support from outside the cartel for its plan to prop up the oil market has helped push prices up, some observers have said. Continued record low temperatures in Europe, and predictions of a cold snap soon in the United States also helped strengthen prices Wednesday, traders said.

Prices also rose on Wall Street, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing at 2,035.01, up 22.07. It was the ninth straight gain and eighth record high.

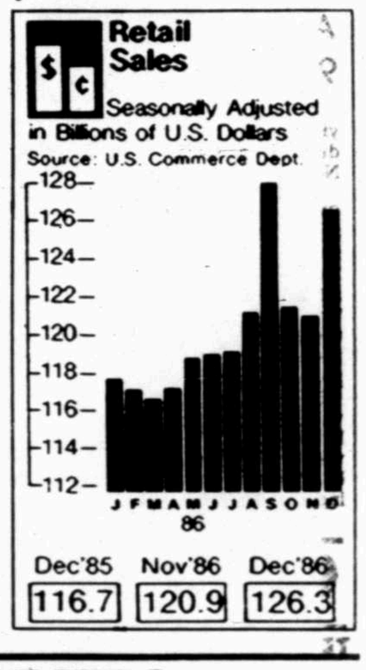

The December retail sales jump was the biggest one-month increase since a 5.6 percent gain in September, the Commerce Department said.

But while retail sales ended the year on a positive note, for all of 1986 they rose 5.2 percent, the smallest annual gain since a 3 percent rise in the recession year of 1982, the department said. Sales increased 6.3 percent in 1985.

CBS makes Paley, Tisch jobs official

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS has given the company's interim bosses, William S. Paley and Laurence A. Tisch, clear title on the jobs they have held the past four months.

The CBS Inc. board on Wednesday unanimously elected Paley as chairman and Tisch as president and chief executive, replacing Thomas H. Wyman, who resigned from all three posts in September.

Wall Street reacted positively, bidding CBS stock up $1.75 to $138.75 a share Wednesday in trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

CBS directors had turned to board members Paley and Tisch to guide the company in the transition after Wyman's resignation.

Paley, 85, founded CBS in 1927 as a radio network but was forced to retire as chairman in 1983 to make room for Wyman.

Tisch, 63, is chairman of Loew's Corp., CBS's biggest shareholder. Wyman had invited him to join the CBS board in October 1985, but Tisch reportedly grew increasingly critical of how the company was managed.

The company was being forced to cut costs because of sluggishness in the national advertising market. It was also coming off a tense period during which it successfully defended itself against an unwelcome takeover bid by broadcaster Ted Turner.

In a statement accompanying the latest CBS announcement, Tisch said he had "become increasingly impressed over the last four months with the strengths and potential of this great company and of its people."

Paley said the board has been impressed by Tisch's "commitment to CBS and its values and by his grasp of the strategic and operating issues confronting our company."

Paley said he plans to "continue working closely with CBS programming staffs on the creativity and quality of our offerings."

Peter Appert, a media analyst for the investment firm C.J. Lawrence & Co., said the board's latest decision came as no surprise.

John Reidy, media analyst for the investment firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., agreed, saying, "It's healthy for the company to have both the administrative skills of Laurence Tisch and the longterm broadcasting perspective of Paley both in place."

During the past year, CBS has laid off 1,500 to 2,000 employees, sold its television station in St. Louis and closed a technology center in Connecticut. It sold its book publishing division in October, brought in a management consulting firm to review how the company operates and reorganized its broadcast group.

For the first nine months of 1986, CBS reported a profit of $152.1 million on revenue of $3.57 billion, with 57 percent of revenue from its broadcast operations, 29 percent from records and 14 percent from publishing, including its magazines and the since-sold book division.

M&M-Mars bringing back red M&M candies

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Red M&Ms, banished 11 years ago because of misplaced concern over food dyes, are once again taking their rightful place among the tan, brown, yellow, orange and green.

The return of the red candies that melt in your mouth but not in your hand was prompted by a national outcry that included thousands of letters to the manufacturer and the formation of college campus societies, a spokesman for the Hackettstown-based M&M-Mars said Wednesday.

A few stores already have the red ones in stock now, but most won't carry them until February.

Caterpillar to close plants, cut 2,800 workers

Caterpillar Inc., the earth-moving equipment manufacturer, tentatively plans to close plants employing more than 2,800 in Iowa, Oregon and Scotland as part of a long-term retrenchment, the company said Wednesday.

As part of the retrenchment plans Caterpillar will take a pre-tax charge of $109 million in its fourth quarter, spokesman Gil Nolde said today.

Plant closings are planned in Davenport, Iowa; Dallas, Ore.; and near Glasgow, Scotland, under the plan, said Nolde.

The closings would probably not occur before 1988, he said.

American, Pan Am said to be talking merger

NEW YORK — American Airlines is engaged in talks to determine whether it wants to buy Pan American World Airways, a carrier that is ailing but that still has valuable international routes, sources close to both companies said Wednesday.

The sources would not disclose whether any agreement was imminent, but they said that American was looking at buying the whole airline and not just its more valuable pieces such as its international routes.

A combination of American and Pan Am would result in a major world airline and close the gap between it and United, which acquired Pan Am's Pacific routes last year.

Sources say Sanger Harris, Foleys will merge

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas-based Sanger Harris and Houston-based Foley's department store chains will merge in a deal that is expected to be announced within the next two days, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

Media kits detailing the combination of the two chains, both of which are owned by Federated Department Stores of Cincinnati, Ohio, have already been prepared, an unnamed source told the newspaper Wednesday.

Executives of Federated and Sanger Harris declined comment Wednesday. Officials at Foley's could not be reached for comment.

Foley's has 17 stores in Texas, and Sanger Harris has 18 in Texas, Oklahoma, Arizona and New Mexico.

Howland

With the greater mobility of our society and the tendency for families to spread across the country in search of career opportunities and satisfaction, the traditional role of the nuclear family has largely been blown out of the water.

Proudly into the void jumps the office — or other workplace — to operate as a sort of surrogate family.

It seems to me most noticeable among people in my general age group (mid-20s to early 30s). With historic social channels and family ties abandoned, the primary network for meeting new people and establishing meaningful friendships becomes those people with whom you spend half or more of your waking weekday hours — co-workers.

Within this framework, certain relationships and roles seem to naturally evolve in most business environments. If you've worked in an office for more than six months, I'm sure you've known:

■ The Mother Hen — this woman, generally an older, white- or red-haired matron is the self-appointed birthday rememberer, pot luck luncheon arranger, problem solver and all-around busybody.

In my college days, I took a temporary summer job processing mortgages in a department full of mother hens. As one of only three or four males on the floor I was nurtured, cajoled and fussed over like I'd never known. Granddaughters, nieces and neighbors' daughters needing escorts to dances and blind dates were flying out of the woodwork. Never before, or since, have so many people been concerned for my social welfare and happiness.

As great as that might sound, it's no wonder these girls were in the blind date dating pool. All the 'code words' fit: 'Great little dancer,' 'Such a sweet personality,' and 'She has such pretty skin ... (and so much of it).' Imagine my surprise when the mother hens, and a few of the younger women in the office, arranged my going away party at the end of the summer at the Denver Playboy Club.

■ The Whining Aunt — this co-worker, generally female, can't say anything nice about anybody, isn't satisfied with anything — from desk arrangements to climate control, lighting and choice of lunch spots — and doesn't hesitate telling everyone within ear shot at every opportunity to let them know just how displeased she is.

One particularly annoying habit that one whining aunt I worked with had was — although she never directly complained about smoking — if anybody came within 20 feet of her desk with a cigarette she would, starting gradually with a couple of little throat clearings, launch into a coughing fit that would make tuberculosis sound like a chest cold.

■ The Sexy Second Cousin — There is one in virtually every office: that vision of physical perfection, generally in a distant or inaccessible department, who is the type to inspire a major-league, fall-down-slobbering heart-wrenching crush.

And just like that gorgeous number at the family reunion who turns out to be a long lost second cousin on your great-grandfather's side, for one reason or another, the object of all that non-reciprocated lust turns out to be unattainable for reasons of marital status, sexual orientation or other extenuating circumstances.

■ The Kid Sister (or Brother) — This is generally the most transitory role in the 'office family,' occupied by one of the newest members of the staff — typically working his or her first 'real job,' fresh out of college and full of enthusiasm, naivete and sometimes homesickness.

This person is usually the brunt of a great deal of teasing, practical jokes and general harassment — most of it stemming from their lack of experience in coping with the variety of characters they are called upon to deal with in the course of daily business.

Many of these 'Kids' who are slow to overcome their fledgling status and don't develop a thick enough skin to deal with the teasing grow up to be 'Whining Aunts' after a while.

■ The Surrogate Spouse — In most long-term work environments, there emerges one close friendship, typically with a member of the opposite sex, which in its breadth and degree of honesty rivals a true working marriage. He or she is the person who tells you that there's toilet paper stuck to the bottom of your shoe when you're on the way to a meeting with a boss.

This person complains without embarrassment about personal discomfort and personal crises and expects the same from you. He or she scrupulously notices — but doesn't mention — how much more you eat, drink or smoke than you should. They also, almost invariably, know at least one thing about you that no one else, except maybe your parents, knows — like a secret desire to become a professional bowler.

An Andrews County reentry has yielded a probable Wichita Albany discovery located southwest of the Nelson field.

PETROLEUM TECHNICAL SERVICES CO. reentered the No. 1 Scarborough, potentialing it to flow 92 barrels of 35.8 gravity crude and 103 Mcfd on a 14/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 250 psi. The well is flowing from perforations 7,141 to 7,300 ft. The interval was acidized with 10500 gallons 15 percent acid. Gas-oil ratio is 1,120:1.

Permitted as an 8,000 ft. plugback wildcat, the well — originally drilled by Humble Oil & Refining in 1943, was drilled to 10,929 ft. and plugged back to 7,660 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing at 7,729.5 ft.

On ground elevation of 3,328.7 ft., formation tops include the Yates at 2,826 ft., San Andres at 4,288, Tubb at 6,445, and the Wichita Albany at 6,952 ft. Pay was topped at 7,141, ft.

Location is 635 ft. from south and 1,945 ft. from east lines of Section 7, Block A-40, PSL survey, 10 miles southeast of Eunice, N.M.

Marathon completes Palo Pinto discovery

MARATHON OIL CO., Midland, gained a Palo Pinto discovery in Concho County with the recompletion of a former Bunger oil and recent Cross Cut gas opener in the Branch South field.

The No. 4 G. Whitehead was completed for a calcualted absolute open flow of 2.05 Mmcfd from perforations 2,142 to 2,159 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,000 gallons of acid.

The well was plugged back to 2,280 ft. from original depth of 3,020 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,131 ft., include the Bunger at 1,612 ft., Canyon at 1,833, Palo Pinto at 2,100, Cross Cut at 2,246, Strawn at 2,484, and the Ellenburger at 2,554 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from south and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 151, EL&RR survey, Abst. 1037, 6.5 miles southeast of Eden.

The well was completed in 1982 to pump 12 barrels of 32 gravity crude from perforations 1,616 to 1,629 ft. It was recompleted in 1983 for a calculated absolute open flow of 29 Mmcfd from perforations 2,345 to 2,380 ft.

Runnels strike finaled for caof of 950 Mcfd

A Dog Bend gas discovery has been completed in Runnels County, located in the Briley Southeast field.

JAMES K. ANDERSON, INC., Dallas, recompleted the No. 1 Hill & Lesley for a calculated absolute open flow of 950 Mcfd from perforations 3,792 to 3,804 ft. The interval was acidized with 3,600 gallons of acid.

The well,a former lower Gardner producer, was plugged back to 3,900 ft. It originally produced from perforations 4,177 to 4,180 ft.

On ground elevation of 1,896 ft., formation tops include the Palo Pinto lime at 3,530 Dog Bend lime at 3,781, Gardner lime at 4,135, and lower Gardner sand at 4,174 ft.

Location is 2,383 ft. from north and 3,039 ft. from west lines of J.J. Taylor survey 541, Abst. 456, five miles east-northeast of Winters.

Scurry reentry nets 25 barrel producer

A wildcat deepening project in Scurry County has yielded a producer in the Hermleigh (Strawn) field for HOPI, INC. of Dallas.

The No. 1 Sun-Shroyer was potentialed to pump 25 barrels of 36 grvity crude and 13 barrels of water from perforations 6,833 to 6,846 ft. Gas-oil ratio is 1,600:1.

Permitted as a 7,400 ft. wildcat deepening, the well was cleaned out to total depth of 7,349 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 7,073 ft.

Salt Creek field gains two new producers

MOBIL PRODUCING TX & NM, INC., Houston, has added two new producers to the Salt Creek field of Kent County. Both wells are in the Salt Creek Field Unit.

Mobil finaled the No. 517-G Salt Creek Field Unit to pump 107 barrels of 39.7 gravity crude and 648 barrels of water from perforations 6,266 to 6,357 ft.

On potential test, the No. 321-E Salt Creek Field Unit pumped 77 barrels of 39.7 gravity crude and 639 barrels of water from perforations 6,101 to 6,442 ft.

PGT asks for open access importing of Canadian gas

SAN FRANCISCO (SWN) — Pacific Gas Transmission Co. has applied to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to allow open access transportation on its Canada-to-California natural gas pipeline.

PGT will offer interruptible gas transportation on a first come/first served basis, except that for the first 10 days a lottery will be used to establish priorities, chairman and CEO John A. Sproul said.

"The lottery system is designed to offer all potential shippers who request service within the first 10 calendar days an equal chance at the available space in PGT's pipeline," Sproul said. "Nevertheless, shippers are still encouraged to submit their applications as quickly as possible."

Sproul said PGT has elected to become a "non-discriminatory" (open access) transporter under provisions of FERC's order 436 in an effort to meet consumer and regulatory demands for greater competition and accessibility in the long distance transportation of natural gas. The new service is subject to FERC approval.

PGT is the largest importer of Canadian natural gas into the United States. It delivers about 20 percent of California's gas supply, including 40 percent of the supply of its parent, Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (PG&E). San Francisco-based PG&E distributes gas to 3.1 million residential, commercial and industrial customers in Northern and Central California.

PGT owns and operates the Idaho-Washington-Oregon portion of the 1,400-mile Alberta-California pipeline. Its system consists of 612 miles of 36-inch diameter pipe and 160 miles of 42-inch pipe, and associated compressors, measurement stations and communications.

Service will continue to PGT's existing firm sales customer, PG&E, and to PGT's firm long-term transportation customers, Northwest Pipeline Corp. and Pacific Interstate Transmission Co., Sproul said.

Because of the reduced demand for natural gas during the past several years, PGT's system has been used at less than its full capacity of about 1 billion cubic feet per day, except during the winter months. PGT intends to make this extra capacity available to others on an interruptible basis.

Pacific Gas Transmission's application to FERC for open access was filed under provisions of the Natural Gas Act, the Natural Gas Policy Act and FERC regulations. It is a two-phase application. In the first phase, PGT asked for:

- a blanket certificate authorizing the transportation and delivery of natural gas on behalf of others;
- authority to implement a new tariff to provide this service;
- an interim waiver of certain FERC Order 436 regulations, to begin 30 days after filing and to extend until new rates go into effect as a result of PGT's general rate case filing in 1987; and
- authority for interim transportation service pending FERC approval of the blanket certificate application.

The second phase filing will be in conjunction with PGT's 1987 general rate case filing, Sproul said.

MC returns home with Howard

From Staff Reports

With the holidays and a second Mesa tournament championship tucked away in the memory book, Midland College returns to the serious business of conference basketball action.

The Chaps make their first home appearance in more than a month at 7:30 tonight when they host the Howard College Hawks in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center.

The Chaparrals made believers out of teams from seven states in their second successful appearance at the Mesa Rotary Shoot-Out in Mesa, Ariz., last week. They blasted Navajo Junior College 107-64, knocked off highly-ranked Herkimer, N.Y., 100-86 and finished by taking out host Mesa in the finals 81-60.

Getting that type of respect in their own conference is harder. The Chaps learned that in their last home game when New Mexico Junior College won 75-73 at Chap Center to take the conference lead, leaving the Chaps in the unusual situation of looking up at someone else. The Chaps currently are 16-1, but their 3-1 mark in conference play is only good for second place.

"I hated to go through the holidays with that loss on our minds, but I think we proved in Mesa that we're not going to take anyone lightly from here on out," noted MC head coach Jerry Stone.

NOR CAN they afford to. The next two months are filled with 12 straight conference games and just one open date. And even if the Chaps aren't the league-leaders, they still are the defending conference champions and a team everyone points toward.

"We struggled against Howard in the Chaparral Classic before beating them in the semis, but we know they are a good team," Stone said. In that meeting, the second of the season, the Chaps came out with a 112-84 win as they were beginning a 13-game win streak that was only halted by the loss to NMJC. Howard edged Odessa for third place in the Chap Classic.

Stone's players reported back from the Christmas break in pretty good condition. Seldom-used freshman Tracy Davis was the only academic casualty. Freshman Juan Hewitt didn't make the Arizona trip, remaining at home in New Orleans nursing an injured leg. He'll be o.. hand for the remainder of the season.

"I WAS pleased with the results of the Mesa tournament, overall," Stone recalled. "We got six players in double figures the first two games and four in double figures the last game and had different scoring leaders each game. I expect the sophomores to play well, but we have to get solid performances from several of the freshmen to win."

He's gotten that, especially from Billy Ray Smith, Skeeter Henry and Alex Stanwood. They are gathering in the rebounds, pushing in the missed offensive shots, and keeping everyone honest inside. Meanwhile, sophomore guards Mookie Blaylock, Lincoln Minor, and Todd Duncan have been handling the ball and leading the scoring march. Sophomore Bruce Nix adds muscle inside to help out Smith at the low post position.

Call off 'Dogs, MHS still alive in 4-5A chase

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Just when you thought it was time to buy an R.I.P. marker for the Midland High Bulldogs, they go out and knock off the hottest team in the league, the San Angelo Bobcats.

The Bobcats took an eight-game winning streak into Chaparral Center Tuesday and had it knocked down their throats by a team with a meager 7-13 record.

The Bulldogs won the game, 68-63, and recent evidence of blind shooters wasn't seen in the box score. The 'Dogs hit 24-of-53 shots from the field (45 percent) and possibly a season high 20-of-28 free throws (71 percent).

The victory was the first of the young District 4-5A season for MHS, now 1-2, while San Angelo fell to 1-1.

Tuesday was a night ripe for upsets as the Midland Lee Rebels fell from the ranks of 4-5A unbeaten teams, losing a 54-51 decision to winless Abilene Cooper. The Rebels are now 2-1 while Cooper is 1-1.

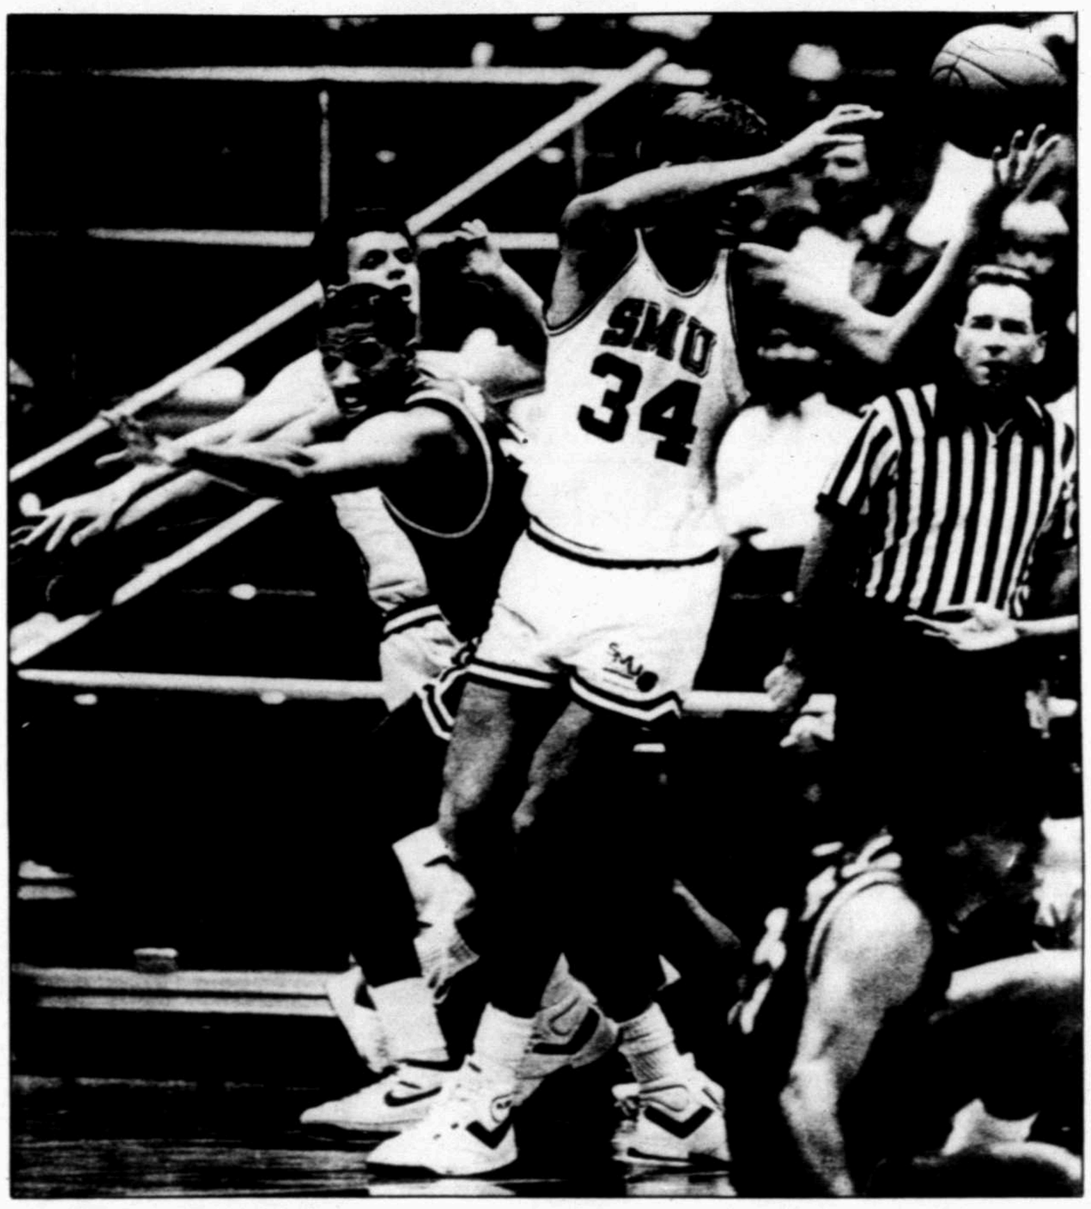

Friday night, the Bulldogs will be out to pull their 4-5A record to .500 when they travel to Abilene to take on the once highly thought of Abilene High Eagles, 0-2, 4-15.

THE EAGLES have one the district's best shooters in Pat Garrett, whose 15.0 average is tied for fourth while teammates Andre Davis and Cory Lockridge are seventh at 13.5 and 13th at 11.0. For Midland High, only suspended David Lujan has a double figure average, 11.0. Craig Crawford is third at 8.7 per game.

The Bulldogs and Eagles will tipoff at 8 p.m.

In other district action, Midland Lee will have a night off to lick its wounds while Abilene Cooper travels to Odessa Permian and Odessa High goes to San Angelo.

Tech topples Baylor; moves to 3-1 in SWC

Associated Press

WACO — Sean Gay scored 19 points to lead the Texas Tech Red Raiders to a 56-50 victory over Baylor in a Southwest Conference basketball game Wednesday night.

Tech, 7-7 overall and 3-1 in league play, now have beaten Baylor 10 straight times, dating back to 1983. The Bears fell to 7-7 for the season and 2-2 in SWC action.

The Raiders led by as much as eight points in the first half, but Baylor rallied to a 24-24 halftime tie on Mark Buchanan's 3-point goal at the buzzer.

Tech took the lead for good seven minutes deep in the second half.

Baylor was led by Michael Williams, who scored 17 points on 6 of 13 shooting from the floor. Darryl Middleton added 13 points.

Texas Tech head coach Gerald Myers said, "I thought that was an outstanding defensive ball game by both teams. There were a lot of turnovers and things like that, but those things are going to happen when you have two teams playing that type of defense."

Baylor coach Gene Iba said, "You have to give Tech credit for playing well on defense, but as it is the case most of the time, when a team shoots from the field like we did tonight, usually it is a combination of good defense by the opposition and poor execution by the offense."

earned his 250th senior college victory.

Carl Lott scored all 12 of his points in the second half to pace TCU's Frogs to their fourth SWC victory without a loss. TCU is 13-3 overall.

"Lott is a good shooter and I knew he would come back and he did," said Killingsworth, who compiled his 250 victories at Idaho State, Oklahoma State and TCU. He also had 487

SWC Roundup

There was a controversial moment late in the game on a shot by Scott Johnson that SMU thought was a three-pointer to tie the game at 54-all.

Official Jim Harvey said it was a three-pointer, but he was overruled by Mike Tanco and Paul Sternberger.

TCU, leading 54-53, then iced the game on two free throws by Jamie Dixon and one charity toss by Lott.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss, who endured his fourth consecutive close loss, said Johnson's three-point shot appeared to be good after looking at a television replay.

"That's unfortunate," Bliss said. "If it's a three-pointer, that changes the whole way we play at the end there. We just haven't been too lucky lately."

SMU has lost its last four games by close margins in the final minute. The Mustangs (0-3) are off the their worst start in SWC play in five years.

Arkansas 62, Rice 54

Junior Andrew Lang came off the bench to score nine points, block eight shots and grab 10 rebounds to ignite the Razorbacks (2-2) past Rice (0-4).

Lang was an unlikely hero for Arkansas. He suffered a sprained knee in a warmup session before Arkansas' loss to Texas Tech last weekend and was not expected to play. But he blocked five first-half shots, inspiring a defense that held Rice to 34 percent from the field.

Shawn Baker led all Arkansas scorers with 15 points.

Greg Hines scored 21 points for Rice. Andy Gilchrist, who had a game-high 17 rebounds, added 16 for the Owls.

Billy Williams, 'Catfish' elected to Hall

By BEN WALKER

NEW YORK (AP) — The waiting finally ended for Billy Williams, while Jim "Catfish" Hunter won another close one.

Williams and Hunter were elected to baseball's Hall of Fame Wednesday night, culminating careers marked by consistency but separated by their teams' results.

Hunter, with a 224-166 lifetime record in 15 seasons for the Kansas City and Oakland A's and the New York Yankees, played on five World Series winners. Williams, who hit .290 with 426 home runs during 16 years in the Chicago Cubs' outfield and two more seasons with Oakland, never played in a World Series.

Williams' frustration continued as he was bypassed by the Baseball Writers Association of America in Hall of Fame voting the last five years, missing by just four votes in 1986.

But that ended Wednesday night.

"I guess the smile on my face tells it all. 'Wait 'til next year' is now a phrase of the past," Williams, 20th on the all-time home run list, said from Glen Ellyn, Ill. "I can truly say it's one of the most exciting moments of my life."

Williams was named on 354 of 413 votes for 85.7 percent, well above the required 75 percent. Hunter got 315 votes, five over the minimum, and reached the Hall in his third try after missing by 30 votes last year.

JIM BUNNING, the recently elected Congressman from Kentucky, came up 21 votes short of election. He missed by 40 votes last year.

None of the other 25 players on the ballot got as much as 50 percent of the vote. Orlando Cepeda was fourth with 179, followed by Roger Maris with 176 and Tony Oliva with 160.

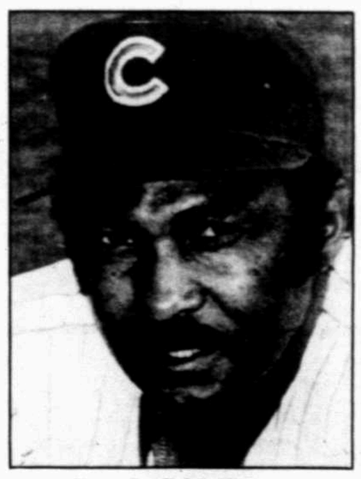

While Williams was cautiously optimistic this would be his year, partly because there were no new big names on the ballot to splinter support, Hunter said he was surprised that he was elected on his third try.

"I don't know if I deserved it," said Hunter, who spent Wednesday boar hunting near his Hertford, N.C., farm. "I was a control pitcher who hit spots.

"I had players behind me to back me up. If I didn't play on those teams, I wouldn't have won as many as I did and I wouldn't have been in the World Series six times."

Billy Williams

Jim "Catfish" Hunter

Hunter won 20 or more games from 1971 through 1975 and finished with a career earned run average of 3.26. His reputation as a big-game pitcher may have helped him as much as Williams' lack of post-season play hurt him.

Hunter was 5-3 in World Series games and still holds Championship Series records with 10 starts and 69 1-3 innings pitched. The closest Williams got to a World Series was the 1975 American League playoffs with Oakland, when the A's were swept by Boston and Williams went 0-for-8.

WILLIAMS FINISHED with 2,711 career hits, batted over .300 five times and in 1969 became the last player to hit four doubles in a game, which ties for the major-league record.

Williams was the NL Rookie of the Year in 1961 and went on to hit 20 or more home runs for 13 straight seasons. He led the league with a .333 average in 1972, which came during a streak in which he played 1,117 consecutive games.

Hunter, who won the AL Cy Young Award in 1974 and pitched a perfect game in 1968, was a six-time All-Star, as was Williams.

Induction ceremonies for Hunter and Williams — bringing the Hall of Fame total to 199 — are tentatively scheduled for July 26. The Veterans Committee is scheduled to announce results of its voting on older players in early March.

Williams and Hunter were scheduled to be in New York this morning for a press conference.

Cheerleader saves the day

FORT WORTH (AP) — A cheerleader who was pressed into joining the game when one of her team's players got into foul trouble helped snap her high school's four-year losing streak.

Kimberly Kiker, an Allison High School cheerleader who had her name in the official scorebook only as a precautionary measure, went into emergency service when the team, which had only five players, lost one to fouls.

She hit two free throws in Tuesday night's game as the Lady Antelopes defeated Mobeetie 39-38 at Allison, snapping a 57-game losing streak that had lasted almost four years.

Allison's girls' basketball team had not won since a 36-28 triumph over Briscoe on Feb. 8, 1983. The next season, Allison didn't field a team and when it was resurrected, it was winless the next two seasons.

Kiker, who had been on the team but was sitting out the season with a knee injury, learned she would be needed when Danette Dyer fouled out.

"I was eating and then the next thing I knew I was out on the court," said Kiker, a 5-4 junior who injured her knee before the start of the season. "I was nervous because I wasn't expected to return until next year."

Her mother, Carol, said she too was surprised.

"She never expected to play but they had her name on the books in case something like this happened."

Conner has Kiwis down, but Americans not yet in

By Bill Center
Copley News Service

FREMANTLE, Australia — That limited-edition window sticker can be found on a handful of vehicles and residences in this port city.

They are a reminder for the crewmen and backs of Dennis Conner's Stars & Stripes.

"What is up is not in. What is down is not out."

The San Diego-based Stars & Stripes has pinned the stern of Chris Dickson's New Zealand to the wall with wire-to-wire wins in the first two races of their best-of-seven America's Cup challenger finals.

But a 2-0 lead means little, even if the wins were by 1:20 and 1:36 and New Zealand has made gains on only four of the 16 legs sailed and not a single one of the all-important eight weather legs.

"We've been ahead two-zip before," he said Wednesday night, going back to the 1983 America's Cup. "We're not celebrating."

In the September of 1983, Conner's Liberty held a 2-0 lead against Australia II. Sailing expertly, Conner pressed the advantage to 3-1. Then came the wing-keeled fall. Then came the long trek to the shores of the Indian Ocean.

But Australia II was superior to Liberty. It looked that way even while it was losing the first two races. Suddenly, New Zealand does not look as good as its once overwhelming 37-1 record.

The once cocky Kiwis are now confused. Two lopsided losses and the forecast of the heavy conditions Conner relishes convinced New Zealand to call a "lay day" to regroup.

The same Kiwis who two days ago were hyping their preliminary record, planning on where they would hold the America's Cup in 1990 and flying in lawyers to handle the expected barrage of protests from the Australian defenders are now searching for ways to explain their plight.

Yet, Dickson sticks to his belief that the fiberglass New Zealand is still the fastest boat.

"We couldn't get the boat into fifth gear today," he said after Stars & Stripes won its second straight.

"The boat is very competitive. All we have to do is sail her better. We had problems getting into the groove. We didn't go 37-1 by losing."

There's the 37-1 again. It made for nice reading two weeks ago, but now it's part of history.

"Honestly, I think 37-1 might have worked to their disadvantage," said Stars & Stripes tactician Tom Whidden.

"We were never desperate with our record (31-7) in the preliminaries. But, we kept making changes. We kept getting better. Honestly, I don't think they've changed their boat one bit."

The design team at Stars & Stripes knew it had to find more speed after the November series when Stars & Stripes struggled and temporarily dropped out of the top four positions that earned transfer into the semifinals.

Right now, Stars & Stripes is as much as 10 seconds a mile better upwind than it was in December's last round-robin. And right now the Stars & Stripes design team is still getting tank-test reports in more minor modifications that could be made to the boat, should it gain the America's Cup championship round against the Aussies.

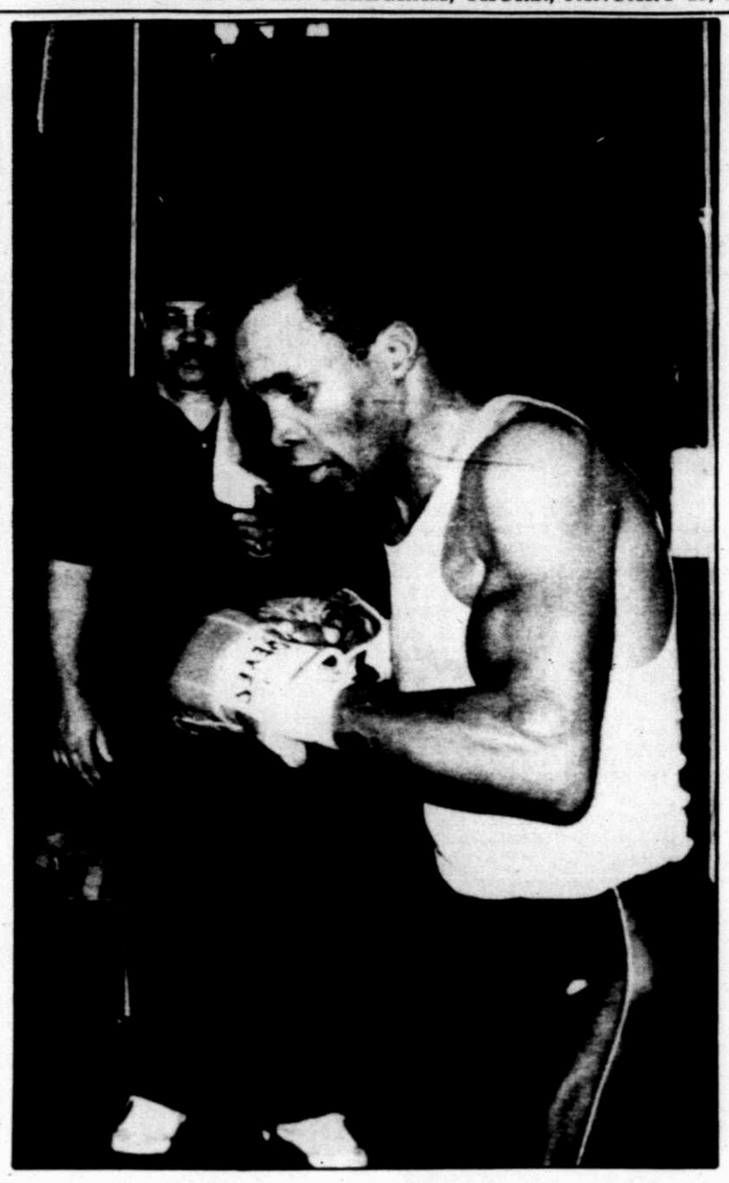

Not that Conner's crew is writing off Dickson and New Zealand.

"Stars & Stripes was in phase with every wind shift," said Dickson. "They capitalized on everything going. We can handle the odd loss."

But it has gone beyond the odd loss. Two races ago, Dickson promised "there is no way we could lose four straight." Wednesday he said, "I hope that line is still funny."

"It could be different tomorrow," Conner said, although the sentiment lacked conviction.

Limping Ainge leads Celtics over Mavericks

Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Shortly before he limped off to work Danny Ainge of the Boston Celtics received a phone call from his family on the West Coast.

"They asked if I would play; they were going to watch the game via satellite or go to the movies," Ainge said. "I guess they went to the movies."

But, after treatment from trainer Ray Melchiorre, Ainge felt better and played a major role in the Celtics' 117-108 NBA victory over the Mavericks.

Larry Bird and Kevin McHale led Boston with 25 points each, while Ainge had 24, including a dozen on four 3-point rocket shots, along with 11 rebounds, 8 assists and 2 steals.

The Mavericks, who lead the Midwest Division, built a six-point lead late in the second period, but the Celtics went on a 15-4 run for a 62-57 advantage at the intermission. Dallas also was hurt by the ejection on two technicals of Mark Aguirre, the team's leading scorer with a 25.6 game average.

Clippers 123, Nuggets 105

The Los Angeles Clippers haven't proven much except for how bad they are this season. The team with the NBA's worst record has gotten tired of that — and the finally did something about it.

The Clippers snapped a 16-game losing streak with a rout of Denver. The 5-31 Clippers got 22 points from Michael Cage and Mike Woodson added 20 for their first victory since beating Seattle Dec. 10.

The streak was three games shy of tying the franchise record for losses, set in 1981-82. The loss ended a three-game Denver winning streak.

NBA Roundup

"It was downright embarrassing," said Denver's Alex English.

Bullets 118, Nets 100

Moses Malone led seven Bullets in double figures with 21 points as he moved into 12th place on the NBA's all-time scoring list, ahead of Dolph Schayes and Bob Lanier. He also kept the Bullets in hot pursuit of the 76ers.

The Bullets won their fourth straight game. The last time they had a longer winning streak or better record was in 1984-85, and only Jeff Malone is left with the team since then.

76ers 96, Hawks 93

Jeff Ruland had missed 34 games with a knee injury. His performance in returning to the lineup Wednesday was a key to host Philadelphia's victory.

"It's great to be out there again," the 6-foot-11 center said after he scored 19 points, had five rebounds, two assists and blocked a pair of shots.

Pistons 104, Cavaliers 87

Detroit swept its home-and-home series with Cleveland behind 26 points by Adrian Dantley, a season-high 22 from Sidney Green and 20 by Isiah Thomas. Detroit also won 103-101 on the road the previous night.

SuperSonics 130, Spurs 104

Ellis scored 17 points in the first period, including a three-point shot to open the scoring for Seattle. Alton Lister scored 14 points and had a game-high 15 rebounds for Seattle.

Hawkeyes leave coach speechless

By The Associated Press

The second-ranked Hawkeyes rallied from a 22-point second-half deficit Wednesday night for a 91-88 overtime victory over No. 8 Illinois.

"I was just literally speechless in the locker room afterwards," Iowa Coach Tom Davis said after his team ran its Big Ten Conference record to 4-0. "The effort was outstanding. It couldn't be stronger. I just can't believe we ever came back from 22, especially on the road."

The Hawkeyes trailed 61-39 with 16 minutes to play and were able to make up the deficit as the Fighting Illini, 12-3 and 4-1, had trouble with Iowa's full-court defense and fell apart at the free-throw line.

Illinois led 52-35 at halftime, shooting 65 percent from the field as Tony Wysinger, who had a career-high 34 points, was virtually unstoppable.

"They just disrupted us totally. We had trouble with their shooter (Wysinger) in the first half, but we showed more poise in the second half," Davis said. "I thought we got rattled several times in the first half."

B.J. Armstrong, who had a chance to give Iowa the victory in regulation but missed an 18-footer with two seconds left, canned a 15-footer with 20 seconds left in the overtime gave the Hawkeyes the lead for good.

Top 20 Roundup

No. 3 North Carolina 95, Virginia 80

Kenny Smith scored 19 points as the Tar Heels cruised to their 12th straight victory and avenged last year's defeat at Virginia when North Carolina was top-ranked and 21-0. North Carolina, 14-1 and 3-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, took the lead early and was never threatened by the Cavaliers, 9-4 and 1-2, as the final score was the closest the teams were in the last 10 minutes.

J.R. Reid added 17 points, Joe Wolf 16 and Jeff Lebo 15 for the Tar Heels. Andrew Kennedy's 21 points led the Cavaliers.

No. 6 Purdue 86, Minnesota 59

Purdue forced 27 turnovers in coasting to its sixth consecutive victory and a 13-1 record, the best start for the Boilermakers since 1937-38. Despite missing starter Melvin McCants, who was sidelined with a bad back, Purdue Coach Gene Keady was able to play his reserves throughout the home game as he beat his former assistant at Western Kentucky, Clem Haskins.

Doug Lee's 19 points paced Purdue, 5-0 in the Big Ten, while Kim Zurcher led the Golden Gophers, 9-5 and 2-2, with 16 points.

No. 10 Auburn 66, Tennessee 56

Frank Ford's 15 points led Auburn, while Tennessee, 8-5 and 2-2, was led by Tony White's 16 points.

No. 12 Clemson 94, Furman 77

Horace Grant scored a season-high 33 points and grabbed 14 rebounds as the Tigers remained undefeated. The 6-foot-10 Grant made 15 of 19 shots from the field as Clemson, 15-0, used a 12-0 run for a 19-5 lead with six minutes gone and the closest the visiting Paladins, 8-5, could get was 11 points late in the game. David Brown led Furman with 25 points.

No. 14 Duke 85, Maryland 61

Duke, 12-2 and 2-1, took a 19-4 lead with Tommy Amaker scoring eight of the points, six on 3-point field goals. The Blue Devils used a 21-8 streak at the start of the second half to open a 66-44 lead.

No. 18 Pittsburgh 87, Seton Hall 85

Demetreus Gore's 18 points included six free throws in the final minutes as the Panthers managed the road victory. Gore tied the game 81-81 with two free throws with 2:12 to play. Charles Smith put Pittsburgh, 12-3 and 2-1, ahead for good with a layup one minute later. Seton Hall, 10-4 and 1-4, closed to within twice but couldn't tie the score.

No. 19 Navy 75, Lafayette 71

In the district scoring race, Permian's Lance Watkins is top gun with a 23.3 average followed by San Angelo's Chris Lowry, 19.5; Cooper's Doug Starr, 16.5 and Permian's Todd Evans and Garrett at 15.0.

The top Lee scorer in district action is Danny Allen, ranked eighth at 13.3 per game. Also in double figures for Lee is Nicky Sanchez at 11.0.

IN GIRLS action, the Midland High Lady Bulldogs need to rebound from their first district loss of the season, a 48-47 decision to new 4-5A leader San Angelo. Also, Midland Lee broke .500 for the first time this year with a 64-44 win over Abilene Cooper and Permian downed Odessa High, 60-51.

The victory pushed San Angelo into unbeaten control of first place at 4-0, followed by MHS at 4-1, Lee at 3-2 and Abilene High at 2-2.

Friday, the Bulldogs host Abilene High at Chap Center while Lee has the night off. Permian is at Cooper and San Angelo at Odessa High. All games are slated for 8 p.m.

The Bulldogs have a three player attack for Abilene to guard against, led by Amy Cumings's 17.6 average. Brenda Rodriquez adds another 15.2 per game and Sebrenia Finch 12.6.

For Lee, LaVette Wallace and Roz Eaden lead the way with 11.6 and 10.0 averages.

Woman doesn't let age drive her out of rewarding career

By DAVID CROWDER

EL PASO (AP) — She's a woman on the go, a grandmother and a success in her field who says the secrets to a long and safe career in her business are simple: be nice, go slow and don't run yellow lights — ever.

For more than 40 years, Jessie Bray has been driving taxicabs around El Paso. But her specialty is the Juarez tour and at that she may just be the best around.

Mrs. Bray turns 79 this month.

"There are very few women who can do this sort of business," she said. "They'll last a day or two and quit.

"But, for me, it sent a boy through college and it bought me this house. I can't kick. I've made a good living."

Because of medical problems, Mrs. Bray had retired six years ago, but the inactivity and the death of her husband were getting her down when she bumped into Raul Campos, an old friend, who urged her to get out of the house and go back to work. He also offered her the use of a taxi.

Campos, 63, who owns and operates four Yellow cabs and the Border Parking lot at 1000 S. Santa Fe, said he is glad to have Jessie on the payroll.

"She can work for me anytime," he said. "She's the best I've had in a long time. I've got some good drivers, but she's the best I've got.

"Even though she's older than the guys here, she's more active than all of them put together. She knows how to talk to people, and she's always got her eyes open. She really knows how to hustle."

And for $10 an hour, she also gives the best tour of Juarez, he said.

"You can tell by the time she takes," Campos said. "Most drivers are back in an hour and a half, but she'll stay out for two or three hours, sometimes longer."

Mrs. Bray began her career as a bus and streetcar driver in 1943 when most of the men were off to war.

She still remembers her most harrowing experience.

"The streetcar I was driving jumped the tracks, and I ended up crossways in the street," she said. "I thought everybody in Juarez was going to jump me. It was Sunday morning, and they were all trying to get to church. I really had traffic tied up."

She switched to taxicabs a year later and after a year of that routine, she began conducting tours across the border.

"They've run me out of Juarez about 10 times," she said. "Each time, they told me not to come back. But each time, I'd hook up with someone a little bigger and go back."

Her last run-in with Mexican authorities was in the 1960s when a motorcycle officer arrested her for working in Juarez and made her follow him to the police station. She said she met a succession of higher ranking officers and apparently made an impression because none of them wanted to throw her in jail.

WE MAKE HOUSE CALLS!

WINTER SALE IN PROGRESS

Sound old fashioned? Maybe so . . . but that's the way we feel about helping you solve your decorating problems. Here at our Gallery, we think your ideas should have the same kind of warm professional and personal attention folks expected from their family doctor in the good old days.

We're ready to see the problem through your eyes, right in your own home, whether you're looking for a single chair, new draperies or a decorating plan for an entire room or home. If you're uncertain about your choice of a lamp, an area rug, a picture or any other decorative accessory, we'll be glad to make a "house call" . . . happy to come to your home by appointment.

Most old fashioned of all . . . our "house calls" are complimentary. Just ask one of our design experts for the story.

BUSINESS MIRROR

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — Is consumer debt really lurching out of control, as implied by some of the popular statistics — and perhaps your pocketbook too?

If it is true, as some economists fear, it could be the factor that ends the expansion, already four years old, at some point in 1987.

For many years, that measurement ranged between 14.5 percent and about 17 percent. During the expansion, however, it leaped from 14.5 percent in 1982 to 19.7 percent in 1986.

During this time the amount of installment debt outstanding — the total owed on credit cards, automobiles, appliances and other consumer items — grew from $327.1 million in 1982 to $591.1 million late in 1986.

But now that the figures are into record-high territory, analyses are appearing that suggest the fears are excessive and unrealistic. Why? Because, it is said, the old measures might not apply to the current situation.

The installment debt-to-income ratio is only one measure, and perhaps a narrow one at that, says Thomas Durkin, chief economist of the American Financial Services Association, which represents consumer credit suppliers.

He concedes that debt has expanded, but he calls attention to a big rise in household assets. By comparing debt to assets, rather than to income, he says, you paint a very different picture.

Durkin cites figures that show the value of tangible assets, such as houses and cars, and financial assets, such as cash and deposits, have risen almost in concert with debt.

In that year tangible assets totaled "only" $844 billion, compared with $5.1 trillion at the end of 1985, a rise of 504 percent. Financial assets increased at almost the same pace, up 429 percent to $10.3 trillion.

He concludes: "Despite the often-heard fears about the state of households' financial condition in recent years, debt has remained right around 15 percent of assets for 20 years."

Another study, by Debra Worden and William Dunkelberg, a Purdue University economist, indicates that the credit growth is a result of more widespread use by households rather than more intense use by traditional users.

In effect, such a conclusion means that while household debt has grown the growth is mainly a consequence of more consumers taking on debt. The statistics reflect a "widening" rather than a "deepening" of credit use.

Moreover, they conclude, "credit growth has occurred primarily among high income consumers." There is no evidence, they say, that poor consumers are being overcome by rising debt burden.

The old and trusted measurements might be warped by still another factor: People today often use credit cards in lieu of cash or checks, routinely repaying the credit issuer each month. They do not even view this as borrowing.

Durkin, Dunkelberg and Worden cite other factors as well to suggest that the credit burden today might not be as onerous as it appears, but they might not eliminate the fears of those who cast wary eyes on the situation.

Assets, the worriers point out, can change markedly; that is, the value of stocks, bonds and real estate can decline. And any such decline can quickly raise the debt to asset ratio.

The overall economy also can also put a different perspective on debt. What happens if interest rates rise sharply, as they have in the past, or if the indebted households loose the income they depend upon to pay the bills?

By MICHAEL W. ARMSTRONG

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — What did you read the last time you were in a public restroom?

Larry Warner and Charles Wareham bet it was graffiti on the walls or, if you were lucky, a week-old newspaper.

The two State College men are trying to change that by offering something else: advertisements inside bathroom stalls.

"The first thing everybody does is laugh," Warner said. "Then, they think about it for a minute. Then, they say, 'That's a great idea.' "

Warner, 41, and Wareham, 21, thought it was such a great idea they formed State College Headliners recently to sell advertising space in Centre County's public restrooms.

"It struck me that there is nothing to read in men's rooms," Warner said. "If you really think about it, you'll read anything. You'll read the serial numbers on the hinges of the doors."

Instead of "Dane loves Dana" and "Kilroy was here," State College Headliners wants people to read "Shop at Joe's" and "Work out at Al's Gym."

The concept is simple. An 18-by-36-inch Plexiglas display is placed inside a stall. Businesses buy 4-by-6-inch advertising space by the month and provide camera-ready ads.

"A captured audience," Wareham said.

Businesses such as Nittany Hot Springs, New World Headquarters and Uncle Eli's all have signed up to try their ads on the bathroom wall. Douglas Albert, owner of Uncle Eli's, said he liked the idea.

Even if a businessman isn't enthusiastic about the idea right away, Wareham says he thinks he'll change his mind the next time he's in a bathroom.

Advertisers will be able to target the audience they want to reach, Warner said. State College Headliners keeps a list of the bathrooms where it has displays. It will put ads in men's or women's or both.

Warner, who's been an architect in State College for 12 years, said he wasn't worried about controversy.

Small colleges give students big window on the world

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lonnie Saunders of Buena Vista College in Storm Lake, Iowa, spent five months working in the Republic of China in the president's office of the National Institute of Technology.

Daria Zelenko, a double major in international business and Eastern European history at Rosary College in River Forest, Ill., did research in England on the Ukranian community in London since World War II.

Scott Henry, a student at Hanover College in Hanover, Ind., wanted to discover first-hand the impact of the Roman Wall on Britain. He traveled to England, walked the length of the wall, and visited museums containing artifacts from the historic structure.

Across the country small independent colleges such as these are offering their students more and more opportunities to experience life and culture in other countries, learn foreign languages, and become informed world citizens.

"The trend among colleges to bring an understanding of the global village onto their campus and into their curricula is one of the most vital in this decade," says Allen P. Splete, president of the Council of Independent Colleges.

"Small liberal arts colleges are particularly responsive to the need to improve international understanding and prepare people to cope in this shrinking world and global economy."

Earlham College in Richmond, Ind., is a prototype internationalized campus, established in 1854 by the Quakers. Two-thirds of the Earlham faculty have led the school's study-abroad programs in 20 countries, from Japan to Mexico to Israel to Kenya.

For more than 20 years, Central College in Pella, Iowa, has offered organized living and study overseas to its own students, as well as those from other independent colleges. Recently, students from colleges in 35 states were involved in Central's international study program.

Central offers four English language programs, in London, Wales, Mexico and the Netherlands. There is also a special program in Soviet Studies, with opportunity for guided exploration of cultural institutions in the Soviet Union. Other programs are offered at the Sorbonne in Paris, the University of Vienna and two cities in Spain.

Rockford College in Rockford, Ill., has established a British-American center in London. Sophomores, juniors and seniors from any U.S. college may live and study for a semester or a year at Rockford's Regent's College. The program will be extended to freshmen in the fall of 1987.

Beaver College in Glenside, Pa., has programs in Bristol, Guilford, London, Lancaster and Cheltenham, with a variety of fields to choose from. Marymount College in Tarrytown, N.Y., offers internships and studies at Brighton, Canterbury, Colchester, Lancaster, London and York.

While England is the most popular country for study abroad, the Far East is the fastest growing. Goshen College in Goshen, Ind., has an undergraduate exchange program with the People's Republic of China. Since the program's inception in 1980, more than 100 Goshen students have gone to China and nine Chinese teachers of English have studied at Goshen.

The China program is part of Goshen's international education requirement, whereby students must either take international classes on campus or spend 14 weeks abroad in a developing or significantly different country. The study abroad includes seven weeks of language, history and culture classes in the host country, as well as seven weeks of unpaid work in community development.

At Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln, Neb., a new major in global studies was established in 1985. Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, Pa., has a Center for Asian, African and Latin American Studies.

The Brethren Colleges Abroad, with headquarters at Manchester College in North Manchester, Ind., recently expanded beyond four European study abroad locations into mainland China.

"Courses on American and British history and culture are taught by Chinese instructors in English, thereby offering a different perspective of the two countries' histories," says Dr. Allen Deeter, BCA coordinator and Manchester College professor.

The BCA, a consortium of six colleges, includes Bridgewater College in Bridgewater, Va., Juniata College in Huntingdon, Pa., Elizabethtown College in Elizabethtown, Pa., McPherson College in McPherson, Kan., and the University of LaVerne in LaVerne, Calif.

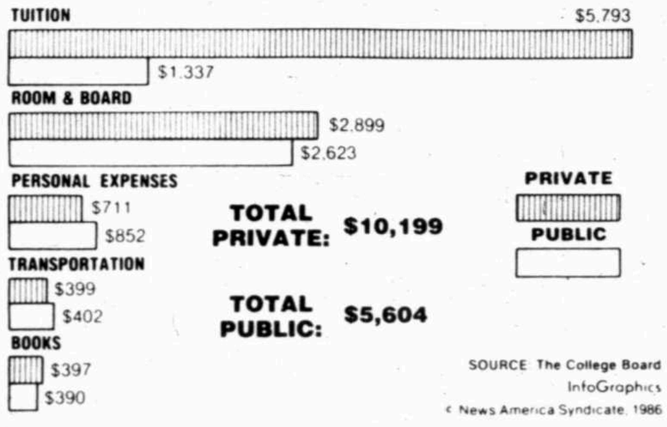

The cost of college, 1986-87

The average annual cost to attend a private college in the U.S. is around twice as much as attending a public college. The main cost difference is in tuition fees -- private schools average $5,793, while tuition at public college averages $1,337.

Effects of Bell System breakup still debated three years later

By BILL McCLOSKEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three years after the court-approved breakup of AT&T, the debate continues whether telephone users have benefited from the demolition of The Bell System that had provided the bulk of U.S. telephone service for almost 100 years.

The breakup, effective Jan. 1, 1984, was accompanied by a rush of telephone industry deregulation which brought customers choices previously denied them, including a variety of long-distance services and telephone instrument suppliers.

The spin-off of seven Bell operating companies to handle local telephone service and the reduction of the once-mighty AT&T to a long-distance service and equipment manufacturer created business opportunities for many — and more complicated and sometimes higher telephone bills for all.

It also has ended a rate structure that inflated long-distance rates to subsidize local service.

The result: Long-distance charges dropped almost a third because the long-distance companies don't bear the entire economic burden of offering local service. Local telephone rates have generally risen dramatically because the local companies no longer have highly profitable long-distance services to underwrite their local operations.

Comparing pre- and post-divestiture rates is difficult, since the old rates usually covered installation charges, phone rental, repair, directory assistance and some local calling bundled as one rate. Today, many items are billed separately.

DISPARITY between the inflation rate and phone charge increases has raised the questions of whether the new rate-setting theory unfairly favors frequent long-distance users, generally businesses, at the expense of residential users; what profit margins should be enjoyed by the operating companies; whether telephone users are underwriting the telephone companies' start-up costs in new, unrelated business; and, indeed, whether the breakup was a good idea in the first place.

In the three years since divestiture, the Consumer Price Index has increased about 9 percent. The average rate increases for basic local telephone service have risen 41 percent for urban customers and 61 percent for rural customers, according to survey of 48 states by Call-It Co., a division of Lee Enterprises of Davenport, Iowa.

All of the so-called Baby Bells are profitable and pay healthy dividends. The current local rates were for the most part approved by state regulators when inflation and interest rates were high and there were worries about whether the Baby Bells could survive without Ma Bell, the former AT&T monopoly.

"None of these conditions exist today," General Services Administration, the federal government's housekeeping agency, argued when it asked 32 state rate-setting agencies to order rate reductions. GSA orders telephone service for federal installations.

Most phone companies are allowed profits of 12 percent or more.

GSA economist Mark Langsam believes a return of 10.25 and 10.5 percent is more reasonable.

THE PHONE companies argue they need high returns on investment so they can buy equipment to keep the quality of phone service high.

Since the GSA petitions were filed in June, phone companies in Indiana, Michigan, Nevada, Pennsylvania and Tennessee agreed to lower profits. Langsam said he expects customers in Washington state will get a refund on their phone bills.

Most other state commissions "are sitting back and waiting," believing interest rates will go back up and the government's request will be moot, Langsam said.

Although local rates have increased more than $5.5 billion since divestiture, a survey by the FCC at the end of last year's third quarter showed none of the former AT&T Bell Telephone Companies had a rate increase request then pending before a state agency.

"Even if no more local rate increases are granted," a Consumer Federation of America study concludes, "fundamental unfairness has worked its way into telephone rates in the aftermath of divestiture. Cost shifting from long-distance to local service and extremely generous treatment of local phone companies by state regulators place a heavy burden on residential ratepayers."

In the background of the debate is the allegation that phone companies, entering new businesses, are loading some of their overhead costs onto residential and small-business customers who have no alternative but to buy service from the local telephone company.

No state regulatory agency has ever proved there is illegal cross-subsidization, but the rate-setting agencies, historically understaffed, are often overwhelmed by the sheer massiveness of telephone company bookkeeping records.

THE COMPANIES deny they use earnings from local phone service to finance diversification. Instead, the companies say, their stockholders have absorbed the $1 billion in losses sustained from new lines of business.

The difference in urban versus rural rates, as reported in the Lee Enterprises survey, is attributed to the new rate principle called "cost-based pricing." The underlying philosophy of this approach is that users should pay what it costs the telephone company to serve them.

For example, cost-based pricing has brought regulators to require that telephone customers pay for the wire that connects them to the phone company's switching office.

Adding the cost of the wire itself, the pole or underground conduit and fixing it when a plow digs it up or a wind storm knocks it down, phone companies estimate it costs several dollars a month to connect each customer.

The cost used to be bundled with other charges and paid for mostly from long-distance revenues. Now, residential customers pay $2 a month to defray the cost of the line. Businesses with more than two phone lines pay up to $6 per month each in "subscriber line charges."

The phone companies want the government to increase the residential rate to $3 on June 1 and later to $4.

A panel of federal and state regulators is studying the effects of the $2 charge and will make a recommendation early in 1987 to the Federal Communications Commission which then will decide whether to impose an increase, which would allow new long-distance rate cuts.

Consumer groups argue against the fee, complaining that it makes the basic monthly bill higher and reduces the number of people who can afford a home phone.

FCC Chairman Mark S. Fowler said that reductions in long-distance rates since 1984 mean that any customer with a long-distance bill over $4.65 a month is saving enough to cover the $2 charge.

In a 1986 year-end report entitled "Divestiture Plus Three: Still Crazy After All These Years," the CFA questions whether the tradeoff applies to most home-phone customers. The report contends that "the average residential consumer does not make enough long-distance calls to even offset the $2 increase."

Starting Jan. 1, 1988, the FCC has ordered the Baby Bells to follow new accounting rules designed to more accurately show which costs of operation are associated with running their telephone companies and which are caused by their new businesses in fields such as real estate, printing and truck servicing.

"This will be a major achievement if we can really track the elusive costs" of these unregulated subsidiaries, said Commissioner James H. Quello.

Electronics industry offers big salaries

College seniors graduating with a Bachelor of Science degree this year can expect to receive a starting salary of around $28,000 from U.S. electronics companies. The starting salary paid to graduates over the last three years has climbed roughly $1,000 per year.

Federal judge's speech delayed by protester

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge's speech on national security and free speech was delayed by a demonstrator who gave him a silver-plated bowl and a T-shirt to protest his decision allowing a Soviet seaman to be returned home.

"I hope it's the right size," U.S. District Judge Martin L.C. Feldman quipped Wednesday before addressing the audience of about 30 people at the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank.

School offers students opportunity to excel

By BARBARA VOBEJDA
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DURHAM, N.C. — Seventeen-year-old Susan Wallace spent her first two years of high school in a tiny North Carolina town where students learned about microscopes from pictures in textbooks.

"We didn't even have microscopes," she said with disbelief. "...We never touched one."

Now Miss Wallace studies high school science on equipment rarely found in college laboratories — an electron microscope, a nuclear magnetic resonator and computer terminals.

She and her classmates can work on more sophisticated science projects at Duke University medical school or the nearby high-tech research park, where they spend afternoons.

Miss Wallace attends the North Carolina School for Science and Mathematics, the nation's first public boarding school for teen-agers gifted in math and science. Like all students here, she pays nothing to study, live and eat at the state-supported school.

By all accounts, the school has succeeded brilliantly in an endeavor that challenges most governments: molding education to meet the high-tech needs of the economy.

Its students are seen as tomorrow's technological aristocracy, able to renew the country's advantage in a global economy and lift North Carolina to the forefront of the competition. The state has taken full advantage, using the school as a marketing tool in its efforts to woo new high-technology firms.

In September, 63 students at the school were announced as National Merit Scholarship semifinalists — the highest number for any school in the nation.

IT WAS THE third consecutive year that the school has led the nation, shifting the distinction from the northern urban centers where the numbers of semifinalists have historically been highest.

Although National Merit cutoff scores are adjusted for population, making it easier to win in states with fewer high-school graduates, the announcement was a reminder of the school's select enrollment.

It was a confirmation of the plausibility of its mission, conceived seven years ago by then-Gov. James B. Hunt, to train the world's leading scientists and mathematicians.

"The school is an investment in our labor force," said Samuel M. Taylor, public affairs director for the state's commerce department. "It allows us to produce some top-notch minds in North Carolina."

For many students, the school offers more than fancy equipment. They say it is the first place they have felt comfortable with their classmates.

"It changed me," Miss Wallace said. "When I came here I was a shy person, what they call a geek. I stayed home and studied until 9."

Now she plays softball, works on the student newspaper and mingles with 479 others who were the brightest at their schools.

Since it opened in 1980, the school has sent hundreds of students on to prestigious universities and trained more than 3,000 teachers. It has inspired dozens of other states to consider similar institutions. Louisiana and Illinois have opened such schools.

BUT PERHAPS the school's most unusual role has been as a symbol of the state's pursuit of high technology and economic development. High-tech firms located in the state's massive Research Triangle Park a few miles from the school are frequent contributors, boast about the institution in their in-house publications and sponsor "mentorships" that allow students to work afternoons at the firms.

"Anytime you have a pool of well-educated people, particularly when it's scientists, engineers, fresh minds on the leading edge of the existing technology, it's something that a company can draw on when it comes to the state," said Taylor, whose office published a slick booklet on the school for use in recruiting industry to the state.

The link between the school and institutions in the technologically rich piedmont area is informal but strong. Students study under mentors at nearby firms, Duke University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and North Carolina State.

Karen Greene, a freshman at the University of Connecticut, learned actuarial mathematics at North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co. Another student used a computer at the Research Triangle Institute to monitor heart functions. And two years ago a student discovered a new material that could be used for dental braces.

Testimony to the corporate support, which finances about 10 percent of the school's budget, are the plaques that label many of its rooms: the "American Tobacco Dining Room," "Duke Power Computer Center" and the "Celanese Chemistry Laboratory."

SUPPORTING the school, said Jim Allen, an official of Celanese Corp., "is good business because (of) the extraordinarily bright young people...It's inevitable many will come back to North Carolina and assume jobs here, raise their families here and contribute to our enriched economy."

'Waldorf of the West' nears date with wrecking ball

By KAREN McGRATH

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — For most of the century, the Davenport Hotel was the "Waldorf of the West," catering to both the tuxedo crowd and blue-collar workers who reveled in its luxury.

The hotel played host to presidents from Teddy Roosevelt to John Kennedy and such celebrities as Mary Pickford, Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey and Bob Hope.

But the Davenport, listed on the National Register of Historic Places, was closed 17 months ago because it was losing money, and now faces the wrecking ball if it can't be sold.

"Everyone has a parent or grandparent who has memories of the Davenport," said architect Ron Wendle. "It used to be when somebody traveled out West, you'd say, 'Meet me at the Davenport.' It does touch people in a very sensitive way."

Wendle is a member of the Friends of the Davenport, which is scrambling to find potential investors willing to buy the hotel for up to $9 million and foot the estimated $30 million bill for needed renovations.

But Spokane's economy, fed by agriculture, aluminum, mining and timber, is not healthy, and it may be that the community could not sustain a rejuvenated Davenport, said Charles Van Marter, a Spokane attorney representing Lomas & Nettleton, the mortgage firm which owns the hotel.

Lomas & Nettleton says it is losing $1 million a year to maintain the hotel and will demolish the Florentine building if it can't be sold this year.

"We have our work cut out for us," said Wendle.

When most of downtown Spokane was destroyed in a fire in 1889, a young man set up a tent in a burned-out lot and called it Davenport's Waffle Foundry.

By 1893, Louis Davenport had made enough money to open a restaurant at the site. Davenport became a millionaire and commissioned architect Kirtland Cutter to build a magnificent hotel.

The Davenport, which stayed open all night, was the place to be after dances and movies. At any hour, the coffee shop served scrambled eggs, or the hotel's famous French onion or chicken gumbo soups. Late-night revelers and early-morning hunters often would dine together.

Society dowagers knew the Davenport's rococo lobby and mezzanine as places to meet for tea. Western novelist Zane Grey holed up in a room to write "Desert of Wheat," his portrayal of Northwest wheat towns.

In the basement, "Silver John" Ungari carefully washed all silver coins that were given as change to hotel patrons. The shiny coins were famous throughout the country, and by the time he died in 1973, Silver John had cleaned more than $51 million.

Even today, the hotel, to which two stories have been added since it was built, retains its graceful character.

By KAY SEVERINSON

AURORA, Ill. (AP) — This building originally was designed to house 2,100 students.

But the 205 sophomores, the first class to attend the new Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy, still manage to fill it — right up to its newly patched roof — with shrieks, hoots, laughter and the constant, high-energy din that young teens produce simply because they are young.

While their dorms are being built, the students both live and work in the former West Aurora High School north campus. Their close quarters and advanced course work have made the academy like no other school in Illinois.

But the screams of the wicked and the damned didn't seem to distract Workman's students from his presentation of accelerating weights. Each time he asked a question, three or four students raised their hands.

At home, Jody Yates, 15, had her own room. Here she lives with 24 girls, who are crammed, bunk to bunk, in a former classroom. They eat together, study together, attend classes together, shower together.

> "I expected (the academy) to be hard," she says, "but deep inside, I never expected it to be this hard. No one just gets their grade here. If you get an A, you have really accomplished something."
> — Suja Chacko, Northlake Illinois student

Badri Rengarajan, 15, of South Barrington, said, "You are with your friends all the time. It's just great. We have fun here. By the second day, I knew everyone in my dorm. If I didn't like it here, I would miss home more."

When Suja Chacko, 14, of Northlake, closed her books at 1:30 a.m. recently, she remembered the good old days at Proviso West High School when all she had to do to get As was show up for classes.

"I expected (the academy) to be hard," she says, "but deep inside, I never expected it to be this hard. No one just gets their grade here. If you get an A, you have really accomplished something."

At her old school, she says, it wasn't considered cool to study. "There would sometimes be pressure from other students," she recalls, "like, 'Why are you studying?' But here, everyone thiks it's important and they are willing to work."

At Quincy High School, says Jody Yates, "There were 30 of us who worked and the other 500 didn't. There wasn't much homework because teachers knew the students wouldn't do it. They would give in-class assignments."

Museum devoted to advertising

By PETER JAMES SPIELMANN

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — After years of bringing you a word from the sponsor while keeping themselves out of the spotlight, advertisers have opened a museum to celebrate their role in American life.

The American Advertising Museum preserves broadcasts that faded from the airwaves and ephemeral advertising artifacts that usually were discarded but that etched their messages indelibly into America's collective consciousness, shaping our language, art, history and culture.

Four years ago Mick Scott, who then was president of Portland's Advertising Federation, thought of founding such a museum. The federation provided $118,000 seed money, and other businesses, media companies and foundations donated funds to open the museum this year. Admission is free.

"It is a 'gee whiz,' real nostalgia trip," said Scott, who now is president of the museum's board of directors. "There is an exhibit that plays ad jingles that are 40 years old."

AND AS THE RADIO advertising exhibit reminds visitors of Arthur Godfrey, Jack Benny, Fred Allen, and other giants of radio long since silenced, the television generation can watch tapes and films of the classic commercials.

The museum presents some of advertising's unsavory aspects, including the ways in which ads typically mirrored the stereotypes of the time. A filmed television commercial from the 1950s presents a brief glimpse of a black autoworker, one of the rare departures from racial stereotyping in the museum's collection.

Sarah Paulson, the museum's executive director, says the museum will receive a traveling exhibit from the Balch Institute in Philadelphia that examines racial and ethnic images in ads, including the use of Irishmen and Scots to promote whiskey sales.

"The historians and archaeologists will one day discover that the ads of our society are the richest and most faithful daily reflections that any society ever made of its entire range of activities," wrote Marshall McLuhan in "Understanding Media," a claim prominently displayed in the museum.

BUT THE PURPOSE of advertising is to promote the interests of the sponsor. There are no images of the poor in the collection, except in a few recent public service ads by The Ad Council, despite the fact that many classic ads date from the years of the Depression.

Noting the widespread promotion of alcohol- and drug-based patent medicines from the Civil War until the founding of the Food and Drug Administration, an exhibit points out that subsequent addiction and overdoses caused countless thousands of deaths and blighted lives.

Network radio and television shows were initially sponsored by individual companies that shaped the development of the media and set standards of culture, taste and public service. In the process, the sponsors and advertisers created entertainment forms such as the "soap opera," pioneered on the "Ma Perkins" radio show by Proctor & Gamble for Oxydol.

OTHER ADVERTISING innovations that became second nature are Continental Army recruitment ads from 1776, want ads that date to 1833, circus posters, neon signs and other lighted outdoor advertising, and an example of Burma-Shave's roadside doggerel.

Such classic examples of Americana might easily have been lost. Few advertising agencies or corporations preserved their campaigns; they were satisfied if the ads simply lasted long enough to sell the product.

The museum notes that Ronald Reagan's endorsement of Chesterfield cigarettes while working as a Hollywood actor is not the first example of a commercial spokesman going on to the presidency. A "soap expert" identified as "Mr. L." endorsed Professor Garder's soap in 1860, and was inaugurated as President Abraham Lincoln the following year.

The earliest known ad in English, reproduced in the museum, is a handbill dating to 1477 that was posted in Westminster Abbey. In English, it touts a set of instructions for religious services. But printed in the bottom margin in Latin, the official language of the church, is the appeal: "Please do not tear down."

Woman turns anger into folk art

By DAVID PICKERING

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Dorothy Davis' story is a story about the triumph of art over anger.

A decade and a half ago, Mrs. Davis said, she got very angry at her husband, Oliver, as wives will get angry at their husbands on occasion. But instead of taking her wrath out on Oliver, she began directing it elsewhere.

"When I feel angry, I just take it out on creating beautiful things," is the way she put it. "And when I create something beautiful I can look back on it and see something beautiful I created out of the anger I had. And that makes me feel good."

For starters, Mrs. Davis did one roomful of walls up in swatches of pink, brown, yellow, green, chartreuse, black, gold and white cloth.

Later, a good big batch of old neckties came into her possession. She used them to upholster two chairs, one couch, a dresser and an end table.

She did another room — referred to as The Stocking Room — up in old pantyhose. Furniture is upholstered with them, parts of the walls are covered with them. There are dozens and dozens of pairs of pantyhose in all, which Mrs. Davis stretched into tight little tubes and sewed into artful arrangements.

Mrs. Davis has an assortment of friends who donate things for the cause of her art. Among them is the female impersonator, who once won a $500 prize in a barroom drag competition while wearing an intact version of the dress scraps that now adorn the Davis headboard.

Other frequent contributors are members of Mrs. Davis' church, the Pentecostal Church of God in Christ. All those neckties were the bequest of a widowed church-member whose husband, Mrs. Davis said, "was a man who truly loved neckties."

In recent years, Mrs. Davis' energies have begun to spill over into sculpture. One creation features a couple of bejeweled and painted-up raccoon bones that reside in a sandbox near a turkey-bone tree. An accompanying notecard bears Mrs. Davis' written description of the scene: "Lying in the sun, basting in the heat, each envying the other's jewels. So shallow-minded. They should concentrate on 'Worry about who you are, not what you have.' " The title of the piece is "Two Coon Bone Bitches."

A work in progress consists of two clay figures which Mrs. Davis said represent "my opinion of man." Among prominent features are the tines of a dinner fork protruding from a mouth (to represent "a forked tongue," Mrs. Davis said) and a rock implanted in one figure at chest level ("stony heart").

There is more, much more, in the Davis house. Quite a lot of the contents are scheduled to take a little trip across town, to the Art Museum of South Texas.

Sometime around the middle of the year, museum director Ric Collier plans to recreate the Stocking Room, the Necktie Room and other rooms in Dorothy Davis' amazing house at the museum.

The show has the makings of an exhibit that could bring Mrs. Davis to prominence as a folk artist of great note.

Quality luggage not always costly

By FRED GEBHART
Hearst News Service

There's more to buying luggage than finding a familiar label. A designer suitcase at $500 or a widely advertised model at $180 may be no stronger than a brand you've never seen before that sells for $50 at a discount store. And those famous labels are an open invitation to theft from cars, hotel rooms and airports.

Even the most expensive luggage won't last forever, especially with air travel, where there are too many bags and too little room for luggage to be loaded with the same care you use in packing the family car. On a small plane, bags are crammed into place so they don't slide around. On larger planes, bags are crammed into containers for loading — and many baggage handlers can boot a bag hard enough to make a professional soccer player jealous.

Growing numbers of air travelers get around the problem by carrying their luggage onto the plane themselves. Not only do they relax because they know where everything is, they also avoid the long wait to retrieve their bags at the end of the flight.

THE GARMENT BAG is the real suitcase-saver. The newer bags hold more than a couple of skirts, blouses and dresses; they also carry shoes, socks, slacks — almost anything you need — in a profusion of pockets and compartments. And a garment bag hangs just as conveniently in a car as in an airplane.

Quality hardware usually means a quality garment bag. You'll need a carrying handle and a hinged hook at the top, and a second handle in the middle to carry the bag when it is folded in half. Be sure the hook swivels and tucks away so it won't snag a pocket when not in use.

Look for a bag with a frame that extends the full width of the top to protect your hanging garments. The hangers should lock to the frame to keep clothes from falling to the bottom of the bag. A shoulder strap will be welcome when you have one more bag to carry than you have free hands to carry with.

If you can't or don't want to carry everything on, a hard-shell suitcase is the best protection for your belongings. As long as the shell doesn't break, the contents will survive almost any kind of banging, smashing and crushing — and a hard suitcase makes a convenient seat when you get stuck waiting in a long line.

Unfortunately, hard luggage is also the heaviest and often more expensive. Unlike a soft-side bag, a hard case can't be overstuffed. (Although a little overpacking helps hold clothes in place with fewer wrinkles, watch out when somebody has to sit on the suitcase before you can close it. You're asking for it to pop open at the first hard knock, scattering clothes like a jack-in-the-box gone wild.)

ON THE OTHER HAND, frameless bags welcome overstuffing. They're generally the cheapest and lightest luggage you can buy, but they offer almost no protection to whatever is packed inside. A flexside bag has rigid side frames with a soft top and bottom. The frame makes it a little heavier than a totally soft bag but a lot stronger. And you can still overstuff.

Which brand is best? It doesn't really matter, says a buyer for a major department store chain. Most luggage is sturdy and pretty well made, no matter whose name is on it.

The secret is to check the external zippers with large metal teeth and double-stitched seams. Combination locks are usually stronger than key locks. Top quality fittings usually mean the manufacturer has cut costs on inside pockets and fancy linings, not on quality materials and construction.

Next, check the frame inside the bag for any rough edges or projecting corners that might snag clothes. Seams should have at least five to seven stitches to the inch and shouldn't gap. If the bag zips closed, look for an extension of the lining or some other feature that will keep clothes from getting caught in the zipper.

Since corners get the hardest knocks and the most wear, extra reinforcing inside and out will help the whole bag last longer. Look also for covered name tags. These protect you from thieves who haunt airports and hotel lobbies, looking for addresses of homes they know will be empty for a few days.

DON'T FORGET to try picking up the bag before you buy it. Squeeze the handle as hard as you can, or pull up while someone else holds the bag down. If the handle doesn't feel comfortable in the store, just imagine how it's going to feel when the bag is loaded down with clothes, gifts and souvenirs. Look for handles that are attached to the frame or to straps that girdle the bag.

Vinyl is the single most popular suitcase construction material. It can look like cheap plastic or expensive leather; the point is that it resists abrasion even better than full-grain leather and it's a great deal less expensive. When the bag finally wears out, a replacement will cost less than a good pair of shoes.

Nylon is another popular material. High-priced manufacturers like to boast about using Cordura nylon, one of DuPont's "miracle fibers" that is supposed to be nearly indestructible. They're right. But less expensive luggage uses nylon, too, and often Cordura. Materials and construction make quality luggage — not label, advertising and price.

List prices for a well-made garment bag or suitcase seldom dip below $100, even for a little-known brand. If a clerk tries to sell you a bag for list price, find another store. Luggage is almost always sold at a discount, even in a luggage shop or major department store.

Home's energy efficiency important consideration

NEW YORK (UPI) — Buying a home is the biggest investment many Americans make. One of the most important considerations for prospective homeowners is energy efficiency, according to Trane Dealer Products Group,.

The heating and air conditioning equipment manufacturers suggest consumers investigate the following before purchasing a home:

■ Ask to see the house's thermostat. An automatic setback or programmable thermostat is more efficient than the traditional thermostat which must be adjusted manually.

■ The house should have insulation in the attic, covering the water heater and forced air ducts, around the foundation, in exterior walls, between living spaces and unheated garages, basements or crawl spaces.

■ Check for caulking or weatherstripping around windows and doors. Storm windows and doors should come with the house.

■ Look for mechanical or natural ventilation of the attic to reduce temperatures — and air conditioning bills — in the summer. The kitchen range and clothes dryer should be vented to the outside.

■ The boiler, the key to hot water or steam systems, should be in good condition and run quietly.

■ Heat pumps provide heat in winter, then reverse cycles to act as efficient central air conditioners. They are especially useful in homes with electric heat.

■ Determine whether the house has central air conditioning or uses individual room units. A home energy audit, which will cost little or nothing, will tell you if your air conditioning system is the correct size for the house.

■ The house must have sufficient electricity to power all the systems and appliances within it. The minimum is 100 amps; a house using electric heat needs 200-300 amps. Have an electrician inspect the wiring in each room and check to make sure there are enough outlets.

■ Examine the pipes carefully. A good system will have more than one shut-off valve. Make sure that the water heater is sufficient for your household's needs.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Friday, January 16, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Diversification is the key to increased profits and a higher salary. Mate's change of attitude helps you find new happiness and success. Your determination to do great things will be rewarded in fall. Manufacturing and industrial jobs pay higher wages. Running a small family business or farm will be slow going, but keep with it. Things will improve soon. There is nothing wrong in asking friends for help.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Cubs-Cardinals superstar pitcher and announcer "Dizzy" Dean, Canadian poet Robert Service, dazzling "Fame" star Debbie Allen, Kansas City Royals slugger Steve Balboni, auto racing's A.J. Foyt, actress Katy Jurado, musical comedy star Ethel Merman, country singer Ronnie Milsap, editor-columnist Norman Podhoretz and Boston Red Sox Dave Stapleton.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Cooperation may be difficult to obtain at work or home. Postpone real estate transactions. Your mate or partner offers valuable ideas; be supportive. Choose allies with care.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone asking for favors or loans. Working in background is favored. Keep a low profile around difficult people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Correspondence and telephone are useful if used to contact distant people. Finances are easier to cope with than in recent months due to unexpected check or raise. Get away early for weekend trip.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put more pressure on one who is in position to help back pet projects. Friend provides inside information that puts you in winners' circle. Drive carefully tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Organization is the key to productivity. Avoid secrecy -- it could cost you a client or relationship. Concentrate on paper work with employer and/or friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Direct energies toward business and financial interests. Avoid joint financial affairs. Look forward to significant change with employer and/or friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not go along with the crowd. Your originality shines, impressing influential people. Protect your idea. Leave partnership dealings alone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not get involved in complicated financial moves. Keep your schedule uncluttered and manageable. Avoid expensive weekend entertainment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Welcome an upsurge in mental and physical energy. Channel your enthusiasm into constructive projects. An increase in salary is possible. Confide in mate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Diplomacy will make your personal relationships more harmonious. Forget past grievances. Make new investments only after consulting experts. You may not have all the facts.

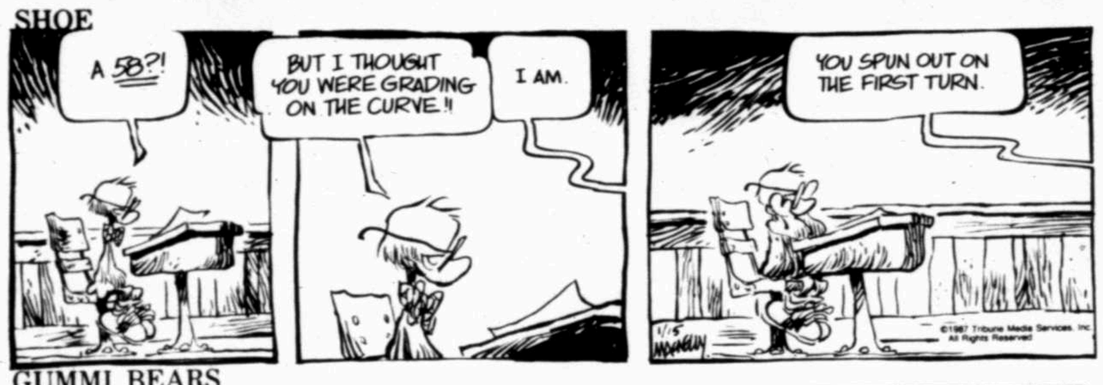

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Home security and financial matters require prompt attention. A project you put on the back burner suddenly becomes hot. Gather all available information before finalizing negotiations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your creativity is at an all-time high. Be sure your expectations are realistic. Ask tough questions, but do it with charm. A good time to make concessions to loved ones.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♣	Pass	4 ◇	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡

Once again we are giving you the opportunity to test your technique. On the first hand of a rubber you reach four spades after North has bid both of his suits and you have shown a strong five-card major. Cover the East-West cards and decide how you would play after the defenders start with the king-queen of hearts.

You are on the right track if you elected to ruff the second heart with a high trump, and then crossed to dummy with a club to run the nine of spades. That holds the trick. What next?

It might seem you have no problem. Simply repeat the trump finesse, cash the ace and go about cashing your clubs whether the king of spades drops or not.

Hold it! You are getting ahead of yourself. When you repeat the trump finesse West wins the king and continues with hearts. If you look at the full hand, you will see you have lost trump control and your contract is doomed.

You can afford to lose two trump tricks and a heart, so the hand is a laydown as long as trumps are no worse than 4-2. The solution is to win the second round of trumps with the ace, leaving two trumps outstanding, and start running clubs. West can ruff and shift to a diamond, but you are in charge. Win and continue clubs, and the king of trumps will be the third and last trick the defenders can get.

The principle of this hand is basic. If you count your tricks, both winners and losers, the line of play to ensure your contract often becomes obvious.

Lawmen pay last respects to Ranger who began his career on horseback

CARRIZO SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — Lawmen came from across Texas to pay their last respects to the legendary, cigar-chewing Alfred Y. "Cap" Allee, a Texas Ranger pioneer who began his career on horseback.

Officers who once served under the captain laid their former leader to rest under sunny skies Wednesday as some 30 active and retired Rangers gathered around his family and friends, their white hats in their hands.

After the service, stories were swapped about Allee, who began his Ranger career in 1931 when South Texas law enforcement was still in its frontier days.

"With him, there was never a doubt. He was a leader. You were always behind him when he said, 'Let's do it,'" said Bob Favor, a Ranger sergeant from Midland who served under Allee.

Allee's grandfather, father and son all were Rangers. He retired in 1970 after serving as Company D captain since 1947. He died of cancer Monday at 81.

Earlier Wednesday, Allee was eulogized at the First Baptist Church by family friends and San Antonio Trinity Baptist Church pastor Buckner Fanning before an overflow crowd of 500.

"Heaven will be a little safer and more secure because the captain is there," Fanning said.

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — The media has come down on the Oral Roberts family "like a tick on a dog," since the evangelist said he would die by March if $8 million is not raised for his medical missionary, Roberts' son says.

Richard Roberts, believed to be the heir of the elder Roberts' evangelistic empire, said those criticizing his father do not understand his father's methods.

"These people think we're out of our minds," he said. "Well, we are out of our minds — and into our spirits."

Also, Oral Roberts University canceled an $8,000 advertising contract with Tulsa radio station KRMG over remarks made by the station's morning show host, John Erling.

Erling spoofed Oral Roberts' comment, saying "a 900-foot Lassie came to me and told me to build a 60-story dog and cat hospital."

"I told them (listeners) that if you don't send me money, then you will die," Erling said.

The 900-foot Lassie was a reference to Oral Roberts' statement that a 900-foot Jesus appeared in a dream and told Roberts to build the 60-story City of Faith Medical and Research Center. The hospital has been a money loser.

Mike Crusham, KRMG general manager, said he was surprised about the contract cancellation. He said the contract was advertising for season ticket and individual game ticket sales for Oral Roberts basketball games.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Meryl Streep, who sometimes makes her own clothes, topped the 27th annual list of worst-dressed women issued by dress designer and fashion arbiter Mr. Blackwell.

"The problem is that most of the women in the world could have made the list," said Blackwell, who prefers to be known by his professional name. "The whole trouble is, we only had room for 10."

Miss Streep, the acerbic designer told a news conference Wednesday, "looks like a gypsy abandoned by a caravan." She was followed by game show hostess Vanna White — "She wins fashion's booby prize of the year" — and the Duchess of York, formerly known as Sarah Ferguson, who "looks like the queen of last year's English county fair." Actress Bea Arthur took fourth place.

Actually, there were 11 on this year's list, with actresses Sharon Gless and Tyne Daly, stars of the "Cagney and Lacey" television show, tying for fifth place. Also on the list were Barbra Streisand, Kathleen Turner, Cher, Whoopi Goldberg, and Jean Kasem, wife of radio announcer Casey Kasem.

NEW YORK (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor says she's making another commitment. But this time it's to help develop, market and sell a perfume — "Elizabeth Taylor's Passion."

Taylor

At an invitation-only news conference Wednesday, the violet-eyed actress revealed what had been billed for days as her "top-secret news" — a deal with Parfums International Ltd.

Making light of the actress' well-publicized unions — she has been married seven times, twice to the late actor Richard Burton — her new business partners referred to the venture as "Miss Taylor's latest marriage."

"It's funny how any announcement I make turns into a marriage," the 54-year-old actress said.

The perfume will be in a limited number of department and specialty stores by September. The price has not been decided.

"Don't ask me if I'm going to go on Joan Rivers' show," she quipped.

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP) — Funeral services are scheduled Friday for Capt. Bob Snow Sr., a professional hunting guide and longtime game warden.

Snow died Wednesday in an Austin hospital after a long illness. He was 88.

After the services at Kerrville Funeral Home Chapel, burial will be at Garden of Memories Cemetery.

After his retirement as a warden, Snow served as trapper and professional hunting guide on the Y.O. Ranch at Mountain Home.

With more MPG* than any other two-seater, the CRX HF lets you spend more time on the road having fun and less time pumping gas.

In fact, with road-running rack and pinion steering, front-wheel drive, 5-speed manual transmission and power-assist brakes, the HF is so much fun you'll wonder whether it's an economical sports car or a sporty economy car.
